Chernenko named to succeed Andropov

MOSCOW (AP) — Konstantin U. Chernenko, a member of the Kremlin's old guard, was named general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party today, succeeding the late Yuri V. Andropov in the Soviet Union's most powerful post.

At 72, Chernenko is the oldest man ever selected to lead the 18-million member party, which governs this nation of 280 million people. For 30 years, he was a close ally of Andropov's predecessor, Leonid I. Brezhnev, but Andropov outmaneuvered him 15 months ago to become party leader.

The Central Committee formally named Chernenko at a special session, called four days after the death of Andropov at age 69. The succession was decided by the 12 members of the Politburo, the country's ruling body.

Konstantin U. Chernenko

In naming Chernenko, the ruling Politburo chose a member of the leadership's old guard rather than hand the reins of power to a member of the younger generation who could be expected to serve a decade or more.

It was a remarkable comeback for Chernenko, who had been pushed aside after Andropov defeated him 15 months ago in a contest to succeed Brezhnev. The four-day delay in announcing the new party secretary had been taken by some as evidence of a political struggle in the Politburo.

The announcement was made by the 300-plus-member Central Committee through the official news media as the country prepared for the burial Tuesday of Andropov, who died Thursday. Andropov had previously been the oldest man to take over as general secretary of the party — at age 68.

Soviet television and radio said Chernenko opened the plenum and called for a minute of silence to honor Andropov, whom he praised for his domestic and foreign policies.

Since Chernenko has had virtually no personal role in foreign affairs, it is difficult to gauge how he will approach the biggest problems of international relations — the deterioration of relations with the United States and the impasse on negotiations on control of nuclear weapons.

But Kremlin foreign policy changed little in the transition from Brezhnev to Andropov, and since Chernenko has been strongly identified with Brezhnev for decades it seemed unlikely that he would institute any radical changes.

The announcement said Chernenko was nominated by Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov and was elected unanimously. Chernenko had nominated Andropov 15 months before, upon the death of Brezhnev.

Chernenko's selection as general secretary still leaves the office of the presidency vacant. The Soviet president is chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, the nation's parliament, but in the Soviet system, the party leadership is the paramount post.

A new president, — a job Andropov took last June — will not be named until the Supreme Soviet's next meeting. Elections for the Parliament are scheduled for March 4, so no announcement is likely before then.

Chernenko lacks significant administrative experience outside the party, but was the No. 2 man in the ruling Politburo after Andropov and was given the job of arranging Andropov's funeral — traditionally a job handled by the successor to power.

Today he led the other 11 members of the Politburo into Moscow's House of Unions, where Andropov's body lies surrounded by flowers. His funeral Tuesday in Red Square will be attended by dozens of world leaders, including U.S. Vice President George Bush.

Western diplomats had speculated that the elderly Chernenko's health might weigh against him in the selection. He was hospitalized with pneumonia last spring and missed one of the Politburo's key public appearances, the May 1 Red Square parade.

Other possible contenders were Grigori V. Romanov, the 61-year-old former party boss in Leningrad, and agriculture specialist Mikhail S. Gorbachev, at 52 the youngest man in the 12-member Politburo.

The three men are the only Politburo members who also hold office

Reagan plans meetings with Hussein, Mubarak

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, seeking to devise new strategies for dealing with the deteriorating situation in Lebanon, is holding back-to-back meetings with Jordan's King Hussein and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

Reagan was scheduled to meet with Hussein at the White House today and with Mubarak on Tuesday. The three are also scheduled to have lunch together at the White House Tuesday.

Meanwhile, the White House announced today that Vice President George Bush would consult later this week with Prime Minister Benito Craxi of Italy and President Francois Mitterrand of France, both of whom have troops in the multinational Lebanese peacekeeping force.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said that Bush, on his way home from Moscow for the funeral of Soviet President Yuri Andropov, will meet with Craxi in Rome on Tuesday and Mitterrand in Paris on Wednesday, Speakes said, with the discussions focusing on the redeployment of the U.S. contingent in the multinational force.

Speakes also said today that if Lebanon and Israel decide to abrogate their May 17 agreement, under which Israeli troops would be removed from Lebanon if Syrian troops also depart, such a step would be satisfactory to the United States.

He said that the United States supported the May 17 agreement and "we still support it. But if the two nations agree they want to abrogate it," the decision is theirs, he said.

Asked about the U.S. response if Lebanon tries to back out of the agreement without Israeli approval, Speakes said "unilateral abrogation is hypothetical."

Over the weekend, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said he favored the withdrawal of all of the 1,600 American Marines from Lebanon within 30 days, but said he doesn't rule out they could return later. Other officials say a return is unlikely, however.

Speakes said the administration might explore replacing the American troops with a U.N. force, although Undersecretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger said he didn't think troops from other nations should "go into that maelstrom to get shot at."

Eagleburger said he didn't think a U.N. force could be arranged until the situation in Lebanon "is stabilized."

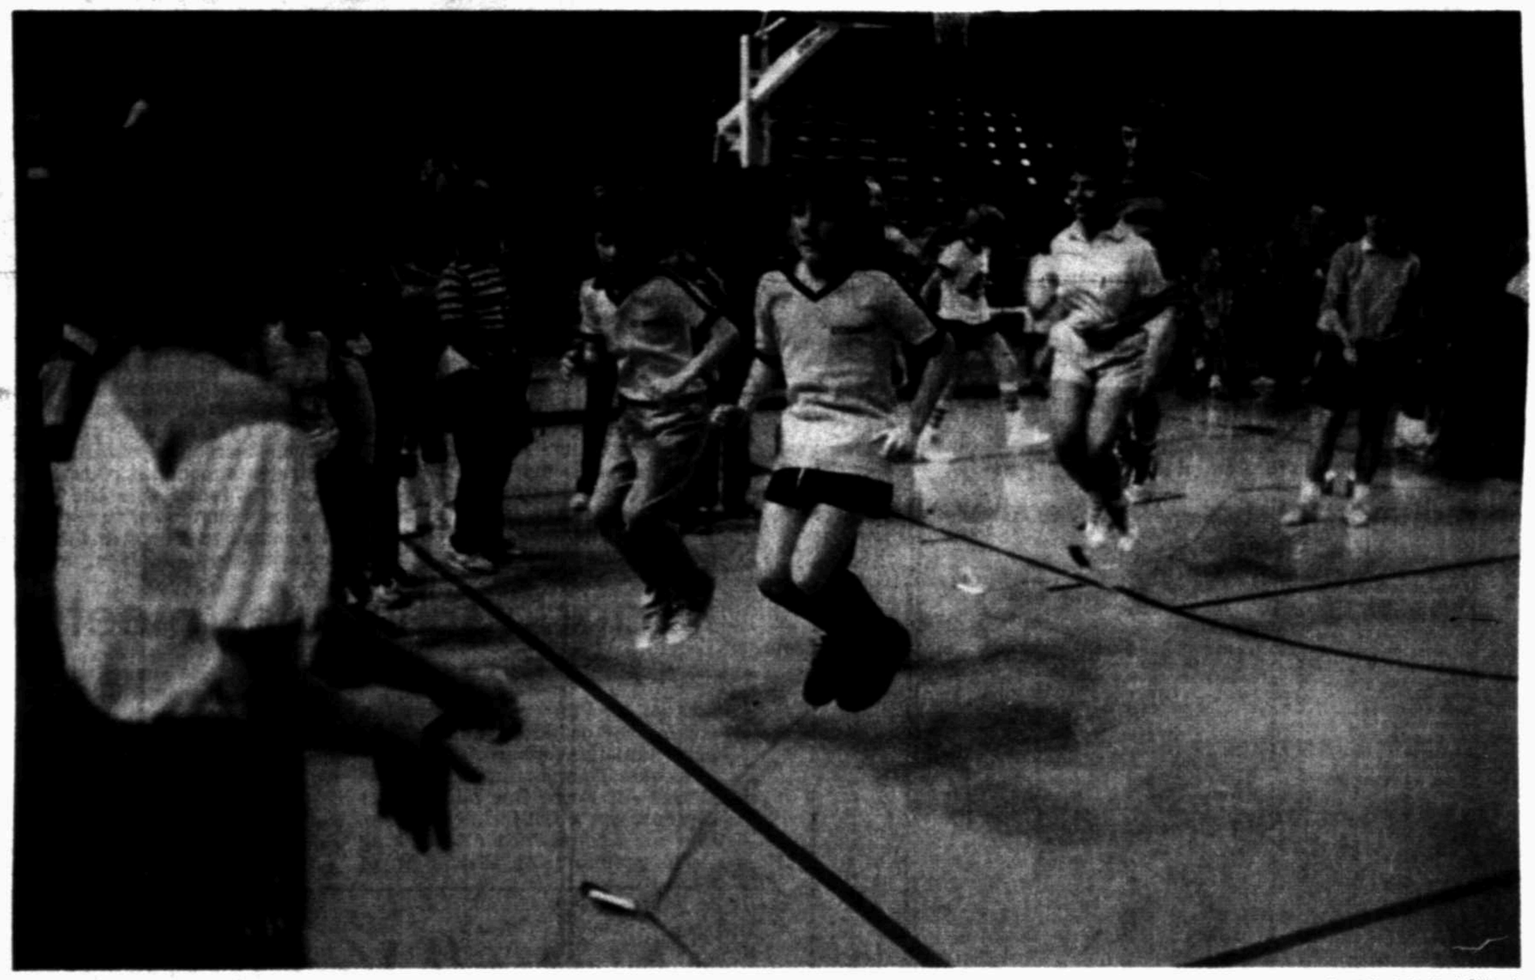

Hussein and Mubarak, both leaders of moderate Arab nations friendly to Washington, met for dinner at a Washington hotel Sunday night. It was only the second time the leaders of Jordan and Egypt have met since before Egypt was ostracized by the rest of the Arab world for signing the 1978 Camp David peace accords with Israel.

They also conferred briefly at a meeting of non-aligned nations in New Delhi last year. But the two nations still do not have diplomatic relations.

The two leaders embraced when Mubarak arrived at the Four Seasons Hotel to greet Hussein. Secretary of State George P. Shultz accompanied Hussein, but left before Mubarak got there. Shultz planned to meet with Hussein later today.

Speakes said Reagan and the Arab leaders would "discuss the obvious — the current situation, how these two leaders can be helpful in resolving the immediate situation in Leba-

Teen endures fire to save two brothers

JEAN, Nev. (AP) — A 13-year-old who helped his two young brothers out of their flaming home while flames licked his back remains in critical condition with burns, but he still doesn't realize he's a hero, his father says.

"He seems to have some concept that people have been talking about it, but he doesn't understand the scope of it," said Jimmy Holsclaw of his son, William.

The boy underwent skin graft surgery Sunday and was in critical condition with second and third-degree burns over nearly half his body, but his father said he's optimistic.

"I think he's going to make it," said Holsclaw. "He's a real fighter."

William endured flames licking up his back Friday to hand his 3-year-old and 4-year-old brothers out a window to his father.

"He stood there and handed me them babies out while he was (being burned), said Holsclaw. "He never looked up or hesitated a minute, he did just what he was supposed to do.

"The flames were in there coming up his backside," he added.

Not all Valentines have heart

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) —

"You clumsy, puffy porpoise,
"So flabby, fat and lazy,
"It's too bad you're not a hog,
"For you'd then be quite a daisy."

It's not exactly sweetness and light, but this "Vinegar Valentine" is among the Margaret Woodbury Strong Museum's collection of 700 missives from the 19th century — when folks took Valentine's Days seriously.

"Dearest! an answer soon return
"And let me by that answer learn
"That still I'm not esteemed the less
"Because my love I must express."

So reads another, more sentimental, of the verses on display or in storage at the museum.

"Americans have always been great lovers of Valentine's Day," says Elaine Challacombe, museum librarian, who's cataloging the testimonials to bliss eternal and devotion unswerving.

"It used to be on Valentine's Day, when you chose a Valentine, it was the same as choosing a wife," Mrs. Challacombe said.

That tradition faded over the years, but the Valentines collected by the late Mrs. Strong show that sentimentality remained a powerful force each Feb. 14.

"Oh! grant me, Love, my one desire,
"Thou fairest that was ever seen;
"Then thou shalt reign o'er Love's Empire,
"And sway the sceptre as its Queen."

That verse is inscribed on an 1880s-vintage card by one Ernest Nister of Bavaria, who had offices in New York and London and sold Valentine's cards all over the world.

Nister's card features a pink-and-blue map of the Land of Love, which is a heart-shaped island buffeted by the Sea of Agitation, the Sea of Sighs and the ever Jealous Sea.

The Land of Love's unusual topography includes Bachelor's Bay, the Islands of Introduction, Cape Courting and — horrible thought — the Desert of Indifference.

Another Valentine of the same period shows two flowers on bended knee in front of a third flower, apparently a clergyman who is marrying them. An inscription reads:

'Fritz's blitz' makes him front-runner in Iowa

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Walter F. Mondale's "Fritz Blitz" campaign through Iowa has stranded the other candidates for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination, leaving them to seek front-runner status in the second tier of contenders.

Campaigning Sunday in Des Moines, Sen. Alan Cranston said he has to "come in a clear third in the voting" in the Feb. 20 party caucuses across the state — the first test of strength among Democratic rank-and-file.

Cranston, meeting with members of the Jewish community, said his goal in Iowa is "to emerge as the alternative to the two front-runners, Mondale and (Sen. John) Glenn."

Part of the reason Cranston thinks a third place finish looks good in Iowa is the massive, labor-aided organization Mondale has working for him.

Across town from Cranston's campaign stop, about 250 volunteers were gathered in a plumbers' union hall. They sang a "Dear Fritz Mondale, We're blitzing for you" fight song before telephoning and writing letters to the supporters of other candidates.

The people gathered in the hall were not even Iowans.

"We believe enough in Walter Mondale to get up at 5 o'clock in the morning and bus down here and spend our weekend working for him," said Maureen Keating, who, with the others, had traveled from Mondale's neighboring home state of Minnesota.

WEATHER SUMMARY

The Forecast For 7 a.m. EST Tuesday, February 14
● Low Temperatures
Rain Snow Showers Flurries

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecastsrain for Tuesday for the Southwest and from northern Florida to the Great Lakes.

Summer weather forecast for area

Winter, which blew in last December on unprecendently frigid arctic air, barely has reached its midway point, and yet the National Weather Service is predicting Bermuda shorts weather for Tuesday.

A high of 80 under fair skies is expected.

That compares with a pleasant 63 recorded Sunday and a low this morning at the freezing mark.

The low tonight should be in the upper 30s with winds southeasterly at 5-10 miles per hour.

No precipitation has been recorded this month by the local NWS station, nor is any forecast. The year's total remains at 0.41 inch.

STATE

Residents of two East Texas cities cleaned up damage left behind from the season's first tornadoes, while American Airlines was forced to cancel scores of flights because of hail damage to 28 jets at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport.

Lowell Duncan, American's vice president for communications, said 103 flights were canceled Sunday and another 73 flights were scrubbed today after a Saturday night hailstorm battered the planes.

Most of the damage was to the skin of the aircraft, said company spokesman Al Becker. "It's a laborious process to get them repaired," he said.

The hail was part of a system of violent weather that moved through the state late Saturday and early Sunday. Besides damaging tornadoes that hit the East Texas towns of Palestine and Normangee, thunderstorms triggered twisters that danced around San Antonio and skirted along the upper Gulf Coast.

At least five tornadoes were spotted in and around San Antonio early Sunday, according to the National Weather Service.

Police confirmed that two of the twisters touched down — one on the south side of the city and the other in the southeastern sector. Some damage was reported to southside businesses and utility service was interrupted, but no injuries were reported, authorities said.

Another twister hit the East Texas town of Normangee Saturday evening, flattening a lumber yard, causing extensive damage to a downtown area and injuring at least three people, the Leon County sheriff's department reported.

A second twister Saturday evening near Palestine caused heavy damage to 10 houses and a school, police chief Hunter Williams said. Two people went to the emergency room at Anderson County Memorial Hospital with minor injuries.

Other twisters were spotted in the Houston and Galveston areas Sunday morning.

NATION

Mild temperatures early today triggered rains and thunderstorms and dense fog over the upper Midwest and Great Lakes.

Temperatures in the 50s extended from lower Michigan to the eastern Gulf states and southern Atlantic coast.

Rain followed the moderate temperatures extending from Wisconsin across the Tennessee valley to northern Florida and light rain and drizzle dampened areas from central Minnesota to to western Upper Michigan. Freezing drizzle glazed northern Minnesota and snow whitened eastern sections of the Dakotas.

Dense fog covered wides areas from the northern Great Lakes to the mid Atlantic coast with travelers advisories in effect for southeastern New York state.

Rain showers were scattered through the northern intermountain region, changing to snow in the Central Rockies.

Chernenko rose through party ranks

MOSCOW (AP) — Konstantin U. Chernenko, named today to lead the Soviet Communist Party, is a veteran ideologist who rose through the party ranks alongside his ally of 30 years, former President Leonid Brezhnev

He lacks significant administrative or policy-making experience, but his lifelong service to the party makes him a figure behind which a diverse membership could rally.

At 72, Chernenko is the oldest man ever picked to lead the party, which rules this nation of 280 million people. He was by protocol the No. 2 man on the ruling Politburo, after the late President Yuri V. Andropov.

Chernenko's ties to Brezhnev went back 30 years, when he was party propaganda chief for Brezhnev in the southern Republic of Moldavia.

When Brezhnev replaced the ousted Nikita S. Khrushchev as general secretary in 1965, he named Chernenko chief of the party's General Department. In 1976, Chernenko was made a member of the Central Committee Secretariat. Those responsibilities included internal party watchdog and national liaison work.

Last July, it became known that the General Department's work was handed over to Klavdi Bogolyubov, a 75-year-old with career links to Chernenko.

Chernenko emerged as chief party ideologist during Andropov's rule, although there are indications that Andropov kept a strong hand in ideological questions.

Publicly, the two men, who had been considered rivals to succeed Brezhnev, appeared to have reached a rapprochement, with Chernenko echoing Andropov's themes on countering Western influences and propaganda, and indoctrinating people in the need for party and labor discipline.

Many of the old hierarchy were perhaps threatened by Andropov's campaign to restore party order and integrity, and fearful of his talk of experimenting with the planned economy.

For them, Chernenko's long association with the more tolerant Brezhnev could be calming.

Chernenko was hospitalized with pneumonia last spring and unable to make the Red Square parade marking May Day. He did not appear in public until the mid-June Central Committee plenum devoted to ideology in which he made the opening speech.

There was no public appearance from him most of the summer, and it was not known whether he was vacationing like most other older members of the Politburo, or was ill. He reappeared in the fall, meeting visiting Communist delegations, chairing several party gatherings and authoring articles on ideology.

Unlike many Politburo members, Chernenko has held no responsible posts in government and has no experience in managing industry or in foreign affairs.

Chernenko was born to Russian peasants in the central Siberian city of Krasnoyarsk, more than 2,000 miles east of Moscow, on Sept. 24, 1911.

He became chief of a Komsomol — Young Communist — department in 1929, joined the party in 1931 and 10 years later was a local party secretary. He graduated from the Higher Party School in Moscow in 1945 and from the Kishinev Pedagogical Institute in 1953 — the extent of his higher education — and then began the long climb in party ideology and propaganda work on Brezhnev's coattails.

In 1966, a year after Brezhnev made him chief of the party's General Department, he became a non-voting member of the Central Committee. He was made a full member in 1971 at the age of 60, made a national secretary in 1976, a non-voting member of the Politburo in 1977 and a voting member the next year.

In 1979, Chernenko went to Vienna with Brezhnev for the summit meeting with U.S. President Jimmy Carter, but U.S. officials said he spoke little, appearing more to serve as an aide-de-camp to Brezhnev.

His travels outside of the East Bloc include Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Greece, Guinea and Paris for the French Communist Party Congress in 1982.

In Moscow, he has been a chief greeter of foreign Communist Party delegations.

in the powerful Central Committee Secretariat, which controls day-to-day administration of the all-powerful Communist Party.

The new leader undoubtedly needed support from powerful Politburo members such as Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov, 75, and the veteran foreign minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, 74.

Bush predicted in London on Sunday that "we could be at some kind of turning point" in East-West relations following Andropov's death.

Few Western analysts in Moscow, however, expect the new Soviet leader to institute radical changes in either foreign or domestic policy.

Chernenko put forward Andropov's name as nominee for general secretary before the Central Committee on Nov. 12, 1982, and also nominated the Soviet leader as Soviet president last June.

However, the ceremonies were seen as part of Chernenko's protocol responsibilities as the second-ranking member of the Politburo, and not as a real sign that Andropov and Chernenko had reached an alliance after their reported struggle for power.

During Andropov's early months in office, Chernenko was heard from only rarely, but there were reports that he was leading a faction of Brezhnev loyalists in resistance to changes Andropov wanted to make in party leadership and policy.

As Andropov's tenure neared an end, Chernenko's writings appeared more frequently in the Soviet media and a new volume of his speeches and essays was published earlier this year.

In an article written before Andropov's death and published in the Sunday Times of London, Chernenko said improving relations with the United States is "more important than ever before."

Repeating the standard Kremlin line on U.S.-Soviet relations, he added, "We are in favor of an active and fruitful dialogue with nations living under a different social system to ours, the United States and Great Britain in particular."

But Chernenko stressed, "The Soviet Union has great military might. We are capable of meeting any challenge effectively. We hope, however, that nobody will be tempted to test the Soviet Union's strength again.

"We are not seeking military superiority, of course, but we will not conceded to any nation gaining such superiority over us."

In his writings and speeches, Chernenko has taken a classic Soviet ideological line, stressing the need for tight party discipline and loyalty.

Although he advocated efforts by the party to keep in touch with the rank-and-file, Chernenko's works indicate clearly he has no more tolerance for internal or East Bloc dissent than any previous Soviet leader.

"Practice has shown that wherever 'pluralism' is flourishing, the party is gradually losing its combat ability," Chernenko wrote in April 1982, four months after Poland declared martial law and crushed the Solidarity labor movement.

Chernenko's travels outside the East Bloc include Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Greece, Guinea and Paris.

'Frtiz's blitz' makes him front-runner in Iowa

Mondale's position as the acknowledged front-runner made him the target, along with President Reagan, during a 2½-hour nationally-broadcast debate here Saturday among the eight major candidates.

Mondale, though, shrugged off their barbs.

"This is the trash period. We're getting close to these elections and people are saying things," Mondale said. Aides say Mondale's attitude is part of an effort to be "presidential" about it all.

During the debate — the last chance Iowans had to see the candidates together before the caucuses — the contenders made clear that Reagan is the enemy.

Glenn called the president's policy in Lebanon a "moral outrage."

Mondale reminded the audience that a second term could give Reagan the opportunity to make several appointments to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"That could well be the end of the rest of justice in America," Mondale said.

Nonetheless, when Glenn was not attacking Reagan, he was going after Mondale, especially Mondale's support from big labor.

Glenn referred to television commercials in which Mondale says, "I am ready" to be president, and asked:

"Is the United States ready to listen to special-interest leaders, the king-makers, the bosses, the power brokers, who would anoint a nominee?"

Even before the debate, Glenn's campaign announced plans to file a complaint today with the Federal Election Commission that the Mondale campaign is receiving improper financial assistance from organized labor.

Others also took swipes at Glenn.

Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, who is concentrating his efforts in New England and the South, said, "I don't know who's going to pay for the promises of Fritz Mondale, but I also don't know who's going to pay for the inexperience of John Glenn."

Public opinion surveys say up to one-half of the Democratic voters in Iowa are undecided about who should be the party's choice to face Reagan in November.

David Nagle, the Iowa Democratic chairman, concluded that the debate may not have markedly changed the picture, but, "The talent in the second tier is beginning to emerge."

It was former Sen. George McGovern — not Mondale — who won the loudest and most sustained applause from the nearly 2,500 people who viewed the debate staged by the Des Moines Register.

McGovern told the crowd:

"If you really believe that I'm the closest to your views on the issues before this country, you owe me that vote for this reason: it's the only way you're going to be able to send a message to whoever you think is the nominee of the direction in which you want that man to go...Don't throw away your conscience."

Former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew directly accused Mondale of lobbying against consumer interests by working on behalf of a firm seeking to build a natural gas pipeline in Alaska.

