U.S. evacuates base

Philippine volcano eruption prompts order

Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — The U.S. military today began evacuating thousands of Americans from Clark Air Base after a nearby volcano that had been dormant for centuries spewed rocks and ash down its slopes.

There were no reports of injuries from what the Philippine authorities described as a moderate eruption of Mount Pinatubo, about 10 miles west of Clark Air Base. But experts said it could herald a more serious burst.

The eruption on Sunday sent searing gases, ash and rock pouring from two craters of the 4,795-foot mountain at speeds up to 60 mph. Debris was sprayed as far as the South China Sea, 20 miles to the west.

Air Force spokesman Lt. Col. Ron Rand said the order to evacuate the bases' 16,000 troops, dependents and civilian employees was issued after volcanic activity increased overnight at Mount Pinatubo.

The evacuees began leaving for the U.S. Subic Bay naval base at 6 a.m. today (5 p.m. CDT Sunday). Under a pre-determined plan, the last were to leave at about 10 a.m., he said in a statement broadcast by the military's Far East Network.

There was no indication how long the Americans would stay, but they were ordered to take along important papers and three days worth of food, water and clothing.

A first group of 10 to 15 cars — some of which carried family dogs and cats — arrived at Subic, about 50 miles southwest of Clark, at about 8 a.m.. Subic base spokesman Bob Coble said evacuees would be housed in billets normally used by crews of visiting warships.

The two bases are among the oldest and largest U.S. overseas facilities and are the cornerstone of U.S. military forces in Southeast Asia.

Along the route between them, U.S. Marines stood by to offer assistance and provide security, since Communist rebels fighting the Manila government operate in

It's New York's turn

NEW YORK — The city readied 200 miles of ticker tape, 10,000 pounds of confetti, a million yellow ribbons and enough balloons to fill a six-story building for today's parade to honor the veterans of Operation Desert Storm. "Operation Welcome Home," the biggest ticker-tape parade in this city's history, is a four-hour march through the skyscraper-lined "Canyon of Heroes" by 24,000 people, more than half military personnel who served in the Persian Gulf War. The parade will have three grand marshals: Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and a Bronx native; Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of Operation Desert Storm and a New Jersey product; and Defense Secretary Dick Cheney./4A

Teddy to cut back

BOSTON — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy says he plans to temper his drinking and carousing, and will seek a seventh term despite the furor surrounding an alleged rape at his family's Florida estate. "You can't go through an experience like this and not make up your mind you are going to have to be a little more attentive to behavior," the Democratic lawmaker told The Boston Globe. While promising future moderation, Kennedy rejected the notion that he has a drinking problem. "That doesn't mean that I am not going to be more attentive to it," Kennedy said of his drinking habits, "but no, that is not in my . . . that's not where I'm at. I don't feel I've got a problem." Related story/4A

Apple, IBM to discuss an alliance

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — Top executives of Apple Computer Inc. will be visiting IBM headquarters in Armonk, N.Y., today to discuss a far-ranging technology alliance that could have a major impact on the computer industry, industry executives say.

One part of the talks, according to these executives, is a proposal for IBM to license from Apple, and perhaps even to help develop, basic software for a new line of Apple computers that will be a successor to its Macintosh family.

The companies will also discuss whether Apple will use a powerful IBM microprocessor that IBM uses in some of its computers.

An alliance between the two biggest manufacturers of personal computers would present a united front against other alliances in the computer industry. While the discussions might not lead to any agreement, the mere fact the two fierce rivals are talking attests to changes in the industry and would have been unthinkable even a year ago.

At Apple, which is based in Cupertino, Calif., in the Silicon Valley, hatred of IBM is almost a religion, one executive there said, and the idea of cooperation with IBM still strikes some Apple employees as heresy.

Apple, which was started in a garage,

Weekly ritual faces threat

By Brian Pearson

Like his father before him, Angel Villarreal spends most Sunday nights cruising and socializing on Hogan Park's south side.

Villarreal, 26, is among hundreds of other Hispanics, young and old, who have made coming here a weekly ritual.

They talk to friends, cruise, listen to music, show off their low-riders and generally find ways to refine the art of hanging out.

"Our dad brought us over here and we kept on doing it," Villarreal said. "Now, I bring my daughters out here."

But cruising as they know it may end Tuesday, when the City Council is expected to vote on an ordinance geared to regulate the activity, which police said has been a problem.

If approved, the ordinance would prohibit drivers from stopping to socialize or park on Hogan Park roadways. A separate ordinance on Tuesday's agenda would make turning left onto Wadley Avenue from the park's south roads illegal. Both ordinances would be in effect at all times.

Police Chief Richard Czech said traffic congestion caused by the socially hungry motorists has posed a safety hazard.

"There's a gathering there and things get so congested and crowded that if there was an emergency, we wouldn't be able to get in there," Czech said. "We've had fights and

Strauss finances might conflict with post

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bob Strauss is a wheeler-dealer with business interests that seems as big as his native Texas. But he may have to cut back his financial empire to clinch the crowning deal of his career: an ambassadorship to the Soviet Union.

Among other things, President Bush's choice for the Moscow job is a director of a leading U.S. agribusiness company that is a big exporter to the Soviets. According to the company's latest financial report, released last September, Strauss owned a block of stock worth around $614,250.

Strauss, 72, an $8-million-a-deal lawyer and lobbyist and former Democratic Party chairman, is expected to be confirmed by the Senate. But he likely will have to give up many of his juicy perks to avoid a potential conflict of interest, legal experts say.

That would mean selling some of his assets or putting them into a blind trust that he can't control, resigning his directorships on several corporate boards and taking a leave of absence from his powerhouse law firm, the experts say.

Ambassadors, like other presidential appointees, are required by law to divest themselves of any financial interests that are likely to conflict with their new position.

Strauss is a director of Archer Daniels Midland Co., the world's largest processor of corn and soybeans and a major exporter to the grain-hungry Soviet Union. He's a close friend of Dwayne Andreas, the chairman of ADM, as the Decatur, Ill.-based company calls itself.

As an ADM director, Strauss collects an annual fee of $37,500.

Once and future boomtown: Houston is back in big way

By Scott McCartney
Associated Press writer

HOUSTON — Greg Cornett left Houston when the jobs dried up in the '80s and found himself chasing boomtown construction projects, first to Ohio, then to Seattle. A few weeks ago, he got a call from a former supervisor.

"He offered me a job and said 'It looks like Houston's coming back,'" Cornett said. "I said, 'I'm in.'"

Houston is indeed back. The city that went from the pinnacle of the '80s economic boom to the bottom of the oil patch bust is back on top again.

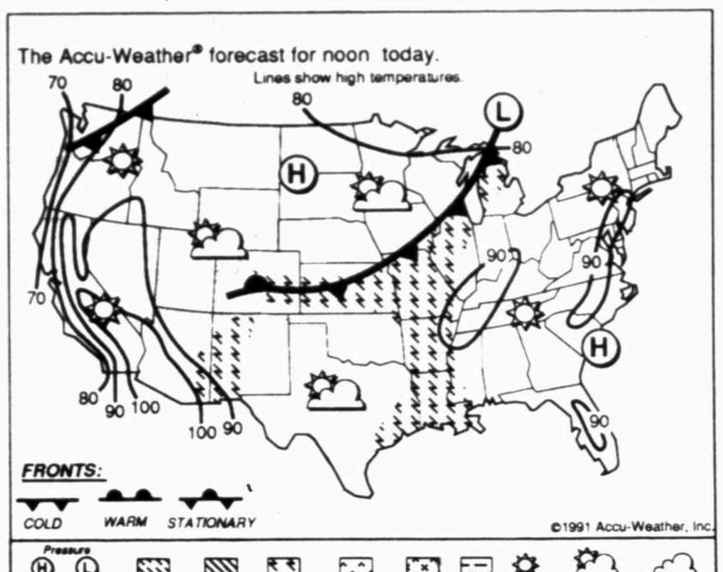

There's still a glut of office space and shopping centers, and home values haven't rebounded to pre-bust levels. But after losing one in eight jobs during its 1982-87 depression, Houston now boasts of one of the highest employment growth rates in the country — although only in a national recession would a 3.5 percent annual increase seem like a boom.

In the first quarter of this year, home prices inched up 1 percent, while prices fell in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Dallas and elsewhere. The city's apart-

Look for mid-80s, clouds

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, a high in the mid-80s, southeast winds 10 to 20 mph, and a 20 percent chance of mainly afternoon thunderstorms, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low in the lower 60s and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms.

Tuesday is expected to be partly cloudy with a high near 90 and a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms.

After an overnight low of 61, Sunday's high was 84 compared with the record high for that dated of 105 in 1988. The overnight low for today's date was 51 set in 1975.

STATE

Cloud cover helped contain Texas temperatures Sunday. Most readings reached only the 80s.

Midafternoon readings ranged from 74 degrees at Galveston and 76 at Guadalupe Pass near El Paso to 89 at Del Rio and 91 in Cotulla.

A band of scattered afternoon showers and thunderstorms formed across North Texas from Wichita Falls to Brownwood. The showers extended southeast into South Central Texas near Austin.

Additional rain soaked South Texas, and there were isolated showers over the Panhandle and Big Bend.

An upper-level ridge of high pressure was over the Southeastern U.S. and extended west across portions of north central and Northeast Texas. Circulation around this feature helped to prevent storms from moving farther east into North Central and Northeast Texas.

Winds were from the southeast at speeds of 5 to 15 mph.

Forecasters said today would be mostly cloudy with isolated mainly evening thunderstorms. Locally heavy rainfall was possible in the Trans-Pecos region with high temperatures generally in the 80s.

NATION

Thunderstorms and hail pummeled the Midwest as a cold front moved Sunday across the north-central United States.

Late morning thunderstorms over northeastern North Dakota produced hail a half inch in diameter. Winds gusted up to 55 mph northwest of McVille, N.D., and at Thief River Falls, Minn.

Thunderstorms and showers hit central Minnesota, eastern South Dakota and eastern North Dakota in the early afternoon. Scattered showers fell over eastern Nebraska, northeast Kansas, eastern Wisconsin and western Upper Michigan.

An upper level weather system produced thundershowers in the northwestern Gulf of Mexico over coastal and north central Texas and south central Oklahoma.

In the six hour period ending at 1 p.m. CDT, about 4½ inches of rain fell at the Naval Air Station in Corpus Christi, Texas.

Dry weather prevailed across the rest of the United States, with sunny skies across California, Nevada and Oregon, and from Georgia to the Ohio Valley and the mid-Atlantic coastal states.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

VOLCANO: Military begins evacuating Americans the region. U.S. military helicopters also hovered overhead.

(From 1A)

An undetermined number of people were to stay behind to guard the facility and maintain essential services, Rand said. Marines from Subic as well as Philippine and American police will be deployed in that capacity.

Classes were suspended today at base schools and military aircraft were moved to Cubi Point naval air station near Subic.

Clark Air Base is located in Angeles, a densely populated area about 50 miles north of Manila with more than 300,000 inhabitants.

But Philippine officials said there were no plans to evacuate people from Angeles. More than 12,000 people from three provinces were already ordered evacuated because of the volcanic activity.

The regional police commander, Brig. Gen. Pantaleon Dumlao, said he would tour the area by helicopter today to look for victims and survey damage.

In Japan meanwhile, residents in the southwest feared more avalanches from a volcano that killed at least 37 people in its first eruption last week and burned 73 homes in another outburst on Saturday.

Nearly 10,000 people have left their homes at the foot of Japan's Mount Unzen.

The volcanoes now rumbling in Japan and the Philippines belong to a volcanic "Ring of Fire" circling the Pacific, but their simultaneous eruptions appear to be mere coincidence, experts said Friday.

Mount Pinatubo, about 60 miles northwest of Manila, began to show signs of activity in April for the first time in more than 600 years, and last week it belched small amounts of steam and ash.

The last major eruption of Mount Pinatubo was in 1380.

ARREST: Carpet cleaner confesses, police say four children in nearby Newberry, was picked up for questioning by authorities Saturday evening and confessed during nearly six hours of interrogation, police said.

(From 1A)

Davis cleaned the victims' apartment and then killed them, investigators said. They said the motive remains unclear.

Davis is charged in the deaths Thursday of Eleanor Anne Grace, 20, of Fort Myers, and Carla Marine McKishnie, 22, of Brandon. Ms. Grace was a sophomore studying psychology and Ms. McKishnie was a graduate student majoring in education.

Davis appeared Sunday in court, where a judge appointed a public defender to represent him.

Other family members described Davis as a hard-working family man, who deeply cared for his four stepchildren.

"There is no way in the world he would do it. He's not the kind of guy to try and strike out," said Terry Redemsky, his brother-in-law.

Authorities have emphasized that the killings were not connected to the August 1990 serial murders of four women and a man. Their bodies were discovered over a three-day period at the beginning of the fall semester.

In addition, a college woman missing since February 1989 lived in the Casablanca condominiums, where the latest slayings occurred.

The arrest seemed to ease the fears of students, still shocked by the crimes last August.

"I will go home and sleep a lot better," said 20-year-old Dean Hamen of Tampa. "We're all relieved."

But Sue Pessman wasn't convinced the worrying was over.

"I would be very relieved if they would prove without a doubt it was him," said the 24-year-old student from Boca Raton.

Assistant State Attorney Rob Groeb said the case would be taken before a grand jury within the next two to three weeks, and prosecutors would seek two first-degree murder indictments.

STRAUSS: Wheeler-dealer may have to cut back

(From 1A)

According to the September report, he also owned some 27,000 shares of ADM — which closed at $22.75 a share Friday on the New York Stock Exchange. It is not known whether he still has the shares.

The connection doesn't end there. ADM is a client of Strauss's law firm, Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld, with offices in Washington, Dallas and Houston and plenty of clout in government circles.

Strauss "would be indirectly benefiting" from ADM's grain sales to the Soviets, said Sam Dash, the former Watergate special counsel who is now a law professor at Georgetown University. "At the same time, he would be representing the United States as ambassador to Moscow."

"Either he should take a leave of absence as director or resign his directorship," Dash said. "It seems to me he shouldn't have any private employment . . . As a full-time diplomat representing the United States, his loyalty should be only to the people of the United States. It's a conflict from a point of view of public office."

Donald Campbell, deputy director of the Office of Government Ethics, said the issue is whether "you're likely to get involved in matters that could affect your own financial interest."

The ethics agency, in consultation with the State Department, will review the financial data that Strauss is required to submit as part of the confirmation process. The data will include an estimate of Strauss's net worth, which has not yet been disclosed.

In addition to the legal requirements, it is the usual practice for ambassadors and other White House appointees to resign all their corporate directorships, Campbell noted.

After Bush announced the nomination last Tuesday, Strauss told reporters that he will have to "disengage myself from some major responsibilities, which I will do as promptly as I can." Strauss is declining any further comment until his Senate confirmation hearings.

ADM's spokesman, Richard Burket, said the company doesn't "have a view" on potential conflicts.

BOOMTOWN: Houston is back on top again

ment occupancy rates, which fell to 79 percent in 1984, now are above 92 percent.

Foreclosures have just about disappeared. Unemployment rates — once over 11 percent — are now among the lowest in the nation, below 6 percent. More people are employed now than at the 1982 peak of the oil boom.

"Houston clearly is one of the new boomtowns," said Ron Witten, president of M-PF Research. "It's a '90s-version boomtown, though, not as hot as the '70s or '80s."

The new boom is fueled in part by deals springing out of the bust. Prices were driven so low that cheap commercial space is attracting new companies and cheap land is allowing more development.

Trammell Crow Residential bought a piece of land that had been foreclosed on twice — once by a savings and loan and once by a bank. The company paid half the early '80s price of the land, and built 221 apartment units. The $15 million year-old CityWalk complex is 96 percent leased and, with an average rent of $800, exceeding its financial projections.

"Rents in Houston are now at an all-time high," said Trammell Crow divisional partner John Rippel. "The economy is really better now, more solid, than in 1982."

CityWalk, and a larger complex under construction called CityScape, cater to young professionals with incomes of more than $60,000. They are located near downtown and near Houston's vast medical center, the world's largest, which economists say has helped stimulate Houston's revival.

Rather than oil, the traditional lifeblood of the Houston economy, the renaissance has been attributed to young professionals in business, medical and professional services, such as law and engineering.

While mining and manufacturing have added 42,000 new jobs to traditionally blue-collar Houston, about 100,000 jobs have been created in the white-collar business, medical and professional services fields, Federal Reserve Bank economist Bill Gilmer said.

"So far, we have sailed right through this recession," he said.

Ironically, oil, which plunged below $10 a barrel in the '80s and devastated the Houston economy, has been part of the recovery. Relatively stable prices around $18 per barrel have helped; the Persian Gulf War gave the Houston economy a jolt, too, when a barrel sold for more than $30 for several months last year.

Petrochemicals and refineries have benefited from the relatively low oil prices of the '80s. Demand for chemicals and plastics has sparked a building boom in the Gulf Coast area near Houston. Construction of $7 billion worth of new plants has been announced.

"Houston is still the Oil Capital — it's still an enormous business here," Gilmer said. "It's just shrunk back to a manageable scale."

To be sure, this boom is nothing like the go-go days of the early '80s, when oil was $30 a barrel and people thought it was headed to $50, when savings and loans offered easy money to build at hyperinflated rates, when everyone seemed sure the good times would never end.

S&Ls' free-lending ways helped developers build 40,000 new apartment units in 1982. Even after the economy started to recede, overanxious developers built another 40,000 units in 1983-1984. Millions of dollars worth of development sat empty through the downturn.

Last year, 3,000 new apartments were built in Houston, and building permits predict another 3,000 this year.

"That was a big hole to climb out of, but they're making good progress," said John Tuccillo, chief economist of the National Association of Realtors in Washington. "The people in Houston have gone through their hell, and what they're going to have now is a nice, stable market."

Commercial real estate has not recovered as well as apartments. Office space occupancy has climbed from a low of 67 percent in 1987 to only 75 percent last year.

CRUISING: Council to vote Tuesday on ordinance things and had trouble getting in."

(From 1A)

He said shootings and stabbings have occurred, as has plenty of illegal alcohol consumption, which is not allowed in Hogan Park without a city picnic permit.

"The fights and stabbings usually are brought on because of alcohol," Czech said. "We don't notice much drug use out there."

The ordinance, if approved, will go into effect Sunday, but Czech said police will not begin immediately handing out traffic citations.

"We'll be pretty gentle with them to start with," Czech said, adding that the measure is meant to keep the roads clear and not to run people out of Hogan Park.

Gary Saunders, city traffic engineering coordinator, said preventing left turns onto Wadley from the park would help prevent traffic stoppages around those intersections.

The ordinance prohibiting "stopping, standing or parking" on park roadways would keep drivers from creating traffic jams while they stop and socialize, Saunders said.

"They can't sit there visiting with someone or let their vehicle sit there idling while they get out and visit with someone," he said. "If they're going to park, there are parking lots."

Yvonne Gonzales, 20, who has spent many a Sunday in the park since she turned 17, said police will have a difficult time enforcing the ordinances.

"I don't think they're going to be able to stop people from doing what they're doing," Ms. Gonzales said. "This is our spot. We don't have any other place to go. We love this park."

She said she has never witnessed any violence during her park visits.

"There hasn't been a problem at all. If there was, it was a long time ago," Ms. Gonzales said.

Roman Estrada, 24, is a member of Latin Legacy, a club that sends a fleet of modified vehicles to the park every week.

"There's no problem out here. Every now and then people have differences, but that's a low percentage down here," Estrada said. "I've been cruising here practically forever.

"The police always seem to get where they need to go. Now, they just want to keep people from cruising."

The vehicular activities usually begin around 6 p.m. and last until 10 p.m.

David Ville, 27, whose modified Chevrolet pickup contains enough stereo speakers to make the nearby earth vibrate, said he has been a Sunday regular for 10 years.

"I came out here to hang around with friends," Ville said. "Everybody comes out here. What else are parks built for?"

MEETING: Apple, IBM gather to discuss far-reaching technology alliance

(From 1A)

has always positioned itself as the David against the huge, pinstriped and East Coast-based IBM. It provides exciting little machines to individuals, Apple has liked to suggest, while IBM provides stolid machines for corporate data processing departments. In a 1984 television commercial, Apple even likened IBM to Big Brother.

But executives say the computer industry is changing in a way that allows for strange bedfellows. Few companies can afford to develop all their technology alone anymore.

And customers are trying to avoid being dependent on a single supplier, which forces companies to team up to offer interchangeable computers that can be linked together in networks to increase computing power.

Both IBM and Apple have been left out of some alliances that have been formed recently, including a consortium involving Digital Equipment Corp. of Maynard, Mass., the nation's second-largest computer maker after IBM, and Compaq Computer Corp. of Houston, whose personal computers have challenged IBM's market share.

IBM and Apple are also being drawn together by their perception that Microsoft Corp. of Redmond, Wash., which dominates the personal computer software business, is a common enemy.

IBM has been trying to reduce its dependence on Microsoft for the basic operating system software that runs IBM personal computers. Using Apple software could be one way to do it.

Apple is generally classified as a maker of personal computers, but it is beginning to perceive itself as more of a software company, because its competitive strength is in its software. That view of the world puts it in more direct competition with Microsoft.

Spokesmen for Apple and IBM declined to comment Sunday on the talks between the companies. They said their companies talked to many others about technology exchanges all the time and that often nothing came of such discussions.

Should Apple decide to license its basic computer control software, known as the operating system, that would mark a dramatic shift for the company.

The operating system of the Macintosh, with a screen display that makes the computer relatively easy to use, is considered one of the machine's major advantages in the marketplace.

Apple has sued Microsoft, as well as Hewlett-Packard Co. of Palo Alto, Calif., accusing them of infringing copyrights of its screen displays by mimicking their "look and feel."

Some customers, however, are reluctant to buy Macintoshes and some software companies are reluctant to write programs for the machine because the Macintosh represents only a small part of the market. By licensing its operating system to IBM, the software would attract a broader audience and more support from software developers.

Such a move would also reflect a recognition by Apple that, with its profit margins shrinking, it can no longer develop all the technology it needs on its own. Apple is now talking about ventures with many companies. "Most everything is up for co-financing," said one industry executive.

In October, Apple made a major shift in its product line toward less expensive machines. Since then, its unit sales have increased, but the cheaper machines produce smaller profits for the company. Apple is now planning to reduce its staff of more than 15,000 by 10 percent and to cut the pay of executives by 10 percent.

The new Apple operating system, usually referred to by industry insiders by the code name Pink, is an ambitious effort to develop software based on a new technology known as object-oriented programming.

Such a system uses code modules as building blocks that can be linked together in various combinations, making it easier for programs to be written for the Apple computer and for programs to work together.

Pink is also expected to have powerful features for graphics and networking that are not available on the basic software for the Macintosh.

The new operating system, which is not expected to be completed for two years, will be built so it can be used on different brands of microprocessors. Apple's current Macintosh operating system runs only on microprocessors made by Motorola Inc., which is based in Schaumburg, Ill.

It is possible IBM will license the new operating system and use it on some computers, or at least incorporate some features of Apple's technology into its own operating system.

Today it's New York's turn

'Operation Welcome Home' to take city by storm

NEW YORK (AP) — The city readied 200 miles of ticker tape, 10,000 pounds of confetti, a million yellow ribbons and enough balloons to fill a six-story building for Monday's parade to honor the veterans of Operation Desert Storm.

