Mass murders terrorize Texas

By PHILIP BRASHER
Associated Press Writer

A sudden outbreak of mass murder and the grisly discovery of victims of crimes in the past months has left Texas in the grip of what the state's chief law enforcement officer calls "a reign of terror."

The death count reached 36 in five days. The victims include bodies of persons killed earlier and discovered hidden in a well in North Central Texas and in shallow graves in the Houston area as well as mass murder incidents at Fort Worth and Grand Prairie.

The death count began late Saturday when Hill County officers began digging into an abandoned water well near the small North Texas town of Blum.

There were four mass murders by Tuesday, including one with as many as 22 victims — and by Wednesday morning police had arrested four men and killed one.

The outbreak of killings are "shocking" and "frustrating," according to Col. James Adams, director of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

"Crime is creating a reign of terror in our cities," Adams said, quoting Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger.

On Monday morning, the bloody trail moved north from Blum. As the work-week was beginning in the Dallas suburb of Grand Prairie, an enraged 49-year-old truck driver gunned down six people at three places where he worked, police said.

Police said John Parish, who died in a hail of police bullets, carefully planned his attacks. Friends of Parish said he believed he was mistreated at work — that he was "tired of being pushed around," they said.

Parish's boss died as he sat at his desk. Houston police said, however, a bus mechanic suspected of 22 murders in Texas, Michigan and Canada picked his victims at random, over a 10-year period.

Officers found the remains of a 25-year-old woman clad in a bra and one stocking and a second woman's body clad in panties and a bra this week. The victims were among 11 women Coral Eugene Watts, 28, has admitted having killed over the past year and a half, police said.

State District Judge Doug Shaver said Watts also is suspected of stalking and killing women in Austin and Galveston, Texas, Detroit, Ann Arbor and Kalamazoo, Mich., and Windsor, Ontario — all because "he believes women are evil."

Headlines shifted back to North Texas Tuesday where a mother found her son's decapitated and sexually mutilated body at Fort Worth. Police responding to her call found four more bodies next door.

Junett Bryant told police she found her 31-year-old son, Ricky Lee, with his severed head tucked under an arm. His penis and testicles were found elsewhere in the house.

The assailant stabbed the victims repeatedly and may have shot and strangled them as well, police said.

Police in Wichita, Kan., arrested Larry Keith Robinson, 25, of Fort Worth Wednesday morning while he was sleeping in a car behind a church. Fort Worth police were called after identification papers belonging to some of the five victims were found on him.

Henry Fonda dies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Henry Fonda, the plain-speaking Midwesterner whose gentle manner and sense of fair play epitomized for 50 years what Americans wanted in their failure at 8:15 a.m., said Larry Baum, a spokesman for Cedars Sinai Medical Center.

Fonda's wife, Shirlee, was at his side when he died. His Academy Award-winning actress daughter Jane and actor son Peter arrived just afterward, Baum said.

The veteran actor had been hospitalized at Cedars Sinai since Sunday for a readjustment of his heart medication.

"He expired at 8:15 a.m. this morning with his wife at his bedside. His daughter Jane and son Peter came immediately to be with her," Baum said.

'Class load' begins for bus drivers

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Today, undoubtedly many Midland youths are preparing for the beginning of school by shopping for supplies, dusting off stored lunchboxes and rummaging through closets and drawers for school clothes stashed behind pairs of gym shorts, T-shirts and swim-suits.

Today, several older Midlanders also are preparing for the beginning of school, but they are doing it by finishing a 20-hour bus driver training course.

And it's not a light class load, according to Wes Washam, Midland Independent School District's director of transportation.

State law requires all school bus drivers to take a 20-hour bus driving course, an eight-hour refresher course every three years and have an annual physical exam.

A Midland school board policy also requires a driver to be at least 21 years of age. In addition, drivers must have a chauffeur's license in order to drive students.

"SCHOOL BUSES are probably safer than any other vehicle on the road because of the training of the drivers and of the maintenance," Washam said, adding with a laugh, "besides, they're like Sherman tanks, anyway."

With 70 drivers staffing regular daily routes, 5,200 students being transported on buses every morning and afternoon plus those transported for out of town activities and 1,097,559 total miles logged during the 1981-82 school year on all MISD vehicles, the business of school transportation is a big one.

The safety of the passengers is foremost and the 20-hour course takes in all aspects of first aid, safety and emergency procedures, defensive driving, driving regulations, and the most proper and time efficient way to load and unload students. Drivers are instructed in how to deal with situations involving choking, shock, broken bones and seizures, as well as emergency evacuation procedures.

Dealing with the physically handicapped is also covered during the course, Washam said. Although most of the special education students ride the special education bus, those able to ride with other children do so, Washam pointed out.

"IT DEPENDS ON what their needs are," he said. "The special education buses are as close to a taxi-service as we come. They pretty much go door-to-door."

Two buses are equipped with hydraulic lifts for wheelchairs. The buses also have locks to secure wheelchairs once they are aboard the buses.

Dealing with discipline problems of children is another responsibility of drivers, Washam said. Bus conduct reports are filed by drivers when the situation dictates such methods and the student, his parents and the driver involved are all called in for a conference. Every complaint, from the parent or from the driver, is followed through in every incident, Washam said.

Ninety-five percent of the buses are radio equipped and radios will be installed on the eight new buses purchased this year as soon as the radios arrive, Washam

Loeffler fighting Reagan's tax hike bill

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt, departed from his staunch support of President Reagan Wednesday by telling presidential aides figuratively to "go jump in the lake" when they tried to pressure him into supporting the $98 billion three-year tax increase bill.

According to Alan Kranowitz, Loeffler's administrative aide, the congressman was called to the White House Wednesday morning by a long-time friend, James Baker. There, Baker and Lyn Nofziger attempted to gain Loeffler's verbal support for the bill, known as HR 4961, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982.

"The Administration is pushing very strong for the House to support this $98 billion tax proposal," said Kranowitz.

But Loeffler reportedly told the White House officials, "I wasn't elected to be a tax collector. I will never support any tax increase bill."

Loeffler, who represents the 21st District of which Midland will be a part when redistricting takes effect in January, heard a lot of verbal arguments from the White House but refused to change his stance, said Kranowitz.

"Tom has been with them on every battle, except this one," the aide added. "Whenever he believes he's right, he sticks with it."

Loeffler is deputy minority whip in the House and his opposition to the tax increase bill marks one of the first times he has departed from his strong support of President Reagan and his programs.

Loeffler's refusal to support the bill could be indicative of the feelings of the rest of the House. His aide surmised that if a vote on the bill were to be taken this week, it would fail.

"I wouldn't bet my rent money" on the bill passing, Kranowitz said. "If the vote was held today, they are not going to pass it."

Loeffler also voiced his opposition to the proposal to tack on a 10 percent withholding tax to interest earned on savings accounts.

"It's a ridiculous cock-eyed proposal," said Kranowitz. "They take 10 percent out and send it to the feds and you're losing money on the account. Some of the elderly try to live on the interest from their accounts. This means they would have to wait and file in April to get it back and some of them can't afford to wait that long for the money."

Kranowitz added that the proposal is contrary to earlier efforts to try to promote increased savings by the public. This proposal would result in people not putting money into their savings accounts.

The tax increase bill, said Kranowitz, appears to counter the president's campaign rhetoric. "It does seem to be a contradiction. Last year at this time they were passing a tax cut bill. Loeffler told the White House he wants to cut spending and not raise taxes."

The president is expected to schedule a televised speech at the end of this week in an effort to get public support for the bill.

The vote should come by next Thursday before Congress adjourns for the Labor Day recess, according to Loeffler's aide.

Another tall office building planned for Tall City skyline

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Midland is about to lose another parking lot to progress. A Japanese construction firm will break ground around Oct. 15 for a new 13-story office building at the northwest corner of Wall Avenue and Pecos Street.

November 1983 is the estimated completion date for the $14 million tower, which will have 132,869 net square feet of rentable office space.

The building is a project of the Sussex Group, a Dallas firm which has other real estate interests in Midland, including Lorraine Center, Midland Executive Center, Executive Office Park at 4500 West Illinois, and other land holdings.

The new building will feature a green reflective glass exterior, an archway over the entrance off Wall Avenue, an atrium which extends from the

RRC reviewing charges against Basin

AUSTIN — A Texas Railroad Commission charge — carried by The Reporter-Telegram Tuesday — that Basin Inc. of Midland had failed to show up for a "show cause" hearing on allegations the firm failed to file mandatory monthly reports on its oil transport operations is being reviewed because the agency has now found the reports, RRC spokesman Brian Schaible said Wednesday.

The reports were discovered after the RRC checked into a complaint by Basin attorney Ralph Duggins that the firm never received notice of the hearing, which was held Monday afternoon in Austin. When Basin did not show up for the hearing, the RRC said it was considering whether to subpoena the company to a new hearing or submit the matter to the state attorney's office.

Schaible said reports through Dec. 1981 had turned up and the agency would examine the situation and issue a press release as soon as the examination is complete.

Hance won't help budget amendment

By LANA CUNNINGHAM Staff Writer

Kent Hance

As a co-sponsor of a balanced budget amendment that has been stuck on a snag in the House Judiciary Committee, U.S. Rep. Kent Hance is coming under pressure from outside groups to pen his name to a discharge petition...

Hance, a Democrat from Lubbock, represents the 19th Congressional District which includes Midland until redistricting becomes effective in January.

Dave Hall, a media coordinator with the National Tax Limitation Committee, told The Reporter-Telegram that Hance had co-sponsored the bill but now he "won't sign the discharge petition."

The discharge petition needs 218 signatures for the House to take the bill out of the committee and vote on it, according to Hall. To date, the petition has gained 187 signatures.

THE HOUSE JUDICIARY Committee is chaired by Democrat Peter Rodino of New Jersey, and the bill, labeled HJ Res 350, has been sitting in the committee for many months, according to Hall.

Hance doesn't intend to sign that discharge petition, said his legislative aide, Les Reik. If the bill goes to the floor on the calling of the petition, the rules state that no amendments may be added to the bill. The vote must be taken on the bill as it is.

Instead, Hance will contact Rodino to push the bill through the committee. "Rodino has held it up. He's not excited about that particular bill," Reik said.

Nor is Hance excited about the version passed by the Senate, according to Reik, and that is why the congressman wants the bill to go before the House in the normal procedure so that it can be amended.

The Senate added an amendment which states that both houses of Congress can come up with a three-fifths majority vote to override the balanced budget rule and approve an item-by-item basis spending more money than what was budgeted.

"We feel that is a loophole," said Reik. "It's so easy to override the balanced budget. We would like to tighten it and feel like it would be done in committee."

Reik pointed out that at the current National Governors' Association meeting in Afton, Okla., the group voiced their majority opposition to the bill, saying it was too bulky and too complex. They are looking for something simpler.

HALL CLAIMED that if a balanced budget amendment isn't passed the current deficit of $1 trillion will jump to $2 trillion by the end of this decade. A family of four today pays $130 a month to pay the interest on that deficit, he said.

If passed by both houses, the balanced budget amendment wouldn't take effect before 1986 because two-thirds of the states have to ratify it before it can become law, said Hall.

The discharge petition has been signed by 14 Texas congressmen, and Hall claimed the signatures are primarily those of Republicans. He charged that Jim Wright, the powerful Texas Democratic leader, is pressuring other Democratic congressmen not to sign the petition by threatening to remove their chairmanships of various committees.

Reik said that wasn't the case. "We would disagree with it. And I don't think that's right on the discharge petition signatures. I know there are some Democrats on it from Texas."

Hall said the those opposed to the bill are claiming the amendment couldn't be enforced and that it would be dangerous for the country. He used the example of Proposition 13 which was passed several years ago in California. Pointing to opponents who had claimed it would bring a lot of problems, Hall said it hasn't.

TO GO INTO DEFICIT spending under the balanced budget amendment means voting on the over-budgeted items one by one. "It's not a blank check. That would make the gang voting for it very visible."

And he also wants the congressmen who are opposed to it to vote on it before the election and, therefore, be visible to the public.

"If there was any real intention to balance the budget, why would they care about raising the debt ceiling?" Hall said.

The balanced budget amendment may not solve the country's deficit spending, the aide surmised. Reik noted that Congress had a chance to balance the budget for 1982-83, but instead they passed the one which includes a deficit of about $100 billion. This concentrated effort to pass the balanced budget amendment could be simply an election year ploy.

He noted that a few months ago, a congressman submitted for consideration a budget which would have been balanced. It came in second behind the Gramm-Latta proposal.

"Hance voted for the balanced budget. This is such a great turn-around from a couple of months ago. The Administration had the chance then to get a balanced budget without having this amendment," he said. "We felt that if the president would have pushed it enough, it could have passed."

The "election year" pressure isn't affecting Hance on this issue, according to Reik. Hance has no opposition for a third term.

School already begun for Midland's bus drivers

In case of emergencies such as breakdowns or accidents, radio communication is essential, he added.

Buses also are equipped with fire extinguishers, first aid kits and safety reflectors.

Washam said that police are notified of all accidents, even those occurring on private property. School nurses also come to the scene immediately if children were aboard the bus involved.

"WE DIDN'T have any major accidents last year, but we did have a couple of fender-benders," he said with a smile. "Sometimes the accident is so minor that we hate to go through all that, but we do."

The 20 hours of classroom lectures and lab instruction are provided in both day and night classes so that all drivers may attend without other conflicts, Washam explained. While the day course ends today, the night course continues through Wednesday evening.

For example, drivers in four of the 78 district-owned buses spent two hours Wednesday morning dodging in and out of bright orange cones set up in the parking lot of Midland Memorial Stadium. The drivers also practiced loading and unloading procedures by alternating roles of students and drivers. The proper use of a fire extinguisher also was demonstrated by the fire marshal.

Tonight, drivers attending night classes will meet at the stadium parking lot for their two-hour loading and unloading lab unit.

Applications for bus driving positions were more numerous this year than last, Washam pointed out. Crediting it to the economy, he added, "We like it because we can be more selective this year than in the past."

seventh to the 13th floor, and a 317-car six-story parking garage incorporated into the building's design. Architects are Shepherd and Boyd USA, a Dallas company.

Glass-backed elevators will overlook the atrium. Negotiations are under way with two restaurants for a medium-priced restaurant that may be open evenings as well as during the work day, according to Patrick J. Haynes, a partner in the Sussex Group.

"We've been looking at Midland since 1978 and we began acquiring properties here in 1979," Haynes said. "We've been working on this project for over a year and have kept it quiet until now to be sure we had all our ducks in a row."

Competition for office tenants in Midland is vigorous now, Haynes said, but the Sussex Group will have several tenants pre-leased before the building is finished. Negotiations are under way with a major oil company tenant, he added.

The success of the project is directly geared to the price of oil, Haynes said. "Our forecasts show 1984 will be a strong year. We've written off 1982 and most of 1983 in terms of the economy on other peoples' yards, the bus drivers will know exactly where to pick them up and they'll know at exactly what time to pick them up. We're just streamlining the operation."

Three new 83-passenger buses have been added to the fleet this year, bringing the total to seven such buses, he said. The buses, diesel powered, will prove to be more cost effective in several ways.

"We've found that we can double the gas mileage with diesel buses," he explained, adding that gasoline powered buses get about 4.5 miles to the gallon while diesel buses get about 9.5 miles. With the larger buses, the need for two buses on one overcrowded route also is eliminated.

"WE HAD ROUTES last year that were served by a regular 72-passenger bus," he said. "When the routes grew to more than 72 passengers, we were having to send out an overload bus. Now we can just use the 83-passenger buses on those routes."

"Initially the diesel powered buses are more expensive, but they pay for themselves very quickly in the fuel savings," he added.

Other than procedures for safety and preventive maintenance, drivers also receive instruction on the image of the school bus driver.

"We explain the ways they relate with parents, school employees and students," Washam said. "Basically, we try to come across with a firm, honest, dependable and responsible image."

"We've got some excellent drivers," he continued. "There is an excitement about the drivers and they've got so much enthusiasm. Most of them are driving because they want to, not because they have to."

Congressional committee tries to reach compromise

By GENE GRABOWSKI

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under threat of a presidential veto, a congressional conference committee must negotiate a compromise between House and Senate versions of a $14 billion supplemental spending bill needed to operate government agencies for the rest of this fiscal year.

Conferees from both the House and Senate were to begin work today on a compromise measure after the Senate approved its version on a voice vote Wednesday night.

The House acted last month on its version of the bill, which would provide extra money for various agencies and departments for the federal government's current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30.

THE BULK of the measure is $6.1 billion for salary increases for military and civilian federal workers.

Another House bill earmarking a record $7.5 billion for military construction and family housing programs in fiscal 1983 was also readied for a conference committee Wednesday when it passed the House by a 332-57 vote.

The conference panel handling that big spending measure will try to work out differences with a leaner Senate version.

But it's the fiscal 1982 bill that President Reagan says is overloaded with extras. And the president says he'll veto the supplemental bill if it isn't trimmed.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said that during a White House meeting earlier this week with Republican congressional leaders, President Reagan "indicated he doesn't support it (the money bill) in its present form."

WHITE HOUSE officials have said they oppose about $680 million in various items in the bill. The major items that were not requested by the administration include: —$210 million for community service employment programs for senior citizens.

—$26.5 million for several education programs for the handicapped. —$169 million for grants to needy college students.

The Senate bill includes $483 million for defense, which is $1.9 billion less than the total the administration had requested. The House defense level is $125 million less than the Senate figure.

By contrast, the military construction bill for next year's budget has so far avoided White House opposition.

THE BILL IS $1.5 billion bigger in multi-year spending authority than Congress enacted for the current fiscal year and $1.1 billion larger than the version the Senate approved June 30.

Most of the Senate savings came from a freeze on all new housing construction and other projects deemed unnecessary in a time of tight budgets.

But the House bill had something for every state and about two dozen foreign countries among the more than 1,000 projects it authorizes, and none was deleted during the floor consideration.

In fact, members agreed to add $7 million for two more buildings — National Guard armories in Boston and Gary, Ind. — during the 4½ hours they spent on the bill.

MEANWHILE, congressional negotiators writing a $98.9-billion tax increase are still struggling for agreement as their self-imposed deadline nears.

Twenty-six hours before tonight's midnight deadline for completing the deficit reduction bill, Senate and House conferees ended a day of informal bargaining sessions with no agreement and without setting a time for convening a formal meeting.

Only a few parts of a $17-billion package of spending cuts attached to the tax bill have deadlocked the conference committee — not the tax increases themselves.

The stalemate began Tuesday night over a House effort to increase welfare spending by $325 million over the next three years, but the problem spread into other areas, including proposed cuts in Medicare.

IN OTHER congressional action:

—A House committee considering changes in the Clean Air Act divided over portions of the measure. The House Energy and Commerce Committee was to meet again today on proposed changes in the law, the third public session this week.

But early votes Wednesday indicated that supporters of an industry-backed bill did not have a solid majority.

The Senate, in what is billed as an attempt by the United States to regain control of its borders, was poised to consider the first major overhaul of the nation's immigration laws in nearly a generation.

The Senate planned to begin debate today on complex and controversial legislation.

THE MEASURE would grant amnesty to millions of illegal immigrants already in this country, set a ceiling for annual legal immigration in the future and deny card to prove legal residency.

In some election-year saber-rattling, the Senate declared that the United States is determined to block Cuban aggression in the Western Hemisphere by "whatever means may be necessary."

Then, after a few hours reflection, the Senate made clear they did not mean for the president to begin sending troops throughout the Caribbean.

Reagan to seek support for taxes in speech on TV

By TERENCE HUNT

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is likely to make a televised address to the nation, perhaps before a House-Senate session on Capitol Hill, seeking support for passage of a $98.9 billion tax increase bill.

White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said there is a good possibility — but no final decision — that Reagan will speak to Americans about the tax hike late this week or early next.

Meanwhile, the president was resuming his arm-twisting sessions with congressmen today as he lobbies for passage of the tax bill he says is vital to his economic recovery program.

Reagan set aside time to see congressmen during three White House meetings. For days, the president has been working to convince rebellious House conservatives to support the tax bill.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., has invited Reagan to use Capitol Hill as his forum in making an appeal to the public on behalf of tax increase bill.

White House aides say, however, there is a far better chance that Reagan will address the nation about the legislation from the Oval Office, rather than from Capitol Hill.

Administration sources told the Washington Post the president has reached a definite decision to make the public appeal and will probably deliver it during prime time Monday from the Oval Office.

Speaking anonymously, administration officials expressed fears that O'Neill was trying to trap the president politically and pin sole responsibility for an election-year tax hike on Republicans.

Reagan twitted O'Neill during a trip Wednesday to Billings, Mont., saying Republicans were leading the fight for budget cuts. "Imagine if we had two Tip O'Neills," Reagan told a fund-raising luncheon for GOP Senate candidate Larry Williams.

At a celebration of Billings' 100th birthday, Reagan said he would have to be a magician to fix the economy quickly after "40 years of fiscal irresponsibility."

"You know," he ad-libbed, "that might be more fun pulling rabbits out of a hat instead of jackasses out of the way in Washington."

For his part, O'Neill said there was no public clamor for the tax bill and that Reagan should address Congress if he really wants the legislation.

"There is no incentive for the Democrats unless he (Reagan) can get a good majority of Republicans," O'Neill told reporters in Washington. "The Democrats are very, very reluctant to go along with the tax bill while there's a brigade of Republicans opposing the president and getting all the news."

"Why should we pull their chestnuts out of the fire?" O'Neill asked.

In his speeches in Montana, Reagan portrayed himself as a reluctant advocate of the tax hike and said he endorsed it only as a means of winning support for budget cuts and trimming the deficit.

Reagan said the Democratic-Republican coalition that provided the majority for approval of tax and budget cuts last year could not be put together again "unless we would agree to some increased revenue."

In order to get $280 billion in reduced outlays over the next three years, we had to agree to the added revenues of $99 billion," Reagan said. "The ratio of reduced outlays to revenues is three-to-one."

"I figure the compromise is worth it," said Reagan.

Congress struggles over tax bill

By JIM LUTHER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite new appeals from President Reagan and concessions from some of his top aides, congressional negotiators writing a $98.9-billion tax increase are still struggling for agreement as their self-imposed deadline nears.

Twenty-six hours before tonight's midnight deadline for completing the deficit-reduction bill, Senate and House conferees ended a day of informal bargaining sessions with no agreement and without setting a time for convening a formal meeting.

Only a few parts of a $17-billion package of spending cuts attached to the tax bill have deadlocked the conference committee — not the tax increases themselves.

The stalemate began Tuesday night over a House effort to increase welfare spending by $325 million over the next three years, but the problem spread into other areas, including proposed cuts in Medicare.

Nevertheless, said Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, "I think they're that close," bringing his thumb and forefinger together, on deciding spending cuts.

Congressional leaders want the conference to wrap up its work tonight so the House and Senate can complete action on the bill next week and then leave for a 2½-week recess.

Reagan, who used a speech in Billings, Mont., Wednesday to whip up public support for the tax increase, sent top aides to Capitol Hill in an unsuccessful attempt to break the stalemate.

Led by Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, the aides met with leaders of the conference and reportedly urged the Republican-controlled Senate delegation to stand tough against the House efforts to boost spending.

In addition, according to sources familiar with the session, the administration gave its blessing to a GOP plan that would attempt to build support for the bill by attaching liberalized unemployment compensation.

Shortly after the lunch meeting, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., pledged to the Senate that the final compromise would include additional jobless benefits.

He offered no details. But one proposal being considered would add an extra 10 to 13 weeks of benefits — for a total of 49 to 52 weeks — for workers who have been jobless so long that they have exhausted the basic 26 weeks of aid and the extra 13 weeks now available in severely hit states.

It also would protect workers in more than a dozen states where the third 13 weeks of benefits now allowed are due to end Sept. 25 under a new law.

Senate Republican leaders view the extra jobless aid as the bait that will allow just enough Democrats to support the tax bill to assure its passage. They reason that no lawmaker from a high unemployment state can afford to vote against any bill containing extra jobless benefits, no matter how distasteful an election-year tax increase.

In his Montana speech, Reagan summed up his arguments for the bill. "Would you rather reduce deficits and interest rates by raising revenue from those who are not now paying their fair share, or would you rather accept larger budget deficits, higher interest rates and higher unemployment?"

Despite the president's pleas, some of his most ardent supporters are parting company with him on the tax increase.

Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., chairman of the American Conservative Union, released a survey indicating that 183 of the 435 members of the House oppose or are leaning against the bill. That includes 118 Republicans. Only 25 Republicans and 19 Democrats are siding with the president, Edwards said.

Political rivals quarrel over hearing

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — For Rep. Margaret Heckler, the news that her Democratic rival Rep. Barney Frank will hold a congressional field hearing on Social Security problems right in her backyard of Fall River tomorrow (Friday) was one indignity too much.

"She wrote Frank a crisp two-paragraph letter Wednesday.

"It has been brought to my attention," she began, that Frank planned a hearing there of the House Select Committee on Aging. She cited the time and location. And she added sharply, "this is to notify you of my intent to testify at this hearing, subject of course — to the House floor schedule."

In short, Heckler is throwing down the gauntlet to Frank. Rather than avoid confrontations — or even chance joint appearances — she now is eager for one.

The Heckler staff has said it has been hard to restrain her from challenging Frank early and often. They claim they, not Heckler, have shaped a campaign schedule that includes few formal speeches or public forums and focuses instead on informal hand shaking.

"They aren't euphoric about her bursting those bounds now, either."

Late yesterday, Frank wrote Heckler that despite her tardy request he would fit her into the hearing at Bristol Community College. He couldn't pass up the chance for a subtle dig.

No other members of Congress ever have asked to testify at his previous field hearings since they have that chance in Washington, he said, and field hearings by definition aim to get views from grass roots persons affected.

In Fall River, the focus will be on a little publicized glitch in the Social Security law that has enraged persons who earned maximum wages and retired after Jan. 1 — at substantially less wages than someone who retired the day before.

A person eligible for maximum benefits who retired Dec. 31, 1981, is getting $671 a month. A person eligible for the same maximum benefits but who reached 65 the next day, in contrast, gets only $576 a month.

The distinction is due to Congress' attempt in the late 1970s to correct an earlier computer error in the early 1970s that inadvertently computed cost-of-living indexes for Social Security at too high a level.

"I've gotten more spontaneous mail on this issue than on any other," said Frank. "People have friends and relatives who are approximately the same age and what drives them berserk is to find they're getting $80 a month less than their contemporaries who retired only shortly earlier."

"It was a terrible way to fix the earlier problem and Heckler voted for that bill then," Frank said. "So did the esteemed patron of the elderly, Aging Chairman Claude Pepper, retorted a Heckler aide, so it couldn't have been all bad."

As complaints reached him on this issue, Frank cosigned a bill to require the Department of Health and Human Services to remedy the inequity.

Man has great love for plants

By ANN JOHNSON

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Grenville Llewellyn Lucas has a love for the plant kingdom that's as abundant as the L's in his name. But that wasn't why he was in Phoenix.

He is deputy keeper and head of the conservation unit at the Royal Botanical Gardens in London.

He is also chairman of the Species Survival Commission and the Threatened Plants Committee of the International Union for the Conservation (IUCN) of Nature and Natural Resources.

Headquartered in Switzerland, IUCN is closely related to the World Wildlife Fund (WWF).

And WWF is why he was here recently, along with Dr. Thomas E. Lovejoy Jr. and Diana Kingsbury-Smith. Lovejoy is vice president for science of the WWF-U.S., and Ms. Kingsbury-Smith is WWF-U.S. special gifts coordinator.

FOR LUCAS, the sad part was that he was here only for two days. "There's all those plants out there I'm not going to get to see," he said regretfully.

While Lucas is concerned for the welfare of all life threatened by loss of habitat, pollution, pesticides, commercial trading and competition with non-native species, his compassion is basically grounded in the earth's flora.

"Animals are quite exciting," he explains, "but plants are what keep them alive. As far as I'm concerned the plants of the world are what keep us all alive."

The value of plants to man is unfathomable, and the potential the plant kingdom has to solve a world of humanity's problems is enormous, he says.

As an example, he cites the scrappy jojoba bush — "a miserable little green bush, you must admit."

"But it's going to save the sperm whale," Lucas says.

The oil of the jojoba fruit approximates that for which the sperm whale has been butchered for more than a century.

WHILE THE jojoba is a success story, one East African plant was nearly eliminated before it was discovered to be particularly effective in the treatment of one kind of cancer, Lucas reports. Most specimens were destroyed to make room for coconut trees, he says, adding that what remains of the plant now grows naturally only in a grove on a sable antelope sanctuary.

Who knew 50 years ago — when he wanted coconuts — that this plant would be important tomorrow? he says. "It's a matter of keeping our options open."

Lucas ticks off a list of compounds derived from plants that mankind has grown dependent on. "One of the major contraceptives comes from plants," he says. "Digitalis comes from the foxglove."

Pittsburgh mayor to come clean

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mayor Richard Caliguiri says he'll take a bath in public to help convince people to come clean and stop littering city streets.

"Just make sure there's a lot of suds," Caliguiri told members of the Pittsburgh Clean City Committee in announcing his plan to help clean up the Steel City.

At a meeting Tuesday where the committee previewed radio and TV ads for an anti-litter campaign, Caliguiri volunteered to dunk and lather at the corner of Sixth Avenue and Grant Street, near his downtown office.

"We have to change attitudes about littering. We want to make the city look like our homes," he said. "We want to make people conscious of how the sidewalks and the areas around their homes look."

Police raid 'safe house'

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

A "safe house" believed to have been used by a fugitive sought for the 1981 Brink's armored truck robbery in Rockland County, N.Y., was raided by police in San Jose, Calif., who found detailed blueprints for the army alarm systems of the Presidio Army depot in San Francisco, the FBI disclosed Tuesday.

The FBI in New York said evidence found in the house July 30 by San Jose police, who went there to make an arrest on shoplifting charges, indicated that the home had been used as a hiding place for Marilyn Jean Buck, an "urban guerrilla" being sought for the October robbery in which a Brink's guard and two Nyack, N.Y., policemen were killed. Authorities declined to say exactly what evidence linked Buck to the house.

Also found in the house were 15 guns, a pipe bomb, gunpowder and bomb-building materials, along with bumper tags and material to make bogus identification cards, both for entry into U.S. military posts, including the Oakland Army Base, the FBI said.

Arrested on explosives charges were four people believed to be members of the Well Springs Commune, comprised of radicals who, authorities speculate, were planning to burglarize the Presidio armory, where explosives and armaments are stored. The FBI said its laboratory in Washington was checking the documents found in the house for Buck's fingerprints. She is the only fugitive in the Brink's case.

Buck, who escaped from a West Virginia prison in 1977, has been described as the only white member of the Black Liberation Army. Witnesses told authorities she was present during the shootout between robbers and police after the Brink's heist. Newspaper clippings relating to the Brink's investigation were found in the San Jose house, authorities said.

Discovery of the guns and bomb-making materials came after local police arrested Teresa Ball, 29, who lived in the house, on a routine shoplifting warrant 10 days ago. When police found the maps and other documents in the house, the FBI was informed, and a federal search warrant was obtained. The FBI said in New York.

Based on what was found in the house, Ms. Ball was arrested on state explosives charges along with Benjamin Sargis, 49; Bonnie Gordon, 30; and Sarah Stubbs, 32. An FBI spokesman in New York said federal charges had not yet been filed against any of the defendants.

Million that got away

TUKWILA, Wash. (AP) — The chance to land $1 million got away, but the fish Joe Smith caught was still worth a hefty $5,000. Smith, 65, of Edmonds, on Saturday caught a coho salmon specially tagged for a fishing derby sponsored by Schuck's Auto Supply. Had he entered the contest on Puget Sound and caught the fish during a designated 12-hour period July 18, it would have been worth a $1 million prize.

As it was, Smith almost didn't get anything. When Smith caught the coho while fishing with his son, Ron, south of Whidbey Island, he cleaned it immediately and threw the head and tail overboard. He also threw away a marker used to identify the fish.

Fortunately for Smith, a second marker remained. A University of Washington expert on Tuesday identified the fish as the one that had been tagged. Schuck's then accepted what was left of the fish in a ceremony and gave Smith $5,000.

Schuck's spokesman Tom Aitchison says Smith planned to split the prize with his son.

Murder suspect confesses to killing roommate, neighbors

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A man charged with murdering his roommate at a secluded cottage here admits to the crime and says he also killed four people in the house next door, including an 11-year-old boy, authorities said.

The roommate was decapitated and the throats of the other four victims were slashed, police said.

Larry Keith Robison told detectives Wednesday "that he committed the murders," but he has not given a signed statement to police, Deputy Police Chief Jack Bicknell said.

Robison, 25, was charged Wednesday in the death of 31-year-old Ricky Lee Bryant, whose nude body was found Tuesday in a bedroom of Bryant's secluded cottage near Lake Worth. His head lay in the crook of his arm and his body had been sexually mutilated.

The other four victims were discovered next door when police went there to question neighbors about Bryant's death, police said.

Bryant's parents said Robison was living at the cottage while looking for a job.

Bicknell said Robison knew all of the victims but gave no motive for the slayings. Robison gave his oral statement to detectives while being flown here after waiving extradition from Wichita, Kan., Bicknell said.

About 12 hours after the five bodies were found here, Robison was arrested in Wichita when a gun was spotted on the floor of the station wagon in which he was sleeping behind a Wichita car.

Wichita police found in the car bill-folders belonging to two of the victims, officials said.

The other four victims were identified as Georgia Reed, 34, a masseuse; her son, Scott, who would have turned 12 today; her mother, Earline H. Barker, 55, and Bruce M. Gardner, 33.

An autopsy on Bryant began Wednesday but Tarrant County medical examiner's office officials said results would not be released until the other four autopsies were finished.

Medical Examiner Nizam Peerwani has said the four next-door victims may have been shot or strangled as well as stabbed repeatedly.

Spent .22-caliber cartridges were found in both of the cottages, police said. The gun found with Robison was a .22-caliber pistol, Bicknell said.

Robison told Fort Worth detectives he had been heading for Kansas City, Mo., where he has a girlfriend, Bicknell said. But Wichita police Capt. Mike Hill said Robison earlier had told Wichita police "he was going to Chicago and needed a place to rest."

The car in which Robison was found belonged to Gardner.

Court records show Robison was convicted in Fort Worth in 1977 on a theft charge after three snakes, an aquarium and a pet supplies were stolen from a pet store. He also was arrested on a burglary complaint but the charge was dismissed last spring.

Robison, who had worked as a carpenter, had lived in Haltom City, a Fort Worth suburb, with his common-law wife, Tina Blosser, and their young daughter, Melissa Dawn Robison, last year and part of this year. Ms. Blosser now lives in Kansas City with the child.

Bryant's father, Donald Bryant, said his son had known Robison for about eight months. The Bryants live about two miles from the cottage where Junett Bryant found her son's body.

Identity sought of 10th known victim

HOUSTON (AP) — Authorities hope a medical examiner's investigation will help them confirm the identity of the 10th known victim of a killer who hated women.

The body, the first victim of Coral Eugene Watts found outside Harris County, was found about 6 p.m. Wednesday approximately 40 miles west of Houston, homicide detective Mike Kardatzke said.

"We have an idea who it is, but we'll have to wait for the medical examiner's report," assistant district attorney Ira Jones said.

Jones said the newly discovered victim, found near the town of Brook-shire, had been dead for four or five months.

Watts, a 28-year-old bus mechanic, had previously admitted killing nine women in Houston and is a suspect in 13 other slayings in Texas, Michigan and Canada.

Kardatzke said the 10th victim appeared to be white, but said he could not identify her and did not know how old she is. Officers located the body by following directions from Watts, but Kardatzke said Watts did not accompany them.

Badly deteriorated clothing was found with the body, he said.

The other nine women Watts admitted stabbing or strangling to death were found well within Houston city limits.

Assistant district attorney Jack Frels called Watts' recall of the crimes "frightening, phenomenal, uncanny." He said Watts remembered details of time, location and clothing.

Watts led officers to graves of two other victims Monday and Tuesday. He agreed to plead guilty to a burglary charge and accept a 60-year sentence in exchange for information about the Harris County killings.

He was jailed in May and charged with assaulting two women in their apartment. One escaped and summoned police. Both escaped without serious injury.

Watts' confessions still leave 24 slayings of young women unsolved, homicide Lt. Guy Mason said.

He said at this point no one knows if Watts committed others beyond the cases he has admitted to, but added, "I'm sure you could say he couldn't have done them all."

"He may recall one tomorrow and then lie there for a week" before remembering another one, Mason said.

"After he quits coming up with the things, we can go back and we might show him pictures of the complainants,"

Cleburne man may be charged today

HILLSBORO, Texas (AP) — Formal charges were expected to be filed today against a Cleburne man in connection with the discovery of two skeletons near the isolated community of Blum northwest of here.

The man was taken into custody Wednesday afternoon by Waco authorities after a murder warrant was issued earlier in the day, said sheriff Brent Button.

He said the man would be taken before Justice of the Peace Skinner Wallace. He was being held without bond until that time in Hill County jail.

Button said the man was not the person picked up Monday for questioning and later released after two skeletons were discovered at the bottom of an abandoned well.

The Cleburne man formerly lived with 52-year-old recluse Henry Burton Merrill, who remained in Hill County jail in lieu of $150,000 bond on three murder counts, Button said.

The counts were filed after authorities found what they thought were three human skeletons.

But studies by the Dallas County medical examiner's office showed that only two of the skeletons were human.

Button said dental and medical records of the two men had been sent to the medical examiner's office, along with the bones, earlier this week.

Merrill was arrested at his campsite less than 200 feet from the well near Lake Whitney minutes after searchers recovered the first skeleton there. Authorities had been tipped to the grisly find by an anonymous caller.

Button said the Cleburne man was an associate of Merrill's.