Mondale replied, "I have led an honorable and decent private and public life."

"I want you to understand, Reubin, that I have always served the public's interest," he added. "That is the very reason I am in politics."

non and how they can be helpful in moving the president's Middle East peace initiative forward."

Speakes, commenting to reporters aboard Air Force One on Reagan's return from a California vacation, said the administration's thinking "is in tandem" with that of Egypt and Jordan. He suggested Hussein and Mubarak could be helpful in persuading Syria to moderate its stand in Lebanon, where Reagan has announced most U.S. troops will be withdrawn to offshore ships.

Hussein arrived in Washington Sunday after a ski vacation in Colorado. Mubarak arrived Saturday. Asked if Lebanon could be salvaged, Mubarak replied, "That's what we're here to discuss."

Regarding substituting U.N. troops for the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon, Speakes told reporters that a U.N. force "might be worth looking into" and that the administration has "had some consultations with the secretary general on that."

In the past, officials said the Soviet Union, whose approval would be needed, has been cool to the idea, but Speakes said Sunday, "There have been public statements to suggest that Syria and the Soviets would be more amenable to a peacekeeping force than in the past."

Not all Valentines have heart

"A whisper in the merry dance
"A little flutter of the bosom
"A tender sigh, a melting glance
"Behold, the bud has grown a blossom."

Handmade Valentines were more popular before the Civil War, but the senders often took shortcuts by copying poetry from books published by people who went by such pseudonyms as "A Literary Lady."

The following verse sent in 1854 to William Loveless of Glens Falls may be an example of such a cribbed verse:

"Couldst thou know how fondly
"This bosom beats for thee
"And how my soul still treasures
"The words once breathed to me
"Thou wouldst not deem me heartless
"Nor call me cold and changed."

The signature appears to read Clary Maurice, but Mrs. Challacombe said the museum has many Valentines sent to Mr. Loveless from other lovesick ladies.

In spite of Loveless's name, she said, "He must have been very popular."

To get back to the "Vinegar Valentine," it's from a poster-size card from the 1890s dedicated to "A Fat Slob" that portrays a grotesque woman with the face of an unshaven longshoreman.

"You clumsy, puffy porpoise
"So flabby, fat and lazy
"It's too bad you're not a hog,
"For you'd then be quite a daisy.
"To an oleo-margarine factory
"I warn you, don't go near.
"You'd be such a prize, they'd seize you
"And melt you down, I fear."

The proliferation of such "Vinegar Valentines" in Great Britain actually led to a law saying recipients could not be reimbursed once they had paid postage — which was then often paid upon delivery.

"They had so many irate fathers going to the post office and demanding their postage back because their daughters had been insulted," Mrs. Challacombe said.

Teen endures fire to save brothers

Holsclaw said his son's T-shirt and underwear were burning and flames were licking through the bedroom as the youth felt his way to find his little brothers.

"I've never been so proud of anything in my life as what that boy did," said Holsclaw. "I couldn't hardly stand it sitting there watching him burn. I didn't think he was going to get out, but he made it."

Holsclaw was sleeping in the living area of the small trailer and his wife was at work when a faulty coffee pot ignited flames in the hallway. Unable to reach the boys in the bedroom, he went outside and broke the bedroom window.

William's 3-year-old brother was also listed in critical condition with burns over 20 percent of his body, but Holsclaw said doctors believe he will be able to leave the hospital in four or five days. The other boy was uninjured.

"The doctor says we'll be able to bring him home...if we have a home to go to," he said. "That's what we have to do now — find some place to live."

The family's trailer, located behind a small casino in Jean, about 30 miles from Las Vegas, was destroyed and Holsclaw said he had no insurance to cover the loss.

The casino owner has given the family a motel room to stay in and Holsclaw, a mechanic for another small casino, said he is hopeful he can rent another trailer.

Russell Smith, a neighbor, said he wasn't surprised by the youth's actions.

"He's just a great kid, he always has been ever since I've known him," said Smith. "He's just a jam up kid."

Valentine, Texas postmaster Leila Doris Kelley poses in front of the post office in Valentine. Her Feb. 14 postmark is a collector's item nationwide, and once again she's almost surrounded by bags of mail sent to her for remailing.

Small Texas town has special postmark for Valentine's Day

VALENTINE, Texas (AP) — Eleven months out of the year, Postmaster Leila Doris Kelley handles the mail for this far West Texas hamlet, but her duties increase substantially towards Valentine's Day, thanks to an influx of cards from sweethearts and collectors.

It's no problem, though. For Mrs. Kelley, it's a labor of love.

Over the past 30 years, her special valentine postmark has become a high-demand item in late January and early February.

This year is no different. For a couple of weeks, Mrs. Kelley has been surrounded by bags of valentines sent here for remailing, complete with the heart-shaped postmark stamped "Love Sta."

"That's not bad, though," Mrs. Kelley said. "It's good. I love this work."

By Feb. 1, she had received about 100 envelopes containing one or more valentines. Last week she had affixed her special mark to hundreds more, she said, as the cards kept rolling in. Most arrive by mail truck from El Paso and are returned there for distribution.

"I expect 2,000 or more total," she told The Dallas Morning News.

Most of her business comes in the week or so before Valentine's Day. But she stops using her special postmark Feb. 15.

"People are always disappointed if it gets here late, but I can't put an old date on the postmark," she said.

Mrs. Kelley said she received mail from 45 states before Valentine's Day last year and put the special stamp on about 5,000 pieces of mail in a recent year.

The post office is not the only local establishment affected by the valentine fever. Most of the year, this town of 350 quietly concerns itself with the ranching and railroad businesses.

But in late January and early February, some travelers passing through Valentine on U.S. Highway 90 interrupt their journeys when the idea hits them to send a card from here.

"It brings a lot of business. You'd be surprised," said Mayor Chuy Calderon, owner of a general store next to the post office.

Among Calderon's hottest-selling items are hand-painted Valentine cards with a local touch. "I Ran Across This Valentine in Valentine, Texas," says one card, with a drawing of a red heart covered with tire-tread marks.

House created for homeless animals

MIDLOTHIAN (AP) — A zoologist says quarters in her halfway house for the sick and homeless are always crowded these days, but residents hardly ever complain about conditions.

Karen Wakeland's Ellis County farmhouse has been home for the past two years for at least 600 wild and domestic animals who have fallen victim to rapid development in suburbs from Arlington to Plano and Cedar Hill.

"Every time a tree is cut down and a house or office building goes up, several animals lose a home," she told The Dallas Morning News. "We want to give them a place to stay — at least for a little while."

Last year, the farm became the Animal Rehabilitation Center Inc., a nonprofit halfway house for animals who have been injured or left homeless.

Two years ago, Mrs. Wakeland and her husband, Charles, got the idea for the center after they were wakened from sleep by a Cedar Hill police officer, who held an owl with an injured wing. The bird had been hit by a car.

Mrs. Wakeland, a zoologist, had recently moved to Midlothian from New York. She patched the owl's wing and released it in the wilderness near the planned Joe Pool Lake.

THE FARMHOUSE, OFF U.S. Highway 67 in the shadow of the Cedar Hill water tower, was home last year to 157 opposums, 76 raccoons, 12 coyotes, eight foxes, a bobcat and even an alligator that was found in Lake Arlington.

The zoologist said a great horned owl was left in a cage on the Wakelands' porch.

Mrs. Wakeland said the area in and around Cedar Hill has always held an attraction for a variety of wildlife. She said newspaper accounts from as late as 1957 revealing that a mountain lion was shot and killed in the hills west of the city.

"Every time a new condominium or house is completed in Cedar Hill, we'll usually get a call from someone who'se got a raccoon or opossum in his attic," said Mrs. Wakeland.

She said the number of homeless animals in the area will probably increase because rapid development, spurred by construction of Joe Pool Lake, is expected to triple Cedar Hill's population by 1986.

But Wakeland said residents in larger, well-developed suburbs have called the center to report wild animals in their back yards.

"We got a call one day to come pick up a red fox that was seen just trotting aimlessly along busy Collins Street in Arlington," Wakeland said.

THE WAKELAND FARM IS NOW home to 40 animals, including Bugs, a goose from Plano who lost his female mate in a car accident.

"He thinks our truck is now his mate," said Mrs. Wakeland. "He's our watch-goose. He squawks at anyone who comes near our car."

Animal guests at the farm include at least 20 cats perched on window air-conditioning units, seven geese, 15 ducks, a goat named Bozo and a peacock who twists cats' ears until she gets dibs on their canned food.

"One time we had an overnight guest who found five goats crawling all over his rent car the next morning," said Wakeland. "He had to pay extra to have the car cleaned."

A former researcher at the Bronx Zoo in New York, Mrs. Wakeland said she also takes in animals from other area shelters and veterinarians, private citizens and game wardens.

ALSO HOUSED AT THE CENTER are two black leopards, Sheba and Natashja, who had been living in the garage of two college students in North Dallas.

"They bought the cats when they were cute and little without realizing that they grow to 65 pounds and it costs a lot to feed them," said Mrs. Wakeland.

Food and housing for animals at the center cost $6,184 a year, only part of which was paid through membership fees and donations for the center. But the Wakelands said they plan to continue the orphanage for animals.

"I knew what I was getting into the second day I was married to Karen," said Wakeland, "when she made me grind to a screeching halt in the middle of the road to pick up a tiny lost kitten."

Lutheran church helps Valley families

SAN JUAN, Texas (AP) — When economic disaster blew into the Rio Grande Valley on the winds of a norther seven weeks ago, Rev. Armin Steege had $16 in his church's emergency fund and a box of checks that had lasted seven years.

Since Jan. 1, Steege's church, St. John Lutheran, has gone through two boxes of checks and has given nearly $7,000 to farmworkers idled since crops were destroyed by the late December freeze.

Need among farmworker families is so great that last Tuesday Steege dispersed a $1,500 check from Lutheran Social Services in 75 minutes. The money helped people keep lights on and a roof over their heads and bought others butane for cooking and heat.

"I wasn't around then, but it must have been something like this during the Depression," said Steege, 35, a native of Waterloo, Iowa.

His congregation is one of the few non-Catholic churches in the Valley providing direct assistance to families down on their luck.

"We sent some money over for St. John's to give out because we don't like to handle cash here," said Sister Carol Anne Messina of the United Farmworkers Minstry. "We had no idea that he would turn it into a full-scale social program. They're doing a great job in the best Christian tradition."

With the help of his volunteer "angels," Steege provides food, clothing a sympathetic ear to the hundreds of people who have found their way to St. John's.

Small and predominantly Mexican-American, St. John Church has fewer resources than many larger, predominantly-anglo Valley churches.

"But somebody has to do this," said Steege, who worked in the Buenos Aires, Argentina, slum of Rotiro before coming to the Valley seven years ago.

Most area churches aren't aware of the economic dificulties of the Valley where 17,000 people are unemployed, Steege said.

"Much of the Valley looks fine, a little brown is all," he said. "People aren't lying in the streets. But when you start doing something like this, you immediately have 100 people at your door and you realize what's going on."

Steege writes checks to utility companies or landlords, but not to individuals seeking aid. And when help is given, the recipient signs a receipt saying he'll try to repay when he can.

"The main reason for the receipts is respect for a person's dignity," Steege said. "A lot of these people have trouble taking handouts."

News of the program has spread only by word of mouth. There are no signs at the church indicating what is going on inside — the volunteers packing sacks of groceries, fitting clothes to children or carrying supplies in from trucks parked outside.

Boys' home being investigated

DALLAS (AP) — A Texas Department of Human Resources official says that more than one of the 10 boys in an unlicensed, private Dallas County boys' home may have been injured during their stay at the facility.

Authorities are investigating the home, after a 15-year-old Mesquite boy was treated for six hours at Parkland Memorial Hospital Saturday for injuries hd rZid hd rdbeived in a beating there.

DHR workers then removed the other nine boys, aged 8 to 15, from the home and started an inquiry.

"We are still looking at that (other possible injuries)," Bill Betzen, a DHR supervisor, said Sunday. "I can't say much more than that.

"These boys have been through a lot," Betzen said.

He said the boys spent Saturday night at the Dallas County Emergency Shelter.

The boys were taken from the Morning Star Boys Home on Saturday, after one of the boys told a police officer he had been beaten.

The name of the 15-year-old has not been released by authorities. He ran to police outside the home when an ambulance arrived to check on an adult at the home who was suffering from chest pains.

'Golden Fleece' goes to regional office

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., today gave his February "Golden Fleece" award to the Fort Worth, Texas, regional office of the Urban Mass Transportation Administration for "flatly mismanaging $64 million of capital improvement projects" between January 1981 and May 1983.

"Look no further for the classic case of runaway federal spending," said Proxmire in announcing the award, given monthly for what he considers wasteful or ridiculous use of taxpayers' money.

The Fort Worth office received 399 applications for local transportatiion projects and accepted all but one, Proxmire said.

He said federal auditors found the office had, among other things, awarded grants to build garages for buses that didn't exist, to buy spare parts that weren't needed and to replace trolley buses whose ridership averaged less than two passengers per trip.

Over a 29-month period office managers took 44 trips to attend various conferences and meetings but only seven to visit projects that were funded, Proxmire said.

"I think it's unfair for us who are presently here to be hit with that report," responded Scott Tuxhorn, deputy regional administrator of the office, who said the problems cited arose before he and the current regional administrator took office last summer.

Slain pastor buried

DUBLIN (AP) — About 250 mourners gathered at a memorial service to eulogize the Rev. John Howard Basham as investigators continued trying to piece together details of the pastor's killing.

Parishioners at Sunday's memorial service at the First United Methodist Church were closemouthed about reports of Basham's double life.

"We don't want to say any more right now," said Bill Crouch, Erath County Deputy Sheriff and a member of the church.

Unknown to his congregation, Basham, who disappeared Monday on his way to receive a church award in Dallas, had been arrested and convicted in Dallas on sex- and drug-related charges in the 1970s, according to court records.

The Rev. Bob F. Weathers, district superintendent for the Central Texas Conference of the United Methodist Church, told mourners "there are no easy answers" to the questions raised by the death.

"Something meaningful and purposeful will come out of this tragedy if we open ourselves to God," Weathers said.

Meanwhile, investigators said they were studying Basham's past for clues that might lead them to his killer.

"The preliminary indications are that he led a double life" that he kept secret from his employers and friends, a Palo Pinto County investigator, who asked not to be identified, told The Dallas Morning News. "It's an odd situation."

The 55-year-old pastor's body was found Thursday night in the back of his Volkswagen van parked alongside Interstate Highway 20, about 40 miles north of Dublin.

According to Dallas County court records, Basham was convicted in 1976 on drug possession charges, fined $100 and served six months probation. Two years later, he was arrested on a prostitution charge, pleaded guilty and was fined $400.

One minister who knew the family told the News that Basham's wife and children were aware of the legal problems.

The minister, who did not wish to be identified, said Basham told his family that he was innocent of the 1978 prostitution charge against him but that he quietly pleaded guilty to keep the case from being publicized.

"He was witnessing in this part of town (in Dallas), asked a prostitute for directions and was arrested by an undercover cop," the pastor said.

He said he did not know how Basham explained the drug conviction.

In Dublin, a community of 2,770 people 100 miles southwest of Dallas, residents say they were unaware of Basham's past and had nothing but respect for him.

"The only way I would believe this is that it would have to be proven beyond a shadow of a doubt, and I don't think they're going to do that," said Jay Watson, 68, who had known Bahsam for 27 years.

Church officials said they also were unaware of Basham's problems.

Basham was traveling Monday to Dallas to meet other Methodist ministers for their annual meeting at Southern Methodist University's Perkins School of Theology.

Basham, who had served as the pastor of churches in 13 Texas cities before moving to Dublin 18 months ago, was to have received an award the next day from the Texas Methodist College Association.

THE BETTER HALF

"Good news and bad news! The good news is we'll never be held for ransom by terrorists!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, February 14, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: How very appropriate that someone as romantic and perceptive as you were born on Saint Valentine's Day! Sincere and idealistic, your friendships and romantic relationships are deep and long-lasting. Try not to get so involved so quickly. Your career could change direction in the next few months. Those in politics enjoy wider public support. You find that you have an aptitude for investigative work. Overseas business interests are under especially favorable influences. Celebrities sharing your birthday include legendary sportscaster Mel Allen, skater JoJo Starbuck, hockey's Boom-Boom Geoffrion, Ohio State's Woody Hayes, actress Florence Henderson and the late Jack Benny.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Attention to detail can mean the difference between profit and loss. A special gift puts your valentine in a romantic mood. Parents need to pay more attention to their children's activities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Once you get into the swing of things, a new job or project is a breeze. An imaginative approach keeps routine work from becoming boring. A financial situation shows steady improvement.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Enter a financial venture with your eyes wide open. Do not lend large sums to friends. Someone makes an interesting offer. You get an opportunity to earn extra cash.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Think things through before making a business commitment. Romantic partner helps you achieve success. Bypass the social scene until your bank account has grown. A pleasure trip enjoys favorable influences.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You like the people you meet today. Travel leads to romance. Your career or occupation takes on a new significance. Have a specific plan and success will come sooner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Assistance is on the way. Settle outstanding bills. An innovative idea will help you move up the career ladder.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A speculative venture or older relative brings you good luck. Artistic pursuits and travel prove both exciting and lucrative. Discard outdated work methods. Someone special wants to be your valentine.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A loved one's behavior confuses you. Your plans could falter because of disagreements or rising costs. Writing a letter brings immediate results -- perhaps even additional financing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be aware of a cat-and-mouse situation at work. Self-discipline and an older person's advice are powerful assets. Do not act on impulse. A good day for signing contracts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Happy Valentine's Day! A close personal relationship intensifies. When trying to reach an agreement with someone who is difficult, a direct approach works best. Emphasize the need for logical procedures.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stick to the facts when trying to negotiate a new agreement with mate. Nothing will be gained by making a rash decision about your relationship. Work on a favorite project or hobby.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get a once-in-a-lifetime chance to wipe away a tiresome obligation. Count on loved ones' support. Those dreams of marriage can come true, but only if you take the initiative.

Tri-Star sparkles in Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Many new film companies have proclaimed themselves "instant majors." Tri-Star Pictures is the real thing.

After a year of operation, Tri-Star has completed six feature films, will start three in the coming weeks, has acquired three more and plans to release eight to 10 movies during 1984.

Among the films in post-production are "The Natural," with Robert Redford, Robert Duvall and Glenn Close; "Songwriter," starring Kris Kristofferson and Wille Nelson; "The Muppets Take Manhattan," with Dabney Coleman, Linda Lavin, Gary Coleman; "Blame It on the Night," with Nick Mancuso; and "The Texas Project" (temporary title), starring Sally Field and Ed Harris.

The Tri-Star acquisitions include "Santa Claus," a spectacle by the producers of "Superman;" the sequel to Sylvester Stallone's "First Blood;" and "The Evil That Men Do," with Charles Bronson.

The backers are three independent giants, CBS, Home Box Office and Columbia Industries, which helps to explain how a new company can be so ambitious.

Each contributed $67 million to create Tri-Star. Bank loans and the sale of ancillary rights bring the total capitalization to a staggering three-quarters of a billion dollars.

For a company engaged in the movie trade, Tri-Star has conducted its affairs with zero flamboyance.

The two company heads are lawyers: Victor Kaufman, the New York-based chairman, who is a former Columbia Pictures executive; and Gary Hendler, president and head of Hollywood operations, who was once attorney for Robert Redford, Jane Fonda, Barbra Streisand, Sean Connery and Sally Field.

"Actually, I've been with the company less than a year," said Hendler, a conservatively dressed man of 45 with an attorney's coolness. "I decided to take the job on Feb. 14 last year. I finished up my law practice and began the job on April 15."

Tri-Star's first production was the baseball tale, "The Natural." Redford, who starred in the project, told a theater owners convention at Disneyland last November: "I do have a personal relationship with Gary Hendler, so I can say from the standpoint of an artist that I know something about the machinery (of Tri-Star)."

But did the new company know anything about dealing with a superstar? The trade buzzed with rumors that "The Natural" plunged over budget because of Redford's dissatisfaction with the script.

While declining to give any figures, Hendler said.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK93 ♡6 ◇K104 ♣AQJ92
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Don't get overly excited by your very fine hand. If partner has a minimum response with all his values in hearts, you won't come close to making game. Bid one spade. If partner can't make a voluntary rebid, you are going nowhere.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠1092 ♡853 ◇KJ63 ♣A95
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ♣	Pass	3 ♣
3 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Your vulnerable partner, in the face of two opponents who are contesting the auction, has on his own contracted for nine tricks. You have a good hand for him, but so far have said nothing. A mere preference to partner's first-bid suit doesn't do your hand justice. Jump to four spades.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K83 ♡A10765 ◇Q5 ♣952
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ♡	1 ♠	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Your king of spades has improved in value because it is behind the overcaller. That, however, simply means that you now have maximum raise to two hearts. Take a demerit if you even briefly contemplated some other action.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K83 ♡A10765 ◇Q3 ♣952
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Same hand, but this time you passed and partner opened in third seat. With 9 HCP and five-card support for partner's suit, you should make every effort to get to game. Jump to three hearts. Note the difference between these two problems. In Q.3, you could show your values by competing freely; here you must jump to show your strength.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠QJ7652 ♡8 ◇953 ♣J62
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♡	3 NT
Dble	?

What action do you take?

A.—Partner has said that he thinks he can take nine tricks at no trump. Why should you doubt him? Pass. Had partner wanted to hear about your spades, he could have doubled two hearts rather than bid three no trump.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQJ7 ♡AJ ◇6 ♣KQJ876
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Partner probably has at least a six-card heart suit on this auction, and he has not yet limited the strength of his hand. However, you have already told the world that you have a strong hand. Therefore, you need do no more at this turn than bid four hearts. If partner is weak, that will be high enough; if he is strong, it's his responsibility to make the next move.

Joining the world

Last week a friend of ours moved.

It was a pretty major step for him because he had lived in only one place all his life.

The trauma was compounded because our friend — we'll call him David — suffers from a particular medical condition that makes him extremely susceptible to disease. He had lived his entire life in a germ-free plastic bubble that enclosed a portion of his parents' Houston home. He left that bubble Tuesday; he can never return to its safety and solitude.

It was a new world — a dawning — for David. He had never felt the touch of his mother's hand, his father's face or stood beside his sister. David's disease — severe combined immune deficiency — made it an impossibility. Up until Tuesday, the world as all people know it was an alien land to David.

Now it isn't, but the danger isn't gone. David has received a bone marrow transplant doctors hope will give his body the ability to fight disease. David had to leave his bubble home because he was suffering bouts of diarrhea, fever and vomiting. Doctors said they could not treat him effectively unless he left the bubble.

Thousands of Texans have watched David grow up in his plastic world through news reports. Now the young man has to learn to live in a world full of hidden dangers, dangers that can't even be seen but can kill.

When our friend walked out of that plastic home Tuesday, he didn't walk out alone. The hopes and best wishes of thousands of the state and nation's residents are with him for a long and happy life in our world.

Double hypocrisy

Soviet delegates to the two disarmament conferences in Europe last week chose the platforms they offered to deliver simultaneous broadsides to the United States, accusing this country of openly courting nuclear war and sabotaging all efforts at arms limitation.

The tirades by Igor Andropov, son of the Soviet leader who died last week, at one meeting in Stockholm followed the familiar, tedious and wearisome pattern.

What made these harangues especially ironic, however, was the timing. They happened to come just as reports were filtering out of India about a new Soviet offensive launched in Afghanistan, where the war grinds on as interminably and inconclusively as the Iran-Iraq conflict.

Using tanks and helicopter gunships, the Soviet troops, aided by a small Afghan government force, slaughtered several hundred civilians in the Shomali Valley only about 30 miles from the capital, Kabul. It was a punitive expedition — the civilians were suspected of having assisted the guerrillas who continue to thwart the massive Soviet war machine's conquest of their country.

In the light of this development, could any truly neutral disarmament delegates take the Soviet mouthings with any seriousness?

Another View:

Put your ears on

Given the compulsion of politicians to turn every issue into combat and every combat to advantage, the fact that Congress and the White House actually met on Wednesday to discuss the massive national debt is something of a national triumph.

