Allies batter Iraq

Gunners shoot down 2 U.S. planes

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia (AP) — In a fierce assault on Iraq, allied warplanes "scattered" a unit of the elite Republican Guards and blew up airfields, tanks and personnel carriers on Saturday, military officers said.

Iraqi anti-aircraft gunners shot down two U.S. warplanes — the first lost in two days — but Iraq's air force offered no resistance, American officials said. The U.S. Air Force searched behind enemy lines for its downed airmen.

One Marine was killed and two were wounded, reportedly when their convoy was struck in Saudi Arabia by cluster bombs dropped by American warplanes.

On a day of little ground activity, the U.S. Army was inspecting hundreds of Bradley Fighting Vehicles, its premier armored infantry transport, for a transmission defect that could limit its speed to 12 mph.

The vehicle is designed to travel at speeds up to 38 mph, but 511 Bradleys, about one-fourth of all those in Saudi Arabia, may have the problem, according to an Army memo obtained by The Associated Press.

Unbowed by the relentless allied bombing raids and the recent defeat in the city of Khafji, Iraq vowed to use every means from "kitchen knives to weapons of mass destruction" to fight the U.S.-led multinational force.

President Bush gave a more reflective statement on the war. In a radio address that invoked God and the memory of Abraham Lincoln, he urged Americans to pray for the American soldiers on Sunday.

Elsewhere in the United States, the anguish of the war was reflected in the fates of two women: an Army Reserve doctor from Kansas who went AWOL rather than go to the gulf, and a Michigan servicewoman who is missing in action.

Throughout the gulf region, U.S. and allied warplanes took advantage of near-perfect weather to hit targets throughout Iraq and Kuwait on Saturday, the 17th day of the war and six months to the day since Iraq invaded Kuwait.

"The last 24 hours have been most satisfactory for the British forces and for our coalition partners," British Group Capt. Niall Irving said.

War in the Persian Gulf weekly concern for Midland's churches

By David Morris
Staff Writer

President Bush has declared this a national day of prayer for peace in the Persian Gulf, but looking to God for a resolution to the ongoing war is nothing new for area churchgoers.

"The Persian Gulf war has been a weekly concern — every Sunday it's been a prayer concern, especially since we have a lady in the congregation who has a husband over there and I have a younger brother who's over there," said the Rev. K.C. Blackketter, pastor of Bethel United Methodist Church.

"Primarily what we're praying for is wisdom on the behalf of world leaders and military leaders. We're praying for a quick end to the hostilities and that there will be as little loss of life as possible."

Although some local ministers contacted last week said they planned special services for today in response to Bush's declaration, most said it will be worship-as-usual.

The usual worship service, as indicated by Blackketter, has changed somewhat for many churches since the gulf conflict began.

The Rev. Ray Bristol, senior minister at Midland's First Christian Church, said his congregation has committed "to observe special prayer each Sunday and throughout the week."

Jet fuel hampers search for bodies

■ Officials fear up to 33 people killed in crash between airliner and commuter plane.

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Lingering jet fuel stymied the search for bodies Saturday from a runway collision between a USAir jetliner and a commuter plane that officials feared killed up to 33 people.

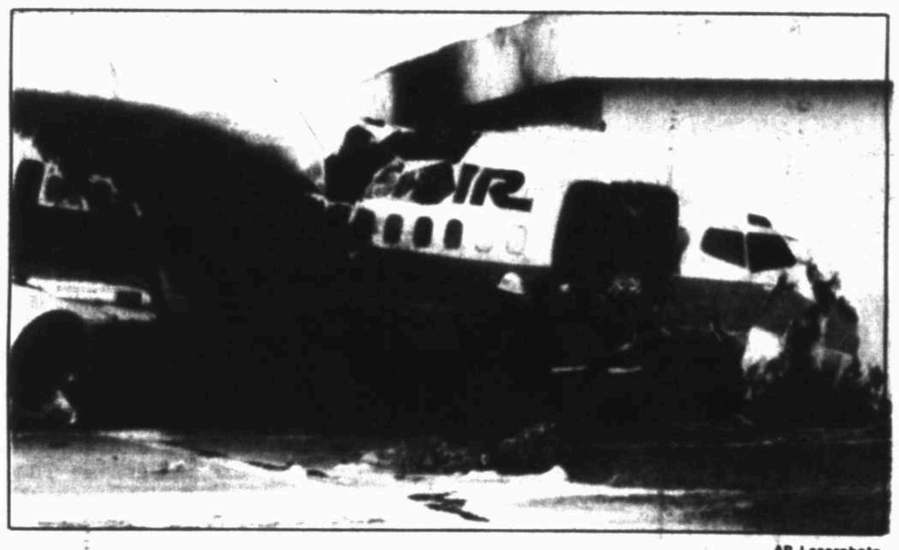

Emergency crews began to pump fuel from tanks of the jet and searchers pulled a body from the wreckage before their work was halted for safety reasons.

"Our crew has returned from the scene," said a coroner's investigator, Carlos Perez. "It's not safe to work in there until the fuel's gone and the plane's secure."

The Boeing 737 had about 6,000 pounds of fuel left when the crash occurred, said USAir President Seth Schofield.

Federal investigators had no immediate explanation for why both planes were on the runway at the same time Friday night.

The jet had barely touched down when it crushed the Skywest commuter plane under its belly as the smaller plane prepared for takeoff. It skidded about 250 yards down the runway and veered across a gravel median, a taxiway and a service road before crashing in flames into an abandoned concrete-block fire station.

AP Laserphoto

Rescue workers search through the wreckage of USAir 737 at Los Angeles International Airport Saturday morning.

The larger plane dragged the smaller one all the way.

"The USAir airplane is sitting right on top of our airplane and it's smashed flat, and there was a ball of fire that went through our airplane," Skywest spokeswoman Kristan Norton said. "There are no survivors."

All 12 people in the commuter plane, a twin-engine Fairchild Metroliner III, were killed. USAir said its pilot was killed and 20 other crew members or passengers were missing.

Coroner's spokesman Robert Dambacher said five bodies were found outside the planes. A sixth body was pulled from the wreckage Saturday. Officials said they didn't know if the bodies were from the jet or the commuter plane.

"It may be days before we have identifications," he said.

AIDS:

Testing is first step

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a two-part series on the process of testing for the AIDS virus. In this candid article pre-counseling and the sampling and sending of the client's blood to Austin are discussed. Part two, appearing two weeks from now — the length of time it takes the Texas Department of Health to run the blood sample through its Austin lab — will discuss the lab test and post-counseling. In an attempt to give the reader a better understanding of AIDS testing, staff writer Erin Blair agreed to submit her blood for testing and to actually enter the counseling process.

The teaspoonful of blood Betty Macaroff draws from my arm is insignificant, hardly enough to make me faint, but the thought that it could reveal exposure to the AIDS virus is enough to keep many people from having the test done.

"The hardest part of the test is making that major decision to come in and do it," Ms. Macaroff said.

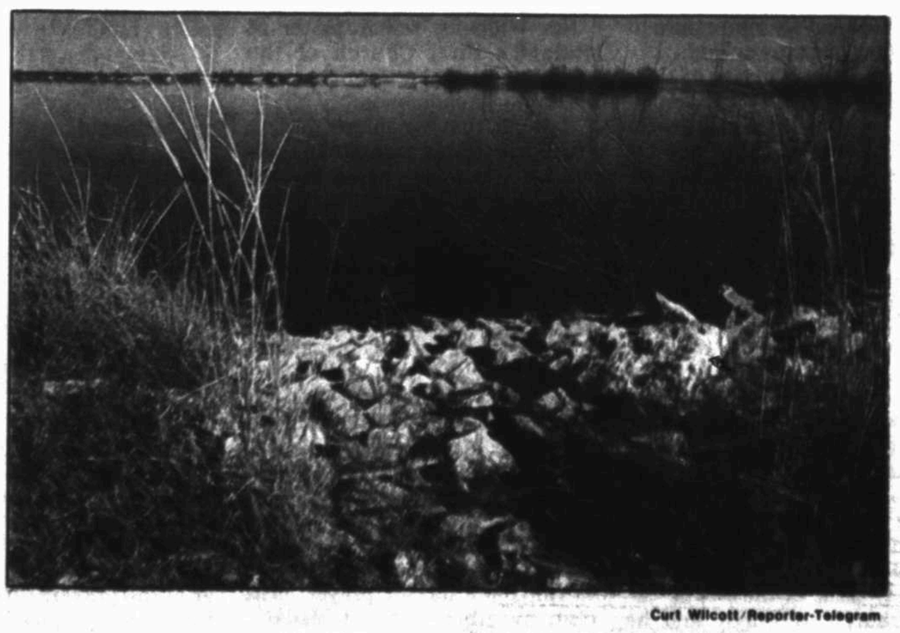

Ms. Macaroff is a family planning specialist with the Midland Planned Parenthood Clinic. Her work includes counseling clients about AIDS and how they can minimize their risk of getting the deadly disease.

For me, the realization that I was susceptible to the AIDS virus didn't hit home until the counselor began talking frankly about sexual practices and other high-risk behaviors that increase the chance of contracting it.

As a 23-year-old college-educated woman in a monogamous relationship, I thought I was immune to the threat of AIDS, the disease that destroys the immune system, leaving the body unable to fight off cancer, pneumonia and other ailments that prove fatal in its weakened state.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

A local envirnomental consultant has said the city of Midland's wastewater treatment facility in southeast Midland County is violating a state-issued permit. City officials said they are working to solve the problems.

A lake normally would be an asset to a West Texas spread, but a body of water that forms on Rita Cone's ranch in southeast Midland County has been a malodorous nightmare.

Almost every time it rains heavily — and sometimes when it does not — treated sewage pours off the city of Midland wastewater treatment facility and onto her property.

"The last time it flooded it caused a big lake that killed all the grass," Ms. Cone said last week. "It takes away pasture land for cattle. Plus it's a nuisance."

AIDS: Test one that's fraught with consequences

(From 1A)

But as Ms. Macaroff talked, I realized that I have had sex with more than one person. While I haven't used intravenous drugs, engaged in homosexual activities or even received a blood transfusion (safe though that procedure normally is), I couldn't be absolutely sure that my old boyfriends or their former girlfriends or those women's previous partners hadn't come in contact with the virus.

I imagined a vast pyramid extending out from me, comprised of all the sexual, possible drug and blood connections that link my health to the behavior patterns of people I don't even know.

"Having sex with one person is like having sex with everyone that person's ever had sex with and all those people's partners and so on," Ms. Macaroff said.

She said the AIDS virus could be spread through blood, semen, vaginal fluid, saliva, urine, feces and breast milk, entering the body through even tiny tears or breaks in the skin.

Health care professionals, despite their gloves, are also at risk because of needle pricks that could form an entry way for contaminants to enter their bloodstream, she said.

Pulling out multi-colored latex condoms, free at Planned Parenthood, Ms. Macaroff demonstrated their use as a barrier to the virus, rolling them onto and off of her fingers.

Noting my embarrassment, she said that talking about safer sex practices (only celibacy is completely safe) with their partners is difficult for most women.

"Women, and teen-age girls especially, in sexual relationships often aren't very assertive," said Jane Hellinghausen, Planned Parenthood's director of education, who was attending the usually completely confidential pre-counseling session. "How to talk their partners into wearing a condom is a big problem.

"We give them some ways they can start a discussion with their partners and we tell them they can just come in for condoms and we'll furnish them. We tell them that as responsible, sexually active women, they should carry and use condoms."

Ms. Macaroff said she discusses AIDS with women who come into the clinic for routine Pap smears and birth control advice.

Because the lining of the vaginal wall is thin, it is easily torn, putting women at risk for AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases (STD).

"Once a woman has any other STD, she is liable to get AIDS, because the (STD) sores pave the virus' way into the body," Ms. Macaroff said.

She said she recently advised a 14-year-old client with pre-cancerous genital warts to have an AIDS virus test after she heard the girl had had nine partners in the past two years.

"What you hear can make you sick," she said.

Heterosexual women are still at risk of getting the disease, Ms. Hellinghausen said.

According to data from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control, AIDS will become the fifth leading cause of death for American women of childbearing age this year.

More than 15,000 women had contracted AIDS by the end of 1990, accounting for 11 percent of all reported cases. More than 9,000 women have died from the disease already.

AIDS is most prevalent among minority women, who make up 19 percent of American women but represent 72 percent of women with AIDS.

The World Health Organization (WHO) said one-third of the 9 million people in the world who have AIDS today are women. By 1999, 80 percent of the estimated 25 million AIDS cases diagnosed by then will result from sex between men and women, the WHO report stated.

"Women should ask their partners where they've been, because a significant number of boys experiment with homosexual sex during their teen-age years but aren't going to tell their girlfriends that," Ms. Hellinghausen said.

"And women who take drugs and alcohol get themselves into situations where their inhibitions and judgments are down. If you took the drugs and alcohol away, some of them wouldn't have sex at all.

"But women don't think about AIDS until they get into a health care setting."

Ms. Hellinghausen said the best way get the message about AIDS to women is to appeal to their maternal instincts.

"If you can't get through to them the fact that they should practice safe sex, you tell them that if they don't use a condom and they get an STD, the disease could make them sterile and then they couldn't have any babies," she said.

Planned Parenthood encourages women who are planning to get pregnant to have an AIDS virus test first.

"If the mother has the AIDS virus, there's a 50 percent chance of her baby having it," Ms. Hellinghausen said. "Then there's the problem of finding a doctor who will agree to deliver the baby, and if the mother has young children, she has to face the fact that she might not be around for long."

Armed with my bag of pamphlets and condoms, I followed Ms. Macaroff into the clinic's lab to take the test, which is free under the sponsorship of the Texas Department of Health (TDH).

As I watched my blood bubble up in the vial, I felt queasy, not because she'd tapped a vein, but because of the secret the sample might reveal.

Ms. Macaroff affixed a code number to the vial that correlated to the number she put on my anonymous patient history chart. That number alone will identify my blood to the TDH lab in Austin that analyzes it.

She locked my medical file in a filing cabinet and promised me that only she would have access to it. Then she put the vial and the patient history in a mailing tube.

The entire procedure, counseling and testing, took about 20 minutes.

I can come back to the Midland Planned Parenthood Clinic on Feb. 15 to get my results, Ms. Macaroff said. The clinic will not give results over the phone, fearing that a client might have difficulty coping with bad news without immediate counseling.

Until then, she reiterated that I should practice safe sex.

But really I'm scared to have sex at all now. It's like watching all the car crash movies in driver's education classes and then being afraid to drive.

Thinking about AIDS forces you to take sex more seriously.

It requires taking stock of those indiscretions that, though almost forgotten, suddenly loom large in the mind at the thought of their potentially fatal consequences.

It makes you ask — is sex worth this?

WATER: Effluent farm under investigation

(From 1A)

violations of the city's permit to operate the facility.

The Jan. 17 report alleges that the city has improperly monitored the system and, among other potential violations, has allowed effluent to form ponds in the area.

After reviewing the complaint, Ralph Johnson, an Odessa-base TWC investigator, said, "That's going to be an area where we need to do some further investigation."

Ms. Cone, co-owner of the Boone Ranch, said overflow continued to be a problem last year, despite the city's $300,000 in treatment system renovations.

"There's lagoons, there's rivers, there's lakes out there," Ms. Cone said.

City officials, meanwhile, said they are working diligently on the system, with the kinks expected to be ironed out this year.

"We do have a problem," Councilman John Castro acknowledged. "The people out there are not monitoring the system and shutting it off on time."

The facility, located off County Road 1379 about 16 miles southeast of downtown Midland, cost about $20 million to build and was completed in mid-1984.

The system processes about 10.5 million gallons of raw sewage a day. Treated water is used to irrigate alfalfa and other crops on about 2,500 acres of city land leased by the Gist Cattle Co.

Cotton and grass also are grown on the property. Some crops are harvested for livestock feed, while a majority of the land is used for grazing. The state does not allow the crops to be used for human consumption.

City Utilities Director John Lowe said a defective sprinkler system, unlevel land and poor monitoring by the Gist Cattle Co. caused overflows up until last year.

Condoms and other items flushed through sewer lines became stuck in sprinklers, causing the system to overwater in places, Lowe said.

Excess effluent collected in pools and sometimes lakes of stinking water, smothering crops on the farm and grass on adjacent ranch land, he said.

In addition, he said an improperly monitored system also resulted in overwatering in certain areas.

After enlisting the help of the Texas Water Commission, environmental consultants and attorneys, Ms. Cone and her sister got the city to listen to them about three years ago.

Ms. Cone said she and her sister, Michelle Mauzy, have spent more than $10,000 on environmental consultant and attorney fees so far.

The city, responding to the complaints, spent $40,000 to hire Texas A&M University consultants to study how to make the system more profitable and less hazardous to surrounding properties.

In February 1990, the consultants recommended upgrading the irrigation system, planting only alfalfa and using the land more for grazing than harvesting.

They said alfalfa is more efficient because it absorbs more water than other crops, and it only needs to be replanted every five years if not harvested.

Later that year, the city spent about $300,000 to fix sprinklers, level land and pay system electricity bills among other costs. Two people were hired to monitor the sprinklers.

Jim Wright, a consultant with Southwest Environmental Services of Midland, said the facility still is out of compliance with a state-issued permit.

He listed 12 potential violations in his report to the TWC after conducting an investigation which included an aerial reconnaissance.

"The problems they have out there are enormous," he said. "The fact that they're in severe violation of their permit says they're having serious problems."

The system, he said, was operated inefficiently because cotton and grasses instead of alfalfa were grown in some places. Cotton and grasses do not absorb as much water as alfalfa.

"They're not growing the right crops," Wright said. "They're trying to run a farm instead of a sewage treatment plant. If they were growing all alfalfa out there, they wouldn't be having a problem."

Effluent has formed ponds in the area and flowed into Johnson Draw, while ground and surface water has been contaminated, he said. Treated sewage has even collected on County Road 1379, he said.

"They can't let all that wastewater sit on the ground," Wright said.

Holding tanks do not appear to have enough space between their water lines and the tops of the containment dikes, he said.

In addition, emergency storage lagoons, which appear to be improperly lined, were used more than the permit allows, Wright said.

"If a wastewater farm runs correctly, it works like a charm and especially well in desert areas," he said. "It's a great idea. It works in other parts of the country."

Johnson would not comment further on steps the TWC will take, but he did not rule out the possibility that the city would be fined.

City Manager Fred Poe said the city is working extensively on the system, which has been improved substantially since renovation work began early last year.

"Many of those improvements have not started to pay off yet," Poe said.

The sprinklers, only half of which were working before last summer, have been repaired, he said.

In addition, he said more crops are being planted to absorb treated water. Up until about mid-1990, only between one-third and half the 2,500 acres of farm land was utilized, he said.

"You just cannot get rid of water on blank land," Poe said.

Heavy rains last July and August compounded the overflow problem, he said. And the ground has yet to dry completely after near-record rains in 1986 that left the land saturated and unable to absorb subsequent heavy rains, he said.

"When you do get rain it all runs off the land and into the draw," Poe said.

To counter the absorption problem, he said an additional 1,000 acres of crops are being planted. Pumps have been installed in the area to pump runoff effluent back into holding tanks, he said.

Meanwhile, he said building up land to level certain sections is "an ongoing situation" because of erosion due to rain.

Responding to the question over crop selection, Lowe said cotton and grasses must be rotated to replenish the soil every five years.

Castro said the city still is awaiting results from TWC testing to determine whether water that collected outside the treatment facility is effluent or simply rainwater.

He assured that city officials have made facility improvements a priority.

"We're trying to correct the problems," he said. "The council is committed to getting it fixed. We have to get it fixed. Hopefully we'll have this thing ready to go by this summer."

CRASH: Lingering fuel hampers search for bodies

(From 1A)

Burnett and NTSB spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz would not discuss the accident's cause at a news conference Saturday.

They said the jetliner's cockpit recorder and flight data recorder, the so-called black box, had been recovered along with tapes from the control tower. The small plane wasn't required to have one.

The recorded material had not been reviewed, Burnett and Lopatkiewicz said. They wouldn't answer questions about the air traffic controller involved.

Ms. Norton said the commuter plane must have been cleared to be on the runway. "They wouldn't go out there on their own."

Ms. Norton identified two of the dead as Skywest pilot Andrew Lucas, 32, and co-pilot Frank Charles Prentice III, 45, both of San Luis Obispo. Both were experienced pilots, with more than 8,000 flight hours each, she said.

Among the dead was Mike Fuller, 30, of Palmdale, who was the manager of Skywest's Palmdale office, Ms. Norton said.

USAir spokeswoman Agnes Huff said 69 of the 89 people on the USAir flight were accounted for. Twenty-seven went to hospitals. Of those, 12 were treated and released, she said.

Ms. Huff said the jetliner's pilot, Capt. Colin Shaw, 48, of Washington, D.C., was among the dead. First Officer David Kelly, 32, also of Washington, was hospitalized with respiratory burns, she said.

CHURCHES: Bush declares national day of prayer for peace

(From 1A)

Reliance on God to solve the problems in the Middle East and elsewhere is vital, Bristol said, since human military and diplomatic efforts are not equal to the task.

"War is a vain hope for achieving the purposes of peace," he said, adding that the futility of war will be the theme of his sermon today.

Others viewed the war as a possible instrument of God's will rather than simply evidence of humanity's folly.

"I think one of the most important things one can pray for is that the Lord would use that (the war)...as an opportunity to spread the Gospel of Christ into an area of the world that does not know him," said Ray E. Johansen, pastor of Grace Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Johansen, who said his flock has been praying regularly for peace and will continue to do so, added that he emphasizes the importance of praying for the enemies of the United States.

"We realize that Christ died for all...and my prayer is that somehow he (Saddam Hussein) comes to realize that," Johansen said.

The Rev. Allen Whitman of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church echoed the call to pray for Saddam. He also said prayer is important because it nurtures the link between man and God, even if God's will is not influenced by humanity's supplications.

"If we are talking to God, it may influence us," said Whitman, who added that war can be especially challenging to people's faith in God.

"You often wonder how God could allow war or you to become consumed with anxiety or hatred," he said.

But consensus among ministers was that the war may be causing a renewed interest in things religious and spiritual.

Colquitt Nash of the North "A" Street Church of Christ said he has seen more of the "fringe" members of his congregation at church lately — those people who might otherwise have attended services only on special occasions like Christmas or Easter.

Jim Williams, senior pastor of Midland's First Church of the Nazarene, said he has observed the same phenomenon.

"I think that when we deal in situations of this magnitude, people are more concerned with eternal life and the hereafter" and more sensitive to the message of the Gospel, he said.

Bush's call for prayer may also encourage people to go to church who might not have bothered otherwise, some ministers speculated.

"Anybody can pray in their own way, wherever they are," said the Rev. Paul E. Nichols, pastor of the Permian Church of Religious Science. "But if anybody wants companionship in their prayer, we're extending that offer."

Most ministers agreed that it was entirely appropriate for Bush to call for a day of prayer, criticism by atheist activist Madalyn Murray O'Hair notwithstanding.

"The deliberate destruction of the nation of Iraq is George Bush's war; not a war of the American people; not a war of our young military men and women who are sent by him to die in the Gulf," Ms. O'Hair said in a statement released last week by American Atheists, Inc. "What George Bush needs is impeachment, not prayer."

But for people like Father Domingo Estrada of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church, Bush's call for prayer is a comforting gesture in a time of crisis.

"On March 30, 1863, the president of the United States had a proclamation for a day of national humiliation, fasting and prayer," Estrada said in a prepared statement. "I am glad to see that our president is following the lead of other great presidents such as President Lincoln. It acknowledges unique blessings enjoyed by the United States and it calls on God to save the nation."

That there be will genuine power in the prayers offered up today was never in question among the ministers contacted.

"I'm quite sure that our turning to God can be the deciding factor in this whole deal," said the Rev. Bob Porterfield of the West Kentucky Street Baptist Church.

The Rev. Robert Lathan of Mount Calvary Missionary Baptist Church said his congregation has been praying regularly for peace in the gulf.

Lathan said the United States may have entered the war too hastily, without giving economic sanctions enough time to work. He was also concerned that the war's effects — especially on the emotional state of soldiers returning to the states — will linger on after the fighting stops.

Nevertheless, he said, he doesn't put his patriotism aside when he enters the pulpit.

"Since they're going, I'm not going to say I don't support the war."

Some people have questioned Bush's motives for the call to prayer, suggesting that the man who ordered U.S. troops into battle might not genuinely want peace. But most local ministers seemed willing to give Bush the benefit of the doubt, if not their wholehearted support.

"Far be it from me to question a person's motives," said the Rev. Russell Ritchel Jr. of Midland's First Presbyterian Church. "God alone is conscious of the heart. I think we need to take people pretty much at their word."

Sailor's dad has trouble being stoic

By Sharon Cohen

CHICAGO (AP) — As a veteran cop, Patrick Thompson has become hardened to the cruelty of the streets. But war is another matter, and with a son in the Persian Gulf, he no longer can be so stoic.

"The first one to come back in a body bag, I'm going to cry," said Thompson, whose 22-year-old son George is a seaman on the USS Blue Ridge.

"I don't understand why our government is sending these people to slaughter," the 44-year-old Air Force veteran said. "Even though George may come back 100 percent, I still feel this way."

Since war broke out, Thompson and his wife, Janice, a nurse, have sifted through news reports for word on the Blue Ridge, asked relatives to write their son and urged others to support the troops.

The troops "show more character and patriotism than any other group I have ever seen in my life," Thompson said.

The couple also may lead a support group, but Mrs. Thompson fears it might deteriorate into a crying session. "I guess that's part of the support," she said, "but I'm thinking it may be more of an emotional ripping."

Both try to stay positive. In a letter, Mrs. Thompson repeatedly told George: "We're behind you guys, we want all of you to come home soon, not just us, but America."

The Thompsons, who haven't heard from George since the war began, also pray daily for his return.

"I never think of the fact of whether he won't return, I think of when he returns," Thompson said. "That's what he keeps me going."

But he remains troubled by the war. "I can't find a reason why we're going through all this," he said. "I see the aftermath of this thing, I see us suffering for years."

Father of dead Marine still supports war

By Vern Anderson

BOUNTIFUL, Utah (AP) — Had he lived, Dion Stephenson might have made the Marines a career, or been a movie stuntman. He already was, according to his father, the best son a man ever had.

Downstairs in his study, James Stephenson fields calls from all over the country — senators, former Marine buddies from Vietnam, relatives, strangers, reporters, even President Bush.

He bears up, consoling the consolers. It's a kind of therapy of the moment, a delaying action. Having lost his father, a brother and sister in a plane crash at age 12, he knows this about grief and loss: The worst comes later.

"I know what it's like to have the car drive up in front of the house," said Stephenson, whose doorbell, below a handsome pair of yellow ribbons, rang 2 a.m. Thursday.

Five Marines and an Army chaplain gave Stephenson and his wife, Geri, the news, confirming his premonition that one of the 11 Marines killed in the first sustained ground action of the Gulf War was Marine Lance Cpl. Dion James Stephenson.

Before 10-year-old Mike Stephenson had gone to bed the night before, his father had talked to him about the idea of dying in combat for one's country.

"I just had this feeling, see," he said.

For James Stephenson, who was adopted as an infant in Pleasantville, N.Y., it isn't enough to say he has three sons. They are his sons.

"All parents love their children, but these were my boys — my blood. Everything they did I was there for them," he said.

The couple seldom hired baby sitters. "My wife would get a little upset. We couldn't go to the movies without the boys."

In sharing time with his sons, Stephenson shared his love for the Marines, his patriotism, his sense of duty. His adoptive father had enlisted in the Navy the day Pearl Harbor was bombed.

"I felt every man should do his duty," said Stephenson, who enlisted in the Marines in 1962 and served a tour in Vietnam in 1964-65.

At 45, looking fit enough to again put on combat fatigues, he hasn't changed his mind. Nor does the possibility that Dion might have been killed by friendly fire make any difference.

"It doesn't change my beliefs. That can happen. Anything can happen in combat," Stephenson said.

Within hours of learning of his son's death, he was on the phone to his senators and congressmen, urging them to convey his support to the nation's top military leaders and to Bush.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, honored the requests, and Bush called the Stephensons on Thursday night.

"He gave me his condolences. He was emotionally moved. He's been in combat. He knows what's going on. It made it a lot easier," Stephenson said.

He assured the president "he definitely did the right thing" in going to war.

"Remember, above all we're Americans. Nobody has the right to take freedom for granted. Somebody has to stand up to the criminals of this world," said Stephenson, a mechanic for Delta Airlines.

His patriotic fervor is matched only by the intensity of his pride in his son. At 5-foot-7 and 145 pounds, Dion Stephenson was slight but athletic, excelling at Marine training that included scuba diving and parachute drops.

"He just ate it up," his father said.

Only once, when asked how he will remember him, is Stephenson forced by raw emotion to pause.

"The best way I can describe my son is in three words," he said. "I used to call him 'my little giant.' My boy meant so much to me, and he was so good."

By all accounts, Dion Stephenson was a model youth. In this city north of Salt Lake City, many say their testimonials can't do him justice.

"I know when people pass away like this, especially young men in combat, the inclination is to say how great they were," said Bonni Hobbs, a drama teacher at Woods Cross High School. "But Dion really was."

Before he graduated in 1987, she coached him to a superior rating in a state competition for pantomime. He led the swimming team to state honors and played football with an intensity that belied his size.

"He was a wonderful person, extremely polite, always 'ma'am' and 'sir.' Everyone who knew him is devastated," Hobbs said.

After three years of a four-year hitch, Dion hadn't decided between staying a Marine or becoming a stuntman as a path to an acting career.

Although Catholic in one of the most heavily Mormon communities in Utah, Dion was at ease with everyone, friends say, and came within a handful of votes of being elected senior class president.

As most of his neighborhood buddies were going off to serve Mormon missions, Dion enlisted. He kept in touch through a newsletter circulated by a missionary's mother.

"Not only would we have to leave our families and loved ones, being forced into a new lifestyle ... some of us were sent to far-off lands ... away from everything, only to find that you only have God and your new mission associates.

"I am proud to be associated with a great bunch of guys like yourselves."

Ground war inevitable, military experts say

By Keay Davidson
Hearst News Service

Allied air power has failed to crush the Iraqis, so a gruesome ground war is inevitable, most military experts say.

A vocal minority that includes strategic analyst Edward Luttwak insists that air power alone can cut the Iraqis' supply lines, forcing them to surrender and give up Kuwait.

But others, citing the Pentagon's own figures, say the Iraqis are battered but far from beaten by the allied bombardment. Last week's ground battles suggest Iraqi resistance may have been underestimated, they warn.

The biggest surprise during the Iraqi attacks along a 150-mile front was the persistence of the Iraqi troops, said retired Air Force Col. Samuel Dickens of the American Security Council, a conservative think tank in Washington.

"These weren't the best (Iraqi) forces — they aren't the Republican Guards — so (the allies) were probably a little surprised at the intensity of the offensive and the follow-through. We would have expected them to retreat."

"Look," Dickens stressed, "the morale of the Iraqi forces is not broken. They've got significant problems in command and control, they obviously have problems. But we obviously have not broken the morale of the army — yet."

In recent days, the most visible air power theorist has been Luttwak of the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington."There are thousands of Iraqi troops in Kuwait," Luttwak told reporters last week. "They require hundreds of trucks each day just to feed them. The war that can force a withdrawal from Kuwait is the air war that attacks those trucks."

But Luttwak is harshly criticized by experts such as retired Army Lt. Gen. William Odum, now director of national security studies at the Hudson Institute.

"The record is, no country has surrendered due to bombing alone," Odum said. "The record of strategic bombing was greatly exaggerated in World War II. In Germany, industrial production actually went up during the war, despite the bombing."

One noted expert on military procurement says the air war to date has raised serious doubts about the effectiveness of the allies' so-called smart weapons.

The allies have flown thousands of sorties so far, including 793 against 33 bridges. "Why in the world did they fly 793 sorties? That's almost 24 sorties per bridge," said retired Air Force Col. Jim Burton of Alexandria, Va.

"If our reconnaissance is so great and fantastic then how come there was that surprise incursion the other night? That wasn't just a couple of guys sneaking across the border," Burton said. "Maybe some of this high-tech accurate stuff isn't as accurate as we've been led to believe."

Another military consultant, retired Army Col. William Darryl Henderson of Saratoga, Calif., said, "Every day that goes on and the Iraqis don't capitulate and cave in just casts further doubt on the proponents of air power."

But a strong dissent is voiced by the nation's most decorated living soldier (110 medals), retired Army Col. David Hackworth, who has forecast an allied victory before the end of February.

"The Iraqi army is not the big 8-foot-tall monsters some American military had projected. Rather, they're 3-foot dwarfs," said Hackworth, who is covering the war.

The Iraqi prisoners from last week's battles are a frazzled, broken force, Hackworth said. "Many of the prisoners displayed great nervousness, great psychological damage from the bombing. They've got nervous tics. (A military) psychiatrist has said that if they hear a loud explosion, they hit the ground and go into the fetal position."

And the Iraqi soldiers still guarding Kuwait are in for a hard time, Hackworth said. He recalled that when he was fighting in Korea and Vietnam, soldiers were severely shaken by the stress of up to 600 enemy rounds coming in each day, "and those were little bullets."

Iraqi troops in Kuwait "are getting hit by 2,000-pounders, and there's simply no way that infantry dug in, in the desert, in the sand, can take that in a battlefield that's only 80 miles long and 80 miles deep," Hackworth said.

Opinions differ on how long the Iraqis can continue to get goods to their troops if allied forces try to cut off Kuwait.

"From the Kuwaiti border up to Basra, there are a lot of mud flats and high weeds, some of them may be 20 feet high," said retired Army Col. John Collins, senior national defense specialist at the Library of Congress.

In theory, the allies could use herbicides to destroy the reeds and expose any smuggling of goods from Basra to Kuwait. But Collins doubts the allies would commit such environmental ravage after the mammoth oil spill in the Persian Gulf, which they blame on Saddam Hussein.

Iraq can continue to grow food that can be smuggled into Kuwait to supply forces, Odum said.

Despite intense bombardment, "I don't see how we could keep them from taking armored columns of supplies into Kuwait, right across the Iraqi border," Odum said. "You can't have bombs coming in 24 hours a day."

But Dickens thinks allied encirclement could cut the shipments to "a small trickle," forcing the Iraqis to abandon big trucks in favor of camels, mules and jeeps.

82nd Airborne fights would-be ambushers

IN NORTHERN SAUDI ARABIA (AP) — Elements of the 82nd Airborne Division fought a 15-minute gun battle with an Iraqi patrol that tried to ambush them. It was the first exchange of gunfire between the Army division and the Iraqis.

There were no confirmed casualties on either side in Friday night's battle, which illuminated the sky with explosions from antitank weapons and orange tracer rounds from heavy machine guns and small-arms fire.

The shooting occurred several miles inside the Saudi border when the 4th Battalion of the 325th Infantry Regiment, which is part of the 82nd's 2nd Brigade, conducted counter-reconnaissance patrols.

The exchange of fire occurred west of the area along the Kuwait border where U.S. Marines and other allied forces were involved in clashes this week.

"They clearly were trying to set an ambush," said Lt. Col. John Vines, battalion commander. "We had to engage them to avoid being ambushed."

The Iraqis had about 20 to 25 men and two vehicles on the patrol; the U.S. force was slightly smaller.

The Iraqis were just setting up positions on some high ground along a U.S. patrol route, and the paratroopers opened fire when they saw the Iraqis disperse into an attack position.

"We were lucky," said 2nd Lt. Mitchell Rambin, 24, of Shreveport, La., who gave the order to fire. "You could see the muzzle flashes coming at you."

The Iraqis apparently didn't have time to fully set the trap. They fired rocket-propelled grenades and AK-47s.

When the shooting started the 2nd Brigade went on full alert, which meant soldiers were ordered to man their fighting holes and bunkers.

When the bullets flew Friday night, Sgt. Jeffrey McCall, 28, of Freeport, Ill., was on guard duty outside the concertina wire protecting brigade headquarters.

He roused his squad so they could see the light show of tracers flaring in the distance.

At another location Spec. 4 Chris Jusiewicz, 20, of Beverly, Mass., was in his shelter when he heard explosions.

"I was writing a letter when I heard, 'Whoom! Whoom! Whoom!' " Jusiewicz said. "It's about time we got something started."

Prisoners of war

The Geneva Conventions are a series of treaties about the treatment of prisoners of war, concluded in 1929 and 1949, which require:

- Humane treatment of prisoners
- Adequate feeding of prisoners
- Supplying information about prisoners
- Allowing visits to prison camps by representatives of neutral states
- Allowing delivery of relief supplies
- Putting no pressure on prisoners to supply more than a minimum amount of information

In Desert Storm

- Initial capture: Each ally and U.S. service branch will transfer captured Iraqis to a holding facility
- POW camps: Under the joint campaign plans, Saudi Arabia has responsibility for prisoner of war camps. The Saudis have announced they intend to treat Iraqis as though they were pilgrims in the country for the annual Hajj holiday.

Houston's thrash is Houston's trash

■ One-time urban-cowboyed Houston is breeding ground for a disturbing brand of sound known as thrash, and it's bending ears around the world.

By Marty Racine

STATE

HOUSTON (AP) — As Houston moves slowly yet inevitably away from its cowboy heritage and image, some of its sons and daughters are making music that tries to confront the realities of runaway technology, the intensity of city life and a new world order perceived as ever more threatening.

It's the soundtrack of the frustrations, anxieties, hopes, loves and dreams of the concrete-and-steel generation, of young urban existentialists in their teens and 20s who have little room for romantic notions of the past and who draw their material from the ugliness or pointlessness of contemporary society.

Listen. It's all around us, the noise, the congestion, the stench and litter, the frantic pace, the fragile order of law, the bankruptcy of modern civilization, the bombast of politicians vying for our attention and then boring us blind.

Whether visionary or merely exploitative, the new music is disturbing. It tells us more about ourselves, our city, then we'd like to know. Which may not sit well with the Chamber of Commerce.

If laid-back Austin produces a glut of post-hippie "new sincerity" and college-alternative bands, Houston has become a breeding ground for thrash, industrial funk and all forms of heavy metal, including speed, gothic, grunge, death and hardcore.

Move over "Urban Cowboy," make way for bands with names like Sprawl, Monster Zero, Dresden 45, Dead Horse, 400 Blows, Academy Black, Dark Reign, Social Deceit, Criminally Insane, Blind Ignorants, da Plug Uglies, Grindin Teeth, Bayou Pigs and the Pain Teens.

THE PAIN TEENS have released their third full album, "Born in Blood," on Austin's Trance Records.

Dead Horse, Academy Black, Dark Reign, Social Deceit and Criminally Insane join other Texas bands that include the Morbid, Lunacy, Sufferance and Pendulum on the new Saturn Records compilation, "Voices of a Red God," produced in Baytown.

Differences in style distinguish these missions in mayhem. As a whole, however, they share an attitude that others find fascinating. Through different channels, both "Born in Blood" and "Voices of a Red God" are finding distribution in Europe, especially Holland, Germany and Eastern Europe, longtime strongholds of heavy metal.

"That Texas mystique is for real over there, I'm not kidding you," said Saturn Records' Richard Cagle, an Exxon employee who runs his own Baytown studio and produced "Red God."

