Britain toughens Falklands stance

By DAVID MASON
Chief European Correspondent

LONDON (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. flew to Buenos Aires today to tell leaders of Argentina's military government Britain will not retreat from its demand that they withdraw all forces from the Falkland Islands.

Haig was expected to arrive in Buenos Aires Friday evening. He left for the Argentine capital after about six hours of talks with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and other top government leaders.

The British took a tough stand toward the growing crisis in the South Atlantic.

Argentina seized the bleak, treeless British colony 250 miles off its southern coast last Friday after years of disputing Britain's 150-year-old control of the islands and their 1,800 inhabitants, most of them of English and Scottish descent.

On Thursday, the Argentine foreign minister said the threat of war seemed to be fading, although talks to resolve the crisis would be protracted. Meanwhile, thousands of Argentine volunteers signed up to fight if called.

IN BRUSSELS, DELEGATIONS from Britain and its nine European Economic Community partners met today to discuss possible economic sanctions against Argentina to protest the invasion. Major arms-supplying nations of the EEC, Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, West Germany and Italy, have already announced a ban on military sales to the South American country.

After talking with Mrs. Thatcher, Foreign Secretary Francis Pym and Defense Minister John Nott, Haig told reporters it was "too early to say" whether he could avert a war.

Shortly before Haig arrived in London Thursday, Nott warned in an TV interview that Royal Navy ships will fire on any Argentine vessel entering the 200-mile blockade zone around the islands that goes into effect at midnight Sunday Falklands time (11 p.m. EST).

"As far as we are concerned, we'll shoot first if any Argentine ships come in," said Nott. "We will sink them certainly within the 200-mile limit."

Britain on Monday dispatched a powerful armada to the South Atlantic to force the Argentines off the islands if diplomatic efforts to resolve the dispute failed. The fleet is not due there until April 20, but British submarines reportedly will be there by the weekend.

British government sources, who requested anonymity, told reporters Mrs. Thatcher made two points clear to Haig:

First, the "depth of intense feeling in the United Kingdom, the country and Parliament," about the Falklands issue.

Second, the issue "not only concerns the Falklands, which is serious enough, but also the question of aggression against a free people, which has enormous implications for the Western world. Dictators cannot get away with this."

"IT IS ABSOLUTELY essential in our view that Argentina withdraws from the Falklands," said one government source. "When we have re-established British administration, we will be in a better position to go into a diplomatic solution."

Haig said he was "impressed by the determination" of the British government.

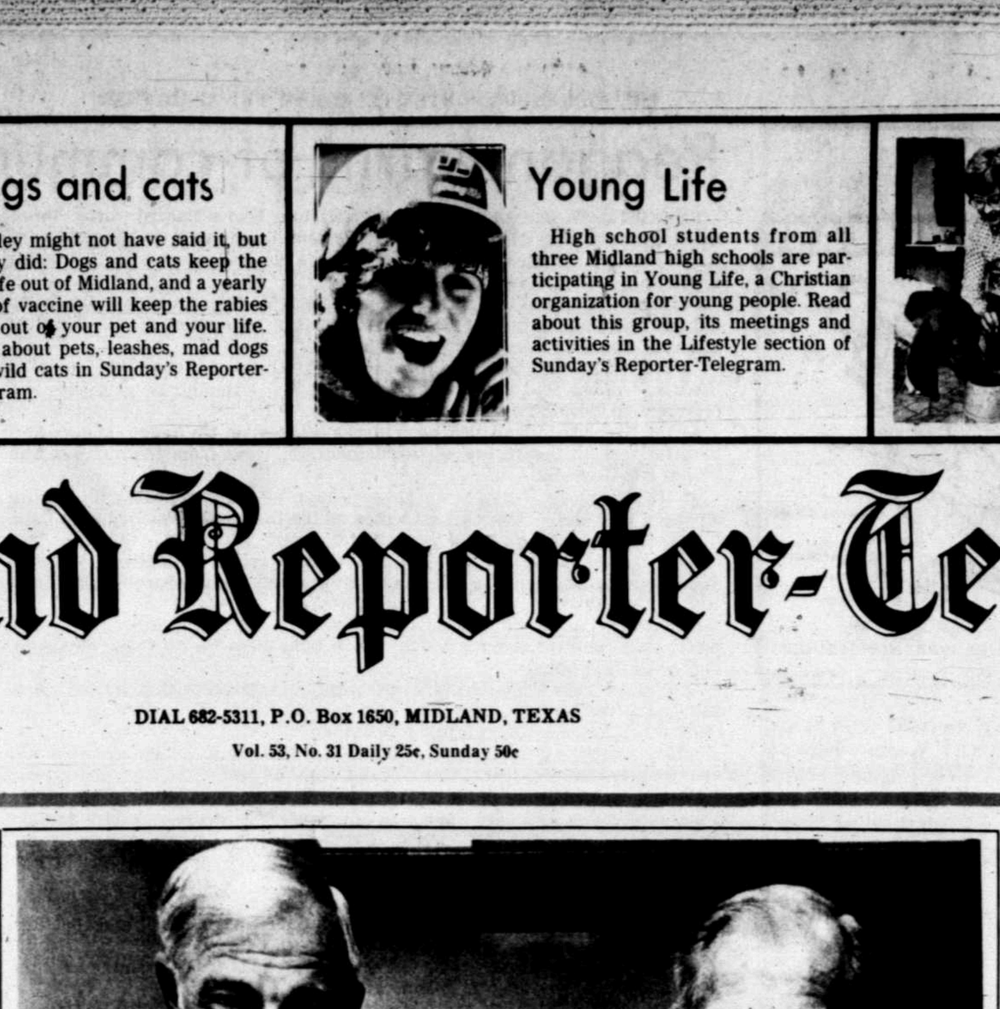

He said his mission was "to see in what way as allies and friends we can assist in the realization of United Nations Security Council resolution 502." The resolution calls for immediate withdrawal of the Argentine troops and a negotiated end to the crisis.

Haig particularly pleased the British when he referred in an arrival statement to Britain being "the United States' closest ally and friend." Some officials had said privately they were miffed at statements from Washington indicating the Reagan administration considers relations with Argentina and Britain on an equal basis.

In Buenos Aires, Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez said he has "great faith" a peaceful solution can be found, but his government is ready to "repel any attack."

"The negotiations are going to be long, complex and difficult," he said, "but I think the threat of war is fading."

Crowds of young reservists and volunteers lined up Thursday at registry offices throughout Argentina.

Energy price fall sharpest in six years

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices fell at an annual rate of 1.7 percent in March, matching February's decline and marking the first time since 1967 that prices have been down for two months running, the government reported today.

Pacing the March decline, which private economists say is largely the product of the stubborn recession, were falling prices for energy and food. The decline in energy prices was the sharpest in more than six years.

Today's report also bolstered economists' predictions that in the coming months inflation — at both the wholesale and retail levels — will be under last year's pace, which was 7 percent at wholesale and 8.9 percent at retail.

In the new report, the Labor Department said its Producer Price Index for finished goods fell a seasonally adjusted 0.1 percent in March.

The last time the measure fell two months in a row was in February and March of 1967, according to Labor Department data. Analysts say that fall may have reflected the credit crunch and mild economic slowdown at that time.

Inflation at the wholesale level had risen 0.4 percent in January and 0.3 percent in December.

If prices fell for 12 straight months at March's 0.1 percent, the yearly decline would be 1.7 percent after seasonal adjustment. The annual rate reported by the Labor Department is based on a more precise calculation of monthly changes than the figure the department makes public.

Analysts both in and out of government had been predicting a 1982 inflation rate of 6 percent to 7 percent, but after the recent good news on inflation, some have lowered their projections to as little as 4.5 percent.

The new report said that over the last year prices at the wholesale level rose a modest 4.1 percent, matching the increase from January 1976 to January 1977.

IN MARCH, ENERGY PRICES fell 2.3 percent, the third straight monthly decline and the sharpest fall since the 2.9 percent of January 1976. Prices for gasoline and home heating oil fell more rapidly last month than in February.

But natural gas costs were up 2.4 percent last month after rising 2 percent in February.

Energy prices overall have fallen at a rate of 18.5 percent since December, "a drop approached only by a 14.2 percent rate of decline in the first quarter of 1976," the report said.

Food prices, which had risen 0.5 percent in February, turned down 0.2 percent last month. Falling prices were reported for eggs, pork, dairy products, fresh fruits and vegetables, and shortening and cooking oils.

Prices were up for coffee, soft drinks, processed fruits and vegetables, fish, beef and veal.

The report said prices for passenger cars and light trucks picked up in March after big drops in February, when prices for light trucks tumbled 7.9 percent. February's drop had been attributed largely to domestic automakers' rebate programs.

Capital equipment costs, which fell in February for the first time in nearly 10 years, picked up in March, rising 0.5 percent. Those costs are for machinery and transportation equipment used by business.

All the increases are adjusted for normal seasonal variations.

IN ALL, THE UNADJUSTED Producer Price Index for finished goods stood at 276.9 in March, meaning that goods costing $10 at wholesale in 1967 would have cost $27.69 last month.

March declines were also reported in the other two components of the Producer Price Index, which reflect price changes at two earlier stages of production. All three of the components were down in February for the first time since early 1975.

In advance of today's release, Thomas Thomson, chief economist for San Francisco's Crocker National Bank, said inflation at the wholesale level "looks good and I don't see any reason why it won't continue to look good for the next few months."

"It's good news," said Allen Sinai, senior economist at Data Resources Inc., a private consulting firm in Lexington, Mass. However, he added, "the other side of the coin is the serious and continuing recession whose end is not yet in sight."

MMH lawyer challenges proposed service offer

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — Silence filled the room at the Texas Health Facilities Commission hearings Thursday when delicate questions were asked of Southwest Health of Midland-Odessa Inc. in the last day of its testimony in the three-way battle over a similar health facility.

As Southwest Health was preparing to rest its case, Midland Memorial Hospital's attorney asked Michael Bullitt to return to the witness stand.

Bullitt, vice president of operations and development at Southwest Health, was the first to testify in the West Plains Psychiatric Hospital's presentation for a $4.169 million, 60-bed psychiatric hospital with chemical abuse services.

When Bullitt took the witness stand, he explained adult and adolescent psychiatric services, including chemical abuse services which would be offered by the hospital.

Kevin Reed, MMH attorney, challenged Bullitt on a proposed services offer.

"Where in the certificate of need application does it say that adolescent beds will be used for treatment of alcohol and/or drug abuse?" Reed asked.

According to its application, Southwest Health is proposing 20 beds for adult psychiatric services, 20 beds for adolescent psychiatric services, 12 beds for alcohol abuse and eight beds for drug abuse. Reed said Southwest Health stated in several exhibits offered as evidence and in its notice of intent that adolescent beds for chemical abuse would be available.

"We lumped it all together," Bullitt explained, but Reed said that, according to the THFC rules, psychiatric and chemical abuse services have "clearly two different definitions."

After the hearing, Carla Cox, Southwest Health attorney, said that she was "not concerned about it."

"If there had been a problem with the applicantion, the (THFC) analysis would have expressed it earlier," she said.

During Bullitt's return to the witness stand, J. Kay Trostle, THFC hearing officer, questioned him on the treatment program West Plains would be offering for its chemical abuse services. "Will the treatment include drug-free therapy?" she asked.

Bullitt answered that initially drugs may be used in the treatment, but it will ultimately depend upon the individual physician.

"Is the answer to my question yes?" Ms. Trostle asked.

"Yes," replied Bullitt.

Ms. Trostle then asked Bullitt if a physician wished to have a patient on a drug-free therapy program within that hospital, would this cause a problem?

Bullitt answered, "Yes," referring to conflicting philosophies of treatment.

Earlier in the hearings, Dr. David Warner, a professor at The University of Texas at Austin, completed his testimony about the need for psychiatric and chemical abuse beds in the Permian Basin. Ms. Trostle asked Warner about the possibility of having two facilities in the area.

"I think it is on the high side," Warner said, referring to the number of beds that would make up the two facilities.

Warner used three elaborate methodologies to determine the need for beds which resulted in the range of 30 to 80 beds for both psychiatric and chemical abuse services at 85 percent utilization for the Permian Basin by 1985.

Warner said a chemical abuse facility alone would not be sufficient to serve the need indicated.

Washington governor rejects Northern Tier's application

By JOHN WHITE
Associated Press Writer

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — Gov. John Spellman on Thursday rejected Northern Tier's application to build an oil superport in Washington state and a pipeline carrying Alaska crude oil to Minnesota.

"I have rejected the application because the proposed project constituted a very real threat to Puget Sound, which is a national treasure," Spellman said in making public his long-awaited decision. "I cannot allow the sound, its delicate ecology, or the economy and lifestyle it supports to become endangered."

Spellman's decision is not expected to be the last word. The issue promises to live on through court appeals and possibly federal intervention.

Cortland Ditler, chairman of the Northern Tier Pipeline Co. board of directors, said the company "regrets" Spellman's decision. The directors will review Spellman's stance before deciding on a course of action.

"Northern Tier reiterates its conviction that the pipeline is needed, that it can be built in a safe and environmentally acceptable manner and that it should be built," said Ditler. "Having so far invested 6½ f years of work in trying to gain approval of the project and with 1,400 permits issued and only one to go, Northern Tier does intend to continue its endeavors."

Helicopter crash kills two

From staff and wire reports

GARDEN CITY — Two Army helicopter pilots died when their aircraft, returning to Texas from an ill-fated training exercise in California, crashed and exploded on a West Texas ranch, army officials and law officers said.

Authorities at Fort Hood, the huge central Texas installation where the helicopter was based, identified the dead men as 31-year-old Warrant Officer Larry Massey of DeRidder, La., and 1st Lt. Donald Parker, 25, of Cleburne. Both men were assigned to the 4-9 Cavalry Squadron at Fort Hood.

The Cobra AH-1S gunship was part of a three-ship formation returning from Operation Gallant Eagle at Fort Irwin, Calif., when it "lost some parts in midair" as it flew over the Glass Ranch, according to ranch co-owner Larry Glass. The two other helicopters landed to try to help but the craft exploded, Glass said.

Department of Public Safety officers said the crash site is east of Garden City about 200 yards west of the Glasscock-Sterling county line just off Texas 158.

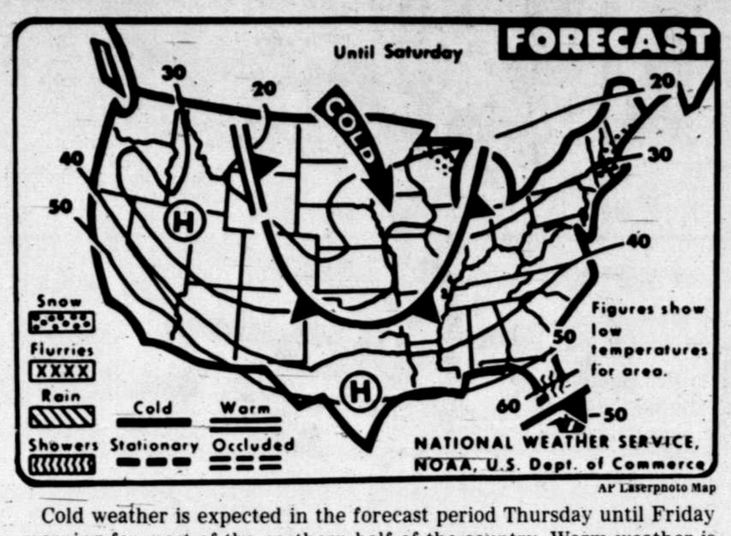

Maj. Tony Geishauser, information officer for military headquarters at Fort Hood, said the pilots were members of the 6th Cavalry Brigade.

Members of Fort Hood's Army Accident Investigation Board were at the ranch trying to determine what caused the mishap, Geishauser said.

Eight military personnel have died since Operation Gallant Eagle began March 15 at Fort Irwin. Five paratroopers were killed in March 30 jump accident, two more were killed in exercise-related vehicle accidents and one died while off-duty.

The training exercise ends April 15.

Reagan warns of communist spread in Caribbean

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — After warning that a Marxist "virus" threatens impoverished neighboring islands, President Reagan went on holiday for the Easter weekend beside a tranquil beach where old Hollywood friend Claudette Colbert has her Caribbean home.

But Reagan's official host, Prime Minister J.M.G.M. "Tom" Adams, indicated he did not share the president's concern about the seriousness of the threat of Marxism spreading from nearby Grenada.

"We have never had Cuba and the Soviet Union as immediate military threats," Adams told a news conference today, although he said they did represent an ideological confrontation.

As for Grenada, Adams saw no immediate threat to the region and said: "I look forward to the spread of the democratic virus from the surrounding islands into Grenada."

So far during his five-day "working vacation" — on Wednesday in Jamaica and here Thursday — Reagan has focused on the theme that his Caribbean Basin initiative can help keep communism out of the area.

He met over lunch Thursday with leaders of relatively well-off Barbados and four struggling neighbor mini-states, St. Vincent, Antigua-Barbuda, Dominica and St. Kitts-Nevis.

Excluded from the invitation list was Grenada, where revolutionaries seized power in a coup three years ago and then built close ties to Cuba, antagonizing the United States.

"El Salvador isn't the only country being threatened with Marxism," Reagan said at the luncheon. "All of us are concerned with the overthrow of Westminster-parliamentary democracy in Grenada.

"That country bears the Soviet and Cuban trademark, which means it will attempt to spread the virus among its neighbors," he said.

He said his Caribbean Basin initiative — a package of investment incentives, trade concessions and $350 million in additional aid funds — "offers another and I believe quite different course. It aims at securing peace, prosperity and freedom for the Caribbean nations by providing new opportunities for economic development" through free enterprise.

After the luncheon meeting, Adams told reporters "the president's remarks about Cuba and Grenada were not the subject of the meeting" and that Reagan referred to Grenada only once in the private discussions.

"I said I hadn't had occasion to think about Grenada for six months until the press questioned me about it," Adams said.

The Caribbean participants in the meeting, all from moderate or conservative elected governments, have expressed concern in the past over Grenada's failure to hold elections and thus legitimize the leftist government which on March 13, 1979, overthrew a previous regime widely recognized as repressive.

At the same time, however, those officials have taken the position that Grenada's revolutionaries are a problem other Caribbean countries can deal with, and that a hard-line U.S. approach might only build sympathy for the tiny island's revolutionaries.

The principal economic activies of Grenada's 95,000 people are the cultivation of nutmeg, cocoa, bananas and tourists.

Adams left his attitude toward the Caribbean Basin initiative less than clear in an ambiguous toast to Reagan at a reception later Thursday. He described the talks as "cordial," said they proceeded from a "general understanding," and then said: "Perhaps in years to come, the Monroe Doctrine and the Truman Doctrine may be joined by the Reagan initiative."

Adams' toast did not specify whether he saw the Reagan program as a repetition of or a departure from those precedents.

His references were to President Monroe's 19th century declaration that European powers may not intrude into Western Hemisphere politics, and to President Truman's post-war efforts to stop communist expansion in Europe. Both often have been viewed with suspicion in the Caribbean.

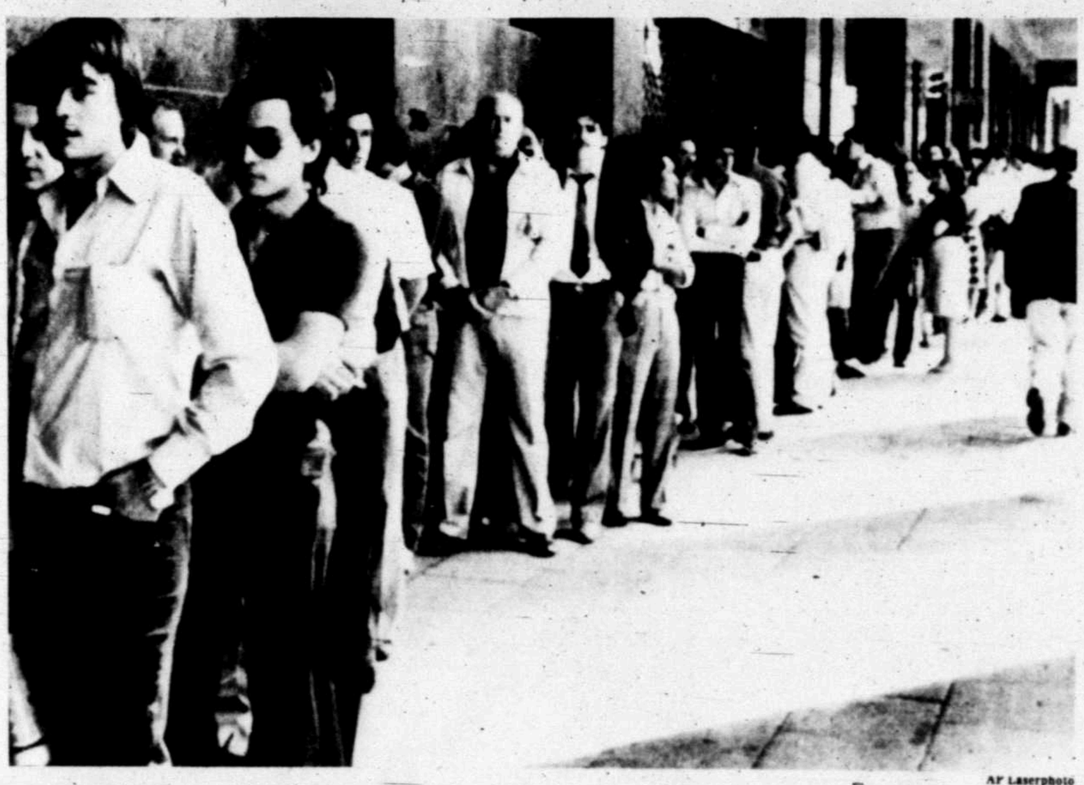

After the luncheon, a senior administration official said the Reagan administration was not excluding Grenada from the Caribbean Basin initiative, but that it would have to change its policies before being included.

The official also said Reagan promised flexibility toward the eastern Caribbean leaders' requests for more direct aid so they can build an economic foundation with which to lure investment money under the Caribbean Basin plan's incentives.

The Reagans are staying at Sandy Lane estate on the plush west coast of Barbados at a private residence made available for their visit by Paul Brandt, a Fort Worth, Texas, furniture manufacturer. Nearby is the beachside home of Miss Colbert, where the Reagans and their personal guests, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Buckley Jr., had dinner Thursday night after the official reception.

Friday and Saturday are set aside on the president's schedule for "private time" with the exception of Reagan's five-minute radio address to the United States Saturday afternoon. One U.S. diplomat here has said Reagan will talk about the Caribbean Basin plan.

On Sunday, the Reagans will attend Easter services at an Anglican church near the Brandt house, have brunch with Miss Colbert and return to Washington.

Clements: alien report preliminary

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says a report on illegal aliens made by one of his special task forces was premature and too preliminary to be taken at face value.

"Frankly, I did not know the task force was going to release anything," Clements told a Thursday news conference.

On Wednesday, Texas Tech president Lauro Cavazos, chairman of the Task Force on Immigration, said the state has a dependable estimate of undocumented workers living in Texas — between 600,000 and 900,000.

Previous estimates used by Clements have been as high as 3 million.

"I caution everyone to look at the numbers in the report as very preliminary," Clements said Thursday. "The actual poll is less than half done. The survey team is still in the field with more than 50 percent of the surveys still to make. Don't jump at conclusions about that report at this time."

Clements added that he thought the release of the survey figures was "premature."

Clements said the preliminary results "indicate undocumented workers are crossing the border less than we thought, are more stable than we thought, are more married than we thought, and they are being paid higher wages than we previously thought."

"All this may be true, but we don't know that," he said.

Clements said he believed the number of undocumented workers in Texas was too low "but they are not through yet. This is an unfinished report."

He said he was confident the task force would have a complete report ready before Congress debates proposed changes in immigration laws.

On other subjects, Clements said:

—He and other state officials would go to Paris Friday afternoon to inspect tornado damage and talk with local officials about federal and state assistance.

Cloudy skies, cooler weather forecast for Midland area

Partly cloudy skies and cooler temperatures are expected this weekend, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The low tonight should dip into the low 40s, while the high Saturday is expected to be in the low 70s. Winds will be variable tonight at 5-10 mph and south to southeasterly at 10-15 mph Saturday, according to the NWS.

No precipitation is forecast. The monthly total remains at a trace and the 1982 amount at 0.59 inch.

The high Thursday of 74 was well below the all-time record for the date of 95 in 1963, while the low of 49 more than doubled the record low of 20 in 1973.

Absentee voting for primaries starts Monday in courthouse

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Absentee voting in the Democratic Party and Republican Party primary elections May 1 will begin Monday for a two-week run on the first floor of the downtown Midland County Courthouse, according to County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry.

Though it's an "off year" as far as presidential elections go, Ms. Cherry forecasts a fairly strong turnout inspired by the gubernatorial race.

"That's what's going to pull them in," the county clerk speculated.

The Democratic Party ballot will be offering 59 candidates seeking 28 nominations for offices from U.S. senator and representative and Texas governor to judge, commissioner and county party chairman. The Republican ballot is carrying names of 33 candidates seeking 24 nominations for comparable offices.

In addition, the Grand Old Party ballot will be carrying five referendums seeking a consensus on legalizing parimutual betting, abolishing mandatory jail time for drunken drivers, expanding the political power of referendums, a ban on handguns and abolishment of the so-called Sunday Blue Laws.

In the local GOP election, only two out of eight offices are being contested. Those are for district clerk and Precinct 2 commissioner; both of those offices currently are held by Democrats.

None of eight Democrats for local offices has opponents in the primary election. And only two of them — Commissioner Charlie Welch and District Clerk Madge Wallis — will face opposition in the Nov. 2 general election.

At the state level, Republican Gov. William P. "Bill" Clements Jr. is being challenged by one opponent, but six Democrats are bidding for their party's nomination for governor.

In the last — 1978 — gubernatorial primary elections here, 5,484 Democrats and 6,293 Republicans voted at the polls. That year, the general election attracted 18,939 voters.

To date, approximately 38,000 Midland Countians are registered to vote in the primary elections. And those who are not registered to vote will not be able to "quick register" and cast ballots, as state law requires a 30-day waiting period between date of registration and voting time.

However, those not registered to vote but who anticipate a desire to vote in the general election in November may register by contacting Voter Registrar Janeice Builta in the eastside basement of the Midland County Courthouse.

Absentee balloting, which will end April 27, will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays in the courthouse.

Car's 'donuts' cause $2,000 damage

A car that apparently was doing "donuts" on the cement pad of the South Lamesa Mobile Home Park caused $2,000 damage to a fence surrounding the pool, according to police, who said the incident occurred about 7:15 p.m. Thursday.

In a burglary complaint, Burl Smith said jewelry and guns valued at $1,050 were taken from his residence sometime Thursday. Entry was gained through a sliding glass door.

high $20s, I don't think the population growth (in the Midland-Odessa area) will continue," he said.

Other testimony for West Plains Thursday came from the Rev. Dean Kelm, a Lutheran minister from Odessa, and Howard Burris, an environmentalist.

Kelm stressed the need for this type of facility, adding that the airport location "would draw clients from both Midland and Odessa."

Burris testified that the noise level at the proposed airport site "is a little high," but West Plains hospital could make some architectural adjustments to correct it.

Midland Memorial Hospital was scheduled to begin testimony for its $3.4 million, 50-bed chemical dependency unit today. Witnesses scheduled were Jason Moore, an architect; Jonathan Swett, TriBrook management consultant; John Holt, MMH's vice president of quality assurance; and Ray Branson, president of MMH.

Denton downplays politics in election

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Noting that the major issues in his race for the Texas Supreme Court were not political but rather ones of qualification and experience, incumbent justice James G. Denton of Lubbock campaigned in Midland and Odessa Thursday.

Denton, 64, is seeking a third six-year term on the state's highest court after having first been elected in 1970.

"My opponent's been a judge four years and I've been a judge 32 years," he said. "My 22 years of appellate experience, and 12 years on Supreme Court experience, and the way I've conducted myself...justify my seeking another term."

Denton, a 1941 graduate of The University of Texas Law School, said in a news release that he will continue to be an independent, conservative voice on the court and will be guided "only by the facts, and with impartiality toward all parties."

Although running on the Democratic ticket, Denton said Thursday he favors Supreme Court justices running without party affiliation on a "non-partisan ballot," and added he feels justices should continue being elected by the populace rather than appointed.

"I don't consider myself" either a conservative or a liberal, he said. "I may be a middle-of-the-roader...the court is to the right of center, I'd say. I suppose we could assume that if my opponent were elected it would be to the left of center."

