U.S., France friendship reaffirmed

Immigrants talk about life in their new country, related stories —7A, 12C

NEW YORK (AP) — The Statue of Liberty, her newly lighted torch held high, resumed her reign as a shining beacon of hope to the world Thursday night while millions of people, two presidents and an armada of sail and sea power hailed her first hundred years.

The statue was illuminated anew in New York Harbor in a gala, patriotic ceremony highlighted by the swearing-in of hundreds of new citizens, a show-business extravaganza and a rededication of friendship between France and the United States.

President Reagan presided as the gilded torch was rekindled and fireworks exploded over the darkened harbor to the strains of "Stars and Stripes Forever" to climax the evening-long festivities for the monument's rebirth after a $66 million facelift.

"We are the keepers of the flame of liberty. We hold it high tonight for the world to see," Reagan said.

Midlanders join their counterparts across the nation today in celebrating the Fourth of July. In addition, Texans are spending all of 1986 celebrating the state's 150th birthday.

Parade kicks off celebration

From Staff Reports

Fireworks, bike races, bands and a parade are just a few of the activities highlighting Midland's Fourth of July celebrations.

But, the main event, according to Robin Jackson, Midland Centennial-Sesquicentennial Commission executive director, is the street dance with the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band.

The dance takes place Saturday at the Midland Park Mall. It begins at 8:30 p.m. and continues until midnight. The dance will be on the east side of the mall by Walgreens and Sears. People can park anywhere else in the mall's parking lot. The concert is free and open to the public.

Ms. Jackson said that last year's street dance, featuring Asleep at the Wheel, had the single biggest attendance of any Fourth of July event. Between 12,000-15,000 people showed up.

"It appeals to all types of people, grandparents, parents, teenagers and children. Where else can you see parents and teen-agers enjoying the same event?"

City manager announces his retirement

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

After more than two decades as the No. 1 man for the city of Midland, James Brown announced Thursday he will retire.

In 1963 when Brown first began working for the city, it had a $5.7 million budget and some 60,000 people.

Today, the city's population has swelled to nearly 100,000, and its budget is about $60 million.

What used to be a small town has grown into a large city.

"We've seen the city grow," said the 64-year-old Brown, "and I'm happy to be a part of it."

Brown's last day is scheduled for Jan. 31, 1987.

His position will likely be taken by Deputy City Manager Fred Poe, who is scheduled for approval at Tuesday's City Council meeting.

Brown also said Poe will select a new Deputy City Manager. Mike McGregor is the assistant city manager.

"Basically, I just decided I wanted to retire," said Brown, who earns $87,948 annually. "I made the decision several years ago that I wanted to retire on this date."

Brown, a University of Michigan graduate, said he began working for the city of Midland in 1963 as an administrative assistant.

"I had spent 14 years in the oil business, and it had hit rock bottom at the time. Someone told me to go talk to the city manager about a job, and I did."

Brown said he became city manager the next year.

"When I came over I liked what I saw," he said. "I hoped I could stay here.

"I never treated this job as a stepping stone to other jobs. I just wanted to make it a better place to live. And I pray I have."

Brown said he thinks one of the biggest accomplishments in his tenure is the upgrading of the staff.

"We have improved the quality of people that we have, and we have improved morale. I think we are more professional overall than before."

Among his most difficult objectives was adjusting to the city's rapid growth in the '70s and '80s.

Midland had population spurts in those times.

"I never dreamed we would grow quite like this," he said. "I expected steady growth, but a big bump in the '80s liked to have kill us.

"I'm not sure I could survive another one. It's just too much."

Brown said he plans to vacation.

"There are a lot of things I want to do," he said. "Read a book, go to my cottage and mainly vacation."

He said he hopes people remember him as a dedicated public servant.

Said Brown:

"I want to be remembered that I did my best to run the city."

White pledges to maintain gains in education, highway funds

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

White

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White stopped short of endorsing a tax increase to solve the state's budget crisis Thursday, but pledged to maintain recent gains in education and highway funds.

White said he is confident most Texans want to continue current levels of state spending in those areas. He would not say whether that commitment will mean a tax increase during a special session this summer or when lawmakers convene in regular session next year.

"I think the people of our state do not want to retreat," White told reporters at his weekly Capitol press conference. "They want to move forward, and that's the leadership we're going to provide."

White said he is preparing his own plan to cut state spending that will "blend" with proposals drafted by legislative leaders. Last week, the governor directed House and Senate members to develop plans to cut the budget in preparation for a special session later this summer.

White's announcement came on the heels of State Comptroller Bob Bullock's latest revenue estimate indicating a $2.3 billion deficit for the remainder of the 1986-87 fiscal year. Even more ominous was Bullock's projection of a $5.4 billion budget shortfall for the 1988-89 biennium.

"These are tough times and we have to make some very tough decisions," White acknowledged Thursday. "We have to cut, there's no question about that."

There is a question, however, as to where to make those cuts, and how deep those cuts should be.

White said he will do whatever is necessary to "maintain momemtum on education, to maintain mobility for our people, to be compassionate for those people who depend on this state for their very life and their existance. We cannot turn our backs on those human needs."

When asked if he will limit the special session to spending cuts alone, or open it to include debate of a tax bill, White said, "I haven't taken that into consideration at all. Until we get through with the cuts and see where we are, it's not appropriate to talk about expanding revenues."

Key House members, including Speaker Gib Lewis and Ways and Means Chairman Stan Schlueter, said that chamber will not support a tax increase before the November elections. Lewis, along with House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd, said House members will probably cut about $1.5 billion from the budget in a special session this summer and then come back in January to consider a tax bill.

White said Thursday that he would "prefer to get the whole problem solved" in a special session this summer, and Schlueter agreed.

Murder charge filed in city woman's death

From Staff Reports

A 22-year-old man was charged with the murder of his wife Thursday after he surrendered to authorities at Midland Memorial Hospital 40 minutes after she was pronounced dead there, authorities said.

Bond was set at $75,000 for Florencio Barron and he remained in the Midland County Jail late Thursday night, according to a Sheriff's Department official.

Martha Barron of Midland died in the emergency room at 5:10 p.m. after she arrived by ambulance at 4:50 p.m. An attending doctor said she was "in cardio-pulmonary arrest" when she arrived, and he said CPR efforts failed to revive her.

A nurse in the emergency room said Mrs. Barron suffered a three to four inch laceration in the back of the head, and what she described as a "knot" at the base of her skull.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said the weapon allegedly used in the death was a garden hoe.

Painter spoke at the hospital's emergency room, just a few feet from where the suspect, dressed in a blue buttoned shirt and blue jeans, was being held awaiting transport to the county jail.

The incident occurred at or near a residence just off the Rankin Highway, about one-half mile south of Interstate 20, according to officers. Richard Kolas, communications supervisor of the Midland Fire Department, said he dispatched an ambulance to the scene at 4:14 p.m.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said at the hospital he had been called there after the man surrendered.

Political party: Voter fraud likely in Mexico's gubernatorial election

CHIHUAHUA, Mexico (AP) — The ruling party's gubernatorial candidate in Chihuahua promises "concrete actions" against corruption, while its main opposition says voter fraud is in the making as the northern border state prepares for Sunday's elections.

The conservative National Action Party, Mexico's largest minority party, currently holds mayoralties in seven important Chihuahua cities, including the state capital of the same name.

It has mounted an impressive effort to combat the vote rigging it claims the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, is plotting for Sunday.

National Action, known as PAN, is challenging the dominance of the PRI, which never has lot a presidential or gubernatorial race in any of Mexico's 31 states since its founding in 1929.

Although attention has focused on Chihuahua, Mexico's largest state bordering Texas and New Mexico, PAN also is hoping for gains in Durango immediately to the south. Two other gubernatorial races are scheduled Sunday, in the central states of Michoacan and Zacatecas.

Leading the movement for the PAn in Chihuahua is its 35-year-old gubernatorial candidate, Francisco Barrio.

Barrio, an accountant, resigned as mayor of Ciudad Juarez, the state's largest city across the border from El Paso, Texas, to run for governor.

The Democratic Electoral Movement, an organization made up of opposition parties and private groups, on Wednesday evening gave the PRI a sample of its plans if the elections are fixed.

Hundreds of protesters blocked two important highways in this capital city of 600,000 inhabitants and in Cuauhtemoc 65 miles southwest of here. Both blockades were brief and nonviolent.

Five other candidates from minor opposition parties also are running for governor in Chihuahua.

Salvador Cortez of the Democratic Movement said a blockade spawned by voter fraud Sunday would last "three or four days or perhaps indefinitely."

Luis Alvarez, Chihuahua's PAN mayor, meanwhile, was on the third day of a hunger strike Thursday that he said would endure "to my death" in an effort to convince the government to respect the popular vote.

The PRI has been known to resort to "alchemy," as voter fraud is known, to assure it maintains its hold on the country.

Nation's unemployment rate drops to 7.1 percent

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The civilian unemployment rate dropped to 7.1 percent in June, but the improvement masked a loss of almost 90,000 jobs in the hard-hit manufacturing and oil and gas industries, the government reported Thursday.

While the Reagan administration hailed the drop in the jobless rate, private economists were not impressed, arguing that the report showed a sluggish economy with widespread weakness.

The Labor Department said the number of Americans out of work fell to 8.44 million last month, an improvement of 111,000 over May, when the unemployment rate had jumped to 7.3 percent.

Civilian employment rose by 563,000 in June as 452,000 new workers entered the labor force, according to the department's monthly survey of households.

A separate survey of business payrolls, however, showed employment actually fell in June by 89,000 workers, the first decline recorded in this survey since August 1983.

The disparity between the two surveys was explained in part by the fact that they classify striking workers differently. Strikers are not counted as employed in the business survey because they are not drawing paychecks, but the household survey continues to count them as jobholders.

Thus, the 155,000 workers on strike last month against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. were treated differently in the two calculations.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said the fall in the jobless rate represented "more good news for an economy that is still growing, now for the 43rd consecutive month."

But private analysts disagreed, arguing that unemployment rate has been basically stagnant for the past two years as the manufacturing sector continues to be pounded by huge foreign trade deficits.

"The decline in the unemployment rate is meaningless," said Lawrence Chimerine, president of Chase Econometrics in Bala Cynwyd, Pa. "This is another weak economic report which raises further doubts about whether we will get any pickup in growth in the second half of the year."

Rudy Oswald, chief economist for the AFL-CIO, said, "The Index of Leading Economic Indicators is weak, manufacturing orders are weak and our trade deficit is going through the ceiling. In that climate, today's jobless report is not enough improvement to be encouraging."

The report showed that manufacturing jobs fell by 56,000 in June. Since the beginning of the year, 159,000 manufacturing jobs have been lost.

Oil and gas employment fell by 15,000, bringing to 113,000 the number of jobs lost in the petroleum industry this year. Drilling activities have been cut back sharply because of the plunge in oil prices.

Even the construction industry, one of the bright spots in the economy this year, sustained a seasonally adjusted decline of 30,000 jobs in June. This still was a substantial improvement from a year ago, however.

The service sector of the economy, which has been growing as manufacturing has been shrinking, added another 145,000 jobs in June.

Among various groups, Hispanics enjoyed a substantial improvement in employment last month, as their jobless rate fell by 0.4 percentage point to 10.6 percent.

Unemployment among whites dipped to 6.1 percent from 6.2 percent the month before; joblessness among blacks rose to 15.1 percent from 14.8 percent in May.

Agreement close on super power summit plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union are nearing agreement on a meeting to plan a Ronald Reagan-Mikhail S. Gorbachev summit, but Moscow is holding off until its latest proposal to reduce strategic nuclear weapons draws a response, U.S. officials said Thursday.

The planning would involve the Kremlin rescheduling a visit here — probably in September — by Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze to map an agenda with Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

The meeting initially was scheduled for mid-May, but the Soviets canceled it to protest the U.S. bombing of Libya in mid-April. In the meantime, they tabled at negotiations in Geneva a proposal to reduce U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, intercontinental ballistic missile and nuclear-bearing submarines.

President Reagan called it a serious proposal, worthy of U.S. consideration, but the talks recessed last month without a U.S. response.

U.S. officials, insisting on anonymity, said the Soviets wanted one before giving final approval for Shevardnadze to see Shultz in September, when they both are due to attend the special session of the U.N. General Assembly.

Reagan may at least give a preliminary response when he answers the letter he received from Gorbachev last week. In it, U.S. officials said, the Soviet leader called for progress in all phases of arms control negotiations and on ending the testing of nuclear weapons.

State Department and other U.S. officials are drafting a reply for Reagan. However, Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, said "it will be a while" before the president replies to Gorbachev.

Reagan told USA Today that Gorbachev's message made him "optimistic that we're not only going to have a summit, but that we're going to have a summit where we can reach agreement on some of the goals that we share."

He also told the newspaper: "We have said from the very beginning that we would like a reduction of nuclear weapons leading to the ultimate elimination of such weapons. Well, now they have said the same thing. And, if we both want the same thing, we ought to be able to find a way to reach that goal."

Reagan and Gorbachev agreed at their "fireside" summit last November in Geneva to hold back-to-back meetings this year in Washington and in 1987 in Moscow. But preparations stalled as superpower relations declined. One of the main obstacles, U.S. officials said, is that the Soviets want to be sure the next summit produces agreements to curb nuclear weapons.

Yuri Dubinin, the new Soviet ambassador, said in a separate interview that dates will be set for the summit meeting as soon as Reagan replies "positively" to the latest series of Soviet arms control proposals.

"We hope the American administration will answer positively to our suggestions," Dubinin told Hearst News and Features Service. "That would make the new summit meeting possible."

Dubinin did not define what Moscow would regard as a positive response.

Congressman appointed to replace East

Broyhill

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Republican Rep. Jim Broyhill became the newest member of the U.S. Senate on Thursday, appointed by the governor to complete the term of the late John East. But the Democrat who will oppose Broyhill for the seat in November commented: "Senators in the end must be elected."

The appointment by North Carolina's Republican Gov. Jim Martin had been widely expected since East, who had declined to seek reelection because of poor health, committed suicide Sunday.

"I had no idea I would be taking office under these circumstances," said Broyhill, who in May won the GOP nomination to succeed East.

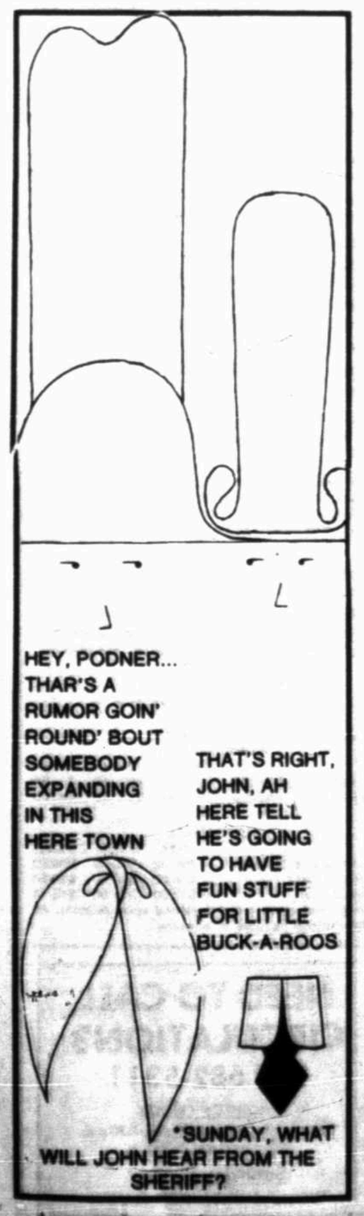

Broyhill, 58, is expected to assume his new post July 14, when Congress reconvenes after its Independence Day recess.

Martin is a longtime friend and political ally of Broyhill, and served with him in the House for 12 years.

"I'm convinced that President Reagan will need Jim Broyhill and his uniquely effective abilities and talents without delay," Martin said.

Under state law, Broyhill's House seat must be filled in a special election. Martin said he probably would call the election for sometime between September and November.

WHITE

"If we do that (eliminate only part of the deficit), it'l be thrown right back in our faces," Schlueter said. "I'd just as soon come down here and pass a tax bill and take care of it."

Also at Thursday's press conference, White said he is not sure whether state employees will actually receive a 3-percent pay raise lawmakers approved for 1986 and 1987. Those pay raises are reportedly one area budget writers are considering cutting to help erase the projected shortfall.

"When we have 860,000 people who have lost all their paycheck, it's going to be tough," White said, referring to the state's June unemployment rate of 10.5 percent. "I'm going to fight for (state employees) every step of the way, but we've got to be realistic about it."

White again blamed the Reagan administration for Texas' slumping oil industry and reiterated the need for a tariff on imported oil. Saudi Arabia, he said, is "tightening the noose around our industry."

LIBERTY

Earlier, he pressed a button that shot a laser beam from Governors Island across the harbor and triggered a 1.4 million-watt show. The base of the 151-foot statue was bathed in red light, then blue, and finally a brilliant white light from 15 6,000-watt lamps.

Reagan, who with President Francois Mitterrand of France will participate in much of the Liberty Weekend pageantry, hailed the statue as "a beacon of hope for all mankind."

"God Bless America," said Pope John Paul II, in a videotaped statement shown at St. Patrick's Cathedral. He said the towering monument still served as a welcoming symbol for "the tired, poor, uprooted people of the world."

Thousands of new citizens in 47 cities were being sworn in over the weekend, including 292 Thursday night by Chief Justice Warren Burger on Ellis Island, where 12 million immigrants were processed in the statue's shadow over the years.

Among those taking the oath on Ellis Island were international ballet star Mikhail Baryshnikov; Heang Phok, who walked for 10 days to escape his native Cambodia; and comedian Yakov Smirnov.

Immigrants in Miami, St. Louis and San Francisco simultaneously took the oath via television from Burger, who was performing one of his last official acts as chief justice.

Reagan and Mitterrand were joined on Governors Island by about 3,000 guests, who paid $5,000 a ticket for the two-hour, 45-minute outdoor spectacle in winds gusting to 28 mph.

The unveiling of the Statue of Liberty and relighting of her torch, after a restoration project aided by corporations and schoolchildren alike, opened four days of pomp, ceremony and a kaleidoscope of entertainment in honor of the statue and Independence Day.

The televised spectacular got under way with the national anthems of the United States and France, followed by remarks from Mitterand, who wished the statue and America a happy birthday.

The audience included millions of people in the United States and 33 other countries, while 6 million to 13 million were expected in the area for festivities like street fairs, the world's biggest fireworks display, biggest marching band, open-air concerts and superstar-studded extravaganzas in New Jersey and New York.

Jubilant bells rang for 2½ minutes at the cathedral to commemorate the statue's century-old vigil at the harbor's "golden door," where generations of immigrants entered the country to begin new lives.

Thousands of ships jammed the harbor, from the graceful tall vessels that have sailed the seven seas to the grand gray dreadnoughts that fought in this century's wars to the elegant Queen Elizabeth II and sleek yachts and pleasure craft that darted through the waters between New York and New Jersey. Blimps and helicopters floated overhead.

Police were called Thursday evening to remove hundreds of riders who refused to leave the Staten Island ferry, which offers a grand view of the statue for an un-grand fare of 25 cents. The unusual sea traffic earlier delayed scheduled runs of the ferry, and nearly 20,000 people were crammed into the ferry's terminal at the tip of Manhattan for more than an hour.

The culimination of three years of work to restore the statue began Thursday as foghorns greeted the arrival off the New Jersey coast of the magnificent tall ships, 22 vessels from all over the world that will parade up the Hudson River on Friday in a pageant of sail.

Winds of more than 25 mph whipped up 6-foot waves and stranded the captains of all but one of the tall ships aboard their vessels, preventing launches from taking them to unveiling ceremonies on Governors Island.

On the New Jersey side of the river, about 1,000 people camped out with sleeping bags and blankets in parks in Weehawken to get the best vantage point of the ships on Friday.

"We are looking forward to a first-class weekend," Mayor Edward I. Koch told 1,000 guests at Gracie Mansion who watched a loosely organized parade of nearly 200 sloops, barks, schooners and lesser sailing ships gliding down the East River for a mooring area off Brooklyn until Friday's OpSail event.

One of the smaller vessels, presumably British, sported a banner that read "All is forgiven. Come home colonials, tea and crumpets await."

Although the salute to the statue had an international flavor with ships from all over the world, there was a note of dissidence from the Soviet Union.

The Communist Party daily Pravda said the celebration masks the real nature of freedom in America, which it called "the liberty to sell and be sold."

CELEBRATION

The five-member Nitty Gritty Dirt Band will perform hit songs from their past. The band has been together 20 years and gone through many changes. One of their early members was singer-songwriter Jackson Browne.

"They have gone through a lot of different phases and have played gospel, bluegrass, country/western, rock and pop music. They have really kept up with the times," Ms. Jackson said.

Before the local event, the band will hold an autograph session at Musicland in Midland Park Mall at 6 p.m.

Ms. Jackson said that KNFM Radio 92.3 will broadcast the band's "20 Years of Dirt," concert which took place recently in Denver. The radio broadcast will begin at 7 p.m. and end at 9 p.m.

The local "vintage rock" group, The Shades, will open for the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band.

"The Shades play a lot of music from the 60s and 70s that people know and recognize," Ms. Jackson said.

Weekend activities start this morning with a children's parade.

The parade, sponsored by the Daughters of the American Revolution, starts at 10 a.m. around the courthouse and the Centennial Plaza. Children through grade 6 participated.

Also this morning is the Sesquicentennial Run, sponsored by the Midland Park Mall and the Permian Basin Road Runners, and a bike race, sponsored by Bike Masters.

There is a one mile run for children 12 and under. It starts at 7:30 a.m. with the 8K starting at 8 a.m. Proceeds went to the Roadrunners.

There are two different distances for the bike race. Bikers participate in either an 8.6 mile or 30 mile race. Both start at 8:30 a.m. in downtown Midland. The bike race proceeds go to the Midland Crime Stoppers.

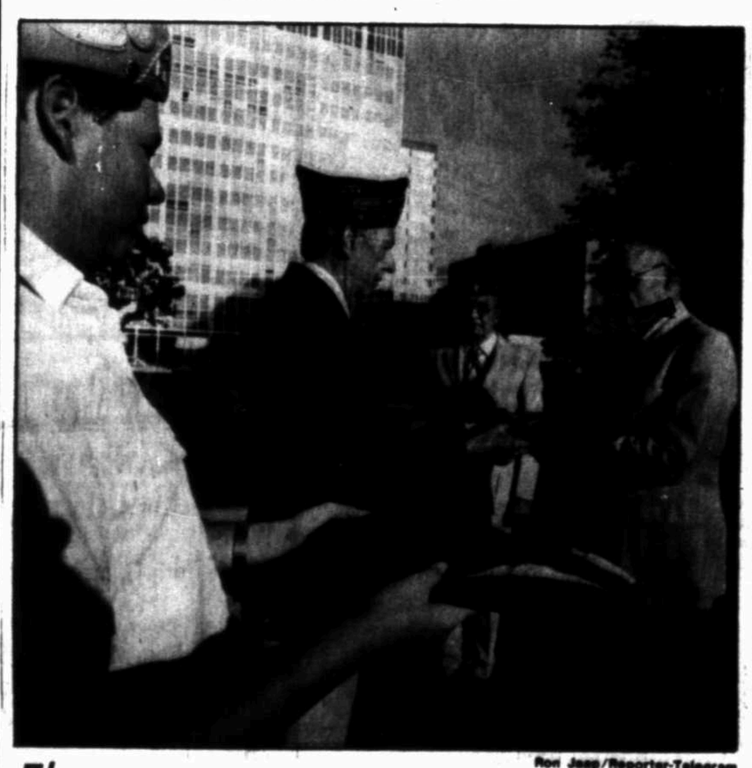

This afternoon from 1 to 4 p.m. at the Midland Park Mall the country/western band West Wind will perform. It will kick off the Statue of Liberty Freedom Foundation Project.

All the money that is thrown into the freedom fountain, located inside the mall, will go to the restoration of the Statue of Liberty.

A fireworks display along with a song and dnace show will take place at Angels Stadium tonight. It is sponsored by the Kiwanis, KPTX-TV, KWEL-KBAT Radio and the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

New Dimension is the song-dance group that will perform patriotic and popular songs. The group is made up of three youths, ages 18, 13 and 8. The show will begin at 8 p.m. and the fireworks will start between 9:30 and 10 p.m.

People can get the tickets at the door. The cost is $3.

FBI: Jewish extremists commit terrorist acts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jewish extremists committed four of the seven domestic terrorist acts that killed two people in 1985, but the number of incidents was less than half that of the previous year, the FBI reported Thursday.

Puerto Rican terrorists were responsible for two incidents in 1985, while a radical group known as the Red Guerrilla Resistance carried out a bombing on Feb. 23, 1985, the FBI said. All told 10 people were injured in terrorism in the United States.

A 41-page report, prepared by the FBI's Terrorist Research and Analytical Center, said five of the seven incidents last year were bombings, one was a rocket attack and another a shooting.

Besides the seven terrorist incidents, there were five incidents of suspected terrorism in which no one was killed, the report said.

The FBI said there were 13 terrorist incidents in 1984, of which 11 were bombings. Since 1982, when there were 51 terrorist incidents, the number has dropped each year.

The report said four incidents last year are attributed to Jewish extremists, who have been linked with 18 terrorist attacks since 1981.

The Jewish Defense League, founded by Rabbi Meir Kahane in Brooklyn, N.Y., in 1968, is the most well-known of the groups. Referring to the 1985 incidents, the report said: "Although certain evidence leads to suspicion of elements of the JDL, final attribution to any one specific group must await further investigation."

The JDL is composed primarily of young Jewish-American extremists who consider themselves "to be a front-line of defense against anti-Semitism, as well as being supporters of the state of Israel," the report said.

The 1985 incidents attributed to Jewish extremists killed two people and injured nine, the report said. In those acts:

— A pipe bomb exploded at the front door of Dr. George Ashley's home in Northridge, Calif., on May 15. Ashley is the head of a private research organization in Torrance, Calif., which has claimed the Holocaust never occurred. Property damage was estimated at $2,000, but no one was injured.

— An explosive device detonated inside a car in Paterson, N.J., on Aug. 15, injuring its owner, Tscherim Soobzokov, and Lidia Alonso. Soobzokov, who had been identified as a Nazi war criminal in a book entitled "Wanted: The Search for Nazis in America," later died.

— A device exploded on the front steps of a house owned by Elmars Sprogis in Brentwood, N.Y., on Sept. 6. Another man, Robert Seifried was seriously injured, but Sprogis was not hurt. Sprogis was "was purportedly responsible for guarding Jews incarcerated in Nazi concentration camps during World War II," but all charges against him were dismissed in a deportation hearing, the report said.

— Alexander Odeh, the regional director of the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination League, died after a bomb exploded Oct. 11 at his office in Santa Ana, Calif. Seven people were injured in the incident.

The report said the Organization of Volunteers for the Puerto Rican Revolution, a group whose objective is to gain independence for Puerto Rico through armed revolution, was responsible for two incidents last year.

— On Jan. 25, 1985, a light antitank weapon hit the back side of the U.S. Courthouse in San Juan, Puerto Rico, causing extensive damage. Another liberation group, the Ejercito Popular Boricua-Macheteros, claimed it was also involved. No one was hurt.

— The organization of volunteers also said it was responsible for the shooting and wounding of an Army major a half-mile from his house in Puerto Rico on Nov. 6.

The Red Guerilla Resistance issued a communique that said it placed a bomb inside a restroom near the offices of the Police Benevolent Association in New York City on Feb. 23. There were no injuries, although the structure was damaged. The group says it is opposed to "American and Israeli imperialism...," the report said.

Armed robbers escape

SAINT-NAZAIRE, France (AP) — Masked robbers armed with pistols and a machine gun escaped with $12.5 million from a Bank of France branch Thursday after forcing employees arriving for work to carry sacks filled with cash to get-away vehicles, authorities said.

The robbers earlier broke into the bank cashier's home, in the same building as the bank branch, and forced him to hand over the office keys, authorities said.

Bank of France Deputy Governor Philippe Lagayette said the gang escaped with 88 million francs, the equivalent of $12.5 million, making it one of the biggest bank robberies in French history.

"When I entered for work, I saw the director who gave me a weak hello. Then immediately I found myself face to face with masked men who made me sit on a bench next to my collegues," one bank employee, speaking on condition of anonymity, told a French reporter.

Police said up to 10 people were involved in the robbery, including two to four men who waited outside the bank, communicating with the others by walkie-talkies.

Security Minister Robert Pandraud told French radio there was a "working hypothesis" that the extreme left-wing terrorist group Direct Action was involved in the holdup. Police say they found some stolen money from a previous Bank of France robbery at the home of a man suspected of having terrorist connections.

According to police, six men using a ladder climbed to the terrace of the building at about 4:30 a.m. and entered the cashier's second floor apartment by breaking a glass door.

The cashier was injured when he tried to push away a gun trained on him, but he was not seriously hurt, police said.

The gunmen were waiting as employees reported for work Thursday morning and forced several of them to help carry sacks of money from the vault to the parking lot, where a van and small truck were waiting, police and bank employees said.

The gang took off as a police car heading for an accident with sirens blaring passed the bank, witnesses said.

Cactus Drilling reports theft of $8,000 truck

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Sheriff's Department Thursday reported the theft of an $8,000 truck from Cactus Drilling Co.

A Cactus Drilling employee reported that the truck was driven through a gate of the fence surrounding the company property, located on U.S. Highway 80, sometime between 5:15 p.m. Wednesday and 5 a.m. Thursday.

Crouch's Fireworks reported $1,500 worth of fireworks stolen from its building located 1¼ miles south of Interstate 20 on Rankin Highway.

Tracey Crouch told officers it appeared burglars kicked open a door to gain entrance between 4 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. Thursday, which resulted in an additional $200 worth of damage.

Midland Police Department listed a car burglary at 3:13 a.m. Thursday.

Allen Gardner, 5320 N. Loop 250, reported $550 worth of valuables were taken from his automobile including a radar detector, four "KC" lights and two lights.

Crime Stoppers: Six crimes clear

From Staff Reports

The Midland Crime Stoppers released their June statistics Thursday, and reported six crimes cleared, stolen property worth $48,000 recovered and narcotics worth $805 confiscated. Reward money for the month totaled $1,400.

According to the report, Crime Stoppers received 101 phone calls during the month, 29 code numbers were assigned, five suspects arrested and eight rewards were paid. The arrests were all made for narcotics offenses. Four narcotics offenses and two thefts were cleared.

Crime Stoppers has led to the arrests of 66 persons and clearance of 61 cases in 1986. Since the first of the year, almost $70,000 in stolen property has been recovered and $330,000 worth of narcotics has been confiscated.

Since its inception here in January 1984, the program has led to 255 arrests. Some 332 offenses have been cleared and 130 rewards totaling $94,220 have been paid. Eight stolen vehicles have also been recovered.

Discovery sheds light on life in Jerusalem 2,600 years ago

JERUSALEM (AP) — The discovery of a treasure trove including the oldest biblical inscriptions ever found has shed new light on life in Jerusalem during the first Jewish kingdom, 2,600 years ago.

The inscriptions were scratched onto two silver charms found in a burial cave among a wealth of jewelry and pottery, said Michal Dayagi-Mendels, a curator at the Israel Museum, where the treasure went on display earlier this week.

The trove of about 1,000 items was the largest collection found in Jerusalem since archeologists began probing the city's ancient past 120 years ago. It was hidden from looters and grave robbers by a cave-in, said Mrs. Dayagi-Mendels.

Nine caves were hewn into a hillside across the Hinnom Valley from the walls of Jerusalem's Old City, just half a mile from where the biblical temple stood. Most of the burial chambers had been completely stripped, and a few contained shards that looters left as valueless, said Gabriel Barkay, the Tel Aviv archeologist who led the excavation.

The charms, thin pieces of pure silver rolled up like scrolls and worn around the neck, were found in 1979 but the inscriptions were deciphered only this year, said Barkay.

Parts of the text were missing, but enough was found to identify it as the blessing of the high priests from the Book of Numbers, Barkay said during a preview of the exhibition.

The full text reads: "The Lord bless you and keep you. The Lord make his face shine upon you and be gracious unto you. The Lord lift up his countenance upon you and grant you peace."

The inscriptions date back to the 7th century B.C., predating by 400 years the Dead Sea Scrolls which had been the earliest known biblical texts, Barkay said.

He said the inscription, scratched into the silver in an ancient Hebrew script that has not been used for about 2,500 years, supported the notion that the prayer was one of the earliest parts of the Bible.

"The priestly benediction crystallized early, much before it was included in the Pentateuch," or the first five books of the Old Testament, Barkay said.

He said the caves also yielded evidence that some Jews remained in Jerusalem even after the Babylonians captured the city in 586 B.C., expelled the Jews and destroyed the fabled temple built by King Solomon about 400 years earlier.

