Midland drivers will have to detour around signs like this one at Michigan and Carrizo for a few more years while the city finishes its street reconstruction program. Estimates put the time frame at six years and the cost at $10 million.

Midlander fails to oust GOP officer

From Staff and Wire Reports

CORPUS CHRISTI — Retiring U.S. Senator John Tower claimed Saturday that electing a Mondale-Ferraro ticket would result in the loss of 200,000 jobs in Texas.

Speaking at the Republican State Convention in Corpus Christi, Tower said cuts in defense spending under Mondale would cost the state $9 billion.

The controversy surrounding the vice chairmanship of Diana Denman — who was opposed in her bid for re-election by Midlander Lou Brown — had died down by the time voting took place in caucus meetings Saturday morning and she won another term handily by a vote of 22-7.

Margaret Higgins of the Kerr County delegation said she voted for Ms. Denman even though she had some reservations about controversial comments she made concerning Hispanic voter registration.

"She's just been so hard working," Mrs. Higgins said.

Mrs. Brown is a former president of the Texas Federation of Republican Women. She had decided to seek the vice chairman's position after being lobbied by numerous delegates to the Republican National Convention in August who had expressed their dissatisfaction with Ms. Denman.

The San Antonio woman had told a Houston television station the Hispanic voter registration drive was aimed at leftist elements of the Catholic church while Republican Hispanics were registering "the right kind of people."

Mrs. Brown campaigned on the promise to set up stronger Republican county organizations.

Cuts in production of B-1 bombers alone would result in 5,000 fewer jobs, according to Tower.

"National security is a big investment...in job security and is good for the economy," Tower said.

The speech was a "money pitch" and a thank-you message to his supporters, nearly 5,000 of whom were gathered for the convention at the Bayfront Convention Center.

"I will not miss the halls of Congress nearly so much as I will miss working with you," Tower said, before introducing Phil Gramm, the Republican nominee for Tower's seat.

Gramm promised to carry on Tower's strong support of national defense if he is elected.

"Peace comes through strength and the peace is more secure today than it was four years ago because America is stranger that it was four years ago," Gramm said.

Gramm stressed the difference between his views and those of his Democratic opponent, Lloyd Doggett, on school prayer, crime and the death penalty, right-to-work and foreign policy.

Gramm said he had been one of the first congressmen to support the invasion of Grenada and Reagan's decision "to let every two-bit dictator in the world know that no one would intimidate" America.

"Lloyd Doggett said that was unnecessary, he called it gunboat diplomacy, I don't think most Texans believe that. Most Texans believe in strong defense," Gramm said.

Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas encouraged Texas Repubicans to get out the vote for Reagan and criticized Walter Mondale's tax plan. Dole offered a 14-pound turkey to any Democrat carrying Mondale's tax bill in congress.

The business portion of the convention was saved for Saturday afternoon when delegates were to vote on chairman, vice chairman and committeemen to serve on the 62-member executive committee.

Houston oilman George Strake was expected to coast to into another term as party chairman.

Long debate was expected on several resolutions, including one changing the way delegates to the Republican National Convention are selected.

The proposed rule change gives an incumbent less control of the method for selecting delegates and opens up the process to more grassroots participation.

City streets 'just worn out'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

It's no mystery why many of Midland's major streets are in such bad shape these days. The streets are simply obsolete.

According to city officials, the city's infrastructure is suffering from hardening of the arteries.

"The streets are just worn out," says City Engineer Harvey Hansen. "The city has really gotten its money's worth on these streets."

When streets wear out, they must be reconstructed from the subgrade up, and the Public Works Department has begun to do just that. But rebuilding the city's entire infrastructure is an expensive proposition, and it's not clear if enough money will be available to finish the job.

Hansen says it will take at least six years and $10 million to finish reconstructing all the city's arterial streets, which would probably require another bond issue.

"But we're just going to have to wait and see" about any further bond issues for street repairs, says City Councilman Steve Davidson. "When we feel we're at a stage where we can handle it financially, and the need is there, the council will look at it."

MIDLAND'S STREET problems could have been dealt with earlier, Davidson says, but the public just isn't willing to pay for that kind of major project until the problem becomes noticeable.

"I think the mayor and the council are firmly committed to getting our streets up to top-notch condition, and I think we're making an excellent start," he says. "We're making a dent in it."

Plenty of dents are visible in Midland's major streets, along with cracks, fissures, bumps and an occasional hole. Partly, it's a problem of old age — the arterial streets, such as Wadley, Midkiff and Illinois, have all outlived their 20-year life expectancies. But arterial-sclerosis isn't the only cause of street deterioration — even in their prime, these streets weren't designed to handle the heavy traffic volume they now bear.

Some streets built to carry 1,000 cars per day now carry 25,000, "and they just weren't designed to carry that kind of traffic," Davidson says.

Another problem is water. Streets such as Wadley must do double duty as drainways, which hastens the breakdown process.

Bombings won't drive U.S. diplomats from Lebanon

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — With the U.S. ambassador standing next to him, one arm in a cast, Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy said Saturday the suicide bombing of the U.S. Embassy annex will not scare the United States into pulling its diplomatic corps from Lebanon.

"We are not going home," Murphy told a news conference at U.S. Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew's heavily guarded residence in Yarze, an eastern suburb of Beirut.

Bartholomew, injured in the bombing Thursday, had his left arm in a cast. Cuts were visible over his left eyebrow and on his cheek and upper lip.

He told reporters that danger is part of being a U.S. diplomat.

"I think all of us, particularly all of us here in Beirut, understand that," Bartholomew said.

At least nine people were killed, including two American servicemen, when a suicide terrorist drove an explosives-packed van around widely spaced concrete speed barriers and through a volley of gunfire to within 20 feet of the annex, where it exploded. Sixteen Americans were wounded.

The bodies of the two dead Americans, Army Chief Warrant Officer Kenneth V. Welch, 33, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Michael Ray Wagner, 30, of Zebulon, N.C., arrived at Dover Air Force Base, Del., on Saturday aboard an Air Force plane from Rhine Air Base in West Germany.

A U.S. Air Force plane carrying eight injured Americans and one Lebanese also landed at the Ramstein Air Force Base in West Germany Saturday night. The wounded were flown by two helicopters to the Army's Second General Hospital in nearby Landstuhl, the major military facility in Europe for treatment of burns.

"The victims had injuries of the kind to be expected in an incident of this type: general contusions, lacerations and burns," said a statement by the public affairs office of the U.S. Air Force Europe headquarters.

The news conference in Beirut followed a night of shelling between Druse militiamen and Lebanese army troops near Bartholomew's residence, which is being used as the temporary embassy and the headquarters for a team of Americans investigating the bombing.

Servicemens' bodies returned to United States

DOVER AIR FORCE BASE, Del. — The bodies of two American servicemen killed in the terrorist bombing of the U.S. Embassy annex in Lebanon returned to the United States on Saturday night, an Air Force spokesman said.

The bodies of Army Chief Warrant Petty Officer Kenneth V. Welch, 33, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Michael Ray Wagner, 30, of Zebulon, N.C., arrived at the Dover Air Force Base at 6:53 p.m. EDT, after a flight on a C-141 transport plane from the Rhine Main Air Base in West Germany, said Airman 1st Class Scott Elliott.

Welch and Wagner, both embassy staff members, were among at least nine people killed Thursday when an explosives-packed van blew up 20 feet from the northern entrance to the embassy annex in Christian-held territory near Beirut.

A brief ceremony was held after the bodies arrived, Elliott said.

The men's families were expected to attend a more elaborate ceremony, involving a joint Army-Navy color guard, Monday morning, said Capt. James Sahli.

Regan secures meeting on world debt

By SALLY JACOBSEN
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Donald Regan won unanimous backing from key foreign officials late Saturday for his plan to hold special discussions next spring on the Third World debt problem.

Debt-stricken developing nations have been pushing for the rich and poor nations to sit down to discuss their troubles, although not through the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, as suggested by Regan.

Still, Bernardo Grinspun, economics minister for indebted Argentina, said the U.S. proposal was a welcomed first step.

Grinspun and Regan were two of the 22 finance ministers who held daylong discussions to chart policy for the 147-member IMF which has been fashioning rescue packages for the financially stricken Third World. The meeting was held in advance of Monday's start of the annual meetings of the IMF and its sister organization, the World Bank.

In their talks, the officials agreed to trim emergency loan limits for developing nations — but not as much as Regan wanted. The poorer countries wanted the caps kept at as high a level as possible.

Regan said the limits on expanded access to the fund's resources were put in effect in 1981 as a temporary measure and should be phased out by 1987.

The policymaking board agreed last year to cut the 1984 access limits. And Regan said, "Thanks to our success in restoring global economic growth and the improvements in the debt situation, we can now continue that process."

On another topic, the policymakers didn't reach agreement on whether to order creation of a new issue of the monetary fund's international currency.

The United States has opposed a new issue of the Special Drawing Rights, although developing countries have appealed repeatedly for more of the currency as a way to help them out of their earnings crunch.

A statement after the meeting said that "most members ... expressed again their firm view that there was a long-term global need to supplement existing reserve assets."

It added that some countries "continued to feel that a global liquidity shortage had not been demonstrated."

Regan opposed creation of additional IMF currency, partly out of concern that a fresh injection of money into world markets would revive high inflation.

"The industrial nations have been through a wrenching period of disinflation (declining inflation rates) and many developing countries are embarked on similar efforts," he said.

"It would be most unfortunate to jeopardize the progress we have made," he said.

The group's statement expressed satisfaction that the economies of the industrialized countries were picking up at a better pace than had been expected.

About 40 Ku Klux Klan members march through Galveston's Strand

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — About 40 members of the Ku Klux Klan marched through the historic Strand district of downtown Galveston Saturday, and police reported no major incidents during the 10-block march.

Klan members, shouting "White power" and "Racial purity is American security," protested what they said were problems of homosexuality and illegal aliens on Galveston Island.

About 60 onlookers heckled the Klan with shouts of "We will overcome" and "Get the trash out of the street."

Yolanda Moran of Galveston held a sign reading, "Go Home — Leave Our Island Alone."

"We're doing fine on this island without this instigation," Ms. Moran said. "I can say I've never seen discrimination against me because I'm Mexican."

About five dozen police officers surrounded the Klan and patroled streets along the parade route, costing the city an estiamted $1,800 in overtime.

Twelve-year-old girl feels 'heavy burden' over shooting of friend

FORT WORTH (AP) — A 12-year-old girl accused of fatally shooting her best friend feels "a heavy burden" of disappointing her parents and losing her ally, the girl's attorney said.

"She's carrying a heavy burden," attorney Harold Ray said. "Her parents are very supportive. They visit her two and three times a day, but she feels she let them down. And she's very morose over losing her best friend."

The girl told authorities that she accidentally shot 11-year-old Kerry Thomas on Sept. 8 after loading a shotgun and pulling the trigger believing the gun's safety was on. She also said she hid the body of her friend in some bushes in her backyard and cleaned up signs of the shooting.

A neighbor mowing a lawn discovered Kerry's body four days after the girl failed to return home.

"She repeats over and over again, 'I didn't mean to kill her,' " Ray told The Dallas Morning News Friday. "There is not one shred of evidence she premeditated to deliberately blow up her best friend."

The girl is in the Tarrant County juvenile detention center awaiting trial on juvenile charges on Oct. 9. Ray said he will ask for a hearing later this week to request that the girl be released to her parents until the trial.

He said if she goes home she would not return to the same school she attended because students would be too curious.

The 12-year-old has "blocked some things from her mind" because of the emotional trauma, Ray said.

"She tries to give me the big girl image of 'I'm OK,' but she blocks crucial areas," he said. "You can see the anguish on her face when you talk about when and why she pulled the trigger.

"She says she didn't intend to point it or for it to go off. She describes loading the gun like a kid would who had just watched her dad do it."

Former ambassador's statement will be used in sanctuary trial

SAN BENITO (AP) — The statement of a former U.S. ambassador will be used to support a motion to dismiss charges against a refugee halfway house director charged with transporting illegal aliens, attorneys said.

Attorneys representing Jack Elder, 40, said they will be submitting about 30 depositions taken in New York, San Francisco, Washington and Chicago in support of their motions to dismiss charges.

Elder, a leader in the nation's sanctuary movement providing shelter to Central Americans, is charged with three counts of transporting illegal aliens.

U.S. District Judge Hayden Head Jr. earlier this month set Sept. 24 as the deadline for submitting evidence in support of the motions.

Among the 22 motions filed in the Elder case, six set forth grounds for dismissing the charges.

Defense attorneys claim Elder was acting within his legal rights in driving three undocumented Salvadorans from the church-sponsored Casa Oscar Romero halfway house in San Benito to the Harlingen bus station five miles away.

Elder has said the Salvadorans are political refugees fleeing a war zone and are, therefore, protected by a variety of national and international laws, including the Geneva Conventions.

Federal officials have said the Salvadorans are economic refugees who were in this country illegally.

Missing witness abducted by two men, then shot, brother claims

HOUSTON (AP) — A missing witness in an investigation of the Texas prison system was abducted by two inmates or former inmates and later shot, the witness' brother claims.

J.R. Pitts, a former prison unit construction foreman who disappeared in early July, was kidnapped by two men and later shot while trying to flee, Jerry Pitts told The Houston Post.

Authorities found J.R. Pitts' van near Madisonville July 3 pierced with bullet holes and covered with blood.

Pitts disappeared the day after the state attorney general's office announced the foreman would cooperate with an investigation into prison purchases.

Pitts suspected an orange Camaro was following his van, said his brother, who refused to say when he talked to his brother.

"He tried to turn real fast and he looks up and there's a black man with a pistol no more than three feet from the windshield," Jerry Pitts said. "He ducked to the right and the guy fired. The (windshield) glass caught him in the face and he couldn't see nothing...

"They looked like ex-inmates or inmates. They had real short-cropped hair and were clean-shaven. They jerked the door open and said, 'We'll teach you, snitch.' Then they knocked him out."

Austin lake development remains financial flop

AUSTIN (AP) — The Villas on Town Lake condominium complex is less than a mile from the downtown Austin building boom that has created instant millionaires.

The 58-unit complex offers waterfront living, a nearby public hike and bike trail and a picturesque setting.

But the project is a financial flop, remaining 75 percent unsold two years after completion.

"I'm glad it happened," said an East Austin leader who fought the construction of the Villas because he viewed it as an encroachment on the Hispanic community.

The 2.5-acre complex sits on a sort of boundary between downtown development and a minority neighborhood that has problems with crime and transients. The area is a political battleground between developers with big-dollar ideas and residents fighting to preserve their neighborhood.

"The redevelopment of the area has not really moved in the direction they (the condominium builders) thought," said Allan Nutt, the project's architect and one of the owners of the land on which it was built.

First-grader cries for missing 'Joey'

KYLE (AP) — A Kyle first-grader says she cries for Joey every night and hopes that whoever took him will "kiss him each night for me."

Joey, a Cabbage Patch Kid, disappeared on Sept. 6 when 6-year-old Lynnette Hertz's grandfather forgot to roll up his car windows before a shopping trip.

"I forgot to take Joey into the store with me," said Lynnette. "He was gone when we came out."

The young girl went public with her grief and her appeal to the kidnapper in a letter to the Austin American-Statesman.

"He is my only child and I love him very much. I adopted him on Sept. 1, 1983. He was my good friend and we went everywhere together. He slept with me every night. He was my Cabbage Patch son," she said in the letter.

Judge rules in favor of college student

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge has awarded a former Huntsville college student $153,000 from San Jacinto County and former Constable Rathell Denson after the student claimed he was harassed during a 1980 arrest.

U.S. District Judge Robert O'Conor on Friday approved a Sept. 14 jury verdict in the case of Donald Rhode, who was arrested after a high-speed, cross-county chase with Denson.

San Jacinto County was charged $150,000 in the case and Denson was instructed to pay $3,000 himself after the jury said Rhode was treated "intentionally, maliciously, recklessly or in callous disregard" of his rights.

The jury's verdict found no legal reason to arrest Rhode, who was then a criminal justice student at Sam Houston State University. Rhode now attends law school in Denver.

Rhode's attorney, Huntsville lawyer Harry Walsh III, said the student was arrested after his truck, which was coming over a hill, nearly hit Denson's car, which did not have lights on top.

When the constable approached Rhode's truck wearing a checkered shirt and a cowboy hat and waving a gun, the student thought Denson was a "drunk cowboy" and sped away, Walsh said.

During the chase, the attorney said Denson fired several shots at Rhode.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

Showers for parts of Texas, Louisiana, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, Maine, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan, and in a band stretching from Colorado to the Dakotas and Minnesota, are forecast today by the National Weather Service.

Fall arrives, bearing slightly cooler days

From Staff and Wire Reports

Autumn officially began Saturday, and its cooling effects will be felt immediately — today's high will reach only the upper 80s, despite fair skies.

Winds will be from the south at 15-20 mph and gusting. Tonight will be fair, with a low in the low 60s. Skies will remain clear Monday with a high near 90, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Saturday's high of 95 was 5 degrees below the record for the date of 100, set in 1977, while the overnight low of 60 was 13 degrees above the 1975 record of 47. No precipitation is in the forecast, leaving the year's total at 9.45 inches.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms, some described as heavy, covered most of the eastern third of Texas today after tornadoes struck three localities Friday, causing mostly minor damage and no injuries.

The tornadoes touched down Friday evening in northern Beaumont, at Dickinson and in a trailer park on Galveston Island.

The low pressure system and accompanying tropical air mass that caused flooding in the Lower Rio Grande Valley and high tides along most of the Texas coast earlier in the week produced the tornado activity and was responsible for the showers and thunderstorms today, the National Weather Service said.

Before dawn today the low pressure system had moved into Central Texas.

One tornado touched down in a commercial section of northern Beaumont Friday evening, but officials said there were no reports of injuries.

The tornado, which touched down at 5:26 p.m. CDT, apparently "hit a credit bureau building" along Interstate 10 in north Beaumont, a police spokesman said.

Power lines fell and police said streets in the area were blocked off.

At Dickinson, about 35 miles southeast of Houston, officials said a "possible tornado" swept through a residential section of that town Friday evening but caused no injuries.

The tornado touched down at "about 5 p.m. but caused no major damage," said Laura Hartmann, a dispatcher for the Dickinson police deapartment.

A tornado roared through the East Beach Trailer Park in Galveston Friday night. Police dispatcher Anna Herman said no one was injured.

A line of thundershowers moved through the Houston area earlier Friday.

International debt stirring less fear

By SALLY JACOBSEN
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — Two years after it began, the international debt problem of the poorer nations is finally beginning to seem a little less frightening.

With the world's economy snapping out of its doldrums, government and private officials are expressing more confidence about the debt situation that not so very long ago had raised the specter of severe turmoil in the financial system.

Yet, they don't predict the debt crisis is a thing of the past.

Indeed, some economists worry a new downturn in the United States, a fresh surge in interest rates or additional trade barriers to keep out products from developing will worsen a still shaky situation.

They also fear the poorer countries will not experience strong enough growth in their economies to reduce unemployment and improve the standards of living of their people.

"The Third World debt problem is not over," Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said on the eve of the annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

"It's less critical in many nations today than it was 12 months ago," he went on, "but there are still many nations with large debt problems that have not been solved and will not be solved in the near future."

Thomas Thomson, chief economist at San Francisco's Crocker National Bank, says the first phase of dealing with the crisis has passed but warns that "we're not out of the woods yet."

Adds Robert Hormats, a former high-ranking U.S. economic official and now vice president of Goldman, Sachs & Co., "We shouldn't kid ourselves that the problem is over."

"It is clear the numbers look very good in terms of trade and growth in some (of the developing) countries," Hormats says, "but the political issue in many countries is unemployment and inflation. Unless there's enough growth to reduce unemployment quite substantially, there's still going to be a lot of political pressure internally."

The total foreign debt of the developing nations, which stood at $810 billion at the end of 1983, could approach $900 billion by the end of this year.

The debts of Brazil and Mexico, the two largest debtor nations, could each near the $100 billion mark at the end of 1984.

To cope with their debts, the IMF has put together rescue packages that help the poorer countries finance the deficit in their balance of payments on trade and investments with other countries.

In return for the aid, the countries must follow strong measures to try to restore their economies to health, including bringing inflation under control, reducing imports and moving to balance their budgets.

Because of the strictness of those measures, some officials worried how long the countries could toe the line. So far, their fears have generally been groundless.

Nicholas Hope, economic analyst at the World Bank, says the developing countries "have demonstrated to a remarkable degree that they are responsible members of the international financial community. They will pay no matter how much it hurts."

Mexico has been so successful in following the guidelines and in restoring confidence of bankers in its economy that it has been able to renegotiate easier terms on about half of its huge foreign debt.

Some $48.5 billion of the $67.5 billion in loans its government owes to 527 foreign private banks has been renegotiated in principle, according to the Mexican government. Payments have been extended over a period of 14 years, instead of the current six years, starting in 1986.

Hope called the renegotiation of the Mexican debt "extremely important."

"This establishes that where sensible stabilization policies are being followed, creditors can make these longer term concessions that may be necessary to reestablish normalcy in relations in the financial markets as quickly as possible," he said.

Mexico's brighter prospects cap a year in which the economic rebound that began in the United States gave a sharp kick to economies throughout the world.

William Cline, a senior fellow at the Institute for International Economics here, says in a new study that the most important development for the debt situation in the past year has been the "emergence of a strong international economic recovery."

As a result, Cline said, "the centerpiece for recovery from the global debt problem appeared to be falling into place."

With the upturn, poorer nations could again sell their goods to the richer nations and thus earn foreign money so they could continue paying interest on their outstanding loans.

Helping was an increase in the prices for many basic commodities, which developing countries depend heavily on selling to earn money.

But offsetting that somewhat was a fresh surge in interest rates in the United States. It added further to the poorer countries' debt costs because many of their loans from commercial banks have variable interest rates. When the banks' key lending rates rise, so do the poorer nations' debts.

Higher interest rates prompted strong protests from officials of those nations who held meetings that led to some fears they might form a debtors' cartel and try to force better terms from the banks.

Cline describes the result by saying, "A paradox dominated the international atmosphere on debt: underlying economic trends on balance were favorable while political perceptions seemed to deteriorate."

But it "expressed concern that the position of many developing countries remained difficult," although it said "good progress" had been made in tackling the debt problems of those countries.

To help those nations, it called for continued economic growth in industrial countries, substantially lower interest rates and avoidance of trade barriers that keep out the exports of developing countries.

Regan's unexpected proposal for debt talks was initially greeted coolly by some officials from developing countries after they received advance word of it. They apparently didn't want the agenda set up through the IMF and the World Bank, where the industrialized countries have greater pull.

In offering his plan, Regan told the finance ministers, "There can be no doubt that the debt situation has improved considerably in the past two years. The debt strategy has, in our view, been working."

As a result, he said, it was time to expand the dialogue among the rich and poor nations. "We stand ready for further discussions," he said.

"Nations whose financial and economic futures are inextricably linked must be prepared to exchange views," Regan said. "We may not always agree, but let us at least know what one another thinks."

He suggested that the discussions be held next spring at the regularly scheduled meetings of the IMF's policymaking board, known as the Interim Committee, and a joint IMF-World Bank advisory panel, the Development Committee.

The Interim Committee agreed to the plan; the Development Committee won't take it up until its meeting Sunday.

Key officials of the indebted Latin American nations have been pushing for talks with wealthy countries and commercial banks on their problems.

But Regan said the talks shouldn't include debt negotiations. Rather, he said, their purpose should be to consider the future of the global economy and ways to make sure the developing countries share in its expansion.

The topics he suggested for discussion were foreign indebtness, exchange rates, trade policies and the flow of capital among nations.

"IT'S NOT THE best way to design a street, but what do you do with the water?" asks Hansen. "We don't have any choice — we have to handle the storm water somehow."

Not all the water damage to the streets can be blamed on nature, though. Even when skies are clear, Wadley and other drainway streets often are partially submerged early in the morning by the overflow from sprinkler systems.

"Nuisance water is a tremendous problem," says Hansen. "It's not only a waste of water but a waste of streets."

Repairing the ravages of age, overwork and the elements involves more than a facelift. Normally, a street is resealed with asphalt every five to six years, Hansen says, but reconstruction is a more formidable undertaking.

"Reconstruction involves removing the existing surface and base and increasing the thickness of the base from six to 12 inches," and increasing the thickness of the asphalt sealant from 1½ to 2½ inches, says Hansen.

Caliche is not the ideal material to use for the base, "but it's all we've got here," Hansen says. Thickening the base transfers the traffic pressure to the subgrade more evenly, allowing the road to handle a heavier volume, while the asphalt sealant protects the base from moisture.

It costs about $500,000 per mile to reconstruct a street, and Public Works already has spent about $2.5 million to overhaul five miles of road. Most of the money comes from bond issues passed in 1981 and 1982, according to Hardy Browder, accounting manager for the Finance Department.

OF THE $7 MILLION brought in by the 1981 issue, $3 million were earmarked for street repairs, "and some of that money is still left," Browder says. The $3 million 1982 bond issue was entirely directed toward street repairs, and Community Development money is paying for reconstruction on Tilden and in other less affluent areas of town.

Reconstruction of three to four downtown blocks per year is paid for out of the regular city budget — about $250,000 per year, according to Hansen, though Davidson thinks it's more like $300,000.

"This year we've got Illinois, Michigan and Louisiana," says Hansen. "Next year it will probably be Missouri, Texas and Ohio."

Downtown reconstruction has been delayed by the many construction projects in the area, which have not only prevented the city from working on streets where buildings were going up, but also provided so much work for contractors that it became difficult to find people to do the city's work.

"But now that things have tapered off, we've been able to spend more time" on street reconstruction, Hansen says.

STATE HIGHWAYS such as Andrews Highway are the state's responsibility, he adds.

If the money is forthcoming, it will take six to eight years to reconstruct all the city's major arterial streets and such important intermediate streets as Cuthbert and Neely, according to Hansen.

"Basically, we're starting with the worst," he says. "We just did Midland from Illinois to Andrews, Garfield from Ohio to Golf Course, and A Street from Cuthbert to Scharbauer. Next, we'll do Garfield from Wadley to Haynes, and Garfield from Golf Course to Wadley is one of our next projects."

Hansen feels the city has made a lot of progress on its reconstruction program, and Davidson says that progress will continue, though it may be a long time before the work is completed.

"We know the work is there to do, and we're going to try to continue to make slow, steady progress," Davidson says.

U.S. may be asked to mediate withdrawal

By NICOLAS B. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV, Israel — Israel may ask the United States to mediate between Israel and Syria to allow Israeli troops to withdraw from southern Lebanon, Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Saturday.

Shamir, speaking to reporters at Ben-Gurion airport before leaving for the United States, was asked if he would ask Secretary of Sate George Shultz for American mediation with Syria. "Maybe, but its not yet decided," he replied.

The foreign minister, who was flying to New York to attend the U.N. General Assembly meeting and confer with American and U.N. officials on Lebanon, is also to meet Shultz in Washington in preparation for Prime Minister Shimon Peres' visit early next month.

"I don't think that the United Nations has the necessary ... capacity to be the intermediaries between us and the others, but I hope we'll find the necessary mechanism for these negotiations," Shamir said.

Reagan administration spokesmen have said the United States would mediate between Israel and Syria if asked. The last U.S.-mediated agreement in the Middle East, the May 17, 1983, accord between Israel and Lebanon, was canceled by the Lebanese government earlier this year under Syrian pressure.

A top Foreign Ministry official, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed that Shamir might raise the question of U.S. mediation when he meets Shultz, but he stressed that no decision had been made.

Diplomatic sources in Tel Aviv said earlier Saturday that after long months of stalemate, there was significant movement toward a negotiated agreement on an Israeli pullout from Lebanon.

The assessment followed a Middle East tour by Brian Urquhart, the United Nations undersecretary-general, who sounded out leaders in Syria, Lebanon and Israel on the possibility of negotiations.

"Since everybody agrees on the main objective apparently, for once, there's no logical reason why we shouldn't be able to get rid of the main obstacles," Urquhart told The Associated Presso on Saturday during a stop in the Netherlands on his way back to New York.

Diplomatic sources in Israel, speaking on condition they not be identified, said the United Nations and possibly the Reagan administration would play key roles as intermediaries in negotiating a phased Israeli pullback.

The sources indicated that both Syrian President Hafez Assad's regime and the new Israeli government had softened demands.

More detailed talks are expected next week when world leaders gather in New York to address the U.N. General Assembly.

The sources said Syria signaled a readiness to support security arrangements for Israel's northern border as long as there was no "residual Israeli presence" after a withdrawal.

EMBASSY

"The terrorist attack on Thursday morning did not succeed in what I consider to have been its intent and goal, which was to demolish the embassy and through destruction and killing, to so sap the will of the American government that we would decide it was no longer in our interest to maintain a relationship, an official relationship, and an official presence in Lebanon," Murphy said.

"Yes, there were losses," Murphy added. "But they did not succeed and they will not succeed. I interpret Thursday's bombing as a challenge to our political will, and that political will has not been diminished."

Murphy said the Reagan administration has not decided on whether to send U.S. Marines back to Lebanon because of the third suicide bombing against Americans in 17 months. Seventeen Americans were killed in a bombing at the embassy in west Beirut in April 1983, and 241 U.S. Marines and sailors died in another bombing last October.

Asked about a report that the United States was dispatching warships back to the Lebanese coast, Murphy said there was "nothing other than routine movements in the eastern Mediterranean to the best of my knowledge."

"There is nothing in terms of an exceptional effort to get in place to land forces or any other such eventualities," he said.

Asked about congressional calls for retaliation, Murphy said, "I won't get into that."

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Despite increased funding, Texas highway problems still rolling along

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Despite increased funding by the special session of the Legislature this summer, Texas highway problems don't appear headed for any quick solution.

Highway construction in Texas is authorized for over $1.96 billion in fiscal 1985, compared to $1.36 billion for fiscal 1984, in large part due to the additional funds being added through increased gasoline and diesel fuel taxes. However, Department of Highways and Public Transportation officials say that unlike 1984, when DHPT faced the problem of not having sufficient funds to provide for all available projects, 1985 may see the agency unable to use all the funds it has authorized.

DHPT Program Engineer Richard Vander Straten reports maintenance projects likely will receive priority from DHPT during the next several months due to the need to repair existing roads, and because such projects can proceed more quickly.

Renovation and repair efforts don't involve the extended planning and public hearing process involved for new projects, he comments, noting that a federal highway project can require seven years for completion.

And while DHPT has increased funding, the agency certainly has no funds to waste.

The Highways and Public Transportation Commission has approved a series of rehabilitation projects, and implemented a "safety and betterment" program, involving seal coating, overlays and safety work on existing roads.

About $100 million in work under the program will be going to contract during the new fiscal year.

And by early next year, DHPT should have prepared a project development plan for new construction work, with some of those projects taking advantage of the increased funding.

Not all of those projects will be new routes, however, and emphasis is expected to be placed on improvements to existing roads (such as widening and grade separation).

Projects will be selected on a priority system to "serve the greatest number of people for the dollar," Vander Straten says.

Vander Straten says some Texans — legislators and others — may feel the department isn't moving quickly enough, now that it has the additional funding it has sought for several years.

Many lawmakers "will be looking for some immediate improvements" in the highway system, he comments, "which we will do." But, he adds, most of the "heavy stuff" will "take some time."

The problems with getting projects underway is compounded, Vander Straten says, because DHPT is faced with the retirement of a number of senior engineering officials, which may cause delays in preparing plans.

DHPT is looking at the use of outside consultants to assist in drafting plans, but that could cause some delays as well, at least until the consultants understand exactly what the department wants, he comments.

Texas also faces possible highway problems of another sort, due to the passage of federal legislation threatening to remove parts of highway funds from states which don't set 21 as the legal drinking age.

Legislation to raise the drinking age in Texas from 19 to 21 failed in the 1983 session, when supporters argued the measure was needed to help reduce the number of deaths and injuries from drunk drivers.

Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Canyon, who has sponsored such legislation in previous sessions, says he'll introduce legislation for the 1985 session to raise the drinking age — and he sees the federal legislation as a potent, if unwelcome, ally.

Sarpalius says he doesn't like the idea of the federal government pressuring states by threatening to reduce funding but believes legislators will decide to raise the drinking age rather than to lose the funds.

Texas could lose $33 million in fiscal 1986, and $86 million more in fiscal 1987, by failing to pass the law.

For fiscal 1985, Texas is expected to receive around $850 million in federal highway aid.

Sarpalius doesn't feel Texas can afford to lose the funds and is certain lawmakers won't be eager to provide an additional tax increase to make up for any such loss.

At the moment, however, Vander Straten says, DHPT is enjoying the situation of being able to put more money into the state's road system, and to have, however temporarily, the problem of having more money than it can immediately use.

That situation, he says, will change as contracts are let since the department has a massive backlog on projects. But for the time being, Van Straten says, "everything is looking good for us."

Six relatives of abused child sentenced

HOUSTON (AP) — Six relatives of a 1-year-old boy, who a prosecutor said lived in a "home of general violence," have been sentenced to three or more years in prison for lying about the circumstances surrounding the baby's death.

The boy had suffered multiple injuries before his death, including a severely torn liver, a broken arm and a broken collarbone, and had developed pneumonia, authorities said.

Seven relatives of the child were convicted in March of aggravated perjury, based on statements they made to a grand jury investigating the Nov. 27, 1982, death of Carlos Joseph.

State District Judge Joe Kegans sentenced the family members Friday after reviewing reports from the Harris County Adult Probation Department.

The baby's grandmother, Johnnie Mae Treadwell, 39, received the longest sentence — four years in prison. An uncle, Johnny Ray McGuire, 23, was given the lightest sentence — six years' probation.

The others each were sentenced to three years in prison, including the baby's mother, Ethel Joseph, 17; the grandmother's husband, Eugene Treadwell; and other siblings of the grandparents, Latonya R. McGuire, 18; Beatrice Treadwell, 24; and Tina Louise Joseph, 22.

HUD awards $500,000 for Texas border areas

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development has awarded a $500,000 contract to a Texas-based company for revitalization of four border cities, HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce Jr., announced Saturday.

The funds will go to bolster the sagging economies in Brownsville, McAllen, Laredo and El Paso, Pierce said in an appearance at the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce Convention.

The contract was awarded to Avante International Systems, of San Antonio, which plans to help industries relocate in the border cities and to aid existing businesses that have potential to expand.

"This company's proposal," Pierce said, "could help bring together all the diverse strengths in the area and help the Southwest border realign its economic base so that revitalization is not just a drawing board concept, but an economic reality."

The border cities have suffered a severe economic decline, including the loss of thousands of jobs, in the last two years because of the devaluation of the peso.

Avante's proposal emphasizes local initiative and resources, Pierce said.

Avante will provide an analysis of each community's strengths and weaknesses.

Inmate in good condition after prison stabbing

ANGLETON (AP) — A 27-year-old inmate who was attacked in his sleep Saturday in the Darrington Unit is the latest victim of a rash of stabbings inside Texas prisons.

Don McMillan, the duty officer for the prison system, said Saturday that Jimmy Keith was in good condition after being stabbed in the collarbone area around 3 a.m.

Keith was asleep in a dormitory when he was apparently attacked by another inmate wielding a homemade knife, McMillan said.

McMillan said Keith was treated in the emergency room of a local hospital and returned to the prison infirmary.

STATE in brief

Two men killed in crash of ultralight aircraft

McKINNEY, Texas (AP) — Two men were killed Saturday morning when their ultralight aircraft crashed into some trees near this North Texas city, authorities said.

The victims were identified as William D. Partridge, 37, of Sand Springs, Okla.; and Steven Karlan, 29, of Plano; said Department of Public Safety spokesman Tony Michniak.

Witnesses saw the craft circling a wooded area about five miles northwest of McKinney and said it appeared to be having trouble minutes before it crashed about 8:30 a.m., Michniak said.

Michniak said it took authorities two hours to find the wreckage.

The victims were taken to Wyson Hospital where they were pronounced dead, he said.

Bass group buying stock

FORT WORTH (AP) — An investor group associated with Bass Brothers Enterprises has increased its share in Walt Disney Productions common stock to 8.6 percent, the group has announced.

The announcement made here Friday, coupled with an announcement by a group led by Minneapolis investor Irwin Jacobs, fueled talk of a possible takeover attempt, the Dallas Times Herald reported today.

The Bass firm said the investor group will notify the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission that it owns 2.9 million Disney shares, up from an earlier amount of 1.9 million shares. This gives them an expanded holding worth about $182 million at recent trading prices.

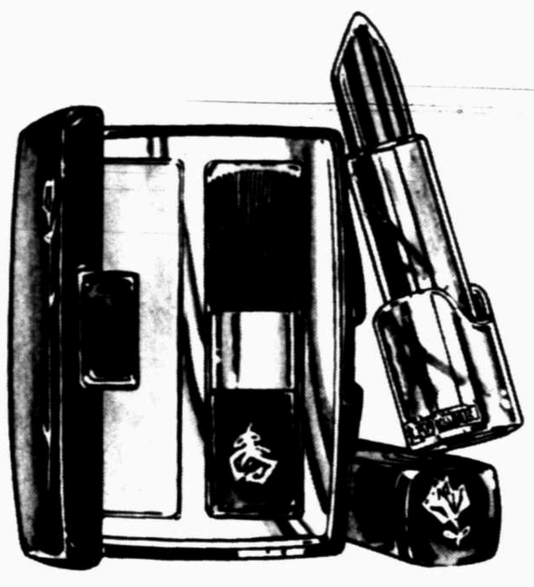

The Bass group originally acquired its Disney holdings by giving Disney controlling interest in Arvida Corp. in an an effort to make Disney less vulnerable to hostile takeover.

Two killed in plane crash

COLLEYVILLE (AP) — Two people were killed early today in a crash of a single-engine airplane en route to the Addison Airport near Dallas, authorities said.

The Cessna 210 disappeared from radar screens at the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport at 1:10 a.m. and crashed shortly afterwards in a densely populated area, the Federal Aviation Administration said.

Honda has best mileage of autos sold in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Honda model for the second year in a row captured the best mileage ranking among cars sold in the United States, according to the annual — and now more realistic — ratings by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Foreign-made engines, six of them diesels, powered all the top 10 cars among 1985 models to go on sale this fall.

The two-seater Honda Civic Coupe HF recorded 49 miles per gallon in EPA's city driving test and 54 miles per gallon in the agency's highway tests released Sunday.

Last year, another Honda, the Civic CR-X, ranked first with 51 miles per gallon. But that figure cannot be compared with this year's city rating because EPA is, for the first time, deflating the figures from its tests to more closely reflect what cars yield in real-world driving.

The mileage figure recorded in the city test is reduced by 10 percent for 1985 models and the mileage on the highway test is reduced by 22 percent.

This year, EPA is resuming publication of highway mileages after discontinuing it as unrealistic for several years.

The best-mileage car sold under an American nameplate is the new Chevrolet Sprint, giving 47 mpg in the city and 53 mpg on the highway and ranked second. This car, also sold as the Pontiac Firefly, actually is the Japanese-made Suzuki SA310 and has the only three-cylinder engine offered in the United States.

The fourth-ranked Ford Escort diesel was the best American-built car, giving 43 mpg in the city and 52 mpg on the highway. This Escort, also sold as the Mercury Lynx, is powered by an engine built in Japan by Mazda Motors Corp.

Nissan's Sentra Diesel ranked third with 45 mpg in city driving and 50 mpg on the highway.

Some people don't seem to care about low mileage — such as people who can afford Rolls-Royces.

The Rolls-Royce Corniche, Camargue and Continental, as they frequently do, showed the worst mileages of any car tested — 8 mpg in the city and 11 mpg on the highway.

This is so low it makes these cars subject to a special "gas-guzzler tax," starting at $500 for cars averaging less than 21 mpg before EPA's new deflations.

For a Rolls Royce, the tax is the maximum, $2,650.

Diesel-powered cars and small cars generally have been falling out of favor among American car buyers in recent years as gasoline prices have remained stable, diesel fuel prices have risen and the economic recession has ended.

The turn to larger cars poses problems for the two largest manufacturers, General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., in meeting mileage requirements of federal law. In theory, at least, the two companies could be subjected to millions of dollars in fines in a few years.

The law requires manufacturers and importers to achieve an overall 27.5 mpg in their fleets in the 1985 model year and after.

The 1984 standard was 27 mpg, and neither GM nor Ford met it with their 1984 cars. Instead, they were able to apply credits from previous years when their cars exceeded the standards.

Cars with best, worst mileage listed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are the best and the worst cars for mileage among 1985 models as reported by the Environmental Protection Agency on Sunday:

This year the agency is, for the first time, deflating its city mileage ratings by 10 percent and its highway ratings by 22 percent to better reflect actual driving experience.

The rankings below are by city rating, with the highway rating used to break ties. The fuel cost is based on 15,000 miles of driving annually, with 8,250 miles in the city and 6,750 miles on the highway, and a cost of $1.25 per gallon for gasoline and $1.20 for diesel fuel.

BEST

— Honda Civic Coupe HF, 49 miles per gallon in city driving, 54 miles per gallon in highway driving, annual fuel cost $368.

— Suzuki SA310, 47 mpg and 53 mpg, $375. This car also is sold as the Chevrolet Sprint and the Pontiac Firefly.

— Nissan Sentra diesel, 45 mpg and 50 mpg, $383.

— Ford Escort diesel, 43 mpg and 52 mpg, $391. Also sold as the Mercury Lynx.

— Chevrolet Chevette diesel, 39 mpg and 46 mpg, $426. Also sold as the Pontiac T1000.

— Toyota Corolla diesel, 38 mpg and 47 mpg, $428.

WORST

— Rolls-Royce Corniche, Continental and Camargue, 8 mpg and 11 mpg, $2,083.

— Rolls Royce Silver Spirit, Spur and Mulsanne, 9 mpg and 10 mpg, $2,083.

— Jaguar XJ-S, 8 mpg and 11 mpg, $2,083.

— Mercedes-Benz 500SEL, 14 mpg and 16 mpg, $1,251.

— Mercedes-Benz 500SEC, 14 mpg and 16 mpg, $1,251.

— Jaguar XJ, 15 mpg and 19 mpg, $1,102.

— Chevrolet Camaro, 15 mpg and 24 mpg, $1,042. Also sold as the Pontiac Firebird.

Mondale spices up his campaign style

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Just as he did earlier this year when his candidacy was in peril, Walter F. Mondale has added flavoring to his style and spice to his rhetoric as he campaigns uphill against a man he now refers to as a "Hollywood" president.

At rallies almost every day now, Mondale removes his jacket, rolls up the sleeves of his white shirt, loosens his tie and rips into the president with an intensity that had been lacking.

In the early days of the general election campaign, he talked solely about issues. But now President Reagan is his target.

"What we've got here is a Hollywood, question-free, isolated president, traveling around the country in a cocoon," Mondale said at one stop last week in Stockton, Calif.

And he now makes a point of taking questions from his audiences.

He told one crowd in Seattle, "I'm telling you the truth now, not after the election. I'm answering the questions put to me by the press, by the American people every day."

Reagan, he said, offers "no news conferences, no chance to ask questions, no citizens' forums, just daily, celluloid, cameo performances."

The Mondale changes came after a rocky start to his general election campaign, when House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. and other Democrats were urging him to be more aggressive.

And while it will be weeks before Mondale knows whether the change in style bears fruit, the campaign crowds he saw last week were generally larger and more enthusiastic than the ones he appeared before earlier, and he was quick to say he felt he was gaining ground.

However it turns out, the shift resembles the transformation Mondale underwent last spring when a virtually unknown Sen. Gary Hart threatened to knock him out of the nominating campaign with early season primary and caucus victories.

AP Laserphoto

Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale addresses a citizens forum in Mussels Shoals, Ala., Friday. Mondale spoke on the embassy annex bombing in Beirut.

It was then that the "Fighting Fritz" image was created — an imperial candidate turned underdog fighting for a cause he believed in — as Mondale loosened up his buttoned-down campaign style and began slashing away at his primary campaign rival.

This time, as his aides concede privately, his task is far more difficult, with Reagan holding a formidable lead in the polls and only six weeks to go until the election.

Reagan is well known to the voters, and well-liked, where Hart was little known.

Mondale enjoyed an enormous advantage over Hart in organization and campaign funds, but Reagan's managers have been preparing for this re-election campaign for four years. And while both men receive $40.4 million from the federal Treasury for their campaigns, the Republicans will raise much more in supplemental funds than the Democrats.

Even so, Mondale's strategists are hoping that the shift in style will help close the gap in the polls, that outside events — perhaps even the latest bombing in Lebanon — will provide them a campaign opening and that Mondale can outperform Reagan in two campaign debates, turning a distinctly uphill effort into a close race.

The new-look campaign is designed to contribute to this by creating a contrast in style with the president, as well as attacking one of Reagan's main strengths, a leadership ability that attracts voters to his side even when they disagree with him on specific issues such as tax and spending policies.

The effort is to draw a contrast between Mondale as a man in touch with everyday concerns and the president as a man who is not, one aide said.

Aides say Mondale himself decided at a meeting with some of his closest advisers several days ago to turn up the heat in his rhetoric.

A few days earlier, there were changes within the campaign organization after a string of embarrassing events that culminated in Green Bay, Wis. Only a few workers turned up to greet him at a paper product plant gate, and Mondale suddenly found himself holding a package of the toilet paper produced inside.

The television cameras rolled as he squeezed the "Charmin," but the image was hardly what a struggling candidate needed.

The next day, aides say, Mondale assigned longtime aide Michael Berman to assume additional responsibilities for overseeing his schedule, with orders to plan one-a-day question and answer sessions with the public if possible.

Since then, Mondale has junked the charts he had been using as props in campaign appearances, and has generally conducted one "citizens' forum" and one large public rally each day.

There have been no crowdless parades, balky microphones, toilet paper or other embarrassments.

Reagan prepares for week of foreign policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, in a classic demonstration of the campaign alternatives available to an incumbent president, is preparing for a week of foreign policy events aimed mainly at softening the hostile tone of US-Soviet relations that seems to have some American voters worried.

Aware of criticism from Democrats that he allowed relations between the superpowers to deteriorate, the president issued instructions to aides last summer that will result Friday in his first high-level meeting with a Soviet official.

However, coming just six weeks before the Nov. 6 election, the session with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko has exposed the president to new charges that the meeting has political undertones. It would also appear to carry some risk that the Soviets would use it to embarrass Reagan.

A senior U.S. official, in a recent interview, conceded White House sensitivity to Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale's charges that Reagan was not doing enough to improve relations with the Soviet Union.

This official acknowledged Gromyko could try to damage Reagan politically. "But the point is, Walter Mondale is out there yelling that we're unwilling to sit down," he said.

And a second high-level White House aide, interviewed separately, said the meeting between Reagan and Gromyko was set up only after the Russians agreed to participate with "goodwill." The official denied that was tantamount to a Soviet pledge not to use the session against Reagan.

This second official said the president directed last summer that his aides inform the Soviet Union that the superpowers should begin a "high level discourse," perhaps starting with a meeting between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Gromyko.

The Soviets were told that "if each side enters the meetings of the secretary and foreign minister with goodwill, it ought to make possible a useful meeting with the president."

In response, according to this official, the Soviets "expressed their indication that there would be goodwill on their side, coming back and saying, 'We accept the meeting with the secretary and the president.'"

Both officials commented only on condition they not be named.

Though Reagan's formal talks with Gromyko won't occur until Friday, the two men will meet for the first time on Sunday night in New York at a reception the president is hosting for the 158 members of the United Nations General Assembly.

Reagan and Gromyko will shake hands as the Soviet representative walks through the receiving line, and they may find time to chat when Reagan mixes with the guests later, according to a White House official, who spoke Saturday also on the condition he remain anonymous.

The president will use that brief opportunity to tell Gromyko that he hoped their Friday meeting would put relations on a more constructive footing, according to a White House aide.

From the U.S. viewpoint, the talks Friday are expected to focus on ways to resume negotiations on reducing nuclear weapons. The Soviets walked out of the negotiations last December to protest U.S. deployment in Europe of Pershing II and cruise missiles.

Both men are scheduled to address the General Assembly. In his speech Monday morning, the president will call for the beginning of regular contacts between the two nations on the ministerial level. Gromyko addresses the General Assembly on Thursday.

Teachers, public disagree about education issues

WASHINGTON (AP) — Big differences of opinion exist between teachers and the public over education issues such as merit pay, classroom discipline and quality of instruction, according to a Gallup Poll released Saturday.

While the public for years in similar polls has ranked discipline as the schools' No. 1 problem, teachers singled out parents' lack of interest as the biggest stumbling block to better education.

The poll, sponsored by Phi Delta Kappa, an educators' fraternity, found almost two-thirds of the teachers felt their local public schools deserved a grade of A or B. Last month Gallup reported that 42 percent of the public meted out such high grades. Though the public attitude was not as generous as the teachers', it was the highest rating in a decade.

"Attitudes of American teachers are markedly uniform..." reported the Gallup organization, which based its report on a mail survey of 813 teachers in May. "At the same time, the attitudes of teachers and the public are frequently at odds."

