Basin flu outbreak sparks 5 AIDS deaths in week

By Jimmy Patterson
Special Projects Editor

The recent flu outbreak in the Permian Basin is being blamed for an unprecedented toll for the Permian Basin AIDS Coalition: During the seven-day period from Jan. 3-10, five patients died from complications relating to AIDS.

All five who died had contracted the virulent form of flu that has spread through the Midland-Odessa area during the last month.

"Everything going around that everybody else is getting, that's what our clients all got," said Cathryn Jackson, director of the coalition.

"It's something we can live through, but if one of my clients gets it, they're dead."

One of those who died had not yet been tested for AIDS and was unaware he had contracted the virus. The patient died just two days after learning he had tested positive for AIDS, she said.

"Three of those who died were very close to me," Ms. Jackson said.

"It's a very hard time for the staff here. One who died was a vice-chair of our consortium and one had been a board member since the PBAC became an agency. Both were very well respected members of the community."

"We're going to be seeing more and more of (the higher number of deaths)," said Judy Warren, of the Midland Area AIDS Support group.

"That is not going be such a staggering number in the future. I work with this all the time, so that number does not surprise me. It is a high number, but we're going to see it again."

Molly Krueger, a staff member with Midland's First United Methodist Church who ministers with AIDS patients and their families, said the figures are "very

Ads 'miss point'

FORT WORTH — Saying chastity should win out over condoms, the Southern Baptist Convention's president has criticized a safe-sex ad campaign launched by the Clinton administration. The new campaign, which urges condom use to prevent AIDS and unwanted pregnancies, misses the point that people should refrain from sex outside of marriage because it is morally wrong, the Rev. H. Edwin Young said Monday. Young also was critical of Clinton's lifestyle in a sermon to more than 9,000 people attending the Texas Baptist Evangelism Conference's opening night./1B

Judge seats jury

SAN ANTONIO — A judge seated an anonymous eight-woman, four-man jury Tuesday in the murder conspiracy trial of 11 Branch Davidians who say they were acting in self-defense in a shootout that killed four federal agents. After selecting the 12 jurors and six alternates, U.S. District Judge Walter Smith ruled on a laundry list of motions and said the jury may hear about the religious group's "defensive posture" leading up to the fatal gun battle./3B

S&L cleanup recoups little across Texas

By Richard Keil
Associated Press

DALLAS — In Texas, savings and loan failures were as plentiful as tumbleweeds, but the government's effort to recoup an estimated $200 billion in losses has hardly matched the task.

The Resolution Trust Corp. failed to issue a single subpoena in 99 of the 122 investigations of thrift officials handled by its three offices in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio from 1989 to early 1993, according to subpoena logs at the S&L cleanup agency.

Not a single RTC case against Texas S&L operators ever reached a jury. The few officials who were sued usually settled out of court for pennies on the dollar.

The recovery effort has been so poor that one of the RTC's most productive attorneys in Texas, Tom Burnside, quit in disgust last year and later told Congress his bosses "just wanted to bury the S&L mess in an unmarked grave."

The Treasury Department recently sent an investigative team to Texas to find out what went wrong.

Resolution Trust Corp. fails to issue a single subpoena in 99 of 122 investigations handled over four years, and not a single case against state thrift operators ever reached a jury.

Its first recommendation was harsh: All remaining cases against S&L insiders should be transferred to the RTC's sister agency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., according to officials close to the review. The officials spoke only on condition they not be identified by name.

The RTC has handled the bulk of the Texas S&L recovery cases, but before it was created in 1989 such investigations were run by the FDIC.

170 seniors go down to wire on exit test

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

It's down to the wire for 170 high school seniors in Midland who want to don cap and gown and graduate with their peers, according to a report given at Tuesday's school-board meeting.

Many of the 170 have a final hurdle to cross — passing the exit-level TAAS (Texas Assessment of Academic Skills) test.

The majority of the 170 students — 136 to be exact — failed the math portion of the test, which had been administered in October. It is a state requirement for graduation.

Not all of the 170 who failed the fall administration of the test have their graduation day hinging on passing it. Some of the seniors also are lacking in the required number of credits required to graduate.

Bobbitt returns to stand, denies striking wife

The Reporter-Telegram's Cityline service will provide updates throughout the day of Lorena Bobbitt's trial on charges she maliciously wounded her husband, John Wayne Bobbitt, last June 23 when she cut off his penis. Ms. Bobbitt is expected to take the stand in her own defense today.

To receive the latest information as it unfolds from a Manassas, Va., courtroom, call 560-2400, then enter category 1213.

The Reporter-Telegram logged more than 200 calls during the trial's first full day on Tuesday.

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) — John Bobbitt returned to the witness stand Tuesday and denied ever striking his wife before she cut off his penis, saying the worst he ever did was "push her, hold her down, restrain her from hitting me."

On the second day of his wife's malicious wounding trial, Bobbitt disputed a court record that a defense lawyer said showed Bobbitt pleaded guilty to assaulting his wife, Lorena.

"I never pleaded guilty to nothing," Bobbitt said.

Mrs. Bobbitt, 24, is charged with malicious wounding for cutting off her husband's penis after he came home from a night of drinking June 23.

If convicted, the Ecuadoran-born manicurist could get up to 20 years in prison and be deported.

Bobbitt, 26, was acquitted late last year of assaulting his wife.

The defense opened its case Tuesday by calling Bobbitt to the stand as an "adverse" witness. On Monday,

Council's split vote blocks change in zoning

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

After hearing opposition from adamant neighbors followed by several inquiries on voting procedure, a zone-change request that could have put two restaurants on West Loop 250 North was denied in a strongly split vote by City Council on Tuesday.

About a dozen residents of the Polo Park subdivision showed up for the public hearing to fight the requested zone change on a four-acre tract located just east of the Chili's Grill & Bar.

Developers wanted to change the commercially zoned area that allows office buildings to permit shopping center-type facilities.

"That was not in the game plan," said Susan Duffey, president of the Polo Park Homeowners Association.

Residents said they would welcome office buildings or a change to residential zoning but not retail establishments. Homeowners said they trusted the city to prevent rezoning to retail as part of the city's master zoning plan.

Residents said retail businesses would in-

A last-minute lawsuit Tuesday morning caused the City Council to put off the presentation of a $25,000 check to the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial fund.

The lawsuit was filed "about two minutes till 10 and the check presentation was supposed to take place at 10," memorial committee president John Philbeck said outside council chambers.

After word that the lawsuit — which seeks a temporary restraining order and injunction — was filed, City Attorney Keith Stretcher recommended that the council table the presentation. Council took the advice.

Opponents of the payment — which would come out of the hotel-/motel tax fund — maintain "that these proposed expenditures are impermissible uses of the revenue collected pursuant . . . to the Texas Tax Code," according to the lawsuit filed in the 142nd District Court.

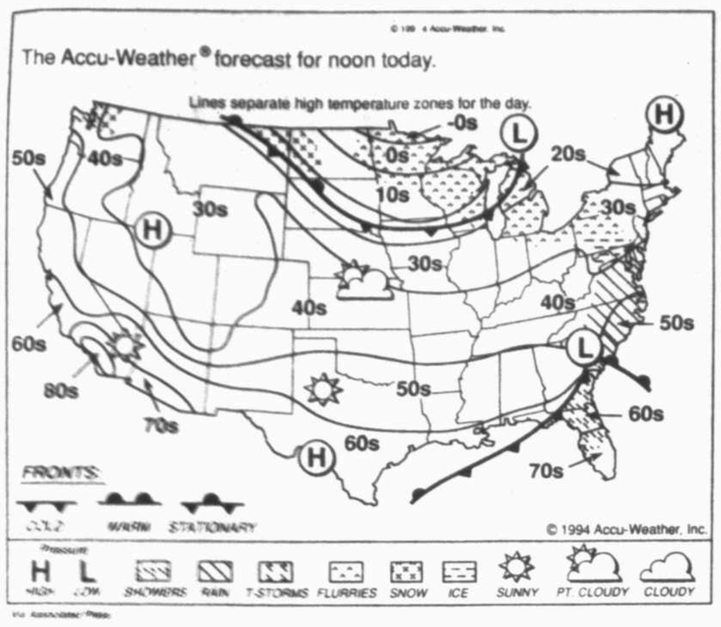
WEATHER WATCH



Mr. Weather predicts high of 60

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high around 60 and north winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the upper 20s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Thursday should be partly cloudy with a high in the upper 50s.

After an overnight low of 26, Tuesday's high reached 61, compared to the record high for that date of 78 set in 1935. The record low was five set in 1963.

STATE

Moderate temperatures were the norm across the state Tuesday ranging from the 50s in North Texas to 70s in South Texas. Winds were northerly at speeds from 10 to 15 mph.

An area of low pressure surface was located in southeastern Oklahoma with an associated frontal boundary extending along a Texarkana-Austin-Del Rio line. Diminishing gulf moisture across the western two thirds of the area allowed for clear skies to the west of Wichita Falls.

The return of northerly winds may be short-lived as Panhandle locations reported south to southwest winds due to a developing trough of low pressure in their region.

North Texas will see partly sunny skies today with highs from the middle 50s to the lower 60s.

The forecast for South Texas calls for cloudy skies areawide today. Highs today will be in the 60s with a few 70s in the inland sections of the lower valley.

Today's forecast for West Texas and the Panhandle will be fair to partly cloudy skies across all regions. Lows mainly will be in the 20s and 30s with highs in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Heavy rain fell across parts of the South on Tuesday, changing to ice in the Appalachians and snow near the Great Lakes. Temperatures fell to 30 below zero in northern Minnesota.

Areas of rain developed across the gulf coast states. Some of the rain was heavy, including 1.76 inches at Mobile, Ala.

Moist air flowed north from the gulf coast to the eastern Great Lakes and the middle Atlantic Coast states.

A few areas of snow, sleet and freezing rain developed in sections of the southern Appalachians. Roads were icy in eastern Kentucky and western North Carolina, where two traffic deaths were blamed on slippery roads.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

ZONING: Split vote denies change request crease neighborhood traffic, noise and disturbances. And two restaurants would overwhelm the neighborhood with an undesirable odor, they said.

More than 40 percent of the subdivision's residents reportedly were against the proposed change.

Ben Fralin with the engineering and planning company Richardson-Fralin Inc., which represented owners Deane Stoltz and Jimmy Lawson, said the residents' claims were unfounded.

"I feel what's being planned here today is better than what could go in there," he said.

Fralin said two national restaurant chains had expressed interest in the location. He declined to reveal the specific companies.

Fralin said measures to protect residents — such as seven-foot fencing, pine trees and a buffer zone — would be made. He also countered the increased traffic argument and offered a costly traffic study.

Furthermore, the two restaurants would essentially be a continuation of the existing Colonnade shopping center, he said.

Residents disagreed and said the zone change would be essentially strip development.

Residents' disapproval of the request was backed by the city's planning and zoning staff, which reported there was already an adequate supply of retail space, the change would be strip zoning and would adversely affect residential streets.

City Council was divided on the issue. Council member Bill Morrow refrained from the vote because of a possible conflict of interest.

When the hearing was initially called, Fralin requested it be deferred pending developers seeking traffic access from the adjacent property.

The opposition wanted to go forward because of the inconvenience of returning on another date. The City Council agreed 6-0, with Morrow refraining.

It soon became evident the six voting members were evenly split on the zone-change request. Siding with developers were Mayor J.D. Faircloth, Juluis Brooks and Buddy Sipes. Siding with the homeowners were Pat Schneider, Jose Cuevas and Claudia Egan.

Council members who were against the zone change shot down deferring the vote until a later date.

And a motion to deny the request was withdrawn because the obvious 3-3 result would not resolve the matter.

Then there was a motion to table the hearing indefinitely, which was quashed 3-3.

That was followed by a motion to adjourn, which failed 3-3.

Legal advice then was sought to determine whether Cuevas could move to approve then vote against. That turned out to be permissible.

Apparently, those in favor did not want to move for approval in light of obvious defeat — five affirmative votes were needed — and their wanting time to consider additional information.

"There is no reason this should not be approved. (Denial) sends an anti-development message," Faircloth said.

A zone change from one commercial zoning to another is not unreasonable, he said.

Cuevas summed up the dissension.

"I think the citizens have every right to think the city will uphold the zoning that was there when they bought their homes," he said.

In the end, Sipes moved to approve and Cuevas seconded the motion.

The request failed 3-3.

Officials said this was not the first time developers sought — unsuccessfully — a zone change of the property.

vention centers, attract conventions, promote tourism, support the arts, and for historic restoration and preservation.

The city's legal advisors previously found the memorial donation to be in compliance.

City Council pledged the funds last February contingent on the memorial committee raising at least $265,000 before July 4 of this year. The sole council member to dissent was Buddy Sipes, saying that although the memorial committee's efforts were commendable, the project should be funded through private donations and use of the hotel/motel tax funds was inappropriate.

The pledge also was opposed by Victor V. Hardy, who, with the Texas Hotel and Motel Association Legal Defense Fund, filed the lawsuit.

Hardy, president of the Midland Hotel and Motel Association and manager of the Plaza Inn, said in a written statement that the city and state associations supported the memorial but that funding did not fall into the framework of the hotel occupancy tax laws.

"The action taken this morning is not, in any way, to be construed as a personal attack on Mr. John Philbeck or any member of his committee," Hardy said.

City officials said they anticipate the dispute to go before a judge within two months.

Under an agreement with the city, the memorial committee has until July 4 to move on the memorial or lose the site. Philbeck said he will ask for an extension if necessary in light of the lawsuit.

Philbeck said he is confident the memorial will become a reality whether or not the city prevails.

"This is in God's hands and this thing is going to work out," he said.

Before the setback, groundbreaking was set for late March with completion by July or August.

The memorial — to be located on Wright Drive near the Confederate Air Force at Midland International Airport — is to consist of a Texas-shaped piece of sunset-red granite inscribed with the names of 203 veterans from West Texas who were killed or missing in action. The site also will include a 40-foot granite Lone Star inset in the ground and a masonry wall set behind the memorial.

The idea for the memorial was conceived in July 1989.

WIRE: Many seniors have final hurdle to pass

(From 1A)

At the beginning of the school year, 285 seniors needed to pass the exit-level TAAS exam. Of that group, 115 mastered the test, while 170 failed one or more of the three sections — math, reading and writing.

The 170 — 78 from Lee High School, 75 from Midland High School and 17 from Coleman High School — all have one chance left to take the test and pass it in March.

"It's a real delicate situation at this point," said Joe Cummins, executive director of administrative services, evaluation and planning for Midland Independent School District. He said fear of failing and not graduating weighs heavy on seniors who face a final chance to pass before commencement exercises in June.

"Remediation needs to not only address academics, but encourage and support students to help them pass," Cummins told trustees.

"Attitude is also important," he said.

Trustee James Fuller said the Dallas Morning News reported that approximately 26,000 students across the state failed the October TAAS administration.

Cummins noted that MISD was in the same boat last year, with 171 students needing to retake the test after failing to master it in October.

A notable difference is that 66 more students took the test this October — 285 — compared to 219 last year.

The 170 students represent almost 16 percent of the 1,115 seniors in the district.

Cummins said 22 percent of the junior class who took the test in October — 137 of 609 students — already is cleared for graduation.

Of 1,245 juniors in the district, 472 still need to pass the test.

"About 45 percent of each group tested each administration passes," Cummins said. "And six in 10 stumble over the math section."

And when it comes to remediation, "it gets down to not the group, but the individual," he said.

As an action item, trustees approved awarding stipends to 29 teachers with bachelor's degrees who had earned an additional 18 hours toward a higher degree.

Trustees also approved offering to sell delinquent County Education District tax accounts at 10 cents on the dollar to Andrews Independent School District. More than 6,000 accounts, totaling more than $170,000, were delinquent as of Jan. 6.

The board authorized district staff to begin recruiting up to 50 teachers for the 1994-95 school year.

Trustees approved the school calendar for next year, with the first day of school being Aug. 16 and the school year ending May 26.

BOBBITT: Husband returns to witness stand.

(From 1A)

he testified for the prosecution, which rested its case Tuesday morning.

Both times, and in his own trial in November, he denied ever forcing his wife to have sex.

Two of Bobbitt's acquaintances testified Tuesday that he liked rough sex.

"He said he liked to make girls squirm and yell, make them bleed," said Jonathan Whitaker, who said he lifted weights and played basketball with Bobbitt. "You could tell he was serious."

Mrs. Bobbitt contends that prolonged sexual, physical and verbal abuse by Bobbitt during their four-year marriage forced her to cut off his penis in an "irresistible impulse." Bobbitt is seeking a divorce.

Amalia Hoyt testified for the defense about an incident in which Bobbitt gave his wife bikini underwear for Christmas in front of several friends. Mrs. Bobbitt was embarrassed and walked away, she said.

"He said 'Why are you trying to hide it?' " Ms. Hoyt said. She said Bobbitt pushed his wife against the wall several times.

"She was really scared," Ms. Hoyt said.

Terri McComber, who used to work with Mrs. Bobbitt, testified that Bobbitt would criticize his wife's appearance, but could turn violent if other men paid attention to her.

On a trip with the Bobbitts to Ocean City, Md., Ms. McComber said somebody whistled and Bobbitt believed it was directed at her and his wife.

"He came up, grabbed her by the hair," she said. "He said the weekend was over. We're going home."

She said Bobbitt started hitting his wife in the car on the way home. "He kept accusing her of looking at the guys in other cars," she said.

Defense attorney Blair Howard showed Bobbitt records from a court case that the lawyer said showed he pleaded guilty in March 1991 to assaulting his wife.

Bobbitt disputed the records. Commonwealth's Attorney Paul B. Ebert said the court did not issue a final finding of guilt in the case.

"I could never hit my wife," Bobbitt said. "I never hit her at all — just push her, hold her down, restrain her from hitting me."

Instead, Bobbitt said, it was his wife who sometimes assaulted him.

In one instance, he said, she got upset when they weren't allowed in a restaurant because he was wearing sneakers and began hitting him as they drove home.

"My brother was sitting in the back seat, and I remember looking in the rearview mirror and he was just nodding his head," Bobbitt said.

Detective Peter J. Weintz, who testified for the prosecution, said Mrs. Bobbitt told him that her husband forced himself on her early June 23 and, when she complained to him afterward, said he didn't care about her feelings.

" 'If he wanted to make love, he should have asked me,' " the detective quoted her as saying.

After severing the penis that day, Mrs. Bobbitt drove off and threw it from her car window. She later directed officers to the location, where the organ was recovered by Howard Perry, a rescue squad member.

"I picked up the penis and placed it in a clear, plastic bag," Perry said.

By that time, Bobbitt had arrived at Prince William Hospital, where he was examined by Dr. James T. Sehn.

"There was nothing but a large amount of blood where the penis should have been," said Sehn, a urologist who reattached the organ in an operation that lasted about nine hours. "It appeared it had been severed right at the body wall."

sad" and should serve as an "urgent reminder that the time is now to educate ourselves and our community, promoting awareness and acceptance of this disease."

The total of newly reported AIDS cases in Midland and Ector counties in 1993 was 136, 58 of which were in Midland. Thirty-one AIDS patients in Midland County died last year from complications relating to the illness; 40 deaths attributed to the disease were reported in Ector County. In Howard County, 25 new cases of AIDS were reported in 1993, while 16 deaths were reported.

Ms. Jackson said PBAC is handling 123 active cases in the 17-county area it serves. PBAC averages between two to four new clients each week. In addition, "we lose two to four clients every two weeks," she said.

Ms. Jackson said despite the recent rise in local cases, AIDS does not have to be an automatic death sentence.

"We have the ability to extend someone's life 15 to 20 years if we find out early enough," Ms. Jackson said. "It's not about 'Here's your death sentence.' It's about 'Get tested so it doesn't have to be a death sentence.' "

Ms. Jackson said 80 percent of PBAC's clients are "petrified" someone will find out they have AIDS.

