U.S. joins in condemning Israeli bombing

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States joined the 14 other members of the Security Council Friday in strongly condemning Israel's destruction of an Iraqi nuclear reactor and urging payment of "appropriate redress." Israel rejected the resolution as "biased and one-sided."

to Iraq, took the floor after the vote and asked, "What is the appropriate reward that can be claimed by a country bent on nuclear obliteration of another country?"

Blum said the resolution disregarded "the fact that in removing this terrible nuclear threat to its existence, Israel was only exercising its legitimate right of self-defense." He did not criticize the United States from the council floor, but told reporters later he regretted that the United States had joined in the unanimous condemnation. It was America's harshest-ever U.N. rebuke to an Israeli action.

However, Blum said he was "gratified by expressions of support" for Israel delivered to the council by U.S. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick. "This is a temporary irritant of the kind we have experienced over the past 30 years of constant friendship and staunch support for Israel.... We've had our ups and downs," Blum said of Israeli-U.S. relations.

In Washington, Israeli Ambassador Ephraim Evron was called to the State Department later for a 30-minute meeting with acting Secretary of State Walter Stoessel, who offered President Reagan's personal assurance that "our commitment to Israel remains firm and undiminished" despite the U.N. vote.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Saadoun Hammadi, who had worked out the resolution with Mrs. Kirkpatrick, complained after the vote that it was too weak and added that the reason for that was "the veto power of the United States."

"Because of the power of the veto, the United Nations is driven to adopt half-measures or no measures at all," he said, adding Iraq reserved the right to pursue the case in the General Assembly.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick told a news conference after the vote that she also was not completely satisfied with the resolution, but "like all compromises, it is a kind of second-best mix, makes-nobody-very-happy product."

Iranian parliament will continue debating Bani-Sadr impeachment

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran's fundamentalist hardliners vowed Friday to go ahead with a parliamentary debate on the impeachment of President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr despite his mysterious disappearance. They accused him of lying and disgracing the Islamic revolution.

The 215-member parliament, or Majlis, is scheduled to begin final debate on the president's competence Saturday with a large majority in favor of stripping Bani-Sadr of his post and many demanding he be put on trial.

At least a dozen deputies who support the president have vowed to boycott the debate. But a member of the fundamentalist Islamic Republican Party, which opposes Bani-Sadr, told The Associated Press in Beirut by telephone from Tehran that the Majlis will take up the issue regardless.

"I don't think he (Bani-Sadr) will come," said Hassan Ayat, an Islamic Republican Party deputy and long-time opponent of Bani-Sadr. He suggested the besieged president may have fled the country.

"His defenders can present his case if there are any. If not, then his opponents will debate the issue," said Ayat, adding he believed the debate would last at least two days before a vote was taken.

Tehran's revolutionary prosecutor, Assadollah Lajavardi, said Thursday that Bani-Sadr's whereabouts were unknown since Tuesday and that airport and border police had been alerted to prevent him fleeing the country.

Rumors circulated that Bani-Sadr, who has not been seen in public since being stripped of his post as commander-in-chief of Iran's armed forces eight days ago, had gone into exile or was hiding in western Iran.

Iranian students in the Turkish capital of Ankara heard that Bani-Sadr fled to the eastern Turkish city of Van as have other disgruntled Iranian political and military figures.

A top official in the ruling military junta in Turkey said Bani-Sadr was nowhere in the nation which borders Iran, but that if he arrived he probably would be given political asylum.

There was yet another possibility — that Bani-Sadr had gone underground in Iran to rally opponents of the Moslem militants who now are firmly entrenched in the executive, legislative and judicial branches of Iran's regime.

But Ayat, reached at his Tehran home, suggested the now-powerless president would be unable to be an effective opposition leader either above ground or in hiding because "he does not have any organization of his own."

If Bani-Sadr fails to appear for Saturday's debate, he will rob his opponents of the public humiliation they want to inflict. But Ayat said that he can "definitely be removed in aben-tia."

Khomeini fired Bani-Sadr, revolutionary Iran's first elected president, from his job as commander-in-chief of the armed forces and refused to stop the move in parliament to impeach him. A top Khomeini aide — Hojatolislam Ali Khamenei — stepped up the attack on Bani-Sadr Friday.

Khamenei, a member of Iran's Supreme Defense Council charged with supervising the war with Iraq, criticized Bani-Sadr's "procrastinations on the war fronts" and ineffectiveness in revitalizing the economy. He said Bani-Sadr's aim was to "drive Iran towards an absolute dictatorship."

Khamenei, a leader of Friday prayers, drew shouts of approval when he condemned the president for allegedly telling lies about torture in Iran's revolutionary prisons. Tehran Radio said in a broadcast monitored in Beirut.

Odessan escapes attempted murder charge

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 31-year-old Odessa man who was accused of trying to murder his ex-girl friend's boy friend with a handgun at the Mi Cantarito bar in Midland last Nov. 28 has been found guilty by a jury of the lesser offense of aggravated assault.

The jury in Judge Pat Baskin's 142nd State District Court meted the defendant, Martin Munoz Minjarez, a five-year probation sentence for his deed. The prosecution had sought an attempted-murder conviction, which could carry up to a 20-year prison sentence and a $5,000 fine.

After the verdict, Minjarez was transferred to the Ector County Jail in Odessa, where he had been previously held on a delivery-of-cocaine charge. He was bailed out of jail and released until his trial there.

Minjarez was charged with shooting 24-year-old Carlos Gonzales four times — in the stomach, chin and arm — in a scuffle at the bar's entrance at 200 E. Kentucky Ave. about 11 p.m. on Nov. 28. Minjarez testified that he had entered the bar angry and was looking for his "wife," the girl friend, 26-year-old Josie Marquez Martinez.

"I WAS JUST MAD," he said. "I just didn't care. I wanted her to come back home." He said that he had fathered a child by her, although Ms. Martinez had testified that she had never represented herself as his wife.

Minjarez said he walked up to the table where the couple was sitting and confronted the woman: "What are you doing here?" he said he asked her.

"I just hit her," he said under cross-examination by prosecutor Mary Ann Oakley.

The prosecutor asked Minjarez if he sensed he was causing trouble.

He seemed somewhat puzzled by the question.

"Well," he said, "after I hit her, I think I was (causing trouble). Don't you think so?"

Witnesses to the incident had testified that Minjarez had "slapped" his ex-girl friend. Not so, said Minjarez. He slugged her.

Thereupon, Gonzales protested, and Minjarez told him in Spanish that "if he wanted to fight, we would."

Minjarez said that they went outside and talked. "I told him she was my wife," Minjarez said. "He said he was 'just there.'"

ALL THE WHILE Minjarez said that he had a .25-caliber automatic pistol in his coat pocket and that Gonzales struck him, "I would have used it...."

"I didn't tell him I wasn't going to shoot him," he said.

As Minjarez and Gonzales were returning to the bar, they met the girl friend at the entrance. Minjarez said that he was "tugging on Josie's right arm" in an apparent effort to bring her on "back home."

"We were fighting for Josie," Minjarez said. "We started struggling, and that's when I pulled out the gun and started shooting.... and I was holding onto Josie."

DURING THE struggle with Gonzales, Minjarez said someone grabbed him by the legs, that he felt an itch about his abdomen, and he fell to the ground.

"I shot four times — one right after the other," he said.

Minjarez said the bar crowd had moved to the direction of the struggle.

"They all gather around when there's going to be trouble?" asked Ms. Oakley.

"Yeah," said Minjarez.

Later, he had explained his firing the shots like this: "There was too many of them; I had to do something."

Minjarez, who lays forms and pours concrete for a living, admitted that he's a fair marksman with the pistol.

"Are you a pretty good shot?" Ms. Oakley asked the defendant.

"Yes, ma'am," he said.

"When you pulled that trigger, did you know a bullet was going to come out?"

"Yes," he answered.

He said the pistol was reliable and that it didn't misfire, although some lawmen-witnesses had alluded that the pistol was a Saturday night special and was less than 100 percent dependable. "With this type of weapon," Midland Police Detective Bob Miller had testified earlier, "it's possible it may fire every other time."

AFTER HIS ARREST, and as he was being booked into the Midland City Jail, Minjarez allegedly had told police he hoped that Gonzales would die from the gunshot wounds.

"I probably did," he told Ms. Oakley. "I don't remember."

In her closing arguments, Ms. Oakley maintained that Minjarez was a "calculating man" who planned to kill his ex-girl friend's boy friend.

"I submit he intended to kill," she said. "Why else did he take that gun in there (the bar)?"

Minjarez's defense attorney, Russell Busby of Amarillo, contended that his client fired the handgun in self-defense. Minjarez, however, testified that he was not aware if Gonzales had a weapon on him.

Busby suggested that Minjarez had entered the bar for an honorable reason: To take his girl friend "back home."

"He was there to get his wife out of that place," Busby said. "He went in there and slugged her. He's more credible and more truthful than Josie (a convicted thief) and the illegal alien (Gonzales)," Busby said.

The defense attorney said Minjarez fired the automatic pistol during the "scrapping and fighting."

Busby said his client reasoned that "that guy's got a knife and he's fixing to cut my gizzard."

"It's self-defense," Busby said, "and he's the only self on trial."

Air traffic controller talks resume, but union president not optimistic

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government and the union representing air traffic controllers resumed talking Friday night with the help of a federal mediator in attempts to head off a threatened controllers strike that would snarl nationwide air travel Monday.

"I can't say that I'm optimistic, but we're coming back tomorrow," Robert Poll, president of the controllers union, told reporters after the four-hour session with Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis.

The two men met face-to-face for much of the four hours and then divided into separate rooms with federal mediator Kenneth Moffett shuttling between the two sides, sources close to the talks said.

Moffett, who arrived for the talks after flying from New York where he is involved in the baseball negotiations, said he hoped a settlement could be reached during the weekend.

"The fact that we're talking at least is progress," said Lewis.

Earlier, Poll, president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, said his members are "law abiding citizens" but will strike and even go to jail if a tentative agreement is not reached with the government by midnight Sunday.

Poll accused the Reagan administration of refusing to negotiate and offering only a "take it or leave it" proposal that is unacceptable. But after his discussions with Lewis, he said he no longer believes that to be the case.

Poll, appearing before a House transportation subcommittee, was emphatic in his refusal to go along with the $40 million package submitted by the FAA early this week. He said the union was trimming its demands but added the union proposal would still cost the government $770 million a year.

Lewis briefed President Reagan on the negotiations, and then told reporters later that Reagan "indicated complete support of our position... that we will not tolerate an illegal strike, nor if there is an illegal strike will we negotiate with this union during the time the strike is taking place."

He said Reagan "considers himself a friend of this union," which endorsed him during last year's campaign. But he added: "We unequivocally are going to hold the line both in terms of dollars and in terms of our feeling about an illegal strike."

Meanwhile, there were some indications of independent action already being taken by some controllers: The facility in Fort Worth, Tex., reported 13 controllers reporting in sick, the facility in Tampa, Fla., nine, Pittsburgh six, and Denver six.

FAA spokesman Dennis Feldman said the agency did not consider the absences to be unusual.

