Kurds, Saddam agree

■ Guerrillas and Saddam agree on democracy for Iraq and autonomy for Kurdish minority, rebel leader says.

Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Kurdish guerrillas and President Saddam Hussein's government have reached "broad agreement" on full democracy for Iraq and autonomy for the Kurdish minority, rebel leaders said Saturday.

Massoud Barzani, leader of the Kurdish Democratic Party, told reporters that both sides had agreed on free elections throughout Iraq, freedom of the press, political pluralism and separation of the executive, legislative and judicial bodies.

But how these were to be achieved and key details of Kurdish autonomy remained unresolved. Saddam had earlier promised greater freedoms and a multiparty democracy to his people, but progress has been slow.

Barzani, who heads the largest Kurdish rebel group, has been negotiating with Saddam's government for the past two weeks.

There was no offical comment from the Iraqi government, but Barzani's remarks were reported at length by the state-run Iraqi News Agency.

The reports were greeted with skepticism by Kurdish leaders in London.

"I think these leaders are running after a mirage," said Shafiq Qazzaz, secretary of the Free Kurdish Campaign. "I don't believe it. It's just not possible."

Qazzaz and Muntaz Mufti, president of the Kurdish Human Rights Organization, said they did not believe democracy was possible under Saddam.

Kurds have long accused Saddam of reneging on earlier promises and of using genocidal policies against their people.

Asked why Kurds should believe Saddam this time, Barzani told reporters here: "Because both of us, we've got very hard experience that war is not the solution to the matter."

Barzani said talks were continuing and that he hoped

Air show lesson in history of flight

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The history of flight, more or less, is at most any airport.

And today, there is both levity and seriousness in that living history that is represented in aircraft at the Southwest Air Fair & Expo at Odessa's Schlemeyer Air Field. Flying resumes at 1 p.m.

Jon Baumann, a Midland cotton farmer, flew his classic 1947 Cessna 120 "tail-dragger" to show it off to the judges.

Across the way from his gentle, two-seat airplane, designed for leisurely flying, was an ominous olive-drab flying weapon called the A-10 Thunderbolt "Warthog." The Grumman "Warthog" is a military attack plane designed to destroy tanks and other armored tools of war with cannon and missiles.

Baumann, the cotton farmer, kind of grinned.

"It would make a good spray plane," he jested. "Make a strafing pass at the rabbits and spray the insects."

His farming father, Ervin Baumann, figured that "You'd get respect in that plane with the Gatling gun."

Willis wins election to MISD board

By David Morris
Staff Writer

With less than 10 percent of the district's registered voters casting ballots, Gary Willis defeated Jerry Weant in Saturday's runoff election for the District 6 school board seat.

Willis

Weant, who garnered 399 — or 44 percent — of the 917 votes cast, blamed his defeat on low voter participation.

"You win some and you lose some," he said. "Unfortunately, not enough people turned out to help my cause."

Only 9.3 percent of the 9,825 voters in District 6 went to the polls Saturday, the Midland County Elections Administration Office reported.

Willis, who captured 518 — or 56 percent — of the votes cast, said he was excited about the prospect of bringing "positive change" to the Midland Independent School District.

"I would like for the school board to re-focus on the education we want our kids to have and be sure we are allocating effectively the limited taxpayer dollars that are available to these schools," he said.

Willis, a nine-year Midland resident with two children enrolled in MISD, said voters may have favored him because of his teaching experience. The financial vice president for Eddins-Walcher Co. in Midland, Willis is a former Dallas and

American troops seem like angels to Bangladeshis

CHITTAGONG, Bangladesh (AP) — Since ancient times, the Bengali people have been known for their poetic manner of speaking. This week, impoverished survivors of a killer cyclone taught the Pentagon a thing or two about language.

The U.S. military operation to provide sustenance for survivors of the April 30 storm was originally called Operation Productive Effort. It sounded, as one young American officer observed, "like a name generated by a computer."

By Thursday, when the operation began in earnest, villagers were greeting food-bearing U.S. Marines and sailors with cries of "Faresta, Faresta!" — "Angel, Angel!" in the Bengali language.

Saturday, the task force commander, Marine Corps Maj. Gen. Henry Stackpole, said Washington had renamed the mission Operation Sea Angel.

"I think that's pretty neat," Stackpole said.

He said that the impetus for change may have come from a Bangladeshi general who referred to the American troops as "angels from the sea."

Midlanders' grocery bills rank 2nd to Odessa among 25 Texas cities

■ Although residents' food bills may be high, Midland's cost of living is just below the national average, according to a new study.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Although grocery bills in Midland rank second only to Odessa among Texas cities due to transportation mark-ups, the overall cost of living here is just below the national average — and getting lower — according to a new study.

An American Chamber of Commerce Researchers Association quarterly report out of Kentucky lists Midland as the state's sixth most costly city in which to live. The report was released this month.

Twenty-five Texas cities were ranked in the survey, which compares grocery, housing, utility, transportation and health-care costs during the fourth quarter of 1990.

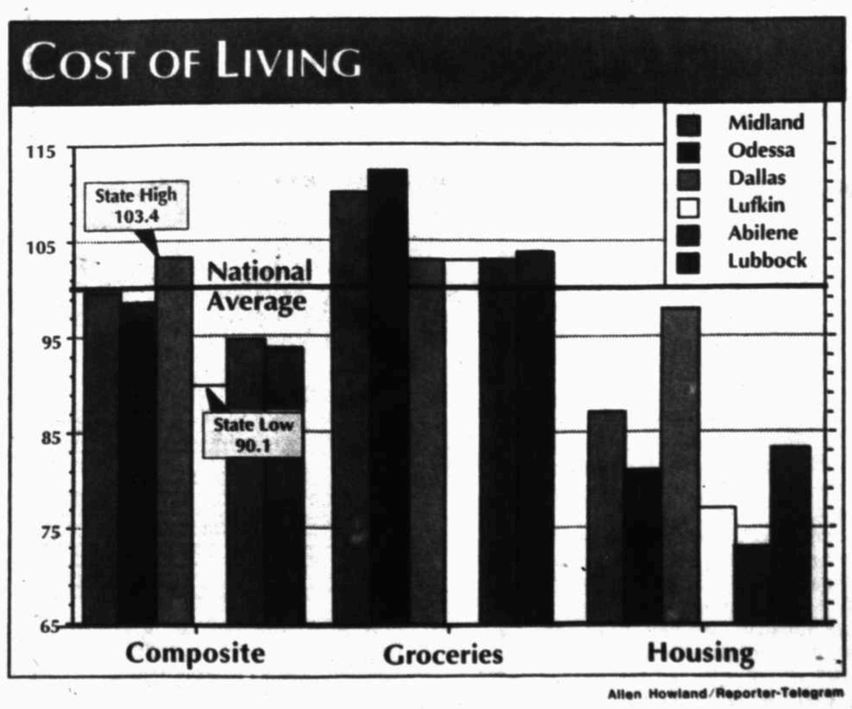

Using a formula measuring how a city stacks up against 293 cities nationwide, Midland's overall living cost was 99.8 percent of average.

The figure was an improvement from the fourth quarter of 1989, when Midland's living cost rated 103.6 percent and ranked second in the state behind Dallas.

Although faring more favorably nationwide in 1990, housing, medical and especially grocery costs were responsible for Midland's high state ranking.

In a cost comparison of 27 grocery items, Midland rated 110.3 percent of the Troops surround prison after inmates' battle

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Troops were locked in a standoff Saturday with inmates at a state prison, where a bloody battle between rival drug gangs left 18 people dead and at least eight hurt.

The units surrounded the Tamaulipas prison, where officials said fighting broke out Friday night after a prisoner apparently tried to kill another inmate described as a Colombian drug lord. They said prisoners fought for three hours with guns, knives and Molotov cocktails.

Silvio Brussolo Torres, an official with the Mexican Federal Judicial Police, said authorities had planned to enter the prison, but did not elaborate. They did not say whether they intended to storm the structure at some point.

The police called in a commando squad known as the Zorros, or Foxes, said sheriff's Lt. S.R. Garcia from Cameron County, across the border in Texas. The Foxes violently put down a mutiny at another Mexican prison in December 1988.

At least five Mexican navy platoons, army troops and state and federal police were also dispatched to the prison, which is in a residential area on the western edge of Matamoros.

But the authorities made no immediate move to seize the facility by force. The prison was calm Saturday, and no additional violence was reported, although one prison official described the situation as "tense and nervous."

"The feeling is that there is not enough food inside to hold out for a long time," said Don Wells, the U.S. consul in Matamoros, which is just across the Rio Grande from Brownsville, Texas.

But prison officials late Saturday allowed people to bring food and water to the inmates, some of whom had begged for something to eat or drink during the hot afternoon. Many relatives of prisoners had gathered outside the facility.

U.S. officials were monitoring the situation, said Wells. About 30 Americans are in the prison on drug charges, two believed to be women, he said. U.S. officials were not being allowed inside the prison.

Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez and his deputies were stationed on both international bridges from Matamoros to Brownsville to keep possible escapees from entering the United States.

Mexican authorities in Matamoros said the trouble began Friday evening after one prisoner, German Yepez, tried to shoot another prisoner, reputed drug lord Olivero Chavez Araujo, 33.

The assailant was killed immediately by Chavez's armed bodyguards — also inmates — and his body was impaled on a post and hoisted for display in the prison courtyard, the Cameron County sheriff's department has learned.

A doctor allowed inside the prison on Saturday said Chavez, who was grazed in the jaw with a bullet, did not want to leave the prison for a hospital. The doctor, Salvador Reyes Martinez, said he spoke with two other people who suffered minor injuries.

In the fighting that followed the shooting, inmates set part of the crowded prison on fire and battled with weapons ranging from knives to machine guns.

The jail was designed for 250 people but holds about 1,200 male and female prisoners. Jesus Urquiza, prison director, said in addition to Mexicans, the prison also holds Americans, Salvadorans and Colombians, among others.

Garcia said there were "15 to 17 dead inmates" and that Mexican judicial police had removed some of the bodies from the prison. A Mexican official told reporters Saturday that there had been 18 deaths.

Officials said most of those who were slain died of beatings or knife wounds. The body of one victim viewed at a local funeral home by a reporter was burned beyond recognition.

Brussolo said the injured included a woman, and two of those hurt were in grave condition at a local hospital. Word on their condition was not immediately available.

The authorities said Yepez was apparently retaliating for the deaths of his brother and sister-in-law, William and Judith Botero, in Brownsville last week. The Boteros had just been released from the Tamaulipas prison after serving two-year drug sentences.

Brownsville-area police told reporters this week that the deaths were believed to be part of drug turf battles between Chavez and rival reputed drug baron Juan Garcia Abrego. They said Chavez was believed to be running a drug ring from inside the prison, using a cellular telephone.

Asked how the prisoners obtained weapons, Brussolo, of the Federal Judicial Police, said, "That's a question for the (prison) director, not for me."

Arturo Solis, correspondent for the Mexico City daily La Jornada, described the prison as one of Mexico's worst.

"They let the drug lords and the worst criminals run the prison. It's a very dangerous prison," he said. "The prisoners control the place."

Queen relaxes aboard yacht

MIAMI (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II took a break Saturday from the formalities of her state visit by cruising aboard her yacht on the aqua waters off the Florida Keys and visiting a historic fort.

Late Saturday, the queen and her husband, Prince Philip, toured Fort Jefferson, a Union prison camp in the Civil War.

The fort is on one of the most isolated points of land in the United States — the Dry Tortugas chain of coral islands about 70 miles west of Key West. They are accessible only by boat or seaplane.

Balmy weather and about 100 people greeted the queen. Wilhelmina Harvey, 79, mayor of Monroe County, gave her royal guest an eight-inch queen conch shell, a kind of seashell symbolic of the Keys. Harvey also gave the queen a certificate recognizing her as an honorary conch — a nickname for Keys natives.

Wearing a casual floral print dress, the queen spent several minutes at the fort's visitors center, then walked the interior perimeter of the fort with a ranger who explained its history.

Spectators included a group of school teachers from Key West who were spending the weekend exploring the Dry Tortugas.

"It was super and made the whole weekend for us," teacher Judd Wise said.

Marcela Rasa, a student with a middle school science club whose field trip coincided with the queen's visit, was less impressed.

"She looked ordinary," Marcela said. "I thought she was going to come in wearing her crown jewels."

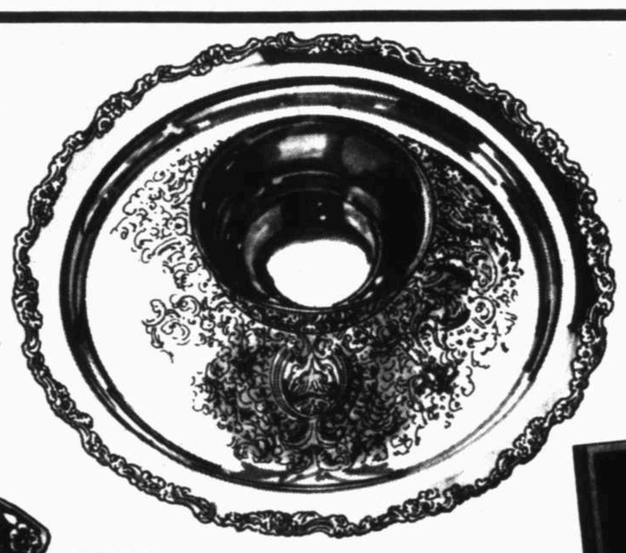

From Fort Jefferson, the queen and her entourage headed to Loggerhead Key for a picnic dinner.

When the queen gets back to royal business Monday in Tampa, she will knight Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, who led the rout of the Iraqi army in Kuwait.

On Friday night, the royal yacht was the venue for a lamb dinner for 60 guests, including former Presidents Reagan and Ford.

Three set themselves afire in South Korean protests

AP Laserphoto

Militant students hurt Molotov cocktails from behind barricades as they fight riot police Saturday in Seoul. The street battle followed a funeral rite at Seoul's Yonsei University for a university student killed by a police beating April 26.

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — More than 200,000 people staged violent nationwide protests on Saturday, the biggest demonstrations since President Roh Tae-woo came to power in 1988.

Three people set themselves on fire, one fatally, to protest the police slaying of a student last month.

Scores of people were believed injured in the protests but no total was available. It was also not known how many were arrested in the protests, reported in 81 cities and townships.

Tens of thousands of students and workers paralyzed the capital and major cities in violent nighttime fighting between riot police firing tear gas and protesters wielding firebombs, rocks and clubs.

In the southern city of Kwangju, violence broke out after 50,000 students, citizens and workers attended a street rally to honor 200 victims of the 1980 uprising against a martial law government.

Saturday's protests capped three weeks of violent unrest that has created Roh's most serious political crisis yet.

Dissident students, workers and opposition politicians are demanding the resignation of Roh's Cabinet. There has been speculation that Roh will reshuffle the Cabinet in coming days in response to the pressure by the protesters.

The government faces six elections around the country in the next 20 months, including the next presidential election, and polls have suggested that popularity of the government is at an all-time low.

Roh was elected in December 1987 in the first direct presidential elections in 16 years.

About 50,000 riot police were deployed nationwide Saturday, and military troops in Seoul remained on high alert. Police issued warrants for the arrest of 100 dissident and student leaders. The government charged protests were instigated by subversive, pro-Communist radicals and leftists.

To try to placate protesters after last month's beating death of a student, Roh fired the minister in charge of police, and five police officers have been charged in the death. But protesters are demanding the arrests of the former minister and the national police chief.

National Police Headquarters said Saturday's demonstrations were the largest since 1987 pro-democracy protests helped topple the authoritarian government of Chun Doo-hwan.

Crowd estimates varied, depending on the sources, from 200,000 to 400,000 nationwide.

In fighting around the nation, protesters firebombed a military bus, a police armored van and two civilian cars. Dozens of police cars were damaged by flying rocks and bottles, police reported.

In Seoul, at least 50,000 protesters staged street protests that turned the broad boulevards and fashionable downtown areas into battle zones.

The World

Fierce fighting erupted in Seoul Saturday when riot police firing tear gas blocked a funeral march for Kang Kyung-dae, the 20-year-old student beaten to death by police on April 26.

national average and ranked second-highest in Texas behind Odessa, which rated 112.4 percent.

Although Midland's average housing cost was 87.2 percent, it was high enough to place third in the state behind Dallas and Kerrville, with 98 percent and 88.4 percent ratings, respectively.

And, although utility rates here ranked 12th in Texas, they were 107.7 percent of the national average.

Midland's transportation costs — a combination of public transportation fares, automobile maintenance costs and fuel prices — placed toward the list's bottom. It placed 18th statewide and rated 96.3 percent of the national average.

Health care, although only 94.9 percent nationally, was higher here than in 17 other cities on the Texas list.

Under the miscellaneous column, which included items as diverse as eating out, bowling and alcoholic beverages, Midland ranked high statewide and nationally.

Miscellaneous activities in Midland cost 102.7 percent of the national average and placed fourth in Texas behind Wichita Falls, Beaumont and Houston.

Jerry Jones, Midland College business studies chairman, has studied the American Chamber of Commerce Researchers Association reports for years.

And Midland, he said, compared more favorably in 1990 than ever.

"At one point, we were well above average," he said. "It's somewhat comforting to see that we're more representative of the state as far as cost of living."

Although the city still rates high in certain areas such as groceries, marked up because of transportation costs, the numbers continue to fall, Jones said.

Midland's grocery costs in the fourth quarter of 1989, for example, were the highest in Texas and 113.2 percent of the national average.

"I think we've become more cost conscious," Jones said. "People are shopping around a little more and merchants are having to be more competitive."

But while Midland's overall living cost is moving down the list, Odessa's is moving up, going from a 98.3 percent rating in the 1989 report to 98.7 percent in 1990. Statewide, the Odessa cost of living went from ninth to seventh.

However, Jones said much of Odessa's movement on the list was caused by cross shopping between Midland and Odessa.

"The communities are becoming more closely aligned," he said. "There is an amazing amount of shopping between the two communities."

Janna King, Midland Chamber of Commerce president, said the living cost survey sometimes is used by residents looking to move to another community.

In almost every category, Midland's living cost topped that of Odessa, Abilene, Lubbock and Amarillo.

Abilene's overall living cost was 94.8 percent of the national average, Lubbock's was 93.7 percent and Amarillo's was 92.3 percent.

T-bone steaks, at $5.15 a pound, were second-least expensive in Midland compared to the other West Texas cities. They were most expensive in Abilene ($5.35) and least expensive in Lubbock ($5.11).

But Midlanders paid the most for ground beef ($1.63 a pound), compared to the least expensive: $1.49 a pound in Odessa.

Compared to residents in the other four cities, Midlanders paid the most for bacon ($2.90 a pound), milk ($1.53 a half gallon), potatoes ($2.82 for 10 pounds) and lettuce ($1.21 a head).

Amarillo had the cheapest bacon ($2.19); Lubbock the cheapest milk ($1.31) and lettuce (81 cents); and Abilene the cheapest potatoes ($1.97).

Odessans paid the most for tuna ($1.04 for 6.5 ounces), while the other cities paid about 76 cents for the same amount.

Chicken was cheapest in Midland, where it cost 73 cents a pound, compared to 83 cents a pound in Lubbock, where that amount of fowl was most expensive.

A carton of cigarettes cost $15.86 in Midland, second-highest behind Odessa, where a carton cost a penny more. The most inexpensive carton, $15.15, could be found in Abilene.

Coffee was most expensive in Odessa ($3.05 for 13 ounces), least expensive in Amarillo ($2.34), and second-highest in Midland ($2.98).

A two-bedroom unfurnished apartment went for an average $397 a month in Midland, $322 in Abilene and $430 in Lubbock.

Midlanders paid the least for tire balancing ($5.69 for one front tire) but the most to unbalance it by spending $1.38 for a gallon of unleaded gasoline.

Tire balancing was most expensive in Abilene ($6.50), while gas was cheapest in Lubbock ($1.30).

A trip to a Midland dentist cost $39.42, the highest among the West Texas cities, while it cost only $30.80 to see an Amarillo dentist, where a visit was least expensive.

A 1.5-liter bottle of wine, at $6.83, cost the most in Midland, while the same bottle could be bought in Abilene for $6.05.

Beer was a better buy in Midland at $3.49 a six-pack than in Lubbock, where it cost $4.51, but more expensive than in Amarillo, where it went for $3.31.

Only Amarillo had cheaper aspirin than Midland, selling for $3.93 and $4.45, respectively, for a 100-tablet bottle. It cost most to have a headache in Lubbock, where aspirin sold for $5.39.

(From 1A)

The menacing "Warthog" appeared as large as some World War II bombers.

Beyond Jon Baumann's docile Cessna and beyond a collection of antique, classic and experimental aircraft parked on grass and just beyond the formidable "Warthog" was another bit of history.

But more than that, it is a sister ship to the Electra in which aviatrix Amelia Earhart disappeared in the Pacific in 1937 during her planned flight around the world.

It is the restored aircraft, bearing British Royal Air Force (RAF) markings, that flew British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain to Germany in 1938 to negotiate with Adolf Hitler.

After the war, the Electra served as an airliner in Canada and eventually was bought by actress Margaret O'Brien. Grand Prairie physician Dr. James R. Almand now owns the aircraft, the only flying Electra in the United States and which is actively sought by the Smithsonian Institution's Air & Space Museum.

On the flight-line, a former U.S. Army Eighth Air Force pilot, Bill Stepp, who flew the North American P-51 Mustangs over Germany during World War II, looked over the array of new and old military and civilian airplanes.

As a Depression-era youngster flying a kite on a hill, he was mesmerized by Army Air Corps biplanes flying overhead.

"That's all it took to whet your whistle," Stepp recalled. "I think every kid has a desire to fly."

"I was lucky," Stepp figured. "I was from a very poor family growing up in the Depression years and used Uncle Sam to foot the bill for me to be a pilot."

Privately owned World War II "warbirds," mostly monoplanes and biplanes, such as the Boeing Stearman PT-17, the BT-13 Vultee "Vibrator," and the SNJ showed up for the air show, as did Air Force jet fighters.

Dropping in, too, was an Aussie, airplane designer George Markey, who trucked in and then flew his single-place UltraBat aerobatic aircraft.

The $25,000 kit aircraft, he claimed, costs "one quarter of the price of its competition," including the Pitts Special biplane.

The UltraBat is powered by a Rotax snowmobile engine and is largely made of composite materials, including fiberglass.

Markey's lightweight pusher-engine aircraft is designed to turn quickly in aerobatic maneuvers because the pilot, engine and fuel are at the center of gravity where the wing joins the fuselage.

"The reason why the aeroplane flies so adeptly is because the engine, fuel and the pilot are centered, so just the light bits (the nose and tail) stick out," said the 60-year-old Markey. "It goes around quick."

'The reason why the aeroplane flies so adeptly is because the engine, fuel and the pilot are centered...'

— George Markey

In Australia, he fixed washing machines and refrigerators. In America, he drives a 1966 pickup truck in making the aerobatic circuit in America. He pulls the disassembled UltraBat in a trailer.

In recent aerobatic flying here, he came in fourth place in the sportsman category. "I'm not much of a pilot, but that's a pretty good airplane."

"I have a pretty big ego," Markey confessed. "I believed everybody else for the last 90 years got airplane design wrong. The Wright brothers got it right. The Wright Flyer has its mass on the center of gravity."

Odessa pilot George Steding alluded to the range of aircraft at the Air Fair and the changing technology: from the fabric-covered aircraft such as the Boeing Stearman biplane and the Piper Cub to the aluminum structure of the Lockheed Electra and many World War II warbirds to composite aircraft such as Markey's UltraBat and sleek kit-built planes, including the composite Lancair, Glassair, and Tommy Dempsey's SX-300 monoplane.

And while propeller-driven and jet-powered aircraft were preparing to demonstrate their "stuff," Steding noted the over-riding concern at the air show: safety.

"No. 1 on the priority list is safety, whether in the air or on the ground, and the spectators' safety," said Steding, who is checked out in 78 types of aircraft.

Following safety in priority is a show that seeks to be interesting and spectacular.

Next year, the Air Fair directors are seeking to attract the Snow Birds, the Royal Canadian Air Force aerobatic team, to fly in the show. The Snow Birds are similar to the U.S. Air Force Thunderbirds, the U.S. Navy Blue Angels, and British Royal Air Force Red Arrows.

Contrary to some speculation, the Southwest Air Fair will not detract from the Confederate Air Force, its Flying Museum and air shows, officials said.

"We're not going to try to compete with the CAF," said Steding. "Hopefully, we are going to help stimulate interest in aviation and help them out ... as much as possible."

Steding, who is a colonel in the CAF and chairman of the Ector County Airport Board, said that Schlemeyer Air Field planners "very definitely have plans for expansion of this airport — not to make it a commercial airport, but to make it a highly efficient general-aviation airport."

IRAQ: Guerrillas, Saddam reach agreement

a final agreement would be signed soon.

"All these are principle agreements. We are still negotiating," he said. "Nothing has been signed or finalized, but a broad agreement has been reached on these matters."

He told reporters here that under the 20-point tentative agreement for Kurdish regions, rebels would be incorporated into regular Iraqi security units, most likely as regional police.

Barzani said Iraqi officials had agreed to a general amnesty, repatriation of Kurdish refugees, rescinding of emergency laws, a "crash plan for developing the Kurdish area" and the opening of a new Kurdish university.

Both sides remained bogged down on the key points of how large the Kurdish autonomous region would be and whether the oil-rich city of Kirkuk would be included in the region.

Disputes over these points were among several that caused a similar autonomy agreement in 1970 to collapse. Each side accused the other of violating its terms.

Barzani said the Iraqi leadership had agreed to a coalition government for Iraq, and other rebel leaders accompanying Barzani said the percentage of Kurds in a new government would be in proportion to their population.

The coalition government, under the plan, would not include existing Shiite Muslim parties, the rebels said. Saddam and most of his top officials are from the Arab Sunni Muslim minority.

The Kurds said the interests of Shiites, 55 percent of the population, would be assured by democracy.

The question of a census to determine the Kurdish population remained a negotiating point, Kurdish leaders said.

Kurdish leaders claim they represent more than 30 percent of Iraq's population. Most estimates put it at 15 to 20 percent.

"The ultimate judge is the census," said Sami Abdul-Rahman of the Kurdish Democratic Peoples Party.

Barzani would not discuss the debate over the disputed city of Kirkuk or whether the government had backed off its opposition to including it in the Kurdish zone.

Kirkuk's 500,000 people include many non-Kurds. Kurdish leaders have accused the government of trying to reduce their percentage of the population by settling others there.

"This is a difficult matter," Barzani said. But he added: "The oil is up to the central government."

Kurdish sources have said that one compromise being discussed would leave oil revenues from Kirkuk with the central government in exchange for Kurdish control of the city and a share in the federal budget.

It also was not clear how any agreement would affect Western troops in northern Iraq, who entered the country to protect Kurdish refugees.

About 1.5 million Kurds fled to Iran and Turkey when Saddam's forces crushed a Kurdish uprising in March, and thousands have begun returning to "safety havens" set up by the Western troops in Kurdish areas.

"The presence of the foreigners will be solved when the Kurdish problem is solved, when we reach agreement," Barzani said.

MISD: Willis wins school board runoff election

(From 1A)

Abilene high school teacher who now teaches accounting courses part-time at Midland College.

He said he didn't think his support for MISD's existing cluster system of desegregation necessarily helped him in the race, although Weant had promised to review the cluster scheme.

Willis' win Saturday followed a May 4 election performance in which he garnered 46.8 percent of the vote — more than Weant and third-place candidate Lex Crawford, but short of the 50 percent needed to avoid a runoff.

Willis, who replaces the outgoing Larry Rusk in the District 6 slot, will be sworn in during the regular school board meeting May 28, MISD spokesman Ted Miller said.

The two men elected to the board May 4 — Jack Hightower, who defeated Leon Keller for the District 3 seat, and unopposed District 5 incumbent George Staley — already have been sworn in.

Willis said he hopes to work closely with other board members during his three-year term. Although he acknowledged that the board's power is limited by the constraints of state mandates, Willis said he wants to make education in Midland exciting for students and teachers alike.

That will mean evaluating existing school programs to determine which ought to stay and which ought to go, he said.

"I think the school board is tied very closely and does not have very much room for maneuverability," he said. "But just because the school board is tied because of state mandates...is no reason to give up. I think we ought to take advantage of what flexibility we've got."

TROOPS: Americans Bangladeshis' angels

(From 1A)

However, cheers of "faresta" appear to be erupting spontaneously in remote villages and isolated islands, according to conversations with American officers and Bangladeshi civilians.

Col. Randall West, commanding officer of the Marine helicopters, said he and his men were greeted by cries of "faresta" on Friday on Hatia island in the Bay of Bengal.

"I will never forget the tears of joy in the eyes of an elderly village chief as he came to my helicopter and shook my hand through the window after we dropped off the first food and water his village had received since the storm hit," said West, 43, a native of Sanford, N.C.

"The whole village came and waved and called us 'faresta,'" he said.

Inmates beg for water, food as families watch

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Inmates begged for food and water Saturday from an 80-foot tower while snack vendors moved in with grills and cool drinks for crowds gathered in the 105-degree heat.

The tension following a bloody prison riot and standoff contrasted with the street fair atmosphere less than 75 yards from the facility's main entrance.

"I know it's a serious thing, but I can make a little money cause the people will get hot," said vendor Ulises Ramirez. "I feel a little guilty, but I have my needs, too."

At least 18 people were killed and eight injured when a battle between rival drug gangs erupted late Friday in the Tamaulipas state prison, across the Rio Grande from Brownsville, Texas.

Navy platoons, army troops and state and federal police were dispatched to the scene, but there was no immediate effort to storm the 42-year-old prison.

Many of the families had driven several hours after hearing news of the riot.

They kept their vigil on a narrow street, lined with houses and small businesses. Several of the onlookers snacked on homemade corn tortillas and other food they had intended to give their relatives inside the prison.

Many of the prisoners are brought lunch and dinner daily by family members.

But prison officials did not allow relatives to bring food and water to the inmates until late Saturday.

Margarita Garcia brought her 22-year-old son, Alfredo, two bottles of water, eggs and a beef dish. She said she hasn't slept much since the disturbance began.

"I'm still worried," Ms. Garcia said. "We don't know what's going to happen. We don't know if he's going to be punished and nobody's telling us anything."

One woman said two of her sons, ages 21 and 27, have been incarcerated at the prison since 1988, awaiting trial on drunken driving charges.

The woman, who feared retribution if she gave her name, said others in the crowd told her the prisoners had gone without food and water since the disturbance began.

"We're scared," the woman said, as others in the crowd nodded agreement. "All we know is that they don't have food, water or telephone. We are worried they might be killed — by prisoners or by police."

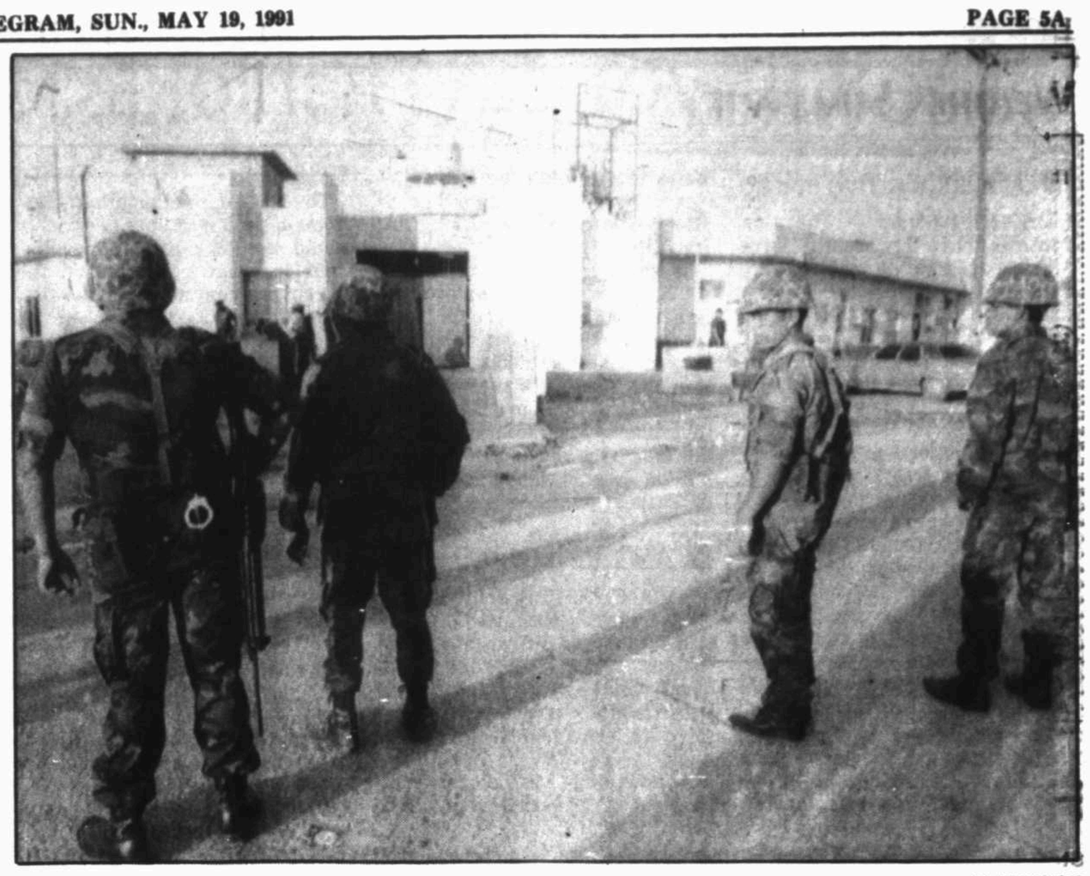

Another woman in the crowd, Trinidad Gonzalez de Ramirez of Tampico, said she has son in prison.

"There are many mothers here who don't want to move because we don't know what's going to happen," she said.

On the 80-foot Caracol tower, prisoners pointed to their mouths. Some were yelling: "We don't have any food. We don't have any water."

Families huddled around special editions of afternoon Mexican newspapers that became their only source of information on what was happening inside the prison.

Police and Army soldiers with .12-gauge shotguns surrounded the crowded prison, most of them standing in the shade of terraces on bars and cafes where it was business as usual.

Israel raids camp in Lebanon; four killed

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes raided a Palestinian refugee camp near this southern port city Saturday, killing at least four people and wounding six others, police said.

A police spokesman said at least two planes struck the tiny Shabreeha refugee camp, three miles northeast of Tyre and 12½ miles north of the Israeli border.

The spokesman, who cannot be identified in line with standing regulations, said the fighter bombers fired five missiles on the camp.

"It was so swift that anti-aircraft guns had no chance to fire at the raiding jets," he said.

Israel's army command said in a statement, that the raid was aimed at bases used for terrorist attacks. It said the targets were destroyed and that the Israeli jets returned safely.

Among those killed were three members of the Syrian-backed Shiite Muslim Amal militia. They died when a two-story operations command center in the camp was leveled, the Lebanese police spokesman said.

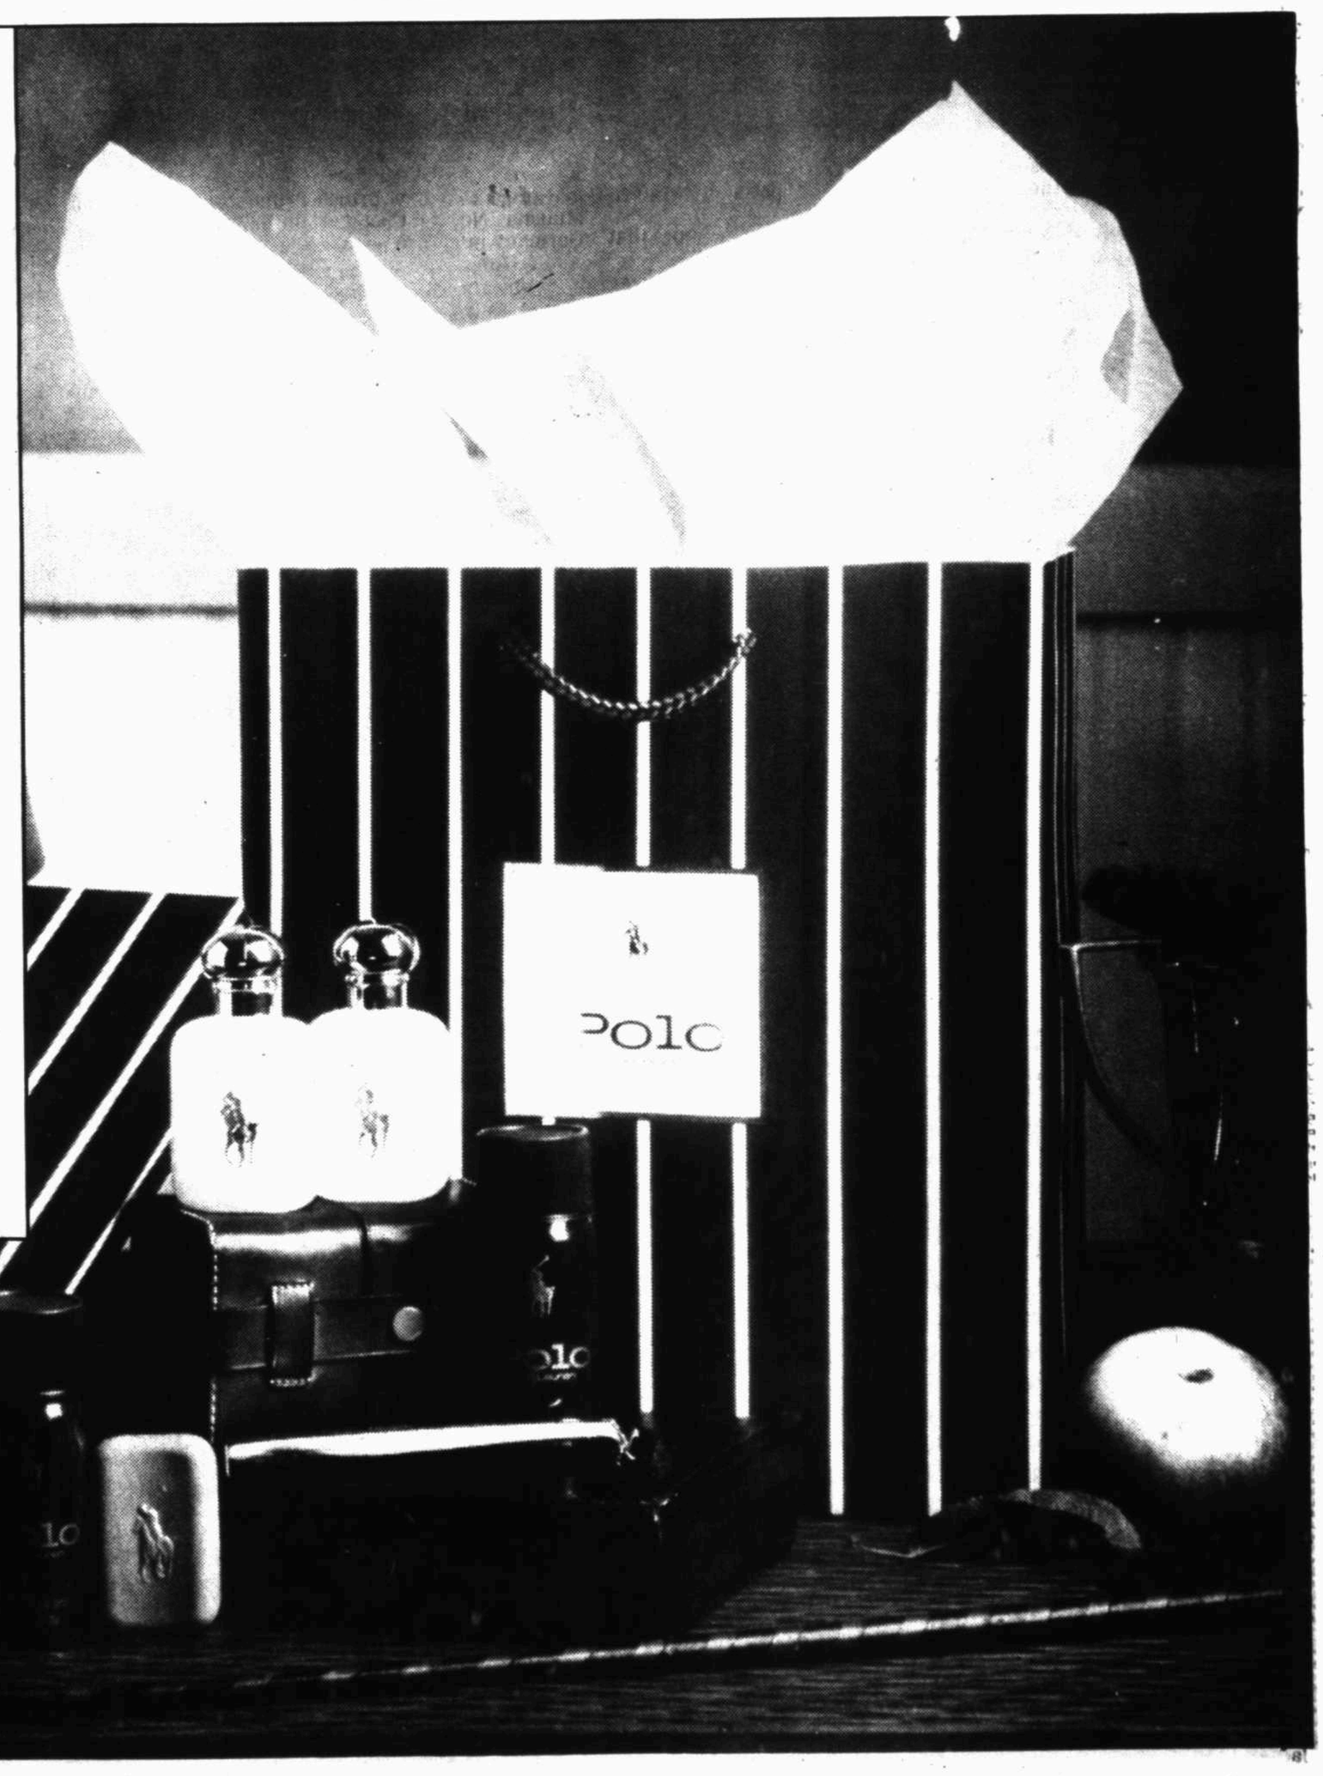

The fourth victim was a guerrilla from Nayef Hawatmeh's Marxist Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, the spokesman said.

The injured included Ahmed Faqih, the Tyre correspondent for the British news agency Reuters.

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ U.S. units arrive in Iraq

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The first contingent of a U.N. security force arrived in Iraq on Saturday to help efforts to resettle Kurdish and Shiite refugees, a U.N. official said.

A group of 10 guards hired by the United Nations flew from Geneva to an airport outside Baghdad, said Bernt Bernander, the U.N. coordinator and special representative in Iraq. They were to leave Sunday for the northern city of Dohuk, where allied troops have gained a foothold after the partial withdrawal of Iraqi forces.

Bernander said the United Nations planned to increase the contingent to 50 or 60 guards within the next 10 days. The force eventually is expected to have up to 500 members.

The guards are to deploy in transit camps and provincial capitals in four Kurdish regions in the north and the Shiite stronghold of Basra in the south, he said.

A U.N. peacekeeping force is also in control of a zone along the Iraq-Kuwait border.

Western countries have sought a U.N. police presence in northern Iraq to replace Western military forces. But the number of guards now moving in are short of what the allied countries are seeking.

More than 2 million Kurds fled their homes when Iraqi troops put down a March rebellion. About 1.5 million entered neighboring Iran or Turkey.

■ ANC to boycott talks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The African National Congress said Saturday it will boycott negotiations with the government on South Africa's political future but will continue current talks to resolve differences between the two sides.

A government statement said the ANC's actions were "irresponsible."

The black opposition group reaffirmed past statements that it would not take part in negotiations on a new constitution until the government met demands listed in an April 5 ultimatum, which included the firing of Cabinet ministers in charge of security forces and laws banning spears carried by Inkatha Freedom Party members.

The secretary-general of the ANC, Alfred Nzo, said government-ANC "working groups" set up in the past year to help clear the way for negotiations will continue meeting. He said the two sides also will continue talks aimed at resolving their impasse over violence in black townships.

The violence has involved the ANC and the rival Inkatha party, the nation's two leading anti-apartheid black organizations. They have deep tribal and ideological differences and more than 6,000 blacks have died in their bitter power struggle that began in 1986.

■ Quake reported in Iran

NICOSIA, Cyprus — A moderate earthquake shook southwestern Iran on Saturday, Tehran radio reported. There were no immediate reports of casualties or damage.

The state-run radio, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp., said the quake registered 4.8 on the open-ended Richter scale and was centered about 240 miles southwest of Tehran near the city of Khorramabad.

An earthquake of magnitude 4 is considered capable of causing moderate damage. One registering 5 on the Richter scale can cause considerable damage.

■ Quake rumbles in sea

HONOLULU (AP) — A strong earthquake rumbled beneath the southern Celebes Sea east of Borneo on Sunday, officials here said.

The quake didn't generate a Pacific-wide tsunami, although it is possible that a small wave was generated in the Celebes Sea, said Bruce Turner, a center geophysicist.

The quake's epicenter was offshore of Celebes Island and about 200 miles east of Borneo, the center said.