S&L: Agency gets 4 cents a dollar

mates that with interest costs calculated, thrift losses in Texas will cost taxpayers $200 billion — or $800 each for every man, woman and child in the United States.

The RTC, however, had recovered just $90 million from Texas through June 1993, the last available date for which records are available. And only $12 million of that came from officials who ran the failed thrifts and their attorneys. The rest came in nationwide settlements with major accounting firms.

The agency has proven its ability elsewhere to recover funds. In one probe — the notorious Charles Keating-Lincoln Savings case — the agency recouped $125 million on losses of more than $2 billion.

No recovery in Texas has neared that success.

A member of the presidential commission that studied the S&L crisis said he was stunned at the failure of the RTC in Texas, which had the most S&L losses of any state.

"There is no good explanation for the facts, in terms of the need for an aggressive effort to go after these assets," former Rep. Elliott Levitas said. "The result is that the taxpayers pick up the bill. It just jumps out at you that the question why this happened has yet to be answered."

Thomas Hindes, who heads the RTC division that pursues thrift officials, declined to comment on the Texas situation — as did top legal officials in the agency's Dallas office.

RTC spokesman Steve Katsanos defended the agency's performance, saying it has aggressively pursued all the S&L insiders it thought it could get money from.

"We feel confident that we have had a vigorous program," Katsanos said. "If we are doing an investigation, and someone is providing us the information we are looking for, there is no need to go to court to enforce a subpoena."

The subpoena is a vital tool to determine exactly how fruitful pursuit of recovery from an S&L official might be, as well as helping find out where misused thrift funds ended up.

Clinton, NATO allies warn Serbs of determination to use air strikes

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — After months of empty threats, President Clinton and his NATO allies warned Serb forces Tuesday of a new determination to launch air strikes if needed to relieve embattled Muslim enclaves in Bosnia. "My resolve is there," Clinton said.

At the end of a two-day summit, the 16 Western leaders announced their willingness to order bombing raids if Bosnian Serbs continue to prevent the opening of a major airport for aid supplies or the rotation of encircled peace keepers.

"Whether they occur or not depends upon the behavior of the Bosnian Serbs from this moment forward," Clinton told reporters at the end of the meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The first reaction from the Serb forces was negative. Their chief of staff, Manojlo Milovanovic, warned U.N. troops would also suffer in any air campaign because his forces would stay close to peacekeepers. "They cannot strike at us without also hitting U.N. forces," he said.

Clinton and other leaders insisted there was a new mood among the allies to carry out the threats first issued last June to use their formidable air power to ease the situation in Bosnia.

"There is a very real determination" to carry out the warnings, said British Prime Minister John Major. He had in the past opposed air strikes for fear of reprisals against his country's 2,200 peace keepers in Bosnia.

"I made it clear that for our part we were prepared to follow through," Clinton said.

And if the Bosnian Serbs don't get the message, he said later, after meeting with officials of the 12-nation European Union, "We'll see if our resolve is there. My resolve is there."

But Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien appeared hesitant.

He said he only reluctantly went along with the others. "We don't believe it is necessary to have air strikes to protect" 150 Canadian peace keepers in Srebrenica, he said.

Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers said there was "still a margin of uncertainty" about whether an allied air campaign would be launched.

"We still need the approval for a first strike" from U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, he said. Boutros-Ghali, who has never given the go-ahead for raids, said that if U.N. military, humanitarian and political officials on the scene ask for air strikes, he will immediately ask NATO to carry them out.

He said NATO's statement demonstrated "a political will to do something."

The NATO leaders, in a final statement, raised the prospect of bombing raids to evacuate the Canadians from Srebrenica in eastern Bosnia and force open the airport at Tuzla, a key conduit for aid to the north.

"We've asked the Serbs several times to open Tuzla. They refused," said French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe. "Now we've decided to do it anyway."

The allies also reaffirmed their readiness to conduct air strikes "to prevent the strangulation of Sarajevo, the safe areas and other threatened areas of Bosnia-Herzegovina."

In toughening their stand, the allies seemed to move closer to military intervention in the conflict raging on their doorstep. More than 200,000 people have died since fighting broke out when Bosnian Serbs rebelled against independence from Yugoslavia nearly 21 months ago.

The Bosnian crisis dominated the final day of the NATO summit, which was called by Clinton to adopt measures to modernize the 44-year-old alliance and give it new missions in the post-Cold War era.

To do that, the leaders declared a readiness to let their former foes in Eastern Europe join the elite fraternity one day.

But the allies, fearful of isolating an unstable Russia, did not draw up a timetable or a list of candidates for membership.

In their final statement, they endorsed the U.S. proposal for a "Partnership for Peace," which invites East Europeans to take part in military exercises and other limited activities.

"The offer is there," NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner said. "The door is open."

From Brussels, Clinton flew to the Czech capital Prague to try to sell leaders of that new democracy, as well as Poland and Hungary, on the alliance's plan for limited partnerships.

Rebels: Mexico City a target if troops don't leave

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A presidential troubleshooter called talks Tuesday on ending an uprising in southern Mexico. Rebels said they would negotiate if the military stopped bombing, withdrew its troops and recognized their movement.

They said that otherwise they would carry the war to Mexico City, where bombings apparently linked to the uprising have put the government on alert and residents on edge.

In the poor, remote, southern state of Chiapas, troops moved on Tuesday toward Guadalupe Tepeyac, where up to 500 rebels are entrenched. The town of 400 people lies just north of the Guatemalan border.

Journalists who traveled from Nuevo Momom to Las Margaritas, both in Chiapas, said the army was advancing in that border region. Refugees bucked the tide of incoming troops, trying to escape a possible confrontation.

The uprising by the Zapatista National Liberation Army began New Year's Day in Chiapas, 390 miles southeast of the capital. Rebels occupied towns for days, saying they were fighting for better living conditions and an end to exploitation and oppression of Mexico's native Indians.

Officials said 107 people died in fighting between rebels and government troops.

"It's necessary to rebuild the political process in the region," Manuel Camacho Solis, who stepped down as foreign minister to become a special commissioner to Chiapas, said Tuesday. "We'll have to find a dignified political exit for all."

Camacho, who gained a reputation as a savvy negotiator while mayor of Mexico City, said he accepted the job because he was guaranteed autonomy and access to President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, who appointed him.

"We need to take into account the point of view of all sectors involved," Camacho said. "We can't close doors. Nobody wants more dead or terrorism."

His first move was a meeting Tuesday with southern Mexico's bishops, including Bishop Samuel Ruiz of San Cristobal de las Casas in Chiapas, an outspoken defender for indigenous rights.

The government has accused Roman Catholic leaders of fomenting unrest by "confusing religious work with social struggle." Church officials deny it.

"From this meeting the process of peace ... in Chiapas is strengthened," said Comacho, adding that he would travel to Chiapas soon.

Ruiz told reporters he was more hopeful following Cabinet changes Monday, and said Camacho's mission might be the last chance to build "a Mexico with true justice and lasting peace."

Except for sporadic shootings, Chiapas has been quiet since the weekend. About 14,000 government troops are stationed there, far outnumbering the estimated 1,000 to 2,000 rebels.

In his first public statement since the uprising began, Comandante Marcos, a top rebel commander, said the rebels would talk to the government if a cease-fire was declared.

Barge operator says crew didn't tell him towline broke

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — The captain of a barge that ran aground, spilling 750,000 gallons of heating oil into the Atlantic, said Tuesday he wasn't notified when the barge's towline snapped.

"I'm sure I could have rigged something up" to connect the barge and the tugboat pulling it, Phillip E. Taubler told a U.S. Coast Board of Inquiry.

The barge drifted into a coral reef Friday, cracking several of its tanks and spilling 750,000 gallons of oil onto San Juan's resort beaches. Taubler said the towline had broken once before, and the two vessels were shackled together with an emergency line.

The board of inquiry was convened Tuesday by Capt. Larry A. Doyle, who said the board would look at whether incompetence, misconduct or unforeseeable circumstances caused the accident.

The hearings, expected to last several days, are held in a convention center that overlooks beaches soiled by the thick, black oil. Three hundred yards offshore, the crippled barge remains wedged in the reef while a second barge pumps out the remaining oil.

The Coast Guard said it expects to finish emptying the damaged barge's tanks late Tuesday or early today.

Cleanup efforts also took place in the water and on the beaches.

Taubler said he learned that the barge, the Morris J. Berman, was grounded when he was awakened at about 4 a.m. Friday by the sound of waves hitting the hull.

The crew of the tugboat Emily S. didn't tell him the line had broken again, and he couldn't make radio contact with them until almost 6 a.m., he said.

The Emily had called when the original line snapped hours earlier. It was not clear what time the second line broke.

The board of inquiry will hear from the crew of the tug and the barge, and the manager of the company operating the tug under contract to New Jersey-based New England Marine Service.

Doyle's report should be completed in about two months. Indictments or penalties would be imposed by other agencies based on Doyle's report and other evidence.

Separate investigations are being conducted by the Justice Department, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the FBI in conjunction with the Coast Guard.

The spill spread across a 20-square-mile area of sea northeast of San Juan and coated six miles of coastline with oil at the height of tourist season.

The Coast Guard said the towboat operator, the Bunker Group of Puerto Rico, spilled 10,000 gallons of the same type of oil into San Juan Harbor on Dec. 12.

Somalis release kidnapped Briton

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Kidnapped British aid worker Calum Gardner was freed by his Somali captors today after a 42-hour ordeal that ended through the patient intervention of clan elders.

Gardner, 35, was turned over to the elders, who in turn delivered him to his U.N. World Food Program colleagues early today, according to aid agency radio communications monitored in the capital.

The Somali gunmen had asked for $100,000 in ransom, but WFP officials said they had refused to pay.

"I feel tired but also buoyed up by the excitement of the moment," Gardner told reporters by telephone from WFP headquarters.

He said he had been treated and fed well by his captors, who did not discuss their demands with him.

The elders, who are highly respected in Somali culture, were asked by aid officials to help negotiate the release of Gardner, who was kidnapped by three men Monday while walking to his office in Mogadishu.

The WFP flew a particularly influential elder in from Luuq, 155 miles west of Mogadishu, to take part in the negotiations.

Gardner's colleagues and friends waited through two days and almost two nights for good news and prepared his favorite dessert, banana cake, as a welcome-back treat. Repeatedly, the mediators hinted that Gardner's release was near, only to call back on WFP-provided radios to say the talks had hit a snag.

Yeltsin opens new parliament, asks for members' cooperation

MOSCOW (AP) — On the eve of President Clinton's visit, Boris Yeltsin opened Russia's unruly new parliament Tuesday by urging lawmakers to cooperate with him and give his economic reforms "a second wind."

Three months after he sent tanks to crush the old, hard-line parliament, the Russian president warned the new lawmakers they must agree to "a complete and categorical exclusion of violence from the political life of the country."

Clinton arrives for a summit today to a Russia wracked by political struggle and bitterly divided over Yeltsin's free-market reforms and pro-Western tilt. The American president is expected to strongly endorse Yeltsin and shun his political foes, including extreme nationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky.

Some Russian politicians who had gathered for the opening of the parliament urged Clinton not to focus entirely on Yeltsin, although Clinton will meet some lawmakers, including Communists.

"It's not enough to meet just with the leader ... Clinton should feel the political climate in Russia and its problems," said Nikolai Ryabov, a Yeltsin ally and head of the Election Commission.

Yeltsin stood stiffly and spoke with little emotion throughout his 17-minute address to the upper chamber, the Federation Council.

His sober appeal for dialogue contrasted sharply to his fighting mood when he called in the army Oct. 4 to resolve his conflict with his hard-line enemies, whose supporters had rioted in the streets.

"Despite the diversity of parties in parliament, there is a fundamental basis for constructive work together," Yeltsin said Tuesday.

He urged parliament to pass laws easing the transition to a market economy.

"During the electoral campaign, a lot of fresh and original ideas were heard, which could provide a second wind to the economic reforms," he said.

Since the stunning success of extreme nationalists and Communists in December's parliamentary elections, doubts have emerged about Yeltsin's commitment to his painful "shock therapy" reforms.

Yeltsin has ordered a Cabinet reshuffling to trim the bureaucracy, and some reformers could lose their jobs. But Yeltsin has pledged that Yegor Gaidar, architect of his free-market transition, will remain.

Fighting in Sarajevo kills at least 6

By Samir Krilic
Associated Press Writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Fierce fighting killed at least six people in Sarajevo on Tuesday and shut down the city's vital aid airlift a few hours after cargo planes started landing again.

An explosion killed at least one woman outside a school in the western suburb of Ali Pashino Polje, and another person died when a shell hit a local Red Cross office. Hospital workers reported six dead and 44 wounded.

Ethnic Serbs besieging the city said three civilians died in a central area they control that has been under attack by troops of the Muslim-dominated government. It was not known if the three were among those reported by hospital workers.

Fighting also raged near Olovo, a town northeast of Sarajevo that is considered a weak link in the Serb chain around the capital. Government and Serb forces have battled over it for two months.

The U.N. airlift has been shut down most of the past week because of fighting, leaving Sarajevo's 380,000 residents with dwindling supplies. They depend almost entirely on the airlift for food and medicine.

The bloodshed came as NATO nations issued a new threat to mount air attacks on Serb forces if the strangulation of Sarajevo continued. But Western threats to use force against those interfering with aid shipments have largely gone unheeded by all three warring parties in Bosnia.

Shelling decreased, as it often does, when NATO jets enforcing a no-fly zone over Bosnia roared low over Sarajevo.

Radovan Karadzic, the leader of Bosnian Serbs, warned that talk of NATO air strikes could doom peace negotiations scheduled to begin next Tuesday in Geneva.

Skinheads carve swastika on girl's cheek, police say

HALLE, Germany (AP) — Police raided 200 right-wing hangouts Tuesday searching for three skinheads who sliced a swastika on the cheek of a girl confined to a wheelchair.

The attackers yelled, "Gas the Cripples!" and "Heil Hitler!" One then took out a knife and made a 1½-inch wound on the girl's cheek Monday, Police Chief Guenter Hermann said.

President Richard von Weizsaecker called the attack in Halle, an east German city of 18,000, an "act of intolerable infamy."

The 17-year-old girl's name and further details on her handicap were not released. Hermann said he did not know whether the wound would leave a scar.

The attack took place in a back lot near a hospital the girl had just left after therapy. No one had come forward as a witness.

Hermann said 105 officers were hunting for the attackers, two men with shaved heads, ages 18 to 20, and a girl of about 15. All wore black leather jackets, fatigue pants and black boots, he said.

Hermann said later Monday that the search would spread to other areas, but gave no further details.

I-27 extension makes good sense

The current effort by officials of Midland and Odessa to bring about the expansion of Interstate 27 through this region, using figures derived from the anticipated economic trade to come through this area as a result of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), makes perfect sense.

Recent predictions indicate that NAFTA, which took effect Jan. 1, will result in increasing economic activity between the United States, particularly border states like Texas, and Mexico through the remainder of this century and into the early years, at least, of the next.

Getting Interstate 27 routed through the Midland-Odessa area is logically the first step. Other routes are being considered, however, so a concerted effort is needed to "sell" the obvious advantages of this route to federal highway planners.

As Odessa Mayor Loraine Perryman said Monday at a joint meeting of the Midland and Odessa city councils, "We may not see the money for this project in our lifetime. But, unless we open the door now and convince lawmakers to run the corridor through this area, we will not see a highway go through here when the money is finally allocated."

Approval of the NAFTA pact changed the dynamics of planning for a community's economic future although it didn't alter the basic geographic factors that determine how material goods can best be transported overland or through the air. Since the days of the Spanish explorers who trekked over these plains to the days when the Comanche ruled the wild frontier of Texas, and on to the arrival of this region's first settlers, Midland has been a point where trails converged before continuing on to the interior of Mexico, or westward through El Paso along Capt. Marcy's old trace.

These were trails for early immigrants and for the exchange of goods that established commerce in this region. As a result, the suitability of the trails for commerce has been proven for better than 400 years.

Extending Interstate 27 from Lubbock, through Lamesa and on to the Midland-Odessa area, before continuing to Crane and McCamey where it would intersect with Interstate 10 is the logical route.

Latest Mideast talks call for revived hope

The lengthening delays in the Middle East peace talks are disheartening to Israelis, Palestinians and others around the world whose hopes soared with the announcement of the historic September framework peace agreement. Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization resumed talks Monday on the transition to Palestinian rule in Gaza and Jericho. Quick agreement is unlikely, though the first Israeli troop withdrawals are now nearly a month overdue.

Many who thrilled to the prospect of peace knew that the details would be particularly devilish because the framework left so many points intentionally vague. Still, both sides accepted the core principle of expanding Palestinian self-rule under a PLO flag. How then did the atmosphere become so acrimonious, with Israel now openly challenging PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat's reliability and legitimacy as a negotiating partner?

One reason is that both sides have been using the discussion of supposedly technical details to reargue basic questions like Palestinian statehood and sovereignty. The framework agreement excludes statehood for the present interim autonomy period. But it points in the direction of eventual statehood by recognizing Palestinian nationality and PLO political authority.

But the main problem is that both Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Arafat have tried to shore up domestic political support by exploiting supposed political vulnerabilities in the other's camp. Arafat calculates that Rabin needs an agreement even more desperately than he does. Rabin calculates that Arafat has been seriously weakened by internal challenges to his autocratic rule of the PLO.

Arafat is trying to refute charges by militant nationalists that he has sold out statehood in exchange for Jericho and Gaza, which have many people but few resources. So he has been pressing to draw boundaries for Jericho that include some of the Dead Sea's mineral wealth, to limit the visibility of Israeli soldiers and to give Palestinian border guards the main responsibility for policing borders.

Rabin is eager to reassure Israeli conservatives and centrists that he has not yet conceded a Palestinian state. He resists Arafat's ever-changing demands, in part on legitimate security grounds, but also because he thinks he can now afford to let Arafat "sweat."

Rabin showed in September that the most effective way to rally Israeli opinion is to move ahead boldly on the peace front. Arafat, instead of trying to quiet his people with symbolic victories that the Israelis are not prepared to concede, needs to listen more carefully to the Palestinians who want a more democratic PLO.

Broadening and democratizing the PLO is important, not just for idealistic reasons, but to provide political outlets for Palestinian opponents of Arafat and the peace agreement who might otherwise turn to terrorism. But it is up to Palestinians, not Israelis, to achieve that democratization.

In reality, the two leaders have bound their political fates together and they both know it. As Rabin acknowledged to reporters last week: "We cooked this food together, and we will have to find a way together to solve differences."

Israel's leaders learned long ago that the PLO was an undemocratic organization led by a mercurial and unaccountable autocrat. Rabin bargained with it nonetheless because he understood that the PLO, flawed as it is, is Israel's best available Palestinian partner. Israel's responsibility now is to see through the deal it made with Arafat.

Rebel gunfire greets NAFTA in Mexico

WASHINGTON — Passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement was supposed to cause a "great sucking sound" this month as jobs headed south of the border. Instead the far more ominous sound of gunfire is ringing out in the southern Mexican state of Chiapas.

Anderson

The armed rebellion in Mexico and fear of revolution is prompting U.S. government officials to ponder some dark possibilities, including this: Embattled Cuban leader Fidel Castro — in his death throes as a dictator — is fomenting and financing the insurrection.

The Zapatista National Liberation Army, reported now to have up to 1,000 rebels sporting rifles and military training, first surfaced in a New Year's Eve offensive against the Mexican army. More than 100 people have died in battles between the army and rebel guerrillas, the first armed uprising in Mexico since the 1970s.

The difficulty this poses for Mexican President Carlos Salinas extends beyond the embarrassment it caused just as he celebrated the Jan. 1 start of NAFTA. If the large, mostly illiterate, lower class of Mexico should decide, even in public rallies, to add to the armed protest, it could begin a spiral that would seriously threaten Mexico's stability.