"Operation Welcome Home," the biggest ticker-tape parade in this city's history, is a four-hour march through the skyscraper-lined "Canyon of Heroes" by 24,000 people, more than half military personnel who served in the Persian Gulf War.

"We're 99.9 percent ready," Eric Andruss, the parade spokesman, said Sunday. "We've got a plan and it'll work."

The parade will have three grand marshals: Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and a Bronx native; Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of Operation Desert Storm and a New Jersey product; and Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

The marshals, riding in separate convertibles, were to be followed by veterans from the 50 states and from 17 nations, celebrities including Brooke Shields, Bo Diddley and Tony Orlando, and New Yorkers in the ethnic attire of 20 nations. Music was to be provided by a kazoo band, a gay and lesbian band and various high school bands.

More than a million people were expected to turn out for the parade, which begins at 11:30 a.m. at Battery Park on the tip of lower Manhattan and moves north for a mile on Broadway, through the Financial District, past City Hall and up to Worth Street.

Operation Welcome Home organizers said they were throwing neither a victory parade nor a military parade, but "a celebration of peace achieved through international cooperation."

But the celebration will include several tanks, a jet fighter and a Patriot missile. tonight's fireworks display was to include a simulated shooting down of a Scud missile by a Patriot.

■ Report finds America still in debt

WASHINGTON — The government has come up with a fresh answer to a touchy economic question: How deeply is America in hock to the rest of the world?

After a yearlong research effort, the Commerce Department released a report Sunday showing the United States is still the world's largest debtor nation. But by one new calculation, it cut the amount of that debt by more than half.

Under the old method of figuring America's net international investment position, America's deficit stood at $663.75 billion at the end of 1989. That figure reflects the imbalance between what Americans own overseas and what foreigners own in this country.

Using two new methods of calculating America's international standing, the Commerce Department said the deficit figure was either $463.96 billion at the end of 1989, or an even lower $281.44 billion.

Private economists were generally supportive of the effort to correct widely known flaws in the old figures. But they said even with big revisions, the government hasn't altered the fundamental fact that huge trade deficits over the 1980s transformed the United States from the world's largest creditor country to the world's largest debtor nation.

■ Officials warn of problems at nuclear plant

BOSTON — Yankee Rowe, the nation's oldest operating nuclear power plant, threatens public safety because its reactor vessel is unsound, say two Nuclear Regulatory Commission staff members.

One official called the situation at the western Massachusetts plant "extremely serious and very dangerous," The Boston Sunday Globe reported.

The man the newspaper identified as a senior NRC official "with responsibilities for nuclear plant safety" was quoted as saying the reactor vessel's condition could lead to an accident involving a large-scale release of radiation.

■ Iowa floods hit farmers hardest

CLARION, Iowa — In his 58 years of farming here, Henry Delger has never seen so much storm water covering the fields and drenching the spirits and hopes of so many of his neighbors.

With a sad, slow shake of his head, he said the heavy rains that have hit the Midwest in recent weeks had made "grown men cry."

This has been one of Iowa's wettest springs ever, flooding basements and streets, overflowing riverbanks and soaking millions of acres of rich farmland.

In Hamilton County, north of Des Moines, rainfall was reported to be 350 percent of normal levels.

The heavy rains have greatly delayed planting in 44 of Iowa's 99 counties, largely in the north-central part of the state, where some farmers are up to a month or more behind their normal corn planting schedule.

The delay could cut the harvest in some of those counties by 30 percent and push farmers who barely survived the hard times that swept rural America in the 1980s off the land for good.

Last week, Gov. Terry E. Branstad asked the federal government to designate the 44 counties as disaster areas and to ease and extend farm and price protection programs.

■ Honeybees critically sting beekeeper

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn. — About 1,000 honeybees attacked their new keeper and held off paramedics for nearly 30 minutes as they tried to rescue him.

The 61-year-old beekeeper was hospitalized in critical condition Saturday. His condition was upgraded to satisfactory by Sunday, North Side Hospital nursing supervisor Mandy Bare said.

"They looked like honeybees to me, but they were aggressive," said Johnson City assistant Fire Chief Gordon Lane. "When the paramedics tried to get near him, they would attack them."

Lane and other firefighters donned reflective aluminum suits to pull the beekeeper, John Reeves of Johnson City, to safety.

"His face was white with stingers. He was covered from head to toe. I've never seen that many bee stings on anybody," Lane said. "They were still flying around the ambulance and trying to get on us while we were loading him up."

Emergency room nurse Brenda Egan said three people worked for more than three hours pulling out stingers and still didn't get them all.

She said virtually every part of Reeve's body was stung, including the inside of his mouth and throat, his eyes, ears, nose and extremities.

■ Nevada governor signs new flag into law

CARSON CITY, Nev. — Nevada has a new flag, designed to make the state's name easier to read.

Under a new design signed into law Saturday by Gov. Bob Miller, the golden letters that spell "Nevada" will move from their scrambled position around a five-pointed star into a more legible form. "Nevada" will now appear beneath the silver star, which is in the blue flag's upper left corner.

Checking the chicks

'Doctors' call on bald eagles

NEW SALEM, Mass. (AP) — The doctor wore hiking boots and the patients got a treat of fresh-caught fish as state wildlife officials paid a cautious house call on a pair of bald eagle chicks, 55 feet up a red oak tree.

The chicks, fathered by Ross, the first eagle released in Massachusetts' 9-year-old restoration program, were due for their first — and, biologists hoped, last — medical checkup and contact with humans.

In the past three years, the program has produced five nesting pairs and 13 Massachusetts-born chicks, most at the wild, 32-square mile Quabbin Reservoir in western Massachusetts. But state wildlife officials say there is still much to be learned about the national symbol that has made a remarkable comeback across the United States since the banning of the pesticide DDT.

AP Laserphoto

This 1989 file photo shows the first bald eagle hatched in this century in Massachusetts as part of a program to repopulate the eagles.

In a measure of how precarious their toehold remains, officials in Maine recently sought Massachusetts medical data to help determine if long-term pesticide effects were causing a decline in the fertility of their 126 breeding pairs, said Thomas French, director of Massachusetts' endangered species program.

In 1989, Ross and his mate produced two of the state's first eagle chicks in nearly a century and last year, after losing their own chick, they successfully fostered a young eaglet.

Senators warn Bush about arms pact rush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate leaders Sunday cautioned President Bush against rushing to complete a strategic arms agreement ahead of a summer summit with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

"I don't think we ought to try to meet any artificial deadlines," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, expressed concern that arms control negotiators will "end up making some mistakes" if they speed a pact in time for the as yet unannounced Moscow summit.

"I'd rather see them go ahead with the summit without rushing the negotiators," Nunn said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., charged that Gorbachev was trying "a new form of nuclear blackmail" by warning that failure to help the Soviet Union could jeopardize world peace.

"I don't think that we should be blackmailed by the threat," Bradley, a relentless critic of U.S. aid for the Soviets, said on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley."

The two superpowers are still struggling to finish work on the pact to reduce their long-range nuclear arsenals by 30 percent. A U.S. official said privately Saturday that a summit "won't happen in June and it may not happen in July."

Publicity at issue in Palm Beach case

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Extensive pretrial publicity about the alleged rape at the Kennedy estate has raised the possibility that the trial may be moved.

One prominent attorney says a change of location could be needed, and the trial judge says she worries about similarities between this case and that of a man whose murder conviction was overturned 25 years ago.

Palm Beach County Circuit Judge Mary Lupo summoned attorneys for both sides Friday and said she fears the publicity could "make empaneling a jury extremely difficult. ... I think we're almost at the point of a clear and present danger."

For now, Lupo is trying to control the publicity with a gag order forbidding out-of-court comments by virtually all participants in the trial of William Kennedy Smith, 30. She told attorneys to present her with details for a modified gag order by noon Monday.

The judge said coverage of the Kennedy estate case "very closely parallels that extended in the Sheppard case." The U.S. Supreme Court in 1966 reversed the 1954 conviction of Cleveland osteopath Samuel Sheppard in the murder of his wife, saying the trial judge failed "to protect Sheppard sufficiently from the massive, pervasive and prejudicial publicity."

Smith's attorneys have said they will file a motion this week to dismiss the second-degree sexual battery and misdemeanor battery charges against him in the alleged assault on a 29-year-old Jupiter, Fla., woman. They claim prejudicial publicity and one-sided handling of the case by police and prosecutors have jeopardized Smith's right to a fair trial.

■ Official expects Gorbachev at summit

HALLE, Germany — Britain's foreign minister said Sunday he expects Mikhail Gorbachev to be invited to the Group of Seven summit next month, but doesn't believe the Soviet leader will receive promises of economic aid.

Gorbachev has been pressing for an invitation to the annual gathering to plead his case for aid before leaders of the world's seven largest industrialized democracies. Last week, Britain and the United States dropped their objections to having him attend.

But British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd said that while he expected Gorbachev to attend the July 15-17 meeting in London, he said no one expects to promise financial aid at that time.

Hurd made the remarks to reporters after meeting with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in this eastern German city.

■ Jews attack Palestinian leader; Arab slain

JERUSALEM — Dozens of Jews assaulted a Palestinian leader Sunday while awaiting a court hearing for a Jewish settler of the occupied West Bank who allegedly killed an Arab shepherd.

"You'll never get a Palestine!" the crowd yelled at Faisal Husseini as two aides ushered him into his car.

In the occupied Gaza Strip, the body of an Arab was found stabbed to death in Rafah after being kidnapped by Palestinian activists, Arab reporters said.

The killing came as Palestinians observed a general strike to mark the start of the 43rd month of their uprising against the Israeli occupation of Gaza and the West Bank.

Shops remained closed and public transportation came to a halt. But some 17,000 Arab laborers from Gaza went to their jobs in Israel, army radio said.

Husseini, 50, a pro-Palestine Liberation Orgranization activist who has been mentioned as a possible negotiator with Israel, was attacked outside a Jerusalem court.

■ Pope wraps up nine-day visit to Poland

WARSAW, Poland — Pope John Paul II capped a nine-day trip home with an emotional sermon at an outdoor Mass on Sunday, telling fellow Poles they face "a new test of freedom" with the fall of communism.

Earlier in the day, he assured leaders of Poland's remaining Jewish community that the Roman Catholic Church would step up its battle against anti-Semitism. But he rejected their request that the Vatican establish formal ties with Israel.

Later Sunday, John Paul met with bishops, priests and nuns and urged them to continue fighting for passage of a bill before Parliament that would outlaw abortions. He praised those members of Parliament seeking to reverse a 1956 law implemented by the Communists permitting abortion on demand.

At least 300,000 people crowded Warsaw's Agrykola Park for the Mass held around a pond, the last by the pope before he left on an evening flight to Rome at the end of a 12-city tour of his native land. The capital's faithful clambered over barriers and hung from trees to catch a glimpse of the 71-year-old pontiff.

■ First Kuwaiti death sentence imposed

KUWAIT CITY — The first death sentence imposed on a defendant accused of collaborating with Iraq was greeted with indifference Sunday by many Kuwaitis, most too busy restocking their houses to follow the trials.

The acting prosecutor general also said that more such sentences would follow because he had asked for the death penalty for virtually all of the 300 alleged collaborators currently facing a martial law court.

Human rights groups have strongly criticized the 3-week-old trials, saying the decisions of the five-judge panel seem entirely based on pretrial investigations, rather then the examination of witnesses by prosecution and defense in open court.

The death sentence imposed on Saturday involved a stateless man who never had a chance to speak to his court-appointed lawyer.

■ Reports: Floods kill 73 in Indonesia

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Floods killed at least 73 people in Indonesia's Central Kalimantan area, police and news reports said Sunday.

The floods hit the regencies of Kapuas and Barito Utara at dawn Thursday, said an officer of the Regional Police Command in Central Kalimantan's capital, Palangkaraya, about 540 miles northeast of Jakarta.

Rescuers discovered 60 bodies in Kapuas, at the upper end of the Kapuas River, about 60 miles southeast of Palangkaraya.

China seeks missiles market

Western diplomats fear collision course with West

BEIJING (NYT) — Western diplomats and experts are concerned by indications that China is seeking to increase its share of the world market for missiles.

The Chinese military, the experts say, may begin shipments of two new kinds of missiles to Syria and Pakistan, and perhaps to other countries as well. The new missiles, which are said to be more accurate than the Soviet-designed Scuds used by Iraq in the Persian Gulf war, are thought to be at the end of the development stage and could be deployed soon.

Short of money and therefore eager to sell weapons, China, the experts say, may be on a collision course with Western nations that say they want to slow the international arms race.

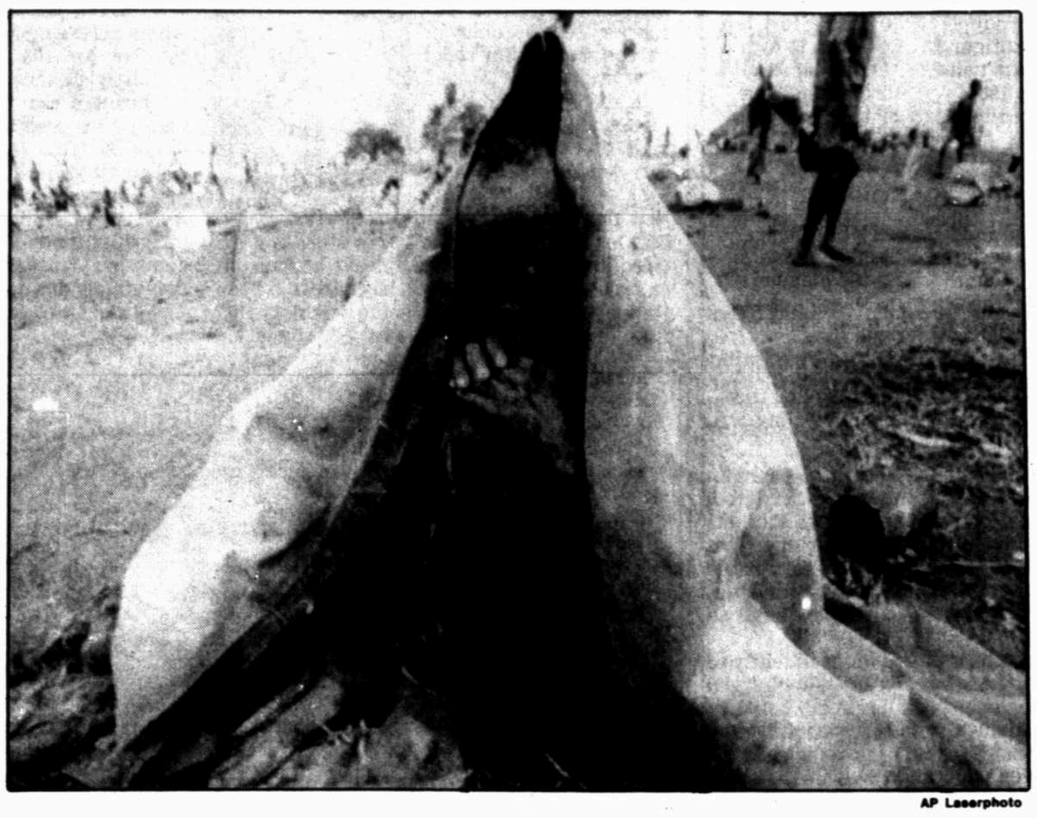

With the decline of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe as arms merchants, China, in the view of some, is emerging to fill the void.

For its part, China points out that it sells far fewer weapons than either the United States or the Soviet Union. If Washington can sell arms to the Middle East, it asks, why not Beijing?

Still, China's weapons sales are becoming a growing source of friction with the United States, and a factor in the debate about whether to cut off China's most-favored-nation trade benefits. In a sign of American concern, Reginald Bartholomew, the undersecretary of state for security assistance, is scheduled to visit Beijing June 17 to 19 to discuss weapons proliferation.

Apparently intending to ease the friction and improve its image, China has reportedly accepted an invitation from President Bush to attend a July conference of major powers to discuss limits on arms sales to the Middle East.

But whether China will agree to do more than talk may depend on the outcome of disagreements between China's Foreign Ministry, which would like to curtail proliferation to improve the nation's image, and the army, which wants to raise funds through the sale of weapons, and regards the Foreign Ministry as weak-kneed.

Post-Gandhi India returns to elections

NEW DELHI, India (NYT) — Amid fears of renewed violence, India returns to the polls this week to complete national elections halted last month after the assassination of former premier Rajiv Gandhi.

About 60 percent of India's half-billion eligible voters will get the chance to cast ballots on Wednesday and Saturday. They will elect members of parliament's House of the People, control of which entitles a party to form the next government. The other 40 percent were able to vote May 20, the day before Gandhi, 46, was killed in a bomb blast.

All votes will be counted beginning Sunday, with projected results expected by late evening.

Most analysts predict a tight contest with neither of three major parties winning a clear and decisive majority. Most likely, analysts expect, one of the three will emerge with some 40 percent of the available seats and will seek partners from rival parties to stitch together a coalition government.

"It is India's misfortune that its electorate is poised to return a schizophrenic verdict," lamented the Sunday Observer newspaper.

If voting has been placed on hold, the killing has not. The prolonged elections, the most violent in India's history, have left more than 250 people dead from politically motivated beatings, stabbings, shootings and bombings.

The uncertain East: Nothing's for sure

By Alison Smale
Associated Press writer

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Eighteen months after its anti-Communist revolutions, Eastern Europe is an upside-down world lurching through anarchy toward some form of capitalism and democracy.

The cradle-to-grave sureties of downtrodden, stagnant Communist societies have gone, leaving mass confusion.

At the top, largely untested politicians grope for what nobody knows: What is our national identity? How much of the old do we retain? How "Western" should we become?

About 30 former European heads of state met in Prague a week ago to discuss the great issues facing an Eastern Europe in transition. After four days they came up with the advice that "neither the capitalist system nor the socialist command economy have proved to be perfect."

Sureties of downtrodden Communist societies have gone.

Although most Communist workers had a low standard of living, prices were stabilized at generally low levels and their jobs were guaranteed. The revolutions, with their tilt toward capitalism, have brought rising prices and unemployment.

Jarring images have entered daily life.

In Budapest, for example, pensioners scavenge garbage for empty bottles worth a few forints if returned to the store. Hungarian unemployment is 3.4 percent and rising fast, and prices are jumping more than a third each year.

Yet ownership of luxury cars like German BMWs is visibly up and Western products are sold in 24-hour stores. The chic Hungarians who crowded the recent opening of Budapest's Christian Dior could make any Westerner feel frumpy.

In Central Europe, away from the fragile states of the Balkans, some try to ensure their survival by adopting a fierce brand of capitalism.

With all the ruthless grit of the American frontier, the new businessmen are on a constant hunt to buy low and sell high. Quality and morals are secondary.

"It's really rampant right now," said a Westerner who has been dealing with Prague over the past year and asked anonymity. "Everybody's raping each other."

Health care cost threatens system

The cost of American medical care — already the most expensive in the world — is escalating 20 percent a year. Yet nearly one in every seven Americans lacks insurance. The system frustrates taxpayers, physicians, patients and insurers.

That's why nine out of 10 Americans want fundamental change. That change must come before the health care system collapses.

One proposed remedy is managed care, offered by Prof. Alain Enthoven of Stanford University. The plan would guarantee universal coverage at rates that don't discriminate against the seriously ill. And it would control costs for everyone else. The idea is complex, but so is the problem.

Managed care would replace the prevalent out-of-control payment system. Doctors are now typically paid according to services rendered, which encourages them to render needless, expensive services. Patients choose their doctors, so the insurer has no opportunity to negotiate fees and treatment practices. Because patients pay only a small part of the bill, they have little incentive to monitor costs and insurance companies are free to skim off low-risk individuals and avoid people they can identify as potentially needy.

Under managed care, individuals would be grouped independently of their health needs; that way the needy wouldn't be excluded or charged ruinous fees. Enthoven would retain employers as the primary basis for grouping and would cover other individuals through a geographically based public pool. Prof. Peter Diamond of MIT would scrap the need for employer-based insurance and place everyone who lives in the same area into large groups ranging from 10,000 to 100,000.

The next step would be to create a sponsor — typically a large employer or a public agency — for each group to organize insurance for its members. Enthoven would have the sponsor limit the doctors and hospitals that can be used, thereby gaining the upper hand in negotiating treatment practices and payments. The sponsor would also standardize the packages that insurance companies offer members of the group, making comparison shopping simple. It would also monitor quality.

Limiting choice is not a pretty option, but it appears to offer one way of guaranteeing affordable, quality care to everyone. Individuals would be welcome to buy additional coverage outside the plan from any doctor they chose, but at their own expense. A good managed-care program would make patients conscious of costs by limiting tax subsidies to basic coverage; anything more would come out of the individual's pocket.

The offered plan may not be the best available, but something must be attempted to save the health care system and assure Americans the good, basic health care they seek at an affordable price.

United States is too polite to Syria

WASHINGTON — America almost went too far today in its gush of pride over the outcome of the Persian Gulf War. The parade in New York City to honor returning troops was to have included a contingent from Syria, a U.S. ally in the war. As it turns out, the nation that specializes in torture, terrorism and unmitigated brutality will not be represented in today's parade. But not for lack of trying by the hosts.

Anderson

It was Syria that diplomatically declined the invitation by New York City Mayor David Dinkins — an invitation that should never have been issued. Perhaps Dinkins looked down the list of allies and decided it wouldn't be polite to leave anyone out on the big day. America has already been forced to be entirely too polite to this malignant ally. It was one thing to have to stomach a relationship with Syria in the name of putting down another butcher — Iraq — but it is entirely too much to have Syrian soldiers marching through the Big Apple on a day to honor men and women who thought they were fighting for freedom.

The invitation to Syria brought a howl of protest, as it should have, from American Jews and from the families of the victims of the Pan Am 103 terrorist bombing. Syria is still giving safe haven to Ahmed Jibril, the terrorist whom all the evidence points to as the culprit for Pan Am 103.

Unholy alliances sometimes must be tolerated during a war, but the war is over and human rights experts warn that our new friend is not the fine fellow he appears to be.

Amnesty International has compiled a bill of particulars against Syria and its president, Hafez al-Assad. Hundreds of people are detained in Syria without charges or trial. Political dissidents are jailed, tortured and executed, or they simply disappear. Anyone who challenges Assad does not last long in Syria.

Riad Al-Turk is a case in point. Turk, the first secretary of the banned Communist Party in Syria, was arrested in 1980 and is hanging on to life in a Syrian prison today. He has been brutally tortured and denied medical treatment. He has been in and out of a coma.

Syria is the torture capital of the Middle East. Syria is to torture devices as Japan is to the microchip. The Syrians are particularly proud of the Black Slave, a device that inserts a heated metal skewer into the victim's anus. The "washing machine" is a hollow spinning drum into which a victim's arms are pushed and spun until they are crushed. Then there is the Syrian metal chair that crushes the occupant's spine while cutting his ankles with metal blades. We trust none of those toys would have been displayed in today's "Operation Welcome Home" parade had a Syrian contingent decided to join the festivities.

Assad would rather that Americans not see that side of his dirty little government, especially when he is enjoying such a good relationship with the White House. President Bush says he and Assad differ on many things, but the two nations stuck together during the war on the principle that a bigger nation should not be allowed to gobble up its neighbors. Never mind that last October, during Operation Desert Shield, Assad's army slaughtered thousands of people in Lebanon to consolidate his grip on that neighbor.

