New Wal-Mart 3 times bigger

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

A Wal-Mart Supercenter expected to open here by spring next year will be nearly three times the size of the Wal-Mart store at 2600 Gregg Street.

"It's just going to be great to have a great new facility for the customers of Big Spring," said Don Sanford, local Wal-Mart manager. "They've been wanting and needing it for a long time."

The 69,985-square-foot store will be relocated to the 199,000-square-foot store to be built on Wasson Road where the old Jet Drive-In used to be. Construction is expected to start this fall, Sanford said. The new store will employ 400 to 500 people compared to 185 now.

It will offer a full-line of grocery products complete with meat counter, produce and frozen foods, stated a release from the corporation's headquarter's in Bentonville, Ark. It will also have a garden center, pharmacy and tire battery and auto service center as well as general merchandise.

Hours will be expanded to 24 hours, seven days a week, for the grocery and general merchandise areas.

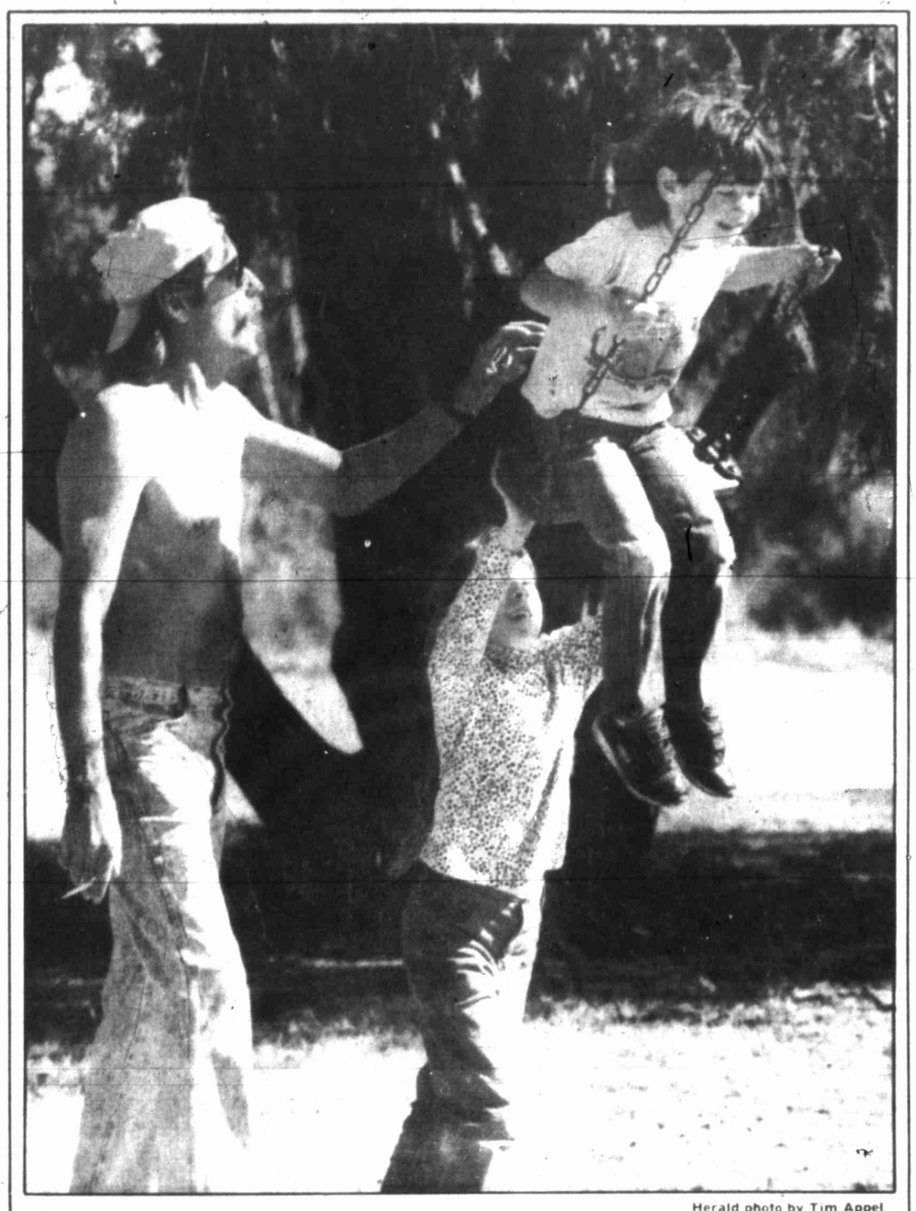

The store is designed to attract shoppers from the region. There are only 30 Wal-Mart Supercenter across the nation out of 1,880 stores, including 228 in Texas. Of those 256 are Sam's Clubs and four are Hypermart USAs.

Wal-Mart is among the nation's fastest growing retail chains, with $43.9 billion in net sales last year compared to $32.6 billion the year before and $15.9 billion in 1988. Net income last year was $1.61 billion.

The store in Big Spring opened in 1983 and has been successful, company officials said. Local sales or customer information wasn't available this morning.

"Wal-Mart has been growing with Big Spring for almost 10 years and in order to continue meeting the needs of the community and surrounding areas, Wal-Mart has decided to open a Supercenter to accomplish this goal," said David Glass, Wal-Mart president and chief executive officer.

The company works to lower prices by buying merchandise in bulk and moving it from stockrooms to store floors with no extra processing or holding time. All products have a "satisfaction guaranteed" return policy.

New equipment donated to Dora Roberts rehab center

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

With the donation a new piece of physical therapy equipment for the Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center, Big Spring AMBUCS were read a proclamation, extolling their contributions.

As AMBUCS gathered at the Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center Friday at 1 p.m. to officially present the new equipment to the center, Mayor Tim Blackshear read a proclamation from the city of Big Spring, praising the organization's accomplishments and recognizing February as AMBUCS Month.

The latest in a long history of equipment and material donations for the center, the new piece of equipment is used to rehabilitate people with injuries to the vertebrae and related structures in the back.

The AMBUCS use money collected in various events throughout the year to purchase equipment for the center and other organizations in and around Big Spring, said Sherrie Bordofske, AMBUCS president.

The club collects funds from concessions at the Moss Lake boat races, the Howard County rodeo, the AMBUCS's ABC Track Meet and the rattlesnake roundup.

Activities and programs sponsored in part by the AMBUCS extend to several non-profit organizations in the city.

At the Westside Community Center, AMBUCS maintain their ABC Park, keep the center painted and have purchased carpet and other items, Bordofske said.

Club members participate in the Heart of the City Festival, furnish scholarship money for therapist students and help with their expenses while in school. The club even purchased clothing for a family of six during Christmas, she said.

AMBUCS worked with the D-FY-IT organization last year in a program teaching area youth to be drug free. They conduct monthly bingo games at the Big Spring State Hospital, providing fruit to the patients and assisting at the hospital's Christmas party, she said.

The organization currently is preparing for the upcoming rattlesnake roundup at Howard County Fair Barns March 27-28, Bordofske said. The roundup is one of the AMBUCS' top moneymaking projects.

The club's 55 members meet every Friday at noon at the Brandin' Iron Inn. All visitors are welcome, Bordofske said.

Fighting flares in Bosnia

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — All-out battles were reported in two eastern Bosnian towns today despite a local cease-fire sought by the U.N. to get relief supplies to the area.

The international aid airlift to Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital, resumed today after a two-day suspension. The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees said planes were taking off from Germany and Croatia.

The flights were halted Saturday after anti-aircraft fire struck a German relief plane after it left Zagreb, Croatia, injuring one crewman. U.N. spokeswoman Shannon Boyd said U.N. troops saw rebel Serbs near Karlovac, 25 miles southwest of Zagreb, fire at the plane.

Fighting in Bosnia over the past year has claimed at least 18,000 lives. Serbs rebelled after Muslims and Croats voted for independence from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

Most of eastern Bosnia was captured by Serb forces soon after war began, and thousands of Muslims were killed or forced from their homes along the Drina River border with Serbia. But government forces have made gains over the past two months and are putting pressure on a Serb supply route across northern Bosnia.

The fighting has continued despite months of peace talks. Diplomatic efforts at the United Nations in New York over the weekend failed to obtain government and Serb agreement to a peace plan, and the U.N. Security Council was expected to meet today to discuss the next move.

The United States, which has not endorsed the current peace proposal, has prepared its own plan to end the fighting. Defense Secretary Les Aspin said the American plan could be made public this week.

Cmdr. Barry Frewer, a U.N. spokesman in Sarajevo, said the Muslim-led government and Serb rebels agreed to a cease-fire in the area of Srebrenica during a meeting Sunday with U.N. commander Gen. Philippe Morillon.

Srebrenica is 50 miles northeast of Sarajevo and 10 miles from the border with Serbia.

However, fierce battles today were reported by Bosnian government and Yugoslav media in two towns near Srebrenica — Vlasenica to the west and Bratunac to the north.

"Blood is running in the streets of Vlasenica," Bosnian radio reported. It did not provide details of the fighting.

Council to consider tax policy

The Big Spring City Council is scheduled to meet Tuesday at 5:30 p.m. in Building 1106 in Big Spring McMahon-Wrinkle Airpark.