Denton noted that topics which he expects to be brought before the high Texas court soon include "deception of trade practices and trade liability." He added that during his tenure on the court only three cases have been appealed to the nation's Supreme Court, and that two of those have been upheld and the third "partially overturned due to a change in the burden of proof."

Denton, a Bonham native, began his judicial career as judge of the county court at law in Lubbock in 1950. He was elected 99th District Court judge in 1952 and served until appointed chief justice of the Amarillo Court of Civil Appeals in 1959. He was re-elected twice to that position before taking a post on the Supreme Court of Texas as an associate justice in 1970.

Witness says boat couldn't have held weight in it

DALLAS (AP) — A 14-foot motorboat that capsized on Lake Mexia last summer, resulting in the drowning of three teen-age suspects, should not have been expected to carry the six people aboard, an engineer testified Thursday.

Mark Tucker of Monarch Boat Co. in Monticello, Ark. was the last state witness before prosecutors rested their case against three suspended Limestone County officers accused of criminally negligent homicide in the youths' deaths.

The misdemeanor charge carries a maximum penalty of a year in prison and a $2,000 fine.

The three officers had arrested the black teen-agers suspected of marijuana possession at a lakeside celebration and were transporting them across the Central Texas lake to a sheriff's command post when the boat overturned 40 yards from shore.

The officers said they used the boat, which had no life preservers or running lights, because a bridge was congested with traffic from the annual Juneteenth celebration which marks the day in 1865 that Texas slaves learned they were free.

Deputy Kenny Elliott and probation officer David Drummond, both white, swam to shore and reserve deputy Kenneth Archie, who is black, clung to the boat and was rescued.

Drowned were Steven Booker, 19, of Dallas, and Carl Baker, 19, and Anthony Freeman, 18, both of Mexia.

Tucker conceded Thursday that the maximum weight limits posted on the boat were stricter than those set by the U.S. Coast Guard for such a craft. But even using the government's limits, the boat would have been overloaded, he said.

The posted limits, set by the Boating Industry Association, were 400 pounds for passengers and 600 total pounds. The Coast Guard sets 650-pound limits for people and 865-pound total limits for such boats, he said.

Under questioning by defense attorneys, Tucker said the boat conceivably could remain afloat and operable if the 865-pound limit were exceeded, "but it's not recommended."

Close union vote will save GM about $2.5 million

DETROIT (AP) — The United Auto Workers union announced today that the union's rank and file narrowly approved a concessions contract aimed at saving General Motors Corp. $2.5 billion over 2½ years.

"It was a long struggle from January," Owen Bieber, UAW vice president in charge of the union's GM department, said at a news conference.

Official vote results were 114,468 to 105,090, a razor-thin 52 percent margin in favor of the pact and one of the closest ratification votes in UAW history, union leaders said.

"The closeness of the vote makes it clear that this was a very difficult and painful step for our UAW-GM members, yet one taken in an attempt to address our problems in these very troubled economic times," said UAW President Douglas A. Fraser. "Hopefully we'll go back to the bargaining table in 1984 to negotiate with a healthy industry in an expanding economy."

Bargaining between the UAW and the No. 1 automaker began Jan. 11, but talks collapsed Jan. 28 over job security for union members, economic issues and reluctance by the union's rank and file to grant concessions to the nation's No. 1 automaker.

The talks at GM resumed after the automaker announced plans to close seven plants and after indefinite layoffs climbed to 150,000. Also, on March 1, Ford Motor Co. and the UAW signed a historic concessions contract granting the No. 2 automaker $1 billion in concessions.

Earlier unofficial results, mostly among small locals, showed a healthy margin of approval for the tentative contract that was reached March 21 after 37 straight hours of bargaining. But as larger UAW locals began voting Wednesday and Thursday, unofficial tallies showed an increase in the number of no votes.

In reports received Thursday, for example, two locals approved the pact while six rejected it. Ratification depends upon the total number of yes and no votes cast, not the number of locals rejecting and approving the tentative pact.

While the Ford Motor Co. proposal passed by almost a 3-1 margin in voting by 56 locals, several union leaders at GM plants had said they did not expect that kind of approval for their contract. Ford and union officials attributed the large margin of approval to the fact that the automaker reported a 1981 loss of $1.06 billion.

GM reported a $333 million profit last year, a point often noted by autoworkers opposed to concessions.

Under the accord, which closely follows the one the UAW signed March 1 at Ford, GM's U.S. autoworkers will give up nine annual paid personal holidays, defer their June, September and December cost-of-living allowance increases and forfeit annual wage boosts over the next 30 months. Analysts estimate the savings at $2.5 billion.

In return, the No. 1 U.S. carmaker said it would rescind four announced plant closings, improve benefits for laid-off workers, offer profit sharing and agree to a two-year moratorium on plant closings related to the subcontracting of work to non-union and overseas facilities.

When is a paycheck not a paycheck?

By JAY ROSS
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

KIKWIT, Zaire — "To be a teacher you must be honest, have dignity and moral standards," said a forlorn instructor whose tale of inefficiency and corruption reflects the plight of many in Zaire. "How can you be dignified when you are hungry?" he asked plaintively.

Like thousands of teachers in this vast central African country, the man is not regularly paid by the government. Even when the back wages arrive, the paychecks often do not equal the teachers' paltry salaries because of "skimming" by the bureaucracy. As a result, he noted with disapproval, some instructors demand food, money or sexual favors from their impoverished students before allowing them to attend classes or pass exams.

"THE PROBLEM IS the system — not capitalism or socialism — the problem is the system of morality," said the teacher of French in a state secondary school, who insisted on remaining anonymous.

There is no sign that things will get better soon. In fact, a number of Western diplomats and other analysts are convinced that President Mobuto Sese Seko encourages inefficiency and graft as a means of staying in power. He wants to keep things chaotic in the army and the government so that nobody would be able to organize a coup or risk trying to topple him, the sources suggest. The elite is co-opted by the gains to be had on the thriving black market, they add.

Zaire, seen by the Reagan administration as a bulwark against Soviet advances in Africa, is about to get a fresh influx of U.S. assistance, and U.S. officials acknowledge that the aid must be monitored carefully to prevent theft.

Norman Sweet, director of the U.S. Agency for International Development in Zaire, noted that AID has already begun to supply food assistance in the form of wheat instead of rice because wheat goes through a more controlled distribution process, making it easier to check on losses.

"I'm looking for at least a doubling of development assistance to over $20 million" in the 1983 fiscal year, Sweet said. "We must convince the government" that if U.S. assistance is to increase, "it is important to them not to kill the goose that lays the golden egg."

"Perhaps Zaire is unfairly singled out" for corruption, and other countries are as bad or worse, he said, but added, "There is no evidence that the government of Zaire has improved the way it does its business."

THE TEACHER EXPLAINED how seriously corruption hurts the entire educational system. Because they're unpaid, many of Zaire's teachers carry out rolling strikes for several days or weeks at a time, causing further chaos for schools already plagued by lack of facilities and supplies, low morale and poor test results.

"About 50 percent of the students fail their secondary school exams," which are still European-oriented and graded in Belgium, the teacher said. "The girls who fail work in the fields or become prostitutes. The boys go into the army or sell cigarettes on the streets."

When interviewed recently, the teacher said his pay was six weeks overdue even though he understood the school had received it from Kinshasa, the capital 325 miles to the west, two weeks before. Previously he had gone 2½ months without pay and he cited cases of some teachers who are owed more than a year's salary.

"When you are owed so much back pay, you have to keep teaching just to insure you'll eventually get some of it," a foreigner with long experience in Zaire said. "If you quit, you'll never get any of what is owed."

When asked why it is so difficult to be paid, the teacher described a maddening bureaucratic system with many opportunities for corruption.

The funds for salaries, he said, go from the Bank of Kinshasa to the governor of the district, then to the superintendent of the district school system, then to the school principal and finally to the teacher. At all levels the money can be siphoned off.

Salaries are also small to begin with. The teacher is supposed to earn 500 zaires a month, slightly more than $90 at the official rate of exchange but about half that much in terms of the goods it can buy. His salary is in the top bracket because the teacher has a five-year university degree. His family of six, including four children from one to six years old, must live on his earnings and the produce of a vegetable garden run by his wife.

The rent for their house, which has no electricity, water or doors that lock, is one-fifth of the monthly salary he's supposed to get regularly. A month's supply of manioc — a root that is the staple of the diet — costs a quarter of his pay.

HOW DO PEOPLE manage to survive under such conditions, the teacher, wearing a threadbare suit, was asked.

"It is impossible to have two meals a day," he said. "We eat only once a day."

When he is paid, the family tries to buy large supplies of necessities, such as palm oil, and then sell small amounts to others for a profit. When things are bad, they rely on the extended family. His brother teaches in the Roman Catholic school system, which tends to be better at providing pay.

Other teachers victimize their students. The French instructor said one 15-year-old girl — told by her father to do what she could to earn her school fees — slept with her teacher, became pregnant, and almost died after undergoing a traditional abortion that involved swallowing poisonous plants. As payment for her favors, she had received a red pen, a notebook and less than $2 cash. The case eventually went to court.

The students are already pressed for money because they must pay for all their supplies. A 12-page school notebook costs 40 cents, a fortune for families that are lucky if they earn 100 times as much in a month.

In describing all these troubles, the teacher never mentioned President Mobutu, the American-supported president who has been in power for 16 years, by name, but said:

"We need to change the government, but everybody is afraid. When the leader speaks, many people turn off the radio. The people feel that they have been abandoned."

Shiver me timbers, commodores return

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
Ap Special Correspondent

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Well, shiver me timbers and part my periwig with a belaying pin, the U.S. Navy has brought back the rip-roaring rank of commodore. The one-star rank is equivalent to brigadier general.

A flotilla of new commodores, approved by the president from the recommendations of a Navy selection board, is about to be sworn in, if they haven't been already.

"I have not yet begun to fight." "Don't give up the ship." "We have met the enemy and they are ours." "My country right or wrong." "Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead." "You may fire when you are ready, Gridley."

I never did find out why Gridley wasn't ready, because Clark Gable and Burt Lancaster always were in the movie, but commodores sure had a way with words in our history. The broad stripers seem to have done most of the fighting, too. There's something about buckling on the sword of a senior captain (which is what a commodore really is) that brings out the swash in a fellow. When there wasn't any enemy about, commodores fought among themselves, judging from the famous duels they were involved in.

SOME OF THE most illustrious names in naval history polished their luster as commodores.

Commodore John Barry, often called the father of the U.S. Navy, although he was actually its third boss, captured the first British ship in the Revolutionary War.

Commodore John Paul Jones in the Bon Homme Richard took on the British man-of-war Serapis off Scotland after all but two of the 40 ships in his squadron had bugged out. Jones' flagship had five feet of water in the hold and all its guns out of action except three 9-pounders when the British captain, a chap named Pearson, pulled alongside to inquire if he cared to surrender.

"I have not yet begun to fight," answered J.P., and with that he boarded and captured the Serapis. Just in time, too, because his Bon Homme Richard sank the next day.

At his court-martial for losing the Serapis to the reckless, willful American commodore, Pearson resorted to poetry:

"WHY EVEN death stands still and waits an hour, sometimes, for such a will."

Commodores came into their own and set the tone for countless future movies in the War of 1812. Commodore John Rodgers, aboard the 44-gun frigate President, got the show started with a rousing call to quarters. "Now lads," he told his captains, "we have got something to do that will shake the dust from our jackets. War is declared. We shall have another dash at our old enemies. It is the very thing you had long wanted. The rascals have been bullying it over us these long 10 years and I am glad the time has come when we have satisfaction."

His captains included William Bainbridge aboard the Constitution, Stephen Decatur commanding the United States, James Lawrence on the Hornet, all to become famous fighting commodores.

After capturing two British frigates, Lawrence moved to the Chesapeake and bravely (some historians say foolishly) took on the better armed HMS Shannon. Dying on deck, alongside 146 of his wounded and dead crew, he uttered his farewell commnd: "Don't give up the ship, blow her up."

One of the Perry brothers, Commodore Oliver Hazard, commanding the ship named for Lawrence had the first part of the quote stitched in white muslin on a blue flag which he nailed to the main royal mast in the battle of Lake Erie. But with four-fifths of his crew gone, Perry did give up the ship and went in a rowboat over to the Niagara, which he ordered to fire broadsides against the six enemy ships. This provided his own famous quote in a message to Gen. William Henry Harrison: "We have met the enemy and they are ours: two ships, two brigantines, one schooner and one sloop."

Mulligan's Stew

THE OTHER Perry brother, Commodore Matthew Calbraith, sailed into Tokyo Bay and opened Japan to trade with a calculatedly cool display of superior guns, fancy uniforms and a crack ceremonial honor guard.

Decatur, the most dashing of all the commodores, sailed the Intrepid close in off the shores of Tripoli to board and burn the Philadelphia, which his father had once commanded before its capture by the pirates. Horatio Nelson, the old British sea dog, called it "the most bold and daring act of the age." Decatur gave his now controversial "My country" toast in a celebration at Norfolk. After Decatur captured the frigate Macedonian and Commodore Bainbridge, badly wounded but still in command, took the HMS Java in the War of 1812, the British Admiralty ordered its captains not to engage "American 44's."

At Mobile Bay, Commodore David Glagow Farragut lashed himself to the rigging of his flagship, the Hartford, and gave the full quote: "Damn the torpedoes, four bells; Captain Draycut, go ahead. Jovett, full speed."

Actually none of these famous fighters was flag rank commodore. Theirs was only a courtesy title for squadron commanders, because both the Continental and early federal navies were leery of giving out titles above captain. Congress didn't create permanent commodores until 1862, when the Civil War swelled the size of the Navy, then abolished the rank in 1899. It was revived for a short time in World War II, mostly for convoy commanders. But George Dewey, our first four-star admiral, was a real commodore when he sailed into Manila Bay and told Gridley to do his thing. When Dewey gave his less remembered order, "draw off for breakfast," 10 Spanish gunboats were on the bottom without loss of a single American life.

Long before novelist C.S. Forester raised Horatio Hornblower to the envied rank, commodores in both the British and U.S. navies were considered brave, reckless, lusty and a bit eccentric. Even now an officer on parade with the hatch of his trousers unknowingly open is said to be "in commodore's uniform."

I AM HAPPY to see that the newly named commodores have not lost their penchant for the quick quip. I met one on the list — Joseph S. Cassells of the Medical Corps — at the admiral's garden party on the Charleston Navy base and asked him what he thought of the restored rank of commodore.

"Not too shabby," he replied. Jones, Decatur, Farragut and the Perry Brothers would have nodded approval.

Committees may solicit funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court has upheld a law that permits political action committees formed by corporations to solicit funds from executive or administrative personnel and their families.

The International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers had challenged the practice, saying it was unfair to labor.

The U.S. Court of Appeals earlier this week rejected a union's contention that congressional amendments to the laws favored the corporate committees. In a unanimous ruling, the court said the amendments were "designed to restore a balance to...treatment of corporations and labor unions."

Corporations and unions can form political action committees — separately run organizations that solicit contributions and dole out money to candidates.

Army Corps of Engineers under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., has criticized the Army Corps of Engineers for failing to review 52 water development projects to determine if they are worth the taxpayers' money.

Moffett, chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee on the environment, said earlier this week the Corps reneged on a promise to evaluate projects that were less than 25 percent complete.

But William R. Gianelli, assistant secretary of the Army for civil works, told Moffett it is Congress that pushes the projects, not the Corps.

In some cases, Congress forces the Corps to build projects that aren't economical, he said, adding Moffett should talk to his colleagues to end pork barrel projects.

Study fuels nuclear waste speculation

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK

NEW YORK (AP) — Western belief that a nuclear dump explosion created a "vast barren wasteland" near the Ural Mountains has been challenged by a new study that blames the contamination on decades of careless Soviet air and water pollution.

For years, the "Kyshtym disaster" in the winter of 1957-58 has been referred to in the West as the worst nuclear accident ever. Dissident Soviet scientists claim that the blast left hundreds dead from radiation and leveled as much as 1,000 square miles of land.

But a Los Alamos National Laboratory team, using classified CIA and military documents, now contends that there was no nuclear explosion, that the Soviet government caused the contamination by "carelessness and blatant disregard for their people or their surroundings."

THE RESEARCHERS SAID THAT the explosion theory needed to be "examined impartially" because Kyshtym was "no longer merely an intriguing enigma; the allegations surrounding it bear heavily on the whole question of nuclear waste disposal in the United States."

The Soviet government has never commented on Kyshtym.

The report said that contamination east of the city of Kyshtym in the southern Urals is due chiefly to many years of discharging polluted water from nuclear reactors and chronic "acid rain" produced by a mix of high humidity and nitrogen oxide emissions from a plutonium enrichment plant, which would explain reports of dead trees and grass.

If the Svoiets, in the rush to produce plutonium, did not adequately cool irradiated fuel elements, "the off gases would also contain appreciable amounts of radioactive iodine," the researchers added.

Improper ground disposal of radioactive liquid wastes was cited as another possible cause of contamination. Researchers did not rule out the possibility that a chemical explosion eventually occurred from the compacted storage of ammonium nitrate and hexone, a flammable solvent, among clay particles at the dried-out bottom of an artificial lake used to store nuclear wastes.

The three-year Department of Energy study concludes that while a contaminated area does exist it is far smaller than originally claimed.

The sources and documentation for the Los Alamos findings were not revealed because they are classified as secret, according to laboratory spokesman Jim Breen.

THE LOS ALAMOS TEAM started with the supposition that the Soviet's first plutonium production facility, built in the late 1940s near Kyshtym, was modeled after the wartime U.S. plutonium complex in Hanford, Wash.

According to the report:

A similar, but less carefully regulated, method of cooling was probably employed, with the used water pumped into an artificial lake that flowed into the Techa River.

By 1953, the lake was being fed from three reactors and "had become dangerously radioactive," the report concluded.

Citing classified references to "the leaky reactor at Kyshtym," the report said existence of the "chronic, waterborne source of radioactive contamination" was proof that the river valley was being contaminated "long before any suggested Kyshtym disaster date."

Breen confirmed the existence of a more detailed, classified version of the public report and would say only that the study's authors were given "wide access to classified material from more than one federal agency, including those involved in intelligence gathering."

The authors, chemist Diane M. Soran and physicist Danny B. Stillman, refused to be interviewed directly for fear they might mix up what is classified and what is not, Breen said, adding that both possess high-level security clearances.

The Kyshtym region, where munitions have been produced since the czarist period, has always been of interest to U.S. intelligence. Francis Gary Powers' U-2 spy plane was shot down in 1959 near Sverdlovsk, just to the north of Kyshtym.

THE NEW STUDY challenges the assertions of Soviet emigre scientists Zhores Medvedev and Lev Tumerman as well as a 1979 report by the Oak Ridge National Laboratory that an explosion in a nuclear waste disposal site had caused the widespread contamination.

"It seems rather apparent that the Soviet nuclear program has had to contend with a catastrophe involving reprocessed nuclear wastes," the Oak Ridge researchers proclaimed in 1979.

However, Ed Aebischer, public affairs officer for the Oak Ridge, Tenn., laboratory, said this week that the enviromental scientists who conducted the 1979 resarch had no access to classified documents, but reviewed Soviet ecological and biological journals.

In 1977 the CIA released some information about Kyshtym but withheld portions of 14 documents and another 15 entirely on national security grounds. The new report also contains military maps apparently based on aerial intelligence photographs.

Medvedev, a geneticist, has been writing in the West since 1972 that nuclear wastes stored near the first Soviet atomic power plants exploded and carried radioactive particles over a wide area.

He claimed that hundreds of people died of radioactive poisoning, and the 1977 CIA material quoted Soviet sources as saying "hundreds of people perished."

The public report does not address the question of deaths but Breen said the evidence "did not suggest large numbers of cancer deaths."

Tumerman reported that when he drove through the Kyshtym region in 1961 he found it abandoned, with radiation warning signs frequently posted.

"As far as one could see, the land was dead: no villages, no towns, only the chimneys of destroyed homes, no cultivated field or pastures, no herds, no people — nothing," Tumerman later wrote.

MEDVEDEV, WHO NOW lives in London, told The Energy Daily, a Washington-based trade publication, that he is skeptical of the new conclusions. "It's just like them to say that 'we have materials that prove our point, but you can't see them.' That's not scientific proof."

DEATHS

M. McPheron

HOBBS, N.M. — Margaret McPheron, 76, of Hobbs, N.M., mother of Ann Taylor of Midland, died Thursday at her home after a lengthy illness.

Services will be at 10 a.m. Saturday at Peterson Funeral Home chapel in Hobbs with Jack London officiating. Burial will be at Prairie Haven Cemetery in Hobbs.

She was born Oct. 31, 1905, in Van Buren, Ohio.

Other survivors include a son, another daughter, eight grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

A.A. Underwood

Arletta A. Underwood, 83, of 2800 W. Illinois Ave., died early today in a Midland hospital.

Services will be at 9:30 a.m. Monday at the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church with Dr. A. Boynton Smith and Dr. F. Ray Riddle Jr. officiating. Burial will be at Sunset Cemetery in Dresden, Tenn. Local services are under the direction of Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Underwood was born Aug. 6, 1898, in Dresden, Tenn. She spent her early life in Nashville, Tenn. She married the late Charles F. Underwood in Nashville. Her husband was a former assistant to the publisher of The Reporter-Telegram. He died Nov. 21, 1974.

The Underwoods, who came to Texas from Tennessee, lived at Forth Worth and Ranger before moving to Amarillo in the late 1920s. They moved to Midland from Amarillo in 1952. Mrs. Underwood was a member of the First Presbyterian Church, P.E.O. Sisterhood, Women's Wednesday Club and the Midland Woman's Club. She was long active in the women's work of the church.

Survivors include a brother, Gus Telden Atkins of Miami Springs, Fla.; a sister, May Rene Atkins of North Miami Beach, Fla.; and a niece, Frances Fitzhugh of Nashville, Tenn.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Trinity Towers.

Lena Frizzell, 70, of 2103½ Bryant St., died Wednesday night in a Midland hospital.

Graveside services were to be at 2 p.m. today at Fairview Cemetery with Owen Cosgrove, minister at Westside Church of Christ, officiating, directed by Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

She was born Oct. 20, 1911, in Navarro County and lived her early life in Corsicana. She had lived in a number of places including Fort Worth and Wichita Falls, altennately residing in Midland. She returned to Midland 10 years ago.

Survivors include two sisters, Florence E. Brown of El Paso and Mrs. Coy L. Leonard of Dallas; a sister-in-law, Vivian Steel of Midland; three grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Presidential presentations pose plenty of problems

WASHINGTON (AP) — The never-ending quest on the part of the White House for the perfect way to present the president, any president, to the American people, has taken yet another turn.

Over the last several years, a trend had developed. Whenever the president was greeting a visitor, and the White House staff decided the president's image might be boosted by being shown with the guest, photographers were summoned. Reporters tagged along.

Of course, the "photo opportunities" were also used whenever the president had something on his mind that he wanted to publicize, while avoiding a visit to the White House press briefing room for a formal statement.

The current White House staff has hit on two new methods to get their man in the public eye — but actually they were tried before.

President Reagan has begun a series of 10 weekly radio broadcasts, a la Franklin D. Roosevelt's fireside chats. They place Reagan in a familiar role, delivering in five-minute chunks his view of the world and how he would like to make it better. Stay tuned on Saturday for his portrait of how the world looks from Barbados, where he will be spending an extended Easter weekend.

Taking a cue from Harry S. Truman and other presidents, the White House staff has also taken to inviting reporters to cluster around the president's ornate desk in the Oval Office and spend a few minutes chatting about current events.

Staff members, concerned about the free-wheeling photo opportunities that left Reagan verbally fencing with reporters seeking a snippet of presidential commentary, are trying to ban any give-and-take in the sessions.

So they have said that the president will not answer any questions called out by reporters.

Instead, he will invite them into the Oval Office from time to time, strictly to chat.

State crime rate down in 1981

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas' crime rate declined last year, but the total number of major crimes rose by 22,110 from the previous year, according to director Jim Adams of the Department of Public Safety.

The 1.5 percent decline in the crime rate, which is based on the number of major crimes per 100,000 population, was the first drop since 1977, Adams said Wednesday.

The 1981 crime rate was a fraction over 6,042 crimes per 100,000 population. The number of major crimes, however, rose to 891,549 last year.

Adams said in a statement that 21 percent of the major crimes were cleared by arrests.

The figures, he said, were compiled from data submitted by 737 law enforcement agencies representing over 97 percent of the state's population.

Violent crime, which increased 14.8 percent in 1980 over the previous year, increased less than 1 percent last year. Robbery cases declined by 3.4 percent in 1981, while murder, rape and aggravated assault increased by 2 percent, 1.8 percent and 3.6 percent respectively.

Property crimes — burglary, theft and motor vehicle theft — rose 2.7 percent in 1931.

"The estimated value of property stolen during the commission of all major crimes in 1981 totaled over $945 million," Adams said.

Florida town makes crime nearly impossible

By MORT YOUNG
Hearst Feature Service

GOLDEN BEACH, Fla. — Just north of America's most crime-ridden city, Miami, a small community has decided how much it's worth to be absolutely crime-free.

It's worth $325 each to the 800 residents of Golden Beach. Since they plunked down the cash and took a few controversial measures, not one crime has been committed here.

Well, not quite. Some tools are missing from the construction site of a private home and the speaker from an intercom system can't be found at the site, either. Technically, that's three burglaries — though no one's sure the stuff wasn't simply mislaid. But it's not a bad record for the first three months of 1982.

Not that Golden Beach was ever the scene of a crime wave. Two years ago, it suffered 41 burglaries. Last year it had 18 burglaries and two holdups — about a 54 percent drop in the crime rate. This year, if things keep going as they are, the crime rate may decrease 75 percent.

"They asked me how we're doing it," says Golden Beach Police Chief Richard DiStefani of his fellow Dade County police commanders. "As every cop knows, you don't eliminate crime. You just move it someplace else."

One of the major reasons criminals don't enter Golden Beach is that it is a place they can't get to easily. The city council ordered every road to the outside world closed except one called The Strand and that's guarded by a policeman in a booth.

The other reason is the police force of 13 men, including DiStefani, a 23-year veteran of the New York City Police Department. That's one cop for every 61 residents.

Compare that to Miami, which has two cops for every 1,000 of its 1.5 million residents. Miami also has a rate of violent crime of 1,919 per 100,000 residents and a property crime rate of 9,662 per 100,000. It's the worst in the nation.

And now, Miami wants to do what Golden Beach has done. Get more cops, by raising the 4 percent sales tax another 1 percent.

The Golden Beach Police Force budget is $260,000 a year, says DiStefani, costing residents $325 each.

Another thing Golden Beach has going for it is its geography. It stretches north and south along Route A1A for about a mile. To the east it is bordered by the Atlantic Ocean; to the west, by the intracoastal Seaway. All the east-west streets have been blocked by grass-planted sod and little reflectors. Motorists whiz down Route A1A without even seeing Golden Beach's strip of expensive homes.

The successful fight against crime began last year when the Coral Gables police warned DiStefani that a ring of burglars had moved up the Florida coast and were ensconced in a motel near Golden Beach.

They were supposed to be disguised as joggers, DiStefani recalled. "Hell, everybody's a jogger here. So I suggested that we block off the north end of town at Route A1A."

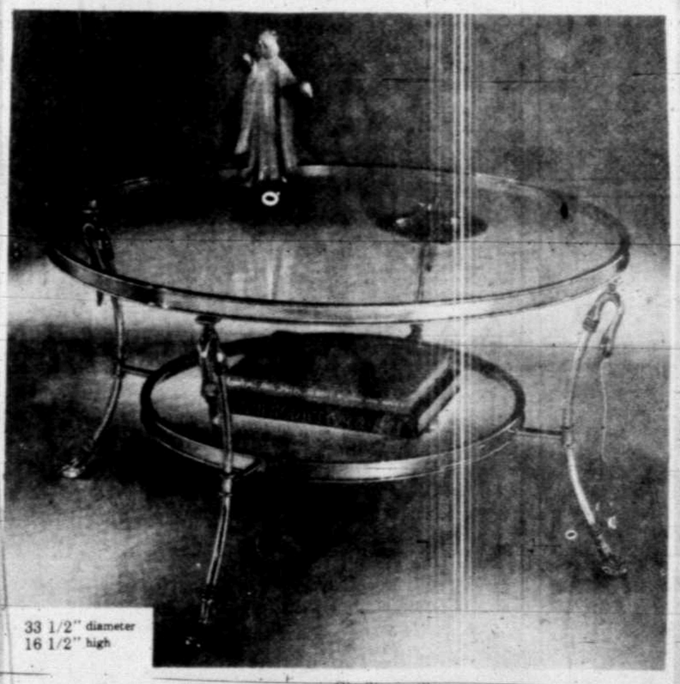

The city council took the suggestion under advisement. The final decision was to stop the world and get off by blocking all the entry streets except one. Even the two ends of the one open through street have chain-link fences that are opened only four-and-a-half hours a day to let the school buses in and out. Golden Beach was sealed off last November.