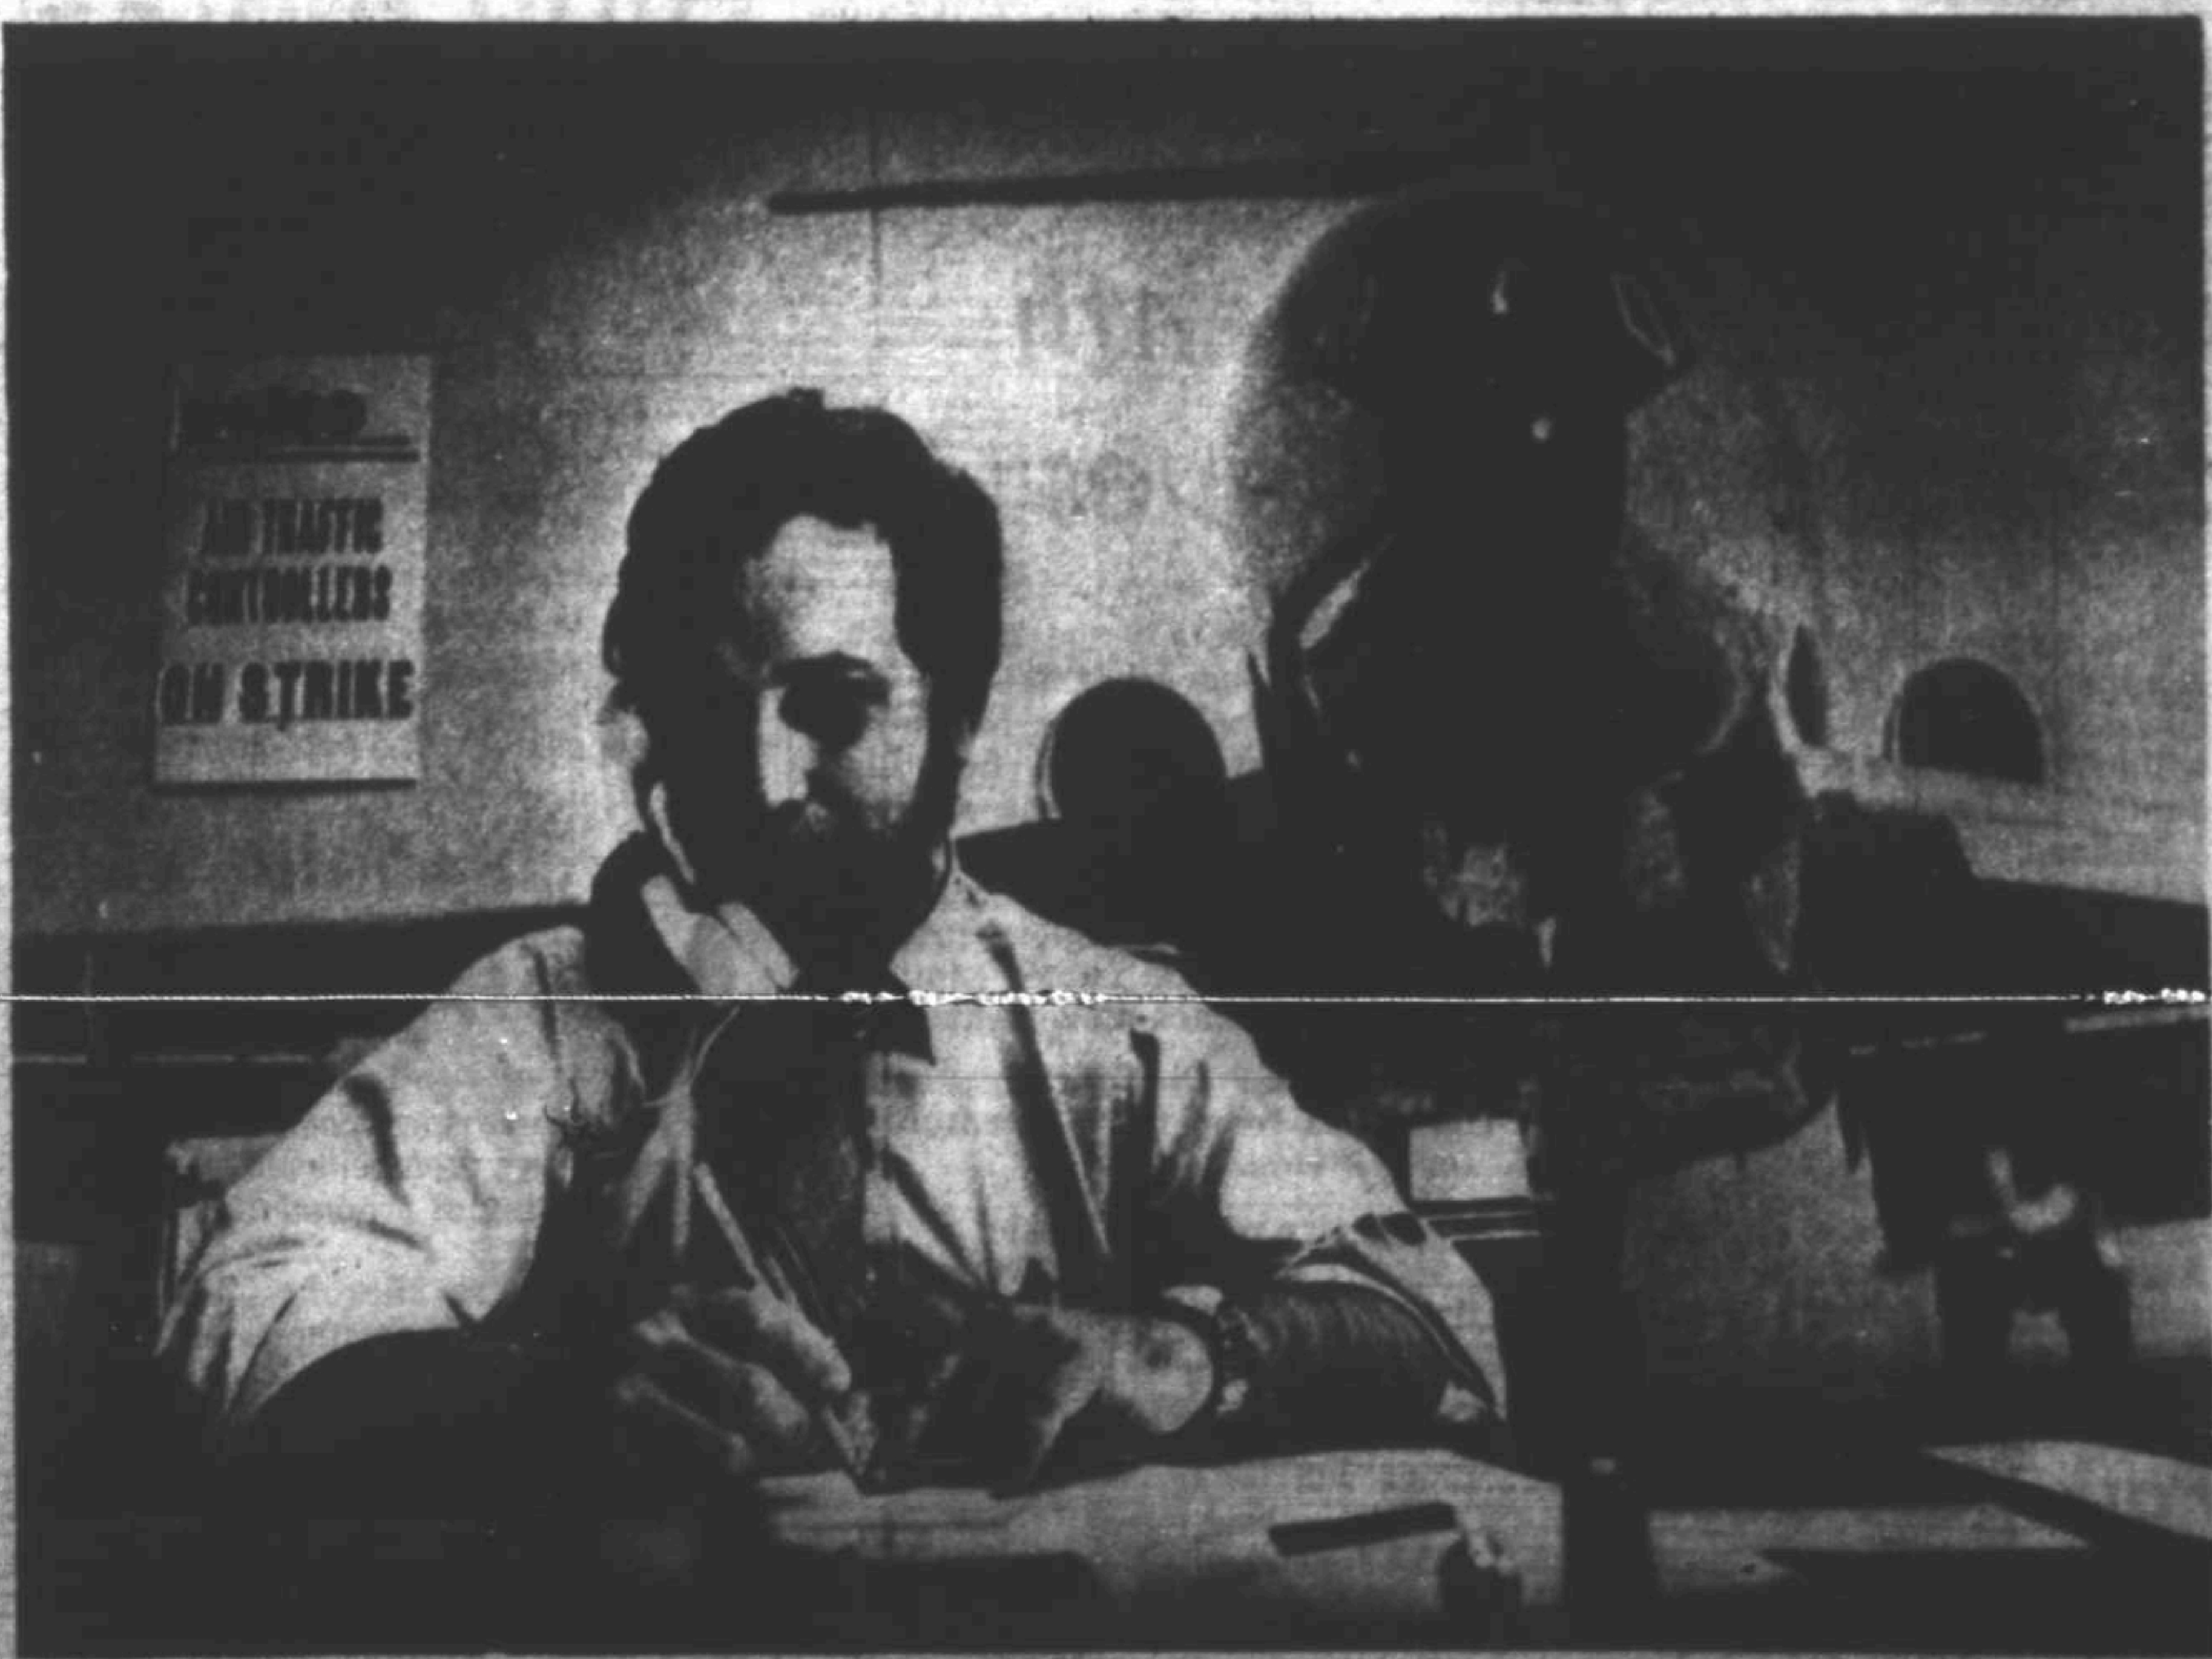

Poll, facing hostile questioning from some subcommittee members, accused the FAA of refusing to negotiate in good faith and declared, "We've been put in a position from which we have no place to go."

"I must tell you I'm willing to go to jail for the air traffic controllers of this country," Poll said, adding he was "bringing a message" from thousands of union members who are willing to do likewise.

As government employees, the controllers, who direct the nation's non-military air traffic, are prohibited from striking. The Justice Department has said it would move quickly against them in event of a strike, seeking both civil and criminal penalties.

A court injunction prohibiting the controllers from staging a slowdown or strike remained in effect after a federal judge Thursday refused to lift it.

The FAA has prepared an emergency traffic plan that cuts the number of commercial flights in half in case of a strike. Amtrak said it would put peak holiday contingency plans into effect should the air controllers strike.

George Brandon, vice president of Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization Southwest Region, is shown in front of a jet mural in his office in Bedford, Texas. PATCO members are scheduled to take a strike vote at midnight Sunday.

Former Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz was sentenced to 30 days in the Metropolitan Corrections Center in Chicago and fined $10,000 for income tax evasion in 1978. Federal Judge Jesse E. Eschbach sentenced Butz to five years in prison, then reduced the sentence to 30 days.

Reagan supports House Republicans on budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Demanding an end to "the fiscal joy ride in Washington," President Reagan declared his support Friday for efforts by House Republicans to push for $5.2 billion more in 1982 budget cuts than the majority Democrats are willing to yield.

"Doing only one-third of the job is not good enough," Reagan declared in a brief written statement he read just before boarding his helicopter for a weekend at Camp David.

The Republican plan was outlined by House Minority leader Robert Michel, who said the GOP was offering a "bare-bones" amendment. He expressed confidence a majority of the Democratic House will go along in what promises to be a bruising floor fight.

But Michel conceded it will be a difficult battle — tougher than Reagan's easy victory on the budget — and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., has predicted the Democrats will win.

Michel, flanked by Rep. Delbert Latta, R-Ohio, ranking Republican on the Budget Committee and Rep. Phil Gramm of Texas, a prominent conservative Democrat, said the GOP plan would cut spending by $20 billion more than the savings Democrats claim through 1984, mostly from social programs.

In his statement, Reagan called next week's House vote on budget cuts next week "a crucial test" of his proposed economic program. He said "decided to throw my full support" behind the GOP proposal.

Reagan said he phoned O'Neill, with whom he exchanged angry rhetoric this week, to seek O'Neill's approval for "a one-time vote" on the Republican proposal. O'Neill had not yet answered the request.

The so-called Gramm-Latta II amendment, announced less than an hour before Reagan's statement, would fulfill the goals of Reagan's spending program and bring down "punishing interest rates and inflation," the president said.

"During recent weeks, many House committees have made a good faith effort to help bring federal spending under control," Reagan said. "I applaud them for their efforts. But in two major instances, the bill that is emerging in the House Budget Committee has serious shortcomings." The result, he said, has been a failure to curb automatic spending programs and adoption of only one-third of the cuts he wanted.

"The result, if unchanged, will be $23 billion in additional red ink and inflationary pressure in the next several years," Reagan said. "Doing only one-third of the job is not good enough."

Reagan said some House committees rejected his proposal to substitute block grants to state and local governments for "88 duplicative, regulation-ridden federal programs" because they "want to hang onto the strings of Washington bureaucracy."

"Our nation's needs are too important to tolerate this 'business as usual' attitude on Capitol Hill."

Asked if he has the votes to push the alternative proposal through, Reagan replied, "I don't know. That's why I'll be working" to win public support for the plan.

Meanwhile, Democrats abandoned their plan to deny Republicans a chance to offer their amendment, clearing the way for a showdown after Congress returns from its July 4 recess. The decision followed an unannounced meeting Thursday involving Budget Director David A. Stockman and two Democrats on the House Budget Committee, including Chairman James Jones of Oklahoma.

At a news conference, Jones criticized the Republicans for proposing "very deep cuts in basic programs." He said the GOP plan would mean reductions to an additional three million Social Security recipients and 1.3 million students receiving federally guaranteed loans.

The Republicans have been negotiating for several days with conservative Democrats to fashion a package that maximizes their chances for success, scaling back Reagan's original proposals in the process. They estimated the additional savings as $5.2 billion for next year, $7.2 billion in 1983 and $7.3 billion in 1984.

The Democratic package includes several billion dollars of "phony cuts" that would fail to achieve the claimed savings.

Neither Michel, Gramm nor Latta could provide an overall figure of savings for the Republican package of cuts. But they all said the total would exceed the amount required by the budget.

"Our amendments represent compromise and conciliation but not capitulation," Michel told reporters at a news conference. "We're not asking for the whole pie."

In general, the Republicans are seeking permanent changes in some social programs to replace the modifications made by Democrats. The GOP claims that some of the Democratic-proposed changes could easily be overturned, nullifying the savings.

An example is the food stamp program, where the Democrats claimed savings by placing a ceiling on total spending for the year.

Republicans claim that Congress, as it has in the past, would probably vote late in the year to exceed the ceiling. As a result, they are proposing a change in eligibility that would guarantee the savings.

Butz fined, sentenced to serve 30 days in jail

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) — Earl L. Butz, the 71-year-old former agriculture secretary, was sentenced Friday to serve 30 days in jail and pay a $10,000 fine for filing a false federal income tax return.

U.S. District Court Judge Jesse Eschbach ordered Butz to report within two weeks to the Metropolitan Correctional Center in downtown Chicago. The high-rise prison houses both maximum- and minimum-security inmates.

He will be on probation for the balance of the five-year term imposed by Eschbach.

Butz pleaded guilty on May 22 to a charge of fraudulently understating his 1978 federal income by $148,114.

Butz, wearing a dark suit, appearing somewhat pale and refusing to speak with reporters, entered the packed courtroom flanked by his lawyers, Cono Namorato and Carl Kloefer.

He told the judge the investigation was "a horrible nightmare" and promised, "I will not repeat this or any other crime."

"I'm guilty of the crime charged. I made a terrible mistake," Butz said. "There's no justification for what happened. It was an aberration."

Namorato urged the judge not to order any jail time for Butz, citing his age and saying, "He is a first offender. He is deeply sorry for what he did."

The lawyers said Butz has made complete restitution to the government, including paying back taxes, penalties and interest. A 50 percent civil fraud penalty of $61,183 will be paid as soon as possible, Namorato said.

The judge said Butz had "a distinguished record as a gentleman and a good citizen for over 70 years," but added that "the nature and the enormity of this offense mandates the imposition of substantial sentence."

Among the factors in Butz' favor, Eschbach said, was that he has already paid $119,935 in taxes, which includes taxes owed from his 1977 return. That 1977 return was part of the plea bargain arrangement with the government.

Senate hands victory to anti-busing forces

WASHINGTON (AP) — After ending his filibuster in a last gasp of protest, Sen. Lowell Weicker's attempt to dilute an anti-busing amendment was rejected on a vote of 45-30 Friday. The Senate then considered whether to impose even tougher restrictions on the longtime desegregation weapon.

Weicker, R-Conn., had sought to soften a measure by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., which would ban the Justice Department from seeking court orders imposing busing to remedy school segregation.

Fifteen Democrats joined 30 Republicans in voting no, while 12 Republicans and 18 Democrats voted in favor.

But a final vote on the measure was delayed until next week when Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., announced his intention to push for even tougher language, restricting not only the Justice Department, but also the federal courts, in desegregation cases.

Weicker wanted to tack on to the Helms amendment a reaffirmation of the authority of the Justice Department to enforce the Constitution.

"This amendment has absolutely nothing to do with busing. It has to do with the separation of powers," asserted Weicker, who had waged a one-man filibuster through the week. He said the Helms amendment, without such language, would be "patently unconstitutional."

Helms responded that Weicker's proposal "was a clever effort to gut the Helms amendment."

Of his own proposal, Helms asserted, "This amendment does not go further than to declare that forced busing is not a proper remedy. And that the Senate has a right to do. The Weicker amendment would cloud and possibly undermine what we hope to accomplish."

"The issue is how much longer are we going to allow the federal bureaucrats in the Justice Department to torment the little children of this country?"

Referring to two of his grandchildren, Helms said, "They ride the bus. They are bused across town. But my opposition to forced busing long predated my grandchildren being victims of forced busing."

After the vote on the Weicker proposal, Johnston signalled his intention to submit yet another addition to the Helms amendment. Parliamentary problems emerged, and Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker stepped in to suggest that further debate and voting on the issue be delayed until Monday.

The Johnston proposal goes beyond the Helms' amendment and raises even more questions about the constitutionality of such restrictions.

Weicker argued that the Helms amendment amounts to an unconstitutional legislative interference with executive branch authority. Applying the restrictions to the courts would add a second prong to the constitutional debate.

Johnston wants to prohibit the courts from ordering the busing of any student for a distance more than five miles or 15 minutes from the nearest neighborhood school.

Weicker told reporters he would continue his fight against both the Helms and the Johnston proposals, but he declined to say whether he would again try a filibuster.

Suit filed against redistricting plan

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A group of three state representatives and six voters have filed suit in state district court here against the Texas House version of a legislative redistricting plan, attorneys said Friday.

The suit alleges that the state House redistricting plan is unconstitutional under the Texas Constitution because it cuts county lines.

"The constitution states that you're not supposed to cut county lines when drawing up legislative districts," said Austin attorney George Korbell, who confirmed that the suit was filed about 4 p.m. Friday in 167th District Court in Austin.

Plaintiffs named in the suit are State Reps. Robert Valles of El Paso, Albert Luna of Houston and Matt Garcia of San Antonio. Also named are H.G. Wells, a lawyer from Tarrant County, Dwight Christopher from Cherokee County, Seldon Hale of Potter County, Armando Lopez of Webb County, Juan Gonzalez, a lawyer from Nueces County and Anne Mauzy of Dallas County.

Gov. Bill Clements Thursday vetoed a Senate version redrawing legislative districts and indicated his support of the House plan.

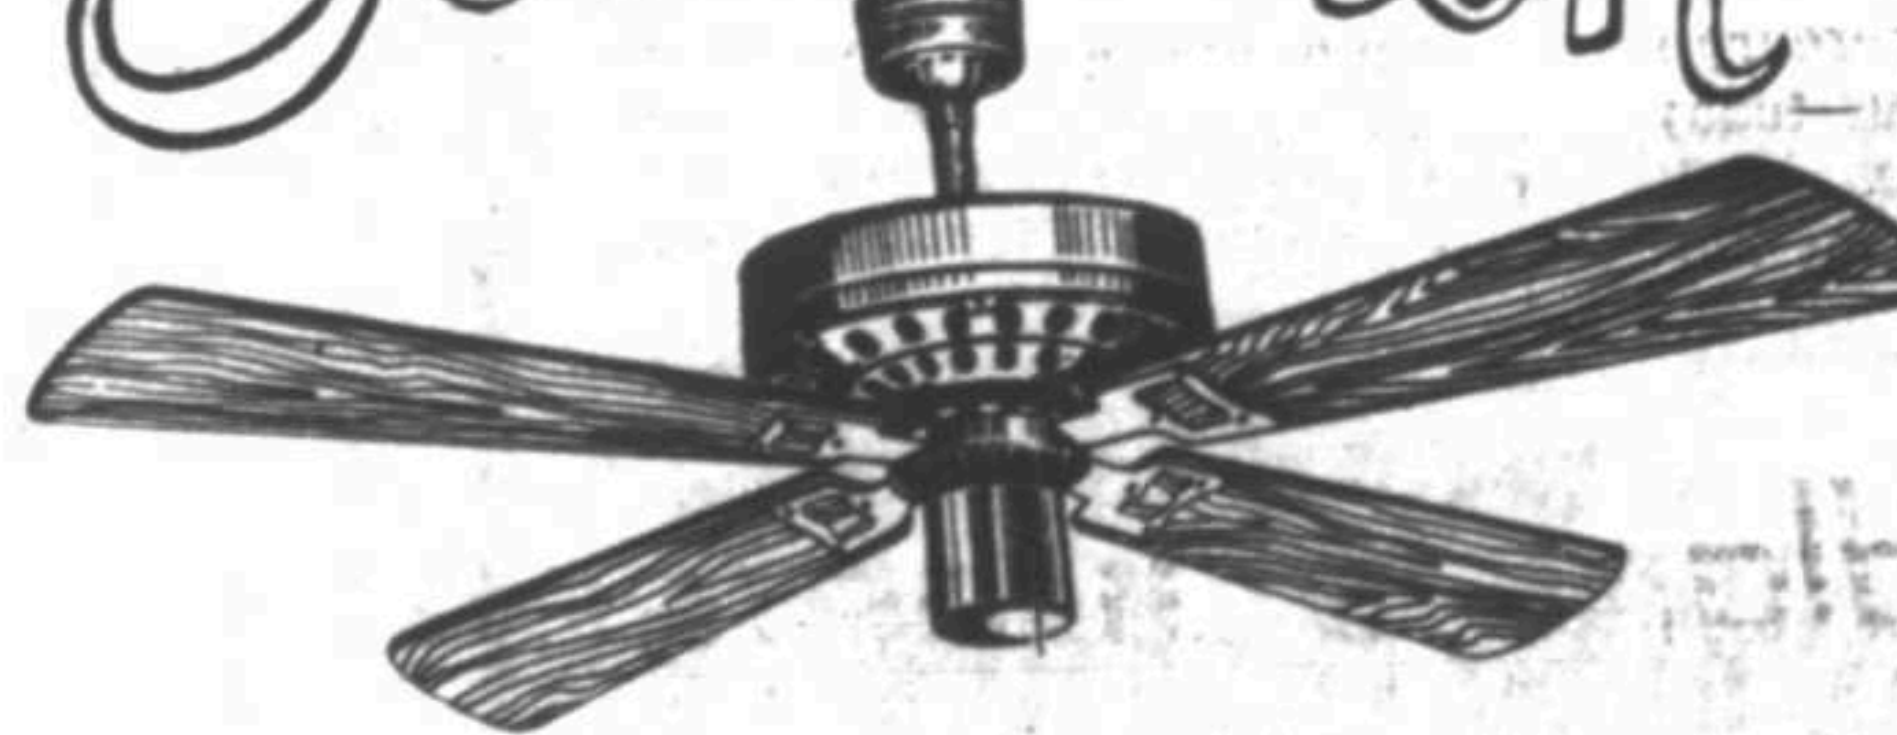

When state lawmakers failed to act on redistricting at the end of the regular legislative session June 1, Clements called a 30-day special session to deal with a handful of major issues. He said legislative redistricting would receive first priority.