There were no immediate reports of damage or injuries.

First British astronaut

Briton's first astronaut, 27-year-old Helen Sharman, blasted into orbit aboard the Soviet space rocket Soyuz TM-12 capsule Saturday, from Baikonur Cosmodrome southeast of Moscow. Sharman and two other Soviet astronauts will dock with the MIR space station two days after lift off. Ms. Sharman began her journey in June 1989, after she heard about a contest over the radio that advertised for an astronaut, no experience necessary. Tim Mace, left, was the other British candidate in the Juno mission.

Soviet general joins Ryzhkov ticket

MOSCOW (AP) — Former Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov on Saturday named a popular general as his running mate in the campaign for president of the Russian republic.

Gen. Boris V. Gromov commanded Soviet troops in Afghanistan and now serves as deputy interior minister. His selection appeared aimed at winning support from the military, the Communist Party and citizens worried about law and order amid growing ethnic and political conflicts.

"Boris Vsevolodovich (Gromov) is one of the most popular generals in our army . . . a true citizen of his fatherland, a real patriot, a courageous and honest man," Ryzhkov said.

Recent opinion polls have shown Ryzhkov, 62, trailing more than 30 percentage points behind Boris N. Yeltsin, the maverick reformer and chairman of the Russian legislature.

They are the leading candidates for the June 12 election to the new post of president of the Russian Federation, the largest of the 15 Soviet republics. Saturday was the deadline for submitting nomination papers.

Yeltsin also named an Afghanistan war hero, Col. Alexander Rutskoi, as his running mate. Rutskoi, 44, is a Russian legislator and one of the leaders of the reformist "Communists for Democracy" group founded this spring.

Ryzhkov served as prime minister from 1986 until suffering a heart attack in December. The illness came amid mounting calls for his resignation from lawmakers who blamed him for the rapidly disintegrating economy.

Because he has been a staunch ally of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, Ryzhkov is viewed by many Soviets as Gorbachev's candidate against Yeltsin, the president's bitter rival.

Two more transplant recipients test positive

VIRGINIA BEACH (AP) — Two more patients who received transplants from a donor likely infected with AIDS have tested positive for the virus in preliminary examinations, an official said Saturday.

Three people who received the 22-year-old donor's organs have died from the disease and another also tested positive for the virus.

Doug Wilson, a spokesman for LifeNet Transplant Services of Virginia Beach, said two more possible AIDS cases were identified Friday in preliminary examinations. He would not say where the patients are or the exact nature of tissue they received.

Another patient will be tested soon and results will be available next week, Wilson said.

These three patients, as well as a Colorado woman who received a hip joint and who has tested positive for the virus, stood the greatest chance of carrying the infection, Wilson said.

Their transplant tissues were among eight not treated by one of three methods used to kill bacteria or viruses, Wilson said.

"Of greatest concern were four tissue grafts that were fresh frozen and not processed using ethanol, freeze drying or irradiation," Wilson said in a statement Saturday.

LifeNet arranged for 52 patients to receive organs or tissues six years ago from a donor officials only recently learned may have been infected with the AIDS virus.

The donor's body was tested twice for AIDS before any transplants were performed, Wilson said. Doctors believe the donor may have contracted the fatal disease so soon before his death that tests did not reveal the virus.

Wilson said 44 of the 52 tissue grafts were sterilized. The others were either too large for sterilization to be effective or could be damaged by such processes, Wilson said.

The hip joint, heart, kidneys and liver all fell into that category, he said.

LifeNet has not received any test results from hospitals where freeze-dried tissue was transplanted, Wilson said.

Jeff Nesbit, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration in Washington, said the heart transplant patient died in August 1986 and the two kidney patients died in June 1988 and May 1990.

"They all died of AIDS-related conditions," he said. The liver transplant patient died in 1985 of complications after surgery, he said.

Dr. Stephen M. Ayres, dean of medicine at the Medical College of Virginia, where the heart and kidney transplants were performed, said the hospital did not learn until Friday that the deaths were linked to infected transplants.

The donor was identified by his mother as William Norwood of Dinwiddie, Va. He was a service station attendant in Dinwiddie and was shot and killed during an Oct. 21, 1985, robbery. The case hasn't been solved.

"They're not very interested in catching the person who killed my son. Now everyone is interested because of the AIDS thing," Bessie Rathbone said in an interview.

New FDA chief moves to reinvigorate agency

The government seized 2,000 cases of orange juice and forced six companies to stop labeling their processed pastas, juices and pickles as "fresh."

Next, three cooking-oil makers were told to stop making misleading "no cholesterol" claims.

Thus notice was served that after years of lax enforcement, there's a new cop on the beat at the Food and Drug Administration.

In his first five months in office, FDA Commissioner David Kessler has moved aggressively to reinvigorate an agency that many say is overburdened, demoralized and deliberately buried layers deep in the bureaucracy.

Kessler's early actions "certainly got the attention of industry," said David Merrill, a University of Virginia law professor who served on an advisory panel that studied the FDA.

"It's not a bad thing that people will be coming to think that the agency is not a paper tiger," said Merrill, a former chief counsel at FDA.

After Kessler took on corporate giants such as Procter & Gamble and Kraft and won, other food companies started coming to FDA on their own to talk about their labeling practices.

"You take the big guy out and beat him up and the other guys are going to start saying 'We better talk,'" said John Villforth, who left the FDA last year and heads the non-profit Food and Drug Law Institute. "It was a gutsy thing to do."

Kessler, 39, has a resume tailor-made for the job.

Both a doctor and a lawyer, he taught food and drug law at Columbia University and served as medical director of the Einstein-Montefiore Hospital in New York.

The task before him is great: 25 percent of consumer spending is on products regulated by the FDA and it keeps expanding with growing concerns such as AIDS and rising imports of food and medical devices.

Just last week, the agency grappled with revelations that more than 50 transplant patients had received organs or tissues from an AIDS-infected donor six years ago. Three are known to have died of AIDS.

A federal advisory committee reported last week that the agency is near the breaking point — stretched too thin to ensure it can protect public health.

Kessler has pledged to restore the agency's credibility and has earned early praise from Congress, consumer groups and industry. But some observers say his early targets were relatively easy ones and it's too early to draw conclusions about the agency's overall direction.

Kessler says the quick crackdown on food labels demonstrated there's more to his public pronouncements than "the idle talk of a new commissioner."

And there are other, less-publicized signs of new life at the agency.

"Inspectors are coming in and being much more aggressive at the plants," said William Vodra, a lawyer and former FDA official who represents drug companies and other businesses that deal with the agency.

— William Vodra, Lawyer representing drug companies

"He's pushing quite hard to revitalize the agency and so far it's working," Vodra said.

All sides acknowledge tougher tests lie ahead, such as what the agency will do about certain breast implants that may pose a risk of cancer.

Kessler has "taken some bold, aggressive actions in the field of food labeling," said Ellen Haas, executive director of Public Voice for Food & Health Policy. "But it's still early to determine is these are isolated actions or a change of direction after decades of neglect for consumer issues and enforcement."

Food manufacturers grumble that Kessler's crackdown on misleading labels unfairly singled out certain companies when new industry-wide labeling regulations were due out later this year anyway.

John Cady, president of the National Food Processors Association, said the agency should focus on bigger issues, not take a "hunt and peck approach, forcing companies to tinker with labels."

Food makers say they're not averse to a stronger FDA that could bolster consumer confidence in food safety and ensure all manufacturers are held to the same standards.

"Kessler is making up eight years of lost ground as quickly as he can," said Jeff Nedelman, a spokesman for the Grocery Manufacturers of America. "If this lost ground is made up in a fair and cost-effective fashion, he is going to have everyone working with him and pulling for him."

Pharmaceutical companies, meanwhile, are worried the new regulatory push may hurt their efforts to speed up the years-long approval process for getting new drugs on the market.

"We are concerned about the emphasis on enforcement if it is at the expense of the new drug approval process," said Jeffrey Warren, a spokesman for the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association.

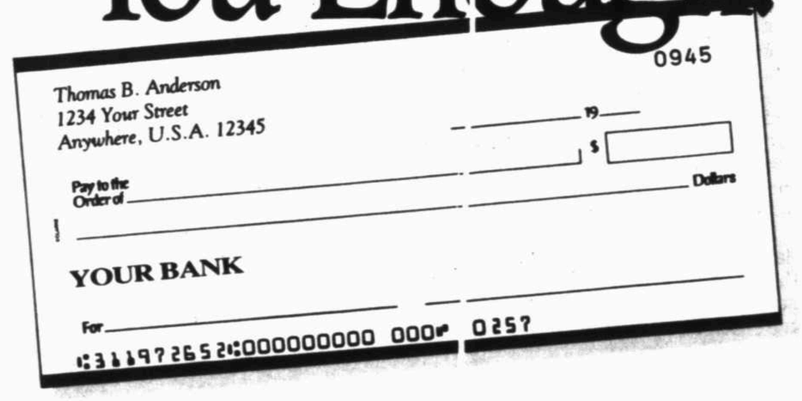

Kessler speaks of a shift in commitment — from merely keeping unsafe drugs off the market to speeding new medications to those who need them. The agency learned that from the AIDS crisis, he said.

But AIDS activists aren't completely satisfied with what they've seen so far. Derek Link, a spokesman for ACT UP in New York, said that despite Kessler's promises, "it seems more like the same old thing."

Such criticism aside, Kessler is widely viewed as the right person for the job. Yet observers aren't sure even he can solve the agency's problems.

"We all desperately want to believe that he can be the messiah who can come forward and lead the agency out of difficult times," Villforth said. "I don't know whether he can do it or not."

Astronauts to be poked, probed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — For the three doctors and one cell biologist headed into orbit on space shuttle Columbia this week, it's a dream assignment — poking and probing each other with needles and tubes to see how humans adapt to space.

For nine days, the four will draw blood, monitor heart and lung activity, and measure changes in body mass. One astronaut will have a catheter inserted in his arm before lanch to measure pressure changes near the heart in space.

"This is really the ultimate Walter Mitty experience," said the catheter-bearer, Dallas cardiologist Dr. F. Andrew Gaffney.

All the tests will be conducted in a laboratory in Columbia's cargo bay as the shuttle orbits 184 miles high. The astronauts will float through a tunnel to get from the cabin to the Spacelab module.

It is the first Spacelab mission in 5½ years and the first one devoted to medical research.

Columbia is scheduled to take off on NASA's 41st shuttle flight at 8 a.m. EDT Wednesday. The countdown began late Saturday afternoon.

"It's a dream mission for a doctor, it really is," said Dr. Margaret Rhea Seddon, an astronaut who occasionally works in emergency rooms. "We've looked at pieces and parts. But for the first time we'll be able to look at the integrated human being. That's what's really neat about it."

In addition to the four medical specialists, Columbia will carry three astronauts who will tend to the spaceship and submit to a few tests. Shuttle pilot Sidney Gutierrez was a little leery at first.

"Pilots view going to the doctor as a break-even situation at best and try to avoid the doctor on most occasions, because it's the way to end a career," Gutierrez said. "But I've gotten over that in relation to this particular mission. I understand the things we're doing are very important."

Scientists do not know why astronauts return to Earth with weakened immune systems, reduced bone mass and a decrease in body fluid or blood. They also come back with fewer red blood cells and less muscle protein.

Shorter lasting, but far more exasperating, is space motion sickness. More than half of all astronauts become nauseated and dizzy during their first few days in space.

So far, none of these body changes has endangered anyone, officials said. It becomes a concern, though, as the duration of missions increases and NASA plans for a space station and eventual trips to Mars.

NASA's longest manned mission is the 1973-1974 Skylab, which lasted 84 days. That mission, and the two earlier Skylabs, answered many questions about how men fare in space but posed others, said Dr. Arnauld Nicogossian, director of NASA's life sciences division.

Still a mystery is how women adjust to the weightlessness of space. Three women will be aboard Columbia, a flight record.

"There are some people who question whether women should participate in long-term flight," Seddon said. "I'm sort of looking forward to being able to get the data ... so we can say definitely that women have a place in the space stations in the future and exploration in the future."

Seddon, Gaffney, Dr. James Bagian and cell biologist Millie Hughes-Fulford have been training for this mission since 1984. The flight was delayed after the 1986 Challenger explosion and postponed again last summer when fuel leaks grounded Columbia for months.

For nearly a year, the four have been undergoing blood, urine and other tests, and their diets and exercise habits have been monitored. Researchers will compare the pre-flight data with the space results.

The tests will begin as soon as Columbia reaches orbit. Rigorous medical testing has never been done so early in space flight.

In one experiment, the astronauts will wear collars to measure blood pressure in the neck. In another, they will breathe gas mixtures from a pipe connected to an assembly that will record lung function. Some tests will be conducted while they rest, others while they exercise.

In between checkups, the astronauts will observe their silent shipmates — 30 white rats and 2,478 tiny jellyfish. The rats' skeletal muscle cells and fibers will be analyzed after the flight, as will the gravity receptors of some of the more mature jellyfish.

"We're going to have more opinions than we can shake a stick at," said flight director Al Pennington.

Shuttle Columbia to test 'flawless' ball bearing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 7-year-old experiment to mold the perfect ball bearing finally will be put to the test this week on the space shuttle Columbia.

The plan, developed in 1984 by engineering students at California State University, Northridge, is to create a flawless bearing — an impossible feat on Earth, where gravity deforms metal.

After years of false starts and bureaucratic delays, the experiment hitches a ride on Columbia, scheduled to lift off from Cape Canaveral on Wednesday.

"I wasn't really feeling it until a couple of days ago and then it hit me that we were really going this time," said Jeff Craddock, 36, payload manager and head of the group that built the 60-pound experiment.

The device is a battery-powered unit that melts small cubes of metal alloy suspended in wax. Theoretically, perfect spheres should be formed in the zero gravity of space.

The students had hoped the experiment would fly in 1985, but competition to place experiments on the shuttles and the 1986 Challenger explosion delayed their efforts.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration allows such projects onto the space shuttle through its "Get Away Special" program.

Campus protests polite, orderly

Associated Press

When President Bush delivered the commencement address at Hampton University in Virginia earlier this month, some students protested by sitting quietly and holding their applause.

No chants, no rocks, no arrests.

It has been that kind of commencement season on college campuses this year. A few protests have taken place, but they've been quiet and mannerly. Graduates have sought to make their points calmly and rationally, a sharp contrast to some of the raucus graduations of the past.

"It's been much more civil and polite," said Pat Munson, a spokeswoman for Colorado College, in Colorado Springs, Colo. "It isn't disruptive. If we're comparing protests to what went on in the early '70s and late '60s, when speakers would be barred from speaking and protesters really took over the events — no, that's not happening."

One of this season's more vocal demonstrations happened Saturday at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee, where Secretary of Health and Human Services Louis Sullivan received an honorary degree. About 30 members of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power marched and chanted to protest what they said was a lack of funding for AIDS research, a charge Sullivan vigorously denied.

Some grads wore white armbands or cutouts of peace doves. The protesters turned their backs when Cheney was awarded an honorary degree at the ceremony.

But he was allowed to speak without disruption, and told graduates they were setting out at "a great time to be part of the American family."

Student protesters at the State University of New York at Albany claimed a victory when Turkish President Turgut Ozal canceled a commencement speech at the school. About 100 people had demonstrated after it was announced that he would be speaking May 26.

But university officials and a spokeswoman at the Turkish Embassy in Washington insisted the cancellation had nothing to do with the student protests over Ozal's alleged human rights abuses. Ozal simply was too busy with the Kurdish refugee problem to make the trip, they said.

His replacement — University of Pennsylvania English professor Houston A. Baker Jr. — is hardly likely to inspire violent protest.

One of the angriest responses to the selection of a commencement speaker this year has been that of the students and faculty at New York Law School, which invited the White House chief of staff, John Sununu, to speak at its June 9 commencement. Sununu is also to receive an honorary degree.

"I think it cheapens the honorary degree," said one of the critics, professor Arthur Leonard.

Sununu has been a well-traveled commencement speaker in the past. The White House list of Sununu's trips on military aircraft shows several tax-supported flights to commencement ceremonies over the past two years.

Controversial or not, many schools seek out high-profile speakers who will inspire the graduates and lend prestige to the event. Presidents are probably the hottest commencement speakers, and usually try to fit in a few speeches at graduation time.

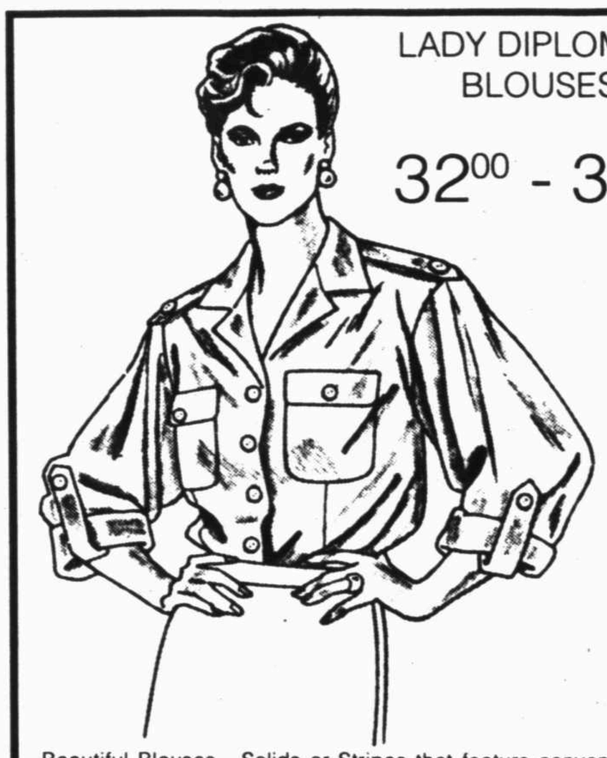

Lyndon Johnson used a commencement speech at the University of Michigan in 1964 to launch the "Great Society," his sweeping domestic program. This year, Bush used the podium at the Ann Arbor campus to weigh in on the controversial issue of free speech on college campuses.

When Bush spoke at Hampton College, a predominantly black school, students used the opportunity to express their disagreement with his civil rights policy.

There also were protests against Bush when he spoke at Princeton and received an honorary degree earlier this month.

NATION IN BRIEF

■ Judge orders feedings

NOBLESVILLE, Ind. — A judge Saturday ordered that a severely brain-damaged woman be fed again while a Christian group appeals his earlier ruling affirming her right to die. Feedings quickly resumed.

Doctors had expected Sue Ann Lawrance, 42, to die within a few days. Judge Jerry M. Barr of Hamilton County Superior Court had let the woman's parents remove her feeding tubes on May 3.

In a meeting Saturday in Barr's chambers, the woman's family and a right-to-life attorney agreed to resume feeding the woman for 21 days.

Barr then granted an emergency stay of his earlier order so that Patti Mullins, a lawyer for the Christian Fellowship for the Disabled, could file an appeal Monday with state Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals.

"I'm still very comfortable with my (original) decision," Barr said. "But it may be that others may want to have it reviewed. And I certainly have no objection to its being reviewed."

Feedings quickly resumed Saturday evening, said Marty Rugh, spokeswoman for St. Vincent Hospice Center, where Ms. Lawrance is staying.

■ U.S. stops financial aid

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration has quietly suspended all economic assistance to Yugoslavia, including support in international financial institutions for loans and credits.

In 1952, Yugoslavia, then a maverick communist country, began receiving large amounts of United States aid to help it continue its defiance of Stalin. In recent years, the Belgrade government benefited repeatedly from American backing for international loans and credits for its economy.

The suspension was begun on May 6 under the provisions of a law passed by Congress in November, requiring the United States to end all forms of economic assistance to Yugoslavia and its six constituent republics in six months if it was determined that "a pattern of systematic gross violations of human rights" was occurring there.

In a voice vote last month, the Senate declared that a complete cutoff of aid for Yugoslavia was warranted.

The legislation says Yugoslav compliance is to be certified by Secretary of State James A. Baker III. When the deadline arrived, Baker permitted the sanctions to take effect without declaring a position on the issue.

■ Suspect takes cap

BALTIMORE — A 10-year-old boy pointed a gun at the head of a 9-year-old and ordered him to turn over his multicolored, propeller-topped beanie, police said.

The fourth-grader, just over 4 feet tall, told police he found the .22-caliber revolver outside an abandoned house. He walked up to the 9-year-old boy who was strolling home from school Friday with his 11-year-old sister, police said.

"Yo, gimme your hat," the boy said, according to a police report. When the 9-year-old refused, the robber allegedly raised the revolver to his victim's head and ordered him again to hand over the beanie.

The younger boy complied, then ran with his sister to the nearby home of an aunt, who called police.

Police drove with the children and their aunt to the home of the 10-year-old, who attends the same school as the victim, and recovered an unloaded gun. The boy was charged as a juvenile with assault, robbery and a handgun violation and released into the custody of his mother.

The boy admitted using the gun to rob the 9-year-old, police said, but claimed he had not intended to harm him.

"It wasn't loaded," the boy told police. "I wanted the hat because I liked it. I said, 'Can I hold your hat?' The boy ran."

■ Services saw signs

CROWN POINT, Ind. — Weakened by starvation, dehydration and abuse, 5-year-old Amy Shipley threw up a force-fed concoction of canned milk and black pepper and choked to death on her own vomit last fall.

Counselors, court officers and welfare workers saw signs of abuse in the Shipley home for two years, but various public services designed to protect children failed to shield her.

"There was a big breakdown in the system," said Robert Hanlon, Amy's maternal grandfather who's seeking custody of her two sisters.

Amy's father and stepmother were not called to account until after she died Nov. 8. Dr. Gary D. Shipley and his wife, Gloria Anne, both 35, were charged with murder and neglect of a dependent.

Both have pleaded innocent and are being held without bail pending an Aug. 5 trial. If convicted, they face up to 80 years in prison.

■ 'Angel Gabriel' in jail

RIVERHEAD, N.Y. — A minister charged with sexually abusing four youths while pretending to be the angel Gabriel was convicted Saturday of statutory rape and other charges.

The Rev. John J. Gargano, 67, was remanded to jail without bail by Suffolk County Judge Stewart Namm, said Drew Biondo, a spokesman for the district attorney's office.

Gargano was convicted on 14 counts of third-degree, or statutory, rape, sodomy, sexual abuse and endangering the welfare of a child, Biondo said. He was acquitted on one count of second-degree rape and two counts of sodomy.

He faces at least 26 years in prison when sentenced on June 19, Biondo said.

Gargano was charged with abusing four young members of his congregation, the Eternal Truth Tabernacle in Central Islip, about 50 miles east of New York City on Long Island, between 1985 and 1990.

During the trial, assistant district attorney Nina Pozgar said Gargano betrayed and abused his authority over his congregates, using deceit and intimidation.

The four youths — now a 21-year-old woman, a 22-year-old man, a 19-year-old woman and a 13-year-old girl — all testified that Gargano represented himself as the angel Gabriel to them.

■ Northwest to cut fares

EAGAN, Minn. — Northwest Airlines will cut about 60 percent off fares for children in a summer travel promotion announced Saturday.

Of the nation's four largest airlines, Northwest was the only carrier to announce summer fare reductions. Summer is the industry's busiest season.

"The reductions for children are particularly compelling, considering children normally are charged the same fare as adults," said Robert Fornaro, senior vice president for marketing and planning.

The non-refundable fares apply to round-trip flights in the continental United States and must be purchased by May 31. Children traveling under the program must be accompanied by an adult.

Under the promotion, Northwest said it also will deduct about 17 percent off its lowest discount tickets for adults, whether or not they travel with children.

Hansel runs away

Hansel, who finished 10th in the Derby two weeks ago, was in complete command through the stretch run of the 1 3-16th mile race, which was timed in 1:54.

Kentucky Derby winner Strike the Gold never was a factor and for the 13th straight year, there can be no Triple Crown champion.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, staying unbeaten on the road in the playoffs, rallied from a 14-point deficit Saturday to win the opener of the Western Conference finals 111-106 over Portland behind Magic Johnson's 21 assists and James Worthy's 28 points.

The Lakers, 4-0 on the road in the postseason, outscored the Trail Blazers 10-2 over the final 3½ minutes to take away Portland's homecourt advantage in the best-of-7 series.

Socorro ousts Bulldogs

■ Presented with must-win situation in Saturday's first game, the Midland High Bulldogs lose a 8-5 to El Paso Socorro, and put the lid on a 15-13 season.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

EL PASO — With thoughts of what "could have been" rising like steam in the Sun Valley heat, what had just happened was just sinking in at the Midland High dugout — the season was over.

MHS' march into the the Class 5A baseball playoffs was halted at the area round at Dudley Field Saturday, as 800 fans witnessed El Paso Socorro score four runs in the fifth inning to win the second game of the best-of-three series 8-5 and advance to the regional semifinals.

■ Eight from MHS, Lee named to All-District 4-5A/2B

Friday night's 1-0 loss put MHS in a must-win situation, and though the Tall City team picked to place fifth in District 4-5A was downcast, MHS head coach Rick Wood had time to reflect.

"We had a great season. The kids grew up a lot this year and, hey, we were beaten by a good team," Wood said of his Bulldogs (15-13).

Angels ride hot streak

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Some strange things are taking place at Angels Stadium these days, and they aren't connected with laser light shows.

First of all, Midland now owns its first three-game winning streak of the year after a 6-4 win against the Arkansas Travelers Saturday night.

That would almost be enough for any Midland fan, but the Angels are also getting good pitching and timely hitting. Now that's a real celebration.

The latest mound gem comes from Don Vidmar, who picked up his second win in two starts for the Angels since being called up from Class A Palm Springs.

Vidmar pitched seven strong innings, giving up only a two-run, line drive homer to left by Cliff Brannon in the second inning. Vidmar faced three Travs in the eighth inning, but loaded the bases by giving up a hit, a walk and hitting a batter.

Marvin Cobb came in as the Travs scored twice on a single and a grounder, but Cobb did earn a save with a perfect ninth. All the runs were charged to Vidmar.

"I didn't tire in the eighth," Vidmar said. "Actually, my leg was hurting from that line drive off my shin (off the bat of Luis Martinez) earlier in the game.

"My curve ball was better tonight than it has been. I got a fast ball up on the home-run (a two-run shot by Cliff Brannon in the second), and that's what happens in this park when you do that."

■ David Draper and Toby Curtis, along with the rest of the Midland College men's tennis team, are headed in Tyler hoping to put up the same results as the women did last week.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Rest assured of one thing, tennis fans: David Draper and Toby Curtis will be back at Midland College for the 1991-92 season.

Both have committed to return for their sophomore seasons, despite having the grades to attend major universities, and the offers which keep coming.

Both Draper and Curtis — who grew up in England about 100 miles apart — are 6-0 lefthanders, a combination that packs quite a punch. Op-

Stallings is all grown up as sophomore

Just how much more "growing up" can Stanton's Jeremy Stallings do in the next two years?

That is the question that is going to linger until Stallings, the two-event state championship winner, takes to the track next spring — as a mere junior.

Williamson

By now West Texas is well aware of Stallings' current list of achievements. A third place finisher in the state Class 2A 800 meters as a freshman, and now a state 800 champion as well as Class 2A's reigning king in the 1600.

All of this heady accomplishment for a youth who should be learning to walk the West Texas ovals before dominating the opponents on them.

If you were to talk to this young man, you would swear he is older than his classification allows. Here is a mature sophomore — not only physically, but mentally.

You never see him upset after losing a race. A higher goal is always rolling in his mind. Learn from the experience. It's always rise to greater things for Stallings.

For instance, Stallings lost to defending Class 3A 800 champion Corbin Reeves last March in the West Texas Relays. He wasn't pouting. He was planning for the future.

"I never dreamed I could run that kind of time (1:54.64) this early in the year. I had never run against Reeves and I never get to run in a big meet like this. It's going to help me a lot."

Future planning was in motion, and it paid off.

Timpson's Fred Yarbrough had beaten Stallings in the Class 2A state 800 last year and was going for his third consecutive title last weekend in Austin. But Stallings had planned for the event. And won. It was perfect planning.

Stallings was fifth after one lap, but it was planned.

"It was a perfect race for me," Stallings said. "The first lap was 56 seconds and that's right where I wanted it to be."

Sure, Stallings was later entered in the 2A 1600 later that night, but he had won a state championship in "his" event. What else was there really left to prove? No one, not even Stallings himself, expected to win the 1600, but he dared to dream.

What else could he prove? "How about winning the 1600 — tonight," Stallings said. He wasn't completely serious. After all, his 4:35.96 was only the fifth best qualifying time. Even he knew that winning the 1600 would take more planning for the future. This was really a look-see mission for Stallings, like his trip to the state 800 in 1990.

All Stallings did was knock over 11 seconds off his qualifying time and shock the state with another victory.

"This was a shock. The 800 is my race. I really just wanted to get a medal, but I saw I had a chance to win and my whole body went numb," Stallings said.

Well, he has us all numb now. Thoughts of where all this may lead in two more years has West Texas track fans buzzing. He is track's media darling of the Permian Basin.

However, winning the 1600 has produced new expectations. Where does he go from here? Well, maybe it's time to start looking at records. The 2A 800 mark is 1:52.5, which seems reachable for Stallings. The 1600 Class 2A record is 4:19. That, too, should be within grasp.

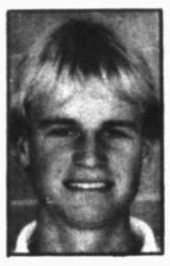

But all that should be right up Stallings' alley. After all, the planning has just started.

Chaparral men take their turns in Tyler

Staff Report

White

Van de Pieterman

TYLER — Despite all their team and individual honors over the years, Midland College's tennis program still has one unattained goal. Never have both the women and the men won national titles the same year.

That's the quest which the MC men begin Sunday at Tyler Junior College. The women took care of their part here by capturing their seventh National Junior College Athletic Association title Wednesday without losing a set. It was back-to-back titles for the women's team, which also won the NJCAA crown in 1990.

Now the men's team, ranked first in the nation and riding a 20-0 team mark for the season, tries to make it a sweep. Team play begins Sunday, followed after the team championship is determined, by individual championships in singles and doubles. The national tourney is scheduled to end Saturday.

The Chaparral men's team shared the 1978 crown with Odessa College and New Mexico Military Institute and won its first crown outright in 1989. The 1990 squad finished fourth.

Although there are three sophomores on the men's team, only two of them will be playing. The leader in both playing ability and experience is Tonny van de Pieterman, who was a member of the 1989 championship squad. He returned to MC last fall and regained his eligibility to compete this spring. The native of Holland has a 19-4 record in the No. 1 singles position and boasts a perfect 12-0 record at the No. 1 doubles with freshman Greg Muller.

In the current NJCAA format, teams play six singles and three doubles in a tournament format. When a team wins five matches it advances and the matches still in progress are halted. Following three days of team play to determine the champion, there are individual singles and doubles championships.

"We felt confident about the women's team, but the men's competition always seems to be more evenly-matched," said MC coach Joe Williams. "There has been a lot of heat in Midland, along with higher humidity, so the players might be more prepared physically than in past years. If they play to their levels of ability, they could take the title."

Along with host Tyler, always a factor with the home courts and the home crowd, the contenders expected to press the Chaps are Anderson, South Carolina; Abraham Baldwin of Georgia, and a couple of teams from Florida.

Playing No. 2 for the Chaps is freshman Greg Muller of South Africa, whose singles record is 31-6. David Draper, a freshman from England, plays No. 3 and is 24-7.

Toby Curtis, another freshman from England, is 30-11 playing at No. 4. Freshman Berhe Serekebrhan of Ethiopia is 18-6 playing No. 5; and Robin van Beveren, a freshman from Holland, is 28-9 at No. 6.

Draper and Curtis pair at the No. 2 doubles spot, where they are 21-4. Sophomore Jerod White of San Angelo plays in the No. 3 doubles with van Beveren. They have a spotless 10-0 record. White is 12-11 in singles.

Women wrap up dominating year

TYLER — The Midland College women's tennis team completed it sweep of the National Junior College Tennis Tournament here Saturday, winning all nine flights, in what some are hailing as the most dominant team performance in the history of the NJCAA tournament.

Earlier in the week, the MC women won the team championship without losing a set or a match. Saturday they completed the individual titles, winning in all nine flights of singles and doubles competition.

And the final day was somewhat of a trying experience. Semifinal action was completed Saturday morning at 2:30 a.m. The finals were held at 9 a.m.

"I feel sure we wouldn't have lost a set if we hadn't had to play under these circumstances," MC tennis coach Joe Williams said. "We had some rugged matches Saturday, but we came through, and I think more than anything, it was conditioning that played the key role.

"As far as I know there has never been a more dominant performance by a team in this tournament. They built us up pretty good here and everyone was wanting us to lose at least one match. That put a lot of pressure on the girls.

"The girls are headed back for Midland and I think they are just glad it's over and that they met the pressure. They probably don't realize what they have done yet. I'm really proud of them."

Myriam Berthe, playing at No. 1 for MC, had the toughest outing in the finals. She lost the first set to Julie Downs of Broward by a 6-4 margin and was down 3-0 in the second set before rallying for a 6-4 win.

No. 2 Seiko Ichioka, No. 3 Janneke Garos, No. 4 Adriana Isaza, No. 5 Boba Tzvetkova and No. 6 Caroline Reynolds all won in straight sets, but Reynolds did have a 7-6, 6-4 test against Priya Jamayaraman of Tyler.

BULLDOGS: Wood impressed by Socorro

(From 1B)

And Socorro (21-9), also the Bulldogs, did it by beating the best MHS had to offer.

Senior pitcher James Madrid, who took Friday's loss in seven full innings, was brought in to relieve junior Brian Rounding as MHS held a tunuous 5-4 edge in the fifth. Rounding (4-3) pitched well through the first four innings, but got into trouble in the fifth after he hit Frank Valdez with a pitch and Rudy Ortiz ripped a one-out double down the third base line to put runners at second and third.

That's when Wood called on his senior, a varsity player since his sophomore year and the 4-5A Most Valuable Player.

But Madrid, who admitted after the game his arm was still feeling the effects of Friday, gave up three straight hits after striking out the first batter he faced. Madrid also struck out the last batter of the inning, but four runs had crossed the plate by then.

"In that situation, when you have a chance to move on in the playoffs, you want your best out there. We didn't come out here and give anything away.

"Some people don't realize there are two teams out there. They beat the best we had to offer (Madrid) twice. I'm inpressed a lot more with Socorro than I was led to believe," Wood said.

Socorro, which was the official visiting team in Game 2, got ahead from the start with a run in the top of the first inning. MHS came back and tied the game with a run in the second, when Richie Greth drew a walk, moved to second on a Jeremy Burton bunt, took third on a Jimmy Stanton flyout and scored on third baseman Eduardo Villegas' throwing error to first.

The see-saw nature of the game was set, and continued in the third with Socorro scoring a pair to take a 3-1 lead.

But MHS again tied the affair with two runs in the bottom of the third. With one out, Madrid singled on a high chopper just over shortstop Gino Felix's glove, and Jeff Casbeer singled to left field putting runners on first and second.

Then Socorro catcher Santiago Valdez tried to pick Madrid off at second, but nobody was covering the base, allowing Madrid to cross the plate while the ball skittered into center field. With Raymond Dominguez running for Casbeer, Greth then drove Dominguez home with a one-bagger to left.

Socorro added a run in the fourth, only to see MHS take two tallies in the bottom of the inning. Rounding led the inning off with a one-out double, then Mike Melzer, Dewayne Culpepper and Madrid put back-to-back singles together to give the Midland 'Dogs a 5-4 advantage.

But then came the fifth, when Socorro finally seemed to solve the rubber-armed Madrid.

"I couldn't get any movement on the ball. The harder I tried to throw, the straighter it went. I just feel sorry for Brian," Madrid said, pondering the save that got away.

Starring for Socorro Saturday were Felix, who went 4-for-5 and was a home run shy of hitting for the cycle, and junior pitcher Cesar Romero (6-2), who went the distance.

"Cesar let a couple of bad pitches get by, but he did a good job. And Felix, tomorrow (Sunday) is his birthday, so I guess this was kind of his present to himself," said Socorro head coach Chris Forbes.

Topping MHS' offensive performance were Madrid and Casbeer. Madrid was 4-for-4 at the plate, while Casbeer finished his high school career with a 3-for-3 outing. Greth also had a multiple-hit day, with a 2-for-3 performance.

"The guys gave everything they had to give, and as a coach you can't ask for any more," Wood said.

DOUBLES: Lefties present problems for opponents

(From 1B)

ponents have a difficult time with the reverse spin and angle that is put on the ball by the lefthanders.

Curtis said he would be returning for several reasons, one of the main ones being next year's competition.

"We have an excellent schedule next year," Curtis said. "We travel for quality opponents and we'll play Division I schools."

Draper has received offers, but none have appealed to him thusfar. Texas Christian, Utah and Southwestern Louisiana have all called.

The MC men were 9-0 against Division I opponents this year. Victories came against the University of Mississippi, ranked in the national Top 15 at the time, SMU, TCU, Texas Tech, Texas-San Antonio, New Mexico State, Northern Arizona, Colorado State and Pan American.

Although Curtis said it is egodamaging to a Division I player to lose to a junior college player, the major university players "recognize the standard Midland College has set.

"A lot of other schools are willing to play us now because they realize it'll be a good match.

"Midland College has a very good reputation, not just in American but around the world."

Draper attributes the team's strengths to the recruiting done by tennis coach Joe Williams.

"All the players that come here are good before they get here," Draper said, "but they get even better once they get here."

One case in point is Tonny Van de Pieterman, who plays No. 1 for the Chaps and is also the No. 1 junior college player in the country now. Van de Pieterman has already committed to the University of Miami next season. No. 2 singles player and Van de Pieterman's doubles partner Greg Muller is also receiving accolades and will likely attend a high profile university after his sophomore season.

Williams said one of the factors which led to Draper and Curtis returning next year is their own forthcoming plaudits.

"They see all the success and recognition that Tonny has had, and they realize if they hang on another year, that's all going to be coming their way.

"Both of them could've gone to major universities on scholarships, and I wasn't going to hold them back."

Williams said both are strong at doubles, but Draper is even stronger as a singles player.

"He's awful solid at singles," Williams said. "He's a big time player, and he'll be able to go anywhere he wants next year.

"Toby right now may be a little stronger at doubles than at singles, although he is a good singles player."

The strength of the two players, both together and separately, will come in handy this week in Tyler. And don't look for any chins to be hanging when the team mops up the way it is expected to.

"I don't see any problems at all," Curtis said of winning the tournament. "The team feels very confident. I think we'll fare really well."

MHS, Lee take over All-District team

Rebs' Benavidez top coach, 'Dogs' Madrid named MVP

Staff Report

Midland teams hauled down eight first-team individuals, the Most Valuable Player and the Coach of the Year, as the All-District 4-5A baseball team was announced Saturday.

Midland High senior James Madrid was honored as the MVP after being an integral part of the Bulldogs' 15-13, area playoff season. The MHS pitcher/third baseman/designated hitter was 4-1 on the mound in district play with a 0.97 ERA. With a bat in his hand, he was successful more than half the time, averaging .538 at the plate in loop competition.

Midland Lee head coach Jesse Benavidez was honored as Coach of the Year after guiding his Rebels to an 18-8 overall record, and 10-2 in district for the 4-5A championship in his first season at the helm.

Other locals honored on the first team were Lee second baseman Allen Chase, Lee shortstop Shane Greeley, Rebel third baseman Keith Bell, Lee pitcher Jeff Johnston, MHS catcher Jeff Casbeer, MHS outfielders Jeremy Burton and Dewayne Culpepper, and Lee designated hitter Julian Urquidez.

Other first team honorees were Odessa Permian first baseman Brian Bavousett, Odessa High shortstop James Dunlap, who finished in a first-team tie with Greeley, utility infielder Richard Barron and outfielder Chris Cloninger of San Angelo, and utility ourfielders Scott Jenkins of Abilene Cooper and OHS' Cody Allison, who also tied for first-team votes.

Chase, a junior, hit .321 in district as the Rebel lead-off hitter, while Greeley came in with a .361 average, Bell .333 and Urquidez an even .500.

Casbeer, the Bulldog defensive braintrust, was just as effective with his bat, taking a .432 average into the playoffs. Burton hit .436, while MHS lead-off man Culpepper hit .391.

Johnston, Lee's senior lefthander, ended the season with a 13-1 record and posted a 4-5A ERA of 1.09. He took credit for nine of the Rebels' 10 district wins.

Midlanders picked for the second team were MHS first baseman Tyler Beard (.368), also a starter for the Bulldogs' playoff basketball team, and Lee's left fielder Smily Hinojos (.333). Earning honorable mention for the Tall City were Lee senior first baseman Brad Sanders and MHS third baseman/designated hitter Jimmy Stanton.

NBA Playoffs

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — For the Los Angeles Lakers, there's no place like away from home.

The Lakers ran their road playoff record to 4-0 Saturday, rallying from a 14-point third-quarter deficit to win the opener of the Western Conference finals 111-106 behind Magic Johnson's 21 assists and James Worthy's 28 points.

"We've been there before," Johnson said. "We understand what it takes to win on the road. Anytime that anything happens bad we never get rattled. We never lose our composure. We stick with our game plan. It's happened every series."

The Lakers outscored the Trail Blazers 10-2 over the final 3½ minutes to take away Portland's homecourt advantage in the best-of-7 series.

Byron Scott added 19 points and Sam Perkins had 18 points and 15 rebounds for the Lakers, who outscored Portland 31-14 in the fourth quarter to improve their record to 8-1 in the playoffs.

"We felt it would be a tough series to start with," Portland's Clyde Drexler said. "Now it's just a little tougher."

Worthy said the Lakers learned a long time ago what it takes to win on the road.

"In the early '80s we picked up a lot of that experience," he said, "and it's still part of our nucleus right now."

Drexler had 28 points and 12 assists and Jerome Kersey scored 21 points for the Blazers, who had the NBA's best regular-season record of 63-19, including 36-5 at home.

"We didn't play very well in the fourth quarter when we let them have a little run and let them get back in the game," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "We gave them a chance to win and they took it."

Portland, a loser at home for the first time in seven playoff contests, had a 104-101 lead after Drexler sank two free throws with 3:23 to play.

But Los Angeles scored the next six points, three each by Worthy and Johnson, to pull ahead 107-104. Worthy's two free throws, after a foul call against Drexler that was vehemently disputed by the Blazers, gave the Lakers the three-point lead with 1:23 to go.

On two Portland possessions during that stretch, Kevin Duckworth was called for an offensive foul and fumbled the ball on a drive to the basket. But his 12-footer with 1:12 to play cut the Lakers' lead to 107-106.

Scott sank an 18-footer with 49 seconds to go to boost the advantage to 109-106, then Portland's Buck Williams missed two free throws with 33.2 seconds to go and Sam Perkins stuffed the ball as the 24-second clock expired with 8.6 seconds remaining to clinch the victory.

The Blazers led by as many as 14 late in the third quarter and were up by 12 at the end of the period. But the Lakers went on a 15-0 run, including the first 13 points of the final quarter, to take a 93-92 lead on Scott's 3-pointer with 8:10 to play.

Vlade Divac scored eight for the Lakers in the final quarter, when Los Angeles outscored Portland 31-14.

"We lacked defensive intensity and the offense didn't do much of anything," Drexler said.

NBA's lower class takes stab at lottery

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dig those horseshoes out of the closet. Dust off those lucky charms.

It's lottery time in the NBA again.

For the seventh consecutive year, the selection order of the NBA draft will be determined by the luck of a draw — a system that management finds necessary, but frustrating.

"Success is attained with a combination of luck, opportunity and skill, and in this case, all the skill of has been removed," Denver Nuggets general manager Bernie Bickerstaff said. "But lack of skill is why we're here."

Sunday's lottery actually will determine only which teams will have the top three picks in the June 26 draft. The remaining eight lottery teams will draft in reverse order of their regular-season record, which means Denver, with the league's worst record of 20-62, will select no later than fourth.

Cleveland, whose 33-49 record was the best among the non-playoff teams, will pick first, second, third or 11th.

This is the second year of the "weighted" lottery, in which the worst teams have a better chance to win a spot among the top three.

Denver will have 11 of 66 balls in the selection bin; Miami, with the second-worst record of 24-58, will have 10 balls; Sacramento, third-worst at 25-57, will have nine; and so on down to Cleveland, which will have one ball.

Also in the lottery are Charlotte, New Jersey, Dallas, Minnesota, Washington, the Los Angeles Clippers and Orlando.

The teams at the bottom of the lottery can take heart that one chance in 66 could be enough to break into the top three. Last year, Seattle had two balls in the bin and still came away with the No. 2 pick in the draft, which it used to get rookie starter Gary Payton.

Hansel avenges loss in Derby

Tenth-place finisher at Louisville never in any doubt at Preakness

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Hansel, the beaten favorite in the Kentucky Derby, redeemed himself in smashing fashion Saturday by winning the Preakness at Pimlico.

Hansel, who finished 10th in the Derby two weeks ago, was in complete command through the stretch run of the 1 3-16th mile race, which was timed in 1:54.

Kentucky Derby winner Strike the Gold never was a factor and for the 13th straight year, there can be no Triple Crown champion.

"At his best, he should be competitive with these horses," trainer Frank Brothers said before the race.

It wasn't decided to send Hansel to the Preakness until Tuesday and the colt did not arrive at Pimlico until 11:30 a.m. Wednesday after a 14-hour van trip from Chicago.

Corporate Report and Hansel battled from the five-eighths pole until the quarter-pole, when Hansel took charge.

