Clements will call session on school finance system

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements pledged to call lawmakers back into session next spring to consider school finance, as fallout from Monday's Supreme Court decision on Edgewood vs. Kirby rattled through Capital corridors and into representative districts.

The high court in a 9-0 decision upheld a lower court ruling that the state's method of financing public schools is unconstitutional and gave the Legislature until May 1, 1990, to fashion an alternative.

The opinion, written by Justice Oscar Mauzy, stated in part that property poor districts "are trapped in a cycle of poverty from which there is no opportunity to free themselves.

"Because of their inadequate tax base, they must tax at significantly higher rates ... yet their educational programs are typically inferior," Mauzy wrote.

The opinion, which some say is historic, is based on Article VII, Section 1 of the Texas Constitution, which calls for "efficiency" in school financing.

"In mandating 'efficiency,' the constitutional framers and ratifiers did not intend a system with such vast disparities as now exist," the opinion said.

Thirteen low-wealth school districts, including the Edgewood Independent School District near San Antonio, filed suit on the issue in 1984 against Education Commissioner William Kirby and other state officials.

Represented by the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund, the plaintiffs eventually were joined by 55 other poor districts as the case proceeded from Travis County district court to the Third Court of Appeals in Austin and finally to the state Supreme Court.

Midland's representatives in the Texas House and Senate were quick to condemn the ruling. Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, called it "regretable" and a threat to local control by elected school boards.

MISD both optimistic, concerned

By BRIAN PEARSON

A Texas Supreme Court's ruling will at least prod the state to use more than a financial Band-Aid to repair the Texas public school funding system, Midland Independent School District Superintendent Joe Baressi said today.

"I see the decision as an opportunity," Baressi said of the ruling Monday which declared the system unconstitutional. "It's an opportunity for state leadership to consider bold changes in this state to lead education into the 21st century.

"I don't think there was any question that there was a lack of equity."

The nine-member court did not specify a solution and told the Legislature to design a more equitable plan by May 1, 1990. Gov. Bill Clements said he will call a spring session for the Legislature to consider proposals to fix the system.

However, Baressi said he fears lawmakers could take steps which would cost school districts their taxing autonomy.

Solutions such as taking from rich districts to give to poor ones or district consolidation could negatively affect Texas education, he said. The Legislature also could set a cap on a district's tax rate.

None of those proposals, he said, would rectify the problem.

"It's really a situation where we have a lot of uncertainty, but I feel reasonably certain that it's not going to have a negative impact on Midland," Baressi said. "Given our current status, we might get a modest increase in state funding. I see us being affected very little."

MISD's taxable wealth per student was above state average in 1984, when a group of tax-poor school districts, including Edgewood Independent School District, challenged the funding system. By January 1987, 67 school districts had joined the suit.

Superintendent Gene Buinger of Ector County Independent School District applauded Monday's decision.

Closing arguments begin in Bakker fraud trial

Jim Bakker leaves the courtroom with his daughter, Tammy Sue Chapman, foreground, and son, Jamie Bakker.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Jim Bakker may have begun at PTL as a "man of good deeds" but soon became a "world-class master" of half truths to obtain power and wealth, a prosecutor said today at the evangelist's fraud trial.

"What has unfolded before you the last month is a tale of corruption — immense corruption," prosecutor Deborah Smith said during closing arguments.

Bakker scribbled notes on a yellow legal pad and occasionally glanced at Ms. Smith.

"There may have been a time when Mr. Bakker was a man of good deeds back in the 1970s, but as time progressed into the 1980s, he began to use people to obtain possessions and power and keep it," she said.

Bakker's lawyer was to deliver his closing argument later in the day. Jury deliberations in the federal court trial were expected to begin as early as Wednesday.

Ms. Smith described Bakker as a "world-class master of using half truths. He lied to people, he used half truths to manipulate people. He used his position to maintain his power and wealth."

Bakker completed his testimony Monday by accusing the Rev. Jerry Falwell of cheating PTL followers and by conceding he and his wife accepted millions in bonuses as the ministry's finances foundered.

"The real conspiracy to defraud came from that group of people who took over the ministry for their own selfish gains," said Bakker, who invited Falwell to take over the ministry when he resigned in 1987 in a sex and money scandal.

Bakker also denied the prosecutor's assertion that he failed to tell PTL board members about the ministry's money problems.

"I don't know how the board members could not be aware of the financial crisis at Heritage USA," he testified. "They knew we had cash flow problems and they voted to borrow funds to pay for them."

Bakker, 49, is charged with 24 counts of fraud and conspiracy. He is accused of diverting more than $3.7 million in PTL money for his own benefit.

If convicted on all counts, he could be sentenced to 120 years in prison and fined more than $5 million.

Midlanders sharing with storm victims

By JULIE HILLRICHS

An outpouring of local support for victims of Hurricane Hugo has prompted the Salvation Army of Midland to begin a collective effort to ship money and clothing off to Charleston, S.C.

The generosity toward storm victims has brought a backlog of donated clothing, including a truckload in Odessa, Maj. Milton Wood of the Salvation Army said.

The clothing will be shipped via truck to Dallas on Oct. 10. From there, it will be sent to Salvation Army aid stations in Charleston.

Wood urged Midlanders who want to donate clothing to send only those items that are in good condition.

"Even though these people have lost everything, they don't want stuff they can't use," he said.

In addition, the local agency won't accept canned food and furniture because "it's impossible to ship," Wood said.

A total of 14 Salvation Army canteens stocked with food and other household items are stationed in South Carolina, North Carolina and Georgia.

Volunteers are working 12-hour shifts in an attempt to feed those who remain homeless, Wood said.

The local relief effort is being conducted on a much smaller scale than the one initiated last September when Hurricane Gilbert ravaged parts of the Texas Gulf Coast, Wood said.

During that storm, two Salvation Army volunteer units were dispatched to Brownsville and parts of Mexico, including the resort town of Cancun.

Salinas pledges cooperation in drug fight, trade progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari opened an official visit today and joined President Bush in promising expanded cooperation in combating cross-border drug smuggling.

With Bush standing at his side during a White House welcoming ceremony, Salinas declared that the two countries, working together, "can strike lethal blows against drug trafficking to free the world from that international scourge."

In a similar vein, Bush said the United States and Mexico "must continue to strengthen our assault on the plague of drug use and trafficking. For we know that what threatens one nation in our hemisphere threatens us all."

Bush said relations between the two countries have progressed since Salinas took office last December, citing advances in such areas as debt, trade, investment and the environment.

He also said the two countries must cooperate in efforts to bring about democracy in Panama and free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

Noriega ousted, Panamanian radio reports indicate

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, who controlled Panama and defied U.S. efforts to oust him for two years, was toppled in a coup today, according to a Panamanian Defense Forces communique read on national radio.

The announcement came after shots were fired outside the Defense Forces headquarters.

U.S. troops in combat gear took up positions only 600 yards from the barracks, which is in downtown Panama City near the canal. The U.S. Southern Command has installations at Fort Amador and Quarry Heights, less than a mile from the barracks. The Pentagon said no U.S. troops were involved in shooting.

The shooting appeared to be between factions of the Panamanian military. There was no confirmation of casualties, but neighbors of the headquarters in Panama City told The Associated Press there were dead and wounded. A press spokesman at the headquarters said he had no information on the shooting.

The announcement read at about 11:30 a.m. said that the entire high command had been forced into retirement by middle-ranking officers led by Maj. Moises Giraldi Vega, head of the Urraca battalion that is in charge of security at Defense Forces headquarters.

The communique was signed by Giraldi, Capt. Javier Licona of the cavalry and Capt. Jesus George Baima of the special forces.

The communique did not say what happened to Noriega, and his whereabouts were unknown.

The U.S. Southern Command put its troops and civilians on Delta Alert, its highest level of readiness.

In Washington, the Pentagon said gunfire had been heard by forces at the Southern Command and Americans were told to avoid dangerous areas.

At the White House, presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater reported "a great deal of confusion" in Panama City and said, "at the moment, we're watching and waiting to see what happens.

"There is no word of American casualties," Fitzwater said. "Our forces are alerted to what's going on."

There are about 12,000 U.S. troops stationed in Panama, many of them within five miles of Panama City. All U.S. civilian dependents were moved onto U.S. military installations as of July 1 in the wake of violence that followed Panamanian elections held on May 7.

Noriega, Panama's de facto leader, inherited command of the military from Gen. Omar Torrijos, who seized power in 1968 and died in a plane crash in 1981.

Noriega is under indictment for drug trafficking in the United States, which says he is a key connection for Colombia's cocaine cartels. The United States has been trying to oust him.

Efforts by the United States to remove him, including economic sanctions against Panama, have failed.

The last coup attempt was in March 1988. Panama's political crisis was aggravated when the government claimed its candidate Carlos Duque of the National Liberation Coalition won the presidential election May 7, 1988.

Opposition groups and foreign observers said there was widespread fraud in the election and their candidate, Guillermo Endara of the Democratic Civilian Alliance, had won by a 3-1 margin. As the crisis grew, a government-controlled election board annulled the election.

Four inches of snow covered parts of the northern Rockies early today and Minneapolis got its first frost of the year.

Light snow fell across parts of Idaho late Monday, coating the Island Park area and the mountains on the Montana border. Gusty north winds were sweeping the central mountains of Idaho this morning, with sharply reduced visibility in some areas and up to 4 inches of snow.

A snow advisory was in effect early today for the southern mountains and passes of Montana where 2 to 6 inches were possible at elevations above 5,000 feet.

High winds buffeted parts of Nevada and Arizona, with gusts reaching 43 mph at Kingman, Ariz.

Temperatures dipped below freezing in southeastern Nebraska and the Minneapolis-St. Paul area, the only part of Minnesota that had yet to get frost.

In Miami, meanwhile, temperatures soared to 94 on Sunday, topping a nine-year-old record high for the date, and Waco, Texas had a record 101 degrees.

Zsa Zsa Gabor's back in court with suit over cracked driveway

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Zsa Zsa Gabor, convicted last week for slapping a police officer, has filed suit against a neighbor, claiming roots from his trees cracked her driveway.

The Hungarian-born actress filed the lawsuit Monday in the Los Angeles County Superior Court.

She said she was forced to remove dried and overgrown brush extending from the yard of Austin Young onto her property and to install sprinklers and new plants at her own expense after Young failed to clear the property.

The lawsuit seeks at least $47,000 in damages and a court order requiring Young to better maintain his yard.

Young wrote in a June 1988 letter to Miss Gabor that he was willing to arrange and pay for the driveway's repaving, but couldn't reach her by telephone to discuss the work.

On Friday, a Beverly Hills Municipal Court jury convicted Miss Gabor of misdemeanor battery on an officer, driving with an expired license and with an open container of alcohol in her Rolls Royce Corniche.

The charges stem from a traffic stop in which the actress slapped Officer Paul Kramer.

She could be sentenced to 18 months in jail. Sentencing is scheduled for Oct. 17.

Gramm presses for livestock changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm says the president of Mexico has promised to look into restrictive trade regulations that have caused bottlenecks and added expense for Texas producers trying to ship sheep, cattle, goats and hogs across the southern border.

Gramm, a Texas Republican who met for 30 minutes Monday with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, said Salinas was unaware of the unprecedented restrictions, which have cost sheep producers over $1 million.

Gramm said Salinas and his minister of commerce "committed to try to straighten the whole thing out, and I have no doubt they will."

At his meeting with Salinas, Gramm said he explained:

"No. 1, that it was an irritant to the country but it was a big issue to my livestock producers. That it's easy to use food safety and animal inspection as an excuse for protectionism. That he needs to realize that's a game our producers in this country can play and can be a lot more effective at."

In a letter last week to President Bush, Gramm and Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., Salinas said Mexico was demanding that all livestock moving into that country be reinspected at and shipped from designated quarantine facilites in the United States.

While livestock from the United States has traditionally moved through more than 40 privately owned, commercial facilities in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California, under the new Mexican regulations there are only nine designated facilities, Gramm said.

Under the new rules, Gramm said, New Mexico has not received any designation of livestock facilities, while there are five in Texas, three in Arizona, and one in California.

"Due to this restriction in eligible facilities, we anticipate unnecessary and costly bottlenecks in exporting animals," the senators told Bush.

In Texas, they said, only facilities operated by the Texas Department of Agriculture have been approved by Mexico, and the cost per animal is five times greater than at the 15 to 20 commercial facilities along the 1,000-mile stretch of border, Gramm said.

Gramm said the TDA facilities operate only during normal business hours.

MEXICO

Salinas, speaking through a translator, said ways must be found to deal more humanely with the migration of Mexicans to the United States.

He also said the two countries must work toward a "new stage" in their trade relations.

Salinas is giving high priority to seeking trade concessions during his visit but a U.S. official, responding Monday to remarks Salinas made to reporters before leaving Mexico, disagreed with his contention that Mexico has difficulty penetrating American markets.

After the welcoming ceremony and a meeting with Bush, Salinas planned to attend a working lunch with Secretary of State James A. Baker III. A White House state dinner is scheduled for this evening.

The Bush administration has been highly complimentary of Salinas' performance during his first 10 months in office, praising his economic reform program and his efforts to crack down on drug-smuggling.

But trade appears to be one area where the two sides are far apart.

Salinas was reported to have complained during his meeting with reporters that it is inappropriate for the United States to criticize closed markets in Japan when the United States itself is guilty of protectionist practices.

"I think that reciprocity in commercial relations is fundamental," Salinas was reported to have said. "Isn't that what the United States is asking of Japan?"

A U.S. official, insisting on anonymity, contended the U.S. market is far more open than Japan's. Whereas the United States has a huge trade deficit with Japan, Mexico enjoys a $2.7 billion trade surplus with the United States on total two-way trade of $43.9 billion, the official said.

SCHOOL

"From the rural aspect, we're going to have to make sure we're protected," said Craddick, who feared that large city school districts would call for re-distribution of property taxes in their direction.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, said the court "unwisely made the wrong decision."

Should the Legislature attempt a redistribution of tax dollars, "that's one of the issues I might even filibuster," he said.

Clements, in announcing his intentions Monday, said he would appoint a special task force to hold public hearings and make recommendations to the Legislature. House Speaker Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby also will make task force appointments, he said.

"Any solution must be crafted with the input of parents, schools and communities — all of whom have so much at stake in this issue," said the governor.

Clements already has said he will call a session in November to overhaul the state's workers compensation system, a task lawmakers attempted unsuccessfully in regular and special sessions earlier this year.

However, the scheduling of an even later session on education finance prompted disagreement from a committee chairman who likely will be involved in whatever legislation results.

"We've studied education to death," said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and chairman of the Senate Education Committee. "I don't see any reason that we should not take it up in the November session."

Parker and Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice and chairman of the House Public Education Committee, were attending a national legislative education conference in Florida but took time out for a telephone interview.

Both spoke of a need to increase the amount of money districts are guaranteed by the state, with Ms. Glossbrenner saying the amount should "truly reflect the cost of what we require for an accredited school program."

Parker thought legislative tax committees should add their input to determine "how we can reform our tax structure — re-write the whole thing — and plug in enough to deliver educational equity."

To achieve equity, the state must find ways of raising "substantial amounts of money," said Ms. Glossbrenner, who stopped short of calling for the $5 billion that the Texas Education Agency said would be needed for equity late last year.

Still, "I think we're going to have to talk about several hundred million," she said. The state public education budget approved during the regular legislative session amounted to about $13 billion, including about $450 million specifically for education equity.

Parker said raising additional state money for education was "more doable" than redistributing money raised through property taxes from richer districts to poor ones.

Carolyn Crawford, vice-chairman of the state Board of Education, said she expects lawmakers to develop a system that concentrates on state financing mechanisms and leave local district taxes alone.

In that way, they will "bring everyone up as opposed to equalize downward," she said.

The problem "is kind of like the state prison system," she said. "There are some things you can't neglect for years and then expect to find an answer easily."

Ms. Glossbrenner acknowledged that whatever the Legislature devises, "it's going to be a political football."

Others lawmakers contacted Monday voiced a variety of sentiments on the issue and the timing of a session to consider it.

Rep. Ron Lewis, D-Mauriceville, said that if the governor schedules the session for after March 6 primary elections, he could save legislators who face opponants some grief.

Their votes — and whether they support new taxes — won't go on the record until after the election, he said.

"You're not going to find anybody who will vote for a state income tax," said Lewis, adding that "it's going to be real tricky between now and May 1."

Rep. Curtis Soileau, D-Lumberton, thought the political considerations should be of lesser importance.

"Anyone that is going to fill an office ought to address the issue," said Soileau, whose area of representation includes several poorer districts. Soileau hoped whatever solution is found allows the districts to reduce their property tax rates.

REACT

"Without a doubt public education in Texas will benefit from the Edgewood vs. Kirby case," Buinger said. "The need for equity is one of the crucial issues in all the public schools in all the states."

Kay Walling, Texas State Teachers Association Region 18 representative, said TSTA members are "thrilled" to finally see serious steps taken toward helping the poorer school districts.

"I think it's time the state realized that there was something wrong with the way it funded public education," Ms. Walling said. "The state needs to provide funding to bring everybody up to the same level of excellence."

Ms. Walling said TSTA representatives will lobby to have more money injected into poorer districts rather than taking funds away from rich districts.

"We're not in the Robin Hood mode," she said. "We don't want to rob from the rich to give to the poor. "The money is there. They're just going to have to choose to put it in education."

Larry Lusby, MISD executive director of computer and special services, said MISD became a slightly tax-poor school district in the 1988-89 school year. Almost any equalization plan probably would help MISD, Lusby said.

"From our analysis that we received back in the early summer, it would make a significant difference, whatever the plan is," he said. "But depending on what kind of formula they come up with, it could hurt.

"If they base it on school district wealth and tax rate, we're going to be in good shape."

MISD's wealth per student ranks near the bottom among 13 districts the Texas Education Agency clumps when comparing data of similar school districts. The districts have more than 10,000 average daily student attendance, above average tax values per student and less than 30 percent of students on free or reduced meal plans.

However, Lusby said MISD, with $199,000 in taxable wealth per student, probably fell below the state average for the 1988-89 school year, early estimates show.

District-by-district figures for 1988-89 were unavailable, but Lusby said he expects MISD to drop below the state average because the district's property values last year fell 7 percent. Meanwhile, statewide values fell only 1.5 percent.

"We also feel like we'll be below the state average this year (1989-90)," Lusby said.

MISD saw its value, set by the State Property Tax Board, drop by $1.7 billion, or 31 percent, between 1985 and 1989. The value fell from $5.4 billion to $3.8 billion.

The board's values, used in the formula to calculate a district's funding, differ from those set by county appraisal districts, which allow certain exemptions.

ECISD's value plunged 25 percent, or $1.5 billion, during the four years, going from $5.8 billion to $4.4 billion.

Meanwhile, MISD's lesser wealth has been spread even thinner because the district's average daily attendance grew from 17,414 in 1985-86 to 18,315 in 1988-89. ECISD's ADA fell from 24,231 to 23,679 during those years.

With $227,432 in wealth per student in the 1987-88 school year, MISD ranked second lowest in its TEA group, which also includes Round Rock, Alief, Katy and four suburban Dallas school districts. State average was $223,534 for Texas' 1,063 school districts in 1987-88.

Carrollton Independent School District ranked the highest, with $549,215 per student, while Garland Independent School District had the low spot, with $225,643 per student.

ECISD had $198,942 per student, while San Angelo, Lubbock, Abilene and Amarillo school districts had between $141,000 and $164,000.

Evidence presented during the Edgewood trial showed that Texas' poorest school district in 1985-86 had $20,000 in wealth per student, while the richest had $14 million.

Lusby said one concern among MISD and other small-city school districts is legislative competition from political big guns from Dallas, Houston, Fort Worth, Austin, San Antonio and Corpus Christi.

"We don't have the political clout that the Legislature members in those cities do," Lusby added.

HUGO

Hurricane Hugo slammed into South Carolina Sept. 21 with 135 mph winds, leaving at least 18 dead, 50,000 homeless, 270,000 jobless, and homes, businesses, schools and municipal buildings damaged or destroyed far inland and into North Carolina.

In all, Hugo killed 29 people on the U.S. mainland.

Damage in South Carolina alone has been estimated at $3 billion or more, with crop damage placed at $100 million, according to Associated Press reports.

BAKKER

Ms. Smith asked Bakker to explain apparent contradictions between his story and testimony and exhibits presented by the government, including former PTL board members who said they didn't remember voting on some of the large bonuses for Bakker and his wife.

Bakker said Falwell and his attorney, Norman Roy Grutman, had intimidated the directors.

"Norman Roy Grutman and Jerry Falwell threatened those board members that they would be in terrible danger," Bakker testified. Among the threats, Bakker said, was that the directors might be liable to a civil suit.

Bakker said he and his wife, Tammy Faye, accepted $3.1 million in bonuses in the mid-1980s as the ministry's finances ran into trouble. He said the bonuses amounted to less than 1 percent of the more than $425 million he raised for the ministry.

Asked by his lawyer what he did with the $425 million, Bakker replied, "I put it to the work of Jesus Christ."

Board members granted the bonuses "of their own free will," Bakker said, and often told him he was "worth much more than this, and they would say that over and over again."

Bakker, who began his testimony Friday, spent 10 hours on the witness stand. He was the last defense witness.

Under cross-examination on Friday, Bakker testified repeatedly that he didn't remember details of his ministry's finances.

During defense questioning Monday, Bakker summed up his case: "We were a church, and people always wanted to run it like a business. I had to keep telling them, this was a church, not a business."

House expected to vote repeal of catastrophic care plan

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — House leaders say the angry reaction of senior citizens toward the Medicare catastrophic illness plan will push Congress away from addressing the major health needs of the elderly, perhaps for years.

Catastrophic illness protection was considered one of the major achievements of President Reagan's second term. But elderly groups have mobilized their members against it and the House was on the brink of voting a repeal today.

Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., said Monday there was a "mood of frustration" among House members. Most would want to let the dust settle before embracing any new comprehensive plans to provide catastrophic illness insurance or long-term care, he said.

"I think they (lawmakers) feel they'd just like to get rid of this annoyance and they certainly are going to be very skeptical when I come to them in the future with a bill to help the senior citizens," said Rep. Fortney Stark, D-Calif., chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee on health.

Stark and Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., were asking the House today to approve an amendment that would salvage a portion of the health program's benefits, including some coverage for prescription drugs. Stark said his chances, at best, were even.

Stark said supporters of the catastrophic care program "lost the information battle" to groups that preyed on the fears of the elderly. Many elderly were led by "hysteriamongers" to believe their costs were astronomical and chances of benefits unlikely, he said.

"It's very easy to take very fragile, very insecure seniors who are easily confused and confuse them even further," he said.

While the Bush administration has officially endorsed keeping the program, the president has avoided personal involvement with that politically unpopular stance. House Republicans have announced they will vote in a bloc to kill the plan, and say they have assurances Bush would sign a repeal.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Monday the White House position was "to retain the benefits and mitigate the premium costs" but it wasn't endorsing any specific proposal.

Foley said the House Democratic leaders weren't taking an official stance either, although he personally supported the Stark-Waxman approach.

"If it is going to be meaningful up here, there must be some effort on the part of the president to persuade the members to cast their votes" against repeal, he said.

"If he (Bush) did half as much as he did on capital gains tax we'd have a real zinger tomorrow," Stark said, referring to the president's victory last week on his tax cut proposal.