Among considerations:

• A water rate increase from the Colorado River Municipal Water District. The increase, to pay for a pipeline from Lake O.H. Ivie through Glasscock County, could increase resident customer bills by 60 cents a month, bringing the base rate to $2.40 per 1,000 gallons. That would be a 33 percent increase.

• An electric rate increase of 15 percent from Texas Utilities Electric.

• Policy for placement of flowers and wreaths at Mt. Olive Memorial Park.

• Several bids, including a loader for landfill.

Also on the agenda is a tax abatement policy tabled last month pending further explanation. The policy being questioned was passed late last year by Howard County Commissioner's Court.

Remembering neighbor's dead daughters

PITTSBURGH POST-GAZETTE

HARDYSVILLE, Pa. — Kathy McClintick's green eyes fill with tears when she remembers Carrie, Samantha and Kristina Pander, the dead daughters of her next-door neighbor.

"They lived here," McClintick said, gesturing to her own Beaver County home in the hamlet of Hardysville, where people think nothing of leaving their keys in the ignition of their parked cars.

McClintick, a grandmother of three, sobs as she recalls how on Sept. 3, 1991, she tried to save the life of 2-year-old Samantha with CPR.

"Samantha was special. If she couldn't sleep, she'd come and sleep in my bed."

McClintick also remembers that Kristina, who loved Barbie dolls, was 9 months old when Kimberly Pander married Richard Pander Jr. nine years ago. The Panders divorced last year.

"She was crawling when they were married," McClintick said.

Shooting victim captures assailant — on camera

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — A woman who was photographed by a shooting victim seconds before the shooting was being sought by Houston authorities today.

Sherry Benitez, 25, was shot twice and was listed in stable condition Sunday at Hermann Hospital, authorities said.

Carlos M. Benitez, 27, the victim's estranged husband, was arrested Saturday night and taken to the Harris County Jail. He was questioned by detectives who said he was not cooperative.

Ms. Benitez took a picture of the woman who shot her, but authorities said they have not been able to identify her.

Carlos Benitez was arrested on a charge of violating a court order. He posted a $500 bond and was released, Sheriff's Sgt. Danny Billingsley said.

The officer said Benitez and his wife separated about three weeks ago and that he was under a Jan. 21 court order not to bother her.

'She noticed this woman out there and recognized her as the same woman who had been following her for the past two or three days. She went back into her apartment and got her camera and came back outside along with her cousin and her cousin's 14-year-old daughter.'

Danny Billingsley
Sheriff's Sargent

"He's been harassing her the past few days and calling her up saying that he was having someone follow her," Billingsley said.

The incident began Friday night when Sherry Benitez and her cousin went to move some stuff out of Ms. Benitez' apartment. The women took some stuff out of the apartment and were standing outside.

"She noticed this woman out there and recognized her as the same woman who had been following her for the past two or three days," Billingsley said.

"She went back into her apartment and got her camera and came back outside along with her cousin and her cousin's 14-year-old daughter," Billingsley said. "She took a picture of the woman who then pulled a large-caliber pistol out of her coat and fired at her."

Ms. Benitez was hit in the stomach and shoulder and rushed to the hospital.

The assailant fled and then jumped into a white car, which sped away, Billingsley said.

Rangerette show honors retiring director

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

KILGORE — Kilgore College Rangerettes position themselves in Rangerettes Gym. The song "Brand New Day" begins and the young women move swiftly and gracefully displaying their famous predictions.

"They just started that routine this week. Fantastic," director Deana Bolton-Covin, said from her upstairs viewing window as her assistant, Dana Brown, led the group.

"They just learned that today, just today," Bolton-Covin said of a portion of the routine. "They are real, real special, very smart and talented. They're the cream of the crop."

On Sunday, Bolton-Covin, 70, retires after about 21 years of work with the 65-member group. Miss Brown, a former Rangerette who has been choreographer and assistant director for 6½ years, becomes director.

The routine to "Brand New Day," an upbeat song from the musical "The Wiz," will be performed during Rangerette Revels, Kilgore College's variety show, to mark the milestone.

Performances, scheduled for April 1-3 on campus, will depict highlights in Bolton-Covin's life, from becoming Henderson High School's first drum major to her final year with the Rangerettes.

"The production will be called 'Let Me Entertain You,' because I have been an entertainer since I was born," said Bolton-Covin.

"I'm happy because it (retirement) will be the beginning of a new phase in my life but I'm real sad about leaving my friends and associates and all the students at Kilgore College," she said. "It has been one of the greatest experiences of my life."

She became the assistant director in 1972 and in 1979 succeeded Rangerettes founder Gussie Nell Davis as director.

"This lady actually put her life's career and her reputation on the line when she (replaced Davis)," said Jeanne Hale, former Kilgore College director of public relations. "After all, where can you go when your group is already at the top?

"She took the risk of falling flat on her face if the Rangerettes diminished in any way. But her answer was to raise the ceiling — make the top a little higher and work to reach a greater level of perfection ... each year making the top a little higher ..."

Mrs. Bolton-Covin, a Henderson native, said she has always been outgoing and energetic and that her mother helped channel her energy and enthusiasm into leadership skills and encouraged her to be a high achiever.

When as a child she took dance lessons, her mother taught piano lessons to pay the expenses. She received an athletic scholarship to Stephen F. Austin State University for twirling and earned bachelor's and master's degrees in physical education. In 1956 she created the Dallas Texas-Anns as halftime entertainment for the Dallas Texans, a professional football team that became the Kansas City Chiefs.

She said having worked under Davis was a valuable experience. "The way she taught showmanship and professionalism, she was just a ball of fire. She had lots of energy, much energy."

No one is irreplaceable, she said. "There's always somebody who can take over and do your job. It never crossed my mind that I couldn't (lead the Rangerettes). And when I turn it over to this young lady (Miss Brown), I know the Rangerettes will continue to improve and be better. She knows what to do and will carry on the tradition of making it better."

Tradition is important to the Rangerettes, Bolton-Covin said. "We have so many traditions passed down from year to year. Traditions help make an organization strong. We (perform) a traditional entrance, which Davis worked out, and traditional exit. That helps us have more time to work on and polish up the rest."

The Rangerettes have performed at major football bowls and on four world tours. The group's 1992 trip to Japan and performances in Macy's Thanksgiving Parade in New York City, N.Y., and Cotton Bowl Classic in Dallas have been highlights, said Bolton-Covin.

The Rangerettes were "treated royally" in Japan, she said. "When we first arrived in Japan, they had a big welcoming party for us. People were lined up three or four deep along the walls and they all were clapping the whole time."

The group has performed for several U.S. presidents, including Nixon, Ford, Carter and Bush. "We saw Bush several times," Bolton-Covin said. "We saw him when he came to the Gregg County Airport last year and he made the remark that the Rangerettes should go to Washington and kick some of Congress because he couldn't get them (congressmen) to do anything."

She said she likes receiving compliments on how the Rangerettes conduct themselves. "I love to have people brag on how professional they are but what I like best is when they say how well-mannered they are and disciplined and how ladylike they are. That pleases me much, much more than (compliments about) how well they performed."

Being a Rangerette "teaches them much, much more than just to perform," she said. "They learn dependability, discipline, punctuality. Most importantly, they learn respect for authority — you can't be successful without it.

Same name is required if marching band regrouped

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — A Houston lawmaker has filed legislation that would require Texas Southern University to use the same name if it forms a new group to replace the Ocean of Soul marching band that was dissolved after a shoplifting scandal.

About 75 band supporters attended a rally in Houston Saturday organized by the Friends of the Ocean of Soul Tradition. They were trying to generate support for a petition drive aimed at getting the band reinstated under its former director.

State Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, got an enthusiastic response when he announced he had just filed a bill requiring the band be named "Ocean of Soul" if it reforms.

TSU President William H. Harris dissolved the band and removed longtime director Benjamin Butler from his post in December after several band members were accused of shoplifting $22,000 in electronics during a trip to Tokyo to perform in the Coca-Cola Bowl.

Twelve students were suspended from school.

Harris reversed the student suspensions in January, provided the students enroll in ethics classes. He has indicated the band will be reinstated under a different name.

No poor people in Loving

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

EL PASO, Texas — There aren't any poor people in Loving County, the U.S. Census Bureau says.

In fact there aren't very many people at all in Loving County, a county located 165 miles east of El Paso. The county has only 107 residents.

"That probably sounds about right," Loving County Commissioner Harlan Hopper said when told Sunday that Loving County and Yellowstone National Park are the only areas in the country with no one living below the poverty level.

It's a nice place to live, but it's no Garden of Eden, he added.

"Folks out here got hurt by the oil bust," he said. Oil and ranching are the county's main businesses.

The county doesn't need any welfare programs, County Commissioner Joe Renteria said.

"Out here, there's just a few families, most people are kin to each other. We pretty much take care of our own," Renteria said.

Glenn to play major role in the hearings

By PAT TOWELL
Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — The Senate Armed Services Committee will hold "the definitive set of hearings" on homosexuals in the military, Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, says, but it "will not be a pleasant experience, either for proponents or opponents."

Although the hearings, scheduled to begin in March, will be conducted by the full committee, Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., has said that Glenn will play a leading role.

Glenn, 71, chairs the personnel subcommittee, and he also may carry special weight in the debate because of his fame as a military hero; he is a retired Marine pilot who was decorated for combat operations in World War II and in the Korean War before becoming the first American to orbit the Earth.

