School starts

"Slow down — school's on!" The Midland Police Department is reminding motorists to be aware of youngsters on sidewalks and in school crosswalks. The public schools open Monday and students are expected to be out on the streets as early as 6:30 a.m. School zone speed limits also are back in effect.

Child soldiers

FIRESTONE RUBBER PLANTATION, Liberia — "Open your gate!" the young voice piped. The child soldier's drugged red eyes rolled as he hugged his automatic weapon to his side. The boy, perhaps 8 years old, no taller than the car window, gladly took a packet of cigarettes in response to his demand, in Liberian slang, for a payoff to open the metal bar blocking the road at the world's biggest rubber plantation. He was among thousands of children who watched parents and siblings slaughtered in Liberia's civil war — and joined rebel leader Charles Taylor, who armed them. "Our children were turned into mass murderers," said Myrtle Gibson, a relief worker. "It's our kids who committed some of the worst atrocities."/5A

Toddler dies

BATON ROUGE, La. — A 20-month-old boy found crackers to eat but died of dehydration after he was left to fend for himself when his mother died in their apartment, police said. Foul play was not suspected in the death of Cari Lockhart, 28. Her body was found Friday on her bed and the body of the child was on the floor of his room. "The baby was in the apartment for the better part of a week, probably, with very little food and no water," Deputy Coróner Chuck Smith said Saturday./8A

Bush challenges voters; campaign heats up

Convention helps president nip Clinton's lead

NEW YORK (AP) — The Republican National Convention helped President Bush squeeze up to 17 points out of Bill Clinton's lead in the polls, but one survey released Saturday suggested the gain might be short-lived.

Newsweek said Clinton led Bush 53 percent to 39 percent in a poll of 750 registered voters nationwide Friday by Gallup. That 14-point lead in the first poll taken entirely after the convention was just 3 points less than Clinton's lead in a Newsweek poll taken a few days before the Republicans gathered in Houston.

While Clinton stayed steady at 53 percent in Newsweek's polls, his support fell 10 points in CBS-New York Times polls and 7 points in Los Angeles Times polls, both of registered voters nationwide. The polls had margins of sampling

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The race for the presidency began in earnest this weekend, as President Bush and Gov. Bill Clinton engaged in a heated exchange over each other's economic proposals and, by extension, their political character.

The opening debate set the tone and the subject matter for what strategists in both campaigns predict will be a harsh and brutally competitive 10-week struggle that could ultimately come down to a handful of states in the industrial Midwest.

Bush, reveling in polls that show him closing in on the Democrats, rolled through Georgia on Saturday with another attack on Clinton.

"I'm going to ask the American people, who do you trust to bring it all home?" Bush declared at a rally in Woodstock, Ga. "Foreign policy,

BREAKING THE SILENCE

Believe the children, victim says

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a three-part series examining the problem of sexual abuse of children and its effect on adult survivors and perpetrators — who are often former victims themselves.

Throughout the series, to protect the identity of young victims and those in recovery programs, names have been changed.

Waifish, soft-spoken and bespectacled, Heather seems painfully shy for a 12-year-old.

Barely audible when she speaks, she answers in monosyllables, slouches in her seat, averts her eyes and withdraws from conversation with strangers.

That is not unusual for a child who was raped at age 8.

When her mouth tries to form words to describe the rape scene, no sound comes out. However, when she takes pen to paper, her words pack a wallop.

"I asked him several times not to hurt me and he kept telling me to shut up or he would hurt me even worse than he was going to," she writes of her attacker in a letter to her therapist. "He told me that if I ever told anyone, for the rest of my life he would come back and hurt me very very bad. I kept my mouth shut until one day I just couldn't hold it in any more, so I told my mom."

Unfortunately for Heather, her mother didn't believe her. Neither did her father. "He acted like he didn't believe me because this guy was basically part of the family. We involved him in family activities, gave him presents at Christmas, and not only did we do that we put every bit of trust into this man that anyone could ever put into anybody," Heather wrote in another letter to her therapist.

When Heather's parents dismissed her cry for help, the young girl said she became depressed. "I just shut up and went on with my life. But I didn't care about myself a lot. My grades went down and I started drinking — taking beers out of the refrigerator."

Meg Branson, counselor at Midland Rape Crisis Center, holds a painting by a sexually abused teen-ager. "It ended up being a face. It ended up looking like me and the colors are like the emotions I was feeling at the time. I was just getting out of my anger. Painting was an outlet when I couldn't talk about what happened," the artist said.

Several counselors agree that the betrayal of not being believed about sex abuse is as emotionally devastating as the attack.

"Children think they are at fault if they have been abused. They are told not to tell and are so embarrassed to tell, especially if the abuse has gone on for awhile," said Debbie Lindsay, Parent Partner Program coodinator for Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program (CAPP).

"It's a hard subject for even adult survivors of sex abuse to talk about when they were threatened, cajoled and bribed to keep it a secret as children," said Sally Urias, certified social worker and coordinator of

LULAC targets 'corporate' jobs

■ National, state, regional officers meet.

The League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), which was founded in 1929 in Texas to protect and to fight for the rights of Hispanics in the United States, is focusing more and more on "corporate America," Rosa Rosales, LULAC Texas director, said in Midland on Saturday.

"We are also looking into corporate America, making sure that we also get our fair share of those top-level management and mid-management positions," Ms. Rosales, who lives in San Antonio, said at a gathering of LULAC national, state and regional officers.

LULAC was "founded because of discrimination . . . to protect ourselves from bias and prejudice" and to ensure "the economic and the cultural and the educational well-being of the Hispanic community," Ms. Rosales said. "If we don't take care of ourselves, we can't take care

Gramm, officials begin 10-city tour

■ Republicans stop in Midland to bolster support of Bush, Quayle.

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

The chant was "Viva Bush!"

And the message from Sen. Phil Gramm is that a renewed Bush administration would control federal spending, balance the federal budget, reduce the national debt, cut taxes, increase tax exemptions, promote free enterprise and preserve private property.

"We have a great president," Gramm, 50, said Saturday at Midland International Airport, calling last week's Republican National Convention in Houston, the "most successful convention in the history of American politics."

Gramm led a troupe of Bush campaigners on a 10-city tour of Texas to bolster support for Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle.

"They (the Democrats) are basically a party that's trying to divide up other people's wealth," Gramm charged. "We (Republicans) are a party, where people are attracted based on what's in their heart — a party based on values."

The Republicans "want to control spending. We want to balance the budget. We believe in free enterprise. We believe in private property," Gramm said. "On those issues, there are no differences in the party."

Scientists report test for early detection of Alzheimer's disease

LONDON (AP) — Scientists said Saturday they have developed the first test for the early detection of Alzheimer's disease, which afflicts up to 10 percent of people over 65.

Although no treatment has been developed for the disease, the finding could help afflicted individuals plan for their futures.

The researchers said the test, used on an Indiana family with hereditary Alzheimer's disease, identifies those who carry a gene that causes the disorder.

They said the test proved accurate on one family member who had no detectable symptoms but is developing the disease. A later neurological examination confirmed the diagnosis.

Alzheimer's disease is characterized by a progressive and irreversible loss of memory and the ability to think. It is the most common cause of dementia.

The research was carried out at the Indiana University School of Medicine, in Indianapolis, and the Salk Institute Biotechnology Industrial Associates, in La Jolla, Calif. It was published Saturday in The Lancet, a British medical journal.

Although the article covers only six members of one family, it is important because of what it shows about the ability of the test to chart the progress of the disease, biochemist Steven Wagner of the Salk Institute told The Los Angeles Times.

"What we think is going to come out of this study is that, when patients have severe pathological changes, we're going to be able to pick them up before they become severely demented," the newspaper quoted him as saying in its Saturday editions.

Studies on larger numbers of patients are under way and if the results are successful, the company will begin marketing the test next year, Wagner said.

It now is difficult to diagnose Alzheimer's. Physicians typically identify the disease by ruling out other possibilities. It can be confirmed only by examining the brain after the patient dies.

The disorder causes an accumulation in the brain of deposits, called plaques, of an abnormal substance called amyloid beta-protein. The plaques destroy brain cells and impair brain function.

The amyloid beta-protein is formed from a larger compound called amyloid precursor protein, or APP. The new test searches for healthy APP in the cerebrospinal fluid of patients.

The Salk institute found that the level of APP in Alzheimer's victims was less than one-third that in healthy individuals.

MEETING: Texas Coalition of Black Democrats to hold conference

(From 1A)

Speakers at the conference, keyed to the theme "A New Texas and a New America," include the governor, U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante of San Antonio, Lena Guerrero of the Texas Railroad Commission and Judge Morris Overstreet of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

"We are elated to get that many outstanding Democrats in a Republican stronghold," said Alma Marshall, a member of the coalition's chapter and education chairwoman for the Federation of Citizens United to Serve (FOCUS) in Midland.

Since 1992 is an election year, West Texas Democrats have got to show that "in this part of the country everybody is not a Bush Republican," Ms. Marshall said.

The conference begins Friday at the Midland Hilton. Those interested in attending the conference may telephone Ms. Hurd at 682-2103 or Virginia Davis at 684-4014. Conference fee is $20. The event will feature a trade show sponsored by the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs.

Ms. Hurd said that Gov. Richards will be speaking on "issues that are pertinent to the upcoming (presidential) election" at 4:30 p.m. Saturday at a barbecue-dinner rally beginning at 3:30 p.m., when Bustamante, Ms. Guerrero and other Democrats may speak.

Judge Overstreet will be the speaker at a Presidential Breakfast at 8 a.m. Saturday in the Hilton.

Ms. Davis, who is vice president of the coalition's Midland chapter, said West Texas Democrats want to show the governor and the other Democrats that "we can do big-Texas style even in West Texas. We really want to give them a West Texas treat."

Ms. Marshall said that Gov. Richards is "going to talk on just traditional Democratic issues: What's good for Texas is what's good for America."

"We are just elated that Gov. Richards is going to taken time out of her busy schedule" to visit with Midland Democrats, Ms. Marshall said.

Ms. Marshall, who said that she has "the interest of my community at heart," said that "Everybody who wants to see this country to move forward should get out and cross the lines and vote for those things that are going to be good for all of us."

"Everybody who is an American citizen has to accept responsibility for what our country is, and the Republicans have a great deal of the responsibility that they have to accept, as well as the Democrats," Ms. Marshall said.

"People need to vote in this election on what's going to be good for all of us and not what's going to be good for a few of us. We cannot maintain these separate societies and separate interests and keep this country going. The time has come for us to understand that if this country is going to survive, we are going to have to work together," she said.

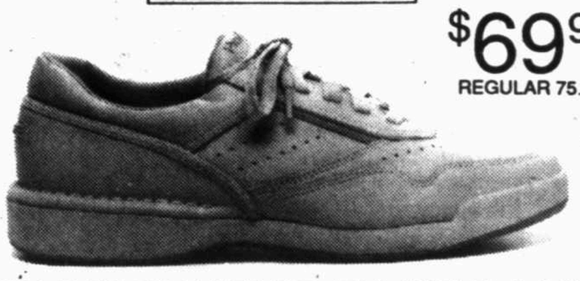

Rocket launch ends in explosion

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A rocket carrying a cable television satellite on a $150 million mission was blown up more than 100 miles above the Atlantic Ocean on Saturday after its booster failed and it tumbled out of control.

The Air Force said there was no risk to anyone on land or sea and nothing on the ground was damaged. But the satellite was lost in the second such failure for rocket maker General Dynamics Corp. in 1½ years.

Air Force officials issued self-destruct commands to the unmanned rocket less than eight minutes into the flight. The booster and satellite then exploded and the debris crashed into the ocean more than 1,000 miles offshore.

Cloudy skies turn to mild day

Staff report

A mild summer day is on the horizon.

Forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport call for partly cloudy skies today and a high temperature in the lower 90 degrees. Winds are to be southerly at 10 to 20 mph.

The temperature tonight is to drop to the mid-60s.

On Monday, when skies are to be increasingly cloudy, the temperature is to be in the upper 80s to near 90 degrees.

Saturday's high was 88 degrees after an overnight low of 63. The record high temperature for Aug. 22 is 103, set in 1985, and the record low for today was set in 1961, when the mercury dipped to 61.

STATE

West Texas skies were clear east of the mountains Saturday, while the far west had mostly cloudy skies.

A few showers and thunderstorms were also over the far west.

Temperatures at 9 p.m. were in the 70s and 80s.

Scattered lower-level clouds were noted over the eastern half of North Texas in response to an upper-level disturbance over Arkansas and Louisiana. Otherwise, skies were clear.

Hazy conditions prevailed over portions of the central and east sections of the state. Evening temperatures were in the low to mid-80s.

NATION

Record heat was replaced by early snow Saturday in Montana, while heavy rain fell in parts of the Southeast.

Some roads in Glacier Park in northwest Montana were closed Friday night because of snow, up to 4 inches in spots.

Cut Bank, Mont., was the coldest spot in the lower 48 states Saturday morning at 31 degrees.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

security policy, economic policy, who do you trust?"

He added, to a roaring rally that chanted his name, "If you listen to these guys, and you'd think the deficit is a big game of the 'Wheel of Fortune.' You know that one? They want to buy three vowels — I-O-U. That's not good enough for the American taxpayer."

Clinton was moving quickly this weekend to try to defuse Bush's promise of new across-the-board tax cuts by characterizing it as a cynical, empty gimmick with as little shelf life as his promise four years ago of "no new taxes."

Traveling on another bus trip through the critical state of Ohio, Clinton asserted that Bush's plans to revive the economy were "totally bogus." The Democratic nominee, campaigning in Parma, asserted that "he can't battle me on the economy" and contended that Bush had "imperiled our national security by having no economic policy."

Sen. Al Gore, the vice-presidential nominee, demanded, "Do you want four more years of a read-my-lips recession?"

The first round of post-convention polls shows, once again, the extraordinary volatility of the electorate this year, with Clinton's once-formidable lead significantly eroded.

Analysts in both parties said that beneath the wild swings in the polls was the reality of a intensely competitive race in an angry and economically anxious year.

"This is the most open, fickle, volatile electorate we've ever seen," said Peter Hart, a Democratic poll taker.

The candidates' travel schedules over the coming week are a roadmap to where this election will be fought, won and lost.

Bush roared out of his convention this weekend into the South, ordinarily a Republican bastion but newly competitive this year because of the all-Southern Democratic ticket. Bush campaign advisers say they hope to consolidate their electoral base in that region and the Mountain West, then carry the battle to a belt of industrial states, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Illinois.

The Bush advisers say this would enable them to assemble a winning majority in the electoral vote, which is 270, even without carrying California, where the Democrats have had wide leads in this summer's polls. This explains why Bush will be at the Illinois State Fair today and will be back in Illinois and Michigan by midweek, after a swing through Connecticut and New Jersey, where the campaign also has high hopes.

Roman Catholic voters are expected to be an important part of this industrial state strategy; they are a principal target of Bush's "school- choice" proposal, which would give parents vouchers they can use in private or religious schools. Republicans also expect them to respond to the appeal of "family values."

The Bush campaign hopes to raise economic fears in those states with its attacks on Clinton as a tax-and-spend liberal and suggest that the Democratic ticket would put the environment over jobs, particularly jobs in the automobile industry.

The Democrats, for their part, were back in a bus this weekend, rolling through Ohio, Pennsylvania and upstate New York. By midweek, they will be in another bus trip through Texas. While Texas has been a reliable part of the Republican coalition in years past, the Clinton campaign clearly has hopes there this year.

LULAC: Organization targets 'corporate' jobs of nobody else."

Ms. Rosales said a good job "makes you able to care for your kids so that they can get a better education. And if we get our people into those top-level management positions, we get a fair shake onto boards and commissions, city councils, school districts. We can get parity. That's all we're asking.

"In top management positions and mid-management positions, there are not enough Hispanics," Ms. Rosales said. "We don't have those positions right now in state agencies ... with the exception of one or two."

Nationally, LULAC, whose strongholds are Texas and California, is "still fighting a lot of discrimination," Ms. Rosales said. "We have discrimination in the workplace and discrimination in our schools. We don't have enough Hispanic educators."

In recent years, LULAC has campaigned — in negotiation and through federal lawsuits — for Hispanic representation on governing boards through single-member district elections rather than through at-large elections.

LULAC has sought single-member district elections for public boards in Midland.

The Midland Independent School District's seven trustees and the Midland County Hospital District's board members are elected by single-member districts.

While Midland's mayor and two council positions are filled by at-large elections, four council members are elected by single-member district elections.

'LULAC always will approach those entities in a friendly basis, working together for the better of the full community.'

— Rosa Rosales

LULAC's lawsuit seeking to force the Midland College board to switch to single-member district elections is pending in Midland federal court.

"Of course, we are approaching the boards and the superintendents in a nice way — that they take the initiative for parity," Ms. Rosales said. "If they don't, of course we are going to be filing lawsuits. LULAC always will approach those entities in a friendly basis, working together for the better of the full community."

Rolando Rios, LULAC's San Antonio-based lawyer, said Saturday that LULAC leaders will be visiting the minority community in Crane this weekend, where LULAC is seeking single-member district elections.

Hispanics there are sensing "pressure from the overall community — pressure that is directed at punishing them for litigating," Rios said. "And we are there to show support."

Rios said that the city of Dallas "spent more than $4 million fighting (for) at-large elections, and they still ended up with all single-member districts.

"The point is, the college district in Midland ought to use its resources to educate people instead of fighting these lawsuits, which basically are directed at trying to include all members of the community in the democratic process," Rios said. "And there's nothing sinister about that."

Willie Serna, a LULAC district director who lives in San Angelo, said that LULAC is willing to help "anybody," including Anglos and blacks, who need help in combating discrimination.

Jose Velez, LULAC's national president from Las Vegas, Nev., noted that while the Hispanic organization was founded during the Great Depression, LULAC has become "the obsession of our people to get their rights and to receive rights as part of the history of this country."

LULAC, he said, has about 115,000 dues-making members. But when considering its class-action lawsuits, LULAC's force is about 300,000-people strong.

"Texas is in the lead, in the forefront, of all these lawsuits," Velez said. Nationally, LULAC is very effective, he said.

SENATOR: Gramm leads campaigners' 10-city tour

(From 1A)

The party differences, however, are on issues such as abortion and homosexuality.

"But we are not a party like the Democratic Party," Gramm said, "because people are Democrats because they want something from government."

Now, if the American people "want to raise taxes, increase spending and increase the deficit, which is what the Clinton plan is all about, all they have got to do is vote for Bill Clinton," Gramm said. "And Congress will work with him to do all of those bad things."

Gramm is a former conservative Democrat and a one-time Texas A&M University economic professor who was elected to the Senate in 1984.

However, if people want to "control spending, balance the budget, and cut taxes again, they have got to elect the president and elect more people to Congress that support doing that," Gramm said, pressing for the election of "150 new members" of Congress.

During the 3½ years of the Bush administration, Republicans have been asking the Democrat-controlled Congress "to quit spending what we do not have on programs that we cannot afford," Gramm said.

And members of Congress have "promised responsibility," Gramm charged, "but they have continued to take bacon out of the smokehouse — the working men and women of America — to give it away."

When Congress reconvenes the day after Labor Day, Gramm said Bush will fulfill his promise to "veto every appropriation bill ... that spends more money than we spent last year."

"Congress is going to hate it," Gramm said, "but the people will love it."

The senator said he would be "happy to lead the effort to sustain every veto of every spending bill that goes above the freeze level that the president employs the veto to stop."

Bush has proposed a "check off" of up to 10 percent of income taxes "to go not to government spending but to reduce the debt," Gramm said, adding that he would introduce a bill to make the president's proposal law.

Gramm said Bush has been fighting for an energy bill that will "cut the Alternative Minimum Tax and encourage people to invest in the oil and gas business here in America to help us create jobs and produce more energy here at home."

The bill, now nearing House and Senate approval, encourages the use of natural gas, Gramm said.

"While we are trying to cut the Alternative Minimum Tax, Bill Clinton and the Democrats have committed to raise that tax by 25 percent," Gramm said. "We cannot let that happen. That is a tax that must be cut if we are going to produce more energy here at home. If Bill Clinton has his way, ... we are going to lose another 50,000 to 75,000 jobs in the oil patch USA. We need to be creating jobs, not destroying them."

The campaign group in Midland Saturday included Fred Meyer, Texas Republican Party chairman; state treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison; Jim Oberwetter, chairman of the Texas Bush-Quayle 1992 campaign, and Texas Sen. Teel Bivins.

Ms. Hutchison said that the country-music flavor of the convention was influenced by George Bush and West Texas' influence on him when he lived in Midland and Odessa in the 1950s.

"You are the people that made George Bush love country music."

Ms. Hutchison said that at last week's convention there was a "groundswell during George Bush's speech when he started attacking (Clinton and the Democrats) for the first time. And people were so excited" that they yelled, "'Hit him again, hit him again ... harder.'"

"'I'm fixing to,'" Bush replied, Ms. Hutchison said. "It was wonderful."

In eliciting support for Bush, Ms. Hutchison said that "The president, one more time, came through (with a great speech) for us in a pinch, and it's time for us to return the favor and come through for him."

In his turn at the lectern, Bivins said that election of more Republicans to the Texas Legislature would "return sanity to public policy in the state of Texas."

Oberwetter, who lived in Midland in the 1950s when Bush was starting in the oil business here, said the "policies of our president and former presidents" have helped ensure that children "in all likelihood will never have to face the threat of a nuclear holocaust.

"That's because America has stayed strong. We have had good presidents, and George Bush is going to make sure that the defense of this country remains secure, so that they will never face that threat again," Oberwetter said.

Oberwetter said that Midland and Odessa need to work to "send him (Bush) back to Washington and keep him there for a second term."

Following the Bush rally in the Best Western Hotel at Midland International Airport, Republican National Committeeman Ernest Angelo Jr. of Midland said the convention fulfilled its objectives, including party unity and 100 percent support for the re-election of the president.

"We had to get the president's credibility back in terms of the 1990 tax problem," Angelo said of the federal tax hike despite Bush's 1988 campaign promise of "no new taxes."

"The president expressed clearly his regret," Angelo said. "He's not going to trust the Democrats again to do what they say they will do" — control spending in exchange for new taxes.

"People are obviously and rightly concerned about the economy" and how the economy affects their jobs and their families, and people are concerned about the long-term future of the country, Angelo said.

Bush "is going to keep the spending of the government down. He's going to return more money to people themselves, and he's going to attack the deficit."

POLL: President's gain is short-lived, survey shows error of 4, 5 and 3 points respectively.

In what polltakers call the convention "bounce," the point spread between Clinton and Bush narrowed by 15 points in the Los Angeles Times poll Thursday and Friday and 14 points in the New York Times poll Thursday.

The Washington Post reported in today's editions that a poll it had taken Thursday and Friday showed Clinton ahead 49 percent to 40 percent. That nine-point lead compared to the 26-point margin Clinton had in the latest pre-GOP convention poll taken for the Post, a difference of 17 points. The latest Post poll had a margin of error of 4 points.

The murky mix of good and bad news for Bush in last week's polls differed strongly from the picture a month ago, when the Democratic National Convention gave Clinton a poll vault of Olympic proportions, as much as 26 points.

Bush was expected to get a smaller but substantial bounce in the polls from his convention. His support was low to start with and by convention time he had no opposition for the nomination.

Historically, the last five incumbent presidents seeking re-election got an average bounce of 9 points. Bush, as vice president, gained 13 points on Michael Dukakis after the Republicans convened four years ago.

Clinton's lead, which had ranged from 17 to 30 points in various polls, was swelled by the pull-out of Ross Perot. Many Perot supporters identified themselves as either independents, conservatives, or both, and the Republicans succeeded in wooing many of them back, according to the Los Angeles Times poll.

That poll found Bush's job approval rating at 53 percent after his nomination, up from 44 percent the previous week and the highest since November. Bush gained a 13-point lead on Clinton as the candidate who would do the better job holding down taxes, but Clinton led by 10 points as the one to handle the economy, the Los Angeles Times said.

Newsweek said Bush's approval rating Friday was 38 percent, virtually unchanged from the previous week.

Orphans of war become child soldiers

FIRESTONE RUBBER PLANTATION, Liberia (AP) — "Open your gate!" the young voice piped. The child soldier's drugged red eyes rolled as he hugged his automatic weapon to his side.

The boy, perhaps 8 years old, no taller than the car window, gladly took a packet of cigarettes in response to his demand, in Liberian slang, for a payoff to open the metal bar blocking the road at the world's biggest rubber plantation.

He was among thousands of children who watched parents and siblings slaughtered in Liberia's civil war — and joined rebel leader Charles Taylor, who armed them.

"Our children were turned into mass murderers," said Myrtle Gibson, a relief worker. "It's our kids who committed some of the worst atrocities."

Children also were among the 20,000 people slaughtered in the rebellion that ballooned into a tribal war.

They were the majority of victims among another 40,000 people who starved to death when Taylor besieged Monrovia, the capital, at the end of 1990.

On Saturday, Taylor said fighting this week in western Liberia has claimed at least 1,500 lives. Taylor made the statement in a radio broadcast from his headquarters in Gbargna, about 100 miles northeast of Monrovia.

Patrick Davies, who joined Taylor's forces when he was 16, is a refugee in Ivory Coast.

"My family says I am a traitor," he said. "They won't understand that I was caught in Taylor's advance and to save my life, I lied about my tribe and trained as a rebel."

Davies deserted after rebels tortured President Samuel Doe to death. He said his father, a former minister related to Doe's widow, fled to the United States at the beginning of the war and now refuses to help him.

At the U.S.-managed Firestone rubber plantation, the child rebel and three young comrades had set up a "mushroom checkpoint," an unauthorized roadblock that springs up at night, for unpaid rebels to seek bounty — five Liberian dollars (about 90 cents), cigarettes, or whatever else they can get.

In 1990, reporters watched a bizarre crew of rebels take over the plantation. These fighters dressed in drag and women's wigs, careening around in looted vehicles in search of people from rival tribes to slaughter.

Two years later, the commandos are wearing jeans and T-shirts. Most are stoned on the marijuana that grows wild along the roadside. They are living in rubber tappers' compounds at Firestone, which began operating again last year.

This month, when the rebels did not get rice rations, they took their commander hostage. Firestone managers called in a senior fighter who organized his release, but then had to negotiate freedom for the rebels, whom the commander promptly jailed for insubordination.

Business continued as usual at the plantation, which earlier this month shipped more than 1 million tons of latex, its first export since the war.

The plantation's manager, Don Weihe, was in Washington for talks with U.S. officials, and no other plantation officials would talk to this reporter. Bridgestone-Firestone Inc. headquarters in Akron, Ohio were closed Saturday.

Companies that operate behind Taylor's lines avoid responding to charges they are helping fuel Liberia's conflict by paying taxes and bribes to Taylor.

The more relaxed atmosphere behind rebel lines threatens to prolong the "no war, no peace" situation.

It entrenches the division between the Monrovia capital, held by a West African army backing an interim government, and the rest of the country, called "Taylorland" or "Greater Liberia."

Some ex-fighters have laid down their guns to go back to school. Children all over "Taylorland" could be seen playing football, hawking Korean plastic goods, packets of water and American T-shirts, and working in fields.

At Taylor's capital in central Gbarnga town, members of his "Small Boy Unit" — most under 10 years of age — go for classes in the mornings and are indistinguishable from other schoolboys.

"Most of our 1,500 students are ex-combatants," said the Rev. Emmanuel Parhmilin, vice principal of the W.V.S. Tubman-Gray High School run by the United Methodist Church.

Taylor used to show off his child soldiers and have them drill for reporters. But it has become a sensitive issue since Liberians and international human rights groups have criticized him for arming children.

Some ex-combatants spend half their day as schoolchildren and the other half as soldiers, manning roadblocks. Few would admit they were fighters.

Nineteen-year-old Edwin Paye Kakia has abandoned his gun and turned his hand to business.

"I buy various goods in Monrovia, sell them back here at a profit, and use the money to pay school fees," he said.

Taylor's education minister, D. Musuleng Cooper, said her ministry is drafting plans to rehabilitate 10,275 young fighters. But there are no plans for the Small Boy Unit.

Taylor's information minister, Joe Mulba, said they were war orphans who consider Taylor their father. He would not allow them to be interviewed.

British courts may bar judges, lawyers wigs

LONDON (NYT) — Still befrocked and bewigged after all these centuries, judges and lawyers in British courtrooms were asked last week to consider the unthinkable: Is it time to lose their wigs and thick robes and begin to dispense justice with the bare heads and sober clothing of ordinary citizens?

In a gesture that has dismayed traditionalists and cheered reformers, Britain's two top legal officials have set out to learn whether court officers, jurors, even members of the general public believe that wigs and ceremonial robes add to or detract from the cause of equal justice.

To that end Lord Mackay, the lord chancellor, and Lord Taylor, the lord chief justice, began on Wednesday to circulate a 40-page consultative paper intended to prime a public debate.

The Lord Chancellor's office will use the responses to frame a formal recommendation next year on whether rules and traditions governing court dress should be amended.

While Lord Mackay, whose functions often require him to wear a $15,000 gold-laced robe, has remained studiously neutral on the issue, Lord Taylor has already gone on record as favoring a more contemporary image, a position that seems to be widely supported among members of the bar. In recent months, a number of lawyers have joined him in urging that the courts address the issue.

Mortar fire sprays U.N. building; Bosnia denies shelling civilians

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Mortar rounds shattered windows and blew holes in a parking lot at the U.N. headquarters Saturday in heavy shelling that forced peacekeepers to stop aid flights briefly.

At least three people were reported killed in the morning shelling. After an afternoon lull, mortar and machine-gun fire echoed in the capital in the evening, but there were no new reports of casualties. Heavy machine-gun fire crackled at high-rise apartment buildings near the U.N. headquarters.

Britain's Press Association, quoting the British Ministry of Defense, said two British soldiers were slightly wounded by shrapnel while digging a shelter for U.N. observers.

A spokesman for the Bosnian presidency denied a published report that government troops fired on civilians as a ploy to gain foreign military intervention, but said there will be an investigation into the sniper killing of a U.N. peacekeeper.

The new U.N. commander, Brig. Gen. Ali Abdel-razek Hussein of Eqypt, had his first meeting with President Alija Izetbegovic. Hussein said later he did not know when an accord reached last week for all factions to put their heavy weapons under U.N. supervision would become effective.

The Belgrade-based Tanjug news agency reported heavy fighting near the northern Bosnian towns of Derventa and Bosanski Brod, and near Bijelo Brdo, a Croat stronghold near the Sava River.

Bosnia's Serbs, who want to remain part of Serb-dominated Yugoslavia, took up arms after the republic's majority Croats and Muslims voted for independence on Feb. 29. They now control two-thirds of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

At least 8,000 people have been killed, but recent estimates by U.S. Senate investigators put the total at up to 35,000. About 1.3 million people have become refugees, many from campaigns to purge whole regions of rival ethnic groups.

German Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel called for tightening a U.N. blockade imposed on Yugoslavia, now comprised of Serbia and Montenegro, and offered German civilian but not military help.

NATO ships currently patrol off Yugoslavia's Adriatic coast to monitor the embargo, imposed to punish Serbia for backing Serb rebels in former Yugoslav republics.

In an interview in Sunday's editions of the Welt am Sonntag newspaper, Kinkel called for stepping up the land blockade and offered German customs agents, retired officials and other civilians to help. The interview was released to other media on Saturday.

Kinkel also reaffirmed that he would press at a peace conference on Yugoslavia, which begins Wednesday in London, for the establishment of an international tribunal to try Serb military and civilian leaders for "genocide."

In the morning barrage on Sarajevo, the U.N. building's roof was damaged by one shell, a U.N. official said. Two others landed in the parking lot, and a fourth hit a ramp leading into the building. No one was hurt.

Mortar shells also landed at the airport, which is guarded by U.N. forces for an international aid airlift to the besieged capital. No one was injured and no cargo planes were at the airport at the time, but the facility was shut down for about an hour, U.N. officials said.

Man carries child wounded by mortar shelling in Sarajevo

A report Saturday in Britain's newspaper The Independent said Sarajevo's defenders may have shelled civilians to win sympathy and prompt international military intervention. It cited confidential reports circulating among U.N. officials.

Presidential spokesman Kemar Muftic said Izetbegovic denied the report.

"It is ridiculous to say we are shelling ourselves," Muftic said.

But he said the president assured U.N. Gen. Hussein that an investigation would be launched into the sniper killing of a Ukrainian U.N. peacekeeper on Thursday.

Hussein, who arrived Friday, said the president "expressed concern" about reports that a Bosnian sniper might have killed the peacekeeper.

New battle rages in Jerusalem

JERUSALEM (AP) — Unfurling blue-and-white Israeli flags, Jewish settlers pitched a tent in a Palestinian neighborhood last week to assert their right to live anywhere in Arab east Jerusalem.

The opening of the makeshift "information center," where they display maps of planned Jewish neighborhoods in Arab sectors, signaled a new stage in the battle over Jerusalem.

After years of support from governments led by the right-wing Likud bloc, the settlers are on the defensive against a government more interested in peace talks than raising more Arab anger over Jerusalem.

Jerusalem is the last name the government of Yitzhak Rabin wants to hear when Arab-Israeli peace talks resume in Washington, as they are scheduled to do Monday. It wants discussion of the city put off — forever if possible, but at least until the end of peace negotiations.

Whatever the desires of either side, Jerusalem remains at the center of the conflict.

Israel says the entire city is its eternal, undivided capital. Palestinians want the annexed, eastern part of the city as their own capital.

The dispute involves more than politics. The Old City contains the Jews' holy Wailing Wall, the Muslims' Dome of the Rock and Al-Aqsa mosques, and the Christians' Church of the Holy Sepulcher.

Both Israelis and Palestinians see the city as central to their history.

"Part of fulfilling the Zionist dream is to live in Jerusalem, especially its ancient sections," said David Lev-Tzion, 26, a student at the Ateret Cohanim seminary dedicated to moving Jews into Arab neighborhoods.

For Jews, it is the capital of ancient Israel, site of the First and Second Temples. Many Arab families trace their history in Jerusalem to before Saladin, who recaptured the city from the Crusaders in 1187.

"Jerusalem sums up the continuous Palestinian history," said Hanan Ashrawi, spokeswoman for the Palestinian delegation to the peace talks. "It forms the economic, cultural, political and spiritual center of Palestinian life."

Since it captured and annexed Jerusalem in 1967, Israel has built Jewish suburbs around the Arab quarter. About half of Jerusalem's 370,000 Jews live in these suburbs, surrounding the city's 150,000 Arabs.

U.S. airlift could make big difference to starving Somalis

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — American soldiers loaded tons more food for starving Somalis on Saturday, but heavily armed looters could keep some of the aid from getting to the people who need it most.

"Food is becoming available. The momentum is there," said Tom Lecato, who heads the U.N. World Food Program's operation in Somalia.

But he added, "I can't tell you exactly how much food we will be able to bring in because of the security situation."

The first U.S. Hercules C-130 transport plane left Mombasa, Kenya, on Friday and delivered about 10 tons of split peas to Somali refugees and hard-hit Kenyans in the northeastern Kenyan town of Wajir.

A second shipment went Saturday, and U.S. relief flights directly into Somalia are expected to start sometime next week.

The U.S. Army has dispatched 70 Green Berets to provide security for the planes when they begin flying into Somalia. France has begun an airlift from Djibouti, the European Community's emergency food aid to Somalia so far this year includes 185,000 tons of grain.

Frank Libutti, the Marine brigadier general commanding the U.S. airlift, said he was still assessing the "security situation."

With some 1.5 million people facing starvation, Somalia needs at least 30,000 tons of donated food per month. It has received a little more than 20,000 tons in the past four weeks, and the U.S. airlift could quickly make up the difference, aid officials say.

But drought and warfare have created chaos in Somalia. Since the overthrow of dictator Mohamed Siad Barre in January 1991, warlords have carved the country into fiefdoms, and free-lance gunmen run riot, looting and hijacking food. There is no police force or legal system.

Consider the case of the Rattana Naree, a Thailand-based ship that finally docked Thursday after waiting 10 days offshore because of anarchy in Mogadishu's port.

The ship holds 10,000 tons of sorghum — a third of what's needed to feed Somalia for a month. But scores of young men with assault rifles mill about the port's gate, waiting to prey on food convoys.

The ship's Indian captain, Ashok Singh, said Friday he had no intention of setting foot in Mogadishu. He told four journalists whom he invited into his cabin that he has not even dropped anchor; his 479-foot vessel is tied to the dock by ropes that can be cut for a quick getaway if needed.

"The first order I gave was to sharpen the axes," Singh said in an interview interrupted occasionally by gunshots ringing out in the port.

The United Nations recently agreed to send 500 troops to Somalia to protect aid shipments. Last week the total was raised to 3,000 soldiers, who will be spread across the country.

Brig. Gen. Imtiaz Shaheen, a Pakistani heading the effort, said action should have been taken months ago, before conditions became so desperate. "We are dealing with a calamitous situation," he said.

Shaheen's troops are not expected for another week.

The U.S. effort will concentrate on isolated southwestern Somalia.

U.S. military officials say their only role is to deliver the food, not guard it once it's on the ground or assist in its distribution. That will be left to aid agencies.

But no relief agencies are operating in two of the targeted Somali towns, Bardera and Hoddur, because fighting makes it too dangerous.

Government, rebels agree to cease-fire

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The Islamic government and a rebel faction agreed to hold a temporary cease-fire to allow 250 diplomats and their families to evacuate the embattled capital, U.N. and rebel sources said Saturday.

But no date has been set for the truce, which was requested by the United Nations.

Saeed Qaribur, a spokesman for rebel chief Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, said his Hezb-e-Islami faction "is ready to announce a one-day cease-fire to allow the evacuation of diplomats by road from Kabul."

Government sources say at least 1,000 people have died since Hekmatyar's forces began rocket attacks on the capital on Aug. 10. Tens of thousands of residents have fled to the countryside or to Pakistan.

Hekmatyar is demanding the removal from the city of a militia under Gen. Rashid Dostam, who once backed the Communist regime. Dostam's defection to the Islamic guerrilla resistance in March helped topple President Najibullah and drive out the Communists after a 14-year civil war.

Residents of Kabul came out of their homes Saturday morning after a brief lull in the fighting, bringing the open-air markets back to life. But rockets began falling again in the afternoon.

One missile hit a military fuel dump, leaving a cloud of black smoke hanging over the capital's eastern outskirts. Another fell near a military hospital in the southeastern section, badly damaging a factory making artificial limbs for wounded war veterans. No casualties were reported.

U.N. and Red Cross personnel left the capital last week because of the continuing artillery duels between government and Hezb-e-Islami forces.

Large areas of the city have been destroyed, and blood-stained streets are littered with twisted metal and shattered glass.

A U.N. source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that "a day will be enough" to organize a road convoy to take foreigners to Pakistan. A U.N. spokesman in Islamabad, Pakistan, said 21 foreign missions in Kabul were planning to evacuate all or part of their staffs.

An Afghan Foreign Ministry official, who declined to be identified, questioned whether Hezb-e-Islami could be trusted to honor the truce.

"The danger is that if (Hekmatyar's) representatives give assurances, he can violate them and say that those people who gave them were only trying to make a bad name," the official said.

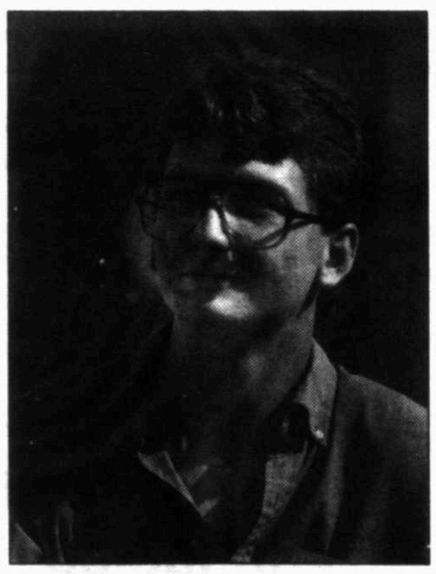

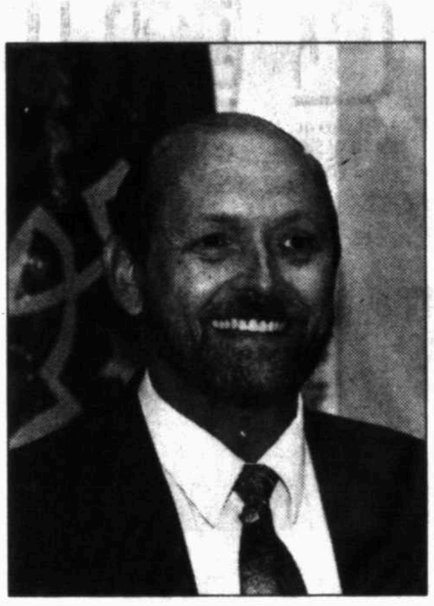

Deputy Foreign Minister Hamid Karzai, who was among several dozen rebel leaders to march triumphantly into Kabul in April, said in Islamabad that the subsequent warfare is a tragic end to the rebel's' "holy war."