None of our U.S. intelligence sources will go so far as to predict widespread civil war in Mexico this year, but they hasten to point out that the seeds for rebellion have been sowed for nearly two decades. One Central Intelligence Agency source told us that the intelligence community fears that Castro may be exploiting this window of opportunity against the United States, and that he may be plotting to help the guerrillas in a finale as "freedom-fighter."

In fact, sources flatly predicted that Castro will arrange through El Salvador, Guatemala or another channel to funnel arms to the Zapatistas, if he has not done so already. Castro has been miffed for a while at Salinas' cozying up to the United States, and the passage of NAFTA has sent him into rages at Mexico, whose left-leaning governments were once pro-Castro.

If the mini-rebellion does spread beyond Chiapas, the Mexican army will not be capable of stamping out multiple armed uprisings in several states at the same time. The army is too small, ill-equipped and poorly trained.

And it is certainly not capable of rooting out guerrillas in mountainous, jungle regions like Chiapas without beginning draconian reprisal raids against peasant villages. The effect of killing innocents in that manner would begin a wholesale turn in the region against the government.

There is no great love in Mexico among the lower classes for the Institutional Revolutionary Party, which has ruled Mexico as a virtual monopoly since the 1920s. One State Department report, drafted several years ago and classified secret, explains the all-important history in this:

"The Institutional Revolutionary Party is aptly named. It grew out of two decades of chaos. It can only be understood as the major institutional product of a shapeless revolution. Its lack of an overriding ideology has made it evolve into something more 'institutional' than 'revolutionary.'"

The report notes that the PRI, as it's abbreviated in Spanish, hasn't lost a presidential election since 1929.

Administration strives to reassure Russia

WASHINGTON — "Nothing is more contemptible," Joseph Alsop told me when I took up this line of work, "than a columnist without a Weltanschauung."

A coherent worldview is tough to come by these days because the main threat to freedom has shifted from militant Communism to what John Leo has named "ethnomania," more tribalism than nationalism. It is exploding around Bosnia, the test NATO is failing, and is advancing in what used to be the Communist bloc.

Safire

Does Bill Clinton have a worldview? He may be taking one from the former Time magazine columnist Strobe Talbott, translator of Khrushchev's memoirs, a longtime Friend of Bill gaining pre-eminence in foreign affairs.

Judging from the president's interviews (with little help from a muddy speech in Milwaukee read for him last week by Vice President Gore) the Clinton-Talbott Weltanschauung includes a view of a new Russia whose foreign policy can be shaped benignly by evidence of Western trust.

If we reassure Moscow, goes this view, that it has nothing to fear from the nearness of NATO, then Russia — as it regains its strength — will be less likely to feel the need to reassert control of its former empire. Contrariwise, if we were to seize this moment of Russian weakness to incorporate the newly freed Eastern European nations into the NATO defense, we would only encourage the old paranoia and play into the hands of resentful Russian revanchists.

This is the diplomental set that produced the "Partnership for Peace" scheme. To Warsaw, Prague and Budapest, eager to join the West's mutual protection alliance, it says: maybe, someday. Your security "affects" America's security, but it is not as vital an interest as Germany's or Turkey's. To Russian military leaders, Clinton's NATO waffle says: don't get nervous, we only said maybe to the buffer states, and made no promise about when someday would come.

I think this seeming compromise is self-deception. That's because I see Russia — resource-rich, with an educated populace, no longer hamstrung by collectivist ideology — returning to superpowerhood and, even if democratic, dominating its neighbors.

That's why I asked the president, in a recent Sanhedrin of savants, whether anybody in his administration was presenting the opposing view. Was anyone saying that if you do not bring Eastern Europe into NATO now, when Russia is weak, that you will never be able to bring it in when Russia is strong, and refuses to let it come in? Did anyone near him present the case that he might be making a great historic blunder?

"No one in the administration has," he admitted, which is dismaying; even Lyndon Johnson had a high-level dissenter. But Clinton said he has tried to understand the contrary position, "and I think my response would be, Bill, that that development would not occur overnight ... we will have a couple of years to make the judgment you just outlined. And it won't be where we'll wake up one morning and it will be too late. I think there will be several mornings when we'll have the chance to take a different course."

That easy out was challenged by the columnist Richard Cohen: "But isn't it likely that, at that time, the same arguments will be raised that you will only encourage Russian paranoia, that you will push them over the edge, and you will be in the same box?"

"Whenever you make a new start," Clinton responded, "... you always have these judgment calls, and in the end only history can render a verdict. ... Is it a risk? Of course it is, in the sense that any change you make like this is a risk. I believe the risk is smaller with the course we are taking than it would be if we tried to push to immediate membership ..."

Americans tell how they feel about their lives

Everyone is conducting surveys to find out how Americans feel about their lives. I figured that it wasn't too early or too late in 1994 to do my own.

Sixty percent of the people I talked to felt better about themselves than they did about Northern Ireland.

Buchwald

Seventy-four percent said that if they had to do it all over again they would sleep on the top floor and put their children in the basement with the doors locked and the windows barred.

A majority of Americans reported that what they feared the most was having cold popcorn in the movie theater.

Children said that they feared getting chewing gum on their new sneakers and having to sit next to smelly Josh Workman on the school bus.

There was no agreement on whom people admired the most in sports, although 54 percent of those polled said, "Anyone whose name starts with Bubba."

When the question of guns came up, 87 percent said they would rather have a toy than a gun, but if anyone tried to take the toy away from them they would all want a gun.

When asked "Do you believe that there is only one calorie in Diet Coke?" 90 percent of those interviewed said that they did. Only 23 percent claimed to have actually seen one.

One of the questions asked was, "Do you believe God should be in the classroom?" The majority agreed that He should as long as He didn't raise real estate taxes.

The next question was, "Do you believe in dinosaurs?" To which 67 percent responded, "Only if they don't create traffic gridlock in the streets."

The survey asked people, "What do you like the most about America?" The overwhelming response by 80 percent was the Post Office.

I also posed the question, "Do you think that life is unfair?" Most of the participants said no. One typical respondent said, "Life is fair, cable television rates are unfair."

The question then came up, "Would you want your daughter to marry Howard Stern, the radio commentator?" The majority said no, but one man said, "I thought she had."

My survey also tried to find out if people were fearful of NAFTA. Sixty-nine percent responded that they could live with it as long as its warheads were not planted in the neighborhood.

Television violence was also on the list of things that people were concerned about. One of the main worries was that Oprah Winfrey was going to hit someone over the head when she took her microphone into the audience.

Did people believe that everybody should be politically correct? Most replied no, if it meant paying more for health insurance. One of those questioned said, "The only person I want to see politically correct is Sen. Packwood."

When asked what they would do in the future that they hadn't done in the past, the majority said that they would pick different numbers for their lottery tickets.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Jan. 12, the 12th day of 1994. There are 353 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 12, 1932, Mrs. Hattie W. Caraway became the first woman elected to the United States Senate.

On this date:

In 1519, Holy Roman Emperor Maximilian I died.

In 1773, the first public museum in America was established, in Charleston, S.C.

In 1915, the U.S. House of Representatives rejected a proposal to give women the right to vote.

In 1942, President Roosevelt created the National War Labor Board.

In 1945, aircraft from U.S. Task Force 38 sank about 40 Japanese ships off Indochina.

Clinton may ask for Whitewater counsel

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton said Tuesday he is reevaluating his opposition to having a special prosecutor investigate the Clintons' controversial Arkansas land investment in Whitewater Development Corp.

One administration official said the White House was seriously considering asking Attorney General Janet Reno to appoint a special prosecutor.

"The most important thing to me and the most important thing to the American people is I'm completely relaxed about this because I didn't do anything wrong," Clinton said in an interview with CBS News.

Another administration official said no decisions had been made, but that calling for a special prosecutor appointed by Reno was one option being debated. Both officials spoke on condition of anonymity.

As a growing number of Democrats joined Republicans in calling for appointment of a special counsel, some Clinton advisers believe such a step is the only way to end the political damage, the officials said.

Clinton said he found it "bewildering" that some people were demanding a criminal investigation even though there are no specific allegations of wrongdoing by him or his wife related to their former part ownership of Whitewater at the time he was Arkansas governor.

Clinton, in the Czech Republic to meet with Eastern European leaders as part of his weeklong trip abroad, said in the CBS interview that he found it odd that calls for a special counsel continued even after he turned over his Whitewater records to Justice Department investigators.

"People said, 'That's not enough,' so I think we have to evaluate that and see where we are," Clinton said.

In opposing the appointment of a special prosecutor, the White House had hoped to cast demands for appointing a prosecutor as political attacks from Republicans. But those hopes have been dashed in recent days as a growing number of Democrats urged Reno to name one.

"Whether it is reality or not doesn't matter — the perception is that the White House is withholding information," Democratic Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska said in an interview Tuesday. "This one is not going away so the way to get it off the table is to get someone independent to take a look at it."

Kerrey was at least the fifth Democratic senator in the past three days to suggest an independent investigation, a development that has forced the White House to scramble anew to reassess its strategy.

The White House has steadfastly opposed demands, led by Iowa Republican Rep. James Leach, that Reno name a special counsel to investigate allegations that Clinton improperly benefited from his business partnership with James McDougal, operator of a now-failed savings and loan.

Investigators are trying to determine whether depositors' funds were diverted from Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan to help retire Clinton's 1984 gubernatorial campaign debt, and whether thrift money was improperly deposited in the Whitewater account. McDougal and his wife at the time were partners with the Clintons in Whitewater.

Separately, Republicans complained anew that the Justice Department was dragging its feet in investigating Whitewater and Madison.

Eight GOP lawmakers, including the Senate and House Republican leaders, said in a letter to Reno that the statute of limitations for any civil wrongdoing that could have occurred in Whitewater and Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan would expire as early as this March.

Officials: Panel to probe human radiation tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton will name a civilian panel of scientists to independently review human radiation test data uncovered by a government-wide search and determine whether ethical standards were violated, administration officials said Tuesday.

At the same time, the Energy Department said it had completed telephone interviews with some 4,000 people who have called a department hot line and that about one-fifth had complained of being victims of some radiation experiments.

In all, more than 10,000 callers have gotten through to a bank of 36 operators. About half of them were veterans and were referred to the Department of Veterans Affairs. Thousands more people have been unable to get through, with the hot line receiving as many as 700 calls an hour, department spokesmen said.

The civilian advisory panel, expected to be named later this month, will examine the hundreds of thousands of documents on reported radiation tests conducted on humans during the Cold War. It also may interview some of the victims and in some cases recommend compensation, although a final compensation scheme will have to be approved by Congress, said Energy Department spokesman Michael Gauldin.

"We felt it was important to choose a non-governmental body to make these determinations," Gauldin said.

He said the civilian panel is "going to be given broad range" in analyzing the data once it is assembled. It will also be given wide latitude to judge whether the experiments were within proper ethical bounds — as they existed at the time and by today's standards.

Gauldin emphasized that it would be up to Congress to determine actual compensation.

He said it had not yet been determined who would be on the advisory panel, which will consist of health physicists, experts on radiology, and specialists in medical ethics.

Meanwhile, there are signs that the massive record search and the intense public reaction from thousands of people who claim to have been victims is threatening to overwhelm officials trying to manage the program.

Gauldin said the interagency "working group" formed a week ago to coordinate the search of records in eight agencies and departments is trying to more clearly define exactly what experiments should be included in the sweep for documents and files.

"We're looking for cases in which the government deliberately exposed people to radiation or deliberately released radiation," Gauldin told reporters Tuesday. "We're very concerned about being able to manage this task. It's an immense job."

Gauldin said the search of documents specifically will not include cases of accidental exposure, including some involving accidental releases of radiation at government nuclear weapons plants.

The task force also has not yet clearly determined what medical experiments might be subject to the search. Officials acknowledged, for example, that some radiation experiments conducted on humans were well within medical standards with proper medical goals, and in some cases may have had therapeutic effect.

Gauldin said the records search is intended to "cast a wide net" but that researchers will "specifically look at how the experiments were conducted" and whether there was proper consent.

Judge rules USAir liable in crash that killed 27

CLEVELAND (AP) — USAir was found negligent Tuesday and ordered to pay damages in a 1992 crash that killed 27 people at La-Guardia Airport in New York.

■ More national news/8B

U.S. District Judge Thomas D. Lambros issued the directed verdict after a 1½-month trial of more than 30 separate lawsuits. In doing so, he bypassed jury deliberations on the question of the airline's negligence.

USAir's Flight 405 crashed into Flushing Bay while attempting to take off in a snowstorm, injuring 24 other passengers and crew members.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators said the crash was probably caused by a buildup of ice and snow on the plane's wings.

The judge's action effectively awards compensatory damages to survivors of the crash and the estates of the people who were killed. Dollar amounts of the awards will be decided later.

Lambros told the jury to begin considering possible punitive damages. USAir would be liable for punitive damages if the jury finds that, in addition to being negligent, the airline was wanton and reckless.

Victims' lawyers had argued that USAir chose profits over safety, issuing contradictory guidelines about the amount of ice that could be tolerated on the wings of the Fokker F28-4000 and choosing to use a less-expensive de-icing fluid that lasts only a few minutes.

"I think it's a just ruling," said William Blair, 52, of Canton, who was injured in the crash and walks with a cane. He said he still has nightmares about the accident.

USAir had conceded in its opening arguments Nov. 29 that the crew made mistakes but said they were unintentional.

DAY WATCH

OC registration

ODESSA — Registration for the 1994 spring semester at Odessa College is continuing, with separate registration days set for new and returning students. Registration began Tuesday for new students and will be held Thursday for returning students. Both groups may register from 8 a.m.-7 p.m. in the registrar's office on the second floor of the Student Union Building. All students must provide documentation of Texas residency for the 12 months before enrollment to avoid paying the non-resident tutition rate. All transfer students must furnish an offical transpcript and TASP scores. Classes for the spring semester begin Tuesday. For more information call (915) 335-6433.

Food, clothing drive

The Independent Order of Foresters (IOF) is holding a food-and-clothing drive for the family of Michael Blakemore, whose grandson, Kevin Blakemore, 1, died Friday in a fire that destroyed the family's home. Johnie Lee Qualls, district deputy of IOF, has arranged for boxes to be placed outside Sam's Club in Midland and Odessa for the purpose of donations. The IOF, of which Blakemore is a member, is a non-profit family fraternal organization that aids members who are victims of disasters such as earthquakes, fires or floods.

Coach arrested

ODESSA — A volunteer coach at the Odessa Boy's Club was in jail Tuesday after being arrested on eight counts of indecency with a child, officials said. Officials said they took 26-year-old Thomas Charles Stinson into custody at 12:45 p.m. Monday on indecency charges, four by contact and four by exposure. Bond was set at $20,000 for each charge, officials said. Ector County Sheriff's Investigator Troy Davis said an investigation into Stinson began in October after parents contacted officials concerning their child's allegations of indecency. He said officials interviewed about 15 children between the ages of 9 and 14 and learned that eight had been victims of indecency. Davis said the other children, while not victims, had knowledge of Stinson's conduct.

Train accident

A Washington man was in stable condition at Odessa Medical Center Tuesday following an accident with a train west of Midland. Mark Eugene Burge, 33, apparently jumped off a stationary train and, not seeing an oncoming train, struck the side of the moving train and was dragged about 30 yards, according to a Department of Public Safety official. The accident happened at Coors Road and Highway 80 about 6:35 p.m. Tuesday. Officials said Burge was intoxicated at the time of the accident.

Officials: TU needs increase

■ Officials claim partial denial of rate increase will financially damage company.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

While TU Electric customers may have a refund in their futures, TU officials say a partial denial of the already-instituted 15-percent rate increase will financially damage the company.

Under the rules of the Texas Public Utility Commission, an electric company can raise its rates before PUC approval as long as a bond is maintained to cover necessary refunds in case the rate increase is refused, according to PUC officials.

TU raised its rates by an average of 15.3 percent on Aug. 26., before the protracted PUC approval process. Indications are, however, the PUC may only grant an increase of 8.5 percent, according to TU officials. This increase would provide about $430 million annually to TU. The 15.3 percent increase was expected to provide about $760 million annually.

This possible denial of the total increase came from meetings of the PUC last week. TU officials say the entire rate increase is needed and are presenting data to the PUC to support this claim.

"There won't be anything carved in stone until the end of this month," said Luann Morgan, a Midland TU spokeswoman.

The three-member commission made some decisions last week on the "revenue requirements" phase of the approval process. If these decisions are implemented in the final order, it could have "devastating" effects on TU, said Erle Nye, TU chairman.

A final order from the commission is expected on Jan. 26.

1 defendant pleads guilty; jurors hear victims' testimony

■ Judge expects telemarketing-scheme trial to end sometime today.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Day two of a telemarketing-scheme trial ended with the alleged ringleader of the operation reprimanded by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton for his "disruptive" behavior in the courtroom.

Three men and three women began the trial Monday with one defendant withdrawing from the trial during the lunch recess to enter a guilty plea. John Broussard pleaded guilty to mail fraud.

The alleged head of the telemarketing scheme, Norris Louis McGraw, arrived at court 10 minutes after the hearings were to begin Tuesday.

Throughout the day he mumbled responses to questions and made remarks like "Damn right" and "That's a lie" throughout the testimony.

After the jury was dismissed for the evening, Bunton told McGraw "it doesn't help for the jury to see" him behaving in that manner. The judge threatened to put McGraw in the back of the courtroom if he did not respond appropriately.

Other defendants on trial are Paula Sneed, Glenda Prudhome, Sharon Ann Polley and Patrick Johnson.

The defendants are charged with conspiracy, mail fraud, wire fraud and money laundering. McGraw was also indicted on five additional counts of mail fraud. All the defendants have been free on bond.

Testimony for the day began with a number of victims, some elderly and disabled and some young and healthy.

Each story varied to some degree, but for the most part it was all the same story again and again.

Many of the victims identified the caller from Century Premier Associates (CPA) — the company alleged to be fraudulent in its claims to deliver prizes for fees — as "Mr. Keys."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jan Bonner entered evidence Monday that identified McGraw as using the alias of Mr. Keys when he made the telephone solicitations.

Each victim reported sending in as

Baptist blasts Clinton's condom-ad campaign

FORT WORTH (AP) — Saying chastity should win out over condoms, the Southern Baptist Convention's president has criticized a safe-sex ad campaign launched by the Clinton administration.

The new campaign, which urges condom use to prevent AIDS and unwanted pregnancies, misses the point that people should refrain from sex outside of marriage because it is morally wrong, the Rev. H. Edwin Young said Monday.

Young also was critical of Clinton's lifestyle in a sermon to more than 9,000 people attending the Texas Baptist Evangelism Conference's opening night.

Clinton, who is a Southern Baptist, separates his religious faith from the rest of his life, said Young, pastor of the 21,000-member Second Baptist Church of Houston.

"God has not abandoned the moral absolutes of his holy word, the Bible," Young said. "America has gotten the idea that salvation is going to come by slogan. If you want to shoot up, use clean needles. If you want to have sex anywhere, any time, with whomever, use condoms.

"The answer is 'No,' not because you might end up in jail or you might end up in an AIDS ward, but because it is wrong," he said.

Young said studies show that condom use does not result in truly "safe sex" and that abstinence is the only solution.

"We are promoting abstinence. But we are also aware of reality," said Avis LaVelle, spokeswoman for Dr. Donna E. Shalala, U.S. secretary of health and human services.

"The reality is that a substantial number of adults are having unprotected sex. If they do fail to abstain, we are encouraging them to act responsibly to protect themselves and others," she said.

The Baptist convention, the biggest U.S. Protestant group, has started a "True Love Waits" program urging thousands of teen-agers to sign pledge cards promising to be sexually pure before marriage.

"We are in favor of that," Ms. LaVelle said in Washington. "But as public health educators, we have a responsibility to acknowledge that not all young people are."

A record-setting $82,500 was donated to 4-H Club and FFA members who exhibited their steers, swine, lambs, rabbits and chickens in the 1994 Midland County Livestock Show.

The grand-champion steer, a 1,230-pound Shorthorn named Stormy, brought its 12-year-old exhibitor, Brody Blissard, $7,200. The bid set an all-time steer record in the history of the Midland County Livestock Show.