"He lived with Merrill for a short period of time," said Button. "There doesn't appear to be a motive" in the deaths, he said.

He said that autopsy results and positive identifications of the remains are still not available.

"The pathologists in Dallas are snowed under and backlogged with work," said Button. "We are hoping for results this week."

Deputy sheriff Harold Patton said one of the victims is believed to be Bobby Carroll Walker who lived near Fort Worth, who was reported missing almost two years ago. Patton said Walker would be 32 if still alive.

Walker could have argued with Merrill and the Cleburne man before his death, Button said.

Button said relatives of both men had supplied missing persons data to authorities. He said a White Settlement man, apparently Walker, whose name he withheld at the time pending notification of relatives, had been missing for almost two years.

A Cleburne man, who Button identified as Tommy Rogers, had been reported missing 1 1/2 years ago. Rogers, in his 40s, worked in the used car business, he said. Walker was a construction worker.

Neighbors described Merrill as "a real mountain man" and a "hermit" living at a campsite six miles northwest of tiny Blum.

Examiners remove seven bullets from suspect's body

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A Tarrant County medical examiner says he removed seven large-caliber bullets from the body of a truck driver killed by police in a hail of gunfire after shooting six people to death in Grand Prairie.

Autopsy results on John Parish released Wednesday showed the 46-year-old man had 14 entry and exit wounds, and was also grazed by a bullet, medical examiner Dr. Marc Krouse ruled.

Parish was shot in the head, chest, abdomen, left arm and both legs, according to the report. He was hit by the volley of gunfire after he smashed a stolen 18-wheel tractor-trailer rig into a police car and a trucking terminal Monday.

Pathologists were still awaiting results of analyses performed on body fluid samples that could determine whether Parish had consumed liquor or drugs before the shootings, said medical examiner's spokesman Bill Fabian.

Parish's death ended a half-hour spree that police called the worst in Dallas-Fort Worth history. Six people at three warehouses in Grand Prairie, a suburb between Dallas and Fort Worth, were killed, authorities said.

Authorities said two of the warehouses were offices of Parish's employer, Western Transportation Systems, and the third was a Jewel T grocery distribution center.

Parish had been involved in a dispute with his Western bosses over $1,600 in pay he believed he was owed, Grand Prairie police said.

Parish had driven trucks for Jewel T as a Western employee, but the company later complained he was a "troublemaker" and asked Weston to no longer assign him to Jewel T jobs, Police Chief David Kun-

Former Cowboy to help kick off 1983 campaign

Former Dallas Cowboy Cliff Harris will be the speaker at the kickoff luncheon of the United Way of Midland Campaign for 1983, president Jack Steele announced today.

The kickoff luncheon for the campaign, which has a $1,612,000 goal, will be Sept. 22. The public is invited to participate in the kickoff.

"We think Cliff's support of our organization combined with his understanding of our oil-based economy qualifies him especially well to help get our campaign off to a rousing start," Steele said.

Harris, who now represents U.S. Companies, an oil exploration firm based in Dallas, was in Midland Wednesday to confirm kickoff plans with Steele and United Way campaign leaders.

During the time Harris played for the Cowboys, he participated as an NFL player in the United Way of America public service announcement series and has since supported several health-related organizations.

"Supporting United Way makes sense," Harris pointed out, "because you are able to help more than one group."

This year's United Way campaign kickoff will represent an effort to involve more people in the event than in the past, Steele explained. Several service organizations have indicated their support by designating the kickoff as their weekly roll-call meeting.

To be included in the funding package covered by the fall campaign are two organizations new to United Way.

West Texas Epilepsy Association has been admitted as a participating agency and the American Cancer Society has entered into an agreement with United Way which calls for the two organizations to conduct joint fund raising and education programs in the business and industry sector of the community.

Devaluation effects studied

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's tourism director says the government is still studying the impact of last week's devaluation on the industry.

The devaluation was expected to draw more tourists to Mexico because peso-priced goods and services are cheaper in dollars following the devaluation.

But Mexico's tourism director, Rosa Luz Alegria, noted Tuesday during a press conference that high unemployment in the United States also affects travel to Mexico and may mean that many Americans cannot take advantage of the devaluation unless Mexico takes other steps.

She said that among other measures the Tourism Department believes more charter flights from the United States are needed "to increase the number of tourists coming across the border."

Planning Commission OKs loan program for housing

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission gave approval for a loan program that would provide housing for the elderly and handicapped in Midland.

At its regular monthly meeting Wednesday the PBRPC also heard a presentation from a Dallas investment banking firm for a proposal to form a multi-county housing finance corporation.

In addition the board recommended another item concerning the elderly, accepted a resolution authorizing bids for a computer terminal for the PBRPC and approved to submit a request for proposal for the 1981 audit.

Volunteers of America, a Christian organization, received a favorable comment from the board for a proposal to the Department of Housing and Urban Development for a section 202 loan program, which provides for the construction of housing for the elderly and handicapped. The organization applied for a mortgage loan of $4,051,500 to build 100 units at Midkiff Road and Front Street. The project would serve some 125 elderly and handicapped persons.

The board, representing the 17-county Permian Basin area, heard a presentation from Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc., of Dallas. The investment banking firm proposed that board members talk to their local governing bodies about forming a multi-jurisdictional housing finance corporation to issue tax-exempt bonds for low interest rate housing mortgage funds that would be used for single family housing. Midland, Odessa and Ector County already have housing finance corporations, but under this corporation they also would be able to join the multi-county corporation.

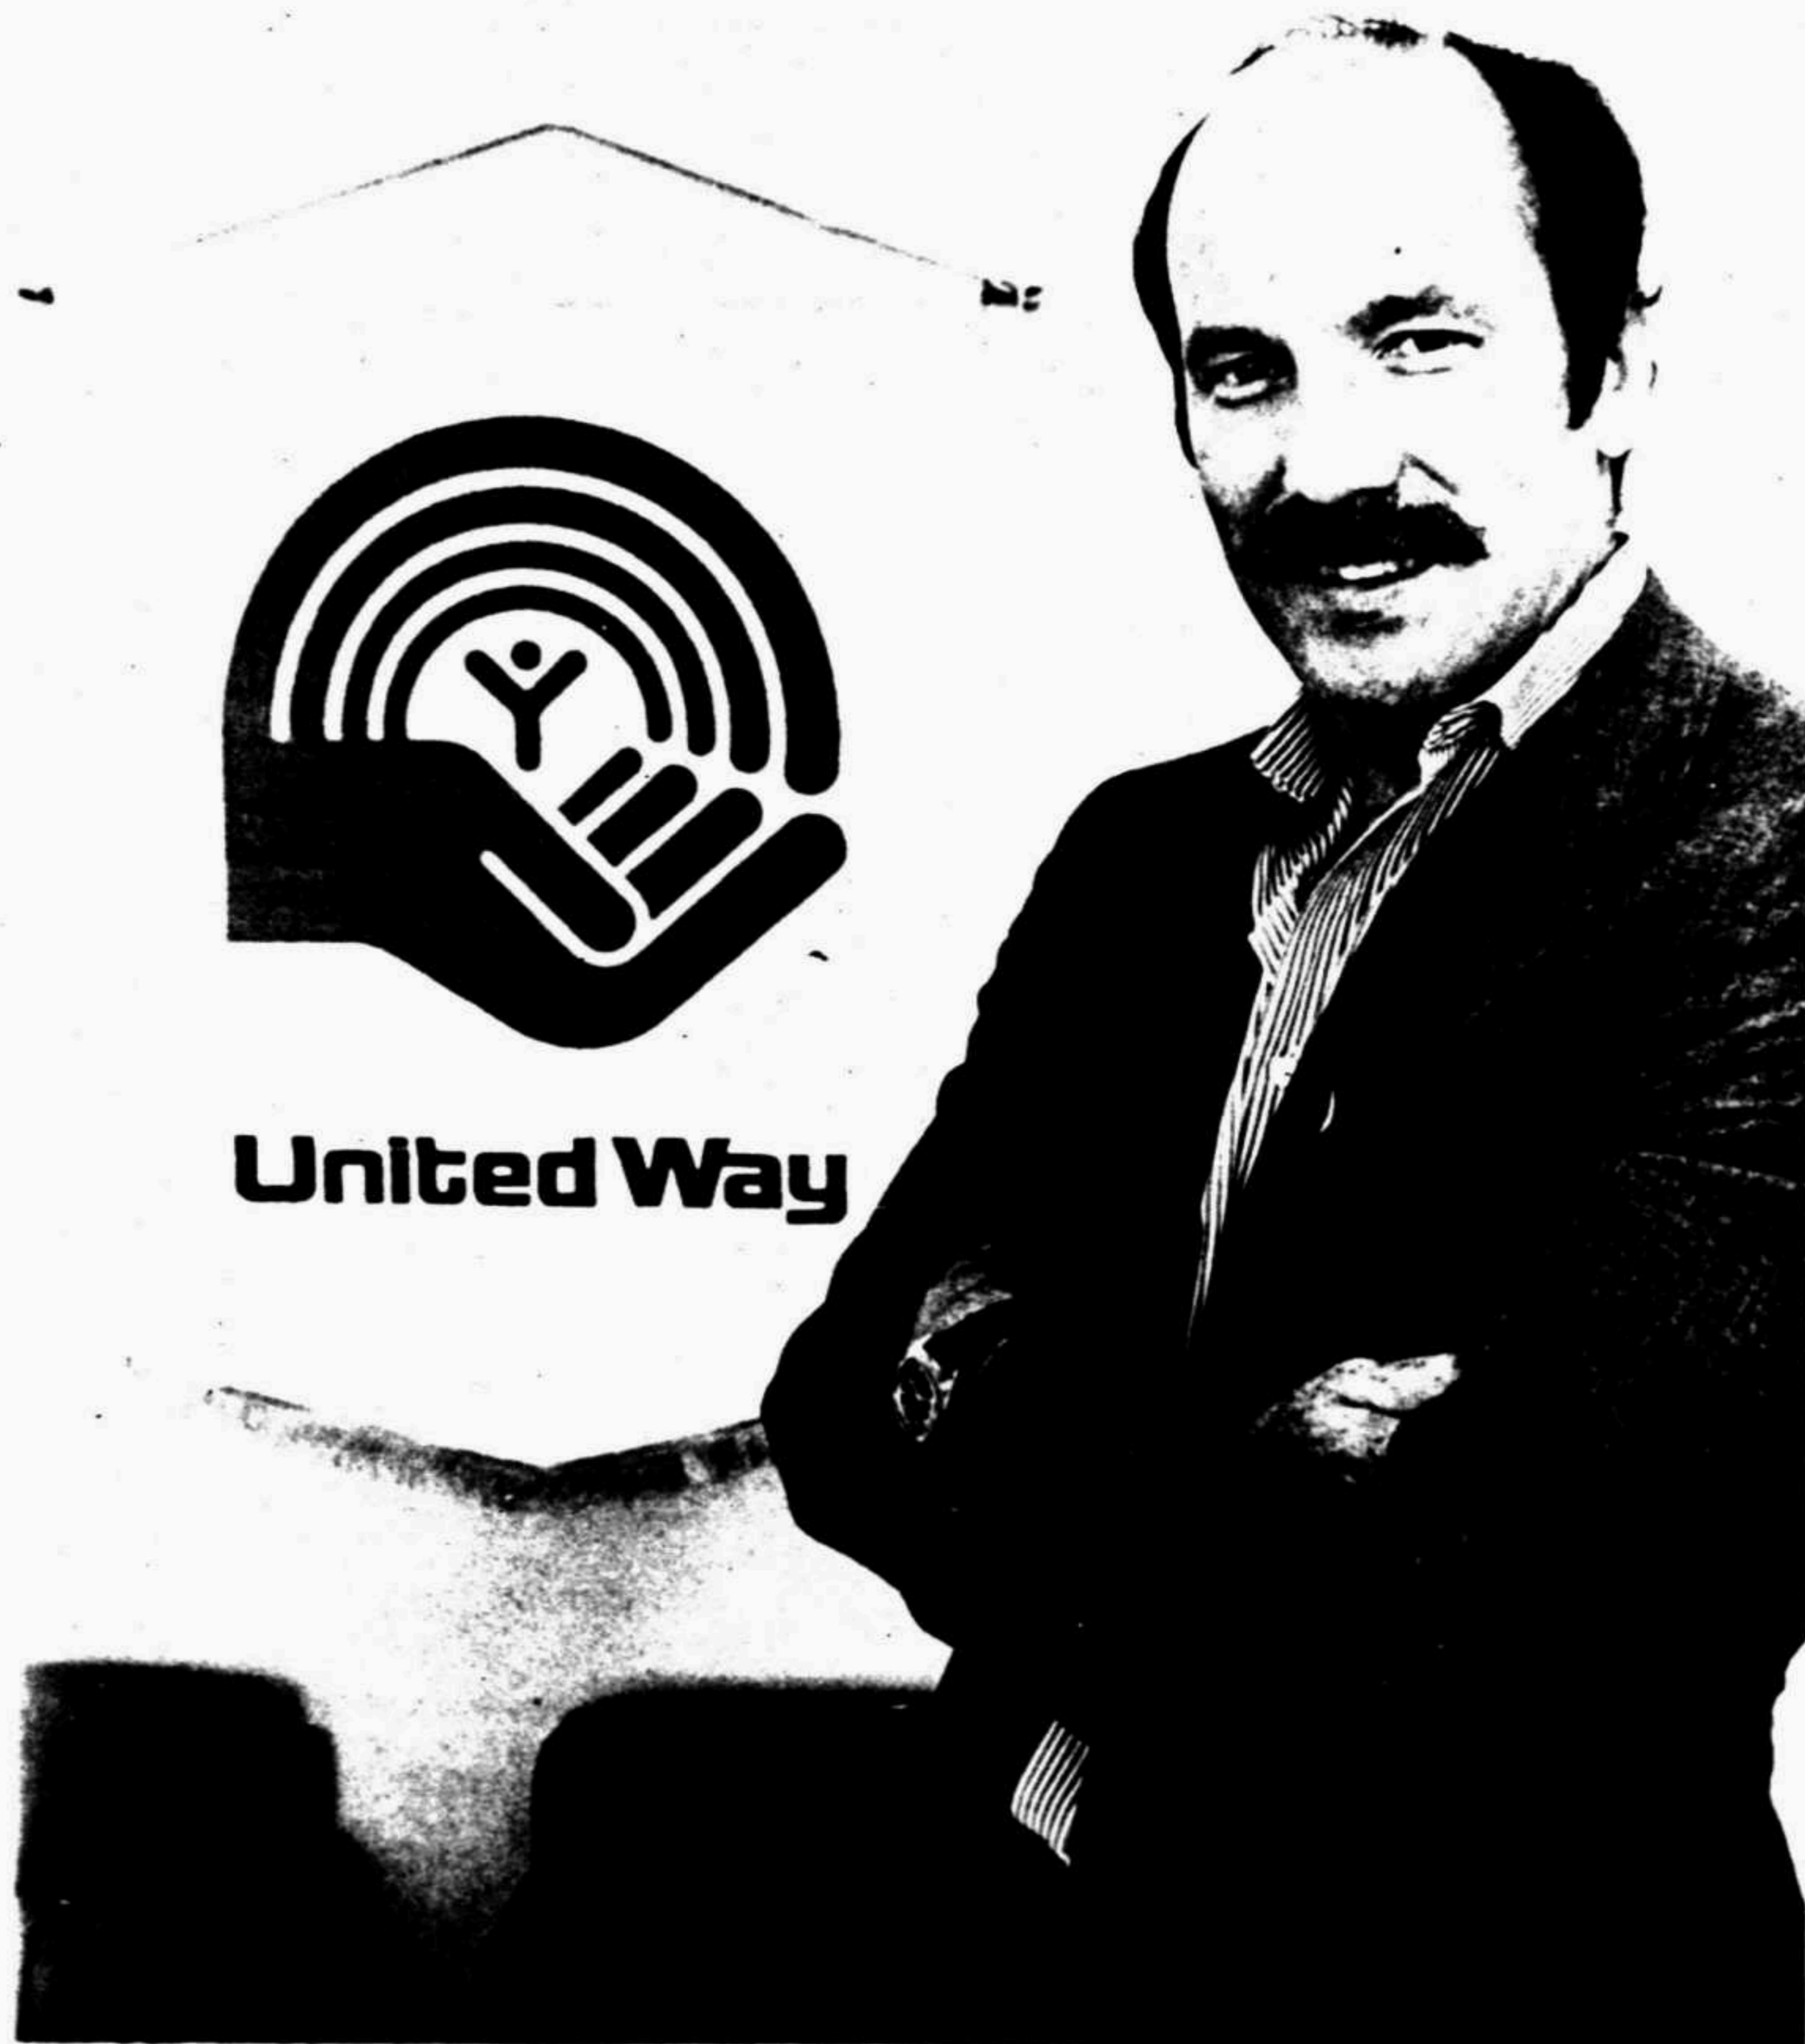

In other matters, the board gave the executive director authorization to advertise for bids on a computer terminal for the PBRPC. It also authorized the executive to submit a request for proposals for the 1981-82 PBRPC audit.

Also the board accepted the revised Area Agency on Aging annual plan and accepted the review and comment of the Criminal Justice Advisory Committee on a grant application from Andrews County for juvenile services.

Stolen Stradivarius found unharmed

NANTUCKET, Mass. (AP) — A 259-year-old, $250,000 Stradivarius violin stolen last month after a concert has been recovered unharmed, authorities said.

The violin, owned by an anonymous benefactor of the Concord String Quartet, was taken July 13 from a private home where the group was staying after playing for the Nantucket Musical Arts Society.

Former Dallas Cowboy Cliff Harris will be featured speaker at the kickoff luncheon of the United Way of Midland Campaign for 1983. It was announced today.

Voices of Bolivian discontented continue to grow

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — After three changes of president in two years of military rule have failed to improve Bolivia's economic situation, demands for a return to civilian government are getting louder and louder.

Discontent is growing because of skyrocketing prices for consumer goods, the crisis-ridden economy and strikes including a public transport walkout now in its seventh day.

"What is needed is a civilian government of transition and national salvation," the National Association of Radio Broadcasters said on Wednesday.

The latest presidential switch occurred three weeks ago, when the army's commanders forced Gen. Celso Torrelho to resign and replaced him with their chief of staff, Gen. Guido Vildoso Calderon. He is Bolivia's 192nd president since independence from Spain 157 years ago.

Commerce Department agrees to halt planning porpoise killing

WASHINGTON (AP) — After persistent appeals from a senator and environmentalists, the Commerce Department has blocked the harpooning of nearly 1,000 porpoises who were to die as part of a scientific study.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige issued the order Wednesday night after Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., intensified pressure to stop the killings.

Earlier in the day, Baldrige had said he would allow American scientists aboard a Japanese research vessel to harpoon to death up to 960 porpoises in the Bering Sea off Alaska. The scientists are studying porpoise mating and feeding patterns.

John Byrne, head of the department's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, had delayed sailing of the research ship involved for three days following complaints by Packwood, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, and environmentalists.

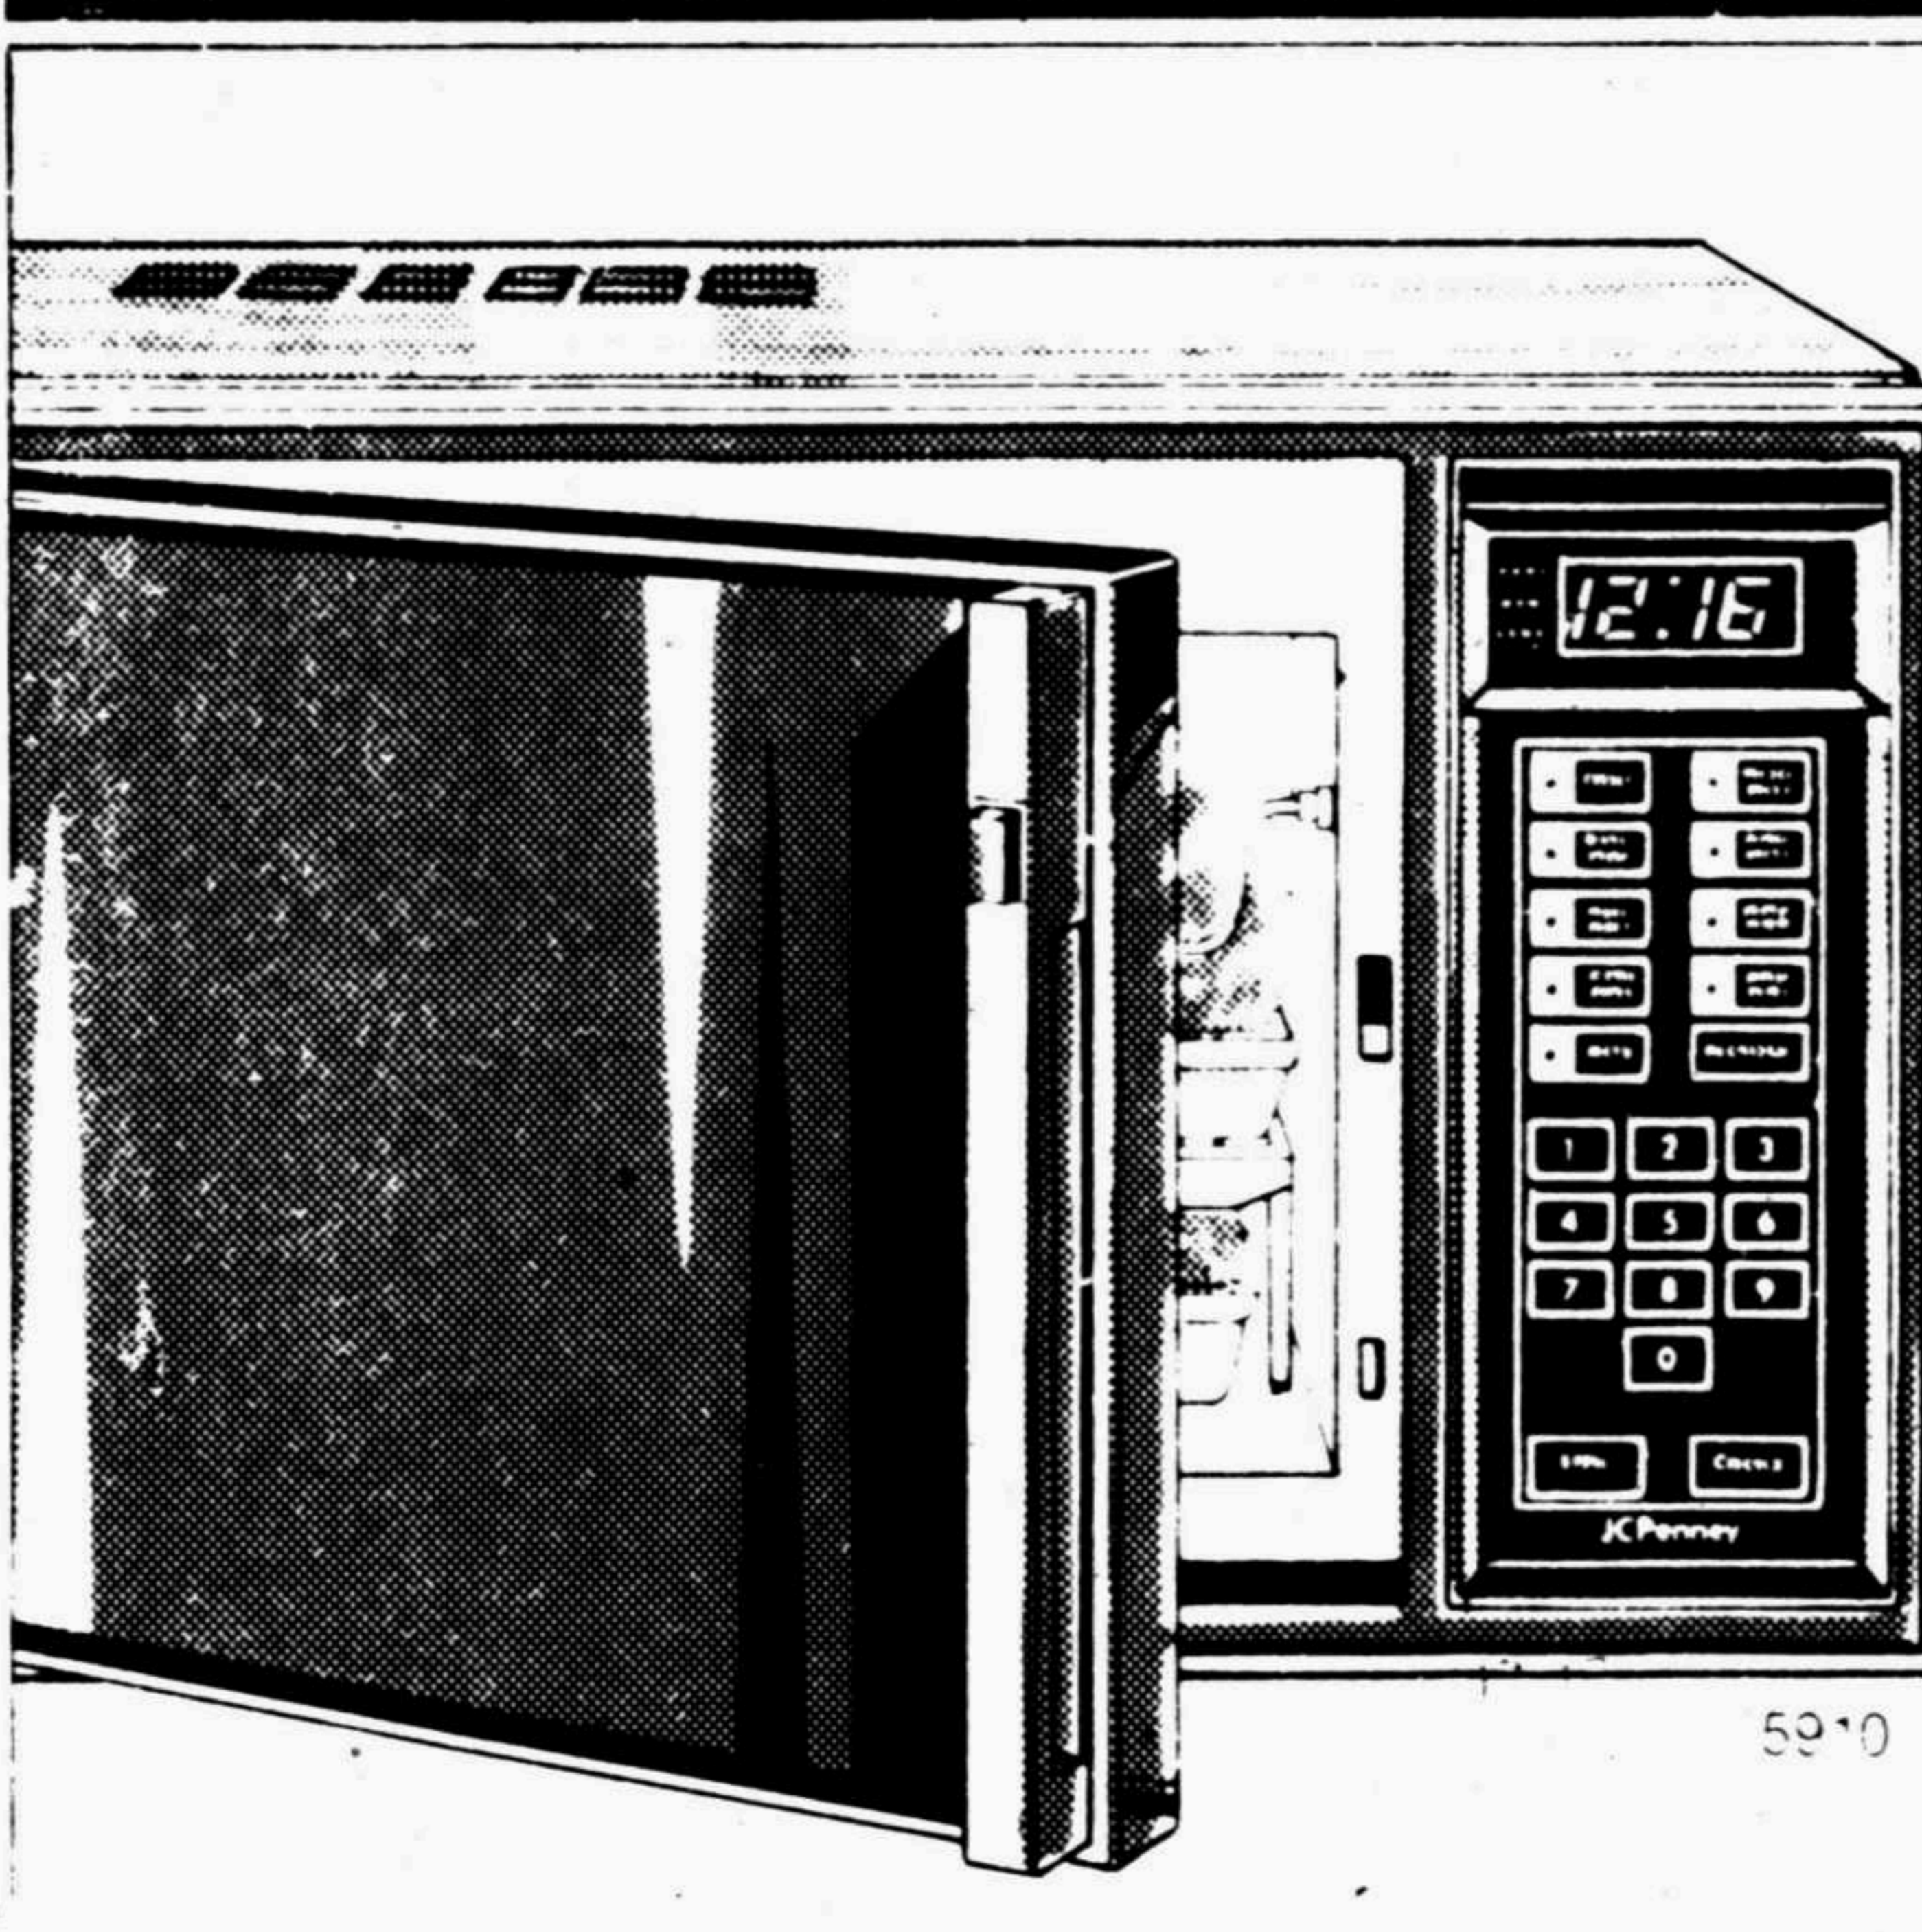

Packwood met with department officials Tuesday to object to the killing of the porpoises. Before reversal of the decision, he said he was outraged by the "inhumaneness" of the action.

Baldrige revealed his initial decision to go ahead with the killing during a briefing on steel industry problems. He defended it with the observation that the animals to be killed were a minute fraction of the porpoise population. The study is aimed at determining how many porpoises Japanese fishermen will be allowed to take in their so-called "incidental catch" — the fish that are accidentally snared in nets being used to catch Alaska salmon. Currently, the annual porpoise catch is about 800 a year.

AT&T, Justice Department to hold talks

By NORMAN BLACK

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and the Justice Department say they will hold talks to adjust the proposed break-up of the Bell System to meet the demands of a federal judge.

If the two sides can modify their agreement, U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene said he will proceed with the antitrust settlement. The proposed corporate reorganization is the largest in history.

But Greene, who described the overall AT&T divestiture plan as "plainly in the public interest," said he would resume the company's antitrust trial promptly if the two parties don't make the changes he wants within 15 days.

The trial in the 1974 antitrust suit was suspended in January when AT&T and federal prosecutors announced they had reached a settlement in which AT&T would give up ownership of its 22 wholly owned Bell System companies.

In exchange the telecommunications giant would be given the right to enter new, unregulated businesses like data processing and the government would drop its suit against the company.

While the Bell companies represent about two-thirds of AT&T's assets — or more than $80 billion — the settlement would leave the company its lucrative long-distance, equipment, manufacturing and research operations.

Greene said he approved of the settlement, but would insist on major changes to bolster the Bell System companies to help them avoid major rate increases.

"This opinion reflects clear concern for consumers; for the health of the local operating companies, and for the First Amendment," said Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colo.

operating companies, and for the First Amendment," said Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colo., who tried unsuccessfully to get Congress to enact some of the same restrictions set out by Greene.

AT&T Chairman Charles L. Brown said Wednesday, "We're pleased that the court has acted expeditiously in finding the basic framework to be 'plainly in the public interest,' and we'll immediately undertake consideration of the modifications in consultation with the Department of Justice."

In a statement, the Justice Department said, "The modifications are now under consideration and we'll be discussing them with AT&T in the near future."

The modifications requested by Greene fall into three categories. They include changes designed to guarantee the financial health of the Bell System companies after they lose Ma Bell's umbrella.

For example, the judge said he could not accept the idea of transferring the printed Yellow Pages operation to AT&T. Those advertising directories, with their roughly $2 billion in annual revenues, should remain with the local companies to help hold down local rates, Greene wrote.

The judge also said he saw no reason to prohibit the Bell companies from marketing telephone equipment to consumers.

The second category of conditions includes provisions designed to guarantee protection of the public's interest after the break-up. AT&T must also accept specific limits on the amount of debt that it can transfer to the Bell companies, he said.

The final category includes a single provision aimed at preventing AT&T from entering a new business that it has been eyeing — electronic publishing.

The judge accepted the arguments of newspaper publishers and cable TV operators that AT&T should not be allowed to develop its own electronic information service, since it also controls transmission facilities that may be needed by competitors.

Woman testifies on tape in trial after her death

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — A woman who filed a malpractice suit contending her doctor failed to diagnose her breast cancer testified on videotape as the case came to trial this week, more than a year after she died.

Jessie Irene Allen, 58, was on medication and had oxygen tubes in her nose when she gave the deposition from her hospital bed five days before her death. She spoke in a whisper and had to rest between statements, said Royce Moe, her family's attorney.

Mrs. Allen had filed a medical malpractice suit against Dr. John F. Driscoll, claiming he did not diagnose and treat her cancer before it spread through her body.

Mrs. Allen's husband, Jack, of Spokane, and son, Stephen, of Missoula, Mont., have continued the suit since she died on May 9, 1981.

The suit, being heard by Spokane County Superior Court Judge Donald N. Olson, seeks $722,000 for lost wages, medical expenses and damages for the loss of wife and mother.

In the 52-minute edited videotape deposition, shown in court Tuesday, attorneys for the plaintiff and defendant questioned Mrs. Allen at her bedside at Sacred Heart Medical Center.

Although her testimony was slightly confused because of the medication, she said she was "extremely concerned" about breast cancer because her 92-year-old mother, who was living with the Allens, was dying of the disease.

She said she was not aware of the availability of certain tests and procedures that could have been used to determine the presence of a malignancy.

Moe said the case could be a test for the idea of an "informed consent" doctrine, which would make physicians responsible for telling patients details about their conditions.

In testimony Wednesday, Driscoll said his patient's symptoms did not necessarily indicate cancer when she first discovered what she called thickening and drainage of her left breast in 1975.

He said she suffered from fibrous tissue disease until he diagnosed cancer in 1979 and ordered surgery.

Driscoll testified he had not examined a breast discharge that he discovered because the test that could relate such a discharge to cancer was "unreliable."

Mrs. Allen went to several other doctors between 1975 and 1979 for her breast ailment, and they ran tests but were unable to determine if she had cancer, her family's attorney said.

She had filed suit against Driscoll because she returned to him at intervals throughout the period, making him the doctor who would best be able to determine if it was cancer, the attorney said.

William Symmes, an attorney for Driscoll, said the issue is whether Driscoll practiced medicine in Mrs. Allen's case according to professional standards used by other physicians.

The defense is expected to argue that Mrs. Allen did not use Driscoll as her physician during a critical period of her illness.

Judge proves courts can handle big antitrust suits

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — Harold H. Greene, the federal judge who presided over the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s trial, says he set out to prove four years ago that the courts can handle even the biggest antitrust actions.

Greene, 59, a former civil rights attorney, smiles and jokes too often to be called a no-nonsense judge.

But he made it clear in the AT&T case, as he has in countless proceedings of lesser importance, that he can't stand irrelevant courtroom arguments or testimony.

He received the massive AT&T case in the summer of 1978 as one of the cases dumped in his lap when he became a U.S. district judge. The first witness in the trial was not called until March 1981.

Wednesday, Greene wrote a 178-page opinion saying he would not approve the break-up of AT&T unless the company and the Justice Department accept some new restrictions on their proposed settlement.

If the two sides accept his changes, the case will end. If not, the trial will resume.

If the case ends, it would mean Greene had disposed of the case in four years. Although the antitrust action was filed in 1974, it moved slowly under the U.S. district judge who had the case before Greene.

By contrast, it took 12 years for the government's antitrust case against IBM to end, and that only happened because the Reagan administration dropped its suit.

"Courts have sometimes fallen in disrepute for not moving these big antitrust cases," Greene said in an interview.

Some people said move them out of the courts. I said well, we'll try to move this along and see if that theory is really true. This (the AT&T case) would prove the judiciary can cope with these massive cases. If you can do it with the AT&T case, you can do it with any case.

Discussing complex cases, Greene said: "The more difficult a case is, the more lawyers go on and on. Lawyers write 50-page briefs and can't identify what's crucial. You've got to get to a point that's relevant or significant. If it doesn't have anything to do with the case, I don't want to hear about it."

But the judge said lawyers for both AT&T and the government handled the case competently. Of the

Phone company tests curbs on 'shoplifting'

NEW YORK (AP) — The phone company, in a bid to cut down on what it calls telephone shoplifting that cost more than $44 million last year, is ordering its operators to reject some long-distance calls from pay phones billed to someone else's number.

In several states, operators are being told not to complete such calls unless someone at the phone to be billed is reached and accepts the charge.

The safeguard began July 1 for Pacific Northwest Bell in Washington and Oregon and Aug. 1 for Pacific Telephone in California and its subsidiary, Nevada Bell. New York Telephone spokesman Joe Crotty said the restriction was spreading in New York State.