The finds also pointed to extensive trade, and included the oldest coin ever found in this country, said Mrs. Dayagi-Mendels. She said the 6th century B.C. Greek coin "belongs to a period when the first coins were being minted."

Decomposed remains of at least 95 people were found in one cave, and the pottery — perfume bottles, oil lamps and wine jugs — buried alongside them showed an unbroken chain of one family for nearly 1,000 years, Barkay said.

A limestone seal was inscribed with the word "plata," which Mrs. Dayagi-Mendels said could be part of the family name.

A Byzantine church later was built near the caves using stone quarried from the limestone hill where the caves were cut. Barkay said that in one cave he found a World War I arsenal of Turkish army rifles. Today the Scottish Church of St. Andrews, built in 1927, stands on the site.

Woman traded village for tenement

EDITOR'S NOTE — Some of those who came to the American mainland were U.S. citizens at birth, born in Puerto Rico. Actress Rita Moreno has made the voyage from the rain forest to the Rialto, and she tells her family's story.

By JERRY SCHWARTZ
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When Rita Moreno and her mother left Puerto Rico, they left behind a poor but picturesque life in a small town. When they arrived in New York, they found a life of tenements and sweatshops.

But they did not regret the move, not for an instant.

"This was the land of opportunity," said the 54-year-old actress. "If anything good was going to happen to us, it would happen here."

It would not happen in Humacao, the small town on the edge of the Puerto Rican rain forest where Miss Moreno was born in 1931.

The family lived in a little house with no indoor plumbing; she fondly remembers a grandfather who rolled cigars and was active in politics. "He was always being shot at," she recalled.

When Miss Moreno was 3, her mother divorced her handyman father. She left Rita with her ex-husband and took off for New York, arriving in the middle of the Depression.

She found work sewing in the Lower East Side sweatshops. She was paid pennies for each garment she made, but at the end of the year she had saved enough to go to Puerto Rico, claim her child and return to New York.

The girl she had left behind did not recognize her, but she had prepared for that eventuality — Rita's mother came with arms full of toys for the reunion.

They returned to New York by boat, a horrific 12-day voyage through a tempest. "I remember it so clearly, a lot of frightened Puerto Ricans, singing and praying real loud," Miss Moreno said in an interview.

She recalls passing the Statue of Liberty. "Coming from a culture where men took precedence," she was impressed by this woman who greeted newcomers.

By 1980, more than 2 million Puerto Ricans lived in the 50 states. But the Morenos were pioneers of that migration; by 1930, there were only 100,000 Puerto Ricans here. The flow increased dramatically after World War II, as hundreds of thousands came north in search of a better life.

The images of those first days in New York are still clear in Miss Moreno's mind: the smell of the hemp ropes at the pier, which made her ill; the apartment in upper Manhattan she and her mother shared with several families and other unwelcome visitors ("We didn't have all those cockroaches in Puerto Rico"); the roses she made from crepe paper and wire to help supplement the family income; the trials of learning arithmetic without being able to speak English.

"To this day, I still can't do math. I still count on my fingers," said Miss Moreno, a graduate of P.S. 132.

Her mother married a Cuban watchmaker, and the family moved to a nicer apartment on 181st Street in Washington Heights. By now, they were "well-fed, working-class people"; a third marriage, years later, resulted in a move to a tract house in a Long Island suburb, "the dream of a lifetime."

Meanwhile, Miss Moreno had begun to dance. She was 6½ when she made her debut with her Spanish dancing teacher in a Greenwich Village nightclub.

Her mother made her costumes, as she performed through her teens. When she was 17, moviemaker Louis B. Mayer visited New York, and on the advice of a talent scout he signed Miss Moreno to her first contract.

It was the start of a stellar career. She has become a fixture in nightclubs, in film and on Broadway, winning the Academy Award for best supporting actress in 1961 for "West Side Story" and a Tony award for her role in "The Ritz" in 1975.

Now she lives in Los Angeles and New York with her husband of 20 years, Dr. Leonard Gordon, and their 19-year-old daughter, Fernanda Luisa.

Her mother lives in Miami, in retirement. And Miss Moreno says she often thinks about the life the two of them left behind in Humacao.

"I wonder where I would be and what I would be if I had stayed in Puerto Rico," she said.

'Freedom Fighters' find warm welcome

EDITOR'S NOTE — Immigration in the 1950s was dominated by the plight of Hungarians scrambling to freedom ahead of Soviet tanks. People from other Iron Curtain countries also sought a freer life in America.

"We were not hungry like the poor Ethiopians. We were not naked. We came to this country for freedom, because we had enough of the Soviet system."
— Robert Ratimorszky, a lawyer who fled Hungary in 1956.

By SHARON COHEN

CLEVELAND (AP) — They crawled to get here, hugging the cold, wet earth to slip under the ghostly light of flares Soviet soldiers sent up to illuminate the border and expose their flight.

Arrest, perhaps prison, awaited those unable to find refuge in the shadows. Still they came, more than 40,000 of them — Hungarians emboldened by a taste of democratic ideas fleeing Soviet tanks rolling in from the east to crush an uprising behind the Iron Curtain.

It was a still November night in 1956 when Robert Ratimorszky and his wife, Hilda, fled, carrying only a briefcase, their toothbrushes, a salami and a single piece of chocolate. The guide for 20 desperate people was a 12-year-old farm boy.

Ratimorszky remembers the fear that swept the group when a child cried. They could hear the voices of Soviet soldiers through the mist. He learned later some fleeing parents had drugged their children to keep them quiet.

"Everybody was scared," recalled Ratimorszky, 59. "We didn't think of turning back...No way. We took a chance. What can I say? Those days everybody took a chance."

It took four hours to reach the frontier and the Austrian church steeples, lighted as beacons for those who dared to flee. A month later, the couple reached the United States.

Millions have come to America to escape oppression. But the Ratimorszkys, and thousands of "56ers," as they came to be known, chose an especially opportune time to emigrate.

The virulently anti-communist McCarthy era and the pain of Korea were still fresh. The economy was booming. The Hungarians, especially "Freedom Fighters" who had taken up arms against the Soviets in the streets of Budapest, were embraced by America.

"We were received as heroes,' said the Rev. Tibor Domotor, bishop of the Free Hungarian Reformed Church based in Akron, Ohio, who crossed the border in 1956 with pistol in his hand.

In America, they received gifts of food and clothes, special tributes in churches, free language lessons, scholarships and trips to Capitol Hill.

"There was a euphoria over here," said Steven Bela Vardy, chairman of Pittsburgh's Duquesne University history department. "For them, it was a glorious period."

The 56ers, although perhaps the luckiest, were not the first Hungarians to come to the United States.

The biggest wave of Hungarian immigration lasted from 1870 to 1920 when about 850,000 people, mostly peasants, flowed into this country. Times were tough at home, and these Hungarians came to make money, then return.

Most found jobs in mills, mines, foundries and factories in the Northeast and Midwest — Cleveland, Chicago, New York, New Brunswick, N.J., Bridgeport, Conn., and the coal country around Pittsburgh.

Unlike most many of the 56ers were just out of high school, learned English quickly and readily adapted to American culture. Others were professionals — engineers and architects — whose skills had value in the growing United States.

Some got scholarships and ended up in college towns in the Midwest and West. Others found a temporary cushion in established Hungarian-American communities.

The twin gray towers of the nation's first Hungarian-speaking church for Roman Catholics, St. Elizabeth's, had cast their shadow over the Buckeye for more than 50 years when the Ratimorszkys arrived.

Ratimorszky had no illusions. Before they set out across the border, he'd asked his wife: "Are you prepared to wash dishes the rest of your life?"

But with help from other Hungarians, Ratimorszky got work as a market analyst; his wife joined an assembly line in a coffee factory.

She didn't know English. He'd studied it in Hungary and brushed up before fleeing by reading the Daily Worker.

She is now chief medical technician at Cleveland's Metropolitan General Hospital. He is a lawyer and says he's never regretted leaving Hungary.

'Golden door' slammed shut in 1930s

EDITOR'S NOTE — The 1930s proved to be the saddest chapter in American immigration history. As the Depression turned the land of opportunity into a dust bowl of despair, the legendary open door swung shut to thousands fleeing Nazi persecution.

"To this day, all I have to do is just think of her and I cry."
— Marga Blumenthal, who first saw the Statue of Liberty in 1938 from the deck of a ship bringing Jewish refugees from Nazi Germany to the United States.

By TAMARA JONES

NEW YORK (AP) — In her first years in America, 18-year-old Marga Stern would take a nickel from her housekeeping wages, hurry down to the tip of Manhattan and board the Staten Island Ferry every Thursday afternoon.

"To see the statue," she explained. "I didn't even get off the ferry. I just wanted to see the Statue of Liberty again.

"I guess I looked at her as my mother."

The first time she saw the statue was at dusk on Aug. 5, 1938, when she stood with other Jewish refugees on the crowded deck of the ship Deutschland as it entered New York Harbor.

Filled with hope and gratitude, Marga wept at the wonderful sight, and for months — every Thursday afternoon — she would again gaze at the statue with tear-filled eyes, thinking of the mother she left behind in Germany.

"My mother sent me a card saying, 'We're going away,' and I knew. I knew what that meant." A concentration camp. She never saw her parents again.

Life was hard but good to Marga Stern in the United States. She landed a job as a waitress at the Deluxe Diner in Paterson, N.J., earning $30 a month plus tips as she served 15-cent tuna sandwiches. She married the counterman, Paul Blumenthal, and raised two daughters.

Marga and Paul were lucky. By the time they arrived in America in the 1930s, the exalted "open door" was nearly closed, shutting out thousands of modern history's most desperate emigres.

The decade before, Congress had placed the first ceilings on the number of immigrants. These quotas, coupled with the bleak Depression economy, slowed the tide to a trickle by the 1930s, when immigration hit a 100-year low.

OF THE 699,375 foreigners allowed to immigrate in 1930-1939, about 17 percent — 119,107 — were German. An estimated 80 percent of those were Jewish.

For those who made it, America offered a certain familiarity. Centuries of German immigrants had already made a significant impact on American culture, tradition and history.

German immigrants, the first to publicly oppose slavery, suffered heavy casualties fighting the Civil War. They introduced America to the Christmas tree and many beloved carols. They gave us frankfurters, beer and Levi jeans.

Unlike the refugees who fled Hitler's Third Reich, early German settlers were lured by the promise of land, gold and religious freedom. They drifted away from urban areas, with large numbers going to Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

As a new state, Wisconsin had eagerly recruited pioneers, sending brochures to Germany extolling its opportunities. Letters from the first immigrants were also enticing.

Milwaukee became their metropolis, a German cultural mecca often referred to as the German Athens. In 1850, just four years after Milwaukee got its charter, more than one-third of the city's residents were of German ancestry.

According to local history, the Germans, in addition to founding major breweries, dominated the skilled trades. They organized orchestras and choral groups, dance troupes and drama ensembles.

"Almost the minute they got off the boat in the 1840s, they had a Beethoven string quartet and the first opera here," said former Milwaukee Mayor Frank Zeidel, who has extensively studied his state's German heritage.

INITIALLY making the treacherous journey across the Great Lakes by schooner and later coming by train across the frontier, the German immigrants settled in Wisconsin because the forested land reminded them of home.

Although they quickly assimilated and dispersed, the Germans formed a community that remains highly visible in Milwaukee through a German radio station and weekly newspapers and some 40 clubs and organizations ranging from choral groups to sports associations.

A summertime German Fest draws crowds to the shores of Lake Michigan to sample sausages and pretzels, watch Bavarian folk dances or trace their German roots.

The climate wasn't always so friendly.

When World War I broke out, "There was such a strong anti-German situation here that you didn't even dare speak German anymore," recalled Auguste Mueller, 87.

Hamburger was suddenly called Salisbury steak and sauerkraut became liberty cabbage on restaurant menus. Germans were vilified and often pressured into buying war bonds they didn't want or couldn't afford.

Names were Anglicized. Braun became Brown; Schmidt became Smith.

The cold shoulder was evident again in the 1930s. Isolationism, a fear that refugees would take jobs from Americans, and political suspicion made it difficult to immigrate.

REAMS OF documents were suddenly required to obtain a visa from U.S. consulates in Germany. For the desperate Jews, many papers, such as health certificates, were impossible to get from the Nazis. Immigration quotas went unfilled.

"Obstruction and red tape kept out at least 60,000 deserving others" from 1933 to 1940, according to Michael N. Dobkowski in his article, "Policies of Restrictionism."

They were no longer leaving Germany for the New World's land or gold. They were fleeing for their lives.

The Saturday Evening Post, then the nation's most popular publication with a weekly circulation around 3 million, ran editorials opposing immigration, calling Europe's emigres "a moral menace."

Writing in the magazine in April 1935 — two years after Hitler came to power — Martin Dies of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization said:

"What our country needs today is more so-called selfish patriotism and less fatuous internationalism, more devotion to the needs and problems of our own people and less sentimental and unappreciated concern for the affairs of other countries."

Some Germans did go home. In February 1939, The New York Times reported that 20 Milwaukee families had returned to Germany and 180 others were expected to follow soon under "a Nazi government campaign to recruit skilled workers for German industries."

Tragic though the circumstances, America was nonetheless enriched by the exiled Germans it sheltered, among them some of the world's leading artists and intellectuals — Thomas Mann, Albert Einstein, Bertolt Brecht, Hannah Arendt, Billy Wilder, Otto Preminger.

And an 18-year-old girl who no one really noticed as she sailed into New York Harbor with tears streaming down her cheeks.

Nearly 48 years have passed since Marga Stern Blumenthal first saw the Statue of Liberty.

"I still cry," she said.

Tailor's son makes living spinning tales

EDITOR'S NOTE — Joseph Francis Talese was a good tailor, but when he came to the United States he and his family were woven into the American fabric in ways he did not expect. Here, his writer son, Gay Talese, offers a family portrait.

Joseph Talese was born in 1903. He left Italy in 1919 for Paris; he spent a year there, apprenticing as a tailor under relatives, and as soon as he received a visa he set off, alone, from Cherbourg for the United States.

By JERRY SCHWARTZ

NEW YORK (AP) — Joseph Francis Talese grew up in Italy three miles from a town whose very name evoked America and its promise: Filadelfia.

When he was old enough, he set off for the New World and the City of Brotherly Love, where he might become wealthy by opening a tailor shop and teaching his son the family's traditional way with needle and thread.

Nothing happened quite the way he expected, but Talese can't complain. He has prospered in America and seen his son Gay become a famous writer.

Gay Talese is at work on a book that explores his family history in Maida, a town of 3,000 impoverished hill people in the toe of Italy's boot.

Talese said about 85 percent of America's Italian immigrants came from the south of Italy, spurred by disarray and destitution caused by the civil wars of the 19th century. The first great wave started in 1880 and crested in the years 1906 to 1915, when 2,025,093 Italians arrived.

For generations, the Taleses were tailors. There were exceptions — Talese's great-grandfather was a money-lender, a tyrannical man who was hated — but mostly, the Taleses were as poor as their fellow villagers.

Joseph Talese was born in 1903. He left Italy in 1919 for Paris; he spent a year there, apprenticing as a tailor under relatives, and as soon as he received a visa he set off, alone, from Cherbourg for the United States.

The boat arrived at Ellis Island, and Talese went directly to Philadelphia, where fellow immigrants from Maida had settled. "They were people who stuck with their own for a while," Talese said.

"My father thought he was going to strike gold as a tailor," he said. "He was misinformed."

The next year was difficult. He picked up some work at John Wanamaker's and Strawbridge & Clothier's stores in Philadelphia, but not enough, and the struggling immigrant developed an ulcer.

"He went to a doctor, and the doctor said, 'You should get some rest. Get on a train and go to Ocean City' " on the New Jersey shore, Gay Talese said.

He took his doctor's advice, but upon his arrival at the resort he saw a tailor's shop for sale. The proprietor was 75 and asthmatic, eager to leave the ocean dampness, so "he just gave my father the tailor's shop and told him to give him the money when he could," Talese said.

So he set down roots in Ocean City. He set up shop. He picked up a few dollars each week sending articles to an Italian-language newspaper in Philadelphia. He obtained his citizenship.

And at a wedding in New York, he met Catherine DePaulo, the daughter of two immigrants from Maida. They married in 1928.

His new wife, a former buyer for Abraham & Straus in New York, persuaded Talese to replace the tailor shop with a dress and fur shop. "He was dying as a tailor, anyway," his son said. "Who was going to buy tailor-made suits in Ocean City? This wasn't Newport, remember."

Joseph Talese embraced America. Eventually he became president of the Rotary Club, and fellow Rotarians helped him out with his son — first giving him a job writing for a weekly local newspaper, and then helping him gain entrance to the University of Alabama.

The store is still open, and Joseph and Catherine Talese still work there along with other members of the family. Gay Talese went on to work for The New York Times and Esquire, and has written "The Kingdom and the Power," "Honor Thy Father" and "Thy Neighbor's Wife."

He says his dad is patriotic and "far to the right of Reagan."

"He wants to go to the Statue of Liberty celebration," Talese said. "He wants to see it. I tell him, 'Go there in that madness. Sit in a boat in the middle of all that.' But he really wants to go."

Star's particles being tracked in mine

Marshak

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Thousands of feet below ground in an abandoned iron mine, scientists are tracking the paths of mysterious particles from a distant star believed to be so powerful they seem to defy the laws of physics.

"Either we're nuts, or there's something going on in the universe we're not familiar with," said Marvin Marshak, a University of Minnesota physicist who is coordinating the experiment.

Marshak said the particles are probably from Cygnus X-3, a double star in the constellation Cygnus, also known as the Swan, 37,000 light years from Earth.

Since 1981, scientists have collected evidence about the particles using a detector buried 1,950 feet deep in the Tower-Soudan mine in northern Minnesota. The detector, a 31-ton block of wires and tubes connected to a computer, measures 10 feet by 10 feet by 8 feet.

Marshak said the Earth filters out ordinary radiation and only high-energy particles reach the detector. The mystery particles, known as cygnets, are apparently neutral in charge, Marshak said, because they travel in a straight line and are not affected by the galaxy's magnetic fields.

However, no neutrally charged particles known to man are powerful enough to penetrate so deeply into the earth, he said.

When a particle from space enters the detector, a computer records its path and the time it took to pass through the block. A printout can then be made of particle's track.

"We can get a picture — not a photograph — of a track of a particle coming through this block," Marshak said.

The research may help prove the existence of a previously unknown form of matter, Marshak said.

Marshak's findings have not been verified by other scientists. But that has not prevented the U.S. and British governments from beginning construction of a larger, $15 million detector to replace Marshak's $500,000 model.

"The discovery of Marshak's is about the only thing around right now that challenges established ideas on the structure of particles," said Francis Halzen, a physicist at the University of Wisconsin.

"That's not a criticism; it's the ultimate compliment," Halzen said. "There is nothing in present physics, or the physics we can foresee, that can be used to explain this signal."

The new, more sensitive detector is being built about 2,300 feet deep in the Tower-Soudan mine, which was abandoned in 1963 by U.S. Steel. The 3,300-ton detector, which is about 100 times larger than the existing detector, is expected to be operating by 1989.

Physicists elsewhere have tried unsuccessfully to track the particles.

"It could be a statistical fluke," Jack Vander Velde, a professor at the University of Michigan who operates a detector 30 times the size of Marshak's in a salt mine 2,000 feet below Lake Erie.

"On the other hand, it could be something very unconventional that nobody else has found that eventually will be confirmed," Vander Velde said. "We take it seriously in that we are looking very hard to try to confirm this, but so far we haven't."

A detector in an automobile tunnel in the Alps near the French-Italian border has also been searching unsuccessfully for signs of the particles for about a year, Marshak said.

Marshak controls the computer by telephone, calling it several times a day to check the data. No one is stationed at the detector, which is about 200 miles north of Minneapolis in Tower-Soudan State Park.

Radiation reaching the mine appears to be in the form of subatomic particles called muons, Marshak said. The muons apparently result from the collision of other particles with Earth or its atmosphere, he said.

Many scientists think that Cygnus X-3 is a two-star system composed of a neutron star — a very small, dense star — orbiting a larger companion.

Marshak said the detection of muons in the mine follows a 4.79-hour cycle, which could correspond to the regular eclipsing of the neutron star by its companion.

Whatever the outcome and despite the $15 million price tag, Marshak says the research is worthwhile.

Diners can enjoy game of chance

CHICAGO (AP) — High-rolling diners who enjoy a deli sandwich and a game of chance are staking their bets on one of the city's newest eateries — Lox Vegas.

The restaurant, which opened this week, offers a deli menu with each item marked by a playing card.

At the end of the meal, a server shuffles a deck of cards and the customer picks one. If the card matches the dish, the customer gets a free meal.

RICHLAND CENTER, Wis. (AP) — Jim Heiar made history by buying two six-packs of beer.

He bought the beer one day early this week just minutes after booze became legal in this southwestern Wisconsin community for the first time in 53 years.

Richland Center residents voted nearly 2-1 in an April referendum to end the municipality's status as the last dry city in Wisconsin, ending a booze ban dating from 1933.

Reagan, de la Madrid to discuss drug-related issues

Meese

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government is planning another nationwide drug eradication program and may use the National Guard and other military personnel to help carry it out, Attorney General Edwin Meese said Thursday.

On a related matter, Meese said that a meeting is being planned between President Reagan and Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid, in part to clear the air over recent statements made in the U.S. about drug trafficking in Mexico.

In a televised hook-up with reporters in Mexico City, the U.S. attorney general was asked what this country is doing to take care of illegal marijuana crops. Meese referred to last year's operation Delta-9 marijuana eradication program, in which all states participated for the first time.

Meese went on to say that "we will be doing the same thing this year. We will have another major aerial program."

After the broadcast, Meese said that he would consider using National Guard troops and military personnel in the upcoming operation.

A spokesman for the Drug Enforcement Administration, Cornelius Dougherty, confirmed later that another 50-state program is in the works and would be carried out in the next six months. Dougherty said that "there has been consideration of the military taking part," primarily in a surveillance role and other support duties.

"I'm pretty sure the military is not going to be involved in any arrest, or hands-on type enforcement," added Dougherty.

Three months ago, Reagan issued a directive classifying the drug trade a national security threat, clearing the way for increased use of the military in the war on narcotics.

The National Guard has been involved in supporting anti-drug efforts since 1983, said Maj. John Smith of the National Guard Bureau in Washington.

The Guard participated in marijuana eradication efforts in Hawaii, has helped authorities identify marijuana fields and has used its radar planes to spot possible drug smugglers at sea off Georgia and Florida, said Smith. He added that the Air National Guard in Arizona has helped in the search for low-flying planes bearing drug shipments coming in from Mexico.

Last August, more than 2,000 law enforcement officers destroyed tens of millions marijuana plants in a nationwide sweep, accounting for most of the year's eradication total, according to the DEA. In fiscal 1985, more than 39 million marijuana plants were destroyed.

Meese also said on the hour-long satellite broadcast that "plans are being made" for a meeting "in the very near future" between Reagan and de la Madrid.

The U.S. attorney general disclosed the plans after a reporter asked whether a meeting might be useful to help overcome deteriorating relations caused by recent statements about drug trafficking in Mexico.

"I think this will be a very fine opportunity for the leaders of our countries to exchange their own views," said Meese, adding "I think it will help to clarify the relationship between our countries...Occasionally, like with any friends, there are going to be differences of opinion, but our friendship is strong enough to overcome."

John Gavin, the former U.S. ambassador to Mexico, told a Senate Foreign Relations Committee headed by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., that "at least two" Mexican governors are "up to their elbows in the drug trade."

During Thursday's broadcast, Meese repeatedly refused to confirm or deny that allegation and others about drug trafficking in Mexico, saying only that U.S. and Mexican law enforcement officials continue to cooperate closely.

Deadline delayed for agreement on Japanese trade dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration extended for the second time in a week the deadline for reaching agreement with Japan on a contentious trade dispute over computer memory chips.

The new deadline of July 26 was set Thursday after six days of intensive negotiations failed to nail down a pact. Such an accord would keep Japan from "dumping" low-cost micro-chips in this country while at the same time opening Japanese markets to U.S. semiconductor manufacturers.

To accommodate the new deadline, the Commerce Department temporarily suspended action on a case initiated by President Reagan, accusing Japanese manufacturers of dumping sophisticated memory chips in the United States at bargain-basement prices.

However, officials indicated that if no agreement is reached by July 26, the United States will move ahead toward a final decision on this and a variety of other unfair trade cases brought against Japan — cases that would likely lead to stiff penalty duties on future Japanse semiconductor imports.

At issue is a proposed "framework" agreement, negotiated last month in Tokyo by U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter and his Japanse counterpart, Michio Watanabe.

Under the agreement, Japan would agree to stop dumping computer chips in this country while vowing to open more Japanese markets to U.S. semiconductor sales. In exchange, the Commerce Department would dismiss the "dumping" and related cases now pending.

However, getting the general agreement into writing is proving extremely frustrating, according to U.S. officials.

"There has been some backing off by Japan on commitments that they made earlier," said an administration official close to the talks, who spoke only on the condition that he not be identified by name.

"The language Japan is willing to agree to is mushier than we thought it would be," the official said.

The source said one holdup is finding a mechanism for monitoring sales of U.S. microchips in Japan to make sure that U.S. sales are really increasing.

Another is wording of a section under which the Japanse would agree not to dump their products in other nations — particularly Hong Kong — that could then channel the products into the United States.

Memory chips are tiny wafers made of silicon which store data and which are the circuits that form the heart of computers and much other electronic equipment. The word semiconductor refers to the electrical properties of the silicon used in the chips.

It was the second time this week a dumping case against the Japanse had been suspended, and the deadline for talks extended.

Late Monday, the administration had set the midnight Wednesday deadline.

Without the temporary suspensions of the cases, the Commerce Department would have had no choice but to press the cases to conclusion and to issue a ruling within 30 days that could result in hefty penalty duties on future Japanese imports.

In a joint statement, the Commerce Department and the office of the U.S. Trade Representative said that, while much has been agreed to, "several unresolved significant issues remain."

Gary Holmes, a spokesman for Yeutter, said that no date had yet been set for a resumption of the negotiations. But he said the talks would probably begin again the week of July 14.

U.S. sales now account for only 8 percent of semiconductor sales, while Japanese-made chips in certain categories command well over half of the U.S. market.

U.S. semiconductor manufacturers have claimed that Japanese firms have flooded U.S. markets with low-cost chips, drastically undercutting their sales.

"Mutual concurrence on a large number of provisions has been reached sufficient to warrant the Department of Commerce initialing the proposed suspension agreements," the Thursday joint statement said.

The cases suspended involve sophisticated 256 kilobyte memory chips — the case initiated by the administration — and an industry-initiated investigation into so-called EPROM chips, which stands for Erasable Programmable Read Only Memory.

"There are also technical matters left open," the statement added. "If all these can be satisfactorily worked out by July 26, then the U.S. government will be able to sign the suspension agreements, thereby allowing them to take effect," the statement added.

Pope urges Columbians to reject class struggle

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Pope John Paul II stood in a park on the edge of a squalid sea of slums Thursday and urged throngs of Colombia's poor to reject violence and class struggle despite their crushing poverty.

"I speak of those who suffer the pain of seeing their children without enough to eat, to dress and to be educated," the pontiff said.

"You live in the confinement of one humble room, without elementary utilities. Your work is sometimes badly remunerated and uncertain. You are anguished about the insecurity of the future."

Colombia's minimum wage is equivalent to $85 a month.

"The solution to this problem is not easy," John Paul said in declaring that the Roman Catholic Church, while seeking justice for all, does not endorse "programmed class struggle, which leads to new forms of slavery."

His reference was to the Marxist ideology of guerrillas who seek to enroll farmers, workers and the poverty-stricken in their ranks.

The pontiff also spoke on the third day of a seven-day visit to Colombia of 15 percent unemployment in this South American country, the lack of land for peasants and the lure the city holds for them despite its "dehumanizing" conditions.

John Paul, 66, spent the morning praying at Chiquinquira, site of Colombia's holiest shrine, where the Virgin Mary is said to have leaped out of a painting in 1586 in a miracle recognized by the church.

He returned to the capital by helicopter in the afternoon to address the faithful in El Tunal park near the sprawl of shantytowns on the city's southern fringe known as Tugubrios, in which one-fifth of the Bogota's 6 million people live.

Children of slum dwellers presented the pontiff with a letter that described their life: mounds of garbage that cause epidemics, endless trudging to fetch water, frequent fires in the tarpaper shacks that cause disfiguring burns, fathers who must steal to feed their families.

The letter asked John Paul to intercede with the government for more assistance.

President Belisario Betancur was with the pope on the morning pilgrimage to Chiquinquira shrine.

Christians, Moslems unite in strike

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Christians and Moslems, who have been fighting each other in an 11-year-old civil war, united in a general strike Thursday against raging inflation that is destroying the remnants of their nation's economy.

The president of the General Confederation of Trade Unions, Antoine Bishara, said the main aim of the one-day strike was to "end the civil war in order to resolve the crisis of the loaf. The war is the cause of the economic crisis."

The business of violence continued:

— Police said a car packed with 440 pounds of TNT was found and defused at Beirut airport by Syrian military observers who have taken charge of the hijack-plagued facility.

— Gunmen who were not identified shot and seriously wounded a Christian officer of the Lebanese army in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley.

— The strike closed schools, shops, cafes, movie theaters, banks, courts, ports and airports throughout Lebanon.

Bishara's 100,000-member union organized it as an "anti-famine strike" against inflation the government estimates at 20 percent a month and an economic crisis that has seen the Lebanese currency, once the strongest in the Middle East, decline in value by 700 percent in two years.

All six government and privately owned radio stations in Beirut went off the air for 20 minutes in solidarity, and state-run television stations declared a 24-hour shutdown. Beirut newspapers said they were canceling today's editions.

"Let us all rally together in this strike for the loaf," said Telecommunications Minister Joseph Hashem, a Christian.

"All Lebanon has joined hands against the war of starvation and inflation," said Mohammed Baalbaki, a Moslem who is chairman of Lebanon's press association.

"We fully support the strike and the call to end the war. If the war does not end there will be no solution to our economic problems," said Abu Adel, a middle-aged Moslem grocer in west Beirut.

Light of the world

She has stood proudly over New York Harbor for a hundred years, this lady with the torch.

Her proper name is uncompromisingly simple and explanatory — Liberty Enlightening the World.

She is a beacon. A sentinel. A symbol for eternity.

Down through the years, she has watched this nation grow, develop, and change. She has witnessed the joys and sorrows of her people. She wept when her children died on foreign shores for the maintenance of her spirit. And, always, she held high her torch to light the way.

Now the nation stands in awe as this proud lady is rededicated for the next 100 years. The challenges will be many. The concept of liberty has not been tested as it will be in coming decades.

There are voices that counsel a need for this nation to change the concept of liberty this lady has held out to the people of the world for a hundred years. How could that be done without destroying the fabric of the society Lady Liberty has symbolized for so long?

The voices say change is necessary in order to survive. But wouldn't that change mean an alteration of the meaning of liberty? In dedicating the Statue for the next 100 years, the proper words to use can't be improved upon. They are the words written by poet Emma Lazarus and inscribed on a tablet at the Statue in 1903:

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
With conquering limbs astride from land to land;
Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand
A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame
Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
Mother of Exiles. From her beacon-hand
Glows world-wide welcome; her mild eyes command
The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
"Keep ancient lands, your storied pomp!" cries she
With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore.
Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me,
I lift my lamp beside the golden door!

Shine your light to future generations, Lady Liberty. Enlighten the world.

Miss Liberty's 'glitz'

New York's word of the week might easily have been Ugh, as in "Ugh, I can't stand all the hype and commercialism about the Statue of Liberty," or "Ugh, let's get out of town and leave the hoopla to the tourists." Nor are such sentiments limited to New York. "Get ready," The New Republic advises, "for the most revolting display of glitz in this country's history."

Not so fast there, puritans. Think back a bit, New Republic.

There will, for sure, be glitz. What else does one call a contest for women who look like Miss Liberty and an entertainment that includes 200 men who look like Elvis Presley? How else does one describe thousands of foam crowns, hundreds of Liberty shower curtains and dozens of Statue of Liberty pasta earrings? This week brings the very apotheosis of glitz: medals, coins, choirs, spotlights, doves, balloons, square-riggers, cannons, celebrities. No wonder people contemplate spending $35,000 for four days' rent on an apt, Lib Vu.

Glitz yes, but is it the most revolting in history? Recall, please, the Bicentennial, just 10 years ago. The glitz then spangled the whole country, not just New York. And it turned out not to be revolting at all. Think back to the Spirit of '76 that suffused New York when July 4 finally rolled around. Commercialized push turned not to shove but to warmth; New York turned into the Little Apple, a haven of small-town hospitality.