The poll found teachers opposed to the idea of merit pay by a 2-1 ratio, 64-32. The public favors merit pay for teachers by 76-to-19 percent, a 4-to-1 margin.

The teachers supported the idea of voluntary school prayer by a 2-1 margin; public sentiment is 4-1 behind school prayer.

The teachers, asked what the biggest problems were, cited parents' lack of interest (31 percent); lack of proper financial support (21 percent) and pupils' lack of interest and truancy (20 percent) before lack of discipline (19 percent).

Asked directly about the discipline problem, only 16 percent of teachers said it was very serious; 34 percent of the public rated it as very serious.

Fifty-three percent of the public felt drugs are used at school "fairly often" or "most of the time"; only 17 percent of teachers agreed.

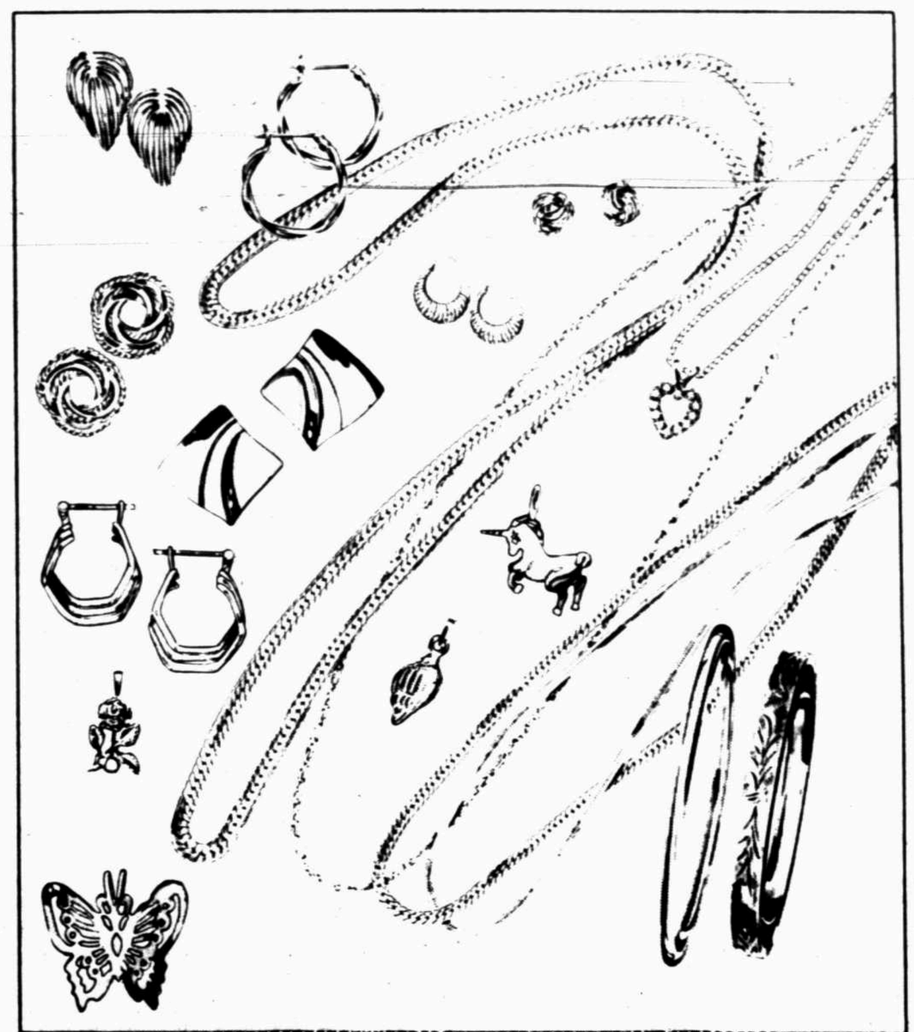

Asked by Gallup if their own school had difficulty getting good teachers, 57 percent of the teachers said no and 37 percent yes. They were divided on whether the school had difficulty keeping good teachers: 48 percent said yes, 47 percent no.

The teachers, by a 3-1 margin, opposed paying higher salaries to those teaching math, science or other specialties in short supply.

UAW faces major confrontation with Ford Motor Co.

DETROIT (AP) — The United Auto Workers faces a major confrontation with Ford Motor Co., where the union bargains next, because its tentative contract with General Motors Corp. may be too expensive for the No. 2 automaker, experts said Saturday.

"For Ford, the GM contract is a real problem," said David Bloom, an automotive industry analyst for First Boston Corp. in New York.

The three-year contract with GM would pay billions of dollars in wage and pension boosts. While Ford is currently making record profits, it isn't nearly as big or rich as GM and may not be able to afford such a pact in a few years, Bloo said.

In addition, GM dominates the market for large and luxury cars, which carry profits big enough to absorb the economic costs of the contract.

A hefty share of Ford's profits come from big cars, too. But it has invested a larger portion of its capital in smaller cars, which carry less profit and are more vulnerable to Japanese competition.

Peter Pestillo, Ford's chief bargainer, has put the UAW on notice that it wants a contract of its own. He has said Ford won't "walk in lockstep" with any other company.

But after the tentative GM pact was reached early Friday, sending more than 80,000 striking GM employees back to work, UAW President Owen Bieber set his sights on matching it across town.

"We'll take this to Ford," Bieber declared, while also saying he would try for an early reopening of the union's Chrysler Corp. contract, which doesn't expire for another year.

Bieber's statements are a part of what is known as pattern bargaining — targeting one company for a strike and, after getting a contract, matching its most important provisions at the other companies.

The UAW refined the practice in the 1950s. But America dominated its own car market then.

With strong import competition and many differences between the operations of the U.S. companies, many Detroit auto executives believe pattern bargaining no longer is justified.

The union has allowed two smaller automakers, American Motors Corp. and Volkswagen of America Inc., to fashion contracts apart from the Big Three, and Chrysler received special contract treatment when that company teetered on the edge of bankruptcy.

But the UAW has vowed that pattern contracts can still work now that GM, Ford and Chrysler are again making record profits.

Ford had actually wanted to be the union's strike target in this summer's bargaining so it could set a contract more to its liking.

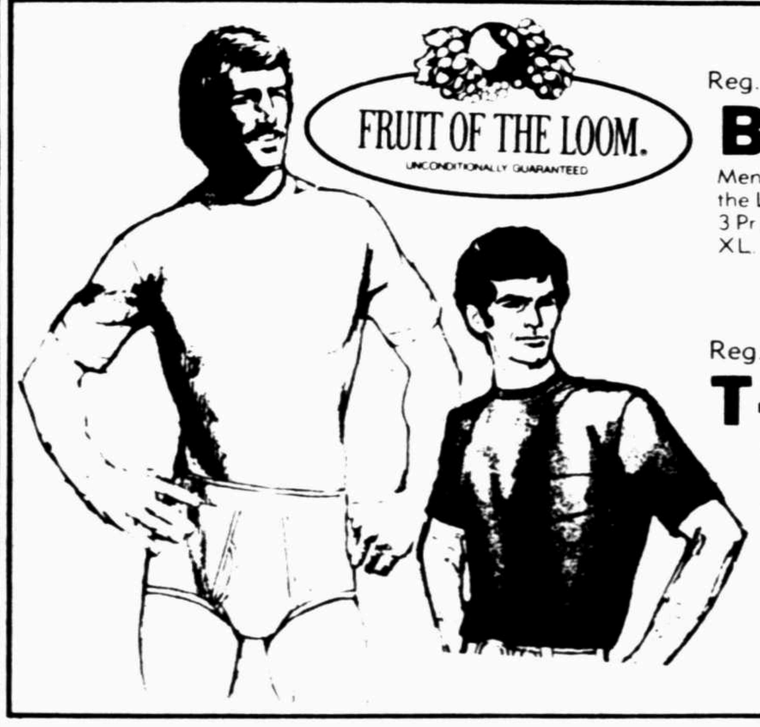

Experts agree that Ford would have preferred a contract with more job security — tougher restrictions on subcontracting and foreign imports — in return for a smaller wage increase.

But the union chose to bargain with GM first.

Ferraro challenges Reagan-Bush campaigners 'to fight like men'

NEW YORK (AP) — Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine A. Ferraro said Saturday that if the Reagan-Bush campaign is orchestrating efforts to harass her, "Why don't they come out and fight like men?"

Ms. Ferraro declared there is clear evidence of an organized effort to attack her with slurs that she says are "devastating."

While admitting that she does not know whether the Reagan-Bush campaign is organizing the attacks, she said:

"If all this stuff is true and they are organizing from the White House, why don't they come out and fight like men? We have a lot of issues to discuss."

She made her remarks in a sidewalk news conference outside her home in Queens before a day of campaigning in New Jersey and Washington.

She had the campaign trail to herself on Saturday, with President Reagan and Democratic challenger Walter Mondale both in Washington and Vice President George Bush at his private home in Kennebunkport, Maine.

Reagan did take a verbal slap at Mondale in his regular paid weekly radio talk, defending his own refusal earlier this week to impose import quotas on steel and contending that such quotas would be "the wrong policy" of his Democratic opponent.

"That kind of protectionism is my opponent's policy, and just like his tax increase, it's the wrong policy," Reagan said.

He said his plan to seek agreements with exporting nations to end what domestic producers see as unfair import competition would help the industry and reduce the amount of steel imported into the U.S. market.

Mondale has said Reagan's plan marked an "election-year conversion" from policies that allowed steel imports to double while 250,000 steel workers were idled. And he has complained that the outcome of the negotiations on voluntary restraints would not be known until after the Nov. 6 election.

The subject of heckling has been given increasing attention by the candidates in recent days, with Mondale and Bush also facing chanting protesters.

One student said last week that local Reagan campaign officials incited and coached students who heckled Mondale at a speech at the University of Southern California. State and college Reagan campaign officials denied the allegations and condemned the heckling.

On Saturday, Ms. Ferraro ran down the list of what she called evidence of organized attacks, including a telephone number in Massachusetts where information on her moves is available.

"You see the same signs appearing at the rallies. We also have evidence of a phone system being in place in the state of Massachusetts where people are advised of my presence, all of my activities. That seems organized to me," she said.

A phone call to that number was answered with a tape recording giving a list of winners in a "club drawing," followed by this note: "A rumor has it that Gerry Ferraro will be in Boston on Wednesday of next week; the Globe printed that information on Friday." In fact, Boston is among the stops Ms. Ferraro's campaign has tentatively set for next Wednesday.

The New York congresswoman said some of the attacks go beyond the bounds of legitimate discussion.

'I think some of the stuff goes a little bit further than hardball politics," she said. "Some of the signs are slurs."

In particular, she refered to signs at a rally Thursday at the University of Texas at Arlington where she faced the most intense heckling of her campaign.

"There was a sign that said 'Dead Democrats don't vote.' There was another that had three tombstones — for Gerry's kids," Ms. Ferraro said. "They are devastating."

She said she felt a lot of the anti-abortion protesters who have hounded her at almost every campaign stop "genuinely care about the issue...I think that is fine."

Campaigners must conquer fear of flying

WASHINGTON (AP) — Flying on the campaign trail, never the calmest experience, has sometimes been a perilous pursuit this election year. Even Air Force One, the Cadillac of charters, has not been immune in a season of troubles.

Geraldine Ferraro's charter broke down two weeks ago when the emergency brake locked.

Arriving three hours late at a rally in Flint, Mich., she told a crowd that waited patiently, "If it were a budget deficit, I'd be able to fix it. If it were an arms control negotiation with the Soviets, I could negotiate it.

"But fixing wheels on a plane," she added, "is a little bit above my capabilities."

Earlier this month, a seal on a stove vent broke on Air Force One as President Reagan was returning to Washington from Salt Lake City. Pressure dropped and the pilot quickly took the plane down from 27,000 feet to 12,000 feet.

Air Force security guards, startled by the loud noise, rushed from their seats to see what the problem was. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan "experienced some minor discomfort. He could feel it in his ears."

A few days earlier, a break in the door seal on the on the press plane that accompanied the president on his post-Labor Day trip to the West Coast forced a change of planes for 200 or so reporters, photographers and technicians.

Some 1984 campaign veterans are wearing buttons showing an airplane with an engine afire. They were among the 90 stalwarts on Gary Hart's primary campaign plane who watched one engine disintegrate, smelled smoke and breathed a sigh of relief when the plane made it safely back to the runway at Philadelphia from whence it came.

The candidate professed he wasn't scared; Hart walked up and down the aisle consoling people, who included staff, media types and Secret Service agents. A stewardess named Edna was heard moaning, as people piled off her plane, "what am I going to do with all this food." Among the survivors, the charter airline is known as Air Edna.

On a previous flight into New Mexico, Air Edna landed with a huge thump. Pilot and co-pilot did an aviator's walkaround and found the tires smoking. Reporters confronted the person in charge and said news organizations would refuse to fly on the charter any further. That got them a change of planes for a while, but soon Air Edna was back.

Hart also was aboard a chartered DC-9 that dipped sharply while landing in heavy crosswinds at Anderson, Ind. Observers on the ground said one wing was about six feet from the runway.

Transient stunned by good fortune

SANTA ROSA, Calif. (AP) — A self-described wino who couldn't afford $50 bail after being arrested for panhandling and public drunkenness was as stunned as anybody to learn that he may be heir to millions of dollars.

"I figured I'd get a check for $20," said Victor Fimia, 40, whose trembling hands, missing tooth and stubbly beard made him an unlikely-looking millionaire. "I thought I was the black sheep, and here my father left me something."

Fimia, who said he has spent 23 years on the streets, was arrested Friday in a downtown Santa Rosa park. Through a national computer check, police learned he had been reported missing from San Jose years ago.

A police report said Fimia's father, who died five years ago, left his son "several million" dollars.

However, Fimia's sister Maggie Fimia, who had filed the missing person's report in San Jose, said the inheritance is nowhere near "several million dollars." The police report "is totally false and I'm extremely angry about it," she said Saturday in a telephone interview from her home in Seattle.

"I said he's not worth a lot of money," probably between $30,000 and $40,000, she said. The erroneous report, "is going to confuse the hell out of my brother. He doesn't know what's going on."

Santa Rosa and San Jose police said there was no way to check on the origin of the police report until Monday.

Fimia spent Friday night in the Sonoma County Jail in Santa Rosa, 60 miles north of San Francisco. He is to be arraigned Monday.

If the promised millions materialize, Fimia said he plans to "go down to the liquor store to finish my bottle of wine."

"I'm gonna buy an old pick-up truck and camper," said Fimia, whose bed has been wherever he could unroll his sleeping bag, his meals wherever he could get them. He said he would like to travel to Seattle for a reunion with his sister.

He said she had called him at the jail Friday, and said that he and his two sisters would each share an unspecified percentage of the estate.

From a crumpled piece of paper in his pocket, he produced one sister's telephone number. A call placed to the number by the Santa Rosa Press Democrat was answered by a man who identified himself only as Fimia's brother-in-law.

The man declined to discuss the inheritance except to say the figure was "nowhere near" the millions reported by police. He also put Fimia's share of the estate at "probably in the realm of $30,000 to $40,000.

Asked about the dimensions of his father's fortune, Fimia said, "I hope he's that rich. I knew he had some bucks. I don't see how he could have that much.

"But you never know," Fimia added. "He was always saying, 'Turn off the lights. You're wasting electricity.'"

Fimia said his father was a prominent physician — "one of the best diagnosticians in New York." He said he left home at 17, dropped out of school and worked at a quicksilver mine after unsuccessful attempts to return to his books.

After he left home, Fimia said, father and son saw each other only during his infrequent trips to New York.

He said their relationship was "just like having a puppy — when he grows up you don't want him anymore."

Fimia has spent his time traveling in the United States and Mexico.

"No burglary, no stealing," he said. "But I drink in the park. I feel like a bump on the log without a jug of wine."

Heart transplant recipient says baby 'very important'

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The first known heart transplant recipient to give birth says she was determined to go through with her pregnancy, despite doctors' warnings, because it represented her "only chance" to have a baby.

"It was very important to me," Betsy Sneith said Friday in her first public appearance since the baby's birth Sunday at the University of California at San Diego Medical Center.

"When I found out I was pregnant, I figured it was the only chance I would ever have," said Ms. Sneith, who four years ago received the heart of a 23-year-old man killed in an auto accident.

UCSD doctors said Ms. Sneith's pregnancy was the first successful, full-term pregnancy among heart transplant recipients. Other women with heart transplants have tried unsuccessfully to have children.

"I feel real glad that I had my baby," said Ms. Sneith, who is unmarried and plans to raise her daughter, Sierra Jamieson, as a single parent.

"I love animals, but if it wasn't for animal research, I wouldn't be sitting here talking to you," she said. "I wasn't really worried about my heart in this. I have never had any problem with rejection. I was sure that it would be OK."

Ms. Sneith, 23, was given two months to live as she waited for a suitable donor in 1980.

Thousands seek 350 dockworker, clerical positions

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Drawn by the lure of just 350 dockworker and clerical openings, thousands of jobseekers parked their autos, trucks and campers in miles-long lines Saturday to wait for applications to be handed out.

People began lining up Friday, and by Saturday morning two queues of vehicles wound for several miles along streets in the San Pedro area. The applications weren't to be distributed until Sunday morning, at a drive-in theater.

It could turn into a traffic cop's nightmare, because the two lines will have to merge.

"Longshoreman's the best paying job there is. Anybody who knows anything about the waterfront knows there's no better job," said David Ibarra, 34.

"It's not the point of needing a job, it's the point of needing a future," said Ibarra, who works in a machine shop. "If you get in there (the longshore industry), you've got a future."

The attraction of the jobs is their permanence and the money — $12.42 an hour to start, said Rick Martinez, 20, of Carson.

The Pacific Maritime Association, a stevedore employers' group, said it would give out 15,000 applications to fill 300 dockworker and 50 marine clerk positions.

One line of cars snaked along a dirt strip on Gaffey Street, which is bracketed by Western Fuel Oil Co. refineries and a Union Carbide plant. Another line stretched along tree-lined, residential Westmont Drive and then turned another few miles up Western Avenue.

Many vehicles were empty, just holding down their owners' place in line for the handout of applications at the San Pedro Drive-In. The queue on Gaffey had the direct line to the drive-in's entrance.

Virginia Moreno of San Pedro was holding a place to pick up applications for her two daughters, who were hoping for clerk jobs, and her two sons-in-law, she said.

"One daughter is a waitress," saving money for college, Mrs. Moreno said. "We thought this would be better paying. I'm a teacher, and my husband (a dock clerk) makes twice as much money as I do."

Some jobseekers brought beach chairs and sleeping bags for an overnight stay Friday and Saturday. Many said they were employed, but wanted the better-paying longshoreman's job.

Police Officer Darryl Childers said Saturday, "We haven't had any problems so far. Tomorrow's when the problems are probably going to start."

General cargo volume is up 12.5 percent over 1983 at the Los Angeles Harbor, and has increased by 11.3 percent at Long Beach Harbor, the Los Angeles Times reported earlier this month. Containerized cargo, requiring skilled stevedores to handle equipment, rose by 21.6 percent at Los Angeles and by 44 percent at Long Beach.

But employment of dockworkers serving the two ports has remained steady at 2,600 since 1982, the Times said.

"The proper number should be upwards of 3,200 or 3,300," John McEvoy, area manager for the Pacific Martime Association, said recently. "It means a lot of work and a lot of jobs and a big boost for the Southern California economy."

Plane's cowling blows apart during takeoff

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The cowling over one engine on a Continental Airlines DC-9 apparently blew apart during a takeoff from Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport, forcing the pilot to make an emergency landing.

Authorities said the twin-engine plane was landed without incident Friday afternoon and no injuries were reported.

Passengers said the pilot told them to brace themselves, saying there was a problem with engine failure and that the plane would return immediately to the airport.

"For a while, it was really something," said Dave Burget, a passenger. "I'm a pilot myself and so I know what those trees down on the ground can do. I was looking down on the ground for a place where we could possibly go down and the best thing I could see was the river."

Cuban exile found guilty of murder

Arocena

NEW YORK (AP) — A Cuban exile was found guilty Saturday in the attempted slaying of the Cuban ambassador to the United Nations, the machine-gun murder of a diplomatic attache and 20 bombings he ordered as leader of the Omega 7 anti-Castro terrorist group.

Eduardo Arocena, 41, faces a mandatory life sentence for the most serious of 25 charges of which he was convicted, first-degree murder of Cuban diplomatic attache Felix Garcia Rodriguez.

He also faces a possible life sentence under the separate charge of conspiring to murder Raul Roa, the Cuban ambassador to the U.N.

A federal jury in Manhattan also convicted Arocena of charges that he raised funds by working for a drug dealer by agreeing to collect debts and to murder a rival. The jury also convicted him of lying about his role in the murder of a Cuban exile who favored closer ties with the Fidel Castro government.

The jury of six men and six women deliberated 36 hours over five days before reaching the decision. U.S. District Judge Robert J. Ward set sentencing for Oct. 26.

The verdict followed the testimony of six FBI agents and a police detective who said Arocena admitted to them he was the terrorist code-named "Omar," leader of Omega 7.

Arocena, who testified during the trial that he did not have the "privilege or honor" of being Omar, was passive as the verdict was read. His wife, Miriam, broke into tears, and other Cuban exile supporters in the courtroom listened quietly.

Arocena was convicted of carrying out a series of daring bombings, including one in which he donned underwater gear to plant explosives on the hull of a Soviet ship anchored off Port Elizabeth, N.J.

He also was found guilty of ordering the bombing of Cuban, Soviet, Venezuelan, Mexican and Nicaraguan diplomatic missions in Miami and New York, as well as Madison Square Garden and Kennedy Airport, both in New York. He was acquitted of a charge involving a bombing at Lincoln Center in Manhattan.

Arocena was also convicted of lying about his role in ordering the machine-gun slaying of Cuban exile businessman Eulalio Jose Negrin in Union City, N.J., on Nov. 25, 1979. Negrin, who advocated closer ties to Castro, was slain in front of his 13-year-old son, who testified during the trial.

The most serious charge was that Arocena participated in the murder of Garcia, the attache, on Sept. 11, 1980. Prosecutors charged that Arocena ordered the murder to celebrate Omega 7's sixth anniversary.

Bodies of two Americans killed in blast come home

DOVER, Del. (AP) — The bodies of two American servicemen killed in the terrorist bombing of the U.S. Embassy annex in Lebanon were returned to the Air Force base here Saturday, an Air Force spokesman said.

The bodies of Army Chief Warrant Petty Officer Kenneth V. Welch, 33, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Michael Ray Wagner, 30, of Zebulon, N.C., arrived aboard a C-141 transport plant at 7 p.m. EDT, said Capt. James Sahli.

Welch and Wagner, both embassy staff members, were among at least nine people killed Thursday when an explosives-packed van blew up 20 feet from the northern entrance to the embassy annex in Christian-held east Beirut.

A brief ceremony, probably involving the base honor guard, was held Saturday night after the bodies had arrived, Sahli said.

The men's families were expected to attend a more elaborate ceremony, involving a joint Army-Navy color guard, Monday morning, he said.

Teacher guilty of abuse

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A former teacher at a private school has pleaded guilty to five counts of sexual abuse of female students after a prosecutor agreed not to file more charges against him.

Deputy District Attorney Pamela Ferrero said she made the agreement with Norman Lieberman, 36, a former teacher at the McKinney School, "to avoid the trauma of the girls having to testify" in court.

She also agreed not to seek a prison sentence of more than three years. Lieberman, who pleaded guilty Friday and remained free on $5,000 bond, had faced a maximum sentence of 16 years in prison.

Court: Looks justify search

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The fact that the driver of a speeding motorcycle is dressed like a gang member is enough reason for police to search him and a companion, a state appeals court has ruled.

By a 2-1 vote, the 1st District Court of Appeal on Friday upheld a search by San Jose police that led to the conviction of Kara Koenig on charges of possessing methamphetamine and stolen property.

Police had stopped the motorcycle on which Ms. Koenig was riding because the driver was wearing a leather jacket with an insignia, dirty jeans, steel-toed boots and a chain belt, common dress for motorcycle gang members.

Police had reason to search Ms. Koenig because they knew bikers often give weapons to their female companions, wrote Justice James Scott.

Man sentenced for murders

NORRISTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A man who admitted shooting his parents to death last fall at the instruction of a voice from his television set has been sentenced to 14 to 40 years in prison.

Barry Pinsky, 39, of Philadelphia, was sentenced Friday after he calmly told Judge Anita Brody that the voice warned him his parents were preventing him from receiving Social Security checks.

He pleaded guilty but mentally ill to two counts of third-degree murder in the deaths of Edward Pinsky, 70, and his wife, Margaret, 68.

Pair placed on probation

DENVER (AP) — A husband and wife have been placed on probation in the deaths of two 10-year-olds, who were poisoned by carbon monoxide when left for several hours in a car with the motor running.

County Judge Larry Bohning said Friday that Dale and Lana Loyd will be "haunted" for the rest of their lives by the Jan. 20 deaths of the boys, Mrs. Loyd's son by a previous marriage and his friend. Prosecutors said the couple spent four hours at a party while the boys waited in their car.

Bohning ordered the Loyds to perform 500 hours each of community service as part of their two years of probation. They pleaded no contest Wednesday to charges of criminally negligent homicide.

Anti-government protesters lay down on the street after being attacked by riot police wielding tear gas and water cannons early Saturday near Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos' Malacanang Palace in Manila.

Philippine police break up protests

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — More than 2,000 police and soldiers firing yellow smoke and tear gas grenades staged a dawn charge Saturday on anti-government demonstrators holding a defiant all-night vigil near President Ferdinand E. Marcos' palace.

Officers wielding truncheons and guns chased the demonstrators through rain-slick streets as explosions rocked the heart of Manila. Some of the blasts were from tear gas grenades, and police said some were from homemade bombs thrown by demonstrators. Some witnesses claimed to have heard police officers' guns fired.

Hospitals reported seven people injured. Dozens of demonstrators and at least one policeman suffered minor wounds.

Servillano Aquino, a nephew of slain opposition leader Benigno Aquino, was taken away by police, but he and a family driver were released several hours later without charges.

He and the driver had been taken to a suburban military camp in a family car commandeered by security men. Witnesses said police claimed to have found "subversive documents" in the car, but police gave no reason for detaining the nephew.

Opposition leaders, in a news conference later, claimed four other people were arrested but gave no names. Police said no other demonstrators were being held.

The police and military routed the demonstrators at 6:30 a.m. Saturday as a Roman Catholic priest was finishing a Mass in an intersection occupied by some 2,000 protesters.

Manila Police Chief Gen. Narciso Cabrera had agreed not to disperse the demonstrators until the priest finished the Mass.

"The police have been very tolerant. I ask you, let's end this peacefully."

Soviet, Chinese ministers end talks

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Foreign ministers Andrei Gromyko of the Soviet Union and Wu Xueqian of China on Saturday ended two days of talks described as a step toward "mutual understanding" between their countries.

The assessment was set out in a statement issued by Xu Liugen, a spokesman for the Chinese Mission to the United Nations, where the two men concluded discussions begun Friday night at the Soviet U.N. mission.

The statement said:

"The ministers of the two countries...met for six hours yesterday and today and they held frank and sober discussions. The discussion will help to lead to development of mutual understanding.

"The two ministers exchanged views on important issues of international relations as well as on Sino-Soviet relations. Both ministers stated their respective views and positions concerning the above issues.

"Both the ministers expressed their desire to improve relations between the two countries," it said.

Since the 1960s, Chinese-Soviet relations have chilled over ideological, political and border disputes.

Xu told a reporter earlier that Friday's meeting was Gromyko's first visit with a Chinese foreign minister since 1959.

Gromyko left the 3½-hour Saturday meeting smiling, but the Soviet press officer present declined to tell reporters anything about the encounter.

Security was tight as the two men went into their conference inside the Chinese mission about 9:30 a.m. EDT. Police herded reporters to the other side of the street as Gromyko's 12-car motorcade, consisting mostly of police cars,

Gromyko's party included Anatoly Dobrynin, the Soviet ambassador to the United States, and Oleg Troyanovsky, ambassador to the United Nations.

Britain, China ready to sign draft agreement

HONG KONG (AP) — Britain and China will initial a draft agreement in Peking next Wednesday to end British rule over Hong Kong in 1997, the government announced.

A brief government statement Saturday said the accord will be initialed by the chief negotiators, Sir Richard Evans, British ambassador to China, and Zhou Nan, Chinese assistant foreign minister, at 10 a.m. in the Chinese capital.

Attending the ceremony will be Hong Kong Governor Sir Edward Youde, who will return to Hong Kong the same day to announce the historic agreement to the colony's Legislative Council.

It took two years of hard bargaining to reach the accord after British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's visit to Peking in the fall of 1982.

The announcement last Wednesday that negotiators had reached agreement was favorably received in Hong Kong, with share prices surging on the stock market.

Under the pact, China resumes sovereignty over Hong Kong when the British lease on most of the territory expires in 1997. China has pledged to retain Hong Kong's capitalistic system and lifestyle for 50 years after its takeover. Hong Kong is the world's third largest financial center, behind New York and London.

British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe announced in Hong Kong last month that the agreement will have to be approved by the people of Hong Kong and the British Parliament.

The British government has established a special assessment office in Hong Kong to gather public opinion on the agreement.

If it is approved, Britain and China will sign a final accord on the territory at the end of this year.

Although no details of the draft agreement have been disclosed, Howe said at the time that it would be "detailed and legally binding," spelling out the specific rights of Hong Kong residents after the British pullout.

He said the two countries will also set up a joint liaison group to monitor compliance with the agreement until the year 2000.

Howe said the liaison group will meet in London, Peking and Hong Kong. From 1988, it will be based in the colony.

Howe, who visited Peking twice since April to expedite the negotiations, acknowledged in London on Friday that his government will be powerless if China tears up the agreement.

But he said that such a pact should be respected because "it is the most solemn of undertakings that can be made by two sovereign states to each other."

The agreement must still be debated by the British Parliament and the Chinese National People's Congress, but no new problems are expected. The British Cabinet approved the accord Thursday.

China's assurances that Hong Kong will become a special administrative zone after 1997 with a high degree of autonomy have done little to ease political jitters in the colony.

Many of Hong Kong's 5.5 million people fear that Peking would not be able to keep its promises if there was another political upheaval on the mainland, such as those that have swept China periodically since the Communists came to power in 1949.

Political uncertainty here sent the Hong Kong dollar plunging to a record low of 9.5 to the U.S. dollar last September. It forced the government to peg the local currency at 7.8 to the U.S. dollar.

Jardine Matheson and Co., one of Hong Kong's oldest and most influential trading firms announced early this year it was relocating its holding company to Bermuda because of the territory's murky political future.

U.S. wants U.N.'s aid to end Persian Gulf war

WASHINGTON (AP) — Worried that the 4-year-old war between Iran and Iraq is on the verge of erupting over a wider area, the State Department hopes to enlist United Nations Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar in another peace effort.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz is expected to discuss the latest developments in the Persian Gulf conflict at the U.N. next week with the foreign ministers of moderate Arab nations — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, Oman and the United Arab Emirates.

These nations have banded together in an organization called the Gulf Cooperation Council. Shultz' meeting with the council is tentatively scheduled for Oct. 1.

If they agree, and officials say it is virtually certain they will, Perez de Cuellar is expected to undertake a new mediation effort that may include a visit to Iraq and Iran for meetings with leaders of the warring nations.

The U.N. official has made the trip before. He succeeded earlier this year in winning agreement from both sides to halt indiscriminate shelling of each other's cities.

Concern that the war may be about to take a turn for the worse stems from continuing Iraqi attacks on oil shipping around Iran, especially the reports that Iraq engaged in a "warning bombing" of Iran's Kharg Island oil export terminal.

State Department spokesman John Hughes said Friday that if Iraq bombed Kharg Island as it claims, it would constitute a dangerous widening of the war.

Hughes said the United States could not confirm the attack, which Iraq said took place Thursday in retaliation for Iranian attacks on two Iraqi oil ports. Iran denied that Kharg Island was hit.

Nevertheless, Hughes said, "The U.S. view has not changed. Any widening of the war threatens the peace and stability of the region."

He said the United States fully supports continuous international efforts to resolve the conflict.

"We note that the forthcoming session of the United Nations General Assembly may again provide opportunities for international consultation and movement toward resolution of the conflict," Hughes said.

Other officials, speaking on condition they not be identified by name, said the spokesman was alluding to the expected push for a new mediation effort by the U.N. secretary-general.

"Basically we are concerned over attacks on shipping in international waterways and hope this will provide emphasis for the United Nations to look at it. I would not be surprised if they launch some initiative," said one Mideast analyst.

Forty-three ships have been attacked in the Persian Gulf by both nations since Iraq declared an exclusion zone around Kharg Island last February, according to officials at Lloyd's, the London insurance exchange.

Iraq warned commercial ships to stay out of a 50-mile zone surrounding Kharg Island or risk air and sea attack.

The analyst said "we are not quite at the point" where Iran is willing to discuss an end to the war. But he said the other nations in the Persian Gulf are "trying to encourage the Iranians to negotiate their differences with Iraq" while there is still time.

"Oil exporters are concerned we are on the verge of a war spill-over," he said. "A direct attack on Kharg Island that impaired exporting capabilities would undoubtedly lead to Iranian retaliation and escalation."

U.S. officials also are extremely uneasy about the danger of a possible Iranian attack against Kuwait or Saudi oil fields.

The analyst said the United States has urged restraint on Iraq, particularly warning of the dangers of an attack on Kharg Island. "The Iraqis listen very politely, but obviously the attacks go on," he said.

Explosion outside coffee shop injures four

JERUSALEM (AP) — A bomb exploded in a narrow alley outside a Palestinian coffee shop in the old city of Jerusalem today, wounding four people, a police spokesman said.

Witnesses at the scene told a reporter that a plastic bag containing the bomb was thrown into the tiny coffee shop where several Palestinian men were playing cards.

The witnesses, declining to give their names, said people in the shop feared the bag might contain something harmful and took it outside to the alley where it exploded.

Police spokesman Rafi Levi, speaking to a reporter at the scene, said four people were injured but gave no details of their injuries.

Israel Radio said one of the four was seriously injured.

The coffee shop is in the old, walled city's Moslem quarter in an area not frequented by tourists. The shop is located just off the Street of Chains which leads to the Temple Mount, site of several holy Moslem and Jewish shrines.

Evangelist Graham says 'it's worth taking risk for peace'

MOSCOW (AP) — The Rev. Billy Graham says he knows his 12-day visit to the Soviet Union may be exploited by Soviet authorities, but "it's worth taking a risk for peace."

Graham said he raised various human rights and religious issues with Soviet officials, but refused to go into detail at a news conference before he flew to Paris Friday.

Graham said, "I don't think you can think of a problem or concern that I've heard expressed in America...that I haven't brought up."

The 65-year-old evangelist was criticized when last in Moscow, in May 1982, for remarks suggesting there is more religious freedom in the Soviet Union than Americans are led to believe.

Graham reiterated that he was misinterpreted, insisting he had said there was "a measure of religious freedom" in the Soviet Union and would stand by that statement today.

When one American reporter suggested Graham's views would have been clearer if he had raised religious and human rights issues in public and not in private, Graham replied:

"Nowhere did Jesus or the Gospels take up any debates with the Roman authorities."

He also refused to be drawn into a dispute by a Soviet reporter who sought the Baptist preacher's views about American reports suggesting his trip would be exploited by the Soviets.

WHO BEARS INSURANCE RISK?

The timing of insurance coverage can be critical when buying or selling property. There is the grim possibility that the home in question could burn down BETWEEN taking title and recording that title.

Final settlement on a property always takes place before formal papers can be filed with the local recording office. But what happens if settlement occurs on a Monday, the house burns down on a Tuesday, and the purchase was not actually recorded by public officials until Wednesday?

Should the loss be borne by the seller, the buyer or divided between the parties? When the issue of risk is not adressed in the contract, it is decided by state law.

If you are the buyer, the lender will require you to bring a paid fire, theft and liability policy to the settlement. If you are the seller, you have a clear interest in the property until a new title has been recorded, insurance should be maintained until recordation and, preferably, until you have received the sales proceeds.

Sandinista backers break up meeting

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — About 3,000 Sandinista supporters wielding machetes, clubs and chains broke up an opposition political meeting Saturday for the third time in a week, and opposition leader Arturo Cruz said his forces would boycott the Nov. 4 elections.

The pro-government mob surrounded a house in Masaya, 14 miles south of the capital, and forced Cruz and 50 supporters to leave, according to an Associated Press photographer at the scene. Cruz was not injured and was led from the scene by supporters.

Police on Friday rescued Cruz from some 300 hostile Sandinista supporters who broke up a political meeting in Boaco, 60 miles northeast of here.

On Wednesday, several thousand Sandinista followers trapped Cruz during a meeting at a school in Leon, 50 miles northwest of Managua, and hurled stones and spit at him as he was led off by police. He was hit in the forehead by a rock, but not seriously injured.

The crowds are called "divine mobs" because they have been publicly praised by government junta leader Daniel Ortega as an expression of people defending the Sandinista revolution.

Cruz heads the Nicaraguan Democratic Coordinate, which said earlier it would not participate in the presidential election because the government has not lifted all restrictions on freedom of speech and the press, or guaranteed an open election.

"What has occurred here proves there are no guarantees," Cruz said Saturday.

The coalition had indicated recently it might reconsider its boycott if the government met its demands, and Friday, the ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front asked the Supreme Electoral Council to reopen the registration period through Sept. 30 so the opposition could participate in the election.

The four parties in the coalition lost their legal status when they failed to register individual candidates by Aug. 5.

UNESCO board to begin crucial talks

PARIS (AP) — The Executive Board of UNESCO begins three weeks of meetings here Wednesday that are likely to determine whether the United States goes through with its decision to withdraw from the organization.

The U.S. plan has presented the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with its biggest crisis in 38 years of existence.

Britain, West Germany, Denmark and the Netherlands are reviewing their own continued participation in the organization. They, too, are expected to base their decisions on the outcome of the meetings.

The 51-nation governing board will consider wide-ranging changes drawn up by UNESCO's 161 member states and Director General Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal, a central figure in the controversy.

M'Bow, who has headed the organization for 10 years, has been the target of charges of large-scale inefficiency, mismanagement and corruption at the Paris-based Secretariat.

M'Bow told a French radio station Friday that threats, pressure or "acts that can only be called criminal" would not force him to resign because he had been unanimously elected and no member state could get him removed.

But some Western delegates have suggested that M'Bow's departure might be the only step that could keep the organization from taking what they believe would be a radical turn if the United States and other Western nations leave.

M'Bow's comments Friday followed disclosure in Washington of a draft report by the U.S. General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, that was critical of UNESCO's management, budgetary growth, fiscal practices and program duplication.

Dileep Padgaonkar, a UNESCO spokesman, called leaking of the report "psychological warfare."

The Reagan administration announced last December it intended to withdraw from membership at the end of 1984 unless substantial changes were made in UNESCO's operations.

The United States, which provides one quarter of UNESCO's $374.4 million two-year budget, contends that UNESCO has become too politicized, opposes traditional Western concepts such as a free press and does not exercise fiscal restraint.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Black South African miners battle riot police

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Black miners fought among themselves and then battled riot police sent in to break up the disturbance in a gold mine. Two miners were killed and at least 135 injured, police said Saturday.

The hour-long rampage Friday night at the West Rand Consolidated Mines Ltd, about 20 miles west of Johannesburg, raised the toll to nine dead and more than 600 injured in a week of unrest at South African mines.

Pretoria police Lt. Derick van der Walt said two miners were killed and 160 wounded in the latest fighting. But Francois Alberts, a spokesman for Gencor, the mine owner, said 135 were injured. He said normal production resumed soon after the fighting was quelled among about 500 of the company's 5,000 miners.

Police said most injuries and both fatalities at the non-union West Rand mine occurred in fighting among the miners before riot police arrived, but Alberts said it was not clear when the injuries happened.

Alberts said the workers stoned mine buses, torched thatched shelters and tried to break into a kitchen.

China, India end talks

PEKING (AP) — China and India made some progress in a fifth round of border talks which ended Saturday, but did not actually discuss their rival claims for the Himalayan areas in dispute, an Indian spokesman said.

The two countries, which fought a border war in 1962, narrowed differences over the guiding principles for an eventual solution, said the spokesman, and "a substantive discussion of the boundary question" will be possible in the next round of talks. He spoke on condition he not be further identified.

Diplomats here had not expected much progress in the week-long talks, since neither country has shown any urgency about altering the border.

Minister: Nations need aid

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — The nations of Central America need $500 million in economic aid to rejuvenate their economies, Costa Rica's economy and commerce minister, Odalier Villalobos, says.

He said Friday that at a recent meeting in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, the region's economy ministers concluded that foreign aid was the only way to rejuvenate the economies of the Central American countries.

Land mines kill Chinese

PEKING (AP) — Six Chinese civilians were killed or wounded after stepping on land mines planted by the Vietnamese in a border area, the official Chinese news agency Xinhua reported on Saturday.

The agency also said that Vietnamese troops shot and killed two peasants working near the border on Sept. 13, and fired 1,000 shells on other border areas in the past 10 days, killing and wounding people.

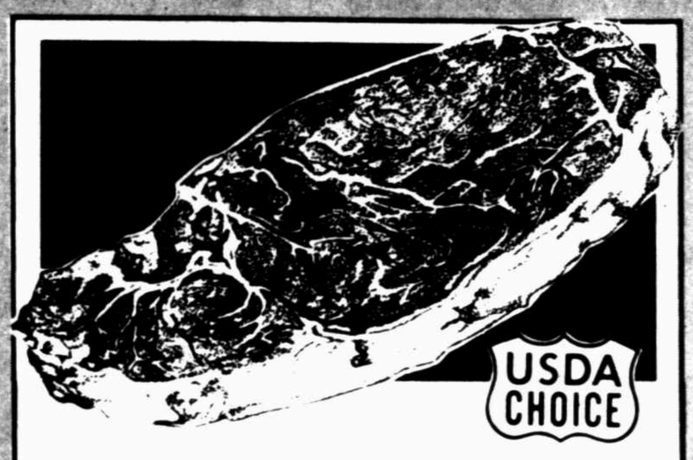

The latest accusations in a five-year-old border conflict said the six land mine victims were among 30 Chinese from Pingxiang city, in China's Guangxi Zhuang region, who were trading with Vietnamese on the Chinese side of the border when they came under fire last Thursday.

Angolans kill 222 rebels

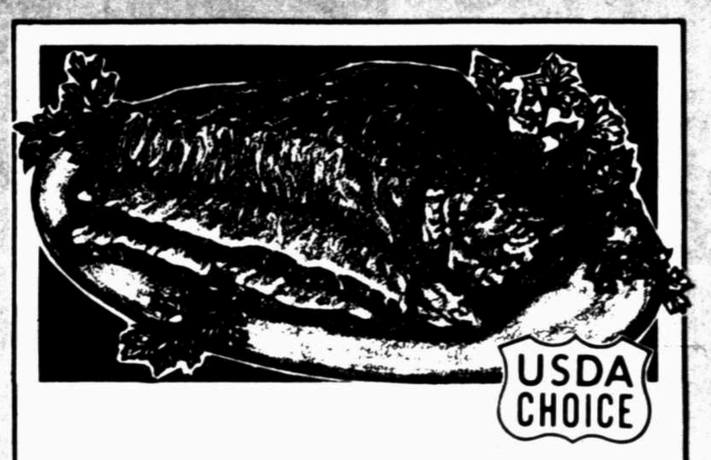

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Angolan government troops killed 222 guerrillas of the rebel UNITA movement in recent fighting in the southwest African nation, according to reports monitored here Saturday.

In two separate dispatches from the Angolan capital of Luanda, Angola's official news agency Angop quoted unidentified military sources as saying 200 rebels died in fighting in the province of Benguela and 22 were killed in the provinces of Moxico, Huambo and Kuando-Kubango.

Sooner theft ignites rout

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — For Paul Migliazzo, Oklahoma's game against Baylor may have resembled a high school contest.

The quality of play was sharp but there was a strong sense of deja vu for the 6-foot-1 226-pound linebacker.

Only 15 seconds into the second half, Migliazzo intercepted a Baylor pass and lumbered 18 yards for a touchdown that helped Oklahoma roll pass Baylor 34-15. The 11th ranked Sooners are now 3-0.

"I was a fullback in high school and there was no way I wasn't going to score," said Migliazzo who dragged two would-be tacklers before lunging into the end zone.

The score, which ignited the Sooners to 17 straight points in the third quarter, was especially sweet for Migliazzo, starting his first game after coming back from a knee injury.

"I've had some bad lunch, injury-wise, but I'm happy with the way things turned out," he said.

Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer and Baylor Coach Grant Teaff agreed on the importance of the interception.

"Baylor had some momentum coming out in the second half. But it was 17-7, a 10-point lead, and Migliazzo takes it from momentum to no-mentum," Switzer said.

The interception also inspired the swarming Oklahoma defense which twice stopped Baylor from scoring after the Bears had the ball inside the Sooner 11 yard line. The loss dropped Baylor to 0-2.

Sooner quarterback Danny Bradley threw two scoring tosses for the Sooners.

"Danny had a super day at quarterback," Switzer said.

Teaff agreed that Bradley is "quick. He's tough and he's smart."

Funcky Lobos whip Raiders

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Quarterback Buddy Funck, a master of coolness under pressure, threw for two touchdowns and ran for a third to lead unbeaten New Mexico to a 29-24 college football victory over Texas Tech Saturday night.

Funck carved up the Tech defense with TD passes of 59 yards to Kenneth Whitehead and 1-yard to Joe Sells and finished off the Red Raiders with a 3-yard scoring run as the Lobos wiped out a 15-7 Texas Tech lead with three fourth-quarter scores.

New Mexico, now 3-0, also got a 1-yard TD run from junior halfback Willie Turral.

Texas Tech, 1-1, had erased a 7-3 New Mexico halftime lead with a 53-yard interception return for a touchdown by linebacker Brad Hastings, a 13-yard TD pass from quarterback Perry Morren and Ricky Gann's 47-yard field goal.

Gann also connected on a 46-yard field goal in the first quarter and halfback Timmy Smith scored on a 4-yard run with two minutes left.

New Mexico put together drives of 80 and 96 yards in the fourth-quarter rally as Funck kept the Tech defense off stride with his option runs and clutch passing.

The Lobos narrowed the Red Raider lead to 18-15 when Funck hit tight end Sells with the short TD pass two plays into the fourth quarter and found Whitehead open for a two-point conversion pass.

The score was set up by a 43-yard run by Turral on a fourth-and-inches situation.

New Mexico insured the win with a time-consuming 96-yard, 13-play drive that was capped by Turral's unmolested waltz into the end zone off a pitch from Funck.

New Mexico scored the first time it handled the football, going 70 yards in four plays. Funck spotted Whitehead behind the Tech secondary and floated the football into wide receiver's hands, who outran the Tech defenders into the end zone.

The rest of the first half evolved into a defensive struggle and the Red Raiders opened things up in the third quarter.

On their second possession, the Red Raiders set up Gann's second field goal after reaching the New Mexico 31. Key defensive plays by Lobo linebackers Johnny Jackson and Tom Bradford forced Tech to settle for the three-pointer.

Tech scored twice inside of four minutes when Hastings picked off Funck's pass at the line of scrimmage and rambled untouched into the end zone.

Baylor tailback Ron Francis is wrapped up in a tackle by Oklahoma's Tony Casillas after a short gain during first quarter action at Norman, Okla., Saturday. The 11th ranked Sooners remained unbeaten, defeating the Bears decisively to go 3-0.

Frogs stun K-State

Go 2-0 with 42-10 romp

FORT WORTH (AP) — Quarterback Anthony Gulley scored three touchdowns and flashback Kenneth Davis rushed for 239 yards Saturday night as Texas Christian romped to a 42-10 nonconference verdict over Kansas State's stunned Wildcats.

The Horned Frogs, 2-0 and off to their best start in 12 years, spotted the Big Eight club a quick touchdown, then used a brutal ground attack to atone for a bitter 20-3 loss to the Wildcats a year ago.

Gulley, who won the starting role only last week when an injury sidelined Anthony Sciaraffa, dashed 25, 6 and 22 yards for touchdowns as TCU took a 14-10 halftime lead and padded it almost at will in the closing 30 minutes.

Davis, a junior, reeled off 77 yards in TCU's first scoring drive and sped the final 10 steps himself to offset a tricky 17-yard touchdown by James Witherspoon that had staked the Wildcats to an early 7-0 lead.

Gulley, operating the TCU veer offense as though he invented it, directed three long scoring drives and then capitalized on a pair of fourth-quarter interceptions by Frog defenders Scott Ankrom and Rob Thomas for two easy TDs.

Freshman Tony Jeffery, who rushed for 112 yards, galloped 13 yards for a touchdown after Androm's theft at the 25, and Gulley scooted in from the 22 following Thomas' interception at that point.