American Telephone & Telegraph Co. spokesman Marty Davis said officials will see how the test works, then consider making the requirement nationwide. He said AT&T is pressing for the arrest and prosecution of offenders.

If no one answers at a number to be billed for a third-party charge call, or if the person calling is unknown at that phone, the call is rejected.

The companies hope the requirement will cut down on what Davis described as the telephonic equivalent of shoplifting.

high salaries paid some attorneys, Greene noted. "Rock stars and baseball players get paid more." Greene summed up in one word what he knew about the telephone system when the case was assigned to him. "Nothing."

But he learned fast because Harold Greene has always enjoyed a challenge.

Recession hits Rodeo Drive

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Shop owners on Rodeo Drive, where a chinchilla bedspread sells for $95,000 and perfume can go for $1,500, quickly took down their "sale" signs this week, angered by reports that the high-priced shopping mecca has fallen on hard times.

"The signs were a mistake," says one local resident. "They gave the wrong impression. The people who normally shop in these stores won't go in there's a sale sign outside."

Fred Hayman, owner of Giorgio — a clothing shop with its own bar and pool table — said, "Those sale signs were huge, and it does not behoove a street like Rodeo Drive to have them. Certainly, Rodeo is one of the hottest streets in the country and has done better in the recession than most."

But he concedes some stores on the drive popular among the rich and famous are feeling the pinch of the recession, which tempted them to trumpet their annual summer sales.

"I would hope in future seasons, these annual sales won't tie in with the recession," he said. "But when you read about the grave times we're living in, one's anxiety to liquidate inventory is that much greater and the signs get bigger."

HAYMAN, A PAST president of the Rodeo Drive Committee of merchants, said the group has suggested the stores obey a city ordinance limiting the size of signs that might detract from the aesthetic appeal of the trendy street.

But sales or not, there has been turnover. Businesses that might have become Rodeo institutions have folded and been replaced.

At least one merchant, David Antebi, owner of Davante Oriental, an art and antique store, is planning to close his doors in two weeks for lack of business.

"Rodeo Drive is death row," he complained bitterly.

But others note there are few vacancies and hotly dispute recent news reports that Rodeo Drive has fallen on hard times.

"My business is up 40 percent over last year," says Bijan Pakzad, a menswear designer. His store, Bijan, is open by appointment only — "a gimmick," he concedes.

His customers still buy goodies such as a $95,000 chinchilla bedspread or men's perfume in a Baccarat crystal bottle for $1,500, he says. His most recent novelty is a $10,000 gold gun that comes with a mink holster. "I've already taken 49 orders for them."

"MY TYPE OF client is not worried about inflation or recession. I am dealing with people who are rich and powerful and smart, and inflation doesn't do anything to them," he said.

Bijan is so confident of the staying power of the wealthy that he's investing $8 million in a new store on New York's Fifth Avenue.

Suburbs no longer havens

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — A new Rand Corp. study says American suburbs are becoming more like the troubled cities they surround and less like the havens they're supposed to be.

The study, prepared for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, said 84 U.S. suburbs are "troubled" and 14 of those are "disaster areas," and there's no single solution to the problem.

Judith Fernandez, who co-authored the report, said Tuesday that some suburbs "are not refuges at all, but have many of the problems of the inner city — high crime rates, low-income population, old housing stock."

Nuclear attack won't stop Postal Service

WASHINGTON (AP) — Neither nuclear blast, nor fallout, nor mass panic and destruction will stay the Postal Service from completing its appointed rounds in case of atomic attack, a government contingency plan promises.

The Postal Service is prepared to discuss the plan at a House Post Office subcommittee hearing today.

Retired Rear Admiral Gene LaRocque and other critics of President Reagan's civil defense plans are expected to say that the United States can forget about getting the mail if nuclear war breaks out.

The contingency plan, several hundred pages thick, was given to the subcommittee before the hearing and shown to a reporter.

In the deadpan style of military plans, it lists what forces could be used to carry out what tasks in case of either nuclear or conventional war.

Dozens of other agencies are expected to prepare similar manuals.

The Postal Service plan has two goals: to deliver mail during a national emergency "to the extent possible under the circumstances," and to protect postal employees as much as possible.

It sets out a chain of command in case the postmaster general and other postal officials are incapacitated. If all of the Washington officials are unable to continue, the regional postmaster general for each of the five regions of the country would take command of mail service there.

Whatever remained of the Postal Service would concentrate on moving the essential mail and on helping other federal agencies in case of nuclear or conventional war. One task is handing out "alien enemy registration forms."

The plan said the Postal Service has "emergency change of address" forms ready for those displaced by war.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DINON

Friday, August 13, 1982
YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Philadelphia Flyers' center Bobby Clarke celebrates his birthday today. Also born on this date: handsome leading man of the '30s, Buddy Rogers, and actor Pat Harrington (the janitor on "One Day at a Time"). Although your generosity wins you many friends, it can also cause you some problems. Be careful not to give more than you can afford. The business outlook is bright. Find practical applications for your imaginative ideas. Your enthusiasm and drive enable you to handle almost any challenge. Count on romance to be fun-filled. Although a permanent alliance continues to elude you, that is apparently how you prefer things.
ARIES (March 2-April 19): Take stock of your present financial situation and avoid going out on a limb. Flexibility is a great asset now. Conserve wherever possible.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your innate understanding of the way power works leads you to become involved in political games. Watch your step when playing with professionals.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Impulsive actions will only add fuel to the fire. Cool down and think things through. Your creativity boosts your standing with someone you would like to impress.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your dreams tend to be prophetic. Make concessions to someone who is opinionated. Sharing the spotlight with deserving co-workers puts you new loyalty and respect.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If job hunting, take advantage of any unexpected opportunities that arise. Send out more "feelers" and dismiss self-doubts. Finish routine tasks swiftly.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your tolerance does much to overcome someone's distrust. A new business proves highly profitable. Patience helps you realize your goals. Revive an old friendship.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Ingenuity and alacrity are the keys to making big money. Persistent effort wins you the approval of hard-to-please superiors. New relationships flourish tonight.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some old friends come back into your life. Reviving your former relationship could be financially beneficial. Neighbors' information makes a change of plans imperative.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Stuck to the facts when straightening out a financial or business tangle. Although some great bargains are available, you may not be able to afford them right now.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be willing to let someone who is aggressive set the pace for the activities you share. Academic courses could increase your earning power.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Financial matters will benefit from your discreet efforts behind the scenes. Take co-worker's advice with a grain of salt. Rely on your own resources.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Mobility is the key to greater financial or business success. Check travel arrangements and, if possible, take along your mate. If singles, you find someone new.

 Opening lead: Nine of ♣.

It seems reasonable to end in either three no trump or four spades with the North-South cards. However, two members of Holland's women's team managed to climb to six no trump. We were not told how they managed to get to his in elegant contract.
 West led his top club, and declarer won the queen in dummy. There seemed to be no way to twelve tricks. Declarer led a low heart and, when West played low, finessed dummy's eight! All was well when East won this trick with the ace.
 East had one more chance to defeat the contract—he could have shifted to a diamond. But he saw no reason for that and simply continued with a club. Declarer won, cashed the ace of clubs and the two high hearts for three diamond discards, and then took four spade tricks to bring the hand to this position:

WEST
 ♦ KQ
EAST
 ♦ J
 ♠ 10
 ♥ J8
 Declarer led his last spade, and West was helpless. He had to keep his heart to guard against dummy's jack, so he was forced to part with the queen of diamonds. Now declarer no longer needed dummy's heart, and the ace and jack of diamonds scored the last two tricks to wrap up the slam.

Lebanon's final chance

The recent devastating attack on west Beirut by Israeli forces provoked the justifiable wrath of the Reagan administration, partly because of the resulting death and destruction and partly because the assault was ordered despite strong White House pressure for a ceasefire.

But this disagreement over means does not change the fact that Washington and Jerusalem agree on two overriding ends in the continuing Lebanese crisis. First, the Palestine Liberation Organization and its several thousand armed soldiers must withdraw from Beirut and leave Lebanon. Second, that withdrawal must be followed eventually by the departure of all foreign military forces — Syrians and Israelis alike — from Lebanon.

When and if these objectives are achieved, there will at last be a chance to reconstruct a functioning central government in Lebanon and to restore that bleeding land to the peace it enjoyed before the PLO arrived, unwanted and uninvited, in 1970.

Meanwhile, however, the blood-letting in Beirut is further damaging the already badly strained relations between Israel and its only significant ally in the world, the United States.

Most of President Reagan's top advisers were reportedly enraged at the timing and ferocity of the Israeli assault. The White House viewed the renewed Israeli shelling and the advance of armored forces into west Beirut itself as a potentially crippling blow to U.S. Ambassador Philip Habib's efforts to negotiate a PLO withdrawal.

Israeli officials responded by noting that these negotiations have failed to produce a settlement. Moreover, they argued that Yasser Arafat and the PLO were likely to drag out the negotiations as long as possible in the absence of any tangible incentives to do otherwise.

However true that may be, it must be weighed against the tragic loss of civilian lives whenever the Israelis tighten their steel nose around west Beirut. Lebanese officials estimate that the recent assault resulted in nearly 1,000 casualties, most of them civilians rather than Palestinian fighters.

Israel's dilemma is how to step up pressure on the PLO to leave Beirut without killing more civilians in the process. America's dilemma is how to negotiate a PLO withdrawal while simultaneously persuading the super-hawks in Menachem Begin's government to exercise restraint a while longer.

A different Israeli government might be persuaded that Israel needs American goodwill and support more than it needs a timely PLO withdrawal from Beirut, or even the outright annihilation of Arafat's decimated forces. But the Begin government is not noted for its patience, or its sensitivity to American wishes.

A cutoff of all U.S. aid to Israel might bring the Begin government to heel, but no one in the Reagan administration seriously advocates so drastic a sanction.

Short of that, the strongest possible diplomatic pressure could buy several more days for Habib to close a deal with the PLO. Imposing an absolute deadline, say 72 hours, for PLO agreement to a withdrawal schedule could signal Arafat that American patience too is not unlimited.

The truth is that both Israel and the PLO have a responsibility for avoiding a final, tragic holocaust in Beirut. And the Reagan administration must continue to do everything possible to remind both sides of that fact, and to serve as honest broker for the negotiated settlement that might yet be fashioned out of the rubble in Beirut.

Shultz in rough water

Historians of tomorrow will be hard put to name a United States secretary of state in this century who has entered office in more troubled times than those surrounding George Shultz. Although the nation is not at war, it is part of a world engulfed in an unusual set of problems and crises.

The Middle East is in a continuing state of turmoil. The Palestinian problem will not go away. Iran and Iraq are locked in bloody warfare. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization needs attention.

No matter where Secretary Shultz puts his finger on the map, he will find political or military turbulence that affects the peace and stability of this generation. One of his concerns is the arms race with the Soviet Union, and how it can be kept in control. Our relations with China, and what our policy toward Taiwan should be, have high priority in the State Department.

The new secretary of state may be no expert on Latin America, or Canada, but these are areas of the Western Hemisphere that cannot be ignored. The presence in this country of India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, and negotiations with her concerning nuclear energy, are an abrupt reminder that the power of the atom is something that will occupy the time of George Shultz for a long time.

No one can be thoroughly trained to meet as many unexpected tests as those facing the secretary of state. There is an old saying that if you throw a baby in the water, it suddenly will discover it can swim if it has intelligence and stamina, and the right instincts for adjusting to the environment. George Shultz gives every indication that as secretary of state he is going to swim, no matter how troubled the waters.

Nursing home rules

The administration, ever searching for ways to deregulate industry, has turned its attention to nursing homes. In an attempt to increase efficiency, the Department of Health and Human Services proposes to relax nursing home inspection rules.

Unfortunately, it's more likely that the changes would decrease the protection of the more than 1.3 million elderly Americans who live in nursing homes that receive Medicare and Medicaid funding.

One of the proposals being considered would permit the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, a private, non-profit organization, to monitor the health and safety standards for nursing homes that serve Medicaid and Medicare patients. The federal government would accept JCAH accreditation as sufficient evidence that nursing homes met federal standards and, therefore, are entitled to funding.

Other proposals include reducing annual inspections of nursing homes to once every two years for those facilities having no reported violations, and eliminating the requirement that nursing homes with problems be re-inspected within 90 days. In the latter situation, a nursing home could simply send a letter or make a telephone call confirming that the problems have been corrected.

While some of the gross exploitation and abuses of the nation's elderly in unsupervised nursing homes has been curbed through federal and state monitoring, it would be naive to believe that such problems no longer exist. Regulations in many parts of the nation governing nursing homes probably should be tightened; in any case, the administration's proposals should be scrapped.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Public will suffer if AMA wins battle

WASHINGTON — "Let the buyer beware" is a doctrine beloved by conservative champions of free enterprise. But it's too radical to suit the health-care establishment.

Jack Anderson

Professional medical groups are fighting desperately to keep the Federal Trade Commission from stopping their monopolistic practices or even telling the public what it should beware of when it needs medical or dental care. Unfortunately, Big Medicine has found willing helpers in Congress who are trying to protect the doctors at the expense of their patients.

This is big business we're talking about here. Medical-dental expenses amounted to $1,225 per patient last year, or a staggering 98 percent of the gross national product.

Over the years, the FTC has found that lack of competition — active discouragement of it, in fact — has contributed to the skyrocketing increase in health-care costs. The commission has brought restraint of trade actions against the American Medical Association, American Dental Association, American Society of Anesthesiologists and some state and county professional societies.

James Miller III, the conservative who Ronald Reagan named to head the FTC, wants to continue the agency's watchdog role in this area. But the medical magnates are determined to strip the commission of its power.

Last year, in a series of meetings here at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the University Club and the law offices of Hogan & Hartson, an AMA-drafted bill aimed at eviscerating the FTC was discussed by a coalition of professional groups. An antenatal briefing paper obtained by my associate Tony Capaccio laid out the coalition's complaint.

"The FTC is attempting by various methods to replace professional ethics with the commercial rule of 'Let the buyer beware.'"

The document also gave the solution to the complaint: "Only congressional action can change the situation now. The eleventh hour is at hand."

ART BUCHWALD

Everyday language filled with violence

EDITOR'S NOTE: Regular columnist George Will is on vacation. When he returns, his column will resume as a regular feature of The Reporter-Telegram on Thursdays and Sundays.

"The Subcommittee on Violence will come to order. Will someone please turn off that television set."

"Sorry, I was fascinated by a commercial of two people kidnapping a car dealer and stealing the car. It's rather an extraordinary way to sell cars."

"Well, we don't have time to discuss that now. We have to get down to the business of violence. Senator, do you mind putting down that magazine? We're ready to begin the meeting, Senator."

"Huh? Oh, excuse me. Look at this. Here is a carbine for sale by mail for only $26. How the blazes do they do it?"

"Probably some foreign make. My constituents are furious at the flood of foreign guns coming into this country."

Sure enough, the AMA's draft legislation was introduced virtually word-for-word by Reps. Tom Luken, D-Ohio, and Gary Lee, R-N.Y. Similar versions are being pushed by Sens. Robert Kastner, R-Wis., and James McClure, R-Idaho.

If the AMA's surgery on the FTC is carried out, several monopolistic practices would go uncontested. For example, the commission would be helpless to prevent a doctor's boycott of a hospital that allowed a woman to use the less expensive services of a nurse-midwife for delivery. Nor could it move against a professional boycott of low-cost dental or eyeglass clinics in chain stores.

Here are some of the pending FTC actions that evidently terrify Big Medicine, and would be killed if the AMA bill passes.

— A proposed rule to curb deceptive claims and high-pressure sales tactics in the hearing aid industry.

— Investigations into professional restrictions that keep dentists from working for business firms, and prevent non-dental personnel trained to make and fit dentures from offering their services directly to the public.

— Investigation of restrictions that keep eye doctors from leasing space in retail stores or working for in-house corporate health plans. This investigation is also focusing on a possible requirement that eye specialists give consumers copies of the eyeglass and contact-lens prescriptions they paid for.

Besides its eager water-carriers in Congress, the AMA has 10 lobbyists working Capitol Hill in support of the attempt to cripple the FTC. Their persuasiveness is not harmed by the $830,000 in campaign contributions the AMA has made to Senate and House members since 1979.

In April, AMA representatives also met with White House counselor Ed Meese in an unsuccessful attempt to persuade him to support their anti-FTC campaign.

TURNING OUT THE LIGHT (DUTY): It's not the rain, snow, sleet or what-have-you that's keeping some postal workers from their appointed rounds. It's the Postal Service.

Under the existing union contract, sick or injured employees who can work high-duty jobs are supposed to be guaranteed four hours' work a day. But union officials claim the Postal Service management is ignoring this rule and sending light-duty workers home before they've made a proper day's pay. They cited the case of one mail sorter who drove 34 miles to work, only to be let off after an hour.

What strikes the light-duty workers as particularly unfair is that, while they're starving, able-bodied employees who replace them are getting fat on overtime. To make matters worse, the light-duty workers don't qualify for unemployment benefits, even though they're unemployed for all practical purposes.

A Postal Service spokesman blamed the situation on an "erratic mail period." She told my reporter Pam Kripke the Postal Service has no way of predicting the volume of mail on a given day, and thus doesn't know how many part-time workers it will need.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: The CIA has long had an interest in Zvezdny Gorodok, or "Star City," the Soviet training center for cosmonauts just northeast of Moscow. Our spooks have been keeping an eye on the facility using satellites and other methods, and have noted significant expansion of Star City over the years, indicating the Kremlin's commitment to a large and continuing space program.

Now the CIA is hoping to get some firsthand, on-the-spot information on the space center — from their buddies in French intelligence, who will be debriefing French cosmonauts who trained at Star City for the Franco-Russian co-op space flight.

Well Heck, he was out of line

To The Editor:

A city planning commission is one of those nebulous bodies to which many of us pay no heed. Its forte is not earth-shattering — it merely dawdles on an area's surface improvements or unimprovements.

But a recent meeting of Midland's planning commission unearthed layers of improper procedure.

In the August 2 meeting, chairman Katie Heck clearly spelled out the order by which arguments concerning each agenda item were to be given. Proponents and opponents were instructed to speak only during specified segments of the public hearing.

But Monday's hearing of the proposed development of Racquet Club South swung far afield of the prescribed format.

During the segment of the hearing allotted to opponents of the plan, the proponents' attorney, Martin Allday, interrupted a citizen's presentation and persuaded her to admit she favored the proposed plan.

This violated the format of the meeting. Chairman Heck did not act against the attorney's infraction of the rules. She instead chuckled at the realization that the citizen had spoken in favor of the item during the time when any opponents were permitted to speak.

After the public hearing ended, discussion of the item was technically limited to the commission, or anyone called to the podium by the commission.

Physically, this did not happen. Allday repeatedly intruded on the debate by waving his arms cheerleader-like in the air. And he did not stay silent. He spoke out of turn often.

Finally former Midland City Council member Bobby Holt poked through Allday's interruptions to ask the chairman if it were not improper for the lawyer to argue after the public hearing was over.

Heck confirmed this to be true. Allday's comments were improper, she said. But she then reprimanded Holt for reminding her that the rules of the meeting were being ignored.

After Heck's acknowledgment of the rule-breaking, Allday continued to speak. Throats were cleared in protest. Chairman Heck said once, with a smile, "Martin, you're going to get me in trouble." Allday's remarks and gyrations persisted.

The wrongdoings certainly did not hurt the proponent's case. It was approved by the commission. But it left a sour taste in the mouths of spectators.

This is not a criticism of Allday. He is paid to represent his client. If he can safely break a meeting's procedure to advance his case, he can only be accused of doing an effective job.

However, one wonders if the chairman's disregard of the commission's proper procedure is business as usual for the planners. It drew neither protest nor raised eyebrows from commission members.

Such action warrants investigation. Dirk Beveridge

The right thing

To The Editor:

The cartoon from the Chicago Tribune would indicate that President Reagan has done wrong in saying we will not furnish technical expertise and financial aid to the USSR in building its proposed East-West Pipeline.

It would seem to me that our president has done the right thing. European governments and businesses are not being wise in subsidizing the pipeline and in tying themselves to dependency on communist gas supplies. Nor are they serving humanity by tacitly approving the USSR's use of political slave labor from its own prison camps and those of its satellites.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Aug. 12, the 224th day of 1982. There are 141 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Aug. 12, 1896, the Spanish-American War armistice was signed.

On this date: In 1658, the first police force in America was established in New Amsterdam, which is now New York City.

In 1914, Britain declared war on Austria-Hungary at the start of World War I.

In 1941, France's Marshal Henri Petain called on his countrymen to give full support to Nazi Germany in World War II.

In 1962, the Soviet Union made space history by sending a cosmonaut into orbit while another already was circling the earth.

Ten years ago: The last U.S. ground troops left Vietnam, leaving some 43,000 Americans there as advisers.

Five years ago: The first in-flight test of the space shuttle took place as the craft was launched from atop a Boeing 747 over California's Mojave Desert.

One year ago: U.S. flights to Europe resumed when Canadian air traffic controllers ended a two-day boycott in sympathy with their striking American counterparts.

Missing World War II soldier at last laid to rest near home

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Pfc. Joseph Hartley, missing since he was cut down in a firefight with German soldiers near the end of World War II, finally was laid to rest in his native South Carolina.

Hartley was buried Wednesday with full military honors in a private cemetery in Charleston County. Present were his elderly parents, who lived for 37 years with no knowledge of the fate of their only child.

"It's over. Thank God. It's over," said Ella Hartley, 78, weeping quietly as she held the tightly folded American flag. "I feel relieved. It's been a long struggle, but now I know where he is."

Mrs. Hartley, her husband Clevy, and about 80 friends and relatives, watched the casket lowered into the grave.

A seven-man U.S. Army honor guard fired three volleys during the ceremony, and a soldier sounded taps on a silver bugle.

Among the mourners was Randy Wesson, an advertising executive from Alexandria, Va., who fought in Hartley's division.

Hartley was one of three missing World War II soldiers whose remains were found in Europe this year.

"They were recovered by accident just like most of the other ones," said John G. Rogers, mortuary program administrator for the Army's memorial affairs division.

Hartley was born Nov. 18, 1925, in Hampton County, S.C., and spent his youth on Johns Island, south of here. In 1944, at the age of 18, he enlisted in the U.S. Army and was assigned to C Company, 254th Regiment of the 63rd Division, stationed in Mississippi.

The last time his mother saw her son was in July 1944, when he returned to Johns Island on leave. In December, the division shipped into Marseilles, France, and quickly made its way to the front along French-German border.

On March 3, 1945, Hartley was one of 120 infantrymen in three platoons who attacked a well-fortified enemy position in the German hamlet of Hartungshof. They were met by heavy machine-gun fire, and Hartley never returned.

His death was confirmed last month when Rogers telephoned a friend of the Hartleys and said Hartley's remains had been found and identified.

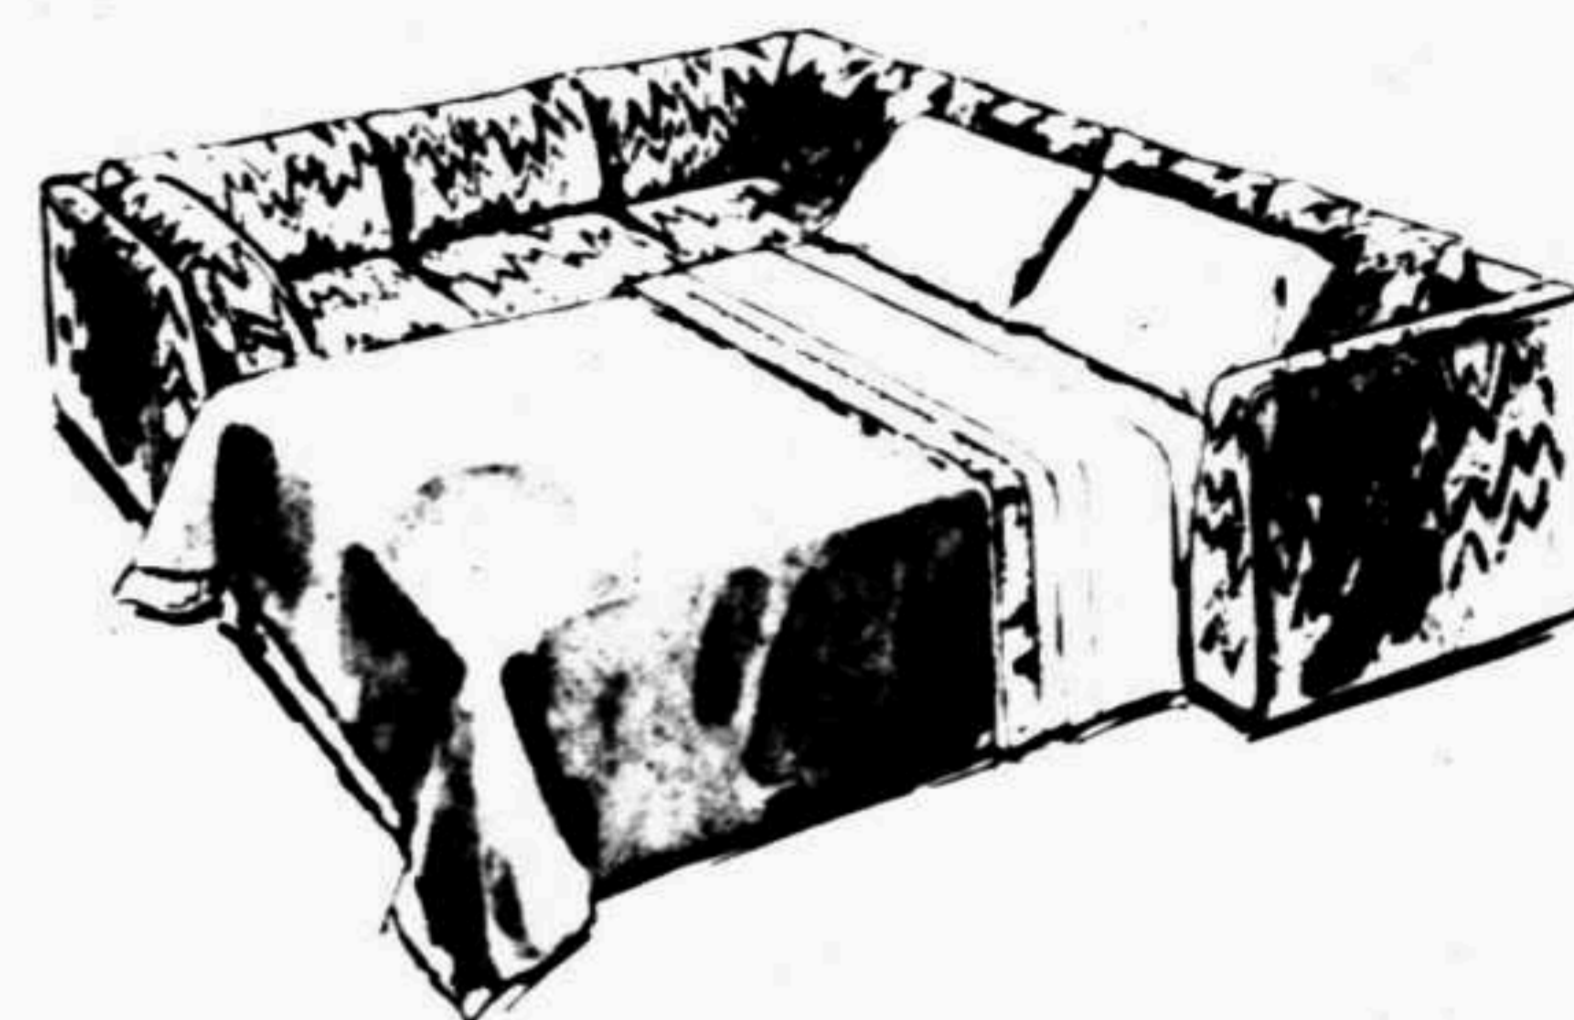

What led to the discovery came in 1974, when a backhoe operator working near a farmhouse in Hartungshof found some bones and dogtags. Rogers said the operator kept the tags for several years without notifying U.S. officials.

Early last year, a retired American major living in Germany heard about the tags, tracked down the operator, and notified the family of the man listed on them. They belonged to a Mississippi-born soldier.

Last May, U.S. Army personnel excavated the site and found the remains of three men, and on July 12 the military announced they had firm identities of Hartley, Curtis Nabors, the Mississippian, and a New Jersey-born soldier whose family has requested anonymity. Nabors will be buried in Arlington National Cemetery on Aug. 25.

Hard times facing Africa unity group

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NAIROBI, Kenya — Objections to Libya's anti-American leader Moammar Khadafy and a dispute over the fate of about 75,000 nomads in northwest Africa could result in the dissolution, by the end of the year, of the organization representing 400 million Africans.

For the first time in its 19-year history, the Organization of African Unity was unable to hold its annual summit meeting last weekend in Tripoli, Libya, because it could not muster a two-thirds quorum of its 51 members.

A five-nation committee was set up to try to persuade the approximately 20 nations that boycotted the summit to attend one later in the year in Tripoli. Blaming the United States for the boycott, Khadafy has threatened to hold a "rump" summit and form a breakaway African movement if this second attempt fails to achieve a quorum.

THAT WOULD CREATE Africa's worst political crisis, dividing the continent into two camps, roughly along the lines of "radical," left-leaning nations and "conservative" ones closer to the West.

The continent thus would lose one of the cherished aims proclaimed when the OAU was established in 1963 — limiting outside pressure, especially from the big powers.

Khadafy originally had proposed going ahead with the summit without a quorum but apparently was dissuaded by some of the more moderate leaders in Tripoli, including Julius Nyerere of Tanzania and Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia.

The ostensible reason for the boycott was the recognition by the OAU of the Sahara Arab Democratic Republic, whose Polisario Front guerrillas are fighting Morocco for control of the desolate former Spanish colony of Western Sahara. More than a dozen former French African colonies and a handful of Arab nations joined Morocco in refusing to attend as long as the Polisario group was regarded as a member.

HOWEVER, KHADAFY was probably as much a reason for the failure of the conference. By holding the summit, he automatically would have become the recognized representative of Africa in world forums for the next year. As the bete noire of the United States in the Arab world for his alleged support of terrorism, Khadafy also had a number of enemies among African leaders, who accused him of meddling in their affairs and, in some cases, trying to overthrow them.

Some African heads of state recall their embarrassment when former Ugandan dictator Idi Amin carried the mantle of African leadership in 1975-76 after holding the summit in Kampala, and they feared a repeat performance under Khadafy.

Since the OAU had confirmed the Tripoli conference site by consensus last year, however, it is unlikely that a boycott on those grounds alone could have deprived Khadafy of a quorum.

Enter the issue of Western Sahara, about half the size of Texas with a mainly nomadic population of some 75,000. Most of the area is within the Sahara Desert, under which there is one known resource — reserves of phosphate, a major ingredient in fertilizer, estimated at 1.7 billion tons.

Morocco, a key Arab ally of the United States, and the Polisario Front, supported by Algeria and lately Libya, have been fighting a war over the territory ever since Spain pulled out in 1975.

Morocco, which has committed about the same number of troops as there are civilians in Western Sahara, controls a narrow coastal strip including the capital, El Aaiun. Polisario occupies the eastern area along the Algerian and Mauritanian borders and has proclaimed its own capital. The no man's land in between belongs to whichever troops happen to be on patrol on a given day.

THE OAU'S OUTGOING secretary general, Edem Kodjo, precipitated the crisis at the organization's meeting of foreign ministers in February when he proclaimed the SADR a member because a majority of OAU nations had recognized it. Morocco and its allies walked out of the meeting, saying that only a two-thirds majority at a summit meeting could take such a decision.

Ever since then, OAU meetings have been paralyzed, and the conservatives have been able to combine that issue with opposition to Libya as a summit site to block the meeting.

Khadafy has charged that the United States, which ordered its citizens to leave Libya last December, sabotaged the summit, but he has presented no evidence.

It is possible that the United States played a role in the absence from the meeting of Kenyan President Daniel arap Moi, the outgoing chairman of the OAU. Moi's presence was essential to hand over the mantle of leadership to Khadafy.

U.S. Ambassador William Harrop met with Moi last Tuesday and much of the session dealt with the OAU. Two days later Moi announced he would only attend the conference if there were a quorum. That almost guaranteed that the summit would fall short of the required number.

It was questionable, however, whether Moi would have attended anyway, because he survived a coup attempt just four days before Thursday's scheduled opening of the summit.

An Israeli soldier receives medical attention after being wounded near the Green Line in Beirut Wednesday. Israeli and Lebanese forces continue exchanges as negotiations for a settlement to the fighting and movement of Palestine guerrillas out of Beirut go on.

U.S. expects PLO evacuation plans complete by weekend

WASHINGTON (AP) — By the weekend, the United States expects to pin down a final agreement on evacuation of Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas from west Beirut and the lifting of Israel's siege of the Lebanese city, according to U.S. officials.

While American envoy Philip C. Habib wrapped up details with his Mideast shuttle diplomacy, officials here told The Associated Press the first wave of a three-nation peacekeeping force — French or possibly Italian troops — should be in west Beirut by early next week.

Most of the guerrillas, trapped in their enclaves, would begin their exodus to other Arab countries with the arrival of the peacekeepers. In all, 1,500 to 2,000 men are to be stationed in west Beirut, primarily to protect the Palestinian civilians from hostile Lebanese factions.

U.S. Marines from the Sixth Fleet in the eastern Mediterranean, will make up about half the unit.

An unresolved issue is what kind of role the United Nations is to play, the officials said Wednesday. France wants a U.N. presence, but Israel is resisting out of resentment of the numerous resolutions the world organization has adopted against the Jewish state.

Airline tickets bought with pesos to cost more

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's national airlines, Aeromexico and Mexicana, have increased their international air fares for travelers purchasing tickets with Mexican pesos as a result of last week's devaluation.

A spokesman for the airlines, both controlled by the government, said Wednesday the dollar price of international fares is unchanged, but anyone buying tickets with pesos will have to pay the dollar equivalent. The price of domestic fares was not affected by the devaluation, said the spokesman, who asked not to be identified.

The central bank on Thursday lifted exchange controls and let the peso sink from its government-supported level of 49 to a dollar. On Wednesday the peso was trading at a rate of 72 for buyers of the Mexican currency and 76 for sellers.

Orthodox Jews not allowed in airport as protest of curbs

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — El Al employees prevented religious Jewish passengers from entering Ben-Gurion International Airport today to protest religious curbs being placed on Israel's national airline.

Members of Parliament from the religious parties called the act "anti-Semitic." A stormy debate broke out in the Knesset, the Israeli parliament, and two shouting Communist deputies were dragged out of the house.

The airline workers identified the orthodox Jews by their beards, black robes and wide-brimmed hats and stopped them at the doors of the terminal.

The workers painted cartoons on the fuselages of one plane showing a religious man trampling on an El Al airliner. The caption said: "To Be a Free People in Our Country."

The airline staff was protesting plans to stop the airline flying on the Jewish sabbath and the damage to El Al's reputation because the rabbinate, the powerful official hierarchy of orthodox rabbis, claimed its food was not kosher.

'Dallas' absence upsetting

TEL AVIV (AFP) — "Dallas," the American television series, is so popular here that its recent disappearance from Israeli screens has spurred the people into action.

An advertisement in Wednesday's issue of the newspaper Maariv called for the creation of a new "popular movement to demand the return of Dallas."

"The decision by Israeli television to cancel 'Dallas' has dampened the Israeli spirits and worried the country," Zohar Lavi, the movement's organizer and a construction-agency executive, declared in a letter to the newspaper.

"Dallas," seen here for over two years, was so popular that soldiers stationed in Lebanon kept up with the series through army radio broadcasts.

Israeli television says "Dallas" has become too expensive to buy directly.

Winter clothing money set aside

JERUSALEM (DPA) — Israel has earmarked about $40 million for the purchase of winter clothing and equipment for its armed forces in Lebanon.

Ramy Dotan, head of logistics, said that the purchases from Israeli sources would enable soldiers to spend the winter in Lebanon if necessary.

The Israeli troops, normally used to desert combat, would be supplied with white uniforms should they have to spend the winter in the Lebanese mountains.

French embassy cook goes to great lengths to make 'homestyle' cooking

By PHYLIS RICHMAN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Four white muslin bags hang in the wine cellar of the French Embassy, along with two long rolls of bacon tied with twine. Francis Leyerle has been at it again, salting and herbing and hanging his own hams and bacon to cure, since he cannot import them from France.

In the back of the residence is Chef Leyerle's garden — with tomatoes ripening and tarragon, basil, thyme, mint and oregano ready to snip. On the kitchen's shelves are his cherries pickled in honey vinegar and the jelly he made from red currants he found in the York, Pa., market last summer. In the refrigerator rests Leyerle's own goat cheese, made from milk brought by a man who travels from Strasburg, Va., every Thursday with squab, rabbits, baby lamb, farm-fresh eggs and the pork Leyerle uses for curing. On Tuesdays the herb man drops by with the purslane and sorrel.

Washington isn't Gascony when it comes to culinary resources, but Leyerle has gone to great lengths to reproduce the larder of his native region in southwest France. Downstairs he carries on the traditions of Masseube, the tiny village near Auch where he was born. Upstairs the embassy guests talk of the new, fresh, light and inventive cuisine Leyerle fashions from those traditions.

But this wiry, impish-looking, curly-haired young man doesn't look old enough to have spent eight years as a chef at the French Embassy. And truth to tell, he hardly is. He was only 21 when he was hired as sous chef straight from the army, where he had been cooking for the soldiers for two months, the generals for four months, and then became sick — from eating too many oysters, which one supposes could only happen in the French army. As soon as he arrived in Washington, the soft-spoken Leyerle began practicing his English by playing rugby with students from Johns Hopkins' School of Advanced International Studies.