"I thought I was pretty lucky," said Brody, who said he plans to "buy more babies (calves)" with the money in order to raise more show steers.

"We just worked hard," he said.

"We felt real good about it (the championship)," said Brody's father, Mike Blissard, who as a youth showed livestock projects as a 4-H Club member in Glasscock County.

The steer, which was produced by Robinson Show Steers in Clarendon, was "real squared-butted, post legged, and had an abundance of top (muscling)," Brody's father said of the judge's comments.

Brody and his father are to take Stormy to major livestock shows in Fort Worth and Houston. The top prize in Houston for a grand-champion steer is limited to $50,000, Blissard said.

Any money bid beyond that is converted into college scholarship funds. Bids in the Houston livestock show have exceeded a quarter of a million dollars on a sole steer.

Before 1989, money bids bought the animals, which were then possibly returned to the exhib-

Monks to take stage to raise funds for monastery, refugees

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

ODESSA — East will meet West when nine Tibetan monks — dressed in the rich brocades of their native costumes and playing 12-foot-long longhorns — are to perform for the benefit of Tibetan refugees.

The monks will take the stage at 7:30 p.m. on Jan. 19 at Bonham Junior High School, 2201 E. 21st St. The troop will also use cymbals, bells and small hand drums to perform dances and chants.

The monks, from South India's Ganden Jangtse Monastery, are trying to raise money for their monastery that aids the large number of refugees who are fleeing Tibet and arriving at the monasteries in South India.

Continental to discontinue flights from Midland's airport to Denver

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Continental Airlines' service to Denver from the Midland International Airport will be discontinued after Feb. 1, but the smaller United Express airline will maintain its Midland to Denver service.

The Midland to Denver route was part of the airline's turboprop, or non-jet service, said a Continental spokeswoman. Continental is closing its non-jet service out of Lubbock. This affects flights between Denver and Midland, Denver and Lubbock and from Midland to Lubbock, the spokeswoman said.

Turboprop service between Denver and Wichita, Kan., will be discontinued as well, she said.

Although this move splits Midland out of Continental's Denver service, Midland residents will have similar non-jet service through United Express. Currently there are two Continental itors. Total bidding was into the $90,000s in the early 1980s during Midland's most recent oil boom and peaked out at $111,000 in 1985, as the boom was waning.

SHOW: Children collect record amount for livestock

But even before 1989, the top bids on the grand champion steer never approached $7,200.

Donating the $7,200 to Brody Blissard was Crouch Well Service, National Ag Underwriters, and Smith Bros. Pipe.

"He gets to take home his premium (money) and the animal," noted Eileen Welch, secretary-treasurer of the 42nd annual show sponsored by the Midland County Livestock Association.

Kacey James's reserve-champion steer grossed her $5,175 from Agri-Empresa, Midland American Bank, Phillips Casing, Industrial Oils, National Ag Underwriters, Tom Brown Inc., and Pride Petroleum.

Andy Watzl, who showed both the grand-champion swine and the reserve-champion swine, received $1,825 from Lone Star Abstract. The grand champion won $900, and the reserve, $925.

Sallie Farrow earned $1,050 for her grand-champion lamb. Top bidder was Community National Bank.

Tasha Finley's reserve-champion lamb brought her $950 from Holt Cowden, Midland 66 Oil Co., Charles Ray, Birkhead Feed Store & Purina Mills.

Christy Lavine was awarded $600 by Badgett Construction Co. and Commercial Electronics for her grand-champion rabbits.

Jamie Moore realized $300 for the grand-champion chickens. Top bidder was Edwards Feed Store.

Jeff Butler, who showed the reserve-champion chickens, won $400. Bidder was Badgett Construction Co.

Charlie Green, president of the Midland County Livestock Show, said the premium show animals were, "from front to rear, top to bottom, as good as I've seen in a long time."

However, Green said it is the youthful exhibitors who are important.

"The animal is just a vehicle to help make useful citizens out of those boys and girls" through the discipline, dedication, management, and work in raising and caring for livestock.

"In the end analysis, it stimulates the kids to seek improvements of themselves through education or whatever" and "to set high goals in whatever career they choose."

In the show's premium sale:

- 18 steers grossed $27,325;
- 51 lambs grossed $24,925;
- 63 swine grossed $28,675;
- two pens of rabbits grossed $875; and
- two pen of chickens grossed $700.

The $82,500 was approximately $16,000 more than last year's final biddings.

The exhibitors, bids and bidders are as follows:

PERFORM: Monks to take stage

(From 1B)

will provide food, shelter and medication for persons arriving at the monasteries. The monks said no one seeking asylum will be turned away from the monasteries.

"This performance will offer a rare opportunity for West Texans to get a glimpse of a centuries-old ceremony," said Odessan Donna Marrs, one of the troupe's sponsors.

"The performance will demonstrate some of the monks' colorful culture and spiritual traditions."

The performance is part of the monks' yearlong Premiere North American Tour. Wearing the classic crested yellow hats and maroon-and-saffron-colored robes, or brocade costumes, the monks perform under the supervision of a chant master and a dance master.

There are four dances included within the performance: the Dance of the Sky-Walkers, Dance of the Lords of Death, the Black Hat Dance and the Dance of the Palden Lhamo and Her Two Attendants. The chants finish with a prayer for peace.

According to information from the monks, a Tibetologist said "To truly appreciate this unusual form of music, the observer must suspend the imagination and open the mind to the rarified levels of emotion and consciousness embodied by the structure of mystical sound."

The traditional culture of Tibet is largely religious in nature, according to information from the monks.

The Ganden Jangtse Monastery, established in 1969, houses 800 Buddhist monks. The original Ganden monastery was established in Tibet in 1409. At that time, it was the second largest monastery in the capital of Lhasa. When the Chinese army invaded Tibet in 1959, the monastery was destroyed.

"Despite oppression in their native Tibet, and 30 years of military occupation by the Chinese communists, the strong desire for freedom and identity remains alive and a culture struggles to remain viable through non-violent means," Ms. Marrs said. "This tour will demonstrate some of the many facets of the monks' deeply devoted spiritual traditions."

The event is being sponsored by several Odessans.

The performance will include two 45-minute sessions with a 15-20 minute intermission.

Admission is $8 for adults and $3 for students or senior citizens.

FLY: Airline to stop Denver service

flights to Denver and two United Express flights to Denver each day, said Carroll Thomas of the Midland airport's Business Development office.

When the Continental flights disappear, United Express may add another Denver flight. "There is a good possibility of a third flight," Thomas said. This will include one non-stop flight to Denver that takes two hours, he said. United Express had three daily flights to Denver but cut back when Continental began its turboprop service.

Thomas and other airport officials are working with Continental to rearrange its Midland to Houston flights, changing the 6 a.m. flight to Houston to 8 p.m. "To make it a little more convenient," Thomas said. Changes may be made on the Houston end to provide more destinations for Midlanders.

Flights routed through Houston to locations like New York and Chicago are usually faster than those routed through Dallas, Thomas explained. The time savings comes from shorter layovers at the Houston terminal. Continental has three non-stop, round trip flights daily from Midland to Houston, he said.

United Express uses 30-seat Embraer Brasilia aircraft in its service, Thomas said. Although smaller than the 42-passenger Continental airplanes, air speeds are comparable between the two craft.

Mesa Airlines of Farmington, N.M., operates three United Express operations across the United States, including Denver. The airline only flies to Denver from Midland.

Re-enactment of World War II angers senator

AUSTIN (AP) — A state senator Tuesday said a battle re-enactment that he contends "celebrated" Nazi Germany was conducted in November at Camp Mabry, headquarters for the Texas National Guard.

Sen. Jeff Wentworth, R-San Antonio, said the exhibition was inappropriate and insulting.

He called for Gov. Ann Richards to investigate and said Gen. Sam Turk, commander of the guard, should be fired if he knew about it.

But guard officials said the re-enactment celebrates the U.S. victory in World War II and in no way glorifies Nazis.

"The allies always win," said Col. Ed Komandosky, guard spokesman. He said the re-enactment is a traditional part of Muster Day, an annual event to honor U.S. veterans that is free of charge and open to the public.

David W. Davis, president of the Texas Military Historical Society, which re-enacts the battle, called Wentworth's accusation "scurrilous lies."

"The Nazis were absolute evil," said Davis, an Army veteran who won the Bronze Star for valor in the Persian Gulf War. "The American veterans who are honored at Camp Mabry are being honored for defeating absolute evil."

He said it would be impossible to stage a World War II battle without having some members of the group portraying Nazis.

"The Germans always lose and are crushed. You've got to have bad guys if you have good guys," Davis said.

Wentworth distributed photos of men in Nazi uniforms that he said were taken at the re-enactment. "There is no legitimate use of state funds, state property or certainly American military facilities to celebrate Nazi or neo-Nazi demonstrations of any type," he wrote Richards.

Richards spokeswoman Leticia Vasquez said she checked into Wentworth's complaint and said that the senator did not have all the facts.

"You do have people dressing up in the military uniforms of the Axis powers and the Allied countries. Nothing bad is happening, and the good guys always win," she said.

Davis said the background of each member of his 149-person group is checked to make sure that no one involved in a neo-Nazi group has joined.

He said the group's aim is to educate the public about World War II.

"There was nothing more evil or more sinister than what occurred in Germany between the years 1933 and 1945," he said.

But Wentworth said he found the portrayal of Nazis in the re-enactment was offensive.

Hutchison's trial to be in Fort Worth

AUSTIN (AP) — A judge Tuesday ordered that U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison's trial on felony ethics charges be held in Fort Worth, but a date has not been set.

"We're confident the senator can get a fair trial in Tarrant County," said David Beckwith, a spokesman for Mrs. Hutchison.

Judge John F. Onion Jr., who will preside over the trial, said neither the state nor Mrs. Hutchison could get a fair trial in Austin because of publicity surrounding the case.

Onion, former presiding judge of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, has not indicated when he would set a date for the trial.

Mrs. Hutchison's attorneys say they want to start the trial immediately, while prosecutors have asked for 45 days to prepare.

Mrs. Hutchison, a Republican, faces charges that she used her previous office as state treasurer for personal and political gain, then altered records to coverup her activities.

She has denied any wrongdoing and claims the charges are part of a Democratic plot to hurt her election campaign. Mrs. Hutchison, 50, became the first woman senator from Texas by winning a special election June 5. She now seeks election in 1994 to a full six-year term.

Mrs. Hutchison faces two counts of official misconduct, tampering with a government record and tampering with evidence. If she is tried on all the counts at the same time and convicted, she would face a maximum of 20 years in prison.

Also Tuesday, a Travis County grand jury re-indicted Mrs. Hutchison on a misdemeanor charge of official misconduct.

The charge alleges Mrs. Hutchison violated the state appropriations act by using state funds to operate office equipment and pay salaries to employees for the purpose of raising campaign funds when she was a senate candidate. It carries a maximum punishment of one year in jail.

Earlier versions of the misdemeanor indictment had been rejected by Onion after he said the charge didn't specify what office she was running for.

Mrs. Hutchison's attorneys will file a motion to suppress the latest indictment, Beckwith said.

"By introducing these new elements it will force more hearings," he said. "That's their (prosecutors') game plan. Delay judgment in this case as long as possible, keep the cloud over Kay Bailey Hutchison's head."

Travis County First Assistant District Attorney Steve McCleery declined to comment on why the charge was pursued. During a pretrial hearing, he said the indictment was important because it dealt with what an elected official can and cannot do with tax dollars.

In addition, the grand jury re-indicted Mrs. Hutchison on other charges instead of having prosecutors rewriting the earlier indictments to comply with orders from Onion.

Cultists' attorney predicts self-defense to be motive

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A jury was seated to hear the murder trial of 11 Branch Davidians Tuesday, less than two days after the selection process began under heavy security and controversial orders that closed the proceedings to much of the news media.

As the pool of potential jurors was whittled down, the attorney for two of the accused cult members predicted the panel will be permitted to consider the motive of self-defense.

The legal question has popped up repeatedly in discussions between U.S. District Judge Walter Smith and defense attorneys in pre-trial hearings and in two days of jury selection.

"If the evidence raises self-defense, he (Smith) will instruct the jury," said defense attorney Rocket Rosen. "We feel the evidence will be raised."

Attorneys in the case have said little publicly about the anticipated evidence because of strict orders from Smith not to do so.

Lawyers for the 11 Branch Davidians on trial are expected to claim the followers of doomsday prophet David Koresh were defending themselves against an ill-conceived, bungled government raid when the killings occurred Feb. 28, 1993.

Four agents of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were killed and 16 were wounded in a gun battle that day at the Branch Davidian compound near Waco. Six Branch Davidians are believed to had died in the shootout.

Koresh and some 80 followers died amidst a huge fire that engulfed the group's compound 51 days later, ending an armed standoff that followed the gun battle.

The defendants are accused of murder and conspiracy to murder the agents. They could face up to life in prison if convicted. Some defendants also are charged with illegal weapons possession.

Court records indicate prosecutors have more than 22,000 pounds of guns and ammunition as evidence.

By early afternoon Tuesday, Smith had qualified 43 potential jurors from which a 12-person jury and six alternates would be chosen for the trial. The final panel was sworn in shortly after 3 p.m.

Meanwhile, The Dallas Morning News on Tuesday legally challenged the judge's decision to keep most of the press and the public from the courtroom during juror questioning.

"The public and the press have a constitutional right of access to the voir dire (jury selection) examination of potential jurors in a criminal trial," the newspaper's motion said.

Rosen, who represents defendants Livingston Fagan and Kevin Whitecliff, told reporters he does not believe the jury will be influenced by news media reports on the Waco catastrophe.

"I hate to say it, treat it like you're a virgin. You walk in there like you came from the moon," Rosen said. "I know it's difficult to do."

Rosen also said he isn't worried about the sizable number of prospective jurors who don't believe private citizens should possess handguns. Smith has told potential jurors there likely "will be evidence that there were a lot of firearms involved."

"People are in fear every day, especially of juveniles carrying handguns and knives," Rosen said. "I hope it's not going to be a spillover (of bias against the defendants). I don't think it will be a spillover."

Smith, absent his black judge's robe for a second day, questioned potential jurors individually Tuesday about firearms possession, their religious beliefs and their work and family backgrounds.

SCHEME: Judge expects telemarketing trial to end today little as $300 or as much as $2,500 in order to claim his or her cash prize. No one received anything from CPA. Some of the witnesses did not lose their "tax" money because of FBI intervention in the case. Some of the checks and money orders were intercepted and held by the agents.

The victims traveled from as far away as Washington and Florida to testify. One woman, a San Francisco teamster, identified McGraw's voice from a tape recording as the voice of the man who persuaded her to send $602 for a $10,000 cash prize she never won.

Lillian Weisser, a senior citizen from Forest Hill, Calif., responded to a defense attorney's question asking if she thought she was gullible. "I guess I certainly must have been, but he was silver-tongued."

Another woman, Gwyn Holley of Florida told the jury the thought of sending $498 for gift taxes to claim a $12,000 prize sounded "logical" to her. She was so excited about her prize, she wrote a note to accompany her check. The note read: "At last, I'm a winner."

Fortunately, the FBI had already started their investigation of CPA by that time and her money order was never deposited. She didn't know she still had the money until Monday.

Robit Sheth, a California computer-system engineer, told the CPA caller to put her offer in writing and then he would send his money in. He never received a response and he never sent any money.

A crippled man wheeled in to testify that he sent in $798 to claim a Jeep and a fur coat. He never received either.

Several of the witnesses testified to the names the CPA representatives gave on the phone. Several of those names matched with several of the defendants' known aliases, which were presented into evidence Monday from information seized at the CPA offices during the execution of a search warrant.

One elderly woman said she spoke with four different telemarketers and felt the only way she could get them to leave her alone was to send the $2,500 cashier's check requested for the car she supposedly won.

When asked if she ever received a car she laughed and replied, "Not from them."

One retiree from Virginia said he called the Better Business Bureau and the governor's office after he was told to send $3,217 to collect a $37,000 prize he reportedly won.

Walter Berthelson of Bakersfield, Calif., a retiree with heart problems, testified he sent $3,217 for a $38,000 prize he never received.

Various officials testified to bank records of accounts for CPA and a Las Vegas, Nev., man testified to actually selling three mink coats and three water filters to McGraw as prizes for CPA.

Peter Linder, an FBI agent from Washington, D.C., testified as a handwriting expert that samples from Ms. Polley verified she wrote a document at CPA.

A Midland Better Business Bureau representative told the jury she had a list of 30 inquiries about CPA, which was instructing its "customers" to send their money to either a Midland or a Houston address.

Also testifying were several telemarketers from CPA who have already pleaded guilty to related charges. The telemarketers said McGraw was the manager of the office and the apparent boss. Each witness also told the jury which defendants they knew and if they saw or heard them making CPA calls.

George Nyateng, who has already pleaded guilty to conspiracy and been sentenced to 30 months in prison and ordered to pay restitution, testified he never made any sales for CPA, but knew of the scheme.

He said the money from the sales went to Midland, where a man named Joe David — who has also pleaded guilty and been sentenced — would pick up the money, take his cut and send it on to Houston for McGraw.

Nyateng said the money was filtered through his telemarketing company, Bemer Enterprises, with funds taken out to pay bills; then the money went to McGraw.

He said McGraw told him David was the boss of the operation, but Nyateng said he believed McGraw was the head of it. Nyateng admitted creating false receipts for purchases not made and listed the names of telemarketers who worked for CPA.

Nyateng denied receiving any money from CPA; he said the money went to the business. However, when David testified, he indicated Nyateng did get a percentage of the CPA funds.

David said he would pick up the payments from customers made in Midland, deposit them in a bank account then send the money on to Nyateng and McGraw in Houston, after taking a 5 percent cut for his "services."

David, who owns a Midland motel, admitted setting up a checking account and filing documentation with the county for "doing business as" CPA. David said CPA was McGraw's idea and he assumed the customers would actually receive the prizes promised to them.

He said he loaned about $10,000 to McGraw to set up a telemarketing business called Gulf Coast Network. He said he was repaid and did not have any kind of interest in CPA.

According to CPA banking records for the Midland bank account, more than $69,000 went through the account. David said he took about $7,000 and sent all the rest to McGraw and Nyateng.

When pressed about having receipts for sending the money, David could not produce any documentation to prove he sent the money to McGraw or Nyateng.

McGraw's attorney, Gerald Lopez, asked David if he didn't keep all the money for himself. David denied it.

Renee Adewola, who had worked for CPA picking up overnight delivery packages in Houston, said she knew CPA was promising prizes to customers but not delivering. She also testified to hearing the defendants make CPA calls and sales.

Iris Davis, who worked for two days at CPA, pleaded guilty Monday to related charges. She testified to making two sales, but received no commission for them.

After cross-examination from one of the defense attorneys, Ms. Davis said she, Johnson and Ms. Sneed all decided to quit at the same time after discussing the CPA situation during a lunch break.

When asked why she didn't feel comfortable at CPA, Ms. Davis said the doors were locked during business hours and she was told cash was tight.

"If they couldn't pay me, how could they be giving out prizes?" Ms. Davis said.

The prosecution is expected to close today. The judge said he expects the trial to end sometime today.

RATE: Partial denial of increase would damage TU, officials say

(From 1B)

As a result of these tentative PUC decisions, TU stock fell $3 a share, the largest drop in recent history, according to Ms. Morgan.

"It is absolutely essential that the commissioners consider the impact of their decisions on the company's financial integrity," Nye said.

TU has been told that its charitable donations are not part of the cost of doing business. These donations cannot be passed to the rate payers, according to the PUC.

"When you consider the negligible expense to each rate payer, and the substantial difference the contribution makes collectively, it is easy to see that the public well-being is served by this process," said Earl Herring, chairman of the United Way of Texas. The United Way has been a recipient of millions of dollars in TU donations over the years, Ms. Morgan said.

In the past, TU passed this expense — about 33 cents per $100 payment — to its rate payers.