But unless the next meeting makes more sense than the first, the bargaining effort is on its way to something of a national tragedy.

The White House proposed a series of budget cuts and closures of tax loopholes that would leave next year's budget deficit exactly where administration estimates now put it — $180 billion. Congressional Democrats countered with proposals for much bigger reductions that would mean, among other things, stretching out the defense buildup and dropping a plan to index income taxes against inflation. The White House found these unworthy of discussion. End of meeting.

Then Democratic leaders of Congress challenged the administration to give them a list of defense cuts that it would accept. It was a fair challenge. The president sent to Congress a bloated defense budget that it knew Congress would not accept.

Perhaps the two weeks between now and the next meeting will be enough time for the brutal messages of economists to sink in.

Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, started the education process by publicly challenging, at some risk to his next paycheck, the assumption in the president's budget message that cutting the deficit is not so urgent that it has to be done this year. If something is not done immediately to get the federal government's big credit card away from it, he says, the deficit will reach $300 billion a year by the end of the decade — four-short years from now, the way budget years are calculated.

He was followed by Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, who repeated a warning to Congress that the deficits now are a "clear and present" danger to the economy. Asked whether Congress and the White House could wait a year to get to work on the deficit, he said that this would be a "big gamble." Volcker urged an immediate $50 billion cut in the deficit. The White House entered Wednesday's negotiations talking of a $20 billion cut in the deficit.

Then came Rudolph G. Penner, director of the Congressional Budget Office, who raised the Feldstein estimate for a 1989 deficit from $300 billion to nearly $400 billion.

Is the White House listening?

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

U.S. pushing Egypt back to fold

WASHINGTON — Egypt is making progress in its efforts to return to the Arab fold, from which it was summarily banished after signing the Camp David accords with Israel. Recently, the Egyptians were admitted back into the Islamic Conference, and in the next few weeks it may be allowed to rejoin the Arab League.

Jack Anderson

All this diplomatic activity has a certain urgency for Egypt, which desperately wants to find friends among moderate Arab states as a means of protection against Moscow-backed radicals like Libya and Syria. And the Reagan administration is quietly encouraging the Egyptians, in hopes that Cairo will regain the leadership role it lost at Camp David and thwart the Kremlin's mischief-making in the Middle East.

The importance of the U.S.-Egyptian diplomatic offensive is underscored by President Hosni Mubarak's current visit to Washington for White House talks on the stalled Reagan peace initiative for the Middle East and Egypt's desire for a large increase in U.S. aid. It is the second time in six months that Mubarak has met here with President Reagan and his top advisers.

Continued behind-the-scenes administration support for Egypt is sure to be an important part of the White House talks. Meanwhile, classified cables seen by my associate Lucette Lagnado disclose both Egypt's courtship of its Arab neighbors and the administration's steps to further the reconciliation.

One cable, for example, reveals that Egypt has been signing a number of secret trade agreements with other Arab states in recent months. Some of Egypt's new trade partners were among her shrillest critics during the boycott of Egypt that followed Camp David.

One agreement is with Iraq. Egypt has been sending the Iraqis old Soviet weapons and spare parts for their war against Iran — as the United States ships more new weapons to Egypt. Now, Iraq and Egypt have signed a trade agreement.

Although the agreement amounts to only $35 million, its political significance is far greater. It sends a signal to the radical Arab states that Egypt and Iraq have come to terms. Already, Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has toned down his anti-Cairo invective.

Egypt also signed a similar trade agreement with Lebanon — economically paltry, but a political challenge by Egypt to the Syrians.

The State Department document reveals that Egypt is negotiating a trade agreement with Jordan, which also feels threatened by the radical Arab states and the free-wheeling terrorists they support. The political importance of this trade agreement was acknowledged in discussions in Egypt between Peter McPherson, director of the Agency for International Development, and the Egyptian minister for economy and trade, Moustafa El Said, according to the cable.

The Egyptian cabinet minister made a point of stressing how important trade expansion with its Arab neighbors is to Egypt — and how important continued U.S. aid is as well.

UNDER THE DOME: Most political candidates welcome help from just about any quarter short of the Kremlin and the Ku Klux Klan. Not Rep. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

The conservative Senate candidate complained to the Federal Election Commission that "Americans for Phil Gramm '84" has misled contributors into thinking they were giving money to his official campaign committee. He asked permission to write to contributors and tell them they can ask for refunds if they feel they were misled.

The group's fund appeal says it is "not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee," and identifies itself as "an independent project" of the conservative Congressional Majority Committee.

Gramm apparently fe!ls the group's efforts will cut down on donations to groups he controls. But such independent operations are, in fact, legal.

— The House Ethics Committee is investigating whether an aide to Rep. Robert Walker, R-Pa., deliberately leaked a document to William J. Turenne, a lobbyist for the Eli Lilly Co. Neither the congressional aide, Hugh Coffman, nor Turenne would comment, but my sources say Coffman told his boss that Lilly had in fact obtained the document through his "carelessness."

— Last August, I reported that Rep. Judd Gregg, R-N.H., was erroneously charging that transcripts of a hearing conducted by the late Rep. Ben Rosenthal, D-N.Y., had contained altered remarks. In a fiery floor speech, Gregg claimed he had "definite documentation" to back up his charge. But when the ethics committee looked into the matter, it found none. And the committee noted that Gregg had described his accusatory speech as "hyperbole."

INSIDE REPORT:

CIA nixed attack on Syrians

WASHINGTON — The Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) tipped the balance against pressuring Israel to attack Syrian-controlled gun positions near Beirut in conjunction with the Marine pullout, overruling the State Department at a time when Secretary George Shultz was out of town.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

CIA Director William Casey and his Mideast analysts gave President Reagan this warning: An Israeli attack clearly designed only to help the U.S. would further diminish American influence in the Arab and Islamic world.

State Department officials who successfully pushed the new U.S.-Israeli strategic agreement last year wanted to test it by urging Israel to send its war planes against Syrian gun positions. Insiders said privately that if Shultz had been here during top-level meetings on the Marine withdrawal, Casey might have lost out.

DARMAN TURNS TOUGH

Conservative Republican legislators attending the first session of budget "down payment" negotiations last Thursday were surprised and cheered by toughness of a key White House representative: presidential assistant Richard Darman, considered evil incarnate by many right-wingers.

Darman, a onetime aide of liberal Republican Enliott Richardson and a leader of the White House "pragmatists," made clear at the negotiating session that President Reagan would not bow to Democratic demands for higher taxes and lower defense spending. That was in sharp contrast to his role as a compromise-seeker two years ago during similar budget negotiations.

A footnote: The probability that the negotiations will produce more political propaganda than results was reflected in the one aide that Democratic Sen. Daniel Inouye of Hawaii brought to the negotiations: his press secretary.

TIP VS. RON

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill regretted, at least for a time, his emotional criticism of President Reagan's Lebanon policy during a White House session with congressional leaders, confiding to an old friend: "I hope I wasn't rude to the president."

Rude or not, Reagan was angry after his run-in with the speaker. It was by order of the president himself that White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters the next day that the Democrats were playing "partisan politics" with Lebanon. The president himself joined the sniping by suggesting the speaker was ready to "surrender" in Lebanon.

A footnote: House Democratic leaders declined the annual personal briefing by the president on the budget this year on grounds they had other engagements. That avoided a recurrence of last year's briefing when the speaker and president engaged in a shouting match.

FRITZ'S SOUTHERN EXPOSURE

Although Walter F. Mondale has lengthened his lead over Sen. John Glenn for the Democratic presidential nomination, the latest Southern poll shows remarkably soft support for a front-runner and a major deficit against Ronald Reagan.

A new, 1,000-voter survey in nine Southern states by pollster Claibourne H. Darden Jr. gives Mondale 44.5 percent to Glenn's 22.8 percent and the Rev. Jesse Jackson's 10.1 percent among Democrats and independents. But only 40.2 percent of Mondale's voters are "hard," a drop of 10 percentage points from the last survey.

That softness makes Mondale vulnerable in the South to a "viable contender" for the Democratic nomination, according to Darden. But there are no "viable contenders" in the present Democratic field. Mondale's weakness is shown in his 35.1 percent against Reagan's 61.1 percent among Darden's sample of 2-to-1 Democratic voters.

ED MEESE'S BOO-BOO

It was only a small boo-boo because Vice President George Bush did not get upset and joked later about it, but he was put down unintentionally by attorney general-designate Edwin Meese III at ceremonies celebrating President Reagan's announcement of his re-election bid.

Introducing top administration officials at a large meeting in Constitution Hall where the president outlined second-term hopes to his political appointees, Meese referred to Jeane Kirkpatrick as "the best ambassador this country has ever had at the United Nations."

Meese had forgotten that Bush, seated beside the president on the platform, served as U.S. ambassador to the U.N. from 1971 to 1973. When Bush spoke, he wryly repeated what Meese had said about Kirkpatrick, adding: "And I am in a special position to know."

CHARLEY REESE

Put poverty industry out of work

Recoveries and recessions are never uniform and today in some areas of the country, the economy is booming and in others, like the industrial Midwest and Northeast, things are still terrible.

Charley Reese

So I want to make it clear that this column is about people in the areas where there are plenty of jobs, specifically people on unemployment in areas where there are plenty of jobs.

When the newspaper classifieds are full of ads for jobs and when you can count 17 separate help wanted signs in a short drive as I just did in my city, then you know there is something wrong when the unemployment rate is still high.

Since most people are so bashful about telling the truth, I'll tell you why you can find jobs and unemployed in the same areas in some parts of this country. There are basically two reasons.

One reason is that there are some people who through no fault of society or government are not qualified to do much of anything. We in this country provide a public school system, night school systems, community colleges, vocational and technical education schools, and plenty of financial assistance for all of them. There is not much excuse for a person to walk into a personnel department and say they aren't trained to do something.

Yet there are people who turn their backs on all of that opportunity. A job, you know, isn't an act of charity. It's a trade. The employer has work he wants done and is willing to swap money for it. The employee wants money and is willing to swap his labor. But just as the employee wants and deserves a fair wage, so the employer wants and deserves a fair day's work.

Nobody has a right to a job and it is up to the individual to prepare himself or herself so that he can offer an employer something of value. When people fail to do that, they don't deserve a job.

The second reason you find unemployed in boom areas is that the cockeyed welfare system makes it more profitable for some not to work.

Rep. Bill Dannemeyer, R.-Calif., has estimated that a family of four with zero income and few assets could be eligible for up to $19,000 or less a year.

Now this state of affairs is stupid and unjust. A welfare system should never provide people with a disincentive to work. It should never pay people who don't work more than they could earn if they do work.

All of this public welfare comes right out of the sweat and labor of those working families. That's why it's a system which robs the worthy to aid the unworthy.

No decent American objects to helping the handicapped, the elderly and the orphaned. No decent American objects to helping people who want to work but can't because their mills have been shut down. In fact, helping our industrial workers whose jobs have vanished has to be the number one domestic priority in this country.

But we do object to being forced to help people who turn their backs on jobs. These people are just bums, and some of them are second and third generation welfare bums.

In the last 20 years, according to Dannemeyer, the federal government alone has spent over $471 billion on assistance to the allegedly needy. No question that some of that money went to people who were genuinely needy and deserved the help. No question either that some went to people who don't deserve a dime's worth of public assistance. And, for sure, there is no question that the bulk of it went to bureaucrats and hot shot administrators and academics who make a comfortable livig in the poverty industry.

This kind of spending, not defense spending, is the cause of the deficits and it is simply a result of cheap politicians using public money to buy votes.

Let's reserve our compassion and our resources for those who deserve it and if the bums don't wnat to work, let them starve. As for the bureaucrats and academics and executives in the poverty industry, it's time for them to find out what it's like to stand in an unemployment line.

Three of the space shuttle Challenger's crew members pose with their small sons Saturday as they returned to Houston from their eight-day mission. From left are Robert Gibson with son, Paul, 18 months; Ronald McNair with son, Reggie, two; and Vance Brand with son, Erik, three.

Challenger in better shape than other shuttles after flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Challenger came back to Earth in such good shape that there should be no trouble sending it back into orbit in a record 53 days, despite a failed brake, 31 damaged tiles, hazy windows and scraped tires, NASA says.

The space plane completed its eight-day Florida-to-Florida mission Saturday with the first landing at its launch site, and the space agency said Sunday it returned as the cleanest shuttle yet.

"The orbiter is very clean, in better shape than any of the others," Ken Coffey, shuttle mechanical systems officer, told reporters.

All major systems are in fine condition, he added.

The ship's next launch date is April 4, the 11th shuttle flight and fifth for Challenger. That means it would be back in space 53 days after landing, nine days sooner than any previous shuttle turnaround time.

Landing the shuttle in Florida cut six-to-eight days off the launch preparation time, eliminating the need to ferry the space plane across country on the back of a Boeing 747 jetliner after touchdowns at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

Most shuttle flights in the future will land back in Florida, except for special cases, such as the first flight of the third shuttle, Discovery, in June, and tests of the orbiter's automatic landing systems. NASA wants the added safety margin of the wide open dry lakes at Edwards for these flights.

During the next mission, Challenger's crew is to rendezvous with a defective $100-million scientific satellite, and a free-flying astronaut using a jet-pack is to move over to the payload, secure it and bring it into the shuttle cargo bay for replacement of a faulty electronics box. Then it is to be returned to its own orbit to resume its interrupted study of the sun.

Astronauts Bruce McCandless and Robert Stewart proved that the gas-powered jet-pack works during the just completed mission when they became the first humans to work in space without a safety line to the mother ship.

Shuttle could retrieve satellites but operation would be costly

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA could use the shuttle in an attempt to salvage the two $75 million communications satellites now drifting in useless orbits about the Earth, but the difficulty and expense might outweigh the benefits, experts say.

The Westar VI and Palapa-B satellites — owned respectively by Western Union and the government of Indonesia — failed to reach their designated 22,300-mile-high orbits after they were launched from the shuttle Challenger on the flight that ended Saturday.

Officials at Hughes Aircraft Co., which made the satellites, said in both cases rocket boosters snuffed out early, stranding the satellites in lopsided orbits that bring them as close as 165 miles to Earth at times, and as far as 650 miles at others.

Data from the craft indicate they are healthy and could function normally if they were in the high orbit. But neither has enough remaining rocket power to be nudged to the proper elevation, although NASA did just that with a Tracking and Data Relay Satellite that went astray after launch last year.

At a post-landing briefing Saturday, shuttle director Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson called the idea of using the orbiter to rescue the satellites "an exciting prospect to think about."

"If they (the owners or insurers) ask us to look into it, then we'll begin to do more serious planning," he said.

The shuttle is already planning to rescue a satellite in April, but that assignment poses far less difficult problems.

On that mission, Challenger will rendezvous in low orbit with the Solar Maximum, a science satellite that stopped working because of an electrical problem. Astronauts using a jet-pack and a robot arm will bring the Solar Max into the cargo bay for repairs and then release it back into orbit.

Such a rescue is possible on Solar Max because — unlike the communications satellites — it is in a low orbit and was designed to be snared by the shuttle if necessary.

Before salvage of the communications satellites could start, scientists would have to bring them to a lower orbit within the shuttle's range, by firing rocket thrusters on board the craft.

The shuttle, by special thrusting at launch, can reach an orbit of about 260 miles — as it will on the April flight.

"If the satellite was brought down to an orbit of 260 miles or so, it would be theoretically possible," said Dick Young, chief of the flight planning branch at the Johnson Space Center.

But even if the satellites were within rendezvous range of the shuttle, there would be significant hardware problems.

Both satellites are spinning at about 50 rpm, a twisting motion that keeps them stable but is far too fast for safe approach. There are rockets on board designed to stop the spin, but these might be expended in lowering the orbit, according to Bill Ziegler, a Westar expert with Western Union.

Terry Neal, a Johnson flight crew equipment expert who helped plan the April mission, said that even if the spin could be stopped, there would still be the problem of grabbing and holding the satellites.

"It would take some modifications to the orbiter (shuttle spacecraft)," said Neal. "And there would have to be some sort of grapple device attached to the satellites."

Scandals tarnish city's image

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — The Chamber of Commerce had just launched a three-year, $600,000 image-building campaign for greater Augusta when the county sheriff walked into a federal courthouse and pleaded guilty to two counts of obstruction of justice.

In the next 42 days, the mayor and a city councilman were indicted on federal extortion charges, a district attorney was charged by a state grand jury with theft by deception and a recall drive was started for four members of the Richmond County Commission.

"It's safe to say we will be re-evaluating our national advertising campaign," said Charles Bellmann, executive vice president of the Chamber of Commerce of Greater Augusta.

The scandals were a shock for this east Georgia city, which for years has built its national reputation on the Masters Golf Tournament it hosts each spring.

"Anything that has a collective negative impact like this has got to affect you, but you can't stick your head in the sand," Bellmann said. "You have to re-tool and go on."

Augusta's troubles can be broken roughly into two areas — a city government scandal involving Mayor Ed McIntyre, City Councilman Joseph Jones and real estate agent Mary Holmes, and law enforcement problems created by the resignation of Richmond County Sheriff J.B. Dykes and the indictment of District Attorney Sam Sibley Jr.

A federal grand jury returned indictments Jan. 17 accusing McIntyre and Jones of demanding payoffs totaling $33,000 from two companies seeking to do business with the city. The panel also accused McIntyre and Ms. Holmes of demanding payoffs of more than $100,000 from an FBI agent posing as a Florida developer interested in developing city-owned riverfront property.

McIntyre has denied the charges, refused to resign and vowed to seek re-election next year. He insisted in an interview that his indictment will have only a "minor effect" on programs he has initiated in the two years he has served as Augusta's first black mayor.

McIntyre claimed credit for sparking a new era of cooperation between the public and private sectors of Augusta, a partnership he said has spawned a wave of downtown renovations, a surge of economic development and a rebuilding of inner city neighborhoods. Many business leaders agree.

H.M. O'Steen Jr., chairman and president of Bankers First Federal Savings and Loan Association, said the mayor "has helped create the positive attitude and the public-private partnership needed in any revitalization effort."

The charges against McIntyre and Jones, who also is black, may have political and racial implications for the city's future.

The mayor's two principal accusers in the indictments, other than the FBI agent, are his immediate predecessor, former Mayor Lewis "Pop" Newman, and L.D. Waters, who resigned as chairman of the Augusta Port Authority last fall in a dispute over the location of a proposed city marina.

City attorney Roy V. Harris has called the indictment a "personal grudge" between Waters and McIntyre.

Waters acknowledged that he and Newman are the only two Augusta residents in an investment group that has been trying to obtain city-owned riverfront land to develop.

The arrests of McIntyre and Jones prompted charges of racism from such black leaders in Atlanta as Mayor Andrew Young and Fulton County Commissioner Reginald Eaves. McIntyre said he was in no position to comment on those charges.

Meanwhile, law enforcement in this city of just under 50,000 residents on the banks of the Savannah River across the border from South Carolina has been in transition ever since Dykes' resignation and the indictment of Sibley.

Dykes, elected three years ago on a campaign pledge to "take politics out of the sheriff's department," entered his plea Dec. 6 and was sentenced to four years in prison on Jan. 6 for threatening witnesses during a federal investigation of a ticket-fixing scandal.

The quick decision to set up a county police department with an appointed chief angered many county residents, who began a petition drive to recall the four commissioners who voted for the new department.

Lobbyists spend more than lawmakers make

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lobbyists spent at least $39.3 million trying to influence Congress in 1983, an amount that exceeds the combined federal paychecks of the 535 lawmakers.

The $39.3 million is only a preliminary total based on latest reports filed with the Senate secretary and House clerk by the approximately 6,000 registered individuals and groups working Capitol Hill.

Late-filed reports that will become public in about three months should push last year's lobbying outlay beyond $40 million.

Even without the final figures, lobbyists spent an average of $73,527 for each senator and representative. Members of Congress now are paid $72,200 a year, although legislation is pending to cut this back to $69,800.

Lobbying cost $8.51 million in the first three months of 1983, jumped to $11.55 million in the second quarter and reached a peak of $12.13 million in the third quarter.

The preliminary total for the final three months — when Congress was in session only about half the time — was $7.13 million. It is unknown how much money will be listed in the late reports, but late reports for the last quarter of 1982 totaled $2.56 million.

Based on the incomplete 1983 totals, the biggest spender was Common Cause, the self-described citizens lobby, which reported outlays of $1,955,118.

Common Cause says it always appears at or near the top of the spending list because it attributes all its costs, including those of its magazine, to lobbying.

In second place for 1983 was Free the Eagle National Citizens Lobby, a conservative group that relies heavily on direct mail to push for restricting federal authority, deregulating the economy, attaining a balanced budget and returning to the gold standard.

The organization reported spending $1,637,361 in the first three quarters of 1983. Its late report for the final three months could push its total beyond Common Cause's.

Although there was no major fight in Congress over gun control last year, four groups representing both sides of the issue combined to spend $1,515,364, with several fourth quarter reports still to be filed.

Two continuing battles involving billions of dollars accounted for heavy spending.

The Natural Gas Supply Association, pushing for decontrol, reported spending $1,448,074 in just the second half of 1983.

The Committee for Fair Insurance Rates, an industry consortium opposing legislation that would outlaw gender discrimination in setting insurance prices, said it spent $1,470,585.

NAACP turns 75, continues with its 'longest struggle'

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1909, Enolia McMillan was 5 years old, Benjamin Hooks was not yet born and the NAACP — which they would one day lead — was a daring new response to rampant racism.

On Sunday, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People turned 75, no longer considered daring but still battling racism in what its leaders call "the longest struggle."

The anniversary was marked with gospel music and speeches in a simple but exuberant church meeting in Harlem, where 1,500 people cheered denunciations of the Reagan administration and heralded the NAACP's ties to organized labor.

They also applauded Hooks, the organization's executive director, and Mrs. McMillan, its newly elected president, as the pair called for a return to traditional values and historic goals.

The NAACP, Hooks said, "may have lost its glamour, but if we keep on doing the work, we'll be like the old ugly cow that keeps on giving the milk."

Mrs. McMillan called on the NAACP "to just keep on down the road we've been traveling. Yes, it's rough and there are huge roadblocks. But you don't have to take those other roads. We can still knock some of those roadblocks away."

The keynote speaker, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, said labor and civil rights have shared common goals, "but these are not the goals of Ronald Reagan."

"He yearns for 'the good old days' before the Civil Rights Act," Kirkland charged. "He apparently believes that poverty builds character, and that affirmative action, job training and even unemployment compensation deprive workers of their self-reliance."

Haitian corporal faces charge of air piracy after hijack try

NEW YORK (AP) — A Haitian army corporal faces a charge of air piracy after attempting to commandeer an American Airlines flight from Port-au-Prince, Haiti, to New York, officials said.

Jean Phillippe Windsor, 34, was scheduled for arraignment in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn today. He turned over a submachine gun to the pilot during the flight, and surrendered to FBI agents after the plane landed late Saturday night, officials said.

Flight 658 was preparing for takeoff en route to New York's Kennedy Airport when Windsor, who was not a scheduled passenger, entered the plane and demanded to be flown to New York, authorities said.

FBI spokeswoman Susan Bailliere said Sunday the man was "fleeing to the U.S." but declined to confirm whether he'd asked for asylum.

Man's liver can't be transplanted

LIBERTYVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Doctors say they cannot go through with plans to transplant the liver of a traffic accident victim who died four days after his life was prolonged because he coughed.

Alan Supergan, 20, of Glenview, died Saturday of heart failure despite four days on a life-support system.

Supergan, who suffered extensive brain injury in a highway accident Feb. 4, had been ruled brain-dead and was being readied for organ-removal surgery Feb. 7 when he coughed slightly. That prompted new attempts to revive him.

A specialist at University of Tennessee hospital, where Supergan's liver had been destined, said the organ is no longer usable because of deterioration while Supergan was on life support.

Motive absent in women's deaths

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — Police say they have no suspects and no motive in the slayings of a millionaire businesswoman and her long-time companion, found stabbed to death in the fashionable home they shared.

Elizabeth Elliott, 68, and Karl van Lewinski, 71, were found slain Friday night in the Old Town section of Arlington. Her fully clothed body was found on a bedroom floor, while Lewinski's was discovered in the living room.