WHILE PROGRESSING THROUGH all the usual apprenticeships of a French chef, Leyerle had been administered a strong dose of earthy tradition, he grew up cooking with his grandmother in the foie gras and confit center of France, and detoured to Alsace, where for three months he made at least 100 pounds of sauerkraut a day. That hearty base shows in the calves' feet he adds to give body to his chicken consommé. In the turnips he simmers under a parchment cover until they melt on the tongue. But the final product is as delicate as a Japanese brush painting. Seafood becomes pale pink "zephyrs of lobster." Snow peas are painstakingly split — not quite to the stem — and fanned out on the plate. Corn leaves the cob for tiny boat-shaped pastries. And dinner at the French Embassy has been pared to a mere three or four courses, with rarely a cheese course. One guest last winter reported that the meal was so light that a waiter whispered to him to take a lot of it.

That suits the new ambassador, Bernard Vernier-Palliez, and his wife, Denise. She is Parisian, but has spent much time in the south of France and favors "new style" cuisine. As she plans menus with Leyerle, Denise Vernier-Palliez aims for lightness and restraint and tries to have "not too much cream." She also prefers the dining room set with several small tables rather than one large one, and the food arranged on buffets so that people can circulate and talk. "I try sometimes to manage the menus so that only one wine will be used," she adds.

Few changes show in the kitchen with this new administration, though Leyerle says there are more stag lunches and "a lot of society dinners. She knows a lot about food," Leyerle says, and Vernier-Palliez's taste is reflected in the menus. While the embassy imports turbot and Norwegian salmon, "She loves the fish here — sea bass, red snapper, pompano." The ambassador's wife adds that she is particularly looking forward to vacationing in Maine to take full advantage of the "superb" American lobsters. Serving lobster is affordable here, she explains. "In France it is out of the question."

AMONG THE FEW culinary changes with this administration are one predictable shift and one surprise: "Caviar we never serve," says Vernier-Palliez, except the cheaper American golden caviar, what else would one expect in these times? But veal, as fashionable in Washington as fur coats and cowboy boots, is also disappearing from the embassy's menus. "I always think it is a bit tasteless," says Vernier-Palliez, who greatly prefers lamb.

Thus, a recent menu — one grand enough to warrant three wines — consisted of cold consommé with chervil, zephyrs of lobster with parsley and saddle of lamb with turnips, with no cheese or salad intermediary before dessert. Another three-wine menu progressed from a mousseline of salmon with champagne, to duck breast, to a chestnut dessert in a thin cookie shell. Or there might be lobster consommé, pigeon and a caramelized almond dessert. Nothing American, of course. American wines? "No, never," declares Vernier-Palliez. She does serve rum after dinner along with the cognac, explaining that her nephew is a director of the Cointreau company, which produces the St. James rum she has stocked in the cellar. But in her short stay in the United States she has yet to even taste much American food. "Virginia ham with pineapple — that I never had," said Vernier-Palliez. Nor has she had fried chicken or cheesecake. "I love cheesecake. And I was never served cheesecake anywhere in this country."

But running an embassy that entertains every day leaves little time for searching out American specialties. While very large dinners are limited to no more than one a month, dinners for 25 are scheduled frequently, in addition to breakfast and lunch.

The kitchen is an ochre-colored room that looks typical of those designed four decades ago. It is equipped with two telephones and a dumbwaiter but no dishwasher. Leyerle works with one assistant, Marie-Elena Mendiuri, both bustling at top speed in near silence.

LEYERLE'S MENUS ARE deceptive. For the three courses he has planned, he may have four saddles of lamb in the oven, turnips simmering in a copper pan and pots warming glazed potato balls and cherry tomatoes, green parsley sauce, turnip sauce and water for the green beans. One bowl holds mushrooms, another watercress and a third chopped parsley. The platter of meat will be garnished with five to seven different vegetables. A peppery golden consommé jells in the refrigerator, to be garnished with carrot flowers, chopped tomatoes and a single asparagus tip. Tuiles are piled in a dehumidified pantry; plates are set with truffle slices, corn barquettes and split snow peas. On long buttered silver platters pink mousses of lobster are lined up, ready to be spooned with the green sauce. Lime and watermelon sherbet, made just hours before, is in the freezer, ready to be scooped into a watermelon shell, sauced with lime syrup and garnished with shredded lime peel.

Leyerle departs from the new style in preferring to serve food from platters rather than preplated. Waiters line up for the platters, carrying them upstairs. The emptied platters and floral Sevres china, made only for the embassy but similar to that of the Elysee Palace, are returned by dumbwaiter, to be washed by hand. Glasses and crystal fingerbowls — which are afloat with salmon-colored rose petals — are washed in an upstairs dishwasher. The pace of the meal is signaled by buzzer. One buzz means that the waiters have changed the plates, two that they are ready for the next course.

THE EMBASSY, WITH eight guest rooms, depends on the kitchen from morning croissants — served on silver trays with fresh orange juice and the best English or Indian tea — to lunches, to afternoon wine tastings or parties given at the embassy by French-oriented organizations, to grand dinners. In July 1,500 Bastille Day guests nibbled Leyerle's home-made garlic sausage in brioche, gateau opera, lemon tarts, strawberry tarts, tiny pithiviers, champagne and vin de dieu — a punch of red wine, Cointreau, orange slices and mint — from Leyerle's garden, of course.

Can biochemistry influence behavior?

By JoAnn Rodgers
Hearst Feature Service

The notion that evil-doers are "born that way" or are doomed by their genes to be lawless is an idea as old as the Biblical "bad seed."

It was widely affirmed in the 19th century by phrenologists who claimed to see a link between specific crimes and skull contours. Advocates of the position later pointed to male prisoners with extra Y chromosomes, brain wave abnormalities in murderers and violent epileptics.

These biomedical approaches to undesirable behavior were justly crippled by careful studies which documented the many law-abiding XYY males and peaceful epileptics.

New ones, however, have emerged. They are fueled by the fact that kids given every advantage are known to grow up wretched anyway, while impoverished, abused kids can become model citizens.

SO THERE IS a move back toward biological explanations of crime. And this time around, defense attorneys are not only on the bandwagon, but helping to pull it.

One in particular that has become the darling of the legal community is the so-called Twinkie Defense.

Twinkies are sugar pastries. The Twinkie Defense is a short-hand name for any courtroom argument that involves junkfood diets, biochemistry, genes, brain allergies and the like to justify or explain a criminal act.

Dr. Ben Feingold, a San Francisco pediatrician, found that some children's brain chemistries are sensitive to dyes, additives and sugars. By removing such items from their diet, hyperactive, aggressive children were often dramatically calmed.

New high-energy brain scanners such as PET (for Positron Emission Tomography) have documented abnormal sugar metabolism and anatomy in the brains of schizophrenics and depressed patients. Scans were introduced as evidence in the Hinckley trial. At the University of Wisconsin, scientists were able to reduce fighting among lab animals by removing tryptophan, a nutrient common in milk and cheese, from the animals' diet.

Tryptophan reduces the output of a potent brain chemical, Diana Fishbein, a post-doctoral student at the University of Maryland's Institute of Applied Neuroscience, is now looking for similar results in human studies.

DR. BERNARD WEISS, a founder of the science of behavioral toxicology at the University of Rochester (N.Y.) School of Medicine, has evidence that low-dose exposure to industrial pollutants, food dyes and other chemicals may not produce obvious poisoning but alter thought patterns.

"That damage may be insidious and long term and be responsible for a lot of undesirable behavior, criminal or otherwise," Weiss has said.

At the American Institute for Biosocial Research in Tacoma, Wash., director Alexander Schauss has collected hundreds of case histories and studies which implicate biochemistry and bad behavior.

A former probation officer and author of a book, "Diet, Crime and Delinquency," Schauss has uncovered excess levels of copper, phosphorus, lead, mercury and aluminum in the body tissues of delinquents, as well as vitamin deficiencies and heavy junk food habits.

Maryland's Fishbein put 104 inmates at a Florida prison on diets free of refined sugars. Among those with faulty sugar metabolism, the new diet, within a month, significantly reduced hostile, impulsive, aggressive moods and acts.

Unfortunately, the evidence that brain "pollution" or biological defects are to blame for most crime is extremely weak. Much of it is unconfirmed by careful scientific experiments. Much of it is championed by nutritional zealots and quick-buck artists selling special diets or vitamin products. At best, studies show that the link between biochemistry, brain anatomy and behavior is limited, unpredictable, tough to pin down and subject to the influence of psychological treatment.

SCHAUSS, FISHBEGIN AND others working in the field are quick to caution that much more work needs to be done before the evidence can be considered certain. And they are angry at lawyers who seek a biochemical defense where none exists or who use it only with an eye to getting a guilty client back on the streets.

"The whole notion of a Twinkie Defense is ridiculous," says Schauss. "Biochemistry and biology may explain why a person does certain things but it can't excuse or justify non-treatment or non-punishment."

lighter sentence or no sentence at all. But too often, the clients desperately need institutionalization and treatment."

She recently resigned as a consultant to a Fairfax, Va., company, Forensic Habilitation Inc., that provides biological work-ups for those charged with crimes. "Experience has shown me that a lawyer's sole goal is to lighten the load on the client, not find truth and deal with it."

Hard times facing Africa unity group

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NAIROBI, Kenya — Objections to Libya's anti-American leader Moammar Khadafy and a dispute over the fate of about 75,000 nomads in northwest Africa could result in the dissolution, by the end of the year, of the organization representing 400 million Africans.

For the first time in its 19-year history, the Organization of African Unity was unable to hold its annual summit meeting last weekend in Tripoli, Libya, because it could not muster a two-thirds quorum of its 51 members.

A five-nation committee was set up to try to persuade the approximately 20 nations that boycotted the summit to attend one later in the year in Tripoli. Blaming the United States for the boycott, Khadafy has threatened to hold a "rump" summit and form a breakaway African movement if this second attempt fails to achieve a quorum.

THAT WOULD CREATE Africa's worst political crisis, dividing the continent into two camps, roughly along the lines of "radical," left-leaning nations and "conservative" ones closer to the West.

The continent thus would lose one of the cherished aims proclaimed when the OAU was established in 1963 — limiting outside pressure, especially from the big powers.

Khadafy originally had proposed going ahead with the summit without a quorum but apparently was dissuaded by some of the more moderate leaders in Tripoli, including Julius Nyerere of Tanzania and Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia.

The ostensible reason for the boycott was the recognition by the OAU of the Sahara Arab Democratic Republic, whose Polisario Front guerrillas are fighting Morocco for control of the desolate former Spanish colony of Western Sahara. More than a dozen former French African colonies and a handful of Arab nations joined Morocco in refusing to attend as long as the Polisario group was regarded as a member.

HOWEVER, KHADAFY was probably as much a reason for the failure of the conference. By holding the summit, he automatically would have become the recognized representative of Africa in world forums for the next year. As the bete noire of the United States in the Arab world for his alleged support of terrorism, Khadafy also had a number of enemies among African leaders, who accused him of meddling in their affairs and, in some cases, trying to overthrow them.

Some African heads of state recall their embarrassment when former Ugandan dictator Idi Amin carried the mantle of African leadership in 1975-76 after holding the summit in Kampala, and they feared a repeat performance under Khadafy.

Since the OAU had confirmed the Tripoli conference site by consensus last year, however, it is unlikely that a boycott on those grounds alone could have deprived Khadafy of a quorum.

Enter the issue of Western Sahara, about half the size of Texas with a mainly nomadic population of some 75,000. Most of the area is within the Sahara Desert, under which there is one known resource — reserves of phosphate, a major ingredient in fertilizer, estimated at 1.7 billion tons.

Morocco, a key Arab ally of the United States, and the Polisario Front, supported by Algeria and lately Libya, have been fighting a war over the territory ever since Spain pulled out in 1975.

Morocco, which has committed about the same number of troops as there are civilians in Western Sahara, controls a narrow coastal strip including the capital, El Aaiun. Polisario occupies the eastern area along the Algerian and Mauritanian borders and has proclaimed its own capital. The no man's land in between belongs to whichever troops happen to be on patrol on a given day.

THE OAU'S OUTGOING secretary general, Edem Kodjo, precipitated the crisis at the organization's meeting of foreign ministers in February when he proclaimed the SADR a member because a majority of OAU nations had recognized it. Morocco and its allies walked out of the meeting, saying that only a two-thirds majority at a summit meeting could take such a decision.

Ever since then, OAU meetings have been paralyzed, and the conservatives have been able to combine that issue with opposition to Libya as a summit site to block the meeting.

Khadafy has charged that the United States, which ordered its citizens to leave Libya last December, sabotaged the summit, but he has presented no evidence.

It is possible that the United States played a role in the absence from the meeting of Kenyan President Daniel arap Moi, the outgoing chairman of the OAU. Moi's presence was essential to hand over the mantle of leadership to Khadafy.

U.S. Ambassador William Harrop met with Moi last Tuesday and much of the session dealt with the OAU. Two days later Moi announced he would only attend the conference if there were a quorum. That almost guaranteed that the summit would fall short of the required number.

It was questionable, however, whether Moi would have attended anyway, because he survived a coup attempt just four days before Thursday's scheduled opening of the summit.

That hearty base shows in the calves' feet he adds to give body to his chicken consommé, in the turnips he simmers under a parchment cover until they melt on the tongue. But the final product is as delicate as a Japanese brush painting. Seafood becomes pale pink "zephyrs of lobster." Snow peas are painstakingly split — not quite to the stem — and fanned out on the plate. Corn leaves the cob for tiny boat-shaped pastries. And dinner at the French Embassy has been pared to a mere three or four courses, with rarely a cheese course. One guest last winter reported that the meal was so light that a waiter whispered to him to take a lot of it.

That suits the new ambassador, Bernard Vernier-Palliez, and his wife, Denise. She is Parisian, but has spent much time in the south of France and favors "new style" cuisine. As she plans menus with Leyerle, Denise Vernier-Palliez aims for lightness and restraint and tries to have "not too much cream." She also prefers the dining room set with several small tables rather than one large one, and the food arranged on buffets so that people can circulate and talk. "I try sometimes to manage the menus so that only one wine will be used," she adds.

Few changes show in the kitchen with this new administration, though Leyerle says there are more stag lunches and "a lot of society dinners. She knows a lot about food," Leyerle says, and Vernier-Palliez's taste is reflected in the menus. While the embassy imports turbot and Norwegian salmon, "She loves the fish here — sea bass, red snapper, pompano." The ambassador's wife adds that she is particularly looking forward to vacationing in Maine to take full advantage of the "superb" American lobsters. Serving lobster is affordable here, she explains; "In France it is out of the question."

AMONG THE FEW culinary changes with this administration are one predictable shift and one surprise: "Caviar we never serve," says Vernier-Palliez, except the cheaper American golden caviar, what else would one expect in these times? But veal, as fashionable in Washington as fur coats and cowboy boots, is also disappearing from the embassy's menus. "I always think it is a bit tasteless," says Vernier-Palliez, who greatly prefers lamb.

Thus, a recent menu — one grand enough to warrant three wines — consisted of cold consommé with chervil, zephyrs of lobster with parsley and saddle of lamb with turnips, with no cheese or salad intermediary before dessert. Another three-wine menu progressed from a mousseline of salmon with champagne, to duck breast, to a chestnut dessert in a thin cookie shell. Or there might be lobster consommé, pigeon and a caramelized almond dessert. "Nothing American, of course," Vernier-Palliez declares. "No, never," she declares. Vernier-Palliez. She does serve rum after dinner along with the cognac, explaining that her nephew is a director of the Cointreau company, which produces the St. James rum she has stocked in the cellar. But in her short stay in the United States she has yet to even taste much American food. "Virginia ham with pineapple — that I never had," said Vernier-Palliez. Nor has she had fried chicken. Or cheesecake. "I love cheesecake. And I was never served cheesecake anywhere in this country."

But running an embassy that entertains every day leaves little time for searching out American specialties. While very large dinners are limited to no more than one a month, dinners for 25 are scheduled frequently, in addition to breakfast and lunch.

The kitchen is an ochre-colored room that looks typical of those designed four decades ago. It is equipped with two telephones and a dumbwaiter but no dishwasher. Leyerle works with one assistant, Marie-Elena Menduéri, both bustling at top speed in near silence.

LEYERLE'S MENUS ARE deceptive. For the three courses he has planned, he may have four saddles of lamb in the oven, turnips simmering in a copper pan and pots warming glazed potato balls and cherry tomatoes, green parsley sauce, turnip sauce and water for the green beans. One bowl holds mushrooms, another watercress and a third chopped parsley. The platter of meat will be garnished with five to seven different vegetables. A peppery golden consommé jells in the refrigerator, to be garnished with carrot flowers, chopped tomatoes and a single asparagus tip. Tuiles are piled in a dehumidified pantry; plates are set with truffle slices, corn barquettes and split snow peas. On long buttered silver platters pink mousses of lobster are lined up, ready to be spooned with the green sauce. Lime and watermelon sherbet, made just hours before, is in the freezer, ready to be scooped into a watermelon shell, sauced with lime syrup and garnished with shredded lime peel.

Leyerle departs from the new style in preferring to serve food from platters rather than preplated. Waiters line up for the platters, carrying them upstairs. The emptied platters and floral Sevres china, made only for the embassy but similar to that of the Elysee Palace, are returned by dumbwaiter, to be washed by hand. Glasses and crystal fingerbowls — which are afloat with salmon-colored rose petals — are washed in an upstairs dishwasher. The pace of the meal is signaled by buzzer. One buzz means that the waiters have changed the plates, two that they are ready for the next course.

THE EMBASSY, WITH eight guest rooms, depends on the kitchen from morning croissants — served on silver trays with fresh orange juice and the best English or Indian tea — to lunches, to afternoon wine tastings or parties given at the embassy by French-oriented organizations, to grand dinners. In July 1,500 Bastille Day guests nibbled Leyerle's homemade garlic sausage in brioche, gateau opera, lemon tarts, strawberry tarts, tiny pithiviers, champagne and vin de dieu — a punch of red wine, Cointreau, orange slices and mint — from Leyerle's garden, of course.

Can biochemistry influence behavior?

By JoAnn Rodgers
Hearst Feature Service

The notion that evil-doers are "born that way" or are doomed by their genes to be lawless is an idea as old as the Biblical "bad seed."

It was widely affirmed in the 19th century by phrenologists who claimed to see a link between specific crimes and skull contours. Advocates of the position later pointed to male prisoners with extra Y chromosomes, brain wave abnormalities in murderers and violent epileptics.

These biomedical approaches to undesirable behavior were justly crippled by careful studies which documented the many law-abiding XY males and peaceful epileptics.

New ones, however, have emerged. They are fueled by the fact that kids given every advantage are known to grow up wretched anyway, while impoverished, abused kids can become model citizens.

SO THERE IS a move back toward biological explanations of crime. And this time around, defense attorneys are not only on the bandwagon, but helping to pull it.

One in particular that has become the darling of the legal community is the so-called Twinkie Defense.

Twinkies are sugar pastries. The Twinkie Defense is a short-hand name for any courtroom argument that involves junkfood diets, biochemistry, genes, brain allergies and the like to justify or explain a criminal act.

Dr. Ben Feingold, a San Francisco pediatrician, found that some children's brain chemistries are sensitive to dyes, additives and sugars. By removing such items from their diet, hyperactive, aggressive children were often dramatically calmed.

New high-energy brain scanners such as PET (for Positron Emission Tomography) have documented abnormal sugar metabolism and anatomy in the brains of schizophrenics and depressed patients. Scans were introduced as evidence in the Hinckley trial. At the University of Wisconsin, scientists were able to reduce fighting among lab animals by removing tryptophan, a nutrient common in milk and cheese, from the animals' diet.

Tryptophan reduces the output of a potent brain chemical. Diana Fishbein, a post-doctoral student at the University of Maryland's Institute of Applied Neuroscience, is now looking for similar results in human studies.

DR. BERNARD WEISS, a founder of the science of behavioral toxicology at the University of Rochester (N.Y.) School of Medicine, has evidence that low-dose exposure to industrial pollutants, food dyes and other chemicals may not produce obvious poisoning but alter thought patterns.

"That damage may be insidious and long term and be responsible for a lot of undesirable behavior, criminal or otherwise," Weiss has said.

At the American Institute for Biosocial Research in Tacoma, Wash., director Alexander Schauss has collected hundreds of case histories and studies which implicate biochemistry and bad behavior.

A former probation officer and author of a book, "Diet, Crime and Delinquency," Schauss has uncovered excess levels of copper, phosphorus, lead, mercury and aluminum in the body tissues of delinquents, as well as vitamin deficiencies and heavy junk food habits.

Maryland's Fishbein put 104 inmates at a Florida prison on diets free of refined sugars. Among those with faulty sugar metabolism, the new diet, within a month, significantly reduced hostile, impulsive, aggressive moods and acts.

Unfortunately, the evidence that brain "pollution" or biological defects are to blame for most crime is extremely weak. Much of it is unconfirmed by careful scientific experiments. Much of it is championed by nutritional zealots and quick-buck artists selling special diets or vitamin products. At best, studies show that the link between biochemistry, brain anatomy and behavior is limited, unpredictable, tough to pin down and subject to the influence of psychological treatment.

SCHAUSS, FISHBEIN AND others working in the field are quick to caution that much more work needs to be done before the evidence can be considered certain. And they're angry at lawyers who seek a biochemical defense where none exists or who use it only with an eye to getting a guilty client back on the streets.

"The whole notion of a Twinkie Defense is ridiculous," says Schauss. "Biochemistry and biology may explain why a person does certain things but it can't excuse or justify non-treatment or non-punishment."

Adds Fishbein, "Courts and lawyers misuse the biochemical and biological evaluations we do on clients. They use it to mitigate a crime and to justify a lighter sentence or no sentence at all. But too often, the clients desperately need institutionalization and treatment."

She recently resigned as a consultant to a Fairfax, Va., company, Forensic Habilitation Inc., that provides biological work-ups for those charged with crimes. "Experience has shown me that a lawyer's sole goal is to lighten the load on the client, not find truth and deal with it."

DEAR ABBY

Children's car seats will save lives, avert tragedy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: "Learned Too Late" lost Tina, her precious 6-month-old daughter, in a car accident because the child was not secured in a car seat. She wrote, "If writing this saves only one child, Tina's death will not have been in vain."

I want Tina's mother to know what she has done for me. We have a 7-month-old son, Steven, who has always had the safest surroundings we could provide — except in the car. There, I've lovingly placed him in a carrier beside me. Tina's mother made me see that all the love in the world could not keep our precious child safe in a car without a car seat and seat belt.

The awful truth is that I HAVE a car seat, but have never used it. I found all sorts of excuses — too much trouble, Steven fussed and fought it, takes too long, etc. What a selfish, careless mother I've been. But no more! A trip may take a few extra minutes, but Steven's life is worth it!

Thanks to Tina's mom for being brave and selfless enough to tell her story. This mom — LEARNED IN TIME IN CLOVIS, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Bravo for your letter concerning safety car seats for children.

It takes about 20 seconds to put my 11-month-old daughter into her seat, stick her arms through the straps and buckle up. Some people say, "Kids refuse to ride in those things." Hogwash! Who's in charge anyway? If children were placed in car seats from the time they were infants, as mine were, they would be trained to climb into the seats themselves to be buckled in.

Our neighbor was in a car accident with her two young children. The little ones were thrown around so violently that even their father was not allowed to see their bodies before the funeral!

Safety tests were made using 10-pound dummies instead of live infants. The adults were instructed to hold onto the dummies as they would a live baby while riding in a car at 30 miles per hour. The car stopped suddenly, as though in a collision, and even though they knew it was coming, not ONE of the adults could hold on to the dummy! All lost their grip, and the dummies flew forward! Please print this and sign me — CONCERNED MOM IN INDIANA

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for printing the letter from "Learned Too Late." We also learned too late. We didn't lose our child, but our child lost an eye while standing up in a car that came to a sudden stop. He was thrown against an open metal ashtray on the dashboard and cut his little eye so badly it couldn't be saved. Had that child been buckled into a seat belt as he should have been, it never would have happened. We will always feel a terrible sense of guilt because it was OUR fault, not his. — ALSO LEARNED TOO LATE

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from "Learned Too Late," I started shaking in my shoes. I had just dropped off my daughter (I'll call her Amy) at the babysitter's. Amy was not in a car seat, nor was she belted in by a seat belt. Why? Because she cried and screamed, "I want to stand up, Daddy!" After reading your column, I made a decision. I would rather listen to Amy scream than never hear her voice again.

First I am going home to pick up our unused car seat, then I will go get Amy at the sitter's. And then on, she will never again ride without being protected!

Thank you, Abby, for printing that letter. And thank Tina's mother for having the courage to write so that other parents could learn from her tragic loss. — SMARTER NOW IN ILLINOIS

DEAR SMARTER: What a pity Tina's mother will never know how many children her letter will save.

Blacks have higher cancer mortality rate

By JOHN JACOBS
Hearst Feature Service

When Dr. Harold Freeman arrived at Harlem Hospital Center in New York City 10 years ago, he was shocked by how many blacks had cancer and how far their disease had advanced.

Freeman, a black surgeon who had just spent four years at a major cancer institute, studied 165 consecutive patients at Harlem who had been diagnosed as having breast cancer. Fifty percent were incurable because they had come in so late for treatment. After five years, only 30 percent of the 165 were still alive and only 20 percent were free of cancer. The 30 percent survival rate contrasted with a 60 percent survival rate over five years for white women.

BREAST CANCER IS only one form of cancer in which blacks have a higher mortality rate than whites. "We're talking about at least a 10 percent difference across the board," said Freeman, now director of surgery at Harlem. "Black cancer mortality over the past 25 years has increased 25 percent, while for whites, it's increased 5 percent. The difference is more than incidental. In the same 25 years, the increase in the incidence of all cancers is 8 percent for blacks. For whites, there has been a decrease of 3 percent."

Statistics from the National Cancer Institute illustrate these statements dramatically. Five-year survival rates in seven categories show whites living longer than blacks in every instance.

LUNG CANCER IS the big killer, accounting for a third of cancer-related deaths, and black males have the highest incidence of prostate cancer of any group in the world, said Freeman, who added that no one knows why, although diet is suspected.

Blackness or genetics do not cause these higher mortality rates. Rather — say Freeman, Dr. Owen Ellington, an Oakland, Calif., hematologist and oncologist (cancer specialist) and Dr. Alfred Goldson, a Howard University therapeutic radiologist — lifestyle and the deprivation of ghetto life are responsible.

Indeed, said Ellington, black African males have half the incidence of prostate cancer or black American males. Middle-class and affluent blacks have the same cancer mortality rates as whites.

"It's not so much a race problem as a socio-economic problem," said Freeman. "With one-third of blacks poor, they tend not to be as educated and are not as aware of options and signs of cancer and symptoms of the disease. They have different survival priorities — food, clothing and shelter."

MOREOVER, ADDED GOLDSON, a well-structured family urges family members to seek medical care. "A person living alone in a rooming house has no family support, aches and pain are a routine part of life. He tends to deny pain. Maybe when it gets to severe pain and bleeding, he goes in, but by then it's pretty advanced."

Statistics from the Cancer Center at Howard University in Washington are even more dramatic than the NCI figures in showing non-white death rates over white death rates, particularly in digestive system and cervical cancers.

A recent American Cancer Society study of black attitudes toward cancer found that blacks tended to think of it as a white person's disease, even though it kills more blacks a year (about 44,000) than does sickle cell anemia, that blacks thought it was incurable and thus untreatable, and that 50 percent of blacks believed that if air touches a cancerous organ, it spreads. To this way of thinking, exposing an organ to air during surgery would only make it worse.

Freeman suggests that the federal government redistribute money for health care and that it make sure any patient with signs or symptoms of cancer be given diagnosis and treatment, regardless of ability to pay. He also called for more education about cancer in the black community and said people must motivate themselves to "be masters of their own fate."

Women attend fashion seminar

By CAROLYN NEWBOLD
Lifestyle Editor

Pris Salpeter told women attending a noon Desk & Derrick seminar Tuesday at Blanks Building that money would be the number one problem in building a professional wardrobe for this fall.

"Money and time are both important," she said, "and remember, you need to look structured."

Using suits, blouses, slacks, jackets, skirts and accessories, the speaker demonstrated how to get more than one look from a basic suit.

"Suits are the best answer," she explained, "and this fall you will see swing skirts, jewel colors, cardigans, sweaters, black and white for the holidays."

She emphasized the importance of good accessories — especially belts, and pointed out that colors need to blend — not match. "Leathers will be important this fall, and remember that earth tones are always very good," continued the speaker.

She recommended cleaning out one's closet, disposing of things that are never worn, and using the others to build on. Women attending were given

VILLAGE SUBURBAN ONLY

What do nursing home, Vegas have in common?

By ERMA BOMBECK

Nursing homes and Las Vegas casinos always seemed to have a lot in common. You never saw children, birds, trees, or daylight in either of them. But Vegas had the edge. They had music to listen to and games to play and people who were too excited to go to bed.

Until recently a nursing home in North Carolina was given a couple of video games and a jukebox with Willie Nelson and Bette Midler records and life hasn't been the same since.

Arthritis has been conquered by the Space Invaders and The Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy of Company B has done a lot for poor circulation.

I think the nursing home in North Carolina is onto something. The elderly don't necessarily need twilight zones of mindless days where the peak of the week is the squeak in their wheelchair. They need the same things they needed to keep going when they were younger: challenges, activities and relationships.

I nearly cried recently when I saw where a group of animal lovers took pets to a nursing home to visit. The residents came alive as they caressed and petted animals that stirred memories and emotions within them that had long since been put to rest.

The same thing happens to them in Vegas. I've seen elderly women perched on a stool, clutching a paper cup full of nickels, playing four slot machines at one time. The appearance of a cherry which returns two coins will give her the strength to jump over a five-piece band, force open an elevator door and run a four-minute mile to her room to tell someone.

I remember a few years ago when my son was in high school, the teacher asked for a show of hands as to who wanted to live beyond 60 years. He was the only one who raised his hand.

I like to think my son was remembering his grandmother and grandfather who live in a retirement community and haven't had their feet off the ground in seven years. They invited a group of neighbors over to see a movie one night called "10."

When I asked mother what they thought of it, she hesitated a bit and said, "You know it was the longest any of us had ever sat without going to the bathroom."

Grandmother discovers gift in attic

By ETHEL SALTER GAYLE
Special from Reader's Digest

It happened years ago, when I was in an early stage of grandmotherhood. Yet I remember everything about that long, overly sentimental afternoon.

I sat on a rolled-up rug in the attic with my back against the chimney and contemplated the hugeness of the task I'd set for myself. The moving men were nearly through, and the rest of our sprawling two-story Alabama house was empty of furniture — indeed, empty of all else except echoes.

Only in the attic were there still things, stacks and piles of them. For more than 30 years — the 21 years of my marriage and the decade the children and I stayed on in the house after Norman died — those things had been coming up the stairs.

Now that the children were on their own, the old place had grown too big for just me, and we were selling it. All the accumulation had to be gone through before the movers came for their final haul the next day. I thought for sure I'd find a few items worth keeping or passing on to the children or grandchildren.

AS A STARTER, I unrolled the rug I'd been sitting on. A lump rose in my throat. The first rug Norman and I had bought, it was a reminder of the lean, hectic early years of marriage we had loved, and somehow survived, together. But for all my efforts to keep the old imitation Persian as decent as possible until we could get a better one, it now held only too plainly a record of unhousebroken puppies, three babies whose rubber pants had not always been adequate, and the shoe polish (spilled when I hurried it in a fit of temper) that had defied all cleaning fluids. Who would want it now?

Norman and I had been so needed then, so indispensable, and so many things in the attic were testaments to that fact. How could I throw them all away? The hobbyhorse that had lost its mane and tail? Or the trunkful of broken but once beloved dolls?

And — here it came, the self-pity I had been working up to all afternoon — who really needed me anymore? The tears, dammed up for hours, burst in a flood. Like everything else in the attic, I, too, was pretty well used up and worn out. The best part of my life was finished. I sobbed with soul-racking abandon.

Finally, to try to get hold of myself, I went to the window and gulped in the cool, bracing air. Then happened the brief, quick series of events that changed my thinking. A car pulled up in front of the house and out piled my son, Norman Jr., with his two children, and my older daughter, Merrily, with her two

AT THE SAME instant, a second car, coming too fast, bore down on them. Out of long habit, I was about to yell, "Watch out for the little ones!" But I quelled the impulse, realizing there was no need for me to shout orders. Norm scooped up one child with a practiced hand while deftly herding another child safely to the curb, and Merrily handled her two children with the same efficiency.

But there was a stranger reason why I didn't shout a warning. Up there in the darkening attic I felt in that moment almost as detached from the scene below as if I had been looking down from another planet. It was this odd sense of detachment, I'm sure, that let me see things in a new and clear light. My son wasn't "Little Norman" anymore. Tall and broad of shoulder, he was the picture of strength and confidence. It was startling to see how knowing he had grown in 28 years, and to realize what a competent mother Merrily had become. My younger daughter, Gerry, just married, was quite capable of running her own life, too, without promptings from me.

The truth dawned. If I never rejoined the familiar scene below, my children and grandchildren were now quite all right without me.

Suddenly, the tears came rushing again, but for a different reason. Now I was crying for joy. I had made the great and comforting discovery that, while being indispensable is a wonderful thing at the proper time, being no longer indispensable — because one has handled the irrevocable past well or luckily enough — can bring a far greater sense of satisfaction and triumph. And then and there I knew it was time for me to step from center-stage. I had earned the privilege of relinquishing the starring role.

Collector is all dolled up, sells inventory

By KATHLEEN GLANVILLE
Democrat Herald

ALBANY, Ore. (AP) — Little girls no longer bring their broken dolls to Louis Beckner to mend.

Beckner has collected and sold dolls for the past 11 years. But he says his eyesight isn't good enough to do any more repair work. And he doesn't have the money for serious collecting, so he is selling his inventory at reduced prices.

Business hasn't been brisk. Most of the dolls that would be considered valuable collectors' items have either already been sold or aren't for sale.

But Beckner still has more than 200 dolls, ranging from tiny baby dolls to adult-size mannequins.

Every morning he opens for business by rolling up his garage door. Sometimes he puts a display out front to catch the eye of passersby. One recent day it was a life-size mannequin wearing red, white and blue standing with her arm wrapped around the flag pole.

Several child-size dolls decked out in bridal gowns stand in a row at the front of the garage. Beckner designed and sewed clothing for many of the dolls he has sold over the years. And it has become almost a neighborhood tradition for little girls to get their picture taken wearing one of the wedding outfits crafted for the life-size dolls.

Inside the garage more than 200 other dolls line the walls, greeting visitors with cherubic smiles and unblinking eyes.

Every doll has a name, neatly printed on the price tag. Beckner names every doll he acquires, using a book of 3,500 names for reference.

One blonde, curly-haired model speaks Japanese when her string is pulled.

Another sings a song in German. A little boy doll blows a plastic bubble when his arm is twisted. Little "Baby Thumbles" cries when you pull the pacifier out of her mouth.

It's enough to drive a small child wild, seeing all those dolls within easy reach. That explains the hand-written signs admonishing the browser: "No pay, no play."

Beckner, 51, worked at the Bermico Fiber Pipe Products Co. in Corvallis until the business closed in 1975. He got into the doll business by accident. He wanted to sell an old trash-burner to the woman who bought his house, but all she could offer was a box full of dolls.

He accepted the dolls and walked home — and sold half of the dolls on the way.

"I decided there was money in the business," he said. He began seriously collecting in 1970. At one time Beckner owned more than 500 dolls, but now he is down to about 225.

"I'll never go clear out," he said. "I buy 'em when I've got the money. If I see a pretty one, I feel bad if I don't buy it. If I do buy it, by the time I got home I'm mad I did."

The people who buy his dolls today are shopping mainly for a toy for their children, but collectors still come by seeking a find.

At one time Beckner's home was also a doll hospital. He has a framed certificate in "doll technology" from a Los Angeles correspondence school.

But he no longer repairs dolls. "It's too hard to get good parts these days," he said, adding that his eyesight also isn't good enough.

He does spend a lot of time these days caring for real "dolls" — his grandchildren and his niece.

Police sketch artist does interesting, difficult work

By ANN JAPENGA
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — While the commotion of crime fighting goes on all around him, it's peaceful in Fernando Ponce's tiny office at the Los Angeles Police Department's downtown headquarters. Bluegrass music plays softly on the radio. The phone is permanently disconnected.

Ponce's full-time civilian job with the police department is drawing faces. From someone's shadowy memory of an assailant in a dark room, he must construct a likeness close enough that a policeman on the beat will recognize that face.

The work requires a special cooperation between the composite artist and the victim or witness to a crime. Unlike some other types of police work, it demands an atmosphere of tranquility.

"Going to the When crime victim like going to the dentist," says Ponce. "When crime victims come downtown for the purpose of remembering an attacker's face, they're tense. Ponce soothes them by addressing them as he does everyone: "My friend."

Although his job is to provide evidence and not to investigate cases, he allows nervous witnesses to recount the events of the crime. This relaxes them and sometimes it yields clues that more aggressive questioning does not.

"Once a person is sitting relaxed, sipping coffee or having a cigarette, I say to them, 'Let's give it a try,' and by then they're eager," Ponce says. The exchange that follows has elements of both art and map making.

The finished composite portrait may not resemble the suspect closely. Ponce says, but it will be full of symbols or clues that will enable police to recognize the suspect.

The first thing Ponce asks witnesses to describe is the shape of a suspect's face. In most cases the response is, "round." Most people really don't have round faces, Ponce says, but he sketches a circle on graph paper anyway. "The words are immaterial to me," he says. "It's just a means to an end."