"I put stickers on that album that said: 'Texas Thrash — Limited Red Vinyl Edition.' That's hot as hell over there."

Cagle is hoping to tour Houston thrash bands in Europe. The Pain Teens hope to tour England and Holland.

The press kit with the Pain Teens' "Born in Blood" includes this review from England's esteemed New Musical Express:

"Pain Teens squirm beneath the polished city streets of Houston, a sun-bleached metropolis of concrete and glass with a heart to match. No wonder, then, its children are slightly crazed.

"Pain Teens identify with the ugliness that seeps from out of the TV screen .. and the potential doom that threatens us all."

ANOTHER FOREIGN write-up places the Pain Teens from "the oil-endowed state of Texas" and its "degenerate sub-culture."

"Houston is a city of high crime, empty skyscrapers and ugly urban sprawl. From this dead boomtown emerge the Pain Teens."

"That's not my personal view of Houston," said 25-year-old native Houstonian Scott Ayers, guitarist, producer and founder (in 1986), of the Pain Teens.

"I don't know how much our music is an expression of our environment, but you can't avoid being influenced by where you live. Maybe the sound has something to do with Houston, but more on an unconscious level."

Ayers and vocalist-percussionist Bliss Blood, who clerks at an alternative record and tape shop, are the heartbeat of the group, which also includes bassist Kirk Carr (formerly with the Hightailers and Non-Dairy Creamers) and drummer David Parker (Culturcide).

Although sharing some sonic and conceptual characteristics with a Houston group of the early '80s, Pain Teens' music is less a product of Houston than a distillation of technology and mass media.

Tape loops and assorted sound bites and effects are combined with talking and sometimes menacing vocals to produce an edgy hypnotic-industrial drone.

The group's album is no fluke. The Pain Teens have been active in their own eight-track studio, having produced seven 90-minute cassettes and last year's "Case Histories" LP on their own Anomie label. Anomie also released the "Houston Loud" compilation LP. The Pain Teens contributed "It Will" to a Trance compilation recording, "Love and Napalm."

More albums are planned. "This is a continuing process," Ayers said.

"I'll start with a drum beat, a basic pulse, and then I start layering guitars and tape loops on it," he said of the group's recording process.

"I'll even layer bass or violin. Then sometimes our real drummer will come in and overdub on top of that."

Ayers gets his tape loops by "recording stuff off of TV or the radio. Something will catch my ear, and I'll make a (repeating) tape loop of it."

AYERS WAS NOT always a futurist. He was a rock guitarist who tired of the usual rhythm and blues club scene.

"I got frustrated with the usual kinds of music," he said. "Why repeat the same formulas that have been done so well in the past?"

Although Ayers has been working with tape recorders since 1979, the band can do without tapes in live performance, he said. "It's not a major element."

Regardless, the Pain Teens' music has a certain personal, if machine-like, charm. "I think it's real personal," Ayers said. "It's different from anything I've heard.

"We don't use any samplers (bits of prerecorded music), but I think there's a similarity to what we're doing and what's going on technically in pop. It's getting weirder and weirder, and we're a crossover between rock and industrial, with dance music somewhere in there."

About the same time the Pain Teens were constructing their sonic collages, Richard Cagle was building his Baytown studio. Most of his projects concerned country and pop bands. Then he got involved with what he calls the "thrashers."

"I started working with Academy Black," he said, "and we came up with an idea for a compilation. The market is definitely here for it. The Axiom (nightclub) really helps."

CAGLE, ACADEMY BLACK and Bill Bates, who runs the "Sweet Nightmares" program on KPFT radio, each made a list of possible bands, and "the ones who made all three lists were definitely on the album ("Voices of a Red God").

"I figured that all these bands need is promotion. So I also picked bands from San Antonio, Dallas, Victoria, Corpus Christi. We're having record release parties in all those cities and it rotates these bands' exposure."

Although he has worked with punk bands, Cagle admits that thrash was new to him as recently as a year ago.

"I had never messed with it before," he said. "It's not my favorite music. I lean toward more technical rock. But people who are more familiar with this stuff told me it's really happening in Europe."

'I don't know how much our music is an expression of our environment, but you can't avoid being influenced by where you live.'

— Scott Ayers, 25, founder of the Pain Teens

How to build your money up without tying it down.

Our Money Market Freedom Account gives you access to your money and higher market rates.

What good is high interest on money you can't touch? We couldn't tell you. Because an AmWest Money Market Freedom Account doesn't work that way. We don't tie your hands or your money. With our Money Market Freedom Account you get a high rate of interest plus liquidity of assets. You can write three checks a month and three pre-authorized transfers can be established. You can even get a Freedom Checking Account that requires no minimum balance, no service charges, and is non-interest bearing.

Balance	Yield	Rate
$2,500 - $24,999	6.45%	6.25%
$25,000 - $49,999	7.25%	7.00%
$50,000 and above	7.52%	7.25%

Opening a Money Market Freedom Account is easy. All you need is a minimum deposit of $2,500. The more you deposit, the higher the rate of interest. And with $25,000 and above you'll receive a bonus rate on a new CD for one year terms or more.

So if you have high cash flow, don't settle for a high interest rate account you can't get your hands on. Put your money in an AmWest Money Market Freedom Account.

(From 1A)

For the first time since Thursday, Iraq launched Scud missiles — two at Israel and one at the Saudi capital, Riyadh. The Riyadh Scud was hit by a U.S. Patriot missile, but fragments landed on a residential neighborhood, damaging apartment buildings and causing two minor injuries, police said.

No damage was reported from the two missiles that hit Israel. U.S. officials outside of Israel said the first Scud landed in the predominantly Arab West Bank, as have other missiles fired at Israel on Jan. 28 and Jan. 31.

Many earlier Scud attacks on Israel had landed in the Tel Aviv area or were intercepted above the city. The latest missiles are probably landing short because Iraq has been forced to move its launchers eastward to hide them from allied bombers, said the U.S. officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Irving said Tornado warplanes had made "devastating visits" to two Iraqi airfields that were being repaired after previous attacks. The ground-hugging Tornadoes dropped 40 1,000 pound bombs on each airfield, he said.

"The Iraqis have been doing a great deal of work to repair their airfields, and that's why we've seen fit to go back and visit them again in the last couple of nights," Irving told a briefing in Riyadh.

He said the air strikes also were taking their toll on the Republican Guards, Iraq's elite fighting unit in southern Iraq and Kuwait. In the face of the bombing raids, he said, "their movements don't seem to be particularly well coordinated" and their command and control is "not too hot."

But he added, "I'm not ... suggesting for a moment that this is a totally disorganized shambles out there because it isn't."

Irving said the Iraqi ground forces didn't appear to be preparing for another attack on Saudi Arabia. "There is no offensive posturing going on there, it's all defensive as far as we can ascertain."

Asked if the Iraqi ground forces were collapsing or in retreat, he said: "No, there's no evidence of them retreating at all that I know of."

Despite the attacks on the airfields and Republican Guards, and others over the weekend on bridges and fuel storage tanks, the Iraqi air force continues to sit out the war for the most part, Irving said.

"Just three of their aircraft managed to get airborne yesterday," he said. "Their mission appeared to be simply to take off and land again."

There were no air raids over Baghdad on Saturday morning, but before dawn there was a large explosion, probably caused by a cruise missile, according to Associated Press correspondent Salah Nasrawi. The site of the explosion and extent of damage could not be determined immediately.

Two foreign television journalists reported from Iraq on Saturday of renewed allegations that allies were targeting civilian areas. The reporters said they were shown bombed sites that apparently included civilian targets.

Cable News Network reported that on a tour of Ad Diwaniyah, about 120 miles south of Baghdad, its correspondent was showed heavily bombed areas that included civilian targets.

The U.S. military said the Air Force flew 2,600 sorties on Saturday, 300 more than the daily average.

Saturday night, the rumbling of heavy allied bombing in southern Kuwait was still audible at a U.S. military supply base in northern Saudi Arabia.

"We're covering the entire battlefield to include strategic targets and, of course, targets of opportunity," such as ground forces out in the open, Marine Maj. Gen. Robert Johnston, a Central Command spokesman, said in Riyadh.

In one such attack on the Republican Guards, he said, "We scattered about 300 vehicles and ... had fairly substantial kills in both APCs (armored personnel carriers) and tanks." He didn't say where the engagement occurred.

Israeli officials say Iraq still has at least 15 Scud launchers, and sources in the Jewish state say Israel's military is considering a plan to use commandos to destroy Scud launchers and other targets in western Iraq.

Johnston said there had been little ground activity near the Kuwaiti border. Last week, Iraqi forces took the unoccupied town of Khafji in northern Saudi Arabia and held it until allied forces drove them out Tuesday.

Johnston's assessement was echoed at a Pentagon briefing by Navy Adm. Mike McConnell, who said Iraqi ground forces are "hunkered down." McConnell said, "They came out, they suffered damage, and they've gone back in. And I think they are reassessing now to determine ... what they might do next."

Two U.S. warplanes were shot down by anti-aircraft fire on Saturday, and an American serviceman was killed, apparently by friendly fire, Johnston said.

The planes — an A-10 and an A-6 — apparently were shot down by anti-aircraft artillery, Johnston said.

He would give no further details about how many people were aboard the planes or where they had been shot down because search and rescue operations were continuing. The A-10 is used as a close-support aircraft, especially against tanks. It has a one-person crew. The A-6 Intruder is a low-level attack bomber and has a crew of two.

The latest losses bring to 15 the number of American planes downed in combat. Five British planes, one Kuwaiti warplane and one Italian jet have also been downed since the Persian Gulf War began Jan. 17.

The American fatality occurred Saturday when a Marine convoy apparently was hit by cluster bombs, Johnston said. Two other Marines were wounded.

Iraq said Saturday its people are capaple of any sacrifice in order to win the war. "Nothing short of victory is acceptable to us," Iraq's army newspaper, Al-Qaddisiya, said in a front-page editorial. "The Iraq leadership and people will not give up their country."

"We will use whatever power and weapons are at our disposal, starting from kitchen knives to weapons of mass destruction," it said. In the past, Saddam has threatened to use all arms in Iraq's arsenal, including chemical weapons.

A London newspaper Sunday reported that British forces in the gulf were warned that Saddam has authorized front-line commanders to use chemical weapons at their discretion.

"The allies are now bracing themselves for a nerve or mustard gas attack that could come at any time," the Sunday Times reported.

A Ministry of Defense spokeswoman said she was not aware of the warning.

Bush asked Americans to pray for the safety of U.S. troops, protection for prisoners of war and tranquility for the souls of the dead.

Noting he had designated Sunday as a "national day of prayer," Bush said in a pre-recorded radio message: "At this moment of crisis, may Americans of every creed turn to our greatest power and unite together in prayer."

"Let us pray for the safety of the troops — these men and women who have put their lives and dreams on hold because they understand the threat our world faces," he said.

Bush invoked the memory of Lincoln "and his anguish during the Civil War." "He turned to prayer, saying: 'I've been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I have nowhere else to go.'"

Federal death-penalty law faces its first trials

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A federal death penalty law passed in 1988 as a weapon in the government's campaign against drugs is moving toward its first tests in cases set for trial in Chicago, Alabama and New Jersey.

An anti-drug bill signed by President Reagan allows the government to execute convicted drug kingpins and anyone convicted of drug-related killings.

It's been nearly 28 years since the last federal execution. Sixteen states have executed 143 people since the 1976 U.S. Supreme Court ruling allowing states to resume use of the death penalty.

The first attempt at reviving federal executions will be in Chicago. An alleged leader of a drug ring is scheduled for trial this week in the slaying of a federal witness.

In Alabama, David R. Chandler is to go on trial Feb. 12, accused of arranging and providing a weapon for a May 1990 killing related to a marijuana-growing and distribution operation in east Alabama.

And last week, a March 26 trial date was set for a New Jersey man accused of being involved in the dismembering of a police informant and the slaying of a 15-year-old girl.

"You can look for more of these type cases," said Henry Schwarzschild, retired director of the Capital Punishment Project for the American Civil Liberties Union.

"The U.S. attorneys are as eager to make a splash by getting somebody 'fried' as a state prosecutor is," he said. "It's not extraordinary in legal terms but it has a share of political significance."

The last person put to death by the federal government was Victor Feuger, who was hanged at Iowa State Prison in 1963. He was convicted on federal charges of kidnapping and murder.

Feuger was executed under old federal law that has death penalty provisions for such crimes as treason, assassination of the president and top federal officials, and killings involving aircraft hijackings, train wrecks, kidnappings and bank robberies.

Those statutes were never amended to reflect changes in death penalty laws mandated by the U.S. Supreme Court, and are widely considered unconstitutional.

The 1988 anti-drug law is the first statute to take the Supreme Court guidelines into account, according to lawyers.

In the Chicago case, U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh approved seeking the death penalty in the case of two men accused of murdering a federal witness to protect their $50,000-a-day drug ring.

One of them, Alexander Cooper, is to go on trial Tuesday. He is accused of running an extensive heroin and cocaine operation from 1982 to 1989.

Authorities say Cooper directed Anthony Davis to kill an associate, Robert Parker, because Parker was cooperating with police and giving federal authorities information about the drug operation. Parker was shot in the head five times a year ago this week.

Davis is to go on trial later, and also could face the death penalty.

Cooper's lawyer, James Reilley, argued that seeking the death penalty is more a political move than a deterrent to crime.

"I think it's an inappropriate request by the government because the statute says in a drug operation like this — because of the quantity of drugs — that he'd get life in prison without parole," Reilley said from Illinois.

"There was not brutality here, not that shooting somebody in the head isn't brutal, but he certainly didn't cut anybody's head off."

In New Jersey, federal prosecutors have accused Bilal Pretlow with running a cocaine distribution organization that killed three people and attempted to kill two others.

The government says an informant was abducted, beaten, decapitated and dismembered, and that a 15-year-old girl was killed at the hands of Pretlow after she wandered upon one of the ring's stash houses.

Pretlow's attorney, Raymond Beam Jr., said race may have played a decision in prosecutors' decision to push for the death penalty. Pretlow is black, as are Cooper and Davis. Chandler, the Alabama defendant, is white.

"My impression is that they have a lot of people who are a lot worse who have been tried in this part of the country, and nobody went after the death penalty," Beam said. "And a lot of them were not black."

Michael Chertoff, the U.S. attorney for New Jersey, said the Pretlow case was simply the first case that met the provisions of the new death penalty law.

NATION IN BRIEF

1 dead, 45 hurt in bus accident

JOLIETT, Pa. (AP) — A bus carrying a high school drill team plunged over a mountainside embankment Saturday, killing one adult and injuring 45 other people, authorities said.

The chartered bus lost control as it traveled on U.S. 209 near this eastern Pennsylvania town and slid 150 feet down an embankment, said State Police Cpl. Leonard Nebistinski. The bus remained upright.

Killed was Robert Growcott, 37, of Allentown, police said.

The children were from Salisbury High School in Lehigh County, near Allentown. They were on their way to a flag and drum competition in Elizabethville.

6 die from toxic drug

NEW YORK (AP) — Officials on Saturday blamed a potent "designer" form of heroin for the deaths of six people and scores of illnesses in three states.

Two people died in New York, three in New Jersey and one in Connecticut. About 100 people were treated at hospitals in those states, said Dr. Woodrow Myers, the New York City health commissioner.

Police believe all the deaths are linked to heroin purchased in New York's Bronx borough since Friday afternoon, said spokesman Sgt. Ed Burns.

In New York's South Bronx and Harlem neighborhoods, police cars with public-address systems and a police truck cruised the streets to get the word out to drug users. "Attention. Toxic heroin was sold Friday in New York City," the message said.

Phil foresees more cold

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — About 2,000 people shivered for up to two hours Saturday to see Punxsutawney Phil emerge from his cushy, heated burrow and predict six more weeks of winter.

The groundhog cast a shadow over the nation after his handler coaxed him from a specially made tree stump into the clear dawn.

"Hopefully, this time he's wrong," said Dirk Boehmer of Stroudsburg.

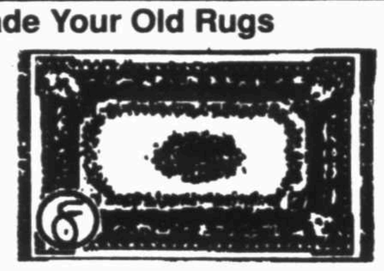

At 7:27 a.m., the exact moment of the sunrise, Inner Circle President James H. Means rapped three times with a cane on Phil's yellow door. Handler Bud Dunkel reached in, gently woke Phil, and lifted the squirming rodent.

NOW demands boycott

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Utah National Organization for Women on Saturday demanded an international boycott of Utah and its bid for the 1998 Winter Olympics following enactment of the nation's toughest abortion law.

A resolution passed unanimously by a dozen Utah NOW directors and members formalized a threat the organization made before Republican Gov. Norm Bangerter signed the legislation on Jan. 25.

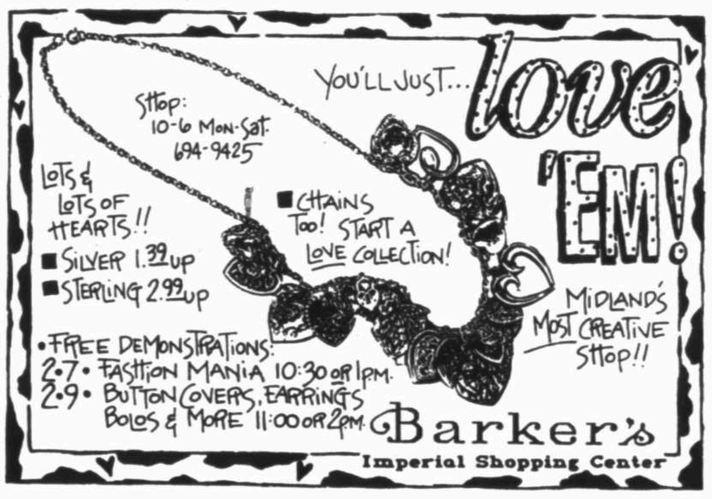

The resolution charged that Bangerter and Utah lawmakers had "flagrantly sidestepped the democratic process and succumbed to the pressure of anti-abortion lobbyists" in passing the bill.

Chilling out

A diplomatic thaw inspired by Mikhail Gorbachev has become a chill

EDITOR'S NOTE: The writer of this article, the former bureau chief of The New York Times in Moscow, has just completed a four-year assignment there.

By Bill Keller
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — The trajectory of hope inspired by Mikhail S. Gorbachev began and ended, in the minds of many of his citizens, with two telephone calls, four tumultuous years apart.

The first, in December 1986, was Gorbachev's call to Andrei D. Sakharov, to inform the dissident and physicist that he was being freed from his exile in the closed city of Gorky.

More than anything Gorbachev had done to that point — the limited cultural thaw, the first economic experiments, the overtures to the West — the liberation of Sakharov won the Soviet leader the wary allegiance of his country's intellectuals and established his credibility before a doubting world.

Here at last was a Soviet leader who sought the approval not only of the Stalinists who brought him to power, but of the principled men repressed by those Stalinists.

And for a time, he got it.

Sakharov himself encouraged optimism at first, even as he set a steadfast moral standard for the self-proclaimed radical reformer in the Kremlin.

That optimism was nearly exhausted by the time of the second phone call, made by Vytautis Landsbergis, the president of Lithuania, in the early morning of Jan. 13.

It was an appeal to Gorbachev for help from a man considered an heir to the uncompromising anti-Stalinist resolve of Sakharov.

The Soviet military, in league with the Communist minority that had been trounced in popular elections, had sent tanks against unarmed civilians to punish the victorious Lithuanian independence government.

Gorbachev refused to come to the phone, and thus confirmed that whether or not he ordered the use of force against democracy, he sanctioned it.

The principles of a Sakharov, he insinuated, could not be reconciled with the expedience of power.

In the independent Soviet press and in the gloomy parlors of this wintry capital, the cold splash of disillusionment has provoked savage introspection and dire prognosis: Why has freedom not become democracy? Who is to blame? Is it over?

In the years between those phone calls, the Soviet Union has undergone half a revolution, and it now seems that it was the easy half.

A centralized economic system that served mainly to redistribute scarcity has broken down, but a new one that would generate wealth has not grown up in its place.

An empire has surrendered its outer colonies and brought its armies home, but cannot come to equilibrium within its own borders.

An ideology of collectivism has been discredited, but not supplanted by any compelling new sense of purpose.

Most important, a totalitarian system has been disavowed, but democracy and the rule of law have not yet succeeded in replacing it.

It is tempting to blame the society itself for failing to make the most of its opportunity, for being too lazy, too ignorant, too envious, too dependent, too impatient, too set in its ways.

In the Russian psyche, Asia is at war with Europe, and seven decades of communism have only reinforced the idea that individual initiative is not only unseemly but dangerous.

In the first years of his reform, when perestroika and glasnost were presented as a mere streamlining and humanizing of the one-party, one-owner state, Gorbachev seemed to think he could goad the public into a more efficient socialism.

Where terror had failed, he would inspire them with new idealism.

"Acceleration!" — his first, quickly abandoned economic slogan — was essentially a call for everyone to run faster on the same old treadmill.

Motivating the apparat

But gradually Gorbachev himself recognized — or seemed to — that for the people to change, the system of motivations and interests had to be changed to encourage competition and individual initiative.

"A house can be put in order only by a person who feels he is the owner," he said at a Communist Party leadership meeting in January 1987, where he introduced the idea of "democratization."

In China, a Communist government had managed to release the energy of economic competition without democracy.

But in the Soviet Union, the nomenklatura, the patronage apparatus that ran all Soviet industry and agriculture like a vast, mega-monopoly, was too solidly entrenched to be disbanded by command.

"The apparat would never permit a really deep land reform, would never permit the infringement of the economic monopoly of the collective and state farms," Igor Klyamkin, a political scientist who predicted the authoritarian turn now under way, said in an interview with the daily Komsomolskaya Pravda in mid-January.

"That was possible only under public pressure, and for that society itself had to be awakened."

It would also disarm the suspicions of the West, allowing him to divert resources from the Cold War and to attract foreign investment.

Gorbachev was a triumph abroad. With his concessions to such traditional Western human rights concerns as Jewish emigration, the imprisonment of political dissenters and the jamming of foreign radio signals, and his courtship of liberal opinion at home, he succeeded in extinguishing the menacing Soviet image that had made his country a pariah state.

Operating with boldness, imagination and a freer hand in foreign policy — for the superpower rivalry had a narrow constituency at home — Gorbachev extracted Soviet forces from Afghanistan, negotiated cutbacks in his military arsenal, and disavowed the Brezhnev Doctrine that had propped up communist governments in Eastern Europe.

AP Laserphoto

In four years, the actions of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and his party have become more ferociously conservative than ever: Gorbachev has appointed a Cabinet stripped of market reformers, tamed the Communist old guard and enlarged the role of the KGB and Soviet army.

For a man who had literally transformed the world, the West was willing to forgive his failings at home, and even to side with him against the democratic and separatist upstarts who demanded more, faster.

There were several signs along the way that Gorbachev viewed democracy as an instrument rather than an ideal, and an instrument to be used cautiously.

His insistence on combining the posts of Communist Party leader and president, his fashioning of a constitutional Parliament in which a third of the seats were automatically reserved for the party and other established institutions, his long resistance to tampering with Article 6 of the Constitution enshrining the one-party monopoly, and his refusal to submit himself at any time to a vote of the public — all were signs of a man unwilling to saw off the branch on which he sat.

Old order disorder

But while the federal elections in March 1989 produced a Parliament that Gorbachev could usually control, elections in the republics and localities a year later had just the opposite result.

Fired by discontent with Gorbachev's economic failures, by ethnic pride and the populist appeals of outsider candidates, the public turned its affection to new leaders who wanted the old order not just reformed, but dismantled.

The non-Russian republics of the Baltics and the Caucasus Mountains, the cities of Moscow and Leningrad, and most important the huge Russian Republic fell into the hands of those who explicitly challenged the right of the center to rule.

COLD: Freedom has become synonymous with bad news middle, Gorbachev last summer flirted with the democratic insurgents, who could mobilize popular authority for sweeping change.

In July, he entered negotiations with Boris N. Yeltsin, president of the Russian Republic, on a 500-day crash economic program that would be a death blow to the state-owned economy.

It called for selling off state factories and farms, rapidly freeing prices and fostering private enterprise on a broad scale, and for a wholesale devolution of power to the republics in exchange for their participation in a kind of economic commonwealth.

Gorbachev's evident embrace of the deal was the last great beat of the democrats' euphoria. And then he balked.

"One day it was 100 percent support," recalled Boris G. Fyodorov, a young market economist who as the Russian finance minister played a key intermediary role between Yeltsin and Gorbachev.

"The next day Gorbachev was again speaking about 'the socialist choice' and things like that. It looked like he was going with the strongest power of the moment."

Signs of chaos

The potential economic bargain alarmed the Communist gentry that still dominated the economy, the army and the state police.

They may have seen it as the final surrender of the center to separatism and chaos. They surely saw it as injurious to their careers.

The army, pulled back from Eastern Europe and derided at home, was dangerously angry.

He could not afford to antagonize the KGB, the state security police, whose loyalty he inherited from his political patron, Yuri V. Andropov, the late KGB chief and party leader.

And the Communist Party's influence remained strong in all those institutions.

Indeed, while Gorbachev seemed to have tamed the Communist old guard at the party's 28th Congress in July, putting such hard-line war horses as Yegor K. Ligachev out to pasture, in many ways Gorbachev's party is more ferociously conservative than ever.

Many of those who fought inside for a reformist platform have quit — 2.3 million of 19.2 million party members have left in the last year — abandoning it to the hard-liners.

Moreover, the power in the party has shifted from the center, Moscow, to party leaders in the republics, who are the most embittered by the threat to their power and, especially in Russia and the Baltics, the most reactionary.

It was the party, after all, that inspired the creation of so-called National Salvation Committees, pro-Kremlin front groups trying to supplant the more independent popularly elected officials.

The tactic caught the public eye in Lithuania, where a Salvation Committee provided a pretext for the army's violence, but the idea was first proposed in public in November by the leader of the Russian Communist Party, Ivan K. Polozkov.

Since the deal with Yeltsin collapsed, Gorbachev's behavior has been more and more chilling.

He has appointed a Cabinet stripped of market reformers and dominated by graduates of the military-industrial complex, and enlarged the role of the KGB in policing the work of private entrepreneurs, including foreign joint ventures.

He has struck at the elected governments of the Baltic republics, first with the army and "black beret" police forces, and then with an unrelenting barrage of official propaganda.

He has authorized the army to patrol the streets of Soviet cities. He has suggested muzzling the independent press, and has silenced the independent voices on central television.

The kindest interpretation is that this is another manuever — the most dangerous maneuver yet, given the nature of his current allies — on the course toward the ideal of a stable nation-state.

But it is hard to find anyone outside Gorbachev's control who thinks so.

Nothing sudden

The last year of tumbling walls and triumphant democracies in Eastern Europe has conditioned the West to expect that whatever happens here will be sudden and huge.

But perhaps the next few years will look the way the last few years look in hindsight, an epic of fits and starts and occasional bloodshed, of muddling through.

The best assurance against a return to the full-fledged tyranny of old is that the Soviet Union is already not what it was when Gorbachev began.

The constituency for change no longer consists of a few brave dissidents like Sakharov. In the press, in the church, in the universities, in the republics, in the coal mines, there is less fear of the Kremlin, and fewer illusions.

Texas singers to help Israelis

"Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."
— Psalms, 121

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

While the nation observes a day to pray for peace, two Texas women are preparing to take their prayers to an Israeli city that has become the target of repeated violence — Tel Aviv.

Stella Pierce, 28, formerly of Stanton, is saying her farewells to friends and family in the Permian Basin area today. Her friend, Joy Newman, 39, of Fort Worth, is with her as they tie up loose ends before leaving Texas for the Middle East.

Both women, country musicians from Fort Worth, will be traveling to Tel Aviv Thursday with Volunteers for Israel, an organization created to assist the Israel Defense Force.

The women said they are going to Israel as country musicians and Christians.

"We have made ourselves available for whatever is needed," Ms. Newman said.

"We are going to show our solidarity for Israel," Ms. Pierce said. "We owe a debt to the Jews. They gave their lives to preserve the scriptures which give us hope today."

Ms. Pierce said they will live on a military base, wear military fatigues and serve in Israel on a 180-day rotation schedule. "And we will have three Kosher meals a day," Ms. Newman said.

They expect to fill in on civilian jobs to allow Israelis to get the critical training they need for war survival.

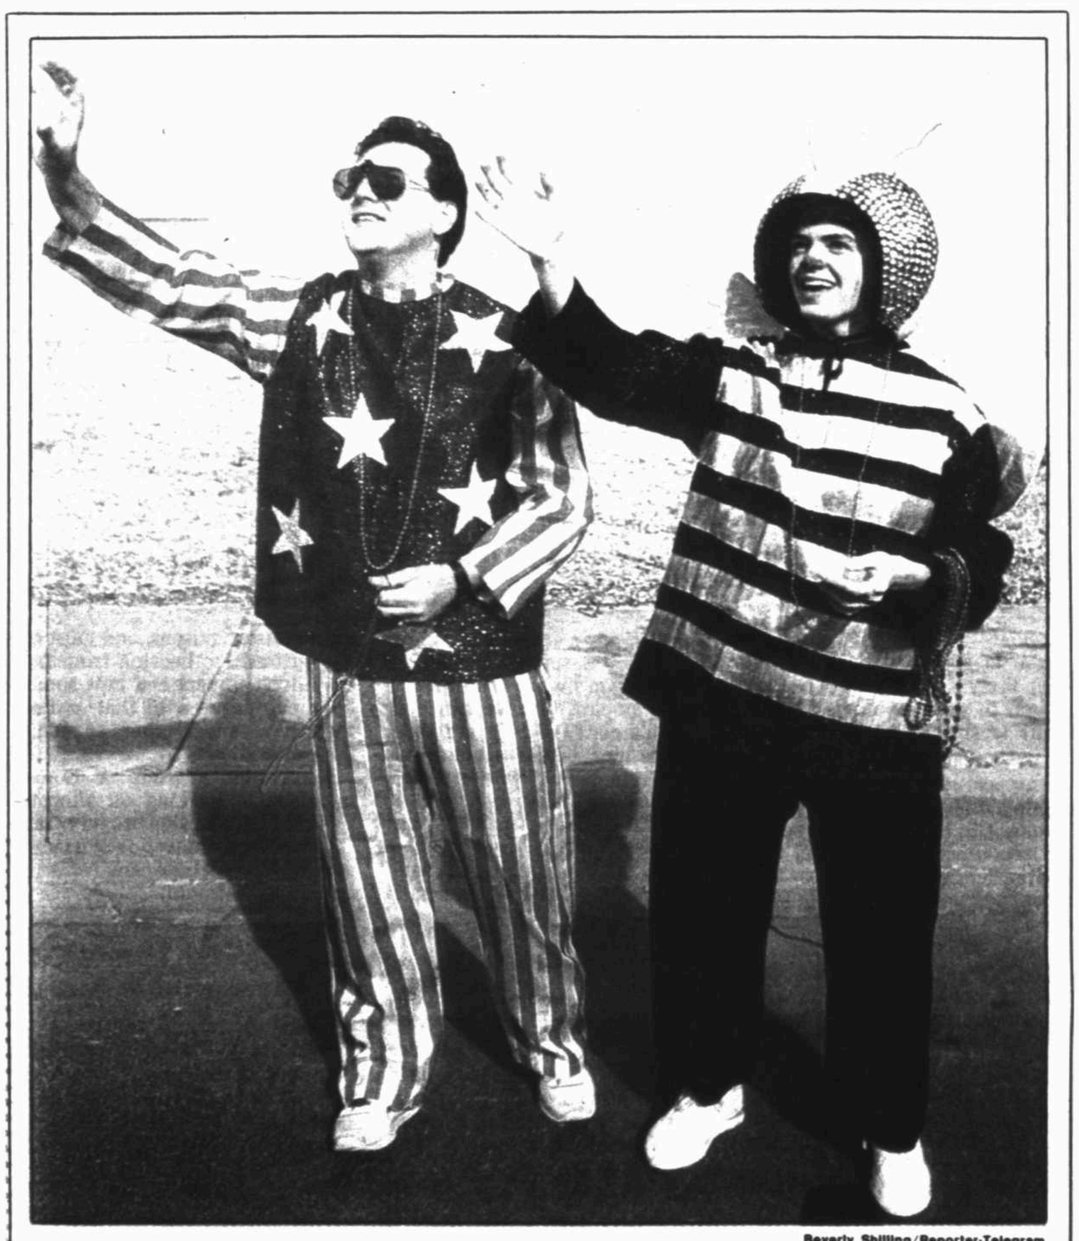

Ironically, the peace-seeking women were both previously employed by General Dynamics in Fort Worth, making F-16 fighter airplanes.

Counselors play key role

■ Junior high students are more concerned with day-to-day living.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

When students need someone to turn to other than their parents or peers, they are liable to sidle up to Jennifer Cooper's door.

Although Ms. Cooper — a counselor at San Jacinto Junior High School — is on hand to offer academic guidance, students are more inclined to seek her out with problems of a personal nature.

"Students in junior high school are more concerned with day-to-day living than with their future career," Ms. Cooper said. "They are concerned with staying in school, their social lives and family relationships."

Ms. Cooper said counselors at the high school level focus more on career and college counseling. "Then, at the elementary school level, counselors deal with problems such as: 'My friend won't speak to me.' Those kinds of problems may be over in five minutes," she said.

But for students in junior high, problems are of a more serious and emotional nature. "Peer pressure is just tremendous," Ms. Cooper said, "especially in junior high when students are real concerned with fitting in."

The counselor said students are confronted with drug and alcohol abuse issues. "They have to learn to say 'no,' but still save face and not look like a nerd," she said.

Ms. Cooper said junior high school students are often hesitant to talk to counselors. "It takes them awhile to develop rapport," she said. "Our daily support groups help students to become willing to share."

Odessa park project near completion

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Imagine relaxing on a bench in the shade, amid hundreds of trees and listening to the soothing sound of flowing water.

Now, imagine downtown Odessa.

"I think there is a negative image," acknowledged Craig Hunter, director of the Odessa Main Street program. "Dirty, ugly ..."

But amongst the seemingly stagnant buildings, a serene isle is emerging — destined to engulf all of downtown. At least that is the hope of a group of Odessans who want to change the current image of the city.

"It will provide a pivotal point for the renovation of downtown," said Odessa City Manager Bill Brown.

That pivot is the rapidly approaching completion of Noel Heritage Plaza, a $1.6 million park project situated behind the Ector County Library between 4th and 5th streets.

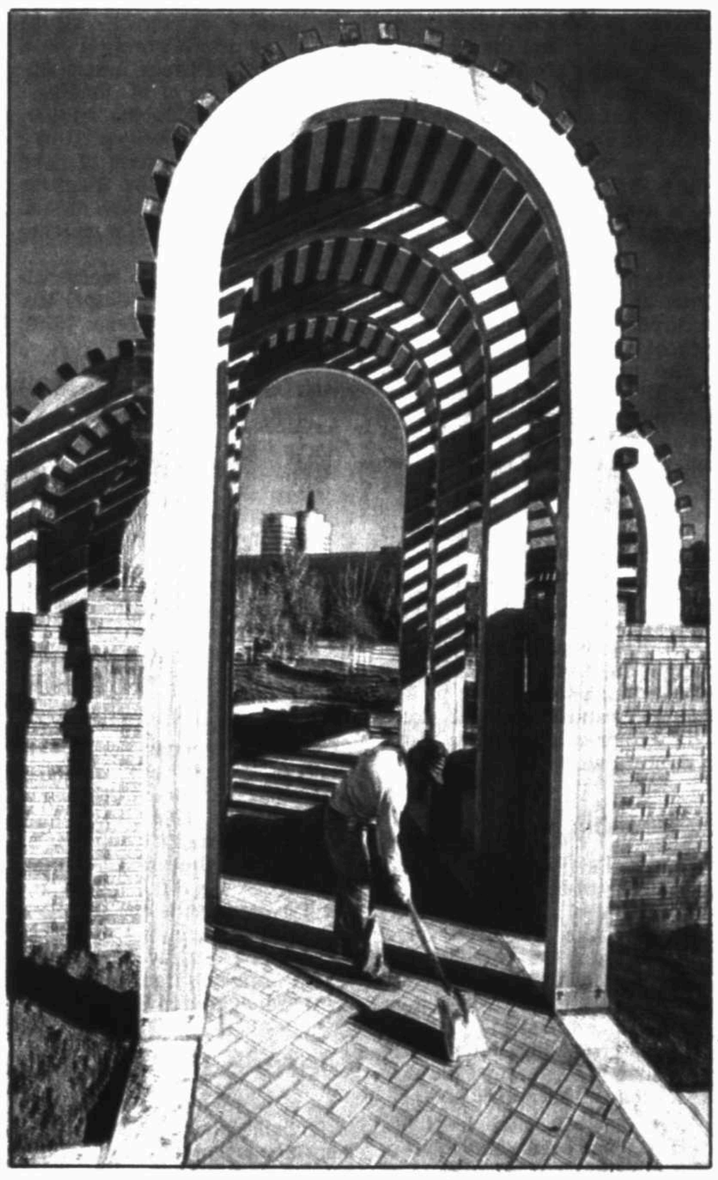

"It's an urban park with benches and trees. One for quiet, peaceful reading, that kind of setting," Brown said.

The plaza — once an open parking lot — spans an area more than an acre-and-a-half in size.

When completed, the plaza will have more than 200 trees, Brown said.

"The trees were designed for fall and spring color and all do well in West Texas," said Randy Truesdell, parks superintendent.

Court order will hit oil districts hardest

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Efforts to comply with a Texas Supreme Court order to equalize school district resources will hit relatively small oil-rich districts hardest, a Texas Education Agency survey indicated.

A "Robin Hood" plan of taking money from the richest 15 percent of districts to close the gap between rich and poor school districts could "recapture" $458.7 million a year, said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, who released the survey results.

Midland Independent School District had a per-student wealth of $153,299 in 1989-90, while Greenwood Independent School District had $115,112 per student. Both districts would be relatively unaffected by a recapture plan, Parker said.

Ector County Independent School District had a per-student wealth of $136,806.

In Howard County, Big Spring Independent School District had a per-student wealth of $135,958, while Coahoma Independent School District had $157,436 while Forsan Independent School District, with a per-student wealth of $398,079, stands to lose up to $1.2 million under a recapture plan.

GARY OTT

'Forgetting' to come to Willie Nelson's IRS aid

Under normal circumstances when I hear that a rich uppity multi-millionaire has been caught not paying his fair share of taxes, my initial reaction is to cheer.

"Serves the snooty S.O.B. right," is what I normally say. Then I laugh at his misfortune and crumble some more cornbread into my bowl of pinto beans.

Ott

This is a particularly appealing way to react when the person caught with his pants down, no pun intended, is an undesireable sort, such as a Donald Trump or even a Leona Helmsley.

It is not so amusing, however, when the party in question is an old hero of mine.

Take a bow Willie Nelson.

By now, of course, you know the gory details. Willie Nelson, the man who gave us "Blue Eyes Crying in the Rain" and the best version of "Precious Memories" ever recorded, owes the tidy sum of $16.7 million — yes, 16.7 million dollars — to the Internal Revenue Service.

You think a bad woman will drive you to drink, try that sucker on for size some morning.

