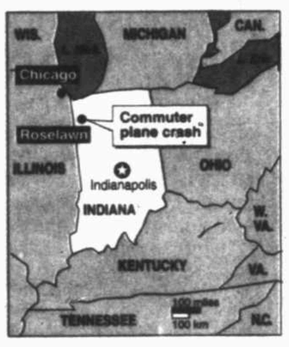
Turboprop crash kills 68

American Eagle goes down in Indiana rainstorm



Associated Press

ROSELAWN, Ind. — An American Eagle commuter plane crashed Monday in a field during a driving rainstorm, killing all 68 people aboard.

Flight 4184 from Indianapolis to Chicago had been circling in a holding pattern before it began its descent and disappeared from the radar, said Tim Smith, a spokesman for American Eagle. It was not immediately clear how long the plane had been waiting to land.

The plane went down 30 miles south of Gary in northwest Indiana around 4 p.m. CST. The plane was coming in about 45 minutes late because it had been delayed on takeoff by heavy traffic at Chicago's O'Hare Airport.

"It came down, almost straight down, not at an angle — just straight down," said Larry Midkiff, who saw the crash as he was driving along the highway.

Gov. Evan Bayh ordered state police to search the area throughout the night. Earlier, authorities said the search was being halted until today because of heavy rain and darkness.

It was the third major plane crash this year. Before that, it had been two years since a major deadly crash and seven years since there were three major crashes in one year.

Haggard volunteer firefighters trooped out of the firehouse wearing foul weather gear. Some only shook their heads when asked what they had seen. Firefighter John Knapp said, "What we did see, we didn't like."

American Eagle would not speculate on the cause of the crash, airline spokeswoman Debbie Weathers said. State police and airline officials said none of the 64 passengers or four crew members survived.

2 parties focus on state's race in 23rd district

■ Political newcomer Rolando Rios squares off with incumbent Henry Bonilla.

By John MacCormack
Hearst News Service

HONDO — The unmistakable voice of U.S. Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez rolled from a boombox propped on the knee of Rolando Rios, the Democratic candidate for Congress from Texas' 23rd district. Gonzalez sounded an urgent call to arms.

Democrat Rolando Rios, top, incumbent Henry Bonilla

"This district is of extreme importance to us. What we have now is one of the worst situations I've seen in my 33 years in Congress," declared Gonzalez. "In the 23rd District you have a representative who doesn't represent."

"He has voted against every single aspect of the programs some of us have been working on for 30 years. His rule is to see the way I vote, and then vote the other way, and he brags about it," a clearly offended Gonzalez said.

The campaign event here, 40 miles west of San Antonio, was like a political pep rally led by the Wizard of Oz. And the big game is the race in the 23rd Congressional District, which sprawls from San Antonio west to El Paso and includes the cities of Laredo, Midland

White House weighs beefed-up security

■ Prosecutors charge Colorado man with four felony offenses.

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the sidewalk fronting the White House was reopened Monday after a gunman fired up to 30 shots from it at the mansion, the government was taking a new look at possibly closing it permanently.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen said prohibiting vehicle and pedestrian traffic on the 1600 block of Pennsylvania Avenue or stationing more guards on the sidewalks were among options being studied to increase security in the wake of the weekend shooting.

Bentsen also announced a panel of outside experts to make suggestions in the aftermath of the shooting incident. He said a review — already under way after last month's crash of a small plane on the White House grounds — would be completed by mid-January.

"The review will examine whatever means might be available — including state-of-the-art technology — to better protect the White House and our national leaders," Bentsen said.

He was asked if part of the recommendations would include urging the president — who likes to jog near the White House and plunge into crowds as he travels — to change his own habits.

"As far as telling the president he has to change his personal habits, we'll leave that up to you," he told reporters. "It's his decision. But ob-

WASHINGTON — The man accused of firing a semiautomatic rifle at the White House was charged with four felonies and ordered to undergo a psychiatric exam Monday. Prosecutors said a letter taken from his truck "raises questions whether he is competent."

U.S. Magistrate Deborah Robinson refused to release the handwritten letter, which was taken from Francisco Martin Duran's pickup. She ordered him returned to court Wednesday, after the exam, for a competency hearing.

U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. said authorities had recovered two letters — the one in the truck and another Duran was carrying when he was seized outside the White House.

'Bird lady' files for use permit to keep wildlife rehab center within city limits

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A local wildlife rehabilitator has applied for the necessary permit to continue operations within the city limits.

The request follows the recent creation of an ordinance by the City Council that requires any wildlife rehabilitation center inside the city to have a specific use permit.

Last week, an application and a $100 permit fee were submitted for Midge and Woody Erskine, who operate the Eos Wildlife Refuge Center at their 3306 W. Golf Course Road home, according to Planning and Development Coordinator Cameron Walker. The application will be processed after some typographical errors are corrected, officials said.

"We will probably go to P-and-Z (Planning and Zoning Commission) as early as the 14th of November," Walker said.

After that, the ultimate approval or denial of the permit will be made by the City Council, probably in December, officials said.

Under the new ordinance, a wildlife rehabilitation center can be housed on various properties including those residentially zoned. Animals to be rehabilitated must be kept in an enclosed building, and a center will be prohibited from treating mammals.

And "we can ask for fences or whatever we think is appropriate" as part of the site plan review required, Mayor Bobby Burns said.

The ordinance was created as a result of zoning and health-related complaints against the Erskines' operation by adjacent property owners Dennis and Vanessa Baker.

RACE: Both parties focus on Texas' 23rd congressional district and Odessa as well as a swath of San Antonio. It encompasses 58,000 square miles and is home to half a million people.

The Nov. 8 election is of special importance to Democrats because two years ago voters confounded the political experts by sending a conservative Republican Mexican-American named Henry Bonilla to Washington.

Bonilla, a San Antonio television station executive, defeated four-term Democratic incumbent Albert Bustamante, who then was under federal investigation because of allegations that he used his office for personal gain.

For Texas Democrats, who long have assumed the Mexican-American vote is their political birthright, it was the beginning of Nightmare on Route 90. Never before had the Republicans sent a Texas Hispanic to Congress.

"It drives the other guys nuts," Bonilla said.

"The (Democratic) national guys are frustrated by what's happened. It's like the last wall in Texas is crumbling down. And now we have two Republican senators from Texas. It makes me feel great," he said.

Since then, the 23rd District has became a national testing ground for Republican viability in the Mexican-American community.

The district tends to be of two minds politically: In 1990, it gave overwhelming support to both Sen. Phil Gramm, a hard-core Republican, and Texas Attorney General Dan Morales, a moderate Democrat.

Bonilla, who wasted little time in establishing his conservative bonafides in Washington, predicts more Republican Hispanics will follow. And he said the Nov. 8 vote will quiet doubts that his election in 1992 was a fluke.

"We've got a four-touchdown lead going into the fourth quarter, but we're still going to play if like we're on the 1-yard line and we need to punch it in," Bonilla said.

"Our goal is to dominate and run up the score. We want more than we got the last time," he said.

Opposing Bonilla is Rios, a political newcomer who has made his reputation suing school boards, city councils and other municipal bodies to force them to create single-member electoral districts and thus open their ranks to minorities.

There is nothing complicated about his campaign strategy.

He is running on the simple premise that Mexican-Americans and Democrats — both of whom enjoy a fat majority in District 23 — will return en masse to the party of FDR, JFK and LBJ.

"We have a little problem here. We have Hispanics running with the Republican Party. They want to take your vote, but they are deceiving you. Henry Bonilla is in Washington, selling our people out," said Rios on a recent campaign swing.

"I'm running for Congress to make sure nuestra gente — our people — are taken care of. What have the Republicans brought us? Can anyone here name a program for the working-class people that the Republicans made?" he asked.

Rios cites personal experience in crediting the Democrats with delivering the social, medical and welfare services that long have been a safety net for the working class and minorities.

"When I was 6, I had the misfortune of losing my father. He was brutally murdered, and he left my mother with me and three older sisters. We were very poor. We made it for one very important reason: Social Security," he said.

When Social Security was approved in Congress, "not one Republican voted for Social Security. They called it a waste of money. And they said Medicaid and Medicare was socialized medicine," Rios said.

On the stump, Rios focuses on Bonilla's conservative voting record in Washington, claiming it serves rightwing party bosses and is contrary to all traditional Mexican-American political values and self-interests.

"The tragedy of having Henry Bonilla represent this district is that he feels he has to be more conservative than the average representative to prove himself to the (Republican) party leaders. He cares about being as conservative as Newt Gingrich," Rios said.

Bonilla says he is proud of his record in Washington and delighted to claim conservatives like Gingrich and Sen. Phil Gramm as buddies. He denounces "big government, socialists, radical leftwingers, labor unions and trial lawyers."

Bonilla said it is Rios — whom he does not dignify by mentioning by name — and the Democrats who are out of sync with the times and the district. He points to numerous endorsements from local municipal officeholders throughout the district, including many Democrats.

His opponent, he said, has little to offer but noise and campaign stunts.

"All he does is negative campaigning. I haven't heard one thing he stands for. He doesn't even have a platform," he said.

Rios has sent people wearing chicken suits to crash several of Bonilla's public appearances to try to force the incumbent to debate him, a proposal that Bonilla dismisses out of hand.

"Why should I give him a chance to throw mud at me? It doesn't do me any good to debate him. It would just give him another opportunity to get his name in the paper," said Bonilla.

According to campaign finance reports filed this week, Bonilla has more than $200,000 left to spend from $530,000 raised so far. Rios has raised $320,000 and only has $26,000 remaining to spend.

And even though Rios is trailing in both money and endorsements, both sides have rolled out the heavy hitters for the sprint to the finish line.

According to his campaign staff, by Nov. 8, Henry B. Gonzalez (this time in person, not on a tape); Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen; Housing and Urban Development Secretary Henry Cisneros, and former Gov. Dolph Briscoe will have appeared for Bonilla.

Speaking up for Bonilla will be Gramm, former Vice President Dan Quayle and former Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

Meanwhile, some former Democrats in the 23rd District say they are not going back.

"I was raised on JFK, and I'm an Irish Catholic, but I changed parties when I voted for Bonilla the last time against Bustamante," said Kathy Delp, 37, of Hondo.

"I'm tired of the Democrats in South Texas railroading people to the polls. Here in Medina County, they take advantage of the Hispanics by telling them to vote Democratic," she said.

But to Rios' supporters, the crucial element in the contest is exposure.

"I think he's a very good candidate. His heart and head are in the right place," said Paul Edwards of Uvalde.

"The question is, can he get the message out? This is a huge district that encompasses five media markets. I wouldn't want to run in this district."

FACES: Suspect must undergo psychiatric exam

(From 1A)

Also found in the truck, according to prosecutors, was a shotgun, an arsenal of ammunition, a gun magazine, a machete, sleeping bags and a stuffed animal.

Officials previously have indicated the letter in the truck was an explanation of how Duran's possessions were to be distributed to his wife and son in event of his death.

In his first court appearance, Duran, 26, stood and stated his name, raised his right hand and swore to tell the truth. He wore a dark polo shirt and jeans into the highest security courtroom in the federal courthouse — one with bulletproof plastic separating spectators and reporters from the judge, attorneys and defendant.

Duran sat up for most of the 15-minute hearing, but bent over during a conference at the bench to read a handwritten note.

Assistant U.S. Attorney John Finnegan told the magistrate that Duran's letter "brings into question whether the defendant is competent to proceed."

Holder said later the request for the 24-hour psychiatric evaluation was "not an indication that we believe he is incompetent." Nor was it, he said, an indication that prosecutors thought Duran "was at the time of the offense insane."

Competency at this stage means the defendant can understand the charges against him and can assist his attorney, public defender Leigh Kenny.

Kenny said she had no concerns about Duran's competence at this time.

If Duran is found competent after Wednesday's hearing, there will be a preliminary hearing in which prosecutors would have to present enough evidence to justify continuing the case.

He was charged with possession of a firearm as a convicted felon, destruction of federal property, assault on a federal officer and use of a firearm during the commission of a crime of violence. Prosecutors said he could receive as much as 35 years in prison if convicted of all four counts.

Holder said other charges might be filed later.

Prosecutors would not discuss a possible motive for Saturday's shooting, in which a man fired 20 to 30 shots at the White House through the iron fence on Pennsylvania Avenue with a Chinese-made semiautomatic rifle. Eight shots hit the building.

Treausury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, whose department includes the Secret Service, said options officials are considering for increasing security include closing parts of Pennsylvania Avenue and stationing more guards on the White House sidewalk.

Court papers said Duran pleaded guilty on March 21, 1991 to felony assault while in the Army. He was sentenced to five years at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and in February 1993 was dishonorably discharged.

Holder said prosecutors would argue at the preliminary hearing that Duran should be held without bail.

Duran telephoned his family after disappearing Sept. 30 and said he was never coming back and might be dead soon, according to Joe Gordon, agent in charge of the Colorado Springs office of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

"They didn't understand what he meant by that, and they were very worried about it," Gordon told the Rocky Mountain News. "He made the statement to his family on the phone that he might be dead by one family member's birthday, which was within the last few days."

At the White House, the Secret Service reopened the north lawn. Agents combed the area inside the news media briefing room and took a variety of measurements and photographs of the damage.

TURBOPROP: Commuter plane crashes

(From 1A)

The plane, which was full, was descending from an altitude of 10,000 feet to 8,000 feet when it disappeared from radar screens at Chicago's O'Hare Airport, Don Zochert of the Federal Aviation Administration said.

Frightened friends and relatives in Indianapolis and Chicago waited for word on whether their loved ones were on board.

"This would have been his flight if he's on it," Pat Sullivan said of her brother as she waiting at Indianapolis International Airport.

Several people ran into the airport crying and refused to talk to reporters. Airport officials were keeping them behind closed doors.

Midkiff said he was driving along when he saw a black puff of smoke and the plane banking sharply before it plunged to the ground.

"It didn't look like it had a left wing on it," Midkiff said. "It just looked like a black streak coming down."

Witnesses said there was driving rain at the time of the crash and that it was too dark to see much in the area. Winds were gusting to 49 mph in Gary, the closest reporting station, the National Weather Service said.

"Debris was so scattered, you really couldn't tell if there was an airplane out there," said Michael Schwanke, a reporter with WLQI radio in Rensselaer who was at the site.

Bob Stone was hunting when he heard the plane's engines just before the crash.

"I could hear a motor winding out and it sounded like thunder and then there was a crash and I didn't hear anything else," Stone said.

Jasper County Sheriff Steve Reames said the Newton County sheriff's department had set up a command post near the crash site.

The plane was a new American Eagle Super ATR, a high-wing, twin-engine propjet.

It was the second major plane crash in seven weeks, and the third this year. A USAir jet crashed Sept. 8 on approach to Pittsburgh, killing all 132 aboard, and a USAir jetliner crashed July 2 in North Carolina in a thunderstorm, killing 37 people. Before that, the last crash had been March 22, 1992.

Information about passengers is available from American Eagle at (800) 245-0999.

Tragedy halts anniversary plans

FORT WORTH (AP) — The deadly crash Monday night of an American Eagle plane in Indiana brought to a tragic halt plans for a systemwide celebration of the carrier's 10th anniversary.

American Eagle, the regional affiliate of American Airlines, had planned to unveil a specially decorated plane from behind a wall of balloons Tuesday morning.

The airline had promised "a visual and dramatic ceremony that will be attended by a host of dignitaries" when the Saab 340B was unveiled at the Simmons Airlines hangar at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

But, anniversary festivities have been canceled throughout the American Eagle system, officials said.

"Tonight, all our concern is with the families of the victims of the accident," said Peter Piper, president of Simmons Airlines.

viously I'm sure he'll give some consideration to this."

Bentsen spoke in the White House briefing room, where investigators spent much of the day examining, measuring and photographing a window that was broken in Saturday's fusillade.

Bentsen also defended the Secret Service — an agency he oversees — for not firing at the gunman who shot through an iron fence and sprayed the White House and grounds with bullets.

"The last thing I would want to see was someone firing weapons in a crowd like that," he said. As to the fact that bystanders, not agents or police, brought the gunman to the ground, he said: "The civilians were standing right beside him. I understand that."

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said Clinton hoped to personally thank the two men who tackled the gunman: Harry Rakosky, 34, of San Antonio, Texas, and Ken Davis, 24, of Hagerstown, Md. "He definitely will want to get in touch with them ... one way or the other," she said.

Clinton was in the residence part of the White House at the time of the gunfire and "was never in danger," Bentsen said.

He said the new advisory panel would be headed by Ron Noble, undersecretary of the Treasury for enforcement, but otherwise would be made up of outside experts.

It will include Robert Carswell, a former deputy Treasury secretary; former FBI Director William Webster; former Transportation Secretary William Coleman; former Energy Secretary Charles Duncan; former Joint Chiefs Chairman David Jones, and Dr. Judith Rodin, a psychologist and president of the University of Pennsylvania.

Asked about closing Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House to both cars and pedestrian traffic, something the Secret Service in the past has suggested, Bentsen said "those options are being examined."

However, he also seemed to suggest that a partial closing of the street is a more likely outcome, calling an "overstatement" suggestions that the entire street near the White be blocked.

determined that the Erskines' wildlife rehabilitation facility should not be allowed to operate at the present location. But the council provided for the Erskines — or anyone interested in running a rehabilitation center — to request a zone code amendment establishing specification for a wildlife rehabilitation center.

The Erskines — who claimed they already were sanctioned by the city to operate — made an application interpreted by the city as a request for a zone code amendment.

The City Council then decided that rehabilitation centers should be permitted and adopted a zone code amendment. That amendment requires rehabilitation operators to have a specific use permit, for which the Erskines have applied.

A hospital nurse administers an AIDS test in Moscow Sunday to an Russian woman who had come in for a routine eye operation.

Russian anti-AIDS plan puts onus on foreigners

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian legislators, trying to safeguard their country from the threat of AIDS, want to test all foreigners for the virus and deport those who test positive or refuse testing.

The bill sailed through Russia's usually fractious 450-seat Duma, the lower chamber of parliament, with only three deputies opposed. It must still be approved by the upper chamber and by President Boris Yeltsin.

But the bill's strong Russia-first appeal, which reaches across deep political divides to nationalists, communists and reformers alike, makes passage likely.

Many Russians blame the West for the rise in prostitution, pornography and other social ills since the collapse of the Soviet Union. Some even accuse the CIA of creating the AIDS virus.

"This is clearly a discriminatory measure aimed at foreigners," Boris Mikhailov, a political scientist at the Russian Institute for USA and Canada, said Monday. "The nationalist tendency in the Duma is getting stronger every day."