Foley, while critical of the president for sitting out the controversy on catastrophic health care, said he wasn't sure the White House could turn the tide at this point.

The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act was aimed at protecting the elderly and disabled from financial ruin in the event of a prolonged hospital stay or other high medical costs.

The program pays for unlimited approved hospitalization after a once-a-year deductible of $560 in 1989. Previously, Medicare charged a deductible for each hospital stay during a year and provided full payment of hospital bills only up to 59 days a year.

The plan also limits the amount that beneficiaries must pay for hospital care, physician services, medical supplies and prescription drugs and expands other health care benefits as well.

But the elderly, many of whom had some similar benefits from private insurance plans, objected to paying for the new federal coverage. The surtax could be as high as $800 this year and higher in the future for upper-income elderly.

Middle school to teach better race relations

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A middle school has transformed itself into a laboratory on ways to improve race relations where teachers hope to erase past tensions and perhaps serve as a model for the rest of the nation.

"Some kids' cultural upbringing is different. Some of it is unconscious. We need to learn to understand each other better," says Robert Pipkin, principal of the Prospect Middle School Center for Multiracial, Multiethnic and Multicultural Education.

Prospect teachers — and their sixth-, seventh- and eighth-grade students — are learning the fine points of dealing with whites, blacks, Asians, Hispanics, and Native Americans.

The students, split almost evenly among whites and blacks, will learn about the cultures of other races and ethnic groups in hope they will find their differences enlightening rather than divisive.

The school, in Pittsburgh's racially balanced Mount Washington section, will retain its traditional curriculum, but also will teach students to recognize racism and its consequences. Teachers also will try to provide lessons free of racial bias.

Another part of the program could prove more controversial.

Since some studies indicate children of different races and cultural backgrounds have different learning styles, teachers will be taught to expand their repertoire of teaching methods, said psychologist Stanley Denton, the Pittsburgh School District's director of multicultural education.

"White children tend to be abstract learners. In the area of mathematics, for example, they can learn by being exposed to a formula," Denton said.

Black children, in general, learn best when the lesson is embedded within a context or accompanied by examples, he said.

"This is an oversimplification, of course," he said. "There are always wide variations and exceptions."

Attempts to put these theories to work elsewhere have offended blacks.

"People tend to equate abstract learning with higher thinking, which isn't the case at all," Denton said.

Administrators hope the program will generate new ideas that can be used in other schools in Pittsburgh and, perhaps, across the country.

"We want a program that will celebrate diversity and encourage kids to be proud of their background and knowledgeable about their cultural heritage," Denton said.

The first year of the program will involve mostly training and planning. Next September, however, the center will begin projects designed to enhance students' self-esteem, teach the histories of different minorities and sensitize teachers to their own racial attitudes.

About 52 percent of the district's 39,500 students are black and 47 percent are white. One percent come from other minority groups.

Kemp to unveil reform plan aimed at HUD

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary Jack Kemp is unveiling a package today of proposals aimed at reforming the scandal-plagued Department of Housing, including the naming of a chief financial officer and requiring public registration of lobbyists and consultants.

Manafort

Kemp's proposal also calls for the elimination of HUD grant funds that are awarded at the discretion of the secretary, according to a source familiar with the proposal. That would mean awards under all HUD housing programs would be based on competition.

Kemp planned to announce his reform package at an afternoon news conference.

Portions of his plans already have been discussed by HUD officials, however, including his intention to create a new top-level position of chief financial officer. Kemp's appointee as assistant secretary for administration, Claire Freeman, told Congress last month that plans were being made for a financial officer with broad powers — a position that does not exist now in the scandal-plagued department.

HUD has been hit by scandals over alleged mismanagement, fraud, influence peddling, and the steering of lucrative HUD subsidies to politically favored developers, consultants and lobbyists. Estimates of the cost range into the billions of dollars.

Included in Kemp's package, the sources said, are a requirement that consultants and lobbyists who deal with the agency register and publicly disclose their dealings.

A congressional source familiar with the Kemp reforms said Kemp also will propose that HUD kill its Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation Program, the multimillion dollar rent-subsidy program found to be riddled with influence peddling.

It was an April audit of that program that set off the current investigations of HUD. The auditors found that subsidies appeared to have been steered to former agency officials and developers who hired prominent GOP consultants to lobby HUD.

Dealings by politically connected lobbyists and consultants was the subject of a hearing Monday by a House committee that has been investigating the HUD scandals.

The chairman, Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., charged that a "greased, sweetheart deal" brought $31 million in federal housing subsidies to a New Jersey renovation project, but the apartments are still like slums.

Lantos said "infinitely more worthy projects" were denied funds when HUD made the grant to the housing project in which Republican lobbyist Paul Manafort is a partner.

But Manafort testified at a hearing Monday that his lobbying company "has worked within the existing system at HUD" and "played by the rules."

Lantos said his subcommittee's staff last week visited Manafort's 326-unit Seabrook project in Upper Deerfield, N.J., a 1940s complex that Manafort's partnership is renovating with the HUD subsidies.

Manafort said that while 182 units are occupied, construction is still under way and asserted, "When we are finished with construction, we believe the tenants will be happy."

Agreement reached to stiffen auto emission requirements

WASHINGTON (AP) — Clean air legislation is gaining momentum in the House, following a breakthrough agreement that would apply California's tough auto tailpipe standards to the whole country starting with 1994 models.

The 22-0 vote Monday in the House Energy and Commerce environment subcommittee came after two powerful lawmakers — Reps. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., and John D. Dingell, D-Mich. — shook hands and ended a bitter dispute over the auto standards.

Waxman, the champion of environmental groups, and Dingell, the auto industry's best friend in Congress, said Monday they would oppose any attempts to change the agreement. Their pact virtually ensures new, tough auto pollution controls because the Senate's clean air legislation is even stricter than the compromise.

The auto industry was quick to express its displeasure with the proposed exhaust standards. Harold A. Poling, chief operating officer for Ford Motor Co., said the standards "are not feasible and ... would improve air quality by less than 1 percent compared with the president's proposal."

Richard Ayres, chairman of the National Clean Air Coalition, called the vote "a genuine step forward" and "a signal to the industrial community and others that achieving clean air will take a commitment from all interests to do their part." The coalition includes environmental groups and their allies.

The California requirements, tougher than the rest of the country's, would be phased in beginning with 1994 models and be complete in the other 49 states by 1996 — at an average cost to consumers of nearly $100 per car, according to Environmental Protection Agency estimates.

The emissions disputes have helped keep clean air bills in a legislative bottleneck in past years, and threatened to torpedo President Bush's clean air bill, which the subcommittee vote amended.

The compromise followed extensive private negotiations over the past week that involved Dingell, Waxman and a number of House colleagues who said they were tired of a clean air stalemate that has lasted a decade. The last major clean air law changes were passed in 1977.

The Bush administration accepted the compromise reluctantly and expressed hope for quick progress on other portions of the bill in Waxman's subcommittee.

"This opens the gates to the passage of clean air legislation — if not this year then next year," said Rep. Thomas Tauke, R-Iowa, who added that the tailpipe compromise would help lawmakers reach agreement on other parts of the legislation. Added Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., "We still have an enormous amount of work to do."

White House deputy press secretary Stephen Hart said the Dingell-Waxman provisions, though tighter than what the president proposed, are "really not too far away from ours." He said the White House would "have to see what comes out" of the committee before commenting further.

General Motors said, "Today's action goes to an extreme which will bring virtually no significant benefits over what the bipartisan bill provides, but will mean huge costs to the consumer and high risks for the industry."

Following the agreement, lawmakers differing over the makeup of Bush's proposed clean fuels program for autos intensified efforts to reach a compromise.

Also remaining are differences over sharing the cost of acid rain reduction; a "cap" on acid rain growth that could slow power plant expansion; and the extent of controls on virtually unregulated airborne toxic chemicals.

Soviet defense minister, Bush tour Civil War battlefield

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet Defense Minister Dimitri Yazov, making his first visit to the United States, is meeting with President Bush and touring the Civil War battlefield at Gettysburg, Pa.

Pentagon officials said Yazov's trip today to the battlefield where Union troops turned back Gen. Robert E. Lee's Confederate soldiers in a key, bloody battle was prompted by his interest in the war between the states.

Yazov met Monday for more than four hours with Defense Secretary Dick Cheney at the Pentagon, officials said.

A senior official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, described the talks as "relaxed, candid, generally non-polemical, informative." The goal of the talks, the official said, were to "improve understanding between the two sides," as well as "enhance stability and predictability."

The main topics of discussion were "how national security and defense decisions are made in the two countries," as well as military strategies, defense spending, regional conflicts and arms control negotiations, the official said.

Specifically, U.S. officials sought information about the Soviet Union's promise to make unilateral troop reductions and to cut the defense budget by 14 percent.

"The Soviets gave us some details. ... You always learn something new," the official said, but he declined to provide details.

Asked if Cheney and his advisers were confident about Soviet pledges to scale back defense spending, the official said, "We'll have to see."

Yazov's visit grew out an invitation extended by former Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci when the two met in Europe near the end of the Reagan administration.

In addition to meeting with Bush and visiting Gettysburg, Yazov also was to speak today at the National Defense University at Fort Myer, Va.

On Wednesday, Yazov will visit Camp Pendleton, a Marine training base in Southern California. He'll visit Luke Air Force Base in Arizona on Thursday, then fly to Fort Bragg, N.C., on Friday.

Swimming, shellfishing banned in South Carolina rivers, ocean

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — South Carolina today banned shellfish harvesting and warned against swimming in the ocean and rivers, saying Hurricane Hugo had left waters choked with sewage.

Workers also resumed efforts today to reopen a bridge to the state's devastated resort islands, and officials ordered construction of an eight-mile-long sand dune to protect the beach from high tides later this month.

As tons of supplies poured into the state, relief officials said they were awash in clothing and urged donors to instead send cash, food and building supplies.

Vice President Dan Quayle's wife, Marilyn, returned from a helicopter tour of the coast Monday sobered by the extent of the destruction.

"It's really incredible. There are areas that look like war zones," said Mrs. Quayle, who helped out Monday taking applications at a Federal Emergency Management Agency center in Moncks Corner.

"I think people understand that this has been devastating. I think we can see that in the nationwide outpouring of volunteers that the whole country understands."

Hurricane Hugo slammed into South Carolina Sept. 21 with 135 mph winds, leaving t least 18 dead, 50,000 homeless, 270,000 jobless, and homes, businesses, schools and municipal buildings damaged or destroyed far inland and in North Carolina. In all, Hugo killed 29 people on the U.S. mainland.

The warning against swimming could last for months and possibly affect the spring tourist season, said Wayne Fanning of the Department of Health and Environmental Control.

The indefinite ban on shellfishing was enacted because the 10 major sewage treatment plants in the Charleston area are not working fully and only 30 percent of the pollutants are being removed, Fanning said. When released into rivers, the waste depletes oxygen in the water, causing widespread fish kills.

Rain that has hurt recovery efforts continued in some parts of the South.

In Monroe, N.C., a community that was in Hugo's path, a man and woman were killed Monday when their car was washed into a flooded creek. A search resumed today for a 17-year-old girl who was riding in the car.

The nation's generosity toward storm victims has brought a backlog of donated clothing, including boxcar loads from the West Coast, said Maj. Ken Bush of the Salvation Army.

In the hard-hit fishing village of McClellanville about 30 miles northeast of Charleston, the school is filled with donated clothes, said Billy Newsome of the American Red Cross.

"Used clothing has almost choked us to death," he said, adding what's needed is donations of non-perishable food and building supplies.

The Army Corps of Engineers prepared to repair the Ben Sawyer Bridge — the only link between the mainland and the devastated resorts of Sullivan's Island and the Isle of Palms. The storm left the swing bridge hanging at a 45-degree angle with one end submerged in the water.

Workers were to float barges under the dangling section and use the rising tide late today to help raise the bridge, said corps spokesman Rod Ruffennach. Then cranes will swing the bridge back into position.

The bridge will be left in position for cars to traverse until experts determine whether they can repair the swing mechanism that opens the bridge to allow boats to pass on the Intracoastal Waterway.

The Corps also announced that two contractors will pour sand on eight miles of beaches from North Myrtle Beach to Pawleys Island later this week.

The sand is meant to block further erosion of hurricane-damaged property during a surge of high tides expected in mid-October.

Charleston Mayor Joseph P. Riley Jr. said 60 trucks carrying canned food, clothing and other necessities rolled into the city Monday.

The mayor also said the city's dawn-to-dusk curfew, in effect since the storm, has been shortened to 9 p.m. to 5 a.m., but was still being enforced by the National Guard.

Riley said about 90 percent of the city's hotels have reopened and many restaurants are back in business.

Showdown over 'God Bless' sign heads to court

New York Times News Service

HALLANDALE, Fla. — A condo confrontation over a "God Bless this Home" sign apparently is headed for the courts.

Directors of the Fairways Riviera condo association voted 7-1 Monday to instruct their attorney to ask a judge to force Walter and Frances Reiter to strip the sign from the door of their second-floor condo.

"This has nothing to do with religion," board member Herman Sansweet insisted after the meeting. "The sign is a violation of our bylaws."

Those same bylaws allow residents to display mezuzas — symbols of the Jewish faith — on the exterior door frames of their condos. Several doorways in the complex, which is occupied mostly by Jewish owners, display the mezuzas.

To Frances Reiter, a Methodist, the board's attempt to remove her sign is an act of discrimination.

"It's definitely religious discrimination," she said. "The silent hatred on their part has taken a vocal form."

The association barred the media from its meeting. Board members also denied entry to the Reiters, who rent their condo from their parents. A hallway quarrel erupted when Walter Reiter was blocked from the meeting room.

"You're denying us our civil rights again," he shouted. "I guarantee you, you haven't heard the last of us."

Frances Reiter called the board's decision to go to court "ridiculous." She said she is considering bringing her case to the American Civil Liberties Union.

"I can't believe they're doing this," she said. "What the sign says encompasses the Judeo-Christian belief in God. How can that be offensive?"

Residents of the complex say they are not offended by the sign, but rather by Reiter's insistence on breaking the rules.

"She's the one who is pushing this issue to the extreme," said Jerome Dickstein, who has lived 17 years at Fairways Riviera. "Everyone else seems to be able to comply."

Condo association members complain that Reiter's flair for exterior design is a nagging problem. Last Christmas, a wreath was tacked to the door, they say. On Thanksgiving, it was a turkey ornament. On Valentine's Day, a heart. Easter, a bonnet.

Condo rules do allow the display of Christmas wreaths from Dec. 15 to Jan. 15.

Support for the Reiters' cause has taken varied forms. Letters of encouragement have arrived from as far as California and Arizona.

Five amateur astronomers selected to use space telescope

BALTIMORE (AP) — Five amateur astronomers are preparing for an undreamed-of opportunity to go eyeball to eyeball with the universe using what will be the world's most powerful space telescope.

In a gesture of appreciation for scientific contributions by hobbyists using backyard telescopes, the Space Telescope Science Institute has offered 20 hours of observing time on the Hubble Space Telescope to projects designed by amateurs.

The telescope, to be launched on a space shuttle in March, is a joint project of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the European Space Agency. The project, based at Johns Hopkins University, is expected to cost about $750 million and has been in planning stages for a decade.

For someone who is not a professional astronomer, the odds of getting to use the telescope are comparable to George Jetson's chances of getting a raise from his tightfisted boss at Spacely Sprockets.

"I would guess every amateur astronomer would love to use it," said one of those selected, James Secosky, a science teacher from Rochester, N.Y. "I never thought I'd get to use an instrument like this."

But astronomy is one of the few scientific fields in which amateurs make significant breakthroughs.

For example, Edwin Hubble, the American astronomer for whom the telescope is named, developed his theory of the expanding universe in cooperation with Milton Humason, a former janitor, mule driver and high-school dropout.

"In actuality, outer space begins in your back yard. All you need is a good pair of binoculars to get started," said Pete Kandefer, an electrical engineer from New Hartford, Conn., who also was chosen.

Others selected include a computer expert and a homemaker.

Professionals already have overbooked time on the telescope, the first major optical telescope that will be permanently stationed in low Earth orbit, said Ray Villard, an institute spokesman.

The 24,000-pound instrument, about the size of a bus, has a 2.4-meter mirror that will gather enough light to enable researchers to make images of things that are 25 to 50 times fainter than the dimmest object previously seen.

Free of the atmosphere's distortion of distant light and the Earth's tendency to absorb the extreme ends of the light spectrum, the telescope will produce pictures 10 times clearer than anything available on the ground, Villard said.

"If your eyes were as good as the telescope, you would be able to see a dime 20 miles away — and know it was a dime," Villard said.

Secosky, 42, is interested in why Jupter's moon Io sometimes appears brighter as it emerges from the planet's frigid shadow. He thinks his observations may detect evidence of frost forming on the moon.

Kandefer's regular job is working on flight controls and guidance sensors, but the 42-year-old engineer spends his free time trying to learn about steller magnetic fields 10 times stronger than the sun's.

The only woman in the group, Ana Larson, 41, of Seattle, was half a dozen years into an accounting career when she decided to take time off to raise her two children and fell in love with astronomy through University of Washington correspondence courses.

Her goal is to find huge planets taking form around stars, a process scientists suspect is occurring but cannot prove because it is so difficult to distinguish any object that close to a star's brightness. Larson hopes to find planets five to 10 times larger than Jupiter that release enormous amounts of energy, detectable to a telescope as heat.

Ray Sterner, a 37-year-old computer scientist at Hopkins, will test his theory that luminescent arcs discovered in a distant galaxy cluster are made of stars. Most astronomers consider such arcs to be optical illusions caused by gravity bending starlight.

John Hewitt, who works at a science museum in Berkeley, Calif., hopes to detect a hypothetical mass of primordial material surrounding a star where comets could take form.

"We aren't professional scientists and we would not qualify as observers under the regular procedures," Hewitt said. "This is an incredible opportunity for an amateur astronomer on what is esentially the most capable astronomical instrument ever created."

Texan charged with shooting state trooper

WOODWARD, Okla. (AP) — Authorities ended a 51-hour manhunt involving more than 100 lawmen early today when they captured a Texas man accused of critically wounding a state trooper.

The tactical team of the Oklahoma Highway Patrol followed the tracks of Michael James Elliott Jr. for 2½ hours and found him cuddled under a blanket up in a tree just south of Mooreland about 12:30 a.m. today. He was not armed.

Elliott, 32, of Mabank, Texas, was charged Monday by the Woodward County District Attorney's office with shooting with intent to kill L.D. Horstkoetter, 51, during a routine traffic stop Saturday night in Woodward County, officials said.

Elliott was being held at the Woodward County jail. Bail has been set at $100,000, said Sheriff Tom Matthews.

Horstkoetter, a 21-year veteran of the patrol, was in critical but stable condition at Oklahoma Memorial Hospital in Oklahoma City.

"His vital signs are stable. He is improving somewhat," a hospital spokesman said early today.

Elliott's capture ended a manhunt that began when Horstkoetter was shot about 9:30 p.m. Saturday and never ceased, with state and local authorities combing a densely wooded area on horseback and in helicopters and airboats.

"The officers are very tired, but you can see the happiness and pride that all the effort that had been put forth was successful," Matthews said.

Matthews said Elliott had some cuts and other abrasions when he was brought into the jail.

"He looks tired, too," Matthews said. "And, as with anyone's who's been arrested, he doesn't have a happy look on his face."

Earlier Monday, authorities manned roadblocks and dozens of officers rode horseback through thick, thorny brush and plodded through marshy bottomland along the North Canadian River.

Officers escorted ranchers and school buses in the vicinity where Elliott was believed to have been hiding.

"They seemed to think all along he was in the vicinity," said Lt. Stewart Meyer of the highway patrol. "They had indication he was there."

Meyer said the lawmen involved in the two-day manhunt were "relieved and glad that it's over."

In September, Atlantic City police rousted Jim Robinson, left, and a second homeless man known as "The Chief" from their sleep beneath a life boat along the beach as Miss America contests look on. Since then, "The Chief" has been found dead and Robinson has started a new life.

Homeless man discovered on beach gets job, has money in his pockets

BERGENFIELD, N.J. (AP) — Jim Robinson lived an uneventful life on Atlantic City's beaches until he and another homeless man were photographed sleeping in front of Miss America contestants in swimsuits.

The discovery three weeks ago of the men beneath an overturned lifeguard boat interrupted a beach photo session for the beauty queens. Police quickly herded Robinson and his companion from the beach.

Today, Robinson, 42, has a job, a roof over his head and money in his pockets.

His luck changed last week when he started a new job in the mailroom at Penguin USA, a publishing company in Bergenfield.

"It's nice to work for a change," he said over a glass of iced tea at a luncheonette near his job. "I'm not making a lot of money, but it's fine."

His homelessness started in early summer after he lost a job as a security guard. Before that, Robinson was a taxi driver for seven years in the seaside resort.

Robinson had hit a low point by the time an Associated Press photographer recorded the Sept. 9 episode just off the Atlantic City boardwalk before the startled contestants. The photograph appeared in newspapers nationwide, and it wasn't the kind of publicity Robinson welcomed.

"I didn't want my friends to see it," he said.

A day after the incident, Robinson's colleague, Jeff Hall, was found dead on the beach.

"I was with him," Robinson said. "I left him for 20 minutes to bum a cigarette on the Boardwalk."

Police are investigating the death. Robinson said Hall died of "something like a heart attack or a brain seizure."

"It wasn't from being drunk," he said. "Living that kind of life will kill you."

Robinson said Hall's death inspired him to try to turn around his own life. "It made me a stronger person. It gave me something to do for a cause," he said.

Robinson blames his problems on drugs. He said he used cocaine for about a year, during which he spent as much as $3,000 a week, much of it from a $70,000 inheritance. He said he quit in February 1985 and went through several rehabilitation programs.

But a depression that followed his rehabilitation led to a suicide attempt in 1987, and Robinson was sent to Ancora Psychiatric Hospital in Winslow Township for 10 months, he said.

He was released to an Atlantic City halfway house in May 1988, and moved out after getting a job as a security guard.

He described the time he spent on the beach as "a little camping excursion."

"I'm glad I went through it in a way," he said. "We had some good times. Hey, look at my tan," he said, rolling up a shirt sleeve.

A week after the beach episode, Robinson moved in with a cousin, Joan Burke, and her husband, Raymond, of Bogota, N.J.

Israel under pressure to hold talks with Palestinians

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a Thursday deadline at hand, the United States and Egypt are exerting heavy pressure on Israel to go along with a proposal for preliminary peace talks with Palestinian representatives.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak sounded upbeat Monday about prospects for a peace settlement, saying a "golden opportunity" exists that must not be squandered.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III, who has been campaigning hard for a more flexible Israeli position on the issue, said Israel should not feel threatened by the 10-point proposal for peace talks set forth by Mubarak.

The inner cabinet of ministers from Likud and Labor is to meet Thursday on Mubarak's ideas amid deep divisions on how to proceed.

Likud rejects Mubarak's acceptance of a U.S.-backed formula that involves trading occupied land for peace and including people deported by Israel in a Palestinian negotiating delegation. Labor, led by Finance Minister Shimon Peres, supports both ideas.

Meanwhile, President Bush called Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir on Monday and told him "a dialogue was necessary" between Israel and the Palestinians, presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater disclosed today.