"We went into Kabul with a lot of glory and pride," Karzai said. "Then began the unprecedented return of refugees and we were encouraged that our country would leap forward, gain strength and we would stand on our own feet. "The recent attacks on Kabul have shattered all the hopes of the Afghan people and caused us tremendous humiliation in the international community," he said.

Karzai said the former rebel groups were trying to establish a national coalition government "without extremists," a reference to Hekmatyar.

Mother dies in apartment, leaves child alone to scrounge for food

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A 20-month-old boy found crackers to eat but died of dehydration after he was left to fend for himself when his mother died in their apartment, police said.

Foul play was not suspected in the death of Cari Lockhart, 28. Her body was found Friday on her bed and the body of the child was on the floor of his room.

"The baby was in the apartment for the better part of a week, probably, with very little food and no water," Deputy Coroner Chuck Smith said Saturday.

"If somebody had found her the day before, the baby probably would have survived," he said.

The toddler, Logan Lockhart, had found crackers and other bits of food, but apparently couldn't get to water and died of dehydration.

Ms. Lockhart apparently died of natural causes, though toxicology tests are needed to be sure, police said. An autopsy Saturday ruled out violence, Smith said.

Police were called to the ground-floor apartment when someone reported a strong odor coming from the apartment, said police spokesman Kevin Cavell.

A maintenance man said a relative went to the apartment to check on Ms. Lockhart and the boy and was alarmed by the stench and flies outside the door.

"The apartment was neat as a tack inside. The only thing that was out of place is stuff that the baby did over the course of a week ... scrounging for food," Smith said.

Protesters march through Forsyth for annual parade

CUMMING, Ga. (AP) — Marchers singing civil rights anthems paraded through driving rain and past a torrent of jeers Saturday to repeat their 1987 walk through Forsyth County, where blacks have been unwelcome for 80 years.

In Tyler, Texas, competing rallies were held by the Ku Klux Klan and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The Klan rally, attended by about 300 people, and the NAACP rally, attended by about 2,000, were peaceful.

Earlier Saturday, about 50 white supremacists chanting "white power" had demonstrated at the courthouse to protest the march.

"We don't take second billing," Jerry Lord, a Klansman and county organizer for the white supremacist Nationalist Movement, said at the rally.

SUFFER THE CHILDREN

TELL: Victims feel second trauma of disbelief

(From 1A)

social services at Glenwood psychiatric hospital.

Only after she landed in a drug-and-alcohol rehabilitation program at a local psychiatric hospital at age 11 did Heather's parents begin to listen to her.

"My mom believes me now," she said in a whisper. "She didn't ... just didn't believe me when it happened."

Although Heather felt her situation was unique, recent studies indicate that about one in three American women are sexually abused before age 18.

In fact, close to 50 percent of nationally reported rapes occur before age 11, according to the study "Rape in America," compiled by the National Victim Center and Crime Victims Research and Treatment Center.

More than 2.7 million children are abused each year in the United States, according to the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse. It is not known how many of those cases involve sexual abuse.

In Midland, 111 sexual abuse referrals were made to the Texas Department of Human Resources in 1990, according to program director of the department's Child Protective Services, Molly Whitington.

In 1991, 90 incidents were reported locally. "We have had 68 cases reported so far in 1992," Ms. Whitington said. "And these are just the cases where the alleged perpetrator was a family member.

"We know that not every case of sex abuse is reported and that some cases reported are wrongly reported," said Ms. Lindsay, who coordinates the program, which offers child-abuse prevention education for both parents and children, including a session that teaches children how to say no to sex abuse. "Not all complaints pan out," she said.

Ms. Whittington, of Child Protective Services in Midland, said that "99.9 percent of the complaints" the department responds to involve the child's caregiver as perpetrator.

"Our function is to protect a child when the sex abuse is likely to occur in the home," she said.

Because sex abuse is so close to home and often involves a family member or close family friend, it makes it even more difficult for some parents to talk about or confront.

In 75 percent of the cases studied nationally, the perpetrator was not the candy-offering stranger children are taught to fear, but an adult the child knew and trusted.

Patricia Ares, a licensed chemical-dependency counselor and director of Star Counseling Center, said that being abused by a stranger makes it easier for a a victim to talk about feelings and get family support.

If the perpetrator is a family member, however, the family may deny the victim's allegations and refuse to talk about it.

"And this is a problem because the abuser is often someone you know and love, a dear relative or friend," Ms. Ares said.

Midland clinical psychologist David A. Koch said, "Most of the time — in my practice — the victim knew the perpetrator. Of course, those are the people we work with more to maintain the family integrity. A pepetrator outside the family system is more likely to go through the legal system."

Koch said children abused by strangers can end up being distrustful of all strangers. He said the betrayal of being molested by a family member, however, is all the more heinous. "But if you can't trust the extended family, who are you going to be able to trust?"

"If I could get one thing across to parents, it would be to teach their children not to trust anybody when it comes to sex abuse," Ms. Urias said.

"We teach our children to beware of strangers when we should teach them to beware of family members," she said. "Parents, be really careful. Protect those children. Don't trust anybody — babysitters or relatives. Tell your children, 'If anyone touches you in a way that makes you feel uncomfortable, come tell me.'"

Whether it's a stranger or family member involved, it's not unusual for adults to question stories of sexual abuse from children, according to Meg Branson, therapist for Midland Rape Crisis.

"I believe everything that children say until I have another reason not to believe them," she said, noting that she has a bumper sticker that states: "Believe the Children."

"Children will not make this stuff up," Ms. Urias said. "Research indicates that children will not make up stories of sex abuse."

Some counselors said a child could fabricate a story of improper touching.

"Changes in behavior indicate they are telling the truth," said substance abuse counselor Bonnie Baker.

Koch said testing and evaluation can reveal sexual abuse.

"We try to validate sexual allegations with evaluations and look at how the victims function," he said, noting that a general assessment can't be made because "sex abuse takes so many forms."

Now, Heather is believed. Her father and stepmother are prosecuting her alleged attacker and the whole family has visited counselors. Heather is seeing a therapist and is getting help, but she still has nightmares about the attack and her attacker.

"Sometimes, I'm afraid he might come after me. I'm more careful now," she said.

Although the rape was physically painful, Heather said the emotional pain of being doubted was "a terrible, terrible thing."

For Heather, the healing process is slow, but she said she has learned some important things about telling the truth about perpetrators.

Her message to other adolescents who are sexually abused is: "Tell somebody."

And if they don't believe you?

"Tell somebody else."

Her message to parents: "If your child comes to you and says that something like this happened, please, please believe them and just check it out and see if it happened first before you just ignore them and don't believe them — like my parents didn't believe me."

Expert offers list of warning signals

Staff report

One in every three or four girls and one in every six boys will be the victims of sexual abuse before reaching the age of 18.

What can parents do to help protect their children from abusers? And how can they recognize abuse?

Dr. Constance Fournier, pediatric psychologist at Scott & White Hospital in Temple, says there are tell-tale signs of abuse in a child such as:

■ In younger children — Behavior that is aggressive, regressive or sexual; sexual or violent themes in drawings or stories; or appearing very mature or immature for the child's age. Physical signs might include difficulty in walking, sitting, frequent urination, unexplained injuries or neglect.

■ In older children — Indications might include running away from home, engaging in sexually suggestive or promiscuous behavior, early marriage, withdrawal, social isolation, dislike of family members, venereal disease or pregnancy, or substance abuse.

Dr. Fou nier said one measure to protect children is to teach them that they can say no to an adult in an uncomfortable situation. They also can use the "bathing suit" rule. No one should touch the parts of a body that a bathing suit would cover except for medical reasons.

"Teach children that if someone touches them in their bathing suit area they should tell someone and keep telling until someone listens," Dr. Fournier said. "Emphasize that such touching is not the child's fault, and no child should ever be made to feel responsible for not saying no. Abuse situations occur where the child is threatened, or is abused by someone they trust. The child may not be able to say no."

Sally Urias, coordinator of social services at Glenwood psychiatric hospital, said children need to be taught that it is wrong for family members — as well as strangers — to touch them.

"Don't just say: beware of strangers. That is not enough any more," she said.

Persons who suspect that they know a child is being abused may call the Texas Department of Human Resources Child Protective Services in Midland at 686-2273 or the 24-hour Child Abuse Hotline, toll-free, (800) 252-5400.

The Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Progam also offers educational programs and services. For information on CAPP programs call 685-3007.

School-based program gives children back the word 'no'

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle editor

One in 10 children will be sexually abused by age 14, according to national statistics. These same statistics point out that only one in 10 cases of abuse are reported.

"So basically, you can take that number and multiply by 10," said Robin Anderson, a Midland Rape Crisis Center Board member and two-time volunteer of the year.

A more sobering statistic: as of the end of June 1992, 28 cases of sexual abuse against children age 14 and under have been reported in Midland, Ms. Anderson said. Again, only one in 10 cases are believed to be reported.

"At age 15, they aren't considered kids anymore. However, they aren't protected by laws governing adults until they are 18," Ms. Anderson said. "Basically, the children between 15 and 18 are unprotected by law. They are lost in the middle.

"As a child, there can be no behavioral patterns admitted in court against the privacy of that child. As an adult, a person's past actions are not admissible in court as a part of the case. But for a 15- to 18-year-old, anything can be said. For example, in the case of rape, they can use a girl's dress — saying the way she was dressed indicates she asked for it — or history of promiscuity — saying that her actions of the past proves that it wasn't really rape. But there are people working to change that."

Sadly, the point is that sexual abuse of children happens, and it is happening right here.

For those who are victims of sexual abuse, the Midland Rape Crisis Center (MRCC) offers numerous services, as well as help for their family and friends, including a 24-hour crisis telephone line, counseling services, secondary victim service, a referral service, support groups, training, a newsletter, advocacy work and long-term professional therapy.

For children, counselor Meg Branson works with them in play therapy.

"We've found that the children are pretty resilient," Ms. Anderson said. "The kids understand that what happened was not their fault.

"The moms and dads are the ones who don't bounce back as fast. We especially work with the parents who are worried about what they could have done different, that they shouldn't have let their daughter go to the slumber party, that their son shouldn't have gone to the park with the other boys," she said. "It's hard to get through that there is nothing they could have done differently. ... These parents are secondary victims, victims by association."

While the center is there for victims, it also takes an active role in trying to prevent these crimes. MRCC presents informative programs about public awareness, rape avoidance and age-specific programs for the community.

Permian Basin CAPP (Child Abuse Prevention Program) also offers educational programs for parents and children to prevent child abuse and neglect.

"People see us as a rescue team, but really most of the work we do is pro-active," Ms. Anderson said. From January to June, more than 6,000 people in Midland have been reached by MRCC programs.

"The school program is really neat," Ms. Anderson said. "The center had the program all along, but when (former director) Lanell Honeyman took over, she worked with the schools to get the programs approved so they could be presented.

"The good news is that after several revisions it was approved, but the downside is that it isn't a part of the curriculum."

Last year was the first year for the program's approval in the schools.

"Basically what we do is give the kids back the word 'no.' We teach them about OK touches and not-OK touches. We teach them that anything that makes them uncomfortable is not OK. And we teach them that if something does happen to them, they must tell somebody," Ms. Anderson said.

The program is designed to be age appropriate for each grade, kindergarten through high school.

With the kindergarten children, the program uses books and puppets.

"The puppets develop a relationship with the class and with each other, then the puppets may have a hug that lasts too long or a not-OK touch. We ask the children what they would do, and explain that they must get away, that they can say 'no' and that they should tell an adult," Ms. Anderson said.

"It's important to give your child the word 'no.' But as parents and adults, we take it away from them," Ms. Anderson said.

Think about it.

"What is the first word most babies say?" she asked. "It is usually daddy. Actually, it is a 'D' sound with a lot of vowel-syllables behind it, but the fathers always say it's daddy. The next word is usually mommy. But what is the next word most children learn?

National expert sets fall conference

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

A victim of child abuse — who later became a perpetrator — will lead workshops on the subject in Midland this fall.

George Barfield, a national consultant for the prevention and elimination of child abuse, will speak in Midland Oct. 25-27, following his appearance on the television special, "Scared Silent: Exposing and Ending Child Abuse."

The one-hour special, hosted by Oprah Winfrey, will be aired 9-10 p.m. Sept. 4. It will air simultaneously on CBS and NBC networks, and the Public Broadcasting Service.

"This is the first time in the history of television that a non-news event will be carried in prime time by three different networks at the same time," said Carole Steele Boyd, director of Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program (CAPP).

"Scared Silent" will present six true stories of inter-generational child abuse and will profile both victims and perpetrators, to depict how abuse starts and how it can be stopped.

"Without exception, all the perpetrators we interviewed for this film (hundreds) — and all those we filmed — were victims of abuse in their childhoods," said Nicki Huggins of Arnold Shapiro Productions.

"Scared Silent" was produced and co-written by Oscar and Emmy Award winner Arnold Shapiro ("Scared Straight" and "Rescue 911"). The show will focus on stopping and preventing the three major types of abuse: sexual, physical and emotional.

"For child abuse to continue, victims must remain both scared and silent — hence our title," Shapiro said. "Our goal is to help everyone break the silence, speak out, and stop further pain, injury and death. As individuals and as a society, we cannot co-exist with any form of child abuse."

Barfield will present two workshops in Midland. On Oct. 25 he will present "I Can't Believe You Said That!" a workshop designed to help adults learn to have a positive influence on the lives of their children and grandchildren through communication.

Debbie Lindsay, Parent Partner Program Coordinator for CAAP, and a participant in previous Barfield workshops in Oakland, Calif., said the workshop teaches parents to affirm their child's self-esteem. "For example, if your son says: 'Mom, I want to be a fireman,' you should say, 'I know you will be the best fireman anyone can be.' The same goes for being a garbage collector."

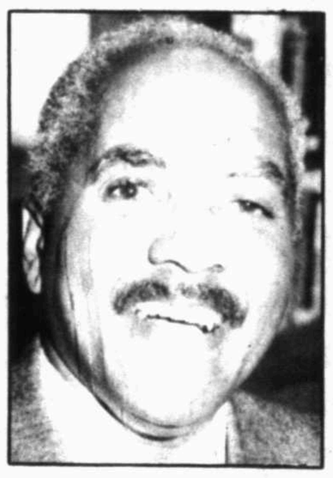

Ms. Lindsay said a child "needs to feel that his or her ideas are good. And when they say something totally inappropriate, don't blame the child and give them the responsibility of being a bad person. Instead, say they are having a bad day."

Barfield also will conduct the two-day workshop "If You Could See Me ..." Oct. 26 and 27. The workshop will train participates in cultural awareness.

"Anyone who works with children should be aware of norms and expectations of children of different cultures," Ms. Lindsay said. "Something that is apropos in one culture isn't in another."

The program coordinator said her previous training sessions with Barfield were "incredible. He kept us spellbound for three days. We laughed and we cried. It was great."

For more information on the seminars call 685-3007.

George Barfield will speak in Midland Oct. 25-27, following his appearance on "Scared Silent: Exposing and Ending Child Abuse," hosted by Oprah Winfrey on Sept. 4.

SUFFER THE CHILDREN

PROGRAM: Teachers initiate request for presentation

(From 9A)

"It's 'no.' We teach them this word," Ms. Anderson said. "We tell them, 'No! Don't run with the scissors in your hand. You might fall and the scissors will cut you.' 'No! Don't pull on the handle of a pan on the stove. The hot water will burn you.' "

Children file away this information in two cabinets in their minds. In one cabinet goes all the things that will hurt them such as the scissors and hot water, while they file the word "no" away in another cabinet with things that will protect them, Ms. Anderson explained.

"Then as parents, we do an awful thing to our children. Mom walks in a room and sees her child decorating the new wallpaper with a magic marker because there just wasn't enough color in the paper. And Mom scrunches up her face and says, 'Come here, right this minute.' "

The child is already familiar with the tone of voice and the face mom is making and those things are filed away in the cabinet of things that can hurt, Anderson said. "But over in the cabinet of things that will protect, the child finds the word 'no' and blurts out to Mom, 'No!' "

The usual reply is "Don't say 'no' to me, I'm your mother. ... or your father, aunt, uncle, a close family friend, an adult ...," Ms. Anderson said. "The message the child gets is 'Don't say no to adults. Do what adults tell you to do.' And so when an adult is giving a not-OK touch, the child doesn't know he can say no."

"In the high school program, the main focus still is to give the kids back the word 'no,' " Ms. Anderson said, While teenagers understand they have a right to say no, they must learn to deal with peer pressure.

"We've had a really great response with the guys," at the high school level, Ms. Anderson said. "It's sometimes tough to get through to the 'men and women of the world,' but through the program we give them permission to say no. We let them know that they don't have to 'score' to be cool. We explain the risks of not being responsible."

The high school program is taught in mixed classes — male and female together — where two or three short films are shown about date rape.

"We ask the kids to comment on it, which often leads to remarks like, 'Well, look at the way she was dressed. She was asking for it. She was teasing him. Girls lead you up to a point and then say no.' This usually sets the girls off, admitting that maybe some girls do tease, but no still means no. Another common remark is 'After all the money a guy spends, doesn't he deserve something?' " Ms. Anderson said. "We usually remind them that an expensive prostitute can cost as little as $50, and ask them if that's what they are asking their date to be?"

Each class is geared to a level of acceptance for that age and the program generally lasts one class period. In order for the program to be presented in a classroom, the teacher must call the Rape Crisis Center and request it. Permission slips are sent home for parents to sign, consenting for their child to be a part of the program.

"The center will give a preview to the parents if they are concerned about the content, or, if the teacher approves, parents can attend the program when it is given to the class," Ms. Anderson said. "It's a good way to let parents see what the kids go through everyday."

Teachers or other organizations interested in having the Rape Crisis Center present the program can call MRCC at 682-7273.

California wildfires destroy one town, surround another

McARTHUR, Calif. (AP) — Firefighters struggled Saturday to surround a 35,000-acre wildfire that destroyed one town and skirted another, forcing 7,500 people from their homes.

The blaze in mountainous Shasta County was among several burning in the tinder-dry West, including a 160,000-acre fire near Boise, Idaho, that threatened to leap a river separating it from several homes.

Firefighters also battled smaller blazes in Utah, Oregon and Southern California.

Cooler, moister weather that settled over most of Northern California was expected to help firefighters, exhausted by a week of battling huge brush and timber fires in temperatures often near 100 degrees. But a cold front also brought moderate winds that could whip up flames.

Hundreds of firefighters used bulldozers to encircle most of the Shasta County blaze, dubbed the Fountain Fire, but only 15 percent of the ring was secure, Joe Silva of the state Department of Forestry said Saturday.

Investigators said they hadn't determined the cause of the fire, which began Thursday and overran the small mountain town of Round Mountain, destroying up to 60 structures.

The fire passed Burney on Friday night, but authorities kept the town's 3,200 residents from returning in case winds blew the flames back.

By early Saturday, many evacuees began returning home, but Gary Matteson pitched a tent at the edge of a fairgrounds.

"I can stay here a year if I have to," he said, pointing to a footlocker filled with freeze-dried food and survival gear.

Matteson believed his home in Burney was untouched. Other residents were less fortunate.

The California Highway Patrol gave Larry Barnes 15 minutes to abandon his house in Round Mountain. Five minutes later, flames were in his front yard.

"We now have a 50-foot by 50-foot patio. It was a two-story building," said Barnes, who went back overnight to view the damage.

Barnes got out with a cat, two dogs, his car and the clothes on his back. He lost two cats, another dog and all his possessions.

Elsewhere in Northern California, authorities lifted an evacuation order in Calaveras County, where a fire that scorched 18,000 acres was contained. The blaze destroyed 117 structures, at least 42 of which were homes.

In Idaho, the so-called Foothills Fire sparked by lightning earlier in the week pushed to within six miles of Boise before turning away.

The fire exploded under wind gusts of 40 mph on Friday, jumping the the Boise River's south fork. It destroyed at least one building, believed to be an uninhabited house, and forced the evacuation of 100 people in the small community of Prairie.

"Depending on which way the wind blows, it could jump the middle fork of the Boise River, and if it gets over there, there are a lot of structures," said Pat Entwistle at the Interagency Fire Center.

Up to 600 more firefighters moved onto the fire lines, reinforcing more than 300 already there. The fire had stormed across a 20-mile-by-12-mile area in five days.

"This is possibly the most severe fire situation we've ever seen," fire boss Bill Casey said. "Seven years of drought have completely dried out the trees and shrubs, and the fire is burning extraordinarily hot and fast."

At one point on Friday, it covered 20,000 acres — 31 square miles — in less than two hours. One of the casualties was a 186-foot Ponderosa pine believed to be the oldest in Idaho and the second-largest in the nation.

In the Payette National Forest in western Idaho, residents continued returning to the small historic mining town of Cuprum near Hells Canyon on the Idaho-Oregon line. They were evacuated two days ago when a 14,000-acre fire pressed withing several hundred yards of homes.

In Utah, firefighters extinguished a 2,750-acre grass fire near the Little Sahara recreation area but crews continued to struggle Saturday with wind-whipped blazes in western Utah's deserts and mountains.

Bush, Clinton offer vastly different economic views

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Their gimmicks and vague promises aside, President Bush and Gov. Bill Clinton present contrasting pictures of the state of the U.S. economy and starkly different views about what needs to be done in the next four years.

Bush maintains that the U.S. economy is inherently healthy and that the government should take a hands-off approach and leave the free market alone.

Clinton holds that the economy is seriously off track and that the government should step in and actively change the course.

The economy is an important issue in any presidential campaign. But rarely has it been so central as it is now. When voters have been asked in surveys this year what the most important problem is facing the country, the economy swamps all others.

Bush believes wealthy Americans are taxed too much. Clinton would raise their taxes.

Bush would cut government programs to the bone to lower the budget deficit. Clinton would expand government spending on capital projects like roads and bridges, transportation systems and computer networks.

Bush would loosen government regulations so that businesses could become more prosperous. Clinton wants new regulations on business to protect the environment and force energy conservation.

Bush's ideas about health care and job training are grounded in tax incentives. Clinton would require employers to provide medical insurance and training to their employees or pay money to the government to do the job for them.

Bush favors free trade at almost all costs. Clinton is increasingly taking the view that the United States should be tougher on its trading partners.

The sharp distinctions between the candidates' economic positions were underscored last week.

In his speech Thursday night in Houston accepting the Republican Presidential nomination, Bush declared, "Don't let anyone tell you that America is second rate." The main problem, he went on, was "a simple fact: Government is too big and spends too much."

Contrast that with what Clinton told the Detroit Economic Club in an hour-long luncheon speech Friday.

"Our economy is struggling, and the American dream is in trouble," he asserted.

Lawsuits illustrate anguish that AIDS inflicts on society

N.Y. Times News Service

A Philadelphia woman sues a funeral home for refusing to embalm the body of her son, who died of AIDS. The nation's largest law firm is ordered to pay $1 million to the estate of a gay lawyer who had filed charges of discrimination.

A Wisconsin woman sues after being artificially inseminated with HIV-contaminated semen. A Texas man with AIDS sues his insurer for cutting off his coverage. A California man with AIDS sues a pedicurist for refusing to cut his toenails.

The list goes on, and on. AIDS is omnipresent in America, where an estimated 140,000 people have died of the disease. Talk of AIDS has reached the podiums of both political parties.

And a wave of AIDS-related lawsuits has swept over the courts. Most involve discrimination, the blood supply and criminal prosecutions, but there are innumerable other permutations, concerning everything from free speech to child custody to libel to will contests.

"AIDS continues to be a hugely divisive force, and this strife is being played out in the courts," said Lawrence Gostin of the American Society of Law and Medicine.

"The cases not only reach into intimate personal relationships — between families and lovers, doctors and patients, employers and employees — but all our major social institutions: schools, the health care system, the insurance industry, prisons, the military."

Lawyers and judges have been forced to adapt hoary legal doctrines to a new disease as well as to grapple with some 500 new statutes inspired, sometimes in fits of panic, by the epidemic.

The story has its inspirational side: AIDS law clinics and courses, AIDS law publications, AIDS law practitioners have popped up overnight.

Woody says he has no qualms about dating Mia's daughter

NEW YORK (AP) — Woody Allen says there are no incestuous overtones to his relationship with the adopted daughter of his ex-lover Mia Farrow, and that he took nude pictures of the young woman because she asked him to.

"I am not Soon-Yi's father or stepfather," the filmmaker told Time magazine Friday in his first interview since the affair became public. "I've never even lived with Mia. I have never in my life slept in Mia's apartment. I was not any type of father to her adopted kids in any sense of the word."

Farrow has 11 children, seven of them adopted. Allen has acknowledged becoming involved with Soon-Yi Farrow Previn, who is believed to be about 21 years old.

"I didn't feel that just because she was Mia's daughter there was any great moral dilemma," the actor-director said in the interview for Time's Aug. 31 issue.

As for the nude photographs, Allen, 56, said Miss Previn had talked about becoming a model and, after they became lovers, asked him to take the pictures.

"At this time we had an intimate relationship, so I said sure, and I did," he said. "It was just a lark of a moment."

Farrow, 47, was Allen's lover and the star of his movies for the past 12 years. She suspected a sexual liaison when she found the photos.

A Korean orphan adopted as a child, Miss Previn doesn't have a birth certificate, but her age has been variously given as between 19 and 21.

The Allen-Previn romance became public after Allen sued Farrow for custody of their biological son, Satchel, 4½; their adopted son, Moses, 14; and their adopted daughter, Dylan, 7.

Connecticut police are reported to be investigating allegations that Allen sexually molested Dylan. Farrow has made a videotape questioning Dylan about the allegations.

Allen accused Farrow of fabricating the charge to get the upper hand in the custody case; Farrow's camp countered that the investigation began before Allen sued.

Taped beating of King locks officer's life in freeze-frame

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As he turns 30 this week, the policeman who struck the most blows against Rodney King faces a second trial in the beating, but Laurence Powell insists: "I didn't do anything wrong."

With the grainy beating videotape, Powell's life locked in a freeze-frame 17 months ago. The only thing clear now is that he will never be a cop again.

Even if he is acquitted, he said, "There's no way this department would want me back on the street."

Since his suspension from the Los Angeles Police Department, Powell has had to sell his suburban condominium, has developed migraine headaches and says he thinks no further than his federal civil rights trial later this year. A status conference on the case was scheduled for Thursday.

His uncertain future is the reason there will be no birthday celebration Wednesday. It's also why he hasn't married his longtime girlfriend, LAPD Officer Terry Gutierrez.

"You can't make plans with something like this hanging over your head," he said. "This is just like a colossal wall to living a normal life."

He could be sentenced to 10 years in prison.

"That's the worst thing that could happen to anyone," he says, adding a phrase he uses often: "I didn't do anything wrong."

What he did on March 3, 1991, was raise his baton and repeatedly beat King, a black motorist pulled over by police after a chase. A nearby resident videotaped the beating and its broadcast heightened racial tension in Los Angeles, fueled outrage over police brutality nationwide and eventually brought the downfall of then-Police Chief Daryl Gates.

'You can't make plans with something like this hanging over your head. This is just like a colossal wall to living a normal life.'

—Laurence Powell, L.A. officer

Powell, fellow officers Theodore Briseno and Timothy Wind, and Sgt. Stacey Koon, were tried on assault charges in suburban Simi Valley. On April 29, all but Powell were acquitted on every charge; the jury deadlocked on one excessive force count against him.

Within hours of the verdicts, Los Angeles began to burn. The three days of rioting left more than 50 people dead.

"I figured there would be protests but I thought it would be civilized," Powell said. "I wouldn't call the riots protests. It was just an excuse for criminals to go out and rob and burn things down for no reason."

He bristles at suggestions that the videotaped beating of white trucker Reginald Denny by black men during the riots was the King beating inverted.

"There's no comparison at all," Powell said. "We were police officers doing our job and they were criminals committing a crime."

He denies any racial motivation, although all four officers are white.

"I'm not a racist person," Powell says, noting that his girlfriend is Hispanic, his mother cares for multiracial foster children and that he once received a city commendation for furthering race relations.

"I don't think they give that award to KKK grand wizards," he said sarcastically.

Powell didn't always want to be a policeman. As a boy growing up in the Glendale area, he aimed for electrical engineering and began college majoring in physics. But his father, Edwin, was a county marshal and after a stint as a reserve officer Powell left college for the Police Academy, graduating in 1987.

"I loved the work," he said. "I felt every time someone went to jail, like for drunk driving, maybe I saved someone's life."

Then came the King beating.

"I thought there would be people who wouldn't understand what happened and wouldn't like it," he recalls. "But I thought at least I followed department policy.

Gang-related TV commercial draws charges of racism

EVANSTON, Ill. (NYT) — When Lt. Michael Gresham first saw the city's new public announcement comparing black street gangs to neo-Nazis and hooded Ku Klux Klansmen, he "endorsed it 100 percent."

The comparison, the Evanston police officer said, was painful but appropriate. "I know some critics say you can't compare gangs to hate groups," said Gresham, who heads the Police Department's gang unit. "But I don't know what you call murder; it's not love."

When Rochelle Washington, a black member of the City Council, first saw the announcement, she was so incensed that she stormed out of the room and slammed the door.

"It's targeted directly at the black community," she said recently. "They are saying all black males are a threat to society."

Although the 30-second television announcement has not yet been broadcast, it has touched off angry debates and protests in this affluent, racially integrated suburb that borders the North Side of Chicago on the shore of Lake Michigan.

Evanston's Human Relations Commission, which authorized the creation of announcement, hopes that Chicago television stations will begin showing it in a couple of weeks.

The spot, a biting production, is part of the city's multimedia campaign against street gangs, a small problem that some fear is growing in Evanston. "We're not the gang capital U.S.A. by no means," said Gwen Rucker, the chairwoman of the Human Relations Commission. "And we want to keep it that way. We want to keep gangs out of Evanston. We want to save the children. But the adults get caught up in their imagery and never, ever, hear the message. I'm surprised at the level of the attacks against the commission."

The announcement begins with a neo-Nazi on the screen, flashing a "Sieg Heil" salute as a voice-over states, "If they gave a medal for killing black people, this gang would win a bronze." A written message on the screen reports that from 1981 to 1991, neo-Nazis committed 12 known murders.

Next, a hooded Klansman appears, holding a torch, as the voice-over states, "This gang would win the silver." The screen message reports that the Klan was responsible for 20 known murders from 1960 to 1991.

Finally, a young black man, tattooed and wearing a baseball cap, cut-off shorts, heavy jewelry and a tank top, appears on the screen, the sounds of gunfire in the distance.

In the original version of the spot, the voice-over stated: "But this gang would win the gold. If you're in a gang, you're not a brother. You're a traitor."

The final screen message reports that black gangs committed 1,300 known murders in 1991 alone.

Police suspect serial killings

DETROIT (AP) — A 23-year-old man was charged with murder Saturday in three of nine killings authorities suspect were the work of a serial killer, and police said they have evidence connecting him to the others.

"He's linked to all of them," said Highland Park police Sgt. James Dobson.

Benjamin Thomas Atkins, who has lived in several Detroit-area cities, was arraigned in Inkster on one count of first-degree murder and one count of felony murder in the death of Debbie Friday, 31. Her body was found Dec. 14 in a Highland Park basement, a week after she disappeared.

Her death was the first in a string of murders of young women whose bodies were found in a 1.4-mile area of Highland Park and Detroit.

Clark terminates Lee

Rebels shut out by San Antonio team in year's first scrimmage

By Terry Williamson
Sports editor

SONORA — The safest place to watch Midland Lee scrimmage against San Antonio Clark here Saturday morning was in the Bronco Stadium end zone.

The Lee offense didn't mess up the end zone grass once in six possessions, losing to Clark by a 1-0 touchdown count. Lee did get to Clark's 19-yard line on its first possession, but after that, you'd have to rent an Arnold Schwarzenegger movie to find any excitement on this Saturday.

To say the least, the Lee wishbone was not clicking. It chugged once or twice and then died like an old car that's been sitting in the garage too long.

Defensively, the Rebels were adequate, but unimpressive, yielding 129 passing yards. Clark senior quarterback Rad Weaver completed eight of 13 passes for 110 yards and bit Lee for the scrimmage's only TD on a 22-yard scoring strike to a wide open Casey Cates late in the scrimmage.

The Lee defense did produce one fumble and an interception, but defensive backs Ben Moore and Mike Carrasco had to make last ditch tackles on Clark runners to prevent two more long TDs.

Still, Lee head football coach Earl Miller, who usually reacts to an outing like this with ranting sermons, was taking the results with a surprising calm — and maybe an aspirin or two.

"We are green as this grass," Miller said while pointing to the turf, "but we've been worse off at this stage before than we are now. We've just got a lot of juniors playing who haven't been under fire. I saw some wide eyes out there. The juniors are going to have to come through, or we're going to have to find someone else to play.

"Still, Clark is a great scrimmage for us. They have a great team and they have a lot of defensive people back from last year. We can use this scrimmage to our benefit and we still have time to turn into a good football team. We do have a lot of work ahead of us when we get back to Midland."

Lee running back Sherman Dedrick, who led the team last year in rushing with 841 yards and 12 touchdowns, had 30 yards on his first two carries, but had negative yardage the rest of the scrimmage to finish with 26 rushing yards. Phillip Sims, running with Lee's second offense, led all rushers in the scrimmage with 81 yards on 12 carries.

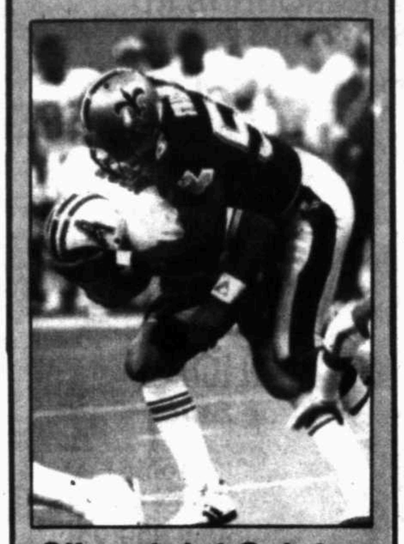

Lee is expected to pass more this year with junior quarterback Courtney Turner, but Turner didn't start well, completing only one of five passes for 30 yards to senior tight end Ryan Tucker. Lee didn't throw to the 6-5 Tucker again and ended the scrimmage hitting only two of seven passes. Devin Gilbert had a 16-yard completion to Marlon Henry.

"Actually, we moved the ball pretty good, but we only had 10 plays to work with on each possession and

Lineman dead

DAVIS, Calif. (AP) — Former NFL defensive lineman Mike Wise was found dead in his home, the coroner's office said Saturday in a brief statement that did not list the cause of death. He was 28.

Wise, a fourth-round draft pick by the Los Angeles Raiders in 1986, played with LA for six seasons until he was waived this summer by Cleveland after going to the Browns as a Plan B free agent.

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Texas A&M football coach R.C. Slocum and the Texas Longhorns' John Mackovic said they were honored by pre-season rankings in The Associated Press 1992 preseason college football poll.

The Aggies were ranked seventh in the nation behind Miami, Washington,

"That's something (the ranking) that we work for and I think it's a credit to our young men in the program, to be considered one of the top teams in the country," said Slocum, who is preparing the Aggies for their season opener next Wednesday against No. 17 Stanford.

RANKIN — Their highly successful coach of the past four years resigned to take the head job at Merkel.

And the nucleus of playoff-hardened seniors that carried them to the state quarterfinals in 1991 was lost to graduation.

Yet none but the hasty would suggest that the Rankin Red Devils' days as Class A playoff participants are anywhere close to being numbered.

While former head football coach Troy Kennedy led Rankin to four straight playoff adventures — twice reaching the quarterfinals where the Red Devils fell each time to the eventual state champions — the mammoth void left by his departure for Merkel was dealt with swiftly, confidently and from within by the Rankin school board.

RANKIN — James Troy Kennedy carried the Red Devils to new heights during his four-year tenure as head football coach here.

And now the Rankin players will carry the memory of their former mentor out onto the gridiron, wearing "JTK" shoulder patches on their uniforms in his honor.

Kennedy, who resigned his Rankin post last February to take over the football program at Merkel, succumbed to a heart attack and died Aug. 10 on the practice field during his first official workout with the Merkel Badgers.

"Our upperclassmen asked me if we can put a 'JTK' patch on our jerseys, and I felt that it was the least we could do," said Raul Sanchez, who assisted Kennedy, then succeeded him at Rankin.

"We will do that. And we will also still try to do things the way Coach Kennedy did them because his

Dykes shows no interest in Hadnot

LUBBOCK — Normally when the Southwest Conference football beat writers descend on the Texas Tech athletic dining hall once a year for the final stop of their annual fact-gathering pilgrimage, they are treated to a series of one liners by Red Raider head coach Spike Dykes.

Patterson

This year, the writers had a little joke for Spike.

Written on the chalk board in the media room by one of the witty scribes was: "Running back available, Call Butch at (512) RUN-FAST." Dykes snickered, but chose not to comment or even joke about Butch Hadnot, the University of Texas running back who reportedly contacted both Texas A&M and Houston in search of a school that wanted his services.

Despite not talking about Hadnot, Dykes had obviously been working overtime on his joke writing before the media's arrival.

The Red Raiders turned their season around after a 37-14 loss to Texas A&M last October, going on to win five of their last six. Of the Texas A&M loss, Dykes said, "We could've borrowed 17 Russians that day and not beaten them."

On backup QB Chuck Wyatt, a junior two-sport standout, Dykes said, "He's been pitching for the Cincinnati Reds every summer. I think he's been throwing mostly balls so he's decided he's going to hang 'em up and come back and play football."

The Friday press conference followed a Thursday night scrimmage that saw several Red Raiders limp off the field, including lineman Bingo Mancillas.

"Bingo was on crutches this morning," Dykes deadpanned, "but I think he must have a deal worked out with the crutch company."

On the man-to-man defense that sometimes didn't work well for Tech last season: "It's hard to play man-to-man when their man is way faster than yours. That's scientific football there."

Jokes aside, Dykes hinted that '92 could be a better year than last season.

"We were 1-4 at one point and it looked like we were going to be 1-100," Dykes said. "We just lost all our confidence. When you don't believe you can win, losing breeds losing. Probably more so last year than any other year I've been coaching.

"Hopefully last year's finish means something and it has carry over value. Hopefully we can pick up where we left off."

Oilers, Cowboys take NFL exhibition victories

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Warren Moon's pinpoint passing, Al DelGreco's perfect kicking and Houston's hard-hitting defense combined for a victory over New Orleans in preseason action.

Moon, who led the Oilers to a 20-3 halftime margin, was 10 of 18 for 113 yards and two touchdowns.

Houston is 4-0 on the preseason, the Saints fall to 2-1.

Quarterbacks and offensive tackles for both teams were equipped with transmitters and receivers as part of an NFL experiment aimed at overcoming crowd noise. The system, which was activated when a team moved inside the 20-yard line, allowed the tackles to hear the quarterback's signals.

The Saints had little opportunity to try the system, seldom making it into Houston's territory.

New Orleans self-destructed in the first half with dropped passes, fumbles, missed tackles, penalties and interceptions. The Oilers, meantime, took advantage of every break and Houston's defense pressured New Orleans' quarterbacks and receivers to shut them out in the first two periods.

By the time Moon moved to the sidelines to sign autographs and Cody Carlson took over in the second half, the Saints were struggling to regroup and regain the momentum they seemed to have in their first two exhibition victories.

It never happened.

Instead, Cody, who was 10 of 15 for 152 yards, added a touchdown. Then in the fourth quarter, Houston's third-string quarterback Bucky Richardson came on to lead the Oilers to another score Al DelGreco's fourth field goal of the game, a 35-yarder.

Cowboys 17, Broncos 3

IRVING — A lucky bounce touchdown pass by Troy Aikman and rookie Chad Hennings' fumble recovery that resulted in another score carried the Dallas Cowboys to an exhibition victory over the Denver Broncos.

The Cowboys evened their NFL preseason mark at 2-2 while Denver dropped to 1-3.

The Cowboys took a 7-0 lead on a big turnaround just before the end of the first period.

Larry Brown intercepted a John Elway pass at the Dallas 14 to counter a deep Broncos threat before Troy Aikman directed the Cowboys on an 87-yard scoring drive in 10 plays.

Emmitt Smith dashed 31 yards and Aikman hit Kelvin Martin on an 18-yard pass and completed a 10-yarder to Darryl Johnston.

Then the Cowboys got lucky as safety Tyrone Braxton batted an Aikman pass in the air and Martin ran under it for a 16-yard scoring completion.

The Cowboys second touchdown came in the fourth quarter when rookie Tommy Maddox fumbled after being hit by Tony Hill and Hennings returned it 13 yards to the Denver 7. Tommie Agee scored two plays later on a 1-yard run.

Dallas squandered two other scoring chances.

Safety James Washington intercepted an Elway pass and returned it 18 yards to the Denver 16. Linebacker Mike Croel stopped Smith cold on fourth and one from the Denver 7.

Dallas drove to the Denver 25 late in the first half but Lin Elliott missed a 43-yard field goal attempt.

Elliott, who is fighting Brad Daluiso for a job with Dallas, made a 38-yard field goal to complete the scoring with 1:49 left in the game.