Substitute quarterback Thomas Ledet scored the third and final touchdown of the fourth period, bolting in from the four.

The 239 yards by Davis, coming on 29 carries, was the second-highest performance in TCU history and shoved the Frogs total yardage to 548 for the night.

TCU coach Jim Wacker, whose team was 1-8-2 in his rookie 1983 season, promised an improved performance this year and the Frogs responded magnificently.

The perennial Southwest Conference doormat pounded Utah State 62-18 last week and all but humiliated Kansas State before a shirtsleeve crowd of 28,412.

The Wildcats took the opening kickoff and, with a 32-yard run by quarterback Stan Weber, assembled an 80-yard scoring drive capped neatly by Witherspoon's 17-yard TD on an end-around reverse.

With Davis slicing through the Wildcat line like a sabre, TCU struck right back, moving 94 yards in 10 plays with Davis crossing the goal from 10 yards out.

By the end of the first quarter, Davis had a staggering 110 yards on 13 trips.

However, it was Davis who fumbled away a second TCU scoring opportunity at the Kansas State 1-yard line later in the first quarter.

Aggies storm Cyclones

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Freshman redshirt quarterback Craig Stump came in during the fourth quarter and tossed two touchdown passes Saturday as Texas A&M defeated Iowa State 38-17.

A&M, 2-0, led 17-3 at halftime but was ineffective in the second half until Stump replaced Kevin Murray, a sophomore who has started since midseason last year. Murray was intercepted by Iowa State linebacker Dennis Gibson in the third quarter and also lost a fumble in that period.

Iowa State scored its first touchdown on a 71-yard pass-run play from quarterback Alex Espinoza to Tracy Henderson, the nation's leading receiver.

Stump subbed for Murray after the kickoff and took A&M 75 yards in 17 plays with the score coming on a 5-yard pass from Stump to tight end Duncan Webb with 8:48 left in the game.

A&M, of the Southwest Conference, scored again on a 31-yard drive after Iowa State gambled on fourth down and failed to make a first. Stump threw 29 yards to wide receiver to Greg Dillon for the touchdown.

Iowa State, of the Big Eight Conference, is 1-2.

TED BATTLES

If you're REAL Cub fan, you'll know...

Now that the Chicago Cubs are about to win something, suddenly everyone is a long, suffering-in-silence Cub fan who has just been waiting for it to happen.

It's that way almost every year. A couple of years ago it was Atlanta turning everybody on. Hey, if there were that many Braves fans around, the team would still be in Boston.

The so-called Braves fans couldn't tell you who the first Black player with the Braves was...and you are wrong if your guess is Hank Aaron or Billy Bruton?

Chances are most of the fans riding the Braves' bandwagon two years ago didn't even know the team originally came from Boston or what field they played in.

If you'd asked them to name a third starting pitcher on the 1948 pennant winners that boasted, "Spahn, Sain and then a day-of-rain" they'd have been tongue-tied. And they'd never guess the shortstop-second base combination.

IF IT weren't for the Cubs, it would be the same with the Detroit Tigers this year. Detroit hasn't won a flag since 1968, their first and only one since meeting the Cubs in the 1945 series. These out-of-the-woodwork Tiger bandwagon jumpers might have remembered that Denny McLain won 31 games that year, but could they tell you who won three World Series games or who played shortstop in the Series?

A real Tiger fan would know the nickname of Alvin Crowder and shortstop who played beside The Mechanical Man in the '35 Series.

But that's the way it always is. The sports world was made for fair weather and the fans who come out in it.

The quiz below will determine whether you are a REAL Cub fan or the "We're with 'em win or tie" variety.

If you are a REAL Cub fan, you'll know who the two pitchers were that Chicago traded to get Dizzy Dean from the Cardinals...and the sum involved....and the outfielder the Cubs gave up?

2. A REAL Cub fan will know who was the Achilles Heel of the 1969 Cubs...or, to be more exact, the centerfielder?

3. If you are genuine, you'll be able to 'real' off four members of the Chicago Cubs eight-man faculty of coaches, that noble experiment in the early 1960s that eliminated a manager?

4. A true Cub loyalist still wouldn't concede this year's team as better than the 1969 failures...and would give some reasons.

5. A true blue Cub can tell you Gabby Hartnett's given name and his other nickname.

6. Swish means only one thing to a Chicago old-timer.

7. The man who has followed the Cubs through thick and thin not only will tell you Ferguson Jenkins didn't come up through the farm system, but from whence he came.

8. He can name the last Cub 20-game winner.

9. He'll know the Cub rookie second baseman of the year who died in a plane crash.

10. A REAL Cub fan can tell you Phil Cavaretta's number.

11. Or what positions Bobby Sturgeon and Lou Stringer played?

12. One who has really suffered knows the Mad Russian.

13. Tinkers-to-Evers-to-Chance was pure poetry in motion, but how about identifying the DP combo of Bingo-Bango-Bilko and never mind Addison Street.

14. Every one knows the worst trade ever made by the Cubs, but who did they get in return?

15. Hank Borowy, a 10-game winner with the Yankees and an 11-game winner for the Cubs, was a 20-game winner in 1945, the Year the Cubs Won the Pennant. But who was the other 20-game winner?

16. A REAL Cub fan will know the only pitcher to throw two no-hitters for Chicago.

17. Ed Ruelbach did something awful to the Dodgers Sept. 26, 1908...?

18. A REAL Cub fan can't forget the longest Chicago winning streak or the year it happened.

Danny Tartabull hit his first major league home run into the right center field stands to give Seattle a 1-0 lead in the second inning.

The Mariners pulled ahead 4-0 in the third when Al Davis cracked a two-run double and Ken Phelps added an RBI single.

Loser LaMarr Hoyt, 13-17, was chased in the sixth when Seattle upped their lead to 6-0 on Jack Perconte's two-run double.

Huskies maul Cougars, 35-7

SEATTLE, Wash. (AP) — Steady Hugh Millen connected on a 31-yard scoring strike to flashy Danny Greene just eight seconds before halftime Saturday and the ninth-ranked Washington Huskies made it look easy in the second half in defeating the Houston Cougars 35-7.

The Huskies, 3-0, broke open a close game in the second half with fullback Walt Hunt scoring from 6 and 2 yards, and Jacque Robinson going into the end zone on a 3-yard run.

After a flawless first half, the Houston Veer self-destructed in the final 30 minutes. Cougars' quarterback Gerald Landry coughed up two fumbles and threw two interceptions in the second half.

Millen, the Huskies' workman-like junior quarterback from Seattle, hit 11 of 22 passes for 178 yards and one touchdown. He was not intercepted and the Huskies did not commit a turnover.

After trailing the 1-1 Cougars, 7-3, most of the first half, the Huskies drove 87 yards in eight plays for the Millen-to-Greene TD in just 1:24 for a 10-7 halftime lead.

When removing or replacing LP gas tanks remember that fuel line nuts are left hand thread. A clockwise force will loosen and counterclockwise will tighten the line nut. When tightening the line to tank nut, draw the nut up snug, but do Not overtighten. The main valve on the LP gas tank should be tightened by hand only, using caution not to overtighten. Continual overtightening will eventually damage the valve and will require replacement. Billy Sims Trailer Town, 520 E 2nd, Odessa, carries the LP Gas bottle, and hoses, as well as the butane regulator in both single and dual bottle styles. The Automatic change-over regulator is a nice feature for the dual bottles, allowing you to take off one bottle and get it refilled without distrupting the gas in the coach. Billy Sims Trailer Town is open 6 days a week for your shopping convenience.

ATHENS, Ga. — Kevin Butler booted a 60-yard field goal into a 10-mile wind with only 11 seconds left to give 20th ranked Georgia, 2-0, a 26-23 upset of No. 2 Clemson, 2-1.

Clemson had tied it two minutes earlier when Donald Igwebuike booted a 48-yard field goal to apparently enable the Tigers to overcome seven turnovers. But Georgia, behind quarterback Todd Williams, who himself had five interceptions, marched the Bulldogs 36 yards to Clemson's 44-yard line to set up Butler fourth field goal of the game. The game-winner tied a Southeastern Conference distance record, set in 1982 by Tennessee's Fuad Reveiz and last week by Florida's Chris Perkins.

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — Jess Atkinson kicked a 20-yard field goal with 21 seconds remaining to give Maryland a 20-17 upset over 18th-ranked West Virginia.

The Terrapins, 1-2, drove from their own 13 to the Mountaineer 2 in the final minutes of the game. After a motion penalty set the Terps back, Atkinson hit his game-winning kick on a fourth down from the West Virginia 3.

The big play in the drive was a 26-yard pass from quarterback Frank Reich to Greg Hill that moved the ball to the West Virginia 43. Tailback Alvin Blount carried six times in the drive for 31 yards and finished the game with 88 yards in 20 carries.

West Virginia's Paul Woodside had tied the game at 17-17 with 6:53 remaining on a 32-yard field goal.

The Seminoles, 3-0, dominated the defending national champions from start to finish with Coach Bobby Bowden's "freeze-option" offense and a defense that sacked Miami quarterback Bernie Kosar six times for 73 yards in losses.

Schmidt kicked field goals of 54, 40 and 38 yards to give Florida State a 9-0 halftime lead and the Seminoles buried the 3-2 Hurricanes with a 15-point blitz in the third period.

Hester, a wide receiver who caught four passes for 104 yards, took a pitch on a reverse and followed a wall of blockers through the Miami defense on his 77-yard scoring run just 1:39 after intermission.

Mustangs win, but it's no rout

IRVING (AP) - It wasn't a rout as expected, but the 13th-ranked Southern Methodist Mustangs will take it.

The Mustangs outlasted the stubborn North Texas State University Eagles 24-6 Saturday night behind Reggie Dupard's two touchdown runs and quarterback Don King's passing.

"We weren't great, but we did what we had to do to win it. North Texas was fired up but we kept our poise. We were never in any danger," Dupard said.

SMU Coach Bobby Collins was satisfied with the victory.

"We're pleased with the win. We went to the passing game tonight because they put an eight-man front at us on defense," Collins said. "North Texas was aggressive and I was impressed with them. This game is going to help us. This was a positive game for us."

The unbeaten Mustangs of the Southwest Conference stretched their record to 2-0 while the Eagles of the Southland Conference dropped to 1-2.

The depth-shy Eagles played the Mustangs tough early but King loosened them up with deep passes so Dupard and Jeff Atkins could find running room.

Atkins scored on a 3-yard run to give SMU a 17-3 lead early in the third period after King had completed passes of 24 and 23 yards.

After Todd Smith kicked his second field goal, a 36-yarder for NTSU, Dupard scored on a 1-yard run after Tim Green had blocked a punt at the Eagle 12.

The 17-point favorite Mustangs had their problems with the scrapping Eagles in the first half, managing only a 10-3 lead.

SMU marched downfield to the Eagle 17 the first time it had the ball and Tomas Esteve kicked a 34-yard field goal.

However, NTSU tackle Gordon McFeders recovered a fumble at the Mustang 40 and the Eagles tied it 3-3 midway of the second period on Smith's bullseye 39-yard field goal.

The aroused Mustangs traveled 76 yards for the go-ahead touchdown just before intermission with the major damage coming on King's 40-yard pass to Marquis Pleasant.

Dupard plunged over from a yard away.

Dupard rushed for 88 yards on 24 carries while Atkins had 83 on 19 rushes.

King threw the ball 20 times and completed 8 for 168 yards.

The Mustangs sacked NTSU passers five times and allowed the Eagles only 30 yards rushing. NTSU had just 9 first downs to 19 for the Mustangs.

A crowd of 27,124 fans watched the home opener for the Mustangs.

SMU leads its series with NTSU 25-2-1, and it has not been renewed for any time in the immediate future.

The victory by the Mustangs sets up a clash of SWC unbeatens next week when Texas Christian visits Texas Stadium. TCU downed Kansas State 42-10.

Two all-Texas Super Bowl chances muffed

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

The best chances for an all-Texas Super Bowl came in the 1979 and 1980 National Football League campaigns.

The Houston Oilers lost in the American Conference championship games both seasons. The Dallas Cowboys were whipped as a wild card in the 1979 National Conference playoffs, then folded the next year in the NFC title game.

That may have been Texas professional football fans' last shot for a dream championship matchup in the immediate future.

The two teams play every year in an August preseason matchup that amounts to little more than a scrimmage.

Since the merger of the old American Football League and the NFL in the late 1960s, there has been a distinct difference between the Lone Star State's two professional football clubs.

For one thing, the Cowboys have been in five Super Bowls. The Oilers — none.

The Dallas franchise has rebuilt teams and continued winning. The Oilers have been, well, the Oilers. They have occasional flirtations with respectability, and then slide back to Skid Row.

The Oilers climbed close to the summit under Bum Phillips. They fell short twice in the aforementioned 1979 and 1980 seasons, and owner Bud Adams' impatience showed once again as he fired Phillips.

Since Phillips was sacked, the plunging Oilers have gone 7-9, 1-8 in the strike-shortened 1982 season, and 2-14. Gone are Phillips' successors Ed Biles and Chuck Studley. Enter Hugh Campbell of the Canadian Football League and United States Football League fame as the new Oiler messiah.

Campbell has inherited a young outfit with some offensive talent capable of occasional fireworks. But the defense has suffered from the malaise of going with veterans too long.

While the short-sighted Oilers rebuild, they unravel like a cheap T-shirt.

The Cowboys lost 10 veteran players from 1983, but always look farther into the future than Houston and manage winning seasons while they reshape.

Both teams are celebrating their silver anniversaries for 25 years in professional football.

But the stability of the Cowboys with the same coach and club president during all 25 years causes fewer growing pains when it's time to phase out some of the old hands.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry is a master at weaving young players into his system. It's the challenge that appeals to him almost as much as winning a Super Bowl, which he has done twice.

"Watching young players develop, that's why you're in this business," says Landry. "I love to work with young players, see their enthusiasm, see them achieve and reach their potential. It gives you a good feeling."

Landry disdains the word "rebuild."

"We like to think of it as reshaping," he says. "If you get to the point where you are rebuilding, you're almost giving in to a losing season."

Now, Campbell has been asked to reassemble a team that lost 14 times last year.

"I hope for the sake of my peace of mind that we can at least win more than we lose," says Campbell.

With an 0-for-3 start, it could be the season Campbell doesn't sleep. He's inherited 25 years of neglect.

It may be tougher than taking the Edmonton Eskimoes to the Grey Cup Championship, or making the Los Angeles Express tick. It just may be the toughest thing he's ever tried.

Razorbacks kick Tulsa

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Placekicker Greg Horne, replacing troubled Ernie Villarreal, kicked four field goals to give Arkansas an 18-9 victory over Tulsa Saturday, the Razorbacks' first triumph under Coach Ken Hatfield.

Horne, who came on after Villarreal, who missed two field goal attempts last week and an extra point Saturday, tied the school record with his four field goals.

Horne hit the right upright and failed on a 46-yard attempt and then clicked on kicks of 47, 29, 29, and 28 yards.

His first one tied the game at 9-9 and his second put Arkansas ahead to stay barely a minute deep in the fourth quarter.

The clincher came after defensive end Ravin Caldwell separated Tulsa quarterback Steve Gage from the ball and, after a scramble, recovered 20 yards down field at the Tulsa 14. Horne's fourth field goal came with 5:46 left in the game.

Arkansas is 1-0-1. Tulsa is 1-2 and 0-8 against Arkansas under Coach John Cooper.

Navratilova barges into net finals

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Top-seeded Martina Navratilova, playing her fourth singles match in less than 30 hours, downed Wendy Turnbull of Austrailia 6-3, 6-2 Saturday to earn a berth in the finals of the Lynda Carter-Maybelline Tennis Classic opposite unseeded Michelle Torres.

Torres, who knocked second seed Lisa Bonder out of the tournament in the second round, slammed her way to a 6-4, 6-3 victory over Bonnie Gadusek in the other semifinal. The 17-year-old from Northfield, Ill., is scheduled to meet Navratilova for the championship Sunday afternoon.

The semifinal victory increased Navratilova's record winning streak to 59 matches. She topped the previous record of 55 Friday with her 6-1, 6-2 victory over Melissa Brown in a rain-delayed first-round match.

The world's top-ranked player beat Ros Fairbank of South Africa 6-2, 6-1 later Friday and came back to defeat Elise Burgin 6-4, 6-3 early Saturday to reach the semifinals.

In other quarterfinals matches Saturday at the Bonaventure Racquet Club, Gadusek beat Kathy Rinaldi 6-3, 6-2; Torres slammed her way to a 5-7, 6-4, 6-2 victory over Terry Phelps; and Turnbull defeated France's Catherine Tanvier 6-0, 6-1.

McEnroe wears down Teltscher

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — John McEnroe wore down Eliot Teltscher with relentless pressure and a big serve, scoring a 6-3, 6-1 victory Saturday in the semifinals of the $265,000 Transamerica Tennis Open.

Brad Gilbert faced Terry Moor in the other semifinal match Saturday night.

Teltscher, seeded third, started strong with a service break in the first game as McEnroe netted an overhead.

But McEnroe broke right back in the next game and scored another break in the sixth game, taking the net behind sharply angled approach shots.

Teltscher started making errors in the second set, including a double fault that gave McEnroe the third game after Telscher had led 40-0.

"He got frustrated," said McEnroe, the top seed seeking his fourth Transamerica title in seven years.

McEnroe swept the remaining games, holding serve easily and coming to the net on Teltscher's serve. McEnroe ended four games with service aces.

Buckeyes' Byars demolishes Iowa

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Tailback Keith Byars ran, passed or threw for four touchdowns, leading fifth-ranked Ohio State to an opening 45-26 Big Ten win over No. 14 Iowa.

Byars, a 235-pound junior, ran for two scores of 50 and 7 yards, caught a 14-yard TDpass from quarterback Mike Tomczak and made his first collegiate pass a 35-yard scoring strike to flanker Mike Lanese.

The Buckeyes, 3-0, hammered Iowa, 1-2, for a 31-10 lead midway through the second quarter before Ohio Stadium's second largest crowd, 89,733, but Iowa bounced back to score 16 straight points and trail 31-26 late in the third quarter.

Iowa has not won in 11 games in Columbus, going back to 1959. It was a frustrating day for the Hawkeyes, who outgained the Buckeyes in total yards, but committed four turnovers.

Chuck Long, the Hawkeyes' junior quarterback, hit touchdown passes of 27 yards to wingback J.C. Love Jordan and 30 yards to tight end Mike Flagg. Long also scored on a 2-yard option.

Notre Dame 55, Colorado 14

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Allen Pinkett scored three touchdowns and quarterback Steve Beuerlein completed his first nine passes Saturday, leading Notre Dame, 2-1, to a crushing 55-14 victory over winless Colorado.

The Irish rolled up a 38-0 halftime lead on the way to their biggest scoring splurge since 1977 when they defeated Georgia Tech 69-14.

Pinkett scored on runs of 1 and 4 yards in the first quarter and then ripped off a 13-yard touchdown set up by an 80-yard return of the second half kickoff by sophomore Hiawatha Francisco.

Beuerlein completed his first nine passes as the Irish rolled to a 21-0 lead at the quarter but missed on his 10th attempt in an effort to tie the Notre Dame record of 10 straight completions shared by Angelo Bertelli and Joe Montana.

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Michigan quarterback Jim Harbaugh passed for one TD and fullback Bob Perryman capped an 80-yard drive with a three-yard scoring run as 1th ranked Michigan beat Wisconsin, 20-14.

Perryman's score gave Michigan, 2-1, a 17-7 lead by Badger tailback Larry Emery kept Wisconsin, 2-1, close with two and 52 yard TD runs in the third and fourth quarters. Wisconsin, which lost five fumbles in the game, ruined a chance to take the lead when Marck Harison fumbled at midfield with just over three minutes left in the game.

Ahead 17-14, the Wolverines added a 50-yard field goal by Bob Bergeron in the fourth quarter. He also booted a 27-yarder in the first quarter four plays after teammate Al Bishop recovered a fumble by Badger Michael Jones on the opening kickoff.

No. 1 Cornhuskers 'thresh' Bruins, 42-3

PASADENA, Calif. — Jeff Smith rushed for 123 yards and scored one TD as No. 1 Nebraska, 3-0, whipped eighth-ranked UCLA 42-3.

The triumph before a disappointed crowd of 71,355 at the Rose Bowl dropped UCLA to 2-1.

Oregon 21, California 14

BERKELEY, Calif. — Oregon quarterback Chris Miller fired a 31-yard touchdown pass to Lew Barnes with 53 seconds left as the Ducks turned a fumble into a touchdown for the second time Saturday to beat California 21-14. The 3-0 Ducks, off to their best start in 19 years, took advantage of Cal miscues throughout the game and handed the Golden Bears their second Pacific 10 loss.

Stanford 28, San Jose 27

STANFORD, Calif. — Quarterback John Paye led a 91-yard last-ditch drive, climaxed by a 17-yard touchdown run by Thomas Henley, to lift Stanford to a 28-27 victory Saturday over San Jose State.

The Cardinal trailed 27-21 early in the fourth period, but covered the distance on 10 plays as Paye led the assault with a 34-yard run to the Spartan's 16. San Jose rallied, driving from its own 30 to the Cardinal 25, but quarterback Bob Frasco's fumble was recovered by Stanford's Matt Soderlund with 21 seconds remaining.

Freshman rallies Rice

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice freshman quarterback Mark Comalander, playing in his first collegiate game, came off the bench to rally the Owls to a 36-19 victory over Lamar Saturday night in a battle of victory-hungry teams.

Rice had lost 23 of its last 24 games and was trailing the surprisingly tough Cardinals 19-7 midway in the third quarter when Comalander, from San Antonio Churchill, came into the game.

Comalander, from the same high school that produced former Rice quarterback Tommy Kramer, rallied the Owls with 2-yard touchdown run by Antonio Brinkley and a 12-yard run by Marc Scott in the fourth quarter as the Owls took a 19-14 lead.

Comalander then scored his first collegiate touchdown with 7:50 left in the game on a 1-yard dive that was set up by a Lamar fumble.

It was a disappointing ending for the Cardinals, who broke an 8-game losing streak last week with a victory over North Texas State.

Lamar led 13-0 at the half on a 43-yard "swinging gate" run by George Landry and a 23-yard pass from Dennis Haskin to Bruce Miller.

Rice quarterback Kerry Overton, who threw four interceptions, completed a 33-yard pass to Melvin Robinson to set up Scott's touchdown.

Lamar came back with a 1-yard dive by Bruce Miller for a 19-7 Cardinal lead before Comalander's appearance.

Larry Collins added Rice's final touchdown with 56 seconds left on a 13-yard run. The touchdown was set up on Eddie Johnson's interception that marked a school-record 10 turnovers for the Cardinals.

Rice and Lamar both are 1-1.

Comalander finished his first game by completing 12 of 21 passes for 111 yards.

Four of Rice's five second-half touchdowns followed Lamar miscues.

Despite their own mistakes, Lamar capitalized on two of three first half interceptions by Rice quarterback Kerry Overton, who finished with nine completions on 26 attempts for 112 yards. Overton threw a fourth interception before being replaced by Comalander midway in the third period.

Bucky White's 30-yard interception return set up Landry's razzle-dazzle run. Haskins walked to the line of scrimmage, flipped the ball to Landry, catching Rice's defense off guard. Landry skirted the right side and dived into the end zone.

Jamey Sherman plucked off a desperation pass by Overton in the second quarter to set up Haskin's 23-yard touchdown pass to Miller, who looped around the Rice defense in the end zone for the score.

UTA 48, SW Texas St. 13

ARLINGTON — Quarterback Phil Blew threw two touchdown passes to Andre Gray and Scotty Caldwell rushed for 103 yards and another touchdown as Texas-Arlington whipped Southwest Texas State 48-13 in a non-conference game Saturday night.

BC's Flutie toots Heisman horn with dazzling act

From Wire Reports

FOXBORO, Mass. — Doug Flutie passed for six touchdowns and 354 yards as 10th-ranked Boston College rolled over North Carolina 52-20 Saturday night.

The senior quarterback jumped from 10th to sixth place, formerly held by Dan Marino, in career passing yards by a collegian with 8,063. With eight regular-season football games left, Flutie needs to throw for 1,551 yards to pass Duke's Ben Bennett as the all-time leader.

Flutie's brilliance overshadowed that of Ethan Horton, who ran for 162 yards and scored all three touchdowns for North Carolina, 0-2.

Flutie, who completed 28 of 38 passes, guided the Eagles, 3-0, to a 28-0 halftime bulge with scoring tosses of 8 and 14 yards to Troy Stradford, 6 yards to Kelvin Martin and 4 yards to Scott Gieselman.

He floated a 26-yard scoring pass to Steve Williams in the front right corner of the end zone midway through the third quarter, making the score 38-7. Flutie completed his excellent performance with a 10-yard touchdown pass to Gieselman with 1:25 gone in the fourth quarter. His sixth touchdown pass set a school record and boosted the Eagles' advantage to 45-13.

Boston College's Jim Browne finished the scoring for the game with a 2-yard run with 4:21 left.

William & Mary, 2-1, which did not

Temple 13, Pitt 12

PHILADELPHIA — Jim Cooper's 21-yard field goal with 26 seconds left to play gave Temple a 13-12 win over Pitt.

Trailing 12-10, Temple faced third-and-19 at its own 39-yard line. But quarterback Lee Saltz completed a 50-yard pass to Willie Marshall for a first down at the Pittsburgh 11.

Paul Palmer carried three times for 6 yards and Cooper kicked his field goal to give Temple its first victory in its last 11 meetings with Pitt and its second in the 14 game series which started in 1938.

Penn 55, Dartmouth 24

HANOVER, N.H. — John McGeehan passed for 203 yards and three touchdowns and Mike O'Neill ran for two more to lead Pennsylvania to a 55-24 victory over Dartmouth College.

The Cornhuskers went ahead to stay on their second possession by driving 80 yards on 11 plays. Smith raced eight yards for the touchdown with 6:54 left in the first quarter.

Nebraska made it 14-0 with 11:20 remaining before halftime on a 4-yard run by quarterback Craig Sundberg.

The 3-0 Ducks, off to their best start in 19 years, took advantage of Cal miscues throughout the game and handed the Golden Bears their second Pacific 10 loss.

Princeton 17, Cornell 9

ITHACA, N.Y. — Quarterback Doug Butler passed for 215 yards and one touchdown and Jim Anderson matched an NCAA Division 1-AA record with a 100-yard interception return as Princeton downed Cornell 17-9 in an Ivy League opener.

Princeton scored at 8:10 of the first quarter as Anderson intercepted a Shawn Maguire pass on the Cornell goal line and raced 100 yards for the touchdown. His return tied a -AA record set by George Floyd of Eastern Kentucky against Youngstown State on Sept. 20, 1980.

Colgate 40, Lehigh 35

BETHLEHEM, Pa. — Senior quarterback Steve Calabria passed for 349 yards and three touchdowns and plunged 1 yard for another to lead Colgate to a 40-35 victory over Lehigh.

Calabria hit junior flanker Tom Stenglein with touchdown passes of 9 and 12 yards in the first quarter and with a 24-yard scoring pass in the third. Stenglein hauled in eight passes for 174 yards.

Rutgers 19, Syracuse 0

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Rutgers parlayed an opportunistic defense, the heady running of tailback Albert Smith and four Tom Angstadt field goals into a 19-0 rout of previously unbeaten Syracuse Saturday.

The Scarlet Knights recovered five Syracuse fumbles and intercepted two passes in running their record to 2-1 after a narrow loss to Penn State in their opener. The defeat snapped a five-game winning streak — the longest since 1970 — for the Orangemen, 2-1.

Tackle by coach delays scoring jaunt

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — Darrell Coulter, Morgan State's all-time leading passer and now an assistant coach for the Golden Bears, couldn't bear to watch tailback Greg Morrison dash along the Morgan State sideline untouched with Connecticut leading 35-7 late in the fourth period Saturday.

The 1983 graduate stepped in from the sideline at about the 40-yard line and tackled Morrison.

Referee Donald Kober credited the freshman with a 71-yard scoring run. It was the first play that Morrison, a walk-on who doesn't travel with the team, had ever run from scrimmage. The referee also ejected Coulter from the game.

"I said to him 'What happened?' and he just shook his head. It was just instinct, I guess," said Morgan State coach James Phillips after Connecticut beat the Golden Bears 41-14.

Morgan State sports information director John Lanier said, "He was just overcome by frustration. He's a young guy and he's still really playing football."

Coulter, who was visibly upset, declined comment after the game.

Utes, Beavers, Bengals triumph

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah spotted Air Force 17 first-quarter points before quarterback Mark Stevens led the Utes to a 28-17 victory in Western Athletic Conference football action Saturday night.

Stevens rushed for 74 yards and two touchdowns and completed nine of 15 passes for 114 yards to lead Utah, now 1-0 in conference play and 2-2 overall.

Oregon State 41, Wyoming 14

CORVALLIS, Ore. — Quarterback Ricky Greene threw for one touchdown, ran for another and directed a potent Oregon State offense on repeated scoring drives Saturday night as the Beavers rolled to a surprisingly easy 41-14 football victory over Wyoming.

Saturday Night

Donald Beavers, the aptly-named Oregon State running back, scored twice including a school-record 83-yard punt return late in the fourth quarter.

LSU 27, Arizona 26

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Louisiana State outlasted Arizona and the talented toe of Max Zendejas to defeat the Wildcats 27-26 Saturday night quarterback Jeff Wickersham passing for 178 yards and a touchdown and Dalton Hillard running for 138 yards and another score.

Zendejas, a junior, kicked four field goals, including one for 50 yards and another for 49.

Sam Houston, SFA, Austin post victories

WEATHERFORD, Okla. (AP) — D.D. Jones scored three touchdowns Saturday night to led Sam Houston State to a 44-6 win over Southwestern Oklahoma.

Jones, helping improve Sam Houston's record to 2-0, scored on runs of four, three and one yards to hand the Bulldogs their third loss of the season.

NWL 26, ACU 7

NATCHITOCHES, La. - Quarterback Rob Fabrizio ran for two touchdowns and threw for another Saturday night in leading previously winless Northwestern Louisiana to a time-consuming, 26-7 college football victory over Abilene Christian.

Elliott Dawson, Chris Chenier and John Stephens also combined for 286 of Northwestern State's 354 net rushing yards as both teams left the field at 1-2.

Fabrizio ran one yard for a touchdown before halftime, passed nine yards to David Gorman for another and ran 11 yards for his other scoring play in a 13-point third quarter. He finished with five completions on 12 pass attempts and one interception.

S.F. Austin 17, Texas A&I 0

NACOGDOCHES— Quarterback Todd Whitten passed for one touchdown and ran for another as Stephen F. Austin dumped Texas A&I 17-0 in a nonconference game Saturday night.

The victory moves SFA's overall record to 3-1 while Texas A&I's record falls to 0-3.

Whitten opened the scoring late in the first quarter, connecting with end Floyd Dixon on a 39-yard touchdown pass. Rick Wilson kicked the extra point.

Whitten scored on a one-yard run midway through the second quarter and Wilson added the extra point.

The touchdown was setup when Texas A&I quarterback Robbie Dueitt fumbled the pitch to James Mayberry and SFA's Kevin Jackson recovered the ball at the one-yard line.

After a scoreless third quarter, Wilson connected on a 24-yard field goal with 5:38 remaining in the game to make the final score 17-0.

Austin College 20, Trinity 7

SHERMAN — Todd Elliott threw a 55-yard touchdown pass to Joaquin Johnson, and Jeff Timmons kicked field goals of 40 and 47 yards to lead Austin College to a 20-7 victory Saturday over Trinity.

An interception by Jim Foehlich gave Trinity the ball at Austin's 32 in the first quarter, setting up Greg Caffey's 26-yard pass to Mike Blake for a 7-0 lead.

But Timmons connected on his first field goal, and John Henderson scored on a 12-yard run to give Austin College a 10-7 halftime edge.

Lutheran 23, McMurry 0

SEGUIN — Three field goals in the second half by Justo Gonzalez lifted Texas Lutheran to a 23-0 victory over McMurry College Saturday night.

The Bulldogs, 2-0-1, with the top-ranked defense in NAIA Division I, held the Indians, 1-3, scoreless for Lutheran's second shutout of the season.

Lutheran opened its scoring barrage in the first quarter with an 86-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Jimmy Wallace to flanker Jeff Engeling. In the second half, Gonzalez hit field goals of 22, 28 and 22 yards.

Fullback Trent Faith scored on a 3-yard run in the third quarter for the Bulldogs other touchdown.

Central 24, HPC 6

EDMOND, Okla. — Using a well-balanced attack, fourth-ranked Central State University defeated Howard Payne, 24-6 in NAIA football Saturday night.

The Bronchos rolled up 368 yards of total offense with 234 rushing and 134 through the air. HPU had 235 yards in total offense, only 58 of that coming on the ground.

Central State jumped out to a 10-0 lead on its first two possessions.

McNeese 24, WTSU 7

CANYON— Simon Jordan rushed for 102 yards and a touchdown to lead undefeated McNeese State to a 24-7 win over West Texas State Saturday night.

With less than a minute in the first quarter, McNeese quarterback Don Richards scored on a 3-yard run, capping a 94-yard, eight-play drive highlighted by a 47-yard pass completion from Richards to Arthur Alexander.

Mets keep slim lag hopes alive

From Wire Reports

NEW YORK — Wally Backman's sac fly broke a tie and Keith Hernandez' rbi double in the seventh gave New York a 4-2 win over Montreal as the Mets moved to within six games of first in the National League East.

Danny Heep, pinch-hitting for Junior Ortiz, opened the seventh with a walk and gave way to pinch-runner Jose Oquendo. Ron Hodges, pinch-hitting for winning pitcher Tom Gorman, 6-0, singled to left, sending Oquendo to third. Backman, celebrating his 25th birthday, then lofted a sacrifice fly to center, scoring Oquendo.

Giants 8, Dodgers 7

SAN FRANCISCO — Pinch-hitter Dusty Baker hit a two-run triple and Dan Gladden drove in two runs with a pair of bunt singles, leading the San Francisco Giants to an 8-7 victory Saturday over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

A two-run single by pinch-hitter R.J. Reynolds was the key hit as the Dodgers took a 6-4 lead with four runs in the sixth inning. But the Giants stormed back with four in the bottom half in a rally that featured Baker's triple and Gladden's second successful bunt.

National League

Pirates 2, Phillies 1

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pinch-hitter Lee Mazzilli's single scored Jim Morrison from second base and gave the Pittsburgh Pirates a 2-1, 12-inning victory over the Philadelphia Phillies Saturday night.

With one out in the 12th, Morrison struck out but reached first on a wild pitch by Larry Andersen, 3-5. Doug Frobel walked and Mazzilli, batting for Ron Wotus, singled off the glove of first baseman Al Oliver, allowing Morrison to score.

Don Robinson, 5-6, earned the victory with 3 2-3 innings of two-hit relief.

Lebanon's test

In the wake of this week's bombing of a U.S. Embassy in Lebanon — the third terrorist bombing of a U.S. Embassy in that country in the past 17 months — any American would be forgiven an inclination to call it quits, close shop and bow out, fast!

Three embassy bombings in a year and a half and the loss of hundreds of American lives are simply too much to write off in the name of diplomatic relations with any nation. At some point, the idea begins to sink in that those fanatical Moslems do not want us or any semblance of our country there. The understandable response to such a realization is to oblige them at the first opportunity.

President Reagan, though, isn't inclined to go along with a move to tuck tail and run for cover. That disinclination also is understandable because it is ingrained in the American spirit. Americans are not quitters or cowards; that's not our nature.

On reflection, the president probably is wise to hold fast in Lebanon. The very fact that U.S. Embassies are located in that hotbed of turmoil is evidence that there is a need for Americans to be in that country. An embassy serves numerous purposes — diplomatic communications with the host country, providing services for Americans who may be in the host country working or visiting, providing imformational services for those in the host country who request them and many others. Closing down an embassy is no simple one, two, three process only influencing the lives of embassy personnel.

But it is more than obvious after 17 months and three terrorist bombings in Lebanon that ample security for embassy personnel is not being provided. If that security is not forthcoming, the continued loss of American lives is predictable and to not withdraw embassy personnel would constitute a foolhardy decision.

In that context the obvious course for the United States is to demand that the Lebanese government increase significantly the number of troops guarding embassy property and to ensure as far as possible the safety of embassy personnel.

Some will correctly argue that there's only so much that can be done to ensure one's safety against self-sacrificing suicide bombers. That's true, but what can be done must be done if the embassy is to remain open.

Embassy service must not be allowed to be turned into a suicide mission for Americans — and in Lebanon that's what it's quickly becoming.

Fewer teacher strikes

A bright bit of news on the nation's education front is that the number of strikes by school teachers is on the decline. Time was when teachers by the thousands played hookey, especially at the start of the year when it hurt more pupils the most. The downward trend began in the late 1970s and continued in the 1980s. If the present pattern is extended, 1984 could see one of the lowest instances of teacher strikes in years.

Strikes by public servants always have provoked controversy. One of the most celebrated outcries came from the lips of Calvin Coolidge, who when governor of Massachusetts objected to a Boston police strike with these words:

"There is no right to strike against the public safety by anybody, anywhere, at any time." True, teachers are not police, and any equation between the lots of the two probably will not be entirely fair.

For years teachers have claimed they needed salary increases and additional fringe benefits. In recent times, we've seen how some of those claims were justified. But that certainly should not be construed as an open gate for teacher strikes because, as history has shown, in most instances strikes by public servants are counterproductive.

Attention is now being focused on public education and that's a much better method of improving the entire system, including salary adjustments where needed.

Hard times predicted for banks

WASHINGTON — The banking crisis is developing into the most important story of 1984. The commercial banking industry has been battered by a wave of bank failures, an international debt crisis of alarming dimensions and general turmoil arising from deregulation of financial institutions.

Jack Anderson

Federal and private banking officials warn that the country can look for larger and more complex bank failures in the future. What makes this particularly ominous is that the number of problem institutions is already above historic levels.

A disturbing 700 banks — nearly 5 percent of the nation's banks — are on the government's list of "problem institutions" and the privately predicted collapse of 75 banks by the end of the year would be the highest number in more than 50 years.

In other words, banks are failing in greater numbers than at any time since the depths of the Great Depression. But it's the weak sisters that are falling by the wayside. As government sources pointed out to my associate Michael Binstein, most banks that are failing deserve to go under because of reckless loan practices and mismanagement that sometimes borders on corruption.

It's rare that a competently managed bank goes belly-up, even in the worst of times, so the banking system as a whole could emerge healthier if the troubled banks are eliminated. An internal government report predicts that "progressive, well-managed institutions will become more efficient and serve the public with a wider range of financial services."

This would mean a concentration of the banking industry into larger banks. "The size and complexity of the average bank will increase while the number of banks will begin to decline," predicts the internal analysis. "Concentrations of financial power will increase as more banks form or join holding companies."

The big banks that stay afloat won't necessarily rake in bigger profits. Partial deregulation has crippled the banks. Federal limits have been removed on the interest rates that the banks pay depositors, thus forcing the banks into unseemly competition for the depositors' dollars and depriving the banks of their chief means of making risk-free profits.

At the same time, the banks are still forbidden to expand into other financial services such as real estate, insurance and securities underwriting. Yet their competitors in these fields are allowed to invade the banks' once-exclusive territory.

The banking industry's efforts to achieve full deregulation, meanwhile, have run head-on into the insurance industry, which doesn't want banks to break into the insurance business. The result has been a standoff that has blocked the banks' expansion hopes while permitting the insurance industry to move into banking on a big scale.

This has made the whole system trickier to regulate. Federal officials fear that state insurance regulatory agencies are too diverse, under-financed and incompetent to spot trouble in one of these financial behemoths in time to do anything constructive about it.

By the same token, the Federal Reserve Board, which has authority over bank holding companies, is considered too unfamiliar with insurance companies to handle the new conglomerates effectively. So, belatedly, federal officials have begun planning for a crisis they feel is sure to come some day.

According to one possible scenario that worries the government experts, an ailing insurance company might try to milk funds from a healthy bank in the same holding company. The fear is that by the time the hanky-panky was discovered by the Federal Reserve Board or the state insurance agencies, it would be too late to save either the insurance company or the bank.

One confidential government report I've seen lays out the basic problems: (1) "Bank regulatory authorities ... do not have the necessary expertise to assess an insurance operation." (2) "Supervisory and regulatory problems and complications would increase sharply because of overlapping jurisdictional authority." (3) "Current insurance company disclosures are inadequate for public, market and regulatory review purposes."

A large bank failure could occur despite the federal government's assurance that it would never let this happen. One internal government document concedes that one of the big boys could collapse and that this is, in fact, a "major concern." Contingency plans are being drawn up to make sure such a failure doesn't set off a chain reaction throughout the industry — the officials' worst nightmare.

The most likely cause would be the foreign loan situation. By refusing to recognize that U.S. banks have made shockingly unwise loans to foreign countries, the bankers have been giving their shareholders tours of a financial fantasy land.

Rather than admit these loans are shaky (to put it mildly), bank executives insist on listing their foreign loans on the books at 100 cents on the dollar. This makes the quarterly reports look good, but it could lead to panic and disaster in the long run.

Sources tell me an inter-agency government group is preparing proposals that would force the banks to devalue their foreign loans to a more realistic level. This would cause an initial skid in the price of bank stocks, but it could prevent a catastrophe down the line.

NJ ruling 'crashed' parties

A recent state supreme court ruling in New Jersey has been making life very difficult for people who are giving parties. The court ruled that the party givers could be held responsible if one of their guests left the premises in an inebriated state and hurt someone in an accident.

Art Buchwald

The burden on the host and hostess is more than most Jersey residents can stand.

I attended the 25th wedding anniversary of the Richard Faheys in their home in East Orange, N.J., last weekend.

There were mountains of delicious food, an anniversary cake, and a bar off in the corner.

"Well, Fahey," I said, "this is really a great occasion. I think I'll have a drink."

He looked at me sharply. "How many have you had already?"

"Just one," I said.

He took out his notebook and wrote something in it.

"What are you doing?"

"I'm keeping track of all the guests. Your limit is three," he replied.

"Why three?"

"We checked out all our guests before the party. Reports from Washington indicate three drinks are all you can handle."

"But I'm not driving. I came with Mike Clark."

Fahey looked in his book. "I'm glad you told me. Clark is only good for four glasses of wine before he goes blotto. Excuse me. I just saw Dale Denton over there take his second glass of champagne. What kind of party does he think we're throwing?"

I walked over to Jonah Shacknai. "How's it going?" I asked him.

"Okay, I'm leaving."

"So early? We haven't had dinner yet."

"I had two Scotch and waters and Fahey told the bartender to cut me off. I don't intend to suck ice cubes for the rest of the night."

"It must be tough going to a party in New Jersey," I said.

"We had better ones before the state supreme court ruling. You see that beautiful girl over there. I'm told she goes crazy when she has five vodka tonics."

"Well, you're a bachelor. Why don't you get to know her?"

"Fahey won't let her have more than three, so I'd just be wasting my time."

Mrs. Fahey came by. "Is everyone having a good time?"

"Sort of," I said.

She looked in her notebook and then said, "Can I freshen your drink?"

"I'd rather wait for my last one after dinner," I said.

"That's a good idea. There is no reason to peak too early."

I happened to pass the bar and found Fahey in an agitated state. He was checking all the bottles.

"What's going on?" I asked him.

"My bar inventory doesn't jibe with my records. People have been lying to me on how many drinks they've consumed."

"Relax, Fahey. It's your 25th anniversary."

"That's easy for you to say. You don't have to worry about being sued."

Finally dinner was served. Instead of wine we toasted the happy couple with Perrier. I took my final drink for the road and got my coat to leave. In the hallway I noted several guests sitting in a row of chairs.

"What are they waiting for?" I asked Fahey.

He said in disgust, "They couldn't pass the breathalizer tests so they're going to have to sit there all night."

Another View:

Federal pay survey

Ask the average worker if he's underpaid and if he deserves a raise and the odds are you'll get a "yes" to both questions. It's not a matter of greed, but of human nature. Nobody appreciates us more than ourselves.

For many years, however, federal employees have had an obsession about being underpaid and they claim to have proof in an annual survey comparing private and federal sector white-collar pay. That survey this year found an 18.28 percent "pay gap," with federal workers on the losing side.

There are a lot of problems with that survey, not the least of them being that it is conducted by federal workers themselves. That in-house bias aside, the survey is decidedly skewed.

Its pay sampling does not include employees of state and local government, a group that would appear most similar in makeup; it does not include employees of firms with fewer than 250 employees, the kind of small businesses that account for an estimated 90 percent of all private-sector workers, and it does not include employees of non-profit organizations.

It does include workers in larger businesses and industries, that part of the economy that traditionally pays the highest wages and salaries. In fact, one-third of sampled private-sector employees work for firms employing more than 2,500 people.

Even on the surface, the survey is unrepresentative of the American working force.

The president's "Pay Agent," a group of advisers on pay for federal white-collar workers, says the 18.28 percent pay gap is unrealistic at best. Echoing recommendations of a Cabinet council study earlier in the year, the advisers recently urged that changes be instituted over the next two years to make the survey more inclusive and more representative.

In essence, the group wants the survey system restructured and the bias toward high-pay private-sector jobs removed.

When that is done, and the survey becomes a creditable straightforward comparison, the public will be sympathetic toward reasonable raises for federal workers. As things stand now, the cynicism that greets the annual survey is entirely warranted.

Reagan can be nation's 'singer'

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's re-election campaign is stepping so high, wide and plentiful that the mind reels off into paradoxes, including these two: Reagan is soaring because he has restored trust in that which he distrusts — government. And he is exactly in tune with the mood of the moment, which is liberal.

George F. Will

One must take the bitter with the sweet, but it must be bitter indeed for Reagan to note that fate has played him the scurvy trick of causing him, the scourge of government, to rehabilitate it. The ugly truth must be faced: When folks feel good about their country, some of the feeling spills over and attaches to the institutions of community life, the expression of collective effort — the government. There are 80,000 governmental units in this Republic, but one sets the tone — the one Reagan has. And — "drats!" he may say — contentment with the presidency is spreading and contaminating all of public life.

It was especially reckless of him to reduce inflation. In the last decade inflation became considered the principal domestic problem, and government was considered the principal cause of inflation. Inflation was the main reason why, just two years ago, three-quarters of those questioned in one reliable poll said government causes more problems than it solves. The taming of inflation, for now, has removed the irritant in the public's eye regarding government.

The public's liberalism, and Reagan's benefit from it, is less apparent but even more important, and explains why the Rev. Jerry Falwell's favorite candidate is overwhelmingly the favorite candidate of voters aged 18-26. Eighty years ago, Henry James defined journalism as the science of beating the sense out of words. It certainly has done so to political labels. But it is no mere semantic quibble to insist that the essential aim of liberalism, and the central liberal value, is the maximization of individual choice. And that is the feeling — the aura — produced by the President's achievement, rapid economic growth.

The illiberal aspects of the President's program — opposition to abortion, and perhaps support for school prayer — have received attention disproportionate to their importance to the electorate. The Supreme Court, not the executive branch, has for the foreseeable future, custody of issues concerning abortion and church-state relations. With five justices in their late seventies, a President can make a profound difference on the Court, but that is a contingency too remote to be controlling on the minds of many voters.

The conservative temperament is, at bottom, incorrigibly skeptical of the ability of human plans to eliminate the rattling bumps from the road of life. But Reagan is infectiously serene about the evaporation of deficits and all other limiting facts, painlessly, under the heat of economic growth. This, because he seems easily to imagine that business cycles have been banished.

Recently Reagan told an audience that Americans should avoid "hedonism." It was an enchanting moment, involving a word not usually featured in American politics. Arguably Reagan, by denouncing the incontinent pursuit of pleasure, was striking at the American Way of Life. Certainly Reagan coming on as Cotton Mather is singularly unconvincing. He is our President Monroe — the man for the era of good feelings.

But he also should be a man of some public thinking. He should soon pick a serious forum for a serious speech about the future — not another speech celebrating optimism or God or Grand Ole Opry or the last four years. So far his campaign has set a tone, which is fine, but a tone is not a song and he can be, more than anyone in modern memory, the nation's singer — the presenter of a vision. However, he must do it now.

When he becomes a four-year lame duck, he will have only the momentum built in the next six weeks. If his mandate is merely to not be Mondale, his term will be sterile. Twenty-two Republican senators face re-election in 1986. His party will be fractious and distracted. If he just coasts to victory, as he perhaps can if he chooses to, he will lack the weight to hold his party's attention. So an October campaign of more rhetorical risk would be an act of grace — an unforced policy of statesmanship.

'Stop, smell the roses...'

Modisett

I can remember while I was a youngster hearing my parents talk about the lessons of life.

Back then I didn't fully appreciate what it was they were saying. I figured they were talking about some deep, dark secrets that would be mysteriously revealed to me someday.

Even now, I think I only appreciate a little of what they meant. But it's becoming more clear — with time.

That's because time (and human experience) has an interesting way of changing the appearance of everything. When a man or woman is 20 years old they may see occurrences in a completely different light than when they are 30 or 40 or 80.