Glenn is not the only war hero who may play a pivotal role in the weeks of hearings.

The personnel subcommittee's senior Republican is Sen. John McCain of Arizona, who was held prisoner by the North Vietnamese for nearly six years. McCain was sharply critical of President Clinton's initial proposal to suspend all enforcement of the ban on homosexuals over the objection of military commanders. But he has not flatly opposed an eventual relaxation of the ban.

Like the military brass who vehemently oppose lifting the military's ban on homosexuals, Glenn often waxes eloquent over the importance of group cohesion within military units.

Discussing the prospect of openly gay military personnel, Glenn said in an interview: "The bottom line is, does it really impair combat effectiveness? In the military, you ask people to do things that are 100 percent stupid by every measure of self-preservation," such as leaving the relative safety of a foxhole to carry ammunition to another post.

"Unit cohesion means, 'Will you risk your life for me' and vice versa?" Glenn said. He questions whether that web of mutual confidence would be weakened by the presence of an acknowledged homosexual. "Can I depend on him if I'm an outspoken straight?" Glenn asked.

Unlike the military brass, however, he suggests that how recruits answer that question may be changing as American society becomes more tolerant of homosexuals. "In civilian life, (the incidence of) gays going into different jobs and being accepted has expanded enormously in the last 15 years," he said. "Has that now come to the point where new recruits coming into the military have that new attitude?"

Glenn also said he wants to examine the experience of other countries that allow homosexuals to serve in the military.

Of 17 allies surveyed by the General Accounting Office for a report issued last June, only four had policies expressly excluding homosexuals from military service. And one of those, Canada, has since dropped its policy.

But four of the countries that allow homosexuals to serve, including France and Germany, severely limit the jobs to which homosexuals are assigned. The picture is further complicated by news reports that overt homosexual service members in some countries are the victims of considerable harassment and informal discrimination.

Clinton to attempt slashing budget before upping taxes

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Before asking Americans to pay higher taxes, President Clinton this week will seek to prove his credentials as a budget cutter, starting with his own staff, Vice President Al Gore says.

Clinton met Sunday with members of the Cabinet-level National Economic Council to review spending cuts, tax increases and a jobs-producing economic stimulus package.

The president will present his plans to Congress in his State of the Union address Feb. 17, but the administration planned in advance to highlight its budget-cutting zeal.

"You're going to see announcements this coming week that will demonstrate quite clearly that the experience Bill Clinton has in balanced budgets is being brought to bear in weeding out the unnecessary wasteful kind of spending that's just been allowed to go on for too long," Gore said.

"Then we're going to ask those who benefited the most from the last 12 years, unfairly, to pay their fair share," he told interviewers on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley."

Gore did not specify the cuts but said they would make it "unmistakably clear that we have been wrestling with the guts of these very difficult decisions."

White House Communications Director George Stephanopoulos said today that it was "highly unlikely" that Clinton would call for freezing Social Security cost-of-living raises.

"That's something he never wanted to do," Stephanopoulos said on ABC's "Good Morning America," blaming unsubstantiated leaks for causing an uproar.

A senior White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the first announcement, probably Tuesday, would focus on reducing the White House staff. Details of cuts elsewhere in government will follow on subsequent days, the official said.

The Washington Post reported Sunday that about 20 lower-level workers in the White House office that deals with letters, telephone calls and other public communication already have been given layoff notices.

The Washington Times, quoting unidentified sources in today's editions, said the administration is drawing up a $3 million supplemental appropriations measure to pay for 50 additional White House positions that would be given to political supporters. No further details were available, the paper said.

Labor Secretary Robert Reich, appearing on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," said Clinton is going through the programs himself "in excruciating detail" and would not approve cuts that will hurt the poor or middle class.

"The president is asking detailed questions. Who's this going to hurt if we cut it? Who's going to gain? Is this something we need?

Morman leader held captive by fake bomb

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

PROVO, Utah — A man who claimed to have a briefcase full of dynamite ran onto a stage and briefly held captive the heir to the leadership of the Mormon Church, in front of a packed auditorium at Brigham Young University.

The crowd of 15,000 watched in horror, then began to sing a hymn, apparently distracting the man enough to allow a small group of students to sneak up and overpower him, officials said.

"The crowd spontaneously began to sing," said BYU president Rex E. Lee, who witnessed Sunday night's incident. "At that point he lost control of the crowd and that really seemed to disconcert him."

Cody Judy, no hometown or age available, was held for investigation of a charge of threats against life and property, said Utah County Sheriff's Sgt. Grant Ferre. The briefcase contained only books and a radio, police said.

Passenger plane collides with jet; 132 people killed

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran — An Iranian airliner carrying Muslim pilgrims collided with a military plane and went down in flames today, killing all 132 people aboard the jetliner, Iran's official news agency reported.

It was not known what happened to the crew of the military plane, but the Islamic Republic News Agency reported that the pilot and co-pilot were believed killed. Earlier, IRNA cited witnesses saying they saw one crewman parachuting.

The 10:15 a.m. collision occurred minutes after the leased Russian airliner took off on a domestic flight from Tehran's main airport for the Shiite Muslim holy city of Mashhad, the report said.

Witnesses said they saw passengers thrown from the Russian Tupolev after the nose of the military jet, a Russian-designed Sukhoi, crashed into the passenger plane's tail, IRNA reported. The collision caused an explosion.

The jetliner had 119 passengers and 13 crew members, including a Russian pilot, the official news agency report said.

Local journalists reported that the wreckage fell on a military base at Karaj, west of the capital, and that fleets of ambulances ferried the bodies of the dead from the scene. It was not clear if anyone on the ground was killed.

The area around the airport is residential.

Pilots who fly out of Mehrabad airport, which serves both military and civilian craft, complain of near-collisions nearly every week in Tehran's notoriously overcrowded skies.

IRNA quoted an unidentified eyewitness as saying the jetliner crashed about 10 miles west of Tehran, and that several helicopters were sent to the crash site.

"I saw the plane crashing as it was burning with smoke coming out of it," the witness was quoted as saying.

Mashhad, a northeastern city of 500,000 people, is the capital of Khorasan province. The tomb there of a founding imam of Shiite Islam is one of Iran's most important religious shrines. It is visited year round by pilgrims.

It was not immediately clear how many of the passengers were pilgrims.

The plane was one of 10 Russian airliners chartered by Iran Air Tour, a subsidiary of the national carrier Iran Air, used on normal domestic flights and to carry pilgrims to Mashhad.

The planes were leased for one year complete with Russian pilots.

Dahmer offers no excuses

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — If he hadn't been caught, Jeffrey Dahmer would probably still be hunting down victims, the serial killer says.

"I wish I could say that it just left completely, but ... there are times when I still do have those old compulsions," Dahmer said in his first interview since he was convicted a year ago.

Police discovered severed heads, refrigerated skulls and preserved genitalia in Dahmer's apartment in Milwaukee on July 22, 1991. He later confessed to killing and dismembering 17 young men and boys — one of them in Ohio.

Dahmer, 32, was interviewed Jan. 12 at Columbia Correctional Facility in Portage, Wis., where he's serving 15 consecutive life terms. Excerpts from the interview, scheduled to air this week on the syndicated television show "Inside Edition," were released to reporters Sunday.

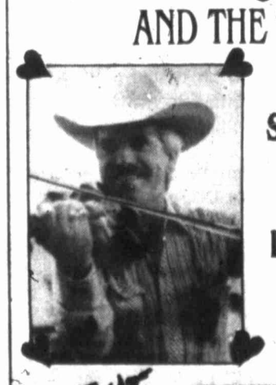

Dahmer said he killed and ate parts of his victims' bodies "not because I hated them, but because I wanted to keep them with me."

He said he alone was to blame for the killings. "That's the only person — not parents, not society, not pornography," he said.

His acts, he said, resulted from a compulsion in which sexual fantasies of control and dominance mixed with excitement, fear and pleasure.

Nine years and a stint in the Army passed between Dahmer's first and second killings, but he said he experienced a surge of energy after the second one that made him feel he "was in complete control of the situation."

More time to learn about prescriptions

There is a new law on the books requiring a bit of a longer stay with the pharmacist than normal.

This bill, passed by the Texas State Board of Pharmacy, would require counseling and a review of the drug with the patient by the pharmacist.

This can't be all bad. Sometimes it is difficult to understand what the doctor is telling you about a drug, especially after you've been hit with the news about your illness.

And, it never hurts to be retold how to use a product you have never used before. While there are instructions on the label, those labels can't tell you everything you need to know.

The purpose of the bill is to help the patient get the full benefits of the prescription. It also will help to avoid adverse side effects from allergies, interaction with food, other medications or disease status.

It has been reported in national studies 125,000 deaths and more than 500,000 hospitalizations annually because of medication mismanagement.

So, you might have to spend a few more moments getting to know your pharmacist. At least you will know what you are getting when you walk out of there and how to use it wisely.

Time already for 'I told you so'

Lewis Grizzard

My friend, Rigsby, the staunch Republican, called with a question.

"Is it," he asked, "too early to say, 'I told you so' "?

"In reference to what?" I asked.

"Bill (Crazy Legs) Clinton," he answered.