Like Saddam Hussein, Assad doesn't mind killing his own people too if that's what it takes to get the job done. The butcher of Damascus used artillery and tanks to quell an uprising in the Syrian city of Hama in 1982, killing an estimated 25,000 Syrians.

And, like Saddam, Assad knows how to put his money where his megalomania is. Saudi Arabia paid Syria $1 billion for its participation in the Persian Gulf War, and Assad immediately used the money to buy Scud missiles from North Korea.

Citizens can't bank on realistic bank reform

I have a scheme to make money and I want you to participate. As you will see, it's a really great scheme.

First, you give me your money for storage purposes. I'll put it in a vault, guard it, and give you a receipt for it. Anytime you want it, just present the receipt. I'll only charge you a reasonable fee for storing it.

Reese

Of course, after you've left with your receipt, I'll then lend your money to other people at high interest rates and require them to put up collateral. Naturally, I won't share any of the profits on the use of your money with you. After all, I am storing it for you at a reasonable fee.

But the scheme gets even better. I'll not only lend out your money at high interest rates, but I'll lend out money I don't even have. How, you may wonder, can I do this?

Well, it's simple. I won't actually give people money; I'll give them a receipt for "money" I place in their account. Actually, I don't put any cash or coin in there — just a bookkeeping entry.

They take the receipt and, say, hand it to a car dealer when they buy a car. The car dealer deposits the receipt in his account. I credit his account and debit the other guy's. Rarely, if ever, will all of these people ever come to me and actually demand their cash money. If they do, I'll slam the door in their faces and call the government.

As by now you have probably guessed, the scheme described above is an accurate, if simplified, description of the commercial banking business. The real mystery is why the government authorizes and licenses such schemes and why we, the poor dumb public, put up with it.

One explanation is offered in a quotation attributed to John Sherman, an Ohio senator, who was instrumental in creating the present day financial structure in the U.S. Whether he actually said this or not, I don't know. It's attributed to him in a book, but frankly it's hard for me to believe such a smart guy would be dumb enough to put such an incriminating statement on paper.

At any rate, the words were written in a letter by one European banker to another. He quoted Sherman as saying: "The few who can understand the system will either be so interested in its profits or so dependent of its favors that there will be no opposition from that class, while on the other hand, the great body of people, mentally incapable of understanding the tremendous advantages that capital derives from the system, will bear its burdens without complaint and perhaps without suspecting that the system is financially inimical to their interests."

Whether Sherman said it or not, it is a pretty accurate assessment.

To put it another away, a government bank charter is a license to be a legal counterfeiter. In our system, the government doesn't create money — banks do.

Tom Jefferson warned that if banks were allowed to create money, then posterity would curse the founders for, within 200 years, the banks would have dispossessed the people of their own country.

When you add up all the trillions of dollars of debt owed by governments and consumers, not only in the U.S. but in the world, then perhaps we can infer that Jefferson was not far off the mark.

What is pertinent about this is that bank reform legislation is before the banking committees of the House and Senate, members of which are heavily financed by the banking industry. The administration's so-called banking reform will allow banks that have fouled up their own business to get into the business of securities and insurance.

When you feel the next sharp pain in the vicinity of your prostate, it will be the passage of alleged banking reform.

Baha'i resolution asks equal rights

Your recent front page article describing Iran's efforts to improve relations with the United States and other Western nations, paricularly in creating stable oil prices ("Iran Pitches Oil Deals," Midland Reporter-Telegram, Tuesday, May 28th) warrants some additional comment, I believe.

While I applaud Iran's apparent interest in having better relations with our country and others, there is still reason for concern among people all over the world who know of the terrible nature of human rights abuses in Iran.

Specifically, I wish to draw your readers' attention to the recent resolution introduced in Congress that calls upon the Iranian government to grant full human rights and genuine religious freedom to members of the Baha'i Faith. According to Speaker of the House Tom Foley, "For more than a decade, Baha'is have been persecuted, imprisoned, and even executed for their religious beliefs." Speaker Foley added, "While conditions for individual Baha'is have improved somewhat in recent years, there is still enormous room for real progress before the Baha'i community can enjoy basic human rights and religious freedom."

The resolution also calls on the Iranians to help free the hostages in Lebanon and stop any support of terrorism.

This joint resolution, supported by a number of members of Congress on a bipartisan basis, is important to keep in mind in the context of recent headlines. The determination of these members of Congress to require that Iran fully comply with recognized standards of decency in the treatment of its citizens is encouraging to people like me, a member of the American Baha'i community, and to all those who believe in religious and human liberty.

Reader says he's not comfortable retiree

You allowed Linda Buckley to publicly sneer at me and others of her elders (Letters, May 16); please allow me to reply.

I am not one of the retirees that I described and sympathize with (Letters, May 2). Seeing the writing on the wall, I left my company at age 45. For almost 19 years' service I get a pension of $150.52 per month, no bonus, no benefits. My insurance comes through my professional association for $5,000 per year. Had I served 20 years in the military, the pension would be five times as much; in Congress, 50 times as much, with cost of living increases.

My real world, Linda, is that of a highly-trained, computer-literate, unemployed, unemployable 61-year-old geologist in a severely depressed industry that employs few people over age 50.

Your belief that everyone can work a full oil industry career and retire comfortably is wrong. If you are planning to spend your next 20 years pursuing that objective, look around your company and count the 60-year-olds reaping the rewards of long service. You have a 95 percent chance of "retiring" before your house is paid for and before your children are out of college. Probably in 10 years, possibly in five. Imagine your bitterness then.

'Proper address hygiene' is sickening usage

Mailbag

"Dear Postal Customer:" begins this communication from the United States Postal Service, formerly the U.S. Mail, forwarded to me by Phyllis Agard of Amherst, MA. "Recently you received a brochure from the U.S. Postal Service concerning the coming of automated sortation and the need for proper address hygiene."

Safire

We need not look askance, as Ms. Agard does, at automated sortation. I would call it automatic, or mechanical, because it does not employ the principle of feedback (self-control by machine, as in a thermostat) that is the essence of automation, and sorting is preferred on historical principles. But these are matters of judgment and taste, and an outfit that eschews the plain word mail for the pompous phrase postal service is at least consistent in choosing the costly-sounding automated sortation.

But "proper address hygiene"? That word, derived from the Greek to mean "the science of maintaining health," is sickened by such usage. We can debate the difference between healthy, "being in good health," and healthful, "contributing to good health," but the stretching of hygiene — with its habits of brushing your teeth, taking a shower now and then, wiping the mouth of your pop bottle on your sleeve before handing it to your neighbor — into the realm of addressing envelopes is beyond the linguistic pale.

In choosing this term, our postal servants are not suggesting we refrain from licking stamps that others have previously licked — an unhygienic act — but are urging us to use ZIP codes to assist its machines and to abbreviate each state's name in a manner that is not confusing to them.

Unclean! Unclean! The introductory phrase containing a gerund, by using this address information correctly, cries out for attachment of the action to a person; following it with it leaves it hopelessly dangling. And there is no need to spend millions for computer software to catch the simplest grammatical errors; a large dog can be trained to sink its teeth into the hand of anybody inputting an apostrophe in the possessive its.

"Mentee?" writes the shocked James B. McCloskey of Norfolk, Va. He had heard this word used by broadcast journalists, and had dismissed it as the misnomer for a beneficiary of the efforts of a mentor, a word meaning "trusted counselor or teacher" derived from the name of the teacher to whom Odysseus entrusted the education of Telemachus, his son. But "surely, William Safire wouldn't misconstrue the meaningless final two letters of a proper name — Mentor — as representing the -or suffix denoting one performing the act described by the root verb." Because ment is not a verb that led to mentor, it cannot lead to mentee. "Whence came this abomination?"

I was hoping to get good mail on that. Mentee was first used in letters from Linda S. Benedict and Bonnie K. Shimahara published in Business Week on Nov. 20, 1978. In 1986, I noted that Citibank had issued a "Mentor/-Mentee Profile," and opined that "the use of -ee as the automatic complement to -or should be resisted."

I know how Gorbachev feels after issuing a decree. Thirty-three citations come leaping out of the Nexis morgue, from some of our more literate publications, in the five years since I told you all to cut it out. Perhaps my authority would better be maintained by now switching to Yeltsinesque reform.

For "one who is under a mentor's wing," fellow does not work. In academia and at think tanks, fellowships abound, but in ordinary speech, fellow is too often associated with a male person. (Sorry, fellas.) Protege has a musical-world connotation and means "one being promoted or put forward"; that French word is not taking root in the business world. People there seem to prefer being known as mentees.

This does not mean I will run out and buy sponsor/sponsee or metaphor/metaphee, but let's suspend the abominating of mentee. Give it a break. Help it along.

Development threatens Brandywine battle site

By Mike Owen

CHADDS FORD, Pa. (AP) — Battered and beaten American troops escaped from the Brandywine battlefield to fight another day. More than two centuries later, the question is: Will the battlefield get away?

Development, not the British, is the new challenge to the rolling land once bloodied by the Revolutionary War.

"It's a very complex problem. You're seeing it all over," said Nancy Webster, who led a study of the battlefield. "As the East Coast builds out, we're covering all of our early history sites.

"As a nation, we have wanted to preserve our cultural past but we have not really come up with good tools to do so."

The Battle of Brandywine on Sept. 11, 1777, isn't necessarily a happy memory for Americans. George Washington's troops lost here and went on to spend a brutal winter at Valley Forge while the British occupied Philadelphia.

Historians agree the battle was important, and some would like to see as much of the area as possible remain as it was in the 18th century. But most of the land is owned privately and houses have been sprouting in the last decade.

ONE WAY or another, somebody will have to pay for any guarantees that remaining undeveloped land will be kept open or historical damage limited.

"Our being is our history," said landowner Thomas Spackman, whose family was in the area in the late 1600s. "We don't want to see all this destroyed."

Spackman has 160 acres, 80 of which are on the battlefield. Some of it was the site of heavy fighting. He's turned away people with "land rape" on their minds and has tried to find ways to ensure his farmland remains open space. But he's also guarding his rights.

"It's never too late," Spackman said, but quickly added, "If you want something you've got to pay for it."

Spackman said landowners shouldn't be expected to just set land aside without compensation — especially when they let the big offers come and go in the interests of preserving the land.

"These people, and I'll take myself as one, we have held out for 20 years not to sell the property," Spackman said. "Why should we suddenly be penalized for having been the good guys? ...We have tried every which wiggle way to keep that land open."

JOHN TAGGART, a local developer, estimates that less than half of the battlefield area has been built upon, and that about 60 percent of what's left could still be developed. Brandywine Creek, which Washington envisioned as a line of defense, and its tributaries go right through the battlefield, leaving flood plain that already is protected from development.

The Brandywine issue arises in a region rich in sites set aside for history — Independence Hall, Valley Forge and Gettysburg, among them.

"The Revolutionary sites — the sites were almost forgotten before that great commemorative movement arose in the public mind," said Dennis McDaniel, site administrator for the state-run Brandywine Battlefield Park.

The park is relatively tiny compared with the 10 square miles where troops are said to have moved or fought during the battle. It contains 50 acres and two homes used as headquarters by Washington and the Marquis de Lafayette.

The park was not established until 1947, 16 years after Washington's headquarters burned down.

Too much time had elapsed to use the original walls when it was rebuilt — a lesson that should be heeded before Brandywine Battlefield disappears, McDaniel said. "It's a question of people realizing very late what they've got."

WHAT REMAINS, for the most part, is picturesque countryside west of Philadelphia. It is valued by artists like the Wyeths, but it also is prized by developers who note its location between Philadelphia and Wilmington, Del.

One developer said it is worth an average of $40,000 an acre, eight to 10 times as much as agricultural land.

Preservation-minded residents acknowledge they need to inform residents of the heritage, especially newcomers. A group has tried to put ideas together, but has organized only informally and has not met for months.

Some landowners have set aside land and buildings through the Brandywine Conservancy; the owners get tax breaks for charitable contributions, the conservancy ensures the land will not be developed.

The federal government designated the battlefield a National Historic Landmark in 1961. "But in Pennsylvania as in other states, the land-use decisions are made at the local level," Ms. Webster said.

There are various notions of how local governments can help preserve the battlefield. Chester County voters approved a referendum to allow bond sales to buy development rights on open lands.

OTHERS PROPOSE ordinances that would allow heavier development on smaller parcels of land in exchange for keeping more land open — not always a popular suggestion in suburbs that zealously guard the density of new developments.

Ed Bearss, chief historian for the National Park Service, said the Revolutionary War sites are proportionately well-preserved by the federal government — 29 Civil War sites for 10,500 battles, engagements and skirmishes, compared with 14 Revolutionary sites for less than 1,000 such conflicts.

'You can see a marked difference every two years. It's being compromised. The clock is ticking.'

— Ed Bearss, National Park Service chief historian

"So we run into this question, how much is enough? Yes, I think Brandywine should be protected and interpreted but I think there could be more done by state and local people," Bearss said.

That said, Bearss said "there's definitely problems up there." He has led biennial tours to Valley Forge and Brandywine during the past nine years.

"You can see a marked difference every two years," he said.

Is it too late for the Brandywine battlefield?

"It's being compromised," Bearss said. "The clock is ticking."

Flipping burgers: America's 1st job

By Karen Ball
AP Labor writer

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The lure of spending cash for clothes and movies drew Christian Morales to Hardee's shortly after his 16th birthday. Now he's got bigger dreams for the paycheck he earns juggling burgers and fries, wiping tables and stocking the Fixin's bar.

"I'm not sure if I want to buy a motorcycle or a car," the youngster said, taking a brief break after the dinner rush at a franchise in suburban Washington.

Like millions of other American teen-agers who land their first jobs at fast-food restaurants, Morales went to work so he wouldn't have to ask his mother for handouts.

"I wanted money to buy my own things. I needed it go out, you know, to the movies," he said. In fact, now that he's a breadwinner, he said, he gives his mother $50 every so often to help with rent and groceries.

Though money is the drawing card, the restaurant executives who hire these youngsters, most of whom are eager to work for the minimum wage or pennies above it, say the teen-agers also are learning valuable lessons in responsibility, money and teamwork.

"In terms of the work, it's not the most challenging," acknowledged Anne Curtis, a spokeswoman for the National Restaurant Association.

"But there are some fundamental skills you learn, such as reporting on time, being friendly to the public, working with management, working for a supervisor," Curtis said.

No one knows exactly how many kids start out at Hardee's, Wendy's or other fast-food restaurants. But McDonald's proudly quotes one statistic — although outdated at 5 years old — showing one in 15 Americans spent their first days in the U.S. labor market toiling under its golden arches.

In all, about 1.4 million American teens, or one in five of the nation's working 16- to 19-year-olds, worked at fast-food and full-service restaurants last year, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The agency does not break down how many of those worked in fast food or which ones were holding their first job.

Many educators are disturbed by the extent to which high school sophomores, juniors and seniors feel the need to work 20 or 30 hours a week during the school year.

"It sucks all of the energy from them and teaches them the wrong lessons," said Mary Bicouvaris, a Hampton, Va., high school teacher who has used her status as 1989 Teacher of the Year to stump nationally against excessive after-school work by students.

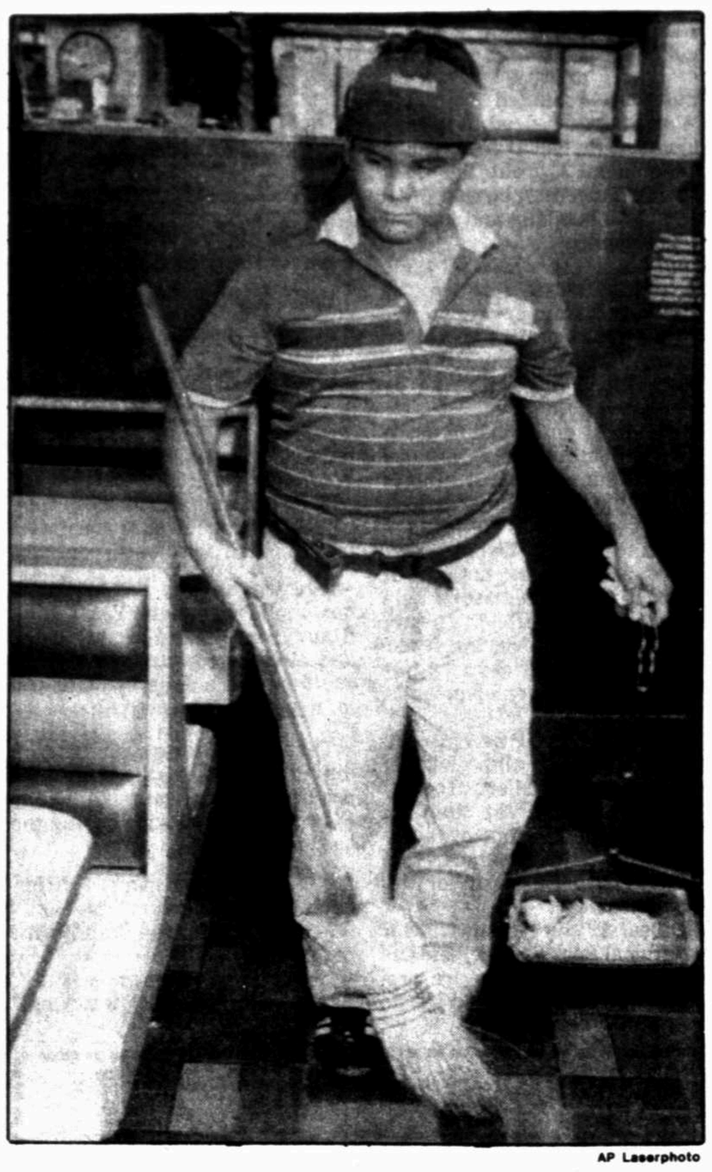

"It makes school a second priority. It tires children to the point where it becomes, 'I'll do just what I need to get by at school.' This nation is developing a 'just what a need to get by' mind set, one of mediocrity," she said.

She also says working teen-agers get a "false idea of money" from such jobs because many times, it all goes for frivolous spending.

"Imagine a 16-year-old with $160 a week, living at home, whether the money is going for shoes or a car or clothes," she said, "it gives them the wrong idea."

But John Merritt, a senior vice president at Hardee's, said critics of after-school work are "forgetting there's a value in work."

"These jobs teach them about money, about responsibility. The real key thing you learn in a fast food place is how to work as a team," Merritt said.

AP Laserphoto

The lure of spending cash drew 16-year-old Christian Morales to Hardees in Alexandria, Va., where he earns a paycheck juggling burgers and fries.

"It's athletic, it's energetic, it's fun for a lot of them. ... Of course, some kids will tell you it's drudgery," he said.

Barry Bluestone, a labor historian at the University of Massachusetts in Boston, said he's more worried that many young adults — not just teen-agers — have to work in fast-food restaurants because good-paying manufacturing jobs have disappeared. Bluestone did a study a few years ago showing that many of the jobs created in the 1980s were "burger flipping" jobs.

"The big problem is not so much that one in 15 young people begin their career at McDonald's," he said. "The problem is that there are so few opportunities in this economy for people with limited education."

Controversy surrounds Spoleto's 15th season

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — A record box office, controversy over a visual arts display and uncertainty about future control marked the 15th season of Spoleto Festival U.S.A., which drew to a close Sunday.

The 18-day run featured more than 120 performances and included the display that drew praise from critics and the wrath of festival founder Gian Carlo Menotti.

The rest of the productions received generally positive reviews and attracted more people than in any previous season. More than $1.8 million worth of tickets were sold as the festival's final weekend opened, eclipsing last year's record of $1.64 million.

Nigel Redden, the festival general manager, predicted attendance would surpass 100,000 when all the figures are tallied.

Acrimony centered on the visual arts display, "Places with a Past: New Site-Specific Art in Charleston." Artists were invited to use historic sites around the city as a canvas for interpreting Charleston's past.

Among the displays were hurricane-shattered trees atop old columns, terra-cotta figures in the old city jail and a house painted in a camouflage pattern with colors approved by the city for homes in the historic district.

Menotti, who brought the festival to Charleston in 1977, opposed the exhibition, which Redden backed. Menotti, a Pulitzer Prize-winning composer, called the display "silly sophomoric stunts."

He called for Redden to step down and for the chairman and the president of the festival board to resign.

"I wish we didn't have a controversy but, in spite of that, the festival as an artistic event has gone extraordinarily well," Redden said.

The visual arts display continues through early August.

Menotti demanded the resignations during an acrimonious board meeting on May 27. Afterward, there were calls for a cooling-off period.

Former festival chairman Ted Stern and Mayor Joseph P. Riley have been working behind the scenes to mediate the dispute. But when Menotti left town late last week to prepare for his Festival of Two Worlds in Spoleto, Italy, nothing had been resolved.

Riley likened the flap to a dispute within a family. Both he and Stern said the Charleston festival will continue.

This year's festival included a revival of Menotti's opera "Maria Golovin," which is seldom performed in the United States. Critics generally liked the Spoleto production.

The festival also featured the play "The Visit" by Friedrich Durrenmatt and "The Mysteries and What's So Funny," a collaboration between choreographer David Gordon and composer Philip Glass.

Dole wants to repeal 'luxury tax'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole said Sunday he wants to repeal a tax on luxury items he says has had a greater impact on middle-income Americans than expected.