Amish farmers put refrigeration costs on ice

CLEVELAND (AP) — Stung by the rising price of ice, some Amish families are turning to the old ways to stock their icehouses.

Amish of the four-county Geauga settlement shun electricity and use iceboxes for refrigeration. A large Amish family in a season can use up to 5,000 pounds of ice, which now costs about $57 per 1,000 pounds.

So some Amish in Geauga, Trumbull, Portage and Ashtabula counties have been getting their ice instead from frozen ponds.

"Until the winter before last, I'd not cut ice since I was growing up on my family's farm in Michigan 50 years ago," said Sam Weaver of Mesopotamia in northern Trumbull County.

Officials estimated that 10 percent of the 150 farmers in the Geauga settlement have harvested ice from ponds that were frozen a foot thick by last month's freezing temperatures.

They avoid most modern tools, but for ice harvesting, the Amish cut their blocks with gasoline-powered chainsaws instead of handsaws.

Geauga County Extension Agent Randy James said he has received several inquiries about ice-cutting this year.

"Usually we can dig into the files for information about past farming practices, but we didn't have anything about ice," he said.

Baghdad Radio: Iran shells Iraqi cities; Iraq to retaliate

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iran today shelled four Iraqi cities and the military vowed to retaliate by striking targets "deep inside Iranian territory," Baghdad Radio reported.

A military spokesman, speaking over the radio, said the cities of Basra, Mandali, Khanaquin and Khurmal had been shelled, "causing loss of life and damage to property."

"In order to deter the treacherous Iranian regime and in retaliation for its savage, reckless practices, we will vehemently strike selected Iranian targets deep inside Iranian territory," said the spokesman, who was not identified.

The attacks were the latest in a series of bombardments by each side on civilian targets which followed warnings so that residents of the target zones can flee. The two countries, who have been at war for 3½ years, said their attacks were in retaliation for attacks by the other.

Iran shelled seven Iraqi cities and towns on Sunday, and Iraq retaliated by firing on four Iranian cities. Iraqi officials said the Iranians killed 14 people and injured 89, and Iran claimed the Iraqis killed at least 15 people and wounded more than 120.

Both sides forewarned each other of the attacks in an effort to allow civilians to evacuate targeted areas, and Iran's prime minister, Mir Hossein Musavi, said the policy "should be accepted by world public opinion."

The Iranian artillery fire followed an Iraqi attack Saturday on the southern Iranian oil city of Dezful, 50 miles east of the border. Iraq said the Dezful attack fulfilled a threat made Feb. 2 to retaliate for the Iranian shelling of Iraqi border towns.

Iraq's targets in Iran included the port of Bandar Khomeini and its petrochemical complex, as well as "specific" targets in the cities of Abadan, Guilan Gharb and Sar-e-Pol-e-Zahab, an Iraqi armed forces communique said.

Baghdad radio broadcast a military communique Sunday afternoon saying: "We will continue to strike at these installations until they are completely destroyed."

Earlier Sunday, Iranian artillery shelling shook the Iraqi border cities and towns of Basra, Mandali, Khanaqin, Chehabi, Zorbatya, Khormal and Sayed Sadeq, the communique said.

An Iranian communique, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, said five people were killed and 100 injured in a missile attack on Dezful.

Chernenko toes party line in speech

MOSCOW (AP) — Konstantin U. Chernenko vowed today in his first speech as head of the Soviet Communist Party that Moscow will match any security threat from the "hot heads of militant adventurists" in the West.

"We can very well see the threat created today to humankind by the reckless, adventurist actions of imperialism's aggressive forces," Chernenko said.

"We do not intend to dictate our will to others, but we will not permit the military equilibrium that has been achieved to be upset.

"And let nobody have even the slightest doubt about that: We will further see to it that our country's defense capacity be strengthened, that we should have enough means to cool the hot heads of militant adventurists."

Chernenko, 72, addressed his remarks to more than 300 members of the Communist Party's Central Committee after it had named him new party general secretary to succeed Yuri V. Andropov.

Sticking to the standard Soviet line on foreign policy and relations with the West, Chernenko prefaced his warning that Moscow will never concede military superiority with assurances that the Kremlin wants peace and blamed the West for undermining it.

"Great Lenin bequeathed to us the principle of peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems," he said. "We are invariably loyal to this principle. Nowadays, in the age of nuclear weapons and super-accurate missiles, people need it as never before.

"Deplorably, some leaders of the capitalist countries, to all appearances, do not realize, or do not wish to realize that."

Chernenko's speech broke no new ground on domestic policy, echoing official tributes to Andropov in praising the late leader's efforts to get the sluggish economy going and stressing the need for continued effort.

Andropov died Thursday at the age of 69 after 15 months in power.

Chernenko noted that Andropov led the country for only "a short, a painfully short time" and added, "we will all miss him."

Yet in that short time, Chernenko said, Andropov had managed to overcome "the difficulties which our country encountered at the turn of the eighties."

He referred to a period in which Chernenko's lifelong political patron, Leonid I. Brezhnev, was still alive and leading the Soviet Union — and his statement implicitly criticized the apathy and corruption that were widespread in Brezhnev's last years.

Western analysts in Moscow saw the passage and the overall tone of Chernenko's speech as a sign that he will, initially at least, institute no radical changes in the policies of his onetime political rival Andropov.

"Carrying on and further advancing...the work started under the leadership of Yuri Vladimirovich (Andropov) is the best way of paying tribute to his memory, of ensuring continuity in politics," Chernenko said.

Austerity measures threaten to strangle Portugese economy

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — After six months of severe austerity measures aimed at straightening out the economy, the Portuguese government is wondering if it has tightened the nation's belt a notch too far.

"We did better than we were asked to," Prime Minister Mario Soares said of the measures suggested by the International Monetary Fund. "The question is whether the Portuguese will survive this nightmare."

In the past several weeks, transportation workers have struck three times, while other workers have paralyzed a major port and blocked Lisbon's famous suspension bridge, all in reaction to the financial squeeze.

"Another few months and I hope we'll be out of the woods," Soares said in an interview with The Associated Press. However, his tone seemed far less enthusiastic than when he and his Socialists first took power after the 1974 revolution ousted a conservative leadership that had reigned for nearly half a century.

Soares has started pruning a bloated state sector with massive layoffs in shipyards, banks and newspapers; cutting imports, and reducing subsidies on wheat, milk and sugar.

At the same time, he is asking his Western allies — mainly the United States — for financial and military aid, ranging from credits for new warplanes and navy frigates to favorable terms to fish for cod off Alaska.

The International Monetary Fund, a United Nations-affiliated organization based in Washington, granted Portugal a standby loan of $480 million in exchange for the austerity measures, which called for a slashing of the balance of payments deficit — the difference between trade income and outgo — to $2 billion.

Soares said in the interview that according to official figures, Portugal adhered to and even improved on the guidelines in most fields. The balance of payments deficit was cut to $1.8 billion and the budget deficit kept under control.

However, inflation rose beyond the IMF's recommended level to 20 percent to 25.5 percent, with some consumer prices, like those for meat, skyrocketing more than 40 percent within the past year.

The burden has been heavy in other areas as well:

— Import restrictions have caused hospitals to run short of some supplies, hampering medical treatment.

— Elevators and machinery are being repaired with makeshift parts.

— Paychecks for thousands of workers are late by three months or more. Workers on state-controlled newspapers have received only about $80 in advances on their salaries in the past three months.

— A 28 percent retroactive tax was imposed on 10 months of 1983 salaries.

Leader wants better relations with U.S.

LONDON (AP) — Soviet ideologist Konstantin Chernenko, chosen today to succeed Yuri V. Andropov as Soviet leader, says in a newly published article that improving relations with the United States is "more important than ever before."

But the 72-year-old Chernenko warned that the Soviet Union will not tolerate the United States' gaining military superiority.

The article, published by The Sunday Times of London, was written before Andropov's death Thursday. It is intended as an introduction to a collection of Chernenko's speeches to be published in Britain on March 5.

Chernenko, Chief Communist Party ideologist, ranked second in the country's ruling Politburo behind Andropov. It was announced today that he was unanimously picked by a plenary meeting of the party's Central Committee for the Soviet Union's most powerful post — general secretary of the Communist Party.

Chernenko said in the article that Moscow harbors "no secret intentions or malicious designs.

"We are open to the world," he said. "In its foreign policy, the Soviet Union attaches top priority to safeguarding and strengthening peace and is determined to end the arms race.

"We are in favor of an active and fruitful dialogue with nations living under a different social system to ours, the United States and Great Britain in particular," Chernenko wrote.

"To work patiently so as to create a climate of trust and accord on earth is what my country is calling on other nations to do."

But he stressed, "The Soviet Union has great military might. We are capable of meeting any challenge effectively.

"We hope, however, that nobody will be tempted to test the Soviet Union's strength again. We are not seeking military superiority, of course, but we will not concede to any nation gaining such superiority over us."

While saying that "the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. have much to divide them," he wrote, "Today it more important than ever before to multiply our efforts towards mutual understanding.

"The imperative needed to preserve peace and to guarantee every nation the right to free and independent development has priority over everything else."

The Soviets, he said, are "concentrating on constructive tasks, such as advancing socialist democracy, developing industry, science and technology, agriculture and culture.

"Our progress in these fields is truly spectacular."

He added, "This is not to say that we have no difficulties. They do exist, and the Communist Party frankly admits them."

But, overall, he said, "My country is getting richer and more advanced culturally, and its people have a higher standard of living than ever before."

Guatemalan union leader abducted

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — A union leader at one of Guatemala's major newspapers was missing today, two days after men armed with automatic weapons abducted him.

The newspaper Prensa Libre reported Sunday that the kidnappers seized Aldana Galvan, 32, as he was walking with fellow workers Saturday near Guatemala City's Federated Workers Central Building.

German Lopez, another union leader, said Galvan was dedicated to labor causes, but was "not deeply involved in any political issues."

None of the four leftist guerrilla groups or any of the rightist death squads that have reappeared since Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores seized power in a coup last August claimed responsibility for the kidnapping.

Death-squad activity fell off during the 15-month presidency of Gen. Efrain Rios Montt, another rightist who preceded Mejia Victores. Human rights groups say thousands have been assassinated by both sides in the decades-old war pitting the guerrillas against a series of military governments.

On Thursday night, Jorge Galvez Loaiza, 48, a leader of the newly formed New Force Party, a social democratic group, was kidnapped on his way home in the capital. His bullet-riddled body was found on a city street Friday.

In a statement Friday, the Interior Ministry acknowledged that violence against individuals has increased and it blamed the guerrillas for the attacks.

In El Salvador, which also faces a bloody civil war, Roman Catholic Archbishop Arturo Rivera y Damas said in a weekly homily Sunday that 117 people died as a result of violence last week.

Official: No change in U.S., Soviet relations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Today's election of Konstantin U. Chernenko to succeed Yuri Andropov as head of the Soviet Communist Party was anticipated by a top U.S. official who says the transition will bring few immediate changes in U.S.-Soviet relations.

Meanwhile, there was no immediate reaction from President Reagan or other administration officials on Chernenko's election as general secretary by the Communist Party Central Committee.

"I think we'll have to wait a while to get an assessment that's official," White House spokesman Bob Sims said this morning.

Chernenko, at 72, becomes the oldest man ever to head the Communist Party. President Reagan, who turned 73 last week, is the oldest man ever elected president of the United States.

On Sunday, Undersecretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger said "I think we have to assume, on the basis of what we have now" that Chernenko would be the choice to succeed Andropov.

But Eagleburger cautioned that U.S.-Soviet relations were unlikely to stray off the current path while the new Soviet leader takes control of that nation's vast bureaucracy.

"I think by and large we're going to see a Soviet policy that's not much different from what we've seen over the last several years, and not very well-articulated," Eagleburger said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

"Part of the problem, I think, is that bureaucracy is so ponderous and, in the absence of somebody who is clearly, forcefully, in charge, it is so difficult to move it off of paths that are sort of worn in the road," he said.

"I think it is unlikely that we will see for some time major changes in one direction or the other," he added. "Therefore, I think it is also terribly important that the U.S. make clear where we stand, make clear that we are prepared to continue with negotiations, that we're trying to find solutions but also...don't get into this panic rushing toward offering new solutions to problems, because they won't work."

Meanwhile, United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick said the United States and the U.N. "helped expedite" a consulation between Andropov's physicians and an American kidney specialist. She declined to give the name of the American physician or other details.

Bush, Thatcher two of world's leaders attending funeral

MOSCOW (AP) — Vice President George Bush and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher are among the world leaders arriving today to pay last respects to Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov.

Those heading for Andropov's funeral Tuesday included a Chinese Communist Party Politburo member who will be the highest-ranking Chinese official to visit Moscow in 20 years. Over the last two decades, the Communist rivals have been at odds over ideological, political and border disputes.

The Chinese official, Vice Premier Wan Li, said today before leaving Peking that China and the Soviet Union are "two great neighbors" and he hoped for improved relations with Moscow.

Bush, en route to Moscow, told reporters in London he hopes his visit will make possible the resumption of the suspended U.S.-Soviet talks on limiting nuclear arms.

The vice president, accompanied by his wife, Barbara, and U.S. Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., indicated he was carrying a message from President Reagan but did not elaborate. "I am not going to reply on what I have in my pocket."

He said his Moscow visit was a chance for the United States to "outline a broad context...of various kinds of contacts and discussions and not only on arms talks."

Hogs ambush Tar Heels

Balentine, Kleine key upset

SWC

PINE BLUFF, Ark. (AP) — Now, there are none.

North Carolina, the only unbeaten major college team in the country, went down 65-64 Sunday when Arkansas' Charles Balentine netted a five-foot jumper with four seconds remaining.

"I didn't think we felt pressure from being unbeaten," said North Carolina Coach Dean Smith. Last week, the only other unbeaten team, DePaul, lost to St. Joseph's. "I don't believe losses on the road to Top 20 teams are upsets. College basketball is just too balanced."

Arkansas, 19-4, dropped out of the Top 20 a couple of weeks ago after back-to-back losses to Rice and Villanova. North Carolina's 21-game winning streak was its longest since a national championship season in 1957.

Only 24 hours before the victory over North Carolina, Arkansas beat Southern Methodist University 80-71 to reach 9-1 in the Southwest Conference. In fact, bad weather kept the Razorbacks from flying out of Dallas Saturday night and the team didn't reach Pine Bluff until two hours before the game.

"This ranks with the best of my basketball thrills," said Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton. "I don't know how it ranks with Arkansas' all-time victories. Our victory over UCLA in 1978 was a big one because it gave our program credibility. But, no Arkansas team has beaten a No. 1-ranked team, so this was a big one."

Sutton said the coaching staff looked at about 15 hours of film on North Carolina, but that the team saw only about 30 minutes of film. "The SMU game was too important for us to look at North Carolina before Saturday," he said.

Arkansas led by four at the half and by as much as 10 points, 46-36, three minutes deep in the second half. North Carolina grabbed its first lead of the second half, 64-63, on two straight field goals by Michael Jordan, the game's top scorer with 21 points. Jordan's 17-footer came with 1:48 left and a 10-footer 35 seconds later followed a steal by Steve Hale.

With 29 seconds remaining, Arkansas called time. The Razorbacks worked the ball to Alvin Robertson who started to drive but ran into traffic. He managed to dish the ball to Balentine.

"When I went up with the shot at the end, Matt Doherty and I floated toward the baseline," Balentine said. "When I got the ball, I was surprised for a moment but everybody should be looking for the ball when Alvin has it because he's such a great passer. When I put it up, I just hoped and prayed it would go in."

Sutton said he told his players "to get the ball to Alvin and let him go one-on-one or pass it inside to Joe (Kleine). Then, we told everbody to crash the boards if we missed the shot."

"I was going to drive and shoot when the ball got tipped out of my hands," Robertson said. "Fortunately, I got it to Charles. They are undoubtedly the best team in the nation. And, since they are No. 1, there was no real pressure on us."

After Balentine's shot, North Carolina called time, threw the ball to half-court and called time again with two seconds left. The first option was Jordan, but Arkansas stopped that and the Tar Heels inbounded to Hale in the corner. His shot bounced off the rim.

"Not getting the shot we wanted is my fault," Smith said. "We hadn't worked on the play for a while.

"In the first half, they outhustled us," he said. "I thought we played well in the second half."

Besides Balentine, who also made two free throws with 2:13 left, Arkansas had plenty of heroes:

—Kleine, who more than held his own against All-American Sam Perkins. Kleine had 20 points and 10 rebounds. Perkins had 17 points and 11 rebounds.

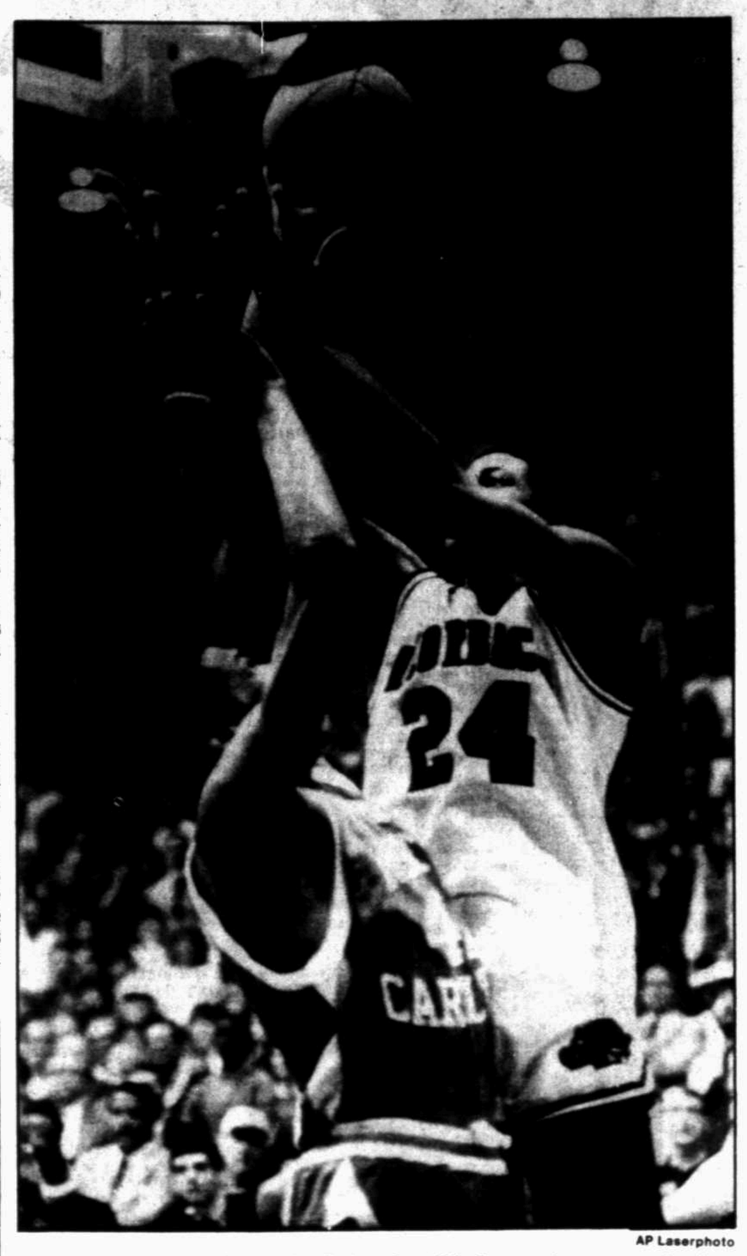

—Darryl Bedford, who is getting more playing time after losing about 15 pounds, contributed 12 points off the bench including three baskets in a row in the first half after the Tar Heels had gained a three-point lead.

—Robertson, who penetrated the North Carolina defense and slipped the ball to Balentine and Leroy Sutton along the baseline for at least a half-dozen easy baskets. Robertson was credited with 10 assists.

—Leroy Sutton, who scored 11 points before he picked up two fouls in 12 seconds and fouled out with 17:59 left in the game.

Arkansas held a 26-22 rebounding edge, often getting inside position against the bigger Tar Heels. And, the Razorbacks won despite making 16 turnovers — many of them caused by North Carolina's trapping defense.

North Carolina got off to a 5-0 lead and Kleine gave the Razorbacks their first lead, 10-9, when he made two free throws with less than five minutes gone. Two more free throws by Kleine, fouled on a rebound attempt, made it 24-19 with 7:54 left.

Medals missing from US effort

Olympics

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) — The expected blizzard of gold, silver and bronze medals by U.S. athletes at the XIV Olympic Winter Games has so far been all but a washout, the victim of weather delays, judging disputes and the collapse of the defending gold-medal hockey team.

A silver in the pairs figure skating competition Sunday night for Kitty and Peter Carruthers was the first medal of any kind for U.S. athletes.

It could get better this week with Alpine skiing and figure skating, events in which the United States expects to do best.

But this was the team trumpeted by U.S. Olympic Committee officials as its strongest ever, likely to produce even more than the 12 medals won in 1980 at Lake Placid, N.Y.

The poor performances were preying on the minds of some U.S. competitors. "We're under pressure, there's no doubt about it," said speed skater Erik Henriksen of Champaign, Ill.

Luge competitor Frank Masley of Newark, Del., said Saturday was so disappointing, with crashes and just poor runs, that the team was calling it "Black Saturday."

"I think the United States team as a whole is looking for someone to do well right now," Masley said. "None of our teams has really shined yet."

The United States has always lagged behind countries such as Norway and the Soviet Union in the Winter Games, and the first days of competition were dominated by events in which U.S. athletes were longshots at best.

Still, four cases exemplify the American frustration:

— Bill Johnson of Van Nuys, Calif., hoped to become the first American man ever to win the Olympic downhill. Johnson had repeatedly clocked fast training times, and the Mount Bjelasnica course fit his style of racing.

But the downhill has been postponed until Thursday because of a fierce winter storm that hit the Sarajevo area with winds as high as 120 mph and heavy snow.

— A legitimate medal opportunity was wiped out in the Nordic combined competition. With only four jumpers left to test the hill in the second of three rounds Saturday, Pat Ahern of Breckenridge, Colo., was in first place. But, for the second time in an hour, the judges decided to cancel a round after jumpers approached the "critical" area — the landing area where most accidents occur.

"I had myself psyched for three good jumps, and I had three good jumps, and they took two of them away," Ahern said.

"Two members of the jury saw an opportunity to help their guys and took advantage of it," said U.S. Nordic director Jim Page. "They weren't happy with the round as it was going. That kind of stuff has no place in sports."

Ahern ultimately dropped to 16th in the jumping and, following the 15-kilometer cross country race Sunday, wound up 17th in the combined. Teammate Kerry Lynch, America's top hope in Nordic skiing, finished 13th.

Olympians make breakthrough

Olympics

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) — The United States finally skated into the medals list at the XIV Olympic Winter Games, and once the drought was over the team today began to charge after more Olympic honor.

Kitty and Peter Carruthers, the brother and sister from Wilmington, Del., were the first to win a medal, taking a silver Sunday in the pairs figure skating competition behind Elena Valova and Oleg Vasiliev, world champions from the Soviet Union.

Then this morning skiers Christin Cooper and Debbie Armstrong put America on the inside track to the victory stand, and Scott Hamilton took an early lead in the figure skating.

Cooper, of Sun Valley, Idaho, led the field on Mount Jahorina after the first run of the women's giant slalom with a time of one minute, 8.87 seconds. Armstrong, a Squaw Valley, Calif., skier, was one-tenth of a second behind in second place.

And Hamilton, the three-time world champion from Denver, was No.1 after the first of three figures in the men's compulsories at Skenderija Stadium.

"I'm in shock," Kitty Carruthers said when the couple won the first medal for the problem-plagued U.S. team. "I've never been happier in my whole life. I knew it right before the start. I looked at Pete, and I knew it was going to be magic. This is the best we've ever skated."

There was hope for further U.S. figure skating success in Judy Blumberg and Michael Seibert, who were third halfway through the ice dancing competition. The medals will be decided in Tuesday's free dance.

East Germany led the medals standings after winning gold and silver in the women's 1,000-meter speed skating today. Karin Enke became the first triple medalist of the Games, skating the 1,000-meters in an Olympic record time of 1:21.61.

The No.2 finish by Andrea Schoene gave East Germany a total of 14 medals, compared to 13 for the Soviet Union. The East Germans also led the Soviets in gold medals, 6-3.