Corporate Report, who was ninth in the Derby, finished second, ahead of Mane Minister, who also was third in the 1¼-mile Derby.

Hansel, ridden by Jerry Bailey, won by seven lengths. Corporate Report, ridden by Pat Day, who won the Preakness last year on Summer Squall, was 2¾ lengths in front of Mane Minister, ridden by Alex Solis.

Strike the Gold finished sixth, beating only two horses.

Hansel, owned by Joe L. Allbritton, paid $20.20, $10.80 and $8. Corporate Report, owned by W.T. Young and trainer D. Wayne Lukas, was $11 and $6.40, while Mane Minister, owned by Trudy McCaffrey and John A. Toffan, was $5.80 to show.

Explaining the last-minute decision to enter Hansel in the Preakness, the 44-year-old Brothers said, "I discussed it with Mr. Allbritton and we decided he deserved another chance. We still have faith in the horse."

Hansel certainly justified that faith on a cool, breezy, overcast Saturday.

"I knew going into the first turn when I had to tug on him to get him off the pace, he was going to run big," said the 33-year-old Bailey, riding in his second Preakness.

Bailey had Hansel third going past the wire for the first time, with one mile left. He was still third behind Corporate Report and Olympio around the turn and into the backstretch.

Those three maintained that order to mid-backstretch, and Corporate Report still led Hansel with a half-mile to go. Best Pal was third and Olympio fourth at that point, with Strike the Gold sixth.

In the final turn, Hansel moved to challenge and he took the lead away from Corporate Report approaching the quarter-pole.

In the stretch run, it quickly became clear Hansel would win the Preakness.

A disappointed Chris Antley, who rode Strike the Gold, said the Derby winner was pinned on the rail all the way and "he didn't get a fair chance anywhere. He'll win the Belmont."

The Triple Crown finale will be the 1½-mile Belmont Stakes on June 8.

Completing the order of finish in the Preakness were Best Pal in fifth, Strike the Gold, Whadjathink and Honor Grades.

The victory was worth 10 points in the Triple Crown challenge for Hansel and tied him with Strike the Gold for first place in the points race. Mane Minister got three points for third and now has six. Corporate Report's five points for second ties him with Best Pal.

The point leader after the three races gets a $1 million bonus. A horse must complete all three races to be eligible.

Hansel, winning for the fourth time in six starts this year and for the sixth in 11 career races, earned $432,772 and boosted his bankroll to $1,244,106.

Hansel had earned his Derby favoritism by winning the Jim Beam and Lexington handicaps impressively. Then he came up flat in the Derby and Brothers said he still doesn't know why.

Derby winner Sunday Silence won the Preakness in 1989, but failed in the Belmont.

Where was Gold?

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Strike the Gold struck out in his bid to stay in contention for the Triple Crown, and it wasn't even close.

The Kentucky Derby winner put himself in an early hole in Saturday's Preakness and never recovered, finishing sixth in the eight-horse field, well behind Hansel, the beaten favorite in the Derby two weeks ago.

Although Strike the Gold roared from behind to win the Derby, jockey Chris Antley knew he couldn't afford to employ the same strategy in the shorter Preakness. In the days leading up to the race, he vowed that he would stay near the pace-setters.

So what happened? Strike the Gold didn't get out of last until the eighth-pole.

"I was shuffled back at the start and got off a touch too slow," Antley said.

Then, when he tried to move up, Antley found himself pinned against the fence by Honor Grades, with no way out of the dilemma. To make matters worse, Strike the Gold kept peering at Honor Grades, ridden by Chris McCarron.

"I went to the whip just to try to get him to run away from McCarron because he was watching Chris' horse all the way," Antley said. "I just couldn't shake that horse loose. I wanted some options and I ended up with no options. He never really got a fair shake."

Wedged inside with nowhere to go, Strike the Gold was never a factor.

By the time Antley cleared the backstretch, he knew he was doomed.

Tech's Walton scores upset

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Tech's Tony Walton got help from Mother Nature and a meet official Saturday as he scored an upset victory in the long jump at the Southwest Conference Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

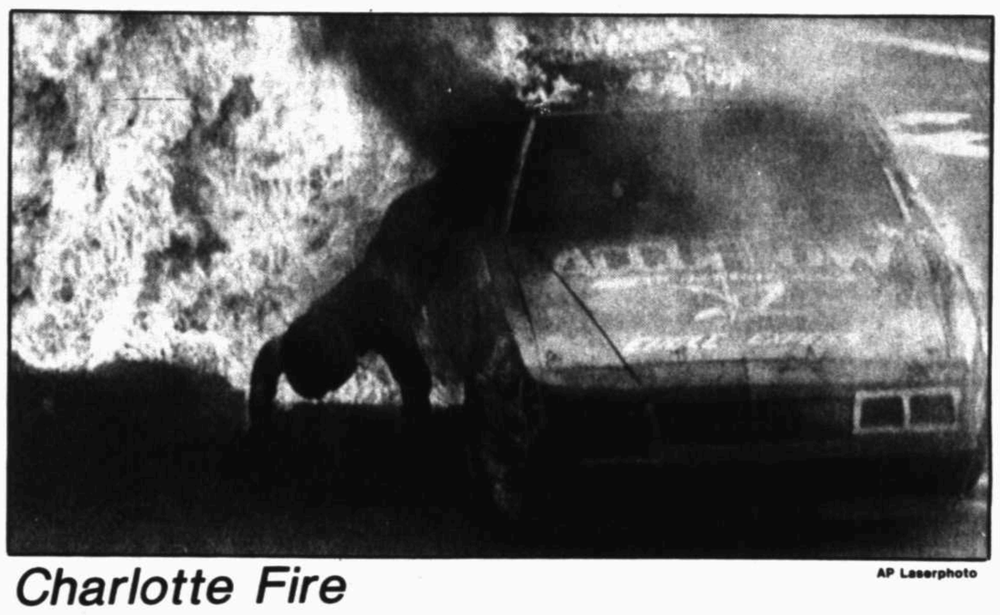

Texas led the men's division after the first day's events with 48 points. Five Arkansas runners finished among the first eight in the 10,000 meters to vault the Hogs into second with 38 points. Texas A&M was third at 28½, while Texas Tech had 25½, Baylor 15, Southern Methodist 14, Rice 11, Texas Christian 8, and Houston 4.

In the women's division, Arkansas leads with 50, while A&M has 38, Baylor 31, Houston 30, Texas 29, Rice and SMU both had 8 and TCU had 1.

Meanwhile, Arkansas' men qualified five each for Sunday's 800- and 1,500-meter finals. The defending men's champion Hogs are heavily favored to win their fourth straight outdoor title and eighth in the last 10 years.

Arkansas is in its final SWC meet before moving to the Southeastern Conference next season.

Finals in most running events and the remainder of the field events are scheduled for Sunday night.

Big Spring, Pecos out of playoffs

Staff Report

Lubbock Estacado put the broom to Pecos in a Class 4A area baseball playoff at Johnson Field Saturday with a 4-2 win in eight innings.

Estacado (18-12) beat Pecos (12-13) by a 6-3 margin Friday to set up the sweep. The Matadors will now face Fort Worth Arlington Heights in the region playoffs this week.

Patrick Williams hit a two-out, two-run single in the top of the eighth inning to win it for Estacado as Albert McBride sent Pecos down in order in the bottom of the inning. McBride went the distance for the win.

In anotehr 4A game, Frenship defeated Big Spring, 5-4, to eliminate the Steers from the playoffs in a two-game sweep.

Frenship, which scored three runs in the fifth on three walks and three Big Spring errors, batted around in the inning without getting a single hit.

Frenship (25-5) will meet Crowley in the regional semifinals.

Cardinals rattle Astros in one-sided slugfest

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Bryn Smith pitched a three-hitter and added a two-run single as the St. Louis Cardinals got a season-high 18 hits in beating the Houston Astros, 12-2.

Pedro Guerrero and Todd Zeile each homered. Guerrero connected in the fourth, when the Cardinals scored six runs, helped by three errors.

The Cardinals got 13 hits in building a 10-0 lead in the fourth inning. Smith (4-1) coasted after that, striking out five and walking two.

Guerrero, Ozzie Smith and Ray Lankford each got three hits. Zeile hit his second homer and Ozzie Smith had a two-run single for a 3-0 lead in the second. Guerrero doubled and later scored on Tim Jones' groundout in the third.

The Cardinals got six runs, all after two were out, in the fourth. Ozzie Smith singled twice in the inning and Guerrero hit a two-run homer, his third, off Xavier Hernandez (0-3).

Bryn Smith later added a bases-loaded, two-run single off reliever Darryl Kile. Errors by third baseman Ken Caminiti, first baseman Jeff Bagwell and shortstop Eric Yelding kept the inning going.

Houston scored twice in the sixth on Craig Biggio's sacrifice fly and Luis Gonzalez's RBI grounder. Craig Wilson hit a two-run single in the St. Louis eighth.

Dodgers 4, Mets 3

LOS ANGELES — Third baseman Gregg Jefferies made errors on consecutive plays in the eighth inning as the Los Angeles Dodgers rallied with lots of help from the New York Mets.

With the score 2-2, two on and two outs, Jefferies couldn't handle Jose Offerman's bouncer between third and short, loading the bases.

Pinch-hitter Jeff Hamilton then hit high chopper near the third base bag which went under Jefferies' glove, allowing two runs to score, capping a four-run rally that spoiled a strong effort from Ron Darling.

NL Roundup

Juan Samuel drew a walk off reliever Pete Schourek to open the eighth and John Franco (1-2) came on with Keith Miller taking over at second base for sure-handed Tom Herr as Mets manager Bud Harrelson made a double switch.

Pinch-hitter Stan Javier then hit what appeared to be an easy double-play grounder to Miller, but he bobbled the ball and both runners were safe.

Eddie Murray followed with an RBI double and the tying run scored as Kal Daniels grounded out to second. Pinch-hitter Gary Carter drew a walk and slow-footed Mike Scioscia reached base on a fielder's choice to third, setting the stage for Jefferies' defensive collapse.

Tim Crews (2-0) pitched a scoreless eighth and Jay Howell pitched the ninth for his seventh save, despite giving up a run-scoring single to Dave Magadan.

Darling blanked the Dodgers on four hits over 6 1-3 innings, walking three and striking out nine.

Schourek relieved Darling with two on and one out in the seventh, and pitched out of trouble by retiring pinch-hitter Darryl Strawberry on a line drive to left and, after a double steal, Brett Butler on a liner to third.

The Mets took a 1-0 lead in the first inning off Tim Belcher on a run-scoring single by Hubie Brooks, and made it 2-0 in the fourth on a solo homer by Kevin McReynolds, his third of the year. The Mets had a three-game winning streak snapped.

Belcher, who didn't make it out of the first inning in his last start, allowing six hits and five runs in two-thirds of an inning, pitched 6 1-3 innings, allowing eight hits and two runs.

Expos 3, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Tim Burke recorded his 100th career save in relief of a strong effort by Oil Can Boyd as the Montreal Expos beat the San Francisco Giants.

The Giants, last in the NL West, have lost 14 of their last 18 games to fall to 12-24.

Boyd (2-4) blanked the Giants on two singles through seven innings and was lifted when Robby Thompson opened the eighth with a double.

Burke retired the first two batters before pinch-hitter Kevin Mitchell was safe on third baseman Tim Wallach's throwing error, enabling Thompson to score from third. Burke pitched a scoreless ninth for his fourth save of the season to finish the combined three-hitter.

The Expos, who have won five of six games against the Giants this season, took a 1-0 lead in the first inning off John Burkett (2-3) on Marquis Grissom's one-out triple and Ivan Calderon's single.

Phillies 5, Cubs 2

PHILADELPHIA — John Kruk hit a two-run double and Ricky Jordan followed with a two-run single in the eighth inning to rally the Philadelphia Phillies past the Chicago Cubs.

Joe Boever (3-3) pitched 1 2-3 innings and Mitch Williams got his eighth save as Philadelphia won for the fifth time in six games. Phillies starter Danny Cox left with a groin injury after retiring the first two batters in the sixth.

Padres 5, Reds 2

CINCINNATI — Adam Peterson pitched six strong innings for his first National League victory and the San Diego Padres ended a three-game losing streak by beating the Cincinnati Reds.

Paul Faries, Fred McGriff and Tony Gwynn had run-scoring singles and Benito Santiago and Bip Roberts had sacrifice flies as the Padres rocked Jack Armstrong (3-2) for only their second victory in 10 games. Tony Fernandez added four hits and scored a run.

ANGELS: Vidmar gets second straight win

(From 1B)

With Midland part of the season last year, Vidmar posted a 1-6 record with a 7.51 ERA. In two starts, he already has more victories than last year. He pitched a no-hitter April 21 against Bakersfield on the way to a 1.70 ERA.

With those kind of numbers at Midland last year, one would think Vidmar might have his doubts about coming back.

"People talk a lot about this park and how hard it is to pitch in, but I'm a ground ball pitcher. If I pitch well, this park won't hurt me. If you get the ball up, you can be hurt, like the homer.

"I have a lot of confidence and I'm a lot more comfortable with myself since I was here last year. I wasn't dominating, but we got good defense and timely hitting. That's a sign of a good club."

Timely hitting came quick as Larry Gonzales, Midland's new clutch hero, came up with three RBI on two key singles in the first and fifth innings. And he wasn't even supposed to be in the game.

"I was a slip-in at the last minute," Gonzales said. "Timmy (Salmon) couldn't go because of an ankle, and I got the call. I had opportunities with men on base and it's hard not to get some runs in when you have that many chances. I'm just trying to put the ball into play."

Newcomer Terry Taylor tripled and doubled home runs in the third and fifth innings for two more key hits. Mark Howie set the table all night, hitting two doubles and scoring three times.

ANGEL NOTES: Former Major Leaguer Alex Trevino is hitting over .300 since joining the Angels on this homestand. Jackson runners stole three bases off of him in the first inning in one game, and he had a throwing error Saturday, but he should be a steadying influence on the Angel pitching staff. Trevino was with the St. Louis Cardinals in spring training this year. He played for both Houston and the New York Mets last year. He has played for every NL West team except San Diego, and has played every position in pro ball except pitcher.

UT wins SWC crown

Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION — The Texas Longhorns captured their 10th Southwest Conference Tournament championship and Cliff Gustafson grabbed his 1,200th career win, stopping Texas Christian 8-6 Saturday night.

For No. 6 Texas, now 46-16, the victory marks the 11th time in the SWC tournament's 15-year history that the regular season champs have also taken the title.

The SWC is going to a double round-robin format next season, without a post-season tournament.

Making their first tournament appearance ever, the 34-25 Horned Frogs are eyeing an NCAA regional berth for the first time since 1956. TCU's championship attempt is the first time a fourth-seeded team has gone that far.

Earlier Saturday, Chris Thomsen's two-run single in the fifth inning propelled TCU to a 4-2 upset victory over Texas A&M, eliminating the 10th-ranked Aggies from tournament play.

Gustafson joins retired USC Coach Rod Dedeaux and Miami Coach Ron Fraser as the third coach to reach the 1,200 plateau. The 60-year-old Gustafson has been at Texas for 24 years.

Texas outfielder Charles Abernathy was named the tournament's most valuable player after going 7-for-10 and collecting six RBIs.

Abernathy, who had started only eight games into the tournament, pushed Texas into the final game with a dramatic two-out, two-run single in the bottom of the ninth to beat Texas A&M 5-4 Friday night. He was 2-for-3 with two RBI against TCU.

Jay Vaught recorded his second win of the tourney in the championship game in relief of starter Doug Pettit and ran his record to 5-0 on the season.

Rick Peters suffered his first loss of the year after four wins.

The Horned Frogs had led 2-0 after one on Thomsen's 21st homer of the year and regained the lead 3-2 in the third on Thomsen's ground out.

Thomsen was 7-for-16 during the tournament with six RBIs, including five in the championship game.

TCU 4, No. 10 Texas A&M 2

COLLEGE STATION — Chris Thomsen's two-run single in the fifth inning propelled upstart Texas Christian to a 4-2 upset victory over Texas A&M Saturday afternoon, eliminating the 10th-ranked Aggies from the 15th annual Southwest Conference Tournament.

Shreveport Captains sued

Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss. — The Shreveport Captains are accused of encouraging on-field brawls like one in 1986 that injured a former Jackson Mets infielder, he claims in a lawsuit.

Dennis Glynn filed suit last week in Hinds County Circuit Court seeking $9 million.

Glynn, who now lives in Virginia, names as defendants the Shreveport Captains, parent company the San Francisco Giants and former Captains player Everett Graham.

Trevino, Hill open lead at PGA Legends

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Lee Trevino and Mike Hill teamed for seven birdies and an eagle Saturday to stretch their lead to five strokes in the $770,000 Legends of Golf.

Their 63 gave them a 30-under 186 total over the par-72 Barton Creek course.

Two teams, Tommy Aaron-Jim Colbert and George Archer-Don Bies, were tied for second at 25-under ,191.

Despite their lead, first captured with a tournament record-tying 59 on Friday, Trevino and Hill said they are taking nothing for granted.

"We're enjoying the lead but we're grinding. We're both grinding," Trevino said.

"I don't think your pride lets you go out there and hit bad shots," Hill added.

First-round leaders Archer and Bies stayed within one shot of Trevino and Hill until the 477-yard 13th hole. Trevino birdied with a downhill 25-foot putt from well off the green, while Archer bogeyed and Bies double-bogeyed.

"I told Mike when I made that, 'That may have been the straw'," Trevino said. "Five shots — I like that (lead) a lot more than two or three."

With an 18-foot putt from the fringe, Trevino added an eagle-3 on the 546-yard 18th.

Aaron and last-minute partner Colbert matched the Trevino-Hill 63 to move into the second-place tie.

Colbert said he got the call last Saturday, after a wrist injury forced Aaron's original partner, Lou Graham, to withdraw.

For the second straight day, Colbert eagled the 527-yard 15th. He holed a wedge on Friday and drained a 12-foot putt Saturday.

"I'm playing good and getting a little better each week — my iron play, my putting, my competitiveness," said Colbert, who has worked as an analyst for ESPN and is playing in only his seventh week on the Senior PGA Tour.

Chi Chi Rodriguez and Dave Hill were fourth at 22-under 194, and three groups were tied one shot behind them.

Roberto De Vicenzo and Charlie Sifford padded their lead in the over-60 Legendary Players division, with its $150,000 purse.

At 194, 22 under par, they were six shots ahead of Billy Maxwell-Charlie Owens and seven better than Bob Toski-Mike Fetchick.

Rangers rock Rocket, 13-5

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Roger Clemens gave up a home run on his first pitch and never recovered, getting pounded for nine runs and his first loss of the season as the Texas Rangers beat up Boston 13-5 Saturday night.

Clemens (6-1) got tagged for 13 hits, and Brian Downing's leadoff homer was the first home run by a right-handed hitter off the Red Sox ace since 1989. Clemens left after giving up four straight singles to start an eight-run sixth inning.

The nine runs matched the most Clemens had ever allowed. He gave up nine runs on June 15, 1988, against New York in a game he also allowed a career-high 15 hits.

Clemens had yielded only six runs in seven previous starts this season, and his ERA jumped from 0.95 to 2.18. Clemens had not gone 163 1-3 innings since giving up his last home run, to Texas' Jack Daugherty on July 8, 1990. Jose Canseco was the last righty to connect off Clemens, on Sept. 15, 1989.

A crowd of 42,696, the third-largest in Arlington Stadium history, watched Clemens, a former All-American at the University of Texas, struggle from the start.

Downing led off with his second home run of the year and the Rangers scored four runs on six hits in the third inning. Kevin Reimer had an RBI double and Ruben Sierra and Julio Franco hit run-scoring singles.

After the Red Sox pulled within 5-4, the Rangers erupted in the sixth. Jeff Huson, Downing, Geno Petralli and Rafael Palmeiro opened with singles for two runs, finishing Clemens. Sierra hit a two-run triple off Daryl Irvine and Steve Buechele hit a three-run homer.

Downing and Petralli each got three hits off Clemens. Downing finished with four of Texas' 17 hits.

AL Roundup

Twins 4, Tigers 1

DETROIT — Shane Mack and Kirby Puckett each hit home runs as the Minnesota Twins sent Detroit to its eighth straight loss.

The eight-game skid is the longest for the Tigers since they lost 12 straight in 1989.

Mark Guthrie (3-2) gave up one run and five hits in six innings for the win. Rick Aguilera, who worked two innings for his seventh save, loaded the bases on three walks in the ninth, before Alan Trammell hit a fly ball to end the game.

Mariners 4, Yankees 1

NEW YORK — Pat Rice pitched 5⅔ scoreless innings against New York in his major league debut as the first-place Seattle Mariners beat the Yankees.

Seattle, 22-14 and eight games over .500 for the first time in club history, moved into first place in the American League West on Friday. It is the latest the Mariners have been in first.

Athletics 3, Indians 0

CLEVELAND — Andy Hawkins pitched 5⅓ shutout innings in his Oakland debut and Dave Henderson hit his major league-leading 11th home run as the Athletics beat the Cleveland Indians.

Hawkins (1-2) was released by the New York Yankees on May 9 after he went 0-2 with a 9.95 ERA in four appearances. He agreed to terms with Oakland five days later and was added to their roster before Saturday's game.

Blue Jays 9, White Sox 2

CHICAGO — Rookie Ed Sprague hit his first major league homer and Jimmy Key pitched four-hit ball for seven innings as the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Chicago White Sox.

Royals 7, Brewers 4

Angels 4, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Wally Joyner homered and drove in four runs, including a tiebreaking single in the ninth inning that led the California Angels over the Baltimore Orioles.

Perry keeps score down

Associated Press

DUBLIN, Ohio — Kenny Perry successfully passed one of the biggest tests of his pro career Saturday, and now faces an even greater challenge.

Perry shot a 3-under-par 69 Saturday in the Memorial tournament and it came on the heels of a course-record 63. He held a two-stroke lead over Corey Pavin with Jack Nicklaus fifth, just six strokes back at 208 after 54 holes.

"This was a big day for me," said Perry, 31, a non-winner in five years on tour. "I've had some setbacks in my career. I knew it was important for me to go out and shoot a good score, not back off."

He accomplished that goal with the 69 on the rain-soaked Muirfield Village Golf Club course.

"It was a nice round to back up yesterday," said Perry, who completed three rounds at 202, 14 under par.

Now, however, the test is even more difficult. Sunday he will attempt to score his first victory against line-up of challengers includes Pavin, the hottest player in the game.

PGA

LPGA's richest getting richer

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Pat Bradley, who has earned more money on the LPGA Tour than any other player, took the third-round lead Saturday in the richest tournament in women's golf.

Bradley, who has won almost $3.5 million during her 17-year career, shot a 3-under-par 69 in the $1.1 million Centel Classic for a 9-under-par total of 207 after three trips around the 6,367-yard Killearn Country Club layout.

Another veteran, Judy Dickinson, was just one shot back after a 70 in the chase for a $165,000 winner's check.

Second-round leader Ayako Okamoto dropped two shots off the pace after shooting a 72. England's Laura Davies and Patty Sheehan were at 210.

Juli Inkster shot the day's best round, a 5-under 67, and moved into contention at 211.

"We're so bunched up that it keeps everybody in the go position ... on the offensive," Bradley said. "I think it's going to come down to 16, 17 and 18."

Soviets learning the cost of justice

Secretary of State James A. Baker III thought it would be nice for the Soviet Union to support a United Nations police force to replace the 8,151 troops from the United States and other allied nations now guarding Kurdish refugees in northern Iraq. The Soviets had other ideas.

Their main concern was self-serving — such as not further straining their relationship with Saddam Hussein and Iraq, which in the past has been a major arms customer. So much for the new cooperative spirit of the communists in working toward world peace and international harmony.

Baker's call last week echoed President George Bush's assertion that the war in the Persian Gulf was, in fact, a multinational cause rather than a war between the United States and Iraq, and in that light a United Nations police force would be the logical choice to prevent future warring in Iraq. Under its charter, one of the four purposes of the United Nations is to preserve world peace and security, and in that capacity a U.N. police force would have relieved the United States of the major burden of maintaining the peace in Iraq.

Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander A. Bessmertnykh explained the refusal by saying, "A thin line separates the necessity for humanitarian support and the concern for the sovereignty of countries. It is a very intricate balance."

Actually Iraq's sovereignty was compromised when Saddam sent his troops into Kuwait to rape and kill the Kuwaiti people and to threaten to bring the industrialized world to its knees for wont of oil, although Saddam obviously didn't recognize it at the time. The matter that was put before the Soviet Union was merely permitting an international police force to assume the responsibility for protecting the Kurds and keeping the peace in Iraq. It would have given the United States the opportunity to back away from what could turn into an ugly, drawn-out affair.

For the 3,286 Americans and 4,865 other allies still assigned to Iraq the Soviet refusal means no relief is in sight and may conceivably not be forthcoming. Either the Soviet Union or China could kill the drive for a U.N. police force with a veto which the Soviets seem intent on doing.

It's tough being at the forefront of those forces working for peace and justice regardless of the cost. The Soviets find that cost too steep.

Iran hopes to expand its empire to Iraq

WASHINGTON — Iran is a nation that has waged war, terrorism and subversion throughout the Persian Gulf — but none of these is as dangerous as the brand of diplomacy it is now deploying. Although Iran has won points for helping Iraqi refugees, it is engaged in a "secret" war against Iraq designed to take over that Arab country. This new plan might be labeled vulture diplomacy for the way Iran plans to build an expanded empire on the remains of its former rival.

Once again, the man at the center is Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani, who heads a government that is a hotbed of "moderates" courted by both the Reagan and Bush administrations. Rafsanjani is scheming to establish a pro-Iranian Islamic regime in Baghdad, and finish the job started by the Americans by moving over Saddam Hussein and his Sunni Muslims in the process. He has demographics on his side: Up to 60 percent of the Iraqi people are Shiite, the brand of Islam that makes up fully 95 percent of Iran.

Two of Shiite Islam's most holy cities, Najaf and Karbala, are in Iraq, and Iran has always wanted to wrest control of them from the opposition Sunni sect that Saddam Hussein and his predecessors belong to.

Rafsanjani knows that placing a Shiite puppet government in Iraq would achieve more than one glory. It would not only project Iranian power and influence, but would also fulfill the deathbed wish of the Ayatollah Khomeini, who long wanted to annex southern Iraq.

Rafsanjani virtually has a government-in-exile for the task. Ayatollah Mohammed Bakr Hakim, a top Islamic leader in Iraq, would be tapped to run Iraq, and has been an Iranian puppet for some time — even helping Iran plot Saddam's overthrow.

U.S. intelligence estimates suggest Hakim has fielded as many as 5,000 Iraqi guerrillas, arming and training them, and sending them across the border to battle. Many were taken prisoner during the eight-year war between Iran and Iraq, and converted to the Iranian side.

The Iranians have every reason to suspect they can carry out this plan with impunity and hardly a peep from the American government, which seems to be on a perpetual fool's errand when it comes to relations with Iran. The so-called moderates President Bush has spied are members of the corrupt regime of President Rafsanjani and his clerical partner in crime, Ayatollah Ali Khameini, Iran's supreme religious authority. They continue to denounce the United States, to arrest and beat women for dress code infractions, to torture and execute political opponents and countenance the taking of Western hostages.

Apologists for Rafsanjani, who is often described as "pragmatic," explain away his actions as a need to placate radicals.

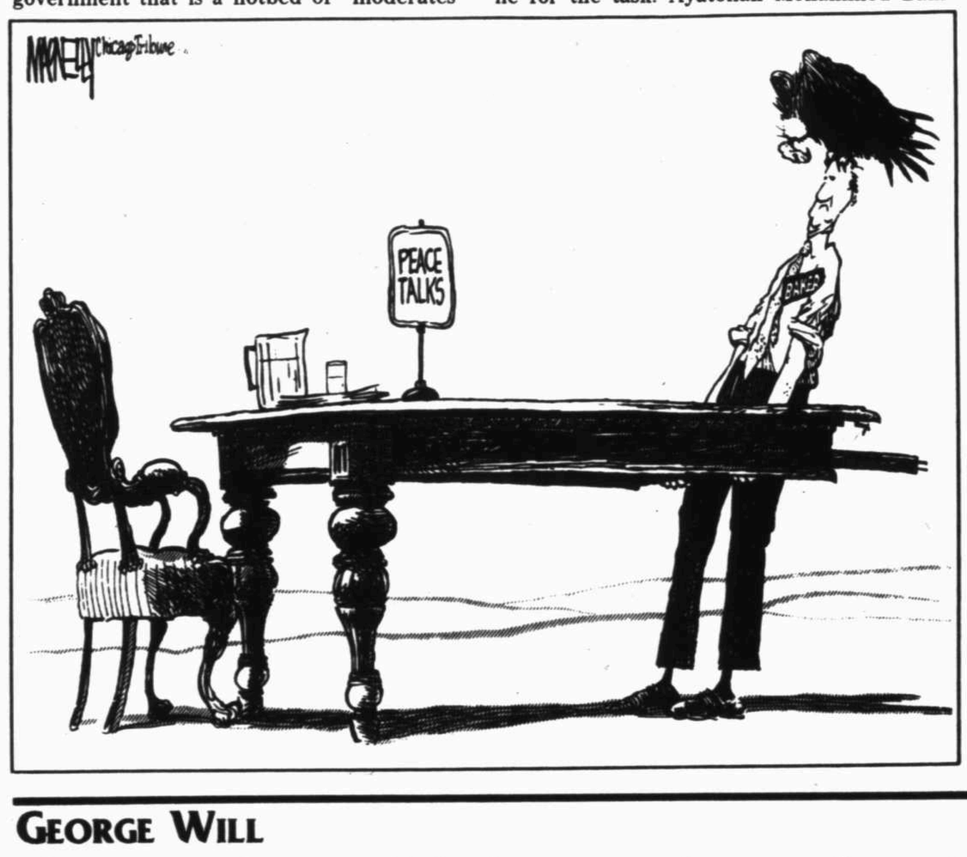

For a leader trying to walk a fine line, Rafsanjani's rhetoric is about as subtle as a Scud missile. During his April 12 "Friday Prayer Sermon," Rafsanjani slammed the United States for its battle against Iraq — swearing that "the United States will eventually be put on trial"— and then vowed to "abide by ... the path of Imam Khomeini."

The support and stoking of Shiite rebellion in southern Iraq began almost immediately after the U.S.-led victory against Iraq. On March 3, the head of the Iranian Assembly of Experts in his Friday Prayer proclaimed: "The people of Iraq must take advantage of this opportunity to free themselves."

Khomeini may have died in 1989, but his spirit lives on in the rhetoric and actions of his most radical disciples, and the so-called moderate/pragmatic ones like Rafsanjani who continue to lead Tehran.

As the Iranians carry out their vulture diplomacy, they have reasons to believe they will be met by columns of appeasement from the West.

Brady Bill needed, police officers say

Supporters of the Brady Bill celebrated for good reason.... House members finally mustered the courage to fight crime with a mandated waiting period before the purchase of a handgun.

The bipartisan defeat in the House sets the stage for a showdown in the Senate between the backers of the Brady Bill and the National Rifle Association, which stoutly opposes it....

The bill ... would require a nationwide seven-day wait between application for a handgun and the sale. The waiting period would allow time for background checks on applicants to determine if any criminal or mental disability records disqualify them as a buyer.

The NRA opposes the bill because it views the required wait as a violation of the Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms....

The NRA's proposed alternative to the Brady Bill would have put off any effective delays in handgun purchases for years. The NRA proposal would have required checking for criminal records on an FBI hotline. That, in fact, is a good idea. But the hotline doesn't exist, and it would have required several years and millions of dollars to start it. The hotline should be added in subsequent legislation.

A fact that the NRA likes to ignore is that strong support for the Brady Bill comes from major, nationwide law enforcement organizations. Those organizations want the waiting period so that local departments can run background checks. Many policemen and other officers believe they will have to contend with fewer weapons in the hands of criminals and psychopaths if the law makes it harder for them to get handguns. Nothing in the law is aimed at depriving law-abiding, sane citizens of their Second Amendment rights. ...

GEORGE WILL

Quest for efficiency is going the wrong way

WASHINGTON — Nevada's Senator Richard Bryan is a Democrat who has picked a democratic fight, one involving everyone. Everyone, including Nevadans, who drive long distances at high speeds, usually in cars bigger than the senator's bill would allow.

Will

His bill would raise CAFE (corporate average fuel economy) standards from the current 27.5 miles per gallon to approximately 34 in 1996 and 40 in 2001. His is a perversely efficient proposal, demonstrating the many vagaries of regulations and the many ways intended improvements can make matters worse.

Driving is the most dangerous thing most Americans do. Bryan's bill would make it more so. Furthermore, it probably would have negligible, and perhaps negative, influence on fuel consumption and the environment.

There are two basic means of increasing automobile fuel efficiency. One is technological innovation that improves the burning of fuel and the transmitting of the resultant energy through the vehicle's drivetrain. The other is by making vehicles lighter.

Not even Congress can limitlessly command technological improvements. Today increased fuel mileage depends increasingly on lightening vehicles, frightening for a nation in which about 130 people — casualties comparable to those in an airline crash — die on roads daily.

The reduction of car sizes, and of the ratios of steel to mass, has made the average American car 23 percent lighter than in 1974. In the 1978 model year, 25 percent of the new cars weighed more than 4,000 pounds. Only one percent of cars built since 1984 do.

Robert Crandall of the Brookings Institution and John Graham of the Harvard School of Public Health, both economists, calculate that the 500-pound weight reduction that they ascribe to CAFE standards has increased fatalities over the life of each year's model cars between 14 and 27 percent, or 2,200 to 3,900 extra deaths over the lifetime of each year's vehicles. Crandall estimates that Bryan's proposed 40 mpg standard would require weight and steel-content reductions sufficient to increase CAFE-related deaths to between 4,800 and 8,600 over the life of a model year.

Safety, including human life, is part of an unavoidable trade-off in public policy. If we really regarded life as "priceless," or even so precious that radical measures were justified to reduce traffic deaths radically, we would willingly pay steep prices in inconveniences. We would, to cite just one example, ban left turns, which often are occasions for lethal accidents.

Safety is only one reason for the revival of consumer demand for bigger cars. America's population is aging. Baby boomers have had babies and have discovered the limited charm of close confinement with loved ones on long trips, or even short ones. The elderly value ease of ingress and egress from cars.

William Laffer, regulatory analyst for the Heritage Foundation, notes a perverse effect of the mixture of today's CAFE standards and consumer preferences. The standards are calculated not on a manufacturer's model-by-model improvements but the average of a manufacturer's total annual output. In essence, manufacturers are penalized for the improved fuel efficiency of large cars that shifts their sales mix from smaller to larger cars.

Is there an environmental, and hence public health, benefit commensurate with CAFE costs? Laffer argues that approximately 50 percent of all auto pollutants come from 10 percent of all cars — generally the worst tuned and usually the oldest. If Bryan's CAFE standards become law, new large cars will become much more expensive because manufacturers will raise prices of large cars to subsidize prices and stimulate sales of small cars, to improve their fleet fuel economy average.

George Will's column is distributed by Washington Post Writers Group.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, May 19th, the 139th day of 1991. There are 226 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 19, 1536, Anne Boleyn, the second wife of England's King Henry VIII, was beheaded after she was convicted of adultery. (Anne had fallen from Henry's favor because their marriage did not result in any male heirs; however, she did give birth to a daughter, who later became Queen Elizabeth I.)

On this date:

In 1780, a mysterious darkness enveloped much of New England and part of Canada in the early afternoon. The cause has never been determined.

In 1906, the Federated Boys' Clubs, forerunner of the Boys' Clubs of America, were organized.

In 1921, Congress passed the Emergency Quota Act, which established national quotas for immigrants entering the U.S.

In 1989, on Wall Street, the Dow Jones Industrial Average passed the 2,500 mark, ending the day at 2,501.10.

Today's birthdays: PBS newscaster Jim Lehrer is 57. TV personality David Hartman is 56. Author Nora Ephron is 50. Rock singer-composer Peter Townshend is 46. Singer-actress-model Grace Jones is 39. Singer Joey Ramone is 39. Baseball catcher Rick Cerone is 37.

Bonesmen hear bones rattling in the closet

The Eastern Establishment press, also known as the press for people who think they're better than everybody else, has been filled lately with news about Skull and Bones. This is a secret society at Yale, composed of men who are expected to do very well in life and sometimes do. A typical member is George Bush, of whom it is often said, "He is Skull and Bones to the marrow."

Baker

This is one of the highest compliments a member of Skull and Bones can pay another. If, however, the compliment is paid by anyone not a member of Skull and Bones, the complimented member must immediately leave the room. In the highly unlikely event that President Bush, for example, had started reading this column over breakfast at the White House, he would already have dropped his toast and jam without a word to Barbara and marched out of the room, since I am not a member of Skull and Bones.

This is but one of the many Spartan rules Bonesmen must live by. Note, for instance, that they are always called "Bonesmen." Never "Skull-and-Bonesmen." Never "Skullmen."

What has made Skull and Bones newsworthy in the Eastern Establishment press is the attempt by Yale's undergraduate members ("Boneskids") to admit women. This has so flustered old-timer members ("Bonesfogeys") that they locked the doors of their historic old windowless meeting hall (the "Bonestomb"), thus shutting off access to their astonishing museum of relics.

Why the opposition to admitting women? No, it is not because tradition dies hard. In America nothing dies easier than tradition. The problem is with language.

Bonesmen fear the answer is women will balk at being called Bonesmen. At best, they suspect that women would insist on being called "Boneswomen," but they suspect the worst; to wit, that women would denounce both "Bonesmen" and "Boneswomen" as oppressively sexist words and demand that everyone — even Bonesmen! — be called "Bonespersons."

It takes little imagination to grasp how somebody long accustomed to thinking of himself as a "Bonesman" might feel life had lost a lot of ginger once he became a "Bonesperson." He might even feel foolish giving a Bonescram alert when he hears somebody refer to members as "Skull-and-Bonespersons" or "Skullpersons."

When secret-society members start feeling foolish about doing what's necessary, they stop doing it, and soon it's no fun at all being a member. Pretty soon Skull and Bones might start letting down its standards, and before long nobody at all, anywhere in the world, would be leaving the room immediately just because somebody had asked a perfectly boring question.

Speaking of which, I am unable to confirm a rumor that nothing matters more to Bonesmen than having their shirts starched perfectly.

"You can always tell a Bonesman," they say in the laundry trades. "Put too much starch in his shirt, and he'll whip you within an inch of your life. Put in too little, and he'll immediately leave the room."

I have talked constantly of starch in rooms infested with great men and everyone has always left the room almost immediately. This proves nothing, of course, except what everybody has always known: While Bonesmen leave rooms for no reason, the whole world hates a starch bore.

SPEAKING OUT

EMT critics need to ride with EMTs

By John Darrell Davidson

John Darrell Davidson has lived in Midland 24 years. He is program director of Fire Protection Technology and Emergency Medical Services at Midland College.

Many times one hears negative comments made about Emergency Medical Services (EMS) personnel both as a group and individually. May 12 through May 18 was national EMS week and I would like to correct some common misconceptions concerning EMS in Midland and around the country.

First, Emergency Medical Technicians (EMT) and paramedics are medical professionals. EMS is recognized by the American Medical Association as a medical profession and has been for over 10 years. Many other medical professionals have a problem with EMTs and paramedics as medical professionals because their schooling is somewhat shorter than some others. EMS can get people on the street faster because their training is more specialized in emergencies.

A good contrast can be made between nursing school and paramedic school: nursing school deals with general clinical training and emphasizes dealing with non-emergency patients in a hospital. The emergency training in most nursing schools consists of a four- to eight-hour classroom period and between eight and 20 hours of clinical training in the emergency department. Additional training in emergency comes if, after graduation, the nurse decides to specialize in emergency nursing. Paramedics focus all of their time dealing with emergency patients in the emergency department of the hospital and on the "streets" in an ambulance.

Because many paramedics lack training with non-emergency patients in the hospital setting, they may appear to some in the hospital setting to be incompetent or untrained. However, on a dirty, grimy floor or on pavement that approaches 140 degrees following a car accident is where the paramedic's skills shine. By the way, paramedics must have 160 hours of continuing education and then retest on all skills and written exams from the Texas Department of Health every four years.

Just a few months ago a young child was choking on food and could not breathe. Even though this child's throat structure prevented standard methods of removal of the object, the paramedics continued doing what they could until the object was removed and the child's life was saved. If they had not been there or had just picked the child up and rushed him to the hospital (as their predecessors from 25 years ago would have done), there is a very great probability that permanent brain damage or death would have resulted.

The difference between in-hospital and pre-hospital situations can be seen by riding on an ambulance. Working by flashlight on a gunshot wound while the police have guns drawn on the hostiles all around you, "extricating" a victim from what used to be a car and performing one's assessment while upside down with radiator fluid dripping all around you, flicking cockroaches off of an elderly patient who was found on the floor hours after an incident occurred — all are part of everyday life in EMS! Some cities even issue body armor to paramedics.

Most medical personnel recognize us as medical professionals and I want to thank them. Many of these people start as paramedics or cross-train as such and are willing to help in the education of EMS providers. Thanks especially to you who enroll in EMS classes and to those doctors who come and add their expertise to the training programs.

In Midland, as in most cities, EMS is operated by the fire department. Because of this, firefighters are trained to the basic EMT level and many are paramedics. When one calls for an emergency medical problem one will sometimes get a "fire truck" first and wonder why. The reason is that not every fire station has an ambulance and the dispatchers will send the closest fire unit so that help can be there quickly. The ambulance is usually not far behind, but the cross-trained firefighters can do much for an emergency patient. The two services, fire and EMS, are inseparable in this city. The first priority at a fire is life safety and rescue for which all firefighters are trained. The fire vehicles are a part of EMS, just as the ambulances are part of the fire department.

This information is just to clarify that just because we wear blue and black uniforms instead of white jacket does not mean that we are not truly medical professionals. Just the opposite is true and, contrary to popular belief, no one is out there for the "glory," they are out there for you.

For more information concerning EMS in Midland, contact Midland College or the Midland Fire Department.

Let's get down to the meat of the matter

In last Sunday's (May 12) Midland Reporter-Telegram in the front page article, "Oil industry proves it can cook," it was stated that Bob Williamson and his M-I Drilling Fluids team prepared most of the briskets that were served for lunch. I'm sure that Bob and his team appreciated the publicity, but they also may have received some bad publicity as the briskets were prepared by the other cookers.

The briskets that Bob and his team prepared were wrapped and sold separately for $20 per brisket. I served in the food serving line and heard several complaints on some of the brisket that was served, such as it being too fat and some being so tough that you couldn't eat it. Bob Williamson and M-I Drilling Fluids have worked hard and diligently for the PBPA every year and I do not think they should take the rap for any bad briskets that were served.

READERS' VIEWS on:

MISD bond election

Passing MISD bond was right thing to do

Regarding the recently approved school bond proposal, I am writing this letter to the people of Midland who pulled together and did the right thing for the children of our community. A big thank you goes out to all of you.

I especially want to thank a special person whose children attend Santa Rita, her name is Sherry Malouf. She never gave up, and her excitement for this issue excited people all over town. Another person I would like to thank personally is Rick Cauble who worked so hard at getting our "Children are the Future" T-shirts out to people all over town.

I just want to say how proud I am of this town for pulling together and getting yourselves informed on issues concerning our children.

Children are the future.

Fannin Elementary staff thanks voters

We are very grateful for the support shown by Midlanders who helped us pass the school bond proposals during the recent election.

You have always backed education, and this victory was truly an unselfish gesture on your part for all of "our" children.

Thank you, Midland!

Concerned neighbors are priceless assets

I want to express my appreciation for the "Neighborhood Watch." For four years, although I still own property in Midland, I have lived elsewhere.

When my property was damaged the good neighbors reported it.

High court ruling gives 48 hours new meaning

Once again the Rehnquist court has shown its appetite for nibbling away at the constitutional protections we once thought we had, without discarding those protections entirely.

Wicker

The latest example is our newly curtailed right — not just some suspected criminal's right, but that of every American — to prompt release if one of us has been arrested mistakenly or without proper cause.

Don't think it can't happen to you. Police are entitled to make arrests without a warrant when, for example, they witness a crime in progress, or think they have some other reason to collar a suspect.

They can make mistakes, too. Just last fall, Dee Brown, the Boston Celtics' top draft choice, a black math and computer science major, was confronted at gunpoint because police saw him near the scene of a bank robbery in a white neighborhood, and thought he looked like the "perpetrator."

When that sort of thing happens, whether to a real criminal or to a blameless citizen like Brown, a judge must decide whether the arrest was proper.

In 1975, a far different Supreme Court from this one held that such a "probable cause" determination must be made "promptly after arrest."

That court did not define "promptly." This week, the Rehnquist court did. "Promptly," said Justice Sandra Day O'Connor for a divided (5-4) court, means within 48 hours, not including holidays and weekends.

So if you're arrested and thrown in jail for no good reason — and it's happened to plenty of law-abiding Americans — you can be kept for two days and two nights, with no official chance to protest your innocence — which the Constitution says you're not supposed to have to prove anyway.

Those 48 hours, Justice O'Connor wrote, provide an "appropriate balance" between the state's interest in public safety and the individual's right not to suffer "prolonged detention" for no reason.

She might not be so glib about "balance" if it were she who had to spend two days and nights, without probable cause, in a typical municipal jail.