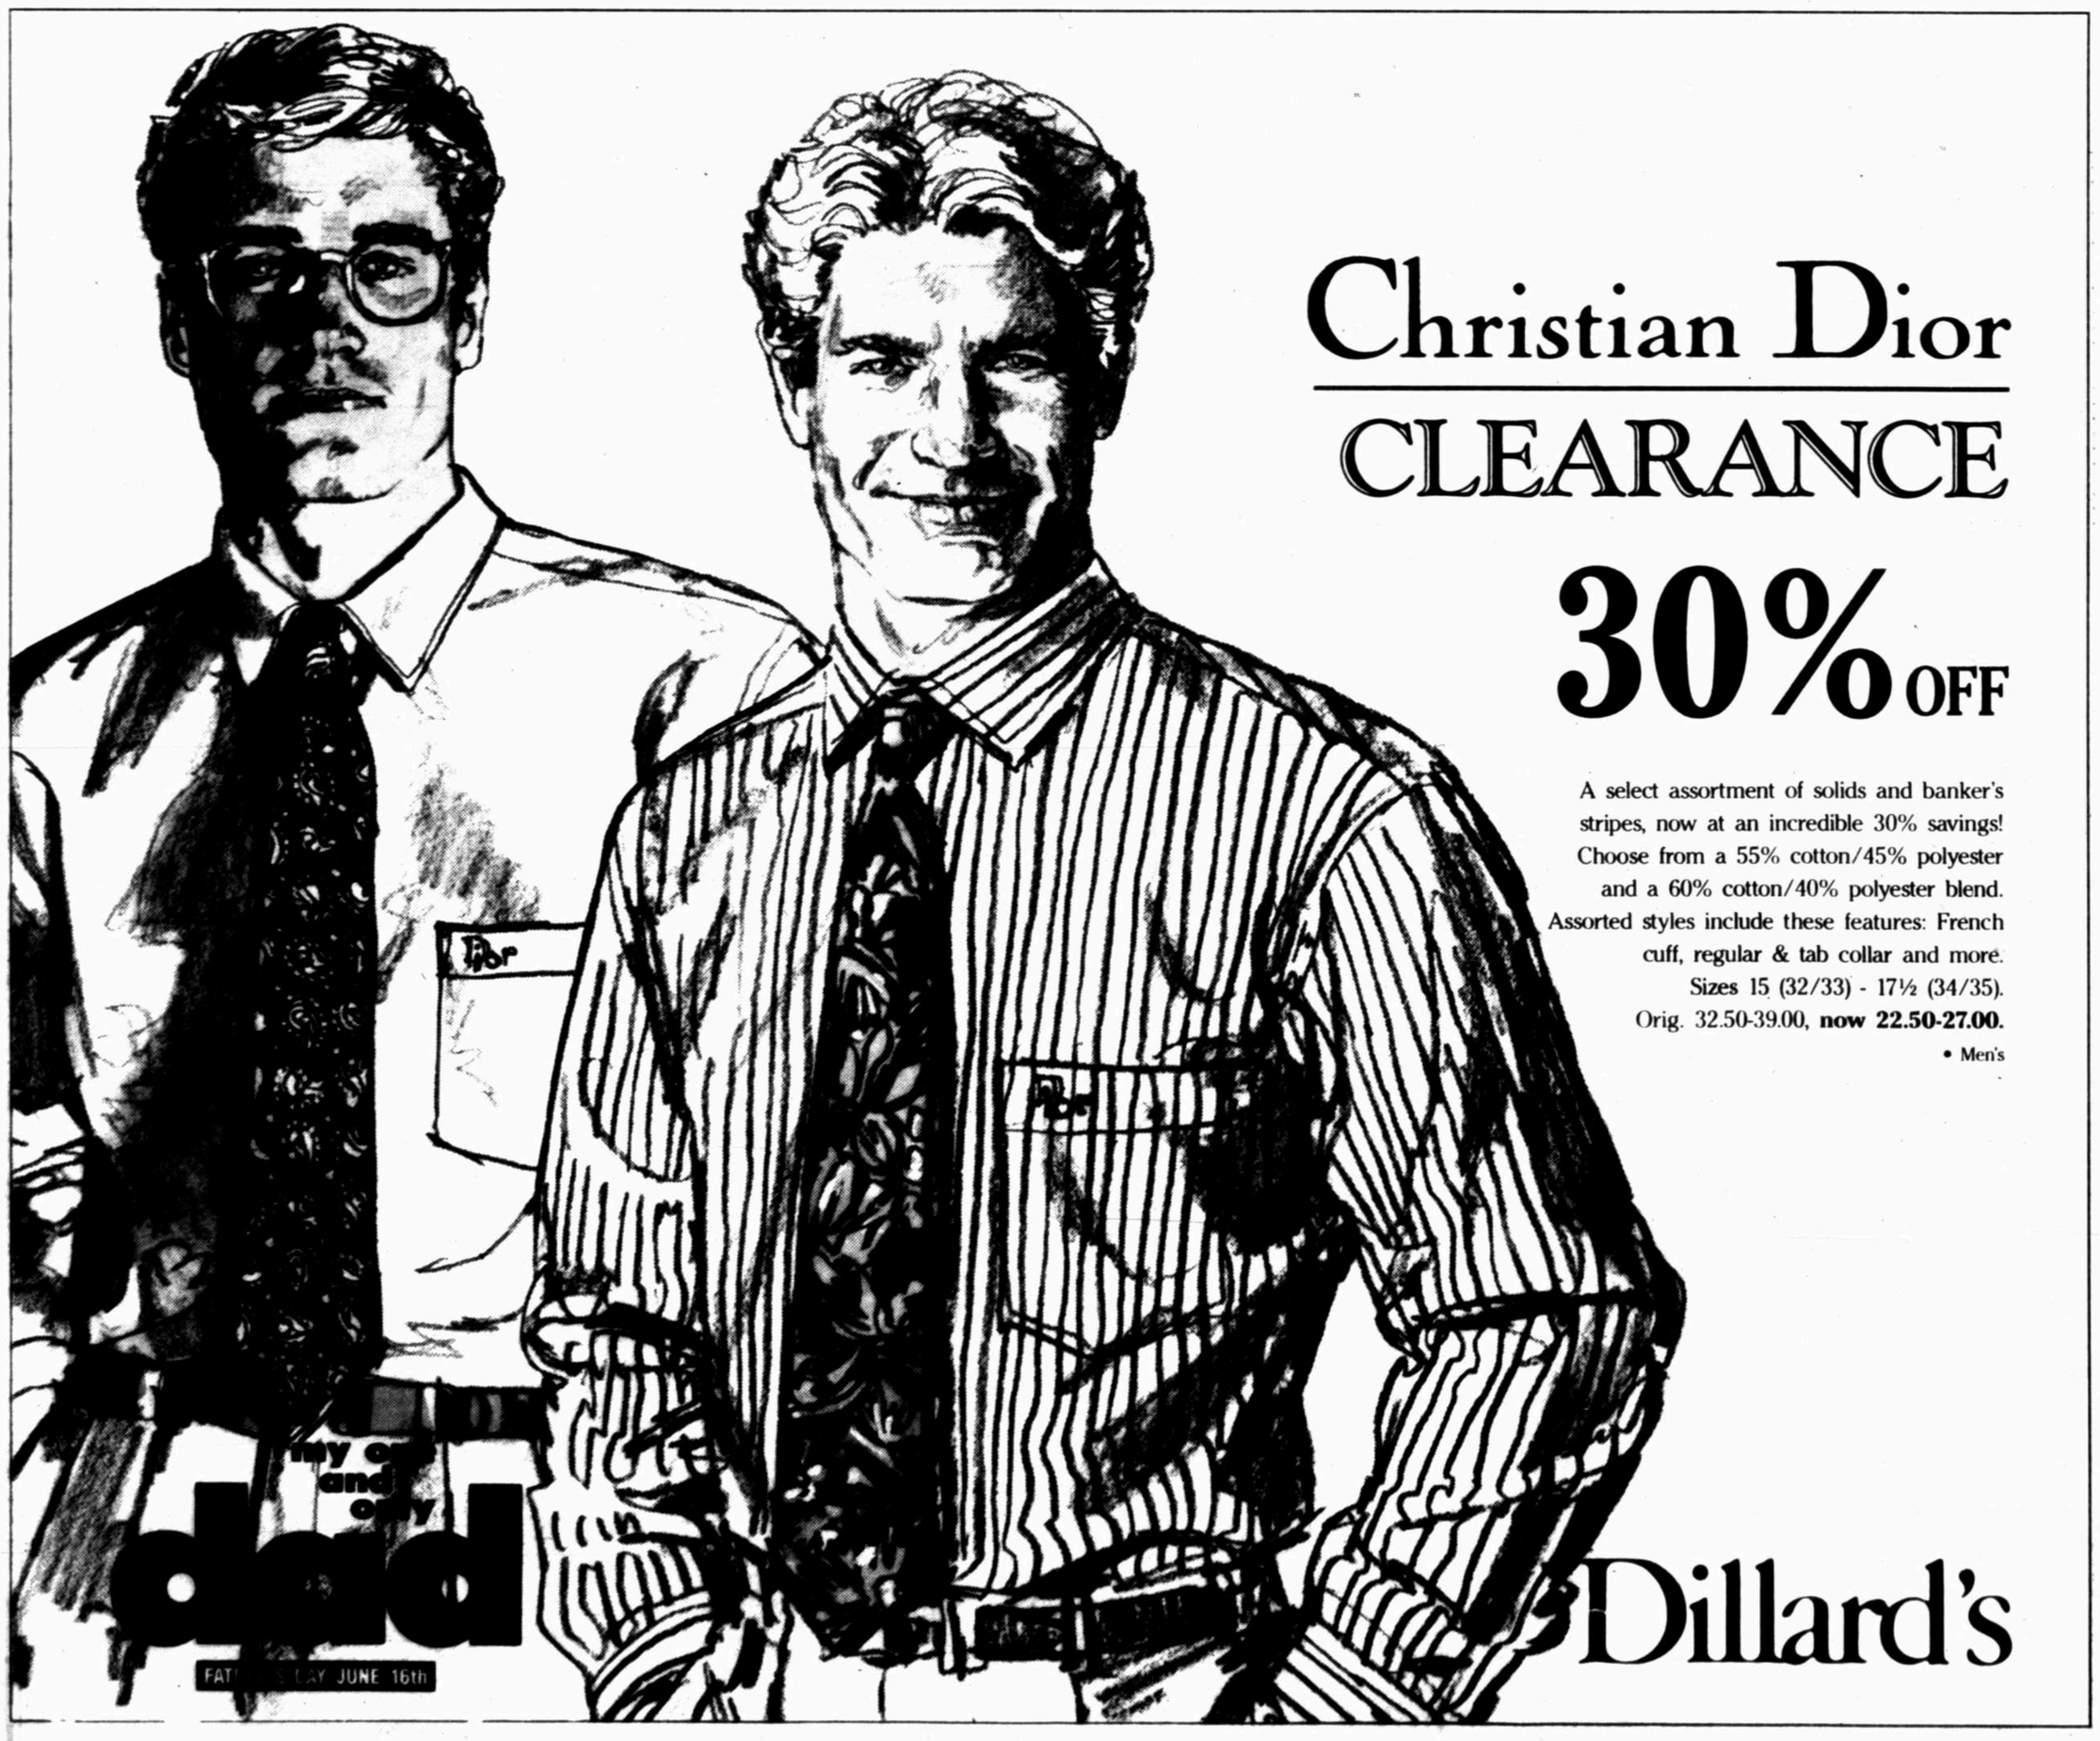

The levy, Dole said on CBS' "Face the Nation," was intended "to soak the rich."

"It turned out the rich happened to be the middle class that the Democrats say they're trying to help," Dole said.

The so-called luxury tax is a 10 percent charge on a portion of the price of such items as high-priced cars, boats, jewelry, furs and private airplanes that was included in last year's budget compromise.

The Kansas Republican, who blamed House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., for insisting the provision be included in the budget legislation, said he would offer a bill this week to repeal the tax.

"The Republican recession, not the tax, is causing people to lose jobs," Gephardt said in a telephone interview.

Ask most any mule man, and he'll tell you there's a bit of a gap between a horse and a mule.

The mule, somewhat of the scholar, ponders most situations and deliberates before settling on almost total commitment, including work. There always seems to be some reservation. Most folks call that stubbornness. Mule people call it smartness — a survival tool.

The horse, faster, prettier, more graceful and more stylish than the mule, is not the consummate thinker and may go for total commitment without thinking through the consequences. The horse, treated fairly, aims to please.

"Horses will give you all they got," says Clayton Moore, an Odessa mule man, until "they ain't got nothing else to give up."

There are stories of horses running until they drop dead.

Mules stop and take respite if the going is too burdensome for this legendary "beast of burden."

While "mules will give you all they are going to give you," Moore notes, "they are not going to give it all to you."

Duplicate bridge players finesse tourney victories

Staff Report

Midland players won three events in the three-day Tall City Sectional duplicate bridge tournament that ended late Sunday in the Ramada Hotel.

A near-record turnout for the annual event saw Flow Curry and Kathy Monroe, both of Midland, win the Unmixed Pairs, which got the tournament under way Friday afternoon.

They amassed 201 points, three more than the second-place finishers, Jerri Williamson and Ginna Potts, also of Midland. In third place were Lena Nichols and Jean Pistole, both of Odessa, who had a 196.

The north-south Flight A winners in the Epson Pairs Friday night were Jimmie Penn of Midland and Billie Mitchell of Ruidoso, N.M., who topped the field with 1,492 points. In second place were Betty and Jerry Crooker of Midland with 1,453 points. An Odessa pair, Stan and Rita Smith, were third with 1,406.

The east-west Epson winners were Bill Dimler and Charlotte Copeland, both of Odessa, with 1,433 points. In second place were Nick Rogers and Jill Bostick, both of Lovington, N.M., with 1,419. Nichols and Sylvia Farris of Abilene took third with 1,401.

Norma Walker and Suzanne Dorris of San Angelo were Flight A champions in the three-flight Stratified Pairs event, winning with a 277.5. Betty Crooker and Charlotte Copeland had 277 for second and Mark Stark of Odessa and Jerry Crooker totaled 261 for third.

The Flight B field was topped by Mary Jane McCord of Lubbock and Clint Roberson of Childress. Their 250 was 13 points ahead of Linda and George Buzzan of Andrews. Nettie Jean McKewen and Joan LaFod of Big Spring were third with 234.5.

The Flight C champions were the Buzzans. In second were Wynelle Noelke of San Angelo and Sandra Miles of El Paso, who scored a 212. In third were Jo Ella Bolt and Joan Burch of Junction, with 204.

The tournament's final event, the two-session Team of Four, was won by a combination of Big Spring and Abilene players. From Abilene were Howard Wilkins, Jim Tucker, Joan Fincher and Yvonne Lee. From Big Spring were Sandra Rhodes and Joan Daniel.

Taking second in the team event were Betty and Jerry Crooker, Bill Dimler and Charlotte Copeland.

Team consolation champions were Jane and Bob Myers, Dixie Gifford and Mary Hammond, all of Midland.

MULE: Good one is hard to find, rider says

play-days in which mule handlers test their mules' skills and willingness to play games in the arena.

That game-playing happened recently just east of Midland.

Mules from Lubbock to Abilene were trucked in for go-rounds of steer roping, saddling up, racing in bloomers, barrel racing, obstacle-course riding and the likes in the Midland County Mule Day.

It was an opportunity for the mule to grandstand.

The mule looks and acts like what it is: a hybrid. It's a cross between a jackass and a mare. The reverse, the cross between a stallion and a jenny, is a hinny.

It's hard to tell the difference between the mule and hinny, says Moore. The hinny, also called the hinny mule, is "either real good, or it's not any good at all. They usually don't work out. The stamina is not there. They're more stubborn, I guess."

The mule has the prideful long ears, short mane, small hooves, tufty tail and bray of its father, the jackass. And from the mare, its mother, the mule gets its muscling and stylish body.

"A good mule is harder to find than a good horse," says Moore, who simply reasons that "there are a lot more horses than there are mules.

'I had one jump off a mountain one time. I was between his front legs and back legs, and he was kicking the fire out of me. I rolled down that mountain underneath that mule's belly. But that mule never lost its footing, never fell.'

— Clayton Moore, Odessa mule man

"We had some mules that were pretty rank," Moore says. "And we just thought that mules were thataway until we started looking around and found a good mule."

But even good mules pull antics.

"I had one jump off a mountain one time," says Moore, who happened to be riding the mule on an elk-hunting trip in Colorado when the mule was "buggered."

The old 1,000-pound sorrel mule "went off of that mountain a'bucking. I was between his front legs and back legs, and he was kicking the fire out of me. I rolled down that mountain underneath that mule's belly. But that mule never lost its footing, never fell."

Just as it is with horses, there are "good mules and bad mules."

A horse will ford a stream just about where the rider commands.

No so for the mule.

"He'll cross the creek," Moore says. "It's not that he'll refuse to cross it. He just wants to pick his place."

And while a horse may appear to be a quicker learner than a mule, the "mule doesn't lose it like a horse does."

Like mules, mountain horses "pace themselves," Moore says. "They know the mountains. They get around in them fine."

But a "flatland horse," such as one on the West Texas plains, "just don't do as well as a flatland mule," Moore says.

Draft mules, which were the farm tractors of earlier times in America, are still widely used as as work animals in much of the world.

And the mule doesn't quite command the adoration and praises of, for example, a good race horse, a Tennessee walking horse, or a good cutting, reigning, or roping horse.

Other than your high-powered prima donnas in the racing and breeding circles, a top horse might bring up to $50,000, says Moore.

A top-notch performing mule, however, might bring only $3,000 to $5,000.

"It ain't nothing (to hear about high-dollar horse)," he says.

Marty Golden, a Midland mule man who hunts elk with Moore and takes his mules to play-days, says that many people "always want" to see mules, but "not everybody wants to own one."

As a rule, the horse "will give a rider 100 percent of its trust," says Golden, while a mule "will give a rider just as much trust as the rider deserves. That's a fact."

Golden fancies the attention-getting ability of the hybrid.

"You pull up to a restaurant or something with your mules," says Golden. "And there can be a $10,000 race horse in a trailer right there.

"And you can pull up there with your $200 mule, and everybody will come out of the restaurant to look at that $200 mule and won't even look at that horse. You got that big, fancy race horse, and everybody comes out and see that old raggedy mule."

Must make a mule man feel proud.

Robberies

By Staff Reports

Two Front Street residents were robbed early Sunday morning in separate incidents, police reported.

A 27-year-old man sustained an injured wrist when he was robbed of some change at the Sun Valley Motel, 1925 E. Front St., about 2:45 a.m.

According to police reports, Ron Andrew Ritchey answered a knock at his door by a man who asked to use the telephone. The man forced his way inside and a fight broke out before the assailant fled with a small amount of money.

The suspect was described as a male, approximately 25 years old, 5 feet 9 inches tall, weighing about 160 pounds.

In a second incident, a 60-year-old man was robbed of about $60 at his 2201 E. Front St. home about 4:45 a.m.

Reports stated that Pete Gutierez responded to a knock at the door but didn't find anyone outside. Gutierez then went out to get his newpaper. When he re-entered his home, he was confronted by a man armed with a knife. The man robbed him of the cash and fled.

The robber in this incident was described as a male about 6 feet tall.

Arrests

Two members of a Dallas gang were arrested — one on a murder warrant — at a northwest apartment complex early Saturday morning, Midland County Sheriff's officials said.

Keith Darnell Lucas, 18, a member of the Rolling 30's Crypt gang, remained in jail Sunday night in lieu of a $25,000 bond set by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

Lucas was picked up about 12:20 a.m. at the Lakeside Park Apartments, 2438 Whitmire Blvd., on a Dallas County warrant for murder and possession of cocaine after deputies received information about his whereabouts. Sheriff's reports listed a Dallas address for Lucas as well as a local address of Lakeside Park Apartments No. 2C.

Roy James McCoy, 19, of 1214 E. Cowden Ave., was also arrested at the scene for possession of cocaine. Sheriff's reports said he was a member of the Rolling 30's Crypts as well. McCoy was free Sunday after posting a $15,000 bond set by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

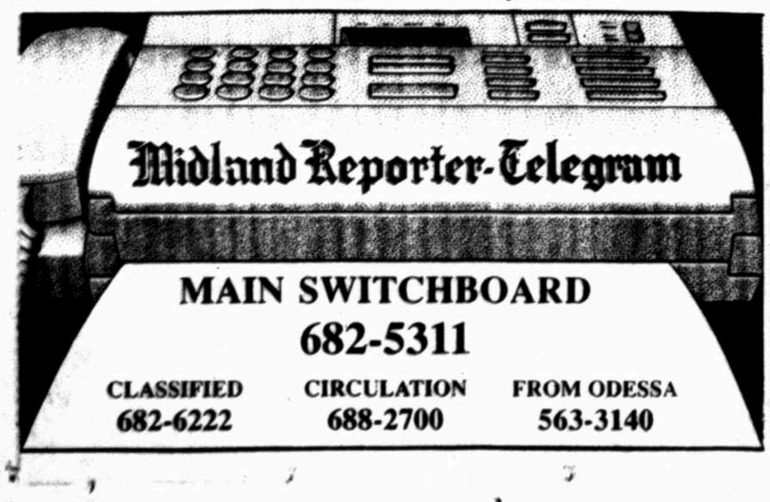

About $300 worth of cocaine was recovered during the arrests, officials said.

Robbery

A convenience store was robbed of an undetermined amount of cash, two cases of beer and 12 cartons of cigarettes about 5:30 a.m. Sunday, police said.

According to police reports, a man armed with a knife forced a clerk at the 7-Eleven store at 5408 Thomason Drive, to fill a sack with cigarettes and cash. The robber, who fled with the sack and beer, was picked up by several people in a white four-door car.

The man was described as about 18 to 20 years old.

■ State agency tells residents to boil water

RED OAK, Texas — Residents who use city water were told by state health officials to boil their drinking water because of bacterial contamination.

The state Department of Health notified city officials May 30 that routine tests revealed the presence of the bacteria fecal coliform, that posed an "acute risk to human health."

The health department is investigating the possibility that the large number of septic tanks in the rural town just south of Dallas may have contaminated the water supply.

Communication problems between the city and state agency caused a week's delay in notifying residents, said Mayor Debbie Griswold.

Warnings were mailed Thursday to the 786 of the city's approximately 3,150 residents who use city water, Ms. Griswold said.

The contaminated water can cause a dysentery-like illness. The water supply is being treated with additional chlorine to kill the bacteria.

The results of tests to determine whether the city's water supply has returned to normal will not be available until Tuesday, Ms. Griswold said.

■ Tests lead to charges in 10-year-old murder

HOUSTON — Genetic tests have linked an auto mechanic to the rape and murder of a 72-year-old woman who was attacked more than 10 years ago at her shoe store.

Sophisticated DNA tests that were in use at the time of the slaying linked Jesus Aleman Flores, 31, to the April 1981 stabbing death of Donna Mae Inlow, authorities said.

Flores was indicted last week by a Brown County grand jury in the death. He is being held in the Brown County jail in lieu of $250,000 bond, officials said.

Authorities say Flores, who has been a suspect throughout their investigation, was arrested after a second round of tests by a San Antonio medical examiner.

Ms. Inlow was attacked at her shoe store in Brownwood on April 27, 1981. Flores, then 20, worked across an alley at a tire store, officials said.

Police found few clues, but Flores was a suspect from the beginning, Brown County Sheriff Bill Donahoo said. A 1985 attempt to match his blood with that found at the murder scene proved inconclusive.

Self-proclaimed serial killers Henry Lee Lucas and Ottis Toole in 1983 provided information about the murder, but District Attorney Fred Franklin doubted their stories and they never were charged.

■ Air Force officials investigate jet crash

LEAGUE CITY, Texas — U.S. Air Force investigators on Sunday continued to investigate what made a pilot eject from a crippled F-16B jet fighter minutes before it crashed into a field south of Ellington Field.

Texas Air National Guard Capt. Kenneth J. Gurry of Clear Lake was en route to Ellington with another jet from Holloman Air Force Base in New Mexico, on a cross-country navigation training mission.

Officials believe the jet's single engine failed, prompting Gurry to eject from the plane. But investigators did not know why the engine had failed.

The jet crashed 10 miles south of its designated strip at 1:20 p.m. Saturday, landing in a League City field near Farm to Market Road 517.

Gurry was rescued by a Coast Guard helicopter and treated and released from a local hospital.

■ Activist group seeks sponsorship changes

HOUSTON — The founder of a national anti-smoking group will ask the Houston City Council to banish events sponsored by tobacco companies from city property.

Dr. Alan Blum of Houston, who heads the group Doctors Ought to Care, wants the weeklong Benson & Hedges Blues Festival to be the final tobacco-sponsored event held at a taxpayer-supported city facility.

Part of the festival, which began Sunday, is taking place at the Summit, a city-owned arena.

"We're asking the mayor and the (Harris County) judge and civic leaders to be consistent in their crackdown on drugs," Blum said Saturday. "What the city can do is not endorse these kinds of events."