Sweden's Gunde Svan took his second medal of the Games, winning the gold in the 15-kilometer cross-country in 41:25.6 ahead of two Finns. It was Sweden's second gold.

Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean continued to improve on perfection in ice dancing, which they led after Sunday's original set pattern, and they were heavy favorites to give Britain its first gold medal.

The schedule for the Alpine skiing was scrambled again by the residue of a snowstorm that has closed rail lines, stranded thousands of motorists and mobilized tens of thousands of people in rescue efforts across the country. Almost two feet of snow fell in Sarajevo in the past four days, with nearly twice that much in the mountains.

The men's downhill — one of the Games' glamor events — was postponed Sunday for a third time by high winds and blowing snow at Mount Bjelasnica. Training for the women's downhill at Mount Jahorina was canceled for the same reason.

Bill Johnson of Van Nuys, Calif., is one of the favorites in the men's downhill, which originally was scheduled for Thursday and now has found its way onto the agenda exactly one week late.

This was how the revamped scheduled looked after the women's giant slalom: men's giant slalom Tuesday, both runs; women's downhill Wednesday, and men's downhill Thursday. The women's slalom on Friday and men's slalom on Sunday were left as originally scheduled.

With a forecast for improving weather, race organizers felt they had a better chance to get the downhills under way later in the week.

With three days of medal competition already gone, the United States' lack of success had begun to bother even the athletes.

They had been talking about "Black Saturday." And U.S. luger Frank Masley remarked: "I think the United States team as a whole is looking for someone to do well right now."

And the Carruthers, who were both adopted at 3 months of age, may have given the team the start of a cascade of medals in figure skating by winning the first silver in pairs since 1952.

They received one 5.9 for their 4½-minute program, one 5.8, six 5.7s and one 5.5. But they knew at the end of their program they had done well, as they embraced emotionally at center ice.

"I told him I loved him," Kitty said.

"We fight like brother and sister," Peter said. "And we care for each other like brother and sister."

Soviets Larissa Selezneva and Oleg Makarov won the bronze medal.

Torvill and Dean, who became the first ice dance pair to earn perfect scores in compulsories on Friday, received four perfect 6.0s in the original set pattern, one for content and three for technical merit. It was believed to be the most perfect scores ever awarded in an Olympics.

The reclusive pair from Nottingham, England shunned interviews, but their coach, Betty Callaway, said: "Everything seems to be going in their favor. We're really looking forward to (the free dance) Tuesday night."

Blumberg, of Tarzana, Calif., and Seibert, of Washington, Pa., received mostly 5.6s and 5.7s to trail the Soviet pair of Natalia Bestemianova and Andrei Bukin.

"Something didn't feel quite right," Seibert said. "I thought we really skated well and we'd move (up in the standings) but we didn't."

Marja-Liisa Hamalainen, who won the women's 10-kilometer cross-country on Thursday, took the five kilometers on Sunday. Her time was 17 minutes, four seconds, more than 10 seconds better Berit Aunli of Norway. Kvetoslava Jeriova of Czechoslovakia won the bronze.

"I did not expect this gold medal," Hamalainen said through an interpreter. "I was most afraid of Aunli, whom I consider the world's best at this discipline."

Hamalainen will be going for a sweep of individual events next Saturday in the 20 kilometers.

Medals also were awarded in two other Nordic disciplines Sunday.

Tomas Sandberg of Norway won the gold medal in the Nordic combined, which matches skill in a 70-meter jump and a 15-kilometer cross-country race. Sandberg was first in the jump and second in Sunday's cross-country race to win the event with 422.595 points. Finns took the next two places, Jouko Karjalainen winning the silver and Jukka Ylipulli the bronze. The top American was Kerry Lynch of Silver Creek, Colo., who was 13th.

Jens Weissflog of East Germany won the 70-meter jump with 215.2 points, his longest jump being 295 feet. Matti Nykaenen of Finland was second with 214 points and Jari Puikkonen, also of Finland, was third with 212.8 points and the longest jump fo the day, 300 feet. Jeff Hastings of Norwich, Vt., finished ninth.

Sweden captured its first gold medal of the Games as Tomas Gustafson won the men's 5,000-meter speed skating event by two hundredths of a second over Igor Malkov of the Soviet Union. Gustafson was timed in 7:12.28. Rene Schoefisch of East Germany won the bronze, and the closest the Americans got was 12th by Michael Woods of Wauwatosa, Wis.

Crippled Sixers blow out Celtics

By The Associated Press

NBA

The Boston Celtics were licking their chops in anticipation of manhandling the crippled Philadelphia 76ers. Instead, it was the Celtics' who were licked.

With Julius Erving scoring 30 points and Andrew Toney adding 21, the 76ers rolled to a 109-91 victory over the Celtics in a showdown of National Basketball Association powers.Although again playing without Moses Malone and Bobby Jones, the 76ers manhandled the cold-shooting Celtics, owners of the best record in the NBA, for only their third victory in the last nine games.

"Today was our day," said Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham. "It was the best game we had all month. Boston's the best team in basketball right now, but we came into this game with a great attitude to overcome obstacles. Everything went well for us — rebounding, loose balls, everything. It could have happened the other way, though. The Celtics did the same thing to us in Philly once when they were without (Larry) Bird and (Tiny) Archibald."

Boston's Cedric Maxwell, who was 2-for-8 from the floor and 1-for-7 from the foul line, summed up the Celtics' afternoon. "We really played stink, stink, stink today," he said.

In defeating Boston for the third time in five meetings this season, the 76ers pulled away from a 58-57 lead with a 21-4 spurt.Boston shot only 5-of-24 and scored 12 points in the third period, which ended with Philadelphia in front 79-63.

Larry Bird, who led the Celtics with 25 points but was only 7-of-22 from the floor, called it "one of the poorest efforts I've seen in Boston Garden since I've been here. We put a bad taste in the fans' mouths."

Nets 107, Rockets 103

Darryl Dawkins scored 25 points, including three free throws in the final minute.New Jersey hit eight free throws in the final minute, including one by Buck Williams that broke a 99-99 tie and put the Nets ahead to stay. Williams and Albert King each added 19 points for the Nets, while Lewis Lloyd had 21 for the Rockets. Ralph Sampson, Houston's 7-foot-4 rookie center, left the game with a sprained right arch after playing just 13 minutes and scoring 12 points.

Jazz 114, Trail Blazers 112

John Drew's jump shot with three seconds left gave Utah the victory.Drew, who scored 21 of his 23 points in the second half, led a 38-point third-quarter Utah charge that overcame a nine-point Portland halftime lead.Drew had 14 points in the third period as the Jazz broke Portland's five-game winning streak and handed the Blazers only their third loss in 27 home games.Jim Paxson, the game's leading scorer with 26 points, hit a 16-footer to tie the score 112-112. Adrian Dantley, who leads the NBA with a 31.0 average, was held to 21 points, 19 in the first half.Wayne Cooper had 21 for Portland.

Lakers 108, Hawks 87

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 26 points and Earvin "Magic" Johnson added 23 along with 15 assists and 10 rebounds as Los Angeles won its ninth game in the last 10 and sixth in a row at home.Abdul-Jabbar and Johnson each had 15 points in the first half when the Lakers opened a 57-41 lead. Dan Roundfield had 24 points for Atlanta, which lost its third game in a row and dropped out of a first-place tie in the Central Division.

"I blackmailed them before the game," said Lakers Coach Pat Riley. "I told them they would get a day-and-a-half off if they played well. These guys never pass on a chance top get some time off during the season.

"It was one of our better rebounding games. We are a Jekyll-and-Hyde rebounding team. Some nights we get after it, other nights we don't. Invariably, we win big when we dominate the backboards."

The Lakers had a 55-35 advantage over Atlanta in that department.

Bucks 107, Clippers 100

Sidney Moncrief scored 38 points, including eight in overtime.Lorenzo Romar gave the Bucks the lead for good 99-98 with 1:34 to go when Terry Cummings was called for goaltending on Romar's baseline drive. The Bucks also got 16 points each from Bob Lanier and Junior Bridgeman — who hit a 15-foot jumper with nine seconds left in regulation to send the game into overtime at 92-92 — and 12 from Marques Johnson.Cummings led the Clippers with 23.San Diego forward Bill Walton left the game with seven minutes remaining in the first half after spraining his right knee. He did not return, but the injury was not believed to be serious.

Oilers routed without Great one

Hartford skunks Edmonton 11-0

By The Associated Press

NHL

The Edmonton Oilers seem to be in need of a lube job.

Playing for the sixth game in a row without Wayne Gretzky and Jari Kurri, their top two scorers, the Oilers dropped their fifth game in a row Sunday, one short of the club record — an 11-0 shelling at the hands of the Hartford Whalers.

"It was a total collapse of our hockey team, from the goal to the defense to the front," Coach Glen Sather said following the worst defeat in the club's history. "I can't remember ever seeing our club play this poorly."

Ron Francis scored four goals for Hartford and Greg Malone added three, while goalie Greg Millen stopped 28 shots for his second shutout of the season as the Whalers netted the most goals in their history.

In other National Hockey League games, Vancouver nipped Philadelphia 6-5, Calgary downed Chicago 6-4 and Detroit and Winnipeg tied 2-2.

At Hartford, Francis scored twice to give the Whalers an early 2-0 lead and Sylvain Turgeon made it 3-0 with 1:26 left in the first period. The Whalers then scored five power-play goals in the second period, two by Malone and one each by Francis, Ray Neufeld and Chris Kotsopoulos. Four of them came in a 4:06 span with Edmonton's Kevin McClelland serving a major penalty for knocking Turgeon unconscious with an elbow.

Canucks 6, Flyers 5

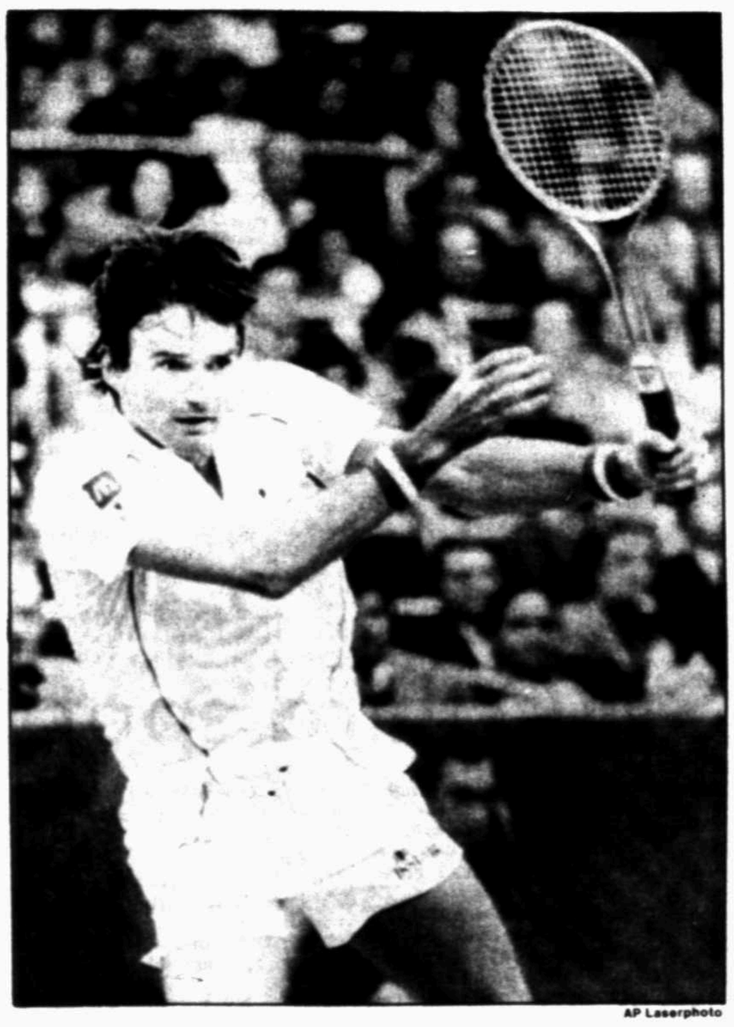

Dave Williams' second goal of the game with 1:56 snapped a tie.Williams actually lost control of the puck at the left faceoff circle, but the puck slid under Flyers goalie Pelle Lindbergh. The Canucks had tied the game eight minutes earlier on a freak shot by Darcy Rota, whose slapshot from outside the blue line bounced off the boards behind the cage, hit Lindbergh and bounced into the net.Vancouver trailed 5-3 when Lars Molin poked in a rebound in the opening minutes of the final period.Tim Kerr scored twice for the Flyers.

Flames 6, Black Hawks 4

Dan Quinn, an 18-year-old rookie for began the season with the Belleville Bulls of the Ontario Hockey Association, scored twice, giving him 10 goals and 22 assists in 30 games since Calgary called him up.

Jets 2, Red Wings 2

Detroit's John Ogrodnick scored his 41st goal of the season with 20 seconds remaining in the second period to offset standout goaltending by Winnipeg's Doug Soetaert, who kept the Jets in the game with a number of saves from point-blank range, especially in the first period.

Jimmy Connors smashes a return during Sunday's 6-3, 4-6, 7-5 U.S. National Indoors championship win over Henri Leconte of France.

Connors wins U.S. Indoors

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Experience gave Jimmy Connors the edge he needed over young Henri LeConte of France as the world's third-ranked player captured a record seventh U.S. National Indoor Tennis Championships title.

"He (LeConte) went for it and he paid the price," said Connors, who became a 6-3, 6-4, 7-5 winner Sunday when LeConte double-faulted at match point.

"I've made a living off playing the big points," Connors said. "They are my favorite situation. It's known as grinding it out, and it proves you haven't lost your nerve."

"The difference between Jimmy Connors and me is that he knows how to play the big points," said LeConte. "He's 31 and I'm 20. He's won 101 tournaments and I've won one."

Connors' first championship victory since last September's U.S. Open was worth $45,000, while LeConte earned $22,500.

The match was halted for about two minutes during the first game of the third set when LeConte collapsed from dehydration.

"It just came up on me suddenly," LeConte said. "I couldn't see anything and I fell down. They (the tournament officials) told me I could default, so I tried to play, and then I played very well.

"At first, I couldn't walk, I couldn't run and I couldn't stand, but I came back because I had nothing to lose."

LeConte, the tournament's 16th seed, came right back to hold his service in Game 2 and Connors, the top seed, saved a break point in the third game when a LeConte volley fell wide.

"He (LeConte) gets up and comes out firing, and then I'm in a tough situation because how do you play a guy in a coma?" Connors said.

LeConte, who served up eight aces and eight double-faults during the match, was broken twice in the opening set but came back to level the title match 1-1, breaking Connors in Game 9 with an unreturnable backhand and holding his service in the 10th game.

The 31-year-old Connors held serve in the first game of the final set, going up 30-0 and then being awarded a penalty point and a game point when LeConte collapsed.

The two left-handers then continued to hold serve until the deciding game.

LeConte pulled even with Connors at 30-30 in the 12th game with a service winner. He followed his next serve to the net and, with Conners out of position on the baseline, punched a volley long to put Connors at match point.

After serving long, LeConte netted his second serve to hand Connors the championship.

Rainbow man busted

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) — Rock'n'Rollen, familiar at major televised events with his rainbow wig and religious signs, was held for several hours by Yugoslav officials, according to a witness.

He told a New Zealand newsman who talked with him at the police station that he was picked up on Saturday night in front of Skenderija, the press center, and detained for about three hours.

Rock'n'Rollen, whose real name is Rollen Stewart, said it was his religious beliefs, not his gate-crashing or wig, that got him into trouble in this communist country.

Yugoslav officials continued to deny Sunday any knowledge of the detention of Rollen. Police said it was an "official secret."

"Either the information is false or else nobody wants to tell me, either," Zoran Kadenic, Yugoslav Olympic Organizing Committee spokesman, said.

Tar Heels, Demons still top teams

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

Nobody's perfect.

North Carolina's top-ranked Tar Heels could've been. They were the nation's only unbeaten major-college team. But they ran up against Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton's aroused Razorbacks — and their equally aroused crowd — on Sunday and absorbed a 65-64 loss that ended their hopes of their first perfect season since they went 32-0 back in 1957, when they won the national championship.

Not that they won't necessarily remain No. 1 Tuesday in The Associated Press poll. After all, they're still 21-1 and the No. 2-ranked team, DePaul, is 18-1. The Blue Demons, routed 58-45 by St. Joseph's earlier in the week, rebounded Saturday with a 62-54 victory over Notre Dame.

North Carolina Coach Dean Smith didn't treat the defeat at the hands of the Razorbacks as all that surprising. "They outhustled us," he said. "I don't believe losses on the road to Top 20 teams are upsets. College basketball is just too balanced."

Arkansas, ranked as high as No. 16 as recently as three weeks ago, no longer is in the AP Top 20.

The Blue Demons seemed to be apologizing to Coach Ray Meyer for their shellacking by St. Joseph's as they took the court for his last visit to Notre Dame, his alma mater. Several players turned to him and said, "This one's for you."

The gesture brought tears to his eyes, but he was all smiles after Kevin Holmes scored 14 points to help DePaul make good on its promise. The Fighting Irish led 29-27 at halftime. But they went scoreless in a six-minute span in the second half, DePaul went ahead 52-41 with 3:47 to go and Notre Dame never got closer than three points after that.

Elsewhere in the Top Ten during the weekend, No. 3 Georgetown beat Brigham Young 67-51, No. 5 Houston defeated Texas 74-63, No. 6 Kentucky ripped No. 16 Auburn 84-64, seventh-ranked Texas-El Paso downed Hawaii 77-58, No. 9 Memphis State shaded Florida State 73-69 and 10th-rated Oklahoma defeated Kansas State 80-74.

In the Second Ten, 11th-ranked Purdue topped Northwestern 66-56, No. 12 Tulsa beat Southern Illinois 86-76, No. 13 Maryland was nosed out 89-84 by Duke, No. 14 Wake Forest ripped North Carolina-Wilmington 64-50; No. 15 Louisville was turned aside by Virginia 50-45, No. 17 Washington beat Arizona 56-51, No. 18 Georgia Tech was nipped 68-67 by North Carolina State, No. 19 Syracuse blasted C.W. Post 103-86 and No. 20 Louisiana State topped Mississippi 65-61.

NCAA

Top Ten

Bill Martin's 23 points and 15 rebounds paced Georgetown, and the Hoyas' defense held Devin Durrant of Brigham Young, the nation's leading scorer with a 30.1 average, to a season-low 13 points, while Richie Adams' 25 points and 11 rebounds helped Nevada-Las Vegas post its 13th consecutive victory.

Four foul shots apiece by Rickie Winslow and Michael Young and two plus a field goal by Alvin Franklin enabled Houston to survive a late Texas rally. Akeem Olajuwon, the Cougars' center, blocked 11 shots.

Reserves Dicky Beal and Winston Bennett scored 17 points apiece as Kentucky, rallying from a 30-22 deficit late in the first half, downed Auburn, and Texas-El Paso's Fred Reynolds hit 16 of 17 free throws en route to a 28-point game against Hawaii.

Efrem Winters and Bruce Douglas each scored 16 points and Illinois outscored the Hawkeyes 16-1 run away from a second-half tie; Phillip Haynes led a first-half charge that gave Memphis State an 18-point cushion over Florida State, more than enough to thwart a late Seminole comeback, and Shawn Clark's 20 points paced Oklahoma's Sooners past Kansas State to their third consecutive 20-victory season.

Second Ten

Purdue vaulted over Northwestern as Steve Reid scored nine of his 15 points in a three-minute span of the second half, and Steve Harris' 25 points, Ricky Ross' 24 and Bruce Valye's 21 propelled Tulsa past Southern Illinois.

Duke survived a pair of Maryland challenges in the second half and rode Mark Alarie's 24 points to victory. Kenny Green and Delaney Rudd scored 18 apiece in Wake Forest's whipping of UNC-Wilmington.

Othell Wilson scored 16 points and hit decisive foul shots in the final minutes of Virginia's victory over Louisville while Washington rallied from a 10-point deficit in the final nine minutes to beat Arizona as Detlef Schrempf hit 16 of his 23 points in the second half and nine points down the stretch.

Lorenzo Charles' game-high 26 points engineered North Carolina State's victory over Georgia Tech, Sean Kerins scored a career-high 24 points and Rafael Addison added 23 as Syracuse beat C.W. Post, ranked No. 13 in Division II, and Steffond Johnson scored 20 points in LSU's victory over Mississippi.

Chaps return

From Staff Reports

Midland College has its back to the wall as it returns to Langford Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. tonight to play New Mexico Junior College.

After Thursday's three-point loss to South Plains College at Levelland, the Chaps drifted back in the pack in the Western Junior College Conference, falling behind South Plains. MC has a 7-5 record while SPC is 8-4, dimming MC's hopes for an automatic berth in the Region V tournament to be held at the Chap Center in early March.

Once-beaten Howard leads the race while Odessa College is two games behind with two defeats. After the top two, anyone else who gets in the playoffs will have to do so in an eight-team playoff.

But with the balance in this year's race, anything is still possible. Howard, for example, still has road games at Midland and Clarendon. Odessa must travel for Frank Phillips, South Plains and Howard. South Plains is away for Howard, Clarendon, and Amarillo. Western must trek for Howard, Odessa, NMJC and Frank Phillips. Amarillo's road games include Clarendon, NMJC and WTC.

As harardous as road travel has been this winter, there are plenty of defeats in those schedules.

MC hosts NMJC tonight and NMMI Thursday, but still has some mesquite ambushes of its own to face—Amarillo, Odessa, Frank Phillips.

Midland edged the NMJC, 98-89, at Hobbs, but the Thunderbirds own a 104-89 win over Odessa and has played everybody close.

Mike Richmond leads NMJC in scoring with 19.6 points while Craig Walker owns a 14.5 average. Frank Bagley is scoring 12.5 per game. Richmond's 10.5 rebounds per game tops the WJCC.

Six-nine Teviin Binns tops the Midland scoring with 16.2 average, followed by Jackie Phinnessee with 13.5 ppg and Brian Essary, 13.2.

Thuraday at Levelland, four Chaps fouled out and Coach Jerry Stone was tagged with a technical early in the game. Phinnessee and Binns were saddled with three personals by halftime and Teviin didn't last long enough in the second half to score any points.

Jack Renner raise his putter after sinking a birdie on the 18th hole of the Hawaiian Open. Renner beat Wayne Levi in the playoff.

Renner nabs Hawaiian year late

HONOLULU (AP) — A year late, one year after the Hawaiian Open title was snatched from his grasp by one of golf's most dramatic shots, Jack Renner became a winner of the Hawaiian Open.

"I was due," Renner said Sunday after he'd tied Wayne Levi with a birdie on the final hole of regulation play, then won on the second hole of a sudden death playoff.

He won this time when Levi, who led through the first 17 of the regulation closing 18 holes, suddenly ran afoul of a balky putter. He missed four times from short range on the last five holes he played. Any one of the first three would have closed out Renner. And the last, a two-footer, would have prolonged the playoff.

He missed them all.

"I was pulling everything," Levi said. "As poorly as I played over the last few holes, and as well as Jack played, Jack deserved to win."

It helped erase some of the sting from the year-old memory — and constant reminder — of the shot that deprived Renner of this title a year ago.

Renner finished play in the 1983 Hawaiian Open with a one-shot lead over Isao Aoki and was in the scorer's tent when Aoki unleashed perhaps the most dramatic shot of the year.

He holed a 128-yard pitch from the rough for an eagle that snatched the title from a stunned Renner.

"For a year, nobody let me forget it," Renner said. "It's hard to live down something like that. And the thing is, I didn't feel I had anything to live down. I'd played the last round in 66. But, all year long, people kept asking me about it.

"Now," he said, and smiled, "I hope they'll ask me about this year."

Renner, three or four shots off the pace most of the day, placed himself in the title chase with a string of three consecutive birdies beginning on the 12th.

Then Levi, with a series of chances to close him out, suddenly fell victim to putting problems. It was the opening Renner needed.

The slender young man gained a tie for the lead with a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole at the Waialae Country Club, finishing off a final round of 67, 5-under-par.

That put him in at 271, 17-under for the tournament. But Levi, who had played a great third shot out of the rough, had a four-footer for birdie that would have made Renner a loser again.