The 48-hour rule, moreover, is hardly necessary to maintain public safety. A federal appeals court had thought 36 hours enough, before the Rehnquist court overruled it. Of the 50 states, 29 now manage to get a suspect before a magistrate in only 24 hours.

Owing to the Rehnquist court's expansive notion of what "promptly" means, however, it's predictable that some of those 29 states will backslide to 48 hours of unchallengeable detention.

War in Persian Gulf taught President Bush valuable lesson

Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — In another historic move to safeguard humanity from one of the most horrible aspects of war, President Bush has proposed conclusion and signing of an international treaty next year for a worldwide ban on all chemical weapons.

Representing one of the boldest steps of his presidency and in accord with his aspiration to create a new world order of peace and security, the president has reversed his stand on several key issues that were considered by some of the 39-nation Geneva conference delegates to be stumbling blocks to conclusion of the treaty.

President Bush dropped his demand to keep 2 percent of our 30,000-ton stockpile of chemical weapons for self-defense until all nations capable of building them have signed the treaty.

He also pledged that once the treaty has been signed, the United States will not use chemical weapons for any reason, including retaliation for a chemical arms attack against Americans anywhere.

He was encouraged to take this risk because of a major lesson learned in the Persian Gulf War. That was our ability to defeat the world's fourth largest army and potentially powerful air force with our advanced and untested-in-conflict conventional warfare capabilities. These included high-altitude intelligence surveillance of ground targets coupled with the pinpoint accuracy of our laser-guided bombs delivered by mostly invulnerable bombers and fighter planes as well as the highly accurate Patriot missiles. America's modern conventional weapons are now considered more effective in defeating the enemy than chemical ones.

President Bush originally devised the idea of retaining only a small stockpile of chemical weapons. He persuaded Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to sign with him last year a draft agreement providing that the two superpowers would reduce their stockpiles by about 98 percent if and when an international treaty is signed and ratified.

The Bush-Gorbachev agreement was very unpopular with Israel, China, India, Pakistan, Syria, Iraq and other chemical weapons-producing countries.

However, the president is prepared to use, if necessary, some clout against the holdouts. He proposes to punish countries that refuse to sign the treaty by cutting off the export of U.S. commercial chemicals that can be used in the development of chemical weapons. He might also apply other economic sanctions against the holdouts. It will undoubtedly take powerful pressure to make them give up barbarically cruel weapons. Until the Arab and Moslem nations outlaw them, Israel cannot be expected to do so.

By order of the president, the Commerce Department in March extended from 11 to 50 the list of potential chemical or biological arms ingredients subject to federal control and tightened licensing rules for anything that could be used in making chemical weapons.

Verification remains the most difficult obstacle to international agreement on a worldwide ban. However, Bush administration experts have been working for some time on this problem, and the president may have submitted a proposal to the Geneva Chemical Weapons Convention by the time you read this column.

Bush has also dropped his demand that a reliable organization, such as the International Atomic Energy Agency, have the right to inspect "anytime anywhere" suspected chemical weapons facilities. He is willing to make any reasonable compromise to get the treaty signed. It could be one of the greatest legacies of his presidency.

President Bush has proposed that the Geneva conference, which resumed last Tuesday, remain in session to resolve all major issues by the end of this year so the treaty could be completed and signed next year. The president has promised that once the treaty is signed, the United States will immediately start destroying our 30,000-ton stockpile and complete destruction within 10 years. He has persuaded President Gorbachev to do likewise.

What an epochal gift to the human race it would be if the United States and other chemical weapons-possessing nations destroyed them and outlawed production under threat of an international economic boycott of any nation that started doing so.

State senator wins Congress' 3rd District seat

DALLAS (AP) — State Rep. Sam Johnson edged fellow Republican Tom Pauken in Saturday's runoff for the 3rd District seat in Congress, according to complete unofficial returns.

Election officials said Johnson got 23,990 votes or 52.6 percent of the 45,617 ballots counted with all 179 precincts reporting in Dallas and Collin Counties.

"I want to be and will be a congressman that you can be proud of," Johnson said after all the votes were in. "I intend to represent all the people."

Pauken got 21,627 votes or 47.4 percent for his third narrow loss in a congressional race.

"Obviously, it didn't turn out the way we had hoped," Pauken said. "I'm a great believer that things are meant to be and obviously ... it's not meant for me to go to Congress."

Johnson, of Plano, and Pauken, a Dallas businessman-community activist, topped a field of a dozen special election candidates in balloting May 4. At that time, Pauken got 28 percent of the vote and Johnson polled 20 percent.

Saturday's election was one of several runoffs scheduled following the municipal elections, including a contest for mayor of Austin between former Travis County commissioner Bruce Todd against council member Robert Barnstone.

Computer problems were still delaying Austin's tabulation at 10:45 p.m., and the counting was expected to last past midnight, the city clerk's office said.

The 3rd District ranges from the affluent Park Cities through North Dallas to suburban Plano, Richardson and Carrollton. It has been represented by Republicans for more than a generation.

Johnson will succeed Rep. Steve Bartlett, R-Dallas, who resigned to run for mayor of Dallas. That election also had been scheduled for May 4, but was blocked by a federal appeals court considering questions about minority representation on the Dallas City Council.

Both men are politically savvy Vietnam War veterans. Johnson, a career U.S. Air Force fighter pilot, spent seven years as a prisoner of war. Pauken, who enlisted in the Army, was an intelligence officer.

Pauken, a columnist and radio commentator, was active in Dallas' council redistricting dispute. Johnson, softer spoken, had opposed Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock's support of a state income tax.

Todd led the race for Austin mayor two weeks ago, getting 26,340 votes, to Barnstone's 24,322.

Barnstone has said as mayor, his first concern would be to set spending priorities. Todd has said his first priority would be to enact meaningful consolidation of governmental services.

The Austin election gained national attention when candidate John Johnson confessed to being a convicted killer and former mobster with the Campisi family of New Jersey.

Johnson, who said he had been living in Austin under the federal witness protection program, placed last in the field of seven candidates.

Media opposes proposal

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawmakers, hit by years of news reports about lavish spending by lobbyists and editorial calls for reform, struck back in a House ethics bill.

Along with provisions on legislative ethics, the bill includes an amendment that would impose new requirements for editorials by newspapers, television and radio stations.

Media groups say it's unconstitutional. Even the author, Rep. Eddie Cavazos, said they may be right.

As explained by Cavazos, the amendment would require editorials on legislative matters to be accompanied by a list of advertisers that might be affected by the legislation.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, presiding officer of the Senate, said he would try to remove the amendment.

Burleson from Texas' 'golden era'

'It's not so much the power as it is that Texas has traditionally given this country an awful lot of political and congressional leadership.'

— George Christian, LBJ's ex-spokesman

By Jennifer Dixon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The death of 85-year-old Omar Burleson closes the door on a generation of powerful Texas politicians who scattered military bases and airports from the High Plains to the Gulf, brought electricity to the state's rural corners and the space age to Houston.

Burleson, says one historian, served at a time when "men were men, women wore beehives," committee chairmen had unchallenged authority and Texas was at a pinnacle of political power.

Burleson was chairman of the House Committee on Administration in the late 1950s and early 1960s, at a time when both the speaker of the House, Sam Rayburn, and the Senate majority leader, Lyndon B. Johnson, were Texans.

During Burleson's 32-year tenure, Texas politicians also controlled veterans, appropriations, banking, science and agriculture committees.

Those Texas powerhouses, historians say, were rural yellow-dog Democrats with a lock on their seats and their committees and the savvy to cut a deal for their districts.

"THEY CERTAINLY were the stalwarts of Texas; they represented the state for many years and contributed to the many great assets our state has today — Johnson Space Center, the electrification of rural areas ... tremendous contributions to our state and nation," says Rep. Greg Laughlin, D-West Columbia.

They also gave the country leadership on national and international matters, from banking and farm policy to veterans issues, defense and social programs, says George Christian, LBJ's spokesman from 1966-1969.

"We oldtimers tend to look back at that as sort of a golden era of Texas leadership in Washington," But Christian says he doesn't believe that leadership translated into great economic benefits for the state, although there was a "little bacon."

Bullitt Lowry, associate professor of history at the University of North Texas in Denton, says that while the Texans weren't able to get their hands on "an inordinate amount of pork" for the state, they did get their share of lakes, public works projects, a handful of airports and military installations, and the Johnson Space Center.

"They were ... a different breed — 'old boys,'" Lowry says.

A.C. Greene, coordinating director of the Center for Texas Studies at the University of North Texas, says Burleson's May 14 death at an Abilene hospital marks the passing of the old guard of Texas politicians, Democrats who represented rural or vast agricultural districts. They were elected young, re-elected easily for years, and built their seniority into fortress-like positions on the committees they led.

BURLESON, FIRST elected to Congress in 1946, represented the 17th District, a vast stretch of arid farming and grazing land across Central and West Texas. He was chairman of the House Committee on Administration from 1956 to 1968, when he relinquished the chairmanship for a seat on the House Ways and Means Committee.

During his time in Congress, Burleson served with Wright Patman of Texarkana, who was chairman of the Banking Committee for 12 years in the 1960s and 1970s; George Mahon of Colorado City, chairman of the Appropriations Committee for 16 years in the 1960s and 1970s; Olin Earl "Tiger" Teague of College Station, who headed Veterans and Science and Space committees between much of 1955 and 1978; and William Robert Pogue of Waco, chairman of the Agriculture Committee between 1967 and 1975.

Toward the end of his tenure, Ray Roberts of McKinney took over the veterans committee and served between 1975 and 1981.

Roberts is retired and living in Texas; the rest have died.

While it was a golden era of leadership, Christian says, "the leadership in recent times has been just as great. You can't discount the type of leadership we have now, which in many ways is stronger than before."

Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat who came to the Senate in 1971, agrees.

"TODAY THAT tradition continues. We don't have a speaker, but with the Texas delegation more united on issues affecting our state than any other large state, and with a good share of congressional chairmanships, the Texas delegation remains a powerful force," Bentsen says.

But the committee chairmen today don't have the power of the chairmen of Burleson's day, when challenging their authority was almost unheard of. They served before the proliferation of subcommittees and staff, before so many special interests held such sway, before trillion dollar deficits and huge entitlement programs gobbled up the federal pie.

Nevertheless, says Christian, the nation's fiscal policy has the fingerprints of Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. Farm policy bears the stamp of Rep. Kika de la Garza of Mission, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, and banking, the mark of House Banking Committee Chairman Henry B. Gonzalez of San Antonio. And Rep. Jack Brooks of Beaumont is making his mark as chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

Queen's signature valuable, expert says

AUSTIN (AP) — Fans of Queen Elizabeth II lucky enough to wrangle an autograph from Her Royal Highness during her Texas visit next week could wind up with a slip of paper that has more than sentimental value.

The going price most autograph collectors would pay for anything the queen signs starts at $317, said documents dealer Gregory Heyer of Austin.

If she signed her own photograph, the price would increase to $450. A typed letter with an original signature would fetch $590. A handwritten letter would bring $715, according to national averages supplied to autograph dealers, Heyer said.

He said the royal couple's visit undoubtedly will be followed closely by autograph hounds.

"There are a lot of people who are buffs on the queen," Heyer told the Austin American-Statesman. "Her (autograph) value is very high. That means she doesn't sign everything. The demand is high and the supply is limited."

Availability is a key factor when it comes to the autograph market. Consequently, obliging celebrities' signatures often are far less expensive than those from more reclusive types.

For example, Nolan Ryan is a very obliging Texas Ranger. Although he's expected to be a Baseball Hall-of-Famer, his pen strokes are owned by many sports collectors. The queen's autograph could be traded for at least six signed baseballs, which go for about $50 apiece.

Death enhances value, if only because the celebrity can no longer sign any more autographs.

"Napoleon signed lots and lots of documents. Constantly. Everything went through him," Heyer said. "His signature is worth $600."

Signatures from Elizabeth I cost about $1,000, and her handwritten letters are valued at $10,000.

Heyer, the general manager of Poor Richard & Co., said he intends to go queen-watching Monday with much of Austin when she makes her only public appearance, during the afternoon at the Capitol.

"I'll be taking some photos. But I don't know if I'll have the opportunity to get any signatures," he said.

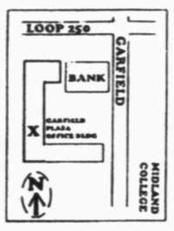

But for anyone who does, Heyer has a piece of advice: "I'd hang onto it."

Welcoming flag

Seamstress Bernadine Mendoza works on one of 28 flags being sewn for Houston's official welcoming celebration for U.S. military personnel who served in the Persian Gulf War, as well as veterans who fought in other conflicts in which the United States was involved. The flags will carry the logo of Houston's Operation Celebration May 25-26 when the flags will fly above the route of the downtown parade.

Gatlin receives diploma 21 years late

HOUSTON (AP) — Country-western star Larry Gatlin picked up his diploma from the University of Houston Saturday, just 21 years too late.

Gatlin

"It's a nice day for me and I'm sure my mother will think I've finally made something of myself," Gatlin joked after the hour-long ceremony at Hofheinz Pavilion.

Gatlin sang the National Anthem and the school's alma mater, but he stumbled through the latter.

"The only time we ever sang it when I heard it was on the football field.

"And I think I jumped in a little ahead of the band — they slowed down or something...it's a beautiful song," Gatlin said.

Even with the stumble, Gatlin brought cheers from the roughly 6,000 undergraduates and graduate students in the class of 1991 when he flashed the U of H hand signal during the finale.

Gatlin finished his coursework in 1970, but was short some credits in Spanish so was unable to graduate.

"I lacked some hours in Spanish and they said some of the degree plans and so forth have changed and I was eligible for it and would I come back and get it? I told them I'd be honored to come back."

U.S. Treasurer Catalina Vasquez Villalpando, keynote speaker at the commencement, was awarded an honorary doctorate of humane letters.

Others receiving honorary doctorate degrees of humane letters included Faith Bybee, a noted American art and antique collector and benefactor; Christoph Eschenbach, music director of the Houston Symphony; and Eric Hilton, senior vice president and director of Hilton Hotels Corporation.

Ms. Villalpando,from San Marcos, told students to remember "it is not so much what we have, but how we use what we have to make the difference."

She cited examples of how poets, artists, bankers and even the U.S. mint can change plain paper into a valuable asset.

"We're here today to acknowledge your achievement, your honor, your intelligence, your courage, your persistence and your dedication. Education is a painful and wonderful process — just ask your professors," Ms. Villalpando said.

"It is my hope that you will leave today not with knowledge, but with questions. The power of education is not in facts and figures, but in knowledge itself."

Baker tells graduates to use knowledge of law

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State James Baker encouraged new graduates of the South Texas College of Law on Saturday to use their knowledge to help others at home and abroad.

Baker, a Houston native who was awarded an honorary doctorate of law at the ceremony, said he was particularly proud that his youngest son, Douglas, was among the 300 graduates.

"Beyond the satisfaction that comes from going out and practicing law the very best way you know how, a legal background can open doors to a full and satisfying life in ways you cannot imagine," Baker said.

Baker, a graduate of the University of Texas Law School, said it was the duty of lawyers to work for democracy and fairness for the underprivileged in America as well as those in the Third World and former Eastern Block nations.

"As law graduates, each of you now has the training to be an effective advocate on behalf of your fellow citizens, your community, and the principles in which you believe," Baker said.

"You have the skills and the only question is, will you make the commitment to get out there and do something that makes a real difference to folks who sorely need some expert help?"

Baker pointed to attorneys who are doing pro bono work in their community for charitable organizations.

In addition, he said American attorneys are being called upon to help draft constitutions for new democracies in Central America, Mongolia and Eastern Europe.

"So, there's literally a world of practical ways we might put the rule of law to work," he said. "I've cited only a few examples. But I would encourage you to consider the many ways that you can contribute."

Baker told the graduates that they should not forget to think about the law.

"I don't think I'm wrong when I state that for the great majority of lawyers, law school is the last time they think deeply about the law," Baker said.

Baker later bestowed the doctorate of law hood on his son, who actually finishes his legal studies in July.

Organization discovers its cupboard is bare

HOUSTON (AP) — Burglars virtually emptied the food cupboard of a Houston organization that furnishes food for the needy and provides Thanksgiving Dinner to tens of thousands of poor people, officials say.

An official of the City Wide Club of Clubs said donated food worth about $75,000 was stolen from the club's warehouse sometime Thursday night.

The food is used for poor families, the homeless and the mentally ill, said City Wide coordinator Sally Holmes.

"We have people calling us who were to receive food, and we don't know what to tell them," Ms. Holmes said Friday. "We have one woman with eight children who was upset by the small amount of food we sent her. It's hard to explain that someone stole it."

Bob Clark, another coordinator with City Wide, said nearby residents saw three men with a large truck near the warehouse.

The men somehow ripped the steel doors from the rear of the building and carted off hundreds of pounds of food, Clark said.

"I don't know how they did it," said Clark. "They must have had some sort of jackhammer or something. They took all sorts of food and left very little, mostly dried foods."

The club provided a free Thanksgiving dinner to more than 50,000 people last November at the George R. Brown Convention Center.

"Right now we have about 1 percent of what we normally carry," said Ms. Holmes, who appealed for help in replacing the stolen food.

"The bulk of donations that we had came from private citizens. What was stolen included canned goods, flour, meal and cases of soft drinks," Ms. Holmes said.

Diabetes can cause severe eye complications, including diabetic retinopathy which renders over 5,000 diabetics blind each year.

Diabetic retinopathy does not just afflict people who have had diabetes for many years. It can appear within the first year or two after the onset of diabetes, or it can even be one of the first signs of the disease.

THE GOOD NEWS IS that early treatment of retinopathy often improves the potential for preserving sight. If you have diabetes or are at risk of developing this disease, your regular eye care should include a thorough, accurate evaluation by an ophthalmologist -- a process Southwest Retina Eye Center is offering FREE in recognition of National Sight Saving Month.

Gerrymander weds Midland, Amarillo

■ With state, federal OK, Midland's legislative roommate would be Amarillo.

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Senate District 31, approved as part of a statewide redistricting plan by senators last week, has been described as looking like an elephant's head facing west, with a long trunk hanging down to pick up a peanut — the city of Midland.

Sen. Teel Bivins, a Republican from Amarillo who is the incumbent in District 31, says the new map just doesn't make sense. He said even the Democrats, who drew the new district, admit that "it's the strangest looking district they've ever seen."

Bivins favored a redistricting plan proposed by a fellow Republican, Sen. Bill Ratliff of Mount Pleasant, that would have put Amarillo in a district with Wichita Falls instead of Midland.

That district would be more squared off across the top of the panhandle, and Midland would have been left alone in a more or less rectangular District 28, where Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, is the incumbent.

Midland currently is in District 25, represented by Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo.

But Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, who drew most of the redistricting plan for Democrats, said he believes it makes sense to tie together two conservative Republican areas like Midland and Amarillo, rather than put the more conservative Midland area in with the more Democratic Wichita Falls.

Also, Wichita Falls currently is in the district of Sen. Steve Carriker, D-Roby, and he wants to keep it in District 30. The Glasgow plan does that.

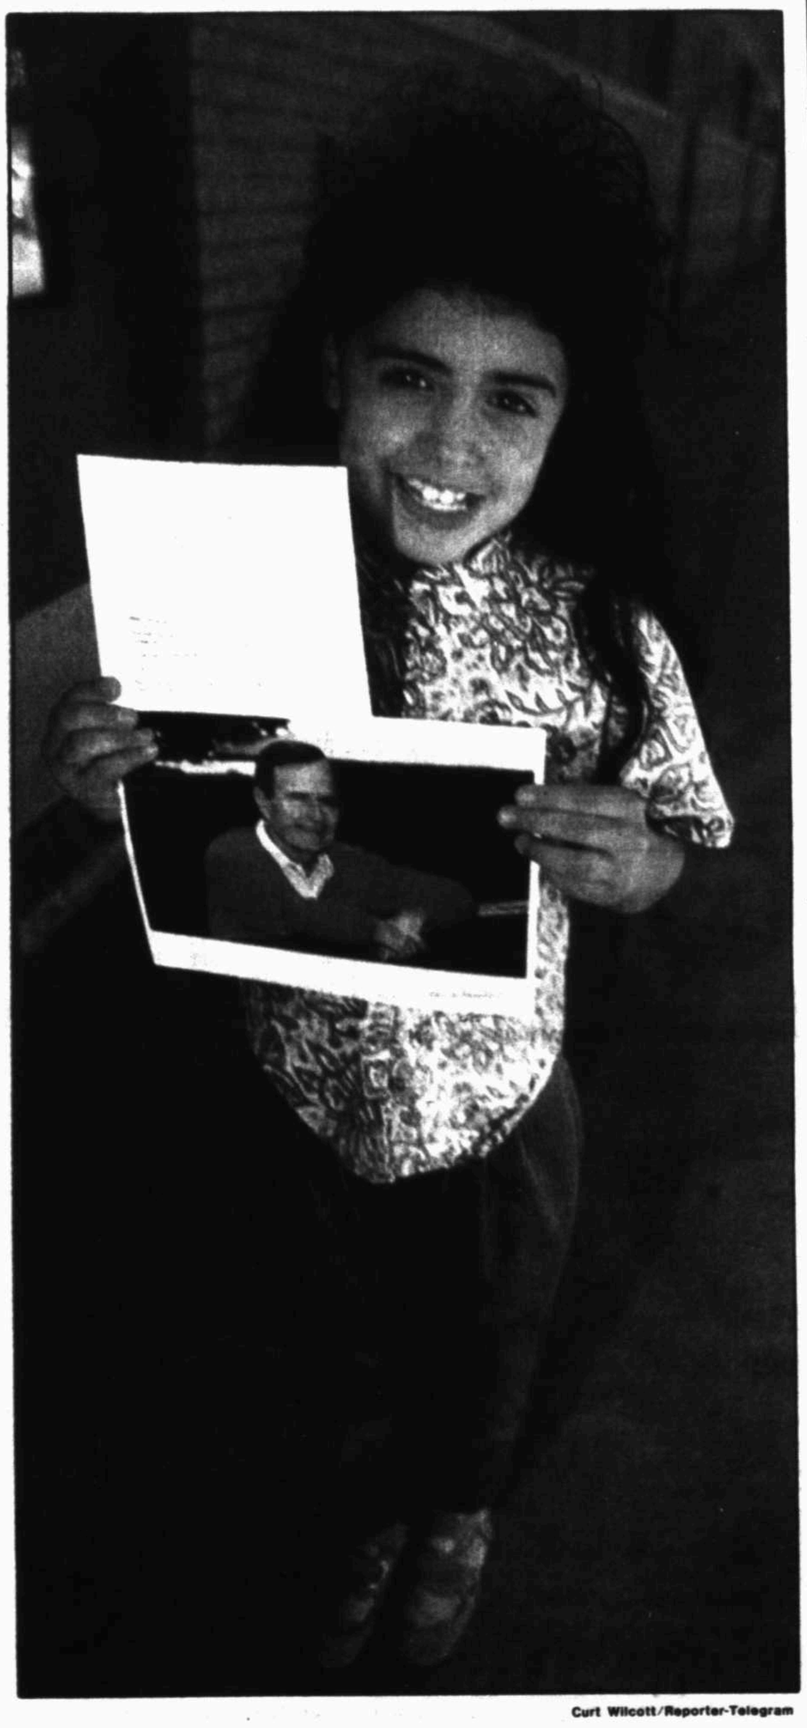

The Supreme Court's "one-man one-vote" ruling requires redistricting for state Senate, House and U.S. Congressional districts every 10 years. Redistricting is based on new census figures, which take into account changing population patterns and demographics.

All the twisting and turning in West Texas is necessary because District 31 is about 100,000 constituents short of the desired level of 548,000 people for a senator's district, state officials said.

Carl Reynolds, staff director of the Committee of the Whole on Redistricting for the Senate, said additional population for the district could be drawn in by taking in Wichita Falls — but that is part of Sen. Carriker's district.

Another choice would be to take in Lubbock for District 31, but that would pair Sen. Montford with Bivins in an elec-

Stroke victims aid recovery with strong dose of humor

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Lu Hulsey is smiling radiantly these days, speaking less haltingly, getting around much better and is celebrating daily the life that almost escaped her.

And it's not just hers.

She is helping to organize a support group, affiliated with the American Heart Association, and called by several names: Midland Stroke Club, Different Strokes, and the Cane and Able Club.

The latter seems to get the most raves; it offers promise.

But the middle suggestion is alluring.

"Carmy and I were just talking," she said of 66-year-old Carmalita "Carmy" Beaty, who suffered a stroke 1½ years ago. "Everybody is different on the way you can and can't do certain things (after a stroke), so we can call our group 'Different Strokes.'"

Ms. Hulsey suffered a stroke last January.

At work, she was stumbling some and was having some difficulty standing and walking.

"I didn't realize what was happening," Ms. Hulsey said. "I had some difficulty with vision, too. I wasn't aware, at first, exactly what had happened."

The next morning, as she tried to rise from bed, "Every time I tried to stand up, I fell." She was hospitalized.

Wanting to get on with her life, though wounded from the stroke which had cause hemorrhaging in the speech-and-language center in her brain, she went to therapy.

The "neurological involvement" of her stroke resulted in stuttering, noted Tricia Boyd, chief speech-language pathologist at Midland's Memorial Hospital and Medical Center.

"I've made a lot of progress with being able to walk and to do things, considering I still don't have any feeling in my right side," said Ms. Hulsey. "It's improving."

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

The stroke affected the left side of her brain.

"Tricia has helped me a lot to find ways to compensate for what doesn't work for me," Ms. Hulsey said. Ms. Boyd encourages her to find ways to relax to rid stuttering from her speech pattern.

Since her therapy started, Ms. Hulsey is reading again.

Cpl. Turner, a Texas Highway Patrol officer of 22 years, probably won't forget a high-speed chase he was involved in on Interstate 20, two miles west of Stanton, on June 25, 1978.

"I was in pursuit and had another car switch lanes on me while I was trying to pass them," Turner said.

Turner was traveling between 110 and 120 mph.

"I went onto the median to avoid hitting them," he said.

"When I tried to pull back on the pavement, the left front tire blew and I went into a broadside skid," Turner recalled.

As the car skid for more than 700 feet, the three other tires were pulled from the rims.

"The car rolled three and a half times and landed on its top," Turner said.

"I walked away from it with a little cut on my chin and a dislocated collarbone," he said.

"Without a seat belt, I would have been killed," Turner said.

"I am pretty sure I would have been thrown out without a seat belt," Turner said, talking from experience.

"I've worked a lot of accidents where people have been mangled and killed," he said.

"And it's a lot safer if you stay in the vehicle and are not thrown out," Turner said. "I've seen it happen more than once."

"There are lots of accidents where the car is hardly dented where they (passengers) are thrown out and killed," Turner said.

Although wearing a safety belt may not save everyone involved in an accident, the chances of coming out alive without serious injuries are greatly increased, Turner said.

And helping to avoid death or injury is the focus of the eighth annual Buckle Up America! Week, which runs from May 20 to 27.

"I wear mine religiously," Turner said. "Once you get used to it, you don't think about it — like starting up your car," he added.

Trooper Erwin Ballarta, with the safety education division of the Department of Public Safety, said about 65 percent of Texans wear their seat belts.

Despite statistics that show the majority of highway fatalities is among people who do not wear seat belts, some drivers still refuse to buckle up.

"Some people feel it might be a violation of their rights and some people are in too much of a hurry," Ballarta pointed out as the top reasons people don't wear seat belts.

Some people who may normally buckle up, may not when going for a short ride — such as a one-block drive to church.

"The majority of accidents occur close to your home (driving) about 30 mph. The few seconds it takes to buckle up may jeopardize your future," Ballarta said.

State law requires front-seat riders to wear safety belts. Children 2 years old and younger must be strapped into a child-safety seat. Youngsters between 2 and 4 are required to wear seat belts regardless of where they sit in the vehicle.

Failure to wear a seat belt or have an unrestrained child is a Class C misdemeanor carrying a fine of up to $200.

Tales from society's two mighty tribes — the Bores and Bored

People and things that bore me to tears:

— Talking about the weather:

It seemed dumb as a 13-year-old on my first date, and seems equally dumb today.

What can I say, the weather does not fascinate me. If it is hot, I whine about sweating. If it is cold, I complain about shivering. Other than that, who cares? It's not going to change just because you stand out in the front yard gazing at distant clouds.

People, with the possible exception of farmers, who incessantly talk about the weather desperately need to come up with some new hobbies. They obviously don't have enough to do with their free time. At any rate, they should avoid me when babbling about the latest forecast.

— Watching educational programs about the mating habits of insects on PBS.

I try, believe me I try, to become interested in these kinds of programs, but somehow I always fail. Nothing exciting ever happens.

I keep waiting for some good old-fashioned violence to occur, but, instead, the camera does a close-up of one of the insects, which invariably has huge bulging eyes, and a man with a monotone voice says, "The dragonfly, a member of the Odonata family, has two pairs of equal-sized, transparent and membranous wings, which are held above the body when at rest. The dragonfly mates in flight and while it does have legs, the legs are used to catch their prey rather than to walk." Yeah, right, and meanwhile, I think I'll switch over to pro wrestling.

— Mothers who discuss every new development in the fascinating world of child rearing:

These people, by their very nature, are terribly boring and should be avoided at all costs.

The ways in which the new mother can bore those of us who are unfortunate enough to find ourselves in her company are almost endless.

She can do it by talking about her own child. She can do it by reciting, almost verbatim, recent articles in baby magazines. She can do it by having every event that occurs in normal life remind her of something "darling" her child just did at home. She can do it breaking out the latest baby photographs at the drop of a hat. And, most of all, she can do it just by being sappy about babies in general.

— Reformed smokers and drinkers who insist on spreading their new-found message to others.

As an ex-drinker I feel especially qualified to speak on this one. Cut 'em some slack, guys. Don't become a pest. Remember how much you hated to be told to quit certain habits? Well, you're doing it now. Leave 'em alone. Let 'em enjoy what they're doing. If they do quit, it'll be because they want to, not because you badger them. Leave the preaching to Billy Graham.

— Golfers who, while recuperating in the 19th Hole, give you a running, play-by-play account of their just-completed round:

They generally have one hand wrapped around a young Scotch and the other slung over your shoulder.

They say things like, "Man, can you believe my luck? On No. 1 I hit a perfect drive down the left side of the fairway. I put a six iron eight feet from the hole. Blow the putt. I'm pumped.

"So on No. 2 I fly the green with a four iron. Houdini himself couldn't get up and down from back there. I'm lucky to escape with a bogey. I'm one over, but hitting the ball great.

"On No. 3 I flat coldcock me a drive down the left side. Perfect shape. I'm looking at nothing but a smooth eight iron. I can hit that shot in my sleep. But in my backswing some jackass on No. 2 lets out a scream and I shank the shot. Can you believe it? A shank! Man, that makes me hotter than a half-chewed jalapeno pepper. I chili-dip my next shot and blade the one after that. I finally hack it on the green and three-putt. Quadruple bogey. Me! A quadruple bogey. I haven't done that since I was in fifth grade. Ruins my round, is what it does. Smoke is coming out of my ears, I'm so mad. I'd like to kill that fat S.O.B. who screamed. He deserves a burial plot next to Jimmy Hoffa. Anyway, on No. 4 I crush my tee shot and I'll be danged if it doesn't hit a spinkler head and bounce straight left. Behind a tree. I'm telling you, if I didn't have bad luck I'd have no luck at all."

And so on and so forth.

Meanwhile, my eyes blur over from boredom.

Perhaps pro golfer Lee Trevino, the self-proclaimed Merry Mex, summed it up best when he told a long-winded amateur partner of his, "Hey, buddy, if I have to go the full 18 holes I charge caddy fees."

Midland man dies in apartment fire

Staff Report

An early morning fire was the apparent cause in the Saturday death of a Midland man, the Midland Fire Department reported.

Firefighters found the charred remains of 22-year-old Wesley Shaw in the bedroom of an apartment that was heavily damaged in a fire that broke out around 3 a.m., officials said.

Assistant Fire Marshal Lon Dominguez said Shaw, who was found on his bed under a foot or so of debris from a collapsed ceiling, may have started the fire by smoking in bed.

However, Dominguez added that the cause of the fire — and of Shaw's death — remains under investigation.

Dominguez said three fire trucks and about a dozen firefighters battled the blaze at the Apple Tree apartment complex, 4000 W. Illinois, for about two hours Saturday morning.

The nine other apartments in the building where the fire started were evacuated, Dominguez said, and no other injuries were reported.

However, the fire resulted in moderate smoke damage to four other apartments and water damage to another, Dominguez said.

An investigation showed that the apartment belonged to a friend of Shaw's who was in San Antonio on Saturday, Dominguez said.

Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe pronounced Shaw dead Saturday morning, Dominguez said. Although Shaw was burned beyond recognition, authorities were able to identify him by running a check on his vehicle and confirming with a friend in San Antonio that he'd been staying at the apartment, Dominguez said.

Shaw is survived by his wife, Janice. Funeral arrangements are with Ellis Funeral Home.

SUPPORT: Humor helps stroke patients cope

(From 1C)

With the speech-language part of the brain damaged, the patient is "going to have word-finding problems — not being able to find the right word — and difficulties in reading, writing and math.

"We try to make it practical," said Ms. Boyd. "A lot of times, we'll read the newspaper, and we'll talk about what we've read, and help organize what they've read.

"We'll work on handwriting."

In so doing, the patient can recover bit by bit.

"And I help them to compensate for what they can't recover," Ms. Boyd said.

Ms. Hulsey said that she is fortunate in the quality therapists at the hospital.

"They are really more than therapists," Ms. Hulsey said. "They are friends. They motivate you to do better. I'm feeling great."

And therapy is hastening her return to work in her company's human-resources department.

"I will have a job" when she is ready to go to work, Ms. Hulsey said.

For that, she is grateful and is blessed with "good friends at work, too."

To help her regain her mental powers and compensate for memory lapses, "I have to write things down to remember."

Her job at work is one of interaction: "Everything is working with people. And trying to solve people's problems, I have to be able to remember things."

For that, Ms. Boyd has been "a savior," Ms. Hulsey said.

Ms. Boyd compassionately noted the tragedy of strokes, which usually attack older people and not people as young as Ms. Hulsey.

"They lose a lot," she said.

"Lu has lost her fluent speech," Ms. Boyd said. "Stroke patients will be talking along, and they can't think of the right word, and that's called a word-retrieval problem. Most all of my stroke patients have that. And so, they'll pause and try to think of the right word. Sometimes it comes, and sometimes it doesn't."

Ms. Beaty, a retired legal secretary from Kansas, is "real funny," Ms. Boyd said. "She'll be talking along, and she can't think of the right word. And she'll say, 'Words, words, words.'"

"I get frustrated on what I can't say," Ms. Beaty said. "I keep trying."

"We work her hard; you bet we do," asserted Suzanne Gulick, a speech pathologist who works with Ms. Boyd.

And from Ms. Boyd's viewpoint, most of her patients have positive attitudes.

"I try to keep things upbeat," she said. "I think I have a fairly good sense of humor. We laugh a lot in here."

But there's the sadness of the disruptions strokes cause in lives.

"There's a grieving process that goes with any kind of problem, whether it's a language problem with a child or a stroke," Ms. Boyd said.

The good news is that, despite the grieving, there is the hope of progress in taking on the challenge of fulfilling life.

For Ms. Hulsey and Ms. Beaty, there is the gratitude of being alive and getting better.

"A very special person in my life had a stroke and did not survive," said Ms. Hulsey, who, as it turned out, missed the organizational meeting of the new stroke survivors' group and was elected president in her absence. "I went to the funeral in Sulphur Springs."

Her friend was 93 years old when she suffered her stroke.

There is grief there, too, for Ms. Hulsey, and the challenges of living and not giving up.

31: Court may have last word on redistricting

tion if both incumbents chose to run.

One other choice would be to put Amarillo in with San Angelo, but that would pair Sen. Bivins of Amarillo in a possible election against Sen. Sims, who currently represents Midland County.

Still another option would be to take in Abilene, Reynolds said, but that would cut off either Carriker or Sen. Temple Dickson, D-Sweetwater, from their districts.

So, Reynolds said, the final option was to pick up the population from Midland. Because Sen. Montford's home is in Lubbock and Sen. Sims resides in San Angelo, no incumbent would be paired against Sen. Bivins if Midland is put in a district with Amarillo.

Whatever the rationale, the Senate turned down the Ratliff plan along a party-line vote of 23-9 and approved the Glasgow plan. The bill is now in the House, where no changes are expected to be made when it comes up for a vote this week. Traditionally, the Senate draws its plan for districts for senators, and the House rubber stamps it, and vice versa.

Once approved by the Legislature and signed by Gov. Ann Richards, however, it must get an OK from the U.S. Justice Department. Then, some minorities — including Republicans — may legally challenge the Senate and House redistricting plans. A three-judge panel could end up drawing the final boundaries for new districts.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Kidnapping

Staff reports

Police were investigating a kidnapping that occurred on Friday afternoon at San Jacinto Elementary School, 1400 N. N St., according to reports.

Midland Police Department reports show that a 17-year-old female San Jacinto student who was sitting on a school bus in front of the school around 8 a.m. was forced off the bus by two men and a girl.

The kidnappers forced the girl into a white two-door automobile and drove her to a residence in west Midland, where one of the kidnappers tied her with rope and assaulted her, reports show.

The girl managed to escape after about eight hours of imprisonment and contact the police department, reports show.

Further details were not immediately available.

Assault

Police were investigating an assault that sent a Midland man to the hospital Friday night, according to reports.

Midland Police Department reports show that Lupe Garza, 28, was driving in the 3200 block of Wadley Avenue around 10 p.m. Friday when a group of men in a red car ran him off the road.

Garza caught up to the men and confronted them in a parking lot at 3212 W. Wadley, reports show. The four men in the car then reportedly assaulted him. He was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital in unknown condition, according to reports.

Accident

One person was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital in unknown condition around 11 p.m. Saturday following an accident involving a motorcycle and an automobile, the Midland Fire Department reported.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Andrews Highway and Golf Course Road. The name and condition of the injured person were not immediately available.

Man charged with posing as agent

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin man has been charged with impersonating an Internal Revenue Service agent to try to swindle a businessman out of $200,000.

Peter Kaufman, 19, was arraigned Friday before U.S. Magistrate Stephen Capelle, then released on $25,000.

An unidentified juvenile also was arrested in connection with the case, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

According to the criminal complaint filed against Kaufman in U.S. District Court, someone called Austin jeweler Mark Majors on May 7 and claimed to be an agent of the IRS criminal investigation division.

Lawmakers OK lowering state's racing share

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Senate on Saturday approved lowering the state's tax on horse race wagering after a nearly five-hour filibuster against the bill.

The bill, approved 25-6, now goes to the House, which has adopted a similar measure.

The House can either concur with changes made by the Senate, or a conference committee will be appointed to negotiate differences between the two bills.

Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, attempted to block the measure through a filibuster. He said the bill was unfair to taxpayers because it would reduce the amount of gambling revenue going into state coffers to pay for other services.

He also accused racing interests of deceiving the public by promoting parimutuel wagering as an economic boon that would produce millions of dollars in tax revenue. Now, he argued, those same interests wanted a tax break.

"We took on legalized gambling ... and it's proven now that it doesn't fly," Leedom said. Voters approved parimutuel horse and dog wagering in 1987, but no major horse racetracks have been built in Texas.

Sen. O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas, said investors need the tax break to build those tracks. "We've been maligned for promising certain things that didn't come to pass ... but this is going to make it work," he said.

The public "wants quality racing, and the only way to do it is reduce he state's take," he said.

The legislation would scrap the state's 5 percent state tax on the amount gambled and replace it with a sliding scale tax that would start at 1 percent.

It would take effect Sept. 1 for smaller tracks and Sept. 1, 1993 for the major-sized tracks.

The bill also would allow wagering on televised broadcasts of races in other parts of the country at Texas horse and greyhound tracks. Only horse races could be broadcast at horse tracks, and only dog races at dog tracks, Harris said.

Investigators probe accident

AUSTIN (AP) — Federal investigators said they had found no evidence of an explosion or fire as they tried to learn what tore apart a single-engine aircraft as it was flying between Manor and Elgin, killing four men.

Tommy McFall, regional director for the National Transportation Safety Board in Fort Worth, said investigators didn't know whether wind shear could have been a cause in the Thursday morning crash.

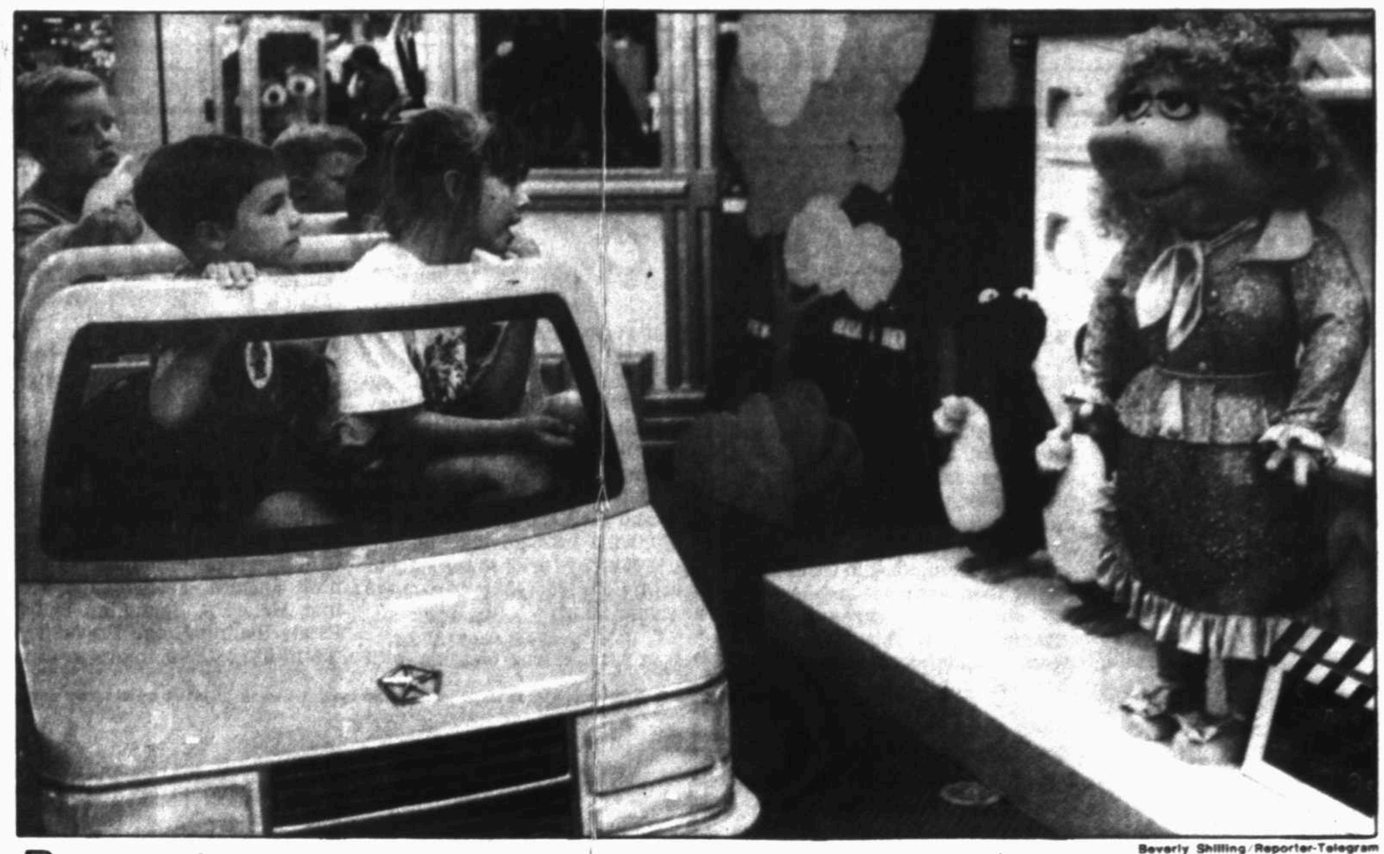

"All we know is that it was an in-flight breakup," McFall told the Austin American-Statesman in Saturday's editions. "The reason for the breakup is what we're looking for."

The pieces of the 1972 model Beechcraft Bonanza, bound for Austin from Addison Field in Dallas, were to be taken to a wreckage facility in Dallas, McFall said.

Those killed in the crash were identified by the Texas Department of Public Safety as Jeff Bales, 34, of Plano; Douglas Cory, 29, of Irving; Fred Eggers, 41, of Irving; and pilot Michael Nordin, 35, who recently had moved to the Dallas area from California.

Cory, Eggers and Nordin worked for Mentor Corp. of Dallas. Bales worked for another Dallas-area firm.

Hobos defend nomadic lifestyle

By Steven Almond
El Paso Times

EL PASO — Train whistles tempt Patrick Hahn.

In the blaring screams meant to shoo men away, the 45-year-old tramp hears a seduction he quit fighting long ago.

"That toot's calling me," Hahn says, raising a cupped hand theatrically to his ear. "It's saying, 'C'mon. Get away from all those troubles. You can't fix it, so forget it. Come on home."

But after 12 years, the rails are more than home. They are solace, an illusion of bold progress in a world of stagnant squalor and deprivation.

Every winter, thousands of tramps stumble through El Paso, a Sun Belt rail hub stitched by three major lines.