All the ughs about Statue commercialism are understandable; hype is all there's been to talk about so far. But now the events themselves are at hand; there will be plenty to talk about. As the millions of visitors arrive, there's good reason to believe that, as in 1976, the cynicism will pass quickly — for there are two things to celebrate.

One is the very carnival atmosphere that has so far seemed so repellent. Yet a corny, carny clamor is every bit as American as signs that point the way to the egress. The Statue's 100th birthday is a time for marches, not madrigals. New York knows that, and the mayor and his people have labored for months on logistics, from toilets to terrorism, from checking the pilings under the piers to setting up a campground at Flushing Meadow.

Second, this circus celebrates something noble. The Bicentennial marked the nation's birthday. This event marks the birthday of an idea that transcends nations. There's no mystery in why people are buying Statue torches or are coming to New York for the weekend. They come to honor, even to worship the idea that no matter how brutal, primitive or distant your origins, here, in the light of her lamp, you can make it, more or less on your own wit and work, more or less on the merits.

This will be a week in which New Yorkers, their habits honed into efficiency, will be tested by visitors who don't know, before blocking the bus, that they need exact change. This will be a week in which visitors used to good citizenship will be astonished by signs that say, "Don't Even Think of Parking Here." But it will also be a week when natives and visitors join hands, and Americans and foreigners join hearts, to celebrate the spirit of '86, the Spirit of '76 and the future of Liberty around the globe.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, July 4, the 185th day of 1986. There are 180 days left in the year. This is Independence Day.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 4, 1776, the Continental Congress adopted the Declaration of Independence. "We hold these Truths to be self-evident," said the document, "that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness."

On this date:

In 1802, the United States Military Academy officially opened at West Point, N.Y.

In 1826, the second and third presidents of the United States, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, both died, 50 years after the Declaration of Independence was adopted.

Ruling guarantees 'Happy Birthday'!

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court handed down a landmark decision last week directing federal judges to throw out many frivolous libel suits before they go to trial.

Jack Anderson

The decision will save publishers and broadcasters millions of dollars in legal expenses, as potential plaintiffs think twice about filing suit in the heat of wounded pride. It will also thwart the more sinister elements that use libel suits or the threat of them to harass and intimidate the press.

But the ultimate winners are the American people, which is why the Supreme Court decision is a perfect gift to the nation in time for its 210th birthday party.

Once again, editors concerned about corruption, wrongdoing and general chicanery by public officials and figures will be able to print the sordid, embarrassing truth without fear of a libel suit that could bankrupt them even if they eventually win.

No longer will reporters and editors have to self-censor their investigative efforts to avoid trouble. The public will be better served now that the court has taken off our handcuffs.

We're pleased that we were directly involved in this significant victory for the press and the public. The decision last week came on a libel suit against us by the Liberty Lobby and its founder, Willis Carto. The Supreme Court ruled that a public figure plaintiff is not entitled to a trial unless he presents "clear and convincing evidence" that the defendants knowingly or recklessly published falsehoods about him.

Our attorney, David J. Branson of Kaye, Scholer, Fierman, Hays and Handler, said: "Jack Anderson acted courageously in telling his readers about the anti-Semitic, neo-Nazi, racist and fascist nature of the Liberty Lobby, and I'm delighted that the Supreme Court so strongly stated its rule to protect the press when it takes such stands."

Gratified as we are by the outcome of this case and its portent for the future, we are realistic enough to recognize that the decision will not discourage the most virulent opponents of a free press. To some groups and individuals, money is no consideration. These well-heeled litigants will continue to harass broadcasters and publishers who dare to cross them, for a suit that is thrown out before trial can still involve serious expenses for the media.

Indeed, even the big boys will feel the pinch of libel suits they win in the relatively early stages. CBS, for example, spent an average of $100,000 a month in the preliminary — that is, pre-trial — rounds of Gen. William Westmoreland's 1983 suit against the network. If the case had been thrown out under the new Supreme Court rule, the costs would still have been enormous.

But the court has at least reversed the trend toward frivolous litigation that was threatening to bankrupt the courageous members of the press and muzzle the rest.

We consider it a grand Fourth of July salute. • • •

LIBERTY, NOT LICENSE: The U.S. Postal Service has accused a Hollywood, Fla., company with mail fraud for falsely advertising its gold and silver Liberty trinkets as if they were official U.S. coins. The U.S. Mint did produce Statue of Liberty commemorative coins, but the $175 proof sets were sold out last December.

In its complaint, the postal service says the Federal Mint Corp. falsely claims to be affiliated with the government, falsely claims its coins are legal tender, falsely claims to be the official minter of Liberty commemorative coins and falsely states that the government limited the number of proof sets to 25,000.

Newspaper ads pictured the spurious Liberty coin between two authentic commemoratives, and stated: "New issue direct from mint ... 1986-D series Statue of Liberty gold and silver proof set." The price for the unofficial sets is $345; the ads say the price will increase to $575 after July 4.

Federal Mint Corp. could not be reached for comment.

EVANS & NOVAK

Colonel's silence raising concerns in U.S.

WASHINGTON — A private letter to President Reagan from a leading Polish-American organization sharply criticizing administration policy toward Poland has gone unanswered, raising fears among Republican politicians that the 10-million-strong ethnic Polish community could react against Republican candidates in the November elections.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The Polish-American Congress demands a response to this question: Why has the Reagan administration kept the Polish defector, Col. Wladyslaw Kuklinksi, under wraps in the face of charges by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, the Polish strongman, that he tipped off the U.S. to details of the December 1981 martial law before defecting?

The organization's letter reflects rising anger within this country's politically-potent Polish community over the administration's passive policy toward Poland. It shows that Jaruzelski's anti-American crusade, in stark contrast to his new love affair with Soviet ruler Mikhail Gorbachev, has drawn blood here. Written by Polish American Congress president Aloysius Mazewski, the letter was strongly encouraged by leading Polish-American politicians.

Actually, the June 10 letter was aimed less at the president than at Secretary of State George Shultz. It ridiculed Jaruzelski's claim that Kuklinski's November 1981 warning of impending martial law was kept secret here because the U.S. wanted to provoke civil war when the crackdown came (it came six months later). But it also criticized the bland way in which the State Department rejected the Polish dictator's accusations.

Instead of blandness, the Polish-Americans want truth and clarity. Why has Col. Kuklinski, now living with his family in the U.S. under heavy protection, not been allowed to face the news media and tell his story about events leading up to the fateful imposition of martial law? Why did the administration fail to warn leaders of the now outlawed Solidarity movement? Why were U.S. allies in Europe not told full details about Soviet connivance so they could take "direct retaliatory measures" against Moscow, instead of against Poland.

Kuklinski was Jaruzelski's principal go-between with Soviet Marshall Victor Kulikov, the then-Warsaw Pact commander who was calling all the shots in preparing for martial law. Kuklinski knew everything there was to know. He was so sickened by Jaruzelski's prostration before Kulikov that he risked his life to warn the U.S.

Critics charge that the administration's passive policy toward Poland stems not from any careful policy formulation about the only Eastern European Soviet satellite that contains a true underground revolutionary movement. Rather, they see Shultz's policy imperative today and in the months ahead as targeted strictly on the U.S.-Soviet relationship, fed by his hope for a breakthrough in arms control.

In short, the Shultz-led administration is ignoring Poland and Solidarity as irrelevant when weighed against a post-election U.S.-Soviet summit here. That is what so angers the Polish-American community.

If Kuklinski were permitted by the administration to tell the full story of how Moscow manipulated the brutal destruction of Solidarity from outside — avoiding the visible stigma of direct intervention — the political impact could well affect U.S.-Soviet relations. It could also trigger an irate response from voters.

The Polish American Congress has had particularly cordial relations with the Reagan White House until recently. In the few times that it has raised private questions with the president, satisfactory answers have been quickly received.

But trouble was brewing even before the Jaruzelski regime made its sensational charges last month that the U.S. had deliberately covered up Kuklinski's information about martial law. Repeated provocations by Jaruzelski, seemingly designed to provoke the U.S. or make it appear weak, have gone unanswered by the Reagan administration. They include deliberate signals by Warsaw that Solidarity founder Lech Walensa may himself be put in jail soon.

These grievances came to a boil in Philadelphia last week at a routine meeting of leaders of the ethnic organization. They adopted a resolution (not to be made public for 10 days) charging that the absence of administration policy at a time when Jaruzelski is moving toward final obliteration of Solidarity plays directly into his hands. Among other proposals, the resolution asks Reagan to exempt Radio Free Europe from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings spending ceilings.

But viewed as far more important is the surfacing of the Polish colonel who risked his life to tell the U.S. how tight the linkage really was between Warsaw and Moscow in the days leading up to martial law. The impact of frank talk from him in a public forum might introduce a new realism that seems sadly lacking as George Shultz rushes headlong toward another Soviet summit.

CHARLEY REESE

Instant communications altered media role

Can America survive in the present world? To answer this, you also have to consider the question, "Can we still form a consensus in an age of mass and instant communications?"

Charley Reese

A free country always operates at a disadvantage in a contest against a totalitarian country. The totalitarian nation, unhindered by free elections and dissent, can far more easily make long-range plans and carry them out.

Whatever the Soviet Union wishes to spend on armaments, for example, it spends and it doesn't have to argue with anybody about it. If it wishes to invade Afghanistan, it invades and if it wishes to stay there, killing Afghans, it stays there. There is no anti-war movement in the Soviet Union — no peace movement — no disarmament lobby — no critical press — no opposition party. The pitifully few individual dissidents are easily controlled or crushed as the government chooses.

A free country, however, must always seek a consensus on major policy questions. A consensus does not mean, of course, that everyone agrees. It means only that a majority agree. We have a Social Security system because we have a consensus on this issue — a majority agrees that we ought to have one. On some issues it is easy to form a consensus — on some, it is not. There is as yet, for example, no consensus that we ought to fund Nicaraguan rebels trying to overthrow the Sandinista government.

But, to complicate matters, a free government must not only be able to form a consensus, it must maintain one on matters which cannot be quickly resolved. The American retreat from Vietnam was the result of the government forming a consensus but then losing it.

The problem is most acute in the area of foreign policy because foreign policy issues are rarely resolved quickly. The Council on Foreign Relations, which has long been a bugaboo of the far right, was formed precisely to cope with this problem. What the Council on Foreign Relations attempts to do is form a consensus on foreign policy questions. It has, because it is a creature of the establishment, been largely successful in the past, but, since the 1960s, less so.

The media plays a key role in consensus forming because it is the primary gatekeeper of information. Few citizens in a nation as large as ours have direct sources of information. They necessarily rely on the press and television.

This imposes on those of us in journalism, a private and commercial occupation, a tremendous burden of a quasi-governmental nature. We have no legal obligation to do anything but sell our products. On the other hand, as a practical matter, if we fail to provide a fair, accurate and balanced account of facts and opinions on public matters, then it becomes impossible for the citizens to exercise their functions as citizens. Worse, we have it in our power, by manipulating the flow of information, to manipulate citizens. We can, to some extent, set the public agenda by choosing which issues to publicize and which to ignore.

Both Alexander Solzhenitsyn and Lev Navrosov, two Soviet dissidents now living here, have expressed public dismay at what Solzhenitsyn calls a censorship by fad and fashion more thorough than the government censorship in the communist countries. I think there is some validity to that criticism. Journalists have a remarkable tendency to be conformists and to quickly form consensuses within their own ranks about issues and people.

The problem is less a conscious effort to manipulate the public than it is an unconsciousness of the awesome responsibility that modern circumstances have imposed on us. We started out wishing only to be just good journalists. Mass audiences, advances in communications technology, concentration of media outlets, growing sophistication of propagandists, and the increasing complexity of events and issues we report, have given us a power to influence events most of us never wanted and are reluctant and ill-equipped to wield.

Thunderstorms in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Today will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thundershowers.

The high is expected to reach into the mid 90s and winds will be gusting from the south at 15-25 mph.

Tonight, there is only a 20 percent chance of rain upsetting the fireworks displays and the low should be in the low 70s.

The record high for the Fourth of July here occurred in 1983 when it reached 106. The low was 14 years ago in 1972 when it reached a mere 60.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms, triggered by a weak frontal boundary extending from east to west across the state, developed across the northern half of the state Thursday with flash flood watches posted for the eastern South Plains.

Winds ranged from 5 mph to 15 mph from the south to southwest except for light northerly winds across parts of North Texas.

Particularly hard hit by thunderstorms Thursday evening were Hill, Bosque, Limestone and northern McLennan counties. The storms were characterized by heavy rains and were capable of producing strong gusty winds, the weather service said.

The forecast called for a flash flood watch in the eastern south plains, partly cloudy to mostly cloudy skies through Friday with a chance of scattered showers and thunderstorms.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms extended from central Texas into southern Louisiana and over much of the Florida peninsula on Thursday.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered across the northern Rockies and New England. Thunderstorms were widely scattered from western South Dakota across the southern and central Rockies.

Today's forecast called for showers and thundershowers from the northern Pacific Coast into the Dakotas. Scattered, mostly afternoon and evening thunderstorms should occur over the upper Great Lakes, the southern and central Rockies, and southern and central Florida. Rainshowers should be scattered across northern New England.

Extended forecast

West Texas: Sunday through Tuesday, widely scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms. Near normal temperatures. Permian Basin lows near 70. Highs in the upper 80s to low 90s. Concho Valley lows in the mid-70s. Highs in the mid-90s. Big Bend lows from the mid-60s mountains to the mid-70s lowlands. Highs near 90 mountains to around 103 lowlands. Far west lows in the low 70s, highs in the low to mid-90s.

Mandlikova grounds Evert Lloyd

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Hana Mandlikova, duplicating her U.S. Open feat, upset Chris Evert Lloyd 7-6, 7-5 Thursday to move into the women's championship match at Wimbledon against top-seeded Martina Navratilova.

Navratilova, who is seeking a record fifth consecutive title and her seventh overall at the All England Club, crushed Argentina's Gabriela Sabatini 6-2, 6-2 in the day's first semifinal.

"It's my seventh final and I'm really excited," Navratilova said. "I'm excited because I think I'm playing well, I'm moving better than I have in a long time and I'm serving better than I have in a very long time."

WHERE Navratilova took just 53 minutes to beat her 16-year-old rival, Mandlikova needed one hour, 38 minutes to post her first grass-court victory over the 31-year-old Lloyd, who was playing in her 14th Wimbledon semifinal.

"I've never beaten Chris on grass, not even a set," Mandlikova said. "I've always felt this is my surface, although I didn't grow up on it. But everytime against Chris, she beat me easily."

The men's semifinals will be played today with top-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia facing Slobodan Zivojinoic of Yugoslavia and defending champion Boris Becker of West Germany taking on Henri Leconte of France.

Mandlikova is seeded No. 3 and that is where she always seems to be mentioned when top women's tennis players are discussed — always behind Navratilova and Lloyd.

But on Thursday, the Czechoslovak displayed all of her talent against No. 2 Lloyd, serving seven aces, working her way deliberately to the net for point-ending volleys, and accenting the end of some rallies with explosive smashes.

"She served unbelievable," Lloyd said of Mandlikova, who went on to defeat Navratilova last September for the U.S. Open crown. "When I thought she was going to serve down the T, it was wide. And when I thought it would be wide, it was down the T. She overpowered me."

IF THERE was a hint of doubt about the outcome of the Mandlikova-Lloyd contest, the only question about the Navratilova-Sabatini match was how long it would take. The world's No. 1 player kept it under an hour by completely dominating every facet of the game.

Sabatini won only 10 points on Navratilova's service in the entire match, and that includes the sixth game in the second set when the Argentine right-hander broke Navratilova's serve. But the service break came with Navratilova up 4-1, and she immediately broke back, then wrapped up the match by holding at 15.

"I've lost my serve four times in six matches here," Navratilova said. "That's pretty good."

Asked about her easy roll into the final — she has yet to lose a set — the American left-hander said:

"People are quick to jump to conclusions. If I believed all the critics, I would have quit playing tennis a long time ago. At the same time, if I believed all the praise, I wouldn't be talking to you. I'd be too good."

In the other, more exciting match, at the beginning of each set, it was typical Lloyd — who has won 148 tournaments in her career, more than any other player, man or woman; and who who has been a Wimbledon finalist 10 times.

She broke Mandlikova to begin the match, then held to grab a 2-0 lead.

But Mandlikova won 15 of the next 16 points, and the two were all even.

They traded service breaks in the seventh and eighth games before battling into a tiebreak. The Czechoslovak, continually forcing the action and making Lloyd play defensively, rolled to a 4-1 lead, then wrapped up the tiebreak 7-5.

SHE CLOSED it out with a big serve, hit a smash off the return, then volleyed into the open court when Lloyd kept the rally going.

In the second set, Lloyd captured the first three games, breaking Mandlikova's service in the second. And the American, who has won Wimbledon three times, increased her margin to 5-2, seemingly ready to tie the match at one set apiece.

It was not to be on this sunny day.

Mandlikova reeled off the next 14 points and 16 of 18, breaking Lloyd in the ninth and 11th games to take a 6-5 lead.

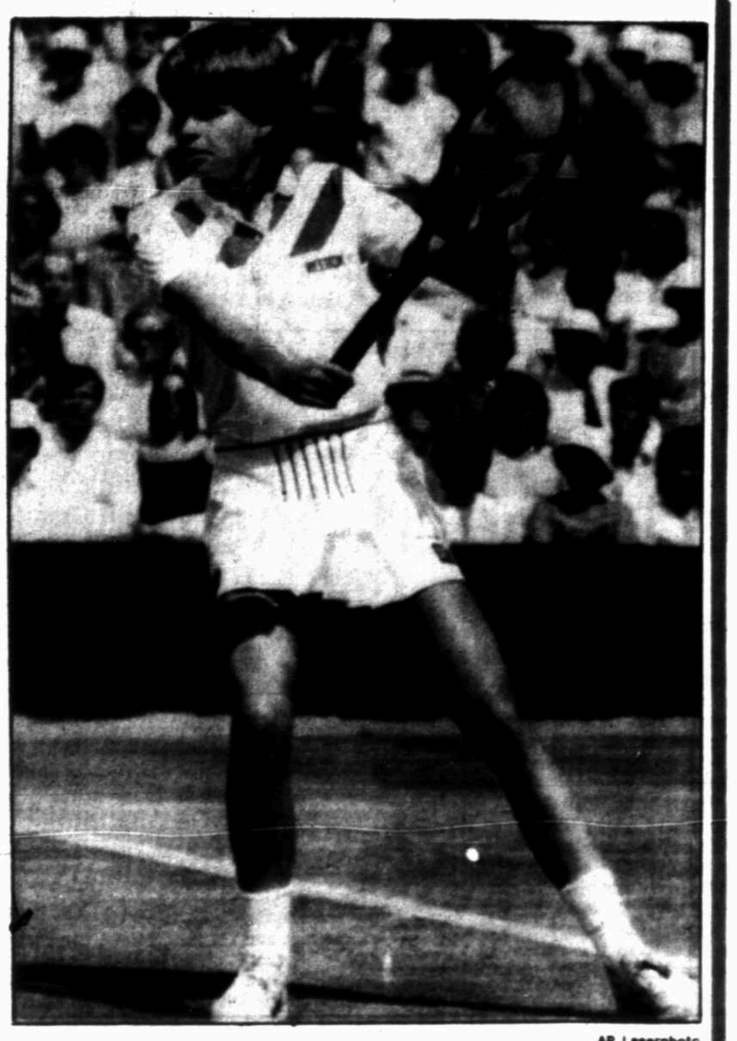

"I just couldn't reach deep down," Lloyd said. "I tried."

In the fourth round, Lloyd had a tough match before beating Kathy Jordan 7-5, 6-2. In the quarterfinals Tuesday, she needed thre sets and a tiebreaker to beat Helena Sukova 7-6, 4-6, 6-4.

"The shots that I hit against Sukova and Jordan just weren't there when I needed them on pressure points," she said. "I have to give Hana a lot of credit. It's obvious that she played very sharp and real smart, aggressive tennis against me."

"Chris had a very difficult last two matches, and I think she was tired," Mandlikova said.

With Lloyd unable to raise the level of her game, Mandlikova kept applying the pressure until it was her turn to serve — this time for the match.

Jackson urges war on drugs during funeral

SACRAMENTO (AP) — America must declare "war on a plague of drug abuse," the Rev. Jesse Jackson told more than 2,000 mourners Thursday at the funeral of football star and cocaine victim Don Rogers.

"Pushers are terrorists and death messengers," Jackson said, after leading the friends and teammates of the Cleveland Browns defensive back in a standing ovation honoring Rogers' memory.

"Passing out a little 'snow' (cocaine) must become as unacceptable as passing out little ropes or little sheets," he said, labeling drug peddlers as dangerous as the Ku Klux Klan.

"The KKK as the shadow of death, and the rope, have never killed as many young people as the pusher of dope," Jackson said.

JACKSON, IN a 15-minute address, also called drugs "the hound of hell for this generation," adding that "today we declare a state of emergency. The living of our generation has been summoned to declare war on a plague..."

The mourners were gathered at Arco Arena, the home court of the the Sacramento Kings of the NBA.

Rogers' body, dressed in blue suit and red tie and placed in a lace-draped open casket, was viewed by hundreds of mourners who moved slowly by in single file. Chairs for members of the immediate family and close friends were located near the casket.

The line of mourners reached silently out the door and around the arena.

Rogers died June 27, the day following a bachelor's party at a hotel suite. His death, which medical investigators said was caused by cocaine poisoning, occurred the day before his planned marriage to his college sweetheart.

"All the guys I talked to are in a state of disbelief," said Karl Morgan, 25, a nose guard for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, who played with Rogers at UCLA. "I just think of all the hard hits ... and all the hard hits."

One local resident said he came to the funeral out of respect for Rogers and his family. "My son Derrick and Don (Rogers) played high school football together," Oscar Williams, 57, said. "Don was a nice young man and a great athlete. I know the other children, too, and they're good kids ... I can't say antything bad about them."

Several resolutions praising Rogers were read at the services, including one from Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, one from the Sacramento City Council and two from local school districts.

More than two dozen uniformed officers provided security at the arena, located near the North Sacramento neighborhood where Rogers grew up.

The open-casket memorial service at a sports arena included speeches by Jackson, a contender for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1984; the Rev. Eugene Washington, a friend of Rogers; and Steve Arnold, Rogers' agent.

Carlton becomes a Giant

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Four-time Cy Young award-winner Steve Carlton has signed to pitch with the San Francisco Giants, club president Al Rosen said Thursday night.

Carlton, released June 26 by the Philadelphia Phillies, will pitch Sunday for the Giants against St. Louis.

Carlton, 42, was 4-8 in 16 starts for the Phillies this year. His last outing was June 21 against St. Louis at Veterans Stadium in Philadelphia.

Rosen said he signed the left-hander to a contract running through the remainder of the 1986 season.

Carlton is second on the all-time strikeout list with 3,982, trailing only Nolan Ryan of the Houston Astros. He has a record of 318 victories and 223 defeats in 499 games over a 21-year career.

He won the National League Cy Young award in 1972, 1977, 1980 and 1982, more than any other pitcher. He has been named to 10 NL All-Star teams and appeared in five league championship series and four World Series.

Following the surprise announcement at Candlestick Park before Thursday night's Cardinals-Giants game, Manager Roger Craig said Carlton's start on Sunday hinges on how the pitcher feels when he arrives in San Francisco Friday and works out.

Carlton is currently in St. Louis.

Rosen said at a news conference that the deal was consummated on Thursday after Carlton's agent called.

Rangers have new owners

Gaylord Broadcasting to take over

ARLINGTON (AP) — Oil operator Eddie Chiles has agreed to sell his controlling interest in the Texas Rangers to Gaylord Broadcasting Company of Dallas, the American League team announced Thursday.

Gaylord acquired one third of the stock in the Rangers as well as broadcasting rights in February 1985. It also had first refusal to buy Chiles' share if the oilman decided to sell.

The purchase price for the two-thirds interest owned by Chiles was not disclosed. "It is a private matter," said Chiles, whose oil drilling business has fallen on hard times.

The sale was contingent on approval of the 26 Major League owners. The requirement includes a three-fourths approval of the AL owners and a majority approval of the 12 National League owners.

"The transition in ownership is both a happy and sad occasion for me personally," Chiles said. "I am happy that controlling interest of the franchise is being transferred to existing partners, the Gaylord Broadcasting Company, who are familiar with the commitments and direction which are beginning to produce winning results."

William S. Banowsky, president of Gaylord Broadcasting, will become chairman of the franchise.

Chiles, head of Western Co. of North America, a Fort Worth-based oil drilling company, sold the one-third interest in the Rangers and all the club's local television rights to Gaylord about two years ago for $20 million.

Gaylord's television station in Fort Worth, KTVT, which is carried by many regional cable TV systems, has telecast Rangers' road games for the past two seasons.

Edward L. Gaylord, the principal owner of the Oklahoma Publishing Co., has a variety of interests, including The Daily Oklahoman of Oklahoma City, a television production company and the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville, Tenn.

Recently, Chiles' drilling company has been forced to restructure and reschedule debt payments as the result of the collapse of world oil prices. However, Chiles said earlier this year that the problems facing Western Co. were unrelated to Ranger operations.

"It takes somebody with more financial strength than I have to operate a baseball team," Chiles said. "I could have gone farther if the energy industry hadn't collapsed and hurt many people. You need a strong financial company to keep the money flowing. I could do that at first, but the collapse robbed me of any opportunity to continue that. So I gave the Rangers to a company that can."

In addition to the Major League owners, who meet in Houston July 15, the Rangers sale must be approved by Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth.

Banowsky said he had talked to Ueberroth earlier and as a result felt confident that the sale would be approved.

Banowsky noted that one objection to big broadcasting companies acquiring majority interests in baseball was that they could use profits to inflate player salaries.

"But we feel salaries have gotten out of hand in the major leagues," said Banowsky.

Under the sale proposal, limited partners would own less than 10 percent of the Rangers, and Gaylord more than 90 percent.

There will be no management or personnel changes, Banowsky said.

Chiles will hold the title of vice chairman and continue to serve on the five-member board until the end of the season and will be chairman emeritus, Banowsky said.

'Goodwill' already under attack

MOSCOW (AP) — The Goodwill Games, the first multisport competition between the United States and the Soviet Union in a decade, suffered a setback the day before they were to begin when the Defense Department barred military personnel from participating on the U.S. boxing team Thursday.

In Washington, a Pentagon official who asked not to be identified said Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger made the decision Wednesday to bar 10 active-duty servicemen and one Defense Department civilian employee from making the trip.

"The secretary believed he couldn't approve participation in the Games because of serious questions and uncertainties that he had," said the official.

"Among those concerns were the manner in which the event was organized, who was going to participate, events surrounding the games and the way they would be presented. There was also a concern that Department of Defense personnel as participants might be subject to exploitation for political purposes."

Col. Marvin Braman, a Pentagon spokesman, said Defense Department regulations governing international sporting events are quite specific, authorizing military personnel to participate in only the Olympics and Pan Am Games. All other contests require special review and approval, Braman said.

"Defense Department regulations prohibit military or civilian employees from participating in any activity determined to be political in nature or intended to benefit selectively or profit any agency or commercial conern," Braman added.

The Pentagon source denied that Weinberger's decision had been delayed until the last minute, saying the "majority" of the requests by the 11 servicemen were not received until the last week of June.

"Uniformed members of the armed forces serve as representatives of the American people," this official said. "We owe it to the American people to hold our service members to the highest standards. As we have indicated, we had serious concerns and uncertainties about this event."

The source refused to respond when asked how the decision squared with efforts to improve relations with the Soviet Union through more cultural and athletic exchanges.

The 11, including nine soldiers and a Marine and one civilian naval employee, were part of 36-man contingent that was scheduled to leave Saturday for Moscow, said Leslie King, a spokeswoman for the United States Amateur Boxing Federation.

At least one other member of the U.S. contingent, pentathlete Captain Mike Burley, is a serviceman. A defense department spokesman said as far as he knew "no other request" to go Moscow was made.

"If he requests to go, he will be affected just like anyone else," said Capt. Jay Farrar.

Ted Turner, owner of Turner Broadcasting Systems, who is sponsoring the Games with the Soviets, has said the easing of East-West tensions was the main idea of the Games.

The two superpowers did not compete against each other in the 1980 Moscow Games because of a U.S. boycott and the Soviets then boycotted the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics. Their last multisport meeting was at the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

"For world peace, it's going to take a whole lot of people, not just one," Turner said Thursday in his $7 million television studio equipped by the Soviets especially for the Games.

"To measure the impact of the Games, we're going to have to wait and see," said Turner, who also owns baseball's Atlanta Braves and the NBA's Atlanta Hawks. "It may take a month or two, before we get its perspective in history.

"This is something different. U.S. and Soviet athletes haven't been together on such a large scale in a long time.

"Not only television (TBS will televise 129 hours) but journalists will determine the impact."

The 47-year-old Turner expects to lose about $10 million on the Games. But he hopes to recoup in 1990, when the competition will be held in Seattle.

Turner has said he is not sponsoring the Games for profit and glory.

"If this leads — and this is a dream — to better relations of the countries and to peace, along with the abandonment of nuclear weapons, this will be a big step forward," he said.

The Americans will be here in full force, their total of about 400 athletes representing the largest visiting delegation among the total of approximately 3,500 athletes, including Soviets. More than 50 nations are scheduled to participate.

STAT

New York Mets catcher Gary Carter has hit 11 sacrifice flies this season, a club record. Brooklyn's Gil Hodges set a major-league record when he hit 19 sac flies in 1954.

STREAKS

The Toronto Blue Jays broke Roger Clemens' 14-game winning streak from the start of the season with a 4-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox Wednesday night and also broke an eight-game losing streak at Fenway Park. Clemens was seeking to tie the AL mark of 15 set by Cleveland's Johnny Allen in 1937 and Baltimore's Dave McNally in 1969. Rube Marquard set the major-league record of 19 with the New York Giants in 1912.

SWINGS

The St. Louis Cardinals have been shut out eight times this season, matching their total for the entire 1985 season. The Cards have also been swept six times at home this season.

Clemens' win streak ended, but reputation grows

BOSTON (AP) — Roger Clemens of the Red Sox lost none of his reputation when he suffered his first loss of the season.

"I don't think there's a better pitcher in baseball right now," said Toronto's Rance Mulliniks, who keyed the end of Clemens' 14-game winning streak Wednesday night. "The guy has been phenomenal. He's well on his way to at least 25 wins."

Held to one hit — George Bell's solo homer with two out in the fourth — for seven innings, the Blue Jays scored three runs in the eighth for a 4-2 victory over Boston.

That ended the fifth longest streak by a pitcher at the start of a season. Clemens fell one shy of the American League of 15-0 set by Cleveland's Johnny Allen in 1937 and equalled by Baltimore's Dave McNally in 1969. The major league record is 19-0 set by Rube Marquard of the New York Giants in 1912. Elroy Face of Pittsburgh went 17-0 as a reliever in 1959.

Clemens, who set a major league record by striking out 20 in a game with Seattle April 23, took the defeat with his head high.

"Nobody wants something like this to come to an end, but it happens," the 23-year-old right-hander said. "I'm just going to turn around and try to start another (streak) the next time out there."

Clemens said he was "a little disappointed," but offered no excuses.

"I felt strong, pretty good in the cool (57-degree) weather and did exactly what I wanted, but came up short.

"I thought I pitched pretty well. I had a good fastball, good stuff and didn't really struggle.

"Winning 14 of 15, though, I'll take it."

Nursing a 2-1 lead, Clemens, who struck out eight, began to falter in the seventh as he issued his first two walks. However, he got through that inning.

Then came the eighth. He started by walking Ernie Whitt. Damaso Garcia followed by lining an 0-2 pitch for a single to right. Tony Fernandez tried to sacrifice, but forced Ron Shepherd, running for Whitt, at third.

That brought up Mulliniks, who struck out twice and grounded out in three earlier appearances against Clemens. Mulliniks got even, slicing a double to left, scoring Garcia with the tying run. Bob Stanley replaced Clemens and was tagged for an RBI broken bat ground single to left by Bell and a sacrifice fly by Jesse Barfield.

"It was a good pitch to Mulliniks, a fast ball high and away" Clemens said. "He just reached out and hit it."

"He was outstanding," Mulliniks said. "I was just overmatched the first three times up, but then I got a ball to hit. He's a great pitcher. He battled us all the way and pitched well enough to win. It was just our night."

"I wish I could have saved the streak for Roger, but it didn't work out," said Stanley. "I broke Bell's bat, but the ground ball found the hole. I've lived by the ground ball and died by it all my life."

The outcome proved that Clemens is human, after all.

"It was a case of a 23-year-old man under extreme pressure," Boston Manager John McNamara said. "I think he was trying too hard and he lost his rhythm."

