POISON CUP FATAL FOR WICHITAN

America Cheers As Red Birds Win Flag

NOTABLES OF GOTHAM CHEER CARD VICTORY

Even Losing Yanks Smile Over Defeat By Foe From West

BY BRYAN BELL

NEW YORK, Oct. 10. (AP) — The club house of the wining St. Louis Cardinals after today's deciding game was converted into a reception room. The players themselves held the first reception in honor of Grover Cleveland Alexander, who took up the pitching burden where Jesse Haines left off in the seventh inning and made the game safe for Missouri beyond peradventure.

Second only to the demonstration of enthusiasm for Alexander was the tribute paid to Thevenow, young shortstop, who saved the day defensively for the Cards and drove home two of the three needed runs.

"Let me say a piece for the paper," pleaded Manager Hornsby, whose talking for publication, is usually done only in response to questions in his interviews.

Rogers Is Happy

"I want to tell everybody that Tommy Thevenow is the best shortstop in baseball," was his manager's unstinted praise.

"I want to say something too, about the Yankee club and the New York fans. Our victory means all the more to us because we knew that we defeated a great ball club. We know how good the Yankees are because we played them.

"The New York fans treated us most generously. They could not have been kinder, and of course, we appreciate it."

Manager Hornsby left immediately after the game for Texas to bury his mother. He was to stop at St. Louis only an hour to change trains and then continue his journey to Austin. His mother died September 29, leaving a dying request that Rogers stay with his team and try to give his best efforts to winning the world baseball championship for St. Louis. The young Cardinal manager carried out her last wishes to the letter. The body was not interred, pending his return to Austin for the burial services. And now he is going home.

Huggins Cheerful

Manager Miller Huggins was cheerful in defeat.

"There is nothing to say except that the Cardinals played wonderful defensive ball today—better than we did—and on the basis of their play they deserved to win. We were beaten by a great ball club."

Huggins was asked if he had anything to say about cracks appearing in his team's defensive play.

"I have not one word to say about errors my boys made," he said. "Those who would rather think about the errors than anything else should give a thought to errors they didn't make."

Baseball Commissioner Landis was one of the first to congratulate Hornsby.

Jacob Ruppert, president of the New York Yankees, was just behind Commissioner Landis in reaching Hornsby's locker.

By this time the Cardinal club house held a National league quorum with half a dozen managers and presidents joining President John A. Heydler in felicitating Hornsby on the Cardinal victory.

Alexander had fought his way through his admiring teammates who was permitting the trainer to rub liniment on his right arm, called to toss on two cold days in succession.

Alex Is Joyful.

"That's nothing but wasting time," rubbing his arm," laughed John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants and much more of a veteran than Alexander.

"This fellow can go out and pitch an exhibition game tomorrow, and without any liniment either."

"There's something in that, too," rejoined Alexander. "I'm going to pitch one next Sunday in Omaha."

Alexander said he felt no fatigue in the two and one-third innings he pitched, following nine hard periods yesterday. "I tried to make Ruth hit a bad ball in the ninth," he said, "and I thought I would when I got two strikes on him but he wouldn't go after the third three. Of course it was better to take a chance on putting him on than to let him hit a good one at that stage."

The slugging Ruth was a bit disconsolate after the game but soon regained his cheerful view of things in general and baseball games in particular.

DERRICK VANISHES.

ORANGE, Texas, Oct. 10.—A noiseless blowout occurred at an oil well here and caused the 122-foot derrick and drilling machinery to drop from sight, leaving a crater forty feet in diameter. The crater then filled with water.

Wichita On The Air

Rabinowitz to Play Over WFAA

The price of a telegram from here to Dallas or the cost of a two-cent stamp and the trouble required to write a card, may be the means of making possible a continuation of musical studies for a Wichita Falls youth who has shown marked talent and unquenchable ambition.

Joseph Rabinowitz, 16-year-old violinist, tonight at 7 o'clock will play over WFAA, Dallas, in a state-wide radio contest sponsored by the Sears-Roebuck foundation. He will compete with artists from all parts of Texas for valuable cash prizes, any one of which will be of inestimable worth to him in his quest for further mastery of the violin. He has worked under great difficulty in his early study, but has attained a degree of proficiency truly remarkable and is recognized by musicians of standing as a prodigy with great future.

Judging of the radio contest tonight will be made largely on the number of telegrams, letters or cards of congratulation sent into WFAA by radio listeners over the state.

SEVERE FLOOD LOSS FORESEEN

Arkansas River Reported On Record Rise After Downpour

FORT SMITH, Ark., Oct. 10. (AP)—The severest flood since 1915 with probable heavy property and crop damage was forecast today by T. G. Shipman, flood forecaster and weather bureau meteorologist.

Shipman said that heavy rains of Saturday night on the upper reaches of the Arkansas river and in the vicinity would bring a new flood crest of 32 feet, four feet higher than the high mark of last week. He warned all residents of lowlands to take out all moveable property before Tuesday, when it is expected the new crest will be reached.

Today's river gauge reading was 27.5 feet at noon and slowly rising.

FIVE ESCAPE PRISON FARM

Police Seek Woman Who Saw Prisoners Just Before Break

HOUSTON, Texas, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Five convicts escaped from the Harlem State Prison Farm about 5 p. m. Sunday in a small automobile, police were advised tonight. The manager of the farm could not be located by telephone and others at the farm refused to make any statement of the escape.

The prisoners are all white men, ranging from 27 to 54 years of age. According to police they are: Nick Pedro, R. H. McClellan, Jim Buckley, E. C. Alexander, and D. F. Law.

No trace of the men had been found early tonight, although a net is laid in surrounding territory.

Houston police are looking for a Houston woman who left the prison farm, after a short visit, about the same time that the convicts made their escape this afternoon.

1926 T-O FAIR CLOSES DOORS SUNDAY NIGHT

Big Auto Racing Program Draws 5,000 Visitors Sunday Afternoon

The fifth annual Texas-Oklahoma fair passed into history at 11 o'clock Sunday night when the gates of the exposition grounds closed after an extended nine day showing. Originally scheduled for six days, Oct. 2 to 7, inclusive, the fair was continued on from Thursday after stormy weather early in the week played havoc with attendance figures and consequently financial reports.

As it was, officials of the fair association declared last night that they were satisfied with things as they wound up.

5000 Guests Sunday.

"The final day's attendance was extremely gratifying, and if we are able to collect our rain insurance, we will break even or better on the financial end," W. B. Hamilton, president, asserted. R. E. Shepherd, secretary and manager, also voiced an optimistic benediction for this year's exposition.

The final day Sunday drew a crowd of 5,000 or more to the fair grounds. The automobile racing card in the afternoon attracted a throng that comfortably filled the grandstand, while the exhibit halls enjoyed liberal patronage most of the afternoon and evening. No special features were arranged for the last hours, but the exhibit buildings remained open to accomodate the last minute rush of the inquisitive. With the exception of the livestock and a few poultry taken to Dallas for the state fair, displays which were packed up and all of the original exhibitions remained in place until the last.

Clean-Up Squads.

Today, squads of workmen will begin removing the expensive arrangements of merchandise, agriculture, art work, canned goods and multitudious other things included in this year's ist. Most of this will be concluded by Tuesday and the fair grounds will revert back for another year to their barren solitude.

Fergusons Will Have Minority In Next Legislature

There'll Be Enough Of Jim's Men to Cause Dan Some Trouble

By RAYMOND BROOKS.

AUSTIN, Oct. 10.—Taut-drawn lines in the senate between the old and the new administration, as shaped in the closing days of the session, promised to hold firm when Dan Moody becomes governor, and to project the shadow of the Fergusons athwart the future of the state.

A small, but powerful and closely-knit minority group in the next senate may cause uneasiness to future appointed officers who must walk the hot sands of senate confirmation, even as a majority of anti-Fergusons made the road a rocky one in recent weeks.

Strength Unknown.

The exact strength of the Ferguson following in the 40th senate has not yet been figured out. There will be changes in the senate in January as several members retire and as others are replaced by successful opponents in the primaries this year. A woman, Miss Margie Neal—a Moody supporter—will take her seat succeeding Strong of Panola, who did not run for re-election.

It takes but 11 members of the senate to defeat the confirmation of any state appointee. The Fergusons will not have 11 anti-administration friends in the Moody administration, unless some unexpected development welds an opposition; and this, with fair skies for the coming governor, seems impossible.

Ways To Worry.

But that is where parliamentary strategy, the power of filibusters, the technique of organized opposition, make a small group significant in a legislative session. The every-minute jockeying, the play for position and advantage, the united opposition against an often loosely-knit majority, is such to keep a legislature constantly on edge and usually in turmoil.

The situation 15 years ago, when an actual majority of the senate was held powerless for a week by a minority, is well-remembered in the capitol. Then the division was

INQUEST HELD IN DEATH SUNDAY OF G. B. HORNSBY AFTER HIS BODY LYING PRONE IN YARD, IS FOUND

Verdict of Suicidal Intent In Drinking of Lysol Solution Is Returned By Justice O. L. Gibbs After Quiz Sunday

G. B. Hornsby, age 28, was found dead in the yard of his home, 1223 N. Eighth street, shortly before 7 o'clock Sunday morning. A verdict of death from poison, taken with suicidal intent, was returned by Justice of the Peace O. L. Gibbs, who held an inquest after the body was found.

Justice Gibbs and city police who were called to the scene found a partially emptied bottle of Lysol in a lavatory shelf.

The man had apparently been dead for some time before members of the family discovered his body. Relatives declared last night that they could assign no cause whatever for his death.

Hornsby was well known in Wichita Falls, where in the past he had been engaged in business with his father, C. C. Hornsby, of the Hornsby Heavy Hardware company. His parents, who now reside in Lubbock, survive him, as does his wife and an 8-year-old son. He also leaves a sister, Mrs. Faye Durnion, of Chicago, and two brothers, J. C. and Wallace Hornsby, both of Lubbock.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed last night, but it was said they would probably be held in Lubbock Tuesday.

The body is being held at the Burris-Dalton Undertaking parlors.

NOTED EXPERT APPEARS HERE AT OLYMPIC

Detailed Classes On All Phases of Health And Beauty Planned

MADAME IDA CHERNOFF
At The Olympic
10:30 A. M.

Madame Ida Chernoff, one of the nation's foremost beauty experts and a speaker of national reputation, is in Wichita Falls ready for the opening of a week's beauty school that has already excited more than passing interest from the women of this community. Before the school is finished, it is confidently predicted, she will stand firmly intrenched in the ranks of Wichita Falls femininity as one who knows whereof she speaks.

Madame Chernoff's beauty school is something decidedly different than the ordinary run of such things. In the first place, she herself is different. Her knowledge of feminine beauty is not limited to one or two phases. It embraces the whole scheme of health and appearance. It understands the underlying and fundamental factors of womanly health which, in the last anlysis, is the greatest aid to real beauty.

At the Olympic.

The school, which will be held at the Olympic theatre, will deal exhaustively with all the more important factors that enter into the health and beauty schedules of the modern woman. Madame Chernoff will discuss these in detail, will answer questions, give demonstrations and otherwise take up with her audiences the many little points, simple in themselves, but which fabricated into a definite and concrete health and beauty program can and do work wonders with a woman's appearance.

Madame Chernoff has been brought to Wichita Falls by the Record News, which bespeaks for her a full attendance of those who, it is felt certain, will profit by her addresses.

GRADY MORGAN CASE UNSOLVED

Police Seek Solution Of Finding of Unconscious Man By Road

"Condition unchanged, patient still unconscious," was the information concerning Grady Morgan, 33, of 1314 Twenty-first street, this city, who is in the Wichita Falls General hospital suffering from head wounds sustained in some unexplained fashion late Saturday afternoon on the Holliday-Lake road near the country club.

Morgan, who was found by occupants of a passing automobile while lying unconscious in a ditch by the roadside about 8 p. m. Saturday, has not been able to speak since the accident and is reported in critical condition. Meanwhile police and relatives were mystified as to the manner of his injury.

When found, Morgan was lying prone in the ditch by the roadside with a truck belonging to the Boardman Oil company, for which he was employed as truck driver, stalled nearby. The truck was standing at an angle, half on the pavement and half in the ditch, tracks indicating that the vehicle had entered the ditch at a long angle from the main roadway.

That Morgan may have lost control of his truck and in leaping for safety had fallen on his head was one theory advanced Sunday. Police admitted Sunday afternoon however, that they had also heard other reports and that they were working on several theories. The theory of robbery, first advanced, has been discarded as the result of finding several dollars in the unconscious man's pockets.