We're talking a major league hangover here.

Willie Nelson and I go way back. It was 1972, I believe, when I first heard his maverick album, "Shotgun Willie."

It was in the forefront of a new movement in Texas. Country musicians, who in the past had been known as rednecks and had the political views to match the label, were suddenly growing their hair long and reaching out — with their music, at least — to the hippies of the '60s.

Some called it country rock; others said it was progressive country.

But, mainly it was a bunch of good ol' boys with long hair, usually from the rural areas of America, who decided picking songs like, "Orange Blossom Special" and "Smoke, Smoke, Smoke that Cigarette" was more fun than playing wornout renditions of old rock standards like "In-a-gadda-da-vida" by Iron Butterfly.

Nowhere was this movement more prevalent than in Austin, Texas, and no musician became more closely identified with it than Willie Nelson.

I will forever be grateful to Willie, as he is known to his millions of fans, for opening my eyes — and ears — to the joys of country music. From his simple, yet eerily touching, lyrics, it was a relatively easy jump to George Jones, Merle Haggard, Tom T. Hall, Waylon Jennings, Earl Scruggs, Lester Flatt, Ernest Tubb, Johnny Cash, Hank Williams Sr., Bob Wills, "Doc" Watson and Jimmie Rodgers. I could go on, of course, but you get the picture.

I like my country music. And, Willie Nelson is the reason.

Now he is in a world of financial trouble and a big part of me bleeds for him. True, he should have had enough sense to see to it that his taxes were paid, but, somehow, he exudes a certain small boy innocence about it all that I find charming.

It is as though he just forgot. It wasn't malicious behavior on his part. He just forgot to put a check in the mail.

I think that's one of the reasons I like him so much.

He forgets to pay his bills.

Consider, for example, this excerpt from a story in Tuesday's Wall Street Journal:

"Unfortunately, he (Nelson) wasn't very good at keeping receipts, say people who knew him well." Or, they add, organizing his records or remembering to pay the bills from the many cross-country tours he made with his fun-loving back-up band.

Is this a regular guy or what?

Have you ever forgotten to pay your telephone bill? Of course, you have. Willie Nelson's only problem was that he forgot to pay Uncle Sam, who has less of a sense of humor than even Ma Bell. And, he forgot to pay $16,700,000 instead of $37.45. A minor detail.

But the general principal remains the same. There are more pressing matters for the average man to concern himself with than paying a bunch of silly bills.

"Mr. Nelson's problems may have begun with a cavalier attitude toward money. Raised in abject poverty — he remembers picking cotton as a child — Mr. Nelson rushed to make up for lost time once he hit it rich in the 1970s. He traveled first class — he owned five customized tour buses and a Learjet — and gave generously to members of his entourage."

Again, I can identify.

OK, I didn't pick cotton as a child, but I do recall once being forced against my will to pull weeds from my grandmother's flower bed. I was paid a quarter an hour.

It made a lasting impression and instilled in me an extremely cavalier attitude toward money. Granted, I don't own a Learjet, but once I did purchase a slightly used sports car that I could not afford at the time.

Cavalier, indeed.

So, Willie, hang in there. I, for one, am pulling for you. And to prove my point, I'm going to send you a check for $1,000.

Of course, I'll probably forget to mail it.

HELP: Students often seek counseling

(From 1B)

She said students may find their way to her office on their own. "Or they may come through teacher or parent referral," she said.

Peggy Callicoatte, a counselor at Midland High School, said most of the students she sees wait until they are "summoned to the office to check on records or schedule changes."

She said the brunt of her counseling involves guidance in selecting careers or colleges to attend.

Ms. Callicoatte said if students need counseling for "a drug problem or other severe problems" she will usually refer them to an Insight counselor or a counselor from other organizations which work with the school district.

"Counselors are diverse," she said. "We really have a multitude of responsibilities."

Not only do they have to handle a multitude of responsibilities, counselors at the elementary school level have to handle a multitude of children.

Deena Harrell serves as counselor for both Bowie and Emerson elementary schools. That translates to 1,500 potential pupils in need of words of wisdom.

Nonetheless, Ms. Harrell has come up with creative concepts to deal with the masses. "I have a Counselor's Can in the library," she said. "That way, if a student doesn't want to tell a teacher that he or she wants to see me, they can drop a piece of paper in a can with their name and room number on it."

She said the covered can also comes in handy since she can't be at both campuses at once.

Ms. Harrell said she visits classrooms to discuss subjects such as test taking skills or self-esteem. "Since I only see some kids once a month, they don't remember my name," she said. "They just know me as the hug lady?"

Why the hug lady?

"Because nobody gets out of my office after they visit me without a hug or a handshake," she said. The counselor said that most of her charges opt for the hug.

And hugs may be sorely needed by children whose parents are going through divorce, which Ms. Harrell said is the most common problem she deals with. "Also there are latch-key kids afraid of being left home alone, or there may even be child abuse involved," she said.

Even though society has changed and counselors deal with everything from children fearful about the war in the Persian Gulf to adolescents experiencing anorexia, some things at the elementary school level never change. Ms. Harrell said, "Girls have friendship problems, and boys fight."

Recognition of counselors set this week

Staff Report

Students: stop by a school counselor's office this week even if you don't have a problem.

It's National School Counseling Week, which was designated to acknowledge the role counselors play in shaping students' lives.

The national week-long recognition of counselors will also be honored locally. Mayor Carrol Thomas and the Midland City Council have proclaimed it National School Counseling Week in Midland today through Saturday.

The American School Counselor Association and the Sylvan Learning Corporation are co-sponsoring the week. The theme of the observance is "Power-Based Professionals Initiating Change," according to Martee Stuart, director of the Sylvan Learning Center.

"Students and parents need to be aware that the school counselor is a professional who is trained to offer guidance and support in career choice, help with academic difficulty, solutions to personal problems and counseling for family issues," Ms. Stuart said.

"It is important for us to realize that counseling is an essential part of the educational process for students as they adjust to our complex society," she added. "We should stop to recognize the importance of counseling and the contributions counselors make every day."

COURT: Plan will equalize distribution of funds

(From 1B)

Statewide, the average taxable wealth was $158,389 per student.

The property values were for 1989-90, the latest year for which the State Property Tax Board had figures.

The richest school district in Texas, Allamoore Consolidated School District in Hudspeth County, had $10.7 million in property wealth for each student this past year and an effective tax rate of 19.12 cents per $100 of assessed value.

The poorest district, Edcouch-Elsa ISD in Hidalgo County, had only $13,720 in property wealth per student and a tax rate of 86.57 cents.

"These numbers are an example of the revenues that must be recaptured to equalize funding for education for all school children," said Parker, chairman of the Senate Education Committee and a proponent of a statewide property tax.

"Under any financing scheme, whether it is a statewide (property) tax, countywide tax base consolidation or a "floating cork' plan, the difference in revenue raised at the local level must be taken into consideration," he said. "If the Legislature doesn't address it, the court will."

According to the Texas Education Agency survey, if the wealthiest 15 percent of school districts shared their local tax revenues, the state would have $458.7 million to redistribute to poor school districts, Parker noted.

The school finance bill adopted this past summer, which put an additional $528 million into the system in a plan designed to reward tax effort, "did not go far enough to equalize money raised at the local level," Parker said.

Parker's plan, which has gained the support of Gov. Ann Richards, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and House Speaker Gib Lewis, would replace the local school property tax with a statewide tax of up to $1 per $100 of assessed value. It also would allow a local-option enrichment tax of up to 25 cents.

Parker's plan, which requires a constitutional amendment, will get its first hearing Monday morning with the Senate Finance Committee.

Opponents of the plan include the Texas Association of School Boards and the Republican Party of Texas.

In an "Action Alert" newsletter to its members, the school board assocation said a statewide property tax "strips citizens of local control of their schools, shifts the tax burden from the state to the already overburdened property tax and levels down the state's public education system, forgoing adequacy for equity."

"Ann Richards and Bob Bullock have been in office less than one month and have already devised a scheme to increase taxes and beef up the bureaucracy," said an emergency resolution of the GOP officials committee. "The Democrats' tax plan is a double whammy for Texas taxpayers because it takes money from our pockets and robs us of any local control of how that money is spent," it said.

Parker said he has found a surprising amount of acceptance of his plan among the general public, and said most of the criticism has come from people who are concerned about losing their jobs or who have partisan political purposes.

"I haven't been talking to many school people, but I've been talking to lots of citizens, and most of the citizens I'm hearing from say they don't understand how somebody can argue with that, unless they have some other agenda," Parker said.

Meanwhile, a group of House members is working on alternatives to the statewide property tax that include consolidation into countywide tax bases and redistribution of state aid.

SINGERS: Two will travel

(From 1B)

"Six years ago, I had a spiritual experience," Ms. Pierce said. "Then in 1988, Joy and I spent two months in Israel. Visiting the Holocaust museum was another moving experience."

The women said they are convinced supporting Israel is God's plan for them.

"I want to bless Israel," Ms. Pierce said. "In Genesis 12:3 it says, 'And I will bless them that bless me.'"

Although Jewish doctrine is different from Christian, both women see the similarities rather than the differences between the religions.

"I know God is on Israel's side," Ms. Pierce said, "and Israelis also have many of the same aspirations as Americans. Israel is the only democracy in the Middle East."

Despite terrorist threats to airlines and recent Scud missile attacks on Israel, the women said they aren't afraid to travel to Tel Aviv and live in Israel.

"We have been told we will be donning a gas mask as soon as we get off the plane," Ms. Pierce said. "But God has a plan for our lives and we must follow that plan."

Neither woman is married nor do they have any children. Their parents and relatives, however, support their decision to journey to the Middle East.

Ms. Pierce said her family in Stanton wants her to "follow God's plan."

"My family is all your basic Southern Godly people," she said. "They understand that now is a time not to look inward, but to reach out and be a comfort for our fellow man."

The women hope to help Holocaust survivors and to comfort American troops with their country music. "We do know some Israeli songs, however," said Ms. Newman, "and we also speak some Hebrew — with a country flavor, a sort of Shalom, y'all."

Ms. Pierce said she grew up playing music in West Texas cotton fields. "My daddy was a cotton farmer," she said. She also performed bluegrass music in Odessa's Globe Theatre.

"Stella also plays the mandolin. The Israelis love the mandolin," Ms. Newman said.

"We are musicians and qualified to work in aviation defense. We could just stay in Fort Worth and follow the American dream," Ms. Pierce said. "But we prefer to leave everything behind and go to Israel to make a difference. A time of war is a time to think of others."

"We are going to comfort hearts," Ms. Newman said. "We have a special, special love for the Israelis, for the land of Israel and its people. They have a special land grant from God, and it is not negotiable."

Day care owner indicted in robberies

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — The owner of a day care center has been indicted in connection with two Christmas Eve robberies, authorities said.

A Jefferson County grand jury on Thursday named Patrick Fitzgerald Slaughter, 27, on two counts of aggravated robbery in Christmas Eve heists.

Slaughter opened the Child's Fantasy Day School in 1987, officials with the Texas Department of Human Services said. About 20 children attend the school.

Slaughter was charged in connection with two crimes that occurred within minutes of each other on Dec. 24. In the first, police said a man posing as a fast-food restaurant employee approached Toni Rogers at about 8 p.m. while she waited in her car, telling her the microphone was broken.

A restaurant employee spoke over the microphone before money was exchanged and the man hit Rogers in the face with his fist while he tried to rob her, police said.

Several minutes later, a man beat and dragged Tanya Cuellar to her car and drove off in the vehicle as she jumped out, said officers.

Slaughter was on seven years' probation on three forgery charges when the robberies occurred. He pleaded guilty Dec. 17 before 252nd District Judge Leonard Giblin, who placed him on seven years' deferred adjudication.

Girl critical after accident

Staff Report

ODESSA — A 3-year-old Ector County girl was in critical condition Saturday night after she ran into a car while chasing a kitten across a street, Department of Public Safety and hospital officials reported.

The girl, Lasandra Padron of 2806 Bialock Ave., was reportedly playing with the kitten in a yard at 2803 Bialock Avenue about 1:40 p.m. Saturday when the animal ran into the street.

The girl ran after the kitten and struck the right front quarter of a 1985 Ford four-door which was southbound on Bialock, DPS reports show. The car was driven by Melvin Crawford Bialock, age unknown.

The girl suffered head injuries and was transported to Medical Center Hospital, where she was admitted to the Intensive Care Unit, reports show.

Criminal mischief trial slated for commissioner

DALLAS (AP) — John Wiley Price, the outspoken Dallas County commissioner accused of damaging a woman's windshield wipers during a protest, has asked for a speedy trial in his criminal mischief case.

A county criminal court judge agreed, setting a pretrial hearing for Tuesday on the charge. Judge Cas Dunlap said Friday the trial would be held later this month.

Price could have his probation revoked for allegedly damaging the van's windshield wipers. The vehicle's driver was attempting to cross a line of protesters led by Price at a Dallas television station on Dec. 7.

The commissioner, who faces up to a year in jail and a $2,000 fine, declined to discuss Friday's hearing. But as he left the courtroom, he said he objected to his cases being assigned to two of the highest-ranking prosecutors.

"It's probably political," said Price, 40.

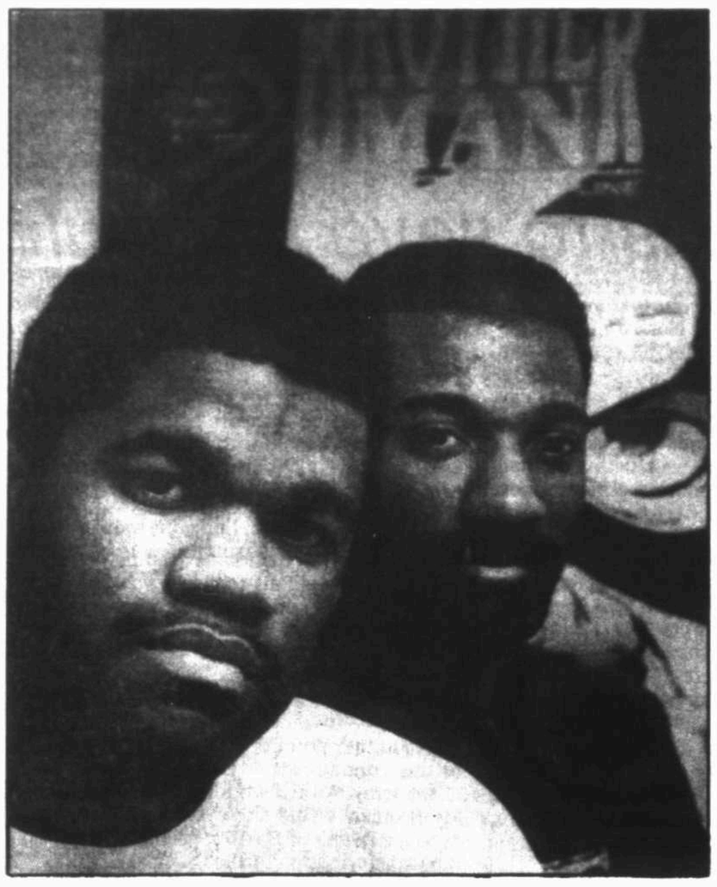

Mike Gillett and Ted Steinke, the prosecutors, agreed to set the windshield wiper case for a jury trial. Prosecutors said they had no objection to Price's request for a speedy trial.

"Our selection process of attorneys is none of his business," said First Assistant District Attorney Norman Kinne. "We want to make sure the state is fairly represented."

Comics bring social conscience

AP Laserphoto

David, left, and Jason Sims pose in front of a Brotherman poster at their Irving, Texas, apartment recently. The brothers Sims debuted the comic book Brotherman in April with an all-black cast. David does the illustrations, Jason handles production and distribution and another brother, Guy, writes the dialogue and develops the plot.

IRVING, Texas (AP) — He started out as a gimmick to attract customers to a T-shirt shop in New Jersey. But he's rapidly matured into a rock-jawed, bulked-up vigilante sweeping the slime of society from Big City's streets and alleys.

Sounds a lot like your typical superhero. Somewhere between Spiderman and Superman. Maybe even the Incredible Hulk, if only he were green.

He's not.

He's black.

He doesn't fly or have X-ray vision. He can't leap tall buildings in any number of bounds and he'd be hard pressed to outrun a speeding bullet.

But Brotherman: Dictator of Discipline, armed with only a strong body and a sound mind, is the only black character today starring in his own comic book.

"Having black characters is nothing new," said Marcus McLaurin, the only black editor at Marvel Comics. "But what they're doing is. The characters are bringing people back in to look at socially relevant issues."

By day, Brotherman is Antonio Valor, a crusading assistant district attorney. By night, he's "the black hero of the '90s" patrolling the mythical metropolis of Big City.

Brotherman, which debuted in April with an all-black cast, is published by Big City Comics Inc., a new black family operation based in the suburban Dallas apartment of brothers Jason and David Sims.

David, 25, illustrates the distinctive black-and-white comic book; another brother, Guy, 29, who lives in San Diego, writes the dialogue and develops the plot; and Jason, 26, manages production and distribution.

Brotherman is the culmination of their varied talents and experiences growing up in Philadelphia.

"The villains he battles are icons of different concepts, like greed, seduction and social apathy," said Jason.

"Brotherman is the type of person who tries to make a difference in society," David added. "He says a difference can be made. It's not just him going out and beating up people."

At night, Brotherman trades in his pin-stripped suit for a B-emblazoned leotard and mask, hidden under an overcoat, stocking and shades. He prowls the streets of Big City, described in the comic as "overrun by crime and vermin ... where the light of hope has been snuffed out by the musty blanket of despair."

The first issues chronicled Brotherman's attempts to bring to justice The Seductress, a voluptuous bank robber whose special perfume mesmerizes bank tellers into graciously imparting with their cash.

In one scene he breaks a cop's hand to get away from three SWAT members.

In another, he comes to the aid of a fellow assistant district attorney who threatens to quit because she was passed up for a big case. "The system will never be right if it constantly suppresses those who have potential," Brotherman admonishes District Atty. Duke Denim.

PARK: Benches, trees located in urban area

(From 1B)

An array of trees will include Afghan pines, red oaks, live oaks, cedar elms, Chinese pistaches, Bradford pears and Texas ashes.

"One area in the park is landscaped with native plants — coral honeysuckle, sages, sumac and buckeyes," Truesdell said.

In addition, a variety of bushes and beds for seasonal color plantings will adorn the vegetative setting.

Complementing nature's growth will be five "uniquely designed" fountains, three life-size bronze statutes depicting children, and a stage large enough to accommodate an orchestra.

"I haven't seen one (a park) quite like it. It's well designed and pretty much low maintenance," Truesdell said.

The plaza — designed by J.T. Dunkin, a landscape architect out of Dallas — is expected to be completed and open to the public by March with an official dedication in May.

Construction of the project was funded by $1 million donated by Ellen Noel and $600,000 from the Odessa Community Development Block Grant.

Grace King, general manager for Noel interests, said the idea for the park was originally formulated by former City Manager John Harrison in the summer of 1986.

"Mr. W.D. Noel showed an interest in the idea but none of it was started until after his death in Jan. 1987," Ms. King said.

"Mr. and Mrs. Noel have been extremely interested in the quality of life here," Ms. King added.

She said the idea for the fountains and trees was the result of a 1987 survey of downtown businesses and residents about what they would like in a "green spot."

"Shade and water movement ... Mrs. Noel was trying to fulfill the wishes of the community," Ms. King said.

The Noels have resided in Odessa for more than 40 years. W.D. Noel was the former chairman of El Paso Products, now Rexene Products, an Odessa petro-chemicals plant. He was also chairman of the development board of UTPB until his death.

Hunter said he sees the Noels' generosity in the form of the plaza as the beginning of the downtown's enhanced future.

"It's an asset for downtown and will provide a focal point for activity," he said.

"It is a catalyst for other things to happen," Hunter said.

That includes the Odessa Main Street program aimed at revitalizing the downtown area through improving appearance, building business activity, and attracting more public events.

The project — still in the information-gathering stage — is part of the Texas Main Street program under the Texas Historical Commission, Hunter said.

State tax plan not best solution

Gov. Ann Richards, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and House Speaker Gib Lewis have thrown their support behind a public school financing proposal they say they believe will meet the mandate of the Texas Supreme Court. But in this instance the three state leaders are supporting a plan that would result in a degree of centralization that Texas voters have already indicated they do not want.

The Supreme Court mandate says legislators must design a new school financing plan by April 1 or face the prospect of the court itself taking control of the schools. That is a development no Texan wants to see.

The court order that threw out the old school financing system made a worthy case that the school financing system is inequitable, but that doesn't mean that the state should opt for something that would create even more bureaucracy and confusion for the schools.

That's exactly what is likely to result if Sen. Carl Parker's school financing plan is approved by the Legislature or the voters, if legislators send the plan to them in the form of a proposed constitutional amendment. Under current law, there is a constitutional ban on a state property tax and such an amendment would have to be approved for Parker's plan to be implemented.

There's little doubt that the Parker plan would result in a bloated school financing bureaucracy. The state would levy a tax of up to $1 per $100 assessed valuation, collect it, then reimburse schools money based on the number of students enrolled. Theoretically each district would receive exactly the same amount for each student, thus equalizing per student spending. Formulas incorporated in the plan also would send more money to districts with special needs. Further, individual districts would be able to levy a tax of up to 25 cents per $100 valuation to use as they see fit.

The greatest danger in the Parker plan is that it would effectively end local control of schools, although resolving the inequitable financing system now in use. It also would necessarily create a larger state and school bureaucracy without actually improving the quality of education across the state.

It doesn't make much sense to create a new tax and a bureaucracy to handle it when another possibility is available to resolve the financing dilemma. Why not abolish the currently used formula payouts and replace them with a block grant that could be used by each school district as it sees fit. With such a system, local control would be ensured, poorer schools could get the money they need to benefit their educational systems, and there would be little or no bloating of the state bureaucracy. The state wouldn't need to get involved in local districts' activities as long as the schools performed up to the level intended.

There are, of course, other possibilities that could be implemented, but Richards, Bullock and Lewis need to leave the door open to the other plans. The Parker plan is only a step toward more bureaucracy and more cost.

Two black leaders strive for peace

Two proud black leaders, one a radical and the other a conservative, met in South Africa on Tuesday and called for an end to the murderous clashes between their followers. Nelson Mandela was at his generous best; his rival, Chief Mangosuthu Gatsha Buthelezi, grudgingly sought to score political points. Yet their meeting, the first in nearly three decades, may well turn out to be a defining moment in South African history.

In the last five years, at least 5,000 blacks have perished in township riots between supporters of Mandela's African National Congress and Buthelezi's Inkatha Freedom Party. Black disunity has caused rejoicing among diehard supremacists opposed to ending apartheid through negotiations with President F.W. de Klerk. Even so, Mandela's allies have resisted any meeting that might enhance Buthelezi's claim for an equal seat at the bargaining table.

Wisely, Mandela decided otherwise. In their meeting in Durban, both leaders promised to tour townships ravaged by violence, to monitor the peace accord and to assure that police are not fomenting trouble. But Mandela went on to declare that there should be no victors or losers: "Only our people must be the victors, and the only losers should be those whose racist policies are served by the carnage among blacks."

For his part, Buthelezi rehearsed his many grievances with the ANC, charging that its violence had been directed against him personally. He scratched the wound that both men vowed to heal. Nevertheless, however prickly the chief, denying him a place at the table would mock the ANC's call for a genuine multiracial democracy. It is hard to see how there can be any democratic system that ignores Inkatha and its predominantly Zulu following.

Ending the cycle of violence will take more than words. Once before, a year ago, Mandela pleaded with his supporters to throw down their weapons; he was ignored. But having come to his rival's stronghold in Natal Province, and having joined with him in a fresh appeal, Mandela has reconfirmed his own stature without diminishing that of Buthelezi. If their appeal for tolerance succeeds, South Africans of every race will be the victors.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's Highlight in History:

Feb. 3, 1959, was "the day the music died" as a plane crash near Clear Lake, Iowa, claimed the lives of rock'n'roll stars Buddy Holly, Ritchie Valens and J.P. "The Big Bopper" Richardson.

On this date:

In 1690, the first paper money in America was issued by the colony of Massachusetts. (The currency was used to pay soldiers fighting a war against Quebec.)

In 1783, Spain recognized U.S. independence.

Czechoslovakia needs to save its soul

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Vaclav Havel has grandiose plans to save the soul of Czechoslovakia. Only then, he told us, can his people transcend the daunting economic and political problems in front of them.

Anderson

That means shoveling out the muck of 40 years of communism when Czechoslovakia's spirit was crushed and when the most patriotic thing a Czech could do was steal from his government so his family could survive.

"The devastation of the spirit, of human behavior here, has been much deeper, much more profound than the devastation of all other forms of life," President Havel told us in an interview. "There has been much deformation of soul. There has been a deformation of interpersonal relations. And it is sure now that it will take a long time before the situation can be rectified."

Czechs and Slovaks had learned under Communist rule to cheat, steal and lie. For example, to survive the spiritual void of Prague's officialdom, many city dwellers maintained weekend cottages in the country. The common joke was that only East Germans spent Sundays in Prague.

The country cottages were built, restored or maintained by tools and supplies stolen from government workplaces. It was popular among workers to say, "If you aren't cheating, then you are cheating your family."

A Czechoslovakian movie, "Friday Is No Holiday," satirized the custom. It portrayed workers who were lazy Monday through Thursday, but who came alive on Friday to filch things from their employers.

The Communists in Czechoslovakia, more than any other Warsaw Pact nation, learned to pacify their people with consumer goods. Life in Czechoslovakia was relatively easy compared to Poland or East Germany. But the Czechs paid dearly for allowing themselves to be bought off by creature comforts. A famous character in their literature, called "The Good Soldier Schweik," typifies the sellout. Schweik pretended to be an idiot to save his skin in World War I, once exclaiming to the enemy, "Don't shoot. There are people here."

One of the top dissidents who helped Havel stir Czechoslovakians to revolt was Josef Vavrousek, an economist. He said the single "integrative factor" of the dissidents who made that revolution work was a sense of ethics. Other Czechoslovakians had pulled within themselves — Vavrousek called it "inner emigration" — to survive one repressive regime after another from the Hapsburgs to the Nazis to the Communists.

Academy Award-winning film director Milos Forman ("One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest"), a friend of Havel's, predicted to us that the transformation of the Czech soul will be "a long process. It really needs a certain kind of spiritual grandeur which Havel and some of his people have." Forman thinks Havel is trying to break the cycle of action and reaction, crime and revenge in Czechoslovakia's history.

Forman once wrote in The Washington Post, "The most difficult task in these (East European) countries today is not the health of their economies, but the ecology of the human mind. Havel understands very well that if the 40-year-old ghost of totalitarian thinking is not exorcised from the minds of millions, the money invested in the economy will disappear like water in the sand. For decades, these societies valued and celebrated dishonest victory more than honest defeat. This simple perversion did immeasurable damage to the hierarchy of principles that govern the relationship between man and society."

Havel agrees with Forman. "I'm convinced — even before our revolution — that global problems of our civilization can be solved only if and when human spirituality is reborn. And by this, I mean also all the human qualities."

Soft soap could whitewash the military

Here's good news for the military. It is called "Surviving Media" and is the latest book by Dr. Harold J. Liverworth, world's foremost authority.

At present I can say little, for it is not yet in bookshops, and may never be if the Pentagon, where it is now being studied at the highest levels, decides to classify it secret.

Baker

This would not be surprising. Why let Saddam Hussein stroll into a bookstore and for a mere $24.95 buy the Pentagon's secrets for defeating the media?

I can, however, reveal that the jacket illustration on Liverworth's book is a reproduction of Frederic Remington's painting "Holding the Pack at Bay."

This shows Gen. George Custer's official spokesperson standing undaunted before hundreds of angry media representatives after he has refused to provide horses to get them to the Little Big Horn before the battle ends.

As this suggests, and as Liverworth writes in the dust-jacket copy, "Surviving Media" is "the indispensable survival guide for military brass, briefers and flacks who hope to escape media encounters intact."

The jacket's blurbs, which Liverworth also wrote, promise an unforgettable reading experience. "Profoundly liberating," says one.

Another: "powerful and evocative ... a masterly depiction." And another: "Rich in the foibles and triumphs of the human spirit."

Faithful Liverworth fans may notice these are the same blurbs that appeared on the jackets of his last two best sellers, "The Coming Breakthrough in Chintz" and "How to Travel With a Cat."

When I chided him about this, he observed that no one could be better qualified than the world's foremost authority to blurb a book.

And since he had already written a perfect set of blurbs for one book, would it not be foolish to write fresh ones for ensuing books?

Was it not impossible to improve on perfection?

I slyly suggested that maybe he had stayed with out-of-date blurbs because he lacked time to write new ones, what with keeping up his nationally syndicated medical column ("Aches and Pains"), maintaining his prize-winning television show ("Ask Dr. Liverworth") and writing three best-selling books per year.

"As a foremost authority on diction," he replied, "I wish you had not slyly suggested the content of that graceless sentence. Saying 'slyly suggested' gives your sentence a sophomoric quality. The trouble results from your lazy choice of the weak verb 'suggested.' Because it is weak, it tempts you to use the strengthening adverb 'slyly.' Instead of saying you 'slyly suggested,' you should have chosen a forceful verb embodying a sense of slyness. Thus you would have eliminated the need for an adverb. In short, you should have said 'I insinuated.'"

Afterward, though, he apologized, explaining that the incessant toil of churning out columns, best-sellers and television shows leaves him so drained of froth that he falls inexorably into fussiness.

I accepted his apology, hoping that geniality might loosen his tongue about some of the juicier passages in "Surviving Media."

I'd heard talk in the publishing world about a devastating new policy called "Co-opt, Don't Confront," which Liverworth was proposing for getting war reporters happily sedated.

Surprisingly, he was happy to leak about this.

His plan, he said, was to give media people uniforms. Get them feeling more military. Make them officers. Ex officio, of course. Wouldn't want them to feel shanghaied.

As a member of the press, I was insulted at Liverworth's proposal. "So you think we can be so easily co-opted, eh, Mr. Foremost Authority?" I cried.

"I merely propose," he said, "that admirals and generals do to military reporters what presidents, congressmen, bureaucrats, lawyers and miscellaneous politicians have done for years to the rest of the Washington press with remarkable success. The trick the Pentagon must learn has been known by everybody else in government: Co-opt, don't confront."

War in gulf offers some clarity in January

WASHINGTON — In spite of the famous "fog of war," January was a month of many clarifications.

War itself dissipated some fog, clarifying who is who and what is what. On the eve of war, some of the pond scum of politics rallied in Baghdad: Louis Farrakhan, Daniel Ortega and Yasser Arafat, head of the PLO, the State Department's chosen partner for Israel in the "peace process."

Will

Will we be spared further talk about Jordan's "moderate" King Hussein, the least kingly king and Saddam Hussein's poodle?

King Hussein's standing in the eyes of Western diplomats is impervious to evidence, but what of the PLO's standing? Israelis viewing the world through the plastic lenses of gas masks need no refresher course on the nature of the PLO, but what of the State Department?

In December, 1988, State Department lyricists prepared for Arafat lyrics for him to lipsync. He did, and the department declared the PLO sanitized. Actually, all Arafat did was "renounce terrorism" (he said he'd give it up because he'd never taken it up), and say that he hoped Israel would become smaller. (That is, he endorsed U.N. Resolution 242 and the State Department declared that endorsement tantamount to recognition of Israel's right to exist.) Perhaps Arafat's support of Saddam has clarified the State Department's thinking.

January clarified the reiterated assertion that a gulf war would not be a "Vietnam" because America would not fight "with one arm tied behind its back." However, using both hands does not mean using chemical or nuclear weapons.

The only time nuclear weapons were used was against the civilian population of a nonnuclear power, for the purpose of saving lives. The use was morally correct: It economized violence, saving perhaps more than a million lives, military and civilian. The case for using tactical nuclear weapons against purely military targets (say, massed Iraqi armor) might be at least as strong as the case was for the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombings. But all post-Nagasaki thinking about the use of nuclear weapons is conditioned by world reaction. The world has a powerful impulse to maintain "firebreaks" in war — taboos to contain violence. Hence the administration says nuclear weapons will not be considered.

January clarified this: The man atop the Soviet Communist Party is a communist. The man who delivers those speeches in the shadow of the giant statue of Lenin is a Leninist. Gorbachev is practicing "democratic centralism" (concentration of power) to preserve the Soviet Union's "socialist choice."

The saturation of society by the state always involves "economic crimes." Hence Gorbachev's decree giving the KGB comprehensive powers of intrusion into economic life. The foundation of freedom, a large sphere for private transactions throughout civil society, remains illegal in Gorbachev's realm.

The Bush administration says postponement of the summit was not dictated by Gorbachev's aggression against Baltic democracy. That is entirely believable. U.S. policy was not disturbed earlier when Gorbachev's troops killed civilians in Baku and Tiblisi.

Concerning the Soviet Union, too, the administration has cast its lot with what will be the losing side, the government, slighting the people. The same sort of crackpot realism that brought on the gulf crisis is buying America a troubled future.

When the Bush administration made defeating Saddam such a moral mission, critics worried that the rationale lacked a limiting principle: Would America become incontinently active in attempting to right all the world's wrongs? The administration's limp response to Gorbachev's intensified dictatorship suggests that the critics can relax.

County trappers have hands tied

This letter is in response to the article appearing in your paper Jan. 27 concerning our county trappers.

To first clarify what was interpreted as an attempt to secure a $350 raise for predator control, the total sum of $10.50 of the $350 would actually go into the trapper's pocket.

It would be easy to sit in a nice quiet house on Cuthbert Street and not give a second thought to axing jobs of men who protect our livestock from predators. The simple truth is our county is represented by only one county commissioner who resides outside the city limits of Midland, (and she lives in a suburban area).

Our trappers have their hands tied. They have been instructed by the Texas Department of Agriculture not to attempt any eradication of an animal destroying personal property (even stray dogs) within a suburban area.

Further, when a commissioner is contacted by a citizen of our county in reference to, for example, dogs killing their chickens, to get the resident off the commissioner's back, he will contact a county trapper. The trapper then reminds the commissioner of his legal and binding obligation to his superiors not to get involved in a suburban area. The monkey immediately jumps back onto the back of the commissioner. This, of course, puts him or her in a position to whine when fund approval comes up for trappers. They have no problem adding 5 percent of their salary, which averages $28,000 per year for 24 meetings per year, but it seems to be perhaps a bit personal when the trapper is about to get $10.50 a month added to their salary which now totals approximately $14,400 per year for a fulltime job.

Midland County covers 900 square miles and I hate to think of the total devastation an unchecked explosion of coyotes, bobcats and foxes would have on our county. When these predators run out of food in the county, guess where they will be dining? These people should strongly reconsider this small increase to continue to protect our county and city.

Thanks to 3,992 rollback backers

I wish to take this means to publicly thank those of you who supported the rollback. We are not defeated; only those who see a wrong and do nothing to change it are defeated.

We were not great in number and certainly not great in funds. Yet so few tried to do so much for so many.

Again, I truly appreciate those 3,992 voters who supported our cause in the rollback. If only another 580 had voted differently or more of our supporters had come forward, the issue could have had a different ending. Maybe next time. And, yes, there will be a next time. Thanks again, you did a great job and I am proud of you for doing it.

Protesting war is treasonable

Why in heaven's name do some people feel that they have to march and yell and sometimes act violently to "protest war?" Can't they realize that the 95 percent silent majority, including President Bush and our military people, detest war? I cannot visualize anyone in his right mind wanting or liking war.

However if Americans and their allies do not stop people like Saddam Hussein and his followers your very "right to protest" is in dire jeopardy. Hussein's invasion and takeover of Kuwait and the murder, rape, torture and other inhumane treatment he has done to the people of Kuwait are intolerable to any sane human being.

Americans, let us get our priorities and energies in the right place before God decides we are not worth saving.

I honestly believe it should be considered an act of treason to say or do something that does not support our people in the military services. They are half way around the world or standing by somewhere with a willingness to sacrifice their lives for all of us; Vietnam and Korea veterans deserve the same respect from all of us regardless of how we feel about those wars.

While I am on the bandwagon, I want to say it is disgraceful when we provide better living conditions and medical care for some convicted criminals than we provide for our veterans. Isn't it a shame when the convicted criminal can demand more rights than someone who has served their country and abided by the laws of the land?

So whether you are for or against President Bush, Republican or Democrat or other, let's all get together and win this war that we all hate. While we are at it, let's allow the military experts and political leaders to make the decisions about how, who, when, where, et cetera.

If you just have to be on TV, go to Hollywood and get a screen test. I am getting a little tired of watching some of these protesters who seem to appear on ever protest that is on TV.

Old Glory should be flown everyday

I am excited about Midland's recent all-out patriotism! We fly our flag at our house 365 days a year, with a light shining on it at night. There isn't a day that goes by in our lives that we don't need to see that fine symbol waving in the breeze to constantly remind us of our great country and our freedom. That grand old flag needs to fly at every home!

Now that we have our momentum going, let's make an effort to get a flag flying at every house and leave it, as we will leave our yellow ribbons, until the war is over and our soldiers come home. But let's leave Old Glory flying far beyond that point! Let it fly forever at your house!

Why not have Midland known as the Flag Flying City as well as the Land of the High Sky? Show your patriotism, let it increase with the present situation, and never let it decrease from this day forward! Be responsible for your neighborhood in getting a flag of any size flying from each house on your block. Let's keep Midland's patriotic spirit going, and let's keep it 12 months out of the year!

There will never be a day that we do not need to be patriotic, to show our patriotism, and to be thankful for our country and our soldiers who will always be there to defend us.

When I see a neighborhood all decked out in American flags or even see one lone flag flying in a neighborhood (usually on July 4th), I immediately think what patriotism and American spirit they have! Let us put that American spirit all over Midland — permanently! Let's fly our flag daily!

Just what exactly is a humane war?

President Bush says he is not targeting Saddam Hussein. After seeing the faces of the allied POWs on TV and the picture of Navy Lt. Jeffery N. Zaun's bruised and battered face on the Feb. 4, 1991 issue of Newsweek one wants to ask, "Why not?"

The president is committed to conducting a humane and civilized war. Well, there ain't no such animal.

The 'Doonesbury' disclaimer

Disclaimer insults intelligent reader

The Midland Reporter-Telegram's disclaimer on the front page of the Sunday, Jan. 27, newspaper concerning the cartoon contribution was unnecessary for the discriminating reading public. We know that you, Midland Reporter-Telegram, don't write the cartoons. We know that you, Midland Reporter-Telegram, do write editorials, assemble and present copy.

By assuming your elitist and condescendingly apologetic attitude, you show a blatant disregard for we, the people. By attempting to disassociate your newspaper from the "gallows" humor of Mr. Zorro, you appear to show little regard for our taste and discrimination.

The people on the "front lines" — be they cops: The Blue Knight; ghetto minorities: "Two Live Crew;" hip white youth: "New Kids on the Block;" or a front-line soldier, Mr. Zorro, have the sharpest view of feelings and attitudes at the point-of-attack. These are real sentiments, important statements.

These statements do not say we don't love America. These statements do say: Always keep your eyes, ears, and mind open, that we may discern the truth.

Please continue to present as many facts as you can. That way, we may continue to discover the truth that is not as accessible through the screen of censorship.