During the session, Ponce works to perfect the suspect's skin tone. Until a year ago, all his composite sketches were in black-and-white, but after two years of research into skin colors and methods of conveying them, Ponce converted to the more revealing full-color portraits.

The process of recognition is a mystery to psychologists, says Ponce. Clients will often say, "I can't describe it," but once a face begins to appear they coach the artist: too much eyebrow, not enough forehead.

Ponce says he can tell when a victim of a violent crime is blocking out the attacker's face because he or she shows a tremendous, sometimes agonized, effort to remember. In those cases a witness may be asked to undergo hypnosis, and the information sometimes surfaces.

Other witnesses intentionally withhold an essential bit of detail. Other reports are simply fakes. Artistic intuition and an understanding of anatomy tip Ponce off when a face does not really exist. A person who is faking — such as the man who claimed he was robbed of $100,000 in jewelry — will say he can't see the face. Or, grasping at straws, he may describe a roommate, or even Ponce.

In his 10 years on the job, drawing and training other police artists across the country, Ponce has gotten closer to his aim of simplifying faces.

"I think a cartoonist would make a good composite artist," Ponce says, because the cartoonist is also trained to simplify facial features. But there is a difference between the two: The cartoonist exaggerates expression while Ponce attempts to neutralize any emotion. A grin or a scowl can mislead officers hunting for a suspect. Whatever emotion the suspect showed while committing the crime is probably not the same as the face he wears on the street, Ponce says.

Ponce has found that children make the best witnesses because their version of the crime is not distorted by adult concepts.

Ponce illustrates the point: Asked to draw a table an adult will take pains to draw it in perspective, the way he's been taught. A child might miss the perspective entirely, but he will include the knob and the drawer and the cracked leg.

"Which drawing is more descriptive in terms of clues?" Ponce asks. Though they arrive feeling anxious and unsure of their ability to remember the crime, most witnesses leave his office satisfied, Ponce says. After an hour of false starts and erasures (Ponce works on rice paper because it takes repeated scraping and erasing) the witness will say: "That's it. That's what I want." The drawing of the suspect's face is then distributed on 3x5-inch cards to police divisions throughout the city.

Ponce says it's hard to calculate how many of his drawings are successful in terms of catching a crook. The description may not be accurate because the suspect didn't have a good look at a face. Even if it is, it takes a measure of luck to find one face in a large city.

Ponce is now involved in a 10-year project that he hopes will increase the odds of catching suspects through drawings. Using a home computer he's attempting to come up with some basic rules about facial patterns.

The results of this study will aid in composite drawing and in development of a new police art form which Ponce has helped pioneer: 3-D models.

One evening last year some hobos settled down on the overgrown center divider of the Hollywood Freeway. Expecting nothing more than a cozy spot to share a bottle, they discovered instead a human skeleton.

Ponce was called in at six that evening and told he had just 12 hours to reconstruct the dead man's face before the remains had to be returned to the coroner's office.

Anatomy was on Ponce's side. The shape of the face is determined by the bone structure, he said. Muscles are almost identical in every face, so given a skull, the artist simply had to drape it with muscles and flesh.

Where the victim's head had rested against the ground, a patch of hair remained, so Ponce knew the man's hair color and texture. From a bit of skin preserved by a shoe on one foot, he could determine the man's skin tone.

By the time of the press conference the next morning Ponce had created a likeness of a healthy, handsome dark-haired man in his 30s. The plaster was so fresh a reporter exclaimed: "My God, this guy's sweating."

Why the long night of work to try to identify just another John Doe? A tiny hole near the eye socket suggested he was a homicide victim, Ponce said.

Born in Ecuador, Ponce had finished school at the Art Center College of Design here and was supporting himself as a free-lance artist in 1972 when he went to a local police station to pay a traffic ticket. Posted there was a description of a civil service job involving painting and drawing.

There were 259 applicants for the position of composite artist. Ponce showed up at the job interview wearing a flowered shirt, medallions around his neck, high boots and long hair. "Monday morning," they told him, "you come in in a suit and tie."

Felines living in style at cat house

By ROBERT LEE ZIMMER
AP Writer

MOMENCE, Ill. (AP) — It's high noon at Cat Town, and a tranquil tom sprawls on the saloon bar, while in the general store, a finicky feline laps her afternoon cream from antique china.

Meanwhile, their owners enjoy vacations, free from the guilt of leaving pampered pussycats in a cramped kennel cage.

"We wanted to create an atmosphere more like home," says Jim Olmstead, who opened this Wild West cat boarding town last May after a year of planning and construction. "The big thing about it is that they have their freedom."

There are eight spacious stores and homes in the town, each the size of a large closet and decorated with antiques, giving the feeling of a turn-of-the-century Western village.

The lamp on the saloon bar reads: "Drinking Ain't for Dogs," and illuminates the wood-burned picture of a buzzard and the sombrero on the wall.

There is a gumball machine and washboard in the general store, and even a ball of string for the guest's amusement.

If the cat has more expensive taste, he or she might enjoy scattering the play money in the bank. If it's the intellectual type, it might try the flashcards on the desk in the schoolhouse.

"Since the globe is not on a stand, cats like to roll it around the schoolhouse like a ball," said Pat Olmstead, who helped her husband find the decorations for Cat Town — from the 13-star flag in the school to the antique furniture in the mayor's house.

The few covered pieces are upholstered in a durable material, but the cats seem content to play with toys, relax on the furniture or sit at the door and watch others come and go. So far, no guest has hung from the curtains by the claws or damaged the decorations.

The houses and stores are built along a wooden street — actually the floor from an historic church in the area. Shingled roofs extend over each door, and exterior walls are decorated with old-fashioned tools.

For $4 a day, Morris can have his or her — or your — choice of accommodations.

"A teacher picked the schoolhouse for her cat," Mrs. Olmstead said.

Owners are encouraged to take their pets into Cat Town themselves. If the cat has a special toy or bed, owners may bring them along. The Olmsteads will serve the cat's favorite dish and administer medication.

The Olmsteads work in suburban Chicago high schools — Olmstead is a teacher and Mrs. Olmstead is a librarian. They moved to Momence eight years ago because they needed space to raise and show dogs. Soon they opened a dog kennel, then accepted local requests to board cats.

After a friend told them it was a shame to coop the cats up in small cages, they began thinking about a different approach. One night, while in a restaurant done in the same theme, it came to Olmstead: "Wouldn't it be nice to build a Western town for cats?"

With those plans in mind, Olmstead and two students reconstructed the outside of an old kennel near his house, then built Cat Town inside.

The Olmsteads have about $25,000 invested in the building, but have lost track of the price of all the decorations.

"It's going to take me a lifetime to get the money back," said Olmstead. "But, I don't care — I get excited about it every time I walk out there."

Killer whales — five tons of black, white poetry

By LES BLUMENTHAL
AP Writer

OFF HENRY ISLAND, Wash. (AP) — They cruise the waters unafraid, from Vancouver Island to Olympia, following the salmon, playing in the kelp, teaching their young. Unafraid.

Despite their names, it's hard not to love killer whales — five tons of black and white poetry skimming out of the water with consummate ease, spouting, then diving 700 feet to the bottom of Haro Strait only to resurface within minutes to repeat the cycle.

"Thar she blows," comes the traditional whalers' cry, as the 20 orcas of J Pod — the whale group's name — hove into view a mile off the bow of the Sea Crest, a cruise ship chartered by Greenpeace.

The whales play hide-and-seek for the next two hours, curiously approaching within 10 feet of the boat, then slipping beneath the waves in blissful ignorance of what the humans, their only known predator, have planned for them next.

Six miles away, in a pool at the Sealand aquarium in Victoria, British Columbia, swims Haida, a relative of the whales of J Pod who has spent 14 of his 20 years in captivity.

These are the pawns in an environmental drama unfolding in the inland waters of western Washington and British Columbia this summer.

The aquarium says it will release Haida in exchange for a permit from the Canadian Department of Fisheries to capture two other killer whales.

Greenpeace has vowed to fight, disrupting the capture attempt if possible, clandestinely releasing the whales later if the hunt is successful.

The most likely targets, says Greenpeace, are the youngest members of J Pod, three-month-old Lummi and Kiva, born less than a month ago.

In the 1960s and '70s, these waters were the main source of killer whales for the world's aquariums. About 65 orcas were snared in nets, some scared by minidepth charges dropped by their pursuers, says Patrick Moore, director of Greenpeace Canada.

Today, about 80 killer whales remain, traveling in three resident pods with an occasional visit from a transient group.

"We will not allow it," Moore says of the aquarium's plans. "They (the whales) are an international endowment and they should be dealt with as an international heritage."

The capturing of killer whales in U.S. waters is banned under the Marine Mammal Protection Act. Officials of the National Marine Fisheries Service in Seattle say there is little they can do to prevent the hunt as long as it remains on the Canadian side of the border.

Under a loophole in the moratorium Canada adopted in 1975 outlawing the taking of killer whales, Sealand and other aquariums are allowed to replace orcas already in captivity.

Releasing Haida would be a "world first," says Angus Matthews, aquarium manager. "It would lead to a new phase in the relationship between animals and man."

To veteran orca watchers such as David Geist, assistant curator of the Whale Museum in Friday Harbor, the release of Haida is "sort of exciting."

"I'm not sure what will happen," he said. "I'm not sure if he will be accepted back into the pod or whether he will be strong enough to survive."

Sealand says it plans to re-educate Haida before releasing him, switching his feed from frozen to fresh fish, putting him through an exercise program and refreshing his memory by playing tapes of the underwater verbal sounds of wild killer whales.

Geist, however, is opposed to the proposal to capture two new whales.

"The greatest danger to these whales," says Geist pointing to the orcas swimming alongside the Sea Crest, "is capture."

"Scientifically speaking, capture is a very poor approach to research. Mostly what you will get is how a whale performs in captivity."

Researchers test cold virus drug

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M University researchers are using the manmade cancer drug Interferon to see if it also will fight the common cold.

Tests of the drug, which has been used to treat some forms of cancer, have begun on 35 student volunteers to analyze its effects on Rhinovirus No. 13, a common source of colds, A&M officials said Friday. And 80 other students have received combined vaccines against Russian and Bangkok flu strains in another study in collaboration with Baylor College of Medicine.

Dr. John Quarles, Texas A&M microbiologist, said that volunteers at the university's student health center were exposed to the cold virus, then treated with either Interferon or a placebo.

He said Interferon was administered twice daily to the students from pocket-size sprayers similar to those used for nasal medications.

Quarles said that three of four students considered for the tests had been rejected because they had developed antibodies through previous exposure to the cold virus.

The Interferon was manufactured through cloning by Hoffmann-LaRoche Inc. laboratories, he said.

Need to weigh drug's benefits against risks

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of my closest friends recently passed away after being operated on for cancer of the ovary. I know that the doctor who operated on her was a very skilled surgeon and I have no question that he did his best. But what I don't understand is why my friend had to suffer the way she did. I read your column faithfully and I know there are drugs that can relieve pain. If a person is dying, why not use them? — Bertha, New York City

Dear Bertha: I couldn't agree with you more. You probably know from reading this column that I have often emphasized the need to weigh the benefits of using a drug against the risks of using it. I have also warned that drugs that are powerful enough to fight disease have the potential for producing some undesirable side effects.

When a person is dying and in pain, the value of a drug in relieving the pain far outweighs the risks involved. Concern about addiction in a dying patient is nonsense, and I believe that an increasing number of physicians recognize this and do everything in their power to control pain.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My company moved into a new building a few months ago, and ever since I find that I often get nauseous while at work. On the weekends I feel fine. I enjoy my work so I don't think it's all in my mind. Do you have any suggestions? — Ms. D.O., South Bend, Ind.

Dear Ms. O.: If a physiological or allergic cause for your discomfort can be ruled out, some thought should be given to the possibility of some form of environmental contamination. Indoor air pollutants have been known to make people more susceptible to colds, bronchitis, rashes, and dizzy spells.

Do any of your co-workers become ill while at work? If you are the only one, the possibility of environmental pollution decreases. If others share your discomfort, your company physician, if you have one, or someone else in a management capacity should be informed.

Of course, none of what I have suggested precludes the advisability of a complete examination by your own physician. Establishing the cause of an illness does not eliminate the need for treatment.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Will you please help settle an argument that came up at our bridge club? Does a person eat more or less when depressed? — Nancy, Towson, Md.

Dear Nancy: One of the classical symptoms of depression is loss of appetite. However, this is not a universal finding, and many people actually eat more and gain weight when they are depressed.

Dear Ms. A.S. (Boston, Mass.): I have heard of complications from people who weren't really well trained injecting the anti-smoking solution into the nose and ears. Before I went to the clinic, I would ask them where they were trained and then check it out. I can guarantee you that I have not trained anyone in the Boston area.

If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Physicist integrates diverse interests

By ZENIA CLEIGH
Copley News Service

It is a very unusual young astrophysicist from Berkeley, Calif., upon whom the Chicago-based MacArthur Foundation recently saw fit to bestow a cool $196,000, to do with what he wishes.

Richard A. Muller, 38, is one of the youngest members of the top-secret JASON study group, composed of 45 distinguished scientists from all over the country who meet during the summer to discuss national problems and sensitive issues of security.

He is also an opera buff, a blue-ribbon-winning amateur photographer, an enthusiastic backpacker and an ardent fan of two little daughters. With his wife Rosemary, an architect and structural engineer, he shares equally in child care.

Muller has detected — through studies of the cosmic background radiation of the universe — the fact that the Earth, the sun and the galaxy are speeding through space at a rate of 1 million miles an hour.

He is also a movie fan who thinks films are the great art form of this age and carries around with him a list of the best (including "Apocalypse Now," "Gunga Din," "Star Wars," and "Oklahoma") just to prove it.

In addition, with his wife and sister, Virginia, he owns the Inn Season, a Berkeley restaurant, which was born out of admiration for his wife's cooking and features $12-to-$15 dinners of "eclectic California cuisine." Guess who's the wine buyer in his spare time?

It is this ability to integrate diverse interests, both in physics and in life, which sets Muller apart, and led in 1978 to his winning the Alan T. Waterman Award of the National Science Foundation and the Texas Instruments Foundation Founder's Prize, both given to young scientists of promise.

Muller's scientific endeavors have ranged from astrophysics to particle physics, nuclear physics and cosmic-ray physics, as well as astronomy, archaeology and cosmology.

He invented the most sensitive method for doing radioisotope dating, a process which can extend the dating of artifacts from the current 30,000-year limit to a new range of 60,000-to-100,000 years, using a minimum of material. "Instead of using a whole woolly mammoth, you can use a clipping from a fingernail or a single tooth," he said.

He is in the process of automating a telescope to search for supernovas (huge, exploding stars) among 7,000 galaxies. He invented the "rubber mirror," a new kind of telescope which greatly reduces the atmospheric distortions of astronomical observations. And he was the first to disprove a scientific claim that gravity waves had been discovered. Muller proved it was a signal from a pulsar, instead.

In 1980, Muller jumped right from being a staff scientist at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory, where he still heads his own research group, to a full professorship of physics at the University of California at Berkeley, without ever serving an apprenticeship as a lecturer or assistant professor — a rare step.

Congenial and hard-working, self-described as "sensitive, creative, happy, loving," Muller is one of those people who is intense when he's working and relaxed when he's not. He knows how to enjoy life.

But he can also be a staunch opponent of "fuzzy thinking" in scientific circles, seeing his role as not only to do excellent research but to give other people feedback on their work. Muller confesses he has to remind himself not to get into arguments.

Said Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory physicist Terry Mast of Muller and his mentor, Nobel laureate physicist Luis Alvarez: "Both Rich and Luis take very seriously the task of science and the task of seeking truth. And where they don't find it or where they find it subverted or where they find people doing a poor job, they're very critical of it."

How does Muller maintain the ability to think about so many different things?

"I've just learned some of the truths," he said. "If you're going to worry about a number of things, worry about one at a time. Think deeply about it until you've made some progress. When you switch to the next, forget the first. Give it your full creative effort."

Muller is in his element at the 22-year-old JASON project, a group to which he was chosen 10 years ago at the age of 28, then the youngest member.

Muller likes to tell the story about the time a speaker to JASON made a reference to historian Barbara Tuchman's massive chronicle of the disastrous 14th century, "A Distant Mirror," assuming the scientists might not know the work.

"Yes, we read that," the speaker was told. "Well, but how many of you finished it?" the speaker asked.

About 10 of the 45 in the room raised their hands. Muller, of course, included.

"What I've discovered," Muller said, "is that the finer the physicist, almost without exception the broader the knowledge of life and culture. Physicists in JASON read more books than any other physicists."

Kwame Toure, ex-Carmichael, still waiting for the revolution

CONAKRY, Guinea (AP) — There are flecks of gray in his hair, and the Trinidadian lilt in his voice is more pronounced than it was when his call for "Black Power" made America sit up and listen in the 1960s.

The telephone in his modest house by the sea is out of order, so he can no longer answer it, saying: "Ready for the Revolution."

At 41, slapping mosquitoes on his front porch, scanning the evening sky for rain, Kwame Toure, the man they called Stokely Carmichael, is still waiting for the revolution, the one that will put the pieces and people of Africa back together again.

TOURE HAS lived in this West African nation since 1969, an official guest of President Sekou Toure, whose name he has adopted.

Kwame is from Kwame Nkrumah, the first president of Ghana who was also Sekou Toure's guest and Guinea's co-president from his overthrow in 1966 until his death ten years ago.

Toure was born in Trinidad and moved to the United States with his family at age 11. In the early 1960s, while in his 20s, he worked as a field organizer for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, and in 1966 became its national chairman.

As head of SNCC, Carmichael became a strident advocate of black militancy, and eventually was forced out as chairman in 1969. He has said he was "stupid and arrogant" in his methods during that period, especially in thinking that change could come overnight.

Toure said he left the United States because of police harassment. He chose Guinea so that he could spend time with Nkrumah and live in a country that was working for the cause of pan-Africanism.

Kwame Toure has two passports, Guinean and American. His former wife, the South African singer Miriam Makeba, has 21, he said. Miss Makeba maintains a residence in Conakry where she recently opened a disco called the "Zambezi."

UNLIKE SOME OF his fellow activists in the civil rights movement, the former SNCC chairman is not a born-again Christian, a politician, a businessman or, like Bobby Seale, an author of cookbooks.

An honors student from the Bronx High School of Science and a Howard University graduate in philosophy, Toure spends his time reading, studying and watching his 15-month-old son, Bokar Biro, grow.

During his 15 years in Guinea, a former French colony, he has tried to improve his French, of which he says he is not proud.

"I don't know what it is. I just have always had this block against French. I've never really felt comfortable speaking it."

Leo Camara, a neighbor in the government housing compound, stops by several evenings a week for a chat and a drink. He gently corrects his friend when the errors become too grating.

"Mon frere (brother)," Toure says, "I don't know whether it's worth it. Do you think there's any hope?"

Toure speaks English to his son and his brand of French to his Guinean wife, Marietou, and her brother and sisters, who live with them. He has never learned an African language.

TOURE USUALLY travels to the United States once a year to do organizing work with the Washington-based All-African People's Revolutionary Party. He described the party as a direct descendant of the West Indian pan-Africanist movements that began in the early part of the century and were nurtured by Nkrumah after Ghana's independence in 1957.

In the United States, Toure sees old friends from the movement days, like Washington Mayor Marion Barry, with whom he says he shares memories but not political philosophies.

He gives the impression of being saddened by those who have made peace with the system. He also implies that his American experience was an interlude in his journey back to Africa.

Africans in the United States — he won't call them black Americans — are often disappointed when they come to Africa to find their roots, Toure said, because they don't have the right perspective.

Asked about his continual use of the word "revolution" and the image of violence it can provoke, he paused, then said revolution could also be "a state of mind."

In Guinea the initials "PPR" appear under official signatures and on crumbling, colonial-era buildings. They stand for the French version of "Ready for the Revolution," a phrase with which Sekou Toure ends all his speeches — and used to answer the telephone.

THE REVOLUTION seems to mean the event that will finally unite Africa and all those of African descent.

Contrary to what might be expected of a man often thought to be an extreme leftist, Toure has little time for African leaders like Mengistu Haile Mariam of Ethiopia, Samora Machel of Mozambique and Eduardo Dos Santos of Angola, who have tied their countries to the Soviet Union and a socialism he says has nothing to do with Africa.

He acknowledged that Sekou Toure had also accepted Soviet aid after Guinea's brutal break with France in 1958 but said the head of state had always been "an African socialist, not a Marxist."

Troop movement threatens independence

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PRETORIA, South Africa — South African troops expanded their latest military campaign against guerrillas in southern Angola Wednesday in a move that could affect chances for a pre-independence cease-fire in Namibia.

Defense Ministry officials said South African forces in Namibia moved north across the border and into southern Angola in their first large-scale campaign in seven months after capturing key South-West Africa People's Organization documents in recent minor operations against the nationalist movement.

They reported 113 SWAPO fighters were killed in Tuesday's onslaught on a well-fortified SWAPO camp, bringing the movement's total death toll to 314 in the latest campaign. Fifteen South African soldiers were lost Tuesday when SWAPO guerrillas shot down a South African helicopter involved in a "direct assault on terrorist positions," officials said.

The South Africans captured the camp and destroyed much of the weaponry, including Soviet-made SAM 7 ground-to-air rockets and RPG 7 infantry rockets, used by the guerrillas during the battle, officials said.

In "Operation Super" last March, South Africa claimed to have killed more than 200 SWAPO fighters in Angola while losing only three of its own soldiers. Officials said Wednesday that SWAPO deaths over the last 12 months now total 1,629.

PLO prefers peace with Israel to destruction, official says

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — The Palestine Liberation Organization, once obsessed with destroying Israel, now wants to live in "peaceful coexistence" with the Jewish state, according to a top PLO official.

The peaceful and diplomatic-sounding tone offers a glimpse into a possible new course and image the PLO will try to project once tensions ease in Lebanon and it leaves west Beirut under a U.S.-negotiated settlement.

Hasan Abdul Rahman, the PLO's information director, Wednesday said his organization would be willing to "recognize and abide by" Israel's right to exist, provided the Israelis acknowledge the rights of Palestinians in return.

"The PLO is not advocating the destruction of Israel," he said during a breakfast meeting with a small group of reporters.

Despite the current violence in Lebanon, he said the PLO would be willing to accept U.N. Resolutions 242 and 348, which recognize establishment of a Jewish state.

"We are not against 242 and 348...but we feel they are insufficient," he said. "We will accept them if this is tied up with the other end of the equation," the rights of Palestinian refugees.

"It is not an academic position...this is the destiny of the Palestinian people," he said.

He called on the United States to take a stronger leadership role in the Middle East.

Agriculture Department forecasting record corn harvest

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

As the Agriculture Department forecast a record harvest of corn this year, administration officials opposed a plan in Congress to subsidize food exports, saying it could spark a trade war with Europe.

Meanwhile, economists found little reason to rejoice at a Commerce Department report Wednesday that retail sales rose slightly in July.

And a federal judge in Washington refused to approve the antitrust settlement proposing the breakup of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. until several major changes are made.

Analysts said the judge's proposed changes, which would among other things keep the giant utility from entering the electronic publishing field for at least seven years, would result in financially stronger local telephone companies.

The Agriculture Department said farmers are expected to harvest a record 8.32 billion bushels of corn this year, 1.4 percent larger than the previous high of 8.2 billion bushels produced in 1981.

Wednesday's announcement was the department's first official production estimate for corn and a number of other key 1982 crops.

Ron Gustafson of the department's Economic Research Service said another bumper crop could help encourage livestock feeding in the coming year, resulting in some increase in beef and pork supplies. But he also said many producers apparently have reduced herds or held back on expanding to pay off debts.

In addition, the huge harvest indicated by the surveys made as of Aug. 1 also could mean a further growth in U.S. grain stockpiles in the coming year and more downward price pressure on financially stressed farmers.

Although subsidies at a time of bumper crops would increase exports, thus helping farmers, Agriculture Deputy Under Secretary Alan Tracy told a joint hearing of the House Foreign Affairs and Agriculture Committees on Wednesday the administration opposes subsidies.

Tracy, commenting on a bill that would require subsidies for food exports or "buy down" interest rates four or five percentage points to provide favorable export credit, said subsidies could be matched by foreign competitors and undermine U.S. efforts to persuade Europe and Brazil to lift food subsidies.

"It could increase the possibility of an agricultural trade and credit war," Tracy said.

Sponsors say the bill would increase food exports and compensate for subsidies paid by other countries.

The United States opposes Common Market subsidies for agriculture and is campaigning against European Economic Community support for exports of wheat flour, pasta, canned fruit, raisins, poultry and sugar.

The Commerce Department said the nation's retail sales rose 1 percent in July after plunging 3.3 percent the previous month. In separate reports last week, the major retailers announced poor sales for July.

The July sales pace as reported by the Commerce Department still was relatively slow and gave economists little reason to proclaim recovery from the recession. Government and private economists alike have said the nation's best hope for economic recovery is through increased spending by U.S. consumers.

"If we don't get more significant improvement in August and September, it would be very bad news indeed," said Sandra Shaber, director of consumer economics for Chase Econometrics in Bala-Cynwyd, Pa.

U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene said the Jan. 8 settlement under which AT&T would give up its 22 Bell System companies was "plainly in the public interest" because it would relieve AT&T of any opportunity to use its control of local phone systems to protect its long-distance and equipment business. But he said he would order the Justice Department to resume its antitrust suit against AT&T unless both agreed to modifications of the settlement, including allowing the local companies to continue marketing telephone equipment and publishing the Yellow Pages advertising directory.

In other economic news,

The Senate Finance Committee approved legislation that would raise the federal government's borrowing authority by $147 billion. The measure would raise the limit on the national debt through fiscal 1983 from $1.143 trillion to $1.290 trillion. The House already has approved the measure.

—The industry journal Automotive News said model changeovers this week in assembly plants of the five major U.S. automakers will push car production down 8.7 percent from last week's level. It said carmakers will build an estimated 69,179 autos, down from last week's 75,756.

Committee divided on Clean Air Act

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — After three months of closed-door negotiations, a House committee considering changes in the Clean Air Act remains divided over portions of the measure.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee was to meet again today on proposed changes in the law, the third public session this week.

But early votes Wednesday indicated that supporters of an industry-backed bill did not have a solid majority. The committee, on a 21-20 vote, rejected the industry-backed plan for control of hazardous pollutants, adopting instead on a 22-20 vote an alternative supported by environmentalists.

That vote abruptly stopped the committee's meeting and prompted speculation that Clean Air Act amendments were dead for the year.

But Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., the committee's chairman, decided late Wednesday to continue the sessions, with some members of the panel saying a bill still could pass this year if industry and environmental lobbyists compromised.

"If the bill fails, the full blame falls with the environmentalists and the industry equally, and they will have done this country a great disservice," said Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okl.

But Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., leader of the panel's environmentalist faction, pledged a "war of attrition" through delaying tactics if necessary to stop weakening amendments proposed by industry lobbyists.

"I consider it a victory to have no bill passed at all rather than have the bill the administration is pushing," said Waxman, chairman of the panel's subcommittee on health and the environment.

Waxman also predicted the industry bill would fail.

"Realistically speaking, the likely result is that Clean Air will not emerge from the Congress this year," Waxman said.

The critical votes Wednesday came on a section dealing with hazardous air pollutants, chemicals suspected of causing cancer, birth defects and other major health problems.

The Environmental Protection Agency is studying 37 pollutants believed to be hazardous, but has taken no action to list them as such, which would trigger special controls.

Rep. James Florio, D-N.J., charged the agency with foot-dragging and proposed a four-year program that would require EPA to make decisions on whether the pollutants were hazardous.

Sante Fe benefits from Kuwait merger

By KAREN TUMULTY

News Service

ALHAMBRA, Calif. — For all the political controversy that Santa Fe International Corp. generated last year when it was acquired by Kuwait's government-owned oil company, the union of the two appears to be paying off for the Alhambra-based engineering and energy firm.

With the contracts for two huge Kuwaiti construction projects locked up, the backlog of Santa Fe International's C.F. Braun engineering subsidiary has tripled from last year, at a time when most companies in the industry are in a slump.

Santa Fe International's $2.5 billion acquisition by Kuwait Petroleum Corp. last December was the largest U.S. takeover ever by a Middle Eastern firm.

Santa Fe International has not been completely insulated from an industry-wide engineering downturn. It has lost several hundred jobs in the past year.

But the resources of its new owner, which ranks as the 14th-largest corporation based outside the United States, are giving Santa Fe a substantial cushion against temporary economic flux.

"We are prepared to accept some extra overhead costs, with a consequent reduction in profitability," Chairman E.L. Shannon wrote in a recent issue of an employee publication.

"We will bid jobs with less than normal profit, and perhaps some with no profit at all, in order to avoid idle plant facilities and to maintain a staff adequate for our anticipated future needs."

Since becoming private, Santa Fe International has declined to disclose figures on its sales volume and profitability. It does, however, release estimates of its backlog — construction and engineering jobs for which it has won contracts but on which work has not yet begun.

Engineering News Record, a trade publication, reports that Braun's backlog reached a record $5.4 billion at the end of June, ballooning by 200 percent from its year-earlier level for the largest percentage increase in the industry.

By comparison, 71 percent of the firms reporting to the magazine said their backlogs declined, with an average decrease of 12.6 percent. The backlog growth reported by the rest averaged only 10.1 percent.

The bulk of Santa Fe International's new engineering business is linked to two large contracts awarded recently by the Kuwaiti government. In April, it named Braun to head design and construction of the modernization of the Mina Abdulla refinery south of Kuwait City. Estimated to cost more than $2 billion, the four-year job, on which preliminary work has begun, is the largest single project ever undertaken by Santa Fe International and will employ as many as 8,000 construction workers.

In June, Braun was awarded a contract to design and build a petrochemical complex at Shaiba. The contract is about half the size of the refinery job, industry sources say.

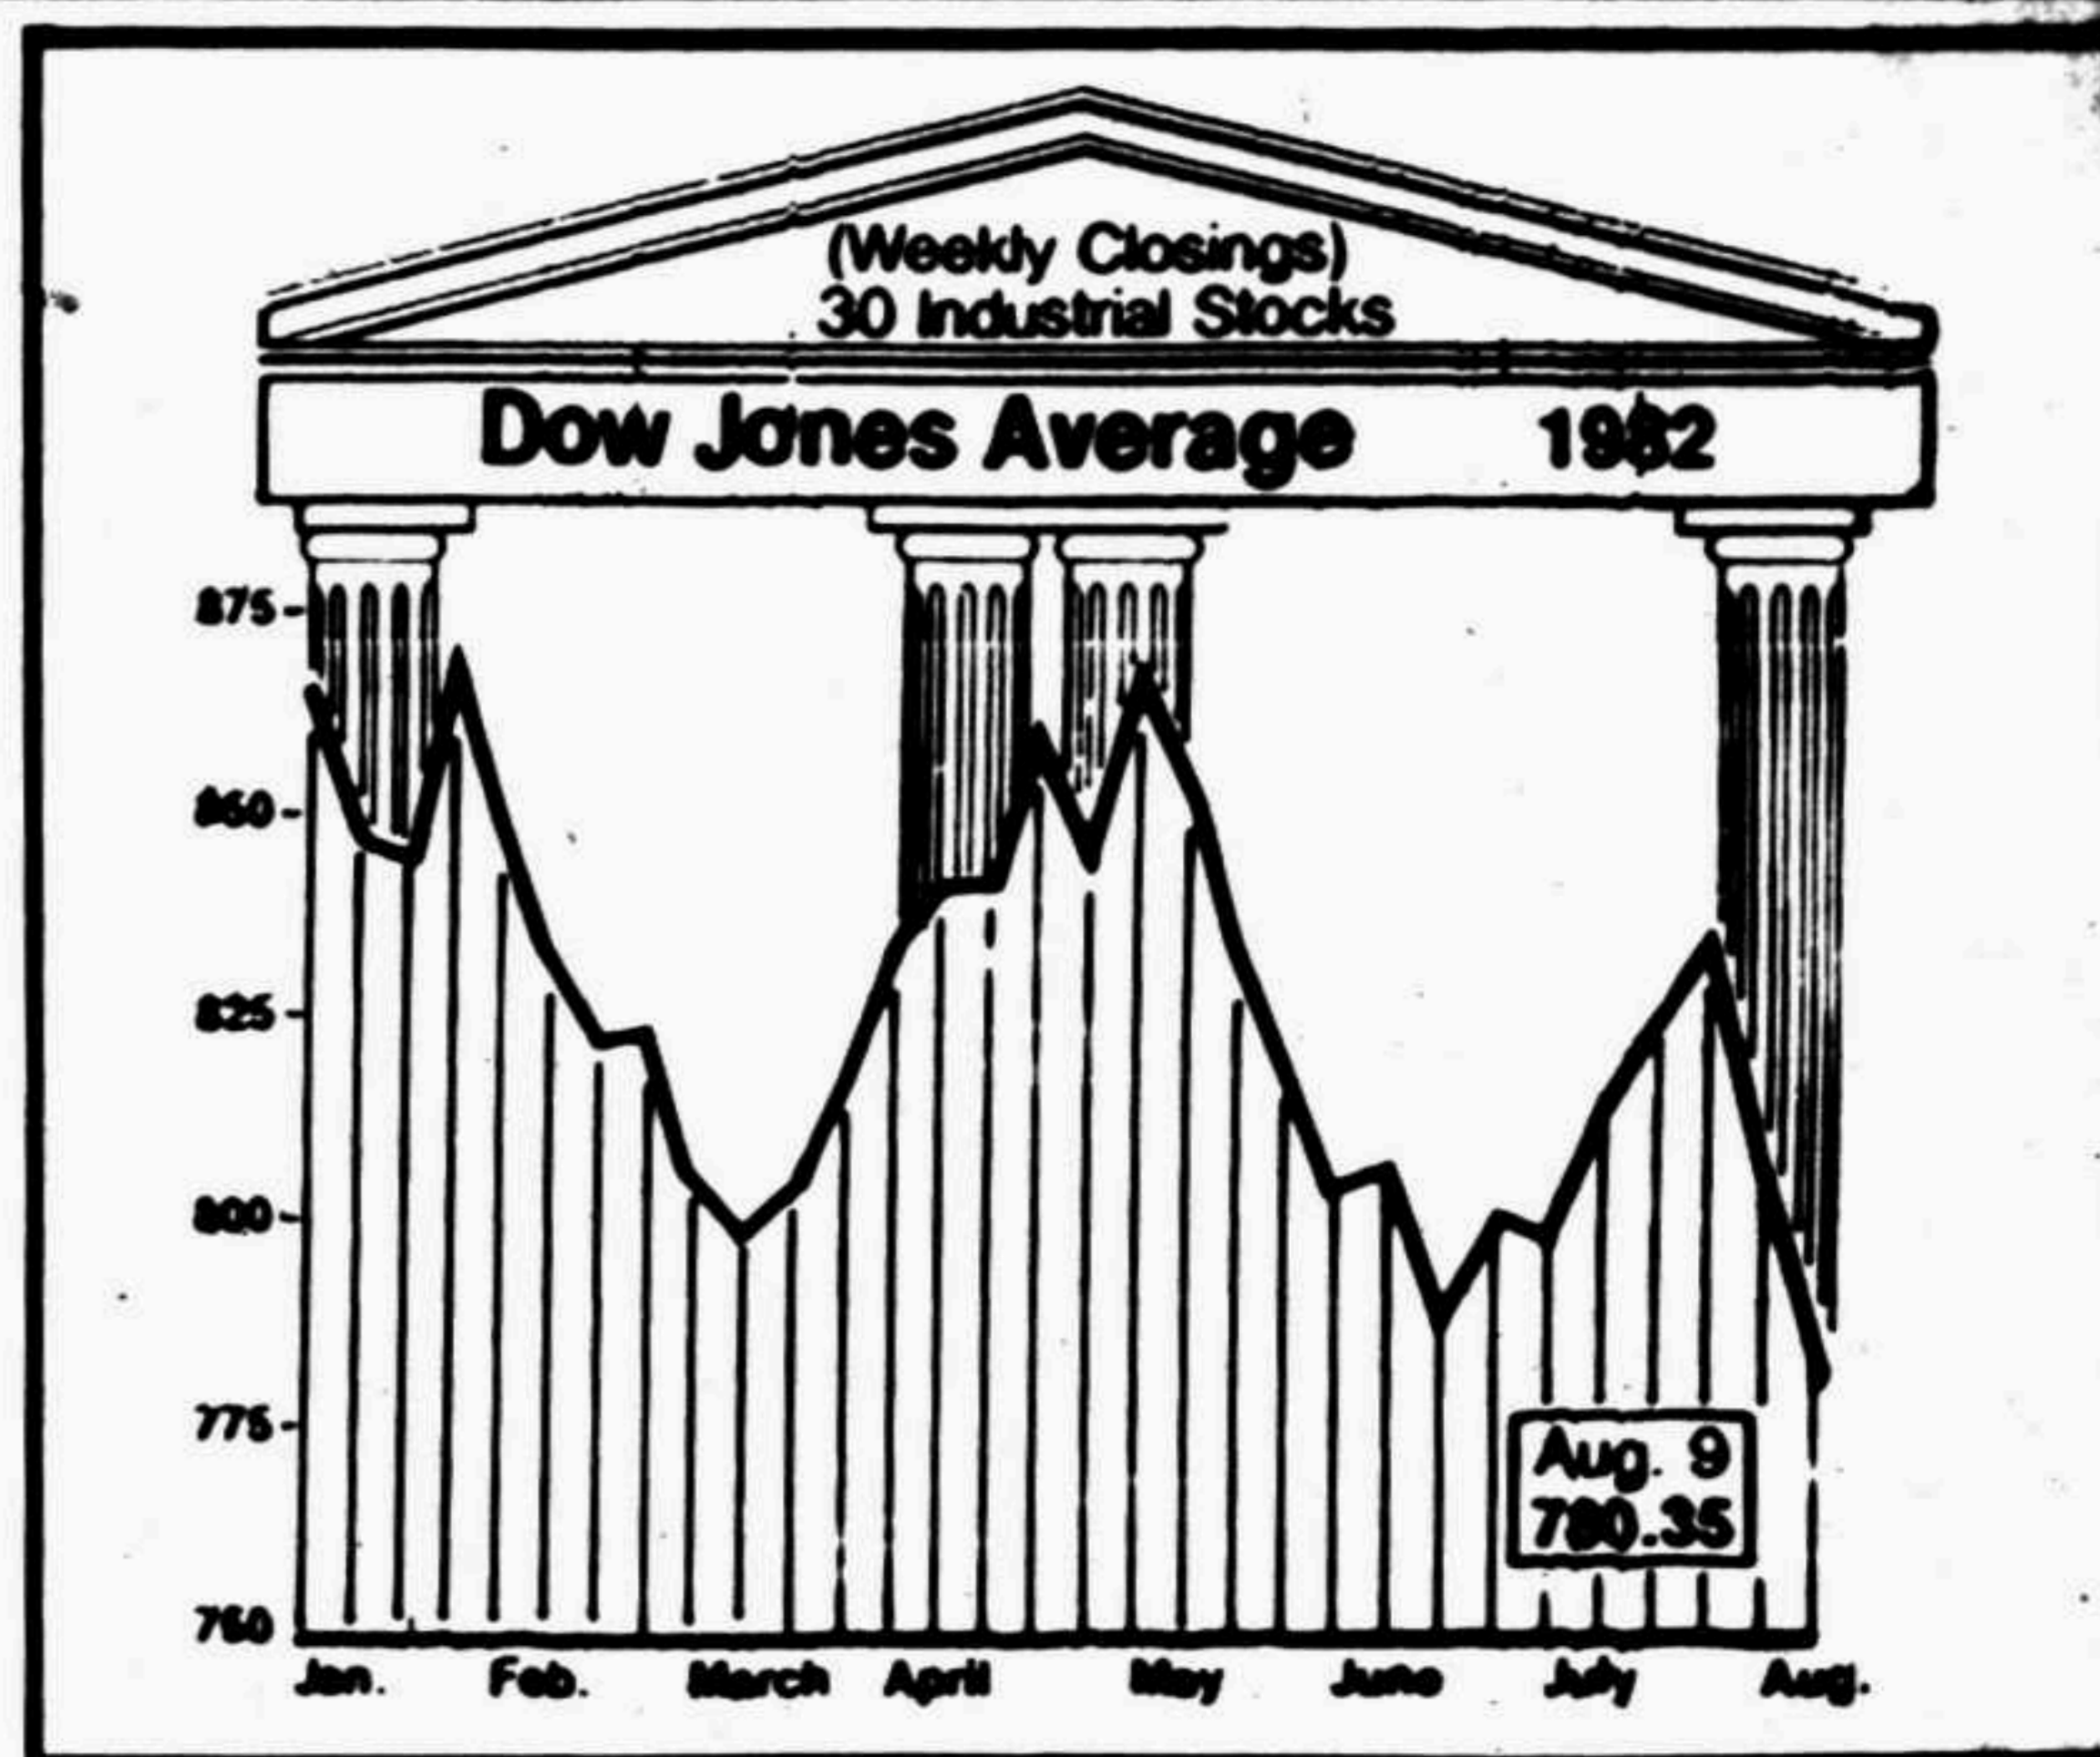

Santa Fe International President Gordon Ason says negotiations with the Kuwaitis since the merger have been "just as competitive as they were otherwise."