Fitzwater said that Bush spoke with the Israeli leader for "just a few minutes" in advance of Monday's White House meeting with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

"The discussion was very general," Fitzwater said, saying Bush contacted Shamir mainly as a courtesy.

"He emphasized our interest in the peace process ... that he obviously felt a dialogue was necessary," Fitzwater said.

Mubarak told reporters the essential next step in the peace process is to persuade the Israelis and the Palestinians to enter a dialogue "without preconditions."

"We won't get to peace until Palestinians and Israelis speak to each other," Baker said.

Baker regards the Egyptian plan as a complement to — not a substitute for — Shamir's proposal for elections in which Palestinians would select representatives to negotiate with Israel on limited self-government in the occupied territories.

Monday's White House session came amid new concern that settling Jewish immigrants from the Soviet Union in the Israeli-occupied West Bank could threaten peace efforts.

Bush administration officials reacted coolly to an Israeli request for $400 million in housing loan guarantees for about 100,000 Jewish emigres from the Soviet Union. Israeli officials have said some dwellings probably will be in the West Bank.

"The United States policy is to oppose additional settlements in the occupied territories," Baker said.

Baker also said U.S. ability to assist Israel is limited by "severe budgetary constraints."

NATION IN BRIEF

Court justice disqualifies self

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the Supreme Court's abortion rights supporters is not taking part in a key abortion case before the court in its 1989-90 term.

Justice John Paul Stevens disqualified himself from the Illinois case, one of three the high court is considering this term, for unstated reasons, court spokeswoman Toni House said Monday.

Stevens had not disqualified himself when the justices agreed last July 3 to review the case. But a minor court order issued Monday in the Illinois case, which deals with abortion clinic regulations, noted that Stevens did not participate.

His absence will not change the outcome of the case if the justices line up as they did last July when voting 5-4 to let states make abortion harder to get.

Stevens was one of the dissenters.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor still is the key vote. If she votes against the Illinois law, the outcome could be a 4-4 "pro-choice" victory. If she votes in favor of the law, the outcome could be a 5-3 anti-abortion victory.

A 4-4 split would not set any legal precedent outside Illinois.

The case focuses on a state law that would require abortion clinics to add services and equipment now found only in hospitals.

Butter warehouse burns

CAMBRIDGE, Md. (AP) — Firefighters sloshed through five inches of melted butter in battling a warehouse fire that burned out of control for nearly 21 hours.

More than 300 firefighters from Maryland and Delaware had to contend with slippery floors and a dwindling water supply to put out the blaze Monday at the East Coast Cold Storage warehouse, where food was being stored for shipment to Poland and the Soviet Union.

The fire melted 5 million pounds of butter and caused an estimated $3 million damage, said Bob Thomas, deputy state fire marshal. More than 6 million pounds of butter valued at $9 million was stored at the warehouse.

The cause of the fire was under investigation.

Three firefighters were treated at a hospital for smoke inhalation and released, authorities said.

The butter represented only a fraction of the 381 million-pound inventory held by the government's Commodity Credit Corp., said Ray Waggoner, a Department of Agriculture spokesman in Washington.

Rivalry blamed for bombs

NEW ALBANY, Ind. (AP) — A man on trial on charges of planting 13 bombs around buildings and bridges was motivated by a rivalry with a legislator who long ago beat him out for roles in high school plays, a prosecutor said.

"This is a drama that started a number of years ago," Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Stanley Powell said during opening arguments Monday. "It started in the mind of John Marion Hubbard, a non-conformist who didn't believe in authority."

Hubbard, 31, is charged with making and planting the bombs found in 1988 in Salem, a community of 6,000.

None of the bombs exploded, but three ignited and fizzled. No one was injured.

Hubbard could be sentenced to 285 years in prison if convicted of conspiracy, illegal possession of dynamite, 14 counts of making bombs and 13 of attempting to destroy buildings and bridges.

Launch date expected

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Barring unforeseen problems, NASA was ready today to set the launch date for space shuttle Atlantis and its nuclear-powered planetary payload.

Shuttle managers were assessing the readiness of the orbiter, the payload, the worldwide tracking network and other elements during a two-day meeting that began Monday.

Poland will need U.S. help, more

Voting out the Communists in June and replacing them with a Solidarity-led government was only the first dramatic step in a turn away from the past for Poland. But there are more changes yet to come.

Since Poland started the change, an already sick economy has deteriorated drastically; complex, radical reform in all sectors of society lies ahead. These days, this large, populous nation at the heart of Europe needs hope, determination — and help.

It's almost a truism that Poland has to rescue itself; the West can't pluck Poland out of the morass created by 40 years of Communist Party misrule. But the West as a matter of self-interest can — and must — help. The nation's new government needs debt relief, it needs cash to upgrade the country's deteriorating infrastructure and it needs foreign investment to help stimulate the development of a mixed economy.

Last week, President Bush urged the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to join the United States in coming to Poland's aid. Although the president offered few details about what he has in mind, the two lending agencies already have Polish aid programs in the works. The IMF is considering a plan that over three years could total as much as $2.5 billion. The World Bank plans to lend Poland $300 million as the first part of a major package of aid. The World Bank's International Finance Corporation also has offered to help Poland create a new financial system.

The Bush administration is supporting a $169 million package of economic and food assistance; the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has approved a $1.2 billion package for Poland and Hungary. The European Community has proposed a $600 million program for the two countries.

Western assistance to Poland should be coordinated, comprehensive and in some instances basic and mundane. Early in September, for example, the European Community sent a convoy of trucks to Poland loaded with 5,000 tons of frozen beef. The beef will help Poles through the approaching winter.

The British newsmagazine, The Economist, makes the point that Poland's benefactors should "think small." The country needs, for example, cold storage facilities so that produce won't spoil on the way to market, small food factories to break inefficient monopolies in food production, private telephone lines, basic medical supplies so that its best doctors won't emigrate, printing plants for newspapers and books.

A free and smoothly functioning post-Communist Poland is still a distant dream, but it's no longer an idle dream. The West can help make it reality.

Soviets earn big money in black market

LENINGRAD, U.S.S.R. — Dimitri yearns to be an American. In any other society, his family would have been well-to-do. His father is a respected doctor and his mother a hard-working functionary for the Communist Party. He went to the university where he earned two degrees, one of them in engineering. He worked as an engineer for two years before abandoning that job because he was barely inching ahead.

Jack Anderson

That's before he changed careers. Today, Dimitri is a key lieutenant in the Soviet mob. This is the story of a refusenik-turned-racketeer.

He's unusual because he is willing to talk to us about his criminal activities, the organization and the godfather he serves. Dimitri is saving up to come to the United States. He is 28 years old and doesn't believe mainstream Soviet life has anything to offer a person with his educational credentials. His mother and father together earn the official exchange rate equivalent of about $700 a month. As a racketeer, Dimitri boasts, he pulls in at least 10,000 rubles a month — $16,000 at the official rate — and has been able to amass more than 100,000 rubles ($160,000 at the official rate) in savings. A good chunk of this, he confided, is in foreign bank accounts, after the money was secretly converted and "washed" to foreign currency through a network run by Russian Jewish emigres in Israel.

Dimitri's territory includes three top hotels for foreign tourists, for whom he proudly claims he can fulfill any wish. Once he was able to obtain high-quality, hand-crafted, black lacquer boxes from top masters of the Palekh village school through a close friendship with one of the masters. It started when the frustrated artisan complained his wife couldn't get pregnant. Dimitri used his "network," as he termed it, to get a fertility drug from West Germany.

Dimitri is very careful. His family doesn't suspect how he is really making his money. He has a chauffeur for his cars, which are never parked near his apartment, so the neighbors won't get suspicious.

He outlines a typical underground transaction. Underlings play a key role — they handle the money. During four separate transactions involving more than $1,000 in American money, Dimitri would take it, count it and quickly give the "hot" cash to a "runner," who then stashed it elsewhere. Dimitri does this so he will never be caught with illegal foreign currency.

Dimitri is unique in other ways. He has three apartments — one for living, one for storage of goods and one for business transactions. In the storage flat were dozens of lacquer boxes, more than a 100 military watches, military uniforms, stereo and video equipment and boxes of name-brand computers.

He explained that the Soviet mob could not exist without the collusion of many corrupt Soviet officials, from Communist Party bosses to KGB agents, who get cut in on the take. One top police official has estimated that two-thirds of the gross income of the Soviet underworld is paid out in bribes to officials.

Although he personally profits from the black market, Dimitr i lamented: "I can get you all the sugar and soap you want, but it will be at higher prices because the party bosses get higher prices from the black market."

Sugar and soap are the two hot items on the black market because they are scarce in state stores. Huge lots of sugar from Cuba have been siphoned off by the Soviet mob for illegal liquor manufacture. Other hot items include name-brand clothing, antique religious icons, Western rock albums (particularly John Lennon and Paul McCartney), videotapes of Western movies (especially "Rambo" films, which sell for $400 apiece) and gilt-edged Korans.

Then there's caviar. Dimitri and other racketeers do a brisk business in siphoning off the best caviar and selling the tins in large lots to West Europeans and Americans for precious hard currency.

End of free gifts only way to reform Congress

Congress, that devious institution, is scheming to get itself a pay raise and it plans to use the same old scam: give us more pay and we'll give up certain honorariums.

Charley Reese

While we have the bums on the defensive, we should push hard for genuine reform. You don't have to be a theologian or an Aristotle to figure out the moral imperfections of the current crop of politicians.

No sane businessman would allow his purchasing agent to accept free vacations and cash gifts from the vendors who sold supplies and materials to the business.

Congress is in reality the purchasing agent of the U.S. government. Every purchase made by the U.S. government, whether a missile or a desk calculator, can only be purchased if Congress both authorizes the purchase and appropriates the funds.

Therefore why should congressmen be allowed to accept free vacations and cash gifts from vendors who sell to the U.S. government? Why should a man who sits on the banking committee be allowed to accept contributions from banks? Or honorariums? Or trips?

Of course, he should not. In fact, he does and in fact every congressman and senator routinely puts the arm on just those people whose financial welfare he can most influence.

Congress should simply be barred from accepting all outside income. Those who can't live on the salary can resign. Nobody forced them at gunpoint to run for those jobs. They chose to seek public office. And considering the odorous practices they so sanctimoniously defend, one can assume that most of them ran for office in order to make a lot of money, which most of them do.

The question for us ordinary taxpayers to face is just this: Do we want a clean or a corrupt government? If we want a clean government, then we have to turn a deaf ear to the self-serving bleating of this current set of nabobs and insist that they clean up their act or get out.

So that's the first reform — no outside income whatsoever.

The second reform is to forbid campaign contributions from anyone who sells any product or service to the federal government or from anyone representing firms or individuals that sell products to the federal government.

For a guy to solicit contributions from the industries his committee assignments deal with is so blatant and naked a conflict of interest that it's a mystery why we've tolerated it for so long.

The third reform is to require all congressmen and senators to publish annually a detailed financial statement, listing investments, loans, and partnerships. Many a bribe in these sophisticated days is done this way, and now Congress hides these things in vague categories.

Again, if any are so offended by this loss of privacy, then they can take their snouts out of the public trough and go back to the private sector.

A fourth reform is to abolish the present pension system for Congress and place them under the same system available to all federal civil service employees. The same pols who complain about military retirement benefits have constructed their own system which gives them a full pension for 10 years service with generous cost of living raises.

A fifth reform is to pass federal legislation which forfeits all pensions for any congressman or senator convicted of a felony.

Let us, the people, be intolerant of sleaze and greed. If we insist on these reforms and all 535 members of Congress resign, it will be an extra bonus for the republic. If we gave most of them what they really deserve it would be a violation of federal law.

Praying is positive

I am concerned about the prayer issue at our local high schools. These students are only asking for a place they can gather and pray. They aren't trying to force anyone to join them. They won't be praying in front of anyone they might offend. I don't understand the school board's hesitation.

My husband and I have taught our children to turn to God in prayer anytime they have need of help or comfort, but my 8-year-old has the impression she will be expelled if she prays at school. How sad!

If the Midland school board is worried about the issue of church and state maybe those on the board should re-examine the entire school system. Are not satanism and witchcraft recognized religions in our country? You can go to your school libraries and find books not only on the histories of these pagan religions but how to practice them. Around Halloween the halls are plastered with witches, goblins and evil-looking creatures, and stories of spirits, ghosts and witches are told.

At one time these things were not considered very important, but with the increase in occult activity, we need to quit writing these things off as harmless tradition.

The New Age Movement is slowly but surely infiltrating our schools. This is a form of religion. A lot of the New Age practices are being taught in the classroom.

These students wanting to pray are representing a positive light in this very dark and negative world. They are to be commended and should be supported. I believe the Midland school board should give God equal time with the devil in our schools.

Suicide no answer

Teen suicide is a devastating problem in the U.S. today. Shall we just sit back or try to intervene between these sorrows?

I would like to express to teens that things will get better. They may look so black, and we may feel so defeated, but eventually there will be light.

I am 30 years old today. I look back and yet I still find some of the same problems occurring today. Life is not easy. At times, life can look totally hopeless. We ask ourselves, "Why go on, why try and face this hell?" Believe me, after all of my years, I still would truly like to blow it all off at times.

I realize parents don't listen, and they don't understand when they do try to listen.

When we lack faith in ourselves, we tend to turn to drugs and alcohol, to become "The Person," to gain courage and to be "someone." Picture a life of that; it's sad isn't it?

If we would dare communicate with our parents, the ones that love us and care for our future, we could have good true friends. We tend to black them out because they seem so critical and lacking in understanding.

This is to parents, as well as teens. You parents have made it in life. Look at your children. It is a struggle for them in 1989. If they dare share their darkest fears, how will you react?

About a month ago, a citizen asked herself these same questions, yet she said no to life. Please, for God's sake, ask yourself twice!

UTPB costs 'expensive'

According to published data in the Reporter-Telegram (Sept. 17, page 3B), UTPB's 1989-90 operating budget of $7.5 million averages out to about $3,790 for each of the 1989 students expected for that school year.

That's pretty expensive for such a meager enrollment. Maybe the State of Texas should consider applying these funds for scholarships for the less than 2,000 students at other state schools. Then the state could turn the UTPB facilities into a much-needed prison. It's certainly be money in the bank for the beleaguered taxpayer.

PEGGY ROBERSON

Texas man makes home under Capitol steps

WASHINGTON — Stacey Abney came to Washington from Texas 14 years ago to demonstrate at the U.S. Capitol for what he calls "compensation benefits" that he believes are due him as a World War II veteran.

Peggy Roberson

By day, he sits stone-faced on the Capitol steps next to a hand-lettered sign that reads: "I lost my health in WWII. Bad heart. Gout. Hi Blod PH. I can't get no help from U.S. at all. One of WWII's black dog slav in 1989."

By night, Abney, 78, sleeps in an alcove under the marble steps on a makeshift bed of cardboard, carpeting and blankets.

Since May 17, 1975, the day he arrived here to exercise his constitutional right to petition the government, Abney has left the Capitol only to go to jail for periods ranging from a few days to many months.

Abney is charged routinely with "unlawful entry" when he refuses to leave the grounds during a security sweep before a president's State of the Union speech or when a foreign leader comes to visit.

J.O. Robinson, a police officer who said he and others "watch out for Stacey to keep people from harassing him," hinted that the arrests are partly for humanitarian reasons. The State of the Union speech in January comes at a time when snow sometimes covers the ground for weeks at a time and temperatures drop into the single digits at night.

Abney usually remains incarcerated in the warm district jail — where he claims to have been the victim of "police brutality" — from mid-January until a judge gets around to releasing him in March.

Last Thursday, when Colombian President Virgilio Barco was visiting Congress, the police avoided a confrontation that could have resulted in sending Abney to jail again by stationing an officer near him "to monitor his actions," according to spokesman Don Nichols.

"I'm not bothering that man," Abney said, speaking to reporters who stopped to visit with him. "Why are those people more important than I am? They can come over here and get their million dollars and leave me alone."

Abney said he was drafted into the army when he was 31 and served with the 377th Engineering Regiment "tearing down, building, blowing up, whatever they wanted us to do." He entered as a private and was promoted to technician fifth class, or "T-corporal."

He speaks bitterly of entering France 37 days after the June 6, 1944, D-Day invasion by the Allies, "fighting, dodging bullets and bombs ... trying to save the country," only to be rebuffed when he asked for disability payments from the U.S. government.

When Abney was released after the war, he said, doctors told him not to return to his railroad construction job, warning that he could die from a sudden heart attack. "I haven't held a regular job since 1948," he said.

Acting on advice from military officers that whatever illness he had should be considered "service connected," Abney said he applied for "full compensation benefits."

He acknowledges that the Veterans Administration offered "some little something" — he doesn't say how much, but it wasn't as much as he believed he was due.

Abney, who was born in Waskom, a village about 25 miles from Marshall near the Texas-Louisiana border, said he doesn't know exactly how much money the government should pay him.

"I should get what the rest of 'em got," he said. "I can't even get food stamps."

After his appeals were rejected, Abney decided to take his case directly to Congress. "I was just dumb enough to think I could get justice," he said.

Probably few members of Congress know Abney exists. A Senate Press Gallery staffer who has worked in the Capitol for 15 years was surprised to hear that a homeless man lived under the East Front steps.

Rep. Jim Chapman, D-Sulphur Springs, who has represented Abney's hometown of Marshall since 1985, said Abney has not asked him for help with his claims.

"We would be glad to try to do what we could," said Chapman's spokeswoman, Sara Anderson.

The Texas Veterans Commission has no record of a claim by Abney. Veterans Administration officials in Texas said Abney's file was transferred to Washington in 1978. "He is not drawing benefits now," an official said.

While Abney is well past the age for Social Security, he gets no money from that source either, he said. Social Security rules require that recipients have an address, and Abney doesn't have one.

Despite his obsessive concern about his health, Abney appears to be in good shape and looks younger than his 78 years. His skin has been tanned to a copper color. He wears a fisherman's knit cap over his short, white curly hair.

Abney's new sporty gray-and-burgundy jump suit is clean. At dawn each day, an obliging guard allows him to come into the Capitol to use the bathroom. He carefully packs his bedding and belongings and covers them with plastic bags before taking up his career of demonstrating.

A police officer who has known Abney for many years said it appears to him that the protester "eats pretty good ... I see him with ham and vegetables." Abney, however, says he eats "like an animal, whatever I can find." Another officer said some congressional staff members donate food.

Abney said he has relatives "all over the country" and that he has ways of contacting them but has no interest in living with them or asking any of them for help.

14-year-old college student preparing for graduate school

HOUSTON (AP) — University of St. Thomas senior David Huang plans to mail applications to at least six graduate schools this week. He wants to earn a Ph.D. in applied math.

Huang

He also wants to learn to drive, but that will take almost as long as graduate school. Next month, Huang will turn 14.

Huang, who scored 1,090 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test when he was 8, began college in 1984 at age 9. He hopes to take the Graduate Record Examination and graduate in December, the university's youngest — but perhaps best-known — graduate.

"I'd probably be bored if I was in elementary school," said the alumnus of "Late Night with David Letterman" and "20/20" television programs and countless newspaper, radio and TV news accounts of his genius.

The math major has a 3.2 grade-point average and carries five classes, one more than required to be a full-time student. While he prefers physics and math, his current courses — poetry, theology, sociology, history and English — aren't hard but require a lot of reading, he said.

Although Huang will have completed the requirements, he may not graduate in December. Administrators are mulling over the snafu — Huang's concurrent enrollment in an English class and its prerequisite, a poetry class.

Whether he graduates this winter, or even if he is forced to repeat the English class and graduate in May, he plans to take some physics classes next semester.

After skipping first grade, Huang attended a Louisiana school for gifted children in third grade — when he completed the seventh-grade curriculum — and fourth grade — when he completed the high school curriculum.

Then he entered St. Thomas, the only university that would admit a 9-year-old, on a part-time basis. He transferred for two semesters to the University of Texas at Austin. "I thought (UT) was too big, so I came back here," he said. "It's a nice place."

Huang is a proctor, a paid teaching assistant in a physics lab, and has been enlisted at least once to teach an administrator to use a computer. He attends St. Thomas on a full scholarship and a Pell grant. Although he's a celebrity of sorts on the Montrose-area campus, his teachers and classmates treat him like one of the crowd.

"Some were surprised at first to find out how young I was," he said. "But they got used to it."

Huang said he is applying to graduate programs at Yale, Princeton, UT-Austin, Texas A&M University, Stanford and the University of California at Berkeley. He expects to gain admission to most, if not all, of the programs.

Earlier this year, Johns Hopkins Medical School and Baylor College of Medicine refused to admit Huang until he is 17, although Baylor offered admission to a different graduate program. He hopes to earn a doctorate in three or four years and then enter teaching and/or research, although medicine remains a possibility.

Huang's divorced mother, Rtie, chauffeurs her only child from their Sugar Land home to class each day and will move to the city where he attends graduate school. The boy's father, Richard (Americanized from Hsiao-nan), is a seafood processor in Lake Charles, La.

Asbestos to be removed from House, Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — The state will spend up to $192,860 to remove asbestos particles released during a fire last week into the House chamber and part of the basement in the Texas Capitol.

The State Preservation Board, which awarded the cleanup contracts Monday, waived the state competitive bidding process to award a $162,860 contract to Houston-based Delta O. Services.

"I don't think we have any alternatives," said Gov. Bill Clements, chairman of the Preservation Board. Asbestos has been linked to serious respiratory problems.

Contracts totaling $30,000 also were awarded to Maxim Engineers Inc. of Dallas and Austin to ensure that the Capitol cleanup reduces asbestos contamination to a level safe for workers and tourists.

"We want to make sure from a testing and sampling basis that we are safe," Capitol Architect Allen McCree told the board.

McCree warned that if the Capitol was not cleared of asbestos this week, the loss of office space would soon exceed the cost of asbestos cleanup.

Workers in the House Chambers on the second floor of the Capitol and several offices of the state Legislative Council in the basement were moved to areas outside the Capitol.

Asbestos is used as insulation throughout the Capitol, McCree said, but all of it is scheduled to be removed from 1991 to 1993 as the building undergoes renovation and expansion.

The asbestos cleanup may cost only about 60 percent of the amount authorized by the Preservation Board, McCree said. But he asked for a cushion so that offices could be scrubbed as many times as needed to ensure that asbestos is removed from the air.

The cleanup contractor must finish the job by midnight Friday, McCree said, or pay $300 per day in damages for late performance.

Asbestos readings so far exceed safe levels established by the federal Environmental Protection Agency in only two areas — the center of the House Chamber and near an air handling unit in the basement where the fire broke out.

The Capitol was evacuated about 5 p.m. Thursday and was reopened Monday, except for the contaminated areas.

The cause of the fire has not yet been determined.

Male dancer arrested on charges of sexual assault

AUSTIN (AP) — Authorities arrested a male dancer wanted for sexual assault of two women following a bachelorette party after the man made repeated attempts to telephone one of the victims, officers said.

"This was a comedy of errors on (his) part," said Sgt. Mike Lee of the Travis County Sheriff's Department. "We'd have gotten him anyway, but he sure made it easier."

Lee said a woman photographed the suspect during the bachelorette party, and investigators used the picture to help identify the man as Gustavo Castaneda, 29, and then trace him to San Antonio, where he was arrested Sunday.