Incapable of asking for help, uncomfortable even sleeping indoors, they visit shelters only long enough to silence their stomachs, then retreat to the shadowy enclaves hemming the city's railyards.

Advocates of the homeless, faced with an influx of families and recession victims, have come to regard tramps as the lowest rung on their resource ladder.

"There are more pressing needs," snaps Michael Mayer of the National Alliance to End Homelessness.

Tramps, meanwhile, have proved expert at inviting neglect. Despite glaring poverty, they portray themselves as proud torchbearers of Depression-era hoboism.

"God gave me a gift when he sent me outside. I've made myself real comfortable," Hahn muses, patting the dusty pack he righteously calls home.

"There are people out here who have no business being on the streets," fellow traveler "Wild" Bill Morris says.

With a nicotine-yellowed finger he tracks the lower forms of street folk drifting through San Jacinto Plaza: mumbling crazies, junkies, "thumb bums" (hitchhikers) and, worst of all, "home guards," indigents pinned by fear to one city but unable to escape the streets.

"There's many a man who would have been lost if it wasn't for a tramp who reached out and put him on a train," says Morris, whose wiry build, dangling hair and blunt eloquence lend him a Messianic air.

He acknowledges the gap between himself and the self-sufficient gentry he calls "citizens." But Morris, a native Californian who leaped from a dead-end marriage to the rails 11 years ago, insists the tramp legacy is one of noble industry.

He claims tramps helped build the rails and safeguard them today from "robber tramps," an evil strain of hobos who rob other tramps.

And despite evidence to the contrary, Hahn describes tramps as a vital part of the nation's migrant labor force.

"That little old man in Arizona who waits every winter for someone to come do odd jobs — that's us, " he says, stroking the gray beard that hangs from his chin like a soiled blanket.

Sprawled on the dry grass flanking the downtown library, Hahn hawks trampdom like an overeager job recruiter, touting flexible hours, sumptuous trash-bin cuisine and, most of all, travel.

"Trains can take you places no man has been, 'cept the Indians," he says, "and when you're out there at sunset, with the red streaking out like it's alive and the timber unfolding like a green blanket, there's no way a man can express that."

In such moments of rhapsody, Hahn's voice — a melange of East Coast dialects dominated by New Jersey mutter — grows wild and imploring, a tribute to his road name, "Preacher."

But the ex-Navy clerk is equally passionate in his condemnation of missions.

"They'll feed you worse than a pig then expect you to thank Jesus for it," he scoffs.

Morris nods in rapid assent. Although he dines daily at missions, he insists most are dirty places run by power-drunk ex-transients who skim the top off contributions.

(Like most tramps, his cash — culled from selling food stamps, day work or begging — buys luxury items: booze and cigarettes.)

Ironically, between all the walking and waiting, Morris says, he spends close to 40 hours a week working. That figure is confirmed by a recent University of San Francisco study of the hard-core homeless.

Never one to shun charity, the onetime road worker is nonetheless a severe inquisitor of motives.

"If a guy gives you five bucks and his look is saying, 'Get out of my face,' That's not a handout. That's a payoff."

Still, Morris mistily recalls the couple who slogged a Thanksgiving dinner through the rain to his roadside camp.

"Those moments are just like blessings," Hahn says.

But the allure of tramping — which has turned hundreds of thrill-seeking yuppies into weekend hobos — fades fast.

First, there is the danger. Stories of mutilated tramps, like One-Armed Shorty and Spaceman, whose limbs have been clipped by buckling train cars,

The ride itself can be gruelling. Occasionally, tramps land a fully heated engine unit. More often, they pretzel themselves into the metal compartment at the end of grain cars.

"Sometimes you get off that train and it take two days to feel alive again," Hahn says.

Clucking like a grandfather, he adds that the once honor-bound tramp community has given way to a rougher crowd of drug users and ex- cons.

Most daunting, though, is the grinding monotony of life between rides.

Hahn says he has lived on the streets of most every major U.S. city. He has come to El Paso to check on a bank account and buy cigarettes in Juarez. The 20 cartons of "Atlas" cigarettes wedged into his pack will last him and two buddies a month.

Hahn's dinner comes courtesy of the Green Tree, a soup kitchen where 30 bleary men sit listening to a self-styled born-again preacher. After a gobbled meal he is back on the streets.

"I just like the class of people down here better," he says, not quite convincingly. "They may be belligerent and drunk, but they're straight off the cuff."

"There are some people who fall it love with it out here, I guess," he says, staring at the ebbing flame. "But you listen long enough and something else usually comes out. Something that pushed them."

This is the week for the national junior college men's tennis championships in Tyler. After a most successful week for the women, who won the team title without losing a set, the men are seeking to take another men's crown. The team plays team matches until a national championship team is decided, then competes to determine six singles and three doubles championships. This year's men's team is undefeated, ranked number one, and really tough.

MC coach Joe Williams is bidding to have the 1992 NJCAA tennis tournaments held in Midland. Tyler has hosted the event several times for both men's and women's championships. Midland already has been granted the 1992 ITCA national junior college indoor tournament, which it hosted for the first time in January at The Midlander.

Tots get primer in stress control

Associated Press

BRYAN — Bonnee Lieuwen and her best friend know something millions of parents would love to know — how to keep 21 squirming first-graders quiet for minutes at a time.

At the sound of the words "deer in the forest," the children in her Southwood Valley Elementary School classroom freeze. In their minds, the slightest move will attract the attention of an imaginary hunter.

Ms. Lieuwen reads other exercises aloud in soothing tones, urging the children to close their eyes, breathe deeply and imagine they've become mermaids, eagles, or dolphins.

As lions, they arch their backs and stretch their mouths into silent roars; as turtles, they retract into their imaginary shells; and as the sun, they stretch their arms as high as possible.

Ms. Lieuwen became interested in the techniques after hearing her friend Mary Alice Winchell, a stress management specialist in Phoenix, rave about her success. Her work with the Chicago Cubs, the elderly, the blind and the deaf has resulted in lower blood pressure levels and better circulation for her clients.

"I think people don't think of little kids as having stress, but the stress is the same whether you're a big person or a little person. They face tremendous pressures at school, at home and even from what they see on TV," Ms. Winchell said. "The things we do with the children are fun, and at the same time we're kind of building a base for them to have some self-control, some self-awareness and some discipline. We figured if it works for the Cubs, it will work for children."

Ms. Winchell and photographer Ken Gray were here for the week to make a videotape of the exercises, which Ms. Winchell and Ms. Lieuwen will show other teachers and students. Ms. Lieuwen said the exercises are fun, easy and can easily be fit into the day because they are one to five minutes long.

AP Laserphoto

Students in Bonnee Lieuwen's first-grade class work on a stress redirection exercise recently at Southwood Valley Elementary School in College Station, Texas.

'I think people don't think of little kids as having stress, but the stress is the same whether you're a big person or a little person.'

— Mary Alice Winchell, stress management specialist

Ms. Lieuwen studied the effects of stress on children for her master's-degree thesis, then began using these techniques in special education classes and with her second-grade class last year. She said many of her former students tell her they still do some of the exercises and this year, her first-graders have embraced the exercises.

The children know what causes stress in their lives: friends and siblings who tease them, pressure to do well in school, and family financial troubles. Trey McJimsey said everyone experiences it, even his 1-year-old brother.

Braulio Herrera said he was afraid to try the techniques at first, but Noelle Koenig never was.

"I used to be a shallow breather, but now I know how to be a deep breather," she said. "That's good because if you don't watch out, you can swallow your feelings and you can get real uptight and start hitting people with your stress."

Ms. Lieuwen said she has seen self-esteem and attention levels increase tremendously since the beginning of the school year.

"But it's not a miracle-maker, for sure. I mean, it's like anything else, it's part of the whole," she said. "I can't change everything in their lives, but maybe at least I can teach them some things that they can take with them out there."

Ms. Lieuwen's enthusiasm was one of the things that Ms. Winchell said enticed her to help her develop the program.

"She is just so warm and caring with the children, and they respond to that because they can tell she really cares," she said. "I think that's what Bonnee's whole deal is, she wants to change the planet almost.

"And maybe she can, in a way. If you can teach them early on, it will carry on through the next generation," Ms. Winchell said.

Photographer Gray said he has been able to see the benefits during his short time here.

"You can tell it's created a real cohesive atmosphere," he said. "One of the exercises is to look at the fellow next to you and smile and that is just a wonderful exercise. If we all did that once a day, all our stress levels would be a lot lower."

Democrats can win in 1992, Bentsen says

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said Saturday that foreign trade and domestic issues will be key elements of the Democratic Party's attempt to wrest control of the White House from President Bush in 1992.

"Republicans talk about the wonders of free trade, but they refuse to fight for fairness," Bentsen, D-Texas, said during his keynote address at the Oklahoma Democratic State Convention. "Democrats say Americans can compete anywhere in the world. All we ask is a level playing field. Our demand is not hard to understand — countries that enjoy free access to our markets must provide us equal access to their markets.

"For a decade, America has been turning the other cheek on trade. I say it's time to turn the tables and demand equal treatment. I say trade must be our No. 1 priority."

Bentsen acknowledged Bush's high popularity among voters because of America's military success in the Persian Gulf, but said the euphoria was quickly dissipating due to a slow economy and other domestic problems.

"The war is over. Saddam Hussein is still causing problems. The president's polls are headed down and now Secretary Cheney says thousands of American troops will remain in the region for an indefinite period of time," Bentsen said. "People are uneasy with that, because they know the Middle East has been an area of ethnic and religious strife for 2,000 years. There's no sign that it is about to change."

Bentsen, who ran for vice president in 1988 and is being mentioned in some circles as a possible presidential candidate in 1992, also said domestic issues, not the Persian Gulf War, would be the key elements of the upcoming campaign.

"The brave men and women who fought so valiantly in the gulf are returning to the highest unemployment in five years," Bentsen said. "There is a sense of drift in the economy. The recession is for real — longer and deeper than the administration predicted. For millions of Americans, things are not getting better."

Bentsen is being mentioned in some circles as a possible presidential candidate in 1992.

Bentsen also said he favored the re-establishment of the Individual Retirement Account, a sheltered savings acount, "to give millions of hard working, middle-income Americans a way to solve problems and plan for the future."

"We're also going to expand the usefulness of the IRA by letting people tap those funds — penalty free — to pay for college education, first home purchases and financially devastating medical expenses."

Bringing the IRA back, said Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, would help make the economy more competitive.

"They make more capital available to build new plants with higher productivity to beat foreign competition," Bentsen said. "They help bring down the interest rates and ease the credit crunch and they also help working people cope with the cost of home mortgages, health care and education."

Bentsen also chided the Republicans for questioning the future of the Democratic Party.

"Remember 1990? The Republicans were going to take control of the Senate and pick up perhaps 20 seats in the House. They were going to nail down the key statehouses in the Sunbelt. The Republicans were cocky and confident.

"What happened on Election Day? I'll tell you what happened. Oklahomans elected a Democratic governor. David Walters didn't just win. He won big. Democrats did the same thing in Texas and in Florida. Three major Sunbelt states that had Republican governors now have Democrats in the Statehouse.

"Democrats didn't lose control of the United States Senate. In fact, we gained a seat. We didn't suffer serious reverses in the House, we picked up nine seats."

Lawmakers seek action on bill allowing limited alimony pay

AUSTIN (AP) — Several state representatives are seeking action on an alimony bill which has passed the Senate during the past three regular legislative sessions but has never cleared the House.

The bill, which would allow alimony payments in strictly limited cases, is awaiting action in the House Calendars Committee, where legislation awaits scheduling for debate of the full House.

The bill primarily would help women who acted as homemakers in a marriage setting and never learned workplace job skills.

Texas is the only one of the 50 states that does not offer some form of post-divorce support for an ex-spouse who is unable to support himself or herself, said Rep. Nick Perez, D-El Paso, one of seven representatives from around the state who held a news conference on the bill Friday.

"This bill is very strict in its scope, but will go a long way toward helping ex-spouses who are truly in need of financial assistance," Perez told the Austin American-Statesman.

Among the groups endorsing Perez's bill are the League of Women Voters and the Texas Women's Political Caucus.

"Texas is the only state, including the other community property states, which does not provide some level of assistance to needy spouses upon the dissolution of a marriage," said Mary Ellen Kersch of the Texas Women's Political Caucus.

The bill would allow a judge to order financial support of an ex-spouse if:

— The marriage lasted at least 10 years.

— Spouses seeking help lack sufficient property or income to support themselves after divorce, cannot work because of a disability, have responsibility for disabled children or clearly lack earning ability.

— Payments do not exceed $1,500 a month or 20 percent of the paying spouse's monthly income.

— Payments are limited to three years except in the cases of disabled former spouses who cannot support themselves. They terminate when the spouse remarries or lives with another person.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

A new angle on luxury and . . .

. . . Style

and luxury come together in this four bedroom, three bath home located in prestigious Polo Park. Built by Mark Payne, this home features a formal living room with fireplace, bookcases and high ceilings as well as a formal dining room with a beautiful crystal chandelier.

The gourmet kitchen is not only beautiful, and spacious with its charming wallpaper and wainscoting, but is also functional with a top-of-the-line Jennaire cook-top, self-cleaning oven, microwave, abundance of cabinets and counter space plus a built-in desk. Ceiling angles come together to create a unique vaulted effect in the breakfast area while large windows, with a half-moon transom window above, make the area a delightful place to start the day.

Meanwhile a large utility room with cabinets, sink and fold-out ironing board helps to make laundry chores a little easier. And there is plenty of space for a freezer or extra refrigerator.

Adjacent to the kitchen is a family room with high beamed ceilings.

Comfort and relaxation are what this room will mean to the owners of this home. An arched doorway leads from the kitchen to the formal dining room.

Touches of luxury in the sequestered master bedroom and bath include a two-sided fireplace with one side facing the bath area and the other side facing the bedroom. Other luxuries include a whirlpool tub and large marble shower.

Story by Zena Sikes

Another bath is located off the hallway near the other two bedrooms.

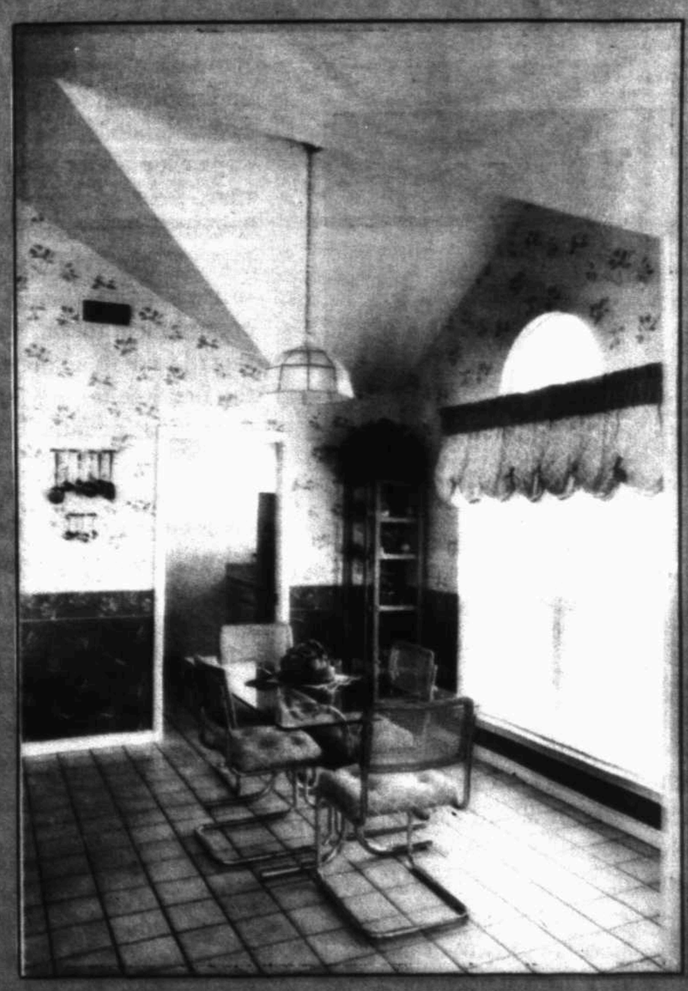

Other amenities include zoned heating and air conditioning, seven ceiling fans and sprinkler system.

Norma Pine:

Chaparral Realtors offer home selling tips

Norma Pine
Broker, Relocation Specialist

CHAPARRAL REALTORS offers marketing ideas! In the numerous listing interviews we do, one of the moving dilemma questions frequently asked is "what are some things we can do to improve the appearance of our older home to make it more competitive with newer houses on the market?

There are many simple things you can do to make your house stand out above the crowd without spending a fortune in home repairs. The main thing is to make the house appear as clean and tidy as possible. You might even take a look at new homes in your price range to see popular colors and to get decorating ideas. This will help you freshen the look of your home. If you combine the charm of an older home with the fresh, clean feelings of a new home, it immediately becomes more appealing on the market.

For the exterior, mow and landscape the yard. Trim the hedges and cut any low hanging branches off the trees. Try to make the entry as appealing as possible by planting flowers and keep the porch free of any objects. It the paint is peeling, or has faded, paint the exterior, mend doors and screens.

Inside the house, make sure everything is clean and in place. Avoid clutter -- now would be a good time to clean out and show the property as spacious as possible. Also, try to make the house appear as light as possible, clean windows, open drapes and blinds and replace light bulbs with high voltage bulbs. Paint a dark room with light, neutral colors and put in new light fixtures. Clean carpets and keep vacuumed when possible.

These simple tips can make the difference in a quick sale, netting you the most dollars. For a more personalized interview, please call any of our highly qualified agents, no obligation, of course.

Langston Realtors Talk About...
Second office, builders, and transferee centers

Langston

A second office and a new training facility will finally be a reality later this month when we open Langston Realtors north in the Colonnade at loop 250 and Garfield.

The explosive growth of our company, a critical need for training facilities, the desire for a more visible presence in the north and northwest residential neighborhoods, and planned expansion of our services to transferees, to corporate human resources departments and to builders made the opening of this office a logical, though ambitious, commitment for us. We also believe there is a definite prestige in being the first Realtor in Midland to open a second residential office.

This second office is a very large commitment for our firm. However, for well over a year now we've been predicting that Midland is growing and our economy is strengthening; the fact that we are opening a second office shows that we believe what we've been saying and want to be a part of that growth.

V.P. pat Orseth, our administrative director and director of training will assume additional duties as manager of the Langston Realtors north office. The office's extremly spacious training room will enable pat to present our weekly, new agent, ""21 Days to Greater Success" and other ongoing educational courses in a room specifically designed for these purposes and in an area large enough to accommodate all our associates. We are delighted that we will finally have a space specifically dedicated to this important facet of our company because we believe that Pat's outstanding training abilities and her commitment to the agents have largely been responsible for the firm's outstanding growth

Langston Realtors North will also feature a Transferee Counseling Center with audio-visual information on the area. The transferee both incoming and outgoing, and the new-hire represent a significant portion of our business. We will now be able to consolidate all of our resources for these employees on the move, human resources directors and recruiters in our major corporate, professional and health organizations.

Also included will be a Builder's Conference Center featuring plats, plans and information on the city's major builders and new construction areas for the new home customer. It will also feature marketing and support services as well as FAX, copier, voice mail and meeting facilities for builders.

Twenty sales associates and VP Relocation, Richard Langston, will also make the move to the new facility. Both offices, however, will function as one totally integrated organization. Weekday property desk time for all agents will be at our Wall Street office and weekend coverage will be at the new facility. Conference rooms, staff and support services and several desks/offices reserved for use by everyone at both offices will at all times offer our associates, customers and clients the convenience of either a downtown or Loop 250 location.

SPECIAL EVENT

Text by Linda Anderson

It's 6 p.m. on a Thursday, and as hot as a May afternoon in West Texas can be. A group of track and field athletes gather on the asphalt track surrounding the football field at Memorial Stadium and listen to their coach's instructions.

Nearby a high school scrimmage football game is in progress on the field, and walkers and joggers make their rounds on the track, but even with these distractions swirling around them, the athletes are focused to their coach's words. They are serious about their practice and their progress — they are, after all, preparing for competition at state, which will be May 21-24 in San Marcos.

In fact, only one aspect makes these athletes different from any other track and field athletes. These athletes are Special Olympians.

Special Olympics is a national — and now international — athletic competition designed for "persons with mental retardation or sub-normal functional adaptability," said Denise Wilcox, area director for Area 18, which includes the Permian Basin. "There are varieties of disabilities. There are the hearing impaired, orthopedically handicapped...," added Ms. Wilcox, who also is softball and basketball coach for Special Olympics.

And unlike some other track and field teams, Special Olympics has no maximum age for its competitors. While the athletes must be at least 8 years old to participate in area competition and 12 years old to compete at state, older athletes can be any age. The oldest member of Midland's Special Olympic team is 67, said Weldon Claxton, the team's head track coach. "The youngest is 13."

"There's a lady in Odessa (Special Olympic team) who's 69," added Ms. Wilcox.

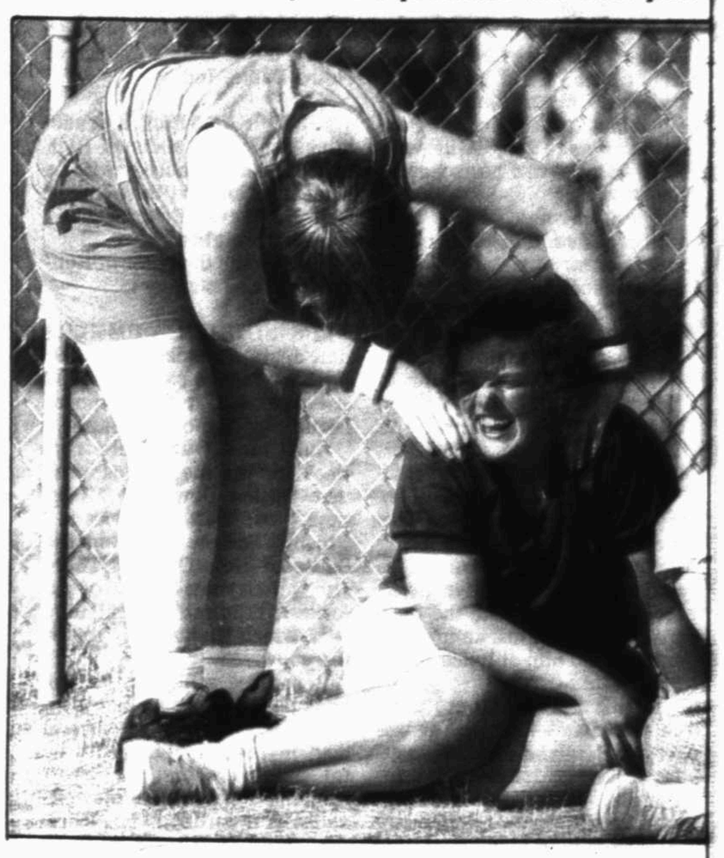

Like any other track and field team, the Special Olympians compete in different events. At the state meet, they will compete in "50 meters (run), 100 meters, 200 meters, 400 meter walk, 800 meter run, softball throw, shot put, standing long jump, running long jump — they do have a high jump at state but we don't have anybody who's going to do that," said Claxton.

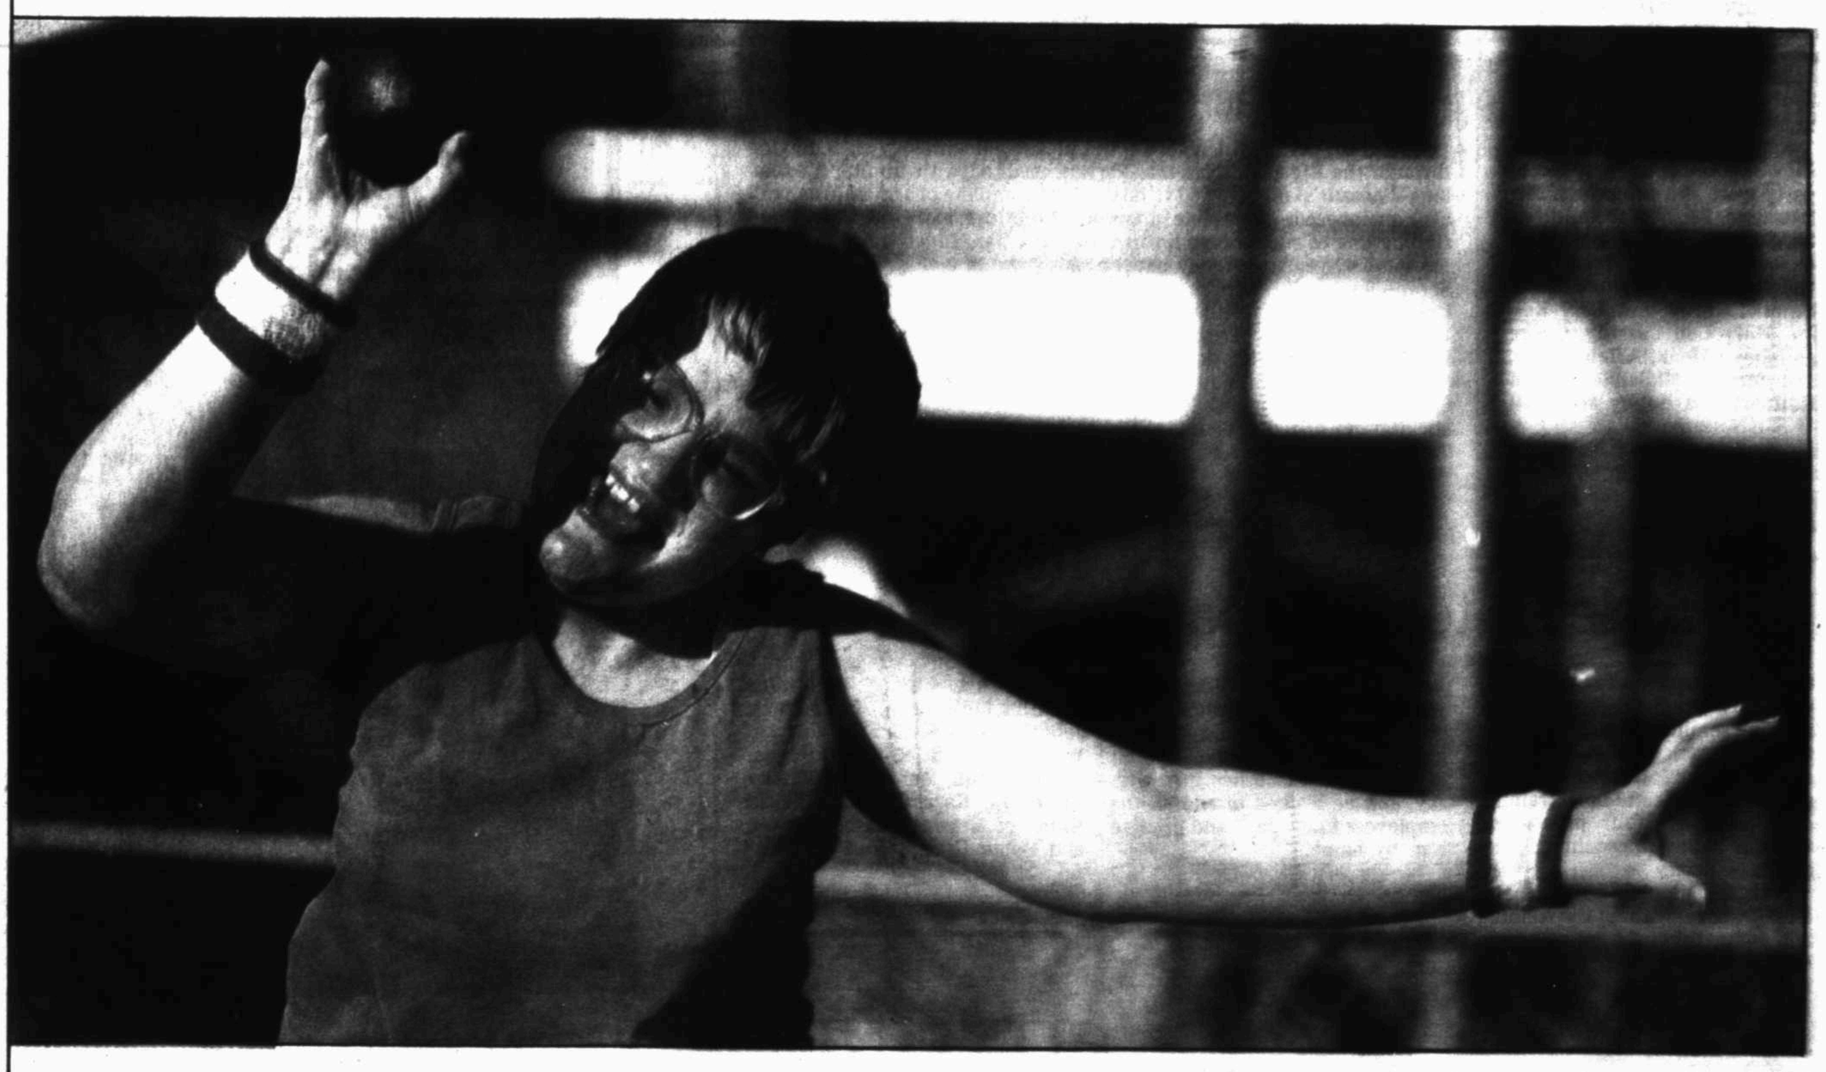

"They are basically the same events as any other track event, with a few exceptions," added Russell Malm, public relations director for Special Olympics, and a softball and basketball coach for the organization.

Special Olympics was originated in 1968 by the Joseph P. Kennedy Foundation, according to Ms. Wilcox, because one of the Kennedy daughters was mentally retarded. From its small "backyard" beginnings, the organization has grown to what is now an international agency with more than 30 foreign countries participating. "International (competition) will be in St. Paul (Minn.) in July," she said.

Reception honors author of 'Nunsense'

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

McKnight-Harrison

The reception was hosted by The Ham Hocks, one of MCT's support groups. Guests included members of the MCT board of governors, as well as board members of the theatre's various satellite groups, the cast and crew of the local production and other theatre supporters.

Among those spotted in the throng were Ham Hocks president-elect Greg Dove, Kay Brockman, Enid and John Phillips, Margaret and Ronnie Williams, Ruth Cole, Bill Pennebaker and Mary Alice and Ron Aday, Dan's hosts during his stay here.

Lynn Layman, Ham Hocks vice president and party chairman, came up with some unique ideas for the serving table in conjunction with the play's story line about a group of nuns. The various dishes were labeled with such titles as "Mortally Sinful Devil's Food Cake," "Mary Magdalene Tarts," and our personal favorite, "Salad St. John the Baptist."

Prior to the opening Dan enjoyed a tour of the Yucca Theatre, where his play is being staged. His hosts, Don Bachmann, MCT's executive director, and Linda Bond, the theatre's director of marketing, also entertained him at lunch at the Plaza Club.

During a brief visit at the reception, Dan told us that he was leaving Midland for Los Angeles to discuss movie rights for the play. It has run Off-Broadway for six years, and there are 300 shows in production around the world at the present time.

The Opening Night Gala, which Dan attended, was a fund-raiser for Act IX, MCT's auxiliary. It began with a cocktail hour and a catered dinner by Oceans Seafood. The play runs through June 8.

Places were marked with silver, heart-shaped picture frames, which were later given as favors.

Kristen, who plans to attend Southwestern University, recently was selected as the "Outstanding Senior in English" and received the Presidential Academic Fitness Award at MHS.

EMILY KLEINE, a 1989 graduate of Midland High School, has returned from Rome, Italy, where she completed her sophomore year of studies at St. Mary's College Rome campus near Vatican City.

On weekends and during her three-week spring break, Emily toured Northern Italy, as well as other parts of the country including Assisi and Naples; Germany, Holland, Paris, Barcelona, Spain, Monte Carlo and Sicily.

This fall, Emily, daughter of Ann and Bill Kleine, plans to return to St. Mary's College at Notre Dame, Ind.

IT'S SUMMER MUMMERS time again! To kick off the 1991 season, a festive party was held last weekend at the home of Diane and Sandy Faulkner.

Auditions were held this week for the melodrama, entitled "Misled Down the Mississippi," or "Just Say Neaux," which is loosely based on the Battle of New Orleans. There also were tryouts for the olio, a series of skits and musical numbers, which traditionally follow the show.

If you see some unusual hijinks taking place around town this weekend with a cameraman in pursuit, it is probably the Mummers cast and crew filming portions of the moviela, an integral part of the melodrama. Shots are filmed in black and white and without sound in the tradition of the old nickelodeon and then incorporated into the show's plot.

Disabled daughter inspires mom

By Lyn Blackmon

TEXARKANA (AP) — Brooke Thomas has a 1,000-watt smile, and she spreads the light around wherever she goes.

The slight 10-year-old girl was born with, or developed, a cyst on her brain that caused cerebral palsy.

The damage to her brain affects the fine motor abilities — she can do most things, but has trouble with speech and detailed movements. Her walk is awkward, but she gets where she wants to go.

Her sunny disposition and positive attitude inspired her mother to go to college to become a special education teacher. As a member of last December's graduation class at East Texas State University at Commerce, she now has her teaching degree, although she will have to return for some more hours to receive her certification to teach special education.

When Mrs. Thomas found out her second dughter had cerebral palsy, she had no thought of college, she said. All she could think of was that she would need to spend all of her time with her handicapped child. She and her husband, James Thomas, had no idea how far Brooke could progress.

THE CHILD didn't begin to walk until she was 2½. She progressed and grew very slowly, and weighs only 32 pounds now, although she is very healthy, her mother said.

"In 1981, when Brooke was a year old, we found out about her condition. After she started school, I decided it would be better for her and better for me not to stay so close to her.

"I was stifling her. She went to Special Education Center and Temple Memorial Treatment Center in contained classes and now she has been mainstreamed into a regular school, Red Lick School, in a resource class and is doing a lot better."

Mrs. Thomas, a graduate from Liberty-Eylau High School in 1980, started attending Texarkana College in 1986. At first, she was thinking only of becoming a teacher.

"But during the Special Olympics, I began to think of teaching special education. I had been around so many of the children in special ed, and I enjoyed them a lot. I have worked with Brooke so much that I believe this is what I want to do."

This summer she will start working toward her special education certificate, which will take about 15 hours. She will do that during summers and teach the rest of the year.

"Maybe God has sent Brooke to me so I would go into that work," she said.

An older daughter, 11-year-old Mindy, helps a lot with Brooke, helping her read, her mother said. When Mrs. Thomas has late night classes, Mindy gives Brooke her bath.

THE WHOLE family pitches in, Mrs. Thomas said. Her husband, James, does chores around the house. Her parents, Dale and Harriet Presley, live down the road and help out too.

"I couldn't have gone to college without the help of my whole family. They have supported me completely both with moral support and by pitching in and helping," she said.

"It was hard to go back to school for several reasons. It was hard to leave Brooke even though she was spending a lot of time at school. I didn't want anyone else to take care of her. But I know this has been better for her, too. She used to be so shy and afraid of people."

Mrs. Thomas said it was scary to go back to school after being out for awhile.

"Some days I didn't think I could make it. ... But James cooks and cleans and told me to stick with it."

Mrs. Thomas said Mindy, who loves to read, helps her study. When the mother had a course in Children's Literature, Mindy knew more about it than she did. And Brooke helped by being Brooke.

"Brooke is so loving. She brings a lot of joy to so many people. She helps normal children by bringing them a new outlook. She has such a happy disposition, and she makes a difference to a lot of people. When she was younger, she had to go to the doctor so much that she didn't like strangers. Now she is healthy, but we work to get her to put on weight and grow."

Brooke did the softball and Frisbee throws and the 50-yard dash in the Special Olympics.

ALL OF THE family is athletic. James Thomas played football at Liberty-Eylau High Shcool, and Mrs. Thomas and Mindy both play softball. Mindy helped Brooke learn to throw for the Special Olympics.

"Brooke is going to have to have operations on her legs soon, and we are dreading that, because I know it will be painful and she will have to stay down for awhile and curtail her movements."

The little girl has improved her coordination with a trampoline the family got last Chrismas, and she has learned to ride a tricycle. Her progress has been very good and should get better after the operation.

Now that Mrs. Thomas has graduated, there are other problems.

Since it was hard to find a teaching job in the middle of the school year unless someone quit to have a baby or move away, she decided to start out substitute teaching, she said.

"I can't think of anything I'd rather do than teach. Some people think that teaching is not a good career because they don't think it pays enough, but I think teaching is very rewarding. I was in a special education class today and what I got from those children was higher pay than anyone could get."

Shannon Thomas graduated from East Texas State University in December, with daughter Brooke cheering her on. Brooke was diagnosed with cerebral palsy at age 1. Now that she is ready to be mainstreamed into a regular school, Mom will start working towards her special education certificate.

'But during the Special Olympics, I began to think of teaching special education. I had been around so many of the children in special ed, and I enjoyed them a lot. I have worked with Brooke so much that I believe this is what I want to do.... Maybe God has sent Brooke to me so I would go into that work.'

Rare dinosaur fossil found in Big Bend

HOUSTON (AP) — A University of Chicago paleontology class digging through the Big Bend National Park is credited with finding a 4-foot-long dinosaur skull believed to be the first complete chasmosaurus skull ever uncovered. "Complete dinosaur skulls are extremely rare, and finding one of such a rare horned dinosaur has eluded paleontologists for some 40 years, and may happen only once in a century," said Paul Sereno, assistant professor of organismal biology at the University of Chicago, who was leading the expedition under the auspices of the University of Texas. The chasmosaurus lived about 80 million years ago in the Mesozoic marshes and ocean beaches of southern Texas.

Earlier this month, undergraduate student Tom Evans noticed about 6 inches of a 2-foot-long left horn of the three-horned chasmosaurus sticking out of a dirt mound. Field technicians from the University of Texas were called in and spent several days reinforcing the fossilized skull with bandages made from burlap and plaster for the trip to Austin.

The skull will be studied and preserved at the vertebrate paleontology lab at the Texas Memorial Museum at the University of Texas in Austin.

SPECIAL: Midland athletes to participate in state meet the athletes in many sports. "One thing a lot of people don't realize is that track and field is only one of five sports year-round in Midland," said Malm. The other sports include softball, basketball, bowling and swimming — "We didn't having swimming last year but we hope to have it this year," Malm said.

"They do bowling all year, voluntarily," laughed Renee Van Riel, chaperone and home parent for MHMR.

"We're hoping, in the near future, to institute other sports — volleyball and gymnastics, tennis," Malm said. "In Roswell they do skiing, but here ..." He shrugged.

Other events to be included in the state meet are "softball, baseball, equestrian, gymnastics, soccer, volleyball, tennis and power lifting," added Claxton.

According to information from Special Olympics, about 5,200 athletes and coaches are expected to participate in the state competition this year.

Coaches and assistant coaches for the Special Olympics athletes are all volunteers who believe helping out with Special Olympics is easy. "We just show up," said Claxton.

"Some of us are family members (of Special Olympians); the Volunteer Center sends a lot of volunteers; sometimes they (volunteers) come from the school district; some people work with them as professionals," said Ms. Wilcox.

Becoming head coach is a little more difficult, Claxton said. "I helped for two years, then got certified and became head coach last year. You go through a one-day training seminar. You have to certified for each individual sport."

The coaches' training seminar consists of an "eight-hour training clinic, and 10 hour practicum, which is hands-on coaching," added Ms. Wilcox.

Both the coaches and the athletes are serious about the training and competition. "A lot of people don't realize it really is competitive and training is needed," said Malm.

"Like in any other sports, they go out and work hard." Practice sessions may be two to three hours long, like practice for many other athletes.

And the physical training and competition these athletes experience affect other parts of their lives, their coaches said. "The changes in personalities, the confidence they gain, the openness from being involved in a team — the improvements I've seen in some of the people — it really does have a big impact," Malm said.

"There have been a lot of studies suggesting that the increased flow of oxygen into the brain (from increased physical activity) increases function," said Ms. Wilcox. While she has no personal experience with any studies, she said she has seen how the athletes' "self-esteem rises and affects their performance. Self esteem affects their whole lives. ... They are a lot more independent, more confident" and their social skills improve too.

And like many other athletes, Special Olympians can be fans of other sporting events. "Jay Ward (one of the Special Olympians) attends all the (Midland) Angels home games," Malm said. "I went to the game the other day with Jay, and he walked in and all the employees knew Jay" and greeted him by name.

Firebush solves gardening dilemma

By Deborah A. Benge

West Texas summers are infamous, and rightly so, for the terrific stress they place on flowering bedding plants in landscapes. Seering heat and prolonged drought make most bedding plants cry "uncle" by the Fourth of July.

Benge

To make matters worse, periwinkles — long a favorite summer annual — has fallen victim to increasing attacks by a fungel disease called "Phytophthora parasitica." This fungus can wipe out periwinkles, spread through the bed and stay in the soil to plague plants for years to come. Careful watering, mulching and good soil drainage can help, but it can be an overwhelming problem in some landscapes.

Coming to the rescue of difficult summer growing conditions and the problems we are seeing with periwinkles is a brand new annual bedding plant called Firerush.

Firebush (Hamelia patens) can out perform the summer heat and drought. It is an evergreen shrub or small tree in tropical and subtropical America. Natives of those areas prize the plant for its beauty and its many medicinal uses. It gets its name from the masses of brilliant red-orange blossoms that cover it throughout the long growing season.

Extensive testing by horticulturists with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in many areas of Texas, have established that this plant offers many advantages to the Texas gardner. This plant has been tested in College Station, Laredo, San Antonio, Wichita Falls, Dallas and the Permian Basin.

This plant will almost grow in stone. It will tolerate almost all soil types, even the often times highly alkaline soils of the Permian Basin. The only soil conditions that Firebush wouldn't thrive in would be poorly drained soils.

Firebush thrives on sun and heat. Because this plant is native to dry areas, once established, it will thrive in hot dry conditions. Once established this plant is so drought tolerant that it can actually reduce your water bills.

Since Firebush has no serious pests when grown outside in full sun, it can easily be grown organically. On occasion, aphids could be pests, but they rarely require sprays. This makes your time spent in the yard just that much more enjoyable.

Firebush is not only easy to grow, but it also has a long bloom period. In fact, it will bloom nonstop from early summer to late fall.

While Firebush "struts-its-stuff" best in full, uninterrupted sunlight, it can tolerate some partial shade. So an eastern, southern or western exposure could work, giving this plant versatility in the home landscape.

The clean, attractive foliage of Firebush is dramatically highlighted by terminal clusters of scarlet red, long slender tubular blossoms with deeper red throats. These striking blossoms (which do not require removal) are great attractants of hummingbirds. In fact, if you don't like hummingbirds, you'd better avoid this plant.

As the shorter, cooler days of fall approach, the leaves turn a beautiful blood-red color. Therefore, during the summer, you get great looking red blooms, and in fall you get the same blooms but with a background of brilliant red foliage.

Participating nurseries provide a special publication on Firebush that contains everything you need to know in growing this plant. Or, get the EARTH-KIND tabloid that is available free of charge by your participating nurseryman. It has an excellent article on Firebush.

When selecting your Firebush plant from the nursery, choose plants that are pest-free with leaves are a healthy green. Leaves that have turned red are stressed and you may want to avoid those.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

Wills often-neglected necessity

Associated Press

Where there's a will, there's a way to divide the family fortune equitably — or with a vengeance.

Wills can be a way for a mother to attack her sons, a father to clash with his daughter, stepchildren to assail a step-parent and many variations of family madness, attorney William D. Zabel wrote in an article in the current issue of Town & Country. Zabel has specialized in wills and trusts for more than a quarter of a century.

The first problem with wills is that so many men and women refuse to make them.

"Often," Zabel wrote, "this is the way a person refuses to confront his or her fear of death. In many cases it leads to a kind of intellectual paralysis, even in normally efficient, rational adults."

The lawyer said lack of a will, even where the estate is modest, usually causes pain to the surviving family members and costs them money. Intestacy means state laws determine the estate's distribution, with children sometimes inheriting more than their mother and heirs incurring needless legal expenses, death taxes and other costs.

"A will is a legal document containing your wishes as to the disposition of your estate after your death," Zabel wrote.

The oldest will of which there is a known copy is that of Uah, an Egyptian, made in 2548 B.C. Millions of people have made wills, but among those who died without them were Presidents Lincoln, Andrew Johnson, Grant and Garfield. So did Chief Justice Frederick Vinson of the U.S. Supreme Court; he also died broke.

Thomas Jarman, considered by many the world's greatest legal expert on wills, died without one.

"Wills, then, are extremely important to any well-planned estate and, in general," Zabel wrote, "you should know what the will of your spouse or cohabitant provides so that you will not be surprised by its terms after he or she dies, or, even worse, then find out there is no will."

When Brigham Young died in 1877 with an estate estimated at $2.5 million — a huge amount in those days — he had a special problem. He was survived by 18 wives — three others had predeceased him — and 48 children, including one adopted child.

To be fair, he evenly divided his estate into shares among wives living and the children of those deceased.

Although much of our populace is multimarried, generally the basic problem is to provide for one surviving spouse.

Before 1982, when a new unlimited marital deduction was introduced into federal estate tax law, most persons left their spouses at least half of their estate — the old maximum allowable estate tax marital deduction — and the rest to children and-or charity.

For example, when John D. Rockefeller III died in 1978, he left half his estate to his wife and half to charity, thus avoiding all federal death taxes.