A visitor driving into town now is stopped by the policeman in the guard booth and asked what his business may be. If it isn't outright knavery, the visitor is allowed in.

"But even if a stranger refuses to say why he's here, we let him in," says DiStefani.

Midland to host Rotary meeting

Midland will be the site for the 1982 Rotary Conference of District 573 April 23-26. Midland Rotarian John Seay, who is the district governor, will act as host for some 500 Rotarians and their wives at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Seay and District Conference Chairman Gene Spires are making plans for the conference. James Speer, the guest speaker for the conference, is the president's representative and has served as past director of Rotary International, as well as past district governor from his home club in Covina, Calif.

Other planned activities include a full sports day on Friday, followed by a "fancy" western night and international night on Saturday.

Events planned for wives include a luncheon, bridge tournament and special entertainment.

District 573 is composed of 57 Rotary clubs from the Midland area north through the Panhandle.

Program theme will be "Peace through Rotary."

For more information, contact Mike Jolly at 683-8682.

YMCA introduces toddler program

Registration is now under way for the first session of the Alamo YMCA's newest program, Toddler Movement Exploration Program.

The class will be offered for those children from walking age through 3½ years. The class will meet each Friday morning for seven weeks starting April 16. There will be two class times — 9 to 9:45 a.m. and 10 to 10:45 a.m.

Toddler Movement Exploration is a complete physical program designed especially for young children. Games and activities are structured to help develop hand-eye coordination, perceptual motor skills and special awareness. It is designed to provide parents the opportunity to experience with their child social and physical activities geared especially for this age child. Everyday activities and safety will be stressed.

Participants need not be YMCA members. For more information on this class, call the Alamo YMCA at 694-2528 or come by 901 N. Midland Drive.

Convicted family killer requests release on bail

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald, convicted of killing his pregnant wife and two daughters at Fort Bragg, N.C., has asked to be released on bail while he files further appeals.

The murders occurred in 1970, but he was not convicted until 1979. He appealed, saying he was denied a speedy trial, but the Supreme Court upheld his conviction. MacDonald, 38, was arrested March 31 after the Supreme Court ruling, but his lawyers filed a motion Monday with the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, asking that he be released again on bail. The court gave the Justice Department until April 20 to respond.

Carter's economist talks on Reaganomics

By SUSAN WARFEL
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Low inflation and moderate economic growth could prevail through this decade if interest rates are brought under control, says Alfred E. Kahn, once known as President Carter's chief inflation fighter.

Otherwise, Kahn told a recent meeting of Town Hall of California, there would be another aborted recovery like the one following the 1980 recession.

Kahn said several factors — like the $110 billion fiscal '82 budget deficit, the '82 tax cut and the decline in inventories — point to an economic recovery in the near future. However, he cautioned, one important element is missing: lower interest rates.

"Cheap money has always been a major factor in recoveries from past recessions," Kahn said. The fact that real interest rates — the difference between actual rates charged and the inflation rate — are at an all-time high is largely attributed to swollen federal deficits and fears of renewed inflation, he said.

Kahn, once a major force in airline industry deregulation as chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board during the Carter administration, later became the president's adviser on inflation and chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability. He currently is a special consulant to National Economic Research Associates Inc. of New York.

Kahn partly blamed bad luck in the form of hefty price increases for imported oil for the double-digit inflation that plagued Carter's presidency. Another problem was convincing Congress of the need for tighter fiscal policy, wage controls and deregulation.

In contrast, he said, since Reagan took office the consumer price index has been slowed by lower raw material and farm prices and "give backs" from labor unions.

Still, he praises some of the current administration's efforts. "I think they're about 50 percent right and 50 percent wrong," he said.

Among the achievements Kahn credits to Reagan: $37 billion in budget cuts last year, tight monetary policy, and deregulation of the oil industry, which sharply reduced "vulnerability on the oil front." Yet he said the president's loose fiscal policies, refusal to consider wage controls and failure to provide leadership in the budget-cutting arena after last year's initial success are responsible for continued high interest rates.

Catholic Church being revived in Lithuania

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

KAUNAS, U.S.S.R. (AP) — The Roman Catholic Church in Soviet Lithuania is riding a wave of nationalist revival — a quiet echo of Poland.

"We have an old saying here: To be Lithuanian is to be a Catholic," said the Rev. Niktoras Butkus, who presides over Lithuania's only Roman Catholic seminary, located in this medieval city 60 miles from the border of predominately Catholic Poland.

When Lithuania was incorporated into the Soviet Union at the end of World War II, the small Baltic Sea nation had four Catholic seminaries. The lone survivor is the larger of two that remain in the entire Soviet Union, a nation where the state creed is atheism.

While religion has largely succumbed to communism elsewhere in the Soviet Union, Lithuania boasts 650 churches and 700 priests.

"We are seeing more young people in church than we were 15 years ago, although we aren't sure how to explain it," said Buktus who studied for two years in Vatican City. "People don't believe in bread alone. Maybe they are coming to the church to find spiritual values."

"Many people are baptized and married in the church, and many burials are connected with the church," he added in an interview in his small office overlooking the seminary courtyard.

LITHUANIA WAS independent from 1918 to 1940, when it was taken over by the Soviet Union. It was overrun by the Germans in 1941 and reoccupied by Soviet troops in 1945.

Lithuanian partisans battled the Soviet army until 1957, according to knowledgeable Russian sources who say that Moscow subdued resistance only after virtually dismantling the church and deporting up to one quarter of the nation's 2.9 million people. The population has since risen to 3.4 million, of which about 10.5 percent is Russian and 9.5 percent ethnic Poles.

Evidence of a strong nationalist movement is more visible in Lithuania than in other Soviet republics. Four underground newspapers publish regularly, defying police efforts to suppress them.

Lithuanian nationalists interviewed in Vilnius, the republic's capital, say they seek independence from the Soviet Union. They claim KGB security police have cracked down on the church and dissidents since the Polish labor upheaval began in August 1980.

Several priests have been killed under suspicious circumstances, they claim, and authorities have imprisoned members of two known Lithuanan human rights movements, the Helsinki Watch Committee, and the Council for the Defense of Religious Freedom.

The crackdown appears part of a carrot-and-stick method designed to curb extremism and channel religious and nationalist sentiment into the official church, which is allowed to operate in the open.

The most violent outbreak of nationalist sentiment occurred in May 1972, when hundreds of youths reportedly fought police with clubs and bricks in the streets of Kaunas after 20-year-old Roman Kalanta burned himself to death to protest Soviet rule.

NOT LONG after that, Soviet authorities began to give the official church more leeway.

The number of students at the Kaunas seminary rose from two dozen after the war to 94 today. Eighteen young priests will finish a five-year course of study this year, and Butkus says he hopes to convince the government to expand the number of students entering the seminary to 30 a year.

Some of those now in the seminary reportedly passed through an "underground seminary" run by local priests throughout Lithuania.

"They receive instruction from the priests, and get what they need to live from the people," according to one Lithuanian dissident, who said 10 young men would finish their unofficial studies this year.

Butkus says about 10 men have risen to underground priesthood "in the past two or three years," but that they cannot be ordained as priests without graduating from the Kaunas seminary.

The government has also allowed the seminary to add a new dormitory, to reoccupy a former classroom building, and to reopen and renovate its 15th century Church of the Holy Trinity with a marble altar, parquet floors, a full set of stained glass windows and an imported pipe organ.

Seminary income comes from churchgoers' donations, said Butkus who, when asked about church finances, smiled broadly and said: "We do quite well, thank you."

DESPITE A SOVIET ban on religious classes for children, Butkus said, youngsters are taught the catechism by their parents.

"We have no trouble finding acolytes and candidates for the priesthood," he added. There are even monks and nuns, he said, although the government abolished the orders and nationalized their property after World War II.

$500,000 in jewels carried off

NEW YORK (AP) — Jewels worth $500,000 were stolen from a Fifth Avenue store early Thursday by thieves who cut through the wall from the F.A.O. Schwarz toy store next door, police said.

The burglary occurred at Marano's jewelry store at 751 Fifth Ave.

A 2-by-3-foot hole was cut through a concrete-and-plasterboard wall between the toy store and the jewelry store, said Walter Reid, manager of F.A.O. Schwarz.

Watching the signs

Motorists traveling down Louisiana and Michigan avenues lately may have found their drive a little more interesting than normal. They may have become part of the confusion, in fact, and wondered what the city administration was thinking when the decision was made to change the two thoroughfares to one-way.

Midland doesn't have all that many one-way streets and a change in traffic signals and controls always creates a degree of confusion.

But that wasn't the intent, even though city officials were well aware of what the transition period would be like. They knew even in advance of the City Council meeting last year during which the change was approved that it would be unpopular at first. Conditions on Midland's downtown streets necessitated the change, though, and that's exactly what PAWA, a Dallas firm, recommended. That's what the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation had been recommending since 1977 to help Midland's downtown traffic congestion.

The change isn't complete yet. Loraine and Colorado streets will be changed to one-way about mid-April with Illinois and Texas avenues earmarked for change to one-way in the future.

Before completely losing patience with city officials, Midlanders should recognize that the change is only in the very earliest stage. What they can do to help during the transition period is not to drive the streets in question as though they had always been one-way, but to proceed cautiously, remembering that not every motorist may be fully aware of the change.

Motorists should pay particular attention to the new — and sometimes confusing — signs, watch for vehicles traveling the wrong direction and for vehicles turning across lanes of one-way traffic. Traffic experts say one of the most crucial periods during any traffic direction change is the first few weeks, until the change becomes common knowledge and traffic returns to normal.

Public Works director Fred Baker noted earlier this week there undoubtedly will be Midland motorists who are unaware of the change a year and a half from now.

Well, we hope it doesn't take THAT long. But everyone should keep in mind that this is not a good time to judge the value of the one-way streets in relieving downtown traffic congestion. It is a good time to practice driving safety and courtesy. Saner, more orderly times will return, we're sure. And who knows, some Midlanders may even find themselves liking one-way streets in the not-too-distant future and getting through downtown quicker.

Let inventors invent

Two members of Congress want the federal government to sponsor a contest for inventors of the ideal automobile. Anyone could compete, with the winner and runners-up splitting $220 million in prize money and research funds.

Ohio Rep. Bob Shamansky and Alaska Sen. Ted Stevens did not dwell upon the cost of the inevitable bureaucracy that would administer their five-year contest.

What they have in mind is a car that will sell for $6,500 and carry four people 80 miles on a gallon of gas.

It is awe-inspiring to contemplate the motley caravan of jalopies and flivvers that would descend on Washington in response to this incentive — and the backroom politicking in favor of homestate entries: the Maryland Rover, the Montanamobile, the Kansas Kangaroo.

A car designed to please a congressional committee might be the answer to our transportation prayers. Then again it might out-Edsel the Edsel. (A few years ago the California legislature spent $3 million reinventing the Stanley Steamer with qualified success. The final product circumnavigated the state capitol and then disappeared into storage, much as other creations of political committees have a way of disappearing into the files.)

A recent convention of inventors concluded that they never had it so good — in part because American industry needs their talents to recoup the competitive edge it has lost but mainly because of a vast increase in venture capital thanks to changes in the capital gains tax.

That being the case perhaps we should rely on the incentives that have worked pretty well in the past. Surely Congress can find some other use for the $220 million. Taxpayers might even be allowed to keep it in their pockets, toward the purchase of a new car.

Another View:

Japan's quota strategy

Japan has now agreed to extend for another year its not-so-voluntary quota on the cars it sends to the United States. The purpose of that quota was to shelter the American automobile companies from the cold winds of world competition while they reorganized themselves to produce more small cars. But trade quotas rarely work well, and the automobile case does not seem to be an exception.

It's fair to say that the recession, with its special impact on automobile sales, has thrown off all previous calculations. But the trade figures for the last three months of 1981 provide a rather dramatic indicator of what's happening. The value of all imports into this country dropped slightly, compared with the same period a year earlier. That's the effect of the rising exchange rate of the dollar. But there is one conspicuous exception. The value of imported automobiles is up sharply — while the number of cars is down.

Clearly the Japanese manufacturers are shipping more expensive cars to the United States. The figures suggest that, between late 1980 and late 1981, the price of the cars as they left Japan rose about 25 percent. As merchandising people say, the Japanese companies have been moving up scale — sending bigger and more expensive cars to attract more affluent buyers.

And why not? That's not only good business strategy, but also the standard and predictable response to a quota. If you can ship only a limited number of cars, you are going to try to increase your profits by selling the most expensive cars possible. But the result is that, as some American manufacturers have uneasily observed, the Japanese companies are no longer competing solely for the bottom of the American market, among the smallest and least expensive cars.

No doubt that would have happened anyway. Even before the quota, the Japanese were clearly preparing to sell larger cars here. But the speed of this shift in models and prices strongly suggests that the quota is accelerating it. Despite the severity of the recession, it looks as though the imports are running very close to the full quota for the year that ended April 1. The quota has probably held the sales of Japanese cars lower than they would have been. But it has done little to relieve the deeper troubles of the American automobile industry and, by swinging the competition into the more expensive and more profitable models, it may have made those troubles worse.

CHARLEY REESE

As a 'friend' Saudi Arabia sure is costly

If you are an American, you should know that Saudi Arabia is not your "friend." You often hear the contrary. When you hear that Saudi Arabia is a friend of the United States, you are hearing propaganda from the Saudis or from the multinational oil companies and the international banks which have a vested, financial interest in Saudi Arabia's rip-off profits.

Charley Reese

Since 1973, Americans have paid $55.7 billion to this backward, feudal country with a nearly 70 percent illiteracy rate for oil which costs about 10 cents a barrel to lift out of the ground.

The propaganda line is that the Saudis are friendly because they have exerted a "moderating" influence on the cartel OPEC, of which they are a member. If the person who tells you that is intelligent, you know he is lying, because only a liar or a stupid person would speak such nonsense. Going from $3.50 to $34 a barrel in less than 10 years is not moderate.

Every increase and decrease in Saudi oil production has been based on Saudi Arabia's desire to achieve maximum revenues and to prevent OPEC from falling apart. To maintain the cartel and to keep world oil prices artificially high, production and pricing must be adjusted to demand and that is exactly what the Saudis have done. If you think causing a worldwide recession and devastating the less developed countries demonstrates a concern for the world economy, then you are naive at best.

For a more detailed explanation of Saudi pricing and production policies, see "Love and Oil" by Douglas J. Feith in the Nov. 22, 1980, issue of The New Republic.

What the Saudis and the other members of OPEC are doing, of course, would land them in prison if they were American corporations pulling the same shenanigans inside the U.S. What is amazing is how many Americans swoon with gratitude when the oil bandits temporarily adjust their prices or production to prop up their conspiracy to gouge world consumers.

They should be asking why some American journalists are virtually apologists for Saudi Arabia and are so eager to perpetuate the myth of Saudi friendship. After all, the evidence to the contrary is obvious.

For example, the Saudis threatened to withdraw their funds from American banks if a Senate committee persisted in its investigation of foreign investments in the United States. You usually call this blackmail.

The Saudis threatened President Carter and bluffed him out of filling up the U.S. strategic oil reserves. Obviously they would like to keep us vulnerable to their blackmail. They have blackmailed American businesses into lobbying for their policies and their arms purchases and they have done this openly and arrogantly.

The Saudis, not long after the Carter Administration sold them F-15s, vigorously attacked the Camp David Peace Agreement. They broke diplomatic relations with Anwar Sadat's Egypt and cut off economic aid. They led the opposition to Camp David and increased their funding of the rejectionist states and of the Palestine Liberation Organization, a terrorist outfit which has murdered numerous innocent Americans and is the tool of the Soviet Union's KGB.

The Saudis have agreed to finance a new atomic reactor for Saddam Hussein, the Iraqi dictator who has earned the title, "the butcher of Bagdad."

After demanding advanced radar planes and offensive equipment for the F-15s from the Reagan Administration, they "rewarded" its efforts on their behalf by cutting production and raising the price of their oil.

Whenever you press apologists for Saudi Arabia for some proof of their alleged friendship, they mutter mysteriously about things done and said in private. Well, what? The public evidence is that Saudi Arabia has engaged in price gouging, economic blackmail, arrogant interference in American domestic and foreign affairs, the financing of worldwide terrorism and vicious opposition to peace in the Middle East.

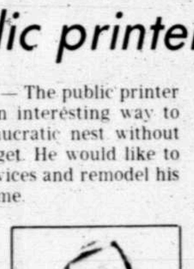

For $55.7 billion that is no bargain no matter how you cut it.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Public printer feathering bureaucratic nest

WASHINGTON — The public printer has discovered an interesting way to feather his bureaucratic nest without breaking his budget. He would like to reduce public services and remodel his lair at the same time.

Jack Anderson

Danford L. Sawyer Jr., the man in charge of the Government Printing Office, wants to close 23 of the 27 regional bookstores around the country. This not only would deprive the people in these areas of government publications, but would throw dozens of federal employees out of work.

Sawyer would thus be able to build an empire and a palace fit for the king and his men while keeping his books relatively balanced.

Here are the details:

Sawyer has been making room at the public trough for a passel of high-paid assistants to help him run his realm from the newly refurbished top floor of the GPO headquarters.

In other words, he is hiring chiefs and firing Indians.

Sawyer has been blatantly political in the executives he has put on the payroll despite a supposed hiring freeze. More than half of the 10 "Schedule C" appointees sharing the eighth floor with Sawyer are from his home state of Florida. They include Renee Bafalis, daughter of Rep. Louis Bafalis, R-Fla., and Mark Cramer, son of ex-Rep. William C. Cramer, R-Fla.

The salaries alone of Sawyer's satraps will cost the taxpayers $300,000 a year. What makes his hiring spree particularly reprehensible is that there were no Schedule C (non-civil service) positions at the GPO before Sawyer took over. His explanation for putting political pals on the payroll was, "It's ludicrous to expect me or anyone to come in from outside and take control all by my little lonesome."

While firing the peasants and hiring his cronies, Sawyer has also increased the number of his highest-paid bureaucrats. He doubled the number of GS-18s — the top professional rank with salaries over $50,000 — added a fourth assistant public printer, and created three deputy public printers where one had been before.

Obviously, this top-heavy bureaucracy needed someplace suitable to swivel its executive chairs. So the eighth floor was given a $234,339.66 refurbishing. More than $76,000 was spent to spruce up the Office of Legislation; another $48,000 was lavished on the office of the Deputy Public Printer.

My reporter Debra Becker dug up some examples of the profligacy with which Sawyer's decorators threw public money around. Ceiling tiles, for example, needed replacing, but not just any tiles would do. Sawyer's tiles were shipped from Florida at an expense of $800.

Then there was the carpeting. Government trucks were dispatched to pick up carpet in Lancaster, Pa., not once, but four separate times between Oct. 29 and Jan. 6. In some offices, the carpeting was replaced, even though the old floor covering was still usable. Carpeting was sometimes installed in the wrong offices, and duplicate purchases had to be made. The total cost of the carpeting was close to $10,000.

Walnut paneling, trim work and handcrafted molding was ordered and paid for even before it was determined how much would actually be needed.

Possibly discovering that we were looking into his executive-suite renovation, Sawyer issued a pious press release on Jan. 29, stating that while he had been home in Florida over the Christmas holiday, "certain remodeling and refurbishing had taken place in these offices, which may not be justified by need, and need alone." He ordered his inspector general to look into the matter.

The implication that Sawyer's office had been gussied up without his knowledge is laughable, of course, but the IG investigation gave Sawyer an excuse for not answering queries from the press.

Sawyer has refused to make the IG report public. But he wrote a "summary" of it himself and sent it over to the Joint Committee on Printing, which has been investigating the matter.

Sawyer evidently feels that GPO is his private affair. During a hearing he complained to Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., that press inquiries have been "like the sword of Damocles" hanging over his head. Fazio replied: "Well, Mr. Sawyer, I would say that the system has risen up and smitten you."

BAILOUT BLOOPER?: The Reagan administration's multimillion-dollar bailout of the Polish government may be illegal, according to a confidential study prepared by the Congressional Research Service.

The White House, to keep the Polish government from being declared in default on its U.S.-guaranteed loans, has offered to pay international bankers the overdue interest on their Polish loans. The interest bill in January alone was about $71 million. The total tab could be nearly $800 million if the Poles don't pull out of their economic tailspin.

But the CRS looked into the regulations governing the Commodity Credit Corporation, which guaranteed the loans. The researchers concluded that "there is no clearcut authority in current regulations to pay holders (of notes) to prevent their submitting notices of default." In fact, they decided, "payment by the CCC is conditioned upon receipt of notice of default."

The Capital Legal Foundation, a public-interest law firm, has brought suit against the government to test the legality of the Polish loan bailout.

INSIDE REPORT:

Jailed Solidarity leader wants compromise

WASHINGTON — In an appeal remarkable for its realism, the intellectual leader of the movement that gave birth to Solidarity has smuggled a political document out of his Warsaw jail cell proposing "the farthest-reaching concessions" to Poland's military government to reach a compromise for ending martial law.

Rowland Evans

Jacek Kuron has been in Warsaw's Bialoleka jail since December. He predicted that the Catholic Church's own mood of compromise would persuade "a decisive majority of the Solidarity leadership, men of science and culture, in a word ... all those whose voice counts in Poland."

Robert Novak

Kuron founded the Workers' Defense Committee, the intellectual forerunner of Solidarity, in 1976. Castigated ever since by the Soviet Union as an enemy of socialism — one of Moscow's harshest epithets — Kuron posed this warning to Marshal Wojciech Jaruzelski and the Kremlin in his late-February appeal: If there is no compromise ending martial law "within a dozen or so weeks," all chance to "stem the tide of terrorism" will vanish.

The warning was linked to rewards. A Polish "national agreement," ending martial law and guaranteeing "at least some fundamental goals and values" espoused by Solidarity would not damage Soviet Warsaw Pact interests "and would be extremely favorable to its economic" interests.

But without such a national agreement it will be only a matter of months before local incidents take on a national scope, building pressure against martial law that would produce an explosion and bring in Soviet troops. That prescription for the immediate future of the Soviet-inspired counter-revolution in Poland is under close study here. Kuron's reference to Moscow's economic interests matched an appraisal by the Reagan administration of grave economic problems ahead for the Soviet Union.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig sent emissaries to Europe three weeks ago to argue in favor of a Western credit clampdown against the Russians who, with their European satellites, owe nearly $100 billion to the West. Although Haig's agents did not get far, he remains convinced that the immense costs to Moscow of Poland's bankrupt economy could have a "profound" effect on the solvency of the Soviet bloc.

The eight-page document that Kuron spirited out of jail recorded the dismal performance of the Polish economy since the Dec. 13 martial-law takeover: January factory production, in the first full month under martial law, down nearly 15 percent from a year earlier (which had been strike-wracked); February production lower than January's.

"If one is to believe the authors of the military coup when they claim they acted to save the economy," Kuron wrote, "one may say the operation was successful but the patient died." With military commissars now directing every aspect of the economy, even "if a miracle happened and Western credits were to reach the level of (an earlier) era," the economy could not recover under martial law.

A "miracle" is still possible from Europe, but unlikely from here. Indeed, the Reagan administration is bargaining for the opposite of a miracle: a calamity for the Polish economy, which could infect other Eastern European states and the Soviet Union itself, if Jaruzelski and Moscow do not drastically moderate their conduct in Poland.

Kuron stressed Jaruzelski's and Moscow's economic burden. Without Western assistance, he said, "the economies of the bloc cannot function normally."

Speaking as a leader who supplied much of the intellectual backbone of Solidarity, Kuron called for massive resistance, strictly non-violent, as the only means to pressure Jaruzelski and the Kremlin into ending martial law and accepting a national agreement. That means organization built around absolute discipline and an "efficient system of information." Most important, it means advertising exactly what is demanded as the "concrete goals of the movement" — with a general strike across all of Poland "the ultimate means of exerting pressure, the last chance for a compromise."

From behind the walls of his cell, Kuron has sent his message. It is aimed at Moscow, at Jaruzelski, at the Solidarity movement he was so important a part of — and at Western nations who, had they the purpose and the will, could do much that might answer his appeal.

Whether they will or not, the record is not yet encouraging.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, April 9, the 99th day of 1982. There are 266 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 9, 1865, Confederate General Robert E. Lee capitulated to Union General Ulysses S. Grant to end the Civil War.

On this date:

In 1940, German forces invaded Norway and Denmark in World War II.

In 1942, American-Filipino forces on Bataan surrendered to the Japanese in World War II.

In 1970, the death toll was put at 73 in a gas explosion and fire at a subway construction site in Osaka, Japan.

Jesus starts long march to Golgatha

EDITOR'S NOTE: Jim Bishop, the author of "The Day Christ Died," has again re-created the first Good Friday in this rewritten narrative, "The Last Hours of Christ." This three-part version compresses those final hours but loses nothing in the power, the scope and the telling.

Part II

A few more blows and fresh blood made the back slippery. The soldier glanced at the Tribune. The head of Jesus reposed quietly on one of the iron rings. The Romans were averse to prisoners escaping punishment through unconsciousness. The signal was given. Two legionaries hurried forward, released his hands from the rings, and laid him on the flagstones. The Tribune did not seem to be surprised when the face appeared to be unrecognizably mashed. One of the blows was a bit high. The bone and chain reduced the face to a ruddy mask.

Two soldiers were ordered to wash the body. They stripped the bloody loincloth from him and doused him with cold water. Jesus gasped. A wet cloth revealed the torso to be supple, almost boneless. The face was not improved by washing. Above the beard and beneath the hairline were several pie-shaped gouges of glistening flesh and others where the little triangles rose halfway out of the face and remained there. The Tribune did not blame the would-be lictor: This prisoner was weaker than they had anticipated; he was given no more punishment than the 6,000 slaves condemned to be crucified every week in the Roman Empire.

They clothed him and mocked him. One soldier hit Jesus across the face with a heavy reed. Two others, with bleeding fingers, brought a plaited crown of thorns. To make certain that he did not lose it on his way to Golgotha, they jammed it down on his head. Fresh rivulets of blood matted his hair as they bowed the knee before him and proclaimed their fealty to the king of the Jews. His knees buckled again.

Jesus began to shiver in spasms. He was draped in a scarlet sagum — a furtherance of the presentation as a comic king — the heavy reed was placed in his hands as a scepter — and a soldier yanked at the bloody tunic so that it covered the loin cloth. A few soldiers took turns spitting in his face. He stood silent, swaying a little. It is possible that he was in shock and could not speak.

11:00 A.M.

The pilgrims outside the gate could not bear to look at him. They turned away; some lifted their cloaks over their eyes. This, after all, was a brother. He had sinned grievously, proclaiming that if the temple was destroyed, he could raise it again in three days. The correct penalty was death. Mockery and torture were not among Hebrew ideals. Sensing this, Pontius Pilate approached Jesus, held his arm aloft and said: "Behold the man!" If he expected approval, he was once more mistaken. The priests and citizens shouted: "To the cross!"

Too late, the Procurator realized that he had lost the pulse of the people. His errors were small and consecutive, leading to an impotence not becoming to a provincial governor of Rome. He must have realized — too late — that when Herod sent Jesus back to him, all he had to do was call for the cerule chair, a symbol of his magistracy, and exercise the ius gladii, the power to make law as he spoke. He could have freed this man at once. He did not call for the cerule. Instead, bitterly, he proclaimed: "Then take him in charge yourselves and crucify him. I find no guilt in him." An elder in the crowd held up a hand for silence. "We have a law," he said, "and according to that law he must die for he has proclaimed himself to be the Son of God."

The exposition of the charge was news to Pilate. His advisers had told him that the high priests were upset because a country bumpkin had presented himself as a prophet — not a god. He probably remembered the warning of his wife, Procula, who, in her superstitions, had a dream about this man and begged Pilate to have nothing to do with the case. Now he turned to leave the area, walking slowly up the steps to Fortress Antonia. He ordered an assistant to bring Jesus to him alone. The Nazerene was helped up the marble steps to the praetorium.