'Doonesbury' strip is nothing but trash

Yes, I was offended by the Doonesbury strip. This is nothing new — I have been offended by him for the last two years and have made it a practice not to read his strips, and I wouldn't have read yesterday's (Jan. 27) except for your front-page article about it.

It stretches the imagination to call this strip a "comic strip." It would suit me, and many of my friends who have expressed similar sentiments, if you eliminated his "comic strip." As far as I am concerned, it is just trash.

Let's not rush into a land war

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

The aerially beleaguered Iraqi tyrant made his intentions clear when he sent his Soviet-built tanks across the Kuwait-Saudi border last week to occupy the deserted, little coastal town of Khafji, six miles inside Saudi Arabia.

Eleven U.S. Marines died in the first major ground fighting of the war to compel the world's most dangerous ruler to give up his conquest of Kuwait.

The ill-fated "Leathernecks" were part of a Marine patrol rushed to rescue Saudi troops supposedly defending the border but who were caught with their pants down. They even fell for the ruse by one Iraqi tank battalion that had its guns turned backward. The Saudis, misled into thinking the Iraqis were coming to surrender, did nothing until the Iraqis, closing in, swung the guns around and blasted them.

By Thursday, Saudi troops, backed by U.S. Marines and air power, retook the town, capturing a large number of Iraqi soldiers.

In a communique broadcast from Baghdad, the Iraqi military command claimed a number of U.S. military women as well as men were captured during the border battle. The communique said the women would be given "good treatment in accordance with the spirit of lofty Islamic laws." U.S. military officials said later two soldiers, one a woman, may have been taken prisoner.

Within hours after the Iraqi tanks moved across the Saudi border Tuesday night, Baghdad radio reported that Saddam had taken personal charge of a ground offensive against the allied forces in Saudi Arabia. He was reportedly near the Saudi border on Sunday giving tank commanders the order to launch the attack Tuesday night.

Confirming that Saddam is now moving to carry the war into the U.S.-allied stronghold in Saudi Arabia, Baghdad's semi-official newspaper, Al-Thawra, called the tank attack across the border "the beginning of a thunderous storm blowing on the Arab desert."

Marines on the outskirts of Khafji said they had been told five or six Iraqi divisions — at least 60,000 troops — were massing near the Kuwaiti town of al-Wafra, about 25 miles west, and preparing for an attack.

With allied forces commander Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf claiming that U.S. and allied aircraft have won complete supremacy in the skies and that all of Iraq's nuclear facilities and more than half of its biological and chemical storage and production facilities have been destroyed, Saddam apparently wants to provoke all-out ground warfare quickly to cause many thousands of casualties.

He undoubtedly hopes that would weaken American public support for the war and lead to a cease-fire that would leave him in power to resume eventually his professed ambition to destroy Israel and create an Islamic empire in the Middle East.

He also hopes large war casualties would increase pressure for a cease-fire based on linkage with an international conference to settle the Palestinian-Israeli dispute and other Middle East problems.

This linkage scheme is strongly supported by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, and Saddam must have been encouraged by the joint statement issued Tuesday by Secretary of State James Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh. The statement said that if Saddam makes "an unequivocal commitment to withdraw from Kuwait," the two ministers agreed "that in the aftermath of the crisis in the Persian Gulf, mutual U.S.-Soviet efforts to promote Arab-Israel peace and regional stability, in consultation with other parties in the region, will be greatly facilitated and enhanced."

The statement did not set any timetable for Iraq's withdrawal, and clearly implied Saddam would be allowed to remain in power. New York Times Washington columnist William Safire wrote that the "Baker-Bessmertnykh abomination is an invitation to the Butcher of Baghdad to turn certain defeat into a kind of victory."

The joint statement had explosive diplomatic repercussions in Israel, whose government, fearing it could lead to a deal that would endanger the Jewish nation's security, protested vigorously to Washington.

The White House swiftly distanced itself from the joint Baker-Bessmertnykh statement. Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said President Bush and National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft knew nothing about the statement until after it was issued by the two foreign ministers.

What concerns me most right now is that we do not allow ourselves to be dragged into a major ground war until our air power has a few more weeks at least to complete its destruction of Iraq's capability to engage in major battles with the allied forces.

As strategy, ground war is no strategy

By Leslie H. Gelb
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Two recent pronouncements, oceans apart, point to the next strategic crossroads for President Bush in the Persian Gulf — how to respond to Iraq's expected use of chemical and other terror weapons.

Saddam Hussein surprised no one last week by suggesting he would employ chemical, biological and even nuclear weapons to save his nation (meaning himself).

Also, John Sununu caused a little stir among his White House colleagues by asserting that if Iraq used poison gas, the U.S. would not follow suit (this being a tentative decision Bush hoped to shroud in some ambiguity to deter Iraq from starting down this path).

The president fully anticipates having to make this awful decision once he moves to join the ground battle in mid-to-late February. Should he decline to retaliate with chemical and nuclear arms, he would affirm great moral and political principles — at the price of American lives. His restraint would be highly second-guessable, noble, very costly and courageous.

All of which argues for rethinking the strategy that is leading him inescapably toward such a double-edged decision, namely the current strategy of creeping slowly but inexorably toward ground warfare.

When a strategy produces all bad choices, that suggests the need for a new strategy — in this case one that indefinitely postpones land battles and simply stays with bombing and blockading.

When the allied land forces begin their attack, there is every reason to assume Saddam will throw everything he has at them; that his model will not be Hirohito, who surrendered rather than see Japan destroyed, but Hitler, who holed up in a bunker while he brought on Germany's immolation.

U.S. intelligence estimates that he possesses no nuclear arms and that his Scud missiles cannot deliver chemical or biological weapons. But he can fire off artillery shells and drop bombs filled with poisons at ground troops.

The Pentagon talks as if it can contain these threats. But soldiers will find it exceedingly difficult to advance wrapped in chemical-protective gear, and that gear will provide them with little protection against germ-warfare toxins.

—Retaliate with poison gas. This would be a proportionate and legal response, but a Draconian one that would make Washington appear as inhumane as Baghdad.

—Hit back with tactical nuclear weapons. While decisive and attractive from a military standpoint, this riposte would be the worst from a strategic one. For generations, Americans would be stained with the terrible legacy of incinerating Arabs and breaking a high moral barrier.

—Bomb Iraqi population centers. Such action would not deter Saddam from further use of gas; it would only punish the innocent.

These are all bad choices, unless Bush is confident he can blunt Iraq's unconventional weapons. And when a strategy produces nothing but bad choices, it requires reexamination.

Bush and his close aides are well aware of their problem. That is why Gen. Colin Powell stressed last week that the U.S. was in "no hurry" to launch a land attack. But delay for a matter of weeks, the current administration approach, is unlikely to alter the president's choices.

Postponing a ground assault for months, on the other hand, could offer a less costly and risky alternative. It would allow time for Iraqi forces to feel the full weight of American air power, defect and even overthrow Saddam.

Postponement also carries risks. Moscow could bolt from the coalition and anti-war sentiments could cripple allied unity. But there is time to see how these situations develop in a few weeks.

Now there is reason to look at another strategy, one like continuing to bomb and blockade, one that might help him avoid the trap of chemical and nuclear weapons that he is setting for himself.

Enrollment for College Classics begins Monday

By H.A. Tuck

First of three sessions of College Classics for the spring semester begins this week. Enrollments still are open on some of the 11 classes being offered for the first session, as well as those for the next two sessions.

Tuck

College Classics are exclusively for those at least 55 years of age, with most of the classes meeting for an hour or 90 minutes. Tennis meets in the morning, while all the others meet in the afternoons. Best of all, the fee is just $25 to enroll for as many classes as you wish to take from all three sessions. That's right, take one class and pay $25; take 15 or more and pay $25.

Session I is from Feb. 4-March 1, Session II is March 11-April 5, and Session III is April 8-May 3.

The cost is low because all the instructors are volunteers from the college or the community.

Session I classes include: Art, Architecture, History and Their Relationship; The Purchase and Maintenance of Automobiles; Birds and Things; Diet Dilemma; Drawing; Economics of Current Events; Piano; Stamp Collecting; Tennis; World History Continues; and You and Your Money — Not for Singles Only.

Education board nominates state commissioner

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education late Saturday nominated New York state education official Lionel Meno to take the helm of the state's $14-billion-a-year school system as education commissioner.

Meno, of Albany, N.Y., has served the past 2½ years as deputy commissioner for elementary and secondary education in the New York State Education Department. Board members said that post is equivalent to Texas' education commissioner.

"I just think Dr. Meno has some unique experiences that he can bring to Texas at this point in time," said board chairwoman Carolyn Crawford. "He has confronted the problems of urban schools with a diverse and multicultural population."

The nomination was the result of a four-month search for a replacement for Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby, who retired Thursday.

The board will nominate Meno to Gov. Ann Richards, who will make the appointment. Senate confirmation is required.

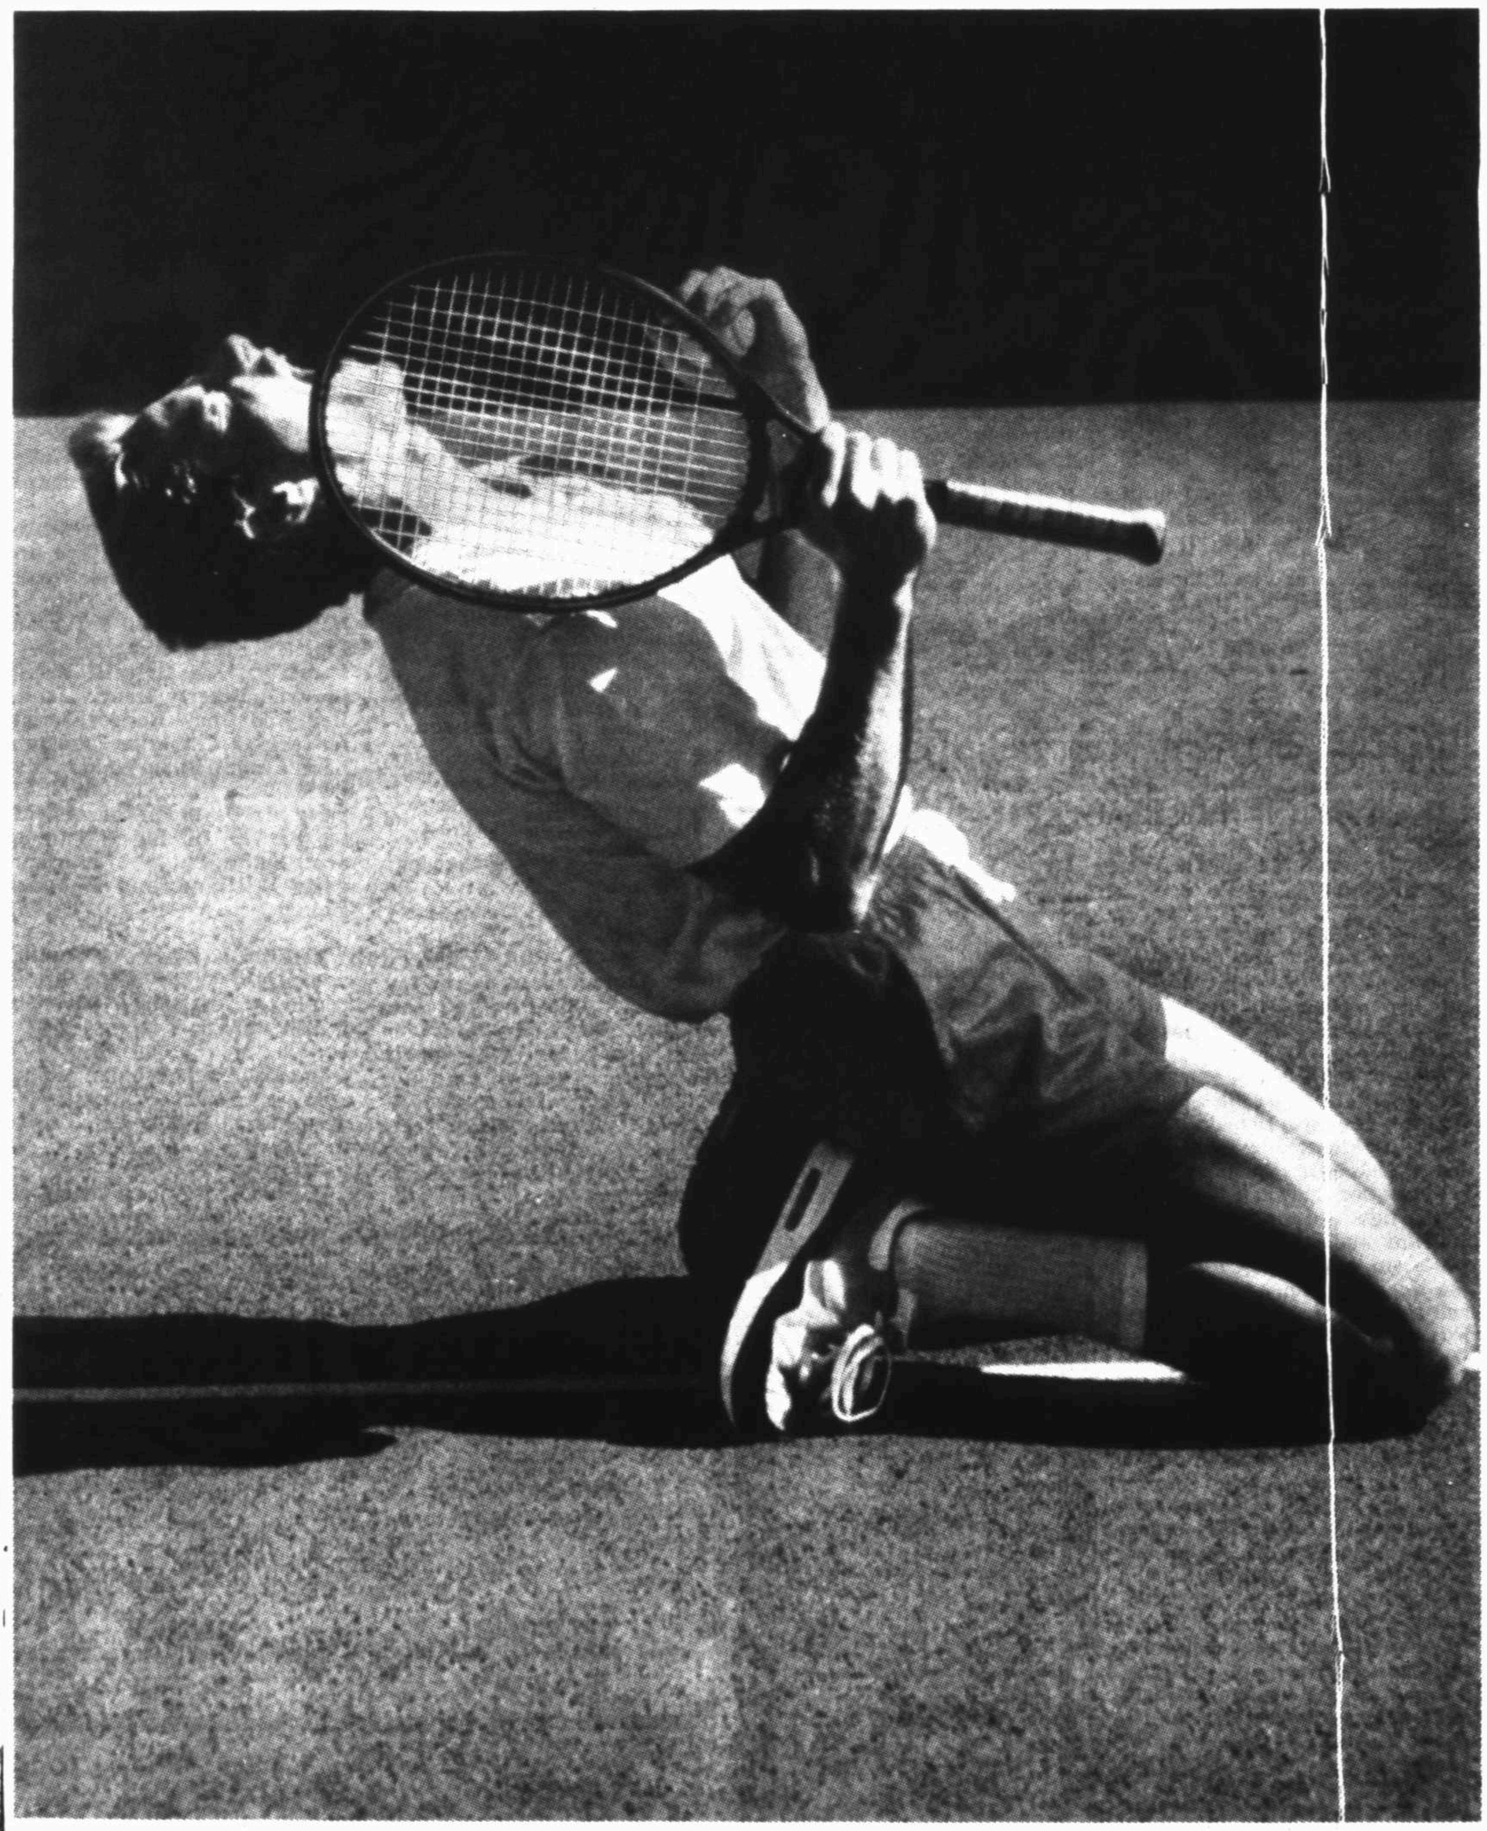

Meno said he looks forward to the job, despite uncertainty created by a recent Texas Supreme Court ruling that the state's method of funding public education is unconstitutional. The Legislature faces an April 1 deadline to devise a new plan.

"Education today in the United States, it doesn't matter where you go, you're coming into the middle of a crisis. So I think it's a question of which crisis," Meno said.

"This is a unique opportunity in a state which has diversity."

Meno won nomination on an 11-4 board vote. Voting against him were Mary Helen Berlanga of Corpus Christi, William Hudson of Wichita Falls, Rene Nunez of El Paso and Esteban Sosa of San Antonio.

Sosa and Hudson said they favored Texas candidates.

Deputies to stalk Oilers in benefit basketball game

Staff Report

Some of the players with the Houston Oilers will be in town April 13 to play a basketball game against employees of the Midland County Sheriff's Office.

And the Midland County DARE (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) will come out the winner.

This will be the third year the two teams have competed to raise funds for DARE.

Steve Skaggs, coordinator for Midland County DARE, said there was some confusion about who the game was raising money for last year. Midland County DARE and the city DARE program are separate, although the teaching criteria are the same.

The Midland County DARE program began in Jan. 1990 and is being taught to 5th graders at Greenwood Elementary and 6th graders at Word of Life Academy.

The fundraiser game will take place at Lee High School gymnasium on Saturday, April 13.

With the exception of the game, all funds for the Midland County DARE are funded from money confiscated from drug dealers during narcotics' busts, Skaggs said.

Legal secretary, death-row inmate planning to marry

HOUSTON (AP) — Carol Mazur says no other man in her life compares to convicted cop killer Carl Wayne Buntion. And despite his future death row address, she plans to marry him.

Maur grew up with Buntion, sentenced last week to death by lethal injection for the June 27 capital murder of Houston police officer James Irby. She said she loved him, but moved out of the neighborhood 20 years ago.

The 45-year-old legal secretary married and had three children, but says she was never truly happy.

"Every man I've ever known I've compared to Carl Buntion and they've always come up short," she told The Houston Post.

Mazur said she had no idea the seven-time convict had been charged with capital murder until she spied a man sitting next to her on a bus reading a newspaper story about Buntion's trial.

She got off the bus and called Buntion's lawyer, Philip Scardino. She told him she was an old friend and that she wanted to help him.

The childhood sweethearts were reunited after Mazur's brief testimony during the trial in Fredericksburg. Mazur and Buntion spent about 30 minutes deep in conversation, she said. Buntion called her as soon as he was transferred back to Harris County Jail and proposed marriage.

The lovers are star-crossed in more ways than one. Not only will they likely never live together, Buntion, 53, has yet to divorce officially his first wife.

The lovers are star-crossed in more ways than one. Not only will they likely never live together, Buntion, 53, has yet to divorce officially his first wife.

Scardino said he is filing divorce papers on Monday, as well as making certain wedding arrangements.

"I think the jail would accommodate us and find a place where they could hold hands and get married, but I don't think they'll dust off a room for them to consummate the marriage."

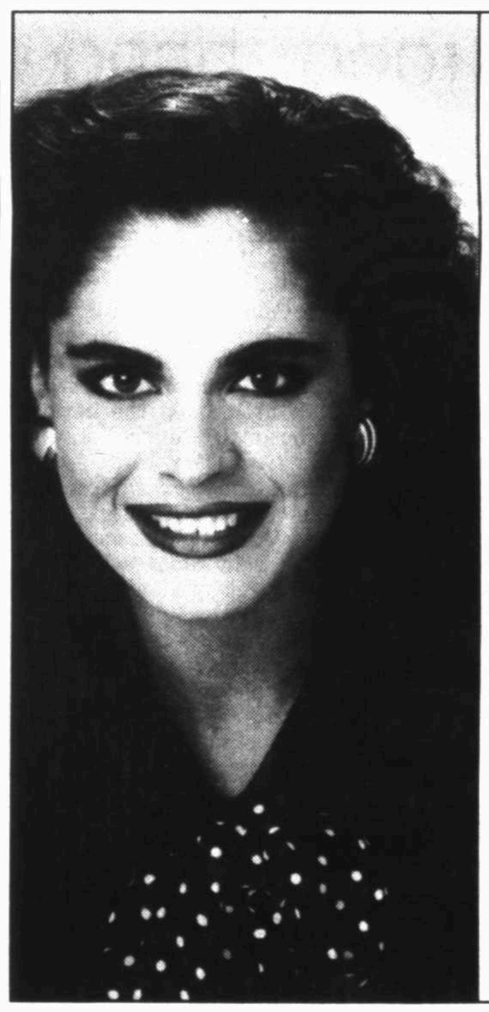

"I have shocked all of my friends," she said. "I simply told my friends this is the only man I have ever loved. Even under the circumstances, having him gives me a peaceful feeling."

But Buntion, like many grooms, occasionally has bouts of cold feet, Scardino said.

Survey: Public hospitals in crisis situation

Emergency rooms are family doctor for poor, uninsured

Philip J. Hilts
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The average emergency room wait for a bed in U.S. public hospitals is now more than five and a half hours and in the worst cases three to 10 days, the National Association of Public Hospitals said recently.

It is the first time that public hospitals around the country have been surveyed on this and other data that describe their rapidly deteriorating condition.

Public hospitals, which are those operated by cities and other government bodies, are where most of the unininsured and the poor receive care. Private nonprofit hospitals are run by churches, charitable organizations and universities while profit-seeking hospitals are owned by by private corporations.

USING DATA from a survey of 60 public hospitals completed in 1988, the study found that in 1988:

—The hospitals lost an average of $40 million to care that was not reimbursed by private insurance, Medicaid or Medicare. The hospitals receive subsidies from local governments, but even after these, their revenue fell an average of $9 million short of operating costs.

—An average of 104 cocaine-addicted babies were born in the hospitals, and the numbers were increasing.

—An average of 19,000 emergency room visits at the hospitals were drug-related, accounting for almost 30 percent of the emergency department visits.

The researchers found that the average wait for admission to a public hospital from the emergency department was 5.6 hours. The average of the longest wait at all the hospitals was 31.6 hours.

While the longest wait was 10 days, waits of three to four days were not uncommon, said Virginia B. Weslowski, director of research for public hospitals' association.

Public hospitals, which traditionally are what they association called "the nation's safety net," have never been very healthy economically, said Larry S. Gage, president of the association. But now, the situation is becoming a crisis for many more hospitals.

"No one epidemic is sufficient to bring us to this point," said Gage. "But put together AIDS and crack and teen-age pregnancy and high infant mortality and inner-city violence and you see a large systematic increase in demand on these hospitals and a tremendous increase in mostly uninsured patients presenting themselves for care."

The report said, "In spite of long waiting times, overcrowding, staff shortages and lack of adequate equipment, the number of patients using public hospital clinics continues to grow."

The survey showed that more than 50 percent of all the visits to the hospitals by patients not admitted overnight were by people without insurance, confirming the idea that public hospitals are the "family doctor" for people who have no insurance.

Dr. Arthur Kellermann, medical director of the Emergency Department of the Regional Medical Center at Memphis, Tenn., described the first wave of a problem that was present also in a large number of private and nonprofit hospitals.

DOCTORS HAVE reported anecdotally for some time that public hospitals have been hit hard by a combination of epidemics and what Kellermann called a health care "system that just doesn't work well."

The data released provide evidence to back up the anecdotes that conditions are growing worse in the hospitals, said Kellermann, who took part in the study,

The current crisis was noted in 1988 in New York City, he said, but the latest data show that the problems seen there are now occurring in hospitals around the country. "Many hospitals now are literally functioning daily and nightly as if there were a disaster or combat in the cities," Kellermann said.

The waits in the emergency departments, he said, are only the more visible parts of what is happening to hospitals in general. He said there are often long waits from the time a patient came into the hospital and the time he first saw a doctor.

"That is the least important wait, and this report doesn't measure that," Kellermann said.

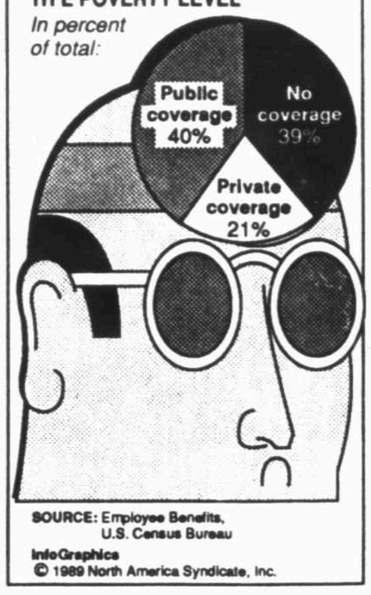

THE STUDY showed the average wait for a bed in the intensive care wards is about 3.2 hours. The maximum waits at all the hospitals averaged 18.7 hours.

U.S. poor lack health benefits

Of the 31 million Americans who live below the federal poverty level, only 61 percent have any health insurance coverage. About 40 percent of the poor are covered by public health insurance.

When the emergency rooms fill up with patients on stretchers, the survey showed that emergency departments take one or more of several measures: They refuse to accept new transfers from other hospitals, they close the emergency room to incoming ambulances and they begin to transfer patients to other hospitals.

West Texas town needs doctor to reopen hospital

Chip Brown
Associated Press Writer

AMHERST (AP) — The 900 folks living in this West Texas farming community vow that the next time a prospective doctor comes to town, it will be one heckuva house call.

The chili will be extra spicy, the chicken mesquite-grilled to perfection and the steaks lavished in hickory barbecue sauce.

Bands will twang at a town square hoedown. The schools and churches lining Amherst's weathered brick streets will be shown off.

It may be a little extreme, even for West Texas hospitality, but folks say such a reception would show only a fragment of their desire to find a doctor to reopen the town's once-flourishing hospital.

"If we could get someone to come out and visit, there is unbelievable support here," said Carol Hill, the interim administrator of Amherst's closed South Plains Hospital. "You give us a couple days notice and you wouldn't believe the response."

Amherst is not alone.

Several rural towns across the state, including Sweeny, Colorado City, Seminole and Booker are in search of a doctor. But the odds are against them, officials say.

Texas has led the nation in hospital closures for the past five years.

And the Texas Hospital Association estimates that the 193 rural hospitals in the Lone Star State will lose nearly $20 million in Medicare services in 1991.

"Because so many of the patients in rural areas are on Medicare, there isn't a whole lot of incentive to practice in small towns," said Marvin Cole, director of the rural hospital branch of the THA.

For nearly 50 years, the hospital was the town's second largest employer behind the school, a source of pride for residents and the only haven for medical care in miles of treeless farmland.

But in July 1989, the fifth of five doctors resigned from the hospital, forcing the recently rebuilt facility to shut its doors.

South Plains Hospital administrator Carol Hill pauses recently at the closed sign of the Amherst, Texas, hospital which was forced to shut down in 1989 after the fifth of five doctors resigned. South Plains, like many rural hospitals, may remain closed if this West Texas farming community can't find a new doctor.

The old South Plains Hospital was replaced for about $3 million in 1982 with a brightly stuccoed, 35-bed medical center containing the amenities of many urban facilities.

The structure stands out among the barns and grain silos in the area.

But today state-of-the-art delivery, emergency, X-ray and recovery rooms filled with shiny, new equipment are frigid because the heat has been turned off.

Eight bassinets lie empty in a darkened nursery.

And hundreds of medical records for patients who used to drive more than 50 miles to see doctors in Amherst now collect dust.

"I never dreamed it would close," said city secretary Gayla Cowan, who was born the year the hospital opened in 1940. "I guess we just all thought it would be there forever because it had always been here."

South Plains, which has continued to operate a pharmacy to pay outstanding overhead, is searching for a doctor, physician's assistant or nurse practitioner to reopen the hospital's X-ray lab and clinic.

Two or three doctors would be required to open the entire hospital.

But shortcomings in Medicare payments, rising insurance costs and sometimes days in a row "on call" have made family practitioners reluctant to practice in rural areas.

Residents here know what they are up against and have raised nearly $40,000 to reopen South Plains.

"It's going to be tough," said Clyde Brownlow, the pharmacist at South Plains for the past 22 years.

"Unless federal programs change it's going to be hard for someone to justify the move out here," he said. "But not a day goes by when someone in town doesn't ask me if we have found a doctor. The interest and support is overwhelming."

The Prospective Payment System (PPS), which was implemented by the federal government in 1983, pays rural hospitals up to 40 percent less than urban facilities for Medicare patients.

PPS was created with the belief that it cost less to run a rural facility than an urban hospital.

Gordon Russell, administrator of Hi-Plains Hospital in Hale Center and a crusader for rural health in Texas, says PPS caused 12 rural hospitals to shut down in Texas last year.

"It gives me great pain to think about how little money it would have taken to keep them open if we had an equal urban-rural ratio," Russell said. "But once the hospitals close it's almost insurmountable to get them back open again. The staff disperses, doctors leave and patients go elsewhere."

"I have said it's not bureaucracy's job to keep the hospitals open. But I remind them that it's not their job to close them either," he said.

Programs at area universities aimed to increase the number of rural doctors and some federal financial aid are steps in the right direction, officials say.

The Texas Tech Medical School provides several incentives to lure young physicians to locate in West Texas, including breaks on tuition, said Dr. Jim Chappell, associate dean of admissions and student affairs at Texas Tech University's School of Medicine.

"All other things being equal, we will give preference to a West Texan to medical school," Chappell said. "If we get somebody who was raised in Pampa, they are more likely to go back there (after graduation)."

Cole says a government program called Rural Health Clinic, which helps pick up the tab for emergency services, is just now being grasped by rural hospitals.

In order to qualify for the aid, a hospital has to be in an area that suffers a "health manpower shortage," a ratio of one doctor to 3,500 residents, Cole said.

Areas that are "medically underserved," an area with high poverty, a large population over the age of 65 and a shortage of doctors, also qualify, Cole said.

"This is an old program that is really just now realizing its advantages," Cole said. "The federal government acknowledges that it has not been advertised or marketed as well as it should.

"I believe Rural Health Clinic is the cornerstone to rebuild rural health in our communities," he said, adding that two-thirds of Texas hospitals qualify for the assistance.

Aside from federal help, small communities must continue to try and sell a doctor on their town with an extra special Texas welcome, officials say.

"One of the most critical aspects of bringing a doctor in is the support of the hospital. But as important is the support of the community," said David Johnston, senior search consultant for Merritt Hawkins, a physician placement firm based in Dallas.

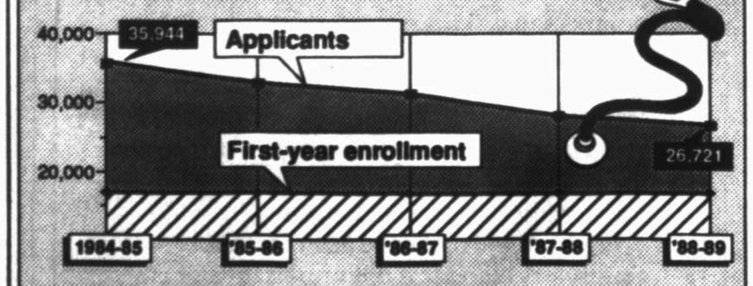

"Lack of support by the community, and I mean visual support, can hurt the chances of landing the doctor every time," said Johnston, whose firm recently placed a physician in Crosbyton, a small West Texas town outside of Lubbock, with a massive outpouring of support by local residents.

Ms. Hill in Amherst says visual and even tasty support for a prospective doctor will be no problem in her town.

"There are a lot of good cooks around here and they would love to show that off," Ms. Hill said. "I hope the doctor comes out with a big appetite. He would need it."

SMU gift-wraps one for Tech

Associated Press

LUBBOCK — Steve Miles scored a career-high 28 points and Bernard Saulsberry was hot down the stretch as Texas Tech escaped with an 80-77 double overtime victory over Southern Methodist in Southwest Conference action Saturday.

The Red Raiders appeared to have lost the game after SMU's Mike Wilson connected on two free throws with one second remaining in regulation to give the Mustangs a 61-59 lead.

But a technical foul was called on SMU's Tim Mason after he intercepted a down-the-baseline out-of-bounds pass from Tech's Brad Dale to Bryant Moore under the SMU goal.

No time elapsed from the clock and Saulsberry calmly sank both free throws to give the Raiders new life.

Texas Tech snapped a six-game conference losing streak and improved to 6-14 overall and 3-6 in SWC play. SMU fell to 9-10 and 4-5.

Tech missed a chance to end the game at the end of the first overtime as a 6-foot jump shot by Moore fell off the rim with two seconds left and the score tied 69-all.

Chad Allen led SMU scorers with 19 points. James Gatewood had 14 and Lewis 11 for the Mustangs.

SMU led 38-27 at intermission as Tech struggled through a sloppily played, cold-shooting first half highlighted by a technical foul on coach Gerald Myers.

The Red Raiders opened the second half with a 16-4 run to narrow SMU's lead to 44-43 and took their first lead of the second half, 48-46, two minutes later on two free throws by Miles.

Houston 86, Baylor 76

Houston (14-6, 6-3) has won 18 straight home games and has beaten Baylor six straight times. Baylor (9-9, 2-7) has lost nine of its last 12 games.

DENVER (AP) — Denver Nuggets rookie guard Chris Jackson has been sidelined after a heart test discovered an irregularity, but team officials said the problem does not seem serious.

Jackson

Jackson, who also suffers from the neurological disorder Tourette Syndrome, was 0-for-10 Thursday night against New Jersey — held scoreless for the first time in his pro career.

"He came out of the game and said he was dizzy and weak," coach Paul Westhead said. "But he practiced (Friday) and he seemed fine."

Bulldogs unable to fend off rookie

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

Midland High wishes the Eagles had waited a week.

In his first varsity start, Perez scored both goals to pace the Eagles to a 2-1 win over the Bulldogs in District 3 action Saturday at the MHS field.

In other District 3 matches, Midland Lee defeated Abilene Cooper 6-2 in overtime and San Angelo Central whipped Odessa High, 8-0. Odessa Permian was playing in the Austin Rebel Tournament.

Perez put the Eagles ahead in the 60th minute after receiving a crossing pass about 10 yards in front of the net from Rusty Oglesby, who had been chased into the corner by MHS right fullback Joe Hill.

"I just went and got the ball," Perez said. "It was instinct more than anything."

BIG SPRING — Just when it appeared that running back-linebacker Jermaine Miller had eliminated himself from the college recruiting push by enlisting in the Navy, the Big Spring senior is apparently back in the running for a college grid career.

HAS-BEENS AND SUPERSTARS

■ A scant week ago, Ottis Anderson, Matt Bahr and Mark Bavaro were Super Bowl heroes; today, they're ripe for the pickin'.

Associated Press

In its third year, the plan for Plan B among the smarter NFL teams has become clear:

When you make up your list in the league's limited free-agent pool, protect prospects. Leave unprotected the aging, the infirm, kickers and highly paid stars who aren't going anywhere.

PLAN B

Bahr

James and Downing, both defensive linemen taken in last April's draft, spent the entire season as injured-reserve redshirts. Brown, a cornerback, was cut by Green Bay and the Giants before being activated for the season's last four games and the playoffs.

PRO BOWL

The AFC's Kelly and Thomas are among 10 Buffalo players, most of any team, set to play in the Pro Bowl.

Kickoff time is 7 p.m. CST at Aloha Stadium.

The Bills, 20-19 losers to the Giants in the Super Bowl last Sunday, will try to finally close the books on the 1990 season with a victory over the NFC in the NFL's annual all-star game.

Kelly, who was relegated to the sidelines for much of the Super Bowl by the Giants' time-consumming offense, is scheduled to share playing time at quarterback for the AFC with starter Warren Moon of Houston.

However, Kelly said he might not be able to play much because he took a couple of hits on his ailing left knee in the

For the children of U.S. servicemen stationed in the Persian Gulf, playing basketball doesn't change that fact. Stepping on court may move the crisis from the front to the back of their minds, but the worry and the wonder don't go away.

■ Iraqi cager in Humble deals with conflict on, off court/5C

"I've dedicated myself to that after having a talk with my grandma," said Cooper. "I look at the news and get depressed, so I just try to play my best in basketball."

'He called me a couple of days ago and told me to carry on with life. I'll keep on playing because that's what my dad wants me to do.'

— Chris Taylor
Copperas Cove basketball player

It seems to work. Cooper, who scored 10 points in a recent game against arch rival Killeen, is starting to blossom as a player, says his coach, Billy Gillispie, despite the extra pressure of having a father involved in a foreign conflict.

In fact, it doesn't seem to be adversely affecting any of the players on the local high school basketball teams. Killeen's boys and girls are leading District 13-5A; the Copperas Cove girls are second in the league, Ellison's boys upset Round Rock a day after the fighting began and are playing, perhaps, their best basketball of the season right now. Copperas Cove's boys beat Pflugerville, 73-45, after having played Killeen close only two nights before.

Still, they are thinking of faraway events.

"It's hard to keep your intensity on basketball," said Marcie Atkins, the Ellison Lady Eagles' leading scorer this season. "You try to focus on basketball only but you can't help thinking about it."

Atkins' father, Ricky Mackey, is a specialist with the 2nd Armored Division in Saudi Arabia, and has been in the Middle East since the beginning of the basketball season.

"I'm more scared now," said Atkins. "I used to worry about him but at least I knew he was all right then. Now I don't know what to think."

Copperas Cove's Aaron Brown says his father has written to him with some advice that he is following.

"He told me to get an education and keep on playing," said Brown, whose father, Jesse Brown, is with the 1st Cavalry Division. "He told me to keep my head

'DOGS: MHS loss its first in district play

(From 1C)

Both teams had trouble getting untracked offensively. Abilene High didn't take a shot on goal until the 25th minute, while Midland High was unable to challenge AHS keeper Thomas Cotton until the 28th minute.

But the Bulldogs made good on their second shot of the afternoon. Senior center forward Steve Canon took over the team scoring lead by banging the ball past Cotten in the 34th minute, his fourth goal of the season. Canon, a part-time soccer player until basketball season is over, was making his first start of the season.

Abilene High coach Randy Allen said he was preparing a halftime harangue until several of his players pointed out that they knew where they were going wrong.