"If (the plaintiffs) are successful, I suppose that means we're back at square one," Korbell said.

Korbell said the lawsuit filed Friday is identical to a suit filed 10 years ago (Craddick vs. Smith).

Man linked to Atlanta slayings files suit

ATLANTA (AP) — Sensational headlines and TV footage that "strongly implicated" a young man in some of Atlanta's slayings warrant a court order to halt a siege of "unrelenting publicity," his lawyer told a federal judge on Friday.

But media lawyers countered that the man's privacy "pales by comparison" with the intense interest in the investigation of 28 murders of young blacks since July 1979.

The 23-year-old freelance cameraman filed suit last week seeking a temporary restraining order against 17 news organizations that he claims have subjected him to a "media trial."

The man, who has not been identified by police, was questioned for 12 hours at the local FBI headquarters June 3 before he was released. He has not been arrested or charged in any of the 28 slayings.

At a hearing in U.S. District Court, lawyer Mary Welton introduced evidence ranging from television film of officers leaving her client's home with bags of "possible evidence" to a New York Post headline reading, "Atlanta Monster Seized."

Also admitted was an affidavit signed by the man alleging that because of Atlanta's current "mental climate," news coverage focusing on him had endangered his life.

The man, who did not appear in court, also complained in the affidavit that his friends and acquaintances "are reluctant to associate" with him because of the publicity.

Citing the man's right to privacy and a fair trial, Ms. Welton asked U.S. District Judge Orinda Evans to bar the media from calling her client a suspect in any of the slayings.

After hearing arguments for both sides, Ms. Evans adjourned the session. Clerks in her office indicated she would rule Tuesday on the suits against the news media and law enforcement officials.

The suit also asks the judge to bar the media from using his name, picture, address, films of his home or other means of identifying him. It also seeks to prevent the media from "stalking" his property or staking out his home in northwest Atlanta.

At least three lawyers representing several media organizations filed motions to dismiss the suit. But Ms. Evans said she would not consider motions to dismiss until she reviewed all evidence presented in the seven-hour hearing.

News media lawyers, citing the First Amendment, called the man's petition an unconstitutional attempt to restrain the press. And some lawyers argued that the man has become a public figure and thus a legitimate object of coverage, because of widespread interest in the investigation.

News of the inquiry is part "of everyone's daily life in this city," said Kirk Quillian, lawyer for Cable News Network. The man's right to privacy "pales by comparison," he said.

Quillian also complained that Ms. Welton was treating the media as a "class or entity." He urged the judge to keep in mind in reaching a decision applying to all of the organizations that various news organizations have presented different reports on the case.

David Bailey, who represents Cox Enterprises, owner of Atlanta's two major daily newspapers, said the man's request for prior restraint on the press was unconstitutional.

The complaint against the media was part of a two-pronged attack the man launched last Friday since he attracted intense police and media attention June 3.

He also has asked for a court order to block law enforcement agents from leaking to the news media information that could link him to the slayings. The judge held a closed hearing Tuesday on the complaint against 11 law enforcement chiefs and public officials, but did not rule on that case immediately.

Police have said the man first came to their attention when he was stopped early in the morning May 22 near a bridge over the Chattahoochee River.

Police had been staking out the bridge because six of the 28 victims have been found floating in the river west of Atlanta. The man was stopped near the bridge after officers heard a splash in the river. He was allowed to move on after questioning.

Two days later, the body of Nathaniel Cater, the 28th victim, was found in the river downstream from the bridge. Police placed the man under surveillance shortly after the bridge incident.

Also Friday, medical examiners who conducted an autopsy on a badly decomposed male body tentatively concluded the body is that of an elderly white man and his death was not related to the 28 slayings of young blacks. Final testing will be completed Monday.

"I don't think it is one of the series of cases," said Dr. John Feegel, associate Fulton County medical examiner. He said the man appeared to be in his 60s and no cause of death has been determined. Authorities were trying to reach his relatives.

"We're not even sure it's a homicide and not an accidental death," said in a creek behind a church on the city's west side.

Meanwhile the Atlanta Children's Foundation, set up to help raise funds for a special summer recreation program, announced Friday that Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. has agreed to donate $50,000 to the program.

The program, called "Safe Summer '81," is intended to keep youngsters off the streets.

Stepping down

Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart, 66, appointed to the court in 1958 by President Eisenhower, tells a Friday news conference of his plans to retire from the bench July 3. "It's better to go too soon than wait too long," Stewart told reporters.

Stewart says letter persuaded him to retire

AP Wirephoto

WASHINGTON (AP) — Observing that "it's better to go too soon than to stay too long," Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart said Friday a schoolgirl's letter persuaded him to retire.

In a fearless and humor-filled meeting with reporters, Stewart, 66, said he made up his mind to retire early in 1980 but decided to wait for the presidential election. He submitted his resignation to President Reagan on May 18, and it was announced Thursday, effective July 3.

Said Stewart: "1980 was an election year and I thought it would be very harmful for the court and for the country. ... Any vacancy created by my retirement would not be filled, but the court would inevitably be drawn into a presidential political campaign if I retired during that year."

Stewart, whose ideology-free, middle-of-the-road approach to interpreting the Constitution made him a "swing vote" among the justices for many of his nearly 23 years on the high court, said his decision to wait had nothing to do with Jimmy Carter being president.

The incident that "sort of started me thinking," said Stewart, was a Feb. 19, 1980, letter from a St. Cloud, Minn., schoolgirl. After the justice's news conference, copies of that letter and Stewart's reply were released. "What makes you continue to be on the court instead of retiring?" asked Donna Gallus, then a senior at Technical High School. "My reason for writing you is I would like to know why you have stayed on the Supreme Court so long."

Stewart's reply 10 days later explained: "I did not become eligible to retire until late last month (his 65th birthday). Under these circumstances, it has not occurred to me, at least so far, that I have remained as a member of the Supreme Court an unduly long time since the date of my eligibility to retire from it."

Under federal law, a justice may retire with full pay when reaching age 65 with 15 years of service. Stewart ranks second in seniority behind Justice William J. Brennan, who has served for nearly 25 years. As he was leaving the news conference, a reporter asked Stewart what one factor tipped the balance in favor of retirement. The justice unhesitatingly replied, "I think it was that little girl's letter."

Stewart said he is in good health but wants to spend more time with his wife, Mary Ann, their three children and five young grandchildren.

Stewart noted that when he first became a federal judge in 1954 he was the nation's youngest at age 39, and added, "I thought it was better to go before I became the oldest."

He said his decision was shared with Vice President George Bush, a "longtime friend" and fellow Yale University graduate, and Attorney General William French Smith before he met at the White House with Reagan on May 18.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Stewart told Smith about the pending retirement in March, and that Smith had informed Reagan about it in mid-April.

It remained perhaps Washington's best-kept secret until Stewart's announcement Thursday. He did not even tell seven of his colleagues or his law clerks until Thursday morning, but said Chief Justice Warren E. Burger was informed "early in the game."

Asked several times about the chance that Reagan will nominate the first woman to the court to succeed him, Stewart said there are "many qualified women," but added, "It's an insult to the court, the appointee and the American public to appoint someone just because he or she is not a white male."

The president told reporters Friday he would make an announcement soon on his choice for Stewart's successor. Asked if there were women on his list of candidates, Reagan replied: "Of course." Several?

"Yes."

Stewart held out the possibility that he might stay on, briefly, beyond July 3. The court is considering the legality of the agreement that freed 52 American hostages from Iran in return for the July 19 transfer of Iranian assets frozen in the United States. Arguments are to be heard in that case Wednesday, and it is possible the court will not have its decision ready by Stewart's planned retirement date.

Stewart said he will participate in the oral arguments, but might not participate in the decision if it's announced after July 3. Asked what would happen if the court's remaining eight members were evenly split, he added, "I can foresee the possibility that I might reconsider that and extend it."

Panel won't change hair length rule

DEER PARK, Texas (AP) — The Deer Park High School Drill Team may have a shortage of spirit when it takes the field this fall.

The school board refused Wednesday to change a drill team rule that hair must be no longer than the top of the neck, and one cheerleader says a dozen girls have said they will quit the team in protest.

Tracy Mitchell, 14, says she will show up for practice, but says "they'll have to kick me out," because she refuses to cut her waist-length blond hair.

"It took me 12 years to grow it and I won't cut it," Tracy said.

Superintendent Leon Wolters recommended against changing the rule, saying the drill team itself voted against a change May 3rd.

But the vote was followed by a petition signed by 62 of the 80 drill team members who said the vote was surrounded by confusion.

Frances Tully, school board president, said she favored letting the drill team vote again before the August haircut deadline.

"That's not going to happen now," she said.

Meanwhile, Tracy's mother, Zaida Mitchell said she is dropping efforts to have the hair code changed.

"It's not worth tearing the school, kids and me up," she said. "I'm tired and I am giving up."

Doctor gives birth after doing surgery

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Dr. Sally Bradley was performing minor surgery when she got a funny feeling in her stomach. Ninety minutes later the doctor gave birth to a baby girl.

Dr. Bradley completed a five-minute operation before checking herself in as a patient, officials at St. Vincent Hospital said.

Both mother and child, a 7 pound, 10 ounce baby, were reported doing well Thursday.

Dr. Bradley said she was surprised but not alarmed when she noticed contraction pains became increasingly severe as she performed surgery.

Although she normally advises patients to stop working during the final week of pregnancy, the doctor said she "felt like I shouldn't take off any more time than I had to" from her practice.

Dr. Bradley shares an obstetric practice with Dr. H. Edwin Campbell, who delivered the baby Monday.

The two physicians delivered a set of quadruplets last week to a Kokomo couple.

Air pollution proposal criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — The administration has drawn up proposals for major reductions in air pollution standards, a plan which a House subcommittee chairman says would gut current law and condemn millions of Americans to "live indefinitely in dirty air."

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., released Friday an executive department draft which he termed "a blueprint for the elimination of the Clean Air Act."

"It is a dangerous path that the administration is taking in this proposal," said Waxman, citing public opinion polls showing strong support for the present law. "Millions of Americans would be condemned to live indefinitely in dirty air."

Waxman, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health and the environment, also released a letter to President Reagan urging him to abandon the proposal, saying it "will only delay the passage of truly needed changes to the law."

"It will cause a furious and acrimonious battle that is to no one's advantage," Waxman said.

The Clean Air Act, the nation's principal air pollution law, is scheduled to expire on Sept. 30 and must be extended by Congress. In the process, some changes in the law will be made, but key lawmakers in both the House and the Senate have said they want only to streamline the present law, not make major changes.

Byron Nelson, a spokesman for the Environmental Protection Agency, confirmed that Waxman had released a staff working paper on the law, but described it as "just a draft" that is undergoing further work. He declined comment on Waxman's descriptions of the draft.

Mark Griffiths, an associate director of the National Association of Manufacturers, said his organization had "no complaints" with the proposals as outlined by Waxman, although he also noted that the draft is likely to undergo revision before being submitted to Congress.

Griffiths, noting Waxman's reference to public opinion polls in favor of preserving the current law, argued that "if the people knew what the Clean Air Act (required) that doesn't contribute one bit to air quality, they would want changes."

The administration has promised to formally present its proposed Clean Air amendments by the end of this month. As outlined by Waxman, however, the proposals will go far beyond any fine-tuning of the current law.

Waxman said the draft of the proposal indicated the administration will seek to:

— Repeal the act's non-attainment program, which forces polluting industries to clean up their factories until health standards are met.

— Give each state broad authority to work toward reduction of air pollution at its own pace. The states also would be allowed to relax pollution control requirements at existing factories and to allow new facilities to be built without advanced pollution control equipment.

— Relax auto pollution control standards by increasing the legal amount of carbon monoxide and nitrogen oxides in auto exhaust and allowing emission levels to be averaged within classes of vehicles.

— Weaken federal authority over acid rain, the pollutant that is believed to result when sulfur oxides from smokestacks change chemically in the air into a weak form of acid that can fall hundreds of miles away.

Waxman said the administration's proposal would change the definition of "interstate air pollution" to exclude acid rain, thus preventing federal intervention.

— Eliminate most provisions designed to protect air quality in areas that are not yet polluted. The "prevention of significant deterioration" restrictions would be kept only for national parks and wilderness areas, with pollution in other clean-air areas allowed to increase to a national standard.

— Weaken federal authority over toxic air pollution — including pollutants that can cause cancer — by allowing the cost of pollution controls to be weighed against health risks. The head of the Environmental Protection Agency would be given discretion to dismiss health risks.

— Weaken enforcement ability by making court suits and fines against violators optional rather than mandatory. The draft also says that enforcement orders no longer could carry deadlines for compliance, only a requirement that compliance must be attained "as expeditiously as practicable."

Congress told it should ignore wilderness proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key member of the House Interior Committee said Friday that Congress should ignore Reagan administration recommendations on wilderness areas when they conflict with plans agreed to by the interests affected.

Rep. Phillip Burton of California, the second-ranking Democrat on the committee, said that should be the case with his proposal for wilderness designations in California that the administration has opposed.

"This accommodation was struck by Republicans and Democrats working with all the affected interests," Burton said. "If all the local people are satisfied and our colleagues are satisfied, even if it doesn't agree with the Forest Service plan, we should accept it."

The subcommittee on public lands was continuing its review of Burton's plan to designate 52 new wilderness areas and wilderness additions totaling 2.1 million acres of national forest in California. The bill is similar to one that passed the House last year but failed to get through the Senate.

Genny Smith of the San Joaquin Wilderness Association called the proposal a compromise that is "reasonable, balanced and fair to all."

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, however, urged the subcommittee to declare a moratorium on any further wilderness designations, which put land off limits to development and motorized travel.

Chamber spokesman Harvey Alter said past wilderness designations by Congress "have been, at best, acrimonious with not enough time to permit a proper inventory of the acreage proposed for withdrawal."

Alter said Congress should agree to end the wilderness debate by 1985 and release for development all land not formally designated wilderness by then, a proposal strongly supported by the administration.

On Thursday, Assistant Agriculture Secretary John Crowell, who oversees the nation's public forests, said Burton's plan for California goes far beyond the recommendations of the government's Roadless Area Review and Evaluation study. It called for only 1.2 million acres of new California wilderness areas.

Crowell said the state already has 2.7 million acres of wilderness and the administration's proposal would bring that total to nearly 4 million acres, about 4 percent of all the land in California. He argued that the additions sought by Burton would bar access to hun-

Study focused on heat deaths

ATLANTA (AP) — Heat stroke is primarily an urban disease, mostly affecting the old, the poor and minorities, the national Centers for Disease Control said Friday in a study issued following the severe heat wave of 1980.

The CDC said the results of the study can help reduce hot weather deaths because it shows who gets heat stroke and why. About 1,265 heat-related deaths were reported in 1980, compared with an average of about 200 a year in previous years.

State and federal health authorities in St. Louis and Kansas City, Mo. — where 784 deaths and severe heat illnesses occurred last year — began looking at who was susceptible to heat illness and what could be done to protect those people.

"Heat stroke rates in persons 65 or older were 12 to 13 times the rates in the remainder of the population," the CDC said in publishing the study's results in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

Poor people and blacks also had high rates of heat stroke, as did alcoholics, people with mental illness and people who could not take care of themselves, the report said. Certain antipsychotic drugs also contributed to heat stroke risk.

The CDC reported in March that old people, blacks and the poor were hardest hit by the record-setting heat wave of 1980. The report released Friday was the second part of its heat wave study, with the third part — a nationwide survey — still under way.