But those lessons can sneak up on you in the strangest places, usually when you're least expecting them. Politics is only one of the "great dividers" of mankind. It has the peculiar ability of turning mountains into molehills when it comes to interpersonal relationships. That ability proves troublesome because my political beliefs aren't the same as those of my father. Lord, I don't even agree with the philosophy I was espousing 10 years ago anymore. I say I've seen the light; Dad says I've gone to the dogs. Oh well, so much for interpersonal relationships.

The problem is that people are continually in a state of change; we aren't the same people we were last year because our experiences have opened new doors to us. We have changed. Some would say we have "grown." I think that's probably as good an explanation as any.

We all are the sum totals of our personal experiences. We experience change, we learn and, in turn, we attempt to teach. Sometimes we're successful and sometimes we merely create hard feelings.

That's too bad. Because one of those elusive yet unforgettable "lessons of life" is that life is short and we do not have time to stand around arguing; we've got to be on with the order of the day which is living life to the fullest.

Singer Mac Davis put that lesson of life to music when he sang, "You've got to stop and smell the roses; you've got to count your many blessings everyday..." His song embodied an even greater truth: Keep life in the proper perspective. That's easy to forget in this hectic world of ours when we're constantly told we have to do this or believe that or accept that particular philosophy or we'll risk being out of step with the times.

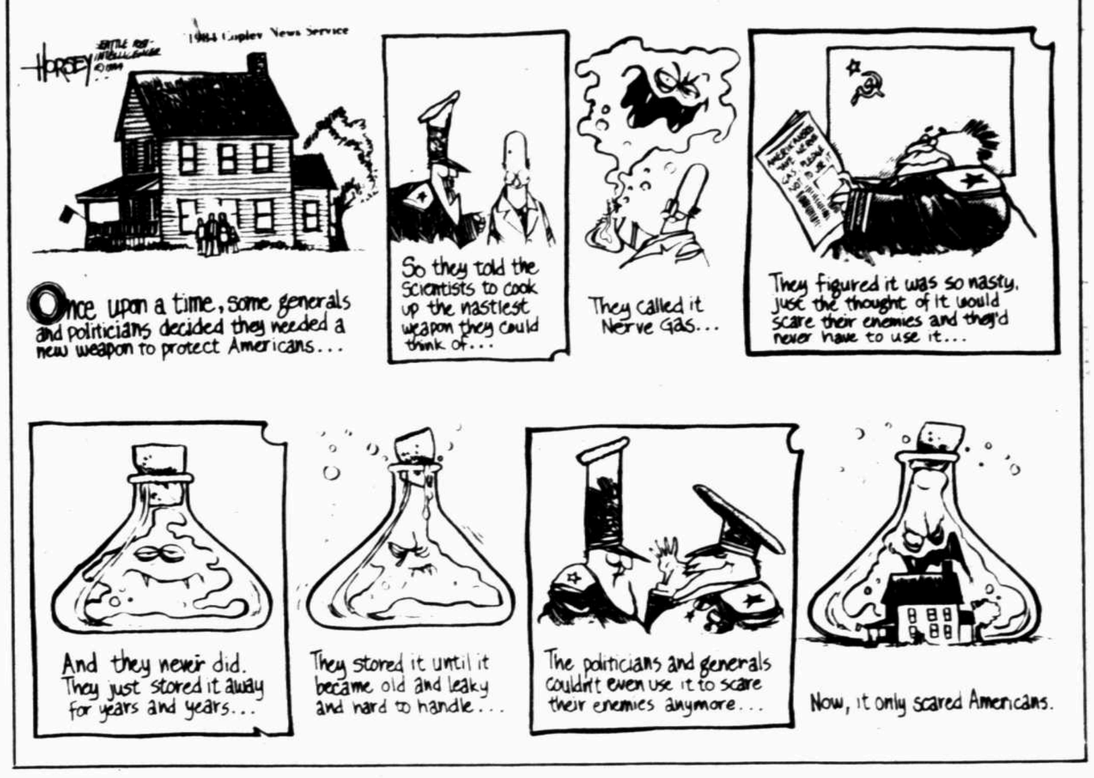

Oh my God! How could we do that! Want to know a secret? It doesn't matter much. Not really. Life isn't really going to change much regardless what people tell you. You simply get out of life what you put into it.

Just stop to smell the roses as often and for as long as you can. If you do, you'll at least enjoy your time on this world.

Take time to enjoy the sunset; there's another sunrise tomorrow and it is the start of another day.

SPEAKING OUT

VIPS gives parents very important place

By SANDY MOORE

Sandy Moore moved to Midland 12 years ago from Houston. She is citywide chairman of Volunteers in Public Schools (VIPS).

Education has been front-page news in Midland in recent months. The State Legislature has mandated reforms that have resulted in many changes in public education. Regardless of how you may feel about the results of these changes, the evaluation process has been beneficial. It has forced Midlanders to look critically at the schools their children attend and to evaluate the education they are receiving. In Midland, parents have discovered that there is a great deal that is right with our schools. Quality education is alive and well in Midland.

One reason for the high quality of education in Midland is the support and involvement given the schools by parents of students and by the community as a whole. Support is an attitude. It implies concern. In Midland it has been expressed by a willingness to pass bond issues when necessary. It is expressed by the fact that last year there were 11,000 PTA members in Midland. Support is expressed in conversation when we tell each other the many good things that happen in our children's schools every day.

As important as support is, involvement by parents and the community is vital. Involvement is activity. Involvement requires that an individual become part of the education process. Midland's children are fortunate that an organization exists whose sole purpose is to involve caring adults in the Midland public schools. That organization is Volunteer in Public Schools or VIPS.

VIPS was organized eight years ago as a project of Midland City Council PTA and has the enthusiastic support of the MISD administration and Board of Trustees. Midland's VIPS program has been recognized throughout Texas as an outstanding school volunteer program. VIPS is composed of a diverse group of people who have two things in common — they support the efforts of MISD to provide quality education for the children of Midland and they are willing to become involved in the educational process. VIPS are working or non-working parents. They are mothers or fathers. VIPS are senior citizens or college students. They are grandparents or adults who have no children. Anyone who has a sincere desire to improve the quality of education in Midland by caring about children is welcome to become a volunteer by contacting any public school.

VIPS do anything and everything except teach. They assist teachers and staff with clerical work as well as work in classrooms under the direction of a teacher. They chaperone field trips and assist with special activities. VIPS offers several specialized programs which are always in need of additional volunteers. PARTNERS-IN-READING provides reading enrichment for a child who is reading below grade level. VIPS STORYTELLING TROUPE trains volunteers to share stories, poems and songs with children in either large or small groups. SHARE published a directory of adults in the community who are willing to share information about their occupations or hobbies with a class.

Everyone who volunteers in one of Midland's schools has their own reason for doing so. Perhaps the most important reason is that VIPS demonstrates to our children that, as adults, we feel education is so important that we are willing to volunteer our time and energy to insure the best schools possible for Midland's children. As one volunteer expressed it, "Every time I enter a classroom, I help a child and that's well worth volunteering for."

Midlanders have traditionally been supportive of their schools. Please take that extra step. Please make the commitment to become involved. Join VIPS.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Teachers can make learning come alive

The Midland Independent School District is blessed with some really great teachers, many of whom I am privileged to know. I have reached the age where I should like to give them a little advice.

I was reared by the Sisters of St. Mary of Namur, Belgium, in Fort Worth and my three degrees came from TCU. The convent specialized in great teachers but my English professors at TCU were giants. Dr. Rebecca Smith called the great William Shakespeare "Willie." She made him come alive for us. In the convent we memorized reams of poetry, much of which I can still quote. When Dr. Smith informed the class that Wordsworth had an illegitimate daughter, the author of "I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud" sprang into a new perspective.

So here goes: Make truth above all your goal. The giants of literature can speak for themselves. Get students' attention! Teach the children that this a republic, not a democracy, and teach them the difference. Your job is to educate. You have an uphill struggle but you are up to it. Make learning fun. Teach them the words of "The Battle Hymn of The Republic." "He died to make men holy, let us die to make them free. His truth is marching on."

Teach our children to think so that they can sift through all the drivel being thrown at them by the media — that's their job. The ultimate decision must be theirs. They will take over this great country one day. Equip them. But they must be taught. It's an exciting world and still a young one. And it should belong to people who grasp the splendor of God's universe. If you can do this you will receive your reward in heaven for instructing his sheep.

With, without house, let's save museum

This is not a Save-The-Lancaster-House letter. I think that subject has certainly been discussed in letters in this column. But the subject of this letter does directly deal with the Lancaster controversy.

In working with the Museum of the Southwest through these past few months and especially the last few weeks with Septemberfest, I have heard many comments such as "This is the last donation I will make to the museum" or "I will certainly not join the museum this year!" I urge those people to reconsider their attitudes. Who exactly will they be punishing? Who benefits from the services that are offered by the museum?

The major loser will be the school children and people of Midland. What a pity if the museum were no longer able to bring exhibits of educational value, like Aspects of Color from the Smithsonian's Hirschorn Museum that was here last year. What a loss to all of us, young and old, if exhibits such as the fabulous Anschutz Western Collection, currently showing, were not brought to Midland because of lack of museum funds. The threat of withdrawn support could deprive Midlanders and their children of these advantages.

As the president of Las Manos, I have had access to all of the financial statements and reports of the museum this year. In the years I have worked with the museum, I believe this year the best fiscal procedures and highest level of fiscal responsibility have been implemented. The museum depends entirely on memberships, donations from private individuals and corporations, and grants from foundations.

Regardless of Lancaster House's fate, the Museum of the Southwest deserves our support. I, for one, want my children to enjoy the privileges it has to offer. A poorer museum will make a poorer Midland.

Smith 'not selective' about enforcing law

I read with absolute amazement a letter that you published on Sunday, July 15, from Dewey Lee. He stated that he served as a deputy prior to Dallas Smith being elected sheriff and that during that time no organized crime existed in Midland.

During some of that period of time I was a driver and manager of the Airport Limousine Service, and on several occasions I was called to take the "circuit girls" to the airport, pick up the new girls and bring them back to town. I can't believe that Lee would not know that "circuit girls" are controlled by organized crime, so I must assume that during his tenure as deputy Lee just failed to hear about this prostitution ring.

Perhaps Lee also failed to hear that there was open gambling at a local nightclub prior to Dallas Smith being elected sheriff.

Smith, true to his word, stopped the prostitution ring and the nightclub gambling shortly after he was elected sheriff. I might add that both operations were located inside city limits.

If you are against organized crime and against open illegal gambling in Midland, you should support Smith for sheriff as a write-in candidate.

Smith does not believe in selective law enforcement. He believes the law applies equally to everyone including policemen, the rich, the poor and all races. He was not intimidated by the presence of organized crime — he put them out of business in Midland.

Smith has been a truly great sheriff. Let's re-elect Dallas Smith as our sheriff.

Let's all give White our five-cents worth

According to the August 1984 issue of Permian Basin Petroleum Association "Information" publication, it appears that West Texas Rep. Tom Craddick, along with other members of the Texas Legislature, have stated that our Texas Highway Department will receive no additional money from the 5-cent-per-gallon gasoline tax increase for our Texas state roads and highways.

I am in agreement with the more than 90 percent of the people who did not intend for our "sovereign" governor to put that 5 cents per gallon into the General Fund. The people of Texas who buy gasoline should each and everyone write Mark White a personal letter (handwritten or otherwise) telling him exactly how they feel about this matter and demand a written reply from "the man who did it." Such letter would be addressed to Mark White, Governor's Office, State Capitol Building, Austin, 78711.

For Christians, role in government clear

In recent days, a lot of people have been talking about separation of church and state. That is not what the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States says. It states "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," nor did the founding fathers intend that God be excluded from any aspect of our lives. Most of them were Christians.

All they were trying to do was protect people from a state-sponsored church like the Church of England, and the danger of someone trying to keep people from worshipping as they believe they should. If anything the current court rulings and some laws are now violating this amendment.

Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale has stated that politics is no place for religion. However, I submit that if we ignore the precedent set by the founding fathers of including God in all government decisions this nation is in big trouble. True followers of Jesus Christ have no choice in this. We are commanded by Him to be "the salt of the earth" and "a light to the world," wherever we are or whatever we do. God speaking through Paul in the 12th chapter of Romans also tells us to take part in our country and to support it and be good citizens. According to God's word, the Bible, our Judeo-Christian ideas and beliefs are the only hope for the world and cannot be set aside.

I therefore urge all citizens who can to register and vote, especially Christians and conservatives. It is my hope that these people not only show Mondale but all liberal candidates that the majority of this nation believe in the conservative Judeo-Christian ethics and morality. Let us be heard from one end of this nation to the other. I am, however, not advocating support for any one person or party. I do not care what party a person belongs to, if he does not represent decency, morality and a tolerance for religious worship, then I oppose him. What I am asking is that you pray for God's guidance and vote according to His direction.

I am also asking those who agree with me to write me. One voice can be ignored, but hundreds and thousands cannot be ignored. I am not asking for donations, just the use of name of people who agree with me on letters expressing our views to the leaders of this nation urging them to support decency, morality and the Judeo-Christian ideas that made this country great. Add your voice to mine, by writing to: A Voice Crying in the Wilderness, 2 Landan Lane, Midland, 79701.

What offends me is professor's firing

I am writing in response to the "Dismissal of MC Professor" article which appeared in the paper Sunday, Sept. 16. I was a student in Dr. Jay Martin's Economic I & II classes during the Spring and Summer sessions, 1983. I am also the mother of a high school senior who will be attending Midland College next year.

I am very upset that Dr. Martin has been fired. I thoroughly enjoyed his classes and I was never offended by any of his language. He made economics fun and interesting. He showed enthusiasm for his work. I don't want our local community college to lose a high quality academic teacher like Dr. Martin.

I hope the board of trustees will realize that firing is much too severe and re-instate Dr. Martin.

'Fighting Fritz,' Ferraro still fueling Reagan's steamroller

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — The presidential race, forseen just last summer as a close contest, is turning into a rout with President Reagan far ahead of Democratic aspirant Walter (Fritz) Mondale who keeps losing ground steadily. I'm not grieving for the former vice president yet I find it strange at this early date that many Democratic congressional candidates are desperately trying to keep their distance from him.

National polls keep showing President Reagan running strong in all regions of the nation, including areas where Mondale supposedly once had a strong backing. It seems that's all turned to mush as the president's strategists have him campaigning hard in what was once regarded as "Mondale country." The president simply isn't leaving anything to chance and complacency is furthest from his mind.

Mondale, who infuriated rank-and-file supporters by first appointing as campaign chairman Bert Lance, crony of ex-President Jimmy Carter, and then dumping him within 48 hours of the uproar, sought a master stroke. Carter's vice president thought he had one by appointing a woman, Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, of Queens, N.Y., as his running mate. That turned out to be a very short-lived gain for him.

Mrs. Ferraro and her husband, John Zaccaro, were soon in national hot water for complex finances with lots of questions still unanswered. Her husband has been questioned and written about for some strange associations that are no-no's in public life.

Ms. Ferraro — she goes by her maiden name — obviously didn't bargain for all this public scrutiny of her finances and she also faces an ethics inquiry by a House committee as well as a separate lawsuit by a private Washington legal organization demanding to know the whys and wherefores of how her husband lent the money for an early congressional race. Everywhere Ms. Ferraro campaigns the money jam in which she and her husband find themselves seems to surface.

After only a brief bout of the same treatment in Philadelphia, Ms. Ferraro thought that she could address herself to her interpretation of the issues. She began and stopped abruptly, saying that public admiration of President Reagan as a leader upset her.

"Frankly, I take a look at those polls and go slightly berserk when I see that people think that Reagan is a leader," declared Ms. Ferraro tersely.

"Those polls" to which Ms. Ferraro referred are national in scope and show President Reagan running ahead of the Mondale-Ferraro ticket by 21 to 30 points. He is clearly an odds-on popular figure with many voters who don't agree with some of the administration policies but told pollsters they plan to vote for President Reagan because they perceive Mondale to be a second-rater. Even the Ferraro factor, deemed recently as a boost to Mondale, has the voters going ho-hum today.

Instead it has helped promote President Reagan's running mate, Vice President George Bush. He has drawn bigger-than-normal crowds for any campaigning vice presidential candidate. Polls on the Bush-Ferraro choices now show that the vice president is pulling away strongly from Ferraro on a better than 2-to-1 choice. Ms. Ferraro has been assailed, ironically, by pro-women's groups as a mawkish scold. Her speeches have become plain diatribes.

In a frantic effort to try to pull his presidential act together and thereby close some of the widening gap, Mondale has begun to launch personal attacks on the president. He apparently decided on this tack himself to conform with a new image of "Fighting Fitz." He is taunting President Reagan by accusing him of "arrogance, cynicism and government by a smile button."

Interestingly enough, these are virtually the same labels Democratic critics have assigned to Mondale. Since he revealed his own tax package for reducing the national deficit recently, Mondale also has drawn an inner circle around him more tightly. The Democratic congressmen and senators, those particularly up for re-election, want no part of the Mondale tax program. They regard the package as a certain prescription for crushing defeat. Hence, there are certainly no Mondale coattails. Candidates seeking re-election are generally ignoring Mondale and his programs.

For the first time since the Democratic convention in San Francisco last summer Mondale approved an emergency meeting of senior Democratic advisers past and present the other day to help plot strategy for the upcoming presidential debates. They conferred three hours for what Marianne Means, Washington columnist for the Hearst newspapers, described "in the wake of public opinion polls that show Mondale sinking like a stone." Among the conferees with Mondale was former Democratic party chairman Bob Strauss, a canny political strategist.

President Reagan's image and his national popularity are so high that the advisers apparently suggested that Mondale refrain from personal attacks on the president. A conferee remarked that going after the president would not be credible; indeed it could boomerang. Mondale didn't take the advice and stayed stubborn.

Normally phlegmatic, Mondale also blew up in Los Angeles when he was jeered by students at the University of Southern California. The catcalls started soon after he began attacking President Reagan's foreign policies. Seething with anger, Mondale turned on the hecklers and accused them, in a body, of Watergate-style dirty tricks.

"Donald Segretti is no longer at USC and you shouldn't act like him," a visibly infuriated Mondale told the students, as they shouted "Reagan" and "Four More Years." Mondale was referring to the USC undergraduate recruited by former President Nixon's political agents.

If Mondale can lose his cool with kids, even youngsters of voting age, I hate to think of what the Soviet Union can do with him. That's another chapter in the sagging Mondale story. Sure, he'll talk to Soviet Foreign Commissar Andrei Gromyko in a few days but he'll never be able to come to grips with President Reagan who keeps building on that big lead.

Cowboys-Pack, it's not the same

CBS-TV, 3 p.m.

IRVING (AP) — The Green Bay Packers and Dallas Cowboys, who have met in some National Football classics, tangle Sunday in Texas Stadium with a lot of the drama missing from their rivalry.

Gone are the days of Don Meredith's duels with Bart Starr which produced memorable NFL title games in 1966 and 1967. The Vince Lombardi coached Packers prevailed — barely — on each occasion.

The Packers now have a new coach in Forrest Gregg who once played against the Cowboys. But he also played and coached for them under Dallas Coach Tom Landry in their first Super Bowl season of 1971.

At Green Bay, Gregg replaced Starr, a legend as a player, but less than magical as a coach.

The Packers have not beaten Dallas since 1975 and lost to the Cowboys 31-17 in an August preseason game.

Green Bay is one of three teams who hold an edge on the Cowboys, winning 8 of 12 regular and post-season meetings.

Gregg, a former All-American at Southern Methodist and a native of Birthright, Texas, said he's been too busy rebuilding the Packers to worry about the old Cowboy series.

"I've always had a lot of respect for Tom Landry," Gregg said. "It's always a challenge to play one of his teams."

The Packers are 1-2 and the Cowboys 2-1. Both teams are struggling offensively.

The Packers only compiled 154 yards offense in a 9-7 loss to the Chicago Bears, including 32 yards rushing, the fewest since 1965.

Gregg said,"We haven't played very well. I'm not overjoyed where we are. Our people will have to play better.

"If you don't block you can't expect to do much."

More lawyers hanging hats in Midland

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

For every 261 Midland County residents, there is one lawyer.

Twenty miles up U.S. Highway 80, the ratio rises to one lawyer for every 770 legal laypersons.

Statewide, for every attorney there are about 330 Texans, indicating Midland is more heavily populated and Ector more sparsely with legal counselors than other areas.

There are more than twice as many lawyers in Midland County, according to State Bar of Texas figures, 174 in Ector to Midland County's 372.

Veterans of the area's court systems suggest this difference can be explained by the large number of Midlanders who passed the bar exam, but never have entered the legal profession.

Midland County District Judge Pat Baskin, after paging through his lawyer's directory, estimated more than 100 of the county's 372 have never formally used their degree.

Instead, these law school grads are organizing oil and land deals or clipping coupons earned on their investments, said Baskin.

"There's always people who went to law school who didn't intend to practice law," he said.

Add to this about 150 lawyers licensed in Midland County who practice corporate law, mostly for large oil companies, estimated Baskin, compared to about 15 corporate lawyers in Ector County.

Despite 13 years in private practice in Odessa and 16 years on an Ector County judge's bench, retiring District Judge R.L. McKim plans to open his private practice in Midland, where he can specialize in land title work.

"There have always been that many more (attorneys)," said Ector County District Judge Gene Ater. "There are more lawyers practicing law in Odessa."

"There's not enough profitable criminal business (in Midland) to keep many people alive," suggested Baskin, estimating the number of Midland lawyers hired to do crininal work at about 30.

But more criminal cases were disposed of in Midland County during 1983 — 1,040 here compared to 849 in Ector County. And more jury trials were held last year in Midland County's district courts.

About 400 more criminal cases were pending at the end of 1983 in Ector's district courts than in Midland's. And Ector had about 1,300 more civil cases than Midland County's 2,537 settled last year, according to Texas Judicial Council figures.

"Law school used to be at least as good as a graduate business degree," said Baskin. But the increased popularity of master's in business degrees and stricter standards at law schools have changed this.

"When I went to law school, if you could find it, you could get into it," he said. The stricter standards can be attributed to the surplus of prospective lawyers looking for a law school and the desire of certain schools to uphold their reputations, said Baskin.

With law schools turning out graduates every year, business has not been as profitable for the new graduates, said Ater.

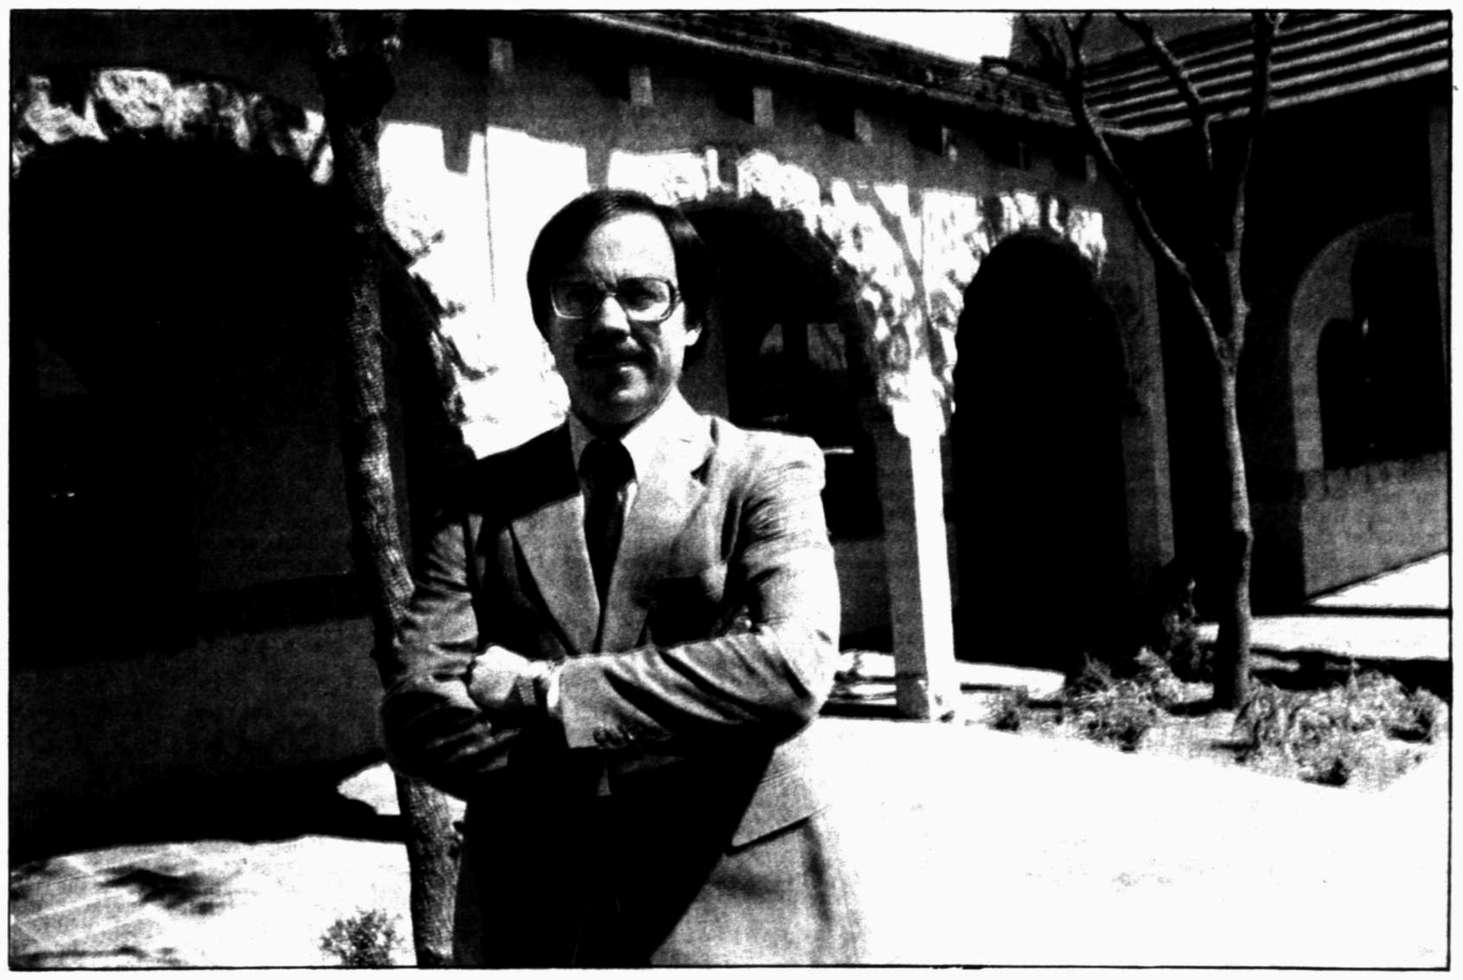

"There are a lot of young lawyers out on the street that probably aren't making more than $25,000, he said.

Of the 372 Midlanders licensed to practice law in the state, 170 are members of the Texas Young Lawyers Association. This organization is for state bar members who are under 36 or who have been licensed three years or less.

As in the overall grouping, less than half as many attorneys in Ector County are TYLA members. Of the 174, 79 who are registered with the state bar are under 36 or have been licensed less than three years.

The most recent survey done by the bar of its members' incomes from legal work determined about 85 percent of Texas lawyers made less than $100,000 annually before 1980. Of this breakdown, 9 percent reported making less than $10,000 and another 61 percent reported making between $10,000 and $75,000 per year after business expenses.

One percent reported making more than $250,000 in a year from their legal work.

Dr. John Bray opened the Allergy Alliance of the Permian Basin this summer to relieve the growing number of patients with cystic fibrosis seeking treatment in the area. The office is open to those who become ill between the monthly CF clinics at the West Texas Cystic Fibrosis Clinic at Odessa's Women and Children's Hospital, where Bray serves as medical director.

Cystic fibrosis care extended

By HALLYE JORDAN

"It's like giving the child the death sentence with no date of execution," said Dr. John Bray.

But victims of cystic fibrosis, the number one genetic killer in the nation, are living longer on the average than they did in the past.

Today, the average age of death is 20, according to Bray.

"There is an increasing number of adults with cystic fibrosis," he said. "Those with CF in their 30s are unusual, in their 40s is rare and past 50 is almost unheard of. Probably, there are only two or three (who are older than 50) that have CF in the whole United States."

CYSTIC FIBROSIS, which observed a time of national awareness last week, is a hereditary condition which affects the respiratory and digestive systems. Characterized by the accumulation of excessively thick mucus and abnormal secretion of sweat and saliva, the disease has no cure.

Inherited as a recessive trait, CF is thought to occur when both parents are carriers. The cause, although undetermined, is thought to be the result of an absence, insufficiency or abnormality of some essential hormone or enzyme.

There are at least 300 major research teams in the nation studying cystic fibrosis, Bray said. The majority of the money is going toward the development of prenatal and carrier diagnoses.

"There's not a whole lot of money going into direct patient care," Bray said. "It's going more to the genetic engineering and I think there are some things on the horizon that look very promising. I think inter-uterine diagnosis will be a reality in the next few years."

UNTIL THEN, however, the thrust will be on increasing public awareness of the disease and helping victims and their families cope.

"Our Kind of Ball," which includes a pro-am tennis tournament and a black-tie auction is scheduled for Oct. 27-28 at Midland Country Club to raise $30,000 for the Midland Cystic Fibrosis Association.

The formal dinner and auction will be Saturday night, with the tennis tournament, featuring local tennis professionals, running from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. A ticket costs $150 per couple and is for both events.

Patient strives for normal life

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Shanna McFarlin's life closely parallels that of her friends. The differences in her daily lifestyle and that of others her age is kept to a minimum.

"I can play with them but I'm not as active as they are," the 12-year-old Odessan said. "Like when we play hide-and-go-seek, they could always catch me when I get tired."

"They're good friends," her mother, Mrs. Newman McFarlin said. "They've been educated along with the family. They know when it's treatment time and that she has to go in and get them (treatments) and they have to wait. And she has to eat more than they do."

The youngster eats six meals plus snacks each day. But she only weighs 45¾ pounds.

At the age of 3, Shanna was diagnosed with cystic fibrosis when she went to the doctor's office for routine booster shots.

The child had the same symptoms as an older sister who died at the age of 6, Mrs. McFarlin said coughing, heavy mucus, foul-smelling stools, clubbing of the fingers and toes and constant hunger.

Victims of the hereditary killer usually suffer from respiratory and digestive problems and excessive salt loss. The thick mucous produced obstructs the airways of the lungs and respiratory system as well as the passageways that carry enzymes produced in the digestive system to the intestine.

The CF patient often has a high concentration of salt in the perspiration because of the disease's effects on the sweat glands. One of the first indications that a child may have cystic fibrosis is a salty taste when the child is kissed.

When Shanna was diagnosed, it was the first time Mrs. McFarlin or her husband had ever heard of the disease.

Before the cystic fibrosis clinic opened at Odessa's Women and Children's Hospital, the McFarlins took Shanna to Dallas every six months, with the trips increasing as she grew older and the disease progressed.

But now, with the exceptions of her lengthy hospital stays, Shanna has been able to lead a more normal life.

She's a little frustrated that her brother, Reece D., her elder by three minutes, skipped past her in school when she was held back because of frequent hospitalizations.

"She's pretty good to hold up her own," her mother said. "But she hates missing school. She's concerned about it."

"I was getting to where I couldn't breathe and they're putting antibiotics in me," Shanna said of her last bad spell which forced her into the hospital last week. "I get real tired but I can't rest because I get so tight (because of mucous blocking her air passageways)."

"When she's real sick, I stay with her," her mom said. "But when she's doing well, she can take care of herself."

The youngster doesn't bat an eye as the names of her many medications spill off her tongue.

Student sees several sides of German life

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

On one hand, the small village of Wittlich in West Germany is a quaint, friendly community. Its townspeople share a common interest in music, culinary skills, education and prosperity.

But on the other hand, there is a constant reminder of turbulent times — the unwanted presence of low flying air force jets and trucks frequently loaded with international peace-keeping military personnel.

Karen Leung of Midland saw both sides of Wittlich during a four-week summer visit sponsored by the American Association of Teachers of German, an international foreign exchange program.

The 17-year-old senior at Lee High School said, "Living with another family exposed me to different family skills and customs.... I had one fantastic, fabulous time which I will never forget."

She said much of the credit goes to her host family. "We shared a major interest in music and together we attended concerts and and even made our own mini-concert.

"Another interest that we shared was a love for nature. My family included me in their frequent 'Wanderungen' (loosely translated as wandering) along the Mosel River or in the woods behind the house. They pointed out the several different wild flowers and the wildlife which made me feel at home," she said.

Karen Leung

According to Miss Leung, the customs of Wittlich are much like they are in America. She noted this and other observations in a diary which she kept during her visit.

Sometimes, only four-letter words fill the blanks

All things considered, it is probably for the best that I am not a professor at Midland College.

Now, don't get me wrong. I don't consider myself some crude, foul-mouthed ex-sailor, but by the same token, an occasional four-letter word has been known to pop from my lips before I had the common decency to stop it.

It is not something I'm particularly proud of, yet I feel an issue of this monumental importance deserves nothing less than straightforward honesty.

And with that, I place my cards on the table. Here goes:

On occasion, rare though it may be, a "damn" or "hell" has been uttered from this corner.

There, I've said it. Fire me if you will. But I simply had to get that off my chest.

And while I don't condone such filthy language I do feel an obligation to point out that on certain occasions "gosh darn it" just won't get the job done.

You want an example? Fine. Consider the following scenario:

You have decided to redecorate your apartment, maybe by adding some cheap paintings to the walls. You guzzle a quick six-pack, grab the hammer and nails and get down to work. Unfortunately, the six-pack takes effect more quickly than you had originally anticipated and instead of hitting the nail, you whack your thumb. It turns a peculiar shade of black and blue.

At that point, you:

A. Mutter to yourself, "Oh, gee whiz, that really hurts."

Or:

B. Cut loose with a couple of profanities that would make the Watergate tapes sound like your basic soundtrack to a Walt Disney movie.

If we're honest with ourselves I feel rather certain a sizeable majority of us would have no choice but to answer "B."

This doesn't mean we approve of life in the gutter, just that under extreme circumstances garbage can, and will, escape from our otherwise squeaky-clean mouths.

Actually, there is more to this controversy than meets the eye, or ear for that matter. To be brutally blunt, some people know how to curse and others don't. There's an art form involved.

For example, my grandmother, bless her heart, has a way of labeling a person a "jackass" that even a Baptist preacher would have a hard time condemning. There is just something about that word coming from the mouth of a sweet little old Southern lady that makes you want to giggle.

On the other hand, pre-teens should be encouraged to master the basic English language before experimenting with more colorful adjectives and adverbs. I know it is terribly unfair, but there is nothing more galling than having some sassy 12-year-old, with cigarette dangling from the mouth, throwing together a series of expletives deleted that would make a redneck construction worker blush.

So young people take my advice. Do your homework and learn the language. Then when you grow up you can use any zxkjsuxrhlzz word you want.

Just be sure and line up another job before you try it.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

DISEASE

Invitations are being sent out but persons wishing to purchase tickets or donate items for the auction may call Nancy White, fundraising chairman, at 687-1993.

In addition, the Pediatric Pulmonary and Critical Care Update is scheduled for Oct. 26-27 at the Holiday Inn-Centre in Odessa, according to Bray.

Sponsored by Odessa's Women and Children's Hospital and the Texas Tech University Health Science Center, the seminar is targeted at physicians, nurses and respiratory therapists who provide care to pediatric patients.

One of the seminar's objectives is to provide information on the changes that have taken place in the management and research of CF. Persons interested in more information may contact Frances Gunkel-Boyles, program coordinator, at 334-8297.

In addition, The West Texas Cystic Fibrosis Clinic at Women and Children's Hospital has been in operation for about 1½ years, serving the 80-85 patients in the Permian Basin. It serves as a satellite clinic with the major clinics situated in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, said Bray, who serves as medical director.

THREE HOURS are blocked off at Women and Children's Hospital once a month for the clinics, he said. The clinics include psychological aspects such as teaching the family about the disease and preparing the patients and family for the patient's demise. Information provided by dieticians, pharmacists and respiratory therapists also is included in the clinics and a clinic nurse who specializes in CF acts as a liaison with the families.

Between the monthly clinics, CF patients who become ill can come to Bray's office where the Allergy Alliance of the Permian Basin was built this summer.

In addition, a group specializing in cystic fibrosis from Dallas Children's Hospital comes to the Permian Basin twice a year for clinics.

The life of a CF patient and his or her family is traumatic, Bray said.

"Many times there is a period of denial," he said. "The average family will take about a year to get over the diagnosis. Then, if the child is doing reasonably well and he's stable, things will float along with some problems occurring when the child goes to school. Children with cystic fibrosis are tied to their mothers more than average kids."

Cystic fibrosis also causes problems when the child hits puberty, Bray said. Most CF patients are smaller and sexually underdeveloped. "They stick out because they cough a lot, and they're sick. When women become pubescent, they become physically worse."

After a patient graduates from high school, the dilemmas become more difficult. "Do I want to try to go to college?" Bray said patients ask. "Is it a (financial) waste if I'm going to die in the next few years?"

The thought of marriage, which most likely would be short, and passing on the recessive gene to children is frightening.

"We can't make things any better for the cystic fibrosis patient," Bray said. "We can only try to keep them from getting worse."

"Sometimes I forget (what medications are supposed to be given at what times,) but Shanna always remembers," Mrs. McFarlin said.

Before medication was available for the disease, Shanna had to limit her diet to high-protein, low-fat foods because her body couldn't absorb the fat properly. Since taking the medicine, however, she can indulge in chocolates and candy with her friends if she still eats high-protein foods.

Despite the daily interruptions for aerosol mist treatments and percussion therapy, Shanna said she missed being home and with her friends at school. But she can cross the hall and wave to them if they stand in the parking lot, and her parents take her out on passes occasionally.

But, noting the basket of crackers and candy on the hospital bedside table, the bouquet of bright balloons, the new doll, and Shanna's obvious popularity with the nurses at Women and Children's, she's made some new buddies.

Texas prison system turns to 'Pro'

By SHARON HERBAUGH
Associated Press Writer

Procunier

HUNTSVILLE, Texas — When Utah's state prison was rocked by a riot in 1956, officials summoned Raymond K. Procunier to clean up the mess.

After a series of mysterious deaths came under scrutiny in California's state mental hospital system in 1977, the governor asked Procunier to heal the wounds.

When a 1982 scandal erupted in Virginia's prisons, it was Procunier who came in to repair the damage.

And when the Texas prison system faced a series of federal court orders, along with widespread charges of violence and brutality, financial mismanagement and corruption, it once again was Procunier, the silver-haired prison tamer, who was asked to restore order.

WITHIN FOUR MONTHS, he convinced even some of his harshest critics that they had made the right decision.

"He's a breath of fresh air for Texas," said William Bennett Turner, a San Francisco attorney who represents inmates in a federal court lawsuit seeking changes within the Texas Department of Corrections.

"We're still reserving judgment, but given his experience, he might just be able to pull it off. I'd say he has a better chance than most," Turner said.

Procunier, appropriately nicknamed "Pro," took over Texas prisons in May with an iron hand cushioned in a velvet glove.

"This isn't a democracy," he said. "Prisoners can't vote for what they want and don't want. They're here for a reason — they screwed up. But there also has to be a proper philosophy — that is, treat them firmly, fairly and they'll treat you right."

With 27 units spread over the eastern half of the state, the TDC is a massive operation of farms and factories, hospitals and cattle herds, with 8,540 employees and a $300 million budget.

TWO DECADES AGO, it was considered a model state institution.

But the prison population mushroomed from 16,000 to more than 38,000 by April 1983. Allegations of corruption and financial mismanagement in the system's construction division surfaced. Civil rights activists contended living conditions in the bulging facilities were inhumane.

Inmates fought inmates. Supremacy gangs, like those in the late 1960s in California prisons, ruled the cellblocks. Complaints surfaced that high-level prison officials used physical force with "alarming frequency" to maintain control.

In 1981, U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler ordered state officials to reduce overcrowding, improve medical care, hire more guards and eliminate brutal treatment of inmates both by other inmates and by guards.

AS PROBLEMS GREW, morale among prison employees plummeted and official criticism mounted. Then, last October, W.J. "Jim" Estelle, prison director for 11 years, abruptly resigned, saying he was unable to work within the limits of Justice's order.

"The federal court virtually destroyed the whole makeup of a system that was built on violence and fear," said Ray Keller, R-Duncanville, chairman of the Texas House Law Enforcement Committee and one of the system's harshest critics. "By eliminating brutality as a method of control, the rug was pulled out from under them. The revelation of mismanagement brought resignation under seige."

Estelle responded this month, "The last comment I made for public consumption was a week after my retirement. At that time, I said if anyone had any evidence to support the allegations they should take it to a proper arena such as a grand jury or a court."

Into this tinderbox strolled the 60-year-old Procunier, who had been in tough spots most of his adult life.

Procunier, a native of Flint, Mich., was a Navy pilot, flying F6F Hellcat fighters off the pitching decks of carriers in the Pacific.

After he left the service, he attended the University of California at Los Angeles for one year, but friends challenged him to work as a guard in the California prison system.

"It wasn't something I thought about for a long time," he recalls now with a shrug and a grin. "I did it as a lark."

HE WORKED HIS WAY up the ladder of prison management, becoming a sergeant, a lieutenant, a training officer, director of inmate classification, associate warden, warden, prison system director, head of California's parole board and chief deputy director of operations for the California Health Department.

He served as director of prison systems in Utah and in Virginia and as deputy secretary of operations for the New Mexico prison system. He also was president of Procunier & Associates, a consulting firm that helps state and federal agencies from New Jersey to Oregon control conditions and programs within penal organizations and court systems.

Procunier's resume reads like a travelogue, and his references like pages from Who's Who with names such as President Reagan, Edwin Meese III, Virginia Gov. Charles Robb, former California Gov. Edmund Brown and a host of lawmakers in Virginia and New Mexico.

At each stop on his travels, Procunier earned a reputation as a no-nonsense administrator with a rough humor who enters a prison unit like a politician stumping for votes, but powerfully asserts his authority, often in terms unprintable.

"There are few people like him. He can be brusque and hard to deal with, and people often are put off by his profane, obscene language," said John Conrad, who became acquainted with Procunier during his tenure at the California prisons.

But, Conrad added, Procunier also has an extraordinary talent for relating to difficult people — and prison inmates often like him in spite of themselves.

CONRAD RECALLED an incident a decade ago at a California medical facility, which cares for convicted criminals with mental problems.

"Procunier was working in one of the wards and one of the prisoners slugged him. As he was getting up, he turned to the inmate and asked, 'What did I do wrong?'

"That's normally not the response you'll get from a superior who's just been decked. But that's characteristic of him," said Conrad, a visiting professor of criminology at Simon Frazier University in Canada.

The $64,400-a-year Texas prisons job, Procunier admits, has been everything he expected and "five times more."

With the blessing of the Texas Board of Corrections, the governing body of the prison system, Procunier began a thorough housecleaning.

He dismissed one warden he said unjustly punished an inmate who was cooperating with federal agents investigating charges of brutality by prison guards. Two others were reassigned, and an assistant director was demoted to warden.

He opened the system to the news media and gave the public a rare, often violent, glimpse of prison life. So far this year, at least 279 inmates have been stabbed. Thirteen attacks have been fatal, surpassing the nine inmate stabbing deaths recorded in all of 1983.

Procunier said he often is amused by "people who live in the city" and wonder why there are stabbings in prisons where "you put the cream of the crud together within a five-acre (facility)."

HE ACTED QUICKLY and forcefully following a series of stabbings. He confined inmates to their cells, cutting off most privileges, and then ordered careful cell-by-cell searches for weapons. Metal utensils, often used to make weapons, were replaced with plastic spoons that are checked with guards before inmates can leave the dining halls.

When an armed inmate took a guard hostage, Procunier went to the prison and spent hours negotiating, offering himself for the hostage. It was a scene he had played out before, in other prisons, and the result was the same: the prisoner surrendered and the hostage was released.

Procunier, a cigarette usually clutched in hand, paces the prison corridors, stopping to joke with inmates and guards.

He recently traveled to Tennessee Colony in northeast Texas to inspect the 4,000-inmate Coffield Unit, considered the most violent of the state prisons.

Of the 226 stabbings recorded between March and July, 77 were at Coffield.

"The inmates did pretty much what they wanted to do," said Jack Garner, the warden. "The guards were not in control. It got to the point that if an inmate didn't have a knife or some sort of protection, he was better off staying locked in his cell."

After an officer was attacked in July, changes started. The staff was beefed up by almost 200. The dirty, battle-scarred corridors were cleaned and painted. Mass shakedowns were initiated and guards confiscated more than 800 weapons.

On a return visit this month, Procunier checked construction of two outdoor recreation yards, closeted himself with inmates in administrative segregation, tasted the rice and pork chops in the dining hall and inspected the unit infirmary.

OBVIOUSLY PLEASED, he turned to Garner, sighed and proclaimed, "I think this is a good omen."

Texas Gov. Mark White recently approved a $450,000 grant that will allow the TDC to tighten security at the units. The money will be used to purchase metal detectors and video recorders.

It also will pay for training and equipment for four special response teams.

Boat motor, stereo system, cash among items reported stolen

From Staff Reports

A boat motor worth $2,534 was reported Saturday as being stolen from Falcon Marine Inc., according to police reports.

The 50-horsepower motor was apparently taken from the store at 2714 W. Wall sometime between June 12 and Aug. 10, the store manager told police.

In other police reports Saturday, a stereo system worth $1,000 was reported stolen from Colonial Storage at 5005 Andrews Highway. The theft of the stereo belonging to Melcia Gosciniak apparently occurred between Sept. 7 and Sept. 21.

Starline Creative Printing at 504 E. Nobles reported the theft Friday of $105 in cash by thieves who broke in from the roof through an upstairs window. Damage to the window was put at $250.

Police, Fire Roundup

Kerry Usrey reported that someone picked up a gold Seiko watch worth $150 which was on display at a Saturday morning garage sale at 3915 Roosevelt, and walked off without paying for it.

Margaret Canterbury reported the theft of a $200 8-track player and a $50 car speaker from her car on Friday. The car, which was unlocked, was parked at 602 S. Main, according to police.

A vacant house at 714 N. Jackson was destroyed Friday night by a fire of unknown origin, fire officials said.

The fire, reported at 11:38 p.m., took 11 firemen 1½ hours and 3,500 gallons of water to extinguish. No injuries were reported.

TRIP

In it, she said, "I kept a very thorough outline of my time spent. Whenever I had an unusual or interesting conversation or observation, I would record it in my daily journal. Looking back, I am overjoyed that I kept a diary since many of the days were too fast-paced and too laden to absorb it all."

For example, she wrote, "It seemed that everyone knew at least some English. By comparison, the percentage of persons who knew English is far greater than the Americans who knew German. At parties or at supermarkets people jumped at the chance of practicing their English with me."

She pointed out some shocking observations in her diary as well.

One notation in particular concerned the constant reminder of World War II and the current "cold war" atmosphere outwardly displayed by the continuous French, Belgian and American military presence.

"Not far from Wittlich were two American air bases which had practice airplane runs during the day." Classes at school were frequently interrupted, she said, because the planes flew at such low altitudes.

"One night during a 'Wanderung' I probed around asking some German kids about their feelings toward the military scene. Many said one gets used to the sonic booms, the roaring jets...and the trucks filled with soldiers. But having none of this kind of exposure in Texas, I felt that the displays made me a bit jumpy."

Also, there is an unwillingness by many of the Germans to express patriotism in their country, Miss Leung noted. "Most youth in Germany resent the country's mandatory draft system yet they are very concerned over the threat of communism."

She said, however, she learned that Germans, like Americans or any other nation want to live long, peaceful and prosperous lives.

"The Germans are comprised of individuals who have ideals, goals and pleasures. It is through these kinds of foreign exchange programs that one can become better acquainted with these individuals on a one-to-one basis...one-to-one is the first step to world peace and friendship," she said.

Midland is a community which recognizes its potential and wants to help its young people recognize theirs. Midlanders, such as Nick Sanchez, provide young people with understanding along with programs which help youth set and attain worthwhile goals.

Mr. Sanchez is a native Midlander who has chosen to stay in Midland because he thinks the community gives everyone an opportunity to accomplish their goals. He has also chosen to play an important role in helping young people latch on to these opportunities.

Thirteen years ago Mr. Sanchez left his position as a draftsman to become program director and later executive director of the YMCA where he felt like he could help young people. Now, as director of the Boys Club in Midland, Mr. Sanchez says he still feels that seeing young people have fun and stay out of the streets is one of the most rewarding parts of his job.

This dedicated director strives to provide programs which will help Midland's young people develop positive self images and useful skills. Whether he is planning a sports activity, informal arts and crafts class or cooking lab, his focus is on the young people not the program.

Mr. Sanchez points out that Midland does care about its youth and provides great opportunities through the schools, churches, and other agencies. He challenges Midlanders especially parents to become even more involved in the development of young people.