"We didn't play well against (Abilene) Cooper (in Tuesday's district opener). "And we knew we'd have to play well to beat Midland."

Midland High had several chances to tie after Perez did his damage, but the Bulldogs couldn't get anything past Cotten despite several serious chances off indirect free kicks taken well into Eagle territory.

MHS coach Tom Esikhati said the Bulldogs' intensity picked up in the last 15 minutes.

"The intensity was not there (before)," Esikhati said. "We lacked the intensity we needed for a district match."

MHS, 4-2-1 overall and 0-1-1 in district play, visits winless Odessa High on Tuesday. Abilene High, 7-3 and 1-1, faces district favorite San Angelo Central.

Lee pounds Cooper in OT

Staff Report

ABILENE — Midland Lee scored four overtime goals here Saturday to take a 6-2 District 3 soccer match over Abilene Cooper.

The win makes Lee's record 4-1-1 overall and 1-0-1 in district play.

The Rebels outscored the Cougars 4-0 in the two overtime periods. After Jordan Reed assisted Matt Perkins on Lee's first goal and Chris Murray scored unassisted, the end of regulation play saw the score tied at 2-2.

Then in the first overtime Reed scored an unassisted goal and Greg Pepper knocked a penalty kick into the net to give the Rebels a 4-2 edge as the second overtime began.

In the second OT, Todd meade scored his first goal of the season on a penalty kick, and Murray netted his second goal of the game as Pepper assisted him on the last score of the contest.

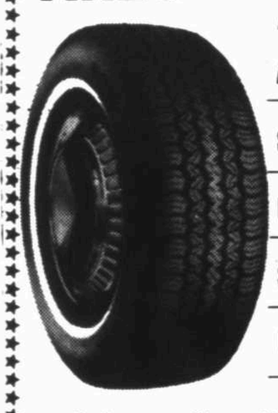

"Everybody played super, and we got a great deal of leadership. They went out and took it. After it got tied they felt like they should take that game and that was good to see," said Lee coach Eddie Bull.

The Rebels will back in action Tuesday, as they host Odessa Permian at 4 p.m. at the Lee field.

No. 2 Arkansas 100, Rice 87

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Oliver Miller scored three baskets during an 18-0 run and his Arkansas teammates contributed free throws in the closing minutes as the second-ranked Razorbacks held off Southwest Conference foe Rice 100-87 Saturday night.

The Razorbacks' run started in the final minutes of the first half and continued into the opening minutes of the second half, building a 41-38 lead to 59-38.

The margin fluctuated between 16 points to 20 points until a 3-point play by Rice's Chase Maag cut it to 83-69 with five minutes left.

After Marvin Moore's 15-footer made it 90-80 about two minutes left, Ron Huery and Todd Day each hit two free throws for Arkansas (21-1 overall, 8-0 SWC).

Mediate gains lead at Pebble Beach Pro-Am

Associated Press

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Calm, cool and collected Rocco Mediate took the lead and an exercized Paul Azinger took his shot at Poppy Hills.

Azinger lost three strokes to par — and his lead in the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am — on the first two holes of the controversial course that is making its initial appearance in this tournament.

"I don't want to get fined," Azinger said Saturday when asked for his assessment of the 4-year-old public course that replaced Cypress Point in the three-course rotation for this unique event.

Then Azinger, rarely critical of anything, reconsidered.

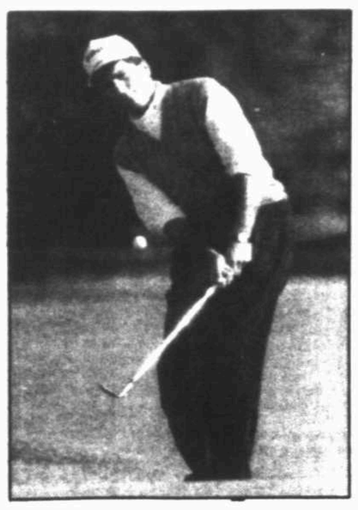

"Let's just put it this way: the best hole on the course definitely is the 19th," he said, offered a wry smile and added:

"That ought to be worth $500."

While Azinger was going from water to sand and, eventually, to a 1-over-par 73 at Poppy Hills, Mediate used a fast finish — eagle, birdie, par — at Spyglass Hill for a 69 and a one-shot lead with 18 holes to go.

Mediate, not yet a winner in six seasons on the PGA Tour, completed one round on each of the three Monterey Peninsula courses in 205, 11 under par.

And he did it with a composure the bubbly, enthusiastic young man had never shown before when he found himself in title contention.

Rocco Mediate

"I'm more comfortable now," Mediate said. "Sure, I'll be nervous (in Sunday's final 18 holes at Pebble Beach), but so will everyone else. I feel like I can handle that now.

"I've just got to go out and do what I'm supposed to do on my favorite golf course in the whole world. I know I can do it. I've just got to get it done."

Player's birds pave way at Caribbean

Associated Press

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — Gary Player birdied three consecutive holes on the back nine and shot a 6-under-par 65 Saturday for a 2-stroke lead after two rounds of the Senior Tour's Royal Caribbean Classic.

Player was at 10-under 132. Chi Chi Rodriguez, who shared the first-round lead with Bruce Crampton, shot a 68 and was in second place at 8 under.

Al Geiberger birdied four of the final five holes for a 65, leaving him in third place with a 135 total.

Alkhazali

By SUSAN FAHLGREN
Associated Press Writer

HUMBLE — Two weeks ago, Matt Alkhazali was an ordinary high school student who started on the basketball team. Now the Iraqi-born youth finds himself caught between two warring worlds.

Although Alkhazali has lived in the United States since he was 9 years old, the Persian Gulf War has complicated his life.

Normally, high school basketball games get very little media coverage. But on Friday night, three Houston TV crews and several local reporters showed up to watch Alkhazali's Humble High team play arch-rival Kingwood.

If they were expecting something sensational, they went away disappointed.

There were a few shouts of "USA, USA, USA" when Alkhazali went to the free throw line, but Kingwood fans said they were just trying to disturb the opposition.

"I have nothing against Arabic people. We just say things to people to make the other person mess up," said Kingwood senior Tate Zyroll. "The Humble players were jeering one of our black players too. But that's just the home-court advantage."

Another Kingwood student, Scott Porter, said Alkhazali was fair game for heckling.

"Everyone's taking it out on him a little bit more, but his relatives are the ones we're at war with, so it's only natural," Porter said.

Alkhazali's nationality didn't become generally known until this week and he's kept most of his concerns about the war to himself. Most of his family now lives here, but some relatives remain in Baghdad.

"It's been rough on my family," Alkhazali said. "My mom's brother is still there but most of my family is here."

Alkhazali was hesitant to talk about his family. He said his father came here because of his work. Alkhazali says he considers himself an American and has war concerns like any student.

"Basketball is about the only thing I've got going for me, and school," he said. "I play four hours per day so I don't have a lot of time to think about anything else.

"When I watch it on the news, I worry about it. I think they should have a cease fire."

Kingwood players wore yellow ribbons on their jerseys to show support for the U.S. troops, but there was little reference to the war or to Alkhazali's heritage.

"We are good friends; we just don't talk about that (war)," said Humble student John Sayer. "There's a lot of hatred for Iraq, but we shouldn't be taking it out on civilians."

up, both for myself and for him.

"I worry about him because we're the closest of any members of my family," said Aaron.

Copperas Cove has numerous players with family involved in the war. At least one member of the Cove girls team has a relative on active duty in Saudi Arabia.

"He called me a couple of days ago and told me to carry on with life. I'll keep on playing because that's what my dad wants me to do."

Cove's Alphonso Jacobs, whose father is Staff Sgt. Alton Davis, says, "I'll try to do the best I can but sometimes it gets me down. I try to keep my mind on the game and not think about what can happen to him."

Jose Gonzales has a brother-in-law, Pfc. George Quiles of the 2nd Armored Division, who is stationed in Saudi Arabia.

"I just hope it happens quick and (they can) get it over with," said Gonzales.

"It's on my mind a lot and sometimes I'm real scared. Any time I hear something about Iraq I think about him and wonder how he's doing.

"I hope he makes it back with a lot of the other fellows."

The Killeen girls' program has no players on the varsity or junior varsity with relatives in the Middle East but there are two varsity players who know that could change any day.

Kym Burns, a junior, must worry about her stepfather being called overseas. Michael B. Sleight, an E-6 Apache crew chief mechanic with the 1st Battalion of the 6th Cavalry, is currently stationed at Fort Hood but is always liable to be called over to the Middle East.

"It's not a problem right now," said Burns.

"Of course, he's on alert. He has his bags packed at home right now, ready to go. It really does get to you. Every time I go home, I have to wonder if my dad's going to be there or if I'm going to hear he's been sent overseas. But when I go out on the court, I know I have to put it out of my mind. That's what makes you a good person, to be able to know how to concentrate on what you have to."

Kim Evans, also a junior, says her dad, Tommy Evans, is recently retired after serving at Fort Hood but is also subject to being called.

"It worries me to know that any day my dad could be called up," said Evans.

"Sometimes I just have to set aside some time to be by myself. I pray the night before a game and then just go out and play basketball."

In January, Ellison's boys lost starter Bennie Powe, who moved with his mother to be with relatives in Alabama. His father, poised for combat in Saudi Arabia, wanted the family to be closer together.

MILLER: 'Naval officer material'

(From 1C)

recruiters are due to arrive in Big Spring later this week to interview the 6-foot-3, 200-pound Miller, who was a two-way District 4-4A all-star for the area finalist Steers.

Butler, who was the Steers' defensive coordinator for three seasons before being promoted last month, feels that Miller has the personality traits needed by a naval officer.

"He's always been able to make up his own mind," Butler said. "Peer pressure hasn't ever bothered him.

"I just think if he really wants to be involved in the military and gets a chance to get a college education, he can kill two birds with one stone," Butler said.

Miller is an honor student in a college preparatory curriculum at Big Spring. He is retaking the American College Test next Saturday in an effort to meet NCAA academic requirements.

Miller scored a 17 on his first try at the ACT, one point below the NCAA minimum, but Butler said it wasn't for lack of knowledge.

"He didn't really know how to take it," the coach said. "He said that he just went through and answered the ones he knew and left the rest blank — and you can't do that."

Miller rushed for more than 1,000 yards as a senior despite missing two games and was also a standout at outside linebacker. He was unavailable for comment Saturday.

Rockets repel Spurs in OT

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Otis Thorpe scored eight of his 30 points in overtime as the Houston Rockets held off San Antonio 100-94, handing the Spurs their first overtime loss in four games.

The Spurs received a big blow before the game when Rod Strickland was placed on the injury list. Strickland broke his right hand during an altercation at a local San Antonio night club following the Spurs' victory over Chicago Thursday night.

Thorpe, who grabbed 17 rebounds, scored Houston's first two baskets of the extra period, giving the Rockets a 94-91 lead. San Antonio answered with a jumper from Willie Anderson with 2:44 remaining, cutting the Rockets' lead to 94-93.

But Thorpe responded with consecutive layups, giving the Rockets a 5-point lead on their way to handing San Antonio only its fourth loss in 22 home games.

Knicks 92, Kings 78

NEW YORK — Gerald Wilkins scored 12 of his 16 points in a span of 4:41 in the third quarter as the New York Knicks handed the Sacramento Kings a franchise-record 18th consecutive road loss.

The Knicks won for only the second time in six games despite the absence of leading scorer Patrick Ewing because of the flu. Kiki Vandeweghe led New York with 19 points, all in the first half, and Charles Oakley grabbed 18 rebounds.

With a loss, the Knicks would have matched Miami with the worst home record in the NBA. Instead, the Knicks dropped Sacramento's road record to 1-21.

NBA

Cavaliers 113, Wolves 110

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Larry Nance sent the game into overtime with a last-minute steal and a dunk, then scored five points in the extra period as the Cleveland Cavaliers beat Minnesota.

Nance's heroics overcame a 28-point performance by Minnesota's Tony Campbell, who returned from a five-game layoff and hit two desperate 3-pointers in the final 10 seconds of overtime. Campbell had one last shot at tying it, but his 3-pointer bounced off the rim.

Magic 108, Heat 98

ORLANDO, Fla. — Scott Skiles broke out of a shooting slump with 27 points and the Orlando Magic hit 14 of 15 free throws in the fourth quarter to pull away to a victory over the Miami Heat.

Pacers 106, SuperSonics 100

INDIANAPOLIS — Micheal Williams and Detlef Schrempf, who was ejected for fighting with Seattle's Gary Payton, scored 29 points apiece as the Indiana Pacers defeated the Supersonics.

Jazz 111, Nets 103

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone scored 32 points and John Stockton had 26 points and 13 assists as Utah handed New Jersey its fourth straight loss.

Nuggets 126, Hawks 125

DENVER — Michael Adams, despite making only eight of 31 shots, scored 31 points and had 16 assists, leading the resurgent Denver Nuggets to their sixth consecutive victory.

Carnesecca gets 500th win

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Lou Carnesecca got his 500th coaching victory as Jason Buchanan scored 26 points to lead No. 5 St. John's over 25th-ranked Seton Hall.

Top 25

Carnesecca

Carnesecca, 66, became the 30th coach with at least five years in Division I to reach the 500 mark, and he was 10th fastest to reach it, needing 683 games.

Carnesecca, who was given a reluctant ride off the court on his players' shoulders, got all the victories with the Redmen, getting No. 1 on Dec. 4, 1965, in overtime against Georgetown. This was his second shot at No. 500; the Redmen lost at Georgetown on Wednesday night.

St. John's (16-3, 7-3) led virtually all the way in the Big East matchup, turning a 20-16 advantage into a 29-16 lead with 6:28 left on a basket by Billy Singleton.

Seton Hall (13-6, 5-5) closed to 34-29 at halftime despite leading scorer Terry Dehere playing just 5 minutes because of foul trouble.

No. 6 Arizona 85, Washington 56

TUCSON, Ariz. — Khalid Reeves scored 15 points and No. 6 Arizona used a tenacious defense to beat Washington and extend the nation's longest home winning streak to 58 games.

Arizona (18-3) stayed on top of the Pacific-10 Conference at 7-2 and repaid the Huskies (12-7, 3-6) for an earlier 70-56 loss.

The Wildcats used a pressing, man-to-man defense to break the game open after a 16-16 tie with 8:40 left in the first half. Arizona led 40-23 at halftime and made it 65-32 on a layup by Sean Rooks with 11:43 remaining.

No. 7 Duke 90, Notre Dame 77

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Christian Laettner scored six of his game-high 20 points in a 16-point first-half run as No. 7 Duke beat Notre Dame.

Notre Dame (8-13) trailed by as many as 23 points and made only one-third of its field-goal attempts. The Fighting Irish pulled within 10 with 1:46 left on a 3-point goal by Elmer Bennett, who led Notre Dame with 19 points. But Duke (18-4) made 9 of 12 free throws after that to stay ahead.

Bill McCaffrey scored 18 points for Duke, and Kevin Ellery scored 18 for Notre Dame.

It was the second victory this season for the Blue Devils over Notre Dame. Duke beat the Irish 85-77 in the preseason NIT.

No. 8 Syracuse 99
Boston College 87

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Junior Billy Owens matched his career high with 36 points as eighth-ranked Syracuse celebrated its return home with a victory over Boston College in the Big East.

Road-weary Syracuse broke open the game at the start of the second half. Owens scored 14 points during a 16-7 run that put the Orangemen ahead 66-42 with 14:09 to play.

By beating Boston College (10-10 and 1-7) for the 13th time in their last 14 meetings, Syracuse (19-3 and 7-3) kept pace with St. John's at the top of the Big East standings. St. John's defeated Seton Hall 81-65 earlier Saturday.

It was only the second time in Syracuse's last six wins that its margin of victory was greater than two points. The Orangemen, who edged Connecticut and Georgetown and lost to Providence on a three-game road trip, won by 14 against Seton Hall last month.

Oklahoma St. 81
No. 11 Nebraska 68

LINCOLN, Neb. — Darwyn Alexander scored 18 points, including 11 in the last three minutes, as Oklahoma State upset the No. 11 Cornhuskers in a rough Big Eight game.

Oklahoma State (15-4, 4-2) outrebounded the Cornhuskers 40-27 and held Nebraska to 43 percent shooting. The Cowboys made 53 percent of their shots, including 7-for-10 on 3-pointers.

A scuffle broke out near the end of the first half. Nebraska guard Jose Ramos was ejected for leaving the bench as he tried to join the fight, but was held back by a Nebraska public relations official.

Byron Houston scored 22 points for Oklahoma State. Carl Hayes scored 14 for Nebraska (18-4, 4-2).

No. 12 UCLA 112, No. 19 Pitt 85

LOS ANGELES — Don McLean atoned for his worst game of the season with 39 points and Tracy Murray scored 29 as No. 12 UCLA took a 20-2 lead and romped over No. 19 Pitt.

McLean, held to a season-low 11 points in UCLA's 76-74 loss to Southern Cal, scored eight points in the first 4:53 as the Bruins (16-5) took an 18-point lead before Pitt scored its second basket.

UCLA, averaging 97 points per game, led 90-57 with 10:39 to play over Pitt (15-7). The Bruins broke the 100-point mark for the sixth time this season on McLean's baseline jumper with 5:42 remaining.

Pittsburgh lost its third in a row and its fourth in five games. UCLA had lost four of its previous six.

New Mexico 68, No. 13 Utah 62

ALBUQUERQUE — Luc Longley scored 17 points and reserve Jimmy Taylor added 10 in the final three minutes as New Mexico beat No. 13 Utah and ended the Utes' school-record 17-game winning streak.

New Mexico, which took control with an 18-2 second-half run, has won five straight. Utah (20-2, 9-1 Western Athletic Conference) had not lost since falling to Michigan on Dec. 1.

Vanderbilt 63, No. 14 LSU 59

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Scott Draud hit four technical foul shots with four seconds remaining to spoil a comeback by LSU and give Vanderbilt a victory over the No. 14 Tigers.

Draud's free throws came after teammate Steve Grant had missed a pair of free throws when he was fouled by LSU center Shaquille O'Neal, who drew a technical when he protested the call. LSU coach Dale Brown also was hit with a technical foul for protesting the call on O'Neal.

No. 15 Virginia 83
Wake Forest 80

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Bryant Stith scored 31 points, John Crotty added 24 and No. 15 Virginia held off a final-minute surge by Wake Forest for a victory in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Kenny Turner added 10 points, all in the second half, as Virginia (16-4, 5-2) won its fifth straight and beat the Demon Deacons for the 10th time in 11 meetings. Chris King scored 26 points for Wake Forest (10-7, 3-4).

No. 16 E. Tennessee St. 94
Appalachian St. 78

BOONE, N.C. — Keith "Mister" Jennings set a Southern Conference record with 19 assists, and 16th-ranked East Tennessee State hit 14 three-pointers to defeat Appalachian State.

No. 17 Southern Miss. 77
Louisville 66

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Daron Jenkins scored 25 points and Clarence Weatherspoon added 24 as No. 17 Southern Mississippi beat Louisville in the Metro Conference.

Southern swept Louisville (7-11, 1-7) in a season for the ever. The Golden Eagles (14-2, 7-1) last month won 84-81 for their first-ever victory at Freedom Hall in Louisville.

The Golden Eagles also won for the 18th time in 20 home games.

No. 21 Oklahoma 95, Missouri 87

NORMAN, Okla. — Terry Evans scored 25 points, including a critical 3-pointer in the final minute, as No. 21 Oklahoma ended a three-game losing streak with a Big Eight victory over Missouri.

The Sooners (15-6, 4-3) led by 13 in the second half but had to hang on to beat the Tigers (12-7, 4-3), who got 38 points and 15 rebounds from Doug Smith.

No. 24 Kansas 85, Iowa St. 78

AMES, Iowa — Mark Randall matched his season high with 30 points and No. 24 Kansas weathered two Iowa State comebacks in the second half to win its sixth straight game.

Iowa State had upset No. 21 Oklahoma three days earlier, but the Cyclones couldn't recover from a 14-point lead that Kansas built in the first half of the Big Eight game despite Victor Alexander's season-high 33 points.

No. 22 New Orleans 69
SW Louisiana 60

NEW ORLEANS — Tank Collins scored seven points in the final two minutes to clinch No. 22 New Orleans' 69-60 American South Conference victory.

Collins had 19 points for New Orleans. Dwight Myvett and Melvin Simon had 17 apiece.

(From 1C)

"Most of the teams have pretty much developed the same forumla," said George Young, the Giants' general manager. "You save your young guys and your big guys. You take chances with guys in positions you can replenish."

The plan was instituted three years ago as part of the NFL's way of fighting a series of antitrust suits filed by individual players and the players union. It allows each team to protect 37 players, with the rest becoming free agents who revert back to their original teams if they don't sign with someone else by April 1.

This year more than ever, the emphasis was on youth.

As a result, this year's list of 518 unprotected players looked like an All-Pro team of the past decade — except for offensive linemen, the "big guys" Young is talking about.

Among the unprotected were Anderson, Bavaro and Dave Duerson of the Giants; Ronnie Lott and Roger Craig of San Francisco; Deron Cherry and Mike Webster of Kansas City; James Lofton of Buffalo; Tim Krumrie of Cincinnati; Raymond Clayborn of Cleveland; Steve Grogan of New England; Eugene Lockhart, Dallas' leading tackler the last two seasons; Russ Grimm, Kelvin Bryant and Mark May of Washington; and Eddie Murray of Detroit and Pat Leahy of the New York Jets, two of the league's premier kickers of all-time.

Also unprotected was Scott Norwood of Buffalo, who missed the 47-yard field goal in the final four seconds that would have beaten the Giants in last Sunday's title game. But Norwood had just signed a new contract, and like many of the other unprotected players, doesn't appear to be going anywhere.

"Some players have come to me and said, 'Coach, you don't have to protect me. I'm going to be here,'" said Buffalo coach Marv Levy. "Protect someone else so this team will stay together."

The same applies to Leahy, who will be 40 in March.

"Pat Leahy has signed a multi-year contract and wants to finish his career here," said Jets general manager Dick Steinberg. "We want him to finish his career here and he doesn't feel like shopping his services around."

"I'd be insulted if I wasn't on Plan B," said Anderson, who at 33 is the league's oldest running back and has never had an offer although he's also been left unprotected the first two years of the plan.

Lott, Craig and linebacker Matt Millen, along with utility back Harry Sydney and safety Dave Waymer of the 49ers, were among the unprotected — but they also aren't likely to go anywhere. Despite two Super Bowl victories, San Francisco has lost only three players in two years and one of them, safety-linebacker Greg Cox, returned last year after spending a year with the Giants.

"We are of the opinion that most of the players not protected will be with the 49ers in 1991," vice president John McVay said.

Other teams took advantage of the five-day trading period insy around Plan B.

The Jets, for example, picked up two offensive tackles to replenish their weak line — Ron Mattes from Seattle and Irv Eatman from Kansas City. Had they had to bid for them as unprotected free agents, the price would go up and they would have had competition.

Three days after the Detroit Lions parted company with Mouse Davis, guru of the run-and-shoot offense, they left unprotected Richard Johnson, their leading receiver the past two years. Johnson, who is 5-foot-6 and considered unsuited to basic offenses, caught 70 passes in 1989 and 64 last season after working for IBM following a successful career with the run-and-shoot Houston Gamblers of the USFL.

BEST: Montana misses another Pro Bowl because of injury

(From 1C)

Super Bowl. He had missed the final two games of the regular season after hurting the knee in a game against the Giants on Dec. 15.

"I'll play if I'm able," said Kelly, who led the league in passing efficiency this season with a rating of 101.2.

In addition to Kelly and Thomas, who rushed for 135 yards and caught passes for 55 more yards in the Super Bowl, the Bills' Pro Bowl contingent includes wide receiver Andre Reed, offensive tackle Will Wolford, center Kent Hull, defensive tackle Bruce Smith, linebackers Cornelius Bennett, Shane Conlan and Darryl Talley, plus special teams player Steve Tasker.

The NFC quarterbacks are Randall Cunningham of the Eagles and Jim Everett of the Rams. Everett is filling in for Joe Montana of the 49ers, who can not play because of a hand injury he suffered in the conference playoff loss to the Giants.

Last year, Montana, Denver's John Elway and Cincinnati's Boomer Esiason all missed the game because of injuries, and Green Bay's Don Majkowski didn't come to Honolulu because his contract with the Packers had expired and he apparently didn't want to take a chance of getting hurt in the all-star game.

Quarterbacks who play in the Pro Bowl generally consider themselves at risk because they have the NFL's best pass rushers coming at them.

The defense is limited by a couple of special rules for the Pro Bowl, and this year, a new rule will allow the quarterbacks to throw the ball away without being penalized for intentional grounding so long as the pass goes beyond the line of scrimmage.

Other rules limit blitzing and the type of coverages the defensive secondary can use.

Art Shell and his Raiders staff coach the AFC all-stars, and George Seifert and the 49ers staff coach the NFC.

The NFC has won the last two Pro Bowl games, including a 27-21 victory a year ago.

Players on the winning team receive $10,000 each, with the losers getting $5,000 apiece.

INCREDIBLE Interior

By JILL HANCOCK

The layout of this week's featured home makes it perfect for a family with school age children or teenagers who desire privacy or for out-of-town guests who visit frequently. The island kitchen opens into a large breakfast area, serving as the heart of this five-bedroom home. Two living areas, one formal and the other informal, are situated on each side of the kitchen and breakfast room.

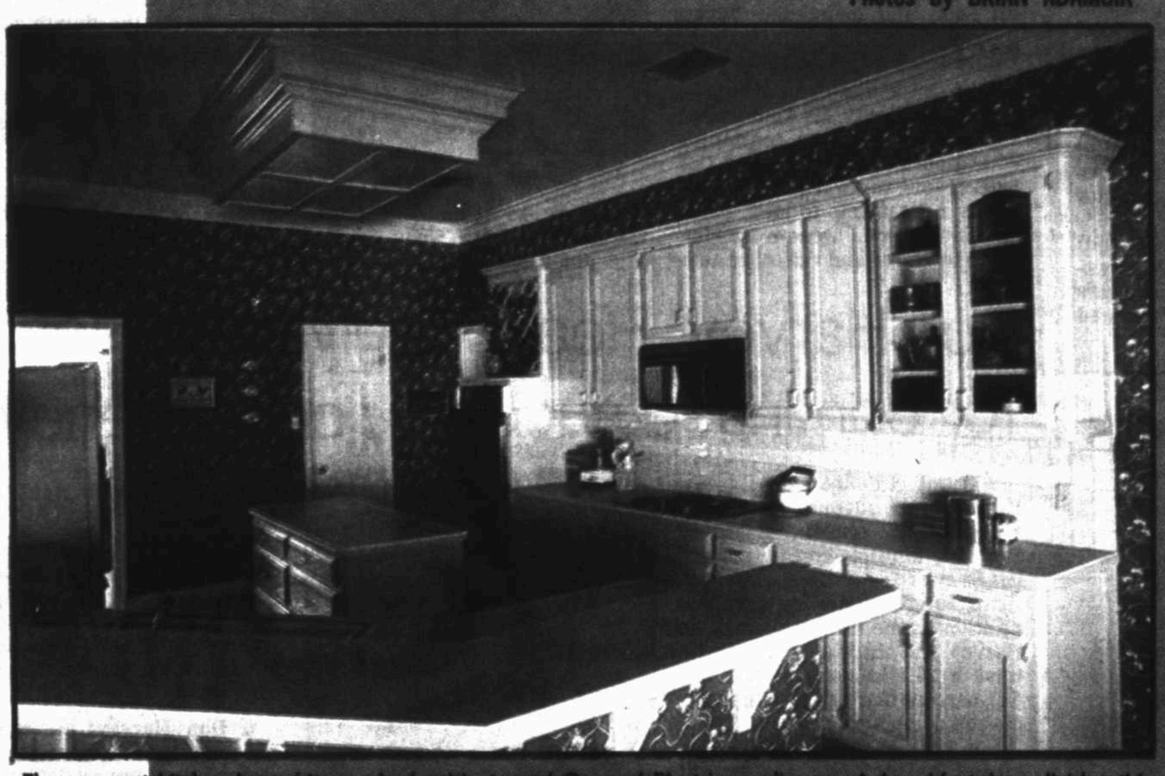

This five-bedroom home is located in the Briarwood subdivision in northwest Midland. The entrance to the home is highlighted by a leaded inlay of glass with matching side panels. A grass cloth paper in shades of taupe and blue adorn the foyer walls. A brass light fixture descends from the tiered ceiling which is lined with moulding. The tile floor helps to preserve the lush carpeting because it serves as the perfect flooring for the high-traffic areas.

The gourmet kitchen has white washed cabinets and General Electric appliances. A breakfast bar divides this area from the breakfast room.

An angled wall in the breakfast room has two windows which frame the back yard.

The foyer opens into the formal living room. A fireplace is centered along the back wall. It has a beautifully carved mantle and plantation shuttered windows are situated on each side. A bookcase is inset along the left wall. This spacious room is ideal for entertaining guests, as well as providing an intimate sitting area in front of the fireplace. Crown moulding lines the tall ceiling.

The tile flooring turns to the left and extends into the kitchen. An opening to the left of the fireplace also opens into the breakfast room and kitchen. A stylish wallpaper, which is accented by shades of mauves and blues, adorns the walls in this area. A border is placed along the ceiling.

The kitchen is planned around an island. It features white wash cabinets and General Electric appliances which include a double, self-cleaning oven, a cooktop with European burners, Spacesaver microwave and dishwasher. The kitchen is filled with storage cabinets and a large pantry adds additional space for food storage. The sink is placed next to the angled breakfast bar which divides the kitchen and breakfast room. It can accommodate four bar stools.

Two windows are placed along an angled breakfast room wall, providing a great view of the covered patio and large back yard. A glass door opens onto the patio.

The tile flooring which leads to the kitchen extends into a private wing for guests or older children.

INTERIOR: Sequestered wings provide ample privacy, room for family members

(From 1D)

The two bedrooms feature tall shuttered windows which view the front yard. Both have customized walk-in closets and access to a full bath. The bath has a marble vanity. A framed mirror reflects the vaulted beamed ceiling and gorgeous light fixtures. A floral border is placed along the middle of the wall, adding a touch of color.

A stained cabinet with bookshelves is built-in along one wall. A window frames the side yard. A roomy closet provides additional storage space. A second door leads to the kitchen and breakfast room.

A half-bath and the laundry room are located next to the breakfast room. The bath has a free standing sink and the walls are papered in a pattern which complements the one in the kitchen area. The laundry room has a stainless steel sink, a skylight and space for a freezer. It opens into a huge rear-entry, six-car garage which is ideal for parking everything from an antique car to a boat.

The tile flooring extends to the right of the living room to the home's other three bedrooms. Two of these bedrooms are ideal for school age children. Each have tall windows, walk-in closets with shelves and are connected by a full bath. The bath has a double sink marble vanity, a bathtub and a linen closet. A wallpaper border is placed at mid-wall.

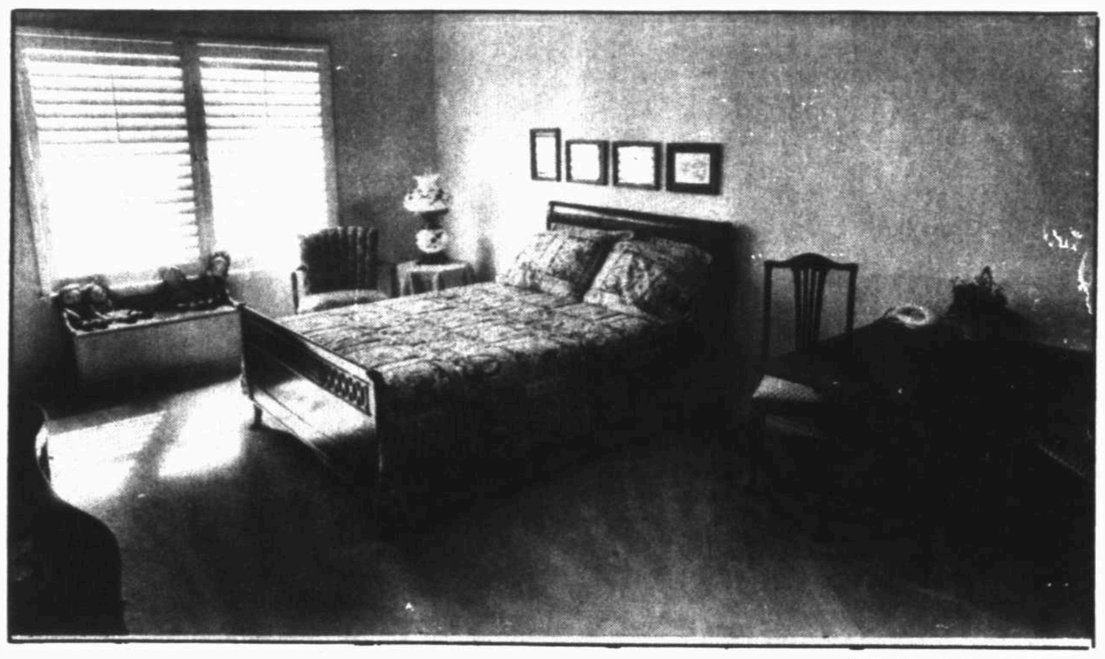

The master bedroom is situated at the end of the hall. It can easily accommodate a sitting area. Two tall windows frame a side yard and a third window views the back yard. A cathedral ceiling makes this area seem even larger. Double doors open into a wonderful master bath. The bath has two separate marble vanities. One has a make-up area and a transom window above the mirror. A shower is inset in one corner and a marble tub is placed below a frosted arched window. Mirrored doors open to reveal a well-arranged, walk-in closet. The master bath walls also feature a blue, white and mauve floral paper.

This great family home contains over 3,700 square feet and is just over a year old. The other amenities include an intercom system, alarm system and sprinkler system. Don Harvey, Realtors is offering this home for $220,000.

Chaparral, Realtors announces new centralized location

Chaparral, Realtors chose a new location for one very important reason — easier access for our customers and clients. Chaparral, Realtors has been a top notch real estate firm for 13 years, offering a select team of residential specialists. Our track record for servicing Midlanders, as well as new transferees, speaks for itself. We are now located at 911 N. Midkiff.

We are additionally excited with our beautiful building. The sitting area even offers customers waiting for their Realtor a cozy fireplace. We feel that dedication and service is what has maintained market leadership along with an incredible reputation for reliability and results. We feel the market is moving and we intend to be an integral part of the momentum.

One way in which Chaparral, Realtors is contributing a postive factor in the Midland real estate market is by promoting the Saddle Club Ranch Estates. This subdivision consists of 2½ acre lots which provide homeowners a serene surroundings, but with easy access to Midland. During the last quarter of 1990, three custom homes in excess of 3,000 square feet each have begun construction in Saddle Club Estates.

This highly restricted home site area is one of the few subdivisions where a family can have an executive home in the country, but is situated just minutes from the hospital or downtown. We offer a complete package for any one who is interested in obtaining more information on the availability of water and building restrictions. We are really seeing a renewed interest in this country property. The price of the 2½ acre lots begin at $15,000. Our package also has a price list and location of the lots which are available.

Chaparral, Realtors invites everyone to come by 911 N. Midkiff and see their new offices or call 686-7000 for more information about the Saddle Club Ranch Estates. The associates of Chaparral are ready to assist Midlanders with any of their real estate needs.

Chaparral, Realtors is now located at 911 N. Midkiff. Norma Pine feels that this centralized location provides easier access for their customers and clients.

A sitting area offers a cozy fireplace for customers and associates. Linda Nathern, Alice Howard, Deborah Pierce and Mary Gregory are a few of the associates who are ready to assist Midlanders with their real estate needs.

Don Harvey, Realtors gives reasons for continued success, consistency

Without a doubt Don Harvey, Realtors once again made a major sweep of the Midland Board of Realtors, Multiple Listing Service (MLS) awards for 1990. This reaffirms our continued number one position in the market place. Don Harvey and associates received a total of 26 MLS awards. This was 62.5 percent more awards than our closest competitors.

For 1990, Don Harvey, Realtors closed better than 41 percent more than our closest competitor, according to MLS reports. This also generated the highest total dollar colume of any real estate company in Midland. In accomplishing this, Don Harvey, Realtors agents closed on average of nearly 40 transactions each. This is more than twice the average posted by our closest competitor.

Don Harvey, Realtors attributes this success in 1990, as well as over the past 19 years to continued focus and consistency in several key areas:

Training and experience: Over the years, Don Harvey, Realtors has maintained a comprehensive and on-going training program. With this training and their average number of years of experience, Don Harvey, Realtors believes they have the best trained and most experienced agents in town. This is clearly supported by the fact that they are also the most successful.

Quality agents — not quanity: Don Harvey, Realtors has never endeavored to have the most agents. We have always believed that customers and clients are concerned with only the quality of service a company provides them individually, not with the number of agents they have.

Maintaining a successful track record: Don Harvey, Realtors believes the truly successful companies and agents can be clearly identified by their track records. While any company or individual can make whatever claims or boast they wish, the true test comes when you ask them to prove it. Don Harvey, Realtors makes sure that their agents have the facts and information to support any statements of our accomplishments.

Don Harvey

Leadership within the industry nationally and locally: Through their many career moves, employees may be relocated, referred, or assisted in several ways by many different numbers and components of the real estate and relocation industries. To be able to assist those employees locally, a Realtor needs to be an integral part of the relocation networks nationally. Don Harvey became a major part of that industry when it was still in its infancy.

He has remained a recognized leader in both real estate and relocation nation wide:

■ Don Harvey, Realtors has maintained its position as Midland's premier real estate company for the past 20 years.

■ In 1984, the governor of Texas appointmed Don Harvey to the position of Texas Real Estate Commissioner.

■ Mr. Harvey is always in high demand for his experience and expertise as a lecturer and participant in real estate and relocation training seminars, meeting and conventions across the nation each year.

■ Don Harvey, his relocation personnel and associates have amazed very impressive collection of awards received from relocation companies and various segments of the relocation industry.

■ Each year Don Harvey, Realtors successfully sells more homes for relocation companies and REO companies than any other company in Midland.

Mr. Harvey has received the Certified Relocation Professional designation. This designation was awarded by the Employee Relocation Council (ERC) which is composed of approximately 1,000 major U.S. national relocation departments and relocation companies, as well as more than 8,000 associate and affiliate members from many fields. Today, ERC is recognized nationally as the foremost spokesbody and authority on matters relating to any and all aspects of the relocation industry.

Easy As Pie

Take it to heart

February also is American Heart Month, according to Chase's Annual Events, and no list of pie recipes would be complete without some recipes for the heart-healthy ones. The American Heart Association Cookbook (fourth edition) states that, "Pie pastries made with oil are tender though not as flaky as pastries made with harder fats. They are, nonetheless, pleasing as well as simple and quick to make."

So if you want to have your pie and eat it to, try some of these heart-healthy recipes:

PIE PASTRY
2 cups all-purpose flour
1¼ teaspoons salt
⅓ cup oil
3 tablespoons cold skim milk

Sift flour and salt together into mixing bowl. Mix oil with cold milk, and pour all at once into flour. Stir lightly with fork until blended, adding more liquid if necessary to make dough hold together.