Blum said DOC, which opposes cigarette and alcohol advertising, planned to videotape the blues festival to "make the connection between cigarette promotions under the guise of entertainment and sporting events, and the high cost of health care all the taxpayers are forced to pay."

Massive Bass project attracts notice

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Billionaire Ed Bass is trying to bring back life to downtown Fort Worth with a $30 million residential and commercial complex called Sundance West. The project, five years in the making, is scheduled to open its first phase this fall.

Bass, the second oldest of the four billionaire Bass brothers, is attracting national notice with the project.

"Bass is apparently attempting to re-create the city — or save it," said Melvin Levin, a professor at the University of Maryland's Urban Design Institute.

Sundance West will be a massive urban hive: 12 stories sloping down to six on its eastern side with underground parking, nearly a dozen theaters, several restaurants, a convenience grocery, deli, boutiques and shops on a block shared with the Caravan of Dreams nightclub.

'Bass is apparently attempting to re-create (Fort Worth) — or save it.'

— Melvin Levin, University of Maryland Urban Design Institute professor

Experts debate how much influence the project may have on the course of Fort Worth's development. But what's certain is that it will enhance the Basses' other downtown properties.

Sundance is scheduled to open its 11-screen theater and assorted stores and dining establishments this fall.

By this time next year, the first tenants of Sundance West are expected to move into the 59 apartments and penthouses above the theater and shops in a dark-brick, limestone-trimmed building designed to capture Fort Worth's early 1900s style.

Two ornate buildings will be converted into 70 loft apartments renting for $390 to $800 a month, and a condominium tower is proposed that would support up to 23 stores. Work hasn't begun on either, but there is a waiting list for the lofts.

A curious combination of recession economics and Fort Worth's large stock of languishing commercial buildings might actually give the city an edge on a national trend of moving people in where urban businesses have moved out, experts and city planners said.

Bass's staff visited many stately apartment buildings from New York to Chicago and Atlanta in developing Sundance's concept, but Bass said the project is unique.

"The Sundance West project was not modeled out of anything else," he told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Bass tapped his longtime friend and associate, David Schwarz of David M. Schwarz Architectural Services.

"The Bass family has been quite responsible to keep to the spirit of Fort Worth," Schwarz said. "Fort Worth originally had a residential downtown. What we're trying to do is give back some of the urbanity they had before the 1960s."

Bass said he thinks the time and place are ripe for spinoff residences, businesses and nightspots that together will make downtown Cowtown a happening place.

Presidential property gets, loses tax break

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County appraisers rescinded a tax break on a plot of land owned by President Bush after the reduction was questioned by a newspaper.

Records show the president saved at least $500 in property taxes on the west Houston residential lot in 1990. While the value of Bush's property dropped more than 30 percent, the valuation of nearby lots increased by up to 82 percent.

The lot's taxable value dropped from $80,900 in 1989 to $54,600 in 1990.

The Harris County Appraisal District reduced the assessed value on Bush's lot because it was deemed too narrow to hold a normally sized house, said chief appraiser Jim Robinson.

District personnel felt an "unbuildable" strip of land should have a lower value than lots in the same area that are large enough to hold houses, Robinson told The Houston Post in a copyright story published Sunday.

The size of the West Oaks subdivision lot — a strip 33 feet wide and 160 feet long — was noticed in 1990 during a countywide mapping project, Robinson said.

"They just determined that, at that size, you can't build anything on it," he said.

Robinson said no one from the White House contacted the assessors about the property valuation.

A spokeswoman in the White House press office said the employee who handles taxes on the president's lot does not know the reason its value was reduced. The employee did not seek the reduction, the spokeswoman said.

Robinson later acknowledged the reduction was a mistake after seeing an agreement that does, in fact, allow the president to construct a house on his lot.

The deed to Bush's lot contains an agreement between Bush, his wife, Barbara, and the couple who sold the lot to them, John and Barbara Fitch. The Fitches own a larger lot next to Bush's property.

Former hospital employee says he's scapegoat for 1983 radiation disaster

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — A former hospital employee is tired of being blamed for the worst nuclear accident in North America.

Vicente Sotelo was arrested in November on a charge of stealing a radioactive cylinder that wound up in a junkyard.

"I'm a scapegoat for the whole thing," said Sotelo, who remains behind bars in Ciudad Juarez without having been tried or sentenced. "I was just in the wrong place at the wrong time," he told The Houston Chronicle in Sunday's editions.

Sotelo, 37, claims he was told by hospital officials in Ciudad Juarez in early December 1983 to clear out a section of a warehouse and sell all the materials as junk.

Hospital officials claimed Sotelo stole an 11-pound cylinder, which was part of a cancer-treatment device.

Sotelo said he learned several months after selling the cylinder and other scrap for $20 that the cylinder held 6,000 highly radioactive cobalt-60 pellets.

The pellets, which looked like silver BBs, were quickly strewn over the junkyard and transported to two Mexican steel mills — one in Juarez and another in Chihuahua.

The cylinder's sale led to the worst nuclear accident in North America as 4,200 tons of radioactive rods and table parts had to be tracked down and confiscated throughout the United States.

At least 200 people received gamma radiation 100 times more intense than the release at Pennsylvania's Three Mile Island only a few years before.

Last week, one of the Mexican junkyard workers, wracked with melanoma, died. Sotelo believes he will soon be charged with murder in connection with the death.

Workers strike to improve conditions

By Suzanne Gamboa

EL PASO (AP) — Fans whir nonstop in the windows of a dilapidated downtown El Paso garment factory while a handful of hunger strikers plead for help in letters to politicians.

The fans barely cool the second-floor room, but the six strikers say it's cooler there than in the "sweatshops" where they've labored for hours at minimum wage.

One woman is on her second hunger strike in a year.

"La hambre me tumba y el orgullo me levanta," said Cecilia Perez, 60, who went without food for 23 days before ending her hunger strike Wednesday on a doctor's orders.

The Spanish proverb, "Hunger fells me and pride lifts me," became the unofficial slogan of the strikers who are supported by about 120 picketers.

It was June 27, 1990, when members of La Mujer Obrera, who had held quiet protests for two months took drastic action and chained themselves to sewing machines. They remained there for hours until police removed them, using bolt cutters to break the chains. They followed with more protests, a hunger strike and marches on government offices.

The women who had chained themselves to the machines were jailed on criminal trespass charges. Three of the six refused to pay bond and remained jailed for two days. The charges were eventually dismissed when the factory operator dropped his complaint. But the workers were left wondering why justice had been so speedy against them but not for them.

And a year later, the unpaid wages and improved working conditions they've sought remain elusive.

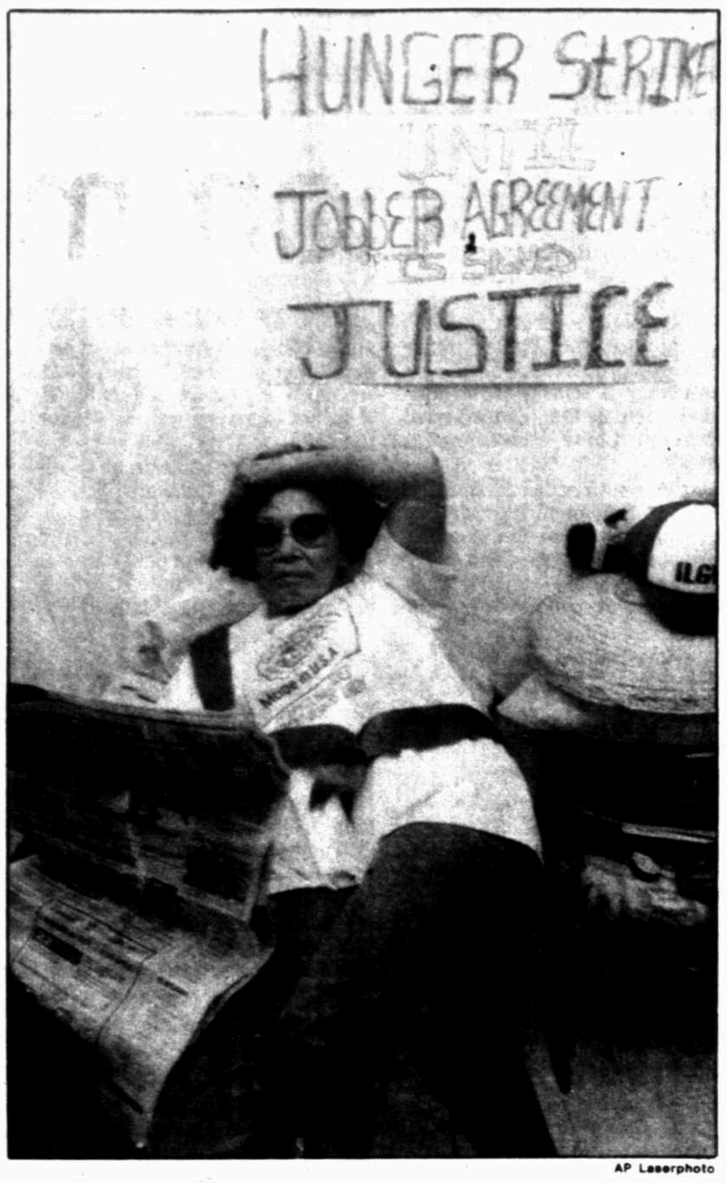

"I thought things were going to change because of all the promises that were made," Ms. Perez, who also participated in last year's eight-day hunger strike, said in Spanish. "But they were just promises. It was pure propaganda. We don't want promises we want action."

Their tactics have yielded some small successes.

"We've eliminated the invisibility of the exploitation of women, that was the biggest thing," said Carmen Dominguez, La Mujer Obrera's new director. Workers who were without hope, now believe they have rights and the power to change their lives, she said.

Although members of the industry have accused the garment workers of hurting business by bringing negative national publicity to El Paso, the workers have also tried to urge political leaders to promote the industry.

In letters to President Bush, U.S. senators, state lawmakers and area politicians, the hunger strikers are explaining their plight and asking for economic help for the industry.

Cecilia Perez, 60, went without food for 23 days in a hunger strike by El Paso garment workers. For nearly a year the garment workers have held various protests to change conditions for workers in garment factories and to collect unpaid wages. Despite some small successes, the workers now are trying to force Andre Diaz, manager of DCB Apparel Group Inc., into signing a union contract.

They have found allies in the Legislature, which approved a bill that would make failing to pay employees a third-degree felony. The bill is awaiting the governor's signature. And workers say many apparel contractors now are paying workers on time.

But the thousands of dollars in unpaid wages that sparked their protests in the beginning are still owed and workers have no job security, insurance and still work for minimum wage.

The garment workers have now shifted their protests. In the past, they battled the subcontractors who often said that industry slumps made it difficult to pay workers.

But workers last month began targeting Andre Diaz, a man they call the "King of the Sweatshops." Diaz, chairman and manager of DCB Apparel Group Inc. produces garments under his own labels "Maximum Energy and "Total Energy." Often those garments are sewn by subcontractors Carlos Payan, operator of Sonia's, and Hector Romero, operator of H&R.

A business consultant hired by La Mujer Obrera analyzed contracts between Diaz and Payan and said at the prices Diaz was paying Payan for each garment, Payan was operating at a loss.

"Even if he started at zero today ... I think given the contracts he got, he could never make enough to cover his costs," said Milton Duran, project director for NEDA Business Consultants.

Diaz said that he was always willing to increase the contract prices if Payan did not think it was enough. But Duran said that argument is flawed.

"That assumes we have informed buyers and informed sellers and we don't have a totally informed buyer (Payan), so it comes to a situation where we feel Diaz took advantage of Carlos," Duran said.

Research by La Mujer Obrera, Spanish for The Woman Worker, found more than half of El Paso's garment workforce, estimated at 15,000, work for subcontractors such as Payan and are part of a six-level system.

"Each of the levels usually gets a percentage of the price of the garment. Thus everyone's level of profit is based on the contractor and subcontractor's abilities to reduce his costs," the study said.

At Sonia's, the costs were reduced by not providing hot water, needle guards and goggles. In an interview with KDBC-TV in El Paso, Payan said he didn't provide hot water or the safety items because the workers wouldn't use them if he did.

"The same kind of thing goes on in San Francisco with Asian garment workers, immigrants in New York City, anywhere there is a garment industry," said Cecilia Rodriguez, former La Mujer Obrera director and now executive of the Funding Exchange, a New York fund-raising group. "The subcontracting system is a way they use to avoid responsibility for bad working conditions."

But Diaz insists Sonia's is a separate company and he is not responsible for assuring Payan pays his employees and provides safe working conditions.

"I'm clear. I'm sleeping at night. My conscience is very clean," Diaz said.

Despite the picketing against him, Diaz said he is willing to negotiate with the workers, but not until they separate themselves from the ILGWU. The union has filed a petition to hold an election on whether DCB employees want to unionize.

"They want to force me to be union or they promise to put me out of business," Diaz said.

Ms. Rodriguez said the women she represents have given up relying on government agencies to help them and believe a union is the only guarantee of better working conditions.

"I worked 32 years in El Paso, 29 in the garment industry," Julieta Ontiveros, 52, who keeps watch over the hunger strikers, said in Spanish. "I don't own a home, I don't have a car. I don't have anything more than a life of working in garment factories. Enough. Enough. It's all we can tolerate."

July's solar eclipse will be the longest for next 140 years

By Susan Fahlgren

HOUSTON (AP) — Astronomers at the Johnson Space Center say a total solar eclipse next month stretching 6,000 miles long and 160 miles wide likely will be most widely viewed solar event in history.

The July 11 total eclipse will be the longest for the next 140 years and stretch from Hawaii across the Pacific Ocean to Baja California and across Mexico and Central America to Brazil.

"Originally, we thought it would be the longest eclipse of the century. But it's much more significant than that," said Paul Maley of the Johnson Space Center Astronomical Society in Houston.

"It will be visible for about three hours, in various stages, along that stretch that runs primarily through Mexico."

An estimated 40 million people are expected to witness the moon pass in front of the sun at midday, casting the area in total darkness. Millions more, like those in Texas and southern California, will be able to see a partial eclipse.

The last total eclipse that passed through Texas was in 1900 and the next won't be until 2024, but it won't be as long as this.

The last partial eclipse in Texas occurred in May 1984, an annular eclipse caused by the moon passing before the sun, leaving only a circle of sunlight visible around the moon.

The last total eclipse visible in Canada and Northwestern United States was in February 1979, while on the East Coast and in Mexico was in March 1970, Maley said.

"This will be really exciting because literally thousands of people will be traveling into Mexico to see this eclipse," Maley said. "More people will be seeing this than any other eclipse in history."

For Texans, Brownsville probably will offer the best view with 78 percent of the sun eclipsed. In Corpus Christi, 70 percent of the sun will be hidden at the height of the eclipse.

In El Paso, about 69 percent of the sun will be eclipsed, with San Antonio at 62 percent, Houston 60 percent and Dallas 51 percent.

West Texan fashions custom-fit horsehoes

BIG SPRING (AP) — Kenny Gillespie practices an art you don't see much anymore.

It's actually not art — it's work.

A welder by trade, the Knott resident doubles as a farrier who makes horseshoes.

"There are a lot of horseshoers, but not many make their own," Gillespie explained as he fashioned a shoe for a customer's horse in the Howard County Fairgrounds barns in Big Spring.

"The young kids (at the fair) are fascinated by the hot steel coming out of the fire," he said. "And it's pretty nostalgic for the older people who have been around it."

Time constraints and financial considerations are just two of the reasons Gillespie says people opt for keg, or ready-made, horseshoes.

"I can do a horse in two hours if I don't stop and talk too much," he said, explaining that it takes about half the time to shoe a horse with keg shoes.

"Too, it costs a little more to do it this way. It costs about $50 per horse to make the shoes, while you can use keg shoes and spend about $35," he added.

Gillespie likened his product to a pair of custom-made boots. "They fit better, they last longer. It's a custom fit," he said.

Gillespie said a slowdown in the welding business sent him into the custom horseshoeing business.

"This is just part time for us," he said. "But we probably shoe as much as we weld."

As Gillespie talked about his trade, he moved back and forth, placing the shoe in a butane-fired oven first. Once the steel turned red, then white-hot, he removed it with tongs, and placed it atop an anvil.

There he pounded the shoe into shape and punched the nail holes.

Stopping to wipe the sweat from his brow, he took the still-cooling steel to a mare standing nearby. He lifted the mare's right leg between his legs and measured the shoe against the hoof.

"Just a little adjustment here, and I'll be ready to heat it up and put it on," Gillespie said.

Illegal aliens hold on to dreams of America

By David Gonzalez
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Beaten down by a dismal economy, Lucas V. left his construction job, a wife and two children in Mexico and ventured to New York in search of the nest egg that would enable him to open a small business back home.

After two years of laboring on construction sites for $260 a week, he is no closer to his goal than when he first arrived.

"I think I made a mistake coming here," the trim 30-year-old said one recent afternoon on the sidelines of a soccer match in upper Manhattan, one of his few diversions. "What you earn here stays here."

Lucas, who scrapes by without immigration documents or English, is like many in a new wave of Mexican immigrants who have arrived in the New York metropolitan region in recent years.

The exact numbers are uncertain, since many are here illegally, but the Mexican Consulate in New York estimated that since the mid-1980s, the number of Mexicans living in the region has grown from 60,000 to as many as 200,000, with increasing numbers of women and children making the trek north.

While the United States and Mexico discuss the technicalities of a possible free-trade agreement, the stream of new arrivals in New York City shows a human dimension often overlooked in the economic equation.

"When we talk about globalization, we mostly talk about capital, but it's happening at the level of people," said Saskia Sassen, a professor of urban planning at Columbia who has studied the city's burgeoning Mexican community.

In past decades, the city attracted a small group of Mexican professionals, businessmen and artists. But the most recent migration, which gathered steam about five years ago, is bringing many poorer, mostly illegal Mexican immigrants.

Many of them have settled in small pockets in the city's established Hispanic neighborhoods, like East Harlem in Manhattan, the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn and the Tremont section of the Bronx.

Peasant farmers who once picked vegetables in the fields of Mexico now wash and stack produce at greengrocers or peddle flowers from rickety shopping carts at busy intersections.

For others, the journey that began on sun-baked dirt roads in distant corners of Mexico ends with a spray of hot water, washing dishes inside a humid kitchen.

The tales of friends and relatives who return home sporting new suits and lugging boxes and suitcases bulging with the trappings of North American success lure them here.

But many find themselves underpaid by employers, overcharged by landlords and overrun by neighborhood toughs who see them as easy prey, since their fear of deportation often forces them to endure indignities in silence.

It is a cruel test of faith. "They are carriers of the American Dream in a way those who have been here a long time no longer are," said Ms. Sassen. "They really believe it will work out. But for a growing number, it is not working out."

The most recent Mexican immigrants are unlike earlier waves of Dominicans or Colombians who came to the United States with some money and education. They are coming from some of the poorest regions of Mexico — the states of Puebla, Oaxaca, Guerrero and the capital, Mexico City, said Robert Smith, a doctoral candidate in political science at Columbia who is writing his dissertation on the new immigrants.

Traditional destinations in the Southwestern United States had become saturated with new migrants — and also riskier, as immigration authorities cracked down on employers who were hiring illegal immigrants, Smith said. Cities like New York became attractive, he said, because jobs were plentiful and attention from immigration authorities minimal.

"What happened in the mid- and late '80s was the economic need had become so much worse and the demand for cheap labor in New York found this source, so immigration spread quickly," Smith said.

Ms. Sassen said the 1986 federal law imposing penalties on employers who hire undocumented workers also pushed down wages. She said some employers decided that if hiring undocumented workers would put them at risk of fines, they would minimize their losses by hiring the cheapest labor possible.

So the new Mexican immigrants have become the favored source of cheap labor. In some garment factories, workers are getting as little as $2 an hour, while others who make restaurant deliveries work just for tips, Ms. Sassen said.

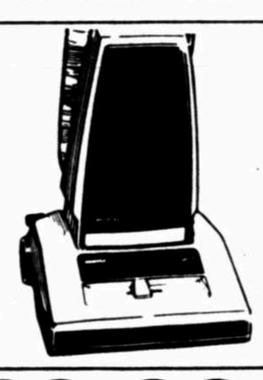

At a park by the Hudson River in upper Manhattan, Alejandro M. weaves through the crowd with an instant camera, ready to shoot portraits against the backdrop of the Palisades for $4. During the week, he pushes a cart loaded down with a block of ice and jangling bottles of fruit flavors, selling snow cones along Broadway.

"It's not dignified work, but it's serious," said Alejandro, who like other illegal immigrants interviewed for this article spoke on condition that his last name not be used.

A's honor Hunter

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Hall of Famer Jim "Catfish" Hunter, the ace of the Oakland Athletics' championship teams of the early 1970s, on Sunday became the first player ever to have his number retired by the A's.

Hunter, 45, was honored with a pre-game ceremony involving several teammates from the A's championship teams from 1972-74. The tribute culminated with the unveiling of a yellow jersey trimmed in green and white with Hunter's number "27" mblazoned on the left-field fence at the Oakland Colisuem.

"It's just a great honor," said Hunter, who was overcome with emotion several times and wiped away tears during his acceptance speech. "Thanks. It was a great pleasure and honor (to play in Oakland."

Hunter came with the A's to Oakland for the 1968 season and stayed until he signed a free-agent contract with the New York Yankees on Dec. 31, 1974. Hunter, the A's career leader with 131 victories, won at least 20 games from 1971-74, and was the 1974 Cy Young Award winner. He was a member of the American League All Star team from 1972-74.

Hunter pitched the A's first game after moving to Oakland, and threw the first perfect game in A's history, beating the Minnesota Twins 4-0 on May 8, 1968.

After receiving a standing ovation from sellout crowd of more than 40,000, Hunter listened to a taped tribute from former teammate Sal Bando, and a testimonial from former A's manager Dick Williams.

Courier delivers at Open

Associated Press

PARIS — In a match that changed course as often as the stormy weather, Jim Courier rallied in the last two sets Sunday to win a French Open slugfest and again deprive boyhood rival Andre Agassi of his first Grand Slam title.

On a day mixing rain, sunshine and strong winds that caused virtual sandstorms on the clay courts, Courier won 3-6, 6-4, 2-6, 6-1, 6-4 in his first Grand Slam final.

The first all-American final at Roland Garros since 1954 ended on an ace by Courier, who flopped backward onto the soft clay in triumph. He ran under the stands to celebrate with coach Jose Higueras and then tossed his white baseball cap to a fan.

"There have been lots of happy moments in my life and there will be lots more, but at the moment this is the happiest," said Courier, who started the year ranked 25th but now will jump to No. 4 — dropping Agassi to fifth. "For me this is extraordinarily special."

The 20-year-old Courier had never

Bulls in command

■ Michael Jordan scores 28 points to help lead Chicago to a 3-1 lead in the NBA Finals.

Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Michael Jordan's bruised big toe is nothing compared to the hurt the Chicago Bulls are putting on the Los Angeles Lakers.

Jordan, playing with a slit cut out of the front of his highly commercialized sneakers, shook off the effects of the injured toe on his right foot by leading the Bulls to a 97-82 victory Sunday night and a 3-1 lead in the NBA Finals.

Jordan led Chicago with 28 points, the 16th consecutive time he's led his team in scoring. He also had 13 assists, his third game in double figures in the Finals.

The Bulls are now one victory away from the first NBA championship in their 25-year history. The Lakers have won 11 titles, five fewer than the Boston Celtics.