The study will help doctors identify factors that increase the risk of heat stroke, which occurs when body temperature rises above 105 degrees and no sweating occurs. Brain damage, kidney failure and death are some of the consequences.

Hundreds of loggers had already been ordered out of the area as the volcano shook with tremors.

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Mount St. Helens erupted Friday, pushing chunks of lava through cracks on its crater floor, adding to the size of the volcano's mammoth dome and increasing the confidence with which scientists can predict future activity.

As expected, Friday's eruption was a non-explosive, "technical" eruption. Scientists said a leveling out of seismic activity diminished the chance of a more dangerous blast.

It was the ninth eruption since the mountain's cataclysmic blast on May 18, 1980, blast and the fourth non-violent dome-building eruption.

A cover of thick clouds had made it impossible to see the mountain earlier in the day. But two helicopters positioned on a wide, flat plain about four miles north of the mountain were able to fly into the crater when an opening was found in the clouds.

"One of our helicopters managed to sneak in and have a quick glimpse before the clouds came in again," said Kathy Cashman, a U.S. Geological Survey geologist.

No firm estimate for the size or shape of the dome was available, she said. When last measured, the dome was 300 to 400 feet high and 1,200 feet wide.

Scientists had expected that the latest activity on the mountain would be confined to growth of the dome, but they did not entirely rule out a more explosive eruption.

The closure meant hundreds of loggers, their chainsaws and log trucks, were absent from the mountainside Friday.

Geologists said they doubted the mountain would blast columns of ash and superheated air as during previous explosive eruptions, but a state official said, "We're being cautious for good reason. We don't want anybody else hurt up there."

The mountain probably is oozing thick, molten rock onto its crater floor, according to scientists monitoring instruments around the mountain and at the University of Washington geophysics center 130 miles north.

While they doubted a cataclysmic eruption like the one May 18, 1980, that left 60 people dead or missing, was in the works, they didn't know for sure because thick storm clouds obscured the 8,400-foot peak in southwest Washington.

It might be Tuesday before weather clears for a good look, said Bob Arthur, lead forecaster at the National Weather Service office in Seattle.

he state Department of Emergency Services closed the restricted hazard zones around the mountain for an indefinite period Thursday afternoon after scientists concluded the mountain was perking up, said Rick LaValla, department operations manager.

The zones, which extend in an irregular line out about 22 miles from the mountain, will remain closed until the mountain quiets down.

Seismographs on Friday recorded one "significant event" of shallow earthquake activity every half hour, said A.B. Adams, UW geophysics center spokesman.

That and other measurements "are good evidence we're having lava extrusion now. We do have small events that may be steam and ash emissions," he said.

Earlier such non-violent eruptions have built a huge dome of hardened lava on the crater floor. The dome is 300 feet to 400 feet tall and about 1,200 feet wide.

The U.S. Geological Survey in Vancouver said early Friday that changes in ground tilt and earthquake readings from the volcano, starting at 5 p.m. Thursday, "suggest that renewed dome growth may have begun."

Fortunes of revolution turned quickly against Abolhassan Bani-Sadr

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

The fortunes of revolution turned quickly against Abolhassan Bani-Sadr. In January 1979, he flew home with Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini after 14 years in exile and a year later became Iran's president. Eighteen months later, the revolutionary who opposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi for more than two decades is on the run, excommunicated by associates in Khomeini's regime as "Shah II," marked for prosecution and perhaps execution.

Bani-Sadr, 47, is the biggest casualty of the power struggle between the two strains of the Iranian revolution — the fundamentalist Moslem mullahs who rebelled against Pahlavi because he Westernized Iran's traditional society, and the liberal and leftist nationalists who fought the shah because of his despotic rule and his partnership with the United States.

THE FRENCH-EDUCATED, left-leaning Bani-Sadr proved to be the most conciliatory Iranian leader in the U.S. hostage crisis. But to many of Iran's conservative clergy, he became the hated embodiment of foreign ideology.

After he was elected first president of the Islamic Republic of Iran by a 75 percent majority in January 1980, his position appeared unassailable. But he misjudged the strength of the mullahs and their Islamic Republican Party and he overestimated his own influence with Khomeini.

Bani-Sadr was born in Hamadan, in western Iran, the son of an ayatollah, the highest clerical rank in the dominant Shiite Moslem sect.

He studied economics and theology at the University of Tehran and in the early 1950s joined a student movement opposed to the Pahlavi regime. When anti-government disturbances led by Khomeini rocked the country in 1963, Bani-Sadr was wounded and spent four months in jail.

In 1964, he fled to France. There he continued his studies and refined his vision of an economically self-reliant, egalitarian and thoroughly Islamic Iran. In two published books he pictured his homeland as an economic and military appendage of the United States.

HE TAUGHT AT THE University of Paris and edited an anti-shah newspaper for Iranian expatriates.

The exiled Khomeini, inspiration of a growing uprising in Iran, arrived in France from Iraq in mid-1978. Bani-Sadr became one of his closest associates.

After the royal regime collapsed in early 1979, Khomeini and his Revolutionary Council took charge of the "new Iran." Bani-Sadr was a member of the secretive, all-powerful council.

Nine months later, militants seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and took its staff hostage. Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan's government resigned, and Bani-Sadr was named finance minister and acting foreign minister.

His mustached, bespectacled face became familiar to millions around the world as he searched for a compromise to end the hostage crisis. But he went too far for the militants and the hard-line anti-American clergymen who supported them. He was ousted from the foreign affairs post, clearly with Khomeini's acquiescence. His troubles with the mullahs had begun.

McKnight says veto was 'self-serving'

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sen. Peyton McKnight, D-Tyler, says Gov. Bill Clements' reasons for vetoing a bill about university regents was "rather self-serving and forebodingly unfounded."

McKnight said in a statement that Clements comment that he would be "the only governor in recent years to serve four years and only appoint three regents" indicated "a concern more for his own chances for re-election than the interests of the state."

The bill vetoed by Clements would limit regents of the University of Texas and Texas A&M to staggered six-year terms beginning Feb. 1. Clements said this would prevent an outgoing governor, who leaves office in mid-January from appointing three regent to each school.

He said he would have signed the bill if the staggered-terms has started between Jan. 1 and 7.

BANI-SADR REMAINED as finance chief, nationalizing banks like a good socialist and outlawing bank interest like a good Moslem. He was reputed to have a microfilm file linking his economic and political principles to passages from the Koran, the Moslem holy book.

After he was elected president two-months later, the mullahs realized their error in letting the presidency get away from their faction and organized for victory in the parliamentary elections in the spring. Their Islamic Republican Party and its allies won a majority of the seats in the new Majlis, the Iranian parliament, and forced Bani-Sadr to accept their choice for prime minister, Mohammad Ali Rajai, a former high school teacher.

The president retaliated by delaying some of Rajai's Cabinet appointments, but the prime minister got control of the government. The embassy militants and the IRP continued to thwart Bani-Sadr's efforts to end the hostage stalemate. When Iraq invaded Iran last September, the president withdrew from the forefront of the U.S.-Iran crisis and concentrated on his role as commander-in-chief of the Iranian armed forces.

THE HOSTAGES WERE finally released last Jan. 20 under an agreement negotiated by Rajai and his government. Bani-Sadr tried to turn this to his political advantage by charging that the settlement was a sellout to the United States. But Iraq had replaced the United States as the whipping boy of Iranian politics, and the hostages were no longer a burning public issue.

The embattled chief executive sniped at his opponents through the outspoken "President's Report Card" column in his newspaper. He charged repeatedly that his foes were plotting to assassinate him.

"At an appropriate time they will inflict their final blow and change Iran into a graveyard, back to despotism, back to corruption and decay," he declared in a speech in February.

The Majlis whittled away at his powers, in March giving Rajai complete authority over foreign affairs, finance and other key policy areas.

At previous crisis points, Khomeini had shielded Bani-Sadr from his enemies, apparently trying to contain the split within his revolution.

Space shuttle's payload unveiled

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — When the space shuttle Columbia blasts off again on a 5-day mission this fall, it will carry a $100 million mechanical arm and half a dozen photographic and electronic eyes to view the Earth.

"From our parochial point of view, it's the time when the shuttle finally gets to do what it's supposed to do," said John Neilon of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. "And that is to carry useful experiments and cargo."

On Thursday, Neilon and other NASA officials showed off the cargo that will accompany astronauts Joe Engle and Richard Truly on the second shuttle flight, slated for as early as Sept. 30.

Most of the cargo is scientific instruments designed to search for valuable minerals on earth, test the environment, hunt for ocean pollution and analyze severe weather.

Also on board the world's first reusable spacecraft will be a 50-foot mechanical arm, which in the future will be used to release and catch satellites. The device works much like a human arm.

The manipulator arm system was developed and built by Canada for about $100 million and donated to the U.S. space program. An agreement between the two countries calls for NASA to buy the next three arms at a total cost of about $65 million.

Bruce Aikenhead, who heads the manipulator program for the National Research Council of Canada, said the arm will be cradled inside the orbiter's cargo bay next week.

Weighing less than 1,000 pounds and measuring 15 inches in diameter, the device "will be stretched out and its shoulder, elbow and wrist joints will be fully manipulated in space," he said.

"We can hardly wait for those tests," Aikenhead said.

The scientific cargo will be mounted on a special aluminum platform supplied by the European Space Agency.

Handgun facts explained

By MIKE GIULIANO
Hearst Special News Service

Since handgun owners insist on keeping their guns, illegal or not, you may be wondering what they like so much—and what you're most likely to come up against, whether you like it or not.

If your next-door neighbor keeps a gun in the house, it is probably a .22-caliber, .38-caliber or .357 Magnum pistol.

Of the 2.3 million handguns manufactured in the United States during 1979 for non-military purposes, two of every three were either a .22, .38 or .357 Magnum, says Henry Bashkin of Handgun Control Inc., a Washington-based lobbying group that keeps track of such statistics.

Among those guns, the .22 was then, and continues to be, the most popular selection because it is small, lightweight and inexpensive.

This was the breakdown of sales in 1979, the most current year for which statistics are available:

- 626,513 .22-caliber guns.
- 511,231 .357 Magnums.
- 342,047 .38-caliber specials.

Many of the larger caliber pistols were purchased by police departments and security guards.

The differences among these guns are many: their size, shape, weight; whether the firing chamber revolves or moves automatically from a clip; how many rounds of ammunition they hold; their barrel length and accuracy; and how they recoil.

But there are some generalities that can be made: the larger the caliber of the gun, the larger the size of the bullet; the larger the size of the bullet, the greater the powder charge and the greater the impact on the target; and the more powerful a gun is, the more expensive it is.

The one exception worth noting to those generalities is the world "magnum," which essentially means that it carries more powder and therefore is more powerful than its caliber would indicate. The .357 Magnum, for instance, is smaller by caliber than the .38, but is more powerful.

While .22-caliber models usually can be purchased for less than $100, the .38-caliber, .357 Magnum, .44-caliber and .45-caliber models often cost $300 or more.

"The difference between being hit with a .22 and with a .38 is the difference between being hit with a cane and with a baseball bat," Bashkin said.

According to gun experts, the power of even the larger caliber handguns has been overrated. Some of that is fostered by television and movie dramatization and some of it is fostered in print. An encyclopedia article on handguns says, for example, that a bullet fired from a Colt .45 will "flip a lightweight man over."

"Nobody ever got knocked over by a gun," said a spokesman for the technical division of the National Rifle Association in Washington.

It also is a popular misconception that all guns of a particular caliber essentially are the same. In the .22-caliber family of handguns alone, there are dozens of models.

Bashkin says that at least 60 different .22 models were listed in a recent issue of a magazine called "Everybody's Gun," ranging in price from $35 to $100.

Many .22-caliber models have a six-inch barrel and fire six shots. The .22-caliber revolver is nearly twice as popular as the .22 automatic. A revolver is less apt to misfire and is easier to clean.

The length of the gun barrel affects a gun's performance. The longer the barrel, the greater velocity and accuracy of the bullet. That is why a rifle is more accurate than a pistol at a distance.

Barrel lengths in any caliber weapon vary greatly. The barrel length in a .22, for instance, can range from 1.25 inches—the length on the .22 used in the assassination attempt on President Reagan—to 11 inches.

Firearms experts say that nearly all handguns are easy to use—and misuse. Many domestic shootings, for example, do not occur when somebody shoots an intruder, but when a member of the household accidentally shoots himself.

Safety mechanisms on handguns make it more difficult to accidentally pull the trigger, but they don't guarantee that such mishaps can be prevented.

Clements' veto praised

AUSTIN, Texas (AP)—Rep. Bill Keese, D-Somerville, praised Gov. Bill Clements Thursday for vetoing a bill that would transfer regulation of gasoline in Texas to the Texas Railroad Commission.

At the same time, he asked Clements to include in the July 13 special session a bill that would put gasoline production under the Department of Agriculture.

"Maybe then, we won't see any more attempts to sabotage a gasoline industry in Texas by gasoline's opponents," said Keese.

Turkey would grant asylum to Bani-Sadr

By STEVEN R. HURST
Associated Press Writer

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — A top official in Turkey's military junta said Friday Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr probably would be granted political asylum if he arrives in Turkey.

The official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, said Bani-Sadr was not in the country as of this morning. But he and other Turkish sources said they would not be surprised if the Iranian president arrived in Turkey soon.

The junta official said Bani-Sadr's presence would cause the Turkish government acute embarrassment, but that an asylum request would likely be granted.

Since the Shah of Iran fell from power in January 1979, nearly a dozen Iranian officials and military men have fled to neighboring Turkey. Rumors swept the Turkish capital Thursday night that Bani-Sadr was already in the eastern Turkish city of Van — 85 miles from the Iranian border.

The governor of Van, Nazmi Iyibil, told The Associated Press this morning by telephone, "There are no Iranians, let alone Bani-Sadr, in Van."

Bani-Sadr was stripped of his command of the Iranian armed forces last week by religious leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, leaving him virtually powerless. The Majlis, Iran's parliament, is to begin debate Saturday on the president's competence to remain in office.

Assadollah Lajavardi, Tehran's revolutionary prosecutor, said on Tehran Radio that Bani-Sadr has been missing since Tuesday.

Should Bani-Sadr attempt to flee to Turkey overland, he probably would have to use one of two routes. The shorter would take him to the Esen-dere, Turkey, border crossing near Van. The other crossing point is northeast of Van at Gurbulak.

The 240-mile Iran-Turkey is a rugged mountainous region. The rebellious Iranian Kurds are said to control a 30-mile strip of territory on the Iranian side.

French shift to left due to decline of power in the Communist Party

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — The election success of President Francois Mitterrand and his Socialists, marking a sharp turn to the left in French politics, is due in part to the decline of one of the left's major forces, the Communist Party.

Since the end of World War II, the left has commanded the loyalty of roughly half of France's voters. But for the last 22 years, centrist fears of the Communists kept the Socialists as well as the Communists in the opposition while conservative presidents occupied the Elysee Palace and the rightists dominated the National Assembly.

Throughout the lean years, the left sought to unify its forces as the only way to win power, building on the 20 percent of the voters who traditionally supported the Communist Party.

In 1972, the Socialists and the Communists united to form the Union of the Left. They designated Mitterrand their joint candidate in the 1974 presidential election. He lost to Valery Giscard d'Estaing by only 420,000 votes.

The Socialist-Communist union was never a very comfortable one. A few months before the crucial legislative elections of 1978, the Communists precipitated the final break. Ending a brief flirtation with Eurocommunism and returning to Moscow's fold, they made a blistering series of attacks on Mitterrand and the Socialists as well as the conservatives.

THE SUNDERING OF THE UNION and the hardening of the Communists' ideological stance marked the beginning of the party's decline. Many of its brightest intellectuals bolted. Signs began to appear of membership losses in the party and in the Communist-led General Confederation of Labor, France's largest labor union.

The electorate's dissatisfaction with the party was confirmed in May by party leader Georges Marchais' dismal showing in the first round of the presidential election. The Communists' traditional 20 percent of the vote dropped to 15.3 percent.

They increased this to 16.1 percent in the first round of the assembly elections last Sunday. But their total vote was 403,000 less than that in the presidential election, and they are expected to come out of the runoff this weekend with about half the seats they had in the old assembly.

MEANWHILE, MITTERRAND led the field in the first round of the presidential election, then defeated Giscard d'Estaing in the runoff by more than a million votes. His party was the front runner last weekend, and an agreement with the Communists to run a single leftist slate in the runoff promised the Socialists a majority in the assembly for the first time.

Much credit for the Socialist success is given to Mitterrand's handling of his former allies in the years of squabbling.

He refused to respond to the Communist attacks or engage in polemics. In the presidential campaign, he kept his distance from the Communists but did not reject them, acknowledging that he needed their votes but refusing to say how much influence they would have if he was elected.

The election results indicated that he convinced many centrists he could give France a social democratic government like those in West Germany, Austria or Sweden without opening the door to communism.

BUT THE COMMUNIST issue was not the only factor in the left's sweeping victory. Many voters felt that more than two decades of conservative government were enough and that it was time for a change.

The desire for change was enhanced by the economic situation, particularly the steadily rising unemployment rate and inflation eating away at the average family's purchasing power.

Even Giscard d'Estaing admitted that the greatest failure of his presidency was the inability to put more Frenchmen to work. When he took office in 1974, the unemployment rate was an acceptable 2.5 percent. At the end of his seven-year term, it had nearly tripled to 7.3 percent. Now it has risen to 7.5 percent, with nearly 1.8 million people out of work. Inflation in 1980 was 13.6 percent.