Elway suffered a mild concussion in the first half but Denver doctors said he was OK and could play next week. Dallas lost defensive tackle Russell Maryland in the first half when he suffered a dislocated toe on his left foot.

Elway hit 10 of 18 passes for 120 yards while Aikman completed 10 of 17 for 95 as both starting quarterbacks played only a half. Aikman suffered a lacerated chin and stitches were taken.

Dallas is now 3-2 in preseason games against Denver.

Redskins 27, Raiders 23

LOS ANGELES — Martin Mayhew returned interceptions of two Jay Schroeder passes for touchdowns on consecutive plays in the first quarter as the defending Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins held off the Los Angeles Raiders.

The win was the first in four exhibition games for the Redskins while the Raiders fell to 0-3.

Mayhew, a fourth-year cornerback from Florida State, picked off a pass in the left flat and ran 33 yards into the Los Angeles end

Lions 42, Patriots 9

PONTIAC, Mich. — Detroit's Mel Gray caught one scoring pass and returned a kickoff 95 yards for another touchdown in the Lions' exhibition victory over the winless New England Patriots.

It was the most points scored by the Lions in the preseason since a 49-10 victory at Philadelphia in 1971.

The Lions (1-2) pounced on the Patriots (0-3) for two quick touchdowns in the first eight minutes and led 21-3 early in the second quarter. They added another 21 points in the third quarter.

Bengals 20, Colts 0

CINCINNATI — Dave Shula took the wraps off his offense in his home opener as coach of the Cincinnati Bengals, and Boomer Esiason completed 17 of 24 passes for 230 yards and a touchdown in an exhibition victory over the Indianapolis Colts.

The Cincinnati defense, worst statistically in the NFL last season, also stepped up, halting an Indianapolis drive at the Bengals' 1, forcing three fumbles and returning an interception for a touchdown.

Dolphins 22, Bucs 7

MIAMI — Fourth-stringer Doug Pederson threw two touchdown passes in the final period to help the Miami Dolphins beat Tampa Bay in a mistake-filled exhibition game.

Pederson, a free-agent acquisition fighting for a spot on the roster, entered the game late in the third quarter and completed a 44-yard pass on his first play.

Jets 20, Giants 14

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The New York Jets are getting downright defensive about the NFL exhbition season.

The Jets clamped down on their fourth straight opponent, beating the New York Giants. The Jets have won their first four exhibition games for the first time in 26 years and have yielded only 48 points.

The victory was the Jets' first against their local rival during the exhibition season since 1987 in a series the Giants lead 14-9-1.

Rams 16, Packers 13

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Different kicker, same ending.

Substitute Steve Domingos hit a 36-yard field goal in overtime to rally the Los Angeles Rams to a victory over the Green Bay Packers, the second straight game LA won on an extra-period kick.

The game went into overtime after Darryl Henley got his second interception.

Hill leads at halfway point

Associated Press

KENMORE, Wash. — Defending champion Mike Hill shot a 6-under 66 and took a one-stroke lead Saturday after two rounds of the GTE Northwest Classic.

Hill was at 135, 9-under par, on the 6,455-yard Inglewood Country Club course and a shot ahead of Kermit Zarley and Larry Laoretti.

Zarley also had a 66 and Laoretti, the U.S. Senior Open champ, had a 69. Dave Stockton shot 68 and Arnold Palmer 71 and were tied at 138.

Orville Moody, Dick Goetz, J.C. Snead, Al Geiberger and Rocky Thompson were tied at 139. Moody shot a 68, Goetz, Snead and Geibergers 70s and Thompson a 71.

Seniors

Last year at this tournament, Hill made up eight shots in the final round with a 64 to take the title. He likes this position a little better.

"I'd rather be where I am," Hill said. "You can afford to make a mistake with a one- or two-shot lead. You don't always win from the lead, but it's a good position to be in."

RANKIN: Red Devils open against Iraan servers just naturally expect to carry on its winning tradition.

"We probably lost the best coach in West Texas when Coach Kennedy moved in February," said Sanchez, who helped coordinate the offense as an assistant under Kennedy. "But we have high expectations here in Rankin and the football players have high expectations.

"We all expect to be in the playoffs. That kind of pressure comes with the job, but we think these Red Devils are up to the challenge."

It will be a somewhat young group of Red Devils that takes the field for the 1992 campaign. Just two seniors return from last year's squad, which stomped everyone in District 8-A, posted a 10-2 record and wound up losing a 15-3 decision to state champion Memphis in the quarterfinal round.

"We've got to have good senior leadership and some of our juniors are going to have to grow up fast because there are not a lot of us," said junior center and middle linebacker Keith Braden, one of 15 returning lettermen. "We'll have to play as a team all the time."

And they will have to face some good teams along the way. Realignment following the '91 season pushed nearby rival Garden City into District 8-A, giving the league another unit recently accustomed to making the playoffs. And while the Bearkats reached the state semifinals a year ago under head coach Sam Scott, Scott up and moved his family to 8-A member school Wink during the winter and will try to lead the Wildcats toward the postseason.

"This district is a lot tougher now that Garden City has come back (from District 9-A), and we're happy they're back because it's always a rivalry of mutual respect," Sanchez said.

"And Wink is going to be much improved. Coach Scott is a super coach, and his son Shea was the all-state Class A quarterback last year and he's projected to repeat at that position."

But young though they are, the Red Devils have some repeaters of their own.

Senior flanker Joey Varela has earned all-district honors at several positions over the years, and he rushed for better than 500 yards last season. The 152-pounder also plays outside linebacker and should prove invaluable on both sides of the ball.

The other senior that's back from last year's team is wide receiver Jeff Jones, who grabbed passes for over 400 yards. Jones will again help anchor the secondary on a defense that did not give up a single point in district play last season.

Senior running back Carlos Garcia missed 1991, but was a starter the year before.

The Red Devils will have the services of junior Jo Jo Guerra at quarterback. Guerra is on the small side at 125 pounds, but he got a lot of snaps as a sophomore when he backed up Kirk Kennedy, who not only spent four years as Rankin's starting quarterback, but also punted, did the kicking and stood out in the secondary.

"Because Kirk (Kennedy) did so many different things for us, we're concerned about special teams and a lot of jobs, like punting and kickoffs are still up for grabs," Sanchez said. "And we'll have a more diversified option game than we had when the offense was built around Kirk.

"We'll have more people touching the ball."

One of those persons will be swift tailback Roy Abalos, a junior who will look for daylight behind three more juniors with starting experience on the offensive line.

The 170-pound Braden, all-district center Baylor Walker (185) and tight end Robert Guadarrama (175) make up a solid — if not too large — foundation on which to build the line.

"We can't rely on the power game we had last year because we're not very big," Varela said. "But even though the line is smaller, it will still be good.

"We'll be throwing more to more receivers and hopefully our defense can come through like it did last year and shut out everbody in district."

Rankin opens the season once again against perennially tough Class 2A rival Iraan on Sept. 4, then winds up the year on Nov. 13 with a game at Garden City that ought to have an impact on the playoffs.

"We have a lot of different faces on the coaching staff and we lost five or six super-leadership seniors. That's going to make a difference," Sanchez said. "But we feel like we can patch up the holes and still be a good football team."

COACH: Kennedy an inspiration

way was always the ethical, right way."

The Red Devils advanced to the state playoffs all four years under Kennedy, twice reaching the quarterfinals as they did a year ago.

"You can't play football without thinking of Coach Kennedy," said senior receiver Jeff Jones. "He was a great coach. Everything he says sticks in your mind."

And what Kennedy had to say was not always strictly about Xs and Os. He touched the lives of Rankin youth in other ways.

"He was not only a great football coach, but he taught us discipline and everything that would make us grow up to be good young men in the eyes of the public," linebacker Keith Braden said. "He took a lot of pride in us."

The Red Devils, with 'JTK' on their shoulders, will be reflecting some of that pride this fall.

Snow suspends Pioneer game

BUTTE, Mont. (AP) — Snowballs took the place of baseballs Saturday night when the Pioneer League game between the Idaho Falls Gems and the Butte Copper Kings was suspended in the seventh inning because of snow.

"It was 88 degrees yesterday, so I'd say, yes, this was unusual," Butte general manager Mark Ruckwardt said. "Just another crazy day in minor league baseball, I guess."

Skies were overcast at the start of the game between the affiliates of the Atlanta Braves and Texas Rangers at Alumni Coliseum, which is at an altitude of 5,800 feet.

Future of Kickoff Classic up in air

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The game has featured three Heisman Trophy winners, four defending national champions and some matchups worthy of determining No. 1.

Bo played Bernie with Vinny watching in the wings. Nebraska met Penn State. The Rocket lit up an Irish night.

The Kickoff Classic enters its 10th year with lot of highlights, a few disappointments and a future still to be determined, even as Iowa prepares to meet North Carolina State in college football's traditional opener Saturday at Giants Stadium.

The biggest question to be answered: Will there be a Kickoff Classic in New Jersey after 1993? The current contract expires next year. The agency that runs the Meadowlands sports complex asked for an option year but did not get it.

Rules mandating appearances by certain conferences and the number of times certain schools can play in the game also are being questioned.

"This game has established the Meadowlands as one of the major players on the college football schedule," said Robert E. Mulcahy, president and chief executive officer of the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority. The authority manages the game under the auspices of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics.

Mulcahy would not say how much the authority has earned. But he noted the NACDA has collected $2.7 million.

Morris beats ex-teammates in Metrodome

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Jack Morris shut down the team he carried to the World Series title last season, allowing seven hits over seven innings to lead the Toronto Blue Jays over the Minnesota Twins, 4-2.

In his first Metrodome appearance since his 10-inning, seven-hitter gave the Twins a 1-0 Game 7 victory over Atlanta, Morris received a mixture of boos and cheers from the crowd of 50,465, the Twins' fourth largest this season.

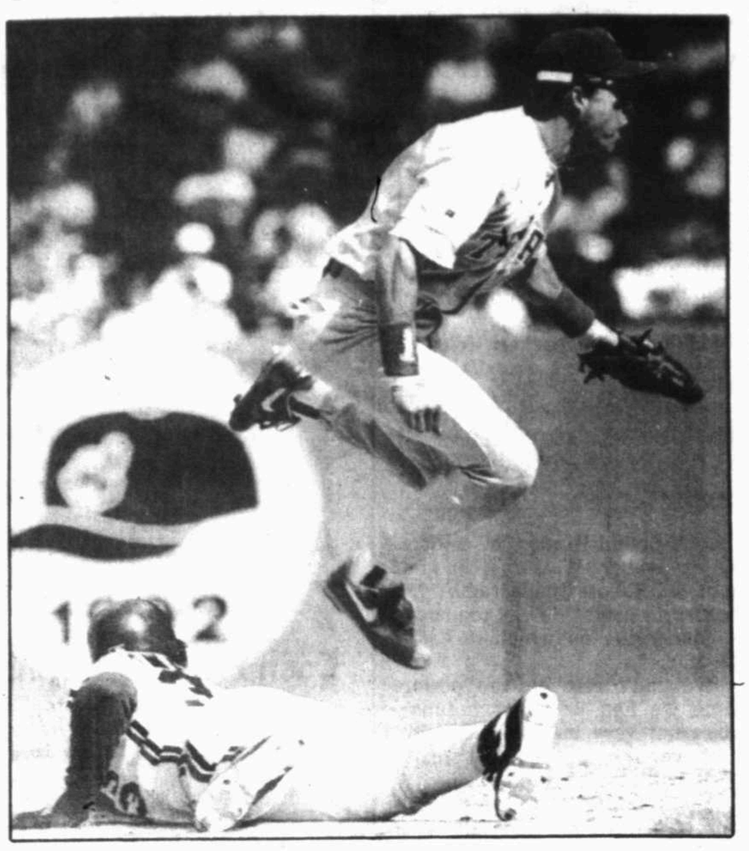

AL Roundup

Morris (16-5), who signed with Toronto as a free agent in December, allowed one run, struck out seven and walked one, tying Chicago's Roger McDowell and Texas' Kevin Brown for the AL lead in victories.

Duane Ward pitched the eighth and Tom Henke finished for his 22nd save, allowing a run on an error by shortstop Manuel Lee.

Pat Borders doubled twice and singled as the Jays stopped a three-game losing streak and opened a three-game AL East lead over Baltimore. Minnesota has lost six of seven and dropped six games behind AL West-leading Oakland.

David West (1-2) entered with a 4-1 record and 1.69 ERA against Toronto — including 5 2-3 scoreless innings in last fall's AL playoffs — but lasted only 3 1-3 innings. He allowed three runs — two earned — three hits and three walks.

Cleveland's Thomas Howard slides into second safely under Texas shortstop Jeff Huson.

Morris gave up a second-inning run on Chili Davis' double and Randy Bush's single, and escaped trouble in the first and third innings when Kent Hrbek ended both threats with hard lineouts.

Red Sox 10, Mariners 8

BOSTON — Tom Brunansky greeted reliever Russ Swan with a two-run homer in the eighth inning, giving Boston a victory over the Seattle Mariners in the Red Sox's biggest offensive showing of the season.

With one out, Shawn Barton (0-1) gave up a single to Bob Zupcic. Brunansky then hit Swan's 1-0 pitch over the left-field wall for his 13th homer of the year.

The Red Sox, who entered the game with the AL's lowest batting average, had a season-high 14 hits. Jeff Reardon, who had blown his previous two save opportunities, got his 26th.

In the battle of basement teams, Boston ended a three-game losing streak, while Seattle lost for the second time in seven games.

Indians 6, Rangers 1

CLEVELAND — Jack Armstrong returned to Cleveland's starting rotation for the first time in a month and pitched five hitless innings before tiring, beating the Texas Rangers.

Paul Sorrento homered, doubled and singled for the Indians, winners of a season-high five straight and nine of 12. Cleveland has now won 58 games, one more than all of last year.

Texas lost for the seventh time in eight games.

Armstrong (5-13) struck out six and allowed only one baserunner in the first five innings, walking Ruben Sierra in the fourth.

The Rangers chased him in the sixth, when Jeff Huson singled and scored on Jeff Frye's double. Texas left the bases loaded in the inning when Ted Power retired Juan Gonzalez on an infield fly and struck out Kevin Reimer.

Armstrong was making his first start since July 18. He was 2-0 with a 1.13 ERA in his six relief appearances, after going 2-13 with a 5.43 ERA in his first 19 starts.

Bobby Witt (9-12) lost his fifth straight start, matching the worst streak of his career.

White Sox 3, Royals 2

CHICAGO — Steve Sax hit a two-run homer in a three-run fifth inning as the Chicago White Sox beat the Kansas City Royals.

Greg Hibbard (9-5) allowed two runs and five hits in 5 2-3 innings, struck out four and walked two as the White Sox snapped a two-game losing streak and won for the 17th time in 24 games.

Bobby Thigpen, who hasn't saved a game since July 28, relieved with one out in the eighth, but was removed after David Howard singled with one out in the ninth. Scott Radinsky allowed a single to Gregg Jefferies, then got Wally Joyner on a flyout and George Brett on a groundout for his 14th save.

Yankees 3, Angels 0

NEW YORK — Melido Perez pitched eight strong innings before leaving with a muscle strain, and the New York Yankees beat the California Angels.

Perez (10-13), bidding for his first shutout since Sept. 17, 1990, gave up four hits. He came out to warm up for the ninth inning, but was pulled before throwing a pitch because of a strain in his left side.

Perez fanned eight and took over the AL strikeout lead with 165, one more than Boston's Roger Clemens. Steve Farr worked the ninth for his 19th save.

Athletics 5, Orioles 3

BALTIMORE — Dennis Eckersley pitched two scoreless innings for his 39th save in 40 opportunities, and the Oakland Athletics beat the Baltimore Orioles.

Jeff Parrett (9-1) replaced Kevin Campbell in the fifth inning and retired nine of 11 batters, striking out five. After Parrett gave up a leadoff double to Glenn Davis in the eighth, Eckersley surrended a one-out single but worked out of trouble.

Eckersley retired the Orioles in order in the ninth. The A's are 51-0 this season when he pitches.

Brewers 5, Tigers 1

MILWAUKEE — Rookie Pat Listach went 4 for 4, stole two bases and scored twice, leading the Milwaukee Brewers past the Detroit Tigers for their fourth straight victory.

Cal Eldred (4-1) extended his scoreless streak to 22 innings, and combined with two relievers on a five-hitter.

Vincent tells owners he's no quitter

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Commissioner Fay Vincent, responding to a letter from the two league presidents that asked for a major league meeting to discuss the term of his office, sent a letter to the 28 baseball owners Thursday saying he would not resign.

A source who has seen both letters said Saturday that American League president Bobby Brown and National League president Bill White sent their letter to Vincent at the request of several owners.

Under the Major League Agreement, a commissioner cannot be fired during his term, and his powers cannot be diminished.

Vincent was elected in September 1989 to serve out the remainder of the five-year term begun on April 1, 1989 by A. Bartlett Giamatti, who died of a heart attack.

"I'm not going to get into that," Vincent said Saturday from his vacation home in Harwich Port, Mass., on Cape Cod. "I'm not going to confirm or deny there was a letter."

Several owners, angry with Vincent's decisions over the division of NL expansion money, NL realignment, labor relations, and other issues have pushed for Vincent's resignation since the bickering became public in June.

The leaders of the anti-Vincent group are said to be Jerry Reinsdorf of the Chicago White Sox, Peter O'Malley of the Los Angeles Dodgers and Bud Selig of the Milwaukee Brewers.

San Francisco Giants owner Bob Lurie this week denied a report that he had joined the anti-Vincent camp in exchange for other owners' support of his proposed sale of the Giants to Florida investors who would move the team to St. Petersburg, Fla.

A source who has seen the letter described it as "toughly worded."

MHS spikers open at Duncanville

DUNCANVILLE — Midland High opened its 1992 varsity volleyball season here this weekend at the Tournament of Champions, an event exclusive to playoff teams from the previous season.

The Lady Bulldogs drew a pair of tough teams to open the double-elimination event, falling to fourth-ranked Richardson Pierce 15-4, 15-10 and taking a loss to No. 1 Arlington Martin (which was sent to the losers' bracket by Houston Stephen F. Austin) by the same score.

But, according to MHS coach Sonja Pittman, the Lady 'Dogs' 0-2 record is no indicator of their play.

"It is the most impressive tournament I have ever seen. The Dallas papers certainly touted it as one of the top tournaments in the state and all the coaches I talked to agreed," she said of the 32-team event.

"We played so well, we really weren't intimidated. We went there knowing we were certainly underdogs and certainly didn't have anything to lose, and we didn't show any fear," Pittman said of MHS, which made the playoffs as the District 4-5A runner-up last season.

The Lady 'Dogs return to play Tuesday, when they play a dual match against Big Spring and Snyder in Big Spring.

Lee volleyball team now 2-2

MONAHANS — After finishing second in pool play Friday, Midland Lee's varsity volleyball team advanced to the consolation bracket final Saturday here at the Monahans tournament.

The Lady Rebels (2-2) fell to El Paso Burges in Saturday's opener, 15-9, 15-2, but rebounded to defeat Monahans 15-7, 15-2. That victory put them in the consolation final, where District 4-5A foe Abilene Cooper downed Lee 12-15, 15-7, 15-6.

"El Paso Burges was a very good team and we hung with them for a while, but they beat us in two games," said Lee coach Anita Corder. "They ran a pretty sophisticated offense where they got a lot of isolations. Our middle blockers were frozen.

"But then we beat Monahans and that was fun because we've developed kind of a rivalry against them. We just took eight players (Kim Blackburn is out with a pinched nerve and Phyllis Turner had a stomach virus), so against Cooper we were just about worn out.

"But we got to play a lot and that's what we wanted to do. We didn't have all the depth we needed but everybody played, the bench got some work and everybody did a great job," Corder said.

The Lady Rebels next play Tuesday, when they host Andrews at 6:30 p.m. in the Lee gymnasium.

Greenwood spikers take JV consolation

MONAHANS — In its second year of volleyball play, Greenwood opened its 1992 varsity season by winning the junior varsity consolation bracket here Saturday in the Monahans tournament.

The Rangerettes, now 3-1 for the season, next play Tuesday in a dual meet with the Tahoka and Lubbock Christian varsities at Tahoka.

Hall/VDS entry on fifth row

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. — John Andretti, driving the Midland-based Hall/VDS Pennzoil Special, qualified in the top 10 of an IndyCar race for the first time in more than a month.

Andretti will start from the 10th spot (outside of the fifth row) on the grid in today's Elkhart Lake 200 on the four-mile Road America course. He earned that position by averaging 131.301 mph in Saturday's qualifying.

Paul Tracy won the pole position with an average mph of 133.074 on the road course. The race will be televised on ESPN at 12:30 p.m. (CDT) today.

Astros beat up Phillies, 14-9

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Jeff Bagwell hit a two-run triple and Pete Incaviglia hit a two-run homer in a six-run seventh inning as the road-weary Houston Astros beat the Philadelphia Phillies, 14-9.

Houston, playing the next-to-last game of its 26-game, 28-day road trip, battered three pitchers for seven hits in the seventh. The Astros, who had a season-high 18 hits in all, are 11-14 on the swing, caused by this week's Republican National Convention in the Astrodome.

With Philadelphia leading 7-5, Bagwell tripled in two runs off Mike Hartley (5-5) and scored on Eric Anthony's single off Kyle Abbott for an 8-7 lead. Incaviglia added his 10th homer, a drive off the clock on the facing of the upper deck, and Luis Gonzalez's RBI groundout made it 11-7.

Pinch-hitter Steve Finley hit an RBI groundout in the eighth off Bob Ayrault, and Houston scored twice in the ninth off Mitch Williams on Ken Caminiti's RBI single and Bagwell's walk with the bases loaded. Mariano Duncan and John Kruk hit run-scoring singles in the ninth off Doug Jones.

Willie Blair (3-6) got the victory for pitching the sixth inning.

Pirates 9, Giants 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds, Jay Bell and Mike LaValliere each hit two-run homers to back Doug Drabek's strong pitching over eight innings as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the San Francisco Giants.

It was the first win in five tries at Candlestick Park this season for the NL East-leading Pirates, who hit the 70-win mark. Their 17th victory in 22 games put them 17 games above .500 (70-53).

Drabek (10-9) gave up four hits and two runs and has pitched at least eight innings in 11 straight starts. Bob Patterson pitched the ninth inning.

Pittsburgh chased starter Francisco Oliveras (0-3) during a four-run third, when the Pirates sent nine batters to the plate, hit two homers and increased their lead to 6-1.

Alex Cole's one-out single was followed by Bell's sixth of the year and Andy Van Slyke walked ahead of Bonds' 21st.

In 2 1-3 innings, Oliveras allowed six runs and five hits, including three homers, along with a walk.

Braves 3, Cardinals 2

ATLANTA — Pete Smith pitched a four-hitter for his third straight victory since being recalled from the minors last month and the Atlanta Braves edged the St. Louis Cardinals.

Smith (3-0) struck out six and walked two in his first complete game since May 9, 1990. It was his 10th career complete game.

Smith, bothered by arm problems in 1990 and 1991, was recalled from Triple-A Richmond on July 31 to fill the fifth starter role after Mike Bielecki hurt his arm and was sidelined for the season. Smith has a 2.05 ERA in five games, four of them starts.

David Justice hit a two-run homer in the seventh inning off Mark Clark (2-7), rallying the Braves from a 2-1 deficit. Justice connected after a single by Jeff Blauser for his 11th home run of the season.

The Braves had lost two straight games, and had not dropped three in a row since July 26-28. The Cardinals had won three consecutive games.

Expos 3, Reds 1

MONTREAL — Marquis Grissom homered and also stole home as the Montreal Expos beat Cincinnati, the Reds' fourth consecutive loss.

Cincinnati dropped seven games behind first-place Atlanta in the NL West, the Reds' largest deficit of the season. Cincinnati manager Lou Piniella was ejected in the eighth inning by home plate umpire Dutch Rennert for arguing balls and strikes.

Mel Rojas (4-1) pitched 2 1-3 shutout innings in relief of starter Brian Barnes as Montreal won its third straight, and John Wetteland got five outs for his 28th save in 36 chances.

Greg Swindell (12-6) pitched on three days' rest for the first time in 178 career starts.

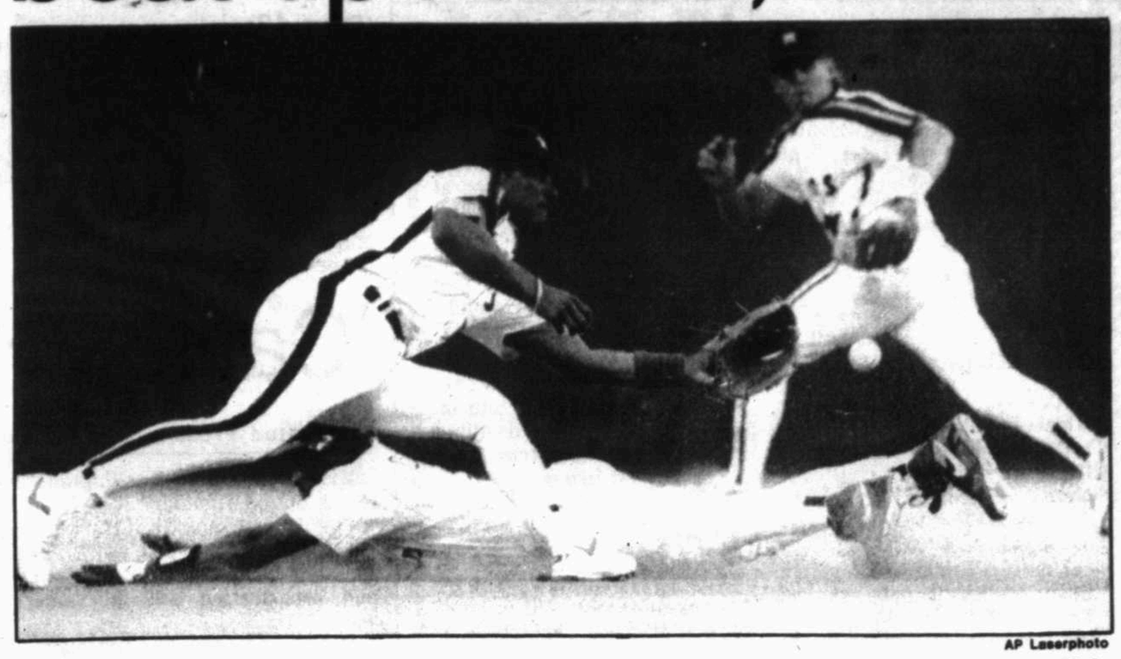

Padres 4, Mets 2

SAN DIEGO — Gary Sheffield homered twice and Bruce Hurst beat the Mets for the fourth time this season as the San Diego Padres defeated New York.

Sheffield homered in the fourth and eighth innings, giving him 27 for the season and tying teammate Fred McGriff for the NL lead. Sheffield also is tied for the RBI lead at 87 with Philadelphia's Darren Daulton and leads the league in hitting at .339.

Hurst (13-7), who has shut out the Mets three times this season, allowed three hits in eight innings as San Diego ended a five-game losing streak. He struck out three and walked one before Randy Myers pitched a one-hit ninth for his 26th save, including his last 13 chances in a row.

Daly rebounds at International

Associated Press

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — Just when it seemed John Daly was going to quietly fade from the spotlight, golf's biggest hitter found another course vulnerable to his awesome length.

It was right under his nose.

The Castle Pines Golf Club, the site of Daly's new home, proved to be the layout he was looking for in a year-long romp around the world following his PGA triumph at Crooked Stick.

He didn't win in that follow-up year, gave up his title last weekend and appeared ready to slip away from center stage.

Back home, however, Long John overpowered Castle Pines with a third-round 67 Saturday and led the way into the shootout of Sunday's final round with a record total.

"I think that's probably the best ball-striking, chipping and putting I've done all year," Daly said. "It feels great to be able to play that way again."

He scored 15 points Saturday and had a total of 31 under the unique format in which medal scores do not count, only the points gained on a modified Stableford system.

Points are awarded for the players score on each hole: 5 for eagle, 2 for birdie, zero for par, minus-1 for bogey and minus-3 for double bogey or worse.

All of those points are wiped out in the final round, however.

REBELS: Lee to try EP Jefferson next

it's hard to score that way unless you have some really big plays. We just didn't break anything open, but we probably could have scored two or three times if we had been able to drive on in before running out of plays," Miller said.

Lee did amass 202 rushing yards for a 248 total. Clark had a meager 64 yards rushing for a 193 total.

"Pass coverage was not what we wanted, but Clark's quarterback (Weaver) is a good one and they have good receivers. We need to see someone who can throw like him early," Miller said.

Miller did add that he thought a little fire was missing from the team overall.

"We didn't compete well and the kids know it," Miller said. "Now we have something to look at and to show to them."

Lee did get some good news from two junior linebackers. Cory Haynes had three sacks while Brian Henderson had two. Safety Ben Moore also had an interception.

Lee has a week to work out the kinks before the Rebels get another early Saturday wake-up call for a scrimmage in Van Horn against El Paso Jefferson at 10 a.m.

Maybe all Lee needs is a good morning slap in the face. This game just wasn't designed to be played in the morning, some 160 miles from bed.

'Canes, Huskies top preseason poll

Associated Press

Miami's No. 1 and Washington's No. 2. Sound familiar?

The Hurricanes and Huskies, who finished 1-2 in last year's Associated Press college football poll, are starting 1992 the same way.

Miami received 40 first-place votes and 1,511 points in preseason voting by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

Washington, which earned a share of last year's national title by winning the USA Today-CNN coaches' poll, received 12 first-place votes and 1,453 points in the AP preseason survey.

Being No. 1 is nothing new for Miami, which has won four national championships in the last nine years.

"It's a little bit of an extra burden, but we're used to it by now," coach Dennis Erickson said. "Everybody is always ready to play us, whether we're No. 1 or not."

If the Hurricanes finish No. 1, they will become the first back-to-back AP champs since Alabama in 1978-79 and the first preseason pick to win the national title since Oklahoma in 1985.

"That's out there and we know it," Erickson said. "But our goal hasn't changed. Every year, we want to compete for the national championship and go to a major bowl."

Notre Dame is third in the preseason poll with six first-place votes and 1,405 points. Florida is fourth, followed by Florida State, Michigan, Texas A&M, Penn State, Alabama and Syracuse.

Florida State, Michigan, Texas A&M and Alabama got one first-place vote apiece.

Nebraska is 11th, trailed by Colorado, Clemson, Georgia, Oklahoma, Iowa, Stanford, UCLA, Ohio State, California, Tennessee, Mississippi State, Georgia Tech, BYU and Texas.

Texas A&M hasn't been ranked that high since 1986, when the Aggies peaked at No. 7. Auburn failed to make the preseason rankings for the first time since 1982.

For the second straight year, three teams from Florida start the season in the top five. No other state has ever had three teams ranked so high at the same time.

When Florida State meets Miami at the Orange Bowl on Oct. 3, the outcome will probably play a major role in determining the national champion. Miami also has tough tests at Iowa, Penn State, Syracuse and San Diego State.

"It's the hardest schedule we've had in a long time," Erickson said. "But we're not complaining. We like challenges here."

The Hurricanes got a new challenge Tuesday, when star receiver Lamar Thomas and reserve running back Jason Marucci were indicted on charges of fraudulently obtaining financial aid. It is unclear whether they will be allowed to play this season.

"Obviously, we've had some distractions," Erickson said. "But we had distractions last year and we still went undefeated. Right now, it doesn't seem to be affecting us. But I guess we won't really know until we play a few games."

SWC: Tech bubbling under

(From 1B)

The job now is to live up to that ranking, Slocum said.

"Obviously we've got a lot to do since we've not played a game," he said. "To prove this ranking is justified is what this season is all about."

Mackovic, in his first year at Texas since arriving from Illinois, said the Longhorns' ranking might have as much to do with tradition as talent.

"I think it's a compliment to the Texas football program. But it's not necessarily anything we can hang our hat on," Mackovic said. "We have a lot of work."

Texas opens its 100th season Sept. 5 in Austin against Mississippi State.

The Aggies were scheduled to leave Sunday for Anaheim, Calif., where they'll battle the Cardinal.

"I think it's a great challenge," Slocum said, pointing out that Stanford is an older, more experienced team. "I think it's one of the biggest tests we're going to face."

Thunder Rumble wins New York's Travers Stakes

Associated Press

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. — Thunder Rumble proved his victory in the Jim Dandy three weeks ago was no fluke by becoming the first New York-bred in 125 years to win the Travers on Saturday at Saratoga.

In joining Ruthless (1867) as the only New York-bred to win the prestigious stakes for 3-year-olds, Thunder Rumble exploded through the stretch and won by 4½ lengths in 2:00 4-5 for 1¼ miles, equalling the third-fastest time in the race's history.

Thunder Rumble, ridden by Herb McCauley, beat Devil His Due and earned $600,000 from a purse of $1 million. He paid $17.20, $7.80 and $5.40.

Devil His Due, ridden by Eddie Maple, who was seeking a third Travers victory, paid $6.20 and $4.80 and finishing 4½ lengths in front of Dance Floor, ridden by Chris Antley.

Dance Floor, who finished a neck in front of pace-setting Dixie Brass, returned $6.80 to show.

The victory for Thunder Rumble was his fifth in seven starts this year and his fifth in six starts on the dirt.

Thunder Rumble, who was talked about as being a Kentucky Derby horse in the spring before illness forced him out of training, was fifth in the 10-horse field down the backstretch. After the run around the turn, McCauley had him placed fourth behind Dixie Brass, Furiously and Alydeed, the Preakness runnerup who was sent off as the 8-5 favorite.

In the 1⅛-mile Jim Dandy, Thunder Rumble had overtaken Dixie Brass in the deep stretch. On this pleasant, sunny Saturday, Thunder Rumble overtook Dixie Brass with a little more than an eighth of a mile to go and simply ran away from his rivals.

"The way my horse ran in the Jim Dandy, you would think he would benefit from the extra eighth mile," said Richie O'Connell, who trains Thunder Rumble for Konrad Widmer of Switzerland.

Widmer had never seen his colt win until Saturday.

Mayor salvages bit of beauty pageant that ran out of funds

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The mayor of this City of Brotherly Love tried to prove it Friday by restoring a little shine to a beauty pageant that never went on because it went broke.

Mayor Edward Rendell arranged for a buffet lunch of donated food in his City Hall reception room, free lodging and lots of courtesy touring and meals until remaining contestants return home this weekend.

"I figured these young ladies from all over the country would have nothing but bad thoughts and would always remember their awful experience in Philadelphia, which was humiliating and tragic, and I didn't want that to happen," said the mayor.

Saturday's pageant was canceled when promoter Gerson Antonelli, 31, of Philadelphia ran out of money to put on his first Miss International U.S. Pageant. Antonelli couldn't be reached for comment Friday; his telephone was disconnected.

The pageant was supposed to have prizes totaling $50,000, including $10,000 plus a car and cruise for the winner. She would then have been eligible for an international pageant next year in Antonelli's native Brazil.

The 28 contestants arrived last weekend, and panic struck Thursday when their hotel told them Antonelli had stopped paying for their rooms.

One of the pageant's judges, Lisa Lyerly, said she alerted police. She told The Philadelphia Inquirer that Antonelli was a "con artist" who had already spent nearly $30,000 in entrance fees.

Police questioned Antonelli on Thursday but released him after determining it was a civil matter and no crime had occurred. The mayor, on his way home, said he witnessed a wild scene outside the hotel when Antonelli was picked up.

"I saw several beautiful young women, with tears streaming down their eyes, screaming and pounding on the police wagon," Rendell said.

The mayor stepped in and arranged for free meals and lodging for the remaining 13 contestants.

Fire personnel meet Odessa's challenge

When a disaster occurs, as it did Thursday in Odessa when lightning set off a fire at Champion Chemical Co., a community gets the opportunity to see how well its emergency personnel are prepared for such a situation. The response to the fire and the toxic smoke billowing from the chemical plant tested Odessa's police, fire, and medical personnel, but overall they performed exceptionally well.

Those at the scene of the explosions and fire indicated that although firefighters initially were overwhelmed by the size of the fire, personnel tediously and diligently worked to bring the inferno under control.

The resulting evacuation of some 5,000 residents in a three-mile radius of the plant went extremely well, according to Michael Brock, deputy emergency management coordinator for the Odessa Fire Department. He said, "I am not familiar with any complications at all." In a situation like that in Odessa, that truly is a noteworthy accomplishment.

It is a testament to the preparedness of Odessa's emergency personnel, and to the response of that community's residents to the potentially deadly situation. The orderly way in which residents were evacuated from their homes by emergency personnel without causing panic attests to their professionalism.

The people of Odessa have every reason to be proud that their emergency teams are prepared to deal with a disaster in such an orderly, efficient, and safe manner.

The city's fire chief, the person designated to head response to any disaster, was in San Antonio at the time of the time of the explosion, his deputy was out of town attending a seminar, other city officials were not in the city, and a serious lack of water supplies had to be combatted by firefighters at the blast site. All of those factors make the city's response to the disaster even more notable.

City seeks rosy solution to its smelly pig problem

Midland City Council will review its policy Tuesday regulating livestock to determine how it applies to pot-bellied pigs. The small and rotund porkers have been increasing in popularity as pets, which has raised a perplexing problem for the council.

If pot-bellied pigs truly are pets that are kept in the house, and not raised for food nor allowed to wallow in mud or to root for grubs, there might not be a legitimate reason to ban them from the city. Health concerns and objections of neighbors to unsightly pens and noise historically have formed the primary basis for most farm animals being banned from cities.

However, if pig owners feed their animals more food and permit them to grow, they may become too large and unruly to be maintained inside the city limits and merit being excluded from the city.

Midland naturalist Midge Erskine also has raised the question of whether it is humane for pig owners to feed the necessarily small portions of food required to keep their cute pot-bellied pigs small. That is a question each pig owner must address personally, but also one which the council should debate since it would not want to put Midland in a precarious position of condoning cruelty to animals.

But on the issue of whether pot-pellied pigs truly are farm animals or cuddly pets, the answer may well depend more on the owner's perspective than upon what label the council chooses to attach to the animals. As William Shakespeare wrote in Act II of Romeo and Juliet, regarding a potentially better smelling subject:

"What's in a name? That which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

ANOTHER VIEW

Plan to speed drug approval could present model for feds

A bipartisan coalition in Congress is quietly launching an effort to speed approval of new drugs by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

The deal, with backers as diverse as Democratic Sen. Ted Kennedy and Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch, would charge U.S. drug makers a series of fees to pay for 600 new FDA employees. In return for this $75 million a year, the FDA promises to cut new drug review time in half.

If this works, sick people should benefit by having new drugs available more swiftly, the FDA will have more funds to do its job and drug companies would get their drugs to market more quickly.

. . . Besides the advantage to people who need such new drugs, it is important to try less conventional approaches to government financing while the federal budget deficit remains so high. Success here could present a model for other federal regulatory agencies. It's certainly worth a try.

Moscow becomes city of homelessness

MOSCOW — There's a specter haunting Russia. Alexandra Muhina says it's homelessness.

A journalist in her late 20s, Muhina is one of the country's first advocates for the homeless. Just last year, there were no shelters for the homeless, because for the past 64 years the Communist government denied there was any homelessness in the "worker's paradise."

Anderson

In a taxi ride to one of Russia's first shelters, Muhina told us about her work with an organization called HELP, launched by a formerly homeless artist.

"In the last five years, we've had a maximum of 15 stories in the news about homeless people," Muhina says. Now, almost overnight, almost 1 million homeless people have materialized in Russia — mostly because they are no longer in danger of facing two-year prison terms for street panhandling.

"The homeless situation in Russia is grim," she explains. "Children are fighting for food. Russians with advanced degrees are sweeping streets. Members of the military are living on the railways, some are returning from Eastern Europe and Afghanistan."

During our recent visit, there was a palpable fear that the ranks of the homeless will swell in coming months, posing a serious political challenge to the Yeltsin government, and raising the stakes for the Bush administration.

As a recent article in Pravda points out, Russia's worsening economic conditions and homelessness, coupled with its brutal winter, may make the coming months even bleaker: "Unless (winter) is stopped, (it) will bring out into the streets an army in no way similar to the one that took up positions in Moscow on Aug. 19 of last year. Following the (storms) will be all the robbed and hungry, unemployed and homeless. It will be no operetta putsch, but a real Russian revolt."

Muhina's job has been to help rescue some of the refugees of this fast unfolding economic revolution. She and other advocates quickly note that Russia's homeless shatter many Western stereotypes: They tend to be exceptionally well-educated and well-trained — although many battle alcoholism.

In all cases, the homeless have had to fend for themselves. There are no government services, shelters or rehabilitation programs.

Alexander Sakharov is one of two dozen residents in a shelter on the outskirts of Moscow that operates on a first-come, first-serve basis. With Muhina serving as translator and tour guide, Sakharov mentions nine separate railway stations he calls home. His personal odyssey began in 1989 when he was carted off to a psychiatric hospital because he was a dissident. Soviet authorities accused him of not raising his children correctly, and his two young daughters were removed from his apartment by police during a midnight raid.