"Today," Zabel wrote, "there is no limit to the quantity of property that can be transferred from one spouse to another without federal gift or estate tax, either during life or at death, provided that the surviving spouse is a citizen."

He warned, however, that you must check your state's death and gift tax laws because they may not conform to federal law.

Each state's law must be consulted for the statutory or forced share rights of a surviving spouse. In Florida, the surviving spouse is entitled to 30 percent outright of all assets passing under the will. In New York the statutory share, when children survive, is one third of a defined net estate.

Children must learn 'who's the boss'

Associated Press

Dr. Benjamin Spock advises working mothers they must let children know who's the boss — promptly, cheerfully and firmly.

Some mothers feel so guilty about their absence from home, Spock wrote in an article in a recent issue of Redbook, that they give in to their children's every whim or put up with unacceptable behavior.

Often a mother will overlook misbehavior because she doesn't want to spoil her time with their children by disciplining them.

"Either reaction — caving in to demands or tolerating uncooperative behavior — is not only harmful for the child, it also sours the parent-child relationship," Spock wrote.

"A submissive mother is, sooner or later, bound to become resentful of her demanding child. And a child who is often contrary can be exhausting for a parent to cope with."

To break this cycle, the mother must understand that her guilt feelings are interfering with her relationship with her children. She must begin to set sensible limits in terms of the time and attention she gives each child.

"This is not to say that a parent shouldn't give her children any attention when she arrives home from work," Spock wrote. "But the crucial difference between a guilty and a nonguilty mother is that the latter's time has been given freely and hasn't been badgered out of her by demands and complaints."

Attention that comes spontaneously reassures a child of her parent's love. But the amount of attention a parent can give at the end of a long day varies from parent to parent and day to day. Some evenings a woman is caught up on her chores and can spend long periods of time with a child. Other nights, she may be pressured and become impatient in minutes.

> "...the crucial difference between a guilty and a nonguilty mother is that the latter's time has been given freely and hasn't been badgered out of her by demands and complaints.'
> — Dr. Benjamin Spock

"I don't think it's cause for concern if you are unable to devote long blocks of time to your child," Spock wrote. "Although I'm heartily in favor of parents and children doing things together, I don't think that the amount of time spent together is the most important criterion of a good parent-child relationship.

"Instead, it's whether you and your child are getting along. And children get along best with their parents when they know what their limits are."

Spock said setting limits does not mean being disagreeable or severe. Such reactions signal you are conflicted about your role — and will make your son or daughter plead or demand more.

"What I do mean," he said, "is that you should practice giving prompt, cheerful, friendly responses to your child's requests, even if those responses are negative ones."

Spock said the key is to respond decisively, and not allow your child to make you feel guilty for not giving in.

Spock imagines a mother coming home from work, giving her daughter as much attention as possible, then having to attend to other responsibilities.

"You greet her warmly with a hug and kiss; perhaps you admire a drawing she made that day. You might even look at a book together, if time permits," Spock said. "But after you've finished, she asks you to read again. If you can't, give your child a firm but cheerful answer: 'I have to make supper. Why don't you come into the kitchen with me?' "

If your child tries to duck a chore or complains, simply remind him of the rule without hesitating or arguing.

Spock warns that a child who has been uncooperative will not reform quickly, nor will a mother who has been ruled by guilt find it easy to hold firm.

"But your child will begin to come around once he realizes that you mean business," Spock wrote in Redbook. "And you will find that the time you do spend with him will become more enjoyable for both of you — because there will be fewer demands and arguments."

Woman originated Father's Day

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — It was a woman, Mrs. John Bruce Dodd, who first had the idea for Father's Day. Mrs. Dodd was one of six children raised by her widowed father, Civil War veteran William Jackson Smart of Spokane, Wash.

According to Hallmark Cards, Mrs. Dodd was listening to a Mother's Day sermon in 1909 when she decided fathers should be similarly honored. Thanks to her efforts, the first Father's Day celebration was held in Spokane in 1910, and its observance spread to other cities and states.

Mrs. Dodd persisted in her campaign, and many Congressional resolutions for a national Father's Day were introduced. Finally, in 1972, President Richard Nixon signed the law proclaiming the third Sunday in June Father's Day.

Health care field ripe with special opportunities

Associated Press

The health care field, standing out in a recessional economy, is ripe with opportunities for specialists less well known than nurses and doctors.

■ The need for physical therapists is so acute that by the end of the decade, there will only be half enough people qualified for this work, says Dr. Mark Anderson, associate professor of physical therapy at the University of Oklahoma Health Science Center in Oklahoma City.

"For nearly every medical specialty, there is a corresponding physical therapy specialty that goes along with it. Physical therapists often are involved in pre-operative evaluations of the patient, explaining the rehabilitation process which will follow the surgery," he says.

The profession is dominated by women — 75 percent — but more men are entering the field, he says, and this may help ease the shortage.

■ Currently there are about 7,000 unfilled jobs — a 25 percent shortage — for occupational therapists, according to the American Occupational Therapy Association, which has launched a recruitment drive. OT graduates typically receive about four job offers.

These specialists help rehabilitate the disabled and are taking an increasing role in analyzing and preventing workplace injuries, the organization says.

"We are actively promoting occupational therapy as a career choice for students as well as those seeking second career options to make up the deficit and meet the needs of the disabled," says Jeanette Bair, AOTA executive director. Minorities, the physically challenged and men are being targeted in the drive.

The organization has a toll-free number, 1 (800) 366-9799, for information about OT careers.

■ Also in short supply are physician assistants, who practice medicine under the supervision of licenced physicians. According to Linda Reed, academic coordinator of the physician's associate program at the Oklahoma Health Science Center, there are about 7.5 jobs available for every graduate. She explains that the specialty evolved out of the needs of rural or inner city areas, which have few doctors.

AP LaserPhoto

Occupational therapist Michele Neveu of Mt. Washington Pediatric Hospital in Baltimore conducts a sitting balance exercise to improve this tiny patient's mental and physical functioning. The shortage of health care professionals means higher salaries, wider opportunities and security to potential recruits.

■ Increasing communications disorders among the very young and older people are causing a steady growth of jobs available in speech-language pathology and audiology. Frederick T. Spahr, executive director of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association (ASHA), cites labor bureau statistics projecting a 28 percent increase in the demand for these professionals during the next decade. The job vacancy rate for these two specialties in hospital staffs alone has almost tripled in the last four years, according to the American Hospital Association. More than half of ASHA's members work in schools, and many others work in private practice, nursing homes and home health agencies.

Speech-language pathologists help patients with problems such as stuttering, articulation, voice or language disorders; audiologists work with people who have hearing losses.

■ The shortage of radiologists has reached "alarming" proportions, in the words of Howard Schwartz, past president of the American Healthcare Radiology Administrators.

The Summit on Manpower, a coalition of 18 healthcare organizations, surveyed vacancy rates in hospitals and found vacancies ranging from 3 to 15 percent for radiography, from 3 to 13 percent for nuclear medicine technology, from 5 to 21 percent for radiation therapy technology and from 4 to 17 percent for sonography. The coalition says the shortage is affecting all patients but especially older patients and those with cancer.

Loretta Hanwell, chairman of the group, says that potential recruits could come from the ranks of early retirees or mothers returning to the workforce. "They have the patience and the human qualities the work requires, but they simply do not realize that the opportunities are there," says Ms. Hanwell, executive director of Central Imaging Inc., department of radiology, at Presbyterian-University Hospital in Pittsburgh.

■ Vacancy rates also are high in the medical laboratory field, with a national estimate of nearly 42,000 unfilled positions, according to the American Society of Clinical Pathologists, which commissioned a survey of 12,000 medical laboratories.

The need for cytotechnologists, who examine cells to detect early signs of cancer, was especially high, with a 27.3 percent vacancy rate during 1990. Vacancies for staff medical technologists averaged 11.6 percent in the same period. The shortages are pushing salaries up, according to ASCP.

■ Health scientists to deal with environmental problems also are needed. Paul L. Ziemer, U.S. assistant secretary of energy for environment, safety and health in the Department of Energy, says that the issues have created a demand for people in research and development, regulatory areas and occupational safety and health. "The main problem is finding enough technically qualified people to fill the positions available, " says Ziemer, on leave from his post as head of Purdue University's School of Health Sciences.

David Tate, director of development and counseling for the school, reports that graduates find jobs easily. "For the last two to three years, the school has had 100 percent placement across the board." Typical employers are nuclear power utilities, radiation safety offices, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the Department of Energy, consulting firms, radioactive waste management sites, and state regulatory agencies.

■ As the baby boom generation ages, it will increasingly need eye care, so careers in optometry can be lucrative, says the American Optometric Association.

Optometrists, who examine eyes, prescribe glasses, advise on eye care and in some states treat eye diseases with drugs, can expect starting salaries of about $40,000 a year, according to the organization. Established practitioners can make $70,000.

Bill Madison advises blacks to work hard for success

OXFORD, Ohio (AP) — Ask Bill Madison how blacks can succeed in business, and he has an almost distractingly simple answer: Work hard.

Madison was a role model for blacks even before that term entered mainstream language. After graduating from college in 1961 he soldiered on into the corporate world, even though opportunities for blacks were extremely limited then. He eventually became an executive with Kroger Co., then after he retired he came to the Miami University campus, where he is a management instructor.

He has practical advice for blacks trying to make it in a white world. For starters, he says, put in long hours. "You can talk about talent and competence, but fundamentally students need to learn to work hard."

Blacks should understand that many business decisions are made in social settings, so those who won't socialize with whites are putting themselves at a disadvantage, he says.

He has some blunt words for men: "The African-American male still has to understand that certain behaviors that he may regard as cool, manly or assertive are perceived by others as arrogance, and in some cases, as physically threatening."

Making adjustments to get ahead doesn't mean selling out, he says. Blacks can display their culture in many ways — from office furnishings to an appropriate "fade" haircut.

"You maintain your heritage in your home, church and with your friends, and when you can identify people who are open to understanding more about African-American culture, you discuss it and explain."

Black students have far wider options now, and Madison counsels them to look seriously at the technological, marketing, advertising and financial fields.

"In my generation, black students were traditionally steered into personnel. That was where the first open doors were, but today there are more choices."

And to white students, he points to projections that indicate that by 2020, the minorities of today will be a majority in the schools.

"The first thing I suggest is that if the predictions are true, what does that do to you as an individual? It means that your life will be different from what it was like for your father or mother," he says.

White students shouldn't feel threatened by this demographic change but rather look at it as an opportunity to enrich their experience, he says.

Women's health care role no longer limited to nursing

Associated Press

Women, once limited to nursing in health care, are finding opportunities as physicians, therapists, counselors, technicians and administrators, notes Holly Nishimura, director of the health services administration program at Gannon University in Erie, Pa.

Though metropolitan areas may have more doctors than they need, rural communities are underserved and represent excellent opportunities for women, she says. "The presence of women in medicine is very visible. Women are choosing pharmacy, medicine, gerontology, respiratory care, physical therapy and other therapists professions."

Television weather forecast full of fog

By Erma Bombeck

I seem to have struck a universal chord with a recent column on weather forecasters. Obviously, I am not the only one who watches eight minutes of highs and lows, maps and crooked arrows each evening and still doesn't have a clue as to what the weather is going to be tomorrow.

Bombeck

Of all the letters I received, however, none was documented quite like the one from Ashley Thornburg, a reader from Sedona, Ariz. For years he has been recording the observations and predictions of weather forecasters all over the United States. He became interested in the phenomenon of these oracles when he lived in Texas. The weatherman stood in back of a glass U.S. map on which he drew clouds, fronts and temperatures. The picture was reversed as it was shown so the viewers could read the figures. The right-handed weatherman appeared to be left-handed.

Mr. Thornburg also noted the number of "weasel" words that give new meaning to ambiguity. For example:

- "There could be a 50 percent chance of snow — but this is not definite."
- "Will it rain any more? I hope not."
- "Little too early to tell for sure."
- "Looks like it will be more or less precipitation-free, but that's the big question mark for Saturday."
- "Expected to rain, but does not necessarily have to. I don't want to hit that too hard, as there are still things in the developmental stage."
- "Don't pin me down. I'm just a helicopter pilot."
- And my personal favorite: "The front will allow temperatures to climb down (?) below zero."

The incredible part of this is that viewers actually pretend to comprehend a weatherperson who says, "Showers could develop almost any time, anywhere in the state," or, "Be on the lookout for a fair-weather alert."

Hardly a night goes by that some figures are not available because of a "glitch in the computer." Mr. Thornburg says he has never heard of anyone who admitted putting incorrect data into it.

It seems time could be saved by sparing viewers what the weather was like 12 hours ago. We all lived through it and we sort of know by this time. It's like having your newspaper delivered while you are on vacation and reading your old horoscopes.

A couple of nights ago, a weatherperson announced gravely, "We're going to have some weather throughout the state this weekend." I could just hear Mr. Thornburg saying, "Compared to what!"

Expo displays new products for disabled

By Eve M. Kahn
N.Y. Times News Service

EDISON, N.J. — Tom Mullen, a wheelchair designer, fears that neon is losing favor with the California beach crowd.

"The surfers are starting to wear shirts that say, 'No to Neon,'" said Mullen, whose employer, Quickie Designs in Fresno, Calif., builds wheelchairs with high-speed wheels and neon frames that are used for sports. "We're having trouble picking frame colors for next year, because people in wheelchairs are just like everybody else. They want the very latest."

Quickie was one of more than 100 companies that participated in the Abilities Expo here recently. The exhibit of products for the disabled attracted parents of infants with severe birth defects as well as elderly paraplegics.

"We're looking for anything that makes life a little easier for us," said Laura Reilly of Basking Ridge, N.J., who attended with her son, Erik, a college student who uses a wheelchair.

She had one complaint: the prices. Marc Friedenthal, a graduate student from Albany who uses a wheelchair, agreed. "Everything's so expensive here," he said. Adapting a home, car or workplace for infirmities may now involve highly sophisticated technology, and that costs more.

AMONG THE most innovative and highest-priced products was the Eyegaze Computer System, which is meant for people with virtually no mobility and costs about $25,000. A lens below the computer monitor follows the user's pupil, and half-second glances at segments of the screen act as commands.

"There are 18 of our systems running now," said Nancy Cleveland, a medical and technical coordinator for the manufacturer, LC Technologies. "There's an 11-year-old kid in Florida doing his homework on one."

For less profoundly disabled people, exhibitors like the J.C. Penney Co. offered clothes that are easy to put on. All the buttons on Penney's Easy Dressing Fashions are nonfunctional fronts for Velcro strips, and zippers bear oversized pull-up rings. Most items in the line are $20 to $60.

LJM Products showed a line of housewares, including thick-stemmed wine goblets that are difficult to topple ($5.50 each for glass; $14.95 for acrylic) and a plastic cutting board ($62.50) equipped with a vise that can grip bottles. LJM's heavy utilitarian designs could pass for Danish modern.

"We try for products that aren't so rehab-looking," said Linda Schweighardt, the company's president.

The expo was started 12 years ago in California by Richard C. Wooten, who was partially paralyzed by polio as a teen-ager in the 1950s.

This was the expo's first venture on the East Coast, and visitors came from all over. Earl and Lisa Vaught drove up from Luray, Va., where they run a steakhouse. The Vaughts attended with their 7-year-old son, Daniel, who has a motor disorder that prevents him from walking.

"WE LIVE in a very rural, economically deprived area," said Mrs. Vaught, who watched her son tap hesitantly at a computer keyboard. "His school got a computer because of our advocacy," she said, "and I'm here to learn what it can do, because no one back home understands its potential."

Nearby, Dennis Fitzpatrick, a 5-year-old with cerebral palsy, was trying out a motorized wheelchair painted in primary colors.

Adults were cruising the aisles in high-tech wheelchairs. People riding electric scooters that looked like lawnmowers with seats had to swerve to avoid others in three-wheeled exercise chairs powered by hand pedals.

Parked alongside every aisle were sleek minivans. Sales representatives rolled potential customers in wheelchairs inside, pressed buttons that folded up ramps and closed doors, and then locked the chairs into the seatless driver positions.

"I've never seen anything like this," said Inez Allen, principal of Public School 134 in the Hollis section of Queens. Her wheelchair was ensconced in a van manufactured by Independent Mobility Systems, and she was toying with the hand controls. "This would be so much better than my Toyota," she said. "I could get in and out myself."

The salesman told her the vehicle cost $32,000; she frowned and said she doubted she could afford it. "I really came looking for a scooter," she said.

MARK MALONE, a financial analyst from South Bound Brook, N.J., came to the expo in search of ideas. Paralyzed eight years ago in a swimming accident, he wore a T-shirt that read, "I'm Not Paralyzed I'm Just Lazy."

"I'm checking out reactions to the shirt, to see if I should sell ones like it, maybe at the next expo," he said. "And I'm seeing what products are out there, what I could use. I've got a big family, and if I see something I like, maybe a relative could make it for me."

Soft drinks are automatic in Japan

NEW YORK (AP) — Some 2 million automatic vending machines account for more than 40 percent of all soft drinks sold in Japan, according to a report by an international beverage publication.

Besides vending machines, says Beverages Magazine, which tracks the worldwide beverage field, major sales outlets include Japan's 3,000 national and regional supermarkets, and 35,000 convenience stores. Japan's 160,000 liquor stores, traditionally tied in with breweries, are also soft-drink outlets.

Unlike in the United States, the nationwide demand for carbonated drinks has been dropping with non-carbonated drinks showing strong growth. Demand for fruit juices and fruit-juice drinks is increasing, fueled by consumers' growing concern with health and a desire for a more natural lifestyle, the report says.

Coffee drinks, fortified sport drinks, black and oolong teas (tea made from leaves that have been partially fermented before heat has been applied) are the current locomotives driving the soft-drink market in Japan. All of these drinks are non-carbonated and are packaged mainly in cans and plastic containers.

A recent innovation, found in small restaurants, offices and schools, is a syrup dispenser which mixes syrup with municipal water to offer a selection of carbonated and non-carbonated drinks.

DEAR ABBY

Couple's anniversary toast is to kindness of strangers

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I read about the gentleman who saw an elderly lady take a pie out of the freezer in a supermarket, look at it, then put it back. Thinking perhaps she couldn't afford it, the gentleman walked over to her, smiled, then placed a folded $20 bill in her hand and said, "Go back and get that pie." Then he walked out the door. What a nice thing for a perfect stranger to do.

Van Buren

Something like that happened to me recently. On Feb. 8, my husband and I celebrated our 55th wedding anniversary. It wasn't really a "celebration" because my husband is in a nursing home in Simcoe, Ontario. He wasn't able to go anywhere, so I stopped at Kentucky Fried Chicken and ordered two dinners to go — then I mentioned I was carrying it to my husband in a nursing home so we could have our anniversary dinner together.

When they handed me my order, I started to pay and was told, "The couple who were standing near you when you gave me your order already paid for it. They asked me to say 'Happy Anniversary.'"

Abby, I have no idea who they were, but that's just about the nicest thing that's ever happened to me. So, whoever you are, thank you! — MR. AND MRS. JAMES MANN, PORT ROWAN, ONTARIO

DEAR MR. AND MRS. MANN: Thanks for a heartwarming story. Aren't people wonderful?

DEAR ABBY: How do you feel about the media revealing the name of a person who was raped?

And while I have your attention, do you think the name of the rapist should be publicized? — CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS: I think the name of the victim should be revealed only with the permission of the victim. And I think the identity of the person accused of the crime should be noted as "the accused" until that person has been tried and found guilty.

DEAR ABBY: Would you expose your most embarrassing moment for all the world to see? Well, that's what my wife wants me to do. When we were married, we had our formal church wedding videotaped. As we approached the altar railing, I discovered to my horror that after walking past 200 friends and relatives, the zipper in my trousers was unzipped! There I am in living color, fumbling and tugging until I eventually made myself respectable. All of this is plainly recorded on video.

My dilemma: My wife thinks this would be a great entry for a home video show contest with a nationwide audience. She is sure it would win a prize. I don't even want to try. What do you think? — J.B. IN JAMAICA, N.Y.

DEAR J.B: I think you should block out your face and send in the tape.

CONFIDENTIAL TO LUKE IN SISTERS, ORE.: He who thinketh by the inch and speaketh by the yard should be kicked by the foot.

Packaging becoming more efficient, environmentally sound, less bulky

NEW YORK (AP) — The days of the broad-shouldered, large economy-size packages that have filled American supermarket shelves since the end of World War II are coming to an end, reports a New York-based marketing communications concern.

In their place, consumers are beginning to find smaller, functional containers, accordiing to the Howard Marlboro Group. The new units use considerably less packaging material and take up some 40 percent less shelf space than their bulky predecessors.

The move toward smaller packages is spurred largely by environmental concerns. The decreased sizes mean less solid waste, and less fossil fuel and pollution expended in shipping the product.

One example is the introduction of a 21-ounce refill package of a popular liquid fabric softener, that when water is added, makes a gallon of the original formula. The re-fill paperboard carton uses 75 percent less packaging material than the original gallon bottle.

Other packaging efficiencies can be achieved through slight modification, and not just for products that can be concentrated, the report notes.

Ex-student finds prom same as way back when

EDITOR'S NOTE — Some of life's great events can never be revisited, some moments never repeated. But the AP's Tad Bartimus found that you can go back to the prom. A high school prom never changes — primping and prepping and being nervous never go out of style. And as different as today's kids are from previous generations, young love is just as awkward as it was back when.

By Tad Bartimus

ESTES PARK, Colo. (AP) — For folks who still think Vanilla Ice is something you drink, it was a chance to go back to a night nearly everybody remembers all their lives.

The Prom.

That special dance just before graduation, that social event of the high school year, that night when a teen-ager has hysterics over a pimple, or angst over a two-pound weight gain, or tears over not finding that absolutely perfect dress.

And that's just the girls. The guys have to take time out from baseball practice to get haircuts that give them cowlicks. Tuxedo rentals average 90 bucks, plus tax. Add on a corsage and dinner in a fancy restaurant and that's a lot of yards to mow.

Then there are the parents. Lectures about drinking and driving, threats of grounding you until retirement if you so much as scuff the whitewalls on your dad's tires, cheap shots about your date's table manners.

YES, EVERYBODY remembers their prom. Especially the one where your girlfriend went with somebody else, the one where you ate oysters before you realized you had the flu, the one where you really did run out of gas — before the dance!

But wait. What if you got to do it all over again, in your 40s, knowing what 25 years of living have taught you about romance and relationships? What would you see? How would you feel?

There were puffy white clouds floating in a full-moon sky when my date turned on the car ignition and the dulcet tones of the Four Lads came wafting from the radio: " ... the day we tore the goal posts down ... we will have these moments to remember."

Taking that as a sign that this peek into the past was meant to be, we were off to the 1991 Estes Park High School prom, ostensibly as chaperones but, in reality, time travelers looking for Peggy Sue and the gang.

The theme was "Hold On to the Night;" the senior class motto, "May the hinges of friendship never rust, nor the wings of friendship lose a feather." Not exactly Shakespeare, but at least it wasn't Milli Vanilli.

WALKING THROUGH the door with the old bearskin nailed above it, I saw bright lights and balloons signaling a festive occasion in full swing.

Reflecting the sophistication of today's teen-agers, the class colors were a trendy teal and silver. Instead of crepe paper, there was high-tech tinsel draping the rafters. Strobe lights more reminiscent of interrogation rooms in a Ludlum novel than romance played havoc with bifocals. But the punch, a reassuring blue, still had that same nondescript taste it had in 1965. Some things never change.

The dance floor was crowded with daddy's little girls in white tulle and lace. But miniskirts, rhinestone-decorated stockings and mousse-sculpted hair also were popular. One couple sported matching hairdos — his, too, curled over his shoulder blades. Their barrettes, however, did not match.

A nervous father asked us to be on the lookout for his dainty daughter's escort: "He's the one with the big hands and the tiny brain," said the dad, only half in jest. He'd been remembering, perhaps too keenly, his own proms.

Instead of a band, a couple of disc jockeys shouted into microphones between songs. The slow tunes were fine: Young couples danced cheek-to-cheek to "The Wind Beneath My Wings." But when the rap records blared from the loudspeakers, the crowd stepped back to let the showoffs cavort in the spotlights.

In bygone days of cotillion lessons, girls frequently learned to waltz together. Now, it is strictly the boys, jerking like a calisthenics squad, outdoing each other on the dance floor to the likes of M.C. Hammer, L.L. Cool J and, of course, Mr. Ice as their dates politely stand back and clap.

WHEN IT WAS time to crown the king and queen, a score of proud parents showed up to watch this milestone in their offsprings' lives. When one beautiful girl lost out to another, her father's face reflected even more disappointment than hers. As Neil Sedaka warned us, growing up is hard to do.

Predictably, the senior class president was king and the class secretary-treasurer was queen. So much for a new world order.

Throughout the night, these youngsters who face so many adolescent land mines — teen-age pregnancy, the threat of AIDS, the temptation of drugs, intense competition for academic excellence, the fallout from divorce and dysfunctional families — looked like models for Norman Rockwell.

Scrubbed and polished, hairsprayed and pressed, smelling sweet and acting oh so grown up in their party clothes, they'd packed their cares away in some smelly old gym bag for the night.

And what was it like for us old folks the second time around? Well, my date — the high school baseball coach, I his "main squeeze", or just "squeeze" for short — cut a rug and earned a "cool, man" from the kids.

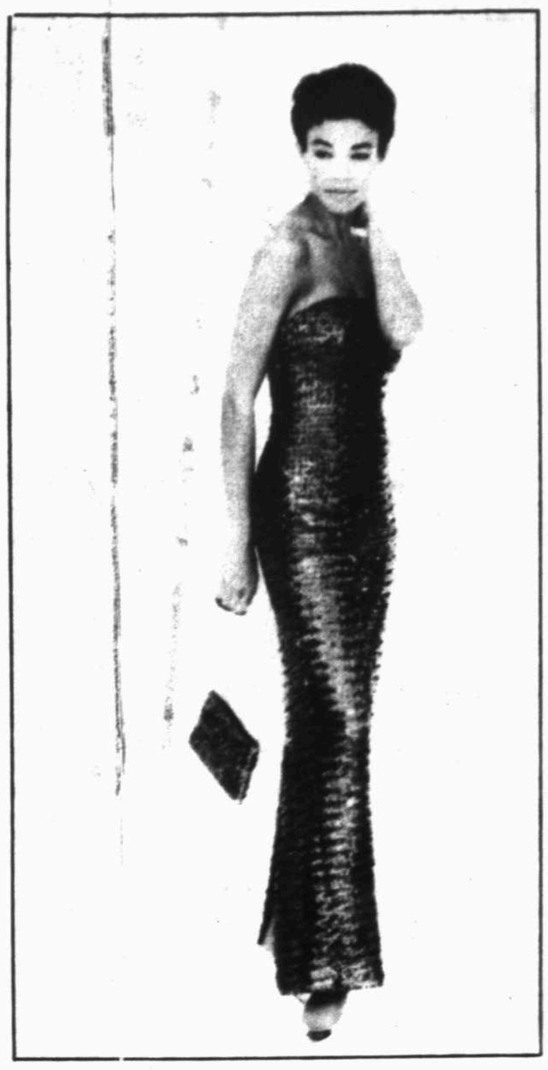

WE DIDN'T run out of gas or put a single scratch on the car. We skipped dinner out at $50 a plate in favor of Lean Cuisine while watching the "Golden Girls." Like my date, I, too wore a tuxedo. It hid my support hose.

The orchid was nice, but we couldn't stay up for the after-prom party — too sleepy. So my date — my husband — and I came home together.

Some things just get better with age.

Tad Bartimus is the AP's Mountain States regional reporter, based in Denver. Her senior prom in Belton, Mo., was in 1965. Her dog attacked her date before the dance.

American Indian collectibles vary

Associated Press

Baskets are valued first by their age. Premiums also are placed on baskets with unbroken edges and no visible holes.

The range of Native American antiques and collectibles runs from jewelry to pottery, from prehistoric to contemporary, from a 50-cent arrowhead to a $5,000 Navajo rug.

Among the most highly prized collectibles, according to an article in the current issue of Country Living, are baskets, blankets and rugs, pottery and jewelry.

Baskets played a crucial role in daily Indian life. Each was designed to perform a specific function, from carrying corn to holding babies. Some, such as the Navajo wedding-ceremony basket, were used only in special circumstances. Their special significance and generally fine condition make them a highly prized item among advanced collectors.

Geometric and symbolic designs evolved in basket decoration as they did on clay vessels. Each tribe's designs carried specific meanings. To the Apaches, for instance, the swastika represents water.

Colors were generally produced by selecting a type of grass or reed known for its particular shade or tint or by tinting the weaving material with a dye. The most desirable baskets are those colored with vegetable dyes.

Around the turn of the century, white traders persuaded many Native Americans to switch to aniline dyes, which were easier and faster to work with but produced less satisfactory colors. Fortunately most tribes switched back to natural materials.

Color varies from tribe to tribe, but red had an almost universal interpretation of being sacred. Of all the Pueblo Indian tribes, the Hopi baskets are considered the finest both in terms of color and craftsmanship.

Baskets are valued first by their age. Premiums also are placed on baskets with unbroken edges and no visible holes.

The most famous rugs and blankets were woven by Navajo women, whose wool blankets date from around 1800 and fall into two major categories — early everyday blankets of dull colors and, later, more colorful chief blankets. They also designed shoulder blankets, children's blankets and saddle blankets.

As with baskets, red was a favorite color which, to the Navajos, symbolized the sun, giver of life. Other favorites: green (youth), yellow (maturity), orange (harvest), brown (death), and black (mourning).

As author and native American authority Dawn Reno observed, "The Navajo appear to be the last of the rug-making Indians in North America, and their work sells for very high prices because the common assumption is that if it was woven by a Navajo, it will last forever."

Native American pottery spans the prehistoric age to the present day. Traditional Native American potters did not use a wheel, but built their wares by hand. Decorations took the form of geometric lines and shapes, or literal or symbolic representations of birds or animals.

The earliest Native American jewelry is the most highly prized because once Indians learned that tourists and settlers wanted to purchase their jewelry they began to produce a line that could be exchanged with trading-post owners for cash and food. The heavier-gauge, higher-quality jewelry was reserved for their own use.

The classic stone in American Indian jewelry is the turquoise. Turquoise can be broken or damaged and the effect a break has on a piece of jewelry's value depends on how much it detracts from the item's appearance. Old stones should be repaired by a professional rather than replaced; stones repaired with silver should be left alone because such repairs are indicative of 19th-century craftsmanship.

When buying Native American jewelry, expect to find normal wear. Pieces that look like new may be. Beware of inferior pieces manufactured in the Philippines and passed off as Native American.

Other Native American collectibles, Bruce E. Johnson wrote in Country Living, include leather goods such as moccasins, shirts, bags and shields, as well as beadwork, pipes, dolls, breastplates and tools.

Computers may help overcome language barriers

PARIS (AP) — American marketers are looking to multilingual computers to help overcome language difficulties in retail stores when the European Community alignment takes effect in 1992, notes an international marketing report issued in Paris.

Programmed to operate in several languages simultaneously, the interactive machines — already popular in the United States — may quickly prove compelling to European shoppers, notes Intermark Corp., designer-producer of the units.

Working through entire product categories, the computers can be programmed to help shoppers select the products they want by guiding them through the available brand names, colors or flavors quickly and accurately.

Consumers are then directed to the location in the store where the desired product is available.

The report notes the number of these interactive units on European retail floors lags far behind the United States, but as Europe gets closer to the day of barrier-free trade, their use is expected to expand because they offer a simple answer to the language problems that exist in the European Community.

MIDLAND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

NEWS

Local companies important

Economic Development involves more than just recruiting new companies to the Permian Basin. The Chamber's economic development efforts focus on businesses that export a product or service from the region and import new dollars. The Chamber recently began a visitation program to retain existing Midland-area manufacturers and service-sector companies and offer support as those businesses seek to expand.

The Chamber's Retention/Expansion Committee, under the leadership of volunteer Beth Bull, has conducted the visits for the past several months.

"This program allows us to contact each company on a personal basis," said Tom Stinson, the Chamber's Economic Development manager. About two visits per week are scheduled by a team consisting of a Chamber economic development staff person and a volunteer.

Gozo is paradise with strange-sounding name

By Suzy Patterson

GOZO, Republic of Malta (AP) - Exotic and quirky as its name, Gozo is a minute island in the Mediterranean. It's also a lovely holiday destination for adventurous souls searching for low-keyed amusement and beautiful scenery.

As the baby sister island to Malta, Gozo is romantically known as Calypso's isle — referring to the mythological siren of Greco-Roman times who caused Ulysses' ships to founder on the rocks.

While Malta attracts admirers of its stunning Baroque architecture and rich historical past, smaller, pastoral Gozo has its own ardent fans.

Just nine miles long and not quite five miles wide, sitting 10 miles west of Malta and about 60 miles southwest of Sicily, Gozo can be "covered" cursorily in a few hours, or a day trip. But those who do not stop to linger for its subtle attractions miss the fun.

One big advantage of both Malta and Gozo is that most everybody speaks English. For over a century (1802-1964) the Maltese islands were British colonies.

Now the Maltese islands, which also include another rock-with-a-hotel called Comino, are independent. But many British still vacation and retire here.

THE NATIVE populace is a mixture of Mediterranean peoples with a somewhat world-weary attitude. Historically, they have weathered invasions by everyone from the ancient Phoenicians to latter-day Libyan and Chinese shipbuilding technicians.

Their own Maltese language is a mixture of Arabic and European tongues, including French and Italian.

By contrast to Malta — geographically an austere and dry rock — Gozo offers more greenery and an attractive, laid-back atmosphere.

The charms are immediate: arriving by ferry at Mgarr (pronounce mmm-JAR) harbor, you'll see the bobbing luzzu boats with their painted blue eyes to ward off back luck among the other fishing boats and yachts, rocky escarpments flanking hills and church towers.

The former penitentiary looms imposingly, but it's now a cultural center since there were not enough prisoners to make upkeep worthwhile.

You'll also notice signs for the Gleneagles Pub and the "Up-to-Date" garage, though part of the adventure is that little is up to date on Gozo.

But churches matter most on Gozo. The natives have taken their Roman Catholic religion seriously ever since the Knights of St. John decamped to Malta from Rhodes in the 16th century, holding off Turkish conqueror Suleiman the Magnificent in an incredible siege.

NOW SMALL Gozo boasts some 250 churches for a permanent population of around 20,000. Most are perched on hilltops are are lovingly and beautifully constructed of the local golden limestone, as are virtually all the buildings here.

Visitors, like the natives, are expected to party during the many summer "festas." These are Saints' days and are celebrated on weekends, when each town breaks out with fireworks. The air may reek of explosive fumes, but bonhomie pervades the streets, as the various churches proudly parade their best locally carved religious statues and treasures.

Gozo's capital, called Rabat by natives and Victoria by the English, is a bustling little town with a handsome cathedral on the hill, just up from pleasantly shaded It-Tokk square.

Pronounced "gigantiya," it's one of the oldest archaeological sites of the Mediterranean basin, and well worth a visit. Just a few minutes' drive uphill from Victoria, the windswept site of stone constructions dating from 2800 BC is impressive, if somewhat eerie.

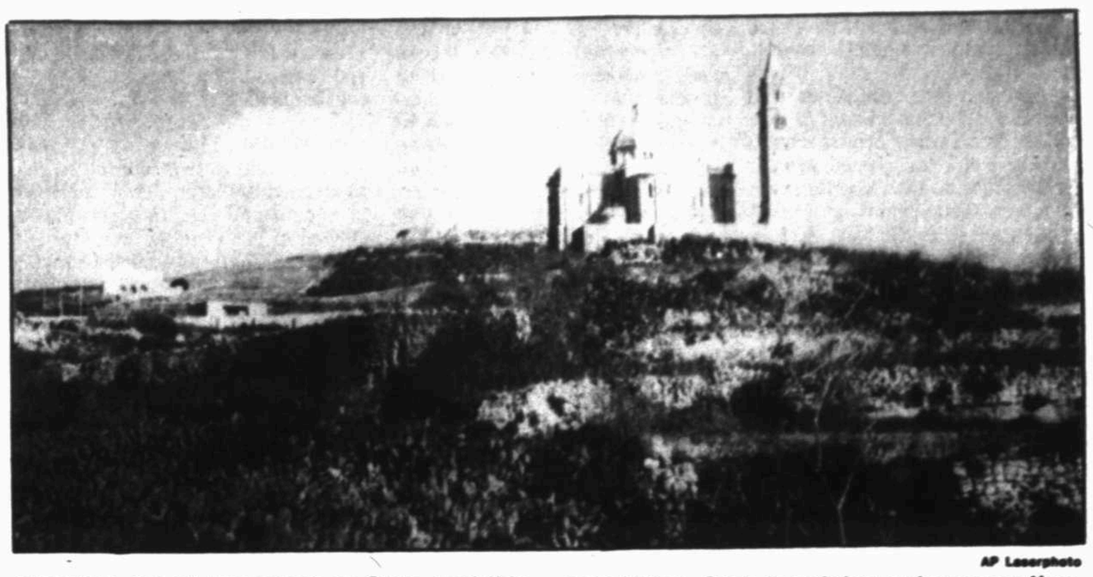

Not even experts know exactly how the primitive copper-age peoples living here erected the 25-foot-high stone monoliths, as the people later disappeared leaving nothing save the monuments.

History asserts itself again with the 16th century Knights' monumental churches and civic buildings.

Gozitan church-villages to explore include Gharb (pronounced "Arb,") with its pleasing Baroque-style church and pastel-painted houses; Ta' Pinu, a 20th-century church with a neighboring Stations of the Cross progress of statues up the hillside. And the largest, most impressive and recent domed church on the island — Xewkija (pronounced "chew-key-ya").

GOZO IS NOT famed for beach life. But this lends intrigue for those who prefer their swimming rough and scenic, rather than comfortable and plagued by fast-food carts.

Yet Gozo boasts the Maltese Islands' best sand beach — the ruddy crescent known as Ramla Bay, nearly a mile and a half long.

AP Laserphoto

Churches are all-important on Gozo, and this one, called Ta'Pinu, dominates a typical Gozitan scene of church spire, ancient walls and vegetation. Gozo is quieter and greener than its sister island, Malta.

Tips help visitors to Gozo make most of their trips

Associated Press

■ Getting there: There are regular flights to Malta from London, Rome and Paris. Summer helicopter service to Gozo runs several times a day from Malta, and there are regular, frequent ferries throughout the year.

■ Where to stay: The best hostelry at internationally-high prices is Ta Cenc' (pronounced "Tah-chench"). Gently luxurious at about $100 per night, it is capably run by sophisticated Italian managers and staff and offers everything from bungalow-apartments, pool and tennis courts to good food. Less expensive Gozo digs include the Duke of Edinburgh, on Victoria's main street. This small hotel exudes a friendly Gozitan family atmosphere and a pool out back. St. Patrick's Hotel in Xlendi offers a few formidable views of the bay, and good sandwiches, but its comforts may be sketchy to spartan. The Cornucopia, perched on a hill of Xaghra, near Ggantija, has a certain rustic charm and relaxed atmosphere with a pool and regular barbecue parties.

Just between Victoria and Gharb, Amand's is owned by a Belgian and has a jolly atmosphere and good views. Salvina's in Gharb is intimate and appealing, though food standards are inconsistent.

■ Seasons: Go in June if possible. The weather is very warm, but never uncomfortable. There is always a nice breeze.

Wink festival to honor Orbison

Staff Report

WINK — Wink will once again honor its favorite son, rock and roll legend Roy Orbison, at the third annual Roy Orbison Memorial Music Festival.

The festival will be 5 p.m.-midnight June 1 in Wildcat Stadium in Wink.

In just three years, this event has become one of the prime musical attractions in West Texas, and was named one of the top musical events in Texas by the Texas Department of Commerce and Texas Monthly.

Wink was selected as the host for the festival because Orbison graduated from Wink High School and considered it his hometown throughout his career.

In fact, Orbision organized his first band in Wink called the Wink Wersterners, who will be on hand at the festival to entertain the crowd.

Events will include a "Pretty Woman" contest, a reunion and concert performances by a number of artists and musical groups who will pay tribute to Orbison and his music.

Featured this year will be Kenny Morríll, an Orbidon impersonator from Las Vegas; Barbara Farrell, also from Las Vegas; Sandy Powell, who is a Patsy Cline impersonator who also participates in Morrill's show; Ricky Lynn Gregg and Wild Country, and special guest Bill Dees, who will be singing many of the songs he co-wrote with Orbison, including "Pretty Woman."

Some of the other musicians who will be present include The Flash-Back Band, who will back up Morrill and perform their own show; Steven Pride, Charley Pride's younger brother; Tim Thompson, winner of both the singing and songwriting competition of the Putnam Music Festival; the Bad Brakes, a nostalgic rock and roll group from Midland; the Teen Kings, and many local Wink musician who played music with Orbison over the years.

Some members of Orbison's family also indicated they will attend the festival, an event produced by Wemus Entertainment.

Over 3,000 people are expected to attend this year's festival, according to Dennis Grubb of Wemus Entertainment. Commemorative T-shirts, buttons and other Orbison items will be available.

Tickets to the fesitival are $10 for adults and $5 for children. All proceeds of the festival will be used for the construction of a bronze, life-sized statue of Orbison to be located next to the Roy Orbison Museum in Wink. No alcoholic beverages are allowed and it is recommended to bring stadium chairs, cushions and blankets.

For more information about the Texas Roy Orbison Memorial Music Festival, contact the City of Wink at (915) 527-3441.

Volunteers needed at Fort Davis

Staff Report

Persons with an interest in western history looking for a volunteer position for the summer should contact the Fort Davis National Historic Site. The Fort is in need of volunteers to help keep open and interpret three restored and refurnished historic buildings: the commanding officer's quarters, an officer's kitchen and servant's quarters, and an enlisted men's barracks.

Volunteers also are needed for the Fort's "1884" Baseball Team, artillery crew, Cavalry unit, color guard and special programs.

Volunteers are the reason the Fort has been able to keep many of the buildings open on a regular schedule, as well as being able to conduct many of the special demonstrations and programs the approximately 25,000 visitors come to the Fort to see each summer.

Volunteers who work in the historic buildings are asked to work a minimum of four hours per week. Schedules vary for those volunteers serving as members of one of the special units or members of the baseball team. All schedules are flexible and can be arranged to accommodate planned vacations. Authentic period uniforms, dresses, equipment and accoutrements are provided and volunteers will receive "class room" and on-site training.

Training for all volunteers is scheduled for 8 a.m.-4 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday and 8:30-10 a.m. Friday. Thursday's training sessions will be presented by Dr. James A. Goss, professor of anthropology and director of ethnic studies at Texas Tech University. He has spent over 30 years researching the Mescalero Apaches, and will give an 8-hour program on "The Apache Adaptation to the West Texas Area."

For more information on the Volunteer-In-the-Parks program and the schedule of volunteer interpretive training, call Mary Williams at the Fort at (915) 426-3224.

Bargains in family travel still available

By Betsy Wade
N.Y. Times News Service

"Kids Stay Free" is a reigning theme in the hotel and motel business these days: Close to 81 percent of hotels now offer such a program, according to the industry association, and the percentage was up almost a point between 1988 and 1990.

A 1990 survey by the American Hotel and Motel Association of the services its members offer showed the full-service midpriced places like Ramadas and Holiday Inns — hotels with restaurants that do not bill themselves as the least expensive in town — were most likely to provide free stays for children: 88 percent of those responding in this category did. Both cheaper and higher-priced hostelries were in the 70 percent range.

But the word "program" can cover an infinite number of variations. Most of these offers involve having a child or children sleep in the room with you, usually in a second double bed. Unless the children are old enough to remain alone while you go out, you may be tiptoeing around in the dark with the television off after their bedtime.

The maximum age for free stays varies, usually between 12 and 18, even among individual hotels in the same chain.

Do not assume that a 15-year-old is going to get a free bed once you are on the road. Call and ask.

HOWEVER, AN increasing number of hotels are offering an adjoining room for half the price of the first one, and this might be a good solution for those traveling with children. Even if the hotel does not advertise it, ask about the possibility. A couple I know, when they do this, carry along their microphone listening device for the children's room.

A number of resorts and luxury hotels have programs that do not put children up free but do provide supervised activities, special meals and some sitting services. These places are probably vacation destinations in themselves. So brochure-shopping and phone calls should precede reservations. Ask if you should reserve for activities and what the charge will be.

Hotels, motels and resorts in the United States have been panting for business in the last few months.

The occupancy rate for the first two months of the year was 53.2 percent, according to Michele Kelley of the hotel association. Many — probably excluding those within sprinting distance of Mickey Mouse — are ready to make a deal.

Here are some noteworthy offers for families in various categories. If you do not mind bargaining, see if you can get other hotels or motels to match what you want in return for a guaranteed reservation.

One of the nicest-sounding deals going, although not in the budget category, is available in two old-style hotels, the Tutwiler in Birmingham, Ala., and the Brown in Louisville, Ky.

IF YOU TAKE a room at the regular weekday rate, year round, the hotel will provide a second room free for children aged 18 or less. Weekday rates for a double at the Tutwiler begin at $118; at the Brown, $110. Weekend rates at both hotels are $30 or $40 lower, but you are still better off paying the full rate and getting the free room. The two-for-one deal may be reserved through (800) 866-7666. Baby-sitting is available. Camberley Hotels, the chain that includes these two, says that that three or four rooms a week at each are being booked on this plan.

