Gramm: Time for public to get tough on drugs

By L.D. STRATE
Staff Writer

U.S. Senator Phil Gramm says it's time to get tougher in the war on drugs, especially in the nation's schools and courtrooms.

"We don't want to get discouraged about the drug problem, we want to get deadly serious," said Gramm, who spoke to a courtroom packed with Pampans Sunday night in the Gray County Courthouse. "Our law officers are deadly serious about stopping illegal drug use, but the American public needs to become deadly serious about it."

Gramm spoke to a standing-room only crowd at an open-meeting concerning the nation's worsening drug problems.

He talked about Congress' $9.4 billion anti-drug plan, including a new law aimed mainly at controlling the flow of illegal drugs in the nation's classrooms.

Under the new law, which becomes effective Jan. 1, 1990, state high schools would have to attain a "zero tolerance" drug program by the end of the school year or risk losing federal funding.

Gramm said one way the program would be implemented is through a drug testing procedure for students.

"I'm not saying that drug testing is the answer, but it is a tool that we can use," Gramm said. "There would also be mandatory expulsion for students caught using drugs."

Gramm said a formula would have to be adopted to determine how the federal funds would be allocated to the states.

"The money will go where it is needed the most, based on a merit review of the proposals," he said.

Increased drug education programs would also be provided under the new law, Gramm said.

Gramm said the courts have become too lenient on both drug pushers and buyers.

"I want to see these people convicted, go to jail and stay in jail," he added. "I subscribe to the view that the guy buying drugs is also a criminal and should be punished, not just the guy selling them."

Within the anti-drug plan, Gramm is pushing for an automatic 10-year prison sentence for a person convicted of selling illegal drugs to a minor.

"According to statistics, 63 percent of prisoners doing hard time are back in prison within three years on major felony charges after they are released the first time," Gramm said. "We need to get tougher in terms of law enforcement."

Gramm did predict a breakthrough on the war on drugs, utilizing the country's armed forces.

"By the end of next year, the number one method of illegal entry, low-flying planes, will be cut off. It's an ambitious program using military hardware," Gramm said. "If we don't use the military, people are going to think we're not serious about the war on drugs."

In addition, Gramm said he is seeking prison reform.

"I want to see road gangs again and more prison industry, which would defray the cost of maintaining our prisons," he said.

Gramm, who is scheduled to speak at an American Gas Association meeting today in Dallas, was impressed by the large turnout for the meeting.

"I don't think there was an empty seat, and on a Sunday night. It indicates that people want something done about drugs," he said.

Veterans panel to reopen Agent Orange study

By ROBERT GREENE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - An advisory committee to the Department of Veterans Affairs this week may open the door a crack to disability benefits for Vietnam veterans exposed to Agent Orange.

Responding to a federal court decision in May, the 15-member Veterans' Advisory Committee on Environmental Hazards will look again at scientific papers and studies on the herbicide used to clear dense foliage that hid the enemy.

This time, however, the committee will use standards considered less strict than those used for determining other service-connected disabilities.

No one is predicting the outcome. But there is agreement that VA Secretary Edward J. Derwinski wants to resolve the issue quickly and in favor of veterans.

"I don't think he's going to fool around very long," VA spokesman Don Smith said. "He's so far exhibited a degree of willingness — if not impatience — to go along rather rapidly with this."

Once the committee does its work Derwinski is "kind of on his own as to how he wants to fly on this," Smith said.

He said Derwinski will make a final determination on the committee's recommendations within two weeks of receiving results of the meeting.

According to one congressional source, Derwinski's actions mean "he's almost promised people" that he will take some positive action for veterans.

Veterans blame exposure to Agent Orange for cancers, skin diseases and genetic damage leading to miscarriages or birth defects.

The committee will spend its first two days reviewing about 20 or 30 studies on the connection between exposure and non-Hodgkins lymphoma, one of the most frequently cited cancers, then study other diseases at later meetings.

On Friday, it will issue recommendations on non-Hodgkins lymphoma and Agent Orange.

The four-year-old advisory committee and government scientists have thus far rejected a link between Agent Orange exposure and health problems other than a skin condition known as chloracne.

The American Legion, the prime veterans' group in this dispute, contends the committee has a longstanding bias against veterans.

Not so, says Oliver Meadows, the disabled veteran and scientific layman in charge of the panel. "Their greatest interest is their own integrity as scientists," he said.

Agent Orange, an orange-brown liquid that was shipped in orange-striped barrels, was sprayed in Vietnam from January 1965 to April 1970.

Agent Orange is suspect because it contains "phenoxy" herbicides associated with certain cancers as well as dioxin, which has been found to cause cancer in laboratory animals.

A ruling in May by U.S. District Judge Thelton E. Henderson in San Francisco created a way out of the impasse over Agent Orange.

A new administration and the elevation of the Veterans' Administration to cabinet status added another ingredient.

Henderson ruled May 2 that the VA imposed an "impermissibly demanding test" for linking Agent Orange with health problems.

Although the VA has relied on a "cause and effect" relationship in determining service-connected disabilities, the committee was to use a different standard: "a significant statistical association."

Jet plane crashes on deck of aircraft carrier

By BILL KACZOR
Associated Press Writer

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) - A jet practicing take-offs and landings crashed into the tower of the aircraft carrier Lexington, then cartwheeled and burst into flames on the flight deck, killing five and injuring two, authorities said.

The two-seater T-2 Buckeye jet, based at the Naval Air Station in Meridian, Miss., crashed Sunday afternoon during the training mission about 30 miles south of Pensacola in the Gulf of Mexico.

The pilot approached too low for a landing and deck crewmembers tried to wave the flier off before the crash, according to Rep. Earl Hutto, D-Fla.

The plane hit the tower of the 46-year-old aircraft carrier, flipped over and slammed into a row of parked planes, said the congressman, who was briefed by Navy officials.

Aviation fuel immediately ignited on the 889-foot-long blacktop deck, but the fires were quickly brought under control, said Navy Cmdr. Dennis Hessler.

The crash caused major damage to two aircraft on the ship and minor damage to another, said Army Maj. John Smith, a Pentagon spokesman.

The Lexington, the Navy's oldest aircraft carrier, was not damaged extensively. It was due to arrive today at its home port in Pensacola, said Navy officials.

The ship, which came under a deadly Japanese kamikaze attack 45 years ago this week, has 1,440 crewmembers and is the Navy's only aircraft carrier used exclusively for training.

After the crash, helicopters flew the casualties to hospitals in Pensacola and Alabama.

Crewmember Anthony Lopez, 21, of West Valley, Utah, had second- and third-degree burns covering about 45 percent of his body, and was listed in critical but stable condition, said Suzette George, nursing supervisor at University of South Alabama Medical Center in Mobile.

The other person injured was being treated at the U.S. Naval Hospital in Pensacola.

The dead also were taken there. Their names were not released.

In Pensacola, relatives of crewmembers worried about finding out who the casualties were.

"We're all just shaken. We don't know what to think one way or the other. I just want to know something," said Cathy Webb, whose boyfriend serves on the carrier.

The crash occurred six days before the anniversary of the Nov. 4, 1944, attack that killed 47 and injured 127 on the ship in World War II.

The original crew plans to hold a reunion next weekend in Pensacola.

After the war, the Lexington was mothballed until being reactivated in 1955. It reported to Pensacola on Dec. 29, 1962, to serve as the Navy's training carrier. It is scheduled to continue that role after moving next September to Corpus Christi.

The ship has been a favorite of movie producers.

Hawaiian island grieves at loss of soccer players in plane accident

HONOLULU (AP) - A small island grieved over the loss of 13 residents, including members of a high school volleyball team, who were among 20 people killed in a twin-engine commuter plane crash.

A National Transportation Safety Board team left Sunday from Washington, D.C., for the island of Molokai to investigate the cause of the crash, which killed all aboard. A six-person NTSB team was expected at the site today.

The Aloha IslandAir DH6 Twin Otter crashed into the wall of Halawa Valley on the eastern end of the island, just below the ridgeline and about 700 feet above the valley floor, Coast Guard spokesman Scott Hartvisen said.

The cause of the crash was not known.

Rescuers recovered 20 bodies from the charred wreckage of the plane on Sunday. Fire rescue teams used helicopters to ferry the bodies back to Kahului Airport on the island of Maui, said Maui Deputy Fire Chief Leroy Hokoana said. The islands are separated by 10-mile-wide Pailolo Channel.

The victims included eight members of Molokai High School's volleyball teams, the coach of the girl's team and the school's athletic director, Principal Clifford Horita said. Three other island residents also were killed.

Horita said school would be held today, but he planned to arrange a special morning assembly to help students cope with the tragedy.

Before the wreckage was found, about 600 of Molokai Island's 6,000 residents gathered at a community center in the town of Kaunakakai. When officials announced that the plane had crashed and there were no survivors, many wept and comforted each other.

"In any tragedy in a small community like this, everyone feels very badly," Horita said. "Everyone knows everyone here."

The announcement of the wreckage was made by Jonathan Lindo, whose daughter had returned with other members of the volleyball teams on an earlier flight. "They're still a part of us," said team member Rhonda Dudoit.

The DH6 Twin Otter was rebuilt in 1986 and had no significant maintenance problems, Peter Dudgeon, the airline's vice president and general manager, said Sunday. The plane was 16 years old and had made 28,000 flights.

The plane left Kahului Airport at 6:25 p.m. Saturday for a scheduled 35-minute flight, said Don Early, air traffic manager for the Federal Aviation Administration at the Honolulu Airport.

There was no distress call from the crew and no signals were detected from an emergency locator transmitter aboard the plane, said Sgt. William Bowker, of the Joint Rescue Coordination Center.

The pilot of the plane, Captain Bruce Pollard, 30, had flown for the airline for two years, Dudgeon said. He and First Officer Phil Helfrich, 27, were from Oahu Island, where Honolulu is located.

Aloha IslandAir said the passenger list included Peter and Elizabeth Wiley of Philadelphia, John and Christina Craig of Houston, and Hank Gabriel of Maui.

The Molokai passengers were identified by the airline as girl's volleyball team coach Odetta Rapanot; the school's athletic director John Ino; Leilani Ahina, Jared Elia, Lea Dunnam, Colette Kekalia, Natalie Helm, Nancy Pierce, Nancine Mahiai, Aloma Spencer, Rodrigo Senica, Jovencio Ruiz, and Testa Ku.

Senate leaders: Honor Contra aid

By TOM RAUM
 Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress should honor its commitment to the Bush administration to provide humanitarian aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua through next February's elections there, Senate leaders say.

Despite the weekend exchange of hostilities between President Bush and Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega in Costa Rica, administration officials are indicating it is unlikely they will seek a renewal of military aid for the U.S.-backed rebels at this time.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, and Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., on Sunday joined Bush's condemnation of Ortega for threatening to end a 19-month cease-fire.

"It was a very unwise move, particularly the timing of it," said Mitchell. Dole, calling Ortega a "tinhorn dictator," said he will present a resolution to the full Senate on Tuesday condemning the Nicaraguan leader.

For his part, Bush on Saturday called Ortega a "little man" and an "unwanted animal at a garden party" after Ortega said he might no longer honor the cease-fire between his Sandinista government and the U.S.-backed Contras that has been in effect since March 1988.

Although he later said he would decide on Tuesday whether to break the cease-fire, Ortega's original declaration marred a two-day Western Hemisphere conference held in Costa Rica to honor that nation's 100 years as a democracy.