I knew I would hear from Rigsby on the issue of our new president's waffling, or perceived waffling on campaign promises. I just didn't realize it would be this soon after the inauguration.

"You know what somebody ought to tell Clinton?" Rigsby went on. "That he's in the White House, not the Waffle House."

"I think that's been used," I said.

"I don't care," Rigsby replied, "it's the truth."

I admitted to Rigsby it does seem the president once in office has backed off many of the promises he made while trying to get elected. There's the middle-class tax cut, the time in which he was to reduce the deficit, and the reduction of the size of the White House staff.

"But a new president is supposed to get a honeymoon," I mentioned to my friend.

"I never said one word during his entire inauguration speech," said Rigsby. "As much as he's been around that's plenty of time for a honeymoon. And then there's Hillary."

"What about her?"

"Did the voters elect Hillary Clinton?"

"Well, not in the strictest sense."

"Did she have to go through Senate confirmation hearings like Beard?"

"B-a-i-r-d," I said.

"Whatever, she was a crook," said Rigsby. "But did Hillary Clinton have to face a Senate confirmation panel?"

"No, but what's your point?"

"My point is," Rigsby explained, "she didn't get elected, she didn't go through what Cabinet members must face, but now her husband has turned over the health-care crisis to her. How do we know she is in any way qualified to tackle such a job?"

"Well," I responded, "some said Nancy Reagan had a lot of influence on her husband."

"All she did was read him his horoscope out of the paper every day," said Rigsby. "But she was never put in charge of any important issues and she didn't sit in on Cabinet meetings. She was too busy having lunch with Frank Sinatra."

"And you know," I explained, "some Democrats said Sinatra had mob connections."

"You're thinking about Mario Cuomo," said Rigsby.

"You're hopeless," I said, "and I still think it's a little too early for Bush supporters -- and I was one myself -- to be saying, 'I told you so.' President Clinton has a long time to go in office. A lot of things could change."

"That's what they said when Jimmy Carter took office," said Rigsby. "And sure enough a lot of things changed. They got worse."

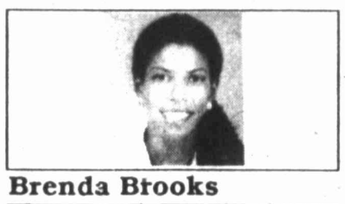

"How about gloating?" was his next question. "I saw Jack Kemp on Larry King and I swear he was gloating."

"He wasn't gloating," I said. "He was running for the Republican nomination for president in 1996."

"Yeah?" asked Rigsby excitedly. "Where can I get a bumper sticker?"

The history of one is history of the other

February is Black History Month.

You will be reading a lot about African-Americans and their contributions to history in the coming weeks.

But I wish there was no Black History Month. Why? Because it implies black history is separate from the history of the United States.

Every ethnic group in this country should be aware of and proud of their contributions to this country. The first step should be to unite our histories. Without including the contributions of African-Americans, American history is not complete.

The history of African-Americans should not be taught in the newspapers, one month of the year but in our schools on a day to day basis. There has been no span of time in the history of the United States where blacks have been absent.

In 1492, Pedro Alonzo Nino was a crew member of the Columbus expedition discovering the New World.

In 1513, Nufo de Olano and 30 other blacks were with Balboa when he discovered the Pacific Ocean.

In 1519, when Cortez invaded Mexico his black expedition members are given credit for harvesting the first wheat crop of the New World.

In 1550, Estivanico led the opening of New Mexico and Arizona for the Spanish.

In 1565 black artisans and agriculturists were with Pedro Menedez de Aviles when St. Augustine, Fla.

By 1600, records indicate that 887,500 slaves had been brought to the New World.

So blacks were among the conquistadors and explorers of the nation.

On March 5, 1770, Crispus Attucks, runaway slave and sailor who at the Boston Massacre was one of the "first to defy and the first to die" for the cause of American Independence. In July 1893, a man with a stab wound in his heart was rushed to Provident Hospital, Chicago. Heart surgery had never been done, but Dr. Daniel Hale Williams, a black physician, became the first doctor to successfully perform open hear surgery.

By the time he died in 1910, Granville T. Woods had been awarded over 50 patents for electric railway systems, automatic airbrakes for trains, a regulator for electric motors and a list of other inventions.

Thomas Edison claimed the rights to two of Woods' inventions and Woods was forced to prove ownership in court. He won both cases.

Black patriots, healers and inventors contributed to the way we live today with their contribution of their time.

As you can see, any true history of America must contain the history of African-Americans.

Sadly however, our children are not being taught a whole American history. They still must rely on the media to give that one month of the year.

I hope during Black History Month, Americans of all races will try to learn the history of all Americans.

I would like to salute the staff of the Big Spring Herald for the job they are doing.

The need for us to understand each other grows greater each day. We must understand where we have been to choose where we are going.

Pine Mountain, FDR's retreat

Rheta Grimsley Johnson

PINE MOUNTAIN, Ga. — This is the source of the healing waters that helped Franklin Roosevelt regain his strength and political life, the waters that flow at 88 degrees year round.

I love this mountain. On its top is Roosevelt's favorite picnic spot, Dowdell's Knob, with a panoramic view unrolling the green grosgrain of winter rye, the brush of knee-high loblolly, red clay cliffs and, always, buzzards circling.

From within the mountain, a mile below the crest, the warm water gushes at 800 gallons a minute. At least that's what the World Book says.

The Indians washed their wounds in it. In the 1890s, Southern society used it for a fashionable spa.

But its most famous function came when polio patients, including a future president, took heart and heat from the waters. FDR discovered Warm Springs in 1924, three years after his polio attack.

"The water put me where I am, and the water has to bring me back," he resolved. His attack followed a dunking and chills from a sailing mishap.

FDR spent several months a year in Warm Springs, swimming and exercising with fellow "polios," as he called his Georgia friends. Often he was there to carve the Thanksgiving turkey.

After meeting patients who could scarcely afford the treatments, he bought the springs and 1,200 acres around them, establishing the Georgia Warm Springs Foundation and lowering the costs.

In 1992, about 3,016 people with a wide range of disabilities — strokes, head injuries, orthopedic problems — got help from the Roosevelt Warm Springs Institute for Rehabilitation, as it's called now. The place became a state facility in 1974 and replaced the private Warm Springs Foundation.

People in these parts still call it the Foundation, however, and its heritage is irrevocably linked with polio and Franklin Roosevelt.

"We still retain a lot of the Roosevelt-era mindset here," says Diane Blanks from the institute. "This is an upbeat place, and FDR had a positive outlook. You get those good can-do feelings from the buildings and the setting."

Roosevelt's favorite architect, Henry Toombs, designed the vintage cottages and administration buildings scattered over the 940-acre compound. Visitors still use a nine-hole golf course Roosevelt had designed by the master, Donald Ross.

Old Roosevelt Hall, which pioneered wheelchair accessible architecture, including a wheelchair fire escape, is still in use.

And there remains, of course, a catch basin for the warm waters of Pine Mountain, which still are used in the hydro-therapy pools. "We do heat it a little more, though," says Blanks.

If life had a soundtrack, this old mountain would play a Gershwin tune. It has no dramatic vistas like the Rocky Mountains — which would sound more like Wagher's "Twilight of the Gods" — but is a smooth and sensible mountain, with enough elevation to lift your spirits without wearing down your body.

"I come here for the history and for my health," hiker Sam Alreed told me while lacing his boots. "I walk one of the trails and feel I've paid tribute to FDR. Two birds, one stone ... ."

Tourists visit Roosevelt's modest Little White House at the base of the mountain, of course; I've done the tour half a dozen times. It's worth the trouble to compare FDR's simple tastes with those of more recent politicians.

But the outdoors of rural Georgia is what FDR loved the most, that and its hardscrabble people. And you can sit at Dowdell's Knob, where he had a barbecue grill built for his frequent picnics, and meet the same unaffected humanity that charmed a president.

Today the crowd is mostly scouts, dressed in uniforms under heavy wraps. They are reading about Roosevelt, how he preferred while picnicking to sit in a chair or an automobile seat, rather than on the ground.

I have been to museums and libraries and centers that honor former presidents, and they have their moments. They have their place.

But I am thankful for Pine Mountain, where the political giant seems real and within reach.

Explaining possible reasons

To the editor:

In regard to the article in Thursday's (Jan. 28) newspaper, I wish to respond to the comment from Mr. Richard Atkins, that the Main Street Board's consensus, that shed a new light on why Main Street and the Elks were "ousted" at the Lion's Club Bingo Hall. I can assure you that the Howard County Association for Retarded Citizens is not the cause for your ousting.

H.A.R.C. Bingo was operating a double session bingo, in conjunction with Immaculate Heart of Mary Church on Saturday nights. Our license were in the process of renewal when some members of the church decided they wanted to operate a single session by themselves. They informed us, they wished to operate a double-session until Jan. 1, 1993, and they wouldn't renew our lease contract. We informed them that we would operate until our supplies were depleted. Nov. 28, 1992, we discontinued our bingo operation. I understand, Karl Schoenfield was fired by the Lion's Club in Sept. 1992. In September, we had no intention of changing locations.

Due to the fact that our organization uses all our funds to maintain workshop on Johnson St. Special Olympics and the needs of the handicapped, we can't afford to lease a building, furnish equipment and set up our own bingo operation and neglect the programs that are made possible with bingo funds.