Castaneda was being held today in the Travis County Jail in lieu of $25,000 bail on a charge accusing him of raping a 20-year-old Boerne woman. A 21-year-old Corpus Christi woman also told authorities she was sexually assaulted following the party Sept. 25.

Lee said the man tried to call the Boerne woman several times last week when she was not home. The caller did not identify himself, but relatives who answered the phone grew suspicious and called authorities, who then monitored the phone, Lee said.

On Saturday night, after the phone tap was set, the man called again, Lee said. The call was traced to San Antonio.

Sheriff's officers said Castaneda is an undocumented worker from Monterrey, Mexico, who has worked as a dancer four years. He has been in the United States nine years.

The women told officers they met the man at Amnizia, a dance club, the night of Sept. 24 and invited him to the bachelorette party at the Residence Inn.

The women told officers that when the party ended about 2 a.m., they accepted the man's offer to drive them around town. They said he instead drove them to a field in south Travis County where he sexually assaulted them at gunpoint.

Aircraft join search for elderly man

By ED TODD

An overland search today is augmenting a continuing aerial search for 75-year-old Edgar Bohling, an Alzheimer's disease victim who wandered from a Midland nursing home early Saturday morning.

Public and private helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft were flying north and west of Midland in efforts to locate Bohling.

"Since my father was a pipeliner," said Midlander Ann Bush, "he might be following the right-of-way on the pipeline" northwardly toward Andrews County.

Bohling reportedly was last seen on the Button Estes Ranch north of Midland on Saturday, according to Midland Police Department Detective Lt. David Wilks.

The aerial and overland search for Bohling was launched Saturday at the instance of Police Patrol Sgt. W.C. Newman, Wilks said.

Helicopters belonging to Midland County Sheriff's Department, the Texas Department of Public Safety, to Midland rancher-oilman Clayton Williams have joined in the search for Bohling.

"They are very cooperative," said Wilks. "Unfortunately, we haven't had any luck."

Bohling, who apparently is re-living his youth, has expressed a yearning to return to the Mennonite wheat farm in Kansas where he was raised, his daughter, Mrs. Bush, said today. Her husband, Bill, was flying in a fixed-wing aircraft today in searching for Bohling. The Civil Air Patrol (CAP) may join in the aerial search.

"Since my father (Edgar Bohling) was a pipeliner he might be following the right-of-way on the pipeline" northwardly toward Andrews County.

— Ann Bush, daughter of missing man

"We are offering assistance in the search," said CAP pilot Ralph Lang, who is the CAP's Group 16 emergency services officer in Midland.

Bohling, who formerly had lived in Midland when he was a superintendent for Northern Natural Gas Company (now, Enron Gas Pipeline group) in the 1950s and 1960s, transferred to Hobbs, N.M., retired in the mid-1970s, and then moved to Hooker, Okla., Mrs. Bush said.

Bohling was widowed in 1983, Mrs. Bush said, and seemed to fall into depression. "He lost interest," she said.

Last year, he was in a New Orleans diagnostic center.

Mrs. Bush, noting the denial of the Alzheimer's disorder at the outset, said initially it was difficult to accept the condition in her father.

In mid-1989, Bohling moved to Midland to be with his daughter.

Lawmaker tells physicists funding SSC may be hard

From Staff and Wire Reports

DALLAS — As a group of physicists viewed the site where the multibillion-dollar super collider will be constructed, a Texas congressman warned that it may be difficult to get funding for the project in coming years.

U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, a Republican from Ennis whose district includes the site near Waxahachie in adjacent Ellis County, said approval of the $225 million for the start of construction does not mean that will be easy to provide funding for the project.

"It's going to be extremely tough to convince the congressional delegations from outside Texas to basically double a discretionary program for the SSC," he said, pointing out that supporters of the collider will likely ask Congress for $400 million for the next fiscal year.

At one time, a group of West Texans — including many in Midland — thought it had a good chance at landing the project.

The local plan was presented to both the state and national groups for consideration.

In each case, it was passed over.

The Ellis County site was eventually selected.

President Bush has approved the initial $225 million for startup of construction.

Another congressman from Texas told more than 800 physicists and other scientists attending the Conference on Super Collider Physics and Experiments that the project will continue well into the next century and beyond.

"This conference is an important first step in the research that will be conducted at the superconducting super collider for years and decades to come," said Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas.

Scientists will use the circular tunnel, to be constructed about 30 miles south of Dallas in Waxahachie, to bombard atoms and study the debris.

"Also, we in Texas are particularly interested in exploring the possibilities of international participation in construction of the SSC," said Frost, whose 24th Congressional District includes DeSoto, home of the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission and the U.S. Department of Energy's SSC Laboratory.

Dr. Roy Schwitters, SSC lab director, read a letter from Energy Secretary James A. Watkins welcoming the international conference to north Texas and thanking scientists for their support.

"The super collider is one of the administration's highest priorities in the area of science," Schwitters read. "The project holds great promise for increasing our knowledge of the fundamental constituents of matter and the origins of the universe and for furthering advancements in medical research and technology."

— Letter from DOE Secretary James A. Watkins

The congressional funds appropriation was "a tremendous victory for the administration, for the international science community and for America," Watkins wrote.

The $4.4 billion project's history has been a Texas success story, Frost said.

"This project has been successful so far because it does not belong to one political party but has truly been a bipartisan effort," said Frost.

"The initial efforts were the byproduct of cooperation begun by our Republican governor, Bill Clements, and our then-Democratic speaker of the House of Representatives, Jim Wright."

Texans have voted to issue $1 billion worth of bonds in support of the project.

"I think you will find that the enthusiasm for the super collider project in this region goes beyond mere civic boosterism," Dallas County Judge Lee Jackson told the scientists.

"We want to provide an unparalleled research facility for the work that you're doing now and the work that you want to do here, and we're proud of our role in making it possible. We want to share the excitement of basic research into the fundamentals of how our universe works," he said.

The conference, which lasts through Wednesday, is sponsored by the Universities Research Association Inc., federal energy agency and the Texas national research commission.

Experts to determine if Pantex meeting safety guidelines

AMARILLO (AP) — A team of federal inspectors is spending the next few weeks at the nation's nuclear weapons assembly plant to determine whether it is complying with environmental and safety guidelines.

The so-called "tiger team" of federal and private experts will scrutinize the Pantex Plant north of Amarillo, said Ralph Stein, an Energy Department employee supervising the team.

The sprawling Pantex Plant, north of Amarillo, is where all the nation's nuclear weapons are assembled from components made elsewhere. The plant's owner, Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason Co. Inc. of Lexington, Ky., operates the factory under contract with the Energy Department.

Inspectors will report to Energy Secretary James Watkins on how the plant complies with environmental, health, safety and management rules, Stein said Monday, the day the team began work at the plant.

Watkins ordered similar inspections of all Energy Department plants in reaction to environmental problems at the Rocky Flats weapons plant north of Denver.

The Pantex team will interview union officials, some of whom complained before a congressional subcommittee earlier this year of alleged unsafe working conditions.

"The fact is any individual that wants to talk to the tiger team will have the opportunity to do so," he said.

Pantex and Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason officials will be able to reply to any violations or discrepancies the team finds, and would be asked to prepare an action plan to correct any shortcomings, Stein said. The Energy Department then would review the action plan.

"Once that plan is approved, the Pantex facility will be required to put that plan into effect," Stein said. "It goes all the way up to the Secretary (Watkins)."

The Energy Department reported in June that gasoline components and some cancer-causing solvents have been found in ground water under the Pantex plant, but said the pollutants have not reached Amarillo's municipal water supplies.

Stein said three new bore holes have been drilled at the site to determine the extent of contamination. He said the tiger team will monitor samplings from the borings closely to see if more tests are needed.

Energy Department officials at Pantex are planning to address 19 violations of federal hazardous waste regulations discovered in an inspection earlier this year by the Texas Water Commission. Pantex is to receive at least $79.8 million under a five-year, $19.5 billion environmental program for Energy Department plants nationwide.

Watkins' environmental teams are inspecting two other Energy Department plants, the Y-12 plant in Oak Ridge, Tenn., which produces and fabricates components for nuclear warheads, and the Mound Laboratory, a facility in Miamisburg, Ohio that produces non-nuclear components for nuclear warheads.

Soldiers most impressed by heat, Texas hospitality

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — The heat and the hospitality were the two things that British soldiers said impressed them the most on their rafting trip along the Rio Grande.

They finished the 1,195-mile journey Monday morning, after floating past the Gateway International Bridge.

Trip organizer British Army Lt. Simon Crane said he was ready for "A nice, warm, dark, unfizzy beer, and we're going to show them (Texans) what a real beer is like."

They brought along three cases of Greene King Ale, made by trip sponsor Greene King Brewery, a British firm. Most of the ale was saved for a celebration with Texans in San Antonio, where they also planned to sell the 18-foot raft for an English charity, Action Research for the Crippled Child.

"We're really keen on selling it," said Lt. Simon Derry, who helped lead the group of 27 from the 45th Field Regiment, Royal Artillery, based in Colchester, Essex, England.

Other money raised from the training exercise also will be donated to that charity, which conducts research on a wide variety of ailments.

They protected their British skin with "factor 28 sunscreen. It's almost like paint," Crane said.

"I don't think they thought it was going to be this hard," said Sgt. Major Michael Wilce, who took the last half of the trip.

The Rio Grande also provided their first experience with rattlesnakes, said Derry.

He said Texans provided much hospitality along the way.

"It's almost to the point of embarrassment," Derry said, "the British tending to be a very conservative, standoffish people."

Some, like Gunner Andrew Paterson, 21, said they lost track of time during the journey, and enjoyed the welcomes Texans gave them at every stop.

He most remembered "the heat," Paterson said.

Paddington the teddy bear led the way, tied to the front of their 18-foot raft. The Action Research charity uses Paddington, created by author Michael Bond, as its mascot.

Most of the soldiers rafted about half the trip, one group starting in El Paso on Sept. 11, the next taking over in the Big Bend area on Sept. 21. Fifteen of the 27 were in Brownsville on Monday.

Most nights were spent camping out, either on the U.S. or Mexico sides of the river.

Officials from the Fifth U.S. Army, U.S. Border Patrol and U.S. Customs followed in a second raft to provide security and help coordinate the trip.

The soldiers had one close call when their raft capsized in rapids along the Big Bend area, they said.

"I imagine it's going to get more harrowing in the pubs of Britain that it was on the river," said Tom Wacker, assistant chief patrol agent with the Border Patrol in Marfa, who traveled the last half of the journey.

The soldiers presented Wacker, Lt. Col. Dominick Chambers of the Fifth U.S. Army and U.S. Customs Senior Special Agent Jim Straba with plaques for their help along the way.

The trip's goals of building team spirit and individual character also were accomplished, Derry said.

"They're all more mature people now," he said.

Taxidermist says it's important to pay attention to detail

AP Laserphoto

Jim Robinson poses with samples of his work in his Ingram taxidermy studio. Paying attention to detail makes all the difference in his craft, Robinson said.

INGRAM (AP) — Tell Jim Robinson to go stuff it, and he'll probably do just that.

After all, stuffing it is just business for Robinson, an Ingram taxidermist.

In the back room of his Kerr Wildlife Taxidermy Studio, Robinson works amid a clutter of animal mannequins, tools, chemical containers, animal pelts and strange skulls, horns and antlers — antlers piled on the floor, antlers of all shapes and sizes hanging from racks on the ceiling, antlers clumped into cubbyholes.

A mounted, life-size Rocky Mountain goat stands sentry in stony, glass-eyed silence over deer, antelope, elk, turkeys, wild hogs and other beasts in varying degrees of completion.

"A taxidermist has got to do a little of everything," Robinson said. You don't learn the art of taxidermy overnight, and sometimes, as in Robinson's case, you don't get into the business end of it overnight, either.

"I started out in the carpet business. I had my own carpet business in Houston for years," Robinson said. But his interest in taxidermy kept growing until finally it began to overshadow the more prosaic world of laying carpet.

"I always played with taxidermy as a hobby — mounting birds, deer and small game. I knew some people who did it and I watched them work and picked up pointers," Robinson said.

"I built a shop outside of Houston, but I was still in the carpet business. Pretty soon I had a full-fledged taxidermy shop and I had to pick one: taxidermy or carpet. I stayed with taxidermy."

But Houston wasn't the place to be, for a taxidermist, Robinson said.

"In Houston, there's a taxidermist on every corner," and many specialize in doing cheap but shoddy work that makes it tough on the perfectionists, Robinson said.

"It seemed like if a guy wanted to be a taxidermist, Kerrville would be the place to do it. I always hunted the Hill Country, and from day one I said someday I'm going to move up here."

That someday came in 1982.

"I had hunted up here a lot," Robinson said. "I knew a bunch of people, several people in the exotic hunting business. I researched the area for two years before moving here."

And while there is a lot of competition among Hill Country taxidermists, Robinson said it's a healthier type of competition.

"I get along with all the local taxidermists. Competition is tough, but you've got quality here," he said.

"People that come here pay good money to hunt and don't mind paying a fair price for a good taxidermy job."

Paying attention to detail makes all the difference in taxidermy, Robinson said.

"You must know the anatomy of the animal. You must make your mind understand the anatomy to get it right. For every good taxidermist there's five that never see the detail. Their work is vanilla," Robinson said.

The basics of mounting an animal include skinning; caping (taking the skin off the skull); fleshing (taking meat off the hide); preparing the mannequin (form); mounting the antlers on the mannequin; sculpting the face; and finish work.

Getting the animal's face right — down to the last hair — is crucial, Robinson said. "You have to take clay and model the face: eye muscle detail, tear duct detail, nostril detail — basic facial features. Then we tuck the lips, pin the nostrils and pin the eyes."

One aspect of taxidermy that's often overlooked is the amount of time involved, Robinson said.

Robinson and his apprentice, 22-year-old Rick Jaeschke of Hunt, complete at least 500 heads and full mounts each year, and it takes 12 to 14 working hours to do a shoulder mount for a whitetail deer; a full body mount takes 35 to 40 hours.

Body identified as Texan 9 years after it was found

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Exactly nine years after authorities found the body of a man floating in a creek in southeastern Oklahoma, they have identified him through dental records as a Texas man.

A spokesman for the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation says authorities now are full-steam ahead in their investigation of the 1980 shooting death of him and a Texas woman whom they identified last month.

"We've got some good leads. Some immediate leads come up," said OSBI spokesman Paul Renfrow. "After nine years, we feel lucky to have something to go on.

"In the same breath, I have to say it's a longshot."

Authorities identified the man on Monday as Leslie Glenn Carpenter of Abilene, Texas.

Carpenter's body was found Oct. 3, 1980, near Hugo in southeastern Oklahoma. Attempts to identify the body had proved futile until recently when the OSBI identified a body from another nine-year-old case.

A question from an insurance company about a stolen pickup found in Hugo in the fall of 1980 led to the identification last month of Charlotte Bernice Cook, 18, of Lufkin, Texas.

Renfrow said the OSBI has determined that Carpenter, who was 17 when he was killed, and Miss Cook were friends and were known to be together when they disappeared in 1980.

The bodies were found about 25 miles apart, but Miss Cook's body was found about two months later. Still, Renfrow said, authorities suspected from the beginning that the two cases were related.

"But we were not able to verify it until today," Renfrow said Monday.

"We feel they were traveling together," Renfrow said. "Now we're trying to determine why they were in Oklahoma. Did they come here voluntarily or were they abducted?"

Renfrow said there could be stumbling blocks in the investigation.

"People's memories have faded, if there was a witness," he said. "There are some built-in problems, but they are not insurmountable."

Bus company offering free rides

AUSTIN (AP) — John David Zamora got a little raise, but it's unlikely his boss knows a thing about it.

For Zamora, a cook at a taco restaurant, Monday was his first chance to take advantage of the free fares Capital Metro is offering through Dec. 31.

That means $4 to $5 a day in bus money Zamora says he can pump into more important matters — such as the carnations and the barbecued chicken lunch he was carrying on the bus to his girlfriend as a midday treat.

"This morning when I got on the bus, I was going to put my 50 cents in, and the bus driver said, 'It's free today.'

"I said, 'Really — that's a six-pack to go,'" said Zamora.

Zamora's bus rides were among the more than 50,000 trips made on Capital Metro buses Monday, the first weekday in which the free fares were available.

Although drivers, riders and bus officials said the buses were more crowded Monday, final ridership figures will not be available for a few days.

Preliminary figures for Sunday, the first day of the free fare program, indicate that 17,000 to 18,000 trips were made on the buses. Generally, about 10,000 trips are made on Capital Metro buses on Sunday, said Liz Cohen, public affairs coordinator for Capital Metro.

However, Ms. Cohen stressed that Capital Metro credits much of that increase to the Old Pecan Street Festival, which drew thousands of people downtown.

The free fare program is a $1.6 million effort to boost ridership on Capital Metro buses.

Otwell cartoons lampoon opponents

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Democrats at the brunt of gubernatorial candidate W.N. Otwell's campaign cartoons say the reverend's political jabs don't deserve comment.

Otwell, a Forth Worth fundamentalist running as a Republican, has mailed cartoons to state Texas newspapers that lampoon Treasurer Ann Richards and Attorney General Jim Mattox. The cartoons show Ms. Richards in pants and suspenders and Mattox in makeup and boxer shorts with pink hearts on them.

Ms. Richards and Mattox also received copies of the cartoons, the Fort Worth-Star Telegram reported today.

The cartoon featuring Ms. Richards says, "You've come a long way baby ... but not far enough to fill a man's pants!"

"It's beneath comment," said Monte Williams of Ms. Richards' campaign staff.

In the drawing, Mattox is shown wearing lace underwear underneath his pants. The cartoon also shows Mattox holding a poster that advocates "Gay Rights, Pro-Choice and Sex Education."

Issues such as "Family Values, Homelessness and Religious Freedom," are crossed out on the poster, the newspaper reported.

"I don't think it's probably worthy of comment," said Millie Bruner, Mattox's political director.

However, Otwell said his satirical poke paints an accurate portrait of Mattox.

"I'm not necessarily saying the man's gay, I'm just saying he wimpish,' Otwell said. "I think he's like a man who could possibly wear lace on his underwear."

A long legal battle between the state and Otwell ended in 1988 with Mattox closing an unlicensed children's home operated by Otwell.

Otwell had refused to obtain a state license for the home on grounds that state regulation violated his religious freedom.

Woman who won sex tape suit sells story

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman who won a $1 million verdict in a lawsuit she filed against four men who secretly videotaped her having sex has sold her story to a California agency, her attorney says.

The William Morris Agency has bought exclusive rights to Susan Leigh Kerr's story, attorney Ronald Krist said Monday.

Krist, who would not disclose the terms, said a producer has expressed interest in making a television movie about Ms. Kerr but no deal has been completed.

A spokesman for the Morris agency said he could not provide immediate confirmation about any arrangement, but Krist said the agency had made payment for rights to Ms. Kerr's story.

Krist said the movie would focus on the week-long trial in June that resulted in a verdict against defendants Dan Boyles Jr., John Paul Tamborello, Karl Broesche and Wray Widner.

Three of the defendants have paid their share of the $1 million judgment. Boyles, whom the jury found responsible for $650,000 of the amount, has appealed the verdict.

Ms. Kerr, 23, is now a student at Texas Tech University.

West Germans lead in fashion exporting

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS

DUESSELDORF, West Germany (AP) — Germans hold the edge in such things as fast cars, beer and sauerbraten, and now they're claiming the edge in fashions.

German fashions? No. 1 in Europe? Ahead of the French and the Italians?

"German fashion has the same reputation as German food — it's actually good, but everyone thinks of it as bland and fattening," Herwig Zahm, head of Mondi apparel near Munich, remarked at a recent fashion fair in Duesseldorf, a new European fashion mecca in the heart of West Germany's industrial heartland.

No one questions that the West Germans have become leading exporters of women's wear, but the French and Italians have something to say about the Germans becoming No. 1 in Europe: maybe they turn out clothes, but do they design and create?

For years style-conscious buyers associated continental chic with the established couturiers of Paris and Milan, where famed fashion houses like Chanel and Armani turn out their twice yearly collections to the accolades of the rich and famous.

Now, with an expanding world market of well-paid professional women and globe-trotting tourists, West German designers say they are upstaging their foreign rivals with the right mix of panache and pragmatism.

DUESSELDORF'S SHOWINGS may not draw Princess Caroline of Monaco or the actress Catherine Deneuve, but royals and other discriminating clientele have applauded West German fashions with their pocketbooks, if not their presence.

The German designers also point to the sharp rise in interest among foreign buyers for German-made clothing, shoes, cosmetics and jewelry aimed at the upper-middle income brackets.

"Our exports are very high and increasing each year, which shows that our reputation is growing," said Claudia Timm, spokeswoman for Duesseldorf's sprawling Igedo fashion market that has given focus to design centers scattered throughout West Germany.

Nearly a third of the $13 billion in West German apparel manufactured last year was exported, and the foreign sales account for an even larger share of output this year, according to the Cologne-based Women's Outerwear Association.

Salamander Shoes of Kornwestheim is Europe's largest producer of footwear, and Klaus Steilmann's motto, "Fashion for Millions, Not Millionaires," has made him the continental king of contemporary sportswear with nearly $640 million in annual sales.

AP LaserPhoto

Models show off the latest designs on the Duesseldorf Igedo fashion show of West German designers.

THE WEST GERMANS contend it is their attention to quality and marketing that has won them the No. 1 rank in performance in Europe, if not in repute.

"The French have all the image, but they don't have a product anymore," said Wolfgang Ley, president of Munich-based Escada firm that expects to sell $400 million in exclusive apparel this year.

"The designers create a couture line, but the managers leave it to any manufacturer to produce a ready-to-wear line," he added. "Some of what is being produced under very famous labels is absolute junk."

Ley's company, for which his Swedish-born wife, Margaretha, is chief designer, posted a phenomenal 40 percent sales increase in 1988 and has seen an even brisker sales pace so far this year.

"We design our own fabrics and our own color stories," Ley said. "We make our own market and give it a direction. We don't wait around to see how the wind is blowing."

In France, Jacques Mouclier, president of the French Federation of Couturiers, said Ley is right in saying French-designed clothes are made in other countries, but he maintained Paris remains No. 1 in fashion.

"France long ago won the battle in terms of creation, design," he said. "We have the designers, the reputation around the world. The best proof of that is the number of people who come to our shows every season. Why, the number of accredited journalists comes to 2,000. ... We not only have French designers showing their creations but also Japanese, Italian and American, because the capital of fashion is Paris. And it will remain so, for Paris is open and generous to the creative spirit."

THE MAJOR Italian fashion houses in Milan were closed for vacation and officials could not be reached for comment.

But Italian fashion experts have maintained in the past that while the West Germans have made inroads in the more economically priced women's clothes, their fashion is less stylized than Italian ready-to-wear and high fashion garments.

The West Germans use names like Escada, Mondi and Tuzzi, which conjure a Mediterranean image, and that is part of the strategy of those designing for an international customer.

Zahm and Ley said they chose easily uttered names with a international ring to add flair to their image.

Mondi sells $213 million in clothing each year and counts among its customers the Princess Diana, wife of Britain's Prince Charles. She caused a run on the firm's designer socks in 1985 after wearing them to a polo match, and still places regular orders with Mondi each season. For this fall she ordered a wardrobe of burgundy, black and vanilla.