Any effort to renew U.S. military aid to the Contras would be sure to generate strong new opposition in Congress. The agreement reached last spring between the administration and Congress envisioned a disbanding of the Contras after the Feb. 25 elections.

The agreement gives congressional committees that oversee Contra aid the authority to cancel a $49 million aid package when they review it a final time in late November.

Bush, asked at a news conference on Saturday whether he would now press for more military aid for the Contras, said, "We'll let you know, we'll let you know."

However, a senior administration official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said Bush was not trying to hint that he might seek to renew military aid.

Mitchell, interviewed along with Dole on NBC's "Meet the Press," called Ortega's declaration - which startled participants at the conference - an outgrowth of a rivalry between the Nicaraguan leader and Costa Rican President Oscar Arias.

"It is my hope the free and open election process will go forward and that the results will be accepted by the people of Nicaragua," Mitchell said.

He said "we intend to honor" the agreement with the administration last spring to provide humanitarian assistance through the Feb. 25 elections in Nicaragua.

PRPC Narcotics Task Force issues report

Officials from the Panhandle Regional Narcotics Task Force issued a report today that during September the agency was responsible for 31 felony and 16 misdemeanor arrests.

In addition, task force agents confiscated $5,000 worth of narcotics, $4,724 in cash and $12,300 worth of stolen property.

Working with the federal Drug Enforcement Agency and Texas Department of Public Safety, agents arrested five felony defendants in Amarillo and Dumas, said Lt. Mike Amos of the task force.

He also noted that a task force agent worked with police in Pampa in bringing about 10 drug-related arrests in Pampa last month.

In addition, persons in Dallas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Louisiana were arrested following a 2 1/2 year investigation by the task force regarding the manufacture and distribution of amphetamines.

Amos pointed out that agents are currently working with the DEA and IRS to bring a stop to air smuggling of drugs into the Panhandle.

Amos said anyone wishing to assist the task force with information regarding drug use or trafficking in the region can call 1-378-3076.

Sinking boat report probably a hoax, authorities say

SABINE PASS (AP) - A report of a sinking boat that brought Coast Guard crews away from inspections apparently was a hoax, authorities said.

The Coast Guard said it now believes shrimpers may have given the false distress call Saturday morning to prevent on-board inspections that were under way.

Part of the on-board inspection includes a check for turtle excluder devices, which shrimpers must use to free turtles from their nets.

Some shrimpers say the apparatus reduces their catch.

Search continues today for six workers missing in explosion

PASADENA, Texas (AP) — Heavy rains in the Houston area helped rescuers locate two more bodies in the massive steel and concrete debris of the Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant early today, while the search continued for six workers still missing.

"They were found in the area of the control room and the finishing room," company spokesman Rob Phillips said of the latest recoveries.

"That's really where we expect to find the rest of the missing. But we're talking about an area as big as a football field, so there's still quite a lot of area to get through."

In the week since the plastics plant was ripped apart by a series of explosions, 16 bodies have been recovered by crews working around the clock. Only five bodies have been officially identified.

Phillips said heavy rains that dumped hail and up to four inches of rain in some areas in and around Houston Sunday helped rescue efforts by damping dust from the rubble.

"The rain didn't really slow them down yesterday," Phillips said today. "It kept the dust down and the asbestos that is being cleaned up and removed from the area from flying around. From what I hear, we may get more rain today, so that could be good."

But the crews' search was hampered Sunday by a steel beam which was hanging loosely 150 feet over a control room area where rescuers believe they will find the missing bodies. Workers were able to locate a crane to stabilize the beam.

Six bodies were recovered Saturday and another on Sunday before the early morning finds. One of those recovered Saturday was identified as Jesse Thomas Northrup, 42, of Brookshire, company spokesman Dave Dryden said Sunday. Northrup had been an operator for Phillips since 1978, he said.

Others identified include two Phillips employees: Jeffery L. Harrison, 36, Houston, and James H. Campbell, 30, Baytown.

Two Fish Construction Co. employees who were doing contract work at the plant also have been identified: Jose Gonzales, 38, Galena Park, and William Scott Martin, 28, Dayton.

Phillips spokesmen said 124 people were injured in the accident and nine remained hospitalized late Sunday.

"The accident came as a big shock and it will be a long time coming before the company recovers," said spokesman Bill Wicker. "There are economic concerns for the company right now, but ahead of everything is our commitment to find the missing people."

Debris from Monday's explosion near the plant's control and finishing rooms is stacked as high as 40 feet, officials say.

The polyethylene plant produced almost 20 percent of the nation's production of plastic pellets used in the manufacture of milk jugs and grocery bags.

Phillips officials believe flammable hydrocarbon vapor from ethylene and isobutane gases escaped from a leaking chemical reactor, triggering Monday's blast. But company officials have said they don't know how the gases were ignited.

A memorial service for the victims is planned for tonight at the Pasadena Civic Center.

Appreciation plaques

Members of the Pampa Veterans of Foreign Wars Post # 1657 gathered Friday night to hand out plaques of appreciation for service for assistance with the parade and dedication efforts for the Gray County Veterans Memorial. At right, John Triplehorn, who headed up efforts for the memorial, presents the plaques to (from left), Penny Brooks, Tejas Feeders; SFC. Lloyd Larkin, Texas National Guard; and Bobby Howard, Top O' Texas Rodeo Association. Triplehorn said Radio Station KGRO-KOMX also received a plaque. He said the post wanted to thank Tejas Feeders for providing beef for the barbecue held in association with the parade; the Rodeo Association for cooking the beef; and the National Guard for providing its armory for the barbecue meal and for cooking the beans for the meal. The presentation was made at the VFW Post building west of Pampa on Hwy. 152.

East Berliners use rally time to criticize Communist Party

By GIRARD C. STEICHEN
Associated Press Writer

BERLIN (AP) — At a remarkable open forum, East Berliners stood before an open mike and said what once might have landed them in jail, jeering Communist leaders and calling on them to account for a host of misdeeds and blunders.

At least 20,000 people attended Sunday's rally, which was organized by the mayor of the East German capital to address calls for reform that have reached a fever-pitch this month.

Similar meetings were organized in other cities across the country.

At the request of a person who stepped up to one microphone at the gathering outside East Berlin's old City Hall, the crowd observed a minute of silence for those killed while attempting to escape over the Berlin Wall.

"We have to remember those who lost their lives in the minefields and along the barbed wire and in the waters of the Spree River just because once in their lives they wanted to see another part of the world," said the unidentified man.

It was the first such public mourning since Communist authorities built the wall in 1961 to prevent East Germans from escaping to the West. West German human rights groups say 191 people were killed trying to flee East Germany from 1961 to 1988.

One worker demanded the Wall be torn down. "It's time we were allowed to go where we want," he said.

The man who supervised construction of the wall, Erich Honecker, ruled East Germany for 18 years until being replaced nearly two weeks ago.

The new Communist chief, Egon Krenz, has promised "a new course" for the country, including freer travel to the West and an amnesty for people jailed for trying to escape what has been a tightly-controlled society.

East Germans have taken to the streets by the hundreds of thousands this month to demand a more open society with free elections, a free press and an end to one-party rule. Since mid-September, more than 50,000 have fled to the West, many of them young skilled workers.

Sunday's meeting in Berlin quickly turned into an emotional forum, with speakers calling on Communist leaders to account for a host of purported mistakes and misdeeds. The officials were frequently booed and jeered.

They were called to task on privileges accorded Communist officials and asked to respond to demands for free elections and charges of police brutality against peaceful pro-democracy protesters earlier this month.

Gunter Schabowski, East Berlin party chief and a member of the country's ruling Politburo, drew applause when he announced his support for "approved and well-ordered" demonstrations in the city.

Delta engine failure investigated

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Officials today are expected to investigate the cause of an engine failure on a Delta Air Lines flight that returned to Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport and reportedly ignited several grass fires in an open field nearby.

Flight 691, a Boeing 727, was bound for Denver with 94 passengers and a crew of seven Sunday night when one of its three engines failed shortly after takeoff, said Delta spokesman Bill Holland.

No injuries were reported, officials said.

Sparks coming from the failed engine ignited several grass fires in an open field near the airport, witnesses told the Irving Fire Department.

"It looked like a Roman candle," said Irving resident Mike Sullivan, who saw the incident while walking his dog.

"It left a streak of sparks in the sky. There were large chunks flying off of it."

"It was shooting off sparks and then it seemed to diminish," he told the Dallas Times Herald.

Fire officials could not immediately confirm what started the fires, but the Irving fire marshal was expected to investigate the blazes today, said dispatcher Gerard Thompson.

Federal Aviation Administration officials said the plane would remain at airport today while investigators attempt to identify the cause of the failure.

Airport operation crews closed the runway and found several engine parts, including what appeared to be pieces of turbine fan blades, scattered along the runway, said airport spokesman Joe Dealey Jr.

"There was a failure in the engine, causing the parts to scatter," Holland said, although he did not know whether the engine had caught on fire. "When the pilot saw he had the problem, he circled the field and returned."

The plane took off at 7:19 p.m.

and returned at 7:37 p.m. The plane taxied to an airport terminal under its own power, said Dealey.

Shortly after the aircraft took off, three grass fires were reported in Irving, about three miles southeast of the airport.

The Irving Fire Department responded at 7:29 p.m. to the first report of a grass fire and sent at least four units to the scene, Thompson said.

The fires were under control in about an hour, Thompson said.

John Nash, 80, of Denver, a passenger on the plane, said he first knew something was wrong when he heard a loud noise about five minutes into the flight.

"It was a pretty doggone loud noise — like somebody fired a cannon or something," Nash told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "Before that there were several other noises."

Passengers boarded another plane that left for Denver at 9:58 p.m., Holland said.

Tourism rebounds from Hugo.

By BRUCE SMITH
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Nearly six weeks after Hurricane Hugo hit, horse carriages are clapping through city streets, golfers are back on the links, and tourism officials have begun a campaign to lure tourists back.

"We want to create an awareness that we weren't wiped off the face of the Earth," says Helen Stansell of the Charleston Trident Chamber of Commerce.

Hugo, which cut a swath of destruction along more than half of the state's 187-mile coastline on Sept. 21, resulted in an estimated $200 million loss to the state's $4.7 billion a year tourism industry. The industry provides 98,000 jobs and $280 million annually in state tax revenues.

"What we had hoped for was an 8 percent growth on $4.7 billion spending in 1988," said Bob Liming, tourism director for the state Department of Parks, Recreation and Tourism.

"What we're looking at now is a growth of 3 to 4 percent," he said. "We did have a very good summer and the first part of the fall was good from Labor Day until the storm hit."

State and local tourism groups are telling U.S. and Canadian travel agents that travel spots are open. Myrtle Beach officials are raising $500,000 for a national advertising campaign.

In the Myrtle Beach area, 62 of the area's 63 golf courses are open. Hilton Head Island and other tourist points south of Charleston sustained little, if any damage.

In Charleston, about 95 percent of the 10,000 tourist rooms are open, and most of the area's more than 500 restaurants have reopened, Ms. Stansell said.

The annual candlelight tour of historic homes is scheduled for next month, and Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor, where the first shots of the Civil War were fired, reopened to visitors last week.

"The Number 1 reason people come to Charleston is because of the historic appeal. We were fortunate we didn't lose any of that," she said.

Nearby Ashley River plantation museums have reopened.

Post-storm reports that Middleton Place plantation was destroyed were exaggerated, apparently when reporters flying over it thought the ruins left by Sherman's troops in the Civil War were from Hugo.