I think to blame other organizations for your problems is very unfair.

One thing I didn't understand, was about the Main Street employees becoming active in bingo operations and that may reduce some programs. I would like to see this comment clarified because I don't understand this. All the bingo operations pays 2% tax of our proceeds to the city. I understand Main Street Inc. will receive money from the city and also a sizeable grant so I think the public should be informed about your programs and projects and the work, as you said, that the public doesn't see. I really think that most of the public is interested in what goes on in our city.

Huff plays tough for Lady Hawks

HC forward scores with physical game

By STEVE BELVIN
Sports Editor

Regina Huff says she's not a mean person. But don't tell that to any of Howard College's women's basketball opponents.

Huff, a starting sophomore forward for the number-one ranked Howard Lady Hawks, is quickly becoming known as the Charles Barkley of the Western Junior College Athletic Conference. And that brings a smile to her face.

No, Huff doesn't have the bad player reputation the NBA's Barkley has for mouthing at officials or throwing elbows at opponents.

But she does have a reputation as one of the most physical players in the league. At 5-foot-10 Huff isn't the most imposing low post player in the league. But she's definitely one of the fiercest competitors.

"Some people have labeled me as mean," said Huff, a graduate of Corpus Christi Ray High School. "I'm not mean, I'm just aggressive. I was that way even in high school."

Huff is one of the best defensive players on the team and a relentless offensive rebounder. After many of her offensive rebounds, she doublepumps and powers the ball back into the basket. It's not unusual to see her go to the foul line six to eight times per game.

She has been on a tear that had her named the WJCAC Defensive Player of the Week two weeks ago. She was instrumental in Howard's 70-60 conference road win over South Plains Jan. 21. In that game Huff had 13 rebounds, five of which were offensive. She also scored 17 points, had four steals and three assists. In addition she limited high scoring South Plains' guard Saresa Butler to two first-half points.

To show her consistency, Huff came back two games later in a 96-45 win over Western Texas to score 16 points and get 12 rebounds. She also had three steals in that game.

Huff is consider the Lady Hawk's emotional leader. "I'm always trying to get (my teammates) hyped up, even in practice," she said.

The main adjustment Huff has made from high school to the college level is on defense. "I learned on this team that no one person is going to score every night. If I can't score all the points I want to contribute positively in other ways — rebounding and defense.

"Coach (Royce Chadwick) focuses more on defense. We know everyone on the team can score. This year we're playing better team defense. I think defense gets the offense started."

Huff credits good team rapport with Howard's ability to handle a number one national ranking. "This team is closer (than last year)," she said. "The freshmen listen to us, they don't think we're yelling at them.

"I don't think being number one has gone to anybody's head. We don't really talk about it. We come into practice not thinking we're number one, but that the Lady Hawks are out to win their next game. We try to play every game hard, even if we're up by 20 or tied in the last two minutes."

Dallas Cowboy quarterback Troy Aikman goes back to throw as Viking tackle Gary Zimmerman pass protects for him in Sunday's Pro Bowl in Honolulu.

The AFC got some revenge for having lost the last nine Super Bowls by beating the NFC 23-20.

NFC turns Pro Bowl over to AFC, 23-20

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONOLULU — The opportunistic AFC, outgained 472 yards to 114, turned two interceptions, two blocked field goals and an overtime fumble by Steve Young into a 23-20 victory over the NFC in Sunday's Pro Bowl.

Buffalo special teams player Steve Tasker, who blocked a punt in the Super Bowl the previous Sunday, also blocked a field goal attempt by Morten Andersen of New Orleans the fourth quarter and forced a fumble to earn the NFL all-star game's MVP Award.

Kansas City's Nick Lowery's third field goal, a 33-yarder 4:09 into overtime, won it for the AFC after San Francisco's Young lost a fumble at the NFC 28. Young was hit from behind by Kansas City's Derrick Thomas, the ball came loose and the Raiders' Howie Long recoverd.

Lowery kicked his winning field goal four plays later.

"I was just trying to pass and he grabbed the ball," said Young, who completed 18 of 36 for 196 yards, with one touchdown.

Troy Aikman of Dallas, one of three NFC quarterbacks, wasn't around for the final quarter — he left Aloha Stadium early in the period. No one was certain why Aikman departed early, including NFC coach George Seifert of the 49ers.

"No, we did not discuss it. I think we'll just have to check into it," Seifert said of Aikman leaving. "I don't believe he would have played any more."

NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said the league didn't know why Aikman left early, but said it would investigate.

Aikman played in the second quarter and the first series of the third, completing 10 of 15 for 120 yards and a 9-yard scoring pass to Dallas teammate Michael Irvin.

AFC coach Don Shula of Miami was impressed with his all-star squad's special teams and defensive play.

"Defensively in overtime, we took it away just like we had done the whole game," Shula said. "Steve (Tasker) was unbelievable. He just makes the big plays."

Seifert said: "The kicking game obviously was our Achilles heel and ultimately cost us the game. The blocking for the field goal kicker was not good."

Young, who threw three interceptions, tied the contest with a 23-yard pass to Rodney Hampton of the New York Giants with 10 seconds left in regulation. Andersen's PAT kick made it 20-20.

Tasker blocked Andersen's field goal try earlier in the fourth quarter, and the Los Angeles Raiders' McDaniel scooped up the ball and ran 28 yards to make it 20-13 for the AFC with eight minutes remaining.

The AFC had turned another blocked Andersen field goal into its first touchdown, in the closing seconds of the first half.

The second time, Andersen was kicking from 53 yards out when Tasker broke through, blocked the ball up the field and batted it along trying to get possession. The Los Angeles Raiders' McDaniel caught up with the play, grabbed the ball and ran the rest of the way to break a 13-13 tie with eight minutes remaining.

A few moments earlier, Tasker had forced a fumble on a punt return by the NFC's Johnny Bailey of Phoenix, but the AFC wasn't able to capitalize on that turnover.

The AFC came up with a goal-line stand late in the third quarter, with the game tied at 13-13 and the NFC on the 2-yard line after a 48-yard pass from Green Bay's Brett Favre to Jerry Rice of San Francisco. The AFC defenders yielded just 1 yard on the first three plays, then stopped San Francisco's Rickey Watters for no gain on fourth down.

Lowery kicked his second field goal of the game, a 29-yarder, midway through the third quarter to tie it at 13-all. Buffalo strong safety Henry Jones intercepted Aikman's pass at the AFC 26 and returned it to the NFC 42 to set up the field goal.

Lowery had kicked a 42-yard field goal with no time on the clock to make it 13-10 in a wild finish to the first half.

With eight seconds left, Warren Moon completed an 11-yard pass to Oilers' teammate Haywood Jeffires and Jeffires stepped out of bounds. The clock showed no time, most of the players headed to the locker room and technicians began dragging sets for the halftime show onto the field.

But the officials ruled that there should be two seconds remaining. The teams came back onto the field, the halftime sets were hauled off, and Lowery made the field goal.

Aikman staked the NFC to a 13-7 lead after replacing Young earlier in the quarter.

Bowe ponders next title defense

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — After a mismatch in his first defense, will Riddick Bowe look for more of a challenge in his next fight?

Or will the heavyweight champion find another easy victim, perhaps a Tommy Morrison or Alex Stewart?

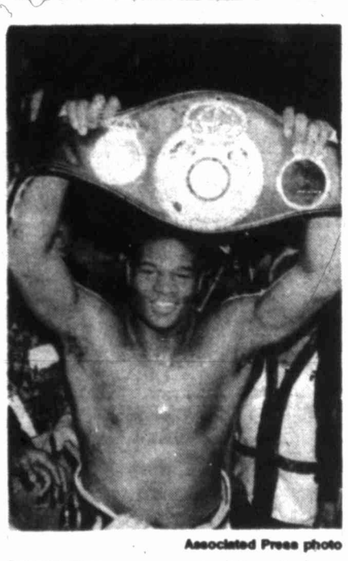

Bowe's homecoming at Madison Square Garden lasted all of 139 seconds Saturday night. He pummeled an outclassed Michael Dokes with 20 punches before referee Joe Santarpia stopped the bout.

The 25-year-old native of Brooklyn said it would "be my pleasure to come back to the Garden and fight again." But his next defense of the WBA and IBF crowns is expected to be in May at Atlantic City, N.J., and will be a pay-per-view affair. Bowe seemed to lean toward a rematch with Evander Holyfield, from whom he took the undisputed title last Nov. 13.

"I would welcome that fight," Bowe said.

Rock Newman, Bowe's manager, wants his man to fight twice more this year. The biggest purses would come from matches with Holyfield, who announced his retirement following his loss to Bowe, the first of his career, and the 44-year-old George Foreman.

Holyfield, now managed by rock star Hammer, has indicated he wants to fight again. Foreman, who worked the Bowe-Dokes fight for HBO, was noncommital about his future, except to say he planned to fight again this year.

Riddick Bowe holds his championship belt after defeating Michael Dokes in New York Saturday.

"Those are possibilities," Newman said. "We'll sit down, talk it over with all the parties and see where we stand."

None of those parties will be Lennox Lewis of Britain, the WBC champion. Lewis was awarded that belt after Bowe dumped it in the garbage during a dispute over sanctioning rights and payments.