The left hit hard at the economic issues, accusing Giscard d'Estaing and his government of allowing the country's standard of living to be eroded. France's economic performance was no worse than that of most Western countries and better than many. But the charges found a receptive audience among many that were also tired of looking at the same old conservative faces.

Strake says Voting Act under review

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The effects of the Voting Rights Act on Texas are being reviewed by both state and national officials, Secretary of State George Strake said Thursday.

He attended a meeting with U.S. Attorney General French Smith in Washington Wednesday.

"The Voting Rights Act has done much," Strake said, "to advance the constitutionally guaranteed rights of all our citizens. ... At the same time, though, I recognize the concerns of many Texans that our state should not be unduly singled out for federal oversight, and that the protections of the Voting Rights Act can be safeguarded without the large volumes of unnecessary paperwork present required."

And now, TOMORROW

The cap... the diploma... symbols of achievement. They mark the end of one way of life and imply the beginning of another.

But ten years from now, where will this diploma be and what will it mean? Will it be packed away in an attic trunk... framed on the wall of a room or office? Will it have been thrown out by accident or cast into a seldom-noticed corner? And what of the hopes and dreams that go with it? What will have happened to them?

Who knows? There is no set answer to life, no single solution to all its problems. Nor can anyone live life alone. Whether your dreams are still crisp or have gotten dusty... whether your dreams are still bright or have become slightly tarnished... forget about personal ambition as the sole answer to everything. Think of your own immortal soul. Talk to God about it, through prayer and regular weekly worship.

WHAT PRICE PRIDE?

While Herod was in Caesarea, a delegation from Tyre and Sidon arrived to see him. He was highly displeased with the people of those two cities, but the delegates made friends with Blastus, the royal secretary, and asked for peace, for their cities were economically dependent upon trade with Herod's country.

An appointment was granted, and when the day arrived he put on his royal robes, sat on his throne and made a speech to them. At its conclusion the people gave him a great ovation, shouting, "It is the voice of a god and not of a man!"

Instantly, an angel of the Lord struck Herod with a sickness so that he was filled with maggots and died—because he accepted the people's worship instead of giving glory to God.

God's Good News was spreading rapidly and there were many new believers.

Barnabas and Saul now visited Jerusalem and, as soon as they had finished their business, returned to Antioch, taking John Mark with them.

Among the prophets and teachers of the church at Antioch were Barnabas and Symeon (also called "The Black Man"), Lucius (from Cyrene), Manean (the foster-brother of King Herod), and Saul.

Plans being completed for new church facilities

The North Midland Drive Church of Christ, organized in March, has acquired a three-acre tract of land at North Midland Drive and Bluebird Lane. Plans are being completed for the construction of new church facilities.

Stage one of a three-stage building program will include a 225-seat capacity auditorium, five classrooms, a large foyer and fellowship area. Ultimate plans call for facilities to serve a membership of 1,000.

The group is currently meeting in the Ellis Chapel, 801 Andrews Highway. Sunday services include Bible classes for all ages at 9 a.m. and worship services at 10 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. Wednesday services are at 7:30 p.m.

DALLAS — At a June meeting of the Christian Life Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention in Dallas, the Rev. Robert G. Bratcher, a research associate of the American Bible Society, expressed his personal views with regard to biblical inerrancy and infallibility and in some ill-considered and intemperate remarks sharply criticized those who disagree with the position he espoused, reported Alice Ball, a spokesman for the ABS.

The ABS has stated that it completely disassociates itself from the remarks made by Bratcher on that occasion and in speaking as he did, Bratcher violated one of the Society's basic rules, Ms. Ball stated.

The ABS, from the day of its founding 165 years ago to the present, has made it a cardinal principle not to engage in theological debate nor make comment on the doctrinal positions of the churches and constituencies it seeks impartially to serve. The first article of its constitution states that "its only purpose shall be to promote the distribution of the Holy Scriptures without doctrinal note or comment," thus giving it historically a clear guideline, known by all its staff, that they refrain from making public statements which might be interpreted as official ABS policy, Ms. Ball reported.

"The controversial remarks which Bratcher made in Dallas have caused grave concern among many Bible-believing and Bible-loving people throughout the nation for which we are deeply sorry, and we hasten to assure all friends of the Bible cause that the historic motivation and mission of the ABS remains unchanged; namely, the wider distribution of the Holy Scriptures throughout the world, without note or comment, in the languages people speak and at prices they can afford to pay," stated Ms. Ball.

Bratcher submitted his resignation to the Society June 8.

At a recent Southern Baptist annual conference in Los Angeles, Calif., it was resolved once again to support the worldwide work of the ABS. In a resolution put before the convention by Dr. Carolyn Weatherford, executive director of the Women's Missionary Union and a member of the ABS Board of managers, Southern Baptists urged all churches, local associations, state conventions and convention agencies to support the ABS as a part of their commitment to Bold Mission Thrust.

Baptist president learns to watch what he says

By ROBERT DI VEROLI
Copley News Service

The president of the 13.4 million-member Southern Baptist Convention says he's learned to be more careful about what he says.

"I've learned my lesson. Oh, have I ever learned that," said the Rev. Dr. Bailey Smith, who stirred up a controversy last year with his remarks about Jews.

"I've come to realize that now, in the eyes of many, I don't just speak for myself. It's been a growing-up experience, but I've learned my lesson," Smith said in an interview.

Smith stunned some Christians and Jews last year when he told an August political gathering in Houston that God doesn't hear the prayers of Jews because they don't accept Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior.

Two months later, in a sermon at his Del City, Okla., church, Smith jokingly suggested that Jews are different from other people because they have "funny noses."

Smith said that he made the comment in jest as an aside to a personal friend "with a Jewish background," a Christian who was "reared as a Jew."

Smith said he has since met several times with representatives of the Anti-Defamation League and other Jewish leaders, attended a Passover celebration this year and in November will accompany Jewish leaders on a trip to Israel.

He said the meetings have allayed Jewish suspicions about Southern Baptist anti-Semitism.

"I think I was wrong in teasing one individual in my church that way, but even they (Jewish leaders) felt that never should have been reported in the press because it was said to one person in church, but we have a great working relationship. They know I really care about them," Smith said.

"I'll have to admit I didn't realize how great my visibility was as Southern Baptist Convention president, but I do now."

Catholic newspaper to cease publication

NEW YORK (AP) — The Catholic News weekly, published by the Ridder family for almost a century, will cease publication with its June 25 issue.

The last family-owned Catholic newspaper in the nation and, for much of its existence, the official newspaper of the New York Archdiocese, the News has succumbed to rising costs and declining readership.

Victor L. Ridder Jr., vice president of the Catholic News Publishing Co., said Thursday his family was "the last of the line to hold on and keep a paper going, but it's now beyond our ability."

Ridder said the decision was made earlier this year before the archdiocese announced it would begin publishing its own weekly newspaper, Catholic New York, this fall.

He said the News, which had a circulation of 150,000 at the turn of the century, hit its modern peak of 86,000 in the past decade but now has only 20,000 circulation.

"We experienced a loss of interest, partly due to people moving out of the neighborhoods we were serving and partly due to loss of interest," he said.

The Catholic News was founded in 1886 by Herman Ridder, who also founded the New York Staats-Zeitung in 1900. That paper was the cornerstone of the Ridder newspaper group, which later was merged with Knight newspapers.

Ridder, whose father currently is publisher of the Catholic News, said the Catholic News Publishing Co. would continue in operation, publishing Catholic directories and other religious publications.

Carter says rights affected elections

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter says the religious right wing had a strong effect on last fall's elections, but he predicts that its leaders soon will have to modify their positions or "be bypassed" by the people.

He says the religious right's "measuring rod" for politicians — such as favoring those who opposed the Panama Canal Treaty, SALT II arms limitations and establishment of the Department of Education — did not come from the Bible.

"Those were the kinds of things that were put forward as a measuring rod for whether or not a person was a genuine, born-again Christian," Carter said in an interview with Baptist journalists reported by the Southern Baptist news service.

He added that larger issues such as racial equality, control of nuclear weapons and world peace are the kinds of issues which "ultimately, I think, will be seen as compatible with the Christian experience."

Woman elected

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time, a woman has been elected to head a national program agency of a major Protestant denomination, the United Church of Christ.

She is the Rev. Yvonne V. Delk of New York City, the denomination's affirmative-action officer, who was elected executive director of the Office for Church and Society, social-action arm of the 1.8-million-member denomination.

'Playhouse' joins 'Masterpiece Theater' for '81-82

NEW YORK (AP)—Drama, comedy and music from artists as various as Ray Bradbury, Mark Twain, Erle Stanley Gardner and Kurt Vonnegut Jr. will mark the premiere season of public TV's "Playhouse," scheduled to begin a 25-week run Jan. 5.

The long-awaited series, produced on a program budget of $13.6 million by a unique consortium of four Public Broadcasting Service member stations, will include original drama as well as special adaptations from literature and the stage, and episodic works created especially for TV.

No precise schedule has been announced for "Playhouse," but the series' executive director, David M. Davis, has unveiled the productions to be included in the 1982 season.

The Tuesday night series—productions range in length from 60 minutes to two hours—complements PBS' "Masterpiece Theater," the Sunday night fixture of imported drama from England and, now, Australia, which begins its second decade Oct. 4.

The "Masterpiece Theater" schedule will include a half-dozen productions new to the program, including Nevil Shute's "A Town Like Alice," the first Australian-made film to be included in the Emmy-winning series.

Boston's WGBH, one of public TV's important producing stations, is involved in both the "Playhouse" and "Masterpiece Theater" series. Other participants in "Playhouse" are KCET in Los Angeles, New York's WNET and the South Carolina Educational Television Network.

Davis says his objective as executive director of "Playhouse" is to "attract the finest American creative talent from the independent film and video communities, production companies and public television stations."

He says "Playhouse" is not a one-season effort. "Continuity and a regular place on the public television national programming schedule are among the most significant differences between 'Playhouse' and previous public television drama ventures," Davis says.

Original drama or teleplay in the premiere season will include:

"The Great American Fourth of July and Other Disasters," by Jean Shepherd; "The Shady Hill Kidnaping," by John Cheever; "King of America," by B.J. Merholz; "My Palikari," by Leon Capetanos.

"For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide—When the Rainbow is Enuf," by Ntozake Shange; "Working," the musical based on Studs Terkel's best-seller, and Tom Cole's "Medal of Honor Rag," will be adapted from the stage.

The series also will include docudrama—"Oppenheimer" by Peter Prince, "Sandburg," by Paul Shyre, and "Seguin," by Jesus Salvador Trevino—and mystery—"The Scarlet Thread" by Jacques Futrelle, "Killing the Goose" by Frances and Richard Lockridge, and Gardner's "Leg Man."

And there will be comedy, including Bradbury's "Any Friend of Nicholas Nickleby's is a Friend of Mine," Vonnegut's "Who Am I This Time?" and "Come Along with Me" by Shirley Jackson. Two of Mark Twain's stories, "The Mysterious Stranger" and "Innocents Abroad," and "The True Story of Gregorio Cortez," based on a popular Mexican folk ballad, round out the series.

"A Town Like Alice," in six parts, will introduce the "Masterpiece Theater" season, to be followed Nov. 15 by the seven-part dramatization of "Edward & Mrs. Simpson."

"The Flame Trees of Thika," Elspeth Huxley's memoir on pioneer life in Kenya, in seven parts, will continue the series Jan. 3, with "I Remember Nelson," a portrait of Britain's greatest naval hero, following in four episodes Feb. 21.

The season continues March 28 with "Love in a Cold Climate," based on two novels by Nancy Mitford on pre-World War domestic life in England, and concludes with a six-part series on the adventures of a turn-of-the-century moviemaker called "Flickers," to begin May 23.

The second production of the season, "Edward & Mrs. Simpson," was broadcast in this country previously as a syndicated Mobil Showcase Network presentation.

Collection contains radio nostalgia

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP)—In a recess of the Brister Library at Memphis State University, a visitor can hear Thomas Alva Edison toying with his new invention—the phonograph—"Axis Sally" spewing propaganda and Jack Benny hurling insults at Fred Allen.

To the familiar question, "Who knows what evil lurks in the hearts of men?" comes the equally familiar reply, "The Shadow does."

Those bits of radio nostalgia are part of the Radio History Collection at Memphis State—nearly 550 tapes containing more than 1,100 hours of broadcast news, entertainment and history.

"Instead of taking the printed word and looking at the newspaper and saying these are the kinds of programs that were on the air, the historian can get a much better picture of what that period was really like if he can listen to radio of that time," said Dr.

Marvin Bensman, who began collecting the tapes in 1969.

Although one of the nation's most extensive libraries of radio programs, the Memphis State collection does not include every show in a series, rather a representative sampling of the performer or work.

"It would be nice if we had every Jack Benny, but we can tell you where every Jack Benny is," Bensman said. "We took all the catalogs of all the collectors who have major collections in the United States and we put them into a computer, so we can find almost any show that you want, if it exists."

Among the rare tapes is a live broadcast account of the invasion of France, an original copy of Orson Welles' famous "Invasion from Mars" program and the voice of Florence Nightingale, recorded by Edison.

The Moodies are back — with a new sound

By DENNIS HUNT
The Los Angeles Times
HOLLYWOOD — In September 1977, when the Moody Blues reunited after a four-year split, it was supposed to be the end of a tumultuous period. Actually it was the beginning of a brand new one.

"Octave," the Moodies' first album in five years, was released in March 1978. Keyboard player Mike Pinder, a pioneer on the Mellotron, quit at the end of the recording sessions. So did producer Tony Clarke, who had produced all the Moodies' albums.

"I saw the split coming," singer-guitarist Justin Hayward recalled during a phone interview from his home in London the other day. "Towards the end of making 'Octave' I could see it all falling apart. I was frightened we were going to lose Tony and Mike and we did. I could see the same danger signs I saw when we broke up in 1973. With all this going on the sessions were a bit difficult."

Since then there have been all sorts of sordid rumors circulating about why that pair dropped out. Hayward didn't want to discuss details. He speculated that Pinder's distaste for touring was a major part of his decision to leave. Clarke's departure, however, was much more mysterious.

"I'm still not sure why he left," Hayward said. "I know he had a lot of personal problems. We parted company with him and I haven't seen him since. None of us has seen him again. He's still around somewhere. His lawyer writes us letters occasionally but that's about it."

Pip Williams was hired to replace Clarke, who had worked with these five musicians since the mid 1960s when their recording career began auspiciously with a hit single, "Go Now," from their debut album. Partick Moraz, the Swiss keyboard player who used to play with Yes, took over for Pinder, joining veterans Hayward, bassist John Lodge, drummer Graeme Edge and flutist Ray Thomas.

The Moody Blues, now preparing for their first American tour in two years, have a new album, "Long Distance Voyager," their first in three years. It's a continuation of their exploration of poprock that began on "Octave."

In the old days, the Moodies were known for a kind of flowery symphonic rock that had grandeur, a touch of mysticism and a cosmic aura that awed the impressionable flower-power crowd of the late '60s. The backbone of their sound was Pinder's Mellotron, which provided the symphonic overtones.

"Long Distance Voyager" is a venture into highly commercial pop. Now the Moodies sound quite a bit like the Electric Light Orchestra, another classically oriented English band that largely scrapped its classical elements in favor of a stronger pop sound.

The Moodies' pop explorations on "Octave" and "Long Distance Voyager" are too extensive to have happened accidentally. Yet Hayward said none of it was really planned. "There was no conscious effort on any of this," he insisted. "We had no planning meetings and we didn't consciously change musical concepts."

That's hard to believe. This group is too shrewd to attempt a comeback in a new musical climate without a meticulous plan. Hayward was probably just too proud to admit that the Moodies are being deliberately commercial. To a band that was innovative most of its career, yielding to commercialism can be rather embarrassing. Bands like the Moodies like to think they're purely motivated by art and never gear their music to the trendy pop market. Such notions, of course, are rather idealistic.

When the Moodies split up in 1973 the rock crowd's romance with classical hybrids, with a few exceptions, was just about over. It was evident when they reunited that their sound was going to have to be revised and updated. In 1978, when "Octave" was released, their old music had some nostalgic value but was too fanciful for an audience then in the clutches of disco and hard rock.

"Octave" was a tame, tentative step into the new era. On that album, the Moodies' power was muted. You could sense they were walking a tightrope, too uncertain to plunge headlong into pop and too smart to dip too deeply into their old bag of tricks.

"Octave" was rather disjointed," Hayward said. "It didn't have a cohesive feeling." "Long Distance Voyager," however, is very cohesive. It's a pop gem that's perfect for the current market. Consequently it's not surprising that this is the Moodies' fastest rising album ever, climbing into the Top 10 after only three weeks in release.

This is phase two of the Moodies' career. Phase one ended with the '73 breakup when the band was among the most popular in the business. Its 1967 album, "Days of Future Passed," featuring the Hayward Composition, "Nights in White Satin," was hailed as a classic. So was his "Tuesday Afternoon."

After five years of accolades, fame and huge grosses, the members decided they needed a break from each other. "We had just finished a world tour," Hayward recalled. "I could see the band was on the verge of splitting up. I thought we were all quite crazy then. We had spent so long together there was nothing left to talk about. You have to be in a band to understand how you can basically like the people you work with while you also feel you just can't take them any more."

During the four-year split, the members passed the time making solo albums. Lodge and Hayward briefly collaborated in a group called the Blue Jays, which toured Britain but not the United States.

"It was good for us to be able to work on different projects with different people and get fresh ideas," said Hayward, whose fourth solo album should be finished by the end of the year. The value of these individual efforts, like most solo albums by members of major groups, was to allow experimentation with music that did not fit the Moodies' style. None was successful enough to convince any of the musicians that they had unusual promise as soloists.