In fact, he adds, "sometimes it's a little more difficult (because) they know the outcome is we're going to work together."

Even with the new business, Santa Fe International has felt the downturn.

Anderson estimates that it lost between 600 and 800 jobs with the recent cancellations of Exxon Corp.'s and Tosco Corp.'s Colony Oil Shale Project in Colorado and a Tennessee Valley Authority project to build facilities for a nuclear power plant in Hartselle, Tenn.

It has scrambled to find jobs for those displaced, and Anderson estimates that engineering employment is down by only 250 from its peak earlier this year. Companywide employment is up slightly, to 15,233 at the end of June, compared with 15,167 at the beginning of the year. Anderson says some of the slack is being taken up by the Kuwaiti government itself.

EEC calls for lifting sanctions

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post
News Service

BRUSSELS, Belgium (DPA) — The European Economic Community has prepared a note calling for the U.S. government to lift its sanctions on the natural gas pipeline deal between Western Europe and the Soviet Union.

The embargo was intended to force an easing of the martial-law restrictions imposed last Dec. 13 in Poland. The Reagan administration contends that the Soviet Union was behind the Polish crackdown.

The seven-point note, to be delivered Thursday, says that the U.S. embargo contradicts international law and in some instances also U.S. law.

The Common Market countries contend that the U.S. sanctions affected a whole series of business activities while merely delaying construction of the Soviet natural gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe.

It is, however, improbable that the U.S. embargo would delay the actual delivery of the gas, scheduled for 1984, the note said.

The embargo covers U.S.-made equipment and American-licensed technology needed for the 3,600-mile pipeline. The United States opposes the pipeline, saying it would make Western Europe dependent on Soviet energy supplies and provide the Soviet Union with much-needed hard currency.

The pipeline could be completed with Soviet technology and production capacity, the note said. It added that this would even result in the Soviet Union's increasing its capacity and accelerating its development in the turbine and compressor industry, making it more independent of Western suppliers.

The note says that Soviet gas would help conserve Western Europe's own sources of energy, but would not create any dangerous dependence on Soviet fuel.

Lubbock bank merger voted down

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Stockholders of Lubbock's First National Bank have rejected a proposed merger with Mercantile Texas Corp., a bank holding company in Dallas.

The merger required a two-thirds vote by all the stockholders, but the vote to approve was only 62 percent — about 5 percent short. Mercantile Texas has banks in Abilene, Austin, Corpus Christi, El Paso, Houston, San Antonio and Waco.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Highland Lakes National Bank in Kingsland is asking permission to convert to a state bank.

The Texas Department of Banking said Wednesday the bank would have capital of $1 million, surplus of $2 million and reserves of $1.8 million.

The name would be changed to Highland Lakes Bank. The state agency has not set a hearing date on the request.

Judge requires changes in settlement

By PENNY PAGANO
News Service

WASHINGTON — A federal judge said Wednesday that major changes must be made in the Department of Justice's proposed antitrust settlement with American Telephone & Telegraph Co. before he will approve the plan to reorganize the giant telecommunications company.

U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene concluded that the overall plan for AT&T to divest itself of 22 local telephone companies is "plainly in the public interest" but said the agreement must be revised to place additional restrictions on the company.

The changes that Greene ordered, although technical in nature, would enhance the financial strength of local telephone companies spun off by AT&T, thereby tending to hold down local rates. Consumer groups and state regulatory officials had voiced fear that such rates would rise sharply as a result of the settlement.

Greene, unwayed by Department of Justice arguments that he should simply accept or reject the proposed consent decree on its face, set forth his conditions for accepting the plan in a 178-page opinion that reviewed the complex and historic agreement in detail.

Greene said that, for at least the next seven years, AT&T must be barred from entering the emerging field of electronic publishing. Such a restriction had been sought by newspapers and other companies, many of which eventually hope to supply information to consumers via video screens and contend that AT&T would have unfair competitive advantages in such ventures.

In addition, the judge said the seven new Bell operating companies that are to be formed from the divestiture must be allowed to market telephone equipment and to offer printed Yellow Pages advertising directories.

Both these functions were to have been retained by AT&T in the proposed settlement. The change Greene urged would increase potential revenues for the new companies, thereby improving their economic position.

Greene gave the Department of Justice and AT&T 15 days to make the modifications.

"If a modified decree is submitted, the court will promptly approve it as being in the public interest, and the

AT&T action will be dismissed," the judge said.

Greene was the presiding judge at the antitrust trial that was halted when AT&T and the Department of Justice agreed to the proposed settlement. Under federal law, Greene has authority to review the settlement, and he said Wednesday that he would order the trial resumed if his terms were not accepted.

"If the parties do not agree to incorporate the modifications, the court will decline to approve the proposed decree; the 1956 consent decree in the Western Electric action will remain in effect, and the AT&T trial will resume at a date to be set by the court," Greene said.

The 1956 consent decree was an antitrust settlement that barred AT&T from entering new and unregulated telecommunications fields, such as data processing. AT&T had sought to have the 1956 ban lifted and the Department of Justice had agreed to that in the January settlement.

AT&T Chairman Charles L. Brown issued a brief statement saying he was pleased that the court had approved the framework of the agreement. He said the company would meet immediately with the Department of Justice.

As for the modifications, an AT&T spokesman said the judge's proposals "appeared to be intended to relieve restrictions on the Bell operating companies which weren't our idea in the first place."

A statement issued by the Department of Justice said the agency also was pleased that Greene had accepted "the basic thrust" of the proposed consent decree and said the suggested modifications "are under consideration."

In San Francisco, where he was attending an American Bar Association meeting, William F. Baxter, the assistant attorney general for the antitrust division, was asked by reporters whether there was a danger that the settlement might collapse as a result of the judge's opinion.

"It has distinct possibilities of becoming unglued," Baxter said, "but until I've seen the judge's order I have no idea whether that's a realistic possibility or not."

On Capitol Hill, Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colo., chairman of a House subcommittee on telecommunications, consumer protection and finance, called Greene's opinion "a superb decision" and a victory for consumers because it will allow local operating companies to increase their revenues and assure consumers lower local rates.

Wirth was the chief sponsor of legislation in the House to strengthen the consent decree. He halted his legislative efforts on July 20, blaming unprecedented lobbying by AT&T for killing the bill's prospects.

The judge's proposed modification on the electronic publishing issue was almost identical to a provision in Wirth's bill that had been strongly supported by the newspaper industry.

In his opinion, the judge said that, because the electronic publishing industry "is still in its infancy," any anti-competitive behavior by AT&T could crush competitors who lease transmission lines from the company.

"If AT&T entered this market, the combination of its financial, technological, manufacturing and marketing resources would dwarf any efforts of its competitors," Greene held.

He added that "it is not at all conceivable that electronic publishing, with its speed and convenience, will eventually overshadow the more traditional news media, and that a single electronic publisher would acquire substantial control over the provision of news in large parts of the United States."

As a result, the judge said restrictions barring AT&T from the field should remain in effect "for the period

Acceptance of steel pact urged

WASHINGTON (AP) —

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the U.S. steel industry should accept the European Economic Community-U.S. pact limiting steel imports just as Common Market officials called for the Reagan administration to pressure the steelmakers.

"I think it is in the interest of the U.S. industry to settle the overall matter with the arrangement we made with the EC," Baldrige Wednesday told legislators representing steel producing states.

Sources in Brussels, Belgium who were not identified said the agreement to curb imports of 11 European Economic Community steel products from Oct. 1 through the end of 1985 also was a bitter pill to swallow for European officials.

EEC External Relations Commissioner Wilhelm Haferkamp made similar comments Tuesday after the Commerce Department cited steelmakers from six European countries for selling their products in the United States at illegally low prices. That practice is called dumping.

The steel pact, forged last week between the administration and Common Market officials, would reduce steel imports from Europe to 5.754 percent of the U.S. market. This year EEC steel imports have represented 6.4 percent of the U.S. market.

In exchange, domestic steel producers would be required to withdraw complaints against European steel imports that have resulted in the two preliminary Commerce Department rulings against the European producers.

Basin had good year in '81

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association released its final tally of 1981 oil and gas production statistics for the Permian Basin at a press conference Wednesday, and as expected, most of the news was good as the Basin enjoyed a banner year.

More wildcat and development wells were drilled than in 1980, but oil production total was less — 568 million barrels of oil in '81 versus 605 million in 1980. Gas production increased slightly, however, to 2.592 billion MCF compared to 2.554 billion MCF the previous year.

For Midland County, that translated to 7.3 million barrels of oil and 57,675,659 MCF of natural gas, giving the county a ranking of 29th among all Texas counties.

Area oil operators and drilling contractors drilled 5,662 wells in the 48 counties that make up the Texas portion of the Permian Basin, a substantial increase from the 4,753 holes drilled in 1980. There were 625 wildcats in the total, up from 478 drilled a year earlier.

In Midland County, 89 wells were drilled in 1981, including two wildcats and six dry holes, bringing the total number of producing wells as of April 1, 1982, to 1,499.

There were more oil wells, more gas wells, and more dry holes recorded in 1981 than in the previous year, according to data compiled by the PBPA, an energy industry group based in Midland.

As a result of all that drilling activity, which at times during the year was at a fever pitch, the number of producing wells in the Permian Basin at April 1, 1982, was 77,947, up from 70,763 wells at the same date a year earlier.

Dollar values of payments made in 1981 to royalty owners and to the state of Texas for production taxes rose also, as the price of a barrel of oil climbed during the year. Oil produced in the Basin sold for $19.7 billion while gas sales brought in $4.48 billion to the local economy.

Searching for energy was an increasingly more expensive proposition for Permian Basin operators as well, topping $1.77 billion for drilling expenditures alone, up from $1.2 billion in 1980.

Dry hole expenses, in the Texas portion of the Basin alone, rose from an estimated $227 million to $303 million in the 12-month period, the PBPA study said.

Payroll costs escalated from $811 million to $1.2 billion as the numbers of workers employed increased from an average of 41,062 in 1980 to 53,478 in 1981, according to the Texas Employment Commission.

The statistics were compiled by the PBPA from county-by-county figures prepared by the Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association of Dallas, the TEC, the Texas Railroad Commission and other industry sources.

Government groups appear to be defending business more

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

AFTON, OKLA. — There appears to be a new trend among governmental associations to defend business interests more vigorously than in the past.

In most cases, organizations such as the National Governors' Association (NGA) no longer automatically look upon business as an adversary of government, as they so often seemed to do in the 1970's.

There is now a definite interest in helping industry and business; this new attitude was emphasized here at the annual conference of the NGA as the governors searched for ways in which they could encourage local industries.

A prime example of this is Washington Gov. John Spellman's drive to protect the Export-Import bank, which manufacturers engaged in overseas trade view as helpful in preserving jobs in the face of rising unemployment. Exports account for 20 percent of total U.S. goods produced and support one out of seven jobs in the country.

Spellman won a commitment from the governors to oppose the Reagan administration's proposal to cut the Export-Import Bank's borrowing authority from $4.4 billion to $3.7 billion in fiscal 1983.

Spellman, a Republican, warned the governors that unless they actively support the move to keep the funding at its current level, the administration may "kill trade and put people out of jobs all over the country."

Other governors have also been active in trying to help the business community in a variety of ways.

California Democrat Jerry Brown has been in the forefront of those urging a new push for high technology in education. Others have been concerned about the growing threat of protectionism in this country, while still others are promoting bills in Congress designed to help the U.S. compete in the global market place for services and goods in fields as varied as construction, transportation, insurance and communications.

It is believed that much U.S. trade expansion in the future will be through service industries. Seven out of every ten jobs in the U.S. are in the service sector, and 67 percent of the Gross National Product is generated by services.

The U.S. is the world's largest trader in services. America's surplus in trade services was $36 billion in 1980 and the total service export of $80 billion was more than all exported food and consumer goods and almost two-thirds of all capital equipment exported.

The governors urged that the federal government remove impediments to expanded trade efforts through such steps as clarifying provisions in the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act which penalize firms found guilty of paying bribes overseas. Studies have suggested that paying bribes, or unrecorded service fees, may be necessary for U.S. firms, particularly small ones, to do business in countries where such practices are common.

The Senate recently passed a bill which provides clearer definitions of what constitutes proper practices, allowing firms more leeway. The measure is now pending in a House committee.

The governors also adopted a statement expressing concern about the uncertainty surrounding current federal anti-trust policies. Pending trading company legislation would exempt certain cooperative export ventures from current anti-trust definitions.

The governors approved a resolution calling on the administration to persuade those countries which have no trade agreements with the U.S. to stop flooding American markets with foreign textiles.

The governors' interest in helping the business community even extended to suggesting ways to improve youth training for future jobs. They said they fear the major roadblock to "technological supremacy" is the lack of middle and high school education in math, science and computer fields.

Iowa Gov. Robert Ray reported that the number of public high school students enrolled in science classes in U.S. high schools fell from 60 to 48 percent in 1977. He said the average number of days U.S. students attend school per year is 161, at six hours per day. This compares with a 240-day school year of 8 hours a day in the Soviet Union, Communist China, East Germany and Japan.

"We can't deal with this situation by doing a few flashy things in our schools," said North Carolina Gov. James Hunt. "We have to have a more lasting solution and the only significant improvement will be made when state and local governments take a leading role."

Tax-exempt mutual funds, trusts enjoying a boom of sorts

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the midst of bear markets for many other types of investments, mutual funds and trusts that specialize in tax-exempt securities are enjoying a boom of sorts.

Funds investing in long-term municipal bonds hold a wide lead in the rankings of mutual-fund performance this year. And sales of tax-free unit trusts are increasing rapidly.

According to the Wiesenberger Investment Companies Service, which keeps tabs on more than 500 mutual funds, the net asset value of the average municipal bond fund rose 6 percent in the first half of 1982.

That contrasted with a 6.1 percent aggregate drop for all types of funds investing in long-term securities.

The Investment Company Institute reports assets of better than $4 billion in these funds, with an additional $5 billion or so in tax-exempt money funds.

At the same time, Standard & Poor's Corp.'s weekly letter The Outlook noted that sales of municipal-bond unit trusts totaled $5 billion in the first six months of the year, coming close to the record total for a full year of $5.4 billion in 1981.

There are some important differences between mutual funds and unit trusts. But both employ the same general principles to package investments in sizes appealing to the small investor.

Tax-free unit trusts, offered by brokerage firms and municipal bond houses, are fixed portfolios of perhaps 20 to 30 bonds, which are sold to investors in minimum units as small as $1,000.

The life of a trust extends only until the bonds in its portfolio mature. A mutual fund, by contrast, is a continuous operation run by managers who may sell bonds from the original portfolio and buy new ones.

The funds have benefited this year from a rally in the depressed municipal-bond market. As tax-free bond prices have risen, their yields have fallen from above 13 percent on average last winter, to about 11 1/2 percent recently.

But those yields are still attractive, analysts at The Outlook pointed out. An investor in the 50 percent federal tax bracket would have to find a 23 1/2 percent yield on a taxable bond to match 11 1/2 percent tax-free.

Of course, there are no quality taxable bonds in this country paying anything close to 23 1/2 percent. Thirty-year Treasury bills yielded about 13 1/2 percent as of early this week.

As S&P appraises them, tax-free unit trusts have some other noteworthy attributes. They offer a degree of diversification that would take upwards of $50,000 to achieve for a direct purchaser of municipal bonds. A unit-trust buyer does not have to worry about safeguarding individual bonds or clipping coupons.

But the firm also points out that unit trusts also generally carry a sales charge of up to 4.5 percent, while mutual funds charge a management fee of a fraction of 1 percent per year.

Any investment in a long-term bond portfolio is likely to decline in periods of rising interest rates. In addition, S&P said, anyone considering buying a tax-free unit trust should study the provisions made for owners who want to sell before maturity.

"Although sponsors of the trusts generally state their intentions to maintain a market in the units, they also make clear that they are under no obligation to do so," the firm said.

Study says wage concessions likely to have spillover effect

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Highly publicized wage concessions in some unionized industries are unlikely to have "spillover effects" across the economy or reshape how most wages are set, according to an independent study.

"By themselves, the concessions will have only a small effect on movements in aggregate wages in 1982 since a relatively small fraction of the work force is directly involved," said Daniel J.B. Mitchell, an industrial relations expert at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Mitchell's analysis of the collective bargaining atmosphere — and its implications for future labor-management relations — was released Wednesday by the Brookings Institution, a liberal-oriented think tank headquartered here.

Mitchell, a member of the wage-price board during the Nixon administration, concluded that dramatic wage concessions made by workers in auto and trucking represented a union response to severely depressed conditions in those two industries.

The wave of concession bargaining in many industries, including meat-packing, newspaper publishing, rubber and machinery, has led some economists to predict an imminent change in the way wages are set.

But Mitchell noted that while much media attention focused on wage concessions by such powerful unions as the Teamsters and United Auto Workers, "... similar episodes had occurred in the past, and these experiences suggest that permanent and fundamental changes in wage determination processes are unlikely to occur in the absence of external intervention."

He said the political prospects for direct government intervention in the form of wage and price controls "are nil," and said there is no evidence that such guidelines would be desirable.

Nor is there any evidence, Mitchell said, that unions are prepared to relinquish long-term contracts with cost-of-living escalators, which legally bind a company to paying certain wages.

Mitchell said that despite the concession bargaining in many industries, he saw no indication of any long-term wage-setting changes that would make wages more responsive to overall economic conditions.

He suggested the economic give-backs contained in the auto and trucking industry settlements of 1982 were more a reaction to business conditions in those industries than to the recession generally.

There have been recent indications that unions are resisting pressure by management for wage concessions.

The United Steelworkers union, for instance, rejected last week demands by the steel industry for a renegotiated contract agreement that would have saved beleaguered producers millions of dollars.

And the International Association of Machinists threatened a strike before accepting wage concessions sought by USAir, which netted $20 million in the second quarter.

Mitchell said he found no evidence that wage concessions affecting union workers were spreading to the three-fourths of the American labor force which is unorganized.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics had reported recently that in the first six months of this year, some 1.9 million workers covered by major collective bargaining settlements got first-year raises averaging only 3 percent, compared to 7.7 percent first-year increases negotiated during the same period in 1981.

But the agency also noted that nearly three-fifths of the union members surveyed work in such industries as auto manufacturing and trucking.

Drawing a parallel with the bargaining climate that existed in the mid-1950s, just after the Korean War, Mitchell said many workers accepted pay cuts and strikes occurred infrequently.

He said previous incidences of concessionary bargaining "have usually occurred during a period of economic slack and a threat to job security."

But he also said that the main lesson from the past episodes of union concessions is "that the dramatic changes are largely transitory."

Bob Hope to to keep swap meet hagglers happy

By JACK SEARLES
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — To let you know what kind of "swap meet" Brian Lovig is putting on in Reno this month, Bob Hope will be there to tell jokes and keep the people from getting too caught up in their hagglng.

Also on hand will be supply-side economist Arthur Laffer. Since those attending the Sales, Trade and Purchase International — Lovig describes it as a "swap meet for the elite" — will be fairly evenly divided between buyers and sellers, it's hard to say whether Laffer's talk will be aimed at those who supply the goods or those who supply the cash.

Lovig, a 31-year-old Canadian, describes himself as a "spinner" because, as he puts it, "I keep going round and round. I've bought and sold more than 500 properties," he says. "But this year, I found it extremely difficult to make a deal. The normal investor is hiding inside his house, waiting to see what's going to happen to the economy."

To bring people out of the house, so to speak, Lovig will stage his super swap meet Aug. 19 and 20 at the MGM Grand Reno. And he claims he's come up with an original idea.

For one thing, the admission price is $5,000, but this is no marketplace for plastic dishes or electric shavers that don't work. And you get free room and board at the MGM Grand.

Thus far, Lovig says he's sold 160 tickets to "delegates" from the United States and Canada and from as far away as Hong Kong and Saudi Arabia. That puts him over his original goal of 100.

"Most of what's offered will be large land tracts, office buildings, hotels and shopping centers, but there also will be oil properties, jet airplanes and ships," Lovig says. "I estimate the total value of everything that will be for sale at somewhere between $6 billion and $10 billion."

Among the items to be offered are a Reno hotel-casino worth an estimated $40 million, a ski mountain in British Columbia, various jet aircraft, a miniresort in the Caribbean, hotels and ranches.

"One fellow is going to try to sell two manufacturing companies," Lovig reports. "I can't tell you the names, but a financial institution and a life insurance company will be available too."

G. Allen Kingston, Western Regional manager of Tecon Realty Corp., the real estate development arm of the Murchison interests of Dallas, confirms that he'll attend.

"I'll be watching to see what the market is for various kinds of properties around the country," Kingston says. "I won't be offering any of our holdings for sale, but this may be a good chance to look over proposals from people who have property for sale. The high cost of admission serves as a qualifier. You know somebody probably has what he says he has when he's paid $5,000 to walk through the door."

Lovig's swap meet will be conducted like a weekend swap meet. Developers and others having things to sell will set up shop at various points around the hotel ballroom, displaying pictures and descriptions of the wares.

While Lovig doesn't expect too many deals to be closed during the event, he's confident a number of transactions will be "started" in Reno.

Old tickets worth big bucks

DALLAS (AP) — American Airlines officials say their carrier honored almost 37,000 Braniff tickets with a face value of $5 million after Braniff filed for bankruptcy protection in May.

American collected only about $600,000 for the tickets, American spokesman Paul Haney said Wednesday.

He said American honored 21,210 tickets that Braniff had sold directly to the public. American received no compensation for those tickets.

Haney said American honored 15,589 Braniff tickets that had been issued by travel agents. American received 25 percent of the face value of those tickets from an airline industry-funded default protection plan.

Haney said the Braniff tickets accounted for about 63 million revenue passenger miles — about 2 percent of the revenue passenger miles flown by American from May 12 to June 30.

BOR reports water power production

Water plunging through penstocks and turbines at Bureau of Reclamation hydroelectric plants produced a record 47 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity in 1981, sufficient to meet the combined residential needs of Chicago, Dallas, Fort Worth, Boston, and Washington, D.C.

"It would have taken 85 million barrels of oil, or 23 million tons of coal, or 509 billion cubic feet of natural gas to produce that amount of electricity," Commissioner of Reclamation Robert N. Broadbent said.

The agency produced 1.3 billion kilowatt-hours more electricity in 1981 than it produced in 1980. The 1981 record accounted for more than 20 percent of the hydro-power produced in the 17 Western States and about 15 percent of the Nation's total hydropower production.

"While providing water for cities and farms is Reclamation's principal responsibility, the byproduct of electricity is truly a significant contribution to the Nation's energy needs. Alone, Reclamation produced more than 2 percent of the country's electricity in 1981, making us one of the largest single hydro-power producers in the United States," Broadbent said.

Most of the electricity is generated by 50 hydroelectric plants at Bureau dams across the West. The plants have a total installed capacity of 12.3 million kilowatts, which was augmented by the 546,750-kilowatt Bureau share of capacity from the Navajo Steam Plant near Page, Arizona.

Is track TV's answer to '80s?

By LARRY SIDONS
AP Sports Writer

In the 1960s, it was golf. Tennis took over in the 1970s. And now, NBC appears to be putting its money on track and field as the television sport of the 1980s.

On Wednesday, the network announced a multimillion-dollar deal to telecast next summer's First World Championships of Track and Field from Helsinki, Finland.

Now, sprinters, hurdlers, shot putters and the like regularly appear on the home screen. Track and field, perhaps the oldest sport of them all, long has been a staple of the network anthology shows.

But the production NBC plans for Helsinki '83 is something else.

According to Arthur A. Watson, president of NBC Sports, coverage will include at least 12 hours of live and taped programming from the championships, scheduled for next Aug. 7-14. Aside from the Olympics, that would be the biggest commitment ever by a U.S. network to a single track meet.

"We'll probably have two hours the opening day, one hour each day during the week and about six hours the final weekend," Watson said.

The midweek shows will likely be at night, after local newscasts, at 11:30 p.m. on the East Coast. The weekend shows could start in late morning Eastern Time and run until midafternoon, when baseball would pick up on the network.

If that sounds suspiciously like a certain network's coverage of the Wimbledon tennis tournament, there's a good reason.

"We have been noted for building new blocks," said Watson. "We did it with 'Breakfast at Wimbledon,' and the public interest in the American Conference of the National Football League."

"Track at the exceptional level at which it will be competed in Helsinki presents a giant opportunity for American television. Look at the interest the World Cup (of soccer) generated. This event is along the same lines. And it should be bigger than the World Cup in the United States, since track is more established here than soccer."

The championships, sponsored by the International Amateur Athletic Federation, will feature an estimated 1,300 athletes from 124 nations. Most of the competitors will be required to meet rigid qualifying standards.

although each IAAF member nation is entitled to send one male and one female athlete regardless of qualifying marks. No nation may enter more than three athletes in one event.

The chance to bring a meet featuring nothing but the world's best track-and-field athletes to American sports fans is a journalistic coup. But NBC must also be thinking about the size of the potential audience and the advertising dollars it can reap. Watson appeared to be certain that the size of the harvest will be substantial.

Asked how much the exclusive U.S. TV rights to the meet had cost NBC, Watson would say only "Well above a million dollars."

As of noon Wednesday, when the announcement was formally made at a news conference in a west side Manhattan steak house, NBC had made no contact with potential sponsors for the event, Watson added.

"But," he continued, "in a sports event of this magnitude, you get the property first, then go out and sell it."

NBC is viewing the World Championships as its entrance into the world of major track-and-field events, with an eye toward future telecasts.

"We recognize the potential," said Watson.

This is proving to be a bad weekend for boxing on television. All three networks had major bouts scheduled for Saturday or Sunday, and all of the fights originally slated were called off.

ABC was to have shown the Trevor Berbick-Renaldo Snipes heavyweight bout Saturday. On CBS Saturday, Tim Witherspoon was to have fought James "Quick" Tillis in another heavyweight battle. Both were to have been held in Cleveland, but Berbick and Witherspoon pulled out of the fights and were suspended by the Cleveland Boxing Commission.

CBS will show a taped replay of the Dwight Braxton-Matthew Saad Muhammad World Boxing Council light heavyweight championship match from last weekend, beginning at 4:30 p.m. EDT.

And NBC, which started Bobby Czyz on his climb as boxing's matinee idol on its "Tomorrow's Champions" series, had to scurry for Sunday programming when Czyz was hurt and forced to miss his meeting with Ernie Singletary. Instead, Singletary will fight middleweight James "Hard Rock" Green, beginning at 4 p.m. EDT.

Bear Bryant plans to enjoy season

By HOYT HARWELL
Associated Press Writer

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Bear Bryant plans to enjoy his 25th season as the Alabama football coach, and what he enjoys most is winning.

With 54 lettermen, including virtually the entire offense, returning from the 1981 team that went 9-1-1, finished seventh in the nation and gave Bryant his record 315th coaching victory, the 68-year-old coach looks to have a happy season.

The schedule shouldn't hurt, with Georgia Tech, Vanderbilt, Arkansas State and Cincinnati thrown in among traditionally stronger teams such as Penn State, Louisiana State, Mississippi State, Tennessee and Auburn.

"I know I'm in the twilight of my career — I hope I'm here a long time — and near the end of my days as a field coach, but I'm sure not ready to quit now," Bryant said.

"I'll enjoy it, if the players do as well as I think they can and conduct themselves like they are expected to."

IT'S UNCERTAIN how long Bryant will stay as coach. A law aimed at exempting him from the state's mandatory retirement age of 70 was struck down by a Montgomery County circuit judge last month. The head of the state Retirement System, however, says the university can get around the age law by paying Bryant from alumni contributions rather than state funds. And Bryant himself says that, if the school wants him to stay past his 70th birthday, he'll coach for free.

Bryant had discipline problems with a few players last season, but he said that got more attention than usual because of his pursuit of Amos Alonzo Stagg's winning record, a mark he broke when Alabama defeated Auburn in the season finale. He begins the season with 315 victories.

Bryant plans to keep a firm hand on things this fall.

"I think the squad has real enosis," he said. "We can't have two standards, one set for those who are dedicated and another for those who aren't."

Bryant, who directed the Crimson Tide to college football's most successful decade in the 1970s after putting in the washbone offense, said he plans to intersperse the formation in 1982.

That's primarily because of four players — quarterback Walter Lewis, and exceptional runner and passer, speedy flankers Jesse Bendorss and Joey Jones, and running back Linnie Patrick, described by Bryant as "the most talented runner, at times, I've ever been around."

At other times Patrick has been in Bryant's doghouse for failing to meet the coach's training demands, but he could be devastating from the deep spot in the I.

"If HE wants to be one of the group, play like them and act like them, he'll help us," Bryant said. "We're not going to have any discipline problems or they will be somewhere else."

Only tight end Bart Krout graduated from the offense and Bryant has people standing in line to compete for that spot.

He also has to replace three key people on defense — backs Jim Bob Harris and Benny Ferrin, and middle guard Warren Lyles. Lyles' spot, Bryant said, "is the biggest question mark on our team."

The Tide opens against Georgia Tech, which upset Alabama last season. Mississippi, Vanderbilt and Arkansas State, but Bryant said he would rather be opening against Missouri, Southern California, Nebraska and Washington, all on the road, as it did in 1978.

"We came back 3-1 but by then we had a football team," he said. That team finished 11-1, defeating Penn State for the national championship, one of five Alabama has captured since Bryant returned to his alma mater in 1958.

That title, as always at Alabama, is the goal this time. In any case, the Tide is a strong bet to go to its 24th consecutive bowl and its 36th in all, two marks no other school can touch.

WBC champ dies in car wreck

MEXICO CITY (AP) — World Boxing Council featherweight champion Salvador Sanchez was killed today in a car accident north of here, police said.

Police said Sanchez, 23, crashed his car at 2 a.m. local time about nine miles north of Queretaro.

instantly from multiple injuries.

Melendez said there were no immediate details as to the cause of the accident. "An investigation has been opened but we have no details yet," he said.

"All we know up to now was that Sanchez was driving alone, in his 1981 white Porsche, when the car became involved in a very bad crash with a half-ton Ford pickup and a heavy duty truck. We have no more details."

Berbick, Witherspoon suspended

Boxing commissioners didn't believe illness stories

CLEVELAND (AP) — Boxing commissioners did not believe heavyweight boxers Trevor Berbick and Tim Witherspoon were taken ill three days before each was to fight in a nationally televised bout. So the commissioners have indefinitely suspended them from the sport.

Don King Productions had set up fights between Berbick and Renaldo Snipes on Saturday and a bout Sunday pitting Witherspoon against James "Quick" Tillis at a downtown Cleveland hotel.

Murray Goodman, chief publicist for King, said the deflections scraped the original weekend cards, but he said the King production team would hold a news conference today to announce plans for the weekend.

The three-member Cleveland Boxing Commission met privately Wednesday after interviewing both fighters. Berbick and Witherspoon had complained of being ill with the flu.

"They failed to keep a commitment," Goodman said. "We're talking about major fighters here. We're not talking about humpty dumpties."

GOODMAN SAID many boxing commissions in the United States — as well as the World Boxing Council and World Boxing Association — likely will honor the suspensions, which means neither Berbick nor Witherspoon can fight legally anywhere in the world until the Cleveland commission says so.

"It will not be a short suspension," said commission member Eugene Pearson. "They may be reinstated at a later hearing, if they ask for it. But right now, the ruling means what it says. Their suspensions are indefinite."

The commission said the suspensions were based on doctors' examinations. The fighters said their reason for dropping the fights also were based on doctor's exams.

"Two doctors told me two weeks ago that I couldn't train. I had a virus in my throat," Berbick said. "I just couldn't get in shape in time."

"I could be good for two or three rounds, but I would be cheating myself and the public if I tried to fight," he said.

Sworn affidavits of doctors who examined the fighters for the commission said they found nothing wrong with either man.

"They (Witherspoon and Berbick) never intended to fight," said commissioner Mike Minnick. "The promoters and the television networks were ready for the fights. They did everything they could."

Witherspoon took the news of his suspension calmly, but Berbick lashed out at commissioners.

"Suspend me? For what?" Berbick asked. "What can I do if two doctors told me to rest. Am I not a human being?"

Cubs end road trip with third win over Gold Sox

AMARILLO — The Midland Cubs completed their series with the Amarillo Gold Sox here Wednesday night with their third consecutive victory, 7-5.

Henry Cotto led things off in the first inning when he singled and stole second. Following a walk by Mike Kelley, Cotto scored on a single by Joe Carter. Kelley was thrown out at third on the play.

Carter came around to make it 2-0 on Mike Diaz RBI single.

Fritz Connally gave the Cubs a 3-0 lead in the fourth inning with his 22nd home run of the year.

The lead lasted until the sixth inning when the Gold Sox exploded for four runs to go up, 4-3.

In the top of the seventh, Cotto and Kelley led off with back-to-back singles to end Bruce Oliver's stay on the mound. Reliever John White gave the lead back to Midland when Carter sent his first pitch over the left field fence for a 6-4 lead.

Doug Welenc, M-10, got the victory for Midland with Tim Milner picking up his first save of the year in two innings of relief duty. Brown, 38, suffered the loss with three other hurlers seeing action.

The Cubs have a travel day today and will be back in Midland to play their final homestand of the season starting Friday with five games against El Paso followed by a five-game series with Amarillo.

NFLPA will consider striking preseason to protect members

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the National Football League Players Association said Wednesday that if the league took action against player representatives, the union would consider striking during the exhibition season to protect its members.

"If they take some disciplinary action for union activities we must remain flexible," said Ed Garvey, the union's executive director. He added that at this point there is no evidence of any such action being taken against player representatives.

Garvey emphasized, however, that there are no current plans to strike during the exhibition season. "The issue is still under discussion."