Jil Sander of Hamburg has captured another impressive corner of the up-market with classic styles, subtle colors and natural fabrics that pack well and wear long enough to justify their high-end price tags.

"You can start with a few pieces and build up a basic wardrobe over the years," said Miss Sander, a slender 45-year-old who still models for some of her advertisements. "That's much less costly than getting a lot of clothes and having no style."

HER CLOTHES are produced in West Germany and shown exclusively at the fall and spring fashion fairs in Milan.

Many West German firms have begun farming out some of their production to Eastern Europe and other countries where wages are lower.

Women's Outerwear Associated reported a 22 percent increase in out-of-country preparations last year, although the share accounts for only about 5 percent of total production.

Designers of exclusive sportswear, like Miss Sander and Ley, contend production costs concern them less than maintaining quality, and they plan to continue overseeing their operations close to home.

But for the broader field of clothing producers competing for the middle-income market, contracting out to Eastern Europe or Mediterranean countries is likely to become an attractive means of cutting costs.

Another West German success story is Karl Lagerfeld, who continues to boost his countrymen's image, although he has switched to the Paris house of Chanel.

Lagerfeld still markets the KL line from West Germany and retains a showroom and boutique at the Igedo market.

Part of the attraction for West German designers to the more renowned fashion capitals is likely the glitz and glamor that Duesseldorf lacks, despite its better balance sheet.

"Those things probably matter — that French designers show up with their Beautiful People," Ley noted. "But the Princess of Wales sneaks into our boutique in London at least twice a season. They don't go to the shows, but we have the princes and queens of Europe buying Escada."

Diana Vreeland was a fashion industry legend

By FRANCINE PARNES
Hearst News Service

"Never look back," legendary fashion editor Diana Vreeland said. Yet since her death, luminaries in the world of fashion have paused to memorialize the grand lady of high style.

Reverently dubbed "the high priestess of fashion," she helped set the pace in the industry for half a century.

"She was unique ... she made fashion an art form ... she inspired, informed and made fashion exciting as well as accessible and fun," said Helen Gurley Brown, editor of Cosmopolitan.

"Diana Vreeland was one of the most extraordinary presences in magazine publishing," said Alexander Liberman, editorial director of Conde Nast, who worked with her during her tenure as editor of Vogue.

Born in Paris around the turn of the century, Vreeland declined to divulge her age, claiming she had a devil of a time remembering herself. Her place of birth, however, was another matter: "The first thing to do, my love," she said, "is to arrange to be born in Paris."

"After that, everything follows quite naturally," she added. And she was right, since in 1976 she was awarded the French Legion of Honor.

Vreeland was fashion editor of Harper's Bazaar from 1939 to 1962. She then moved to Vogue, where she was editor in chief until 1971. She then became consultant to the Costume Institute of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, transforming it into a mecca for fashion aficionados worldwide.

"Diana was one of the few unique originals who grew more so as she aged," said Eleanore Phillips Colt, who was West Coast editor for Vogue the entire time Vreeland was with the magazine. Colt noted that Vreeland discovered that Cher was a beauty before anyone had heard of her.

The embodiment of spark, panache and irreverence, Vreeland possessed an inimitable sense of style that set her apart. She was at once aristocratic, yet down-to-earth and pragmatic.

A ceaseless perfectionist with unerring taste, she proclaimed that "Unshined shoes are the 'end' of civilization." Vreeland even polished the soles of her shoes. "You go out to dinner and suddenly you lift your foot and the soles aren't impeccable ... What could be more ordinary?"

Eminently quotable, Vreeland offered pronouncements on many subjects that became dictum:

- On fashion: "Fashion must be the most intoxicating release from the banality of the world."
- On Coco Chanel: "Peasants and geniuses are the only people who count, and she was both."

Vreeland's joie de vivre and flair for the dramatic were reflected in her mad love affair with red, the color of passion. Her cheeks and ear lobes were rouged, her lips and nails were painted like a fire engine, and her Park Avenue digs and her offices were ensconced in a red sea.

Why did she never look back? Vreeland recalled that one day, she had just put one foot into a taxicab when the cab took off, dragging her along as her head bounced on the concrete. When the driver stopped and saw her on the ground, he apologized, claiming it was his first day on the job.

Vreeland said she dusted herself off and urged him to continue en route. "You've got to begin somewhere," she said. "Never look back, boy! ... except in the mirror to see if the person's in the car!"

AT WIT'S END

Boys or girls — which are harder to raise?

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

It's an age-old debate: Who is harder to raise, a boy or a girl? The answer is totally biased and usually depends on what you're raising.

A mother from Houston who has raised two daughters and a son leans toward boys being harder. She says her son is not mean or hateful, just real cute. In the middle of her lunch one day, her son — in his knowledge-is-golden period — observed that she was chewing a mouthful of corn. "How do you like eating the ripe ovaries of an ear of corn?" he asked. He then proceeded to inform her that he learned in school that pear halves were also the ripe ovaries of a pear tree. The kid could replace liquid diets.

When he got his driver's license, he figured out that whoever reached the car first got to be the primary driver of it. Since he is well over 6 feet tall and she is 5-5, he supposed that would put him in the driver's seat for the rest of his life. He was amused he had discovered this.

Mothers of girls are sitting out there reading this and shaking their heads. Cute isn't all that bad. At least with boys you know where you stand. They're honest with their feelings and direct. They spit out what they have to say and get on with their lives.

A daughter would sit at the table and observe her mother eating the same corn for 10 minutes in silence and then mumble, "Gross." If she were asked, "What's the matter?" she would say, "Forget it." When pressed, "Why did you say it was gross?" she would explode, "Look, I don't want to hassle anyone. I just want to eat my meal in peace, OK?"

Five silent minutes later she would add, "That's disgusting!" When asked, "What's disgusting?" she would throw down her napkin and shout, "If you're going to sit there and eat ripe ovaries, don't ask me to watch." With that line, she would exit to her room, where the sound of the door slamming registers 5 on the Richter scale.

Girls tend to be more dramatic, more mysterious, more hostile. It's them against the world. Take the car incident. Girls would never race you to the car. They would simply point out that without a car, life for them is no longer worth living and they will just languish in their rooms taking shallow breaths until the end comes.

All kids are different, whether they be male or female. What sends one into tears doesn't penetrate the skull of the other one. But frankly, I lean toward the theory that boys are easier to raise. As I told my daughter once after I failed to convince her that piercing her ears caused severe depression (mine), "I wish you would have known me last week when I was 10 years younger."

DEAR ABBY

Low self-esteem is heavy burden for kids to bear

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I applaud you for encouraging those who make disparaging remarks about fat people to change their ways. Fat children in our society often receive no support from any source: peers, teachers or family. And, as "Heartbroken Mother" so eloquently stated, parents are often blamed for the child's weight, when "blame" (if any) should be placed on metabolic and genetic factors.

It's unfortunate that you did not take the opportunity to explain the dangers of the "yo-yo dieting syndrome." Children who start dieting at an early age will probably end up fatter as adults than fat children who do not diet. Additionally, severe calorie-restricted diets during the developmental years can damage the body's growth and maturing process. The negative effect that dieting has on a child's self-esteem (giving them the message that they are not acceptable) cannot be overstated.

People come in all colors, shapes and sizes. If we would all be more accepting of the uniqueness of each person, instead of attempting to make everyone conform to a certain physical ideal, we would have a much healthier society, both physically and mentally.

Abby, the National Association to Advance Fat Acceptance (NAAFA) can provide support to fat people, fat children and their parents. NAAFA's purpose is to try to improve the quality of life for fat people through public education, advocacy, research and member support. Please tell your readers who are harassed because of their weight, or their child's weight, to contact us: NAAFA Inc., P.O. Box 188620, Sacramento, Calif. 95818. (When writing, please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.) We can help them in their struggle for acceptance. — SALLY E. SMITH, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, NAAFA

DEAR ABBY: I am writing in response to your answer to "Heartbroken Mother." It appears this woman is really trying very hard to help her daughter, and that's great. But Abby, there are a lot of parents out there who just allow their children to become grossly overweight and deserve the condemning looks they get from passers-by.

These parents just don't seem to care what or how much their children eat, don't care if they get exercise and don't have the time even to teach them how to eat properly. And because of their neglect, the child withstands cruel teasing from his peers and rude stares from strangers, and often develops a low self-image.

These children grow up to be fat adults with high blood pressure, high cholesterol levels, heart problems, arterial blockage, etc. It used to be believed that chubby children were healthier than thinner ones. We now know this to be untrue. It's cruel and unfair for parents to doom their children through obesity to such a dim (and often short) future. — A CONCERNED OBSERVER

DEAR ABBY: You recently printed a letter from "Heartbroken Mother," who thought people were rude to stare at her seriously overweight daughter.

I don't "stare" at overweight children; whenever I see one, though, I say to myself, "That's child abuse!" A fat child is obviously eating too much of the wrong kinds of foods. And where is the child getting these foods? At home.

My 11-year-old daughter has a friend who is grossly overweight because her mother keeps their fridge and cupboards well-stocked with "goodies," which the children are constantly eating. This obese friend is so accustomed to eating sweets that when I gave her and my daughter each a bowl of strawberries, she said she couldn't eat hers without sugar!

Children are not responsible for the eating habits they learn at home, but, unfortunately, they suffer when those eating habits are not in their best interests.

Abby, how can we stop this subtle form of child abuse? — ANTI-CHILD ABUSE

DEAR ANTI-CHILD ABUSE: We can stop rewarding children with cookies and candy.

Bell Safety: Proper safety training key to secure workplaces, first aid, CPR, defensive driving Without well trained personnel, safety equipment at the job or the wellsite is useless. Bell Safety training programs are designed to offer a wide range of safety related training in programs for the oil and gas industry, first aid and CPR training and defensive driving. Qualified instructors provide seminars, lectures and hands on training.

Bell Safety, a division of Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. in Midland, provides a full range of safety equipment and service for the oil and gas industry. In addition to the rental, sales and service of safety equipment, Bell Safety offers a wide range of safety related training.

Courses available to the public range from basic to advanced H_2S survival, basic, advanced and pediatric medic first aid training with the ability to provide instructor certification for the Medic First Aid programs. For responsible driver behavior, Bell Safety offers a DTA defensive driving training course.

Bell Safety instructors provide a pleasant low-stress environment in which the instructors can develop the students' skills and confidence. Instructors give clear, concise answers to students' questions while auditing knowledge and skill development, using positive reinforcement. These ingredients always provide for a smooth flowing class.

Hydrogen sulfide, also known as H_2S, is one of the most deadly hazards in the petroleum industry. Every employer, whose workers may at any time be exposed to H_2S, should be sure they are able to recognize its presence, know how to protect themselves from its lethal effects and how to rescue and administer first aid to victims who are overcome.

Bell Safety H_2S training classes cover the Texas Railroad Commissions Rule 36. From basic H_2S survival to more advanced supervisory training, Bell Safety offers classes on-site or on an individual basis.

The Medic First Aid program offered by Bell Safety is a nationally approved first aid and CPR training designed to train and give individuals knowledge and confidence to cope with medical emergencies. Seven basic skills are taught in depth and provide the performance objectives each student must master in order to successfully complete the course.

These skills include primary assessment; obstructed airway maneuvers; one rescuer CPR; control of bleeding; shock management; illness assessment (how to read body signs and symptoms) and injury assessment (how to identify non-obvious injuries and care for an injured patient). Bell Safety also has the ability to certify instructors for the MFA programs.

Pediatric Medic First Aid is a training course in basic emergency care of infants and children. It can be taught to day care workers as well as to parents in the home. Emphasis in this course is on prevention strategies and the development of the seven basic skills of patient care. Pediatric Medic First Aid is a nationally approved program. It is the most complete and comprehensive training course available for pediatric care.

In this course, CPR and first aid are integrated into one eight hour course, allowing the first aider to function with one consistent set of priorities beginning with airway, breathing and circulation. Students learn the same priorities of care and approach to the patient used by professionals. This results in continuity of care as the patient is passed on to paramedic, nurse and doctor. Bystander intervention and continuity of care can significantly increase a patient's chance for survival.

The Driver's Training Associates program for driver improvement focuses on driver attitude and how it controls behavior. The course objectives increase knowledge and awareness of the highway transportation system, helps to recognize the importance of safe driving behavior and studies defensive driving strategies through the use of case studies.

Bell Safety recognizes the ever present need for safety in the workplace and is offering a wide range of training courses to meet or exceed your needs. For additional information, contact Randy Williams at 915/694-9653.

Fall car care, friendly service found at Chaparral Wash & Lube

Chaparral Wash and Lube Center customers are repeat customers because the service is consistently friendly and professional. From left are Chaparral lube center customer Fred Byrom, owner Leon Jeffcoat and lube center technician C.C. Banks.

With fall in the air, it's time to check your oil and antifreeze levels before cold weather sneaks up on you. Many of you may be heading out of town for weekend football games, too, so there's no better time than now to spruce up the inside and the outside of your car. Come in to Chaparral Wash and Lube Center and let the car cleaning professionals get the mud, dust and road grime off and shine up your car for fall and winter driving.

While at Chaparral, why not get your car's oil changed and vital fluids checked, in addition to receiving the best car wash Midland has to offer. A free car wash is offered with each oil change at Chaparral. The center is conveniently located at 2300 N. Big Spring.

Chaparral owner, Texas Tech graduate and Midland businessman Leon Jeffcoat invites you in to measure the difference that this centrally-located wash and lube center has to offer. The friendly professionals at Chaparral Wash and Lube can help give your car the look and feel you want for cooler driving weather.

Also, if your car is showing signs of nasty street tar, Chaparral detail experts can get that off so you won't have to work up a sweat. You may have even tracked the tar into your car. Carpet and upholstery shampooing are also available. Just ask for an estimate.

Or, come by and pamper your car with some of the other extra Chaparral services you can combine with your detail car wash. For a minimal charge, the staff can hand wax, add white wall cleaner, wire wheel cleaner, a polish wax, interior dash and door treatment, bumper and trim gloss, car freshener and a vinyl top treatment.

A full service car wash, which includes a wash by gentle cleansers, chamois brushes and soft water is just $6.95. Standard vans and Suburbans are just $2.00 extra. Each car is treated to a thorough wash down before is is cleaned gently by the brushes. Vacuuming, hand drying and window cleaning are included in the low price. A discount is given with the purchase of Texaco gasoline.

A free car wash is offered with each oil change in the Chaparral lube center. Prices for the oil change and lube range from $15.50 to $21.50, and these prices have remained the same for more than three years. Pennzoil, Quaker State, Havoline and other major brands of oil are available. Jeffcoat recommends an oil change for your car every three months or 3,000 miles.

You get more than just an oil change and lube in the Chaparral lube center. Technician C.C. Banks enjoys a reputation for being friendly, knowledgeable and able to trouble spot car problems. "C.C., in addition to being personable, has many years of experience in car maintenance," explained Jeffcoat.

You'll also get your battery, tires, belts and hoses examined. Your vehicle is checked for important proper fluid levels, including brake, power steering, transmission and windshield washer fluids. As a part of this service, these fluids are replenished, if your car needs it.

For an additional charge, Chaparral can install transmission oil, freon, light bulbs and windshield wiper refills.

Generally open on rainy days, Chaparral's lube center and gasoline pumps are at your service. With the purchase of gasoline or an oil change, if the clouds are threatening, you'll receive a rain check for your next car wash.

Chaparral Wash and Lube Center is conveniently located at the corner of Big Spring and Scharbauer Drive. Texaco, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover cards are accepted.

Hours are 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays. Call 682-8013 for more information.

Teacher honored for caring attitude

BEAUMONT (AP) — It was another teacher who got Penny Beasley interested in teaching.

"She took an interest in every one of us," Beasley said of her ninth-grade home economics teacher in Longview. "It was just that added personal attention. She paid a lot of attention to me and told me I could do anything.

"I wish to do the same," she said. "I want to encourage and hug the kids and put my arm around them and lighten their day if I can."

Her fellow teachers recently honored Beasley's efforts to follow in her mentor's footsteps. The Beaumont A&M Club recently named the West Brook Senior High School home economics teacher the 1989 Outstanding High School Teacher.

Teachers at the three senior high schools and the two ninth-grade campuses in the city each nominated a teacher for the annual award. A secret committee of the Beaumont A&M Club then chose a winner from five finalists, club spokesman Charles Weinbaum said.

"I was honored," said the energetic, 37-year-old educator. "There are so many wonderful teachers, I never dreamed I would win."

Although a Longview native, Beasley has spent her 15-year high school teaching career in Beaumont. She taught at Beaumont-Charlton-Pollard High School and later at Central Senior High School before transferring this past year to West Brook.

"Home economics is so important for kids, because it works with the whole student," Beasley said. Beasley said she tries to make home economics class relevant to her students' daily lives.

"Even though they come in with the attitude that it is simple, I try to make it practical and relate it to everyday living," she said. "Even though they think it's a snap course, they are learning and I hope they will get some benefit from it."

Home economics has expanded beyond cooking and sewing to include subjects such as parenting and family living, Beasley said. Many teenagers must help raise their younger brothers and sisters as more households have either one parent or two working parents.

Beasley also strives to interest her students in community service. She had her class fill bags this week with toys and goodies for children in the hospital. Lined up against the wall of her classroom were several bags with clothing and personal items for the local shelter for battered women.

Her interest in community work came from her teaching inspiration, Blanche Audibert, who Beasley said now lives in Beaumont after her retirement from Longview. West Brook assistant principal Larry Schimkowitsch, who taught at Central with Beasley, praised his colleague.

"She has the rare ability to combine understanding and caring with discipline. Her students know she cares about them and is willing to go the extra mile," he said.

Several of Beasley's students appreciate her efforts. "She's nice. She's real sweet," senior Yolanda Dugar said. "She teaches things I would have never known about or heard about and explains it to you in a way you will understand."

Beasley said her teaching philosophy is to look on the bright side. "You have to look for something positive every day," she said. "There are a lot of days that it is hard to get up and go to school, but there is the one child there that makes it all worthwhile."

STATE IN BRIEF

Candidate says potential opponent violated code

AUSTIN (AP) — State treasurer candidate Karen Friend on Monday accused a potential Democratic primary opponent, Harris County Treasurer Nikki Van Hightower, of violating the Texas Election Code.

"In the spirit of fair play, I invite Nikki to explain her actions, announce her intentions, and be honest with the people of Texas," Ms. Friend said.

Ms. Van Hightower has not formally announced for state treasurer. The Texas Constitution requires county officials with more than a year left in their terms to resign if they run for another position. Her county treasurer's term expires Jan. 1, 1991.

"Let's clear up one misconception — a person does not have to stand on the courthouse steps and announce 'I am a candidate' to indeed be a candidate," Ms. Friend said.

Ms. Friend alleged that Ms. Van Hightower, among other actions, has illegally solicited campaign funds without designating a campaign treasurer for state office.

Ms. Van Hightower did not immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

Ms. Friend said she would ask the Texas secretary of state for an investigation if Ms. Van Hightower does not correct what she termed in a statement "apparent violations of the Election Code."

Death penalty bill pushed

AUSTIN (AP) — A state lawmaker said he plans to push a bill in the November special session allowing those convicted of murdering a child to be given the death penalty.

"It is time Texas made clear that our children are going to be protected," said Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson.

"The death penalty should be reserved for the worst kind of crimes committed in this state," he said. "I can think of no crime worse than intentionally taking the life of an innocent child."

The legislation narrowly failed in the regular session and first special session this year, Brown said. He said he has asked Gov. Bill Clements, who controls the special session agenda, to include the issue in the session that begins Nov. 14.

Rossanna Salazar, Clements' press secretary, said, "Certainly the senator's request will be considered, but at this time, no decision has been made."

Teen testifies in assault trial

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Former Clark High School teacher Lou Ann Hogan told a friend and former student that she had oral sex with Chad Cadenhead, the former student has testified.

Kate Thornton, 18, a freshman at Stephens College in Columbia, Mo., Monday told the court between sobs the confession was made Dec. 11, 1987, in the women's restroom of a restaurant after she and Mrs. Hogan had eaten dinner with another friend and with the teacher's husband, Mike.

Mrs. Hogan is being tried on two counts of sexual assault of a child for allegedly having sex with Cadenhead, who was 16 at the time, on Dec. 5 and 11, 1987.

Cadenhead committed suicide Jan. 28, 1988, six weeks after the alleged trysts and just 10 days after he turned 17, the legal age of consent.

After Cadenhead's death, Mrs. Hogan made Miss Thornton promise to keep secret what she knew of Mrs. Hogan's relationship with Cadenhead, Miss Thornton said.

Cemetery plots for sale

AUSTIN (AP) — State Land Commissioner Garry Mauro is offering plots in a cemetery that holds the remains of four former Texas governors.

The 17 plots in Oakwood Cemetery are scheduled to be sold Oct. 25, with a minimum total bid of $16,000.

Mauro said no one seems to know how the plots became state property, but the State School for the Blind has owned them since the late 1800s.

"Cemetery plots are not our usual line," Mauro said. "But we are charged with disposing of unneeded state land. It doesn't matter whether it's unproductive desert or, I guess in this case, cemetery space."

Oakwood, just east of Interstate 35 in Austin, is the burial ground for former Govs. Jim Hogg, Elijah Pease and O.B. Colquitt, as well as the provisional governor appointed by President Lincoln in 1865, Andrew Jackson Hamilton.

Funds donated for Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — House Speaker Gib Lewis announced Monday that nearly $39,000 was donated during 1989 Speaker's Day activities, and the money will used for renovation of the west wing of the Capitol.

Lewis said the Capitol "is not only a national landmark; it is also a symbol of the many years of commitment it has taken to build this great state."

Mayor says she will fight recall drive

GARLAND (AP) — The mayor of this Dallas suburb says a recall drive has not dampened her support of a proposed state highway that would cut across town.

Mayor Ruth Nicholson's support of the planned roadway has divided the community. About 1,400 residents have signed a petition to recall her. Opponents need about 800 more signatures by Oct. 16 are needed to get the proposal on a January ballot.

The mayor said she will fight the recall movement, emphasizing her nine years on the city council and previous term as mayor.

Mrs. Nicholson supports a plan for State Highway 190, which links Interstate 30 in Mesquite to Interstate 35E in Carrollton, to extend along the west side of Lake Ray Hubbard. Such an extension would displace about 250 families, officials say.

Many homeowners in the affected area say they would prefer the highway take a route through Rockwall, a more rural area on the other side of the lake.

The mayor said she supports the highway extension because traffic projections show the need for another north-south route through Garland by 2010.

Stopping construction and development in the area now there would be premature, Mrs. Nicholson says, because precise placement and approval will take years.

"Unless you know a certain project is going in, a city really exposes itself to certain legal action when you put a moratorium on an area," Mrs. Nicholson said.

The recall petition criticizes Mrs. Nicholson for her stand on the highway plan and for "her continuing refusal to acknowledge" that Garland residents and developers were building houses in the highway area.

Homeowner Charles Hodge organized the recall petition. He said he expects his home to be devalued if the highway cuts through Garland.

"She's irresponsible and unresponsive, and the people are sick of it. She treats us with disdain," Hodge said.

A separate homeowners group fighting the highway proposal has not taken a stand on the recall petition.

Former Garland council member Tom Jefferies said he was displeased with the recall petition. "We have a regularly scheduled election coming up in May," he said.

Voters in the suburb east of Dallas face another volatile issue in November, when they will decide whether to remain part of the Dallas Area Rapid Transit system, a debate which led to the recall of Garland council member Carl Maroney in January.