Vlade Divac scored 27 points, his career high as a pro, and Magic Johnson had 22 and 11 assists for the Lakers. James Worthy had 12 points, but did not play the final 14 minutes after aggravating the ankle injury that occurred in the Western Conference finals.

The Lakers hit only 29.3 percent of their shots in the middle two quarters as they continued to be frustrated by Chicago's defense, which has allowed more than 100 points only once in 16 playoff games.

Byron Scott, scoreless in Game 3, snapped an 0-for-10 slump and Sam Perkins an 0-for-7 drought early in the second half for the Lakers, but it didn't prevent Chicago from extending an eight-point halftime lead to 64-50 with 7:47 left in the third period.

The margin alternated between 12 and 14 points until Jordan scored the final four of the quarter, giving the Bulls a 74-58 advantage.

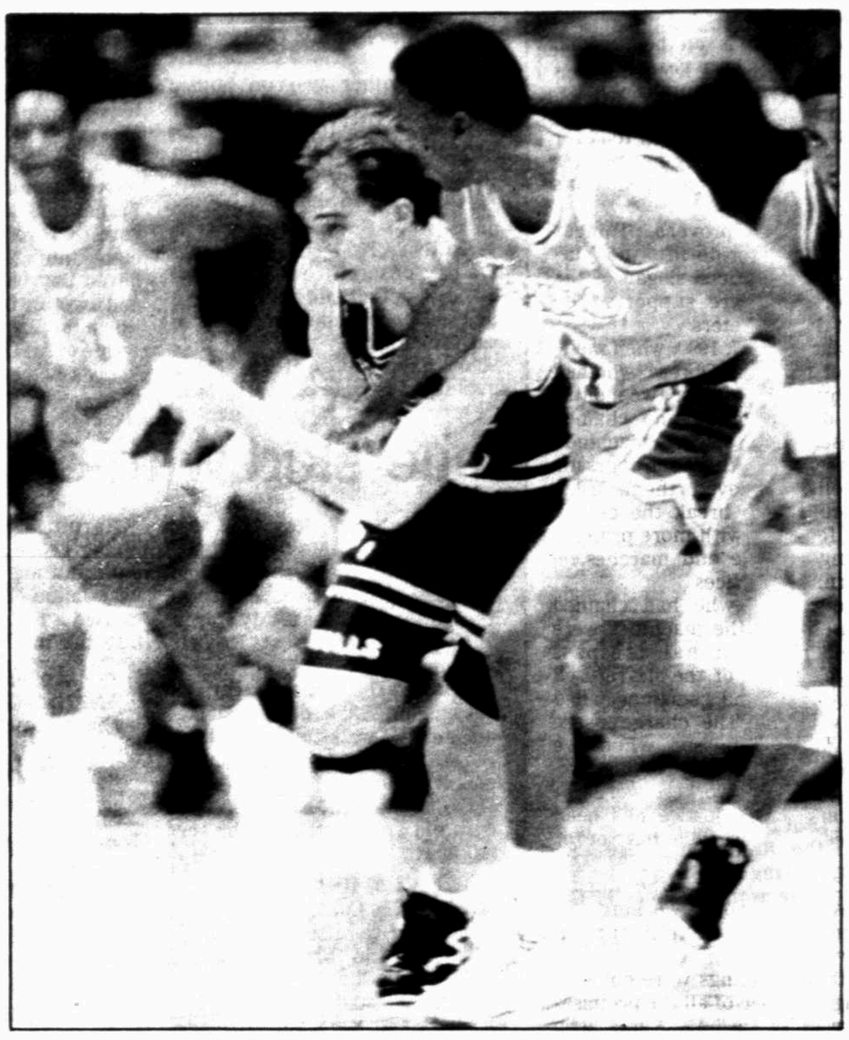

Los Angeles started the fourth quarter with a 7-0 run, with Johnson's three-point play closing the Lakers to 74-65. After baskets by Craig Hodges and Jordan, the Lakers made it 78-71 with six consecutive free throws, but a 10-6 spurt rebuilt the lead to 88-77 with 3:52 remaining, and Los Angeles didn't threaten again.

If Chicago can win its third consecutive game at the Forum on Wednesday, it will match the Detroit Pistons' feat last year of winning the title by capturing three straight on the opponent's home floor.

By winning Wednesday, Chicago also could equal Detroit's 15-2 record in the 1989 playoffs as the best since the post-season format was changed in 1984.

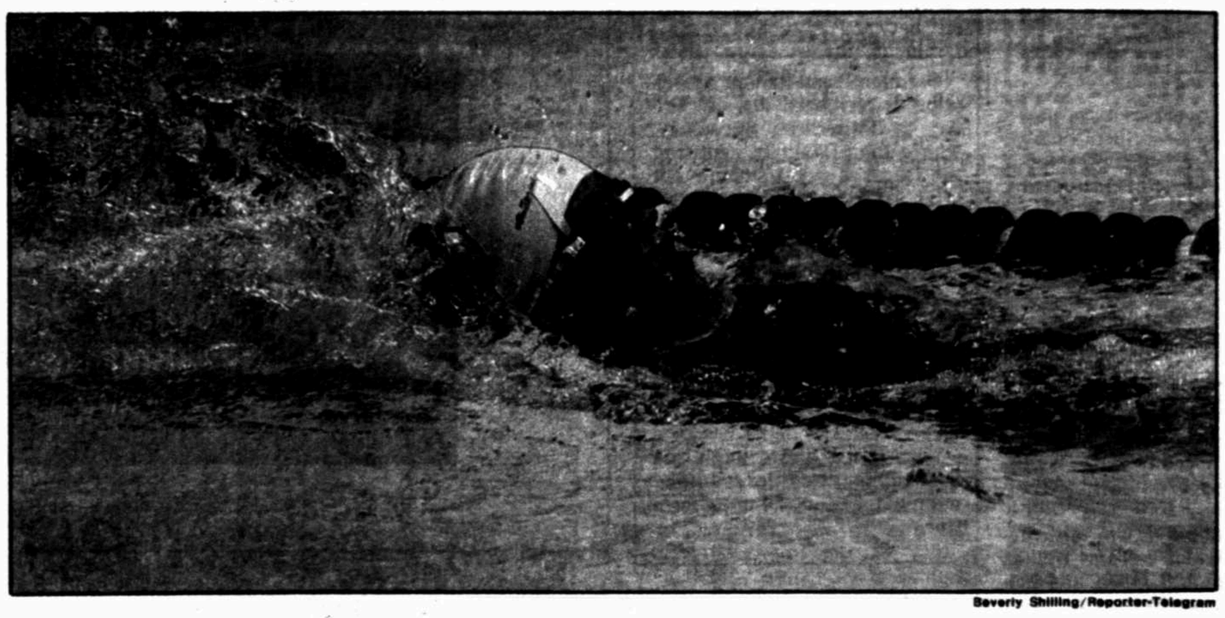

The Lakers went 5-for-6 from the free-throw line, but missed all eight of their field-goal attempts in the first six minutes of the quarter as Chicago turned a one-point deficit into a 39-33 lead.

Jordan showed the only obvious sign of pain in his bruised right toe when he limped after dunking the ball while being fouled by Perkins.

COM seizes Invitational crown

■ City of Midland swimmers score big in winning their Summer Invitational Swim Meet at Doug Russell Pool.

Staff Report

The City of Midland Swim Team survived the pressure applied by the City of Plano Swimmers Sunday and claimed first place at the COM Summer Invitational Swim Meet.

COM collected 2,047.5 points during three days of competition at the Doug Russell Pool to out-distance second-place Plano, which amassed 1,576.5 points.

Lubbock Swim Club was third with 449 points at the event, which was hosted by Texas Commerce Bank.

Much of COM's success stemmed from its girls' squad, which posted 1,150 of the team's total points while seeing three of its members take high-point age-group honors.

Marika Sarge tallied 90 points in reaching high-point in the senior girls division, while Emily Alvarado edged teammate Karen Schmuhl 36-34 in eight-and-under.

And Robin Hill used 89 points in winning the 13-14 division, just 12 points more than COM's Monica Stroman.

COM also had two high-pointers in the boys competition, where Midland garnered a total of 897.5 points.

Howard Flowers topped all swimmers in the 13-14 division with 80.5 points. And Gregg Strauss compiled 45 points to top the 8-and-under boys' division.

Eleven teams from Texas and New Mexico gathered in Midland for the event, with Amarillo Swim Team finishing fourth and Round Rock Aquatics fifth.

Monarchs reign as World Bowl champs

Associated Press

WEMBLEY, England — London won the first title in the World League of American Football, beating Barcelona 21-0 Sunday on two touchdown passes by Stan Gelbaugh and Dan Crossman's three interecptions, one for a touchdown.

By collecting the World Bowl trophy on their home field at Wembley Stadium,, the Monarchs also avenged their only defeat in 11 WLAF games. They took a 21-0 lead at halftime, then stifling a series of second-half threats by Barcelona behind a defense that forced six turnovers.

Gelbaugh, the league's offensive player of the year, threw a 59-yard TD pass to John Horton on the final play of the first quarter. Two minutes and 42 seconds later, Crossman, who was named the game's MVP, picked off a Scott Erney pass in the flat and returned it 20 yards for the second score.

The third TD came with 47 seconds left in the half on a 14 yard TD pass from Gelbaugh to running back John Garrett after a 55-yard drive set up by another Crossman interception.

The 61,108 fans gave the home of English soccer a carnival atmosphere although the crowd fell short of the WLAF's goal — a crowd bigger than the one for the first Super Bowl in 1967. That game, between Green Bay and Kansas City, drew 838 more fans — 61,946.

The game started well for Barcelona when London's Dana Brinson fumbled the opening kickoffs and Joe Henderson recovered for Barcelona at the Dragons' 18.

But Erney hit Gene Taylor just out of the end zone on the first play and then Luis Aguiar, the holder, fumbled the snap on an attempted field goal.

Midland knuckles under, 5-4

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

San Antonio pitcher Dennis Springer left the mound in the seventh inning trailing the Midland Angels 4-3, but by the time he reached the club house his fellow Missions had made him a 5-4 winner at Angels Stadium Sunday night.

It was the second time this week that the knuckleballer had come away with a win against the Angels and three of his four victories this year have come against Midland.

"I'll take two victories in a week anytime," Springer said. "I certainly wasn't as sharp as last Tuesday (an 8-1 Mission victory), but I got a little help. I struggled out there today. I had runners on base in every inning, but I got some support."

The support he needed came in the top of the eighth inning when the Missions scored two runs on back-to-back sacrifice flies by Brian Traxler and Brett Magnusson.

Fili Martinez, making his Texas League debut for the Angels after being called up from Palm Springs where he had a no-hitter last month against Bakersfield, loaded the bases in the eighth with a walk and two singles. Traxler lifted a fly to right to score one run and Magnusson followed with a fly to left off Angel reliever John Pawlowski for a 5-4 lead.

"In a situation like that you just try to hit a ball in the (strike) zone and stay out of the double play," Magnusson said. "It wasn't a great game winning hit, but you'll take the sacrifice to win the game when you've lost three games in a row."

Zak Shinall retired the last six Angels in order to earn his fifth save of the season.

Martinez got off on the wrong foot by giving up a three-run blast to Braulio Castillo in the first inning. However, he followed with six shutout innings before getting into trouble in the eighth.

Meanwhile, the Angels chipped away at the early Mission lead, getting a run in the third on a sacrifice fly by Walt McConnell, a solo homer by Kevin Flora in the fifth and a two-run homer by Mark Howie in the seventh as the Angels climbed on top of the Missions 4-3.

Howie, who has only four homers this year, had two of them in this series. San Antonio and Midland split the series, 3-3. Now the Angels host the West Division leading El Paso Diablos for six games,

Harnisch three-hits New York in Dome

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Pete Harnisch pitched a three-hitter and struck out a career-high 11 as the Houston Astros beat the New York Mets 1-0 Sunday.

NL

Harnisch, who came to Houston from Baltimore in the Glenn Davis trade, tossed his first major league shutout. The only run he needed came on Ken Caminiti's RBI double in the sixth off David Cone (6-4).

Gregg Jefferies singled in the first and Dave Magadan doubled in the fourth and went third on a groundout. They were the only Mets base runners until Cone singled over Caminiti's head to start the sixth.

Dodgers 6 Cubs 3

CHICAGO — Orel Hershiser, taking a huge stride in his comeback, pitched and batted the Los Angeles Dodgers to a victory.

Hershiser (1-1) allowed two runs, six hits, walked one and struck out six in seven innings for his 100th career victory. Jay Howell got the last three outs.

It was Hershiser's first win since April 19, 1990, before he underwent surgery to reconstruct his right shoulder in a revolutionary procedure.

Braves 8, Expos 6

ATLANTA — David Justice hit two two-run homers to help Tom Glavine become the major league's first 10-game winner.

Justice broke a 3-3 tie in the fifth inning with his second two-run shot off Mark Gardner (1-3). Justice's 10th homer of the year came after Tommy Gregg had walked.

Justice's other two-run homer came in the first inning after Gregg, appearing for the first time since going on the disabled list April 28 with a broken left hand, singled with two outs.

Reds 6, Phillies 3

CINCINNATI — Glenn Braggs hit a pair of sacrifice flies to erase a two-run deficit and Barry Larkin homered and singled in a run to lead Cincinnati.

Chris Sabo had an RBI single, a double and a triple off Terry Mulholland (6-5) to help the Reds overcome a 2-0 first-inning deficit. Sabo singled home a run in the first, doubled to set up Braggs' sacrifice fly in the third, and tripled in the fifth and scored on Braggs' other sacrifice fly for a 3-2 lead.

Padres 5, Pirates 3

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Tony Gwynn extended his hitting streak to 15 games with a triple and tie-breaking single and San Diego again got strong starting pitching, this time from Andy Benes.

The streaking Padres have won eight of their last 10 games, including two straight over the Pirates.

Giants 3, Cardinals 2

ST. LOUIS — Kevin Bass' two-run single broke an eighth-inning tie as San Francisco beat St. Louis.

Greg Litton homered for San Francisco and John Burkett (4-3) gave up three hits and one run in eight innings. Jeff Brantley relieved Dave Righetti with one out and two on in the ninth and finished for his fifth save.

One of St. Louis' hits was Gerald Perry's homer in the seventh inning.

OPEN: Gusty winds cause blowing dirt reached the quarterfinals of a Grand Slam tournament before last week, but he was more poised than Agassi after a pair of second-set rain delays. While the Floridian seemed to relax after the breaks, Agassi never was able to regain control of the match.

"I felt like if it hadn't rained, I could have kept my momentum, but who knows how long that would have lasted?" Agassi said.

"The rain delays hurt us a little bit, but that's life. That's the way it goes," added Nick Bollettieri, who coaches Agassi and used to train Courier.

In the fifth set, gusty winds changed the course of many shots and made it difficult for the players to see.

"A lot of dust was flying around in my face," said Agassi, who has lost three Grand Slam finals in the last year. "Today was a question of who was going to adapt to the circumstances better. You can't control the wind, you can't control where the ball bounces."

Courier decided seven years ago to play tennis instead of baseball, but he has a pitcher's mannerisms on the court — tapping the bill of his cap and smoothing the dirt with his foot before serving. He used a baseball analogy to describe the weather.

"It's like facing Phil Niekro out there with his knuckleball," he muttered to himself after losing a point in the third set.

Courier and Agassi, who trained and briefly roomed together at Bollettieri's tennis academy in Florida, have similar styles. They clobber the ball with both forehand and two-handed backhand and try to dictate the game from the baseline.

Though the ninth-seeded Courier tried serve-and-volleying in the opening set, he retreated to the baseline after the rain delays. From there he won a heavyweight battle of groundstrokes.

Courier, who now has won all four of his career finals, pocketed $451,660 dollars — more than he made all of last year.

Rangers continue skid with 6-4 loss

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Rookie Pat Kelly hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning to give the red-hot New York Yankees a 6-4 victory over Texas on Sunday, sending the reeling Rangers to their seventh straight defeat.

AL

The Yankees, meanwhile, swept the three-game series and have won 12 of their last 16 games to get into the American League East race. During the streak, the Yankees have won six times in their final at-bat.

Twins 9, Indians 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Jack Morris gave up two runs and five hits in eight innings as Minnesota defeated Cleveland. It was the Twins' eighth consecutive victory.

Morris (7-5) won his fourth consecutive game, and has pitched into the eighth inning in his last four starts. He improved his lifetime record against the Indians to 28-9, needing ninth-inning relief help from Steve Bedrosian.

White Sox 8, Royals 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jack McDowell retired the first 18 batters and finished with a four-hitter as Chicago beat Kansas City for a three-game sweep at Royals Stadium.

McDowell (7-3), who two-hit Detroit on April 13, had three strikeouts and two walks while pitching the White Sox to their fourth straight victory.

The 6-foot-5 right-hander lost his no-hit bid and shutout in the seventh inning.

A's 8, Red Sox 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Bob Welch pitched a five-hitter and Harold Baines drove in three runs with a double and a homer.

Vance Law had two doubles and two RBIs and Mark McGwire added a solo home run as Oakland won after losing the first two games of the three-game series. The A's scored two runs total in the two losses.

Mariners 6, Brewers 1

SEATTLE — Brian Holman pitched a five-hitter as Seattle beat Milwaukee to complete a three-game sweep.

Harold Reynolds' three-run homer broke a 1-all tie in the seventh and allowed Holman (7-5) to beat Jaime Navarro (5-4). Navarro carried a 1-0 lead and a four-hitter into the inning.

Angels 7, Tigers 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Chuck Finley gave up one run and struck out nine in 6⅔ innings to become the American League's first 10-game winner this season.

Finley (10-2) joined Atlanta's Tom Glavine as the majors' only 10-game winners. He now has 83 strike outs, second in the AL to Roger Clemens' 88.

Finley gave up five hits, including three infield singles.

Jays 3, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Todd Stottlemyre held Baltimore to three hits in seven innings and the two teams split their four-game series.

Stottlemyre (6-2) won for the first time since May 13, ending a streak that included three losses and one no-decision. He struggled, striking out four, walking three and allowing the leadoff batter on base five times in the first six innings.

David wins TCS feature

Staff Report

Permian Basin Racing Association drivers battled it out Friday at Twin-Cities Speedway, where John David Jr. captured the featured street stock event after a fierce three-way battle with Steven "Teddy Bear" Sigler and last year's points champion Curtis Simons.

In pure stocks, top honors were taken by Junior Heidelberg of Stanton.

The mini-stock class was topped by Tom Green, who won both the heat race and the feature event.

Mike Trigg added both the heat and feature titles to his list with victories in the open mini stocks.

Red-hot Andrade wins PGA Buick

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — While golf's great international stars faded and failed in the stretch run Sunday, Billy Andrade siezed command and went on to his second consecutive PGA Tour victory.

"I was just feeding on last week," said Andrade, who scored his career-first triumph in a playoff at the Kemper Open a week ago.

"Just like last week, coming down the stretch, I felt like I was in control," Andrade said after his 2-stroke victory in the Buick Classic.

He established that control with a 1-under 34 over the very difficult back nine at the Westchester Country Club, shot 68 for the day and had a 273 total, 11 under par.

He also had a little help; inadvertent help from Hale Irwin, Seve Ballesteros and Greg Norman.

The 46-year-old Irwin, the defending champion here as well as in next week's U.S. Open, and Ballesteros, the Spanish star who had won three of four starts coming into this event, each led or shared the lead on the back nine.

Norman, attempting a comeback from what he called "a case of burn-out," was within two strokes of the lead with eight holes to go.

Each of those three played the back side 2-over and took themselves out of it.

Irwin's shaky finish left him with his face in his hands after a 2-over effort in the last competitive round before defending his American national championship.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, JUNE 10, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your finances are in the spotlight. A legacy or windfall is featured in late summer. Resist the temptation to spend extravagantly in November. You will enjoy increased power and authority in December. Group social activities could lead to valuable new alliances. Pay more attention to family needs early in the coming year. Events next March and April will test your patience but bring economic boons. A legal matter will be settled in your favor in May 1992.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: lawyer F. Lee Bailey, actress Judy Garland, novelist Saul Bellow, England's Prince Philip.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Expenditures are fine if they are linked to travel and new alliances. Winning a favorable verdict is easier than expected. Discipline yourself to be more tolerant.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Mental endeavors deserve top priority today. Reorganize your household possessions to reduce clutter. Order proves very satisfying. Be careful not to send mixed signals in romance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An ally at a distance plays a positive role in your day. You could find that you have something profitable to share. A newcomer may be the right partner for you. Go slow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Look beneath the surface to discover the facts. Undisclosed information may be the missing ingredient in a large business maneuver. Stick to a healthy diet and get more exercise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Someone may make a surprising proposition. Find the right time to ask important questions. Be certain to make your needs known to people in a position to help you. Repay favors.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although you hate to feel indebted to others, there are times when you must ask for help. Your financial star is on the rise. Make regular savings deposits. Romance is very sweet.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Meetings of the mind and heart are indicated. Be willing to play second fiddle if doing so will help you reach a goal. A deal that started with a handshake ends with a hug!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21): Conflicting values could get in the way of harmony with your mate or partner. Ultimately the two of you will agree on the most important thing. Be more tolerant of loved one's foibles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Special insights stream to you when you relax into a psychic or spiritual consciousness. Finish something that has delayed your work. Your friendship with an older person is rewarding.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are able to contribute something major in your chosen field. A good conversation is semi-mystical. Be patient with a friend who is going through a rough time. Offer sympathy, not advice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Group efforts and business maneuvers are in the spotlight today. Be willing to make some sacrifices to benefit others. Explore new horizons in the arts. Positive thinking helps you score a direct hit.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your powers of persuasion wax and wane. People who are close to you may seem harsh in their judgments. Avoid a tug of war with your loved ones. Patience will pay off.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are good-humored, loyal and full of fun. These Geminis' lighthearted manner can hide their real depth. They have great empathy for other people and will go out of their way to help the unfortunate. Their biggest school or career problem is maintaining their focus. The field of entertainment holds special promise for these outgoing Geminis. They enjoy performing and know exactly how to win over their audience.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q762 ♡J852 ◇J963 ♣6
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What action do you take?
A.—You are sub-minimum for a response, since you can't take distributional points for a singleton in partner's suit. However, you should strive to find a 4-4 fit, so our choice would be to bid one diamond and then pass any non-forcing rebid by partner. This action is not without risk.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K10974 ♡762 ◇A83 ♣62
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—Had you held a singleton somewhere, we would suggest a jump to four spades. With this balanced hand, however, we would bid only two spades. You have a near maximum for a single raise.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡K1052 ◇93 ♣KJ7652
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—You can't pass, but you don't have enough for a two-over-one response—again, do not count distributional points for your singleton spade. All you can do, therefore, is respond one no trump and wait to see what partner does next.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡K1052 ◇93 ♣KJ7652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have no liking for either of partner's suits. Despite the fact that partner rates to be short in your suit, bid three clubs. That shows a weak hand with a long club suit.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡K1052 ◇93 ♣KJ7652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—On this sequence partner promises at least six spades. Since you have no guarantee that your club fit is any better than spades, and since you are one level lower, pass. You have some useful cards for partner.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡K1052 ◇93 ♣KJ7652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—It is difficult to foresee how many tricks your combined holding will take. The one action to rule out is pass—your playing potential is too good. Our choice would be to jump to four hearts, but we won't berate you if you chose the more conservative three hearts.