Some concern was felt Sunday afternoon over Morgan's continued insensibility and his condition was characterized as nothing less than dangerous. Despite this, however, he is declared to have a good chance to recover. In the event of his return to consciousness, Morgan will be questioned for a statement as to the cause of his condition.

Morgan's truck is reported to have been seen stalled on the Holliday road for more than two hours before the unconscious man was finally discovered by E. Holcomb, 1604 Ninth street, who passed the spot in his automobile.

Morgan is married and has a brother here who is aiding in the investigation of the mysterious case.

328,051 FANS SEE BIG TILTS

Many Records Go Down As 1926 World's Series Breaks Marks

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.(AP)—The world's series that closed today with the spectacular triumph of Rogers' Hornsby's Cardinals witnessed the shattering of more records than any other championship battle in baseball history. Nineteen records were smashed and three others tied.

New marks for attendance and gate receipts were set by the outpouring of 328,051 fans who paid $1,207,864 to witness the seven games. The attendance of 63,600 and receipts of $301,828 in the second New York game shattered all single game marks, while St. Louis crowds broke the Sportsman's park attendance record three days in a row. Cold and rainy weather kept down attendance at the final two games here and prevented the figures from going much higher.

Babe Ruth's mighty bat was the chief record-breaker on the field, the Yankee slugger shattering 10 records outright and equalling three others. Participating in his seventh series, itself a record, the babe blasted three previous home run marks off the books with three circuit clouts last Wednesday and a fourth today, bringing his record for all series competition up to eight.

817,000 Bales Increase In Cotton Crop Estimate Surprises Experts

Market However Holds Much Steadier Tone Than Was Expected in Face of Large Crop Estimate By Government Census Bureau Last Week

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 10. (AP)—Although the government report with its forecast for the largest crop on record of 16,627,000 bales came Friday, it virtually controlled the market all last week. In the early part it occasioned liquidation of longs who feared that the government would show a considerable increase in the indicated yield and some rallies due to shorts covering rather than risk carrying commitments over the actual publication of the bureau's estimate.

Although traders were prepared to expect some increase in the government estimate over that issues September 25, few expected that an increase compared with the forecast of two weeks previous of 817,000 bales would be shown. Owing to the alternate declines and rallies which preceded the report the closing level of the Thursday market for December contracts was only ten points below the close of the preceding Saturday. Prior to the publication of the estimate on Fridad, December had raised 18 points on last minute liquidation, but immediately after the report was declined that report declined 70 points before a resting place was reached. At the lowest of Friday, December showed a loss compared with the preceding close of 88 points.

Considering the surprisingly large crop indicated the market broke less than might have been expected and there was a rally on Friday afternoon of more than 30 points from the low levels and on the further advance of Saturday, December at the highest of the day was 65 points above the low point of 1926, touched Friday.

While the lateness of the crop still causes the ginning totals to run heavily behind last year the fact that the amount ginned during the last period was considerably larger than for the corresponding period last year shows that the gins are rapidly catching up to the work of the preceding season.

HONEY LOU

by Beatrice Burton

author of "LOVE BOUND" and "HER MAN" ETC.

© JOHNSON FEATURES INC., 1926

SHE HAD A FEELING THAT THIS WAS THE BEGINNING OF—SOMETHING

READ THIS FIRST:

HONEY LOU HUNTLEY is private secretary to old "GRUMPY WALLACK, head of the Wallack Fabric Mills. "Grumpy" hired Honey Lou because she was not only clever, but good-tempered and sweet. He liked having her around—and so did everyone else at the Wallack mills. Honey Lou liked everyone there, too, except JOE MEADOWS, the shipping clerk. Somehow or other, Honey Lou is half afraid of Joe.

One night Honey Lou goes for a drive with "Grumpy's" son, JACK WALLACK, with whom she has fallen suddenly and violently in love. But when he kisses her, Honey Lou slaps his face.

Her mother has brought her up to believe that a kiss is an insult from a man unless he means to marry the girl he kisses. Honey Lou gets out of the car and starts away toward home. "Home" to Honey Lou is the little flat where she lives with her mother and MARGARET MOODY, her half-sister.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER III

Honey Lou went marching along in the chilly darkness.

Her head was up and her hands were clenched at her sides.

She was blazing with anger. Honest anger that made her heart race and her breath come in little sobbing jerks.

She was hurt, too. Terribly hurt. To think that a man would dare to lay his hands upon her and kiss her that way! As if she belonged to him!

The look that she threw over her shoulder, into the darkness behind her, was half resentful and half wistful.

The black and nickel car had turned and was coming slowly toward her. Its headlights sent a stream of dazzling whiteness along the road.

In another minute the car itself was beside her. It stopped.

Honey Lou stopped, too.

The glare of the headlights showed her to Jack Wallack for the lovely, hurt thing that she was at that moment—the big, golden brown eyes glinting with tears and the sensitive mouth drooping and unsmiling.

"I'm sorry. Really I'm sorry," his voice came from the gloom behind the headlights. "Please come back into the car—I promise to take you straight home."

Honey Lou heard him open the door of the roadster. But she shook her head.

There was a solid lump in her throat and it was hard for her to speak.

"Nix!" she said to him in a strangled voice. "I wouldn't get into your car again if you stood there waiting for me all night! You may be able to kiss other girls but you can't kiss me like that and get away with it, I'll have you know."

And once more she started off into the darkness. This time the gleaming black car passed her with a rush and a roar—and vanished into the December night.

Honey Lou stood still on the lonely road and watched it until it was clear out of sight.

"You may be able to kiss other girls," Honey Lou had said to Jack Wallack.

And, of course, he had kissed other girls. Lots of other girls.

He had never had any trouble in doing it, either. Sometimes it had seemed to young Jack Walack that it was almost too easy.

For he had money and he was more than commonly good to look upon. Tall, broad-shouldered and blond, with eyes that were very blue in his tanned face. Restless, unsatisfied eyes.

He was the kind of man whom women adore, and yet who is a man's man.

All women liked him. Some of them not wisely—and some far too well.

But until the day before, when Honey Lou Huntley came walking up a flight of iron steps in his father's factory, Jack Wallack had never been bowled over by any woman.

"Knocked clean silly," was the way he described his feelings to himself.

Something had seemed to "click" when they met there on the stairs. He had ben thinking about her ever since. He hadn't been able to put her out of his mind.

He was still thinking about her as he rode with the wind in his long black car. He had not meant to kiss her that night when they started out into the lonely country-side. He had just not been able to stop himself from doing it. He had been longing for her for twenty-four hours before it happened.

No other woman before had ever raised such longing in Jack Wallack before. He had fallen headlong in love with Honey Lou, as a man falls in love but once in his whole lifetime.

And — he asked himself — what was he going to do about it?

It was perfectly plain to him that Honey Lou was not the kind of girl who could be kissed and forgotten. A girl who struck a man in the face when he forgot himself was distinctly not that kind of a girl.

"And what a wallop she does pack!" Jack said to himself with a grin of admiration as he sped along in the darkness—alone with his problem.

It was eight o'clock when Honey Lou unlocked the door of the little Arbor street flat.

The yellow lamp glowed on the table in the sitting room. But the rest of the flat was dark and empty. Mrs. Huntley never wasted electric light or anything else. She couldn't afford to.

Honey Lou switched on a light in the little bedroom that she and Margret shared.

On the old-fashioned dresser that had belonged to Great-grandmother Huntley was a little folded note.

Honey Lou read it.

"Mother and I have gone to 'The Duchesss' with Steve Mayhew," Margaret had written. "We'll be sitting down in front where we always sit. Come on over as soon as you've had your supper. It's on the back of the stove. M."

"The Duchesss" was the neighborhood picture house where the family spent one or two evenings every week.

"But no movies for me tonight," said Honey Lou to herself as she took off her damp shoes and slipped her cold feet into pink house slippers. "I've had all the excitement I want tonight—in my own life!"

She was sitting there on the edge of the old hand-carved walnut bed when the doorbell downstairs rang sharply through the evening quiet.

Honey Lou did not move. She sat there, scrowling a little in a troubled way, and wondered who could be downstairs ringing the bell.

"Probably it's Aunt Lucy," she decided. "I'll just let her ring."

Aunt Lucy was mother's sister. She was a gentle soul who had plenty of money and no family to spend it on.

Honey Lou was very fond of her, and of Uncle Henry too. But she did not want to see them tonight.

She did not want to see anybody. She wanted to go out into the kitchen and drink some nice hot milk and then go straight to bed. Straight to sleep and to forgetfulness of the thing that had happened to her an hour ago.

She went softly out into the livin' room to turn out the yellow lamp.

It was then that she heard footsteps coming swiftly up the stairs. A knock came on the panels of the door. Then another—sharp and staccato.

Something told Honey Lou suddently who was behind that door. Perhaps it was her woman's instinct. Perhaps it was only her own wish—or her heart that spoke to her. Such things happen sometimes.

She went across the room and flung the door wide. It was the man she knew it would be! It was Jack Wallack who stood there.

He never said a word. He just stood there and looked down at her for a minute or two. Then he stepped into the warm little room flooded with yellow lamplight, and closed the door behind him.

Before the hungry look in his eyes, Honey Lou's eyes dropped.

She stood there before him, all gold-colored in the lamplight. Even the honey-whiteness of her skin and the duskiness of her hair and a golden tinge in that light.

She was the loveliest thing that the man beside the door had ever seen, and the most desirable.

But when he spoke to her his voice was cold and even.

"Miss Huntley, I came to beg your pardon," he said. "I don't know whether my Dad told you about it or not—but I'm going to be down at the mills, after tomorrow, every day. We'll have to see a lot of one another—you and I. Won't you—be friends?"

Honey Lou lifted her brown eyes and looked straight at him for a minute. Then she held out her hand.

"Why, of course," she said breathlessly. "We'll shake on it. Shall we?"

They did.

"I'm sorry as the dickens for what I did tonight," Jack Wallack went on. He was still holding the warm little hand in his as if he had forgotten it was there, and at last Honey Lou had to draw it away from him.

She crinkled up her eyes at him in that wonderful, sunny smile of hers.

"Let me tell you something," she said. "You may not believe it, Mr. Walack, but I'd never been kissed by a man in all my life—until tonight. That is, not since I've grown up. That's the truth.

She did not look very grown-up as she said it. She looked like a small girl, blushing with stage-fright.

Young Wallack stared down at her steadily and intently for a minute or two. Then just the beginning of a grin flashed across his face.

"But I'm not sorry that I kissed you," he said bluntly. "That isn't what I'm sorry about at all. The thing I'm sorry about is my leaving you all alone out there in the country. It was a rotten trick and I admit it."

He looked down at the pink bedroom slippers on Honey Lou's feet that were still aching and burning after their long walk home.

Honey Lou looked down at them, too, and there was a long silence in the little room.

Then Honey Lou began to laugh. "It was funny, though, wasn't it?" she asked gayly. "I never thought that such a thing would ever happen to me! The old story of 'ride out and walk back!'"

That was one of the lovable thinges about Honey Lou. Her way of seeing the funny side of everything and of everybody—even herself!

"I'm glad you came," she said to Jack Wallack as he turned to go. "I had made up my mind to quit my job down at your father's office, at the end of the week. But now I won't of course."

She opened the door for him.

"Goodnight," she said briskly. "Goodby until tomorrow."

She felt that this was only the begining of something — something more than just friendship between the two of them.

The door closed and Honey Lou was all alone in the lamplit room once more.

She stood still listening to the sound of his car starting and then rumbling off into the distance.

Her eyes were thoughtful.

"Hmm," she said aloud, "I wonder what kind of girls he's been used to! That's what I wonder."

It was not long before she found out.

Honey Lou smiled at herself in the glass as she undressed that night.

She hummed as she washed out her silk stockings and her white collar for the next day. Honey Lou had discovered that a pair of silk stockings could be made to last for weeks and weeks if they were washed out every night and hung to dry.

She had found out, too, that even an old dress looked smart and neat if it boasted of a fresh white collar every day.

And, as Honey Lou worked, she sang at the top of her voice the kind of razzy-jazzy song that her mother could not understand and hated to hear her sing.

"What a man—

"He don't make love

"On the installment plan———"

crooned Honey Lou, running fresh ribbons in her clean princess slip.

It was a cheap little melody. But as it came softly and huskily from Honey Lou's lips it sounded like one of the world's great love songs.

Her voice lingered on each word, giving every one of them a meaning and romance that no song-writer had ever given them.

For as she sang them she was thinking of the man she was going to see in the morning—Tomorrow!

(TO BE CONTINUED)

What kind of girls did Jack Walack know? Honey Lou meets one of them in tomorrow's chapter.

HAQUE CONFERENCE

Recodification of International Law Book Proposed.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10. (AP)—An effort will be made at the coming session of congress to pass a resolution requesting President Coolidge to propose on behalf of the United States the calling of a third Hague conference for the codification of international law.