TU has been reeling under the expense of new accounting regulations regarding retirements and increasing school taxes, Ms. Morgan said. "This has really hit us hard," she said.

The final outcome of the approval process is unknown, according to a PUC spokesman. When the final decision is made at the end of the month, TU will know how it will be affected financially.

When and if TU customers receive refunds hinges on the PUC final order. If the 8.5 percent increase is all the PUC allows, the average residential customer should receive between $4 and $5 for every month since Aug. 26.

The Problem: Small red blood vessels on the nose & cheeks
The Solution: Laser Surgery
Laser surgery can be an effective way to remove small varicosities (veins) on the nose & cheeks. These veins occur as a result of sun damage and other factors. Laser surgery offers a superior way to remove these with little to no evidence of surgery. No down time, fast healing, and excellent results are common.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will be able to do lots of things that seemed impossible in 1993. Be open to new experiences. Early spring brings a business boom. Developing better public relations will help you promote your ideas. A personal relationship that flowers in early summer could transform your entire life. Important career changes are featured next Sept.; be ready for a faster pace at work.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Kirstie Alley, author Jack London, country singer Ray Price, basketball's Dominique Wilkins.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Seize an opportunity to improve your position at work. An important domestic decision may have to wait a bit longer. Be tactful when trying to persuade people to do your bidding.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel plans get the green light. It pays to be flexible when making airline reservations. A temporary cash shortage may lead you to draw on your reserves. Curb an urge to splurge tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Go back to some old creative ideas and revive them; they could prove very profitable. You may want more independence in your private life. Stay in shape and you will feel better.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Being more realistic about your goals will put a relationship in the proper perspective. Long-range career plans enjoy highly favorable influences. Look to a role model for inspiration.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Exceptional mental rapport will cement affectional ties. Your creative ideas make people sit up and take notice. Do not be afraid of change; it keeps things fresh and exciting! Confide in partner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pace yourself and you will have enough energy to take care of all your projects. Be inventive when doing promotional work. Submit a manuscript for publication and see what happens. Banish self-doubts!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Mingling with the right people will open up important doors. It is all right to be a bit unpredictable in romance. Beautifying your work environment will boost everyone's spirits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put on your thinking cap and you will come up with a lasting solution to a recurring problem. Your wit and wisdom are greatly admired by young people. Set a good example.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A heavy workload could leave you weary. Take a five-minute break now and then. Your strong desire to do what is right serves you well. Keeping a secret is easier than expected.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not let vague fears lead to inactivity. Keep your eyes on the prize and you will reach a coveted goal. Good advice is worth its weight in gold. Be open to suggestions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A loved one may seem distant. Do not let this person's lack of enthusiasm throw you off-course. Your professional ship is very much afloat as you steer towards success and prestige!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An authority figure could test your patience now. Stay calm in the face of a delay. Use of outside talent or resources will set things right. Balance your checkbook and limit spending.

Opening lead: Six of ♠

The Lederer Memorial Trophy, one of England's premier team events, was won last year by a powerful squad representing the South of England. Perfect defense on this deal helped them along the way.

South took advantage of the vulnerability to preempt with four diamonds. West's double was "negative," a takeout for the unbid suits and East converted it to penalties by passing.

At the other table East-West played in three no trump and scraped home with exactly nine tricks. To win the board, the South of England East-West pair had to defeat four diamonds by four tricks to collect 800. Can you spot which card proved pivotal to the defense?

East won the first trick with the king of spades and shifted to the five of hearts. Declarer's king lost to the ace. Appreciating the importance of the seven of diamonds, West set about a trump promotion.

The first stage was to cash the ace of clubs before reverting to spades. With no more tricks coming from clubs or hearts, East followed instructions by continuing spades after winning the ace. Declarer ruffed high, then crossed to the king of clubs to lead a trump from dummy. East, however, was fully attuned to partner's plan and shot up with the king of trumps to lead another spade. Again declarer had to ruff high to shut out West's seven of trumps, and now East had to score two more trump tricks with the A 9 no matter how declarer continued. That gave the defenders two spades, one heart, one club and three trumps—just enough.

Glenn Close, Julia Roberts top Blackwell's worst-dressed list

LOS ANGELES — Glenn Close's look has her on "Nightmare Alley" and Rosie Perez is "a fanny-flaunting fiasco." In Mr. Blackwell's world, that is.

Blackwell's latest fashion tongue-lashing was released Tuesday, with Miss Close on top of his annual worst-dressed women list.

"Forget 'Sunset Boulevard,' Glenn's taken a detour down 'Nightmare Alley,'" said Blackwell, referring to her starring stint in the musical.

Next up was Julia Roberts. Blackwell called Lyle Lovett's new wife a "barefoot bride" who told fashion to "shove it."

Ranked third by the former actor and fashion designer was Diana Ross. Blackwell compared her to "a Martian meter maid — starring in a cancan revue."

Miss Ross was followed by Rosie Perez ("a fanny-flaunting fiasco"); Susan Sarandon ("peekaboo Sue"); LaToya Jackson ("a tacky tragedy"); Holly Hunter ("frumpy, dumpy . . ."); Rosie O'Donnell ("a fashion strikeout"); Tanya Tucker ("a tornado — trapped in a truck stop!"); and Daryl Hannah ("a dowdy dishrag").

LONDON — The Duchess of Kent, one of the most popular members of the royal family, is leaving the Church of England to become a Roman Catholic.

The Duchess of Kent is leaving the Church of England.

British law forbids the monarch — the head of the Church of England — from being a Catholic or marrying a Catholic, but the decision announced by the duchess Tuesday raised no legal or constitutional issue.

The two archbishops of the Church of England, Archbishop of Canterbury George Carey and Archbishop of York John Habgood, said in a joint statement that they wished the duchess well as "a devout Christian on a spiritual journey."

Her husband, the Duke of Kent, a cousin of Queen Elizabeth II, retains his position as 18th in succession to the throne, because she was an Anglican when they married in 1961.

ATLANTA — Timothy Dalton admits he could fail as Rhett Butler. That's what he likes about the role.

"I've always liked challenges," he said from London as filming got under way this week on the TV miniseries "Scarlett," the sequel to "Gone With the Wind."

"Why drive a car fast? Why climb a mountain? Why take on a role that's challenging? It's because you can fail," Dalton said. "If we fail, we fail. But we're not going to."

Dalton, a former James Bond, plays Butler to Joanne Whalley-Kilmer's Scarlett O'Hara. The eight-hour miniseries will be broadcast on CBS in November, 55 years after the release of the 1939 classic "Gone With the Wind," starring Clark Gable and Vivien Leigh.

The miniseries is based on the 1991 Alexandra Ripley novel that picked up where Margaret Mitchell's 1936 book left off.

BOSTON — New Kids on the Block isn't so new anymore.

The pop singing sensations who virtually disappeared a while back amid lip-syncing allegations range in age from 21 to 24. Two have kids of their own.

NKOTB, as they prefer to be called now, is trying to get back on track with a new album. They're exercising more control, in part by taking on more financial risk.

"When we were at our highest point, it was so hard to have control because it was just too fast and everybody had a hand in the machine," said New Kid Donnie Wahlberg.

The album, "Face the Music," is scheduled for release this month. The group is touring Europe, starting this week.

VIENNA, W.Va. — If you complain to Janet Reno, be prepared for a rebuttal.

Vienna Mayor William Owens wrote to the attorney general after she said she sympathized with the "plight" of FBI workers whose jobs are being moved from Washington, D.C., to Clarksburg.

"I took exception to her use of the word 'plight.' It's an opportunity as far as I'm concerned," said Owens, whose town is 64 miles from Clarksburg.

On Thursday, Reno called Owens and "dressed me down a little."

"If you lived there (in West Virginia) 37 years and you had a job there and you were told you had to move to Washington, D.C., or lose your job if you didn't want to move to Washington, D.C., I'd sympathize with your point, too," Reno told Owens, who recorded the conversation.

Talk radio, hardly the most mellow of media, is about to become a bit more edgy. Edmund G. Brown Jr., the former California governor, sometime presidential candidate and longtime gadfly, will soon jangle the airwaves with his own nationally syndicated radio show.

Health leaders seek higher taxes, more restrictions on smoking

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health leaders and seven past surgeons general called on the government Tuesday to tax cigarettes $2 more a pack, ban smoking in public places, restrict tobacco ads and fully regulate cigarettes in an effort to make America smoke free by the year 2000.

"This nation remains in tobacco's death grip" three decades after first being told cigarettes cause cancer, Dr. Alfred Munzer, president of the American Lung Association, said as the group sought President Clinton's endorsement of their plans.

Health groups marked the 30th anniversary of the original surgeon general's report on tobacco by scolding Congress and presidents alike for their past efforts to restrict a habit still blamed for 420,000 deaths a year.

Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders said 2 million lives have been saved since her predecessor, the late Dr. Luther Terry, first warned Americans on Jan. 11, 1964, that smoking caused cancer.

Two million people also have died of smoking-related lung cancers alone in that period. But back then, more than two in every five adults smoked. Today only one in four is a smoker.

Terry's crusade led to warning labels on cigarette packs. Cigarette ads were banished from the airwaves, airlines created nosmoking sections and eventually smoking was banned on most domestic flights and in many offices.

But former Bush administration Surgeon General Antonia Novello said tobacco is still "the least regulated consumer product" in the United States and is marketed "with reckless abandon" at the young by companies that need to replace smokers who die and the 1 million who kick the habit each year.

Former President Jimmy Carter sent Clinton a letter urging him to stand u" to tobacco interests and seek a $2 tax increase on each pack of cigarettes. Clinton has already proposed a 75-cent hike to pay for health reforms. Congress has to approve any change.

The seven past surgeons general, going back to the Eisenhower years, said the country won't become smoke free by the year 2000 if the tobacco industry keeps its "strangle hold over the Congress and the administration."

They urged Clinton "to speak forcefully in favor of regulation of tobacco products," including tighter controls on advertising and bans on smoking in federal buildings and other public places. They also advocated full authority for the Food and Drug Administration to regulate cigarettes.

Thomas Lauria, spokesman for the Tobacco Institute, said tobacco is stringently regulated "from seedbed to sales counter." He claimed the critics really want prohibition of cigarettes.

The fact that smoking remains legal in every country "only indicates that there is a natural human market for this product," added Lauria, a nonsmoker. "Some folks like smoking."

The Coalition on Smoking or Health — founded by the American Lung Association, the American Heart Association and the American Cancer Society — handed out a 30-year report card filled with Ds and Fs for Congress, the White House and most of the executive branch.

Their highest mark, a B-plus, went to the Environmental Protection Agency, which last January branded secondhand smoke as cancer-causing and blamed it for 3,000 lung cancer deaths a year among nonsmokers.

One of the Fs went to the Federal Trade Commission. American Heart Association Vice President Scott D. Ballin said the FTC lets cigarette makers "promote smoking as something that is sexually attractive, sophisticated, healthy and makes us physically fit, cool and successful."

Novello, who battled the makers of Camel over promotions with its "Old Joe" cartoon character, said, "We must not fool ourselves into thinking we have won the war against tobacco."

Officials: White House selects new head for DEA

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton is expected to tap New York State Police Superintendent Thomas Constantine — whose force has been rocked by an evidence-tampering scandal — to become the new head of the Drug Enforcement Administration, administration officials said Tuesday.

The 1½-year probe of wrongdoing by state police investigators has already led to the overturning of two convictions and authorities believe dozens more may eventually be overturned. The evidence-tampering took place in cases involving murder, armed robbery, drug and weapons possession, and carjacking.

If confirmed by the Senate, Constantine would take over a 3,500-agent organization that has a presence in 53 countries worldwide, including agents in all 50 states. He would succeed former U.S. District Judge Robert Bonner, who left the administrator's job last Oct. 29 to join a private law firm. Bonner was appointed by President Bush.

Two administration officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they expected the nomination to be announced by the end of the week.

The 55-year-old Buffalo, N.Y., native is a 32-year veteran of the state police force.

Constantine did not immediately return a call to police headquarters in Albany, N.Y., late Tuesday.

His department's scandal became public with the July 1992 arrest of Investigator David L. Harding, a seven-year veteran based at Troop C that covers seven counties in upstate New York.

"There has been a fundamental unraveling of the basic trust that everybody in the system relied upon," Nelson Roth, a special prosecutor appointed by Gov. Mario Cuomo to investigate the situation, said last March.

Constantine has said the evidence tampering was the worst case of trooper misconduct that he has ever seen, adding, "If I live to be a thousand, I'll never understand how police officers can violate the law."

He conceded last June that the scandal — featured on "60 Minutes" — had hurt the reputation of the 4,000-officer force, but said applicants were still "knocking down the doors to get in."

At least three troopers have been imprisoned, while three others face such charges as perjury, evidence tampering and official misconduct.

The problem came to official attention, ironically, when Harding applied to the CIA for a job in 1991 and bragged during a lie-detector test about faking evidence.

Court rules Citadel must allow woman to enroll

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — The Citadel's eleventh-hour request that it not be forced to grant admission to a woman was turned down by an appeals court.

Shannon Faulkner, 18, plans to register, pay her $1,193.50 in fees and meet with her academic adviser at the military school today.

On Tuesday, the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals refused, 2-1, to keep Ms. Faulkner out until The Citadel could appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. The appeals court already had refused to overturn a lower court's order allowing Ms. Faulkner to attend classes at the 152-year-old school.

School attorney Dawes Cooke said he would ask the Supreme Court for a stay today. It is possible the justices could rule the same day but not before Ms. Faulkner registers, he said.

The Citadel and Virginia Military Institute are the only two all-male, state-supported military colleges in the nation. Admissions policies at both are the target of federal court lawsuits.

A total of 1,649 women take evening classes at The Citadel, but day classes are limited to the 1,964 male cadets.

Under the lower court order, Ms. Faulkner may attend Citadel day classes with the cadets while her lawsuit challenging the school's admissions policy is pending in U.S. District Court. However, she won't be a cadet and won't march, eat or live with cadets.

The school accepted her application after she deleted any reference to gender on her high school transcript.

Ms. Faulkner's mother, Sandy, said the family was pleased with Tuesday's ruling.

"We're very excited. It's uplifting news in the middle of packing," she said from her home in Powdersville.

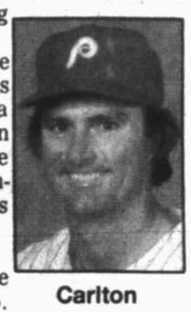
Carlton awaits voting

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK — When the Hall of Fame voting is announced today, Steve Carlton will be in the air. Orlando Cepeda will be waiting by the phone.



Carlton

Carlton will be heading from his home in Colorado to a news conference in New York, where he is expected to be introduced Thursday as Cooperstown's newest member.

Cepeda has plane reservations, too. Only he will be at Candlestick Park in San Francisco, awaiting word on the vote.

Carlton is the overwhelming favorite and Cepeda is the sentimental choice for election when the voting is released at 5 p.m. CST today. Don Sutton and Phil Niekro, both 300-game winners, and Graig Nettles, Ron Guidry and Bruce Sutter are among the other candidates.

Carlton's credentials are impeccable. He is ninth on baseball's career victory list (329) — second among left-handers to Warren Spahn's 363 wins — and second in strikeouts (4,136). Plus, he won a record four Cy Young Awards.

Carlton, however, could lose some votes from members of the Baseball Writers Association of America because he did not speak to the media during his glory years with the Philadelphia Phillies.

■ Baseball Hall of Fame

Such sentiment almost certainly will not prevent him from receiving the required 75 percent support for election, although it could stop him from challenging Tom Seaver's record 98.84 percent.

Carlton was to fly from his home in Durango, Colo., today for the gathering in Manhattan on Thursday. And yes, Carlton planned to speak.

Whether Cepeda catches the red-eye from San Francisco depends on how many votes he receives.

He is getting his 15th and final chance at election by the writers. If he is not selected, he will be eligible in three years by the Veterans Committee.

Last year, Cepeda was named on just 59.6 percent of the ballots (252 of 423). This year, he has been the subject of a letter-writing campaign by the San Francisco Giants and members of Congress, both groups believing Cepeda's 1975 conviction of smuggling marijuana into Puerto Rico and his 10 months in jail may have hurt his candidacy.

Cepeda now works in community relations for the Giants, often speaking about the dangers of drug abuse.

Cepeda hit 379 home runs and had 1,365 RBIs, batting .297 with 2,351 hits.

Herzog resigns

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Whitey Herzog resigned as general manager of the California Angels on Tuesday and was replaced by Bill Bavasi, the son of former Angels and Los Angeles Dodgers general manager Buzzie Bavasi.

Herzog, whose resignation is effective Saturday, will remain with the Angels as a consultant.

"I'm only resigning in title as the general manager," Herzog told an Anaheim Stadium news conference by telephone from Springfield, Mo., where he was inducted into the Missouri Hall of Fame on Tuesday. "It isn't like I'm going with somebody else, I'm not going to another organization.

"When all this was decided in the fall, I really believed that we had to get Bill through this winter. If I didn't think Bill Bavasi was so capable of doing the job and being the Angels general manager for the next 25 years, then I don't know if I would have done this at this time.

Draft dodgers

SAN ANTONIO — In a sharp departure from previous policy, the NCAA voted Tuesday to let players declare early for the NBA draft and return to their college teams if they change their mind within 30 days after the draft.

"Student-athletes should have the opportunity to investigate professional sports opportunities in the same way other students have the right to explore employment options," said Mississippi athletic director Warner Alford, who introduced the measure.

Previously, once an athlete entered the NBA draft he lost any remaining eligibility. But NCAA schools overwhelmingly voted to allow players to determine their professional market value without sacrificing their amateur status.

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said playing unfamiliar Green Bay could be just as dangerous as playing the New York Giants.

Packers less brutal for aching Cowboys

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Jimmy Johnson won't say it but his players will. They're glad they don't have to play the New York Giants again in Sunday's NFC divisional playoff.

"It would have been difficult if we had to play the Giants for a third time this Sunday," Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman said.

"I was rooting for Green Bay to beat Detroit," cornerback Kevin Smith said. "It's better for us to play the Packers right now. The Giants are more physical. We're beat up and sore from the last time we played them."

It's not that the Cowboys have any disrespect for the Packers, a 36-14 victim at Texas Stadium in October.

The Cowboys just respect the Giants more after their 16-13 overtime escape in the Meadowlands, giving the defending Super Bowl champions their second consecutive NFC East championship. Dallas beat the Giants 31-9 at Texas Stadium earlier in the year.

New York will play at San Francisco in the other divisional playoff game by virtue of the Packers' 28-24 victory over the Detroit Lions on three Brett Favre touchdown passes to Sterling Sharpe. Green Bay is the last seed in the NFC and the Cowboys are top-ranked.

Assistant admires Ryan

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Bobby Knight throws chairs. Buddy Ryan throws punches. Emotion makes them do it, says Houston Oilers' linebackers coach Ronnie Jones, who admires both men.

Jones is staying out of the friction between Oilers defensive coordinator Ryan and offensive coordinator Kevin Gilbride. But he does have an opinion on Ryan.

And it's very positive.

"You look at some of the great coaches like Bobby Knight," Jones said. "Buddy reminds me a lot of Bobby Knight. Some coaches express that emotion more on the field in the heat of the battle than others.

Jones didn't react with horror as did many fans who watched Ryan take a punch at Gilbride on the sidelines of the Oilers' Jan. 2 game against the New York Jets.

Jones has seen it before, even been on the receiving end of Ryan's wrath.

Yet, he knows the real Ryan as a true friend.

"I believe he's really a misunderstood person because unfortunately, a lot of people don't get to see that side," Jones said. "He's the most loyal person I've ever worked for. Even when he wasn't in coaching, I've never had a closer friend or worked for anyone who cared so much about me."

Walston gets second shot at Wranglers

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

Thursday's game between Midland College and Odessa College will be special for sophomore forward Steve Walston for more than one reason.