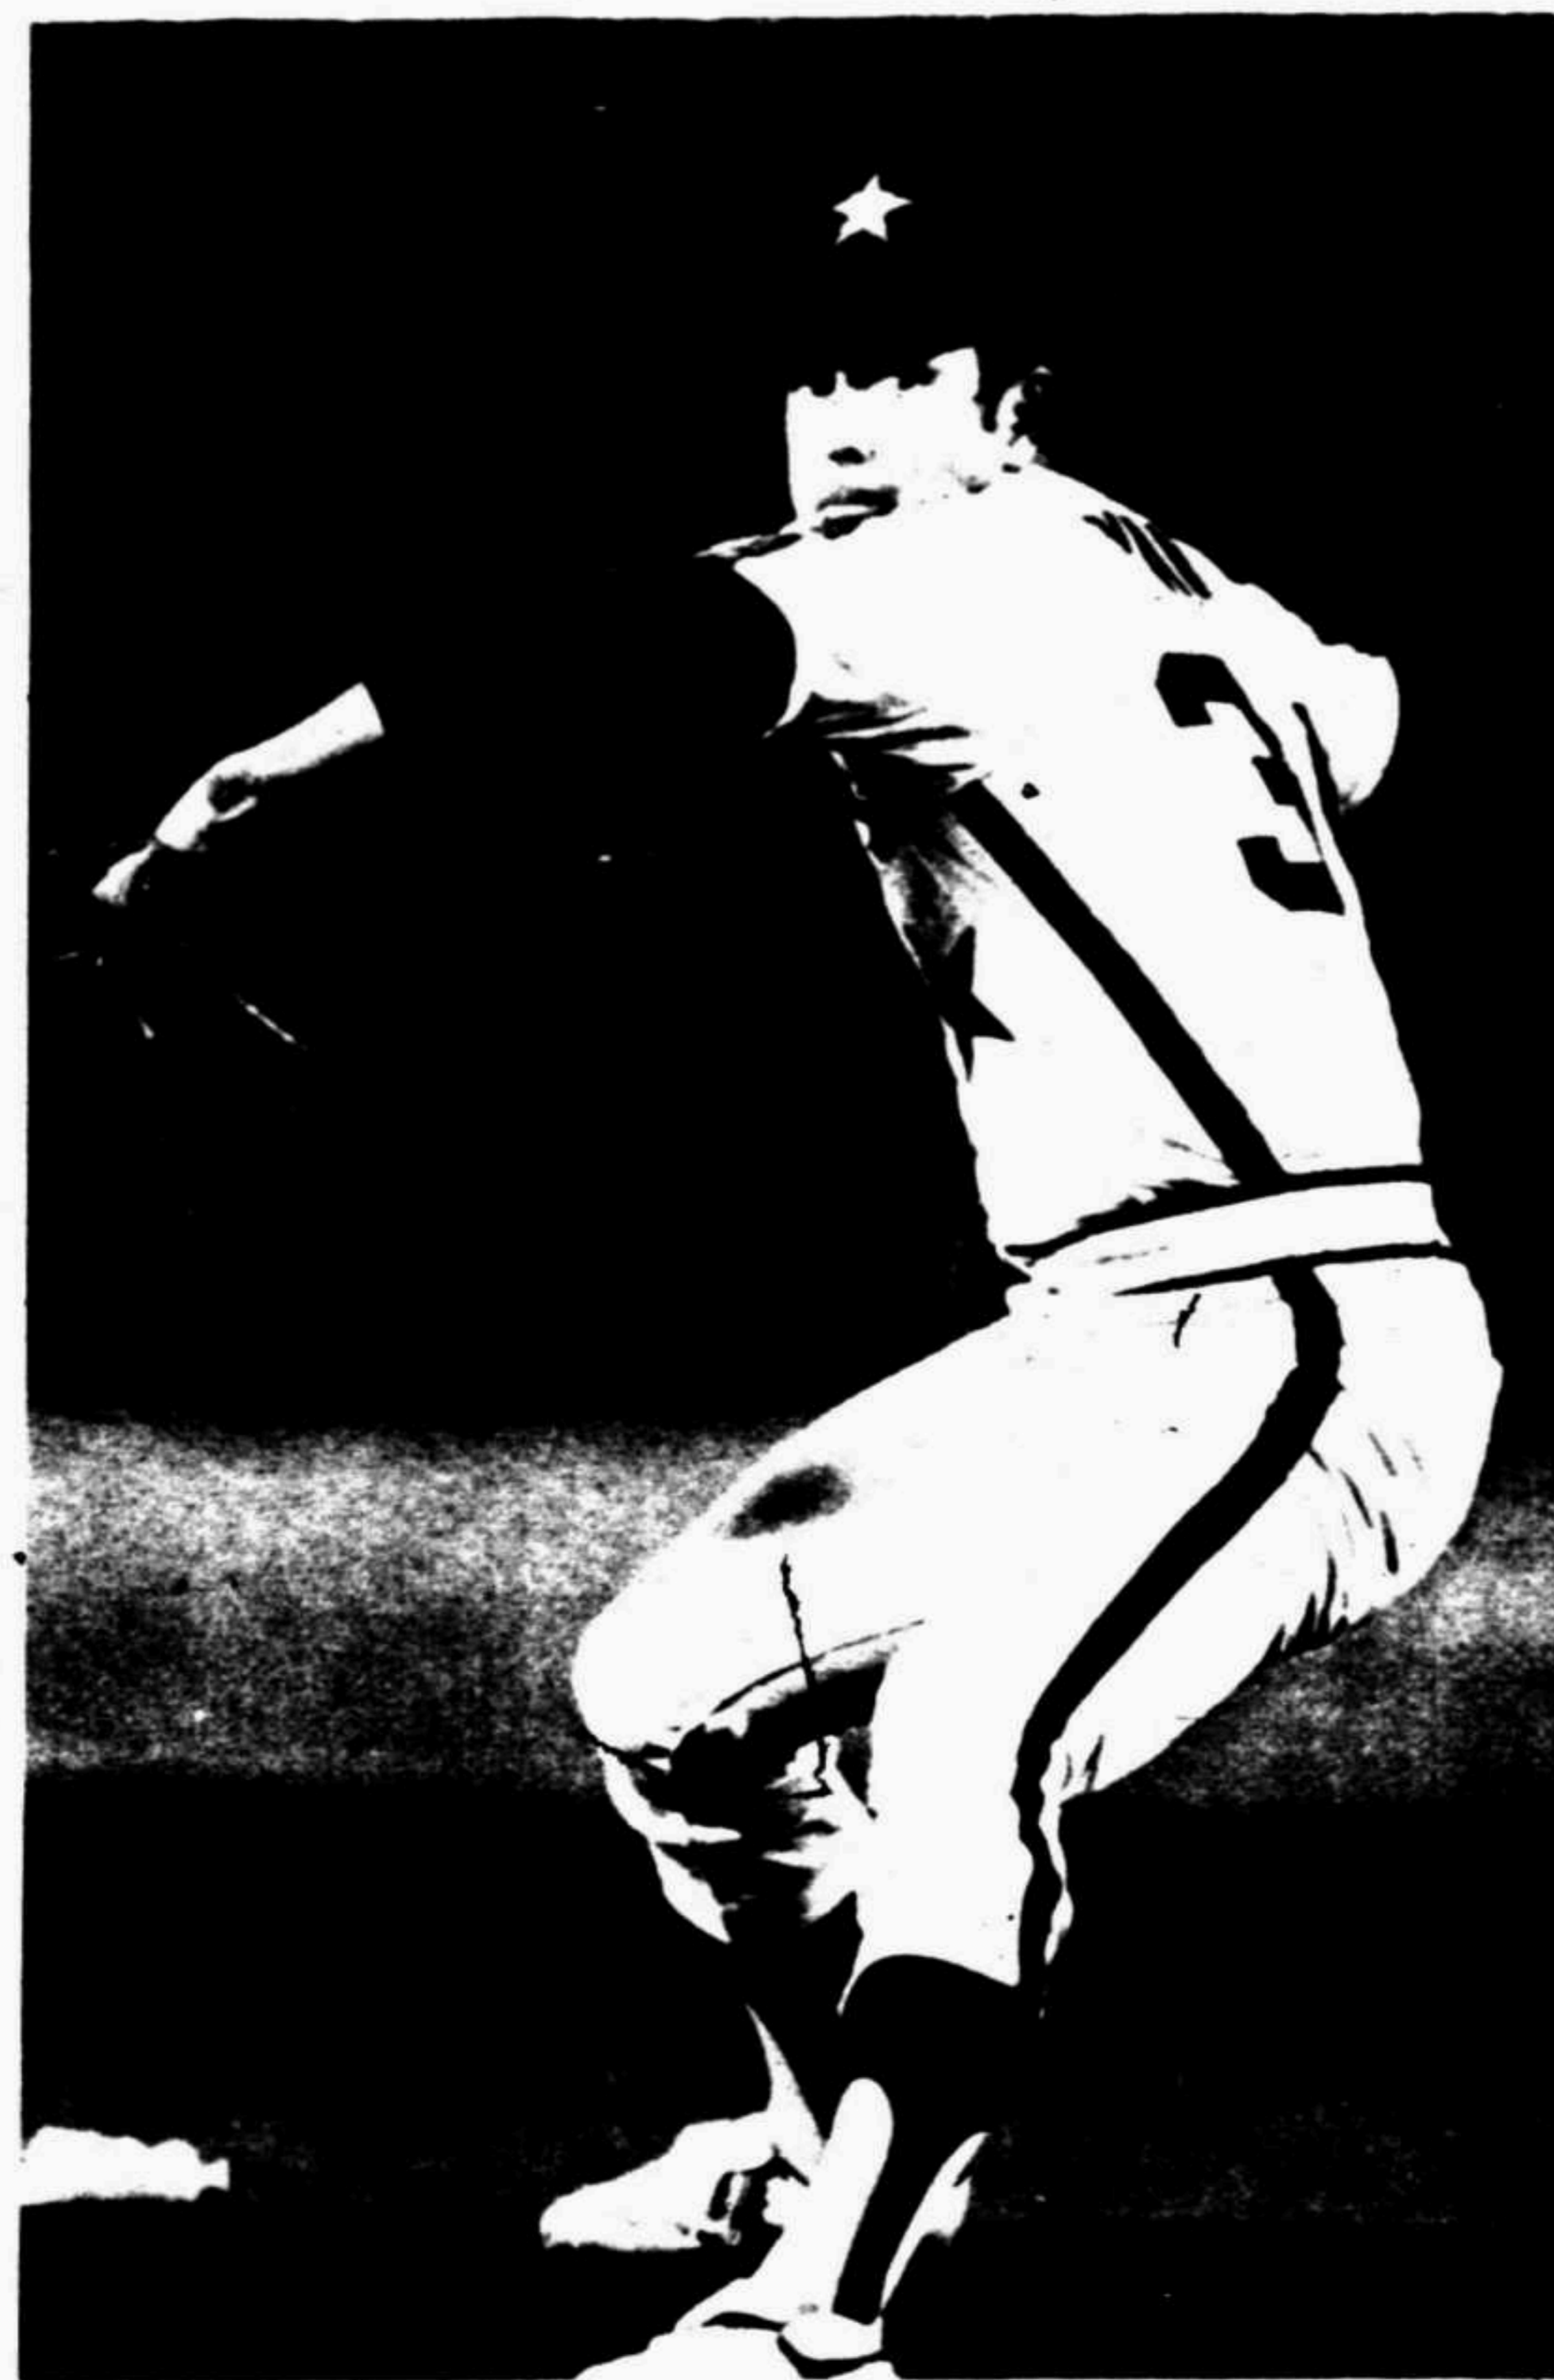

Jack Donlan, the NFL's chief labor negotiator, said the league "will face that issue when we come to it," if the union tries to shut down any exhibition games.

Donlan said he has sent Garvey a message that, "If there are any disturbances by players, those players will be appropriately disciplined by the clubs."

Garvey had said previously that the union was considering the possibility of some type of job action at the training camps "if that's what it takes to get across the message that the players are unified."

In its Thursday editions, the Washington Post reported that Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys and the chairman of the NFL's competition committee, said the committee would recommend cancellation of the 1982 season if it concludes that a strike or lockout has compromised the integrity of NFL competition.

Houston Astro pitcher Nolan Ryan unwinds a pitch Wednesday night against the Padres in San Diego on his way to his eighth career one-hitter. The Padres' Terry Kennedy singled in the fifth inning to ruin Ryan's bid for his sixth no-hitter. See related stories pages 3 and 4C.

Attitude changes helping Giants win

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

It's getting-even time for Reggie Smith.

"The Giants will not be intimidated by anyone," said the San Francisco outfielder on the eve of an important four-game series with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Smith, of course, was a member of the Dodgers for many years and remembers that the Giants used to be virtual pushovers for them.

"When I first came here, it was a matter of the Dodgers knowing they could beat the Giants," Smith said. "But there's been an attitude change."

A big part of that has been helped by the Giants' recent play, which is the hottest in baseball. The Giants have posted the major league's best record since June 27, 28-13.

Counting Wednesday's 8-6, 12-inning victory over Atlanta, the Giants have won 10 straight and moved right into the thick of the National League West battle.

The surge has left the fourth-place Giants four games behind division-leading Los Angeles and they hope to make up more ground as they started their big series today with the Dodgers, who lost 2-1 to Cincinnati Wednesday night. The Braves, meanwhile, remained a half-game behind the Dodgers in second place.

The Giants' victory, by the way, gave them their longest winning streak since they reeled off 12 in a row April 30-May 13, 1966.

Smith, one of the hottest hitters in the Giants' hot streak, came through with a two-run homer in the 12th inning to win Wednesday's game. Smith's game-winning blast was his 12th homer of the year, and his eighth game-winning RBI. He has hit safely in 13 of his last 14 games with five homers and 11 RBI over that span.

"In the situation today, I was looking for a ball to drive out of the park," Smith said. "Everything is just falling into place now. If we can keep playing well, anything can happen."

The loss was the ninth straight for the Braves, who had dropped out of first place Tuesday night after spending virtually all season on top.

In other NL action, it was Philadelphia 4, Pittsburgh 1, Montreal 3, Chicago 0 and Houston 3, San Diego 0. Rain washed out the St. Louis-New York game.

Reds 2, Dodgers 1

Cesar Cedeño doubled home two runs in the first inning and Bob Shirley and Brad Lesley made them stand up with a combined seven-hitter as Cincinnati edged Los Angeles to snap the Dodgers' eight-game winning streak.

Shirley, 49, worked into the eighth inning, scattering six hits, one of which was Ron Cey's 16th home run with one out in the second, while walking three and striking out two. Shirley also benefited from the Reds' defense that cut down two Dodgers at the plate. Lesley pitched the final 11-3 innings for his second save.

Phillies 4, Pirates 1

Garry Maddox drove in three runs with a pair of singles to lead Philadelphia over Pittsburgh for the Phillies' third victory in their four-game series with the Pirates.

The Phillies scored the winning runs in a three-run eighth inning. Bo Diaz's groundout got one run home before Maddox capped the rally with a two-run single off Kent Tekulve, who relieved Pirate starter Rick Rhoden.

Sid Monge pitched the eighth inning and picked up his fifth victory without a loss. Ron Reed finished up for the Phillies, gaining his seventh save.

"I'd hate to make my living hitting off him," said Maddox of Tekulve. "I've gotten some hits off him in the past, but this was the first this year."

Expos 3, Cubs 0

Gary Carter hit a solo home run and Charlie Lea and two relievers combined on a four-hitter as Montreal stopped Chicago's six-game winning streak.

Lea, 9-6, allowed only three hits before getting relief help one out in the eighth from Woodie Fryman. Jeff Reardon bailed Fryman out of a jam in the ninth, posting his 17th save. Lea walked three and struck out six while improving his lifetime record against Chicago to 4-0.

The Expos scored their first run in the second off Chicago starter Alan Ripley, 4-5, on Carter's 22nd homer of the season and first since July 27.

Montreal made it 2-0 in the fourth on Doug Flynn's RBI single and added another run in the eighth on a run-scoring base hit by Al Oliver.

"Charlie was picture-perfect," said Carter. "He tired a little, but I'd say overall, it's the best game he's thrown."

Astros 3, Padres 0

Nolan Ryan fired the eighth one-hitter of his career and singled in a run, and Dickie Thon extended his hitting streak to 20 games as Houston blanked San Diego to complete a three-game sweep.

Ryan retired the first 13 Padres before Terry Kennedy grounded a clean single to center with one out in the fifth inning. The Padres managed only five other baserunners, three of them on walks.

Ryan, 12-9, struck out six in boosting his season total to 172. The victory total is his highest in three seasons as an Astro and the shutout was the 49th of his career.

Eric Show, 9-4, allowed all three Astro runs on eight hits over six innings, including Thon's leadoff double that led to the Astros' first run in the opening inning. Ryan aided his own cause with an RBI single in the second.

Dusty Baker of the Los Angeles Dodgers lunges for the plate but is tagged out by catcher Alex Trevino of the Cincinnati Reds in the third inning of their game Wednesday in L.A.

Vilas struggles, Clerc defaults

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) — Top-seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina struggled to defeat Hans Gildemeister of Chile in the $300,000 California Classic tennis tournament while a muscle pull forced Argentine Jose-Luis Clerc to default.

Also on Wednesday, third-seeded Jose Higuera of Spain surprised Mexico's Raul Ramirez, 6-4, 6-2.

Disputes over line calls delayed matches for the second night.

In a grueling contest lasting 2 hours 40 minutes, Vilas stiffened after losing the first set, 6-7, once leading by two service breaks, and went on to win, 6-2, 6-4.

A painful rhomboid muscle pull in the right shoulder forced the second-seeded Clerc to default to Kim Warwick.

South Africa's Johan Kriek, fourth ranked in the five-day event at La Costa Hotel and Spa, was a 6-3, 5-7, 6-3 winner over Bruce Manson, while Roscoe Tanner defeated Bob Lutz, 7-5, 6-5.

After winning the U.S. Clay Court championships at Indianapolis last week, Higuera moved easily to the cement surface with an hour's work-out.

Yankee Win takes step toward upcoming All-American Futurity

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — Yankee Win, the filly who won last month's Rainbow Futurity at Ruidoso Downs horserace track, took a step Wednesday toward the upcoming $2.2 million All-American Futurity.

The filly assumed an early lead in the first race, which was one of 36 first-round All-American Futurity trials. The trials, with 12 races each day, will continue Thursday and Friday.

Yankee Win kept her lead throughout the 440-yard contest and grabbed an easy 3-length win. She covered the distance in 22.16 seconds to advance to the Aug. 26 time trials, but the clock is no factor in the first-round trials.

The filly, one of the nation's top quarter horses, is owned by Jerry Rheudas of Lewisville, Texas.

Fans who backed Yankee Win in Wednesday's outing earned $2.20 to win, $2.10 to place, $2.10 to show.

In order to survive the opening All-

American round a hopeful had to finish in the top three in his trial spin.

NAACP says USL team nickname is discriminatory

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — The University of Southwestern Louisiana's Ragin' Cajuns nickname for its athletic teams is discriminatory because there were no black descendants of the French-Canadian drivers from Nova Scotia during the 1750s, an NAACP chapter president says.

"We have never been referred to as Cajuns," said Patricia Colbert-Cormier of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. "It's sort of like a slap in the face."

COM off to TAGS in San Antonio

The City of Midland Swim Team will be in San Antonio for the second weekend of competition in the Texas Age Groups State Swimming Championships at Northeast Athletic Center.

COM swimmers scored 71 points in the first weekend, for swimmers 12 and under, and this weekend they are expected to add to that total when the older kids, 13-18 in three age brackets, conclude competition.

According to coach Hank O'Neill, COM doesn't have any hopes of winning a team title simply because of a lack of numbers. COM had two representatives in Houston last weekend and will only send seven to San Antonio this weekend. While he feels the team title is out of reach, he feels his swimmers will be able to make the finals in several events.

"We're only taking seven kids and there are teams with 20 or 30 members," he said.

The seven swimmers each have their strong events and they include: Becky Simpson, 13, in the 200-meter IM, 100 and 200 freestyles; Tracey Delany, 13, in the 50 and 100 freestyles; Suzi Simpson, 16, in the 100 and 200 butterfly; Patrick Rhomey, 17, in the 200 breaststroke and 50 freestyle; Mike Seay, 16, in the 800 freestyle and 200 backstroke; Sam Perry, 13, in the 100 and 200 backstrokes and James Shupp in the 200 IM and 200 backstroke.

Though they will be swimming in other events, O'Neill feels that these are their strong points and their best bets for individual honors.

Luck relying on quickness, precision

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers quarterback Oliver Luck says he'll be relying on quickness and precision more than intelligence when he makes his professional debut tonight in the Astro dome against the New Orleans Saints.

Luck, a second-round draft choice from West Virginia who was a Rhodes Scholarship finalist this year, expects to play about one quarter.

"In the pros there is an entirely different passing concept than in college," said Luck, who quarterbacked West Virginia to a 9-3 record last season. "To be successful you have to throw on time and be precise."

Luck established a reputation for being a brainy, respected leader on the field while in college, but he says that he "doesn't expect to make it on intelligence" in the National Football League.

"I've known a lot of guys who excelled on the classroom but not on the field," Luck said in an interview with the Charleston (W.Va.) Daily Mail.

"Intelligence doesn't correlate to what you do on the field. Out there it's reaction and how quickly you can do it," he said.

The Oilers are expected to keep three quarterbacks on their roster — starter Gifford Nielsen and rookies Luck and Ron Reeves of Texas Tech. Luck was taken on the second round and was the third quarterback chosen in the college draft last spring.

"I'd be tickled to death to come out of camp as the No. 2 quarterback," said Luck, who said he can't hope to be a starter for three or four seasons.

"There is so much to learn. It's the same as trying to go into college as a freshman and start," he said. "If something should happen and Nielsen would go down, the team would have to go back to basics because a rookie quarterback just can't grasp an understanding of the offense that quick."

Luck said the passing game in the pros is much different than in college football.

"Coming to the pros is about like coming out of high school and going to a major college game," said Luck, a native of Cleveland, Ohio.

"It has taken me a while to adapt," he said. "As a quarterback, I have to read defenses a little quicker and learn to release the ball quicker. They emphasize releasing the ball before the receiver has made his cut."

Angelo State's Weishuhn could be Patriot starter

SMITHFIELD, R.I. (AP) — He's not that big, but he's always around the ball and hitting someone too, say those familiar with Clayton Weishuhn.

And that's earned Weishuhn the right to be a starting linebacker Saturday in the New England Patriots' exhibition opener against Pittsburgh.

The Patriots' third-round draft choice this year, Weishuhn, a 220 pounder from Angelo State in Texas, is given a reasonable chance for a starting spot this season.

"He's going to be a really good, productive player," says fellow linebacker Steve Nelson. "I don't think his lack of size will be a problem because he's so quick. He picks up the new defenses well. On the field, he really does cover a lot of ground."

Coach Ron Meyer also has been impressed with what he's seen.

"He's played well so far. I'm just anxious to see him in a game," Meyer said.

Weishuhn said he wants to be a starter, but knows he's got to earn the job.

"I like being a starter, but my way of thinking is that the job isn't mine until I prove it's mine. There's a job out there I've got to do and I want to do it," he said.

He grew up on a farm near San Angelo, and still rents out 260 acres for himself and his wife, Diane, on which they grow cotton and cattle feed.

While in school, he arranged his class schedules so he could go to school two days a week and farm the rest of the time.

"There was many a day when I'd work the farm all morning until 2 in the afternoon and then head the 22 miles to school for football practice," he said. "I did it the hard way. I didn't have to, but that's the way I wanted it. I figured I had a chance to get an education, play some more football and still farm, so why can't I do it if I try for it?"

He said he was recruited by other schools, but decided to attend college close to home so he could still farm.

He had only been as far north as New York City before the Patriots drafted him, and he still does not know where he will live once training camp ends.

Reds facing suit for $2 million

CINCINNATI (AP) — An optical company has refiled a countersuit against the Cincinnati Reds, seeking $2 million from the ballclub for airing radio commercials during the strike-torn 1981 baseball season.

The Kent Optical Co. and Kent Advertising Agency, which operate Beechmont Optical, refiled the counterclaim in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court this week.

The ballclub sued the company when it refused to pay for commercials aired during the "second season" that followed the strike of 1981.

According to court documents, the company claimed that the second season was not part of the regular season.

Doug Donley, a Dallas Cowboy veteran from Ohio State, uses grace and eye contact to bring in a pass against the defensive coverage of rookie Brian Carpenter from Michigan at the team's training camp at California Lutheran College.

Houston Oiler Andy Dorris came to Wednesday afternoon's workout in anticipation of the team's game with the New Orleans Saints. Dorris showed up in ace bandages and other attire resembling a mummy. Many of the players do things such as this to relieve the boredom of training camp but this may be an indication of what Houston has in store for the Saints in today's preseason game.

California Senate helps Raiders

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Legislation that would prevent the city of Oakland from using the power of eminent domain to take over the Raiders football team was approved by a Senate committee Wednesday.

The bill, by Assemblyman William Campbell, Republican from Hacienda Heights in Southern California, would reverse a recent state Supreme Court ruling and forbid the use of eminent domain to acquire a sports franchise.

The measure was sent to the Senate floor on a 60-vote of the Senate Governmental Organization Committee. If passed by the full Senate, the Campbell measure would still have to be approved by the Assembly before the end of the month.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Tuesday denied a request by the National Football League and the Oakland Coliseum to block the planned Raiders move to Los Angeles, where the team intends to play this season.

That action left Oakland with one remaining legal card to play in its long battle to try to stop the Raiders move, a suit by which the city is attempting to acquire the Raiders under its powers of eminent domain.

That case is now pending in Superior Court in Monterey.

Queen of Hearts should have been baseball owner

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Lewis Carroll, author of Alice in Wonderland and Through the Looking Glass, really missed a bet. He should have made the Queen of Hearts, one of his central characters, a baseball owner. Then, when Her Majesty roared, "Off with her head," she would have been right in character.

The corporate geniuses who run the game are chopping heads at a dizzying pace this season. This week's victim was Houston Manager Bill Virdon. Next week, it could be Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

Virdon took the guillotine treatment with aplomb. "It's part of the game," said the soft-spoken Astros skipper. "But you never get used to it."

This is the third time around for Virdon. He was fired previously in Pittsburgh and by the New York Yankees. But then, everybody gets fired by the New York Yankees sooner or later, or so it seems.

Last week's victim was Gene Michael, dumped by George Steinbrenner after his Yankees had the nerve to lose four consecutive games including an embarrassing doubleheader against Chicago. It was the second time in 11 months that Michael had been fired by Steinbrenner and the wonder of that accomplishment is that for seven of those months, he wasn't even the manager and thus unavailable to be dismissed during that period.

The irony of Michael's firing is that it came against Chicago. The White Sox were hard at work at the time trying to save Manager Tony LaRussa's job after he had been targeted by co-owner Eddie Einhorn during a July dry spell.

A year ago, with the Yankees on the road in Chicago, Michael, then in his first term as manager of the Yankees, spoke out against pressure from above, inviting Steinbrenner to fire him. The owner, never one to disappoint, obliged, calling on Bob Lemon as a relief manager.

Lem then was promised all of 1982 on the Yankee bench with Michael on deck to return. Steinbrenner said, for three years beginning in 1983, The Lemon pledge lasted 14 games before Michael returned in April. By being fired in August, Michael thus achieved the unique status of being fired as Yankee manager well before his second term in office was scheduled to even begin.

Remarkable.

The week before Steinbrenner struck, Texas owner Eddie Giles' eyes narrowed and the next thing Don Zimmer knew, he was one of America's 9.8 million unemployed citizens. The strange part of that affair was that for some mysterious reason, Giles let Zimmer stick around for three extra games before formalizing the firing. A nice touch. A chance to say good-bye.

And the week before Jim felt the sharp blade, John McNamara got it in Cincinnati. Never mind that the Reds had the best record in baseball last year and that the front office had decided to celebrate that accomplishment by dispatching the heart of the club elsewhere. The team was losing so the manager was invited to take a hike.

You may recall that before the Milwaukee Brewers were Harvey's Wallbangers, Bob Rodgers, not Harvey Kuenn, was calling the shots on the bench.

Counting Steinbrenner's two axings, that means six managers have bitten the dust since spring training. And the dog days have just begun.

So the owners obviously are restless. They will not tolerate failure. It's win or else. What a wonderful time for the summer meetings with everybody on the warpath, a half dozen managerial scalps already hanging proudly from their belts.

And into that ominous conclave of militant baseball bosses steps the kindly commissioner. The owners are on the warpath and Kuhn's contract is up for renewal. The word is that he is in big trouble.

You have to wonder why. Here is baseball on the road to record attendances again, miraculously recovered from the turmoil of the strike. Interest in the game is at an all-time high. There are exciting races in all four divisions and they promise to stay close throughout September, keeping the turnstiles spinning. But that doesn't seem to be enough for the hardliners.

Followers of fairy tales will tell you it's really entirely understandable. After all, Alice was a delightful, pretty little girl and the Queen of Hearts still raged. "Off with her head."

Hooking big marlin off Matzalan

The mighty blue Pacific Ocean was calm and peaceful as our 42-foot fishing vessel sailed out to sea. The clumsy-looking brown pelicans and Man-of-War birds hovered over our boat in hopes of our deckhand throwing out some mullet baits not to be used for the day's fishing.

Looking back as we left the busy Mazatlan harbor we could distinguish the outline of Matzatlan's beaches and through the early morning salt haze, we could get a glimpse of the majestic Sierra Madre mountains as they towered several thousand feet above sea level.

Juan was our captain of the day. This gentle Mexican fishing and boat captain who has been fishing the offshore reaches out of this bustling Mexico resort city for more than 25 years didn't sound to optimistic about the day's fishing. Prior fishing days had only produced a handful of Pacific sailfish and dorado for the entire Mazatlan fleet. Regardless of his pessimism, the four anglers on board his BiBi Fleet boat were anxious about today's encounter with a sailfish or blue marlin.

Not more than 30 minutes out, our deckhand released the outriggers. Three minutes passed and the mullet baits were in the water. The day was perfect. Not a breath of air stirred the blue Pacific. We could see movements in the water as far as our eyes could see. The Pacific, which has been known to brew up some mighty stout storms, presented itself as one giant mirror this day.

Looking to the distant horizon, we noticed a huge school of bottle-nosed dolphins dancing gracefully in and out of the water. These friendly sea-goers were feeding on a school of yellowfin tuna, but the feeding spree was too far from our location to make a stab at catching some yellowfin. So, we would concentrate all powers on turning a sail or marlin.

TWO HOURS of trolling went by before we even spotted our first finning sailfish. As soon as Juan eyeballed the surfaced fin, he jammed the throttle into full speed ahead and mad a quick dash in the direction of the feeding sail. As the boat approached the fish, Captain Juan slowed the boat back to a troll. He circled the fish. Just as the starboard outrigger bait passed within a few feet of the sailfish, a huge explosion shattered the placid Pacific. The sailfish didn't have an opportunity to take the closest bait, it was nailed by something much more powerful and considerably larger.

One minute later, a giant blue marlin leaped skyward. Don Henrichs of San Antonio was first in the chair. His idea of catching his first sailfish just vanished as he prepared to do battle with a big blue. Whatever happened to the sailfish we were after at first, really didn't matter at this time.

Captain was screaming, hopping around the boat like a wild Indian and coaching Don on his proper maneuvering of this once-in-a-lifetime fish. As the battle went on, Juan told me that this was the largest marlin that had been hooked all year long and he certainly wanted Don to boat this monster.

For the first few moments, the big marlin leaped out of the water like a porpoise in Marineland. He leaped forward, backward, sideways and straight up. Juan said, "It's very unusual for a marlin of this size to put on such an aerial performance." But, this was no ordinary day either.

After the spectacular leaps, the fish dove for China. Two hours passed before any indication of this fish tiring. We couldn't see the fish or know how tired he was, but looking at Don's red face told the story. Look at this battle from Don's standpoint, we had our money on the marlin. At one point, Don was so tired, he wanted someone else to take the rod, but Captain Juan kept encouraging Don to hang in there.

Another 20 minutes passed. Don was finally gaining back line on the marlin. Before too much longer, we could see the 10-foot creature slowly being led to the boat. The fluorescent-blue fish was no more than 20 feet from the boat when Captain Jua and his first mate threw a grappling hook at the fish in hopes of snagging him so they might drag him into the boat. But all hell broke loose when those hooks penetrated his thick skin.

AS JUAN yanked on the grapple, the huge fish shot skywards from not more than 15 feet from the boat, came down and splashed water in all directions, flooding the entire Texas crew on board. Camera equipment was wet, sack lunches were soaked and we felt as if we had just been in a Mexican thunderstorm.

The fish fought maybe 15 more minutes before he tired. He was led to the boat very gently by our fisherman, Don, and Captain Juan had the leader in hand. The fish was too large to bring over the side, so they had to remove a second in the back of the boat and drag it through this entrance. The fish was dead tired so no problem existed when they got it on board.

The battle was over. Don had won. When we returned to dock, Juan had already radioed ahead. There were several dozen people awaiting our return. But, let's not forget, we picked up a 100-pound sailfish on our way in. Juan and the first mate unloaded the sailfish first. As they returned to the boat to unload the big marlin, a big cheer went up from the crowd. Those two people couldn't handle the fish alone so they recruited some help.

When they hoisted the fish on the scales, another roar went up from the crowd. The blue marlin weighed 408 pounds. By no means is that a world record, because blue marlin attain sizes exceeding 1,000 pounds, but for Mazatlan fishing, that's good size.

There are better places in the world to fish for marlin and sailfish (Australia, New Zealand and Peru) but there's no better and less expensive places than Mazatlan for Texas anglers who want to enjoy some of the world's finest billfishing.

Whether it's a striped marlin, blue or black, or sailfish, you're going to enjoy a fishing trip offshor of Mazatlan. And, you're not going to go wrong by using the BiBi Fleet either.

Talbot time can qualify Coe for European meet

TRACK — World record holder Sebastian Coe will have a chance to achieve the European championship qualifying standard when he runs the 800 meters at the Talbot Games international track and field meet at the Crystal Palace on Aug. 20. Coe, who is recovering from a stress fracture of the right leg, faces a field that includes fellow Briton Garry Cook, second-fastest man over two laps in the world this year.

The mile features a meeting between Steve Ovett of Britain and New Zealander John Walker, while Olympic 100 meters champion Allan Wells meets Don Quarrie of Jamaica. American Steve Scott runs against Britons Steve Cram and Graham Williamson over 1,000 meters.

BASEBALL — The Central League front-running Yomiuri Giants Wednesday defeated the Yakult Swallows 3-1 on a save by reliever Mitsuo Sumi. In the eighth inning, Swallows infielder Shintaro Mizutani slammed a single-RBI home run off of Giants starter Takashi Nishimoto. Two singles followed and reliever Mitsuo Sumi came to the mound. Sumi got Dan Briggs, formerly with the Chicago Cubs, to ground out and allowed no more runs. Sumi earning his seventh save.

The Lotte Orions edged the Seibu Lions 5-4 on Leon Lee's two-run homer in the first and a game-winning RBI single by brother and former Los Angeles Dodger Leroy Lee in the fifth at Seibu Stadium.

Former big league baseball pitcher Sal Maglie, 65, was released from Niagara Falls Memorial Medical Center on Wednesday, about two weeks after undergoing brain surgery. "Mr Maglie has responded very well to treatment, and we continue to be very hopeful of a full recovery as he continues his convalescence at home," said Dr. David Cooper Cooper operated on Maglie July 24 for what was described as the draining of a brain hemorrhage.

Maglie, born here and now living on nearby Grand Island, received an average of 500 pieces of mail a day after his surgery, said hospital spokesman John Williams. During a big league baseball career that began in 1945 and ended in 1958, Maglie pitched for the New York Giants, the Cleveland Indians, the Brooklyn Dodgers, the New York Yankees and the St. Louis Cardinals.

SOCCER — Peruvian soccer star Julio Cesar Uribe flew into Italy on Wednesday to join his new team, Cagliari of Sardinia, where he will form a goal-scoring duo with Uruguayan forward Victorino.

SWIMMING — Sharron Davies, England's double Commonwealth Games swimming gold medalist who was declared a professional earlier this year, has given up all hope of defending her titles in Brisbane, Australia in October. Davies, involved in a legal battle over her amateur status, said through an advisor, "There is no way my legal action can be heard before November 1 am not going any further with my case for the moment, much to my regret." Davies, 19, is embroiled in a long-standing dispute with the English Amateur Swimming Association over whether doing television and journalism work had infringed her amateur status. Lawyers for the swimmer, Commonwealth champion in the 200 and 400-meter individual medley, will continue to press her case after November. The dispute is regarded by sports bodies as an important test case.

These are among the 60 aircraft used by the University of North Dakota for training, air service and research. Starting this fall, the university will become the first school to offer a

Students take to wild blue yonder

By PHYLLIS MENSING

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) — With a dozen students and a couple of donated airplanes, the University of North Dakota aviation department got off the ground 13 years ago by offering students the chance to combine love of flying with down-to-earth business savvy.

Today, the university's aviation students number 750 and its fleet includes 60 airplanes. And this fall, it will become the first school in the country to offer a four-year airway science program developed by the Federal Aviation Administration to upgrade the aviation industry.

"In the future, a pilot per se will be a dime a dozen. What you've got to do is fly an airplane and have other skills, too," says John Odegard, former crop duster, former certified public accountant and now chairman of the school's aviation department.

Odegard chaired a special FAA task force that developed the curriculum, a major goal of FAA Administrator J. Lynn Helms.

"General aviation aircraft and hours flown will nearly double in the next two decades," Helms said in a recent letter to the national Higher Education Commission. "There will be significant changes in the technology which will require a very sophisticated broad-based technical and managerial work force that can meet the new and changing demands of the system."

FAA OFFICIALS say that except for some engineering schools, there are few places where a person can learn about aviation as a career. Flying was viewed by some educators as too glamorous and too expensive to be a part of a college atmosphere.

Odegard disagreed. Today, the department has a $6 million budget and some 200 employees, including 90 flight instructors. The bulk of that budget comes from student fees and research contracts, and students go on to everything from airport management, airline marketing and weather research.

When President Reagan fired striking air traffic controllers last year, the university was the only four-year school with a curriculum designed to train 30 to 50 new controllers each year. That curriculum helped it win a $4 million federal grant for a three-story aerospace and atmospheric studies center, to be finished late next year.