Chairman Porter of the house foreign affairs committee said today that as soon as congress convenes he would move to take up the Tinkham resolution which embodies such a proposal. A similar step will be made in the senate by Chairman Borah of the foreign relations committee who also favors the conference.

Queen Marie Has New Permanent Wave For Trip To America

PARIS, Oct. 10. (AP)—Queen Marie had her hair permanently waved today.

For three hours and a half this morning the queen, who will leave for the United States on Tuesday submitted herself to the ministerations of the most noted of all Parisians coiffeurs—a little man with a shop just off the Rue de la Paix, whose hands have helped to beautifu more than one crowned head of Europe.

What soap can do to promote beauty

A CERTAIN physician—an outstanding authority in his profession—has for years been combatting mistaken ideas about the care of the complexion. He has written a book in which he tells what happens to complexions from the use of unsuitable soaps or the misuse of soaps.

Dr. Pusey* says, "Soap's function is to cleanse, and for no other purpose. A thoroughly fine soap cleanses without rubbing, and cleanses safely."

To perform its cleansing thoroughly, yet safely and gently, Ivory Soap needs no rubbing in.

Ivory is safe and gentle because it is pure and mild. It is creamy white, too, as a fine soap should be. If you paid a dollar a cake you could have no finer soap.

A really healthy skin is always a clean skin and usually a beautiful skin. Daily washing with warm water and Ivory Soap is as safe a method as you can find to keep the skin clean.

P. S.—If you are attending the Health and Beauty School lectures this week, you doubtless will hear Mme. Chernoff express this same thought.

Beauty and Health go hand in hand

MORE and more women are discovering the importance of an antiseptic cleanliness—a cleanliness that goes deeper than mere surface aids to beauty. This applies to the skin, the hair, the mouth and teeth, the breath, the hands.

Such women are finding that Zonite is just as important in matters of beauty as in matters of health. Because Zonite is a true germicide. It kills the germs of seborrhea (dandruff) just as surely as it kills the germs of typhoid or diphtheria.

Complexional eruptions yield to Zonite, which disinfects the centers and dries them up. In the manicure, Zonite not only disinfects cuts and hangnails but bleaches fingernail stains.

Zonite used daily as a dentifrice and mouth-wash, keeps teeth and gums in a healthy condition.

Zonite destroys disagreeable breath odors. It does not merely cover up the odors temporarily with a sweet taste.

Zonite not only neutralizes body odors but destroys the germs that cause them. Zonite Ointment is particularly delightful for this purpose, as it is stainless, greaseless and gently aromatic—an antiseptic and deodorant in vanishing cream form.

TWO EUROPEAN NOTABLES QUIT PUBLIC POSTS

Lord L'Abernon, British Envoy To Germany Retires; Von Seeckt Ousted

(Two great figures in the life of the young German republic, have gone into retirement this week—Lord D'Abernon, the British ambassador to Germany and General Von Seeckt, commander of the German reichswehr. Maximilian Harden, in the following keen appraisal of the two men, bids an affectionate farewell to the Britton—and predict that General Von Seeckt will "come back" stronger than before his dismissal by the German minister of war.)

BERLIN, Oct. 10.—Nobody excersized a deeper influence on German politics in the last six years than the British ambassador Lord D'Albernon and the Prussion general Von Seeckt.

The Briton came with the reputation of being a clever business man and his Berlin mission was interpreted in Germany as a symptom of the English desire to put finances in order and disregard politics. However the British embassy quickly became, after O'Abernon's arrival, a center of political life.

He Was Respected.

President Ebert, chancellors, ministers, party leaders, Industrialists and bankers repeatedly asked for the opinion of the ambassador whose intellectual deanship was also asknowledged by his diplomatic colleagues, and whose advice generally turned out to be right. He illuminated every conversation with his show of special interest; he never hesitated to visit London in altering all the hatred of Great Britain into a belief that Great Britain had become Germany's upright protector against Frances' vengeance.

He Had Power.

Whoever knows the inside political history since 1920 knows that nothing important happened against D'Abernon's will. He induced the Berlin government to make the guarantee offer to France, marked out the road to Locarno and piloted the Hindenburg republic into the harbor.

The "lord protector," whose role in the Baldwin era was more important than that of Foreign Secretary Chamberlain, now retires. He is over 70, but is a good golf player and is rejuvenated by the natural resourcefulness of the sportsman.

Beside the ambassador stood the stiff and lank General Von Seeckt, his long trunk topped with a tiny head like that of a wrinkled body —almost chinless, with ice cold gray eyes and with a monocle aptly grown into the right one.

He's Good Soldier.

A stiff military position. A good soldier. Son of an old Prussian who had reached the almost viceregal rank of commanding general, and himself chief of the reichswehr—then subordinated to a minister whose father was a noncommissioned officer and hence, according to Prussian views, merely a uniformed cipher!

The strategic success of Mackensen were really due to Von Seeckt. What Von Seeckt has accomplished as organizer of the reichswehr is much more highly estimated in England and France than it is in Germany. But it is not known generally how deeply this general, who was greatly admired by President Ebert has influenced the shaping of German politics.

He's Not Yet Out.

But it is still too early to talk about Von Seeckt as if his career were ended. He is accused of having permitted the former Crown Prince's eldest son, whom millions still regard as the future king and kaiser, to participate in the maneuvers of the republican reichswehr, also of having publicly denied the fact. That he made public false assertions which could so easily be checked up is as improbable as to believe that President Hindenburg knew nothing about the starring engagement of the young prince who has borne a lieutenant's title since he was ten years old.

Although General Von Seeckt is only a typical product of Prussian general staff training, and by no means a "physiological riddle," he is called "the sphinx."

Return Foreseen.

His minister, the would-be democrat Gessler, is reported to have said to General Von Seeckt, after learning about the prince's maneuvers, that he would no longer play the harlequin. Sphinx and harlequin—a good film title.

But the writer has reason to believe that the sphinx that proposed the new riddle of German politics has not lost his throne on the rock of the reichswehr ministry and that everything heretofore reported about the Von Seeckt matter will soon prove to have been erroneous.

Webb is now being closely pursued by a posse in Cecil county, Md.

If successful, it is possible that the company will build another plant for operation in November.

Breaking of Sabbath A Through Ticket To Crash Of Civilization, Miller Says

Methodist Minister Defends Against Open Sundays Local Pastors In Stand

"If the American Christian persists in adding, even in a small way, his influence to the rapidly growing tendency in America to make of our Lord's day a time of commercialization and license, the doom of our civilization is already written."

So said Rev. Leslie Miller, pastor of the Grace Methodist church, in his Sunday morning sermon which, in the main, was a defense of the stand of the Ministerial Alliance against opening of the Texas-Oklahoma fair on Sunday. Rev. Miller made no specific mention of this, but in his address he touched in detail on the need of holding Sunday strictly as a day of rest and worship. He answered, also, recent statements of Rabbi Samuel Phillips of Temple Israel, who defended the stand of fair association officials in opening the fair on Sunday.

Spiritual Starvation.

"Malnutrition makes for weakness," Rev. Miller said, "and if our people fed themselves on physical food as sparingly as the masses feed on spiritual food, the streets would be full of funeral corteges. Sabbath desecration makes spiritual weaklings. The moral impotency of America today is one of its greatest problems."

Continuing, he said: "The Jewish Sabbath is Saturday, in commemoration of the seventh day of the Old Testament. Our Sabbath is Sunday in perpetual commemoration of the resurrection of our Lord. The generally important consideration of the Sabbath is that it is the day set aside in each seven for holiness in prayer, praise, worship and spiritual intake.

"The local Rabbi who derided the stand taken by the Christian ministers of this city against the desecration of the Lord's day made statements that were poorly taken, inasmuch as they came from a religious leader whose people themselves do not observe their own Sabbath. One of the fears that smites the hearts of the true and loyal Jew is that his people in America as well as in many other countries are literally forsaking both the letter and the spirit of the fourth commandment.

"If the American Christian persists in adding, even in a small way, his influence to the rapidly growing tendency in America to make of our Lord's day a time of commercialization and license, the doom of our civilization is already written. Souls are more important than dollars. Men who put dollars in their pockets, made by desecrating the Sabbath, with one hand, are plucking from their characters virtue and moral sensitiveness with the other.

A Joy For The Sabbath.

"No one desires to see the working man, nor any man, together with his family, denied joy, pleasure and happiness on the Sabbath. But my observation has led me to believe that the household that enjoys the best wellbeing is the family who finds their joys and pleasure on the Lord's day, in the services of worship, and in the many wholesome ways of diversion to be found by those who love God and are actually striving to keep his commandments.

"In America, today, the deep concern is not so much hovering around the keeping open of this fair or that fair, or this place of purely worldly amusement on Sunday, but the thing that strikes concern and anxiety to the heart of every thoughtful person is that the tendency in our land today is to bring to pass amongst us a purely European Sunday, and even worse. This can make for naught but the gradual waning of all moral and spiritual imports and ultimate national tragedy.

"Yes, it is true that Sabbath was made for man, but it was made for his moral and spiritual welfare. We need the consistent observance of the Lord's day, for physical, spiritual and mental wellbeing.

"It may be that we don't want the blue laws, but it were better to have some blue laws as regards Sabbath observance than to have thoughtlessness and Godlessness on the Lord's day, that now obtains.

"I do not believe a Jewish Rabbi can talk about the Lord's day as that day is known by our Christian people. We love Christ, and we love our church and traditions and we also want to love our fellows enough to think of their ultimate good; we do all this as much as any other religious group in the world, and perhaps more. If I were a Protestant layman in Wichita Falls, and perhaps, for one reason or another, were a party of the desecration of our Lord's day, I would get no pleasure at all from the fact that a religious leader of another and altogether different group, praised me for my own infidelity.

A Come-Back Needed.

"What we need is for Jew and Gentle alike to come back to God. The law of the Sabbath is God's law. We cannot disregard it with impunity. Let the Jews fill their synagogues with prayers of repentance and consecration. Let the Protestant and the Catholic fill their churches and cathedrals on God's holy day for them, and keep prayed up and fed up on the things of our Heavenly Father. The world gives us six days a week. Let's give God a chance on the one day in seven. Sunday is sacred to the Christian because of the historical connotation of that day. No one can persistenly neglect the one day of the week ordained to God and yet get by with it. Neither can a nation or a people.

"By keeping the fair open on Sunday we make a few dollars, but who can estimate what we lose in morale. Any commercialization of the Lord's day may bring momentary returns, but its sapping of the moral and spiritual vitality of the people is incalculable.

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

COOLIDGE CAN RUN AGAIN IF HE WANTS JOB

And It's Pretty Well Understood That He'll Toss Hat Into Ring In 1928

By ROBERT T. SMALL.
Special Correspondent of The Record News.

Copyright, 1926, by the Consolidated Press Association.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—It is very evident to the careful observer of both sport and politics that the people of the United States during the past week have been more interested in Babe Ruth and his big black bat than they have been in all the men running for public office. The political spellbinders are abroad in the land, but it has been difficult for them to keep the minds of their audience off the serious problem of who was to pitch the next day for the Cardinals and the Yankees, and whether the Card pitchers would ever give the Babe another chance to whale one clear out of the park. The nation has been having its last fling at the national game, and in the words of the immortal Woodrow Wilson politics has been adjourned.

Where you have found anything approaching real political interest that interest has centered about the one question: "Is President Coolidge going to run again?"

Will Coolidge Run?

Traveling through the middlewest more than five months ago, this writer encountered that question at every turn of the road. A trip to the Mississippi river country this week found no change in the situation. The question was again on every lip. This time it was to be noted, however, that the question generally was put in the form of an affirmative interrogation. It was nearly always "Coolidge is going to run again, isn't he?" All of which goes to show that most people are interpreting the silence in the White House as giving consent.

So powerful has been this silence, so subtle has been the suggestion of Coolidge visitors that the president could not very well give up his work two years from now and "leave the country in the lurch," that this country they speak of could only be surprised now by an announcement that Mr. Coolidge would not run. Virtually everywhere he is regarded as a third-term candidate and notwithstanding this prospect no astronomers have noted a tendency on the part of the sun to stand still in the sky.

Traditions Weaken.

Political precedents and traditions do not seem to have much effect upon the people at large anymore. The people are too busy with their own affairs to bother a great deal about who holds the average public office and who does not. A noted Ohio republican editor, wise in his generation, expressed it a little more forcefully a short time ago. He said the people didn't care "a hoot in hell" and it doesn't take much official or unofficial observing to agree that he is right.