Newman made it clear again Saturday that Lewis is not in Bowe's immediate future.

"We made an offer to them and they turned it down," he said. "We didn't turn them down."

Bowe's next opponent figured to be Ray Mercer, the 1988 Olympic champion. But Mercer cost himself about $1.5 million with a horrid effort against journeyman Jesse Ferguson. Mercer lost a unanimous decision.

"I'll be back," Mercer said, "and will get my shot. I just lost a fight, but I'll keep going."

Dokes, a former WBA champion, kidded that he was "going to Disneyland" after Santarpia stopped the fight. Bowe scored a knockdown midway through the first round and then battered the 34-year-old Dokes. Boos cascaded down on the ring from the crowd of 16,322 when the fight ended.

"It's difficult to measure this now," said Dokes, who added he will continue fighting. "I don't feel I was given a fair opportunity."

He was given an opportunity, however. He simply didn't measure up to Bowe.

"He could have gotten killed," Eddie Futch, Bowe's 81-year-old trainer, said of Dokes.

"They should have stopped it after the first knockdown," Bowe claimed. "I said early on that Michael Dokes would be right in front of me and I expected to knock him out. It was just a matter of when."

Now, it's a matter of who — who is next.

agency cited Col. Slavko Ognjenovic, a Serb commander, as saying extremely heavy fighting was under way around Bratunac after an attack by government troops.

The report said both sides were using "all they have."

On Sunday, Bosnian radio quoted officials in Vlasenica as saying that more than 1,500 shells had been fired toward a nearby town, Cerska, and that a Serb infantry attack had been repulsed.

"Guns, tanks, howitzers, multiple rocket launchers and 120-mm mortars supported by anti-aircraft machine guns and guns are destroying everything before them," the radio said.

Sarajevo was unusually calm today after a mortar blast Sunday near a group waiting for water killed at least three people. The capital's food reserves have fallen desperately low.

Her children and the Panders' children were playmates. McClintick frequently baby-sat for the girls while their mother worked.

Kimberly Pander, 30, of Franklin, Pa., was charged last Friday in the death of 10-year-old Kristina, on Sept. 30, 1992. She is being held without bond in the Beaver County Jail. Beaver County Coroner Wayne Tatalovich ruled that Kristina's death was caused by asphyxiation.

Pander's arrest comes after five months of investigation.

For Franklin police officer Cledith Price, it all began on Sept. 30, 1992. She was sitting down to dinner at a restaurant when she was summoned to the Pander residence.

Paramedics were trying to revive the child when Price arrived. Pander stood crying behind the ambulance. Price got into her own car and followed the ambulance to an area hospital.

There, she learned from hospital personnel that Samantha Pander, 2, and 9-month-old Carrie Pander had died within six months of each other in 1991. Both deaths were attributed to Sudden Infant Death Syndrome.

"The name rang a bell with them," said Price, who has been Franklin's child abuse investigator since 1988.

At that moment, Price said, "I still gave her the benefit of the doubt. She had three children die. It's a tragedy."

At the hospital, Pander signed a written statement that Kristina had complained of chest pains after eating some red licorice.

Pander suggested that Kristina lie down. Several minutes later, when she checked on Kristina, she noticed that her daughter was not breathing and called for an ambulance, according to the statement.

"There were just the two of them at home that day," Price said.

On the day that she died, Kristina Pander attended school, where she was weighed and measured by a school nurse, who pronounced the 60-pound girl healthy.

The red-haired, blue-eyed child rode the bus home and did some homework. She ate dinner at a nearby cafeteria with her mother. Soon afterward, her mother said, Kristina ate the licorice.

Richard Pander Jr., the father of the three dead girls, is a truck driver and was away on business when his first two daughters died.

He could not be reached to comment over the weekend. And McClintick said, "he doesn't want to talk to anybody."

Although extensive tests were done on Samantha's body, Price will not say whether the bodies of the two younger children will be exhumed.

"The investigation is continuing," she said. "It's like a large jigsaw puzzle with a thousand pieces. As far as I'm concerned, there's a few extra pieces thrown in."

History

effort is to gain economic equity.

The Emancipation Proclamation in the late 1863 was the only the beginning of a long struggle to gain civil rights spanning more than 140 years.

After the turn of the century, organizations were established to fight discrimination and segregation.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was founded in 1909 on the 100th anniversary of Lincoln's birth. It concentrated on legal abuses against African-Americans.

Its charter members were included James Addams, John Dewey, W.E.B. DuBois, William Dean Howells and Lincoln Stefens. Booker T. Washington was opposed to the organization, according to The Negro Almanac: A Reference Work on the Afro-American, Fourth Edition edited by Harry A. Polski and James Williams.

Throughout the 1920s, 1930s and 1940s the NAACP through the court system fought for racial equality and against discrimination. "The bulk of the civil rights struggle throughout this period was carried on by the NAACP, which had begun chipping away at the roots of legalized segregation in a series of successful lawsuits," states the almanac. "Its major breakthrough came in 1954 when the Supreme Court ruled in Brown v. Topeka Board of Education that discrimination in education was unconstitutional."

But before the 1954 ruling, "freedom rides" — gaining national exposure in the 1960s — were being organized in 1947 by a newly formed organization, Congress of Racial Equality. The early "freedom rides" travelled through the southern states bringing attention to segregation at transportation facilities.

CORE was founded in 1942 in Chicago as a direct-action, non-violent program. It staged its first sit-in in a Chicago restaurant in 1943, according to the almanac.

Among the groups established during the second phase of the Civil Rights struggle were the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, National Urban League and Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNICK).

"If any one person can be credited with lighting the match setting off the fire of the Civil Rights movement that was burning throughout the 1950s and 1960s, it was a humble Montgomery, Ala. seamstress, Rosa Parks, who decided on Dec. 1, 1955 that because she was tired she would not give up her seat to a white man as the law required," states the almanac.

From that December day emerged the leadership of Martin Luther King, Jr. and the bus boycotts and massive demonstrations.

In Greensboro, N.C. in 1960, sit-ins began with a group of students refused service at a lunch counter. The sit-ins established SNICK.

Scholars believe the second phase reached its peak with the "March on Washington" in 1963. More than 300,000 people attended the march for jobs and freedom at the nation's capital.

The following year President Lyndon B. Johnson signed the Civil Rights Act of 1964, outlawing discrimination in public accommodations and employment.

"After the Civil Rights Act and Voting Rights Act were signed the cohesion of the three groups split apart," said Tommy Tune, Adult Education Director at Howard College who studied as an undergraduate and graduate student the Civil Rights struggle.

"Once the goal was achieved and others were established, the ways to obtain further success differed," he said. Organizations' new focus was acquiring economic equality.

"As to the future, Civil Rights groups, whether national or local, face a new set of challenges that will test their sophistication, their endurance and their ability to devise new strategies to meet these challenges," the almanac states. "Helping create jobs, improving education, protecting the rights of the disadvantaged, maintaining vigilance to see that the gains of the past are not wiped out and enriching the quality of life for black people is unglamorous and sometimes harsh. But this is the task that faces the movement in the 1980s and beyond."

Family, work and God have been driving forces

Religion, wife have given Person strength to persevere through hardships

Personalities...

By MARTHA E. FLORES
Staff Writer

Family, work and God are three driving forces in the life of Glenn. L. Person Sr.

Born and raised in Sulphur Springs, Person met his wife, Essie, in elementary school. He was in the second grade; she was in the first.

"Our families knew each other and we were friends throughout elementary," Person said. "It was in the seventh grade when I knew I would spend my life with Essie." From then on, they were each other's friend and companion, he said.

After graduation, Glenn and Essie attended different colleges, but continued to see each other. At the completion of his freshman year, he was called into the Army — Quartermaster Corp to serve in France during World War II.

Although Person was not unfamiliar with racism, poverty and segregation, his stint in the army emphasized their unfairness.

"We were all fighting for a common cause, but the black soldiers were separated," he said. "We had separate barracks, platoons, sergeants and mess halls."

It was difficult for Person to understand how a person could give his life for his country, but not be seen as equal by his countrymen.

The war-torn, poverty-stricken town where Person was stationed made him believe that the casualities of war go beyond those who die.

"It was a sad situation there because the townspeople had their homes blown apart by Adolph Hitler and they had to resort many times to eat out of the trash cans or whatever they could find," he said. "We were not allowed to give them the food out of our mess kits, but they could dig out whatever we dumped in the trash cans.

"In war, there are no winners and everyone loses."

After his tour of duty, Person returned to Sulphur Springs and married Essie. He was employed at an oil mill and compress while looking for a better-paying job. Essie was also looking for a job as a teacher.

When a better employment opportunity was not found, Glenn and Essie decided to search for jobs separately and whoever found the first job would send for the other.

Essie travelled to Big Spring where she was employed by the Big Spring Independent School District as a teacher for Lakeview School. "I had found work at a shoe store in Tulsa, but as soon as my wife informed me that she would rather live in Texas, I caught the next bus arriving Feb. 8, 1950," Person said.

In Big Spring, he worked at Goodyear Tire Co. for six months, then at Big Spring V.A. Medical Center, McEwen Buick & Cadillac before being employed by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. Person retired from Bell in 1986 after 33 years of service.