Foreigners said the proposal endangers their rights, and warned that it could threaten tourism. Millions of foreign citizens, the majority from former Soviet republics, reside in Russia. Their sheer numbers could make the law impossible to enforce.

The first case of AIDS in Russia was diagnosed in 1987. Until 1990, the disease was spread either by foreigners or as a result of poor medical practices, Dr. Vadim Pokrovsky, head of the Russian Center for the Prevention and Fight against AIDS, told the Commersant newspaper last November.

Since then, however, AIDS has mostly been spread by homosexuals and drug addicts, he said.

The proposed measure, which the Duma passed Friday, would force foreign tourists, business travelers and other foreigners to prove they are not AIDS carriers. Foreigners who refuse to take the test or are found to be infected would be deported — although the bill does not address how such a sweeping plan would be enforced or funded.

"It's based on fear-mongering and nationalistic fervor, which distort the actual issues," said Dr. Myles Druckman of the American Medical Center, one of a handful of Moscow clinics catering to foreigners.

The bill says that only Russian state medical institutions may conduct the AIDS tests.

German bank robbers lead police on wild, daylong chase

BONN, Germany (AP) — Two armed prison escapees held three people hostage early today, nearly 24 hours after launching a wild hostage-taking, bank-robbing, cross-country crime spree.

The 480-mile chase across five states began before dawn Monday with the kidnapping of two police officers. The gunmen, one a convicted killer, repeatedly switched getaway cars and hostages and were last reported headed toward Frankfurt.

Police squad cars and helicopters followed the fugitives — as did carloads of journalists. A TV station broadcast a live, car-phone interview with a hostage, although the police pursuit itself was not carried live.

Two men — one of them apparently wounded — and a woman were still being held. Six other hostages, including the two officers and two children, had been released unharmed.

The female hostage pleaded from a car phone for police to stop their chase. She said her husband had been slightly wounded by a bullet.

She said the car stopped briefly at a hospital in Gotha so her husband could get treatment. The chief doctor refused to come out to the car but had bandages and a compress brought out. The car then drove away, she said.

The newspaper Bild Zeitung also reached the fugitives on the car telephone. They said two of their hostages were elderly and that one had been wounded by police in an exchange of fire.

The fugitives stopped late Monday at a rest stop near Erfurt in eastern Germany. An ambulance drove to the rest stop but the gunmen drove away before it arrived, police spokesman Dietmar Kaiser said. The car headed toward Frankfurt.

The drama started before dawn Monday near Stuttgart in southern Germany.

Two police officers approached a parked Volkswagen van with French license plates. The escaped convicts were inside and one pulled out a gun. He and his partner bound the two officers with their own handcuffs and drove off with them in the van, police said.

They drove 130 miles north to Fulda and robbed $130,000 in German marks from a bank, using one of the officers as a shield, police said.

After the robbery, they freed the officers on a highway and grabbed a man and his two children, then barricaded themselves inside a house in Hoetzelsroda, about 43 miles east of Fulda.

The escapees later fled, dropping the children off near Eisenach and switching getaway vehicles, police said. Grabbing two more hostages — a man and a woman — they sped east in a car stolen from an RTL2 cameraman.

The World in brief

■ Government forces advance on 2 fronts

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Government forces that have handed Bosnian Serbs their worst defeats in 2½ years of war pushed ahead Monday with assaults on a supply route near Sarajevo and Serb-held towns in the northwest.

Serbs claimed to have blunted the offensives and promised hard fighting to regain lost territory.

Whether the Serbs have the troops, materiel and morale to rebound could determine whether the government's offensive will decisively change the course of the war.

■ Russians struggle to clean up oil spill

USINSK, Russia — "More Usińsk oil for the Motherland!" urges a slogan written in red across the rooftop of the tallest building on Construction Workers' Boulevard in this remote Russian city.

But as they work to clean up a huge oil spill, residents of this bleak industrial town 1,000 miles north of Moscow are furtively admitting what oil officials in the region have not: the pressure for "more" has led to too much hurry, too much spillage, and too much waste.

"What we have here is a horrible ecological situation," said Vladimir Fedulov, one of the hundreds of local residents trying to clean up the latest spill from the tundra and rivers of this barren Arctic region.

■ Judge sentences assassin to 42 years

MEXICO CITY — The admitted assassin of Luis Donaldo Colosio, the ruling party's presidential candidate, was convicted Monday of premeditated murder and sentenced to 42 years in prison.

The motive for the killing remains unclear.

Judge Alejandro Sosa Ortiz imposed the sentence on Mario Aburto Martinez, a 23-year-old factory worker, at the high security Almoloya prison west of Mexico City.

■ Iran writers seek end to censorship

TEHERAN, Iran — A group of dissident Iranian writers has called for the abolition of censorship in Iran in an open letter sent to news organizations, saying that "Writers must be free to create their work and express themselves.".

The letter was signed by 134 novelists, publishers and translators, who said again Monday that they would continue their campaign against censorship in any form. The letter was sent last week to both foreign news organizations and the state-run press.

Aristide faces enormous obstacles in Haiti

By Lisa M. Hamm
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — He came home to a mess after three years in exile. The National Palace was trashed, the parliament fractured, the reluctant caretaker prime minister impatient to leave on vacation.

With this, President Jean-Bertrand Aristide was supposed to build democracy — and get off to a running start, too.

More than two weeks after Aristide's return, confusion still reigns behind palace walls.

"You cannot expect it to be workable just in 24 hours," government spokesman Jacques Gourgue said Monday. "That's not possible. No way. No way.

"You have to realize that everything has been totally disorganized and it will take a couple of weeks before things can run smoothly."

When Aristide and his contingent arrived at the National Palace on Oct. 15, three years after they were thrown out by an army coup, they found chaos.

'The palace had been ransacked. There were no computers, almost no phone lines working, almost no furniture. I think there was only one computer working. . . . What a mess!'

— Jacques Gourgue, government spokesman

"The palace had been ransacked," Gourgue said. "There were no computers, almost no phone lines working, almost no furniture. I think there was only one computer working. Very few typewriters. What a mess!"

Even the toilets were broken, running water cut off, air conditioning gone. Historical artwork had disappeared, and hurriedly packed boxes sat in rooms ready to be carted away.

Aristide spent his first two weeks back living and working in the palace, with infrequent and haphazard contact with the journalist who would report his progress to the country and the world. His spokesmen seemed to change every few days.

His spokesmen blamed poor telephone lines and other logistical problems, but Information Minister Herve Denis raged about the disorganization, saying no one seemed to know who was in charge of what.

Haiti has no acting prime minister. The caretaker premier, Robert Malval, left on a long vacation Oct. 22. His departure left a void at the head of the government as Aristide labored to find a prime minister.

Criticized in 1991 for hastily naming close friends to key Cabinet positions, Aristide took more than a week and a half, conferring with representatives of all political parties, before settling on businessman Smarck Michel.

Canada runs into crossroads in economic, social thinking

TORONTO (AP) — Canada is broke.

After decades of heavy spending on social programs, this vast, underpopulated northern land has run up a national debt of $550 billion, and is accumulating more at a rate of $85,000 a minute.

Add debt owed by the provinces and the figure leaps to $700 billion, about $25,000 ($18,750 in U.S. dollars) for every man, woman and child in the country.

That is slightly higher than in the United States, where the $4.6 trillion debt works out to about $18,000 per person.

"We are in hock up to our eyeballs," Finance Minister Paul Martin told the House of Commons Finance Committee. "That can't be sustained."

Canadians must decide between higher taxes or, a more likely alternative, meaningful cuts in the social programs they have long held dear.

"Canadians believe they are already taxed to the hilt," Martin told the committee before it set off Monday for a series of hearings around the country.

"But it must be made clear that if Canadians want to avoid more taxes, they must be prepared to support smaller programs — including programs that benefit them."

Canadians made the philosophical choice that they wanted universal health care, generous old age pensions, extended unemployment insurance and a myriad of other social programs — and that they were willing to pay the price.

But the days of such generosity are gone.

"We are really in a crunch situation," said Frank Atkins, a professor of economics at the University of Calgary. "We did choose to have all these programs once. Those were different economic times."

In the 1993-94 fiscal year, one-quarter of all government spending — $38 billion — went to pay interest on the national debt. That is expected to be 29 percent by 1996-97. The government soon will have to collect $3 in taxes for every $2 in services.

About 20 percent of U.S. government spending goes to pay interest on the national debt.

Canada's budget deficit in 1993-94 was $42 billion. The United States, which has roughly nine times as many people, had a budget deficit of $203 billion in fiscal 1994.

Prime Minister Jean Chretien's No. 1 campaign pledge in last year's election was to reduce the deficit to 3 percent of gross domestic product, or about $25 billion, by the 1996-97 budget.

Fully 60 percent of the budget goes directly to people in the form of pensions, unemployment benefits, aid to natives and veterans, or to the provinces to pay for health, education and social assistance.

"The safety net needs to be there," said Atkins. "But it needs to be overhauled."

Courageous action can stop lawless

No one actually knows how they'll react to a life threatening situation until the emergency presents itself. Two men on the sidewalk along Pennsylvania Avenue outside the White House found out Saturday afternoon, and in so doing, gave the nation a much-needed lesson in countering lawlessness.

Harry Rakosky of San Antonio and Ken Davis of Hagerstown, Md. acted like heroes when Francisco Martin Duran pulled a Chinese-made semiautomatic weapon from underneath his dark trenchcoat and sprayed the White House with bullets. Both men later admitted they did not feel like heroes. Their modesty is extraordinary.

Investigators said they had no indication of what motive Duran had in firing at the White House. President Clinton, who was inside, was never in any danger and, as the result of a bureaucratic dispute, for a time there was a question as to what kind of charges could be brought against Duran. The investigation was continuing this week.

The fact of the matter, however, is that when an unknown assailant pulls a semiautomatic weapon out and begins firing, if those nearby do not do something to stop the assault, someone — the president or an innocent bystander perhaps — is likely to be injured or killed. In such a situation, however, it can take an extra measure of courage and gallantry to attempt to disarm the gunman.

Fortunately, Rakosky, who works for a private security firm in San Antonio, and Davis, who has been trained to handle such situations, were close at hand and were able to knock Duran down. The shooting incident ended without injury or death.

Courageous, selfless acts such as theirs are needed to restore confidence in the general population that lawless individuals will not be allowed to unleash their hatred or vengeance wantonly in our society.

Think tank takes on welfare emperor

As the intellectual revolution rolls on, a Dallas-based think tank offers an arresting way of hitching a ride.

You've heard of the welfare mess? (Who hasn't?) The National Center for Policy Analysis has an answer: Let individual taxpayers donate up to 40 percent of their personal income taxes to any qualified charity, public or private.

Says NCPA President John Goodman: "The government has botched its mission to provide a safety net for people who are poor through no fault of their own. Instead, the welfare system encourages people to become dependent on government subsidies, by paying them to be poor.

"Private charities that have learned how to give aid without creating dependency should be allowed to compete for a piece of the pie."

Could there be the slightest serious objection to such a proposal? Frivolous objections, certainly: a tidal wave of them. Hands will be wrung, and eyes will drip with tears. How can we possibly — it will be said — consign human lives to private charity?

Easily enough, the answer will come back, when you consider that $5 trillion in 1992 dollars has been spent on the War on Poverty since 1965 — but that there's more poverty today than in 1965. Are we getting value for the $390 billion spent each year on 79 means-tested programs? We could divide up all this money equally, and a family of four would get $35,756, which is above the median household income right now. Something's not working.

In fact, a lot of things aren't working today, which is why the intellectual revolution goes forward. Revolutions arise out of, if not painfully suppressed yearning, then suddenly realized opportunity. Not all revolutions turn out well: the Russian, for instance. But when you find things aren't working the way you visualize they're working, revolt begins to stir.

Liberalism, which is responsible for the welfare mess, to cite only one modern affliction, is working so poorly indeed that it should be considered a candidate for history's dustbin.

What has liberalism to say about the problem of poverty? Primarily that it's someone else's fault besides the poor person's. Liberalism maintains that social and economic forces create opportunity or the lack thereof. This being so, the government of us all — rich and poor alike — has an obligation to the victims. That obligation consists in handing over one man's substance to another. The second man, in fact, is entitled to what he gets. It is his by right. We owe it to him.

Small wonder that welfare dependency rises in tandem with welfare costs. What you're entitled to, you want more and more of. Why not?

The good old Judeo-Christian ethic of aid — not obligatory payment — to the helpless is subverted by the welfare culture. Welfare becomes a way of life, under the government system.

But talk of trimming welfare ever so slightly, and the revolutionist draws from the liberal establishment a look of horror and indignation. Why, you don't take from someone the thing that's his.

Unless it's not really his: which is a consideration the welfare aspect of the revolution dares, in the face of liberal sputtering to take into account. The revolution seeks not to enchain the recipients of welfare but to free them insofar as possible. It views aid to the truly helpless as less a political than a moral obligation — something you do because it's right, not because the man from the government points a gun at your head. The NCPA's idea is that cliched breath of fresh air we read about but too rarely feel actually brushing our cheeks. Would it work? Almost certainly it would work better than what we have right now.

But meanwhile, the temerity of the thing dazzles. This is what we have more and more of as the revolution advances — temerity. The liberal emperor is naked as a jaybird but doesn't know it, nor do his followers. On he marches, to revolutionary hoots and hollers. One of these days, exasperated and impatient, the crowd is going to remove him for the offense of intellectual nudity. Who could deserve it more richly?

Creeps become cybercreeps when online

The home computer industry is booming. And a female friend who has spent time on the information superhighway believes she has discovered a reason for its sudden popularity.

Royko

"Based on my experience and those of some friends," she said, "the computer world appeals to a significant segment of the male population. They are the creeps. Or maybe in the computer world, they should be called 'cybercreeps.'"

The cybercreep, as she described him, is a person who uses his computer and phone to connect to commercial on-line message services or the vast Internet.

Then he hides behind a phony name — "his handle" — and says things that would probably get him punched in the face or arrested if he said them to someone in a public place.

He is a high-tech version of a flasher or a telephone breather — the Chester the Molester of the 1990s.

"I'm used to it now," says Patricia, the cybercreep expert. "But when it first started happening, I thought: 'Wow, this is sort of like the Tailhook thing without the pinch marks.'

"As soon as they spot the handle of a woman, it starts. The other night I got a message that said: 'Hi, babe, want to talk about sex, straight, oral, whatever you like?'

"In my entire life, I've never run into anyone in a bar or anyplace else who has introduced himself that way."

Of course not. If a stranger walked into a neighborhood tavern and went up to the nearest female and said: "Hi, babe, want to talk about sex, straight, oral, whatever you like?" it's possible that those men of the non-creep persuasion might react chivalrously by knocking him down and jumping on his chest.

But while sitting in the privacy of his home, the cybercreep can send off any message that emerges from the woolly caterpillars nesting in his brain.

"I had one guy send me a message asking if I had any clothes on," Patricia said. "He wrote: 'I don't. Want me to describe myself? You'll be impressed.'

"I believed him. Not about being impressed, but about sitting there naked. I could just see him, some lonely guy with no chin and a flabby body like bread dough, sitting there with old copies of Hustler and Playmate stacked up around him.

"Or maybe he's married and his wife went to bed and he said he is going to stay up in his den and work on some stuff he brought home from the office. Then he sits there looking for someone like me so he can breathe real hard.

"Really, ask any woman who goes on line where people don't have to use real names. If they use a handle that indicates they are women, the cybercreeps come out like a swarm of horny insects.

"So if I want to go on for a serious conversation, information, or even for fun, I use a handle that makes it sound like I'm a man. And an old man, because if you use one that makes you sound like you are a young guy, maybe attractive, you might get hit on by some other young guy. It can really be a zoo out there."

Actually, I'm not sure if that is an entirely bad thing.

Consider that there are well over 250 million people in this country. It is inevitable that several million of them will be creeps of one kind or another. Mother Nature, a prankster at times, seems to want it that way.

It is essential for a creep to express himself. Ask any shrink. So the computer provides those millions of creeps who are literate with a relatively harmless way of expressing their creepiness.

Otherwise they might be showing up at schoolyards or subway platforms and suddenly flinging open their topcoats to display their strange manhood. Or maybe they would be drooling on their phone books as they look for female names they can call and subject to their heavy panting and moaning.

I have a hunch that if some police agency did a study, they would find that the number of traditional cases of creepiness — schoolyard flashers, phone breathers and other weirdness — will have declined as the sale of home computers has gone up. The information superhighway may also be serving as a superdoorway, a superalley or a superpeephole.

So it is far better that they stay at home, in the glow of their color monitor, playing with their mouse or whatever, than popping out from behind a bush and causing some defenseless biddy to shriek: "Eek, a phallic symbol!"

I'm sure that a judge one day will tell someone: "Before I sentence you, do you wish to say anything to justify dropping your trousers on a crowded elevator?"

"Yes, your honor," the creep will say, "I couldn't get my modem working."

Residents help family through bad time

I was recently in Midland for the funeral of my son-in-law, David Stall. I was very impressed with the people there. Everyone was so respectful. There are so many people to thank: the Midland Christian Fellowship, Virginia Selby, the neighbor who offered the use of their camper, the many other friends and neighbors who sent so much good food and drinks. We were very impressed with the San Jacinto Junior High football team who all got down on one knee as we passed by on the way to the cemetery and all the people who pulled over to the side of the road instead of continuing to drive. Thanks again, to everyone for being so nice and helping us through a very bad time.

Dirty politics hurt young league players

I am appalled at the dirty politics contaminating the Greater Midland Football League. By dirty politics, I am referring to rules that have been drawn up, only to be broken. When violations were brought up before the commissioner, he chose to ignore them and wouldn't even listen to parents or coaches.

A standard weight limit of 120 pounds for anyone carrying the ball on the sixth-grade team is a set rule. As well as an age limit — of 12-years-old — before the first game. Yet one team going on to the superbowl has violated both these rules and are still being allowed to compete. Why? Could it be because the commissioner's son plays for this team and he chose to "see no evil?" What does this teach our youth? I also have trouble with the concept that a forfeit carries more weight than a tie in this organization. When a team shows up to play their hearts out for a tie, shouldn't that tell our kids that it's better to try than to be given a win?

When I asked my son how he felt about being knocked out of the superbowl because of one loss and one tie, he summed it up perfectly. He said, "Mom, a criminal gets three chances to prove himself, we only got one. That's not fair!"

Midland should be proud of young men

On Monday, Oct. 3, our son's funeral procession passed San Jacinto Junior High.

It so warmed our hearts when we saw the football team kneel on one knee and place their helmets over their hearts.

The citizens of Midland should be proud of these fine young men. We hear so much in the news about the bad things that teen-agers do that I wanted you and the citizens of Midland to know that all teenagers are not bad people. For all the boys to kneel and place their helmet over their heart shows that they have had someone to teach them.