"Prosperity" is a fine battle cry for the party which is in power, for it knows that so long as the people are busy making money, or think they are making it, they will pay little heed to the cry of "turn the rascals out." It takes too much time and effort to turn 'em out. In times of great prosperity, real or simulated, the people do not pay attention for any length of time to great political scandals. If these scandals broke just before election day they might mean something. But when they break a year or so ahead of the general polling date, the people forget. The agitators call it a lack of civic consciousness; the politicians who benefit, call it "contentment."

Some Activity.

In one or two spots of the west there is real political activity. Illinois, for instance, is having quite a time with its senatorial elections, after all the "scandals" that has marked the senatorial primaries. Col. Frank L. Smith, who defeated Senator McKinley for the republican nomination, is making a vigorous county to county speaking tour.

He is beating the drums and clashing the cymbals and saying that nobody wants to go back to "the incompetency and extravagances of the democrats."

Colonel Smith is out to save the people's money. He admits it cost a whole lot to put him in the position of running for office on an economy platform, but he insists it was worth it—to the people. Colonel Smith insists that the utility interests contributed to his campaign not because they loved him more, but because they loved Senator McKinley less. Colonel Smith explains that the fact that he was chairman of the state commerce commission and had to do with utility rates and regulations did not enter into the equation at all.

Insull Liberal Donor.

George Brennan, democratic candidate for the senate, also accepted donations from Samuel Insull, the utility magnate, and they are calling the senatorial fight a well-insulated" campaign. Mr. Insull only gave $15,000 to George Brennan, however, and contributed at least $125,000 to Chairman Smith. Therefore, Mr. Brennan feels justified in saying things about Colonel Smith.

But the real fly in the Illinois ointment is one Hugh S. Magill, who is running as an independent candidate for the senate and is belaboring both Smith and Brennan. Occasionally Magill and Brennan team up in an attack on Smith, but just as things seem to be going well, Magill turns on Brennan and says: "How about that $15,000?" To which Brennan politely, but with a lot of real feeling replies: "Oh, don't mention it."

Demos Have Attack.

The democrats, ignoring the foresaid sum, are attacking the utilities and their alleged "alliance" with Smith. Magill is making aggressive fight and there is no question but that he has the regular republicans worried. So true is this that Colonel Smith is charging "a great slush fund" has been raised to put Magill over. He says he knows things that will "rock the state" before the campaign is ended.

Thus far he has given no intimation what they are, but the fact he is fighting Magill rather than Brennan shows a fear of real republican defection because of the primary disclosures. Brennan will get the organization democratic vote no matter what happens, and every vote for Magill will be a vote taken from Smith. This fight will bear watching to the bitter end.

Harding Caddy On His Good Behavior

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 10.—His youth and extenuating circumstances saved William Myers, 18 years, of Marion, Ohio, from going to jail here after he had pleaded guilty of stealing an automobile. Young Myers and a companion, Vernon Crowley, of Grand Rapids, Mich., took the machine of Arthur A. Brennan, parked in front of Mr. Brennan's home.

Owners of Property Holds It By Force

MONTEREY, Oct. 10.—Armed with a rifle and defying motorists and officials, A. M. Allen announced that he would use force if necessary to protect his ownership of a strip of land on Point Lobos, two miles south of Point Lobos.

A road crosses the land claimed by Allen. According to the officials of Monterey county, the road is a public highway.

The dispute between Allen and the county became spirited, when A. F. Serrano, district roadmaster, informed Allen that the road was a public thoroughfare, and that Allen would be required to tear down a tollgate which he has constructed.

He has caught nine rattlesnakes on the slopes of Windbeam mountain during the last four months, and says he has succeeded in pacifying the wild instincts of the reptiles until they eat off his hand.

WIFE CAN BOB HAIR

Wichita Judge Refuses to Give Divorce to Husband.

"Bobbed hair may not be pleasing to some husbands, but it would not necessarily constitute grounds for granting a divorce to said husband," Judge W. W. There were other allegations which were not stressed by the plaintiff, and the case resulted in a verdict for the defendant.

Get your sample of KLEENEX at

Madam Chernoff's Beauty School

Olympic Theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas

HERE is a scientific discovery that will prove, no matter how long you have used cold cream, you have never removed it, and its accumulation of dirt, entirely from your skin . . . have never removed it in gentle safety to your skin.

It is not a cloth, not a makeshift, but an entirely new kind of material.

It contrasts the harshness of fibre or tissue methods with a softness that you'll love. It ends the "soiled towel" bother.

What it is

The name is KLEENEX — exquisitely dainty, inviting and immaculate—you use it, then discard it.

Scientifically aseptic, it reaches you white as snow, soft as down. It is 27 times as absorbent as an ordinary towel; 24 times as any fibre or tissue substitute.

Kleenex comes in two sizes . . . the Professional (sheets 9 by 10 inches) and the Boudoir size (sheets 6 by 7 inches) in exquisite flat handkerchief boxes to fit your dressing table drawer.

Today, largely on the advice of skin specialists, women are flocking to its use.

It will effect unique results in the texture and fineness of your skin; in the color and whiteness of your skin.

Combats oily skins and blemishes

You use cold cream to remove germ-laden accumulations. Old methods removed but part, rubbed the rest back in. That's where eruptions came . . . and those dark-appearing skins.

It will correct oily skin and nose conditions amazingly.

Oily skin indicates cold cream left in the skin. The pores exude it. That's why you must "powder" now so often.

It will double and treble the effectiveness of your "make-up" . . . will make it last hours longer than before.

That's because it does what no other method can do . . . what no other even approximates in doing . . . removes all dirt and grease from the pores.

CAPPER OF KANSAS

CAPPER of Kansas is a republican United States senator. Capper of Kansas belongs to the farm bloc of statesmen under the big dome at the capitol of the nation. Capper of Kansas makes the interesting announcement that "farm prices drop and food prices rise." Capper of Kansas, loyal to the administration and the nominees of the republican party at all times, is on the firing line.

This is his latest, "what our sick agriculture needs seems rather plain notwithstanding some differences of opinion that are prevalent. The plain fact is that agriculture is the only important American industry not protected from foreign competition."

Is this true? American wheat growers produce a large surplus each year. This surplus must be sold in foreign countries to feed foreign mouths. Canada is a wheat growing country. There is a tariff on Canadian wheat. Canada will produce 400,000,000 bushels of wheat this year. More than half of this Canadian wheat must be exported. This places Canadian and American wheat in direct competition in foreign climes.

Capper of Kansas has another argument. It follows, 'o'ne thing co-operating marketing cannot do is to protect the farmer from foreign competition and cheap ocean freight rates." In war time the American people invested three billion dollars in the building of a merchant marine. Our lawmakers will not vote subsidies to American shops to keep them afloat and to enable them to compete with the ships of foreign nations which are granted subsidies by their government.

In the cotton belt of the country, the fleecy staple is grown. There is a large surplus which must be sold to foreign millers. Isn't it true that the surplus fixes the price? Isn't it true that orderly markeing of wheat and cotton and corn would enable the farmer, or rather the grower of the product to to obtain a price above the cost of production?

Would a tariff do it? Capper of Kansas answers in the affirmative. This is what he says, "why not arrange a tariff that would protect all interests and without hypocritical pretense, protect farms, factories, workers and business men. Farmers have not had consideration, because, like the workers they are not really united politically, and they live out in the fields instead of having offices on Wall street and lawyers around the corner."

Capper of Kansas is a national lawmaker as well as a state editor. He is a leader of the republican party. He has been in the senate a number of years. Why hasn't he evolved a tariff system that will protect all alike? He says it can be done. If so he should try his hand at the game. He is in a position, if he puts his bill over, to protect all alike as he insists that can be done and to bring prosperity to all the tillers of the soil as well as all the wage workers in all the cities and towns.

Incidentally, Capper of Kansas is of the opinion that American labor is getting all that is coming to it. This is his conclusion, "with well protected manufactures, the eight hour law and restricted immigrations, American labor is well cared for. That is all right as far as it goes, if we accept a few overprotected items, but it does not go far enough, it does not adequately protect the leaders of the republicans of the west. Since the close of the war between the states in 1865, the republicans controlled the federal government with the exception of 16 years, when Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson were American presidents.

Republicans have made the tariff laws of the nation. They have made the taxation laws of the nation. They have made for the most part the transportation laws of the nation. Now if the farmers of the country have been made the goats, why should Capper of Kansas and his fellow republicans be continued in power by the republican corn growers and wheat growers of the great producing sections of the west?

According to Capper of Kansas, the republicans have protected all classes and conditions but the tillers of the soil, and yet the tillers of the soil in that vast territory lying between the Alleghany and the Rocky mountains have constituted the backbone of the republican party for 50 years.

COTTON SHOULD BE HELD

AGAIN the farmers of Texas have been advised to hold their cotton, to keep it off the market, that is, if they wish to resore prices to higher levels. Frank B. Hayne is the president of the New Orleans cotton exchange. He has urged cotton growers everywhere to stand together for a better day and better prices, and his advice is to hold every bale.

He reminds them that last year's consumption was over 15,000,000 bales. He tells them that from a world's standpoint American middling cotton, below 15 cents, cannot prove otherwise than unusually attractive to mills abroad as well as at home. "and undoubtedly will result in a large increase in the use of American cotton at the expense of other growths."

He predicts that the consumption of American cotton will be considerably larger this year than it was in 1925. And, in his opinion, there is less ground than is generally believed for existing depression. "The world needs our cotton at a fair price," writes the New Orleans cotton authority, "and at less than 15 cents to rush supplies to the market, is like giving it away. In fact, at corresponding reductions for low grades, much of it, if existing conditions are permitted to prevail, will not be worth picking."

He tells the governor that the south sold nearly 16,000,000 bales last year at more than $100 a bale, and makes this comment, "so surely there is justification for it to force its cotton on the market and sell it under $65 a bale as it is doing at present." Really the future does not look dark to the president of the New Orleans cotton exchange, "nothing but unreasonable and unjustifiable fear is responsible for the conditions now prevailing," he writes. "Last year's cotton crop, including the value of the seed, brought in round figures $1,800,000,000."

And in the role of a prophet of prosperity, he goes on record as follows: "Even at the worst the carry-over can be easily financed and personally, in my opinion, with increased mill consumption as indicated by the mills takings which are 12 per cent more than for the same time last year, the carry-over this year is not apt to exceed last year to any extent."

He urges all concerned to hold every bale, and this includes producers, bankers and business men of the south and he warns all concerns that unless a calm and dispassionate view of the situation is at once taken, the crop of 1926 may bring $750,000,000 less than the crop of 1925, "which will not only mean a disaster to every citizen of the south, but will be to a certain extent effect the business of the entire nation."

His advice to the bankers is delivered straight from the shoulder. "Bankers certainly must recognize this as an economically sound statement, and it is undoubtedly to their interest to use every effort in their power to put a mend to this unnecessary panic among the producers." If the mills of the world took approximately 16,000,000 bales of American cotton last year, then it is a producers' panic, precipitated by the growers of cotton rushing the same to the markets and forcing very low price levels for the fleecy staple.

President Hayne has given the figures of the movement and consumption of cotton of the crop of 1925. They are certainly most encouraging. His slogan is, hold every bale. His advice is for the producers and the bankers and the business men of the south to organize their forces and prevent a loss to the south of $750,000,000 on the sale of a single crop in a single year.

MONEY FOR THE PLAYERS

PLAYERS of the St. Louis Cardinals and New York Yankees will divide the velvet later along in the year. Players themselves fix the division of their spoils. If the players' portion of the world's series pool is divided into 25 parts, the winning players will get $6,254.65 while on the same basis the losers will receive $4,129.76.

All the figures are in and the players' share in the receipts limited to the first four games amounts to $372,303.51. Divided sixty per cent to the winning club and forty per cent to the loser, the winner will collect $223,380.31 and the loser $148,920.20, making the difference between the winner and losers end more than $2,200.

Speaking of easy money, Hobo Dempsey, the plug, has taken down more than any fighter of the age in which he lives. Marine Tunney received an excellent start as a champion when he pocketed a check for $200,000. Baseball is a scientific game; pugilism is a brusing game. There is money for the winner in any game.