Nikolai Ostalhav is another shelter resident this August evening. He moved from Siberia to Moscow and also lived in a railway station. A self-described artist, Ostalhav keeps all his paintings in a box in the railway station to keep his work secret.

"In Russia, it's dark and we're waiting for our new Napoleon," he told our associate Melinda Maas. "I'm tired from my empty pockets, my empty hopes, and I'm tired from these faces of drunk people and drug users."

"The Russian people are brilliant, but paralyzed," said Major Raymond Peacock of the Salvation Army, who has consulted with Russia on relief efforts. "They can talk theory and they can talk research, but when it comes down to how to get the job done, they stumble.

RUSSELL BAKER

Convention patron recalls the way they were

Convention memoirs: 1956-1992.

The nastiest convention: Chicago, 1968, Democrats naturally. If you'd seen war combat it was probably tame. If you hadn't, the onslaught of Mayor Daley's unleashed cops against defenseless political romantics was an astonishing spectacle. Dangerous if you were in it.

Baker

Everybody seemed fair game for a skull clubbing, or at least arrest. Television showed gendarmes hauling John Chancellor of NBC off the convention floor. "This is John Chancellor, somewhere in custody," he said.

Delegates entering the hall passed through battalions of Chicago cops using their pistol butts to nail up "We Love Mayor Daley" placards.

They don't make 'em like that no more. Neither party has met in Chicago since. Probably never will. That's how bad 1968 was. It's a pity because Chicago was a great convention town.

The meeting hall was down by the stockyards, so when the wind was right the pols were washed in the varied reeks of cattle slaughter. Up in the Loop big shots stayed at the delicate little Blackstone Hotel with its "smoke-filled room" where the Republican bosses had decided to make Warren Harding president in 1920.

Just across the street towered a grotesquely vast Hilton, and a dozen other hotels seemed just around the corner. It made for a humanizing coziness in years when Mayor Daley was not testy.

I never stop in Chicago now without recalling the overpowering odor, very much like vomit, which permeated my hotel that entire week, courtesy of a heroine of the left, I was told, known as "Sally the Stink."

Her contribution to the struggle against Lyndon Johnson was a chemical concoction with which she odorized enemies' turf, to show they nauseated her, I suppose.

The Republicans' nastiest convention occurred in San Francisco in 1964. It was dominated by the new wave of Western radicals behind Barry Goldwater. They were just starting to call themselves "conservatives," which was Goldwater's word for a policy of hostility to the welfare state and bellicosity in foreign policy, and were there to certify the nomination Goldwater had won in primaries against Nelson Rockefeller.

Not yet accustomed to the sweet smell of power, they behaved with un-Republican rudeness when vanquished Rockefeller tried to speak, then gave such a heartfelt executioner's cheer to General Eisenhower's stock denunciation of the press that it not only sent terror through the press platform but even left the hero of World War II visibly shaken.

The most pleasant convention was also in San Francisco where the Republicans in 1956 renominated President Eisenhower. It was an endless feast, for there was no news to interfere with the knife-and-fork work. I recall offending a waiter at a magnificent restaurant by ordering a seafood appetizer and a seafood entree.

The nuttiest convention occurred at Atlantic City in 1964 where Democrats renominated President Johnson. Again there was little to do and only one decent restaurant in which to eat the hours away. We bought salt-water taffy, watched a diving horse, resisted sales pitches for Teflon frying pans on the Boardwalk and watched Johnson torment various senators by dangling the vice presidency before them.

Russell Baker's column is distributed by New York Times News Service.

GEORGE WILL

Observer feels GOP convention was inadequate

HOUSTON — The Republican convention succeeded in the sense that the Party clearly spoke its mind. It was, perhaps, a costly success because it proved that there can indeed be indecent exposure of the mind as well as the body. Let us begin with the president's speech, which had the merit of being merely inadequate rather than, as many others were, strange.

Will

His speech was not up to the demands that his political condition placed upon it. Judged, as the speech must be, against the background of behavior that his condition has caused, his speech was (in T.S. Eliot's phrase) "dry sterile thunder without rain."

It is not news that when Nature was dishing up rhetorical gifts, Bush did not hold out his plate. But by the verve of his delivery here he proved, again, that practice makes adequate. Unfortunately, this adequacy was a reminder that his problem has not been his lack of style but rather his abundance of insincerity.

The speech would have been far better for a first term candidate. As the umpteenth reiteration of mostly familiar items, from tax cuts to school choice to term limits, for which he has been only intermittently and impotently ardent, it repeatedly raised a ruinous question. For example, when the man under whom domestic spending and regulations have exploded says, "government is too big and costs too much," people wonder why years five through eight will be better than years one through four have been.

The reasonable suspicion will be that the passion Bush showed at the podium Thursday night was ginned-up for, and will not survive, this phase he calls his "campaign mode."

But at least his speech was superior to many given here because it was about things that constitute a recognizable agenda of governance. Viewed against the American political tradition, Wednesday night, that bath in "family values," was extraordinary and, properly understood, unpleasant.

Once upon a time political parties talked about things that were clearly public matters, things government could promote or prevent, things like land for homesteaders, anti-trust policies, rural electrification, Social Security, medical care, defense and so on. Not so Wednesday night.

Then Republicans made "family values" their focus. In the process they showed that their view of government is out of focus, and they pounded the phrase "family values" into shapeless mush with a bad odor. Just slightly below the surface of Wednesday's touchy-feely sensitivity session was a serrated edge intended to open in both Clintons wounds that cannot be sutured in 75 days.

Marilyn Quayle's speech was evidence for those who say women should be kept out of combat not because they are too physically frail or morally fine but because they are too fierce to respect the rules of war. In a speech that launched an evening of sustained innuendo, she said — well, tip-toed to the edge of saying — that Bill Clinton "took drugs" and "joined in the sexual revolution" and "dodged the draft" ("ran from his responsibilities" was Lynn Martin's version an hour later). And he probably believes "that commitment, marriage and fidelity" are "just arbitrary arrangements."

As for Mrs. Clinton, well, Mrs. Quayle implied that Mrs. Clinton is one of those women who "wish to be liberated from their essential natures as women" and who in the 1960s believed — may still; can't be sure — that "the family was so oppressive that women could only thrive apart from it."

Next, Barbara Bush said: "However you define family, that's what we mean by family values." Fogginess is, apparently, a Bush family value. Her contribution to the evening's thoughts about government (this was a political convention, wasn't it?) was that families are good.

The Republicans' graceless rhetoric here compelled two conclusions:

For all their talk about America's "strength" and "greatness," their tone is of frightened timidity. These are "America the Endangered Species" Republicans, terrified that neither "family values" (see Mrs. Bush's definition, above) nor the nation can survive Mrs. Clinton.

And Republicans have caught a particularly virulent version of the Democrats' quite-virulent-enough tendency (remember the Bork confirmation fight) to turn political disagreement into moral assault.

George Will's column is distributed by Washington Post Writers Group.

LETTERS

Abortion doesn't just eliminate 'blob of tissue'

Elizabeth Macaroff's letter (Letters, Aug. 6) camouflaged the so-called "Freedom of Choice Act (FOCA)." The FOCA would:

■ Prohibit virtually any limitations on abortion in all 50 states. California Congressman Don Edwards, chief author of FOCA, admitted before a C-SPAN audience that "FOCA provides no exceptions — no exceptions whatsoever."

■ Empower the abortionist to define viability and prohibit objective criteria such as fetal age or weight.

■ Allow for doctors to be fired if they choose not to perform abortions.

Ruth Sutton's letter (Letters, Aug. 6) claimed pro-life groups wish to force women to have children, and that the right to make decisions must be "safeguarded." Is it safeguarding a scared teenager by referring her to an abortion clinic, knowing that chances are good she will not be able to have children later because of a botched abortion? Is it safeguarding parents when their daughter needs permission to get an aspirin or take a field trip at school, but can get a life-threatening abortion without their knowledge or consent? Anti-abortion groups want to:

■ Inform the unsuspecting public what abortion does,

■ Expose the many risks (including death), and

■ Help with alternatives.

Many women have abortions because they're told they have no alternatives. When the truth is revealed, only then will our rights be safeguarded.

Shondra Eppinger's letter (Letters, Aug. 9) said Planned Parenthood doesn't propagandize abortion. If that's true, then why is Planned Parenthood the largest abortion provider in the U.S., aborting a reported 122,000 babies and referring another 100,000 women for abortions EVERY YEAR? Would such an organization refer women to crisis pregnancy centers for help with abortion alternatives? Obviously not!

Abortion doesn't eliminate a "blob of tissue." Abortion stops the beating heart of a growing child. In the Bible, Psalm 139:13 says, "For you created my inmost being; you knit me together in my mother's womb." God has a special purpose for every life created at conception.

Help our Persian Gulf veterans take a stand

The Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) is asking Congress to authorize a special program to track the health of veterans of the Persian Gulf Conflict.

Coupled with an outreach campaign, the Physical Examination and Tracking Program would be aimed at allaying any medical concerns about possible environment exposures in Southwest Asia.

Veterans with service-connected problems already have priority access to VA medical services, but changes in law are needed to permit VA to offer physical examinations and follow-up consultation to veterans who otherwise lack eligibility for outpatient care.

The Operation Desert Shield-/Desert Storm Association respectfully requests that the readers of the Reporter-Telegram, their friends and associates contact their respective congressman or congresswoman urging them to support this Special Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) Program.

Many veterans of the Persian Gulf Conflict are concerned about having breathed smoke from oil-well fires in Kuwait, and some have been treated for respiratory conditions. Government-sponsored surveys are showing significant stress levels among some Persian Gulf returnees. VA physicians also received a scientific advisory on Leishmaniasis, a parasitic infection transmitted through sand fly bites.

Pulmonary or parasitic diseases are generally diagnosed and treated by the military before a service member is discharged. However, investigation indicated that Leishmaniasis can remain in a dormant stage for up to three years after infection and some Persian Gulf Conflict veterans may not be diagnosed prior to leaving military service. Pulmonary effects of Toxic Oil Field Environmental Hazardous Exposure can also take years to materialize.

The Operation Desert Shield-/Desert Storm Association urges each reader of the Reporter-Telegram and their friends to support our Persian Gulf Conflict veterans and make a stand for their future. Contact your member of Congress, urge congressional support, remember Agent Orange!

We thank each and every member of the Reporter-Telegram community for their dedication and support of our military personnel and their service to this nation in the defense of freedom.

Midland does not need another unused park

Didn't city management understand the message the citizens sent them several years ago when they voted "no" to additional parks in the bond election? Yet the mayor and parks director blatantly push ahead against the citizens' wishes and build and plan more and more new parks. The presently available parks are mostly unused.

Conditions are such that most people are either afraid or do not enjoy going to Hogan Park anymore. Go look for yourself.

The mayor says 600 new homes will be built around the new park. Who will build and live in them? Who wants to live near a park with all the blaring radios, drinking and drugs, rowdiness and so forth. The mayor and parks director should personally investigate the area near the proposed new park. If they do they will find numerous empty homes, rent houses, trashy yards and junky cars, loud mufflers and blaring radios. Is this where the mayor thinks people will build homes or move?

Ten years ago a nice development featuring Southwest-style homes was started in that area, but it has died.

A park will not induce people to build homes. However, some new industries and jobs would. Why not propose to locate this park where all the new homes are being built, across from Sam's Club near Loop 250 and 191? Don't you think those residents deserve and would love to have a new park in their area?

We truly do some stupid things. Why did the city give away the use of the Wild River Canyon location if they had to have another park out there? After all, the city already owned that land. Parks are nice, but some prudent spending and tax cuts would be nice, too.

The mayor says the city already owns most of the land that will be used for the new park — except one parcel that the owner wants $700,000 for. I'd like to know who that owner is, and how long he/she has owned the property. Or will this be like the police parking lot, where the city's prudent management paid $500,000 for land appraised at $84,000?

I am already beginning to doubt that I voted correctly for what was touted as an "experienced" person for mayor. I wonder what Thane Akins or Steve Davidson are doing?

Midland can be proud to have excellent hospital

On July 24, 1992, I suffered a heart attack at my home in Big Spring. Having experienced similar chest pains two weeks prior and not receiving adequate treatment at Scenic Mountain Medical Center during that time, my family decided we would take the risk of driving to Midland for treatment even though I was in much pain.

My sister called the emergency room at your facility to advise them we were on our way. The team of professionals that met us at the emergency room door were a relief to see. There is just no way my family can say enough good for the physicians, nurses, and emergency room personnel on duty during the evening hours of July 24.

I was admitted to CCU late that evening, transferred to the Telemetry Unit on the 4th floor on July 25, and underwent angioplasty performed by Dr. P.V. Patel on July 26. I remained hospitalized until July 30, and now remain under the excellent care of Dr. Raj Patel.

During the course of my treatment and being in the healthcare field myself (I have been associated with the Veterans Administration for 23 years), I observed many things which are a credit to your facility. Oh yes, I completed one of your patient Satisfaction Surveys for your Marketing Department, but I have never felt they were adequate at any facility when it comes to telling just how you may feel about the treatment you receive.

You should be proud of each employee of your facility for the manner in which each performs their duties: The nursing staff, beyond compare; housekeeping, cleanest hospital I've seen in a long time; dietetic service, excellent meals served by friendly employees; voluntary service, a delight to see delivering that all-important mail, flowers, snacks, and friendly smiles.

Midland can be proud to have such a facility as Memorial Hospital and Medical Center and the fabulous staff that helps operate it. Without them, the hospital would be just a building rather than a place of healing.

We can learn so much from our animal friends

As a lover of animals and current caregiver to two beautiful felines, I can really appreciate Ed Todd's discourse on cats, kittens, gift-giving and day-beds. As a Christian, I share his awe at all God's miracles, including the miracles of life and birth (in that order.) The mothering instincts of cats are certainly amazing examples of how God created His creations to function.

However, having once witnessed the precious birth of puppies some 25 years ago I've since realized it is fruitless to wait on one of my beloved animals to come to me to seek counsel on contraception. Even as they all have displayed varying human personality characteristics, not one was ever able to actually form words with their mouths or get through my dense human brain that they wanted much more from me than "out" or "food" or "love." Truly my failure, not theirs.

At any rate I took it upon myself to insure that they would remain forever unviolated and had my veterinarian take permanent measures called "spaying" and "neutering," both of which any veterinarian would happily explain to Todd over the phone.

A word of caution: Kitties allowed to roam not only become pregnant, they get run over by cars and chewed up by dogs. Unfortunately it seems that at Todd's house they need not venture outdoors for the latter to happen.

I really enjoyed hearing that his kitty presented him with the gift of her baby, her most precious possession. We learn so much about God's love for us by watching the unconditional love displayed by our animal companions. Having no babies to give me, Bennie (not knowing any better) happily brings me grasshoppers, locusts and an occasional lizard just as proudly. They are his best.

It is possible that Aroma could have been saying, "I've had enough of this now you take him!"

READERS' VIEWS on: Taxes

Officials should base budgets on reality

Attention property tax-payers! Here we go again, with the annual rhetoric as to why our taxes must ever go upward.

In the five-year period between 1986 and 1991, my tax rate has gone from $1.26/$100 valuation to $2.17/$100 valuation — a 72 percent increase. This increase was due to both a decrease in market value (25 percent) and tax increases by various taxing authorities over the period. Now again this year, the school districts (Midland Independent School District and County Education District) have proposed an increase of an additional $.17/$100 evaluation. (The county, hospital, college and city have yet to announce.) This 8 percent increase on my 1991 valuation will also be applied to a $10,000 increase in my market value, as assessed by the appraisal district in 1992. This combination alone will increase my school tax bill by 13 percent for 1992.

I am tired of elected officials or administrators whose only approach or solution to any problem is more money. Midland has a stable, or declining, economy. Perhaps we can't afford new schools, new parks, fancier hospital equipment and across the board pay raises, etc. We may need to concentrate on streamlining the administration and maintenance of what we have.

Education is essential; however, more money has not necessarily improved the system. Why not restructure what we have, and attempt to make money on the students who are undisciplined, disruptive and don't care about learning. If students can't or won't cope, get them out of the schools.

I am in forced retirement from the oil and gas industry, and not eligible for the additional exemptions or tax freeze at age 65. So what are my options?

■ Attend a public hearing in protest.

■ Protest to the appraiser.

■ Vote in a rollback election if the increase equals 8 percent or more over last year's effective rate.

■ Vote out the elected officials.

■ Sell the property. (So I won't want anything that's taxable.)

■ "Shut Up," pay the tax and perpetuate the hoax.

I think that to continue manipulating the valuations and tax rates to increase taxes or to maintain some perceived level of required spending, particularly in a declining economy, is both unreasonable and counterproductive. I challenge these taxing authorities to base their budgets and proposals on reality, and let spending be dictated by income.

Time of hearing should not deny right to attend

The Memorial Hospital Board of Directors has established that the public hearing on the 1992-93 fiscal year budget will be held at the time of their regular meeting on Aug. 26 at 2p.m. in the hospital auditorium.

The district board has, in other years, set a time that is more convenient for more citizen-taxpayers to attend. This meeting held annually has also been an opportunity for residents of the hospital district to make suggestions and inform the district board how they expect their representatives on the board to function.

The 2 p.m. time does disenfranchise working people, but if you have any opinions to express perhaps you should take a half day of vacation or ask you employer to be excused so that you can attend. Do not allow the time of this meeting to deny you the right to have your say. Join me, please.

Daniel shows positive ray of light for Midland

At about the time when I had given up hope and reverted to pure negativism about all governmental initiations, a ray of light appeared. This ray of light came in the form of "A Report to the Community" from David E. Daniel, president of Midland College.

The first thing that impressed me was the lack of kudos in front of his name, just David E. Daniel. Next came the largest surprise. In the face of reduced state funds, a shrinking local tax base, Midland College is not only holding spending in line but is reducing spending and lowering taxes. And to top off this exciting news there is no talk of reducing services.

It appears that sound management practices are being utilized. Seldom do I hear of any governmental body eliminating ineffective practices and services.

Another heart-warming part of this report read "Operating a Balanced Budget" and stated, "Operating a growing institution with fewer dollars is something most Midland businesses understand . . . and so do its households.

"Midland College has been operating an austerity program for several years as state tax revenues have declined and local tax bases eroded . . . What will not be cut is quality in instruction or services . . . Your trustees live in this community, so they are cognizant of local conditions. Their approach toward spending reflects that concern."

This report should be a benchmark for all taxing bodies. I believe a challenge for responsible government has been issued. Responsible government can be achieved.

Thank you David and the board of Midland College.

Commissioners should take a cut in their pay

Before the budget's due date, why don't the Midland County commissioners consider taking a cut in pay for their part-time job so our American veterans can keep their office open?

The veterans put up a good fight for us. So why not fight for them?

Looking forward to America's sunrise, not sunset

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NORTH SALEM, N.Y. — What impressed me as the greatest speech of President Bush's political career has strengthened my belief he will be re-elected in November for a second term.

Hearst

Looking strong, confident and relaxed, he moved swiftly to seek public support for an end to the congressional deadlock that has blocked economic recovery. The Democratic-controlled Congress has refused to cooperate in a nonpartisan effort to jump start economic growth and create work for the 7.7 percent of the American people who are unemployed. It is obvious the Democrats do not want to help President Bush win re-election.

Nevertheless, the president outlined some of the plans he has in mind for stimulating economic growth and providing work for at least some of the jobless. Among his proposals was an across-the-board tax cut and a new voluntary check-off of up to 10 percent of everyone's taxable income. The funds would be used only to reduce the deficit. Also, federal spending would have to be lowered by an amount equal to every dollar set aside for deficit reduction.

Responding to those who castigate him for devoting so much time to foreign affairs, the president reminded them he and former President Reagan brought about an end to the Cold War and ended communist tyranny in Russia and eastern Europe. Bush also stopped Saddam Hussein from gaining control of most of the world's oil resources.

An enormous deficit and a prolonged recession was the price we had to pay, but as the president said, our children and grandchildren can go to sleep without nuclear nightmares. Our leader can now concentrate his attention on our economic problems and, as he said in Houston, "I see not America's sunset but a sunrise."

Following is a report to me from Charles Lewis, chief of the Hearst Washington News Bureau, who directed our coverage of the Republican Convention:

President Bush ended his speech by quoting Democratic President Harry S.Truman, whose come-from-behind campaign in 1948 made him one of the most mentioned names in the Astrodome last week.

With the president still trailing Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton in the polls, Bush campaign aides point to Truman's campaign against Congress as a model they hope to copy in the next 10 weeks.

The model of President Gerald Ford's 1976 campaign also gives hope to the Bush campaign, even though Ford ended up losing a very close election.

As Ford himself mentioned during remarks in Houston, the similarities between 1976 and 1992 are amazing.

Ford and Bush were incumbent Republican presidents campaigning in the middle of an economic recession. Both Ford and Bush had some successes in foreign affairs but had the reputation of being relatively weak in domestic leadership.

Ford came out of the 1976 Republican National Convention in Kansas City down 30 points in the polls behind the Democratic nominee, a relatively little-known governor of a southern state, Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia. But Ford "came within a whisker of winning" that November, said Mark J. Rozell, a political scientist at Mary Washington College and the author of a new book on the Ford presidency.

Ford's campaign "was one of the best-run campaigns in modern presidential history," Rozell said in an interview describing how Ford "exploited Carter's weaknesses in foreign and national affairs.

Ford conveyed the message that "he was experienced, a known entity and the man to entrust the country to," Rozell recounted.

Speaking in Houston last week, Ford tried out the same theme against Clinton. "Our Democratic friends keep talking about change," Ford said. "Well, they got change when they got President Carter. . . . The kind of change they got was (high) inflation and 21 percent high interest rates.

"That's the kind of change they might get (with Clinton) and then we'll have four more years of disaster," Ford said.

"The whole experience of President Ford is good news for President Bush," Rozell said. "It shows that a huge lead in the polls isn't insurmountable."

Another parallel between Bush and Ford: James A. Baker, who is leaving his post as secretary of state to put some life in the Bush re-election campaign, was the manager of Ford's come-from-behind surge 16 years ago.

With the Truman and Ford experiences freshly recalled during the Houston convention, the Republican delegates left Houston this weekend looking for President Bush to pull off the same kind of November surprise.

Cool weather makes electric company sweat

By Jack Z. Smith
N.Y. Times News Service

The remarkably mild Texas summer weather has been great, hasn't it?

Well, not really — at least not if you're Texas Utilities Co.

The Dallas-based electric utility would just as soon see some eggs frying on the sidewalk, thank you.

The unusually balmy temperatures have sent the company's revenues plunging, spokesman Dick Ramsey explains.

In June and July, the revenue loss averaged "about a million bucks a day, right on the money," he said.

That's approximately $61 million in lost revenues just for those two months, compared to what revenues would have been if temperatures had been at last year's levels, Ramsey said.

And that's still not taking into account the current month, in which the abnormally mild weather has continued. Record low temperatures were set at Dallas/Fort Worth Airport for the dates of Aug. 16, 17 and 18.

Herb Jones, a veteran utility analyst for The Principal/EG&T investment banking firm in Dallas, said he already has lowered his estimate of the company's 1992 earnings by 25 cents a share "just because of the weather."

He's now projecting more-modest earnings of $3.35 a share for Texas Utilities, the parent of TU Electric, which has nearly 2.2 million residential and commercial customers and serves most of North Texas.

The utility has seen a slight increase of 25,530 customers in the past year. But system-wide electricity sales were down 11.7 percent in June and 6.3 percent in July, compared to the same period last year, Ramsey said.

The big decline has been in residential consumption, primarily as a result of customers running their air conditioners substantially less.

In June, for example, residential consumption was 19.7 percent below the level in June of 1991, Ramsey said.

The company's June revenues of $462 million would have been about $31 million higher, or 6.7 percent more, if consumption had been at June 1991 levels, Ramsey said.

Similarly, July revenues would have been $31 million higher if consumption had been at the year-earlier level, he said.

Milder-than-normal weather has plagued the utility much of this year. Its April-through-June energy sales were down 6 percent primarily as a result of the weather, the company said in a July 24 earnings report.

Texas Utilities President Erle Nye, in his heart of hearts, is probably lusting for a rash of steamy, 100-degree weather, Jones says only half-jokingly.

Support program seeks to help children survive

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

When it comes to a death or divorce, a child doesn't suffer any less than an adult.

"We think because they are younger and can't verbalize their feelings as well, they are coping," said Penny Robberson with Hospice of Midland.

But appearances can be misleading.

"All children go through a grieving process as adults do," she said.

Aware of this, Hospice of Midland is beginning a support program for children who have experienced grief or loss from death, abandonment, separation or divorce, said Ms. Robberson, site coordinator for the program.

The program — Rainbows For All God's Children — will be free and made up of 12-week sessions meeting an hour each week.

Barbara Mandry, a certified director for Rainbows in Lubbock, said many children who take part in the support group come with "misplaced guilt and unresolved grief."

But knowing they are not alone helps.

"Because it is peer support it offers the child a comfortable safe environment to share their grief with other children who have experienced similar experiences," said Ms. Mandry, who will train volunteer facilitators for the Midland organization.

"It's wonderful how they blossom when they hear other children" with similar feelings, she said.

"Children sharing with one another is the real strength of Rainbow," Ms. Mandry added.

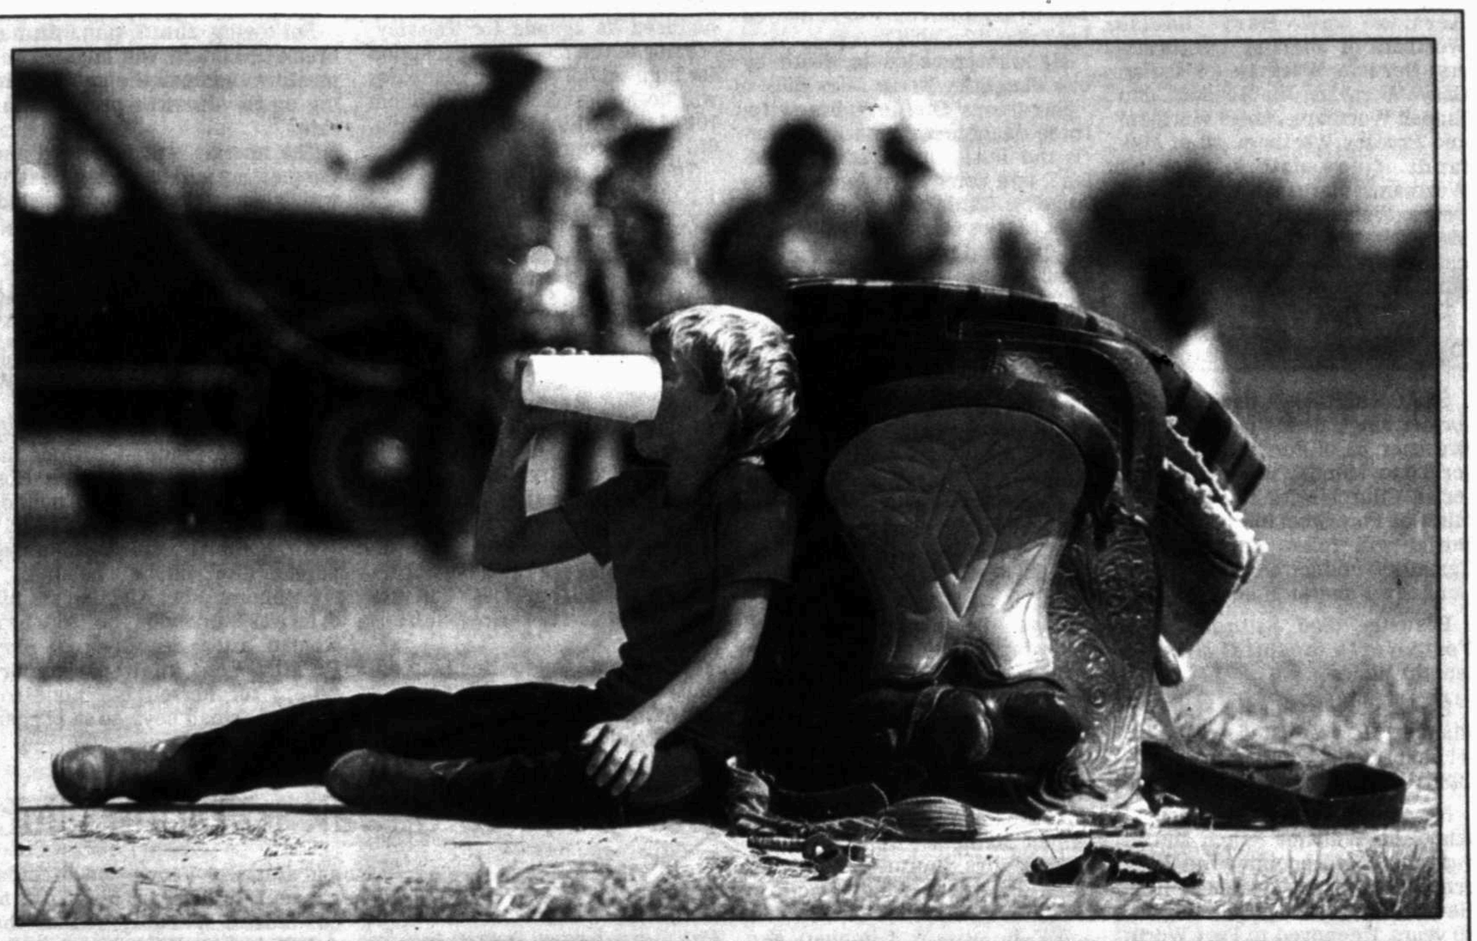

The help from the support will not only benefit the child at the time but hopefully the rest of his life, said Carol Armstrong, executive director of Hospice of Midland.

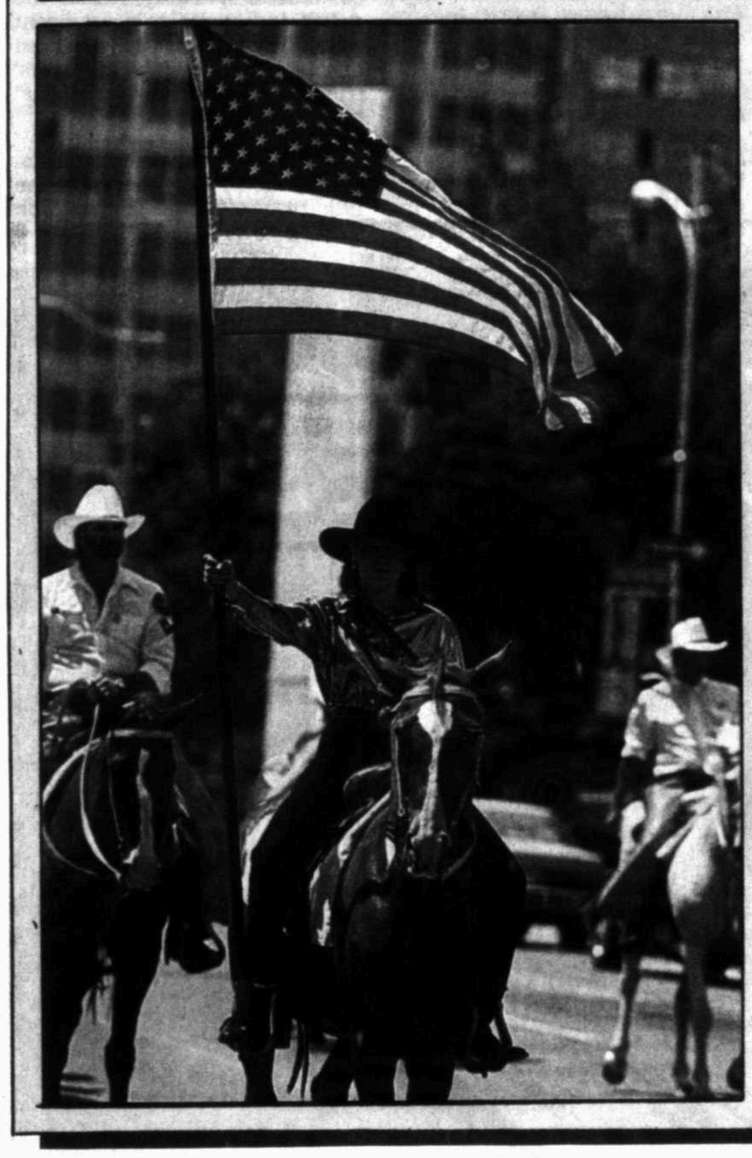

"What we want is children to be good true survivors ... (and) help them build good mental health," Ms. Armstrong said.

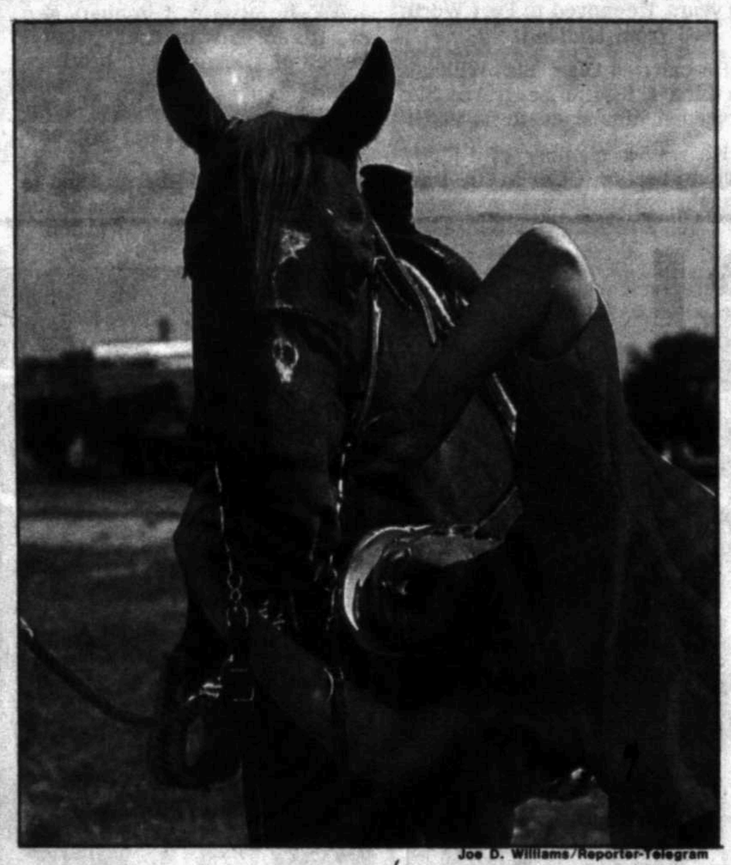

Conversely, failing to address one's emotions may have a negative effect.

"Unresolved emotions that are not dealt with will surface in other behavior

College to begin fall registration

■ MC will begin registration Tuesday; officials expect high enrollment.

Staff report

Registration for Midland College's 1992 Fall Semester is scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday in the Student Center.

Only students with time permits will be able to register for most of the two-day period. Walk-in students without time permits will be processed only from 6-7:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Almost 1,800 students completed registration during a period in July. That registration was only for current and former students.

No freshmen students have been registered, according to Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar. About 800 freshmen have had pre-admission testing and orientation.

Late registration, which carries an additional charge, will begin on Aug. 31, the first day of fall classes. Last day to register as a full-time student — 12 hours or more — will be Sept. 4. Part-time students, enrolling for less than 12 hours, may register through Sept. 10.

"We encourage everyone to register as early as possible," Cates said. "Those without time permits will be processed on Wednesday evening as quickly as possible. All the faculty would like to have their students in classes as soon after the first day as possible, since making-up missed assignments can place a lot of pressure on the students."

Midland College's all-time enrollment record was set in the 1991 Fall Semester, when 4,154 students signed up for credit courses. A comparable number is expected for this term.

Cates told trustees last week that the senior class enrollments in Midland and Lee high schools had been lower the past few years and that the low point in graduating class numbers wasn't expected for another year.

However, Cates also noted that a larger percentage of local high school graduates are choosing to matriculate at Midland College.

In addition to the on-campus students, Midland College also will be enrolling students at its off-campus classes in Fort Stockton, Iraan and Big Lake, along with concurrent enrollment of high school students in college-credit courses at Midland High School and Lee High School.

Although time permits will not be issued Monday, prospective students may pick up course bulletins that day from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. in the Student Services area of the Student Center. Information also is available at 685-4501.

Free Methodist Church celebrates 132 years

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff writer

Today is a special day for the Free Methodist Church. The denomination becomes 132 years old.

"I think it's great because it gives us a chance as Free Methodists to celebrate what we stand for — living a holy life and being Christ-like in all that God has intended for us to be as we live for Him," said the Rev. Matthew Mote, pastor of the First Free Methodist Church of Midland.

Today's celebration will be shared by the two local congregations — First Free Methodist, formed in the spring of 1965, and Inglesia Methodist Libre, 405 S. Terrell St. An outreach of First Free Methodist Church, the Spanish-speaking congregation was organized in 1970.

Ramblings from a man caught in Santa Fe mystique

SANTA FE, N.M. — More rambling thoughts from a semi-tangled brain, this time made somewhat more tolerable by the fact that at the precise moment I'm jotting down these observations, I am topping off a five-day vacation by relaxing under an umbrella on the veranda of the Hotel St. Francis in downtown Santa Fe:

Ott

■ Perhaps there are better places to spend a quiet Sunday afternoon than this, but as I peer west and watch the sun slowly disappear over the mountains, I honestly can't think of any.

■ If you ever find yourself wondering where all the hippies from the '60s went, look no further than Santa Fe. There is more hair here than at a Grateful Dead concert.

■ In a peculiar sort of way, it is refreshing to be surrounded by weird-looking people discussing offbeat subjects, often in a language I cannot comprehend.

■ An example: A skinny little man with a large nose just bellied up to the bar and said something in broken English. The bartender gave him a quizzical look. The man repeated his order. Again nothing. Finally, the little man, who was obviously embarrassed by his inability to communicate properly in a foreign land, pointed to a bottle and slowly enunciated the brand name. "Ah, yes," the bartender said, as he expertly snapped off the bottle cap and poured the beer in a glass. He then repeated the brand name for the man. They both laughed, and for just a brief moment the world was brought closer together.

■ At the far end of the street, adjacent to a hot dog vendor, there is a man seated in the yoga position playing a flute. A crowd has gathered around him, and one of the onlookers is dressed in a long, flowing white gown and has a turban wrapped around his head.

■ Man, I'm a long way from Midland, Texas.

■ A thought just occurred to me: Was I more foolish to pay $70 for a common, ordinary workshirt — but, hey, it was bought in one of those "darling" little shops on the Plaza — or shelling out a mere $52.50 for a silk tie I will probably wear a grand total of three times before losing?

■ No, without a doubt, my dumbest purchase was the $125 camera I never used because I couldn't figure out how to load it and was too embarrassed to ask anyone for help.

■ I wonder if MasterCard has hired a hitman to track me down yet.

■ Early this morning, before the crack of dawn, I took a leisurely drive in the mountains, bound for a place on the map called Hyde Memorial State Park. The road was long and winding. There was little or no traffic and my car radio was tuned to a station that played lots of Crosby, Stills and Nash songs. I was lost in my dreams. The sun was beginning to make its way over the mountains and as far as I could see there was nothing but trees and rivers and valleys and peaks. I recall from my college days hearing people say, "A natural high is the best high there is." They must have been talking about this place.

■ There are not many things more exhilarating than a late afternoon thunderstorm in the mountains.

■ No matter where you travel there will always be at least one old man wearing ugly Bermuda shorts and black socks.

■ Likewise, certain middle-aged women will insist on wearing low-cut blouses and overly tight short-shorts even though they don't have the body for it.

■ As I glance around at all of the strange people mingling about, it is virtually impossible to tell who is fabulously wealthy and who had to spend an entire year counting pennies in order to save enough money to make this trip. That inability to distinguish between the two groups is kind of nice, although I'd be willing to bet the ones wearing tacky "I vacationed in Santa Fe" T-shirts are not among the financial elite.

■ Isn't it odd how tolerant we become of others when we are in this type of relaxed environment? At this exact moment, for example, at a table not far from mine, a man — your basic blowhard — is holding court. He is an expert on everything. No subject is beyond his vast knowledge. He is loud and he is obnoxious. His political views are to the right of Attila of the Hun and while he tosses out lots of facts and figures, none of them are accurate, nor do they have anything to do with the topic he is discussing. Under normal circumstances I would be tempted to take a gun and shoot this person. But, hey, it's a gorgeous day. To each his own.

■ Mr. Bartender, I'll have another club soda with lime, please. No rush. I'll just sit here and enjoy the scenery.

■ I have not tasted alcohol in more than two years, but as I boarded the plane in Midland I made a deal with myself that if, as so often happens in the movies, a dark mysterious woman were to suddenly appear out of nowhere, tie me down, talk dirty and ruthlessly force a fine white wine down my throat, I would reluctantly succumb to her seductive temptations. It has now been five days. I'm still sober. So much for the movies.

later on," Ms. Armstrong said. "It does have a ripple effect."