We sincerely appreciate all of you.

Trial starts for man accused in killing of abortion doctor

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Acting as his own lawyer, a former minister made no opening statement and asked no questions Monday during his murder trial in the shotgun slayings of an abortion doctor and his bodyguard.

Paul Hill, 40, could get the electric chair if convicted in the July 29 deaths.

After a prosecutor made his opening statement, four witnesses testified that they saw Hill fire the fatal shots or standing near the body after the shootings.

Dorothy Disney, a financial aid representative at a college, said she heard a "pop-pop" and saw Hill standing by one of the victims.

"He was just standing there and he had a weapon in his hand. And he was looking at the body, staring at the body," she said.

On Oct. 5, Hill became the first person convicted under the new federal law against using violence or intimidation to prevent people from entering abortion clinics. He could get up to life in prison when he is sentenced Dec. 9.

At the federal trial, Hill also acted as his own lawyer and offered no defense, calling no witnesses and cross-examining none of his accusers.

Hill's murder trial in state court began amid tight security. Police set up crowd-control barricades around the courthouse and put sharpshooters on the roof.

Killed in the shootings were Dr. John Bayard Britton, 69, and his volunteer bodyguard James H. Barrett, 74. Barrett's wife, June, 68, was wounded.

Fire Capt. Earl Jackson was driving by the clinic in a pickup truck and saw Hill pull a gun from some bushes, take a couple of steps and fire. Jackson said he then saw Barrett's body laying next to the truck. Jackson said he got a good look at Hill.

Jackson and Mrs. Disney also testified at Hill's federal trial.

Assistant State Attorney James Murray said Hill had been carrying signs and protesting in front of the Ladies Center for six months.

"One of these signs was prophetic," Murray said in his opening statement. "You are going to see photographs of the defendant carrying a sign saying 'Execute abortionists and accessories.' "

Hill purchased a 12-gauge pump shotgun and spent two days before the shootings in target practice, Murray said. The gun can hold up to eight rounds of ammunition, more than a typical hunting rifle, he said.

Coughlin to receive $5 million in punitive damages from hotel

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The Las Vegas Hilton and its parent company were ordered Monday to pay $5 million in punitive damages for failing to protect a former Navy lieutenant from drunken aviators at the 1991 Tailhook convention.

The federal jury's ruling brings Paula Coughlin's total award to $6.7 million.

"I think justice was served," Coughlin said, speaking with reporters for the first time since the trial began Sept. 12. "This sends a message that you can't tolerate abusing women even for making money."

Coughlin blew the whistle on the drunken debauchery at the meeting of drunken Navy and Marine aviators. A Pentagon report said 83 women were assaulted or molested at the convention.

Coughlin settled for an undisclosed amount with the Tailhook Association before the trial started.

The jury awarded Coughlin $1.7 million in compensatory damages Friday, ruling that the Hilton failed to provide adequate security at the convention. Since it also determined that Hilton had acted with malice, the jury returned Monday to deliberate punitive damages, aimed at punishing a wrongdoer and deterring such conduct in the future.

Coughlin had testified that she was trapped in the hotel's third-floor hallway one night during the convention by a group of men who shoved their hands down her bra and tried to reach up her skirt and pull off her underwear.

Coughlin's attorney urged jurors to issue a multimillion dollar award "to get the (Hilton) shareholders' attention" to prevent future assaults or remove some company executives.

"They're still equating the damage done to Paula Coughlin and her life to a broken lamp," said Dennis Schoville, one of Coughlin's attorneys.

Hilton attorney Eugene Wait argued the Hilton had been punished enough by negative publicity and by the $1.7 million compensatory award.

Court to decide issue of funding for religious magazine

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, in an important freedom-of-religion case, agreed Monday to decide whether state schools may refuse to subsidize student-run religious magazines while funding non-religious publications.

The justices voted to review the University of Virginia's refusal to fund a Christian magazine published by an on-campus Christian group. A lower court said the refusal complied with the constitutionally required separation of church and state.

The student group says it's being singled out unfairly, and contends the Constitution "stands for neutrality, not hostility, toward religion."

The high court's eventual decision, expected by July, could clarify an area of the law — tax dollars used to advance religious purposes — its past rulings have made murky.

Many experts believe the court generally has grown more politically conservative on church-state matters and might favor greater accommodation of religion by government.

In other matters Monday, the court:

■ Refused to hear the appeal of an Anchorage, Alaska, rental agent who cited his religious beliefs in refusing to rent to unmarried couples.

The justices, over a dissent by Justice Clarence Thomas, left intact an Alaska Supreme Court ruling that said Tom Swanner violated state and local laws by refusing to rent to such couples.

■ Agreed to review a ruling in an Indiana case that government lawyers say could cost the government more than $200 million in additional payments to people who claim they were harmed by a vaccination.

■ Said it will decide whether a federal fair housing law allows cities to bar some group homes for the disabled from single-family neighborhoods.

At issue in an Edmonds, Wash., case is whether cities can exclude group homes that exceed local limits on the number of unrelated people who can live together.

■ Turned down track star Butch Reynolds' effort to collect $27.4 million from the group that barred him from the 1992 Olympics after saying he tested positive for steroids.

The court's agreement to review the Christian magazine case sparked immediate criticism from Barry Lynn of Americans United for Separation of Church and State.

Police consider reward to bring leads in boys' carjacking case

UNION, S.C. (AP) — Frustrated investigators looking into the disappearance of two little boys in an alleged carjacking were considering offering a reward Monday after receiving a growing number of calls from "psychics."

Also Monday, the television program "A Current Affair" reported that a friend of Susan Smith, the boys' mother, failed a lie detector test question about whether he was withholding information in the case.

The 24-year-old friend, Mitch Sinclair, declined to answer questions about the report Monday night.

Mrs. Smith told authorities she was en route to visit Sinclair, a family friend, when the children were taken in a carjacking last week. Union County Sheriff Howard Wells said Sinclair was not a suspect.

Three-year-old Michael Smith and his 14-month-old brother, Alex, have not been seen since Oct. 25, when Mrs. Smith reported that a man jumped in her car, then ordered her out at gunpoint, taking the boys still strapped in safety seats.

With no firm leads and no motive six days into the nationwide manhunt for the alleged abductor, Wells said a growing number of calls on the case were "of a psychic nature."

"They're the result of someone having a vision, or having a dream or someone saying, 'I just have a strong belief that if you look here this is what you're going to find,'" he said.

He added: "If . . . money is going to motivate some types of individuals to give us solid information, we may go into a reward" later this week.

He said a company in the area had donated $10,000 to a reward fund.

In this frightened town, parents watched closely over children going out to trick-or-treat.

Jana Rutledge joined other mothers in accompanying their children on foot.

"Last year, I just rode along the street beside them. Not this time," she said.

She said her 8-year-old daughter, Sierra, who was dressed as a witch for Halloween, had memorized the license number of the missing car.

"Now everytime I get in the car it's, 'Lock your doors, Mama,'" Rutledge said.

■ Judge blocks repatriation of refugees

MIAMI — A federal judge Monday issued a temporary restraining order to block the repatriation of Cuban refugees detained in camps at the U.S. Naval Base at Guantanamo Bay and in Panama.

The government said it would appeal the decision. "We plan to appeal the judge's ruling to assure that Cubans wishing to return home can do so at the earliest possible moment," said a spokeswoman for the Department of Justice, Julie Bender.

The Clinton administration, in a change of policy, announced that Cubans could apply for United States visas only from within Cuba.

In his order Monday, Judge C. Clyde Atkins of U.S. District Court in Miami said the government could not deny private lawyers access to the detainees.

No repatriations, even voluntary ones, can take place until the detainees are advised of their rights, the judge ordered, ruling that the refugees are entitled to due process under the First Amendment because Guantanamo is U.S. territory.

■ Two men shoot member of gay couple

SAN FRANCISCO — Two men drove onto a sidewalk in pursuit of a gay couple, pinned one of the men against a wall with their four-wheel drive and shot him in the chest.

Steven Damron and Victor Rohana, who was wounded, were walking Friday near the Castro District, the center of the city's gay community, when two young men yelled at them from the passing auto.

Rohana said something to the men. The driver backed up about 100 feet to get in front of the pair and drove onto the sidewalk, police said.

The assailants fled after the shooting. Rohana, 24, was in stable condition Monday.

"It is dismaying to think that in a city that is known for acceptance of individual freedom that this senseless act of violence still occurs," Mayor Frank Jordan said in announcing a $10,000 reward.

■ City drops underweight burger fines

PHILADELPHIA — The city is dropping its beef against Wendy's, rescinding a $96,000 fine and apologizing for accusing the fast food chain of selling underweight burgers.

City officials said Monday that the quarter-pound burgers were the right weight before they were shipped to a Philadelphia restaurant, and that Wendy's followed all federal guidelines.

"It is very unfortunate if this incident caused the public concern or confusion," Levin said.

City inspectors last week weighed a sampling of 24 uncooked patties at a Philadelphia Wendy's and found that 22 were light, some by as much as a quarter-ounce.

Inspectors seized the entire batch of 960 patties and fined the Dublin, Ohio-based chain $100 a burger.

The restaurant and the supplier, Devault Packing Co., said that the meat weighs at least a quarter-pound when it is packed, but it loses moisture in transit.

GOP splits create openings for some Dems

By Jill Lawrence
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Prominent Republicans are rejecting and undercutting their own candidates in remarkable fashion this year, exposing fault lines within the party and hampering GOP campaigns in several states.

Republicans stand to make substantial electoral gains next Tuesday. Yet some high-profile party members are engaged in what could amount to political fratricide.

The latest Republican defector is Los Angeles Mayor Richard Riordan, who endorsed Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein over the weekend. New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani led the way last week with his dramatic verbal embrace of Democratic Gov. Mario Cuomo.

Some Democratic candidates are aggressively promoting their independence from President Clinton, who has had erratic approval ratings. But that type of distancing is more routine in a midterm election year than the high-profile defections plaguing the GOP.

In the final week before the election, the crossovers are drawing charges of treason from infuriated Republicans and appear to be helping create momentum for some Democrats.

Oliver North's Senate race in Virginia has created a deep intraparty rift and attracted the most national attention. The number of North's GOP critics grew last week to include Nancy Reagan, who asserted the former national security aide had lied to her husband about the Iran-Contra affair and couldn't tell fact from fantasy.

But the North dispute, which has focused on his character and fitness for office, is less significant than the two mayoral desertions and others that reflect a split between GOP moderates and conservatives.

"What you have here are a bunch of Republicans who basically are saying 'we don't want any government.' And a major part of the Republican Party won't go that far," said Tony Coelho, senior adviser to the Democratic National Committee.

He said the officials who have jumped the fence or challenged GOP tenets foreshadow the problems the party will face reconciling its factions in the 1996 presidential campaign.

Haley Barbour, chairman of the Republican National Committee, attributed the two mayoral endorsements to local feuds, alliances and cash flows. "Some officials want to have more state and federal money put into their city budgets," he said.

Jury acquits friend of 'Hogan's Heroes' star of actor's murder

PHOENIX (AP) — A pal of Bob Crane who shared willing young women with the "Hogan's Heroes" star was acquitted Monday of charges he bludgeoned the actor to death in 1978 for fear Crane was going to end the friendship.

"My life is back together again after 16 years," said John Henry Carpenter, a 66-year-old electronics equipment dealer. His wife, Diana, sobbed, "It's over, it's over" from the spectators' bench behind him.

The case turned on a photograph of a speck found on the door of Carpenter's rental car. Prosecutors said the speck, which was lost, was fat tissue from inside Crane's skull, but defense experts said that was impossible to prove.

"What was the speck?" asked the jury foreman, Marine Sgt. Michael Lake. "Nobody knows what it was, not even the doctors."

The jury deliberated nearly 2½ days before finding Carpenter innocent of murder.

Crane, who played the wisecracking Col. Robert Hogan in the TV series about a Nazi POW camp, was 49 when he was found bludgeoned to death in bed in an apartment he was renting while performing in a dinner theater production.

Prosecutors argued that Carpenter crushed Crane's skull with the tripod of a video camera the two used to tape their sexual escapades. But prosecutors never produced the tripod.

Crane, often accompanied by Carpenter, lived a swinger's life while traveling the dinner-theater circuit after his TV series ended in 1971. The men frequented bars and picked up women drawn by Crane's fame.

Prosecutors said Crane and Carpenter engaged in occasional sexual threesomes. The jury was shown a fuzzy black-and-white home video of the men simultaneously having sex with a woman.

Throughout the eight-week trial, prosecutors claimed Carpenter killed Crane for fear the actor would cut off the parade of women.

Supreme Court to decide fate of frequent flier program lawsuit

Max Studio of Photography
NOW BOOKING SPRING WEDDINGS AND CHRISTMAS PORTRAITS
683-2143

CHICAGO (AP) — When American Airlines changed the rules of its frequent flier program, millions of travelers saw the value of their accumulated miles plummet.

Six people saw the act as a breach of contract and decided to sue. Today, the U.S. Supreme Court will hear arguments on whether to allow them to bring a class-action lawsuit on behalf of millions of travelers.

"One out of every 10 Americans . . . is a member of American's frequent flier program," said Randy Petersen, publisher of InsideFlyer, a Colorado-based magazine for frequent fliers. "These miles represent an investment. Most people don't take them too lightly."

Frequent flier programs allow customers to earn free flights by accumulating credit for miles flown or for such things as credit card expenditures and hotel stays.

Last year, American, which has the largest frequent flier club in the world with 23 million members, gave out more than 2 million free tickets to members of its AAdvantage club.

In 1988 American changed the AAdvantage rules, limiting how many seats on each flight could be given out free and preventing passengers from using free tickets on busy days such as Christmas and Thanksgiving.

A challenge was filed initially in federal court but was dismissed because federal law didn't provide a remedy for the damage the plaintiffs said they had suffered. The legal battle then moved to state court.

Last December, the Illinois Supreme Court ruled that American had entered into a contractual relationship with its frequent fliers and could not unilaterally change the rules.

American appealed to the Supreme Court, citing a ruling in a separate case. In that case, the nation's highest court held that federal law overrides state law in matters of airline routes, rates and services.

Gilbert Gordon, a lawyer for the plaintiffs, said that the question of frequent flier miles is outside the boundary of routes, rates and services, and that airlines should be subject to the same laws as other companies.

Man who explores North America on two wheels makes Tall City one of his stops

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Eddie Fitzgerald's sky-blue eyes tell the story of his 58 years of life. Some of it good; some of it bad; but, in his own words his "life has never been uninteresting."

His weather-beaten body and leathery skin are testimony to the eight years and three months he has spent riding a bicycle across North America, trekking what he estimates as well over 100,000 miles.

Dressed in traditional biking gear — biking shorts, biking shoes and a helmet — Fitzgerald is propped upon a bar stool at Riley's Bar & Grill. He happily talks about his journey — in a raspy voice he said is caused by laryngitis — to anyone who wants to listen.

"I'm in a bar — it's the Irish way," he said showing a toothless smile, which he attributes to a boxing match in about 1960 with boxing great Floyd Patterson.

He's not clear on dates, which he said is the result of too many boxing matches.

Putting a cigarette to his mouth, he boasts of reaching the 100,000-mile mark when he rode through Yuma, Ariz., about three weeks ago.

Sides to present closing arguments in McDonald's trial

■ Six-man, six-woman jury expected to begin deliberations later in day.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Closing arguments are scheduled to begin early today in the trial of a Midland man accused of stealing $130,000 from a local fast-food restaurant over a two-year period.

The trial of Bruce Cunningham of Midland is in its third week; later today the six-man, six-woman jury is expected to begin deliberations of the defendant's guilt or innocence.

The offense is a second-degree felony for any theft of more than $20,000, according to prosecuting attorneys.

Cunningham is charged with multiple counts of theft between Jan. 17, 1990, and April 30, 1992, while manager of the McDonald's franchise on Andrews Highway.

Lead counsel for the prosecution, Robin Sams, rested the state's case early last week after producing documents that she maintains indicate thefts of less than $100 a day or more than $1,000 a day.

Although any theft of more than $20,000 is a second-degree felony, the additional sums will be important in the punishment phase of the trial if Cunningham is found guilty.

Jurors heard evidence from expert witnesses — in this case accountants. One witness for the prosecution told jurors that she interpreted the multitude of documents entered into evidence as proof that Cunningham committed the offense.

Another accountant testifying for the prosecution said that his review of the evidence did not lead him to believe Cunningham was the offender. This man testified that a review of Cunningham's finances did not show any traces of the $130,000.

Prosecutors called the defendant's brother-in-law earlier in the trial. He testified that Cunningham had told him how it was possible to close out an electronic cash register and alter the totals

Recycling center gives residents little extra for environmental efforts

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Midlanders can clean the environment and earn some pocket money with the opening of Butts Recycling's Public Recycling Center, 26 W. Industrial Loop.

The center will purchase aluminum cans, newspapers, computer paper and white ledger paper. It will also accept — but not purchase — steel cans and cardboard, said Fred Preston, manager of Butts.

He said the center will expand as much as possible to add additional items.

With prices for aluminum and newspaper increasing, the center can purchase the materials from the public, he said.

Newspapers collected at the center are sent to Mexico; aluminum cans are sent to an Alcoa plant.

Butts' hours of operation are from 10

Ralph Gates, minister of Fairmont Church of Christ, recently visited Romania, where he taught English and the Word of God.

Minister reaches Romanians with English, Bible teachings

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

Ralph Gates made a decision about 12 years ago that would literally change his life's work.

He quit his job at Superior Oil Co. at the age of 34 and began a second career as a minister and attended Bear Valley School of Biblical Studies in Denver.

"I felt like I needed to reach out to society and introduce them to Jesus like I had been introduced to Him," said the 46-year-old. "And I wanted to do it full time. So, I just quit my job at Superior and began working as a minister."

Since his decision, he has been the minister in Farwell and then at Fairmont Church of Christ in Midland for 10 years. During that time, he has been on many missionary trips, including one to Bosnia that brought him within miles of the shelling that began in May 1993.

"I decided that was all I wanted to see of Bosnia," he said.

While Fairmont Church of Christ has ongoing outreach programs in the Caribbean and Brazil, a unique approach to missionary work is being used in Ploiesti, Romania, that has combined teaching conversational English with learning the Bible.

Students in the United Way of Midland Youth Funds Distribution Cabinet recently toured local agencies to decide how the funds that they raised would be distributed.

Students learn about United Way funding

Staff Report

In one afternoon, 13 high school students learned about the United Way of Midland's 16 agencies and how the funding process works.