The Dirty Dog

The Ace Of Cads

BY MICHAEL ARLEN

"Of course," she said thoughtfully, "there was a certain amount of excuse for your son Basil. I made it rather easy for him. You see, dear, Capel Maturin lied. As usual, you might say. Well, yes. He just told the story the wrong way round. You know, I was once engaged to be married to Mr. Maturin. And he introduced me to his best friend, Basil de Gramercy. Oh, dear, why did you give your son such a very small allowance? Whereas to be able to seduce his best friend's fiance he needed money. But Capel Maturin has done very well on the Derby that year, and Basil easily managed to borrow a thousand from him, for no one, let's face it, could ever call Beau Maturin mean with money. And one day Mr. Maturin, who used to whistle the Spring Song to himself because he and I both loved it, suddenly found that I preferred Basil's prospects to his good looks. I don't suppose you can even yet realise, dear, the exquisite revenge that Mr. Maturin has had of me and of your house tonight. He intended, obviously to marry my daughter: how, you might say, could I have borne that? But I tell you I could have borne it infinitely better than the memory of this night. Here I have sat, a faded woman, while Capel Maturin, fresher and more handsome in bankruptcy than ever I have been in success, having won my daughter's love, killed it out of pity for you—Oh, not for me! —with a tale which, however, he had told it, does me very little honour. And, for pity's sake, for your sake, he spared you your son.

"I should not have told you now; I have done wrong, but I had to. Even the old, dear, cannot be allowed to be wrong about everything all the time! But don't look so sad! Why do you, why should you, look so sad? After all, the de Gramercys have had everything they ever wanted from me and my daughter—and the ace of cads certainly hasn't! Good night, dear."

Questions from the World of Love Answered by a Noted Authority

"Don't Ape the Others, Girls; You'll Lose Out If You Do.

The newspapers are telling the sad, sad story of the tragedy of a motion picture actress who "reduced." It appears that the lady in question had a feather-bed figure and a jolly face like a full moon and that which every way you looked at her she was billows and billows of fat.

Came a day, as they say on the screen, when she cast a dispraising eye on her own curves and determined to be no longer a stylish stout, but a lean and slight vamp. So she starved and ran and walked and rolled and tumbled and was massaged and steamed and beat to a pulp until through much suffering she became a mere living skeleton.

Proudly she presented herself before her director, feeling that she could demand a million a week as a salary; but to her surprise and consternation she found that nobody wanted her at any price. As a fat woman she had filled a big place, literally and figuratively, in her little world. She had been unique, individual, interesting, a distinct type. But just as a lanky woman with lines in her face she was merely one in the crowd, with nothing about her to distinguish her from the fiminity that comes by the bolt. There is a lesson in this story for all women, and it is this:

STRUT YOUR OWN STUFF.

Don't be copy-cats. Don't wear something that doesn't suit your style just because it happens to be fashionable. Don't imitate some other woman's little airs and graces and mannerisms. Be yourself. Find out what you look best in and wear it. Study yourself and ascertain what your strong point is and emphasize that. In a word, strut your own stuff.

Very few women have intelligence enough to do this. Most of them try to standardize themselves and to be as much like other women as peas in a pod, with the result that they throw away the most alluring charm that any human being can possibly have, and that is what we call "personality."

Take, as a flagrant example of this mania that women of every age have for appearing as flappers. Now the flapper is all right in her own age and class. Nobody will deny the charm of the little, thin, bobbed-haired, addle-pated girl of 18, who jumps around from one thing to another and is always on the go; who babbles of her crushes and her dates, and who hasn't two real thoughts to rub together in her head.

She is amusing and entertaining, just as a playful kitten is. Nobody wants a girl of that age to be settled or wise. But the woman of 50 who Crabs the flapper's act, as vaudevillians say, merely makes herself ridiculous. She doesn't make herself look younger. She exaggerates her age when she wears clothes that belong to her daughter or her grand-daughter.

The fool questions that 18 asks are deliciously native, but they are ignorant stupidity on the lips of 45. We smile when the schoolgirl chatters to us about her sweeties, but we turn away in disgust when the elderly woman bridles and simpers and talks about what her best young man said about her eyes.

Yet 50 is not a more unattractive age than 20, and many a woman at middle age is better-looking and more fascinating than she, ever was before. Many a woman who was a hard, tight, insignificant little bud blossoms out into a gorgeous rose.

"I'M THE GINK"

I'm the ginkette who is always telling my husband how unfairly he is treated at the office. I assure him that he is much more valuable than some of the other men and I berate him for not going into the office and demanding more or as much money. I am always nagging him about standing up for himself. Of course, he probably knows best about it. I know nothing about the affairs at his office, but I am sure they aren't right. I make it unpleasant for him and make him dissatisfied, but I keep nagging.

Lyrics of Life

By Douglas Malloch

WHY MOTHER CARES

Why, do you think, your mother cares
What daughter does or daughter wears?
Why should it matter to mother?
And yet it seems, somehow or other
You sometimes think, from things you say,
That mother merely wants her way,
When days are dark, when nights are lonely,
That mother thinks of mother only.

Why, do you think, does mother make
Her own eyes weep, her heart ache,
When down the path that leads to sorrow
You dance today, to pay tomorrow?
My girl, the grieving she may do
Is not for her, is all for you—
Yes, when a mother hovers o'er you,
The tears that fall are falling for you.

Why, do you think, does mother long,
To keep you sweet, to keep you strong?
It is for you that she is praying,
It is for you that she is praying,
It is for you that she is saying
The things she does. Although you sigh
At mother's whims, and wonder why
There is one reason and no other
Why mother cares: she is your mother.

What Do You Know About It?

DAILY SCIENCE SIX

1. What is an orbit?
2. What is an equinox?
3. What is a solstice?
4. How can you locate the Pole star in the heavens?
5. Where would the Pole star appear directly in the zenith?
6. What sort of a curve is the square of the earth making in space?

Answers to these questions in tomorrow's Record News.

SEEING STARS

The way a mountain looks to you depends on where you are; but no matter on what part of the earth you stand the constellations look the same. They may be higher or lower with reference to the horizon, but the Pleiades still look lige the Pluades; Orion is still Orion, and the two dippers are never twisted out of shape. But the way we see the stars is very much a matter of relativity, if time is considered. A million years ago the stars that now compose the great dipper were far apart; they have moved into their present positions, looking like a dipper, in the meantime, and are moving away again, like trains passing each other in the night. Their speeds are terrific, but they are so far away that they cannot be seen to move, anymore than the hands on a clock far away. But 1,000,000 years from now they will be so far from each other that the dipper will fall apart.

Now, what do you know about that?

Answers to Saturday's questions:

1. Date palms grow in southwestern Asia, northern Africa, Californian and Arizona.
2. The ivory palm of South America yields buttons.
3. The oil palm used in soap manufacture grows in Africa and is cultivated in the East Indies.
4. The trunks of palm trees differ from those of other trees except bamboo and Pandanus and a few others in being hollow; also they are generally unbranched, being a single straight column.
5. The peculiarity of the growth of palm leaves on the stem is that they are all in a bunch or crown at the top of the stem.
6. The plant that has more uses than any other in the world is the coconut palm.

WHAT TODAY MEANS TO YOU

BY MARY BLAKE

Libra.

Today's planetary aspects are favorable and continue so although with slowly diminishing force, until sunset. They then settled down to a drab condition, betokening unrest and nervousness. It is not, under any circumstances, a very good opportunity for the launching of any new enterprise. It is, however, a propitious occasion for research of thought, and the condition of the mind will be well-balanced. Plans thought out under today's influences will, when put into execution, prove both successful and profitable. The evening atmosphere calls for self-control, and a firm resolve not to speak or act on the impulse of the moment. Recreative relaxation should be sought.

Children bor ntoday will, during infancy, respond very readily to ordinary methods of treatment, when suffering, as they will, from those ailments that are peculiar to childhood. Just before attaining adulthood, they are threatened with an illness of a complex nature. This will not place their lives, or future physical development in jeapordy. It will, however, cause anxiety and demand skillful attention. In disposition, they will be rebellious and self-willed, and will prove to be difficult to restrain when they cannot get their own way. As time goes on, this characteristic, toned down by experience, will be less evident, but there will always remain signs of a strong will. They will be ambitious, and successful.

If today is your birthday, you possess a very positive and decided nature. Half-way measures never appeal to you, and as you are extreme in your opinions, so are direct in your methods. Determination of character is evidence in your diagnosis. It is, however, tinged by stubbornness, and also, at times, by impulsiveness. Just because you arrive at a certain conclusion does not guarantee the correctness of your judgment. Everything, even a big drum, has two sides to it. You are frequently a victim of moods; but, fortunately, these are usually of short duration, as, by will-power, you are able to overcome them. You are capable and energetic, and usually found in the vanguard, as you like to lead. Demonstrativeness and affection are characteristic of you.

Successful people born this date are:

CARDINALS CAPTURE 1926 WORLD'S SERIES

Ruth's Home Run Fails To Stave Off Yankee Defeat

NEW MAJOR LEAGUE THIS YEAR? NOPE

Men Who Plan Third Loop Under Big Tent Show Down

BY GEORGE CHADWICK, Special Correspondent, the Record News.

Copyright, 1926, by the Consolidated Press Association.

NEW YORK, Oct. 9.—Promoters of a rumored third major baseball league probably will postpone inauguration of the enterprise until another year. This is the opinion of major league owners and officials based on tremendous demonstration for baseball "as is" which took place in the middle west as a result of the winning of the National league pennant by the St. Louis Cardinals.

There were present in St. Louis recently four men of means who would back some part of the third major league if they were satisfied that they could enlist men with them who would be willing to undertake what might be a losing fight at the beginning, trusting for success in about three years.

All the time the world series games have been on there has been a little group of men who know quite a lot about baseball moving in and out of the crowds in the hotels and chatting amiably with everybody they knew. They were sounding the mood of the fans and even talking to the club owners, and they were trying to absorb all of the idle gossip and all the facts that they could about conditions in baseball.

They were sizing the situation up. But they did not advertise it. They compared notes daily and made reports daily. The tremendous enthusiasm which greeted the winning of the pennant in St. Louis made them question whether the time is propitious to sail into a third league.

Now's the Time.

And yet, as one of them observed, "the only success that an intruding league ever has had has been when organized baseball has been most successful."

These men have had their agents talking with baseball players. Some of the players, who were approached in an informal sort of way, hardly knew what they were talking about. They were much more interested in the world series. A ball player who is tied up in a world series talks vaguely about everything. The one fact that holds his attention is the dollar mark.

This world series is no exception. When the hurrah is over the ball players will think of the season to come with appetites whetted by the huge crowds they saw in October. The St. Louis team will not be as easy to sign in 1927 as it was in 1926. The players who started this season with Hornsby will have become veterans. It will no longer be an organization of rather venturesome kids who were told they were not wanted if they could not make good, but a collection of young men with ambitions as to salary.

Some of the New York Yankees have heard about this new third league but it is a little doubtful if the players of the Yankees can be weaned very far away from the big city. There is not a player on the team but feels perfectly sure of his income in 1927 if the club wants him. There may be some players whom the club will not want. Yet it has a fine foundation for 1927. If it can trade for pitchers or buy pitchers it can club its way along again.

Giant's Uncertain.

To some extent this is true of the New York Nationals but there is a more uncertain element on that team. The players feel they are likely to be changed about. Meusel got away. So did Jimmy Johnston, because both wanted to be able to negotiate the best advantage to themselves and they already not wanted by New York for trading material. If it came to the actual signing of a contract with a new league the players of the Giants would want to see the money in the bank.

There is dissatisfaction in Brooklyn, a lot of it. Wheat is part of it. He will go to any club that will pay well to get him. Of course, he cannot go to any club in organized baseball unless Brooklyn says he may but he never will play ball another year in Brooklyn with any enthusiasm—if you believe what he says.

The Cincinnati players are not as happy as they might be. Some of the Reds think they should have won the pennant. They say they failed because the team had no shortstop in the early part of the year despite the fact that Hendricks insisted they had.

Pittsburgh players will stick along. But there will be no more urge on the part of Fred Clarke. He says he is through with that sort of thing for good and all, but Adams, Carey and Bigbee are not there. They were jadded too smartly in the neck to be through with anything except a chance to get back.

Grover Alexander Series Hero

He Goes To Rescue of Jess Haines At Critical Stage of Final Test And Halts Desperate Yankee Rally With Great Arm.

NEW YARK, OCT. 10. (AP)—The gaunt, weather-beaten figure of Grover Cleveland Alexander came back in all its ancient mastery today to check the Yankees for the third time and clinch the first world's baseball championship that St. Louis has known for 40 years.

Through the haze of this crucial test, the seventh and deciding game of the 1926 diamond classic, the Yankee defense cracked to yield the Cardinals their winning margin of 3 to 2, but it was Alexander the great, who saved the day with as dramatic and exciting a finish as any championship conflict has ever witnessed.

$50,000 at Stake.

The bases were full, two were out and only one Yankee run was needed to tie the game in the seventh inning when Alexander came to the rescue of the tottering Cardinal right-hander, Jesse Haines, whose finger was split from throwing his knuckle ball and whose control was ebbing fast. It was a situation calculated to test the stoutest heart and the most seasoned skill, with $50,000 and a world's championship hanging in the balance, but Alexander was equal to it.