At the Patriots Point maritime museum in Mount Pleasant, across the Cooper River from Charleston, the storm knocked the 27,100-ton aircraft carrier Yorktown into a pier. Still, the museum reopened about 1 1/2 weeks later.

Some attractions will take longer to recover.

Boone Hall Plantation in Mount Pleasant isn't expected to reopen until around Thanksgiving, and Charleston Landing State Park will remain closed until at least January, said Stansell.

The worst damage was on the state's beachfront, where Hugo washed away homes and condominiums. But most major hotels survived and the beach season is over for the year.

Wild Dunes resort on the Isle of Palms again plans to play host to the U.S. Clay Courts tennis championship in the spring, officials said.

And Hilton Head Island escaped unscathed, although cancellations in the wake of Hugo resulted in an estimated $2.5 million loss.

The state has embarked on a plan to restore beaches on the Myrtle Beach area with Gov. Carroll Campbell promising that tourists next year will find those beaches in better shape than before the storm.

Computer glitches stir air controllers' concern

DALLAS (AP) — A series of computer glitches at the nation's second busiest airport has stirred concern among some controllers' representatives, who say the aging equipment needs to be replaced.

The representatives also say the equipment may reduce the margin of safety within the 4,900-square-mile air space controlled from the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport tower.

"You're looking at machinery being pushed to the red line at just about any peak you got," Edward Mullin, a representative of the National Air Traffic Controllers Association's southwest region and a Love Field controller.

For a short time on Oct. 14, vital numbers and letters disappeared from radar scopes at the DFW tower. A computer had been shut down for a restarting to eliminate garbled data, officials said. But that left controllers unable to read planes' altitudes, air speeds and other data.

One controller, in the confusion, misidentified a blip on the screen as it approached the airport from the southeast at 11,000 feet. He called out what he thought was the flight number for the first plane in line, but the number belonged to the third plane.

An American Airlines jet that was the third plane swerved to the right and descended to 5,000 feet as instructed, but it entered space reserved for departing flights, officials said.

Shocked controllers caught the error seconds later. Luckily, there were no planes in the jet's path, though it was unusual for that time of day, officials said.

"The air traffic gods were with us this time," said Milton Scherotter, president of the NATCA local branch. "What about next time? Are they still going to be there?"

Federal Aviation Administration officials acknowledged a rash of computer glitches and overloads in recent years, but said safety at DFW and elsewhere has not been compromised.

But the FAA responded to the computer glitch by agreeing to improve the tower's computer and make DFW a high priority.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Colleges should regain freedom

Yet another report indicts the U.S. education system. Citing a Gallup organization survey, the National Endowment for the Humanities recently issued a report finding that college seniors display an astounding ignorance of the "basic landmarks of history and thought." If the survey had been a college test, more than half the students would have flunked.

A stunning 25 percent said that Columbus first sailed the ocean blue to America after 1500. And 60 percent of students said the Korean War was begun under either Presidents Franklin Roosevelt, John Kennedy or Dwight Eisenhower. The shocking thing is that these are not students in America's much-derided public high schools, but those who have already spent at least three years in college.

Who's to blame? Some of the usual culprits, such as the breakdown of the family, cannot be blamed much. After all, these are not high school or even college dropouts, but our top young people. These are the students who performed well in high school, then succeeded in college.

Prime blame must go to two areas. First, as NEH Chairman Lynne V. Cheney pointed out, is the general demise of the old "core curriculum," which, up until the upheaval of the 1960s, most schools insisted students learn. Any society depends on a civil discussion based on shared knowledge. In our society, that includes knowing the culture of the West, as well as American history and literature.

Students would also be wise to learn something of other cultures: Africa, China, Japan, India and so on. Many of our campuses are now populated with students from those lands. Socrates's precept—Know thyself—should apply to all these new Americans.

Second, the government educational regimes, especially the Department of Education, have imposed strangling bureaucratic controls on our schools. U.S. colleges and universities used to be fiercely independent. As late as the 1940s, top university presidents disdained federal money. But in the 1950s, especially after the Sputnik scare late in the decade, the feds began pouring so much money on schools that the presidents stopped resisting. The result is a system in which only three or four schools in the United States refuse any federal money at all.

The top schools—Harvard, Yale, Berkeley—still attract top students, and probably always will. Their reputations and the quality of their scholars surmount the government intrusions. But the mediocre and bottom schools are content to take the federal lucre and obey the federal edicts—while turning out a shockingly inferior product. The students? They don't matter.

The solution is, first, to turn off the federal money spigot and restore academic freedom; and, second, for schools to return to teaching a core curriculum. This would return the tax money spent to students and their parents, who could then spend the money directly to buy a good education, and return the control of schools to the campuses. Schools will be more likely to adopt a wise curriculum when students and professors are cut loose from the government to commune freely in the groves of academe.

"I've forgotten! What do we do around here besides MEETINGS?"

The judge's glory has faded

One by one the senators responded to their names: Adams, not guilty. Armstrong, not guilty. Baucus, guilty. Bentsen, guilty. For the better part of an hour on Friday, Oct. 20, as clerk slowly tallied the votes, it was unclear whether U.S. District Judge Alcee Hastings would be convicted. In the end his accusers triumphed.

It was a fair verdict. The evidence against Hastings was both circumstantial and overwhelming. On the key articles of impeachment, 69 senators voted to convict—five more than the two-thirds required under the Constitution. Speaking as one observer who has followed the case closely, I am satisfied that justice was done.

But in this peculiar and unprecedented case, justice was done at a price. One of the oldest principles of American jurisprudence, enshrined in the Fifth Amendment, is that no person shall twice be put in jeopardy for the same offense. There should be no blinking at the facts.

In February 1983, a Florida jury acquitted Hastings on the identical charges on which the Senate convicted him in October 1989. The proceeding may not have constituted double jeopardy as a matter of law, but it surely constituted double jeopardy as a matter of fact. The triumph was a triumph of expedience over principle.

Accepting the Senate's verdict as just, one is bound to remark the sad story of flawed humanity that unfolded in the Hastings affair. We saw something along the same line 20 years ago in the resignation of Supreme Court Justice Abe Fortas. There have been others. The Greeks had a word for such a failing: hubris, "exaggerated pride or self-confidence often resulting in retribution."

James J. Kilpatrick

President Carter nominated Hastings for the federal bench in 1979. Hastings was then 43, a flamboyant, extroverted, voluble Democrat whose political credentials were impressive. Only a handful of black judges were sitting in federal courts at that time (of the 845 District Court nominations over the past quarter-century, 48 have been blacks), and for Hastings his confirmation provided a remarkable opportunity to become a role model.

Again, accepting the Senate's verdict, it has to be said that he squandered the opportunity. In his first week on the bench, Hastings had been designated to preside over the trial of Tom and Frank Romano on racketeering charges related to the Teamsters' pension fund. In the summer of 1981, a lifelong friend, attorney William A. Borders Jr., approached Hastings with an idea: In exchange for a bribe of $150,000, Hastings would impose lenient sentences and would return certain cash that had been seized.

The FBI got wind of the scheme and set up Borders by having an agent pose as one of the Romano brothers. In 1982 Borders was tried and found guilty; he was sentenced to five years in prison.

Hastings was tried separately a year later, and he was acquitted.

This month's trial in the Senate tracked the same evidence presented at Hastings' trial in 1983. Once again we heard of guarded calls from pay telephones. We were reminded of the judge's panicky conduct at the time of Borders' arrest. There was the curious matter of a dinner at the Fontainebeau Hotel in Miami Beach. Borders had arranged to have Hastings appear at a certain time in the hotel dining room as a signal that the deal was on. Sure enough, Hastings showed up.

Other evidence was as suggestive. On Oct. 5, 1981, just before everything fell apart, the FBI taped a telephone conversation between Hastings and Borders. On the face of it, Hastings appeared to be saying that he had drafted letters in behalf of a young lawyer who was in trouble with the bar; read another way, he was informing Borders that he had drafted the desired orders in the Romano case. The trial jury in Florida believed Hastings was telling the truth. The Senate believed he lied.

Some of Hastings' supporters are complaining bitterly that he has been made the victim of racism. Don't believe it. The judge's principal accuser in the House was Rep. John Conyers Jr. of Michigan, a black who has spent his adult life in the civil rights movement. His careful study of the evidence led him to "the indisputable conclusion that he has betrayed his office." The conclusion of guilt "tears at my soul," said Conyers, but it had to be reached.

Hastings is only the sixth judge in American history to be removed by impeachment. This is not what he dreamed of in his heady hour of glory 10 years ago.

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Monday, Oct. 30, the 303rd day of 1989. There are 62 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
On October 30th, 1938, Orson Welles' radio play War of the Worlds aired on CBS. The drama about a Martian invasion of the Earth, which employed fake news reports, panicked some listeners who thought that the events being portrayed were real.

On this date:
In 1735, the second president of the United States, John Adams, was born in Braintree, Mass.

In 1945, the U.S. government announced the end of shoe rationing.

In 1953, General George C. Marshall won the Nobel Peace Prize.

In 1961, the Soviet Union tested a hydrogen bomb with a force estimated at 58 megatons.

In 1961, the Soviet Party Congress unanimously approved a resolution ordering the removal of Josef Stalin's body from Lenin's tomb in Red Square.

Junk bonds bad investments

You are hearing and reading much these days about "junk bonds."

Great corporations are being bought out, taken over, with an exchange of "junk bonds."

That's almost like being able to print your own money! Almost.

Except that when promoters of these high-yield, high-risk bonds fail to pay their bills—the junk turns to junk.

Nonetheless, it's a $200 billion market and enormous corporations are being bought out or otherwise taken over with "borrowed money."

This year alone, 20 companies have failed to meet their loan obligations.

Let's try to reduce this subject to shirt-sleeve English.

Suppose I wanted to buy an Atlantic City casino—which I do not. But, suppose I did.

I don't have $925 million, so I'd have to try to get you to invest in my idea.

You are offered so many tempting investments, however, that you would consider mine only if I offered you an abnormally high return on your money.

So I would issue bonds for which you would pay and, if I'm lucky, we all get rich.

However, suppose nine months after I buy this casino I am losing money—unable to pay my bills. Then your bonds become worth less—and less—and maybe, eventually, worthless.

This is similar to what happened to entertainer Merv Griffin when he bought an Atlantic City casino and was unable to make payments on the money he'd borrowed.

He may yet bail himself out, but the high risk involved from the beginning is what labels these investments "junk."

A lot of people, offering junk bonds for borrowed money, have been paying too much for companies: Intergrated Resources, Seaman Furniture, Southmark, Simplicity Pattern. One Cameau bond dropped 50 percent in value in one week.

Yet, every day we hear of other corporate giants maneuvered into a buyout with high-yield, high-risk junk bonds.

Even "quality bonds" of big, strong companies like RJR Nabisco and Kroger recently fell dramatically as big-money managers scrambled to get out.

For some lesser companies, there is no market for the junk bonds you bought; you couldn't sell them at any price.

Disillusion of investors with this junk-bond market has spread to the stock market. Takeover speculation will trigger a rally.

Then, when a takeover fizzles, the stock price may tumble and hurt a lot of people.

Despite a default rate of 30 percent, junk bonds continue to lure investors by paying high dividends, and enough of those investors are profiting to keep others coming in.

Maybe some junk-bond prices have now been driven so low they are truly a good investment, but none that I would recommend.