Kevin Costner would trade mega-stardom for anonymity

NEW YORK — Kevin Costner has gobs of money and heaps of acclaim following the spectacular success of his film "Dances with Wolves." But how does he like being a Big Star?

Costner

"Are you kidding?" Costner replied. "I would trade it all for anonymity again."

The actor said he couldn't think of any benefits to mega-stardom.

"Those things don't help you get up in the morning," Costner said in Sunday's New York Times Magazine. "Fame doesn't help clear your mind. Fame doesn't tell you when you're right or wrong. I can't think of anything good that comes out of it."

Then he added: "Let's modify that. There's not anything that comes out of it that I really need."

Costner said that the success of "Dances with Wolves" "did catch me by surprise, the leap, the kind of quantum leap that occurred with the public. Things have changed, and changed in ways that were difficult to anticipate."

Costner won the best director Oscar for "Dances With Wolves," in which he also starred. The film won seven Academy Awards, including best picture. His latest movie, "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves," released by Warner Bros., is now out.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The Boss has a bride.

Bruce Springsteen married singer Patti Scialfa in a ceremony at their home over the weekend, the rocker's spokeswoman Marilyn Laverty said Sunday. The couple wed with family and friends on hand, Laverty said.

No other details of the wedding were released.

The couple have a son, Evan James, who will be 1 year old on July 25.

Springsteen, 41, was previously married to actress Julianne Phillips. Their divorce was finalized in 1989 after almost four years of marriage.

Scialfa, 37, was a singer in Springsteen's E Street Band.

BOSTON — Singer Bonnie Raitt said she penned three of the songs on her new album the week before last year's Grammy ceremonies.

"This way, I figured if I did win, I would have already proved to myself that I could write something besides 'Nick of Time,' " Raitt said of the album that swept four honors at the Grammys.

Raitt, 41, said she hid out in her northern California home to stockpile songs before winning or losing the awards had a chance to influence her.

"No TV, no radio, nothing," Raitt in Sunday's Boston Globe in a telephone interview Los Angeles. "I took walks and read books when I needed a break, but I took the week as a kind of purification."

"Luck of the Draw," Raitt's follow-up album to "Nick of Time," is scheduled for release in two weeks. The first single, "Something to Talk About," is just out. "Nick of Time" revived Raitt's career in 1989 and went platinum.

FORT WORTH — Judy Nelson, a former companion of tennis star Martina Navratilova, said she tried for months to reach a private settlement before filing a multi-million-dollar lawsuit.

Navratilova

Nelson filed documents in a Fort Worth court last week alleging that Navratilova failed to comply with a "non-marital cohabitation agreement" the two signed in 1986.

"For the past four months I have explored every possible avenue to avoid litigation and the resulting publicity without success," Nelson said Saturday in a statement released by her Fort Worth attorney, Jerry Loftin.

A June 20 hearing was scheduled on Nelson's request that someone be appointed to distribute the pair's assets.

RADNOR, Pa. — Singer Dinah Shore said she had the jitters about seeing former lover Burt Reynolds for the first time in years when she interviewed the actor for a television show.

"We were both nervous wrecks," Shore said. "When I drove up to the studio and noticed the sign in the parking lots with our names on it, it shook me up. I almost drove away."

Shore said in the June 15 issue of TV Guide that she had kept in touch with Reynolds, her lover in the early 1970s, but the two hadn't seen each other for several years.

Ms. Shore said it was producer Fred Tatashore who suggested the reunion for her talk show, "Dinah Shore: A Special Conversation with Burt Reynolds," which airs July 10 on TNN.

"We were not even allowed to see each other before the show, and our first moment together was charged," Ms. Shore said.

Recovery doubts hinder bond market

■ Market is reluctant to put faith in notion that lower inflation comes after recessions have ended.

By Kenneth N. Gilpin
N.Y. Times News Service

At just under 8.50 percent, long-term interest rates are at their highest levels since mid-January. But credit market analysts said that over the next few months conditions in the bond market will probably get worse before they get better.

There are any number of reasons to be pessimistic. Many big investors, convinced the recession will never end, still hold large positions, and sales of vast amounts of new long-term Treasury securities are just weeks away.

In addition, bond traders are not showing much faith in the widespread view that an economic recovery this time will be much less robust than the average 6 percent rate of real growth that has been the average for the first three months following recessions in the post-war period.

And despite ample historical precedent, the market is very reluctant to put much faith in the notion that lower inflation comes after recessions have ended rather than while they are under way.

"I think the bond market is out of touch with reality," said Lyle Gramley, chief economist at the Mortgage Bankers Association. "But it is a very moody, trendy place. And it will take some time, possibly three or four months, before it sees evidence that the recovery is of modest dimensions and that inflation is coming down."

Given the current mood, "I want to play defense in the market," said Paul L. Kasriel, a vice president and money market economist at Northern Trust Co. in Chicago. "But down the road, probably by the end of the year, there is a big rally coming."

Based on recent reports, including the rise in payroll employment in May, after seven months of substantial declines, Gramley, Kasriel and others are fairly certain a recovery many anlaysts thought would not begin until the summer quarter is now under way.

A number of economists remain unconvinced, and say the recession continues. But, they acknowledge, it will take some time for the market to come back around to that view.

"There appeared to be a lift in activity during April and May," said Joseph Carson, chief economist at Chemical Bank. "But it is not unusual to see a brief flurry of activity at certain points of a recession. Every downturn since 1960 has had such periods. I continue to believe that consumer fundamentals do not support a sustained rise in spending, and that is where recoveries start."

There is already some evidence that the recent rise in long-term rates is beginning to hurt the housing sector,

Prices slump

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices finished slightly lower Friday, capping a week that pushed the market down on news that U.S. supplies are rising while demand remains sluggish.

There was no notable pattern to Friday's trading, with the energy futures drifting up and down in light volume at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in July settled at $20.28 per barrel, down 5 cents for the day and 85 cents for the week.

Analysts said oil companies had pushed their refineries into high gear, and supply was apparently outstripping demand, which has been weakened by the recession.

Natural gas prices stayed depressed. Gas for delivery in July settled Friday at $1.283 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 1.4 cents for the day and 5 cents for the week.

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar closed higher Friday after a positive report on job growth increased prospects for firm U.S. interest rates.

Gold prices also rose.

The British pound fell against the dollar, tumbling to $1.6710 in New York from $1.6870 late Thursday.

Other late rates for the dollar in New York, compared with late Thursday's prices, included: 1.7705 German marks, up from 1.7535; 1.5190 Swiss francs, up from 1.5040; 5.9985 French francs, up from 5.9400; 1,312.75 Italian lire, up from 1,299.75; and 1.14775 Canadian dollars, up from 1.14645.

American to mark 10th year in area

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

American Airlines will be celebrating 10 years of service to Midland International Airport Tuesday, and airline officials say the alliance has been mutually beneficial.

William M. Thurmon, general manager of American's Midland office, said, "We have a good relationship with the Permian Basin. We're always involved in some type of benefit in Midland or Odessa. We're very community-minded."

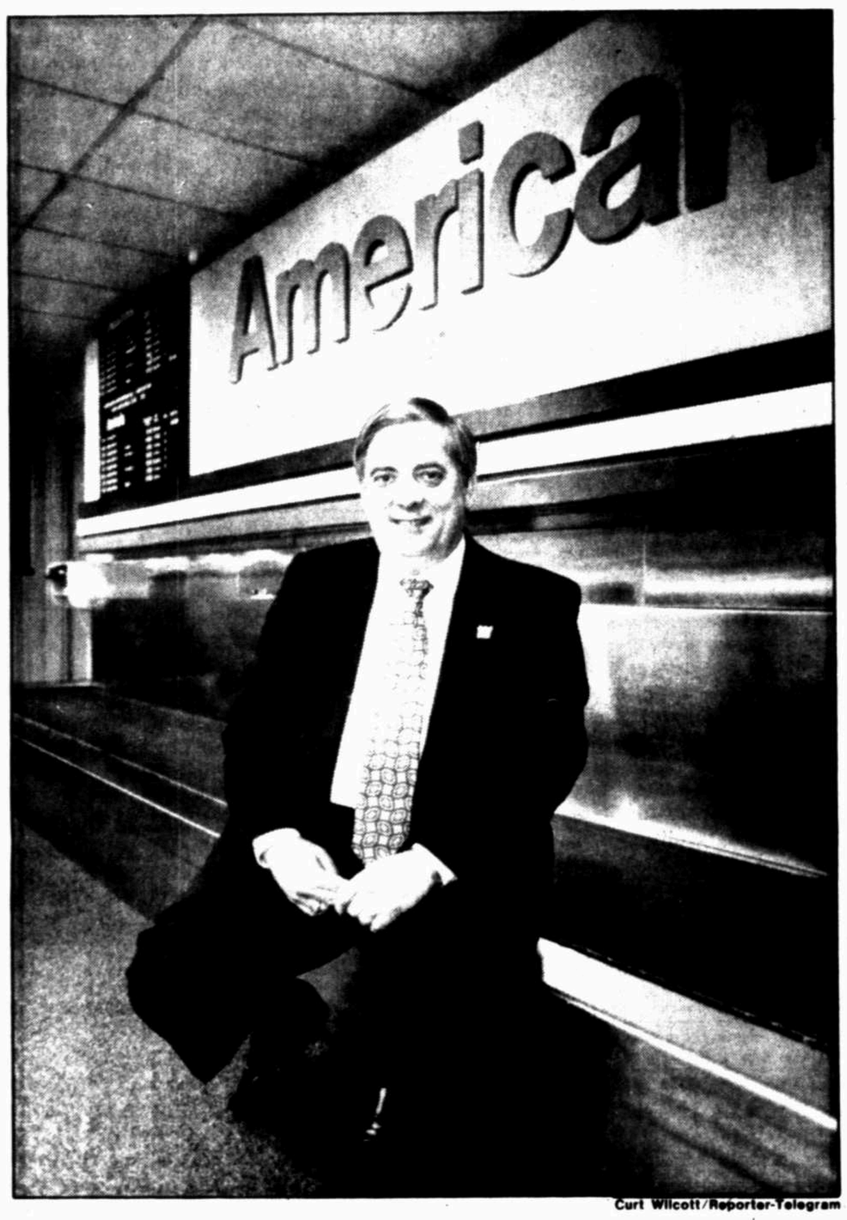

While American helps the community, the community has been helping the airline, so to speak. Thurmon said that Midland is located in the airline's Central division, which has 38 cities. "Last year, from June through September, we had the highest load factor of any city in the division."

Service began June 11, 1981, with three daily flights to Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport and 12 employees. "I remember when we came here, the ticket counter was full, and they squeezed us in with, I think it was Texas International," said Thurmon, former manager with Braniff Airlines.

Now, American offers seven flights — five with jets and two on American Eagle — and employs 44. Also, American has established ticket offices at both the Midland Hilton and Odessa Hilton.

Through the seven daily flights to D/FW, Permian Basin travelers can make connections to 194 destinations

Paper buys loan records at auction

HOUSTON (AP) — When the Resolution Trust Corp. recently auctioned off assets of a failed savings and loan, it sold confidential loan records to a Texas newspaper. Now the RTC wants to reimburse the $100 the Houston Chronicle paid for the Ameriway Savings records.

John Lomax, the head of the RTC office in Houston, said he was "absolutely flabbergasted" that more than 1,000 microfiche records of almost 600 customers of the failed institution made their way to the auction block.

The records contain names and payment histories of the customers, plus addresses, home phone numbers, loan amounts and balances of the former Ameriway borrowers.

"We would certainly like to redeem that property because there was never any intention on our part to sell it," Lomax said, adding he wants to make sure the information is not made public.

Disclosure of the information by banking officials is illegal under federal privacy laws.

RTC attorney John Liles said his agency intends to pursue legal action against the Chronicle if the records are not returned.

"We fully intend to assert our ownership of these records," Liles said.

Jack Loftis, executive vice president and editor of the Chronicle, acknowledged that he has been contacted by RTC officials. He said that the newspaper is evaluating the agency's request that the documents be returned.

"At the same time, we will be inspecting the records. There may be considerable news value in them regarding various aspects of the management of Ameriway, as well as the RTC's handling of the situation since the failure," said Loftis. "We would have an obligation to pursue these news stories."

Loftis said it is not "our intention to embarrass individual customers of Ameriway. These documents contain mostly private financial information, and we respect that privacy. I include myself in that group because I had an account there."

But Loftis said the information could give readers a look at any insider loan activity at the failed institution.

Improper loans to insiders — officers and directors — have been repeatedly cited by federal banking officials as a primary cause in the failure of numerous banks and S&Ls in recent years.

Catching up with 'retired' Peter Lynch

By Carole Gould
N.Y. Times News Service

About this time last year, Peter Lynch, the well-known stock picker who led Fidelity's Magellan Fund, retired at the age of 46 as head of the nation's largest and most successful stock fund.

These days, Lynch still keeps an office at Fidelity, and he works there anywhere from two to five days a week. He leaves home at 8 a.m. instead of 6:45, after making breakfast and lunch for his daughters. He leaves the office at 5 p.m., not 7, and does not work weekends. But he still eats lunch at his desk, he says, and "I go like crazy" during the work day.

Lynch resigned as a director of Fidelity when he left Magellan because "it was too time consuming," he said, and he wanted "a new challenge." Instead, he was elected by other trustees as one of 12 trustees for the Fidelity Funds.

In this role, he acts as "scorekeeper, judge and cheerleader," he said. "My job is to make sure that Fidelity shareholders are treated fairly."

Each month, Lynch and the rest of the equity committee listen to presentations by two stock-fund managers. While they look at whether a fund's investments are in line with its objectives, the big question, Lynch says, is: Can you tell me the 25 biggest positions in the fund, and why you own them?

In fact, the trustees met last week to 'Account agreement' causes disagreement

By Bill Doyle

Q. The "investor's account agreement" my husband and I signed when we went to a brokerage firm and purchased stock states, in part, securities the firm holds in our account "may, from time to time and without notice, be pledged, re-pledged, hypothecated or re-hypothecated."

Doyle

I'm no lawyer, but this sounds to me like the company can lend our securities to other customers and brokers, without even telling us. Am I right?

A. Yes. Your interpretation of that legalese is correct. Your account agreement includes a hypothecation clause, giving the brokerage the right to put securities it holds for you out on loan.

All "customer's agreements," as they are more commonly called, do not contain such clauses. However, you must agree to hypothecation if you have a margin account, thereby putting up only part of the price of securities you buy and borrowing the rest through the brokerage.

Various rules and regulations protect you against loss or theft of securities hypothecated by the brokerage. Just the same, if you are uncomfortable with that arrangement and have no plans to trade on margin, instruct the brokerage to scrap your present agreement and provide a new one, sans the hypothecation clause. On the off chance the brokerage refuses, transfer your account and the securities in it to a more agreeable brokerage.

Or, "order out" your stocks. Instruct the brokerage to register the stocks in your name and deliver the certificates to you. Then, if you decide to sell, you can do so through any brokerage.

You can take possession of certificates for virtually all types of securities, with two notable exceptions.

All new issues of U.S. Treasury bonds, notes and bills now are in "book-entry" form, with no certificates printed. Ownership is recorded on the "Treasury Direct" computer system where an individual investor can have his or her own account.

Many municipal bonds and some corporate bonds are available only in book-entry form. To own those bonds, investors must have them in accounts at brokerages or banks. Those middlemen collect the bond interest; sometimes are slow passing that money along to the bond owners; often charge fees for the so-called "service."

Q. Six years ago, I bought a zero-coupon bond for my first grandchild. I made the purchase through a big brokerage firm, with no explanation whatsoever. The price was $500. The bond's interest rate is 13.875 percent and its maturity date is May 15, 2004.

Two years ago, the brokerage charged a $50 annual service fee on the account. The bond is the only thing I have at that brokerage. I told the broker I wasn't going to pay the fee and I asked for the bond. I didn't get the bond, but that year's fee was waived.

Now, I am being billed again for a $50 fee. At this rate, the brokerage will make almost as much on the bond as my granddaughter. Does the firm have the right to hold the bond against my will?

A. No. If the bond is available in registered form, you can order it out and receive a certificate. If the bond is in book-entry only form, you can transfer it to a different brokerage, a commercial bank or trust company.

In the latter case, the brokerage now holding that bond could hit you with a transfer charge and refuse to let go of the bond until you pay both that charge and the annual fee about which you are unhappy.

Brokerages can charge any fees they choose. The majority lay on charges for holding securities in "inactive accounts" for customers who seldom, if ever, buy or sell and consequently do not generate commissions.

You're stuck, unless you have a relatively active account at a different brokerage or you are a good customer at your bank. This is one of the disgraceful things about book-entry only corporate and municipal bonds.

Texas wines grow up after 15 years on vine

By Chip Brown
Associated Press writer

LUBBOCK (AP) — Nicknames like Cactus Blanc, Chateau de Bubba and Cowboy Cabernet have all but disappeared.

Texas wines, for years a novelty product in a state better known for Texas tea, have grown up after 15 years on the vine.

The industry has earned a reputation nationally and even internationally among wine connoisseurs for pleasing the haughtiest of palates.

Soviet president Mikhail Gorbachev sampled Texas wine at Camp David. Foreign leaders attending the Economic Summit in Houston last summer drank the libation during formal dinners.

And Queen Elizabeth, who is completing a tour of the United States, will likely have a sip of the Lone Star State's finest as well.

"You can bet that when the queen is here she will be presented with some Texas wine to take back with her to spread across and enjoy in Great Britain," said Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry. "I'll give it to her myself."

In spite of the high-class clientele, the Texas wine industry is hardly resting. In fact, the winemakers are working overtime trying to impress its native consumers.

More than 90 percent of Texas table wines are sold instate. But Texas wines comprise only 2 percent of the state's overall wines sales.

"We have to hook Texas first, and there is so much potential it's frightening," said John Fitzgerald, director of the Texas Wine Marketing Research Institute at Texas Tech.

"We are conducting studies to determine who our consumers are and how we can get them to try a Texas wine over, say, a California wine. We still have a lot of marketing to do."

With $249,000 allocated by the state over the past two years, the wine institute has compiled data on how best to bring chardonnays and sauvignons to dinner tables in Texas.

The institute, which focuses on promotion and leaves production to colleges, also is plotting an advertising campaign similar to those launched by the national orange growers and American beef and dairy producers.

"Texas has a definite mystique about it," said Rob Becker, general manager of Teysha Cellars in Lubbock. "If a wine says Texas on it, someone is willing to buy it. But over the past few years, the novelty has worn off. People now are buying the wine because of the taste."

"We are finally out of that Chateau Bubba classification," said John Lowey, president of Llano Estacado Winery in Lubbock, the state's largest wine producer.

Industry officials agree Texas wine has made great strides since the twist-off tops and peach desert vintages of the mid-1970s.

Indeed some of the early Texas wines were so bad that one winery hired a bulldozer to crush 1,500 cases of its early stock. Today, however, tasting rooms across the state display plenty of medals won at international and national competitions.

Industry officials are fighting for federal funds and using the 3-year-old Texas Wine Marketing Research Institute to help promote the award-winning vintages abroad.

Texas is the fifth largest consumer of table wines nationwide. But it still is way behind states such as California, New York and Massachusetts in per capita consumption.

A Texan consumes .86 gallons of table wine per year, while a Californian drinks 2.55 gallons per year, according to figures compiled by the wine institute.

"Flat out, not enough people know what a great thing we have got going in the vineyards of Texas," Perry said.

Perry said the Texas Department of Agriculture is also planning to promote Texas wines in a campaign that could be launched as early as this fall.

"We consider wine grapes to be just as important as cotton, cattle and mohair, which are products we lead the nation in," Perry said. "Obviously, we don't lead the nation in wine production, but we're working on it."

Perry said the TDA would help wineries secure federal funds allocated each year for the promotion of "regional high-value products."

The California wine industry was awarded $15 million in export promotion funds from the U.S. Department of Agriculture in fiscal year 1991. The Texas wine industry did not receive a penny.

"We need to demonstrate that we are credible contenders in the export market," said Lowey, whose wines are currently marketed in seven countries. "As Texas and other states develop their wine exports consistently, I would like to see some of those dollars come away from California."

The Texas wine industry has grown from one winery in 1976 to 26 today primarily because of the excellent grape growing conditions in three regions of the state.

The High Plains and Trans-Pecos area of West Texas produced 84 percent of the state's wine grapes in 1990, while the Hill Country and North Central Texas produced about 9 percent and 4 percent respectively.

Warm days in Texas cause the grape to build sugar and cool nights help the grape retain acid for a mix crucial to producing premium wines.

As recently as three years ago, some Texas wineries had to turn back business because they were short on supply. But hundreds of acres of grapes have completed their three-year maturing process, helping balance supply and demand.

The high cost of planting grapes, up to $8,000 an acre, initially kept many farmers from getting into the business. But those who persevered are being rewarded.

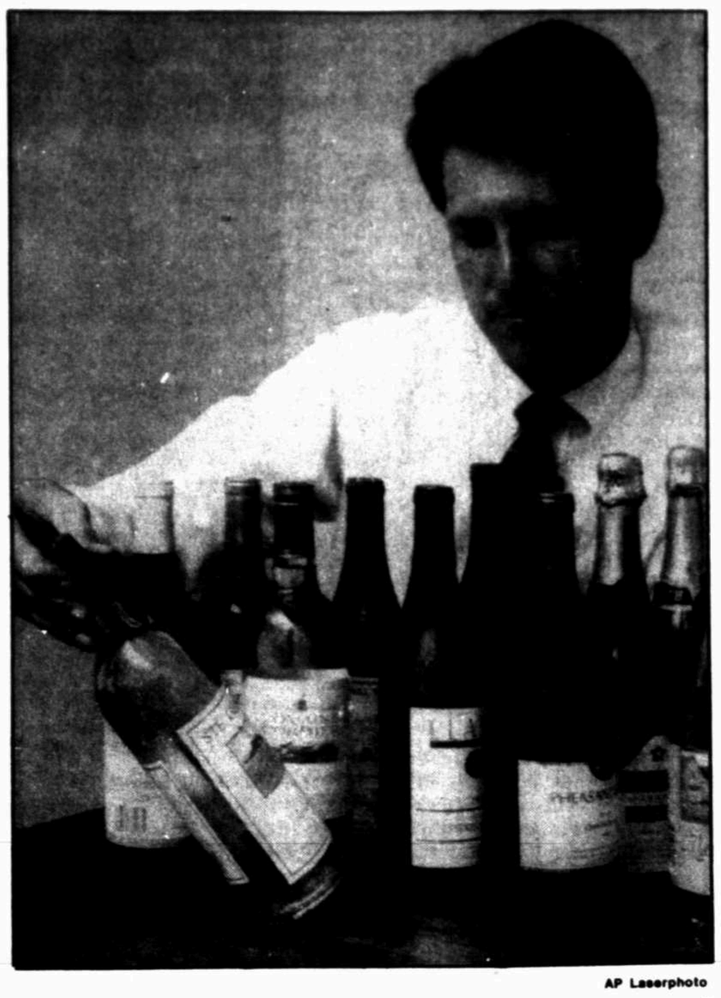

"We'll pay a high dollar for premium grapes," Lowey said.