"We all knew we were going to eventually get back together," Hayward said. "It was a mutual thing. Then we all wanted to do it. It looked like our problems were over."

They weren't over, of course. Recording "Octave" with Pinder and Clarke moodily drifting away wasn't easy. The band also had to get used to a new keyboard player, Moraz, on that tour. Apparently he's turned out to be better than Pinder.

"Patrick has made a big difference," Hayward said. "He's outgoing and he's a performer. Mike wasn't really either one."

Compared to the "Octave" sessions, recording "Long Distance Voyager" was a pleasure, even though the band was adjusting to a new producer, Pip Williams. Freed of tension for a change, the band is really looking forward to touring for the next year.

Even Hayward is gleefully anticipating the tour. At his age, almost 35, veteran musicians often start to hate those long road trips. "Not me," Hayward said. "They get easier and easier. I used to get nervous and uptight about the whole thing. But now I feel a lot more comfortable with performing night after night. I don't worry as much as I used to and it doesn't take me 10 Scotchies any more to get up the nerve to get out on stage."

"I'm still a kid in a lot of ways. All I ever want

'Universe' is returning to CBS

NEW YORK (AP) — Last summer's test run of "Walter Cronkite's Universe" on CBS was produced with no precise schedule in mind. And, says Jonathan Ward, the executive producer, "the individual segments were so evergreen, so timeless, it made your teeth hurt."

"I think 'trivial' is the word Walter would use," Ward says.

"Walter Cronkite's Universe" returns to the CBS schedule Sunday evening, 8-8:30 EDT, and the series begins a 12-week run on Tuesday nights in the same timeslot June 23.

"This time," says Ward, "we had the advantage of knowing we were going to be a summer series, with a set schedule. We can key specific segments to events we know are going to happen, like the space shuttle flight planned for September."

"We've got a scientist predicting Peru will be wiped out by an earthquake in September," Ward says. "If it isn't, we have this poignant human drama of a scientist who has just seen his life pass before his eyes. If it is wiped out, we had it first."

"Somebody said you make yourself available for luck in this business," the producer says. "For that reason, we've shot Mount St. Helens, even though we don't have a volcano story in the mix yet. I keep a geiger counter in the file drawer there, because Walter wants to be ready for the next Three Mile Island."

The premiere program marks Cronkite's return to the air on a regular basis for the first time since he stepped down as "Evening News" anchorman in March.

The first program includes segments on the study of sea creatures who carry their own natural light in the depths of the ocean, and on efforts to restore artworks and other aging objects that have been subjected to the ravages of time, climate and pollution.

Cronkite will provide at least one segment for each of the 13 programs, and will anchor "Universe" from his new office overlooking the Hudson River. Cronkite, who anchored the "Evening News" for 19 years, spends much of his time these days at his home in Martha's Vineyard, but Ward says even then, he devotes considerable attention to "Universe."

"There is nothing that we are going to put on the air that he hasn't at least talked with us about at some length," the producer says. "We send him scripts and then cassettes of every segment we do."

Ward says Cronkite has been an important factor in providing "Universe" with its sense of timeliness.

"It's very hard to take a warhorse like Cronkite and turn him into a soft news, documentary guy."

"If the secretary of state makes some big announcement on the neutron bomb, for example, it would be unthinkable for Cronkite to go on the air that night with a piece on the butterfly," Ward says.

The universe for "Walter Cronkite's Universe" is truly vast, and Ward says the correspondent himself again plays a significant part in determining the type of story to be considered.

"I know that it's Walter's position that an informed electorate can play a role in deciding tough issues — will the SST destroy the ozone layer, for instance? "Science and scientists would like you to believe it is a simple precision that rules their world."

But yes, there is a value system in science," he says, "and I'm sure sometimes we'll bog down hopelessly in the politics of an issue," Ward says.

He says the objective nonetheless is to produce stories that will do more than fill a 90-second slot, or even a three-minute hole, on the "Evening News."

"I trivialized a piece last year that people in the project thought was going to be a serious story on food science. We concentrated on the people who make potato chips crunchy — a piece we could have done for the 'Evening News.'"

"We would be angry if someone did a story on journalism in America in four minutes. We did food service in four minutes, and that was wrong."

Engineers queried NRC about effect of bombing

By TIM AHREN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the same month that Israel first began planning the raid that destroyed Iraq's nuclear reactor, two Israeli engineers visited the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Washington and asked about the damage that 2,000-pound bombs would inflict on a reactor.

But even though the Osirak reactor near Baghdad was destroyed by 2,000-pound bombs, the visit by the two engineers "had absolutely nothing" to do with the June 7 raid on Iraq, a spokesman said Thursday night.

REAGAN administration officials have said they had no advance warning of the Israeli raid.

"We had no idea" that such a raid was being planned, NRC spokesman Frank Ingram said Thursday. But after the one-day visit Oct. 9 by the two engineers, an internal NRC staff memorandum said the Israelis asked so many questions about what the bombs would do, rather than how to protect against them, that "it was unclear whether the Israelis were interested in defending their own plants or destroying someone else's."

ISRAELI Prime Minister Menachem Begin has said that the raid was first considered last October. There was elaborate secret planning by the Israelis, including practice bombing runs on a mock-up of the reactor that was constructed in the Sinai desert.

Begin has defended the raid as necessary to deny nuclear weapons to an implacable enemy of Israel.

The raid has touched off a storm of protest and prompted the Reagan administration to delay the shipment to Israel of four F-16 warplanes, the type used in the raid, until it could be determined whether Israel violated an agreement with the United States to use the aircraft only for defensive purposes.

ROBERT McFARLANE, a counselor for the State Department, said Thursday that the raid was unjustified and "shattered trust and confidence" in U.S.-Israeli relations.

McFarlane, testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the diplomatic problems caused by the raid "calls into question our ability to continue our role in diplomacy ... and this ought to have been a matter for discussion between close friends."

A STATE Department official said Thursday night that his office, which normally would arrange an Israeli visit to the NRC, knew nothing of the talks.

Avi Pazner, a spokesman for the Israeli embassy in Washington, said the visit didn't have "the slightest connection" with the raid. "It had absolutely nothing to do with it."

Since 1976, Israel has considered purchasing a U.S. reactor for the commercial generation of electricity, Pazner said.

Utility officials in Israel asked the two engineers, Joseph Kivity and Joseph Saltovitz of Technion University in Haifa, to talk to the NRC and find out how vulnerable such a reactor would be in case of war, Pazner said.

THE PAIR was asked "to make some inquiries about what would happen in case of air attack," Pazner said.

"There are hundreds of Israeli scientists visiting the United States on a routine basis," he said. "This was also routine and had not the slightest connection with the attack on the Osirak reactor."

The Iraqi reactor was destroyed when the F-16s, covered by U.S.-supplied F-15s flying above, dropped 16 bombs on the reactor. The bombs apparently penetrated the dome of the reactor and exploded inside it.

Sewage harming shellfishermen

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Each time a heavy rain washes clean the streets of metropolitan Providence, Narragansett Bay shellfishermen lose thousands of dollars.

Less scrupulous fishermen reap a potentially poisonous harvest.

The rain courses down sewer lines and overflows the capital city's aging sewage treatment plant, sending millions of gallons of raw sewage into the bay.

When rainfall reaches a half inch or more in 24 hours, the Rhode Island Department of Environmental Management automatically bans fishing in about 6 percent of the upper bay for seven days.

THE AREA is considered one of the richest for quahogs, a hardshell clam and the state's main shellfish crop. A University of Rhode Island study estimated that 25 percent of all quahogs taken in U.S. waters come from Narragansett Bay.

Besides the temporary fishing bans, pollution from the sewage plant and smaller sources has permanently closed another 20 percent of the 116,000-acre bay to shellfishing. Those areas, most of them near the plant, also are loaded with quahogs, said Philip Albert, senior sanitary engineer for DEM.

THE CLOSURES, to protect the public's health, have an ironic twist. They have created a thriving industry — illegal shellfishing in polluted but quahog-rich waters. Often working at night, fishermen drag their great "bullrakes" across the bottom and sell their fat catches to an unsuspecting public.

For fishermen who observe the law, the pollution is expensive.

"You bet the closures hurt," said John Moran, a veteran Tiverton quahogger and former president of the Rhode Island Shellfishermen's Association.

"FISHING IS not a kind business anyway," Moran said. "It's a little more than hand to mouth. If something isn't done about this pollution, we're going to lose the whole bay."

He estimated the industry is worth from $15 million to $25 million annually, depending on the size of the crop. The average shellfisherman makes from $10,000 to $12,000 a year, he said.

Shellfishermen are counting on a state plan, funded by both federal monies and by a $87.7 million bond issue approved by voters last year, to rehabilitate the sewage treatment plant and open at least part of the closed areas.

BUT IMMINENT cutbacks in federal Environmental Protection Agency funds of about $130 million could stall the effort, said Joseph Turco, chairman of the newly formed Narragansett Bay Water Quality Management District Commission.

The commission planned to rehabilitate the plant and some sewer lines by 1987, Turco said, adding, "I'm sure any loss of federal money would have some effect on that timetable."

The plant, parts of which are almost 100 years old, is too small and decrepit to treat sewage properly under the best conditions, not to mention on rainy days, Albert said.

QUAHOGS FROM polluted waters are considered a health hazard, Albert said. The state determines pollution levels by sampling the waters for the presence of coliform bacteria, he said.

Moran, who at 45 has been shellfishing for 16 years, said he and most other commercial fishermen would never consider fishing in polluted waters. Those fishermen interviewed said the illegal fishing gives the whole industry a bad name and casts doubt on the cleanliness of all shellfish sold.

A report of illness from one quahog could shut down the whole industry, they said.

But such standards are not upheld by others, most of whom are part-timers, many of them juveniles, said Capt. Ernest Wilkinson of the state enforcement squad that patrols the bay.

While the past four days of soaring temperatures may have saddled some Southern Californians with a loss for ways to beat the

Weicker ends filibuster on busing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ending a filibuster in a last gasp of protest, Sen. Lowell Weicker lost his attempt to dilute an anti-busing amendment Friday.

Weicker, R-Conn., had sought to soften a measure by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., which would ban the Justice Department from seeking court orders imposing busing to remedy school segregation.

Weicker's amendment was rejected 46-30, with 15 Democrats joining 30 Republicans in voting no while 12 Republicans and 18 Democrats voted in favor.

A final vote on the measure was delayed to next week when Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., announced his intention to push for restrictions on the federal courts, as well as the Justice Department, in desegregation cases.

Weicker wanted to tack on to the Helms amendment a reaffirmation of the authority of the Justice Department to enforce the Constitution.

"This amendment has absolutely nothing to do with busing. It has to do with the separation of powers," asserted Weicker.

Helms said, "This amendment does not go further than to declare that forced busing is not a proper remedy. And that the Senate has a right to do. The Weicker amendment would cloud and possibly undermine what we hope to accomplish."

Johnston wants to prohibit the courts from ordering the busing of any student for more than five miles or 15 minutes from the nearest school.

Weicker told reporters he would fight against both the Helms and the Johnston proposals but declined to say whether he would filibuster again.

In other congressional business: —Demanding an end to "the fiscal joy ride in Washington," President Reagan declared his support for EIGHTH BY House Republicans to push for $5.2 billion more in 1982 budget cuts than Democrats are willing to yield.

"Doing only one-third of the job is not good enough," Reagan said.

The Republican plan was outlined by House Minority leader Robert Michel, who said the GOP was offering a "bare-bones" amendment. He expressed confidence a majority of the Democratic House will go along in what promises to be a bruising floor fight.

But Michel conceded it will be difficult — tougher than Reagan's easy victory on the budget — and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., has predicted the Democrats will win.

Michel, flanked by Rep. Delbert Latta, R-Ohio, ranking Republican on the Budget Committee and Rep. Phil Gramm of Texas, a prominent conservative Democrat, said the GOP plan would cut spending by $20 billion more than the savings Democrats claim through 1984, mostly from social programs.

—The administration has drawn up proposals for major reductions in air pollution standards, according to a House subcommittee chairman who said they would condemn millions of Americans to "live indefinitely in dirty air."

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., released an executive department draft which he termed "a blueprint for the elimination of the Clean Air Act."

Waxman, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health and the environment, released a letter to Reagan urging him to abandon the proposal, saying it "will only delay the passage of truly needed changes."

—A former nuclear inspector told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he concluded that Iraq was trying to develop nuclear weapons within five years and international safeguards could not have stopped it.

Roger Richter, who resigned Tuesday as an inspector for the International Atomic Energy Agency, said he became so concerned that he reported to U.S. officials last year "the available information points to an aggressive, coordinated program by Iraq to develop a nuclear weapons capability during the next five years."

Students take studies to sea

PORT TOWNSEND, Wash. (AP) — While out at sea snapping hooks and cleaning fish for a living, Travis Goodrich teaches himself math, science and English. Not bad for an 11-year-old.

The Port Townsend youth is among 60 students in a federally funded education program for children whose families follow the West Coast fisheries for a living. The students now take their studies to sea, instead of dropping out of school for weeks or months at a time.

Travis and his parents go to Alaska during the summer for the halibut and salmon seasons. The sixth-grader says he hopes to finish much of his year-end studying during the trip from Washington's Olympic Peninsula to Alaska's Bristol Bay.

"It's a lot funner than being in class," he said of the self-taught courses. "But I miss my friends."

Travis said he is saving some of his fishing income so he can go to college and become a naval architect.

Some students in the program live on boats year-round, stopping in port only to make repairs and replenish supplies. Penny Kelley, a teacher in the migrant education program, devises individual programs with which they can teach themselves, with help from parents.

Other families live in port most of the year, but have to take their children with them for the spring and summer fishing seasons.

For those students, Ms. Kelley works with the regular classroom teacher to find out what the student will miss during the season. She packages lessons designed to help the student keep up with the rest of the class.

"In the past, a lot of families weren't able to take the kids, so it was a mad scramble to find places to put kids and dogs and cats and plants while Mama and Papa went out fishing," said Anita Fraser, whose 7-year-old son occasionally accompanies his father on trips.

Mrs. Fraser says she could keep her son home all the time, but she likes to get him involved in their family business. "I feel good about the fact that my child knows what Papa's doing when he's gone," she said.

Students out on fishing boats mail their completed assignments to Ms. Kelley for grading. They return to regular classrooms when the fishing season is over, theoretically having kept up with the rest of the class, Ms. Kelley said. If a student is behind in certain subjects, she tutors them until they catch up.

Fifteen-year-old Lynne Persinger is also enrolled in the program, even though her she will be at home with her parents for several more months.

Exporters afraid oil glut may last for years

By FLOYD NORRIS
AP Business Writer

World oil prices are continuing to fall, and oil exporters increasingly fear that the world oil glut will last for years.

Humberto Calderon Berti, the Venezuelan oil minister who often has played a key role in getting quarrelsome members of OPEC to agree, called this week for a price freeze lasting until at least the end of 1983.

He voiced fears that the near tripling of oil prices in 1979 and 1980 permanently changed the world energy situation by bringing on increased conservation and the rapid switch to coal for electricity generation.

"We must make an effort to preserve our share of the (energy) market," he said after a meeting of the long-term strategy committee of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Calderon Berti said the freeze might need to last through 1984. OPEC voted last month to freeze prices until the end of this year, but some small OPEC members, such as Ecuador, have cut prices since then.

Also during the week, Britain cut its price for North Sea oil by $4.25 a barrel, to $35, and Norway, like Britain not an OPEC member, said it would make a similar cut. Some U.S. companies reduced the prices they will pay for U.S. crude oil to as little as $33 a barrel.

Many OPEC officials have predicted the glut would soon disappear, a view held by Kuwait's oil minister, Sheikh Ali Khalifa Al-Sabah. He said this week that "after every crisis comes a glut that soon vanishes" and predicted oil "will continue to maintain high prices at all times."

But as prices have slid and countries charging high prices have found buyers slipping away, more oil producers are worrying they "may have raised prices too far," said Morris Adelman, an economics professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The last round of price increases left OPEC countries charging as much as $41 a barrel for oil, with Saudi Arabia helping to produce the glut by pumping nearly 10 million barrels a day — 40 percent of OPEC production — and charging the bargain price of $32 a barrel. The high Saudi production, coupled with declining demand, has caused tumbling prices in the spot market, where oil not sold under long-term contract is traded. Even Saudi oil is now being traded for as low as $31.50, meaning companies that buy Saudi oil and resell it are losing money.

U.S. oil imports for the four weeks ending June 12 were down 20 percent from a year earlier, and prices for gasoline in most parts of the United States are down several cents a gallon from peaks reached in March. If the glut continues, more gasoline price-wars can be expected.

Saudi Arabia apparently remains determined to force at least token price cuts from other OPEC members before it will significantly reduce production, but internal political pressures make it very difficult for many countries to lower prices. That is a major reason the glut, estimated by Calderon Berti at 3 million barrels a day, seems likely to continue.

Oil companies face conflicting pressures when confronted with countries charging high prices. The companies are now losing money on all oil they buy and refine from most OPEC members, but they fear losing supplies in case of another shortage — something that remains possible if a new Mideast war erupted. The Iranian revolution ended the last world glut and brought on the 1979-80 price rises.

So oil exporters can still sell some oil at high prices, but the amount is declining. Nigeria, which charges $40 a barrel, has seen its exports drop from about 2 million barrels a day to little more than half that now. Mexico has run into resistance to offers to sell more oil to Canada and Japan.