Pilate's face showed puzzlement. "Do you know," the Procurator said, half angrily, "that I have power to set you free and power to crucify you?" Jesus knew, far better than his accuser, that nothing and no one should impede his will to die as an act of love. Could he be thwarted by a Roman who did not understand the world in which he lived, much less of the changing cultures and civilizations in the centuries yet to come?

"You have no power whatever to harm me," Jesus croaked through a broken mouth, "unless it is granted to you from above..."

THE TRIBUNE brought Jesus out before the crowd. Pilate sat in his cerulean chair. People called out: "If you release this man, you are not a friend of Tiberius. Anyone who declares himself a king renounces allegiance to Caesar." This was a naked threat to the Procurator. He raised a hand. The sarcasm in his voice was pronounced: "Look," he said, pointing, "there is your king." The people screamed: "Away with him! Crucify him!" Pilate clutched his garments in shock. "Am I to crucify your king?" There was a jumble of sound. Pilate heard: "We have no king but Caesar."

At long last, Pontius Pilate surrendered. He had a servant bring a basin of water and a dry cloth. He dipped both hands and dried them. "I am innocent of the blood of this just man," he said. "The responsibility is yours."

The Centurion Abenadar saw a nod from Pilate. He ordered the Roman parade organized. As an afterthought, Pilate told the Centurion to fashion a wooden sign which would be affixed to the top of the cross. The sign would state the name of the prisoner and list his crime in Hebrew, Latin and, the spoken language of the Jews, Aramaic: "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews."

Abenadar asked about the two thieves. Yes, they would be part of the parade; they would be crucified at the same time. They would also bear signs in three languages.

The Centurion sent three soldiers for trees. These were the crosspieces for each cross. They were fashioned of cypress, about three inches thick, five inches wide, six feet long. Each weighed about 30 pounds. In the bottom of each crosspiece was a hollowed mortise, so that it would fit snugly over the upright cross. The uprights remained standing on a huge cracked rock at Golgotha between executions. They stood firm and straight about 15 feet above the paths leading to the Gate of Gennath.

THE WRISTS of the three prisoners were bound with rope, the tree was placed on the right shoulder, the ropes were slipped over the tree. If, in weakness, the prisoner's hands slipped from the beam, the rope usually kept it from falling.

The Centurion led. He mounted a horse, the better to scatter curious Jews. Three soldiers marched behind him, carrying shields and spears. Behind them came Jesus. Abenadar worried about this one. The lashes had so weakened him that he breathed with difficulty trying to stand. The thief and the murderer marched behind Jesus. At the rear, a small contingent of soldiers closed ranks.

The march measured a thousand paces. It went from Fortress Antonia westward across Jerusalem, down a muddy hill into an interior valley, then up through the big market and out the Gate of Gennath. The hill at Golgotha, high and black, was situated at a confluence of three roads from the north and west. Crowds collected to witness the faces of the condemned.

Jesus slowed the march. He seemed to have to will himself to bring a rear foot up abreast of the other one. At the bottom of the hill, the group turned left toward the market. Jesus bled almost to blindness as Abenadar ordered him to move forward. He brought up the rear foot too fast and began to topple. He was falling in the mud, but could not free his hands to break the fall. The timber hit with a thud. Jesus landed on one knee and both elbows. The crossbeam stood on its end for a moment, then fell away from him. Abenadar turned his horse around and saw a caricature of humiliation. It would be bad to order the prisoner to stand if he couldn't. In the crowd he saw a farmer with bulging biceps. The Centurion beckoned. The citizen had a huge dome of a head and a black beard

Man spends time hunting minutia—believe it or not!

By FREDERICK P. SZYDLIK
Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — Believe it or not:

— "A string bean grown by C.M. Bickham of Monticello, N. Y., measured 27 inches."

— "Jim Mather of Stanford University can catch an arrow in flight with his bare hand."

— An octopus weighing tons can be killed by a tiny starfish."

Who — besides the person who slices the string beans at C.M. Bickham's kitchen, Jim Mather and his plastic surgeon and every trembling octopus at the bottom of the ocean — really cares about this less than earth shattering news?

Tom Higgins that's who. Higgins cares so much about this factual minutia that he spends most of his time unearthing it and sending it to "Ripley's Believe It Or Not," the cartoon panel containing strange-but-true facts that appears in more than 300 newspapers around the world.

Tom Higgins is "Believe It or Not's" biggest contributor. He figures that since 1979 when he started submitting oddities in earnest, he has had 150 contributions printed by the cartoon feature. That's 150 oddities with "Submitted by Tom Higgins, Grahamsville, N.Y." printed below it. He says the feature has printed many more of his submissions without crediting him. He doesn't mind. No one is paid for submissions to "Believe It or Not." However, contributers do receive a pass for free admission to all of Ripley's museums.

Higgins lives in a 50-year-old cabin on a Catskill mountainside outside of Grahamsville. Day and night he reads newspapers and magazines, looking for oddball facts. "Reads" may not be the right word.

"I'm what you call a scanner," Higgins says. "I can go through a newspaper or magazine in a couple of minutes. And when I come across an interesting fact — an oddity I call them — I mark it with a red pencil. I put a little curlicue in the margin and later I cut it out."

Then, twice a week he stuffs his clippings in a postage paid envelope and ships them off to King Features Syndicate in New York City for inclusion in "Ripley's Believe It or Not."

Besides searching for Ripley material, Higgins also contributes columns to several local newspapers and does a little cartooning. But most of the time he sits at his desk and devours magazines and newspapers in search of juicy paragraphs about chemical companies that buy fireflies for $90 a pound, Abraham Lincoln being the only president officially recognized as an inventor, and Willis Johnson of Braman, Pa., growing a 30-inch cucumber.

"Sometimes I sit all day long doing nothing else. Some days I don't touch it. And sometimes I do it at night in my bed. Of course, my wife doesn't like that because I rattle the papers."

In a month, Higgins will have read hundreds of editions of as many as fifteen different newspapers — from local weeklies to the St. Augustine, Fla., Record — and about 20 magazines, mostly those published by large companies like Phillips Petroleum or about specific regions like "Rural Georgia." Higgins says he would read that much even if he weren't looking for believeabilia.

No one Ripley's item stands out in Higgin's mind as being the oddest or most unbelievable. He says one day he'll find something that is extremely interesting and the next he'll find something more interesting. He says rating oddities is like comparing movie stars. It's a pointless exercise.

"There are thousands of people who care about oddities. I sure do. I study them because it's fun," he says.

One more pact that Tom Higgins cares about: The April 20, 1981, edition of "Ripley's Believe It or Not" contained the following item:

"Tom Higgins of Grahamsville, N. Y., has had more submitted items published than any other Ripley fan... 100 appearing in Believe It or Not!"

'Dynasty' star always on the go

By DOROTHY TRELOAR
Hearst Feature Service

HOLLYWOOD — John Forsythe has a few days off from "Dynasty" while co-star Pamela Sue Martin recuperates from pneumonia. But that doesn't mean he isn't busy.

Forsythe and torrential rains meet concurently at my office in Los Angeles. But the super-handsome, super-star of "Dynasty" is still supercharged with all that's happened "this week."

"Take me while you can," he says over a soft drink. "Since I've been on my 'holiday,' I installed some equipment on my house to keep out the rains, our housekeeper was taken to the hospital for surgery, one of my daughters is having a Caesarean birth any minute, I am taping the Merv Griffin Show, I have a rehearsal as host for the 'People's Choice Awards,' and I've got two more interviews."

As the end of his second season of "Dynasty" nears, Forsythe's popularity has soared, as has his dynamic TV series, which is bound to go on for years.

"The show has been exceedingly successful," he admits modestly. "We were pre-empted one week and ABC was flooded with calls from fans. I am still astounded by people I feel have some intelligence who stop me to ask, 'You aren't going to divorce Krystle (played by beautiful Linda Evans), are you?' and I have to answer, 'Of course not.'

"Speaking of Linda, my back is out of whack because of her. We filmed a scene where I had to pin her down on the bed. She had to fight back — and she did. Linda's a tall lady with a helluva lot of strength, and fought realistically. I'm over six feet tall, and before we finished two minutes of grappling, my back went out.

"Linda also did her own stunt work on a recent episode where she thrashed it out with Joan Collins. When Joan saw Linda meant business, she asked for a part-time double. I could understand why."

Does he carry his heavy workload at the studio home with him?

"I don't think so," he laughs. "I try to relax. My lovely wife Julie is tiny but tough. She handles the finances and runs the household, and I'm lucky if I can get $20 a week allowance from her. When she says, 'sit down for dinner,' I sit.

"I don't play the Mafia-like character I portray on 'Dynasty' at home. As you know, Mafia-oriented people ride roughshod over their business dealings and peers, but are the epitome of family life at home — loving and giving." He says this, of course, tongue-in-cheek. "Print that," he chuckles. "Maybe Julie will be kinder to me in the future."

The Forsythes have been married for 35 years. With their girls away from home, John and Julie will move into a smaller home in Pacific Palisades, where John will have his first tennis court — his favorite sport. As a sideline, he breeds thoroughbred horses, and so far this year has had two stakes' winners.

But he takes time out for causes, having appeared in Washington before a Congressional subcommittee where he spoke on the dangers of smoking and cancer.

Scant funds lead to scantily-clothed dancers

REISTERSTOWN, Md. (AP) — Six scantily-clad male dancers will try to do what brownies and cookies couldn't for the Reisterstown Volunteer Fire Department — rake in much-needed revenue.

"Our budget is $125,000 a year, and you don't raise that kind of money with bake sales," said Fire Chief Craig E. Coleman.

The fire department plans to hold professional male dancer shows regularly at the fire station, and expects to draw at least $1,300 per show. Two hundred tickets already have been sold for the first show at $15 each.

The department also holds pancake breakfasts, barbecues and carnivals, and has no plans to stop them — but they just don't raise large amounts of money, Coleman said.

Less than 3 percent of the local businesses make donations to the fire department in this community, about 20 miles northwest of Baltimore, Coleman said. Financial problems recently forced the department to eliminate a paramedic job.

The shows, which provide a buffet and an open bar, will feature men dancing in bikini briefs. The first show is scheduled for April 25.

"We're going to take this money and turn right around and put it in the community," he said.

A group of local ministers does not share Coleman's enthusiasm for the fundraiser, however.

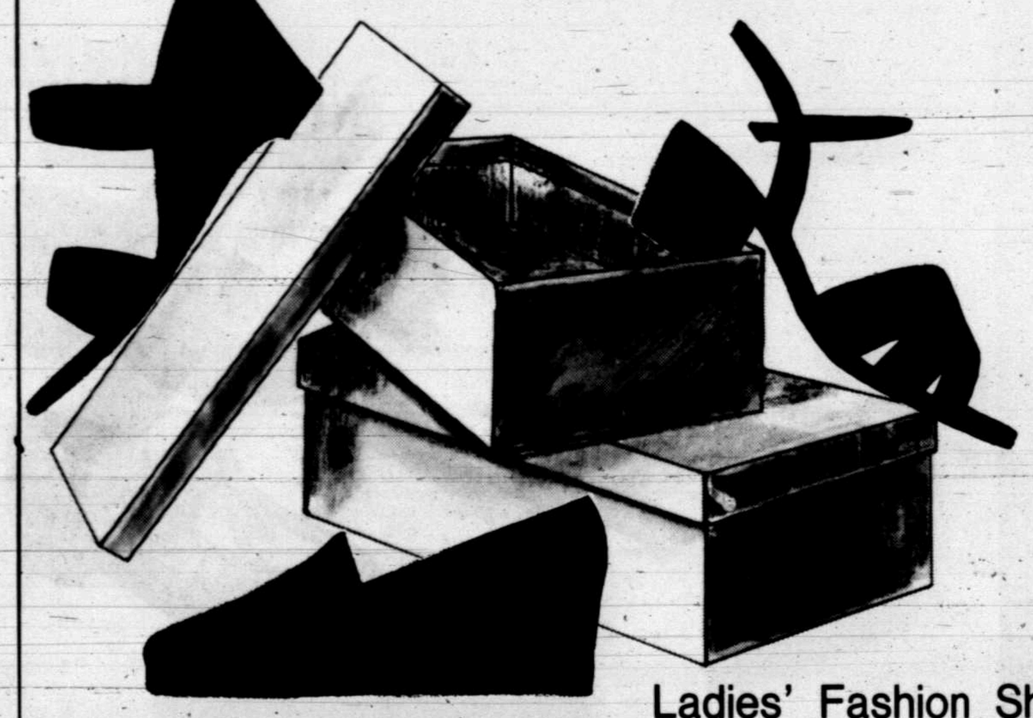

"This type of entertainment destroys family life and brings about juvenile crime," said the Rev. Robert K. Gehman, pastor of Baltimore County Baptist Church.

"We are opposed to nudity and the exploitation of sex in the community," he said.

Gehman is the spokesman for a group of a dozen local clergy who oppose the shows and plan to protest them.

Coleman said if local churches would provide the $15,000 he expects to raise with the shows, he would stop the performances.

Week's second snowstorm hits Midwest, aims for East

By BETSY BROWN
Associated Press Writer

The winter that won't go away walloped the northern Great Plains and the Midwest with their second snowstorm of the week Thursday, and then took aim on Eastern states already numb from frigid weather.

At least 50 people have died in weather-related accidents since Tuesday, most in slippery traffic or from heart attacks while shoveling snow.

Record-low temperatures for the day were set Thursday in at least a dozen cities, with the mercury dropping in Great Falls, Mont., and Muskegon, Mich., to 4 degrees. Baltimore reported a record 26; Newark, N.J., 23; Cleveland 11; Detroit 11; Toledo, Ohio, 10, and Pittsburgh 14.

The cold air blast from northern Canada dipped farther south than usual because of upper-atmosphere wind patterns, said Jim Behrens of the National Weather Service in Kansas City. "It's pretty unusual for cold air to come this far out of the north at this time of year," he said.

Following in the tracks of the blizzard that paralyzed much of the nation Tuesday, the latest storm dumped snow from the Dakotas through Iowa and northern Missouri, touched Indiana and Illinois and reached into Appalachia.

The storm was expected to reach the Northeast and mid-Atlantic states Friday, bringing rain and snow but not a blizzard, forecasters said.

"WE'RE DUE for one last blast of winter," said Wayne Albright, a weather service specialist in Galloway Township, N.J.

Snow fell as far south as Georgia on Thursday, with 1 inch reported at Black Rock Mountain State Park in Rabun County.

Winter storm warnings were issued for Ohio and Indiana, where possibly heavy snow was expected to fall Thursday night.

Many Massachusetts schools remained closed Thursday, as roads remained treacherous and citizens dug out from piled-up snow.

In Louisville, Ky., an overnight snow of 1.4 inches was the most ever recorded there in April. In six hours Thursday morning, Evansville, Ind., received 3 inches of snow.

The 50 deaths blamed on the storm since Tuesday include nine in Ohio, six in New York, five in Iowa, five in Pennsylvania, four in Michigan, four in Massachusetts, three each in Rhode Island, Illinois and Wisconsin, two each in Nebraska, Indiana and Maine and one each in Connecticut and New Hampshire.

IN RHODE Island, three men — age 84, 63 and 51 — died after shoveling snow, the state Medical Examiner William Q. Sturner said Thursday. The three men complained of chest pains after clearing snow from walks or driveways, and died later Wednesday, Sturner said.

In Illinois, where an additional 2 to 4 inches was expected to accumulate Thursday on the heels of Wednesday's record cold, three people were killed when a pickup truck carrying 19 illegal aliens hit an icy patch of Interstate 57 north of Effingham and spun into a ditch.

This April is the snowiest ever for Des Moines, Iowa, where 15.2 inches have fallen since April 1, the weather service reported. The previous record was 15.1 inches in April 1973.

Six inches of snow fell in Des Moines between rush hour Wednesday night and Thursday morning, causing massive traffic pileups but few injuries.

Teen held in slaying of woman, 4 children

PORT HURON, Mich. (AP) — Investigators kept an unidentified 16-year-old boy jailed as a suspect Thursday as they sought a motive for the slaying of a woman and her four adopted children.

The youth was arrested Wednesday, about 10 hours after Betty Giuliani and the children were found dead in their rural home near Yale, about 55 miles north of Detroit. All had been shot in the head with a .22-caliber rifle, authorities said.

St. Clair County Prosecutor Robert H. Cleland said Thursday he would petition the county probate court on Friday to allow him to hold the youth, whom authorities refused to identify.

If a judge agreed, Cleland said he could hold the juvenile for up to two weeks before filing charges or asking the youth be waived to circuit court for trial as an adult.

"The hearing will simply determine whether the juvenile will be continued in custody and I expect that a decision will be made within a matter of days about the filing of formal charges," Cleland said.

Authorities said they had no motive for the slayings. Cleland described the boy, held in the St. Clair County Jail, as a "friend of the family."

No others were being sought, although investigators were analyzing a "tremendous" amount of information "and a substantial number of witnesses and potential witnesses (were) to be interviewed," the prosecutor said.

The victims were identified as Betty Giuliani and her four children, Erick, 19; Kathleen, 16; Cindy Joe, 13; and Dino, 9.

The mass slaying was the third such incident in Michigan in the last seven weeks.

Mrs. Giuliani's husband, Richard, was working at the General Motors Corp. Tech Center in the Detroit suburb of Warren when the slayings are believed to have occurred, St. Clair County Sheriff David Doktor said.

The suspect attended high school with one of the victims and lives within a mile of the home where the bodies were found, police said.

Cleland said the youth was arrested after authorities broadcast a police alert "for a particular auto" which was stopped about 6 p.m. Wednesday in downtown Yale, some four miles from the Giuliani house.

WARDROBES THAT WORK

Comments on skirt lengths

By MARY T. MILLICAN
Fashion Consultant

Dear Readers:

One of the most frequent questions I receive is this: "What are the skirt lengths now?" After that, several questions follow. For example: Who can wear mini skirts? Are they going to stay in style? What length should a skirt be on a middle-aged woman? What length should a skirt be on someone short? The answers are quite varied. In this column I am going to give you fashion information as well as my opinion on what is becoming on different women.

To begin with, I am a firm believer that if you feel good, you look good. So don't dismay! You may not be the most "in" person, but you may look the nicest. Mini skirts (or skorts as they are now called) are wonderful on young girls and ladies with long, pretty legs. They are also great for a different (for fun) look, or during our long, hot West Texas summers. Whatever you do, don't wear a mini skirt just because it's in style if you feel ridiculous in it. your looks will probably reflect how you feel.

As for staying in style, they'll be around for a while in sportswear, but as a major fashion trend there is no strong evidence they will be turning up in better dressing for anyone but Hi-Fashion advocates.

As for tailored skirts, suit skirts, etc., the trend seems to be shorter. I for one, don't think the knee is a very attractive part of the body and feel a hemline just below the knee is much more attractive. The Fashion Market is showing a more narrow skirt bottom with the hemline just above the knee which will draw attention to that part of the leg. Again, pretty legs and knees can carry off almost any length. A more mature woman as well as anyone short or with a weight problem will look lovelier with the hemline just at or below the knee. The fuller skirts can be worn longer, almost any length you feel comfortable in just as long as they hit at least the top of the fullest part of the calf. Don't be afraid to look a little like a gypsy — this is the year you can carry off either a smart, tailored look, or a modified "hippie" look.

The "bottom line" here is that long, or short, you're in style! Keep your more tailored skirts and dresses a little shorter than last year and your new, fuller skirts longer. Enjoy the next year or two because almost any length you feel good in will be in style. Oh yes, the split skirt! Have fun with them, they'll be around for a while and they're so very comfortable! Treat a split skirt (depending on the style) as you would a regular skirt and you should have no trouble wearing and accessorizing them.

Send your questions, as well as requests for further information on wardrobe consultation, to Mary T. Millican, P.O. Box 8878, Midland 79703.

She dreams of regaining long ago days of riches

By AL MARTINEZ
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

GARDENA, Calif. — She wears a red cowboy hat with a red feather in it and ponders the dreams that float through the lives of anyone who plays poker. Dreams of winning. Dreams of being suddenly free.

"There'll be the jackpot," she says, "the big win. I'll take a trip to Honolulu. I'll lose 50 pounds, and I'll find me a man. Hey, listen, the dream never ends!"

Once she was the girlfriend of King Farouk, the last monarch of Egypt. Once she said no to international playboy Aly Khan, after he parted from Rita Hayworth.

Now she deals cards in a Gardena poker club.

They call her Dirty Mouth Paula. It's a joke Grace Reyes plays on herself.

"I started calling myself Dirty Mouth because ... I don't know why. I was kidding one time at poker, right? I said the first man who deals me a winning hand can have me.

"In those days, they fought for the deal. Now when I say it, they pass the deal or go to the bathroom. Hey, that's all right." She laughs. "I'm 50 years old and weigh 193."

SHE WALKS THROUGH the El Dorado casino. The red hat is perched at a cocky angle. Large rings flash under neon. Bright red lipstick, metallic red fingernail polish.

"I'm happy, OK? Poker is exciting, it's social and there's always the chance of hitting it big, the hallelujah."

Born in Scotland, the daughter of a builder who became a bookmaker when he retired, Paula-Grace (she uses both names now) grew into a slim and lovely young woman.

She modeled in London and Paris, and the gleaming platinum hair (now brown) and the striking figure (now gone) turned the heads of the rich and famous.

"Look here," she says, settling in a chair off the main poker room. She opens a large scrapbook filled with photographs and clippings.

"Here I am with a sheik of some kind. This is a French playboy. Him, I can't remember. Here's a handsome devil." She turns the pages. "God, there were so many."

She stares at the pictures for a moment then says, "I read somewhere that gambling keeps you young and alert. What happened to me?" Pause. "Well, men like fat ladies, something they can hang on to."

Paula-Grace lights a cigarette, squinting against the smoke. She has managed to cut down from 3 to 1 1-2 packs a day.

"I don't drink at all," she says. "Food and cigarettes and two cats ... that's it."

She flips again through the pages of the scrapbook. Paula-Grace as a fashion model, in a swimming suit, winning a beauty contest.

She stops at a yellowed clipping from the Scottish Daily Mail. "King Farouk noticed Miss Andrews (her maiden name) and asked her to take coffee with him...."

"That was in the south of France," Paula-Grace says. Sometimes she calls herself the Amazing Grace too. "He was playing baccarat in a casino with Jack Warner and Darryl Zanuck. I caught his eye."

THE KING SENT AN aide over, she remembers, someone named Mohammed Hamdi. "We drank pineapple juice and then the king introduced himself.

"We saw each other for maybe two weeks, then Walter Winchell put something about us in his column. I was about to go to Cairo with Farouk, but the man I was engaged to gave me a choice...so I never got to Cairo."

Aly Khan invited her to a villa once, she says. "We had an orange juice and he tried to get fresh, so I left. Hey, he was a nice guy but I just wasn't interested in him. I was interested in playing cards."

She closes the scrapbook. "I went from riches to rags, from Farouk to this," she says with a nervous laugh. "But I'm on my way back up now. I'm looking to hit the jackpot one of these days."

She began gambling in Paris in the days when she was still a slender platinum blonde. Chemin de fer and baccarat.

Twice married and twice divorced, Paula-Grace came to America in 1952 with a head full of dreams.

"I wanted to see cowboys and Indians," she says, her smile small and distant. "You know, I really believed I would."

Her hand rests lightly on the scrapbook. An oversized amethyst ring sits like a cry of identity on her left index finger.

"Then I decided I wanted to date Hollywood stars. William Bendix, Gary Cooper, Randolph Scott. I never did, and now they're all dead, and I never will."

Arriving in Los Angeles, she asked a cab driver where she could play cards. "He said Gardena, and here I am."

She was a striking presence in poker town — a beauty who could speak French, Arabic and Greek, and who could play cards like a wizard. Lowball and five-card draw.

"Ah, poker," she says. "Just me and the five cards, and I know the value of each. A game of skill, a close and intimate game. Every hand a dream."

Paula-Grace ("Hell, call me Dirty Mouth if you want") began working for the clubs 27 or 28 years ago; she can't remember exactly. Switchboard operator, chip girl, information desk, card grader, other jobs.

Physician says imagery better medicine than pill

By BEA PIX
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — An active imagination may be far better medicine than a pill, surgery or an antibiotic, according to Martin Rossman, a California physician and one of a growing number of doctors who has discovered that the mind holds a vast storehouse of healing potential.

Rossman, a clinical associate in the department of medicine at UC-San Francisco and a consultant to the UCLA pain control unit, has built his medical practice around some unconventional healing techniques. Co-founder of a health and education center, located on a houseboat named Omphale in Sausalito, Rossman explains that the vessel's name means "bellybutton" or "center of creation." Although the name came with the boat, Rossman sees it as particularly appropriate for his kind of work.

So many illnesses stem from stress, habits, social environment, interaction with the physical environment or poor nutrition," Rossman says. If someone is unemployed and anxious, with a family to support, smokes two packs a day and eats junk food, that person has problems not easily treated by a pill."

He's discovered that imagery is one technique people can use to help themselves. "You don't have to go to a doctor to use your imagination." He's also found that acupuncture can offer permanent relief from chronic pain. Since incorporating acupuncture and imagery into his practice, he estimates he now can help two out of three patients — many of them chronically ill and regarded as untreatable by conventional physicians. Other patients use his services for illness prevention.

The power of imagination was driven home to Rossman when he began practicing acupuncture, which he's studied for 10 years. "People would say they felt great. They had no pain, but they'd have these incredible dreams." Often, he discovered, dreams would reveal some symbolic information about the cause of the illness.

Imagery is nothing new to people, he says. "Worrying is imagery. All that worry exists in the imagination, and the body responds to thoughts as though they were real events – with all kinds of physical problems." His patients learn how they can control their mental process so they can focus on pleasant images rather than distressing ones, and learn to relax.

Results can be dramatic. One patient, a woman who had so much difficulty urinating she had to have her urethra dilated every three weeks, did relaxation exercises daily and the problem disappeared. A 55-year-old man with a disorder that cut off the blood supply to his extremities learned to relax and warm his hands at will, and went salmon fishing with friends for the first time in 15 years.

Rossman says so many possibilities exist for successful use of imagination in healing that "I don't really know what the limitations are -- and it's important that we don't put limitations on anything by discrediting the mind's influence on the body."

Sunset ritual is held in Key West

By RANDALL HACKLEY
Associated Press Writer

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Some 200 spectators mill around Mallory Dock with a collection of talented and not-so-talented musicians, ice cream vendors, jugglers and animal acts, waiting for one of the nation's most unlikely rituals.

The ceremony could be a throwback to the 1960s, with barefoot artisans, musicians passing the hat and little boys running around with flowers in their hair. A snake is wrapped around one undulating man, who writhes to the beat of an accompanying drummer.

But as the sun seems to touch the horizon, the group hushes and applause slowly rises. A traveling musician points at the sinking fireball of orange and pronounces it "nature's best art work."

Detroit's Don Hill, in his third season of sunset ceremonies, announces with the lonely bleat of a conch shell each sun's fall into the azure waters.

But the ritual that occurs during sunset at the end of the dock in Key West owes its birthright to Rex Brumgart.

Brumgart's "sunset party" was born in 1949 as a quaint waterfront gathering, replete with drinks and hors d'oeuvres for a dozen Key West naval buddies. They imbibed and ate. And as the sun set, they politely applauded.

But the sunset ceremony now is a daily public festival attended by what Conchs — the name for both native Key Westers and a pink shell-toting Caribbean mollusk — call "lemmings."

"They pack the dock like it's a sinking ship," the 62-year-old Brumgart says of his overgrown creation. "I don't even go anymore. It's like a zoo."

Stylish sportswear

And it's bulletproof, too

By JACK WILLLIAMS
Copley News Service

Jon Jolcin is a fashion designer who plays it safe.

Nothing outrageous. Nothing flamboyant. Just your basic, comfortable, durable outer wear with a few built-in safety features.

Like removable bulletproof shields.

There's no life-back guarantee, mind you, but the garments do come with an insurance policy that will pay the beneficiary from $500,000 to $1 million.

The garments, for men and women in four sizes, premiered with fall fashions at the recent biannual MAGIC (Men's Apparel Guild In California) preview at Los Angeles Convention Center.

Vests and jackets with the label of EMGO — a manufacturer based in Israel — and in Jolcin's designs will be in department stores, sporting goods and specialty shops next fall.

In corduroy, nylon and polyester-cotton fabrics, they'll carry price tags of from $240 to $300. All of it will be certifiably bulletproof, thanks to an 11-layer shield of Kavlar 29, a DuPont fiber that weighs about four pounds and is reportedly penetrable only by a laser beam.