Roy Renfro, president of the Texas Grape Growers Association, said quality, rather than quantity, has been stressed from the beginning.

"In growing grapes, the quality of the fruit is where the winery and other grape processors make the profit," Renfro said. "It's a very specialized type of agriculture that requires nurturing every day, unlike row crops such as cotton or grains."

As Texas wines become more familiar, the wineries will have a better focus on the ultimate goal: To make a dent in California's stranglehold on the U.S. wine market.

"This is Texas so we have to think big," Fitzgerald said. "Certainly California is way out in front and maybe always will be. But they are the competition and we are striving for market share."

Goodyear bets on outsider as its new chief executive

AKRON, Ohio (NYT) — On Friday, his second full day as chairman and chief executive of Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Stanley C. Gault had already called for a complete review of the company's costs, summoned senior executives for a battery of sunrise-to-sundown meetings and started looking at what pieces of the company might be sold.

Gault, who reinvigorated Rubbermaid Inc. as its chairman in the 1980s, was off to a running start in the formidable challenge of resuscitating Goodyear, the world's second-largest tire maker.

Goodyear is saddled with high debt and unprofitable businesses and mired in a worldwide sales slump. At an age when many senior executives step down from their jobs, the 65-year-old Gault decided to take up this challenge only a month after retiring from Rubbermaid.

Gault, a board member of Goodyear for two years, said he began thinking about taking the Goodyear post a month ago. "Every outside board member asked me to consider it," he said in an interview at Goodyear headquarters in Akron, Ohio.

Gault replaces his longtime friend, 60-year-old Tom H. Barrett, who resigned the previous week after two years as chief executive — the shortest tenure in the company's 93-year history. People inside the company contend that Barrett had been forced out by a board that was tired of red ink.

"The board is looking for a change of emphasis," said Harry W. Millis, an independent tire analyst in Cleveland. "The board felt that debt reduction was one of Tom Barrett's top priorities. They want it to be Stan Gault's top priority."

Gault's appointment is unique for Goodyear in a number of ways.

He is the first outsider to head Goodyear since E.G. Wilmer came to the company from the Schlesinger conglomerate in 1926.

And apart from his salary, Gault's compensation will be tied to the price of Goodyear's stock, an unprecedented arrangement at the company.

New 'environmentally safe' packaging filler stirs industry debate

By Steve Sakson
Associated Press writer

BALTIMORE — It's just a little white pellet made of corn starch, but "Eco-foam" has sparked a big-time debate in the packaging industry over whether it can protect products and the environment at the same time.

Eco-foam is being touted by its maker, Arlington, Texas-based American Excelsior Co., as an environmentally-sound replacement for polystyrene foam pellet packaging.

Introduced last August, Eco-foam is manufactured at American Excelsior's plants in suburban Baltimore, Chicago, and Holland Mich., in a process similar to breakfast cereal. Unlike polystyrene, which is made of petrochemicals, Eco-foam is biodegradable and dissolves in water.

"You could eat it. It wouldn't hurt you. It's just like eating a piece of paper," said John Blackburn, Eco-foam's national marketing manager.

Officials at Dow Chemical Co., of Midland, Mich. and Free Flow Packaging Corp. of Redwood City, Calif. are less enthusiastic. They say Eco-foam may be biodegradable and safe to eat, but they dispute claims that it will help the environment.

The companies, both competitors of American Excelsior and major polystyrene manufacturers, say the best environmental alternative is to recycle polystyrene into other products or merely reuse the pellets. Industry experts and environmentalists see merits to both arguments.

The financial and environmental stakes in the debate are high. Polystyrene foam "peanuts" are a $70 million to $80 million a year business, used to ship everything from cameras to computers, car parts to china. They also make up one-half of one percent of the trash now clogging the nation's landfills, according to the Natural Resources Defense Council.

American Excelsior, a 103-year-old diversified packaging corporation with 26 plants nationwide, is alone in choosing Eco-foam as the solution. It plans to switch its existing polystyrene operations almost entirely to Eco-Foam over the next few years.

"We started making polystyrene 25 years ago," said Blackburn. "It was the "in" thing to do. Now there's an environmental revolution going on."

Arthur Graham, president of Free Flow, said it's deceitful to say just because something is biodegradable, it's environmentally sound. "This will exacerbate the solid waste problem, not reduce it," he said, pointing out that even corn starch must be disposed of in landfills.

Eco-foam was invented by mistake three years ago, while scientists at National Starch & Chemical Co. in Bridgewater, N.J. were trying to figure out how to make cereals stand up better in milk. They refined the product, patented it and sold the exclusive sales rights to American Excelsior.

So far, the company has sold $1.2 million of the product in the Midwest, Mid-Atlantic states and Canada, said Blackburn. It will begin nationwide distribution this month and hopes to be doing $30 million to $40 million a year within five years.

Consumers can dispose of Eco-foam by flushing it down their sinks or toilets, he said. Businesses can leave it in dumpsters where it will dissolve in the rain. In dry areas, it can be dumped in a barrel and hosed down until it's gone.

The company acknowledges there are some drawbacks to the product.

Since Eco-foam dissolves in water, it shouldn't be used to pack liquids, Blackburn said. It costs more than twice as much as polystyrene, an increase of about 30 cents for the average box.

Graham said Free Flow chose a different path 13 years ago when it began using 100 percent recycled polystyrene. Next month, Dow will go one step further with a nationwide polystyrene pellet recycling and reuse program.

Consumers and businesses will be able to drop off their foam at 1,400 mailbox and packaging stores, where it will be reused or trucked away for recycling, said William Phenicie, Dow's industrial foam marketing manager.

"Our product can be melted down and made into park benches, or frisbees or loose fill again. Once you break down Eco-foam, it's gone," he said.

Allen Hershkowitz, senior scientist with the Natural Resources Defense Council, sees advantages and disadvantages to Eco-foam.

He applauds the use of an organic product instead of one made of petroleum. "On the other hand, we want people to realize this will not reduce the need for waste treatment or disposal facilities," he said.

Waste water with corn starch has to be treated at sewage plants and many people will throw Eco-foam in their trash, where it will be trucked to landfills, he said. Since landfills are designed to be moisture free, the Eco-foam could sit there just as long as polystyrene.

The debate is wearing thin for packaging trade associations trying to spur harmony in the industry.

"Rather than shooting darts at each other, they should simply try to cooperate and communicate," said Laurie Root of the Institute of Packaging Professionals in Reston, Va.

Where recycling is too costly or impractical, Eco-foam may be the answer.

"We're all going to have to work together because this (trash disposal) problem isn't going to go away," Ms. Root said.

BONDS: There are many reasons to be pessimistic an area which has shown definite signs of improvement in recent months.

The rise in bond yields, which amounted to some 20 basis points last week, "has carried right through to primary mortgage rates," Gramley said. "One cannot rule out the possibility that housing starts and sales may slow."

Moreover, while May employment gains were welcome news, some analysts said the rise should not be accepted uncritically. Service-producing industries generated the bulk of the actual increase, including a suspicious rise in state and local government employment.

Given the current fiscal problems confronting states and localities, those gains are not likely to be repeated, and may be revised downward by the Labor Department a month from now.

John G. Lonski, a senior economist at Moody's Investors Service, noted that the biggest percentage gainers in employment last month were in the automotive and construction industries, the sectors that have been hit the hardest by the recession.

A number of factors, including less favorable demographic trends and the decline in housing values "warn that the recovery in home construction activity will not be strong enough to fully compensate for the loss of 500,000 construction jobs since May 1990," he added.

worldwide. Thurmon estimated that over 70 percent of American's passengers from Midland to D/FW make connections to other cities on American planes.

He said the airline does excellent business in the summertime, and observed that American also boards a lot of international passengers from Midland.

As to the future, Thurmon said he hopes to add westbound flights out of Midland soon, and there are tentative plans to add an afternoon flight — convert an American Eagle flight to a proper jet flight — sometime in July 1992.

Meanwhile, he said, "I hope the city's proud of us. We're proud of our area."

LYNCH: Well-known stock picker retired at 46

review Magellan's performance under his successor, Morris Smith. How is Smith doing? "Great," Lynch said.

Besides his responsibilities for Fidelity, Lynch continues as a director of the Morrison Knudsen Corp. and of W.R. Grace & Co., which he joined in the 80s because he was friendly with William J. Agee and J. Peter Grace, the companies' chief executives. When he retired, he was besieged with requests to join other boards, all of which he declined.

Overall, Lynch estimates, the Fidelity work takes only one or two working days each month; the corporate board work takes another day or two. The rest of his working time is spent with charities.

The biggest beneficiary is the Archdiocese of Boston. Lynch says his best accomplishment this past year is a scholarship program for inner-city students sponsored by the archdiocese. For last February's black-tie fund-raising dinner, Lynch persuaded companies to buy tables "to get Boston business to hear the story of the inner-city schools," he said. Next year he will serve as chairman of the affair.

He is also chairman of the investment committee for the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, and he spent a small amount of time teaching at Boston College.

Most of his activities require Lynch to keep up with the financial markets. As for his current thinking on the United States, Lynch said the economy began to run out of steam a little more than a year ago.

The 1990 slowdown would have been a small one, he said, except for the added pressures created by the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait last summer.

Hollywood's superhunk heads for Nottingham

By Maureen Dowd
New York Times News Service

NEW ORLEANS — Kevin Costner is in a bad mood. He does not want to be trivialized. He does not want to be analyzed. He does not want to be criticized. He does not want to be "titillized," as he puts it, much less titillated.

Costner

He stalks down a street on the cusp of the French Quarter, wearing jeans and a bright green shirt, his hair slicked back and his scorching blue eyes shaded behind dark sunglasses. The heels of his brown cowboy boots tap an impatient tattoo, and he is annoyed when a group of middle-aged women hesitantly beg him to pose for a photograph while he waits at a red light.

"O.K.," he says, glowering at them and gesturing to a reporter who has moved out of the shot, "but can't you see I'm being interviewed?"

The highly anticipated $40 million to $50 million epic produced by Morgan Creek Productions and distributed by Warner Brothers, "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves," opens on Friday. Costner seems nervous about how "Raiders of the Lost Sherwood Forest," as some of the stars are calling the movie, will be received.

HE IS STILL adjusting to superstardom, to the blessings and burdens that come with inheriting both Paul Newman's mantle as Hollywood's "head hunk" and Orson Welles's mantle as a quirky acting-directing prodigy. "Orson Welles with no belly," Pauline Kael, the New Yorker movie critic, wrote sarcastically in a scalding review of "Dances With Wolves" that contains the now famous line, "Costner has feathers in his hair and feathers in his head."

Despite what Ms. Kael wrote about Costner's "New Age Gary Cooper" act and his "bland megalomania," the public embraced his innocent daydream of the West, just as they had embraced his innocent daydream about baseball, "Field of Dreams." "Dances With Wolves" received seven Academy Awards and vaulted Costner into Hollywood heaven.

Others may still be debating whether he is a lucky naif or a brilliant visionary, but Costner feels at home at the top. "I wanted to operate in the highest circle," he says, as he settled in his elegant hotel suite for a lunch of club sandwich, potato chips and a beer, as a radio played easy-listening music in the background.

The 36-year-old has, however, been taken aback by the wind shear of his stardom. "I have tried not to get caught off guard and to be kind of prudent in anticipating the stuff to try to understand the good and the bad and the success," he says.

"I'VE TRIED to monitor my life that way, not just in terms of Hollywood, for a long time. But 'Dances' did catch me by surprise, the leap, the kind of quantum leap that occurred with the public. Things have changed, and changed for me in ways that were difficult to anticipate.

"Personally, I don't know if people think I suddenly can think now, or I'm smarter than I ever was. And you're more vulnerable."

It has been said that Costner is worried about his thinning hair. His hair looks O.K. It's his thinning skin he should be worried about. Almost every question evokes a prickly response from the once-breezy actor.

He feels defensive about several things at the moment: his strange, now-you-see-it-now-you-don't English accent in "Robin Hood." His penchant for "politically correct" scripts with an anti-white male twist.

Criticism that he has lost the roguish gleam exhibited in early interviews and in early films such as "Silverado" and "No Way Out," in favor of a tiresome thirtysomething earnestness and smugness. Controversy over whether he is lending his prestige to the dubious conspiracy theory of former New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison, whom he plays in the Oliver Stone movie "JFK," now being filmed here.

LIKE OTHER MOVIE stars who capture the public's attention through their looks, Costner is both pleased and tetchy about his image as sex symbol and stresses that he prefers riding horses to kissing leading ladies. "Oh, God, the horses are always fun; the fights are fun," he says of "Robin Hood."

At one point, with a self-conscious cockiness, he points at the reporter's tape recorder and asks, "So who hears this tape, your girlfriends?" (He is assured that the tape will be used for professional purposes only.)

At the moment, what is bothering Costner most on this score is a nude swimming scene that the "Robin Hood" producers have played up in the film's trailer. The scene shows Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, who portrays Maid Marian, experiencing a flash of desire as she watches Costner swim in a pond below.

Costner, who had a similar nude scene in "Dances With Wolves," offers a long, exceedingly earnest explanation, saying he agreed to the swimming scene only because it was integral to the original script. He says he feels a little used now because the "meaning" of the nudity was left on the cutting-room floor. To make it even more absurd, it's not even his derriere. It belongs to his double.

"THERE WAS A reason for that scene that's not there anymore, so it seems maybe gratuitous or seems like all this is an opportunity to titillize — what is the word, titillate?" he says. "But it's not. The whole point of that scene was when she sees him, he has tremendous scars on his back from prison, and the camera never picked it up; and out of that she begins to change.

"It puts another interesting spin on the movie, that he's been disfigured a little bit, violated that way. So the device of swimming was a device to see that. This wasn't something that I invented and thought, 'Oh, boy, that works.' When I see the horses, I think, 'Oh, boy!' "

He dismisses questions about such "gratuitous stuff." "Aren't you trying to completely trivialize my life?" he snaps.

But Costner has bigger problems with this movie. There is, for starters, his accent.

The star says that the director, his friend Kevin Reynolds, who gave Costner a start in the 1985 movie "Fandango," and the Morgan Creek producer James Robinson were wary about his trying a British accent. He started out with an accent coach, but, he says, before he felt he had perfected the accent, the coach was gone and he was left to his own devices.

He says he thought it was important for the movie's reality to sharpen his relaxed California surfer drawl with an English accent, but it comes out sounding like Moondoggie goes Nottingham as Costner drops his "r's" in words like "armor," "fear" and "sworn."

The accent problem is underscored by the stilted dialogue, which runs along the lines of "I'm swahhn to protect you" and "Please allow that yeahs of wah and prison may change a mahn." Ms. Mastrantonio, who does better with her British accent, is stuck with lines like "How did a once arrogant young nobleman find contentment living with the salt of the earth?"

Despite the standards set for speaking in tongues by Meryl Streep, there is still a school in Hollywood that believes that some popular stars are better off not trying accents. Robert Redford, for instance, did not attempt Denys Finch Hatton's clipped Eton accent in "Out of Africa."

The makers of "Robin Hood" may be assumed to be in this school, since the trailer for the two-and-a-half-hour movie, and almost the entire second half of the film, find Costner bounding about "buckling swash," as his co-star Alan Rickman puts it, with flaming bow and arrow and flashing sword, but little dialogue.

Asked if he was feeling defensive about the accent, Costner replies: "I'm going to have to answer questions about it. So you can choose what you think my posturing is. You know about it. You have to answer questions about it. So if you're asking questions about it, you're being offensive about it. Are you being offensive about it by asking about it?"

THERE IS also bound to be much comment about the awkward addition to the Robin Hood myth of Morgan Freeman, an Oscar nominee for best actor for "Driving Miss Daisy" in 1989. Freeman plays Azeem, a Moor rescued by Robin Hood during the Crusades in Jerusalem. Freeman's character follows Robin to Sherwood Forest, where he uses the skills of a higher civilization to teach the racist Merry Men some lessons in loyalty, gunpowder and delivering a breech baby.

Critics will no doubt draw parallels to Costner's treatment of the Sioux in "Dances With Wolves," a movie that glorified the Indians while presenting the white soldiers as cruel louts.

"I didn't write the piece," Costner says of the new movie. "But I wouldn't have done 'Robin Hood' unless it leaped forward in terms of genre. I saw the humor in it. And it seemed exotic that Robin Hood start in Jerusalem and how he behaved not as a boy but as a man, not as a rascal but as a person who's been through some things, as a hired trained soldier who's capable of fighting, as opposed to guys who've been killing deer illegally."

Since Costner is "a Robin Hood for the 90's," as the producers proclaim, this version of the medieval fable is violent, even though it has received a PG-13 rating. Costner is proud of the fact that his Robin Hood is grittier than Errol Flynn's, in 1938. He wears studs on his jacket instead of sequins and brown pants instead of tights, and there's no cunning green hat with a feather.

COSTNER ALSO dispensed with Flynn's tongue-in-cheek derring-do, because it did not fit with the brooding new Freudian twists in the plot — young Robin's refusal to accept his widowed father's affair with a peasant woman, and the murder of his father by the Sheriff of Nottingham.

"You tell me my father just died, and I can't do the next scene tongue-in-cheek; I can't get all revved up; that's not really real behavior," he explains. "If I do that, I'm going to spin you out of the movie." On the other hand, he notes, it is a fairy tale. "I mean, it's not Virginia Woolf; it's not heavy, heavy, heavy drama. C'mon, look at me, how deep could I get with stuff like that, for crying out loud?"

Asked about the backlash of fame, asked how he feels when he is criticized for being too self-righteous, he goes on a lengthy, bitter and largely unprintable rampage against critics like Ms. Kael and Tom Shales of The Washington Post, who has dubbed Costner "the Prince of Sanctimony."

DEAR ABBY

Woman trapped in triangle discovers three is still a crowd

DEAR ABBY: I am desperate, so I will tell you my problem from the beginning.

Van Buren

I am a 35-year-old mother of three. I divorced my husband twice for the same reason. Both times I caught him with another woman. (The same woman, and she was my best friend.)

Now I have a guy I think the world of. I love him like I have never loved anybody in my entire life. I can't stand being away from him. We have everything in common. He keeps telling me how much he loves me, and I know he isn't lying. He treats me like a queen. There is only one problem. He's living with another woman. He says he doesn't love her, and I believe him. He's too kind and decent to tell her he's in love with another woman. He says if she knew, she might even kill herself.

He doesn't want me dating anyone else, but he goes home to her every night and I'm alone.

I'm tired of hiding, but I'm afraid if I force him to make a choice, it won't be me. What should I do? — A WOMAN IN LOVE

DEAR WOMAN: Brace yourself for some unpleasant news. The guy you are in love with has already made his choice, and it's not you.

Quit being available whenever he wants you. And quit hiding. The man is living with another woman, and he's cheating on HER to be with you. Please wise up and smell the skunk cabbage. This man is not worthy of your love.

DEAR ABBY: Tonight, while shopping at a large department store, I witnessed a man pull his son's hair and then he kept punching him very hard on his back and shoulders in an effort to make the boy obey.

The boy looked to be about 7 or 8 years old. The poor kid sat on the floor and cried silently while his father delivered these cruel blows with hate in his eyes. I stood no more than 3 feet away throughout this episode, searching for the right words to demand that he stop hurting the boy, but I feared that if I said anything, the man would be angered and embarrassed and would take his anger out on the child later at home.

Please address this issue, Abby. Tell your readers how to handle such situations. — FEELING GUILTY FOR MY SILENCE

DEAR FEELING GUILTY: The scene you witnessed involved a man out of control. You could have very gently and quietly attempted to calm the father by saying, "I know exactly how you feel. Sometimes taking a child that age shopping is more than we can handle." And without being judgmental, in a soft and sympathetic tone, you would have intervened and brought an out-of-control man back to reality.

This sometimes takes more courage than most people have in today's "mind-your-own-business" society, but to do nothing while witnessing child abuse is indefensible.

Readers: There is now a toll-free National Child Abuse Hotline for adults to call when they feel that they are losing control. Dial 1-800-422-4453.

Paths of loner, ex-Rockette cross, then part in her death

NEW YORK (NYT) — Her life was almost a real-life rewrite of "42nd Street," the musical about the determined young dancer from small-town Pennsylvania who got one of those lucky breaks and soon was high-kicking her way across the big city stage.

And her offstage life seemed to follow the same kind of only-in-New-York script: she fought off a mugger in 1987, and that only made her love the city more.

His life was an enigma to the few people who seemed to know him. An ex-convict, he spent hour after hour singing blues melodies on the front stoop of his city-owned apartment building.

He told the neighbors that he was a writer whose books had never quite caught on. He was evicted for not paying the rent and began wandering the Upper West Side, scrounging streetcorner garbage cans and looking ever more bedraggled.

Their apartments were only about 30 blocks apart — a world in a city where the lines of demarcation are sometimes so close together that habit makes them invisible. Their paths did not cross until about the time the sun was coming up on Saturday morning.

She was walking her dogs, two big-eyed cocker spaniels she doted on with the pride of a parent; Pizza and Pepperoni, she called them.

He followed her, the police said, perhaps as she left Central Park, where she often strolled with other dog-walkers at dawn.

Within minutes, after a struggle, she lay screaming on the sidewalk on her own street, West 69th, a carving knife in her back.

He was shambling toward the park as people who had heard her crying for help chased after him.

The 30-year-old woman, Alexis Ficks Welsh, died about five hours later on an operating table at St. Luke's Hospital.

Sunday, the suspect, Kevin McKiever, 34, pleaded not guilty to murder and other charges in Manhattan Criminal Court. He told Judge Martin H. Rettinger that he was on the street when the attack occurred but was not the person who stabbed her.

Rettinger scheduled another hearing for Wednesday and ordered McKiever held without bail until then.

The victim was a former Rockette who worked for the Ogilvy & Mather advertising agency and was attending Fordham University, studying for a master's degree in business administration.

When she joined the Rockettes at 20, she still wore braces to make her teeth as straight as a big-city model's.

"Dance was her life," her husband, Christopher Welsh, 33, an executive at the investment house of Bear, Stearns & Co., said Sunday.

"She was a model Rockette," said Cathy Beatty, a 12-year veteran of the troupe. "I never knew her to make a mistake. She was very professional, always."

Last year, Mrs. Welsh did something that made her feel more at home in the city: she bought a dog, a light-brown female cocker spaniel that she named Pizza. She chose the name because she and her husband had had a slice at a West Side restaurant just before she noticed the dog, in a pet-shop window, as they walked down West 72nd Street. Later she bought the second dog, Pepperoni, to keep Pizza company.

Welsh said he had been concerned at first about her safety when she started taking the dogs out early in the morning.

"Her response was that all the other dog-walkers were out at that time and they would meet in the park," he said. "If you understood anything about Alexis, it was that she was strong-willed. She wanted to housebreak those dogs and you have to do that early in the day."

She never mentioned seeing anyone like the suspect, Welsh said.

The police said Mrs. Welsh struggled with her attacker Saturday and Welsh has little doubt that that is true.

"She's a fighter. She didn't let people get away with things. She would not let people take advantage of her."

McKiever's neighbors said he was a loner who became a menace after he was evicted two years ago. They said he had broken into the building, smashing down doors in what they called crazed attempts to harass a tenant on whom he blamed his eviction.

He was eventually arrested and charged with stabbing the tenant, Sarah Kearney, who said she had obtained a court order in hopes of keeping him away.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