Divide into two portions. Refrigerate a few minutes to make dough easier to work. Flatten one ball of dough slightly and place on sheet of wax paper or cellophane wrap. Put another sheet over top, and roll out quickly. Do not roll too thin. Remove top sheet of paper and turn dough onto pie plate. Remove second sheet, and lift crust around edges so it settles into plate. Trim and flute edges with fork or fingers. Crust may be refrigerated before filling, or frozen if not needed for several days. Bake according to pie recipe.

Makes pastry for two-crust 9-inch pie. Approximately 735 calories per serving.

CRUMB PIE CRUST
1 cup dry crumbs made from melba toast, graham crackers, cornflakes or other crisp cereal
¼ cup sugar
2 tablespoons oil
¼ teaspoon cinnamon

Toss ingredients until crumbs are well moistened with oil. Press carefully into pie pan, covering bottom and sides. Bake at 375 degrees for 10 minutes.

Makes one 9-inch crust (eight servings) with about 105 calories per serving.

FRESH STRAWBERRY PIE
1 9-inch baked pie shell
¼ cup sugar
2 tablespoons cornstarch
2 tablespoons white corn syrup
1 cup water
2 tablespoons strawberry gelatin powder
1 quart fresh whole strawberries, trimmed and washed

Please see HEART-HEALTHY/2E

"Mom and apple pie" is an American tradition — even though moms come in all nationalities, and probably so do pies.

Even so, there's nothing like a wedge of a favorite pie — maybe topped with whipped cream, ice cream or cheese — to improve an attitude. In fact, in honor of this American tradition, February has been named Great American Pies Month. According to Chase's Annual Events, this month has been set aside to "encourage home preparation of America's favorite dessert ..." (The month is sponsored by Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk by Borden Inc. Isn't that a coincidence.)

But even the best cooks will probably tell you that, in spite of the old adage "easy as pie," making a pie (or at least a pie crust) isn't all that easy.

CLASSIC CRUST
(For 8- or 9-inch double crust)
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
¾ cup shortening
5 tablespoons cold water

Combine flour and salt in bowl. Cut in shortening using pastry blender or two knives until all flour is blended into form pea-size chunks

Sprinkle in water, one tablespoon at a time. Toss lightly with fork until dough forms a ball. Divide dough in half and flour lightly. Roll each crust separately and transfer one to pie plate. Trim edge even with pie plate. Moisten pastry edge with water. Fill pie, top with second crust; fold edge under bottom crust and flute edges. Bake according to filling recipe.

CONTEMPORARY CRUST
(For 8- or 9-inch double crust)
¾ cup shortening
5 tablespoons cold water
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt

Place shortening, water and flour in processor bowl. Sprinkle salt over flour. Process 3 to 5 seconds until dough just forms. Shape into ball.

Divide dough in half and flour each half lightly. Roll each crust in separate bags (13x15-inch plastic food storage bags). Flip one onto bottom of pie plate, peel off plastic, press to fit, trim edge even with pie plate and moisten pastry edge with water. Add filling, cover with top crust. Trim ½-inch beyond edge of pie plate, fold under edge of bottom crust and flute. Cut slits in top crust or prick with fork. Bake according to filling recipe.

Now for the fillings. Pies can be filled with everything from soup to nuts, but the most traditional ones are dessert pies. (Just think — a die-hard pie lover can have a warm meat pie for dinner, followed with by a warm and tasty apple or cherry or other flavor pie for dessert.)

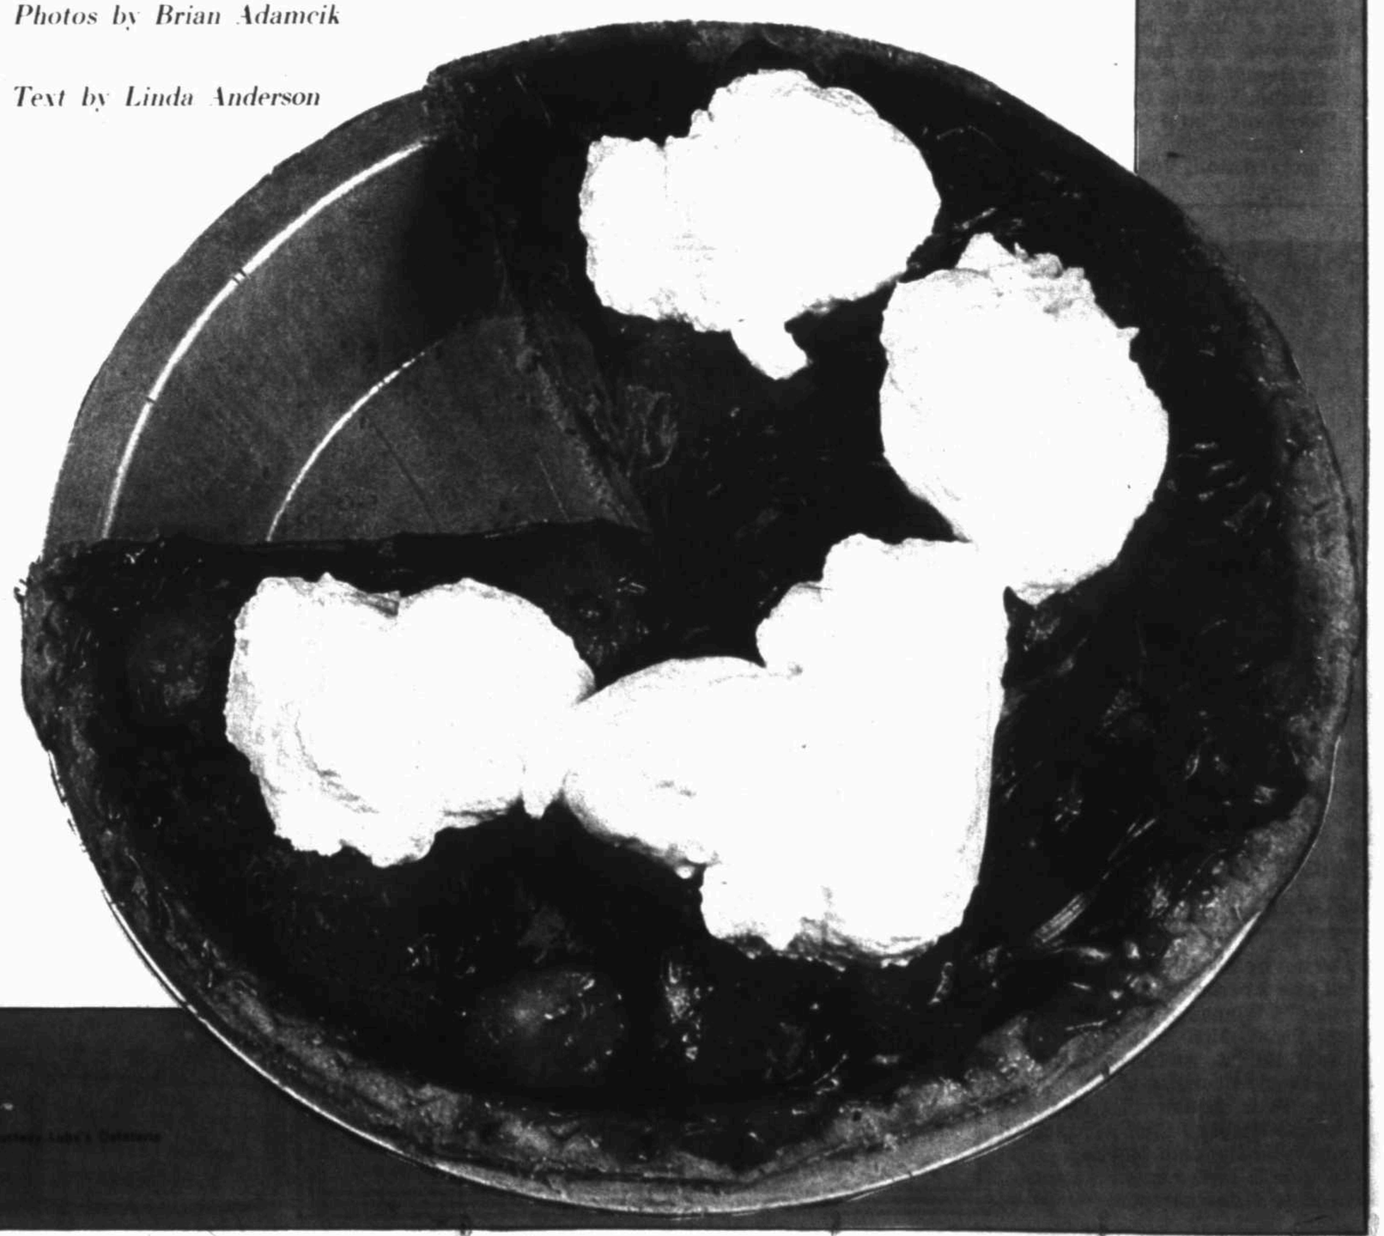

Some favorite pie recipes have been around for generations. The following two recipes are from "Southern Cooking" by Mrs. S.R. Dull, which was first published in 1928. These recipes are in honor of George Washington's birthday — which is also in February (the 22nd, in fact):

Midland Woman's Club hosts Fiesta Dinner

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

McKnight-Harrison

Singers-guitarists The Ochoa Brothers (Victor and John) serenaded the guests as they enjoyed dinner. After the meal, Ballet Folklorico provided the entertainment. Maria Garcia is the dance instructor, and Dora Zepeda is the organizer.

Members and guests dined on Beef and Chicken Enchiladas, Tacos, Pinto Beans, Spanish Rice, Tossed Salad and for dessert, Flan.

Among those enjoying the evening were Ted Kruger and his sister, Julie Rozan; Monta Jo and Ted Johnson, Beverly and Bob Riley, Leona Bryant Smith, Hilda and Leslie Hinds, Carol and Gary Hall and Marian and Charles Reeder.

Hazel (Mrs. W.W.) Smith is club president, and Jane (Mrs. Robert) Ward, ways and means chairman, was in charge of the event.

TO SAY JANET and Joe Overton were surprised is putting it mildly! The couple, who celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary on Jan. 25., returned from dinner to find a houseful of company, including relatives and many old and dear friends. They had no idea of the lengths their two daughters and husbands when to in order to keep the party a surprise.

The host couples, Mary and Patrick Nolan of Washington, D.C., and Blanche and Gary Shipp of San Angelo, were assisted in planning and carrying out the soiree with the help of family friends, including Lena and John Ochsner, Lamoyane and Jim Bradshaw, Fae and Mike Smith and Dorothy and Don McSparran.

The serving table was decorated with a floral arrangement of Bird of Paradise. The chocolate cake, topped with fruit, was identical to the grooms' cakes served at both girls' weddings and which Janet, in her role as mother of the brides, did not have an opportunity to taste until her anniversary party.

Among the guests were the Groovy Grannies, a performing dance group of which Janet is a member; former Midlanders Billie and Jack Bessellieu of San Antonio; Bee and Hank Henry of Odessa, Joe's brother and wife, Bob and Carey Jo Overton of Jal, N.M., and their children, Frances Overton and David and Carol Overton, all of Midland.

In addition, Joe's cousins, Marjorie and Charles Wolfe of Belton and Delia and Garland Hargis of Fort Worth, and Janet's cousins, Jan and Bill Johnson of Phoenix, Ariz.

The Overtons were married Jan. 25, 1951, in Lubbock and moved here in 1961. Joe was co-owner of Ormond and Overton, an oil field service business, until his retirement, and he now golfs or marshals at Green Tree Country Club.

They are the proud grandparents of two-and-a-half year old Christian Lee Nolan.

A CHRISTMAS PARTY on Jan. 25? Just a month after the fact, but who's counting, especially when the hostess, Shirley Gist, is known for her love of decorating and entertaining, and everyone anticipates a good time when she and her husband, Money, entertain. "And I got my nickel's worth out of my Christmas decorations this way," Shirley adds with a laugh.

Illness forced Shirley to delay her party plans, but friends were delighted with the belated celebration. Featuring Mexican food, the dinner included hot spinach jalapeno dip, a variety of entrees, a make-your-own taco table, a big pot of Posole and a dessert table, along with Banana Punch and Amaretto Coffee.

Among those enjoying the "Christmas Cheer" were Mignon (Mrs. Bruce) Pearson, Tommie and Forrest Underwood, Dorothy and Todd Aaron, Martha and Dan Kallus, Esta and Cary Geron, Colleen and Vince Scury, Mary and Ralph Hammond and former Midlander Kathy Yankovich of Dallas.

A STYLE SHOW by Robbie Casey's highlighted the January luncheon meeting of the Midland Country Club Ladies Association.

A showcase of spring, the event featured fashions in bright hues, including green, pinks and yellow. Hats with large brims, walking shorts combined with bright tops and jackets, tailored Chemise style dresses, soft feminine silk organza dresses and blouses and above-the-knee hem lengths were among the fashion trends shown.

Hostesses for the social hour preceding lunch were Sue (Mrs. Sam) Conner, June (Mrs. Frank) Cowden and Liz (Mrs. H.W.) Davidson.

New members of the Association introduced were Dorothy (Mrs. Emelio) Mattorano and Cathy (Mrs. Thomas) Holland. Others spotted in the large crowd were Dorothy (Mrs. Loyd) Sanders, Sarah (Mrs. Lowell) Branum, Kaye (Mrs. William P.) Franklin, Barbara (Mrs. Victor) Frigon and Jerry (Mrs. Harvin) Landua.

Meeting planned

Staff Report

Mrs. Virginia Breedlove Daniel will give a review of the autobiography "A Woman of Egypt" by Jeham Sadat. Mrs. Sadat was the wife of the late Anwar Sadat, former President of Egypt.

The Book Review Unit of the Midland Woman's Club will meet Monday at the club building. Social time is 11:30 a.m. with a luncheon to follow at noon.

HEART-HEALTHY: Nutrition ingredient in pie recipes

(From 1E)

Mix sugar, cornstarch, syrup and water together. Bring to boil and cook until thick and clear. Add gelatin powder, stirring until dissolved. Cool.

Arrange whole strawberries to cover bottom of baked pie shell. Pour gelatin mixture over strawberries and chill until set.

Makes eight servings of about 230 calories each (or 185 calories if cut into 10 servings).

APPLE PIE

Pie pastry for 9-inch, two-crust pie, unbaked
4 cups apples, sliced
1 cup sugar
½ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
Grated rind from half a lemon
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon margarine

Line 9-inch pan with half the pastry and place in refrigerator to chill. In bowl, mix sliced apples with sugar, cinnamon, vanilla, lemon rind and juice. Put into unbaked pie shell, cover with remaining crust and cut steam holes. Bake 10 minutes at 450 degrees, then reduce oven heat to 350 degrees and bake 30 to 35 minutes more. Sprinkle with granulated sugar.

Makes eight servings at about 345 calories each, or 10 servings at about 270 calories each.

NORWEGIAN APPLE PIE

1 egg (or 2 egg whites or egg substitute equivalent to 1 egg)
¾ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ cup flour
½ cup chopped walnuts
1 cup diced apples

Beat egg, sugar, vanilla extract and baking powder together until smooth and fluffy. Beat in flour until smooth and well blended. Stir in walnuts and apples. Turn into lightly greased 8-inch pie plate and bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Pie will puff up as it cooks, then collapse as it cools. Serve warm, with scoop of ice milk.

Makes eight servings of about 170 calories each (270 with ice milk).

LIME CHIFFON PIE

1 9-inch pastry shell, baked and cooled
1 3-ounce package lime-flavored gelatin
¾ cup boiling water
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
½ cup sugar
½ cup non-fat dry milk
½ cup ice water
2 tablespoons lemon juice

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Add grated lemon rind and ¼ cup sugar. Stir well. Cool until mixture is consistency of unbeaten egg white (about 20 minutes).

Place non-fat dry milk and ice water in mixing bowl. With electric mixer, beat on high speed 3 to 4 minutes until soft peaks form. Add lemon juice and continue beating. Add remaining ¼ cup sugar gradually, and continue beating until stiff peaks form. Fold into gelatin mixture and combine thoroughly.

Pour into cool pastry shell. Chill until firm (about three hours). Makes eight servings of about 210 calories each, or 10 servings of about 160 calories each.

AUNT EMMA'S SHOO-FLY PIE

Pie pastry for 9-inch one-crust pie
1½ cups flour
½ cup firmly packed light brown sugar
¼ cup margarine
1 teaspoon baking soda
¾ cup boiling water
¾ cup dark corn syrup
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon cloves

Line 9-inch pie pan with pie pastry. Combine flour with brown sugar. Cut in margarine until mixture resembles cornmeal. Pour ⅓ of the crumbs into pie shell.

Add baking soda to hot water, stir in dark corn syrup and spices, and pour ⅓ of mixture over crumbs in pie shell. Continue alternating layers, ending with crumbs on top, and bake at 375 degrees for 35 minutes. Serve warm or cold.

Makes eight servings of about 395 calories each, or 10 servings of about 315 calories each.

Associated Press

What happens when a black currant is crossed with a gooseberry?

According to Midwest Living magazine, a jostaberry (pronounced JOH-sta-berry), with dark-purple fruit two or three times larger than currants on a handsome, glossy-leafed, thornless shrub, is produced.

The jostaberry's seeds are smaller than a raspberry's, and the new berry's thick skin keeps the fruit fresh for at least a week after picking, even without refrigeration. Eat the berries by themselves, juice them or bake them in pies.

Origins ancient

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Many myths surround the origin of Valentine's Day. At the Roman festival of Lupercalia, on Feb. 14, young couples were brought together by drawing names at random from an urn. According to researchers at Hallmark Cards, tradition says a Christian martyr named St. Valentine, imprisoned in Rome in A.D. 269, restored the sight of his jailer's blind young daughter. On his execution day, Feb. 14, he supposedly sent the girl a farewell note signed, "From Your Valentine." In 1415, an early valentine was sent by Charles, Duke of Orleans, to his wife while he was a prisoner in the Tower of London. Commercial valentines were introduced in Europe in the early 1800s.

To be long-lasting, Valentine roses require care

NEW YORK (AP) — The long-stemmed red rose has long been a symbol of love, and a dozen delivered on Valentine's Day is the ultimate declaration from someone who cares.

The rose also is one of the most difficult flowers to grow, requiring about 57 days to develop and mature, according to the FTD Report, a publication of Florists' Transworld Delivery.

These florists, who wire flower orders around the world, offer some tips on buying and caring for roses:

■ Select roses that are just beginning to open and avoid those where stems are bent near the flower heads.

■ If possible, condition roses when you receive them. Put them in a clean, deep container of warm water, about 110 degrees F, and then place the container in a cool room for about 2 to 4 hours.

■ Before arranging roses, cut the stems at an angle with a sharp knife, being careful not to bruise or scrape the stems. Some experts recommend cutting the stems while the entire flower is immersed in warm water, such as a filled sink.

■ Remove any foliage on stems that will be below the water line.

■ Arrange roses in a clean, deep vase filled with warm water. Add a floral preservative. A powder that dissolves in water is available from florists for a few cents.

■ If you arrange roses in florists' foam, which is presoaked and provides a water source as well as a base, put a preservative in the water the foam is soaked in.

■ Display roses way from heat and drafts and water them daily with warm water.

Copley News Service

A slightly higher risk of colon cancer can result from taking regular doses of aspirin to reduce the risk of a heart attack.

British researchers say that in a study of 14,000 elderly men and women, male aspirin-takers were prone to a higher incidence of kidney cancer, and both sexes experienced a higher risk of angina and other heart disorders caused by blocked coronary arteries.

However, this study found that taking aspirin every other day does help lessen risk of heart attack in men, but not women.

REVEL ON THE RIVIERA

By Carolyn Fitz-Gerald

When Gerald and Sara Murphy "discovered" the French Riviera in the 1920s, it was not fashionable to live too close to the water. They preferred the view of the crescent shoreline from the high pinewood hills. The fishermen could have the little tile-roofed dwellings closer to the Mediterranean. Nor was it fashionable to visit the azure sea, or the Cote d'Azure as the French say, in the summer.

But the American couple felt as if they were the very first to find breathtaking fields of flowers backed by stands of cane. Amazingly, they found that this sweet land perfumed by the spicy scent of carnations and intoxicating lilies of the valley, almond, orange and cherry blossoms, was thinly populated. In addition to the flower farmers and some artists, the inhabitants of the tiny villages were peasants who herded sheep, raised vegetables and were fisherman, who brought in catches of delectable, silvery fish each day.

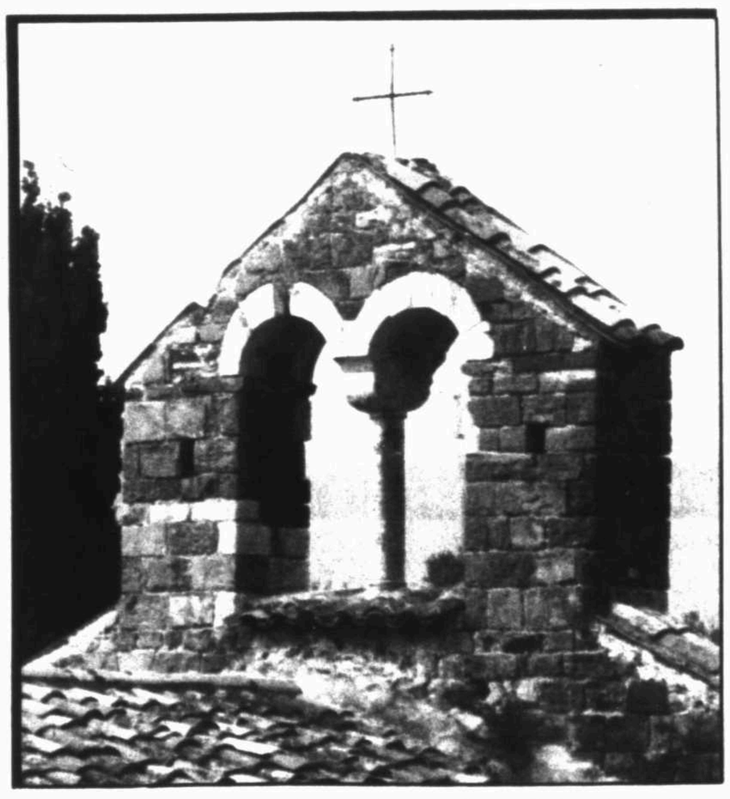

The Murphys fell in love with the golden light that burnished the rooftops of the villages and the purple shade on the hills that overlooked the clear, blue water, so they did an unheard-of thing. They rented a house year-round. Like many hosts and hostesses who offer a new and beautiful place to the restless and the glamorous, the Murphys were overwhelmed by guests. Ernest Hemingway came with his entourage, Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald came, counts came with their countesses, and there was always a starving artist or two who wanted to "stay on for the light."

THEIR GUESTS ATE and drank, revelled in the sunlight and then ate and drank some more, staying past April and into May. In desperation, the Murphys asked the local hotelier if he could possibly stay open for the summer in order to accommodate the droves of Parisians who were expanding their household beyond its limits.

"Only for one summer," the owner said, not believing that even Americans would come in the summer. Such was the birth of the French Riviera as we know it today, with a band of sparkling, jewel-like hotels overlooking the clear blue of the Mediterranean.

Chief among these jewels is the Hotel Martinez in Cannes, which opened in the grand manner in 1929. High ceilinged and ornate, the Martinez, which the French are quick to point out is pronounced with stress on the first syllable, became the star of the palm-studded La Croisette. La Croisette is the promenade in front of the hotel and above the beach that still attracts glittering society from all over the world.

Looking out from the balconies of the Martinez, the visitor can see Frenchmen in their baggy pants and slouchy waiters' coats of carmine, violet and yellow strolling along with purses slung over one shoulder, arm in arm with girls in high, high heels and mini-skirts. Add to this, the well-dressed men in the lobby whose hand-tailored silk suits and shirts announce their wealth, and the American and European movie stars sunning in the sand that is trucked in and spread on the beaches. Cannes is a mixture of all types of people who are drawn to the luxurious hotels, the blue, blue of the sea and the cloudless light that spreads its magic spell.

Tourists have their choice of endless shopping in the little boutiques along the rue d' Antibes with leather from Celine, men's shirts from Durif, children's clothing from Christine and a host of shops featuring giftware, porcelain and furs.

The culture-oriented may choose from several area museums featuring the works of great French artists Picasso and Chagall, as well as the older masters.

A climb up the hill to the Suquet Church overlooking the harbor gives a breathtaking view of tiny sailboats moored on the quay and giant frigates drifting farther out. Down in the harbor, there is launch service to the little islands of St. Marguerite and St. Honorat. On St. Marguerite, visitors may pace the small stone chamber behind the high walls of the fort that housed the mysterious man in "The Iron Mask" that novelist Alexander Dumas made famous. Was the mysterious prisoner the elder brother of King Louis IV of France? Was he an Italian count who went back on his word to the king? Whatever the reason, King Louis allowed him neither freedom nor identity and he died in the Bastille, denied even his view of the blue Mediterranean.

ON THE ISLE OF Saint-Honorat, visitors may visit the abbey where the Cistercian monks made a liqueur, La Lerina, famous only in Cannes. They export none. It is said that the monks are most fond of their own product, so it is a rare visitor who gets a taste.

At night, Cannes becomes Las Vegas, with musical shows and brightly lit bars and casinos. For the gamblers, there is a dividing line. The Casino near the water is for the ordinary man, while the casinos in the hills become more expensive as they point the way toward Monte Carlo which boasts the world's epitome of chic gambling houses. Here, too, the movie stars, nobility and wealthy from over the world gather to try their luck. In the casinos above the city of Cannes, the crowds are not feverish, but neither are they jaded. They watch, they wait for Lady Luck and take great pleasure in their own winnings, little in another's. Mostly they are polite but they make room in their circle around the baccarat table only for the recognized.

It is amazing how guests in Cannes never seem to sleep. If one rises in time to see the fishermen come in with their catches and the market abound with fresh fruits and flowers, there will be others already there. The scent of coffee beans being ground will blend with the smell of the sea and many visitors will be having their breakfast croissants and planning the day ahead at the little cafes that line the Croisette.

Noon will find visitors on the quay having a "real" pizza as the French say, or in one of the grand hotels along La Croisette. At the elevated L'Orangeraie in the Martinez, guests are offered a light and airy fare with surroundings that take full advantage of the sky and the water. At night, these same guests will dine in the nearby L Palme d' Or restaurant, named for the highest award of the Cannes film festival. The room abounds in photographs of motion picture celebrities: Clark Gable at the wheel of his car, Hitchcock behind the camera, Maurice Chavalier having a drink ...

Sometimes an admiral of the fleet will send his chef over to work with the chef at the Martinez on a particular culinary work of art. The food is always excellent, beautifully displayed and presented with flair. But it is never cheap. Neither are the rooms, although they are not exceptionally high by current European standards. At the Martinez, a double La Croisette Sea View room costs around $269. The Murphys would be pleased to know that the rates go up from March 28 through July. But true to its tradition, the Martinez is closed in November and December. Call Leading Hotels of the World at 1-800-223-6800 for more details.

If an ordinary day in Cannes is not enough, there is always, always a festival of everything from films and church choirs to intellectual games at the new congress center. And for those who don't want to enter in, watching is the main pastime on the Riviera.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Do bare-root planting in winter

By Deborah A. Benge

We've actually had real winter in the Permian Basin and the furthest thought from your mind is planting, but despite the middle of winter, now is the time to plant bare-root trees and shrubs. And the quicker you can plant those bare-root plants, the better off the plant will be — it may even be good for the cooped-up gardener.

Benge

Bare-root plants are dug from the field during the dormant season to be planted during the dormant season. The tops of such plants should be kept dormant while the roots are kept moist. Not all plants lend themselves to bare-root handling; for example, evergreens are seldom ever handled in this manner. Deciduous plants are often found as bare-root, but not even all deciduous plants are wisely handled as bare-root.

Many deciduous trees, trees that drop their leaves in the fall, with a main tap root are dug from the field and handled as bare-root trees because their root systems don't conform to container and B&B well. In the Permian Basin, the most common trees found as bare-root are pecan, deciduous fruit trees (peach, apricot, apple), grape and other berries, figs and occasionally ornamental trees.

Roses and some ornamental shrubs can be found handled as bare-root. Mail-order plants, especially, are likely to be sent in this form due to the cost of shipping. Retaining a soil ball around the roots would cost too much for shipping.

In local nurseries and garden centers, you might not always recognize bare-root plants as you see them. They are often packaged so that the roots are enclosed in a plastic bag or cardboard container with moist peat moss, sphagnum moss or sawdust packed around the roots. Even though they have a container of sorts around the roots, they are technically bare-root.

Because of the labor involved digging balled and burlap plants and the cost in shipping the much heavier plants, bare-root plants have a big advantage over containerized or ball and burlap plants — they are less expensive. But bare-root trees have other definite advantages because they are:

■ Easier to handle because there is no soil aroung the roots;

■ Not prone to some of the root girdling/root restriction problems that can occur with containers and B&B plants.

But every coin has two sides. Because the tree has no soil around the root system, the bare-root tree is much more vulnerable to drying out and/or freezing than a containerized B&B plant. A bare-root plant will not tolerate the neglect and abuse that the other two types of plants can many times withstand. So what it boils down to is, you can have great plants with bare-root, but you need to select, protect and plant the bare-root with extra care.

In light of that, you need to purchase your tree soon after it has been dug from the field and moved to the nursery, while it is fresh, in good shape and selection is good. Select plants whose roots are moist but not wet. Check the trunk very carefully for serious skinned, cut and galled places. The bark should be evenly colored all the way around the tree — no sun scalded or winter kill places. Buds whould look plump and slightly green.

Even if you aren't ready to plant it's a good idea to select your plant early and hold it in good holding conditions until you get ready to plant. This way you can be sure that the root system hasn't been exposed to sunlight, dry air, freezing temperatures and too wet or too dry conditions.

How do you hold this vulnerable bare-root plant? You give it a temporary home by heeling it into moist soil. Dig a trench in a protected area deep and long enough to completely cover the root system and part of the lower trunk. If you don't have a shady protected place and must heel trees into a sunny area, dig the trench running in an east-west direction. Place the entire root system in the trench and press moist, loose dirt in around the root system. Don't firm the soil too tight, but try to eliminate air pockets. Trees should be placed in the trench at an angle so the tree tops are facing into the afternoon sun. This arrangement reduces the amount of sun striking the trees, reducing the chance of trees from breaking dormancy.

Before a prolonged, extremely cold weather spell is predicted, a thick layer of mulch or tarp can be placed over the heeled-in tree to guard against freeze damage. Other precautions to use with this heeling-in method is to keep the root system moist and covered with moist soil, peat moss, sawdust or similar materials. Soil has the best insulating qualities of those just mentioned, so be sure to use soil on top of other moist materials for the insulation.

This is an excellent horticultural method for temporarily holding plants. Use it if you have to hold a plant for more than a few days, and try not to use it for more than several weeks. And don't try to use it if weather begins to warm. If warming weather is a danger, but you must use heeling-in procedures, heel-in in a cool northside exposure.

So for good bare-root plants, select them as soon as possible and give them careful treatment, because they are very vulnerable to the elements when there is no soil protecting the delicate root system. And drying out of the root system is the number one reason bare-root plants fail, so take care in keeping root systems moist.

Some gadgets make getting there easier

Although it's advisable to travel light, several gadgets are well worth their weight in comfort and security. To make buying easier, items mentioned below are available by mail order.

■ If luggage pops open, extra binding prevents loss. Make bindings from old belts, or order strong rainbow-striped nylon straps with buckles from Le Travel Store in San Diego, Calif. They're $5.75, compared with $10 elsewhere. Le Travel Store's luggage caddie combines binding straps with detachable wheels for $25. Call 1-800-854-6677.

■ Collapsible luggage carts, invaluable when porters are scarce or carry-ons are heavy, are sold at luggage stores and airport duty-free shops. Sharper Image, 1-800-344-4444, offers an aluminum folding cart that weighs 5 pounds and carries up to 100 pounds for $49. Even sturdier is Brookstone's big-wheeled steel dolly, $39.95, that totes up to 200 pounds. Call 603-924-9541 in Peterborough, N.H.

■ Packing accessories include Le Travel Store's net ditties, $6 to $8; multi-pocket garment bag organizers, $16.50 to $21, and shoe sacks, two pairs for $6.75.

■ For organizing travel documents, credit cards, checks, currency and receipts, Yamani's 23-pocket zippered leather portfolio costs $159 at Sharper Image.

■ For safeguarding valuables and documents, Le Travel Store has waterproof cases to be worn around the neck or waist or looped over a belt and tucked inside a waistband. From $4.25 to $9, depending on style. Brookstone's secret pocket travel belt, in leather, is $29.50.

■ Traveler's Checklist of Sharon, Conn., offers lock and bolt devices that secure drawers or doors, $12.50. Call 203-364-0144.

■ For personal safety, Hammacher-Schlemmer's Instant Fire Escape features stainless steel cable, weighing about 8½ pounds, that enables an adult and child to exit a burning building when there is no other means of escape. It's $179.50 for the two-story size, $239.50 for the three-story size. Call 1-800-543-3366.

■ For comfort aboard plane or train, inflatable pillows that fit around the neck prevent stiffness. Brookstone, $7.99, and Le Travel Store, $9.95 to $19.95. Le Travel Store sells "sea band" bracelets, said to prevent seasickness, for $13.95. Another health aid, from Brita USA in Oakland, Calif., is the Brita Travel Water Filter, $10. It claims to remove about 90 percent of the chlorine, copper and lead from ordinary tap water. Call 1-800-537-2823.

■ Pocket-sized computers convert foreign currencies into dollar amounts, $15 to $23 from Le Travel Store, $49 from Sharper Image. Others translate words into five languages, $84.95 from Hammacher-Schlemmer, or 10 languages, $129 from Sharper Image.

■ Hammacher-Schlemmer boasts the world's smallest camera: Minox EC at $319.50. It measures 1-3/16 inches by ⅜-inch, weighs .15 ounce and fits into your palm. The only drawback is that the 15-exposure rolls of film require processing by Minox.

■ Film is protected from security X-ray machines by shield pouches, $5.95 from Le Travel Store or $10.95 from Traveler's Checklist, or from most camera shops.

■ Dual voltage hair dryers of 1200 watts are $35 from Hoffritz, 1-800-962-9699, or $21.95 from Traveler's Checklist. Steam irons from Le Travel Store are $32 to $37, those from Traveler's Checklist are $26.95.

■ Converter kits adapt electric appliances to world currents and outlets. Franzus' ultra-small 2½-ounce, 1600-watt, 220-110 converter with four adapter plugs is $30 at Hoffritz, $40.99 from Le Travel Store or $39 from Sharper Image.

■ Working while you travel? The Factory is a mini-office the size of a pocket knife. It includes scissors, stapler, tape dispenser, magnifying glass, hole punch, tape measure, carton opener and staple remover. The Factory costs $25 at New York's Museum of Modern Art. 1-800-447-6662.

Cognac region home of fine dining

By Weller Rhodes

The sunny Cognac region of France delights visitors with history, fine wine and excellent food.

Picture a sunny region of France full of history and famous for butter, oysters, snails, fresh seafood, fine wine and one of the world's great distilled spirits and you would think that tourists would flock there in droves. Think again.

Although Charante and specifically the region where Cognac is produced get a share of tourists, the crowds stay away and for anyone wanting to experience a little of the real character of France, that's all to the good.

So, if you tire of the crowds of Paris, board a train at the Gare d' Austerlitz, and head toward Angouleme about four hours south and west of Paris. Rent a car and head for Saintes, Cognac or Jarnac and begin an experience in a France that retains the rural character that has been lost from more popular destinations.

The hotels are small and the restaurants often unpretentious, but the people are welcoming, and the experience will remain with you for years.

I was accompanying 17 chefs from Westin Hotels in North American who had come to learn more about Cognac. We headed by bus for Saintes and checked into the Hotel Mancini. It's comfortable, near the town center and has an excellent restaurant. It's also reasonably priced. Another reason to visit Cognac is that it is at least half as expensive as the more popular regions of France.

THE CHARENTE River flows placidly through the town and on one bank there is a Roman arch dedicated to Germanicus. Roman ruins abound throughout the region and there is a very large amphitheater in Saintes.

But the reason to spend a few days here is to learn about cognac and the best place to begin is on one of the many tours that the large Cognac houses offer. We headed for the town of Cognac and a full day at Martell, but you can easily take in the tour and see the museums at several of the houses in a single day.

The tourist office in Cognac is very helpful and has information on cognac tours and related subjects. It is right in the center of town near the square, which is dominated by a large equestrian statue of Francois I. The monarch was born here in 1494 in the Valois chateau, which is now the home of the Otard cognac company.

You will quickly notice that most of the buildings in Cognac have a gray-black mold growing on them. It's everywhere and results from the alcohol that evaporates from the barrels of aging Cognac. One percent of the alcohol evaporates from a barrel each year and locally it is referred to as "the angel's share." They must be happy, indeed, since their share amounts to about 20 million bottles a year.

This is all part of the mystique of Cognac and on just one tour you will learn more than you ever dreamed.

WE SAMPLED an 1848 Cognac in the Paradis Room of Martell and drank a 45-year-old reserve from Camus later at dinner. Many preferred the Camus, although the privilege of tasting either was something to treasure for a lifetime.

"The great thing in coming here is to learn these lessons," Kurt Fischer, Westin's corporate director of food and beverage told me during one tasting. "It is important to tell people that they should trust their instincts. But they need to learn the basics."

But you can only taste so much cognac before wanting some food, and there are very good restaurants in the area. Be sure to look for a particular local specialty that consists of small pork sausages and fresh oysters accompanied by a dry white wine. You take down a fresh, briny oyster, follow it with a slice of sausage and finish with a sip of wine. In the spring, try roast goat or lamb served with tender green shoots of garlic.

Fresh fish and a regional menu that includes such specialties as lobster cooked in Pineau and served with fresh asparagus and a superb rack of lamb with truffles.

Chef Francois Baty along with father Robert Baty operate this restaurant that is a favorite with many of the local Cognac distillers. The collection of Cognacs as well as the wine list is very extensive.

■ Saintes, Logis Santon, 54 Cours Genet. Telephone 46.74.20.14.

Patrick Guilloton, bureau chief of "Sud Oest," the region's leading paper, steered me to this fine restaurant that serves the regional specialties of lobster, oysters and lamb in creative combinations. Everything is always fresh and the proprietors welcome visitors warmly.

■ Cognac, L'Echassier, 72 Rue de Bellevue. Telephone 45.32.29.04.

BOTH GUILLOTON and Baty recommended this 19th Century house that has been converted into an elegant restaurant. Try any of the fish dishes. There is an extensive list of Bordeaux wines. While the region produces cognac and not much wine, neighboring Bordeaux makes up for any lack.

■ Cognac, La Ribaudiere, five miles (eight km) from Cognac on N141, the road to Angouleme. Telehone 45.81.30.54.

Another recommendation from Francois Baty, who likes it for its classic renditions of Charentais cuisine. The menu also features several dishes of grilled local meat and fish.

Registry for sperm donors is project best left alone

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Just before my only child's passing away, he informed me that while he was in college (a medical student) he had been a frequent sperm donor. I cannot begin to tell you how priceless it would be for me to locate some of my genetic grandchildren!

Van Buren

There are many registries for adoptees and their natural parents, but to my knowledge, there are none for sperm donors and their donor offspring. I am hoping to develop such a registry in an effort to locate these precious children and help others in this situation. — AN OPEN CHAPTER

DEAR OPEN CHAPTER: I urge you to discuss the legal ramifications of your idea with an attorney before progressing further with this project.