Hobby, Truan receive awards from Sierra Club

AUSTIN (AP) — The Lone Star Chapter of the Sierra Club announced that Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and state Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, have been selected to receive special "defense awards" for their longtime commitment to the environment.

In addition, the chapter on Monday selected the following lawmakers for awards: Environmental Health, Rep. Al Granoff, D-Dallas; Parks and Wildlife, Rep. Mike McKinney, D-Centerville; and Water Resources, Rep. Lena Guerrero, D-Austin.

Obviously, Oakland's top pitcher Dave Stewart doesn't care too much about having to take batting practice.

Cy Young or no, A's rely on Stew

By PHIL COLLIER
Copley News Service

OAKLAND, Calif. — Dave Stewart's 62 victories over the last three seasons have not merited a Cy Young Award or even a World Series ring — yet.

Monday, as he awaited the pitching assignment in Tuesday night's first game of the American League Championship Series, the 32-year-old Oakland right-hander was asked how it felt to be overshadowed this season by 23-game winner Bret Saberhagen of Kansas City.

"I had a good season," said Stewart, 21-9, who is matched against Toronto's Dave Stieb, 17-8, in the opener of the best-of-seven series. "I've won 62 games the last three seasons, which is overshadowed by no one. I don't have anything to prove to anybody."

Stewart, signed by the A's after Philadelphia released him in the spring of 1986, was denied the Cy Young Award after he compiled a 20-13 record here in 1987 and again last season after he went 21-12. He will fail again this year because Saberhagen had the lower earned-run average (2.16 to 3.32).

However, the A's believe Stewart, a 10-year major-league veteran, will carry them to the World Series championship they were denied last season by the surprising Dodgers. Stewart was 0-1 in two starts against Los Angeles, though he allowed only five earned runs in 14 and one-third World Series innings.

"Hopefully," he said, "pitching in the playoffs and Series last year will help this time."

Stewart is 8-5 lifetime against Toronto's AL East champions, including a 1-1 record and 4.05 ERA in two starts this year.

"We hit him pretty good one time in Toronto this year, but he's given us fits over the years," said Cito Gaston, the freshman Toronto manager who becomes the first black to take a team into postseason play.

Stieb, who had a 3.35 ERA during the regular season, went 1-1 with a 4.91 ERA against the A's and is 9-12 against them lifetime.

Before Monday's workouts at the Oakland Coliseum, Stieb said his first priority is to keep Oakland leadoff batter Rickey Henderson off base. Henderson led the majors with 77 steals in 91 attempts this year and scored 72 runs in 85 games after coming here from the Yankees in a midseason trade.

"You don't want Rickey on base with all their power hitters coming up," Stieb said in reference to Dave Henderson (15 homers, 80 RBI), Jose Canseco (17 HR in only 65 games, with 57 RBI), Mark McGwire (33 HR, 95 RBI) and Dave Parker (22 HR, 97 RBI).

The A's are favored in the game to be televised nationally over NBC starting at 7 p.m. (CDT). Oakland, playing in the much tougher West, Troy Aikman, the $11 million Cowboy, will miss at least a month.

Ankrom now third in Cowboy QB line

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The third string quarterback for the Dallas Cowboys is none other than former Texas Christian star, Scott Ankrom.

Coach Jimmy Johnson said rookie wide receiver Ankrom would be the Cowboys' emergency third stringer should Steve Walsh and Babe Laufenberg go down on Sunday against the Green Bay Packers.

Doctors operated on $11 million rookie quarterback Troy Aikman's non-passing hand Monday, inserting four screws into a broken finger and putting on a cast that will sideline him at least a month.

Aikman, who suffered a broken index finger on his left hand in the first period of the winless Dallas Cowboys' 30-13 loss to the New York Giants Sunday, will wear the cast for three weeks.

The Cowboys estimate that the earliest Aikman could return is four weeks with six weeks more likely.

"Realistically he will be out four ball games," Johnson said. "We'll take a look at him before the fifth."

Aikman, the top pick in the regular NFL draft from UCLA, was tackled by linebacker Carl Banks while scrambling eight yards for a first down. He returned to the huddle and asked lineman Kevin Gogan to look at the finger.

"I thought it was just a dislocation and asked Kevin to give it a hard pull and a jerk, which didn't help," Aikman said.

"I gave it a hard pull like he asked and I sure hope I didn't hurt it more," Gogan said.

Dr. Robert Vandermeer, the Cowboys' team physician, said Aikman "was very fortunate it wasn't his throwing hand. That would have been a season-ender."

The left index finger absorbs a lot of the shock in the snap from center and it would be difficult for Aikman to play without fumbling.

Steve Walsh, the top pick in the supplemental draft from the University of Miami who is earning about $1 million a year, replaced Aikman

Jays try again to win big one

By JIM DONAGHY

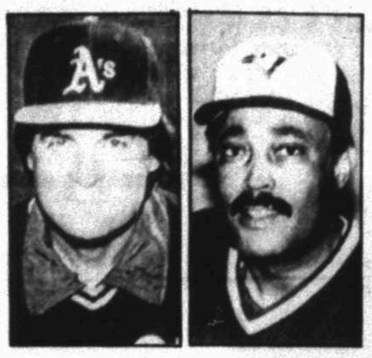
OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Cito Gaston rejects the talk that the Toronto Blue Jays can't win the big one.

In the next week, the Toronto manager wants to prove it against the Oakland Athletics.

The Blue Jays blew a 3-1 lead to Kansas City in the 1985 playoffs. Two years later, Toronto lost its last seven games to lose the American League East to Detroit.

"As far as big games," Gaston said, "you have to think about what happened.

"In '85, we had KC down 3-1, but they came back to beat us just like they did to St. Louis to win the World Series. We had two of our best guys go down in 1987 (shortstop Tony Fernandez and catcher Ernie Whitt) that really hurt us."



Tony La Russa Cito Gaston

Last weekend, the current Blue Jays started to chip away at their image problem by rallying twice against Baltimore to win the AL East.

"Cito reminds me a lot of Joe Torre as a manager," Lee Mazzilli said. "He's calm and treats everyone fair. He was a player so he understands certain situations."

Gaston will send Dave Stieb (17-8) against Dave Stewart (21-9) tonight in Game 1.

The Blue Jays will need some great pitching by Steib, who three times in his career has lost a no-hitter in the ninth inning.

"I guess you have to look at the different degrees of pressure," Stieb said. "We as players don't look at it that way, although the media likes to. My job is the same every time out. I have to go out Tuesday with my best stuff and do the job."

The A's, meanwhile, have been criticized for being too laid back.

"That's one of my raw nerves," Manager Tony La Russa said. "It seems like some media people say, unless in the clubhouse before or after the game you have players talking controversial stuff, putting the opponents down, or bragging about themselves, that it's not an emotional clubhouse."

The A's, despite injuries to Jose Canseco, Dennis Eckersley and Walt Weiss, finished with a major league-high 99 victories and a second straight AL West title.

"When you watch us play, there is no way this club doesn't have a lot of heart," La Russa said. "We slide as hard as anybody, we run the ball out as hard as anybody. I just don't think we talk as much as the writers would like us to."

Chaps finish third

Midland College's Andrew Coltart may have felt a little pressure going into the final round of the first National Intercollegiate Invitational golf tournament Monday at Mission Country Club.

Coltart, who held the lead in the individual medal race before teeing off Monday with a two-round 139 total, saw the wheels fall off his putting game on the back side and finished with an eight-over par 80. Not helping matters was the fact that Coltart was looking over his shoulder at New Mexico Junior College's Shane Bertch.

Bertch, who was three shots behind Coltart after Sunday's round, sizzled the last 18 holes for a six under 66 to vault him atop the medalist standings with a 208 total.

Despite Coltart's demise, which dropped him from the top of the leader board into a tie for sixth place, MC was able to earn third place in the team standings with a three-day score of 903. Odessa College's White squad won the tourney with an 886 final tally while Central Alabama Community College was second with an 892 score.

Dean Robertson shot the Chaps' best score with a 73 to give him a 220 for the tournament and an eighth-place tie in the individual ranks. Other MC linksters who helped the Chaps pull into third place from a fourth-place tie Sunday were Brad Wells (81-80-75—236), Mark Kochan (80-80-78—238) and Mike Johnson (78-77-76—231).

Coltart, however pleased with the team's finish, was disconsolate over his personal performance in the last round.

"I was going along OK until the 12th, then I four-putted and everything screwed up. I bogied every hole after that except 18," Coltart

Philadelphia quarterback Randall Cunningham, right, hustles away from a dominating Chicago defense, something he did virtually all night Monday. Cunningham, held to just over 50 yards in first half passing was intercepted four times.

Ditka shows Buddy who's the boss

By MALCOLM MORAN
New York Times News Service

CHICAGO — More than 10 months later, for too much of a cool, clear night, the Philadelphia Eagles were still in a fog at Soldier Field.

The last time the Eagles faced the Chicago Bears near the shore of Lake Michigan, that bizarre weather turned a playoff game into a mystery.

This time, as the Chicago fans taunted the Eagle coach and former Bear assistant, Buddy Ryan, the shroud consisted of a Bear defense that held Philadelphia without a touchdown for nearly 48 minutes in a 27-13 victory.

With a running game that was limited to 67 yards, the Philadelphia quarterback Randall Cunningham attempted 62 passes, a team record, and completed 32 for 401 yards. Cunningham threw for 246 yards in the fourth quarter.

But Cunningham's four sacks and four interceptions — the most since his second professional game in 1985 — contributed to a problem that even his fourth quarter effort could not overcome.

Meanwhile, the Bear quarterback, Mike Tomczak, threw three touchdown passes, hitting on 24 of 38 passes for 266 yards.

The Bears (4-0) remained one of three undefeated teams in the National Football League.

Philadelphia (2-2) lost for the 22d time in 26 regular-season games against the Bears and the 13th consecutive time in Chicago.

Philadelphia was held scoreless in the first half for the first time in 40 games. The Eagles did not convert a third-down play until 3 minutes remained in the third quarter.

Chicago challenged Cunningham in a first half. He completed just 7 of 19 passes in the first half for 51 yards and suffered three sacks.

And just as Richard Dent became an overpowering presence in the Super Bowl season, the Bear defensive end was a force Monday night.

Ironically for OC's championship White team, which won by six strokes, No.1 player Lance Mullin was disqualified for a signing an incorrect scorecard following the final round. Instead of Mullin's 73 for the day, OC was forced to score fifth player Scott Turner's 83.

"Instead of checking the hole-by-hole score, he saw that the total was right and signed it," said OC coach Kyle Howard. "He shouldn't have even bothered with the total but maybe we learned a lesson from it.

"But we feel good about the win. The guys played well and scored lower than we anticipated. We hadn't been practicing that well but they really came through when the tournament began."

Dent had already hit Cunningham for a 10-yard loss in the first quarter when he influenced a play that helped the Bears take a lead.

On third down from the Eagle 49, 6 yards from a first down, Dent's rush forced Cunningham to step ahead in the pocket and throw as he moved forward.

Cunningham's pass toward Keith Jackson sailed over the tight end and into the hands of the safety Shaun Gayle at the Chicago 49.

The following Bear drive appeared ended after Tomczak threw an incomplete pass on third down.

Buffs climb to third

Associated Press

If motivation is the only factor, Colorado won't stop at No. 3 in the Associated Press college football poll.

Colorado players dedicated the 1989 season to quarterback Sal Aunese, who died Sept. 23 of stomach cancer. The Buffaloes have made it a season worthy of their former leader, charging to a 4-0 record and their highest ranking since 1977.

But tight end John Perak said Monday that No. 3 isn't enough.

"We promised Sal the last time we talked to him that we would be the No. 1 team in the nation," Perak said. "We really need to press hard and get that No. 1 ranking for Sal."

Colorado thrashed Washington 45-28 on Saturday, the Huskies' worst home loss in 60 years, to improve two spots in the rankings. Notre Dame and Miami, Fla., remain 1-2.

The jump in the rankings came as a funeral was held at Oceanside, Calif., for Aunese. Colorado coach Bill McCartney said Aunese was an example of courage.

"We saw Sal compete. ... We saw him fighting the greatest of odds ... but we never saw him down," McCartney said. "He was always upbeat, always spirited.

Judson, Permian still one, two in AP poll

Associated Press

While the top ranked teams in The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll scored easy victories, a pair of No. 2 ranked teams suffered losses and both teams tumbled in the rankings.

Katy Mayde Creek, ranked No. 2 in Class 4A last week, lost to Tomball, which jumped from No. 8 to No. 6 following its 30-22 victory.

Gainesville and Hamshire Fannett, ranked second and third in Class 3A, each lost to Class 4A schools and fell to No. 5 and No. 10.

The No. 1s, Converse Judson in 5A, Paris if 4A, Southlake Carroll in 3A, Groveton in 2A and Munday in A, all easily held their positions.

Judson, Groveton and Munday had lopsided shutout victories.

West Orange-Stark defeated Beaumont Central, the No. 8 ranked 5A team, 47-33 and moved up from No. 3 to No. 2 in 4A.

Ballinger defeated Stamford 67-0 and jumped from fourth to second in 3A, filling the void left by Gainesville and Hamshire Fannett.

Beaumont Central was replaced in the 5A rankings by Corpus Christi Carroll, 4-0, and Plano dropped from No. 7 to No. 10 after it was tied by Richardson Pearce, 14-14.

Renewed attitude evident in Lamesa

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

LAMESA — James Williams had a rough junior season at Lamesa High School, no doubt about it.

Not only did the Golden Tornado running back miss most of the last half of the season with a bum knee, but the Tors finished far back in the District 3-3A pack.

With 208 yards in the Tors' first four games, Williams probably isn't going to set any rushing records in the Tors' balanced wishbone attack, but the senior did help get Lamesa off to a decent start with a team-high 63 yards rushing in a 21-all tie against highly-regarded Brownfield last Friday. The offensive line, led by guards Chris Layton and Xavier Vera, staked the Tors to 195 yards rushing and 15 first downs.

Williams, who moved to fullback from left halfback during pre-season drills, credits the conditioning program of new Coach Earl Overton with igniting the spark that has kept the Tors hovering around .500 this season after years as a doormat in the old District 2-4A.

Area Football
Area Prep Standings, Page 3C

"There's a new attitude here," Williams said. "We're doing a whole lot more running and we're in a whole lot better shape.

"We're not giving up in the third and fourth quarters like we used to."

Overton established his reputation at Kermit, building the Yellowjacket gridders into a Class 3A power in the early 1980s. Even though the Tors have seen limited success in recent years, he liked what he saw when he arrived last February.

"The kids worked hard in the off-season, and that helped us get ready to play.

"I think any time you work hard for something, you will line up and fight because you've made a big investment to get ready," Overton added.

The Tors also got strong performances from left halfbacks Michael Brown (42 yards) and Johnny Baltazar (32 yards on only four carries), and right half Keene Hunter (26 yards). Williams said the real key was an offensive line that averages well over 200 pounds per man, led by the 223-pound Layton and 220-pound Vera.

"We could have never done it without our line," the fullback said.

Layton, too, points to an attitude change.

"We have a lot more enthusiasm," he said. "Everybody on our team wants to win.

"I think we can go far," Layton added. "I believe we can make the playoffs."

Playoffs might be a tall order for the Tors unless they can upset either Denver City or Post, but nobody feels a winning season is beyond reach.

The Tors dropped their opener to defending District 1-4A champion Levelland by five points, before trouncing the Midland Lee JV and losing to Class 4A Andrews in consecutive weeks to wrap up their non-district schedule.

Cocaine really is expensive. Look what it almost cost this man.

He's getting help at a Drug Rehabilitation Center. They got help from the United Way. All because the United Way got help from you.

Your single contribution helps provide therapy for a child with a learning disability, a program that sends a volunteer to do the shopping for a 79 year-old woman, and a place for a 12 year-old to toss a basketball around after school.

Or, in this case, rehabilitation for a cocaine abuser. A man who, without your help, could very well have ended up paying the ultimate price.

You could look through all the bridge books in your library without finding a single clue on how you should bid this hand. That's because bridge writers concentrate on describing how to bid the sort of hand that crops up with considerable frequency, rather than a once-in-a-lifetime holding.

Our own preference would be to show the spade suit after the two-heart response, but we can't fault South for electing to rebid a solid seven-card suit first. North correctly set the trump suit by raising diamonds, and South, obviously a bit of a plunger, decided to end the auction by gambling on a grand slam in diamonds.

West led the queen of clubs, taken in the closed hand. At first glance it might seem that declarer is going to need the spade finesse for the fulfilling trick. That might well turn out to be necessary, but there is another chance that declarer tested first.

South led a diamond to dummy's eight and ruffed a heart high. Another trump to the nine drew the last enemy fang and provided the entry to cash the ace and king of hearts for two spade discards, followed by another heart ruff.

Had the heart suit not divided evenly, declarer would have had to cross back to the board with the last trump and try the spade finesse. However, this was his lucky day. Hearts were 4-4, and a long heart was established in dummy. The jack of diamonds provided the entry, and declarer was able to discard the queen of spades, thus making the slam without having to resort to a finesse.

Violinist wants to get back 'to my music and my life' after drug case resolved

EDGARTOWN, Mass. (AP) — Violinist Eugene Fodor said he hopes to rebuild his life and career now that he's been placed on probation for pleading guilty to a drug-related break-in.

"I regard this event as a major turning point in my life," Fodor said Monday after a Dukes County court hearing.

"Of course I'm relieved that this ordeal is over," he said. "The experience has been a frightening and profound one. What I want to do now is get back to my music and my life."

Fodor, 39, of New York City, pleaded guilty to breaking into a Martha's Vineyard motel room, where he was found July 27.

A search of the room found a bottle containing more than 20 grams of cocaine, a hypodermic needle with a small amount of heroin and a dagger, authorities said.

A county grand jury met Monday morning and returned indictments of breaking and entering, possession of heroin and cocaine and possession of drug paraphernalia.

After lawyers on both sides conferred, Fodor pleaded guilty to the break-in charge, which carried a maximum penalty of six months in jail.

Judge Raymond Cross, however, placed Fodor on three years' probation, in which he must continue a drug treatment program and will be subject to random testing.

Fodor pleaded innocent to the other charges, and they were placed on file, pending completion of probation.

"This shouldn't have been treated as a serious criminal matter and it wasn't," defense attorney Michael Altman said. "Eugene Fodor has been to a treatment center and has turned his life around."

Born in Denver, Fodor began playing violin at age 8. He has performed at the White House and in Moscow, where in 1974 he became the first American medalist at the Tchaikovsky Violin Competition.

DALLAS (AP) — Willis M. Tate, who was president of Southern Methodist University for nearly 20 years, died of an apparent heart attack Sunday while on a trip to Colorado. He was 77.

Tate was the university's president from 1954 to 1971 and again from July 1974 to October 1975. He retired as chancellor in 1976 and since then had served as president emeritus of SMU.

Tate was an all-conference tackle and an honorable mention All-American in 1931, when SMU won the Southwest Conference football championship.

He received his bachelor's and master's degrees from SMU. After teaching and serving as a school principal in San Antonio, Tate returned to SMU in 1945 as assistant dean of students.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A formal agreement has been signed to establish The Andy Warhol Museum to display the late pop artist's works.

Signing the agreement Monday were the Dia Art Foundation, The Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts, both of New York, and The Carnegie Institute. The Pittsburgh-based institute will establish and maintain the museum.

British curator Mark Francis was appointed director of The Andy Warhol Museum as well as curator of contemporary art for The Carnegie.

The museum will be in the present Volkwein Brothers Building on Pittsburgh's North Side. It will contain more than 700 artworks by Warhol, a Pittsburgh-area native who died in 1987 following gall bladder surgery.

The museum is expected to open in the fall of 1992. Plans call for climate-controlled galleries, a library-archive and a bookstore.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Robert Culp says he made Bill Cosby an actor, putting his own career in jeopardy to save their mid-1960s "I Spy" show and Cosby's future with it.

Culp

"Bill was not much of an actor when I first met him, and he struck me as the angriest man alive," Culp said in this week's TV Guide magazine. "He had this tremendous chip on his shoulder, as if the world owed him a living."

Culp said Cosby's performance in the first episode of the television show didn't impress Grant Tinker, then NBC's West Coast programming chief, and he canceled the show.

Culp said he defended Cosby and pressured NBC to give the series another chance.

Cosby

"I was convinced Bill was going to be right for the part," Culp said. "People only had to be patient. I knew it was risky to go out on such a limb, but I was sure I could make Bill an actor overnight by rewriting the scripts for him. So I told Leonard: 'If NBC gets rid of Bill, they'll have to get rid of me, too.' "

Cosby won't talk about the matter and Tinker has trouble recalling the events, TV Guide said. But the show's executive producer, Sheldon Leonard, disagreed with Culp's comments on the early cancellation order, saying NBC had a year's commitment.

"The show couldn't be canceled," Leonard said. But he added, "There were some doubts about Cosby's acting — he had only been a stand-up comic."

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Mick Jagger joined some fans in a short jam session in the parking lot of Sullivan Stadium before a sold-out Rolling Stones show.

Eighteen fans from Biddeford, Maine, were sitting around their rented camper playing Stones songs Sunday when a guy in a hooded sweatshirt and sunglasses came by. When the hood and glasses were lifted, Jagger emerged.

"Is there a word that carries more of an impact than 'shocked?' " asked Chris Robinson, 27.

"It was mind-blowing," he said. "Mick made several lifetime dreams happen."

Linn Tanzman, a publicist for the Stones tour, confirmed that Jagger participated in the session.

Robinson and friend Jim O'Neil said Jagger wandered up to the group as they were singing "You Can't Always Get What You Want."

"We started to stop (singing), but he motioned to us to keep going," O'Neil said. "I thought, 'If he wants to hear it, fine.' "

Robinson handed the 46-year-old rock star a percussion instrument, and suggested he sing a verse or two.

"Where are we?" Jagger asked.

"The drugstore," said Robinson, referring to a verse in the song.

Jagger picked up the song, and for the next five minutes Robinson, O'Neil and their friends got to accompany their hero.

"Mick's voice was great," Robinson said. "He did 'You Can't Always Get What You Want' during the concert, but he sounded better on our version."

Oil prices expected to remain strong

By ANNE PEARSON
Hearst News Service

Even if OPEC fails to sculpt a new quota system at its November meeting, analysts believe oil prices will remain strong in the next few months, and that could help loosen the purse strings for new drilling next year.

"We're already seeing that," one oil company executive said, adding that the best prospects for increased drilling are overseas.

Analysts were mixed on their prognosis for the success of a compromise presented by the Iranian oil minister at a meeting last week in Geneva of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The Iranian plan restructures the division of production quotas among OPEC's 13 members to satisfy those seeking a bigger share of the output.

The cartel is looking for a way to give Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates the right to produce more in hopes of persuading them to stop ignoring their quotas. At the same time, the cartel wants to protect the interests of others who depend on high oil prices for revenues.

The problem is that some less powerful countries that can produce more than they are today will be asked to make sacrifices for the two Persian Gulf members – sacrifices that will be politically and economically unattractive at home.

Venezuela, for example, claims it has the ability to produce 2.8 million barrels a day, one oil company analyst said, but its share of the overall OPEC quota is just 1.8 million barrels.

Iraq also may be reluctant to forgo a quota increase as proposed by its arch-rival Iran, one analyst suggested.