But he missed it and the playoff was on.

Both made routine, two-putt pars on the first playoff hole.

On the second, the 434-yard 16th, each put his approach some 15-18 feet from the flag. Renner was away, and missed his birdie opportunity.

Then Levi, who had watched a three-shot lead dwindle and disappear over the final 18 holes of regulation, stepped to his putt. He, too, missed. It ran 2-3 feet by the cup. And Levi, who had three-putted the same green from about the same position a half-hour earlier, missed it coming back, handing the title to Renner.

Levi played the final 18 of regulation in 70.

The victory, the third in Renner's career, was worth $90,000 from the total purse of $500,000. Levi, a winner in this event in 1982, gained $54,000.

Gil Morgan, the principal challenger to Levi most of the day, fell back into a tie for third at 273 with Chip Beck. Morgan shot a 69 while Beck had the best round of day, an 8-under-par 64.

It was another two shots back to Cal Peete, Bernhard Langer and David Edwards at 275. Peete, who led through the first two rounds, closed with a 71. Langer, a West German who won five international titles last year, had a 68. Edwards shot 69 over the final 18 holes.

Hale Irwin, a winner last week in the Bing Crosby, had a 68 and was tied at 276 with Mike Sullivan, who closed with a 72.

Aoki, the winner last year, was well back this time at 72-297.

Renner, three or four strokes back most of the day, moved into title contention with a string of three consecutive birdies beginning on the 12th. He holed from 10 feet there, hit a wedge to six feet on the 13th and dropped a 30-footer on the 14th.

"That was the first time I started thinking about winning," he said.

He closed to within one when Levi three-putted for bogey on the 16th.

Still he said, "I felt I was living on borrowed time."

Levi had a chance to go two up with one to play, but missed a short birdie putt on the 17th.

On the 18th, Levi came within inches of holing his third shot for an eagle — just as Aoki did last year.

"I thought, 'if that goes in, I'm never coming back here'," Renner said.

But the ball slid by. After Renner had holed his birdie putt, Levi needed only that six-foot putt to win it. But he missed.

And, when he missed again on the second playoff hole, Renner was a winner; a year late, but a winner.

Hot Shriver wins Slims

CHICAGO (AP) — A temper tantrum left top-seeded Pam Shriver feeling apologetic toward her fans as she captured the championship of the $150,000 Virginia Slims of Chicago tennis tournament.

Shriver overcame a mid-match spell of wildness Sunday to top unseeded Barbara Potter 7-6, 2-6, 6-3 for the title, but not before she had made no secret of her anger at herself over missing shots in the first two sets.

"I'd like to apologize to the fans who were reading my lips," Shriver said after her first indoor victory. "It's my way of relieving the pressure when I want to win so badly. I shouldn't say the things I say."

Her coach, Don Candy, said the 21-year-old Shriver finds playing indoors a strain.

Red Raiders eye SWC third spot

SWC

It's been a long, laborious climb but the Texas Tech Red Raiders have finally worked their way into third place in the Southwest Conference basketball standings.

Staying there won't be easy.

The idle Red Raiders of Coach Gerald Myers watched on television Saturday as Arkansas ripped Southern Methodist 80-71 to drop the Mustangs into fourth place.

Tech is 7-3 and SMU is 7-4 in a battle for a coveted bye into the SWC post-season tournament in March at Hofheinz Pavilion.

Now comes the hard part.

Tech has to go to Houston Thursday night.

The Raiders will meet league-leading Houston in a 7:10 p.m. regionally televised game.

The Cougars haven't lost an SWC game in 35 tries and are 10-0 this year.

Houston built a 21-point lead then defeated Texas 74-63 Saturday night at Austin.

Houston Coach Guy Lewis said he was worried "until their was one second left on the clock. It's a great big W."

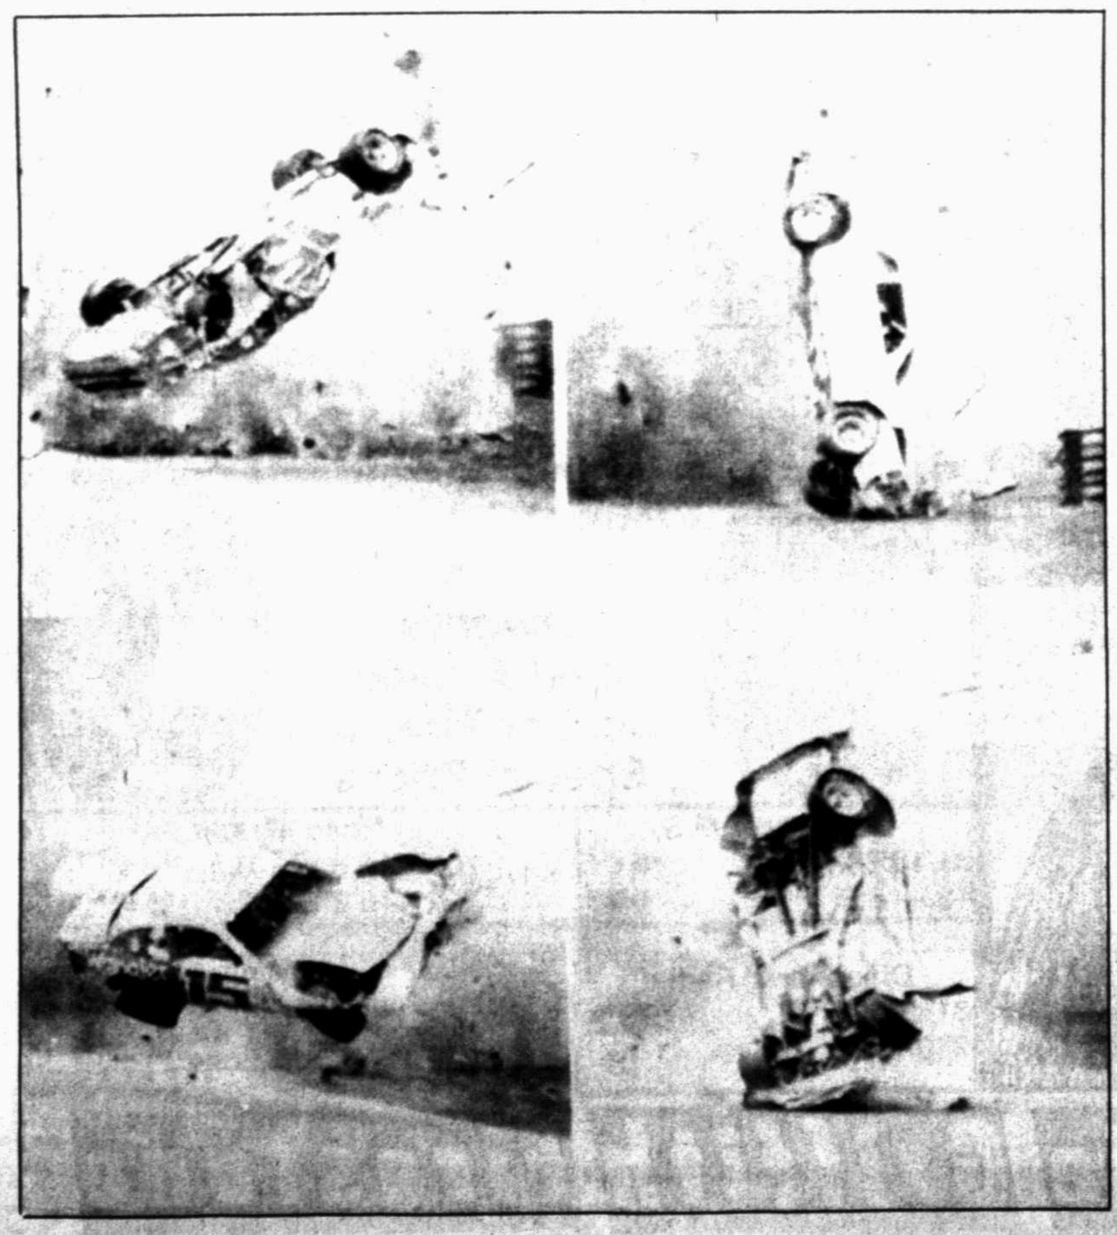

Arkansas whipped previously unbeaten and top-ranked North Carolina 65-64 Sunday when the Razorbacks' Charles Balentine netted a five-foot jumper with four seconds remaining.

Arkansas shot 68 per cent from the field, best of the year, to beat SMU for the eighth consecutive time.

Arkansas is now 9-1 behind the Houston Cougars who are a perfect 11-0.

The two teams will meet on Sunday, Feb. 26 at Hofheinz Pavilion instead of the originally scheduled Feb. 25 so most of the nation can see them on national television (NBC-TV).

On the following Sunday, March 4, Houston will travel to Fayetteville to meet the Razorbacks with CBS to carry the game on national television.

FTC approves Texaco, Getty merger

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission tentatively approved the nation's largest corporate merger ever today, voting to allow Texaco to buy Getty Oil Co.

The commission voted 4-1 to allow the $10.1 billion takeover, although it will require Texaco to make some divestitures to satisfy antitrust concerns, commission spokeswoman Susan Ticknor said.

She did not give details of the requirements, however, and a press briefing was scheduled later in the day.

Commissioner Michael Pertschuk was the lone dissenter in the vote to approve the merger, taken before stock markets opened for the day. The commission staff had recommended approval Friday.

Today was the deadline for the commission to act to block the merger, if it wanted to do so, under federal antitrust laws.

The Washington Post reported earlier that the agreement reached between the commission staff and Texaco to secure approval of the merger called for the sale of two of its refineries, one on the East Coast and one in the Midwest, along with the sale of a Getty-owned oil pipeline in California.

The Post also said Texaco will have to insure continued delivery of crude oil now supplied by Getty to independent marketers in the West.

The merger had been temporarily delayed in January when the commission sought more information from Texaco and Getty before deciding whether to approve the merger.

The merger would allow Texaco, the nation's third largest oil company, to double its oil reserves. It would still be No. 3, however, behind Exxon Corp. and No. 2 Mobil Corp.

The approval allows Texaco to begin buying stock in Getty, the nation's 14th largest oil company. Texaco has made a tender offer of $128 a share fo: the 79.1 million shares of Getty outstanding.

There are still possible roadblocks outstanding, however, in the form of suits brought by the Pennzoil Co. and others opposing the merger.

Pennzoil attorneys have said they will appeal a federal court ruling earlier this month allowing the merger to proceed. U.S. District Judge James Ellison in Tulsa, Okla., said Pennzoil had "failed to show" that it would be damaged by the merger.

Pennzoil, which had previously tried unsuccessfully to acquire Getty for $112.50 per share, claimed that the Texaco deal was anti-competitive and would serve to drive middle-sized oil companies out of business.

Last week, Pennzoil filed a second suit in an attempt to block the Texaco-Getty merger. There has been no ruling in that suit, filed in Houston.

The Texaco takeover has also been contested by three daughters of Jean Ronald Getty, one of three surviving sons of the late J. Paul Getty, who founded the company.

The daughters contended the merger would jeopardize their inheritance. They also contended that Gordon Getty, sole trustee of the Sarah C. Getty trust, which owns 40 percent of all Getty stock, had violated the terms of the trust in signing the deal with Texaco.

Competition for IRA dollars up

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The competition for IRA dollars has heated up again, as financial institutions try to attract consumers looking for last-minute tax shelters.

Thousands of Americans rush to open individual retirement accounts in the first few months of the year because they offer an unusual opportunity for a sort of after-the-fact tax cut.

Anyone who works and has earned income can contribute up to $2,000 to an IRA and deduct that amount from his or her adjusted gross income. You don't pay federal income tax on the money — or on the interest it earns — until later, when you withdraw it.

You can open an account any time up to the filing deadline — April 16 this year — and deduct the money from last year's income. You can claim the deduction even if you haven't actually made the contribution — as long as you make it by April 16.

The U.S. League of Savings Institutions, in a guide to IRAs and Keogh accounts (retirement plans for the self-employed,) points out that if you file early enough and are entitled to a refund, you can even wait until you get your refund and use it to make the promised contribution.

The same deadlines apply to contributions to existing accounts; you must make sure, however, that you don't deposit more than $2,000 in one year. (Working couples may contribute $2,000 each, but must open separate accounts. If you have a non-working spouse, you may deposit up to $2,250 in a single IRA, known as a spousal account. President Reagan has proposed increasing the allowable contribution for spousal IRAs.

The advantages of an IRA are twofold: You trim your tax bill now and you save for retirement.

The amount of the tax cut will depend on your tax bracket and on the amount you contribute. Suppose you're in the 28 percent marginal tax bracket. A $2,000 contribution will reduce your tax bill by 28 percent or $560. If you're in the 38 percent bracket, the same contribution will cut the bill by $760.

Your ultimate nest egg depends on the amount of interest you earn. And remember, that inflation will eat away some of the dollars; the sum that looks big today, may shrink when seen through the eye of the future. Here's an example of what can happen, however: Contribute $2,000 a year and earn a constant 10 percent annual return, compounded daily. According to the savings league, you'll have $13,632 in five years; $36,101 in 10 years; $134,185 in 20 years; $400,668 in 30 years; and $674,056 in 40 years.

When trying to calculate the value of what you will have in the future, it is also important to remember that the IRA is not a permanent shelter; the bill will come due eventually. But you should be able to time your withdrawals — and your tax payments — so you are in a lower bracket than you are now.

You can open and contribute to an IRA at any time until the year you reach 70½. You cannot start withdrawals until you are at least 59½; you must start them when you are 70½.

If you take the money earlier, the Internal Revenue Service will charge a penalty of 10 percent of the amount withdrawn, unless you are permanently disabled.

Task force set to expedite use of methanol

By KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — A White House task force has been established to expedite legalization of general public use of methanol as an energy fuel for motor cars, aircraft, industrial plants and other things operated with internal combustion engines.

While no public announcement has been made, it was learned that establishment of the task force followed a meeting between President Reagan and Vice President Bush at which the latter explained that research and development indicates methanol could replace oil as the major energy fuel.

Heading up the task force is Martin L. Smith, Deputy Assistant Director of the White House Office of Policy Development. Vice President Bush is represented on the task force by his counsellor, C. Boyden Gray. The Departments of Energy and Commerce are also represented.

The Clean Air Act prohibits the use of any new motor fuel unless the Environmental Protection Agency waives the restriction by determining the new fuel will not cause or contribute to a failure of vehicle emission standards.

EPA has granted several methanol waivers to motor manufacturing companies, such as Ford, which are experimenting with methanol-fueled cars. However, there has been no general waiver on public use of methanol as energy fuel because EPA felt there were still emission problems that needed to be overcome.

Some administration officials suspect EPA has been dragging its feet because of pressure from big oil companies and motor manufacturers who have not kept up with developments in the use of methanol, a form of alcohol. The oil companies naturally do not want to see gasoline replaced by methanol, which sells for about 50 cents a gallon wholesale compared with 90 cents wholesale for ordinary gasoline. It has been estimated that general public use of methanol for energy fuel could drive the price of oil down to $10 a barrel.

Use of methanol in cars would require adjustments that some of the auto manufacturers, apart from Ford and General Motors, are reluctant to undertake. For example, cylinders of cars would have to be treated with special anti-corrosive material because neat methanol eats away some metals, including lead.

Average gas price up nationwide

LOS ANGELES (AP) — For the first time in months the average price for gasoline has inched up nationwide, but hundreds of stations in the West still sell gas for less than $1 a gallon, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg says.

Wholesale gas prices increased an average 0.72 of a cent a gallon in the last three weeks, but dealers absorbed most of the raise and only charged motorists an average 0.13 of a cent more, said Lundberg, who publishes the weekly Lundberg Letter tracking oil industry trends.

Lundberg's figures were based on a survey conducted Friday of 17,500 dealers throughout the country. His last survey was Jan. 20.

The latest figures show the nationwide average price for all grades of gas was $1.18.9 a gallon, the first increase since August.

Lundberg said Sunday that while the prolonged cold snap in the East and Midwest has pushed gas prices up, the West Coast's mild winter hasn't affected motoring habits, so prices continue a "steady, almost measured trend down."

Of the 917 stations surveyed in the greater Los Angeles area, more than 200 were selling self-serve, regular, leaded gas at below $1, some as low as 94 cents a gallon, he said.

There were about 105 stations in Houston and 35 in Seattle that fell below the $1 mark. San Diego and Miami had many hovering just above.

Californians consume 10 percent of all gas sold in the nation, Lundberg noted, adding that the low prices are especially notable considering California has one of the highest state gas taxes in the country.

The current national average is close to what it was a year ago, when gas prices started dropping prior to last April's nickel-a-gallon increase in the federal gas tax, Lundberg noted. In January 1983, gas was selling for $1.19.7.

Average national prices at self-serve stations, where 73 percent of all gas is purchased, now are regular leaded $1.07.6; regular unleaded $1.15; premium leaded $1.32.7; premium unleaded $1.27.7.

Full-service prices were an average 19 cents higher than self-serve.

"That's 19 cents that people are willing to pay to sit in their cars," said Lundberg, noting that the gap between full- and self-serve prices has increased markedly. In February 1981, the difference was 5.5 cents.

Dollar eases, gold steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar eased in Europe early today in trendless trading. The value of gold bullion was little changed.

The dollar, which turned in a mixed performance in the United States late Friday, opened lower against all major European currencies.

But West German traders said the dollar was holding steady at its lower level. They said they did not expect any dramatic currency fluctuations in view of the holiday closing of U.S. markets.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with late Friday included:

—2.7370 West German marks, down from 2.7420.

—2.2335 Swiss francs, down from 2.2345.

—8.4270 French francs, down from 8.4565.

—3.0825 Dutch guilders, down from 3.0885.

—1,686.25 Italian lire, down from 1,692.00.

—1.24635 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2465.

The British pound increased in value to $1.4180 from $1.4140 Friday.

Earlier in Tokyo, the dollar fell to 234.08 Japanese yen from 234.35 yen Friday.

Vision of The Promised Land

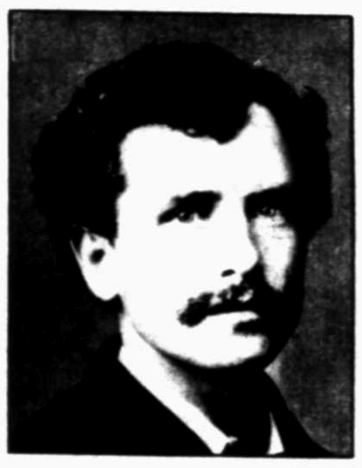

Main Street of Springville, Utah, 1900. The afternoon sun lights the Wasatch Mountains and Anderson's hometown. In 1900, Springville had a population of about 3,000; the Central School in the background and the Springville Bank, with the cupola, at right, were built in 1892.

George Edward Anderson devoted 40 years of his life to his favorite interest — photographing historical and religious subjects.

During the years of 1906 to 1911, his time was spent preserving Mormon history in Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and Vermont as well as serving the church on a mission to England. Later, he traveled to Arizona, Wyoming and Canada to record the construction of new temples and the trek of early pioneers as they made their way west.

The thousands of negatives he left which document the history of Mormonism and Utah at the turn of the century, might have been lost had not another resident of Anderson's hometown, Rell G. Francis, saved the glass plates from destruction.

George Edward Anderson

Today 150 of Anderson's photographs, printed by Francis, may be seen at Midland College's McCormick Gallery through February.

"When the Eastman box camera was popularizing amateur photography, and the pictorialists dominated the artistic mainstream, Anderson traveled with his 'tent gallery' by horse and buggy to small farms and towns throughout Utah," says Warren Taylor, MC art instructor.

"A contemporary noted that most photographers were in the business for money; Anderson was in it for art and history.'

"His sharply focused, beautifully composed pictures reveal not only the pursuits of a growing frontier — building railroads, mining and farming — but also the details of its daily life, such as costumes, architecture, machinery and toys.

"Because of his obscurity, few of his original prints have been located."

In 1908, as he left for England, the Boston Sunday Globe printed some of his work. A year later, the church published "The Birth of Mormonism in Picture," illustrated by Anderson's photographs.

Born in Salt Lake City in 1860, Anderson was the eldest of nine children. He served an apprenticeship with Charles R. Savage, a well-known western photographer. Anderson opened his own portrait studio in Salt Lake City, and, by 1879, he had won the tintype photography contest at the territorial fair.

Moving to Manti when the Mormon church built a temple there, he made nearly 50 plates of the Manti Temple under construction between 1886 and 1888. In 1888 he moved to Springville and established a permanent studio.

This exhibit, which has not been viewed outside the Amon Carter Museum, Fort Worth, is the first retrospective of Anderson's work. Hours at the McCormick Gallery during the exhibition are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday; 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday; 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday; and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Handicapped athletes hail from same town

AUSTIN (AP) — Athletes Kevin Paxton and David Wear say they share more in common now than when they were basketball teammates at Lampasas High School a decade ago.

Both men are now crippled — confined to wheelchairs by accidents that left them with useless legs. But they say that's not holding them back.

"I had my wreck in 1976, and David had his four years later," Wear told the Austin American-Stateman. "When we met for the first time, after our accidents, we couldn't believe that out of a town of 6,800, both of us ended up in wheelchairs."

But the former Lampasas residents, both 27 years old, are still athletes, with shoulder and arm muscles twice as powerful as when they played for the Lampasas Badgers.

Both men were opponents in an Austin basketball tournament sponsored by the Southwest Wheelchair Athletic Association. Wear, of Austin, and Paxton, who lives in Houston, battled each other in faceoffs similar to those in the 1970s at their old high school gym.

"David's always been an intense competitor," Paxton said. "We always had to compete against each other, so it's nothing new."

The two said they became friends as teenagers on the same football and basketball teams.

"We used to hang around at the Lampasas Dairy Queen," said Wear. "There wasn't much to do, except talk about sports, and drive up and down Key Street," the main drag in town.

"In 1976, after I'd graduated, I was coming home one night from Fort Hood where I worked, and a guy crossed the median line and hit my car head-on," Wear said. "The doctors had to tie off my aaorta to sew me up, and that cut off the blood to my legs.

"I remember Kevin coming to visit me in the hospital with some of our friends," said Wear. "And then later, he went to Texas A&M, and that's when he had his wreck."

Paxton said he was driving home from College Station in 1980 when his motorcycle left the highway in an accident that broke his spine.

"After they told me I wouldn't be able to walk, I was in shock," said Paxton. "I gradually accepted it, though, and decided I had to move on from there. I had a lot of support from family and friends."

Although each was aware of the other's accident, they made no attempt to contact each other until a wheelchair tournament in Houston last year.

"I was there to play basketball," Wear said, "and someone told me a guy in the building was looking for me. I went over, and there was Kevin registering players."

Wear works for an aviation instruments repair company. Paxton, a director of intramural athletics for the handicapped at the University of Houston. Both are even more involved in sports now than when they were teenagers.

Paxton said he hunts and plays racquetball. Wear participates in the "Capitol 10,000" run, lifts weights and enters wheelchair track events.

The men said they will continue to face each other on the basketball court.

"After my accident, I felt pretty down," said Wear. "But then I began to look at my life, like a play in a football game. I had x amount of years to live and a certain amount of time to make things work. A handicap is just one of the setbacks you have to work around."

David Wear, left, and Kevin Paxton, right, have more in common now than when they were basketball teammates at Lampasas High School. Both are now crippled, confined to wheelchairs from separate accidents that left them both with useless legs. They are now teammates on a wheelchair basketball team in Austin.

Workout treats paralyzed patient

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A paralyzed teen-ager says that his workout schedule, including 12-hour days and seven-day weeks, is not designed for building endurance and strength.

Kevin Curnutt, 16, of Arlington said he hopes the strenous routine, during which volunteers force his arms and legs through crawling motions, will enable him to walk again.

"It reminds me of a football workout, except this is a lot harder," Curnutt told The Dallas Morning News.

Curnutt and a friend were shot three years ago while riding their motorcycles on a dirt path in south Arlington. Curnutt's friend, Trey Shelton, died. Kevin, who was shot in the head, was in a coma for three weeks.

Arlington police said the boys were "ambushed" by 32-year-old Richard Tiedemann. Police said the man was apparently irritated by the sound of their motorcycles.