"Even though I stayed with my last job, I had to assume the responsibilty of maintaining extra work to defray the expenses of a growing family," he said. After their first son, Glenn Jr., was born, Person returned to work for Goodyear, as well as Texas & Pacific Railway as a chair-car porter, V.A. Medical Center and Bowl-A-Rama.

Exercise lowers diabetes risk, studies say

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Working up a sweat can lower your odds of developing diabetes.

Experts say exercise reduces the risk of getting the most common form of the disease, adult-onset diabetes.

Men and women who keep active reduced their risk by about one-third, said Dr. JoAnn E. Manson, a researcher at Harvard Medical School and Boston's Brigham and Women's Hospital, which is affiliated with the school.

Researchers are not sure how much exercise or which type works best, but the benefit seems to rise with more effort, she said.

In a study of more than 27,000 male physicians, those active enough to sweat at least five times a week had a 42 percent reduction in diabetes risk, she said. The rate dropped to 38 percent for those active two to four times a week, and 23 percent for those who were active only once a week.

The overall benefit for men was a 36 percent reduction, she said.

A separate study of 5,990 male alumni of the University of Pennsylvania, found the risk dropped by 6 percent for each 500 calories burned by working out, Manson said.

"If they exercised seven times a week, each time expending 500 calories, they would have a 42 percent reduction, similar to ours in that respect," Manson said referring to her research results.

A similar study involving more than 87,000 nurses found overall risk of diabetes dropped about one-third for those who exercised at least once a week, Manson said.

The women studied did not parallel men in seeing greater risk reductions with more exercise, but the researcher said this may be more a problem with the data than a real lack of benefit.

"I don't think there was a true biological difference," she said.

Exercise reduces the size of fat cells, and obesity is a major risk factor for diabetes, said Dr. Walter E. Willett, an epidemiologist and a colleague of Manson's. But exercise also seems to have a separate benefit in making cells more sensitive to insulin and thereby better able to process sugar, he said.

In adult-onset diabetes, cells' receptors for the hormone insulin malfunction. Because the receptors tell cells to absorb the sugar glucose, their loss cuts the ability of muscles to draw in glucose for fuel, he said. This leaves excess glucose in the blood.

When you exercise, your muscles somehow become better at getting glucose, which lowers the excess blood sugar, and if you exercise regularly, you build muscle, which adds to the effect, Willett said.

Regular exercise also shrinks fat cells, making them more receptive to insulin so the cells can pull glucose from the blood and store it, he said.

One good workout can increase insulin sensitivity for 24-36 hours, but the benefit fades afterward, said researcher Karen R. Segal of Cornell University Medical College at New York Hospital in New York City. She thinks the lingering value of exercise is in reducing fat.

Segal and her colleagues had 10 normal lean men, 10 normal obese men and six obese diabetic men exercise vigorously for one hour a day, four days a week, for 12 weeks.

"If you want to exercise, the objective should not merely be to increase fitness but it should be performed regularly, so you are always in the post-exercise state," Segal said.

Here's a sampling of what's new at the Howard County Library:

The Parents Resource Network-Lecture Library is a tape series emphasizing family development. The 90-minute tapes, available at the Howard County Library, include an impressive list of speakers and an interactive format.

It's comforting to hear that others share the very same problems — it makes the challenge easier to handle. You might want to ask some friends to join you or form a study group made up of your club members to listen and enjoy these audiotapes.

Here is a summary of what the tapes cover and you can select specific ones or enjoy the complete set:

Play Pays Off — Norma Richard is heavily vested in the field of psychoanalysis. In this discussion she focuses on a Piagetian perspective of the intellectual value of play and explains the significant difference between "forming the mind" and "furnishing the mind."

Overprogrammed Children and Parents..at What Cost? — Alicerose (Sissy) Barman, a child development specialist, charts the evolution of early achievement phenomenon. More women turning to firearms

CARTERET, N.J. — For a long time, Maury Mangan hated even the sight of guns. The men in her life had them, but she firmly believed that firearms were one of society's problems, not a solution.

After she was accosted three times by threatening men, her resolve began to crumble. Then, when a New Jersey woman was killed in a carjacking at a suburban mall, the last threads of opposition snapped.

On a recent Sunday, Mangan stood on the firing line at the Lake Island Rifle and Pistol Club, clutching a revolver and slowly blasting away at a paper target 50 feet away. When the chamber was empty and she turned around, she was smiling.

Mangan, a nurse from Oceanport, N.J., is one of an increasing number of women who have turned to firearms for protection. Although there are no reliable statistics, gun sellers and advocates agree that women are a rapidly expanding segment of the gun-buying market.

"A lot more women are buying firearms," said Mark Campbell of Shooting Systems Inc., a gun dealer in St. Louis. "More women are living by themselves and say they want protection."

The National Rifle Association has seen the number of women members increase by about 100,000 a year recently, according to Elizabeth Swasey, the NRA's director of women's issues and information. Her office, established in 1990, is one indication of women's newfound clout.

Five years ago, Swasey said, only 5 percent or fewer of those taking the NRA's introductory personal protection course were women. More recently, she said, instructors across the country have told her that 50 percent to 75 percent of their students are women.

Women are still less fond of guns than men. In a recent Gallup Poll taken for Life magazine, 68 percent of the women responding said gun laws should be stricter; only 52 percent of men agreed. But the differences in attitude may be eroding.

"In many ways, it's an extension of the women's movement," Swasey said. "The same way we've decided we're perfectly capable of taking care of our economic well-being ... now we're deciding that we're also capable of taking care of something that's much more important, which is our personal and physical well-being."

While many men buy guns for sport, Swasey said there was a one-word explanation for women's newfound interest: "Fear."

Gun-control advocates accuse the NRA and gun manufacturers of exploiting that fear of violent crime with advertising, much of it aimed at women, that portrays handguns as an essential form of self protection.

"While we don't have a problem with law-abiding people owning weapons for legitimate purposes, what we really don't like is people preying on fear," said Susan Whitmore, a spokeswoman for Handgun Control Inc.

Women and Guns, a magazine that began publication in 1989, is filled with ads aimed at the women's market. There are women's holsters and holster-equipped handbags. There is a listing for a store in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., called the "Bang Bang Boutique." And there are guns designed with women in mind, with slimmer grips and smoother finishes.

One manufacturer, Lorcin, has a full-page color ad that shows its .380-caliber semiautomatic pistol lying on a desk atop a copy of Vogue magazine. Nearby is a gold-framed picture of three children.

"Not just another fashion statement, but an above average means of self-protection," the ad declares.

Women and Guns also carries a full-page advertisement for Smith & Wesson's "LadySmith" line of guns.

Smith & Wesson created the line in 1989 after commissioning Gallup Polls on gun ownership. They showed that the percentage of women interested in buying a gun had doubled between 1983 and 1988.

Smith & Wesson named the LadySmiths after a similar line it offered in the late 1800s. Many women then were recreational shooters, according to Chris Dolnack, the company's marketing manager. But today's buyers are overwhelmingly interested in self-defense.

"There are a surprising number of women in the health care field who own guns," Dolnack said. "Nurses and X-ray technicians tend to work a swing shift. So ... they feel more vulnerable at the times when they're getting off."

Mary Warner, an NRA-certified instructor in New Jersey, said demand for her introductory handgun classes has exploded in the past few months, with women making up the majority of her students. On this Sunday, her class had seven students — four women and three men. Two of the four women, including Maury Mangan, were nurses.

"If we don't do something soon, as women, we're going to be prisoners in our own homes," Mangan said. Like many of Mrs. Warner's students, she had been pushed over the line by the carjacking death of a woman in Piscataway last November.

In other parts of the country, other crimes have had similar effects. The Los Angeles riots prompted many women in Southern California to arm themselves. In Lexington, Ky., three carjackings in early December caused a spurt in handgun sales to women.

One recent study showed that women who arm themselves may be in greater danger than ever, because husbands or friends could wind up using the guns against them. But firearm advocates are convinced that a gun-toting woman is less likely to become a victim.

"We've always, as women, been trained not to like guns," Warner said. "Frankly, I consider them the ultimate in feminine protection."

Insomniacs sleeping easier with systems astronauts use linking computers to light

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRAINTREE, Mass. — A system linking computers to light bulbs to adjust sleep patterns is keeping astronauts and night workers alert, and may prove useful easing jet lag, helping older people sleep and teens get out of bed.

Medical trials beginning this fall will test applications of what its developers call their "circadian light system" in which electric lights are computer-controlled according to a mathematical formula figuring in the workers' leisure schedules, age, gender and other factors.

"It's one thing to know you can't sleep at night or get up early in the morning, but now we can demonstrate that it doesn't have to be that way," said Matthew C. Weisman, president of Light Sciences Inc., which owns the license to apply the technology developed at Harvard Medical School.

The medical tests will see if elderly people can use the system to get more sleep, and help young people rise earlier.

The first formal industrial test of the system is already under way on the nightshift at a San Diego Gas and Electric Co. oil- and gas-burning power plant. The computer-set lights were installed in January for a six-month trial run.

"The feedback I get is very positive," said Steve Allman, the utility's director of environmental services.

Five employees on each of the 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. and 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shifts are exposed to bright light in the plant's control rooms.