Young people like Mr. Sanchez' three children are Midland's future and Mr. Sanchez is one Midlander who is making that future look bright.

Concern, dedication, and action are why Nick Sanchez makes a difference in Midland.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Chap Center to see variety

By H.A. TUCK

After a comparatively quiet summer, a number of varied events have been scheduled into the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center at Midland College during the next few weeks.

A video conference for Mary Kay Cosmetics dealers is slated on Tuesday. John Anderson comes on Thursday for a country music show. He and Karen Brooks will perform at 8 p.m. Tickets are $12.50 and all seats are reserved. Tickets may be purchased at the Chap Center box office or at Endless Horizons in either Midland or Odessa.

On Oct. 9, it's hard rock when Twisted Sister and YNT perform. The ever-popular Shrine Circus is booked for three performances on Oct. 13. And Oshman's Sporting goods brings its pre-season Ski Sale in Oct. 18-21.

And, of course, Chaparral basketball begins in November, along with high school basketball. First Chap game is at home Nov. 2 against Sul Ross, followed Nov. 8-10 by the Chaparral Classic.

• • •

Late registration ended last Wednesday with a record enrollment count. We'll tell you about the final count in next week's Letter From College, but it was a dandy from the preliminary figures.

• • •

This is the last week to see the exhibition of recent paintings by former Midlander and one-time MC art instructor Denny Pickett. The show is on display at McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, which is the last day.

• • •

On Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. the Midland Arts Association is going to be accepting entries at the McCormick Gallery for its seventh annual juried Art Exhibition. The show opens on Thursday, Oct. 4, with a 7 p.m. reception and awards ceremony. This year's MAA show remains on display through Oct. 27. Information about entries may be obtained from members of the art faculty at Midland College all this week.

• • •

Also scheduled for Saturday is a workshop for the Texas Joint Council of Teachers of English, hosted by MC faculty.

• • •

Few events scheduled by the Student Activities Office draw as much attention and enthusiasm as the annual appearance by Jack White, a touring billiard expert. White always delights the crowd with his constant remarks, plus his shot-making ability. He will display his skills at 9:30 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. in the Student Center.

• • •

Golf Coach Delnor Poss and tennis coach Joe Williams were all smiles this week after outstanding performances by some of their players last weekend. The Chap golf team took the opening conference tournament in Levelland with pro-type, sub-par scores of 66 and a pair of 68s, plus a 72. And the Chaparral tennis players did extremely well in the Major Zone Tourney played at the MC courts.

• • •

But tennis wasn't so good for MC president Dr. Jess Parrish, sending him to the hospital last week for shoulder surgery to repair tendon damage suffered during a fall on the courts.

• • •

If you are an accountant who would like some updated knowledge and credits toward advanced standings, you should contact Clara King, an instructor in accounting at MC. She is coordinating several courses for professionals and can provide you details about the courses and when they'll meet.

United Way responds to changes

From Staff Reports

The United Way of Midland is responding to the new and changing needs of the community, says Paul Rea, president of the United Way board of directors.

"The United Way of Midland is a leader in Texas and the country in raising funds to accommodate the requests of those new agencies seeking broad-based community support through the United Way."

Six of the current United Way group of 22 agencies have joined since 1980.

The agencies affiliating with the United Way over the last four years are the American Cancer Society/Midland Unit, Big Brother/Big Sisters, Midland Rape Crisis Center, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children and the West Texas Epilepsy Association.

According to Planning Division Chairman Mark Leaverton, "In order to gain access to support from the United Way of Midland, an agency must be providing one or more services for which there is a clear, documented need." The agency must also be soundly managed by a board of directors made up of citizen volunteers from a cross section of the community, and have been in existence for at least one year.

THE INCLUSION of these six agencies has targeted or expanded community funding in health care treatment, illness prevention and research, and prevention of drug and alcohol abuse, services for victims of domestic violence, children's services, and care and support for rape victims.

"Pending final results of the current campaign, it is estimated that $225,000 will be invested by United Way in these programs and agencies in 1985," says Allocations Chairman Jim Henry.

The investment by the United Way, coupled with agency-generated income, will provide direct service to 1,190 Midlanders in the coming year. In addition, education and prevention programs will reach a minimum of 5,000 Midlanders through seminars, lectures and training events.

Mike Sanford, executive director of the Midland Unit of the American Cancer Society, notes that the ACS will offer education and prevention programs "on a variety of specific forms of cancer." Support services will be provided directly to 300 cancer patients and their families in Midland County. Sanford adds that "contributions generated in Midland will be pooled to provide over $4 million in cancer research to be conducted within the state of Texas."

Big Brothers/Big Sisters, the most recent agency to join the United Way family, matches carefully screened and trained adult volunteers with children from single-parent families. Big Brothers/Big Sisters currently supports 145 such matches and has a waiting list of over 100 children, according to Executive Director Linda Galvan.

THE MIDLAND RAPE Crisis Center, like Big Brothers/Big Sisters, works primarily through well-trained volunteers who are supported by a staff of two.

"The center offers counseling and support to the rape victim and his or her family. Volunteers are available to support a rape victim — both child and adult — through all phases of the aftermath of the rape, including hospital visits, contacts with the police, and court appearances," says Nan Gordon, head of the center since it opened in 1978. The center also maintains a 24-hour hotline which provides "an immediate response and a sensitive listener for the victim, who may wish to remain anonymous."

Experts estimate as many as 6,000 children and young adults in Midland are at risk of chemical abuse. The Palmer Drug Abuse Program, headed by Executive Director Bob Savage, functions on the premise that a young person with a drug or alcohol problem will not come to grips with that problem without the understanding and support of the family.

Savage stresses that PDAP "works with the parents and other members of the family of the kid who is abusing drugs or alcohol in an effort to motivate the abuser to seek a chemical-free life."

PDAP, which numbers its successes in the hundreds, currently includes in its program children and young adults aged 10-25.

THE PERMIAN Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children operates a shelter and counseling program for victims of family violence. Charlene Rosebery, president of the center's board of directors, notes that "it is a sad commentary on our times, but the shelter is full beyond capacity virtually all the time. On any given day approximately 35 women and their children will be residents in the shelter, and more would be housed with us if we had the space."

The shelter, which serves 18 counties, is attemping to expand its facilities in the hope of providing critically needed safe shelter for female victims of domestic violence.

Epilepsy is a prevalent and misunderstood human disorder. In Midland County, it is estimated that epilepsy affects as much as 5 percent of the population. John Relaford, executive director of the West Texas Epilepsy Association, indicates that family members and employers often fail to understand the nature of the disorder and its manageability.

"In most cases, epilepsy victims, through medication, can function like anyone else," he says. The West Texas Epilepsy Association is dedicated to educating those who suffer from epilepsy, members of their families, their employers and the general public about the nature and proper response to this wide-spread disorder.

In reviewing the list of the newest agencies to join the United Way, Chief Executive Bob Cornelius says, "These six agencies were created by people in our community to respond to clear, unmet needs. Through the United Way of Midland, the financial support of the entire community has been mobilized to sustain and enlarge their efforts to satisfactorily meet those needs."

I would like to know when the traffic signals at the intersection of North Big Spring Street and Scharbauer Drive will be in operation. Work of one type or another has been under way, off and on, for months, and still the signals are not in operation. — F.M.

ANSWER: Robert Wilson, district design engineer with the Texas Highway Department in Odessa, reports that the delay in the completion of the traffic signal job has been caused by the failure to receive the controller apparatus. However, the controller has been received and the construction crew should be back on that job sometime next week, Wilson thinks.

NOTE TO MRS. L.D.: Following publication in Answer Line of your question about who or what is "Beatrice," AL has received a letter and telephone call from two readers familiar with "Beatrice."

According to the letter from J. Terrence Purcell, Beatrice is a Chicago-based conglomerate whose origins were in food products, namely Meadow Gold brand dairy products.

The company was originated at Beatrice, Neb., and was known then as the Blue Valley Creamery and the product was known as Meadow Gold Milk. The trademark was copyrighted. The rival, Beatrice Creamery, bought Blue Valley and the trademark. This is the dairy business which grew to the point that Beatrice, Neb., was too small a place to handle the corporate offices of such a large organization. The general offices were moved to Chicago in the late 1940s or early 1950s, and the company has taken on an aggressive program of diversified acquisition of other companies much the same way Quaker Oats, Borden Foods and General Foods have done.

Thank you for the information, Purcell. Also, thank you Ola Birchitt for responding with the information.

I lent a friend some money on an informal agreement. She has not yet paid me back. Others know of this agreement. Do you think I have any way to recover my money? — M.F.

ANSWER: An oral contract, with certain exceptions, is an enforceable agreement, says The State Bar of Texas.

If the time for repayment has expired, ask for return of the money. If that fails, send a certified letter demanding payment by a certain date more than 30 days after the letter is received, and specify the place and method of payment.

If you still do not recover, you may sue without a lawyer, in Small Claims Court if the amount is not over $1,000. A suit for more than that must be brought in a higher court and you would probably need to hire an attorney to help you.

I have read that Yul Brenner is in a national road tour with "The King and I." Could you find out when the show might be in a five-state area of Midland? — Susan Brown

ANSWER: AL contacted the State Fair Music Hall in Dallas and was told that the Brenner show is somewhere in Canada, and already has toured the East Coast and northern part of the United States. Dallas is notified by mail about a week or two before by the production company as to where the show will be presented next. Dallas will call AL when the next announcement is received and AL will be in touch with you.

MOUTHWASH
People sometimes use mouthwash for the wrong reasons. Gargling with cosmetic mouthwash, when you have a sore throat, can actually cause the sore throat to become worse. The alcohol contained in these products evaporates from the throat, drying it out and causing further irritation. Howerver, some mouthwashes contain an igredient called "phenol," Which is a deadening ingredient. They munb the throat, mouth and tongue. If you are already treating an infection with prescribed antibiotics, the phenol-type mouthwash can provide some relief during the course of the illeness. They are also available in pocket sprays and lozenges. If you are running a fever along with the sore throat, consult a physician. It may be a sign of infection.

Council to consider airport, arts issues

Airport matters should consume much of Tuesday's meeting when the Midland City Council meets in a 10 a.m. regular session at City Hall.

A Federal Aviation Administration grant agreement with the city would go for a crash-fire-rescue vehicle at Midland Regional Airport.

Midland Arts Assembly and Odessa Cultural Council will ask permission to exhibit the Art Train at Midland Regional Airport and to allow consumption of alcohol.

Airport officials will seek the council's approval of a professional services contract with DMJM for a master plan and related projects for the new Midland Air Park that will be constructed northeast of the city. Another contract would go to Cress & Associates for an environmental impact assessment and related projects for the new Air Park.

At 11 a.m., the council will hold a public hearing to declare certain structures dangerous and to order their removal.

A proclamation presentation is scheduled for 1:30 p.m.

A public hearing at 1:30 p.m. will consider a request by Jack Barton for a specific use permit to sell beer and wine in a restaurant at the southwest corner of Illinois Avenue and Marienfeld Street.

At 1:40 p.m. a public hearing will be held on the request by Cuca Saucedo for a zone change from 1F-2, single family, to MH, mobile home district. This change would be for east and west sides of Belmont Street between Taylor Avenue and Rhode Island Avenue.

The council will consider annexing the windowpane area bounded by Gist, Interstate 20, Colorado Street and Terrell Street.

Also to be considered are the code regarding consumption of alcoholic beverages and enterprise fund accounting procedures for Hogan Park Golf Course and MidTran.

Trivial Pursuit tournament slated at Hogan Park Activity Building

A Trivial Pursuit tournament will be held at 8 p.m. Oct. 19 at Hogan Park Activity Building. The event is being sponsored by the city Parks and Recreation Department.

Man held in kidnapping case called 'mentally disabled'

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A man arrested in Texas for investigation of kidnapping in the disappearance of an 8-year-old girl here was released from a California prison in May despite diagnoses as a "mentally disabled sex offender" and someone "not amenable to treatment," according to an affidavit filed in federal court here.

Detectives continued their search for Vicki Lynn Hoskinson today and withheld comment on Friday's search of a neighborhood trailer.

The man, Frank Jarvis Atwood, 38, was arrested with a companion at a car dealership in Kerrville, on Thursday, after his father told police that money had been wired to the dealership to pay for repairs on a car.

In San Antonio, U.S. Magistrate Robert B. O'Connor on Friday set bond at $1 million for Atwood and $50,000 for James Doyal McDonald, 37, of Park Rapids, Minn., who was taken into custody on Arizona charges of conducting a fraudulent scheme and obstructing an investigation, authorities said. Both men were held at the Federal Correctional Institution in Bastrop.

A hearing to determine if the two will be returned to Arizona probably will be held within 10 days, said Beverly Galarza, deputy clerk in the magistrate's office.

In Arizona, meanwhile, investigators searched a Tucson trailer at which the two men stayed a few days before Vicki disappeared while bicycling Monday.

FBI agents and Pima County sheriff's investigators spent about two hours combing the trailer for evidence but declined further comment pending laboratory tests.

The home, which was inhabited by a number of unmarried people in their 20s, is about a mile from the girl's home in the Flowing Wells area, Sheriff's Sgt. Doug Witte said.

Atwood, according to an FBI affidavit, was convicted in October 1980 of molesting and kidnapping a 7-year-old child in Santa Monica, Calif. He was sentenced to five years in prison on Jan. 30, 1981, and was paroled on May 16 of this year, it said.

The affidavit also said Atwood had been committed to Atascadero State Mental Hospital in February 1975 "as a mentally disabled sex offender" after acquittal on a charge of child molesting, and was discharged in August 1978 "as being not amenable to treatment."

Atwood also had a 1974 conviction for a California molestation, authorities said.

The affidavit quoted Atwood's father, John Atwood, a retired Army brigadier general, as telling FBI agents in California that "his son had several molestation arrests involving young children, both male and female, and had served a number of years in prison."

And it said a federal informant recently told authorities in Enid, Okla., that "Atwood was looking for a young child to have sex with."

The affidavit said Atwood's father told FBI agents that the suspect's mother had wired money to him in Kerrville.

Farmers seem to favor 'first step'

AGRICULTURE

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
New York Times News Service

CHICAGO — Farmers seem generally receptive to President Reagan's initiative this week to keep more debt-ridden farmers from being forced off the land, although they say it is more of a "first step" than a final solution to the nagging financial problems of the agricultural sector.

On Tuesday, Reagan announced a package of federal loan guarantees, interest subsidies and other steps to ease financial pressures on farmers caught between low crop prices and high costs and interest rates.

In interviews as the president traveled Thursday to Iowa, the heart of the corn belt, several farm leaders said they sensed the winds of politics as well as those that sweep the prairies every harvest time. Despite the president's denial, they saw election-year politics behind Reagan's plan and a similar program announced recently by Walter F. Mondale, his Democratic opponent.

With a few exceptions, farmers' reactions were partisan. But they all acknowledged the convincing power an incumbent president has compared to a challenger's paper proposals.

"Farmers are all different," said Varel Bailey, president of the National Corn Growers Association, "but the one thing every farmer takes into that voting booth is his wallet."

Bailey, whose organization has 14,000 corn farmers in 16 states, said, "It's positive the administration recognizes the agricultural financial crisis out here, though we're not sure it understands the magnitude."

"It's a very good plan," said Howard Ward, a Kansas wheat farmer, who estimates a third of his area's farmers are in serious financial trouble, a third are marginally successful and a third are prospering. Ward was particularly pleased with Reagan's incentives for private lenders to forgive part of the debts rather than what he saw as Mondale's move toward greater government involvement.

But Ward had doubts about a plan to forgive interest payments for five years on a quarter of each loan in danger of default. "If there's no adjustment in the interest rate," said Ward, "that just means it's the same debt five years older at the same interest rate. What's the point?"

David Ostendorf, Middle West coordinator for Rural America, a rural advocacy group, said neither party's plans addressed the scale of the farm financial crisis. "The president says loan guarantees of $630 million," said Ostendorf, "And Mondale says $750 million. It's a drop in the bucket, political gobbledegook. The farm debt in Iowa alone is $17 billion. Nationally, it's $215 billion."

Ostendorf said neither party realized the situation's seriousness. He added, "I'd like to show the candidates the stricken families, the dying communities, local food programs feeding farmers, the lines at mental health clinics. By the end of 1985 11,000 more farms, 60,000 people, will be lost in Iowa alone. Where do they go? Both parties are playing politics with peoples' lives."

"I recognize," said Dick Steffen, a lifelong Democrat who farms near Cedar Rapids, Iowa, "that some people need temporary debt deferral. But if that's all these guys propose, it'll just amass more debt. We don't need Band-Aids. We need stronger crop prices and lower interest rates."

"Agriculture could flourish again around 7 or 8 percent interest," said Ward, who noted that 22 percent of the nation's work force was tied somehow to agriculture. "These people can't spend if they aren't earning."

Merle Hansen, president of the North American Farm Alliance, a coalition of liberal farm groups, called the president's package "a real clumsy political gimmick to harvest the hayseed vote." But he and Steffen detected more political interest toward and among farmers this year.

One bankrupt farmer, Darrell Ringer of Quinter, Kan., is even running for a House seat against Pat Roberts, a Republican incumbent. Ringer, who has declared bankruptcy due to $300,000 in farm debts, felt farmers would not be "hoodwinked by the president's pre-election Christmas present."

Bailey, who lamented the loss of so many aggressive young farmers, usually the newest ones with the heaviest debts, said voting would be "right tough" next month. "You have an incumbent president who finally got an aid program," he said, "or another guy who promises a bird in the bush. Given the electorate's conservative tilt, it's quite possible they'd come down on the president's side."

Listening to the campaign promises, Steffen added, "No group ever got more free advice on their work than farmers. And now they're discovering the true value of all this free advice."

Wheat farmers' report stresses exports

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON — A report by the National Association of Wheat Growers shows dramatically how important exports are to farmers. Take away China, for example, and wheat producers would have received 28 cents a bushel less for their grain since 1980.

Exports have become vital to the U.S. farm economy and figure prominently in the nation's trade policies. Hardly an agricultural law can be passed in Congress without some reference to exports.

The report, published in the association's monthly magazine, The Wheat Grower, was based largely on studies done by the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress at the request of Rep. Virginia Smith, R-Neb.

At the heart of the association's concern is the potential loss of the China market because of a dispute over U.S. restraints on textile imports, an off-and-on flap in the last several years.

One of the results has been China's failure to live up to the terms of a four-year agreement which calls for the purchase of at least 6 million to 8 million metric tons of wheat and corn annually, beginning in calendar 1981 and continuing through calendar 1984.

A metric ton of about 2,205 pounds is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat or 39.4 bushels of corn.

In the first year, China bought 7.6 million tons of wheat and 500,000 tons of corn. Purchases in the second year were 6.8 million tons of wheat and 1.6 million tons of corn.

But in 1983, the third year, China bought only 3.83 million tons total, including 2.45 million tons of wheat and 1.38 million tons of corn. However, China assured the United States that it would make up the shortfall in 1984. That has not occurred.

The U.S. wheat supply can be affected greatly by changes in export outlook, primarily because so much of the crop must be sold abroad if a surplus situation is to be avoided.

In the 1984-85 wheat marketing year that began on June 1, for example, the old-crop carryover was more than 1.39 billion bushels. This year's harvest of more than 2.57 billion bushels make a supply of almost 3.97 billion bushels of wheat for the marketing year that runs through May 31, 1985.

Only about 645 million bushels of wheat will be needed as food in 1984-85. Feed, seed and other uses will account for more than 400 million bushels. Thus, total domestic wheat use will be less than 1.1 billion bushels.

Exports are forecast at nearly 1.53 billion bushels, the second-highest level on record. In all, about 2.6 billion bushels of wheat will be used in 1984-85, slightly in excess of this year's bumper harvest.

That means that the wheat carryover next June 1 will be down slightly to less than 1.38 billion bushels.

It also means that if it were not for a lively export surge, primarily because of the Soviet Union's needs, the U.S. wheat bin would be filled even more by the next harvest.

Pecan trees need water

The pecan tree is native to areas where rainfall is plentiful and generally receives ample moisture for optimum growth and production. In West Texas where rainfall is short in supply for normal pecan tree growth, supplemental water is needed and applied through flood or trickle irrigation methods.

Not only should ample soil moisture be maintained throughout the growing season for good growth, but it ensures maximum nut development (size and filling). During the nut development stage, there are two phases to be considered when planning efficient irrigation.

— Phase 1 is from the time of pollination until the latter part of July. During this phase, the nut achieves its full size.

— Phase 2 occurs from the conclusion of Phase 1 until maturity (shuck split). This is when the nut fills out.

It is extremely important that sufficient moisture be available throughout the season to produce a high quality nut of maximum size.

Young Trees

It is important to maintain a relatively uniform soil moisture level throughout the growing season from April to October. A good rule of thumb or guide for young trees follows:

Gallons per day/per tree

	April	May	June	July	August
1st year	1	1	2	4	4
2nd year	2	2	4	8	8
3rd year	4	4	8	16	16

Bearing Trees — West Texas

Productive trees neeed a minimum of 48 inches of water per season if they are on good soil. Large trees may use more than 200 gallons per day in July and August. Bearing trees should not be stressed. Early spring, when growth begins, midsummer, when the nut develops, and early fall, as the kernel develops, are very important irrigation periods for bearing pecan trees.

Another important consideration in planning efficient irrigation of pecans is the termination of water at the latter part of the growing season. The reduction of applied water is very important when considering a plant which will shed its leaves in the fall and go into a dormant (no growth) state. The last application of water should occur from mid to late September. By making the last application during this period, the soil will retain a proper moisture level for proper development of nuts and will condition the plant to the cold weather of the winter months ahead. This process is known as "hardening off." If water application is continued through October and November, the tree will remain in a succulent state and will be extremely susceptible to winter injury. If the tree has been properly fertilized and watered during the growing season, the leaves should not fall until the first frost.

If the trees are flood irrigated, they should receive an application of water during the month of December to keep the roots in a moist condition. If trees are watered by trickle irrigation, the system should be shut down in September and turned back on in December. The amount of water applied should be sufficient to keep the root system moist. This will, also, aid in monitoring the system for problems which can be solved before next year's growing season.

Remember that proper conditioning of the plant for the winter months could be the difference in a crop of pecans.

Farming in Texas is continuing to expand, according to figures recently released from the 1982 Census of Agriculture. The U.S. Census Bureau defines a farm as any place from which $1,000 or more of agricultural products were sold or normally would have been sold during the census year. The number of individual or family farms in the state rose 5.7 percent from 1978 to 1982 while the U.S. total fell 1 percent. At the same time, family farm acreage fell 5.4 percent in Texas and 4.7 percent in the U.S. Farms of one to nine acres increased 43.3 percent in Texas during the four-year period while those with 10 to 49 acres increased 47.3 percent.

Just how good are the benefits from worming and implanting? A study last fall on the Heine Bade farm in Dewitt County shows that using growth implants does pay but that worming is questionable. Steers that receive at least one implant had an increase in average daily gain of just over 0.2 of a pound compared to non-implanted steers during the first 90 days. Giving the steers a second implant at that time boosted average daily gains almost 0.4 of a pound and provided the greatest return — $35.40 per head.

Citrus canker found at sixth Florida nursery

Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — Tree-killing citrus canker has turned up in a sixth Florida nursery as agriculture officials worked Saturday to burn young trees and grafting stock in an effort to save the state's billion-dollar fruit industry.

The latest outbreak of the easily spread bacteria was found on a potted grapefruit tree at Congen Property Inc., a nursery west of La Belle, according to George Serbinoff, a spokesman for the U.S. Agriculture Department at the citrus canker project headquarters in Winter Haven.

Crews are inspecting the state's 760,000 acres of citrus trees systematically, starting with those groves ready for harvesting and those known to have received seedlings or budstock from nurseries on a quarantine list.

The first case of citrus canker was discovered several weeks ago at Ward's Nursery near Avon Park.

Four other nurseries, in addition to Ward's and Congen, have been found to have citrus canker. A total of 2.3 million trees in the first five nurseries will have to be burned because there is no cure for the disease. Agriculture officials have yet to estimate how many trees at the newest site will be destroyed.

Ward's 1.3 million trees have already been burned, and burning is underway or planned for the other five this week, Serbinoff said.

Agriculture officials are investigating 35 other nurseries to see if their trees also must be burned.

Keh Hibbart, a spokesman for the state's Division of Plant Industry in Gainesville, said that as of Friday less than 1 percent of the state's citrus acreage had been inspected for canker. It's expected to take at least a month to go through most of the groves, he said.

Florida Agriculture Commissioner Doyle Conner told USDA representatives Saturday he would ask citrus growers to map out their properties so that replacement trees that might have come from infected nurseries could be located more readily, said Wayne Baggett, another USDA spokesman.

The industry's first major setback in the past year — the devastating Christmas 1983 freeze — has compounded the canker outbreak. The industry also suffered outbreaks of the Mediterranean fruit fly.

"The nursery business is particularly hard hit and the grower also because so many trees died from the freeze that everybody was looking for replacements," Baggett said Saturday. "So there's probably more spread of nursery stock than ever before."

Conner scheduled a meeting Monday in nearby Lakeland with Assistant U.S. Agriculture Secretary Bill McMillan, citrus-belt congressmen and top industry officials to discuss possible compensation for producers whose groves have to be destroyed.

Conner approved emergency state rules Friday that allow burning of all trees infested with canker or trees planted within 125 feet of trees shipped from the five tainted nurseries.

Groves cleared by inspectors get permits to ship fruit to packing houses, and Conner's office announced Friday that 31 packing houses have been cleared to ship fruit from 3,555 acres.

Stars shine at ASCAP party

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Bob Hope and Donald O'Connor were among the stars and Marvin Hamlisch and Sammy Cahn among the award-winning songwriters who turned out to salute "one of the longest collaborations in entertainment history" — between Oscar and ASCAP.

Friday's musical program marked the 70th anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the 50th year of musical awards by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

"Out of 143 Oscars for musical achievement, ASCAP members have won 118," ASCAP President Hal David said as he cited the long association between the two groups.

David won an Oscar in 1969 for his lyrics to Burt Bacharach's music for "Raindrops Keep Fallin' on my Head," from the movie "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid."

Among the guests was Herb Magidson, who co-wrote "The Continental," which won the first Oscar for best song in 1934.

Besides Hope and O'Connor, other performers at the academy's Samuel Goldwyn Theater included Buddy Ebsen and Keith Carradine.

Songwriters who performed included such Oscar winners as Hamlisch ("The Way We Were"), Cahn ("Three Coins in the Fountain"), Sammy Fain ("Love is a Many-Splendored Thing") and Alan and Marilyn Bergman ("The Windmills of Your Mind").

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Actress Debra Winger canceled political campaign appearances Saturday on behalf of Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore., because of illness, a spokeswoman for AuCoin's campaign said.

Phyllis Oster, finance coordinator for AuCoin's campaign, said she did not know the nature of the illness but had been told the actress' physician advised her not to travel.

Nebraska Gov. Bob Kerrey, who was to appear with Ms. Winger, also canceled his trip. The two became acquainted when she was making the movie "Terms of Endearment" in Nebraska.

Ms. Oster said the actress was invited to appear on AuCoin's behalf in October but that arrangements were pending.

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A woman whose 26-year-old son collapsed and died during a 16-hour self-awareness seminar has filed a $5 million suit against "est" guru Werner Erhard, claiming the session's mental stress killed her son.

Also named as defendents are Erhard's company, Werner Erhard and Associates, and Steven Zafflin of San Francisco, who conducted the New Haven seminar. Erhard, also of San Francisco, developed est, which is an acronym for Erhard Seminars Training.

The lawsuit was filed earlier this month in federal court by Alfrieda Slee, whose son, Jack, died Aug. 14, 1982.

An autopsy could not determine the cause of his death, and police found no evidence of foul play.

Erhard officials said Friday they had not received a copy of the suit, but denied the seminar had anything to do with Slee's death.

The lawsuit claims Slee was "subjected to psychological pressures, group pressures...mind control techniques which caused him to lose his ordinary psychological defenses, emotional confrontations which caused him to become emotionally distraught and which led to physical reactions resulting in his death."

SEYMOUR, Ind. (AP) — Jeff Keith lost his right leg to cancer, but the disease failed to stop his determination to overcome challenges.

Keith, 22, is crossing Indiana this week as part of his battle against the illness that took his leg about 10 years ago. He is running about 3,200 miles, from Boston to Los Angeles, to raise money for the American Cancer Society "and to show cancer can be beaten.

"I wanted to reach out to different kids and different people, and the only way to do that is to run across America, to each town and each state," Keith said Friday.

The Fairfield, Conn., man began his run June 4 and hopes to complete it in January. He is accompanied by his brother and four college buddies.

Keith won't know how much money he's raised until he finishes, but said it already numbers in the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Peale will continue as senior minister of the Fifth Avenue church.

He later went to Hollywood and appeared in "Dawn Patrol," "Barbary Coast," "The Light that Failed," "The Sea Hawk," "The Mysterious Doctor," "The Verdict," "To Each His Own," and "Donovan's Reef." VanDerBeek's work included animation of an early children's television show, "Winky Dink and You." His films included "Euclidian Illusion" and "Curious Phenomena." Some of his other accomplishments included projection of images on steam to create a three-dimensional effect and a mural of lighted office windows at the IBM building in Baltimore.

IUP sees some beauty in 'ugliest male' label

By KENNETH JAUTZ
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH — Given the choice, ugly is probably not what the men of Indiana University of Pennsylvania would choose to be. But given the title of the nation's ugliest male student body, ugly has become the thing to be at IUP.

Since "Lisa Birnbach's College Book" handed the ugly man trophy to IUP, life hasn't been the same at the once quiet campus about 40 miles east of Pittsburgh.

Students prepare for "ugliest male" contests, fraternities plan television talk show appearances, reporters poll women students and campus entrepreneurs hawk T-shirts reading: Institute for Ugly People, IUP.

"This could put us on the map," said senior Steve Matthews, 21.

And while touting ugliness may never have occurred to school administrators, they now say it may be just the thing.

"We've had an identity problem in the past," Ronald Thomas, executive director of university relations, said Friday. "But if this ugly label is what it takes for us to be known in California or Colorado, so be it.

"If a potential applicant in New England hears of us only because of the ugly man and decides to look into the school further, I would say that is a positive thing," he said in a telephone interview.

The university's budding "most ugly" craze also is popular among off-campus businesses in Indiana.

At Calico's, an off-campus bar, manager Clem Pantalone is gearing up for tonight's Ugliest Male on Campus contest.

Pantalone set up ballot boxes around campus and ran advertisements in The Penn, the student newspaper, announcing the 12 finalists.

The ugly fad began earlier this month with the publication of Ms. Birnbach's book, a survey of 189 schools.

IUP, a 12,400-student liberal arts school, gets its only mention in the book's List of Lists chapter: "Ugliest student body, males: Indiana University of Pennsylvania."

Ms. Birnbach, 28, sold 1.4 million copies of her first book, "The Official Preppy Handbook." She has said she reached her conclusion about IUP while speaking on campus two years ago when she couldn't find one "cute guy" in the audience.

Some people say this could be a ticket to fame and fortune, but we're taking it all in stride," said Matthews, a member of Delta Sigma Phi fraternity.

If a photographer wishes, fraternity members will pose outside their house with paper bags over their heads.

"We weren't too well known before," said Matthews. "But now people know where we are."

For all the fuss, students says no one has taken Ms. Birnbach's opinion seriously.

"Of course the women here don't believe Birnbach. I know, I ask them all the time," said Kevin Benz, 21, student government treasurer.

"I don't think the men here are the ugliest," said Kathy Long, 21, feature editor of The Penn. "I haven't gone over all college campuses, but I don't think so."

'60 Minutes' won't reveal subjects

Associated Press

NEW YORK — CBS News said Saturday that it no longer would announce the subject matter of its "60 Minutes" show in advance.

"We've established the policy (that) for the time being we aren't going to put out the lineup of '60 Minutes,'" said spokesman Ari Maravel.

CBS in the past had announced the subjects of the Sunday news show in time for newspapers to print them in their Sunday editions.

Maravel said "60 Minutes" executive producer Don Hewitt felt that New York Times synopses of the program's stories made the features appear to be boring.

Maravel said the policy "could change next week."

Leonard Harris, a spokesman for The New York Times, said that CBS stopped giving the lineup to the newspaper last week. He said he did not know the reason, but added that the Times might have been changing the CBS statements to conform to the newspaper's style for such items, which he called "very terse and non-adjectival."

'Escapee' couldn't cow Omaha police

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Omaha police are used to rounding up some tough cookies, but their latest escapee kept giving officers the slip. They finally had to resort to the skills of a mystery man to capture the varmint.

All of which might have been embarrassing for the department, except that the escapee did have a considerable weight advantage, being a fugitive from the Omaha Stockyards.

The cow escaped Friday night through a narrow opening in a gate at the stockyards and strayed about 12 blocks through south Omaha, said Lt. William Krumland. Police and workers from the Nebraska Humane Society were called to corral the wayward critter, but as often as they thought they had the cow cornered, the animal would find a new escape route.

'Burning Bed' tells battered wife's story

By DOLORES BARCLAY

NEW YORK (AP) — Francine Moran fell in love with Mickey Hughes under the giddy streamers of a high school dance. She was 16 and became his wife.

The beatings began on the honeymoon.

They ended in a roar of flames 14 years later when she set him afire as he slept. Tried for murder and found innocent by reason of insanity in November 1977, Francine Hughes has remarried and today lives somewhere in the Midwest.

The tortured odyssey of the woman who became a national symbol of courage for battered wives is retold in "The Burning Bed," a two-hour, made-for-television movie to be broadcast Monday, Oct. 8, on NBC.

Starring Farrah Fawcett as Francine Hughes and Paul LeMat as her husband, Mickey, the movie deals not only with the physical and emotional brutality in the marriage but also with the horror experienced by their three children.

"The Burning Bed," a drama rather than a documentary and based on Faith McNulty's book by the same name, tackles an immensely important issue — domestic violence. But the movie's somewhat rushed and subdued manner misses the force and tension of the subject itself.

The National Coalition Against Domestic Violence estimates that a women is battered every 18 seconds in the United States and that such physical aggression costs the nation up to $5 billion a year in absenteeism and $100 million in medical bills.

"The Uniform Crime Reports...suggest that approximately one woman in 10 will be beaten in her life by a lover, husband or dear friend. That may be an underestimate," Richard Berk, a sociologist at the University of California at Santa Barbara, said at a panel discussion on domestic violence after a screening of "The Burning Bed."

According to the FBI's Uniform Crime Reports, one of every four female murder victims was killed by a husband or boyfriend in 1982.

Until recently, experts say, the criminal justice system treated wife beating as a domestic problem, not a crime.

Still, there have been improvements, according to Donna Medley, director of the coalition against domestic violence. Since 1977 when Mrs. Hughes killed her husband, the number of shelters for battered women has increased from several to more than 800, she said.

"When women come to shelters and they either leave and start a new life or they return to the partnership that was abusive, in every one of these cases, the violence was reduced or stopped after she was in the shelter," Ms. Medley said.

But the best deterrent to battering, Ms. Medley said, is arrest.

When the movie's Francine, blond pony tail bobbing, first spots Mickey at a high school dance, there is no indication that the sullen, young man with the round, cherubic face would ever strike anyone.

They date with the usual gropings and pleas in parked cars. It was 1963 — and "nice girls don't." When Francine does, she must marry Mickey.

In the real story, Mickey began brutalizing his wife almost immediately. She testified at her trial that he ripped her clothes off on the honeymoon because he thought they were too "revealing" and beat her for going to the store to buy nail polish.

In the movie, the first act of physical aggression occurs at a party they give. He slaps her for "sassing" him in front of his friends.

The violence escalates until her eyes are blackened and her lip split. The children — Christy, Jimmy and Nicole, who range in age from 6 to 12 when their mother stands trial — are helpless witnesses to the battering.

There is little assistance for Francine. Her in-laws want the couple to remain together. Her mother insists that a woman's place is with her husband. "Women have to put up with their men, especially if there's children. And mostly their men don't mean it," the mother tells her in the movie.

Mickey drinks too much and is unemployed. The family is financially strapped. Finally, in 1971, a welfare worker tells Francine she can qualify for financial aid if she leaves her husband. She divorces him and moves.

But when Mickey is seriously injured in an auto accident, Francine moves next door to nurse him. He beats her in front of the children when she rejects him.

On the night she splashes gasoline around his bed and lights it as he sleeps, she has returned home from business school to find Mickey drunk and enraged. He insists that she leave school and rips pages from her textbooks and makes her burn them. He also swats her around the kitchen and rubs her face in TV dinners because he hates them.

Farrah Fawcett is memorable as Francine, taking her from a giggly, impressionable teen-ager to a skittery, scarred adult. Miss Fawcett uses restraint in her role. She bottles up a lot, and doesn't let it seep out until the final courtroom scene.

How did she feel the night she torched her husband? "I thought about all the things that had happened to me — how much he had hurt me my whole life."

'Doonesbury' fans mark strip's return with big bash

MIAMI (AP) — Attention "Doonesbury" fans: Think you can match Zonker Harris' dark suntan, or want to take a crack at a look-alike contest of other characters from the popular comic strip?

Those events, along with a "Doonesbury" trivia contest, a fund-raising $250-a-plate dinner and auction, will be featured next weekend as part of the "official National Welcome Back Doonesbury Party," honoring the strip's return to newspapers Sept. 29 after a 20-month hiatus.

The strip's creator, 1975 Pulitzer Prize-winning artist Garry B. Trudeau, won't be at the party, although he helped organize it.

"He doesn't want the focus to be on himself," explained Jan Hollingsworth, a spokeswoman for the nonprofit National Foundation For Children, which will receive whatever money is raised from Saturday's party.

"As you know, he's a bit of a recluse," Mrs. Hollingsworth said. "He doesn't want to be in a situation where he's swamped by the press, (but) in spirit he's there.

"Trudeau is the one that organized the party essentially. Trudeau is in support of the foundation," she added.

The foundation offers support and training through nationwide centers to parents and other people who work with children under age 6. It raises all its money from the sale of comic art.

The 35-year-old artist gave his comic strip a rest starting in January 1983, saying his mostly college-age characters needed a chance to grow up.

The first new installment, distributed by Universal Press Syndicate of Fairway, Kan., sets the stage for the return of the strip, while the second has star character Mike Doonesbury finally out of college and working for an advertising agency.

HILL HOUSE

Text by Linda Anderson

Hill House, now located eight miles south of Midland, looks very much as it did when it was completed in 1902 on Illinois Street.

The Lancaster House controversy gives many Midlanders a sense of deja vu. Only five years ago, the Hill House was the center of a similar raging battle.

"The controversies are very similar," said Mrs. Ralph Viney, who, with her husband, is owner of Hill House. "However, the city has come forward with ideas and attempts to save the Lancaster House by pledges and contributions. But none was offered for Hill House. Something had to be done or they would tear it down."

That dilemma is what spurred Mr. and Mrs. Viney to purchase Hill House. They moved it from the original location on 1200 block Illinois Street to their land about eight miles south of Midland. The Vineys and Bill and Lee Heard, project managers of the house, began a restoration program for the old Midland home.

Construction on Hill House, originally built and owned by "Doc" Cowden, began about 1898 and finished in 1902. Mrs. Viney was told It was a ranch house and at the time its location was outside of the town.

Midland began its sprawling growth around the old ranch house. Several years after it was built the house was sold to the Hills and remained in the family until Mrs. Hill's death in 1977, said Mrs. Heard.

The Vineys purchased the building in 1979 because they thought it was important to Midland's history and, Mrs. Viney said, "they were going to tear it down.

"The school system bought the property. They wanted it for a sports field and the only way was to tear it down. It had been a landmark for directions for years. Midland didn't want it torn down," she said.

Please see HILL HOUSE, Page 2E

Much of the furniture in Hill House is from the same time period as the house itself.

The original inlaid floors and 12-foot tin ceilings of Hill House show the ornate design and craftsmanship difficult to find in West Texas during the turn of the century.

HILL HOUSE

The Vineys had previously moved a home from Lorraine Street which they restored and sold. They were approached with a similar proposal for Hill House's fate.

The house faced another controversy. Some Midlanders didn't want it moved at all. "Midland wanted the house preserved but actually wanted it left where it was and used for clubs ... or some public purpose."

Mrs. Viney said saving the old house was important because "this is a new area. Relatively speaking it (the house) is not old but it is for Midland. I feel it is necessary to preserve our historical buildings and homes. Even though today there are people living who remember when they were built, the next generation won't. I think it's necessary for every area to preserve for future generations some of its main history ... I don't think we should live in the past but we should save evidence of the past so we know where we've been."

The Heards, from Virginia, have helped renovate and restore many other old buildings. According to Mrs. Heard, they are trying to keep the project "as accurate as possible because our goal has been to restore, not remodel."

Heard said the house's architectural style is "Prairie Craftsman." It remained empty for several years after Mrs. Hill's death and during the early restoration stages, but the structure has, surprisingly, suffered little vandalism.

THE ORIGINAL glass, including several stained lead glass panes, is preserved in many of the windows, according to Mrs. Heard. The original inlaid wooden floors and 12-foot tin ceilings have been restored. "I think it's wonderful that in 1902 someone had the desire for having such beautiful things in the house. I'm sure it wasn't easy shipping these things ... to West Texas," said Mrs. Heard.

The roof, which did not survive 80 years of West Texas weather, was replaced in a style as similar as possible to the original, Mrs. Viney said.

Much of the furniture, while not the home's original, is from the same period as the house. Most of the period pieces in the house, especially the more ornate furniture, are from Heard's grandmother's house in Moline, Ill., Mrs. Heard said. "About one-third of the (furniture) pieces are period."

Some of Midland's other landmark buildings which have been torn down are also represented in Hill House. Mrs. Heard said some of the bricks in the sidewalk which surrounds the house are from the old Scharbauer Hotel; the porch's beaded ceiling is from the old Petroleum Club; and she has "even saved two bricks from the old Heath Furniture Store."

When the Vineys bought Hill House their intention was to open it as a restaurant after the restoration was completed. Mrs. Viney said the first time she looked at the house, "I said, 'It's perfect for a restaurant.' We had that in mind when we bought it."

ALTHOUGH THEIR plans for a restaurant in Hill House have been temporarily shelved, Mrs. Viney said the idea is still viable. "When the house was completed to the extent we could go into that part of it, the economy was down and ... the restaurant was tabled. Things are looking better and we will be working toward that end shortly."

Today, with the restoration nearly completed, Hill House is being used for private use, such as company parties, wedding receptions and other gatherings.

"This house has such a good feeling," Mrs. Heard said. "Everyone has the same feeling — you can tell what a good house it is. You know it's built solid. The sunset is just marvelous, and at night you can see the lights of Midland all the way over to Odessa. ... It's a wonderful, comfortable house."

Mrs. Heard said she often hears visitors at Hill House say, "I think Mrs. Hill would be pleased."

Since the 1950s, Midland Country Club's "Wildscatter" golf tournament has been a major event on the club's fall schedule. Now held every other year, it alternates with the club's Chaparral tennis tourney.

Guests received unique silver and black invitations this year in the form of movie film, holding a "script", which outlined the schedule for the affair. They were asked to co-star in "Wildscatter Goes Hollywood," a Par-mount picture beginning production Sept. 13 and ending Sept. 15 at Par-mount's lot in Midland, Texas. Each of the events carried the title of a well-known movie.

The Member-Guest Invitational, which brought in participants from all over the country, included a number of festive social events. A large tent was erected behind the clubhouse, where refreshments were served and live music provided throughout the three-day event.

A steak dinner Thursday evening under "The Big Top" got the event off to a rollicking start.

Friday night's traditional costume party found members and guests decked out in all sorts of imaginative show business dress. The M*A*S*H Unit, the cast of "Wizard of Oz," the Keystone Kops and the Cone Heads were all present, as well as Superman, Peter Pan and Captain Hook, Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy and Scarlet O'Hara and Rhett Butler. We hear George W. Bush, the vice president's son, created a sensation as Ghandi. Johnny Dee and the Rocket 88s from Houston provided the evening's entertainment.

The tourney was climaxed Saturday evening with a black tie dinner-dance and presentation of awards. The Joe Douglas Band from Lafayette, La., was among the groups providing outstanding dance music. Beaming searchlights, a red carpet covering the portico and an ice sculpture of the "Oscar" statuette in the club's foyer all contributed to the "Oscar Night" theme.

Award winners received lovely pieces of Steuben crystal, and favors included crystal paperweights and luggage tags. Midlander Sonny Brown was the lucky winner of a Jeep Wagoneer for a hole in one.

"For ladies only" events included a putting contest and a tennis tournament.

The "producers" of the tournament were Craig Campbell and Ernie Gilkerson.

BRENDA EWAN and her fiance, Jim Shute, both of Dallas, have been guests of honor at a round of fesive pre-nuptial parties here this weekend. They are visiting with her parents, Betty and Don Ewan.

A luncheon and kitchen shower was given Saturday at the Racquet Club. Hostesses were Pat (Mrs. Brent) Blonkvist, Nancy Hull, Patti (Mrs. Watson) LaForce, Camille (Mrs. Bill) Leifeste, Betty Jo (Mrs. George) Moberly and Nancy (Mrs. Paul) Rea.

The home of Susan and Verne Griffith was the setting for a cocktail party Saturday evening. Co-hosting were Jody and Jack Blake, Toya and Charley Moncrief, Charleen and Dick Rosebery and Betty and Bill Sumner.

A brunch is being held today at the home of Billie and Paul Karcher. Also hosting are the Karchers' daughters, Judy of Austin and Elaine of Dallas; Margaret and Courtney Cowden, Jere and Bus Hubbard and Altie and Bill Russell.

Brenda and Jim are planning to be married Nov. 17 in Midland.

MAGGIE ARTLEY is justifiably proud of her 18-year-old niece, Rachel Dillman of Warrenton, Va., who appears on the cover of the September issue of "Seventeen" magazine.

Rachel was chosen from 60,000 entries nationwide to become the magazine's 1984 Cover Model Contest winner. She and the other seven finalists, narrowed down from a field of 320 semi-finalists, enjoyed a trip to New York City last May, where they were given professional makeovers for their all-important cover shootings (or "cover tries"). Subsequently, Rachel's photogenic face was selected to grace the cover of "Seventeen's" 40th birthday issue.

Also featured in a two-page spread in the magazine, Rachel appears in one picture with her dad, airline pilot Don Dillman, who is Maggie's brother. Rachel is now modeling for the prestigious Ford Model Agency and enjoying the excitement of the Big Apple.

AFTER A JAMAICAN honeymoon, Dr. Jeff Kozak and his bride, the former Lee Ann Le Rouax, are at home in Houston's West University area. Both are associated with the Texas Medical Center.

The son of Midlanders Marjorie and Dan Kozak, the groom is a second-year resident in the four-year orthopedic surgery program at Baylor's seven teaching hospitals. A graduate of the Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, he also earned degrees in both biomedical and electrical engineering from Duke University.

Lee Ann is director of the Department of Physical Therapy at Ben Taub General Hospital. She has her undergraduate degree from Texas Women's University in Houston and her master's from the University of Houston.

They chose to recite their vows by memory in a small, private ceremony Sept. 7 at St. Paul's United Methodist Church in Houston. Their only attendants were Jeff's father and his sister Danette (Mrs. Ron) Wright of LaJolla, Calif. Jeff's mother participated by reading a passage from Gilbran's "The Prophet," and Danette read the poem, "Destiny."

A cocktail hour and seated dinner for 50 guests followed at the elegant Warwick Club. Midlanders present were John Houghton, Jeff's classmate at Trinity School, and his wife, Jayne, and his Lee High School classmate, Joe Pickering and wife Marsha.

The wedding also was the occasion for a reunion of Marjorie's and Dan's families at the Warwick Hotel, with family members coming in from Oklahoma City, Santa Fe, Capistrano Beach and LaJolla, Calif.

Post-wedding festivities included a brunch for out-of-town relatives at the home of Lee Ann's mother, Barbara Gleason, and her husband, Dick, in Sugar Land, and a day in Galveston, where Marjorie and Dan hosted a seafood dinner at Gaido's for the family.

AND LAST BUT NOT LEAST: Two names have been added to the list of Midland girls who pledged college social sororities this fall. They are Diane Degenfelder, daughter of Rita and George Degenfelder, an Alpha Chi Omega pledge at Texas Tech, and Tina Stewart, daughter of Betty and Bill Stewart, a Chi Omega pledge at Centenary College in Shreveport, La.

Executive wives not stereotypical

Hearst News Service

The wife of a corporate executive has long been portrayed in movies and books as a distressed, emotionally unstable person who is prone to popping pills and drinking martinis. But now, according to Science Digest's October issue, a study conducted at the University of Buffalo flatly contradicts that stereotype.

In the past, it was assumed that a corporate wife was unhappy because of the demands put on her: having to entertain her husband's colleagues, having to relocate for business purposes or having to be alone while her husband was traveling.

Psychologist Rosemarie Winstanley sent a series of questionnaires designed to evaluate a person's feelings of life satisfaction to 240 wives of both top-level executives and middle managers. The responses revealed that despite the pressures on them, the majorty of women felt good about themselves and their marriages.

What was important to the mental health of the women who responded to the questionnaires was the amount of autonomy and control they had. That is, as long as a wife had some input into her life with her husband, she was likely to feel content.

Interestingly, the wives of the top-level execs felt even more content than those of middle managers. Winstanley theorizes that this is because a top exec is more secure in his job than a middle manager and is thus able to be more responsive to his wife's needs. For example, if she does not want to relocate, he can negotiate with his company about not having to move.

If Winstanley is right, asks Science Digest, why did the stereotype ever develop? The image arose, she answers, in part because corporate wives who were unhappy were very vocal about their feelings.

PLEATED SHADES

Pleated shades combine beauty with energy-saving insulation. These versatile fabric shades can be used alone for a clean, contemporary look or with draperies or curtains in more traditional settings, Depending upon tastes and needs, sheer, semi-sheer or opaque shades can be chosen in either solid colors or patterns. The Key to shade quality is its permanently pleated, lightweight polyester fabric. When backed with a thin layer of aluminum, the fabric reflects up to 60% of the sun's rays and cuts heat loss through a single-pane window by almost 50%. Sheer shades are made of the same fabric but do not have the special backing.

Window treatment does more for today's room than add beauty. They regulate the sun's entrance into a room and regulate its effects. At WINDOW DECOR, window coverings are the focus of our business, although we are fully experienced to help you with any of your decorating ideas. Visit our showroom at 30 W. Industrial Loop Mon-Fri. between 8-4:30 or make an appointment for us to visit you by calling 685-0875.

Butlers newest status symbols

Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — Having a butler, says a man who has employed the same butler for two decades, means that you have really arrived.

"You see lots of Rolls Royces," says the international businessman, "but few people have butlers. Everyone has help, but to have a butler is to stand apart. You could call it a status symbol, but it's more than that. People who employ butlers are sophisticated in terms of their knowledge of how to enjoy life to the fullest. A butler becomes a necessity to your way of life."

Domestic agencies say there is a renewed interest among their clients in maintaining a more formal household. Those who are serious about creating a grand environment will consider adding a butler to their staff, they say, or finding someone who will train their houseman in the skills traditionally offered by a professional butler.

Doris Romeo has a domestics' agency in Beverly Hills where she will soon be training housemen to be butlers.

"There aren't many butlers available today, and those that are available are at a premium," she says. "Butler-valets and butler-chauffeurs are popular in Los Angeles. There is a lot more to butlering than answering the door, but it can be learned by a man who has an interest."

Traditionalists frown upon such "upgrading." These butlers and their employers say that the only way one can become a proper butler is to work one's way up from the bottom within a large formal household where they have apprenticed to a butler.

One woman who has maintained a butler for 18 years says the "instant butler" is "strictly for the nouveau riche. No one with old money would accept a butler who has had one of these absurd crash courses," she says. "There is a certain sensibility one looks for, a sensibility that comes with having lived in a good home over a period of time."

Perhaps the greatest of status symbols is the English butler. According to Ivor Spencer, founder of the Ivor Spencer School of British Butlers and Administrators in London: "Americans who have employed my boys say that to have a butler trained by us is tremendous status. They especially enjoy the English accent."

Spencer opened his butler school four years ago to teach young men the art of British butlering. "The American butler thinks he's as good as his employer and shouldn't serve him," he says. "The English butler knows he's as good and is performing a job."

Because of the demand for butlers in the United States and the interest on the part of some Americans to train butlers with English style, Spencer brought his school to this country. Last week, four Americans completed Spencer's first U.S. training class. The presidential suite at the Lancaster Hotel in Houston served as their classroom.

Spencer's standard course, offered in London over a period of two months, is concentrated for Americans into 30 days. The fee for all would-be butlers is $3,000, and if Spencer locates jobs for them, he receives a commission.

Policy replaces loincloth with skirt

HONOLULU (AP) — You won't see the "malo," the traditional wrap worn around the loins of Hawaiian men, at the Polynesian Cultural Center here any more.

The musicians who host visitors to the center's Hawaiian Village have been told to take off their loin cloths and put on either midi-length skirts or a shorter, paneled skirt that covers everything above the knee.

The malo was comfortable, everyday garb for traditional men of Hawaii. It was about a foot wide and three to four yards long, made of kapa cloth dyed red or yellow.

Executives at the center say the replacement, a "pa'u," is equally historic and authentic.

"It's a wraparound found in Hawaiian history," said Ralph Rodgers, center president.

The cultural center policy had been a long time coming and stemmed from the opposition of the Mormon Church, which operates the center, to exposure of the human body.

Spring flowers bloom all winter — indoors

Hearst News Service

When frost dusts your lawn and the winter sky is leaden and overcast, you still can have a bit of spring. Just set aside an assortment of bulbs from your fall planting and force them into January bloom.

For January blossoms, begin the process in late September. If you want to have a steady stream of flowers from January through March, pot bulbs at two-week intervals through the end of November.

It takes 18 weeks from the time the bulbs are potted until they bloom and during all but five weeks of that time bulbs must be kept in a cool (35 degrees F. to 48 degrees F.) location, such as a basement, unheated closet, attic or garage.

Here are easy, step-by-step instructions from the Netherlands Flower-bulb Institute for forcing tulips, daffodils and hyacinths.

— Select a container twice the depth of the bulb and which has a bottom drainage hole. (If you use a new clay pot, soak it overnight in water.) Make sure the pot is thoroughly clean — inside and out.

— Use light, well-drained soil (potting soil, peat moss and sand in equal amounts).

— Place a few flat pebbles or pieces of broken clay pot over the drainage hole and fill the container halfway with soil.

— Place tulip bulbs so that the flat side is facing the side of the pot. Hyacinths, daffodils and other bulbs should be positioned upright with the tips of the bulbs level with the container rim.

— Gently tamp soil firmly around the base of bulbs.

— Once bulbs are in place, add more soil mixture to cover small bulbs completely, but leave tips of larger bulbs exposed.

— Water soil thoroughly and let drain.

— Label the container with the variety of bulb flower, color and potting date.

— Do not fertilize.

— Place pots in cool location (see above) and water regularly.

After about 10 weeks, roots will begin to grow out of the drainage hole and green shoots will emerge from the bulbs. Move the container to a cool (60 degrees F. to 65 degrees F.), sunny room. In 20 to 25 days, buds will open.

You can prolong the life of flowers by keeping them away from radiators, heaters and drafts. And, when the bulbs have finished flowering, save them for planting outdoors in fall. Bulbs that have been forced will not bloom again indoors, but they may flower a second time in the garden.

Window coverings practical, lovely

By BARBARA MAYER
Associated Press

While the window coverings you select can enhance the beauty of your rooms, the same coverings have other functions as well.

They can enhance and frame a view, screen the interior to provide privacy, and control noise and light entry into the room. The window treatment you select can also save or squander energy.

Not all functions are equally important at every window. By deciding on the primary job of a particular covering at a specific window you will in the process more easily decide where to put the emphasis.

If you like the view, choose a treatment which clears the window by drawing back beside it. Draperies and vertical blinds are especially useful here. Or, select a treatment that rises above the window glass. Shades or blinds fill the bill. You may also choose to select a treatment in a sheer material that lets you see the view through the covering.

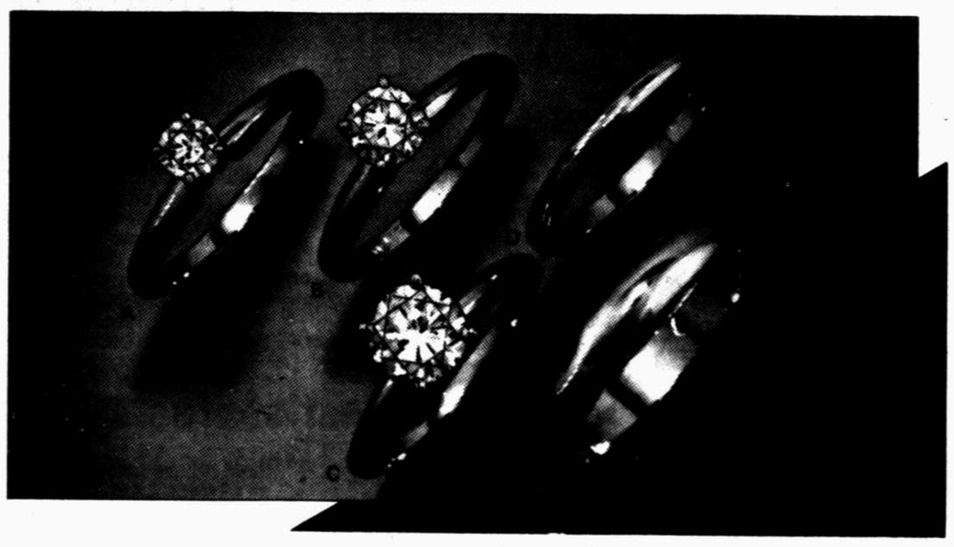

Ceiling-to-floor windows call for a ceiling-mounted treatment. Some large windows are installed so that you can place brackets on the wall just above the glass. Still other large windows may really be several ordinary windows butted frame to frame. Multiple windows look their best when treated so they form a single focal point.

Three easy ways to unify several windows are: a decorative rod over all the windows; a valance stretched the length of the windows; or a cornice stretched over the windows.

Many rooms have several single windows which are not the same size. The experts suggest starting your planning with the largest or the most difficult. Then dress the rest of the single windows in a scaled-down version of the first.

A skinny single window need not look like a lonely soldier on sentry duty. To make it seem wider and more important, hang draperies well out on the wall.

Create a designer dining room with new designs from Vogue Patterns for Living. This room features contemporary balloon shade window treatments, table accessories and pillows, all coordinated and adjustable to fit individual sizing needs. The decorating package includes complete information for measuring, cutting and sewing; pattern pieces where needed; a decorating guide with yardage information and designer tips.

A traditional living room comes alive with accents adding a "professional" decorator's touch. Swagged window treatments, distinctively trimmed pillows or custom fabric lampshades create a total room scheme. And it's all adustable to fit sizing needs.

Home decorating designs look professional

NEW YORK — Vogue Patterns recently introduced "Vogue Patterns for Living," a new line of complete home decorating packages providing understandable discussion of design concepts plus concrete step-by-step patterns and instructions for achieving desired looks.

Made for those who love designer looks but not designers' fees, many of the projects can be made at a fraction of the cost of projects custom-ordered by professional designers for clients.

"We help home sewers decorate like the pros," said Herman Phynes, director of The Fashion Information Center at Butterick Co., originator of the new decorating patterns.

"...we take a total look at a room, examining it from the standpoint of theme and use, shape, light, colors and textures, flooring, paint or wallcovering, fabrics and furnishings, flowers and accessories," he said. "Together these elements create the total environment. But many people find planning the interaction of so many elements to be confusing or overwhelming, so we provide design direction."

Included in the line are four custom designer packages for bedrooms, living rooms and dining rooms. Each envelope contains complete instructions for measuring, cutting and sewing; pattern pieces where needed; and an eight-page illustrated decorator guide with yardage information and designer tips on topics ranging from fabric swatching and theme selection to lighting and floral arrangements.

Each room package retails for $8 and contains coordinated ensembles following different decorating schemes using the same essential elements.

To many do-it-yourself decorators the introduction of a lampshade pattern will be news. The lampshade, part of the living room package, can be made either crisp and sophisticated or soft and romantic.

Other looks in the line are balloon shades, swag curtains and overly-long tablecloths.

Rugs define activity spaces

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. I am moving into a fairly large three-room apartment.

I am planning to cover the old floor with either a simulated wood in vinyl or simulated ceramic tile.

The living room is cut up with several alcoves and nooks off the main area. I like this because in one space I want a mini-office and in another a dining space. I hesitate to use room dividers because that will defeat the purpose of one sweeping space.

I would like to blend the room so it seems less chopped but I would like the spaces to have some individuality. What would you suggest? — R.P.

A. You have selected a good strategy to keep the room spacious with a new floor covering.

Instead of room dividers that physically restrict your spaces, consider area rugs to use in various parts of the room, all the same in color scheme and style. This would emphasize the openness of the room but still give some separateness to each area.

A rug in your seating area, a rug under your dining table and another in your office space would soften the large expanse of hard surface floor covering but would not restrict traffic flow or the eye.

Q. I have a very old home that I want to remodel. I want to lighten the whole house, which is very dark with wood paneling and dark doors. I want to start in the living room and work out from there.

The house is small so I think I should use the same color scheme throughout. What color scheme would be pleasing to work in this way? I want a warm look but nothing too dramatic. I like traditional things and will be recovering old furniture and buying some new things. — T.C.

A. Color and paint can help you turn a dark house into a pleasing, updated light one. Unless the wood paneling is antique and very finely crafted, you might consider painting over the paneling with a light cream or pale gold tone. Repeat the same on the ceiling and woodwork, including doors and windows.

Choose a slightly deeper gold color for the carpeting. You might select a pale peach to dusty shrimp tone for a pair of chairs and a stripe of gold, peach and pale turquoise for the sofa. If you would prefer a floral print in those shades and even additional ones, that would be equally pretty. And you could do the chairs in the print or floral instead of the sofa, just reversing the fabrics.

I'd probably continue the light gold or cream throughout the house as the basic color. In another room you might use lots of the peach or shrimp as a main color and accent with the turquoise.

Manufactured housing will take great strides in growth and development over the next two decades. In fact, within 15 years, half of our total new housing supply will be produced by automated construction systems.

That's the prediction of Richard M. (Rusty) Morrison, director of the Manufactured Housing Council of the National Association of Home Builders.

A "manufactured" house is one that is primarily constructed in a factory. Complete "modules" or "panels" are manufactured and assembled in the factory — then trucked to its home site for final assembly and completion of details.

The finished product, erected on its permanent landscaped lot, looks like any other home. As for quality, it is usually as good or better than its stick-built neighbor house.

At this point, the manufactured home price tag is about the same as a conventional new home. But the speed of construction, and sometimes the higher quality, are motivating more buyers to opt for a home born and nurtured on a factory assembly line.

Of Cattle & Kings

Text by David Lee Forrest

In 1907, Foy Proctor moved from an area ranch to attend sixth grade in Midland's small two-story, eight-room public school.

Since then, Midland has grown from a cow town with a population of less than 2,100 to an oil industry city bustling with nearly 100,000 people; the school district now has an enrollment of more than 18,000; and Proctor, winner of the 1984 Golden Spur Award, has prospered.

Proctor's office in the First National Bank Building is modestly decorated with memorabilia of his long ranching career. Behind his desk is a photograph of his late wife taken at one of their ranches and another photo of cowboys visiting his ranch: actor Slim Pickens and cowboy singer Rex Allen.

"I'VE KNOWN HIM all his life," Proctor said of Allen.

Allen's father, Horace Allen, was a cowboy on Proctor's 3-Links Ranch. Proctor, and other ranchers in the area, contributed to a fund to pay for medical treatment to correct Rex's crossed-eyes when he was young.

On another wall are pictures of his two ranch managers — Junior Hays of the Foy Proctor Ranch and Melvin Cotten of the C Ranch — both of whom have worked for Proctor more than 30 years.

Proctor almost seems more proud of his ranch hands' loyalty than he is of his own success.

"NOTHING TO brag about," he said chewing on the end of a cigar, "but I've done pretty well."

For his lifetime of achievements, Proctor received the National Golden Spur Award Friday evening at the Lubbock Civic Center. The Midland City Council had also proclaimed Friday "Foy Proctor Day" in his honor.

Proctor is the seventh recipient of the Golden Spur Award, a gilded OK spur encased in a Steuben crystal presentation piece.

The award, sponsored by the American National CowBelles, the American Quarter Horse, National Cattlemen's, National Wool Growers, Ranching Heritage, Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers associations, is presented annually to a person "who has made significant lifetime contributions to the industry."

PROCTOR WAS born September 28, 1895 on a ranch between Abilene and Ballinger. His parents, L.C. and Rieta Proctor, were ranchers in Runnels County.

Proctor said his father was "not a large rancher, but always a rancher."

Proctor borrowed money on his own when he was 18 to get into the cattle trading business and in 1917 began ranching on his own near Seminole.

His brother Leonard continued running the old family ranch near the southeastern corner of Midland County.

"I WAS ALWAYS looking over the fence a little bit," Proctor said.

He joined the Marines Corps during World War I and served with the Eleventh Marine Regiment in France.

After the war, Proctor returned to Midland and resumed trading cattle and working as a cowboy. He married the former Hahl Mitchell in 1921. Mrs. Proctor died in 1972. The couple had no children.

Proctor also started buying cattle after the war to supply the Brass and Myers Ranch in Nebraska. Eventually, his reputation as a cattle trader spread until he was shipping local calves to operators throughout the Midwest.

IN JUST ONE five-day stretch in the 1930s, he oversaw the loading of more than 15,000 cattle in Midland, Odessa and Stanton on railroad cars bound for Nebraska.

"I bought everybody's calves here for years," Proctor said. His customers in the cornbelt apparently had great faith in his ability to buy good cattle for them. "They'd never come to look at them."

"He was probably the best judge of a man, a cow and a horse," Midlander Tom Linebery said of his friend Proctor. "Many, many people think he probably is the best cowman in the United States."

AT FIRST, Proctor just leased large amounts of land for ranching. Although primarily a cowman, he also ran 30,000 sheep on leased land early in his career.

He bought his first ranch — the 3-Links in Willcox, Ariz. — in 1937. In 1947, he leased the 160,000-acre C Ranch north of Midland, which he has operated ever since, and three years later, he bought the Magdalena Ranch in New Mexico.

In 1953, Proctor purchased the 95 sections (a section is a square mile — 640 acres) in the Panhandle, near Channing, that became the Foy Proctor Ranch. Most of that land had originally been part of the historic XIT Ranch.

SIMULTANEOUSLY he managed his ranching kingdom in the three states until he sold 3-Links in 1965 and Magdalena in 1966.

"I've had lots of cattle in my time," Proctor said.

He also left the cattle trading business about 25 years ago when the Internal Revenue Service informed him that it planned to classify him as a trader and disallow capital gains on his herds.

Proctor disliked this so much that he simply quit trading.

During his 77 years in Midland, Proctor has also found time to serve as president of the school board for five years, city councilman, president of Citizens Savings and Loan Association, director of the First National Bank of Midland and Midland National Bank, Midland Memorial Hospital board member, in 1935, was the first president of the Midland Fair Association.

"The Almanac of Investments" says one of the most expensive cars ever built was the 1969 Presidential Lincoln Continental Executive.

Even if all four tires are shot out, it can travel at 50 miles an hour on inner rubber-edged steel discs. The estimated cost of the car is $500,000.

Blacksmith finds his job changing with time

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — There is no shade from a spreading chestnut tree to cool Fred Hutt after spending a warm afternoon over a white-hot forge.

There are no wagons or horses either, but as the sign on his 156-year-old building says, Hutt is a blacksmith.

He is slight and a bit under average height, but there is no doubt about his upper body strength when he handles his tools.

Hutt, who shod his last horse in 1966, now spends his days sharpening drill bits. He also repairs and designs special brackets and instruments in his shop, located just a few blocks from Louisville's downtown shopping and business district.

No job is too small or too large, and Hutt takes special pride in pointing out that he built a grader for Churchill Downs without a blueprint. That led to similar jobs for three other tracks.

Hutt said he had also built the trams to transport fans around the Louisville race track. The third-generation blacksmith said the business had been associated with Churchill Downs for more than 50 years. He's now working on starting gates for the track's new museum.

Hutt, 57, is a blacksmith because his father was one, as was his grandfather. In 1947, after three years of college, he joined his father in a business that's been in the family almost 100 years.

PROCTOR

"THEY COME KIND of natural," he said of his civic activities. "If a fellow uses his time, he'll have time to do it.

"I even found time to judge a lot of rodeos. But I'd be trading some even then." Proctor was an active rodeo judge for 15 years in Texas and New Mexico. He was also on the board of directors of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association.

Even though Proctor's ranching operations have been far-flung, he has "always had a home in Midland."

"MIDLAND HAS always been my home, even though I've been scattered around."

"It's an oil town now. It used to be a headquarters for cattle people from all over," Proctor said, sounding a little wistful for the days when cattle was king in Midland.

"It was a little village, but it was a good one. It was a 100 percent cow town.

"I've never been in the oil business. The cattle business has been my whole lick."

PROCTOR IS cautiously optimistic about the city in which he has grown. "I'm hoping it'll survive the problems it's had. I think it will. I think Midland is going to have a very promising future."

Asked if the cattle business wasn't just as risky as the oil business, Proctor replied, "Yeah, it was risky, but if you don't risk anything, you don't get anything."

Pillows start game of 'Musical Furniture'

By ERMA BOMBECK

All I said a few weeks ago was, "These throw pillows on the sofa are looking a little shabby."

You'd have thought I had just said something obscene like, "Turn up the MTV."

My husband froze with the newspaper in his hands. For a moment he stopped breathing. The blood drained from his face. "You're not going to start again, are you?" he whispered.

"Start what?" I asked.

"Playing musical furniture."

"Don't be silly," I said. "I love the house just the way it is. I just thought the pillows looked a little tacky. Maybe I'll pick out some material tomorrow."

The material was a remnant and a real steal, which was just as well because the pillows clashed with the sofa and it helped defray the cost of new slipcovers.

Painting the walls was the only reasonable thing to do since the freshly covered furniture made them look dirty. When the piano was moved, it left a definite mark on the rug, so naturally that had to be replaced. What else could you do?

When the piano was moved to the living room wall, that meant the console had to be moved to the hallway and with better light the white glass marks stuck out like black hair at a golden anniversary party. What could we do but refinish it?

Of course, when we took away the console, that meant we lost a table for the lamp and you can't sit in a chair without light, so we had to get a couple of floor lamps.

Besides, we needed an extra table lamp in the bedroom. And it matched perfectly after we bought new spreads and matching draperies. And after we cleaned the rug, I must say everything looked like new.

It would have been a shame not to paint the outside of the house and put in a couple of new shade trees while we were on our feet and had our old clothes on.

For the first time in weeks my husband sank into his next-to-favorite chair (the old one is being rebuilt and recovered) last night and said, "Where are the new throw pillows?"

"The print was too busy. I'm going out tomorrow and see if I can find some cheapie fabric to redo them. Don't worry, I'm not going to start again!"

Young people drinking less

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's young people are showing continuing signs of reducing their consumption of alcohol, according to the American Council of Life Insurance.

The council's national survey of 18- to 36-year-olds showed that 64 percent of the respondents said they were "careful" about their consumption of alcohol.

Similarly, for the second consecutive year, the percentage of high school seniors who reported being "daily users" of alcohol — consuming it 20 or more times a month — dropped in 1983, according to the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

Last year's rate dropped to 5.5 percent compared with 5.7 percent in 1982, and the peak of 6.9 percent in 1979.

Risner presents program on 'war on drugs'

General Robinson Risner, the executive director of the "Texans' War on Drugs," will present a program 7 p.m. Monday and 9:30 a.m. Tuesday at Theatre Midland.

Risner began an Army and Air Force career in 1943 which lasted 33 years. Having served in three wars, he became America's 20th Jet Ace and progressed to the rank of Brigadier General in 1974. He twice received the Air Force Cross, the Air Force's highest award.

During the Vietnam War, Risner was captured and held prisoner of war for 7½ years. It was during his captivity in the Hanoi prison that he decided to work with young people when he returned to the United States.

Upon his release from prison, Risner wrote "The Passing of the Night," relating his experiences as a POW and dedicated it to the youth of America.

Risner's strong concern for the youth of America attracted the attention of Ross Perot, Chairman of the Texans' War on Drugs Committee and founder of Dallas-based Electronic Data Systems. Perot appointed Risner to his present position.

Risner has launched an intensive campaign to educate young people about drug abuse, involving thousands of presentations, hundreds of school teachers receiving in-service training on drug abuse, hundreds of speakers being trained and many hundreds of community drug awareness groups being organized.

Risner's program is sponsored by The Junior League of Midland, Inc. The public is invited and admission is free.

Former addict wrote book

Hearst News Service

You'd never guess that practical Marie-Gisele Landes-Fuss, the California correspondent for Paris-Match and F magazine is a former junkie unless you read her book, "A Red Brick Building Ugly as Hell in Venice, California."

Now 48, Landes-Fuss's troubles began when she was 20, the daughter of a French-Jewish doctor in a little town 300 kilometers from Paris. She wrote a book, "as a joke," which was unexpectedly bought. She was even offered a contract to do seven more books.

But there was not to be another book until two years ago, when she wrote the story of her addiction and her recovery for a French audience. It became a best-seller in France last year and, translated, it has just been published in America.

When she was 20, "I started to take pills and dope. My excuse was that I wanted to do better work. I took Valium and Librium, all kinds of barbiturates, tranquilizers to relax, to go to sleep, to wake up. I did not write the seven books, not even one. But, strangely enough, I could maintain myself as a free-lance journalist."

She became adept at securing pills and prescriptions from French doctors. There were overdoses and seizures, there was also "the taste of perfect happiness."

This went on for an incredible 16 years, until she came to America for the first time, to Southern California for a three-week holiday with friends, "with my purse packed with pills." She woke up one day in a hospital, believing that it was Monday when it was really Friday.

Landes-Fuss wound up in a drug rehabilitation center called Tuum Est run by former addicts and housed in the red brick building of the book's title. She decided she'd try it for three weeks, but was to spend two years in the red brick building, until she left and gradually resumed her free-lance journalism career.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Man wants to start exercising

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to start an exercise program, but I'm not certain whether I should go for testing first or whether I should just start and see how it goes. I am 31 years old and have a desk job. Are there any general rules about who should be checked out before undertaking such a program? Overall I would say that I'm in fairly good health. — Alan, Wheaton, Md.

Dear Alan: Many people are able to increase their exercise level with no danger; others, however, may be at risk. Such factors as age and previous activity level must be considered.

According to the guidelines of the American College of Sports Medicine, a person with no symptoms and who is under 35 years of age, who has no history of cardiovascular disease, and who has none of the risk factors for coronary heart disease does not require special screening if he or she has undergone a medical evaluation within the previous year.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I use a diaphragm and I find it very satisfactory. But I have one question. If I have sexual relations more than once during the same night, do I have to use a cream or jelly again? — Vi, Los Angeles, Calif.

Dear Vi: Dr. Louise B. Tyrer, of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America in New York City, recommends that diaphragm users insert a spermicidal cream, jelly, or foam before each act of intercourse after the first one. In addition, the diaphragm should remain in place for at least six hours after the last act of intercourse.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you explain in simple terms why some people with coronary artery disease go for bypass surgery, while others seem to be able to get by with using some kind of medication? — Herb, Knoxville, Tenn.

Dear Herb: Dr. Stanley K. Brockman, of Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, explains that the severity of the disorder is the key to the advisability of surgery. A patient with coronary artery disease who has only occasional pain can be treated with medication; however, if the pain is not well controlled with medication, surgery may become advisable.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Over the years I have seen women paint their cheeks, lips, eyes, etc., with a whole variety of colors. I'm not old fashioned and I like to look at pretty women, but, from a long-term standpoint, is it a good idea for a woman to put all that paint on her face? — Ed, NYC

Dear Ed: There is very little known about the long-term effects of cosmetics. It is known that many ingredients can penetrate the skin, but studies are needed before their long-term effects can be determined.

Improper weight training may injure muscles

Copley News Service

Weight training, for all its benefits in increasing lean muscle mass and enhancing strength, can cause injury to muscles, bones and joints if done improperly.

And improper form is not uncommon among the uninitiated masses who pump iron and strap themselves into weight machines

Mike Mentzer, former Mr. Universe, identifies the most common mistakes as:

— failing to exercise a muscle through the full range of motion;
— poor warm-up;
— lifting weights that are too heavy;
— holding your breath while lifting.

People with insurance spend more on teeth

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans with dental insurance are will spend more money to take good care of their teeth than those without coverage.

That, at least, is the conclusion of a five-year study conducted by David Grambowski and Douglas Conrad of the University of Washington.

The study also found that the better a person's coverage, the higher his or her dental costs are likely to be, the researchers recently told the Health Insurance Association of America.

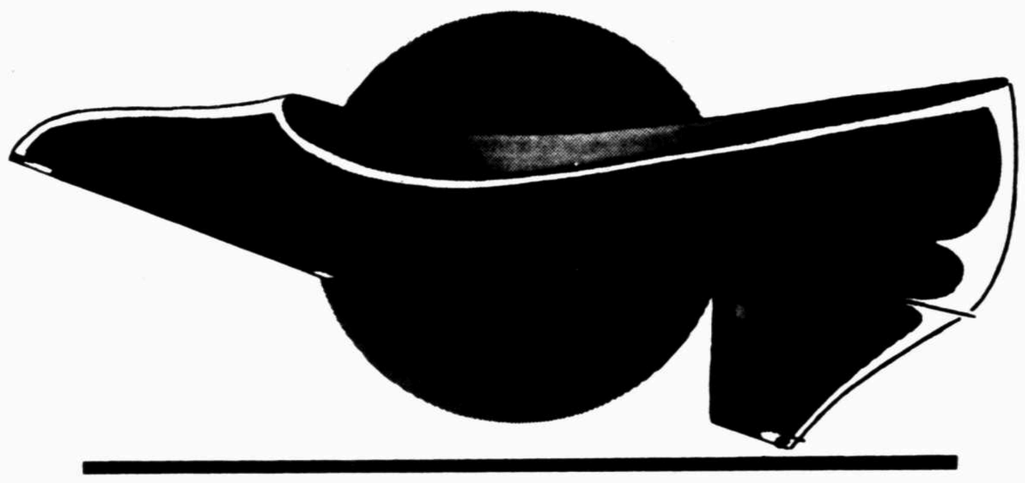

And, the more that an employer pays toward the employees' dental bills, the more those employees are likely to spend for their dental care, they said.

DEAR DOCTOR

Herpes caused by two subtypes of virus

By JEANNE A. PETREK

Q. I have learned a lot about herpes since I have gotten it, but I still have several questions: 1) Can the herpes of "cold sores" cause herpes on the genital area? 2) Why do people who have once gotten herpes have recurrences? What happens to the virus between recurrences? 3) What causes recurrences? 4) I realize that herpes may infect the newborn during vaginal delivery.

A. 1) There are two subtypes of herpes simplex virus. Type I usually causes sores in and around the mouth; but, in addition, it may cause 10 percent of genital herpes. Type II is found in genital infections. Oral-genital sex probably accounts for genital infections when herpes Type I is found in the genital area.

"Accidental" infection of Type I has been postulated. For example, a woman with a cold sore might have Type I on her fingers and transfer it when inserting a tampon.

2) In about one-half of patients with their first instance of herpes, recurrence may be expected, with the interval ranging from two weeks to six months or more. The virus remains in the sensory nerve roots of the pelvis, close to the spinal cord. It persists in a dormant state until it begins rapidly reproducing itself in the next recurrence.

3) No one knows what causes recurrences, but in a few patients they may be provoked, among other causes, by intercourse, menstruation, genital infection or psychological stress factors.

With the passage of time, the duration of the recurrences becomes shorter and the intervals between them longer. The recurrences do eventually stop altogether; though some individuals continue to have genital herpes attacks for several years.

4) The risk of infant infection by the mother has been overstated. Babies born to mothers who develop their first herpes infection near delivery are at the most risk. Between 25 and 40 percent of those infants become infected and the chance of their dying reaches 60 percent.

Cesarean section performed before the membranes rupture largely prevents these serious developments. Babies born to women with recurrent herpes attacks are at risk only if there is an active viral sore (that is, a recurrence) at the mother's genitals near delivery time, when, again, Cesarean section is necessary. With examinations and virus cultures close to delivery, the dangers can all but be eliminated.

Q. I have heard that the pill protects against cancer of the ovary. How common and deadly is this cancer and how do pill users benefit in fighting it?

A. Cancer of the ovary ranks fourth behind breast, lung and colon cancer as a cause of cancer death among American women. It has been estimated that one out of every 72 women will develop ovarian cancer. This disease accounts for one-fourth of all gynecologic malignancies, but causes half of all gynecologic cancer deaths.

Thus it is the leading cause of death from female genital organs and is even slightly greater than the death rate from cervix and endometrium cancer combined. Cancer of the ovary is more often incurable than cervix or endometrial cancer because it, by contrast, is usually discovered only when advanced.

Since 1960 when the pill was widely introduced in the United States, more than 40 million women have used it. After more than two decades, the study of about 5,000 women by the National Cancer Institute shows that women who have taken the pill over the long term are half as likely as other women to develop cancer of the ovary.

The protective effect was seen in women who started taking the pill some 15 years ago and who took it for 11 years or longer. Since the pill is the only method of birth control that suppresses ovulation (release of the egg from the ovary), the evidence suggests that it might decrease ovarian cancer by precisely that means.

Dr. Jeanne A. Petrek is a columnist for King Features Syndicate.

Tips offered on hiring insurance agents

NEW YORK (AP) — If you need a new insurance agent, look for one the way you'd look for a doctor or lawyer: ask friends, relatives or colleagues which agents and companies have given them good service.

That's the advice of Nancy Golonka, vice president of consumer affairs-education at the Insurance Information Institute. She suggests talking to a few agents or company representatives before choosing one.

The right person, she points out, will be interested in your problems, will take the time to explain what you should do, will know or find the answers to your questions, and will inspire your trust and confidence.

"Pirate" ships, surrounded by other local and visiting boats in George Town Harbour, participate in the Cayman Islands' annual Pirates Week, scheduled this year for Oct. 20-27.

'Pirates Week' annual celebration

From Staff Reports

Pirates Week in in the Cayman Islands is a festive excuse for Caymanians and their tourist guests to relive the buccaneering days when the notorious Henry Morgan and Edward Teach (Blackbeard) reigned in the islands and swashbucked themselves into history books.

This year the eighth celebration of Pirates Week will be Oct. 20-27. Kick-off will be a pirates' landing at George Town Harbour from a replica of a pirate ship, and will continue with land and underwater treasure hunts, a float parade, fireworks, steel band concerts, street dancing, a Heritage Fair with local foods and crafts, music, an art drama festival and a Pirates' Ball.

These will be only a few of the festivites during the event, though fishing enthusiasts will escape the priates' gaze long enough to sneak off in search of the giant marlin, tuna and dolphin famous in the Cayman Islands' waters. The local Rotary Club will sponsor a fishing tournament.

In charge of the fesitval this year will be black-bearded, barrel-chested Mike Lockwood, a local contractor who comes from Yorkshire, England, and who looks much like the legendary Blackbeard himself. Lockwood has been involved in the annual event since its beginnings eight years ago.

Mike Lockwood, a look-alike for the famed pirate Blackbeard, heads up the 1984 edition of Pirates Week in the Cayman Islands. Lockwood, a local contractor orginally from Yorkshire, England, has been involved in the annual festival since it began eight years ago.

After the initial landing on George Town's Hog Sty Bay — a reenactment of an actual Spanish raid in the 17th century, with smoke coming from the pirate ship's cannon — the "English governor" will be captured, put in a cage and wheeled to the fort.

After some manhandling by the invaders wielding cutlasses and pistols, the "governor" will be released, usually unharmed. (It must be admitted there is no great rush of volunteers for this role, leading though it may be.)

After the float parade which follows, there will be a night of revelry as hectic, though not as bloody, as in bygone days. The pace will continue all nine days, with pirates making constant raids on events such as the cocktail parties in the hotels on Grand Cayman's Seven Mile Beach.

Pasengers from the four Miami-based cruise ships which call at George Town weekly are expected to get involved in the caper; a treasure hunt with glittering prizes will be reserved for visitors to the island.

Shops will have window displays of the islands' heritage, and entertainment is planned, including performances by "Mighty Sparrow," the Grenada-born singer who lives in New York and does concert tours of the United States and the Caribbean.

Following the festival, law and order will be restored and the pirates banished for another year.

Ranch is 'Paradise' found

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

BUFFALO, Wyo. — The word "paradise" is one of the most overused — and one of the most abused — in the travel industry. Perhaps only "shangri-la" is used more often and with less accuracy by promoters to describe their resorts, hotels and restaurants.

In the Bahamas, for example, they took a perfectly innocent island named Hogg and renamed it Paradise Island. Then they despoiled the pretty little place with high rise hotels, casinos, hookers and hustlers. Today, Paradise Island is about as far from a real paradise as you can get.

But there is one paradise, high in the mountains of Wyoming, that can claim the name without blushing or apologizing. It is a nearly mystical niche where the owls call at night and the eagles soar over the peaks in the cool clearness of the day.

The Paradise Ranch is not a publicist's idea: it has nestled in the Big Horn Mountains since the mid-19th century when N. H. Meldrum found his personal slice of happiness and named it Paradise.

It was to this place that Owen Wister came when he was researching his epic Western novel "The Virginian." Close to here Custer met his fate on the long grass of the Little Big Horn, and not far away the Johnson County Cattle War erupted. Buffalo Bill Cody used to ride through these parts, and it was here that the Meldrum family raised their children, shot bull elk in the meadows, and caught fiesty orange-bellied brook trout in the two small streams that rush through the land.

Paradise Ranch has a magical hold on people as firm today as it was at the turn of the century. Today these 158 acres sitting in the midst of more than a million acres of national forest are at once luxurious and primitive.

The Minneapolis-based Apache Corporation acquired the Paradise two years ago and has already poured more than a million dollars into the property to upgrade its facilities. There are 10 cabins accommodating 36 guests (there will four more cabins by year's end), a comfortable dining room and a large lounge and dance hall. Next year, perhaps, there will be a swimming pool.

Guests stay in beautifully-appointed, luxurious log cabins with living rooms, fireplaces, kitchens, and spacious bedrooms and baths. Yet, mount a horse and ride for 10 minutes and you will be in one of the wildest areas of America, a place where elk bugle and deer graze, where pine squirrels chatter at you from the treetops and moose stand belly-deep in clear mountain lakes.

The combination of comfort and wilderness is what makes this place such a paradise — and a very affordable one at that, since the ranch charges only $60 per day per person for lodging, activities (including two horseback rides each day) and three meals. And what meals they are: pancakes, coffee cake, eggs, sausage, hash browns and fresh-caught trout (you do the catching) for breakfast; high-stacked sandwiches, soup, potato chips, and vegetables for lunch; steaks, fried chicken, baked potatoes, fruit pies for dinner.

Appetites naturally increase here at 7,600 feet, especially after a day of riding through the forests or taking an early morning hike over meadows covered with frost, the blades of grass snapping like popcorn as you make your way along the edge of the forest.

If you get up early enough, you'll see the ranch's string of horses, their nostrils steaming as they thunder down from the high mountain meadows to the ranch corral. Morning is a good time, too, to talk with the wranglers as they feed and curry their charges. You can pick out your steed for the morning ride as you watch the sun peek over the bold outlines of Fan Rock, a geological wonder dominating the far end of the meadow.

After breakfast you can take a morning trail ride, fish for the always-willing brook and rainbow trout in the ranch's streams, play ping-pong or "Trivial Pursuit" in the ranch's activity room, or just relax on the porch of your cabin.

If that's not enough, the ranch offers daily planned activities: a visit to a rodeo in nearby Buffalo, a tour of historic Sheridan, a mini-pack trip for fishing and photography, a visit to a working cattle ranch, the opportunity to play tennis or golf, take a trail ride and eat a chuck wagon supper, or dance to local musicul group.

The only trouble in this paradise is finding enough time to do everything you want to do.

IF YOU GO:

Paradise Ranch is open from May to mid-November. The current cost per person per day is $60 ($390 for seven days), with children accommodated for $50 per day ($325 per week). Children three or younger are free. The price includes three meals per day, lodging, supervised activities and two one-hour horseback rides daily. The trip to the mountain camp costs $65 per day per person, including all meals. Also available are mini-pack trips of one day for $45 per day per person, and hunting trips at a variety of prices. All prices are expected to increase for the 1985 season. The ranch will pick you up at the Sheridan Airport (served by Frontier commuter) if you make the request in advance. Details are available by writing the Paradise Guest Ranch at P.O. Box 790, Buffalo, WY 82834.

Sitka retains flavor of Russian past

By ROBIN and PATRICIA HARRIS
Hearst News Service

SITKA, Alaska — In a most sympathetic fashion, this little town of 8,000 on Alaska's southern coast is a living monument to the vanished empire of the earlier, more cooperative Russia than the intractable U.S.S.R. confronting us today.

Russian influence is mixed with that of the Tlingit Indians, the tribe which had ruled the region before the victorious Czarist invasion. The Tlingits, ironically, were the distant successors to Siberian nomads who settled here thousands of years earlier.

The resulting blend of two widely contrasting cultures, the elegance of Imperial Russia and the primitive lifestyle of the aborigines provides Sitka with a manifestly distinctive atmosphere. Completing its tourism assets is the fact that this is the gateway to some of the finest fishing, hunting, camping and scenery on the continent.

A RUSSIAN FLAVOR is immediately apparent as arriving travelers are handed a brochure of greeting by pretty girl guides from the Sitka Tourist Bureau. The cover bears a logo of an unmistakably Russian cartoon figure, fur-hatted, black-booted, grandly moustached and broadly smiling, who is saying "Little Drook." The text explains that the words are loosely translated from a traditional Russian welcome for old friends.

Nearby, a billboard advertises Sitka's leading theatrical offering, "The New Archangel Dancers," who perform Russian folk dances in the concert hall. They are just as entertaining and authentic as a similar troupe we once watched in Moscow. To maintain a fair balance, an equally talented company of Tlingits, doing their own ethnic routines, presents daily shows in a neighboring hall.

DOWNTOWN SITKA, extending only a few square blocks, is dominated by the impressive Russian Orthodox Cathedral of St. Michael's, built in 1840 and still the Mother Church of the faith in America. It is an entrancing spiritual center, filled with priceless treasures of Orthodox ecclesiastic art, ancient icons, paintings, bejewelled priestly robes, porcelain and gold and silver objects.

The Cathedral is no ornamental exhibit for tourists, but a busy house of worship, for Russia left a strong religious legacy behind after selling Alaska to the U.S. in 1867. Their people were allowed three years to determine whether to return home or stay here; several hundred elected to remain.

They spread their doctrines to the Tlingits, with whom they were existing in harmony by the mid-1800s. Today, there are 94 active Orthodox parishes, the majority with Indian congregations in the 49th state. Many married the fetching Tlingit maidens.

One descendent of such a union distinguished himself at a very young age. In 1927, over 142 contestants, Benny Benson, then 13, won an American Legion competition for an official Alaska flag. His emblem, portraying flowers against a blue background, topped by the North Star to mark the northerly location and the Big Dipper constellation, signifying strength, flies over all public buildings today.

EVERY AMERICAN community has its war memorial, but Sitka's commemorates a conflict honored nowhere else, the savage battles between the Tlingits defending their land and the Russians seeking a base for the lucrative fur trade. After several initial defeats, the Czar dispatched an expeditionary force under Gen. Alexander Baranof to crush the natives.

Castle Hill is a site of epochal magnitude, considering the riches it brought the U.S. in petroleum, minerals and timber. It was here that the deal was formalized by which the U.S. acquired the most profitable bonanza of all time by paying $72,000,000 — 2 cents per acre — for the immense 586,400 square miles which comprise Alaska.

SITKA NEVER AGAIN will be known as "The Paris of the Pacific," as it was then, but we are confident that you will thoroughly enjoy visiting what is left.

For information on licenses for hunting, fishing, campsites, plane and boat charters and lodging, contact the Sitka Tourist Bureau in the Centennial Hall. Sitka can be reached by air from Seattle, Juneau and Anchorage and is a port of call on the Alaska Marine Highway.

Steam locomotives common in India

Nearly two-thirds of India's 11,000 locomotives are still powered by steam, according to National Geographic. But diesel and electric locomotives carry over 80 percent of the nation's freight and passengers.

Guide adds 'show biz' to cruise

The audience seemed to be paying attention, but not too carefully. For Bender's stage is the deck of a Circle Line tour boat and the audience was busy gaping at Manhattan's skyline.

"Manhattan will be on your left, and the rest of the world on your right," he announced moments before the 3:45 p.m. boat pulled away from the Circle Line pier at 42nd Street on a warm Saturday afternoon. Members of the audience obediently looked each way.

Bender is one of 10 tour guides on the Circle Line boats that circumnavigate the island of Manhattan. He and his colleagues have all had experience in the theater.

"It's not so much a guided tour, but a show," he says. "Here I have two audiences a day — captive. They're mine. An actor has to act, and I get to," without what he calls the "rat-race" of the theater world.

The cast of his one-man show remains the same, but the play changes constantly, depending on New York's evolving skyline, the shifting tides of celebrities in the city, even changing weather and river conditions.

"What you talk about happens to be what's on the shoreline" mixed up with current events and history, says the 38-year-old Bender, a guide for the past six seasons.

The tours run from March 30 through November 11, and Bender does a variety of things during the off-season. Among them is working on a book that he calls "a history of New York City for people who couldn't care less about the history of New York City." He has completed three chapters, and "the Dutch have just arrived," he said.

"I like every trip. Every one is a new experience," said Bender, recalling the time his boat passed a cargo spill in the Hudson. "There were 10,000 candy bars floating in the river. That made my day, talking about them."

Unlike most actors, Bender has a chance to examine his audience, which usually numbers over 500. He strolled about the ship with hands behind his back, observing the families and young couples seated in folding wooden chairs. "I size up the audience and see who speaks English," he said simply.

The boat started to chug into the Hudson River and turned left toward the harbor.

As his dramatic delivery revved up, Bender struck an Elvis Presley pose and shot his arm out toward the Chrysler Building. Then he whirled around and with mock majesty pointed out the New Jersey town of Hoboken. He pretended to have just remembered an interesting fact about Hoboken — that its most famous son is singer Frank Sinatra.

Bender is a tall, lanky man with a hairbrush mustache. He resembles at times salesman, carney barker and ballpark hawker, and can sound like Groucho Marx, vaudeville comedian or television commercial actor.

His first love is New York. He collects books about the city, does research at the New York Historical Society and says he can recite the names of every Indian tribe that ever lived in the area.

But it is New York City trivia that he recites with the most glee. Passing the new AT&T building, he told his audience that New York has more telephones than all of Central America and South America combined.

As the boat coursed southward down the Hudson, Bender added an international touch to his recitation: Joseph Stalin was so impressed by the Municipal Building at 1 Centre Street that he modeled Moscow University on it.

Soon the showpiece of the tour came into view: the Statue of Liberty. The excited tourists didn't seem to even notice its shroud of scaffolding. The statue is being renovated and is scheduled to reopen July 4, 1986.

Bender says he is unfazed by such a drastic change in his tour matter.

"I used to talk about the elevator and the stairs and why the arm was closed," he said. Now he concentrates on the repairing techniques — the removal of dents from its one-eighth of an inch copper shell and the sandblasting of its infrastructure.

"They all want to see it just as much. It's the star of the show," he said. And nobody has asked for a refund because of the refurbishment. "People do want refunds sometimes when it's raining," he added.

The boat continued its route around the southern tip of Manhattan, up the East and Harlem rivers and then back into the Hudson.

As the boat returned to its pier, Bender gave a parting plug for New York City. "It's all here," he told his audience. "If you don't have a good time in New York, you don't want to."

Naturalist's World Fair show a hit

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The bald eagle standing on Andrew Simmons' outstretched arm looks almost as big as he is, and the bird's angry, piercing screams resound through the Great Hall of the World's Fair.

Clearly, this eagle is in no mood to face the crowd in front of the stage at the Mississippi Pavilion.

Simmons' wrist is protected from the sharp talons by a heavy leather gauntlet but the eagle, though tethered by a rope, tries to fly. It flogs Simmons about the head and shoulders with powerful wings.

The audience shifts nervously as Simmons stands at the microphone, easing the weight on his arm by clutching a tripod, and talks about splendid predators, keen eyesight, nests that may measure 8 feet across and 6 feet deep. The eagle's beak is about the size of a Zulu spear head. It bobs within inches of Simmons' eyes and this bird is as mad as a wet hen.

With cool disregard for the menacing beak, Simmons tells the crowd it is too bad that some hunters still shoot at these birds, despite laws protecting them because they have become scarce.

"It would be somewhat of an embarrassment to let our national emblem disappear from the face of the earth," he says.

There is a spirited flurry as the eagle resists going back into his wooden box, which has signs warning "Keep Hands Out!" above the airholes.

Such touches of reality, and glints of low comedy, have made this twice-a-day naturalist show a hit at the Mississippi Pavilion.

Simmons, who lives in New Orleans, is 36, with lank brown hair cut pageboy style, and usually wears a khaki bush suit.

He has a variety of creatures as props in addition to the eagle, which wound up part of the World's Fair after some hunter wounded it out in Colorado and it had to have medical care.

On this day the theme is predators and he brings along a horned owl. It squats cautiously on his gauntlet and looks over the house with saucer-like eyes, revolving its head almost full circle, rather like a devil imp out of a medieval black magic tale.