Officers said Tiedemann, an aerospace engineer whose home was near the dirt path, was later killed in a shootout with police.

A large shotgun pellet virtually destroyed the motor area of Kevin's brain, leaving him paralyzed from the neck down, said doctors.

They told Kevin he would never move again, his parents, Jerry and Gail Curnutt, said. Doctors said he could not hold his head up without the aid of a neck brace or move his arms, hands or legs.

The Curnutts, however, have been using a controversial program called patterning, developed in the 1950s by the Institutes for the Achievement of Human Potential in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Curnutt said the patterning theory is that repetitious movement can train healthy parts of the brain to assume the functions of an injured portion.

"We had no idea of the time and effort it would require," she said.

But no studies have been done to confirm the patterning theory, said Dr. William Parker, medical director of the rehabilitation center at Baylor University Medical Center.

"I'm not saying it isn't good," said Parker. "If patients want to try it, it won't hurt them. If it helps the patient, then that's fine."

The entire family, including Kevin's 18-year-old brother Kelly, went to Philadelphia in March 1982 to learn the program. When they returned, they started recruiting the 105 volunteers they needed to help with the patterning.

Without the volunteers, the patterning would be impossible, Mrs. Curnutt said.

She said that three times a day, five volunteers come to the Curnutts' home. During a session that lasts nearly two hours, they move Kevin's arms and legs through the crawling and creeping positions.

Volunteers then hoist the 6-foot, 150-ound teen-ager onto a board that tilts him into a vertical position, allowing his feet to support his weight.

Hearing angers group

DALLAS (AP) — A citizens' group opposing an operating license for the Comanche Peak nuclear power station near Glen Rose says it is angry over a federal agency's decision allowing Texas Utilities Co. to submit additional evidence defending its quality assurance program for the plant's design.

A spokesman for the Citizens Association for Sound Energy says the federal decision was unfair and would strain the limited resources it has to fight construction of the plant.

The three-member Atomic Safety and Licensing Board admitted, in a memorandum released Wednesday, that its decision would tax the financial and volunteer manpower resources of the Dallas-based citizen's association.

The panel said, however, it would permit the new evidence because the current record might not reflect the actual state of the quality assurance program at the nuclear plant in Somervell County.

"What they (the ASLB panel members) are saying is that we have won based on the record right now," said CASE president Juanita Ellis on Saturday. "But because it's a multi-billion dollar plant, they're going to go in and let them start all over again after months and months of hearings and a lot of money being wasted."

A memorandum issued by the ASLB panel on Dec. 28 said it doubted the ability of plant designers to correct design errors.

The panel will make a recommendation on licensing to the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission later this year.

Man jailed on birthday for possession of drugs

Howard Lee Cooks, 36, of 815 S. Bunche, was jailed in lieu of $25,000 set by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

Police said Cooks, a patient at MHMR, is charged with attempting to rape a counselor at the center after following her into a bathroom shortly after 10 a.m. Friday.

He was arrested at Texas and Front Streets about 1½ hours later. There was no report of injuries to the counselor.

Dead calf listed as threat

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police responded to an early morning call today to find a dead Holstein calf near the front door of an Odessa home, with a note stuck to the calf's stomach by a butcher knife.

The incident, listed as a terroristic threat, was reported to police at about 1:30 a.m. today. Police found the typed note, which reportedly said "A Tell-Tale Smell. Youth is Next."

A 19-year-old Odessa man living at home on E. 53rd Street told police he feared for his life and had a suspect. Detectives will investigate further to determine appropriate action.

The man told police he also received a phone call Sunday at 5:30 p.m., telling him to "watch your backside. You're dead."

Hail scrubs flights

DALLAS (AP) — An American Airlines spokesman says scores of flights were scrubbed after large hail damaged 28 passenger jets at the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport.

Lowell Duncan, American's vice president for communications, said 103 flights were canceled Sunday and another 73 flights were scrubbed today after a Saturday night hailstorm battered the planes.

Most of the damage was to the skin of the aircraft, said company spokesman Al Becker.

"It's a laborious process to get them repaired," Becker said.

American spokeswoman Mary Sullivan said the hail caused an undetermined amount of damage.

"As a precautionary measure, they were taken out of service to be inspected and repaired," said Ms. Sullivan. "They were in their normal positions when the storm came through."

The planes damaged including Boeing 727s and 767s and McDonnell-Douglas DC-10s, she said.

Defense to lay cards on table in Geter case

DALLAS (AP) — Defense attorneys move into the awkward position today of trying to prove the innocence of engineer Lenell Geter in order to avoid a second trial of his controversial armed robbery charge.

State District Judge John Ovard was scheduled to hear pretrial arguments in the widely reported case. Defense attorneys have issued subpoenas for 55 witnesses to testify at the hearing, which could last several days.

Defense attorney Edwin Sigel says he will lay all his cards on the table and try to prove prosecutors don't have enough evidence to merit another trial — a contention refuted by Gerald Banks and Norman Kinne, two Dallas County assistant district attorneys.

Geter, 26, who has returned to his $24,000-a-year job at E-Systems Inc. in Greenville, claims he was arrested only because he was a black in a small, predominantly white Texas town.

He was convicted in October 1982 of armed robbery charges for a $615 holdup of a Balch Springs chicken restaurant 44 miles from E-Systems. His colleagues say he was at work on the day of the robbery, although they have not been able to place him at his desk at the exact hour of the Aug. 23, 1982 holdup.

Five eyewitnesses picked Geter out of police lineups, and he was sentenced to life in prison even though he had no prior police record.

He was released in December after nearly 16 months behind bars when Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade, admitting that news accounts of the case had raised doubts about the validity of the conviction, agreed to a new trial. The trial is scheduled to begin April 9.

During the trial of Geter's roommate Anthony Williams, who was acquitted of similar charges after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People joined the case, a Greenville police lieutenant admitted he distributed pictures of six E-Systems engineers, labled as robbery suspects, because they were black and were from South Carolina.

Corporations, volunteers 'adopt' needy schools

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — At aging and overcrowded Rosemont Avenue School just west of downtown, where 1,200 students speak 18 languages, Felipe Carlos, 6, is struggling to learn English. His teacher, Suzy Takeda, runs a quiet and orderly classroom, but she has 23 first- and second-graders to educate, and most of them speak limited English.

On Thursday mornings, though, Felipe and his classmates often get tutoring from Wally Baker to polish their language skills.

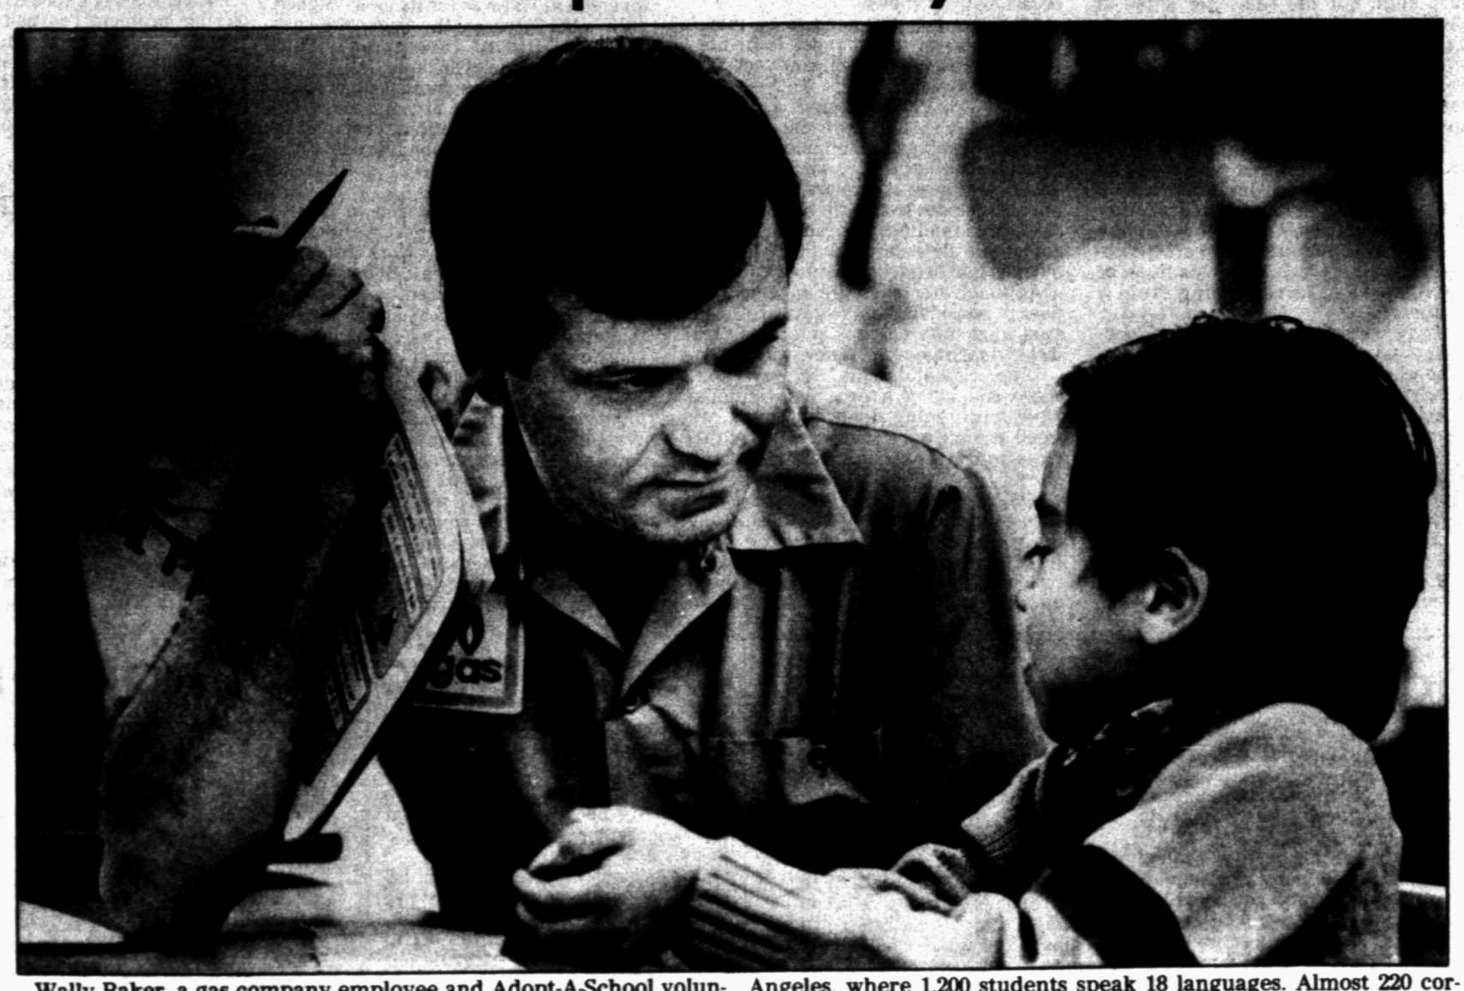

Baker, 34, is a gas company conservation representative who spends 39 hours of the company's time each week advising people how to cut their gas bills by installing insulation and low-flow shower heads. Then Baker devotes two hours a week — one on his own time and one on the gas company's — helping Rosemont students learn basic skills that will influence their success both in school and as adults.

Baker is one of hundreds of people who volunteer their talents to the Los Angeles Unified School District with the support of their employers through the district's Adopt-A-School program. Nearly 220 corporations, non-profit service organizations and other employers have adopted schools in the city, providing them with volunteers who run mini-courses, organize field trips, counsel students and perform almost any other task the schools need and the volunteers can meet.

Wally Baker, a gas company employee and Adopt-A-School volunteer, works with Felipe Carlos at Rosemont Avenue School in Los Angeles, where 1,200 students speak 18 languages. Almost 220 corporations and organizations participate in the program.

THE LOS ANGELES Dodgers teach students at Solano Avenue School near Chavez Ravine how a major sports business runs — from maintaining the playing field to group ticket sales to how pitcher Fernando Valenzuela grips baseballs.

The Medical Center of Tarzana, in the suburban San Fernando Valley, a profit-making hospital owned by American Medical International, teaches lab science and nutrition to youngsters at an elementary school.

Before it went up for sale, Francis Ford Coppola's Zoetrope Studios in Hollywood ran an extensive apprenticeship program for Bancroft Junior High across the street in which the students learned, in teams, about writing, directing, cinematography and other film-related skills.

Southern California Gas Co. workers have brought in trucks, backhoes and cherry pickers to show Rosemont students how tools work. On one recent Saturday morning, Baker and six co-workers painted the school library, the teachers' lounge and a storage room sky blue, applying fresh paint for the first time in nearly 20 years, principal Lu Hishmeh said.

The Los Angeles Adopt-A-School program is indicative of several significant trends in volunteerism, the promotion of which was a major cause of liberal groups in the '60s and now is a major theme of the Reagan administration.

FOR MANY YEARS, volunteering was largely the province of middle-class housewives, but surveys in recent years have found that men are increasingly volunteering through formal programs such as Adopt-A-School.

There also is a growing movement toward volunteering help to government agencies, such as public schools, in addition to the private, non-profit organizations that traditionally have depended on volunteer help.

And growing numbers of employers are encouraging their workers to be volunteers and are allowing the work place to be the focus of volunteer organizing efforts.

The Los Angeles program had its beginnings in 1972 in an effort by the University of Southern California to build better relations with the surrounding neighborhood. USC's Joint Education Project has involved 18,000 students as volunteers, most of them earning course credits, at eight public schools, two senior-citizens centers and two health clinics.

"The concept I started out with was to help inner-city schools, which I see as less than equal even though there is extra (federal) money for most schools in economically disadvantaged neighborhoods," said Barbara Gardner, who started the USC program.

"MY YOUNGEST KID went to South Shores School in San Pedro, which had less money to educate her than in inner-city schools, but with money alone you can't equalize. My daughter had a lot of stuff schools can't give you like wonderful role models to read her stories and teach jazz dancing and take her on trips — the stuff that makes you a successful student. My boys got to sail boats in San Pedro harbor.

In 1978, Gardner approached Atlantic Richfield about starting a similar program for inner-city schools. Today four schools get regular help from ARCO volunteers. The Los Angeles Herald-Examiner also has adopted Berendo Junior High.

Arco's involvement, by far the most intensive in the district, includes granting employees from clerk-typists to middle managers two hours of paid time each week to volunteer, along with bus fare or use of a company car to travel to the adopted schools.

One of ARCO's philosophies has been to teach people skills they can use to help themselves, according to Caran Neal, the ARCO project coordinator.

Neal tries to match 55 ARCO volunteers to the needs of teachers at 10th Street School in the Pico-Union area, one of the poorest in the city.

The school's main building was finished in 1880. The school is crammed into one small city block that was designed as a learning center for 300 children but now serves six times that many, all but a handful of them Spanish-speaking. Many are refugees from violence and poverty in Central America.

NEAL HAS HELPED coordinate numerous community-betterment efforts, including cleaning of trash from nearby streets, painting rundown buildings that face the school, planting a community garden and arranging for one woman to learn exercise skills so she could teach them to other women.

Neal, a paid consultant to ARCO, also arranged for periodic gynecological examinations and instructions in breast self-examination for women in the neighborhood until budget cuts forced the USC Women's Hospital and the Cancer Education Program for Women at Martin Luther King Jr. Hospital to end their free outreach services.

William J. Johnston, the former Los Angeles school district superintendent who now is a gas-company public-affairs executive, said, "The philosophy when we started was to have involvement. To this day, we never have defined involvement as requiring a monetary contribution."

"BUT WE'RE FOCUSING on specific problems. ARCO says, let's paint the buildings around a school, California Federal Savings says, let's work on security at a school and Southern California Gas says, let's help tutor kids at another school. This isn't giving to charity in a general way, but a very directed way.

"And it personalizes the objectives and the goals while communicating the schools' problems in a very real, tangible and believable way."

Old 'haunted' homes being restored

By The Associated Press

Some old houses apparently may be haunted, says Patricia Poore, editor of The Old-House Journal, a monthly New York newsletter that provides information on the restoration of old houses.

The publication recently asked readers to describe in writing any gho tly encounters they had experienced. The Old-House Journal got interested in the question of ghosts when the editors observed a pattern in the making, according to Ms. Poore.

"A substantial number of readers would mention that the spirits in the house acted up whenever there was any major remodeling going on," she said.

In response to the request for information, the magazine received 27 case histories — "and that doesn't count the several dozen who have told us about their experiences but didn't have time to write," she added.

The Old-House Journal's informal survey turned up some common elements in ghostly manifestations. Noises were the most numerous examples. They included noises such as slamming doors, unintelligible voices and the sound of footsteps. (These were not explainable by the actions of others in the house since they were often experienced when there was nobody else at home.)

Many readers reported being aware of a feeling of cold air when the ghost was moving. Unusual smells were also noted, including the smell of burning leaves or burnt coffee, she said.

It was rare, though, that anyone reported actually seeing a household ghost. "In a few instances, the homeowners were so curious they researched the history of their house and found photographs of former occupants that resembled the apparition they saw," said Ms. Poore.

One woman reported walking into her kitchen and seeing a barefoot boy dressed in ragged clothing and holding a lantern. Just as she was about to speak, the boy "melted away." Then her husband came up the stairs from the cellar carrying a lantern he said he had just found, said Ms. Poore.

As a result of its article, the newsletter was contacted by a psychic research group which investigated the "hauntings" further.

"They found our subscribers were different from most people who feel terror when confronted with something that seems to be a ghost," she said. Old-House Journal readers on the other hand were delighted with the idea of sharing their home, according to Ms. Poore.

The survey has not convinced her ghosts exist. But she does say "a lot of intelligent thoughtful people honestly believe they are sharing their old house with someone who is definitely not part of the family."

Though old houses and ghosts naturally go together in fiction, Ms. Poore reports that most old-house owners are concerned with more mundane subjects.

Of the 75,000 readers of the 10-year-old publication, more than 80 percent are restoring an old house in which they are living.

Over the past five years in which she has been associated with the publication, Ms. Poore has noticed several trends.

Early American and Victorian homes are now very costly. As a result, many readers are restoring early 20th-century homes, she said.

Another new development is that "people are getting purer in their approach." They are doing more research to find how their home might have looked in its heyday and then duplicating it. That goes for kitchens and bathrooms, too, she said.

New designs thrill rug weaver

DOYLESTOWN, Pa. (AP) — There's a mystique about sitting at a loom, lost in the artistry of weaving bright yarns into a beautiful design, producing a rug so glorious that it doesn't end up under foot but hangs on the wall like a painting.

Alice Pickett of Doylestown makes such rugs, but she finds her hours at the loom anticlimactic, even boring. She hates to admit it, but sometimes while she's weaving she watches TV. To her, the intensity and adventure come when she sits down with a pencil and graph paper to create a design.

She can make a Lightning Rug, bright red shot through with a yellow zigzag that seems to vibrate; or a bold geometric pattern composed of tiny stripes of many colors; or a tapestry-like weave that comes out of a shaft-switching technique; or a picture made up of little blocks, like something from a computer.

"I try very hard to do original contemporary design," Mrs. Pickett says. "The whole joy of doing it is to do something different and original."

Mrs. Pickett is not pleased to hear people compare her rugs to those made by Navajos or early American settlers. She rejects such imitation both because she works from her own vision and because of the market value of her rugs — $30 a square foot and heading higher.

"I couldn't make as much money as I do, rehashing colonial things," she says.

Mrs. Pickett gets $620 for her average-size 43-by-70-inch rug, turning out about 20 a year on a loom that completely fills what was supposed to be her dining room. She sells them through an interior design firm with an affiliated art gallery in Boston, through the Artisans' Cooperative in Chadd's Ford, and occasionally at shows.

"Artists aren't supposed to be monetary," she says, "but it's nice to be able to go out and buy yarn and not feel guilty afterward."

When Mrs. Pickett designs a rug, she starts with a sketch. Then she sits down with the graph paper and does a careful rendering of every curve and angle. When she plans the colors, as often as not she decides to dye the yarn herself. She wants shadings so gradual that one color will slide into another with no obvious line between the hues.

Although her rugs are modern, she doesn't consider them avant-garde. She says what she's doing is combining traditional techniques in a new way.

"I do original designs," she says, "but there is a lot of super-unconventional fiber work being done out there. My mind doesn't work that way. I have this functional idea behind most of my work."

Not every rug Mrs. Pickett weaves turns out successfully. She tells of one drawing, a stylized landscape with trees, that was one of her best. It turned into a rug that failed on every count, and she still doesn't know what to do with it.

"The day I took it off my loom, I said, 'It's a bomb.' I tried giving it to my parents but they didn't want it," she says.

Many of her rugs are in homes, others in the executive offices of corporations where art is purchased as much for its investment value as for its looks. Signed on a label sewn on the back, the rugs are the kind of investments that increase in value over time.

Mrs. Pickett has hundreds of rugs to her credit. Some are one-of-a-kind, others are limited editions, executed in different colors. And she has made one rug, the Sunrise rug, about 30 times, to fill orders.

Mrs. Pickett, 31, majored in textile design at Rhode Island School of Design. She has had her work displayed in the Philadelphia Craft Show, in several galleries and, currently, in Reykjavik, Iceland, as one of 58 artists invited to participate in a two-month show sponsored by the American ambassador.

She will also exhibit by invitation next spring at the Textile Museum in Washington, D.C., where she will be artist-in-residence May 10-13.

While some artists find it difficult to part with their works, Mrs. Pickett says she's not emotionally attached to hers — she just binds or fringes the ends and ships them off.

"Nobody wants to be a weaver and have an attic with 100 rugs in it."

DEAR ABBY

Endocrinologists helpful

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a 22-year-old woman with a terrible problem I've had ever since I was very young. I am embarrassed by underarm perspiration rings that reach down to my waist. This problem persists regardless of the season, temperature or humidity. Anti-perspirants are not effective for me. My clothes are literally destroyed.

I once heard that there is a surgical procedure to correct this problem. Can you tell me anything about it? — DRIPPING WET IN PA.

DEAR DRIPPING: Before considering surgery, I urge you to see an endocrinologist. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: A reader recently asked you what an endocrinologist was. He said he had asked his doctor and his doctor didn't know.

Instead of answering his question, you told him to buy two dictionaries, one for himself and one for his doctor, then find another doctor.

Abby, you missed a good opportunity to educate your readers. Being an endocrinologist myself, I am frequently asked that question, and this is my reply:

Endocrinology is the study of hormones and the effects of deficiencies and excesses of these hormones. The endocrinologist specializes in a wide range of problems, such as calcium and bone problems, menstrual disorders, pituitary abnormalities, excessive hair growth in women and undersized children, to name a few. But the most common endocrine disorders are diabetes and thyroid disease. — ENDOCRINOLOGIST, RICHMOND, VA.

DEAR ABBY: I do not like to be touched — meaning grabbed or clutched or jabbed — even in a playful or non-threatening manner.

My reaction (I naturally draw away) is taken as a rejection by some people, but I can't help it — that's just the way I am.

Am I alone or not? I am a male, age 37, if that makes a difference. — TOUCH-ME-NOT

DEAR TOUCH: You are not alone. Many people dislike being touched. They feel a certain violation of their space — and they react negatively.

(Problems? What's bugging you? Unload on Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Lacquers being improved

By The Associated Press

One of lacquer's advantages is also its biggest disadvantage. It dries very rapidly.

Because of this quality, lacquer was developed many years ago as a substitute for varnish, which usually required at least overnight drying before a second coat could be applied. Lacquer enabled professional wood finishers to put on several coats in a single day with special spraying equipment.

Since most do-it-yourselfers did not have first-class sprayers in the 1920s, when lacquer was formulated from various chemicals, non-professionals usually got poor results. Either their sprayers were not efficient enough or they applied the lacquer with a brush. Either way, the beautiful finishes seen on good furniture could not be achieved.

Things have changed somewhat. Over the years, manufacturers have turned out what are called brushing lacquers. They can be applied with brushes to produce excellent finishes, yet they require both knowledge and care to get such results. They may not dry as quickly as spray lacquer, but they still dry faster than other finishes.