Doses of light are applied late in the evening to delay the onset of sleepiness, or at other times to fool the body's internal clock. The illumination is 50 to 100 times brighter than normal indoor light, but only about one one-thousandth as bright as sunlight on a sunny day.

Vast numbers of Americans must cope with the physical and psychological toll of unconventional hours. An estimated 20 million people in the United States work irregular schedules, nearly half of them at night, according to the federal Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"They have a higher risk of accident and injury, and on the other hand, they have difficulty sleeping during the day, even though they're exhausted," said Charles Czeisler, an associate professor of medicine at Harvard Medical School. "We help them adjust their schedule biologically."

A cluster of nerve cells the size of a pinhead in the brain controls the release of hormones that determine wakefulness, said Czeisler, who also is director of the Laboratory for Circadian and Sleep Disorders Medicine at Boston's Brigham and Women's Hospital.

But "it was only recently we realized that our exposure to light on the retina of the eye is the most important factor of determining what time of day it is in the body," Czeisler said.

NASA started using the system in 1991 to adapt astronauts to night launches and shift work.

"The crews that have done the light therapy are very enthusiastic," said Dr. Richard Jennings, chief of the flight medicine clinic at Johnson Space Center in Houston. "Based on the early studies, we've been able to move people about anywhere we want within two or three days and get their rhythms into any time zone."

Using the same principle, Light Sciences, based in the Boston suburb of Braintree, built a prototype of a gadget for readjusting the body's clock to reduce jet lag, which annually affects some 4 million airline passengers.

Essentially a tennis visor with light bulbs under its bill, the device was designed for use by passengers crossing time zones. Like an audio headset, it could be furnished by airlines for plugging into the seat armrest.

The jet lag visor could be on the market a year from now, said Light Sciences spokesman, Brad Miles.

As many as 6 million people are believed to suffer sleep disorders that may be eased by light technology, Weisman said. These include 40 percent of the growing over-65 population who report trouble sleeping.

As for the slumber of the young, "it's a classic example of being out of phase. You have to use dynamite and a team of horses to get them up in the morning," said Weisman, the father of teen-agers.

Lightweight, see-through curtains no longer thought as inappropriate

By ROSEMARY SADEZ FRIEDMANN
Scripps-Howard News Service

Isn't it funny how what once was taboo is now commonly accepted?

To cover your windows with sheer fabric was once thought of as bad taste, lingerie for windows — the moral-minded wouldn't even consider it. Lace? Same thing.

Today, lightweight, see-through curtains, be they sheer, lace, gauze or voiles are used extensively.

A window can even be decorative on its own without any treatment whatsoever. It can be heavily covered with layer upon layer of fabrics, just enough to add color, dimension or homeyness to a room.

But since it's see-through material we are discussing at the moment, let's delve further into those choices.

Synthetics are usually better than the real thing; synthetic lace generally is better than real cotton. Why? Well, curtains are the first barrier to dust and dirt. If they are synthetic, they will launder better and also keep their color longer.

Look for fabrics that are heavy enough to hang gracefully, yet lightweight enough to pleat well. (Let me contradict myself here a little regarding synthetics. Most fabrics that are 100 percent polyester will not hold pleats in a consistent manner.)

Sheers also are very versatile. We know they will do the basic pinch pleat quite well, but have you tried them artfully pirouetted around a pole? This treatment is simple to sew; all you need do is hem the top, bottom and sides. The tricky part is getting it to swirl around the pole and drape down elegantly on the sides.

Oh, sure, it looks easy when you see the finished product, but it takes a lot of fixing, folding and general fussing with it to get it right. And once you've got it right, be sure to secure the material onto the pole so that the first person, puppy or cat running near the drape doesn't pull slightly at a corner and destroy your artwork.

When calculating the amount of material you will need for lace, sheers or nearly sheers, be generous. The fluffier the better. Remember, these are lightweight materials and if they are miserly cut, they will be skimpily viewed.

So with this in mind, go ahead, be a lightweight and let the sun shine through.

Over 31 million bottles sold of knock-off perfumes

By ROBIN DEMATTIA
Thomson News Service

They say imitation is the highest form of flattery, and if that's true, then the people who manufacture Giorgio, Obsession and Opium perfumes should be feeling $70 million flattered.

That's the projected 1992 sales figures for Parfums de Coeur Ltd., the Darien, Conn.-based developer and leader of the knockoff perfume business. Last year they sold over 31 million bottles of their products.

"Our market is primarily for those under 30, especially the teen market. They have a fashion interest, yet a limited budget," said Parfums de Coeur founder Mark Laracy.

"The most important thing about our company is our fragrance quality. That's what gets our repeat purchases," he said.

Even more than scent, though, Laracy admits he sells fantasy.

"A lot of it is female psychology. Women want to work and have careers and at the same time they want to be mothers and lovers," he said. For teens, the company's primary market, the fantasy is to be socially desirable, he said.

The company was established in 1981 and today controls up to 85 percent of the alternative designer fragrance market. They offer 12 women's products, including the well-known Primo, and introduced a men's line this year.

In a September Chain Drug Review report, eight of the top 20 best-selling women's fragrance products were by Parfums de Coeur, including the top three.

The man behind the market is the 50-year-old Laracy, who worked for 10 years at Prince Matchabelli.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): One-to-one negotiations solidify a money situation, even if you are not euphoric about the net results. Creativity flows in the afternoon and you come up with a new idea. Sort through necessary communications and keep a fast pace at work. Tonight: Make a must appearance. ***

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Opportunity knocks on your door. Discussions revolve around a commitment and money. You might be overly serious today, so consider an off-the-wall invitation this afternoon. Put on your dancing shoes and make the most of it. Tonight: Continue the fireworks. *****

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You reach a new understanding with an associate. You might find it difficult to have a long-overdue discussion, but it is important for you to get past your fears. Tonight: Enjoy the additional heat. ****

IF FEB. 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Understanding will bring you to new levels in your relationships this year. If you're a man, you might be looking at some major life changes. If you're a woman, you might make an important decision regarding your significant other. Watch a tendency to be overly serious and critical. Money will come because of your excellent people skills and your artistic leanings. Be careful, however, of overindulging. Grab a special opportunity that could involve travel, further education and more self-understanding. LIBRA brings you to new heights.

Dear Abby - Letters...

Relative says no thanks

DEAR ABBY: Following the funeral of a close relative, I received a store-bought printed card bearing this poem:

"Perhaps you sent a lovely card,
"or sat quietly on a chair.
"Perhaps you sent a floral piece,
"if so, we saw it there.
"Perhaps you spoke the kindest words
"As any friend could say.
"Perhaps you were not there at all,
"but thought of us that day.
"Whatever you did to console our hearts,
"We thank you so much for whatever the part." (signed) The Entire Jones Family (not their real name).

Abby, this is the most insulting card I have ever received! Not only was I there, I traveled through two states to get there. I also sent a costly floral arrangement and paid for my own lodging.

What a rude message: We don't know whether you made it to the funeral or not -- perhaps you weren't even there, but just thought of us instead. I am furious! This stupid message was supposed to be a "thank-you" from the entire Jones family. Abby, the entire Jones family numbers close to 100 people.

Believe me, after this, I am not going to speak to any of them. Am I wrong? -- ONE OF THE FAMILY

DEAR ONE: Please don't be hasty in your judgment. In all probability, the person who selected the card did not read the message carefully before sending it. This can easily happen in times of stress.

Don't analyze the message; the intent was to thank you for your presence and the lovely floral piece. Overlook the inappropriate poem. Life is too short to be critical when the intentions are good.

★★★

DEAR ABBY: On Christmas morning, I found a lost Labrador retriever who was wearing a choke chain and a length of rope. Since the animal shelter could not pick him up until the 26th, I drove around asking people if they recognized him, and posted "Lost Dog" signs with his description. The dog wound up spending the night and was picked up by the shelter the next day.

My husband, who is normally a loving and sensitive man, was irate with me -- claiming that it was "mean" to lock up the dog in our fenced yard. Rather, he said, we should have let the dog loose to find its way home.

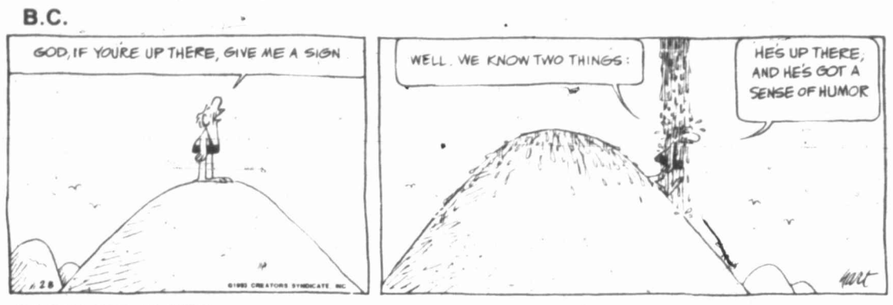

My fears were that the dog would not know how to get home, and/or be run over trying. Anyway, my husband was as adamant in his stance as I in mine. We would like your opinion, please. -- SAN DIEGO DOG LOVER

DEAR DOG LOVER: Since the dog had no license or ID on its choke chain, it could have been dumped in your neighborhood by someone who had stolen him or who no longer wanted him. You did the compassionate thing by keeping the dog safely secure while you tried to find the owner. Tell your husband Abby says it's time to bury this bone of contention.