Walston

A win over the sixth-ranked Wranglers would give the Chaps a 2-0 start in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference race, but it would also give Walston a measure of redemption after missing the Chaps' second meeting with the Wranglers last season.

A year ago, Midland College was concluding what had been a disappointing year. After beginning the season 13-2, the Chaps went 7-6 during the last portion of the season and finished out of the regional tournament. Like any group with high expectations that were not met, frustrations built up.

"Last year I got into an argument with coach (Steve) Green in practice before the OC game," said Walston. "It kind of messed up our relationship team-wise.

"He just felt like I wasn't mentally ready to play and because of that he didn't put me out there and we lost (86-82 at the Chap Center) because the team really needed my rebounding and my tenacity on the boards. There's not going to be any of that this year because I'm going to be playing and playing hard. I'm diving for loose balls and taking charges, whatever we need."

Hurricane Andrews storming Granbury

■ Leta Andrews, the 56 year old coach of the Granbury Lady Pirates, has returned home in search of a Class 4A girls basketball championship.

By Joe McDaniel
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

GRANBURY — Leta Andrews, at age 56, doesn't mind taking a hands-on approach to coaching the Granbury girls basketball team.

"If one of us doesn't go up for a rebound or block out like we should," senior center Jill Culverhouse said, "she'll get out there on the floor and show us how it's done. She blocks out, goes up for rebounds and plays defense like she's still in high school. She's incredible."

Andrews said, "We practiced the day Hurricane Andrew hit Louisiana last year. During the workout, one of my players told one of her teammates she thought the hurricane had hit Granbury instead. I took it as a compliment because I knew if they showed me they weren't scared of a 'hurricane' like me, they would be successful."

If Andrews is likened to a hurricane, she has spawned an equally ominous storm in the form of the 1993-94 Pirates. Granbury is 22-2 and ranked sixth in the latest Texas Association of Basketball Coaches Class 4A girls state poll. Granbury won its first 19 games before losing to Waco Midway, ranked sixth in 4A, in the semifinals of the M.T. Rice Tournament Dec. 30 in Waco.

"I'm not surprised," Andrews said of her team's stellar start. "Back in the spring, I saw their willingness to work hard. And if you're going to be successful in anything, you have to work hard. And if you play for me, you're going to work hard and give your best."

Andrews has lengthy ties to Granbury and success. She is a Granbury native who graduated from the school in 1955 and played on Class A and 2A state finalist teams in 1954 and '55.

Her first coaching stint at Granbury from 1976 to '80 produced three district champions and a state finalist in 1980. From there, she went to Corpus Christi Calallen.

In 12 seasons at Calallen, Andrews guided 11 teams to the playoffs and 10 to the state tournament. Her 1990 team won the state 4A title.

Granbury's winning tradition continued after Andrews' departure, but not at the level it had reached under her direction.

So Andrews' return to her hometown created ample anxiety among the Pirates who already had learned of her coaching prowess by the time she began her second stint at the school last season.

"We knew she was going to be tough," said sophomore guard Mandy Hayworth, who also is Andrews' great niece. "But it's been my dream to play for her. It's been tough, but it's been fun. We love her."

The Pirates went 22-11 last season and advanced to the area playoffs before losing to Boswell. But Andrews said her team could do better and used off-season workouts last spring to prove it.

In fact, anyone visiting one of the Pirates' off-season workouts might have thought the team was preparing for football season instead of basketball. Twice a week, Andrews had her players pull a steel-belted tire by a rope tied around their waists. Also twice a week,

Granbury coach Leta Andrews, center, has led her team to a 22-2 record and a No. 6 ranking in the Texas Association of Basketball Coaches Class 4A poll. Andrews returned to Granbury, where she grew up and has coached before, after a stint at 4A power Corpus Christi Calallen.

■ NBA Roundup

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson had 27 points, 12 rebounds and 10 assists as San Antonio beat Minnesota 108-98 Tuesday night for the Spurs' eighth victory in nine games.

Robinson's triple-double was the 12th of his career, and second of the season against the Timberwolves. He had 43 points, 11 rebounds and 10 blocks against Minnesota on Nov. 9.

Robinson, who made 9 of 14 attempts from both the field and free-throw line, also blocked eight shots.

Minnesota, which lost for the seventh time in nine outings, got 26 points from rookie Isaiah Rider.

San Antonio outscored Minnesota 30-17 in the third period to take an 88-66 lead, and cruised the rest of the way.

Terry Cummings scored 10 of his 12 points in the third quarter for San Antonio. Dale Ellis and Robinson each scored eight points during the game-deciding run.

Hornets 95, Suns 93

PHOENIX — Dell Curry scored 23 points, and Hersey Hawkins' 3-pointer with 2:46 left gave Charlotte the lead for good as the Hornets surprised poor-shooting Phoenix.

The Hornets used outstanding defense to give the Suns only their third home loss in 18 games. Charlotte held Phoenix to just five baskets and 15 points in the final quarter.

The Suns were without MVP Charles Barkley — on the injury list with a torn knee tendon — for the second straight game.

A.C. Green, who made the last Phoenix basket with 4:04 to play, putting the Suns ahead 92-91, finished with 18 points and 14 rebounds. Danny Ainge added 17 points.

But Ainge missed a 16-footer with in the final seconds, and Muggsy Bogues darted beneath taller players to grab a floor rebound.

Pacers 82, Bucks 76

MILWAUKEE — Antonio Davis had a career-high 26 points and Reggie Miller added 20 as Indiana beat punchless Milwaukee, handing the Bucks their third straight home loss.

Davis hit one of two free throws with 6:03 left to snap a 66-66 tie. Then Derrick McKey made a basket and Miller two more to give the Pacers a 73-66 lead with 2:42 left.

The Bucks, who have a 3-12 home record, were led by Todd Day with 20 points. It was the Bucks' lowest point total of the season. Their previous low was 81 in a loss to Portland on Dec. 19.

Miller had 10 points in the third period to help Indiana to a 62-58 lead heading into the final quarter. He hit a jumper with 6:21 left to give the Pacers a 58-48 lead, but the Bucks managed to cut it to four points by the end of the quarter.

Bullets 115, Nets 100

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Don McLean had 20 points, and struggling Washington scored a season-high 68 in the first half en route to a victory over New Jersey.

The margin of victory matched the Bullets' second-largest of the season while the win was only their fourth in the last 20 games and 10th in 32 overall. It also was just their fourth win in 17 road games this season.

Knicks 98, Clippers 77

NEW YORK — Patrick Ewing scored 31 points, and New York outscored Los Angeles 29-15 in the third period, handing the Clippers their sixth consecutive defeat.

John Starks scored eight of his 19 points and Ewing seven during the third-period uprising that broke open an even game. Danny Manning scored 16 points for the Clippers, who missed 21 of 27 shots in the third quarter, going from a 44-44 halftime tie to a 73-59 deficit.

It was the second straight game Ewing and Starks dominated the Knicks' scoring column. Ewing had 36 points and Starks 30 in Sunday night's victory over Portland, and against the Clippers they were the only New York players in double figures until just 3:11 remained in the game.

Nuggets 94, Pistons 86

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf had 10 of his 17 points in the fourth quarter, and Denver beat Detroit to hand the Pistons their 10th straight loss.

Denver hadn't won at Detroit since Jan. 22, 1988, and was just 4-12 on the road this season. But the Nuggets sent the Pistons to their 19th loss in 22 games. Detroit's losing streak is its worst since a 14-game slide in 1980.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Arkansas' Clint McDaniel made a free throw with 39 seconds left to break the game's final tie and Louisiana State's Jamie Brandon missed two shots in the final seconds as the fourth-ranked Razorbacks slipped by the Tigers 84-83 Tuesday night.

McDaniel, who was fouled after a steal near midcourt, missed the second of his two free throws. Brandon's 12-footer hit the rim, but the Tigers (7-4, 1-2 Southeastern Conference) got the rebound and he missed again from about the same distance.

Dwight Stewart added 17 points for Arkansas and Scotty Thurman had 15. Ronnie Henderson led LSU with 25 points and Lenear Burns had 13.

No. 11 Indiana 89, Iowa 75

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Brian Evans, showing no ill effects of a separated shoulder, scored a career-high 21 points and Todd Lindeman gave Indiana a second-half lift Tuesday night to pace the Hoosiers to a victory over Iowa.

Evans, who injured his non-shooting arm against Western Kentucky and missed the Hoosiers' Big Ten opener last Saturday, wore a brace on his right shoulder and upper arm but still surpassed his previous best of 20 points last season against Purdue.

Damon Bailey and Pat Graham each scored 20 points and Alan Henderson and Lindeman added 10 each for the Hoosiers (9-2, 2-0 Big Ten), who beat Iowa for the fifth straight time.

No. 13 Temple 76, Penn 65

PHILADELPHIA — Aaron McKie scored 24 points and Eddie Jones added 22 as Temple rallied in the final eight minutes to beat Penn and end the Quakers' eight-game winning streak.

Temple, trailing 51-50 with 7:55 left, outscored Penn 15-3 to take a 65-54 lead with 2:20 left as they beat their city rival for the 13th straight time since 1982. Temple leads the series 28-15.

Temple (8-2) also got 16 points from point guard Rick Brunson.

Black coaches could boycott hoops season

■ NCAA Convention

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The head of the Black Coaches Association, upset over the NCAA's decision to cut scholarships, said Tuesday he expects his group to boycott men's college basketball games, possibly for the rest of the season.

The boycott, which would include coaches and players, could begin as early as Saturday, Martin Luther King's birthday.

"In all likelihood there will be a boycott but I am reluctant to give you a time and date," said Rudy Washington, head of the BCA and basketball coach at Drake. "Players and coaches are expected to participate. And they're talking about the rest of the season, like the baseball strike."

On Monday, the NCAA voted down a proposal to restore a 14th basketball scholarship two years after it voted to cut scholarships from 15 to 13. The BCA says minorities are particularly hurt by cutting scholarships.

The Presidents Commission cited costs and the need to hold firm on reform measures. The presidents also indicated to the BCA the scholarship could be added next year if savings could be found elsewhere.

NCAA executive director Cedric Dempsey declined to say whether he believes there will be a boycott.

"If there's to be a boycott, how long a boycott?" he said at a news conference following the NCAA convention. "We could play speculative games related to that. I don't see that it would be profitable."

It is not clear how many coaches would participate in a boycott. The BCA has some 3,000 members, but that number includes head coaches and assistants from all divisions in men's and women's programs, as well as high school coaches.

Dempsey and Joseph Crowley, the NCAA president, both said they had talked with BCA representatives twice in the previous 24 hours and hoped to talk with them again.

"There certainly is the possibility of continued dialogue," Dempsey said.

Black coaches have said dropping the scholarship will deny 330 young men, mostly African-Americans, access to education. But others said not all the 297 Division I schools use their full scholarship limit anyway.

"Of the 64 teams in the last NCAA tournament, the average squad size was 13.7," Dempsey said.

The BCA has some is Crowley was asked whether in view of the threatened boycott the presidents had erred in not letting the coaches have their way.

"The problem with this issue is that it has evolved into far greater symbolic significance than anyone predicted," he said.

The boycott was approved by the BCA's legislative committee, which includes coaches George Raveling (Southern Cal), John Thompson (Georgetown) and John Chaney (Temple). Washington said the group was scheduled to talk again later Tuesday and set a date for a boycott.

"It's nothing that any of us want to do," Washington said from his office in Des Moines, Iowa. "It's just something we have to do. Not every coach wants to boycott. But in order to help themselves and their kids, they have to do it."

While the BCA planned its strategy, all 31 Division I conference commissioners set up a conference call for Thursday to discuss how they might react to a boycott.

DALLAS: Injury-ridden

(From 1C)

Johnson, the Cowboys psychology major coach, tried to ring the alarm bells on Tuesday, saying "I've been amused to listen to talk about the Green Bay Packers that assumes it will be the same kind of game Sunday that we played against them earlier in the season."

The Cowboys got ahead of the Packers early and rolled up 393 yards of offense for a runaway victory that included five Eddie Murray field goals.

Johnson said he told his team "there is a danger anytime you play a team that you don't play on a regular basis. The Packers will improve because they can correct the mistakes. They'll make adjustments and I told the team we've got to make the same kind of improvement."

He said the Packers' loss to Dallas in the fourth game of the season was "out of character" for the way Green Bay played the rest of the season.

"The game got out of hand and they had to change their offense," Johnson said. "They were bound and determined to stop Emmitt Smith and it opened up our passing game. I see the Packers making a lot of adjustments. We could be in for tight fit on Sunday."

Injuries concern Johnson.

Offensive tackle Mark Tuinei was stepped on in practice and has a severe swollen foot.

Defensive tackle Russell Maryland, injured in the Giants game, will likely be put on the inactive list.

Johnson said defensive end Charles Haley and Smith are improving rapidly.

"Haley's back is better and he will probably start," Johnson said. "Emmitt has full range of motion in his shoulder and we anticipate he will be fine. He won't be hit on the shoulder until the game."

Equipment manager Buck Buchanan is building special shoulder pads to protect Smith's separated right shoulder.

In a personnel change, Johnson has moved guard John Gesek to center in place of Frank Cornish.

JONES: Ryan cares for coaches

(From 1C)

But punching a fellow coach on the sidelines on national television?

"Obviously, Buddy is the first to admit, probably in the eye of the public you can't take it as far as he took it," Jones said. "But as an assistant, we both get caught up in the game. We can argue and then laugh about it later."

Jones has had physical altercations with Ryan during their seven years together, first at Philadelphia and now with the Oilers. One incident occurred on the sidelines during a game.

"I don't even remember what game it was but he simply was trying to keep me from getting a penalty from the official," Jones said. "He pulled me back off the field. I never gave it another thought other than he did me a favor."

When Ryan was fired as head coach at Philadelphia in 1991, he worked to get jobs for his assistants.

"Buddy's first concern was that I had a job," Jones said. "It seemed more important to him that he take care of the people he was responsible for. He's always been a guy I could talk to. I might not like his answer but I knew it would be honest."

The Oilers took Tuesday off and Jones thinks it will be business as usual — with no distractions — when the Oilers return to work on Wednesday to begin preparations for Sunday's AFC playoff game against the Kansas City Chiefs.

Ryan and Gilbride have feuded all season. But Ryan has agreed to muzzle his comments on Gilbride and the run-and-shoot offense and Gilbride says he's not going to keep their disagreement alive.

HALL: Niekro, Sutton up for voting

(From 1C)

He was an 11-time All-Star but was overshadowed by playing on Giants teams with Hall of Famers Willie Mays, Willie McCovey and Juan Marichal.

Niekro (318-274) got 65.7 percent of the vote last year in his first year of eligiblity. For all the games he won with his knuckleball, some voters believed he lost too many.

Sutton is eligible for the first time; he was known for consistency during his career while Carlton was known for dominance. Sutton finished in the top three in the Cy Young voting only once in his career while Carlton won it four times, although their career numbers were amazingly similar.

Carlton was 329-244 with a 3.22 ERA, and pitched 5,216 innings and gave up 4,672 hits. Sutton was 324-256 with a 3.26 ERA, pitched 5,282 innings and gave up 4,692 hits. Sutton even had more shutouts, 58-55, and held batters to a lower average, .236 to .240.

The big difference between them was strikeouts and walks, as would be expected when comparing a power pitcher and a control pitcher. Carlton struck out 4,136 and walked 1,833, while Sutton fanned 3,574 and walked 1,343.

On the ballot for the first time are Guidry (170-91), Sutter (300 saves) and Nettles (390 home runs). Candidates who fell short last year include Tony Perez (379 homers, 1,652 RBIs), Tony Oliva (.304 lifetime), Jim Kaat (283-237, 16 Gold Gloves), Dick Allen (351 home runs) and Ron Santo (342 home runs, five Gold Gloves).

CHAPS: MC ranked 3rd nationally

(From 1C)

Walston and the Chaps, ranked third in the nation according to the latest junior college poll, will face Odessa Thursday at 7:30 pm. at the Chap Center.

"Last year is last year," said Green, "we're all different. Steve's a lot different player this year and I'm a lot different coach. We've got great guys with an exceptional attitude this year.

"He went to a camp last summer and played himself into some national recognition. Steve's been a leader day in and day out. He's our blue collar player."

Walston, who will play for Arizona State after receiving a scholarship during the early signing period, ranks third on the team in scoring with 13.5 points per game, starting 16 games before missing the Chaps' 133-86 win over Frank Phillips Monday with a bruised shin. Walston practiced with the team on Tuesday and is listed as probable for Thursday's game.

He ranks second on the team in rebounding with 5.5 boards per game. Walston, shooting 62 percent from the field, ranks fifth in the conference according to the last report by the league.

CHAP NOTES: The entire allotment of reserve seats has been sold for the Midland-Odessa game. General admission tickets are still on sale at the Chap Center Gate 3 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m... Midland College moved up three spots in the latest national poll released Tuesday. Odessa College, previously ranked No. 1 in the nation, dropped from first to sixth after the Wranglers lost an 87-75 decision to Western Nebraska Saturday.

ANDREWS: Streak stopped at 19

the team was instructed to run and walk, backward and forward, up and down a hill on campus.

"Oooh, those tires," senior backup center Natalie Davidson groaned. "There were many times when we worked out with those tires that I thought that would be the end of basketball for me. I can't believe I made it."

Furthermore, the team did agility drills and ran laps around the gym and the school track twice a week.

The tough training regimen hasn't stopped. The Pirates still are pulling tires. And running. The Pirates run the length of the court 10 times after every game, win or lose, and three laps around the gym before every practice.

And Granbury, most of the time, continues to win. The Pirates, notorious for their high-pressure man-to-man defense, knocked off such perennial playoff teams as Cleburne, Mansfield, Brock, Mineral Wells and Belton on the way to a 19-0 start.

"The winning streak was fun, but it also was stressful," junior center Shannon Boase said. "People would stop me in the mall all the time and ask me if we were still unbeaten, and I got tired of it."

So, perhaps Waco Midway put the Pirates at ease by beating them, 50-39, in the semifinals of the M.T. Rice Tournament.

"We needed to get that first loss before we got to district play to bring us back to earth," Davidson said. "I'm glad the streak is over."

With nondistrict play behind them, the Pirates are focusing on District 6-4A play.

Granbury and Stephenville have been in the same district since 1979 and have been the only schools to win district titles since that year. With Andrews at the helm, Granbury players are confident they can win another district title and a trip to the state tournament.

"She's unbelievable," Culverhouse said. "I'm sorry this is my last year with her."

Prices recover

NEW YORK — Energy futures prices rose Tuesday, led by cold-weather inspired buying of home heating oil, which recovered from the previous day's plunge.

Contracts for February-delivery of heating oil, which had fallen 1.41 cents per gallon on Monday, rose 1.66 cents Tuesday to 46.76 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Natural gas for February delivery rose 6.2 cents to $2.219 per 1,000 cubic feet, far above the 0.1 cent it dropped Monday.

West Texas Intermediate for February delivery rose 18 cents to settle at $14.85 per barrel. On Monday, the price tumbled 65 cents.

Local crude purchasers raised their posted price 25 cents to $13.25 a barrel.

Airline deal

FORT WORTH, Texas — American Airlines said Tuesday that on Feb. 1, it will begin sharing codes with Gulf Air on flights between the U.S. and the Middle East cities of Bahrain, Abu Dhabi, Muscat and Doha.

The two airlines signed a cooperative services agreement in November. The "codesharing" agreement allows the carriers to list connecting services under one flight number.

Under the agreement, passengers can fly American to London's Heathrow airport from Chicago, Boston, Miami, Los Angeles and New York's Kennedy Airport. Service from American's Philadelphia gateway will begin May 26, the carrier said. American will use its designator code on selected Gulf Air flights between London and the four Middle East cities.

The Fort Worth-based carrier also plans to codeshare on Gulf Air's nonstop service, scheduled to begin in July, between New York's Kennedy Airport and Bahrain and Abu Dhabi.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — Ending a string of record-setting sessions, stocks fell Tuesday as investors sold shares that had run up in value.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 15.20 points to 3,850.31, its first decline this year. Despite Tuesday's losses, the blue-chip average is still up almost 2.6 percent since Jan. 1.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 8 to 7 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 304.61 million shares, down from 317.60 million in the previous session.