Donor confidentiality is one of the reasons artificial insemination has been so successful in this country. (Last year, between 50,000 and 80,000 women benefited from artificial insemination in the U.S.A.) If sperm donors knew there was a chance that their identities would later be revealed, they would not donate — which would greatly reduce the number of candidates (and the genetic characteristics) from which prospective mothers and their physicians would be able to choose.

DEAR ABBY: I am an American Army officer stationed in Korea. I am 38 years old. While I have been stationed overseas, my mother continues to open my mail, even after I have politely asked her to stop.

She reads "Dear Abby" faithfully in the Chicago Tribune, so would you please print this with a little note from you admonishing her for this practice? — CAPTAIN IN KOREA

DEAR CAPTAIN: Gladly:

Dear Mother: I'm sure you love your son, but you should also respect his privacy. Motherhood does not give you the right to open your son's mail. So if you want his respect, you will stop this violation of his privacy, which surely must demean you in his eyes. — Abby

P.S. Captain, why not instruct your friends to send their letters to you in care of someone who can be trusted?

DEAR ABBY: This is in regard to "Repulsed in Florida," who found it offensive when fellow diners proceeded to blow their noses loudly at the table.

I, too, have been raised in a family who were taught to excuse themselves to the restroom when they felt the need to do any nose blowing. Let me share this true story with "Florida":

My family and I had gone to dinner at a buffet-style restaurant. The man sitting behind my grandmother began to loudly blow his nose. Grandmother turned to him and asked sternly, "Are you through?"

He then replied, "No, I think I'll go back for some more chicken." — GROSSED OUT IN FRESNO, CALIF.

By popular request, Abby shares more of her favorite prize-winning, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: More Favorite Recipes by Dear Abby, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Train crosses fallen German border

■ Visit to Nuremberg, Germany aboard dusty old Train 464 brings vivid, historical memories back for travelers yearning to see a 'new world.'

By Philip Sousa
Copley News Service

ABOARD DEUTSCHE REICHSBAHN TRAIN 464 — Hilde Friedrich's first trip to the West in 41 years started with a Whopper.

"It's a strange sandwich," she said, "but I like the taste."

The 60-year-old retired high-school teacher and I got acquainted outside the main railroad station in Dresden, a mostly modern city in what a few days earlier had been East Germany. We had met while standing in line beholding a sight neither of us had ever seen before — a mobile Burger King.

It was housed in a large red-and-black truck with Munich license plates that was parked on the sidewalk. The outlet was literally standing room only. It had no seats. Instead, patrons ate standing up at elbow-high tables. A Whopper sold for the equivalent of $3.10, small fries were $1 and a slice of "Original amerikanicher Apfelkuchen," or apple pie, cost $1.20.

Around the substantial crowd waiting for their burgers, more than a dozen Asian and Middle Eastern entrepreneurs were busy selling foreign goods most Dresdeners had only dreamed of until the previous week. Items ranged from British music tapes to Iranian carpets, from Marlboro cigarettes to portable Sony radios.

It was the same scene along the broad pedestrian-only Prager Strasse, or Prague Street, leading from the huge rail terminal to the city's historic old quarter on the banks of the River Elbe.

En route to the station, I had spotted other cash-rich but goods-starved local shoppers flocking to the makeshift stalls that other foreigners and a few Germans from the West had set up in the Old Market Square.

IN ANOTHER DEPARTURE with the recent past, a number of West German, Japanese and American cars were parked alongside toylike East German Trabants and Soviet-made Ladas. The foreign vehicles, nearly all with West German plates, were not those of tourists; they all had Zu verkaufen or "for sale" signs, and most of the owners were surrounded by would-be buyers.

Less than two weeks after Germany became whole again, Western capitalism had arrived in a town that had been under communist rule.

And less than two weeks after reunification, Hilde Friedrich and her husband, Hans, were headed for the West. From their home near Dresden they were going to Nuremberg, in what formerly was West Germany. There they would visit brothers and sisters they had not seen in more than four decades and grandkids known only from photos.

After decades living under a communist regime, the Friedrichs said they were a little apprehensive about their journey to the West. At first they were reluctant to give their names, and they did not want to be photographed.

I, too, was traveling from Dresden to Nuremberg, two cities of about the same size and population — 500,000 — separated by 243 miles and, until Oct. 3, by a border of barbed wire, electric fences and feared East German guards.

HAVING IN YEARS past endured the always cumbersome and often frightening experience of traveling between the two Germanys, I now was going to travel across a vanished frontier.

As it turned out, our reserved seats were in the same six-passenger first-class compartment.

"Yes, I am excited," said Hilde, nervously puffing a Lord cigarette at her window seat. "Our two sons fled to the West several years ago. One escaped through Czechoslovakia, the other through Hungary. But my husband and I did not dare try."

Unlike most of its cousins in Western Europe, our train was rather drab and dusty. The unexpected swiftness with which reunification arrived apparently had caught the railroad unprepared: All of the battleship-gray coaches of our 12-car train still sported on their sides the "DR" markings of the Deutsche Reichsbahn or East German State Railways. The name also appeared on my $90 ticket, rather than that of West Germany's Deutsche Bundesbahn or German Federal Railways, which, in theory at least, had taken over the united nation's railroads on Oct. 3.

D464, as our train was listed on the timetable at the station, left Dresden five minutes behind its 8:56 a.m. scheduled departure. Hans Friedrich, a 63-year-old retired railroad worker, picked on that for some political commentary.

"I remember when our trains were as punctual as those the West Germans run," said this thin, gray-haired man who was 22 when, in the aftermath of World War II, the Allies split his nation in two.

"It's a matter of time," he added, sharing another Lord cigarette with his equally gray-haired but plump wife. "Not only West German goods but also West German standards are flooding in. Soon these trains of ours will leave and arrive on schedule."

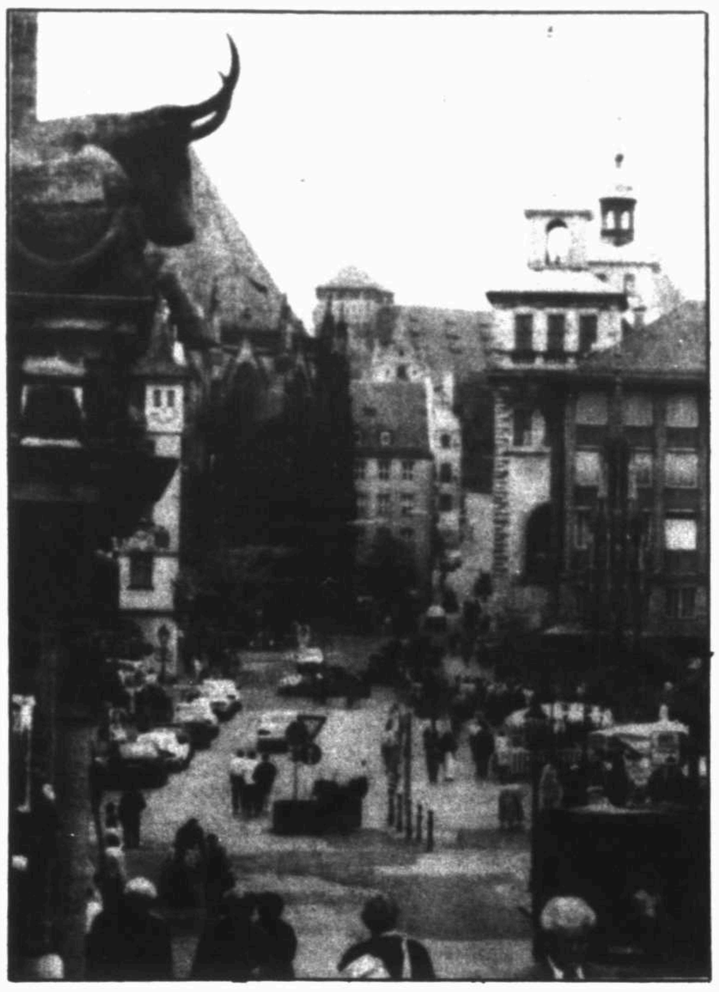

DEMOCRACY AND CAPITALISM have their demons, Hilde said, adding that she and her husband were aware of increases in traffic, crime and unemployment not only in the now-united Berlin but also in Leipzig, Dresden and other formerly East German towns.

"But I would rather be free and have choices," she said.

Hans nodded in agreement.

I was impressed by their command of English, and told them so.

"We cannot write it, because we never studied it," said Hilde with a big laugh. "But we learned to speak your language after the war by listening to the Voice of America."

CNS Photo

What started as a curiosity became a hobby, she said.

"Over the years, there were times when the (East German) government would jam the transmission," her husband said. "Otherwise, it was our main source of uncensored news of what was really happening beyond our borders."

As Dresden's dreary industrial suburbs gave way to modest farms and rolling hills, a young man of good build, piercing blue eyes and a short crop of grain-blond hair poked his head into our compartment and asked, in German, if he could use one of the three empty seats.

HE WAS REINER Holtz, 24, a construction worker whose journey had started even farther east than ours.

"I am from Gorlitz," he said as he shook hands all around, "by the Polish border."

He was a smoker, he explained, but his reserved seat was in a nonsmoking compartment.

This was his first trip away from home, he added, and he was too excited to notice that the rail clerk at Gorlitz had made a mistake.

As D464 picked up speed on its seven-hour dash to Nuremberg, Reiner spoke about his plans.

With some language help from Hilde, he told us about a job in Munich that he had landed through a cousin he had never met. He had been promised twice the $600 per month he was making in Gorlitz. His girlfriend would join him in a few months, he added, and much of his higher pay would be saved for their wedding.

The rolling countryside this fall day was a pretty scene; but the colorless towns on our route were not. They were short in character but long in uninspired apartment blocks, badly kept streets and aging East Bloc vehicles. Freiberg and Karl-Marx-Stadt were among the stops along the way. Another was Zwickau, where the ubiquitous Trabants are made, mostly of plastic. Next was Plauen and then Gutenfurst.

UNTIL OCT. 3, the latter was where the dreaded East German border-crossing procedures for train travelers took place. Now there was none of that.

As we were pulling out of Gutenfurst, I walked the length of the train. Uncrowded until then, the corridors now were full of people. Most were looking in the distance ahead of the train. Some, like me, had maps in hand and were checking their watches.

Die Grenze — the long-feared border — was but moments away.

I returned to my car and another packed corridor.

Suddenly several voices rose in unison.

Clearly visible beyond a hillock in our path, rolls of barbed wire the size of a large garden shed ran like fat steel snakes across the hills around us. Gray metal towers the height of a telephone pole rose on either side of the track, their powerful searchlights still trained down on the few yards leading to what used to be known as West Germany.

The now unmanned border sped by our window at 12:50 p.m.

At first no one said a word. The only sounds were those of the wind coming through the open windows and the clackety-clack of the train.

MOST EYES WERE moist. Like several others, Hilde was clutching a handkerchief.

"It's the wind," Reiner Holtz said softly.

"It's freedom," Hans Friedrich said.

More than a few cheers followed. Wine and beer were passed around. Conversations resumed.

Soon we were in the outskirts of Hof, the first city in the West many around me had ever seen.

Just about everybody was glued to the windows and pointing this way and that.

"Look at those cars!" shouted Reiner, motioning to the numerous late-model BMWs, Mercedes Benzes and other expensive cars in sight.

"There are flowers in every window," said Hilde, "and the houses are so big and beautiful."

"The people have nicer clothes," said her husband, "and they look richer."

"They are richer," said Hilde.

Until reunification, Hof was where West German border formalities took place. Today no one asked for our documents. However, as in the past, here the cars bound for Munich were unhitched from the rest of the train.

Now without Reiner, Hilde and Hans told me about their last visit to Nuremberg in 1949, when, in the wake of massive Allied bombings, most of that once handsome city was little more than a large pile of rubble.

DUSTY OLD D464, now with a West German engineer in command, continued its dash to the southwest on tracks noticeably smoother than those on which it had run on the other side of the former border.

The sights beyond our window as we approached Nuremberg — smart shops filled with goods, elegant buildings and well-dressed people — dazzled Hilde.

"I cannot believe my eyes," she said. "It is like a miracle."

"It is," her husband said, nodding.

At 3:49 p.m., one minute ahead of schedule, D464 eased to a stop on track 14 at Nuremberg's state-of-the-art main rail station.

"Welcome back to the West," I bade my newfound pals as we stepped off the train to a clutch of their waiting relatives.

"It feels great already," said Hilde.

"Until a few days ago," Hans told me, "I thought it would never happen."

Possible terrorist activities call for travel precautions

By Jennifer Merin
Associated Press

With war in the Middle East, travelers are considering the advisability of trips abroad.

There's reason for caution. Threats of terrorist activities anywhere around the globe are real, and nobody wants to venture into harm's way. So before traveling, assess all of the factors.

While there is no way to assure personal safety, there are ways to insure against disrupted travel plans. But remember, travel policies differ significantly in what they do and do not cover. And it is a personal decision as to whether the purchase of insurance is economically advantageous.

Most policies restrict coverage for trip cancellation or disruption to medical emergencies, either that of the passenger or a close relative who may or may not be traveling, too.

Most also provide for medical treatment and-or special transportation.

Some cover lost or delayed baggage.

But they don't cover journeys cancelled or discontinued because you feel uneasy about venturing into what you believe to be a potentially dangerous situation.

At Access America International, 600 Third Ave., New York, N.Y., 10163, 1-800-284-8300, things are different. Policy holders in that situation were reimbursed for cancelled trips. The Access America policy states that a "terrorist incident in a foreign city to which you are scheduled to arrive within 30 days of the incident" is a valid reason for reimbursable cancellation. The policy, however, doesn't cover cancellation due to the outbreak of war or if you're called for military duty.

Access America International's $215 family plan provides top trip cancellation benefits — because of terrorism or illness — of $2,000, plus medical insurance of $20,000 and unlimited medical transport, during 23 days of travel. The individual traveler's 23-day policy pays half as much and costs $148.

Travel Assure (Tele-Trip Company, Box 31685, 3201 North Farnam St., Omaha, Neb., 68131, 1-800-228-9792) and Travel Assistance International (1133 15th St. N.W., Washington, D.C., 20002, 1-800-821-2828) write policies with similar benefits, at prices about equal to those for policies with more restricted trip cancellation coverage.

Policies covering trip cancellation due to terrorist activity exclude a list of countries with a foreseeable potential for danger. Check your destination against that list before subscribing.

Gender gap widens in Persian Gulf war

By Erma Bombeck

It would be hard to find a mother in America today who hasn't wondered if a woman were in the White House, would we be at war.

Bombeck

It's the one gender difference that few dispute. Once a woman has given birth, she is charged to protect and defend this child, anticipate his mistakes, minimize her pain, and by all that is holy, bring him or her to adulthood and ultimate happiness.

The general perception is that women are endowed with greater patience, higher endurance for pain, more regard for stability and less tolerance for violence. They purportedly have a special bond with their sons and daughters that goes deep, and they will go any distance to keep them safe.

When I was younger, I joined with my sisters in proclaiming loud and often, "Men fight wars because they have never given birth to those who fight them." But throughout the years, I have had to reassess my position. I am no longer sure that wars are determined by gender.

Isabelita Peron of Argentina and Indira Gandhi of India were women. Golda Meir of Israel was a grandmother. Benazir Bhutto carried a child during her reign as prime minister of Pakistan. The Philippines' Corazon Aquino is a mother. So is former Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Great Britain and Violeta Barrios de Chamorro of Nicaragua. Their presence in government did not ensure peace.

What happened? Did the women feel compelled to run a country the way a man would run it to avoid being labeled soft, wimpish, weak, insecure or, God forbid, "female"? Would they have even gotten elected if they had run on their own instincts as women?

We tend to put great stock in toughness and stubbornness and very little in gentleness and diplomacy. The latter are two traits that mothers are good at. Yet, it seems they have no place in politics. We spend our lives talking our kids out of violence and soothing over family differences. We spend a lot of time pointing out that the price of pride is exorbitant and probably severely inflated. Wouldn't it be refreshing to find a woman who would hang onto those philosophies when she got her own country to run?

I read that the "gender gap" of women against this war and men for it has been measured up to 25 points. This is the widest division between men and women for any conflict in memory. It is not a division of which sex loves its children the most or which sex loves peace the most.

What this is about is an answer to a question: Why, in more than a thousand years of wars, have we come up with better weaponry, but no one — male or female — has found an alternative to it?

Harsh winter weather calls for special precautions for canines

Associated Press

It's a mistake to think your dog's fur coat will protect him from harsh winter weather.

When the mercury hits freezing, indoor dogs should be taken out for five or 10 minutes only, says Dr. Richard Thoma, a veterinarian in Cheektowaga, N.Y. Don't force your pet to stay out longer than he wants to.

On warmer days, in the upper 30s, healthy adult dogs can be walked for 20 minutes or so. But puppies and older dogs can't stay out as long, says Thoma, because their internal thermal regulators don't work as well.

Doggie sweaters help small dogs and indoor pets retain body heat, allowing them to brave the cold longer.

Paw protectors can also help keep your dog warm, according to Thoma. They prevent snow from freezing in clumps between the animal's toes (particularly a problem among long-haired dogs), which can cause frostbite.

Here are some other cold weather tips for dog owners:

- Don't let your dog walk through puddles. Hidden shards of ice or glass can cut the animal's delicate paw pads.
- After a bath, be sure your dog is thoroughly dried before you take him outdoors.
- Don't leave your dog alone in a car on cold days for more than half an hour, and definitely not overnight. Hypothermia, a condition in which body temperature drops below normal, can set in; if it lasts more than two or three hours, the animal may freeze to death.
- A doghouse is a must for outdoor canines. Just make sure the shelter doesn't face north, says Thoma. Put straw on the floor and a heavy blanket over the door to keep in warmth created by the dog's body heat.

SUNDAY BUSINESS DIGEST

Eastern on hold

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department has asked a bankruptcy judge to hold up approval of sales of some Eastern Airlines assets while it studies the impact on competition

The department said Tuesday it filed the request with the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New York City, which has supervised Eastern's operations for the past two years.

The department said it was particularly concerned about the proposed sale of departure gates and landing rights at Los Angeles International Airport, O'Hare International Airport near Chicago and National Airport near Washington. It said it had asked the airline for more information.

Good sports

HOUSTON — Oshman's Sporting Goods Inc. plans to consolidate administration of its two main divisions in California and Texas at its Houston headquarters, company officials say.

Alvin Lubetkin, Oshman's chief executive, said Tuesday the company was compelled to make the "difficult decision" to consolidate because of the nation's slowing economy and the highly competitive retail industry.

The company expects to spend about $1.5 million in transferring administrative operations for its Santa Ana, Calif.-based division to Houston.

Habits for sale

ATLANTA — As Equifax grows as an information powerhouse, so may consumer protests.

Last week a flood of complaints caused Equifax and Lotus Development Corp. to cancel plans to sell data on the spending habits of 120 million consumers.

In response, C.B. "Jack" Rogers Jr., president and chief executive of Equifax, points to the need for businesses to get information on consumers to reduce their potential risks and make timely decisions.

Rug pulled

ATLANTA — The American spender's urge to splurge has been replaced by an urge to purge. In corporate as well as household budgets, durable goods such as carpet are being added to the it-can-wait list.

Floor-coverings industry watchers say the 10-year replacement cycle that's a mainstay of the residential carpet segment hasn't materialized this time.

Thomas J. Billman, a former Bethesda savings and loan executive, who fled the United States after allegedly transferring $22 million in thrift's funds to numbered Swiss bank accounts, will be profiled by Fox's "America's Most Wanted," in a remote broadcast from Washington, D.C., February 1, 1991.

Fuel Harvesters up and running

■ Fuel Harvesters has completed its move from California to Midland and is busy getting its machine manufacturing operations up to full speed.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Midland's newest industrial citizen, Fuel Harvesters Equipment, is settling into its new home and ready for business.

"We're here," said owner Powell Clinton. "I got moved in three weeks ago, and things are moving faster now." The company has renovated the former French Oil Tool facility at 2501 Commerce and installed $300,000 worth of machinery used to manufacture the parts for the machines it builds.

Fuel Harvesters manufacturers machinery used in recycling wood products such as crates and pallets. The company is relocating its corporate headquarters from Grass Valley, Calif. to Midland but will retain a manufacturing facility in California because the company has enough orders to keep both facilities operating.

The company announced its move to Midland last April, and began manufacturing replacement parts for its machines in Midland a month later. Now the company has begun work on its first screen plant, which Clinton says will be completed in 60 days. The shop can make seven or eight units at a time, which take 60 days to build, and Clinton says he expects to be completing one machine a week within three to four months

Grinders grind wood into chips that can be used in landfills, or as mulch.

Screeners separate the chips from such items as nails or plastic. The grinders come in six different configurations and range in price from $105,000 to $240,000 with the average price around $170,000. Screeners also come in six different configurations and range is price from $90,000 to $140,000, with the average price $125,000.

Already Fuel Harvesters employs 20, and will be adding 10 more within the next two months. Clinton and shop manager Billy Crites are currently looking for experienced metal fabricators, a sales coordinator and accountant.

Clinton founded Fuel Harvesters in 1982 and decided to leave California because of operating costs. "In California, industrial land goes for $150,000 an

Houston lawyer looks to revive jazz scene

Associated Press

HOUSTON — A generation ago, Houston was a significant stop on the jazz circuit, with names like Milton Larkin and Arnett Cobb jamming on live radio broadcasts from the Shamrock or later La Bastille.

Now, a Houston lawyer is trying to spark a resurgence in the Houston jazz scene with his year-old recording label, Justice Records.

"It's important that Houston, particularly with the size of Houston and the international nature of the city itself, ... not lose its cultural base," said Randall Jamail, president and founder of Justice Records.

"We've already seen what happens when you put all of your chips in one basket, an oil and gas basket, or whatever," Jamail said. "It is important that these fine artists get an opportunity to showcase themselves, their talents, their arts, or they will leave and Houston will be the loser."

Last year, Jamail, 33, gave up a lucrative law practice with his father, renown Houston plaintiffs' attorney Joe Jamail, to pursue jazz production. Since then, his firm has released five recordings with 10 more planned for next year.

"People are making music here," said Jamail, a former songwriter and rock-and-roll producer. "But in terms of a full-service, independent record label that signs its artists, that produces, that distributes and promotes on an international basis, there was none. That to me was an incredible challenge, a very teasing situation."

"I have no doubt that it will work; it is working. All these principles would be meaningless if I didn't think we could make money doing it," he said.

Soviet studies Alaskan-style capitalism

■ Alaska has become a classroom to a would-be Soviet entrepreneur, making the transition from bureaucrat to businessman.

Associated Press

ANCHORAGE — At a time when most new Soviet-American trading ventures follow an axis leading west from Moscow, one ambitious Soviet entrepreneur-in-training is exploring a different frontier.

Alaska is classroom and market for Sergey Kolesnik, who left the far eastern city of Magadan to learn American capitalism.

He has taken university classes, worked stints in banks and businesses, and helped manage a joint venture selling Soviet handicrafts wholesale.

For Kolesnik, Alaska is full of opportunity and historical significance: The company he works for has its roots in the Russian fur trade of more than 200 years ago.

Working in Alaska is also very practical. It takes just three hours to fly from Anchorage to Magadan — 45 minutes from Nome to the Soviet city of Provideniya.

Kolesnik, 38, arrived in Anchorage about a year ago at the invitation of Magadan-Alaska, a joint venture of Anchorage-based Community Enterprise Development Corp. and the Magadan trade department.

Kolesnik said he believes the Soviet Union's economic future depends on the development of small businesses. He plans to use what he's learning in Alaska to help run a business at home.

"Nobody there has any knowledge in foreign trade, except maybe guys from Moscow. So we have to train ourselves," he said.

On the wall over Kolesnik's desk hangs a large poster of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev — the man he said made his transition "from bureaucrat to businessman" possible.

"There is no choice. There's just one way — the common sense way," he said about introducing private enterprise into the Soviet Union. "The country's very disorganized. I don't know how I'll use my knowledge. I only know it's not enough."

Kolesnik is a member of the Soviet Communist Party and a former official of the Komsomol, or Young Communists. He says he had a basic understanding of free-market economics before coming to the United States, but seeing it in practice has been full of surprises.

"I thought that in America, huge companies and corporations were the owners of everything. I didn't expect such a big structure of small businesses," he said.

Kolesnik said capitalism isn't quite as cruel to its have-nots as he expected, although he clings to communism as a gentler theory.

"Its biggest idea is protection for people, and that's a good idea, especially poor people," he said. "The wrong idea was that everybody has to be equal. In our reading, that meant equally poor. I think everybody has to be equally rich.

"People have to share profit for society and their community. I still believe this idea."

His work for Community Enterprise Development Corp. — a non-profit group founded to address poverty and employment issues in rural Alaska — has exposed him to programs aimed at helping low-income people, he said.

It also has exposed him to many aspects of American employment.

CEDC owns the Alaska Commercial Co., which operates a string of general stores across the Alaska Bush and dates back to the Russian-American Co., which was started by fur traders.

One of Kolesnik's first Alaska assignments was to spend a few weeks working at the company's Barrow store. He worked every job from stock boy to manager and came to respect his bosses' work ethic.

"The manager and the vice manager were unbelievably helpful," said Kolesnik. "And they worked so hard — 16 or 18 hours a day. It was difficult for me, but it was fun for them to work."

He said he's learned that Soviet businesses must offer incentives to employees to provide good service.

Since returning from Barrow, Kolesnik has taken courses at the University of Alaska and Alaska Pacific University and has been a trainee at National Bank of Alaska, among other jobs.

Basin rig count takes steep drop

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The Permian Basin rig count took one of its steepest drops since the price crash of 1986 this week, falling 47 from 180 to 133, but the drop is not expected to reflect any long term trend in Permian Basin drilling activity.

Industry sources say they are at loss to explain the sudden drop. "It is probably due to a number of wells being completed all at once with the rigs having no place to go," said Tom Orneles, who compiles the Permian Basin Rig Count for Baker Hughes Tool Co.

Gene Grimes, vice president of Grace Drilling Co. and president of the Permian Basin Chapter of the International Association of Drilling Contractors said the drop could be seasonal to some degree.

"There weren't too many bids in January," said Grimes. "A number of rigs finished up with no place to move to. Large drops like this happen a lot in January and February. Every year it's like this. The oil industry is uncertain about the price of oil."

Julian Martin, Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners, also sees the rig count decline as seasonal. "Every year end we have this fall out," Martin said.

However, statistics maintained by the Reporter-Telegram indicate that while there have been slight drops in the January-February period for the past two years, there have been no drops of this magnitude, which reflects a 26 percent drop.

Despite this, the sudden decrease in the rig count, which has bobbed up and down only slightly for most of the year, is not expected to reflect a general downturn in drilling.

Neither do national rig statistics indicate a drilling downturn. The national rig count this week (1051) was down only 14 rigs, from last week, while the Texas rig count was down only eight rigs.

HOBOKEN, N.J. (AP) — As soon as the bombs began falling on Iraq, oil analyst Thomas P. Blakeslee was on the phone, scrambling to get a handle on the after-hours cash market for crude oil.

He and others in the oil trading business eventually were swept into a nonstop cycle of charting the war-induced ups and downs of crude prices in Tokyo, London and New York.

Oil had plunged on news that the aerial attack on Iraq was going well. Then it surged at some points when the horrors of the Persian Gulf war were shown on television.

Blakeslee listened to the news. He sorted through a constant swirl of Mideast rumors. He stared at the latest oil prices ticking off on an array of computer screens at his desk in the financial consulting firm of Pegasus Econometric Group Inc. in Hoboken.

He was never far from several direct phone lines to the floor of the New York Mercantile Exchange, the world's largest energy market, just across the Hudson River in downtown Manhattan. He was often on more than one line, talking fast.

Blakeslee kept his finger on the pulse of oil with an intensity that might seem like an obsession, particularly while the Mercantile Exchange was in business. Deals for thousands, even millions, of barrels of oil can be cut in seconds, and there is no time for a trader to pause.

"You have to keep watching it all the time, from 9:45 to 3:10," Blakeslee said in an interview.

Ironically, the 23-year-old analyst, who realized at age 17 he was hooked by the allure of crude oil trading, has never seen any of the stuff. Outside of a knick-knack souvenir jug full of North Sea Brent crude, that is.

"Have I ever seen crude oil?" Blakeslee said. "No. Not in terms of any real quantity."

In fact, most of the people who buy and sell crude oil futures, which the industry calls "paper barrels" of oil, have never seen any oil. Most hope they never do, because it would complicate their pattern of doing all their deals on paper.

"That's something you have to be very, very careful about," Blakeslee said. "It would be very costly for someone to actually take possession. You have to be very careful not to take delivery of a product if you're a speculator."

He's quick to say that the big players in the futures market are in the oil business, hedging their business against any unexpected volatility rather than speculating. Oil producers agree to sell oil for a specified price, and if crude oil suddenly crashes, the futures deal protects them from the loss they suffer while selling their "wet barrels" of crude.

Refiners and marketers might agree to buy oil for a specified price, and if crude rises, they make money on their futures trades that offset the higher price they must pay for actual oil.

About a week before the war with Iraq got under way, Blakeslee advised a client who runs a refinery to buy into several futures contracts. He said the client subsequently was protected when the price of oil plunged a record $10.56 per barrel the day after the bombing started.

"It kept them from taking a loss, I'd say saving them $5.4 million," Blakeslee said. "It's not that they made it, but they didn't lose it."

After spending long days doing business with the hedgers, Blakeslee loses patience with the vocal critics of oil futures trading. During the fall, for example, Sen. Joseph I. Lieberman, D-Conn., referred to oil traders as "speculator sharks" and held a hearing into their trading practices.

"It gets me," Blakeslee said. "These people come out and say these 25-year-olds are ruining the economy by speculation. Over 90 percent of the trades are done by hedgers."

Blakeslee's first taste of oil trading came six years ago. He had just gotten out of high school and landed a job on the floor of the exchange, as a clerk for a small trading firm that since has been bought out.

"I realized this was the purest form of trading, and it made my blood boil," Blakeslee said. "People with a lot of product have the power to move the market. The reason I stuck to crude oil, it's the backbone of our industrial economy."

Blakeslee went on to earn double degrees in economics and political science from Columbia University. As oil rose and fell the last five or six months on news and rumors from the Persian Gulf crisis, he found his background in political science more helpful than his background in economics.

Still, the key is to watch all the oil trades, keeping track of where and when they occurred in order to figure out market players' next step, he said. Then, traders have to guess what will spark the rallies and the crashes.

"Three things drive a market," Blakeslee said. "It's technical, fundamental and psychological. The key to a good analyst is to be able to know which is more important at a certain time."

Blakeslee called himself "damn good." But he has said in the past that more than 90 percent of all futures players end up losing money. When asked for his own batting average, Blakeslee is hard pressed to give one.

"To give you a percentage, I don't know, because you try to forget the bad trades," he said.

Plastics company agrees give environmental statement

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Formosa Plastics Corp. has agreed to provide an environmental impact study of its proposed $1.5 billion plant expansion at Point Comfort.

Formosa and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency agreed Wednesday that the company would cover EPA's costs in preparing the study.

Company spokesman Joe Wyatt said Formosa's decision was a response to recent requests from Buck Wynne, chairman of the Texas Water Commission, and from the Calhoun County Marine Advisory Committee.

The EPA's delay in declaring that the project would have no significant environmental impact also was a factor in the company's decision, Wyatt said.

Environmentalists and officials with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for the past year have pressed the EPA to require Formosa to conduct the study.

New Mexico EOR tax break backed

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Legislation introduced in the New Mexico House would give a tax break to oil producers who extract oil that is impossible to recover by conventional methods.

House Bill 6 would cut the severance tax rate on all types of oil produced through enhanced recovery technology, also known as secondary and tertiary recovery.

The bill, which is backed by New Mexico oil producers, would lower the severance tax rate from the current 3.75 percent of the taxable value of the oil produced to 1.87 percent.

The 1985 measure drew opposition from smaller oil companies and some major companies, who said it would benefit only one or two companies.

"This (year's) bill would allow the independent oil companies to participate equitably," said Darwin Van De Graaff, executive vice president of the New Mexico Oil & Gas Association, made up of major oil companies in the state.

Alvin Baca, head of the Independent Petroleum Association of New Mexico, the association for smaller producers, said the group's board supports the bill.

Magazines rush to fill special niches

HOUSTON (AP) — Magazine publishing in Houston is witnessing a mini-boom in recent months with the advent of several publications catering to such special interests as sports and country music.

No fewer than five small magazines have emerged in the past six months. Although they have small budgets and even smaller staffs, the editorial entrepreneurs hope to carve out a profitable niche of their own.

"There is a whole new crop this year," said Kevin Clear, publisher of Creneau Media Group, which publishes five small magazines in the Houston area.

Creneau, a French word meaning niche, produces magazines that target affluent neighborhoods in Houston. It also unveiled a magazine about downtown Houston happenings shortly after the recent announcement that Houston Downtown Magazine would cease publication after 14 years.

Some of the other new magazines include Country Spirit, a monthly that covers country music with a Texas twist, and Houston Sport, a quarterly focusing on local sporting personalities and events.

Clear is in the process of unveiling three more magazines. The first issues of Tanglewood and Bellaire, which cater to residents of those two neighborhoods, rolled off the presses last week. The downtown magazine, which has not yet been named, is expected to be available in May.

Now there's something even better. Friends Only.

It's a new, easy-to-use phone accessory that screens your calls before the phone even rings. It tells callers you have a protected line and asks them to enter your 3-digit security code. If they enter your code, the call goes through. If not, they get a dial tone.

To allow all calls to pass through, simply push the on/off button and Friends Only is deactivated.

It's affordable, easy to install, and you can change your code anytime. It's more convenient than getting a new or unlisted number, and most important of all, it lets you control access to your phone.

Gleaming exhibits don't hide builders' gloom

The National Association of Home Builders opened a three-day convention and trade show here amid an industry slump that shows no immediate sign of improving and an economic climate that has taken on added uncertainty because of the Persian Gulf war.

Housing starts were down in 1990 to 1.2 million, the lowest level since the recession of 1982, the government said just before the convention opened. NAHB President Martin Perlman told reporters covering the convention he expects starts to fall some more — to about 1 million this year.

"The credit crunch is more severe than we anticipated at this time last year," said Perlman, a Houston builder. "Builders just can't get the funds for acquisition of land."

Perlman said he hoped a recovery would begin around the middle of the year.

"A lot depends on this war," he said.

On the trade show floor, a dazzling array of the latest in home products made it easy to forget such troubles. Whirlpool baths by the dozens, individual steam rooms, towering gothic window units and ultra modern kitchen appliances made it clear that luxurious living is still part of the American dream.

Books analyze Texas economy

By Evan Ramstad

DALLAS (AP) — Texas responded to its first major setback with the battle cry "Remember the Alamo!"

But no one is yelling "Remember the credit crunch!" or "Remember Texas-owned banks!" to help Texans rally out of the state's late '80s economic decline, although the emergence of a handful of books about the Texas bust is one sign the state is getting past it.

Zuckerman

Books like Craig Hall's "News of My Death Was Greatly Exaggerated," Ed Zuckerman's "Small Fortunes," and David Ronin's "Rx for Texas" reopen old wounds, pour in a little salt and then offer some advice to prevent another injury.

"I really believe that the Texas story needs to be told," said Hall, chief of Dallas-based Hall Financial Group, one of the nation's largest private real estate syndicators.

"I think that so many people, in my travels across the county, while aware of Texas' problems on a surface level, weren't aware on a human level," Hall said.

"In Texas, we've seen people who had fourth-generation businesses going broke. It's easy to talk about that in abstract," he said.

Both men had good product ideas and growing enterprises. But neither had the cash or stamina to hang on when banks started collapsing and credit dried up.

"I met them in a time of great euphoria. It was the middle of the Reagan era and there was money everywhere," Zuckerman said in a phone interview from New York, where he is a magazine writer.

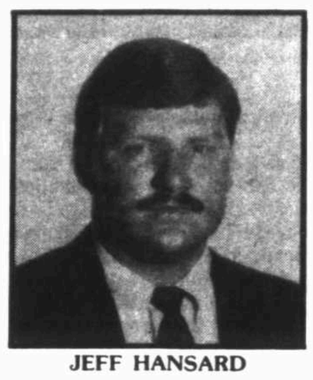

For Teal and Binion, Texas' boom in the early '80s was "too good to be true and it turned out that it was," Zuckerman said. "When endless prosperity in Texas turned out to be a myth, they were one of the first victims."

Zuckerman said he wrote his book because Teal and Binion "were really interesting, amusing and entertaining.

for $150,000 an acre," he pointed out. "That plus the cost of building a plant like this would total $2 million. I was able to get this for considerably less than I could in California."

He was drawn to West Texas because, after oil prices fell, a number of facilities came on the market at low prices. "I looked around West Texas after oil prices went down. This was the nicest plant and Midland was the nicest city," he said. He is pleased with Midland and with the quality of workers he has found.

He was also drawn to Texas because of its less restrictive labor laws and lack of a state income tax. "There are some negatives, like workers' compensation, but they're offset by the benefits."

Gaining a second manufacturing facility in Midland has allowed the company to market more heavily than it has, according to Clinton, who says he has doubled the advertising budget and increased the number of trade magazines the company in which it advertises.

Clinton says he does a lot of business with cities on both coasts, especially in the Northeast where landfills are closing. He also deals with growing cities such as San Antonio.

As more and more recycling laws are passed, he says, cities will be considering machines such as the ones his company makes. He predicted that most cities with a population of 50,000 or more in a 10-mile radius will soon be needing such recycling machines.

And he sees nothing but continued growth in demand, especially as more cities and states require laws mandating recycling. He notes that his machines could remove 20 percent of the solid waste from the country's waste stream, and "our machines are only scratched the surface."

To date, the company has sold 225 grinders alone, and Clinton observed that they are getting to the point where they will need replacing.

While Clinton has received numerous calls from other countries, such as Great Britain, Germany and Australia, and is currently working on a project in Boerne, Switzerland, he does not see Fuel Harvesters serving the international market. He explained that demand in the U.S. is so strong, and the market potential so great, he doesn't think they will be able to spare any machines for overseas. He did say, though, that the company will probably establish a presence in Canada because of its proximity to the U.S.

He sees no place for Fuel Harvesters to go but up. "This business isn't recession-proof, but it's close. An economic slowdown merely slows our growth rate."

JAZZ: Scene revival seen

(From 1G)

"I gave myself three years" to make a profit, he said. "It looks like that's going to happen in 18 months. ... This is not a philanthropic institution."

Dave Catney, 29, a jazz pianist and instructor at the Houston High School for Performing and Visual Arts, recorded his first solo album, "First Flight," with Justice Records. It was released Oct. 1, along with Houston vocalist Kelley Gray's "Standards."

"It's really rare to see something like that happening in a place like Houston," Catney said.

"The point is, you don't have to be living in one of these jazz meccas," Catney said. "I like living in Houston; it's a good place. It could use a little improvement, but you can say the same thing about New York."

Vibraphonist Harry Sheppard, 62, lived in New York for most of his career and moved to Houston six years ago when he learned his daughter, Susan, had terminal cancer.