Mexico, which cut prices June 1 by $4 a barrel to $34.50 and lower, depending on quality, now says it will try to raise prices in July, a move that seems likely to cost it a lot of exports. The head of the Mexican state oil company was forced to quit for cutting prices.

The U.S. price cuts this week were made by Texaco Inc., which reduced the price it will pay by $1 for all grades, to $35 for high-quality oil and $33 for lower quality oil. Cities Service Co. and Ashland Oil Inc. made the same cut for high-quality oil, but left the lower price unchanged at $34.

Most feel baseball strike will be a long one

By The Associated Press

America faced its second straight weekend without major league baseball Friday amid signs that the strike which has already wiped out 101 games was headed for a long run.

Negotiations broke off between the Major League Players Association and the Player Relations Committee, and federal mediator Kenneth Moffett said no new talks were scheduled.

"WE'RE STALEMATED," Moffett said after the 90-minute session at a New York hotel.

"I see a waiting game," the mediator added, "a long waiting game."

The baseball talks are one of two nationally prominent cases in which Moffett is involved. He also is the mediator in talks between the nation's air traffic controllers and the Federal Aviation Administration. The controllers, who keep track of all domestic nonmilitary flights, have threatened to strike Monday.

Moffett said there was no chance of resuming baseball negotiations over the weekend.

"It's futile and stupid going through the charade of getting together on a regular basis with no movement," he said.

Monday also was to have been the date when an administrative law judge in New York heard testimony on the National Labor Relations Board's complaint of bad-faith bargaining against the club owners. But that session, already postponed once by the start of the players' strike, was pushed back another week Friday, to June 29.

TOM MILLER, an NLRB spokesman in Washington, said the latest delay was taken at the insistence of the owners. He did not elaborate.

The 650 major league players went on strike June 12 after 1 1/2 years of negotiations over the issue of what a team should receive in return for losing a free agent in the annual re-entry draft.

The owners want professional compensation as well as the amateur draft choice they have received for the loss of "ranking" free agents, with such players determined by at bats or pitching appearances the previous season. The players say the owners' plan would take away freedom of movement won in previous negotiations and court cases.

While free-agent compensation is at the heart of the dispute, the strike itself appears to be raising another issue — whether the strike days count toward a player's major league service.

The length of service is determined by days, and goes toward determining whether a player is eligible for salary arbitration, trade blocking — and even the re-entry draft.

"WE WILL never consider a settlement which counts strike days as major league service time," said Grebey. "A player cannot expect to be on strike and have those days added to his major league service time. That is just out of the question."

Fehr, however, saw things differently.

"We would expect that days lost on strike would count as service time," the players' counsel said. "It is our understanding that this time lost is good time. There will be no settlement without that being written into the final agreement."

When the players struck for the first 13 days of the season in 1972, the time lost was counted as service time to determine pensions. All players are now included in the pension plan.

The 1972 strike, the only other general walkout by major league players in the regular season, canceled 86 games. With more teams now in the majors, the missed games add up faster, and — counting Fridays full 13-game schedule — 101 contests have been wiped out.

A STRIKE at the end of the 1980 spring training season canceled 92 exhibition games.

Several players said they expected the strike to last a good while longer.

"Three weeks to a month," said Los Angeles outfielder Reggie Smith.

"It looks like a pretty long one to me," added the Dodgers' Dusty Baker. "They had two years to do this. If it takes two years to make no progress, how long is it going to take to make some?"

Every game missed costs the players an estimated $375,000 in salaries and the owners an estimated $1 million in ticket and concession receipts. The owners have $50 million in strike insurance, which will kick in after 153 games are missed. The players receive no strike benefits.

The walkout was causing at least one team to think about bringing up some minor leaguers — but only to fill some seats in its empty ballpark.

TWO STRIKING players, meanwhile, were getting a taste of what it's like to be in management when employees walk out.

Boston Red Sox teammates Carl Yastrzemski and Dwight Evans are part owners of a West Virginia coal mine where the miners have gone on strike charging management interference with union activities.

"We're for the ballplayers because they're union men," said Gene Ramsey, one of the strikers at the S&K mine in Bickford, W. Va.

Double bogey costs Nicklaus' share of lead

George Burns alone at top after second round of Open

ARDMORE, Pa. (AP) — Defending champion Jack Nicklaus blew a share of the lead with a double bogey on the 16th hole and left big George Burns alone in the top spot Friday in the second round of the 81st United States Open Golf Championship.

Burns, highly critical of the sponsoring U.S. Golf Association, scattered seven birdies over the tiny greens of the historic, 6,544-yard Merion Golf Club course on the way to a 4-under-par 66.

THAT GAVE the jut-jawed, 31-year-old Burns a 2-round total of 135, five shots under par on a course for which he has no great love.

"I don't like the Open courses and I don't like the guys who run them," he said before the American national championship started.

And now he's leading it.

But that is, at least in part, due to the dreadful adventures Nicklaus encountered on the 16th hole.

Playing well in front of Burns, the famed Golden Bear had it 5-under-par for the tournament when he went to the tee on the 430-yard, par-4 16th.

He got his drive just into the rough and drew a reasonably good lie.

"Unfortunately, it was a little too good," Nicklaus said. It prompted him to try to pick the ball off the grass with a 4-iron, and he came up too much on it, cutting the ball and sending it well to the right.

"IT WAS smiling happily at me when I took it out of play," said the man who is seeking a record fifth U.S. Open title.

He had to chop the next one out of the rough, eventually reached the putting surface in five and one-putted from about six feet for a double bogey.

He finished up with a 68 that left him at 137 — but strangely undisturbed.

"That just happened," he said. "I don't pay any attention to that."

"I played a fairly useful round of golf. Except for one shot that's about as good as I can play. Why shouldn't I be happy with a 68?"

"It's a good score and I'm in good position. I have nothing to complain about."

HE WAS tied for third at 137 with journeyman Tommy Valentine, who also had a 68.

David Graham, a globe-trotting Australian and a business associate of Nicklaus, had a 68 and was alone in second at 136.

The group at 138 included former national amateur champion John Cook, Australian Greg Norman, Bill Rogers and Bill Kratzert. Norman, who first came to American attention with a strong showing in the Masters earlier this year, closed up with a 67. Rogers had a 68 despite a double bogey on the final hole. Kratzert had a 69, Cook 70.

Surprise first-round leader Jim Thorpe went to a 73 and dropped back into a group at 139.

"I'd be lying if I said the pressure didn't bother me," Thorpe said.

He was tied, only four strokes back with two rounds to go, with former Open champion Jerry Pate, Masters title-holder Tom Watson, Scott Simpson, Lanny Wadkins, Jack Renner and John Schroeder.

AND SCHROEDER was there only through the grace of a controversial committee decision that reversed the ruling of an on-course official.

Schroeder, generally considered by the other touring pros to be one of golf's slowest players, and Forrest Fezler were informed by P.J. Botricht, executive director of the sponsoring U.S. Golf Association for rules and competitions, that they had been assessed 2-stroke penalties for slow play, long a sore subject with the U.S.G.A.

Schroeder, penalized or fined at least twice on the PGA Tour for slow play and the subject of on-the-air television criticism by fellow players for the same reason, and Boatright engaged in an arm-waving, finger-pointing, face-to-face confrontation for a few minutes before Schroeder appealed the decision to the 4-man U.S.G.A. Rules Committee, of which Boatright is a member.

And, after an hour's discussion and review, Boatright's decision was overturned and the penalties rescinded.

IT WAS, so far as veteran U.S.G.A. officials could remember, the first time such an on-the-course decision had been overturned by a committee.

"There was enough doubt in our minds," said James R. Hand, chairman of the committee, "particularly because of two balls that were lost for a time, so that we did not impose the penalty."

Boatright, one of the most respected rules men in the game, said it "was a judgement ruling. All other rules in golf are rules of fact. This is one is a rule where reasonable minds might disagree, and that is what happened."

"There is always a difference of opinion in sports," Schroeder said. "I'm glad they ruled in my favor."

John Brodie, the former pro football quarterback, was the third member of the threesome with Fezler and Schroeder. They required four hours and 20 minutes to play the relatively short course and finished 20 minutes behind the group in front of them.

"Schroeder is a very slow player," said Brodie. "I've criticized him to his face. But today he played as fast as he could."

THE OVERTURNED decision and the wipe-out of the penalty left Schroeder with a 2-under-par 68 for the day's round. Fezler had a 72 and was 2-over-par at 142. Brodie, competing as an amateur was at 162.

Watson, golf's leading money-winner for the past four seasons and again in that position this year, fought his way to a 69. Pate had the same. Simpson closed up with a 67. Wadkins had a 68, Renner 71 and Thorpe 73.

Watson, grimly determined to add this title to his collection that includes two Masters and three British Open crowns, said he played "much more aggressively today."

"My confidence is much better. I'm playing better than I did at Atlanta (his last start, which he won)."

"I played pretty good golf today."

I'm excited about my chances for the last two rounds."

Johnny Miller, a former Open champion and 2-time winner this year, had a 71 and was at 140. Bruce Lietzke, winner of three 1981 PGA Tour titles, was 71-141. Ray Floyd, also a 3-time winner and one of the pre-tournament favorites, had a 72 and barely qualified for the final two rounds at 147, the cutoff figure.

LEE TREVINO, who beat Nicklaus for the Open championship here in 1971, didn't make it. He had a 76 and a 148 total. Arnold Palmer, who took a triple-bogey 7 on the 16th, also missed at 78-155.

Burns, who finished in the gathering gloom of early evening, birdied seven times over the first 14 holes.

George Burns holds the second round lead at the U.S. Open.

Midland makes race tight with win

EL PASO — Midland scored five runs after two were out in the first inning to deal El Paso a crippling 7-4 Texas League loss Friday night here. Coupled with the Diablos' loss and San Antonio's win, the Dodgers are a 1/2 game ahead in the race for the Western Division title. The first half of the season ends tonight.

El Paso's starter Mike Madden opened the contest on a positive note as he struck out Craig Kornfeld and got Mel Hall to ground out. With two down, Javier Fierro singled and Jack Upton followed with a double to put runners at second and third. Fritz Connally then hit a chopper to second baseman Jerry Lane who couldn't find the handle as a run scored and Connally was safe at first. Joe Carter, making his first Texas League start, batted a single to right field. John Skorochocki tried to make a diving catch but the ball got by him and rolled to the wall and Kornfeld ended up at third with a triple. Kornfeld came home on a wild pitch by Madden. Fierro wrapped up the Cub scoring when he pounded a Madden fastball over the left field fence for his first home run of the year.

El Paso scored its first two runs in the bottom of the fourth. Connally dropped Stan Davis' popout to open the frame and Jerry Lane walked. Willie Lazado lashed a double off the centerfield wall. Hall threw to shortstop Fierro and he threw to catcher Diaz in time to get Davis but Diaz knocked Diaz down and Lane was able to beat Diaz to the plate for the first Diablos run. Lazado stole third and came home on Randy Clark's wild pitch.

In the seventh inning, Skorochocki led off with a homer, Clark retired Loman and Johnny Evans on strikes before giving up a home run to Davis.

Manager George Enright had seen enough. He pulled Clark and Henry Mack and Norm Churchill combined to keep El Paso at bay the rest of the way.

Diver dies

TAIPEI (AP) — American diver Jenny Lotz died Friday of severe brain damage following week-long efforts to save her life after a diving accident, a hospital spokesman said Saturday.

The hospital spokesman said the 23-year-old world-ranked diver received week-long emergency treatment. She had been in a coma.

Watkins Glen bail out rejected by committee

WATKINS GLEN, N.Y. (AP) — The International Automobile Federation's executive committee has rejected New York state's $2 million plan to bail out the Grand Prix East at Watkins Glen, the Ithaca Journal reported Friday.

The newspaper quoted William France, the U.S. delegate to the committee who said the panel on Friday endorsed last month's decision to strike the Oct. 24 event from the Formula One calendar.

THE MEETING was to consider decisions taken Thursday by the federation's sporting arm, the International Auto Sports Federation (FISA).

At the meeting in Paris, officials were tight-lipped, saying no official announcement will be made until Monday. A source at the meeting would say only that the Grand Prix had been discussed "among other Grand Prixes such as the proposed revival of the Swedish race." But he would not indicate if there had been any interest in plans to save the American event.

FISA President Jean-Marie Balestre told newsmen no statement on the result of the meetings would be issued until Monday. He said a large number of subjects had been discussed in 22 hours of meetings over two days.

THESE INCLUDED the details of the new overall sports rules, known as Annex J, and of the new Group C category for 1982 for the World Endurance Racing Championship, as well as the outline of the international racing calendar for 1982.

France said attorney Dante Gullace of Rochester, N.Y., went to Paris to try to persuade the group to release $2 million in state loans in return for a long-term commitment to keep the race in Watkins Glen. State officials have said that without the commitment the money will not be released.

But the newspaper quoted France as saying that Balestre "refused to give (Gullace) an audience."

The Glen lost the 1981 Grand Prix over failure to pay about $800,000 in prize money after the 1980 race.

Sneva turns in fastest time

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Tom Sneva, who turned in the fastest qualifying time for the Indianapolis 500, recorded the fastest practice time Friday for this weekend's 500-mile race at Pocono International Raceway.

Sneva, who won the Indy-state event at Pocono in 1977, was clocked in 1:56.49 mph Friday. A.J. Foyt, a three-time winner at Pocono, turned in a 1:53.56 mph lap, while Tom Bigelow was timed in 1:57.78.

The Sunday race, formerly called the Pocono 500, is named the Van Scoy Diamond Mine 500 this year.

Ty Cobb issue in first strike

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The suspension of Ty Cobb for hitting a heckling fan triggered the first strike by big league baseball players here on May 18, 1912.

The Detroit Tigers staged the one-day walkout, and each player was fined $100. Cobb had been suspended for hitting a fan three days earlier in New York.

The dispute made a group of local amateur players, including eight from St. Joseph's College, big leaguers for a day.

At the suggestion of Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, the amateurs were signed to Detroit contracts. This enabled the Tigers to avoid a forfeit fee of $5,000 and gave Mack's reigning world champions an easy victory.

The amateur Tigers were held to four hits, made nine errors and lost 24-2, a record score at the time.

Aloysius Joseph Travers became the only pitcher to allow 24 runs in a big league game, a record that still stands. Later, as a member of the St. Joseph's Prep faculty, he reminded students that "only" 14 of the A's runs were earned.

American League president Ban Johnson had suspended Cobb after seeing him go into the stands after the fan. Johnson ruled the Tigers would be fined $100 for each game there were on strike. They were idle on May 19 and 20, and they voted to end the strike on the night of May 20. Cobb was reinstated on May 28.

Billy Maharg, one of the St. Joseph's players who became a one-day Tiger, later signed with the Philadelphia Phillies and played in one National League game.

Hassle not worth says Mason witness

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — "I was about to lose my house, my family; it just wasn't worth it, worth the hassle," a key witness testified Friday when asked why he struck a deal in the fraud case involving former University of Arizona football Coach Tony Mason.

Mason is on trial in Pima County Superior Court, charged with 15 felony counts, including fraud, conspiracy and theft. He is accused of having accepted re-imbursement from the university for recruiting trips never taken and of giving money illegally to at least nine football players.

Michael E. Hoffman, a former American Airlines employee, is the key prosecution witness, and was questioned extensively during cross-examination about his motives for reaching a plea agreement with the state.

William T. Healy, Mason's attorney, also brought out during the questioning that Hoffman had received money in the form of checks made out by Mason for airline tickets. During the second day of testimony, Healy asked Hoffman to identify several checks that he had received from Mason.

Hoffman, who was a ticket supervisor for American Airlines at the time, said he first provided Mason with an airline passenger receipt in July 1977, and acknowledged endorsing two of the checks made to him, for totals of $717 and $312 — depositing one and cashing the other.

Healy questioned Hoffman at length about a plea bargain arrangement the prosecution witness had entered in February. Under the agreement, Hoffman pleaded guilty to two misdemeanor charges in exchange for the dismissal of 21 felony counts. He will not be sentenced until after Mason's trial and a subsequent trial of six former assistant coaches, who were indicted along with Mason.

The agreement calls for Hoffman to give "full, complete and truthful testimony" and to assist law enforcement authorities in connection with any investigation of the operation of the University of Arizona Athletic Department.

Asked whether he would withdraw his guilty plea and renounce the agreement with prosecutors if Mason were acquitted, Hoffman replied, "Yes, I will. I'd like to take my chances ... They'd be a lot better than they are now."

Scott signs with Suns

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Reserve forward Alvin Scott has signed a multi-year contract with the Phoenix Suns of the National Basketball Association, the club announced Friday.

The 6-foot-10 Scott, who has played for the Suns the past four years, appeared in all 82 regular-season games last year. He led the team in blocked shots with 70 and averaged 5.4 points and 3.3 rebounds per game.

In keeping with club policy, terms of the contract were not disclosed. The Suns picked Scott in the seventh-round of the 1977 college draft.

NFL Management Council votes to impose gag rule

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Management Council of the National Football League has voted to impose a form of gag rule, with fines up to $100,000, for actions which damage the execution of a new collective bargaining agreement with the NFL Players Association.

THE ACTION by the council, composed of the NFL's 28 team owners, came soon after public statements by Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn almost resulted in the clubs being forced to open their financial records to the players.

A copy of the amendment to the council's bylaws was obtained by the Associated Press, which also learned that it was passed by a 26-2 vote.

The balloting was conducted by telegram Wednesday. One opposition vote came from the Oakland Raiders, who are suing the NFL in an effort to move the franchise to Los Angeles.