Iraq has dramatically increased its reserve estimates, is increasing its production capacity and has built a new pipeline through Saudi Arabia that will boost its export capacity.

But another oil industry observer said he thinks Iraq may hold fast for the time being to a pledge by Iraqi Oil Minister Issam Abdul Raheem Chalabi to be a team player.

"It might not be their turn (to get more production) this time," said one crude supply manager with a large U.S. oil company. "They got their turn last time," he said, referring to OPEC's earlier agreement to give Iraq production parity with Iran.

Iraq may wait until OPEC's first meeting in 1990 to ask for another "turn," the oil supply manager said.

Libya also may continue to be a problem, one analyst said, even though the Iranian plan would allow it to keep its existing market share. Libya's oil minister insisted during last week's meeting that it must have parity with Kuwait.

Paul Mlotok, an oil analyst with Morgan Stanley & Co. in New York, said one of the biggest surprises from last week's meeting was that Iran dreamed up a plan lot of OPEC delegates said they supported.

"Here's a country that has been one of the difficult ones in the past, and they came in with really a very statesmanlike compromise," Mlotok said. "That was very significant to me."

Iran had fought bitterly against giving Iraq the same quota as Iran.

Some observers have said today's high prices and brisk demand for OPEC oil make it easy for OPEC ministers to "decide not to decide" on how to redivide their quotas. But Mlotok said he believes the specter of lower demand in the first quarter will keep them working seriously in the next two months toward an agreement.

The OPEC ministerial monitoring committee's decision to raise its quota by 1 million barrels to 20.5 million barrels a day was a "non- event," said Cyrus H. Tahmassebi, chief economist for Ashland Oil Co.

The strong market has nothing to do what what OPEC did last week or may do before its next scheduled meeting Nov. 25 in Vienna, he said.

Analysts believe the demand for OPEC oil in the fourth quarter will be 22 million to 22.5 million barrels a day, although it is expected to drop in the first quarter of 1990 because of seasonal factors.

As demand rises and the quota presumably creeps up during the next few meetings, countries such as Algeria, Indonesia and Iran will be pumping as much as they can, and countries such as Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates presumably will take over by default the shares smaller producers cannot use.

Busy DFW International Airport is at the crossroads in its future as it nears capacity. Noise could curtail expansion plans.

DFW TOMORROW?

Airport's future up in the air

By JOHN A. BOLT
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport has become the nation's second busiest since opening 15 years ago and some projections make it the busiest within the next 15. But disturbing background noises are rumbling out at the 18,000-acre field midway between the two Texas cities.

With 120 takeoffs and landings an hour, DFW is nearing capacity and its horseshoe-shape terminal design is considered obsolete for today's hub-and-spoke airline operations.

A $1.5 billion expansion and renovation plan, however, is threatened by environmental opposition and an attempt by Dallas's old intown airport to break out of federally-imposed constraints on flight destinations.

There's even a brand-new airport, backed by billionaire H. Ross Perot and the federal government, growing up nearby to handle industrial traffic.

DFW officials say the airport is at a crossroads where it must decide how it's going to expand, and whether it will be able to capitalize on being the largest landowner among all U.S. airports, giving it room to grow where its congested brethren in Chicago, St. Louis, Atlanta and New York cannot.

"I think we're at a point where we've got to do exactly what we're doing: get an updated master plan to maintain the competitive position," said Vernell Sturns, DFW's deputy executive director.

DFW improvement "is certainly important for the overall development of the national air service system," said Morten S. Beyer, president of aviation consultant Avmark Inc. in Arlington, Va.

"If Dallas develops aggressively, while other hubs like St. Louis and Chicago hang back, Dallas could benefit," Beyer said.

DFW opened on Jan. 13, 1974, a symbol of cooperation between two highly competitive cities. The initial cost was $700 million for three runways and four terminals.

Now, it's a $1.6 billion investment, with six runways handling more than 674,000 takeoffs and landings a year. More than 44 million passengers pass through the terminals' 113 gates, headed to or from one of 181 U.S. and foreign destinations.

The "world's largest airport hotel" is on the grounds. In all, the airport pumps about $5 billion annually into the region's economy.

However, an economic impact study released this summer says the region could lose $30 billion over the next 20 years if the airport is not expanded.

A proposed master plan, scheduled to be adopted by year's end, includes two new runways, more roadways, parking facilities, ramps and taxiways.

The $500,000 in improvements, together with a $1 billion, 60-gate terminal under consideration by American Airlines, could make DFW "the air capital of the world," said Timothy Doke, a spokesman for American, which has 60 percent of the business at DFW.

But communities surrounding the airport object to the added runways, in part because of fears over noise and safety — DFW has been the site of two major plane crashes in the last four years.

Perhaps the largest threat, however, comes from Love Field, the airport DFW was intended to replace.

For the last decade, the airport near downtown Dallas has been under the restrictions of the Wright Amendment, named after then-Congressman Jim Wright, designed to guarantee airlines would use DFW and not Love Field.

Housing market improves

By JULIE JEROME

The Midland real estate market showed considerable improvement last month as both property values and the number of home sales increased.

Home sales in August were up 8 percent over August 1988, and dollar volume of these houses showed an 11.5 percent increase, according to the monthly report of the Midland Board of Realtors.

The average sale price of house in Midland was $79,382 in August, compared to an average price of $91,702 in July and a price of $76,866 in August 1988. Volume of houses sold in August totaled $11.7 million.

Of the 149 houses sold in August, 15 were new, according to the report. These houses are valued at $1.97 million and reflect an average sale price of $131,873.

The 133 existing houses sold in August carry a volume of $9.77 million for an average sale price of $73,463.

In contrast, the August 1988 report revealed six new houses valued at $834,600 were sold. And the 131 existing houses sold in August 1988 were valued at approximately $9.69 million.

A house in Midland remained on the market an average 134 days in August, compared to an August 1988 average time on the market of 151 days.

There was a total 1,258 active residential listings in August, up 8 percent from the 1,163 listed in August 1988. Of the listings, 180 had two or fewer bedrooms; 740 had three bedrooms; 293 had four bedrooms; and 43 had five or more bedrooms.

Dollar volume of active listings totaled $110.8 million, compared to $101.7 million value of active listings in August 1988.

The average price for a house on the active list in August was $88,244, compared to $87,505 in August 1988.

In new construction, 18 new residences received building permits from the City of Midland in August. Value of the new residential construction totaled $1.58 million. This compares to an August 1988 total of 25 new residences with a construction value of $2.53 million.

USX will sell TXO reserves

PITTSBURGH (AP) — USX Corp. said today it is offering to sell the oil and gas reserves of its Texas Oil & Gas Corp. subsidiary.

The Pittsburgh-based oil and steel giant said it has retained the investment banking firm First Boston Corp. to handle the sale. The reserves are principally located in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Colorado and Kansas.

USX issued 133 million shares of stock in 1986 to acquire TXO in a deal valued at around $3 billion. USX has been disappointed by the company's earnings ever since. The parent has pinned its hopes for a turnaround at TXO on the prospect that natural gas prices will surge.

A sale is anticipated by year's end, said USX spokesman William E. Keslar, who declined to say how USX values the reserves.

TXO has 1.2 trillion cubic feet of natural gas in reserve, about a quarter of the 3.5 trillion cubic feet held by the other USX subsidiary, Marathon Oil Co. TXO has 28 million barrels of oil, or 3 percent of Marathon's 766 million.

The bulk of TXO's business is gas gathering, which would not be affected by the sale. TXO would also retain its contract drilling business.

Black Chamber addresses AIDS problem

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

As Acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) continues to spread, more and more efforts are being made to inform the public about the disease and prevent its spread. Among those hard hit by the disease have been the minority communities.

At Monday's meeting of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, members were introduced to Chinwe Odeluga, an HIV (Human immunodeficiency virus) counselor with the Substance Abuse Program, part of the Permian Basin Mental Health and Mental Retardation center.

Odeluga says her job involves educating the public about AIDS, whether it's speaking to groups or going one-on-one with an intravenous drug user, persuading him to use clean needles or join a recovery program. She can also arrange testing for the HIV virus, refer addicts to treatment programs, and counsel those who have HIV positive tests or are afraid they might have been exposed to the virus.

There are currently 26 cases of AIDS in Midland-Odessa, and Odeluga is one of two outreach counselors in the program, which is funded jointly by the Texas Department of Human Resources and the Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse. Offices are also being set up in Odessa and Fort Stockton, but Midland will be its central headquarters.

A native of New York, Odeluga says that Texas ranks either fourth or fifth in the nation in the number of AIDS cases — the ranking changes periodically. As for the Permian Basin, she says, "I think there's enough numbers here to concern me." Another concern she has is that the number of both AIDS cases and drug abuse are being underreported in Midland.

The services she provides are free and she can be contacted at 1508 N. Big Spring or by calling 682-7657.

Following Odeluga's speech, MBCE vice president James Fuller stated that "In light of what she has just said, there seems to be a sense of naivete on the part of the community about just how serious this problem is."

He added that AIDS has an impact on economic diversification because the effort and sophistication put into dealing drugs could be applied to expanding the economic base, and because AIDS robs the community of young people whose economic potential will never be realized.

"As a chamber, I think it behooves us to disseminate information and encourage people to seek help," he concluded.

MARKETS

Oil prices bounce back

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices have turned higher, regaining losses suffered Monday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, November contracts for West Texas Intermediate were up 16 cents to $20.17. The contract lost 12 cents to close at $20.01 Monday.

A recent rally inspired by a new OPEC production agreement had boosted oil prices above the $20 mark Friday.

Friday's advance was sparked by an agreement among the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries that raised the ceiling on the cartel's overall output to 20.5 million barrels of oil a day from the previous limit of 19.5 million barrels.

Oil investors were encouraged by the group's ability to reach an agreement to limit production.

On Monday, though, many traders sold futures contracts to cash in their profits and halted the rally, analysts said.

"There was a feeling the market was overbought" on Friday, said Mary Haskins, a vice president of energy futures trading at Drexel Burham Lambert Inc.

Home heating oil futures traded on the mercantile exchange also declined. The November contract for heating oil, in its first day of trading, fell 0.38 cent a gallon to close at 59.58 cents and subsequent months also retreated.

The November contract for gasoline, also in its initial trading day, dropped 1.42 cents a gallon to 56.80 cents. Most subsequent months also fell.

Intervention doesn't phase dollar

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose in early European trading today despite earlier interventions by the Bank of Japan in East Asian markets.

Gold prices were little changed.

Foreign currency dealers said repeated dollar sales by the Bank of Japan, estimated in the market to total $800 million, did little damage to the dollar-yen rate.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 1.35 yen to a closing 140.65 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 141 yen.

Dealers in Europe said the market is unwilling to shift positions much ahead of the Thursday meeting of the Deutsche Bundesbank's central bank council, which is expected to hike key German rates by at least half a point.

In London, the dollar rose slightly against the British pound. It cost $1.6106 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6175 late Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $365.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Monday's $366.50. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $365.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.23 a troy ounce, unchanged from late Monday.

Stocks up 21 points on late buying

NEW YORK (AP) — A round of afternoon buying carried the stock market to a four-week high in light trading Monday, getting Wall Street off to a positive start on the last quarter of 1989.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 20.90 to 2,713.72, its highest close since it stood at 2,719.79 on Sept. 6.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 7 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 861 up, 598 down and 509 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 127.41 million shares, down from 155.30 million in the previous session.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Braniff lures passengers with $49 fare

MIAMI (AP) — Braniff Inc., using $49 one-way flights to lure passengers, resumed about 20 percent of its 256-flight network virtually shut down when the carrier filed its second bankruptcy reorganization in seven years.

Meanwhile, the list of creditors against the cash-squeezed airline continued to grow Monday as laid-off union workers prepared petitions for back wages and benefits.

Braniff, which has lost nearly $1.6 million a week this year, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection Thursday.

Fed resisting pressure to lower interest

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is putting pressure on the Federal Reserve to lower interest rates, but the central bank will likely resist those efforts and keep rates right where they are, private economists predicted.

Policy-makers at the central bank were to meet behind closed doors today to review the economy's performance and set interest rate guidelines for the coming weeks. Many private economists said they believed the Fed is already worrying that its tight monetary policy will depress economic growth.

Japanese buy stake in Virgin Music

LONDON (AP) — Entrepreneur Richard Branson said he sold a 25 percent stake in his Virgin Music Group to Fujisankei Communications Group of Japan for $150 million.

The stake would be the largest holding by a Japanese company in an existing British concern, Virgin Music said Monday.

Zenith sells computer group to French firm

CHICAGO (AP) — Zenith Electronics Corp. said today it was selling its fast-growing computer group to the French company Groupe Bull to concentrate on consumer electronics, the weaker segment of its business.

Zenith is the last major U.S.-based manufacturer of televisions, a business that has usually lost money for the company in recent years.

Zenith said in a statement it expected the purchase price for the computer business to be less than $635 million, with the exact amount to be based on the value of the computer business when the deal is closed, probably by the end of the year.

The deal is subject to shareholder and regulatory approval.

Pearlman

Sales of Glenview, Ill.-based Zenith's computer systems and components expanded by 23 percent to $1.6 billion last year compared with a 2.7 percent increase in consumer-electronics sales, which totaled $1.1 billion.

Despite its fast growth, Zenith Chairman Jerry K. Pearlman said the computer business was saddled with a large amount of debt that had restricted Zenith's ability to realize the full potential of its consumer electronics division.

"Zenith will emerge as a conservatively financed company better prepared to capitalize on our strengths in consumer electronics," he said in a statement.

Howard yields 582 barrel find

From Staff Reports

A Fusselman discovery has been completed in Howard County, east of the Sleeper Reef field.

JACK N. BLAIR tested the No. 1 Grantham to flow 582 barrels of 41 gravity crude and 47 Mcfd on a 20/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 325 psi. The well flowed from open hole interval 10,356 to 10,389 ft., which had been acidized with 1,000 gallons of 15 percent NeFe. Gas-oil ratio is 80:1.

Permitted as an 11,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,300 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 10,356 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,643.5 ft., include the Yates at 1,935 ft., Base Dean at 7,930, Pennsylvanian at 8,640, Strawn at 9,430, Woodford at 10,285, and Fusselman at 10,350 ft. Pay was topped at 10,375 ft.

Concho field gains second Cook well

The Letcher field of Concho County has gained its second Lower Cook producer, extending the pay south and west.

THOR RESOURCES INC., Colleyville, (amended from Roger W. Anderson Corp., Clyde), finaled the No. 2 Letcher to pump 40 barrels of 41 gravity crude and four barrels of water. The well produced from perforations 1,350 to 1,354 ft., which had been acidized with 250 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 625:1.

Permitted as a 2,999 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 2,808 ft. and plugged back to 1,410 ft.

The well topped the Winchell Sand at 2,340 ft. and Cross Cut at 2,580 ft. on ground elevation of 2,063 ft.

DFW

Only Southwest Airlines Co. has been willing to operate under the amendment's restrictions, which allow non-stop flights from Love Field only to other cities in Texas or the surrounding four states.

In Washington, a Kansas congressman is trying to have the amendment revoked, claiming it increases the costs of air travel to places such as Wichita, Kan.; Memphis and Nashville, Tenn.; and Birmingham, Ala.

Neighborhoods around Love vow to fight any change to the Wright Amendment, but an overwhelming vote by Dallas City Council last week to recommend the amendment's repeal under certain conditions point to the obstacles in opponents' path.

Last week, Continental Airlines said it would begin operating four flights daily out of Love Field.

Although the flights would fall within current Wright Amendment restrictions, the move was seen as an effort by Continental to get a head start on competitors at Love.

Other airlines have indicated interest in servicing Love, but it is the words of American Chairman Robert Crandall that have stirred the most concern, both at DFW and around Love Field.

Crandall told a group of analysts that if Love were opened up, American could offer up to 230 flights a day there. Although he said he wouldn't be in favor of such an action, "if that is what is needed to protect our market position, we'd do it."

Analysts said the statement was probably intended to protect the Wright Amendment, although one added: "You must remember that Bob Crandall doesn't bluff. He threatens, but he doesn't bluff."

If American, whose headquarters is just a few miles from DFW, chose to service Love, "it would restrain our (DFW terminal) plans in terms of both timing and planning, I suspect," said Donald Carty, American's senior vice president for finance and planning."

School finance ruling draws cheers, tears

By JACK KEEVER

AUSTIN (AP) — In a decision that touched off cheers and tears, the Texas Supreme Court declared by a unanimous 9-0 vote that the state public school finance system violates the state's constitution and must be overhauled by May 1.

Kirby

The Monday decision that found "glaring disparities" between the state's rich and poor school districts is one of the most far-reaching in the court's 149-year history.

It could have enormous financial and social impact on Texas' 3.3 million students, the second-largest school system in the nation, behind California.

The Supreme Court found the finance system violates the provision in Texas' 113-year-old constitution for an "efficient system" of public schools.

A footnote mentioned that Gov. Bill Clements already has called a Nov. 14 special legislative session and said "the school finance problem could be resolved in that session."

"A remedy is long overdue," Justice Oscar Mauzy's opinion said. "The Legislature must take immediate action."

But Clements said he will call for a special 30-day session of the Legislature in the spring to grapple with the problem, after a task force still to be named has made its recommendations.

Although the court said it would not tell the Legislature how to correct school finance inequities or order it to increase taxes, it warned: "A Band-Aid will not suffice; the system itself must be changed."

Nearly $10 billion in state funds will be made available for public schools in 1990-91, and almost $12 billion is expected from local districts.

Because of the disparities in district property wealth, annual spending per student ranges among Texas school districts from $2,112 to $19,333, the court said without placing an exact date for the figures.

In 1988, Comptroller Bob Bullock found that 730 of the state's 1,100 school districts spend less than the statewide average of $3,290 per student per year. The average in those districts was $2,976. In the wealthier districts, the average yearly expenditure was $4,268.

"I am extremely pleased that this is back in the hands of the Legislature, where it belongs," Clements said.

An Austin state district judge had held the school finance system unconstitutional in a case brought by poor school districts against state Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby and others. That ruling was overturned last December by a 2-1 vote of the Austin-based 3rd Court of Appeals.

But the Supreme Court found "the state's school financing system is neither financially efficient, nor efficient in the sense of providing for a 'general diffusion of knowledge' statewide."

The lawsuit, known as Edgewood vs. Kirby, was filed in 1984 by school districts with low property values. Public schools are funded largely through a combination of local property taxes and state aid.

The case got its title from the lead plaintiff, Edgewood Independent School District in San Antonio, and lead defendant, Kirby.

"We took on the state of Texas and we beat 'em," said Edgewood Superintendent James Vasquez.

Vasquez led about 1,800 students and teachers in a celebration rally Monday. The high school's marching band played and students waved banners with sayings like "Victory" and "Edgewood All the Way." A marquee at the stadium's entrance read "Texas Children 9, Kirby 0."

Demetrio Rodriguez, who launched a fight for equal school funding in 1968 that eventually reached the U.S. Supreme Court, where his position was rejected, said he cried when he heard news of the Edgewood ruling. "It really is something that has been in my heart."

Kirby said, "As the lead defendant in this case, I have been required to defend the constitutionality of the system. But I have always maintained that it is not adequate and have pressed for additional amounts of money to improve equity.

"Now that the Supreme Court has ruled the system unconstitutional, the Legislature must create a system that is constitutional and that provides adequate funding to ensure a high quality education for all children in the state."

An attorney whose law office represents districts in several affluent Dallas suburbs expressed disappointment.

"We were hoping the court would consider it as a legislative problem and ... hold that, while the legislative solution was not perfect, it was constitutional," Earl Luna said.

State Rep. Dan Morales, whose district includes Edgewood, said the ruling "will have the most profound impact that any ruling has ever had in Texas."

Olivia "Ollie" Besteiro, president of the Texas State Teachers Association, said:

"History will mark this day as the opening of the door to opportunity for tens of thousands, even millions, of children. These children have been the victims of 'segregated' opportunity determined by a geographical roll of the dice."

The state argued that the word "'efficient' was intended to suggest a 'simple and inexpensive system.'"

But the court said, "It must be recognized that the constitution requires an 'efficient,' not an 'economical,' 'inexpensive,' or 'cheap' system."

The court also rejected arguments that reform in school finance will reduce local control of education.

"An efficient system will actually allow for more local control, not less," the court said. "It will provide property-poor districts with economic alternatives that are not now available to them."

The opinion said the decision was not without precedent, noting similar rulings in nine other states. Texas is one of 11 states where school financing systems have been challenged.

Other states with active lawsuits or court orders concerning school finance are Alaska, Connecticut, Indiana, Kentucky, Minnesota, Montana, New Jersey, North Dakota, Oregon and Tennessee.

Property tax hikes could be next step

By JAY JORDEN

DALLAS (AP) — Public school districts might have to raise millions of additional dollars annually from local taxes, beginning next year, if the Legislature can't find a court-ordered solution to the education finance dilemma, attorneys said.

The Texas Supreme Court ruled Monday that the state's public school financing system is unconstitutional and gave lawmakers until May 1, 1990, to create a "substantially equal" funding system for rich and poor districts alike.

The ruling came on a suit known as Edgewood vs. Kirby, which was filed in 1984 by school districts with low property values.

Taxpayers in dozens of affluent systems could bear the burden if the Legislature fails in its task.

"If the trial court's judgment was allowed to stand and has not been changed, then by May 1, 1990, assuming the Legislature does not do anything between now and (then), the economic effect would be that the Irving district would have $18 million per year that it would have to make up from local funds," said James Deatherage, an attorney representing the Irving Independent School District in suburban Dallas.

The district's property taxes would rise from $1.03 per $100 valuation to $1.30 or $1.35 if lawmakers failed to come up with a suitable plan because an injunction would bar the Texas education commissioner from dispensing state funds after that time, he said.

But another attorney who represents districts intervening in the state's behalf disagreed.

"In the past, when we have had education reform bills, that is exactly what happened: districts losing state aid have to put more local taxes into education," said James Turner, a Crockett attorney.

"It is now uncertain whether that will happen again because that is what the court is saying is at the root of the inefficient system. Certain districts have the wherewithal under local property wealth to fund education while others do not," said Turner, who represents about 25 school systems, including the affluent, suburban Eanes district in Travis County.

One legislative proposal, Turner said, may take local property tax dollars from wealthy districts to the state for distribution to poor ones.

Another, he said, might create regional tax districts to collect taxes and disburse them equally or consolidate rich and poor districts. A plan for a statewide property tax for education would limit local districts' taxation power.

"There is no single answer to the dilemma for any class of school districts," he said. "For example, some property-poor districts would love to consolidate with their wealthy neighbors, while others would fight consolidation to the final draw. That is what will make the resolution of the problem so difficult politically — varying interests of the 1,050 school districts around the state."

Jimmy Vasquez, superintendent of the Edgewood School District in San Antonio, smiles as he attends a rally to celebrate Monday's ruling by the Texas Supreme Court in the case known as Edgewood vs. Kirby. The court ruled in favor of the school district, saying the present system of school finance is unconstitutional.

Ruling finds favor in much of West Texas

SAN ANGELO (AP) — The ruling overturning the state's public education funding system found favor with most West Texas school officials.

"It's almost like a birthday party," said San Saba Superintendent Bill Grusendorf. "This is something we've been working for since 1983."