The market action ended four straight all-time highs on the Dow as well as record closes for broader indexes on Monday.

Westinghouse to slash 6,000 jobs

■ Moves are part of turnaround effort after years of slumping sales, losses.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Westinghouse Electric Corp. is cutting 6,000 jobs as part of a turnaround effort after years of slumping sales and huge losses in its financial services and environmental businesses.

The announcement Tuesday came after a tumultuous year in which angry investors forced out Westinghouse chairman Paul E. Lego and Michael H. Jordan was brought in to replace him.

The restructuring includes laying off about 3,400 of the company's 105,000 workers over two years, with the rest leaving through attrition.

The company also said it would lay off an additional 210 employees at one division because of cuts in U.S. defense spending.

Jordan said Westinghouse will probably spin off more businesses and will slash its 40-cent annual dividend in half. And it will offer $500 million in preferred stock to raise money, and contribute $200 million in common stock to its underfunded pension plan.

The moves, announced six months after Jordan took over, were aimed at restoring health to the Pittsburgh-based company.

"Our philosophy in doing this was to seek out all potential exposures . . . to this corporation and get them all behind us," Jordan told securities analysts in New York.

The company's stock dropped 12½ cents, to $14, on the New York Stock Exchange. Securities analysts praised the announcement, though some questioned why the company didn't go further.

"I'm pleased to see Mike Jordan take a broad, sweeping, clean-the-decks approach to hopefully position Westinghouse for the final cleanup of this long, painful transition process," said Kemp Fuller Jr., vice-president at RAS Securities Corp in New York.

In addition to the 6,000 job cuts for restructuring, pink slips will go to about one-quarter of the 900-employee work force at Westinghouse's Electro-Mechanical Division in Cheswick, Pa. The division has been hurt by the drop in U.S. defense spending.

Westinghouse didn't immediately spell out where the other cuts would be, but Jordan said he'd like to shrink the headquarters staff to 400 people, from about 650.

Lego stepped down a year ago under pressure from institutional investors angered by huge losses at Westinghouse Financial Services, which is being liquidated. Jordan, a former Pepsico Inc. executive, was brought in to shake up the ailing company.

Westinghouse has been further hurt by the U.S. and European recessions, and declining demand for its environmental cleanup division, which Jordan called "a major disaster for 1993."

Jordan said the company would take a $500 million after-tax charge against fourth-quarter earnings because of the layoffs, resolution of legal disputes, and the sale and restructuring of businesses.

In other moves, the company is taking a $95 million charge to add to a reserve related to discontinued operations, and a $56 million after-tax reduction for an accounting change.

Westinghouse's third-quarter net profits more than quadrupled from the same period of 1992, largely due to the shedding of unprofitable businesses. But income from continuing operations fell 29 percent from $91 million to $65 million.

Tracking automotive recovery

The numbers tracking North American motor vehicle production indicate the economic recovery in 1993 — at least for the automotive industry. According to this tracking sign, 1993 vehicle production surpassed the 1992 county of 11,757,658, making last year the best since 1989.

Gore speaks on emerging information technologies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Vice President Al Gore wants Americans to be able to jump on the information superhighway without paying any tolls.

So on Tuesday, Gore challenged 30 leading figures in telecommunications to provide easy access for every classroom, library and hospital in the country.

In exchange, he said, the government would come through with less-restrictive rules from a single new regulatory agency.

"You here today represent the companies that can do it," Gore told representatives of the telecommunications, computer and entertainment industries.

The so-called information superhighway is a still-undefined marriage of computers, television and telephones expected to transform commerce and entertainment.

Gore briefed summit participants on the Clinton administration's plans to reform federal laws and regulations governing telecommunication.

He said the administration supports removing regulations that prevent telephone, cable and long distance companies from entering each other's business.

Gore said that only wide access to developing two-way communications networks can avoid creating a society of information haves and have-nots.

He said the administration will authorize the Federal Communications Commission to reduce regulation to allow smaller competitors into those markets.

He also said the government will fight to keep big players such as the regional Bell telephone companies from using their present monopolies as unfair leverage into new businesses.

Whatever the final form of the information superhighway, panelists agreed that television will be the most common means of delivery to consumers.

In the future, shoppers should be able to try on dresses electronically at a Paris store or order up voting records of their representatives, they said.

Barry Diller, the former entertainment executive who heads the QVC home-shopping channel, said the initial shape of the superhighway should emerge in three or four years.

Tune in for a clear picture in five to nine years, he added.

"Right now, it is hard to see," he said.

Investment will drive economy, manufacturers group says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Business equipment investment will be the main driving force behind the economy this year as consumer spending and residential construction moderate, a manufacturing trade group forecast Tuesday.

"I expect consumption spending to slow to a more sustainable pace and the boom in housing to level off, but business equipment spending will continue to be strong and by mid-1994 exports should pick up," Jerry Jasinowski, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, told reporters.

"The economy appears to be on a moderate, sustainable growth path" of about 3 percent, as measured by the gross domestic product, Jasinowski said. The GDP is the sum of goods and services produced in the United States.

That would be little changed from the 2.8 percent growth the association projects for last year, but far slower than its forecast of a 4.2 percent annualized growth rate during the final three months.

The difference, Jasinowski said, is attributable mainly to the slowdown in the growth of consumer spending, from a 4.4 percent rate in the third quarter of 1993 and 3.7 percent in the fourth.

The association forecast personal consumption growth in the first three months of this year at a 1.9 percent annual rate and 2.5 percent in each of the following three quarters.

If so, that would produce an increase in consumer spending of just 2.8 percent in 1994, down from 3.3 percent last year. Consumer spending represents about two-thirds of the GDP.

Business investment in equipment, on the other hand, is expected to remain strong, Jasinowski said. He projects it to increase 9.6 percent this year and 9.3 percent in 1995.

Jasinowski admitted he is "a bit more optimistic about our trade outlook for 1994 than other analysts," saying exports will increase at a 6.3 percent rate in 1994 and 7.5 percent in 1995.

He acknowledged his forecast could be skewed by the failure of global economies to recover from economic slowdowns and said two-thirds of NAM's executive committee felt his export forecast was too high. They believe growth will be less than 5 percent in 1994.

The manufacturers also predicted 1.7 million jobs will be created this year, including 200,000 in manufacturing.

Walgreens closes Midland Park Mall location

By Mella McEwen

WALGREENS has closed its Midland Park Mall location following the construction and opening of its new store at 3300 N. Midland Drive. Mall officials are in negotiations with another retailer to lease the space.

IDS FINANCIAL SERVICES INC., a leading financial planning firm, will reach $100 billion in assets owned or managed as the company celebrates its 100th anniversary, according to Eddie L. Mee, of the Midland office of IDS.

"This milestone is a great way to unofficially kick off our centennial year," Mee said.

The official kickoff of the company's centennial year took place Jan. 1 at the 105th Tournament of Roses Parade in Pasadena, Calif., where IDS sponsored a float themed "Making Dreams Come True."

The company was founded in 1894 in Minneapolis offering face-amount savings certificates. The company, now owned by American Express, offers 150 financial products and services.

Bankruptcy business discovers that hard times can come its way

By Alison Leigh Cowan
N.Y. Times News Service

The legions of lawyers, accountants and investment bankers who have made good livings in the last few years working out the bad-debt cases of the 1980s are about to face their worst fears: the bankruptcy business is going bust.

Last year, for the first time since 1989, fewer companies entered bankruptcy than left, helping slow the volume of billion-dollar cases to a trickle.

That helps explain why the country's roughly 20,000 bankruptcy specialists are clinging fast to the clients they have left — and are turning the last mega-dollar cases like R.H. Macy & Co. into all-you-can-eat buffets.

"If you take a look around, there really aren't too many other major busted 1980s deals sitting there in bankruptcy," said Robert I. Miller, a lawyer at Berlack, Israels & Liberman who represents Macy's bondholders. "This seems to be the last one."

The bankruptcy fees in the Macy case, while not the largest ever, are a stunning illustration of the meal-ticket mentality. Already 11 professional firms, representing Macy, the creditors and bondholders, have wrung more than $37.9 million in fees from the two-year-old case, which is expected to take another year or two to resolve.

Weil Gotshal, alone, has billed Macy $13.5 million, more than a third of the total fees. At the firm, 126 people call Macy their client: 31 partners, 50 associates and 45 other employees. And at least 24 of those lawyers each bill more than $10,000 a calendar quarter.

In one quarter the firm charged $50,000 just for the time it says it spent preparing its bill, according to bankruptcy filings. Weil Gotshal says any criticism of that figures is unfair since much of that amount reflects time it spends as the company's lawyer notifying other parties of the status of their requests for fees.

For five years now, one big company after another sought refuge in the bankruptcy courts, clogging the courts and making a bankruptcy filing as routine as a Hollywood hangover. Consumers learned not to care when a beloved airline or retailer took the cure — although competitors often complained that bankrupt rivals had an unfair edge, taking advantage of the temporary moratoriums on their debt to lower prices ruthlessly.

As the mega-bankruptcies swelled, so did the number of people feeding off their carcasses.

Nearly 20,000 Americans now make their living from bankruptcy-related work, according to Joel W. Lustig, the publisher of the National Directory of Corporate Distress Specialists.

That head count includes 12,500 lawyers, 2,000 turnaround managers, 700 accountants, and 650 investment bankers, and does not begin to cover the thousands of people ranging from auctioneers to collection agents who operate on the fringes or spend only part of their time tending troubled businesses or their creditors.

The securities of bankrupt companies have also cast off their stigma, attracting droves of investors.

Drawn by the rich annual returns of bottom-fishing, funds representing at least $13 billion in assets are trawling for opportunities among corporate America's downtrodden.

These so-called "vulture investors" range from household names like T. Rowe Price and Fidelity Investments to lesser-known outfits like Morgens Waterfall, a bankruptcy boutique.

But as the economy improves and companies renegotiate their debts, the bankruptcy banquet is coming to a close. Indeed, last year, 93 companies left bankruptcy while only 83 companies entered, according to Edward I. Altman, a New York University finance professor.

Real men eat tofu

Japanese are just as prone to small, latent prostate cancers as Western men. Yet their cancers usually don't grow to become deadly, leaving Japan with low mortality rates from prostate cancer.

A prime reason is all the tofu and other soy-bean products they eat, suggests noted Finnish researcher Herman Adlercreutz. In a new study, he compared the blood levels of soybean-rich chemicals called isoflavonoids in Japanese and Finnish men. He found seven to 110 times more soybean chemicals in the blood of Japanese than Finnish men.

This is vital, he says, because research shows these compounds have strong anti-cancer activity, especially against hormone-dependent cancers such as prostate cancer. Feeding animals soy products curbs prostate cancer. And one particular soybean constituent, genistein, has actually blocked cancer spread in tissue culture.

Dr. Adlercreutz believes soybean chemicals exert a hormonal effect that impedes prostate cancer cells' growth so they don't form tumors. The chemicals are found in soybeans, tofu and soy milk, but not in soy sauce or soybean oil.

Cold medicine

In this cold and flu season, an herb that may boost your immunity and fight infections is echinacea — pronounced ek-i-NAY-sha — also known as purple coneflower. It's approved in Germany for that use, and it works, says Mark Blumenthal, director of the American Botanical Council in Austin, Texas, which has a major new review of the herb's powers in its journal HerbalGram.

For example, a recent double-blind controlled German study of 108 patients found an echinacea preparation boosted immune functioning and decreased the frequency, severity and duration of cold-related infections. In a similar German study of 180 volunteers, echinacea significantly reduced flu symptoms and duration.

Echinacea is a native American herb, long used to treat infections and bites. Although not approved medically in the United States, echinacea is in about 150 conventional medications sold in German pharmacies and is of low toxicity, according to Blumenthal.

Echinacea is sold in health-food stores under various brands. The most widely tested is a German product sold here as Echinaguard, says Blumenthal. An effective anti-cold dose, he says, is about 4 milliliters twice a day.

Salt surprise

The less salt you eat, the more you can expect your blood pressure to drop. Wrong.

The fact is a very low-sodium diet may not lower blood pressure at all, and a high-salt one may not raise it. That's what Brent Egan, M.D., and colleagues at the Medical University of South Carolina found in a new study of people who ate as little as 1 gram of sodium and as much as 12 grams per day.

Merely cutting down on sodium, even severely, is not the best way to reduce blood pressure, says Dr. Egan. He thinks limiting saturated animal fat and sugar and losing weight are probably more important.

A low-sodium diet could even backfire. In about one-third of those who restrict sodium, blood pressure falls or stays the same. But in one-third, blood pressure actually rises, he notes.

Dr. Egan thinks most people should eat moderate amounts of sodium -6 to 10 grams a day. If you know you are "salt- sensitive," he recommends only 4 grams a day.

If you do restrict sodium, also restrict fat and sugar, and monitor yourself regularly to be sure it is working, he advises.

For the kids

Nutri-Care Inc. has announced it sponsorship of the Child Care Food Program, which is available to all persons keeping children in homes that are registered by the state of Texas or licensed as a group day home. This program is sponsored by the Federal Government and the U.S.D.A to reimbursed day care home providers fo the food they provide for the children in their care.

Those interested in the program should contact Rhonda Woods at 1-800-747-1421.

Doctor practices for love, not money

By John Rice

HAVANA (AP) — Dr. Adelaida Santos treats everyone for free. She gives shots and doles out pills at a small, whitewashed clinic, makes house calls and delivers babies.

Her monthly government paycheck is worth about $5 on the black market, but the 29-year-old doctor said she would continue "even if I made only $3."

Although Cuba's socialist economy has become a shambles since aid from the old Soviet bloc dried up, its much-praised system of health care goes on. The 3-year-old economic crisis has caused great problems, however, and medicines are getting hard to find.

Dr. Santos, one of thousands of family doctors, is assigned to care for 254 families, about 900 people, in a seaside part of city's Vedado district.

Each morning she works at the clinic, whose walls, still scarred from spring floods, bear posters for everything from condoms to tooth care. She visits patients in their homes most afternoons and is on call at night.

"My home is here," she said. "I live with them. I do everything with them."

As she spoke with a reporter, who arrived unannounced, an intermittent stream of neighbors came by.

"She has no bad habits, but she's fat," the doctor confided as she took the blood pressure of Juana Vitalia, 53, suffering from asthma. Mrs. Vitalia did not comment.

Others dropped in to chat, one with a pot of coffee to share.

Melida Fundora de Sanchez brought her chubby 8-month-old, Rafael, for a checkup.

"He's a child of the special period," his mother said, using the official Cuban term for the economic crisis. "He was born weighing 11½ pounds."

Mrs. Sanchez said her family had paid nothing for the delivery at a nearby hospital or for any of the subsequents shots and checkups. During pregnancy, she received extra rations of chicken and other scarce foods. Her son gets a daily ration of milk, which is unavailable to anyone over 13.

That sort of care has helped Cuba maintain health standards unequaled in the developing world despite an economy that has declined by half since 1989.

AP Laserphoto

Dr. Adelaida Santos, 29, examines Juana Vilalia, 53, at her clinic in Havana, Cuba, last August. Santos treats everyone for free. She gives shots and prescribes pills at a small, whitewashed clinic, makes house calls and delivers babies. Her monthly government paycheck is worth about $5 on the black market, but she says she enjoys her work and has no thought of quitting.

Cuban officials reported in July that infant mortality was under 10 per 1,000 live births so far this year, nearly as low as the U.S. rate. The government said 4,600 new doctors had graduated, giving Cuba 51,000 doctors and more than 300,000 other health care workers for 11 million.

Before the economic problems began to bite in 1990, Cuba spent about 11 percent of its budget on health care. It has not published recent figures, but with overall imports down 80 percent from 1989, Cuba now reports shortages of 300 medicines ranging from analgesics to antibiotics.

"One day it's there, one day it's not," Dr. Santos said, but added: "Until now, nobody has died for lack of medicine."

She displayed a mimeographed list of natural remedies the government distributed to doctors so they could substitute.

On the top of her desk, Dr. Santos scattered hundreds of vitamin B pills issued by Fidel Castro's government to fight an eye disease, optical neuritis, that has affected more than 60,000 Cubans and can cause blindness.

Cuban and foreign experts say the disease, which could be linked to vitamin deficiencies caused by food scarcities, appears to be on the decline.

Every month, Dr. Santos counts out 27,000 of the one-a-day pills for the patients assigned to her and puts them into small brown envelopes.

"My arm gets tired," she said. "I do it at home at night ... outside my work hours."

Shortages at official stores have forced many Cubans to look for food, clothing and househood goods on the booming black market. Because pesos are worth little, some have quit state jobs to strike out on their own.

Thousands seek work in tourism, hoping for tips in dollars, which were recently trading illegally at 70 pesos each. Dr. Santos said her monthly pay is 370 pesos.

Andrew Zimbalist, a Smith College economist in Havana for a conference, said the pay imbalance could create more problems: "What happens when a taxi driver earns two, three, four, five times what a doctor makes?"

Dr. Santos acknowledged that some things "are going to be unjust," but said there are other rewards.

Just the day before, she had pedaled her bicycle past a group of neighborhood children and they had chased after her, laughing and shouting greetings.

"I felt very happy, very fulfilled," she said.

New style of patient care tried at hospital

By Larry Rosenthal

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — After a week in a large hospital, most patients can remember only the names of a few people who took care of them.

At times, patients may feel as if they were on an assembly line, with a series of workers passing through their room to perform a different function.

Some studies have shown that a patient may see as many as 55 hospital workers during a weeklong stay.

At Yale-New Haven Hospital, an 875-bed teaching institution with 6,000 full-time and part-time employees, administrators are preparing to move to a streamlined system of delivering care that they hope will both cut costs and make the hospital more patient-friendly.

The hospital will begin training employees this month to take on new roles and titles requiring them to perform multiple jobs and be less specialized — but to see fewer patients.

The jobs will carry names like environmental associate and patient care associate. The environmental associate, for instance, could both deliver a patient's food and clean his room.

Under the new setup, patients will be cared for by teams rather than seemingly endless streams of hospital workers.

"The object here is to reinvent the hospital," said Vince Conti, senior vice president for administration. "I think it is going to represent a real improvement in the way patients perceive us."

In seeking to become more efficient, the hospital decided to "take a hard look at the way we deliver care to see if there are ways we have evolved that don't make sense any more," Conti said.

With help from about 300 employees, Yale-New Haven came up with a new model of patient care. Other hospitals

New lenses correct near, far vision

Associated Press

An updated version of bifocal glasses is spelling relief for readers, reports Better Homes and Gardens magazine. That's the result of a new study conducted by Dr. William Bachman, optometrist at the University of Missouri-St. Louis, School of Optometry.

Many users of contact lenses need to wear a separate pair of corrective glasses for reading and other close work. Some choose bifocal contacts or reading glasses, though not all users are happy with the results. Now comes another option: the progressive addition lens — or PAL, for short.

PALs are worn in standard eyeglass frames and can be used with contacts. Because the curvature of the lenses is different at the top and bottom, PAL glasses can correct both near and far vision. But, unlike bifocals, the change in the curve is gradual, eliminating any sharp line across one's vision. There's no telltale bifocal line for others to see.

In a study of the new lens option, Bachman found that longtime contact lens wearers preferred the PAL option over other common solutions to the near-far dilemma. Participants in the study said that the PAL glasses were more comfortable to work in than standard single-strength reading glasses, and that they had little trouble getting used to them.

Snoring sometimes signal of life-threatening sleep apnea

By Dr. Steven Lamm
Associated Press

Snoring might be a bit annoying to someone who has to listen to it. But for the person making all the noise, it can also be a symptom of a dangerous condition called sleep apnea.

Loud snoring, punctuated by periods during which there is no breathing, is the primary symptom of sleep apnea. The condition can have major psychiatric and medical effects, including disruption of everyday life.

It even appears in literature — called the "Pickwickian syndrome," named for a young character in Dickens' Pickwick Papers who kept falling asleep in the middle of conversations.

Sleep apnea can be caused by a physical blockage of the breathing pathway or by an abnormality in the brain center that controls breathing.

The results in both cases are the same: a decreased level of oxygen in the blood, a rise of carbon dioxide blood levels, and disorganized sleep.

Sleep disorganization at night can be so severe that the individual experiences chronic fatigue, a tendency to fall asleep during the day, decreased ability to perform complicated mental tasks and decreased alertness in general.

Published reports have linked these effects both to auto and work accidents. Prolonged sleep apnea can also result in high blood pressure and heart disease.

Sleep apnea often occurs in severely obese people. Its cause in some cases may be as simple as enlarged tonsils or adenoids that block the breathing passage during sleep. Whatever the cause, the first clue to diagnosis usually is loud, intermittent snoring, and medical attention should be sought.

The definitive diagnosis sometimes requires a sleep study in which the patient spends one or two nights hooked up to monitors in a sleep center. Such centers can be found in most major medical centers.

Fortunately, almost all patients can be helped. Some will be required to sleep wearing a special mask that provides a continuing flow of oxygen. It's called CPAP (continuous positive air pressure) and the therapy is extremely effective.

When the cause is physical obstruction of the airway, minor surgery that removes the tissue blocking the airway often can relieve the problem. Losing weight also helps reduce the tendency to have blockage.

Drugs such as tranquilizers and sleeping pills should be avoided because these drugs can worsen any disorder of breathing and possibly causing a life-threatening interruption of respiration.

Sleep apnea has been increasingly recognized as a medical problem in the past several years, and people troubled by snoring should be certain to discuss it with their doctor.

Dr. Steven Lamm is clinical assistant professor of medicine at New York University Medical Center.

Studies show how exercisers may shed cholesterol

By Ira Dreyfuss

WASHINGTON (AP) — Exercisers are better able to shed cholesterol, and a new study provides provocative hints about how it may happen.

Researchers say athletes' cholesterol seems to be more easily attracted away from a substance that makes it stick to artery walls, and toward a substance that carries it to the liver, from which it is excreted.

However, they caution against reading too much into the study, because the area is too new and the number of people involved too small.

The report in the American College of Sports Medicine journal, Medicine and Science in Sports and Exercise, looked at particles that carry cholesterol. One is low-density lipoprotein (LDL), which deposits cholesterol in the form of fatty plaque inside arteries. The other is high-density lipoprotein (HDL), which moves cholesterol away.

Scientists already knew that exercisers tend to have more HDL than do their inactive counterparts. This study indicates the benefit may extend beyond this — that exercisers' HDL may be, in a sense, more active.

The researchers at Children's Hospital Medical Center and the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine looked at 10 men with an average age of 32. Five of the men were sedentary, but the others were highly trained athletes, running at least 60 miles a week.

All were given a moderate workout on an exercise bike. Blood samples were taken before and after the workout. The samples were then used in lab experiments.

"We isolated the HDL part, then we put that in a solution with an LDL that had been loaded with radioactively labeled cholesterol," said researcher Barbara N. Campaigne. "Then we saw how much of that radioactively labeled cholesterol moved over to HDL."

There was little change in the cholesterol of nonexercisers, said Campaigne, now ACSM's director of research development.

But the runners' HDL moderately increased its ability to sweep up cholesterol after exercise, Campaigne said. This was striking because exercise didn't increase HDL levels in either group, she said.

This suggests regular exercise must have made the difference in HDL activity, the study said.

"It shows for the first time how exercise influences the high density lipoprotein cholesterol," Campaigne said.

Teachers often overlook students with dyslexia

By Craig Phelon
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN ANTONIO — As a first-grader, Joseph Pridgen hated school because school seemed to hate him.

Relegated to a special-education class, he still couldn't manage to do what the other kids did. Classmates laughed at him when he tried to read. The scrambled words and letters just didn't make sense.

Now, however, 10-year-old Joseph is a fourth-grader making all A's and the honor roll.

The change from frustrated misfit to model student took place after six months of therapy for dyslexia. Joseph's parents said his success is due to the family going outside the public school system to seek help.

Joseph's parents are among many in San Antonio and across the country who complain that services for dyslexic students in public schools are inadequate.

Joseph's mother, Wendy Collier, said the North East School District identified Joseph as learning-disabled and assigned him to a special-education class, but did not deal with his specific problems.

Joseph's turnaround didn't happen until after his grandfather, Thomas Pridgen, took him to a private clinic. Vicky Miller, director of the Reading, Thinking and Learning Clinic of San Antonio, designed a learning program specially for Joseph.

Joseph attended twice-weekly sessions with therapist Ray Woolbright and learned to compensate for his reading disability.

"In six months he was a different child," Collier said. "He went from straight F's to straight A's."

THE WORD "dyslexia" is commonly used to refer to a number of learning disabilities relating to the way information is processed in the brain. These disorders are caused by physical differences in brain functions and are considered hereditary, Miller said.

Educators acknowledge that special programs for children like Joseph can make a dramatic difference, but say a lack of resources in overburdened school districts make expanding services difficult.

The National Institutes of Health estimates that as many as 15 percent of school children may suffer from some form of dyslexia. Other estimates of dyslexics in the general population range from 5 to 25 percent.

If Joseph's dyslexia had been diagnosed and treated earlier, he would have had a better start in school. Instead, his first two school years were not only wasted, but they also took a serious toll on Joseph's self-esteem, Collier said.

"He was frustrated and he was angry," she said. "There were numerous parent-teacher conferences his first year, mostly for discipline problems. He finished the school year with an F average and a U in conduct."

'I feel sure those resource teachers did pick up on that (the dyslexia) and probably were helping him with word skills. Of course, we don't have the capability in the public school of doing one-on-one tutoring and children can make a lot of progress on a one-on-one basis.'

— Mary Ellen Glaze
executive director for curriculum, North East

Mary Ellen Glaze, executive director for curriculum at North East, said: "I feel sure those resource teachers did pick up on that (the dyslexia) and probably were helping him with word skills. Of course, we don't have the capability in the public school of doing one-on-one tutoring and children can make a lot of progress on a one-on-one basis."

A REPORT on Joseph by the district's Admission, Review and Dismissal Committee in 1990 did recommend special help in word skills, but his parents said the dramatic progress didn't happen until he received intensive, one-on-one attention.

Joseph's private sessions cost roughly $2,000, but his family believes the therapy reclaimed his future and restored his self-esteem. "It was very well spent," his mother said.

Both state and federal governments require public schools to screen for dyslexia and provide the special training to help students overcome it.

The federal Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Texas Education Code mandate special training for any student with dyslexia or a related disorder.

The U.S. Supreme Court added weight to the federal mandate in November when it ordered a Florence County, South Carolina, school district to reimburse the parents of dyslexic student Shannon Carter nearly $36,000 for her treatment in a private school after the public school failed to provide services.

THE PROBLEM, say educators, is that neither the Texas nor federal mandate include any money to pay for dyslexia treatment. School districts already facing severe budget problems must either find extra money for the expensive dyslexia services, or risk lawsuits.

DEAR ABBY

Little word research cures curious itch

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Almost all pharmacies use "Rx" as an identifying symbol, so I have been asking pharmacists the origin of this symbol.

Van Buren

Thus far, I have asked perhaps two dozen in different parts of the country, and not one of them was quite certain.

"It's probably Latin," say some.

"I think it's a Greek derivation," say others.

A few have said, "Why not ask Dear Abby?"

So I am. You may use my name. — AL BENNETT, EVERETT, WASH.

DEAR AL BENNETT: To paraphrase my Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, Rx is the symbol used at the beginning of a prescription and means "take."

The Henry Holt Encyclopedia of Word and Phrase Origins offers this slightly more elaborate definition:

"Rx. The Latin 'recipere,' 'take this,' provides the R in the symbol Rx used by pharmacists for centuries, while the slant across the R's leg is a sign of the Roman god Jupiter, patron of medicine. The symbol looks like Rx and is pronounced that way."

DEAR ABBY: I was intrigued by the letter about Johnny Lujack because of an incident that took place in 1945 after Johnny Lujack had become a household name.

I was a corporal in the Army Air Corps, stationed at Boca Raton, Fla. I was on a three-day pass and had gone to Palm Beach. Late one night, I was walking down a deserted street when a motorcycle careened down the street, skidded at high speed, throwing the driver into the middle of the roadway, unconscious.

I raced to give him aid, and an ensign on the other side of the street also raced to help him. Together we hailed a car and helped the injured party into the car and saw him off to the hospital.

The ensign and I talked for a minute, then went for a cup of coffee. He asked me where I was staying. I told him I was sleeping in the lobby of a nearby hotel, but I had to get out by 6 a.m. because it was against the rules to rent a hotel room to an enlisted man.

The ensign invited me to share his room as he had twin beds. Then he said, "Maybe we should introduce ourselves."

I said, "My name is Emil Kohn." He replied, "Mine is Johnny Lujack." — EMIL KOHN, TEMPE, ARIZ.

DEAR ABBY: I just want to thank you and everyone who participated in your Operation Dear Abby and wrote to those of us in the service who are doing tours throughout the world. Each and every one of our jobs is difficult and the rewards are scarce. I used to wonder whether people thought of us back home. But now I can lay those thoughts to rest.

I hope that you print this so those who wrote will realize how important a simple 10-minute letter is to those of us thousands of miles from home.

On behalf of the U.S. Armed Forces, I thank you. — EMFA MICHAEL E. BURKE, USN ACTIVE, USS BUTTE (AE-27)

Pasta dish gets mixed reviews

By Linda Anderson

I l-o-v-e pasta. I know you've heard me say I don't like Italian food very much, but it's not the pasta part I don't like, it's the red sauce. If the pasta is covered with white sauce or cheese sauce or something like that, it's one of my favorite things.

Anderson

And of all the shapes and sizes of pasta, I think I like angel hair the best. So naturally when I saw Lipton's Golden Saute Angel Hair Pasta on the supermarket shelves, I had to try some.

I saw Golden Saute in two flavors — Chicken Broccoli and Parmesan — though there might be more. The youngest taste-tester and I chose Chicken Broccoli (although she isn't as enthused about broccoli as I am) to check out for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

A 4.2-ounce box of Golden Saute (supposed to make four ½-cup servings) cost $1.19.

The front of the box carries the usual "New!" claim, as well as one that says "One Step! Cooks in 5 minutes," which is always a handy trait for a food item to have.

Label advertising on the back of the box goes like this: "Lipton Golden Saute combines delicate Angel Hair Pasta with vegetables, herbs and spices in a special way, creating a new Pasta side dish that has a delicious sauteed taste and texture all its own."

According to the side label, where the nutrition information is listed, one serving (½-cup prepared as directed) contains 140 calories, 3 grams fat and 500 mg sodium. I thought it tasted kind of salty.

The taste-test has some surprising results. I wasn't nearly as impressed with Golden Saute as I thought I would be (like I said, I thought it was too salty), but the young taste-testers thought it was wonderful. The younger one, who is not a big broccoli fan, even asked for seconds. (Of course, as in most dried, packaged side dishes, the broccoli doesn't really count for much.)

And they did decide we really need to taste the Parmesan flavored Golden Saute next, so I'll buy them a box. I could probably make a less-salty (and more cost-effective) version of the chicken-and-broccoli Golden Saute from scratch, though...

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Cancer doctor cheerleads for hope, health

By Alice Kahn
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — If love of life is contagious, don't hang around Dr. Ernest Rosenbaum unless you want to catch the bug. Rosenbaum is a cheerleader for wellness. So are lots of people, you say. But how many joie de vivre carriers actually work with people who have fatal diseases?

Rosenbaum, joined by colleagues from the Better Health Foundation, the University of California and Mount Zion Hospital, has put together his 16th book, "You Can't Live Forever/You Can Live 10 Years Longer With Better Health" ($14.95, Better Health Foundation). Whether you have a diagnosis or just a bad attitude, he wants you to live a healthier life.

An oncologist who works with the dying, the recovering and the should-have-been-dead-years-ago, Rosenbaum says longevity depends on your attitude. With cancer patients it depends on "how much they'll fight for their life and their good fortune at responding to treatment. If they respond, it's a whole new ball game."

He also knows both sides of the bed.

"I never missed a day's work in 35 years until I had half a lung removed for a carcinoid tumor in 1980. I think I've made it." At 64, he's also the veteran of a heart attack and several patched coronary arteries.

"I'm a Type A," the hard-driving, heart-attack prone type, he says. "I'm trying to be a B plus."

'I'm against living miserably because of fear of dying or debilitating disease. You'd want to live longer if you thought that you could live healthier.'

— Dr. Ernest Rosenbaum

TRAINED IN hematology with considerable experience in cardiology, Rosenbaum says 98 percent of his patients have a serious disease. He is acutely aware of how doctors can unwittingly contribute to a patient's hopelessness and death.

"I give projections. I'm never able to tell exactly how long a patient will live. Some of the most healthy-appearing die right away, and some of the sicker live longer."

Thirty years ago doctors could keep a diagnosis from a patient. Today, as the old jokes go, there's good news and there's bad. The good news is that because of state laws, more patients are fully informed. The bad news is that they're still dying. But with Rosenbaum the importance of truth is not just a legal thing. It's something he knows in his healed heart.

"You must tell the patient what's wrong. But if you say, 'The operation was not a success. I couldn't remove the cancer,' the next sentence should be, 'But here's something we can do to help you ...' "

Many doctors think they are saying this when after breaking the bad news, they add, "Here's a pamphlet you can read."

Maybe the patient walks away with something like the Breast Cancer Resource Guide, one of the many useful publications put out by the Better Health Foundation, the organization that Rosenbaum serves as medical director. But compare handing someone a pamphlet with the Rosenbaum approach.

DURING THE course of an interview, a patient calls. Rosenbaum stops his 90-miles-an-hour answer to talk to him. The caller is not a colleague sending referrals, not his stockbroker, not an emergency, but a patient he has treated for years.

"Jerry, how's your pep/energy level?" he says into the phone. "If you feel like you need a transfusion, call me, any time. If things feel not right, let's have lunch and talk about it. I'm counting on you to figure out if it's an illness feeling or a quality-of-life problem."

Quality of life is as important as longevity to this warm, opera-loving Groucho Marx look-alike. While science tells us that a lifespan of 115 years is now within our reach, most people are not shooting for it. We fear the last 40 years or so will be spent helpless, in a wheelchair, a nursing home or worse.

"I'm against living miserably because of fear of dying or debilitating disease," says Rosenbaum. "You'd want to live longer if you thought that you could live healthier."

His formula, described as 12 Steps to Better Health in his book, contains nothing shocking. They are the usual common sense ideas about eating a low-fat, high-fiber, calcium-rich diet. He does go into some detail about the hard things: quitting smoking, avoiding overexposure to the sun, losing weight, reducing stress and understanding what moderate drinking means.

ROSENBAUM INCLUDES making peace with death as part of living well. In his world, everyone would have some kind of "living will" specifying how they want to be treated in the event of life-threatening illness, right down to morphine-yes/CPR-no. He carries a card attached to his driver's license stating his desire for only a "chemical code," meaning just drug treatment, not a full "code blue" that would include electric defibrillators and respirator.

"If they can bring me back easily, OK. But if it takes a long time — forget it."

Spoken like a true Type A.

Asked to explain what it is that he tells people to help them live better, Rosenbaum runs out the door and calls, "Izzy!" His wife of 44 years appears. Isadora Rosenbaum works with him, and it is obvious that he adores her. "Izzy's probably the best counselor in town."

She explains his success in keeping people not just alive but happily so.

"It's his enthusiasm for life. Not giving up. If a treatment doesn't work, he always tries something else. He gives people hope."

Rosenbaum adds, "I encourage courage. It takes a lot of courage to fight for your life when you are sick."

Although he tries to reassure his patients that he will be there for them during the dark days, he prefers to focus on the quality of life rather than on the end of life. One of his favorite techniques is encouraging a person with a fatal disease to plan a vacation. A colleague walked into his office recently and summed up his career for him this way: "Ernie, you're really a travel agent."

STUDY: Exercise has more benefits

(From 1D)

The study also found that pre-exercise blood from the nonrunners was better at shifting the radioactive cholesterol from LDL to HDL particles.

But the researchers suspect this may not be as much of a benefit as it seems. They think the nonrunners looked good by contrast because runners' HDL was already busy clearing nonradioactive cholesterol from the runners' tissues.

However, Campaigne cautioned that the report is preliminary — a hint, not a conclusion. For one thing, it involved only five people in each group, and larger numbers would be needed to establish that the effect the researchers found was not a statistical fluke.

For another, the highly trained runners who were tested may have simply been genetically blessed with bodies which, among other things, were naturally able to clear their cholesterol better, Campaigne said.

"It's possible it happens in ordinary athletes, too," Campaigne said. "I don't know if the response would be as marked."

The study is "preliminary but very provocative," said Dr. Neil F. Gordon of the Dallas Heart Group.

The researchers may have found a reason why exercisers have lower rates of clogged coronary arteries, said Gordon, former director of exercise physiology at the Cooper Institute for Aerobics Research in Dallas.

It indicates the runners may be better able to clear cholesterol before it can develop into plaque that can narrow arteries and lead to artery-blocking clots that can cause heart attacks, Gordon said.

However, another doctor is sharply critical of the study. The small numbers of people studied, combined with possible variability in measurement, could make the research meaningless, said Robert S. Schwartz, associate professor of Medicine at the University of Washington.

Even if there is a gain in HDL activity, the study does not indicate it lasts for long enough after the workout to be worthwhile, Schwartz said.

CARE: System saves money, paperwork around the country have undertaken similar redesigns, including Boston Children's Hospital, a 349-bed teaching institution. But most have been small, nonteaching hospitals, Conti said.

Before performing its redesign, Stanford Medical Center in Stanford, Calif., a 626-bed teaching hospital, found that an average patient, with an average length of stay of 6.8 days, saw 50 to 55 hospital employees, Conti said. Now, he said, the average is down to 12.

Yale-New Haven did a similar study; it found that the average patient now sees close to 50 hospital employees.

Under the current system, patients entering the hospital first go to the admitting department, where they must wait until a bed is ready. Once in their room, they have a primary nurse, but then there are "lots of other people running in and out," Conti said.

Under the new model, still being developed, patients will go directly to their rooms. All admitting functions will be performed on the floor where a patient stays, and each person will be tended to by a patient care team.

Patients will still be assigned primary nurses, but those nurses "will be relieved of some of those other nonprofessional duties that have fallen to them over the years," Conti said.

Patient care associates will perform hands-on patient care services that don't require a nurse, such as getting patients walking again or even providing respiratory therapy, he said. The hospital expects to draw on a mix of workers to fill those jobs.

Yale-New Haven hopes to switch two or three patient care units to the system by late spring or early summer, Conti said.

Hospital employees are anxious about the changes, "but I think more and more people are excited about the opportunity it represents," Conti said.

Conti said he expects employment to drop as a result of the reorganization. Cutbacks in the work force are to be achieved through normal attrition, a vacancy review process and redistributing employees into new jobs, hospital officials said.

The hospital wants to fill the vast majority of the new positions with current employees, hospital officials said.

By revamping its system of delivering care, the hospital hopes to cut its current operating budget of $411 million by 10 percent to 12 percent, or about $40 million, in the next two to three years, Conti said.

Like other hospitals nationwide, Yale-New Haven is trying to adapt to a changing marketplace, one in which competition will play an increasing role, hospital officials said.

"Society has concluded we are spending too much on health care and we have to reduce our costs," Conti said.

However, unions representing health care workers say hospitals should wait to see what kind of health care reforms are adopted before slashing costs.

Yale and other hospitals are "trying to squeeze money out of little people who don't get paid a lot," said Paul Fortier, vice president of District 1199 of the New England Health Care Employees Union, which represents about 200 food service workers at Yale-New Haven.