"The man," said Boston pitching coach Bill Fischer, "is not a machine."

Not even Astros can beat Mets

Associated Press

Darryl Strawberry hit a two-run homer in the 10th inning, his second of the game, and Ray Knight homered two outs later as the New York Mets rallied for three runs and a 6-5 victory over the Houston Astros Thursday night.

Pinch-hitter Phil Garner put Houston ahead 5-3 in the top of the 10th with a two-run homer. But Strawberry hit his 12th homer of the season and Knight his ninth to give the Mets their seventh straight victory.

Knight had struck out four times previously in the game. He was hitless in his previous 10 at-bats.

Jesse Orosco, 4-4, gave up Garner's seventh homer this year, but got the victory. Frank DiPino, 1-3, was the loser.

Strawberry's homers were both off left-handers and were his first against left-handers this season.

Bill Doran's double and Ty Gainey's single gave the Astros a 1-0 lead in the first inning against starter Ron Darling. Gainey, playing in his third major-league game, stole second, advanced to third on an infield out and scored on Glenn Davis' single.

Rookie catcher Ed Hearn hit a two-out homer in the second, his third of the season, cutting the lead to 2-1.

Denny Walling opened the fourth with a walk, advanced to third on a one-out double to left by Kevin Bass and made it 3-1 on Jose Cruz's sacrifice fly to left.

Strawberry tied the score in the fifth with his first homer. He hit a 2-2 two-out pitch after Kevin Mitchell walked.

Astros starter Jim Deshaies struck out a career high 11 batters.

Braves 3, Expos 1

Ken Griffey's two-run single with two out in the fifth inning gave Atlanta its seventh victory in eight games.

Winner David Palmer, 5-6, pitched seven-hit ball for 8⅓ innings before needing last-out relief help from Gene Garber, who posted his ninth save. Palmer struggled throughout, allowing baserunners in every inning.

He finished with nine strikeouts and seven walks in a duel with Joe Hesketh, who allowed just four hits in 7⅔ innings.

Griffey's fifth-inning single was only the second hit off Hesketh, 6-5, who got in trouble through wildness. He walked six along with six strikeouts.

With one out in the Atlanta fifth, Ken Oberkfell was hit by a pitch, stole second and took third on a wild pitch — the fourth ball to Glenn Hubbard. Hesketh then walked Palmer to load the bases and got Billy Sample on an infield pop for the second out before Griffey hit his two-run single to right.

It extended Griffey's hitting streak to 14 games, 10 of which came with the New York Yankees before being acquired in a trade last Sunday.

The Expos, losing their third game in a row, had taken a 1-0 lead in the fifth on Hubie Brooks' sacrifice fly with one out and the bases loaded. Montreal had loaded the bases on a walk to Tim Raines, a single by George Wright and a walk to Andre Dawson.

The Braves scored an insurance run in the eighth on an RBI single by Rafael Ramirez that sent Hesketh to the showers.

Phillies 7, Reds 3

Mike Schmidt hit a three-run homer and Bruce Ruffin gained his first major-league victory before 61,475 fans, the largest crowd in the majors this season.

John Russell hit a two-run homer for the Phillies, who snapped the Reds' three-game winning streak. They led 4-0 after their first four batters against Reds starter John Denny, 5-8.

Ruffin, 1-0, the 22-year-old brought up to replace Steve Carlton in the Phillies' rotation, scattered 10 hits over 7⅔ innings in his second major-league start. Tom Hume finished for his third save.

Gary Redus opened the first with a double and Juan Samuel walked. Ron Roenicke singled Redus home, Samuel stopping at third. Schmidt then hit a 1-0 pitch over the left-field fence for his 16th home run of the season.

Schmidt's homer boosted him into a tie for 40th place on the all-time RBI list with former Chicago Cub Ron Santo at 1,331.

Cincinnati got one back in the second when Eric Davis doubled, advanced to third on a single by Bo Diaz and scored as Tony Perez hit into a double play.

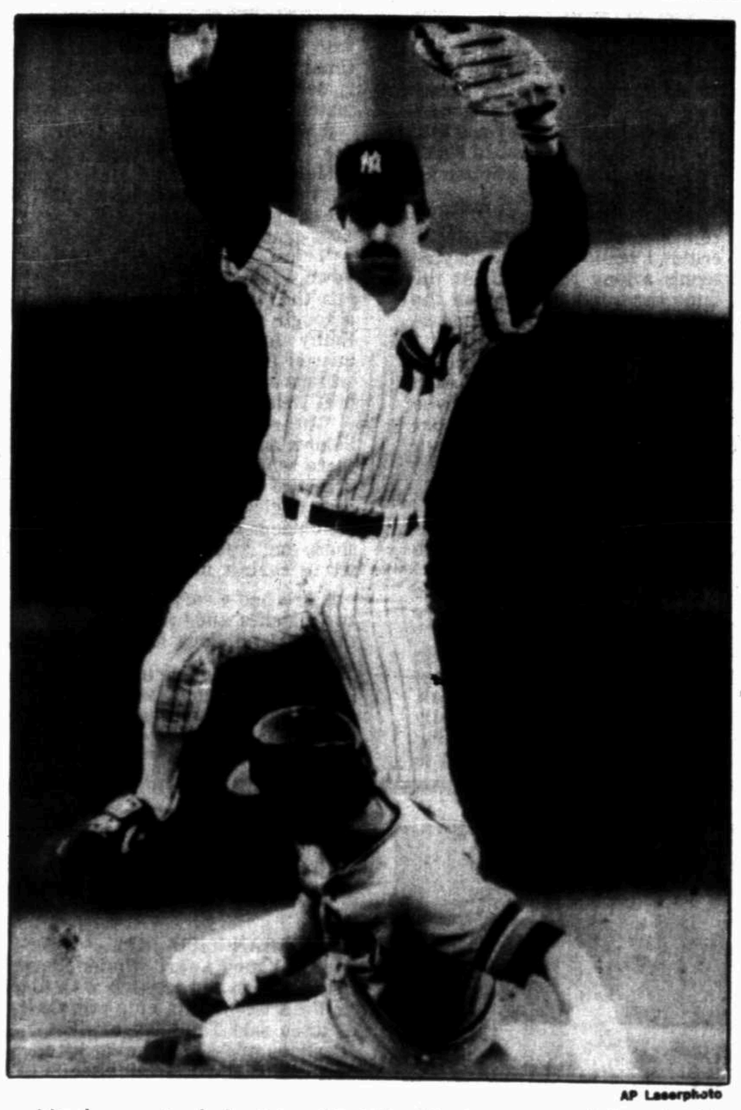

The Phillies made it 5-1 in the fourth on a single by Steve Jeltz, who stole second and scored on Samuel's two-out single.

The Reds scored twice in the eighth, chasing Ruffin. Davis hit a sacrifice fly for one run and Diaz singled in another before Hume relieved.

Russell hit his sixth home run of the season in the eighth.

A fireworks display followed the game.

Angels lose again to San Antonio, 6-3

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO — The Midland Angels dropped their fourth game in a row here Thursday night, losing 6-3 to San Antonio, the third straight loss to the Dodgers.

The Angels held a three-run lead after two innings of play, but didn't scratch again as San Antonio erupted for four runs in the fourth inning to take the victory while giving Shawn Hillegas his ninth victory in 13 decisions in the Texas League this year.

The big blow by San Antonio was a three-run homer by Jeff Brown in the fourth.

Midland's Raul Tovar and Romero had RBI hits in Midland's two-run first and got a homer from Dante Buchette in the second.

Blue Jay homers rough up Bosox

Associated Press

Jesse Barfield and Rance Mulliniks each homered twice Thursday night, powering the Toronto Blue Jays to an 8-5 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Barfield took the American League lead with his 20th and 21st homers, the 10th time he has hit more than one in a game during his career.

Mulliniks drove in four runs with a single and his ninth and 10th homers, the first time he has hit more than one home run in a game in his career. The 10 homers equal his career high for an entire season.

The Blue Jays, who snapped Roger Clemens' 14-game winning streak Wednesday night, pounded Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, 10-6, for eight hits and five runs in less than five innings.

Starter John Cerutti, 4-1, allowed seven hits and four walks, but only three runs in 5⅔ innings, for the victory.

He was bailed out of a jam in the sixth by Mark Eichhorn, who gave up two runs in the seventh. Tom Henke pitched the ninth for his 12th save.

The Blue Jays jumped to a quick 1-0 lead as Tony Fernandez began the game with a double and scored on Mulliniks' single just inside the first base bag.

Barfield made it 2-0 in the fourth with a drive far over the fence in left.

Boston tied the score on Don Baylor's sacrifice fly and Tony Armas' single in its half of the fourth.

Ernie Whitt, who had three hits, singled to start the fifth. He took third on Damaso Garcia's double and scored as Fernandez grounded out. Mulliniks followed with a homer into the right-field stands.

After Jim Rice pulled Boston to within 5-3 with his sixth homer in the sixth, the Blue Jays nailed down the decision in the seventh with a solo homer by Mulliniks and a two-run homer by Barfield.

The Red Sox scored in the seventh on an RBI single by Don Baylor and a fielding error by first baseman Willie Upshaw.

Yankees 9, Tigers 5

Dan Pasqua hit a leadoff home run and Rickey Henderson hit a two-run double in the Yankees' four-run second inning.

Claudell Washington also homered for New York and had three hits in his second start since being traded to the Yankees. Mike Easler also had three hits and drove in two runs.

New York sent nine batters to the plate in the second against Detroit's Eric King, 4-1, snapping a 2-2 tie.

Yankees starter Alfonso Pulido, 1-0, pitched five innings and allowed four runs, only one earned, for his first major-league victory. Dave Righetti gained his 18th save with a three-inning outing, his longest this year.

New York got five double plays in the game, in five consecutive innings from the fourth to the eighth.

Pasqua opened the second with his fifth homer of the season, a 411-foot shot to left-center field. Mike Pagliarulo singled and Willie Randolph walked. After a sacrifice, Henderson doubled both runners home, chasing King. Washington greeted John Pacella with an RBI single.

Detroit closed to 6-3 on Darrell Evans' 15th homer in the fourth.

New York scored twice in the bottom of the fourth on sacrifice flies by Don Mattingly and Ron Hassey.

Detroit scored on an RBI single by Lance Parrish in the fifth and a solo home run by Alan Trammell off reliever Brian Fisher in the seventh.

Easler doubled home Mattingly in the eighth.

New York jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first. Washington hit his first AL home run since 1980, when he played for the Chicago White Sox. Easler singled home Mattingly, who had doubled.

The Tigers tied the score in the top of the second. Darnell Coles doubled home Chet Lemon, who had singled, then scored on Evans' single.

Willie Randolph walked four times in the game and now leads the major leagues with 62 base on balls.

Twins 11, Orioles 7

Ron Washington's three-run homer, Kent Hrbek's two-run homer and Steve Lombardozzi's solo shot sunk Baltimore.

Washington's was an inside-the-park home run that capped Minnesota's four-run sixth inning. He drove in four runs in the game.

The homer, a towering fly ball that caromed off the left field fence, gave Minnesota a 7-1 lead and knocked out Baltimore starter Mike Boddicker, 10-4, who has lost his last three starts.

Bert Blyleven, 7-7, scattered 11 hits over 7⅔ innings for his second straight victory. Frank Pastore gave up five runs in the ninth, then Keith Atherton finished.

Hrbek hit his 18th homer in the seventh to make it 9-1. Washington doubled home a run in the eighth, then scored on third baseman Tom O'Malley's throwing error, making it 11-2.

Lombardozzi gave the Twins a 1-0 lead in the third with his seventh homer of the season.

Rushmore loses to LaRussa

OAKLAND (AP) — Tony LaRussa, who finally agreed to give up a visit to Mount Rushmore with his family to take over as manager of the Oakland A's, said today he's more comfortable with his new job than he was when he took over the Chicago White Sox in 1979.

The A's haven't been nearly as exciting this season as the famous mountain in South Dakota, and LaRussa's decision was a tough one.

"My first priority is my family," he said after arriving in San Francisco Wednesday night, explaining his ambivalence about the new job.

His reluctance was overcome by the lure of a mountainous challenge: trying to end the season-long slide of the injury-riddled A's.

"We're a down club, because nobody likes to get beat," he said. "We've got to try to turn that cycle around."

THE FORMER White Sox manager said he has no plans for immediate changes, but: "I'm going to watch them, evaluate what I see and try to get them competitive right away ....

"Getting healthy would be a step in the right direction."

The A's were in Milwaukee today for the start of a three-game series and LaRussa was in Oakland to hold a news conference and get his wife and two young children settled in a new home.

At the news conference, he said he's changed many of the attitudes he had when he was with the White Sox.

"My goal is that, whether things are going good or whether we're struggling, which is the case right now, that you win as many games as you can and that to me is the key point," he said. "It's something I've learned the hard way. You know you can't finish first every year. Certain things have to fall into place."

LaRussa's new bosses realize there's no urgency about rescuing this last-place team, so they have agreed to let him join up with the club in Boston after the weekend in Milwaukee.

The A's just hope the fiery, 41-year-old LaRussa, AL Manager of the Year in 1983, can keep the club from sliding deeper into the American League West cellar.

LaRussa, fired by the White Sox on June 20, was the only candidate the A's talked to after firing Jackie Moore last week and will have "full authority to make changes on the club from the day he takes over," said A's President Roy Eisenhardt. "No limitations have been placed on him."

LARUSSA WAS avoiding specific comments about the A's players Wednesday night, saying he hadn't talked to any of them and that it was too early to make a comparison with the White Sox.

Unlike Moore and his predecessor, Steve Boros, LaRussa will have a multi-year contract, although the pact has not yet been signed. Billy Martin was the only other manager under the Eisenhardt regime to have a contract for more than one year.

"I think what we were looking for was someone to come in with a strong presence and not necessarily turn around the won-loss record but turn around the approach, the attitude and the level of execution, attention to details and fundamentals that we have lacked over the last several weeks," Sandy Alderson, the A's vice president of baseball operations, said.

LaRussa will bring with him longtime friend and pitching coach Dave Duncan.

The A's have remained in a slump during the interim stewardship of Jeff Newman, who lost for the sixth time in seven games Wednesday, 7-3 against Cleveland, since taking over for Moore. The loss also was the A's 23rd in the past 28 games.

Said Newman: "I think right now we need a guy like Tony to come in here, someone permanent who can solidify the ranks. I think he's an outstanding manager, an outstanding man."

Pitcher Bill Krueger also welcomed LaRussa's hiring.

"It seems like we need someone to come in and define everyone's role," he said. "We have a talented team but we've been beset by injuries. It's not going to be an easy task.

"We're not going anywhere unless we get our big horses back, guys like (Dwayne) Murphy and (Joaquin) Andujar, but the guys who are filling in have to know where they stand," he said. "Right now some people don't really know where they stand."

LaRussa knows where he stands: about to take the helm of the team with the worst record in the major leagues. When a porter at San Francisco International Airport shook his hand Wednesday night and said he hoped he enjoyed his stay, the manager responded: "I will if I start winning some games."

LaRussa spent seven years as manager of the White Sox, directing them to the AL West title in 1983 but falling on hard times since then.

When he was fired and replaced by Jim Fregosi, LaRussa had been manager with one team longer than any current major league skipper with the exception of Sparky Anderson of the Detroit Tigers.

LaRussa's record as a major league manager is 522-510, all with the White Sox.

By Jeane Dixon
Saturday, July 5, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You should concentrate on breaking an impasse between parent and child. Once your domestic life is running smoothly, you will be able to accomplish more at work or school. Your career takes off like a rocket when you showcase a special talent. Curb a tendency to get lazy when things are going well. Stay alert!

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Cubs outfielder-leader Gary "the Sarge" Mathews, premier Padres relief pitcher Rich Gossage, Julie Nixon Eisenhower, former French President Georges Pompidou, statesman Henry Cabot Lodge, circus genius P.T. Barnum.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Just because you fail on your first attempt is no reason to give up. Take the time to master a new skill. A romance bursts into full bloom. Travel spices up your social life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Long trips are favored. Put some fun into your life and mate will be supportive. Turn off the TV and get outdoors. The more interests you have, the more interesting you are!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone's indecisiveness could interfere with your plans for a fun, romantic weekend. Put your foot down in a diplomatic way. A brainy blind date arouses your interest. Seize an opportunity to travel.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Invite someone you care about to share this holiday weekend with you. Try not to be so bossy. Express your warm and sentimental side. Your creativity shows in almost everything you do.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not hide your disappointment at a change of plans. Mate deserves to know your true feelings. A compromise could save the day. Spare a child the sight and sounds of domestic strife.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Include both friends and relatives in your social plans for today and tomorrow. A newcomer finds your company very stimulating. The time for romance comes sooner than you think. Be discreet.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New friendships and romances are part of the picture. A strong bond is developing between you and an attractive newcomer. Shared interests make this a very special weekend. Be on your best behavior.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your sense of justice and fair play helps you right a wrong this weekend. A victory sends your spirits soaring. Share the limelight with loved one. Your good mood is contagious.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You enjoy large gatherings and will have several invitations to choose from this weekend. Romance takes on new meaning. Know your own heart before asking someone else for a commitment. Avoid issuing ultimatums.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A phone call or surprise visitor should make you feel especially good about yourself. Others find it difficult to keep up with you. Your energetic ways impress someone influential. Your finances improve.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accept unexpected changes with good grace. Your time will come! Keep a journal of what happens now. It could inspire you to do great things later on. Put more feeling into your work.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Cut back on the sweets and think of fun ways to get more exercise. Seize an opportunity to bring something of real beauty into your home. A new relationship has its practical side.

IN THE RIGHT SPOT

Both vulnerable. South deals.

	NORTH ♠ J 5 3 ♡ K J 5 3 2 ◇ 10 3 ♣ A Q J
WEST ♠ 10 9 ♡ A 6 ◇ K 9 8 5 2 ♣ 9 8 4 2		EAST ♠ 8 7 6 4 ♡ 9 8 7 4 ◇ A Q ♣ 7 5 3
	SOUTH ♠ A K Q 2 ♡ Q 10 ◇ J 7 6 4 ♣ K 10 6

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ◇

The spot cards you hold can be all-important. Only an observant West would defeat South in his contract of three no trump. Today's a good day to wave the flag, so celebrate if you found the winning defense.

Let's suppose you are West and you make the standard fourth-best lead of the five of diamonds. Your partner wins the first trick with the ace of diamonds and returns the queen. Assuming your partner is an intelligent player, how many diamonds does East have and why?

Move to the top of the class if you answered only the ace-queen. With a third diamond, East would probably have played the queen to the first trick to prevent declarer from holding up his hypothetical king.

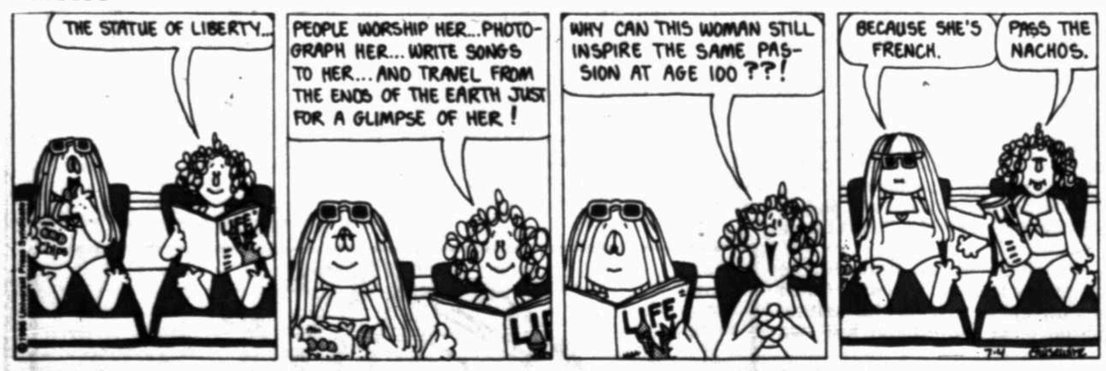

So if you followed with a low diamond to the second trick expecting your partner to continue the suit, you would do better waiting for Godot. However, your 9-8 in the suit suggests a method of defeating the contract even though you know that declarer started with four diamonds headed by the jack.

Overtake your partner's queen with the king (he will forgive you by the time the hand is over) and continue with the nine to force out declarer's stopper. Sooner or later you will gain the lead with the ace of hearts and your eight of diamonds will extract declarer's remaining card in the suit so you can cash the setting trick with your last diamond.

What if declarer can take eight black-suit tricks to go with the jack of diamonds? Then it is quite probable that no defense will defeat the contract. If you need a particular lie of the cards to make or break a contract, play as if that distribution exists.

Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

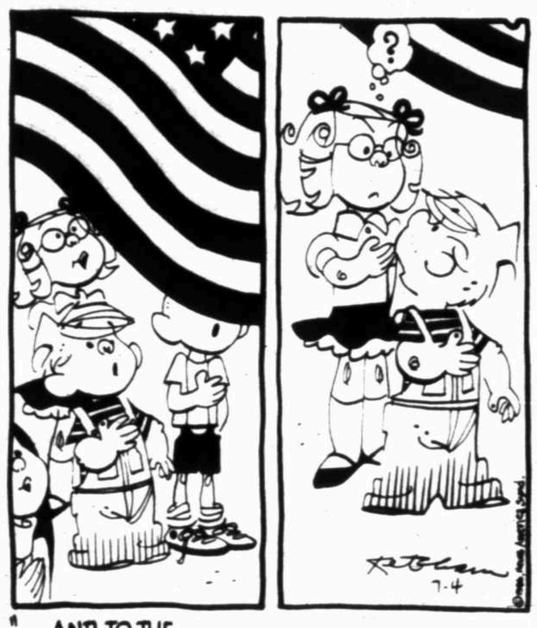

If you need a good helper, try advertising in our classifieds. Who knows? You may spark the beginning of something big!

'King of the Hippies' buried in Amsterdam

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Walter C. Gluck, an artist and eccentric who was known as "King of the Hippies," drifted toward his grave Thursday as he drifted through life — at a tranquil, leisurely pace.

The American expatriate's coffin was placed on a raft in the Amstel River, where the ramshackle flotilla that had been Gluck's home was moored.

The 30-by-10-foot raft, pulled by a tiny tug and bedecked with flowers and gifts, was accompanied by a small armada of canoes, barges, pleasure boats and a state police patrol boat with a flag at half-mast. More than 1,000 people lined the river as the funeral procession slowly floated to the Zorgvlied cemetery just outside the city.

Gluck, a Bulgarian-born New Yorker who lived in Amsterdam for a quarter century, drowned in the river last week at the age of 57 while enlarging his floating home near the Amsterdam opera house.

"Viktor died in the river he lived on and loved," said August Veschure, referring to his life-long friend by one of several names Gluck had used.

The floating community on the Amstel, which was assembled by Gluck, is a tourist attraction for canal sightseeing boats and is known for its makeshift gardens and occasional tethered goats munching slightly soggy straw.

In the 1960s, tour guides said Gluck was the "King of the Hippies" who were then flocking to the Dutch capital, which named itself "Magic Center of the World" because of its prominent counterculture.

Even in this city renowned for its tolerance, Gluck's lifestyle, which included a daily dip in the heavily polluted Amstel, was considered somewhat eccentric.

Burly, white-maned, and barefoot even in winter, Gluck passed his days on the jerry-built weave of rafts and barges which were overgrown with plants and weeds — and, some say, a bit of home-grown marijuana.

Introducing himself variously as Bulgar Finn, Jack Sun, and Viktor IV, Gluck painted some, scavenged some and worked with watches and clocks, which he liked to make run backward.

He was a professional photographer in the United States in the 1950s, traveling all over the United States for Life magazine, according to Ina Munck, his Danish companion for the last 17 years.

"But he sought freedom, and after roaming the world for years in search of it, he finally found it here in Amsterdam," Ms. Munck said during a small reception Thursday before boarding the raft.

Gluck stayed in Amsterdam after most hippies headed home in the 1970s. His floating settlement, considered an eyesore by some, soon took on the aspect of a local monument to municipal broadmindedness.

"All my works of art are a kind of 'Thank You' to Amsterdam, a tolerant city," Gluck said in a 1982 interview.

Gluck's art — typically complicated designs of letters and figures — was painted on things he found during his leisurely rounds of the city: cardboard, wood and furniture.

"But his life was really his major work of art, rich and colorful," said Ms. Munck. "He wasn't preoccupied with death, he only believed in the life preceding it."

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — A $20,000 diamond ring that author Stephen King's wife, Tabitha, reported losing two weeks ago at a Waterville convenience store has been found — at the King home in Bangor.

"It was in the house all the time," said James Leonard, who identified himself as the Kings' caretaker. "She found it a couple days ago."

Ms. King reported the ring missing June 18 and took out a newspaper ad offering a reward for its return.

She said at the time that the ring apparently fell out of her shirt pocket when she bent to put something in her car at the convenience store.

ALMENDRALEJO, Spain (AP) — Thanks to Cuban President Fidel Castro, crocodiles will join the animals at the town zoo.

Zoo owner Jose Luis Rodriguez Rosa said he wrote to Castro asking for two crocodiles and offering to hang a plaque above them saying the animals had been donated by the Cuban leader.

On June 16, Cuba's ambassador in Madrid, Oscar Garcia Fernandez, wrote Rodriguez, informing him that Castro had granted his petition and that the crocodiles would arrive in Spain Tuesday — but no plaque was needed.

Castro sent four crocs to this southwestern Spanish town in case one or two die in transport or during the adaptation period, said Rodriguez, who plans to send Castro a Spanish ham, some champagne and some local wine.

LONDON (AP) — Princess Diana and the Duke of Edinburgh, wife and father of Prince Charles, are to be godparents to the latest addition to the Greek royal family in exile, Buckingham Palace said Thursday.

Prince Philippos, two-month-old son of ex-King Constantine and Queen Anne-Marie, is to be christened at the Greek Orthodox Cathedral of St. Sophia in London next Thursday.

Philippos is Queen Anne-Marie's fifth child and third son. King Constantine, a cousin of Prince Philip, is godfather to Prince William of Wales.

Reagan

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Maureen Reagan, President Reagan's eldest daughter, is a featured guest at the largest American Independence Day festivities held outside the United States, in Rebild, Denmark.

Organizers expect about 15,000 people Friday at the annual festivities, which have been held in the heather-covered hills of Rebild national park since 1912.

About 100 policemen from surrounding towns will be on hand to protect Ms. Reagan and other dignitaries, and to prevent expected anti-American demonstrations, inspector Poul Wrobel of the Aalborg city police said.

Prominent Americans who have spoken at past Rebild festivities include former President Richard Nixon, television newsman Walter Cronkite, former Vice President Hubert Humphrey, singer Pat Boone, newspaper columnist Art Buchwald, entertainer Danny Kaye and Vice President George Bush.

LONDON (AP) — A brother of Boy George, the British rock star noted for his flamboyant gowns and makeup, said Thursday the singer is a heroin addict and has lost at least 40 pounds. But Boy George and another brother denied he is ill.

"I'm fit enough to run the London Marathon," the singer told photographers who converged on his home Thursday after reports of an alleged drug problem appeared in British newspapers.

One of his brothers, David O'Dowd, said later in a television interview with the British Broadcasting Corp. that Boy George was a heroin addict.

"It's been going on for the last eight months seriously," O'Dowd said. "He looks gaunt. The sparkle that used to be in his eyes is gone totally."

But Press Association, the British domestic news agency, quoted another brother, Gerald O'Dowd, as saying Thursday he had spoken to Boy George "and he says he is just fine."

Equal access boon for Midland firm

From oilfield equipment to telecommunications

MIDLAND, Texas (UPI) — A company that once specialized in oilfield equipment went in a different direction last November and developed a telecommunications system to take advantage of equal access competition between long distance service companies.

Hayes Graham, vice president of Professional Circuits Unlimited Inc. said the company was an individual proprietorship until its incorporation in November 1985, about the time company chairman Ernest Schmeltzer started on his telecommunications project.

PCU in June signed a contract with Teleconcepts Corp. of Newington, Conn., to provide the long-distance company with the "Smart Line Emulator."

The device provides a means for distributing some important central office switching functions to the residence at a savings to independent long distance companies, Graham said.

"We got involved in this directly when the company needed some type of telecommunications equipment to make an intelligent (switching) decision, and we found dialers were not reliable and were expensive," Graham said.

"Mr. Schmeltzer started work eight months ago to design something to address those needs, and all of the research and development is complete. It should be in place in Connecticut in a very short time," he said.

He said the Smart Line Emulator allows a long-distance company to provide equal access use to its customers. It essentially allows them to take advantage of the competition and saves them money.

Graham said the breakup of the AT&T opened the door for PCU because it allowed the creation of many long distance companies. Although the long distance service companies are PCU's primary market, Graham said they may eventually try to sell the system to businesses wanting to set up their own long distance network.

An advantage of the smart line is its potential access to sparsely populated areas of the country which do not have touchtone service but remain on rotary dial phones.

"Our system allows these companies access to the rotary-pulse type customers," Graham said.

PCU has become independent of the oil industry, which is a good thing, Graham said.

"We're a bright spot in this community. Everything else is pretty depressed right now," he said.

Although the company has only eight employees, Graham said he expects expansion, and maybe even a move to Dallas, in the near future.

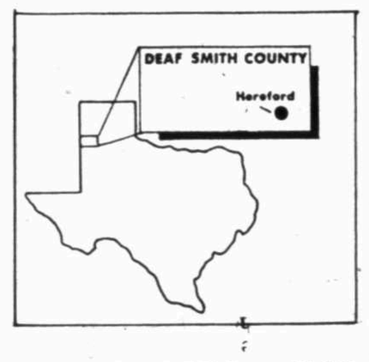

"So far we've kept a pretty low profile. This is our first major project, but we're planning to make it into a big success story," he said.

Nuke dump impact study funds sought

HEREFORD (UPI) — The strain that the site characterization process for a proposed nuclear waste dump would put on the local economy has prompted a group of Deaf Smith County governing bodies to seek federal money to deal with the expected upheaval.

Deaf Smith County Judge Glen Nelson said Wednesday that site characterization for the first high-level nuclear waste dump to be located in Texas, Nevada or Washington, would greatly upset the local economy.

Because of the expected impact, Deaf Smith County, the city of Hereford, Deaf Smith General Hospital District and the Walcott and Hereford Independent School Districts have formed the Waste Deposit Impact Committee (WDIC).

"Our understanding is that there are funds available for our local people to utilize in conducting the survey," Nelson said. "In order for us as a combined unit to seek recovery for any expenses, damages or expansion of services that might occur, we need to do a study to see what kind of an impact it will have." Although lawsuits to halt the site study process have been filed by the state and a group opposed to the dump, Nelson said the WDIC is proceeding on the basis that the site characterization will start later this summer as planned.

"We don't want it, but it looks like we could get it," Nelson said. "It's going to have an impact on county services, school and medical facilities."

The committee is seeking the $230,000 grant through the state Department of Public Safety Division of Emergency Management Nuclear Waste Program office for a one-time grant to study not only the economic impact, but the socioeconomic impact of the site characterization.

The grant would include $5,000 in consultant fees, $125,000 in administrative costs, $25,000 in travel expenses and $75,000 for analyzing the impact on the area's tax rate.

A nine-square-mile site in agricultural Deaf Smith County was one of three tabbed in May by the Department of Energy as finalists for the dump to store spent fuel rods from the nation's nuclear power plants. Following an intensive study of the suitability of the three sites, one is expected to be chosen in 1994, with the dump to be in operation by 1998.

ITT, French company announce joint venture

NEW YORK (AP) — ITT Corp. and France's nationalized CGE say they have agreed to create a joint venture in telecommunications second in size only to American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The deal announced Wednesday, which requires the approval of the French government, would create a company with annual sales of about $9.6 billion and activities in 75 countries.

ITT said it would receive about $1.8 billion in cash for its contribution to the joint venture, a sum that includes repayment of $350 million in debt. In addition, ITT would be able to unload $1.3 billion in debt onto the books of the venture, analysts said.

The agreement seems to mark the end of ITT Chairman Rand Araskog's dream to make telecommunications the engine of growth for the sprawling, multinational conglomerate, analysts said.

Although ITT would retain a 30 percent stake in the new company, which is as yet unnamed, it would not have management control.

CGE, formally known as Cie. Generale d'Electricite, would contribute its Alcatel S.A. to the venture. Alcatel is a French telecommunications-equipment maker.

The companies said a decision by the French government on the deal is expected by the end of July.

ITT's stock rose $3.75 a share to $56.75 Wednesday in consolidated New York Stock Exchange trading, reflecting investors' happiness with the tentative deal.

The agreement goes beyond ITT's telephone switching equipment to include transmission equipment as well as all of ITT's business systems, including telephones, private branch exchanges, computers, terminals, printers and other office equipment.