The students — from Midland and Coleman high schools — comprised the Youth Funds Distribution Cabinet. More than $4,000 was raised by various elementary and high school students in campaigns at their schools. The cabinet decided how the funds would be distributed.

"These high school students know what issues are important to their age group. Therefore, it was only appropriate that they decide where the money they raised would go," said Molly Clark, United Way development associate and organizer of the youth campaign.

The students met at the United Way office last week and then were divided into five panels. Each panel toured its assigned agencies, then convened at the offices to make its final decisions.

Candidate for railroad commission makes campaign stop in city

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Rylander

Texas Railroad Commission candidate Carole Keeton Rylander stumped in Midland Monday, proposing a "sweeping ethics reform plan to open up and clean up" the Texas Railroad Commission. She also wants to free the Texas oil-and-gas industry of bureaucratic regulations that hamper exploration, production, jobs and payrolls, she said.

"I am going to bring some leadership and some firepower to the Texas Railroad Commission and see to it that it is 'the' energy commission going into the next decade . . . into the 21st century," said Mrs. Rylander, Republican candidate for commissioner.

To do that, Mrs. Rylander, a 55-year-old Austin businesswoman and former Austin mayor, must defeat incumbent Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers, a Democrat.

Mrs. Nabers was appointed to the three-member railroad commission in February 1993 by Gov. Ann Richards to succeed Bob Krueger, who resigned from the post after Ms. Richards appointed him a U.S. senator. He replaced Lloyd Bentsen, who resigned to become U.S. Treasurer. Democrat Krueger lost his Senate seat to Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison in the 1993 general election.

If Mrs. Rylander is elected to the railroad commission post in the Nov. 8 general election, she will be the first woman elected to the statewide regulatory agency.

Mrs. Rylander said she would take a "bully pulpit" position on the railroad commission to effect changes.

"My first priority is . . . to de-hassle the regulatory process at the Texas Railroad Commission," she said in a press conference at Midland International Airport.

Once in office, Mrs. Rylander said that she and Republican Commissioner Barry Williamson of Midland will act in concert as proponents of "pro-growth, pro-jobs, (and) pro-unleashing the creative abilities of the private-sector majority on the Texas Railroad Commission for the first time in history."

STOP: Candidate Rylander brings campaign to city

(From 1B)

The third member of the railroad commission, Democrat Jim Nugent, is seeking re-election. Mrs. Rylander declined to discuss Nugent's performance.

The railroad commission oversees an almost $52-million budget and 971 employees in regulating the Texas petroleum industry. A commissioner's base salary is $79,247.

"I believe government can be responsive, responsible, effective and efficient," Mrs. Rylander said.

One of Mrs. Rylander's proposals is to abolish the railroad commission's Transportation Division and transfer more safety enforcement to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

"And we are going to shake the rafters of the Austin bureaucracy from top to bottom and see to it that the Texas Railroad Commission sets policies that translates directly to paychecks and jobs for Texans. We need government and politics free of back rooms, free from special-interests groups and free from good ol' boy and good ol' girl go-along-to-get-along school of politics."

Her opponent, whom Mrs. Rylander called a career political appointee, is from the "go-along-to-get-along" school of political opportunism, she said.

"Mary Scott Nabers is an apologist for Bill Clinton and for the status quo," Mrs. Rylander said. "And she walks in lock-step with the Clinton administration that is patently anti-Texas and anti-energy."

Mrs. Nabers' pattern is "drifting from one government appointed position to another government appointed position.

The Democratic candidate "is a liberal, a big spender and a self-promoter" who increased Texas Employment Commission (TEC) spending by 71 percent when she was an appointed TEC member.

And Mrs. Rylander accused Mrs. Nabers of taking no action to defeat President Clinton's since-thwarted Btu (gas) tax and of failing "to persuade the Clinton administration to establish a national energy policy."

Mrs. Rylander termed the Btu tax the "Beat Texas Up" and "Big-Time Unemployment" tax, while people on the East Coast called it "Buy Thermal Underwear."

The tax would have been "a mammoth job-killer" for Texas, she said.

When she is fighting for Texas's interests, Mrs. Rylander said she is "going to be on the first plane to the federal city, and I am going to shake the rafters of the Capitol, and I'm going to shake the rafters of the White House when something is proposed that is going to be detrimental to the people of Texas.

"And I am going to take all the good independent oil-and-gas men and women from the Permian Basin with me when we shake those rafters," Mrs. Rylander said. "We cannot abdicate our responsibility on the Texas Railroad Commission."

In acting out her pledge to "open up and clean up" the railroad commission, Mrs. Rylander released her federal income-tax records to the press and the citizenry, but Mrs. Nabers has not followed suit.

Mrs. Rylander proposed "less regulations, less taxation and less government mandates" affecting the oil-and-gas industry.

"I have proposed an energy plan to boost exploration and production for the Texas oil industry."

Mrs. Rylander, who served on the National Petroleum Council under appointment by Republican President George Bush, said she supports "energy independence in these United States.

"I don't want us held hostage by Iraq or Iran or any of the ayatollahs. And when you are importing 50 percent of your crude, heading toward 60 percent, it's a clear, present danger. I want to back out of that foreign crude with our Texas oil and natural gas."

Mrs. Rylander, who is a government honors graduate of The University of Texas, was the first woman mayor of Austin and is a former television producer who hosted the issues-oriented "The Rylander Report."

In her Midland campaign, Mrs. Rylander was accompanied by and introduced by Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry, who found economic links between agriculture and petroleum.

REACHES: Program teaches Bible to Romanians

(From 1B)

Gates said. "You take a Scripture from the Bible and teach a student English with the passage. Not only do they learn English, but most become fascinated with the Bible."

The program is headquarted at the World English School in Little Rock, Ark. There are similar programs in about 75 countries.

"The school has been around for about 10 years, but, since the fall of communist regimes, it has really taken off," he said.

Gates went to Romania in March to set up the foundation for the program in Ploiesti, which he calls "the Permian Basin of Europe."

"Ploiesti was the oil-field supply for the Germans during World War II," he said. "We'll see all kinds of oil-field workers in our program."

Gates, along with J.B. McClellan, Alan Boyd and Terry Pafford, set up the program and then returned to Romania in September.

While Gates will return to Romania twice a year to help teach, a few families remain in Romania to keep the lessons going on a weekly basis. When Gates and his group get ready to go over, letters are sent to students informing them of the upcoming trip. Anyone interested in the program schedules daylong sessions when Gates returns.

"We started with about 100 students and have grown to 11,045," he said.

In addition to the program, Gates has been invited back to speak at several high schools. Gates' 15-year-old son Kevin will be going with him on his next trip to speak at the IL Carigali School, the oldest high school in Ploiesti.

"He will be speaking mostly on the American teen-agers' lifestyles," he said. "Maybe a little about Scripture, but mostly about America."

Gates' wife Deana and his daughters, 20-year-old Krista and 15-year-old Kimberly, have never been able to make it on one of Gates' trips, a situation they are trying to rectify.

"Deana is really working at getting off work to come with me to Romania," he said.

His family, especially his wife, has been supportive of his decision to work as a minister.

"If you had told my wife when we married in 1969 that she would be married to a minister, she would have said 'No way,'" he said. "But, she has always supported me."

Gates does not see an end to the work in Romania. He has left the time frame open for how long they will continue to visit the country.

"In the New Testament, Jesus performed miracles to get people's attention," he said. "Similarly, we are using the English language to get people interested in Jesus. As long as they are interested, we will go back."

out other bicycles; some were stolen. On the worn bike is a sleeping roll and a backpack.

An American flag flaps in the wind on the rear of his bicycle.

Calling himself a "world-record bike rider," he said he is proud to "set the record for Americans — for us."

"We're America," Fitzgerald said as he pointed to those around him.

"I came to America through Ellis Island as a 1-year-old from Dublin," Fitzgerald said of his heritage.

Fitzgerald has proudly met people of all races and nationalities while cycling across North America. At one point in his adventure, he spent some time with a group of Native Americans while recovering from a rattlesnake bite.

"I know this country — I met it."

He said he has cycled through the 48 contiguous states twice and 10 Canadian provinces twice. He's ridden through Midland nine times, this being the first time he has stopped.

The cross-country trek began after his wife died of leukemia.

"My wife died nine years ago . . . my kids are grown, and I wanted to run away from life. But, guess what? I didn't run away from life; I ran into it," Fitzgerald said.

"I found as soon as I go over one hill I find another hill," he said.

Fitzgerald relies on the generosity of the people he meets during his journey to sustain him.

"It's what you need — what you can survive on. What the heck do you need? My bike and some food. I need a new back tire, and he (the bar's owner) said 'I'll help you,'" Fitzgerald said.

Bruce Riley, the owner of Riley's Bar & Grill, provided Fitzgerald with a meal, a place to sleep for the night and money for more than just a new tire.

"How many people do what you're doing?" Riley said to Fitzgerald as he handed him some money.

The cyclist said this is likely his last ride across the United States as he heads for Cocoa Beach, Fla. He is quitting to head home to Toronto, Canada, to see his children and grandchildren.

"I'm not much of a Frank Sinatra fan, but I've got to say I agree in that I have to do things 'my way,'" he said with a grin.

He pulls a scrapbook from his bag and hands it around the bar getting signatures from the friendly people he has met along his journey.

"This is what's important — the signatures of America."

Baptists convene in Amarillo

AMARILLO (AP) — More than 5,000 Southern Baptists from across the state convened Monday in a session that could mark a turning point for the denomination in Texas.

Moderates were expected to ask the Baptist General Convention of Texas to loosen the grip long maintained by the Southern Baptist Convention on local congregational contributions.

The proposed changes would allow each local church to decide where the state convention sends the church's donation, while having the donation still count as part of the Cooperative Program.

The Cooperative Program is the pool of church contributions maintained to fund mission and seminary work.

Such a move would allow Texas Baptist churches to withhold money from the conservative-dominated national body and target funds for specific programs, such as the moderate Cooperative Baptist Fellowship.

"The big winners in this will be the Texas convention and the missionaries because that's what Texas Baptists want to support," said Dr. David Currie, San Angelo coordinator for the moderate Texas Baptists Committed.

"It frees churches to support everything that the SBC has done, some of what the SBC has done and none of what the SBC has done," he said.

But the Rev. Stan Coffey of Amarillo said the proposed changes would be a deceptive and unwise departure for Texas Baptists, making it unclear what missions the convention's Cooperative Program is supporting.

Last year, Texas Baptist churches donated $63.5 million to the Cooperative Program. About $40.2 million stayed at the state level, and the other $23.3 million went to the Southern Baptist Convention at the national level.

Some conservative leaders have made contingency plans for splitting off from the state convention and forming a new, conservative body if the moderates prevail this week.

Nationwide, the Southern Baptist Convention has about 16 million congregants, making it the largest Protestant denomination. About 2.5 million of them are members of the Texas convention.

ATF agent blames another for deadly cult raid

DALLAS (AP) — One of the two federal agents fired for allowing the raid on the Branch Davidians to proceed blames a third agent for keeping secret information that would possibly have stopped the attack and avoided its disastrous consequences.

Charles Sarabyn, one of two Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents in charge of the Feb. 28, 1993, raid, said in an appeal filed Monday that agent Jim Cavanaugh did not pass on information that David Koresh and his followers may have known of the pending attack.

"If he had, the raid would have been stopped at least long enough for a meeting of the command personnel or perhaps completely aborted," the appeal says.

The consolidated appeals by Sarabyn and fellow fired agent Phillip Chojnacki are their first detailed defense of their role in the raid.

The documents, obtained by The Associated Press, were filed in the Dallas regional office of the Merit Systems Protection Board, through which federal civil service workers can appeal disciplinary actions.

Sarabyn said Cavanaugh, who was stationed inside a house across from the Davidian compound near Waco, knew that a mailman who was a Davidian had talked to a reporter and then had driven into the compound.

Cavanaugh, who also was aware that some reporters were out in front of the compound, was among five agents who had independent authority to call off the raid, Sarabyn's appeal says.

"Cavanaugh reported everything was OK," Sarabyn said.

Cavanaugh, who is now the special agent in charge of the ATF's Birmingham, Ala., office, declined comment when reached at his home late Monday night. ATF officials in Washington could not be reached Monday night.

"I'm not really allowed to comment because of pending civil suits and this action," Cavanaugh said. "The government attorneys have told us not to comment."

Chojnacki was the special agent in charge of the Houston ATF office and Sarabyn was the assistant special agent in charge. They were told in letters dated Feb. 4 that action was being taken to have them fired.

"Agent Chojnacki felt that if the situation deteriorated, they would be advised by forward observers via Agent Cavanaugh and could safely abort the raid," Chojnacki's appeal says.

"Yet even though Cavanaugh had an open telephone line and constant communication with Agents Sarabyn and Chojnacki, Cavanaugh never voiced any concern to either of them regarding aborting the raid."

Sarabyn and Chojnacki were fired in letters from the Treasury Department dated last Tuesday.

They are seeking to regain their jobs and salary with all back pay and benefits, and also "any further relief that the Board considered appropriate."

Their firings were based mainly on a September 1993 Treasury Department report that was critical of the ATF in general and the two specifically for the attack that led to the deaths of four agents and six sect members.

Because of the report, ATF director Stephen Higgins resigned and several top ATF officials were placed on administrative leave, including Sarabyn and Chojnacki.

The botched raid led to a 51-day standoff that ended in a fire April 19, killing Koresh and more than 70 followers. The government tried forcing sect members out of the compound earlier that day by ramming the walls with tanks and firing in tear gas. Surviving Davidians blame the tanks for starting the fire.

San Angelo-based Butts Recycling has formed programs with San Angelo's schools, Boy Scouts and other organizations. Preston said he expects to initiate the same programs in Midland.

The company has already established a working relationship with the new Wal-Mart Supercenter.

"We go through 4,000 cans every other week," said Dian Dedon, manager of Wal-Mart's floral center and the store's Project Green coordinator.

"Every time we have enough cans, we call Butts and they pick them up."

Butts also picks up the store's cardboard bales.

She said the money from the cans goes into the associates' fund, which is used to help Wal-Mart associates who are having financial troubles.

She said some of the money is going to help an associate who is in the hospital. The money is sometimes used for fun projects, such as pizza parties, Dedon said.

The store is working on an arrangement with Odessa's Time Machine to recycle plastic items.

In addition to recycling items, Wal-Mart funds educational projects. It has donated $1,500 to area schools to set up recycling programs and also donates matching funds to help with playground and other equipment.

DEAR ABBY

Couple finds smooth sailing after stormy wedding

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter about a young couple's wedding mishap on a cruise ship. The writer wanted to know if anyone could top it. Well, I think I can.

I had two months to plan our wedding after my fiance learned he would have his leave from the Army. My budget was very tight, so I made the bridesmaids' dresses, and because I didn't want to put anyone in a financial bind, I also paid for the tuxedo rentals.

It was the hottest day of June, with thunderstorms. My parents' toilet overflowed that morning, with a house full of houseguests. My maid of honor spent the previous day at the beach, where she got a terrible sunburn on her back and shoulders. One of the ushers was told his Army leave was canceled. Our reserved motel room was "taken" when we got there. And when we returned from our brief honeymoon, we discovered that the photographer (a friend) had used only black-and-white film!

That was 25 years ago last June. We have only one colored photo of us walking down the aisle. (A guest took it.) It's a little out of focus and taken from a strange angle. Did any of this dampen my spirits? Not on your life — I was on cloud nine!

It was a marvelous day for us, and we have had others, such as the births of our children and their graduations from high school and college. We count our blessings — not our mishaps! — BLESSED IN DELAWARE

DEAR ABBY: Now I have to tell my "children-at-wedding" story: It took place in a remote part of Montana in a beautiful church with a raised altar area in front of a gorgeous stained-glass window.

Many of the guests, myself included, had driven from Southern California for the event. The groom was my nephew, and the ring bearer was the bride's nephew, "Chad," age 6.

When Chad and the flower girl led the procession down the aisle, everything seemed picture-perfect.

As the ceremony progressed, however, Chad decided it was too stuffy for him, so he proceeded to walk out behind the bride and groom (unbeknownst to them), faced the audience, and throughout the entire ceremony, made a startling repertoire of monkey faces!

His parents and part of the bridal party on the dais made furtive but desperate gestures to Chad and relatives to "do something!" but, since no one could without disrupting the entire affair (coaxing from the front row got nowhere) and the bridal pair were oblivious to what was going on behind their backs, we all sedately let the wedding (and antics) go on.

When my nephew and his bride reviewed the videotape of their wedding, instead of being upset, they laughed uproariously, and said this was one wedding none of us would ever forget! (After Chad's parents got him home, I'll bet Chad won't forget it either!)

Now my nephew and his wife have two little girls of their own who have inherited their parents' wonderful sense of humor. — D.A. BURSON, ENCINO, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column, you commented on nosy people who ask, "How old are you?"

You replied, "I smile and tell them the year of my birth, and let them figure it out."

When I'm asked that question, my stock reply is, "I was born 48 1/2 years after President Lincoln was assassinated." Not surprisingly, some have said, "I don't know when Honest Abe died!" — ROBERT C. BROWN, EUREKA, ILL.

DEAR ROBERT: Clever. And for those readers whose recall of presidential history is rusty, Abraham Lincoln died April 15, 1865.

Opinion polls: Who cares what everybody thinks?

By Erma Bombeck

Bombeck

Having read the latest sex survey that makes us all sound like a 1960 Doris Day movie, I suggest we do a survey on how many people tell the truth on these questionnaires.

With all my heart, I want to believe most of us are monogamous, heterosexual, don't cheat on our mates and aren't into "kinky," but the rates of divorce, infidelity and unwanted pregnancies belie it.

It's like a survey I read recently on people who have changed their eating habits to eliminate fats and sugars from their diets. If this is true, why do I have to take a number at the bakery? And if exercise is the answer to a firm, hard body, then how come President Clinton breaks a sweat every morning of his life and still comes off looking like the Pillsbury Dough Boy?

I watched a show the other night on PBS where a correspondent was visiting diners in the heartland of America. These are places where real people go to eat, people who are probably never a part of a survey anywhere. The specialty of one diner is a hot dog bun stuffed with cheese and wrapped with two slices of bacon and then deep-fried. If that won't put hair on the head of fitness guru Susan Powter (Stop the Madness!), nothing will.

I once read a poll on teen-agers who were asked to answer at what age and how often they had sex. I don't remember all the details, but had it been a valid response, there wouldn't have been time for classes.

There was another survey asking mothers if they were given a second chance, would they have children. So what? What do you do, return the ones you've got for credit?

Call-in polls are intriguing. Who are these people who pay 50 cents to say they do or do not believe that the Presley-Jackson marriage will last? And what difference does it make what they think?