Washington paying for state elections

By ROBERT WALTERS

Why would Republican and Democratic political organizations in states more than 1,000 miles away contribute $5,000 apiece to candidates in a routine contest to fill a vacant U.S. House seat from Wyoming?

Why would scores of House members—both Republicans and Democrats—representing districts throughout the country, pour thousands of dollars of their own campaign funds into that contest?

Why would those state organizations, politicians and the national committees of the two major parties pump vast amounts of money into equally ordinary elections held this year to fill vacant House seats in seven other states?

The answer to all of those questions: Contests for House seats, which not long ago received only modest attention and nominal donations from powerful Washington politicians, are being federalized.

The candidates, once chosen by local party leaders, now are often recruited, if not selected, by officials of national party organizations. Moreover, much of the money indispensable to successful campaigns now comes from individuals and organizations linked to Washington.

Nowhere is that phenomenon more apparent than in the special elections for House seats left unoccupied because of the resignation (usually to accept another public office) or death of a representative.

In an era when better than 95 percent of all House members seeking another term are re-elected, special elections offer a rare opportunity for a post to switch party control because they are always contests for open seats—ones without an incumbent.

Unlike regular elections for House seats, all 435 of which are conducted in November of every even-numbered year, special elections are held throughout the year and thus do not have to compete for attention (or money) with other races.

For those and other reasons, out-of-state money whose flow was orchestrated from Washington became an important factor in all of the special elections for House held thus far this year—in Indiana, Alabama, Florida, California, Mississippi, Texas (in two districts) and Wyoming.

When Republican Rep. Richard B. Cheney gave up the Wyoming seat to become President Bush's secretary of defense, Republican Craig Thomas and Democrat John Vinich engaged in a spirited contest to fill the vacancy. The campaign cost almost $1.3 million, divided about equally between the two candidates.

The Wyoming Republican and Democratic parties contributed $5,000 apiece to their respective candidates—but that traditional support was matched by extraordinary $5,000 donations from both parties' state organizations in California, Colorado, Ohio and Michigan.

In addition, 11 other state Democratic parties and five other state Republican organizations—most of them based hundreds of miles away—contributed $5,000 apiece to the Wyoming candidates.

Edward Zuckerman, a Washington expert on campaign finance and publisher of a newsletter on the subject, concluded that the funds probably originated in Washington, then were transmitted to the state committees earmarked for transfer to Wyoming in "a complicated money recycling operation." All of this is perfectly legal.

Many of the contributions to Vinich and Thomas (who won the race) from the campaign accounts of 115 House members of both parties, almost all of whom gave $5,000 or $1,000, also appear to have been coordinated by the national party organizations.

Finally, both candidates received generous support directly from their parties' national organizations—including the Republican and Democratic committees that were established to raise funds for contenders for U.S. Senate seats.

More than one-third all the money spent in the Wyoming race came directly or indirectly from Washington—and that pattern is likely to be repeated elsewhere in future campaigns.

South Africans rally in support of leaders of outlawed ANC

By LAURINDA KEYS
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police said today they were investigating for possible prosecution participants in a rally by 70,000 people in which the outlawed African National Congress' guerrilla campaign was repeatedly praised.

"All that was said and all that took place is being studied," said police spokesman Col. Vic Haynes the morning after the welcome rally for seven recently freed ANC leaders in a soccer stadium outside Johannesburg.

Nearly everything about the gathering violated security laws, but police kept their distance and state television led the evening news with a report on what was the largest anti-government rally in South Africa's 79-year history.

Newspapers, including pro-government media, today called on the government to do away with laws restricting political activity. And the government hinted it may be considering lifting some restrictions on political expression to allow peaceful protests.

"We must be prepared to run risks," Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok said on government-run television Sunday night, adding that maintaining the status quo is riskier than allowing mass protests.

The government granted permission for Sunday's rally as part of an attempt by new President F.W. de Klerk to promote black-white negotiations.

But a magistrate had warned organizers that speakers should avoid promoting ANC aims.

"We refused," said Cyril Ramaphosa, a union leader and one of the main rally organizers. "The ANC lives. It is amongst us."

"Today, the ANC has captured center stage in South Africa," declared Walter Sisulu, 77, the group's former general secretary, in the main address Sunday to the cheering, singing, dancing through which filled most of the seats in the recently opened stadium.

Police and soldiers set up roadblocks nearby and searched vehicles, but few security force personnel were visible at the stadium itself.

From a podium erected beneath huge banners of the ANC and the South African Communist Party, Sisulu appeared with six ANC colleagues freed unconditionally from prison Oct. 15. All but one had spent at least 25 years in prison.

Deafening cheers arose when Sisulu and his colleagues slowly circled the playing field, each walking under an umbrella, behind an honor guard of 20 young militants, clad in khaki uniforms and marching in military style.

"ANC, ANC," shouted the crowd, many dressed in the movement's green, black and gold colors, or wearing T-shirts with the slogan, "ANC Lives" and the names of the freed prisoners.

The crowd included white South Africans and diplomats from at least 15 countries.

Sisulu said his movement would never abandon its guerrilla campaign unilaterally. But, repeating previous offers, he said it would consider suspending violence and entering talks if the government frees all political prisoners, legalizes the ANC and lifts the 40-month-old state of emergency.

"To date, we see no clear indication that the government is serious about negotiation," said Sisulu, who urged intensified economic sanctions. "All the utterances are vague."

The crowd roared when prominent activist Murphy Morobe read a letter of greeting from Oliver Tambo, the exiled president of the ANC, who may not legally be quoted in South Africa.

"This is a joyful day for all of us," said the message. "We meet to celebrate a victory that belongs to all the people of our country."

Fire claims second victim

ALVARADO (AP) — A second man has died from the fire that destroyed Alvarado's City Hall and jail last week.

Willie Rodriguez, 18, of Austin, died Saturday night in a Dallas hospital of injuries he received in Tuesday's fire, said officials at the Dallas County medical examiner's office.

Jose Ortiz, 24, and Rodriguez were trapped inside the jail for a short time after a fire broke out about 11:30 p.m. Rescuers knocked a hole in a cement wall and pulled the inmates from the building.

Ortiz died several hours later at John Peter Smith Hospital in Fort Worth.

Poll: Most back renewing relations with Iran

By GARY LANGER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A decade after the Iran hostage crisis gripped the nation, most Americans favor normalizing relations with Tehran if it would win the release of U.S. hostages in Lebanon, a national poll has found.

Even while respondents supported such a deal, eight in 10 in the Media General-Associated Press poll believed Iran supports world terrorism, and roughly half regarded it as an enemy of the United States.

Nearly three-quarters believed Iran controls the groups holding American hostages in Lebanon, and 61 percent said Washington should offer to resume normal relations if Tehran used its influence to get the Americans freed.

Support was somewhat lower for releasing Iranian assets now locked in U.S. banks if Iran got the hostages out, with 50 percent in favor. Iran offered last week to help free the hostages if the money were released.

Eighteen Westerners, including eight Americans, are held in Lebanon, most of them by groups believed to be loyal to Iran.

It is unclear to what extent Iran controls the captors.

Poll respondents divided evenly on the idea of direct negotiations with the hostage takers, but most favored indirect negotiations.

A majority also favored military action, but that shrank to a minority if the hostages might be killed in the effort.

Iran and the United States have been estranged since Nov. 4, 1979, when Iranian students, apparently with official support, seized the U.S. embassy in Tehran and took 52 Americans hostage there.

They were held for a paralyzing 444 days, bedeviling the last year of the Carter administration and contributing to its defeat in the 1980 election. A rescue attempt failed, killing eight servicemen, and the prisoners were freed only on the day of Ronald Reagan's inauguration, Jan. 20, 1981.

Washington still labors with another hostage crisis, the Americans captive in Lebanon. Longest held is Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was kidnapped in March 1985.

Some advocates for the hostages say the United States should negotiate directly for their release, while Washington's official position is that negotiating would encourage more hostage-taking.

In the survey, 47 percent favored direct negotiations and 45 percent were opposed, with 8 percent unsure — a roughly even split given the poll's 3-point margin of error.

A majority, 55 percent, favored indirect negotiations through a third party such as the Red Cross. But ransom was widely ruled out: Eighty-five percent opposed paying the hostage takers to free their captives.

At first blush, military action was supported, with 62 percent favoring the use of U.S. forces to try to free the hostages.

But that fell to 43 percent support if the hostages might be killed in the attempt, an outcome that strategists have been unable to rule out.

Military action was considerably more popular with men and with political conservatives, while liberals and women were more apt to favor some form of negotiation.

Fifty-four percent of the women favored direct talks with the hostage takers, for example, while only 40 percent of the men agreed.

Respondents chafed at the long-running crisis, with 54 percent saying the United States has not done enough to try to free the hostages.

Yet there was division of sentiment on whether they ever will be freed: Forty-two percent thought they would, 37 percent thought not, and 21 percent were unsure.

The poll was conducted by telephone Sept. 14-24 among a random sample of 1,071 adult Americans.

San Francisco returns to 'abnormal' from quake

By DAVID FOSTER
Associated Press Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — A World Series victory gave earthquake-battered Oakland something to celebrate, and thousands of hedonistic Halloween partiers helped San Francisco return "to abnormal."

"A little happiness will help us bounce back," baseball fan James Mead said after the Oakland Athletics beat the San Francisco Giants 9-6 Saturday night to sweep the Bay Bridge World Series.

The A's decided it wasn't appropriate to celebrate with champagne or a parade, but they did plan a victory rally today in Jack London Square.

The celebration was unabashed at this weekend's 10th annual Exotic Erotic Ball in San Francisco, where the popular attire was lace, leather, chains and whips or next to nothing.

"The scare's over with. People want to get back to a routine," said Dagny Lancy, 21, of Penn Grove, whose floral costume of a stem and two blossoms was painted on and contained the barest stitches of clothing.

Tickets were $25, and organizers donated 25 percent of the net proceeds to the disaster relief fund. As in the past, 15 percent went to AIDS foundations.

"We're getting back to abnormal," said Wendy McMurry, 28, of Belmont.

The 7.1-magnitude earthquake struck Oct. 17, causing $7.1 billion in damage in the San Francisco Bay area and south through Santa Cruz County.

There had been 80 aftershocks of magnitude 3.0 or greater, the U.S. Geological Survey reported Sunday.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency said 27,668 people had registered at disaster centers for housing assistance, grants or loans.

People left homeless in Santa Cruz County demonstrated for housing.

The death toll stood at 64, including 39 motorists killed in the collapse of Interstate 880 in Oakland.

Pentagon report says gays OK for military

By JOHN DIAMOND
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A draft report by a Defense Department study group says homosexuals trying to join the military have stronger qualifications and fewer problems in their backgrounds than their heterosexual counterparts.

"These results appear to be in conflict with conceptions of homosexuals as unstable, maladjusted persons," the report by the Defense Personnel Security Research and Education Center concludes. The center analyzes what kind of people can be trusted with classified information.

The report, conducted early this year, was leaked to members of Congress who want the Pentagon to reverse its policy against allowing gays and lesbians into the military.

U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., an avowed homosexual, gave a copy to The Associated Press.

The report compares the background records of 166 gays and lesbians who entered the military and were subsequently discharged because of their sexual preference with those of heterosexuals who were in the military.

"The preponderance of the evidence presented indicates that homosexuals show preservice suitability-related adjustment that is as good or better than the average heterosexual," the report's author, Michael A. McDaniel, concludes.