(Tests have shown that the outlawed Teflon-coated bullet can pierce the shields, but EMGO offers a "special panel" for an additional $60 that it claims is Teflon-proof.)

Protective fashion, Jolcin calls it.

Or, as he said from his Los Angeles hotel room, "It's revolutionary, one step ahead.

"I'm sure when this concept is exposed, others will follow. I'm already thinking in terms of my spring collections for next year — overalls, jogging and active wear and topcoats."

EMGO has been producing bulletproof vests for the Israeli army for the last two years. Extensive marketing research, according to company President Abraham Silbershatz, led EMGO into the public sector.

Is it a sign of the times, this emphasis on protection? Or a sign of the crimes?

"It's another way of protecting a person from the elements," said Jolcin. "When you put a lock on your door, you feel more comfortable, more safe."

Jolcin feels his market will include the average person as much as high-profile types. Hunters and outdoorsmen, particularly, are expected to find the safety feature valuable.

"Anyone dealing with active sports would buy it," said Jolcin, himself an avid skier and horseback rider who designs clothing to suit his interests and lifestyle.

Might it also instill confidence in the potential criminal?

"There is no reason why it shouldn't be provided for anyone," said Jolcin. "The criminal is entitled to a lock on his door, too."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Hints for homemade toiletries

FRESHER FRAGRANCE

Dear Heloise: Every time I opened a bar of soap, I'd think the wrapper smelled too yummy to just toss in the trash. I kept trying to think of what I could do with it...

Then, I remembered the little perfumed tablets, made to put in drawers or closets. I decided a soap wrapper would work as well as they do.

It made the contents of the drawers smell nice and fresh. — Colleen Hawkins

KEEPING TRACK

Dear Heloise: When refinishing or moving furniture with drawers, number the back of each as you take it out. Always start at the top and remove drawers in the same order from each piece of furniture.

When putting the drawers back in, a glance at the back will tell which slot it goes into. Saves time and hassle figuring out which drawer goes where since, even though they may look alike, all drawers are not interchangeable. — Marrion Tillard

LETTER OF WARNING

Dear Heloise: If you have a painted hood over your stove, do not clean it with scratchy powdered cleaners as I did. It will eventually take the paint off.

Instead, use a wax-cleaner spray, liquid detergent, etc. — something that won't harm the finish.

The greasy film can be removed without harming the paint. — Elsie Cooley

HANDY WIPERS

Dear Heloise: Being a mom three times and a granny twice, I think the most useful thing I found in my baby-raising days was my "slobber-dobbers!"

While I was expecting, I took my pinking shears and cut up every old piece of soft cloth I could find. Once I used an old sheet blanket — it was great!

I cut them into 6x6-inch squares and always had a stack close by, near the high chair, bed, etc. I also would stick a handful in the diaper bag. So inexpensive, and I just threw them into the washer. — Phyllis Whitman

DEAR HELOISE:

My very clever 13-year-old daughter bought your "Hints from Heloise" book for me as a Christmas gift this year. I think she realized I needed it after I took a load of wash out of my dryer that was ruined by crayon.

Since this was the second time that a crayon has found its way into my dryer, my daughter figured I needed your help.

Unfortunately, there wasn't a tip covering this in your book. I've tried everything that I thought might remove the crayon marks but nothing has been successful.

I was tempted to give up and discard the clothing but it includes about six of my husband's dress shirts.

If you have a solution, please print it, as I read your column every day. — Nancy Sullivan

+++

Removing crayon can be a real drudge, but it can be done with sheer perseverance.

Since the garments went through the dryer, your best bet is to spray the stains with a pre-wash spray, then rub-a-dub-dub vigorously. Re-spray and rub again.

When you feel you've removed as much as humanly possible, put the garments into your washing machine after adding a little bleach to your wash water.

Read the directions carefully on the bleach bottle to determine the safe amount to add. If you dilute the bleach in the wash water and add the proper amount BEFORE adding the clothes, even colored clothes can be safely bleached without fading.

Now, it may take a washing or two to remove all traces of the crayon but it should wash out eventually. Just don't give up too quickly.

Give that daughter a BIG HUG for giving you one of my books (she's a gal after my own heart...) and grab your scissors to clip out this hint and press it between the pages of my book that have hints on removing stains.

Then, next time... you'll have it on hand. — Hugs, Heloise

HINT FOR HANDICAPPED

Dear Heloise: My husband has Parkinson's disease and it's very difficult for him to button his shirt.

One of the nurses at the treatment center suggested I replace the buttons with self-gripping tape.

I removed the buttons and carefully stitched them onto the buttonholes of his shirt, then attached one small strip of self-gripping tape to the back side of the buttonholes, another strip to the button side of the shirt.

I also used this tape on his trousser bands and, with a belt, no one can tell.

Now it is so much easier for him to button his clothing and continue to maintain independence. — M. J. G.

EXTRA STORAGE

Dear Heloise: I place filing cabinets in closets under blouses and shirts for extra storage space.

I have them in every closet — double drawer, triple drawer, or higher, according to the space available.

They are great for winter accessories, photographs, household accounts, and lots of other things.

You can often find them on sale in office equipment places or through mail-order catalogs. — Martha Swats

TILE MAGIC

Dear Heloise: After cleaning the ceramic tiles in my kitchen, they still didn't look so great — a yukky green. So I grabbed a bottle of a soap-and-shine product for floors and went over all of the wall tiles with a sponge.

At first I thought nothing of it but my husband, who was watching me, said he thought I had hit on the solution.

Now the tiles sparkle with a shine and, although the color hasn't changed, the tiles look 100 percent better.

For the first time, we like the way they look. — June Ronkovitz

Former millionaire left it all behind

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — He sips 100-year-old sherry in paint stained cut-offs, grease and dirt stroking his face. Ralph Pomeroy, a former millionaire, couldn't be happier.

Four years ago, he left his Bay Head, N.J., home, wife and daughters and stepped down as head of five corporations to find a simpler life. He did, on the Donna III, a 43-foot boat in Key West — a long way from pinstripes and limousines, from credit cards and caviar; a long way from his millions.

"I have a bigger life now," says Pomeroy, a big gentle man with thick forearms from doing blacksmith work. "I love it here and the people are fabulous. This is my world and I'll never leave it."

The 56-year-old Pomeroy lives with his wife of three weeks, Donna, and their dog, Tagalong, on money he earns from odd jobs — scraping boat bottoms, carpentry, painting — and income from his investments.

The Donna III is home — its salon on the main deck cluttered with tools, old newspapers, dog dishes and magazines. The deck below has a family area and large galley, complete with washer and dryer and refrigerator. The master bedroom and full bath are aft. There are two more bedrooms and a head forward. The boat is air conditioned. There's also a telephone and radar and heat, if needed.

Donna Pomeroy says she's comfortable living on the floating home, "as long as he's happy. He's had enough problems and disappointments for one lifetime."

A native of New York, Pomeroy was a blacksmith by trade and eventually set up a manufacturing company. He married early and had two daughters. But as he became more successful in business and gained wealth, he saw his family change.

"My wife and daughters would measure people by the money they had, and if I gave one daughter a $300,000 home I'd have to give the other daughter $300,000 in cash," he said.

"The people around us enjoyed drinking the good booze and eating the big steaks, but they were phoneys. I didn't want to be like them."

Pomeroy would rather eat globs of peanut butter on Russian rye bread and follow it with pastries.

He first visited Key West in 1968 and fell in love with its clean waters and friendly people. He learned to scuba dive and visited at least once a year.

Pomeroy suffered a heart attack in 1976. That, plus seeing what wealth had done to his wife and children, helped him make his decision.

"I gave them a year," he said. "I told them I was going to sell everything and move to Key West. They had a choice: learn the business and take it over, or come with me. They learned the business."

Pomeroy says he has no regrets. He never plans to leave his Key West home.

"I have a full life here. This is my life."

DEAR ABBY

Man wants to pep up his performance

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 65 and my wife is 67. We have been married 45 years and have always had a good sex life, but lately I have not been able to perform worth a darn.

I have been to our family doctor and he wants to send me to a specialist, but it would be embarrassing to tell our kids and neighbors what I was going for.

Abby, how about these old men who marry young movie stars? They must take something to give them extra pep. Do you know what they take and where I can buy some? Money is no problem.

I'm sure there are a lot of other men my age with this problem, so put your answer in the paper, but please don't use my name.

Sign me ... POPPA

DEAR POPPA: In the first place, I know of nothing that would give you the extra pep you're looking for. Furthermore, most of these "old men" who marry young movie stars don't have any more pep than you have.

Take your doctor's advice and see a specialist. It's nobody's business what you're going for, so keep it to yourself.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 14-year-old girl with an enormous problem — my rear end. I know I weigh more than I should, but I'm not really fat. I'm built just like my mother, and you should see her rear end!

I'm trying to stay away from sweets and fried foods, but once I start I can't get enough of them. (You wouldn't believe what I can put away in 30 minutes!)

I've asked my mother to send me to a doctor, but she said, "I am not laying out any money for a doctor. You're not sick — you're just a big pig. All you need is a little willpower!"

Abby, I know my willpower is weak, but I can't help it. All my girlfriends have boys call them up and walk them home after school and I don't have anybody, and if I don't do something about the way I look, I'll never have anybody. Please give me some advice. — MISERABLE IN MINNESOTA

DEAR MISERABLE: If you weigh more than you should there's only one sensible way to attain your ideal weight — a combination of diet and exercise. However, you could have a medical problem that causes you to crave sweets and fat foods, so you should see a doctor for a physical examination and a sensible diet. The rest is up to you.

If your mother won't pay for it, earn your own money by baby-sitting or doing chores, but do see a doctor. And please write again in six months and let me know how you're doing. I care.

DEAR ABBY: A neighbor who works with my husband used to come here every morning at 7:25 to ride to work with my husband. It was working out fine, then he started to come a little earlier every day, until now he is having breakfast with us!

Mornings are a madhouse around here, as we have children to get off to school. Also, sometimes there are personal family matters I would like to talk to my husband about at breakfast, and there is no privacy with this man here.

How can this be handled? I'm afraid if we ask him not to come so early we might hurt his feelings. — NO PRIVACY AT 7 A.M.

DEAR NO PRIVACY: Since he's a neighbor, why not suggest that your husband pick HIM up? If that's not convenient, simply be honest and ask him to please not come before 7:25.

DEAR ABBY: I liked your advice to the guy who never messed with "nice" girls but hoped to marry one, though he was no virgin himself.

When I was a young man, a girl I liked a lot told me she wanted to remain a virgin, but she wanted her husband to be "experienced."

If all the girls are supposed to stay pure and all the men are supposed to be "experienced," where are the men supposed to get experience? — RUPERT

DEAR RUPERT: Probably from those girls who were "pure" until they met up with a guy who was looking for experience.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to your reply to "A. in W. Va." At last! Someone actually says that because a girl isn't a virgin doesn't mean that she should be branded with a scarlet letter forevermore! And even more astonishing, someone has also come right out and said that if a boy wants a virgin he should remain one himself. I couldn't agree more with you on both counts, as that has been my opinion for a good many years now.

All these jerks like "A. in W. Va." who believe in practicing the double standard of sexual "morality" should read your answer. You are 1,000 percent correct. It is about time — in fact, long since past time — that boys realized that if the girls they go to bed with are not "nice," just because the girls go to bed with them, then what are these boys? They are certainly no better. Keep sockin' it to 'em, Abby! — DELIGHTED IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR ABBY: This is regarding the guy who never messed with "nice" girls but hoped to marry one.

I'm reminded of the conversation that took place between me and the father of a girl I wanted to marry. I was 20 and she was 17. Her father asked me if I had ever "been with" a woman. "No, sir," I lied.

"Well, you'd better go out and get some experience before you marry my daughter," he said. "I don't want no clumsy guy who doesn't know what he's doing practicing on MY little girl!"

DEAR ABBY: Your statement, "If a guy wants a virgin for a wife, he himself should remain one," was excellent!

I, for one, am tired of the double standard. No one is saying that it is easy, that it takes no control, that it takes no self-discipline. Self-control, rather than hindering, actually adds to one's enjoyment of the sex act. We are no different than animals if the sexual act is performed without commitment and trust.

It is beautiful when two people can enter into a marriage knowing that neither one has experienced this intimacy with someone else. — A MENNONITE MINISTER, LANCASTER, PA.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 20-year-old male and I'm still a virgin. I just want to say that when I marry it will be because I love the girl, and I won't judge her on whether she's a virgin or not. I think it's childish to judge a girl for what she's done in the past. I've known virgin brides who ended up having affairs afterward. And I've known girls who have slept around, got married and turned out to be faithful wives and caring mothers.

There's no such thing as a "bad" girl or a "nice" girl. They're just human like us guys. For every unwed mother there's an unwed father. — A GENTLEMAN

DEAR GENTLEMAN: Lucky for you you didn't sign your name. The girls would be standing in line to date you.

Scientists lessen fear of danger from chlorocarbons

By WARREN FROELICH
Copley News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Atmospheric pollutants are playing a tug of war with the earth's protective ozone layer. The winners may be the residents below.

On one side are gases like those released from aerosol cans and nitrous oxides, which during the past decade have destroyed about four percent of the earth's ozone shield in the upper stratosphere.

On the other side are other pollutants — mainly carbon dioxide and nitrogen oxides — that have added an equal amount of ozone to the lower atmosphere.

The net effect, according to new calculations by scientists at the University of California's Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, is that the ozone layer has remained constant over the past decade.

And, in the future, less ozone will be destroyed than had been originally feared.

Experts from the National Academy of Sciences in Washington, D.C., recently cut in half their projections on how much protective ozone would be stripped in the stratosphere by the end of the next century.

In 1979, the academy estimated that 15-18 percent of the ozone would be eroded by chlorocarbons used in refrigerator systems, dry cleaning, spray can propellants, solvents, and degreasers.

But in its latest forecast, those projections were reduced to 5-9 percent.

Scientists caution that any increase in chlorocarbons — now banned as an aerosol propellant in the United States and other countries — could upset this precarious balance.

"Reactions that produce or destroy ozone are in a delicate balance," said atmospheric scientist Don Wuebbles on March 31 at the annual meeting here of the American Chemical Society. "Change the concentration of any of the critical gases and you alter this balance."

Scientists are concerned since destruction of the ozone layer — located about 10 to 30 miles above the equator and 5 to 30 miles above the poles — could allow more of the sun's penetrating ultraviolet rays to reach earth and its inhabitants.

The academy emphasized in its report that the evidence seems stronger than ever that depletion of ozone could increase the incidence of skin cancer, particularly among fair-skinned residents of southern cities.

For example, the academy said that a 5 percent ozone reduction could produce a 13 percent increase in basal skin cancer among white males in Minneapolis or St. Paul. But in Dallas or Fort Worth, the same depletion would increase basal skin cancer among white males by 28 percent.

However, the academy's National Research Council also backtracked on its earlier assertion linking ozone depletion to increases in melanoma, an often fatal skin cancer.

Both the academy scientists and Livermore researchers said their revised figures were based on new forecasting techniques and new information about the complex interaction of chemicals in the atmosphere.

Wuebble's calculations, called by Livermore officials "the most complete computer analysis of the ozone problem to date," involved some 133 chemical reactions and 43 different chemicals. They were based on historical and projected data covering 189 years — from 1911 to the present and from the present to the year 2100. The study, funded by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, required the use of Livermore's Cray computer, the world's most powerful.

In a recent press briefing, Wuebble noted that past studies involved only one part of the problem, the effect of chlorocarbons. These studies, including some done at Livermore, showed dramatic decreases in the ozone layer with time.

But Wuebble said these previous efforts did not recognize the complex dynamics of atmospheric chemistry.

"One cannot get an accurate picture of the real fate of the stratospheric ozone by studying only one part of this complex problem at a time," said Wuebble, who co-authored the report with Fred Luther and Joyce Penner, also of the Livermore lab.

Wuebble said that future changes in the ozone layer were directly related to man's activities on earth and above.

Though chlorocarbons have been banned in this country, dozens of different varieties of this chemical still are widely used around the world.

Burning of fossil fuel and using nitrogen fertilizers may increase concentrations of nitrous oxide, also known as laughing gas.

Carbon dioxide, also produced by fuel combustion, has been linked with potential global warming of the planet through a so-called greenhouse effect. Nitrogen oxides come mainly from airplane exhaust.

Ozone, a heavy-weight cousin of atmospheric oxygen, is destroyed when it comes into contact with chlorine, nitrogen, and hydrogen compounds.

When chlorocarbons waft into the earth's upper atmosphere, the sun's ultraviolet rays split the chemical apart, unleashing free chlorine atoms on ozone. Once these atoms lock in and destroy a target, they move on to another. A single chlorine atom therefore can destroy thousands of ozone molecules before being destroyed itself.

Nitrogen atoms, released from nitrous oxides, work in the same manner.

On the other side, carbon dioxide and nitrogen oxides interfere or inhibit these destructive cycles. Their reactions, principally in the lower atmosphere, allow ozone to replenish itself, resulting in higher concentrations here.

Wuebbles cautioned that if more chlorocarbons were released into the atmosphere, the ozone's layer would continue to thin at the top and expand at the bottom.

Energy released from the capture of ultraviolet light by ozone at these lower levels would produce heat.

"This could change the temperature structure of the earth's atmosphere with uncertain consequences," Wuebbles warned.

Congressman faces new allegations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three years after weathering a morals charge, Rep. Frederick Richmond, D-N.Y., is facing new allegations that he asked members of his congressional staff to buy cocaine and marijuana for him.

One former aide has told a federal grand jury that on four occasions he purchased and delivered cocaine to Richmond at the congressman's request, The New York Times, quoting unidentified sources, reported Thursday.

The sources were quoted as saying that three other former staff aides told the grand jury that they had provided Richmond with marijuana. The newspaper said none of the sources reported any testimony that Richmond had used the drugs or given them to others.

Officials in Richmond's office said Thursday that the 58-year-old congressman would not comment on the report.

The grand jury was already said to be investigating Richmond's role in obtaining a congressional job for an escaped convict as well as questions concerning Richmond's personal and campaign finances.

Rchmond also has refused consistently to comment on any of those reports, saying his attorneys had advised him to remain silent. However, he has acknowledged that a federal grand jury is investigating his affairs.

Edward Korman, the U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of New York, confirmed that Richmond is being investigated but would not elaborate.

Despite the little public criticism Richmond has received as a result of the reports, there are increasing signs of behind-the-scenes activity which could endager his re-election.

Sources, who have asked to remain anonymous, say the House Ethics Committee has begun investigating Richmond's affairs. The committee, which refuses to comment, has the power to recommend to the full House that a member be expelled.

Proposals for reapportionment in New York would break up Richmond's polyglot district, which includes upscale whites in Brooklyn Heights, Hasidic Jews in Williamsburgh and the blacks and Hispanics of Bedford-Stuyvesant.

AND INFLUENTIAL POLITICAL leaders in New York, including Brooklyn Denmocratic Chairman Meade Esposito, say privately they are actively seeking a challenger.

Richmond, however, has always relied more on his large personal fortune than on the party organization to support his campaigns. Over the years, the charitable foundation he endowed has contributed heavily to community and religious groups in the district.

In 1978, Richmond admitted trying to buy sex from a 16-year-old boy and a plainclothes District of Columbia policeman. Criminal charges were dropped after Richmond agreed to undergo psychiatric counseling.

He apologized to the district and survived the scandal — but only after a re-election campaign that cost more than $500,000, not including any foundation spending.

Richmond's latest troubles began in November when a federal judge in St. Louis ruled that he had "improperly channeled" resources of the Walco National Corp. to his personal and political use. Richmond had been chairman of the company and remains its largest stockholder.

Coordinators named

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Ted Kerr and Bobby Sanders, both of Midland, have been named regional campaign coordinators for attorney general candidates Max Sherman, D-Amarillo.

Sherman is one of several candidates seeking the Democratic nomination for attorney general in the May 1 Democratic primary.

Others named as campaign coordinators for Sherman include Elliott Mitchell and Harold Smith, Big Spring; Jack Tidwell and Joel B. Locke, Odessa.

Easter Egg Hunt Saturday

The Midland Jaycees' annual Easter Egg Hunt will be held Saturday at Cubs Stadium beginning at 9 a.m.

The Jaycees will have approximately 10,000 candy eggs hidden for the hunt. Children through sixth grade age may participate in the hunt. There is no admission charge for the event, which will feature an appearance by Peter Cottontail.

Houses sold up in city

COLLEGE STATION — Although the number of homes sold statewide declined in 1981 when compared to 1980, the number of homes sold in Midland increased by 15.7 percent.

According to Dr. Arthur Wright, research economist with the Texas Real Estate Research Center at Texas A&M University, the average selling price reported by the Multiple Listing Service for a home in Midland last year was $72,264. The previous year the average home was selling for $67,073.

Statewide, the average home sale price climbed by 13.6 percent during the same period to $68,986. The number of home sales in Texas dropped by 11.3 percent.

"These figures tend to overstate the real price picture," said Wright, "since a substantial number of these transactions involved some type of financial arrangement which allowed the buyer to pay less than the going market rate of interest on new loans."

Wright said these financial arrangements included assumptions of older mortgages, sellers carrying mortgages at below market interest rates and sellers "buying down" the contract interest rate on new mortgages.

UTPB selects group

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Fifteen Midland-Odessa area residents Thursday were named to serve on a Citizens Advisory Committee for The University of Texas of the Permian Basin by the UT System Board of Regents.

The advisory committee will function as a regional resource to the regents in the determination of the appropriate role and scope for UT-Permian Basin in meeting future higher education needs of the area.

The committee will be chaired by Ray Herndon of Midland. Other members include Charles Fraser, John Hendrix, Herschel O'Kelley and Johnnie Warren, all of Midland; Gayle Earls, Steve Late, Larry Melton, Virgil Waggoner and Don Walker, Odessa; Conrad Dunagan, Monahans; Wanda Fox, Crane; F.S. Hoermann, Andrews; Bill Little, McCamey; and Ron Medley, Big Spring.

Anderson gets divorce

LAKE CHARLES, La. (AP) — Country singer Lynn Anderson has been granted a divorce from her millionaire husband in a settlement that gave her custody of their two children.

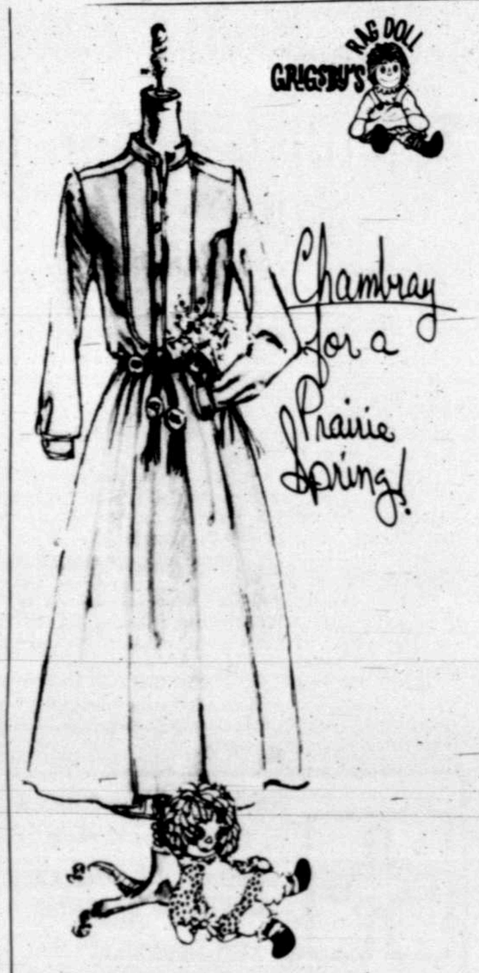

The 34-year-old singer, whose biggest hit was the Grammy-winning "I Never Promised You a Rose Garden," also was granted a legal separation Wednesday from her husband, Harold H. Stream III.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, April 10, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: the first woman member of the U.S. Cabinet—FDR's Labor Secretary Frances Perkins—was born on this date. Today was also the birthday of Joseph Pulitzer for whom the journalism prizes are named. Those of you who work in government or the media will find unusual success in the months ahead. Loved ones give you insights that accelerate your progress in the areas of finance, business and education. Always check your sources to make certain that the information you use is completely accurate. Even a small slip can prove costly? Romance treats you kindly. Many singles find themselves making a trip to the altar.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Old projects bring you new personal rewards this weekend. You get great pleasure from sharing them with other family members. Current romance partner could be demanding too much.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The charges against you are unjust. Work to set the record straight. Others will lend you support and demonstrate their loyalty. A child copies your actions. Set a good example!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may have to ask firmly to get a loan repaid. Confidential family matters are revealed and you feel that you are "on the spot." Loved one does well on a test.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Tend to household chores early in the day. Family members are willing to lend a helping hand. Creative ideas are profitable if you do not have to invest large amounts of capital.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The changes you suggest will receive a fair hearing. Eliminate the frills. A new budget pleases everyone involved if you set a good example with your spending habits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Postpone making any major financial moves. You need to give more thought to matters connected with spending. Beware of a "fast talker". Romance may be somewhat rocky.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your ideas for recreation may not meet with loved ones' approval. Be prepared to compromise. People in authority can be difficult to get along with.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Creative work brings great satisfaction. Make your apologies to someone you slighted in the past. A lovers' quarrel can be serious—employ greater diplomacy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be cautious if involved in a real estate deal. Hold out for what you consider a fair price. Catch up on your household chores. An exchange of views is featured this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make an effort to increase the value of your home if thinking of selling it. A different atmosphere could help solve a problem involving a teenager.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romance takes on more serious overtones. Avoid becoming involved in a friend's personal problems. Curtail spending. Keep your eyes open for bargains.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A reduction in spending is necessary to remain within your budget. Entertaining at home could be the best way to take care of your social commitments.

Bridge is a strange game. You never can tell how a play might boomerang later in the hand.

This hand is from the Vanderbilt Team Championship, the premier event on the annual bridge calendar. South's rebid of four hearts is the action of a man who believes that all things will go right for him. However, in terms of playing strength, the hand was much better than the point count might have suggested. A smattering of cards in dummy in the right places could easily have resulted in a laydown game.

West did not relish the prospect of having to make the opening lead. Since declarer's trump suit rated to be solid, a heart lead might have been the safest proposition. However, West hit on the deceptive lead of the jack of diamonds.

Declarer was not overly taken with his dummy. The club cards were all wasted, and dummy did not even have a king, let alone an ace. Still, bridge is a strange game.

The jack of diamonds was covered with the queen and taken by the ace. East shifted to his fourth-best spade, and the king lost to West's ace. West continued with the king of diamonds and followed with the nine.

To the untutored eye it might seem that East should ruff to insure a one-trick set, but that's not what happened at the table! Because of the opening lead, East placed his partner with the ten of diamonds, and he was reluctant to ruff his partner's "sure winner" with what could possibly be a natural trump trick. So East discarded a spade!

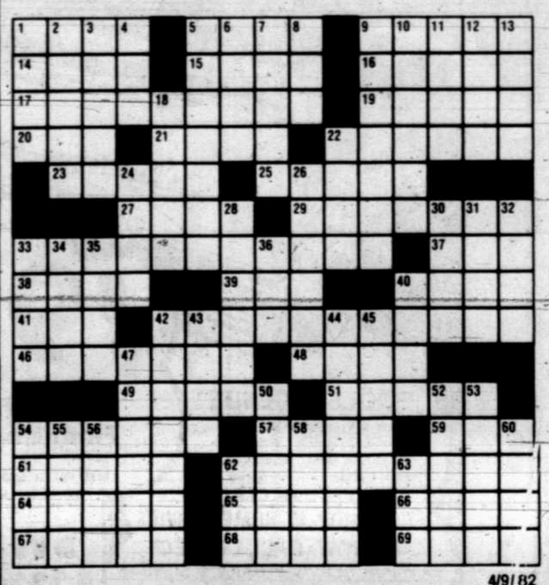

To his great surprise, declarer was able to win the ten of diamonds, draw trumps and discard a club on dummy's fifth diamond. As a result, he wrapped up a game on a hand where he seemed doomed to a two-trick set.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Sondra not normal diplomatic wife

By STEPHANIE MANSFIELD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Sondra Gotlieb, wife of the new Canadian ambassador to Washington and, according to one Washington socialite, "deliciously offbeat" by Embassy Row standards, recalls with horror and amusement her introduction to the pitfalls of protocol.

It was Geneva, 1960. Gotlieb, plump, unglamorous, university dropout, sat across a restaurant table from her husband Allan, sophisticated Rhodes scholar and first secretary at the Canadian mission. They had wed six years earlier, when Sondra was 18 and Allan 26. It was an "arranged" marriage, a bargain struck between two Winnipeg families.