"The whole idea of Rainbow is to get to children before they (may) develop other problems," she said.

Sometimes, such as after a divorce, a child may not outwardly show problems but does so in other ways like in school performance.

"It's never too late (for help because) time alone doesn't heal," Ms. Armstrong said.

The Midland support group will begin Sept. 24 at 7 p.m. at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, 1400 W. Illinois Ave.

The program — for pre-school through 8th grade — divides the youngsters into age groups. Hospice plans to expand and include high school students next year.

An optional adult session for parents also will be available.

Rainbows For All God's Children was founded in the 1980s by a woman after her divorce. Suzy Perkins Yehl knew of support groups for herself but none for her three small boys, so she began the program.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC registration opens Tuesday with pizazz

By H. A. Tuck

Registration on Tuesday and Wednesday promises to have a certain pizazz. Prospective students reporting for registration on either day will enter through a circus tent, complete with popcorn and music.

Tuck

To participate, students need to have time permits that were issued the past couple of weeks. Persons who didn't obtain time permits will be allowed to register on Wednesday from 6 p.m. until 7:30 p.m. Registration is conducted in the Student Center, with students entering through doors at the southeast corner of the building.

Fall semester classes start Aug. 31, which is when late registration begins. An extra fee is charged for registering after Aug. 26.

The new basketball scoreboard has been installed at Chaparral Center. It has some extra features, although it looks quite a lot like the original scoreboard that had been in the building since 1978. This one is a bit smaller, since it has all-electronic systems. The Chaparral logos and Coca-Cola logos are on four sides, angled from the scoreboard part.

Since there was a lull in activities at Chap Center, the portable wooden basketball floor was put down last week and given a refinish for the upcoming season. After the sealer sets for about a week, the floor will be taken up and stored until shortly before the season begins.

Faculty members report for the start of their fall semester duties on Monday. Activities begin with the President's Breakfast at 8:15 a.m. in the Student Center for all employees. Activities for the faculty then move to the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium for a report from college president David Daniel, from MC faculty council president Betty Morris, and a special presentation by Carmen Delgado and Lonell Faulks, both from El Paso Community College, about Cultural Diversity in the Classroom.

Committee meetings and instructional division meetings are on the schedule for Thursday and Friday.

Midland College resumes its regular office schedule this week. Offices are open from 8 a.m.- noon and 1-5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Monday, Sept. 7, will be an official holiday for the college and its students.

Are you aware that faculty members keep regular office hours for the benefit of students? All full-time faculty members post their office hours at the beginning of each semester. These are times when students may come for advising and consultation. Wise and successful students utilize these office hours well before the "panic time" of final exams and term papers. Part-time faculty members generally have their own times when student may meet with them.

One way that community colleges have eased the transfer of students to universities has been in the adoption of a Texas Common Course Numbering System, which has been adopted by 46 public community/junior colleges, two private junior colleges, the Texas State Technical College System, and 15 universities.

If you are going to be a student at MC this fall, don't plan on having dinner at the Snack Bar. Food service manager Larry Burgin announced that the snack bar will be open from 7 a.m. until 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, serving breakfast, lunch, snacks, beverages and grill items.

New, exciting classes have been added to the list of regular Continuing Education classes being offered this fall. Many of the classes begin the week of Sept. 7, but registration is under way now. With limited space and some enrollment caps, you'll want to register as early as possible in order to assure a place.

Pharmacist's discovery may end obesity

WASHINGTON–After solving the problem of his own obesity, a pharmacist, now director of National Dietary Research, may have discovered the solution for others with the same problem.

Dr. William Morris, pharmacist, inventor and author has discovered a natural food tablet, aptly named Food Source One, that replaces some of the calories normally obtained from food. Food Source One replaces high calorie fats with other natural food ingredients with little or no caloric value so you can lose weight without giving up all your favorite foods, as explained in NDR's Lifestyle Maintenance publication, available where Food Source One is sold. "The secret to meaningful weight loss is not in decreasing the amount of food you eat, but in controlling the fat," says Dr. Morris.

According to Dr. Morris, weight loss results while using Food Source One will depend on how many pounds a person needs to lose. However some overweight people are experiencing extraordinary results with Food Source One. A Metairie, Louisiana nurse lost 71 pounds. She stated "I never had to sacrifice foods I dearly crave!" "Food Source One is very easy and anyone could do it," says a Niagara Falls, New York woman who lost 26 pounds and 15 inches. "The results are great" she added.

Food Source One is available at pharmacies without a prescription.

CHURCH: Free Methodist Church traces birth, history to 1860

morning activities, both congregations will meet together for the 6 p.m. praise service and fellowship at First Free Methodist Church, 4712 Shadylane.

The public is invited to the services as well as to a volleyball game. Watermelon and ice cream will be served to spectators and players.

The church traces its birth as a separate denomination to 1860.

The 1850s and '60s were a time of unrest and discord in the United States that affected major denominations including the Methodist Episcopal Church. Formed in Baltimore, Md., in 1784, the Methodist Episcopal Church traces its origins to John Wesley, the Anglican clergyman who founded Methodism.

By the time the Civil War began, the Free Methodist Church had separated from the Methodist Episcopal Church and with 15 preachers and 45 laymen, formed its own organization in Pekin, N.Y., Aug. 23, 1860.

"The founders of the Free Methodist Church were excluded from the Methodist Episcopal Church on various charges and allegations, but the primary issue was their proclamation of the basic principles of Methodism — especially the doctrine and experience of entire santification — basically totally committing your life to Christ's control and letting Him cleanse you from your inward sinful nature and fill you with the Holy Spirit," Mote said.

"John Wesley used another word called perfect love. In other words, we are to strive to be all that Christ would have us to be in every part of our lives."

Other differences existed at the time the leaders who began the Free Methodist Church were excluded from the Methodist Episcopal Church.

"When they excluded us, they were for slavery, they were for the renting of pews, they were leaning toward a high worship. They believed in secret societies, that it was OK to be a member of a secret society and take oaths and vows that would swear you to secrecy," Mote added.

The Free Methodist Church was the third such group to split away from the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, and it wasn't the last. The first two were, respectively, The Methodist Protestant Church, 1830; and the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, 1843.

Several black Methodist churches also were formed, including the African Methodist Episcopal Church, 1787; the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 1796; and the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, 1870.

In 1844, a major dispute over slavery divided the Methodist Episcopal Church into North and South denominations. Doctrinal differences led to the formation of the Church of the Nazarene, 1908.

"The Nazarenes, the Wesleyans and the Church of God Anderson are very close when it comes to our doctrines," Mote said. "There are some differences but they are slight."

The leaders who formed the Free Methodist Church were determined to retain the name Methodist.

"They were distinctly Methodist. If you were to go back to the original doctrines of John Wesley, the Free Methodist Church would be the closest to those original doctrines and principles that John Wesley proclaimed and taught," Mote said. "Rather than join another denomination, they decided to form the Free Methodist denomination."

Methodism stressed a Christian lifestyle in the world, which meant its followers were actively involved in the social changes occurring in Great Britain and the United States during the 1800s.

The divisions which occurred among Methodists in the United States during the 1800s also happened in Great Britain, where the major social conflict was the emerging trade union movement.

In the 20th century, major reunions took place in Great Britain in 1932 and in the United States in 1939. The United Methodist Church was formed in 1968.

"Today, there is such a broad spectrum in the UM Church, you go into some areas and there is a big difference between United Methodists and Free Methodists," Mote said. "And in other areas, you could put them side by side and they would almost be identical as far as their beliefs and their practices and principles."

Free Methodists don't have the diversity of churches within the denomination that United Methodists do, Mote said. In the same city you will have conservative, moderate and liberal churches that are all UM churches.

"The Free Methodist don't have that," Mote said. "We're all identical in our beliefs and what we stand for."

Mote himself has a history within the Free Methodist denomination. Ordained as an Elder in the Texas Annual Conference this summer, Mote is the son of a Free Methodist Church minister, the Rev. Melvin Wayne Mote.

The Lap of Luxury

By Sonja Merrick

Nestled amid 16 mature, stately, oak trees and two large desert willows; surrounded by a sweep of exquisitely landscaped grounds, this gracious brick home speaks of luxury, refinement, stability and panache.

Open the door to a delightful foyer — its floors are shiny brick parquet. Turn your head to the right and, through sparkling glass shelves, observe an exquisite, light-filled formal living area. This room is dominated by an expansive bay window. Its plush, creamy white carpeting adds to the light, bright feeling.

To the left of the entry lies a formal dining area that boasts jaunty striped wallpaper, lighted, mirrored built-ins, custom draperies and recessed lighting.

Facing the foyer is an informal living area. One wall is all brick and houses a large fireplace. The other walls are paneled in white-painted wood. A built-in for TV, stereo and VCR is conveniently located. Floors are wood parquet and add warmth to this large, yet cozy area.

Continue forward and find a large solarium and informal dining area. Four skylights allow streams of light to dance in this delightfully summery room. This area houses a complete wet bar, built-in china cabinet and custom window coverings. A wall full of insulated plate glass doors open to the spectacular outdoor pool area.

To the right of the breakfast area lies a large, well-appointed kitchen. A door opens to a two-car garage that houses a huge workshop.

To the left of the foyer is a hall that opens to two sizeable bedrooms, each with its own bath. Farther down the hall is a large master suite that boasts two large closets in addition to a coat closet and cedar storage closet. The master bath is lighted by a glorious skylight. It has a large tiled seated shower and built-in cabinets.

The back yard is marvelous. A covered patio and a trellis patio hug the house. Beyond that is a fabulous swimming pool. A cabana — which is part of the house and can be reached through the utility room that lies near the kitchen — is accessible from the patio. The cabana has its own large wet bar with sub-zero ice maker and half bath.

Located in one of Midland's most desirable neighborhoods, this home is filled with additional amenities. Among them are a truck and storage garage with tack room — in addition to the two-car garage. Both have automatic door openers. Also an automatic sprinkler system, security system, wainscoating throughout and an enclosed side yard.

This home is being offered by Langston Realtors for $210,000.

RE/MAX relates hot air ballooning history

Hot air ballooning began in France in 1783. The first balloon envelope was made of paper and the basket carried several barnyard animals. Brothers Joseph and Etienne Montogolfier launched several unmanned tethered and free flights that year, filling the paper envelope with smoke from burning straw or wool. In November 1783, nobleman Marquis D'Arlandes and Pilatre de Rozier piloted the first manned balloon flight in the Montogolfier's balloon with the King and Queen of France looking on. This was more than a century before the Wright Brothers flew off the runway at Kitty Hawk.

The modern tradition of celebrating a balloon landing with a champagne ceremony originated in those early flights over the French countryside. Startled farmers frightened by these huge unknown crafts falling from the sky often attacked them with pitchforks. The pilots soon learned to carry bottles of champagne to present to the farmers as a peace offering when they landed.

Ballooning became a less practical mode of flight with the development of airplanes and other high-powered aircraft. The modern-day sport of ballooning enjoyed a resurgence in popularity after the 1960s due to the development of inexpensive, durable, ripstop nylon and improved fuel efficiency of the propane burner system.

RE/MAX selected the hot air balloon as a corporate symbol because it represents dedication to maximum real estate service.

With more than 70 balloons across the U.S. and Canada, RE/MAX maintains the largest fleet of hot air balloons in the world.

The RE/MAX Hot Air Balloon Fleet in Texas has three balloons that make appearances at all major balloon events around the state. These include the Plano Balloon Festival, the Fort Bend Balloon festival, the Mesquite Balloon festival and the Sikes Balloon race in Wichita Falls. The RE/MAX Skydiving Team is an exciting addition to many of these balloon events and airshows. The RE/MAX Hot Air Balloon also appears at RE/MAX office events and special community events.

■ The RE/MAX Hot Air Balloon is made of reinforced fabric.

The balloon — properly called an envelope — is made of a reinforced fabric called rip-stop nylon. Rip-stop is lightweight, but very strong. The basket is hand-woven of rattan.

■ The Balloon uses liquid propane.

The double burner system generates the equivalent of 10,000 horsepower. The balloon uses 15 to 20 gallons of fuel per hour.

■ It takes four people to inflate the RE/MAX hot air balloon.

First, the envelope is laid out on the ground and attached to the basket, which is placed on its side. A small, gasoline-powered fan blows air into the balloon to inflate it. Then the burner is turned on to heat the air inside the balloon. Because hot air rises, the heated air lifts the balloon upright.

■ The RE/MAX Balloon is seven stories tall.

It's 77,500 cubic feet in size. Modern hot air balloons range from 50,000 to 85,000 cubic feet.

■ Only registered pilots can fly a hot air balloon.

A hot air balloon is a registered aircraft, just like an airplane. Only pilots licensed by the Federal Aviation Administration may fly balloons. It requires many hours of training and flight time to become a licensed pilot.

■ A pilot cannot actually steer a hot air balloon.

The balloon floats in the direction of the wind. However, by adjusting altitude, the pilot may be able to take advantage of winds blowing in different directions and at varying speeds. The pilot adjusts altitude by heating or cooling the air in the envelope to make the balloon rise or descend.

■ Weather does affect a hot air balloon.

For tethered balloon rides, winds should be five miles per hour or less. Winds of up to 12 miles are fine for free flights, It is easier to fly in cool weather because the balloon needs less heat to rise. Dawn and dusk are the best times for ballooning because winds are usually more stable.

■ A hot air balloon can fly high and fast.

The balloon usually flies about 1,000 feet above the ground. It can fly as low as the treetops or several thousand feet higher. The speed is determined by the speed of the wind.

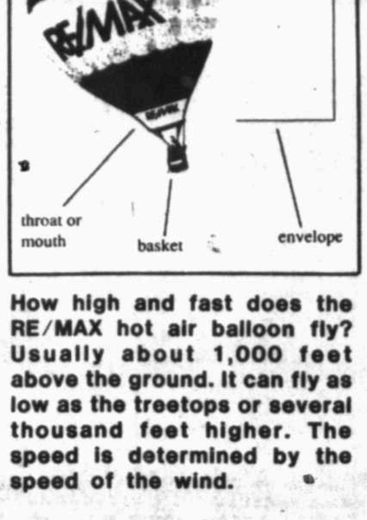

The RE/MAX Hot Air Balloon made its first appearance at the Albuquerque Balloon Fiesta in 1978. That was just one year after RE/MAX of Texas was founded as part of the RE/MAX International network.

RE/MAX of Texas has grown to include more than 85 offices and 1,6000 sales associates across the state. RE/MAX Realtors are a major presence in the residential real estate market in cities from Houston to Abilene and Tyler, Dallas to Beaumont, Wichita Falls and Bryan/College Station.

But RE/MAX of Texas is part of a much larger RE/MAX network. Throughout the U.S. and Canada, there are more than 28,000 Realtors in 1,800 offices.

The RE/MAX concept attracts only productive, service-oriented Realtors. RE/MAX Realtors are dedicated to staying on top of developments in the industry through advanced professional education. They are committed to strengthening their referral ties through networking and industry involvement. They are devoted to serving the community through volunteer work and local sponsorships.

This column was provided courtesy of RE/MAX of Midland.

How high and fast does the RE/MAX hot air balloon fly? Usually about 1,000 feet above the ground. It can fly as low as the treetops or several thousand feet higher. The speed is determined by the speed of the wind.

Langston Realtors Talk About . . .

It's now time for a new United Way Campaign

■ Many of our Langston Real Estate Associates will be "selling" United Way during the next several weeks — in addition to their normal "home" selling activities. The associates comprise a team of volunteers who make up the United Way Campaign's 3 "B" division; beauty salons, barber shops and beverages.

Agents and staff participating are Sandy Hanson, Gloria Lott, Amy Johnson, Fran Henderson, Debbie Trantham, Pat Orseth, Sandra McGill, Sharon Crouch, Richard Langston, Joel Oldham and Joanne Langston, division chairman.

Longtime active community volunteer Sandy Hanson said, "This is just one more way that we can step forward to help a city that has given us so much. Besides, you get to meet a lot of neat people!"

"We hope everyone contacted by a United Way volunteer, not just those we call on, will be very receptive to supporting the many fine United Way agencies and the wonderful services they provide. Every donation or pledge is appreciated," Fran Henderson said.

■ The lowest interest rates in 20 years have continued to boost our local real estate market according to an informal poll of Realtors and sales reports. "Normally, back-to-school activities and last-of-summer vacations dampen our mid-August to late-September real estate activities. However, we are continuing to experience well-attended open houses, strong showings and many reported sales in our market," said Joanne Langston.

Langston

"In addition to end-of-summer transferees, we are seeing first time home buyers, renters and homeowners desiring to "move up" that are wisely taking advantage of the under 8 percent mortgages. Many of these mortgages are available with only 5 percent down," Ms. Langston said. "this is a great time for buying and selling!"

Chaparral Realtors offers market evaluation

How much is your home worth today? For a limited time, you can have a real estate professional conduct a no-cost market evaluation courtesy of Chaparral realtors.

"Home owners should know what their home is worth based on the sale price of similar homes in the area," said Chaparral Realtors owner/broker Norma Pine. "A home is quite often the most valuable asset a family has."

"The real estate market goes through cycles, and prices reflect those cycles," Ms. Pine said. "Since the late 1980s, prices have gone up in some areas and down in others. There is no predictable upward appreciation like there used to be."

Chaparral Realtors has served Midland residents for 14 years, and helps sellers establish a realistic price as part of an overall marketing plan to sell the home, according to Ms. Pine.

The marketing plan can also include a Homeowners Marketing Services (HMS) home warranty plan. It's a valuable marketing tool that helps sell the home by giving buyers peace of mind about the home's mechanical components such as appliances, air conditioning system, heating system, etc. The plans are made available by HMS, of which Chaparral Realtors is a member. HMS offers a variety of marketing and business support services to a network of nearly 20,000 real estate offices nationwide.

For a no-cost market evaluation call Chaparral Realtors at 686-7000.

STARVED FOR SPACE???
Satisfy your appetite here...everything is spacious from the gloriously green lawn to the three living areas. There is so much to tell about this home on 2.2 Acres...We could not possibly fit it all in here. But, if a truly gracious, spacious home in the country is what you want, you need to see this before you buy. At this price you cannot find a comparable property...$120,000.

PICKY, PICKY, PICKY
...and you should be. A home is a big investment. But, this one will measure up. The kitchen sparkles in navy and white...with new vinyl and new carpet and new...new...new...everywhere. This is a three bedroom, two bath with a unique and very livable floor plan. If you want a fresh, new home, but do not want a "cookie cutter" version then you need to see this. Because you will be surprised when you walk in the door...Seller is offering a $1,000 Buyer Incentive...Call for details...$58,000.

DREAMING ON A SHOESTRING???
I'll bet that you would not believe that you could afford all of this...3 bedrooms, a pretty kitchen with built-ins, a formal dining area, a huge utility room, refrigerated air, pretty carpet...If you have $1,500, good credit and can afford $300 a month...You need to stop dreaming and start owning this really pretty home.

MORE THAN JUST ANOTHER PRETTY FACE
...this 3 bedroom charmer has personality. Nestled in a quiet established "Old Midland" neighborhood. Easy access to shopping, schools, churches and parks...very energy efficient...singles and retirees need to check into this "pretty face"...$39,500.

Midland - Odessa Symphony & Chorale to feature number of new musicians

Blankets, picnic baskets and lawn chairs go to the symphony this month as the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale begins its 30th season with free outdoor pops concerts Saturday at University of Texas of the Permian Basin and Aug. 30 at Midland College.

When the music begins at 8 p.m. both evenings, a number of the players will be new to the Midland-Odessa area, including oboist Catherine Lansdowne, tuba player Brett Stemple and trumpeter Adonna Teat. All three musicians trace their interest in music back to childhood.

Adonna Teat

"I always dreamed of being in music. My dream was to be the first famous woman trumpet player, but I think I got beat to it," said Miss Teat.

"When I was little, all my friends were listening to disco, and I was going out and buying 'ET,' 'Superman' — all these sound tracks and listening and dreaming instead of rockin' like everybody else."

"At some point it's like you don't have a choice — like sometimes I wonder why everybody isn't a musician," Stemple said.

"From a fairly young age it was for me a way of escaping the everyday world of the late 20th century. Also connected with that, it's a great way of communicating and in some ways a more direct way of communicating than through speech and the written forms of communication. It was both an output thing for me where I could feel like I was expressing something and things were being expressed more directly to me through music," he added.

Brett Stemple

"I think I was coerced into it because my grandmother tells stories about me sitting in front of the record player as an infant, and my mother had put on some kind of opera, which my grandmother refers to as highfalutin' music," said Miss Lansdowne. She laughed, then added, "And also my father has quite a classical music collection."

However, in a more serious tone Miss Lansdowne said, "Gradually, I got a lot of recognition for it. There's always been times when I've thought I can't go through with it, there's not enough money, or its not worth the struggle, but in the end I always decide music is what I want to do.

"And somehow music has really worked out. The jobs and the opportunities I have had have been just right for me at the time and enough to keep me going."

The choice of the oboe for Miss Lansdowne was

Symphony starts 30th season in the 'black'

After weathering economic difficulties during the 1991-92 season, The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale opens its 30th season in the black.

"We are just finishing the audit, and I believe we will wind up with an increase in our fund balance over the previous year," said K. Michael Conaway, president of the MOSC joint board of directors.

"We're starting this year with a very sound financial footing. We still have additional concert sponsorships to sell. We still have our work cut out for us, but everything is in place for a successful season."

The symphony has made certain changes in its format in response to surveys conducted at performances this past season. For example, subscribers last year had to choose concerts from both the classical and pops series.

This year, subscribers may buy season memberships to either the five-performance classical or the four-performance pops. Subscribers also may buy memberships to both, or put together their own series by choosing six concerts.

Also the MOSC has changed the location of the pops and classical concerts being presented in Midland.

"In response to the pops surveys, we are changing the venue for the pops concerts," Conaway said. "This is not a criticism of the CAF and its facility. We appreciate being able to hold our concerts there. Our subscribers asked us to look for other places to hold the concerts, and that's what we have done."

This year's pops concerts include "Just Fiddlin' Jody Nix," Ector County Coliseum, Oct. 10; "Home for the Holidays," symphony and chorale, Dec. 3, Midland Center, and Dec. 4, International ballroom, Odessa; "Rhapsody in Blue," Robert Hunt conducting and at the piano, Feb. 20, Midland Center; and "Satcho," jazz performed by trumpeter Byron Stripling, May 8, Holiday Inn Centre, Odessa. All of the pops concerts with the exception of "Satcho," will be conducted by Hunt.

Hunt also will conduct the chorale in "Music of the Americas" March 30, Midland, and April 1, Odessa.

The classical series, conducted by Don Th. Jaeger, include pianist Larisa Cherkasov, Sept. 22 and 24; was based on economics.

"My mother wanted to start me in flute in the fourth-grade. My father heard of the oboe — and they will rent you an oboe — but you have to buy your own flute. So that's how I started on the oboe."

Stemple began on the trumpet in the fifth-grade, then switched to the tuba. He traces his initial interest in classical music to Beethoven.

"In sixth-grade band we were playing an arrangement of the finale of Beethoven's 9th, obviously a much simplified version. And, just from that, I asked my parents for recordings of the nine symphonies of Beethoven. I think if there was any one thing which kind of got me hooked, that was it."

For all three musicians, a job with the Midland-Odessa Symphony represented an opportunity too good to pass up.

A Texan by birth and upbringing, Miss Teat was principal trumpet with the symphony in Boise, Idaho. She is "very grateful for the experience" and would never trade" that opportunity.

"I did a whole lot of growing up while I was there," said Miss Teat, who is a native of Longview. "We played great music, and I had to stick my neck out a few times. It was just great."

However, she's happy to be back in the Lone Star State.

"I was taking a chance. I was making more with the symphony up in Boise, but it was a chance to come home. I felt it as soon as I drove in and saw my first Texas flag. I started crying, and I was excited to be back."

Miss Lansdowne and Stemple are elated at the opportunity to perform in the same symphony orchestra. It's the first time in two years they have lived in the same country.

Proximity is important to them. After all, they are engaged to be married.

"A tuba and oboe at the same time in the same orchestra happens maybe once in a lifetime," said Stemple. "Catherine and I can be together, and it's also a return to opportunities that I didn't have in Mexico."

Those opportunities included performing in a small ensemble. Here, in addition to performing with the MOS, Stemple will be a member of the Lone Star Brass Quintet.

Stemple, who said, "I like to teach," also will find himself teaching more here than he did as instructor of tuba at the University of Veracruz, Jalapa, Mexico.

When the MOS positions became available, Stemple was principal tuba with the Jalapa Symphony, Mexico, where he had been for two years. Prior to that, he was principal tuba with the Eastman Philharmonia.

During the two years Stemple was in Mexico, Miss Lansdowne graduated with high distinction from the Eastman School of Music on a Edith Babcock Scholarship, worked as a graduate assistant while she received her master of music degree in oboe performance from Indiana University.

The move to West Texas also provides her with the opportunity to perform in a small ensemble, The West Texas Winds, and to teach — both of which are goals she has set for herself.

"I really wanted to teach," Miss Lansdowne said. "A lot of the resumes (she had sent out more than 300) I sent out were for teaching positions. I love playing both in the West Wind Quintet and the symphony."

All agreed that teaching and performing in more than one ensemble broadened a musician's horizon.

"If you think and you do orchestra stuff all the time, you become kind of. . . " Miss Teat said, pausing as she searched for the right word.

"Tunnel-visioned," Stemple said.

Miss Teat agreed, then added, "You have no life. I met some people that were outside of the orchestra and started getting other interests — went camping for the first time, started doing other things than just orchestra and it made me appreciate it (performing in the orchestra) more when I did it."

"What often happens with orchestra musicians or with any chosen field, if you don't go out and explore other things, if you are just hanging out with orchestra musicians discussing technique. . . " Stemple said.

"Talking shop," Miss Teat said.

"Exactly," Stemple said. "It's hard to free yourself from technique when you're not going out and exploring other things. Technique is the way of saying it, but the important thing is what's being said. And that's got to develop inside."

All three are looking forward to performing in their respective ensembles.

"You get a lot more say about what you are going to do in a small group," Miss Lansdowne said. "You don't have a conductor who has the last say. Of course, in an orchestra you try and think about your contribution a lot and put forth the best effort, but, in the end, the conductor has the last say.

"In a small group, everybody can be heard. I'm an oboist, and there's a lot of times when I'm playing and nobody hears me. . . "

"I'm heard whether I want to be or not," Miss Teat said.

They both laughed, then Miss Lansdowne added, "In a woodwind quintet, you can always hear everyone who is playing. Also there's a chance to work with other people.

"In an orchestra, you can't stand up and tell a horn player you'd

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, AUGUST 23, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A change of residence or employment marks the beginning of a very prosperous period for you. Stash extra income in the bank. Outsiders may try to exert too much influence for your liking in December. A legal matter will be settled in your favor early in 1993. Remembering a lesson learned from the past will prevent fresh embarrassment in late spring. Early next summer is the best time for a romantic vacation for two.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: comedian Shelley Long, dancer Gene Kelly, actresses Vera Miles and Barbara Eden.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not let someone's jealousy influence a business decision. Otherwise, your resentment could affect your work. Give romance time to grow before revealing the depth of your feelings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Think big in romance! Your visionary ideas have tremendous potential for your career and finances. Avoid shying away from someone you consider more experienced.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you see injustice in high places, keep your cool and mobilize public opinion. Consult only those you can trust. Group pressure could prove hard to take. Work by yourself whenever possible.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Progress depends on your not blaming others when things go wrong. A critical attitude will only close down communication. A personal relationship improves when you become a better listener.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not let an overbearing person put you on the defensive. Focus on your career or business priorities. Fast responses bring maximum success in the financial arena.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The direct approach works especially well now. Take the initiative. You are at the right place at the right time. When honored for a special project, be modest.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get your personal papers in apple-pie order. A concise memo will let close associates know where things stand. Keep a detailed record of expenditures.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An important domestic adjustment dominates the day's plan. Stress safety, security and long-range goals. Putting the finishing touches on a business deal gives you a sense of accomplishment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Rebuilding burnt bridges will restore order to your life. Ward off squabbles on the relationship front by not taking differences of opinion too seriously.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A long-awaited visit could take place today. A financial burden is lifted. People you have depended on in the past may not be there now. Put romance on the back burner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A professional relationship reaches a turning point. Take the high road in everything you do. A foolish move could cost you a bundle. Be patient when things slow down.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The emphasis now is on improving your mind. Greet the day in an optimistic mood. Trust your own judgment in business and romance; appearances could be deceiving.

About 25 years ago Jean Rene Vernes wrote an article called "The Law of Total Tricks." It attracted little attention then and, despite overwhelming proof of its accuracy, there are still many doubters. However, an excellent book on the subject is now on the market: To Bid or Not to Bid: The LAW of Total Tricks by Larry Cohen (Platinum Press, 272 pp., paperback. Available from the author, 181 Longhill Rd., Bldg. I-6, Little Falls, N.J. 07424, $11.95 plus $2.50 postage and handling).

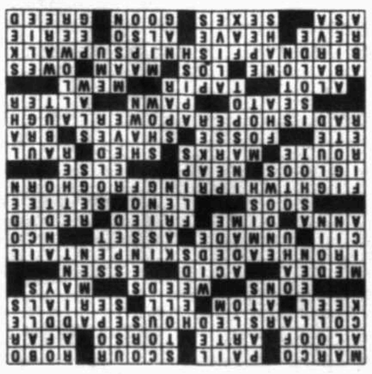

The LAW of Total Tricks states simply: "The total number of tricks available on any deal is equal to the total number of trumps (of each side's best combined fit)." This book is not for the casual player. However, it is guaranteed to sharpen the competitive bidding of anyone who takes the trouble to read and digest the contents.

Cohen cites hundreds of hands from all levels of play to support the accuracy of the LAW (author's capitals). For example, consider this hand from the 1978 World Pairs. The eventual winners, Marcelo Branco and Gabino Cintra of Brazil, bid to four spades and, after the lead of the ace of hearts, should have been defeated one trick. They weren't, but that's immaterial.

Should South have gone on to four spades? The LAW says no—he should have doubled four hearts instead! North was likely to hold three spades and one heart; thus each side had eight trumps in their combined holding, making a combined total of 16 trumps. If only 16 tricks were available, and if North-South were destined to take 10 in spades, four hearts was going down four tricks! A double would have paid off without the risk of trying for game. As the cards lie, North-South can be held to nine tricks and East-West to seven, and with a total of 16 tricks available on the deal, can anyone really question the validity of the LAW?

Observing and commenting on the situation are two elderly men, one white and one black, and a high school dropout who longs for the better life in California. Each character has his or her own view of the situation and responds accordingly.

King is a native Texan who became involved in community theatre when he was stationed with the U.S. Air Force in Wichita Falls. In 1970, he became the founding director of the Backdoor Theatre where, over the next 17 years, he directed more than 50 plays.

In 1983, he began writing plays and, for four years, quit acting, directing and managing to concentrate on writing.

In 1991, he took a six month hiatus to write "Dry Thunder" and a "Not a Thing to Wear."

As winner of the McLaren Competition, King receives a cash prize, a trip to Midland with accommodations provided by the Midland Hilton and a Reader's Theatre production of his play.

She has performed at the Kennedy Center, Washington, D.C.

Theatre Midland Dance will perform Michel Fokine's classic ballet "La Sylphide" at 1 p.m. Oct. 17 for the Art's Festival at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. In addition TMD will perform some of the dances from its Spring Concert, "A Broadway Melody."

SEASON: Orchestra includes 14 new members

violinist Eugene Cherkasov, Nov. 10 and 12; violinist Dona Lee Croft, Jan. 19 and 21; Winners of the 1993 National Young Artists Competition, Feb. 4 and 5; and clarinetist Frank Kowalsky, April 20 and 22.

"Again the audience in Midland asked us to review where we hold the classical series,'" Conaway said. "In lieu of the comments made and in cooperation with First Presbyterian Church, we moved back to Lee High School.

"Last year was a test both for First Presbyterian's congregation and us to use that facility for the classical concerts. It was mutually agreed that for smaller ensembles and that type of thing, First Presbyterian would be available, but for larger concerts Lee High School would be a better venue to hold those."

Those who have not received a brochure in the mail will have the opportunity to pick one up at the free outdoor pops concerts, "A Romantic Evening Under the Stars," being presented Saturday at Odessa's The University of Texas of the Permian Basin and Aug. 30 at Midland College. Conducted by Rob Hunt, the 8 p.m. concerts are sponsored by Mervyn's, TCB-Midland and EXXON.

The orchestra's composition this year includes 14 new faces.

"As of this moment, we will have 14 new people, and it could be more than that depending on when folks come back from vacation," Conaway said. "The turnover is not unexpected in respect to players. The nature of our orchestra is we bring in young musicians and develop their skills and talents and improve their resume, and then they move to more prestigious positions. And we're proud of all of them.

"Every single person that left our orchestra moved to a larger orchestra, or they moved up to a learning experience they couldn't get here. They all moved to improve themselves. No one took a step back within the orchestral arena."

In honor of the 30th season, the MOSC is presenting Metropolitan opera star Allan Monk at a 7 p.m. gala Sept. 10 at the Odessa Country Club. The event is sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Oliver F. Blank.

"I'm excited about our upcoming season," Conaway said. "It's got music that crosses a wide spectrum. We should have music for everybody to enjoy in the community. We've got terrific players in place. We've got very good conductors for both series, with Rob Hunt leading the pops and Don Th. Jaeger leading the classical.

"The financial position of the symphony is improved and much better than it's been in several years. The board is in place and working hard to pull off a terrific season, and I'm excited about being a part of it."

rather he do something else there, but in a quintet situation you can suggest things. In an orchestra the solution is dictated, and in a small group you work it out together."

"There's a little bit more interaction with the audience," Miss Teat said. "When you play in the orchestra, it's like stand up and smile and you don't know who you are smiling at. I'm an audience person. I really enjoy working with the audience."

"With five people there's a lot bigger chance of coming to some kind of consensus on what you want to say with a certain piece," Stemple said. "And, if those five people are in agreement with what you are going to say, it makes the statement that much stronger.

"One of the magical things about a brass quintet is that all five instruments produce sound in the same way. Acoustically, if all five instruments are in agreement, it can have an awesome effect because they blend into one — like an organ, perhaps."

"Of course, the opposite is true of a woodwind quintet," Miss Lansdowne said. "Everybody produces their sound in a different way — except the oboe and the bassoon are both double reeds. Otherwise, you have drastically different colors. The beauty is not in the blending; it's in the contrast."

Despite their attraction to playing in an ensemble situation, all agree there is nothing like a live symphony performance.

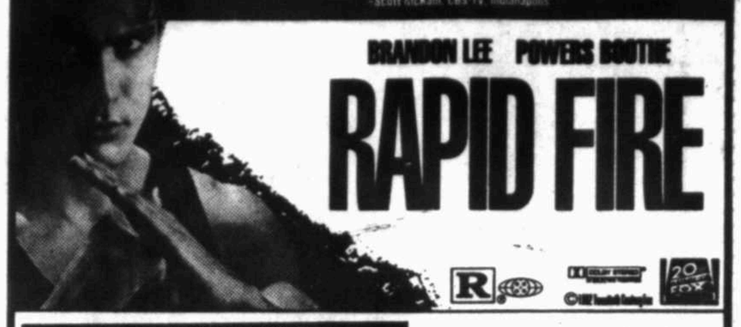

"It's hard to ignore all the energy at a live symphony concert," Miss Lansdowne said.

"In an age where we can have music even in our shower, we can become kind of numb to music, which is a dangerous thing. We're usually driving to it or eating to it or showering to it," Stemple said.

"Or shopping to it," Miss Teat said.

"So we learn how not to listen," Stemple said. "We can learn how to shut it out too easily, and perhaps that's the beauty of a live concert. It's an opportunity to relearn how to listen."

OIL REPORT

Activity Indicators/4G
Oil & Gas Activity/5-7G

Serving 54 counties in West Texas and New Mexico

BRIEFING

Prices steady

Oil prices traded in a narrow 10 cent range this week on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Traders kept an eye out for possible hostilities between the United States and Iraq but found little else to move prices up or down. The contract for September deliveries ended Thursday at $21.44. The October contract opened down 17 cents to $21.08.

Rig count

The rig count for the week ended August 14 was mixed, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The company reported that the Permian Basin rig count rose six to 108 while the U.S. count pluged 31 to 678. Baker Hughes economist Ike Kerridge attributed much of the national decline on wet weather that made rig movement difficult.

A year ago, the Basin rig count was 95 and the national count was 797.

Tenneco final

HOUSTON (AP) — Tenneco Inc. completed its $3 billion restructuring program Friday with the sale of its pulp chemical business in Canada to Sterling Chemicals Inc.

Tenneco sold the pulp chemicals division of its subsidiary Albright & Wilson for about $202 million to the Houston-based chemical company. The sale included sodium chlorate production facilities in Vancouver.

Enron stock

Enron Oil & Gas Co., the nation's largest independent oil company, says it will sell 4.1 million shares of its common stock at an offering price of $28.50 per share, and will use the net proceeds to repay long term debt. Enron Corp. currently owns 84 percent of the company stock and will own 80 percent when the sale, which is expected to amount to around $112 million, is complete.

TRC campaign

Barry Williamson, Republican candidate for the Texas Railroad Commission, is expected to begin a 13 city tour of the state following the birth of his first child. Williamson says he will focus hard on the final 74 days of the campaign, bringing attention to energy policy and the need to return jobs to Texas.

The campaign is expected to be one of the most visible in histoy since it tops the statewide ballot.

Williamson and his wife Holly live in Dallas.

A former Midland oilman and attorney, Williamson served as Director of the Minerals Management Service, where he managed the nation's offshore drilling operations.

Fire show

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum has announced the opening of a photographic exhibit documenting the fires that swept the Kuwait oil fields and the men who brought them under control. The exhibit which was collected by R.M. Sellman, an independent oil and gas operator from San Marcos, Texas features the work of the several renown professional photographers including: Dave Wilson, Peter Menzel, Stephane Compoint and Steve Lehman. The exhibit begins September 19 and concludes October 30, 1992.

Focus: Oilfield Communications

Cellular, two-way in clash

■ Two expanding technologies go head to head.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

Since they made their debut in 1987, cellular telephones have taken the oilpatch by storm, but have failed to dislodge the old standby the mobile phone.

Moreover the technology of both communication systems is growing so fast that it appears both will have a large niche in the patch for sometime to come.

With four towers in the Permian Basin and cellular cells continuing to grow throughout the Permian Basin, cellular phones are now being used by approximately 60 percent of the oilpatch, according to Rachel Harris, account representative for Southwest Bell Mobile Systems.

The reason is convenience: "You can now work out of your automobile, in town or on the highway. Some of our clients, who are out selling all day, use their cellular phone exclusively for business. They are in constant contact and don't need an answering service or a receptionist."

She explained that it has become almost a necessity for some oilfield contractors. "If

Satellites fill gaps in oilfield

■ Radio lines and satellites fill the communications gaps in the oil patch.

As oil companies reduce their workforce and increasingly consolidate offices into more central locations that are further and further removed from the wellhead, communication between the field and the office becomes more important.

One way that is being achieved is through automation that sends data over telephones or radio telephone to the office. While the current means of communication still hinges on the radio, satellite communication is increasingly being called upon to fill the gap.

"Satellites are used in only about one percent of oilfield automation, but they will be the communication link of the future," said Mark Fairchild, president of Fairchild Systems, a Midland-based automation company.

He adds: In some cases automation is the only way to be in contact with some well sites. Also, automation gives you time to work on making the company money instead of churning out reports, said Fairchild.

Fairchild's company provides the system that connects the wells to the radio, what could be considered the software. It allows each well to be monitored continuously for alarms, pump-on and off, "the collection and analysis of data on a real-time basis, and on-demand reporting."

He added: "We can do well-testing for them on a basis that would require personnel in the field 24 hours a day otherwise."

Yet, Fairchild insisted that "We don't replace the people. We enhance the job of the technician. As the low-skilled jobs disappear, we enhance the medium and highly-skilled jobs, helping the technician get paid more."

His service, he said, is primarily for majors — in fact, Fairchild Systems has automated the entire Midland division for one major, including large producing and waterflood projects.

Local firm building Russian trade

■ A Midland marketing firm seeks to improve Permian Basin share of Russian trade.

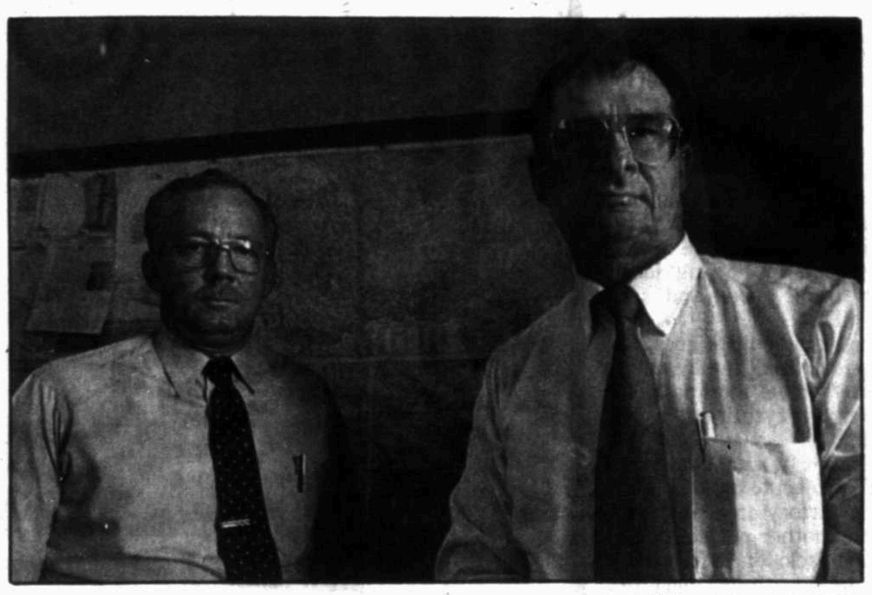

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

Almost weekly someone from the Permian Basin departs Midland International Airport headed to Russia in search of the "golden deal." The tales of tremendous potential for oil and trade deals with the former Soviet Union has kindled the entrepreneurial fires of oil country like an oidtime oil and gas play.

Some have made their deals, many more are still looking. But as oil trade with Russia and the Commonwealth of Independent States heats up, a Midland company is looking to facilitate that trade.

Dry holes yield new discovery

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

A wildcat surrounded by 11 dry holes has been completed as a prolific Canyon reef discovery in Schleicher County, 14 miles north of Eldorado.

SMC Oil & Gas Inc. of Midland has potentialed its M.D. Byars No.1 to produce 439 barrels of oil per day and 429 Mcfd of gas on a quarter inch choke. At absolute open flow the well was calculated to produce 2,397 barrels of oil and 2 million cubic feet per day of gas.

The M.D. Byars No.1 was drilled to a total depth of 5,640 feet, and according to the operator indicates a new reef between two depleted reef fields.

GOP energy plank gets a mediocre grade

Pitts

News accounts and comments from oilmen have described the energy plank of the Republican Platform as mediocre. It is a statement not far from accurate.

In reviewing a copy of the plank sent to me by our Hearst correspondents in Houston, I found it alternated between good and bad, weak and strong, vague and specific. When I set about to subjectively and unscientifically grade the republican plank and performance I came up with a report card that could be considered mediocre.

HOUSE CLEANING — For instance, the plank points out how Republicans broke the shackles of bureaucratic regulation by deregulating natural gas wellhead prices, repealing restrictions on clean-burning natural gas, repealing the Windfall Profits Tax on crude oil, promoting free competition in an open market — and how it had cast out the Jimmy Carter assumptions that America could no longer supply any of its energy needs.

The message here is: "We threw out the bureaucratic garbage — and will continue to throw it out."

For 12 years of throwing out democratic garbage and a committment to continue same, the administration deserves a well-earned "A."

NATURAL GAS — In a summation of the National Energy Strategy there is a strong play for natural gas.

"...a comprehensive and balanced sgrategy for America's energy future-...specifically adequate energy supplies and reduced consumer costs through market forces, diversified domestic energy sources, more efficient energy consumption through flexibility and greater competition and output for the interest of consumer and producer alike."

This is a critical point, even if we have to read between the lines to get it. One reads into this statement an underlying message of desire for a flexible fuel system for America and fuel on fuel competition that will help the nation back out foreign crude oil and take advantage of our own abundant natural resources. It is a desire that is likely to control energy development in this nation for the next decade. While there is little reference to natural gas, no one has to guess what the flexible fuel future involves.

But if there is any doubt, a clear pitch is made for increased use of natural gas not only in electrical generation, but for use in natural gas vehicles. Gasoline and diesel will be in for competition, as we move toward becoming a multi-fuel nation, and most of the competition will come from natural gas.

"The administration will foster more public-private partnerships to advance the use of natural gas, and encourages the expanison research, development, and demonstration for end-use natural gas technologies," reads the language of the plank.

I am inclined to give the administration an "A" for its vision and concrete plans to move the domestic oil industry, the economy and the nation forward with natural gas.

But because, increased natural gas use is such an obvious, win-win situation that it requires little genius to recognize, we must subtract some points. Final Grade "B+."

INCENTIVES — Relief from the Alternative Minimum Tax is probably on the way. Other Bush incentive designed to save a failing industry and jobs include: tax credits for enhanced oil recovery, tax credits for exploration under existing producing stuctures and modified depletion rates for stripper production.

This is the number one contention with independents. It's not nearly enough. More tax credits and incentives are needed to "jump start" the domestic industry.

Why not tax credits for high-priced exploration technology such as 3-D seismic? A tax credit for 3-D could go a long way toward reviving the Permian Basin. Why not dry hole credits against future production such as Bob Krueger has proposed?

One could dream up a long list of fair and effective tax incentives for revitalizing the domestic industry, putting people back to work, and reducing foreign imports — if indeed that were the objective. The lack of such incentives has given many cause to suspect, secret agendas. The tired explanation that incentives for the oil industry is "politically impossible" is wearing thin.

The administration deserves a dab of credit for it the incentives it has supported, but heaps of shame for its uncreative and unenergetic support of truly meaningful incentives. Everyone, even the democrats, knows the democratic congress is dead set against the oil industry. But that only means republicans must play harder and smarter. They didn't play hard enough. I give a "D" for effort — but only out of kindness.

ANWAR — The energy plank expresses concern for the domestic industries loss of 300,000 jobs and supports drilling access to the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and Outer Continental Shelf as a means of creating jobs.

So why are we voting for a National Energy Strategy that prohibits drilling in ANWR or offshore?

Opening these areas to exploration could have reduced foreign imports, saved hundreds of thousands of jobs and given the industry a much-needed morale boost, without damage to the environment. These facts are so self-evident that Bush should have drawn a hard line on ANWR. It should have been a veto matter.

No energy policy at all would have been better, than to sign one that forbids looking for oil in the United States, when 60 percent of our oil is imported and 300,000 oil and gas workers are jobless. It is a mockery of reason — an affront to common sense — a tribute to politics as usual.

The administration deserves a big fat "F" for helping put the lock on ANWR and OCS.

When we assign number values to these grades we come up with 73.5 or a "C" average. In my book that's mediocre — barely passing.

Russian needs with U.S. services and goods.

"There are so many needs in Russia and so much potential for business that it boggles the mind," said Ray Eatherly, president of the fledgling firm located at 119 N. Colorado.

"The big guys, like Halliburton and Chevron, already have their representatives; they don't need us. It's our objective to give independent producers, service companies, vendors and manufacturers in the Permian Basin an opportunity to market their goods and services to Russia at a very affordable fee," said Eatherly, who plans to add a small commission to all finalized trade deals in exchange for his efforts.

He says a $1 billion loan to Russia, set to be approved within the next few weeks by the Export-Import Bank will give a strong boost to oilfield trade with Russia and that the Permian Basin has a shot at getting some of the proceeds.

"All the proceeds of the $1 billion loan will remain in the U.S. and will be used by Russia to pay oil and gas companies here for oil and gas equipment and service. If the Permian Basin does not get itself organized and unified and cooperate to get some of the Russian trade we won't get a penny of it. It will all go to Houston."

He said a joint effort of local industry, chambers of commerce and others were needed to pool resources and promote the Permian Basin and what it has to offer in Russia and the Commonwealth of Independent States. "They don't know that much about the Permian Basin," he added.

He said a recent visit to the Permian Basin by a delegation from Moscow was quickly arranged by TIMA and only 14 manufacturers were able to meet with them, but the visit could result in the sale of five rigs by WWL Industries of Odessa.

Locally, the sales process is handled by Eatherly and Don Boydston, an employee of an Odessa firm and a translator of Russian. TIMA also has representatives in Kiev and Moscow to scout deals, analyze possibilities and initiate negotiations, and may soon have four when a husband and wife team move to Russia from West Texas.

The team is R.D. Dickerson of Santa Ana, Texas and his wife Olga. Dickerson is president of Intra, an independent firm which specializes in trade with the Commonwealth of Independent States. His wife is Russian-born.

Dickerson, an engineer, met his wife Olga in Moscow, while he was designing gas plants in the Soviet Union as an employee of Occidental Petroleum Co. She has a degree in English from Moscow University and a degree in computer science from Howard Payne University in Abilene.

"She is in constant demand these days, as an interpreter," said Dickerson, who notes that the couple plan to return to Russia and work with TIMA and others to initiate trade.

Dickerson noted that the Russians have vast deposits of natural resources to trade for food, consumer goods and industry items. "Americans will be looking to trade primarily in oil and timber," he said.

Eatherly noted that the process of trading oil for commodities is highly complex. "Getting the oil to a port, on a tanker and to a trading partner in the U.S. is no easy task," said Eatherly, who is looking to connect with a firm with expertise in trading oil on an international basis. "Such a firm could be of great assistance to the Permian Basin, in helping local businesses trade goods and services for oil."

As far as commodities goes, he says there is nothing the Russians don't need — from toothpaste to pantyhose. Everything can be traded for oil.

While, Eatherly is currently involved in a project to build an artifical brick factory in a town in Russia, and another project to deliver 700,000 packs of Marlboro cigargettes, he says the primary focus will be on oil and gas equipment and services.

an operator can't reach a contractor within 30 minutes, he may pick up the phone and call someone else."

Cost is another factor increasing the usage of cellular telephones. The original cost of a unit was $800 and is now down to $99, opening it up to the non-business consumer. But while the cost of the equipment is going down the cost of the service has not come down and is not expected to come down, says Harris.

That is a fact that is a fact that keeps the two-way communications a viable option.

Donna Everist, marketing and sales manager for Basin Communications explains: "When a company has two people talking on cellular phone at the rate of 36 cents a minute, that is a total cost of $72 cents a minute. But with a two-way radio they can talk all day, between unit to unit and unit to base for only a $5 to $10 monthly tower charge is paid."

And in the Permian Basin one is never far from a tower. Everist says there are between 300 and 400 towers in the Permian Basin that permit two-way communication. "And by using a telephone interconnect you can still dial a land line if you need to," she added.

A big advantage is that mobile systems are able to communicate with rigs and service units in remote corners of the oilpatch, while cellular cells are concentrated along highways.

"If you are talking to customers around town, a cellular telephone may be your best bet, but if you need to communicate with rigs in the field, a mobile phone may be the best best way to go," said Everist.

Noted Harris: "A mobile phone may work in some remote areas, but cellular phones are now in 1,300 cities. In West Texas Van Horn and Del Rio were just added." She said cellular phones were 90s technology, and mobile phones were 60s technology. They were good for their day.

"It's true," says Everist, "the mobile phones that we once knew are gone — obsolete. They have been replaced by the two-way telphone interconnect or trunking systems, that combine two-way and telephones."

Satellites have also entered the oilpatch communications field. Motorola which is already engaged in transmitting oilfield automation data has developed a satellite system which permits longhaul trucking companies to track every movement of a truck from coast to coast. The system will compete directly with cellular systems.

Everist said technology was growing so fast in the communications field that it was almost like the computer market, where technology becomes obsolete almost as soon as it is bought.

Harris noted that through Follow-Me-Roaming, a GTE technology employed by cellular networks, calls can be transferred to a cellular telephone almost anywhere in the U.S. Such technology she said was making oil companies more competitive because of constant access and quickness of response and has helped during the downturn. "We have one customer that had 500 employees several years ago and is now down to 15. They say they couldn't do it without cellular phones."

There is a need for both systems, and sometimes its beneficial to have both, says Everist, who sells both systems. "If you are going to Dallas or to the Willison Basin in the Rockies, a cellular phone is probably your best bet, because calls can follow you anywhere, but if you are working in the field in the Permian Basin, a two-way may be the way you want to go. If you do both, you may want both."

She concluded: "Oilfield communications is a booming field, because of technology and declining costs, but because so many getting into it, the pie is getting smaller and smaller."

ploration, a partner in the well, said well control was used to confirm that virgin pressures and a new reservoir were located between two depleted reservoirs.

"The prospect would have discouraged many wildcatters in view of the numerous dry holes and plugged and abandoned wells surrounding it," said Graham.

Coulon said SMC played off the suspicion that one of the 11 dry holes surrounding the prospect had side swiped the new reef production.

He said investors, witnessing the potential, were both relieved and elated at the results of the drill stem test, which recovered 98 barrels of 40 API oil in 60 minutes.

SMC owns 298 acres surrounding the prospect and expects to drill at least five more wells. An offset to the M.D. Byars No.1 is planned in 90 days.

Oil Show is king of inland industry

Staff report

The Permian Basin Oil Show, set for October 21-23 at Ector County Coliseum, will be the reigning King of the Inland Oil Industry — the largest show ever staged to promote the non-offshore side of the industry.

This year the show has some 1,110 exhibit spaces, 210 more than the 1990 golden anniversary exhibition.

As of the middle of August, two months prior to show time, only a few outside exhibit spaces remain for prospective exhibitors.

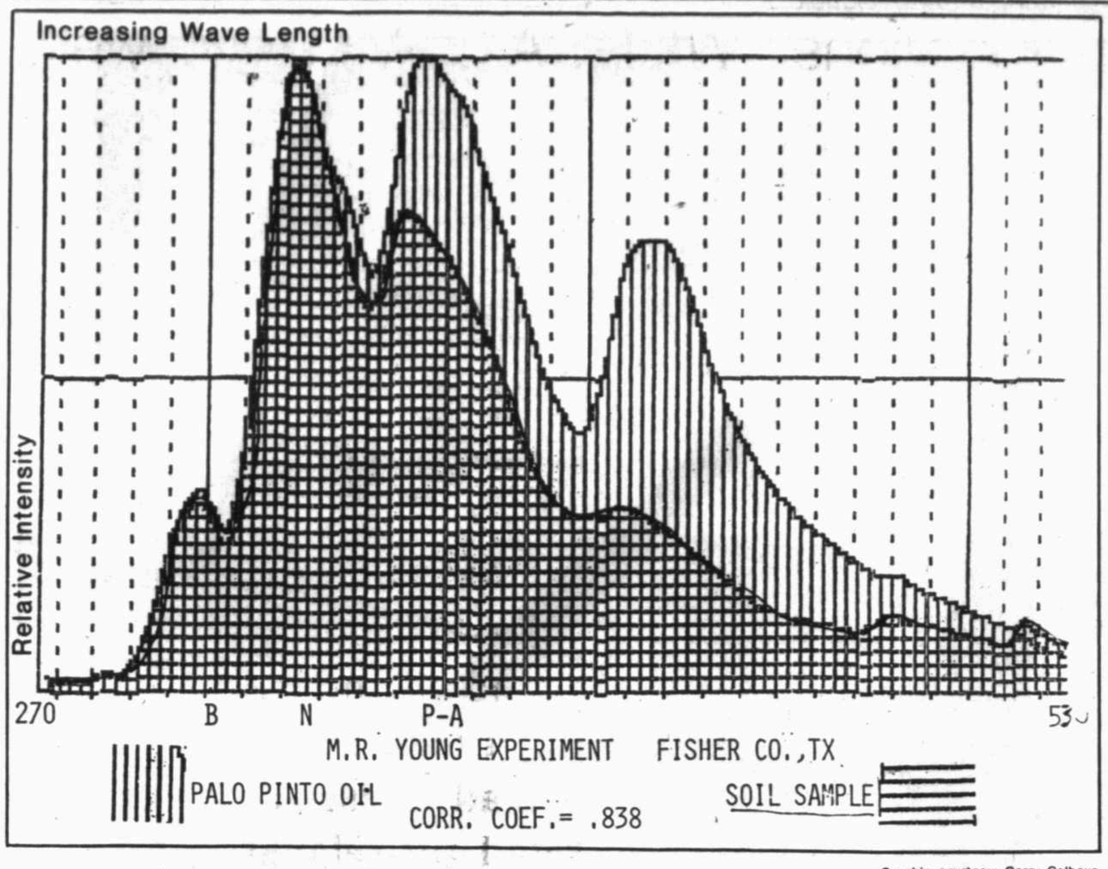

"I would urge any oil-related company wanting to get in this year's Permian Basin Oil Show to call our office immediately," urged Jay Alvey, the show's executive director for more than 30 years. "If we should be sold out we will place company names on a waiting list for a first-come, first-served basis in case we have any last minute cancellations.

While the number of exhibitors has set a record, Bob Beggs, the show's president, is also predicting attendance will also set a record.

"I don't think I would be out of line in estimating there will be more than 100,000 people pass through our oil show gates this year," Beggs stated. "Our attendance should include everyone involved in the oil and gas industry from the roughneck in the field to top corporate officers."

Alvey also anticipates a large number of foreign oil officials to make their way to this year's oil show in Odessa.

"We had a goodly number of oil industry officials from the Far East for our 1990 Oil Show," Alvey related, "and I see no reason why that number should not increase. They will be able to learn a lot about the inland oil business if they attend the Permian Basin Oil Show on Oct. 21-23."

The comparative fluorescence peaks between oil samples and soil samples lets geologists know when they are on the right track in their search for oil.

Geologist touts fluorescence

■ A Midland geologist says fluorescence geochemical technique could increase drilling.

By Gerry Calhoun

If there is an exploration technique that accurately predicts the economic outcome of a proposed wildcat 78% of the time, why does the oil industry continue drilling seven dry wildcats for every successful discovery?

This is the high predictive success of the fluorescence method of surface geochemical exploration, and Permian Basin independent operator can use it explore more efficiently, draw in more risk capital and find more oil.

The primary reason for low drilling activity in the Permian Basin and the U.S. is risk aversion on the part of oil operators and investors. They know they can't compete on the world market and continue to drill so many dry holes. And they have correctly analyzed conditions. Our high unemployment numbers, lowering real estate values and slow general activity are inextricably tied to drilling activity. As the supply of close-in development locations shrinks, drilling activity declines.

Behind the rig count statistics lies an even more ominous number - how many true wildcats are being drilled? The Poorboy O & G #14 Anybody turns out to be a standard offset to a producing field, not a wildcat as the operator reported. The new activity may seem to be as risky as a wildcat to the operator because its target is a lenticular, erratic sand body that may or may not be there. Even this risk could be reduced with the use of Fluorescence and other surface geochemical methods of exploration.

The key to energy security and a return of local prosperity is the discovery of new fields. Infill drilling in the Spraberry by Parker & Parsley and others has been a life saver for us here in the Permian Basin, but it adds little to reserves to be produced in future. Meaningful new additions to the store of oil our children will have to use are dependent on wildcats that find new reservoirs.

Granted, West Texas has been as intensely drilled as any basin in the world. Yet this very fact can be a positive factor, rather than negative. This extensive data base of subsurface information can provide us with prototypes for undiscovered — thus the reason for the departure of so many major oil companies. Now the independent operator truly comes to the forefront.

Ask any independent geologist if he has drillable prospects available. We all have a backlog of good deals that would have gone undrilled for a month during the 1981 boom. There is no shortage of opportunities to find new oil in the Permian Basin. The sticking point is the risk factor and venture capital to pursue the prospects.

New exploration concepts or techniques have always generated renewed activity. The current use of Three-D seismic is an excellent example of this, Now comes an exploration technique, soil fluorescence, which defines, not a trap where oil may occur, but the presence of oil itself. Under some conditions, it can even identify which formation contains the oil.

A major component of any oil is the aromatic compounds which are composed of combinations of Benzene rings. These compounds glow (fluoresce) when exposed to ultra violet light. They also are the most water soluble of all oil-related hydrocarbons and can migrate to the earth's surface.

The amount of each of the multitude of aromatic compounds found in oil depends on the source of the oil and the distance of migration from its original source to the location where it is collected in a subsurface trap. The American oil industry has lead the world in defining and exploiting these traps, yet we have been slow in using geochemical methods in locating oil accumulations directly.

With the advent of instruments which can measure the presence of these various aromatics with accuracy down to parts per billion, we are now equipped to seek effectively the smaller, more subtle stratigraphic traps.

Fluorescence analysis is based on soil samples collected in a grid over the prospect area. The lab report consists of two phases:

1. A listing of concentrations by sample numbers of the three most common aromatic families: naphthalene, phenanthrene and anthracene. This data can be contoured to locate areas of highest concentration, which defines areas of maximum vertical migration.

2. Oil samples from prototypes fields are studied with a device which produces a synchronous scan of the wave lengths at which the above compounds fluoresce. The oil curve in figure 1 results from this study. The oil curves can be compared to similar studies of selected soil samples. Computer derived Correlation Coefficients measure the degree if fit between the oil and soil. In figure one the CC is .838, indicating that the soil curve is genetically related to the oil.

This data, taken together, define the area of vertical microseepage, and under most conditions, identify the formation containing the oil. This is not a measure of the amount of oil trapped. Answering two of the three critical questions related to oil discovery with 78.57% accuracy goes a long way toward reducing the risk factor to a manageable level. It is not too bold to state that surface geochemical exploration may well hold the key to the future prosperity of Midland and the surrounding areas.

The cost of flourescence analysis is one-tenth the cost of 3-D seismic. An operator can more cost effectively target his 3-D effort by eliminating "goat pasture" with fluorescence and other geochem techniques prior to employing the more expensive methods.

The mini-boom in Concho County in the King Sand is an example of how geochem methods can revolutionize exploration. The most active drilling area in West Texas was predicated largely on the effective use of surface geochem methods to refine the conventional search using data from previously drilled wells. Drilling based strictly on geochemical evidence is not the recommended approach. Consistently successful exploration still requires the hard work and intuition of a geologist sifting through the subsurface evidence.

West Texas has survived revolutionary changes in market dynamics, departing major oil companies and reduced activity. Changing economic conditions demand a new strategy. Exploration methods of a past generation will not suffice. Surface geochemical exploration offers the opportunity to look at old areas with new eyes.

Alabama field yields another gusher

FRISCO CITY, Ala. (AP) — A Houston company announced that a southwest Alabama oil well has tested at 3,060 barrels per day, a rate analysts say makes it one of the best producers in the continental U.S. in several years.

The fifth oil well to be drilled in the North Frisco City Field will produce about 1,000 barrels of oil daily once regular production begins in October, said Lisa Elliott, a spokeswoman for Nuevo Energy Co. of Houston.

"This well was important to us in that it was from a different section (of the field)," Elliott said. The first four wells were drilled in the northern part of the field and the fifth well in the southeastern part.

She said two other new wells in the Monroe County field that tested at more than 3,000 barrels of oil a day are also expected to produce about 1,000 barrels a day in regular production.

The partners expect to put three more wells on production in late September or early October when a second gas processing plant is completed.

The fifth well also tested at 3.9 million cubic feet of natural gas per day, Elliott said.

Analyst John Myers with South Coast Capital in Austin, Texas, said the North Frisco City wells are among the biggest in recent memory found in the lower 48.

He said a few wells in the South Texas Austin Chalk using horizontal drilling technology were bigger, but production from that late 1980s play declined very quickly.

The North Frisco City field is producing 2,000 barrels of oil and 1.7 million cubic feet a day from two wells.

BRIEFS

Top Triton executive to retireat year's end

DALLAS (AP) — William J. Lee, Triton Energy Corp.'s top executive since 1966, will step down at year's end, the company announced.

Lee will be replaced as chief executive officer by Thomas G. Finck, an oil and gas executive known for his financial expertise.

Finck comes to Triton from American Energy Group, an independent oil and natural gas exploration and production company he formed in 1991.

Also leaving Triton is David E. Gore, 57, who will retire immediately as president and chief operating officer.

Finck, 46, has replaced Gore and becomes chief executive officer Jan. 1, the day after Lee, 65, relinquishes the post.

Lee will continue as chairman of the board and chairman of the executive committee.

Expanded Santa Fe pipeline in operation

PHOENIX (AP) — Capacity of the Santa Fe Pacific Pipeline from El Paso, Texas, to Phoenix has been increased, the partnership operating the pipeline announced.

A spokesman said the $23 million expansion included 40 miles of 12-inch pipeline between Tucson and Phoenix.

The capacity from El Paso to Tucson increased to 95,000 barrels a day from 67,000, and the capacity from Tucson to Phoenix increased to 50,000 barrels a day, double what it was before.

The expansion will allow greater use of refineries in El Paso and in Artesia, N.M., that expanded their own capacity in 1991, the Los Angeles partnership said.

Global Natural gets tax exemption from Russia

HOUSTON — Global Natural Resources Inc. has received from the Government of the Russian Federation, a Resolution guaranting an exemption from the existing export tax to joint ventures engaged in oil and gas operations which were registered prior to January 1, 1992, until such time as these ventures are compensated for expenditures related to increased production volumes. The Russian Government will establish a committee which will deal with specific matters related to this decree, including the determination of the precise period of exemption.

Offshore lease sale sluggish

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Sluggish economic conditions in the domestic petroleum industry resulted in only mild interest in a federal offshore oil lease sale this week, officials said.

A total of $30.6 million was bid for 61 blocks in the western Gulf of Mexico, said Barney Congdon, a spokesman for the Minerals Management Service, which conducted the sale.

"Money-wise, it's very low," Congdon said.

Amoco Production Co. made the highest bid — $5.85 million for an offshore lease near Matagorda Island in Texas, Congdon said.

Last year's sale for western tracts drew 182 bids for 142 tracts, Congdon said. Eventually, the government issued five-year leases on 135 tracts for $59 million, he said.

A sale of central Gulf leases last May drew only $56 million in high bids.

"It's just primarily economics. The gas prices are low. A lot of the operators already hold leases. They're in the business of making money. They're not going to spend it unless the can make it back," Congdon said.

Phillips, Partek swap recycling interests

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Phillips Plastics Recycling Co. and Partek Corp. are exchanging interests in two recyling partnerships, resulting in each company owning one business apiece, the companies said.

Phillips will become full owner of Phillips Plastics Recyling Partnership. Partek, based in Vancouver, Wash., will own Phillips Recycling Technology Partnership.

The companies had been partners since September 1990.

The swap allows Partek to concentrate on development and licensing of plastics recycling technology, and allows Phillips to emphasize production of recycled plastics, said Tim Taylor, Phillips Plastic Recycling president.

Phillips, a subsidiary of Phillips Petroleum Co., can recycle 18 million pounds of plastic a year at its plant in Tulsa.

Royal Dutch-Shell posts higher earnings

Royal Dutch-Shell said its results were helped by oil prices that were about $1 a barrel higher during the April-June quarter.

Royal Dutch-Shell said second-quarter earnings came to 576 million pounds, or $1.09 billion, compared with a profit of 533 million pounds in the same period a year earlier.

Earnings were higher although revenue dropped to 1.21 billion pounds, or $2.3 billion, from 1.32 billion pounds in the second quarter of 1991.

Royal Dutch-Shell said one-time gains from such items as tax benefits resulted in profits rising at the same time revenues fell.

The higher earnings came despite a drop in revenues to 3.06 billion pounds, or $5.81 billion, compared with revenues of 3.73 billion pounds during the same period a year earlier.

Staff report

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin has announced course offerings in petroleum engineering for the fall semester.

ENGR 689: THEORY AND APPLICATION OF RESERVOIR TRANSIENTS: Theoretical development of equations used to describe the fluid flow through porous media under steady, pseudo-steady and unsteady state conditions. Practical applications of interpreting pressure drawdown and buildup test results using conventional and curve-matching techniques. Other topics include fractured reservoirs, interference testing, multirate and pulse testing. The course is being conducted simultaneously with the University of Texas at Austin graduate course PEN 383, Unique No. 16927, Theory and Application of Reservoir Transients, leading to the master's degree in petroleum engineering.

Seismic crew count

The Society of Exploration Geophysicists reports that the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters fell in July, the third consecutive month. The land crew total fell four to60 and the marine crew total fell three to nine, a net total decrease of seven, to a total of 69 crews. Worldwide seismic exploration remained relatively stable during March; the land crew total fell by four crews while the marine vessel total rose three for a net decrease of one crew, a total of 411 crews and vessels active around the world.

BLM to revise onshore rules

Staff report

The Department of the Interior's Bureau of Land Management (BLM) has published proposed revisions to Onshore Oil and Gas Order No. 1 that would more clearly spell out requirements for approval of federal and Indian onshore oil and gas operations.

In issuing the proposed revisions, BLM Director Cy Jamison said, "The changes would give operators the kind of clear checklist they've asked for, so they will know exactly what requirements have to be met to get approval for their exploratory, development, or service wells." Jamison added, "The changes also mean that anyone interested in oil and gas development on public lands can have the assurance that environmental protection has been properly considered."

Onshore Order No. 1, Approval of Operations, covers conduct of operations on federal and Indian oil and gas leases, including applications to drill on a lease; subsequent well operations; abandonment; and environmental and safety obligations. The proposed revisions would address the submittal of a complete application for permit to drill (APD), including a drilling plan, surface use explained, including on site predrill inspection, public notification, coordination with other surface management agencies, agency deadlines and time expectations, and federal and operator responsibilities.

"Revising the order will bring it into line with numerous policies and procedures that have changed since the original order was issued in November 1983," Jamison pointed out. "The changes would also clarify certain environmental and public notification requirements."

For example, the proposed revisions would codify two requirements of the Oil and Gas Leasing Reform Act of 1987 affecting processing of APDs.

Harken Energy reports second-quarter loss

DALLAS (AP) — Harken Energy Corp. lost $30,000 in the second quarter, compared to a $455,000 loss a year earlier from comparable operations.

Revenue was $1.39 million, up 19 percent from $1.17 million in the second quarter of 1991.

The company shed its gasoline marketing and natural gas operations during the second quarter of 1991. With those subsidiaries included, the company lost $1.9 million in that period last year.

The company's well servicing and contract drilling revenues slipped to $572,000 in the quarter compared to $482,000 a year ago.

Atmos Energy posts smaller quarterly loss

DALLAS (AP) — Atmos Energy Corp. reported a slightly smaller loss for its third quarter compared to a year ago.

Atmos lost $1.1 million, or 15 cents a share, during the quarter that ended June 30. A year ago, the company lost $1.3 million, or 19 cents a share, in the quarter.

Revenue in the quarter was $58.4 million, down 5 percent from $61.5 million in 1991.

Chief Executive Charles Vaughan said rate increases implemented earlier this year helped reduce losses during for the quarter.

Separately, the company said it would increase its capital budget 12 percent to $37.0 million next year from $33 million this year.

Plains Resources suffers loss of $157,000

Plains Resources reported a net loss of $157,000 or 2 cents per share on total revenue of $29.5 million for the second quarter, compared with a net loss of $11.9 million or $1.52 per share on total revenues of $18.7 million for the same quarter in 1991.

The company said the current quarter loss was largely due to expenses associated with the workover of its Miami Fee No. 1 well.

During the quarter, the company's oil and natural gas production was up more than threefold to 628,000 net equivalent barrels from 206,000 net equivalent barrels a year ago, primarily as a result of its acquisition of California-based Stocker Resources. Plains consolidated results for the quarter include two months of Stocker operations.

British Petroleum posts loss, cuts workforce

LONDON (AP) — British Petroleum Co. said it was cutting 11,500 jobs from its workforce and that one-time charges had given the firm a loss of $1.24 billion for the second quarter.

BP attributed the charges to its massive layoffs and asset writeoffs.

Analysts said BP was trying with one bold stroke to write off mistakes of the past under Chairman Robert Horton, who was fired in June and replaced by Chairman Lord Ashburton and Chief Executive David Simon.

The new managers plan to cut the work force by 11,500 people, or about 10 percent, as they seek to trim annual costs by roughly $950 million per year. About 80 percent of the layoffs will be in Europe, the company said.

Panhandle horizontal well draws interest

■ A horizontal well in the Texas Panhandle attracts the attention of residents, other oil producers

By Chip Brown

PERRYTON, Texas (AP) — It was only a couple of years ago that horizontal drilling sparked a renewed oil boom in South Texas.

That boom has since quietened, but 550 miles north on the Texas-Oklahoma border, folks are listening hard, hoping to hear the boom coming their way.

Doubters say Ochiltree County's first horizontal oil well has nothing to tell, except a tale of a lost $1 million.

Others say it's too early to judge.

"It's still up in the air. We don't know what we have," says Richard Smith, land operations manager for Norcen Explorer Inc., the Calgary, Alberta, oil exploration firm that drilled the well.

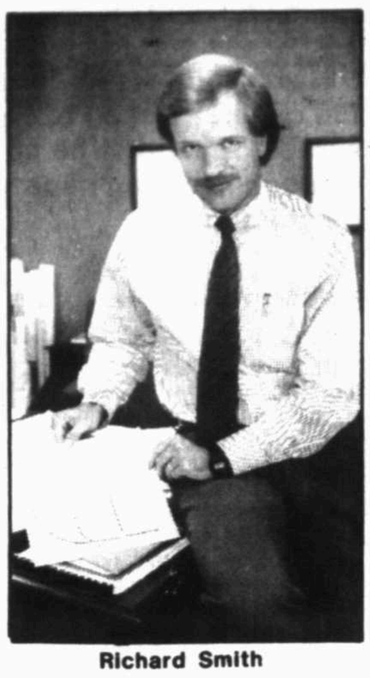

While questions abound just east of this tiny Panhandle oasis, few debate the wide ramifications of the pumpjack's output.

A hit could mean a rekindling of oil drilling and countless new jobs for an oil-depressed area. A miss would simply be more hard luck.

"Everybody here sure hopes the horizontal technology can work because we sure need it," says Brent Allen, former president of the Panhandle Producers and Royalty Owners Association and a Perryton resident.

"Things are pretty slow. Everyone here has their fingers crossed."

Horizontal wells drop several thousand feet underground before branching parallel to the earth's surface. The technology has made hundreds of wildcatters rich seemingly overnight because of its ability to reach into more than one oil pocket.

Richard Smith

Several petroleum companies flocked to Perryton last fall, gobbling up 50,000 acres in property leases after learning Norcen was spending $1 million to gouge into the once oil-prolific Marmaton formation.

Many have compared the Marmaton's geological make-up to the Austin Chalk formation in South Texas, a highly-fractured limestone deposit which stretches across roughly 14 counties west of Austin to the south of San Antonio.

Austin Chalk produced up to 3,000 barrels of crude a day in some horizontal wells just a few years ago. It accounts for 1,827 of the state's 2,592 horizontal wells, according to the Texas Railroad Commission.

Experts say a horizontal dig producing at least 300 barrels of oil a day is productive and profitable.

The mere thought that the Marmaton was being mentioned with the Austin Chalk sent oil executives scrambling. During its heyday in the 1960s, the Marmaton produced 19 million barrels of crude in vertical wells.

Companies like Oryx Energy Co. and Mesa Inc. of Dallas as well as Muirfield Resources Co. of Tulsa, Okla., have tied up land in anticipation of a hit.

"There was some thinking that the Marmaton formation was similar to the Austin Chalk," says Robert Hammond, a spokesman for Oryx, which has 16,000 acres near Norcen's well. "But we are taking a wait-and-see approach. If Norcen hits, our interest would be piqued."

"We have no plans to develop that property at this point," says Jay Rosser, a spokesman for Mesa, which has 5,000 acres in the area. "We have a wait-and-see attitude."

So far, the reviews indicate more of a boondoggle than a boon.

"I have heard a few rumors and (Norcen's well) seems to be moderate to poor compared to what the expectations were," said Tom Cambridge, president of Parallel Petroleum Corp., an oil consulting firm in Amarillo.

The rumors have been backed up by Norcen's first test submitted to the Texas Railroad Commission, which shows on June 24 the well was producing 132 barrels of oil and 389 barrels of water a day.

"They are not very good numbers," says Dale Steffes, founder of Planning and Forecasting Consultants, a Houston-based oil firm. "Some of the original Austin Chalk numbers were in the thousand barrels a day category. The only way 130 barrels a day would work out is if the well keeps producing for a long time."

One of the criticisms of horizontal drilling is that it usually hits big early on and then exhausts oil supplies quickly.

"The formation in the Panhandle may be a different type of formation so that the falloff rate won't be as fast," Steffes says. "But if the numbers start out low, they may not get much better."

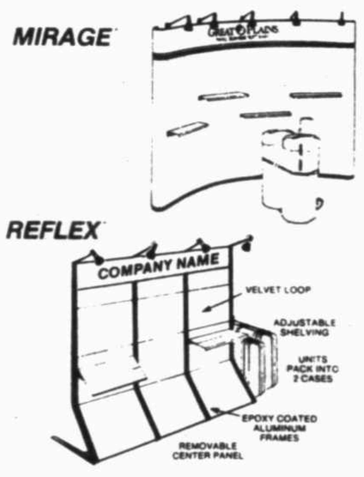

David Baumann, president of Muirfield Resources which is a minority partner with Norcen in the horizontal well, says he still has high hopes for the Marmaton.

"We made some mistakes on this first well mechanically," Baumann said. "We would expect the numbers to be higher. But we are thinking about drilling another well. There are a lot more naysayers out there today than people trying to do something new. We have confidence in this area."

For Perryton, the horizontal well has meant about 25 new jobs and a much needed ripple in an oil-starved economy.

"I hope it makes a ton of oil," says Allen. "The regular activity going on will continue. But if we get a big hit, that well will be pumping more than oil. It will be pumping money and life into this area."

BIOREMEDIATION

The high tech, low cost solution in . . .

- Dealing with hydrocarbon-based soil or water contamination
- Reducing paraffin build-up in oil wells
- Enhancing oil recovery

DE-CONTAMINATION

Bioremediation is the natural demanufacturing of waste into non-harmful elements. Alpha West supplies naturally-occurring yet non-genetically engineered biological products in a proprietary Bio-Catalyst which enhances decomposition, even in oxygen-depleted environments.

Hydrocarbon-based contaminants are transformed by reduction/oxidation, ultimately into carbon dioxide and water.

Bioremediation allows you to " speed up nature," resulting in a natural, cost-effective way to remove problem materials.

Since 1985 we have been actively involved in bioremediation as a de-contamination solution through our parent organization, Alpha Environmental, Inc. Alpha West utilizes Alpha Environmental's AE-Petrologic Microx® -T Process for land treatment of wastes.

PARAFFIN FIGHTER

Conventional hot oiling may cause formation damage, is expensive, and in time, paraffin will build up again. Chemicals are usually costly and toxic, even sometimes threatening the health of your field employees.

Alpha West utilizes Alpha Environmental's AE-PetroLogic®-1, a safe, yet very effective biological product which controls deposition of paraffins from wellbore to tank battery, and is cost-effective and non-toxic.

Parrafin control is accomplished through the aerobic microbial metabolization of oil and the formation of biosurfactant. The aerobic microbial treatment for paraffin control is a new, yet very successful approach.

Oilfield communication offers answers

■ Advances in oilfield communications can provide operators the answers they need.

By Ellen Hopkins

Short of sending a field hand to a well site, operators once had no other way of determining what was happening with a well on location. But, now enhanced oilfield communication technology has provided innovative answers to operators' need to know.

Whether the needed information concerns well treatments – or simply questions about how a particular well is pumping – operators can monitor, control and receive communication on production operations.

Regarding questions raised by operators about whether a well was treated and when, Jim Davis, operations manager for Tretolite, recalled that these questions were the basis for some of today's advanced communications.

"Everyone used to pull paperwork from a file cabinet," Davis said. "I used to see maps drawn on scraps of paper. The possibility of error through handling paperwork has now been eliminated."

Davis cited the improved communications advantages as threefold: to field technicians, to Tretolite and to its customers.

"Today the treating truck operator can pull up info on a well from his truck," he said. "This computerized ability means our trucks are sophisticated. One of our goals was to take the paperwork concern away from the drivers so they can concentrate on treating wells. They can now immediately input the treatment data on equipment in the truck and be done with it."

DAVIS EXPLAINED that if an operator wants an instant report sent to two of his offices Tretolite can do this.

"After the well treatment the driver can download the data through a modem. Anyone concerned with the information can receive it. This transmitting thru a modem is not our desired goal, but it's a vast improvement."

Davis said environmental data sheets, material safety data sheets, along with DOT & EPA regulations on specific products is also accessible via computer from the truck.

"This gives field people the information they need. In case a chemical is spilled on a field person's clothing, he can immediately access the proper handling methods. It's the law that everyone who comes near chemicals has this data available."

Instant information became a goal of Tretolite and Petrolite when the company reevaluated its Management Information System (MIS) over the course of a year.

"We assessed the company's needs and found immediate access to inventory was an important one," said Davis. "We have always recognized the need for it. Now we can pull up our inventory from anywhere in the system. We know where a particular chemical is and how much of it there is throughout the system.

"What this does for our company is to provide a financial advantage by keeping inventory/raw material levels at minimum. Instead of handling inventory via fax, envelopes and stamps, we've bypassed that and handle it all on computer.

"WHEN A chemical is used on a well site, the number of gallons is recorded and inventory levels are automatically adjusted. Also, we can track the demand for particular products and plan accordingly."

Davis said of the thousands of tanks located on customers' properties, accessing the age of the tanks, when they were last tested for integrity, and what chemical is stored in each tank, is no problem.

"This is all information we had before on hardcopy, but it was cumbersome; now we can retrieve it instantaneously."

He said the enhanced communications advantages to the customer include accurate reporting and instant availability of information on their wells.

"Efficiency of reporting is imperative due to DOT & EPA regulations," Davis said. "We can provide customers an inventory of the number and amounts of different chemicals used on his property in the last year which he may request for reporting purposes.

"We feel it is our obligation to provide this information. A lot of what we have available for our customers' reporting needs isn't even required yet, but if you follow Washington you can see what's down the road."

Pump off controls (POCs) are a result of operators wanting to see what is currently happening down the road on leases. These devices allow operators to monitor and control production operations from remote locations, and to extract an array of other data. Delta-X Corp., headquartered in Houston, and D-Jax Corp., headquartered in Midland, both manufacture pump off controls.

'Everyone used to pull paperwork from a file cabinet. I used to see maps drawn on scraps of paper. The possibility of error through handling paperwork has now been eliminated.'

Jim Davis,
Operations Manager, Tretolite

OPERATORS HAVE found that POCs allow for centralization of well site monitoring as well as reveal potential problems in time to reduce damage and operating costs. POCs have become popular as operators try to monitor wells with reduced staffs. Customized with software in an operator's host computer, hundreds of wells can be monitored and controlled from one location.

More advanced POC systems will soon provide multi-user capability, i.e. operators with offices in several locations can all access data on one well simultaneously.

According to John Pike, division sales manager with Delta-X in Midland, "pump off" describes the condition existing when fluid in the wellbore is drawn down such that the pump barrel is not completely full on the upstroke.

"The result is a damaging shock known as fluid pound," said Pike. "Continuing to operate under these severe conditions causes rod parts. The sooner you can shut the well down until it fills with fluid the better; that's what a pump off control is designed to do."

Pike explained that the pump off time interval, or downtime, varies for each well. "The 'DX System Sixty' has a patented setpoint method for automatically determining the downtime setting," he said.

It is based on monitoring the load on the polished rod relative to its position in the pumping cycle. When the load on the downstroke is greater than the setpoint, the POC shuts down the well until sufficient fluid builds up.

D-Jax uses a different method, one based on pumping speed. Dee Mills explained that wells with sucker rods have two pumping speeds.

"WHEN THE pump has a full barrel of fluid it has a slower speed than when it begins to pound fluid," said Mills. Measuring the difference between full pump speed and fluid pound speed provides a delta factor used in calibration.

His Well-Tender POC also features a security key and a patented alarm that sounds ten seconds before a well resumes pumping so operators on location can avoid injury.

Reports generated by the Well-Tender can be printed twice daily and indicate well status and run percentages for today and yesterday. Use of radio telemetry provides a self-sustaining means to check a well rather than wait for a report.

"Comparison of the report's run percentages tells the operator if there could be a potential problem," said Mills. "For example, in a waterflood area if one well shows an increase the operator will get a well test to see if the increase is due to the flood or if it is signaling a potential mechanical problem."

Mills said the Well-Tender is designed so if lightening shuts off the electricity, the pump will automatically start up again at the beginning of the cycle because fluid has built up. This happens without someone driving out on location.

Both Delta-X and D-Jax offer digital recorded messages on wells with pump off controls. "If a flow line leak is detected in the middle of the night, the central computer calls a designated phone number and a recorded message announces the problem," said Pike.

"The answerer inputs a code over the phone to indicate the message has been received. If no code is input, the computer calls the next number stored and so on until someone in the company is made aware of the problem."

Pike said many of the majors' wells in Permian Basin fields are automated, such as Exxon's Fullerton and Means fields.

"The wells tied into Shell's plant at Denver City have operators monitoring them 24 hours a day," Pike said. "And virtually every major field Amoco has is automated. Texaco, Chevron and Phillips are also using POCs."

Energy exec pay outstrips earnings

By Anne Pearson
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – Many U.S. energy company executives got nice raises in 1991, even though their shareholders lost money, according to a new study.

Thirty-eight percent of the companies the Connecticut-based energy research firm John S. Herold Inc. surveyed gave their top five executives raises in 1991, even though shareholders saw the worth of their investments decline. Herold surveyed 945 salaries at 250 companies.

The study also found that 13 percent of companies that did relatively well, as measured by their stock prices, actually paid their top managers less in 1991.

The top cash earner last year was Occidental Petroleum Chief Executive Ray R. Irani, who pulled down $2.3 million.

Runners-up were Allen E. Murray at Mobil Corp. and Drew Lewis at Union Pacific, who each earned about $2 million.

Exxon Chairman Lawrence G. Rawl's cash salary was $1.8 million last year, although Herold estimates Rawl's total compensation package is worth about $9 million. Exxon is the world's largest investor-owned oil company.

Enron Chairman Kenneth L. Lay wasn't far behind, with a salary of $1.75 million last year. This does not include any non-cash compensation.

Amarillo independent Thomas R. Cambridge, president of Parallel Petroleum, earned the distinction for the second year in a row of being the lowest-paid executive of a publicly held energy company. He made $32,500 last year.

Cambridge says his post is part-time, and he's paid as a consultant. He also got a raise in 1992 to $48,000.

"One encouraging note is that 49 percent of companies have compensation packages that reflect the company's previous year's performance," said Ron Bienvenu, director of project development for Herold.

The research firm singled out three Houston-based companies as giving their executives a raise while the shareholders lost money.

But the three said Thursday those numbers are deceiving.

All three say their share prices have been battered either by the general industry downturn or special charges.

Herold's study showed Panhandle Eastern's five top bosses got 38 percent more than the year before, despite the 54 percent drop in stock value.

Spokesman Jim Hart said his calculations show an 18 percent raise for top executives and that's because one position was changed to a more weighty job, and another executive got some some deferred pay that came due last year.

Chief Executive Officer Dennis Hendrix gets no cash salary, he noted – only stock options.

Herold also singled out Kelley Oil Corp., which paid its top five managers 28 percent more, even though the stock value dropped 30 percent.

Kelley President Joe Bridges said Herold's earnings figures don't reflect the fact that reserves jumped 56 percent from 1990-91, production increased 85 percent, and cash flow grew by 44 percent, despite an 11 percent drop in natural gas prices year to year.

Kelley Chairman David L. Kelley earned $600,000 last year.

SATELLITE: Will be the coming method of communications in Basin oilpatch divided into two distinct arenas. Factory Floor and Distributed Control.

Factory Floor was the earliest and easiest approach to communications between microprocessors. It is usually direct, from the microprocessor to the machine it is connected to; the system is involving into a Local Area Network. This system is fast and reliable, but also limited in size and cumbersome.

Distributed Control, which has its beginnings in the pipeline industry, has more powerful microprocessors. This system was designed to absorb large numbers of separate microprocessors in very large networks and has the ability to link microprocessors using hard wire, radio, telephone — including cellular telephone — satellite or all media at the same time.

The heart of any microprocessor-based communications is the protocol, the language each machine uses to speak to other machines. The most widely used protocol in the Basin is BSAP, Bristol Standard Asynchronous Protocol, which allows direct, radio at any frequency and BAUD rate, telephone and cellular phone, leased line and satellite communications.

Fairchild calls Basin oilfields a perfect radio and distributed protocol situation. A large oilfield may average five miles by five miles, a small area and distance, but he pointed out that the density, number of wells and sites needing communication can be large.

It is this short distance and high density, along with high costs that has kept satellite usage from being more utilized in the oilfield, according to Fairchild. He said satellite cost per site ranges from $10,000 to $15,000 minimum. But he expects satellite usage to increase in the future as costs fall.

"The technology exists," Fairchild said, going on to predict that "Lower-cost satellite equipment, coupled with present distributed technology, will be the fastest-growing Basin communications technology."

Another area of the oil patch where satellite technology is thriving is logging.

Schlumberger Well Service began Lognet in 1985, according to Bob Danti, network operations manager.

"We log all our wells and all the data goes into a digital computer," he explained. "That data is then transmitted over satellite into a master hub in Denver, then it goes anywhere on our network. It could be domestic, or it could be international. Or we can, using telephone lines, call our client and send them a copy of the log using their fax machine. Or they can get a copy of the log on their PC by calling us or us calling them and downloading it."

The system operates using a small aperture antenna, 1.2 meters, that is portable and carried to the well site on the logging truck. The logger sets up a digital circuit using geosynchronous orbit and the signal is beamed down to a larger hub antenna in Denver, which is connected to Schlumberger's network. The network is two-way, Danti said.

According to Danti, the advantage to the client, in these days of downsizing, "is the client doesn't have to have a representative on the well site for a logging job. He can have the information transferred to where ever he is; he can make an evaluation and call the truck, telling our engineer what he wants done."

Yet another company utilizing satellites is Topographic Land Surveys, which uses the Global Positioning System satellite receiver primarily for mapping surveys such as for pipelines, wells or roads.

The GPS, the brainchild of the Department of Defense, uses a constellation of 21 satellites orbiting the Earth that communicate with receives using radio waves. The system measures the time lag between a radio signal sent by the satellites and a simultaneous signal within the receiver to calculate distance. By communicating with at least four of the satellites, the unit can calculate its specific location on Earth.

The receiver, about the size of a car stereo, can be taken in a car, boat or airplane and used to map a proposed pipeline, mark the best place to cross a river or drill a well.

The receiver can hold up to 999 points that can be stored on a disk for later use or placed in a computer and run through an AutoCAD program and printed out as a map.

"One advantage is it works in latitude and longitude, which we can convert to state plains coordinates," said Bill Keating, GPS manager with Topographic.

He is convinced the GPS could be the next utility, used to help guide ambulances, police cars and fire trucks.

Exxon International gets chief

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Exxon Corp. said Friday that Rene Dahan, a Dutchman who is a 29-year veteran of the company, will become president of Exxon Co. International, following the abduction and slaying of former president, Sidney Reso.

Dahan, 50, has been executive vice president of Exxon International since March 1991. The subsidiary, based in Florham Park, N.J., is responsible for oil and gas operations, except exploration, outside North America.

Dahan, who was born in Morocco, joined Exxon in 1963 at its refinery in Rotterdam, Netherlands. He later became manager of the company's refining department in the Netherlands.

In 1977, Dahan became a corporate planner at Esso Europe, which was responsible for Exxon's oil and gas operations in Africa and Europe. He later became chief executive of Esso B.V., the Exxon affiliate responsible for Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg.

Reso was abducted from his suburban New Jersey home in late April, shot and later died while trapped in a self-storage locker. A former security guard for Exxon, Arthur D. Seale, has been charged with kidnapping and murder. His wife Irene pleaded guilty to federal extortion charges earlier this summer.

LOOP seeks profitable year

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Gov. Edwin Edwards predicted in 1974 that the nation's first offshore port for supertankers could pay for itself in less than a decade. That was before the oil bust.

After more than 11 years in business, the Louisiana Offshore Oil Port is $543 million in debt and hoping for its third profitable year in is history.

LOOP's other profits were in 1989 and in 1991. LOOP lost $20 million in 1990, but earned $5 million in 1991. Officials project the crude oil unloading facility will make $10 million this year.

"It's improving, but it still needs to get better," said Bob Thompson, president of LOOP Inc., a consortium of five oil companies — Shell, Texaco, Marathon, Ashland and Murphy — that own and operate the platform.

Housed 19 miles off the coast and sitting in 115 feet of water, LOOP is the nation's only deepwater port for supertankers.

LOOP officials hope to increase capacity and profits by increasing the amount of crude oil being pumped through its pipelines.

LOOP can handle 1.4 million barrels — 58.8 million gallons — a day, but has averaged about 900,000 barrels a day this year. That's less than 65 percent of capacity.

Pipelines link LOOP to refineries in Louisiana, Texas and the Midwest, which collectively account for 30 percent of the U.S. refining capacity. Sixty percent of the oil goes to Louisiana refineries.

As LOOP seeks more business, Thompson wants state officials to fight any proposed taxes or "disincentives" that would hurt the superport.

LOOP's top competitors are lightering operations, which use small tankers to shuttle crude from supertankers to inland ports. It takes about four or five shuttle tankers to unload a supertanker, Thompson said.

'I think the people of Louisiana should be extremely proud of that facility.'

Jude Patin,
Louisiana transportation chief

State transportation chief Jude Patin recently flew by helicopter from Baton Rouge to LOOP for a tour. The state transportation department, through Patin and the Louisiana Offshore Terminal Authority, coordinate the state's oversight of LOOP.

He said he was impressed with what he saw and that he hopes to help LOOP increase the amount of oil in its pipeline.

LOOP pumps 15 percent of the total foreign crude entering America.

"I want to energize that process," Patin said. "I want ... not 15 percent, but a heck of a lot more."

Patin said he wants to set up a marketing campaign to bring more oil into LOOP.

He said Thompson and other LOOP officials eased his concerns about the potential for major oil spills that could hurt the environment.

Even state Rep. Melvin "Kip" Holden, D-Baton Rouge, one of the most outspoken members of Louisiana's environmental community, agreed LOOP has run a clean operation, free of catastrophe.

When LOOP was proposed in 1972, environmentalists fought the idea, warning that oil spills from the supertankers and pipelines could devastate Louisiana's wetlands. Environmentalists and fishermen are pleased so far, Holden said.

"As long as I don't hear a lot of complaints, I'm fine," Holden said. "They've done a pretty good job of taking care of things on the environmental side."

Some environmentalists have said LOOP should be taxed to cover its potential for vast spills.

The state doesn't need to do anything that would harm LOOP — such as raising its tax burden — especially when the oil and gas market is depressed, Holden said.

Thompson takes great pride in a record free of major spills.

The deepwater port prevents accidents because big tankers are unloaded in deep, uncrowded waters where there is little risk of groundings or collisions, officials said.

In more than 11 years of operation, LOOP has safely unloaded 2.5 billion barrels of crude oil from more than 2,400 ships.

"We need to employ the latest techniques and I'm confident that we are focused in that direction," Patin said. "I think the people of Louisiana should be extremely proud of that facility and what it's doing for the economy of the state of Louisiana."

Thompson said LOOP has been and will continue to be a very significant economic benefit to the state economy.

Most of the $850 million construction cost is invested in facilities and equipment in the state, he said, and LOOP spends $36 million in Louisiana each year. In addition, Thompson said, 60 percent of the crude unloaded at LOOP, or about 540,000 barrels per day, is processed in Louisiana refineries.

LEARNING TO PLAY AS A CHILD AGAIN

Texts by Elizabeth Edwin

For most children, being placed in a room full of toys for an hour would be a dream come true. But for children who are victims of abuse it is therapy; play therapy.

While it may sound like an oxymoron, play therapy is a very real way to help children — and sometimes adults — work through their problems.

In the forward to "Children in Play Therapy," Clark E. Moustakas stated, "reactions of a child in play are a revealing barometer of emotional problems."

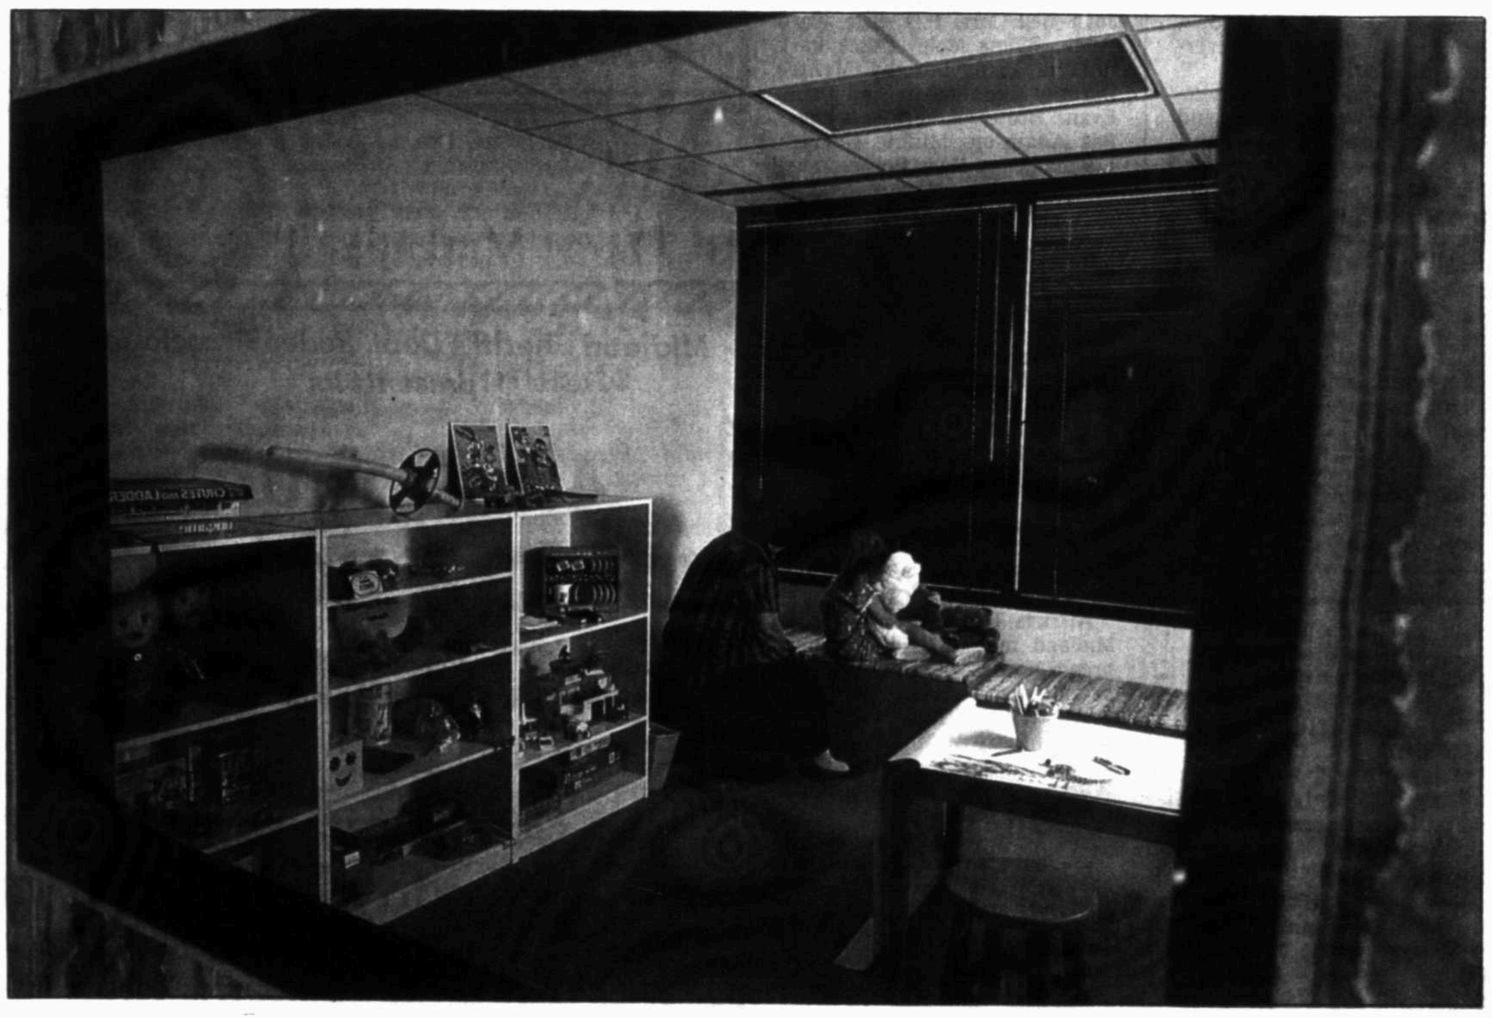

Play sessions can show normal children, children with temporary difficulties and children with deep emotional problems expressing and exploring their anger and fears, feelings of inadequacy and regressive impulses through such objects as clay, paint, sand and dolls.

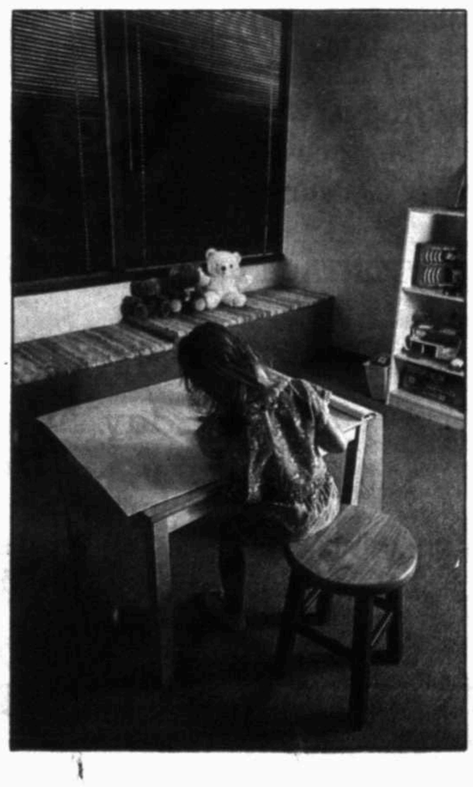

"Child-centered play therapy does not offer reward and approval, nor does it extol punishment and criticism. A child who is rewarded or approved may tend to limit himself to those actions and expressions which bring favor. He will not accept many of his own inner feelings that are in conflict or that are opposed to the approved feelings," according to Moustakas.

Meg Branson, counselor at the Midland Rape Crisis Center (MRCC), said, "A child comes here (MRCC play therapy room) and meets an adult who believes in them. Many of these abused children — particularly sexually abused children — have learned not to trust their own feelings. It is very important that they believe you believe them and what has happened to them. You must gain their trust."

WHEN A CHILD'S CHILDHOOD IS TAKEN AWAY

EDITOR'S NOTE: Names of victims used in this series are not their real names.*

Lisa walked through the office door on a mid-summer afternoon looking every bit a normal 3-year-old. Dressed in pastel shorts and top, with sandals on her feet, she was asking for a piece of candy from the sack her mother held.

She sat down quickly in a chair, as directed by her mother, and began to munch on the candy bar while they waited.

In many ways, this outing was much like a visit to the doctor or dentist. Lisa had an appointment and her visit would last about an hour.

The scene is innocent enough, but the reason Lisa has an appointment at this office is not. Lisa's innocence has been taken away.

Her appointment is at the offices of the Midland Rape Crisis Center where she will visit with Meg Branson, a therapist and counselor.

"Her stepfather has genital warts and now Lisa has them," Ms. Branson said.

At the age of 3, Lisa is a victim of sexual abuse. And while all victims of abuse must deal with the emotional turmoil, Lisa also must deal with the physical aspects.

Midlander's 80th birthday celebrated

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Midlander Mary Ellen Rains celebrated her 80th birthday in style recently at the Opryland Hotel in Nashville, Tenn. Her children, Helen Jones of Tulsa, Okla., Joyce and Ireland Brock of Gulf Breeze, Fla., and Kenneth Rains of Pensacola, Fla., hosted the celebration, which included 30 family members.

McKnight-Harrison

Mary Ellen and her sister, Mae Hendrickson, also of Midland, were met at the Nashville airport by the clan, all wearing blue shirts with white emblems stating "Mary Ellen is 80 and quite a lady," and carrying signs that read "Happy Birthday Mother!" Airport bystanders joined the group in singing "The Birthday Song" to Mary Ellen.

The family attended "Nashville Now" during the evening performance, and as the camera panned the audience, all 30 blue shirts were shown on TV.

The following evening, a beautiful birthday dinner was served in one of the hotel's dining rooms, with cake and all the trimmings. Afterwards, the group enjoyed an outdoor musical, with colored, dancing waters. The next day, relatives from six different states gathered in the hotel's Magnolia Room to visit, and a family picture was taken on the famous staircase used by many brides for their weddings.

A native of Ohio, Mary Ellen was raised in Ponca City, Okla. She moved to the Tall City from Enid, Okla., 12 years ago. In addition to the children who hosted the gathering, she is the mother of the late Jean Walker, and she has 15 grandchildren and 18 great-grandchildren.

Mary Ellen is active in First United Methodist Church, United Methodist Women, Midland Woman's Club and Dellwood Senior Citizens Center. In addition, this busy lady volunteers with the Alzheimer's program at First United Methodist Church and visits regularly at three nursing homes.

FORMER MIDLANDER Elinor Preston chose to be married in the same church in Kings Mountain, N.C., where her parents, Pat and Charles Preston of Midland, were married 29 years earlier. She became the bride of Craig BeView on Aug. 8 in the Boyce Memorial Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church.

After a honeymoon to Disney World in Orlando, Fla., the couple are at home in Gastonia, N.C.

Wedding week parties included a lingerie shower given by former Midlander Cindi Collins of Fort Worth and Ellinor's maid of honor, by the pool at the Holiday Inn in Kings Mountain; a bachelorette party hosted in Charlotte, N.C., by Pi Beta Phi sorority sisters of the bride, and a bachelor party given in Gastonia by the best man, Brian Grooms of Scottsville, N.Y.

The rehearsal dinner was given by the groom's parents, Helen and Dr. Dale BeVier of Kennett Square, Pa., at the Holiday Inn in Kings Mountain for the wedding party and out-of-town guests. In addition, a barbecue cookout was held in Gastonia for friends and family in attendance.

The bride's aunts hosted a wedding day brunch in the AR Presbyterian Church's Fellowship Hall.

The wedding reception, hosted by the bride's parents at Kings Mountain Country Club, featured the Clemson Orange Jam Band and special music by the groom and his parents. The "get-away" car was a 1932 Ford, decorated for the occasion and containing chilled champagne for the newlyweds.

The Prestons, who were married on Aug. 11, 1963, were honored the day following their daughter's wedding with an anniversary breakfast in the Holiday Inn's Magnolia Room in Kings Mountain. Hosts were their children, Dean Preston of Clemson, S.C., and Ellinor and their new son-in-law, Craig, and the best man and maid of honor from their wedding, the groom's father, Dr. John M. Preston IV of Columbia, S.C., and Peggy Reynolds Levergood of Charlotte, N.C.

Guests, who included members of their wedding party and Pat's parents, Martha and Fred Owens of Kings Mountain, and Charles' mother, Lula Preston, signed the couple's original wedding book and enjoyed viewing wedding memorabilia.

Pat and Charles had a relaxing vacation at Hilton Head, S.C., following the wedding and before returning to Midland, where they have been longtime residents.

SUFFER THE CHILDREN

PLAY: Therapy comes in form of play for children

(From 1H)

In play therapy, a therapist does this by playing with — and listening to — the child. It is a way of helping with a child's self-esteem.

"You find out a lot through play. Personality traits come out," Ms. Branson said.

While a play therapy room is filled with toys, each toy has a therapeutic purpose, according to Ms. Branson. "There are rules here and all the toys are purchased with therapy in mind," she said.

Play therapy is generally used with children ages three to 12.

"It helps kids who are not vocal express themselves," Ms. Branson said. "The value of play for a child is a way of verbalizing feelings. Their play becomes their expression."

It is a form of verbalization particularly for sexually abused children because they usually do not know the words to express what has happened to them. It allows the therapist to find the trauma and introduce corrective intervention.

Sand tray therapy is one method used in play therapy.

"We have a tray filled with sand with animals, people, structures and monsters. We ask the child to construct a scene. An abused child usually creates a dysfunctional scene by burying things in the sand because things are hidden in the home. The children don't want to talk about it (the abuse). They just want to forget it because it makes them feel helpless and betrayed," Ms. Branson said.

DRAWING, PAINTING and coloring are other forms of therapy that allow the counselor some insight into the child's life.

"Some children will draw a house and it will have no doors," Ms. Branson said. Through her experience as a counselor, she has found that a lot of homes of those abused have no boundaries. "Literally, they have taken the locks out or have taken the doors off the hinges.

"The visuals are used to have the children tell a story. If you can get them to explain their drawings to you, they usually tell you what is happening in their life," Ms. Branson said.

Colors, shapes and space are important keys to these drawings.

"Many abused children use very dark colors; or in cases of incest, if they draw a picture of the family, the abuser will be (drawn) in dark colors. Sometimes the abuser is the only family member missing from the picture or they are off by themselves," Ms. Branson said.

"I've been working with a 5-year-old boy who has been molested by an older child. He couldn't talk about it, but every week for weeks he drew monsters.

"These monsters were always invincible. They had large teeth and a very big mouths and they would spit things that would hurt him. We would talk about them and he would tell me the terrible things these monsters could do," Ms. Branson said.

The drawings were always in dark colors, shades of brown and black, sometimes containing red.

"Eventually, the monsters didn't mean anything to him anymore. He tired of it. You see, these kids are working through their problems but they are not conscious they are working through them."

In Moustakas book, he writes, "To different children, objects have different meanings. In children's imaginations sand, clay, water and the like may symbolize almost anything — a parent, a sibling, a painful experience, fears, food, love and hate, hostility. These fantasies are accepted by the therapist. Children are encouraged to explore their feelings further through such media.

"Objects with more definite structure, such as cars, knives, soldiers, guns and boats also may symbolize many things to children. The therapist accepts the child's symbolism exactly as it was and does not in any way try to enforce society's labels in children's play," he wrote.

FOR ADOLESCENTS, Ms. Branson said she uses a combination of play therapy and verbal counseling. "Once they are in their teens, they are a lot more likely to talk than a child. But there is value in play therapy even for adults.

"Adults who were denied their childhood feelings were frozen in time. They couldn't talk about what was happening. But some adults will come in here and use the dolls as if they were themselves. They talk to them, hug them. They become mothers to the lost child within themselves and this often helps them in their own motherhood," Ms. Branson said.

"Adults who were abused often become the abuser," said Lanell Honeyman, former director of MRCC.

"That's all they learned. These adults must be taught parenting skills," Ms. Branson said.

"There is a myth about becoming an abuser if you were abused. It doesn't have to happen, you just have to get help to overcome it," Ms. Honeyman said.

Ideally, the whole family would receive counseling in an abusive situation because everyone is affected by what is happening. Family members — and often the extended family, including friends — are considered secondary victims of the abuse.

When a child is sexually abused, the therapist not only tries to help the child deal with the emotional trauma of the act, but he also works on relieving the shame and guilt children often feel.

"The shame that is associated with it — just naturally knowing what has happened was wrong — is important," Ms. Branson said.

"Sometimes it is so confusing to a child because they want the affection, sometimes they are starved for love, sometimes it (the sexual abuse, such as fondling) even feels good," Ms. Honeyman said. "Yet, in their hearts they know it's wrong, so they feel guilty because it felt good. Some adults hate the realization that as a child they knew it felt good."

WHILE SEXUAL abuse in the family is most commonly thought of as being between father-/daughter or stepfather/stepdaughter, reports are showing an increase in abuse between brother/sister, mother/son and child-/child, as well as in cases of relatives and close family friends.

"We tell our kids to beware of strangers, but the people they need to be taught to say no to are sometimes those closest to them," said Robin Anderson, a MRCC board member and volunteer.

According to information from MRCC, more boys are being sexually abused than has been reported in the past.

"Statistics show that below the age of 12, boys are as likely to be molested as girls," Ms. Honeyman said. "With this type of abuse there is a great fear of homosexuality and it is not talked about easily."

For girls, the stigmatization tends to focus on the loss of virginity.

Once a child has been abused, their behavior tends to take on some dramatic changes. They usually misbehave in school, have nightmares, their grades fall, they will anger easily and often are more aggressive to siblings. Substance abuse and sexual play often accompany the other symptoms.

The goal in play therapy is to alleviate the symptoms.

Once a child has admitted fears, "In play, you can create shields that protect the child. You can help the child create a myth about themselves having magical powers," Ms. Branson said. "It is like a stress reduction. You help the children look for ways to protect themselves. If children are having nightmares, give them something in the room with magical powers."

When helping abuse-reactive children work through their victimization, the following treatment goals — from "When Children Molest Children" — serve as guidelines for therapist:

1. The child can acknowledge that the abuse occurred.
2. The child can discuss specific incidents both individually and in the group.
3. The child can verbalize anger and/or ambivalence toward the offender.
4. The child can verbalize feelings of guilt and/or self-blame.
5. The child can explore confusion about experiencing physical pleasure while disliking the behavior.
6. The child recognizes that the abuse he/she experienced was not his/her fault.
7. The child has developed sexual abuse prevention skills.
8. The child has developed appropriate physical boundaries with others.
9. The child understands that there is a relationship between victimization and perpetration.
10. The child has learned positive stress-reduction techniques.

UNFORTUNATELY, there is no quick fix. Therapy is long-term, often taking several weeks, months or even years for the therapist to establish the trust of the victim.

"Parents often tire of the play therapy. Sometimes it's very difficult to see what is happening. Some parents get discouraged because they don't see immediate results. But this is a long process," Ms. Branson said. "Parents often want to pull their children out when something doesn't happen right away. But every chance we have to build that child's self-esteem is so important.

"Unfortunately, we are dependent on the parents' permission for the child to be in play therapy and for them to bring them to the appointments," she said.

"We need them to know they have the right to protect themselves and the right to say no," she said.

Most importantly, play therapy gives the child a place where someone believes them and believes in them, a place where they can talk about their victimization without shame and express themselves in a safe place.

LISA: Child's innocence taken away; abuse marks her for life

(From 1H)

According to "The American Medical Association Home Medical Encyclopedia," gential warts are soft warts that grow in and around the genitals. They are transmitted by sexual contact and are cause by a papillomavirus. While the warts can be removed by surgery or by the application of podophyllin, there is a tendency for the warts to recur.

"He's trying to say he didn't do it, but there is no other way for these to be contracted except through skin-to-skin contact according to what the doctors are telling me. You don't get this by taking a shower together," Lisa'a mother said.

"The warts gnaw and hurt, and must be treated. They do go into remission sometimes, but when they flare up, they make her feel ill. She is marked for life," Ms. Branson said. "She also is at the mercy of the doctors and nurses, and her mother who must treat her. She feels she has no control over her own life."

"She is going to be scarred for the rest of her life. Not just in here," Lisa's mother said pointing to her heart, "but physically too. She will have these warts the rest of her life."

Lisa's mother has brought her to the Rape Crisis Center for play therapy, a process of helping children through problems using a combination of toys, drawings and counseling.

While they wait, Lisa talked easily with her mother but shunned friendly gestures made by strangers in the office. She always looked away from those who spoke to her and, almost instinctively, moved toward her mother, as if for protection.

The office was decorated in soft pastels with thoughts of inspiration placed here and there. A soft voice, too soft to be understood, was coming from an office close by.

Ms. Branson emerged from her office and knelt at the side of Lisa's chair to say hello, then spoke to her mother and others in the room. While her mother talked about her court proceedings with the others, Ms. Branson's attention was focused on Lisa.

THEIR WORDS were soft. They were counting how old Lisa was on her fingers. When they reached three fingers, a small smile came to Lisa's face.

Ms. Branson showed her once again how to count three fingers.

Ms. Branson — or Meg as she prefers to be called by those she works and plays with — is one of the few who maintained eye contact with Lisa. After a few minutes of talking, Lisa announced, "I wanna play."

While this was only Lisa's third visit to play therapy, she understood that playing was what she was there for.

"She's not really aware of the real reason she is here. She needs some long-term care to help her form some continuity in her life. This invasion has made her feel she has no control," Meg said. "We must create some emotional control for her."

Meg gently took Lisa's small hand as they walked down a short hallway to the play therapy room; a white room decorated in soft shades of pink and blue with various toys lining the shelves.

Lisa entered the room and headed directly to the toy shelves, but something outside the window caught her eye. She went to the windows and climbed up on the benches on her knees to peek through the blinds.

Meg raised the blinds and they talked about what they saw.

But Lisa quickly grew bored with the view and headed back to the toy shelves and selected a box of Lego blocks to play with. She began pulling the pieces from the box.

Watching her, once again she seemed like an active 3-year-old, yet there was a sense of urgency about her. Her voice sometimes got a little loud when she was frustrated and she became impatient easily.

But Meg's patience never waned.

Meg told Lisa she could make anything she wanted with the blocks. Lisa decided to make a house. But first, she insisted all the blocks be taken apart.

MEG PATIENTLY helped her. She let Lisa remain in control, explaining everything she was doing each time Lisa asked, as they broke each block apart from the others.

"Every toy in the room has a purpose," Meg said. "By letting her take each block apart as she wanted, I'm trying to show her she has control over the toys. She can play as she choses."

She quickly grew tired of the blocks and wanted to do something else.

Meg picked up a plastic alligator with clay in its mouth, but Lisa's attention was diverted. She wanted something else.

Meg explained that she may play with something else, but first she must put up the blocks. With reluctance, she began to put the blocks away ... one block at a time, still separating each piece from the others before placing them in the box.

Lisa's attention once again was distracted. She looked at a booklet, wanting to find a picture of a house like her own.

Meg reminded her again that she must put away one toy before taking out another.

While putting the remainder of the blocks away, Lisa discovered a door. She and Meg talked about the door and why houses have doors.

As Lisa closed the box, she noticed a woman drawn on the outside who is laughing.

"Is she happy," Meg asked.

"No," Lisa replied.

"Are you happy?"

"No."

"Why?" Meg asked, but received only a shrug for an answer. She didn't press for more.

A ball of red clay was Lisa's next choice of toys. She wanted to create a dinosaur. She dropped the clay on the floor and insisted she couldn't pick it up.

"Yes you can. You can do things by yourself," Meg assured her.

"I try to keep her focused on what she is doing. She is really scattered right now and she bores easily, especially if she doesn't think she can do what ever she is attempting," Meg said.

They played with the clay, learning how to make a ball by rubbing it between the hands in a circular motion. Two balls of clay put together looked like a baby to Lisa and she wanted Meg to make the baby a bottle. Meg made arms and legs from the clay from the baby.

Lisa's clay became a rainbow, a snowman, a snake. Lisa talked about her puppies at home, that she doesn't like snakes, that she likes to play. She tore the clay into tiny pieces, then put it back together, then tore it into tiny pieces again.

SHE WANTED to do something else, but her time had passed. Meg told her it was time to stop playing and put the clay away. Lisa was reluctant.

With a little direction from Meg, Lisa began cleaning up. In much the same manner as putting away the blocks, Lisa placed each little piece of clay — one at a time — into the mouth of the plastic alligator where the clay was kept.

Meg explained that she must leave the room for a few minutes, but Lisa had to clean up before she could leave.

Meg left the room, pleased with the progress they had made.

"The first time she came, she tore the room apart. She normally has been very hyper, but today was better," Meg said.

"Sometimes it's very difficult to see what is happening (in play therapy). Some parents get discouraged because they don't see immediate results. But this is a long process.

"With Lisa, I try to keep her focused. ... She doesn't feel she can do things, so she tries to give up without trying," she said.

Meg explained that the child's life has been very chaotic. Lisa's mother was attempting to implement at home the same rules Meg was using in play therapy in order to create some consistency.

While Lisa is not aware of why she comes to visit Meg, Meg knows that the "play" they do while she is there can be very beneficial.

"We must create some emotional control," Meg said. "What we do (in play therapy) is all very subtle. It takes time. And like I said before, a lot of parents tire of it. They don't see a rapid improvement. It's a slow process. And in these circumstances — it is unfortunate, but we have to count on the parents to consent to the children coming and we must rely on them to bring the children."

Meg returned to the play therapy room to find that Lisa did indeed clean up the rest of the clay.

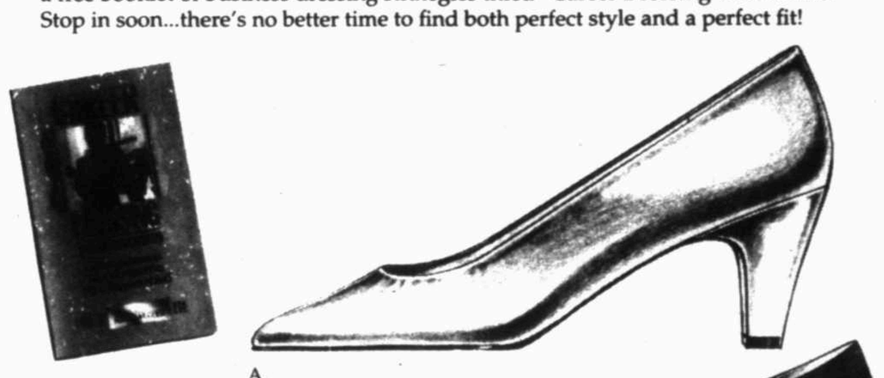

Overall, things went well.

Meg thanked Lisa for the good job she did straightening up and asked her to come back and play with her again. Lisa said she would, but between doctors appointments, her mother's schedule and other circumstances, Meg can only hope she will have that opportunity to help Lisa again.

'Poll tax' term has roots in antiquity

NEW YORK (AP) — 'n the 13th century, "poll" meant the top or back of a head and came to mean the counting or entering of votes and, also, to vote at a poll or to give one's vote, according to etymologists.

"Poll tax," a tax on heads (or, in other words, people) became in this country a tax that one had to pay in some states to vote in elections.

Corticosteroids can cause complications

ATLANTA (AP) — Patients taking corticosteroid medications for a variety of conditions — including juvenile arthritis, asthma and nasal allergies — are at increased risk for severe complications, reports the Atlanta-based Arthritis Foundation.

The complications could involve such childhood illnesses as chickenpox and measles, it warned, explaining:

"Corticosteroids suppress the immune system even at low doses taken over a long period of time. This makes children and adults vulnerable to serious or even fatal cases of chickenpox or measles when taking such medications.