The 23-page report looked at school conduct records, thinking skills, adjustment to military life and substance abuse. Homosexuals performed better in all except the drug and alcohol abuse categories.

The report cautioned that relatively few homosexuals were surveyed in the report compared with some 42,000 heterosexuals. "Less confidence should be placed in conclusions drawn from small samples," McDaniel said.

One argument against homosexuals in the military is that they pose security risks because someone could use the threat of exposure to blackmail them into spying. Studds said that removing discrimination would remove the problem.

The report is the second in as many weeks released to media organizations that raises questions about the Pentagon policy toward homosexuals. A longer 1988 study by the same center concluded that the Pentagon should let homosexuals enter military service.

The new report makes no policy recommendation but instead suggests further study.

Defense Department spokesman Jim Turner said the earlier report was rejected because "it was not responsive to the original research request: whether there is any connection between personnel security and sexual orientation."

Turner said a completed report from the center on that subject is expected by the end of the year. He said the second report also had not been released because it was in draft form and had not gone through a complete review.

The Pentagon currently stands by its policy against homosexuals in military service. "Homosexuality is not compatible with military life," Turner said.

Several court decisions have upheld the military's policy, although a federal appeals court in San Francisco determined in May that career officer Perry Watkins could re-enlist because the Army had known of his homosexuality when he re-enlisted in the past.

"The Defense Department policy which discriminates against gays and lesbians employs precisely the same arguments used against blacks and women before they were integrated into the armed services, namely, that their inclusion is 'contrary to good order and discipline,'" Studds said.

But Studds says there is no political climate in Congress to pressure the Pentagon to change.

Studds accused the military of withholding the reports from Congress and the public simply because they ran contrary to current Pentagon policy.

TREATMENT FOR STIFF NECK

If you're suffering from a stiff neck, don't wait for it to take care of itself when treatment is available to correct it.

Of all the bones in the spinal column, none are more easily injured or more vulnerable than the seven vertebrae in the neck. None are moved more often. We are constantly turning our heads to look at people and things.

Neck stiffness can have many causes, from sudden and violent accidents to such simple activities as painting a ceiling or just sitting reading a book for a long time. But there's nothing simple about the pain.

A careful examination will reveal the source of the pain and how best to treat it. Any misaligned vertebrae in the spinal column should be properly adjusted so there will be no abnormal pressure on your nervous system. Treatment may also include exercises for the cervical muscles such as gently rotating your head in all directions. This can help restore muscle strength and tone.

Public Notice

On October 18, 1989, Southwestern Bell Telephone Company (SWB) intends to file an application with the Public Utility Commission (PUC) of Texas to add a new service offering for business customers, called Consolidated Billing (CSB). The proposed effective date for this offering is December 4, 1989.

Consolidated Billing allows the business customer to combine an unlimited number of accounts within a single Revenue Accounting Office (RAO). Southwestern Bell Telephone Company's RAOs in Texas are located in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio. This service will establish a common billing date for each of those accounts so that they may receive one bill each month. Each customer account is tied together for billing purposes, but retains its own identity and level of detail.

PROPOSED RATES

There is no monthly rate associated with Consolidated Billing. However, a nonrecurring charge of $15.00 will be applied to establish a Consolidated Billing arrangement. An additional $15.00 nonrecurring charge will apply for each account which is incorporated into the Consolidated Billing arrangement.

Consolidated Billing (CSB) has been forecasted to generate an increase in first year annual revenues of approximately $581,733.

Persons who wish to comment on this application should notify the Commission by November 24, 1989. Requests for further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757, or you may call the Public Utility Commission Public Information Office at (512) 458-0223 or (512) 458-0227, or (512) 458-0221 teletypewriter for the deaf.

Martin and Malcolm's daughters find middle ground as they tour with their theatre group

By SONYA ROSS
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — History placed Malcolm X and Martin Luther King Jr. on opposite ends of a philosophical spectrum but their daughters have found a middle ground.

Yolanda King and Attallah Shabazz are co-founders of a theater company, Nucleus, which tours the country with its production, Stepping Into Tomorrow, a play with a stay-in-school message for young people.

They live on opposite ends of the country — Ms. King in Atlanta and Ms. Shabazz in Los Angeles. This weekend's performances at the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change gave them several days to get together as friends — for the first time in five years.

"Maybe we'll try to see a movie — next week," Ms. King joked.

Not everybody's father was one of the most important black leaders of all time, one who led thousands with his own brand of moral thought before being felled by an assassin's bullet.

But that's the reality for both Ms. King and Ms. Shabazz.

"There's a bond between us because of the way in which our fathers achieved their success," Ms. King said. "Their notoriety came through the people, the people being the least of these, the left out and oppressed and exploited. So it's a different kind of celebrity status."

The two men had vastly different views on ways to achieve equality for blacks. King believed in black liberation through passive resistance, and Malcolm X advocated violent confrontation before he converted to traditional Islam and became El-Hajj Malik El-Shabazz.

But their daughters point out that their fathers did have one meeting — albeit brief — in Washington in 1964. And Malcolm X went to Selma, Ala., when King was jailed there, but prison officials wouldn't let him visit, Ms. King said.

"The reality is that there was a real effort made to kind of keep them separate," she said.

"I feel that there was a sense of brotherhood," Ms. Shabazz said. "I feel that there was an uncle in King for me."

The daughters met in New York in 1979, while both were trying to eke out careers in the performing arts. They were introduced by a writer friend who pointed out how much they had in common and thought their getting together would make a heck of a story.

"After the guy invited us to do the interview, I said, 'Oh fine, sure. It is kind of coincidental that these commonalities exist,'" Ms. King said. "There was something there from the very beginning."

But both were a little apprehensive.

"I was nervous. Just nervous, because this was Martin Luther King's daughter, somebody famous, who is the child of someone you admire," Ms. Shabazz said.

"And also a little concerned about what her impression of me and my family might be, based on the perpetuation of how the public always portrayed our parents — Malcolm and Martin, at ends, at odds, competing."

That interview led to offers to speak to young people, then the creation of Nucleus. It also left them on the road, together, with a lot of time to talk.

"It got rid of the formality," Ms. Shabazz said. "We got to hear about Daddy, not Malcolm or Martin. We got to hear about the one ... who rode you on the back of the bicycle. It was moving for us, something that kept bringing us together."

"The fact that our fathers were assassinated ... puts us in a different place in terms of the way people reach out," Ms. King said. "I think very few people could share that with me."

Swaggart gains support in tax suit

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jimmy Swaggart's dalliances with a prostitute got him tossed out of the Assemblies of God in 1988.

But several church organizations have closed ranks behind the fallen television evangelist in front of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Swaggart's lawyers hope to persuade the nation's highest court Tuesday to overturn rulings that forced the Louisiana-based Jimmy Swaggart Ministries to pay California $183,000 in back taxes and interest for the years 1974 through 1981.

They will argue that the California tax on Bibles, religious literature, recordings and other items sold by the Ministries violates religious freedom.

No other state has such a tax, Swaggart's attorneys say.

The National Council of Churches, the Evangelical Council of Financial Accountability, Prison Fellowship, the National Tax Payers Union, the Association for Public Justice and other groups have filed briefs on Swaggart's behalf, said William Treeby, Swaggart's New Orleans lawyer.

"Churches beyond the Jimmy Swaggart Ministries realize this issue carries broad implications that would chill, if not totally end the dissemination of religious messages, especially across state lines," said Treeby.

California, however, claims that sales of tangible property are not protected by the Constitution whether they are made by a shop or a church.

"If a Bible is sold in a bookstore, it's taxed. That's the same as if a church sells it. Donations are tax-exempt. They can make all the donations they want, but when they start buying and selling it's another matter," said Gary Jugum, assistant chief counsel to the California Board of Equalization.

When Swaggart Ministries sells the Bible, Treeby says, it's different.

"A book store is in the business for profit; Jimmy Swaggart Ministries is a non-profit organization," he said.

In earlier appeals, which were rejected by the California Supreme Court, Swaggart admitted that some items the ministry sold were subject to the tax, Jugum said.

Those items included mugs, bowls, plates, pen and pencil sets, bud vases, Communion cups, candlesticks, replicas of Roman coins, T-shirts bearing the ministry's logo and plastic replicas of the crown of thorns and Ark of the Covenant.

Cellaret is a little wine cellar

By RALPH AND TERRY KOVEL

A cellaret is a wine cooler, but a wine cooler is not necessarily a cellaret. Each holds a bottle of wine in ice or cold water in order to cool the beverage, but a cellaret must have a locking lid, making it a "little cellar."

The cellaret was popular in England from about 1760 to 1830. Designers favored oval or round barrel-like forms on high legs. Octagonal cellarrets were popular from 1775 to 1800.

Wine coolers were frequently used in the homes of the rich and were usually made of mahogany with brass trim. Most coolers had fitted interiors that held the bottles, a waterproof metal lining, and casters or wheels so the entire piece of furniture could be moved near the dining table.

The manner of serving wine has changed. The cellaret lost favor in the mid 19th century, and few have been made since then. It has been replaced by the champagne or wine bucket.

Roll this mahogany cellaret to your table. It was made in England about 1790 of mahogany and brass and is 23 inches high.

Q. I have a metal and cloisonne "pipe." It looks like a cylindrical container with a long handle and several compartments. One might have held tobacco, one has a stiff brush and the other has a set of tweezers. How was it used? When?

A. You own a typical Chinese water pipe. The form was introduced about 1830 and was made until about 1930. Tourist-quality souvenir pipes are still being made in Taiwan.

The pipes were usually made of pakong, a silver-colored metal that was popular in China. Each pipe unit had a pipe with a long, curved stem. The tobacco container had a lid. A vase held tweezers that were used to place the tobacco into the pipe. There was also a vase that held a horsehair brush to remove the ashes. A silk cord was attached to the pipe and the tweezers. There was often a jade, ivory or metal good-luck charm added to the cord.

The most elaborate examples had a dust cap for the top of the pipe. The detachable mouthpiece was made of pearl, amber or jade. The cylinder holding the parts was decorated with cloisonne or cut metal designs.

There are many names, slogans and marks engraved or stamped on the pipes. It was used to smoke tobacco and sometimes opium. One part of the pipe was filled with water and the other part filled with tobacco and lit. Only a few puffs were possible, then more tobacco was added and lit. Opium was sometimes mixed with tobacco.

Q. My mother gave me a small round wooden box that looks as if it is covered with plaid material. It is actually meticulously painted. There are a few small holes in the sides. Do you know where this might have been made?

A. You probably have a wooden souvenir made in Scotland from the 1800s to the early 1900s. The plaid pieces were made by W.&A. Smith in Mauchline, Scotland. The first pieces were hand-decorated. By 1855, the Smiths used a machine that could apply the lines of color to paper. The paper was then carefully glued to the wooden object.

Many different clan plaids were used. The souvenirs were known as tartan ware and were made until about 1904. There were many needlework souvenirs, and a round box that held thread was popular. The thread was then drawn through a small hole to be used.

Q. My latest Lalique piece has a strange mark. It says "Lalique France" but between the two words is the letter "R" in a circle. I know the pieces made before 1945 were marked "R. Lalique" and those after 1945 with the name "Lalique," but the circle around the "R" is unusual.

A. In 1980 the Lalique glass firm began using the registry mark of an "R" in a circle in the mark. Your piece is less than 10 years old.

TIP: Pen marks can be removed from leather with a clear gum eraser, not a pink one.