"I was considered a huge success in New York," said Sheppard, who toured with Benny Goodman and performed with Billye Holiday and Dizzy Gillespie during their heydays. "New York is a tough town because every jazz musician in the world is there.

"Back in those days, I was playing with legends all the time," Sheppard said. "I never thought I was up to it. I was in my 20s and they were in their 50s. And now, most of them are gone."

Sheppard's most recent release, his first since 1983, is "Viva Brazil," recorded by Justice. The album hit the Gavin jazz music charts at No. 31 on Oct. 22 and is drawing acclaim in the international market in the Pacific Rim.

Justice's first release, the late jazz guitarist Emily Remler's "This is Me," reached No. 1 on the Gavin chart the same week and 24-year-old drummer Sebastian Whittaker's "First Outing" ranked at 8.

"It's all very exciting," Jamail said. "We're heading into the Christmas season and it should only get better."

SOVIET: Learns capitalism

(From 1G)

The demand for such merchandise in Alaska, Canada and the Pacific Northwest is bigger than the company can meet, said Jim Murphy, who works with Kolesnik as the project's American manager. The problem is on the supply end, he said, because of economic turmoil in the Soviet Union.

The history of Russian exploration in Alaska and the Pacific Northwest makes the area a prime market for Soviet souvenirs, he said.

But Kolesnik said it will be tough to make ventures like his profitable without the easing of U.S. trade restrictions on such Soviet goods.

Kolesnik said he would like to stay in Alaska for another year, but only if his wife and two children, who remain in the Soviet Union, are able to come over.

Murphy said also hopes that happens. "He's a very special businessman. He's trying to learn enough to help out his own people in the Soviet Union," he said.

"We keep him hopping," he said. "The way the Soviets seem to operate is they all stay up until 4:30 in the morning talking, so he comes in red-eyed."

SCOTT BURNS

Wise spending can reap dividends

By Scott Burns

Allow me to introduce the Personal Spending Portfolio, a small collection of ideas that may be the equivalent of owning stocks worth thousands of dollars.

Burns

The basic idea is very simple: a small amount of attention to how we SPEND our money is an investment that can pay major dividends. Better still, those "dividends" are tax-free.

Lets start with something easy.

You can get it simply by using cash instead of plastic when you purchase gasoline. The average driver, according to the Statistical Abstract of the United States, uses 58 gallons a month. It is now common practice at many gas stations to have one price for a cash purchase and another for a credit card purchase with the credit card purchase costing about 4 cents a gallon more. Carry enough money to pay cash, a horde of about $72 a month based on a gasoline price of $1.25 a gallon, and you will save $2.32 a month or $27.84 a year by using cash.

That figures to a return of 39 percent.

There are limits to this, of course. For one thing, it only works for the amount of money you spend each month on gasoline. For another, there are some stations that charge the same amount for charged gasoline as for gasoline purchased with cash.

But if you are in the 28 percent tax bracket, you would need to earn $38.67 in dividends to equal the possible cash savings. To have that income you would need to have $1,000 invested in the Standard and Poors 500 stocks.

Try using cash instead of credit cards. Moving from saving interest on home mortgages to credit cards, Banker's Secret author Marc Eisenson points out in a new newsletter that you can pay $91.25 for every $20 dinner that you charge... IF you pay it off according to a typical credit card payment schedule.

With a payoff schedule that works out to 33 years and interest rates of 16 to 21 percent, he points out that a $2,000 credit card balance will cost you $7,125.98 in interest before it is paid off. If you increase your monthly payment by ten cents a day, you'll reduce the interest cost by $2,800. Raise the ante to an additional $25 a month and you save $5,900 in interest.

What many people don't understand is that a consumer debt costing 18 percent a year in nondeductible interest wipes out the income from many dollars in savings. Suppose, for instance, that you have $2,000 in credit card debt that costs you 18 percent or $360 a year. To pay that much you need to NET $360 a year in interest after paying income taxes. For people in the 28 percent tax bracket that means interest earnings of $500 in pre-tax interest. With the average bank money market deposit account now earning 5.91 percent, this means you need to have $8,460 in a bank account to offset the cost of $2,000 in bank card credit!

Want to have a Personal Portfolio but don't have any cash?

Clip coupons. Thousands of people do without owning any bonds. Instead, they read newspapers and clip promotional coupons. In the supermarket next to me last week, a woman had come equipped with a massive file of alphabetized coupons. She said she saved about 33 percent on all her purchases.

But I can tell you from personal experience that savings of about 10 percent require very little effort. If you assume a family grocery budget of $100 to $150 a week that translates into annual savings of $500 to $750 a year and a taxable equivalent income of about $700 to $1000 a year — to earn that much from being a shareholder in a major food company stock, such as General Mills, you would need to own shares worth over $22,000.

Worried about being seen with coupons? Don't. Some of the heaviest use of grocery coupons is in the most affluent areas.

In "Marketing to the Affluent" (Dow Jones Irwin) marketing professor Thomas J. Stanley observes that the only unique feature of the affluent is that they strive to spend LESS money than they can, not MORE. They have learned a vital secret: if you spend less than you earn, you will accumulate money; if you spend more than you earn, you will accumulate debt.

It's that simple.

First RTC sale draws 642 bids

DALLAS (AP) — The Resolution Trust Corp. received 642 offers for 270 Texas houses in its first sealed bid sale, the government agency said.

The accepted offers represent 123 percent of the reserve price of the properties, the RTC said Tuesday.

The agency was created in August 1989 to dispose of assets the government accumulates from failed thrifts.

The RTC's Southwest Region office in Dallas plans several sales to reduce the number of properties with a value of $100,000 or less in its portfolio.

Alvin Ailey dancers

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

The Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble brings an evening of dance to Midland's Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave., Feb. 22.

"The performer's reward is the audience's reaction," said Sylvia Waters, the ensemble's artistic director. "I want them to be certainly entertained and stimulated by the performance. I want it to speak to them."

The 8 p.m. performance, sponsored by the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Inc., includes two works choreographed by Ailey — "Isba" and "Revelations" as well as another work — "I see the Moon...and the Moon Sees Me," by free-lance choreographer Ulysses Dove, a former member of the Ailey Company.

"Isba" was first performed in November 1983 at Miami Beach, Fla.

"It was really kind of a predecessor of a later and larger work that he did first on the Royal Danish Company called 'Caverna Magica,' " said Ms. Waters, who added it was Ailey who first suggested the second company perform this work. "We have been doing it for the last two years, and it really has become quite a staple of our repertoire."

"We are very fortunate to be able to do it. It is a work that really came from the soul of Alvin's early Texas background. It is a very universal work. It is not just about black America.

"It really is a dance of great beauty, joy and celebration of life. It is a favorite of many people who have seen the Ailey Company. The dancers love doing it, and it has really found its place among modern dance classics."

A principal dancer with the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater from 1968 to 1975, Ms. Waters has been the ensemble's artistic director since it began.

The ensemble is a company of 12 dancers selected from the scholarship program at the Ailey school who stay with the company one or two years and stay three years.

"The company is always in transit, and that's by design," Ms. Waters said. "This company is kind of like a preparation for what I call the real world. Some go on to the parent company. Some go on to other companies. Here they work to develop their performance skills."

The ensemble traces its beginning to 1974 when Alvin Ailey formed a workshop composed of scholarship students from his American Dance Center, the official school of the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater. This handpicked group of students became the original members of the Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble. The director working with the students at the time had not been a member of the Ailey Company.

Ailey wanted someone from the company to be the director of an apprentice company, Ms. Waters said. "It was at that time he approached me, and I was most surprised. I really didn't anticipate my future being as a director.

"When you're dancing, you're not always thinking about what you're going to do beyond dancing. And also I didn't envision being in charge in that way with responsibilities I feel go with the position. Obviously, Alvin saw something in me that he felt would help to develop younger dancers."

She said she had to think about Ailey's offer.

"I'm glad I consented to do it. It has really turned out to be a very exciting job."

Ms. Waters holds a bachelor of science degree in dance from the Juilliard School, where she studied with Martha Graham, members of the Graham company and Anthony Tudor. She also was a scholarship student at the Martha Graham School of Dance and performed with Donald McKayle's company.

Ms. Waters finds her job rewarding because she is part of an organization that has given her "great spiritual joy and opportunity" and she finds herself in a position to pass those gifts on to others.

To a young aspiring and talented dancer who wanted a career in dance, Ms. Waters would say, "It's hard work. The economic rewards are not always as great as other professions. One has to be very, very disciplined and dedicated and really want to do this to do this. It really involves your total self."

She calls herself fortunate to have had a long association with the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater.

"When I joined the Ailey Company, it was 13 dancers, and when I left, it grew to 30 dancers. And in that time there was the building of the school and the board of directors. Things really just blossomed for the Ailey organization.

"I was here at that time when it really went from company to institution and Alvin's name became an institution. I have been very fortunate to be employed with a dance company for 22 years and a very exciting and internationally famous company with one of the most generous and gifted choreographers the world has known. That in itself is a milestone for a dancer.

"It's not that times were always easy (and) everything went very smooth and without crises. Not at all. But there's something very special about this company that speaks to its audiences and gives such purpose to the lives of its dancers and all of those involved with the orgapization."

Ms. Waters credits Ailey as head of the organization as the reason for its special success, citing generosity as an artist as among Ailey's greatest gifts.

"He gave to his dancers and encouraged his dancers to look within themselves and to express that love, that beauty, those wonderful bodies.

"He was extremely musical. Music was very important to him, and he was a real theater person. So when he did pieces about the blues and his early childhood memories of those Texas churches and those Texas beer halls that all came from a very deep source. He was an inspiration to anyone who ever knew him.

"He wanted his company to be the the best that dance could offer. And he loved all kinds of dance, that's why there's such a diversity of repertoire in his company. He was not an elitist person at all. He really believed that arts are for the people and not just for those who can afford it and are necessarily educated in dance. His audiences were the people.

"He's someone who is very, very much missed," she said, referring to his death. "He lives in the hearts of us all. His legacy is one that we all feel very committed to continuing."

"Judith Jamison is someone Alvin had for many years felt would be the natural inheritor. He wasn't speaking about his death at the time. I had heard Alvin mention this several times. Her affiliation with him as artist, mentor and director had always been very, very close. She was the star of the Ailey Company for many years. He really had her in mind for a very long time."

Although Ms. Jamison had started a company of her own two years ago, her affiliation with the Ailey company was still close.

"It seems natural to everyone that she is the director of the Ailey company. She a very, very exciting and in-

Field stars in adventure film

'Not Without My Daughter' depicts repression of Iranian women

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In 1984, American Betty Mahmoody went to Iran with her Iranian husband and their daughter for what she thought would be a two-week visit.

Then her doctor-husband announced they were staying, and Betty found herself with no rights and no way to return to America with her daughter.

Betty Mahmoody's ordeal is the subject of a Pathe-MGM movie aptly titled "Not Without My Daughter" starring Sally Field. The picture provides a chilling depiction of the repression of women in Iran and may evoke protests from Islamic fundamentalists, here and abroad.

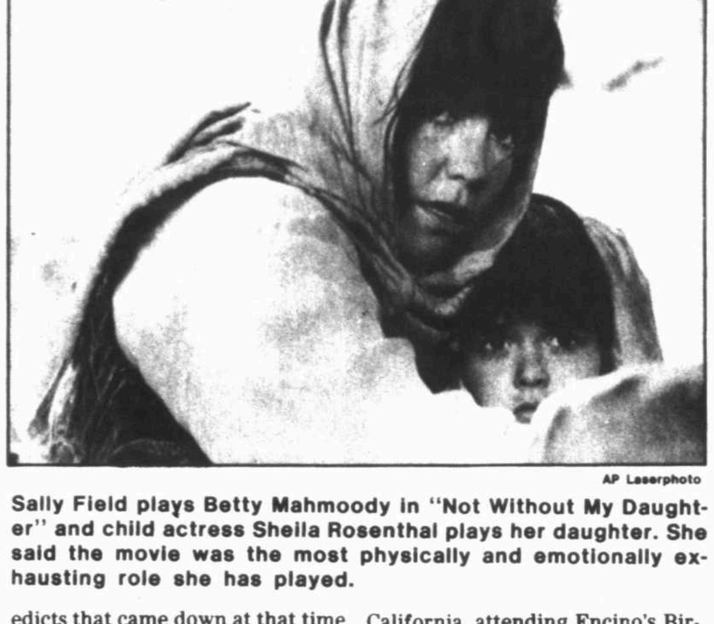

Three of the film's principals were here to help launch its release: Mahmoody, now a lecturer and author in Michigan (for security reasons she doesn't specify where); Alfred Molina, London-born of Spanish-Italian parents, who plays the husband; and Field.

"That's the way it was," Mahmoody said of the screen version of the book she wrote with William Hoffer. "The only major difference was the escape, which was through the mountains with snow and the cold instead of the heat. There was no snow in Israel last year, so at the last minute they filmed in the heat."

Concerning any controversy the film might instigate, Field said: "Even though the Iranians are the heavies, the bad guys, Iranians were also the good guys who risked their lives to help her get out.

"Will there be controversy? I don't know. I do know the reaction of the Iranian actors we worked with. I spent a lot of time talking to them, especially the women, about their feelings about the film and what had gone on in their country. They thought the film was very accurate. I don't know, maybe the Iranians who live here will feel the same way.

"The film is about the laws and edicts that came down at that time and what went on at that time. I don't know what the reaction will be."

AP Laserphoto

Sally Field plays Betty Mahmoody in "Not Without My Daughter" and child actress Sheila Rosenthal plays her daughter. She said the movie was the most physically and emotionally exhausting role she has played.

Field, who has been developing projects through her Fogwood Productions, said she was simply a "hired hand" on "Not Without My Daughter." The film appealed to her "because it was a thriller, and action-adventure is something I have rarely done."

It also turned out to be the most physically and emotionally exhausting role she has played.

"Without a doubt; it was a killer," she said. "We were in Tel Aviv for 3½ months, my family and I. When we got back to the United States to do the American part, we really did get on the ground and kissed it. We really felt we had escaped, over the mountains and into Turkey."

Sally Field grew up in Southern California, attending Encino's Birmingham High School with such later notables as junk bond king Michael Milken and Hollywood superagent Michael Ovitz. ("Michael Milken was chief cheerleader," she remarked with a wry smile.) Acting seemed inevitable, since both her mother, Margaret Field, and stepfather, Jack Mahoney, were actors.

Perhaps no serious actor has had to overcome such beginnings; she was both Gidget and the Flying Nun in 1960s television series. But the 1976 television movie "Sybil," in which she portrayed a woman with 16 personalities, signaled her arrival as a dramatic performer. After Jane Fonda turned down the role of a Southern labor organizer in "Norma Rae," Field signed on and walked away with the 1979 Academy Award.

In 1984, she won her second Oscar for "Places in the Heart," exulting "You like me! You really like me!" She's had to live with that ever since.

As one of the few "bankable" female stars, Field sides with Meryl Streep and others about the inequities of the sexes. But she takes a pragmatic view:

"When you look at why it happens — whatever stupid sense it makes — it's a fact that more films are made with men. Therefore, the supply and demand is such that they work more often. The more you work, the more your salary goes up. If they don't work as often, their salaries go down.

"It's not about tenure, and it's not about talent. It's unfair, but what's fair? How're you going to get it fair? Good projects are always hard to find. When was it easy? I've never known it to be anything but excruciatingly difficult to find them.

"I'd like to have three or four projects a year to choose from. I do about one project a year, sometimes from my own company, sometimes from outside. I'm just lucky that the things I like — 'Not Without My Daughter,' 'Steel Magnolias' — happen to come my way."

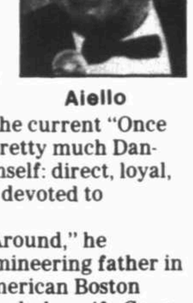

"Not Without My Daughter" shows how Mahtob (portrayed by Sheila Rosenthal) is the pawn in the struggle between her mother and her increasingly fanatical father. The girl witnesses savage beatings of her mother and experiences the air attacks during the Iran-Iraq war and the grueling and dangerous escape.

Mahtob's mother said she's "one incredible kid. ... (After the escape) she had negative feelings, as I did. I encouraged her to always appreciate the fact that she's half-Iranian and that she should appreciate the Iranian culture. We celebrate the Iranian New Year, and we cook Iranian food at home."

Danny Aiello didn't think about acting in his younger days

By Bob Thomas

Aiello

The blustery, outgoing character in "Moonstruck," "Do the Right Thing" and the current "Once Around" is pretty much Danny Aiello himself: direct, loyal, sentimental, devoted to family.

In "Once Around," he plays the domineering father in an Italian-American Boston family that includes wife Gena Rowlands and daughters Holly Hunter and Laura San Giacomo. The family is upended when an overbearing supersalesman, Richard Dreyfuss, marries Hunter.

Aiello was asked if the Bellas in the movie resemble other Italian families he has known, including his own.

"They're a little less combustible than the ones I'm accustomed to seeing," he replied. "The anger is somewhat suppressed. It's a liberally oriented family, which is unlike most Italian families; I seem to think they're more conservative, traditionalist.

"I think there's some language used in the Bella home, such as some four-letter words, that could never be used in an Aiello home. But society has changed so much that that particular value no longer exists."

Aiello (pronounced Eye-yello) displays a new talent in "Once Around": He sings three songs in the style of Frank Sinatra.

"That was sort of fulfilling my mother's dream," he remarked. "She said, 'Danny, I love when you act, but acting — I see you do that in the house all the time; you're you on the screen. I'd love to hear you sing.'

"It was devastating for me to do; in the bathtub it's a lot different than before a camera."

Like Olympia Dukakis, Rodney Dangerfield and a few other performers, Aiello was a latecomer to the acting life.

"I never had a thought about acting when I was a kid, because I was too busy earning money," he said. "I had a family at the age of 17. I have been married ever since; my wife and I have four children. I never thought of becoming an actor until the age of 35.

"I had just lost an important position as union president of the Greyhound Bus Company local. They sued me for $500,000, held the suit over my head until such time as I resigned. I had four children, I was broke, all my financial assets were gone to a lawyer. I had nothing.

"I gravitated to a place called the Improvisation, a theatrical hangout. The proprietor ... befriended me and loved me. I felt good about him. He knew I had children, so he gave me a job. He made me a bouncer ... at $190 a week, clear. I worked there for two years. Partly I would bounce, partly I would spell him as emcee when he wasn't there.

"That gave me the chance to take acting jobs from people who dropped in. I worked in showcase productions, off-Broadway, then on-Broadway. My first film was 'Bang the Drum Slowly.' I think I got the job because I could play baseball. ... I was a glorified extra, but I had lines and I was throughout the movie."

After that he worked both sides of the law in "Godfather Part II," "Fort Apache — The Bronx," "Once Upon a Time in America," "Harlem Nights" and other action movies. He also joined Woody Allen in "The Purple Rose of Cairo" and "Radio Days." Aiello showed a gentler side as Cher's suitor in "Moonstruck," then turned around to play a ghetto bigot who incites a race riot in Spike Lee's "Do the Right Thing." That brought him an Academy Award nomination as supporting actor.

"On Feb. 14, I'm in the garage of my house, packing to go to Cambridge, Mass., to begin 'Once Around.' My wife said, 'I'm going to watch the nominations on TV.' I said, 'Please, Sandy, don't watch it. If we hear, we hear.' She said she was going to watch it; in 36 years we've been married she never listens to me."

Soon he heard a "whoop" from the house, and he raced upstairs to see himself on the TV screen. He and his wife fell into each other's arms and laughed and cried. "Remember this moment," he said, "because it may never happen again."

Covering gulf war a 'scramble,' Sevareid says

NEW YORK (AP) — In June 1940, a rookie CBS reporter named Eric Sevareid covered the fall of France to Hitler's hordes. He did it live, on radio.

His method basically was the same way Americans got the news from Baghdad that the Persian Gulf war had begun. Sure, the war was on TV. But all you saw were maps and photographs of the reporters calling in the story.

"So far, it's been all right, it seems to me," Sevareid said of the new old-fashioned way of instant war news, in which satellite technology has made possible a first — live shots of missiles fighting missiles in Saudi Arabia.

"It's a scramble," he said of the pressure going live puts on TV reporters covering the war. "They're going to get some things wrong. But that's the way it is. It's not like composing a weekly essay on war and peace."

But it was as much a scramble in the early days of World War II, perhaps more so, even though Sevareid says, "I had some pretty good scoops simply because of radio" and its swift transmission of breaking news.

He'd make contact with CBS in New York — the network then was called the Columbia Broadcasting System — and "we'd talk over the shortwave radio. Generally, you'd have time to talk ahead of the broadcast."

Most times, a schedule was set for the calls. Sometimes, as when covering the exodus of French civilians, soldiers and politicians from Paris in 1940, he would look for a transmitter, begin reporting and hope it got through.

"Sometimes, we had to go blind, like during that flight from Paris," Sevareid said. He located a portable transmitter in southern France, got an engineer and began his radio report without advance warning:

"I had no two-way communication with New York. I'd just go on a French short-wave transmission, 'Calling New York, calling New York,' hoping they'd be listening and telling them I'd be talking at such and such a time, and hope they'd plug in the network. ... They did get it."

Good thing they did. He was the first to report that France was about to capitulate to Hitler and sue for an armistice.

After that, he joined Edward R. Murrow in London, helping cover the Battle of Britain and German bombing raids of the city. Later, he reported from China, Burma, Italy, southern France and finally, Germany, where the war ended.

"I don't like the rules and the censorship the Pentagon's trying to enforce — everybody in a pool and monitored interviews and all that sort of stuff," he said. "That's going to rebound against them because people are going to know there's a heavy hand of censorship, and so they're not going to believe official statments."

Sevareid, 78, retired from CBS News in 1977 after a honored career as a correspondent and commentator.

The 23-year-old Turner, who is from south Louisiana, plays "blues and rock 'n' roll with the kind of stage show proven to pack the house," says a release from Star Route Productions of San Antonio.

Gary Busey dedicated to music

By Betty Webb

N.Y. Times News Service

Those who have seen Gary Busey in movies such as "Lethal Weapon," "Insignificance" and "The Buddy Holly Story" (for which he was nominated for an Academy Award) tend to think of the native Texan as an actor.

They are only partially correct. Gary Busey is almost as fine a singer as he is an actor, and he wastes no time in telling you that he has been a musician for more than 25 years.

"Many people still don't realize that I did my own singing in 'The Buddy Holly Story,' " he said in a recent telephone interview. "Actually, I think that was the first movie where all the songs were recorded live, in a single take."

His dedication to music is as strong as his dedication to acting. "This concert that I'm putting on isn't any lark," he said. "Music is not a hobby. I grew up with rock 'n' roll, and even in high school I played drums in a band."

But Busey is one high school drummer who went on to play with such musicians as Bonnie Raitt, Hank Williams Jr., Leon Russell, Willie Nelson, Kris Kristofferson, Bruce Springsteen, David Crosby and Tom Petty.

It was while he was performing with Raitt that Busey made friends with her band, Padlock. Padlock is appearing with him in concerts.

Busey was generous in his praise of the group: "Yeah, I'm the front man, but you know, so much of creativity is really group effort. It's not fair to just give out one Academy Award for best actor. That award could correctly be cut up into 125 pieces and given out equally to every member of that actor's crew."

He was excited about performing with Padlock again, and said the tour will give them all a chance to develop a variety of approaches.

"We'll do a few Holly things, but mainly we'll be putting out a potpourri of sound," Busey said. "I'm not saying we'll be doing Beethoven, Mozart or Rachmaninoff, but we'll be playing from our hearts and souls.

"We'll play music that incorporates freedom, fast living in a vulnerable way, provocative coloring — all with a sonic healing boom!"

Busey is adamant about music making people feel good.

"That's one of the things that was so wonderful about Buddy Holly's music," he explained about his fellow Texan. "All those good vibrations coming straight at you all at once. I can really understand what Buddy was trying to do because music means that much to me, too. It's an out-front situation which lets my energy portray the musical standard that I've always had in my heart."

Busey described his own music as being a mixture of Holly's good vibrations and his own rampant energy.

"But my music still has a certain amount of grace to it, and being an actor, I try to instill it with a very high visual content. I even add some romantic edges for the ladies."

Scientists develop one-arm robot that can make pizzas

N.Y. Times News Service

A one-arm robot that knows the sound of words such as pepperoni and mozzarella, as well as where to find some, is offering a paralyzed truck driver the chance at a new life as the owner of a pizzeria.

The robot, which is able to respond to spoken commands, is central to a system designed by Carnegie Mellon University scientists in Pittsburgh. It operates from behind a semicircular array of pots that contain pizza ingredients.

If "Pizzabot," as the machine is being called, is told to give a customer the works, it swings from pot to pot, ladling on the tomato sauce, sprinkling on the cheese and adding green peppers, pepperoni, onions, black olives, and other ingredients.

Then, when it has completed the ordered combination, Pizzabot picks up a spatula and slides the new pizza onto a ramp leading to the oven.

"This machine offers me the chance to become independent," said Sandford Blatt, 42, a former Pittsburgh truck driver who was paralyzed from the neck down in a work accident in 1977.

Blatt has a franchise with a Pittsburgh-based pizza chain and hopes to open his own place this summer. The Carnegie Mellon scientists hope his will be the first of many businesses like it.

"We set out to create a state-of-the-art robotic system to help someone with a disability work," said Dr. K.G. Engelhardt, director of the university's Center for Human Services Robotics.

Customers will place their orders by phone or in person. Blatt or a quadriplegic co-worker will repeat the order over a headset connected to the computer.

Garnished to order, the pizza follows a stainless-steel ramp into an oven, where it cooks six minutes at about 550 degrees before leaving on a conveyor belt.

DANCE: Alvin Ailey described as muscial

(From 1H)

spired person as a choreographer," Ms. Waters said, adding that they all felt "in very good hands under her direction."

She believes Ms. Jamison will continue in the Ailey tradition.

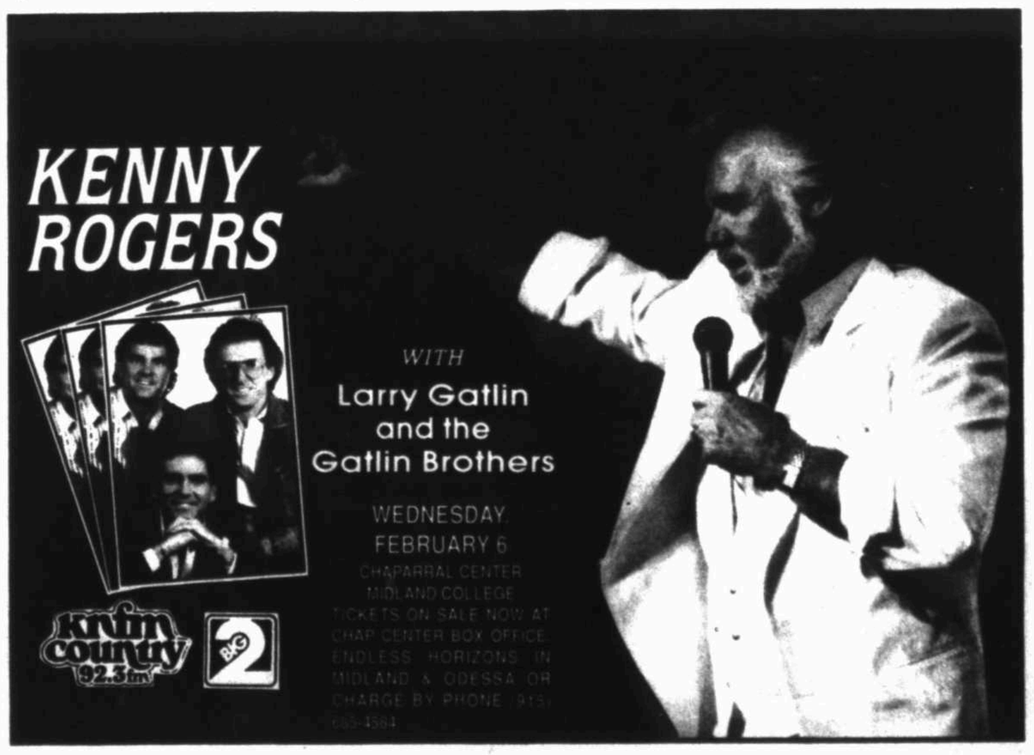

"It has always been a repertory company. It has never been the company of a single choreographer. Alvin always invited many diverse kinds of choreographers to set works on his company. The name American Dance Theater is really very purposefully chosen in that it would be a repertory company of such diversity of style.

"He often talked about the total dancer; that dancer who was equally proficient in ballet, modern, jazz and ethnic dance styles. So there's always been a eclecticism about the company that really contributes to its excitement. Judith really intends to carry through in that tradition."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	4 ♡

Opening lead: King of ◇

Perhaps the most difficult aspect of declarer play is the use of entries. Spend one unwisely and a laydown contract can go down the tubes. Consider this hand.

North-South were playing five-card majors. Hence North, with only three-card support, but opening bid values and a potential ruffing value in diamonds, had an easy jump to four hearts as a rebid. As the cards lay, three no trump would not have been a success.

West led the king of diamonds and, when declarer held up at the first trick, continued with the queen. Declarer took the ace, ruffed a diamond and drew two rounds of trumps. Next came the ace and king of spades and a spade ruff. When that suit failed to break evenly, declarer tried for the fulfilling trick by leading a club to the ace and back to the queen. Unfortunately, West held the king—down one.

Had declarer timed the hand better, he could have established a spade for the fulfilling trick. South squandered an entry by taking the diamond ruff at the wrong time.

Holding up the diamond ace was correct technique, but after winning the ace at trick two, declarer should have drawn two rounds of trumps immediately. Next, the ace and king of spades should have been cashed, followed by a spade ruff. Now the diamond ruff serves as an entry for another spade ruff, and that sets up the long spade for a club discard, while the ace of clubs is still on the table as an entry.

Note that it makes no difference which defender is short in spades. For example, if West has the remaining heart and can overruff, declarer still has enough entries to the board to set up and utilize the long spade for a club discard.

Ex-reporter writes about 'new Russians'

By Alan Boyle
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — Hedrick Smith, the author of "The Russians" and "The New Russians," swears that he's not planning to write "The Even Newer, Improved Russians."

Of course, that's what he said the last time.

During a recent trip to Seattle, the former New York Times Moscow correspondent freely acknowledged that he misjudged the Russians when he wrote "The Russians" in the 1970s. He felt then that the Russian psyche was so bogged down in centuries of absolute rule and lack of initiative that fundamental change was impossible.

Mikhail Gorbachev, and, more importantly, a new generation of Soviets, proved him wrong.

"I underestimated the capacity of these people to become involved," he said.

When Smith returned to the Soviet Union two years ago, he found new legions of free-thinking sociologists, filmmakers, activists and entrepreneurs — the 10 to 15 percent of Soviet society Smith calls the "new Russians."

He also saw the flip side of the reform program Gorbachev dubbed "restructuring," or "perestroika": the black marketers, the extremists, the apparatchiks who were scrambling to keep their perks, and the envious cynics who would rather smash perestroika's successes than share in them.

"We've been too concerned about whether Gorbachev will survive, instead of whether the reforms will survive," he said.

In his short-term forecast, Smith points out that Gorbachev has followed a zigzag pattern through his reforms.

"Every fall he tightens up a bit, and every spring and summer he tends to loosen up a bit," he said.

Gorbachev's current shift toward some sort of crackdown fits into that pattern. But Smith believes the Kremlin eventually will have to yield to demands from the 15 republics for greater autonomy.

Smith also believes the transformation of the Soviet Union will require 30 or 40 years, paralleling the process that remade Japan after Commodore Matthew Perry's visits in the 1850s.

That reference hints at his next project: a book about economic competitiveness, focusing on Japan, Germany and the United States.

"But I'm not going to think about how I can write the next Russian book," he said, "because my next Russian book is one I never plan."

Friends collaborate on 'Boone'

By Eve Epstein

BOSTON (AP) — Over breakfast, Nick Davis and Brooks Hansen tried to decide whether Eton Arthur Boone was more famous than Andy Warhol.

"He may have been about as well known as Andy Warhol," said Hansen.

Hansen and Davis ought to know that better than anyone, since they collaborated to create the title character of their novel, "Boone" (Summit Books, $19.95), which is played out in the New York art and performance world of the 1960s.

But during an interview, they scattered references to Boone naturally through their conversation, as if he was an old and very real friend.

Take the comment from Davis, describing his own new career as an actor with an improvisational group in New York: "Every time I come off (stage), I think: 'My God, Boone was good. I can't fill Boone's shoes.' "

While their friendship with Boone is imaginary, their acquaintance with each other dates back to childhood. The two were born a month apart in New York in 1965. Their families were friends, and they vacationed together growing up. Both Davis and Hansen attended Harvard University, where they began working on "Boone."

Although the two are now working separately, they still talk and act like a writing team straight out of a Hollywood movie — finishing each others' sentences, picking up on each others' ideas and jokes. Their looks and styles complement each other. Hansen is blond and bespectacled, and speaks deliberately, while Davis is dark haired and athletic.

AP Laserphoto

Brooks Hansen, left, and Nick Davis, are co-authors of the novel, "Boone." Friends since childhood, the men started the book while students at Harvard University and finished it the summer after graduation. The novel is about the New York performance and art world of the 1960s.

Hansen and Davis' familiarity with New York's art scene is something they came by naturally. Davis' grandfather was a screenwriter, his late mother was an author, and his father is the documentary film maker Peter Davis, who directed "Hearts and Minds," the film about the Vietnam War. Hansen's mother is an artist and his father is a television executive.

To help develop the wide variety of characters in the book, Davis and Hansen asked student actors to play different people in the work. They gave their fellow students a hint about the characters they were supposed to play, then took them to a farmhouse in Connecticut and watched the results.

"The more time we spent with those characters, the more we understood them," Davis said.

But the improvisational skits didn't offer enough. "We realized it wasn't becoming a very good book," said Hansen. "It was flat and long."

The pair abandoned the book their senior year, and picked it up again in the summer of 1987, after graduation. They finally hit on the solution to Boone's character while watching Sammy Davis Jr. on television. They suddenly realized Boone's great talent was going to be performing monologues in which he would not only assume the identity of a celebrity, but delve into that person's soul.

That's when they realized their central character had a dark side — "that Boone was mean," Davis said.

Hansen described himself as "more the litigator for the plot." Davis, he said, was a "more positive, accepting reader."

For now, they have no collaborative efforts in the works. "For the sake of yourself, you've got to show you can do it yourself," Hansen said.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARIES

By Sandra DeFore Wegner

The library cannot remove the stress of April 15 but we do try to ease the pain. Each year the government sends Midland County Public Library, 301 W. Missouri, the most common tax forms for distribution. Also included in the government pack are the less used forms that may be photocopied. In addition, the library keeps another set of forms and IRS publications put out by Commerce Clearing House. We have on hand some of the do-it-yourself books to be checked out plus other tax helps on the reference shelf. Taxpayers may consult books like Commerce Clearing House's Master Tax Guide or Matthew Bender's Dictionary of 1040 Deductions. Over the years we've collected a file of past years' tax forms, some as old as 1984, but there are many missing. Along with the government's tax forms came a sign to post that says "Please — don't ask the librarian tax law questions." I just wish we knew the answers to our own tax questions.

Has the print on the page been shrinking lately? Don't miss the pleasure of reading because the type is too small. Try one of the libraries' large print books. Both the Centennial Branch Library in Midland Park Mall and the downtown library on Missouri Street have large print collections. While most of these collections are fiction, some in categories such as romance, mysteries or westerns, the libraries also have non-fiction in large print. Issues of the large print subscription of Reader's Digest may be checked out at the downtown library. Parts of the downtown collection are rotated among some local retirement facilities by volunteers. A good portion of our West Texas Library System's funds are spent in keeping this collection current. For several years the Fraternal Order of Eagles Auxiliary have made gifts to benefit this section.

Getting a library card at either library isn't difficult. It's possible to get a card and check out a limited amount of material at the same time. Just don't wait until 30 minutes before closing time. Applicants must apply in person with identification such as a driver's license or social security card. Library policy requires the name, address and telephone number of two people in Midland that know the applicant and do not live at the same address as the applicant. Cards for young people and children under 15 years of age or who have not entered ninth grade need parent's or guardian's signatures and one local reference. New cards are free. Replacement charges for lost cards are $1. Even if you haven't been in a library in years, don't let your lack of knowledge of how to use a library hinder you. We are here to help you.

If you want to start shaking the family tree, the downtown library has beginner's and more advanced how-to-do genealogy books. The John and Rosalind Redfern Genealogical Research Center of the library now numbers over 13,000 books. This figure does not include many regional genealogical quarterlies, microfilm and microfiche. This section of the library attracts many users, local and out-of-town. Midland Genealogical Society volunteers are available each Wednesday afternoons, 1-4 p.m., Monday evenings, 7-9 p.m., and Saturday mornings, 10 a.m.- 12 p.m. to help beginning genealogists and acquaint visitors with the collection.

The library's annual report for fiscal year October 1989 through September 1990 has just gone to the State Library. This is a requirement for membership in the Texas Library System. During that year, Midland County Libraries check out to the public over 451,000 books and other materials such as videos, maps and cassettes. Library staff helped people with reference needs over 49,000 times and people made over 266,000 library visits. We are proud of this service to our community and hope the figures will be larger in the coming year.

Sandra DeFore Wegner is Midland County Librarian.

College art department observes 20th anniversary

Staff Report

The Midland College art department is observing its 20th anniversary with an exhibition of faculty art work at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., where the art department held its first classes.

The biannual faculty exhibit contains works by full and part time art department members and will be shown through March 10.

Current faculty members are Stan Jacobs, chairman, John Harmon, Therese Buckley, Warren taylor, Kent Moss and Jane Becker, all of whom have works in the exhibition. Works by Daniel Buckely, MC media coordinator, are in the exhibit as well.

Also on display at the museum is the exhibition "Earth, Sea and Sky: Charl s H. Woodbury, Artist and Teacher." This exhibit closes March 1.

Woodbury, an engineering graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Techology in 1886, was founder of the artist's colony at Ogunquit, Maine, where he taught and painted. He also held classes in his Boston studio. He was considered a master of expression in watercolors and oil paintings of sea and shores. His works and importance to the American art world are being rediscovered.

Hours are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m. For more information call 683-2882.

In addition, the next Brown Bag program at the Museum will be Feb. 13 with Dorothy Perkins speaking about making a TV commercial. There is no charge for the program. Those attending are invited to bring lunch. Drinks will be provided.

Big Spring native Jody Nix to perform Valentine's Day

Staff Report

Nix

He took over his father's band, The West Texas Cowboys, and changed the name when Hoyle Nix died.

Some of Jody Nix's band members played with his father and some of the songs were written by the elder Nix — "Heifer in the New Ground," "She's Really Gone" and "Big Balls in Cowtown."

The West Texas Cowboys got its start in 1946 when the senior Nix took six friends down to the former Yell's Inn at the west end of Big Spring to play some country music. That one-night-stand was the beginning of a career that rivaled that of Wills and his West Texas Playboys during their heyday. Hoyle Nix and Wills became close friends and the younger Nix got his start playing with Wills' swing band.

"I remember Bob from the time I was about 4 years old," Nix said. "The first time I played drums with him, we waited until the dance was almost over. Daddy carried me up there on the stage and put me behind the drums. I think I played 'Twinkle Twinkle Little Star' and 'Beaumont Rag.'"