At the dinner, honoring Rhodes scholars, Sondra was seated between a duke and an American senator. There were two other women present, one the daughter of an earl. After dinner, a decanter of wine was passed to the guests. Sondra warmed to the sweetness of the liquor, letting it loosen her young, inexperienced tongue. She took one glass, then another, chatting incessantly. A hush fell over the table. Sondra noticed her husband jerking his neck. Suddenly, the earl's daughter swept out of the room, followed by the other woman. The men stood up. Sondra kept talking. The men were still standing. Sondra kept talking. Finally, one of them interrupted to ask if she wouldn't like to join the other women.

She walked out to the adjoining room where the earl's daughter sat reading a newspaper. "Sondra, don't you know when the port comes around, ladies never stay with the gentlemen? You're the senior woman. You should have walked out first."

Sondra decided to go to the washroom. She found the door and walked in. After a few moments, Allan Gotlieb appeared, accompanied by several of the men from the dinner table. He cleared his throat, then told his wife that the funny sinks on the wall where she was going to wash her hands were not sinks at all.

"If I managed to live through that," she laughs, "nothing could bother me anymore."

But the rites of passage in the wily ways of protocol aren't over. At the age of 46, Sondra Gotlieb suddenly finds herself an ambassador's wife. Washington is a tough city, she has been told. The rules, the rituals, the parties, the politics. And it is especially tough for a woman who's never done it before, who, unlike most of her peers, never had the advantage of trying out for the position in, say, Abu Dhabi first.

"In the first place, it was like Alice in Wonderland for me because I've never had a staff and I didn't know what to do," she says, gazing around the marble and leather and oriental-carpeted Canadian residence. "I didn't know I was supposed to say what we were having for dinner and stuff like that. I didn't know what the maid was going to do."

SHE IS SHORT and dimple-cheeked and decidedly unaffected, in brown skirt, bronze heels, cream and brown blouse knotted at the neck with a loose bow she keeps tying and untying. Her auburn hair is cut short, thin wisps spilling over walnut-brown eyes that twinkle with self-deprecating humor. The stubby fingernails are short and painted dull pink. She takes tiny puffs on a cigarette and doesn't inhale.

"I couldn't remember where to turn out the lights, what do you do in this room, what do you do in that room, how many people were living in the house. I didn't know how to work the telephones. It took me three weeks to work that out. Very physical problems. And I'm not very quick about these things."

Until two months ago, Sondra Gotlieb was a successful Canadian author who had never thought of having a social secretary. Now the one assigned to her is handling the high-powered guest lists, plotting the names on small, round, table maps. Al Haig here, Cap Weinberger over there, James Kilpatrick here. Since her baptism by fire in Geneva, she has learned about protocol. Oh sure, she says, she still spills wine on her dress and says outrageous things, but nothing can top that night. She even re-created the scene for her new novel, "First Lady, Last Lady," which is causing a stir in Canada. The book includes the ambitious wife of a prime minister who is being blackmailed, a homosexual ambassador who is murdered, servants who lick the bubbles from champagne bottles and a cast of characters who rip the chafing-dish lid off the diplomatic life.

"Have you ever heard of escort cards?" she asks. "I hadn't. My social secretary says it's a way to get people into the dining room. How do you do that? Say, 'Soup's on'? And theoretically, people like to know where they're sitting first. So the thing is, you put the man's name on one side with the table number. And he opens up the card and there's the woman's name. It was very hard for me to grasp the principle. Everybody in Washington seems to know about it except me."

She jumps out of the squishy leather armchair, fishes into a visitor's pack of cigarettes and lights one up with a match from a red and white maple-leaf matchbook, then plops back into the chair.

A shadow appears in the doorway. It's the butler. A dark, severe-looking man with hollow cheeks.

"Madam, would you care for some coffee or tea?"

Sondra Gotlieb is silently chewing her lip. The visitor asks for tea. The butler glides out.

"I really would like some coffee," she whispers, looking distracted. "I should have asked for coffee."

She isn't used to servants. "They don't know what you want. I don't know what I want. That's the problem. I mean, for the first three days it was like living in a hotel. I thought it was just bliss. Then, for the next two weeks, I couldn't stand it. I didn't want to see any of them. Now I'm used to it. Now we have a section of the house closed off. Nobody bothers me there."

She lights another cigarette. "Let's not go on too much about the servants," she whispers.

Enter the butler, carrying a large tray glittering with silver teapot, china cups and a plate of cookies. The visitor suggests Mrs. Gotlieb might prefer coffee. The butler is stone-faced.

"Well. I'll try the tea," she says timidly. "What kind of tea do we have?"

"The tea you brought from Florida," he says, setting the tray down.

"OH, THE ORANGE tea," she says, pouring the steaming liquid into the cups.

For the first three weeks, she didn't know there was a powder room on the first floor. "I kept running up and down the stairs." She has no sense of direction, arriving 20 minutes early for every social event, instructing the chauffeur to ride around the block just one more time. She hates large receptions, has been going out to lunch a lot and says she likes it. "Well, sometimes these things are dull, but ..."

She likes New York better than Washington. It's more "relaxed." But she's surprised by the people she has met here. "I thought they'd be cold or snobby, but they weren't."

She drinks her tea in short gulps. There is something she wants to show her visitor. It's an article she recently wrote called "Housewives Are People, Too!"

"I've got it somewhere; what did I do with it?" she says. The phone is ringing. She goes toward it, then stops, turns around and flutters back to her chair. She reaches for the silver pot and begins to pour more tea into the visitor's empty cup.

"No thanks," the visitor says. "I've had enough."

"This is for me," she says.

Speaking of Sondra Gotlieb, one Canadian journalist says, "I think she's perceived in Canada as a real character."

In Ottawa, the Gotliebs were known as a very prominent social couple. Allan Gotlieb, with his Victorian flair and impeccable academic credentials, filled their house with rare prints, antiques and hand-carved chess sets. And even if his author wife was outspoken, she was certainly no liability. "She's different. Unusual. Not your normal diplomatic wife by any stretch of the imagination," the journalist added. "But beneath that flaky exterior is a fairly solid person. Washington will probably be more tolerant of her than Ottawa was. They may even find her enchanting."

At least one prominent Washington socialite who has been a guest at one of the embassy's first dinner parties already agrees.

"I find her deliciously offbeat," the woman says, pleading anonymity. "She gives the impression of being much more unsophisticated than she really is. She is well-read and well-traveled. A woman of strong opinions. Highly intelligent. I think Washington is going to find her refreshing."

"Here it is! I found it." Sondra Gotlieb walks over the marble floors, back into the room, waving a Xeroxed copy of her article. It is an angry defense of the housewife.

LOYAL WIVES, whether they are married to politicians, diplomats or coal miners, have become the lepers of our society ... What's wrong with cleaning your husband's bathtub? Coal miners' wives do it as a matter of habit ... I consider myself an "appendage" wife. I married at 18 with no thought of becoming anything but a wife and mother ...

But after her three children were in school, her interest in cooking led to two books, "The Gourmet's Canada" and "Cross Canada Cooking," both published in the '70s. She did a bit of freelance writing and talk-show chatting before being urged to write her autobiographical novel, "True Confections or How My Family Arranged My Marriage."

The book won a Leacock Award for humor in 1978. Part Erma Bombeck, part Philip Roth, Sondra Gotlieb captured the essence of growing up chubby in Winnipeg, ending with the hilarious circumstances of her marriage to Allan Gotlieb, the Harvard Law School graduate and Rhodes scholar home from Oxford who took her out for nine consecutive days then casually mentioned that they might someday be married. When Allan returned to England, both families sprang into action with overseas phone calls to and from Oxford, pushing, prodding and suggesting until Sondra Kaufman, without formally being asked, said yes.

"We had met. We liked each other," she recalls. "They (the families) just speeded up the process. When he came off the plane from Oxford I didn't recognize him. I couldn't remember what he looked like. We got to know each other after the marriage. And we got along very well."

The Gotliebs moved to Oxford where Allan was a fellow at All Souls College and Sondra was a college dropout, too intimidated to take any courses and reluctant to compete as a hostess with the other wives. She recalls that time as a difficult one.

"English women are the pits," she says.

They returned to Ottawa, where Allan joined the Department of External Affairs, eventually working his way up to undersecretary before being appointed ambassador to Washington.

But any suggestion that Sondra Gotlieb wants to be the wife of a prime minister is scoffed at. The politically ambitious heroine of "First Lady, Last Lady" is not Sondra Gotlieb, she insists. Nor is it Margaret Trudeau.

There is a certain sadness at historic Wentworth by the Sea as it sits out the winter at New Castle, N.H., huddled against the Atlantic storms and set to remain closed this spring.

Era ends for grand old Victorian hotel

By WILLIAM COCKERHAM
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW CASTLE, N.H. — There is a certain sadness about Wentworth By The Sea, almost as if this grand old Victorian hotel on the Atlantic coast knows that an era has passed.

Its windows are boarded up now against the raw winter winds that sweep across the Atlantic Ocean, as they are every year. But for the first time since it was built in the 1870s, this historic hotel — the site of diplomatic discussions that ended the Russo-Japanese War in 1905 — will not reopen this spring.

Wentworth, sold to a Swiss firm in 1980, will open again in the spring of 1983, but it will not be the same. Plans are to convert the 450-room, white wood-frame structure into a European-style convention center.

The hotel's regular clientele, many of them jewel-encrusted dowagers with nothing but money and time on their hands, just got too far along in years.

"They grew old with the hotel and are dying off every year," said James Barker Smith, who sold Wentworth By The Sea two years ago. "We had a regular crew of about 500 guests. They were as regular as the swallows at Capistrano. Even more regular because the swallows didn't go to Capistrano one year."

They were the old Yankee families, a close, monied circle of friends who lived in Florida in the winter and at the Wentworth in the summer. They were highly educated and trained in the social arts. They were a pampered class of people who demanded the same rooms year after year. They were, as F. Scott Fitzgerald observed, "different from you and me."

Smith, himself close to 80, has fond memories of his hotel by the sea, once described as looking like an ocean liner stuck on a reef.

"We had as fine a clientele you would find in all of America. They were the top, proper Bostonians," said Smith, who lives across a small bridge from Wentworth By The Sea.

"When I first bought the hotel in 1946 I was still in uniform. When I walked into the main dining room I was the only man there not wearing a black tie. It could never happen again."

"Teddy Roosevelt was here. FDR was here twice. There are just so many — Tom Dewey, Hubert Humphrey, every New Hampshire governor and senator, Gloria Swanson, Zero Mostel, Earl Warren, Richard Nixon.

"I'll tell you something. We never had a finer guest than Nixon."

Smith, still slender and straight, gracious in every respect, remembers New England's grand old hotels as they were in their heyday, those years between the two world wars.

"That's when people still traveled by trains. They came with two trunks and stayed the whole season, which then was just July and August," he said.

Beginning in the 1950s, however, New England's resort hotels ran into hard financial times.

"I can think of 20 or 25 resorts that went out of business. It was tough to compete with the Howard Johnson's," he said.

But then came the great American invention, the convention, and those New England resort owners who saw its potential survived.

"It expanded our season tremendously. We opened in early May and closed in the late fall. September and October became our biggest months," he said.

But even with the convention business, Smith said he was never quite able to get out of debt.

"We'd lose about $250,000 the months we had to close. Winters on the seashore are pretty bleak. We had no guests, but still had to keep on about 20 employees. You didn't want to lose your chef or your plumber. There are at least a thousand places you have to shut off the water in the winter," he said.

And there were special expenses, too. Someone had to repair the hundreds of wicker chairs on the porch, there were 250 acres of lawn and flower beds to groom and so many nooks and crannies to dust that it would boggle the mind.

One former guest marveled at the fact that Smith kept on an elevator man long after the hotel had installed automatic lifts, and hired a string quartet to play on the sweeping veranda.

"It was first class all the way. Real New England elegance," he recalled.

Smith said he had to sell the resort because of estate problems that would result if he or his wife died. Besides, he had built up a $2 million debt, even at average room rates of $100 a night.

The hotel was purchased at an undisclosed price by a Swiss company, Pacific Park Corp., which plans to spend $30 million to turn it into a convention center.

"They (Pacific Park) want a European flair. The New England flavor of Wentworth will be gone," said Smith.

Pacific Park spokeswoman Monica Airing said the corporation plans to completely gut the hotel "from the inside out, keeping as much of the facade as possible."

Airing also said the corporation plans to build a convention center, an indoor sports complex, condominiums and a supper club, "on the European model."

She said the hotel doesn't expect to get back many of Wentworth's regular guests when the resort complex is finished in the spring of 1983.

"After all, they have aged just like the Smiths. We'll be aiming at a much more mixed age group," she said.

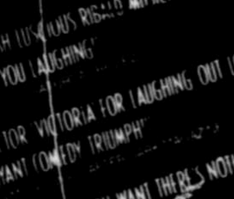

Airing said her company plans to open year-round, drawing business from throughout the United States and Europe.

"It will be the Greenbriar of the North," she said, comparing Wentworth to the posh Greenbriar resort in West Virginia.

Smith said he feels no sadness about the direction Pacific Park is heading.

He said it is a simple matter of economics. With the regular guests dying off, Wentworth was heading for financial trouble.

"No matter how historic the hotel is, when it gets old, it gets old. Just like people."

Dan Rather, left, joined by Harry Reasoner, center, and Mike Wallace, celebrate his first anniversary as anchorman and managing editor of the CBS Evening News. The three once worked together on CBS News' "60 Minutes" news magazine.

Reeve wants to change Superman's image

New York (AP) — It's tough being a man of steel in a world of silly putty. Just ask Christopher Reeve — the movie Superman.

It seems the actor's doorbell never stops ringing. "Can Superman come out and play?" a steady stream of third-graders ask through the intercom of Reeve's upper West Side apartment.

"Not today," bellows the man of steel. "He's got to save somebody."

Reeve laughs at the constant interruptions.

"I know it sounds a little crazy," he said. "But there's a school just down the street and it happens all the time."

The 29-year-old Reeve, tall and classically handsome, is more like a mild-mannered reporter than Superman, especially when he uses his Superman persona to talk to children.

"Friends of mine who have trouble with their kids and can't talk to them will use me as an intermediary," Reeve said.

"A lot of kids who're having trouble talking to parents will talk to me," he said. "I have a certain trust, through Superman, and I can open things up. It's a safe territory."

Reeve might not have time to go out and play with his tiny fans, but he's intent on changing the Superman image. He says he tries to play up Superman as a gentleman, rather than "machismo bullet stopping wall."

"I show them that Superman is modest and not full of himself," he said. "I try to emphasize his Sir Walter Raleigh side. It's all part of teaching them what makes a good person. Superman is good because he reaches out for people rather than hanging back. He's not cool either. He cares about people."

Superman has been a major boost to Reeve's career, he says. The role helped him avoid 10 years of artistic struggle.

"I would not be doing a 'Deathtrap' or a 'Monsignore' without the credibility that Superman gave me," he admitted.

Koppel has faithful 'Nightline' audience

NEW YORK (AP) — On his way in from the airport the other day, Ted Koppel was hailed by the shoeshine man, a Skycap, theatrical producer Joe Papp and a diplomat from Argentina.

"If that's not an eclectic mix," he says, "I'm not sure what is. It's that kind of recognition — 'Hey, you're doing a great job, we watch you every night' — that really gives me a charge."

And it's a sure sign, he says, of a widely distributed and faithful audience for "Nightline," ABC's late-night news program, introduced Nov. 8, 1979, as "The Iran Crisis: America Held Hostage."

"When we began," says Koppel, the "Nightline" anchorman from the start, "we were something new, and I'm sure a lot of people watched because of that. And we had the situation in Iran that kept the country's attention.

"I would say that we have an audience now of roughly 7-million that is hard-core," Koppel says, "and we get maybe 3-4 million more if we've got a really big story to work on.

"I don't know whether the novelty of what we do is going to wear off," he says. "I do know I'm surprised and gratified all the time by viewers who stop me on the street to talk about the show."

Koppel, who doubles as editorial manager of "Nightline," recently received a George Polk Award for excellence in TV news reporting, and is an Emmy-winner for his "Nightline" report in 1981 analyzing Ronald Reagan's victory in the presidential election.

A native of England who joined ABC News in 1963, at the age of 23, Koppel has experience as a foreign and domestic correspondent. He's married and the father of four children, ranging in age from 10 to 18.

The show itself, begun without precedent opposite NBC's long-running and enormously successful "Tonight" show with Johnny Carson, has kept pace with the competition — indeed, has punctured the once widely held belief that Carson's territory was inviolable.

All but 16 of ABC's 206 affiliates carry "Nightline," though several — perhaps as many as 40 — delay the program for locally broadcast syndicated shows. That has some effect on ratings for the ABC News production.

Now "Nightline," itself modeled loosely after public TV's "MacNeil-Lehrer Report," appears to have pioneered new ground for the competition. CBS has announced plans for "Overnight," a wee-hour news and information service to be broadcast 2-5 a.m., starting in September. And NBC announced last Saturday it will introduce an hour-long news program in July, to follow "Late Night with David Letterman."

ABC apparently will offer a midnight-1 a.m. news show, following "Nightline" four nights a week, to begin in the fall.

Group Alexander to perform in Lubbock

LUBBOCK — The rock group Alexander will perform as backup for a jazz band formed out of the Ohio Players at 8 p.m. Saturday at Lubbock Civic Auditorium.

Formerly a Midland-based group, the members of Alexander moved to Lubbock some months ago. Alexander spent three months this past year touring Mississippi, Oklahoma and Missouri. Currently, the group is in the process of recording an album for Great Western Adventures in Lubbock. The album's release is projected for September.

Tickets for the concert may be purchased at the door.

Triathlon may be sports ultimate

By ELLIOTT ALMOND
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — The chic sport of the moment? It's the triathlon, born of the desire of some athletes to accomplish what once was thought impossible.

That's an endurance swim, followed immediately by a cross-country bike ride, followed immediately by a marathon run. With, in some cases, additions or variations.

It's the latest escalation in America's fitness craze, and it has caught the fancy of those who have become bored with simply running for miles, hoisting weights for hours, or performing any of the many repetitive exertions.

THE GLAMOUR EVENT is Hawaii's Ironman Triathlon — 2.4 miles over the ocean, 112 miles on a bike through lush island verdure and 26-plus miles afoot, the latter two events amid heat and humidity.

But the Ironman is only one of many triathlons. Mike Gilmore, editor of Swim-Swim magazine in Los Angeles, estimates that there will be 100 triathlons in the United States this year. He is making a list of the races and their different requirements for an annual booklet, Swim-Bike-Run.

The growth has been phenomenal, and nowhere greater than in Southern California, where triathlons were created seven years ago by runners looking for a new experience. San Diego County — known for its outdoorsy, athletically inclined populace — is considered the sport's center.

Races there, as elsewhere, are called "Tinmen" events, as the distances are scaled down from those of Hawaii's Ironman competition.

Members of the San Diego Track Club sponsored Triathlons as early as 1974, but they were more social gatherings than serious competitions.

Tom Warren of Pacific Beach,a past Ironman winner, said the idea of a swim-bike-run originated in San Diego, but specific history is vague.

"I remember a triathlon in 1974, but it was a two-person team event," Warren said. "One guy would swim and run while the other would cycle and run. The triathlons were put on primarily for runners. They were all short distances. We would wear tennis shoes and swimming trunks throughout the entire race."

Now, changing of gear is an important factor in the success of a triathlete. The competitors switch from skin-tight swim suits to spandex shorts designed for bicycle racers to standard road-racing uniforms — running shoes, comfortable nylon shorts and lightweight singlets.

"There's a place for triathlons now," said Fletcher Hanks, a 64-year-old retired businessman who directs one of the East Coast's biggest races — the Oxford (Md.) Triathlon. "It's the closest thing to war that I know of. It's real vigorous."

IT'S A WAR FOUGHT with running shoes, intricate racing bicycles and drag-free swimsuits. Top triathloners train for up to a year for the Ironman.

What's the appeal? Mostly, competitors use words like "challenge" and "fun." For many the motive is simply participation in what they consider the ultimate macho competition. There's a mystique to it.

School teacher Rick Delanty said of his first triathlon.. When the starting gun went off, I didn't know what to expect. It was like blasting off to the moon for the first time."

"There's self-satisfaction," said Scott Tinley of San Diego, who won the Ironman last February in 9 hours, 19 minutes, 41 seconds. "You don't have to win to see your goals fulfilled. You just have to finish.

"It's enjoyable. It's fun to ride up and down the coast with your friends on a bicycle. It's not like lifting weights for five hours a day.

"Then there's the pioneer bit. We're involved in something new. It's an undefined thing."

And unrefined. Triathletes train for spiritual and physical enrichment, not for financial benefits. To be a suceessful triathlete takes a special determination and dedication.

Tinley rides a bicycle two hours before work each day, runs for 1½ hours at lunch and swims after work. "I try to cut the grass and say hello to my wife once in a while," he said.

But Tinley, a former lifeguard like many of the best triathletes, is unusual in his quest for the ultimate in physical achievement. Not many triathletes who aim to win in Hawaii hold regular jobs, have a family and attend school.

Most, according to veteran triathlete Dennis Hearst, are student-athletes or are independently wealthy.

That figures. Triathloning is expensive. This year's women's winner, Kathleen McCartney of Costa Mesa, Calif., spent $2,200 on a racing bicycle.

Many of the athletes pay dues to swimming clubs. And the cost of running shoes continues to rise. But the biggest expense is time. Dave Scott of Davis, Calif., who won the 1980 Ironman, said that holding a full-time job is not feasible for a serious triathlete. During peak training, he works out 7 to 8½ hours a day for six to seven weeks. Each week he bikes 360 miles, swims 26,000 yards and runs from 55 to 70 miles.

SAID JULIE MOSS of Carlsbad, Calif., who finished second among women in Hawaii this year: "I learned how to live meagerly. I had to make sacrifices, especially socially. But, God was it worth it."

Moss drew national attention to her sport with her poignant, gritty finish in Hawaii. It was covered by "Wide World of Sports" and shown several times by ABC-TV. She came across as a modern woman of insurmountable will and resilience.

Moss, 23, leading, collapsed 15 feet from the finish line, her arms and legs like noodles. As spectators and backers urged her to get up, McCartney, who had been second, crossed the line. Finally, Moss rallied and, wobbling, crawled the rest of the way.

"I felt so good when I crossed the finish line," she said. "People who saw me on TV thought I was spaced out. It's off base that they thought I almost died. All I did was go beyond my limit. I hit the wall, like in a marathon. I knew everything that was going on around me. I knew I was being filmed. You just don't care what people think. You reach a point where you just want to finish."

Moss plans to compete in the next Ironman in October. So do many of the other 580 that competed in Hawaii.

"There's a spirit over here that is like at the Olympics," said Ironman race director Valerie Silk. "At first, five years ago, I was against this. I just didn't think it was worth the time and expense."

"Now I just love it. The athletes are celebrities in Kona (where the race finishes), all of them."

Keeping score with polls less than sure-fire

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — Whether the subject is baseball or politics, Americans want to know the score and public opinion polls have become the political scorecards of this age.

Is Ronald Reagan winning or losing? How are the Republicans doing? Are the Democrats bouncing back?

Check the latest polls. There are new ones just about every week.

And, like baseball boxscores, they contain invaluable statistical delights for the fan who can read them with an awareness of their limitations.

Just as today's early season boxscores can't be read for reliable signs of which teams will be in the World Series next October, the polls of spring do not necessarily forecast the votes of November.

President Reagan reads the polls carefully and, publicly, at least, he brushes off the downward trend.

He told reporters Monday the polls are following "a pattern that's been historically true of every president" and added that they reflect "quite a drumbeat of criticism that has gone largely unanswered by us."

But those polls can make it very difficult to govern in uneasy times. How does a president exercise leadership in an era of intensive polling with its inevitable pressures on politicians to conform rather than lead?

For example, suppose Reagan is right about the economy despite polls showing a majority of Americans don't think his policies will work.

How long can a president pursue an unpopular or questionable course against the kind of pressure generated by weekly polls that say the public thinks he ought to change direction?

It's an election year and members of Congress are reading the latest polls as surely as they were reading those of a year ago that showed strong public support for the budget and tax cuts advocated by the president.

It wasn't just opinion polls that contributed to the pressure on Congress to support the Reagan program in 1981. More influential were the 1980 election returns and the telephone calls and letters to congressional offices as well as the signals lawmakers got on their trips home.

And it won't be just opinion polls that determine the success or failure of the Reagan program on Capitol Hill this year.

Peter Hart, a pollster with strong ties to the Democrats, says he doesn't think polls are taking control of the political process. "I think people make individual judgments," he said in an interview.

But Hart also acknowledged the last five years have seen what he called "a certain amount of poll proliferation...

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — If it's the left lane, it must be Arkansas.

Truck drivers traveling interstate highways have to change their driving habits when they cross some state lines. In New Jersey and New York, they may be restricted to the right lane.

When they hit the Arkansas border, they're encouraged to take the left lane. The move isn't pleasing everyone or catching on quickly.

The state Highway and Transportation Department put up signs at five weigh stations last month to ask truck drivers to move over. Highway officials hope the lane switch will reduce the wear and tear on the right lane, which the department says is deteriorating faster than the left.

On a recent round trip to West Memphis from Little Rock, no trucks were spotted in the left lane of Interstate 40. An informal check on Interstate 30 between Malvern and Hope showed one-fourth of the trucks using the left lanes.

Bill Stanton, a highway spokesman, said it will take time for the change to catch on because people are taught to drive on the right. "Particularly, it will take time for the truckers to get used to driving in the left lane all the time," he said in a recent telephone interview.

The department thinks Arkansas is the only state where truck drivers are encouraged to use the left lane.

Stanton said the department plans to take traffic counts to see if the left lane is getting more use. Studies show 81 percent of the heavy trucks used the right lane before the change.

Highway Police Officer O.D. Gober, who works at a weigh station near Alma, said one truck driver suggested the signs be placed on the interstate "so that the four-wheelers would know why they were driving on the left."

Trucker Alfred Craig, 43, of Newburgh, N.Y., said in a telephone interview early Wednesday at a weigh station near Alma that he wasn't familiar with the request. "It's beautiful for me," Craig said. "We tried to stay to the right lane, but it's so rough." Craig said they'd like to switch to the left so the guy in the bunk could sleep.

"A lot of states won't let you ride all the time in the left," he said.

"To be honest with you, I think it's a real good idea," said Richard Weimer, 29, of Pompano Beach, Fla. Weimer hauls Fiberglas boats and said it is easier on his cargo to travel in the left lane.

"If I ride that right lane it's pretty well chopped up. I find it to my advantage to use the left," Weimer said. He said right-lane travel is required in New Jersey.

War games friendly end

TWENTYNINE PALMS, Calif. (AP) — Grimy and weary thousands of soldiers headed out of the Mojave Desert with their tanks, artillery and jeeps, satisfied that an arduous week-long test of the military's ability to respond to trouble spots in remote corners of the world had been a success.

"It was the first time most of us have been exposed to desert warfare," Capt. Jim Hart of Springfield, Va., a 31-year-old tank company commander, said of the war game maneuvers, dubbed Gallant Eagle 82. "We learned a lot."

Thousands of paratroopers, Marines and National Guardsmen have lived in the desert since March 30 during the war games' most active phase, which ended Tuesday. Some phases of the war games will continue until April 15.

Five paratroopers died as a result of injuries suffered in a parachute jump March 30, a soldier and a Marine died in separate vehicle accidents during war games, and another soldier died in an off-duty traffic accident. Additionally, the parachute jump March 30 injured 150 paratroopers.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Gout doesn't usually cause kidney damage

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been told I have gout, and my doctor is sending me to a kidney specialist. Does that mean that gout damages the kidneys? — Sam, Denver, Col.

Dear Sam: In my patients I find that gout rarely causes kidney damage in the absence of other kidney disease. The referral to the nephrologist is probably a precautionary measure since gout is a very treatable condition.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My three-year-old son had a seizure which the doctor blamed on a high fever. He examined my son but didn't do any tests. When he left, he told me not to worry. Isn't a seizure something to worry about? — Mrs. V.L., N.Y.

Dear Mrs. L.: An isolated seizure due to a high fever in a preschool child is usually quite innocuous. Moreover, diagnostic tests, while expensive, generally are of little value.