If kids know their ABC's, writing's as easy as 1-2-3

By LARRY BLASKO
Associated Press Writer

Your pre-schooler won't be a total Yuppie until he has his own word-processing software, but not to worry — Sesame Street First Writer will help.

This $14.95 program for both IBM and Apple II-series computers was designed by Children's Television Workshop and is produced by Hi Tech Expressions.

The money gets you a very simple word-processing program aimed at 4 to 6-year-olds. Children may copy words from a stock dictionary (parents may edit or add words) or write letters and stories of their own. The screen shows the letters about half an inch high, in caps and lowercase, and the youngster has a choice of four type styles.

When your little one tries to do something she shouldn't, a Sesame Street character will beep at her and shake his head. When she uses the cursor keys to create a new page, the screen shows a page turning.

The software's manual gives parents some installation help and a couple of activity suggestions, plus a couple of keyboard templates to identify the function keys. F1, for example, is identified by pictures of Big Bird, Cookie Monster, Oscar the Grouch and Elmo, characters used to identify the current type style.

The program works with a number of popular printers. It requires 256,000 characters of memory and color monitor and graphics capability for IBM machines, 128,000 characters for Apple II (e,c or GS) machines.

It's a very nicely turned piece of software at a very reasonable price, and once you get over the hurdle of kids exchanging a crayon and a sheet of paper for $1,000 worth of hardware and a program, it's probably something to consider.

When pre-schoolers want a break from writing on the screen, they might want to bring out their Fisher-Price — computer games, not toys.

Aimed at children between the ages of 3 and 8, the games cost $14.95 each and are the result of a collaboration between Fisher-Price and GameTek. They run on any IBM PC or compatible, Apple or Commodore computer. Two sent around for review were "My Grand Piano" and "Firehouse Rescue."

"My Grand Piano" will play 30 songs, over and over, until every adult within earshot begs for mercy. It shows notes on the staff and piano keys and allows children to compose their own tunes.

"Firehouse Rescue" is a maze game in which the child must navigate at various levels of difficulty to rescue Little People.

The software is advertised as "no previous computer experience necessary," which means you have to be able to turn the computer on, insert a disk and type the name of the program. Nine-year-old Elaine rooted both programs out of the pile of software awaiting review, got them up and running without help (or permission) and pronounced them "great." Beyond the kid-interest, the games are an alternative to the prevailing smash-slash-boom-doom tone of most recreation software. For more information, contact GameTek at 305-935-3995.

Readers straighten Abby's directions

DEAR ABBY: I take strong issue with your response to "Wrong-Way Housewife." Daily experience convinces me that a sense of direction is either inborn or not, on an individual basis. I have always had it — my husband has not. And lest you assume he is "slow-witted," he has an IQ exceeding 150 and was a high-ranking military officer in a position requiring exemplary map-reading skills. He also has an MBA. By his own admission, he has absolutely no sense of direction. He has striven all his life to overcome this failing, to no avail. This is a man who has the willpower of a bull and intelligence approaching genius level, so please don't tell him to "try harder."

THE FAMILY NAVIGATOR
IN SCOTSDALE

DEAR ABBY: Usually you're right on course, but your answer to "Wrong-Way Housewife" was 180 degrees off course.

A sense of direction is a right-brain function, and some of us are more left-brained than right-brained. Case in point: My husband and our oldest son are very good at directions — they always know where north is and can get anywhere with no problem. They both tend to be right-brained people. My younger son and I barely know left from right and find directions impossible to follow. We tend to be left-brained people.

Abby, please be a little more sympathetic to the ones who have this problem. It's no fun, believe me.

WRONG-WAY KENNEDY

DEAR ABBY: While I was driving, my wife awoke from a sound sleep to tell me that I had made a wrong turn!

I can get lost in a revolving door, but my wife has an unerring sense of direction. Those of us without it know that to keep from getting lost is not, as you said, "Simply a matter of paying attention." The fact of the matter is that many of us have to work twice as hard to get lost only half as often.

Dear Abby

THE REV. RAYMOND J. HOWE,
ST. PETER'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH, TUNKHANNOCK, PA.

DEAR ABBY: You should have checked with your experts before telling "Wrong-Way Housewife" that anyone can find his way if he just charts his course, then concentrates on staying on it. A neuropsychologist would have probably told you that there are people who confuse left and right due to an inborn learning disability or a minor brain injury.

It's not a matter of intelligence, either. When I go to a large shopping mall and park my car in one of those enormous parking lots, I practically have to leave a trail of bread crumbs in order to get back to my car. I am fairly bright; I'm a member of Mensa, Phi Beta Kappa and a champion contract bridge player.

GETS LOST A LOT
IN COLUMBUS, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: I can't believe you told "Wrong-Way Housewife" to "try harder."

Abby, her problem could be the result of a minor accident, or even something she was born with — in which case, no amount of "trying" can help her. It's like saying, "Abby, you could be a great opera singer, or a ballet dancer, or a gold medal Olympic winner, if you would just try harder."

Come on, Abigail, get real.
DISAPPOINTED IN YOU

DEAR DISAPPOINTED: All right, I'll take my lumps. I said, "No one is born with a sense of direction," which I still think is true. But I should have gone on to say that many people are born without one, due to a learning disability.

So, give me a break, and give me a charitable "D minus" on that one.

DEAR ABBY: My son-in-law is one of those sports jocks who think the measure of a man is determined by how much he knows about sports and how much pain he can take. (However, he is scared to death of needles at the doctor's.)

He makes fun of me when I gasp as he holds one or the other of my little grandsons upside down, swinging his head very close to the ground. He likes to "roughhouse" with the boys until they're in tears. When I tell him to stop, he says, "You just don't understand how it is with boys because you raised four daughters."

Meanwhile, my daughter (the boys' mother) says nothing. I think the boys laugh when he begins to roughhouse with them because they love the attention, which they rarely get — but they don't enjoy the pain. My daughter works in an office where they often discuss your letters, so I would appreciate your comments on whether or not I am being unduly concerned.

The roughhousing usually ends when one of the boys is finally hurt enough to cry — then their daddy's only comment is, "Aw, poor little baby."

SCREAMING INSIDE

DEAR SCREAMING: Enough of the "screaming inside" — scream outside, and loudly enough to be heard by your daughter and her misguided macho husband. Let him know that the kind of roughhousing he's into with his sons is not only cruel, it's dangerous, and he should cut it out because it's child abuse.

"How to Write Letters for All Occasions" provides sample letters of congratulations, thank-yous, condolences, resumes and business letters — even how to write a love letter! It also includes how to properly address clergymen, government officials, dignitaries, widows and others. ## A's building a dynasty?

By JIM DONAGHY
AP Baseball Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The World Series had been over for only a few minutes when the word dynasty started to be thrown around like a batting practice grounder.

The Oakland Athletics are a good team, perhaps a great team. But dynasty?

The New York Yankees from the mid-1920s to the early 1960s were a dynasty.

The Boston Celtics and Montreal Canadiens had dynasties.

Bill Shoemaker was a one-man dynasty.

The Oakland A's?

They are a team that has won one World Series and two American League pennants. Right now, that's not even close to a dynasty.

Sure, they looked invincible in wrecking the San Francisco Giants in four straight games. But consider the shape of the Giants' tattered pitching staff.

Scott Garrelts had a sore elbow, Rick Reuschel a sore shoulder and Don Robinson a sore knee. All combined to give Manager Roger Craig a sick headache.

In the four games, the Giants starters allowed 22 hits and 18 runs in 13 innings. Garrelts, Reuschel and Robinson averaged 3 1-3 innings per start.

There are rotations in the new senior league that look better.

The Giants were outscored 10-3 and never led in 36 innings.

In the 1980s, no team repeated as World Series champion. The last club to repeat was the New York Yankees in 1978 when George Steinbrenner's baseball committee still had control.

"There are a lot of elements in becoming a dynasty," said Oakland pitcher Dave Stewart, the Series MVP. "Returning year after year and winning year after year. If we continue to play the game properly as we have, and if Tony La Russa wants us to play the game, then I can see us winning the thing a few more times."

There are indeed a lot of "ifs" involved in this dynasty business.

It's also a lot harder to build a dynasty now.

Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio and Mickey Mantle couldn't file for free agency or demand trades.

The last baseball team to come close to a dynasty were the Oakland A's, who won consecutive World Series in 1972, 1973 and 1974. They probably could have won the World Series a few more years, but Reggie Jackson, Catfish Hunter, Joe Rudi and Rollie Fingers all wanted big bucks.

A's general manager Sandy Alderson faces similar problems this winter.

Rickey Henderson and Storm Davis are eligible to file for free agency.

"My first choice is to stay in Oakland," Henderson said. "But I have to see what's out there."

Rickey may get some nice offers, too.

With a little motivation, Henderson demonstrated in the playoffs and World Series why he may be the best leadoff hitter in the history of the game.

He was 9-for-19 in the Series and led off Game 4 with a home run to get the A's rolling. In nine postseason games, Henderson set a record with 11 steals.

Eagles rally past Broncos; Cowboys fall again

By DICK BRINSTER

AP Sports Writer

It isn't often that Buddy Ryan agrees with the men in stripes, those much-maligned zebras whose decisions frequently divide victory from defeat in the NFL. This time, however, he was a staunch defender.

"It was a good call, no question about it," Ryan said Sunday after his Philadelphia Eagles beat the Denver Broncos 28-24.

Perhaps the location of one's final number begets vision extraordinaire. Being to the left of the hyphen, Ryan saw it his way. On the right was Dan Reeves, who swears rookie Darren Carrington didn't do it.

NFL Roundup

"Darren says the punt did not hit him," Reeves said. "I don't think the referee saw it clearly."

What either coach thought mattered little, however, because referee Jim Tunney said an Eagles punt hit special-teamer Carrington midway through the fourth period. The ball was recovered by Philadelphia's William Frizzell.

"I had an excellent view and I saw the ball hit the Denver player," Ryan said. "I was just afraid the ref was going to miss it."

But Tunney saw it and so, too, did the replay official.

Their decision gave the Eagles, trailing 24-21, the ball at the Denver 24. Two minutes later, Keith Byars ran one yard for his second touchdown of the day as Philadelphia (6-2) came from behind for a victory for the fourth time this season.

Elsewhere, it was the Los Angeles Raiders 37, Washington 24; Cincinnati 56, Tampa Bay 23; Cleveland 28, Houston 17; Chicago 20, the Los Angeles Rams 10; Buffalo 31, Miami 17; San Francisco 23, the New York Jets 10; New Orleans 20, Atlanta 13; Green Bay 23, Detroit 20 in overtime; New England 23, Indianapolis 20 in overtime; Phoenix 19, Dallas 10; Pittsburgh 23, Kansas City 17, and Seattle 10, San Diego 7.

Denver quarterback John Elway was sacked seven times and the Broncos committed six turnovers, including two in the closing minutes.

Raiders 37, Redskins 24

The teams combined for 12 turnovers, but Los Angeles coach Art Shell wasn't unhappy with the outcome.

"As long as we keep winning and having fun, I'll be happy," Shell said after improving his record to 3-1 since replacing the fired Mike Shanahan.

The Redskins (4-4) turned the ball over eight times, allowed seven quarterback sacks and were penalized 12 times for 135 yards. Washington quarterback Mark Rypien accounted for five turnovers, fumbling twice after being sacked and throwing three interceptions.

Steve Beuerlein, making his first start of the season in place of ex-Redskin Jay Schroeder, threw two touchdown passes to Mervyn Fernandez.