As for political polls, I haven't put much stock in them since Dewey was elected president over Truman.

Polls are supposedly a barometer measuring the opinions of people on what direction the country is taking. If this is so, here are the results of a poll that will scare you to death:

According to a Roper poll conducted in 1959, 50 percent of Americans learned about their country and the world from the evening news shows on TV. By 1991, 81 percent got their news from television — but not from news shows. They got it from the talk shows and magazine formats such as "Hard Copy" and "Current Affair."

Small wonder that Ricki Lake beats our secretary of state in a recognition poll, and a former vice president worries about the immorality of Murphy Brown.

Ripley's museum seeks oddest laugh in Texas

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — Ginger Robinson's robust laugh ranges from a low-pitched "hyuh, hyuh, hyuh" to a high-pitched "Ha!"

She's thinking about putting her mirth on the line for a shot at the "Lone Star Laugher" title to be decided by the Ripley's Believe It or Not museum.

The contest to find the oddest laugh in Texas kicks off Tuesday in Grand Prairie and San Antonio, with finalists gathering for the Lone Star Laugh-Off in early December in Grand Prairie.

First prize is a night on the town in Dallas.

Ms. Robinson, 60, whose sister works at Ripley's in Grand Prairie, said she doesn't believe that she has such an unusual laugh. She's laughed that way all her life.

"Oh, my sister just thinks I do," Ms. Robinson said. "But I probably will (enter), just for the fun of it."

The contest requires contestants to leave their names and a laugh on a telephone hot line.

A similar laugh-off at a Ripley's Believe It or Not in England drew more than 2,000 telephone calls earlier this year.

Sean Cassidy of Ripley's said Texas was the museum's unanimous choice for its first laugh-off in the United States.

"When you think of Texas, you think of big things," Cassidy said. "You couldn't pick a better place to do it. Where else could you have the Lone Star Laugher? You certainly couldn't do it in Oklahoma."

The winner of Great Britain's King of Laugher Contest was a woman who Cassidy said had "a high-pitched laugh that lasted 30 seconds."

"A lot of people can laugh loud, but we are looking for something strange. The less human, the better," he said.

Gov. Richards seeks additional help for Texas' flooded cities

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards on Monday asked federal officials for more money to help 37 Texas counties rebuild public facilities damaged by this month's floods.

The affected Southeast Texas counties have already been declared disaster areas for the purpose of individual emergency assistance.

Gov. Richards' request Monday seeks funding to help local officials repair damaged roads, bridges, schools and other public buildings and to pay overtime costs associated with the flood.

Jo Schweikhard Moss, spokeswoman for the state division of emergency management, said it's still not certain how much flood damage was sustained by public facilities.

If the request is granted, counties will be able to apply for Federal Emergency Management Agency funds to repair their property.

Domestic violence

Texas county sets up volunteer program to work with victims

By Jim Phillips
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN — The night Anne's husband hit her in the head with a hammer, there was a lot she didn't know.

Besides not realizing her husband was capable of trying to kill her, she had no familiarity with the criminal justice system, giving statements to investigators, obtaining a protective order or awaiting someone's release on bond. Not to mention what help she might find as she left her husband of 14 years and faced life alone at the age of 35.

All that changed quickly. She learned more at the hospital emergency room and in the hours after the attack than she ever expected, and she learned much of it from volunteers for the Travis County Victims' Services office.

"That volunteer was with me all the time from 4 in the afternoon till 3 in the morning," said Anne, who asked that her full name not be used. "In my condition of being emotionally distraught, she was the anchor, keeping things in perspective, kind of balancing out what I didn't have at that point.

"They helped me through meeting with my detectives. They helped me with filing a protective order. They helped me with completing forms for the victims compensation fund.

"Those are the tangibles, but emotionally they've obviously given me an enormous amount of support and strength and confidence."

Anne's reaction to the help afforded by the victims' services unit is what officials in the Travis County sheriff's department were looking for when the unit was expanded to include volunteers and provide more services for victims under Sheriff Terry Keel.

"The program does two things," the sheriff said. "No. 1 is crisis intervention," helping victims immediately after an assault. "Secondly, and this is especially essential in domestic violence cases, they facilitate a victim working through a system that most of the time is foreign to them.

"We wanted 100 percent contact on victims of crimes against persons, and especially on family violence," Keel said. "That was our priority when we came in."

Keel credits Donna Geissen with envisioning how that could be done. Geissen runs the victims' services office and its still-growing volunteer program. Geissen often tours the county in the new victims' services van, which is packed with everything her unit might need in crisis situations.

"I've got blankets and water and teddy bears and coloring books and crackers and Gatorade and candy bars and brochures for different types of services and a coffee pot and cream and sugar for those long hauls," Geissen said. "You could live out of this van for two weeks."

Victims' services responded to 1,090 family violence calls in 1993, the majority involving spouses or partners. Volunteers handled 545 cases in the first six months of this year.

Although the number of reported abuse cases has remained steady, Geissen said awareness about domestic violence has increased. By designating October as Family Violence Awareness Month, those who work with battered women are hoping for even greater awareness.

"There's been a real increase in inquiries about victims' rights in family violence cases," Geissen said. "Since the O.J. Simpson case, more people who used to turn their heads and look the other way are now making outcries."

With a new six-week training class through the sheriff's office under way for volunteers, Geissen soon will have more than 100 volunteers to respond to crime scenes and hospitals. The full-time victims' services staff consists of Geissen and her assistant, Bonnie Neuendorff.

Geissen wanted a program in which victims could learn about their options before their abusers had a chance to apologize and persuade them to not press charges. With that aim, volunteers arrive at crime scenes or hospitals soon after sheriff's deputies, during what Geissen refers to as the "golden hour." That's the time "after the suspect is arrested but before he is out, when the victim is still feeling the pain but before the suspect calls and apologizes and makes promises to change."

Victims often do not take advantage of help offered on the first visit but are more likely to if the batterer is a repeat offender, Geissen said. Victims are advised that if they don't leave their abuser, they at least should prepare for the next emergency, stashing extra clothes, money and keys with a friend or in a safe place so they can be retrieved quickly.

Keel said the higher success rate in helping on subsequent assaults is attributable to the victims' services unit. "They then know there is help and a way out. It is less likely they will languish in a bad situation once they know the options available."

Geissen said, "What we're seeing is these women may not make a change that night, but they know we're there, they know what's available, and they call us the next time.

"At least we've given her a lifeline. If she swims with it or not is up to her."

A cardinal rule of the office is to never insist or even expect a victim to leave an abuser. As a written guideline says, "You can repeatedly state you want her to be safe, and give the victim their options, but leaving has to be her choice. If it is not hers, she will not follow through."

Geissen said, "One of the hardest things to learn in this job is all you can do is all you can do." And she doesn't second-guess those who stay: "It's hard to be lonely and poor and a single parent and facing the world for the first time, maybe, on your own. It's hard work."

For Anne, once was enough. She credits the victims' service volunteer who met her at the hospital with helping her through a wrenching time. Anne was treated at the hospital and released.

"She was the one who told me what was there for me as far as help. She was the one to tell me what a protective order was about. She informed me what would be happening to the person who assaulted me. She called me for several days after that to see how I was doing and offer any more assistance."

Another recent recipient of services for victims is Gretchen Tibolet, who said she had left her husband two years ago after a violent outburst, only to reunite later. A month ago, he erupted again, she said. "After it happened this last time, I said, 'Forget it, I can't live like that.'"

She said that during a horrendous weekend this year, many of her belongings were sold or destroyed before her husband attacked her, choking and beating her. Later that night, he was arrested for trespassing at a topless bar.

While he was in jail on that charge, Tibolet was trying to get charges filed against him for assault. "I had a problem getting into the system," she said. "I had to have this additional charge against him to keep him away, so I could get my things moved.

"Out of desperation, I called a main (sheriff's office) line. I was screaming and crying. I said, 'I don't know what to do.' I was almost hyper-ventilating. I got Bonnie (Neuendorff) at victims' services, and within an hour or two she had all the information and had set it up for me to go talk to the detective to get this warrant issued."

Without that help, "I would have been lost in the shuffle, and he probably would have gotten out.

"Whatever you need done, they will get done for you. It's wonderful."

More churches mix in politics but many still avoid it

By A.V. Gallagher
Associated Press

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — The Rev. Allen Fisher and a large number of clergy believe churches should get more involved in politics, and even fight for political goals, regardless if it threatens their tax-exempt status.

But other clergy are steadfast that while voter registration drives may be acceptable for their congregations, church-sponsored debates and other political activity must be avoided.

"We encourage voter registration and non-partisan voter education," said Jim Lund, of the Office of Peace and Justice with the Roman Catholic Diocese of Chicago. He spoke for many church leaders.

Fisher allowed his Stone Presbyterian Church in Wheeling to become a focal point of the 1992 presidential election. There, candidate Bill Clinton talked over the religious VISN television network about issues of faith shortly after he won the Democratic nomination in July.

"I view with remorse and regret the systematic way that churches and public discussions of faith have been excluded from the political process in recent years," Fisher complained.

"I think the church is too sensitive on separation issues. We want to get away from politics," Fisher said.

Lund said church-sponsored debates do not occur in the Chicago diocese.

Some church leaders said they fear that sponsoring debate-type forums could tread on their tax-exempt status. But the Internal Revenue Service may not be as sensitive as they think.

"Can churches invited candidates to debate issues? Yes, no problem," said IRS spokesman Henry Holmes. "And a church can take a position on an issue.

"What the church cannot do is endorse or campaign for or against any particular candidate," Holmes said.

In Dallas, Ted Hedquist, spokesman for the First Baptist Church, the nation's largest Southern Baptist church with 26,812 members, said the church might distribute material on how candidates voted or would vote on particular issues.

But Hedquist said the church avoids speeches and debates by candidates, in part because of tax reasons, but also because "that's not our role."

"We're not a political forum. We stay out of that," Hedquist said. "We're not here to tell people how to vote."

The Rev. James Orange, associate pastor of the St. Peter Baptist Church in Atlanta and a union activist, said churches, particularly those with black congregations, have a duty to be politically active.

"I think it's impossible for them not to be," said Orange, who was one of the first field staff of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s civil rights group and was with King when he was assassinated.

Churches always have been the central cultural and social life for blacks and the civil rights movement of the 1960s coalesced around churches, he said.

"Sunday mornings from 11 (a.m.) to 1 (p.m.) is the most segregated hour in America," Orange said.

Blacks attend their churches and whites attend theirs, separately, he said.

"That's the most opportune time for us to learn. A lot of our community involvement and issues are brought to a head," Orange said.

Churches should be concerned with their tax-exempt status as much as they should be concerned about motivating their community, he said. He said they need to encourage debate and talks by politicians to their congregations.

The Rev. Bill Ellis, West Virginia coordinator for about 90 Church of God churches, also said clergy should not avoid politicians, but bring them together to discuss the issues more calmly, under a peaceful roof.

"It seems to me that the founding fathers were very wise in talking about the state should not have power over the church," Ellis said.

"We've gone to the other extreme and said the church must not have any influence over the state," Ellis said, "and I don't think that's what the separation of church and state meant."

Ellis, who spent 25 years ministering in Decatur, Ill., and now lives in nearby Scott Depot, often invites officeholders and candidates to visit one of his churches to worship on the weekend before the election.

"It is not a Sunday morning for politicking," Ellis said. "We do not permit them to hand out literature and we do not allow them to speak. They simply worship together and listen to me preach."

Ellis said it is like a cease-fire before the election and often the strangest political foes can end up sitting quietly together.

Ellis believes there is a role for politics and religion.

Religious leaders like Pat Robertson and Jerry Falwell use "every avenue that's possible, that's legitimate, to express their positions and to make sure the people understand the position of the candidates. I think it's fine to do that."

But ministers also have to be wary of politicians who seek to infiltrate their flocks for political reasons.

On Oct. 23, former Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder rose to tell the congregation at the Trinity Baptist Church in Richmond that he was endorsing the re-election of longtime opponent Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va.

Charles D. Chambliss Jr., general counsel to the 5,400-member church, said Wilder's endorsement of Robb came after the church's service, and officials were aware is was going to take place.

"From time to time, candidates do contact the church regarding appearances and usually they're received as any other guests and sit with the congregation and sometimes they might actually be allowed to speak," Chambliss said.

Chambliss said his church has an obligation "to provide for the political education of the members."

"The church draws the line at endorsements, but believes its congregation should be informed," he said.

Larry J. Sabato, professor of government at the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, said "the incline is upwards" for churches being involved in politics.

"I believe in a robust First Amendment and that means that anybody can, and probably should, get involved in public affairs, whatever their bias," he said.

In Virginia, he said Robb "has practically centered his campaign in black churches."

"All sides are using churches to the hilt and they're allowing themselves to be used," Sabato said.

"We don't take partisan political candidates under our wing," said the Rev. Bill Nesbit, minister of administration at the Peachtree Presbyterian Church of Atlanta, the nation's largest Presbyterian church with 10,700 members.

But, Nesbit said, "We don't mind talking about issues that involve moral values."

Many drunken drivers turn out to be repeat offenders, study finds

ATLANTA (AP) — One-third of the people arrested each year for drunken driving have been arrested before for the same offense, according to a federal study.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention joined with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration in examining statistics from seven states that count previous DUI arrests.

Of the 1,010,054 DUI arrests studied, 320,570 people had been previously arrested for driving under the influence, they found. The percentage of repeat DUI offenders ranged from 21 percent in Iowa to 48 percent in New Mexico.

"We're not surprised at all by that figure," said Beckie Brown, national president of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, which led the grass-roots war that inspired tougher legislation against drivers convicted of DUI.

She said she believed the figure is actually higher, because many states wipe clean an offender's record after a certain time frame. Those arrests wouldn't be included in the new study, she said.

"We call on all states to get rid of time frames for drunk driving," she said.

Last year, a number of states moved to combat the problem of repeat drunken driving offenders, according to Jim Fell of the federal highway agency. Five states introduced bills to confiscate vehicles of repeat offenders, 15 others are considering bills to expand penalties and five others may increase prison sentences, he said.

Most state legislatures are not in session now, and Fell said he didn't know the status of the bills.

"There's a lot of concern in the states — as there should be," he said. "The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration wants states to combine more severe penalties with improvements in alcohol treatment."

Young men and those who had a history of traffic violations were the most likely to repeat the offense, according to the Oct. 20 report, which did not provide a breakdown on those arrested for DUI.

The 1 percent of the nation's licensed drivers arrested each year for drunken driving are at a greater risk of being involved in a fatal crash. And more than half of those arrested on DUI charges have severe alcohol problems, said Dr. Robert Brewer of the CDC.

"These are startling statistics," Brewer said. "We feel this suggests the need for states to enact stricter laws" governing legal limits for alcohol intoxication, mandatory substance-abuse programs and penalties for those breaking DUI laws.

Residents work to rebuild homes on land with fiery past

By Keith Stone and Jim Tranquada
N.Y. Times News Service

MALIBU, Calif. — Reeves and Reta Templeman love their new Las Flores Canyon house with its panoramic ocean view, and don't care at all that it sits on rugged land with a fiery past.

At least two previous homes there had burned in wildfires, one of them the Templemans' nearly a year ago in the Old Topanga Fire.

"You know there is fire in the area — you just have to take a chance," said Reeves Templeman, 85.

The Templemans and hundreds Of other hillside residents lost that gamble with nature nearly a year ago, when Southern California's worst series of wildfires swept over almost 300 square miles from the Mexican border to Point Mugu in Ventura County.

Four people died in more than a dozen wind-whipped blazes that destroyed more than 1,100 homes and other buildings and inflicted more than $1 billion in damage.

Yet almost immediately, homeowners began returning to the denuded hillsides to rebuild from the ashes. They included the Templemans.

JUST SEVEN months after the cinders cooled, the couple moved into a prefabricated house built on the scorched footprint of their old home. It sits beside a hulking brick chimney, the charred remains of another house that had burned on the site nearly 100 years earlier.

'You know there is fire in the area — you just have to take a chance.'

—Reeves Templeman

"We like the mountains and the openness of living," said Templeman, founder of the Malibu Times.

Templeman's sentiments echo the outlook of scores of other resilient hillside residents, all equally intent on returning to their beloved canyons.

In a familiar repeat performance of one of the region's oldest dramas, the bang of hammers and the whine of circular saws can be heard today throughout the canyon neighborhoods devastated by the fires.

Last year's fires followed a predictable script, apart from the magnitude of the collective disaster — second only to the Oakland Hills firestorm of October 1991 that killed 25 people and destroyed almost 3,000 homes.

Dry Santa Ana winds, gusting up to 60 mph, decades-old stands of drought-stressed chaparral, steep terrain, narrow, winding streets and hillside water systems debilitated by power outages combined to produce disaster.

"This was not a mysterious thing. Nothing has changed. The dynamics were exactly the same," said Stephen Pyne, a professor of American Studies at Arizona State University, West and author of "Fire in America."

'You have to be brain-dead to buy a house in Malibu or build a house and not think of fire. It is not if we get a fire — it is when.'

—David Williamson
Malibu resident

The first fires broke out last Oct. 26, including a blaze set by an arsonist near the 16th tee of the Los Robles Golf Course above suburban Thousand Oaks that quickly destroyed two homes and began an erratic run toward the sea.

The next day, all hell broke loose as 10 major fires — some sparked by downed power lines, others by arsonists — erupted across the region, triggering what ultimately became the greatest mobilization of firefighters in state history.

As many as 15,000 city, state and federal firefighters from 12 states rushed to fight the flames that destroyed or damaged 441 expensive homes in Laguna Beach and 163 homes to the north in Altadena and Pasadena.

LATER THAT week, the winds began to drop, prompting hopes the worst was over. But by Nov. 2, when firefighters had contained all but the stubborn Greenmeadow fire above Thousand Oaks, the Santa Anas returned — with a vengeance.

Shortly before lunchtime that day, investigators say an arsonist started a fire on Old Topanga Canyon Road that took just four hours to burn seven miles to the Pacific Ocean. Two days later, three people were dead and 355 homes destroyed.

Although the chaparral on the blackened slopes has started to sprout anew, rebuilding the neighborhoods has been a slow process, one overshadowed by the more widespread destruction wreaked by the Jan. 17 Northridge Earthquake.

For example, although 128 homes in unincorporated county territory were destroyed by the Old Topanga Fire, fewer than four dozen permit applications are on file, and just six or seven have been issued, Los Angeles County officials said.

Jim Safarik, manager of the county Building and Safety Department's Calabasas office, said he believes most people are still seeking financing or are undecided about rebuilding and have not completed drawing up their plans.

On Castlewood Drive, George and Brenda Symons are among the first and the only to rebuild.