The deal does not, however, include ITT's long-distance phone service.

ITT also owns Hartford Insurance Group, Sheraton Hotels and Rayonier forest products and has operations in financial services an$ defense equipment, among other things.

Analysts expressed pleasure with the announcement.

"I'm impressed by the amount of money they're able to get for the subsidiary, which has a lot of promise and has yet to deliver," said Carol Neves, an analyst for Merrill Lynch & Co.

Phua Young, an analyst for Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc., said it made sense for ITT to throw its computers, telephones and other office equipment into the deal along with the European-based central-office phone switch business.

Those non-switch operations have "been losing money for the past couple years and will again lose money this year," Young said. "It's like a big headache being removed from your system all at one time."

The national telephone company of Spain and a Belgian industrial, financial and bank-holding company, Societe Generale de Belgique, have indicated their intention to participate in the joint venture along with CGE, the joint announcement said.

People Express said talking with buyers

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The head of People Express Inc. has been persuaded that the airline should be sold as a whole and has met with representatives of Texas Air Corp. and United Airlines, according to reports published today.

Frank Lorenzo, Texas Air chairman, is the most serious contender for the airline, according to a unidentified source quoted by The New York Times.

The Wall Street Journal published a similar report, attributing it to unidentified sources.

Donald C. Burr, People Express president, worked for Lorenzo when Lorenzo was seeking to turn Texas International around. Texas International has since merged with Continental Airlines to form Texas Air.

Houston-based Texas Air now is acquiring debt-ridden Eastern Airlines, and would become the nation's largest carrier if the government approves the $600 million acquisition.

Reports published Wednesday in the Times said People Express had talked with United Airlines about selling some of its fleet of eight Boeing 747 jumbo jets.

People Express spokesman Russell Marchetta and United spokesman Joseph Hopkins declined Wednesday to comment on the report.

Separately, it was announced Wednesday that an investment group led by members of the Bass family of Fort Worth said it acquired 8.6 percent of People Express.

Also, People Express Airlines and another subsidiary, Frontier Airways, reported substantial drops in the number of passengers for June from the same month a year ago.

When People Express disclosed possible sale plans last week, analysts said the sale of some planes was a possibility.

Other options include the sale of Denver-based Frontier Airlines or gate positions at certain airports. Financial analysts have said the jumbo planes each are worth about $10 million.

People Express lost $58 million on revenue of $329 million in the first quarter of this year.

U.S. Steel announces major reorganization

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

U.S. Steel, beset by seemingly endless woes in its basic steel operations, is planning to announce a major restructuring that will be accompanied by a name change for one of the oldest and most visible companies in American heavy industry, company officials said.

Under the proposed restructuring, the steel operation would likely be separated from the parent corporation, with its own separate corporate staff and balance sheet. U.S. Steel's two oil companies, Marathon Oil and Texas Oil & Gas, are already structured along similar lines.

In turn, the parent company, which may be renamed USS, would be transformed into a holding company with separate, stand-alone subsidiaries in steel and oil.

U.S. Steel officials said the overhaul, which is likely to be announced later this month, is not intended to spin off the company's troubled steel operations to shareholders or management.

Instead, the move will force the steel division to become a stand-alone business, living off its own cash flow and bearing its own administrative and interest expenses, company officials said.

The parent corporation will stop subsidizing the steel segment's losses, which the company claims it has done for the past several years, officials said. And, since such a restructuring will mean that the money-losing steel business could be starved of investment capital unless it raises funds on its own, steel management and labor will be under greater pressure to reduce costs.

"It would put a fence around the steel business," said Peter Anker, a steel industry analyst with First Boston Corp. "They are trying to demonstrate to all of the parties in the company's steel business that steel has to stand on its own," Anker added.

The news of the plan comes in the midst of U.S. Steel's contract talks with the United Steelworkers, and some industry analysts believe the company may have leaked the proposal in order to force the union to accept its demands for contract concessions.

Union sources said Tuesday that J. Bruce Johnston, U.S. Steel's chief negotiator, has recently demanded wage and benefit cuts of $7 per hour per employee, which would slash U.S. Steel's average hourly labor costs to $18 from $25. If U.S. Steel won such steep cuts, its labor costs would be the lowest of any major domestic steelmaker and equal to those of Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel, which is undergoing Chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization. But union bargainers are expected to flatly reject Johnston's demands.

Ford announces recall of 271,000 automobiles

DEARBORN, Mich. (UPI) — Ford Motor Co. said Thursday it has discovered that about 271,000 of its late-model compact and subcompact cars may have manual transmissions that come out of gear and go into neutral in cold weather.

John P. King, service engineering manager of Ford's parts and service division, said owners are being notified by mail to bring their cars to dealers for appropriate modifications if they are having that problem.

"The vehicles will be covered with an extension in warranty for this condition for two years from the delivery date," King said. "Only owners whose vehicles have experienced the condition are asked to return their vehicles for modifications."

Included among the vehicles that are eligible are 1985 ½ and 1986 Ford Escort and Mercury Lynx models, and 1985 and 1986 Ford EXP, Ford Tempo and Mercury Topaz models. All have four- or five-speed manual transmissions.

King said the problem is most likely to occur when the cars are driving during cold weather — below 40 degrees — shortly after engine start-up.

The primary cause of the problem is the stiffness of the shift boot — the thick rubber material that covers the gear shift — which can push the shift lever toward neutral while the vehicle is still cold, he said.

Owners who already have paid to have this condition repaired will be reimbursed, King said.

Ford also announced that it is recalling about 300 1986-model Cargo trucks equipped with 6.6-liter I-6 diesel engines for replacement of the intake and exhaust valve springs if necessary.

State files suit, claims antitrust violations

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — The state of Connecticut has filed suit accusing four major oil companies of violating antitrust laws by charging different prices to wholesale and retail customers, Attorney General Joseph I. Lieberman said Thursday.

Lieberman said the suit filed in Hartford Superior Court seeks civil penalties that could reach into the millions of dollars from the four oil companies.

The suit accuses Exxon Corp., Mobil Corp., Sun Oil Co. and Texaco Inc. of violating antitrust laws by selling the same grades of gasoline at higher prices to their retail dealers than to wholesale customers.

Lieberman said some difference is allowable, but said the difference reached 20 cents a gallon or more at times earlier this year.

Lieberman said retailers who lease their stations from the major oil companies paid more for gasoline than wholesalers, discouraging competition in gasoline pricing in the state.

The lawsuit, centering on January-April this year, seeks civil penalties of $250,000 for each violation of state antitrust laws, Lieberman told a news conference.

"We would certainly hope it would be a multi-million dollar victory. Even if the court is restrained (in determining what constitutes violations) we're talking about many millions of dollars," the attorney general said.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Government contracts boost May construction

WASHINGTON (AP) — A big rise in government building projects helped boost construction spending by 0.8 percent in May, the Commerce Department said.

The department said that construction climbed to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $374.7 billion in May following a 1 percent April increase.

But the overall gain masked a 0.3 percent decline in private sector spending, to an annual rate of $300.3 billion.

Coca-Cola plans to swallow largest bottler

ATLANTA (AP) — Coca-Cola Co. says it plans to acquire its largest independent bottler and that it may combine all Coca-Cola-owned bottling operations under a separate, possibly public, company.

Coca-Cola said it would pay about $1.4 billion in cash, less assumed debt, for the bottling properties of JTL Corp. Those operations bottle about 12 percent of Coca-Cola's domestic production.

With the acquisition, Coca-Cola President Donald R. Keough said, the company "is now ready to explore the possibility of creating a new, free-standing Coca-Cola bottling company."

Lagging CBS profits precipitate staff cuts

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS is bracing for a series of job reductions that could total 600 positions, industry sources said.

But the job cuts, which are being blamed on declining profits and a slowdown in advertising revenues, won't affect programming, the sources said.

The cuts are the result of a 10-week financial and efficiency analysis by the CBS Broadcast Group, which oversees CBS' news, sports, entertainment and radio divisions.

CBS spokesman George Schweitzer said the CBS Broadcast Group is "in the final stages of recommendations after an exhaustive 10-week review."

Associated resists hostile May Co. overtures

NEW YORK (AP) — Associated Dry Goods Corp.'s board of directors has rejected as indequate two multibillion-dollar takeover offers from May Department Stores Inc.

The retailer said that it also adopted a "poison-pill" provision designed to thwart an unwelcome acquisition of the company by making it substantially more expensive.

May began a hostile, $60-a-share cash tender offer, worth $2.4 billion, last week, after Associated Dry Goods failed to accept an earlier, friendly $66-a-share stock-swap proposal. The stock swap is valued at $2.7 billion.

AMC's Kenosha plant to build Chryslers

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — Chrysler Corp.'s largest cars will be built at American Motors Corp.'s underused assembly plant in Kenosha, Wis. beginning next year, the companies announced.

Although automakers sell parts to each other and conduct contract building overseas, the arrangement between No. 3 carmaker Chrysler and little AMC is unprecedented in modern America, AMC President Joseph Cappy said.

By building the Chrysler Fifth Avenue, Dodge Diplomat and Plymouth Gran Fury, the Kenosha plant will be able to recall about 3,200 hourly and 300 salaried employees, Cappy said.

Osage Indian fortune rises, falls with oil

PAWHUSKA, Okla. (AP) — For richer or poorer, the fortunes of the Osage Indian Nation are wedded to the shallow sea of oil beneath the rolling hills of Osage County in northeastern Oklahoma.

In the heady days of frenzied oilpatch activity climaxing in 1981, a holder of a full share of the tribe's assets received more than $30,000 a year from oil royalties.

But oil has been a temperamental benefactor for the Osages.

A 1906 allotment act produced a tribal roll of 2,229 Osages. Each member's share of the quarterly distribution of tribal trust funds became known as a headright.

The June 1981 quarterly payment was $10,270 per headright. Five years later, the payment had declined to $3,670. In September, the payment to headright holders is expected to amount to less than $2,000.

"Starting in September, they're going to feel an impact. They're worried," said Jack Shoemate, superintendent of the Bureau of Indian Affairs Osage Agency in Pawhuska.

The economic whiplash affects the budgets of thousands of Osages who have inherited fractions of headrights and rely on the payments to supplement their incomes.

"I'm aware that we're going through some tough times here," Shoemate said. He advises members: "The price (of oil) is dropping. Watch your money. Try to operate on a budget."

His main concern is that Osages are careful to hold onto their land, homes and other major assets until the price of oil rebounds.

"If they can weather the storm, they're going to be dollars ahead," he said.

The Osages pride themselves in being an educated, articulate tribe known for its oil industry acumen. But most are reluctant to talk about the money they receive from oil through the unique headrights arrangement.

"When it's speculated that they're receiving huge incomes, they're bothered by people," said Ralph Adkisson, Tulsa attorney who is a member of the Osage Tribal Council. "Some of them, it's their sole income."

"People look to them as a means of resolving their own problems," Shoemate said.

Only 147 of the original 2,229 allottees survive. They were infants or children when the headrights were apportioned in 1906. The others' survivors share their headrights.

In 1920, a typical five-person Osage family received more than $40,000 in oil income. Stories abound about newly wealthy Osages owning fleets of cars and abandoning automobiles that were only out of gas.

Shoemate said false stereotypes have left Osages "extremely sensitive" about their oil money.

In the Depression years of the 1930s, the price of oil plunged so that the annual headrights payment was less than $600. Not until the late 1970s did the headrights again provide such bounty for the Osages.

Three times a year, oilmen from across the country gather in an auditorium at the Osage Agency to bid on tracts of oil and gas owned by the tribe.

A February 1981 lease auction took in a record $6.8 million in bonuses from oilmen anxious to reach the shallow oil and gas. Earlier this month, with national drilling activity languishing because of plunging oil prices, a similar auction brought in only $261,000.

"We're just now catching up with the drop in the price of oil," Shoemate said. "We got just a taste of it this quarter. We're really going to get a taste of it next quarter.

"I was very pleased with the amount we finally ended up with," Shoemate said. "I think the interest is still there in the Osage."

In 1870, the tribe bought 1.5 million acres from the Cherokees as a homeland to replace that sold to the U.S. government in Kansas. In 1897, the first producing oil well was completed on Osage land.

In 1906, tribal leaders apportioned the tribe's assets to the 2,229 Osages. Individuals were free to sell their surface acreage, but the mineral rights were held in perpetual trust by the tribe.

Since oil production first took off in Osage County in 1917, 40,000 wells have been drilled in the county that stretches from Tulsa in the southeast to Kansas in the north. The area, larger than the state of Delaware, has produced about 1.16 billion barrels of oil.

The price of oil plummeted from near $30 to about $10 a barrel earlier this year before settling in near $15 a barrel. In the fourth quarter of 1985, production on 3,600 active leases in Osage County averaged 25,500 barrels of oil and 25 to 30 million cubic feet of natural gas per day.

Since then, Osage County production has declined to 23,700 barrels a day in April and less than 22,000 barrels a day in May. An estimated 2,000 wells have been temporarily shut down since the first of the year.

Adkisson said the tribe's latest auction mirrors sales in 1972. But he said oilmen will return to the Osage.

"They're kind of in a wait-and-see posture," he said. "Some of them might do more at our next sale in the fall. At the same time, they think they can make money in the Osage.

"We have shallow wells and we have a high ratio of success. We think that maybe even with the lower prices that we may be facing some good days up there."

While the future of government programs is uncertain, Adkisson said the tribe has enough experience with oil to predict a return of higher prices.

Ethanol could help Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Louisiana's infant ethanol industry is a boon to the state's farmers since it will require crops to be produced on almost a million acres of the state's farm land, Commissioner of Agriculture Bob Odom says.

Odom told the 64th annual meeting of the Louisiana Farm Bureau Federation Tuesday the ethanol program had survived legislative attempts to eliminate or severely curtail its scope.

The victory, he said, "will mean the start up of a major new industry for Louisiana," Odom said.

The 1986 Legislature, which adjourned Tuesday, agreed to give the state's gasohol industry up to $80 million in exemptions from Louisiana's fuels tax.

Gasohol — a gasoline substitute — is a mixture of 90 percent gasoline and 10 percent ethanol, which is made from agricultural products.

Odom said the cost of starting up the ethanol industry in Louisiana was high in terms of the tax breaks, but pointed to the predictions of agricultural economists who believe ethanol has "tremendous potential" and will become "the octane booster of the future."

Texaco Inc. last week announced it would begin using ethanol as an octane booster in its gasoline products and was negotiating contracts for ethanol in Louisiana, Odom said.

The state already has five operating ethanol plants and another seven are expected to comply with a Sept. 1 deadline for having plants 25 percent complete in order to qualify for provisions of the incentive program for the 1986-87 fiscal year.

Under that program, a 14 cents-per-gallon subsidy will be allowed during Louisiana's 1986-87 fiscal year but will decrease each year until it ends in 1991, Odom said.

The law also provides the Agriculture Industry Board sign contracts with plants participating in the program, he said. The agriculture commissioner said every contract signed would require the use of 100 percent Louisiana products in order to qualify for the incentive payments.

ARCO credit rating lowered on securities

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Standard & Poor's lowered the credit ratings Tuesday on about $6.9 billion in debt securities of Atlantic Richfield, citing its heavy borrowings and the risks posed by low oil prices that the credit-rating firm expects to prevail throughout the 1980s.

Though Standard & Poor's had some favorable things to say about Arco, the downgrading will have the effect of making it more costly for the nation's seventh-largest oil company to borrow money.

The chief rating change was to the "A" level from the previous "AA," which means an assessment that Arco has a "strong" rather than "very strong" ability to repay interest.

The downgrading wasn't a surprise. Arco and numerous other oil companies have been on Standard & Poor's "credit watch" since April because of the collapse in world oil prices. The firm has lowered the credit ratings of about two dozen oil companies this year.

Arco had no comment on the action.

Analyst Jacob L. Schlanger of Standard & Poor's said the official lowering of the debt rating might not have any affect on Arco because, "I'm not aware of their planning any new financing, and I'm sure this had already been anticipated by the markets."

Don't mess with success

Jack Barry, president of WD-40 Co., has collected dozens of products that have attempted to compete with the versatile lubricant. WD-40 is the company's only product. Competitor brands include such such titles as: NE-40, SS-40, 2-26, 30-30, 12-34 and others. "Why mess with success?" asks Barry, whose WD-40 remain at top of lubricant list.

EOR funding urgently needed

By HARIHAR KRISHNAN
UPI Business Writer

DALLAS (UPI) — Of the approximately 9 million barrles of oil produced daily in the United States, only about 400,000 barrels are obtained by tertiary recovery, also known as the enhanced oil recovery (EOR).

This lack of progress in the EOR process means that some 300 billion barrels of discovered oil in the country must remain underground because they cannot be recovered by the primary or secondary recovery process.

Tim Dowd, executive director of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission of Oklahoma City, an advisory body representing 29 oil producing states, is concerned that what little EOR research is going on currently will diminish because of collapsing oil prices.

"We know it is there (the 300 billion barrels)," Dowd said. "We have measured it. We simply cannot produce it under current conditions. When I say current I am talking about oil price of $25 to $30 a barrel. The situation gets much worse for EOR when the price drops to $15. But EOR is the only salvation."

When oil is discovered, pressure in the reservoir helps drive the oil to the surface. This is called the primary recovery process.

Eventually, the pressure diminishes and producers resort to the secondary recovery process, in which the wells are injected with water and the flooding helps drive the oil to the surface.

The third process, called tertiary or enhanced recovery, is considerably more expensive than the first two and requires far more sophisticated engineering.

In the EOR process, steam, very hot water or carbon dioxide is injected into the well to loosen the remaining oil and bring it to the wellbore.

"If you don't have steam available from natural sources, it is not economic to boil the water and pour it down the tube. Similarly, carbon dioxide gas exists mostly in West Texas and New Mexico and so (that) method won't be economical say in Kern County, California, where steam is cheaper because of geothermal sources," Down said.

"The whole EOR process is one of economic choice and several of them are still in the experimental stage such as in situ combustion and surfactants."

Currently, 98 percent of all U.S. oil production uses either the primary or the secondary method. In most cases only about 10 percent of the oil can be extracted by the primary method and up to 34 percent using both the primary and secondary methods.

"But for every percentage point we go above the 34 percent national average with the help of EOR, we will be able to give the United States an additional 4 billion barrels of oil," Dowd said. "And this is where EOR becomes so critically important."

Dowd said public funding for oil recovery research that will include EOR is alarmingly low compared to research funding for other energy sectors - about $1 billion annually for nuclear energy, $348 million for coal, $180 million for natural gas and only $18 million for crude oil.

"Nobody believes there can be any fantastic breakthrough in the development of the EOR process. There is no magic solution. What we've got to do is evolve through experimentation and fuel tests. That is the only way to bring EOR into its own," Dowd said.

Dowd said in the present climate there is absolutely no interest in EOR.

Conoco cuts refinery output

PONCA CITY, Okla. (AP) — Conoco Inc. is implementing a 15 percent cutback in oil production from its refinery in Ponca City, according to company officials in Houston.

Conoco spokesman Tom DeCola said Tuesday that output from the Ponca City refinery will be reduced by 20,000 barrels a day "because of a growing oversupply of refined products."

DeCola said the refinery at Lake Charles, La., will reduce production by 28,000 barrels a day.

DeCola said the company's refining inventories have increased too rapidly this summer. He said the exception was in the west where demand is balancing with production from refineries in Colorado, Montana and California.

"We're going to watch all these refineries to determine whether to make adjustments up or down. This is not necessarily permanent by any means. If the market situation changes, we could change output.

"But we've got our inventories up now to where we're comfortable with them, based on our perception of what our demand is going to be," he said.

DeCola said production at the Ponca City refinery was reduced in January but had been increased in the spring to meet an expected increase in demand.

Gas supplies dip for first time in nearly two months

NEW YORK (UPI) — Gasoline supplies decreased slightly in the latest week, the first decline in seven weeks, as the summer driving season went into full gear.

The American Petroleum Institute said gasoline supplies were down to 227.6 million barrels in the week ended June 27 from 228.9 million barrels a week earlier. In the same week last year, supplies stood at 216.9 million barrels.

Industry sources said the decline reflected the summer vacation season. Some analysts had predicted increased summer gasoline use as the weaker dollar and fear of terrorism prompt Americans to take to the highways at home instead of traveling abroad.

Supplies of unleaded gasoline stood at 119.8 million barrels, compared with 119.7 million barrels the previous week and 101.6 million barrels a year ago, the API said.

Gasoline production held steady at 7.1 million barrels daily, compared with 7.2 million barrels last week, but was ahead of year-ago production of 6.9 million barrels daily.

Gasoline imports jumped to 294,000 barrels daily from 160,000 barrels daily the previous week but were sharply lower than imports of 671,000 barrels a year ago.

Crude imports also advanced, rising to 5.1 million barrels daily from 3.6 million barrels daily the preceding week and 2.7 million barrels daily last year. Crude oil inventories increased to 323.9 million barrels from 322.2 million barrels a week ago but were below year-ago levels of 343 million barrels.

Jewelry firm files infringement suit

HOUSTON — Tiffany & Co. announced that it has filed a lawsuit for trademark infringement and unfair competition against persons doing business as "Tiffany Estate Buyers".

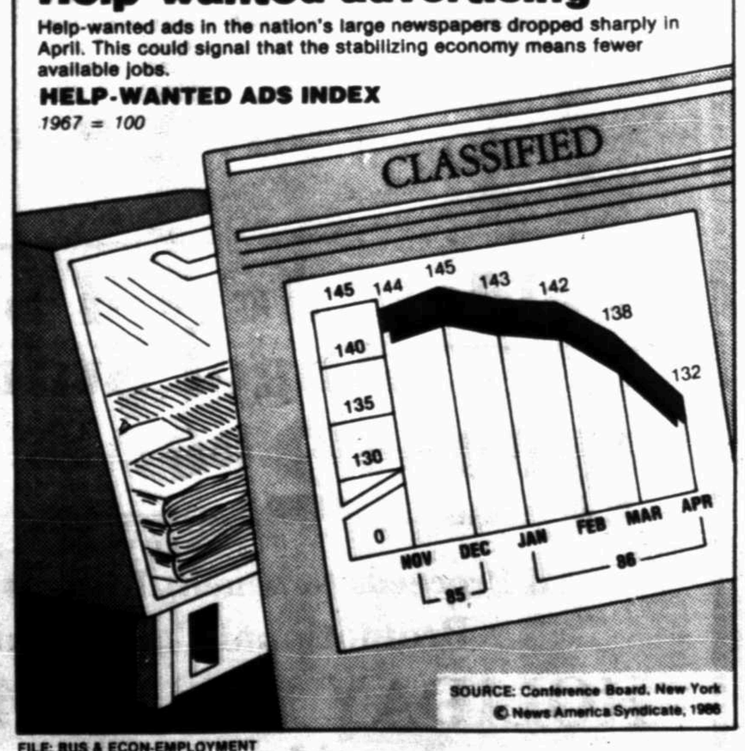

"Tiffany Estate Buyers" have no connection with Tiffany & Co., the world famous jeweler, but have been running full page newspaper ads in Texas offering to appraise and purchase jewelry.

"Tiffany Estate Buyers" operate from temporary quarters in hotels where they stage appraisal and buying events. Sharon Seline-Saper, divisional vice president, Houston Branch of Tiffany & Co. stated, "The lawsuit was instituted to protect the public from deception. It would be unfortunate if customers assumed that Tiffany & Co. was the sponsor of these so-called appraisals. Tiffany & Co., of course, operates only through established stores."

Help-wanted advertising

Help-wanted ads in the nation's large newspapers dropped sharply in April. This could signal that the stabilizing economy means fewer available jobs.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Applicant, Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., P.O. Box 3178, Midland, TX 79702, has made application for a spacing exception permit under the provisions of 16 Texas Administrative Code 3.37 (Railroad Commission Statewide Rule 37). Applicant seeks exception to the lease line distance rquirement to drill well No. 1, Jones "A" Lease, 55.7 Acres, 8, S.F. 15387, MA 43004 Survey, Spraberry (Trend Area) Field, Midland County, being 14 miles in a southeast direction from Midland, Texas.

The location of this well is as follows:

230' from east line and 2628' from north line of lease and survey. Field rules for the Spraberry (Trend Area) Field are 660/933, 80/160 Acres. This well is to be completed at an approximate depth of 8850 feet.

PURSUANT to the terms of Railroad Commission Statewide Rule 37(h)(2)(A), this permit may be granted administratively if no protest to the application is received. An offset mineral interest owner and lessee is entitled to request a hearing on this application. They must be prepared to appear at the hearing either in person or by qualified representative and protest this application through cross-examination or presentation of a direct case subject to all applicable rules of evidence. If a hearing is called, the burden of proof of the need for an exeption is placed on the applicant. A protestant should be prepared, however, to establish your standing to protest as an affected person, if challenged. If you have questions regarding why the applicant is seeking this exception, contact the Applicant's representative, Cindy Whiddon, Proration Analyst, at (915) 683-4768. If you have any questions regarding standing or other matters, please contact the Commission at (512) 463-6887.

IF YOU WISH TO REQUEST A HEARING ON THIS APPLICATION, YOU MUST FILL OUT, SIGN AND MAIL OR DELIVER TO THE AUSTIN OFFICE OF THE RAILROAD COMMISSION OF TEXAS NOTICE OF INTENT TO APPEAR IN PROTEST. A COPY OF THE INTENT TO APPEAR IN PROTEST MUST ALSO BE MAILED OR DELIVERED ON THE SAME DATE TO APPLICANT AT THE ADDRESS SHOWN ABOVE. THIS INTENT TO APPEAR IN PROTEST MUST BE RECEIVED IN THE RAILROAD COMMISSION'S AUSTIN OFFICE BY JULY 18, 1986. IF NO PROTEST IS RECEIVED BY SAID DATE, THE REQUESTED PERMIT WILL BE GRANTED ADMINSTRATIVELY, TO BE EFFECTIVE THE FOLLOWING DAY.

DALLAS (AP) — The last of the big cotton merchants is moving out of the Cotton Exchange Building, leaving the onetime hub of downtown business with only the memory of the days when it spun a vital thread in the cotton industry.

The exchange was built in 1926, serving as the center for Dallas' thriving cotton industry. But as cotton became less important to the area's economy, occupants moved out.

Bob Poteet, executive vice president of the Texas Cotton Association, one of the building's remaining tenants, remembers visiting the exchange in the late 1950s.

"It was a very bustling place," he said. "When I was growing up in West Texas on a cotton farm I used to hear the growers talk about taking their samples to the Dallas cotton exchange."

The exchange was closed in the mid-1960s when advances in technology meant cotton traders could punch up the markets on desktop computers, Poteet said. "The cotton firms that are here, of course, still operate, but not many of them are left."

Officials with the last big trader, Esteve Brothers & Co., self-described as one of the top 20 merchants in the country, said Monday they will move out to a new building in August.

In its heyday, the cotton exchange floor hummed with activity. Western Union was set up on one side of the floor to transmit the latest information from the New York Cotton Exchange. The information was posted up on a big board and principals from the firms watched the market.

Another wall held a bank of telephones used to give orders to buy or sell.

Poteet credits the decline of cotton's influence in Dallas to technological advancements making it possible to harvest cotton with fewer workers, the boll weevil, imports, synthetic fibers and the development of new grasses making cattle grazing popular in East Texas.

Poteet said Texas cotton output has stayed stable, with the state's crop comprising about one-third of the national total at 4 million bales annually.

"It merely takes less people to handle the bales than it used to," he said.

Synthetics cut into the cotton market during the 1960s and 1970s, but the population expanded, keeping the demand for cotton level, he said.

The natural fiber craze of this decade has boosted domestic demand, he said. In the early 1970s, cotton was used for 29 percent of domestic apparel. Figures released this week show cotton making up 40 percent of all apparel produced in the United States, he said.

But the industry has shifted from the blacklands surrounding Dallas, partly because of the scourge of the boll weevil and partly because of the development of new strains of grasses making cattle grazing a more attractive option, he said.

May shows decrease factory orders

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories for manufactured goods fell 0.1 percent in May despite a huge increase in demand for defense equipment, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that orders amounted to $193 billion on a seasonally adjusted basis in May. The decline followed a slight 0.1 percent increase in April and a big 2.8 percent drop in March.

The drop would have been an even sharper 1.3 percent decline without the strength in defense, the weakest showing since March.

Demand for military equipment rose 36.6 percent in May to $8.9 billion, reversing a 37.8 percent decline in April.

However, the closely watched category of non-defense capital goods inched up only 0.4 percent in May following two consecutive declines.

This category is watched for information it can give about industry plans to expand production facilities and hire more workers. Business investment has been weak all year in part because the oil and gas industry has cut back sharply on drilling plans due to the sharp decline in oil prices.

Orders for durable goods, items expected to last three or more years, edged down 0.1 percent in May. This was a downward revision from an advance report last week that had said orders rose 0.4 percent.

Orders for nondurable goods were unchanged in May at $89.4 billion following a 1.2 percent rise the month before.

The weakness this year in orders for manufactured goods has left them 4.1 percent below the record high of $201.2 billion set in December.

Oklahoma governor says energy policy answer to oilpatch troubles

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Gov. George Nigh says the rest of the country continues to turn a deaf ear to cries of impending doom from the oilpatch, and straightforward bills in Congress may be the petroleum industry's only hope.

"Frankly, we can't sell our position crying about how tough things are in Oklahoma ... I'd be crying all over every television screen," Nigh told a meeting of oilmen.

Instead, he said, representatives from other states must be shown the importance of the domestic petroleum industry to national security.

"It is a higher calling. It is the interest of the national defense and security," Nigh said.

Nigh spoke at a meeting called by Energy Security Policy, a Minneapolis, Minn., group started by Ray Plank, chairman and chief executive officer of Apache Corp.

Plank's group is traveling to cities with a large stake in the oil industry, encouraging oilmen to petition the president and Congress to enact a variable import fee on oil and petroleum products purchased from all foreign sources.

"I can't believe that we're redundant to the national interest," Plank said. "We don't have an energy policy. We ought to have one."

Nigh said oilmen and their representatives must lobby for "clean bills," setting forth what they see to be the nation's energy policy needs.

"We ought not to have any problem convincing this country to repeal the windfall profits tax" as a single piece of legislation, Nigh said.

But he said Congress must be presented with one-issue measures "where we don't mess them up with a bunch of garbage."

Nigh received polite response from about 100 oilmen who met at the Doubletree Hotel in Tulsa to discuss ways of preserving a stable domestic oil and gas industry.

It was Nigh's first speech before a group of oilmen since he vetoed a state energy package last week in a move widely criticized by those in the petroleum industry.

Nigh, who along with other governors from oil-producing states met with President Reagan recently, said public officials and oilmen must work to dispel the perceptions of the oil boom that began to trail off in 1982.

"We have an image problem now," Nigh said. "And I think it's an image that isn't deserved.

"I think that our problem is that everyone has this perception of that great television series 'Dallas.'"

Nigh said officials from states outside the Oil Belt remember "Let 'em freeze in the dark" bumper stickers, referring to petroleum shortages in the wake of the Arab oil embargo of the mid-1970s.

He said most officials from oil-consuming states choose not to see past current lower oil prices and do not pay attention to warnings from oil producers that shortages loom in the future.

ITT

The newly created company would include ITT's holdings in telecommunications and business systems companies in Europe, the United States, Africa and the Middle East, Latin America, Canada and the Asia-Pacific region. ITT would also contribute its European-based consumer-product companies.

The new company would be managed by CGE, with Araskog serving as chairman of its board of directors.

Araskog said the company remained committed to System 12, its sophisticated central-office switch, which is sold to phone companies for use in routing calls. ITT took a $105 million writeoff earlier this year when it withdrew the switch from the U.S. market because of technical problems.

The $350 million in debt that will be paid off as part of the $1.8 billion payment to ITT consists of money owed to various units of ITT by the units that are being placed in the joint venture.

Miss Neves said ITT officials told her the joint venture would assume debt listed on the balance sheets of the various ITT units consisting of $840 million in long-term debt and $500 million in short-term debt.

Standard Oil puts four businesses up for sale

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Standard Oil Co. said it will sell four industrial products businesses in an effort to streamline operations.

The companies, Dorr-Oliver, Pfaudler, Electro Minerals and Proppants, had combined revenues of $420 million in 1985, compared with Standard's overall 1985 revenues of $13.8 billion. No timetable was set for the sale.

"These businesses are viable enterprises with strong competitive positions," Standard Oil chairman Robert B. Horton said Wednesday. "We are continuing to operate them normally and it is planned that they be sold as going business concerns."

Horton said most of the operations were showing improved results in 1986 and could prosper under the right buyers.

Dorr-Oliver, based in Stamford, Conn., has three groups which work primarily in the filtration and thermal systems businesses.