Another way to get privacy for parents and children at a price less than that of two rooms is to go to an all-suite hotel. After a period of expansion, all-suite hotels have slowed in growth, like everything else. But 498 all-suite hotel properties belonging to 16 major chains are now open, with a total of 82,400 suites.

Suites include a refrigerator and modest cooking facilities, two burners or a microwave, and a bedroom that closes off from the sitting room, each usually with its own television. A suite may accommodate up to six people — four in two beds in a bedroom, and two on a fold-out couch in the sitting room.

Homewood Suites in Windsor Locks, Conn., near Hartford, has a "bring a friend" program for Friday and Saturday this year; if you rent one suite at the top price of $79 a night, you get the adjoining suite for $39.50. The number is (203) 627-8463.

All Homewood Suites properties serve a free Continental breakfast, with muffins and cereal, and this brings up an important element in calculating the price of being on the road with children: A free breakfast is worth at minimum $3 a person.

BE SURE TO check the content of the breakfast with the motel, however, because coffee and those little sealed cups of nondairy creamer will not nourish a child. Ask about milk, cereal and fruit.

The other Homewood suite properties are in Dallas; Memphis; Cincinnati; Dayton and Columbus, Ohio; Charlotte, N.C.; Omaha; Detroit; Lafayette, Ind.; Chicago; Savannah, Ga.; Atlanta; Orlando and Jacksonville, Fla., and Boulder, Colo. The central reservations number is (800) 225-5466.

There are many other suite chains. If you do not know of one in the city you are visiting, call a local hotel association or tourist office.

Resorts are increasingly offering children's activities, to permit the parents time to themselves. There is an extra charge for these, sometimes hourly. This information is usually in the brochures, but in any case ask in advance.

Club Med, known for the Mini Clubs for children aged 2 to 11 at some of its resorts, offers periods when children younger than 5 can stay free. Those clubs are at St. Lucia; Punta Cana in the Dominican Republic; Eleuthera in the Bahamas; Ixtapa in Mexico, and Sandpiper, Fla. The dates are generally into mid-June and then September to mid-December, but they vary from club to club.

The Stouffer Grand Beach in St. Thomas, United States Virgin Islands, offers a club for children aged 3 to 12 with various activities throughout the day: a beach party, a treasure hunt, dinners with movies and games. The prices range from $20 a child for a full Wednesday to $7 for four hours on Friday afternoon with a snack. Children under 18 stay free in the parents' room but this Stouffer also offers a second room for children under 17 at half the price of the first room. The direct phone is (809) 775-1510; the toll-free Stouffer number is (800) 468-3571.

THE HYATT Hotel and Resort chain also lets children 18 and under stay free in the parents' room and offers a second room for children at half the cost of the first one. The chain's Camp Hyatt is available at 100 hotels and resorts, with supervised programs at $5 a child an hour, plus special menus and reduced-price breakfasts.

However, Dorothy Jordon, editor of Family Travel Times, a respected newsletter published in New York, and her son had a disappointing experience with Camp Hyatt at the Hyatt Regency Aruba earlier this year, soon after it opened. The problem, Ms. Jordon writes, was that none of the children at the resort had reserved for the Camp Hyatt activities, so the hotel organized none.

"Hyatt never told us to make reservations for these activities — just that they would be available weekends year-round and during holiday periods," she wrote. Two of her correspondents found the same to be true at Hyatts elsewhere.

So if you are planning on children's menus and activities, ask when you make your reservation.

From prehistoric times to space age, children's museums have it all

By Jennifer Merin
Associated Press

If you're traveling with kids this summer, great adventures await in children's museums.

Interactive and hands-on exhibitions about scientific phenomena, vastly varied cultures and historical events are entertaining and educational.

Some highlights at those rated among the best by the American Association of Museums, Washington, D.C.:

■ Brooklyn Children's Museum (145 Brooklyn Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11213. Tel. 1-718-735-4400). This museum's tunnel-like entrance, resembling an over-sized drain pipe, is outfitted with water wheels, sluices and gates, turbines and steam controls — all operated by museum visitors — to show how water power and canal systems function.

Inside, a space-age geodesic dome has pod-like galleries with hands-on exhibits and more than 40,000 authentic ethnological, technological and historical artifacts.

Special exhibits include "Night Journeys: Home is Where I Sleep." It's about what happens during sleep and dream and sheds light on nighttime fears. "Animals Eat: Different Feasts for Different Beasts" has live animal habitats that show what different creatures eat and teach nutrition.

■ BOSTON'S CHILDREN'S Museum (300 Congress St., Boston, Mass. 02210. Tel. 1-617-426-6500 or 617-426-8855). It occupies a huge refurbished turn-of-the-century warehouse on the waterfront near historic Faneuil Hall. Exhibitions emphasize cultural and social values or demonstrate scientific principles.

"Ahead to the Past," for example, transports visitors to the year 1939 and into the home of a Jewish family. The museum's three-story Victorian house (a life-size model) is filled with pre-War items reflecting traditions, trends and history. There's also a two-story Japanese town house and tea shop, a gift from Kyoto, Boston's twin city. It illustrates Japanese lifestyle and culture.

The "Kid's Bridge," an exhibit about different cultures, teaches how people can get along with each other. "What if You Couldn't....?" helps children understand other people's disabilities.

On the scientific side, "Bones" covers anatomy in developmental, cultural and whimsical ways. "Bubbles" demonstrates bubble formations and "Raceways" shows the principles of motion and momentum.

■ Children's Discovery Center at the Museum of Natural History in Cincinnati (at Union Terminal, 1301 Western Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio 45203. Tel. 1-513-287-7020.) The center's exhibits focus on genetics, the senses, anatomy and teeth, the cardiovascular system and nutrition. A 5-foot-tall soft-sculpture doll unzips to reveal soft-sculpture organs that can be removed, discussed and replaced.

THE "RETURN of the Giants" exhibit features 23 life-size roaring, rearing, robotic dinosaurs. Concurrently, the planetarium's "Twilight of the Dinosaurs" offers five possible explanations for why 75 percent of the existing plant and animal species — dinosaurs included — vanished from Earth about 65 million years ago.

"Pathways to Change" explains how plants, animals and humans fit into the environment. It offers a time tunnel to take visitors back in time to study and develop the concept of environmental impact.

■ Chicago's awe-inspiring Museum of Science and Industry (South Lake Shore Drive at East 57th, Chicago, Ill., 60637. Tel. 1-312-684-1414) is housed in a historic building from the 1893 World's Fair. It has 75 exhibit halls with some 2,000 displays, most of them participatory. There is a full-scale coal mine, complete with an elevator into the mine and animated figures extracting coal from the mine shaft's walls. There's also a 16-foot walk-through model of the human heart, the Apollo-8 command module and a captured World War II German U-505 submarine.

■ The Exploratorium (3601 Lyon St., San Francisco, Calif. 94123. Tel. 1-617-561-0317), part of the Palace of Fine Arts, is in a hangar-sized building at the foot of the Golden Gate Bridge. The museum's 650 exhibits about science, art and human perception offer the kind of experiential learning that is virtually impossible in classrooms or through books or television.

KIDS CRAWL through pitch-black mazes of chambers lined with different textures, spin water-filled 7-foot-high plexiglass cylinders to create a vortex and use huge prisms to deflect sunlight off the walls. Other playful activities demonstrate principles of light, color, vision, sound, music, hearing, touch, animal behavior, language, patterns, electricity, heat and temperature, waves and resonance, and the weather.

Price outlook

The Energy Information Administration has published its second quarter Short Term Energy Outlook, and here are the assumptions:

■ GASOLINE: Demand for gasoline this summer is expected to be about 100,000 barrels per day less than consumption last summer because of the economic recession and improvments in vehicle efficiency.

■ PRODUCTS: The drop in gasoline demand and the effect of the economic recession on the demand for other petroleum products are expected to lower total U.S. petroleum demand for the second consecutive year.

■ OIL DEMAND: Competitive price of natural gas is also expected to contribute to the decline in oil demand.

■ NATURAL GAS: Prices for natural gas should start to rise by late 1991 as the current excess in supply is drawn down by higher overall consumption. Return to normal weather could result in increased total petroleum and natural gas demand in 1992.

■ OIL PRICES: Crude oil prices are expected to stay in the $15-$22 per barrel range in 1991 and 1992.

Oilpatch equipment sales lag

Demand falters, prices softening

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Since last August, when Iraq invaded Kuwait, all phases of the U.S. petroleum industry have been on a roller coaster ride — up with prices, down with prices. When the oil boom began to fade in the early 1980s, one of the first segments to feel the squeeze was the equipment industry, which is still feeling squeezed.

"The state of the equipment industry is dismal right now," said one long-time Midland supplier. "Supply is much greater than demand and prices are depressed in all areas. It's a tough situation."

He observed that there had been a lack of activity starting with the end of the Persian Gulf war, or just as that conflict was winding down. "When it became apparent there wasn't going to be a boom for the industry, the industry retrenched," he said.

Bob Palmer, president of Palmer Pipe & Supply Co., agreed that activity took a downturn in the last month or so, and he's seen some price cutting that is keeping prices soft.

"That's hurt us," he said. "It's a thin line between black and red."

Palmer added that, with a decline in the number of manufacturers, supplies of some items have gotten tight and it's taking a little longer to get some things.

Carrying more reconditioned and used equipment has helped his company, which was established in 1959, he noted. "A lot of oil companies are having their equipment reconditioned rather than throwing it away."

Palmer is in the general oilfield supply business, selling such items as fittings.

He takes a slightly pessimistic view of the industry's future, saying "I don't see things improving; I don't see any reason for them to improve. I think we're seeing the oil industry the way it's going to be for awhile."

However, the long-time supplier said that "it looks like, during the last half of the year, things should pick up for the Midland's T.B. O'Brien has been given a once-in-a-lifetime task.

All that has been asked of him is to bring together the total oilfield firefighting resources in the world to bring under control the biggest oilfield fire in history. Then, when that's done rebuild a nation's entire oil industry. But it is a task he has well under hand.

T.B. O'Brien

O'Brien, whose Midland engineering firm O'Brien, Goins & Simpson has the primary contract with the Kuwaiti government to put out the fires and put the nation's oil wells back on production has just returned from Kuwait and reports that the effort is going better than expected and that the fires could be out in less than a year.

"We are now capping the wells at the rate of two to three per day. In two months we have managed to put about 20 percent of the fires. In ten months I would expect that we would have them all out," said O'Brien. To date over 100 wells have been capped with approximately 500 wells remaining to cap.

Highland pumps optimism into Odessa

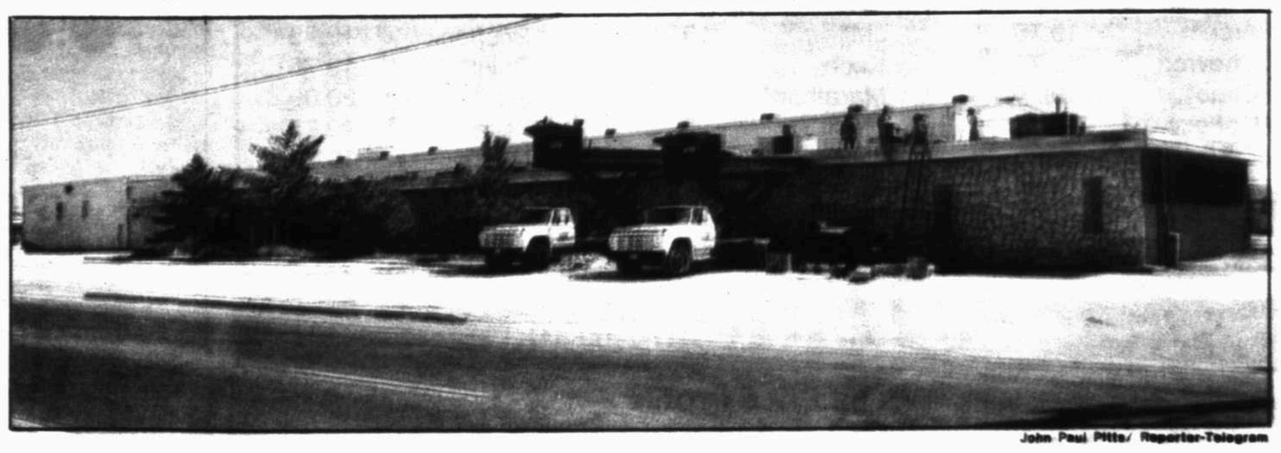

■ News of a new factory opening in Odessa will mean more than jobs to the Permian Basin.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

ODESSA — When the Odessa Chamber of Commerce called a press conference this week to announce that a new oilfield manufacturing company was coming to town it sent out two strong and positive messages.

First, it signaled that the momentum to restore Odessa to its greatness as an oilpatch manufacturing center was real. The downturn of the eighties had taken the edge off that reputation as company after company folded, moved or merged, but now there are more than a few signs that Odessa is strong on the come back trail.

"Are we on a roll or what?" Odessa Mayor Lorraine Bonner asked at the press conference, which was called to announce that Highland Pump Inc. would relocate its Rotaflex Pump division to Odessa. Highland says it will open a 97,000 square-foot factory adjacent to its facility on South Grandview to manufacture its Rotaflex pumping unit.

Speaking of 'true believers' and 'infidels'

On a recent Midland visit Texas Railroad Commissioner Lena Guerrero asked the question: "We are all environmentalists, aren't we? Don't we all want to breathe clean air and drink clean water?"

Pitts

The obvious answer: "Of course! We all want to live in a clean world. Only socially dysfunctional people mess in their own nest."

So how do you account for the fact that the environmental issue is dominated by a few radical, activists who have confiscated the "environmentalist" label, leaving the non-radical majority out of the environmental equation.

It seems to be a simple case of zealot pride. When environmental zealots make fanatical, unreasonable, absurd, costly, uncompromising environmental demands upon industry, individuals, states and the nation it seems to be a way of preening and strutting and telling the rest of the flock that he is a "true believer," the only one who really cares. Like fools we believe him.

The philosopher Eric Hoffer once described the true believer as an uncompromising fanatic. Infidels, of course, are anyone who disagrees with the true believer.

The true believer environmentalist would stop construction of a dam that could provide energy, food and water to hundreds of thousands of Texans, because of a tiny obscure fish.

He would prohibit offshore drilling, because there "might" be an accident, and because he doesn't like to look at rigs on the horizon — even though the nation is being driven to the poor house by foreign oil imports.

He would forbid drilling in wilderness areas because it might interfere with the mating habits of elk — even though development of such reserves might lessen the need to send young Americans to die for "cheap" foreign oil, so that all Americans including environmentalists can pump cheap gas into their cars.

By the way have you ever seen a true believer willing to pay $3 per gallon for gas to preserve the mating habits of Alaskan elk, willing to give up his air conditioned home to save a snail darter.

True believers, it seems, will do almost anything to save the environment as long as Exxon, The State of Texas, General Electric or infidels have to pay the freight.

How does one become an infidel. He only needs to speaks of reason, caution, common sense, cost-balancing and social and economic tradeoffs when it comes to environmental perspectives.

Tradeoffs? Infidels understand what they are and how they must be made. True believers refuse to acknowledge them. And therein is the basis for polarization between the so-called environmentalists and most industry, including the oil industry.

True believers think that somehow imperfect man can make a perfect world in which accidents will not happen, if only one spends enough money and enacts enough regulations.

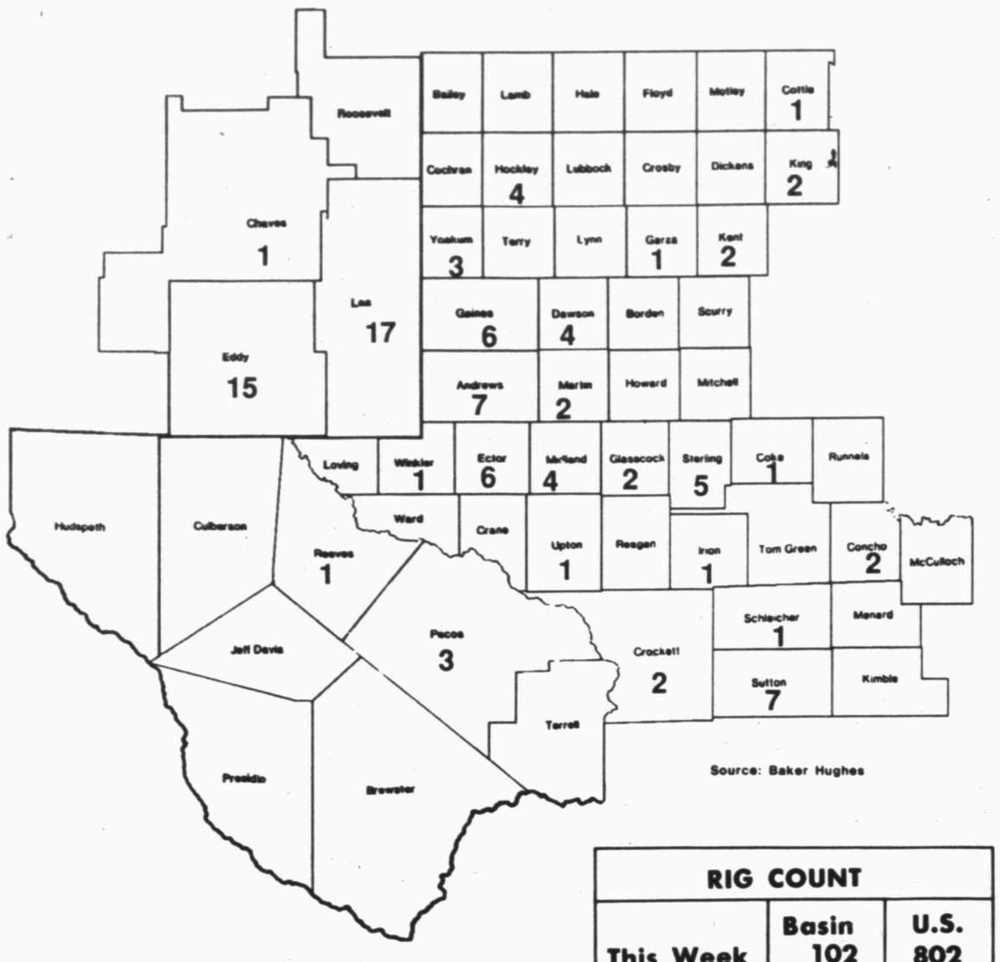

Realists, infidels, don't believe in a perfect world. They know, deep down, that there will be another Valdez-class spill —

Royal Dutch-Shell income rises 3.8 percent

LONDON (AP) — Royal Dutch-Shell Group of Cos. said Thursday that net income rose 3.8 percent in the first quarter as significantly lower corporate charges offset a decline in earnings in all divisions.

The oil giant said its net income for the three months ended March 31 rose to 847 million pounds, or $1.62 billion, from 816 million pounds a year ago.

Those figures include losses Shell incurred on items in its inventory, such as oil that lost its value when prices plunged following the outbreak of the U.S.-led war on Iraq in January. If such losses were not taken into acount, Shell's earnings would be 48 percent higher at 1.23 billion pounds.

Exxon's Showcase Well

After more than a year of permit work, planning, and drilling Exxon's exploratory well in the Los Padres National Forest has been declared a dry hole. However, since this photo was taken, the drilling rig has been removed along with other equipment, and the site has been seeded with native grasses to help return it to its natural state. Exxon says special procedures were followed to ensure that the environmental impact of drilling would be minimal.

Soviet oil industry losing billions

■ Waste and inefficiency are costing the Soviet petroleum industry billions in revenue each year.

Source: Gorbachev speech, Foreign Trade Ministry AP/Cynthia Greer

SURGUT, U.S.S.R. — Orange torches light the sky above the vast Siberian swamp, wasting billions of dollars worth of gas the crippled Soviet economy desperately needs.

"It's like foreign currency going up in flames," said Anatoly Loshakov, the city's mayor, of $750 million worth of gas and gas condensate that comes to the surface each year with oil from thousands of wells in Surgut.

It is burned off because it has nowhere to go. The pipeline blew up in 1989 and has not been rebuilt.

Those perpetual torches, lakes of spilled oil and hundreds of frozen pumps help explain a disastrous drop in production from the main Soviet fields.

The Soviet Union ranks second as an oil exporter, after Saudia Arabia, but might become an importer within two years. Analysts say that would wreck any attempt at economic reform.

Oil production fell from 589 million tons in 1989 to 552 million in 1990, according to Soviet officials, and is expected to be as low as 500 million tons in 1991. A ton of oil equals about seven 42-gallon barrels.

Exports of oil, the primary source of foreign currency for the Soviet Union, are being reduced from 120 million tons in 1990 to 60 million in 1991.

In an attempt to turn the industry around, Soviet officials are putting aside decades of secrecy and turning to Western oil companies for money, technology and management.

One U.S. consortium has begun repairing and redrilling Soviet oil wells and expects to be exporting by summer.

Outdated technology and inefficient management led to the pipeline explosion, which blew two passenger trains off adjacent tracks, killing 575 people and injuring 623.

Investigators found the entire 1,100-mile pipeline was full of holes and shut it down, Loshakov said.

With the pipeline gone and not enough tank cars to take the gas to a refinery, he said, authorities have burned off more than 15 billion cubic meters of gas and condensate a year in the Surgut area alone.

Loshakov said it is burned for safety reasons. The only way to leave the gas in the ground would be to shut down oil production.

A similar amount of gas is being wasted in the neighboring Radushny area.

Such stories abound in the Tyumen region of Siberia, where the Soviets once produced enough oil and gas to squander it on inefficient industry, reap a bonanza from exports and prop up the economy for the last 25 years.

Soviet media say thousands of pipeline leaks pour oil into lakes and rivers.

At Belozerneft, 400,000 tons were lost and 27 wells shut down when leaking oil caught fire. The Bashkyria region of Russia is so polluted the KGB intelligence agency recommended it be declared an ecological disaster area.

One of every three oil wells at Surgut is out of operation for lack of parts or shoddy equipment and construction, said Vladimir Anaikin, a drilling engineer.

A shortage of foreign currency for imports, and a coal shortage caused by a miners' strike, halted production of important parts and chemicals.

"The miners don't give coal to the metallurgical plants and they don't supply the construction workers, and the construction workers fail to give us pumps and oil equipment, and so on," said Anatoly Efimov, head of the oil field labor union.

As oil exports decline, there is not enough foreign currency to buy critical materials from abroad, and the shortages get worse.

Vladimir Dolgov, chief of the drilling section, said the Surgut Oil and Gas Association gets only 50 percent to 70 percent of the supplies it needs. Officials said scarce items include Western chemicals, heavy cranes and haulers, wellheads, pipe and cement.

With Western aid, the Soviets could boost production from 40 percent of the oil in the ground to 80 percent, Dolgov said.

"Soviet oil-field technology is 30 years behind the times," said a spokesman for the Phibro Energy of Greenwich, Conn., whose joint venture has begun rehabilitating wells near Surgut.

Drilling engineer Anaikin and his colleague, Sergei Voroshilov, became stars because they scrounge for critical supplies.

"I spend half my day finding things that are necessary for us to do the job," Voroshilov said.

"When a pump breaks down, there are no replacements," said the Phibro executive, whose name was withheld in keeping with company policy.

Phibro plans to repair hundreds of wells, clear ice plugs and replace broken equipment, "trying to undo the damage" caused by Soviet emphasis on pumping oil quickly at the expense of long-term production.

U.S. gets first crude increase

Staff Report

U.S. crude production posted its first increase during the first quarter of 1991, the American Petroleum Institute has found.

The API said the increase was the first time in five years that domestic production had shown a year-to-year quarterly increase.

The API's monthly statistical report showed that U.S. crude production during the quarter averaged 7,507,000 barrels per day, up 1.2 percent from 7,418,000 barrels produced daily during the first quarter of 1990.

At the same time, the amount of products supplied from primary storage — a key measure of demand — fell slightly. Total imports — crude oil plus petroleum products — showed a sharp decline.

For the quarter, an average of 16,744,000 barrels per day of products was supplied, down 1.7 percent from the 17,025,000 barrels daily supplied during the year-earlier quarter, API said. Total imports in the quarter averaged 6,987,000 barrels per day, compared with 8,438,000 during the first three months of 1990, a drop of 17.2 percent.

BOTTOM LINES

■ MESA LIMITED PARTNERSHIP lost $19.6 million in the first quarter, slightly more than the $18.2 million it lost during the same period a year ago. The company lost 31 cents per partnership unit on revenues of $76.2 million, compared to a first quarter loss of 30 cents a share on revenues of $99.7 million in 1990.

■ MAXUS ENERGY CORP., benefiting from higher energy prices, more than tripled its first quarter profits compared to a year ago. The company announced income for the first quarter of 1991 at $14 million, compared to a profit of $3.4 million last year. The results amounted to 4 cents per common share profit in the 1991 quarter; the per-share results for 1990 was a 9-cent loss after accounting for distributions to preferred stockholders.

■ ENRON CORP., a diversified energy company whose operations include the nation's largest natural-gas pipeline system, said net income rose 7.9 percent in the first quarter. Net income was $108.8 million, or $1.82 a share, compared with $101 million, or $1.69, in the corresponding quarter last year. Revenues of the nation's 14th-largest energy company increased to $3.6 billion, from $3.3 billion.

■ TENNECO INC., a diversified operator of a large pipeline, said net income plunged 99.3 percent mainly because of a big loss in its J.I. Case unit, the nation's third-largest maker of farm and construction equipment. Tenneco's revenues fell 8.3 percent.

■ COASTAL CORP. earned $54.3 million in the first quarter, a 28 percent decline from last year. The company blamed the performance on a warm winter that slowed natural gas sales and the fall of oil prices at the beginning of the Persian Gulf War. Profit for the quarter was 52 cents a share on revenues of $2.54 billion. During the same quarter last year, Coastal earned $75.6 million, 72 cents a share, on revenues of $2.44 billion.

PITTS: The true believers

just as sure as there will be another airliner crash, no matter how much is spent on airline safety.

As sure as human hands and eyes guide mountain-sized steel tankers, loaded with gooey oil across treacherous seas, through storms and fog, there will be more spills. By the same token infidels, calculate that this is a risk worth taking to bring energy to America in order that we can heat our homes, drive our vehicles around town and fly in airplanes across the seas.

This doesn't mean, however, that caution should be thrown to the wind. While well-thought regulation with stiff penalties and first-class safety measures can reduce risk, they can never eliminate risk. This realization then, necessitates the need to place reasonable limits on spending and regulation, because beyond the bounds of reason there is no return.

I have lived most of my life in the oilpatch, I have been up and down lease roads in every county. I have worked on pulling units and drilling rigs, and roustabout gangs, and in all those years I can count on one or two hands the number of dead birds I have seen in oil pits. Talk to almost anyone else in the oilpatch and they will likely tell you the same story.

Yet the U.S. Fish & Wildlife and environmentalists would have us believe that millions of birds are being killed each year by open oil pits.

Moreover, they would inform us that even if a handful of birds were drowned in oily pits each year it would be just cause to put netting over every single oil reserve pit and production tank in five states.

Call me infidel, but that doesn't sound like a reasonable tradeoff? Does several thousand dead birds justify the cost, hassle, and effort of putting nets over oilfield pits. Especially when you consider, an army of hunters lurks all along the flyways waiting to shoot birds out of the skies.

All of life is a tradeoff, but tradeoffs must be tempered with wisdom, reason, and facts. One of the biggest tradeoffs came about 1910, when this nation engaged in the great AC-DC debate.

As electricity began to play a role in the affairs of the nation, and electrification of entire cities became a possibility. Some argued that the nation should go with a direct current (DC) electrical system because accidents with alternating current (AC) would electrocute perhaps thousands. However, the proponents of AC argued that alternating current should become the standard because it could be transported over long distances, even outside the cities and into the countryside. They confessed that some would probably be electrocuted but in the end AC would be best for the nation.

Fortunately, the infidels stood their ground and the U.S. and the world has been better for it. Thanks to alternating current, electricity is now generated at distant plants and delivered to light, heat and cool homes, to power tool, and operate appliances. It has improved the quality of life beyond description.

Unfortunately, tens of thousands of people have been killed by electricity. It was a tradeoff: with the good came the bad, with the benefits the risks.

The point is: If the infidels had not stood their ground against "true believers" in the past we would be in a mess today.

And, if the infidels, particularly the oil infidels, don't stand their ground today against non-compromising environmentalists who insist on zero risk, and no tradeoffs it will have the devil to pay tomorrow with costly and unfair legislation and regulation.

FIRE: Report on Kuwait

(From 1F)

O'Brien said there were some initial problems with getting equipment through red tape, but the individual responsible for the bottleneck had been removed and equipment was moving into the country quickly.

He said about 1,000, including several from Midland and Odessa were working on the fires.

"We are not doing anything all that different," he said. "We have made some modifications to fire fighting equipment, but nothing out of the ordinary."

One of the devices being used extensively and which has been improved for use in Kuwait is the "snuffer." It is a section of large diameter pipe with special connections which is attatched to the end of a boom. The boom places the snuffer over the fire, then large volumes of nitrogen and water are injected into the "snuffer" to put out the fire.

Said O'Brien: "We are seeing a lot of variations in the snuffer. Some crews will install baffles; some inject nitrogen and water at the top, others at the bottom. Each of the four companies have their own design." He noted that when the fires are finally put out in Kuwait, the industry may have a standard snuffer it will use.

The Midland engineer, who has worked extensively in Kuwait, says crews are finding few wells blown off below the surface. For those wells that are blown beneath the surface, he said pulling units were being called in to cut the casing off with a wireline.

"Pulling units are hard to come by in the Middle East, because they don't have to swab wells or pull pumps on flowing wells," he said. When workovers are needed small drilling rigs are used. However, several pulling units are available in Saudi Arabia and he said he expected those were on their way to Kuwait.

Once the fire has been extinguished and the casing cut, the well is brought under control by stabbing a conical-shaped pipe into the top of the pipe. Water, mud and or cement is then pumped down the well to kill it.

Hard feelings between the firefighters and the Kuwaiti government were reported in the press, but O'Brien says that mainly was the result of the press overplaying some comments by the Kuwaiti Oil Minister.

The Kuwaiti Oil Minister had reported that the fires were not being put out fast enough and that he might look elsewhere in the world for assistance. "Those comments attracted more attention than they deserved," said O'Brien. "There was some comment on both sides."

He noted that the Oil Minister who had made those statements had since been replaced, in a general shake-up of the Kuwaiti cabinet, by an individual more experienced in the oil business.

O'Brien did acknowledge that there had been some difficult in getting equipment into the country. Badly needed equipment, needed to put out the fires, sat on the docks waiting for bureaucratic clearance. "When bureaucrats are unsure what to do they generally do nothing, and that is what happened." He said that situation had since been resolved and the business of getting equipment into the country put into the hands of the Kuwait Oil Co.

He also noted that living conditions in the country are still spartan, that all drinking water is flown in and frac tanks full of water serve as the source of water for sanitary needs.

All power comes from oilfield generators, and there is still no air conditioning, but crews are usually too tired to notice. "There's no glamor. It's a 99 percent work environment. Firefighting crews work from sunup to sunset, seven days a week."

He adds that the work is hot and dirty. "There is always the choking smoke that hangs over the entire country, and near some wells it literally rains tar, when the oil burns incompletely . It gets all over you and covers the roads and equipment, and the flaming wells coupled with the scourching desert heat makes it plenty hot." Still O'Brien notes that the worst condition is the blowing sand. "Some days we have to completely shut down, because we cannot see well enough to do our work."

O'Brien will not say what an average wage is, because there is such a disparity among the workers

"They are making about 50 to 100 percent more than they would normally make, plus they are getting hardship pay of 10 to 15 percent above that," he said.

O'Brien notes that he is still getting dozens of applications to work in Kuwait and hundreds of ideas for killing the wells. But out of 500 ideas, he says he has used only one — surprisingly one that had been developed in the Permian Basin.

'It is a high pressure, sand-laden cutting device that Grace Drilling has tested for oilwell drilling.

Lea yields 102-barrel Wolfcamp find

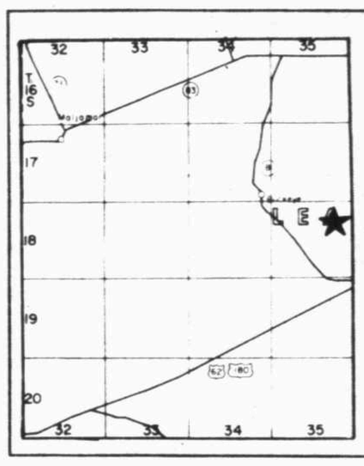

Staff Report

A Wolfcamp discovery has been completed in Lea County, N.M., just north of the Mid-Vacuum field.

HARVEY E. YATES CO. tested the No. 1 Buckeye "12" State to flow 102 barrels of crude and 44 barrels of water on an 18/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 290 psi. The well flowed from perforations 10,460 to 10,472 ft.

Permitted as a 10,600 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,790 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 10,745 ft. Pay was tipped at 10,460 ft.

Wolfcamp discovery
A Wolfcamp discovery has been completed for 102 barrels of oil in Lea County, north of the Mid-Vacuum field.

Delaware discovery pumps 220 barrels oil

YATES PETROLEUM CORP. has reported a Delaware discovery in Eddy County, N.M., west of the Bilbrey field.

On potential test, the No. 1 Mary "AIV" pumped 220 barrels of 38 gravity crude, 25 Mcfd and 216 barrels of water from perforations 6,991 to 7,105 ft. The interval was acidized with 4,000 gallons of 7.5 percent acid and fractured with 15,000 gallons of gel and 45,000 lbs. 20/40 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 114:1.

Permitted as an 8,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 8,470 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 8,407 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,603 ft., include the Rustler at 631 ft., Delaware at 4,456, Cherry Canyon at 5,489, Brushy Canyon at 7,206, and Bone Spring at 8,392 ft. Pay was topped at 6,991 ft.

New offshore rig picture of comfort

HOUSTON – Offshore drilling rigs aren't known for their tony accommodations, but Santa Fe Drilling Co. is spending almost $1 million to make its new Galaxy I jack-up rig a haven of comfort in the middle of the blustery North Sea.

Santa Fe has hired Houston architect Peter Jay Zweig to design and dress up this 25,000-square-foot hotel on stilts.

"They used to be like boats, and they really were hell holes," Zweig said, referring to the crew quarters found on most older rigs. "They were cramped and painted military green."

"They had four walls and a $3 light fixture overhead," agreed Joe Pekarek, Santa Fe's vice president, who is working on the Galaxy project.

Galaxy comes complete with a sauna, weight room and nooks for television and stereo listening. Carpet will replace vinyl in some of the rooms. Wall sconces will provide soothing, indirect lighting, and mirror accents on walls and ceilings will create the illusion of more space for the 100 people who will alternately work and relax aboard the rig.

And there will be color – lots of color, promises Zweig – but no military green.

Pekarek said the furniture that's on order is a big improvement over standard rig furnishings.

"It looks like something you'd be willing to put in your house," he said.

The quarters still will be close but with color, windows, lighting and mirrors, at least it will feel a little bigger, Zweig said.

"The trick is to use every device you know in architecture to expand the space you have," he said.

Working on an oil rig in the middle of the North Sea is no picnic. It's cold, and the waves are forceful and high.

Crewmen spend 28 days on the rig, 28 days on land at home. While at sea, they work 12 hours on, 12 hours off. If they live in Texas or Louisiana – and many do – the flight time comes out of their own 28 days.

The Galaxy rig is part of a new class called Universe, designed for blustery conditions in the North Sea. It can drill in waters of 360 to 400 feet, depending on the season.

The big rig will be ready to roll out of Far East Levingston's Singapore shipyard Aug. 15, and a month later it should arrive in the northern region of the British North Sea, where it will go to work almost immediately for Ranger Oil.

In the early 1980s, he designed living quarters for five rigs built by Keydril – a company Santa Fe bought in the mid-1980s.

The accommodations on those five rigs are so nice, Zweig said, that Santa Fe workers consistently request stints on them.

"We've got a waiting list of people wanting to work on the new one," Pekarek said.

INDUSTRY IN REVIEW

Geologist suit claims religious discrimination

ODESSA — A suit filed in Odessa recently may have employment implications for other oil companies in the the Permian Basin.

A former FINA Oil and Chemical Co. geologist has filed a religious discrimination lawsuit against his ex-employer, claiming in the suit that his Protestant superiors fired him because he is Jewish.

He is seeking undisclosed exemplary damages for the March 15, 1990, firing. He also is seeking reinstatement, back wages, benefits and attorneys' fees.

Rick Hagar, a FINA spokesman in Dallas, said FINA does not discriminate against its employees and would not comment on the specifics of the case.

Wells, who joined FINA in December 1981, claims that his superiors "engineered circumstances and fabricated paperwork" to deprive him of his job.

Although he was told he was being fired because of poor job performance, Wells actually was one of the most productive FINA geologists in Midland, according to the suit.

"Out of four geologists, I had the only two oil discoveries made by the West Texas division in four years," Wells wrote in the suit.

According to the suit, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission informed Wells in February of his right to sue FINA.

Pollution rules snag refiners

HOUSTON — European refiners face hefty costs to reduce air pollution under rules being drafted as part of the 1992 economic unification of Europe, says the head of a Brusseis-based energy trade group.

Gilbert Portal, who left his post as head of Elf Aquitaine's Houston-based operation last year to head the newly formed European Petroleum Industry Association, said the biggest cost for European refiners will be for reducing the sulfur content in diesel fuel.

Portal, whose fledgling 32-member organization was formed largely to lobby European policymakers as they decide on new regulations that will affect energy companies, said during a visit to Houston that lawmakers can't expect industry to "do everything at one time."

Some 40 percent of vehicles in the 12 European Community countries run on diesel fuel. Refinery modifications needed to take sulfur out of diesel fuel are projected to cost $3 billion to $4 billion between now and 1996, Portal said.

By 1994, Portal said, the proposed rule would require car makers to install catalytic converters on new cars, making the use of unleaded gasoline a must.

Apache buys Amoco package

DENVER — Apache Corp., of Denver, returned to the Permian Basin last week with the purchase of a $515 million package of properties purchased from Amoco. A bulf of the properties, including gas plants, are in Winkler and Andrews counties.

The acquisition represents Apache's return to the Permian Basin, after selling operations here in 1988, and will result in a district office for the Basin. Roger Plank, a spokesman for Apache Corp. said the acquisition would definitely result in a district office in the Permian Basin. He speculated that it would probably be located in Midland but would not say for certain, noting that it was too early.

Amoco said the acquired holdings include net proved reserves of 63 million barrels of oil and 288 billion cubic feet of natural gas. About 45 percent of the reserves are contained in 20 fields in West Texas and 2 fields in Southeast New Mexico, according to Apache. Neither Amoco nor Apache had a compiled list of the fields. Apache estimates total proven and probable reserves at 133 billion barrels of oil equivalent.

The purchase of extensive oil reserves brings a new dimension to Apache which has previously been a natural gas producer. "This purchase will bring us from a company with 20 percent oil production to 40 percent oil production," said Roger Plank.

With a doubling of production, Apache is expected to retain most of the Amoco employees. Field personnel have been assured that they will be retained, but in the acquisition some supervisors may not be retained. Amoco has intentionally maintained a number of vacancies in West Texas in the event that Apache did not retain some supervisors, and they will be offered jobs at other locations.

The package includes interest in wells which produce a daily average of 28,000 barrels of oil and 117 million cubic feet of natural gas in 1990. Amoco operates approximately 74 percent of the wells. Leases include: 285,000 net acres and 730,000 net undeveloped acres.

Also included in the acquisition are a number of drilling prospects and secondary and tertiary recovery projects.

Mitchells tells reserve status

The company said its natural gas reserves at year end amounted to 576.8 billion cubic feet, compared with 562 Bcf at the same time a year earlier. It was the 14th year out of the last 16 in which Mitchell has more than replaced its gas production, which totaled 56.7 Bcf in fiscal 1991.

Mitchell has also acquired from TexLine Gas 22 natural gas gathering systems located in 14 South Texas counties.

The systems, which comprise 234 miles of two-inch to 12-inch pipeline, will become a part of Mitchell's Southwestern Pipeline Inc. subsidiary. Terms of the purchase were not announced.

UPRC going strong in the Austin Chalfk

FORT WORTH — Union Pacific Resources Co. of Fort Worth has announced eight horizontal well completions in the Fayette County portion of the Giddings field.

The wells, located four to seven miles north of LaGrange, Texas, have a total initial potential of 7,007 barrels of oil and 15 million cubic feet of natural gas per day. The first well was completed in October 1990 and the latest two completions were tested on April 10, 1991. Current production from the wells is 4,000 barrels of oil and 11 Mmcf of gas per day. Union Pacific has 100 percent working interest in all eight wells.

Western notes quarterly loss

HOUSTON — The Western Co. of North America has reported a net loss of $1,564,000, or 12 cents per share, for the 1991 first quarter, on revenues of $74.7 million. In the same period last year, the company reported a net loss of $1,522,000 or 12 cents per share on revenues of $72.6 million.

it likely wouldn't be a boom by any means, but "things should show a big improvement."

Susan Huey, a spokeswoman for the Petroleum Equipment Suppliers Association in Houston, said that while there was no way she could pinpoint a recovery, indications were there would be an upturn by the fourth quarter.

She said the three things of major concern to the equipment industry at this point are technology, the environment, and safety. "We have pretty good control of technology, and have developed sales and services to handle just about any requirement," she noted.

She added that "Safety is probably the number one element on the minds of our customers. We're developing safety programs and equipment designed with redundant safety features, and we're making sure personnel meet safety requirements.

"We're also concerned with the environment. Many manufacturers are providng equipment and services that assist in making drilling and production as environmentally benign as possible."

According to Huey, at the recent Offshore Technology Conference, there was an involved discussion about the state of the industry and where it was going. Out of that conference, she said, two key factors emerged.

The first was the abundance of oil activity overseas. "For many of our association members, 70 to 80 percent of their sales activity comes from outside the U.S. Many of our members operate on a worldwide basis, finding the regulatory and economic atmosphere more conducive outside the U.S."

The second factor is the development of a U.S. energy strategy. "We feel it is extremely important to have a strategy developed. The results of the progress of the energy strategy proposed by the Administration and its progress through Congress will have an impact down the line. There are questions about access to public lands, and how much incentive there's going to be to drill in the U.S."

She added that "Things have changed so much economically and politically...we have a number of members working a lot smarter and implementing programs that are making themselves more efficient; many have instituted or are implementing quality-improvement programs.

That's something customers are looking for, assurance that what they're getting is the most efficient. They're not looking at the individual unit price as much as they are the total bottom line — all costs involved in the project. The lowest price per unit is not necessarily the most cost-effective."

Arco funds desert reclamation project

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Information on how to restore drilling and production sites will soon be available to operators throughout the Permian Basin.

Arco Oil & Gas says it will fund a desert reclamation project conducted by the Chihuahuan Desert Research Institute, and that the information will be available industry wide.

According to Bill Priebe, Arco environmental engineer, the Institute is looking at old tank battery sites in fields that are no longer productive and where equipment has been removed. He added that the institute is proposing to study three sites, which have not been chosen yet.

"This is a good project in that whatever the Institute determines to be an adequate method of revegetation will be made available to all oil companies," he noted. "The principal issue is, in arid areas like this there hasn't been a tremendous amount of work done on revegetation.

Thus far research has been concentrated on more valuable landsites like on the coast. It's been a matter of economics. Now we're putting our foundation monies into areas which need a little bit more research."

The Atlantic Richfield Foundation has given the institute a $16,400 grant for the first phase of the three-phase project — characterization for the potential of site reclamation — and Priebe, who helped put together the foundation and the institute, said there's a good chance the other two phases will be funded as well.

The other two phases are the actual revegetation of a site and then publishing the results of that study.

"The foundation is separate from the operations, and when we see projects advantageous to the environment, we submit an application or proposal to the foundation. Lately, the foundation has shown a lot of interest in environment-type projects," he explained.

He added that other oil companies are also investing monies in revegetation projects in areas that have suffered oil spills. "The vegetation will come back if the site is left alone," Priebe acknowledged. "This is a matter of speeding things up. We're trying to find out how much we need to do to help. Sometimes it's more damaging for us to mess with the ecosystem than to let nature recover for itself."

The institute itself notes that "Reclamation of drilling sites would seem prudent. Not only would a return of these sites to natural conditions be ecologically appropriate, but in light of an environmentally conscious society, proper reclamation would provide for regulatory compliance and an excellent public relations opportunity for the petroleum industry.

Remediation of such sites would also restore the land to a productive state for agricultural and ranching activities is being relocated to Odessa from Kilgore, where it had outgrown present facilities.

ODESSA: Highland jobs

(From 1F)

Second, the announcement sent the message that technology is the new game in the oilpatch, and technology is expanding in the Permian Basin.

Not only will Highland Pump bring new jobs to the Permian Basin, it will also bring a new technology package destined to help Basin operators to pump more oil more efficiently and economically in certain applications.

The Corod system promises to have many applications for the Basin and could put a dent in the operations of local well service contractors, if widely used. The continuous rod string can be pulled at 100 foot per minute with a two-man crew, and while the cost per hour is higher than that of a conventional well service unit, the overall cost should be lower, says Warren Bradshaw, vice president of sales for Highland.

Each Corod string is custom made for the well and tapered by sixteenths of an inch to fit the depth of the well. On a cost basis, Bradshaw says it is competitive with a conventional string that uses rod guides.