Six enormous bay windows on the Symons' newly built house take sweeping views of an azure ocean, rolling morning fog and the rugged folds of Las Flores Canyon.

The windows also look out on blackened concrete pads where their neighbors' houses once stood.

Rebuilding required three major steps, George Symons said: first, getting a fair insurance settlement ("a big, troublesome thing to do"); then, designing the house; and finally, negotiating the permit process ("tough to do").

As a retired accountant, Symons, and his wife, who also is an accountant, had enough time and expertise to direct the rebuilding of the house. With design work by his son, Symons said, he has made the structure "absolutely fire resistant" with tile roof, stucco exterior, steel shutters and doors and double-paned windows.

"We never thought of not rebuilding here, because we love it here," said George Symons, 60, who has lived on Castlewood for almost two decades. "We are used to it — and it is used to us."

AS IN the wake of every major wildfire, local elected officials moved to beef up hillside building regulations. Both Los Angeles city and county now require that only "Class A" non-wooden roofs be installed in high-risk areas.

On a ridge above Calabasas, less than 100 yards from where the Old Topanga Fire started, Sarah Graham is building a house that prominently features a huge concrete block wall.

True to the new code requirements, the 2,000-square-foot house is being built with what are known as fire walls capable of resisting fire for an hour.

"It's unusual for a single-family house," said Graham, who is an architect on the project. "We complied with the law, but we also knew it made sense because there will always be fire here."

The construction Graham is supervising lies directly across from the ranch where British film director Duncan Gibbins suffered fatal burns over most of his body while trying to save his cat, Elsa, shortly after the fire started.

Gibbins' was one of four lives claimed by the firestorms. Two others died not far away near their 30-acre ranch in Carbon Canyon — Donn and Amy Yarrow of nearby Santa Monica, who died when flames overtook their truck on a narrow dirt road.

The fourth fatality, 98-year-old Alfred Wagner of Altadena, inhaled too much smoke when he refused to leave his threatened home and died in the hospital of pneumonia two weeks later.

For some, the fear of fire was not the reason they chose to leave the hills and their land.

Sixty-five-year-old Hans Fiebig and his wife decided they were too old to handle the complicated rebuilding process. And besides, Fiebig said, he was tired of the hour-long commute from Malibu to his eyeglass business in the Los Angeles area of Hancock Park.

So when their 3,200-square-foot, five-bedroom Malibu house burned, they took it as a sign. They moved to Bel Air, trading a panoramic view of the Pacific Ocean and Catalina for the quiet seclusion of the Santa Monica Mountains.

It did not matter, Fiebig said, that they moved from one notorious fire zone into another: The November 1961 Bel Air fire leveled 484 homes, the single most destructive fire in Southern California history.

"IT SHOWS how stupid I am," laughed Fiebig. "But it is the way I like to live. I like views. I like trees."

Strangely enough, it was the terror and destruction of the Old Topanga fire that cured David Williamson of his fear of wildfires and convinced him not to sell his contemporary-style Malibu house.

"You have to be brain-dead to buy a house in Malibu or build a house and not think of fire. It is not if we get a fire — it is when," Williamson said.

'We never thought of not rebuilding here, because we love it here. We are used to it — and it is used to us.'

—George Symons
Castlewood resident

With that in mind, the 50-year-old graphic designer set out 18 years ago to build what he believed would be a fire-safe house, one clad with stucco and tile. He religiously cleared brush from his 6-acre lot.

Yet his fear of fire remained, and finally convinced him to put the house up for sale last summer.

Before he could sell the house, however, the fire struck.

Williamson was forced to watch helplessly from a distance as the firestorm consumed 12 neighbors' homes — and left his house intact, except for some scorched decks.

"What I witnessed standing in front of it and watching the fireball go over it and explode above it is how safe the house is, if you do it right," he said.

Today, a fearless Williamson says he has no intention of moving.

"I am going to sit and have a cocktail the next time the fire goes over," he said. "I'm that confident."

Virginia Armstrong, director of the Carden Malibu School in Las Flores Canyon, said she displayed her own brand of canyon-dweller confidence when she and her husband, Bill, locked the school's doors as the fire approached.

AFTER ALL, the school had weathered other fires since it had opened in 1964, and two of the buildings — former fire stations — had stood since the 1930s.

But when the firestorm abated, several trailers and two classrooms, including the school library, had been leveled.

The private school, which enrolls children from preschool age through the 8th grade, reopened in temporary quarters at Malibu's community center about a week after the fire. Since then, enrollment has dropped from 50 students to 30.

Now back at the Las Flores Canyon campus, the Armstrongs are planning to rebuild.

Non-support

LOVINGTON, N.M. — A judge has appointed an attorney for former Washington Redskins running back Timmy Smith, who is accused of failing to pay $71,360 in child support for his two daughters who live in nearby Hobbs.

Smith appeared at a hearing Monday before state District Judge Pat Francoeur, who ordered Smith back to court on Jan. 24.

Smith stated in court that he did not have any money to hire an attorney, a spokeswoman for Francoeur said.

Smith has not paid $71,360 in court-ordered child support for his two daughters, said Ben Silva, director of the state Child Support Enforcement Division in Santa Fe.

Smith, a Hobbs native, in June headed the list of the state Human Services Department's "Most Wanted for Failure to Pay Child Support."

MHS girls hit playoff trail

■ The Midland High volleyball team takes on Amarillo Tascosa in bi-district play at 7:30 p.m. today in Brownfield.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

BROWNFIELD — Although it has been three years since Midland High has represented District 4-5A in the volleyball playoffs, coach Terri McColloch said she doesn't feel the Lady Dawgs' inexperience will be much of a factor against them when they face playoff tradition-rich Amarillo Tascosa here today.

McColloch, in her first year at the helm for MHS after guiding several Alpine teams deep into the Class 3A playoffs, said her team's struggle during district play will more than suffice for knowledge of pressure-cooker situations.

"I really don't think that nerves are going to be that much of a factor," McColloch said. "These girls have had to play under a lot of stress just to make the playoffs."

The Lady Dawgs, who faced and delivered in several must-win situations in the second half of league play, will play today as part of a bi-district doubleheader at the Brownfield gym.

Odessa High (16-12 overall), who defeated Abilene Cooper Saturday in the third-place playoff, will take on 3-5A runner-up Amarillo Palo Duro (18-10) at 6 p.m. MHS (17-11) and Tascosa, 20-11 overall and third in 3-5A, will play 30 minutes following the first match, or at approximately 7:30 p.m.

The last time the Lady Dawgs were in the playoffs was in 1991, when they finished second in league play. Tascosa, however, has not missed postseason play in 14 seasons.

But that's where the differences end

Surviving bad office day

■ Dallas squeaks by again, but victories keep mounting.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys did what good teams do, survive a bad day at the office.

Their 23-20 victory over the Cincinnati Bengals on Sunday gave the defending Super Bowl champions a 7-1 record at the midway point of their first season under coach Barry Switzer.

"Some days it ain't easy being a Dallas Cowboy," offensive lineman Nate Newton said.

Sunday was one of those days.

The usually reliable secondary gave up two long touchdown passes by quarterback Jeff Blake and it took some blunders by the Bengals, including a late fourth down hit by James Francis on Troy Aikman to keep a touchdown drive alive.

Distracted Dallas, worried all week about the traffic wreck that injured offensive Erik Williams, showed just enough to get by the Bengals (0-8).

"Erik was definitely in the back of our minds," running back Emmitt Smith said. "We wanted to win the game for him."

The Cowboys had Williams' No. 79 jersey number on their wristbands and helmets. They even had his uniform in a locker in the dress-

Things got a little tight under the collar for Barry Switzer Sunday, but his Cowboys still earned a victory, 23-20, over lowly Cincinnati.

Newsome has Sealy at 3A No. 2

Associated Press

DALLAS — Sealy coach T.J. Mills was worried about Steve Newsome just living last December when he saw him lying in intensive care, fighting to survive a gruesome car accident that carved injuries from head to toe.

Playing football seemed out of the question as the star linebacker underwent surgery to stop internal bleeding, another to rebuild his left ankle and a third to place a pin in the upper part of his left leg.

Broken in body but not spirit, Newsome told Mills he'd be back, and by April he had returned to the weight room. Although Newsome struggled to lift even the lightest dumbbell, teammates were motivated by his spirit.

By opening night of this season, Newsome was back. Not only was he in uniform, he even was starting at middle linebacker for one of the state's top Class 3A teams.

The regular season is almost over now and Newsome is still going strong. So are the Tigers, who on Monday maintained the No. 2 spot in The Associated Press poll they've held since early September.

The rest of the poll shifted little heading into the final week of the season. Only two new teams entered the rankings chosen by a panel of sports writers and broadcasters across the state.

Houston Oilers down to rating NFL defeats

■ Losing in the last second, is the worst kind of downer, according to Houston players.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — The Houston Oilers have been embarrassed so often this season, they're beginning to rate their defeats.

And they'll tell you losing in the last second hurts the worst.

They've taken pratfalls on prime-time television and are on their second losing streak of the season, the first being interrupted with a one-game win.

Yet, the ultimate came Sunday when Al Del Greco's 52-yard field goal attempt bounced off the crossbars as time expired, giving the Los Angeles Raiders a 17-14 victory.

"It's the worst way in the world to lose a game like that," defensive tackle Ray Childress said. "Basically, all we can do is try to go out and get ready for Pittsburgh.

"When you lose, bad things happen and when you win, good things happen."

Indianapolis blasted the Oilers 45-21 in the season opener that started the Oilers on their downward spin, following back-to-back AFC Central Division championships.

They've had offensive line problems, injuries troubles, inconsistency at quarterback and obvious bad luck.

"Everything seems to be going wrong, and it's really frustrating," linebacker Eddie Robinson said. "It's different when we play terrible and lose but we played well enough to win. What do we have to do to get over the hump?"

The Oilers fought within three points of the defending Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys but lost 20-17. They were in position to upset Philadelphia before losing 21-6 two weeks ago.

With Billy Joe Tolliver making his first start at quarterback, the Oilers made one last drive for victory in the closing seconds but it ended with Del Greco's missed field goal against the Raiders.

The Oilers have reached the point of wondering how the next disaster will occur.

"I don't know why we keep going through these trials and tribulations but for some reason things just aren't going our way," coach Jack Pardee said. "That kick just about sums up the way things have gone for us."

Pardee, in the final year of his contract, isn't thinking of anything but a victory.

"I've got enough professional pride that I don't have to worry about a threat or anything else. I want to do well every week. That's all the motivation I need.

"I'm embarrassed with a 1-7 record. I want get over it and get out of it and we've got a ways to go to get it done."

The Oilers have improved in their last three games but haven't been able to put a full game together.

"In 11 years, I have never hit the crossbar, this year I've hit it twice," kicker Al Del Greco said. "It's just not fair. The only thing that keeps going through my mind isn't that we lost again, it's that we have 45 guys working but it always falls short."

The Houston Oilers keep coming close, like Blaine Bishop (23) here against Raider quarterback Jeff Hostetler, but the losses mount.

Texas talk moves from chances to changes

AUSTIN (AP) — The talk around the University of Texas has moved from Cotton Bowl chances to coaching changes.

With nemesis Texas A&M rolling into town on Saturday, Texas coach John Mackovic's weekly news conference normally would be focused on one of college football's fiercest rivalries.

But Mackovic on Monday was defending his 2½ seasons at Texas (5-3, 2-2 Southwest Conference).

That's because a season filled with Cotton Bowl promise has crashed in the past three weeks with devastating losses to Rice and Texas Tech, who now command the driver's seat to Dallas.

Despite a rash of injuries and player suspensions, Texas beat Pittsburgh, Louisville, Texas Christian and Oklahoma to go 4-1 and reach No. 12 in The Associated Press poll with the only blemish a last-second loss to Colorado.

Mackovic's preseason claim that the Longhorns be considered a Cotton Bowl favorite, with or without the Aggies on probation, looked solid.

That was before the Longhorns did what many orange blood faithful thought was unthinkable, losing to Rice for the first time in 29 years and then showing almost no vital signs in a 33-9 blowout at Texas Tech on Saturday.

It was the most lopsided loss by Texas in SWC play since a 50-7 defeat by Baylor in 1989.

The Rice loss also recalled another crippling defeat under Mackovic, a 23-14 victory by TCU in 1992 that ended 24 years of Longhorn domination over the Horned Frogs.

A column in the Austin American-Statesman on Sunday said Mackovic and his team had become emotionless and demanded the coach be fired. Longhorns fans have jammed radio call-in shows to express their displeasure with people already proposing replacements.

"Let them talk. I can't stop people from talking can I? What is there to say," Mackovic said.

"Our team does have emotion, and I am basically the same person I was the week we lined up to play Colorado and Oklahoma," Mackovic said.

"I don't rant and rave on the sidelines, and I don't throw things at people, and I don't call them down to embarrass them in public. I know that screaming at people does not improve everything. I learned that as a child."

Players say they support Mackovic, who is 13-10-1 and without a bowl appearance at Texas. Before coming to Austin, Mackovic had compiled a record of 30-16-1, including four bowl games in four seasons at Illinois.

"Everyone is behind coach Mackovic, and I think we are going to be able to turn it around this week against A&M and do a great job," said sophomore quarterback Shea Morenz.

Mackovic, who has repeatedly said it will take up to five years to return Texas to national prominence, says he should be judged on more than just winning football games.

"We have done a number of things academically," he said. "We have built and mended a number of fences and improved the quality of life and the quality of academic pursuit on this campus. Those should be taken into consideration and they are not always."

Mackovic lumped himself in with a host of coaches having down years, including Oklahoma's Gary Gibbs, Ohio State's John Cooper and Michigan's Gary Moeller.

"I am not alone. It's a frustrating year for a lot of us," Mackovic said. "We're at a level where we have a lot of attention and people follow our game and follow it closely.

"We will put the Texas football program in a position with honor, integrity, with class and it will be in a position again at the top of college football. I know that because we are doing it the right way."

University of Texas Chancellor William Cunningham and school President Robert Berdahl, who will ultimately make any decisions concerning Mackovic, didn't return telephone calls by The Associated Press.

Mackovic said Monday that he, Cunningham and Berdahl "have a good relationship."

Pack slays Bears

CHICAGO (AP) — Unable to beat the wind and rain with Brett Favre's arm most of the night, the Green Bay Packers slogged over the soggy Soldier Field turf to earn a victory they had to have.

Edgar Bennett scored three touchdowns and Favre had a 36-yard scoring run as the Packers defeated the Chicago Bears 33-6 Monday night.

Bryce Paup intercepted two passes for the Packers (4-4), who stayed in the hunt for a playoff spot. The Bears and Detroit Lions also are 4-4, meaning the Minnesota Vikings have a two-game lead in the NFC Central.

Favre was 0-for-7 before completing a pass to Sterling Sharpe midway through the third quarter.

Finally, after the Packers' running loosened up the Bears' defense, Favre completed four passes on the drive that gave Green Bay a 27-0 lead. He capped the 65-yard march with a 13-yard pass to Bennett, who rushed for 105 yards and two other scores.

Favre finished 6-of-15 for 82 yards. But his biggest accomplishment on a 43-degree night that included 36 mph gusts and a steady rain was simply taking care of the football.

Favre, who threw an NFL-high 24 interceptions last season and was picked off seven times in this year's first seven games, carefully engineered Green Bay's no-turnover attack Monday.

Chicago, meanwhile, had five give-aways.

Erik Kramer fell to 1-4 as the Bears' starting quarterback. He fumbled once and was picked off twice by Paup before Steve Walsh replaced him to start the second half.

The loss is sure to throw gasoline on the Bears' smoldering quarterback controversy — Walsh won three consecutive starts while Kramer was out with a separated shoulder.

The Bears avoided their first shutout since 1989 when Walsh and Jeff Graham connected on a 5-yard touchdown pass with 5:55 to play.

Reggie Cobb added a 9-yard scoring run for the Packers with 1:53 left.

Packers defensive tackle Steve McMichael had a successful return to Soldier Field. In the offseason, the Bears cut him after 13 years, including the 1985 championship season.

Baseball owners file charges for threats

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball owners filed an unfair labor charge Monday for alleged threats made last week by three New York players: Bobby Bonilla, John Franco and Scott Kamieniecki.

Franco, a free agent who relieved for the Mets last season, was quoted as saying he would "go after" with his "fists" any player he broke ranks and attempted to play while the union was on strike.

Bonilla, a Mets outfielder, was quoted as saying any player who crossed a picket line would "end up in the East River."

Kamieniecki, a Yankees pitcher, said that after a settlement he might throw at players who broke ranks.

The three are player representatives and members of the union's executive board.

"The above-reference threats and other similar threats made by agents of the union were intended, and reasonably tend, to restrain and coerce major league players," said the charge, which was filed with the regional office of the National League Relations Board.

"Such comments are appalling and serve no practical purpose in a civilized society," management negotiator Richard Ravitch said.

"The clubs have every intent to resolve their current labor dispute with the union at the bargaining table. The clubs have made no plans whatsoever to employ replacement players. Nonetheless, we cannot ignore or excuse such virulent behavior."

Bonilla and Franco made the remarks during an appearance to promote a celebrity bowling event.

Under the National Labor Relations Act, unioned workers are allowed to cross picket lines and continue to work during a strike.

Expansion talks resume

CHICAGO (AP) — Even though there's no baseball and there's no telling when it might return, owners will still listen to sales pitches Tuesday for expansion teams bearing nine-figure price tags.

Five groups are vying for the two new franchises that are expected to be added to the major leagues in 1997 or 1998. Groups from St. Petersburg, Fla., and Phoenix and two from northern Virginia will make formal presentations to the owners' expansion committee.

A group seeking a team for Orlando, Fla., will make its presentation at a later date because one of its lawyers, Paul Jacobs, must testify Tuesday at a trial involving Mickey Monus, one of the original members of the Colorado Rockies' group.

A decision on expansion will not be made until there's a new collective bargaining agreement, expansion committee head John Harrington said.

Harrington, the chief executive officer of the Boston Red Sox, said he hopes owners will make an expansion decision by December or January, then vote on teams by February.

"If there's not a new collective bargaining agreement, it's unlikely we can make a positive recommendation," Harrington said. "It's tough to make a recommendation with the cloud hanging over the future."

When the Florida Marlins and Colorado Rockies received approval in July 1991 to join the National League, the price was $95 million each. Those teams began play in 1993.

Last summer, the Baltimore Orioles were sold for $173 million — a record price for a baseball franchise. The Pittsburgh Pirates, San Diego Padres and Oakland Athletics currently are for sale.

The last two pro sports expansion teams, the Toronto Raptors and Vancouver Grizzlies of the NBA, cost $125 million apiece. The Jacksonville Jaguars and Carolina Panthers were admitted to the NFL in 1993 at a cost of $140 million each.

