A SURE SOLUTION OF THE LIQUOR PROBLEM

No other question has caused as much disturbance and division among the people.

There are many schools of thought and a tremendous amount of confusion.

The correct solution is the most baffling of unsettled questions.

A solution of intricate and complicated problem, where the people of all walks of life are directly interested, must be simple in its nature and easily understood.

There is a simple and understandable remedy for every ailment. High sounding technical phraseology tends to confound and confuse the unlearned. A situation that cannot be relieved by common sense methods is not worth worrying over.

The earnest and prolonged agitation of this question has developed among those of good intent and sincerity of purpose, two groups, one of which advocates sobriety by law, through enforced abstinence by prohibitory measures forbidding the manufacture of alcoholic beverages, the other group advocate voluntary temperance with limited legal restrictions.

Both camps include a majority of the nations best people. Whoever enlists becomes a militant crusader. "Fight and fight to the death" is their war cry. Ash and give no quarter is their slogan.

Each are equipped with the essentials of war, including what Napoleon said were the three greatest: "gold, more gold, plenty of gold."

Each side is engaged in mortal combat with the other.

While the conflict thus rages, the common foe of both, Intemperance, loses no time in recruiting and enlarging its great army.

The forces of evil do not fight among themselves, but present a united front against the divided forces of those who stand for the good. The strength of intemperance is not by reason of its policies, or its collective organizations or by laws that it has enacted, but rests upon its individual effort with individuals: no one ever heard of an organization or a law to promote intemperance, yet its recruits are as the sands of the desert.

If the millions of temperance crusaders would resort to individual effort with individuals, just like they are lured into intemperance, and each crusader should proselyte from the ranks of intemperance just one intemperate individual and convert him to the cause of temperance and he or she remained steadfast, it would be long until the U. S. A. would be a nation of sober inhabitants and the crusaders for temperance, like Alexander the Great, would be looking for more intemperate worlds to conquer. A crusader who could not convert at least one, has missed his calling.

Next will be "Spurring the Truth."

"SAVING THE OLD HOMESTEAD" IS PLEA OF THE TAXPAYERS

Article Published in Oklahoma Newspaper Proves Timely in This County

Members of the taxpayer's league were interested in a write-up entitled "Saving the Old Homestead," which appeared in the News-Tribune of McAlester, Oklahoma, last week. The story, with a date line from Washington, written by Rodney Dutcher, reprinted in full, follows:

The old homestead, which used to be saved every night in premovie days by the actors at the village opera house is being saved again.

They're real homesteads, with real people living in them who are threatened with the loss of all they have. American farmers, instead of watching a melodrama from down front, have become the heroes of innumerable last minute rescues which are as full of heart interest and human drama as anything you ever saw on the stage.

The ten-twenty-three shows always used to save the old homestead in the last act when the hero dashed in unexpectedly with a wad of bills to pay off the mortgage.

Today, in at least half a dozen states, hundreds or thousands of farmers are likely to move in on a foreclosure sale and see to it that a neighbor family keeps its community homestead and have met with startling success. Thousands of farm families have been kept on their farms, largely through this activity.

Militant delegates to the Farmer's National Relief conference here told how below cost production had made farmers everywhere unable to meet taxes and mortgage payments and how "no evictions" has become a slogan which they put into practice.

How It Started

C. J. "Chris" Christensen, who raises corn, alfalfa, cattle and hogs on 400 acres near Newman's Grove, Neb., seemed to have broken up more mortgage sales than anyone else, and he was glad to tell about it. He's a tall, leathery, salty Danish-American somewhere in his sixties and a leader in the Farm Holiday movement in his section. He's a church member and says "we're doing some of the things the church ought to be doing." I offered him a cigaret and he said: "I never use anythin' that ain't good

They're real homesteads, with real people living in them who are threatened with the loss of all they have. American farmers, instead of watching a melodrama from down front, have become the heroes of innumerable last minute rescues which are as full of heart interest and human drama as anything you ever saw on the stage.

The ten-twenty-three shows always used to save the old homestead in the last act when the hero dashed in unexpectedly with a wad of bills to pay off the mortgage.

Today, in at least half a dozen states, hundreds or thousands of farmers are likely to move in on a foreclosure sale and see to it that a neighbor family keeps its community homestead and have met with startling success. Thousands of farm families have been kept on their farms, largely through this activity.

Militant delegates to the Farmer's National Relief conference here told how below cost production had made farmers everywhere unable to meet taxes and mortgage payments and how "no evictions" has become a slogan which they put into practice.

How It Started
C. J. "Chris" Christensen, who raises corn, alfalfa, cattle and hogs on 400 acres near Newman's Grove, Neb., seemed to have broken up more mortgage sales than anyone else, and he was glad to tell about it. He's a tall, leathery, salty Danish-American somewhere in his sixties and a leader in the Farm Holiday movement in his section. He's a church member and says "we're doing some of the things the church ought to be doing." I offered him a cigaret and he said: "I never use anything that ain't good for a man."

"Chris" believes in peaceful persuasion when a sale or eviction must be stopped—if it will work.

"It started up near Nelly, Neb," he said. "There was a state fair at Elgin and we fellows in the Farm Holiday movement got talking. John Roglan came down and visited with me. He said 'there's a widow woman a few miles from here just had her property advertised for sale.' Then we went down to Henry Freces for dinner. Mrs. Freces was giving me water to wash and said she just felt 10 or 15 years younger because of what we'd been sayin' about no more evictions."

"Henry says it's a widow woman named Mrs. Von Bonn a few miles from there. Her husband got killed in a cyclone a couple of years ago and she has seven kids. The oldest helps her farm, but she could not make the last payment."