Bengals 56, Bucs 23

Boomer Esiason matched his three-year-old club record with five touchdown passes as Cincinnati ended a two-week offensive drought with its most productive day since a 61-17 victory over Houston in 1972.

"I don't think any of us in our wildest dreams expected 50-some points," said Esiason.

Browns 28, Oilers 17

Cleveland, 5-3 and tied with Cincinnati atop the AFC Central, resorted to trickery. The Browns got one touchdown on a long flea-flicker from Bernie Kosar to Webster Slaughter and another on a halfback option pass by Eric Metcalf.

Both went for second-half touchdowns. Kosar also threw a conventional scoring pass to Slaughter — their TD connections went for 77 and 80 yards — who piled up 184 receiving yards for the second week in a row.

Bears 20, Rams 10

Quarterback Jim Harbaugh relieved Mike Tomczak in the second quarter.

Harbaugh directed a 39-yard drive when he entered the game with 5:50 left in the second quarter. Kevin Butler kicked a 35-yard field goal for a 3-3 halftime tie.

Harbaugh engineered two second-half touchdown drives, scoring one himself on a 1-yard run.

Bills 31, Dolphins 17

Thurman Thomas and Larry Kinnebrew rushed for more than 100 yards apiece and each scored a touchdown as Buffalo (6-2), missing injured quarterback Jim Kelly, passed just nine times in 60 plays.

Thomas ran for 148 yards and scored on a weaving, 30-yard run. Kinnebrew added 121 yards, scoring on a 1-yard run.

49ers 23, Jets 10

Jerry Rice made a leaping catch for a touchdown, and Mike Cofer kicked three field goals as the 49ers won their sixth straight road game. The Jets (1-7) have lost five games in a row.

Steve Young started for the 49ers (7-1) in place of Joe Montana, who was resting a sprained knee, and Steve Bono also saw some playing time. Bono completed the 45-yarder to Rice.

Saints 20, Falcons 13

Dalton Hilliard scored from a yard out with 2:12 to go, lifting New Orleans (4-4) over Atlanta (2-6). Saints linebacker Pat Swilling sacked Chris Miller three times and forced two fumbles.

Saints scores came on a 21-yard pass from Bobby Herbert to Hilliard, the rushing touchdown by Hilliard and field goals of 32 and 44 yards by Morten Andersen.

Packers 23, Lions 20, OT

Green Bay's Chris Jacke won the game with a 38-yard field goal. Jacke, who missed a 50-yarder on the final play of regulation, ended it three plays after Mark Murphy intercepted Rodney Peete on the first play after Detroit received the overtime kickoff.

The Lions rallied with 10 fourth-quarter points, tying the score 20-20, and moved to the Packers 36 with 44 seconds left in regulation before Peete fumbled a handoff.

Patriots 23, Colts 20, OT

Greg Zordich missed a 46-yard field goal at the end of regulation, then kicked a 51-yarder with 5:03 left in overtime.

The Patriots started the winning drive from their own 12. Steve Grogan, who passed for 355 yards and one touchdown, was driven back to his own 4-yard line on a sack, but he hit three straight passes, taking the Pats to the 44 and keeping the drive alive.

Cardinals 19, Cowboys 10

Mike Zordich returned an interception 16 yards for a touchdown, and Al Del Greco kicked four field goals as Phoenix made Dallas 0-8.

Zordich's third-quarter interception of Steve Walsh put Phoenix (4-4) ahead 13-3. Cedric Mack tipped the pass and Zordich pulled it in. Steelers 23, Chiefs 17

Returning after missing two weeks because of injury, Bobby Brister threw two touchdown passes to Louis Lipps, including a 64-yarder in the fourth quarter. Pittsburgh (4-4) had to rally after blowing a 16-point lead.

The Chiefs (3-5) scored 17 straight points after trailing 16-0 and took the lead when Dwight Stone fumbled on a reverse and defensive lineman Bill Maas returned it four yards for a touchdown with 3:51 left the third period.

Seahawks 10, Chargers 7

Dave Krieg threw a 21-yard touchdown pass to Brian Blades with 40 seconds left.

Seattle led 3-0 after a 27-yard field goal by Norm Johnson in the first quarter, and there wasn't another score until Jim McMahon came off the bench to throw a 14-yard touchdown pass to Arthur Cox with 1:53 to play.

Young Mustangs doing their part to uphold SWC pride

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

Southern Methodist doesn't have much to brag about this season, but the young Mustangs have done their part to uphold Southwest Conference pride.

SMU upset North Texas 35-9 Saturday in front of 21,186 homecoming faithful, giving the SWC a 17-8-1 record in games against non-conference opponents.

"The big thing is the total picture," said SMU coach Forrest Gregg, who was doused with a bucket of ice water after the game. "A lot of people said we wouldn't win a game in three years. We just didn't believe that and it shows. That's the reason this victory was so special."

The Mustangs are 2-5.

Mike Romo passed for a school-record 427 yards, beating the old mark of 417 set by Chuck Hixson in a 1968 game against Ohio State.

In SWC games, Arkansas outlasted Houston and quarterback Andre Ware for a 45-39 victory in Little Rock, Baylor beat Texas Christian 27-9 and Texas A&M defeated Rice 45-7.

Arkansas, all but packed off to the smokehouse after losing to Texas last week, put on an amazing offensive performance to outlast Houston and stay alive in the SWC race.

The Hogs and Texas A&M each have just one league loss to lurk in the shadows behind the idle Texas Longhorns, who are 3-0 but have games left against Texas Tech, Houston, Baylor and the Aggies.

Arkansas coach Ken Hatfield said the Hogs had a "death dirge" last week. They rolled out a coffin and somebody popped up out of it.

"We thought we'd poke a little fun," Hatfield said.

"Everybody said we were dead."

Arkansas' Quinn Grovey certainly wasn't, matching Houston's Ware touchdown-for-touchdown in one of the wildest scoring games in Arkansas history.

"This will mean a big turning point for our team in 1989," Hatfield said. "We're still in the run for the Cotton Bowl."

Grovey hit touchdown passes of 65 and 51 yards on his way to 335 yards total offense. Ware had 352 yards passing.

Texas A&M's Lance Pavlas threw three touchdown passes and the Aggies stayed solidly in the race. A&M has three games remaining, all at home. Arkansas and Texas follow SMU to Kyle Field where A&M has won 19 consecutive games against SWC competition.

"We're going home and that's where we want to be," said A&M coach R.C. Slocum. "If we can win out at home then we go to the Cotton Bowl. It's in our hands."

James Francis and Malcom Frank returned interceptions for touchdowns as Baylor won.

"Francis had another great game," said Baylor coach Grant Teaff. "Great games are routine for him."

Teaff said he was proud that Baylor "didn't stand around and feel sorry for themselves" after losing 14-11 to Texas A&M last week.

"We found out that in life bad things happen and we came back against a team that had upset a Top 20 team (Air Force) last week" Teaff said.

A&I remains unbeaten

DALLAS (AP) — Texas A&I won its eighth straight game Saturday, and second without running back Johnny Bailey, to set up season-ending showdowns against Lone Star Conference rivals Angelo State and Abilene Christian.

Texas A&I (8-0, 5-0) whipped Eastern New Mexico 27-12 in Kingsville, while Angelo State (8-1, 4-1) and Abilene Christian (4-4, 4-1) both won on the road.

Angelo State thrashed Cameron 44-14 in Lawton, Okla., despite an injury to quarterback Mickey Russell. Abilene Christian came from behind to pick up a 24-21 win over East Texas State (4-4, 2-3) in Commerce.

Also Saturday, West Texas State (3-6, 2-3) got a field goal with 35 seconds to play for a 26-24 victory over Central State (0-8-1, 0-5) in Canyon.

Bailey, the NCAA career rushing leader, missed the game with a bruised thigh. But his replacement, Dennis Clay, ran for 146 yards in the Javelinas' win over Eastern New Mexico (5-3, 3-2).

In last week's NCAA Division II poll, A&I was first and ENMU tied for 19th.

Kite grabs Nabisco title

Veteran caps off career-best season with playoff win

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Tom Kite knows that his playoff victory in the ultra-rich Nabisco Championship doesn't change the past.

But it may change some minds, the 39-year-old veteran said Sunday after capping his career-best season with an extra-hole triumph over PGA champion Payne Stewart.

"Nothing will change the fact that I had such a poor final round in the U.S. Open," said Kite, who blew a last-round lead with an embarrassing 78 in the American national championship this summer.

It was one of a series of last-round mishaps that have so far deprived him of winning any of golf's Big Four titles.

As the final-round leader in the 1984 Masters, he hit into the water on the 12th hole. Another time, a back-nine triple bogey cost him the lead and the title in the British Open.

Then came the disaster of a triple bogey in the final round at Oak Hill in Rochester, N.Y., in June.

"I'm sure some people thought that would end my victories out here on the PGA Tour," Kite said. "I knew in my heart it wouldn't."

"Now, everybody knows."

In proving his point, Kite also:

— Jumped past both Tom Watson and Jack Nicklaus and became the top money-winner in golf history with over $5.6 million.

— Clinched the PGA Player of the Year title.

— Set a single-season earnings record of $1,395,278.

The only major award that eluded him this season was Vardon Trophy for low scoring average, and he was second on that list. Greg Norman won it with a 69.49 average and Kite averaged 69.57 shots per round.

The outcome of all those races hinged on the Nabisco Championship, golf's richest tournament with almost $3.5 million in individual prize money at stake.

Kite, who lost this event in a playoff at Pebble Beach last year, won the last official money event of the year and a total of $625,000 when Stewart missed a four-foot par putt on the second hole of a playoff.

The huge payoff sent Kite to the head of the all-time money list with $5,600,691.

Kite's third tournament victory of the year and 13th of his career lifted him over British Open winner Mark Calcavecchia on the points list that determines Player of the Year.

Stewart, who won the Heritage Classic on this same course six months ago, rushed away from the field with a course record 29 — including a 121-yard wedge shot for an eagle-2 — on the front side.

Playing the 18th hole, he led by two strokes, but three-putted for bogey, missing a three-foot second putt. It cut his lead to one.

"That let a lot of folks back in the tournament," Stewart said after finishing with a 66 and a 276 total.

Playing behind Stewart, Kite's great shot into what he called "a hurricane wind" set up a 3-foot birdie putt to tie it.

Twice he backed away when rocked out of his stance by wind gusting off Calibogue Sound. When he coaxed in the putt, he had a share of the lead.

Kite preserved it with a one-putt par, another one of those nasty little 3-footers, on the 18th. His closing 68 set up the playoff.

He had to make still another 3-foot putt to survive the first extra hole, then won the tournament with a routine par when Stewart was unable to get it up and down from the fringe.

Paul Azinger and third-round leader Wayne Levi tied at 278, two shots out of the playoff. Azinger closed up with a 67 and Levi shot 72.

Tom Kite clenches his fists after playoff victory.

Rangers not ready for move to downtown stadium yet

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A city administrator says Dallas won't enter an auction for the Texas Rangers, even though Arlington city officials have proposed a $102 million stadium for the American League baseball team.

Mike Norwood, director of Dallas Economic Development, said Dallas isn't "going to get into a bidding war with anybody."

Until the Rangers are ready to talk with them, Norwood said Dallas isn't planning to do anything beyond acquiring some land.

The Dallas City Council last week endorsed a proposed agreement to buy land for a downtown stadium. However, Rangers officials say they aren't yet ready to make a commitment.

Meanwhile, Arlington officials say they're willing to build the new facility on an adjacent parking lot, then tear down Arlington Stadium.