The San Saba school district joined the San Antonio Edgewood school district in seeking to overturn the state system's reliance on local tax dollars to pay for a large portion of school costs.

Under the current system, property-rich districts like Plano can raise $1 million dollars per penny of local tax while San Saba is able to raise only $15,000.

"There's not any question that this is going to affect every school district," said Andrews superintendent James Pennington, whose oil-rich district joined the lawsuit in support of the current funding system.

"But there's not any way we can tell ... how it will affect us until a plan is developed," Pennington said.

"What the court is saying is that the quality of your education shouldn't depend on an accident of birth," said San Angelo assistant superintendent Rex Lowe. "This is the most important decision affecting schools ever."

Students born in poor school districts will have the same right to to attend nice buildings and have the same educational opportunity as those born in districts that currently provide two gymnasiums at each elementary school campus, he said.

A constitutional amendment would be required, Pennington said, before the state could order all local school property taxes be sent to Austin for redistribution, a move that many wealthy districts like Andrews oppose.

Although many rich West Texas districts supported the current funding system, traditionally poor districts like San Saba, Early and San Angelo now find themselves backed by the oil-bust nouveau poor.

"We are pleased by the ruling," said Chuck Hornung, public information director for the once-rich Ector County school district. "The court has said to the Legislature, 'Go back and do something.'

"Maybe the Legislature will produce something equitabale to all school districts, equitable not just in tax dollars but in opportunities as well," Hornung said.

Midland school officials aren't certain how their district — once one of the wealthiest — will be affected by the lawsuit, business manager Don Furgeson said.

If the Legislature bases its new funding formulas on 1985-86 values, the district could be hurt much more than if current district taxable values are used, Furgeson said.

In 1985-86, Midland ISD had a $5.4 billon tax base. Current values are now 30 percent less, hovering at the $3.8 billion mark. The district has $200,000 in taxable value per student, just under the state average of $230,000, Furgeson said.

"I'm not sure if this will mean more money for us or not," he said.

The Texas Federation of Teachers is "delighted" with Monday's Supreme Court decision in Edgewood vs. Kirby, said John Cole, president of the Texas Federation of Teachers.

"Teachers will stand to benefit from this ruling also," said Bob Cole, president of the Texas Federation of Teachers.

"Teachers in low-wealth school districts have been asked to provide a first-class education while being given only second-class financial support. Teachers in those property-poor districts have had to teach with second-class facilities, second-class teaching tools, and second class salaries, while handling students who suffer from all the educational problems associated with poverty."

The Texas Classroom Teachers Association on Monday praised the Supreme Court's decision in Edgewood vs. Kirby and voiced hope that the Texas Legislature will now allocate more money toward public education.

Students celebrate 9-0 decision

By KELLEY SHANNON

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Lawyers and educators joyfully congratulated each other, but the Texas Supreme Court ruling on school finance wasn't lost on Edgewood school district students, who also cheered the prospects for change.

"I really can't tell you how lucky you are. You belong to a school district that has guts," Al Kauffman, lead attorney for the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, told jubilant Edgewood students Monday.

MALDEF assisted the 15,500-student Edgewood district in pressing the lawsuit that led to a 9-0 Texas Supreme Court decision Monday that the state's public school finance system violates the Texas Constitution.

The court ruling on Edgewood vs. Kirby gave the Texas Legislature until May 1 to come up with a solution.

About 1,800 pupils in the school district — ranging from small children to high school seniors — packed the Edgewood stadium next to John F. Kennedy High School and held banners reading "Victory" and "Edgewood All the Way" as a band played and a flag corps kept time.

"Let the Future Begin, Texas Children 9, Kirby 0," read a marquee at the stadium entrance.

In Spanish, Kauffman told the youngsters of the predominantly Hispanic district, "What's most important is we're going to make a system with dignity for all the children here in Edgewood and the state of Texas."

Kennedy senior class president John Guzman said the ruling will improve school morale and might mean more money for foreign language courses. Currently the school has Spanish, French and Italian classes.

Guzman said construction projects at his school have been evidence of limited money.

"They've always had money and they started to build stuff, and they never finished it," he said, pointing to the surrounding library originally intended to be a swimming facility. Lack of money meant the pool project couldn't be completed, he said.

Senior class parliamentarian Ruben Gonzales said it is too late for him and his classmates to see results of the ruling. "We won't, as seniors, but the younger generations will."

Leslie Roche, junior class president, predicted that by early next year changes will be noticeable at Kennedy High School and other places in the district.

Fourth-grader Daniel Rodriguez said it was difficult to explain the court ruling, but said his school district will be better off.

"Where all the rich people go, they give them more money. Now they'll give us more money too," he said. "We'll be able to get more stuff for our schools and put more stuff inside our schools."

Edgewood Superintendent James Vasquez stressed to a group of students the importance of the day.

"Do you know that you're history in the making today? Do you feel as good as I feel?" he asked with a smile.

"Today we can begin to say we're no longer the poorest school district in Texas — we're the toughest," Vasquez told the stadium crowd. "We took on the state of Texas and we beat 'em."

Attending the Monday gathering was Demetrio Rodriguez, whose five children have gone to Edgewood schools and who launched the fight for equal school funding in 1968 when he and other district parents filed a suit that in 1973 reached the U.S. Supreme Court, which rejected his arguments.

"This is a big day for me and my family," Rodriguez said, fighting back tears. "I cried this morning because it really is something that has been in my heart."

The Edgewood district was lead plaintiff in the current lawsuit, filed in 1984. More than 60 other districts also were involved as plaintiffs or intervenors.

Edgewood leaders contend their district has little high-priced real estate to tap for property taxes.

Soviet lawmakers reject proposal to ban strikes

MOSCOW (AP) — After an all-night meeting, lawmakers today rejected as unconstitutional President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's proposal to ban strikes for 15 months. The Soviet leader says further strikes could destroy the economy.

The draft resolution put forth by the lawmakers would, however, empower the government to take control of the country's railways by Monday if that is deemed necessary to end a blockade related to the Azerbaijani-Armenian dispute.

Gorbachev Monday gave the legislators until today to decide on his strike-ban proposal and when the Supreme Soviet, or parliament, reconvened lawmakers debated the reworded resolution.

During a break, Interior Ministery Vadim Bakatin called the strike-ban proposal unconstitutional.

"We don't have a basis for deciding what is an extraordinary situation," he said.

Leonid Abalkin, a deputy premier in charge of economic reform, said the initiative to change the draft resolution came during an overnight meeting of deputies and not from Gorbachev.

"Everyone wants to be sympathetic, wants the public to like them, and nobody wants to take the responsibility," he said.

Marju Lauristin, a deputy and leader of the Estonian Popular Front, said she favored a limit on strikes called for political reasons, which she said could be used as an excuse for military intervention.

Gorbachev, in calling for a ban on strikes, called the measure necessary "to protect democratization from anarchy and irresponsible management."

By inserting the threat to take over operations and security on the country's railroads, the legislators were acting to bring an end to a blockade by Azerbaijanis of rail lines leading from their republic into Armenia.

Soviet law does not ban strikes outright. But labor unrest was ruthlessly repressed before Gorbachev came to power in 1985 and began his effort to turn the Soviet Union into a country ruled by law instead of dictate.

Gorbachev said Monday that his proposal to ban strikes was "not an effort to stop the processes that are underway in the framework of perestroika."

A key element of Gorbachev's reforms is perestroika, or restructuring the Soviet's Union's stumbling and shortage-ridden economy, and the Soviet leader said that economic transformation is "under threat" because of strikes.

First Deputy Premier Lev Voronin told lawmakers Monday that the economy lost $6.15 billion in July and August because of strikes and supplies of fuel are so low the country might be unable to provide enough heat for citizens through the winter.

250 East Germans storm embassy

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — About 250 East Germans stormed across police lines into the West German Embassy today, and witnesses said some refugees were injured. East Germany blocked citizens from traveling to Czechoslovakia in an effort to stem the flow to the West.

Until today, East Germans needed neither a visa nor a passport to travel to Czechoslovakia. The state news agency ADN said that effective immediately, such documents would be required. That will effectively block ordinary citizens from going there.

The ADN dispatch said the move was based on reports indicating "that certain circles in West Germany are preparing provocations in conjunction with the celebrations of our 40th anniversary" Saturday.

ADN did not say anything about changes in travel to Poland, where East Germans have also holed up in the West German Embassy. East Germans currently need government permission to travel to Poland.

In another development, the Soviet Communist Party daily Pravda accused West Germany of interfering in East German affairs by allowing its embassies in Prague and Warsaw to grant asylum to refugees.

"Political leaders of West Germany have made naked attempts to interfere in the internal affairs of sovereign East Germany," Pravda said.

East Germany during the weekend reluctantly allowed 7,000 of its citizens who had holed up in the embassies in Poland and Czechoslovakia. Thousands more East Germans subsequently converged on those embassies to follow their countrymen.

East Germany said the initial exodus was a one-time occurrence and demanded that West Germany expel the thousands of other would-be emigres who subsequently converged on the missions to follow their countrymen to West Germany.

After breaking the police lines at the Prague embassy, the East Germans scaled a 2-yard-high fence to join the approximately 4,500 refugees already inside embassy grounds.

A man from East Germany tries to climb over the fence of the West German Embassy in Prague, Czechoslovakia, Monday, while a Czech policeman attempts to pull the man off the fence. Refugees inside the mission hold on to the man's leg.

The crowd broke into the embassy after West Germany closed the compound because of intense crowding, and hundreds of East Germans waited outside, the numbers increasing hourly, witnesses said.

They said about 500 people reportedly gathered around the embassy, some even sitting on nearby rooftops.

Between 200 and 250 East Germans waiting outside the embassy compound finally stormed through barricades around the embassy garden fence, climbing into the compound, they said.

When the refugees battled police who tried to stop them, many were injured, some from jumping from the fence, the witnesses said. The number of injured was not immediately known.

West German Foreign Ministry spokesman Peter Rothen told The Associated Press in Bonn that the situation in the embassy had become "unbearable. It's horribly crowded."

"There must be a solution," he said, adding that the Foreign Ministry was "still hoping for a solution similar to the one over the weekend," when about 7,000 East Germans were allowed to leave for the West after they had camped out at the West German embassies in Prague and Warsaw, Poland.

After clashes late Monday evening between truncheon-wielding police and East Germans trying to reach the embassy, police lifted their controls at the main gate, allowing them to enter but continuing to patrol the garden fence.

West German sources said the embassy had been closed at the request of the German Red Cross, which was concerned about sanitation problems.

About 1,000 children were said by refugees to be among those in the embassy. People were sleeping three to a bed in the tents scattered across the embassy grounds, refugees said.

Czechoslovak government spokesman Miroslav Pavel said the swelling numbers of East Germans "seriously upsets public order" in Prague and the government reserved the right to take "indispensable measures to maintain and restore public order."

He said other embassies in the area, including the U.S. Embassy, had requested increased protection.

Pavel said in a statement carried by the official CTK news agency that "relevant Czechoslovak authorities" had provided necessary supplies and "humanitarian, medical and other technical assistance."

He criticized West Germany as irresponsible for allowing the refugees to enter the building after allegedly assuring East Germany and Czechoslovakia that last weekend's situation would not be repeated.

East Germany issued a formal protest to West Germany Monday, calling for the second wave of refugees to be expelled and returned to East Germany.

In the West German embassy in Warsaw, the number of East Germans who have arrived in the past two days reached about 300, Rothen said, but he acknowledged the number could be higher.

East Berlin restricted travel to Hungary after that country's liberal leaders opened their border with Austria on Sept. 10 and thousands of East Germans fled West across it. More than 20,000 have crossed through Hungary since then.

East Germans unable to reach Hungary then began converging on the West German embassies in Poland and Czechoslovakia.

The East German opposition group New Forum on Monday criticized the country's Communist leaders for agreeing to the weekend release, saying in a statement that East Germany is "losing a village every day."

So far this year more than 120,000 East Germans have reached West Germany, where they are granted automatic citizenship. The exodus of the mostly young, skilled workers has hurt East Germany's economy.

Shamir aide hints compromise may end peace plan crisis

JERUSALEM (AP) — A top aide to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said today that Israel's two governing parties may head off a crisis over the Egyptian peace plan by agreeing to hold talks on the issue with Americans and Egyptians.

In Tokyo, visiting PLO chief Yasser Arafat told the Japanese prime minister that the PLO favors opening Israeli-Palestinian talks through Egypt, officials said. Israel expressed disappointment over Japan's invitation to Arafat.

A compromise between the center-left Labor Party and the right-wing Likud bloc could defuse a tense situation before an inner Cabinet meeting Thursday on Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's offer to arrange preliminary peace talks between Palestinians and Israelis.

The compromise also could reduce American pressure on Israel to accept Mubarak's peace efforts. Mubarak met Monday in Washington with President Bush, and said Israel should not squander a "golden opportunity" for peace by rejecting his plan.

In the occupied territories, meanwhile, troops today clashed with Palestinian stone-throwers, wounding four people, one seriously, Arab reports said. The army said it was checking the reports.

At least 123 Palestinians have been killed by fellow Arabs as suspected collaborators during the 21-month uprising against Israeli occupation.

More than 580 others have died in clashes with soldiers and Israeli civilians. Forty Israelis have been slain.

The political feud in Israel centers on objections by Likud, headed by Shamir, to U.S.-backed Egyptian proposals for Israel to negotiate with a team of Palestinians before holding elections in the occupied territories.

Labor, headed by Finance Minister Shimon Peres, supports the Egyptian idea, believing it the only way to break an impasse in the peace process.

Shamir balks at Egypt's proposal to include two Palestinians deported by Israel in the delegation. He feels this would be tantamount to opening the door to the Palestine Liberation Organization, which Israel views as a terrorist group.

Shamir's top political aide, Yossi Ben-Aharon, indicated in an interview with army radio Tuesday that the prime minister may be open to a compromise that would involve holding more exploratory talks on the question.

Asked whether Shamir would agree to a three-way meeting of American, Egyptian and Israeli representatives over the composition of a Palestinian delegation, Ben-Aharon replied:

"Theoretically yes, because it sounds reasonable for such a tripartite meeting to hold a preliminary discussion over carrying out Israel's political initiative."

He stressed that any talks with Palestinians would require prior agreement by the Arabs to Shamir's peace plan published last April, which calls for elections in the disputed lands pending negotiations for an interim settlement. He ruled out PLO involvement.

U.S. officials have been pressuring Israel to accept the Egyptian proposals as a basis for continuing the stalemated peace process.

In Tokyo, a senior Foreign Ministry official said Arafat told Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu he "positively appraised" an agreement by Bush and Mubarak to promote the peace process and to support Mubarak's peace plan.

The PLO has not yet issued an official position on Mubarak's plan. It objects to the fact that no mention is made of an independent Palestinian state.

Salvadoran activists often assaulted in prison

By PHIL BRONSTEIN
Hearst News Service

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Julia Tatiana Mendoza thought she understood the rules of the game.

As head of propaganda for a member union of El Salvador's most combative and aggressive leftist labor organization, the National Federation of Salvadoran Workers — FENASTRAS — she was used to the confrontations between her colleagues and police.

In their anger over what they view as government repression, FENASTRAS members often have interrupted their marches to burn buses and break windows. Authorities respond with tear gas, arrests and interrogations, followed by confessions obtained under duress of guerrilla affiliation.

There also have been disappearances and murders of labor organizers, although during the past few months, in the glare of international human-rights organizations and a government that wants to moderate its image abroad, killings attributed to rightist death squads and the armed forces have diminished to practically zero.

Still, death was among the risks for the most militant, which Mendoza, 21, acknowledged as a player in the high-stakes, overheated national political field of a bitter, 10-year civil war.

But her popular movement street sense did not prepare her for being blindfolded in custody, beaten and raped.

Suddenly, her concepts, honed by several years on the front lines, collided personally with the grim reality of El Salvador's counterfeit criminal justice system. She discovered that, despite $9.2 million in U.S. judicial reform aid, there are still, very often, no rules.

"We have had many similar cases (involving accusations against government forces) this year," said San Salvador Judge Luis Edgar Morales, who is presiding over the FENASTRAS matter. "But they don't go anywhere. And they won't go anywhere until there is a complete structural change" in the justice system.

Privately, U.S. officials agree, despite cautiously optimistic State Department reports that speak of "new, if uneven, plateaus" being reached.

"The judicial problems are the weakest link for the government and the country in El Salvador, the biggest structural problem," one U.S. Embassy source said. "You can't have real democracy, legitimate democracy if there's no functioning justice system."

The assault on Mendoza will also likely get lost in the larger political battles between the rightist government and the country's left.

But even as killing as a political weapon has apparently lost its luster, the growing use of arrest and detention — up 25 percent over last year, according to government statistics; 50 percent say independent groups — coupled by ongoing lack of judicial accountability for the actions of military and police authorities, suggest Mendoza's experience may be part of an accelerating trend.

"Prisoners continue to be subjected to cruel and inhuman treatment by security force officers, including torture and rape," said a report earlier this year by the New York-based Lawyers Committee for Human Rights. Such abuses "are increasing at an alarming rate."

"This was a terrible violation of my rights as a woman," a weeping Mendoza said during an interview in San Salvador's Women's Prison.

When it came, she did not resist. "Psychologically, I was obliged to give in. I thought to myself, 'He's going to beat me up and rape me anyway.' That's when I told him, 'OK.' "

Two other women among the 62 demonstrators arrested Sept. 18 after a bus was burned during their march said they had been raped during detention at National Police headquarters. But Mendoza's was the one story corroborated during a medical examination by a doctor appointed by the criminal court.

But, in the convoluted world of Salvadoran justice, even Mendoza's medical evidence means nothing.

"This case would never proceed," said Judge Morales. "We could never find out, of all the people who were at police headquarters that night, who it was.

"And she can't identify anyone anyway. She was blindfolded." In addition, the National Police — the prime suspects — would have to conduct the investigation.

National Police director Col. Mauricio Guzman Aguilar said the charges of rape were "lies, a campaign to discredit (us) designed to turn around (the demonstrators' crimes) and accuse us."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Dissident officer says squad beat protesters

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — A dissident police officer testified today that riot squad members with whips and clubs attacked peaceful demonstrators like a "pack of wild dogs" at an anti-government protest last month.

Lt. Gregory Rockman, speaking at the trial of two white colleagues charged with assault, said a Sept. 5 demonstration by 30 youths at a shopping plaza in the mixed-race township of Mitchell's Plain was peaceful until riot squad members arrived and instigated the violence.

The accused, Maj. Charles Brazelle and Lt. David Roos, pleaded not guilty early today at the Wynberg Regional Court in Cape Town.

Rockman has become a folk hero in black and mixed-race townships for his willingness to speak out against alleged police brutality. Youths have chanted his name at several recent protest marches.

Rockman, who is of mixed-race, said he told the youths they could demonstrate for 20 minutes, then they should disperse. He said they agreed.

However, a riot squad under the command of Brazelle and Roos arrived minutes later and told the marchers to leave immediately.

When the youths remained, police "just stormed the people" and began "brutally attacking them" with whips and clubs, Rockman said.

"I thought at that time it was like a pack of wild dogs," Rockman said.

He said police also began beating bystanders.

Talks called breakthrough

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Government officials have for the first time negotiated with leading anti-apartheid leaders about ending the 3-year-old rent boycott in Soweto, the country's largest black township.

Business Day, a Johannesburg daily, today described the talks as the highest-level bargaining session ever held between the white-controlled government and major anti-apartheid activisits.

It quoted one unidentified activist as calling Monday's parley, in which the government offered to waive some unpaid rent, "an unprecedented breakthrough" because the activists were accepted as primary negotiating partners.

The boycott has been one of the most effective protests by blacks since a national state of emergency was declared in June 1986.

Soweto, home to an estimated 2.5 million blacks on the outskirts of Johannesburg, has been the hardest-hit of several townships affected by rent boycotts. It has lost more than $100 million in revenue.

Court to OK extraditions

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The Supreme Court will vote to approve President Virgilio Barco's decrees allowing extradition of top drug suspects to the United States and confiscation of their property, national television reported.

The television program TV Hoy, quoting court sources, reported Monday night that a majority of 24 justices on the court supported the decrees.

The deadline for the court to rule was today, but normally several days pass before court rulings are made public.

Seven bombs exploded in Colombian cities Monday night, two in the Caribbean coast city of Barranquilla, three in the port city of Santa Marta and two in the capital of Bogota, national police said.

Two people were injured in Barranquilla and two more in Santa Marta, the police said.

New Zealand investigates stories of capsized yacht's crew

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) — The government ordered a probe today into why searchers failed to find any trace of a capsized yacht whose crew claims to have drifted four months off New Zealand before being washed ashore.

"There are many discrepancies in their story," said Terry Knight, head of the New Zealand Search and Rescue.

The four say their 42-foot trimaran capsized in a storm June 3 and that they survived the 121-day ordeal huddled in the overturned craft by spearing fish, eating seaweed and trapping rainwater.

The four turned up over the weekend on Great Barrier Island, but some officials have expressed skepticism about their story, saying they appear too healthy.

"We needed a miracle and we got one," said John Glennie, skipper of the sailboat, the Rose Noelle.

Glennie said the trimaran left Picton, on the northern coast of the South Island, on June 1 for a three-week Pacific islands cruise to the Polynesian kingdom of Tonga.

He told authorities the boat was flipped over by a huge wave in a 60-knot wind on the third day of the journey and that the four activated an emergency beacon after scrambling to retrieve radio equipment, flares, clothing and food.

"It's an amazing story," said Knight. "The area the yachtsmen say they were in when they made their last radio message was not anywhere near where the search was done."

The inquiry was announced by Transport Minister Bill Jeffries, whose responsibilities include the Marine Division in charge of sea rescue operations.

Jeffries told reporters his department wanted to clarify why the boat was apparently hundreds of miles from where its distress signal was sent and why the yacht's emergency beacon apparently operated for a week well within range of an aircraft monitoring service without being detected.

WE NEED YOUR HELP: VA welcomes comments concerning the condition of our properties. Any improprieties should be reported to the VA Regional Office at 817-757-6869.

The offer which best serves the interest of VA will be processed for acceptance. The name of the successful offeror and sales broker will appear in subsequent publications. VA will accept cash offers up to 10 percent below the advertised term sales price. VA also will pay reasonable loan discount points and buyers' closing costs on cash offers when requested on the Cash Sale Addendum to Offer to Purchase. However, the combined loan discount points, buyers' closing costs to be paid by VA and the discount for cash may not exceed 10 percent of the term list price. Offers must be submitted at term listed price when buyers request a new GI loan with $1.00 move-in. Interest rate of available financing is 9.5 percent (APR 9.6 percent).

Purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing (Term Sales) must have VA Form 26-6705B, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Verification of Employment/Income, as outlined in Sales of VA-Acquired Properties Manual, attached to their VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale. Effective June 8, 1988, all credit underwriting for purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing is being referred to Miller and Davis PC. All brokers are reminded to refer to PM letter #17-88 dated May 25, 1988, outlining these new procedures. Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. Public Law 100-689 also permits VA to charge a one-half of 1 percent funding fee for the transfer as well as a fee for processing the approval of the transfer.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT

Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account the $500 earnest money deposit. The Earnest Money Agreement (Exhibit "H") must be signed by the purchaser(s) and submitted along with the VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on all offers. The $500 earnest money deposit will be remitted to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase. VA pays 6% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to:
