Suit seeks trustee districts in MISD

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Midland Independent School District has come under the attack of two ethnic groups which seek to force the MISD to switch from the at-large system of electing board trustees to the single-member district system.

The class-action suit to effect that change was filed Thursday in federal court in Midland by the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) and the Black Advisory Council.

The groups claim the at-large scheme of electing the seven trustees violates their civil rights and is "illegally and unconstitutionally dilutes the voting strength of Mexican-American and Black electors."

The suit comes almost three weeks after U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton ruled in a compromise settlement between the City of Midland and LULAC and the Black Advisory Council that four of the seven City Council members shall be elected from single-member districts. The mayor and two City Council members would be elected at-large. The U.S. Department of Justice is reviewing the judge's ruling, which is City Council has agreed to accept in lieu of its present at-large system.

Dr. Joe Baressi, MISD superintendent, said Thursday that the school board is "going to study" re-districting.

"WE HAVE BEEN looking at a combination of at-large and single-member districts," he said. Baressi suggested four trustees could be elected in single-member districts and three could be elected at large. "We don't have any magic numbers."

"I can't speak for the board," he said. "We certainly are willing to examine the situation."

Baressi said his concern is for trustees who will serve "the best interests of the city and the best interests of the school."

"My concern and hope would be that we have board members that represent the total district and don't become fractionalized and represent one ethnic group or one neighborhood." Ideally, the board would be keyed to "the education of the total community."

LULAC President Isabel Jimenez said her group would prefer a five-two mix instead of the four-three mix proposed by Baressi. Five members elected in single-member districts would be "more beneficial," she said.

Ms. Jimenez noted that the City Council setup is unlike that of the MISD. The mayor is elected by the people; the MISD board president is elected by a vote of fellow board members. "This is why I would like to see five instead of the four (single-member districts)...It'll be what the judge suggests if it goes that far."

"THIS IS something totally different from the city," she said. "It can't be equal (boundaries) because of the busing. It can't be divided like the city."

Ms. Jimenez agreed with Baressi that "the city's needs comes first, the entire community," rather than any particular neighborhood or ethnic group. However, she noted that a member of the minority community "is going to be aware of some of the problems that exists."

The polarizations that divide the community's ethnic groups tend to lessen when people work with one another and get familiar "and you find out you have a lot in common," she said.

"There's nothing to fear...It's the unknown."

Ms. Jimenez said she was pleased with the judge's ruling on the City Council's makeup, but said "the mayor (G. Thane Akins) still comes across in such a negative fashion. He should be a little more open-minded...He says it (the single-member district scheme) won't work."

Though the class-action suit incorrectly says otherwise, she noted that minorities have served on the school board.

"It can be done; it hasn't been done too often," she said. "It's very difficult to get somebody (a minority) elected at large."

BARESSI NOTED that at least three minorities, two blacks and one Hispanic, have served on the school board. Lorenzo Ausbie, a black minister, served in the early 1970s. Roger Robles, businessman, served in the early to mid-1970s, and James Ramsoure, retired MISD coordinator of guidance and counseling, served on the board from 1974 to 1980.

"It's possible for minorities to get elected to the school board," Baressi said. "In my opinion, we don't discriminate."

Will Deaver departure make room for Baker?

Deaver

Baker

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — White House chief of staff James A. Baker III, once the outsider in President Reagan's inner circle, has emerged as the president's pre-eminent aide with the impending departure of longtime Reagan confidants Michael K. Deaver and Edwin Meese III.

Deaver's decision to leave this spring for a still undetermined job outside government was abruptly announced by Reagan on Thursday in a two-paragraph written statement. The president cited the deputy chief of staff's "18 years of loyal and outstanding service to me and to the first lady, both in California and in Washington."

A few hours later, Reagan formally resubmitted the nomination of White House counselor Edwin Meese III to be attorney general.

Meese's nomination stalled in the Senate last year. But it appears to have a greater chance of confirmation this year following a special prosecutor's investigation of alleged financial improprieties that found no evidence to prosecute Meese.

The two Californians shared power and influence with Baker in a sometimes uneasy triumverate through most of Reagan's first term. Their departure would leave the 73-year-old president, at the outset of his second term, without the California cadre that has surrounded him since his entry into politics nearly two decades ago.

Conservatives, already concerned about the departure of their strongest voices within the White House, undoubtedly will press for appointment of one of their own to balance the more pragmatic Baker.

Such lobbying from the right could improve the chances for U.N. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick to land a new, influential job within the administration.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick has expressed a desire to leave her present post and has indicated she would return to teaching if no other administration position is forthcoming.

'Star Wars' plan defended

WASHINGTON — With important new arms control talks just days away, the Reagan administration says it must proceed with "Star Wars" anti-missile research so that Americans won't someday be forced to choose between "surrender and suicide."

Administration officials defended the "Star Wars" initiative Thursday as Secretary of State George P. Shultz made final preparations for talks next week with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in Geneva, Switzerland.

One senior U.S. official, briefing reporters, said the space-based, anti-missile program "is not a bargaining chip" in any arms talks with the Soviets.

The statement came as the administration, offering a new defense of the controversial program, contended that the Soviet Union is also engaged in research and development of an anti-missile system that could give Moscow an ominous advantage.

Shultz was to receive final instructions today from President Reagan, and leave for Geneva Saturday evening. The purpose of the talks next Monday and Tuesday is to establish a framework for comprehensive arms control negotiations.

The Soviet Union has signaled that one of its key objectives will be to pressure the Reagan administration to curb the "Star Wars" research, which is aimed at developing the capability to destroy Soviet missiles before they strike.

Rescuers climbing toward wreckage

Associated Press

LA PAZ, Bolivia — With hail, rain and fog barring an aerial rescue, Red Cross workers are scaling an icy, snow-covered Andean mountain to reach the wreckage of an Eastern Airlines jet that crashed with 29 people aboard.

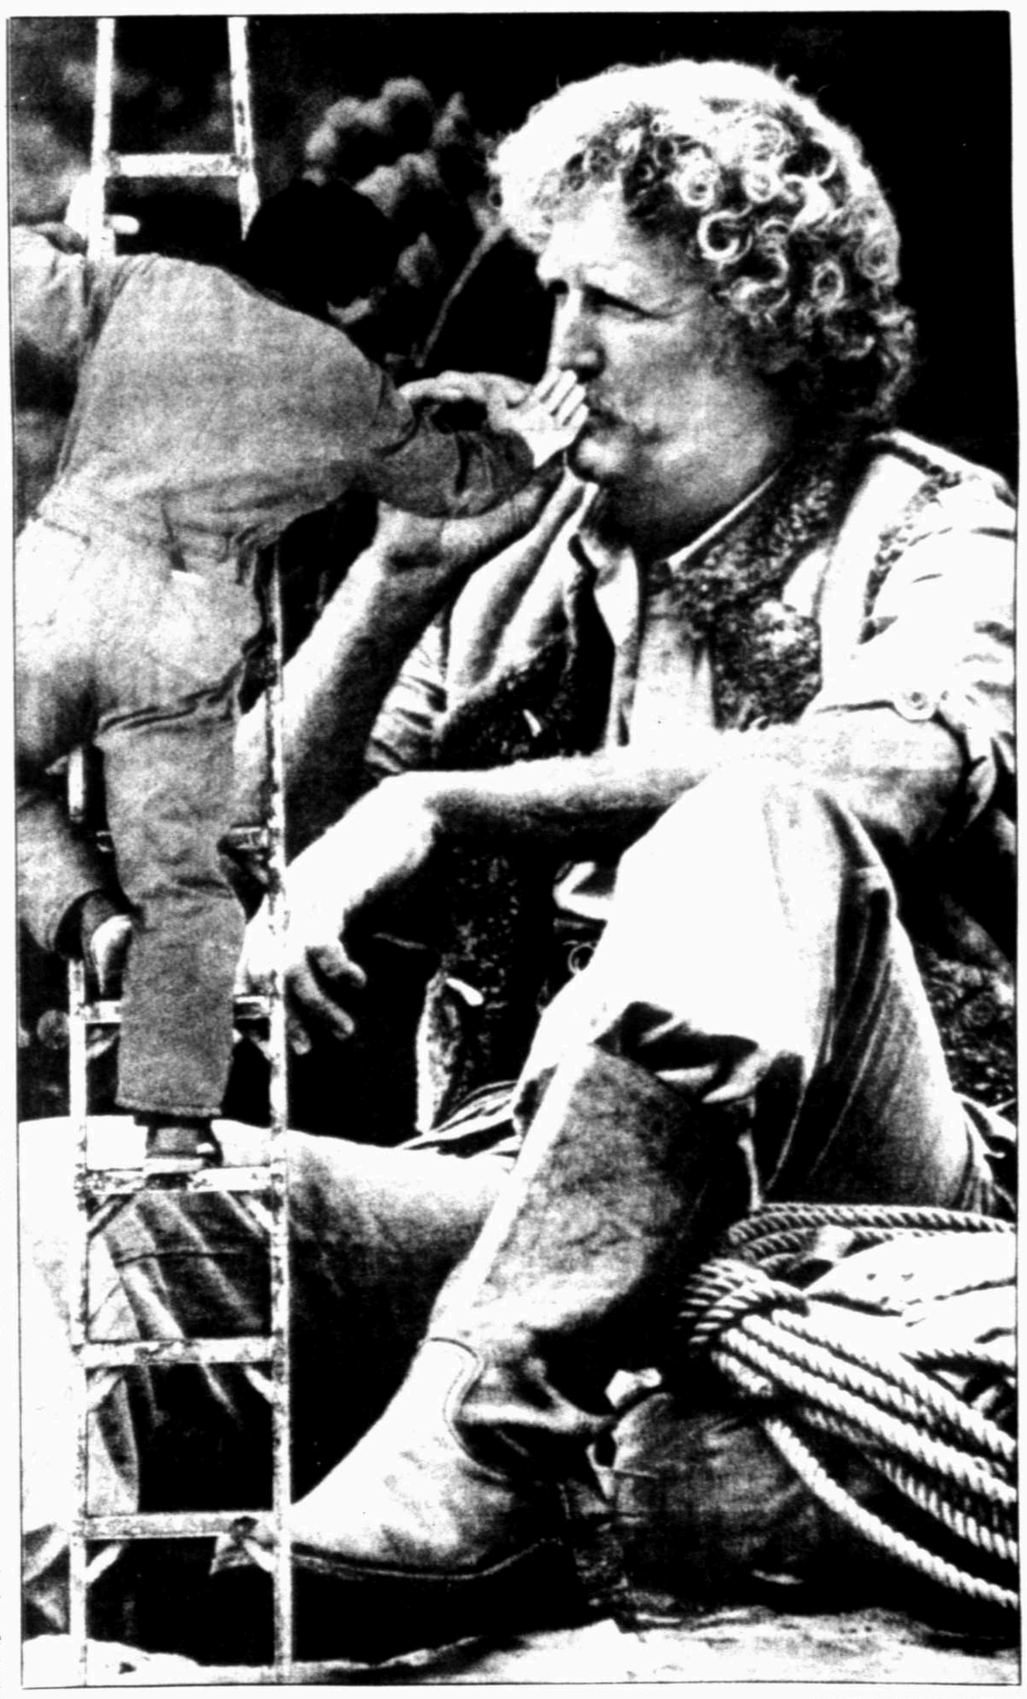

Officials said there was no hope anyone was alive aboard the Boeing 727, which crashed Tuesday night about 1,600 feet below the summit of 21,000-foot Illimani Mountain. Eight Americans were among those on the plane.

Fernando Lopez de Castillo, a Red Cross official, said 11 Red Cross rescue workers set up a base camp at Uranu Mine, at the foot of the mountain 35 miles southeast of La Paz, and some began climbing toward the crash site Thursday.

Two Bolivian air force helicopters ferried a U.S. diplomat and five Bolivian mountaineers toward the Red Cross camp but the weather interrupted their trip.

Among the passengers was Marian Davis, wife of the U.S. ambassador to Paraguay, Arthur Davis. Two of her daughters, Karen and Susan, passed through La Paz on Wednesday on their way to the Paraguayan capital, Asuncion.

Other Americans on the plane were William Kelly, director of the Peace Corps in Paraguay; Jonathan Watson, a U.S. Marine; and a group of Eastern employees that included Capt. Larry Campbell, 1st Officer Kenneth Rhodes and 2nd Officer Mark Bird, all based in Miami, and Capt. J.B. Loseth of Miami and Haywood H. Hargrove Jr. of Houston.Loseth and Hargrove were not working at the time of the crash.

Charges against four boys expected

Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — A 6-year-old deaf, retarded boy, who died after a dispute apparently over a bag of potato chips, had been beaten for two hours by four children, ages 4 to 13, authorities and the boy's relatives said.

The four children are expected to be charged next week as juveniles with manslaughter, West Palm Beach police Lt. Jerry Winebrenner said Thursday.

"There is a degree of brutality far in excess of a regular playground fight," said Palm Beach County Deputy Chief Medical Examiner John Marraccini, who performed an autopsy on Torrence A. Davis, who died Nov. 26. "If the alleged story is true, this child was subjected to multiple beatings over a period of two hours."

"Some kids started pushing him around and he apparently got kicked and thrown," Winebrenner said. "That night he got sick. He was vomiting. The next morning he was found dead in his bed."

Four boys, ages 4, 9, 10 and 13, are believed to have been involved, Winebrenner said.Their names were withheld because of their ages.

Jeanne Howard, chief juvenile division prosecutor in Palm Beach County, said she reviewed cases against two of the older boys and gave police approval to arrest them on manslaughter charges.

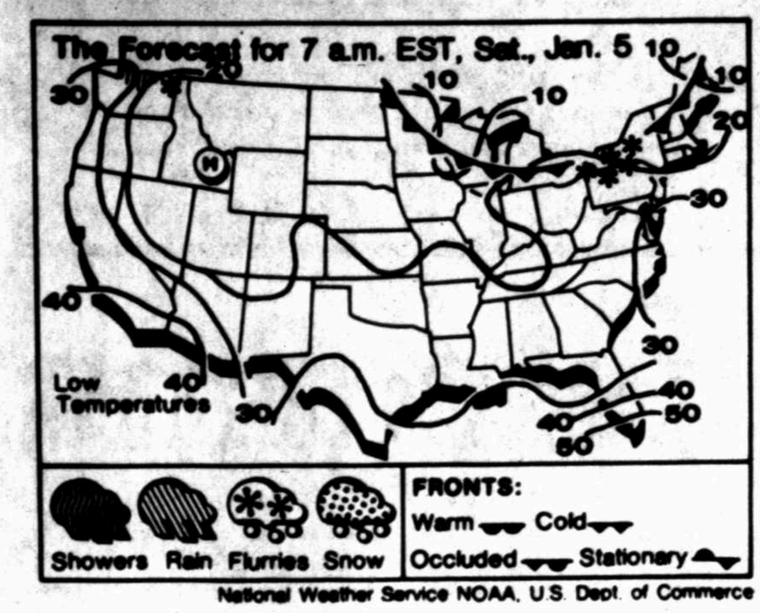

If the facts of the cases against the other two boys are the same, they too could be charged, she said.

"We anticipate making four arrests. From the statement that we got, we feel that they were all involved," Winebrenner said.Detectives talked with the four boys and "they told us what had happened," he said.

Davis, described as small for his age, was found dead the morning after the playground brawl. The medical examiner's office said he suffered from internal injuries to the heart and liver, and classified his death a homicide.

WEATHER SUMMARY

National Weather Service NOAA, U.S. Dept. of Commerce

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecast clear weather for most of the nation Saturday, with snow flurries expected in Pennsylvania and New York.

Saturday's temperature could reach into low 60s

From Staff and Wire Reports

Saturday's expected warmer temperatures may make it an ideal day for outdoorsmen to get out as forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport are calling for fair skies with lows in the lower 30s tonight warming to highs in the low 60s Saturday. Winds are expected to be light and variable through Saturday.

Thursday's high of 51 was 19 degrees below the record set in 1977. This morning's low was 28 degrees above the record of 8 set in 1959.

STATE

A high-pressure ridge centered over Texas kept skies clear across most of the state today, while a very weak warm front moving eastward across the Panhandle and the High Plains brought the threat of rain.

Scattered light rain fell in the eastern half of the Panhandle as cloudy skies developed in the wake of the warm front, the National Weather Service said.

Winds were light westerly and northwesterly across the state.

The clear skies in the northern half of the state prompted low temperatures below the freezing mark. Most readings were in the 30s over most of Texas, with extremes of 21 degrees at El Paso and 39 at Midland.

NATION

Warm Gulf of Mexico air collided with cold air from the north, spawning freezing rain or snow over much of the Eastern half of the nation, with temperatures below freezing recorded as far south as Alabama.

Snow spread from western Kentucky across western Tennessee, the Missouri bootheel, north Mississippi and northeast Arkansas on Thursday. Up to a foot of snow was recorded in western Tennessee.

Winter storm warnings were in force over southern Illinois, central Tennessee and northeast Tennessee. Travelers' advisories stretched across the region and into southwest Ohio and northern Alabama.

Freezing rain and snow prompted warnings in West Virginia's panhandle, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New York and southern New England. A winter storm watch was posted for northeast Pennsylvania.

Snowstorm frosts, frustrates state

Associated Press

HOUSTON — A snowstorm that frosted roads and lawns drew frustrated sighs from many South Texans, and for others the weather had grim consequences.

At least four people died in weather-related accidents and five others were killed in fires that authorities say could be linked to the freezing temperatures. Hundreds of traffic accidents were reported and dozens of schools ordered closed on Thursday.

Thursday night and Friday morning were expected to bring more low temperatures. Freeze advisories were posted for far South Texas Thursday night and early Friday morning, the National Weather Service said. The forecast for South Texas called for lows Friday morning near freezing along the coast to the teens the Hill Country.

In the lower Rio Grande Valley, temperatures were expected to drop below the freezing mark on Thursday night, worrying farmers who saw their citrus crops ravaged by a hard freeze a year ago.

In Houston, 0.4 inches of snow had fallen Wednesday night — the first officially recorded snowfall in the nation's fourth-largest city since 1980. Whitened lawns disappeared by Thursday afternoon, but near freezing temperatures returned by nightfall.

Snow also fell in Beaumont, and so did school attendance. Officials said about 15 percent of the city's students stayed home in the wake of the frost.

"It was just a touch of snow for us, but it was probably exciting for some people and especially for the kids," said Ray Broussard, of the National Weather Service in Beaumont.

Farther inland in Texas, travel was improving but continued to be hazardous, particularly in the Austin and San Antonio areas, which were trying to recover from ice and snow on Wednesday.

In Austin, the 3.3 inches of snow there was the most since 1966. All city offices except those dealing with emergency services were shut Thursday for a second straight day.

Police in the state capital handled more than 250 traffic accidents and some areas were so jammed with wrecked autos that officers at the scene were told to quit taking reports, Officer C.F. Adams said. Instead, drivers were given do-it-yourself accident report forms and were told to mail them.

At the Night Rider Wrecker Service in Austin, Cathy Senterfitt said the firm had to close because there were too many calls from stranded motorists.

In San Antonio, the 2.4 inches of snow — the most in 20 years — was dubbed the "Blizzard of '85." Police reported more than 100 traffic accidents between midnight and late Thursday morning. A day earlier, 572 accidents were recorded when San Antonio's entire freeway system had to be closed.

"Most San Antonians are not familiar with this particular weather," Mayor Henry Cisneros said.

Of the four fatalities blamed on the storm, three were in traffic accidents. The other was an 84-year-old San Antonio woman, Hilda Burt, who slipped on an icy sidewalk Wednesday and died of a head injury.

Fire officials in the Houston area said blazes that killed five other people may have been weather-related. A Houston man died Thursday morning in his home near the city's downtown. Authorities said the wood frame home caught fire after the man lit an open barbecue pit in his living room to keep warm.

Earlier Thursday, a 59-year-old man and his 24-year-old son died in their Conroe home when a fireplace blaze swept throught their home. In Manvel, officials were still investigating the cause of a house fire that killed a 39-year-old man and his 11-year-old son.

The trace of snow barely would inconvenience Northerners. But in the normally balmy Sun Belt, where temperatures were near 80 a week ago, Houston Independent School District officials kept 177,000 students home, fearing icy road conditions would endanger children on their way to classes.

Traffic was moderate and only about 30 accidents were reported — probably because many people apparently stayed home, police said. About 50 trucks spread sand on the city's iced streets starting at 5 a.m., said Public Works Department spokesman Dan Jones.

"People are going crazy," said Maria Sandoval of the Val Verde County sheriff's office in Del Rio, west of San Antonio along the Texas-Mexico border. "We're getting snow, but we don't know what to do with it."

But one Houston native said the weather fulfilled his lifetime dream.

David Postma, 28, donned skis and slipped down the bank of a Houston bayou Thursday morning.

"The snow is quite sticky and there's not enough of it," said Postma. "I've owned skis eight to 10 years and used them in Colorado and Vermont. But I've never been able to ski in Houston."

When winter weather made its first pass through Houston, it left behind a white blanket. But the Sunbelt city was back to normal as temperatures climbed by mid-morning.

Talking about talks: Cheating key issue

By ROBERT FURLOW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Can you tell if the other side is cheating? Can they tell if you are?

If the answers are "no," with survival in the balance, is an arms control agreement worth anything at all?

Verification — the means of checking up on the other side — is the heart of any arms agreement. If Monday and Tuesday's preliminary arms control talks between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko lead to substantive negotiations, verification could become a crucial issue — or a barrier to agreement.

President Reagan, campaigning for the White House in 1980, declared that the U.S.-Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty negotiated during the Carter administration was "fatally flawed" by inadequate verification procedures. It has never been ratified by the Senate, although both sides have agreed informally to live within its stipulations.

In the years since then, weapons have become smaller and more sophisticated, making it even tougher for a potential adversary to keep track of them.

Much of this nation's verification work is kept highly secret. Witness the protests from Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in December when the Washington Post reported that a satellite capable of intercepting radio, telephone and satellite communications from the Soviet Union will be put into orbit in January by the space shuttle. Weinberger called the decision to publish the story the "height of journalistic irresponsibility."

Nonetheless, government officials, former officials and outside scientists still would agree on two points. First, U.S. efforts are immense. Second, they can't possibly see everything.

In general:

—A handful of satellites take close-up pictures of Soviet installations. Pictures shot from the sky are so good that they show the numbers on a license plate of a car parked on a street. Satellites listen in on Soviet communications. Others can feel the heat of a missile blast that other detection devices might somehow have missed.

—Radar keeps watch, too, from ships off the Soviet coast, a huge array on the western tip of Alaska and other installations in allied nations.

—High-altitude spy planes still take to the air. They add versatility to the system, though satellites have taken over most of the Soviet-watching chores that once were performed by planes, such as the U-2 piloted by Francis Gary Powers and shot down by the Russians in 1960.

—Seismic sensors measure the earth tremors caused by underground blasts that would go unnoticed from cameras high in the sky.

In an example published earlier this year in Popular Mechanics, Michael Krepon and Barry Blechman, former officials of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, went through a hypothetical Soviet missile test.

In that imaginary but typical case, they said, a U.S. infrared satellite in stationary orbit 22,000 miles up picks up the missile's exhaust trail after launch deep in the Soviet Union.

Ground stations outside the Soviet Union track the missile and pick up radio messages, or "telemetry," sent back to Earth — information useful in answering such questions as the weight of the missile and its payload.

A ship with very sophisticated sensors stands off the Soviet Union's Pacific Coast — between that nation and Alaska — waiting to monitor reentry and impact in a usual landing area.

Ramsoure, who's black, said that he has "always felt like all segments of the population should be represented" on public boards.

"I think the single-member district concept is a better way to have the whole city represented."

Amado Calderon, who is allied with LULAC, said, "In the past, the at-large system has been proved discriminatory and unconstitutional" and has kept minorities out of public offices. "I'm hoping we can work this out (via a compromise) without using the court system. I don't see any point in fighting the school board."

Oralia "Lillie" Corrales, president of the Mexican-American Advisory Council, said that "Right now, we feel that any plan they come up with will be better than what we have. We really wanted seven single-member districts."

In the at-large system, the areas where minorities live are "sometimes...overlooked," she said. "We really need somebody (on the board) for the eastside. We really need somebody for the southeast side." Midland's eastside is largedly Hispanic, and the southeast side is mostly black.

"WE'RE HOPING we can come up with more fair representation," she said. "We're excited about it."

As did Ms. Jimenez, Ms. Corrales referred to the City Council's heretofore stand for the at-large system. "They've always made it quite clear they would not go for it (the single-member district). They had been quite explicit about that in panel discussions throughout the election. We like him (Mayor Akins); we think he's doing a very good job."

She speculated that the City Council was reluctant to give up the at-large system because "people just don't give that (power) up."

Ms. Corrales said many have voiced that the single-member district scheme "will not work...I'm hoping that they'll see that minorities have something to offer....We (all) live, play and work here."

Charlie Jackson, president of the Black Advisory Council, could not be reached for comment.

The suit's petition against MISD says that "The present at-large scheme of electing members of the board of trustees results in a denial or abridgement of the right to vote of the plaintiffs on account of their race or color... The political processes leading to nomination or election of members of the board of trustees are not equally open to participation of plaintiffs," said the suit's petition, "in that they have less opportunity than other members of the electorate to elect representative of their choice."

The suit noted that the city of Midland's population is made up of 16.1 percent Hispanic and 10 percent black. That's based on 1980's census of 70,525. According to the 1982-83 school reports, the MISD student population was 17,753. Of that, 25.39 percent were Hispanic and 10.68 percent were black.

The petition noted that the federal courts in a 1975 decision had found that the MISD had operated "a dual system" and ordered a desegregation plan. The school was sued for maintaining a segregated school system.

Officials listed as defendants in the LULAC-Black Council suit against MISD include Parker Humes, MISD board president, and Trustees Joseph Golding, Ronald Britton, Joyce Sherrod, Joseph Reed, Fred Newman and Bill Jackson.

Some who feared that moderates were achieving too strong a voice in the administration launched a drive last year to put conservative Colorado brewer William K. Coors in Meese's White House job. But the effort fizzled when Meese's attorney general nomination ran into trouble and he remained on Reagan's staff.

For a time in mid-term, it appeared the California conservatives' hand had been strengthened when longtime Reagan associate William P. Clark Jr. was brought in as national security adviser and quickly re-established himself among those closest to the president's ear.

But Clark soon left to take over the Interior Department and announced on Wednesday he was through with Washington altogether and ready to return to his ranch on the West Coast.

"It's been a Baker-Deaver administration" in recent months, said one presidential intimate, commenting on the latest changes on condition he not be named. "Now, you've got Meese going, Clark going, Deaver going. That leaves Baker and Darman."

Darman is Baker deputy Richard G. Darman, once one of the bright young men around Massachusetts Republican Elliot Richardson, and an outsider who has worked his way closer and closer to the center of power in the Reagan White House.

Deaver's title was deputy White House chief of staff, but his function was more that of an influential family member whom the rest of the staff looked to for clues to the president's mood and on whom Reagan depended for his keen public relations instincts.

Baker, a Texas lawyer and longtime friend and associate of Vice President George Bush, is best known for his administrative skills, political instincts and an ability to negotiate a compromise when opposing sides appear poles apart.

Others, including political adviser Lyn Nofziger, left earlier. And Attorney General William French Smith, the only member of Reagan's old "Kitchen Cabinet" of friends and advisers who came to Washington with him and stayed, is poised to return to the West Coast as soon as his successor is confirmed.

That leaves only David C. Fischer and Craig Fuller of the Californians who came to the White House with Reagan four years ago.

BOYS

Winebrenner said Davis was mentally retarded and could neither hear nor speak.

"I understand the kids would kind of pick on him because he was a little bit different," Winebrenner said. "You know how kids can be. They can be cruel without meaning to be."

Florence Ellison, the boy's mother, said the beating apparently occurred after a fight over a bag of potato chips.

Ken Johnson, a police operator on duty early today, could not confirm or deny Ms. Ellison's version of the incident.

The victim's grandfather, James Davis, said three relatives, all under age 7, had witnessed the beating.

"They (the assailants) started punching him and then punched him down to the ground and started stomping him," he said. "And then they tried to make him eat dirt."

That night, Ms. Ellison said, her son "was sick and vomiting and had aches."

City Recreation Director Bob Burdett said the beating took place on a Sunday afternoon, when there were no supervisors at the park. Ms. Ellison had left her son there while she visited relatives nearby, Winebrenner said.

"Some boys on this block like to pick on people a lot," said Justin Santos, 10, a friend of the victim.

Ms. Howard said the cases either would go to the grand jury or would be heard in juvenile court. The only way the boys could be charged as adults is by order of the grand jury, she said.

Correction

The Midland County Commissioners' Court granted $2,000-a-year pay raises to County Librarian John Deats and Road-and-Bridge Superintendent Albert Stewart.

The Reporter-Telegram erroneously reported in Thursday's edition that the raises were $3,000 each.

Their raises were the same as those the court gave Constable Tom McGinnis and Justices of the Peace Robert H. "Bob" Pine and Charlie Sprayberry.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Farmworkers should be covered by unemployment law, says labor leader

AUSTIN (AP) — There's no reason for Texas farmworkers not to be covered by the Texas Unemployment Compensation Act, says a prominent labor leader and former state official.

Joe Gunn, secretary-treasurer of the Texas AFL-CIO and former Texas Employment Commission member, testified Thursday in a lawsuit challenging state law that bars most farmworkers from drawing unemployment benefits.

The trial continued today.

"There is no reason at all for agriculture workers not to be covered by the law," said Gunn. "It was just a question of who lobbied best when the law was passed."

The suit contends the Texas Unemployment Compensation Act is unconstitutional because it discriminates against most agriculture workers by not allowing them to draw unemployment benefits when without jobs.

"It's not rational at all," Gunn said. "A farmer can have a yardman who is covered by the act and can draw unemployment compensation but just across the fence he has a bunch of farmworkers who are not covered."

Gunn maintained that unemployment benefits, which amount to about half a worker's regular pay, "give stability to the area and dignity to the person."

Earlier, Rebecca Harrington, director of the United Farm Workers in Texas, testified that farmworkers, mostly Mexican-Americans, frequently choose to take illegal low pay rather than no pay.

She said union surveys showed that citrus workers in the Rio Grande Valley make about $2.35 an hour and vegetable workers $2.95 an hour.

"Everybody in South Texas knows they should get $3.35 an hour and everybody knows they don't get $3.35 an hour," she said. "It's not enforced."

On cross examination, Ms. Harrington told Assistant Attorney General Bob Barbisch that the UFW aim was to have workers draw pay when they work and draw unemployment compensation when they don't work.

West Texans 'holding our breaths' until flights begin

VALENTINE (AP) — Residents in this sparsely populated region of West Texas say they're "holding our breath" now that Air Force pilots can begin supersonic training flights over their heads.

In an agreement worked out in September, fighter pilots from Holloman Air Force Base in New Mexico can begin the flights over West Texas and southwestern New Mexico anytime after New Year's Day.

They haven't started yet, however, and Holloman officials say the actual number and frequency of the low-level test flights won't be known until the F-15 fighter wing uses all available flight time within White Sands Missile Range.

In West Texas, some residents still oppose the flights and at one time had said they might file a lawsuit against the Air Force to stop them.

But Ralph Voigt, a Fort Davis-area rancher who led opposition, said Thursday no court action has been initiated.

"We're not going to do anything until they start and we get some reaction from the people under the flights," he said. "We're just holding our breath."

For five years, the Air Force and officials from New Mexico and Texas disagreed over a plan to expand Holloman's airspace to restricted areas over Catron County, N.M., and Valentine, Texas.

Under the new Air Force plan, the 49th Tactical Fighter Wing is authorized to fly up to 300 missions per month over each area. The flights will be performed at 15,000 feet above sea level, or about 8,000 feet above ground in Catron County.

Plainview grain storage firm loses federal contract

PLAINVIEW (AP) — PLB Grain Storage Corp. has lost a federal grain contract worth more than $7 million because of a $3 million shortage of government-owned grain at the facility, a government lawyer says.

Arnold Grundeman, a U.S. Department of Agriculture attorney, said the long-term contract was cut after PLB officials failed to correct the shortage, which was discovered in September during a surprise audit by Commodity Credit Corp., the manager of surplus government commodities.

Grundeman said the CCC sent PLB owner P.L. Blake of Greenwood, Miss., a notice about the contract termination in mid-December.

Grundeman said that although the shortage represented only 5 percent of the 22 million bushels of government corn stored at PLB since 1980, there was no choice but to terminate the contract, which guaranteed Blake more than $3.7 million per year through 1986.

"The contract was broken by PLB," Grundeman said. "Had they performed their part of the contract, the CCC would have performed its."

Gramm finds Senate seat 'awesome'

AP Laserphoto

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, shakes hands with Vice President George Bush after taking a mock oath of office Thursday on Capitol Hill. Gramm's wife Wendy holds the Bible used during the ceremony.

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm said it was "awesome" to sit in his chair on the Senate floor for the first time.

"I thought as I sat in that chair that was first used by Sam Houston, that was used by Lyndon Johnson and by our friend John Tower, it is an awesome responsibility you have given me by making me your senator," Gramm said Thursday after he and seven new Texas congressmen were sworn in to serve in the 99th Congress.

"This is a day when we're all walking around giving each other kidney problems by patting each other on the back," Gramm joked in a Senate committee room filled with well-wishers. "But it is a day I will remember as long as I'm here and for the rest of my life."

Prominent among those at Gramm's party was Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., who chairs the Budget Committee that Gramm would dearly like to get on, though there is only one opening and Gramm is second to the bottom in Senate seniority.

Gramm praised Domenici, but said, "he needs help on the Budget Committee. He needs me on the Budget Committee."

To cheers from the crowd, Domenici replied, "I'm going to do everything I can to get all the help I can, so I want him on the Budget Committee."

On the House side, the six new Republicans from Texas took the oath without the company of their dean, Bill Archer of Houston, who was stranded in Texas by weather, then a mechanical problem with the commercial airplane he was scheduled to take to Washington.

Albert Bustamante of San Antonio hosted a reception at a hotel for the 12 new House Democrats while his Republican colleagues from Texas were treated to barbeque beef in the House Ways and Means Committee room.

"I hadn't felt like a congressman until today when I took the oath and looked up nd saw my parents in the gallery," said Mac Sweeney, a former White House aide from Wharton who beat two-term incumbent Democrat Bill Patman. At 29, he is the youngest of the 27-member Texas delegation.

Larry Barton, 60, watched his son, Joe, become a congressman.

"It moved me more than I thought it would," the elder Barton said. "I cried just a little bit."

Larry Combest of Lubbock, who won the seat Kent Hance vacated to seek Tower's Senate seat, said he was glad nobody asked him to say anything right after he took the oath.

Parents take selfless son's body back to Poland

DALLAS (AP) — A former Polish Solidarity leader's son, who kept his illness secret until shortly before the day he died because he didn't want to burden his parents, has been returned to his native soil for burial, officials say.

The body of Paul Sitarz, 16, was flown from Dallas to Poland on Jan. 1, accompanied by his parents, Longin and Stanislawa Sitarz, Dallas funeral home officials confirmed Thursday.

The parents had obtained a visa from Polish officials to attend the funeral of their only child.

Paul died Dec. 15, three days after he began coughing blood during classes at Hillcrest High School and was taken to St. Paul Medical Center. Subsequent surgery revealed that cancer had spread from his prostate to his stomach and lungs.

Congressional 'glow' gives way to 'cold, hard' decisions

NATION

By EVANS WITT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — With the warmth of first-day festivities already a memory, leaders of the new Congress are talking of "cold, hard" decisions on cutting social programs to deal with burgeoning federal deficits.

"We're going to all have to jump off the cliff several times," said Assistant Senate Majority Leader Alan K. Simpson of Wyoming, commenting on the political perils of this year's budget decisions.

The newly elected members of the 99th Congress were sworn in on Thursday with traditional formality.

Vice President George Bush administered the oath to the new and re-elected senators four at a time, while House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill gave the oath en masse to the lower chamber as family members and friends looked on from packed galleries.

But the Eighth District of Indiana remains without a representative as the House struggles with the question of who really won the close fight there in November — Republican Richard D. McIntyre or Democratic incumbent Frank McCloskey. The House voted along party lines to let its Administration Committee look into the matter.

The top leaders of both houses were duly elected and installed in other ceremonies Thursday. Thomas P. O'Neill took the gavel as House Speaker for what he said is his last term and Robert Dole of Kansas assumed his newly won job as Senate majority leader.

But the question of who will be chairman of the House Armed Services Committee remained in doubt.

AP Laserphoto

Keeping his seat as House members take the oath of office Thursday is Republican Robert McIntyre. He is challenging incumbent Rep. Frank McClosky, D-Ind., in the still-undecided race.

Rep. Melvin Price of Illinois should retain the post by seniority, but younger House Democrats have called for his replacement. House Democrats were to caucus in closed session today to decide the issue.

In the new Senate, the GOP has a 53-47 majority in the Senate, down two seats from the pre-election edge. In the new House, Democrats hold a 252-183 margin, assuming McIntyre is eventually seated — down 14 seats with the election results.

Housekeeping chores were the main order of the day. But the talk was all of federal deficits and freezing federal spending — all spending — to deal with that flood of red ink.

Dole kicked off his first day in the job declaring "We want to get out front" on the deficit issue and not wait for marching orders from President Reagan. Some form of freeze "will be the centerpiece of any reduction plan," he added.

On the House side, O'Neill said in his acceptance speech that the American public will judge this 99th Congress "by our willingness to make the tough decisions to get our fiscal House in order...These deficits will not take care of themselves. It is up to the president and to the Congress to take them on."

NATION in brief

Physicist given asylum

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials, pledging to be "gracious hosts," have granted political asylum to a Soviet physicist whose seniority and credentials place him in the top rank of defecting scientists.

Artem Vladimirovich Kulikov, 51, was returning to the Soviet Union on Christmas Eve after finishing a three-month stint as an exchange scientist in a U.S. nuclear research laboratory in Batavia, Ill., when he requested asylum at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport.

The State Department said on Thursday that they granted the request to Kulikov, believed to be the first Soviet high-energy physicist to seek asylum in the United States.

Price still faces revolt

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite the backing of House leaders, Rep. Melvin Price is facing a revolt among some fellow Democrats who say he is too old and infirm to remain as chairman of the influential Armed Services Committee.

The Democratic Steering and Policy Committee voted 24-0 with one abstention late Thursday to recommend that House Democrats retain the Illinois Democrat as leader of the committee he has headed for a decade.

All 252 Democrats were to vote today to pick the chairmen of the standing committees in a secret ballot, a power granted Democrats as the majority party in the House. Price is said to be the only returning chairman who might be in trouble.

Producer cites letters

NEW YORK (AP) — The producer of a CBS documentary that prompted retired Gen. William C. Westmoreland's libel suit says he relied on a U.S. officer's letters from Vietnam complaining of "outright lies" about enemy strength.

The letters, written in 1968 by Navy Cmdr. James Meacham to his wife, Dorothy, told of "outright falsification on the very highest levels" in reports about the strength of the communist forces opposing American troops.

Man ruled competent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An 85-year-old man accused of sending 770,000 people to die in Nazi concentration camps is mentally competent to face proceedings for his extradition to Yugoslavia, a psychiatrist says.

Andrija Artukovic has memory lapses and thought during an interview that the current year was 1999, but understands the charges against him, according to a report by Dr. Saul J. Faerstein of Los Angeles, who advises federal courts.

His report was submitted Thursday to U.S. Magistrate Volney V. Brown, who scheduled a hearing for Tuesday to settle Artukovic's attorney's claim that he is unable to participate in extradition proceedings because of his health.

Goats given reprieve

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chalk it up to congressional influence or old college ties, but Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger has granted 1,500 goats on San Clemente Island a new — perhaps only temporary — lease on life.

Until Weinberger intervened Thursday, a civilian hunter hired by the Navy was to have boarded a helicopter today to begin a shotgun slaughter of the andalusian goats on the small California island.

Temporary justices preside in gubernatorial battle

By PHILIP BRASHER
Associated Press Writer

BISMARCK, N.D. — A state Supreme Court with four temporary members must settle a dispute involving two governors, one holed up in the Capitol's executive suite, the other living in the governor's mansion with his family.

Sitting amid packed boxes in the executive suite Thursday was Republican Allen I. Olson, who has refused to leave while embroiled in a flap with his Democratic successor, George Sinner.

The disagreement centers on when a new governor can take office. At stake is the chance to appoint two judges to the state's highest court.

Olson claims tradition and the state's Constitution dictate that he stay until at least Saturday, when his four-year term expires, or Tuesday, when the new Legislature convenes.

But Sinner, who defeated Olson on Nov. 6, signed his oath of office Monday, claiming he had the authority to become governor on New Year's Day. He moved his family into the governor's mansion Wednesday, about 500 yards across the Capitol lawn from the executive suite, but said he is staying away from the Capitol offices until Olson leaves.

His staff refers to Olson as the "former governor."

Ironically, Sinner based his authority to take office Jan. 1 on an opinion Olson issued while attorney general and governor-elect in December 1980.

Pomp and deficit

It isn't uncommon for the Congress to begin a new session by renewing debate on a number of bills held over from the preceding session. In fact, that's more often the case than not.

So it was Thursday when the new and repeat members of the 99th Congress opened their office doors, dusted off their bookshelves and, generally, made ready for the start of business. The opening days of a congressional session traditionally are marked by little work, some pomp and circumstance, cordialities. In the hallowed halls of the nation's capital pomp is a part of everyday life, but the business is seeing to it that the health and welfare of the American people is safeguarded, and that the bills are paid.

That translates into spending tax dollars and levying ample taxes to ensure that an adequate dollar flow is coming in to cover expenses. That isn't always pleasant for politicians who would much prefer to merely spend the taxpayers' money without having to worry about providing the means of revenue.

This session, though, the question of balancing income with outgo — or at least making a legitimate effort to come close — will stay with the law-makers because of that dirty word "deficit."

At this point far-removed from the Potomac, it's simple to resolve the nation's fiscal dilemma. One merely cuts $200 billion in expenditures from the nation's budget or increases tax levies to a point adequate to cover outlays.

Nothing so difficult about that. Well, not if the law-makers merely will close their eyes to the constituents and special interest groups they'll indoubtedly outrage if they slash the "wrong" federal programs. Or if they simply don't take out a lease of more than two years on their Washington residence in the event they opt for increasing taxes to bring in more revenue.

Sure there are other issues back to haunt members of Congress this session — immigration reform, arms control, agriculture policy reform and a host of others. But none takes precedence over dealing with the the deficit dilemma because until that matter is resolved, any other actions lawmakers take probably will make matters worse.

The pomp in the opening days of this Congress may be extremely short-lived.

Another View: Judicial 'deficit'

In his annual year-end report on the judiciary for 1984, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger outlines some progress during the year in the administration of justice at the federal level, but calls for further improvements in the year ahead.

Sounding a familiar note, the chief justice reports that the caseload inflation in the federal courts continues to grow. Despite impressive increases in the productivity of federal judges in both the trial and appellate courts, in 1984 the judicial "deficit" deepened, as more cases were filed than were terminated. According to the chief justice, at the beginning of 1984 the average federal judge had approximately a full year of work to do exclusive of any new cases filed.

The 98th Congress created 61 district court judgeships and 24 appeals court judgeships, but a judicial advisory council estimates that 47 additional judgeships still are needed. The problem of overcrowded dockets and long court delays apparently will remain with us.

Apart from creating more judgeships, Burger calls on Congress and the president for other actions to ease the burdens on the federal courts. The first action requested is to raise judicial salaries to keep federal judgeships attractive to able lawyers. Burger reports that real income for federal judges has shrunk by one-third since 1969.

As a result, the chief justice states, the federal judiciary is losing some of its best judges, and many lawyers now refuse judicial appointments out of fear that their compensation will be regularly reduced by inflation. A federal commission that every four years recommends salary levels for federal judges, members of Congress and high executive officials will make new recommendations in 1985, and it is hoped that their advice will not fall victim to penny-wise, pound-foolish political pressures.

The chief justice also calls for several actions to bring about caseload relief. Among other steps, Burger proposes that Congress abolish the Supreme Court's mandatory appellate jurisdiction for certain kinds of cases and allow the high court to screen all cases through the discretionary writ of certiorari procedure under which most issues reach it; create a temporary tribunal to resolve doctrinal conflicts among the 13 federal circuit courts of appeal, and eliminate "diversity of citizenship" jurisdiction for the federal trial courts, leaving state courts to rule on state law issues.

These suggested changes should not be confused with controversial proposals in recent years to restrict the jurisdiction of the federal courts over certain types of cases in order to lessen opportunities for what some critics of the courts see as unwarranted judicial activism. The chief justice's recommendations would redirect the flow of certain cases without depriving deserving litigants of their days in court, and they should be followed by Congress.

U.S. warms to SA's uranium

WASHINGTON — Millions of Americans unwittingly support the white supremacist government of South Africa every time they pay their electric bills.

Jack Anderson

Eighteen U.S. utility companies run their nuclear generators with uraniaum bought from South Africa.

In a report soon to be released, the Nuclear Control Institute, a Washington-based public-interest group opposed to nuclear proliferation, points out that almost half the imported uranium used by U.S. utilities comes from South Africa and Namibia, which is controlled by the Pretoria government.

The United States has increased its purchases of South African uranium significantly during the Reagan administration. The Energy Department's use of South African uranium for enrichment jumped 350 percent between 1981 and 1983.

The money Pretoria gets for its uranium is particularly important now, when the world price of South Africa's principal export — gold — is so depressed.

Much of the uranium South Africa sells is actually mined at Rossing, in Namibia, which is one reason the South Africans have continued to occupy Namibia years after the United Nations declared the occupation illegal.

"For South Africa, Rossing is a bonanza," the institute report observes. "By occupying Namibia, South Africa increases by half the foreign exchange it earns from uranium exports." The South Africans have been mining uranium in Namibia since 1976.

The Reagan administration is helping South Africa strengthen its white-minority rule not only by buying, but by selling as well. According to internal congressional documents seen by my associate Vicki Warren, this even extends to nuclear-weapons technology. One computer sold to South Africa — after being embargoed by the Carter administration — "can be used to model nuclear explosions," one document reports.

In fact, the number of licenses granted for exports to South Africa by the State Department's Office of Munitions Control jumped to $88 million worth of goods in the first quarter of 1984. The value of licenses granted previously amounted to only a fraction of that figure for an entire year.

Though the licenses are good for two years and do not mean the items were actually sold, the sharp increase in licenses indicates at the very least a trend toward potential expansion of military sales to South Africa.

Until Congress put a stop to it with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act in 1978, the United States enriched South African uranium and sent it back to Pretoria. When the law cut off that trade, a large amount of South African uranium was awaiting shipment in an Energy Department warehouse.

Five U.S. utilities eventually took the enriched uranium off the South Africans' hands — and out of the Energy Department's warehouse — by buying it at a bargain price. The cost of enriching uranium had gone up by several million dollars while the stuff was sitting in the warehouse.

According to the Nuclear Control Institute report, the DOE refused to release the names of the companies that bought the enriched uranium, because "it is likely that some or all of the utilities ... would be faced with protests from consumer groups, public-interest organizations and various other groups."

Through its own investigation, the institute learned the identity of two of the companies: Maine Yankee Power Co. and Northern States Power Co. of Minnesota. Maine Yankee declined to comment. A Northern States spokesman said the company had a contract with DOE for enriched uranium, and that it was possible some South African uranium was "commingled" with the material it bought. The spokesman added that Northern States has a contract with Exxon for some imported uranium, but didn't know if South Africa was the source.

STRICTLY PERSONAL: Many of you have expressed anxiety about President Reagan's new budget. From confidential documents I've had access to, I can give you the lowdown on one thing you may be worried about:

— Will programs for low-income Americans be slashed?

The White House is determined to do just that, despite Budget Director David Stockman's denial last fall in congressional testimony. A White House document, stamped "very confidential," calls for more than $63 billion in cuts for social programs (except Social Security) from fiscal years 1986 to 1988. Of these cuts, $31 billion are to come from low-income programs.

One particularly cruel proposal is to cut Supplemental Security Income payments to match the amounts of regular Social Security increases. This would mean that the poor would, in effect, get no cost-of-living increases like the rest of Social Security recipients.

— Is Lew Lehrman trying to sign me up?

I recently reported that the millionaire Republican candidate for New York governor in 1982 (who may run for president in 1988) had been advised by aides to Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., (another potential candidate) that Lehrman and his staff should stop wearing their trademark: fire-engine-red suspenders. Too gaudy, Kemp's people clucked, too cultlike.

White singing realignment blues

AUSTIN, Tex. — The reality that 1984's unprecedented Republican victory in Texas was no aberration but true party realignment is confirmed by Democratic Gov. Mark White's burdens as he prepares for his 1986 re-election campaign.

Democratic politicians here want the governor to show ordinary Texas "Anglos" (non-Hispanic whites) that they can still be comfortable in their ancestral party. Yet, White will have trouble making state government seem less a haven for the blacks, browns, women and other liberals he has hired the last four years. Worse yet, he may have to boost state revenues this year.

Rowland Evans

Mark White is a non-ideological middle-roader who combines a good-ole'-boy conservative image with populist rhetoric. But like Democratic officeholders nationwide, he cannot repudiate liberal and minority group interests by radically cutting spending or changing the state government employment. That is the cutting edge of party realignment, particularly in the Sunbelt.

Liberal-to-moderate Democrats scoff at realignment, blaming 1984 on the miserable Senate campaign by liberal State Sen. Lloyd Doggett (upon whom Texas Democrats bestow the scapegoat's horns worn elsewhere by Walter F. Mondale). Nevertheless, there is no longer euphoria over 1982's Democratic sweep, once seen as proving that Hispanic and black voter registration opened up statewide election of liberals.

After 1984, liberals say it is not prudent to nominate the Doggetts. State AFL-CIO President Harry Hubbard denies any desire to run the Democratic Party or select its candidates, asking only that Democrats not nominate labor-baiters. Liberals want no challenge mounted against conservative Lt. Gov. William Hobby, whose primary election defeat could doom White and the rest of the ticket in the general election.

Needless to say, liberal daydreams of challenging White in the primary are buried. But liberal restraint does not guarantee his re-election. His masterful passage last year of a state education program, while alienating teachers, did not reinforce his soggy standing with voters. A post-election poll taken for Sen. Phil Gramm gives White 52 percent positive and 36 percent negative ratings — shaky when compared with 66 and 27 percent ratings for Gramm after his bitter campaign against Doggett.

Republicans plan to worsen those ratings by contending that revenue increases for White's education program violate his 1982 no-tax-hike pledge. But the governor's real trouble is falling oil prices, causing $120 million less in revenue a biennium for every $1-a-barrel drop. Even if disguised in state college tuition and other fees, a second White tax increase could be fatal.

Higher taxes might well propel the Amarillo oil entrepreneur, T. Boone Pickens Jr., into politics as Republican candidate for governor. White's sensitivity is shown by his charges that Pickens' takeover attempt of Phillips Petroleum would cost jobs.

Republican strategists are divided over whether a candidate Pickens would emerge as anti-establishment corporate rebel or unscrupulous corporate raider. What they agree on is that a tax increase would turn some politically inexperienced businessman into a viable challenger for governor. But they would much prefer ex-senator John Tower, four times a statewide winner, returning to run for governor.

Actually, the identity of the Republican nominee is less important than the new arithmetic of Texas politics. The Anglo majority is now clearly Republican, stemming from both Northern immigration and rural disaffection. Further registration of blacks and browns cannot overcome that, but might drive more Anglos to the Republicans. Simultaneously, the 25 percent upper-income bracket of Hispanics are trending Republican.

Texas Democrats seem to be replicating the national dilemma: a nominating process geared to produce candidates incapable of being elected. Ex-representative Kent Hance, the popular Boll Weevil nosed out in the Senate primary by Doggett, may try in 1986 for state attorney general (or even governor, if White raises taxes). But party leaders express such loathing of Hance that his future as a Democrat looks hazardous.

In private conversation, White says he has an issue for 1986 even better than his attack on utility rates in 1982: federal plans to dump nuclear waste in Deaf Smith County. But close associates believe the governor, a shrewd political analyst, is deeply worried about the next two years.

Had White been on the ballot in 1984 (as he would have been before state officials' terms were doubled to four years), it is doubtful he could have survived. Even two years later in 1986, he will not find easy going. No Democrat is enthusiastic about 1988. That begins to sound like realignment.

CHARLEY REESE

Are we listening to children?

When Larry Jones told me about the children found in the garbage dump on Thanksgiving Eve, I remembered what I had been doing that evening.

It rained, and I spent the evening in my apartment writing. I love rainy days. Maybe it is my Celtic blood that celebrates one more victory over the elements when it is cold and wet outside and I am warm and comfortable inside. Whatever, I'm happy when it rains.

Charley Reese

So I couldn't help but think of the contrast — me, comfortably ensconced in my apartment with plenty of food and drink — and six children, who range in age from 4 to 11, outside in the dark competing with stray dogs and wild raccoons for scraps of food in a county garbage dump.

If you can remember what it was like to be that young, you can easily imagine it must be frightening to a child to venture into such a place in the dark. If you've ever been soaked to the skin and chilled, you can imagine how uncomfortable they were. If you've ever visited a sanitary landfill with its great open spaces and ominous mounds and know how the rain sounds and how scurrying things make noises in the dark, you can visualize the children out there alone while most of us were spending a comfortable evening in pleasant anticipation of a feast.

Not all of us were inside that night. Police were out with their creaking leather gun belts and their cars, prowling here and there, like watchmen they are, seeing to it as best they can that all's well. Luckily for the children, an officer found them at the dump at 3 a.m. He took them to a county home for dependent children where Larry is the director. They were washed, fed, and bedded down.

Larry said there are several remarkable things about these children. One, they are all beautiful — blonde and blue-eyed. Poverty sometimes seems to make people ugly, but these children are lovely. Two, despite their hard lives, they were remarkably well-mannered which maybe says no matter how low their parents have fallen, they were better people in better times. And, three, these six brothers and sisters showed an unusual amount of sibling love for each other — holding hands whenever they walked about the grounds at the county home.

The parents abandoned them. They were, it is thought, fugitives from the law. Other relatives have been located and the children are now with them, though these relatives are by no means well off.

Children are paradoxically more vulnerable but also stronger than adults. Their spirits, like their bones, are still pliable — not yet rigid and brittle. A bad experience which would forever embitter an adult can be forgotten or at least dealt with by a child so long as there is a break and a respite. The 4-year-old, the day after the night in the dump, was expressing uncontainable joy over what the people at the county home believe was the first dress she had ever worn.

Neither you nor I can save the world. The world is not easily changed by anyone and misery and madness, as well as other things, have their own momentum. Compared to the enormity of the world's problems, now and soon to be, our influence is puny.

But who dares to say that putting sparkle in the eyes and happiness in the heart of one child for one morning is not worth doing? Our power to do good is in inverse proportion to the distance between the need and ourselves. Our greatest influence is within our families, then within our own communities. We cannot change the world, but we can change ourselves and our communities for the better.

There are some American children, like those found in the dump, who are physically hungry. There are more who are hungry for joy and happiness. So long as any of us have a future, we still have time now to do what we can to make someone a little happier than they would otherwise be if we do nothing. In our own towns and cities and communties some children are crying out. Are we listening?

New Yorkers rally around Goetz

NEW YORK (AP) — Hundreds of New Yorkers, angered by the arrest of a man accused of shooting four teen-agers in a subway car, are donating money to pay Bernhard Goetz's $50,000 bail and get him out of jail.

"This guy rendered a service," said retired Fire Chief Michael Matera, who said he had once been mugged in uniform on a subway train. "He is our John Wayne."

Goetz, 37, was ordered held on $50,000 bail at the city jail on Rikers Island on Thursday at his arraignment on four attempted murder charges in the Dec. 22 shootings. The hearing before Manhattan Criminal Court Judge Leslie Snyder followed his return under heavy guard from Concord, N.H., where he had surrendered.

Later, two lawyers and five men who said they were friends and associates of the self-employed electronics specialist announced the formation of the Bernhard Goetz Legal Defense Fund.

"We want to get him qut as soon as possible, possibly tomorrow," Dennis Coraslini, co-chairman of the fund committee, said in appealing for money at a news conference outside the court building.

Goetz shot the youths after they approached him and asked for money, Assistant District Attorney Susan Braver told the court. The shootings sparked controversy over whether they were justified.

Miss Braver said Goetz "had methodicallly shot four people in a car crowded with at least 20 people" and "stopped shooting only because he ran out of ammunition.

"By his own admission, he intended to kill each one of them."

The Guardian Angels patrol group raised $102 from subway passengers for the defense fund Thursday night, and said they would picket the jail today. "The fear in our subways is real and we're in sympathy with anyone who has been hassled in a train," said Angels leader Curtis Sliwa.

Attorney Frank Brenner, appointed to represent Goetz despite the defendant's wish not to have a lawyer, said Goetz was not a bail risk because he had surrendered and given authorities a videotaped confession.

The shooting occurred after the four teen-agers approached Goetz and asked for a match, then for the time, then for $5, police say.

Police said three of the youths were carrying screwdrivers in their jacket pockets and all have arrest records. One, paralyzed from the waist down, is hospitalized in critical condition, one is in satisfactory condition and two have been released from the hospital.

Martin makes no comment before death

ANGOLA, La. (AP) — David Dene Martin, a onetime sidewalk evangelist described as alternately obsessed with God and drugs, went to his death in the electric chair today for murdering his wife's lover and three other people.

He made no final statement, walking tight-lipped and wide-eyed to the heavy wooden chair at the Louisiana State Penitentiary, where he became the second man to be executed within a week.

After Martin was pronounced dead at 12:16 a.m., the coroner pulled away the dead man's T-shirt to check his pulse and bared a tattoo: "Love Gloria," the name of his unfaithful wife whose affair sparked the murders.

Martin, 32, was the seventh man executed in Louisiana and the 33rd in the United States since 1976 when the U.S. Supreme Court allowed the reinstatement of the death penalty.

"With David, it was either God or drugs," said Richard Shapiro, Martin's lawyer, summing up the fervent extremes of his life.

Martin faced four death sentences for the Aug. 14, 1977, murders at a house trailer in the Blue Bayou community between Houma and Thibodaux.

One of his victims was Bobby Todd, 33, his wife's lover. Terry Hebert, 27; Sandra Brake, 19; and Anne Tierney, 19, were present when Martin appeared with a gun he had stolen from a neighbor several days before.

Martin fired 15 shots, stopping twice to reload and once to clear the gun when it jammed.

Martin said he was so strung-out on the drug PCP — known on the street as "Angel Dust" — that he did not even realize he was killing people.

"He was of good courage," said the Rev. Raymond Winders of Paris, Texas, a Seventh-day Adventist who accompanied Martin in his final moments.

Bombings were 'gift to Jesus'

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A woman accused with three other people of bombing three clinics where abortions were performed says she participated out of love for her fiance, who is also charged in the Christmas Day blasts.

Kaye Wiggins, 18, called the bombings "a gift to Jesus on his birthday," during a news conference Thursday at her lawyer's office.

Ms. Wiggins; her fiance Matthew J. Goldsby, 21; James Thomas Simmons, 21; and his wife, Kathy, 18, are charged in the bombings, which caused $375,000 in damage. The two men also are charged with a June bombing.

"I love (Matthew), I love him with all my heart," Ms. Wiggins said. "And I hope everybody knows I did this because I love him."

She said she tried unsuccessfully to talk Goldsby out of the bombings, but that she felt unable to report the plans because there was no one she could trust and she wanted to spend the rest of her life with him.

Ms. Wiggins is from Pensacola. The other three live in Cantonment, a paper mill town about 10 miles to the north.

Federal agents have testified that the two men, each being held without bail on 16 counts of violating federal firearms and explosives laws, admitted the bombings and said God told them to destroy the clinics.

The women, both free pending trial, are accused of conspiracy and aiding and abetting.

Polish policeman recounts priest's beating

TORUN, Poland (AP) — A secret police lieutenant nearly wept on the witness stand today as he testified that he twice turned away in horror as his commanding officer beat the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko before the priest died.

Lt. Waldemr Chmielewski, who has required medical attention because of the strain of testimony, said he and a fellow lieutenant at least twice asked their superior to leave the popular pro-Solidarity priest alive on the side of the road.

Both times they were ordered to "keep driving" toward the dam from which the three of them threw the priest into a reservoir with a 22-pound sack of rocks tied to his neck, said Chmielewski, his eyes filling with tears.

"I was very frightened. I thought he had not endured the beatings," said Chmielewski.

Popieluszko, a staunch defender of the outlawed Solidarity free trade union, was abducted on a highway north of Torun on Oct. 19. His bound and gagged body was pulled from a Vistula River reservoir in the city of Wloclawek about 30 miles to the south 11 days later.

The autopsy listed the cause of death as strangulation or suffocation.

Chmielewski, 29, Lt. Leszek Pekala, 32, and their commanding officer Capt. Grzegorz Piotrowski, 33, are being tried on charges of abducting and murdering Popieluszko. A fourth secret police officer, Col. Adam Pietruszka, 47, is charged with aiding and abetting his three subordinates.

The four face possible death penalties if convicted.

At one point Chmielewski said they stopped on the road and Piotrowski beat the struggling priest with a stick as his body lay on the grass. "I ran away to the car but Piotrowski ordered me to come and help," he said.

As they headed south again, Chmielewski said he and Pekala again "tried to convince the chief" to leave Popieluszko alive. "He only said 'keep driving,'" and ordered him to make sure the 37-year-old priest did not escape, the lieutenant testified.

"I had had enough," Chmielewski recalled. "It no longer mattered what happened to us. I didn't care if we would be implicated."

Before driving to the dam, they took the priest into a forest and Piotrowski administered the final beating to the priest as his body lay in the trunk.

Gandhi to visit U.S., meet with Reagan in mid-June

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi plans to visit the United States in mid-June to meet President Reagan and inaugurate an Indian cultural festival, U.S. diplomatic sources said today.

The trip would be the first foreign travel for Gandhi since he became India's prime minister on Oct. 31, succeeding his slain mother Indira Gandhi. Also on his itinerary is a visit to France for a meeting with President Francois Mitterrand, according to French diplomats.

The American and French sources said Gandhi, 40, agreed to accept invitations to open the "Festival of India" in both countries. His mother had planned to do the same.

The sources, who spoke only on condition they not be identified, said the prime minister was likely to visit Paris in the first week of June and arrive in Washington in mid-June.

He is scheduled to meet Reagan and Mitterrand for talks aimed at strengthening India's political and economic cooperation with the West.

Finns continue search for stray Soviet missile

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Using snowmobiles and helicopters, Finnish border guards are searching in Lapland's round-the-clock winter darkness for traces of what may have been an off-course Soviet missile.

Norwegian officials say the object, tracked by radar on Dec. 28, may have been a Soviet cruise missile and are protesting to Moscow because the low-flying projectile passed through Norway's airspace before disappearing over Finland.

However, Danish intelligence sources said Thursday that the object probably was a drone missile fired by a Soviet warship for use as a target during a training exercise.

Finnish border guards have been combing the rugged snowbound wilderness of the country's far north for the projectile, but the nonaligned government in Helsinki as yet has refused to characterize the object as a missile.

Norway is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and a NATO spokesman in Brussels said of the incident: "We view any Soviet violation of Allied national airspace as a matter of serious concern."

However, some Western European officials and analysts stressed that the reported intrusion presumably was accidental. Some diplomatic sources said privately that reaction was being muted so as not to "rock the boat" before the reopening of the U.S.-Soviet arms dialogue next week.

Norway's Defense Ministry said Wednesday the object appeared to have been a cruise missile of a type fired from Soviet submarines, but Danish defense intelligence sources said the missile was more likely a target drone used for firing exercises.

WORLD in brief

Court increases sentences of two Jewish terrorists

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's Supreme Court has increased the prison sentences of two Jews convicted of involvement in terror attacks against Palestinians, Israel Radio said.

The high court ruling Thursday followed government appeals against what prosecutors said were overly lenient sentences given by Jerusalem District Court.

Levy Hazan, 23, of Los Angeles, was sentenced to three years in prison instead of the previous 21-month term. He was convicted of participating in a March 1984 shooting attack on an Arab bus in the Israeli-occupied West Bank, Israel radio said. Six Palestinians were injured in the attack.

U.S. soldier dies in fall

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — A U.S. soldier, who reportedly was demonstrating how a friend died in a recent accident, lost his balance and fell to his death from a fifth-floor hotel balcony, a hotel spokeswoman said.

U.S. Army spokesman William Ormsby on Thursday identified the man as as Pvt. Michael Allen Hobson, 19, of Tulare, Calif.

Chilean police raid home

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Police killed a gunman and arrested five people in raids on a private home stocked with guns and a Socialist Party research center, the government said.

A police agent and two firemen were wounded Thursday in a half-hour shootout with the gunman at a Santiago home, the government said.

The raid ended with an explosion and fire that engulfed the one-story home. The man's body was found inside along with two submachine guns, an automatic pistol and a rocket launcher, police said.

SAN ANGELO — The Midland Lee Rebels opened District 4-5A basketball play here Thursday night with a sound 60-45 victory over the San Angelo Bobcats as three-year starter Derek Westbrook dumped in 24 points.

Westbrook went into the game averaging just over 11 points per outing, but had the hot hand for the Rebels in this one. Lee is now 14-4 on the season and 1-0 in loop action. San Angelo fell to 7-10 and 0-1.

Lee took control early in the game, outscoring the Bobcats by a 20-9 margin in the first period.

Westbrook had plenty of help as Raymond Morney chipped in with 17 points and Brian Marczynski, Lee's leading scorer this season, added 11 points. San Angelo's Brian Ross had 19 points, but was the only Bobcat in double figures.

THE REBELS maintained their 11 point margin through the half at 38-27, but San Angelo managed to cut the gap to nine after three periods by outscoring Lee 12-10. It wasn't enough, however, as Lee put the clamps on its first district win with a 12-6 advantage in the fourth period of play.

Lee, coming into district play with the best overall record among 4-5A teams, is expected to make a strong run at a playoff berth and they did nothing to dispel that notion Thursday. Lee was a dominate team in this one.

Lee will now face Abilene Cooper at 7 p.m. Saturday in its next district outing at Chaparral Center.

Midland Lee's Booster Club will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Lee High School gym. Coach Paul Stueckler will introduce his boys basketball team at the meeting.

Cooper was a hard luck 69-66 loser to Odessa High Thursday night in another 4-5A opener as OHS had four players in double figures with Paul Chavez (12), Tracy Blalock (13), Keith Smith (14) and Allan Bailey (10). Cooper's Fred Starks led all scorers with 21 points while Terrance Bell had 14 and Leo Williams 11.

OHS WON the game by virtue of a 23-12 first quarter advantage.

In another 4-5A opener Thursday, defending champion Odessa Permian dropped an 80-79 decision to Abilene High. Abilene High will host Midland High Saturday in another key game.

The Eagles won the game in the final quarter with an 18-14 advantage. AHS held a narrow two-point lead at the half, but Mojo took the lead in the third quarter, outscoring AHS, 21-16.

Davis sinks 39 in 'Dog eruption

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Take away the 39 points Darrell Davis scored and Midland would have had a tough time with Big Spring in the District 4-5A basketball opener at Langford Chaparral Center Tuesday night. Counting Davis' season-high contribution, it was no contest. The Bulldogs romped 86-47.

Quite obviously All-District footballer Davis has his basketball legs, tossing in 16 of 27 from the field and another 7-of-8 from the line for a season's high effort.

Davis hit from any where and every where within 15 feet of the rim in putting on an impressive show.

Matt Sears was the only other Bulldog in double figures, 12, as Midland's pressure defense left the Steers bewitched, bothered and bewildered. And Midland capitalized on the turnovers to make hay.

BIG SPRING went ahead 2-0 on a basket by Billy Cole, but Midland came back to take a 13-2 lead with 3:41 left in the first period. The Dogs increased their advantage to 23-7 and six of the 10 baskets came on turnovers at mid or back court.

By intermission the difference had swelled to 47-25, but things were to become worse for the Steers, who went 3:10 into third period without scoring.

Midland, meanwhile, built up a 56-25 advantage with Davis supplying three buckets and a free throw in the surge. Bryan Mayfield finally broke the drought for Big Spring, but with two minutes left in the third, Midland had built up an overwhelming 70-31 edge.

THE BULLDOGS go 13-5 for the season with the win while the Steers are 6-13, but relieved they won't see Davis again until Feb.

Gil Brassard and Mike Lyons each scored nine for Midland while Elvin Mackey had eight.

Mayfield's 14 points led Big Spring while Bernard Williams scored 11, nine in the first half.

Davis finished up the first half by sinking five of his last six shots and then opened the second half by sinking his first five attempts, a stretch of 10 baskets in 11 attempts.

On one play he deflected the ball and then scooped up the loose ball and soloed in for the dunk.

The Bulldogs will get a real test Saturday when they hit the road for Abilene High. The Eagles scored 80 points in a narrow win over Odessa Permian Thursday.

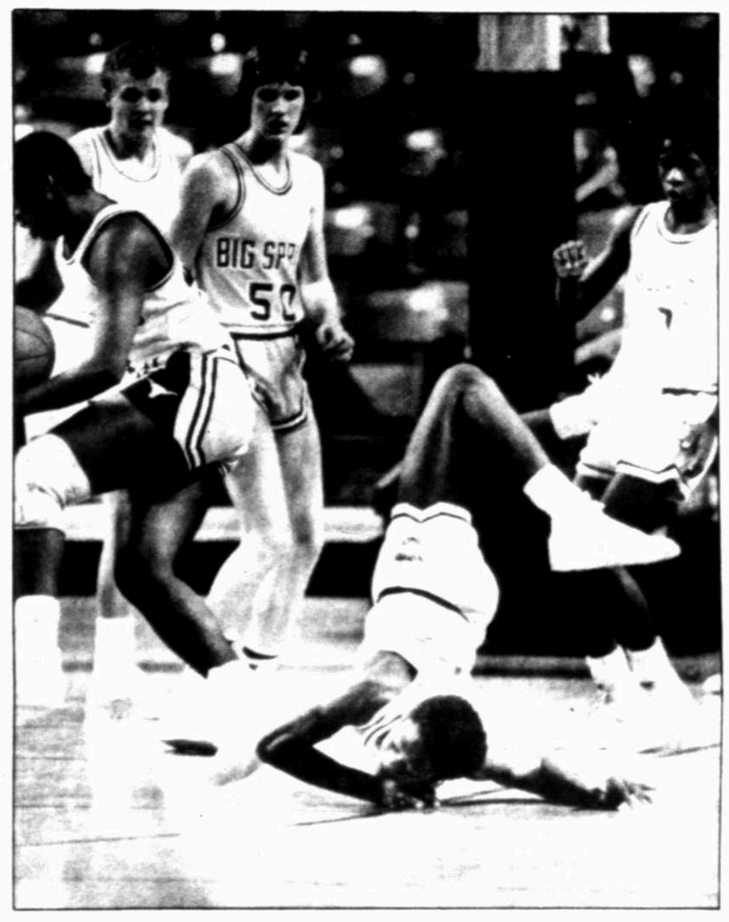

The Steers had better luck in the JV game, breaking out of a tie at 45 to post a 59-53 win as Charles Young scored 21 points, Bill Banks 14 and Al Jolson 10.

Craig Crawford and Ernest Jordan each had 10 for Midland while Jason Fuller added another nine.

Big Spring (47): Bryan Mayfield 7-0-5-14; Arthur Jackson 0-0-5-0; Bernard Williams 4-3-3-11; Billy Cole 1-0-1-2; Mike Leuschner 1-0-1-2; Sidney Parker 3-0-1-6; Mike Howle 0-0-0-0; Mark Sanders 0-2-1-2; Dewayne Sherman 2-0-1-4; Collin Carroll 1-0-1-2; David Shortes 1-0-1-2. Totals 20-64 7-12 25 47.

Midland High (86): Matt Sears 6-0-3-12; Gil Brassard 3-3-2-9; Elvin Mackey 3-2-3-8; Darrell Davis 16-7-2-39; Roger Henderson 2-0-1-4; Norris Cowles 0-0-0-0; Tim Hickey 0-0-0-0; Mike Lyons 3-3-1-9; Terry St Peters 0-0-1-0; Bob Barber 0-0-0-0; David Lujan 0-0-1-0; Jamie Salazar 0-2-0-2; Darrin Thorpe 0-0-1-0; Thomas Wilson 1-1-0-3. Totals 34-64 18-33 15 86.

Lee girls smash defending champs

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

When Midland Lee and San Angelo meet in a girls basketball game, you expect a game that has title implications built in. After all, these two teams have dominated District 4-5A play for most of the history of the girls sport.

They met for the first time in 1985 at the Lee gym Thursday night with the Rebels swamping the defending champion Bobcats by a 51-32 margin in a battle of teams that entered the game unbeaten in district play.

Lee is now 3-0 in district while San Angelo is 2-1. And the Rebels accomplished the chore at hand despite a meager four-point first quarter.

WHEN YOU score four points to open the game against the defending champion, you are usually in trouble, but Lee's swarming defense kept the Rebs in the game until the guns started connecting.

"I think we were a little panicky at first, but they had only 10 points in the first quarter with six coming on inbound passes under the basket. I knew our press was working well," said Lee coach Shirley Stephenson.

"I think every team plays two or three games a year better than you would expect and every team plays two or three games where you don't play well at all. We played very well against San Angelo. They did the same thing to us last year in the first game."

Roz Eaden and Valencia Wallace, who both ended with 10 point nights, started the Reb explosion in the second quarter with six points each and Diane White, who had a brilliant defensive effort, scored seven of her nine points in the third period to keep San Angelo from mounting any kind of rally.

San Angelo's Anita Allgood was the only Bobcat to hit in double figures with 15 points, but she had no more than four in any one period.

Lee started the game by hitting a meager two of 10 from the field while the Bobcats connected on five of 12. But Lee got hot the rest of the way, connecting on 21 of 36 shots the rest of the way while San Angelo managed only seven of 21 in the last three periods of play. Lee also had a 34-21 edge in rebounds.

THE VICTORY kept Lee in a tie with Odessa Permian for the league lead. The Lee girls will travel to Abilene Cooper Saturday for an 8 p.m. district game. The rest of Lee's home games will be played at the Lee gym, starting next Monday at 8 p.m. against Permian in another key district shootout.

San Angelo won the junior varsity outing by a narrow 52-49 margin over Lee as Tracy Patton hit for 19 points. LaVett Wallace and Melissa Hart led Lee with 12 points each.

San Angelo (32): Jody Filipot 0-0-1-0; Kathy Klepac 0-0-0-0; Pam Rose 0-0-0-0; Bridgett Green 1-0-1-2; Annie Stobaugh 3-2-4-8; Susan Rowand 1-1-1-3; Nancy Strasner 0-0-0-0; Anita Allgood 6-3-2-15; Susan Sweeten 1-2-0-4. Totals: 12-8-9—32.

Midland Lee (51): Fonda Fields 0-2-0-2; Diane White 4-1-4-9; Candace Morney 1-0-1-2; Roz Eaden 5-0-0-10; Louise Brown 0-0-0-0; Tina Swinney 1-2-1-4; Megan Pace 2-0-1-4; Denise Hatch 3-0-0-6; Becky White 1-0-4-2; Valencia Wallace 5-0-1-10; Teena Sizemore 1-0-1-2; Joan Whatley 0-0-0-0. Totals: 23-5-13—51.

MHS girls end nightmare start

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Midland High's girls basketball team came up a loser in its first two District 4-5A contests, but the Bulldogs got a big confidence builder here Thursday night with a 74-33 victory over the Big Spring Steers.

The MHS win left both teams at 1-2 in the league race, but the 74-point performance must have been just what Coach Jane Young had ordered for her squad.

"It's nice to get in the win column like that," said Young. "The girls played very well and the press was super. It was a real team effort."

Tina Knight led the Bulldog scoring parade with 16 points while Charlotte Hinds added 12 and Denise Lanz 14. In all, 10 Bulldogs scored in the game.

Sherry Myric led the Steers with 13 points, but no other Big Spring players managed to hit in double figures.

The Bulldogs will now host Abilene High (0-3) at 3 p.m. Saturday in the MHS gym in an effort to jump right back in the middle of the league race.

In junior varsity action Thursday, Big Spring defeated MHS by a 43-40 margin. Jennifer Fairchild led MHS with 18 points.

In other 4-5A girls action Thursday, Odessa Permian raised its league record to 3-0 with a 52-39 win over Abilene High to keep pace with Midland Lee, also 3-0. Abilene Cooper crushed Odessa High, 59-32, to climb to 2-1 in district play.

USFL wants to dance with Flut(i)e

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States Football League, proud of its previous record of signing college draft choices, is zeroing in on Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie, officially property of the New Jersey Generals.

The USFL, which says it signed almost 40 percent of the players in the previous two drafts, now has the head start in getting down to business with the Boston College quarterback after Thursday's draft.

The signing of the Flutie by the Generals, in a major marketing area, is considered essential for the survival of the league, which begins its third season Feb. 23 with 14 teams — four less than last year.

Flutie, who was in Honolulu for the Hula Bowl, has said he will see what the USFL has to offer.

"If the money and the situation were the same, I would sign with the NFL," Flutie admitted. "But there will be many factors involved.

"It's time to realize your college career is finally behind you. The time has come to talk about pro football ... money and the whole works."

The rival National Football League will hold its draft April 30 with the Buffalo Bills, with the worst record, 2-14, having the No. 1 pick.

Flutie hired Boston attorney Bob Woolf as his agent following the draft. Doug's father, Richard, said the family had decided a month ago to hire Woolf, who also handles Larry Bird, Jim Plunkett and Carl Yastrzemski but announced it on Thursday.

Flutie was one of 13 first-team All-Americans chosen by USFL clubs and one of five B.C. players picked by New Jersey.

"The best quarterback is Doug Flutie," said Jay Seltzer, Generals' president. "Why should I go for less? They don't come any better."

Despite Flutie's impressive record, including 233 of 386 passes this season for 3,454 yards and 27 touchdowns, some pro scouts have been skeptical about Flutie's future chances because of his size, 5-foot-9¾.

Terry Bledsoe, general manager of the Bills, said that Flutie was among the top choices for his club but said no decision about its plans for the No. 1 pick would be made until late January at the earliest. Since they have the top NFL pick, the Bills are at liberty to negotiate with whatever player they choose.

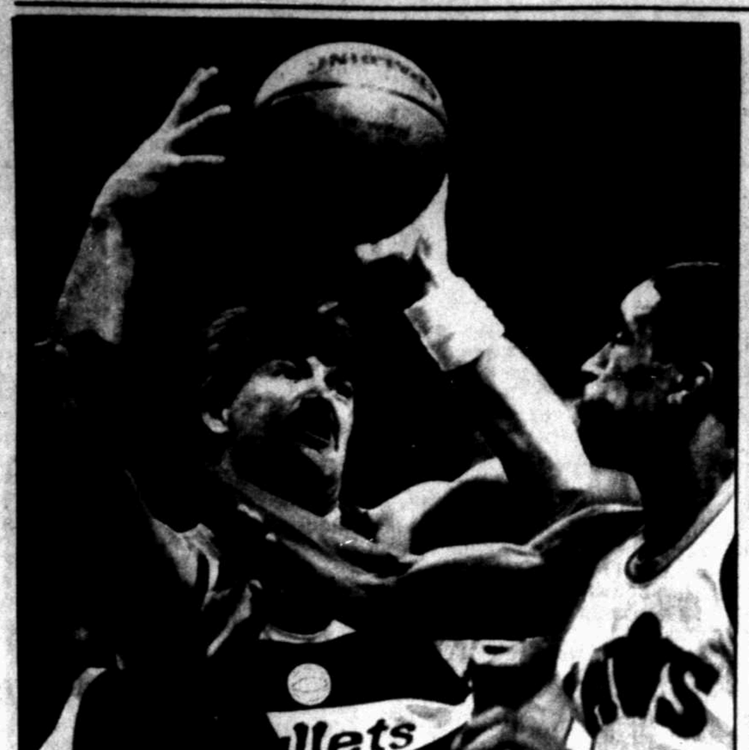

Flutie, the alltime NCAA total offense leader, is expected to receive a multimillion-dollar deal from the Generals, who already have the 1982 Heisman winner in running back Herschel Walker. The USFL also has the 1983 Heisman winner in running back Mike Rozier, current property of the Baltimore (formerly Philadelphia) Stars.

Seltzer said that with the Generals Flutie would have the opportunity of learning under veteran QB Brian Sipe.

"If he decides to wait for the NFL draft, he may be selected by a team in disarray," Seltzer said. "He may be faced with the prospect of being a savior of a decimated football program."

Generals' owner Donald Trump, the most visible owner in the league, was conspicuous by his absence at the draft headquarters and at the Generals' offices, but has said the Generals would actively pursue Flutie.

The Generals drafted two other quarterbacks, Ohio State's Mike Tomczak and Colgate's Steve Calabria, in the territorial phase of the draft.

Unranked Gophers bite No. 6 Illini

Associated Press

The Illinois basketball team was hot-and-cold in its Big Ten opener — and then lukewarm when it really counted.

"We came out a little bit passive and it showed," guard Bruce Douglas said after the Minnesota Gophers upset his sixth-ranked Illini 60-58 Thursday night.

Illinois trailed for most of the game, but took charge midway through the second half with a 28-9 run that gave the Illini an 11-point lead, 54-43, with 5½ minutes left.

But the Gophers, behind Tommy Davis' game-high 19 points, put together a 15-2 spurt in the final four minutes, climaxed by Davis' game-winner on a breakaway layup. The shot triggered a wild celebration by many of the 14,532 fans at the Williams Arena, and many of the Minnesota players called the victory the biggest upset of their careers.

In other games involving ranked teams Thursday night, No. 8 Georgia Tech crushed Maryland-Eastern Shore 93-40; No. 9 North Carolina defeated Stetson 85-71; No. 10 DePaul beat St. Mary's (Calif.) 76-53; No. 11 Kansas turned back Texas Southern 78-74 in overtime, and No. 15 Washington whipped Stanford 78-69.

Top Ten

With the score tied at 58, Douglas took a 15-foot jump shot for Illinois with five seconds to go, but the shot banged off the front of the rim. Minnesota backup guard Marc Wilson grabbed the rebound and passed ahead to a sprinting Davis for Minnesota's game-winner.

"It was just reflex," Davis said of his basket off the fastbreak. "When Douglas stepped in front of me, I crossed over and laid it in."

Minnesota Coach Jim Dutcher was thrilled, but amazed.

"It was a head-on jumper and usually Douglas makes those," Dutcher said. "That shot is the difference between a good year and a bad year for us."

Illinois has now lost two straight games, including a 63-62 loss to Loyola Dec. 22. The victory improved Minnesota's record to 8-3.

Yvon Joseph scored 19 points to lead five Georgia Tech scorers in double figures as the Yellow Jackets pounded Maryland-Eastern Shore. It was the most lopsided victory in Tech basketball history and gave the Jackets, 10-1, their best start in 14 years.

Despite the 53-point win, Georgia Tech Coach Bobby Cremins said his Yellow Jackets "didn't play very well. There are about 40 other teams who are about where we are. I think we are overrated right now."

Brad Daugherty scored 24 points and grabbed nine rebounds and North Carolina held off a second-half Stetson charge.

"Overall, I was pleased with our play tonight," said North Carolina Coach Dean Smith. "Stetson was impressive, we couldn't stop them in the second half."

Tyrone Corbin scored 18 points as DePaul routed St. Mary's. The game was tied at 4 in the early going, but the Blue Demons ripped off 10 points to take a 14-4 lead with 15 minutes left in the half. The game was never close after that.

The Blue Demons shot a 54.7 percent from the floor, but Coach Joey Meyer was unhappy with their offense.

"We didn't run the fast break well, but we got good percentage shots," Meyer said. "We need to be more patient with our passing, but we've also got to run the ball when we have to."

Second Ten

Danny Manning's layup boosted Kansas into a three-point lead in overtime and the Jayhawks held on to defeat a gritty Texas Southern team.

Texas Southern, an NAIA member from the Southwestern Conference that had won only two games this season, reeled off a 13-0 run in the final minutes of the second half to jump from a 57-48 deficit to a 61-57 lead with less than five minutes to go.

Kansas forged a 65-65 tie and sent the game into overtime on a 17-footer by Ron Kellogg with 31 seconds left.

Chris Welp scored 24 points as Washington broke open a close game late in the first half and went on to defeat Stanford.

Washington took control in the closing minutes of the first half when the Huskies outscored the Cardinal 16-7 in the final 6:18. Forward Detlef Schrempf scored five points and picked up an assist, while the Washington defense shut down the Stanford offense.

Bucks run streak to nine straight

Associated Press

Sidney Moncrief has been around long enough to know that no hot streak lasts forever.

The Milwaukee Bucks guard said he was relieved that his team's red-hot first half scoring was enough to offset a third-quarter charge by the Los Angeles Clippers in Milwaukee's 111-87 National Basketball Association romp Thursday night.

Paul Pressey, Craig Hodges and Kenny Fields combined for 17 of 19 shooting from the floor in the first half as the Bucks broke to a 67-39 lead and were able to coast to their ninth straight victory despite some rocky moments in the third period when the Clippers drew within 12 points.

"We felt they were going to make a run at us," said Moncrief. "But we didn't expect them to make that kind of run though. We just didn't play our transition game as well in the second half."

Pressey was 6 for 6, while Hodges was 6 for 7 and Fields 5 of 6 as the Bucks hit 61.2 percent in the first two periods.

The Clippers had a 16-0 spurt in the third quarter, led by Marques Johnson's 11 points, that helped whittle Milwaukee's lead to 77-65. But the Clippers ran out of steam in the fourth quarter and could get no closer than 86-75 on Junior Bridgeman's jumper with 8:22 to go.

Moncrief led the Bucks with 21 points, followed by Terry Cummings with 20. Pressey added 17 points, 12 rebounds and 11 assists.

Johnson topped the Clippers, who have lost six in a row, with 21 points and Derek Smith added 20.

The Bucks' winning streak is their longest since 1982, when they won 12 in a row. The franchise record is 20 straight victories in 1971.

Spurs 116, Mavericks 115

George Gervin pumped in 33 points and Mike Mitchell added 22 as the Spurs nipped the Mavericks.

Dallas' Dale Ellis missed free throw with three seconds left that would have tied the game. The Mavericks trailed throughout the fourth quarter and Ellis, who scored 21 points in the game, missed the free throw after being fouled by Johnny Moore as he connected on a three-point basket.

Mark Aguirre of Dallas and Gene Banks of San Antonio each drew a technical foul when they got into a fight with 20 seconds left in the game. Aguirre led the Mavericks with 22 points, while Banks had 15 points and 10 rebounds for the Spurs.

Cavaliers 100, Bullets 93

World B. Free scored eight of his 21 points in the fourth quarter and Phil Hubbard hit a pair of free throws to snap a 93-93 tie with 1:17 to play to pace the Cavaliers to only their seventh victory in 30 games this season.

Playing at home, Cleveland ended a three-game losing streak and stopped Washington's three-game winning string in a game that was televised on a national cable network.

That TV coverage helped get Free pumped up.

"I knew (the game was being televised) when I came into the gym and laced on my sneakers," Free said. "Every time we get on national (cable) TV, we have to prove ourselves. Announcers talk about us being the lowly Cavaliers, or the Cadavers. It gets the adrenalin going, because we want to show people what we can do."

Pacers 112, Warriors 96

Forward Clark Kellogg scored 21 points in the first half on 10 of 11 shooting from the field and finished with 31 — tying his season high — to lead the Pacers to only their 10th victory in 32 games.

Jerry Sichting chipped in with 19 points and Herb Williams 16 for the Pacers, while Purvis Short, who made only two field goals and nine points in the first half, finished with 32 to lead Golden State scorers.

Trail Blazers 123, SuperSonics 89

Kiki Vandeweghe led Portland's blitz with 30 points as the Blazers beat the Sonics by the biggest margin in the 15 years that the teams have been playing each other.

The Blazers, who had lost 10 of their last 11 games, broke open a close game midway through the second period, going on to hand Seattle its fifth straight loss.

Free agent Royster signs with San Diego

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Jerry Royster, a multiposition player who spent nine seasons with the Atlanta Braves, signed a two-year contract Thursday with the San Diego Padres, club officials said.

Royster, who batted .207 in 81 games with the Braves in 1984, had been drafted by the Padres and two other teams as a free agent. Terms of his contract, which includes an option year, were not disclosed.

Last season, Royster played 29 games for the Braves at second base, 17 at third, 16 at shortstop and 11 in the outfield.

"We expect Jerry to give us depth and flexibility because of his ability to play several positions well," said Padres General Manager Jack McKeon. "He has good speed and is a proven performer. Plus, he gives us the right chemistry and blends in well with the club."

The Padres were looking for a utility infielder and for a third baseman to share time with aging veteran Graig Nettles. Luis Salazar, who was platooned with Nettles at third last season, was one of the players traded to the Chicago White Sox in the December deal that brought Cy Young award winner LaMarr Hoyt to San Diego.

Royster originally signed with the Los Angeles Dodger organization in 1970, and had brief major league stints from 1973 to 1975 before being traded to Atlanta.

His best pro season was in 1982, when he hit .295 in 108 games — including a .334 average the last two months of the season — to help the Braves win the National League West division pennant.

Scholarship reduction hits Georgia football

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Georgia Coach Vince Dooley said he was "disappointed" to learn that the NCAA had put his college football program on probation for a year, although the school escaped restrictions on television or bowl appearances.

Claude Felton, Georgia's sports information director, said Thursday the school had been notified by the National Collegiate Athletic Association that it would be penalized by a reduction in football scholarships it may offer in 1985 and 1986.

Georgia will be permitted 23 scholarships each of those years, instead of the normal 30, he said. The total number of football players on scholarship will be reduced from the normal maximum of 95 to 90 next season and to 87 the next.

The school released a statement from the NCAA, which said its Committee on Infractions levied the penalty primarily because of the actions of Georgia boosters not employed by the university. It said Georgia had been ordered to rohibit three boosters from further recruiting.

NEITHER THE boosters nor the players involved were named by the school or the NCAA, but The Atlanta Constitution reported in today's editions that most of the infractions involved Tyrone Sorrells of Buford, and Sorrells admitted in an interview with Athens radio station WUOG early today that he was involved in the case.

Sorrells, a tight end and wide receiver, was signed with Georgia in 1982 but later transferred to Georgia Tech.

Felton said the NCAA had concluded an investigation of Georgia's women's basketball program and found no violations. He said the NCAA continued to investigate the recruiting of Cedric Henderson for the men's basketball team.

Dooley issued a statement saying, "We are disappointed with some aspects of the NCAA committee's action. However, considering the extensive and prolonged inquiry and both the small number and nature of the violations involved, I think we can have a very positive feeling about our program.

"I plan to address all the points involved at a press conference on Saturday," Dooley said.

The NCAA statement said one of the "outside athletics representatives" helped an unidentified athlete get a loan in 1982 for a 1975-model car. The booster later paid off the loan when the athlete fell behind on the payments, the NCAA said.

IN AN interview with Jim Powell of WUOG, Sorrells admitted he was the athlete involved.

"I was told to go to a certain bank, that maybe that bank would loan me the money," Sorrells said. "I went to the bank, I filled out the papers. The guy at the bank okayed the loan. I got the loan."

Sorrells would not identify the Georgia booster, but he said the booster made the final payment on the loan. He also would not identify the bank.

Cougars spank Frogs, 83-73

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Alvin Franklin scored 22 points and Rickie Winslow and Eric Dickens added 20 each Thursday night as Houston downed Texas Christian 83-73 in the Southwest Conference basketball opener for both teams.

TCU's Dennis Nutt paced all scorers with 26 points as the Horned Frogs hit 66 percent from the field, but mistakes at the end handed Houston the victory.

The Cougars, 9-2, ran off a string of 10 unanswered points after Nutt tied the scored at 73 on a jumper with 3:31 remaining.

TCU, 8-4, led by as many as seven points in the first half but trailed at the break, 45-43. The Frogs wound up with 14 turnovers, compared with eight for Houston, which finished the game hitting 58 percent from the field and 15 of 18 free throws.

Winslow's game-high nine rebounds, eight off the offensive boards, helped Houston take the rebound battle, 28-18.

Carven Holcombe finished with 19 points for TCU.

"We made some mistakes at the end. We just did some things we can't do and expect to still win the ball game," TCU Coach Jim Killingsworth said. "The same thing happened in the first half. We had a seven-point lead and all of a sudden we start turning the ball over and making mistakes and they come back on us.

"We're a finesse team and we can't afford to turn the ball over and make mistakes," Killingsworth said.

Mitchell said, "We just got outplayed at the end. We hurried a few passes and once they got four points up we were in too big a hole. We had a good rhythm in our offense until we got in a little hurry there at the end."

Nutt added, "Houston just got the crucial rebounds at the critical times down the stretch. That's what you have to do. And we didn't come up with many of those."

BYU deserves national college championship

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Commentary

Barry Switzer and Don James notwithstanding, the college football voters did the only thing they could do when they voted Brigham Young the national championship.

You can't blame Switzer and James for tooting their own horns on New Year's Day, declaring that the winner of their Oklahoma-Washington Orange Bowl confrontation deserved the crown. Coaches are subject to occasional attacks of tunnel vision.

The facts, though, squarely supported BYU. They won every game they played — only the second college team in 80 years to go 13-0.

They were No. 1 before their bowl game and won that contest with a gritty comeback. If you're No. 1 and you don't lose, then you stay No. 1 and all the bellyaching that goes on behind you shouldn't matter. And, to the credit of the voters, in this case it didn't.

BYU was accused of playing a lightweight schedule. Yet lightweights were the nemesis of powerhouses all season. Ask Switzer about sub-.500 Kansas, which knocked off his Sooners. Ask Nebraska about Syracuse. Ask South Carolina about Navy. BYU handled its lightweights. The others did not. There should be some reward for that.

What's more, BYU played Pitt at a time when nobody knew the Panthers were among the lightweights. Pittsburgh was No. 3 in the country when it lost the season's opener to the Cougars.

Washington, one of a parade of teams who owned the No. 1 slot at one time or another during the season, neglected to win its own conference, beaten by No. 11 Southern California. Ask Southern California about the lightweight it lost to, 7-5 Notre Dame.

BYU and Washington had just one common opponent during the season. That was Michigan, which struggled through a 6-6 season.

The Wolverines were used as an example by some to downgrade BYU's accomplishments. The Cougars, remember, managed only a 24-17 victory over this team in the Holiday Bowl. Well, Washington didn't exactly blow Michigan away when they played. The result was a 20-11 victory for the Huskies.

Don't misunderstand. There is no suggestion here that BYU is a college football powerhouse, ready to take its place among the game's immortal teams. Dynasties don't last long in this sport. Ask Miami, last year's national champions, about that.

The Cougars, though, just happen to have the best record in the sport in a year when parity asserted itself. And without other criteria, you have to rely on the record.

During the jockeying for No. 1 — James declared his team the champs after beating Oklahoma but sensibly backed off promising commemorative rings until he saw the voters' opinions — the most interesting bid for attention came from Florida.

This was a team barred from the bowls because, the NCAA said, it had bent some rules and broken some others. In such circumstances, most coaches probably would choose to keep a low profile. But Florida's Galen Hall, hired in a housecleaning that followed the NCAA probe this fall, figured it was OK to lobby for his team. Some of the voters must have thought so, too, because Florida wound up No. 3.

Six voters, in fact, were convinced that Florida, 9-1-1, was the best team in the country and voted them No. 1.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, January 5, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actresses Diane Keaton and Pamela Sue Martin, dancer-choreographer Alvin Ailey, Pittsburgh Steeler coach Chuck Noll, Chicago White Sox slugger Ron Kittle, former Vice President Walter Mondale and Congresswoman Nancy Lee Johnson (R.-Conn.) share your birthday. You make money from both business and a special avocation. Longtime friends rally to support your pet projects. Do not let a recent personal loss distract you from your efforts to help others. Your generosity and gracious manner win you admirers in high places. The ideal romantic partner will encourage you to shine, taking delight in your success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Asking questions of current love gets romance back on track. A check arrives at an opportune moment. Pay bills promptly. A family reunion opens up new horizons. Gently probe the past.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make it clear that you cannot be all things to all people. Family members become more supportive. You will have to take some risks if romance is to flourish.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do what is right for you personally. Little will be accomplished by following the crowd. Family members are anxious to help you achieve business and financial success. Listen to their suggestions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Travel will give you a valuable perspective. Moving too quickly now could prove costly. Be especially prudent when handling money. Consult partner before investing jointly-owned funds.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Although shopping bargains abound, you must examine sales merchandise very carefully. A loose arrangement with a former business associate could help both of you. Make your aims clear from the outset.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You sometimes are too candid with people you do not really know. Be more discreet about business matters and your personal life. Donate unwanted household items to a charity.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be more realistic about a domestic problem. Refusing to deal with a parent-child struggle could split a family. Stay away from politics; you do not have the time to spare.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Those actively looking for employment will find it. Keep your business and personal life strictly separate to avoid embarrassment. Dating a Virgo could open up new horizons.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may need to go in a different direction now. Concentrate on getting your finances under control. A blind date proves to be a wise choice. You make a good friend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Communication improves between parent and child. Make a budget you can live with and stick to it. All forms of gambling should be avoided. Make regular deposits to savings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be honest about the choices you make now. Your confidence returns when your questions about a family matter are finally answered. Loved one is enthusiastic about a pet project. Showcase your artistic talent.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your career goals come into clearer focus. Business gains are tied to who you know. Gambling will only make a bad situation worse. Postpone luxury purchases. Romance lives up to your expectations.

Opening lead: Three of ◇.

The hypermodern systems caused problems during the World Team Olympiad in Seattle. No less a star that Benito Garozzo of Italy was heard grumbling about them. However, even their practitioners were having difficulties.

There is no telling to what level North-South might have aspired in spades if left to their own devices. However, East-West were using a system where an opening bid of one spade showed 7-11 points and any distribution, so West silenced North by "stealing" his suit. East took advantage of the vulnerability for an advance sacrifice, and South expressed grave doubts about East's ability to fulfill his contract. Now North came to life with a six level cue-bid, asking his partner to choose a major suit, and the result was an inelegant heart slam on the 4-3 Moysian fit.

Obviously, a spade lead would have settled matters there and then, but who could fault West for leading his singleton in the suit bid by his partner at the five-level? Declarer won in hand with ace and led the eight of hearts.

There was one last chance for the defense. If West split his honors, he could win the second trump lead and still give his partner a spade ruff. However, it did not dawn on West that South had only a three-card trump suit, so he played low. Declarer ran the eight, then continued with a trump to the queen and ace. A third round of trumps drew the outstanding cards in the suit.

Now West shifted to a spade, but too late. Declarer won the queen and took both of dummy's high spades, sluffing a diamond from hand. A successful club finesse was followed by the king of diamonds and a diamond ruff. On this last trick West was hopelessly squeezed in the black suits. Since he was forced to keep a spade, he could hold only two clubs. Declarer took another club finesse, cashed the ace and his three of clubs became the fulfilling trick.

About $5,000 raised for Polish boy's heart operation

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — About $5,000 has been raised for a 6-year-old boy who traveled from Poland for a life-saving operation doctors will perform free after Stanford University Medical Center gets $25,000 to admit him.

Granting a free operation to Piotr Sternik might set a precedent that could flood Stanford with similar requests, said medical center spokesman Mike Goodkind, adding advance payment is necessary for the "survival of the hospital."

"It's a real dilemma, there is no doubt about it," Goodkind said. "That's the way the system works and I'm not sure what the alternatives are."

Piotr, the son of a former Solidarity union activist, came to California from Gdansk, Poland, last week with his mother, Halina, for an operation to repair his defective heart. Polish surgeons cannot perform the surgery.

The boy's ailment afflicts one out of every 4,000 infants born worldwide, and 90 percent of the babies that go untreated die before they are a year old, Goodkind said.

Piotr underwent surgery in San Diego four years ago to keep him alive until the age of six, when final corrective surgery usually is performed.

Although the hospital's advance-payment policy is flexible to accommodate unusual, emergency cases, Piotr does not fall into that category, Goodkind said. But he added: "I'm pretty confident things will be worked out and he will receive the treatment he needs."

The Polish child suffers from transposition of the great arteries, a congenital heart defect that causes most of his blood to bypass his lungs. Although his condition is not considered critical, he eventually will die without the operation, doctors say.

The Sterniks have no American health insurance, and hospital costs make up most of the total bill for surgery.

Peter Wasowski, a family friend who arranged for the Sterniks to come to Stanford, said he understands the hospital's position on advance payment and is grateful for the doctors' decision to forgo their fees.

"Nobody is making money on this, the surgeons, the hospitals," he said Thursday night in a telephone interview from his San Carlos home. "They (Stanford) are just recovering their out-of-pocket expenses."

Wasowski has opened a bank account for donations for the surgery. Individuals have donated about $5,000 and Wasowski is hoping corporations also will contribute. He hopes to raise the entire $25,000 within a month.

The Sterniks celebrated the holidays with Wasowski's family.

"Piotr got a lot of gifts from Santa Claus," Wasowski said. "He told his mother that the American Santa Claus is much richer than the Polish Santa Claus."

The Sterniks also added a Polish touch to their American New Year.

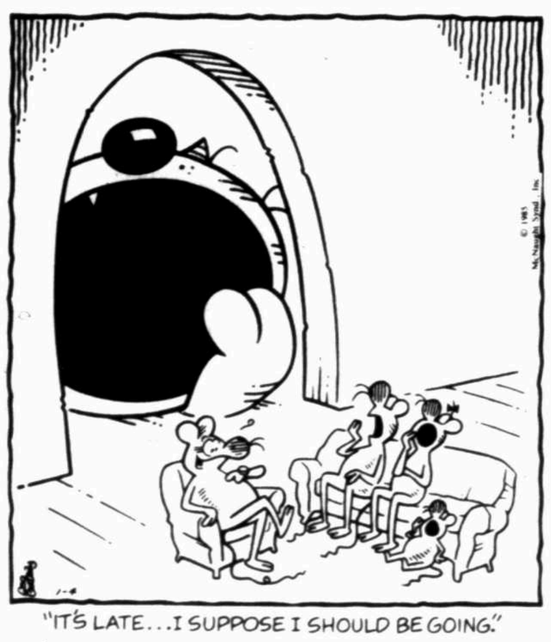

"There is an old Polish tradition," Wasowski said. "You write down all your wishes on a piece of paper. You put it in a glass and burn it, and then pour champagne over the ashes and drink them."

Barbara Mandrell 'not well yet, but getting well'

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — "I'm not well yet, but I'm getting well. I'm ahead of schedule," a tearful Barbara Mandrell told reporters at the country music star's first public appearance since she was seriously injured in a two-car head-on collision.

Miss Mandrell, 36, suffered a broken leg, two broken bones in her ankle, a badly injured knee and a severe concussion in the Sept. 11 accident near Nashville. She said Thursday she is scheduled to return to the recording studio next month.

Mandrell

The crash, in which Miss Mandrell's two children were also injured, claimed the life of Mark White, the 19-year-old driver of the other car. Miss Mandrell was hospitalized for 19 days and is still walking on crutches.

The Country Music Association entertainer of the year in 1980 and 1981 is known for such hits as "I Was Country When Country Wasn't Cool," "Sleeping Single in a Double Bed," "In Times Like These" and "Only a Lonely Heart Knows."

NEW YORK (AP) — A $250,000 donation by actor Paul Newman to a Catholic charity aiding African famine victims is the largest corporate contribution the agency has received for its African appeal, the group said.

"This is our expression of concern for a problem that is not going to go away overnight," Newman, 49, said Thursday in making the donation to Catholic Relief Services. "I urge other companies to join in the longterm effort to make Africa food self-sufficient."

The donation came from "Newman's Own," a food business started by the actor 2½ years ago. Catholic Relief said all profits from "Newman's Own," salad dressing, spaghetti sauce and popcorn are donated to charity.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A $10 million suit filed by Jerry Lewis against Paramount Pictures Corp. says the studio violated its contract with the comedian by selling videocassettes of his 1963 film "The Nutty Professor."

The copyright infringement lawsuit, filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court, seeks an injunction to stop the sales, said Alan Isaacman, an attorney for the 58-year-old Lewis.

Lewis produced, directed, wrote and starred in "The Nutty Professor," a comedy about a chemistry professor who takes a concoction that turns him into a pop star. Paramount was the film's distributor.

Isaacman said Lewis' contract with Paramount gave the studio the right to distribute the film, but not "to sell the picture or offer to sell videocassettes," Isaacman added.

Paramount's director of legal services, Nate Smith, was out of his office Thursday and unreachable for comment, said a woman who answered the phone.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) — Gary Coleman, the star of the "Diff'rent Strokes" television series, is back on the job after undergoing his second kidney transplant.

A "Welcome Back, Gary" banner greeted the 16-year-old actor as he returned to the set Thursday at Universal Studios.

On hand to toast Coleman's return with sparkling apple juice were series co-stars Conrad Bain, Todd Bridges, Daniel Cooksey and guest star Soleil Moon Frye, said Barry Stagg, publicity vice president for Embassy Communications. Embassy owns Tandem Productions, which produces "Diff'rent Strokes."

Coleman

"He's doing great," Coleman's publicist, Larry Goldman, said. "His spirits are wonderful, he was thrilled to be back."

Coleman left the show on Nov. 9 when a kidney became available for transplant in an operation the following day at UCLA Medical Center. It was the second transplant for Coleman, who underwent his first at age 5 when his own kidney was damaged by a defective bladder.

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Joseph Mascolo the actor who plays Stefano Di Mera, the cultured but sinister villain of the NBC soap "Days of Our Lives," will be riding with the law this weekend.

Mascolo, hoping to get another perspective on crime, will spend Saturday patrolling the streets of this Orange County city with police Officer Mike Hamann, said Maureen Thomas, spokesman for the Santa Ana Police Department.

The outing was the idea of Hamann's wife, Nancy, Ms. Thomas added.

"She has been a 'Days of Our Lives' fan for about 18 years, and she won a luncheon with Joseph Mascolo in Catalina. And while they were having lunch, she was telling him that her husband was a police officer, and he was really interested in that."

Mrs. Hamann told Mascolo about the Santa Ana force's ride-along program, in which civilians accompany officers in marked cars on day or swing shifts, and the actor asked that such an expedition be arranged, Ms. Thomas said.

DIGEST

Dollar eases, gold moves up

LONDON (AP) — The dollar eased against all major curriencies except the Japanese yen in early trading today. Gold prices opened weaker but remained above the $300-an-ounce barrier.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before it begins in Europe, the dollar hit its highest rate in more than two years to close at 252.55 Japanese yen, up from 251.58 yen on Dec. 31, the last previous trading day.

Tokyo dealers attributed the rise on the first Japanese trading day of 1985 to the annual heavy demand in January for dollars from crude oil buyers settling contracts. The rate was the highest since the dollar closed at 253.50 yen on Nov. 30, 1982.

In later European trading the dollar was quoted at 252.35 yen.

In London, the battered pound, which hit a record closing low of 1.1485 dollars on Wednesday, edged up further to $1.1512. That was more expensive than Thursday's closing $1.1500.

Early dollar rates against other key currencies compared with late rates Thursday:

–3.1615 West German marks, down from 3.1700.

–2.6240 Swiss francs, down from a 7-year high of 2.6262.

–9.6795 French francs, down from 9.7145.

–3.5710 Dutch guilders, down 3.5815.

–1,947.50 Italian lire, down from a record 1,951.50.

–1.3195 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3217.

Gold opened in London at $301.90 bid a troy ounce, down from Thursday's late bid of $303, but moved up in later trading. The city's five major bullion houses set the midmorning "fixing" at $303.45 an ounce.

In Zurich, gold opened at $302.10 bid, down from Thursday's late bid of $302, and was quoted at around $303 bid in later trading.

London dealers said trading very quiet in bullion which on Thursday had dipped below $300 for the first time in 2½ years.

Retailers say profits will be disappointing

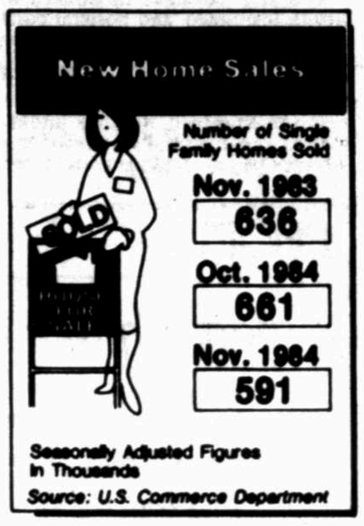

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's major retailers reported mixed results for the critical sales month of December, and industry analysts said profits will also be disappointing because of Christmas discounts to attract shoppers.

Sales of new homes, meanwhile, dropped 10.6 percent in November, the sharpest monthly decline in almost three years, the government said Thursday.

But the decline followed two months of increases and was labeled an aberration by most analysts, who predicted further strong sales gains as buyers respond to lower interest rates.

Orders to U.S. factories for manufactured goods were up sharply, the government said in a separate report Thursday. The 4.3 percent increase was the biggest gain in 17 months and bolstered the belief that the economy will turn in a good performance during the first half of the new year.

"As a result of the high level of promotional activity throughout the Christmas season, our fourth-quarter earnings are expected to be approximately equal to last year," Kenneth A. Macke, chairman of Dayton Hudson Corp., said Thursday as major retailers released sales figures for December.

Jeffrey Edelman, a retail analyst with the investment firm of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., was even less optimistic.

"It will not be the best Christmas as far as profits are concerned. If we were to make a compilation of all the retailers reporting, I would suspect their fourth-quarter profits will decline about 5 percent from last year," Edelman said.

The retailers will not report their fourth-quarter profits until March.

Sears, Roebuck and Co., the largest retailer, said its sales for the five weeks ended Dec. 29 rose 4.7 percent over a year earlier.

No. 2 K mart Corp. said sales for stores open more than a year spurted 12.4 percent. J.C. Penney Co., ranked third, said sales increased 6.8 percent.

"The sales overall were below expectations. In contrast to the double-digit gains that many retailers expected, retailers fell short and reported only modest increases," said Jeffrey Feiner, a retail analyst with the investment firm Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc.

Sales of new single-family homes were put at a seasonally adjusted rate of 591,000 units in November. It was the slowest sales pace since August and the biggest one-month decline since an 18.4 percent drop in January 1982.

In the report on factory orders, the Commerce Department said the 4.3 percent increase in orders was the best performance since a 4.6 percent gain in June 1983.

About two-thirds of the increase came from a big surge in orders for military hardware, which was almost double the October rate. Even with military sales removed from the calculation, however, orders were up 1.7 percent.

In another economic development Thursday, the major carmakers reported that domestic car sales fell 3 percent in the middle 10 days of December compared with the period a year ago.

Auto sales' fall shrugged off by analysts

DETROIT (AP) — A 3 percent dip in U.S. auto sales just before Christmas has been shrugged off by industry analysts, who still see bright times ahead for Detroit.

The six major domestic carmakers reported Thursday that sales for the Dec. 11-20 reporting period were down compared with the figures for a year ago.

But sales usually are erratic in mid-December because of competition with the Christmas buying season, and Detroit's recovery was well under way by Christmas 1983, making a year-to-year improvement more difficult.

Among the Big Three, General Motors Corp. said its sales were down 3.7 percent, Ford Motor Co.'s were up 1.1. percent and Chrysler Corp. sales were up 2.8 percent.

U.S. and foreign carmakers were to make their December and 1984 sales reports late today.

GM suffered spot strikes in the United States in September and a nationwide Canadian walkout in October.

The seasonally adjusted annual rate of sales for mid-December was 7.6 million, a bit lower than the 1984 trend.

The companies specializing in small cars fared poorly in mid-December.

American Motors Corp. sales were down 28.9 percent. Volkswagen of America Inc.'s new entry, the subcompact Golf, has yet to take off. VW sales, including some leftovers of the discontinued subcompact Rabbit, were down 41.4 percent.

Even American Honda Motor Co. Inc., which has been ringing up brisk sales of its Ohio-made Accord subcompact, registered a loss for the period of 1.4 percent. It was Honda's first year-to-year monthly falloff in 1984.

In all, 196,209 domestic cars were sold in the period, or 21,801 a day in nine official selling days, compared with 179,749, or 22,469 a day in eight official selling days a year earlier.

Border businesses report good Christmas sales

NOGALES, Ariz. (AP) — Merchants here say this last Christmas was the best holiday sales season since the 1982 devaluations of the Mexican peso drastically cut cross-border business.

Business in this border town plummeted in 1982 and 1983, when the value of the peso dropped from 26 pesos to the dollar down to 150 per dollar.

At one point, one of every three workers in Nogales, a town of about 18,000, was out of work.

Legislation introduced by Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ari., sought to provide areas hit by economic disasters, such as the devaluation, the same opportunity for low-interest loans from the Small Business Administration as those hit by natural disasters.

The aid, which was slow in coming, is not yet fully operational, said George Camp, supervisor and loan specialist of the SBA. Udall has criticized the SBA for moving at an "agonizingly slow" pace in setting up the program's guidelines. While the Peso Impact Loan Program was signed into law in mid-April, the rules for the new program will not be effective until Monday.

Udall said the program "will not provide any permanent solution to the economic problems of the border communities like Nogales, but it will help some small business recover from the 1982-83 peso devaluation.

Since the 1982 crisis, the peso, while continuing to devalue, has done so at an orderly rate of 17 centavos per day.

The devaluations were meant to strengthen the country's economy, by making Mexican goods less expensive and foreign goods more expensive to increase income from exports.

Consequently, businesses north of the border were hard hit because their much of their clientele were Mexican nationals.

The program will provide loans of less than $100,000, with interest rates of less than 8 percent, to business that can show they still are hurt by the peso devaluations.

Udall asked Gov. Bruce Babbitt to request the SBA to declare the afflicted counties as disaster areas.

If all goes according to plan, the SBA could begin processing loans around the middle of the month.

"It is not as good as we would have liked it to be," said West. "The economic impact continues. It is not too little too late, but it certainly is late."

Nuclear plant employee says utility blames him for leak

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — A former supervisor at the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant has testified that a utility blamed him for leaking a highly damaging memorandum about the plant.

Evert Mouser claimed Thursday that Texas Utilities Electric Co. had blocked his efforts to find another job in the industry. He said he photocopied the memo and showed it to two quality control inspectors at the plant.

He said other inspectors presumably removed the memo from his desk and made it available to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and opponents of the plant.

The memo, dated Aug. 8, 1983, criticized the safety-related paint work inside the plant and charged that Texas Utilities officials were hostile to any criticisms that might delay completion of the plant.

Joseph Lipinsky, a friend of Mouser's who is quality assurance director of the Oliver B. Cannon & Son Inc. painting company of Philadelphia, wrote the memo, officials said.

Nearly three months of hearings before a U.S. Atomic Safety and Licensing Board panel have centered on the report and Lipinsky's later retraction of the criticisms as a witness for the utility.

The panel is seeking to determine whether the utility coerced Lipinsky into changing his findings.

Mexico orders gas price hike

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Finance Ministry on Thursday announced price hikes of between 20 and 37.5 percent for the state-owned oil company's three grades of gasoline.

The price hikes go into effect Friday, a ministry release said.

It said the state oil company Pemex' regular Nova brand will increase by 37.5 percent, from 40 to 55 pesos per liter, equivalent in U.S. currency to an increase of 73 cents to $1.00 per gallon.

Pemex' Extra grade increased by 25 percent, from 56 to 70 pesos per liter, or $1.01 to $1.27 per gallon.

Donoghue's Money Fund Averages (AvgFages for all 257 taxable funds)		44	8.31	8.66
30-day average yield 8.53

Yield columns represent: annualized total return to shareholders for past seven days and 7-day compounded (effective) rates of return. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. r - restricted availability.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 257 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, Mass. 01746 decreased $3.3 billion to $199.7 billion during the week ended Dec. 31, 1984. The taxable funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 8.31 percent from 8.38 percent. The taxable funds' 30-day average yield decreased to 8.53 percent from 8.67 percent. The taxable funds' average maturity decreased one day to 44 days.

William E. Donoghue says, "After 12 consecutive weeks of asset increases, the taxable MFs experienced a $3.2 billion asset outflow. This is the fifth year that money fund assets decreased during the last week of December. Of the $3.2 billion outflow, $1.4 billion was withdrawn from consumer funds due to seasonal factors. The consumer money funds are realizing the lag effect of the past few weeks during which shareholders used their check writing privileges to withdraw funds. Institutions-only money fund assets decreased by $1.8 billion, reflecting investors who left money funds temporarily to take advantage of high overnight rates in the money market."

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market lost more ground today, extending its early-1985 decline.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 21.75 points in the first two sessions of the year, dropped 5.96 to 1,183.86 by noontime today.

Losers held a 3-2 lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The news Thursday of a 4.3 percent rise in factory orders during November provided an upbeat signal for production activity in the early stages of 1985. But it stirred little enthusiasm for stocks.

The market also drew no apparent benefit from a downturn in interest rates Thursday in the credit markets.

Brokers noted that Wall Street was bracing for the Federal Reserve's weekly report on the money supply, due out after the close. The figures were expected to show a sharp increase in the money supply for the week ended Dec. 24.

Occidental Petroleum and Diamond Shamrock were delayed in opening amid talk that the two parties were discussing a merger. Occidental said it asked that trading in its stock be delayed pending an unspecified announcement.

Livestock

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Texas Panhandle and western Oklahoma feedlot report. Confirmed: 600.

Trade extremely slow in the Panhandle area early Friday. Couple pens slaughter steers weak but not enough slaughter steers or heifers sold for price trends. Feedlots reported very little interest or inquiry following the weekly movement of 44,000 head. Sales on 600 slaughter steers and no heifers. Note: All live cattle prices based on net weight fob the feedlot after a 4 percent shrink.

Slaughter steers: Two pens good and mostly choice, 70-75 percent choice, 1050-1100 lbs. 67.00-67.50.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Unless son has other income, 1984 tax return not needed

By BILL DOYLE

Q. About three months ago, I put $500 into a mutual fund in a gift to minors account for my 8-year-old son. All dividends and capital gains distributions will be reinvested to buy more shares. This investment will not be redeemed until my son is an adult.

Should a 1984 income tax return be filed for him this year to avoid paying tax when he cashes in the shares?

Doyle

A. Unless your son has other income, there will be no need to file a 1984 income tax return for him. Most likely, no such return will have to be filed for many years into the future.

This is under the rule that a child who is taken as a dependent on a parent's return and who has dividend, interest and other so-called "unearned" income of less than $1,000 doesn't have to file a return. We're assuming your son doesn't have a job from which he gets "earned" income.

Your son's "unearned" income includes all dividends from his mutual fund shares and the 40 percent of long-term capital gains distributions that are subject to federal income tax on a $500 investment for a long time to come — if ever.

It's a cinch he won't get $1000 a year from dividends and long-term capital gain distribution.

When he redeems his mutual fund shares, the difference between the amount he receives and his cost "basis" will be either a long-term capital gain or loss.

His basis will be the $500 original investment, plus all reinvested dividends and capital gains distribution. Let's say he redeems 12 years from now and over those years he has reinvested $1,000 of dividends and $1,000 of capital gains distributions. That would make his basis $2,500.

If he redeems for more than $2,500, he'll have a capital gain. If he redeems for less than $2,500, he'll have a capital loss.

The year-end statements from the fund summarize all dividends and capital gains distributions, as well as any additional investments made in the account. Hang on to those statements, so that a basis can be established when the fund shares are redeemed.

Q. We are in our 70s and have annual income of about $30,000. We also have about $30,000 available for investment. Which has the lesser risk, a tax-free mutual fund or a tax-free unit investment trust? Or, are they really the same thing?

A. Both invest in municipal bonds, which pay interest not subject to federal income tax. Both pass that money along, also tax free, to investors. Past that, things change.

A mutual fund is a managed investment. The people who run the fund change the fund's investment portfolio by selling some bonds and buying others.

A unit investment trust has a fixed portfolio. The trust buys bonds at the time the trust is organized. Except in very unusual circumstances, the trust never sells any of those bonds. As the bonds reach maturity or are called for early redemption, the trust collects the bonds' redemption prices and passes that money on to shareholders.

A unit trust is a self-liquidating thing, because eventually all the bonds it holds will be redeemed and the money returned to trust shareholders. That might take as long as 30 years.

So, there is risk in both mutual funds and unit trusts that invest in bonds. The bonds might drop in value — taking the values of fund and unit trust shares down. Of course, they might rise in value.

It's impossible to say whether tax-free mutual funds are less risky than tax-free unit investment trusts or vice versa. Both are suitable for people seeking tax-free income.

My choice would be a "no-load" tax-free mutual fund, on which there is no commission charge. Most unit investment trusts have commissions of about 3.5 percent.

Q. I purchased a $20,000 face amount 26-week U.S. Treasury bill by submitting a $20,000 certified check and a "tender" form to the Federal Reserve Bank. Less than a week later, I received a $993 check. When the T bill reached maturity, I received a $20,000 check.

According to your column, the $993 check was a "discount check" and I was supposed to get my interest, "which is equal to the discount check," when the T bill matured. If that's the case, shouldn't I have received a $20,993 check upon the T bill's maturity?

A. NO! NO! NO! The $20,000 check you received included the price you paid for the T bill and the interest the T bill earned.

A T bill is a discount security. You buy it at a price below its face value. When the T bill matures, you get the face value. The important point to remember is that the difference between the two prices is your interest.

When you buy a T bill through a Federal Reserve Bank, you must put up the T bill's face value. The lower price at which you actually buy the T bill is determined at the U.S. Treasury Department's auction. The difference between your purchase price and the T bill's face value is then sent back to you in a discount check.

In your case, you put up $20,000 and received a $993 discount check. Easy arithmetic shows that you paid $19,007 for that $20,000 face value T bill.

When the T bill matured, you received $20,000 — the $19,007 you paid to buy the T bill, plus $993 interest.

• • •

Q. Rather than buy U.S. Treasury bills through my local bank, which charges a $60 fee for each such purchase and rollover, I would like to buy directly from a Federal Reserve Bank. But the nearest such bank is many, many miles away.

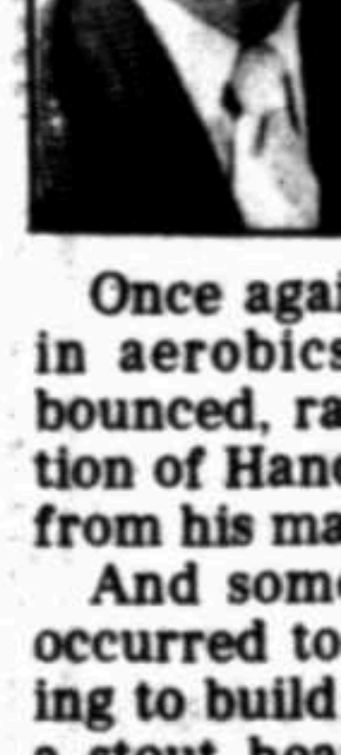

Will I be assured of being able to purchase T bills if I do make the trip? Also, I don't know what a "tender form" is. How can I get one?

A. You don't have to travel. Everything can be done by mail. There are 12 Federal Reserve Banks and 25 branches around the country. Your local bank can give you the address of the one serving your area.

The tender form is the application you use to buy a T bill. You can obtain a tender by writing to your district Federal Reserve Bank or branch. Fill it out and send it back, along with a certified check or an official bank check. You'll buy a T bill at the next Treasury auction.

Ignorance is no excuse for violating Midland city codes

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Ignorance is no excuse when it comes to violating the city's codes.

Several Midlanders are discovering excuses won't alleviate the violations or their fines as the city's Code Enforcement Department steps up its execution of the laws.

A man in north Midland was one of those cited for violating the codes and his case was taken before the City Council. Part of the problem stemmed from his unawareness of the need for building permits to remodel his house. And the fact that some additions had been made by the previous owner didn't alleviate his responsibility, said city officials.

George Wolf and Warren Cloyd with the Code Enforcement Department said they have noticed an increasing number of property owners making changes to the property without getting building permits.

In some cases, it's the fault of the owner. In other cases, it's the fault of the contractor hired to do the job, according to the code enforcement officials. But in both instances, the owner is held responsible by the city.

"EVERY PROPERTY owner should check with the city before they do any remodeling or make any changes," said Wolf. "These people use ignorance as an excuse; they think ignorance is bliss."

But that bliss can become a major obstacle when the property owner wants to sell that home, according to Wolf. He can't get a clear title if there are any code violations.

"Most people think, 'It's my property and I can do what I want,'" said Cloyd. It may be their property, but for the protection of themselves and adjacent property owners, they can't do what they want without getting a building permit.

"It's not that the city wants the permit fee," Cloyd added. "That doesn't cover the cost of doing the inspections. It's for the protection of the people."

In the case of Jim Hughes, 3116 Tealwood, who took his case to the council — which deferred a decision until its next meeting on Tuesday — when he moved into the house the previous owner already had added a garden room to one side of the house and turned the attic into a third floor room. All was done in violation of the requirements of the Planned District under which those houses were constructed.

Hughes then turned the garden room into a spa, enclosed the garage and concreted the front yard — all without the proper building permit.

Hughes told the council the additions were to have been permitted by the contractor. But an incorrect permit was issued and Hughes said he wasn't aware of it.

WOLF SAID THE city had made a mistake in that case. But he advised property owners "to go with their contractor when they get a permit."

"The homeowner is held responsible if the contractor doesn't get a permit," added Cloyd. "Or, the homeowner should ask to see the permit before the contractor starts the job. It has to be displayed at the site."

Both men said too many property owners are fooled by their contractors, who fail to get a building permit for the work to be done. Cloyd said one company has been building carports all over town without getting any permits. These carports are in violation of the city's building codes and the property owners then are fined for the infraction.

"One man said he thought he had called a reputable contractor," Cloyd said, but the man discovered otherwise when he was cited for violating the law.

The two men have discovered that too many property owners aren't aware of where the property line is. They think it starts at the curb when actually it is 9½ feet back from the curb, said Cloyd.

"The homeowner is held responsible if the contractor doesn't get a permit...The homeowner should ask to see the permit before the contractor starts the job. It has to be displayed at the site."

— Warren Cloyd, city Code Enforcement Department

Two code enforcement officers were added to the department recently and they are concentrating on violations in south and east Midland, according to Cloyd. As a result, he is receiving numerous telephone calls from residents claiming they aren't violating the law.

Specifically, the officers are looking for junk vehicles, weeds and rubbish, debris, dilapidated structures and truck parking. In other areas they are looking for travel trailers and motor homes that violate the law.

JUNK VEHICLES are described as any vehicle which is wrecked, inoperable, partially dismantled, discarded or with an expired license plates or safety inspection sticker. If the vehicle is placed out of sight, such as in a garage or in a fenced back yard, it can be kept. But if the vehicle is in public view, it can be removed by the city.

Dilapidated structures are defined as any building or structure located on someone's property and which have become uninhabitable, unsafe or unsightly.

The city code also prohibits parking trucks with more than two axles and over 20 feet in length or one ton capacity on any city street.

And all recreational vehicles — motor homes and travel trailers — are prohibited from parking on the street. If under 20 feet in length, the vehicle can be parked in the driveway. If over 20 feet, it must be parked in the rear yard area or a commercial storage area.

"We're not after the people who are here visiting," said Wolf. "If the people will let us know these visitors are here, we'll leave them alone. But the motor home should be parked in the driveway."

A NEW CODE that went into effect last September limits the placement and height of fences in the front yard. Wolf said a fence permit is now required for all corner lots and the fronts of interior lots. This doesn't apply to back yard fences, though.

A fence in the front and at the sides can be 30 inches high. This protects the vision on corner lots, said Wolf.

And more problems with home occupations violating the city code have cropped up in recent years, according to the two men. "There seems to be a lot more businesses in the home and I don't know if it's because of the recession," Wolf said.

Cloyd related the law which states that an office is allowed in the home if it is a business in which no outside help is required and no signs are posted in the yard.

It must be a business in which the public doesn't go to the person. As an example, Wolf said businesses which are allowed are Tupperware and Avon because the salesperson delivers the items to the clients. Mail order businesses are prohibited, he added.

"Zoning codes are not designed to keep anyone from doing anything, but to protect the rights of the people around him," Cloyd said. "They are to protect the continuity of the neighborhood."

SWCID faces crippling budget cuts

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Legislators will be looking at wide-ranging budget cuts for higher education when they return to Austin next week — one which would mean $650,000 annually to the Southwest Collegiate Institute for the Deaf.

Already hamstrung by a provision which has cost SWCID nearly all its out-of-state enrollment, Texas' only higher learning institution for the deaf (and one of three in the country) is faced with another obstacle.

If legislators stand by the recommendation of the Legislative Budget Board, the junior college's appropriation will drop from $3.9 million to $2.6 million over its next two budget years. This is in line with 30-percent cuts proposed for most higher education budgets.

"We realize the whole state is facing some tough times," said Sam Hill, Howard County Junior College District Vice President at SWCID. "We would like the Legislature to reconsider and give us $300,000 to $400,000 more per year over the next biennium."

Midland-area State Rep. Tom Craddick said he would not support cutting SWCID's funding. The Legislature is reconvening Tuesday for its 69th Legislative Session.

One way to offset this loss in revenue would be to attract more out-of-state enrollment. But a provision in the bill establishing SWCID which was affirmed in a recent Attorney General's opinion appears to have eliminated this option.

Unlike other junior colleges in Texas, out-of-state SWCID students on scholarship are not exempted from significantly higher tuition rates. This means what cost $800 per year before the provision went into effect in fall 1982 now costs out-of-staters $8,300.

Before each year, the Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System is to estimate the cost of educating a deaf student. Based on this estimate, the junior college district trustees are to set non-resident rates "that will result in the institute collecting tuition from each student in an amount approximately equal to the cost of educating the student."

"With this ridiculously high tuition rate, there's nothing we can do," said Hill, noting that as much as $7,000 in scholarship money would be needed to offset the difference for a single student.

While some of the non-residents may switch to Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C., or the National Technical Institute for the Deaf in Rochester, N.Y., "Some may end up not going to school at all," said Hill.

Lobbying efforts are under way to persuade legislators to drop the tuition provision and reconsider the LBB's recommended budget cuts. Should this fail, Hill said services would suffer.

Cuts could claim training programs, media services in the library and counseling. Support services — such as notetakers and interpreters who make communication possible between SWCID students and outsiders unfamiliar with sign language — would have to be cut back to make up for the loss in revenues.

"They're essential, but if we cannot get any additional funds, we'll just have to look at how we deliver these services," said Hill. "If you don't have the services, you can't provide the services."

Since the tuition provision, out-of-state enrollment has dropped from 86 to 9. Total enrollment has dropped from 133 to 115, according to SWCID records.

Hill said this hurts the learning environment for those at SWCID and lowers the standards the college sets for accepting students.

The cultural experiences gained by studying with students from other parts of the country is lost. "It's kind of like living the rest of your life with your sister," said Hill.

Many of the state's more advanced deaf students already chose Gallaudet or the technical institute in Rochester, but out-of-state enrollees partially offset this, said Hill. In turn, the reduction in non-resident enrollment has further decreased the attractiveness of the college for deaf Texans.

SWCID admitted its first students in August 1980 as a program of the junior college district. It was established as an individual campus by Senate Bill 892 in May 1981.

Hill predicted enrollment would have grown to 200 without the tuition provision. The fall 1984 enrollment was 115.

It is the only junior college in the country exclusively for the deaf. All classes are held using American Sign Language.

'Dead' language takes on new life

By JULIE HILLRICHS

Is there life after death?

Midland secondary foreign language teachers think so.

That's why they're participating in a nationwide movement to give new life to a dead language: Latin.

In 1976, just over 150,000 American public high school students took the language, down 79 percent from the 1962 peak of 702,000.

But in the past half dozen years, the old tongue has been given new life, in part because of the back-to-basics reforms in school curriculum, said Richard Kleinbeck, foreign language instructor at Lee High School.

"There is a movement to go back to the humanities. In the past, people were too microwave conscious. They didn't realize Latin is something you can't master in a short time. That was the cause for the decrease in the first place," he said.

Today, high school enrollments in Latin are up by 20,000 nationwide and climbing. Texas alone has shown a 42 percent increase, to 12,418, in the past two academic years.

In Midland, statistics show an estimated 50 percent increase in the number of secondary students enrolled in Latin courses districtwide.

The Midland Independent School District offers Latin at each of the freshmen high schools and at both high schools as well.

"The main reason for the increase," said Robert Carter, coordinator of social studies and foreign language at MISD, "is because students want to improve their test scores. There is a correlation between foreign language and math which has an impact on college entrance examination scores."

More significantly, the lessons help students master basic English, particularly those students with poor reading and writing skills, said Linda Tervooren, Latin instructor at Midland High School.

"Kids are more aware of what Latin can do for them to help build their vocabulary. It's like a puzzle. Once you get the pieces together and memorize them, it all seems to fit. It works hand in hand with English because much of our language derives from Latin," she said.

Though some educators believe students who pursue the classics are bright to begin with, the three Midland experts say Latin helps students become more disciplined. "It's a good way of training the memory," said Kleinbeck. "It helps them to learn how to study."

Said Carter, "Latin is dead in that you don't speak it but certainly not dead when you look in a dictionary and discover words in our own language with Latin origin."

Ms. Tervooren echoed Carter's sentiments, saying, "Latin is only dead to those who don't take time to use it."

PBRPC directors elect new chairman

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission board of directors elected a new chairman Thursday at its annual Legislative Luncheon at the Holiday Inn Centre.

Charles Warnock, the county judge of Pecos County, was elected chairman for 1985. He replaces Big Spring City Councilman Jack Y. Smith.

Other officers elected for 1985 were Richard Stitz, county judge of Ward County, who will be vice chairman; and Clarese Gough, Monahans city councilwoman, who will serve as secretary-treasurer.

"I think (the planning commission) does a super job," said State Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, who along with newly elected Rep. Kelly Godwin, R-Odessa, represented the Legislature at the luncheon.

Craddick and Godwin received legislative wish lists from Fort Stockton Mayor Bruce McKenzie on behalf of the Texas Municipal League, from Upton County Judge Peggy Garner on behalf of the Texas Association of Counties, and from Reeves County Judge W.O. "Bill" Pigman on behalf of the Regional Planning Commission.

Pigman urged more support for programs to fight alcoholism and give support to senior citizens, "since we've still got some money left."

The commission also accepted Midland City Councilman Gordon Marcum's invitation to hold their July semi-annual meeting in Midland.

After the luncheon, the board convened its regular monthly meeting and approved a $70,755 grant application by the Reeves County Community Council to continue funding the Head Start program in Saragosa and Pecos. The grant is to be matched with $18,016 in local funds for a total budget of $88,771.

'Music of the soul' excites body, mind, heart

Once again, but for the first time in aerobics, I stretched, jumped, bounced, ran and reeled to a rendition of Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" from his majestic "Messiah."

And something quite significant occurred to me while I was exercising to build up a vigorous sweat and a stout heartbeat even while I was enjoying a side benefit — relishing God's lovely creatures in the coed class.

It was simply this: next to heightened romance, as in boy-girl passion, stirring and resounding music surely has no counterpart. Flying, sailing, soaring, diving and, in instances, ritualistic praying may come close to the elation of music. But how can they exceed the soul-rousing effects of dramatic, lofty and serene music that makes the heart sing and dance with joy?

Do you not ascribe an experience, however remote from music, that excites your body, mind and heart as "music to the soul?"

Music can be such delight. It can be a bond which unites the whole of mankind for an instance or for a moment which seems to bleed into eternity. What music aficionados commonly term music from the Classical and Romantic periods is perhaps the most exciting and inspired of all music. It is truly amazing that the genius of composers such as Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Liszt, Wagner, Verdi, Brahams, Tchaikovsky, Debussy, Strauss, Bartok and many more could reach such plateaus of grandeur.

Music is God's blessed gift to his children, both obedient and misbehaving. It's his voice transformed to earthly sounds of heavenly flavors. As long as "music is music," it is an incomparable sound — from folk music and hymns to the classics and nationalistic sounds to pop music — be that jazz, swing, blues, country 'n' western, gospel, rock, or rock 'n' roll.

Some, or what may seem to be a great deal, so-called music is downright cacophony to me. I had much rather try to enjoy the high-pitched monotony of cicadas, the racket of crickets, the hoots of owls, the clatter of old hens and the hooey of old men rather than even try to tolerate some of the modern-day sounds. But I'm biased and unconditioned to certain sounds I call noise.

Tons of that "junk" to me is musical gibberish and gobbledygook.

But I'll have to admit that millions of teen-agers and young adults and, disappointingly enough, thousands of oldsters who ought to like old-fogey music seem to have an attraction to and an affectation for much of that noise which I loosely call inane rock. I'll have to say that some rock music is, indeed, music. It can be spirited, soothing, savored, enjoyed, delighted in, and has elements of romance. But some of that rock noise would drive me to seek refuge or, if necessary, the solace of an asylum.

Mostly, though, music is soothing and consoling. It is the romance of the soul.

Railroads consider end of cabooses

SAN ANGELO (AP) — The caboose bringing up the rear of a train has been a delight to children for generations, but the cars may become a thing of the past.

If current trends continue, computers and specialized electronic equipment will eliminate the brightly colored cabooses that for more than a century have been the last cars on freight trains.

"We don't need them anymore. Now we have sophisticated, computerized electronic equipment," Susan Metcalf, public relations representative for Sante Fe railway office, said.

Sante Fe is one of several companies eliminating cabooses from mainline-traffic freight trains which haul merchandise long distances.

Railroad companies say eliminating cabooses from trains will not result in layoffs. Instead, the caboose's personnel — usually two employees — will be moved to the engine car.

"None of these people are being eliminated. They're just being put on the engines," said A.M. Henson, superintendent of the Southern Pacific Company office in San Antonio. "It's not necessary to have people on the rear end of the train because we have electronic devices that check the trains for you."

Cabooses were originally used for an office and dormitory for the conductor and rear brakeman and a storage place for tools.

The main purpose of cabooses was to serve as a lookout station for employees monitoring rear-end train activities and spotting mechanical defects or other potential problems.

Today, hotels are used for overnight stays, repair work is done at maintainance shops, computers have taken care of the conductor's office duties and electronic devices monitor air pressure and protect the train from collisions.

"In the past, road crews also did repair work in route, but we no longer need tools because crews don't do a significant amount of the repair of equipment anymore. Now they stop at maintenance shops," Ms. Metcalf said.

The cost of buying, operating and maintaining a caboose is also a factor in the phase-out. Railroad industries place the cost of running the caboose at about 62 cents per mile, and of buying a new caboose at about $80,000.

An estimated $400 million will be saved annually by phasing out cabooses where they are not needed, according to industry statistics provided by Ms. Metcalf.

Henson said cabooses will be eliminated from no more than 25 percent of freight trains in agreement with national negotiations among railroad companies and the government.

"None of these people are being eliminated. They're just being put on the engines. It's not necessary to have people on the rear end of the train because we have electronic devices that check the trains for you."

Judge sets date for sanctuary trial

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A federal judge has set a Jan. 21 trial date for Jack Elder, accused of transporting Salvadoran refugees in the United States.

But U.S. District Judge Hayden Head Jr. refused Thursday to grant a change of venue motion filed by Elder's lawyers.

"The change of venue motion is denied," pending jury selection, Head said in a brief hearing.

"The information I have received is not sufficient to convince me the defendant could not receive a fair trial in this district," the judge said.

Head also set Jan. 9 as the day he will begin taking testimony on several defense motions to dismiss the charge.

Elder, 41, was arrested April 13 and charged with transporting three Salvadorans from a Catholic Church-sponsored halfway house to a bus station in Harlingen. He directs a halfway house for refugees, known as Casa Oscar Romero.

A volunteer at the center, Stacey Lynn Merkt, 30, was convicted in May on the same charge stemming from a different incident and was placed on two years' probation.

Head said he would hear evidence next week on a defense motion to dismiss the charges based on Elder's contention he was exercising his religious beliefs. The defense also claims the charges should be thrown out because the government is singling Elder out for prosecution.

But Head expressed skepticism about the defense motion he will hear on Wednesday.

"Everything I have read is that you are wrong in the law, but I want to give you a chance to have your say," the judge said.

Head denied several defense motions to dismiss the charges, including one based on immigration and international law. Defense lawyers had claimed that the Salvadorans were legally in the country because they were fleeing persecution in their native land.

"We claim they are refugees, both war and political, and under international law they have a right to be here," defense lawyer Lisa Brodyaga said before the hearing began.

The defense also had claimed that Elder acted properly because of the circumstances.

"The fact that you had 50,000 civilians killed (in El Salvador) is justification," said defense lawyer Steve Cooper.

"Everybody takes undocumented people around," Ms. Brodyaga said.

Workers in the so-called "sanctuary movement" claim Elder's arrest was part of a crackdown by federal authorities on people helping refugees and opposing U.S. policies in El Salvador.

They also claim the aliens are political refugees protected by the Refugee Act of 1980 and are not illegal aliens seeking jobs, as the government claims.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Guerra has said the government does not consider the case part of a crackdown, but rather a "simple alien transport case."

Elder has been indicted twice. The second indictment, in December, charged him with transporting illegal aliens, conspiracy and bringing illegal aliens into the country.

Sheriff's deputies break into church, arrest protesters

CLAIRTON, Pa. (AP) — Sheriff's deputies armed with clubs today broke into a church and arrested seven dissident church members and union leaders who had barricaded themselves inside for several weeks in a protest against "corporate evil."

Authorities said there was no resistance from those inside Trinity Lutheran Church, and Clairton Police Chief Kennethy Ujevich said none of the four men and three women arrested was injured.

The occupiers were cited for contempt of court after they ignored a judge's order to vacate the small stone church, whose congregation split after its former pastor, the Rev. D. Douglas Roth, began preaching that too little was being done to help the unemployed.

Allegheny County Sheriff Eugene Coon and dozens of sheriff's deputies wearing blue jumpsuits and armed with clubs surrounded the church around dawn.

Coon pushed reporters off the church's lawn and, using a chrome bullhorn, called out to those inside: "Those of you inside the church, do you hear me?...You have a court order to vacate. Open the doors and come out.

"This is the sheriff of Allegheny County with a court order," Coon said. "You're in contempt at this time. Please open the doors and come out."

There was no response from inside the church.

The deputies then used a crowbar to break into a wooden rear door. Deputies, working from inside, unchained a second, glass door.

Ujevich said he and about six or eight deputies entered the church and met those inside.

"They were standing there when we went in...They made a few remarks, but that's all," he said.

Ujevich said the group's baseball bats, which had been brandished in recent weeks outside the church, were laid on the side of a room and were not used.

The chief said the deputies had the arrests "all planned out," apparently referring to negotiations between the sheriff's department and those inside the church.

He said those arrested would be taken before Common Pleas Court Judge Emil Narick today.

Supporters of Roth had controlled the church since Roth was jailed Nov. 13 for refusing to step down from his pulpit.

A core of hard-liners barricaded themselves inside after a judge ordered them Dec. 21 to surrender the church to the Western Pennsylvania-West Virginia Synod of the Lutheran Church in America.

Roth, one of about 10 ministers calling themselves the Denominational Ministry Strategy, and his supporters claim they are following God's command to preach against "corporate evil" on behalf of the unemployed.

Roth is serving a 90-day contempt of court sentence for defying Narick's order that he obey his bishop and step down as pastor. The church congregation was bitterly divided over Roth's pro-labor activities.

"For the people inside, you've got to really feel sorry for them. I think they were brainwashed," said church member Kent Milton, who watched the scene from a nearby sidewalk.

Coon said Thursday of the protesters, "They're claiming some type of sanctuary. But they've been poorly informed about the law. There's no such thing as sanctuary in our law."

Ron Weisen, resident of United Steelworkers Local 1397 and an ally of those inside, said, "There wasn't going to be any violence. That was all psychology."

Weisen had said on Thursday that the protesting group planned to retake the church if evicted.

Pittsburgh police issued criminal warrants for two of the holdouts.

"(The protesters are) claiming some type of sanctuary. But they've been poorly informed about the law. There's no such thing as sanctuary in our law."

Odessa man dies after being found unconscious

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 27-year-old Odessa man died early this morning after being found unconscious about 11 a.m. Thursday lying next to a partially empty anti-freeze container on his living room floor.

Hospital reports indicate the man, whose name is being withheld pending notification of next of kin, died at 2:48 a.m. today from drinking anti-freeze. A suicide note reportedly was found next to his body in his residence at the University Park Apartments.

The victim was an employee of the apartments, according to police reports. Officers were called to the scene at 10:54 a.m. Thursday by apartment residents who had not seen the man since New Year's Day.

After finding the door locked, officers entered through an apartment window and found the man lying on his living room floor, a two-thirds empty gallon container of anti-freeze beside him, according to police reports. The body was taken to Easterling-Wilson Funeral Home.

Nebraska Supreme Court overturns minister's sentence

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — The Nebraska Supreme Court today unanimously overturned an eight-month jail sentence for contempt of court imposed on a fundamentalist minister whose uncertified church school was the center of a long-running dispute with the state.

The high court ruled that the Cass County District Court erred by handing down criminal contempt sanctions against the Rev. Everett Sileven after he initially was charged with civil contempt.

The Supreme Court, however, rejected Sileven's argument that the trial court erred in finding him guilty of willful disobedience because his religious beliefs forced him to disregard the injunction.

"Well, praise the Lord!" Sileven said when he was informed of the decision by The Associated Press. "I'm glad it's overturned. Certainly I'm glad they saw fit to do this."

Sileven contended that the district court violated his constitutional right to notice by pursuing criminal sanctions.

Judge William C. Hastings, who wrote for the court, said, "We concluded that although the contempt proceedings were noticed as a civil contempt, may very well have been intended as a civil contempt, and were conducted as a civil contempt, in that (Sileven) was not advised of his rights against self-incrimination, the sanction imposed was very definitely criminal in nature."

Sileven was sentenced to eight months imprisonment in the Cass County Jail by District Judge Ronald E. Reagan for "willful contempt" in April 1984. He served 37 days of the sentence and was later released on $10,000 bond.

The sentence stemmed from Sileven's violation of the lower court's injunction barring him from operating the Faith Christian School until it met state education regulations.

In rejecting Silven's arguments about willful disobedience, Hastings wrote:

"It appears 'willful' means the violation was committed intentionally, with knowledge that the act was in violation of the court order. The record fully supports the conclusion that Sileven knew he was violating the court's order and that he chose to intentionally violate it," he said. "The fact that he felt he found a reason in the form of his conscience does not detract from the fact that he acted 'willfully.'"

Sileven has argued that state regulation of the school would violate his constitutional rights to freedom of religion because he considers the school an extension of the church.

Faith Christian School was one of several uncertified Christian schools that operated in defiance of state law. Fundamentalist religious leaders from around the country staged several protests at Sileven's church and also demonstrated at the Capitol in Lincoln and in Washington, D.C.

The Legislature passed a compromise bill in 1984 which has in effect ended the controversy. The new law allows church schools to operate without certification if they provide the state with information.

Stolen trailer recovered Thursday by city police

From Staff Reports

A $20,000 tank trailer stolen Wednesday from Texas Dynochem Inc. was recovered Thursday by police, according to reports.

The trailer was found abandoned at about 6 p.m. on a dirt road just west of FM 715 and just north of the Interstate 20 north service road, police said.

Pit bull pups, marble grave vases and a .357 Magnum pistol were among items reported stolen Thursday.

John Legendre, Route 9, Box 9228, told the sheriff's office his home was broken into sometime between Dec. 27 and Thursday, and the .357 Magnum and other items were taken. The gun was valued at $500; the total value of the lost items was about $750.

John Orr, 4483 Hackberry Court, told sheriff's deputies his coat was stolen off the back of a chair in a restaurant at the Executel Motel, 100 Airport Plaza, at about 6:30 p.m. The coat was valued at $300.

Two pit bull pups belonging to Celia Larez were reported stolen from a house at 2409 W. Washington by two unknown men who had first asked if the pups were for sale. After being told the pups were too young to sell, the men leaned over a fence in the yard, picked up the pups and carried them off, according to reports. Each pit bull pup was valued at $250.

Two marble vases worth $100 each were stolen from a grave in Fairview Cemetery sometime between Sept. 15 and Dec. 26, it was reported. The vases belonged to Nellie Beauchamp, 909 W. Kentucky.

Clove cigarettes: New fad causing controversy

Copley News Service

When Jerry Rogers began smoking clove cigarettes a year ago, he was pleasantly surprised to find that they weren't nearly as harsh on his throat as commerical tobacco, and that his non-smoking friends actually liked the pungent aroma of cloves emitted in the smoke.

Besides that, the 19-year-old San Diego cook said that smoking three or four of the cigarettes in succession gave him a "rush and a slight high," not unlike the "high" obtained from smoking a low grade of marijuana.

"They're a little expensive, but they're safe," he said. "You can't say that about Marlboros."

Rogers — like thousands of young people in Southern California who have made clove cigarettes a huge fad — may be mistaken about the tobacco and clove product imported from Indonesia, health officials say.

A WHITTIER, CALIF., surgeon believes that the use of clove cigarettes — comprised of 60 percent tobacco and 40 percent cloves — may have been associated with the recent death of a 17-year-old patient.

And a spokesman for the American Lung Association says the organization has received calls from young, clove cigarette users who report coughing up blood.

"We issued a warning a year ago advising against their use," said Debbie Kelley, the San Diego Lung Association's program director. "They have a far higher tar content than ordinary cigarettes. And analysis of the cigarettes indicate they may contain hazardous pesticides that have been banned for use in the United States."

Furthermore, the active ingredient in the cigarettes is eugenol, a substance long used by dentists as an anesthetic.

"The eugenol may allow the smoker to pull in more smoke and to tolerate it much easier," said Kelley.

Despite warnings, many high school and college students, as well as people in their 20s, continue to buy and use the product, which one store owner compared in popularity to designer clothes.

"We sell about 10 cartons a week, mostly to people 18 to 25," said Rick Deveaux. "It seems to be the fashionable thing to do these days."

A tobacco shop owner said clove cigarettes "sell as well as all but two or three of my domestic cigarette brands. Some people just have to have these things."

AMERICAN IMPORTERS and distributors of clove cigarettes say the product has been available in the United States for many years, but has never experienced the success of the past two years.

"It was a very heavy fad in '83 and through early-'84," said Norm Borne, manager of Glaser Brothers, a Los Angeles-based firm that distributes tobacco products in Southern California. "The fad has softened a bit, but not much."

Borne said that sales of clove cigarettes comprise only about 5 percent of all cigarettes sold in the United States.

Still, that's a lot of cigarettes. A spokesman for the U.S. Department of Agriculture said that only 16 million clove cigarettes were imported from Indonesia in all of 1980. But in the first nine months of 1984, 111,550,000 of the cigarettes found their way into American shops.

Available in at least a dozen different brands — from Kuta, Bima and Jakarta, to Roro, Kratatoa and Gudang, some with filters, others without — the cigarettes retail for about $1.60 to $2.50 per pack. Depending on the brand, a pack contains anywhere from 10 to 15 cigarettes.

Like tobacco cigarettes produced in the United States, imported clove cigarettes escape the purview of government regulatory agencies. And because they have only recently become popular, no independent laboratories have undertaken any conclusive studies of the physical effects of smoking the cigarettes.

DR. DONALD RAMRAS, director of the San Diego County Department of Health Services, said his agency has no authority to test or to restrict the sale of any tobacco product.

"The only way we could step in and do something was if the cigarettes posed an imminent health hazard to the community," he said.

And Don Shopland, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration in Washington, D.C., said that "cigarettes containing over 50 percent tobacco come under no authority for regulation. They're considered neither a food, nor drug, nor medical device, so we have no power in that area."

Critics charge that the lack of any government regulation of cigarettes — and imported cigarettes, in particular — allow manufacturers to add any number of additives in tobacco blends.

"If they wanted to, cigarette producers could put cyanide, saccharin, EDB (a banned, potent pesticide), you name it, in their product and get away with it," said Dr. John Banzhaf, executive director of Action on Smoking and Health, a Washington, D.C.-based anti-tobacco lobbying group.

THE FUROR OVER clove cigarettes erupted in early December when Dr. Frederick Schechter, a Whittier surgeon, revealed that a 17-year-old patient of his named Tim Cislaw may have died from complications associated with the smoking of clove cigarettes.

"I have no proof that the cigarettes had anything to do with Tim's death, though," said Schechter in an interview.

Cislaw died May 10 after spending 10 weeks in the hospital and undergoing four surgical operations.

Death sparks concern over clove cigarettes

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — Shortly after smoking an imported clove cigarette one night last March, Tim Cislaw, a 17-year-old high school student here who was recovering from the flu, developed shortness of breath.

By morning, after spending the night literally gasping for breath, he was coughing up blood and was admitted to Humana Hospital West Anaheim. By evening he was in intensive care, his chest X-ray, which had been normal earlier in the day, showing a dramatic change: The lower portions of both lungs were filled with fluid, a sign of rapidly progressing inflammation.

During the next 10 weeks, the sandy-haired surfer and soccer player showed no sign of improvement: His lungs remained inflamed, the progression of the inflammation complicated by a bacterial infection; it became increasingly difficult to clear fluid from his stiffened lungs; rupture holes developed; and normal lung tissue was gradually replaced by non-functional scar tissue.

On May 10, after four operations to close the recurrent massive air leaks and to clean out the portions of dead lung and scar tissue, he died.

But Dr. Frederick G. Schechter, the Whittier, Calif. cardiovascular and thoracic surgeon who operated on Tim Cislaw, refuses to lay the case to rest.

Schechter, and Dr. Tee Guidotti, a specialist in occupational and toxicological lung diseases who is consulting with Schechter on a case study of Tim Cislaw, believe that smoking clove cigarettes, which contain a suspected toxic substance called eugenol, was "implicated in the exaggerated inflammatory process, which destroyed Tim's lungs and ultimately led to his death."

"We have heard of at least three or four other cases of similar reactions, but have not been able to verify them," Schechter said.

Hamburger studied

Copley News Service

Serious burger hounds no longer should ask the question, "Where's the beef?" It's in the book "Hamburger for America and the World," by Indiana University linguist Guyla Descy.

He's been studying the linguistic variations and history of the word "hamburger" for some 20 years. So, as you might expect, he's taste-tested quite a few burgers.

Descy says the best hamburgers — and the most expensive — can be found in Los Angeles. And the worst by far are in Budapest, Hungary.

Railroads consider end of cabooses

SAN ANGELO (AP) — The caboose bringing up the rear of a train has been a delight to children for generations, but the cars may become a thing of the past.

If current trends continue, computers and specialized electronic equipment will eliminate the brightly colored cabooses that for more than a century have been the last cars on freight trains.

"We don't need them anymore. Now we have sophisticated, computerized electronic equipment," Susan Metcalf, public relations representative for Sante Fe railway office, said.

Sante Fe is one of several companies eliminating cabooses from mainline-traffic freight trains which haul merchandise long distances.

Railroad companies say eliminating cabooses from trains will not result in layoffs. Instead, the caboose's personnel — usually two employees — will be moved to the engine car.

"None of these people are being eliminated. They're just being put on the engines," said A.M. Henson, superintendent of the Southern Pacific Company office in San Antonio. "It's not necessary to have people on the rear end of the train because we have electronic devices that check the trains for you."

Cabooses were originally used for an office and dormitory for the conductor and rear brakeman and a storage place for tools.

The main purpose of cabooses was to serve as a lookout station for employees monitoring rear-end train activities and spotting mechanical defects or other potential problems.

Today, hotels are used for overnight stays, repair work is done at maintainance shops, computers have taken care of the conductor's office duties and electronic devices monitor air pressure and protect the train from collisions.

"None of these people are being eliminated. They're just being put on the engines. It's not necessary to have people on the rear end of the train because we have electronic devices that check the trains for you."

— A.M. Henson, superintendent of Southern Pacific's San Antonio office

"In the past, road crews also did repair work in route, but we no longer need tools because crews don't do a significant amount of the repair of equipment anymore. Now they stop at maintenance shops," Ms. Metcalf said.

The cost of buying, operating and maintaining a caboose is also a factor in the phase-out. Railroad industries place the cost of running the caboose at about 62 cents per mile, and of buying a new caboose at about $80,000.

An estimated $400 million will be saved annually by phasing out cabooses where they are not needed, according to industry statistics provided by Ms. Metcalf.

Henson said cabooses will be eliminated from no more than 25 percent of freight trains in agreement with national negotiations among railroad companies and the government.

Judge sets date for sanctuary trial

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A federal judge has set a Jan. 21 trial date for Jack Elder, accused of transporting Salvadoran refugees in the United States.

But U.S. District Judge Hayden Head Jr. refused Thursday to grant a change of venue motion filed by Elder's lawyers.

"The change of venue motion is denied," pending jury selection, Head said in a brief hearing.

"The information I have received is not sufficient to convince me the defendant could not receive a fair trial in this district," the judge said.

Head also set Jan. 9 as the day he will begin taking testimony on several defense motions to dismiss the charge.

Elder, 41, was arrested April 13 and charged with transporting three Salvadorans from a Catholic Church-sponsored halfway house to a bus station in Harlingen. He directs a halfway house for refugees, known as Casa Oscar Romero.

A volunteer at the center, Stacey Lynn Merkt, 30, was convicted in May on the same charge stemming from a different incident and was placed on two years' probation.

Head said he would hear evidence next week on a defense motion to dismiss the charges based on Elder's contention he was exercising his religious beliefs. The defense also claims the charges should be thrown out because the government is singling Elder out for prosecution.

But Head expressed skepticism about the defense motion he will hear on Wednesday.

"Everything I have read is that you are wrong in the law, but I want to give you a chance to have your say," the judge said.

Head denied several defense motions to dismiss the charges, including one based on immigration and international law. Defense lawyers had claimed that the Salvadorans were legally in the country because they were fleeing persecution in their native land.

"We claim they are refugees, both war and political, and under international law they have a right to be here," defense lawyer Lisa Brodyaga said before the hearing began.

The defense also had claimed that Elder acted properly because of the circumstances.

"The fact that you had 50,000 civilians killed (in El Salvador) is justification," said defense lawyer Steve Cooper.

"Everybody takes undocumented people around," Ms. Brodyaga said.

Workers in the so-called "sanctuary movement" claim Elder's arrest was part of a crackdown by federal authorities on people helping refugees and opposing U.S. policies in El Salvador.

They also claim the aliens are political refugees protected by the Refugee Act of 1980 and are not illegal aliens seeking jobs, as the government claims.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Guerra has said the government does not consider the case part of a crackdown, but rather a "simple alien transport case."

Elder has been indicted twice. The second indictment, in December, charged him with transporting illegal aliens, conspiracy and bringing illegal aliens into the country.

Sheriff's deputies break into church, arrest protesters

CLAIRTON, Pa. (AP) — Sheriff's deputies armed with clubs today broke into a church and arrested seven dissident church members and union leaders who had barricaded themselves inside for several weeks in a protest against "corporate evil."

Authorities said there was no resistance from those inside Trinity Lutheran Church, and Clairton Police Chief Kennethy Ujevich said none of the four men and three women arrested was injured.

The occupiers were cited for contempt of court after they ignored a judge's order to vacate the small stone church, whose congregation split after its former pastor, the Rev. D. Douglas Roth, began preaching that too little was being done to help the unemployed.

Allegheny County Sheriff Eugene Coon and dozens of sheriff's deputies wearing blue jumpsuits and armed with clubs surrounded the church around dawn.

Coon pushed reporters off the church's lawn and, using a chrome bullhorn, called out to those inside: "Those of you inside the church, do you hear me?...You have a court order to vacate. Open the doors and come out.

"This is the sheriff of Allegheny County with a court order," Coon said. "You're in contempt at this time. Please open the doors and come out."

There was no response from inside the church.

The deputies then used a crowbar to break into a wooden rear door. Deputies, working from inside, unchained a second, glass door.

"(The protesters are) claiming some type of sanctuary. But they've been poorly informed about the law. There's no such thing as sanctuary in our law."

— Allegheny County Sheriff Eugene Coon

Ujevich said he and about six or eight deputies entered the church and met those inside.

"They were standing there when we went in...They made a few remarks, but that's all," he said.

Ujevich said the group's baseball bats, which had been brandished in recent weeks outside the church, were laid on the side of a room and were not used.

The chief said the deputies had the arrests "all planned out," apparently referring to negotiations between the sheriff's department and those inside the church.

He said those arrested would be taken before Common Pleas Court Judge Emil Narick today.

Supporters of Roth had controlled the church since Roth was jailed Nov. 13 for refusing to step down from his pulpit.

A core of hard-liners barricaded themselves inside after a judge ordered them Dec. 21 to surrender the church to the Western Pennsylvania-West Virginia Synod of the Lutheran Church in America.

Roth, one of about 10 ministers calling themselves the Denominational Ministry Strategy, and his supporters claim they are following God's command to preach against "corporate evil" on behalf of the unemployed.

Roth is serving a 90-day contempt of court sentence for defying Narick's order that he obey his bishop and step down as pastor. The church congregation was bitterly divided over Roth's pro-labor activities.

"For the people inside, you've got to really feel sorry for them. I think they were brainwashed," said church member Kent Milton, who watched the scene from a nearby sidewalk.

Coon said Thursday of the protesters, "They're claiming some type of sanctuary. But they've been poorly informed about the law. There's no such thing as sanctuary in our law."

Ron Weisen, resident of United Steelworkers Local 1397 and an ally of those inside, said, "There wasn't going to be any violence. That was all psychology."

Weisen had said on Thursday that the protesting group planned to retake the church if evicted.

Pittsburgh police issued criminal warrants for two of the holdouts.

Odessa man dies after being found unconscious

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 27-year-old Odessa man died early this morning after being found unconscious about 11 a.m. Thursday lying next to a partially empty anti-freeze container on his living room floor.

Hospital reports indicate the man, whose name is being withheld pending notification of next of kin, died at 2:48 a.m. today from drinking anti-freeze. A suicide note reportedly was found next to his body in his residence at the University Park Apartments.

The victim was an employee of the apartments, according to police reports. Officers were called to the scene at 10:54 a.m. Thursday by apartment residents who had not seen the man since New Year's Day.

After finding the door locked, officers entered through an apartment window and found the man lying on his living room floor, a two-thirds empty gallon container of anti-freeze beside him, according to police reports. The body was taken to Easterling-Wilson Funeral Home.

Nebraska Supreme Court overturns minister's sentence

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — The Nebraska Supreme Court today unanimously overturned an eight-month jail sentence for contempt of court imposed on a fundamentalist minister whose uncertified church school was the center of a long-running dispute with the state.

The high court ruled that the Cass County District Court erred by handing down criminal contempt sanctions against the Rev. Everett Sileven after he initially was charged with civil contempt.

The Supreme Court, however, rejected Sileven's argument that the trial court erred in finding him guilty of willful disobedience because his religious beliefs forced him to disregard the injunction.

"Well, praise the Lord!" Sileven said when he was informed of the decision by The Associated Press. "I'm glad it's overturned. Certainly I'm glad they saw fit to do this."

Sileven contended that the district court violated his constitutional right to notice by pursuing criminal sanctions.

Judge William C. Hastings, who wrote for the court, said, "We concluded that although the contempt proceedings were noticed as a civil contempt, may very well have been intended as a civil contempt, and were conducted as a civil contempt, in that (Sileven) was not advised of his rights against self-incrimination, the sanction imposed was very definitely criminal in nature."

Sileven was sentenced to eight months imprisonment in the Cass County Jail by District Judge Ronald E. Reagan for "willful contempt" in April 1984. He served 37 days of the sentence and was later released on $10,000 bond.

The sentence stemmed from Sileven's violation of the lower court's injunction barring him from operating the Faith Christian School until it met state education regulations.

In rejecting Silven's arguments about willful disobedience, Hastings wrote:

"It appears 'willful' means the violation was committed intentionally, with knowledge that the act was in violation of the court order. The record fully supports the conclusion that Sileven knew he was violating the court's order and that he chose to intentionally violate it," he said. "The fact that he felt he found a reason in the form of his conscience does not detract from the fact that he acted 'willfully.'"

Sileven has argued that state regulation of the school would violate his constitutional rights to freedom of religion because he considers the school an extension of the church.

Faith Christian School was one of several uncertified Christian schools that operated in defiance of state law. Fundamentalist religious leaders from around the country staged several protests at Sileven's church and also demonstrated at the Capitol in Lincoln and in Washington, D.C.

The Legislature passed a compromise bill in 1984 which has in effect ended the controversy. The new law allows church schools to operate without certification if they provide the state with information.

Clove cigarettes: New fad causing controversy

Copley News Service

When Jerry Rogers began smoking clove cigarettes a year ago, he was pleasantly surprised to find that they weren't nearly as harsh on his throat as commerical tobacco, and that his non-smoking friends actually liked the pungent aroma of cloves emitted in the smoke.

Besides that, the 19-year-old San Diego cook said that smoking three or four of the cigarettes in succession gave him a "rush and a slight high," not unlike the "high" obtained from smoking a low grade of marijuana.

"They're a little expensive, but they're safe," he said. "You can't say that about Marlboros."

Rogers — like thousands of young people in Southern California who have made clove cigarettes a huge fad — may be mistaken about the tobacco and clove product imported from Indonesia, health officials say.

A WHITTIER, CALIF., surgeon believes that the use of clove cigarettes — comprised of 60 percent tobacco and 40 percent cloves — may have been associated with the recent death of a 17-year-old patient.

And a spokesman for the American Lung Association says the organization has received calls from young, clove cigarette users who report coughing up blood.

"We issued a warning a year ago advising against their use," said Debbie Kelley, the San Diego Lung Association's program director. "They have a far higher tar content than ordinary cigarettes. And analysis of the cigarettes indicate they may contain hazardous pesticides that have been banned for use in the United States."

Furthermore, the active ingredient in the cigarettes is eugenol, a substance long used by dentists as an anesthetic.

"The eugenol may allow the smoker to pull in more smoke and to tolerate it much easier," said Kelley.

Despite warnings, many high school and college students, as well as people in their 20s, continue to buy and use the product, which one store owner compared in popularity to designer clothes.

"We sell about 10 cartons a week, mostly to people 18 to 25," said Rick Deveaux. "It seems to be the fashionable thing to do these days."

A tobacco shop owner said clove cigarettes "sell as well as all but two or three of my domestic cigarette brands. Some people just have to have these things."

AMERICAN IMPORTERS and distributors of clove cigarettes say the product has been available in the United States for many years, but has never experienced the success of the past two years.

"It was a very heavy fad in '83 and through early-'84," said Norm Borne, manager of Glaser Brothers, a Los Angeles-based firm that distributes tobacco products in Southern California. "The fad has softened a bit, but not much."

Borne said that sales of clove cigarettes comprise only about 5 percent of all cigarettes sold in the United States.

Still, that's a lot of cigarettes. A spokesman for the U.S. Department of Agriculture said that only 16 million clove cigarettes were imported from Indonesia in all of 1980. But in the first nine months of 1984, 111,550,000 of the cigarettes found their way into American shops.

Available in at least a dozen different brands — from Kuta, Bima and Jakarta, to Roro, Kratatoa and Gudang, some with filters, others without — the cigarettes retail for about $1.60 to $2.50 per pack. Depending on the brand, a pack contains anywhere from 10 to 15 cigarettes.

Like tobacco cigarettes produced in the United States, imported clove cigarettes escape the purview of government regulatory agencies. And because they have only recently become popular, no independent laboratories have undertaken any conclusive studies of the physical effects of smoking the cigarettes.

DR. DONALD RAMRAS, director of the San Diego County Department of Health Services, said his agency has no authority to test or to restrict the sale of any tobacco product.

"The only way we could step in and do something was if the cigarettes posed an imminent health hazard to the community," he said.

And Don Shopland, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration in Washington, D.C., said that "cigarettes containing over 50 percent tobacco come under no authority for regulation. They're considered neither a food, nor drug, nor medical device, so we have no power in that area."

Critics charge that the lack of any government regulation of cigarettes — and imported cigarettes, in particular — allow manufacturers to add any number of additives in tobacco blends.

"If they wanted to, cigarette producers could put cyanide; saccharin, EDB (a banned, potent pesticide), you name it, in their product and get away with it," said Dr. John Banzhaf, executive director of Action on Smoking and Health, a Washington, D.C.-based anti-tobacco lobbying group.

THE FUROR OVER clove cigarettes erupted in early December when Dr. Frederick Schechter, a Whittier surgeon, revealed that a 17-year-old patient of his named Tim Cislaw may have died from complications associated with the smoking of clove cigarettes.

"I have no proof that the cigarettes had anything to do with Tim's death, though," said Schechter in an interview.

Cislaw died May 10 after spending 10 weeks in the hospital and undergoing four surgical operations.

Death sparks concern over clove cigarettes

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — Shortly after smoking an imported clove cigarette one night last March, Tim Cislaw, a 17-year-old high school student here who was recovering from the flu, developed shortness of breath.