Pfaudler, based in Rochester, N.Y., is a leading maker of glass-lined steel reactor vessels for use in the specialty chemicals, pharmaceuticals and engineered plastics industries.

Electro Minerals makes silicon carbide and aluminum oxide for the abrasives, refractory and metallurgical markets.

Proppants, based in Dallas, makes a product used to enhance the productivity of deep oil and natural gas wells.

The companies have a combined employment of 5,300, with 3,200 of those workers in the U.S., Standard Oil said.

Storage tank explosion injures six

MILFORD, Iowa (AP) — A 500,000-gallon gasoline storage tank being cleaned at a pipeline company exploded Wednesday and injured six workers, two seriously, officials said.

Fumes from gasoline that had been stored in the tank at Williams Brothers Pipeline Co. ignited, blowing the top off, said Dickinson County Sheriff Wendell Kilts.

Jerry Corbett, an agent with the state fire marshal's office, described the blast as a "gas vapor flash explosion."

This colorful outburst last Sunday at Angels Stadium is just a prelude to the fireworks festivities set for tonight, also at Angels Stadium.

Sesquicentennial Wagon train ends at historic Stockyards

FORT WORTH (AP) — After six months and 3,000 dusty miles, the Texas Sesquicentennial wagon train came home Thursday.

A torrential downpour sputtered and grudgingly yielded to sunshine as 150 wagons and 1,000 horses paraded through downtown Fort Worth in a four-mile long procession that ended at the city's historic Stockyards.

Near Billy Bob's Texas, the "last official act" of the wagon train that began Jan. 2 in Sulphur Springs came when Billy Bob Barnett's horse was shod with a golden horseshoe and silver nails.

Weary-but-exuberant trail riders were greeted by thousands of spectators who lined Fort Worth's streets, waving Sesquicentennial flags and yelling cheers as the train lumbered through town.

"We are proud of you," one said. "Welcome home!"

"How did you do it?" wondered another.

"This is what Texas is all about," Fort Worth Mayor Bob Bolen crowed at the procession's end.

The grand finale of a project several critics said would never work lasts through today with concerts, dances, shows and a street festival that coincides with Independence Day.

A few of the wagon train participants will go on to Saginaw on Saturday, but for most, this was the end of the line.

"I'm glad to be going home," said Bessie Williams of Donaldson, Ark., who made the entire trip. "It was a great experience, expecially the people, but the Texas heat can be hard to bear."

"Yeah, it's sad," agreed James Simmons of New Boston, Texas. "I really enjoyed seeing kids all along the route, some crying, some waving, some laughing.

"And after all," he added as his homemade wagon rolled along a city street, "this whole thing is for them so they'll rmember and have a part of Texas history."

They also will have a part of Texas memorabilia — volunteers handed out thousands of tiny flags to beaming children and adults who weren't any better at concealing their smiles.

"Gracious, I've never seen so many smiling faces at one time," said Simmons' wife, Merle.

For many of the participants in the caravan that included representatives from 29 states, Friday will be a day of parting from friends they made aboard the train.

"But it was a step into history, and we were a part of it," said Vera Burg of Euless. "I was used to seeing Texas at 55 mph on a highway, but this time I got to see the history in each town."

The trip also gave spectators along the route a glimpse of Texas' past when pioneers piled their possessions into a wagon and rolled west.

"It's neat. Can I ride, Mommy?" 4-year-old Justin Clements implored.

The train also had its tragedies. A traffic accident killed one woman near San Antonio and a heart attack killed another.

The husband and children of the woman who died in the accident rode her wagon Thursday, determined to see the trip through.

That doggedness kept the train going through times when the number of wagons dropped to 30 from the 80 that started.

Texans think Sesquicentennial more important than Liberty's birthday

AUSTIN (AP) — Among native Texans, 50.9 percent think this year's celebration of the state's 150th anniversary of independence from Mexico is more important than the 100th birthday of the Statue of Liberty, according to a recent poll.

Among those who have lived in the state for less than three years, however, only 16.7 percent consider the Texas Sesquicentennial more important.

When responses were tabulated from all 606 persons people, including those living in Texas for varying periods of time, the Sesquicentennial trailed the Statue of Liberty celebration in importance 46.4 percent to 42.2 percent.

Of those polled, 11.4 percent did not know which was most important or refused to answer.

The poll was conducted for the Foundation for Education on Free Enterprise, Inc., a recently established tax-exempt organization that says its activities will include research and publication of information on how the free enterprise system relates to Texas.

Foundation spokesman Joe Wyatt, a former Texas congressman, said the poll was done by Arthur J. Finkelstein & Associates, an Irvington, N.Y., firm that interviewed 606 Texas registered voters June 14-19.

Asked "What single person from the state of Texas, living or deceased, do you most admire?" 17.3 percent named the late President Lyndon B. Johnson and 12.2 percent said Sam Houston, former Texas revolutionary war hero and later president of the Republic of Texas and governor and U.S. senator of the state of Texas.

Third on the list of most admired Texans were "my parents," 7.6 percent. Former congresswoman Barbara Jordan was fourth, 5.7 percent, and Gov. Mark White was fifth, 5.4 percent.

"Interestingly enough," Wyatt said, "when we asked people what they liked the most about living in Texas and what they liked the least about the Lone Star State, the answer was the same — the weather."

The poll showed 25.2 percent mentioned "weather-environment" when asked what they liked most about Texas, and 28.6 percent said "heat-humidity" when asked what they liked least, with 18.8 percent mentioning "weather-environment."

The economy was rated the "most important issue" facing the state — 21.8 percent; followed by the oil industry, 17.0; education, 10.7; and unemployment, 10.1 percent.

Drug abuse workshop scheduled

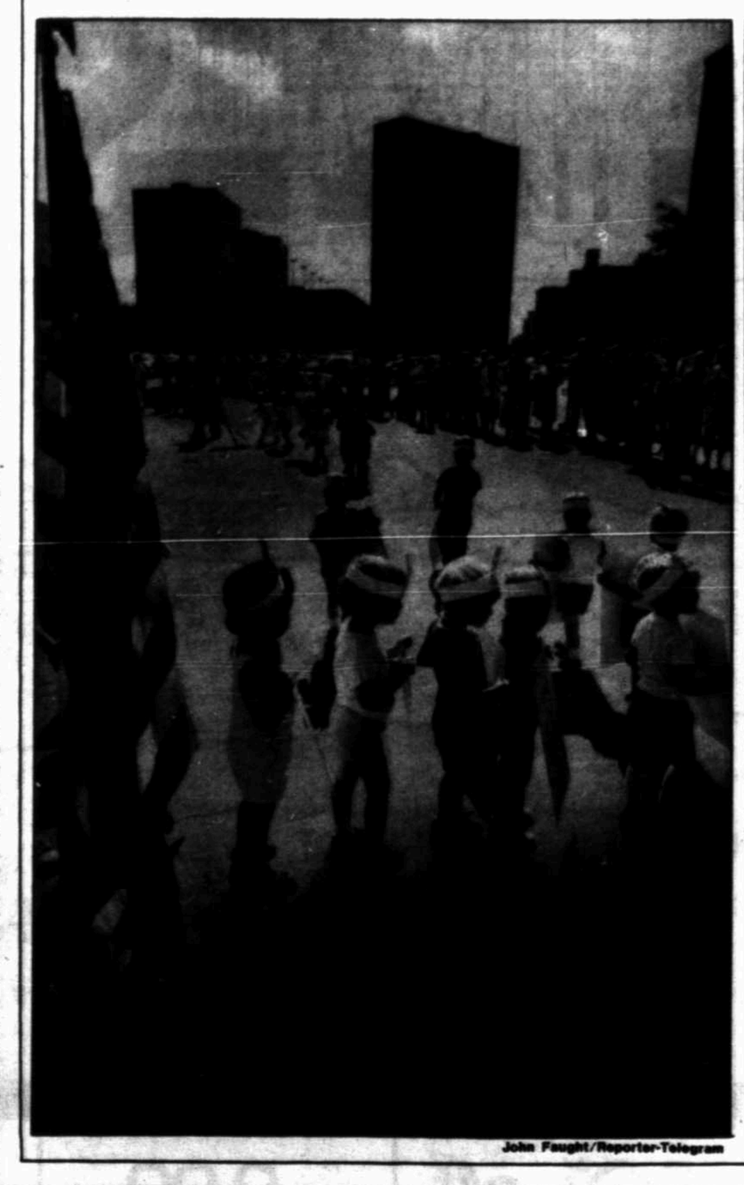

From Staff Reports

Nearly 60 Midland extracurricular activity sponsors and students will take part in a two-day workshop designed to heighten awareness about the effects of drug abuse.

Conducted by the Johnston Institute, the workshop will from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday in the Midland College Health/Science Lecture Hall and help participants better understand the problems and pitfalls of dealing with students who are involved or might become involved with mind altering drugs.

Participants will include an athletic booster club parent from each high school, a band parent from each high school, drill team, pep club and student council sponsors from each high school, band directors from each secondary school, three coaches from each high school, two coaches from each freshman high school, two coaches from each junior high school, the school district athletic director, two Midland public school drug counselors, and a band student and athlete from each secondary school.

The workshop is sponsored through private contributions from Midland Council Against Substance Abuse Inc., Neighbors Against Burglaries and Drugs, the Lions Club and Clearview Behavioral Health Center.

Ector officer accepts blame for dismissal

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Sheriff Bob Brookshire Thursday said Criminal Investigation Division Head Capt. Gene Kloss has accepted the blame for a mistake that led Wednesday to the dismissal of a murder charge against a 35-year-old man accused of killing a 29-year-old woman north of Odessa in 1984.

In a letter to Brookshire, Kloss, who is on vacation, stated that he had inadvertently handed over a videotape to Department of Human Services representatives to tape record a statement with a complaining witness in another case.

As it turned out, the videotape contained a hypnotic interview with a then-27-year-old witness, James Michael Puga, who identified Henry Lee Hill as the killer of Janet Gregston. As the new interview was done, the one with Puga was erased.

District Attorney Eric Augesen Wednesday indicated only a few minutes of the interview with Puga remained on the videotape. Brookshire and Indentification-Records Division Capt. Larry Crawford, who conducted the hypnotic session with Puga, disputed Augesen's statement.

In an interview Thursday afternoon, Brookshire said the portion of the tape relating to Puga's description of Hill and the circumstances of Mrs. Gregston's death remained intact.

However, he said, because the first portion of the taped interview was missing defense attorneys would be unable to determine if the interviewer had in any way prompted Puga to answer questions in a certain way to implicate Hill.

In a statement released today by Hill's attorney, Jim Bobo, Bobo said, "Because of the possibility of suggestive material being injected into a hypnotic session the state, if it wants to use the testimony of the witness, must be able to prove that the hypnotic session was not tainted or suggestive in any manner."

"Since the videotape has been destroyed in this case and no other means of recording was used, such as a court reporter or a tape recorder, the testimony of the witness will not be available," the statement said.

Bobo went on to say that 70th District Court Judge Gene Ater "had no choice but to suppress the evidence based on any of the three recognized case law theories regarding hypnotic testimony."

Following the hypnotic session, Puga helped investigators prepare a composite drawing of the man he accused of killing Mrs. Gregston and, on Nov. 20 and Nov. 27, 1984, signed two separate statements identifying Hill as the man he saw with her in the area where her body was found.

But, because the composite drawing and two statements were made after the hypnotic sessions they could not be used due to the erasure of the first part of the videotape recorded interview.

Bobo also contends Hill has been misidentified as the suspect in the murder case and that Puga tried several times to tell Ector County sheriff's deputies that he was not positive the man he saw was Hill.

Monnie Weddel, then with the Ector County sheriff's office and chief investigator in the Gregston slaying, said he had many conversations with Puga during the course of the investigation.

Many respondents think patriotism becoming commercialized

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Many corporations have capitalized on the resurgent popularity of patriotism in the United States using American themes to sell their products.

A sample of 13 people was asked this week if they thought the idea of patriotism was becoming too commercialized.

Eight of the 13 said "yes."

"I think it's a little bit more commercialized than it used to be with everybody looking out for the dollar instead of what our country means to us," said Margi Norwood, a co-owner of an auto electric shop.

Chemistry professor Herb Hill, of Washington, said, "I think the problem with flag waving, etc., is a superficial form of patriotism. Patriotism has to do with freedom and democracy. These are the kind of things one should be concerned with on a worldwide basis.

"Patriotism is generally almost anti-American in that we are the police of the world. We are the only right country. I think we have to be careful about the tradition of partriotism."

Dare Rosebery, 14 Saddle Club Drive, said she believes patriotism has become too commercialized.

"We've all gotten to take the 4th of July for granted," said Ms. Roseberry, who will be attending the University of Pennsylvania. "I don't think anybody ever thinks about the real meaning of the holiday. It's time to think about how lucky we are for the freedom we have."

Margi Norwood

Herb Hill

Dare Roseberg

Doris Bell

Leon Clark of Hobbs also said patriotism is too commercialized.

"I don't think they teach the kids patriotism like they used to. I don't think they stress it in the schools," said Clark, an administrative assistant for a pipeline company.

Eighth-grader Grant Bongio, 5013 Greentree Blvd., said patriotism is used by some car dealers to pressure people into buying American made cars.

"They say either buy this car or you're a Russian."

Others, however, said they didn't think patriotism has become too commercialized.

"I think it's good for us to be reminded of it. Commercials jog us a little bit when we tend to get a little bit complaisant," said Doris Bell, 1603 Neely, a retired nurse.

Carolyn Nichols, 2507 Camarie, said, "It's more important for a person now than it was 10 years ago." She said people are not afraid to take pride in their country now with Vietnam War over with. Ms. Nichols is self-employed.

Janet Clark, 3700 Oakmont, said the idea of patriotism has improved and not become commercialized.

"Back in the '60s it was like a dirty word to sing the national anthem and say you loved your country. I believe people are more patriotic now. I think we need more of it." Ms. Clark is a homemaker.

Shonie Cook, Midland, said she did not think patriotism had become commercialized, explaining that people did not appreciate the meaning of the 4th of July.

"I don't think people are patriotic today as they once were. It's more of a day off from work than it is a day to reflect what freedom means," said Ms. Cook, a salesperson.

DEATHS

Tim Harlan

Services for Tim Harlan of Midland will be at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in the Ellis Funeral Home chapel. Interment will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Harlan died at a San Antonio hospital Wednesday following a lengthy illness.

Ruth Kuykendall

Ruth Kuykendall, 87, of Midland died at a local hospital following a lengthy illness.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Waldrope Funeral Home Chapel in Llano. Local arrangements were handled by Thomas Funeral Home.

Mrs. Kuykendall was born July 17, 1898 in Llano. She had been a resident of Midland for the past 10 years.

She was preceeded in death by her husband, Martin Kuykendall, who died in 1976.

Survivors include her daughter, Maxine Hill of Midland; two sons, Donald Kuykendall of Midland and Martin Kuykendall of Italy; and five grandchildren.

Ruth Montgomery

Ruth N. Montgomery, 86, of Midland died Wednesday in a Midland hospital after an illness.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Saturday in Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home Chapel in Odessa with entombment in Sunset Mausoleum.

She was born July 16, 1899 in Crothersville, Ind. She was married to John B. Montgomery May 9, 1924 in Tulsa, Okla. She moved to Midland in 1973 from Tulsa. Her husband died in 1975. She was honored by the State of Oklahoma for her community service.

Survivors include a son, Robert D. Montgomery of Odessa; a daughter, Ruth Valla of Odessa; and two grandchildren.

William Costin

KERRVILLE — Services for William Berry "Buck" Costin, 75, of Kerrville will be at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Kerrville Funeral Home Chapel.

Burial will follow in the Garden of Memories cemetery in Kerrville.

Costin died Thursday morning at his home.

He was born Sept. 30, 1910 in Westbrook. He married Eva Grubb July 9, 1937 in Crane. A Kerrville resident for 10 years, he pioneered the oil fields in Westbrook and Midland for most of his life. He was also active in many phases of the drilling industry.

Survivors include his wife Eva of Kerrville, one sister Janyce Williams of Archer City; two half sisters, Inez Schrborough of Monahans and Frances Beasley of Alvin; one cousin and numerous nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be sent to the Heart of the Hills Hospice in Kerrville.

John Billings

BIG SPRING — Services are set for 2 p.m. Saturday in the Nalley-Pickle and Welch Rosewood Chapel in Big Spring for John Billings, 51, who died Thursday afternoon at his home in Odessa following an illness.

Rev. Bobby Phillips, minister of the Vine Baptist Church in Odessa, will officiate, with interment to follow in Trinity Memorial Park in Big Spring.

Billings was born on Dec. 24, 1934 in Stamford and married the former Bobbie Stallcup on June 12, 1954 in Vincent.

He was a member of the Vine Baptist Church in Odessa, Masonic Lodge No. 955 in Odessa, the Scottish Rite of El Paso and the Ector County Sheriff's Posse.

Survivors include his wife, Bobbie Billings of Odessa; one daughter, Shelley Register of Odessa; two sons, Mark Billings and Terry Billings, both of Odessa; his mother, Mrs. Leona Wheeler of Midland; one brother, Ken Billings of Midland and seven grandchildren.

Ramona Dominguez rings in the 100th birthday of her own "liberty bell."

Woman has own 'liberty bell'

From Staff Reports

Antique collector Mrs. Louis Dominguez will celebrate the 100th birthday of something besides the Statue of Liberty today.

Her own "liberty bell" that stands proudly in her backyard at 1100 E. Spruce Ave., was made 100 years ago in Hillsboro, Ohio, by the C.S. Bell & Co.

Identification on the bell indicates it is a "Crystal Metal No. 2 Upright Yoke" style, but Ms. Dominguez admits she doesn't know much about its origin prior to the date 10 years ago when she bought it at a garage sale in Midland for $20. Research indicated the manufactuer is not in business in Hillsboro any longer.

"But I just know it has to have some kind of history behind it," she says with a proud smile.

Ms. Dominguez, a third generation Midlander, says antiques are a hobby of hers and she always wanted a bell for her backyard.

Her husband painted the heavy-looking iron bell red for the Fourth of July and she plans, as is custom at the Dominguez home, to ring it loud and clear when the backyard barbeque is ready to begin this afternoon.

It emits a rather loud noise, but this doesn't bother her, even though she says her grandchildren are fond of clanging and banging it at all hours.

Golfers to help Crime Stoppers

From Staff Reports

Some 200 golfers are expected to participate in The Honda of Midland Crime Stoppers Golf Tournament which will be held for the third straight year at the Mission Country Club Monday, July 28, it was announced Thursday.

The tournament, which raised about $5,000 last year, is the largest annual fund-raiser for the Midland Crime Stoppers, Sheriff Gary Painter said.

"We certainly appreciate the sponsors for this event, Honda of Midland, Mission Country Club and the HBF Corp.," Painter said. "It is certainly one of the most worthwhile things sponsored for the law enforcement effort. People can get involved with the crime-fighting effort without having to be identified.

"I'm very proud of the job being done by those involved with the program, and very, very proud that they are working very hard to get narcotics off the street."

Doug Smith, golf director at the club, said the tournament will be a four-man scramble format with no handicap limit. The entry fee is $65 per person, which Smith said includes the green fee, golf cart, and a lunch at the club with a spouse or guest.

Prizes, including a 1986 Honda Accord and $30,000 cash, will be awarded to the first person making hole-in-ones on designated holes. Other prizes, including custom golf bags, a roundtrip ticket on Southwest Airlines for two to Las Vegas, and microwave ovens, will also be awarded.

Those interested in signing up, including members of the media who will compete in a special category, can phone 69-HONDA for information, Doug Smith at 561-8811, or Midland Crime Stoppers.

Water deliveries down for June

From Staff Reports

Deliveries by the Colorado River Municipal Water District took the worst one-month drop on record in June.

Economics may have had some slight effect, but continuous rains cut sharply into municipal demands which plummeted 31.18 percent, according to a press release from the district's headquarters.

City customers took only 1,320,289,500 gallons in June, 616,426,000 less than for the same month last year. Oil companies dropped 8,609,000 gallons or 4.70 percent, making total deliveries of 1,494,764,440 gallons, down 29.49 percent, the press release stated.

Part of the decrease resulted from San Angelo's good fortune in catching a net of 23,245 acre feet in its reservoirs and thus dropping its draw on CRMWD's Lake Spence to 27,657,300 gallons, or by 84.49 percent.

On the plus side for the district, Lakes J.B. Thomas and Spence gained 53,120 acre feet, officials said.

During June, Big Spring took 231,706,000 gallons, down 27.49 percent; Midland 397,710,000 gallons, down 5.18 percent; Odessa 568,589,000 gallons, down 33.96 percent; Snyder, 88,198,000 gallons, down 32.89 percent; Stanton, 6,429,000 gallons, down 50.94 percent. Robert Lee, which took 14,192,000 gallons in June of 1985, used none this June.

The sharp volume drop, however, did not have a commensurate effect on revenues because of previous rate adjustments and fixed charges.

The total of $1,077,476 was down only $66,963 for the month, or 5.85 percent.

Weddel said at no time did Puga ever tell him there was any question in his mind about Hill being the man he saw with Mrs. Gregston the night she was killed.

In a statement signed Nov. 20, 1984, Puga stated, "On Tuesday, November 6, 1984, I went to Neal's Health Studio to work out. When I entered the studio I did see a man whom I believe is the same one I saw on August 21, 1984. Unlike any other suspect in the past, this man really caught my attention."

Puga went on to say Weddel showed him pictures of a group of men and one was of the man he had seen at Neal's. Weddel also played a tape recording of Hill's voice and Puga said, "I would like to say that the voice of Henry Hill and that of the man whom I saw on August 21, 1984 are the same."

Brookshire said he has tried repeatedly to contact Puga to find out who, if anyone, he tried to talk to about not being sure of the identification of Hill.

The sheriff said he had talked to all his deputies and no one remembers Puga trying to talk to them.

Brookshire stated he had the utmost confidence in Weddel's integrity. "If he had any information questioning the identification of Hill he would have acted on it," the sheriff stated.

Bobo, in his Thursday statement, said, "A lineup was held regarding Henry Hill on Nov. 27, 1984, and at that point in time the witness (Puga) identified Henry Hill. Two days later the eyewitness contacted the Ector County Sheriff's Department to advise them that he had just seen the man who had slain Janet Gregston continuing to work out at Neal's Health Studio and was advised that they had arrested the man he had identified two days earlier."

Contending no action was ever taken concerning the fact the wrong man was in custody, Bobo said, the composite drawing of the suspect in the Gregston slaying showed a man with a moustache. "Henry Hill has never had a moustache and has always been clean shaven."

Concerning a request for information about Mrs. Gregston's killer published in the Feb. 13, 1986 Texas Department of Public Safety Criminal Alert System Bulletin, Brookshire said he had no idea why the information had been submitted by Lt. Jerry Davis.

Davis and another deputy had gone to East Texas on a case, the sheriff said, and he would not be able to talk with Davis until he returned.

Concerning the erased tape that led to dismissal of the murder charge against Hill, Brookshire said there is no doubt the fault lies with his office. He said, however, he has taken steps to assure such an incident is never repeated, He said new procedures for handling evidence have been implemented.

The sheriff also said that the Gregston murder case has been reopened and new evidence will be sought, though he admitted a nearly two-year-old trail will be hard to follow.

Hill, who had spent close to two years incarcerated, walked out of the Ector County Courthouse a free man late Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Gregston's body was found in the late afternoon hours of Aug. 21, 1984 north of Odessa on Loop 338, east of the Andrews Highway. According to Lt. Jerry Davis, she had been stabbed 20 times and her throat had been slashed. She was eight months pregnant at the time of her death.

Yarbrough pleads guilty to conspiracy, bribery charges

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Texas Supreme Court Justice Donald B. Yarbrough pleaded guilty Thursday to federal charges of conspiracy and bribery involving a money-laundering scheme for drugs.

His guilty pleas, entered before U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald, were in exchange for reduced charges. Under the plea bargain, two other bribery charges were dropped and the government agreed to not file further charges.

Yarbrough, 44, agreed to plead guilty after deciding the government's videotaped evidence left him without a defense, said Mike Brown, his court-appointed attorney.

He also "didn't want to submit his family to a long and embarrassing trial," Brown said.

Yarbrough, who was elected to the state's highest court in 1976, now faces up to 10 years in prison and $500,000 in fines. Sentencing is scheduled for Aug. 28.

The ex-justice is hoping to be sent to an out-of-state prison, if the judge rejects a request for probation, Brown said. He is already on parole on a previous bond jumping conviction.

U.S. Attorney Henry Oncken said he was surprised at Yarbrough's plea.

"I didn't anticipate originally that he'd plead guilty," Oncken said.

Yarbrough spent five years as a fugitive on the island of Grenada after being convicted of a state perjury charge. Last April, he was indicted by a federal grand jury along with George Neeley, 50, on charges they offered bribes to a bank president in a money-laundering scheme.

Neely, a Houston used car salesman, also entered into a plea bargain by pleading guilty to one count of conspiracy. He faces up to five years in prison and $250,000 fines. Sentencing was scheduled for Aug. 29.

Neely and Yarbrough met through their dentist and Neely later sold Yarbrough a used car, said public defender Tom Berg, who represented Neely.

Yarbrough was arrested in the lobby of a downtown Houston hotel after allegedly arranging a $1 million deal with undercover agents posing as cocaine dealers.

The government's evidence included tape recordings of Yarbrough negotiating a $1 million money laundering deal with undercover agents wearing hidden microphones, Assistant U.S. Attorney John Lenoir said.

Yarbrough was convicted in state court in 1978 of lying to a grand jury investigating allegations he planned to have a South Texas banker killed to keep him from testifying in a civil lawsuit.

He was allowed to attend medical school in Grenada while free on appeal bond, but did not return for further judicial proceedings. He was arrested in 1983 on the Caribbean island of St. Vincent, returned to Texas and sentenced to seven years in prison for jumping bond.

The investigation of Yarbrough's latest troubles began in November 1984, just two weeks after he was paroled from a Texas prison, authorities said.

Yarbrough resigned six months after his election to the Texas Supreme Court as the Legislature prepared impeachment proceedings. Many observers credited his election to the state's high court on voter confusion, who thought they were voting for Ralph Yarborough, a former U.S. senator from Texas.

Lizard fossil found in North Texas

McKINNEY (AP) — A sculptor who was out on a hike discovered the skeleton of an 80 million-year-old seagoing lizard, believed to be 100 percent complete, in a creek bed in North Texas, paleontologists say.

The fossil remains are of a mosasaur, a large aquatic reptile distantly related to the monitor lizards of present-day Africa and Asia.

Volunteers and staff from the Dallas Museum of Natural History uncovered portions of the head and tail Wednesday. Sections of backbone and ribs were excavated earlier in the week from the site, located just south of McKinney.

"I don't know if anything's missing," said Charles Finsley, the museum's curator of sciences. "It seems to be 100 percent complete. You can't get much better than that."

Paleontologists usually consider themselves lucky if they find 60 percent of a skeleton, Finsley said.

Mosasaurs became extinct at about the same time as dinosaurs, about 65 million years ago, according to Finsley. With their slender, snake-like bodies, their paddle-shaped limbs and long, toothy jaws, mosasaurs were particularly adapted for life in shallow seas, Finsley said.

The newly discovered carcass probably sank to the bottom about 80 million years ago, when most of Texas was beneath an extension of the Gulf of Mexico, Finsley said.

The fossil was found about two weeks ago by Sandy Stein, who said she spotted a three-foot section of backbone in the rock.

"At first I thought it was a big fat tree root," Ms. Stein said. "Then I saw a vertebra. I ran all the way back to my studio and called the museum. That was Thursday. They were out here by Friday morning."

This is not the Museum of Natural History's first mosasaur, nor its largest. The 32-foot Heath Mosasaur, discovered seven years ago on the shores of Lake Ray Hubbard east of Dallas, went on exhibit in the museum's lobby earlier this year.

However, the new mosasaur is important because it is of a different species and is located in a layer of rock, Austin chalk, where very few fossils of any reptiles have been found, Finsley said.

"Austin limestone is the hardest rock we have in this area," he said. "When it breaks it cracks every which direction."

As a result, all of the excavating work has to be done by hand, he said.

Driver admits to killing truck's owner

EL PASO (AP) — Authorities stumbled on a slaying after the driver of a pickup truck, pulled over on a traffic violation, said he stole the vehicle and killed its owner, police said.

Terry Lee Brown, 36, of Swepsonville, N.C., was held at the El Paso County Jail in lieu of $75,000 bond on police charges of being a fugitive from justice for auto theft, said Jerry Tolbert, an investigator with the Texas Department of Public Safety.

The body of a woman found some 38 miles south of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, was identified Thursday as that of Elizabeth Ann Canfield, 74, of Upton, Wyo., said Robert Burton, assistant district attorney in Kootenai County, Idaho.

Idaho authorities searched the area based on information provided by Brown, Tolbert said. Officials were uncertain whether the death occurred in Montana or Idaho and charges in the slaying would not be filed until jurisdiction was determined, Burton said.

The body was found Wednesday morning in the brush along Idaho Highway 3 in northwestern Idaho, Burton said.

"According to the autopsy, the cause of death apparently was asphyxiation due to strangulation," said Kootenai County Sheriff Merf Stalder. "When it happened, we don't know."

Burton said the autopsy indicated the woman, who was found fully clothed, had been dead for at least 24 hours. The pickup truck was reported stolen in Upton on June 29, said Burton.

There is the possibility that Ms. Canfield may have been kidnapped or that she picked up a hitchhiker, Burton said, adding that the investigation was continuing.

Brown was pulled over by a trooper on Interstate 10 east of this border city at about 10:30 p.m. MDT Tuesday and arrested for speeding and driving while intoxicated.

"It started as just a routine traffic stop," said Tolbert. "He just volunteered the information."

'Dapper Bandit' robs two more Fort Worth banks

FORT WORTH (AP) — The "Dapper Bandit," who authorities say had struck 16 times in eight years, has robbed two more banks and his identity remains a mystery, police say.

An examination of bank camera film shows the man, who wears business suits, robbed Fort Worth banks Friday and Monday, authorities said. Less than $40,000 was taken in the two robberies, police said.

Police say they are no closer to identifying the man than they were Sept. 18, 1978, when they believe he robbed his first bank in north Dallas.

"We flat don't know anything about him, except that we've got a lot of pictures of him," said Bill Hamby, a police robbery analyst.

The man, who apparently wears a false mustache and a dark wig, has bandages at various points on his face, apparently to distract witnesses. He carries a chrome-plated revolver and a satchel. He always wears a coat and tie and dark glasses, authorities say.

Officers say his methods have not changed since he was last in the area, in August, when he robbed two Dallas banks in one day.

The man disarms a security guard, leaps over the teller counter. After emptying drawers, he jumps back over and flees in a stolen car. The cars are always found near the banks, leading officers to believe the man has an accomplice.

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER, national anthem of the United States, was approved by an act of Congress on March 3, 1931. It was written by Francis Scott Key on board the British frigate SURPRISE, during the bombardment of Fort McHenry, Md., by the British in 1814. Key, under a flag of truce, had boarded the SURPRISE to plead for the release of a friend held prisoner by the British, and was detained aboard during the attack. The sight of the flag still flying on the following morning inspired him to write "THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER." It was first sung in a tavern near the Holiday Street Theatre, Baltimore.

European wheat farmers on heels of U.S. producers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new study by Cornell University says there is no magic bullet that will slay European dragons bent upon eating away at grain export markets held or sought by American farmers.

The Reagan administration and Congress, in designing the Food Security Act of 1985, held dear the concept that reduced federal price supports will make U.S. grain more competitive on the world trading floor, thus causing exports to increase and farmers prosper.

But the Cornell study said the European Community, recently expanded to a 12-nation trading bloc, is coming along fast as a competitor of American farmers in selling grain, particularly wheat.

Many European farmers are more efficient than American producers by producing grain at less cost. Also, the EC has an intricate and expensive system for supporting the production and export of farm commodities.

Based on recent trends, the report said, the EC could wrest the position of the world's second-ranking exporter from Canada before the end of the 1980s on a regular basis.

"It is not difficult to imagine the EC as the world's leading exporter of wheat in the 1990s if recently enacted legislation in the United States and current policy in the community are maintained, and assuming production quotas are put in place in the United States late in this decade without similar action in the newly expanded community," the report said.

The study included these points:

— The dilemma with grain surpluses and excess production capacity in Western Europe and North America is very real and not easily resolved.

— Western European wheat and barley producers, particularly those with large farms in France and Great Britain, have attained a high degree of technical efficiency in production. Their costs are quite competitive with those of North American producers.

— The EC now has an export surplus in both wheat and feed grain, and that surplus is likely to continue to grow, given the current EC agricultural policy.

— Unilateral action by the United States is unlikely to solve the excess of supply over demand in international markets. Reductions in supply by the United States reduces pressure on producers in other countries to make similar cutbacks in supply.