Bradshaw notes that a continuous string is particularly effective in a directional, deviated or crooked hole situation, because wear on the string is spread out over a larger area and not concentrated on collars. "That's where most of the failures occur," he said, "but with a Corod system the wear may be spread out over 150 inches instead of just three inches."

Wear on the rod string is watched by a computer program and if the string wears excessively, becomes corroded or parts, a new section is simply welded in.

For corrosive applications the entire string can be plastic coated, and Highland maintains that the absence of collars greatly increases the longevity of the string. The fact that there are no collars can also increase pump efficiency because the piston effect of the collars in a fluid column is eliminated

Corod Industries Ltd., a Canadian company, is being purchased from GE of Canada, who is retreating to its core industries. "We will open a sales office in Odessa on the 23rd of this month," said Bradshaw, "and if we are successful in penetrating the Permian Basin market and the U.S. market, as we expect to be, we will probably move the Canadian firm to Odessa within six months. Freight rates have made it difficult to crack the U.S. market from Canada."

Also packaged with the Corod assets is a progressive cavity pump, which will probably be manufactured and marketed in Odessa.

He also noted that it would find wide application in the Permian Basin, because it costs half as much as a beam pump to buy and half as much to operate. "It can move up to 1,000 barrels of fluid daily with only a five horsepower motor," he said.

The Rotaflex pump has been around for some time and has proven its value in the oilpatch.

Because the unit lifts almost straight up with longer and slower strokes, it puts less strain on all surface and downhole equipment. A unit that would normally require a 1.28 million-pound torque gear box can be achieved with only a 320,000 lb. torque box. With fewer reversals on the rod string (six strokes compared to 12-14) there is considerably less wear and tear on the rod string.

Coastal Corp. files offering

HOUSTON — The Coastal Corp. and its subsidiary, ANR Pipeline Co., have each filed a shelf registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission for the public offering of up to $300 million in debt securities.

One or more offerings are expected to be made separately by both companies from time to time after the registration statements are declared effective. The offerings will be through underwriters to be selected and upon terms to be determined at later dates.

Coastal and its subsidiary said that they intend to use the net proceeds from any offerings primarily for the repayment of outstanding debt.

WHEN YOUR TARGET IS THE PERMIAN BASIN

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas this far flung industry. accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet. a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 workers involved in exploration, land, production, drilling. oilfield service and supply, pipelines and construction. refining. and transportation.

But beginning May 12. The Permian Basin Oil Report. published weekly by the Midland Reporter-Telegram. will become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people. products. companies. issues. events. drilling. exploration. and production. the Oil Report will appear each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Additionally. it will be mailed to every producer. operator and oilfield service company throughout the Permian Basin.

Halliburton acquires DSI

Staff Report

Halliburton Reservoir Studies, a division of Halliburton Co., has purchased the assets of Diagnostic Services Inc.

Formed in 1978, DSI has been providing pressure data acquisition and analysis services for pumping wells. These same services will now be provided throughout the world by HRS.

Jerry L. McFarland, former president and founder of DSI, is now manager of this service for HRS and will be headquartered at the HRS offices in Carrollton.

"Adding DSI's capabilities and experienced personnel broadens the services HRS can provide," stated Walter Bliss, president of HRS. "We can now offer HRS' well testing and reservoir analysis services in a wider range of applications to better assist an operator in reaching his production objectives."

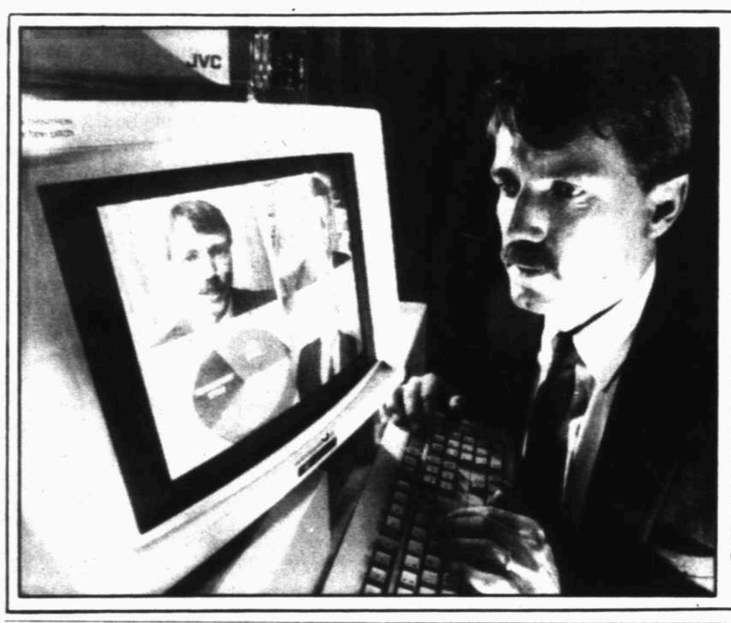

DSI obtains bottom-hole pressures of pumping wells without pulling the rods and pump. This is designed to provide the critical early-time data for making skin calculations. The technology is also helpful in monitoring secondary or tertiary recovery efforts, selecting candidates for remedial work and identifying mechanical problems.

HRS's headquarters are in Houston. The company is a full-service well testing and reservoir analysis organization with locations throughout the world.

Halliburton Co. is one of the world's largest diversified oilfield services, engineering and construction companies. Founded in 1919, Halliburton provides oilfield services and products, industrial and marine engineering and construction services, and property and casualty insurance services.

Halliburton Reservoir Studies has acquired the assets of Diagnostic Services Inc. and will provide pressure data acquisition and analysis services for pumping wells.

Oil companies wishing to consult on drilling or enhanced recovery projects can take advantage of teleconferencing. Consumer groups protest Big Oil's high earnings

By Dirk Beveridge

NEW YORK (AP) — Big Oil racked up big profits in the first three months of the year, drawing howls of protest from consumer advocates.

Exxon Corp., the nation's largest oil company, said its profits rose 75 percent in the first quarter, to $2.24 billion or $1.78 per share, compared with profits of $1.28 billion, or $1.01 per share, in the first three months of 1990.

At the same time, the Sun Co. reported net income of $41 million, or 39 cents a share for the quarter, down from $71 million, or 66 cents a share, for the same period a year earlier. Sun said earnings were virtually the same if a one-time accounting change from the 1990 quarter was disregarded.

The big profits at Exxon followed double-digit earnings increases at Mobil Corp., Amoco Corp., Texaco Inc., Chevron Corp. and Occidental Petroleum Corp. Some companies showed even higher increases, while Phillips Petroleum Co. said earnings were down 38 percent.

The oil companies did well in overseas sales because of the huge amount of fuel gobbled up by the Persian Gulf War and an unusually cold winter in Europe.

The war consumed 500,000 barrels of oil a day, said Paul Ting, an analyst with Oppenheimer & Co.

"That had a big difference, and also the cold weather in Europe made a difference," Ting said. "We actually saw products exported out of the U.S."

The earnings were better than many analysts had predicted, but the oil companies are already seeing their profit margins shrinking and they may have peaked out for the year.

"You could see the tables turned a little bit in the second quarter versus the first quarter," Ting said.

Still, foes of the oil industry were quick to charge that the companies were profiteering.

"We're trying to figure out how much of it was from the military operations using jet fuel," said Christopher Dyson, research director for Buyers Up, a Ralph Nader group in Washington. "The war certainly had an impact in terms of profits."

Edwin S. Rothschild at Citizen Action, another Washington consumers group, called the profits excessive, saying oil companies were slow to lower prices for gasoline and home heating oil after crude oil prices collapsed this winter.

"I'm sure the oil companies are delighted with the profits, but it's another indication that consumers ended up paying higher prices than they should have during and following the Kuwait invasion by Iraq," Rothschild said.

The leading industry group, the American Petroleum Institute, said it was too early to comment on the first quarter earnings.

"We haven't done any kind of analysis," API spokesman Earl Ross said.

Analysts said the oil companies performed well following the run-up in prices last fall in the wake of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. Crude oil prices peaked at about $40 per barrel in October, then began tapering off before collapsing in the hours after the war with Iraq was launched in January.

Bill Wiggins has been drawing since he could hold a pencil.

"I had a talent, but anybody with talent still has to develop it," Wiggins said in a recent telephone interview. "You can't just all of a sudden be an artist. You have to go through the period of trial and error. Definitely, I had to work to develop it."

For Wiggins, working to develop his art meant dedicating his life's creative energy to art. Now in his 80s, Wiggins has, after years of painting figurative oils, landscapes and portraits, launched out in another direction.

"My work is not such a radical change, all of a sudden," Wiggins said. "It was a long period of growth. I did portraits for years, and they were in oil. I thought I needed a change, and I thought I would try watercolor, so I started doing those and some portraits came out of that, but in watercolor. But finally I thought it would be better to get away from objects all together and just concentrate on color and shape."

A representative sampling of Wiggins' current work is hanging at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University, Odessa, through May 28.

"The 40 works in this exhibit are fresh and bright and express his youthful joie de vivre," said Marilyn Bassinger, director of the Art Institute.

Of the works in this show, Wiggins said, "What I am doing is painting poetry. Poetry and color. And that's it."

Fellow New Mexico artist Elmer Schooley in his critique of Wiggins current work which appears in this exhibition said, "Quite recently his representational work, itself an achievement, has given way to a stunning series of watercolors. After a lifetime climb up a mountain, he arrived at a serene meadow where automatic imagery floats like butterflies. The works, technically simple, seem to be made by themselves. They are fearlessly and spontaneously put down and then abandoned for the next one with no second thoughts, the next one to come with little forethought.

"A little girl, asked how she made such beautiful drawings, said, 'I think a thought and then I draw a line around it.'

"Perhaps Bill would say, 'I put down some paint, and then I think a thought about it.'

"Now, in old age, his works are a perfect reflection of the profound serenity of his person — lyric songs flung into the air in generosity."

Switching to watercolors held some surprises for Wiggins.

"It was just a revelation to me," Wiggins said. "I never have had so much fun."

The exact reason Wiggins found watercolors so appealing eludes the artist, yet he has some ideas on the subject.

"It's a faster medium. I can get in there, and get it done fast, and it just works better for me that way.

"I have a little eye trouble, too," Wiggins said, adding that working in oils gave him headaches. "Now I can get the painting done pretty fast, and I have no more trouble."

Wiggins has discovered a different creativity working in watercolors.

"I like the spontaneous feeling that I get with watercolors," Wiggins added. "I think a lot of novices are inclined to want to make a masterpiece, and they spend all their time working on this one paintings, when they should be doing many painting. Sometimes I even think it's better for quantity instead of quality, at least for a while."

Wiggins laughs when asked what process goes into deciding to paint a subject.

"I don't know. I just start in. When I was teaching, students would come to me with a painting," said Wiggins, who taught art at the Roswell Museum and Art Center from 1953 to 1963. "I usually told them, 'I don't want to see one painting. Bring me 100 paintings, and then we'll talk.'

"So, when I started my watercolor about eight or nine years ago, I took my own advice. I must do 100 just to see what I can do with a watercolor. And then I did 100, then another 100 and another 100. I'd try to do one a day.

"And I'd put them in boxes. I have boxes and boxes and boxes of watercolors."

The few he's framed are those in the show at the Art Institute. As for the others, Wiggins has no immediate plans for them.

"They're good paintings. My estate will take care of that — my daughters and grand-kids. I can't afford to frame all of those hundreds of paintings."

Wiggins is a longtime Roswell resident having been born there in 1917. The second of two sons whose parents had moved west from Texas in 1904, Wiggins is a 1938 high school graduate of New Mexico Military Institute.

"That's a very fine school,' Wiggins said, speaking of NMMI. "It's four years of high school and two years of college. I enjoyed it very much; however, they didn't have art there then. They do now."

His artistic mind had been expanded during the 1030s through a WPA project that brought teaching artists, such as Schooley, to Roswell and built the Roswell Art Museum. The project provided free art schooling for area youngsters and employment for local artisans.

"That's where I started painting — under WPA. It was beneficial."

Transferring from college at NMMI to Abilene Christian College, Wiggins recalls talking "regular classes but hanging around the art department so much they remembered me years later as one of the art students."

He married fellow student Ruthelle Gray in 1940. When he joined the U.S. Army several years later, he and his wife had two daughters, Sandra and Kathleen. At the time, he was working on his father's ranch near Roswell.

"He tried to make a cowboy out of me, and it didn't work," Wiggins said, adding that his parents "approved" of his working as a painter. Wiggins remembers his father as being "patient and sympathetic. I think my father would have liked to have had someone take over the ranch."

When neither Bill or his brother Walt, a photographer and writer, chose to take over the ranch, the elder Wiggins sold it.

Mrs. Wiggins remembers their ranch years as serving an important purpose for the artist in her husband.

"We lived on the ranch and that gave him the freedom of time," Mrs. Wiggins said. "He had, of course, work to do on the ranch, and also his time was sort of flexible. That gave him the opportunity to paint during those years. We were able to support our family with the ranch."

Before returning to the United States after his discharge from the U.S. Army, Wiggins accepted an offer to study art at the American Shrivenham University, Shrivenham, England. The university was established by the U.S. military.

"We went to all the museums, and the teacher was a very interesting person, Francis Speight from the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. We learned more outside the classrooms than we did in the class," Wiggins said. "I'm not sure that it had a great deal of impact. Of course, I've always liked the Dutch painters — Rembrandt and Franz Hals. I also learned a great deal from the Impressionist and Post Impressionist.

"But mostly I learned that from books after I got back from there. In fact, I visited museums later after studying the books and the reproductions, and I was a little shocked to see my favorite paintings so large."

"It was overwhelming. I was glad to get back to the books, sometimes."

By 1946, he had returned to New Mexico, where his youngest daughter, Elaine, was born in 1947. His return to New Mexico also signaled his return to his father's ranch.

"You have to have a job sometime to make a living," Wiggins said. "But, it takes full-time to develop your potential."

Unlike many New Mexico artists, Wiggins does not find the light necessary to his work.

"It doesn't seem to affect my work much. I could paint anywhere," Wiggins said. "I would probably enjoy living in Texas or Arizona, but I've lived here all my life. It's my home. Everything has worked pretty well for me."

Wiggins finds it difficult to explain exactly what about New Mexico is different from its neighbors, what has kept him there throughout his creative life. He finds the state has an atmosphere "unlike anywhere else, a combination of the cultural forms and the geographical elements.

"And the people. I love the people. I love the Indians and the Mexicans and the Anglos. It's just a fascinating place."

Mrs. Wiggins, who said she most enjoys maintaining a home and spending time with their daughters and grandchildren, comments on another advantage New Mexico offers artists.

"There's less pressure from any direction," she said. "You can be relaxed and laid back and do things your way without having pressure from any area."

Wiggins agrees.

"That has helped me because I can't work under pressure. I have to have solitude and a place where I can relax without people bothering me."

Even Schooley in his critique, refers to Wiggins need for quiet.

'After 40 years of painting, I must admit I am still searching. Each time I face a fresh canvas it is almost as though I had never painted before. I love portraits. They were my first great love in art and remain so to this very day.'

Sky shows to be sharper

The Marian Blakemore Planetarium, Museum of the Southwest, opens its fall season at Septemberfest with upgraded star projector and audio-visual equipment and new, visually sharper sky shows.

The Planetarium is now closed for the installation of a recently acquired Minolta Series IV srat projector and accompanying automation and special effects equipment. The Milota replaces the smaller Spitz projector which has served the planetarium since its opening in 1973.

"On Wings," written and produced by Mark Hartman, planetarium director, will be the first presentation with the upgraded equipment. It will open at Septemberfest Sept. 7 in conjunction with the Flight Exhibition being developed to open at the Fredda Turner Durham children's Museum in late August.

Public sky shows will resume on Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evenings after Septemberfest.

The Spitz equipment is not all that's retiring at the planetarium. John Hicks, Midland Independent School District physics teacher and adjunct director of the planetarium since its opening, is leaving.

"John has given much to the planetarium" said Jean Hagman, director of the museum complex. "He will be greatly missed. His retirement marks the close of a significant period in the history of the planetarium and museum as indicated by the number of former students who tell about coming to the planetarium to be taught astronomy by Mr. Hicks."

The museum hired Hartman in the fall of 1990 as its first full-time planetarium director. Hartman is developing in-house created sky shows for use with the Minolta equipment and is designing MISD science curriculum programming for local and regional groups.

Hartman came to the museum after receiving a master of fine arts from Texas Tech University. He holds an undergraduate degree from Hastings College, Hastings, Neb., and has done graduate work at Kearney State College in Nebraska. He was director of the J.M. McDonald Planetarium of the Hastings Museum.

He taught undergraduate astronomy at Hastings College and was assistant director of the Hastings College Observatory where he produced original multi-image shows and implemented classes and viewing sessions for astronomical events including Halley's Comet in 1986.

The museum is in the midst of fund raising for the Minolta equipment, installation and some renovation work on the building in relation to the projector installation. Three-fourths of the $100,000 goal has been reached including a grant for $20,000 from the J.M. West Corp., which also helped to fund the construction of the planetarium. For more information call 683-2882.

EXHIBIT: Artist finds himself

(From 1G)

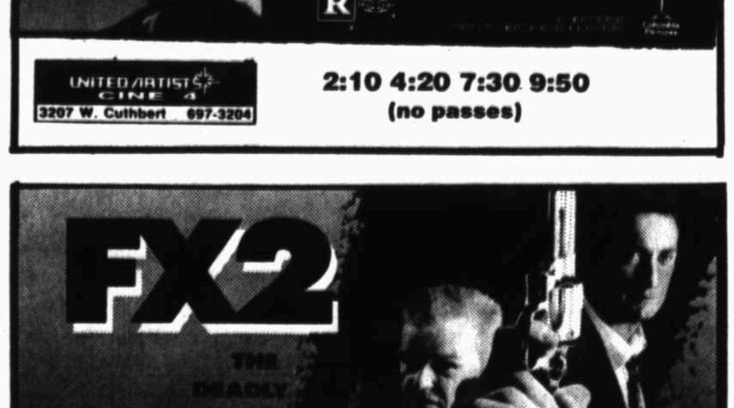

"Bill has lived a secluded life and has spent that life painting in obscurity," Schooley wrote. "He has seldom shown his work or attempted to emerge from his beloved solitude. Rather than being battered by the propaganda of the taste machine, influences have only slowly seeped in. The result has been a career full of painting largely non-influenced by others."

And now, Wiggins has found himself and his work freed from many of the bonds of representational art. And, despite her preference for "the wonderful family portraits that we have that were done during the '50s and '60s," Mrs. Wiggins finds her husband's current work, "exciting and fresh and lovely."

West was misunderstood even before Hollywood

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Even before Hollywood "discovered" it, the American West was misunderstood.

William Robinson Leigh's oil painting, "Grand Canyon 1908," and others were criticized by detractors who never had seen the landscapes he painted. The light pinks, sun-splashed yellows and hazy blues he used were too garish and unrealistic, his critics said.

Leigh's Grand Canyon painting and 80 other pieces of Western art by 63 artists are on exhibit at the Wichita Art Museum through Aug. 11. The "Masterpieces of the American West: Selections From the Anschutz Collection" show is on loan from Denver billionaire Philip Anschutz, a former Wichita resident.

It has been on tour in various configurations since 1974. Wichita is the final stop. It has been shown in eight foreign countries including the Soviet Union.

"In assembling portrait, landscape, and genre paintings of the American West, I have sought out works by important American artists who either painted in the West or had an impact on the region's portrayal," Anschutz wrote in the foreword to the exhibit's catalog.

The exhibit is loosely divided into groupings depicting the landscape, the settling of the West, native cultures and ceremonies, art and artisans and elements of the land.

Doubters who found Leigh's work unrealistic also may have clucked at the panoramic oil on canvas "Wind River, Wyoming," by Albert Bierstadt. Measuring 54 inches by 85 inches, it features the Wind River range of the Rocky Mountains colored by a blazing sun, low in the sky.

Bierstadt's trips West affected him a great deal. He told a newspaper reporter: "Such beautiful cloud formations, such fine effects of light and shade, and play of cloud shadows across the hills, such golden sunsets I have never before seen. Our own country has the best material for the artist in the world."

William Jacob Hays' "The Gathering of the Herds" probably drew detractors, too. Its depiction of thousands of buffalo on the prairie has in the foreground a buffalo skull, a prediction of doom for the bison herds.

"The story of the West in paintings is sort of like when you look at a photograph and the negative space sets off the positive space," said Elizabeth Cunningham, curator of the Anschutz Collection. "What's not apparent in the paintings or not portrayed is as important as what's portrayed."

Preconceptions about the West mean art patrons commissioning the paintings had notions and expectations that were passed along to the artists, she said.

Among the landscape paintings is a dramatic vertical oil showing frothy water cascading through dark rocks in a mountain area dotted with pines and capped with low hanging clouds.

Cunningham said landscape artists of the period believed they needed large canvasses to convey the majesty of the land and its vibrant light.

Pieces by Russell, Remington and Schreyvogel are included. They are cowboy, ranch life and Indian Wars scenes familiar to western art buffs. But the show also has modernist work from Georgia O'Keeffe, Jackson Pollock and Fritz Scholder.

Museum officials did not just hang the paintings and let the exhibit speak for itself. They scheduled a series of lectures, seminars and performances to accompany the show.

Already, programs on the romance of the West, cowboy poetry and songs, and black pioneers have been staged. Speakers explored alternatives to the white-male and entertainment industry images of the West traditionally communicated.

Upcoming are lectures on individual artists including Remington, Russell and O'Keeffe. Also scheduled are demonstrations of how to make baskets, hats and leather goods, and a music performance by a folklorist and historian.

Here is a list of exhibits and shows at some museums and galleries in the United States.

New songwriters group slates fourth meeting

The fourth meeting of the West Texas Songwriters Association is set for 7:30 p.m. Monday at the American Legion Hall, 3501 Airpark.

The WTSA organizational meeting was held in February and 17 people attended including two from southeastern New Mexico.

During the second meeting held in March, the association elected officers. Those officers are Roy Barrett, president; Joe Turney, vice president; Ruth Todd, treasurer; and Cyndee Turney, secretary.

The idea to start an association came from Barrett.

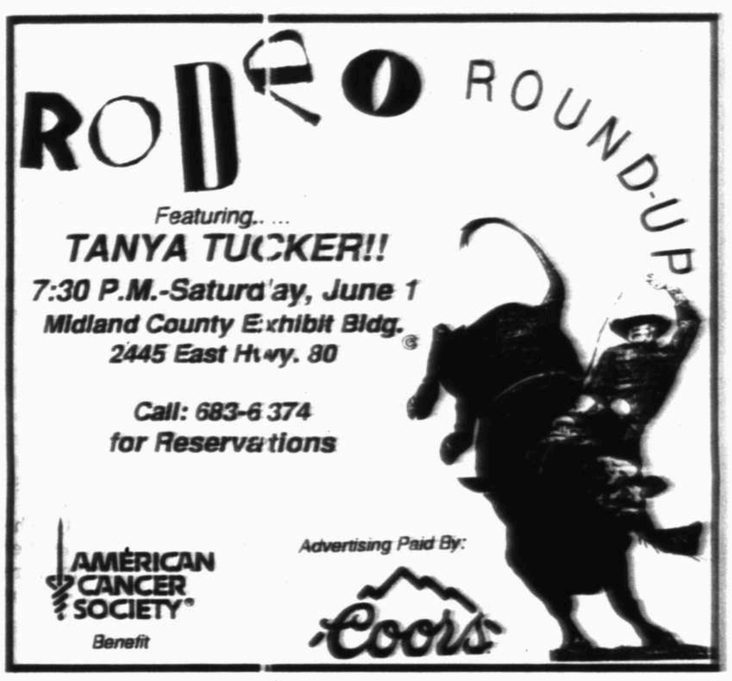

"Joe and I are both songwriters, and we'd get together and I played just about every Friday night for a good while, and we'd sent off some songs trying to get them published," Barrett said. "I started thinking about starting a publishing company of my own.

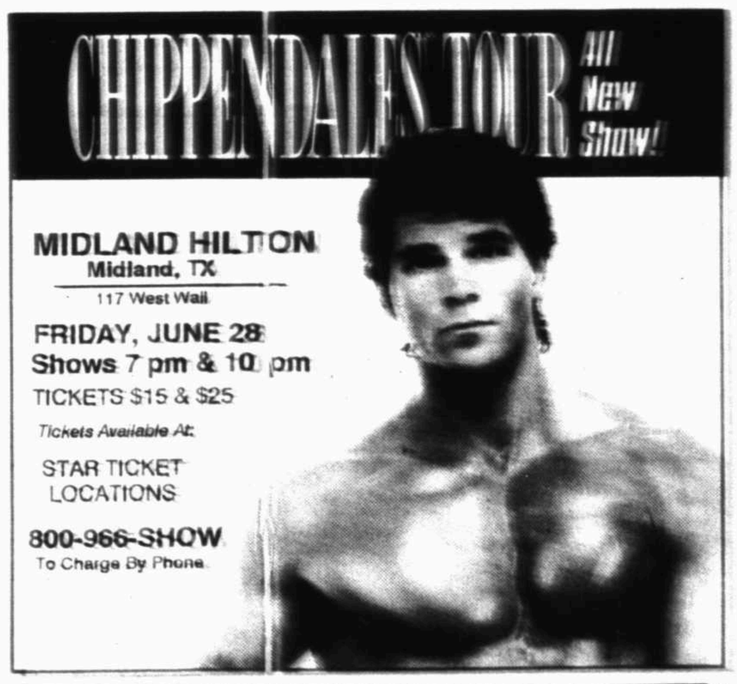

"As I was checking into that, I started to discover all these songwriting organizations in the larger cities — Austin, Houston, Dallas. I got to looking and there wasn't one anywhere between Fort Worth and El Paso. So I decided I'd just start one."

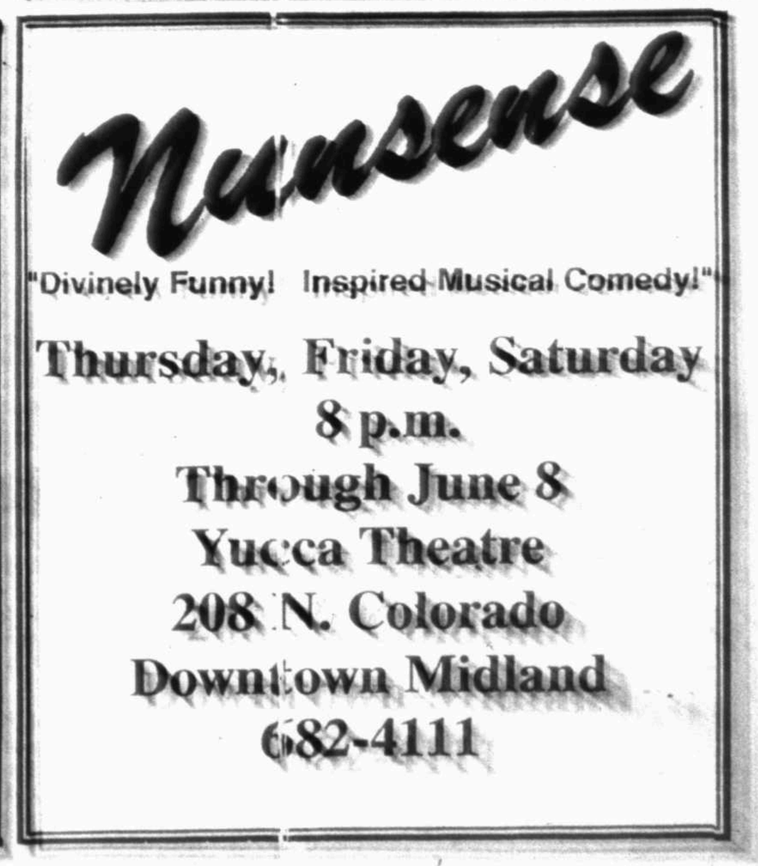

The WTSA hopes to enlarge its membership to include people from Lubbock, Abilene and San Angelo.

The purpose of the association is "to create an affiliation of serious minded songwriters, promote the artistic value of the musical composition, the business of music and recognition for the songwriter and his craft."

Dues have been set at $25 annually for members. All dues are payable within 90 days of joining. For more information call 689-8814.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MAY 19, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Stick to the "tried and true" in business this summer. Family friends and new pals bring exciting opportunities your way in September. Those between jobs will find themselves back in harness soon. Try to be more diplomatic with your relatives. You will have to divide your time more evenly between work and pleasure early in 1992. Choose a mate who understands and sympathizes with your urge to get ahead.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: catcher Rick Cerone, author Nora Ephron, actor David Hartman, actress Grace Jones.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A great day for family get-togethers. Someone shows new appreciation for your loving ways. Make needed changes in your domestic surroundings. Loved ones offer valuable support.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are thinking clearly and are ready to make a bigger effort to achieve personal happiness. Welcome ideas from friends and family members. Share confidences with a sibling.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A new idea or proposal deserves further consideration. Someone may not appreciate your keen sense of humor. Watch what you say. A hike in the woods will relax you. Choose a quiet companion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Family members may be somewhat restless today. Lay down the rules to rowdy offspring. If unattached, your romantic hopes are about to be fulfilled. Make vacation plans without further delay!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romance is happy for almost everyone today. Take your time about making an important decision. Seek the advice of trusted friends. Travel may not bring the results you expect. Stay at home!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep to yourself as much as possible now. You need to recognize the difference between realistic goals and fanciful dreams. Disregard get-rich-quick schemes advanced by friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The emphasis today is on encouraging good habits. You need to be more assertive, even if someone resents your laying down the law. Romantic partner supports your efforts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you cannot resolve a financial situation today, try to relax and put it out of your mind. You will enjoy spending a quiet afternoon or evening wtih some very special friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A close personal relationship can be enhanced today. Romance is very much on your agenda. Your popularity is on the rise with members of the opposite sex. Dress your best this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You find plenty to interest and entertain you today. Set your sights on what you want and then go after it. A need for money lights a fire under a teen-ager.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Family members deserve special consideration. Treat them as you would like to be treated. A glamorous social event will highlight your afternoon or evening. Examine your eating habits.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make church attendance a family affair. Shared spiritual experiences bring you closer together. An aura of glamour or mystery surrounds tonight's events. Separate fact from fantasy.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♡

Here's another opportunity to test your analytical skills. Study all four hands and decide whether or not South should make four spades after West leads a low heart.

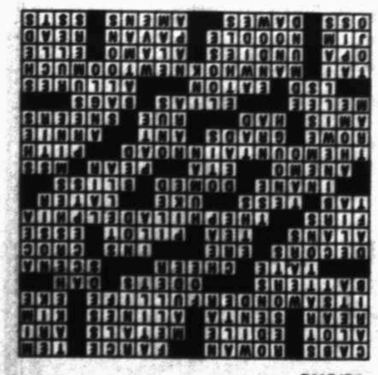

If East goes up with the ace of hearts and returns the suit, declarer wins the king and takes a trump finesse, losing to East's king. But declarer can win any return, draw the outstanding trumps and then cash out four diamond tricks for a club discard from hand. Declarer will concede only one club trick, making four-odd.

The defenders can do better, however. Suppose that East inserts the ten of hearts at trick one. Now you can win the king and take the trump finesse (or lead ace of trumps and another). East takes the king and leads a low (!) heart to West's queen. West shifts to a club and the defenders take two club tricks to go with the heart and spade already in the bank. Down one.

Have you changed your mind about the outcome of the hand? Did you elect to defend? Well, let's go back to the first trick. Now suppose that declarer plays the jack of hearts on the lead of the two. East's goose is cooked. No matter what the defenders do, West cannot gain the lead to push a club through. In the fullness of time declarer will get a club discard on the diamonds and make four spades.

Museum acquires Gest portrait

HOUSTON (AP) — The Museum of Fine Arts in Houston has acquired Thomas Eakins' "Portrait of John B. Gest," one of the American artist's last great paintings in 1905.

Gest was president of Fidelity Trust Co. of Philadelphia from 1890-1900 and he was one of Eakins' rare commissioned works at that time.

"The 'Portrait of John B. Gest' is a key addition to the museum's collection of American art, bridging the 19th century and the first wave of modernism," said Alison de Lima Greene, associate curator of 20th-century art at the museum.

The work will be the centerpiece of the museum's future gallery of American art.

He never expected "One More Try" to become the nation's No. 1 hit single.

"It's a simple song that I put a lot of feeling into and I think people can actually tell what's real and fake out there," he said in an interview.

"They listen to the song and say, 'Wow that song reminds me of my boyfriend or girlfriend,' and it really touches their heart."

The song shot up Billboard's Hot 100 Singles chart and hovered in the Top 10 for sometime before notching the top spot for one week in late March. It also attained platinum status.

The 23-year-old singer hopes his next single, "Over and Over," will repeat the success and prove that "One More Try" was no fluke.

"I won't be disappointed if it doesn't work out because I know that I have given it my best shot," he said. "Right now honestly I could be happy doing anything. I could be working at McDonalds."

One man who thinks Timmy T won't have to find work at a fast food restaurant is Russ Regan, the president of Quality Records and the man who signed Elton John and Neil Diamond to contracts with Uni Records, a division of MCA, some 20 years back.

Regan decided to sign Timmy T the day the two met in his Beverly Hills office.

"I thought he was very dedicated and devoted to becoming an artist and that's important to me," Regan said. "He had the fire that I looked for."

Regan was so impressed by Timmy T's demo tapes that he kept the original garage recording of "One More Try" for the album "Time After Time."

"Even though we use the terminology garage, it was done on pretty good equipment," he said. "It's a very sincere rendition of it."

Timmy T's approach to songwriting is reflective of the simple life he leads in Fresno — California's farming heartland where oranges and legumes grow aplenty.

"There's a bunch of chickens, a bunch of pigs," he said. "It's just a simple town and I think that's the reason I love it. I'm a simple kind of guy."

Before hitting it in the big time, Timmy T (T for Torres) was a locksmith, magician and juggler. He even had his own local cable show when he was 14.

"It was called 'Herman and the Little People' and I would have a puppet named Herman and people would come and be guests on my show," he said. "It was like a talk show. It kind of got me ready to perform in front of people on stage."

But he's still so new to the business that he quivers at the thought of playing large venues such as the Forum in Los Angeles or New York's Radio City Music Hall. He gets a kick just from playing theme parks.

"Like the other night I played Magic Mountain (north of Los Angeles) and I sold out," he said with a gleam in his eye. "I thought 'Oh, my God, I can't believe I sold out Magic Mountain.'

"I was just there last year watching a concert and I was saying, 'one of these days I'm going to play here,' and boom! I got the show."

Best sellers may cause publishers to lose control

By Roger Cohen
N.Y. Times News Service

Before Ronald Reagan signed a multimillion-dollar contract with Simon & Schuster in 1989, he received a warning from Richard E. Snyder, chief executive of the publishing company: a biography of Nancy Reagan by the sharp-penned Kitty Kelley had also been acquired by the house.

"It was only ethical for me to tell the president," Snyder said. "But my obligations ended there. To publish is to disseminate. Our aim is to present all sides."

In this case, presenting all sides involved publishing, within months of each other, a pleasantly meandering Reagan memoir and a vicious dismemberment of Mrs. Reagan, which also savaged the Reagan presidency. Was this even-handedness, coincidence or merely the unrestrained pursuit of profit?

The question begs larger ones. As the business becomes increasingly more competitive, do publishers care which books they publish or what shape the manuscripts are in when they hit the press? Do they take editorial responsibility for what appears under their imprints? Or are they merely acting as conduits for what they believe will sell?

Simon & Schuster recently invoked ethical considerations when it canceled Bret Easton Ellis' novel "American Psycho," but some people in the industry suggested the company was more worried about public relations. In any case, another publisher, Vintage, immediately picked up the book and it became a best seller.

Many publishers argue with the notion that they have become little more than huge distribution systems for a hodgepodge of what they call "product."

"A list should be a reflection of a publisher's convictions and many still are," said Erwin Glikes, publisher of The Free Press, a division of Macmillan that specializes in against-the-grain social and political criticism of a generally conservative bent.

But while a small house like The Free Press can achieve this kind of consistency, the big publishers seem increasingly ready to jump on any bandwagon.

"There's no question that there is more rubbish around than before, and that's because houses function more as pure businesses than as the publishing enterprise was once imagined to be," said Erroll McDonald, executive editor of Pantheon Books, which is part of Random House.

Author John Irving sees signs that publishing has become "entirely shameless." One such indication, he suggested, is the way publishers solicit blurbs, the laudatory quotes they use on book jackets.

"I used to get polite and classy letters from publishers," he said. "Now they harass me constantly for quotes. Writers implore me for a quote because they say it could make the difference between being published or not. It's all a little pecuniary, to say the least." Irving has decided to stop giving blurbs.

Many authors fear that with advances spiraling and sales in a slump, editors are sacrificing the laborious and relatively anonymous business of editing a manuscript in favor of the more glamorous business of "bringing in" well-known authors or public figures whom they can "bring out" in print with as much publicity as possible.

"Editors are involved in acquisition, editing and publishing," said Morgan Entrekin, publisher of the small Atlantic Monthly Press. "But of those three jobs, it's the editing that gives because it's the most time-consuming. The most important thing at big houses has become acquisition. If you don't bring in the big names, you get fired."

In the old days, publishing lore has it, houses had character. Their lists were coherent, betraying a certain "profile." Harper, home of Herman Melville, James Thurber and E.B. White, was the house par excellence for American history and literature. Pantheon was left wing, Doubleday Republican, Alfred A. Knopf classy and sophisticated. At these and other bastions of culture, the likes of Maxwell Perkins and Pascal Covici labored to make great works greater.

It sounds good, but it is not entirely true. Commerce and culture have always lived in uneasy concubinage in publishing; the imagined Golden Age is hard to find.

At the turn of the century, George P. Brett, publisher of Macmillan, was already advising the founder of the University of Chicago Press that reading manuscripts too closely could be unwise. "This is for your private ear only," he wrote in a letter. "It is sometimes better for a mistake to be made with the possibility of rapid decision than slow action."

Maxwell Perkins, editing F. Scott Fitzgerald, Ernest Hemingway and others at Scribners, became the symbol of the active, involved editor who was friend and mentor to his authors.

Later, Alfred A. Knopf looked back with some nostalgia to pre-Perkins days, suggesting things were better because "in general authors wrote and publishers published" without much editorial interference.

"In every period there have been some editors just passing manuscripts along and some with sharpened pencils," said Marc Aronson, who teaches publishing history at the New York University Publishing Institute.

Certainly, some houses have lost their distinctive character. Before the ouster of Andre Shiffrin last year, in a dispute with Random House, Pantheon was clearly left wing. Now "we are beyond ideology," McDonald said. It is hard to recognize a Doubleday book for anything in particular. Harper, now HarperCollins, has become one more giant like Random House and Simon & Schuster, sprawling enterprises doing some of everything.

But within many big houses, there are smaller units doing distinctive work. Macmillan has The Free Press. Harper has Basic Books, which is similar but more centrist.

"I have not changed my stripes in 31 years here," said Joseph M. Fox, a senior editor at Random House, "and I feel young editors have the same work ethic. The only change is the desperation. There are so many other books out there now you can get desperate trying to make one you really care about stand out."

Books are friends to celebrities

GARDINER, Maine (AP) — Whoopi Goldberg's favorite book is Harper Lee's "To Kill a Mockingbird." Cher was chilled by Anne Rice's "Interview With a Vampire." And James Stewart praised James Michener's island epic, "Hawaii."

Goldberg, Cher and Stewart are just a few of the scores of celebrities on Glenna Nowell's growing list of who reads what. And just who is Glenna Nowell? She's an enterprising librarian in this little Maine city who just released her fourth annual list. She came up with the idea of writing to celebrities in 1988.

Some celebrities send Nowell cordial notes, listing several favorites. Others, such as Queen Elizabeth II, coolly turn her down.

"I was looking for a hook that would get people to read a book," Nowell said, adding that she also wanted to steer readers toward books other than best sellers.

After looking at news and fashion magazines and listening to suggestions from readers, Nowell formulated her first list of VIPs to be contacted. She dug their addresses from the celebrity references at the Gardiner Public Library.

The first list included several Maine political figures, and such entertainers as Doris Day, whose favorite is "Kinship With All Life"; Lana Turner, who liked "Anatomy of an Illness"; and Oprah Winfrey, who listed "The Color Purple" among her favorites. And then there was Alan Alda, whose response Nowell still considers her favorite.

Among the actor's best-liked volumes is "The Congressional Record," which he remembers poring over as a child. "I had never read anything so funny," Alda wrote. "From then on, I knew I wanted to do comedy."

Tax window adds appeal to making donations

Nearly halfway into a one-year tax break covering donated property, the nation's museums are unpacking a steady stream of collectibles — from airplanes to artwork to tea services.

These additions come at a particularly auspicious time. Museums have been reeling from a steep dropoff in gifts ever since the Tax Reform Act of 1986 slashed the deduction for contributed property.

The year the act took effect, the value of gifts to the nation's museums plunged an estimated 30 percent, according to the American Association of Museums. In 1987, museums received about 160,000 fewer works than in a typical year, the group calculated.

Experts generally agree that as many as 85 percent of the objects housed in the nation's museums were received as gifts. These days, because of the spiraling value of art and other museum-quality pieces, museums are, perhaps, "99 percent dependent on donations," said Edward Able Jr., executive director of the museum association.

A major lobbying effort to reverse the decline of donations paid off late last year when Congress created a one-year window allowing collectors to deduct the full market value of works given to museums without the negative consequences due to the alternative minimum tax.

The savings can be substantial. For example, say a collector with taxable income of $2 million purchased a painting five years ago for $200,000 that is worth $1 million today. He would save roughly $68,000 by donating the painting in 1991, when the complicated alternative minimum tax would not be used to calculate what he owes the government for the price appreciation.

Accountants have seized this as an opportunity. "Right now everybody is talking to their clients — if people have a donative intent, we're explaining this is a good year to give," said Stuart Kessler, a senior partner at the New York accounting firm Goldstein Golub Kessler & Co.

Granted, the break applies almost exclusively to the wealthy since "most people who can donate appreciated art are in high tax brackets," Kessler said. For that very reason sprouts staunch opposition, particularly from U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill.

As head of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski is critical to extending the window beyond this year. An aide said the congressman is "not particularly sympathetic" to doing so because of the "severe political problem (that arises from) giving a tax break to the super-rich, even if you believe the public domain is served by that."

At a series of recent congressional hearings on tax breaks, the window covering appreciated gifts was lumped together with about a dozen or so other tax incentives, including credits for those who hire the poor or build low-income housing.

The one-year window is expected to cost the Treasury Department between $20 million and $24 million, an amount termed "serious peanuts" by the American Association of Museum's Able. "The provision is the most forceful and dynamic way of converting private wealth to public good," he said.

Anecdotal evidence suggests the break is having tremendous effect. William Chiego, director of the Allen Memorial Art Museum at Oberlin College, said that donations in the first four months of 1991 have outpaced the number and value of gifts for every individual year since 1986.

Brenda Lee has always been singer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — As a teen-ager, she never flipped burgers or toiled at the local factory. Brenda Lee has never worked.

All she's done is sing.

Her voice has been her paycheck since she was in elementary school. That was 40 years ago.

She was cutting records six years before the Beatles and outlasted them by more than 20. Some music industry reference books credit her with more records sold than any other solo female singer in history.

"I just like to sing. Singing is fun. I love to do it," she says. "I started at 6 professionally. I don't know what else I'd do."

Today, a new generation is getting a sample of Lee's music. Her timeless hit, "Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree," found a new audience when the song was played in the blockbuster movie "Home Alone." And her "You're in the Doghouse Now" was on the soundtrack of the film "Dick Tracy."

The two provided further grist for her bulging resume that few can match for endurance or achievements.

She followed that up with a gusher of popular records including "Comin' on Strong," "Too Many Rivers," "Sweet Nuthin's," "Fool 1," "I Want to Be Wanted," "Emotions," "All Alone Am I" and "Losing You."

Lee has performed in more than 50 countries and made more than 20 concert tours of Japan alone. Her audiences have ranged from Queen Elizabeth II of England to the blue collar faithful at dusty county fairs.

As she rushes across the Warner Bros. Records parking lot, she hardly looks like a legendary veteran. At 4-foot-9, she looks more like an eager college intern heading for a part-time job after classes. The shiny luxury car, however, is a dead giveaway.

After warmly greeting record company workers inside, she sits at a conference table. Despite decades of acclaim and a global reputation, she is disarmingly modest.

About her endurance: "I'm here and I'm still singing and trying to do the best that I can and hope that everybody likes it."

About her legacy as a rock legend: "I'm flattered. I'd like to think that I helped lay a foundation in the music world for women."

About her record sales: "It's something you can't describe: becoming a part of people's lives, having an impact on their lives with my music, becoming part of their memories."

Never one to be filled with self-importance, she once sat four rows back at an Elton John concert in Nashville and clapped along with the paying customers surrounding her.

She has occasionally shown up in person at various record company offices to pick up promised memorabilia to be auctioned off for charity. No need to send an assistant.

Brenda Lee was born in Atlanta, the daughter of a carpenter who died when she was 8. Even before his death, she was singing in local talent contests and on radio and TV shows. When she was 10, country music singer Red Foley put her on his TV program "Ozark Jubilee."

By age 12, she had appeared on various network TV variety shows.

"I know now how to use it and not abuse it. When I was younger, I sang like every song was my last song."