By morning, after spending the night literally gasping for breath, he was coughing up blood and was admitted to Humana Hospital West Anaheim. By evening he was in intensive care, his chest X-ray, which had been normal earlier in the day, showing a dramatic change: The lower portions of both lungs were filled with fluid, a sign of rapidly progressing inflammation.

During the next 10 weeks, the sandy-haired surfer and soccer player showed no sign of improvement: His lungs remained inflamed, the progression of the inflammation complicated by a bacterial infection; it became increasingly difficult to clear fluid from his stiffened lungs; rupture holes developed; and normal lung tissue was gradually replaced by non-functional scar tissue.

On May 10, after four operations to close the recurrent massive air leaks and to clean out the portions of dead lung and scar tissue, he died.

But Dr. Frederick G. Schechter, the Whittier, Calif. cardiovascular and thoracic surgeon who operated on Tim Cislaw, refuses to lay the case to rest.

Schechter, and Dr. Tee Guidotti, a specialist in occupational and toxicological lung diseases who is consulting with Schechter on a case study of Tim Cislaw, believe that smoking clove cigarettes, which contain a suspected toxic substance called eugenol, was "implicated in the exaggerated inflammatory process, which destroyed Tim's lungs and ultimately led to his death."

"We have heard of at least three or four other cases of similar reactions, but have not been able to verify them," Schechter said.

Hamburger studied

Copley News Service

Serious burger hounds no longer should ask the question, "Where's the beef?" It's in the book "Hamburger for America and the World," by Indiana University linguist Guyla Descy.

He's been studying the linguistic variations and history of the word "hamburger" for some 20 years. So, as you might expect, he's tastetested quite a few burgers.

Descy says the best hamburgers — and the most expensive — can be found in Los Angeles. And the worst by far are in Budapest, Hungary.

Causes, cures of migraine still mostly theoretical

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Sharon Durivage remembers waking up in the morning feeling "extreme" pain over her eyelids, "like someone was inside my brain with a sledgehammer."

For 16 hours straight she would be nauseous, throwing up as often as once an hour.

The pain and nausea were diagnosed as migraine headaches — one of the most severe, debilitating and frustrating kinds of headaches known to man, or more appropriately to woman.

"Two-to-one, migraine sufferers are women," says Dr. Dee Silver, a neurologist.

"No one knows why for sure," he said, although he said that recent evidence "shows that many migraine headaches occur during the menstrual cycle and mid-cycle," or midpoint between menses.

Silver said it is believed at those times, when estrogen levels are at their highest, the hormone "sensitizes" the brain's blood vessels to possibly trigger the release of a chemical in the brain known as seratonin. And seratonin may cause the wracking, wrenching pain migraine sufferers feel.

MEDICATION SOMETIMES can help ease migraines. For Durivage, though, medication was not the solution. She couldn't tolerate taking oral medication because she would vomit it back up. For several years, she took suppositories that helped ease her migraines, but that did not eradicate them.

"A lot of doctors I saw were not sympathetic," she said. "They said, 'You're just overdoing things,' or, 'You're not getting enough sleep.'"

Edith Mills-Barney got her first migraine at age 32 in 1960. She spent subsequent years "feeling guilty" that she had migraines and "denying the fact that I got them, because it might make me appear weak."

She remembers when she first had the headaches. She was a homemaker with four children, all under 6 years of age. She incurred the wrath of her husband when she couldn't make dinner because she had a migraine. That happened about three times a week. The more angry her husband got, the worse her migraines got.

Mills-Barney spent several years trying various medications, but with little success. "There's nothing wrong with taking a pill for the pain, but if there's another deep-rooted cause, that needs to be looked at, too," she said.

IN HER CASE, Mills-Barney, said that cause was the fact that she was "too sensitive" to what those around her said, in the way of criticism. Her way of coping with that has been to literally "block out" negative talk.

"The one thing I can change is my reactions," she said. She said she has not had migraines for almost 10 years. Occasionally she gets a regular headache, and aspirin suffices.

"My approach is not only acceptance, but being aware of stressful situations and how I handle them," she said.

"All in your head" is apt to come to mind, but Silver says "absolutely not."

"Stress can trigger migraines, but they are definitely biological" in origin, he said.

Mills-Barney is quick to say that she is not a medical expert, and that her beliefs are her own, and not based on research. Her interest in migraines has continued, despite the fact that her headaches have not, because she has never forgotten "the feeling of helplessness, the feeling that nobody cared" when she had migraines.

DURIVAGE, WHO got her first migraine at age 12, but says she no longer gets them, has taken a similar tack as Mills-Barney.

"I had to make drastic changes in my life about the things that were oppressive to me," she said. "I was taking on everyone else's problems, worrying about them. I finally decided to let others take care of their own problems."

Migraine headaches different pain to different people

Copley News Service

What is a migraine headache?

A rough Greek translation of migraine means "half head," and at one time that pretty much described migraines as those headaches where pain pummeled one side of the brain. But the pain can be on both sides of the brain, and usually is concentrated over or around the eyes, said Dr. Dee Silver, a neurologist who treats migraine patients.

Typically, a migraine — which can last for hours or days — is preceded by auras, visual sensations, often described as being "zigzaggy" or shimmering lights, Silver said. What follows is a "severe, pounding headache," possibly accompanied by an extreme sensitivity to bright lights that requires the sufferer to actually lie in darkness as the only means of relief. Excessive urination, nausea and vomiting also are common with migraines.

WHAT CAUSES migraines and who gets them?

"We don't really know," says Silver, who said that between 10 percent and 15 percent of Americans suffer from migraines.

The most prevalent theory is that that migraines are caused by the constriction, or squeezing, of blood vessels in the brain, which in turn leads to the dilation, or opening of the vessels to allow more blood to flow, with the push-pull activity causing the intense pain.

Recent studies, Silver said, indicate that estrogen may be a culprit. The hormone may "sensitize" the brain's blood vessels to trigger the release of seratonin, a chemical in the brain that causes pain.

Because women outnumber men migraine sufferers 2-to-1, Silver said, there is increasing support for that theory. "Sixty percent of migraine sufferers have some family history of the problem, and in women it is usually their mother," he added.

Men more commonly suffer from "cluster" headaches, which are shorter in duration than migraines — anywhere from minutes to hours — but equally as painful.

IS THERE ANY relief from a migraine?

There are many sources of help. Silver said that 80 percent to 85 percent of migraine patients can be helped with the use of drugs.

In addition, "in the last few years, there have been a significant number of drugs to treat migraines that we didn't have four to five years ago."

One of the most promising are calcium-blockers. Calcium strengthens muscle contractions; calcium-blockers contain medication that helps stop the brain's blood vessels from contracting. Among the more well-known calcium blockers are verapamil and nifedipine, Silver said.

Relief also can be as simple as getting additional sleep or as complex as changing one's diet.

In some cases, a diet that includes cheese, chocolate and red wine can be bad for a migraine as well as bad for your figure. All three are examples of a myriad of "vasoactive" foods, which can result in restricting the blood flow in the brain's blood vessels.

Silver also said that "reducing stress is important, because stress precipitates migraines." But biofeedback should be avoided as a means of reducing stress, he said.

"It has never been shown to help migraine sufferers in controlled double-blind studies," he said. "In dealing with chronic pain, it may be helpful as a mechanism, but not as a treatment."

Study shows brain chemical may help short children grow

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, doctors have shown that synthetic copies of a brain chemical can quickly add inches to the height of extremely short children by inducing them to produce their own growth hormones.

The therapy, described in a study published today, provides a second approach to spurring the growth of youngsters who are stunted by hormonal deficiencies.

The substance — human growth hormone-releasing factor, or GRF — is a key link in the chain reaction of hormonal secretion necessary for people to grow to normal adult height.

Doctors implanted pumps in two boys who would have been midgets because of a condition known as hypopituitarism. The pumps secreted GRF into their bodies, and one of the youngsters, who had been growing less than an inch a year, grew at the equivalent of about 5½ inches a year.

The chemical works by prompting the victims' bodies to manufacture human growth hormone, the missing substance that they need to grow.

Although the findings are preliminary, the researchers wrote, "they provide a solid foundation to suggest that growth hormone-releasing factor can indeed restore growth hormone secretion and its biologic consequences."

Until now, doctors have treated this form of slow growth by giving the growth hormone itself. It's still not clear whether inducing the body to make its own gorwth hormone will work better.

"Growth hormone is a great agent. It has done a lot for a lot of people," said Dr. Robert M. Blizzard, one of the researchers. "Whether GRF is really going to replace it as a the therapeutic agent remains to be seen."

However, he added: "It's much better to use something that you produce yourself all the time than it is to have to take it from outside."

The research, conducted at the University of Virginia, was published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Ordinarily, GRF is produced in the brain by the hypothalamus, and it stimulates the pituitary to make growth hormone. In 1982, researchers at the Salk Institute isolated GRF and made synthetic copies of it in the laboratory.

The Virginia doctors tested synthetic GRF on two boys ages 8 and 10, both of whom were 3½ feet tall.

They inserted pumps loaded with the chemical under the boys' skin for six months. These pumps released bursts of GRF once every three hours, just as the hypothalamus does.

Before the treatment, the 10-year-old had been growing at a rate of less than an inch a year. But while receiving the chemical, his growth spurted to the equivalent of about 5½ inches a year.

Shopping called 'a gift'

By ERMA BOMBECK

Now that the holidays are over, it's safe for the serious shoppers to go into the aisles again.

I'm not bragging or anything, but I was born to shop. At birth, my eyes could spot "SALE" through a brick building. My arms were not only retractable but were capable of stretching over three counters to grab a sweater at half price. My right hand was a perfect 2¼-by-3 ¾-inch cup ... the exact size of a charge card.

Amateur shoppers drive me crazy. It takes them 15 minutes to read a price tag, they take one garment at a time into the fitting room and after 8 or 10 hours ... they run out of gas.

Deliver me from the "You get what you pay for" shoppers. They clutter up the aisles comparing seams and measuring the jacket to see if it comes out even when you button it. Meanwhile, all the good stuff is gone.

My best friend is an "If I see something I need, I'll buy it" type. She's about as much fun as a snake coming up through the shower drain. I tromped around with her one day for five hours and she ended up with a spool of black thread that was on sale. If that's all I needed, I would have phoned it in.

For a while, I thought she was going to buy a blouse. She picked it up, examined it, and deliberated on it for what seemed like days. Finally, I said, "What is the most important thing in your life?"

She said, "My children."

"How long did it take you to make up your mind to conceive them?"

"Two years."

"And look how they turned out, so buy the blouse!"

A few years ago, my husband and I met a couple on a cruise and became friends. When we hit port, she asked innocently, "I wonder where the gift shops are." My husband simply put a postcard under my nose to sniff. Picking up the scent, I took them right to the door. It's a gift. Why not use it?

As a professional shopper I have developed an attitude: Buy in haste, repent in leisure. What will it matter to the universe in a few years whether you got stuck with a jumpsuit you can't drink liquids in or sale sheets for twin beds when you have doubles?

A husband who has forbidden his wife to go shopping with me again said to my husband, "What do you think Erma would do if you made $250,000 a year?"

"Easy," he said. "She'd spend $350,000."

It's lonely at the top of your profession.

Learning before birth researched

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Babies may learn to recognize and prefer voices and even poems they hear before they are born, according to a psychologist at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Anthony DeCasper found that children who had heard their mothers read "The Cat in the Hat" to them before they were born preferred it to "The King, the Mice and the Cheese" after they were born.

DeCasper cautioned against "science fiction" interpretations that his research suggests fetuses may someday get a head start on college degrees. He said the research so far only suggested a "good possibility" that humans may have some learning capacity in the womb.

"The information we gleaned from making observations about the effects and role of prenatal experiences in normal development could help us design better treatments; for example, for premature babies," he said.

In tests beginning in 1979, DeCasper and associates devised and gave the babies a nipple that activated a tape recorder. By sucking in one pattern, infants would hear their own mothers' voices and by sucking in another pattern they could hear another woman's voice. The babies tended to suck in such a way as to hear their mothers' voices.

To counter the possibility that the babies were just trying to hear voices they had heard immediately after birth, DeCasper devised another experiment. Six men who had been present at the birth of their daughters spent from four to 10 hours talking to their newborn babies.

When the girls were 2 days old, they were tested with the nipple-activated tape recorder to see if they preferred their fathers' voices to another man's voice. DeCasper said that although they could distinguish their fathers' voices, they did not prefer them.

Another test involving 12 infants indicated that a baby prefers to hear its mother's heartbeat, which it heard in the womb, to a male voice, which it could not have heard before birth.

DeCasper said that if his test subjects were animals instead of human babies, he could use deprivation to test whether a certain prenatal experience is needed for a certain behavior after birth. Instead, he used the "unique auditory experience" of "The Cat in the Hat."

DeCasper said he was currently between tests, but that he would like to do all the tests again with slight variations.

DEAR ABBY

Boss calls cautiousness craziness

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You be the judge: Last night about 7 p.m. I was relaxing in my tub when my doorbell rang. I wasn't expecting anybody, but I got out of the tub, wrapped a towel around me and peeked out my front window to see who it was. I saw a kid about 18 or 19 years old, holding a box. I assumed he was selling something, so I said nothing and went back to my tub because I was not about to open my door to a stranger.

The next morning my boss called me in and said, "Yesterday I asked you if you were going to be home that evening and you said yes, so how come you weren't home?" I told him I was home. Then he told me he had sent his son to my house with a fruitcake his wife had made for a Christmas gift, but nobody answered the door.

I told him the truth — that I was home, my doorbell rang and I saw a kid on my porch but didn't want to open my door to a stranger.

He said his son drove clear across town for nothing; then he called me a "paranoid dummy." He really hurt my feelings, Abby.

Was I wrong to do what I did? Or was my boss wrong for chewing me out? No name or town, please. I need this job. — BEING CAREFUL

DEAR CAREFUL: Orchids to you for being careful, and a wilted weed to your boss for chewing you out.

Director of 'River' casts voices for dubbed film

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mark Rydell had just returned from Italy, France, Germany and Spain, where he had been casting "The River."

How's that again? "The River," starring Sissy Spacek and Mel Gibson, has already opened across the land.

"I was casting the voices for the dubbed versions in Europe," the film maker explained. "Those countries require dubbed versions of films as well as subtitled, and I go over there to cast the voices for every picture I make. I think it's terribly important.

"If the voices are perfectly right in the foreign versions, a great deal of commercial value can be added. 'The Rose' is still playing in Paris after five years, and I think the voices are largely responsible."

ENTERTAINMENT

Rydell had returned in time for the holiday opening here of "The River," which drew a mixed response from reviewers and inevitable comparison to the other farmland sagas of 1984, "Close to the Heart" and "Country." The national release will start Jan. 11.

"I like 'The River" as much as any film I've made; I'm proud of it," declared Rydell, whose last effort was the renowned "On Golden Pond."

In 1983 he was preparing a film based on the play "Nuts" when Universal Pictures asked him to undertake "The River" first. The project had been prepared by Edward Lewis ("Spartacus," "Lonely Are the Brave"), whom Rydell respected as "one of the few producers with a conscience."

The casting of Sissy Spacek as the farm wife and mother was easy, Rydell said: "She is the consummate American rural young woman, with strength and fiber and a luminous quality." Mel Gibson pursued the role of her persevering husband, but Rydell was dubious.

"Mel came to my house and argued for the part," Rydell recalled. "But what do you do with a thick Australian accent in the American midwest? Mel is 28, and though he was born in this country, he has lived in Australia from the age of 11. He sounds like a cockney.

"He wouldn't give up. 'Let me work on the accent,' he pleaded. 'Don't cast the part until you hear me.' I don't know why he was so eager for the role. Except maybe he saw a lot of Tom Garvey in his father, who took his family 9,000 miles to Australia so his sons wouldn't have to fight in the Vietnam War.

"A few months later Mel called from London. He was planning to stop in California on his way to Tahiti for 'The Bounty.' His Tennessee accent was perfect. His persistence, even obstinancy, made him ideal for the role."

The human actors were easy. Rydell also had to direct a deer and a bull, as well as a raging river.

Country music world unsure about videos

By MARTA W. ALDRICH

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The rage for videos to accompany the hottest songs on the charts has hit Music City, but the country music world is looking a bit askance at the flashy art form.

Film production companies have made Tennessee's capital city a "Little Hollywood" for creating the video vignettes for a handful of syndicated television shows that feature country film clips.

But all the hoopla has some Nashville music executives intrigued — and worried — about a medium they consider both powerful and dangerous.

"I'm afraid some of these videos may come back and haunt the artists," said Jim Owen, a leading Nashville television producer. "These artists could be turning off their fans, and I don't think they're really thinking it through."

Owen, who has produced syndicated TV specials for Larry Gatlin, Conway Twitty and Janie Fricke, believes music videos can be a helpful tool to promote an artist.

But he thinks country musicians should remember that their audiences usually don't watch Music Television (MTV), the 24-hour-a-day, all-rock cable TV service.

"Feedback so far shows that country music fans not only dislike MTV, they detest it," Owen said. "We spend too much time in country music trying to look like MTV, and it's going to hurt us."

The first country musician to make the MTV lineup was Ronnie Milsap, with a techno-pop video, "I Love My Car," lavished with synthesizers and electronic effects.

Deborah Allen's high-energy "Rockin' Little Christmas" — complete with break dancing, a hot pink outfit and the lights of New York City — was filmed for RCA Records by the video director for pop star Billy Joel.

Miss Allen, whose biggest hit was "Baby I Lied," said her first video is designed for people who enjoy all types of music — not just country.

"I don't like being categorized," Miss Allen said. "Categories really limit people. I'm just trying to be the most I can be and to make music that can be enjoyed by as many people as possible."

"Whether it's country or rock or whatever, people react to a product on the basis of whether it's good or bad. And this is a good video that I'm very proud of," Miss Allen said.

RCA vice president Joe Galante agrees. The entertainment industry, he said, should realize country music fans have grown up and are more sophisticated.

"I don't know how many times I've flown over farms and seen satellite dishes in the backyards of people raising cows," said Galante.

However, Galante said, "not everything translates well into video. Some things are better left unseen."

"I've seen some videos come out of Nashville that almost make country music laughable," he continued. "They take a serious song and make it look corny."

Country artists, Galante said, "must remember that their calling card is their record first, and then their video."

Galante, who works with artists such as Milsap, Alabama and Waylon Jennings, said that other than a few artists, MTV and the rest of the music industry haven't recognized Nashville's endeavors to blend sight and sound.

One reason, he said, is that Nashville censors its products more than Los Angeles and New York do.

"Let's face it. You can put ANYTHING on the screen in rock," Galante said.

The irony, however, is that no type of music is better suited for videos than country, which usually tells a story that awakens visual images in a listener's mind.

Galante said Nashville also is more cost conscious, spending an average of $25,000 for each video, compared to up to $100,000 for rock videos.

Nighttime soap opens doors in time for sales

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Berrenger's," NBC's new nighttime soap opera set in a department store, is throwing open its doors just in time for after-Christmas and January white sales.

The new serial, from the people who brought you "Dallas" and "Knots Landing," begins Saturday with a 90-minute pilot episode. Thereafter, the show will be seen Saturday at 10 p.m. EST.

Sam Wanamaker stars as Simon Berrenger, who turned a little dry goods store into one of New York's poshest department stores. He heads an all-star cast who bring to the show all the necessary elements of greed, chicanery, thievery, treachery, lust and debauchery necessary to keep a soap opera boiling.

The pilot tells a lively story that introduces the characters and gets everything into motion. Diana Gould is the creator-producer for Lorimar Productions, and she is backed by executive producer David Jacobs. It is tightly plotted like all Lorimar shows, but in addition has the glamour of "Dynasty."

Yvette Mimieux and TV series veterans Jeff Conaway and Ben Murphy are among the cast members.

The series is the first for Wanamaker, a veteran stage and film actor, although he has made numerous TV guest appearances, including "Holocaust" and the recent "Heartsounds."

"I'd always said no before, because I had so many other things going and it would disrupt my lifestyle," said Wanamaker, who lives in London and stays with his oldest daughter when he works in Los Angeles.

"I was now prepared to confront a series. My children were grown. I'd been coming back to America regularly and was prepared to spend more time in L.A.," he said. "I thought it might be good at this stage of my career and might open other opportunities. Unlike young actors, I don't feel unfulfilled. I've had my successes. I don't have to worry that I won't have time for other things. I've directed and done other things."

"I thought it might be good at this stage of my career and might open other opportunities."
— Sam Wanamaker

Wanamaker said he found it easy to identify with Simon Berrenger.

"Partly," he said, "because he's three-dimensional. He's a man who's come up from circumstances typical of the self-made man. He's made the business into a success. He's a first-generation American, as I am. He struggled coming up and he expects his children to struggle, but they're raised in luxury. They're not the tough fighter he was and he can't understand it."

He added, "I like him. I think he's a hell of a guy."

Wanamaker was born in Chicago to Russian-emigrant parents, and when he went into acting he changed his name from Watenmaker to Wanamaker. He used the money from his first film, "My Girl Tisa," to buy his parents a house in Los Angeles. That's where his daughter lives now.

"I've lived in London more or less permanently since the 1950s," said Wanamaker, who keeps his American citizenship. "My youngest daughter was born there and has dual citizenship. My middle daughter is with the Royal Shakespeare Company and was on Broadway several years ago.

"I was working in London. I'd just done several films there and everyone was nice and kind and we decided to stay. England is a mecca for actors who want to do the classics. I did a play that lasted a year, and by the time it ended I was directing and producing other plays and deeply involved in the British theater."

Wife needs break from care of seriously ill husband

Dear Dr. Solomon: An aunt of mine is trying to take care of her husband, who has Alzheimer's disease. I can see that the job is really wearing her down. They are not wealthy people, but neither are they poor, and I would appreciate some advice about what she might do to make things a little easier for herself. — Ms. E.L., Chicago

Dear Ms. L.: The person who provides day-to-day care for a patient with Alzheimer's disease is under a great deal of physical and emotional stress, and it is essential that he or she occasionally get some relief. If your aunt can afford it, it might be advisable for her to arrange for a nurse to come in for a day or so, or other relatives might contribute their services so that your aunt would be able to get away from the house for a while.

The point is that your aunt needs some relief from the almost continuous care that some patients with Alzheimer's disease require, and it is important from both her and the patient's standpoint that she get it.

You might also want to inquire from your local health and welfare council about a support group for relatives of Alzheimer's disease patients. Many communities have such groups, and your aunt might benefit from contact with one of them.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son is very active in high school athletics. What sort of routine is recommended for a youngster during training in regard to what he eats? And what sort of routine is recommended on the day of a game or other athletic event? — Mr. T.W., Flint, Mich.

Dear Mr. W.: Dr. Keith Peterson, a Seattle physician, recommends a training meal that consists of about 60 percent carbohydrates, 15 percent protein, and less than 25 percent fat. He further says that athletes should increase their intake of water before an event, but take in no more than 500 calories during the preceeding 2.5 to four hours.

In addition, runners should have water 10 to 15 minutes before a long-distance run, and more water after completing the first two miles.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Whenever I have trouble sleeping, my wife tells me to go into the living room and read for a while. It seems to me that I would be better off in bed so that if I do get sleepy, I'm in the right place. What would you suggest? — Alfred, Dallas, Texas

Dear Alfred: I suggest you listen to your wife. Dr. Wallace B. Mendelson, of the Natinal Institutes of Mental Health in Bethesda, Md., recommends that a person who has trouble falling asleep go into another room, engage in some quiet activity and not return to bed until he feels more like sleeping.

For Roger, Spokane, Washington: The prolonged use of powerful steroids can lead to various skin disorders, particularly when the preparation is used on the face or genitalia or where areas of the body may rub together.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Combination transplant ruled out

DALLAS (AP) — Pittsburgh doctors have decided it would be too dangerous for Mary Cheatham to undergo a combination heart and liver transplant and will perform separate operations, her mother says.

"They've decided it's too serious to do it together," said Jo Ann Cheatham, who is with her 17-year-old daughter at the University of Pittsburgh hospital. "They felt her chances of survival would be better" if the operations were performed separately.

Mary and her mother left their Fort Worth home for Pittsburgh on Dec. 20 so Mary could be evaluated and await a heart and liver donation. Mary was to have been the third person in the world to undergo a combination heart and liver transplant.

The first — Stormie Jones, 7, who now lives in Dallas — is doing well after her 14-hour operation Feb. 14, 1984. The second, a 2-year-old girl from Birmingham, Ala., died a short time after surgery in November.