"We met in a school house to organize and decided we should send Lux and Green back to see if we couldn't help Mrs. Von Bonn. They went and found out it was a pitiful case. A broken bank in Humphrey had got her note from a man who had got it from her and wouldn't give her time. Although she had $600 in another broken bank. She owed $448."

"We organized around there the day of the sale and had a committee talk with the man and the lawyer for the bank. We made an agreement that the man would take $100 for the $448. Then we found the Federal Land bank had a second mortgage on her and to clean that up we decided to have a sale."

"Well, there were over 3,000 people out there and we told the crowd: 'Things are cheap now. This sale ain't goin' to bring much. We got three or four men to bid and we do not want anybody else to bid. And if anybody else opens up their mouth to bid you know what to do with 'em.' "So there was a good set of harness went for 60 cents and 10 good cows for $2.50 a piece and 23 shoats for $3.75 and horses for about $1.50 apiece and the whole sale with the property and land and all brought $47 and some cents. We didn't care how much as long as it didn't go over the $100 the fellow would take."

We took up a collection and got more than enough to make it up, and now that place is all Mrs. Von Bonn's."

A Farm for $7.10

"They tried to get a couple of sheriffs out for the sale, so as to stop us, but the sheriffs knew better than to come. The hills were covered with people that day and it took two hours for the autos to get out afterwards."

They got the Avery brother's farm for $7.10—and gave it back to them. Let "Chris" tell it: "Old man Avery has worked for this banker 10 years when he was single, then married, rented the farm and lived on it 42 years before he died. The banker got him to sign a note for back cash rent before he died—$525. Then the boys 'got hauled out' (crops ruined by hail stones) and couldn't have paid much with corn at 10 cents a bushel anyway."

"The banker came to the mortgage sale. The committee went to see him and he said he would come outside the Avery house. We said it was safer for him in the house. He saw the point quick. He said if the boys would give him the same security he would give them time, cancel the second mortgage and pay all costs of the sale and if they could not pay in 13 months he'd extend it some more. That was all right with us."

Bankers soon learn their lessons, Christensen says. There was the one who got a judgment on Alfred Williamson at Platt Center, took the sheriff and removed 177 pigs, the four horses, five or six cattle and the machinery from Williamson's farm. Moved it all down to the sale pavilion at Columbus, Neb., where he thought the Holiday fellows couldn't work their program."

"We drove down to the Center and said to him, 'We ain't agoin' to let you have that sale. If you insist, we're goin' to have a $1.98 sale—a real cheap sale and that's all you get.' He said 'I've heard of your sales, what do you suggest.' We said, 'We suggest you take that stuff back to Williamson. You know he can't live with it.' He said he had already paid $135 for court costs, sheriff's trucks and so on, and we said, 'Hell, all right go on and get 'em.'"

"So he took Williamson's stuff back. Five pigs had died, and we made him pay for those pigs. He had a veterinary vaccinate the rest for 50 cents apiece and paid for getting everything back. He said it cost him $250 to try to sell Williamson out. The note was only $470."

They Got the Point

The International Harvester Co., had sold trucks to a couple of farm families who made a living trucking. They missed an installment or two. The trucks were taken away from them, one to Omaha and two to dealer's shops.

"We went and took them back where they belonged," said Christensen. "They called for the sheriff. Well, there were 65 of us and the sheriff knew better. The company saw what they were up against. They told Johnson, who owned the truck in Omaha, to go down there and drive it back home at their expense."

And seven "sales" by the Holiday group was enough to avert hundreds of others which were planned around Newman's Grove, Christensen thought. "Two banks have been broken there," he said and they were going to foreclose hundreds of people. But now they won't have any mortgage sales at all. It's depositor's money in those banks and that's often why people can't pay. We've been eating each other like cannibals and it's time it stopped."

Alfred Tiala from the Mesaba iron range in north Minnesota told of similar tactics. When a prospective buyer for a foreclosed farm showed up in that region, Tiala said, he was promptly advised by boys from the Farmers' league that life would be made hell for him if he tried to move in. When bidders attend chattel sales they usually are persuaded not to bid. When a not holder gets a judgment and plans to remove a farmer's property he usually takes the tip not to come.

"We tell him we would come in a body," says Tiala, "and take his truck and turn it around and tell him to go to hell."

And James Flower, a farmer from Madena county, Minn., tells what his anti-eviction committee told a man who complained that he would lose his own place if he couldn't raise cash by closing off a farmer.

"We'll save you place for you, too," they promised him.

Mr. Ogletree: "What makes you think they called him that?"

Stanley: "Oh, you know, 'Columbus Gem of the Ocean.'"

A high school poet has been discovered in the person of the president of the Senior class. Here is his inspiration upon looking into a math book:

"I looked into a math book
To see what it contained.
One deep, one look was all I took,
It left me very pained."

Yes, he wrote it, and yet they say that Columbus was the person that discouraged America.

REMOVING GREASE STAINS

Carbon tetrachloride is a favorite solvent for grease stains because it involves no fire risk and never makes the color run. It can be bought by the pound tin can at your drug store at a reasonable price. To take out stains made by auto grease, first rub lard or white vasoline on the spot on the wrong side of the fabric. Use a rag to remove this, with as much of the black grease as possible. Then lay the spot down on a clean pad, apply the carbon tetrachloride on the wrong side to push the dirt out rather than to rub it in on the right side. Finally brush lightly or feather the edge of the spot so there will be no ring. Spots of salad oil or other pure fat on light colored goods sometimes respond to talcum left on for several hours to absorb the grease.

Carbon tetrachloride is also sometimes run into auto motors with the gasoline to loosen the carbon.

Mrs. J. D. Freeman of Ft. Worth is here visiting Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Holloway.

Mrs. Elmer Cope spent a few days last week in Comanche at the bed side of her grandmother who is seriously ill.