The stroking, using a full brush, must be done evenly and rapidly without going back over the same areas. The lacquer is flowed on, not brushed back and forth. As soon as one section is covered, the bristles must be dipped into the lacquer and an immediate start made on the adjoining section, blending the second part into the edges of the first. This merger must be accomplished before the first section begins to set, which can be a matter of seconds.

If you have never worked with lacquer and plan to do so, practice with it a bit on scrap wood. Dilute the lacquer with 50 percent of lacquer thinner. If you don't, you might run into a thinner that is not completely compatible with the lacquer, resulting in a less-than-ideal finish. After a couple of practice runs, you will know whether to utilize the 50-50 combination or reduce the percentage of thinner.

As with any finishing material, what you do to it after the final coat has been applied will determine how well it looks and how durable it will be. You can sand it very lightly with a fine grade of "wet" sandpaper, using water as the lubricant or you can rub it with a fine grade of pumice powder and either water or oil.

For a high gloss, follow the pumice-water treatment with a rottenstone powder-water rubdown. Or you can simply use a rubbing compound. Waxing will help to preserve the finish.

Small attic room becomes parents' retreat

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. Our small home cannot be added onto because of lot size but my husband and I need a small getaway.

Our teenagers often have noisy activities going on in the living room, dining room and kitchen, especially when friends are over to visit. I'm glad they are at home but we sometimes want to watch a different television program or do homework.

We do have a small attic on the third floor that we're considering converting from storage to a tiny sitting room. Please suggest some lively colors that will give this rather dull, dark space an appealing look. — R.B.

A. You might like a room created by designer Patricia Gaylor with primary colors as accents to brighten pristine white walls and navy blue carpeting.

She used a pair of soft blue linen-like recliner chairs, end tables, a lavender and white woven wool rug and a natural pine self-assemble stacking storage unit to house stereo, video tape recorder, television and books.

Vivid emerald green, cerise and purple accents were used in accessories and pillows.

If you can't devote the entire attic to your new sitting room, screen off the can't-part-with treasures with a wallpapered screen in colors taken from other elements in the room.

CNS Photo

A small space with great charm was created in this room by designer Patricia Gaylor using crisp white walls, navy blue carpeting, two light blue recliner chairs, a lavender and white rug and accents of purple, emerald green amd cerise. The recliners are by Barcalounger.

Gaylor gained more natural light for her small room by installing a skylight. Both the skylight and small window were left wthout a covering.

Q. I want to do some major remodeling in our children's rooms. Do you know of some good books on space planning and decorating youngster's places?

We don't have vast amounts of space but we are wanting to capitalize on what we have. — T.P.C.

A. Let me recommend three books. I'm certain there are many others, but this will give you a start.

"Children's Spaces" by Molly and Norman McGrath (William Morrow, 1978) is a picture book of 50 architects' and designers' ideas on children's rooms. There are some good ideas to be gleaned from them, but my complaint is that many of the rooms are huge spaces to begin with, unlike many of the tiny cell-like rooms we have to contend with. But take a look and see what you can find in that volume.

"Successful Children's Rooms" by Joseph F. Schram (Structures Publishing Co., 1979) provides pictures of good solutions to the problems of decorating children's rooms. Here you will find useful black-and-white drawings of do-it-yourself projects.

The third is "A Child's Place: How to Create a Room for Your Child" by Alexandra Stoddard (Dolphin, 1978). The author talks about basic concepts that might help you create your own plan with rooms for babies to teenagers.

Q. I have a small home with wasted space in a wide hall connecting the dining room and kitchen. There is one window 36 inches high by 48 inches wide on one side.

I need storage but cupboards on both sides would make this nothing more than a runway which I think would be unattractive. I prefer traditional designs with soft colors. — P.B.

A. You could add some charm and personality to the space and also provide some storage with two low chests under your window. Top the chest with a thick cushioned seat.

Author suggests 'double duty decorating'

By The Associated Press

Sooner or later, it happens to almost everyone. The living space that once was more than adequate is suddenly too small.

In the 19th century, Americans could simply light out for the frontier when space got tight at home. But eventually there was no more frontier. Then came the era when moving to the suburbs was a popular choice.

Today, many Americans have found that their options have suddenly shrunk as building and land costs have risen and higher interest rates have made mortgages a sometime thing.

So when a new baby comes or a parent moves in or a new business or hobby is begun, some families find they must stay put and rearrange the home they have to pack more living inside the same four walls.

The problem has led to a spate of articles and books on domestic space planning. One of the books on the subject is Virginia Carry's "Double Duty Decorating." This clearly-written volume offers some excellent suggestions on how to get more mileage out of the rooms you already have. A number of the ideas are illustrated with drawings by Robert Penny.

In an interview, Mrs. Carry, a former decorating editor and a writer, said she used her own experience in revamping a New York City apartment to accommodate two children and to provide work-at-home space for herself and her husband.

She confided her first efforts were not very successful. After the first baby was born, she converted the family's spacious kitchen into a kind of room for all seasons. In addition to cooking and dining, the kitchen was used as the laundry, play area and television watching spot. In addition, a convertible sofa turned one end of the room into an occasional guest room, and Mrs. Carry's home office was also located in the kitchen.

"It just didn't work," she said. "Even though we have a large three-bedroom apartment, everyone was constantly in the kitchen, and I couldn't get any work done." The experience led her to formulate her first rule for double duty decorating: limit proposed activities in a room to a few.

After her second baby was born, she developed a more successful scheme that led to her recently-published book.

This time, she relocated some activities to rooms that were under-utilized. The dining room became her home-office. One end of the room was fitted with shelves and sequestered behind a newly-built partial wall. The laundry was moved to a large closet in one of the children's bedrooms and the kitchen remained the family's cooking, dining and social center.

Guests are no longer expected to bunk on the convertible sofa. Instead, they are accommodated in one of the children's rooms. The girl moves in with her brother and shares his bunk beds while guests are in residence.

Looking around for under-used space to find a place for her husband's desk and bookshelves, Mrs. Carry settled on the foyer which was revamped and a former door eliminated.

Other ideas she has used to gain more functional rooms in the apartment include the addition of a chaise in the master bedroom. "It provides a comfortable place other than the bed to lie down and watch television or read," she said.

The Carrys also have pressed a large closet into service to store oversized paraphernalia such as bicycles. She says, too, that every household needs a secret space which can hold messy or bulky items out of view for a while.

The Carry household has several such places. Her favorite is the space beneath the high-skirted beds in the master bedroom and in her daughter's room.

Under the four poster in her own bedroom go cardboard boxes which contain out-of-season clothing.

Bottle floats back home

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — When Jerry Poppenhouse dropped a message into the Gulf of Mexico, he didn't expect it to wash up in his own backyard.

Poppenhouse, a photographer for Phillips Petroleum Co., was working on a drilling platform 80 miles offshore from Corpus Christi, Texas, when he put a message in an empty film cannister and dropped it into the water.

The message gave his address and asked the finder to contact him.

On his return to Bartlesville, Poppenhouse got a phone call from Bill and Debbie Boyd. Poppenhouse asked, "Where are you?" Replied the Boyds, "Bartlesville. We live about two miles from you."

The Boyds had found Poppenhouse's message on the beach while visiting Padre Island, Texas.

Get a jump on spring planting

Get your spring garden off to a good start by growing your own transplants indoors. The key to growing transplants successfully is to plant seed at the proper time so the young plants will be ready to set out when your garden is ready and weather conditions are favorable.

For the best survival and quick recovery after planting in the garden, transplants should be young, sturdy and in good nutritional condition.

Usually four to six weeks is sufficient time to grow most transplants. Vine crops take two to three weeks to develop two to three true leaves while lettuce takes three to four weeks. Tomatoes need five to seven weeks to reach transplanting stage.

To determine the optimum seeding time for most transplants, figure back four to six weeks from the average last spring frost. This average date in Midland County is April 3.

Some transplants such as cabbage, cauliflower, broccoli, lettuce and onions, can be set in the garden four to six weeks before the last frost date.

When starting plants indoors, use a soilless or synthetic soil mix available at garden centers or nurseries. Or you can mix your own by combining one part sandy loam with one part sand or vermiculite plus one part Michigan or Canadian spaghnum peat.

The mix must be pasteurized to kill harmful fungi, bacteria, weed seeds and nematodes which it may contain. This is easily done by placing the soil mix in a shallow metal pan, covering the pan tightly with aluminum foil and heating the soil to 160 degrees in an oven. Keep the soil at this temperature for at least 1 hour or until a potato imbedded in the soil is baked. After cooling, the soil is ready for planting.

Seed can be started in almost any type container, such as flower pots, milk cartons, or cake pans. Be sure the container has holes for adequate drainage. Other popular containers are seed flats, peat pots and peat cubes or pellets.

Once you've got the needed materials and planting time is at hand, fill the containers with the soil mix, firm it in well and then water thoroughly. Space the seed evenly, cover lightly and water again.

To improve germination slip the container into a plastic bag and place it in an area at room temperature, but out of direct sunlight. Remove the bag when the seeds first emerge and place the container in sunlight.

Once the container has been removed from the plastic bag, add water to maintain good moisture. Frequent watering will be necessary, but use care to avoid saturation.

When plants are of adequate size and outside conditions are suitable for plant growth, transplant them into the garden area and you've got a jump on the planting season.

Farmers in South Texas wait for dry weather

AGRICULTURE

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Farmers in South Texas are awaiting dry weather and warmer soil temperatures to begin corn and grain planting, but elsewhere across the state land preparation activities are gaining momentum as favorable conditions continue in many areas.

Light drizzle also slowed field operations in some coastal areas. Wet fields again delayed the harvest of sugarcane, as well as carrots and cabbage in the Rio Grande Valley, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. The citrus leaf drop is almost complete in the Valley, and growers are awaiting warmer weather in order to accurately assess freeze-damage to their trees.

Spinach and carrot harvesting continues in the Winter Garden area of Southwest Texas, where a vegetable processing plant resumed operations this week for the first time since the December freeze. The plant closed down again after a few days since there was an insufficient supply of raw products to sustain the line.

Home gardeners across the state are accelerating their activities and taking advantage of milder temperatures to prepare seedbeds for spring planting. Some early vegetable planting is under way in the Northeast and East Texas, where some onions, cabbage and Brussels sprouts are being planted. Growers also are planting pine seedlings in East Texas, Carpenter said.

Hay supplies continue to dwindle in many areas, as heavy feeding of protein and hay continues for livestock throughout the state. In the South Plains, where wheat is recovering and providing some grazing, ranchers have been able to cut back slightly on supplemental feeding of range cattle. Ranchers in the Rolling Plains, however, are selling off some of their wheat-pastured cattle since grazing continues very limited there.

Grass and brush fires are a hazard in many areas of East Texas, where freeze-killed plant materials are contributing to the threat, Carpenter noted.

Spring shearing has begun in Southwest Texas, along with the lambing season. Both activities are expected to get momentum during the next three to four weeks.

Plan to cut milk surplus attracts little support

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's new plan to cut surplus milk production has attracted only about half the support that administration officials had hoped.

About 12 percent of the nation's dairy farmers enrolled in the program, the Agriculture Department said Monday.

Those who did agree to reduce milk output over a 15-month period which began on Jan. 1 plan to trim production by 23 percent of their normal flow, officials said.

But their cutbacks add up to only 5.5 percent of the nation's estimated total milk output between Jan. 1, 1984, and March 31, 1985, when the program ends.

Over the entire 15 months, that would mean a reduction of about 9.3 billion pounds, including about 7.4 billion pounds in the 1984 calendar year.

"This is a substantial amount, but it is also somewhat disappointing since we had hoped a larger number would participate," said Deputy Secretary Richard E. Lyng. "It appears the dairy surplus problem is not going to be resolved as quickly as all of us had hoped."

Officials had hoped the program would cut milk production 10 percent or more over the 15-month span.

Lyng said the signup figures showed dairy farmers planned to cull 336,796 cows from their herds under the program. Those would be in addition to normal herd culling. The excess cows would be sent to slaughter and used mostly for hamburger.

The dairy contracts showed that 23 percent of the intended culling would be done by the end of January, with the remainder at the rate of about 20,000 head per month. As of Jan. 1 there were about 11 million dairy cows.

"This should not have a significant impact on cattle, poultry or hog markets," Lyng said.

Livestock producers had been fearful that up to 1 million cows or more would be sent to slaughter under the program, thereby causing prices to drop.

Milk production has set annual records in recent years, rising to 138.9 billion pounds in 1983. Another increase had been expected in 1984.

Under the government's milk price support program — which continues to operate despite adjustments in support levels — the USDA buys surplus butter, cheese and non-fat dry milk to prop up the price of milk paid to farmers.

The stockpile of surplus dairy commodities is at record levels and continues to grow. In all, the milk program has been costing taxpayers more than $2.5 billion a year.

Uma inorata, more commonly known as the Coachella Valley fringe-toed lizard, a handsome little lizard, less than 10 inches long, is getting harder and harder to find. Endangered species of lizard threatens development

Tiny 'Tyrannosaurus rex' strikes fear in developers' hearts

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — Biologists know Uma inorata as a handsome little lizard, less than 10 inches long and getting harder and harder to find, but to developers and growth-oriented governments in California's Coachella Valley, he is as fearsome as Tyrannosaurus rex.

More commonly known as the Coachella Valley fringe-toed lizard, the creature's federal designation as a threatened species, in turn, threatens millions of dollars worth of construction projects in the growing desert metropolis that stretches from Palm Springs to Indio. Riverside County Supervisor Patricia Larson, whose district includes the lizard habitat, said, "The potential is there to shut down all development in the Coachella Valley."

The uncertainty has prompted the Rancho Mirage City Council to order City Attorney David Erwin to explore grounds for a lawsuit and look for somebody to sue, perhaps the federal government. Other cities in the valley are being invited to join in, Erwin said.

Two financial and development giants are joining forces with naturalists, under the auspices of the California branch of the Nature Conservancy, in an effort to provide a permanent park-like habitat for the lizard. The 20-square-mile site (12,600 acres) they have selected has the town of Thousand Palms Oasis at its heart.

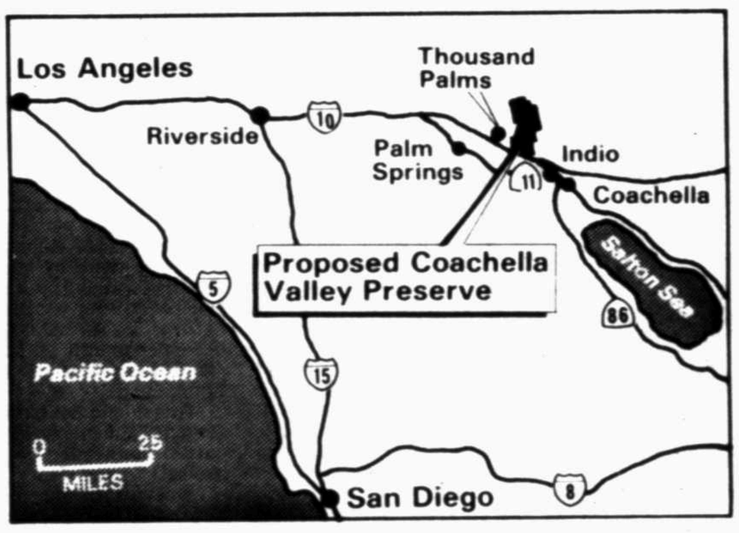

Oddly, the idea of the preserve came before the lizard was considered threatened.

Credit Wilbur W. Mayhew. A professor of biology at the University of California, Riverside, Mayhew has been studying Uma (pronounced like the Arizona city of Yuma) and other desert fauna for 30 years. Envisoning a day when the desert floor will be covered with golf courses and condominiums, he saw the need for a preserve to protect the 180 indigenous plants and 100 animals.

He readily admits that he set out to find a threatened species to use as a "tool" to obtain the preserve.

He came up with Uma inorata.

After a 10-year battle, the U.S. Department of the Interior in 1980 did list the lizard as threatened under the federal Endangered Species Act. The lizard also is listed as endangered by the state, but it is the U.S. designation that gives little Uma his giant teeth. The act prohibits the taking or harming of any threatened species, and this extends to loss of habitat through development.

There are three kinds of fringe-toed lizards, but only the Coachella Valley lizard is considered rare. Mayhew says its value to humans is unknown, but argues that once it is gone any undiscovered potential will be gone, too.

A Coachella Valley Fringe-Toed Lizard Recovery Team was established to look after Uma's best interest. Frank Hoover, a California Department of Fish and Game biologist, is team chairman. "Our job was to come up with a recovery plan so that it would perpetuate it in perpetuity, to keep it from going extinct," he said.

Since 1980, developers have applied a rough formula to take into account protection of the lizard. For every four acres they develop, they put up the money for one acre to be preserved. But that informal arrangement has no force of law, and if someone wanted to push the issue in the courts, all development might be halted, environmentalists say. As a result, developers are moving cautiously.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service would be able to allow development in areas that remain outside the preserve. That is what makes it likely that the preserve will become a reality.

The lizard makes its home in the loose blown sands of the region. Its fringed toes help it "swim" beneath the sand. Naturalists say it cannot survive on bare ground or rocks, so any preserve would have to include a sand source — washes that carry the sand down from the mountains when it rains.

Originally, Mayhew says, the lizard had about 200 square miles of sandy habitat in the valley, but by last year it had to make do with about 95 square miles, a lot of it of only marginal quality. The area proposed for the preserve encompasses about one-fifth of the total remaining lizard habitat.

The Natural Conservancy, a nonprofit national group devoted to the protection of rare and endangered native plants, animals and natural communities, announced recently that it has agreed to purchase part of a 9,500-acre desert tract in the area proposed as a preserve and has taken an option on the remainder from Cathton Investments Inc., which is owned by Canadian physican Charles Allard.

Cathton is selling the land for $13 million — reportedly $2 million less than its actual worth. Attempts to discuss the sale with Allard were unsuccessful.

A spokesman for the Nature Conservancy said that this is its largest project; the conservancy owns or has acquired rights to purchase more than 30 preserves throughout California. The remaining 3,000 acres are expected to come from land swaps arranged through the U.S. Bureau of Land Management and purchases of smaller parcels from private owners.

Much of the Nature Conservancy's money has come from grants from corporations and foundations. The Richard King Mellon Foundation has advanced risk capital to enable the conservancy to exercise options on the Cathton property.

But a large share of the money is expected to come from a development fee being considered by members of the Coachella Valley Association of Governments, an amalgam of nine cities and the county of Riverside.

Criticism does not faze medical doctor

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dr. Robert S. Mendelsohn has been branded by some in the medical establishment as a dangerous publicity-seeker, but he says that won't stop him from taking radical positions — like his attack on yearly physical exams and immunizations.

In fact, Mendelsohn, 58, contends his controversial stands, outlined in books, a weekly syndicated newspaper column and on radio and TV talk shows, are slowly becoming accepted medical wisdom.

"I'm ending up in the mainstream of medicine because medicine is moving in my direction," he said, citing his attack on the need for annual physical examinations, Pap tests for women, many routine X-rays and a wide variety of drugs — all of which are now being called into question by more traditional physicians.

Dr. M. Harry Jennison, executive director of the American Academy of Pediatrics, said he regrets the "consternation in the public mind" caused by Mendelsohn, adding that he believes Mendelsohn wants to sell books and make money.

And an American Medical Association official told the Los Angeles Times, "Discussing Mendelsohn is a no-win proposition. We don't even want to get tangled up with him in print."

But Mendelsohn says he isn't fazed by criticism.

The Evanston, Ill., pediatrician is the author of "Confessions of a Medical Heretic" and "Malepractice," and now is writing a third book. His books attack modern medicine as inherently sexist and say many of its weapons against disease either are worthless or life-threatening.

Robert Mendelsohn

Organized medicine opposes many of the positions taken by Mendelsohn, including his statements that:

—Immunizations for children are either useless or dangerous.

—Expectant mothers should avoid periodic examinations and hospitals, and should give birth at home with the help of midwives.

—Ultrasound scanning of pregnant women to check their unborn infants' conditions may cause leukemia.

Blue blood not required for coat of arms

LONDON (AP) — Like to have your own official coat of arms complete with rampant lion, baying unicorn and family motto?

Anyone, or almost anyone, can have one nowadays — a real one granted by Britain's medieval College of Arms. Blue-blooded lineage isn't required.

The college is still doing business with scriveners and heralds bearing titles such as Rouge Dragon Pursuivant 500 years after its foundation by King Richard III.

Corporations, British-descended foreigners (eight of the 152 arms granted in 1982 went to Americans), parish counsilors, pop stars and plumbers are all welcome.

That's the official word from the premier peer of the realm, the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal and head of the college.

"I see no reason why a plumber shouldn't have a coat of arms," the duke said as the college marks its 500th anniversary, imbued with history and pressed by the modern reality of the 1 million pounds ($1.4 million) it cost to restore its 17th century building near the River Thames.

"You obviously wouldn't grant a criminal arms," the 68-year-old duke said. "But really anybody who is of good character and has done some service is eligible — undergraduates, professional people, businessmen, parish counsilors. It's nothing to do with the landed gentry or snobbishness."

The 17th Duke of Norfolk — family motto "Sola Virtus Invicta" (Virtue Alone is Unconquerable) — holds a title dating back to 1483. As Earl Marshal he is responsible for managing pageantry on royal occasions from weddings to the opening of Parliament and choosing the College of Arms' 13 officials, whom the monarch then appoints.

AP Laserphoto

Artist Robert Parsons paints details on a vellum scroll at the College of Arms in London. Founded by Richard III, the College of Arms celebrates its 500th anniversary this year.

The three Kings of Arms, six Heralds and four Pursuivants, or junior heralds, are the duke's chief officers.

Rouge Dragon, Clarenceux King of Arms and the others with romantic titles that look odd in the telephone directory don't organize jousting tournaments for knights any more, but they remain in charge of heraldry, pedigrees and the granting of arms.

As Rouge Dragon, 33-year-old Oxford history graduate Patric Dickinson, noted, "It's not terribly lucrative."

The heralds, members of the royal household, haven't had a salary increase since the reign of King James I, and that only lasted a couple of centuries before William IV trimmed their stipends in 1830.

Rouge Dragon — as Dickinson identifies himself on the phone — gets 13.95 pounds ($19.53) a year from Queen Elizabeth II.

But accommodation is free at the college, on the edge of the London's financial district. And the heralds share fees from genealogical research and arms design for new peers and knights given titles in the queen's twice-yearly honors list and "others."

The "others" are whoever writes in, though Rouge Dragon said that a few applicants are "unsuitable."

It costs an individual 840 pounds ($1,176) for the granting and designing of a coat of arms, and 2,000 pounds ($2,800) for a corporation.

Recent British takers include the Royal Ballet; the police labor union, the Police Federation, and the British Computer Society — with a coat of arms showing off microchips.

New York tax consultant John Miles Evans, grandson of a Welsh clergyman who emigrated to the U.S. Midwest in 1866, got himself a coat of arms 10 years ago and has it on notepaper and a ring.

What's it like to have a coat of arms in the New World?

"People have remarked how attractive it is," Evans said in a telephone interview.

The college also produced a considerably more elaborate affair as the joint arms of Prince Charles and Princess Diana after their 1981 marriage.

A U.S. College of Arms foundation was recently organized to raise money — the college is $420,000 short on the building renovation cost — and to encourage Americans to study genealogy and heraldry, according to the foundation's chairman, the Rev. John Andrew.

He is a Briton who is the rector of St. Thomas Episcopal Church on Fifth Avenue in New York City.

Coats of arms granted to Americans are "honorary" because the British monarch's writ doesn't extend to foreigners. U.S. applicants must also prove a male British ancestor, however distant, or one who was in America before 1783 when Britain recognized American independence.

Then it's just a question of paying and deciding what to do with the family crest.

Mayor G. Thane Akins announced today that the Midland City Council will appoint a member to the Permian Basin MHMR Public Responsibility Committee. The Committee serves as an adjunct to the Board of Trustees of the Permian Basin Community MHMR Centers. It is charged by law with certain .esponsibilities, primarily to serve as a third party to receive and investigate complaints about mental retardation services provided by the Permian Basin Community MHMR Center. The Committee will consist of seven (7) members, three (3) from Midland County, three (3) from Ector County and one (1) from Pecos County. It will meet quarterly and consider any complaints from mentally retarded clients or their families which might arise from services provided by the MHMR centers.