— Greater understanding of the forces that encourage additional production in major exporting countries and the political climate for agricultural policy decisions is necessary. A return to negotiation and discussion of issues is preferable to trade wars.

The report said wheat is the most important cereal crop grown in the EC countries, and it has been the most profitable crop on most grain farms. Yields have increased at an average rate of 3 percent per year.

In 1984-85, the EC's wheat output was shown at 76.2 million tons. The U.S. output was 70.6 million tons.

"Thus, in 1984-85, EC farmers produced more wheat than did Americans for the first time since the opening of the American West more than 100 years ago," the report said.

Basic production systems are different on the two sides of the Atlantic, with areas of higher rainfall dominant in much of the community's soft winter wheat area. In the major U.S. wheat areas, including the Great Plains, rainfall is often a limiting factor, and hard winter and hard spring wheat varieties are more important.

Plants getting too much rain yellow from lack of oxygen

Plants need rain to grow and produce, but lately many have gotten too much of a good thing. The result has been some stunting and yellowing of crops and garden plants. This is caused mainly by lack of oxygen to the plant's root system as a result of water-logged soils. Thus, the plant is unable to function properly and to take up nutrients from the soil. Consequently, plants may not bear as well and may not live as long as under more normal conditions.

Little can be done now to gardens and fields affected by wet weather problems. However, good drainage is important, along with planting on raised beds.

Plant disaese problems generally increase during periods of high rainfall and high humidity, including a wide range of leaf spots and fruit rots that infect such crops as tomatoes. Applying a foliar fungicide at regular intervals as specified on the product label will help keep certain disease problems under control.

Keeping abreast of weather conditions is important for plant disease control. Morning dews are the same as rain and can cause an increase in disease problems.

During the hot, dry summer, farm fish ponds often suffer from oxygen depletion, and the result is fish die-off.

Oxygen depletion can result from a combination of factors, some of which cannot be controlled by the pond owner. One of these is the weather. Hot, still and cloudy conditions do little to generate oxygen production in a farm pond. In fact, this condition can cause die-offs of oxygen-producing phytoplankton, which may further increase oxygen debt. In addition, cold heavy rain can cause a pond to turn over, which further increases oxygen demand and the liklihood of a depletion.

A pond owner can do several things to lessen the liklihood of an oxygen depletion. One is to maintain fish populations below 1,000 pounds per surface acre. This can be a problem for pond owners managing intensively for catfish in small ponds. Weed control in the spring rather than summer will also help reduce oxygen depletion. If weed control treatments are necessary, make spot treatments to prevent too much plant decomposition at one time.

If oxygen depletion is an immediate concern, the oxygen level can be increased by pumping water from near the surface and spraying it back over the pond. Another option is to back a boat and trailer into the water and use the ooutboard motor to circulate the water. Remember, these corrective techniques are treatments and really do little to solve the real problem. If the cause of an oxygen depletion is man made, take appropriate corrective action.

Hot, dry weather lies ahead, and oxygen depletion problems will only increase. Proper management now may prevent dead fish later on.

Earnest C. Kiker is Midland County Extension Agent for Agriculture.

Siberian fields blamed

In 1978, Soviet officials blamed the difficulty of getting oil from Siberian fields as the reason for rising oil prices in the Soviet Union.

Senators applaud farmer's support of wheat controls, willingness to win battle

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Leaders in Washington will be forced to change failing farm policies if wheat growers support mandatory production controls, three U.S. senators and a Texas agriculture official said Tuesday.

Jim Hightower, Texas commissioner of agriculture, said a poll of wheat producers gives them an opportunity "to send a message to Washington that even the densest bureaucrat can understand and can't ignore."

"A yes vote would say we are literally sick to death of budget-busting policies," Hightower said at a news conference.

He joined Democratic Sens. J. James Exon and Edward Zorinsky of Nebraska and Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa in urging farmers to support the proposed mandatory controls.

Zorinsky, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Agriculture Committee, said the proposal to curb production is based on "common sense and logic in business."

The controls would increase farm prices by leveling production to bring it in line with demand, he said.

"I know of no business that can continue to overproduce year in and year out," Zorinsky said. "As long as we continue to have surplus commodities that we pay storage for instead of sell, farmers are going to be caught in a Catch-22 situation."

Zorinsky said the controls would reduce the amount of federal subsidies needed to boost farm prices.

"The consumers should take over the price structure of agriculture and get government out of it," he said.

Harkin said the wheat referendum gives farmers "an historic opportunity to make drastic changes" in farm policy.

"I can guarantee every farmer that if they vote no, nothing will come out of this," Harkin said. "If farmers vote yes, the pressure will come on Congress to do something."

The push for controls on wheat production is not an attempt to socialize agriculture, Harkin said.

"The federal government can enable the farmer to come together in a cooperative movement so each farmer gains," he said. "It's a chance to get the taxpayer out of the picture."

Harkin said if the referendum shows a majority of wheat growers favor the controls, a bill calling for mandatory controls will be introduced in Congress.

"We're ready to move," he said.

The bill would cover wheat and other crops, giving producers of each commodity the chance to vote in individual polls on whether they want mandatory controls.

Exon said farmers need to speak out to reverse the Reagan administration's farm policies.

"The utter folly of the present farm program is that you're going to produce your way out of the depression," he said. "Any program that continues to force down the price of agricultural products, which has been going on for six years, is doomed to failure."

Exon said the administration has stressed lowering prices to increase exports, but that hasn't happened.

"The time is now to do something or we're going to see a continued decline or crash, if you will," he said. "We're also going to continue to see billions and billions of dollars more in money from taxpayers" unless changes are made.

Innocuous brown beetles cause damage if unchecked

Those brown beetles you've been sweeping off the porch at night during the past several weeks are more than a passing aggravation now. In the month of July, their myriad of offspring, if left unchecked, can begin causing considerable damage to your lawn.

The white grub is the larval form of an insect comonly known as the May or June beetle. Adults are about ⅛ to ⅝ inches long and light brown with a slight reddish tinge just behind the head. The flight period of white grubs usually lasts about two weeks. During flight periods, large numbers of male adults congregate around street lights. Females are much less attracted to lights, therefore, eggs are not necessarily deposited in soil near lights.

A female beetle is capable of laying 30 to 40 eggs which hatch in three to four weeks. Eggs are deposited in the soil at depths of 2 to 5 inches. Egg-laying females appear to avoid sod which has been heavily watered.

When the larvae or white grub emerges, they begin to feed on whatever is closest at hand. When the larvae or white grub emerges, they begin to feed on whatever is closest at hand. When that turns out to be grass roots – as it often does – the aggravation frequently becomes mortal pain.

The grubs are small and fairly easy to kill with insecticides when they first hatch but later on become quite difficult to control. If you're going to treat for them, don't wait until late summer.

Lawns under attack by grubs will often show brown patches in mid to late summer. Since grubs are not the only pests that cause such patches in lawns, homeowners getting them are advised to check and see if grubworms are the culprit before spending time and money to control them.

To check a lawn for white grubs, cut out one square-foot section of turf with a shovel or lawn edger and turn it over. If careful examination shown more than three grubs in your square foot sample of soil, treatment is indicated. Following examination, the turf should be firmly replaced and watered.

Treatments, if needed, should be timed so they are undertaken when the grubs are most vulnerable. That is when they are young and located in the top inch of soil. Recent research has indicated that two treatments are needed. We suggest treating July 5 through 15 and again August 5 through 15.

It is very important to water thoroughly when treating to saturate the soil and force the grubs to move up into the treated soil. (The insecticides do not move more than ½ inch into the soil, no matter how much you water.) Diazinon and Oftenol® are the white grub insecticides most preferred by West Texans.

Homeowners are advised not to use insecticides on their lawns when grubs or other insects are not a problem. Repeated applications of once effective chemicals have hastened the development of grub resistance to them.

Fourth of July safety tips offered

By JANE E. BRODY
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — I'm not going to be a spoilsport and tell you to stay indoors and eat bean salad and fruit for the Fourth of July. But before you indulge in big bangs and barbecues, there are a few points worth keeping in mind to insure that your celebration will be a safe, not a sorry, event.

■ Never squirt lighter fluid on a fire that has already been started. Many people have been severely burned, or fatally injured, when the stream of fluid ignited and caused an explosion in the can. Also, never substitute kerosene, gasoline, alcohol or any other flammable liquid for charcoal lighter.

■ Keep a fire extinguisher, water or sand handy to douse flare-ups. You can also place an inch of ash, sand or commercial charcoal base beneath the coals (before you light them) to absorb grease that drips off the food as it cooks.

■ Never barbecue while wearing loose-fitting clothing. Wear a heavy apron and shoes as protection and use long-handled utensils and fire-resistant barbecue mitts to tend the food.

■ Don't try to save used coals. They have been known to reignite spontaneously days later. When finished cooking, douse the coals thoroughly with water and either bury them or place them in a metal container. If you have been using a hibachi or small grill on a beach, be sure to cool the sand beneath the grill with water when you move it so unknowing passers-by are not injured.

■ Avoid flimsy grills that are shabbily made and might easily collapse, searing you with hot food and coals. Handles should be attached with more than one screw or rivet per side, leg supports should be firm and wheels attached with wing bolts or nuts that thread into the axle.

IT IS ALSO critically important to barbecue only outdoors in a well-ventilated area. Even barbecuing in a fireplace with an open damper can lead to a dangerous buildup of carbon monoxide. If a sudden rain shower should force your barbecue indoors, move it into a doorway or garage and keep the door open.

To avoid shock, don't use an electrical starting device in the rain or when standing on wet ground. Unplug the device and place it on a nonflammable surface out of children's reach until it cools.

Barbecuing has been attacked in recent years as a potential health hazard. More than a decade ago, researchers showed that when meat is barbecued, the resulting smoke coated the food with a layer of benzopyrene, a cancer-causing agent.

Recently, cancer researchers showed that cooking meats, and especially charring them, produces a host of potent gene-damaging chemicals, mutagens, which cause cancer in laboratory animals. It is not yet known, however, whether these chemicals may be rendered harmless in the human digestive tract.

What is a barbecue-lover to do? One simple solution is to enjoy your barbecued foods, but not too often. There is no evidence that an occasional carnivorous barbecue — even once a week — will increase your cancer risk.

DR. BARRY COMMONER, director of the Center for the Biology of Natural Systems at Queens College and a student of the effects of cooking who occasionally enjoys barbecues himself, offers these other easy-to-follow suggestions:

■ Avoid charring meats. Start with lean cuts and trim off all removable fat before grilling, to help prevent the flare-ups that char food.

■ Cook protein-containing food on a wire grill. The less contact the food has with metal while it cooks, the fewer mutagens are formed.

■ Don't overcook meats. The longer the cooking time, the more mutagens are formed.

■ Choose fish for your barbecue. For unknown reasons, fish forms few mutagens during cooking, and the fats in fish have been shown to protect against cancer.

Fireworks can harm hearing

Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Children and adults who set off fireworks in celebration of the Fourth of July risk serious and permanent hearing loss, a group of medical specialists warns.

Fireworks, ranging from the small 1-inch type to "cherry bombs" and M-80s, create an impulse noise that shakes loose the tiny cells of nerve endings in the inner ear. Once these cells are damaged, they do not regenerate, according to the American Academy of Otolaryngology — Head and Neck Surgery, a group of 7,800 physicians who specialize in treating disorders of the ears, nose, throat, face and neck.

Dr. Robert Cantrell, president-elect of the Academy, explains that the impulse noise happens so quickly that people don't have a chance to cover their ears. He says the noise is dangerous to hearing because it creates noise levels of around 160 decibles and "such an intense sound may cause immediate damage to hearing."

A study in Scandanavia evaluated the effects of five types of firecrackers on hearing and found the average noise level ranged between 125 and 160 decibles at a distance of 10 feet. Even that far away, the noise levels were considered dangerous enough to damage hearing. But since most fireworks explode before the individual lighting them can get 10 feet away, they pose a significant danger to hearing.

"The closer any explosive goes off near the ear and the louder the impulse noise, the greater the risk of damage," says Dr. Robert Dobie, chairman of the Academy's committee on the medical aspects of noise.

The average individual has anywhere between 15,000 and 20,000 nerve ending cells in the inner ear. When enough of them become damaged, they result in deteriorated hearing ability.

The residual effects of impulse noise usually include reduced perception of high frequency sounds, and speech becomes harder to understand. Ringing in the ears also may become a life-long problem. The Scandinavian study found that each year a high number of boys were reported to have persistent hearing loss after the use of firecrackers.

The Academy recommended that parents never let young children use any kind of firecracker, that fireworks never be ignited in any walled-in or other confined area, that after igniting, get as far away as possible, and that ears be covered.

Few can identify opening words

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (UPI) — Thomas Jefferson would be shocked: only 26 percent of over 6,400 surveyed correctly identified the opening of the Declaration of Independence.

The survey asked 6,451 U.S. adult visitors to Disney's Epcot Center to pick the Declaration's opening from three phrases. Only 26 percent chose the correct answer — "When in the course of human events."

Over half of all respondents — 52 percent — picked "We the people of the United States," the first words of the U.S. Constitution.

Fourteen percent chose "Four score and seven years ago," the opening line of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address.

Eight percent had no response.

DEAR ABBY

Lung cancer victims' names abound

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I'd be writing to you, but all those letters about smoking and lung cancer have forced me to write. You probably won't use this, but just ask yourself: How many smokers do you know? How many people do you know right now who have lung cancer? Have you ever personally known anybody who died from lung cancer?

I am willing to bet that you know many smokers, but cannot name one person who has lung cancer now, and have never personally known anyone who died from it. So, if it's true that smoking causes lung cancer, isn't it strange that so few people can come up with a single name? — STILL SMOKING

DEAR SMOKING: You cannot be serious. According to the American Cancer Society, here's a partial list of some famous people who have died of lung cancer: Edward R. Murrow, Damon Runyon, John Wayne, Humphrey Bogart, Lillian Hellman and Yul Brynner (who made a television commercial shortly before his death begging people not to smoke). Add Arthur Godfrey, Selma Diamond, Robert Taylor, Franchot Tone, Betty Grable, King George VI, Buster Keaton, Sen. Robert Taft, Nat King Cole, Boris Pasternak and, more recently, Alan Jay Lerner.

And I have had some close personal friends and a beloved relative who have also paid a terrible price for the "pleasure" of smoking.

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing to you because I am at my wit's end with my sister-in-law. She calls me collect just to see how we are. I wouldn't mind paying for a collect call in an emergency, but she calls just to chat.

I'm not a cheapskate, but she is just as able to pay for the phone calls as we are. I write to her, but she's too lazy to write, so she picks up the phone and calls me collect! She's my husband's sister and I don't want to get her mad at me, but she never talks less than 20 to 30 minutes, and we live 2,000 miles apart, which runs into money.

Don't get me wrong; I love her to pieces, and wouldn't hurt her feelings for the world, but I just had to get this off my chest. — TIRED OF COLLECT CALLS

DEAR TIRED: Getting this off your chest may reduce your blood pressure, but it won't reduce your telephone bill. Nothing will change unless you tell her (person-to-person) how you feel about those collect calls. Suggest that one time you pay, and the next time she pays.

DEAR ABBY: I have half a pillowcase filled with old love letters from different men I have known over the years. There were some I knew when I was a beautiful young woman, and many I knew through three marriages, during, between and after. Some were well-known professional men in our town — doctors and lawyers and a judge, too. They are all signed.

I have grandchildren and great-grandchildren who might enjoy reading them.

Should I pass them on, or throw them in the garbage and forget about it? I will soon be 96, and most of these men are dead. — COLORFUL PAST

DEAR COLORFUL: It's all part of history now, so unless there are disclosures that could hurt their families, pass them on. I'm reminded of an old saying: Wrong no man, and write no woman.

DEAR ABBY: Every morning my dad reads the newspaper. When he reads your column, he will not listen or talk to anyone.

Will you please tell him I want a yellow checkered shirt like my brother's? Thanks. — MICHAEL THIESE (AGE 10), MACON, GA.

DEAR MICHAEL: Consider him told. I hope this helps.

AT WIT'S END

Statue needs people to give her life

By ERMA BOMBECK

Tomorrow, the entire world will focus on a 151-foot statue of a woman who, 100 years ago, became the symbolic mother of exiles.

Like most symbols, she is trapped in the silence of concrete, her eyes without sight, her ears without sound and her lips without voice. She does what she is supposed to do ... inspire and make sure her lamp is lit.

But how far can her lamp shed its light?

Could it extend to the Mexican border where a woman crawled through a barbed wire fence during her final hours of labor so her child could be born American, or did the woman lie under a desert shrub alone in the darkness and pray?

Could a porch light have been substituted the night a girl was being beaten and raped in a suburb and blinds were pulled and ears were deaf to her screams because people feared getting involved? And she died in the blackness of night.

Could the torch have illuminated a child's life by the giving of extra time to help him when he fell behind in his studies? Or did he just flounder and drown in a sea of darkness through the cracks of the system, never to surface again?

How many people yearning to be free are imprisoned in darkened cells, victims of "policy," "procedure" and "politics"? When will a torch lead them to our shores?

How many lives of the elderly will be thrown a ray of light with a visit, a letter or a phone call from family and friends? Or will they live out their lives in the shadows of their solitary existence?

The Statue of Liberty was never meant to physically be everywhere in this nation with her lamp.

With each of us who came here, it was our duty to create our own personal torch that would burn within and shed light to every part of this land. And the lights are there.

I saw a light on the mountain near us the other night from a helicopter as it precariously hovered above a frightened child who had climbed too far and couldn't get down.

I saw a flashlight beam on me in the early morning hours in the hospital, held by the cool hand of a nurse who helped the fear and pain just by being there.

And if you have never seen a child's face light up at Christmas ... then you have truly missed one of life's national treasures.

The Statue of Liberty also holds a promise to welcome the world to her shores, comfort the tired, befriend the poor and offer hope to the homeless. She can't do that.

She's only a 151-foot statue carved out of copper.

You ... all 235 million of you ... are the only ones who can give her life ... and meaning. You knew that.

Every hundred years or so, we just have to be reminded.

Erma Bombeck is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

Fireworks safety important for Fourth of July

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Whether you're one of the 6 million at New York Harbor on Liberty Weekend or part of the crowd at your local picnic, chances are that fireworks will be an important part of your Fourth of July celebration.

The National Council on Fireworks Safety and the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission are urging all consumers to buy their fireworks from reliable dealers and avoid bootleggers.

Such illegal manufacturers usually sell large Class B explosives, such as cherry bombs and M-80s.

Class C fireworks — small fireworks such as sparklers — are generally not dangerous when used with common sense and most states permit some form of these pyrotechnics. Safety tips from the experts include:

- Ignite outdoors and have water handy.
- Light one at a time at a safe distance from others.
- Store and dispose of properly.
- Never try to reignite malfunctioning fireworks.
- Never give to small children.
- Read directions. Never light fireworks near a building or anything flammable.
- Handle sparklers with care. They burn at extreme temperatures and can ignite clothing.

"Seventy-five percent of injuries are the result of using legal fireworks — rockets, sparklers, firecrackers," Gamache said.

COPING WITH JOB LOSS

Changes in employment roles affect all family members

By JIM MAY and MARTI VERMILLION

May

Vermillion

DEAR COPING: After my husband's job was terminated we finally came to the conclusion that I should go to work. I found a job that has provided the necessary income for getting us through this period. But the income hasn't solved a thing, rather has just added to our problems.

I feel guilty for working, my children are resentful and I think my husband feels worst than ever about his unemployment. I have always thought that we had a solid, trouble-free family, but now I'm feeling overwhelmed and unsupported.

If I quit work, would that help my husband's sense of manhood and maybe force him to look harder for a job?

If something doesn't change, I'm afraid we're headed for trouble. Just because I'm helping our creditors, I'm doing nothing for our family situation and certainly nothing for my own well-being. They don't have any idea how emotionally and physically exhausting this is for me.

What do I do? — J.P.

DEAR J.P.: Tell them. If you don't tell them outright, you may think of less healthy and more subtle ways to tell them of your feelings of overwork and exhaustion.

The unfortunate, but reliable, paradox of relieving money stress in one area will almost always create pressure in a new area. The family who relieves money difficulties by adding another paycheck has just added a whole line of other emotional and physical stresses.

You have mentioned three such stresses: your own guilt for not being able to do the things for your family you've previously done, your children's resentment that you're not doing those things for them and increased feelings of inadequacy in your husband who sees you providing things for the family that were previously in his domain.

While I cannot answer your question as to whether you should keep your job or quit it, I can say that I have never seen it possible to "force" another person to do anything, not even to get a job. In that regard, quitting probably would solve nothing.

You said, "we finally came to the conclusion that I should go to work," but you did not mention what kinds of other collective family decisions followed that one, those decisions which would be necessary in order to relieve the pressures that your going to work would give rise to.

Have you talked about your feelings and need for help? Have you shared your own fears, worries and resentments? Has your husband? Have your children? Has your family talked about reallocating housekeeping chores or redefining standards that more closely match the current reality of a working mom?

Has your family discussed money itself and your attitudes toward it: your values, your futures, your expenditures and each member's personal and family budgeting? Has your family discussed each member's own personal concerns and how each could contribute to resolving this family dilemma?

Since you have had a solid family, it is likely the overwhelming feelings you are experiencing have more to do with a possible lack of open sharing of your feelings and concerns rather than a lack of individual caring or a family breakdown.

It is perfectly understandable that with added time pressures, there exists less free time to discuss such matters. Why not make a family appointment: set a time, a date and a place for all family members to openly discuss their hopes, fears and needs. Families are amazingly resourceful in solving their own problems; be ready to receive some surprising solutions.

This is family work at its best and all members sharing in that work can help carry a burden that is too heavy for any one of us alone.

DEAR COPING: Our situation is different. I'm the one who has lost a job rather than my husband. My husband's income has always been for necessities while mine was for all the extras.

We can survive just fine on one income, but our problem is our two teen-aged sons. They don't seem to realize that a loss of income means they're going to have to give up on some things also.

This is a very expensive town to live in with active high schoolers. They've never really had to do without and I know this doesn't seem fair to them in these important years of their lives. I feel for them, but they are being very stubborn.

I feel like this is the time to make all the necessary changes (before school starts), but we just can't make any headway. They don't see part-time jobs as an option because of all their commitments to after-school and weekend activities.

We have tried and tried to beat it into their heads that money doesn't grow on trees. How can we get them to tighten their belts when they see it as their right to be supported in the manner to which they have become accustomed and believe they deserve?

They can't see our side to this. We can't spend what we don't have. I fear an all-out war brewing come autumn. — O.M.

DEAR O.M.: You're absolutely right — you can't spend what you don't have, but do your sons really know that? Most of us always have, or at least so it has seemed in our plastic money system.

You are experiencing financial transition at a very difficult time in your family's life cycle. While it is very difficult for you, it is also stressful for your sons in their particular stage of life.

That you can empathize as you have with their feelings is the first step in working through this difficulty. The next step is their empathizing with your feelings. That may be the hardest step because their life has been one of plenty. Based on that, they have planned their futures.

It will be counterproductive, though, to delve into arguments about "rights" and "fairness." What is happening in our community and certain industries is "unfair" and not "right" by all human logic.

Since most of us live in a here-and-now world, we are totally confused by the "unrighteousness" and "unfairness" of current economic trends and so are resistant to changing our standards of living.

Likewise, your sons have shared in your time of bounty and, having experienced that standard as their lifestyle, are offering normal resistance to cutting back. Now that they are preparing for adulthood, however, to continue doling out money — especially if it is nonexistent — as they request it will do them no favors in the long run.

As full-fledged members of a family in transition, your sons do have the right of learning money management skills that they will carry with them into their own adulthood.

The previously-mentioned step of your sons developing empathy for your point of view includes their active participation in the family's budgeting. Since your sons are an integral part of the family budget, they should have an active part in the reality of the paycheck. If you do not work from a family budget, this time in your life demands that you begin doing so. If you do work from a budget, this is the perfect time to share it as a family project.

Numbers don't lie. Place the pencils and papers in your sons' hands and have them write them down the numbers. Include the monthly income, the automatic deductions, the seasonal ones, the regular and irregular expenditures which give a realistic respect for what lies ahead (and don't forget to add 15 percent for the unforeseeable expenses that crop up every month).

Don't just write out the budget and leave it. Continue the ledger over the months ahead, being especially faithful until school starts.

Continue their financial education by sharing the relationship between credit and payment. Share charge receipts, whether from the clothing store, gas station or the dentist. Have your sons write the checks that will pay those bills. Have them make your bank deposits at the beginning of the month and reconcile the statement at the end.

Only then will you be ready for the next step in the problem-solving process — having your sons give you as many of their suggestions as possible for reconciling any budget discrepancies which might appear. The alternatives are limitless and include more than just their working or not working and more than just their deciding to cut some expenditures.

Teens are enormously creative problem solvers. Many have given up some activities in favor of others (especially if new ones mean income), some have developed jobs (such as lawn services) where they can work around busy schedules, some have used those kinds of jobs for planning ahead and saving for special upcoming needs and some have developed matching funds systems with their parents.

When each family member can contribute in providing ideas for budget management, the handout philosophy is either greatly reduced or eliminated altogether.

Then when the numbers don't stay in the black, ask for their ideas for eliminating the red column. Somehow, ideas from ourselves seem much more feasible — even if outlandish — than the "facts" — even if solid — that come from someone else by means of the "beat-it-into-them" approach. Good luck!

Fireworks can be dangerous

New York Times News Service

Throughout the country, communities large and small offer public fireworks displays put on by licensed operators who know how to do it safely. But millions of individuals, especially children, also set off fireworks and in doing so may unwittingly put themselves at risk.

Injuries caused by fireworks have been rising dramatically for years. Last year more than 10,000 Americans were treated in hospital emergency rooms because of them.

In the past, casualties have included a 9-year-old child in Indiana who lost the sight in one eye when he was struck by a piece of a burning sparkler, a 13-year-old Washington State boy partly blinded by a firecracker that exploded when he tried to relight it, and a 13-year-old Long Island boy who lost an eye and two fingers while playing with fireworks.

Hearing can also be damaged by the sudden loud noise from a firecracker that explodes at close range. About half the victims of fireworks-related accidents are under the age of 14.

Although more than 20 states ban or severely limit the sale of fireworks, determined celebrants seem to have little trouble buying them in neighboring states or from bootleg operators.

The devices are typically used by unsupervised teen-agers, who may endanger not only themselves but others nearby. When the fireworks law was liberalized in Washington State in 1982, the number of fireworks-related injuries on the Fourth of July more than doubled the number on that holiday in 1981.

If an accident occurs, seek prompt medical attention. A gruesome but important note: If an accident results in the loss of a finger or limb try to find the dismembered part, put it in plastic bag, carefully seal the bag and put it in a container filled with cold water (not ice). Bring it to the hospital with the victim. Nowadays, there is a chance that a dismembered part can be reattached surgically.

The best advice comes from the National Society to Prevent Blindness: "Enjoy fireworks the safe and sane way — at licensed public displays."

Consumers seeking more information about firework safety can call the Consumer Product Safety Commission's special line: 800-638-2772.

Grandmother fights fires

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) - Some grandmothers enjoy special hobbies such as planting gardens or doing other "grandmotherly" things.

Not Doris "Granny" Hale. She loves fighting fires. As captain of the Harmony Volunteer Fire Department in Southeast Bexar County, she has been fighting fires and answering other emergencies for the past 13 years.

"I love to fight fires," said the 64-year-old. "It's a hard job, and it's a thankless job; it's hot, dirty, filthy work.

"There's no glory in it, believe me. But it's the excitement of going, and doing what I can do that makes me feel good."

She was nicknamed "Granny" by fellow firefighters because at one time three of her eight grandchildren also were volunteers at the Harmony department.

"They (the grandchildren) called me Granny, so everybody else started calling me Granny, too," she said. "Now, nobody knows me except by Granny, or when I'm in my red (pumper) truck."

Volunteer firefighting is a family affair. Hale's daughter, Charlotte Lambrides, is president of the Harmony VFD; her son-in-law, William Lambrides, is an assistant fire chief; and her husband, Ace Hale Sr., has been with the department 25 years and now is its treasurer.

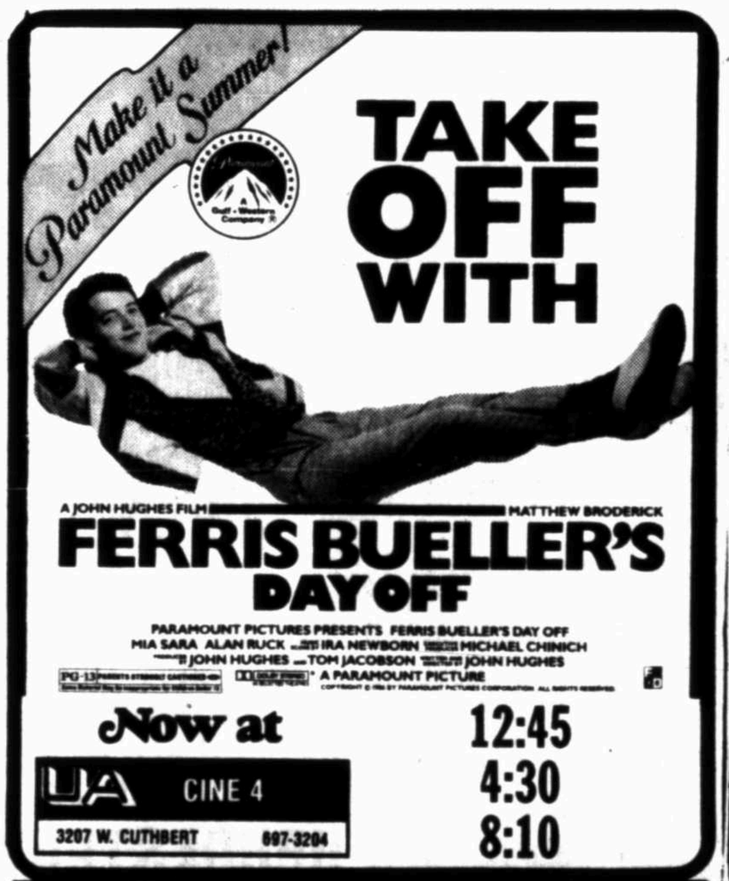

When the Harmony department offered jobs to women 13 years ago, "Granny" Hale, standing 5-foot-3, did not hesitate.

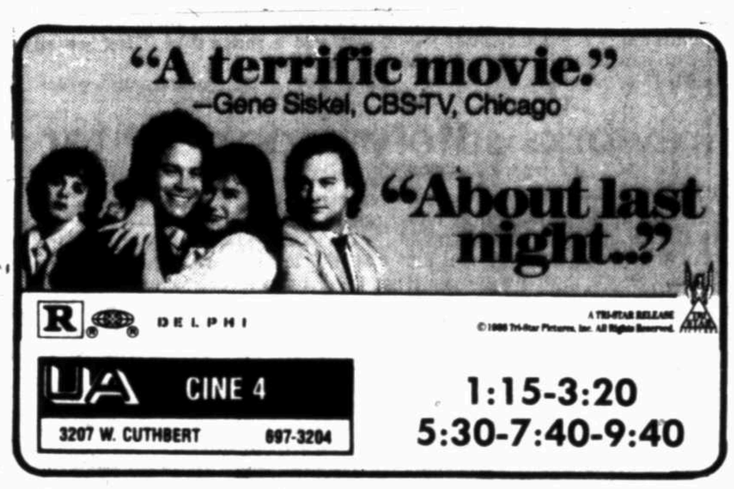

"I had to prove myself to the men," Hale said of her early years as a firefighter. "But I've earned my respect now."

For more than a century, cotton reigned as king in Texas

Associated Press

For almost a century, nothing was more important to the Texas economy than the fleecy white bales of cotton traversing the state to market.

Cotton was grown in Texas first by Spanish missionaries, but it did not become a cash crop until colonists arrived from the Southern states. Soon after they began cultivating it, Texas was clearly on its way to joining the cotton kingdom.

Not until the 1850s did the state reach the production level of other Southern plantation states. After the Civil War, the removal of Indians from the western parts of the state and the advent of railroad lines opened enormous territories for the cotton crop.

Although cotton production slowed considerably during the Civil War, the remarkable technological development in communication, transportation and equipment set in motion before the war accelerated after 1870.

The explosive Texas cotton trade radically altered the national and international commodities markets, says historian L. Tuffly Ellis.

Fast-linking freight lines, commercial cotton gins and powerful cotton compresses facilitated a vast overland movement of the staple from the cotton-growing South to Eastern markets. At the same time, a large migration of people to Texas expanded the cotton culture.

Only a small part of the state's 1859-60 cotton crop of 431,463 bales moved over the 500 miles of railroad tracks built by Texans before the Civil War.