I realize that even an isolated seizure in a child can be very upsetting to the parents, but if your doctor told you that there's nothing to worry about, I would try to follow his advice.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was reading an article about crib death, and the point was made that even adults sometimes stop breathing for a few seconds while they are sleeping. Can this cause an adult any harm or is it only infants that are affected? — Cathy, Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Cathy: The condition you describe is called sleep apnea, and it can have harmful consequences in adults, including hypertension and other cardiovascular symptoms. Some people have several such episodes during a night's sleep, some lasting 10 seconds or even longer. The condition is more common in men than in women, and in persons from 40 to 60 years of age.

Any damage that is done may be reversed if the person is referred for treatment at an early stage. The longer the condition exists, the more likely appears to be the possibility of damage. The treatment may be either pharmacologic or surgical, depending on the cause of the sleep apnea.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

U.S. officers question Falklands blockade

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some senior U.S. military officers question whether Great Britain can sustain an effective blockade around the Falkland Islands; especially since its fleet must operate at the end of an 8,000-mile supply line.

Except for nuclear-powered submarines, the British armada must rely almost exclusively on fuel from home to remain on station. There is also the problem of assuring food for the thousands of British sailors and marines aboard at least 40 ships.

"Where will the British find a country in the area to give them a base to support that fleet?" asked one high-ranking military officer. "None, that I know of."

The British do have the right to land supply planes on a 10,000-foot U.S.-operated runway on Ascension Island, about 3,500 miles from the Falklands. But U.S. officials said it is highly doubtful that Britain could haul enough fuel and other bulk cargo by air to satisfy its fleet's continuing requirements.

Pentagon spokesman Henry Catto told a briefing Thursday that the British right to use the U.S. runway on Ascension Island, which is owned by Britain but used by the United States, "carries with it the obligation of the United States to provide fuel needed for safe continuation of flight of the aircraft within the limits of our existing capability at the airfield."

Catto also said the 1962 agreement provides further for establishment by Britain "of its logistic, administrative or operating facilities at the airfield in the event the United Kingdom considers additional facilities necessary in connection with use of the airfield by UK military aircraft."

Nothing was said about Britain establishing fuel dumps or other facilities on Ascension Island to service its fleet.

Catto said he is "not aware of any requests for logistics assistance" from Britain. At the same time he strengthened the impression that the United States was attempting to keep its military distance from the Falkland Islands area when he said that there have been no U.S. photo reconnaissance flights in the region. The only plane capable of carrying out such flights, considering the distances involved, is the strategic SR-71 Blackbird spy plane.

Asked if there was any Soviet naval activity in the Falklands region, Catto said, "Not that I have seen."

On Wednesday, Great Britain declared a 200-mile "war zone" around the Falklands, effective Monday, saying any Argentine ship in the area is subject to attack after that date. Argentina responded with its own declaration of a "South Atlantic theater of operations" in the same area.

According to Pentagon officers, who asked to remain anonymous, there are three main factors entering into the British-Argentine military equation:

Naval Capability — Here, the British are given the edge, although the Falklands-bound fleet is weak in air power.

Air power — The Argentinians are given the advantage here because the Falkland Islands which they seized nearly a week ago are only about 250 miles from the South American mainland.

Will — About a standoff, in the view of these U.S. officers.

The British fleet of at least 40 ships is bigger, more powerful and much more modern than the Argentinian fleet, which is made up mostly of World War II-vintage warships obtained chiefly from Britain and the United States.

However, the two British aircraft carriers enroute, the 29,000-ton Hermes and the 20,000-ton Invincible, are designed to carry only five "Sea Harrier" jumpjet fighter bombers.

On the other hand, U.S. officers note, the Argentine Air Force is equipped with about 68 U.S.-built A-4 bombers and some 20 French-manufactured Mirage interceptors, which have range enough to reach any British fleet positioned to cut off the 4,000-man Argentine invasion force from the mainland.

The British fleet would rely on an array of surface-to-air missiles to defend itself against air attack. Both sides, meanwhile, have the French-made Exocet surface-to-surface missile, which has a conventional, high-explosive warhead and a range of 28 miles — but the British have more.

Britain's most potent weapon in the circumstances probably would be nuclear-powered submarines, which could prowl the waters for an indefinite period and attack Argentine shipping, although it is questionable in the minds of U.S. military analysts whether there would be enough of those subs to maintain an effective barrier.

Doubts increasing over Thatcher's toughness

By BERNARD KAPLAN
Hearst News Service

LONDON — The key question increasingly being asked here is whether Britain's first woman prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, is tough enough to deal with the pressures of a national crisis like that which has erupted over the Falkland Islands.

Doubts, not only about her past handling of the problem, but of her ability to handle it in the crucial coming weeks, are clearly growing. They are visible both in and out of her own Conservative Party. This week's government shake-up, resulting from the resignation of the "appeasers" led by the foreign minister, Lord Carrington, has not been enough to quiet them.

A perceptible change has occurred in the political atmosphere here as the situation created by Argentina's seizure of the distant Falklands enters a new phase. The national consensus of outrage and determination to revenge the humiliating grab of one of the last remaining British colonies has subsided almost as abruptly as it erupted.

Everybody knew the mood could not last indefinitely. The speed with which it has shifted has surprised even the cynics.

As the British fleet sails south toward a possible showdown which, at the earliest, must be at least two weeks away, patriotic indignation over Argentine perfidy has yielded to uneasy second thoughts and a growing amount of political infighting. The central issue in all of it boils down to Mrs. Thatcher's future.

The opposition Labor Party's initial display of bipartisan unity over the Falklands already shows signs of wear-and-tear. To many Laborites, Mrs. Thatcher's political scalp looks like a more desirable trophy of war than that of the Argentine president, General Galtieri.

Significantly, two leading pro-Labor newspapers, the Guardian and the Daily Mirror, have now come out editorially against using force to regain the South Atlantic islands. A Labor Party committee Tuesday rejected a motion opposing force by only a single vote. Opposition politicians have begun to denounce "Thatcherite brinkmanship" and to emphasize that, notwithstanding their nominal support of government policy, they have not given her a blank check over the Falklands.

More menacing for the prime minister are the critics and skeptics in her own party and in the wider Tory establishment beyond.

Their attitude was best reflected in the displeasure of the London stock market which plummeted on the news of the crisis and of the money markets where the pound, rather than the Argentine navy, retreated smartly. (Both markets rallied on reports of American diplomatic mediation to solve the crisis without a fight, but experts predicted they would promptly start falling again if the reports proved overly optimistic.)

Her appointment of the highly respected Francis Pym to be the new foreign minister is viewed as a reflection of her political weakness. Pym is not an unadulterated admirer of the prime minister. He is rated a good bet to succeed her, if it comes to that.

Weather can't fool these Cubs

It's a good thing most of the Cubs had been here before or the weatherman would have gotten away with his attempted dirty trick.

It was just like Arizona at Cubs Stadium Thursday as the Cubs went through a final workout before tonight's Texas League opener in San Antonio.

The weatherman might have fooled Brian Murphy, the Cubs' new manager, a newcomer to West Texas, but the cruel ruse didn't fool they guys who have been buffeted by spring winds before.

AND WHEN the Cubs showed up, there were some real surprises on the roster, like Jared Martin, Carlos Lezcano, Jon Perlman. Martin played in Mexico last summer after two seasons at Midland. Lezcano was the Chicago Cubs starting centerfielder in last year's opener and hasn't been here since a .326 season in 1979. Perlman was expected to be with the AAA farm club at Iowa in the American Association.

Mike King summed up what the Cubs were against in spring training in Mesa, "I gave up two runs in 22 innings with Iowa this spring." Rather than being disturbed, he was predicting the Cubs would have a good team this year, "score lots of runs and make it exciting."

Mike Thompson, who joined the club from Hagerstown (Carolina League) last season and became the ace of the staff until sidelined by a sore elbow, is back despite a good spring and the fact that there are just two lefthanders ahead of him on the AAA and major league clubs. "The arm's okay. They told me by quickest hope of making it to the big club was as a relief pitcher, so that's what I'll be doing."

AMONG OTHER familiar faces returning are third baseman Fritz Connally, shortstop Dave Owen, second baseman Jim Payne, first baseman Carmello Martinez infielder-outfielder David Pagel and outfielder Joe Carter, college baseball's Player of the Year last season at Wichita State before he was drafted by Chicago, and pitchers Tom Spino, Randy Clark and Carlos Gil.

Martin, who figured he had seen the last of Midland a couple of years ago, is glad to be back and playing. "I think I'll be back in right, where I feel I belong. Hey, watch this Henry Catto, our centerfielder. He stole 50 bases in A ball last year and I bet he steals 100 here. If he does, I'll have to steal 102."

Of course, the change over in ownership and upper level management and the subsequent trades, a quick attempt at respectability, is the primary reason so many proven players are back in Midland. There simply isn't any place to go.

Former Midland Cub Scot Thompson, not to mention Hector Cruz, another major league outfielder, wound up back at Iowa after four years in the majors and players like Brian Rosinski, Henry Mack and Mike Wright were released outright.

FORMER MAJOR leaguer Larry Cox, Seattle, Chicago and Philadelphia) is another surprise as a catcher and it is hoped his expertise will help Diaz develop faster.

No one is more optimistic over the outlook for the season than Murphy. "I think we'll have an exciting blend of speed and power. Catto stole 50 bases last year. I think he can steal 80 here. We have three or four others who can steal 30 to 40 bases each."

Murphy felt concern for the pitching early, "but it came on strong before we left. Of course, you never know what you've really got until the season starts."

Experience is one of the big pluses for the Cubs

Reader makes horrible mistake

A reader called up and wanted to if Whitey Ford, Ralph Kiner and Orlando Cepeda were in the Baseball Hall of Fame, and, if not, why not?

Only Cepeda has not been inducted and we suppose it's because of a checkered career and personal life.

Then he wanted to know who we thought should be in the Hall and wasn't and why not.

After Juan Marichal and Bill Williams we drew a blank. There were plenty of others. We just couldn't think of 'em at a moment's notice.

For instance, how come no Harmon Killebrew or Don Drysdale or Luis Aparicio or Jim Bunning or Elston Howard haven't been invited to the Cooperstown sanctuary.

THERE ARE others there with less impressive credentials.

No one denies Marichal's high hard one off the high kick belongs there. Like Cepeda, too many remember other things, like how Juan took a bat to catcher John Roseboro's head in anger.

Perhaps they reason that if you are going to let Juan in, why not Shoeless Joe Jackson, expelled from baseball in the 1919 Black Sox scandal. What's worse, fixing points or mayhem? Can you imagine anyone with a .356 lifetime batting average in the majors?

It's strange what they'll hold against a player. Babe Herman hit .324 lifetime and is ignored because they say he couldn't field and point to the fact that he got conked on the noggin by a fly ball he was trying to catch. Shucks, that alone, should gaurantee him a place among the game's immortals.

What's most remarkable about the Babe's feat is that the mileage he got out of it.

Last season, Kansas City outfielder Willie White was hit on the head by a fly ball on national tv and no one even laughed. Everybody sympathized with him because of that tricky left field sun in Yankee Stadium, or some such. Of course, with the kind of money they are giving players nowadays, no one laughs much in baseball any more.

THEN, THE reader made the mistake of getting personal. "Who do you think belongs in the Hall of Fame that isn't there?"

Now that's a different story.

After all, what's Frick without Frack, or how can they accept Billy Herman without Stan Hack. Hack and Herman formed one of baseball's best hit and run combinations and in addition to a .301 lifetime average, Stan led the league in stolen bases in 1938 and 1939. Where are Big Bill Lee, Clay Bryant and Claude Passeau...and Augie Galan and Phil Cavaretta? Guess who our team was as a kid?

Cooper strikes early for win

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland High pitcher Joel De La Garza ran into some problems in the first inning Thursday and the result was an Abilene Cooper 5-2 District 5-5A victory at Memorial Stadium Field.

De La Garza walked the first three batters he faced in the inning and two of them went on to score. The first to receive a walk, Arnold Blankenship, was thrown out by catcher Tim Davis in a steal attempt at second base.

John Williams was the second Cougar batter to reach base via the walk and he went to second when Jeff Blackburn also walked. Billy Mitchell brought both runners home with a double to right-center field and went to third on Chuck Cathey's single.

Mitchell scored on Curt Parker's grounder to shortstop Jose Carrasco and was safe on the errant throw to first base as Cathey went to second. Tommy Clemons drove in Cathey with a single to left field, Parker then stole home when Davis threw to second on a fake steal and Faustino Granado's throw back to home wasn't in time.

THAT MADE it 5-0 with only one out in the top of the first. MHS coach Tim Whalen went to the mound calling for Billy Miles to come in to relieve. The change worked to a certain degree. While Miles was able to shutout Cooper the rest of the way, the Bulldogs weren't able to score enough runs to overcome the Cougar lead and ended up losing their fourth 5-5A game against two victories, 8-10 overall. Cooper's record improved to 3-2 and 16-7.

"He hadn't pitched enough, I put him back in too quickly," said Whalen about De La Garza who is coming off an illness. "He's been out for a few days. I didn't want to chance hurting Billy's arm (Miles went the distance Tuesday against Odessa High for an 8-2 victory). He's pitching well. Since Joel's been sick, it's been a struggle for him, his timing is off. He hasn't been 100 percent since he got sick. But when he gets it back (his timing), he'll be all right. If we're going to do anything in the second half, we have to have more than one pitcher."

THE COUGARS held their lead for the next three innings before the Bulldogs were able to gain some ground. With two out in the fourth, Jim Gunnels hit a single to left field and went to second on Peter Galindo's single. Both runners were then awarded two bases on a wild throw by Blankenship with Gunnels scoring on the play.

Trailing by four going into the seventh, Galindo open for the Pack with a single by Galindo and then fell prey to Cooper's first double play of the game. Pinch hitter Judd Ryan hit a grounder to Blackburn who started the throw around the bases.

Designated Hitter Benny Ozuna and Carrasco gave the Bulldogs renewed, if not dim, hope when Ozuna tagged Galbraith for a single followed by an RBI triple by Carrasco who never got beyond third as the game ended when Galbraith struckout Richard Harris.

COACH WHALEN feels his team is hitting better of late, but still not at the capability that he would like to see.

"We are hitting better but they're still not looking at the ball. Their heads are in left field," he said. "We won't be a good hitting club until we do it right. Everyone on the team can tell you how to hit the ball, but can't get up and do it."

Galbraith had the standout performance of the game as he went the distance for his fifth victory in six decisions (2-1 in 5-5A play) giving up two runs on seven hits while striking out nine Bulldogs and walking only one.

For MHS, Miles continued to pitch strong for the Bulldogs allowing no runs on four hits, walking one and striking out six.

MHS now has four days to rest before playing cross-town rival Midland Lee at Lee for the third time this season. The two teams have split so far this season in non-district games, Lee winning in the Pre-District Tournament at Odessa and MHS taking the victory in the Tournament of Champions.

Nicklaus charges into Masters lead

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus, the only man to win this title five times, charged into a three-stroke lead in the rain-delayed first round of the 46th Masters Tournament today with a three-under par 69.

The trim, tan 42-year old Nicklaus was the only player in the clubhouse with a sub-par round.

And with 18 players left on the course when he finished, it appeared no one would match it.

"You've got to be fortunate to get off to the right beat," he said after completing his round.

Nicklaus, who hasn't won a tournament since 1980 when he took both the U.S. Open and PGA championships, had warned before the start of play that Jack was back, a different Nicklaus than the one who missed the cut in his last two tournament appearances.

He said he arrived at the Augusta National Golf Club one week early to practice and after the second day he found a flaw in his swing and corrected it.

Nicklaus, one of 36 golfers to start play at 7:30 a.m. in order to finish the first round after hard rain halted play, was at even par when he hit his first ball on the 11th fairway.

He parred that hole, then birdied the next one, the par three 12th made infamous two years ago by Tom Weiskopf, who took a 13.

He hit his iron to within about 10 feet and sank the putt.

He lipped out a six-foot birdie putt on the par 5 13th and just missed an eight-foot birdie putt on the par 5 15th.

His second birdie of the morning came at the 170-yard par three 16th, where his tee shot almost went in fo. a hole in one.

That shot left him with a two-foot putt for the birdie and he made it.

Then at the par 4 No. 18, an uphill, dogleg right, he knocked a five-iron to seven feet, just right of the hole, and drilled the putt in for his third birdie.

"I was amazed at the condition of the golf course" said Nicklaus.

"The greens were absolutely like glass. They were twice as fast as they were last night." The weather was cloudy and 42 degrees this morning, and a raw chill remained in the air.

Abilene opens half game 5-5A lead

ABILENE — Abilene High improved its chances of winning the first half District 5-5A baseball title by posting a 7-3 victory over Midland Lee here Thursday to up its league record to 5-1 while Lee fell to 2-3.

That win gave the Eagles a half game lead in the district which could be stretched to a full game depending on the outcome of the Odessa High-Big Spring contest today in Big Spring.

In beating Lee, the Eagles scored a pair of runs in the second inning on Matt Waldmann's inside-the-park home run and tallied two more in the fourth on a single that brought home Jay Tindall and on an error by Rebel right fielder Scott Ullom that scored George Shannon. AHS also added three runs in the sixth.

Lee's Chris Parker went to second in the second inning on a two-base throwing error by Eagle thirdbaseman Chance Hall who made the same mistake against Ullom, the next batter, which scored Parker.

In the sixth inning, Bart Ryan reached first base via the walk and went to second on Barry Blackwell's single. Rightfielder Rick Womble then miscued on a fly ball that allowed both runners to score to pull within one, 4-3. But the Rebels gave up three runs in the bottom of the inning and failed to score in the seventh to end the game at 7-3.

"OUR PITCHERS were wild," said Lee coach Ernie Johnson. "We gave up bases on nine walks and one hit pitch and that hurt us real bad. Then we made an error or two in the fourth inning with runners on first and second and one out. They hit a hard line drive to first base and our firstbaseman (Scott Carrell) stood there with the ball instead of going to the bag and they ended up scoring two runs after that.

"We didn't get many hits, only four," he continued. Their third baseman (Hall) made two throwing errors then had a single to left get by him. We didn't get any earned runs at all. It was a real weak effort. They out hit us, out pitched us and we had mental lapses on defense. We let down hard, didn't keep our heads up. There was a lack of intensity. It's my job to get them sparked up a bit and I'm not doing much job at it right now."

Tindall pitched six complete innings for the victory before stepping aside for Jeff Waits in the seventh to up his record to 4-0. John Denton lasted 3⅔ innings before being relieved by Parker with two outs in the fourth.

On Tuesday, the Rebels will have the home field advantage when they face cross-town rival Midland High for the third time this season. Lee won the first game in the Pre-District Tournament in Odessa and lost the second to MHS in the Tournament of Champions.

Lee, Midland teams on road

The Midland High and Midland Lee track squads hit the road this week for Amarillo and Levelland in the final tuneup of the year before the all-important April 23 District 5-5A meet at Memorial Stadium.

The Rebels and Bulldogs will be open next weekend, so this week's outing is the final chance to polish up for the big one. It will be in the district meet where Region I berths can be earned.

And judging from last weekend's Tall City Relays, both the Rebels and Bulldogs need some final tuning this weekend.

Lee, who figures to be a major challenger for the 5-5A title, slipped last weekend when they lost their first meet to another 5-5A power. In fact, the Rebels lost to both Odessa Permian and San Angelo. Being disqualified in the 400 meter relay did not help. That is something the Rebels don't want to happen again. Levelland will be another proving ground for Lee Saturday.

Midland High, featuring a bevy of youngsters, scored only 19 points in the Tall City meet and managed only two fourth place finishes as their best showings. The Bulldogs will be out to improve at Amarillo Saturday.

On the positive side for the Rebels, Darren Wilhams returned to his winning form in the 100 meters with his fastest time of the year, a 10.76. He has lost only once this year, and has not lost to a 5-5A opponent. Long jumper Roosevelt Fort also returned to winning form in the long jump with a season best 23-6½. Fort has also lost only once this season.

The main worry for Lee is getting Damon Polk back in running form. He is a big key for Lee in the district hurdles, but he may miss this weekend's run to heal some pulled muscles.

Luther Johnson was a surprise winner last weekend in the intermediate hurdles, winning his first varsity race and Fort was a surprise second in the 400 meters. Lee's 1600 meter relay team is also back on track after winning last weekend. Darrell Clark's 6-4 in the high jump was another personal best for Lee while Wayne Brandt and Darrell Mooney are showing signs of coming in the pole vault.

The Bulldogs' key hope for district may be in 800 meter ace Chuck St. Germain, but he was fourth last weekend and needs to pull his time down. The MHS 1600 relay team was also fourth last weekend.

The Bulldogs also need more help from Byron Campbell in the discus, Troy Bush in the high jump and Ricky Madrid in the running events.

Noah scores first victory over Borg

Yannick Noah scored his first win every over Bjorn Borg, 6-1, 6-2, in the Monte Carlo quarterfinals. Noah, seeded sixth, meets top-seeded Ivan Lendl in a semifinal Saturday. Lendl beat Balazs Taroczy earlier Thursday. Borg, 25, who now lives in the tax-haven of Monte Carlo, had to go through the qualifying round because of his refusal to play in at least 10 Grand Prix tournaments this year. "I think it's a risk to stop playing as long as Borg did," Noah said. "He was not playing at his best level. He wasn't as consistent as he used to be."...

Jiro Watanabe won the WBA junior bantamweight title by decisioning Rafael Pedroza in 15 rounds at Tokyo Thursday. Pedroza admitted that he was soundly beaten by the 114-pound Watanabe. He said he felt he was in an excellent physical condition but used up his stamina going after the light-footed challenger. The 115-pound Panamian, also 27, entered the ring a slight favorite over the challenger, but Watanabe took immediate command with a fast left and right combination to Pedroza's head and body in the first round, and kept up a relentless speedy attack throughout the bout...

Pittsburgh's Steelers are remaining mum, but it is reported Keith Gary, their top draft pick in 1981, lost to the CFL, is on their negotiating list...The USGA is debating whether to build its headquarters in Atlanta, or keep it at Far Hill,s, N.J.... Pat Foster says he will take on extra duties to remain at Lamar University as basketball coach. In two years, Foster is 47-12 with the Cardinals...

Former Florida State head coach Bill Peterson was named AD at the University of Central Florida...The University of Massachusetts canceled its track relays involving 900 athletes from 35 colleges because of snow...The New Orleans USF&G classic has upped its prize money $50,000 to $400,000. The April 22-25 event is now exceeded only by the TPA and World Series of Golf...; Sponsors are being sought to finance scoreboards for the 1984 Olympic Games the Los Angeles Coliseum and indoor events to be held at the nearby Los Angeles Sports Arena. The goal is $1½ million... Tickets for the May 24 Marvin Hagler-Thomas Hearns middlweight bout are available in England, Italy, New England and Detroit — but not in Windsor, Canada, where the fight is being staged. "We decided not to sell tickets in Windsor because of the currency problem — the 20 percent discount on the dollar," promoter Bob Arum said.

Islanders beat Penguins in NHL play

New York's Butch Goring and Brent Sutter, scoring 41 seconds apart, capped a four-goal first period as the New York Islanders took a 2-0 lead over Pittsburgh in the best-of-five series with a 7-2 win Thursday night.

Quebec 3, Montreal 2

Boston 7, Buffalo 3

Rookie Barry Pedersen rammed home three goals in the second period as the Boston Bruins ripped the Buffalo Sabres 7-3.

Rangers 7, Flyers 3

The New York Rangers squared their series with the Philadelphia Flyers then rallied with a 7-3 win Thursday.

There's new sound in baseball's booths this season

By LARRY SIDDONS
AP Sports Writer

There's a new sound this season for fans of a dozen major league baseball teams.

On the field, their favorites may be in for another year of near-misses or miracle rallies. But on television and radio, they'll get the news from a different set of voices.

As is often the case with the players they are covering, some of the new play-by-play and color announcers are rookies, replacing veteran voices. Others are experienced pros putting down roots in a new city.

And in one case, it's a long-time broadcaster moving across town.

Harry Caray, for the past few years the voice of the Chicago White Sox, travels back to the Windy City's North Side to rejoin the National League Cubs.

The White Sox, meanwhile, unveil a greatly revamped broadcast team, heavy with former major league stars who in recent years have been announcers in other cities.

DON DRYSDALE, the one-time Los Angeles pitcher, come to the White Sox from the announcers' booth of the California Angels. He's joined by former Boston slugger Ken Harrelson, who was a Red Sox's broadcaster, and former White Sox's 300-game winner Early Wynn, coming in from Toronto. Also in the White Sox's booth will be Joe McConnell.

Harrelson's place in Boston is taken by another former big-league player, Bob Montgomery, while Jerry Howard replaces Wynn in Toronto.

In Milwaukee, Bob Uecker moves into the No.1 spot on radio, with partner Dwayne Mosely and newcomer Kevin Young.

Wes Stock is the new voice with the Seattle Mariners this season. The former pitcher joins Cal Niehaus and Ken Wilson.

THE TEXAS Rangers have new broadcast teams on both radio and TV. Mark Holtz and Eric Nadel take over on radio, with Steve Busby and Carl Cherkin doing TV.

Both New York teams made changes in their broadcast lineups during the offseason.

The American League Yankees fired former catcher Fran Healy, replacing him with John Gordon, who was once a broadcaster for the Baltimore Orioles.

The National League Mets, meanwhile, dropped Steve Albert and Art Shamsky, replacing them with Lorn Browne and Steve LaMar. Brown teams with Ralph Kiner on TV, and LaMar with Bob Murphy on radio.

A former Mets broadcaster, Lindsey Nelson, has retired as the voice of the San Francisco Giants. His place is being taken by Hank Greenwald on radio and TV.

GUY FERRON, who had broadcast the Montreal Expos on their French language network since their first year in 1969, died during the off-season. His place on the telecast team is taken by Raymond LeBrun. And on the English language side, former major leaguer Tommy Hutton joins Dave Van Horne and Duke Snider.

The announcers — old, new and transplanted — will be covering a sport which appears to have weathered the effects of last season's strike, at least as far as network and local broadcasters are concerned.

Renegotiated radio-TV rights at the local level, plus new cable TV packages, bring the total paid for this season's baseball broadcast rights to more than $118 million, a 32 percent increase from a year ago, according to a survey by Broadcasting magazine.

NBC OPENS its 17th consecutive season of major league baseball telecasts Saturday with the defending world champion Los Angeles Dodgers against the San Diego Padres. Fernando Valenzuela, last seaon's rookie sensation who was involved in a lengthy contract holdout this spring, is expected to start for the Dodgers, his 1982 debut.

Howe doubles, scores on error

HOUSTON (AP)—Art Howe doubled to open the eighth and then scored on an error by St. Louis second baseman Tom Herr to give the Houston Astros a 1-0 win over the Cardinals here Thursday night.

Joaquin Andujar of St. Louis dueled the Astros' Bob Knepper for eight innings before the ice was broken. Howe doubled to right center, went to third on Craig Reynolds' bunt and scored when Dennis Walling's grounder trickled off Herr's glove.

Ray Knight was Andujar's only problem through the first seven innings, doubling in the second and singling in the fifth. Knight was gunned down at home in the second as he tried to score on a Howe grounder to second.

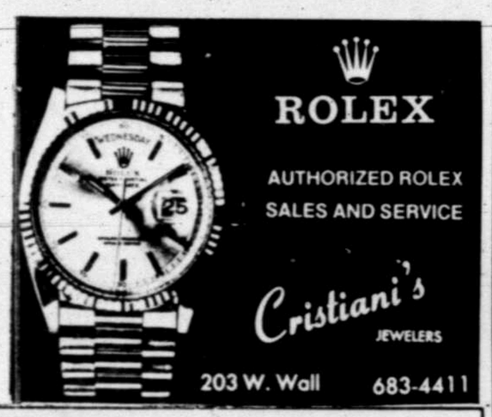

Knepper gave up a single to Darrell Porter to open the second, but was erased in a double play.

Mets win

PHILADELPHIA—Bob Bailor drove in three runs with a pair of doubles and single and scored twice himself as the New York Mets beat Philadelphia, 7-2, before 15,345 fans. It was the eighth straight opening-game win for the Mets.