Meaningful NFL realignment fails to get support

Associated Press

Despite last-ditch efforts by Pittsburgh owner Dan Rooney to get meaningful realignment, NFL owners are almost sure this week to let commissioner Paul Tagliabue patch them into the four-team divisions.

Rooney, who in the past has influenced compromises on such issues as labor and the selection of a commissioner, spent last week trying to get a consensus on some plan other than the one that would put Carolina into the NFC West and Jacksonville in the AFC Central.

But it didn't work.

"I'd say it's all but done and the commissioner will do it," a league official who declined to be identified said Monday.

Realignment, or lack of it, will be the main topic of discussion when the owners meet in Chicago on Tuesday or Wednesday. They also are expected to award the 1998 Super Bowl to San Francisco or Miami.

When realignment was first discussed, Tagliabue suggested setting up divisions that would reflect geographic rivalries — Northeast, Southeast, Midwest and so on.

But when he slots the two new teams, he'll be reflecting the political and economic realities of the NFL, where rivalries like Washington-Dallas and Buffalo-Miami cross geographic lines.

As a result, one of the new divisions, the NFC "West", will perhaps be the most rambling division in any major sport, extending from the Carolinas in the East to San Francisco in the West. It also will include Atlanta, New Orleans and either Los Angeles, St. Louis or Baltimore, depending on where the Rams end up next year.

Montreal's Alou named Manager of the Year

Associated Press

Felipe Alou, whose young Montreal Expos had the best record in baseball when the strike started, was chosen Monday major league manager of the year by The Associated Press.

Alou received 34 votes in nationwide balloting by 58 writers and broadcasters. Buck Showalter of the New York Yankees was second with 11 votes and Mike Hargrove of Cleveland was third with nine votes.

Earlier this month, Alou was a near-unanimous pick as NL manager of the year by the Baseball Writers Association of America. He received 27 of 28 first-place votes.

Montreal was 74-40 and leading Atlanta by six games in the NL East on Aug. 12.

The Expos have shown improvement since May 22, 1992, the day Alou was hired to replace the fired Tom Runnells.

"I believe a lot of people realize that after three years of solid progress we have a super club," Alou said recently.

Alou has said his favorite part of the job is watching young players develop their talent. He and his coaching staff saw the likes of 23-year-old shortstop Wil Cordero, 23-year-old pitcher Pedro Martinez and 21-year-old first baseman Cliff Floyd show major progress this season.

Alou, 59, played for the Expos in 1973 and joined the Montreal organization as an instructor in 1976. He has been with the system since then, managing successful Expos teams in Class A, Double-A and Triple-A. He also coached Montreal for several seasons.

This year, the Expos dropped 8½ games behind Atlanta in April before rebounding under Alou's even-handed approach. They passed the Braves in July and began pulling away, and were in position for their first postseason appearance since 1981.

"The one regret I have is that we didn't complete the regular season," he said.

Among those who helped the Expos this year were outfielder Moises Alou, the manager's son, and reliever Mel Rojas, the manager's nephew.

The Expos have done well in recent years despite losing such players as Dennis Martinez to teams that were willing to pay more for free agents. The Expos also have been hit in the front office, losing the likes of general manager Dan Duquette.

This offseason, Montreal may lose outfielder Larry Walker to free agency. The Expos also could face problems trying to sign high-salaried outfielder Marquis Grissom and reliever John Wetteland.

"We've shown the world we could recuperate from losses," Alou said.

Alou is under contract to manage the Expos through 1995. He also has a two-year personal services contract with Montreal beyond that, and that could also mean the manager's job.

No one is baseball is sure, however, whether there will be a season next year.

"I'm looking forward to managing Moises Alou and the rest of the major league Montreal Expos.

MHS: Winner faces EP Austin next for the playoff opponents. Like MHS, Tascosa had to battle to return to the playoffs this year. Third-year coach Pam Winn had taken the Lady Rebels to the regional semifinals in her first season and Tascosa fell to El Paso Montwood last year in the area round. The road became tougher, though, in 1994.

(From 1C)

"This has been a little bit of a rebuilding year for us," Winn said. "We lost our first three district games and we were having some internal problems."

Tascosa's early-season problems showed as they lost for the first time ever to Palo Duro and to Lubbock Coronado.

"We had to win four of the last five district games to make the playoffs," Winn said, "but I feel like that will help us. We had a good win over Palo Duro (in the second half) and it was somewhat of a turning point for us in our season."

But Tascosa's problems could be prolonged with the loss of 5-foot-9 senior middle blocker Breezy Johnson, who has also been an integral part of the highly-successful Lady Rebel basketball program. Johnson injured her shoulder in an auto accident about a week ago and will not play today.

Winn's top offensive players besides Johnson are Tina Regan, a 5-8 junior outside hitter, and Megan Woodburn, a 5-7 junior outside hitter. Seniors for THS are 5-7 outside hitter Amber Doherty and 5-5 setter Lindsey Moore.

Winn said her team's strength is defense and because of that, McColloch said her offense and serving will have to be on.

"We're going to have to hit aggressively and the block is going to have to be on," McColloch said. "If we hit as well as we can, we will be in the match. We're also going to have to serve aggressively."

MHS has several good net players. Seniors Deshawn Berry and Elisabeth Mathiassen and juniors Toya Zachery, Jamee Stennett and Elesceeya King will lead the attack there. The offense will be run by senior setter Heather Klein with help from senior Elaine Salgado. Mathiassen, Zachery and Klein and backline specialists junior Sara Pritchett and senior Jennifer Allen have been MHS' most consistent servers.

Despite the fact that several observers have said that Tascosa is not near as strong as in previous years, the Lady Rebels seem to have District 4-5A's number.

In 1992, district champ Abilene High won its first playoff game but lost to Tascosa in the regional qualifier. It was the last time a 4-5A team has been successful in a playoff game. Tascosa eliminated Midland Lee in bi-district in 1992 and in 1993 did the same to Odessa Permian, the '94 district champ. That makes the Lady Rebels 3-0 against 4-5A in the last two seasons.

All things considered, today's game could be 4-5A's best chance in three years to knock Tascosa from the playoffs. And McColloch thinks that the excitement of a playoff game will be more of an advantage than a disadvantage.

"We're not going to dwell on (our lack of experience)," McColloch said. "We're just going to use it as a little extra adrenalin. Something new to get up for."

The winner between MHS and THS advances to the area round and will face 1-5A champion El Paso Austin.

United League eyes the world

NEW YORK (AP) — The new United League envisions placing teams in Canada, Mexico and perhaps Puerto Rico and Venezuela, according to a copy of the draft proposal obtained Monday by The Associated Press.

The league, whose formation will be announced at a news conference Tuesday, would start in 1996 with 10 to 12 teams each playing 154 games, according the draft. Within three years of its startup, the league would add four expansion teams: two from Japan and one each from South Korea and Taiwan.

The draft said "it is considered important" to have teams in New York and Los Angeles, and mentions Long Island and Riverside-San Bernadino as possible locations. The draft also says "minority-owned and minority-involved investor groups will be encouraged to seek franchises."

The draft proposal was written by agent Dick Moss and former Rep. Bob Mrazek. Moss said Monday that many of the league's plans had changed and that the draft proposal obtained by the AP was "out of date." However, he wouldn't detail specifics of the changes.

Charter franchises, according to the draft, would sell for $5 million each, less than one-20th the $173 million sale price of the Baltimore Orioles last year. The draft says expansion franchises would sell for $10 million each.

Players would be eligible for free agency after three years of service, and the draft envisions an average team's payroll would be about $14 million in 1996, less than half the current average of American and National league teams. Player salaries would average $520,000 in 1996, half the current major league average of about $1.2 million.

Th draft has first-year teams averaging $31 million in revenue, about half the current major league average. Average attendance is projected at 17,500 per game in 1996 and the average ticket price is projected at $8, about $2.50 less than the current major league average.

The UL, according to the draft, believes its national broadcasting contracts for 1996 would total $49 million, about one-fifth what the major leagues' total was projected to be this year before the player's strike ended the season.

The league intends to spend the next year organizing, with a startup capitalization of $3,075,000. The money would come from eight limited partners who would each receive 7.5 percent of the equity in the management company.

Thirty percent of the management company, according to the draft, would be owned by the four organizers: Moss, Mrazek, Rep. John Bryant, D-Texas, and economist Andrew Zimbalist. Another 10 percent would go to individuals "responsible for promoting the formation of the league and its goals."

Once the league is formed, the teams would take responsibility for their costs. Each limited partner, according to the draft, could make $5.6 million-$11.2 million by the end of the year 2000, when the management company would dissolve.

The host city of each franchise, according to the draft, would get a 15 percent equity share of each team and 15 percent of the pretax profit. In exchange for building stadiums, host cities would get 50 percent of luxury suite revenue and 33 percent of parking money. Cities would get 100 percent of the money from selling names of the stadiums.

Players would get 35 percent of the equity of each team and 35 percent of the pretax profits, the draft said. In addition, players would get 10 percent of the money any time a team is sold.

POLL: Cooper remains as 5A No. 1

(From 1C)

On Friday, Sealy defeated La Grange 31-3 to hold on to No. 2 behind Cuero, the most entrenched of the five top-ranked teams.

Newsome had 21 tackles in the game, helping the Tigers clinch a playoff spot and move into position for their second straight District 23-3A title.

"I never expected him to play another down his life," Mills said. "He's a phenomenal kid. What he's overcome is unbelievable."

Newsome was named second-team all-state last year as he was in on 187 tackles.

But within weeks of Sealy's season-ending loss to Waco Robinson in the regional semifinals, Newsome's life was in jeopardy.

He and a friend were driving late one night when the friend's pickup truck swerved off a road and hit a culvert. Few other details are available. Newsome doesn't recall what happened, and his friend was killed.

"One of the first things he said was, 'I'll be back,' " Mills said. "I told the kids I didn't expect that. Then he reported (for two-a-days) with everyone else and he didn't miss a day of practice."

Newsome, a 6-foot-1, 190-pound junior, combs his hair down over his face to cover some of the scars and his legs are a painful sight.

Yet under a helmet and beneath a uniform, he looks like the same player he's always been.

"We don't even talk about it any more," Mills said. "It may come up just among ourselves as coaches because it's so hard to believe. But we never mention it in front of the team.

"They know what he went through. ... It just kind of makes you closer, stronger. When he makes a play, it sparks everybody."

The offensive spark for the Tigers is Fred Smith, the school's best running back since NFL great Eric Dickerson.

"When things are not going real well, he'll break a tackle or juke somebody," Mills said. "He can excite the team and get the crowd going."

Smith has 1,397 yards and 29 touchdowns on 142 carries. He could have even bigger numbers, had Mills not pulled him after fewer than a dozen carries during games when Sealy was winning big.

Smith has been a standout the last two seasons, but now he's surrounded by talented players at quarterback and wide receiver.

Brad Burttschell has completed 47-of-73 passes for 1,100 yards and 12 touchdowns. He's thrown only one interception.

Sophomore Jaron Dabney has been his favorite target, catching 17 passes for 650 yards and nine touchdowns. Dabney also has run for two scores.

In the rest of the poll, Garland moved into the 5A list at No. 10, replacing preseason No. 1 Aldine MacArthur. The Generals slipped out of the rankings despite a 19-17 victory over Humble Kingwood. Abilene Cooper remained No. 1 with its first victory (21-0) over Midland Lee in 10 years.

Santo also joined the poll this week, creeping into the Class A ranks at No. 10, replacing Bremond.

All ranked teams in 4A and 3A held their spots and there was only minor shifting in 2A following No. 1 Schulenburg's 12-0 victory over East Bernard. The Brahmas fell two spots to No. 6.

DALLAS: Cowboys own 7-1 record ing room at Cincinnati.

(From 1C)

"There was no doubt we were thinking about him," wide receiver Michael Irvin said. "We were emotionally drained."

Williams suffered a knee injury in the wreck that will keep him out six weeks and possibly the rest of the year.

Switzer said it was the first game he had coached where the defense gave up big plays.

"We got hit on big plays we hadn't allowed all season," Switzer said. "But we did what we had to do. We got the win. And it could be an important one later in the season when you get into the playoffs and start talking homefield advantage."

Secondary coach Dave Campo said "Cincinnati did a good job of changing up some of the things they had done. But we adjusted to the new quarterback in the second half. You can count on two hands the number of big plays we've allowed in the last five years. That's what is so upsetting."

The Bengals jumped to a 14-0 lead almost before the Cowboys knew what happened.

"That's the way it's going to be the rest of the season because teams are out to get us," Newton said.

The Cowboys lead the Philadelphia Eagles by a game in the NFC East. They host the New York Giants, riding a five-game losing streak, next Monday night.

Then Dallas has a showdown in San Francisco in a game that could be decisive regarding the homefield advantage in the NFC playoffs.

"These are the kind of games you have to win on the way to a championship," Switzer. "The season is a long journey. This is a trip we survived."

Reynolds loses final bid to reverse drug test

WASHINGTON (AP) — Track star Butch Reynolds, who was suspended for nearly 2½ years after failing a drug test, lost his Supreme Court bid Monday to collect $27.4 million from the organization that barred him.

He had argued that the drug test was faulty.

The justices rejected Reynolds' argument that a U.S. court had the authority to order the governing body of international track and field to pay damages for saying he tested positive for steroids.

Prices ease

Crude prices closed slightly lower Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

West Texas Intermediate for December delivery lost 4 cents to close at $18.19 a barrel. Contracts hit a high of $18.33 and a low of $17.98 during the day's trading.

December contracts for natural gas closed at $1.95 per thousand cubic feet, down 4.2 cents.

Also sharply lower was unleaded gasoline, with November contracts losing 1.48 cents.

T-bills unchanged

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities were unchanged in Monday's auction, remaining at their highest level in more than three years.

The Treasury Department sold $13.7 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.07 percent. Another $13.8 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.51 percent.

The three-month bill rate remained at its highest since they sold for 5.11 percent on Sept. 30, 1991. The six-month bill rate stayed at its highest since they averaged 5.59 percent on Aug. 5, 1991.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 5.21 percent for three-month bills with a $10,000 bill selling for $9,871.80 and 5.75 percent for a six-month bill selling for $9,721.40.

Dollar weakens

NEW YORK — The dollar fell broadly in foreign exchange trading Monday, retreating from Friday's rally on new fears that inflation will haunt the economy and undermine the U.S. currency's value.

The notable exception in the dollar's weak behavior was a sharp drop in the Mexican peso, which fell to a historic low against the dollar in intraday trading. Declining prices on the Mexican stock exchange created demand for U.S. currency in Mexico.

Gold prices declined in worldwide trading. On the Commodity Exchange in New York, gold for current delivery settled at $383.50 a troy ounce, down $3.80 from Friday's close.

In New York, the dollar closed at 96.85 yen, down from 97.28 on Friday.

Stocks tumble

NEW YORK — Blue-chip issues tumbled on Monday as investors sold issues that ran up in the previous session, but technology stocks bucked the trend, ending the day with some gains.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 22.54 points to 3,908.12.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 9 to 8 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 302.82 million shares, down from 381.36 million in the previous session.

Among broader market indexes, the NYSE's composite index fell 0.24 to 258.69.

Take-home pay, savings rise

September figures in line with expanding economy, analysts say

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans were taking home more pay and saving more, too, in September, as the strongest gain in incomes since April easily outpaced consumer spending.

Analysts said the Commerce Department figures released Monday are in line with an economy that continues to expand at a steady, moderate rate.

The Commerce Department said incomes climbed 0.6 percent in September — the eighth straight increase — while spending rose just 0.2 percent, the weakest showing since it dropped 0.3 percent in April.

"The income numbers look quite solid," said economist Lynn Reaser of First Interstate Bancorp in Los Angeles. "Consumers took somewhat of a breather in September."

She said higher interest rates, expected to slow down the economy, are also helping to replenish bank accounts with many Americans getting a larger yield.

Analysts expect the Federal Reserve to boost short-term interest rates for the sixth time this year at a Nov. 15 meeting.

The income data was a little stronger than many analysts expected and the spending was a little lower. The report appeared to have little impact on financial markets, where stock and bond prices were lower at midday.

The government reported Friday that the economy grew in the third quarter at a steady 3.4 percent annual rate with little inflation, triggering a big stock market rally.

The new data on incomes and spending meant that Americans' savings rate — savings as a percentage of disposable income — was up to 4.1 percent in September, from 3.7 percent the previous month.

"Consumer spending is not the mover of the economy now. It's the follower," said Laurence Meyer, who heads a St. Louis forecasting firm. He noted that auto sales, after a particularly strong August, leveled off in September and helped hold down overall spending.

Accounting for two-thirds of the nation's gross domestic product, spending was up for the fifth straight month and seven of the last eight.

The Commerce Department also said that disposable income — income after taxes — climbed 0.6 percent in September.

The overall income advance matched the 0.6 percent gain in April. Income last fell in January when it slipped 0.6 percent. July was the last time incomes rose more rapidly than spending, up 0.5 percent and 0.3 percent respectively.

During August, personal income increased 0.4 percent and spending jumped 0.8 percent. The spending figure was revised downward from an earlier 0.9 percent estimate.

"Income growth is moderate but solid and spending is following apace," said Samuel Kahan of Fuji Securities Inc. in Chicago.

Private wages and salaries, the most closely watched component of income, increased at a $15.2 billion annual rate in September after a $5.1 billion rise in August.

Government wages and salaries rose at a $1.5 billion rate in September, after gaining $1.2 billion the previous month.

State to accept floods disaster claims for aid

Staff Report

Residents of the 33 Texas counties hit by severe storms and flooding in mid-October may be eligible for disaster unemployment assistance, according to Texas Employment Commission officials. The assistance comes under Presidential Disaster Declaration FEMA-1041-DR.

Claims for assistance will accepted at designated sites through Nov. 21. Disaster victims can also file DUA claims at other TEC offices. Disaster victims are also encouraged to provide TEC representatives with information on those unable to apply in person for assistance.

Though the storms and flooding were in the Houston and Gulf Coast areas, Midland TEC office manager Jackie Moseley said a number of Midland companies have parent offices in Houston or do business with Houston companies and may be indirectly affected by the disaster.

To be eligible for assistance, applicants must meet the following criteria:

- Applicants must have worked or been scheduled to work in the disaster area but because of the storms and flooding no longer had a job, a place to work in the area or could not get to their place of work because of damage; or
- They must have been prevented from working by an injury or illness resulting from the disaster; or
- They must have become the head of a household and need employment because the head of the household died as a result of the disaster.

Unemployed individuals must provide pay stubs, W-2 forms, income tax statements or other proof of net income for the 18-month period preceding their date of unemployment to determine whether they qualify for disaster unemployment assistance benefits.