Facing Tony Lazzeri, a rookie almost young enough to be his son, the great veteran hitched his trousers, called on the power of a right arm that has carried him through 16 major league campaigns and struck out his man to retire the side as the crowd broke into a frenzied uproar.

Crisis Overcome.

Safely past this crisis, the most dramatic moment of the game, Alexander easily subdued the Yankees in the closing two innings, yielding only a pass to Babe Ruth in the ninth, as he completed one of the greatest pitching exploits in world series history.

Twice before Alexander, going the full route to gain victories that pulled the fighting Cardinals each time back to even terms, it was only yesterday that his masterful box work led the National leaguers to the triumph that forced the series to the limit, yet he was ready again today, as strong and as effective as ever to cap the climax of his heroic role.

Not since the famous right-arm of Walter Johnson pulled the Senators to their first world's championship in 1924, has there been anything so colorful as this finish of Alexander's. Two years ago, however, the big train came back victoriously after being twice defeated while this time the stalwart Nebraskan stepped into the breach with two victories already behind him.

He's on Honor Roll.

Alexander did not get official credit today for a victory that would have put him among the honor roll men who have won three world's series games. The verdict goes down on the books in Haines' name but the glory belongs to Alexander, the 39-year-old warrior who was sold "down the river" a short time ago as a Chicago Cub discard.

Thwarted as they were by Alexander's great stand, it was nevertheless a heart-breaking defeat for the Yankees, who battled desperately to overcome a margin they had yielded in the fourth inning when the Cardinals, aided by two errors, by Koenig and Meusel, scored all their three runs. It was heart-breaking for Waite Hoyt, young right-hander, who had twirled brilliantly, even when his support sagged, and it was heartbreaking for Babe Ruth, whose fourth home run of the series, again shattering all world's championship records, had put the Yankees in the lead and upset the confidence of Haines, hero of a shut-out victory over the American league champions in St. Louis.

Thrill For Cards

But it was thrilling just the same for the Cardinals, themselves victims of unfortunate "breaks" in previous games, yet possessed of the fighting spirit and pluck to come back when their cause seemed lost and captured on four innings, the final two games that carried them to the world's championship.

Forty years is a long time between tilts but this conquering clan the first National League pennant winner St. Louis has ever had, came through under fire to establish it right to the peak. Back in 1886, when St. Louis, then in the old American association, was in the throes of its first and last pennant wininng streak, its representatives triumphed over the Detroit Nationals in the ancient equivalent of the modern world series. But those days have almost been forgotten in the long and barren stretch in betewen. The triumphs of ancient times carried no such glory and gold as goes with victory in the modern classic of the diamond, and so today's triumph marks the end of a long train of hope, with the dreams of two score years come true.

Not Big Mar

Yet it was not by any overwhelming margin that the Cardinals captured the game's biggest prize in a drab, rain-soaked setting that found only 38,000 fans, the smallest crowd of any of the four games in New York, looking on, milled and bundled in coats. But for the errors of Koenig and Meusel, the Cardinals would not have [illegible] in the fourth and Ruth and Hoyt might tonight be occupying the n[illegible] in the hall of fame that opened its portals instead to the heroic figure of Alexander.

The Yankees fought desperately to overcome the advantages they had handed to their foes. They drew up within a run of the Cardinals in the sixth, when Hoyt was withdrawn as reserve forces were tossed into the battle, but they were balked then by Haines and again in [illegible] seventh by Alexander, as the Cardinals put up a stonewall defense behind the gallant work of their boxmen. Tommy Thevenow, gallant little shortstop, shared the laurels of the Cardinals' final triumph with Alexander for it was his fielding that repeatedly checked the Yankee attack and his bat that supplied the decisive blow in the fourth inning. The way for him was paved in this frame by Yankee errors, the first Cardinal run registered when Meusel muffed O'Farrel's long fly in his haste to make the throw to the plate, but it was a clean hit from Thevenow's bat, a smoking shot to right, that scored Bell and Hafey with the runs that turned out to be decisive.

Jim Starts It

Hornsby had been retired in this inning when Bottomley started the fireworks with a single. Koenig let Bell's hot smash slip through his hands for the first Yankee error and then the bases were filled when Hafey's Texas Leaguer dropped safely in left, misjudged both by Meusel and Koenig. Even in the face of these bad "breaks" Hoyt might have escaped unscratched but Meusel dropped O'Farrel's drive, while Bottomley scored, and Thevenow's hit completed the attack. Haines and Holm were retired easily but the damage had been done and Hoyt's brilliant work off-set.

Cards Threaten

In only one other inning, the eighth, did the Cardinal attack treaten and then it was checked by [illegible] Pennock, star Yankee southpaw, hero of two previous victories, who was called on to finish the game after Hoyt had been withdrawn for a pinch hitter in the sixth. Thus Pennock and Alexander, the twin mound aces of the contending clans battled each other to the close but the game already had bene won and lost when they entered the fray and the Yankee star had no such drastic opportunity as Alexander faved and capitalized.

The cracks in the defense of the Yankees hurt most but their failure to seize most of their opportunities on the attack also played a big part in the team's downfall. They threatened in all seven of the innings, that Haines was on the mound and had the bases full when Alexander stepped into the picture but in only two were they able to rush over a run.

Men Watch Child Sink In Quick Sand

MONTREAL, Oct. 10.—Two well-dressed men stood by and calmly watched the death struggles of 10-year-old Albert Lacroix as he was sucked to his doom by quicksands.

Young Lacroix, with several companions, attempted to wade through the pond, was caught by quicksand and in fifteen minutes was drawn to his death.

Among the 15,000 who, clad only in light running costumes, participated in the last rush to the new diamond field at Elandsputte, Africa, were 120 women.

GRANDFIELD ON COYOTES CARD

Oklahomans to Furnish Last Pre-Season Tilt For Local Team

Grandfield, Okla., will be the final pre-league season skirmish for Wichita Falls high school's Coyotes, according to a statement from Coach Bud McCallum Sunday afternoon. Negotiations for a game for the interval have been going on for some time and the contest has now been slated for the coming Friday at Wichita Falls.

Grandfield will be remembered as the eleven which last year was booked as an easy scrimmage outing. However, when the Pack got to Grandfield they found a backfield with one man big enough to score three touchdowns through the Coyotes in one quarter and it didn't look so easy. The Oklahomans should give the Coyotes another good tussle.

This, incidentally, will be the last game for the Coyotes at home for three weeks as the league contests with Electra, Quanah and Vernon are all away from Wichita Falls this season.

VANDY SCOUTS WATCH TEXAS

But Main Interest Centers On Outcome of Tilt A&M Vs. SMU

DALLAS, Oct. 10. (AP)—The dramatic 6-3 victory of the Texas Aggie over their cherished rivals, the Sewanee Tigers, the 37-0 drubbing given the Centenary Gentlemen by the rampaging S. M. U. Ponies, and Trinity's holding of the Rice Owls to a 6-6 deadlock were highlights of Texas football last week.

Dana Bible's Aggies and Ray Morrison's Mustangs have shown so much promise that some of the most capable critics of southwest conference football are predicting the title will go to the victor of the Texas A. and M.-S. M. U. battle to be fought October 23 at Dallas. This will be the first conference engagement for both combinations, and the first of five consecutive conference tilts for each eleven.

Aggies Last Year.

Last season, at College Station, the Aggies battled their way to a 7-0 win over the Mustangs in a brilliant conflict, and this season's game is expected to be even more thrilling, with the Biblemen matching their stubborn defense against the versatile attack of Morrison's charges.

An unyielding forward wall, and the genius of Joel Hunt, one of the sweetest backs to flash across the southwest conference horizon in many a day, carried the Aggies to victory Saturday. Hunt, a former Waco high performer is one of the best "money players" in the conference; that is, he has the faculty of showing his best form when the need is the greatest. Hunt was the "spark plug" of the championship Aggie machine of 1925, but is an even more vital factor this year.

Tigers' Hard Luck.

Coach Bennett and his Sewanee Tigers from Tennessee have played in hard luck against the Aggies. In 1923, they were turned back 7-0 by the Aggies; in 1924, by a 14-0 margin; in 1925, they managed to get a 6-6 draw and Saturday they were defeated by Hunt and his mates in the last five minutes of play. Hunt's passing snaring of a pass and running proving decisive.

Mann, the fleet quarterback of the Ponies, showed Friday just why W. C. Lynch, former brilliant quarterback of Dallas Oak Cliff high, is not first string quarterback. He demoralized the Centenary eleven by his long return of punts, his clever passing and generalship.

Some football fans predicted that Lynch, all-state high school quarter in 1924, would win the regular quarterback's job, but he has had to yield to Mann, who has the advantage of a year's collegiate experience. Lynch, however, is certain to see considerable service in the backfield, and likely will win his letter.

Pile 132 Points.

The Mustangs in three games have piled up 132 points, and have not been scored on. They defeated Denton normal, 47-0, Trinity university, 48-0, and Centenary 37-0. Saturday, however, the Mustangs from Dallas will receive a real test when they go up against the Missouri university Tigers at Columbia, Mo.

The Tigers Saturday won over the Nebraska university Cornhuskers by a 14-7 margin, and will be favored to turn back the dashing attack of the Mustangs. A victory by the Ponies over the powerful Tigers, who won the Missouri Valley conference title in 1924, and tied for that honor in 1925, would do much to enhance southwest conference prestige.

Coach Barry Holton's Trinity Tigers in deadlocking with the Rice Owls played the brand of fighting football flashed by the 1925 Trinity eleven that won over Baylor and Rice. The Tigers were inspired by the feeling they must atone for the reverses suffered at the hands of the Aggies and Mustangs.

Vandy Scouts There.

With three Vanderbilt university scouts in the stands, the Texas university Longhorns were not impressive in defeating the Phillips university Haymakers, 27-0. Coach "Do" Stewart used his second stringers throughout the first half, which ended in a scoreless tie.

Throughout the second half, the regulars, led by Capt. Mack Saxon, one of the conference's outstanding performers, experienced but little trouble in gaining ground, after "Wild Bill" Ford, sophomore from Dallas had intercepted a forward pass and raced 65 yards to a touchdown.

Incidentally, Ford is likely to see a considerable service, even after Ed Beular and Joe King have rounded in to good condition. He has shown quite a bit of aptitude in the gentle art of "taking out" an end, and is used mainly to run interference.

Coach Stewart will prime his Steers for the big battle of Saturday at Dallas against the Vanderbilt Commodores, and the Longhorns should put up a great battle against Dan McMugin's charges.

In 1923, Stewart's first year at Texas, the Longhorns, led by Oscar Eckhardt, trounced the Commodores 16-0 at Dallas. The victory was gained over a mighty team that boasted such stars as Romar, Hek Wakefield, all-American ends, the Longhorns playing one of the best games in history of Texas university.

Eckhardt, the greatest of a powerful backfield composed of Bobby Robertson, Capt. Lane Tynes and Jim Marley, is now head football coach of West Texas State Teachers college, Canyon.

Coach Matty Bell's T. C. U. Horned Frogs and Coach Morley Jennings' Baylor Bruins rested in preparation for their battle Tuesday at Dallas. This game will open tho conference season for both schools. Defeat will mean practical elimination from the championship race. The Frogs are concluded a slight advantage.

The Arkansas Razorbacks, the seventh southwest conference eleven, gave a good account of themselves Saturday, though beaten 13-6 by the Oklahoma university Sooners at Norman, Okla.

RACING DRIVER HURT AS AUTO LEAVES TRACK

Bob Cussick Drives His Car Through Fence At T-O Grounds

Robert Cussick, driving a Dodge special speedster, lost the third finger of his left hand, suffered serious body bruises and narrowly escaped fatal consequences when his car jumped the track at the Texas-Oklahoma fair grounds Sunday afternoon crashed through the fence and turned completely over. In going through the fence, the speeding car tore away several sections of lumber and carried a section of the fence along for some distance before turning over.

At the time of the accident Cussick was warming up his car for the main race of the day, the 15-mile race.

Cussick was rushed to the Wichita Falls general hospital in an ambulance and it was there found necessary to amputate the third finger of his left hand. This finger was nearly severed in the accident at the race track.

Cussick lives at Estilline, Texas, and was driving for Rex Edmonds.

The results of the races Sunday afternoon were as follows:

Ten-mile race: First, Fred Frost Miller special, time 10 minutes, [illegible] seconds $200; second, Rex Edmonds, Fronty special, $125; third, George Sanders, Miller special, $75; fourth, Chester Gardner, Gardner special $25.

Hornsby after talking with Haines sent Haines to the showers and signalled for Alexander who had been warming up in the bull pen. Alexander seemed to have plenty of stuff on the ball.

Denied At Headquarters.

Bill Hanley is almost as well known at republican national conventions as he is in his native state of Oregon, where, between running two of the biggest ranches to be found in all the northwest, he exercises his gifts of organization and leadership in politics. Some years ago he had working for him a ranch hand who was popularly regarded as a half-wit. Hanley figured, though, that the man had exactly the sort of mentality which suited him for ministering to the wants and whims of young calves and kept him on the payroll.

There came a day when the deficient-minded one disappeared while at work on a range in deserate Rawhide canyon, sixty miles from anywhere at all. When he failed to return the theory was advanced, and accepted, that the missing man had frozen to death in a storm.

Months later, Mr. Hanley, coming out of his office on the main street of the town of Burns, was astonished to behold the supposedly deceased approaching him. As they told me you were dead. I didn't believe it at first but I kept hearing it so often I finally decided it must be true. I'm glad to know it was all a lie."

"Huh," grunted the restored one. "Why, Mister Hanley, I knowed it was a lie the very first time I heard it."

Faith Is Cornerstone On Which To Build One's Life

310 IN CLASS GIVEN LESSON

Judge Kay Illustrates To Hearers How To Live Best Life

"Faith," what is its meaning? What is its import?

"I don't know; all I do know is that I and my fellow man, beating forward and onward, feel in our hearts that somewhere beyond the floodgates of life there awaits us a glory that it wouldn't be safe for us to know about now, and that that great reward is worth every effort, every toil, every suffering that the human heart can undergo."

Such was the summarization of Judge John C. Kay's Sunday morning address in which he spoke on "faith" and its meaning. His address in full, heard by 310 persons, was as follows:

"The great leader, Moses, had been beating along through the wilderness with that group of Jews that he brought out of Egypt, carrying them to a land that was called 'The Promised Land.' They had reached a place in the wilderness fairly close to the land they sought, so Moses got together a group of men and told them to go up and look at that land, as spies; find out what kind of country, what kind of fighting people, what kind of crops, and whether there is any firewood, to find out all about it and come back and report. They went up there and stayed forty days, which is a good while to stay in the enemy's country. And, they came back and made their report, which was in the main correct and a truthful report, and yet, like every other committee, they disagreed among themselves. You know, if I ever appoint a committee I am just going to put one man on it. Whatever else he does, he can't get tied up.

"The biggest group of these fellows said: That's a terrible country. Why, they have got giants up there. We never saw such men in our lives, and a great walled town, and there is an awful lot of them, and we can't begin to think about going up there to conquer such a people. But, there were two fellows, Joshua and Caleb, together with the other, had brought back a lot of fruit from that country, great clusters of grapes, and figs, and other fruits, and they said: 'Oh, that's a good country and, furthermore, we are just able, plenty able, to go right up there and take it over.' Now, these fellows who said that, were the only two that ever saw that country again. It is a human story. It is a story that could happen now, and would happen in Wichita Falls. So, the next time you say, 'I can't do something.' 'It can't be done,' why, let's put it a little different to that and say: 'A man like I am can't do it.' That's what you mean.

In Pullman Cars.

"I was out in the mountains of New Mexico in 1916, I believe at the time the United States sent the army to Mexico, before we entered the World war. I saw great flocks of Santa Fe trains carrying soldiers from New Mexico to El Paso in the trouble with Mexico, and I saw these mighty trains beating their way over Glorieta Pass with these soldiers in Pullman cars, and I thought about something. Away back yonder in 1846 or 1847, there was a general in the United States army, perhaps not a general then, who took nine hundred men on horseback, with blankets and skillets, and coffee pots, and a knife and fork with no Red Cross, no tents, no supplies, no food, no cannon, living off the country as they went, going over that same Pass that these soldiers were riding in the Pullman cars, and with that nine hundred men, captured and held until this day, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, California and a part of Colorado. Stephen Kearney. What a man he was! Now, when he caputred Las Vegas, he just left one man there to hold it. I wouldn't think that that was much of a compliment to my town, if the enemy came through and just left one man, but that was a compliment to that man. But, before he left there, he talked to these folks and said. "Now if you don't do everything that this man tells you to do, and leave undone everything he tells you not to do, I will come back here and hang every last one of you." and Kearny was a fellow that people would listen to. And, the same way all the way through. It shows what a straight, strong, competent man can do, when we think about what he did. There are a lot of fellows that couldn't have done that. I know one that couldn't.

"It is a great thing to have faith and courage. You know, when I think about those two words, I always fel like I am talking about a couple of twin sisters. They are so closely related, there is so little difference between them, so much in comomn between them that I don't hardly know when I am talking about faith, and when I am talking about courage. But, we say, there is no opportunity for that now. I think most men have thought, as I have often thought, that it would have been better for me, if I had lived in some earlier age; in some golden age when the knight and his horse went, clad in armor, to banish that which was wrong and establish that which was right. It seems to me, sometimes, that the kind of things that I am doing sink into insignificance when I think about Kearny and Christopher Columbus and many others, who went out right into the blue and made their opportunity, and saved it, and staid with it. But, it is the fellow that had that kind of courage that gets into history, and that kind of faith.

"Most of the schools boys will remember the story of the founding of Rome, with Romulus and Remus. Now, all Remus did was to sit around and laugh and poke fun at the walls, and he said: "That wall is going to fall down." "That wall is weak and looks like children had built it," but Romulus lived on, and his walls lived on in history, and Remus is lost to view.

A Problem Age.

"Now, are we living in such a grasping age, such a commercial age as the preachers like to call it, although they don't know anything about commercial matters, 'tis greater in Texas than has removed from any other section could get in this commercial, grasping age, is there no opportunity now for faith and for courage and for high endeavor? You know, I sometimes thought that maybe the old heroic virtues had departed from the hearts of men. I sometimes thought that with the armor of the knight and with the footsteps of his horse, there had gone, also into oblivion, the strong heart and the strong courage of the hero. But, when our soldiers went to Europe and crawled out of those trenches at the zero hour in that flood of explosion and of fire, I said that no more heroic knights ever rode into the pages of history than these, and that manhood, strong, courageous, faithful, loyal manhood, remains among men as it always has been among them, and must always remain.

"Now faith, and courage as well, there is involved in the idea of faith and courage a goal, some far high places, to which we hope to come; some fine fruit of the long, vigilant toil, and even some recompense, some reward for the effort.

"These people was promised a promised land. What is a promised land? Right here is where I want to stick down something that I think is worth remembering for all of us. I think many of you do, as I do sometimes, think that I haven't accomplished much in the world, that I am not highly regarded, that my fellow citizens think but little about me or of me. Now, right there is your opportunity. I think the finest citizen, and the finest hero among our people, is that man who, in poverty, looking for his daily bread with the sweat of his brow nevertheless remains honest, sober, courageous, loyal and faithful to himself, and to his government and to his Master. I think that man is the greatest hero of them all. And, that man who, without money, without much education, without influence in the community, who nevertheless goes along and keeps a roof over his family, rears his children to be loyal to the government, and to reverence God, has done as great a work as he who first built the Roman walls. We have got heroes all about us, if we would look for them and find them. The trouble with a lot of us fellows is that we want to follow at the heels of the great and the wealthy, and then miss and overlook the real one and sinew of our land.

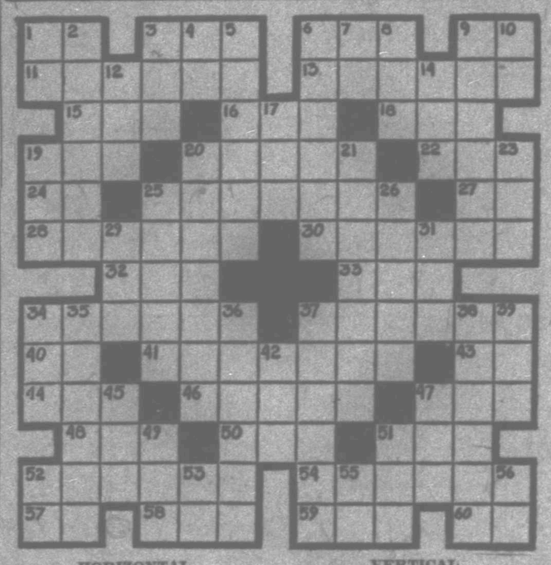

"I hope that the time shall never come when I, myself, or any descendent of mine shall fail to respect, or to know, or to love the common people of the country, because the common people of the country are the country. Now, if a politician was to say that, it might not mean much, but it means something when I say it, I think. Then, my faith is in such people. The government of the United States, the government of Texas, the welfare of our people, doesn't depend upon the voice or the power of the great or the strong, but it depends, and must always depend, upon the faith in that government of the average, ordinary man. So that the Savior, when he was here, went to all classes and conditions of men, and taught, and tried to teach them to have faith in Him.

"The Savior should have gotten more advertising, as advertising went in that day, if he had taken a journey to Rome to see Caesar, or eastward to see the Asiatic potentates, or the Grecians, but he went out here among his own common people. He found the woman at the well. He goes to a wedding down in Canaan. He goes to where a brother had died. He touches a blind man, and all sorts and conditions of men, the highest and the lowest, and learned that they, the great and the small, might have faith in Him.

The Price of Faith

"What good does faith in God do a man in this life? Now, leaving the Elysian fields out of it, for a moment, leaving that reward that awaits us beyond the bright gates of Eden, what effect does it have in the life and in the conditions of a man right here in this world? You know, I don't believe that many religious men fail spiritually. Methodist, as I am, I haven't saw many real, strong, true Christians fall down. At lot of people think that the Methodist church teaches falling from grace as a doctrine. They never did. It isn't a doctrine of the church. It is just a red lantern to warn of danger to humanity and to the church. What good does faith, then, do a man right here? It keeps his eyes on the goal. It keeps his eyes on the blue prints of life. Faith teaches us to know the true reward from the false; to know the true wages from the false wages, and to know the true virtue from the false virtue. You known, I can't understand much—I don't know the deep and mighty meaning of that word "faith." All that I know is that I had my fellowmen, beating forward and onward, feel in our hearts somewhere, somehow, beyond the floodgates of this life, there awaits us a glory that it wouldn't be even safe for us to know about now, and that the great reward is worth every effort, every toil, every suffering that the human heart can undergoo if only he can say at last, "I have finished the fight. I have made a good fight, and I see before me the wide open gates and beyond the river, the wages that I have honestly and fairly earned."

It Takes Whole Day To Get One Bath In Hotel

Tiny Balkan Resort Draws Critical Comment Of Girl Writer

BY JESSIE HENDERSON,
Special Dispatch to The Record News.

Copyright, 1926, by The Consolidated Press Association.

RAGUSA, Oct. 10.—If you want to get back to the days before the war, come to Ragusa. This Jugo-Slavian town ought to be picked up bodily, with its foreign colony, and put into some museum for the education and edification of both the people who can't remember what things looked like before the grand cataclysm and those too young to know.

The setting, to begin with, is perfect. Mountains in the background—locally known as the Alps—shoot up in straight, cubist lines so arranged in angles and planes as to delight the heart of a modern artist. The Adriatic is blue as a star sapphire, shading into delicate turquoise and tones of jade around the edges. Luxuriant trees, principally chestnuts add a line of rich green which rests the gaze on its way to the bare and stony heights beyond.

From Gravioso, the port, to the tip of the highest Alp is a glorious upward sweep from deep sea to deep sky and the scenic climax is reached in the Dominican monastery perched so far away on the loftiest pinnacle that its buildings look like dice boxes against the cloudless heavens.

Its enough to make an American go-getter hotel man or summer resort booster weep, all this waste space and empty shore line. Not but what Radusa has hotels, it possesses one certain hotel which is its chief qualification for museum membership.

Before the war there was in Ragusa a very doggy hotel at which you couldn't stay unless you had a lot of money. It had for example, and it still has, a type of bath room which is worth a day's visit. In fact it takes about a day to get a bath.

First you are conducted down endless corridors, affording a fine view of the local Alps and of the Adriatic. Then you are ushered into a room about the size of Madison Square Garden in the center of which is a bath tub as big as a swimming pool at the Y. M. C. A. The polite attendant fetches armsful of wood which he thrusts into a large stove. Lighting the pyre he stands back with a satisfied air and tells you that in an hour or an hour and a quarter the water will be warm.

Perhaps the bath intrigued them, but anyway its to this hotel that the Germans have flocked. Some came during the war, and a lot of them just afterward. They are the Germans with more or less fixed incomes, the size of which has diminished with the mark's depreciation. They live in the expensive rooms, for which they pay about 80 cents per day, and most of them are wearing dresses and suits of the year 1913.

The dresses of 1913 weren't so bad, either. Long skirts, of course, a good many linens and striped silks; and rather rounded necks, but somewhat high. A modern flapper would suffocate and choke in them, of course, and she would not know what to make of the all-enveloping colored silk petticoat. Probably she'd think these styles had a lot to do with bringing on the war. At any rate possession of the genuine, authentic clothes of a world that will never again be the same is the first reason why Ragusa ought to be popped into a museum.

The second reason is that if the war had gone the other way, a lot of Americans, with the dollar depreciated to the value of a nickel, would be wearing petticoats and linen frocks and complaining about the soup in, say, some quiet town of Yucatan. That Ragusa hotel is full of many things. Chiefly of lessons—and of ghosts.

ELECTRA

MEETING AT CHURCH

The W. M. U. of the First Baptist church held their all day meeting at the church Monday, with Mrs. A. F. McCormick and Byron T. Johnson in charge of the Royal Service program. The program dealt with the tenth anniversary of the Margaret Fund, which is for the purpose of educating the foreign missionaries' children. Fern and potted plants decorated the church and "Ten Anniversary" in large letters were placed above table, on which sat an angel food cake with 10 pink candles. The entire East Circle took part in the program, with Mrs. E. M. Francis as Mother of the W. M. U. represented each church in America, while Mesdames C. E. Schlemeyer, Mark Love, L. Gillum, Byron T. Johnson and Ammonette, came in as daughters of Foreign Land. Mrs. Dick Taylor represented "Electra." Each daughter carried a letter which was read to the Mother church.

At the conclusion of the program, Mrs. P. W. Tubb came in from the kitchen and invited all to lunch, with the North Circle being hostess. One hundred and twenty-five plates were served.

After lunch the group again assembled in the auditorium and the meeting opened with a sing-song, after which Mrs. E. M. Francis, the president, took charge, asking for reports from all six circles, with each responding nicely. There was a resolution passed for the society to begin gathering funds for the new pews of the church, also to help the Southfield Mission so that they may continue their worship during the winter months; their church being badly in need of repairs. Plans for a County Workers meeting to be held at the church Tuesday week, Oct. 19th, were taken up, and the menu to be served discussed. The meeting was closed with a prayer by the pastor.

METHODIST LADIES

9-INCH RAIN FLOODS CITY

Texarkana Reports Downpour of Cloudburst Size Early Sunday

TEXARKANA, Oct. 10. (AP) Negro residents of Texarkana Sunday hunted through lowlands in the western portion of the city for their household property, scattered far and wide early Sunday morning when the heaviest rainfall in 43 years, totalling 9.25-inch, fell here.

Police and firemen, who patrolled the flooded area of 10 or 12 blocks during the early morning hours, rescued 20 negroes marooned by high water, which swept through lower floors of homes, damaging furniture and store stocks, but without taking toll of lives.

Accompanied by light winds, which threatened for a time to blow harder, the rainfall started shortly before midnight Saturday, a beating, driving shower, slackened about 2 a. m., then, at 3 a. m. Sunday, began again with renewed vigor and continued until about 5 a. m.

False Reports.

When a report was telephoned police station that Mrs. Alice Baker and her small baby, white, were held captives in their home, with rushing waters carrying beds and other articles about the house and smaller things away, Assistant Fire Chief Agee sought boats with which to rescue them.

This report, however, proved unfounded on investigation and officials in the flooded district confined their activities to preventing loss of life and rescuing stranded families, held in their homes by the water, most of which was overflowed from a small creek running through the western section of the city.

Down-town streets were lined with water from curb to curb and dozens of stranded automobiles bore witness to depth, which varied in high spots of the city from one and one-half to two feet and in lower portions, reached maximum depth of six and eight feet, flooding several stores near the creek.

Flood Danger Small.

Danger of Red river overflowing and flooding farm lands near the city was negligible, C. M. Christian, engineer, here, who designed levees along the river, said late Sunday afternoon as water in the flooded area of Texarkana began falling. The river, which has been at flood stage for the past week, fell two feet Sunday afternoon.

H. S. Brashear, weather observer, whose records are complete from 1883 to present, declared the nearest approach to Sunday morning's rainfall was August 15, 1915, when 5.25 inches fell. Old timers of the city, many of whom have liver here 50 and more years, said never had rainfall been as heavy in the city's history.

ONE DEATH DURING STORM AT SHERMAN.

SHERMAN, Texas, Oct. 10.(AP) One death and several hair raising escapes from death resulted here Saturday afternoon and night when a torrential rainfall officially measured at 6.87 inches fell in this city and vicinity.

E. W. Baynie, Jr., 16, was drowned at 10:30 Saturday night when an automobile in which he and Ray Wible, 20, overturned in a creek which they were attempting to cross. Wible managed to reach and bank, but Baynie was swept downstream about 500 yards, his body was found early this morning by a searching party organized in Sherman. The two boys lived about three miles from Sherman.

A. W. Davidson, 75, and J. C. Bucy, 75, narrowly escaped death when a wagon yard here which they had entered with their burro team was inundated during the downpour. Davidson swam to safety, while Bucy clung to the roof ofa shanty in the wagon yard and floated from the yard with it, being rescued later. Davidson and Bucy were travelling from Kansas to Dallas.

Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Young of Guthrie, Okla., were rescued from a tourist park about midnight.

As a result of the high water, flour mills here have their basements flooded. The Red river valley fair was rained out.

FERGUSON

close, and the sides nearly equal, the power of a minority was firmly impressed at that time.

This apparently to the veterans in official life mean one of two things. And it might be said that Dan Moody has not seen fit to issue any warning to anybody along the line, but the side-line observers see now that the senators of the 40th legislation will be one of the two alternative boats.

Senators representing their districts aside from factionalism and free from a group-tendency created by the Ferguson hang-over.

Or minority and majority groups, each dedicating its efforts and thought to fighting over again and again the old battles of a former day.

If there is an organized minority, then the only solution facing the senate is an organized majority, the observers point out. This appears to some as more important than a surface division, because, it is emphasized, with members of the senate committing their success to the outcome of an opposition policy, then their achievements, by their own choice, will be what they can wrest from a majority whom they have forced into coherence.

Jim Still There.

Those who watched the battles of personalities and issues revolving as all the battles of recent Texas political life have moved, about the personality of the former Texas governor, predict that the issues which has fed itself from the 12 years Ferguson has been before the people, will yet flash and crackle before it sputters into the embers of a forgotten issue.

DIES FROM FALL.

DUBUQUE, Ia., Oct. 10.—The 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Zimmerman, farmers, died in Monticello hospital an hour after he fell head first into a tub of kerosene which was standing near a threshing outfit in a field. Death was due to asphyxiation.

AGED LAWYER DIES.

SAN ANTONIO, Oct. 10. (AP)—John W. Mecham, 73, U. S. district attorney for the eastern district of Texas, 1885-1889, and later practicing lawyer in Houston died in a hospital here today after a long illness. He was a native of Missouri.

BURKBURNETT

The marriage of W. C. Terrell of Anson, Texas, and Miss Cecelia Tomlinson of Petrolia, took place Sunday about the noon hour at the home of the bride's sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Kent.

The couple left that afternoon for Anson, where a brief honeymoon was spent and then went to Arizona, where he is employed in the copper mines of that state.

The guests of the wedding party included a number of friends and relatives. Among the latter was Mr. and Mrs. Pepper of Petrolia, parents of the bride; also the Thedford brothers of Wichita Falls, special friends of the groom. A rare collection of choice gifts from the friends assembled bespoke their high esteem for the young couple.

The bride has spent some time in Burkburnett and was employed in the office of the Atlas O. and G. company on south Avenue B. Her many friends are extending to her and her fine young husband every good wish for future happiness and prosperity.

MOTHERS' CLUB MEETS.

The Burkburnett Mothers' club held its first meeting of club-year Tuesday afternoon when the program was conducted by Mrs. Frank Kelley and consisted of three excellent phases of child study and instruction.

The first subject was presented and discussed by Mrs. A. L. Lohofner covering the choice of literature for children.

The second paper was on a series of "Rhymes," by Robert Lois Stevenson, given by Mrs. Herman Dodson; and the program was concluded with a third paper and discussion by Mrs. Carl Cowles on the "Use of Pictures in the Home."

Each subject was one of unusual interest and the young mothers found it specially helpful and entertaining in their study of child life in their respective homes.

Those present were Mesdames R. C. Tevis, Rex Smith, E. R. Peevey, Carl Cowles, Frank Kelley, A. H. Lohoefner, Herman Dodson, Paul Brownlee, Marry Lamb, Edward J. Williams, Coe Carliker, J. M. McFarlane and Joe Majors.

PRESBYTERIAN LADIES.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church met in regular session Monday afternoon with Mrs. William Gage, the president, in the chair.

The hour was given over to business plans and matters including chiefly details in the arrangements for the "down town enterprise" to be given on October 22 and 23 at the corner of Avenue D and East Main street in Mrs. Bales store building.

There will be a splendid dinner served Friday at noon.

All as a church benefit for the interior improvement of the church. A large collection of donated articles will be sold at auction and otherwise, each article bearing the name of the store or company donating it.

Other booths will contain a dollar bazaar exhibits. High grade fancy work practical garments, each to be sold for a dollar or less. Just the place to buy for Christmas giving, useful and beautiful gifts.

The boys too will have a department in pop corn and candy for the children visitors.

The auction sale will afford much merriment as well as bargains.

Everybody invited to visit Presbyterian ladies "filling station" on the corner of Avenue D and East Main on the date mentioned for a good dinner and a good time.

UNIVERSITY CLUB.

The University Study club was royally entertained this week at the home of Mrs. Russell Chamberlain in South Burkburnett.

An interesting series of papers on the study course of South America was given by Mesdames G. R. Kincaid, Bob Gilchrist and J. A. Adams.

During the social hour the hostess favored her guests with a delicious plate luncheon, who were the following members: Mesdames Rex Smith, J. M. Pogue, J. E. Haynes, Bob Gilchrist, W. R. Hill, J. C. Adams, Ed Williams, Glenn Kincaid, Robt. Tevis, W. D. Utts, R. D. Cunningham and E. L. Blum.

Dr. H. G. Moore of the Presbyterian church is attending the meeting of the Texas Synod in session at Vernon.

There will be a call meeting of the members of the Cemetery Association committee Sunday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock at the First Baptist church.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. McCarney of Nocona were recent visitors in the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Messer on East Main street.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson returned Monday to their home in Alvord, Texas, after a visit with Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Messer in this city.

Dr. W. S. Adams has returned from a protracted stay in Chicago, where he attended medical lectures in specialist work.

Mrs. Paul Stemple of California is a welcome visitor among former neighbors and friends in this city this week. Owing to rainy seasons she was forced to leave her car at Childress after making the long journey without delay overland from California.

Mrs. Lee Cauthorne, who has been a surgical patient in the Wichita Falls hospital, was returned to her home in Burlingtown Thursday, in the Collier ambulance.

Don Ferguson and family spent a short while in the home of their relatives, Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Cunningham, while en route from Dewey, Okla., to California.

The original firm of Park and Tilford was established in 1849 with a capital of $150 but the present company was incorporated Aug. 6, 1923. The company has a perpetual charter to operate retail stores, singly or in chain. The company manufactures and sells at retail and wholesale, packaged groceries, candy, perfumery, cigars and other products. Two high grade retail stores are operated and the concern has a large interest in the Vivaudou Perfumery company and in the whiskey inventory of the former Overholt distillery which is distributed for medicinal purposes.

The Schulte interests acquired control of Park and Tilford in August 1925. The concern has a chocolate candy plant with a capacity production of 15,000,000 pounds annually, is a large importer of Havana cigars and a distributor of domestic brands. It is agent for two British cigarette makers and has an important division engaged in the manufacture of dyes under the Tintex processes. It operates its own coffee plant, tea plant, olive oil and spice plant and sells numerous other products under its own label, packed by the company or made especially for it.

Capital stock consists of 200,000 shares of no par value. Funded debt includes $600,000 in real estate morigages due after 1929 and a 6 per cent bond issue of $4,240,-158 and current liabilities $277,-256, leaving $3,962,902 net working capital. There were no bank loans.

No dividends have been paid on the stock of the present company to date. Net income for the first half of 1926 amounted to $177,582 or the equivalent of 88 cents a share. The Vivaudou stock held by the company was bought at about one-third present prices. It will require a year or two yet to dispose of the Overholt whiskey and only then will the profit from this investment be taken into the parent company's accounts.

Victor Hugo's apartments in the Place des Vosges, Paris, now a museum, are to have 250,000 francs spent upon them by the Municipal council.