Simmons also has a black leopard cub, an Asian breed but born in a zoo. It is as friendly as a collie pup and hard to hold, squirming in his arms, patting his cheek fondly with large paws, creating electronic static by trying to gnaw on the microphone.

Last, but not least, Simmons brings out a half-grown python, draping it around his shoulders like a shawl. It is already 10 feet long.

The snake crawls lazily as Simmons lectures. Its tail explores down his back, emerges between his legs and waves around inquiringly. The crowd shrieks with laughter.

Wildcatting not all luck

New books sets record straight

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Forget the image of Jed Clampett accidentally shooting his way to crude. Accept the character of J.R. Ewing for its entertainment value alone.

Replacing these misconceptions with a thoroughly researched study of the Texas wildcatter is a recently published book authored by a Midland husband-wife team, Roger M. and Diana Davids Olien.

"Wildcatters: Texas Independent Oilmen" studies in-depth this long-romanticized lifestyle, along the way substituting hard-working, business-smart individualists for the underhanded or unbelievably lucky stereotypes that have been assumed as the norm.

"Oil isn't a matter of dumb luck," said Olien, Dunagan Professor of Regional and Business History at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. "It's a matter of intelligence and hard work more than anything else."

"Chance is part of it, risk is part of it, but it isn't dumb luck," added Ms. Olien.

Many wildcatters are "traditional workaholics, only they work even harder," said Olien. After arriving in Midland in 1973, the Oliens began to take an interest in this brand of entrepreneur.

"It's hard to live in Texas very long without seeing how important oil is," said Ms. Olien. "We really didn't find any book that had the answers to the questions we had."

Beginning in 1980, the couple went looking for answers. "Wildcatters" traces the development of "King Crude" by independents as the economic lifeblood of the state. It ends with the most recent bust.

It traces the progression of the business from the early days, before Robert Penn plied his knowledge into millions and the region known as Penwell sprouted fields of oil rigs, to the the days of secondary recovery methods calling for understanding of technologies not associated with the stereotypical independent.

While countless millions have been made, many a fortune has been lost down a dry hole.

Chapters of the book do profile failures, specifically wildcatters frustrated in attempts to find oil in the Spraberry Trend before the time was right, but extensive information on the unsuccessful independents was difficult to collect. "They go to wherever elephants die," said Olien of the places in obscurity these men have found.

The difference between the haves and have nots, in many cases, came down to background knowledge, said Olien. Where the newer entrants lacked the recollections of booms and busts gone by, "the old timers had a historical view of the industry," he said.

The wiser wildcatters resorted to downturn strategies when business took a turn downward, said Olien, and spread their risks among a multitude of projects to protect against big losses.

A big part of the independent's game is gathering enough of the right kind of people to invest in a development project. "These folks know a lot about each other," he said.

He separated those experiencing financial problems in 1984 into two categories. "Late entrants" lack the financial reserves or "staying power" needed in this unpredictable

TI testing tests for deviation

RON GILMORE
Business-Oil Writer

Working night and day, technicians at Texas Instrument's Midland plant are pouring over volumes of documents in a rush to find discrepancies in the testing procedures of thousands of military-bound microchips.

"If there is a deviation in the testing program," said Norman Neuriter, TI's spokesman, "then we will fix them."

Finding deviations has been occupying much of TI's time lately.

"We have crews working around the clock," said Neuriter.

While concern over testing procedures has focused mainly on two TI plants — Midland and Taiwan — Neuriter has ruled out the Taiwan facility as a source of blame.

"We want to make it clear that Taiwan's role is that they do some assembly and some testing," said Neuriter, "but they test from testing programs set up from the U.S."

Currently the Midland plant is at the very center of attention. It is here that technicians are going over reams of printouts and pouring over mounds of documentation in order to clear TI's name.

"The amount of work is unbelievable," said Neuriter. "You get a 20-foot computer print-out and it contains nothing but solid numbers. And then you compare what it is describing against a 250-page document."

"We are comparing the tests that the customer wanted with the tests that we actually did," said Neuriter.

Neuriter sums up the mind-boggling process.

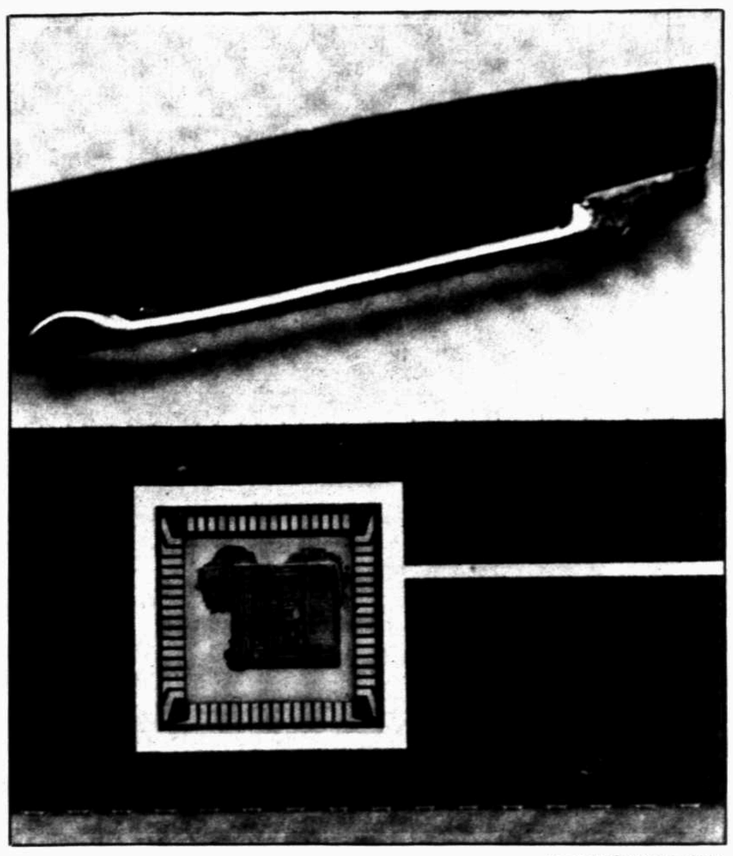

"We are talking about comparing over 7.5 million pieces of information against hundred of thousands of pages of documentation."

Neuriter is not detailed about what the findings are thus far.

"So far it has been a very small percentage of elements that have differed from what was specified," he said. "We hope to have the bulk of it cleared up in just a few weeks."

Midland's military semiconductor division, one of 37 in 17 countries, has been manufacturing circuitry for the defense department since 1980, when TI began a gradual swing away from more commercial products such as digital watches, "Speak-n-Spell" machines and hand-held calculators.

Those products were replaced with goods bearing names like TTL Schottsky Gates, TTL Low Power Flip-Flops and MIL-STD-883.

Microchips such as this one, manufactured at Midland's TI plant, are at the center of the controversy over testing deviations, that has caused the Pentagon to reject some chips.

For TI, who began implementing quality improvement programs in the early 1960's it is an irony. With on-site inspectors from government contractors and the recently developed 'quality circles' at the Midland military semi-conductor divison. TI seemed above reproach.

Quality improvement programs began at TI as early as 1960 and has over the years evolved into what is now called "People and Asset Effectiveness" or P&AE. Locally, TI uses quality circles to involve employees and management in identifying and solving problems within the opertion. Each quarter, one day is set aside as "Quality Emphasis Day".

The quality circle management presentation consists of a team of about 10 employees presenting management with their ideas for solving a specific problem within the company or department.

"Quality control is a company obsession," said Carson Smith, back in April 1983. Smith was the personnel manager for Texas Instruments, Midland.

That statement was long before serious doubts about adequate testing of computer microchips arose. Innocent-looking enough, these miniscule squares of artificial intelligence are the guiding center for military tanks, helicopters, ships and the B-52 bomber as well as an array of sophisticated weaponry.

Still, TI maintains that quality has been maintained. "It is not a question of systems reliability," said Neuriter, "it is a question of whether we delivered what we promised."

Exxon plans large gas project

Exxon Company, U.S.A. has announced the start of the first phase of development of a large gas project in southwestern Wyoming, which will cost more than one-half billion dollars and produce more than 400 million cubic feet of gas per day.

Dan Mendell, manager of Exxon's Midcontinent Division, said the first phase will involve drilling about 20 deep wells in the LaBarge field and construtiion of facilities to extract methane, carbon dioxide, and sulfur from the raw gas.

Completion of the first phase is scheduled for early 1986. The Federal Environmental Impact Statement for the project was completed in January of this year. An industrial siting permit and an air discharge permit were obtained from Wyoming state agencies in April and May. Planning and permitting for the second phase are well under way, Mendell said, with startup of the expansion set for 1987.

Composition of the reservoir gas varies greatly, but the average from Exxon's current wells is about 22 percent natural gas, or methane, 66 percent carbon dioxide, 4.5 percent hydrogen sulfide, 0.5 percent helium and 7 percent nitrogen. Mendell said Exxon's LaBarge reserves, when fully developed, may exceed 1.5 trillion cubic feet of methane and 5 trillion cubic feet of carbon dioxide.

Stearns Catalytic World Corporation of Denver and its subsidiary, Project Construction Corporation, have been awarded contracts by Exxon to provide engineering design and construction of the facilities.

ANR Pipeline Company has contracted to purchase the natural gas produced in the first phase.

Sales of carbon dioxide for use in oilfield enhanced recovery projects are being negotiated with several oil companies. Chevron, as operator of the Rangely Oil Unit in northwestern Colorado, contracted earlier this month to purchase up to 900 billion cubic feet of carbon dioxide. Amoco contracted at the same time to purchase up to 181 billion cubic feet of carbon dioxide if it elects to proceed with carbon dioxide injection in its Lost Soldier and Wertz oil fields in South Central Wyoming.

Mendell said Exxon continues to seek additional carbon dioxide sales and is positioned to supply carbon dioxide in a wide range of geographic locations as markets develop.

Elemental sulfur will be manufactured and shipped via rail. The state of the art plant will recover at least 99.7 percent of the sulfur in the inlet gas. Exxon is studying the feasibility of manufacturing helium.

Judge asked to block offshore leasing

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts officials want a federal judge to block next week's sale of offshore oil leases in the Georges Bank so there can be more study of potential harm to the rich fishing grounds.

Assistant Attorney General Stephen Leonard asked U.S. District Judge David Mazzone on Thursday to issue an order to halt Lease Sale 82, scheduled Sept. 26, because of questions about 149 environmentally sensitive tracts out of the 989 tracts set to be offered.

The environmental impact statement done for Interior Secretary William P. Clark studied the initial 25 million acres in the potential lease area and failed to focus on specific problems that could occur in key tracts in the fishing grounds, Leonard said.

"There was no alternative presented to the secretary that said, 'If I want to protect the resources out there ... what ought I to do,'" said Leonard, joined in the suit by several environmental groups.

Predictability: It's rare for the Middle East

Trying to figure what is going to happen in the Middle East is an activity for which some energy consultants are paid handsomely, but an activity that defies all logic.

When I recently asked Secretary of Energy, Donald P. Hodel, if there was any way to arrive at a few predictable senarios for the Middle East, he merely grinned and shook his head in a way that told me I must be kidding. Asked if there was an activity that the U.S. could engage in to insure uninterrupted supplies, he said seriously and simply, "pray."

The truth of the matter is nobody can accurately predict what might happen to petroleum supplies in the Middle East now or at anytime in the future, not the U.S. with all its intelligence, not the high-priced consultants—not even OPEC members.

For instance, a dilema that posed a certain amount of suspicion for the oil industry this summer was the price fluctuations of oil during the Iran-Iraq war this summer. Many outside the industry (and many inside) wondered how oil supplies could have increased during the war, while spot prices on trading exchanges dropped.

ACCORDING TO the American Petroleum Institute the answer is rather simple. OPEC members increased oil production early in the summer, possibly to counter potential supply disruptions because of the war. It was these additional supplies that contributed to the downward pressure prices. When OPEC countries saw that the threat to supplies was less than anticipated, they cut production and spot prices moved up again.

The experience of the OPEC members indicates how difficult it is, even on the near term, to predict what will happen to the Middle East and to oil supplies. The organization was not successful in the least in attempting to predict the impact of the war on supplies.

During the spring, OPEC production averaged slightly above 17.5 million barrels of crude oil a day. Production at and about this level was absorbed by gradually rising world demand which, in turn, contributed to relatively stable prices. Oil bought under contract was selling for $29 a barrel for Saudi light, on which the prices fo other world crude oil are based. The price of oil sold on the so-called spot market was changing only slightly.

BUT THEN, in late May and June, hostilities intensified and threatened oil shipments through the Strait of Hormuz. Attacks were reported on tankers docking at Iran's Kharg Island, the country's main shipping terminal, and in other locations in the northern Gulf. At that time some OPEC members considered adjusting oil production to prevent a supply reduction. Saudi Arabia and Kuwait in response to the threat, increased production.

But contrary to expectations, Iran, instead of decreasing production, increased production in June by 300,000 to 500,000 barrels per day. At the same time, additional oil from Iraq was reaching the Mediterranean through the pipeline across Turkey.

As a result of these production increases, with Iran at 2.4 million barrels a day, or about 100 percent of its OPEC quota and Kuwait and Saudia Arabia producing 500,000 to 600,000 barrels over quota levels, a million barrels a day of excess crude was being pumped into the world market. The American Petroleum Institute reports that OPEC production jumped from 17.5 barrels a day to 18.5 million barrels.

WHILE THE $29 a barrel contract price did not change, spot prices dropped in July when these additional supplies neared destination ports.

Then, in July, OPEC production fell to around 17 million barrels a day, as Saudi Arabia reduced output. In July and early August, Saudi production dropped to about 4 to 4.5 million barrel a day and spot prices firmed up.

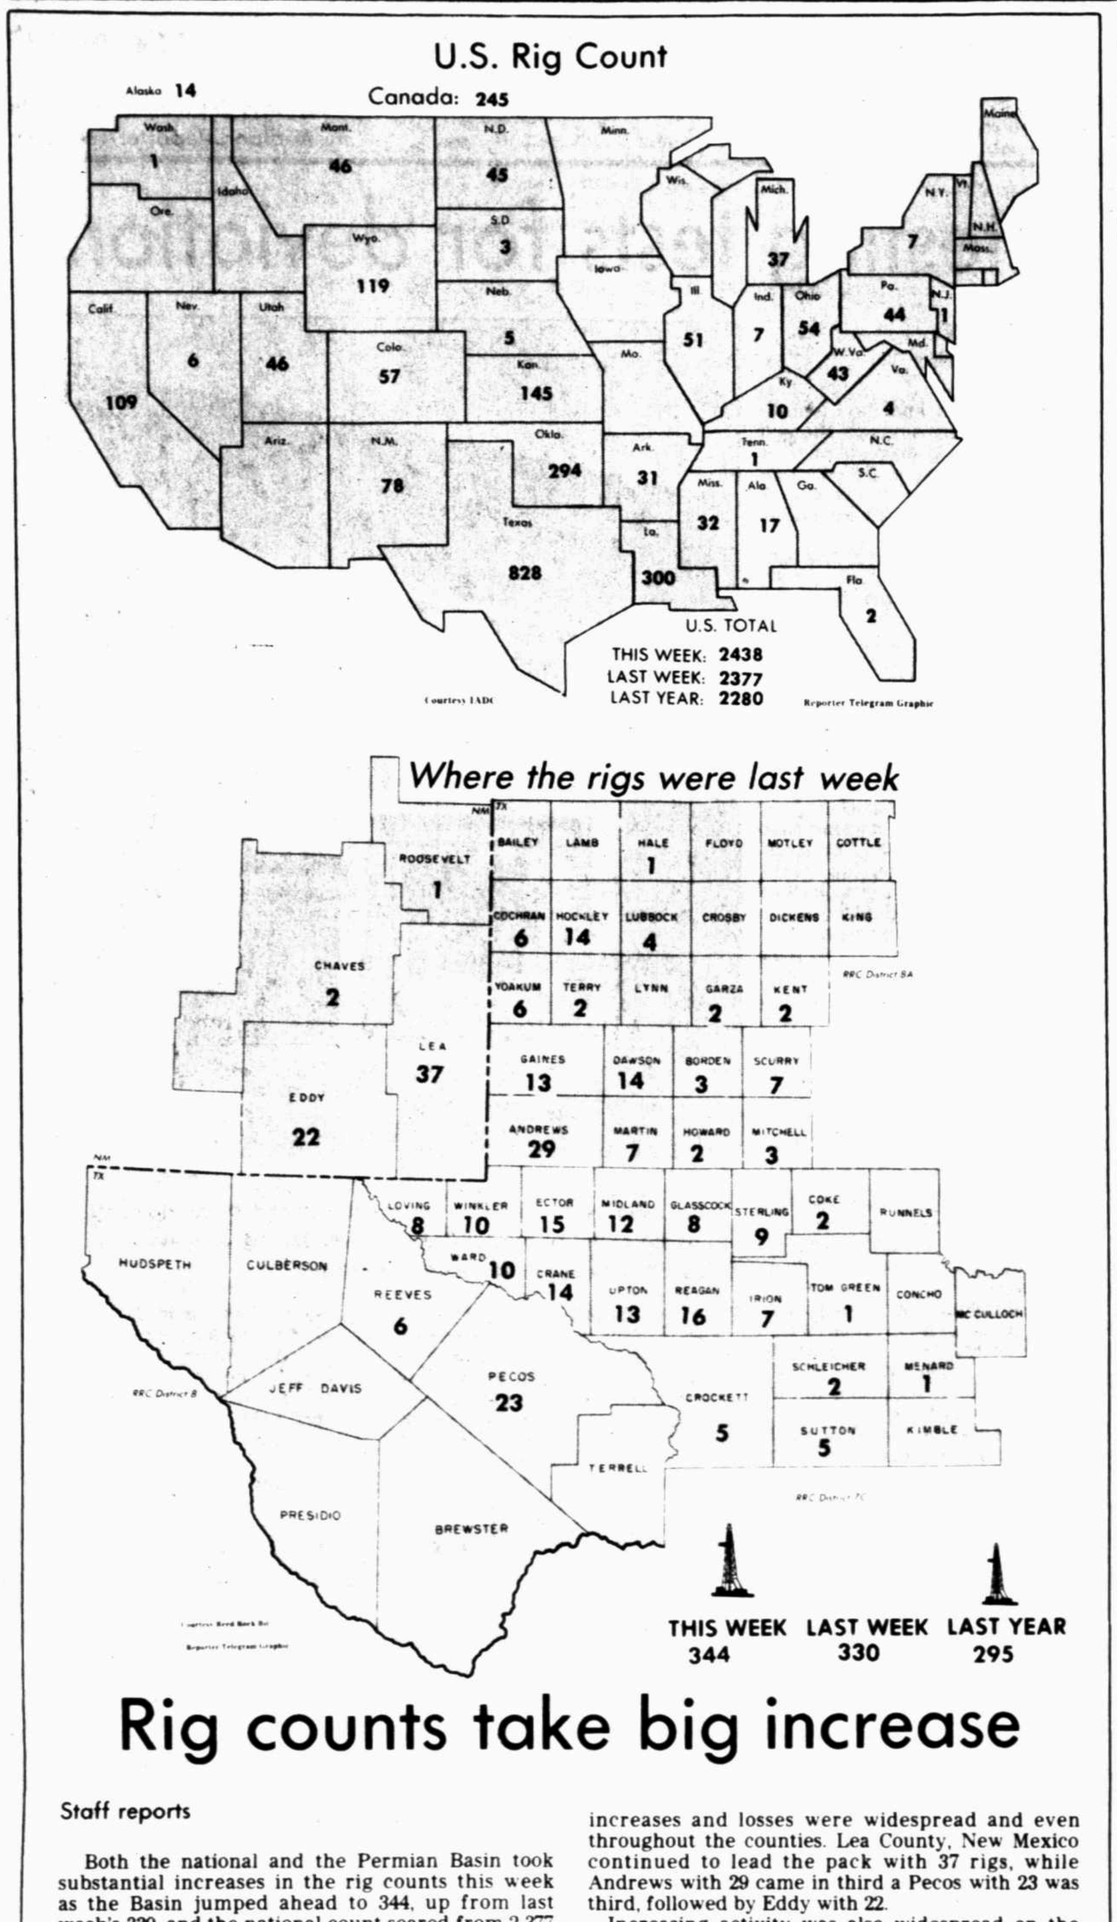

Now you can see why it is so hard to predict what might happen in the Middle East. As one observor put it: "What we are dealing with over there is the essence of unpredictability."

The Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners (TIPRO) following preliminary audit findings by the State Property Tax Board has concluded that oil and gas producers and royalty owners are overpaying local property taxes by tens of millions of dollars.

For the most part the overpayments are due to the fact that many appraisal districts are violating the tax code requirement that no taxpayer's property be assessed at more than 10 percent of the weighted average level of appraisals of other property in the district.

Rig counts take big increase

Staff reports

Both the national and the Permian Basin took substantial increases in the rig counts this week as the Basin jumped ahead to 344, up from last week's 330, and the national count soared from 2,377 last week to 2,438 this week.

The only substantial increase came to Eddy County, New Mexico which picked up five rigs this week on the Permian Basin count, otherwise increases and losses were widespread and even throughout the counties. Lea County, New Mexico continued to lead the pack with 37 rigs, while Andrews with 29 came in third a Pecos with 23 was third, followed by Eddy with 22.

Increasing activity was also widespread on the national count. California went from 84 to 109 to take the largest increase, followed by Texas with a jump from 805 to 828. Other increases and losses of drilling rigs across the states were modest.

Boomtown conditions hit New England

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — Skilled workers, left without jobs in Maryland, the Carolinas, Pennsylvania and Alabama, are coming to Quincy by the hundreds, some with only a few coins in their pockets, hungering for honest work.

There are jobs for them at the labor-starved General Dynamics shipyard, but for many there are no homes.

These sheetmetal workers, shipfitters and other skilled men and women are sleeping in cars, parks, cemeteries and Salvation Army shelters, authorities say.

"Man, if I had known this, I would have stayed home," said Jim Eades, 45, a sheetmetal worker who lost his job in August when Bethlehem Steel Corp. shut down in Baltimore.

Eades put $60 in his pocket and drove 10 hours to Quincy, south of Boston, because a recruiter said the shipyard was hiring. He is living in a Salvation Army shelter, cooking his meals in the shelter's makeshift kitchen.

"They didn't tell me about the rents," he said. "They're astronomical. ... I never in my life have seen this many people homeless. And I've been all over the United States."

"I'm very worried about this coming winter," said the Rev. Frederick L. Barr, president of the Quincy Interfaith Sheltering Coalition. "Not only do we have indigents ... we also have the new homeless forced out of their apartments by the competition."

"I've had them come and beg for me to get a room," said Mary Francis, a motel room clerk who was among several people interviewed business, while others "bit off more than they could chew" in branching out into drilling and service after making money in exploration, said Olien.

The nature of the commodity make the oil business more risky, said Olien. "Energy economics are fragile," he said, especially with a non-renewable resource as the basis.

The demand for oil had already been falling for two years at the height of the last boom in 1981, said Ms. Olien, but the price stayed high because of deregulation, moves made by the OPEQ nations and the the confidence of the industry that prices would stay high.

"They underestimated the effect of price-induced conservation," summarized Olien.

While eager late entrants were still investing heavily, old-timers were retrenching (havng developed downturn strategies) during the height of the boom, he said.

Another antagonist of the independent has been legislation, which "Wildcatter" traces in relation to the upward and downward trends felt by the industry.

Ford auto prices will to rise 1.3 percent

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. says prices of its 1985 cars will increase an average of 1.3 percent while the costs of options will remain the same.

The percentage increase represented an average of $153 over comparably equipped 1984 models, spokesmen for the automaker said Monday. They also said dealer discounts were reduced by 1 percent on most small cars.

Base retail prices were reduced 11 percent, or $850, for the Ford Mustang LX two-door.

Postal unions want direct bargaining

WASHINGTON (AP) — An agreement by the Postal Service and its two largest unions to resolve their contract differences without an arbitrator is apparently snagged in a squabble over whether Postmaster General William F. Bolger should negotiate directly with the unions.

Jamison Cain, a spokesman for Bolger, said Wednesday the head of the quasi-independent mail agency would have no comment on a demand by the head of the American Postal Workers Union for direct bargaining by Bolger.

The Postal Service and the APWU, along with the National Association of Letter Carriers, had announced jointly earlier this month that they had agreed to waive further fact-finding in favor of a renewed attempt to end a bargaining stalemate without outside intervention.

But Bolger, who had said on Sept. 5 that he was ready to "send my spokesmen" back to the negotiating table, has refused to participate directly in any new negotiations to arrive at a labor contract setting wages and working conditions for more than 600,000 postal workers.

When the Postal Service and its four unions, including the Rural Association of Letter Carriers and the Mail Handlers Division of Laborers International Union, hit an impasse in bargaining last July 20, provisions of the Postal Reorganization Act calling for automatic fact-finding and eventual binding arbitration were set in motion.

After that, Moe Biller, president of the 320,000-member APWU and Vincent R. Sombrotto, head of the National Asssociation of Letter Carriers, accepted Bolger's challenge to resume face-to-face bargaining.

Attorneys for Biller's union and Sombrotto's 190,000-member organization met Sept. 11 with lawyers for the Postal Service to establish ground rules for new bargaining. But no face-to-face talks ensued, and Biller charged Wednesday that efforts to reach an accord were being "stymied by bureaucratic arrogance."

In a Sept. 2 interview on NBC-TV's "Meet The Press," Bolger said "I think I'm ready, willing and able . . . if need be to send my spokesmen back to the bargaining tables. I think that these agreements should be reached, and not through binding arbitration."

Sombrotto said, however, he had "received no indication that Postmaster General Bolger is willing to come to the table himself to bargain over the critical economic issues that caused this impasse — wages and benefits. Therefore, I shall not be returning to negotiations."

Biller challenged Bolger to come forward so "these stalled negotiations can proceed fruitfully."

Referring to the expiration of a 90-day fact-finding period on Oct. 19, when binding arbitration would begin, Biller said Bolger "must remember that the collective bargaining clock is ticking and time is running out."

More than 600,000 postal employees have been working without a contract since July 21. Bolger has served notice he will fire any Postal Service employee who strikes. Postal union leaders have said they recognize that a walkout would be illegal and undesirable.

The Postal Service demanded that employees accept a three-year freeze on wage rates and that management be permitted to institute a two-tier pay system in which newly hired personnel would be paid an average 23 percent less than current employees.

The average salary of a postal worker totals about $23,000 a year, not including fringe benefits.

Jim Sale Enterprises forms holding firm

From Staff Reports

Four Midland-based companies providing services to the oil industry, municipal governments, real estate developers, and the business community have been organized under one holding company, Jim Sale Enterprises Inc. The announcement of the consolidations was made by Jim Sale, chairman of Jim Sale Enterprises.

The companies included in the reorganization are E.J. Stevenson & Associates Inc., Ted Buchanan & Associates Inc., Taylor-Sale Inc., and Success Personnel Inc.

Sale, who has been active as a Midland independent oil operator for more than 14 years, is a native of Stanton. He obtained a BBA in marketing at Baylor University. He is actively engaged in developing oil and gas properties throughout the Permian Basin.

All technical services and support staff functions of the four operating companies will be transferred into Jim Sale Enterprises Inc. In addition to cost savings to each company, this will mean more efficient technical services to clients.

The engineering and architectural services rely on state-of-the-art computer technology. They employ computer aided drafting (CAD), computer aided engineering (CAE), and computer aided architecture (CAA) in preparing project documents. This allows extreme accuracy in less than 20 percent of the time of conventional methods. Instantaneous revisions are routine, at a fraction of the cost.

E.J. Stevenson & Associates Inc. is a recently organized engineering consulting and management company, specializing in the design, management and supervision of equipment and facilities for oil and gas production, gathering, and transmission. The company has special expertise in secondary and enhanced oil recovery systems. It especially has concentrated on the most advanced techniques applicable to the Permian Basin.

H. Thomas Collins will serve as vice president and general manager of E.J. Stevenson & Associates. He holds a B.S. in mechanical engineering from the University of Houston, and has 12 years of facilities design and project management experience, much of it designing facilities for the Middle East.

Ted Buchanan & Associates Inc. is a six-year-old architectural/engineering firm which has acquired several professionals specializing in urban engineering. It is the only engineering organization in this region with architectural as well as full disciplined engineering capabilities.

Ted Buchanan is vice president and general manager. Before establishing his own company, Buchanan worked several years with a major Dallas architectural firm. He holds a Master of Architecture degree from the University of Texas.

Taylor-Sale Inc. is a newly organized oil and gas operating company. Philip A. Lesser is vice president and general manager of Taylor-Sale. He was most recently associated with E.J. Stevenson & Associates as marketing vice president. He has more than 17 years diversified experience in oil and gas engineering and marketing.

Lesser received a B.S. in petroleum engineering at the Colorado School of Mines. For several years he was associated with the Dresser Corp.

Success Personnel Inc. has operated in Midland for three years in the personnel consulting field. It provides counseling services for its clients and matches qualified applicants with job vacancies in professional, administrative, and clerical positions. The company also provides temporary services through its Temps Unlimited division.

Flo Dean, founder of Success Personnel, is vice president and general manager. She previously worked 15 years as a manager in the administrative division of First National Bank of Odessa and later was human resources administrator for a major oilfield construction company.

Corporate officers of Jim Sale Enterprises Inc., in addition to Sale, are E.J. Stevenson, president; Leon Taylor, vice president; Clayton K. Kroh, vice president-operations; Tamara Stevenson, comptroller; Bill Houghton, manager of marketing; Gary Starnes, manager of technical services; and Carla Jones, executive secretary.

As president, Stevenson also serves as chief executive officer of each of the four subsidiary companies.

Writers find mingling with rich exciting work

NEW YORK (AP) — They get no kick from a Rolls. Mere caviar doesn't thrill them at all. In fact the green stuff is a bore. But they get a kick from their work.

Mingling with millions and bantering with billions is just another job for the reporters who write about the Forbes Four Hundred — the annual list of the 400 richest people in the United States.

"It's intense work and very fulfilling and provides you with such an overview of this economy in action," Richard Behar, a 24-year-old senior reporter-researcher at Forbes, said in an interview. "These are really the people who shake and move the country. You can learn from them."

"We can talk about $150 million like it's nothing," said reporter-researcher Jeff Bloch, 24, at the Forbes offices on lower Fifth Avenue. "When we're doing the reporting, it's like doing any reporting job: You don't drool over their limousines or their homes."

Behar and Bloch spent a full year checking out the financial intimacies of hundreds of Americans, verifying worth and determining if they were indeed rich enough to make the list.

Traveling to such cities as Boston, Seattle, Palm Beach and San Diego, the two financial writers said they interviewed about 60 percent of the 400 names on the list, and examined their financial statements.

"A lot of these are people who don't grant a lot of interviews," Bloch said. "We put calls into everybody — at least every secretary."

"We also talked to ex-wives, attorneys, public relations people, bankers," added Behar. "We put it together like any reporting job. And you develop a fine eye for when people are lying."

The list began three years ago and was the brainchild of the publication's chairman and editor-in-chief, Malcolm S. Forbes.

"His original idea was for a listing and nothing more," said Harold Seneker, the senior editor who heads the project. "I was told I could design it any way I wanted to. ... It took 13 months of research just to launch the first list."

Disney talks to continue

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Disneyland and five unions will resume negotiations in the wake of an overwhelming rejection by workers of a proposed three-year wage freeze, a company spokesman said.

The vote Monday also authorized unions representing 1,800 workers to call a strike at the world-famous amusement park should talks fail.

Of the 1,429 union workers who cast votes, 1,388 rejected the proposal and 41 accepted it, said Michael O'Rourke, a spokesman for the United Food and Commercial Workers union.

Less than one hour after the vote, federal mediators asked representatives of the unions and Disneyland to appear at a 10 a.m. Thursday negotiating session.

"The strike has been authorized, but averted until that meeting," O'Rourke said.

All the parties involved agreed to appear, said Disneyland spokesman Bob Roth.

The unions, which are bargaining jointly, have sought a two-year contract with raises "between 3 percent and 8 percent a year," said O'Rourke.

Disneyland, faced with a drop in attendance from an all-time high of 11.5 million visitors in 1980 to 9.9 million last year, originally proposed that workers accept a 17 percent pay cut over three years. That proposal has been dropped, but the park is insisting that wages, which range from about $7 to $10 an hour, be frozen through 1987.

The company also is seeking some concessions in benefits, but Disneyland said those reductions affected part-time and seasonal workers so that benefits to full-timers could be maintained near their current level.

A walkout would affect about half of Disneyland's unionized workers, from janitors to ticket sellers to ride operators. About 3,700 of the park's 5,000 employees are represented by 26 labor groups.

Negotiations between the UFCW, Service Employees International Union, Teamsters, Bakery and Confectionary Workers and Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Unions broke off Saturday after two days of intense, last-ditch talks.

The 29-year-old amusement park has been struck twice before. In March 1979, about 500 maintenance workers struck for 13 days. Nine years earlier, about two dozen talent workers walked out for two days.

Superior reports merger vote

HOUSTON — The Superior Oil Co. has reported that approximately 75 percent of its outstanding shares have been voted to date in favor of the proposed merger of Superior with a subsidiary of Mobil Corp.

The vote approving the merger will be officially received at a special meeting of stockholders next week called to approve the merger and adopt the merger agreement between Superior and Mobil. Superior said there is no other business on the agenda for the meeting.

Efforts made to lessen milk output worldwide

WASHINGTON (AP) — New projections by the Agriculture Department show that some headway is being made to curb the huge output of milk in the world's major dairy countries, including the United States.

According to USDA's Foreign Agricultural Service, global milk output may hold about steady this year and decline in 1985 as many countries enforce production curbs to stem the flow.

"In the United States, a paid diversion program, plus lower effective prices for milk and high feed costs, have cut incentives for milk production," the report said.

"As a result, the dairy herd has been cut back, while reduced concentrate feeding and other changes in management practices have lowered per cow yields."

The report said that a 37-country inventory showed that milk output in 1984 may decline slightly to 408 million metric tons from 408.9 million in 1983. In 1985, production is expected to drop 3 percent to 406.6 million tons.

A metric ton, the unit favored in expressing international production volume, is about 2,205 pounds. In the United States, milk output is usually described in pounds.

The U.S. milk output in 1984 was estimated at 61.6 million tons — around 136 billion pounds, down 3 percent from a record 63.5 million tons or 140 billion pounds in 1983.

Looking at 1985, the report showed that U.S. milk production could rise slightly to 61.8 million tons — 136.3 billion pounds — as the government reduction program winds down next spring.

Milk production in the Soviet Union, the largest single producer, is estimated at 97.5 million tons this year, up from 96.4 million tons in 1983, and may reach 99 million tons in 1985.

The 10-nation European Community's milk production, for many years a sore point among U.S. critics of Common Market agricultural policies, is estimated at 110.3 million tons this year, down from 112.3 million tons in 1983, and is expected to drop to 107.2 million tons in 1985.

Canada's milk production, estimated at 8.1 million tons in 1983, is expected to remain steady this year and next.

In Japan, milk output is edging higher, from 7 million tons last year to 7.2 million tons this year and 7.3 million tons in 1985, the report showed.

Milk output in Australia was showed at 5.7 million tons in 1983 and 6.1 million tons in 1984. Next year's production is expected to decline to 5.9 million tons.

New Zealand, a leading exporter of dairy products, was reported at 6.9 million tons of milk in 1983, rising to 7.2 million tons this year and in 1985.

Cow numbers in the major countries were estimated at 162.29 million head this year, down 160,000 head from 1983. However, the projections showed about one million fewer cows for 1985 production.

Bankers vote new leader

FORT WORTH—The Independent Bankers Association of Texas held their 10th annual convention at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Fort Worth.

John Shivers, Chairman of the Board, President and Chief Execiutive Officer of Southwest Bank in Fort Worth, was elected president of the association.

Mr. Shivers has had more than twenty years experience in the banking industry in Texas. From February 1963 to September 1968, he served as Assistant Cashier and Manager of the National Accounts Division at Capitol National Bank in Austin. In 1968 he joined Austin National Bank, where he served as Assistant Vice President and then Vice President in the Correspondent Bank Department. In January, 1974, Mr. Shivers came to Southwest Bank in Fort Worth. He served as Executive Vice President until January of 1976 when he became President and Chief Executive Officer of the bank. In 1982, he also assumed the responsibilities of Chairman of the Board. He is a member of the IBAA Legislative Committee, and a past member of the IBAA Resolutions Committee, Governing Council of the ABA, and the Legislative Committee of the Texas Bankers Association.

In addition to his work in banking, Mr. Shivers is engaged in a variety of business and civic activities, including farming, ranching and citrus groves, and oil and gas interests. He is a past director of Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Tarrant County, a past member and Vice Chairman of the Board of Regents of Texas Womens University in Denton.

John Shivers

Three other officers and three new directors of the Indepenent Bankers Association of Texas were elected at the convention.

Cad E. Williams, president of East Palestine National Bank in Palestine, was elected as First Vice President.

Charles N. Brewer, president of Reunion Bank in Dallas, was elected Second Vice President.

Nuclear project data asked by newspapers

HOUSTON (AP) — A second newspaper has asked the Texas Supreme Court to order a state district judge to open documents filed in a dispute over construction of the troubled South Texas Nuclear Project.

The Houston Chronicle in a brief filed Wednesday argued the public has a constitutional right to see the documents.

"They should be open to the public because the cost of the power plant, which is years behind schedule and several billion dollars over its original cost estimate, is having a significant impact on the economic well-being of a large portion of the Texas population," the brief said.

The Austin American-Statesman has filed a similar lawsuit with the state's high court, seeking access to the documents filed in a lawsuit between Houston Lighting & Power Co. and Brown & Root.

Atg the request of Halliburton Co., the owner of Brown & Root, State District Judge G.P. Hardy of Bay City last year ordered the documents sealed.

HL&P is the managing partner for the plant, and Brown & Root was the original contractor. Brown & Root was fired in 1981.

Hardy's order prevents the public from seeing the documents as well as makes it difficult for the state Public Utility Commission to consider HL&P's request for a $554 million revenue increase.

HL&P has asked the PUC to allow it to include $617 million of plant's construction costs in its rate base, which is used to calculate utility rates. But HL&P officials, citing Hardy's order, have refused to answer numerous questions from the PUC staff and other parties in the rate case about the $5.5 billion nuclear project.

"Public scrutiny of the court papers will provide a reliable source of information on this matter of great public concern," the brief said.

"There is no more newsworthy case before the civil courts of this state than the South Texas Nuclear Plant litigation," the Chronicle said. "The question of the viability of nuclear power as a primary source of this country's future energy impacts the lives of every citizen of Texas and this nation.

Oil glut could lead to nightmare: IPAA head

CORPUS CHRISTI — The president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) has warned consumers that despite plentiful and low cost gasoline, and a perceived "oil glut," America is "on the brink of another energy nightmare."

At a recent news conference in Corpus Christi, Jon Rex Jones of Houston, likened domestic oil producers to high wire trapeze artists. "They are wlking a tightrope right now, and the rope is about to snap."

"There's a false sense of security out there," the IPAA official said. "Consumers see gasoline prices tumbling almost weekly, and they think there's an endless supply. They know we drastically reduced imports from unstable foreign countries and that in 1983 only 37 percent of imported oil came from OPEC countries versus 69 percent in 1978."

But Jones noted there are other harbingers of trouble for the domestic industry. U.S. producers, particularly independents, are being pressed to the financial edge because investor capital is scarce. Also, solid producers with good reputations are being burned by some banks afraid to loan money."

The IPAA president also noted that other signs point to a less than robust industry in 1984. He said a disappointing rig count in the last month is forcing industry analysts to revise their figures for the total number of rigs operating in 1984.

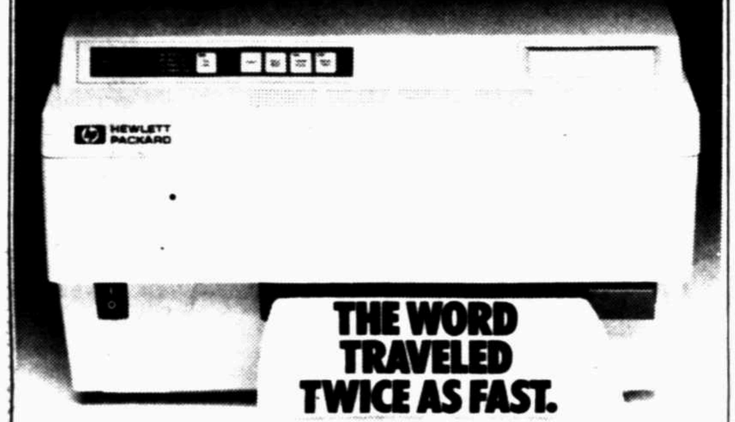

"Initially IPAA forecast a 1984 annual daily rig count of 2,650. Now we think it will be down to around 2,500. That's still up over 1983, but hardly enough to proclaim the industry healthy after a devastating economic downturn."

Bill and Joan Lewellen will have a display of their work and products at the Home and Energy Show in Midland Park Mall this week. Lewellen's Home Improvement Center at 1811 W. Industrial will also be open to serve you.

Lewellen's offers superior workmanship

Lewellen's Construction Company has a well established reputation for offering Midlanders high quality siding and outstanding workmanship. Arthur and Virginia McGonegal, recent customers of Lewellen's, write concerning Bill's work, "Absolutely the only efficient professional chore we have had done on our house. We were very impressed. We would recommend Lewellen Construction Company to everyone – and we will."

Next week at the Home and Energy Show in Midland Park Mall, Bill and Joan Lewellen will have a display of their high quality products. Drop by and you will find examples of their work, not just factory displays. Steel siding, storm window and door samples will all be at the show Monday through Saturday.

As always, their showroom, which is conveniently located at 1811 W. Industrial, will be open Monday-Friday 8 to 6 and Saturday from 9 to 1. Whether you want Bill to do the job for you or you want some advise and materials to do it yourself, Lewellen's Home Improvement Center is the place to go.

Lewellen's Home Improvement Center installs high quality maintenance-free steel siding, soffit, and fascia. This can add insulation to your home and protect it from the harsh weather elements, as well as prevent warping, rotting, and decaying of the original surface.

Their Revere steel siding, which is available in a wide variety of colors, is well known for being incredibly durable. It also has a 50 year guarantee.

In addition, they carry Alside Steel Siding. This brand offers embossing with natural wood grain. Bill Lewellen points out that this siding is, to his knowledge, the only product of its kind which carries the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval.

The use of steel siding, soffit, and fascia is not limited to a certain style of home. Families with mobile homes have been very pleased with the improved appearance and insulation which steel siding has given their homes. Furthermore, Bill can form the steel to fit most any shape so that the original design of your home will not have to be altered. On the other hand, if you want a change Bill can give your home a whole new look by the way he installs the quality siding.

While he's at it, Bill can also take care of your roofing needs.

Furthermore, your home may be improved with energy efficient storm or replacement windows and doors. Insulated steel entry doors from Lewellen's Home Improvement Center offer both durability and style. You will be amazed at the variety of designs and colors which are available. The energy savings which these doors provide makes them exceptionally popular.

Energy will never be cheap again, so imagine how your family could use the money thermopane windows will save you on energy bills. The added security of storm windows is also worth considering.

Your home's security and appearance can be enhanced with decorative window grids by Howmet. Why settle for anything less than professional installation by Bill Lewellen?

Howmet also makes attractive carports, patio covers, and awnings. By offering both Howmet and Fashion Inc. product lines, Lewellen's is able to provide a patio cover or awning to match any style of home. When professionally installed, these attractive additions to your home will actually look like they are part of your house, not like make shift shelters. Screen rooms from Howmet are also available at Lewellen's.

Go by their display this week at Midland Park Mall or call Bill Lewellen at 686-8007 and let him make your home's exterior maintenance-free. You can be sure that every job done by Lewellen Construction is done with great care. Each job comes with a life-time guarantee and is personally inspected by Bill.

Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft is your local fireplace accessory headquarters

Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft has been in Midland since 1977 and is Midland's fireplace accessory headquarters. In addition to his 20 years of experience in plumbing and fencecraft, Bill offers his customers everything from firescreens to log carriers. Whether you are looking for the top of the line or something that is inexpensive, Bill can help you get it.

Bill is particularly proud of the Portland Williamette firescreens which he offers to his customers with his personal one year warranty. These are absolutely the top of the line. Portland Williamette has been making firescreens since the 40's and their experience shows in their workmanship. They use tempered glass and solid brass with steel reinforcement. A lacquered finish prevents the firescreens from tarnishing so that they don't have to be polished, just enjoyed. Bill has had orders for these firescreens all the way from Houston and Dallas.

Those of you who live in apartments or move frequently may wonder if it's worth the investment. What if there's not a fireplace in your next home? For you, Bill recommends a less expensive, yet still attractive firescreen.

Grates for the small fireplaces which are often built in apartments can be difficult to find. Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft can end your search. Bill offers everything from grates to accomodate a four foot fireplace to the special zero clearance Majestic fireplace grates. So you see, if your fireplace needs it, Bill's thought of it.

In fact, Bill even offers fireplace tools to fit any budget need. He also has access to beautiful mantles.

Bill is aware that many people enjoy seeing a beautiful fire in the fireplace, but just don't think it's worth messing with the ashes. Bill has the perfect solution - a log set. Bill handles high quality log sets which range in size from 18 inches to 36 inches and are carefully designed to look as much like golden oak as is possible. Because of their outstanding quality, Bill has installed several of these in the Greentree area.

Speaking of installtion, Bill is a master plumber which qualifies him to do all your fireplace installation work. Whether you need a log set installed or an old log lighter replaced Bill Rodriguez is the professional to call. Bill explains that when old log lighters get clogged up with ashes it can take twice as long to start a fire. By replacing that log lighter with a new one you can save yourself a lot of frustration. While Bill's there he can also repair any cracks you may have in your fire brick.

Very soon, hearth carpets will be arriving at Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft in a variety of colors. These fire retardant rugs can save you a lot of money by protecting your carpet from stray sparks.

When you are all dressed up and realize that you have to go outside and bring in a few more logs for the fire, you need some wayto protect your clothing. Bill suggests a log carrier. He has ordered some top of the line log carriers in pig skin, cow hide, and duck. Just imagine the convenience these offer.

Now is the time to get ready for the winter months both by selecting fireplace accessories and checking out your old furnace. If it's time to replace that old furnace, Bill can fix your up with a Whirlpool Heating and Cooling System. There will be a complete display of this line in the store.

This week Bill will have a display of many of his products set up at the Home and Energy Show in Midland Park Mall. Though they will be out at the mall Monday through Saturday, the phone will still be answered at the store just in case you need to call about something. Bill will be glad to come to your home to consult you on your fireplace needs and give you a free estimate.

When it comes to fireplace accessories, Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft can meet the needs of any budget. Grates for any size fireplace, firescreens, fireplace tools, log holders, and log sets are just a few of the things that Bill can get for you.

Sonic clene takes the work out of cleaning blinds

So giving your Cocker Spaniel a bath last Saturday turned out to be quite a chore, did it? Well if you think that was rough how long has it been since you tried to give "Minnie Blind" or her older cousin "Venetian" a good cleaning. Remember how you got soaked, the floor got wet, and the dirt just turned to mud on the blinds and in your tub. You swore you'd never do that again. Now, you may try to keep them sort of dusted off, but the cords are just getting dirtier and dirtier and the dust just gets rearranged on the slats, but what can you do?

Now, there's a revolutionary alternative to a wrestling match with the mini blinds or venetian blinds in your home or office--Window Decor's new Sonic clene.

This incredible cleaning machine is manufactured in England and has been popular on both coasts for years. Window Decor now has the very first machine of this type in operation in the state of Texas.

Here's how it works. Just drop your blinds by Window Decor at 30M W. Industrial Loop by 10 am. and Ray Berry will has them looking like new by 4 pm. that very same day. He begins by spraying them down with a special soap solution and then he dips them in the Sonic clene machine. This machine cleans the blinds by forcing the oxygen out of the water. Or to put it simply, it bubbles away the dirt like a jewelry cleaner at the jewelry store. You can be sure it doesn't miss a spot. The cords, the slates, the top and bottom rails, as well as the mechanical parts all come out grit free. Next, Ray rinses the blinds and waxes the mechanical parts to make them work more smoothly than before.

If your blinds have become worn over the years. Window Decor can not only clean them but also repair them. They have some parts in stock and can order any part that you might need, regardless of the brand.

Just think how much easier this will make holiday preparations. People with allergies can really benefit from having the dust actually removed not just rearranged. Moreover, imagine being able to get rid of all the grease that fogs blinds in the kitchen. Whether you have mini blinds, vertical blinds, Roman shades, or venetian blinds, Window Decor's Sonic clene can save you hours of hard work. If you'd like, they will even come to your home or office and pick up the blinds and then return them for you. Just give them a call at 685-0875. "In by 10 out by 4 at Window Decor."

New banking bill specifies service guidelines

Check holding limited to three days

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although seven days were spent discussing the technical aspects of the ways financial institutions conduct business, the banking bill approved by the Senate has many important provisions that affect the way banks deal with individual customers.

Here is a rundown of those provisions.

—The bill requires disclosure of policies on delaying availability of customers' deposits. It sets a goal of next day availability on local checks and no more than a three-day hold on most out-of-town checks.

It requires next day availability for money from U.S. Treasury checks payable to and endorsed by a customer with an established relationship with the bank of deposit. This is seen as a substantial benefit to elderly people who live on their Social Security checks and often must wait for days while they clear.

Consumers complained to Congress that banks put "holds" on funds while waiting, sometimes for 12 business days, to make absolutely sure a check will clear.

—The legislation limits the increase in interest rates on adjustable rate mortgages to five percentage points over the entire life of a home loan.

—It allows federal savings and loans to offer checking accounts to all their customers. An existing prohibition against paying interest on such accounts would be retained.

—Regional interstate banking would be authorized for five years under the measure. Customers may find their bank in one state opening branches in neighboring states. This would be particularly useful for people who regularly commute across state lines.

—The bill restores explicit authority for federal credit unions to make home improvement loans for terms up to 15 years. It leaves up to the National Credit Union Administration Board the decision whether to permit home improvement and second mortgage loans of more than 15 years.

—It forces those who loan household items such as furniture, televisions and refrigerators on a lease-purchase agreement to disclose just how much a person would have to pay in rental payments before getting ownership of an item.

Consumers testified at congressional hearings that lease-purchase advertising is often directed at low-income consumers and emphasizes "ownership" without identifying the amount of money required and other conditions of ownership.

—The bill takes steps to curb the $1 billion a year in credit card fraud by adding credit card numbers to the definition of "credit cards," since much of the crime involves fraudulent use of the account number and not the plastic card itself. It also increases jail terms and fines for second convictions on credit card fraud.

—Banks would be forced to tell depositors about charges deducted from account balances to avoid the problem cited by some holders of inactive accounts that entire balances have been eaten up by charges they didn't know about.

Reagan wants bumper study

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than two years ago the Reagan administration weakened its requirement for automobile bumpers, saying consumers would save money with weaker ones. Now the government is spending $1 million to see if its conclusion was correct.

Advocates of the stronger bumpers are hoping the study will support their arguments, raised all along, that consumers are losing money because the rule change is raising repair costs and insurance premiums. They hope the study might force the administration to bring back the old requirement.

The study by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration came under attack Wednesday by Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., a staunch supporter of the stronger bumpers, because, he said, it appears to be too involved and is taking far too much time.

Danforth, chairman of the Senate's surface transportation subcommittee, compared the agency's effort to "launching the next space shuttle by starting out with a paper airplane."

The highway safety agency used a "cost-benefit analysis" when it decided in May 1982 to require that cars be equipped with bumpers that can protect a car in crashes of only 2½ mph, instead of 5 mph as previously required.

The study said a car owner would save $93 because the new bumper would cost less and its light weight would result in slight fuel savings. Repair costs, the agency analysis concluded, would increase by only $65.

In light of those figures, the agency said, the stronger bumpers cannot be justified since federal law requires a standard to "seek to obtain the maximum feasible reduction of costs to the public and to the consumer."

But now agency officials say those figures were only estimates based on projections, which in turn were based on various information submitted by car companies and other interested&H

Canadian Bob Mac's slips and slides on ice draw laughter from Ice Capades' audiences.

Ice Capades Photo

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

Bob Mac has been entertaining Ice Capades audiences for 19 years, his zany antics bringing countless laughs in the 14 years he has been a comic with the show.

"It's been a wonderful experience because it's been demanding," Mac said during a telephone interview. "You have to keep improving; you have to keep everything fresh. You may have perfected the moves, but you still have to put the effort out there, make it spontaneous every night."

As a high school student in British Columbia, Canada, Mac took up the sport when his parents joined a skating club.

"We have (for many years had) figure skating clubs and athletic clubs," Mac says. "In Canada, most of them are government supported."

In the beginning, his interest was not centered around skating.

"It got me a chance to date some of the girls," Mac says, laughing at the thought. Then he becomes serious. "I started skating and it just got into my blood.

"The challenge was wonderful, learning to do something that generally a body doesn't do. I enjoyed the athletic part of it a tremendous amount.

"I worked very hard on my free skating and dancing but, because I started late, I really didn't go that far (in competition). You'd have to start when you were about 8 years old as my youngest brother did."

His opportunity to do comedy routines came as a result of his membership in the skating club. The clubs, he says, put on carnivals and shows to raise money. Because he was male, Mac was given the chance to do comedy.

Comedy changed his life.

"I've been a frustrated comic all my life. When I was a little kid growing up, I was very introverted. I never did anything; I just had my head glued to the television set constantly watching Red Skelton, Martin and Lewis, Abbot and Costello."

Mac views himself as fitting the "typical comedy senerio" of the introvert who has the ability to make others laugh.

"It's an alter ego in some respects." He does have fears about failing to be funny, and was "very, very nervous" in his early years.

"I calm myself down by saying, 'OK. Now look, we can do it, just go out there and make them laugh.'"

HE DISCOVERED, when he first began performing comedy, his routines made people laugh. He spent four of the formative years, when he was learning a lot of skating, performing comedy in carnivals.

After that he turned pro, appearing in the Ice Follies. His career with Ice Capades began in 1965 after he spent several years in the Canadian army.

He began in the chorus line because then, Mac said, "They had more comedy than they knew what to do with and there was no room for a comedian."

But he was determined to return to what he loved.

"I just worked very hard when I was in the chorus assisting comedics with their routines and trying to pick up everything that I could possibly learn from them."

His chance came six years later. He auditioned a routine and was accepted.

In the past four years, Mac has trained seven skaters to be a part of his act — "Bob Mac & Company." He refers to his partners as "kids" because "they're a little younger than I am."

Julie Patterson is new this season, and Mac says, "She's going to be incredibly good. She has a tremendous amount of talent." His other partner, Bob Moskalyk, has been with Mac for five years and "is an experienced comic."

"You try to find somebody that has an equal balance of talent and also some comedy flare as well. The kids that work with me come out first as a straight adagio team. I come out of the audience...and disrupt their act, 'accidentally' at first. Then one thing leads to another and I never do get off the ice. I keep getting in their way."

The element of danger exiting on the ice magnifies in comedy routines.

Mac has dislocated shoulders, busted elbows and once suffered a multiple spiral fracture of the leg. He also has "a very bad knee which comes and goes."

"When you do comedy, if you rehearse it to the point of perfection so that you can concentrate on the character that you are portraying and the timing to get laughs, then when you do your pratfalls, it comes natural."

However, the [illegible]-minute act is "very, very difficult." Actions indclue Mac throwing Miss Patterson around, Moskalyk and Miss Patterson falling on top of Mac and, in the opening segment of the act, Mac stumbling into their figure-skating scene.

The ice is different from night to night, hall to hall. And the personalities change.

"Each person has his own personality and one minute one might be down and the other two up or two down and the other up. You try to level that out to the point where everybody's the same way every single night.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Culture Club

Q. I'm 9 years old. Could you tell me if Boy George is going to write any new songs?

Jara Malkin
Haydenville, Mass.

A. The prolific George can always be counted on to write some new songs. Although he reportedly rejected Michael Jackson's offer to do a song together, he has been writing and you'll have a chance to hear the new stuff when Culture Club's next album is released at the end of October.

Also new, for George, is his hair color — blond. If he hasn't changed it again, you'll be able to see it when the band embarks on a month-long tour starting the third week of October, and covering the Southwest, the Northeast and a few points in the Midwest.

Q. I'd like to know more about Kim Basinger.

Kim Baysinger
Pensacola, Fla.

A. We can see why. Kim was born and raised in Athens, Ga., one of seven children and was painfully shy as a child, and a loner. Her father was a musician in the big bands of the 30's and 40's.

She inherited his love of music, has written about 100 songs herself, loves to sing and to dance. (You may have seen some of the dancing in the Bond film last year "Never Say Never Again.")

While in her teens, she won a local beauty contest which led her to a Miss Breck competition and a modeling career in New York. She wanted to be an actress, though, like a few other cover girls, and several years ago, piled her four dogs and a cat into a Jeep and drove to California.

She didn't get the "King Kong" remake, Jessica Lange did, and didn't want to be "Charlie's Angel," but she did appear in the miniseries "From Here to Eternity," the films "Hard Country" and "Mother Lode," the TV movie "Katie: Portrait of a Centerfold" and in a real Playboy layout which got her a lot of attention. She recently appeared in "The Man Who Loved Women" remake and "The Natural." Look for her next in the sizzling "9½ Weeks" co-starring Mickey Rourke.

Q. What's Richard Simmons doing now? I miss him. Will he be back on TV?

A.J.
Sioux Falls, S.D.

A. We spoke to him while he was city-hopping in Texas and this was his report: "I've been on the road...if I told you for how many weeks, you'd feel sorry for me. But I love it." He's doing personal appearances for a new clothing line of casual and exercise wear for big girls, size 36-44. And encouraging the girls, of course, to be active. They don't have to be a size 7, but they should look good and be active.

"Then, this month, I'm going back on TV. I'll be doing an exercise show for little kids because I really think we need it desperately. It's for preschoolers and I'm calling it 'Exercise Park,' sort of an aerobic 'Sesame Street.' We'll teach kids to eat right and exercise in a fun, humorous way. And I'm also going to host a new game show — I may become the next Richard Dawson — and the Lifetime cable channel is going to start airing 'The Richard Simmons Show.'

"I also just finished writing my new Broadway musical 'lbs.' about 10 people on a fat farm trying to lose weight. I should be on Broadway in it early next year. Now I'm finishing up my exercise book for the handicapped; all the money from it will go to build 40 exercise studios for the disabled in hospitals around the country. We've already started training instructors, who are disabled, to staff them.

Richard Simmons

"And in two weeks, I'll open my 83rd Anatomy Asylum. Then at Christmas, I'll introduce my salad dressing line, called "Slimmons" — five tasty, low calorie vinaigrettes.

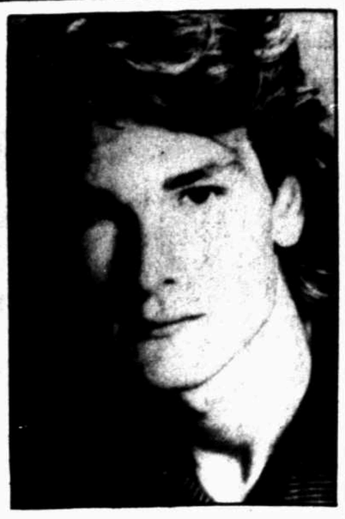

"That's it for now."

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write Josie: SUNDAY WOMAN magazine, 235th E. 45th St., New York, N.Y., 10017. Sorry we can't answer any letters individually.

C. Thomas Howell

Patrick Swayze

Q. I think C. Thomas Howell and Patrick Swayze are terrific. Could you tell me about them?

K.M.
Trenton, N.J.

A. "Tommy" Howell is 17, (he'll be 18 on December 7) from Van Nuys, Calif., the son of two expert riders who "rode a horse before I could walk." He's won various junior rodeo championships and still competes when he has time, with his horses Tarzan and Jedi.

He started acting at 6 in the series "Little People," did commercials, movie stunt work with his father and by 13, was working steadily. You may have seen him as one of the bicycle riders in "E.T.," or as Ponyboy in "The Outsiders," or if you got to a theater quickly, as James Garner's son in "Tank." He's currently on view in "Grandview U.S.A." and "Red Dawn" both of which coincidentally, co-star Patrick Swayze.

Swayze, from Houston, began training as a dancer almost from the moment he could stand, with his mother Patsy, a choreographer. He also excelled in gymnastics, diving, track and field and football, was on the gymnastics team at San Jacinto College in Houston, performed with the "Disney on Parade" show and as an ice skater in Houston.

He moved to New York to dance and promptly did with the Buffalo Ballet Co., the Harkness Co., Joffrey and Eliot Feld companies. Then he decided to try acting and moved to Broadway, taking on the Danny Zuko role in "Grease" just as the musical was about to become the (then) longest running musical on Broadway.

The resulting critical notices propelled him to Hollywood, where he did various movies-of-the-week and a series, "The Renegades." He was also in the films "The Outsiders" and "Uncommon Valor." He's currently filming "Youngblood" with Rob Lowe.

Q. Please tell me about Michael Pare from the movie "Eddie and the Cruisers."

J. McGuire
Orland Park, Ill.
Tracey Smith
Oakville, Ct.

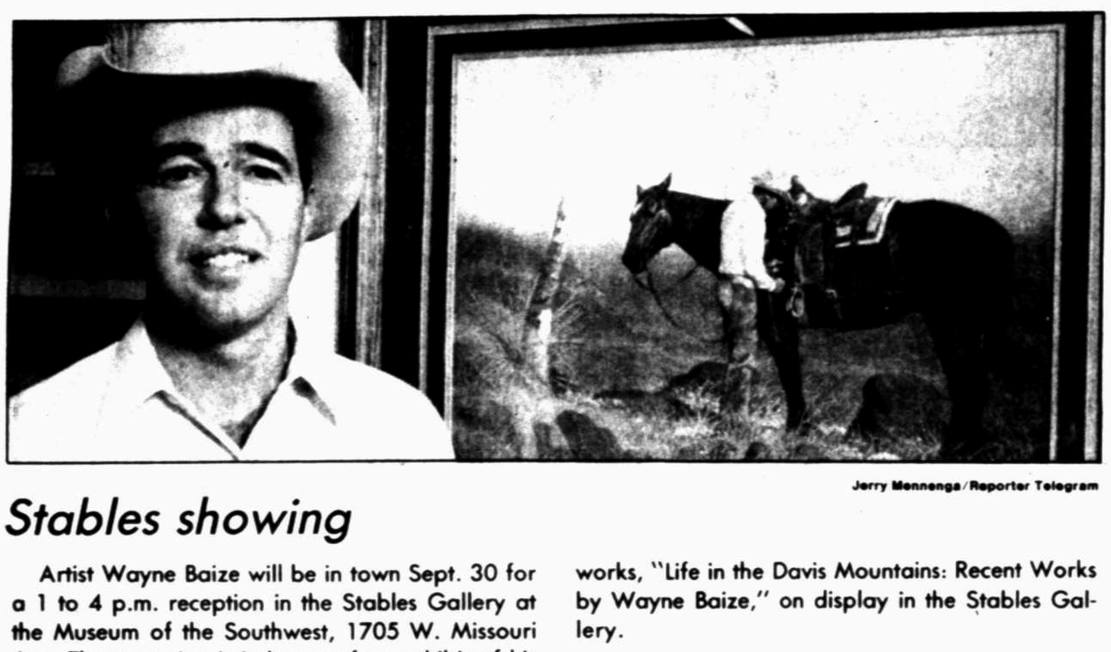

A. Pare is 26, the eighth of 10 children, born in Brooklyn and raised in the New York suburb of Tarrytown in less-than-affluent circumstances. His father died when he was 4, his mother worked in several jobs to support the brood and all the kids had to find jobs to help out. Impatient with that method and associated with various petty criminals, Michael, at 13, took part in a delicatessen break-in and was arrested.

After his release, his mother sent him to live with relatives in Detroit to get him away from these bad influences. High school there bored him but there was one class he liked — home economics, Pare liked to cook. He got a job as a cook at a local restaurant, attended the Culinary Institute of America after high school, and upon graduation, moved to New York City and a job at Tavern on the Green.

Acting was completely accidental: He was sitting at the bar of a nearby restaurant one night waiting for his girlfriend to get off duty when he was spotted by a talent agent, sent up for modeling jobs and eventually noticed by two West Coast talent executives.

They got him a spot on the series "The Greatest American Hero," which led to "Eddie and the Cruisers," "Streets of Fire," an Australian comedy called "Undercover" that hasn't been released here and the current "The Philadelphia Experiment." Next up: "Platoon," a Vietnam story, about to go into production.

On the social side: He's in the process of dissolving his marriage to his law school student wife Lisa. "Philadelphia" co-star Nancy Allen is keeping him company instead.

Stables showing

Artist Wayne Baize will be in town Sept. 30 for a 1 to 4 p.m. reception in the Stables Gallery at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. The reception is in honor of an exhibit of his works, "Life in the Davis Mountains: Recent Works by Wayne Baize," on display in the Stables Gallery.

Eighth Jazz Classic begins Oct. 9

Midland's 8th annual Jazz Classic is set for the Holiday Inn Country Villa beginning Oct. 9 and lasting through Oct. 14. Some 20 nationally well-known jazz musicians will provide the nightly entertainment.

Only 240 seats are available to the general public. Each seat costs $125 and is good for all six performances. Many people who are interested in going to some, but not all of the performances, get together with friends and share tickets. This reduces the price considerably for a couple attending one performance.

Tickets are available only from the Midland Jazz Association, 400 W. Wall Ave., Suite 209. Reservations may be made by calling 682-5334. Tickets are not available at the door.

Many of the musicians who performed in 1983 have accepted invitations to return in 1984. One the returning musicians, Jack Sheldon on trumpet, received many standing ovations for their music, vocals and humor in 1983.

Sheldon has appeared with Benny Goodman, Count Basie, Stan Kenton, Harry James and Woody Herman. He has also been on many television shows including The Mike Douglas Show, The Joey Bishop Show, The Tonight Show and The Merv Griffin Show.

Other musicians who have been invited to the 1984 Classic are Derek Smith, Ralph Sutton and Dick Hyman, piano; Jack Lesberg (who is also the musical director for the event), Milt Hinton and Michael Moore, bass; Butch Miles, Gus Johnson and Mousey Alexander, drums; Warren Vache and Clark Terry, trumpet; Urbie Green and Carl Fontana, trombone; Zoot Sims and Flip Phillips, tenor sax; Bud Shanks and Jim Galloway, soprano sax, alto sax and flute; Johnny Mince and Phil Bodner, clarinet; Cal Collins, guitar and Don Barnett.

MAC

"But you're still dealing with a lot of unseeen things. An accident might happen in a miscue. A trick might not work and, when a trick in the act that we do doesn't work, it means somebody could be hurt very badly."

One such accident happened the night Mac broke his leg, which put him out of the show for six months. That accident was preceded by an injury which had kept him out for two months and he had only been back in the show for two weeks.

"For some reason when you have a bad period in anything it seems to happen all at the same time," Mac says. The first accident occurred at Madison Square Garden with a standing-room-only audience of 13,000.

"The audience was just incredible. We were knocking them dead, and we were just going for it," Mac recalls.

"I have a girl, she's on my shoulders, and I stumble around with her — that's like 110 pounds to 120 pounds on your shoulder.

"I'm running around and stumbling back and forth. I'm in shoes, and I have spikes on my shoes so that I can grab the ice, but I have to be careful not to go on the edge of my shoes so that I don't slip and fall."

He stepped on the edge of his shoes.

"I tried to save it, and I ended up on my knees. I went into an immediate split when my knees hit the ice. I finished the act with a tremendous amount of difficulty and then they had to carry me off after we finished our bow."

After 14 years of comedy, Mac still gets nervous, but in a different way.

"I have more confidence now. I think you tend to get a little bit more insecure about what you have because you must be funnier this evening, or at least as funny as you were before."

Being a comic also has opened Mac's personality.

"Once I got into doing comedy and became successful at it, all of a sudden I realized there was a change in me, in my outward ability to handle people and talk to people. I became more interested in people themselves.

"As a result, I also was able to communicate with people better. I am still a very, very quiet person, but in a different way. I'm not afraid to talk to people.

"When I was younger I was afraid to go in front of two people or three people and talk. If I had to get up and make a speech, I was horrified. I couldn't even talk." He laughs. "It's still horrifying, but I can do a little talking."

Part of the reason Mac loves doing comedy is that it "makes me forget my problems. It helps me get through life because by doing what I love to do, I'm able to make people laugh and satisfy something within myself."

And if he's had a bad day, doing comedy helps put his problems into perspective. They don't seem that bad after all.

"It's the same with the people when they come in to see the show. If we can make them laugh and they forget their problems, they can feel differently about their lives."

Midland man's work featured at MC gallery

The recent works of Midland native Denny Pickett are featured through Friday in an exhibition at Midland College's McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building.

The show may be viewed, at no cost, today from 1 to 5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. and Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Pickett, an instructor of art at MC from 1975-79, received his bachelor of arts degree in political science from Southwestern University, Georgetown, and his master of fine arts degree from Texas Tech University. When he left MC, he went to New York to concentrate fulltime on painting. He now lives in Georgetown.

His works have been honored as "Best of Show" at the eight annual Museum of the Southwest Regional Show and the Midland Arts Association Fall Show. They have also been selected for shows and competition in Houston, Lubbock, Fort Worth, Austin, El Paso and New York.

"Although my skyscapes are not pictorially real, they represent an image derived from years of gazing into the area's peaceful sunsets, turbulent thunderstorms, violent sandstorms and vast clear blue space," Pickett says of his work.

"As an artist, I am uncovering a personal link with the dynamic universe, a spiritual message from the area's vastness, and most important, a realization of the immense beauty in an area considered by many to be stark wasteland. This harsh desert, which is the ghost of a prehistoric ocean, represents the mystery of time as well as space."

Pickett suggests to the viewer of his paintings, to "imagine yourself as a soaring hawk high above the dynamic plains of West Texas."

For this exhibition, Pickett has selected 18 oil paintings on canvas. They range in size from 10 by 11 inches to 5 by 6 feet. Most of the paintings are available for purchase, with a commission going to the MC exhibition fund.

'All of Me' truly androgynous

By DAVID LEE FORREST

The much-ballyhooed new Age of Androgyny reaches an all-time high in the new Steve Martin-Lily Tomlin comedy "All of Me."

In recent months, fashionable gender-benders have been in the news almost constantly.

Magazines and newspapers have been full of articles and editorials about the effect such androgynous pop heroes as Boy George, Michael Jackson and Prince may (or may not) be having on society.

Fashion critics have been busy praising and panning the new "mannish" clothing styles for women.

In movie theaters, audiences have seen Julie Andrews pretend to be a man in "Victor, Victoria," Dustin Hoffman pretend to be a woman in "Tootsie," and Barbra Streisand pretend to be a boy in "Yentl."

Now, in "All of Me," Steve Martin carries androgny to a new extreme by playing a man and woman occupying the same body simultaneously.

Martin plays a young, frustrated lawyer who finds himself in this unlikely bisexual predictament while working for an ailing millionairess, played by Lily Tomlin.

Miss Tomlin's character is on her deathbed and has concocted an eccentric plan to cheat the grim reaper and return from the dead.

"What makes you think you can do that?" Martin asks.

"Because I'm rich," Miss Tomlin replies.

Most of the humor in the early part of the movie is verbal and is delivered in a dry, deadpan manner that's unusual for Steve "Wild and Crazy Guy" Martin.

Miss Tomlin imports an off-the-wall Tibetan monk to transfer her soul from her body to the younger and very attractive body of her stable hand's daughter, played by Victoria Tennant.

The scheme goes seriously astray and Miss Tomlin's soul ends up cohabiting Martin's body, much to the chagrin and discomfort of both. For the rest of the film the woman controls the body's entire right side while Martin retains his command over the left half.

Although it sounds extremely difficult to visualize (after all, how do you show a soul on film?), Martin's skill in physical comedy combines with Carl Reiner's clever directing to create a very funny, slapstick farce.

Reiner has directed most of Martin's previous films, including "The Jerk" in 1979, "Dead Man Don't Wear Plaid" in 1982 and last year's "The Man With Two Brains." "All of Me" is considerably less frenzied than these other rambling and somewhat messy comedies.

While Martin's acting is comparatively restrained in "All of Me," there are still some bizarre scenes. One hilarious, although borderline tasteless, scene involves Martin desperately trying to go to the men's restroom with very little cooperation from Miss Tomlin's thoroughly disgusted half of the body.

Miss Tomlin's role unfortunately limits her to making cameo appearances inside mirrors for the bulk of the film. Although Miss Tomlin does a good job with what little the screenplay gives her to work with, a less-talented comedienne probably could have filled the narrow role just as well.

While the plot of "All of Me" is at best far-fetched, it certainly gives a funny new twist to the old "boy-meets-girl, boy-loses-girl, boy-gets-girl-back" story.

"All of Me," rated PG, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Ninja' steals scenes, but crime doesn't pay

"Ninja III: The Domination" seems to have been made much like Dr. Frankenstein constructed his monster.

The makers of "Ninja III" appear to have just sneaked in, hacked parts off of other movies and sewed them back together to form a misshapen creation of their own.

As a matter of the fact, probably the most enjoyable thing about this low-budget, low-quality martial arts movie is that a film buff can play a sort of cinematic "Trivial Pursuit" by trying to identify which scene was ripped off from what successful film.

"Ninja III" borrows very, very liberally from other martial arts films — especially those of Bruce Lee — which is not too surprising. However, it also steals chunks of story from "The Exorcist," the closet scene from "Poltergeist," the main character from "Flashdance," some special effects from various music videos and even a bit of hair-styling from "The Bride of Frankenstein."

The film's flimsy plot has a young woman in Arizona named Christie, played by Lucinda Dickey, become possessed by the spirit of a dead Ninja (the Ninja were professional assassins in medieval Japan).

Christie, a cable repairman for the telephone company, also teaches aerobics classes. When not climbing telephone poles or exhorting her exercise students to "make it burn," she dances around her apartment in stylish and skimpy "Flashdance" apparel to loud music.

When she's possesed by the Ninja, however, she finds time to go out and kill a few dozen policemen in between workouts and dancing. The audience can always tell when the Ninja spirit is in control, as Christie's eye make-up changes to give her an Oriental look.

Even though his co-workers are dying left and right, Christie's policeman boyfriend, played by Jordan Bennett, only becomes suspicious after her voice changes, her hair instantly develops two white streaks and she spends several minutes spinning around in mid-air during a visit to a Japanese fortune teller. Like everyone else in this movie, Bennett's character is really not too bright.

A good Ninja warrior, played by Sho Kosugi, arrives from Japan to do battle with the evil spirit, which is fortunate since Kosugi is the only actor in this film who manages to stage a semi-realistic fight sequence.

The acting is as bad as the plot, the dialogue and the directing. It takes a martial arts movie as poor as "Ninja III: The Domination" to make one really appreciate that the late Bruce Lee was truly an artist in this type of physical action acting.

One hopes that if there is a "Ninja IV" the filmmakers will try to emulate Bruce Lee rather than stylistically rob his grave.

"Ninja III: The Domination," rated R, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Comedy role delights Victoria Tennant

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features Syndicate

"The picture is 'All of Me,' a comedy and one of the most delightful experiences I've ever had," says bright, forthright beauty Victoria Tennant. "Great for me because I've never done a comedy before. I never realized you could go to work and laugh all day." A happy time made even happier by Steve Martin, with whom she is romantically involved on camera and off.

"A brilliant man. Not only superbly funny but equally adept with real human emotion. Like Cary Grant, he has great style, great class and a tender vulnerability. Wait 'til you see him in this picture."

"This is a film which says being pretty is not enough, being rich is not enough. It is an intense examination of the relationship between a man and a woman."

That the films in which she participates have meaning is important to Ms. Tennant, a woman aware of the responsibility acting involves. "What I believe — my morals, my philosophy — must reflect in my work. Any story that shows the value of human life, the importance of ideals and human striving, appeals to me," she said.

She has just received major critical acclaim as the English beauty who adored Robert Mitchum on ABC's "Winds of War" and had turned down several parts which might have been commercial blockbusters so that she could join English writer Matthew Chapman and two of their closest friends, Blaine Novak and Doug Dilge, in writing and producing a picture of their own, "Strangers Kiss."

MS. TENNANT EXPLAINS, "I loved 'Strangers Kiss' because it was our own project. It's wonderful to be able to take some kind of control over your own professional destiny. Also, it gave me a chance to play two absolutely diverse people, both quite different from the determined plodder I was in 'Winds of War.'

"Carol, the actress, has a rather vulgar, theatrical look, and the part she plays in the movie-within-the-movie is that of a simple tenement girl — not someone Carol would care in the least to resemble.

"She has the talent to pull it off and finds herself in a personal dilemma: the choice between her keeper, the producer, and a pure young actor with whom she falls in love. Two different characters, that was great, and with an American accent from start to finish. If you don't take a bit of a challenge and a bit of a risk, a lot of fun goes out of life."

The great brown eyes twinkle. Ms. Tennant likes fun and finds it. She has been seen, aside from "Kiss," in the CBS TV film "Dempsey." She played the boxer's second wife, Estelle Taylor.

She was also in "Chiefs," the six-hour miniseries starring Charlton Heston in which she played a British war bride. Now "All of Me," then off to London to star in Robert Ludlum's novel "The Holcroft Covenant" with James Caan.

Without question, blonde Ms. Tennant is headed for major stardom. The surprise: She is that rare being to whom stardom is not the desideratum. Nor is celebrity.

WHAT SHE WANTS as an actress is to be able, chameleon style, to slip from one characterization to a totally different one time after time after time, like Robert De Niro, "who successfully keeps his career so varied, that you believe all the people he becomes" and Sir Laurence Olivier, whom she calls Uncle Larry, and who is, in fact, her godfather.

"That is the challenge, the goal and the delight," she says, shaking her demurely bobbed hair. She is, incidentally, dressed very sweetly in a grey and white striped sun dress and gray kid pumps, a decided contrast to a previous meeting when she was a provocative nymph in black tights with thigh-high leather boots and frizzled hair.

Ms. Tennant continues, "I think it impossible to disassociate one's career from one's life. I want jobs which allow me to waken at 5 a.m. feeling butterflies in my stomach and thinking, 'Oh, what a challenge! Can I do it today?' That's what's exciting and since coming to Hollywood it's what I've been able to do — work with people I admire on projects in which I believe.

"It's exactly what happened on 'All of Me.' She loved working with Lily Tomlin and of course Steve...." His work was no surprise.

Ms. Tennant had seen all his films. On location for "Chiefs," deep in the South Carolina countryside, she spent her one day off driving into the nearest small town to see his "The Man With Two Brains" which was playing there. But to find romantic attraction, working with an actor, was the last thing she'd ever expected.

"Love scenes are the most unromantic in the world," she explains. "Imagine trying to kiss someone with 80 people on the set, trying to appear that you are swooning with emotion and at the same time, hit your marks, not bump his nose with your nose and not get into each other's camera angle.

"IN 'STRANGERS KISS' we had a scene like that where the actors do it all wrong. Comedy is more difficult than drama and I learned so much from both Lily and Steve. It's fascinating that something which looks so off-the-wall to the audience is a precision performance for which you are practiced and aware."

She pours tea at the cocktail table of rough-hewn wood which dominates the living room of her apartment. "Movies are like dreams," she muses. "You go to the cinema and suspend your own identity and belief and dream you are that person. The audience becomes part of whatever is happening on screen — political, imaginative or romantic."

"You march to the drum. Such a powerful medium, it bypasses the mentality and goes right to the emotions. Later, you think about what you've felt.

"In reading, the reaction is just the opposite. You think as you read and then feel about it. Because film affects the audience so directly, you have a tremendous responsibility as an actor. Emotion is universal; it crosses all barriers. Think of Chaplin's films. Everything communicates through film because of the action and the close-up.

"I grew up in a household where the theater was a very respected profession, where your family and friends were actors eminent in their profession and with enormous respect for themselves."

Her mother was the internationally famed prima ballerina Irina Baronova, who also made three movies and appeared in a Broadway play before marrying talent agent Cecil Tennant. She was given ballet lessons from the beginning, but there was never a question of her becoming a dancer. She was trained from the age of 8 in the Theater School, then went on to the Central School of Speech and Drama.

SHE DID NOT want to follow in her mother's footsteps and be compared with her. Her desire was acting, and she knew that by the time she was 11. "Up until then, I'd thought I might be a costume and set designer because that is what my mother's father was and our house was full of his pictures and designs which I admired a lot."

The family always knew where Victoria was headed, and they were supportive and proud and saw to it she had the proper education, the right perspective.

"I think increasingly, people's information and entertainment are visual," she says. "More and more people rely on the visual medium rather than the written word and there is a great deal of power and responsibility that comes with being involved in the medium that can reach the largest number of people in the world.

"As I say, our household respected acting. Having Uncle Larry around so much was a great lesson to me. He didn't just get up and act. He went to the gym, he worked with a voice coach, he worked his guts out for every role."

Ms. Tennant continues, "My father had noted clients and they, too, were diligent. I had a plethora of role models. It was wonderful to have a family which understood and supported you and gave you a solid foundation in life. You then know where you come from and you know you can't con them, they're pros."

Unfortunately, her father never lived to see her professional debut. When she was 17 he died in a car accident. "One of the terrible ways for someone to die. So pointless. Just in a matter of seconds. You always think of it as something that happens to other people, but it happened to us, and it was devastating.

"WE ALL SCATTERED. My mother went to Switzerland and she is still there, very involved in the arts. She is on the Art Council, gives master classes and works with professional ballet companies. A very beautiful lady..."

Ms. Tennant brings out a holiday picture: her mother, her grandmother (now 85), her brother, Robert, who lives in Carmel, her niece, her sister, Irina, who lives in England, but who shortly after their father's death, took off for New Zealand.

"It was a terrible moment. I felt so alone. And it was just then that I made my first film, 'Ragman's Daughter.' We shot on location in Nottingham and for the brief time of shooting, I felt as though I'd found a new family." Hers was the starring role in the picture and she was only 17.

The film was warmly received in London and by the time it was released in America, Ms. Tennant had married and her husband came with her for the New York opening. It could have been the beginning of an international career. Instead, she stopped working entirely.

She explains, "I wanted to take a breather for a while, having been trained all those years and having accepted whatever roles were offered me in the theater. I felt I had to say, 'Wait a minute, let's think about what's going on here and what I reall want to do with my life.' I took a few years out...as long as it took me to grow up and know what I wanted and I'm glad I did," Ms. Tennant admits.

"I think everyone reaches that point of questioning and I'm glad it happened to me so early in my 20s. I sorted out some things about myself. The marriage ended. If you can't live within your own skin, you can't live at all comfortably; and the conditions of the marriage were not what I wanted. It represented repression rather than freedom, which is what often happens to people who marry too young.

"ONCE I KNEW what I wanted. I went ahead, followed a straight line of intention and life has been terrific ever since. I went back to work, first as hostess of a weekly talk show in Manhattan, then back to Europe, and have been happy and fulfilled ever since. By the time I got back into acting, I had more to bring to my work for having had life experience on the outside.

"I've actually lived in America eight and a half years in all, the last three in Beverly Hills. It is a wonderful country. New York is most exciting." She and Martin spent a holiday there when filming ended, seeing friends and attending the theater.

"But the West Coast is a wonderful place to live and conduct business. I love the ambiance. You can go to the desert, to the mountains, and your lifestyle here is whatever you construct."

That she plans to stay is confirmed by the presence of all her wordly possessions: her books, her pictures and furniture which have now made the trip from New York to London and back to this free-spirited apartment in Beverly Hills.

The rooms are large, sunlit and airy. Tables and bookcases are handcrafted by a carpenter who is an artist. There are bare wood floors, satirical posters, lovely prints, deep couches upholstered in white handwoven fabric. "I'm lucky enough to live where and the way I want."

There is no shortage of career choices. "There were times," she recalls, "when I was broke and had to work to pay the rent. Having been through that, I'm very grateful to have been working steadily and am privileged to wait for what I really want to do."

She's looking forward to "The Holcroft Covenant" with locations in Munich, Berlin and London. Hopefully Martin will be coming to join her in London. It is a happy time.

Teacher/composer to address gathering of music teachers

Campbell

A lecture on "Building Musicianship" and performances in master classes by four area piano students will highlight Saturday's music teachers workshop at Midland College. The workshop is sponsored by the Midland and Odessa music teachers associations.

Composer and longtime piano teacher, Carolyn Jones Campbell of Dallas will present the 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. workshop in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College.

Mrs. Campbell, a graduate of Chicago Musical College with a master of music degree in piano performance and pedagogy of theory, was instructed by Dr. Rudolph Ganz and Alexander Tcherepinen. She is the mother and teacher of Jeffrey Campbell, who won the National Young Artists Collegiate Award in piano and performed with the Midland-Odessa Symphony.

A past president of Dallas Music Teachers Association, Mrs. Campbell serves as assistant state chairman for the World of Music History Program for Texas Music Teachers Association. Mrs. Campbell has presented workshops throughout the south, recently presenting one of the 1984 Music Teachers National Association Convention, Louisville, Ky.

Mrs. Campbell has taught piano for 32 years. Her students have won Texas Music Teachers Association State Student Affiliate competitions, Dallas Music Teachers Association Outstanding Senior Musicians trophies, Whitlock gold theory medals, World of Music History Quiz medals and two Wheatley Awards from North Texas State University as the outstanding freshmen in piano.

MAA outlines plans for benefactors

Midland Arts Association board members outlined plans for visual arts benefactor opportunities during a September meeting in the home of association president Mary Lou King.

Art purchase award opportunities will be made available through the MAA/Midland College Juried Art Exhibition to be held in October at the Allison Fine Arts Building. Artists who are accepted into the show may agree to make their work available for purchase awards in the amount of $150 or $250.

The purchase award concept is intended to provide sales incentive for quality art to both artist and patron.

Cash prizes of $500, $300 and $200 also will be awarded by exhibit judge Otis O. Lumpkin. Firms and individuals may elect to become 1984-85 benefactors of the visual arts in Midland by becoming sponsors of this exhibit.

About 50 members were in attendance at the dinner meeting. In addition to discussing the art purchase awards and the October exhibition, plans were made to build an association that reflects the growth of Midland and to increase and update the educational opportunities for the artists.

Those interested in more information on this organization may call membership chairman Cindy Wolfe, 694-4952.

'God Knows' it's a comic novel

"God Knows," by Joseph Heller; 353 pages; Knopf; $16.95.

A Review

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT
New York Times News Service

One surprise in Joseph Heller's new novel is that its hero isn't talking to God anymore. So what! a reader may exclaim; none of Heller's heroes have ever spent any time conversing with a deity. That's true, but none of them have ever been King David of the Bible before.

David, the hero and narrator of "God Knows," not only used to speak to God, but he also got answers from Him. "Although I never actually walked with God," David tells the reader at the start of his narrative, "I did talk with Him a lot and got along with Him in perfect rapport until I offended Him the first time; then He offended me, and later we offended each other."

"I've got this ongoing, open-ended Mexican standoff with God, even though He might now be dead," David says. "Whether God is dead or not hardly matters, for we would use Him no differently anyway. He owes me an apology, but God won't budge so I won't budge. I have faults, God knows, and I may even be among the first to admit them, but to this very day I know in my bones that I'm a much better person than He is."

Now, this is a situation that has wonderful possibilities as Joseph Heller's ultimate challenge to authority, surpassing Yossarian's contest with the military in "Catch-22," Bob Slocum's struggle with the corporate hierarchy in "Something Happened," and Bruce Gold's war with his father in "Good as Gold." So a reader sticks around, awaiting developments.

While we wait, we are thrown a scrap of entertainment every page or so. We get anachronisms. "Some Promised Land," says David about what God showed the children of Moses. "The honey was there, but the milk we brought in with our goats. To people in California, God gives a magnificent coastline, a movie industry, and Beverly Hills. To us He gives sand. To Cannes He gives a plush film festival. We get the PLO. Our winters are rainy, our summers hot. To people who didn't know how to wind a wristwatch He gives underground oceans of oil. To us He gives hernia, piles, and anti-Semitism."

We get scriptural gags. Heller's Solomon is a dunce who keeps asking what David means when he says, "Let not the hoar head of Joab go down to the grave in peace." (" 'Forget the hoar head!' I answer at the end of my patience, lifting my voice almost to a shout. 'I want you to kill Joab. Don't you understand? Blow the bastard away!' ") Sarah, the wife of Abraham, is "the first Jewish mother," and Michal, King Saul's daughter, is "a bona-fide Jewish American Princess."

David, as a writer, takes credit for every felicitous utterance in history, from "The Song of Songs" to Reggie Jackson's "I'm the straw that stirs the drink," although he blames his wife Bathsheba for Psalm 23: "We're not sheep. That's what's wrong with the whole concept. And here's another big error. Either 'valley of death' or 'shadow of death,' not both. Not 'walk through the valley of the shadow of death.' Oh, give it up, Bathsheba, give it up. You don't have the head for it. You think writing psalms is a snap? Go back to macrame."

We even get occasional dramatics, like the madness of Saul, the slaying of Goliath, and the rebellion against David of his beloved son Absalom, which is high on his list of complaints against God.

Many of the jokes are extremely funny — particularly a running gag about the trouble David has had because of a line he wrote about Jonathan: "Thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women." It will come as no surprise that Heller has a gift for spotting absurd situations, particularly when he can give them a bawdy twist. After a couple of hours with "God Knows," you get in such a silly mood that it's even hard to go back to the King James version without laughing.

But after a while, you pay less attention to the jokes and begin to wonder what else Heller can possibly be up to. Which is the innocent-looking theme that will explode in your face at the end, like Snowden's complaint of being cold in "Catch-22" or the trouble with Slocum's son in "Something Happened?" We know that Bathsheba will get her way, no matter how David tries to deny her ambition. We know that her son, Solomon, will get the throne of Israel, despite David's insistence that he's too dumb to rule. Will there be a catch? Will God speak? Or is it all just a gag?

Some readers may not be disappointed. They'll be laughing still over Solomon's announcement to David, "I want to cut a baby in half." ("Good God! You do?" "I do." "Why?" "To show how fair I can be. Everyone will think I was very fair.") Or over David's theory that "the singular reason men like Joseph, Moses, Abraham, Jacob, Samuel, and me were selected by the currents of destiny to stand out from the ordinary was that we all have solid English names that are recognizable and familiar."

But for all its high spirits, the novel seems to me to get very tired by the end. I can't believe that Heller has no more than a comedy routine in mind, and little more in the way of theology than is summed up by the punchline "Where the ark is today, God knows," or the epigraph "But how can one be warm alone?" Yet there's little evidence of any serious intention in the novel. And without any seriousness, its comedy seems shallow.

'The Paper Men' long on literary allusion

"The Paper Men," by William Goldberg; Farrar Straus Giroux; $13.95; 191 pp.

A Review

By FRANCES McCONELL
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

In "The Paper Men," the new novel by William Golding, crank narrator Wilfred Barclay is a successful novelist and budding paranoiac, subject to "black holes" of drunken amnesia, in flight from his past and from anyone who would expose it — especially from Rick Tucker, a hulking American academic who wants permission to write Barclay's biography. For six years, Barclay and Tucker spar and chase each other across Europe while, in the meantime, Barclay writes several books, including this one, Barclay's only official biography.

Much of this is farce, and Barclay claims descent from such masters as Sterne, Beckett and Nabokov.

Actually, Barclay claims descent from just about everybody. He says the question critics ask of a book is, "From what other books does it come?", and this book is one allusion after another — to Oscar Wilde, Shakespeare, Thomas Mann, Tolstoy, Wordsworth. Part of the game is figuring out which voice Barclay will use next.

Barclay is playfully, relentlessly, obsessively literary. His theory is that to write, you ought to stare at a brick wall all day. Art is not a window, but a screen. Life is a distraction. Character and experience are mere constructs.

If one version of the world is no truer than another, why shouldn't Barclay edit his own life? Tucker might tell the wrong version. Tucker might give people the idea that Barclay is not simply heterosexual.

There is much evidence that this is the secret Barclay runs from. His version of the past is transparently fabricated — as are his women. His meetings with Tucker are heavily Lawrentian. The only other male character, Barclay's alter ego, John St John John, is pure camp.

But for Barclay, the novelist hiding from himself and the world, the nature of his relationship to Tucker the critic is paramount -- the reason for his black holes, his overpowering, world-consuming paranoia and his obsession with the literary.

I've left one thing out: Neither Barclay nor the book ever owns up to this question. Perhaps because to do so would dissolve the construct, close off the joke, make the black hole no longer universal. Or perhaps, by laying this egg of doubt, Barclay is wickedly suggesting writers and critics all have such secrets blocking them off from self-knowledge and the world, making them believe there is no "out there" out there.

Folk toys to be shown

BIG SPRING — The exhibit "Mexican Folk Toys," from the Institute of Texan Cultures in San Antonio, is on display through Friday at the Heritage Museum, 510 Scurry St., Big Spring.

Many of the more than 200 Mexican toys in the exhibition are educational because they are miniatures of tools and utensils used by adults. Many are seasonal, designed for use during religious or national holidays. Although the toys were made in Mexico, each of them provides a look at the heritage of Texas children of Mexican American descent.

The museum is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is $1 for adult non-members. The exhibit is free to children, youth groups and museum members.

He was on the short side with a pronounced pot belly, and dressed all in black. But there was a twinkle in his eye that belied his sober appearance.

"These brilliant plays are all very well," he said, "but frankly, reading about them bores me after a while. Give me something with a touch of humor, any day. Like the time I took a trick by sheer force!

"It was at the Summer North American Championships in Washington, a few months back. My niece, the Five of Clubs, had insisted that we try our hands at duplicate. Not my cup of tea. I was shut up in a small box with 12 other cards, none of whom I knew. Then we were jerked out and the auction began. In no time we were defending four spades, and my hand led his partner's suit.

"Declarer won the ace of diamonds, cashed the ace of clubs and continued with a club and ruffed low in dummy. Declarer ruffed a diamond, then tried to ruff another club in dummy. My partner overruffed and led another diamond for declarer to ruff. Declarer tried to ruff another club with the king, but he was overruffed and still another diamond came back. Declarer had to ruff high.

"Undaunted, declarer tried to ruff his fifth club on the table. He was overruffed, and the fifth diamond was led. Declarer realized it would be futile to ruff low, so he trumped with the queen. He cashed the ace, and exited with a heart. Partner won and led his last heart, and I took the 13th trick!

"Strange game bridge. Trumps were never led, and our side scored four trump tricks and a heart for down two. To cap it all, I would probably have played the hand in the same way."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: "Muppets" creator Jim Henson, Sheila MacRae, actor Anthony Newley, football's "Mean" Joe Greene and Olympics anchorman Jim McKay share your birthday. Also born on this date: writer F. Scott Fitzgerald. Your warmhearted generosity brings you new romance and business in the months just ahead. Give a financial project more time to develop before deciding whether or not to continue it; the benefits will be greater than you think. Travel and overseas contacts broaden your perspective. Discard outmoded ideas and methods. Innovative thinking is the key to greater career success. A gracious host, you love to give parties. Keep costs within limits.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Something that happens today reminds you of a previous experience. Diplomacy helps you cut through red tape, hastening progress at work. A new hobby could prove highly lucrative.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A strong difference of opinion with a family member requires tactful handling. Try to curtail the hours you spend traveling or working away from home. A Virgo contributes to your loved ones' comfort.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Start putting cash aside for the winter holidays. Others may not appreciate your independent streak. Emphasize the need for teamwork. A social or romantic encounter proves exhilarating.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Confrontations are best avoided. Refrain from forcing issues. You move closer to a financial goal by improving your skills. Your ability to get along with a difficult individual is severely tested.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The spotlight is on your friendships, both new and old. Do not be afraid to express your admiration for someone. A spiritual experience gives you a whole new outlook. Contact a Scorpio.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pay more attention to your personal appearance and your popularity rises. You reap new rewards from conservative investments made in the past. Romance accelerates. Do not reveal too much too soon.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New job offers could bring a raise or promotion. Weigh all options with care. Bold actions will solve a financial dilemma. Travel brings good luck and has a positive effect on romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Complete projects on time and you receive a nice bonus. The foreign market is the source of many new sales. A friend claims credit as the matchmaker when an engagement is announced.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Welcome an opportunity to show what you can do under pressure. Higher-ups are impressed! An inheritance comes as a nice surprise. Your memory helps you get a job interview.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A change in employment or status is part of the picture. Romance sets you thinking about making a relationship permanent. Business opportunities arise when you least expect them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Not a good day to mix business with pleasure. Keep your personal and professional lives strictly separate. New sales can be made overseas. Be persistent. Share a happy secret with mate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A casual conversation is more important than you realize. Someone could be testing you. Money becomes less of a problem when you learn to economize. Give a teen-ager greater independence.

RCA to issue old Presley recordings

NEW YORK (AP) — RCA Records has announced it will release a series of long out-of-print Elvis Presley records over the next year.

The new releases will include a six-record, boxed set of live performances; monaural re-releases of four early albums; and two singles "six packs," with 12 hits each.

The set of live performances, called "Elvis Presley — a Golden Celebration," includes a recording of the performance Presley gave on TV's Ed Sullivan Show in 1956 — a performance that brought the 21-year-old Presley to national attention.

The four albums to be released in mono are "Elvis Presley," the 1956 album that includes "Blue Suede Shoes;" "Elvis," also from 1956; "Elvis' Golden Records," the 1958 album with "Jailhouse Rock" and "Love Me Tender;" and the 1959 album "50,000 Elvis Fans Can't Be Wrong."