This assistance is also applicable to self-employed individuals who have lost all or part of their livelihood as a result of the disaster. Self-employed applicants must provide income tax forms (Schedule SE and Schedule C or Schedule F) or other proof of their net income.

Greyhound, bondholders agree to resume negotiations

DALLAS (AP) — Greyhound Lines Inc. said Monday its bondholders have agreed to resume negotiations after talks broke off over the weekend.

In an hourlong conference call, about 100 bondholders indicated they want to negotiate a settlement, not force Greyhound into bankruptcy, said Wilbur Ross, senior managing director of Greyhound financial advisor Rothschild Inc.

Negotiations were expected to resume shortly, perhaps as soon as Tuesday, he said.

"The story at least for now has a potentially happy ending," Ross said.

Dallas-based Greyhound unveiled its initial restructuring plan on Oct. 17. Last week, the company rejected a bondholder counter-offer that would have converted the bonds into more than 85 percent of Greyhound's common stock.

Over the weekend, Greyhound increased its offer, proffering bondholders 32 percent of the company in return for wiping out some debt. But Greyhound said representatives of the bondholders rejected the offer Saturday and terminated discussions.

The bondholders now say they will make a counter offer, Ross said.

The bus company's most recent offer would give bondholders 11.9 million shares of Greyhound common stock, up from 9.9 million shares, in exchange for $98.9 million in bonds. Greyhound's original offer would have given the bondholders 29 percent of the company.

Greyhound missed a $4.2 million debt payment to the bondholders on Sept. 23, and the bondholders could force the company to seek federal bankruptcy protection.

The company has said it cannot predict whether it can avoid a return to bankruptcy court unless shareholders and the creditors agree to the restructuring.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Fannie Mae securities fluctuate like bonds

By Bill Doyle

Q: Would you please explain how Fannie Mae securities work? What causes the value to fluctuate?

Doyle

A: Fannie Mae securities are made up of mortgages packaged together and sold like a bond. And the value fluctuates like a bond.

Also, the mortgages in the Fannie Mae are repaid at different times and become more, or less, valuable as interest rates change.

If you are receiving principal and interest every month from your Fannie Mae, it will eventually drop in value. Your monthly checks will be paid, interest only, for awhile and then you will begin to get principal as well.

If you bought the Fannie Mae investment for income, the interest will continue to be paid even though the market keeps fluctuating. At some point you should start to receive some principal back, but there is no guarantee.

Q: We invested $70,000 with a broker who misrepresented the securities his company sold us and refused to sell a stock when we asked him to. Now, seven out of eight stocks he bought for us are worthless.

We want to know about arbitration. We heard that some duped shareholders got their money back when a broker misled them about what they were buying.

How do we go about filing a complaint? Some of our losers were listed on the Nasdaq stock market, but most were listed on "pink sheets." What are "pink sheets"?

A: Get in touch with the National Association of Securities Dealers, the regulatory agency for Nasdaq and "over the counter" securities markets, such as the "pink sheets." The association's address is 1735 K St. N.W., Washington, DC 20006-1500.

You will be told how to find the nearest NASD district office, where you can learn how to file a complaint. You can request information on how to use the arbitration process to try to recoup some of your losses.

The "pink sheet" market is for companies that are too small to get listed on Nasdaq or have been "de-listed" from the bigger exchange for some irregularity. The stocks you find on the "pink sheets" are usually penny stocks that are highly speculative.

Q: Where can I get detailed information on a specific mutual fund? I want to know the track record and how much the fund charges for its management fees.

A: Write the fund or dial its toll-free customer-service phone number and ask for the prospectus and the annual report. In those two documents you should find charts that list the fund's performance over the past year, and the past five-year and 10-year periods, if it has been in business that long. You should also find the fund's performance compared to a leading index, such as Standard & Poor's listing of 500 stocks. There is also a page that lists the management fees and commissions — which you can compare to those charged by other funds.

But that should be only part of your overall research. You can find out a lot more about mutual funds from figures and other information put out by various financial publications and rating services. Those resources are available at large public libraries.

Q: I just read in my newspaper that, due to health reasons, you would not be writing your column five days a week as usual. This makes me a little sad and worried.

I am 83 and have come to depend on your knowledgeable, honest advice. When my husband died six years ago, I realized how little I knew about investing. Your columns have helped me a lot.

I sincerely wish you good health and happiness.

A: Thank you, and thanks to all the readers who have written to wish me well.

Bill Doyle is a syndicated columnist for King Features. He welcomes written questions, but is able to provide answers only through the column.

Self expression or business: Designer listings fill phone book

By Janet McConnaughey
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — You're flipping through the White Pages for a friend's phone number when a bold-faced listing jumps out at you: Tierney, Claudia Hebert. Freelance Writer. Personal Poet.

Further down the page is S. Tilloston, Music Madonna & Bob Barker Fan. Riffle back through the alphabet and you'll find Isaac Morgan, God's Prophet.

Each paid at least $36 a year for what South Central Bell calls designer listings, available in 18 states.

The extra charge was more than worth it for trucker Edward W. Carr IV. Not that he got many sales as Carr, E.W., Clock Maker and Wood Crafter.

It's all the calls that DON'T come in that make it worthwhile.

Carr kept his number unlisted for years to avoid calls meant for his father, who had retired after 50 years fixing heaters and air conditioners. The extra line would make it clear who he wasn't, a saleswoman suggested.

It worked: "We don't get all those weird phone calls at 2 o'clock in the morning: 'Come fix my heater! It's cold!'"

Not every designer listing includes a description, but most do. Extra lines account for 60 percent of total sales, said Mary Brooks of Birmingham, Ala., South Central Bell's product manager for the listings.

They aren't the only way to stand out: Bold or italic type is $24 annually, and bold type set off by lines above and below is $36.

Designer listings are available in all five South Central Bell states and 13 of the 14 states with phone service from Pacific Bell, Southwestern Bell, Ameritech and Southern Bell (North Carolina regulators haven't yet approved them).

Pacific Bell, which covers all of California, charges $6 for each extra line in a residential listing, and plans market research next year for fancy typography, product manager Brenda Flood said.

The extra lines have been available for at least a decade, and about 35 percent of all residential listings include them, she estimated.

The New Orleans directory, a test market in 1992, has by far the largest number of such listings for South Central Bell. The 1993-94 directories were the first time fancy fonts were offered across the system.

Bell won't say how many are sold, but the numbers are going up steadily, Ms. Brooks said. "People see them and want them," she said.

Most use the phone directory almost as a business card: Attorney at Law. Insurance Agent. Realtor. Photographer. Ladies' Formal Wear Designer. Wall Cover Installer.

> 'It's a little ego thing where you can mark yourself and differentiate yourself from the mass on the page. You're no longer just a little line in the huge gray expanse of the phone book page. Now, you're a bold streak in the huge gray expanse of the phone book page.'
> —Guy Lillian attorney

Marie E. Spicuzza, Tupperware Consultant, hasn't made any sales from her listing, but figures $5 a month is worth it. "I'm optimistic. It'll work out. Why not?" she said.

(Apparently never one to waste an opportunity, as the interview wound up, she asked, "Have you ever hosted a Tupperware party?")

Guy Lillian, Attorney at Law, never expected his $60 a year to bring in business. That comes from word of mouth and the Yellow Pages.

"It's a little ego thing where you can mark yourself and differentiate yourself from the mass on the page," Lillian said. "You're no longer just a little line in the huge gray expanse of the phone book page. Now, you're a bold streak in the huge gray expanse of the phone book page."

People hoping for serious business were disappointed. Norman L. Carter Sr., VCR Repairman, and Cliff Kloesel, Coin Operated Scale Man, plan to appear in the future under their names only.

But Tim and Janet "Jaimie" Causey of Marrero are enthusiastically planning for another year as Causey, T&J, Puppet Ministry Performers.

Mrs. Causey estimated that they've received 50 calls and landed 15 to 20 jobs for their Sonshine Express Puppet Ministry, including regular work with a local hospital for troubled adolescents.

They and about 30 children — five of them their own — give original shows designed to promote self-esteem and a willingness to listen to authority rather than submit to peer pressure. The group accepts donations, but does not charge for the shows, Mrs. Causey said.

"It's actually developed to the point of where it's taking over a lot of our lives. I'd say a lot of it was from the piece in the telephone book," she said.

Some people, like Jazz Lover Marshall G. Henderson Sr., just want a self-expressive riff.

"I had several people call me about that, curious," said Henderson, 77. "They gave me their phone number. I never did call back. I'm glad somebody else likes jazz, too."

You might think that people with common names would try to do something to make theirs stand out. But while G.P. Smith added italics and "Fussie Gussie," none of the 38 D. Smiths or the 42 John Smiths added anything more exotic than a middle name or initial.

Oh, yes. Callers in search of a Personal Poet don't even get an answering machine, Music Madonna & Bob Barker Fan's number has been disconnected, and a call to God's Prophet was not returned.

And a footnote: Mary Jenkins (Solicitors Do Not Call Me) does have an answering machine — but she did not return the call.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will devote more and more time to intellectual pursuits. Emotions will be mixed when you finally settle a partnership dispute. Do not let a difference of opinion get out of hand or into court. Spend more time planning while subordinates take over some of the detail work. The financial picture looks especially bright next spring. Be alert to unusual investment opportunities.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: columnist James J. Kilpatrick, singer Lyle Lovett, baseball player Fernando Valenzuela, actress Barbara Bosson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can win over someone an associate has alienated by appealing to their sense of humor. Keep your temper in check when disagreeing with instructions passed on by a supervisor.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Life seems particularly glorious now! A special friendship gives home life new importance. Coworkers see where you are headed and want to help.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Welcome a chance to right a wrong connected with your home life. Loved ones are eager to follow your lead. Be more tolerant of your mate's foibles. Affection conquers all. Tonight, let the good times roll!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Follow the line of least resistance when coping with difficult people or situations. Devoting more attention to an older person's needs will pay off.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Mate or partner "comes clean" about something that involves your interests. Romance moves into a more rewarding period. Your talents receive new notice from those who count. A parental instinct is rekindled.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Making a commitment will cement a valuable relationship. Try not to worry so much about tomorrow. Your guardian angel is close at hand. An enthusiastic attitude toward work will motivate others. Romance is mostly happy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Indulge your taste for intellectual challenges. You can cut certain corners when you have an old hand to guide you. Avoid getting dragged into other people's squabbles. Entertain a visitor from out of town.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good time to clean out your office or the garage. A family member may need more help from you. Reassess your long-range career goals. Would you rather be doing something more creative?

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be ready for both thrills and chills on that roller coaster called "romance." You feel up one minute and down the next. The key to prosperity and respect is creative ideas. Friends contribute to your success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are the only one who can make your dreams come true. Business pursuits could strain a friendly relationship. Heed a need for privacy. A daily period of meditation will restore your emotional equilibrium.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep your feet planted firmly on the ground. Your hard work will produce a wonderful payoff. If you can help someone financially, do so if you are certain that they will appreciate it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Tackle the most pressing problems first today; the smaller ones will take care of themselves. A writing assignment or public speaking engagement gives you a chance to really shine. Put your best foot forward.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are good at keeping secrets — both yours and their own. They have a lot of faith in their own judgment and rarely ask for advice. Luckily, their instincts are excellent.

The history of bridge is full of spectacular hands, some of which were actually played as reported, others that are apocryphal. This spectacular defense was found at the table during a rubber-bridge game by one of the most colorful players in the history of the game — the late Harry Fishbein.

The auction is straightforward. Note North's raise to two spades. If North does not bid immediately, especially with four-card support, it could become very difficult to describe the holding later in the auction.

In response to East's lead directing bid of three clubs, Fishbein led the queen of clubs and continued the suit. East took the ace and king to complete the defensive book, and West had to decide what to discard on the third club.

At duplicate West might have had a huge problem, but at rubber bridge Fishbein did not hesitate for a moment. The ace of diamonds might or might not cash for the setting trick, but it was clear that another club lead would promote the queen of spades to the setting trick, whether declarer ruffed high or low. The problem was how to alert partner to the possibility.

Fishbein found a pretty solution. He discarded the ace of diamonds! Since declarer had to have the ace-king in both major suits to justify the jump to four spades, East worked out the situation. A fourth club was led, and the queen of spades became the setting trick

Burt Reynolds is 'unruly child,' drug abuser, ex-assistant says

LOS ANGELES — Burt Reynolds is an "unruly child" who abused drugs, a former assistant says.

Elaine Blake Hall, who worked for Reynolds for 17 years, wrote a tell-all book that goes on sale this week. In an "Entertainment Tonight" interview to be broadcast Tuesday, she said Reynolds behaved erratically because of drugs.

"He's like an unruly child most of the time," Hall said.

"Prozac's supposed to keep everything on an even keel, but if you take far more than what's prescribed and you couple that with Diurex, which is a diet pill for energy, and Valium, it's hard for anybody to have any mental or physical control."

Reynolds spokesman Logan Fleming didn't immediately return calls Monday.

LOS ANGELES — Audrey Meadows says working with Jackie Gleason was a honeymoon.

"I really wanted to correct a lot of the misconceptions about Jackie," she said of her new book, "Love, Alice: My Life as a Honeymooner."

"I wanted the fans . . . to get the full picture of the man, the joy that was in him, the fun that was in him. The fact that he was not a tyrant and a difficult boss. He was the easiest, most marvelous person to work with," she said in an interview in Monday's Los Angeles Daily News.

Gleason's biographers have depicted the star of "The Honeymooners" as tyrannical and mean-spirited.

LAS VEGAS — Old habits die hard. Impressionist Rich Little did a little Cary Grant during his wedding to Jeannette Markey.

The two were married Saturday night in a penthouse at the MGM Grand Hotel.

Little began to cry as Markey made her entrance. He tossed in a little of his act, reciting some of his vows as the suave Grant.

Rich Little did a little Cary Grant during his wedding.

Markey and Little have been stage partners for two years, portraying famous couples such as George Burns and Gracie Allen, Edith and Archie Bunker, and Kermit the Frog and Miss Piggy.

CHARLESTON, S.C. — It took two days, perfect weather and a couple of dummies standing in for Bruce Willis and Samuel L. Jackson to pull off the centerpiece stunt of "Die Hard 3."

Charleston Harbor was filled with boats, and 100 movie crew members crossed their fingers for the big moment Sunday on the John P. Grace Memorial Bridge: A freighter cruises under the bridge. It snares a loop of cable and takes a pickup truck and the dummies into the water.

After one failed attempt the day before, the filmmakers got prime weather for the stunt — slate-gray skies and a light drizzle.

ROSEMEAD, Calif. — Kirk Douglas' youngest son was arrested for investigation of cocaine charges after arguing with a restaurant manager.

The argument Sunday was over a state law that cuts off the sale of alcoholic beverages at 2 a.m., the sheriff's department said in a statement.

Eric Douglas, 36, "had apparently attempted to purchase some alcoholic beverages after 2 a.m. P.D.T., and was arguing with the manager whether or not the time was pertinent due to the switch back to standard time," the statement said.

Daylight-saving time ended at 2 a.m. Sunday and clocks were turned back one hour to standard time.

Douglas was booked for investigation of being under the influence of a controlled substance and possession of a controlled substance. He was freed on bail.

Douglas has pursued an acting career, appearing in "The Golden Child" and "The Flamingo Kid."

In 1992, he got five days in jail for kicking a police officer. In 1991, he was sentenced to community service after pleading no contest to assaulting two women in a building where he worked.

Vice President Al Gore met his worst nightmare on Saturday afternoon. Right in his front yard in Washington.

Standing in front of the vice president's mansion was a fellow who looked like Newt Gingrich, the House minority leader, down to the gray hair parted in the middle, wearing a "Newt" T-shirt and a sign that said speaker of the House, which is what Gingrich will be if the Republicans win control of the House of Representatives Nov. 8.

Gore turned green and grabbed his throat as "Mr. Gingrich" approached, and said: "It's the scariest thing I've ever seen."

Actually, Gore was green before the Gingrich look-alike, Jeffrey Hunt, 13, approached him. Jeffrey is the son of Al Hunt, a Wall Street Journal columnist, and his wife, Judy Woodruff, of CNN. The vice president and his wife, Tipper, were in costume, too, for their second annual Halloween party.

Rules:

Anyone 18 years or older can enter except employees (and family members of employees) of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Brite systems Inc., Associated Publishing Co., and their advertising and promotion agencies.

The "It's 4 U" Game is designed for people who live in the Midland and Odessa calling areas and no purchase is required to play or win prizes, although long distance toll charges may apply if you call from outside the Midland-Odessa calling area.

Look for the "It's 4 U" Game ad here and in the advertisers' service directory in the Midland Reporter-Telegram every day until November 5, 1994. Call 560-2400 and enter any four-digit advertiser's code listed in the directory. You will hear a brief advertiser's message and, if you are one of five instant winners chosen at random each week, you will win one of that week's prizes. If you are an instant winner, listen for details about claiming your prize. In order to claim your prize, you will be required to give your name, age, address and telephone number. The more often you call, the better your chance of winning a prize.

You can also enter a second chance drawing for unclaimed prizes by hand printing your complete name and address and daytime phone number on a 3"x5" piece of paper and mailing it in an envelope to "It's 4 U" Second Chance Game, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702, so that it is received before the deadline, October 30, 1994. Enter as often as you wish, but submit only one entry in each envelope. Entries become the property of the sponsors. None will be returned.

Each game begins at 12:01 a.m. Monday and ends at 11:59 p.m. Sunday. Each week for eight weeks ending November 5, 1994, five entries will be selected at random and will win one of that week's prize. The total value of all prizes to be awarded in the "It's 4 U" game will equal $4,000 or more. The names and cities of winners will be published in the Midland Reporter-Telegram Classified Ads page. No substitution of prizes is permitted. Only one prize will be awarded to each winner.

By entering, winners authorize the use of their names, cities or photos for publicity purposes. Winners may be required to sign an affidavit of eligibility and release. Taxes are the responsibility of winners. Void where prohibited.

HIGH SKY AREA
LOOKING FOR EXTRA INCOME
OR A STEADY PART TIME JOB.....
Does a Weekly and Monthly Income Sound Appealing????

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an opening on one of its "Special Allowance" routes. This route receives a regular income from rack sales, $250 per month gas allowance in addition to the regular monthly route profits.

As with all newspaper distributorships, this opportunity requires a P/T, a 7 day a week commitment (when you go out of town, you must arrange a substitute for yourself) and it is early morning work which allows for time to go to your "regular job".

Newspaper distributorships can provide great supplemental income for housewives and/or mothers, senior citizens, college students or any other adult wanting to "moonlight".