The university had been planning the aviation building for some time, but didn't have funding for it. "The strike gave us an opportunity to get it," Odegard said. "When opportunity knocks, you'd better open the door."

That philosophy has guided the 40-year-old Odegard throughout his career.

BORN IN MINOT, Odegard came to the University of North Dakota after serving as a crop duster, a corporate pilot, a certified public accountant and a financial representative for Boeing. While working on his advanced degree, he helped rejuvenate the school's flying club and offered to teach a course in aviation.

Odegard had the support of Tom Clifford, former dean of the business college and now the school's president.

A department won state approval with the condition that it be self-supporting, and in 1969 UND became the first school in the country to offer a college business degree in aviation administration.

The following year, Odegard talked the city of Grand Forks into buying a portable air traffic control tower and won FAA approval to train students there. He also lured people from the airplane industry into the classroom.

"It sounds like a mutual admiration society, but the people we've attracted got caught up in his drive," said Don Smith, a former plant manager for Lockheed who is now director of academic programs for the department.

"Traditionally, an accountant is a person who sits in a corner with a calculator," Smith said. "John has that background, but he has the personality of an entrepreneur and a salesperson."

UND STUDENTS are offered four-year majors in aviation administration, airport administration, aeronautical studies and meteorology. Students take basic business management or liberal arts courses along with aviation, and work toward double majors.

The 60 planes, most of which are leased, include a specially equipped Cessna Citation jet now being used in a cloud seeding study of the Colorado River Basin.

Smith says students will spend $25,000 to $30,000 on their aviation education at UND. "Many of our students have borrowed money," he said. "But I don't know any who have regretted it."

Eighty-five percent of the UND aviation majors end up in the aviation industry, Smith said.

Odegard says airway science majors will be eligible for a proposed federal register from which the FAA wants to choose 500 employees a year to follow such careers as air traffic controllers, airport managers and aviation safety experts.

Future projects for the department include research on pilots' reactions to adverse conditions and the possibility of designing cockpits to counter that stress.

Breeder: There's nothing like racing pigeons

By STEWART TAGGART

NEW YORK (AP) — Joseph Giovinco unhitches the clasp on the crate of homing pigeons and a dozen birds burst out, fly a tentative circle several hundred feet off the ground and head northeast toward their home coop — roughly 30 miles away.

"A good toss," Giovinco says. "They'll be home in a half-hour."

Giovinco had driven the birds to a small park on the Verrazano Narrows to train them for races of up to 500 miles. He released 68 young birds in small groups several minutes apart. Most of the birds were less than 3 months old.

This "toss" was to select the birds with potential — "To see which ones have the stuffing" to make it in a race, as Giovinco puts it.

"This one is a real beauty," he says, as he strokes the feathers of a pigeon he had isolated from the others. He lets it go. Without making a loop overhead to find its bearings, it flies directly to the coop.

"That is one of our best," Giovinco says. "He'll find his way home with no help."

Giovinco and his partner, Anthony Accardi, have raised and raced birds as a hobby for over 30 years.

"There's a lot to this game, believe me," Giovinco said. "People spend their lives in it, breeding, cross-breeding."

And winning.

"There's nothing like it," Giovinco said. "When a bird comes in and I call another coop and his birds haven't arrived, I know I've got something," he said.

Back at the coop, Accardi waits for the birds to return.

"When they land, it's beautiful," he says.

Many races are held through the Brooklyn Concourse Homing Pigeon Club, a group of about 100 members in the New York area that holds over a dozen races each summer.

The birds travel in crates that open on the sides with wooden shutters on top to provide air. When they are released, the birds can average as much as 50 mph on the way home.

Giovinco and Accardi keep over 200 birds in five coops behind Accardi's home in the Queens section of New York.

"I can tell every bird in this coop apart," Accardi said. "I could even tell you who their mothers and fathers were."

Accardi built the backyard complex of coops over 15 years ago.

WASHINGTON — In this city of magnificent memorials, marble monuments and stately statues, a new artistic edifice is arising — a temporary towering tribute to trash.

It is a cornucopia of cast-offs, a 40-foot tall wire mesh skeleton packed with discarded electrical appliances. About 30 feet wide at the top and less than four feet wide at the bottom, it looks like a tornado hitting a General Electric storage bin.

Artist Nancy Rubins calls her creation "Worlds Apart," and it certainly is worlds apart from the majestic columns of the Lincoln Memorial about a mile away.

Located off the beaten path of tourists in an area known as "Foggy Bottom" near the banks of the Potomac, her appliances-in-concrete sculpture rises from a hilltop in the shadow of the famed Watergate apartment complex. It is at the conflux of three expressways used by Washington-Georgetown commuters — and in full view of some irate neighboring apartment dwellers who do not appreciate appliance art.

Rubins and up to six assistants have worked for two months to erect the skeleton and fill it with literally thousands of toasters, stereos, fans, vacuum cleaners, heaters, clocks, toy organs, blenders and other discarded but often still functional electrical appliances.

Concrete, has been poured in, leaving most of the appliances visible as the concrete oozes through them in the same way mortar squeezes through bricks.

There is a good reason why it contains everything but the kitchen sink.

"They (sinks) do not plug in," Rubins said. Rubins, a New York City-based artist, said she likes working with discarded appliances "because they seem ridiculous to me." She notes there are precedents for using mundane objects in art, such as seashore dwellers using conch shells and people living near liquor stores using old bottles.

What special meaning is this eye-jarring jumble of junk supposed to convey?

Rubins believes that meaning, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder. She is content to leave interpretation to others, but she does say that the use of junk is not supposed to be symbolic of the nation's capital.

"I do not know what it is supposed to symbolize," said Rubins. "I found these objects vastly interesting because of the way they look, because so many of them are so vastly available for almost nothing. ... Sculpture is something to look at and can have meaning on many different levels. ... It is just that it is some wonderful precarious shape of things that are temporary. ... It is like a tornado, constantly on the move. What we are doing is getting a frozen second of these things taken out of context and thrown away above our heads. And we see it for a minute frozen in concrete."

Her creation has evoked strong responses. "Some people say they think it is the ugliest thing they have ever seen in their lives," she said. "And some think it is absolutely beautiful. It inspires them. One man said he has never had an experience quite so powerful ever, not even at the National Gallery. The varied responses are healthy because art rousing people to such an extent is the greatest compliment an artist can get."

One aroused response Rubins did not take as a compliment was what she called a "vigilante" letter from William T. Brawner, a real estate developer and owner of a nearby building in which tenants were complaining of the addition to their view. In a letter to District of Columbia Mayor Marion Barry, Brawner said his tenants were going to show up at the site July 31 to dismantle the "unsightly sculpture" and would provide five trucks to haul away the pieces.

Rubins said she obtained a court order restraining Brawner and his tenants from acting. She said the art community and the mayor's office defended the project. The federal government has not been directly involved. National Park Service spokesman George Berkley said the NPS, which has jurisdiction over monuments and memorials here, is not involved since this is a temporary project and not on federal parklands.

"If it were permanent and on parklands, we would have had comments on anything that would cause a retinal hemorrhage for our visitors," Berkley said. "We have nothing to say about this one because we do not have to."

The permit for use of the site was issued by the D.C. Department of Transportation. A spokesman said DOT does not act as art critics but makes decisions on whether right-of-way use would present a safety hazard or interfere with traffic.

The project is sponsored by the Washington Project for the Arts, a private, non-profit organization that supports the "more experimental" artists "whose work does not fit in to the more august galleries," according to Olivia Georgia, the WPA's assistant director. It relies primarily on contributions but does receive about $80,000 of its $420,000 annual budget from the federal National Endowment for the Arts.

"Worlds Apart," however, is largely a volunteer effort. Most of the appliances were donated by Goodwill Industries, and the scaffolding, steel wire mesh structure, concrete and most of the labor also has been donated. Rubins' $1,000 fee, her daily per diem for living expenses, and the salary for one paid assistant comes from $3,000 provided by a shopping center developer who has one of her appliances-in-concrete sculptures on display at a shopping center in the Chicago suburb of Berwyn.

Gordon said WPA is not certain if it will apply for an extension when the six-month permit expires in December, but she made it clear it is not because Rubins' project came as any surprise.

LIFE IN THESE UNITED STATES

Open-hearth surgery

Special from Reader's Digest

Friends of ours were remodeling an old house. We were visiting when the fireplace repairman came to give them an estimate for extensive work. The couple were aghast at the price, but had to laugh when the repairman explained, "Well, you must consider that this job will require open-hearth surgery."

— BILLIE M. HILL, Texas

When my mother came to visit me years ago in San Francisco, the first thing she did was arrange to visit a friend in Salinas whom she had not seen for 63 years. The two had parted as young girls in Wisconsin but had kept in touch all this time. As I drove her to the bus station I asked, "How long do you think you will be gone, Mother?"

"It's hard to say," she replied. "We have a lot to catch up on."

The card I received a few days later read: "Don't know when I will be back. We've been talking for a week, and we're just up to the Spanish-American War."

— VIVIAN HORN, N.Y.

As a new driver I was more than a little nervous about my first solo venture into downtown traffic. Not sure of my way and intimidated by the congested streets, I soon found myself going the wrong way on a one-way street. As luck would have it, the only place to turn around was the police station, and when I drove in I spied a young officer watching my maneuvers. Completely flustered now, I pulled the car around and just waited to see what would happen.

Sure enough, the officer started my way. Reaching the car, he inquired with a grin, "Giving yourself up?"

— JOANNE MYLES, N.Y.

Installing a telephone in my kitchen, the service man felt that the choice of location was impractical — and said so. I stood my ground and, reluctantly, he followed my orders, muttering admonitions all the while. Later, the telephone had to be taken down to accommodate the paperhanger. Neatly folded behind the back-plate was this note: "I told you so!"

— MRS. WALTER KONKOWSKI, Kan.

The first leg of our honeymoon trip to Mexico was a commuter flight from Detroit to Chicago filled mainly with businessmen. We boarded late, and in spite of the fact that there were many empty seats on the plane, no two were together.

My husband explained to the stewardess that we were newlyweds and would like to sit together if possible. We expected her to discreetly ask one of the businessmen to move. Instead she cleared her voice and announced our predicament on the intercom. That was embarrassing enough, but then, to top it off, every man in the plane stood up simultaneously to change his seat.

— BARBARA WEISS, Mich.

Our neighbor, who works as a guard in a museum of modern art, often tells us about people who don't seem to appreciate abstract paintings. Our favorite story concerns two elderly ladies he overheard one day as they peered quizzically into a gallery. "We've already done this room," said one, pointing to the opposite wall. "I remember that fire extinguisher."

— W.T. GARNER, Ill.

I was waiting in my car, when I saw a couple come out of a store carrying a 30-gallon trash can. They went to a little sports car and spent some time trying to figure out how to carry the trash can in it. Finally, light dawned. She climbed into the passenger seat — and he put the can over her head and shoulders and drove off.

— F.J. DOBRANSKI, Calif.

My father-in-law, who has always dabbled in real estate, recently decided to sell his home and move into a condominium. He was reading a book when a young couple arrived to view the house. The pair voiced approval as they walked through, asking questions as they went. Finally they got to the backyard and passed the hammock where my father-in-law had been reading. Suddenly their interest seemed to evaporate and they left.

My father-in-law was baffled by the couple's change of attitude, until he recalled the title of the book he'd left in the hammock: "How to Make a Killing in Real Estate."

— ELTON D. COLEMAN, Calif.

At a favorite restaurant recently, my wife and I saw that part of the menu had been covered with tape which bore new, higher inked-in prices. We weren't amused, until we noticed the message on the menu, which previously read: "Our prices are most reasonable."

The word "are" had been taped over, too, and replaced by an apologetic "were."

ABC News' 'Viewpoint' examines invasion of privacy

NEW YORK (AP) — Six of every 10 Americans say they favor a law barring TV reporters from questioning people who don't want to be interviewed, and the preference — expressed in an ABC News poll — troubles the network executive responsible for dealing with matters of journalistic behavior.

"It's ridiculous," says George Watson, an ABC News vice president with two decades' experience in the field. "You answer a question, or you don't. Where does the law come in?"

"But the fact is, if enough people who feel like that act in the belief that they can do something about it, it could have a seriously inhibiting effect on reporting the news," Watson says. "We'd better get out and explain to people why we do what we do, what our motivations are."

ABC takes a step in that direction this evening at 10:30 CDT with another edition of "Viewpoint," the network's quarterly analysis and criticism of TV news. Invasion of privacy is the subject of the 90-minute program, which bumps ABC's regular "Nightline" late-night news show.

Ted Koppel, the "Nightline" correspondent, will anchor the show live from the campus of George Washington University in Washington.

Attention to standards and ethics — expressed publicly — has become increasingly important to the TV networks, whose every utterance is witnessed by millions. Criticism of programs or parts of programs is common nonetheless, and more often than not, the complaints come from large corporations or special-interest groups and sometimes other members of the media.

The problem is responding to the criticism — and that's not the same as a desire to answer the legitimate complaint. "Really, it's the age-old problem of how do you talk back to the tube?" Watson says.

One method is the direct response to a specific complaint.

TV Guide said in May that CBS News had been "often arbitrary and unfair" in its handling of a documentary called "The Uncounted Enemy: A Vietnam Deception." The network answered with an internal investigation and a report released to the media conceding "some violations" of its own standards, but supporting the program as a whole.

ABC News took essentially the same tack last month in responding to objections from Mobil Oil Corp. to "prejudicial inaccuracies" in "The Oil Game," a documentary which examined how some oil companies benefited from the government's oil price controls in the 1970s. The network passed on to reporters copies of Mobil's complaint and its own reply along with a transcript of the program.

"Viewpoint" anticipates rather than responds to criticism, and uses actual instances of bad or questionable journalism to illustrate its points. The effect of the program, now a year old, seems to be satisfying to all concerned.

"It's become cliché," Watson says, "but credibility is the most important asset we've got. I would say there is an element of enlightened self-interest in doing the show, and it certainly appears to be the case that you can do well by doing good."

"And," he says, "it's turned out to be more popular than we believed it would be, even exciting at times."

Merle Haggard and George Jones will perform together at Ector County Coliseum Sunday at 7:30 p.m. Tickets, priced at $9.50, may be purchased at Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa. To date, over half the seats have been sold. This concert, arranged in honor of their new single together, will be videotaped.

Children light up screen in four of summer's films

By CAROL OLTEN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Tribes of bright, talented child actors inhabit this summer's movies — ranging from the suburban moppets of "E.T. The Extraterrestrial" and "Poltergeist" to the orphans of "Annie" and the urbane, intellectual brood of "Author! Author!"

Among them are finds resulting from national talent searches (Aileen Quinn, the Annie of "Annie"), unknowns making breaks into show business in fantastic style (Henry Thomas, who plays the alien's friend in "E.T."), "knowns" with family thespian trees (Drew Barrymore, granddaughter of John Barrymore, who portrays Thomas' beguiling little sister in "E.T."), an Al Pacino look-alike (Eric Gurry, who appears as Pacino's 16-year-old son in "Author!"), Heather O'Rourke, the shimmering, 8-year-old blonde of "Poltergeist," and her sister, Tammy, 10, an orphan in "Annie".

The movies suddenly are chock-full of 10-year-old Jane Fondas and Dustin Hoffmans.

There are three leading child roles in Steven Spielberg's summer box office smash "E.T." Spielberg's "Poltergeist" also has a trio of young principals. "Author!" brings together a quintet and "Annie" has flocks of bounding, dancing orphans.

One of the brightest dramatic personas on the screen is Thomas, the 10-year-old from San Antonio who plays E.T.'s best friend. Thomas was cast as young Elliott Taylor after Spielberg heard about him through the film editor of Thomas' feature debut, "Raggedy Man."

Like many child actors Thomas is ambitious and enthusiastic about auditioning for his work. His "Raggedy Man" came of his own initiative two summers ago. Spying an open call casting announcement on an afternoon television news program, he insisted his mother take him to the auditions seeking "an 8-year-old with a Texas accent." Although Thomas appeared on the last day of the call, he immediately was screen tested and got the part. He also was an instant choice for "E.T."

"It's exciting to run across a kid like Henry who is so natural," Kathleen Kennedy, Spielberg's co-producer on "E.T.," noted after casting him in her film. "Almost anyone will tell you that when you're interviewing for kids, you'll go through hundreds of them and then the right kid will walk into the room. He opens his mouth and you know instantly."

Although Kennedy was largely responsible for casting the children in "E.T.," Spielberg as the director of the film is most responsible for their fine performances. He has his own theories about how best to work with children: "You never talk down to kids," he says. "The minute you start talking down to them, you're not really aware of the cosmic changes this generation has made, compared to, let's say, my generation or my parents' generation. It's like night and day. Kids are so much more worldly wise at 10 than I ever was at 16 — and that's a pretty large jump."

Although many directors view child actors as problems, Spielberg frequently finds them easier to work with than adults.

He says, "Kids are more consistent and, I think, in many ways are more spontaneous than adults because they haven't learned to censor things yet. They haven't gotten to the age where they know it's not right to say something just because it's not socially acceptable."

Over half of Jones concert tickets sold

Tom Jones' Sept. 9 engagement is the next concert slated at Chaparral Center.

Tickets may be purchased at Flipside records in Odessa, Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa, and at Chaparral Center. Ticket price is $15.50 and $12.50. To date over half the tickets have been sold.

Hank Williams Jr., originally scheduled for Oct. 16, has had a change of date due to a change in his schedule. The new date for the concert is Oct. 12. Ticket prices have not been announced. Tickets will go on sale for the Williams concert after Labor Day.

Performing at Ector County Coliseum this month will be Merle Haggard and George Jones Sunday, Scorpions Tuesday and Three Dog Night Aug. 28.

Tickets for the 7:30 p.m. Haggard and Jones concert are priced at $9.50. To date, over half the seats have been sold. This concert, arranged in honor of their new single together, will be videotaped.

Tickets for Scorpions are priced at $9.50. Ticket sales have been slow to date for this concert.

Advance tickets for Haggard/Jones and Scorpions may be purchased at Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa. Tickets will be sold only at Ector County Coliseum on the day of the show.

Appearing with Scorpions will be Iron Maiden and Girl School.

Stevenson still looking for prime-time home

By TOM JORY

NEW YORK (AP) — Just as America seems to be losing interest in space flight, CBS comes along with "The Astronauts." It's a half-hour "comedy special" — another name for a pilot that probably won't become a series — that's destined nonetheless to become a footnote in TV history as another attempt to find a prime-time home for McLean Stevenson.

Indeed, the scriptwriters have given the best lines to Stevenson, who's done a basketful of series for CBS and NBC over the last decade. One remark — made in response to a question from his boss — may even be prescient: "I can handle it," Col. M.C. Booker assures. "If not, there's always my brother's shoe store." Stevenson made a name for himself as Lt. Col. Henry Blake, the commanding officer in CBS' "M-A-S-H," starting in 1972. After four seasons, he set out to make it on his own.

"The McLean Stevenson Show" on NBC lasted only four months. "In the Beginning" on CBS barely made it four weeks, and "Hello, Larry," also on NBC, didn't catch on, either.

CBS will broadcast "The Astronauts," starring Granville Van Dusen as Capt. Roger Canfield, Brianne Leary as Jennifer Tate, and Bruce Davison as David Ackroyd.

Canfield, Ackroyd and Ms. Tate are astronauts aboard an earth-orbiting vehicle, and Stevenson's character — Booker — is "your friendly capsule communicator" in Houston.

Booker follows the astronauts' activities on a television monitor 16 hours a day with their knowledge, and the remaining eight without it. That's supposed to be hilarious — tune in and find out why Jennifer chews her pillow, or what Roger tells his private, recorded diary.

The fact is, Booker overhears conversation that is seldom more than mildly amusing, like: Roger — "What in God's name did you do to your pillow?" Jennifer — "Who are you, Mike Wallace?" Or: Roger — "I was doing something personal." Jennifer — "Well, four weeks is a long time." Roger — "I was recording my private log." The last part of the show is consumed in a tedious game of charades.

Wouk's 'Winds of War' comes to TV as miniseries

By RICK DU BROW
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Over at Paramount Studios, Dan Curtis has a $35 million project on his hands.

Curtis is the producer and director of the biggest and costliest TV project ever undertaken, the 16-hour miniseries "The Winds of War," based on Herman Wouk's novel and with a script by the author.

There are times in life when sheer energy is just as important as talent. And this is one of those times for Curtis, whose apparently endless energy is utterly critical as "The Winds of War" comes down to the wire to meet its air dates on ABC during next February's ratings sweeps.

As the deadline approaches, Curtis' final task is a monstrously difficult one — editing the huge amount of footage and doing justice to Wouk's novel after a production that involved 1,785 scenes and shooting in six countries.

To do this final piecing together of the World War II epic starring Robert Mitchum and Ali McGraw, Curtis and a task force of film editors have taken over a floor of a building on the Paramount lot. And Curtis is presiding over the finale of the production into which he has poured four years of his life.

Life in TV isn't supposed to be like that. If you have a two-hour TV movie, noted Curtis, a veteran of the medium, you have one editor and an assistant. But there's never been a TV project like "The Winds of War."

It is not the longest miniseries ever made — NBC's "Centennial" ran 26 hours. But nothing in TV has ever approached "The Winds of War" for logistical complexity and cost, although it does follow the trend of increased interest in World War II by television.

There have been numerous World War II dramas on TV in recent years. Last season, ABC offered the miniseries "Inside the Third Reich," based on the memoirs of one of Adolf Hitler's chief aides, the late Albert Speer. And it was a hit in the ratings.

Curtis said "The Winds of War" will end with the 1941 attack on Pearl Harbor, as did the popular ABC miniseries, "Pearl," and the NBC version of "From Here to Eternity." But Curtis thinks "The Winds of War" will be in a class by itself when it comes to scope and epic approach. When "Pearl" is mentioned, he says: "It couldn't carry the jock strap of this production on the best day of its life."

"The Winds of War" centers around a U.S. Navy commander, Pug Henry (Mitchum), and his family.

A tradition-steeped American military school, The Citadel, has issued a provisional appointment for young Prince William of Wales.

When William's ready for college, U.S. military school ready for him

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — If Prince Charles and Princess Diana have trouble deciding where to send their son to college, a tradition-steeped Southern military school here is willing to help.

Maj. Gen. James A. Grimsley Jr., president of The Citadel, has issued Prince William of Wales a provisional appointment to enter the college as a cadet in the fall of 2000, when he will be 18 years old.

In granting the provisional appointment, The Citadel is committed to reserve a place for Prince William — that is, if His Royal Highness meets its academic and physical requirements.

Prince Charles, heir to the British throne, visited The Citadel's campus in October 1977 to deliver an address and accept an honorary degree. He also was honored at a review of the Corps of Cadets.

Among others who hold provisional appointments to The Citadel are the sons of Sen. Strom Thurmond, James Jr. and Paul. The children of the South Carolina Republican are enrolled in the classes of 1990 and 1993, respectively.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. (AP) — Sports promoter David "Sonny" Werblin and Leroy Jolley, trainer of two Kentucky Derby winners, are among the victims of burglaries in which racing-season thieves took well over $51,000 in jewels and other valuables, authorities said.

Jolley, who trained Foolish Pleasure and Genuine Risk, lost $18,000 in a burglary at his summer home, and a couple staying at the Gideon Putnam Hotel lost $33,000 in valuables, police said.

In the third burglary, police said an undetermined amount of property was taken from the home of Edward McGrath, a wealthy horse owner from Louisville, Ky. Werblin was a guest and reported jewelry stolen.

The value of the items taken from the McGrath home had not been determined, but police said early estimates were more than $100,000.

All three burglaries took place late Tuesday or early Wednesday, and police said they had no suspects.

BISBEE, Ariz. (AP) — Robert Creeley will be the featured poet at the fourth annual Bisbee Poetry Festival to be held in this one-time queen of copper-mining towns.

About 1,000 visitors are expected at the festival, which runs Friday through Sunday and is sponsored in part by a $5,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Dick Bakken, co-director of the festival, said Wednesday the festival may break even this year for the first time. He said participating poets will receive honoraria, also a first for the festival.

Other poets attending will be Jared Carter, Galway Kinnell, Carolyn Kizer, Robert Peterson, Anne Waldman and Frederick Ward. Previous participants have been Allen Ginsberg, Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Dianne Wakoski, Michael McClure, Imamu Amiri Baraka and Alice Notley.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Frank J. Coppola donated his eyes to an eye bank after being told they were the only organ that could be used after his execution, a friend of the convicted murderer says.

Wayne Hufner of the state medical examiner's office, meanwhile, said Coppola's body was picked up by a funeral home Wednesday. Funeral arrangements were not made public.

Joe Ingle, director of the Southern Coalition on Jails and Prisons, said Coppola made the donation because "Frank cared for people."

Coppola was "happy to donate, that really pleased him," said Ingle, who was with Coppola until he was taken from his cell to be led to his death in the electric chair Tuesday night at the Virginia Penitentiary.

An official at the Old Dominion Eye Bank in Richmond said the clinic does not confirm or deny when someone makes an organ donation. The eye bank could use the cornea to restore someone's sight or use the eye for research into the causes and cures for blindness.

Dr. Beverly Gates, a pathologist, said the body must be kept alive on a respirator for donation of such organs as the heart, kidneys, liver and lungs. The eyes do not require any artificial life support for a while after the brain dies.

Coppola, 38, was convicted by a Newport News Circuit Court jury in September 1978 of murdering Muriel Hitchell during a robbery.

Hufner said the funeral home that picked up Coppola's body had asked not to be identified at the request of the dead man's family. The funeral home car was not marked.

Hufner would not say where the body was taken, and said he had no information about funeral arrangements.

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Police in Salt Lake City arrested four people today for questioning following the theft of a wedding gown, furs and silverware from the home of singer Marie Osmond and her husband, officials said.

A police dispatcher who declined to give her name said police also were seeking a search warrant to examine a home believed to contain some of the stolen merchandise.

Provo Police Chief Swen Nielsen said Miss Osmond and her husband, Steve Craig, had been away a few days and returned Tuesday to discover the burglary. Craig called police.

Police said the missing items included Miss Osmond's wedding gown. She and Craig were married June 26 in Salt Lake City.

Nielsen said the burglars entered the home Monday through a skylight after undoing a collar around the plastic bubble.

"We are sure there was more than one (burglar), but how many we don't know," Nielsen said.

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Clayton James Schimmer isn't exactly what he was wrapped up to be.

Mainly, he's a girl.

That's not what the midwife told mother Donna Schimmer when she gave birth to the infant at 4:30 a.m. Wednesday at Sacred Heart General Hospital.

"When the midwife delivered the baby, she said it was a boy and wrapped it all up and put it on my stomach, and he just rested there," Mrs. Schimmer said.

"About two hours later when they took the baby into the nursery to clean it up, they unwrapped it and looked at it and said it was a girl," she said.

"There was no doubt about it. Clayton wasn't a boy."

Clayton James has been renamed Katherine Jane, but Donna and husband Jeff had some explaining to do.

The couple had called family and friends in Los Angeles with news of their son's arrival. They spent the rest of the morning setting the record straight.

"I certainly wish I'd unwrapped it," Mrs. Schimmer said. "I will next time."

ORANGE, Texas (AP) — Two brothers forced their way into a home and held residents there at gun point while they rifled through the house, police said Wednesday.

The brothers were 11-year-old twins. Their weapons were BB gun pistols. And their victims were aged 2 and 6.

Police said the twins held John Tims, 2, and Joshua Tims, 6, at BB gunpoint Tuesday while they searched through a purse belonging to the youngsters' mother. They found nothing and left.

Fonda praised by critics for 'simplicity'

Henry Fonda

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Henry Fonda was an actor critics praised for his captivating simplicity — a lanky plainsman who conjured images of "the average guy...the unspectacular hero."

Tall and broad-shouldered, he was a man who could play presidents or dirt-poor Okies. His distinctive, resonant drawl carried him through more than 80 movies and countless stage performances.

But although his career star shone in New York and Hollywood, his roots remained in his home state of Nebraska.

"I'm Midwest and proud of it," he once told an interviewer. "I'm not asked, and I shouldn't be asked, to play Shakespeare or Restoration comedy classics today, because I'm still Omaha, Nebraska. I've never tried hard to get away from that. When I have tried I've felt phony and if I feel phony then it isn't good. I know my limits."

Fonda, who won an Oscar as best actor this year for his work in "On Golden Pond" and, earlier, a lifetime achievement Academy Award, did not consider himself a great, serious actor — just lucky.

"I think (actor Robert) De Niro is an artist, (Robert) Duvall is an artist," Fonda told Playboy magazine in a 1981 interview. "I don't think about myself like that."

Without luck, Fonda said, "I may never have made it."

Born Henry Jaynes Fonda on May 16, 1905, in Grand Island, Neb., he was raised in Omaha as the son of a printer. He played baseball, was a Boy Scout and said he never had planned to be an actor. He took it up only after dropping out of the University of Minnesota, where he had been a journalism major.

Fonda returned to Omaha, and at the suggestion of a family friend, Dorothy Brando (mother of actor Marlon Brando), he stopped by the Omaha Community Playhouse. The director handed him a script.

"I didn't even understand the typographical layout of the dialogue," Fonda recalled later. "I'd never even participated in high school dramatics. But they were hard up for a juvenile and offered me a part. I said, 'Why not?' Actually, I was too embarrassed to get out of it."

Fonda told another interviewer he had to be pushed on stage the first time, but, "I liked the feeling of being up there after I realized that all eyes were not on me all of the time. I lost most of my self-consciousness and began to relax. It took me three years to decide that maybe this was what I really wanted to do."

From the beginning of his film career, his lanky frame, deep, unclouded eyes and matter-of-fact Midwest speech fitted him ideally for the American hero. Yet he refused to lapse into stereotype. He ranged from the tragic Abe Lincoln in "Young Mr. Lincoln" to the battered migrant Tom Joad in "The Grapes of Wrath" to the light comedy of "The Male Animal."

He favored movies with a strong social conscious, having been deeply affected by witnessing — at age 13 or 14 — the lynching of a rape suspect in Omaha.

Fonda later made a picture about a lynching, "The Ox-Bow Incident," and similar themes carried through many of his films and stage plays. In "Twelve Angry Men," which he produced and for which he won one of his three Oscar nominations, he played a lone juror who convinced the 11 other panelists a young defendant was innocent of murder.

In "The Grapes of Wrath," Fonda was nominated for an Oscar for his performance as Tom Joad, an itinerant Oklahoman displaced by dust storms and the Depression into the vineyards of California.

Joad's farewell to his mother in the final scene stands as one of Fonda's most memorable moments.

"Wherever you can look," he says, "wherever there's a fight so hungry people can eat, I'll be there. Wherever there's a cop beating up a guy, I'll be there. I'll be there in the way guys yell when they're mad. I'll be there in the way kids laugh when they're hungry and they know supper's ready and when people are eating the stuff they raised and living in the houses they built — I'll be there too."

Five-times married, Fonda became the patriarch of an acting family that included his daughter, Jane Fonda, and son, Peter Fonda. He adopted another daughter, Amy.

Protesters maintaining vigil, awaiting arrival of USS Ohio

PORT LUDLOW, Wash. (AP) — Demonstrators camping near the shore of Hood Canal were poised to float a blockade powered by sails and oars today to protest the arrival of the 560-foot Trident nuclear submarine USS Ohio.

A newspaper report quoting unidentified sources close to the Navy said the submarine, designed to fire nuclear missiles, would enter Hood Canal and dock at its new home port in Bangor at 10 a.m. PDT today. The sub was expected to pass by the protesters at the mouth of the canal several hours earlier.

About 100 protesters camped at Jefferson County Park overnight, preparing to use two sailboats, 20 small rowboats and two small motorized boats to block the submarine.

However, dozens of Coast Guard boats are in the area to ring the sub after it surfaces and prevent the blockade.

The Coast Guard has established a 1,000-yard floating restricted zone around the ship. Violation of the zone by protesters could bring up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Demonstrators expect to be arrested, said Morna McLeod, a demonstrations coordinator.

Fresh clothes for any arrested blockaders were sent ahead to Seattle "so they won't have to appear in court in wet suits," Ms. McLeod said Wednesday.

The Bremerton Sun, which serves Kitsap County, where Bangor is located, quoted an unidentified "high-ranking official close to the Navy" as saying the Ohio would dock at Bangor today.

The Ohio is expected to travel through Hood Canal on the surface because it would be risky to bring the $1.2 billion vessel through the Hood Canal Bridge opening submerged, said Vice Adm. William P. Lawrence, commander of the U.S. 3rd Fleet.

The USS Ohio, commissioned last November, is the first of the new generation of Trident class submarines. The first of 10 Trident submarines that will make the Bangor naval base their home port, it will take on 24 Trident I missiles, becoming the most powerful single weapon in the U.S. arsenal.

On Wednesday afternoon, about 40 residents with a beer keg and loud music drove through the protesters' encampment and draped a large sign over two out-houses, reading, "Welcome USS Ohio — Go For It Buddy!" Protesters using the park's only restrooms were taunted by shouts of "No hippie slime in our lifetime," and "Burn them out!"

Seaborne protesters continued their waiting game Wednesday in hopes of blocking the path of the Navy's first Trident submarine, the USS Ohio, by rowing into its path.

Butch Bill, 39, of Chimacum, said, "I was born and raised here and don't need these hippies. Now every time a ship comes through, I'll see this type of people." "I'm protesting the protesters," said Eldean Moriarty, 56. "We need national defense the same as the Russians."

Moments before the local residents arrived, Deputy Bob Haynes of the Jefferson County sheriff's office said of the anti-Trident demonstrators, "We've had no problems with them whatsoever. Most local people don't mind what's going on, even if they disagree with the demonstrators. They like the attention, I think."

Mike Masterson of Portland, Ore., is among those awaiting the arrival of the 560-foot USS Ohio, the U.S. Navy's first Trident nuclear submarine, at the Strait of Juan de Fuca, between Washington state and British Columbia. The protesters hope to block the submarine's path through the Strait and thereby keep it from reaching its home base in Bangor.

Wash. The Coast Guard has established a 1,000-yard floating restricted zone around the ship, violation of which could bring up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine. According to a coordinator for the demonstration, protesters expect to be arrested.

Plane explosion reason unknown; Authorities investigating evidence

HONOLULU (AP) — Authorities were trying to determine who was responsible for an explosion aboard a Pan Am jumbo jet that tore a hole in the floor of the plane, killed a Japanese teen-ager and injured 15 other passengers.

A team of FBI experts on explosive devices was en route from Washington today to help local agents investigate the blast, which rocked the jet as it flew over the Pacific Ocean 140 miles from Honolulu carrying 285 people on a flight from Tokyo to Hawaii.

The experts will try to determine what type of device exploded, how it was constructed and how it was detonated in order "to get an insight into who may have done this," said William C. Ervin, special agent in charge of the FBI's Honolulu office.

ERVIN REFUSED to use the word "bomb," but said, "We're confident it was not a mechanical failure" of the plane.

The flight originated in Hong Kong and stopped at Narita International Airport near Tokyo for about three hours before heading for Honolulu, Tokyo Deputy Police Chief Hiroaki Nakano said.

Police at Narita airport organized a 105-member team to investigate passenger lists, baggage handling and other activities by airport employees connected with the flight, he said.

The explosion occurred near the seat of the Japanese teen-ager and ripped a 1-foot-by-3-foot hole through the floor of the rear passenger cabin into the cargo hold.

The explosion did not penetrate the plane's outer skin, but blasted 14 rivets from the outside of the fuselage.

The explosion caused a drop in cabin pressure that forced the pilot of Flight 830 to descend quickly from 26,000 feet to 10,000 feet, said George W. Harvey, area coordinator of the Federal Aviation Administration.

Twenty-three minutes later, the plane touched down safely at Honolulu International Airport, Harvey said.

THE HONOLULU medical examiner's office identified the dead youth as Toru Ozawa, 16, who was traveling with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Shigetsu Ozawa of Japan. The couple was treated for minor injuries.

Ervin refused to say whether the FBI considered the youth or his family as victims or bystanders.

The FBI was trying to determine if the youth was sitting in his assigned seat and the exact placement of the device, Ervin said.

One passenger, Tom Stanton, 34, of Honolulu, said that after the explosion, there was "all this smoke and debris and passengers screaming, there was a lot of panic in the far back of the airplane, passengers were yelling and screaming."

Stanton, who was about 15 feet from the blast, said he saw the dead youth covered "with an awful lot of blood," lying on the floor with part of his legs "blown away."

The blast occurred two rows behind passenger Zulfikar Ali of Qatar.

"All the passengers started to scream and I saw a woman with a lot of blood on her shoulder," Ali said.

With the air smelling "like firecrackers," Ali said he feared for his life, "because the smoke was so dense I thought the plane was going to blow up."

IN TOKYO, Nakano said that all passengers had left the plane with their carry-on luggage at Narita, where the cabin was cleaned before the plane's departure.

Japanese authorities do not believe the incident was connected to the radical protest movement that has plagued the Narita airport for several years, Nakano said. Appropriation of farmland for the airport, which began operation in 1978, has encountered fierce resistance by local residents and student leftists, resulting in violent showdowns and six deaths.

If today's not your day to buy a car, that's OK!
It probably comes as no surprise to you, but we really don't sell a car to every single person who visits our dealership. We don't expect to. We try, though, in every case, to be very helpful. We'll appraise your present car for you, show you what cars we have available for immediate delivery, explain the details of ordering a specific car from the factory, take you on a tour of our parts and service departments, go for a test drive if you like, and, of course, we'll present you with a very competitive and attractive cost proposal. Here are some examples:

Table with 2 columns: Car Model and Price. Includes 1982 Cavalier Type 10 ($7979), 1980 Chevrolet Chevette ($4141), 1981 Pontiac Bonneville ($6666), 1979 Plymouth Horizon ($3838), 1980 Chevrolet Monte Carlo ($6000), 1979 Honda Accord ($5151).