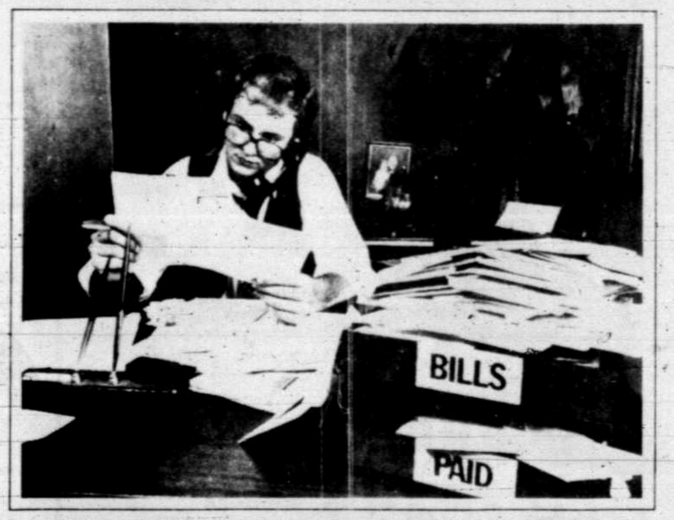

Twins triumph

MINNEAPOLIS—Minnesota third baseman Gary Gaetti hit his third homer of the season to drive in two runs as Minnesota beat Seattle, 4-1.

There are two things few of us have enough of... Time and Money.

Check Club helps you make better use of both.

Check Club saves you time. By giving you checking at the same place you have your savings account.

And Check Club saves you money. By paying you 5¼% interest on your deposits. That means every penny in your Check Club account is working for you.

With a Check Club account you'll get personalized checks, withdrawal slips and a monthly statement of your transactions. Just like a regular checking account.

Putting your money in a Check Club account means you get benefits too. Like $100,000 in accidental death insurance for all your travel on scheduled airlines and other public transportation.

Plus you'll receive a special magazine with articles and discounts on travel, entertainment, and a whole range of services nationally—and some right here in our area! And you'll be eligible to use Quickcash—our national system of emergency cash advances.

Stop by and let us give you a Check Club membership card. You get the convenience of a checking account—the interest rate of a savings account—and the benefits of a package. Check Club brings it all together!

Stueckler returns to coaching roots

Paul Stueckler, Midland Lee's head basketball coach for the past 21 years, is returning to his coaching roots April 28 when he will be the special guest of a reunion in Presidio.

It was in Presidio where Stueckler started his coaching career in 1954 at the age of 21 and his 1954-55 squad at Presidio also gave him his first district championship during a 33-7 campaign. Since then over 570 victories have come Stueckler's way, most of them at Lee where he has been the only head basketball coach the school has ever had.

"I'm really looking forward to seeing all the players I had on that first team. I remember all the names on that team, but I don't know how much they have changed over the years. It will be an interesting experience for me and I'm really looking forward to it," Stueckler said.

"I also remember that Rankin kept us out of the state tournament in 1955 when they beat us in overtime in the regionals. And I also remember that Rankin's Bobby Trower scored 28 points against us in that game.

"I don't know how the people in Presidio feel about me coming back, but I know it's big deal to me. I was just a 21-year-old kid when I was there and that team will always have a special place in my heart," noted Stueckler. "It was my first coaching job and you always remember that."

Crane wins 6-3A tennis

CRANE — Crane High School, led by a strong doubles contingent, won the District 6-3A tennis meet here Wednesday, outpointing Seminole 60-50. Denver City finished third with 40 points.

The Crane girls swept the top two places in their doubles competition as Tobi Ash and Kara Kirby defeated teamates Julie Hughes and Gayla Hatfield 6-3, 6-2 in the finals.

Crane also won the boys doubles title with Robert Cadena and Mike Ureta beating Seminole's David Langford and Kyle Burns 5-7, 7-6, 6-1.

The Denver City boys won the top two places in their singles category as Darrell Hillard defeated Ceasar Beltran 3-6, 7-6, 6-3.

The girls singles title was also a sweep, this time for Seminole, as Rochelle Cox defeated Nickie Newman 6-1, 6-4 in the finals.

The top two finishers in each division will advance to the District 3-A Regional Meet in Lubbock. The girls will play their regionals April 23-24 with the boys scheduled for May 3-4.

Lee JV beats Permian, 5-2

Midland Lee's Junior Varsity raised its record to 10-2-1 with a 5-2 win over Odessa Permian's JV as Kerry Robertson, coming in in relief, pitched five innings of two-hit ball, fanning five and walking one to raise his record to 4-1.

Darren Webb went 2-for-3 and knocked in two runs while Steve Nichols had two rbi with a single in two trips. However, Sergio Ochoa upped his average to .464 with a 1-for-2 day.

Lee hosts Midland High JV at 4 p.m. Wesdnesday in its next home game.

Murhpy will go with a starting rotation of Doug Welenc, King, Gil, Spino and Perlman. Jon was assigned to Midland so late he didn't arrive in the Tall City until after the rest of the club, the bullpen will have Thompson, Jim Gerlock (rookie from Quad Cities who will be the short relief man), Tom Smith, Henry Pryce and Clark.

In addition to Cotto, outfielder Mike Kelley and infielder Bruce Chaney are newcomers to Midland.

Midland's home opener is scheduled for Wednesday against El Paso after the five-game series in the Mission City.

Chris wins over Smith

HILTON HEAD, S.C. (AP) — Rain washed out half the third round of play in the Family Circle Cup women's tennis tournament Thursday, forcing several seeded players into playing two matches Friday.

Top-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd was one of the few top players in action Thursday. She reached the quarterfinals, beating Paula Smith 6-1, 6-0.

Fifth-seeded Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia and fourth-seeded Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia also moved ahead. Jausovec was a 6-3, 6-4 winner over Pam Casalz, while Mandlikova posted a 6-2, 6-2 victory over 14th-seeded Betsy Nagelsen.

Bobcats wreck Permian hopes of sharing lead

ODESSA — The San Angelo Bobcats ended Odessa Permian's hopes of sharing the first half District 5-5A title Thursday when they bombarded the Panthers with hits and runs enroute to an 18-3 victory.

Early on, the game had the makings of a low-scoring pitching defensive affair. After four innings of play, San Angelo led 2-1 and then exploded in the top of the fifth for 11 runs. To make matters worse for the Panthers, the Bobcats added five more in the top of the six before being closed out in the seventh.

Trailing 18-1, Mojo could manage only two runs in the bottom of the seventh to end up losing by the 18-3 count.

Zeke Baron went the distance for the San Angelo victory while Craig Steen suffered the loss. Bruce Hollander pitched relief in the fifth inning and Tommy Tyler came in in the sixth.

At the plate, the Bobcats picked up 18 hits with Kel Crain leading the way with a solo home run in the third inning and a triple while David Holland connected for a grand slam homer in the fifth.

Kentucky Derby labeled as just another horse race

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

There are better horse races than the Kentucky Derby. There are better golf tournaments than the U.S. Open, better ball games than the World Series, better football than either the Rose Bowl or the Super Bowl.

And diamonds don't sparkle, gold isn't precious, sharks don't bite, and Rockefeller ain't rich. And Bob's your uncle.

Badmouthing the Kentucky Derby reminds me of the time the young reporter of Gene Fowler's acquaintance brought an indignant story to the editor about the rampant necking and romancing on the high school grounds after dark. "Son," the editor told him, "you can rail against it, you can legislate against you, you can boycott it — but you ain't ever going to make it unpopular with the masses."

Horse trainers gnash their teeth over the popularity of the Kentucky Derby, the way a fundamentalist preacher might at necking in the choir loft. It is the conceit of the horse set that the public cares about the Sysonby Stakes, the Withers Stakes, the John B. Campbell Handicap, or even the Widener, Woodward or even the ever-lovin' Eclipse Awards themselves. They think that they can tell one "San something-or-other" Stakes" at Santa Anita from another. They don't. And they can't.

IF YOU DON'T sing at the Met, you're not an opera singer in the American public's eye. You can't be a champ till you fight in the Garden. It's not the substance that counts, it's the image. And the race that counts is that one Saturday afternoon the first week in May in Kentucky. The others are just a complicated lottery.

The latest to inveigh against the Kentucky Derby ("It's the wrong race at the wrong place at the wrong time of the year) is the veteran horseman, Johnny Nerud. Nerud has just produced (but not trained) the top 3-year-old colt, and thus Derby candidate, in the West, a homely animal who would be called "Freckles" if he were a human. Muttering had just won the Santa Anita Derby, a race which has sent six winners to the winner's circle at Kentucky, and the press, after the race, naturally wanted to know if Muttering might try to be the seventh.

Nerud acted as if they wanted him to send the colt out into a life of sin, a crooked crap game, a career on the lam. You would have thought the Kentucky Derby should be outlawed or tabbed a health hazard by the surgeon general.

"THERE'S A lot of prestigious races," lectured Nerud. "I notice John Henry made Horse-of-the-Year last year when he did a sportsman-like thing. He went back East and ran a race there. But he didn't have to win a Kentucky Derby.

"The Derby's forgotten by fall. It's you gentlemen who make the public think it's the only horse race of the year. It's the only time of the year racing gets the coverage all racing deserves. And should get. But the public consciousness of horse race people is a bunch of guys in cheap jackets who would steal from their mothers and who cheat each other and the public. That's not racing, that's fiction.

"The Derby isn't ALL there is to racing. It's a shell. They roll the track to make it fast, and they make it cuppy. A Derby horse not only has to be fast but has to have a strong mind. The newsreels, and the newsmen, and the TV cameras come around at all hours in Kentucky, and if you don't open the doors and let them in, they're insulted. Good horses are like good quarterbacks. Lots of guys have the physical ability, but they can't play quarterback because they can't stand the pressure, the outside pressure, not the game pressure."

DOES THAT mean Horseman Nerud will go back and try to make do now with the Travers Stakes, the Coaching Club American Oaks or some other of those graduate fox hunts? The question left John Nerud muttering, to coin a phrase.

But, it's important to realize John Nerud entered only one horse in the Kentucky Derby in his entire career. Gallant Man (owned by Ralph Lowe, Midland, Texas) in 1957 was the best horse in a blue-ribbon field that included Bold Ruler, Round Table, Iron Liege and Federal Hill. He had the race won when his rider, Bill Shoemaker, misjudged the finish.

Yanks conduct West Point drill

The American League champions had to reschedule Opening Day twice after the first snow-out in the club's history forced postponement of Tuesday's game with the Texas Rangers. Tuesday's snowstorm also forced postponement of Thursday's game with Texas and a Friday night game against the Chicago White Sox.

The Yankees are now set to open Saturday against the White Sox, with a doubleheader scheduled for Sunday.

The Yankees, after joining the Cadets for lunch in the mess hall, took batting practice for the first time since Monday. They also did running and calisthenics. Pitchers worked off portable wooden mounds, using towels for home plate in some instances.

Clyde King, a Yankees' scout, suggested the bus trip to West Point.

"When I was with the Dodgers in '45," he said, "we couldn't go South for spring training because of the War. You couldn't go below the Mason-Dixon Line.

"We trained at Bear Mountain (a few miles from West Point) and when the weather was real bad, we'd come up here to take batting practice and infield practice. That's what made me think of it."

Manager Bob Lemon liked the idea so much he planned to bring the team back here for another workout Friday on the field house's artificial surface.

"I think they got some good out of it," Lemon said. "They got some live hitting and the pitchers got to throw all they wanted."

Lemon felt the hitters would be hurt more by the delay than the pitchers, but said: "I don't worry about things I have no control over. I don't think worrying will do any good."

The wait has been particularly tiresome for some of the players because the Yankees reported to spring training in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Feb.10, two weeks ahead of the other major league clubs.

"We were ready a while ago," said shortstop Bucky Dent. "You won't lose everything, but it might take one or two games to get it back."

Battle scene

And where's Bobby Doerr? There's no doubt among Red Sox fans that he was far superior to Joe Gordon. Yankee fans? They are all biased, unreasonable and overbearing.

Of modern day players, in addition to the neglected Killebrew and controversial Marichal, what about Maury Wills. Regardless of his abilities as a manager, his impact on the game along should qualify him.

Impact? Well, we hate to use one of our other candidates as an example, but Hack's league-leading base-stealing totals in were 16 and 17 in 1938 and 1939. Wills would go into a depression if he didn't get more than that in a month.

JOHNNY VANDER Meer pitched back-to-back no-hitters in the 1930s and how can they continue to ignore Arky Vaughan, a Pittsburgh Pirate shortstop who was a .318 lifetime hitter and the NL's MVP after hitting .385 in 1935.

Of course, there are others. Hal Schumacher, the Giants' other pitcher back in the days of Carl Hubbell, and what about all those Newark Bears, Buddy Rosar, Bud Metheny, Tommy Holmes, Pinky May, Ed Levy, Tommy Byrne, who languished in the International League waiting for Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, Babe Ruth, Red Rolfe, Red Ruffing and the rest to show some signs of age?

"Coming out of left field? Hey, wait a minute, don't hang up. I'm not finished yet.

China warned about Rubik

PEKING (AP) — Rubik's Cube, the colorful brain-teaser that has started to captivate the Chinese, is being criticized by a Peking newspaper as a dangerous pastime that can lead to divorce, abnormal behavior, high blood pressure and aching fingers.

"The Magic Cube possibly is beneficial to sharpening intelligence, but don't forget that its side effects might bring danger," the Peking Evening News said, using the puzzle's Chinese name.

Last November, the Chinese press reported people were standing in line to buy the cube in Shanghai, and that city already had held its first Magic Cube contest, although the toy had hit the market only a few months earlier.

The only case of harm reported so far in China has been a baker letting his bread burn while he tried to solve the puzzle, which challenges the user to find the right combination of complex moves that produce a solid color on each side, the Evening News said Wednesday.

But in various countries, the Peking daily said, "a new Magic Cube disease has appeared and is beginning to torment people."

Some people become irritable after failing repeatedly to solve the cube, the paper said. Some suffer from insomnia and the blood pressure of many tends to rise, it said.

The paper told of a British mayor with tendonitis of the thumb from long periods of manipulating the cube. A West German woman who gave her husband a cube for Christmas ended up divorcing him because he ignored her while working on the puzzle day and night, the newspaper said.

Contaminated yogurt taken from shelves

HONOLULU (AP) — One of Oahu's two dairy processors has pulled some yogurt off supermarket shelves because it contained unacceptably high levels of a pineapple pesticide.

Meadow Gold Dairies-Hawaii removed yogurt dated April 24 because of unacceptably high levels of heptachlor, which previously has been found in cow's milk, ice cream and some mother's milk. The pesticide, which is sprayed on pineapples to control ants, is suspected of causing cancer and apparently got into the food chain because leaves that had been too-recently sprayed with it were fed to dairy cattle.

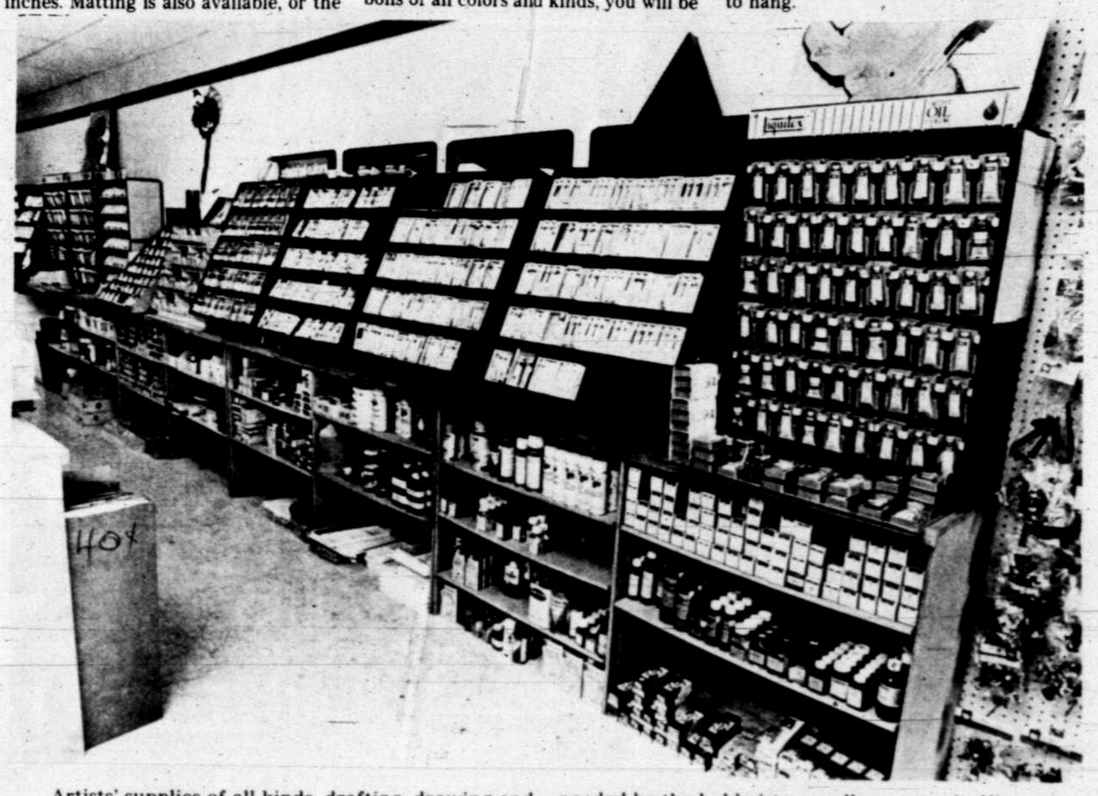

Whether painting or jewelry-making, get supplies at House of Arts & Crafts

Bill Juren has a new shipment of frames at the House of Arts & Crafts, 3327-G W. Wadley, in La Villita.

Choose from triple or single oval frames (up to 11 inches by 14 inches); square frames in both ornately carved and tailored styles; or the rectangular frame in sizes up to 24 inches by 36 inches. Matting is also available, or the House of Arts & Crafts can arrange to have your picture or object framed for you.

Also new are the popular Strawberry Shortcake ribbons, barrettes and barrette-ribbons in all widths. The House of Arts & Crafts has such beautiful ribbons of all colors and kinds, you will be sure to find what you want among them.

New, too, are the California Redwood Frames for branded letters and numbers. These are distinctive, durable and personalized. The frames come in sizes to hold from three to 14 characters, double-faced if desired, and are ready to hang.

Artists' supplies of all kinds, drafting, drawing and calligraphy tools are available at the House of Arts & Crafts in La Villita Shopping Center. Everything needed by the hobbyist, as well as general office supplies, can now be found in one convenient location.

Sick of dirty water? Try Home Spa purifier

Tony Rogers of Acme Marketing, 3103 E. 31st St. in Odessa, offers the Home Spa water purifier, Willard Wonder Water, Meadow Fresh Cocoa Mix, Low Fat Dry Melloream, and DMSO (dimethyl sulfoxide). Contact Tony at 367-6977 for more information or home delivery.

Acme Marketing at 3103 E. 31st St. in Odessa has over 3,000 satisfied users of the incredible Home Spa water purifier. It is one of the most simple, economical and trouble-free water purifiers on the market today. No electrical or plumbing hook-up is needed.

The Home Spa dispenser, with the activated charcoal filter, not only removes bad odor and taste from city of well water, but also removes chlorine, sulphates, rust algae and other pollutants, giving you delicious drinking and cooking water for about 2 cents a gallon. House plants, pets and people all love and thrive on Home Spa water.

The unit retails for $24.95; replacement filters are $9.95 each (three for $24.95). Each filter is good for purifying approximately 500 gallons, depending on pollutants in your area.

Acme Marketing has filters for automatic ice makers, drinking fountains, ice machines and coffee machines. The filters will keep machines from clogging up, saving huge plumbing bills.

DMSO (dimethyl sulfoxide), 99.9 percent undiluted, 99.9 percent pure, is available at Acme Marketing. It can be delivered locally and mailed anywhere in the nation for an extra charge.

New products carried by Acme Marketing are Willard Wonder Water, Meadow Fresh Cocoa Mix (which tastes much better than chocolate milk) and Meadow Fresh Low Fat Dry Melloream (which tastes much better than milk). The latter two have shelf lives of at least five years. Families can save over $1 a gallon on their milk bills with these products. Samples can be obtained by calling Tony Rogers at 367-6977.

This artist's rendition shows a planned 1.3 million square foot office building which would complete the Federal Triangle in Washington, D.C. The complex of federal offices would be situated between the White House and Capitol. Construction would cost an estimated $350 million. The building would include historical exhibits for tourists.

Board may expand artificial heart category

By BOB KUESTERMAN

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The University of Utah body that rules on human experimentation has approved expanding the category of patients eligible to receive an artificial heart.

The Institutional Review Board voted 12-3 Thursday to approve in principle the expansion, but it asked a subcommittee to determine which new categories should be included — a process the chairman said would take weeks.

The attorney for a dying Florida man seeking to become the first recipient of the device, developed by the university, said the action "effectively kills Dale Lott. It certainly is the last nail in his coffin."

The board, after a two-hour closed meeting, agreed the categories should be expanded to include patients other than those with operable heart conditions, said John Dwan, University of Utah Medical Center spokesman.

But it referred the guidelines and the patients' informed-consent form to a subcommittee for technical revision and definition of the categories.

Dr. Ross Woolley, chairman of the subcommittee, said the process will take "weeks." The subcommittee must then return to the full board for approval of both forms. The protocol then goes to the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for approval.

Under the guidelines approved by the FDA last Septemmber, the device could be implanted only in heart-surgery patients whose hearts cannot be restarted when they are taken off bypass. Such patients now die. There are 3,000 to 5,000 of them each year.

The patient would have to agree to the procedure 24 hours in advance. The recipient of the artificial heart will be tethered by six-foot hoses to the air compressor that drives the device.

No suitable candidates have been found since the guidelines were approved.

Dr. William C. DeVries, head of cardiothoracic surgery at the university and the surgeon who will perform the implants, on March 23 requested the board expand the category to include patients suffering from cardiomyopathy — an inoperable disease of the heart muscle.

There are 8,000 to 10,000 such patients, including Lott, the former Homestead, Fla., fire dispatcher who has fought to become the first recipient.

Dwan said it will be up to the subcommittee and the board to decide whether cardiomyopathic patients will be eligible.

He has said that, even if the category does include such patients, it will be up to DeVries and an implantation committee consisting of a pyschiatrist, social worker, cardiologist and a representative of the IRB, to determine whether Lott would be a suitable candidate.

Other doctors have said that Lott, who suffers from diabetes and pulmonary hypertension, would not be a good candidate.

Dr. Ernst J. Eichwald, review board chairman, has said Lott's chances of surviving surgery were "so shaky, so unlikely" that his life would probably be shortened.

Dr. Chase Peterson, university vice president for health sciences, has said the conditions that resulted in Lott being turned down for a heart transplant also made him a poor candidate for the artificial heart.

Ellis Rubin, the Miami attorney for the 38-year-old Florida man, said, "While committees and subcommittees cross t's and dot i's, Dale Lott comes closer to his maker."

He said he would confer with co-counsel in Salt Lake to see if there were anything that could be done, but, "There's really not much we can do except pray.

"We prayed that these men today in their infinite wisdom would do the right thing. When told of the board's action, Lott authorized me to say that he expected this to happen and Utah did not disappoint him," Rubin said.

The noted Texas heart surgeon Dr. Denton Cooley has twice implanted artificial hearts — not the Utah model — in patients waiting for transplants. Both patients later received human hearts and died.

Japanese may curb computer chip exports

By ROBERT FURLOW

WASHINGTON (AP) — Commerce Department officials said Thursday that Japanese producers are volunteering to restrain exports of tiny computer chips that have made deep inroads in the American market.

Heavy exports of the semiconductor chips have drawn complaints from U.S. manufacturers and raised questions about the effects on national security, because the chips are basic to much new computer technology.

Mary Nimmo, the Commerce Department's director of public affairs, furnished few details but said officials understood the Japanese are moving to restrain their exports of the chips.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige had been quoted in a published report as saying Wednesday he would not rule out any future U.S. moves in regard to the chips, despite the Japanese curb on exports.

"We're not in any position to say we've solved the 64K chip problem," Ms. Nimmo said.

The silicon semiconductors are known as 64K random-access memory chips — or 64K RAM — and are used in a wide variety of small computers. The "64K" designation means that a single, tiny chip can hold 64,000 bits of computer information.

A number of U.S. companies manufacture similar products but they have been badly hurt in American sales by high-quality, relatively low-cost versions from Japan.

National security worries come into play, Ms. Nimmo said, because of the possibility that Japanese domination of the industry might lead to diminished capability in the United States, leading to severe problems if the supply from Japan is cut off.

The Japanese were widely reported recently to be expanding their production of computer chips, and U.S. manufacturers brought their fears of new exports to Washington.

They have complained, as have U.S. producers of steel and other products, that the Japanese may be "dumping" chips in the United States at low cost to gain an unfair competitive advantage. They also complain the Japanese do not give U.S. producers equal access to their markets.

Such complaints have led to congressional calls for action, through legislation, if necessary, to guarantee equal access under the banner of "reciprocity."

The Japanese, trying to slow that drive, have made previous voluntary changes in export policies. Ms. Nimmo said the 64K RAM chip seemed to be part of that overall strategy.

"It's part of the same game back and forth," she said. "But we welcome any movement."

More canned salmon recalls announced

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government Thursday expanded its recall of Alaskan salmon to cover eight packing plants and more than 50 million cans that may be contaminated by a deadly botulism toxin.

"That begins to challenge the largest multiple recall we have had in FDA history — which was the mushroom recall of the 1970s," said Wayne Pines, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration.

A Belgian man died in February after eating contaminated Alaskan salmon.

The recall is of salmon in 7¾-ounce cans sold under a variety of brand names. The recalled cans are identifiable only by the codes on their ends.

The Food and Drug Administration said consumers should return the cans to the place of purchase and refrain from opening them or eating their contents.

The FDA believes a machine which shapes the cans may have torn some of their edges, leaving holes or other defects in the seams when the ends were attached. The openings can permit the formation of botulinum, a toxin that can cause the often-fatal disease botulism.

Now you can smell like your

CHICAGO (AP) — Homesick? Maybe a little dab of urban perfume from your hometown will cure it.

Jan Baxter makes and markets smells of the city — fragrances for women aimed at reflecting the best of Michigan or Memphis or Mackinac Island.

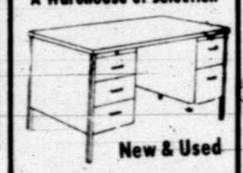

"Every city has awful smells, but I try to capture the positive smell — and that's always a nice one, a romantic, sensuous one," she said Thursday.

"Makes Scents," begun 2½ years ago, is beginning to catch on, the 40-year-old Ms. Baxter said. She claims that she's now selling about 1,000 bottles a week nationwide of urban "essences."

She hopes a new creation, "Essence of Niagara Falls, Canadian Side," will stir a demand for "Essence of Niagara Falls, United States Side." The Canadian scent is woodsy, she said.

Margie Johnson, a distributor of the fragrances in Rochester, N.Y., said that city's essence was easy to come by: "The Chamber of Commerce bills Rochester as the 'Lilac Capital of The World.'"

To Our Customers, The Used Car They Buy Is A New Car.

In many cases, a family budget just won't stetch to include a brand new car. And this is where a quality used car makes good sense.

FRANK SEE

As far as we are concerned, that used car is really a new car to the family that buys it.

And we take extra care to make sure our used car customers enjoy every bit as much satisfaction and pride as our new car customers.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 12 3/4% for 30% loan to value. Interest will be charged at the most recent six month Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5% rounded to the highest 1/4 of 1%, but not to exceed the maximum rate allowed by law. Payments on CAP loans may be graduated so as to increase 7 1/2% each year for the remaining four years. At the end of the first five years, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be made if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment rate will be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 13.25% ON 90% LOANS.

WILD RIVER CANYON IS FOR SALE

Bids are being sought for over 14 acres of C-3 zoned land, appraised at over $2,000,000, located near the southeast corner of Andrews Highway and Loop 250 and which contains Wild River Canyon theme park. Approximately 10 building are included in the sale, along with numerous water structures. Personal property and equipment are not included unless bids specifically state.

The property is ideal for continued use as a theme park, or for conversion to apartments, condominiums, townhouses or office and commercial use.

Plans are available for conversion of the park land and adjacent 30 acres, also zoned C-3 into an office complex. In addition the numerous landscaping improvements, waterways, and existing buildings make the site ideal for an architecturally pleasing apartment, condominium or townhouse development.

Separate bids are being solicited for personal property and equipment, arcade equipment, architecutural specialties and ride equipment. Minimum bid on any grouping of these items is $5000. Items will not be sold on a piecemeal basis.

Bids and inquries from serious parties may be directed to:

BETNE, INC.
P.O. Box 8529
Midland, Texas 79703
Telephone 697-2352

Plats, plans and appraisal are available at 5025 W. Princeton, Suite 4. Owners reserve the right to accept or reject any bids.