Wagons, flatboats or small steamboats carried the remainder to Galveston, New Orleans or other coastal points for shipment to Eastern and European mills.

A rush in Texas railroad building occurred throughout the 1870s, Ellis says, with construction totaling nearly 2,000 miles.

The Houston and Texas Central railroad traversed the rich Texas blacklands from Buffalo Bayou to the Red River, where it met up with the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railroad linking the Lone Star state with the Midwest in 1873. The next year, St. Louis made a rail connection with Texarkana, and then, via the Texas and Pacific, with Dallas.

In the following decade, railroad companies built over 6,000 miles of track in Texas. The lines now stretched from the Sabine River to El Paso and from the Panhandle to the Rio Grande.

Initially, the postwar railroad development resulted in a large overland movement of the crop to Eastern markets, Ellis explains, diverting the trade from Galveston and other Gulf ports.

But by 1900, most of the Texas cotton crop left from Galveston, the largest cotton shipping point in the world at the time.

The building of the six-mile twin jetties from the island out into the Gulf provided the port of Galveston with deep water, enabling the harbor to accommodate the largest steamers.

The Texas crop that year, valued at more than $177 million, represented one quarter of the total American cotton production.

With the railroads came new settlers, Ellis says. Mostly farmers, they pushed the frontier ever westward. Where Indians had once hunted buffalo, cotton now grew.

By 1900, the plant had reached the High Plains. Railroad development and the expansion of the cotton culture fostered the building of new towns and the opening of new cotton markets. From 1860 until the turn of the century, Texas' population quadrupled.

Cotton production, railroad development and population growth continued well into the 20th century, Ellis says. Acreage topped out in the mid-1920s, when more than 18 million acres were planted, and railroad trackage peaked in 1932, when it reached 17,084 miles.

Year in and year out, the farmer plowed the fields, planted the seeds, hoed the young crop, harvested the fleecy fiber, carried it to the gin and sold the bales to a buyer at market. The production, ginning, compression, warehousing, financing, marketing and transporting of the staple made cotton the hub of Texas commerce.

Singer rockets to stardom at JVC Jazz Festival

Anita Baker called this year's major discovery

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — The JVC Jazz Festival may have had fewer concerts this year, but it gave the jazz world a new star — singer Anita Baker.

"She was this year's major discovery," said festival producer George Wein. "Nobody heard of her when we signed her. Then her record took off. I don't know if she is really a jazz singer but she opened with scat. She likes jazz and she's got a voice that's reaching young people."

The nine-day festival, which closed Saturday night, had the fewest concerts in 15 years because Carnegie Hall is temporarily closed. It also had a new sponsor, the Japanese Victor Co., following in the footsteps of Kool cigarettes.

Wein had thought that the new name and the upcoming festivities for the Statue of Liberty might make jazz festival attendance thin this year. However, fans showed up in force.

Jazz veterans Ella Fitzgerald and Sarah Vaughan both sold out, as did Anita Baker's New York debut performance.

A double bill of singer Natalie Cole and singer-guitarist George Benson sold out its early show, and trumpet player Miles Davis with Spyro Gyra nearly sold out its early show, as did the George Shearing and Mel Torme concert and Herbie Hancock.

The only disappointment in sales, Wein said, was B.B. King, the prince of blues, and gospel singer Andrae Crouch. The low attendance, he said, might have been because King played three concerts here in April with Miles Davis or that the mix of blues and gospel simply didn't draw.

Next year, Wein would like to put commercial, big-name concerts in Avery Fisher Hall and Carnegie Hall and use smaller, 1,400-seat Town Hall more, for "pure jazz."

Wein's favorite moment at the festival was the three duets sung by Sarah Vaughan and Billy Eckstine, who read lyrics off a sheet of paper. They performed together after each had done an hour solo set.

"I figured if I didn't ask them to sing duet encores, maybe they would do it themselves, and they did," Wein said. "It wasn't delightful, fantastic music, but it was a delightful, fantastic moment."

Ella Fitzgerald's performance also was enchanting.

Other highlights included Scott Hamilton, Donald Harrison and Flip Phillips solos at a tribute to saxophonists Ben Webster, Johnny Hodges and Harry Carney; a sextet — Joe Newman, Jimmy Heath, Steve Turre, Hilton Ruiz, Stafford James and Jimmy Cobb — at a tribute concert to the Rev. John Gensel, pastor to the jazz community. The sextet played the entire concert, continually revealing more artistic facets.

It also was interesting to hear the often-subtle interaction of the Soviet Union's avant-garde Ganelin Trio.

Last weekend's two festival days at Waterloo Village in Stanhope, N.J., were "a smashing success, the biggest we've ever had," Wein said. And this weekend's two days at Saratoga Springs, N.Y., showed strong ticket sales.

"With good weather, we'll break records," he said.

JVC was pleased with the festival, Wein said, and he thinks they'll sign a contract for the next three years.

"They gave me a flat sum this year. I have to absorb losses. There's a very slight chance there won't be losses this year. I think there will be, but not so great that I can't absorb them," he said.

"I think we can look to the future with a little security. My business now is to build this festival all over again."

Madonna says she likes 'to tick people off'

ENTERTAINMENT

By STEPHEN HOLDEN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — "I like challenge and controversy — I like to tick people off," Madonna boasted, tossing her head and flashing a mischievous half-smile. The 27-year-old pop star was sipping a diet cola in a conference room at the New York offices of Warner Bros. Records. She appeared almost demure in a pink-and-blue flowered dress and a very short haircut inspired by the late-50s gamine look of Jean Seberg, Audrey Hepburn and Leslie Caron. Gone along with most of her hair was the heavy makeup and jewelry that made last year's Madonna resemble a contemporary street version of Marilyn Monroe in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

"After awhile I got sick of wearing tons of jewelry — I wanted to clean myself off," Madonna said flatly. "I see my new look as very innocent and feminine and unadorned. It makes me feel good. Growing up, I admired the kind of beautiful glamorous woman — from Brigitte Bardot to Grace Kelly — who doesn't seem to be around much anymore. I think it's time for that kind of glamour to come back."

If Madonna's new upscale look represents a dramatic swing away from the provocative sex symbol who wore lingerie as outerwear and crucifixes like diamonds, it does not signal an end to her courting of controversy. "Papa Don't Preach," the second single from her third album, "True Blue" (Sire 25442; LP, cassette, compact disk), is bound to rile some parents of teen-age girls. The protagonist of the song, which was written by Brian Elliot, is a pregnant adolescent who begs her father to bless her decision to keep the baby and marry her boyfriend. Madonna sings it in a passionate, bratty sob that makes the plea immediate and believable.

THE SONG has also been turned into a compelling slice-of-life music video. Filmed on location in a working-class neighborhood of Staten Island, with Danny Aiello playing the father, it features a virtuoso performance by a waifish, saucer-eyed Madonna, who looks all of 15 as she quivers anxiously, awaiting her father's response. Like Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean," the song and its video have an iconographic resonance that could push Madonna's career to an even higher plateau than the household-word status she attained last year with her 6.5-million-selling second album, "Like a Virgin."

"I grew up loving innocent child voices like Diana Ross, while she was with the Supremes and Stevie Wonder when he was young, and I practically swooned when I heard Frankie Lymon's records. I don't know why, but I was always instinctively drawn to those voices. I don't think I sing like a woman. I sing like a girl, and it's a quality I never want to lose."

— Madonna

"'Papa Don't Preach' is a message song that everyone is going to take the wrong way," Madonna proudly predicted. "Immediately they're going to say I am advising every young girl to go out and get pregnant. When I first heard the song, I thought it was silly. But then I thought, wait a minute, this song is really about a girl who is making a decision in her life. She has a very close relationship with her father and wants to maintain that closeness. To me it's a celebration of life. It says, 'I love you, father, and I love this man and this child that is growing inside me.' Of course, who knows how it will end? But at least it starts off positive."

"Papa Don't Preach," for which Madonna contributed a couple of minor lyrical revisions, is the only song on the album that Madonna didn't have a strong hand in writing. The song was sent to her by Michael Ostin, the same Warner Bros. executive who discovered "Like a Virgin." Most of the album's eight other songs Madonna co-wrote with Patrick Leonard, the musical director for her 1985 tour, or with her sometime songwriting partner, Stephen Bray. The three also co-produced the LP.

While "True Blue" lacks the gleaming ultra-sleek aural surfaces of "Like a Virgin," both its songs and Madonna's singing show a lot more heart. "Live to Tell," written for the soundtrack of "At Close Range," the movie starring her husband, Sean Penn, was released in advance of the album and recently spent a week perched at No. 1 on the pop charts. It proves that vocally Madonna isn't limited to catchy novelties and disco tunes — she can carry off a weightier ballad. The rest of the album consists of highly commercial dance-pop whose lyrics convey an upbeat message along with casual autobiographical references. "True Blue" takes its title from a favorite expression of Sean Penn, and is a tribute, according to Madonna, "to my husband's very pure vision of love." Musically, it also pays homage to Motown and to '60s "girl-group" hits like "Chapel of Love" that are the direct antecedents of Madonna's sound.

THE HAPPY Latin-flavored, "La Isla Bonita" is Madonna's celebration of what she called "the beauty and mystery of Latin American people." The itchy dance tune, "Jimmy Jimmy" commemorates her youthful fascination with James Dean. "I used to fantasize that we grew up in the same neighborhood and that he moved away and became a big star," she admitted. "White Heat" is dedicated to another mythic rebel, James Cagney, whose voice opens the track in a snatch of dialogue from the movie of the same name. "Where's the Party?" Madonna explained, "is my ultimate reminder to myself that I want to enjoy life and not let the press get to me, because every once in awhile it does." "Open Your Heart" is about "wanting to change somebody." And the album's final cut, "Love Makes the World Go Round," preaches a cheerfully simplistic humanitarianism: "Don't judge a man 'til you've been standin' in his shoes- You know that we're all so quick to look away- 'Cause it's the easy thing to do- Make love not war."

Obviously, Madonna is still much more significant as a pop culture symbol than as a songwriter or a singer. But the songs on "True Blue" are shrewdly crafted teen-age and pre-teen-age ditties that reveal Madonna's unfailing commercial instincts. And her singing, which has been harshly criticized as a thin imitation of the '60s girl-group sound, has strengthened.

"I grew up loving innocent child voices like Diana Ross, while she was with the Supremes and Stevie Wonder when he was young, and I practically swooned when I heard Frankie Lymon's records," she said. "I don't know why, but I was always instinctively drawn to those voices. I don't think I sing like a woman. I sing like a girl, and it's a quality I never want to lose."

BUT EVEN MORE than a girlish voice, the quality that defines Madonna Louise Veronica Ciccone is an instinct for rebellion that she traces to her parochial school girlhood in Pontiac, Mich.

"When you go to Catholic school, you have to wear uniforms, and everything is decided for you," she recalled. "Since you have no choice but to wear your uniform, you go out of your way to do things that are different in order to stand out. All that rebellion carried over when I moved to New York eight years ago to become a dancer. At dance classes, all the ballerinas had their hair back in a bun, and so I chopped my hair off and ripped my leotard down the front and put little tiny safety pins all the way up just to provoke my teacher. After all, where is it written that in order to be a better dancer you have to wear a black leotard and pink tights and have your hair in a bun? Going out dancing with my girlfriends in New York clubs, we would dress for provocation. What I was wearing at the time I was signed to a record contract became my look.

"What kids see in me is another rebel kid who says what she wants and does what she wants and has a joy in life," Madonna went on. "The girls that dressed like me all got the joke — it was their parents who didn't. You didn't see those girls going off and doing awful things because they bought my records. What I've learned from all the controversy is that you can't expect everyone to get your sense of humor. But I've also learned that people eventually do catch on to what they didn't get at first. It's a nice surprise in the end when they, go, 'Hey, well, you know...I like that.'"

A DISCIPLINED, immensely self-confident woman who doesn't eat meat, rarely touches liquor and rigorously trains her body every day, Madonna is a woman in charge of her life and career. She appeared to be uncowed by the voyeurism of a celebrity press that has dredged up vintage nude photos of her and made her recent marriage to Penn a running battle with the paparazzi. Madonna's title role of a freewheeling bohemian vagabond in the Susan Seidelman film "Desperately Seeking Susan," along with her music-videos, has established her as a natural screen presence, and a larger movie career seems inevitable.

Ruell and Thelm Bucher, left, caretakers at the Fort Bidwell Cemetery for the past 25 years, plant a pine tree. The three-room Fort Bidwell Restaurant and Hotel, dating from 1906, is run by a local family.

Out-of-the way town has historical cemetery

Fort Bidwell originated as U.S. Army outpost in late 1870s

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

FORT BIDWELL, Calif. — If you want to find out who was buried before the turn of the century in the cemetery in this tiny hamlet, check the back of Kober's Drygoods Store.

Names and dates of the first burials were scrawled on the wall, which served as the town's original cemetery record. Most are still faintly legible.

The store opened in the 1860s and continued in operation until the February 1984, death of Elsie Kober, 82, whose father and uncle ran the store before her.

An old sign on one wall proclaims "Ladies & Gents Furnishings," and numerous unsold items dating to the early years of the store were still on shelves and in showcases at the time of Elsie Kober's death.

There were 75 pre-1900 corsets, 150 unopened boxes of 19th-century women's high-top shoes, and an array of century-old men's, women's and children's clothing, fabrics, tools and square nails.

Linda French, 38, a local nurse, now owns Kober's Drygoods and much of its contents. She plans to reopen it next year as a combination museum and store.

Fort Bidwell, population 100, is California's northern-most town, 10 miles from Oregon and seven miles from Nevada. With only country roads leading here, it is one of the most out-of-the-way places in the state. A Paiute Indian reservation with 125 residents adjoins the hamlet at the foot of the Warner Mountains' Fandango Pass, elevation 4,560 feet.

From time to time pigs, cows, geese, ducks and chickens from surrounding farms wander up and down the main street of Fort Bidwell. A creek flows through the heart of the town.

Kober's is not the only century-old business in the little-known northeastern gate to the Golden State.

Jim Palmer, 47, and his wife, Kathy, 48, run the general store, which has been continuously operated since the 1870s, making it one of the oldest general stores in California.

The three-room Fort Bidwell Hotel and Restaurant dates only to 1906. It is operated by Charlie Massie, 61; his wife, Eva, 58, and their son, Chip, 27.

Fort Bidwell boasts an unusual industry, the pollen company of Walter Baker, 69 and his wife, Virginia. The couple collect pollen from 25 species of trees, plants and grasses within 250 miles and sell it to medical laboratories, where it is processed to treat people with allergies.

Ruell Bucher, 82, and his wife Thelma, 77, have been caretakers since 1960 of the Fort Bidwell Cemetery, which is high on a hill overlooking the town.

They were paid $150 a year until last year when they hired Tex Benner, 68, to help. He now receives the $150 from the cemetery trust fund set up by the Kober family nearly a century ago.

But the Buchers, lifelong residents of Fort Bidwell, are still in the cemetery every day, raking, planning and visiting with anyone who enters the gates. Bucher has been the cemetery trustee since 1960 and has dug most of the graves since then.

"We know the location and stories about every one of the more than 500 buried here except the graves holding the unknowns," Mrs. Bucher said. "We know all them that's been buried here since we were little kids."

They told how the first person buried there was a soldier who drank too much at the local brewery in 1865, fell off his horse and froze to death. In all, 50 soldiers were buried in the cemetery from 1865 to 1893 when an army outpost, Fort Bidwell, was located here. Every Memorial Day the Buchers place flowers on the graves.

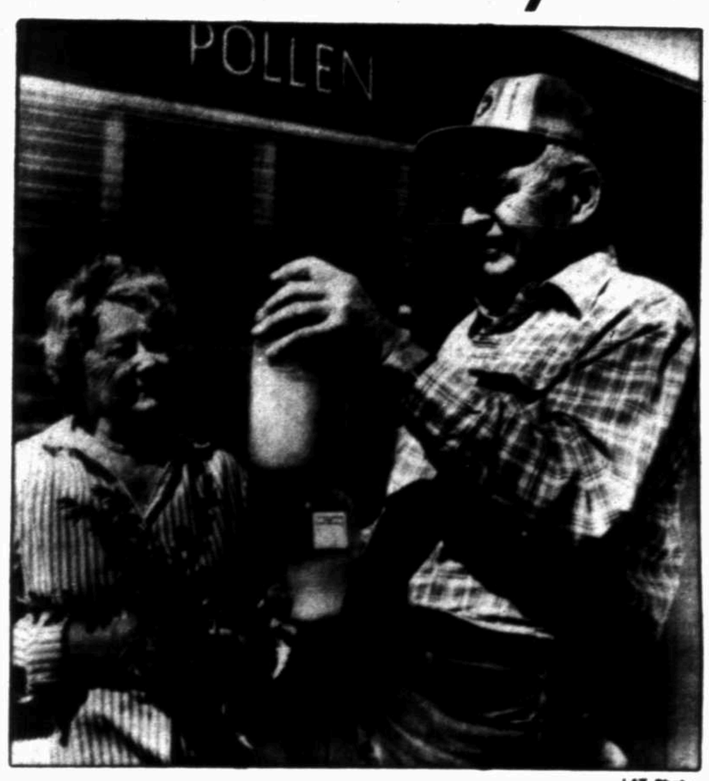

It was Mrs. Bucher's grandfather, Peter Peterson, who went to Washington early in 1865 to petition the Army to establish the outpost as protection against Indians.

Brig. Gen. John Bidwell's support of the proposition led to the naming of the fort in his honor. Bidwell was later a congressman and the 1892 presidential candidate for the Prohibition Party.

Many visitors come here hunting graves of ancestors who served at the old Army post or were among the several thousand people in the area during a turn-of-the-century mining boom. Others who come to Fort Bidwell "are people who visit old cemeteries as a hobby. They enjoy the history in this graveyard," Mrs. Bucher said.

But she and her husband also recalled a woman who came from Washington state looking for her grandfather's grave.

"Her grandfather was lynched for being a horse thief," Bucher said. "She had no idea about his infamous past. It came as a great shock to her."

Ghost town library houses collection on California history

Library housed in what used to be Catholic Church

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LAWS, Calif. — Pat Coles is a ghost town librarian.

The library was once the Our Lady of Perpetual Help Church, red-shingled, with a stately steeple. It was moved here from nearby Bishop in 1972 to the 11½ acres of what's left of Laws.

Historians, writers and researchers come here from throughout the West to use the resources of this most unusual library, which includes rare books and an extensive collection on California history.

Laws, about 230 miles north of Los Angeles, once was a flourishing farming, cattle and mining center and a rail head for the 307-mile Carson & Colorado Railway. More than 400 people lived here at its peak. But the town began a decline and finally died the day the last narrow-gauge train puffed into town on April 29, 1968.

Southern Pacific Railroad deeded the last train, Engine No.9, called the "Slim Princess," and a string of passenger coaches, boxcars and a caboose to the people of Inyo County on the day of the final run. The train still stands where it stopped.

The ghost town, just east of Bishop, has been the Laws Railroad Museum and Historical Site ever since, operated by the Bishop Museum and Historical Society.

What's left of Laws is its 1883 depot with potbellied stove, Western Union and Wells Fargo Express offices, post office, general store, doctor's office, half a dozen buildings, the 1883 station agent's house, water tower, wooden round table operated by hand and the old train.

And the library — across the tracks from Engine No. 9.

Ms. Coles, 67, has been Laws' librarian since the church was moved here 14 years ago.

"This was the old confessional," Ms. Coles noted as she removed an 1889 copy of Dante's "Inferno" from a bookshelf in a niche near a stained-glass window depicting the Virgin Mary. "I ought to, know," said the widow. "I was a member of the church."

What brings patrons to the ghost town library from great distances is its collection of rare books, especially on California, as well as Gold Rush letters and diaries and Civil War and Spanish-American War scrapbooks.

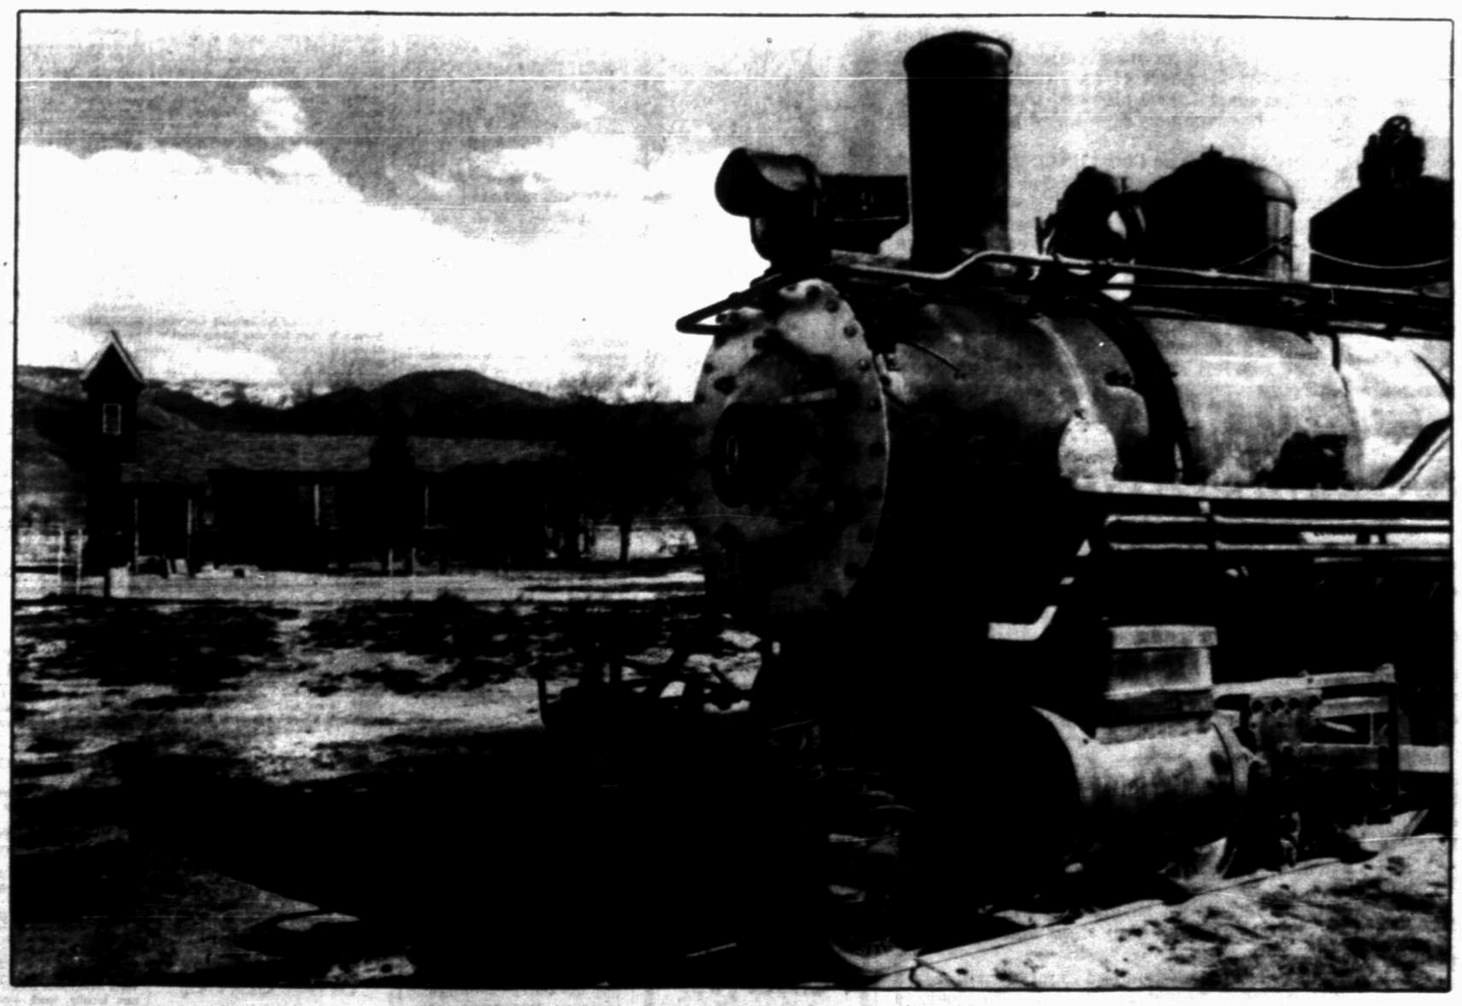

The libraries of P.A. Chelfant and his son W.D. Chelfant, pioneer California printers and publishers, are in the old church. So is a collection of photographs, books and publications from cattleman Gus Cashbaugh, who died last year at 102, and a prized 1,100-volume collection of rare Californiana donated by Robert L. Craib.

Craib, 82, and his late wife, Isabel, of South Pasadena, Calif., happened upon the ghost town library in 1972 when Craib came to Laws to record information about the old Catholic church.

For years Craib had been on an odyssey, trying to visit every church of every denomination in the state and collecting historical data about each church visited.

"My wife and I fell in love with this church that became the Laws ghost town library. I gave my collection...to the library as a memorial to my wife...after she died in 1978," Craib explained.

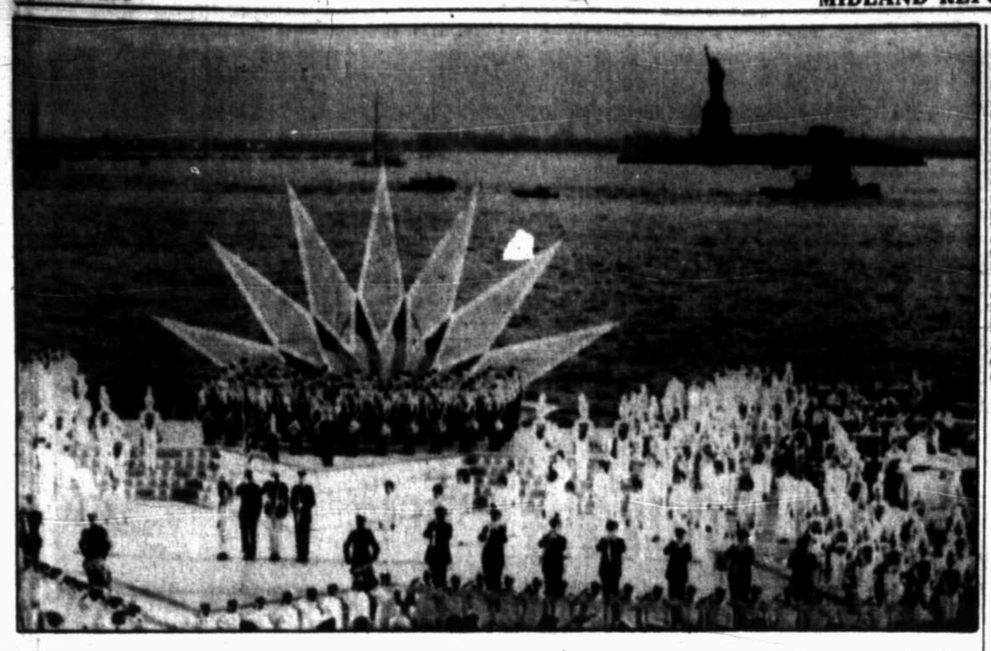

"It is the most appropriate place for the collection that I can think of."

Laws, Calif., became a ghost town when the Princess made its last run in April 1960. Now the steam engine sits in front of what is now the library of Laws, where an effort is being made to keep the town's history alive.

Seventy-seven new Americans take oath of allegience to U.S.

GLASSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Seventy-seven immigrants, surrounded by red, white and blue bunting and American flags snapping in a breeze, swore allegiance to the United States on Thursday and celebrated with cake and punch at an American Legion hall.

"You have no idea how much this means to me, someone who escaped for freedom," said Dzung Tang, 35, a native of Vietnam who said he escaped from Saigon five years ago by boat via Malaysia, leaving a life as a math teacher and student.

"Now I can call myself an American just like everybody else," said Tang, who has earned an electrical engineering degree at the University of Pittsburgh.

Citizen allow him to accept an engineering j.. with the U.S. Army, he said. His fiancee, Hang Tran, 26, hopes to marry Tang next year and also become a citizen.

U.S. District Judge Maurice Cohill, a descendant of English and Dutch ancestors, administered the oath in which the new citizens disavowed allegiance to any other nation or ruler and vowed to bear arms to defend the United States.

The ceremony was held under a blue sky at the Glassport Memorial Honor Roll, a grassy park and band shell. It was one of 20 to 25 naturalization ceremonies around the country Thursday in connection with Independence Day and the 100th anniversary of the Statute of Liberty in New York Harbor.

Pennsylvania Superior Court Judge John P. Hester, a Glassport native, told the new citizens about Americans who had fled the United States rather than fight in the Vietnam War.

"Too many young men emigrated to Canada, and I hope they stay there," he said to scattered applause from about 700 spectators.

The 77 immigrants, including seven children, took the oath facing an eight-foot green fiberglass model of the Statue of Liberty.

They were among an estimated 625,000 people allowed to enter the country annually, said George Hess, agent in charge of the Immigration and Naturalization Service Pittsburgh bureau.

The ceremony was Glassport's biggest display of patriotism since the late President John F. Kennedy visited in Oct. 13, 1962, according to a local historical society publication.

"I'm an immigrant's son. The statue is really important. It means so much to me, knowing that my father and my grandfather came past the statue," said Arthur Trunzo, 36, president of the Glassport Lions Club.

The organization negotiated with federal officials to bring the ceremony to this blue-collar town of 6,000 people, built largely by Polish and Italian immigrants of earlier generations.

Boy Scouts gave the new citizens copies of a Statue of Liberty commemorative poster and of USA Today. Members of an Amvets post gave them flag-shaped lapel pins and small U.S. flags. A local candy company distributed boxes of Irish taffy.

A four-man Marine Corps honor guard carried the flag and a brass sextet serenaded the crowd with "God Bless America," "America The Beautiful" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

American Legion Post 443 served red, white and blue cake and fruit punch after the ceremony.

"You can find freedom in other places, but there is nowhere you have the kinds of opportunities you do here," said new citizen Edward N. Guy, 37, who left Tinidad 16 years ago and is now a grocery warehouse worker. "It's a beautiful country."

Reagan: Statue 'still giving life to dream that brought her'

NEW YORK (AP) - President Reagan, great-grandson of an Irish immigrant, saluted the refurbished Statue of Liberty Thursday night as it was unveiled in a blaze of laser light, saying the statue is "still giving life to the dream that brought her to us."

"God bless America. Vive la France," Reagan declared at ceremonies commemorating the 100th anniversary of the statue, given to the American people as a gift from France.

He and first lady Nancy Reagan were joined in their viewing box on Governors Island by French President Francois Mitterrand and his wife Danielle.

Mitterrand addressed the crowd in French and concluded his remarks by saying in English, "Happy Birthday, United States. Happy Birthday, Miss Liberty."

In remarks preceding the unveiling, Reagan told the story of Robert Kearney, who was working on $66 million restoration of the statue after a serious illness, and who gave $10,000 worth of commemorative pins to visitors to the site.

In comments directed especially to Mitterrand, with whom he plans a working meeting on Friday, the president said that "the French and American people have forged a special friendship over the course of two centuries."

The program opened with an orchestral overture entitled "Liberty Fanfare," conducted by composer John Williams, followed by a recital by actor Gregory Peck on the history of the statue.

The Reagans and the Mitterrands stood in the presidential box as the French national anthem was played and 13-year-old Kenneth Mack Jr. of Natchitoches, La., sang the "Star Spangled Banner."

Young Mack is a participant in "Very Special Art," an international organization designed to enrich the lives of people with disabilities. Mack has what is described as a growth-related disability that limits his activities.

Today, Reagan and his wife will fly by helicopter to the battleship Iowa and steam up the Hudson River — passing a fleet of warships assembled for an international naval review. After flying to Governor's Island, they will review the Op Sail parade of 20 tall ships and 250 sailing ships from around the world.

Tonight, the president and first lady will view a second fireworks display from the Kennedy, a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier .

The first lady travels Saturday morning to Liberty Island, where she will cut the ribbon reopening the statue and tour the monument with 100 French and American children who wrote essays on liberty. She will rejoin her husband at Pocantico Hills for the flight back to Washington.

Debrett's Peerage Ltd., a British-based ancestry organization, said that Reagan's great-grandfather, Michael Reagan, was born in 1829 near Doolis, Ireland, and that he moved to London during the great potato famine of the 1840s, and eventually migrated to America in 1852 with his wife, Catherine Mulcahy.

Pick a car. Any car.

Now you can be picky about the kind of car company you keep. Because we've got a full hand of Civic, Accord and Prelude automobiles.

To Honda, the game has always meant innovation in engineering.

The payoff? Reliability, economy and performance. Maybe that's why Honda has the highest owner loyalty of any leading import car.*