The amendment prohibits public statements considered prejudicial to the interests of the council in collective bargaining, and would cover all club executives, front office employees and coaches.

CONSERVATIONS WITH any member of the NFLPA staff or executive committee, concerning any collective bargaining matter, would be banned without the "prior knowledge and express consent of the executive director of the council."

Five of the six-member Council Executive Committee would have to agree on whether a violation had occurred and determine the fine, subject to approval by at least 21 of the 28 council members.

Jack Donlan, the executive director who will conduct negotiations with the players prior to the 1982 season, said in a cover letter to the owners which announced that the amendment has passed:

"AS DISCUSSED at our meeting in Detroit, the purpose of this resolution is to insure that all comments be accurate. This can be achieved through factual communication among all parties involved."

The Management Council held its annual recessed meetings in Detroit on June 2-3. The proposed amendment was brought up then, but since the members had not received two weeks notice, a unanimous vote would have been required.

With the apparent knowledge that at least Oakland would vote in opposition, the matter was delayed two weeks. Under the bylaws, approval then would require only a three-quarters majority, or 21 votes.

A FIVE-year collective bargaining agreement between NFL owners and players was signed in 1977, after the players had performed without a contract for three seasons.

At that time, the players agreed that the draft of college players would be acceptable for 10 more years. All other items must be renegotiated at the close of the 1981 season.

The players have let it be known they want to share in 55 percent of the gross receipts and, in effect, become partners in the business.

Ed Garvey, the executive director of the NFLPA, has proposed pay scales based on seniority and the position played, while allowing incentive bonuses for honors and outstanding performances.

GM says Pacers are on the block

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The general manager of the Indiana Pacers confirmed on Friday that owner Sam Nassi is seeking a buyer for the National Basketball Association franchise, but he said it would not be "a fire sale done out of financial necessity."

GENERAL MANAGER Bob Salyers told a news conference Nassi's decision to sell the club is "simply a matter of an individual selling a going business. He does not have to sell the franchise to meet operating expenses."

The hastily assembled news conference was in response to a story published by the Indianapolis News on Friday in which Nassi was quoted as saying the Pacers are losing money and that "I don't think the community is concerned."

SALYERS SAID Nassi's "comment on the lack of interest on the part of Indianapolis was meant only as an indication of his natural disappointment in last year's decline in attendance (to about 10,000 from 10,500 the year before). Reasons for the decline are not the result of a lack of interest on the part of this city."

Nassi told the News he had not established an asking price. "I haven't come up with numbers," he said. "There's still a big interest in (owning) sports teams. I'm looking for someone to have sitting across the table and then hammer something out," he said.

NASSI, PLACING his losses over the past two seasons "in excess of $3 million," said, "If the town is committed not to support the team, I don't know what it takes. The town has indicated it is not interested in having a major league ballclub. Maybe it is time I pack my bags."

Nassi said he doesn't know what he will do if he can't find a buyer, but he will not fold the club.

Andrea Jaeger of the United States skips across the court to collect a shot during quarter-final match play in the BMW Women's Grass Courts tennis tournament at Eastbourne. The win propelled Jaeger into the semi-finals.

Jaeger, Austin advance to finals of net tourney

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Americans Andrea Jaeger and Tracy Austin won their semifinal matches Friday in the $125,000 BMW women's grass courts tennis championships. Jaeger defeated Martina Navratilova 6-2, 3-6, 6-3 and Austin beat 19-year-old Barbara Potter of the United States 6-0, 6-1.

Jaeger, the 16-year-old schoolgirl from Lincolnshire, Ill., played almost exclusively from the baseline and her tactics frustrated the 24-year-old two-time Wimbledon champion.

Jaeger's victory in one hour and 30 minutes ended Navratilova's three-match winning streak in contests between the two. This was the first time they had met on grass.

"That was very satisfying," Jaeger said. "Any victory over Martina is a good one, but especially on grass because her serve and volley game is so suited to this surface."

Navratilova's game was dotted with errors in the first set. Jaeger, playing steadily, broke her in the fifth and seventh games.

THE EXILED Czechoslovakian hit back in the second set, when she volleyed confidently and broke Jaeger to love in the sixth game. Navratilova won three of the last four games of the set without dropping a point.

But Jaeger returned service magnificently to break her opponent in the second game of the final set, then in front as Navratilova tried vainly to get back into the match.

Navratilova saved two match points in the eighth game, but Jaeger then held her service for the match. Navratilova said afterward she was happy that a nagging stomach muscle injury had not worsened.

"I HAD my chances but I'm not making any excuses," she said. "Andrea is very tough."

Austin, her painful back injury behind her, is again thirsting after tennis success.

Lewis uncorks second best long jump

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Carl Lewis, the amazing 19-year old University of Houston sophomore, uncorked the second best long jump in history, 28 feet, 7 3/4 inches Friday at the USA-Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Championships, but a strong wind will prevent the effort from receiving official recognition.

The wind at sun-baked Hughes Stadium was 4.57 meters per second when Lewis ran down the runway for his second attempt in the long jump qualifying. After fouling on his first try, he made certain he would get off a legal jump on his second attempt. And he was perfect.

SAILING GRACEFULLY through the air, he nearly jumped out of the pit.

"I really didn't think it was that far, because it felt very comfortable," he said after receiving congratulations from a board of well-wishers including his father Bill, a track coach in New Jersey.

Then he added "I think I've had better jumps technically."

But none for any greater distance. Last month he soared 28-3 3/4 at Los Angeles, but that also was marred by a wind of 2.02 meters per second, just over the allowable 2.00.

The world record is 29-2 1/4 by Bob Beamon at the 1968 Olympic Games in Mexico City's 7,200-foot altitude.

THE LONG jump capped a day in which Lewis began his quest for a rare double in the National Championships. Earlier he finished second in a heat of the 100-meter dash, behind Herschel Walker, the celebrated All-American football player from the University of Georgia. Walker, the freshman tailback who led the Bulldogs to the national championship last year, was clocked in 10.67 seconds in edging Lewis, 10.72.

"This is a real super field, one of the best in the world," said the powerful Walker, a 6-2, 220-pounder who insists he prefers track to football. "I think I can compete with them. I think I'm progressing pretty well as a sprinter."

WITH THE temperature climbing to 102 degrees and wind whipping into the faces of the runners at 10-20 mph Lewis and Walker led the way into Saturday's semifinals of the 100. Among those joining them were defending champion Stanley Floyd, 1979 winner James Sanford, Olympians Harvey Gance and Steve Riddick, two-time Pan American Games champion Silvio Leonard of Cuba, and the NCAA second and third place finishers, Jeff Phillips and Mel Latney, respectively.

Lewis, the collegiate record holder in the 100 with a 10.00 clocking was not concerned with his runner-up finish in the heat.

"All I wanted to do was qualify," he said. "I was not afraid of anyone in this field. I ran very easy the whole race."

FLOYD, HOWEVER, was not running easily. After favoring his tender left hamstring he said, "I felt my leg pull just a little at the start. I am running at about 85 percent right now but it will sure take more than 85 percent to win in the final. I'm not afraid of anyone in this field. I'm more afraid of my leg."

Lewis' task of winning both the sprint and the long jump — matching a feat last accomplished in the National Championships by Jesse Owens in 1936 — will be very difficult.

He will have to run the 100 semifinal at about 8:30 pm EDT Saturday, then compete in the long jump final starting at 9:30 p.m. and come back for the 100 final at 10:20 p.m.

Bradley, Sheehan tied for lead in Keystone

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — Veteran Pat Bradley and LPGA tour rookie Patty Sheehan tied for the first-round lead in the $125,000 Lady Keystone Open golf tournament after both recorded 6-under-par 66s Friday.

Bradley, who won this tournament three years ago with a record 10-under-par total of 206 for the 54 holes, and Sheehan, a leading candidate for the Ladies Professional Golf Association rookie of the year title, had identical rounds of 34-32 on the 6,368-yard West Course at the Hershey Country Club.

BRADLEY RECOVERED from a bogey 5 on the tough opening hole to birdie three of the last six holes on the front nine and four of the first seven on the back nine.

Sheehan had the lead all to herself when she walked to the 18th tee. She hooked her tee shot into the left rough, however, and a 5-iron wouldn't hold the green. Sheehan chipped 12 feet past the hole and missed the par putt, for her only bogey of the day.

Marlene Floyd, whose brother Ray is playing in the U.S. Open at Merion, just 100 miles away, was one shot back of the leaders. Floyd, who missed only one of 18 greens, birdied the final hole from 20 feet.

DEFENDING CHAMPION JoAnne Carner and Betsy King were tied for fourth, two shots behind Bradley and Sheehan. Carner, who was even par at the turn, went 4-under par for the final nine holes. The 68 was King's low round of the year.

Bradley, who was at even par after six holes, said she was misreading most of the greens. "I rolled it right past the first four or five holes," she said. "I got a 20-footer to drop on seven, and I was on my way."

Sheehan, who had failed to make the cut in the LPGA championship in Cincinnati last week, attributed her improvement to accuracy off the tee and a better touch with her putter.

The tournament continues with 18 holes Saturday and the final round Sunday.

Giants are first to sign all draft picks

By Associated Press

The New York Giants became the first National Football League team to sign all of its draft picks when five players agreed to terms Friday, spokesman Ed Croke said.

THE FIVE included wide receiver John Myster, a third-round pick from Arizona State; defensive tackle Bill Neill, a fifth-round pick out of Pittsburgh; sixth-round choice Mel Hoover, a wide receiver from Arizona State;

Louis Jackson, a running back chosen in the seventh round out of California Polytechnical, and offensive guard Billy Ard, an eighth-round choice from Wake Forest.

NINE OTHER draft choices were signed in late May.

The signings bring to 94 the number of players on the Giants roster.

Cuts will be made beginning in August, with the first reduction bringing the team to 60.

All-Sports radio may be a success

AVON, Conn. (AP) — When Enterprise Radio speaks, only some people listen.

But that response is enough to make those at the nation's first all-sports radio network believe they are tuned into the needs of an immense audience they intend to someday lure away from other radio networks.

Since taking to the air in January, Enterprise Radio has signed up 90 AM affiliates scattered across the country, with 14 of those located in the top 25 markets. The affiliates range from the top station in the Milwaukee market to one of the weakest in the Detroit area.

SEVEN DAYS a week, 24 hours a day, Enterprise Radio uses a unique satellite system to feed its affiliates a steady stream of sports that includes five-minute "updates" at 15 minutes after and 15 minutes before every hour, about 20 sports features weekly, and a daily 12-hour sports talk show.

The volume of sports information is so much that Scott Rasmussen, president and co-founder of the network, said ER already has produced more hours of radio sports than NBC, CBS, ABC and Mutual radio networks combined will produce for the entire year.

"We're unlike a typical network," Rasmussen said. "We deal with one product — sports — and nothing else."

Eventually, he said he hopes the network will achieve "total sports identification," meaning that when people turn on their radios to listen to sports, they will tune in an ER affiliate. To that end, the network has aggressively tried to negotiate contracts for many major sports events.

ER held the exclusive U.S. radio rights to the National Hockey League's 1981 Stanley Cup finals, which it broadcast live.

IT ALSO broadcast the Larry Holmes-Leon Spinks heavyweight championship fight live, and will provide daily reports on tennis from Wimbledon.

Unable to provide live coverage of the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont horse races, because of contract rights, the network provided five days of pre-race coverage from the race site for the Derby, Preakness and the Belmont Stakes.

Rasmussen said Enterprise Radio also put in a bid to major league baseball earlier this year in an attempt to win the radio broadcast rights for the World Series, the All-Star Game and the divisional and league playoff games, but lost to CBS.

CBS COPPED the prize with a two-year contract offer of a reported $4.6 million. Rasmussen said ER offered a higher bid, but lost out because it was too new to the market.

"We don't have a track record yet," he said. "All baseball has done is give them (CBS) a two-year contract, and in that time we will have a track record."

In the meantime, Rasmussen said ER will continue to bid for the broadcast rights to all major sports events. He noted that contracts for most major sports events come up for renegotiation by 1985.

But realizing that the pursuit of contracts is but one way to make a name, ER also has given its reporters a free hand to aggressively pursue stories.

That approach, Rasmussen said, is unique because "sports traditionally has been on a second tier." The result has been that ER has been able to hire experienced sports broadcasters "frustrated by those traditions," he said.

W.B.A. Welterweight Champion Sugar Ray Leonard runs in the empty Houston Astrodome Friday morning as he prepares for the June 25 fight with W.B.A. Jr. Middleweight Champion Ayub Kalule.

Lower electric bill only reward for baseball fan

BOSTON (AP) — The only compensation Boston's No. 1 baseball fan, 57-year-old Dick Casey, will get out of the baseball strike is lower electric bills.

Casey's two television sets and radio — which play separately or all at once, depending on how much baseball is available — have been almost idle since labor problems halted major league baseball games last Friday.

But that doesn't mean Casey has been on strike as well.

"I should be dead now but baseball has kept me alive and I'll outlive this strike, too," he told the Boston Herald American.

A lifelong resident of the city's Dorchester section, the ever-hopeful Casey has for more than 40 years followed the Red Sox south to spring training. And he says he thinks the strike is outrageous.

"Imagine paying anyone a million dollars a year to play baseball? That's terrible, a real shame," said Casey. "I went south with the Braves in 1914 for a try-out and got $250 a month."

Casey didn't make the big leagues, but played semi-pro ball for a while until he got hit on the head and his mother told him to get a job with a department store.

Casey said team owners deserve some free agent compensation, but he said some owners are greedy.

"I blame the owners," he said. "They think the fans will pay to see those big-salaried players, but I think it could ruin the game."

Casey said the Red Sox are a better team this year than they get credit for because "they got rid of all their cry babies — Fisk, Burleson and Lynn."

"They won't win the pennant, but I predict they will win 95 games and lose 67," said Casey.

Longest game remains go fast

BOSTON (AP) — It took 32 innings to reach no decision, but the souvenir scavengers didn't waste time picking over the remains.

The official scorebook, ticket stubs, unsold tickets, programs, even bats and balls were eyed by collectors seeking to cash in on the longest game in the history of professional baseball.

"They wanted anything and everything," said Pawtucket Red Sox General Manager Mike Tamburro. "One guy wanted to buy the bases. Just name a price for the bases," he said.

The "vultures," as Pawtucket owner Ben Mondor calls them, began descending a few hours after the April 18 International League game with Rochester was suspended shortly before dawn on April 19 with the score tied 3-3.

The game will be resumed at McCoy Stadium in Pawtucket, R.I., Tuesday night in the top of the 33rd inning. Mondor thinks the "vultures" may be circling again, looking for items to resell at a profit.

"We knew about the collectors doing things but not on that volume," Mondor said. "They came down on us unbelievably."

"One call I answered the phone on the fella said 'I'd like to buy the official scorer's book. I'll go right down now and pick it up. $1,000. I pick myself off the floor and say, 'I'm sorry. This is company property.' All that stuff will go to the Hall of Fame. We never considered anything else," Mondor said.

"If he was willing to pay $1,000, God only knows what the thing is worth," Tamburro added.

Not nearly that much, said Dale Collett, a leading sports memorabilia collector in Rhode Island who thinks the offers were too high.

"It's a nice item to have a ticket stub and a program from a game of this significance, but you have to remember that it is minor league baseball and there's a difference in collectibility between minor league and major league, like the difference between a Volkswagen and a Cadillac," Collett said.

Baseball strike doesn't stop work on domed stadium

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Major league baseball may be interrupted by a strike, but workmen on this city's domed stadium are putting the pieces together right on schedule.

In the past week, with the aid of a giant crane, they began installing 18 cables over which the fiberglass roof will be stretched. The 3½-inch diameter cables are 640 to 750 feet long and weigh up to 10 tons each.

THE HUBERT H. Humphrey Metrodome will be home for the Minnesota Vikings football team, the Minnesota Twins baseball team, and perhaps the Minnesota Kicks soccer team and University of Minnesota football Gophers.

It's expected to be finished by next April 1, said a project spokesman who attributes the quick finish to some carefully calculated planning.

Jerry Bell, administrative assistant with the Metropolitan Sports Facilities Commission, noted that the $55 million project is about $8 million under budget with 95 percent of work contracted.

"I feel there are three main reasons why we are that much under budget," Bell said in an interview Friday.

"For one thing, we (the commission) are the prime contractor. There are no markups on the contracts."

"Secondly, we have a construction manager who coordinates all the work."

"THIRD, WE happened to bid at a time when construction was down and supplies were readily available in the building industry."

Another factor was the peace pact the commission worked out with management and labor. It provides there will be no work stoppages or lockouts to disrupt the timetable.

So, while several trade unions were on strike and picketing major area projects recently, work hummed along at the Metrodome.

Bell said the Metrodome builders learned from similar projects elsewhere.

At Seattle, the $64 million Kingdome, finished in 1976, had "a tremendous cost overrun," he said, and the $55.7 million Pontiac, Mich., Silverdome, completed in 1975, requires an annual $800,000 state subsidy.

WHILE VOTERS in King County approved a $40 million bond issue in 1968, the Kingdome opened in 1976 at an estimated construction cost of $67 million. However, it's reported to be operating at a profit and generally regarded as a success.

"We believe our stadium is going to be self-supporting," Bell said. "When some other domed stadium operators say they make a profit, they're only including operating costs, not debt servicing."

He estimated Metrodome operating costs at $2 million a year and debt servicing at $4 million and said the project should be paying its way in both respects by 1987.

That tends to blunt barbs from critics who feared Minneapolis could be saddled with a special tax indefinitely.