"This is a world-class baseball park for the Rangers," said Mayor Richard Greene, who helped make the proposal to team officials. "We would be happy to talk to them about any aspect of this they want to review."

Greene, Chamber of Commerce President Ted

Willis and Tarrant County Judge Roy English presented their plan Oct. 11 to Rangers owners George W. Bush and Rusty Rose and club President Mike Stone.

The 50,200-seat stadium would be ready for the 1992 season, according to the Arlington leaders. The new stadium would have fewer bleacher seats, one of the major problems with the Rangers' current home, owners say.

Nightmarish season continues for New Mexico football team in 24-23 loss to Wyoming

By PETE HERRERA
AP Sports Writer

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — The season has turned into a recurring nightmare for New Mexico's football team.

A team seemingly unable to get a break, or create its own, the Lobos' losing streak reached seven straight Saturday in a 24-23 Western Athletic Conference loss to Wyoming.

An 18-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Jeremy Leach to wide receiver Terance Mathis as time ran out gave the Lobos a chance to end the victory drought. But true to form, New Mexico could not come up with the big play — in this case the winning two-point conversion.

Leach's pass on the conversion attempt sailed over the head of tight end Jerone Williams and hit only the crossbar on the goal posts.

The errant pass gave Wyoming a win that Cowboys' Coach Paul Roach said his team desperately needed, and New Mexico had another installment on what might have been.

"It's nice to be in the games, but a loss is a loss," Leach said. "Personally, I won't be happy until we start winning."

The Lobos have lost four games this season by seven points or less. They have often played well enough to win, but with enough inconsistency to come up a yard, a bounce or a catch short.

New Mexico lost 27-20 to Texas Tech after failing on four downs from inside the 5-yard line. At Tulsa, kicker David Margolis' winning field goal attempt on the final play of the game hit a slightly tilted upright and bounced away. At Florida, the Lobos had a chance to win on their final possession but Leach was intercepted.

And Saturday, New Mexico failed to put Wyoming away when the Cowboys' offense struggled through three quarters.

Sophomore quarterback Tom Corontz, who played the second half with one contact lens and a scratched left cornea, put the Cowboys ahead to stay with a fourth quarter screen pass to Dabby Dawson that the Wyoming halfback turned into a 34-yard touchdown.

Wyoming defensive back Ivor Samilton had wiped out a 17-10 New Mexico lead by intercepting Leach on the first play of the fourth quarter and returning the theft 29 yards for a TD.

The Lobos mounted a solid drive after Dawson's touchdown but Leach again was intercepted, this time by cornerback Paul Wallace at the Wyoming 3-yard line.

The Lobo defense forced Wyoming to punt with 1:51 left, and after a clipping penalty, New Mexico began its final drive at its own 27. Leach completed six passes in the drive, the final one to Mathis, who pulled in the catch despite the fact the ball was tipped by Wyoming linebacker Vaughn Henderson.

It was the eighth catch of the day for Mathis, who became the all-time NCAA leader in career reception yardage with 3,772 yards. This broke the previous mark of 3,725 yards by Marc Zeno of Tulane.

The touchdown also gave Mathis the WAC career record for TDs with 31.

Leach, who threw for 343 yards while completing 26 of 50 passes, also teamed with wide receiver Eric Morgan on an 82-yard touchdown pass early in the third quarter, and wide receiver Mike Henderson scored in the first half on a 33-yard reverse. Margolis added a 24-yard field goal, his 10th of the year. The Cowboys stayed close on a 15-yard scoring run by Dewaine Jones in the first quarter and a 44-yard field goal by Sean Fleming with 53 seconds left in the third period.

The victory upped Wyoming's record to 3-2 in the WAC and 3-5 overall. New Mexico is 0-5 in the conference and 1-8.

The win was the fourth straight for Wyoming in the series, but as Roach noted, this one was hardly as impressive as the Cowboys' victories the previous two years, when they outscored New Mexico by a combined 114-23.

"The one thing that was really positive for us was the win," said Roach, "just the win."

Right now, a win of any kind would suffice nicely for New Mexico as well.

Mavericks' Tarpley pulls disappearing act

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks have accepted forward Roy Tarpley's apology for his 24-hour disappearance last week. But it may be league officials who decide Tarpley's NBA fate.

A two-time offender of the NBA's drug policy, Tarpley said he was upset with his performance at Thursday's practice and overslept Friday, missing practice.

Players who violate the policy three times face an automatic two-year suspension from the league. Tarpley scored 11 points and grabbed 9 rebounds Sunday night in the Mavericks' 98-97 victory over the Indiana Pacers at Fort Worth.

But his next challenge will come in the form of a drug test, and he faces suspension if results are positive for cocaine or heroin, Mavericks and NBA officials said Saturday.

"The NBA determines what is a slip and what is a major problem," said Mavericks general manager Norm Sonju. "To the best of my knowledge, the NBA was satisfied that while it (Tarpley's absence) was not a good thing, it was not fatal, either. Of course, if they decide to hang him by his thumbs, that's their right."

Dr. David Lewis, head of the league's Adult Substance Abuse Program, or one of his assistants is expected this week to further evaluate Tarpley. They could determine whether Tarpley stays in uniform. "If he doesn't follow his after-care according to what the physicians want," said Mavericks vice president Rick Sund, "there are things such as fines, there are things such as suspension, and last year he even had a strike against him."

The 7-foot forward was suspended from the team in January for drug violations. While undergoing drug rehabilitation, Tarpley missed 49 games last season. He returned to the roster April 11.

Tarpley worked out with the team Saturday and apologized for disappearing for a day.

Pistons release Dembo after failing to make a trade

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Fennis Dembo, who watched mainly from the bench as Detroit won its first NBA championship, has been cut by the Pistons.

The 6-foot-6 Dembo, who played guard and small forward, was released late Saturday after Detroit failed to negotiate a trade for the second-year player. Dembo's release left Detroit with 14 players on its roster, with two final cuts expected by midweek, Coach Chuck Daly said.

Dembo was Detroit's first pick and 30th overall in the 1988 NBA draft after finishing his college career as Wyoming's leading scorer and rebounder. He had a total 36 points and 23 rebounds in his rookie season with Detroit, playing just 74 minutes in 31 regular-season games. Dembo scored two points in the two playoff games in which he appeared.

Club officials had asked Dembo to sharpen his game by playing in Europe before training camp began, but he declined.

Scoreboard

by ranking 12th-ranked Northwestern State its first loss, 26-3, to Stephen F. Austin in sole possession of first place in the Southland Conference after Saturday's games.

In other SLC action, McNeese State (4-4, 1-3) won its first conference game of the season, beating Southwest Texas 21-7. The loss dropped the Bobcats to 3-5 overall and 1-3 in conference play.

In non-conference games, Northeast Louisiana defeated 18th-ranked Arkansas State 13-7 and North Texas (3-5, 0-3) lost to Southern Methodist 35-9. Quarterback Todd Hammel passed for a conference record 421 yards to lead SFA (7-1, 3-0) past Eastern Washington in Cheney, Wash. Hammel completed 20 of 36 passes and had six touchdowns, tying the conference record for touchdowns in a game.

Sam Houston's victory broke Northwestern State's 11-game SLC win streak and lifted the Bearkats to 3-5 overall and 2-1 in the conference. Northwestern State is 3-1 and 4-3-1. Curtis Thomas rushed for 136 yards and two touchdowns in the Bearkat victory. The Bearkats defense set a school record for interceptions by picking NSU quarterback Scott Stoker six times.

North Texas' loss to SMU was its fifth consecutive defeat. North Texas (3-5, 0-3) saw SMU race to a 22-3 halftime lead. The Mustangs set a school record 436 yards passing in the game as quarterback Mike Romo passed for three touchdowns.

DALLAS (AP) — Texas A&I won its eighth straight game Saturday, and second without running back Johnny Bailey, to set up season-ending showdowns against Lone Star Conference rivals Angelo State and Abilene Christian.

Texas A&I (8-0, 5-0) whipped Eastern New Mexico 27-12 in Kingsville, while Angelo State (8-1, 4-1) and Abilene Christian (4-4, 4-1) both won on the road.

Angelo State trashed Cameron 44-14 in Lawton, Okla., despite an injury to quarterback Mickey Russell. Abilene Christian came from behind to pick up a 24-21 win over East Texas State (4-4, 2-3) in Commerce.

Also Saturday, West Texas State (3-6, 2-3) got a field goal with 35 seconds to play for a 26-24 victory over Central State (0-8-1, 0-5) in Canyon.

Bailey, the NCAA career rushing leader, missed the game with a bruised thigh. But his replacement, Dennis Clay, ran for 146 yards in the Javelinas' win over Eastern New Mexico (5-3, 3-2).

In last week's NCAA Division II poll, A&I was first and ENMU tied for 19th.

The league-leading A&I defense held Eastern New Mexico to 33 yards rushing and 212 yards passing. A&I's starting fullback, Sloan Hood, also missed the game with a bruised thigh.

Curtis Green scored twice for A&I on runs of one and two yards, and Kerry Simien raced 91 yards with a kickoff return. Bob Gilbreath kicked four field goals for ENMU's scoring.

Report: DHS badly managed, lacks goals

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Human Services has been badly managed, is top-heavy with supervisors and lacks goals in critical social programs, an independent study has concluded.

Touche Ross & Co., an international accounting firm that was paid $450,000 to perform the study, outlined management shortcomings in a 106-page report. The study was conducted during the spring and summer and delivered to the DHS board recently.

The agency runs Texas' welfare, food stamp, Medicaid and child protective programs.

The auditors, who interviewed all regional administrators, more than 50 central office managers and 100 program managers in various field offices, found:

— Duplication of services in nearly every major DHS office.

— Sixty percent of central office supervisors oversee three employees or fewer.

— Fifteen layers of management in the central office.

— Fifty percent turnover in some regions.

— Most of the 11 DHS regions have failed to quickly and accurately process welfare and food stamp applications.

— Quick completion of initial child abuse investigations is deteriorating and the number of closed cases has decreased sharply in all regions.

— DHS has too many clerical workers assigned to field offices, where one in three employees is a clerk.

The Touche Ross report is the latest development at DHS, which employs 14,500 people and has 411 field offices around the state. DHS officials oversee an annual budget of $5 billion, which includes programs serving more than 3 million Texans living below federal poverty guidelines.

"It's been clear for a long, long time that Texas Human Services has suffered from overdeveloped paper work and an underdeveloped client sensitivity," Jude Filler, director of the Texas Alliance for Human Needs, said.

After the report was delivered last week, DHS Commissioner Ron Lindsey quickly announced a reorganization of the agency, but acknowledged the plan didn't go far enough.

"Several weaknesses were identified across almost all areas reviewed," Touche Ross officials stated in the report.

"The department lacks clearly defined and commonly agreed upon goals and objectives," the report stated. "Without clear performance objectives, management lacks focus."

Advocacy groups representing DHS clients agree change is clearly needed, but worry that services could be cut.

"When an organization shoots for more efficiency, they don't necessarily get more efficient," Filler said. "You can get efficient and put in a system that moves a case faster and cheaper, but that doesn't mean you'll get better service."

In addition to the criticism, the Touche Ross team also identified a number of positive factors in the agency, including the quality of the personnel.

"The level of staff professionalism and talent appears relatively high," the report states. In addition, DHS employees demonstrate a strong interest in professional growth and "a strong desire to achieve significant results and receive national recognition."