"A new warning about the potential serious consequences of immunosuppressant doses of corticosteroids soon will be added to the products' labeling."

Political terms have Latin backgrounds

NEW YORK (AP) — The word "candidate," — one that aspires to or is nominated or qualified for an office — came into the English language about 1600. Etymologists say it is from a Latin word meaning "clothed in white," from the tradition in ancient Rome of candidates for an office wearing white togas as a symbol of purity.

Candidates may not always be candid, but "candid" too can be traced back to the Latin word for white. Sometimes a candidate is an "incumbent," the present holder of the office. "Incumbent" was added to the English vocabulary in the 15th century. The original denotation of the Latin word it comes from was to lie down.

Breathing through mouth causes pain

CHICAGO (AP) — Breathing through the mouth can cause headaches and pains in other parts of the body, says the Academy of General Dentistry.

"People who breathe through their mouths tend to push their heads forward and their lower jaws backward," explains Dr. Joseph Discipio, an academy spokesman.

"This changes the way the upper and lower teeth fit together and throw the teeth out of balance."

The imbalance, says Discipio, can strain muscles in the jaw, causing pain. Because bones connect jaw muscles in other parts of the body, pain can travel from the jaw to the head, back, face, arms and ears.

At Wit's End

When it comes to chairs, husband set in his ways

By Erma Bombeck

Bombeck

The first thing you notice in our family room is the chair. It is a white Naugahyde lounger that has been draped with a sheepskin auto seat cover, with the buckles flapping near the floor.

It grabs your attention because somehow it doesn't seem to fit the decor of the room: Oriental rug, white furniture and New Guinea artifacts covering the walls.

To some people it probably looks like it is awaiting a pickup from the Salvation Army. Actually, it makes a statement about our marriage.

I hate the chair. OK? It's as tasteless as wearing a satin baseball jacket over a Laura Ashley dress, but early in a marriage, you learn what is important and what is negotiable.

When we were joined in wedlock, I figured I was in charge of decorating the castle. That worked for about four weeks, until my husband brought up the subject of "his chair." He had definite prerequisites. It would have to be comfortable, soft, capable of elevating his feet, have a headrest that would support his back so he could stretch out, and have a table and lamp nearby.

"You have just described your bed!" I said.

Taste was not a priority.

I provided him with a cushy little plaid barrel chair. He got rid of it because he couldn't rest his head.

In deference to his "tired head," I replaced it with an Early American rocker a la John F. Kennedy. My husband said it was hard and the motion made him sick.

He picked out an ugly lounger that was the wrong color and took up the entire family room.

He has played musical chairs ever since we have been married. One chair is too scratchy ... another too straight ... another too soft ... another makes him go to sleep.

He picked out the white Naugahyde lounger. He occupied it two weeks before he complained, "It's too hot." That's when he brought in the old sheepskin auto seat cover.

Last night, I dangled a pair of dice from the arm of his chair and pasted a sign on the back of it, "BABY ON BOARD."

You do a lot of things in marriage you're not proud of.

'Funny' bone really isn't

NEW YORK (AP) — When is a bone not a bone? When it is a funny bone — that sensitive place at the bend of the elbow. In this area the ulnar nerve passes close to the surface between skin and bone. Because the nerve is relatively unprotected, any sharp impact stimulates it and causes a sudden, painful, tingling sensation in the arm and fingers. The funny bone got its name, according to some sources, from its location near the humerus, which connects shoulder and elbow.

Advice is offered

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — After a hurricane, eat nothing that has been touched by flood waters, advise emergency disaster medical workers. They also suggest:

■ Dispose of all mattresses, pillows and cushions that have been in flood waters.

■ Disinfect all cans and utensils before use if they have been touched by the flood waters.

DEAR ABBY

Artist takes too much license with portrait

EDITOR'S NOTE: Abby is on a two-week vacation. Following is a selection of some of her favorite past letters.

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Mine is a very embarrassing problem. I am a 20-year-old college junior at a large university. For a while I dated what seemed to be a nice guy I'll call Bill. He attends the same "U," and is an art major.

Van Buren

Bill took some harmless photographs of me on the beach in my two-piece bathing suit last summer. After that, I sort of broke off with Bill and started seeing another fellow.

I recently learned through friends that Bill is painting a nude portrait of me, using as a model the picture he took of me in the bathing suit. Of course, he's using his imagination, but I don't like the idea. He's planning to use this "nude" portrait of me in an art exhibit. I do have a great body, but I don't want half the world seeing me naked, in addition to which I don't want people to think that I am the kind of girl who would pose for a picture like that. It could destroy my reputation.

Is there anything I can do to stop him? — NO NUDE MODEL

DEAR NO NUDE: Since it's your "great body" Bill wants to immortalize on canvas, ask him to please use somebody else's face. If he refuses, ask him to please leave the suit on, or you will see a lawyer about bringing another kind of "suit" into the picture.

DEAR ABBY: Here is the situation: A man in his middle 60s and a woman in her early 60s have recently married. She was the town's most attractive widow for many years. The man's wife had been dead exactly seven months to the day he remarried.

I always thought that out of respect to the dear departed mate, it was customary to wait a full year before remarrying. I would appreciate your opinion. — KNOWS BOTH

DEAR KNOWS: How one treats his mate when he (or she) is living is the only meaningful way in which one can show "respect." And waiting one year (or 10) isn't going to make one bit of difference. Time is precious. And if two people feel they can find happiness together, who am I to count the days since their dear ones have departed? (And who are you?)

DEAR ABBY: I know a man who took his wife and recently widowed sister-in-law to a baseball game. No sooner had the three of them sat down in their reserved seats when in came a gentleman and his young son, and sat right beside them. The man who had brought the two ladies happened to know the late entry, so he introduced him to the women.

The gentleman, who happened to be a widower, had the seat right next to the widowed sister-in-law. The two of them hit it off very well. Six months later they were making wedding plans!

Not until then did the widow learn that her brother-in-law had bought ALL FIVE TICKETS, and seated her right next to his friend.

Wouldn't you say this was a lot better than trying to arrange a blind date? — IT HAPPENED IN HOUSTON

DEAR HAPPENED: Much! Had the brother-in-law asked his friend if he wanted to meet a nice widow, the friend would probably have said, "No thanks. I know enough widows."

And if he had asked his sister-in-law if she wanted to go out with a nice gentleman, she probably would have asked, "How tall is he?"

Treat yourself to a collection of Abby's most memorable — and frequently requested — poems, essays and Dear Abby letters. Some are sad, others are funny, but all are worth keeping. To order Abby's new booklet, "Keepers," send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's "Keepers," P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

'Marimums' spectacular, easy to grow

By Deborah A. Benge

This fall gardeners will have the opportunity to grow one of the most spectacular flowering annuals — marimums. These traffic-stopping beauties derive their name from a combination of the terms marigold and chrysanthemum which denotes large-flowered American marigolds that possess a similar flower form and are used as a fall crop like chrysanthemums.

Benge

Offering several advantages over fall planted chrysanthemums, these long-blooming marigolds also provide tremendous visual impact even at a distance and are extremely easy to grow. More good news — by planting now, you can avoid problems with spidermites, the arch-enemy of spring-planted marigolds.

There are three varieties of American marigolds used as marimums: "Discovery Yellow," "Discovery Orange" and "Voyager Yellow." Discovery Yellow is the variety that was tested in this area and did very well. It grows to an 8- to 10-inch height with the other two marimums being somewhat taller.

To get you started on the road to marimum success, follow these simple steps:

■ Choose a planting site drenched with sun, at least eight to 10 hours of direct sun a day.

■ Base your choice of fertilizer on soil tests taken from your bed. If you don't have a soil test results, you can apply a slow-release lawn fertilizer (many of which contain substantial amounts of sulfur-coated urea) at the rate of one to two pounds per 100 square feet of bed. Although more expensive to purchase, use of a slow-release formulation (which releases over a 10- to 12-week period) helps reduce nitrate contamination of our precious groundwater. Whatever fertilizer you choose, make sure it doesn't contain any herbicides or weed-control materials.

■ Ensure good soil drainage by adding generous amounts of organic material such as compost, hay, straw, shredded pine bark, peat moss, etc.

■ Thoroughly till the fertilizer and organic material into the soil to a depth of 8 inches. Forming raised beds within the planting area, even if they are only 6 inches taller than the surrounding soil, will improve drainage greatly.

■ Space your Discovery Yellow marimum transplants 8 inches apart and Voyager Yellow at 12 inches. After planting, mulch the entire bed with a thick blanket of compost, hay, straw, etc., to reduce annual weed problems while conserving soil moisture.

■ Soak the bed immediately after transplanting. Thereafter, irrigate only when the top inch of soil becomes dry to the touch and the plants need water. Don't keep marimums wet after they become established (about two or three weeks). Continuously soggy, wet soil in the planting bed will stunt the growth and can kill marimums.

Along with firebush, marimums are one of the lowest maintenance, most trouble-free annuals available. Very little manicuring is needed and insect and disease is seldom a problem, so no spraying is needed.

For visual impact marimums can't be beat, even at a distance. Plant them in a drift in an accent corner, in front of a hedge, in a whiskey barrel or anywhere you need a dramatic spot of color. You can have this kind of color from September to our first hard freeze.

For unmatchable color and performance, now is the time to plant these wonder plants. Check with your local nursery or garden center for marimums.

Eerie glow not UFO, it's neon lights for vehicles

By James Cummings
N.Y. Times News Service

DAYTON, Ohio — The first thing you notice — and you can't help but notice — is an eerie glow moving along the street a few blocks away.

What you're seeing is not one of the road-hugging flying saucers from Close Encounters of the Third Kind; it's a car outfitted with neon undercarriage lights illuminating the street beneath.

As they come closer, the unnerving visual effect of the lights in blue, pink, purple or half a dozen other shades often is augmented by the thumping bass of a blasting in-car sound system.

Brian Emmons, 22, of Dayton saw them on a van in Springfield. "Wow! I've gotta have 'em, I've gotta have 'em. That's what I said to myself," he says.

Brad Warden, 21, of Dayton says he was leafing through a magazine about customized trucks this spring when he noticed an ad about the lights. His reaction was the same as Emmons.

The two young men are among the first Dayton-area owners of a car accessory that swept through Florida nearly two years ago and now is bowling over custom car enthusiasts across the country.

The long neon tubes that are arrayed under the grill, rear bumper and along the sides of a car catch the eyes of onlookers from blocks away. Warden says he usually keeps his stereo volume down to a reasonable level at night, but he still draws attention.

"I want to be different," he says. "I don't want to be just like the next guy that pulls up alongside you at the stoplight."

Warden drives a heavily customized 1989 Chevrolet K-1500 pickup that he regularly enters in car shows and stereo competitions.

Emmons had the lights installed on his 1990½ Geo Tracker convertible. "It's all black and chrome and with the pink lights underneath it looks totally different at night."

Both men got their lights at Solar Shade of Mid-Ohio, a Waynesville custom shop. Owner Ken Steele says he's sold about 25 sets of the lights so far, including a set for his own van.

He sells Northern Lights brand neon kits, which are manufactured by a Cincinnati company founded this year to get in on the growing neon car light market.

Steele's kits cost about $325 plus $100 for installation. Northern Lights also are available at Sound Waves car stereo stores.

Custom S Trim Shop on Salem Avenue sells a brand of lights called Motion Neon from a Miami manufacturer. Custom S owner Greg Buchholz says he sells kits starting about $350 plus installation.

Buchholz and Steele say the neon tubes are enclosed in thick acrylic cylinders that protect the breakable fluorescent neon tubes from bumps and stray rocks. The lights are guaranteed for a year.

Valerie A. Zucker, promotions director for Motion Neon in Miami, says two brothers, Roberto and Efrain Rodriguez, designed the first set of neon car lights a few years ago. "They wanted to make a car look like something from Back to the Future," Zucker says. "They put a set of neon lights on a car and were shocked at how good it looked."

The brothers founded a company two years ago and now sell neon light kits to more than 200 dealers across the country.

"It's still neat to see them driving down the street, but here in Miami everybody's seen them before, and they don't cause as much of a stir," Zucker says.

Psychiatrist treats troubled clergymen

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — The medical director of a Maryland facility says it's possible to successfully treat priests who are sexually attracted to children.

"I think there's a positive story to be told about the efficacy of treatment and the aggressiveness of the (Roman Catholic) church in recent years about confronting this problem and doing what has to be done," said Dr. Frank Valcour of the St. Luke Institute in Suitland.

Valcour said the facility has treated more than 100 clergymen for sexual molestation problems since 1985. Six had relapses — that is, began to behave in a way that appeared headed toward felony behavior, he said.

The licensed psychiatric hospital, which treats members of the clergy for a variety of disorders, provides intensive follow-up for four years after a patient is released.

The hospital recommends the discharged priest not work with children of the age to which he is attracted, said Valcour, a psychiatrist.

A group of people the discharged priest lives or works with is told of his problem, so they can provide support and keep an eye on his behavior — and challenge him about it, if it's required.

"It might not be necessary for everybody to know the whole story, but in our view it is necessary for a significant number of people with authority to know," Valcour said.

St. Luke bases its treatment for sexual addiction on the 12-step program used for alcoholism and other addictions.

It involves the patient's recognizing his sexual attraction, acknowledging it can't simply be wished or willed away, admitting the harm it has caused, and deriving strength from the support of others and from some higher power.

In the St. Luke experience, ephebophilia — sexual attraction to teen-agers — is far more common among priests than pedophilia, attraction to pre-pubescent children, Valcour said.

Valcour estimated at least half of the clergymen treated at St. Luke were sexually molested as children.

FALL FASHION

Text by Elizabeth Edwin Photos by Joe D. Williams

From tykes to teens, the western look will be riding high in Midland for fall.

"The Southwestern designs are very popular for our part of the country," said Katy Linehan, owner of Upstairs Downstairs/-Nextdoor.

From infants on up, Bonnie Goodrich, owner and manager of Kid's Kountry and Sassies, said the western influence is strong. "There is fringe, appliques, just everything western."

And with the western look being so prominent, "denim is in," said Diana Moreno, manager of Kid's Mart. "But denim is always in."

While it's true that denim never really leaves the fashion scene, this season there is a resurgence in its popularity. Five-pocket denim jeans, denim skirts, shirts and vests provide an updated look, as well as offering versatile, durable clothing additions, Ms. Goodrich said.

"Vests are coming back strong this season," Ms. Linehan said, "We have a lot of vests in denim, in a western style."

Other western-inspired looks can be seen in the use of fringes and appliques, according to Ms. Goodrich.

HOWEVER, don't go digging out the glitzy gear from the early '80s "Urban Cowboy" influences. This season's style is more in line with the newer looks of "City Slickers" and "Dances with Wolves."

"This is not a costumey, 'Urban Cowboy' look," said Fred Fritschi, men's denim buyer for JCPenney department stores. "Instead, it reflects the country's more relaxed lifestyle and interest in casual, outdoor dressing.

"The five-pocket jean is the backbone of back-to-school dressing and the western look," Fritschi said.

While denim is the foundation for the western styles, fear not of growing tired of basic blue. Colored denim offerings range from neutrals such as off-white and wheat to overwashed tints of rose, wine, forest green and gold. Black and gray denims also will add versatility to a wardrobe.

To pair with denim, the classic white shirt is a must for boys or girls. However, plaid and printed flannel and denim fabrics also are popular.

Peasant blouses donning ruffles are the perfect match for prairie skirts, which often

CHILDREN'S FALL FASHIONS

The best in back-to-school basics is denim. For him, denim jeans and jacket from Levi paired with Apparatus' red-and-black plaid shirt. For her, slip You Babe's plain-trimmed denim jumper over a red T-shirt, all from JCPenney. Boots are by Code West.

Creative designs allow school clothes to grow with children

Associated Press

The main problem with youngsters and their clothes is that the kids grow and the clothes don't.

There's one way around the expensive, one-season-only syndrome: Make them yourself, and design expandability into them.

"Children generally grow upward rather than outward during growth spurts, so a garment may still fit in the shoulders or hips but is suddenly short-waisted and short in length," says Pamela Hastings of the Singer Sewing Company.

She recommends choosing dress and jumper patterns with either a dropped waist or no waist at all, to allow for a lengthening torso. The skirts can be made with several rows of tucks, to be released as the child grows taller. Elastic-waisted skirts and pants with generous cuts will expand, too, and it's smart to choose pants patterns that can be cut off and worn as shorts when the original full-length has been outgrown.

She also recommends choosing designs with raglan, dolman or dropped sleeves to offer growth room and avoid shoulder fit changes.

The lower edges of shirt sleeves and pants legs are the easiest places to add growth allowances, she says. And if the design calls for ribbing, put it in twice the recommended width; it can be worn doubled at first, then unrolled as the child grows. Lined pants cuffs in coordinating fabrics which can first be rolled up work on the same principle. Ribbing also can rescue existing garments with outgrown sleeves and pants legs.

Creative patching can save damaged items, she points out. Colorful contrast patches on worn knees (patch both knees even if only one is torn) look like deliberate embellishment, and patch fabric can be repeated on cuffs or collars. Patch pockets can be added to camouflage damaged spots. Decorative stitch or monogram settings on your sewing machine also can be used.

DENIM: Fall saddled with western styles or totally covering shirts, skirts and dresses. Cotton and chambray shirts with trimmed front yokes or studded designs also will be the rage.

With all this western dressing, accessories also will take on a different look. Western designed button covers make changing the look of a shirt or jacket a snap. Bandannas worn tied around the neck, waist or hair make an inexpensive update. Silver jewelry, bolo ties, western hats and leather belts are important additions, but the main attraction seems to be cowboy boots or ankle-nipping cowboy booties in a variety of colors.

Some of the more popular fabrics for fall will be the stonewashed, acid-washed and literally the "beaten up" look for that well-worn softness and comfort children have learned to love.

Lace often is added to shirts, skirts, shorts and jeans to create a more feminine look for the "lil' misses."

To ward off the cold winds of fall and winter, outerwear also is making use of denim. The traditional jean jacket has a new, slightly oversized silhouette while the baseball jacket changes its look when constructed in denim. Dusters and boxy barn coats with patch pockets also will be seen.

"Right now, we are seeing a lot of bright colors too," Ms. Moreno said of fall fashions.

"The colors are bold and bright," Ms. Linehan said, "such as oranges and yellows. These are very good this year. Black and white also is very strong. We see it in checks and stripes ... It is sometimes mixed with bright colors as well."

Comfort is the key for most children, and Ms. Goodrich recommends knits and windsuits for those comfy, not so dressy days.

"The kids just love the comfortable knit sets, and they love the fit of the coordinating windsuits — those are the nylon suits that look like a jogging suit," she said. "The walking shorts worn with heavy tights are real popular with the girls in colder weather. We have a lot of flannel walking shorts, and even some flannel pants for the boys."

"The new thing is the 'skort,'" Ms. Moreno said, which is a cross between a skirt and shorts, ending with what is often referred to as a split skirt.

Broomstick skirts also are a hit with the girls this season, according to Ms. Goodrich and Ms. Linehan, and they go with many of the western styles as well.

So, while you don't have to be a cowpoke to be fashionable this fall, it might help to dress a little like one with some of the latest western influenced items.

If the shoe fits...

Associated Press

Because of summer wear and tear on your child's shoes and because of his or her growing feet, it's a good idea to discard the old and start with a new pair as school begins, advises Dr. Richard J. Haynes, a Phoenix orthopedic surgeon.

Fit is critical, he says. "When you buy shoes for your child, make sure the shoe fits to the longest and widest part of your child's feet," he says.

"The toe box — that's the area at the tip of the shoe — should be wide enough to allow the toes to wiggle and should provide enough space for growth. Depending on your child's age and rate of growth, extra space about the width of your finger should allow for three to six months of growth."

Shoes should fit the heel carefully, and the child's foot should not slip out of the back of the shoe.

Italian designers create 'safe' fall wardrobes

By Daniela Petroff

ROME (AP) — When the world is in a bad mood, designers are some of the first to know.

They certainly felt the good vibes of the 1980s and hiked their hemlines to match the soaring spirits.

But they have been equally quick to react to the political and economic lows of the present decade.

Sole gambler in the Milanese fashion pack is Gianni Versace with his skin- tight black leather bondage collection — but then many of Gianni's clients dwell in the entertainment dream world.

This summer, for example, Gianni was in Miami, where he just bought a house and was busy designing wedding clothes for rock star Sting and his bride, ex-model Trudie Styler. For the Saturday wedding in England, he designed a floor-length ivory satin gown with gold and pearl trimming for the bride and a neoclassic morning coat for the groom.

The new winter look with its long slim skirts and high-waisted pants worn under a hip-length tailored jacket, plays right into the hands of Giorgio Armani, whose classic, man-tailored style put the moda Milanese on the international fashion map over a decade ago.

AP Laserphoto

A model presents a brown leather jacket with fur inlays and topped with a fur asymmetric hat for Kior's 1992/93 Fall-Winter ready-to-wear collection designed by Italy's Gianfranco Ferre.

THIS WINTER the Armani woman can dress in a pantsuit with short cuffed pants and a six-buttoned double-breasted tailored jacket accessoried by casual hiking boots and a beret pulled down over the ears. A long polo coat, also featured by other designers, completes the look.

It will be a great season for the sport footwear industry. All types of riding boots from the cowboy to the jodhpur and jumping boot, plus platform loafers, high tops, lace tops, and clumpy hiking shoes accompany casual daytime wear. They also pop up in satin for a painless night on the dance floor.

Along with the beret favored by Armani, newsboy caps and cowboy hats are sure to be popular winter head covers.

After the overdose of printed silk shirts this spring and summer, the Italian designers return to a simple jewel neck sweater or a man-tailored silk shirt to wear under the ubiquitous jacket. Jeans come in costly fabrics such as leather or shiny gold.

Except for a few discreet mini lengths, hemlines are definitely on the way down, with several fashionable stops on the way.

Most hemlines brush the top of the knee or dip down to the mid-calf, but even the below-the-knee length creeps into some collections, making dowdiness fashionable again.

However, even if hard times coupled with emancipated fashion tastes have induced Italian designers to play it safe, they were unable to kill the penchant for the sexy, a trademark of Italian style.

Thus, long skirts are slit up the side or the front to bare the stockinged flesh, while most pencil pants are so slim and hip hugging that they are no more than glorified tights.

SILKY PUFFY fabrics for such sportwear as bomber jackets, a myriad of enticing animal prints, slick leather and gold and silver studding everywhere prove that sporty can be sexy.

Chocolate — from milk to bittersweet — is the new fall-winter color. Naturally, the Milan staple black and white is omnipresent. Stripes and plaids are the latest patterns. Gold fabrics and gold threading make the already expensive clothes look even more costly.

Italian evening wear is built around the tuxedo or dinner jacket, from the man-tailored evening suit to extravagant silk gowns.

All of these styles can translate into mass production look-alikes which will give the same enticing youthful, sporty look as the designer label but at a much more attractive price.

But if it has to be the real thing, here is where to find the best of the Milan winter look:

■ Armani: Soft and beautiful suits and witty tuxedo evening wear.

■ Dolce and Gabbana: You can't find a more sophisticated pantsuit.

■ Fendi: Long and lean sweater dresses and cavemen tattered furs with unshredded price tags.

■ Ferre: Gold from jeans to sumptuous evening gowns and a fabulous French-cuffed blouse.

■ Gucci: The traditional loafer with an all-new platform.

■ Krizia: Sporty mountain clothes with couture chic.

■ Moschino: More witty tuxedo wear.

■ Versace: Daredevil black leather metal studded harnesses and black leather rodeo look.

ACCESSORIES FALL FASHIONS

Accessories can add finishing touch to wardrobe

Associated Press

Not everything you need for your wardrobe comes on hangers. Here's a sampling of accessories on the market now:

■ The Dressier Sensible Shoe. Wearing sneakers en route to work probably has saved you a lot of orthopedic grief, but sometimes you might like something a little more formal. Maybe something that you might even wear through the day.

Some oxfords or low boots might make good alternatives, particularly if you favor the tweedy, tailored look. Classic wingtips or streamlined ghillie blucher oxfords from Dextor — both with padded footbeds and flexible soles — come in several deep natural colors on oiled leathers.

■ Top Masts. If you never wear hats, you may miss an opportunity to stand out in a crowd. A businesslike leather bowler or a sly downward-brimmed hat in fur felt, both by Patricia Underwood, is likely to attract respectable second takes.

■ Eyewear. The animal print mania has reached the bridge of the nose. Look for eyeglasses in animal prints, bright patterns, plaids, and strong colors, says the Vision Council of America, a trade group. According to Carmel Monti, VICA president, subtly modified round, elongated oval and aviator shapes will be popular this season.

■ Watching It. Real time is embodied in a water-resistant jeweled chronograph watch that has a perpetual calendar programmed to the year 2100, built-in change of time zone, stop watch function, and electronic setting and battery indicators. According to Baume & Mercier, the makers, the Ladies' Transpacific is the first such watch ever designed for women. Models are 2.5 mm thin and available 18K gold and stainless steel; all 18K gold; and 18K gold with a diamond bezel.

■ Beltways. Some new twists on this simple accessory include wide leather belts with hearts or circles cut out, from Bonjour. The company also offers belts studded with faux jewels, and there is one elasticized belt trimmed with leather and closing with an oversized zipper.

■ Turn a Hair. A gizmo that will help you style one of those French roll-cum-ponytail hairdos is available by mail order, along with an instruction brochure suggesting different styles. Send $11.45 (which includes postage) to TopsyTail Co., P.O. Box 671269, Dept. 55, Dallas, Texas 75367.

Past polital campaigns featured accessories for 'party girls'

By Maureen Downey
N.Y. Times News Service

If a woman supported Dwight D. Eisenhower for president in 1952, she proved it by being a "Party Girl."

Republican leaflets urged women to "be a Party Girl" and offered them the appropriate attire — "I Like Ike" rhinestone earrings, compacts, dresses and sunglasses. The slogan even made its way onto silk stockings.

A history of campaign items geared to women is among the topics covered in a comprehensive new book, "Hail to the Candidate" (Smithsonian, $39.95).

Written by Smithsonian Institution curators, the coffee-table book examines 200 years of presidential campaigning and features photographs of quirky campaign novelties.

Although women won the vote in 1920, the 1950s marked the first time a political party developed a strategic approach to wooing women voters, says Edith P. Mayo, author of the chapter on women.

The woman portrayed in Republican campaign literature was a happy homemaker, white, suburban and content to staff the campaign office phones or hold fund-raising teas.

"Campaign issues were presented as appeals to the little woman," Mayo says.

The campaign novelties reflected that sentiment. Women were given Republican dishware, salt-and-pepper shakers, emery boards, fans and thimbles.

Mayo says the Democrats realized the value of courting women in 1960, capitalizing on John F. Kennedy's charm and looks.

But the Democratic approach still emphasized women in submissive roles, creating "Party Girl" napkins and "Coffee for Kennedy" cups.

The women's movement — rather than the political parties — has always produced political materials and jewelry addressing women's issues, Mayo says.

Ironically, the parties have tended to focus on female voters when women's issues are not at the forefront, she says.

"It's sort of inverted logic," Mayo says. "The parties feel safe enough to talk about women, but not stir up women's issues in the process."

Buckle up! It's Year of the Belt

By Carrie Donovan
N.Y. Times News Service

If this will be, as some fashion experts proclaim, the Year of the Belt, now is not too soon to start cinching in.

Forget about narrow little strips of leather, or dangly-jangly chains. The belts the style seers are talking about are at least two inches wide and bind the waist with a firm grip. They are usually leather, sometimes decoratively punched; some are covered with animal patterns.

They probably have an impressive buckle, and might have a few bits of metal here and there, but generally, the plainer the belt, the better.

Azzedine Alaia's leather filigree belt is the most striking example of the style. It is also the most expensive. Barneys New York has it, and it costs $575.

Macy's has a white leather belt two and a half inches wide, with a contoured shape to help it hug the body. It fastens in front with a large gold oval buckle and costs $42. The store also has several versions of the big belt made of stenciled calf or suede, patterned with animal markings. They range in price from $52 to $134. One of these wide belts, cinched around a cotton shirt or an oversized T-shirt, would give an outfit a whole new look. This fall, try circling one around a longer-lined suit jacket.

CLASSIC FALL FASHIONS

AP Laserphoto

This tunic-length wool cardigan, with a cravat of wine silk, is a 1940s look from Laura Ashley.

'Clothing classics' fill marketplace this season

Associated Press

Consumers who have been longing for clothing classics and muted colors will find them abundantly on the market this season. At the same time, those who enjoy bolder things will find animal prints and bright colors. And those who like to hedge their bets can have both, often in the same garment.

For the most part, silhouettes are long and colors are dark. There's plenty of black, gray, navy, taupe and muted tweed, with just an occasional dash of red. Long jackets, long, slitted skirts and trousers define the forms, though an occasional miniskirt survives.

Gray — not often chosen as a fashion color — is used in many forms but disguised with different names, apparently to offset its somber reputation. The long-skirted tweed suit by Calvin Klein at Lord & Taylor, for example, is called "ash blonde," while a Ralph Lauren menswear vest-style dress and jacket, also at the store, is called "black cream." A pretty combination by Anne Klein II is a tweed jacket and pencil skirt in "fawn" wool-blend, shown with a cabled turtleneck in "nougat." However, LaVelle Olexa, L&T's fashion merchandising vice president, puts the plain word on it: "Gray becomes one of the season's most important color directions."

Tailored jackets show up almost everywhere, not only as navy or gray standbys but in brilliant hues, like the ones at JCPenney or in the Lands' End catalog. Penney's also shows an easy-fitting jacket with a bold, oversize check in red and black or white and black. A more restrained, country-style plaid blazer, in a mustardy old gold colored shetland wool, can be found at Laura Ashley.

Ashley, long known for its pretty, somewhat girlish floral-print dresses and sportswear, has come up with some laid-back, elegant reinterpretations of classic wear that will appeal to a wider age group. An example is a sophisticated long wool cardigan with a raglan sleeve cut, worn over dark trousers, which evokes the late 1930s or early 1940s. There also are a coordinating celery-colored blazer and short classic skirt (sold separately) or a mahogany-colored suede waistcoat.

There's nothing muted about Emanuel Ungaro's Emanuel line, which features among other things, blazers, blouses, stretch pants, and sweaters in a jazzy giant zebra print. The collection's palette revolves around bold red, white and black, with assertive prints, plaids and checks.

MEN'S FALL FASHIONS

Men's fashions traditional

Associated Press

AP Laserphoto

The classic tweed jacket is the signature of many men's wardrobes. This one, from Botany 500, is sky blue with gold and green tones.

Perhaps it's due to the economy and somber times, or maybe because neo-peacock styles are too limited in appeal, but men's fashions still can be summed up in one word: Traditional.

And the pinstripe rolls on, even though it's touched with variations, like the black-on-black or navy double-breasted suits offered by Botany 500.

A current trend is to be able to wear these suits from business to evening events, says Mitchel Nichnowitz, president of the 500 Fashion Group. "Businessmen do not have the time to change into a tuxedo. Also, many occasions which a few years ago would have been strictly black tie are now making the tuxedo optional or dropping the requirement altogether. In tough economic times many organizations want their events to appear low key and businesslike."

Navy blue pinstripes, charcoal gray chalk stripes, glen plaids and checks are executed traditionally in soft shoulder suits and jackets from the Chaps and Polo University Club lines by Ralph Lauren for Greif. The company also offers uncluttered lines with rich natural colors in its Perry Ellis America collection.

Many menswear makers try to evoke the country squire in their casual lines, mixing English and American West influences. The tweed jacket is the linchpin of this look.

JCPenney shows a tweed sport coat and glen plaid slacks by Henry Grethel with a denim shirt, for example. "This fall, the changes in menswear are subtle rather than radical," says Joe Sapienza, Penney's director of merchandise development. "The trend is more toward comfortable clothes — clothes that feel like they are already broken in."

A smooth-looking version is an autumn-colored houndstooth jacket in wool-lambswool blend by Botany 500. A deep-blue version from Bernhard Altmann, also for the 500 Fashion Group, could do double duty at the office or outdoors.

Even the French are picking up on the traditional English look. Bernard Sanz, menswear designer for Yves Saint Laurent, has revived the checked Norfolk jacket, complete with buttoned belt and flapped pockets. The tweedy look carries on with toggle coats and blazers, and the collection also includes corduroy jackets or trousers, cashmere sweaters, and picture-knit vests.

Styles for men more comfortable

By Linda Anderson
Staff writer

Like women's fashions, styles in men's clothing go through seasonal changes — the changes are just made in more subtle ways.

"Most of my manufacturers release a new line every season," said James E. Borron of J.E. Borron Classic Clothing. But since these seasons are every two to three months instead of twice a year, "we now have five to six seasons per year. That creates a constant flow of new and fresh merchandise all the time."

It also makes gradual changes in men's fashions instead of the big twice-a-year splashes of new designs that women's clothing has.

Other factors make fashion changes move more slowly, he said. "When the economy gets tight, normally you don't see that many changes in fashion."

One fashion trend from the past few seasons that will be continued is floral prints on neckties. "They just continue the changes as each season progresses," Borron said. "Flowers may still be on ties, but they will be different than last season."

One of the most obvious changes in men's clothing in recent years has been the trend in colors. "Options are expanded" because "more colors are accepted," Borron said. "It used to be dark blue and dark gray were accepted (colors) for business (suits). Now other colors are accepted."

Linda Garcia, manager of K-G Men's Store, agreed. Some of the new colors in men's suits are purple, navy, aqua and copper, she said. "All double breasted."

Shirts have gone colorful too, in colors such as fuscia, teal, purple, aqua and rose, Ms. Garcia said. These vivid shirts are worn in place of the classic, white button-down shirt, often because "younger men want brighter colors."

Borron said that men of all ages appreciate the new options in colors, although a lot of new trends started with younger men of high school or college age. "Floral neckties started with college students wearing them with denim shirts."

Another fashion men probably appreciate is a trend toward more comfortably-cut clothing. "Everything is eased a little looser, so it's a more comfortable fit," Borron said. "Even most traditional suits are looser and more comfortable.

"A sportswear concept is moving into tailored clothes."

Sportswear itself will show a more outdoor look, he said. "We're going to see a big outdoor influence in sportswear, as people shift their attitude toward ecology."

And to help stretch fashion dollars, Borron said, many men will buy sports coats. "I think we're going to see a real resurgance of sports coats. People are going to stretch their wardrobe pieces as far as they can." Sports coats lend a certain air of versatility to many men's wardrobes.

Facial hair debate still growing

Associated Press

There is a whole school of thought that finds facial hair sexy — from Clark Gable's mustache to Elvis Presley's sideburns.

On the other hand, a differing school finds stubble rough and raspy, and those who agree are backed up by the research department of a razor company which claimed: "Dry beard hair is extremely abrasive and about as tough as copper wire of the same thickness."

Beards were once much more prevalent than they are now, which had less to do with fashion and more to do with the fact that the safety razor was not invented until just before World War I.

The invention ended up in every soldier's kit because gas masks fit better on a clean-shaven man.

The new grooming device also gave birth to the belief that even being under enemy attack and crouching in trenches without hot water was no excuse not to be well-groomed.

Once shaving became so easy and inexpensive that virtually anyone could do it, everyone suddenly was required to do it. Facial hair went out of fashion in mainstream America.

Lately whether or not a man shaves has been overshadowed by the intrusion into corporate America of things like ponytails and earrings. Straight razors also have been enjoying a comeback, but only because most of the men who remember what they were really like back in 1901 have died.

It was no accident that it was called a "safety" razor. Before its invention, men had to learn to shave with what was essentially a murder weapon without losing bits of nose or lips in the process — or pay a barber to do it for them.

That was the reason so many men had beards prior to World War I — and why women did not shave their legs and underarms. Only a crazy person would attempt to do so with a straight razor.

Beards have been part of dressing for success for male psychologists ever since Sigmund Freud, and they have been success symbols for college professors, Zen practitioners, Harley-Davidson mechanics and lumberjacks.

In Hollywood during the 1980s, many successful directors sported beards — Francis Coppola, Wes Craven, Brian DePalma, Steven Spielberg and Martin Scorsese.

Now, however, there are many clean-shaven top directors — Oliver Stone, Kevin Costner, Barry Levinson, David Lynch, Jonathan Demme. Even Scorsese recently shaved off his trademark goatee.

Politicians are almost always clean-shaven these days. Abraham Lincoln had a beard, but the last time we elected a president with any facial hair at all was Howard Taft in 1909.

Designers showing skirts in various lengths

By Suzy Patterson

PARIS (AP) — Long, lean and lithe looks are leading the way in upcoming winter fashions. They swept in like a tidal wave during ready-to-wear shows last March. But this doesn't mean you have to crash into the wave and buy a whole new wardrobe to be in tune with Paris or New York.

Short skirts still look fine, as Paris shows them, and pants are the ideal solution for the hesitant.

Under the influential blaze of creators like Karl Lagerfeld and Christian Lacroix, hemlines have again dropped, to mid-calf or lower. Maybe women are tiring of short skirts, and by now the eye is getting re-accustomed. But the longer lengths are beginning to look just right.

Chic young Frenchwomen will buy at least one long skirt with a slit right up the side for walking and to show an expanse of leg.

"Obviously we'll have a lot of long skirts in the shop, along with great new pants suits," said Patricia Compain, directress of Victoire, a trendy shop with a couple of branches around town. "I'm short, and long is a problem for me. But I will wear a slit long skirt — it's sexier!"

Christian Lacroix's long skirts range from some stunning suits with paisley longer skirts and multicolored checkered jackets to his favorite gaucho pants slit right up over opaque tights to look like a skirt. He also brought out great folkloric knits, and as usual the vibrant and hot-color combinations were jazzy as cymbals.

KARL LAGERFELD shows the longest, leanest looks around. His own label's favorite style revealed the leg slightly under half-sheer, narrow skirts widely edged in lace like a slip.

'Obviously we'll have a lot of long skirts in the shop, along with great new pants suits. I'm short, and long is a problem for me. But I will wear a slit long skirt — it's sexier!'

— Patricia Compain
director of Victoire

His Chanel style would have raised Coco's hackles. So much tight leather, hiking boots or sexy gold zips and heavy metal chains here are more for the motorcycle crowd than the once-demure Chanel lady.

Some of the long or short tweed jackets and frilly blouses are simply marvelous. Chanel groupies have taken note and are busily stocking up, especially on leather.

Nearly everyone takes the long-skirt route — ranging from the melancholic, droopy dark notes at Comme des Garcons to more cheerful offerings elsewhere. Ungaro pairs bright Fortuny-style pleated knit tube skirts with neatly braided windowpane-plaid jackets for his parallel collection.

Claude Montana likes long as well — with his lean or flared trousers, his coats and long jackets cut with rapier precision.

For those who cannot pay the $1,500 or so for a Montana jacket, he's started a less expensive line called State of Montana, about a third or half the price of the top line. The new group features much red and black, leather and wool and generous dashes of Montana's slim-lined pizazz.

Jackets for the fall suits are varied all over, from long to short, but they're usually shapely, have all kinds of collars from wide and notched to small and shirt-style or raised.

PANTS ARE the safe solution this fall: Slim or straight and tailored are most popular, though remnants of the tight stirrup-pant and even shiny stretch pants linger on.

The clue is they're more feminine trouser outfits, with perfectly fitted jackets, whether short and perky or long as redingotes.

Jean-Louis Scherrer offers pants both navy-dress-style with a sharp jacket piped in gold arabesques, or wide culottes for late day — a striking combination in tweed topped by a black blazer.

Saint Laurent's pants sometimes sport a fringe, marking his fashionable foray to the OK corral with bright fringed plaid skirts or trousers. Gold brocade or lame pants or "jeans" for evening appear for several houses, including Saint Laurent and Laroche.

If long skirts and pants are the newest choices for the '90s, many designers still firmly believe in showing the legs — with hem lengths zooming up or down at Saint Laurent, Givenchy, Lacroix, Scherrer, and Oscar de la Renta. Peppy and flared or pleated, new short skirts are now easier to walk and sit in.

Valentino, for instance, still likes short and perky suits and dresses, but also adds plenty of trousers for good measure.

Though ostentation is muted in these hard times, Paris still offers some party fare in silky brocade fitted suits, combinations of velvet and taffeta, and a few extravagant flared-skirt tulle styles harking back to the flirtatious '80s.

Little black dresses are making their perennial "comeback" with sexy allure, sparkly or lace trim or cut-out backs featuring intriguing strap patterns.

THE NEW coats recall the good old trench a la Greta Garbo, in shades like camel, gray or navy. Sleek versions of the princess coat occasionally showed up — a good one at Saint Laurent.

Capes, ponchos, long or short real or fake furs are the softer cover-ups. But there are plenty of bright down jackets — at Dior they're dressy enough in iridescent taffeta to swoop down off the ski slopes and out on the town.

Colors and patterns to watch:

■ Black, white and poppy reds are showing up alone or in strong teamwork. Charcoal is popular, especially in bankers' pinstripes.

■ The neutrals are very much with us, in all the creamy beiges, grays, sometimes with touches of heather or soft greens.

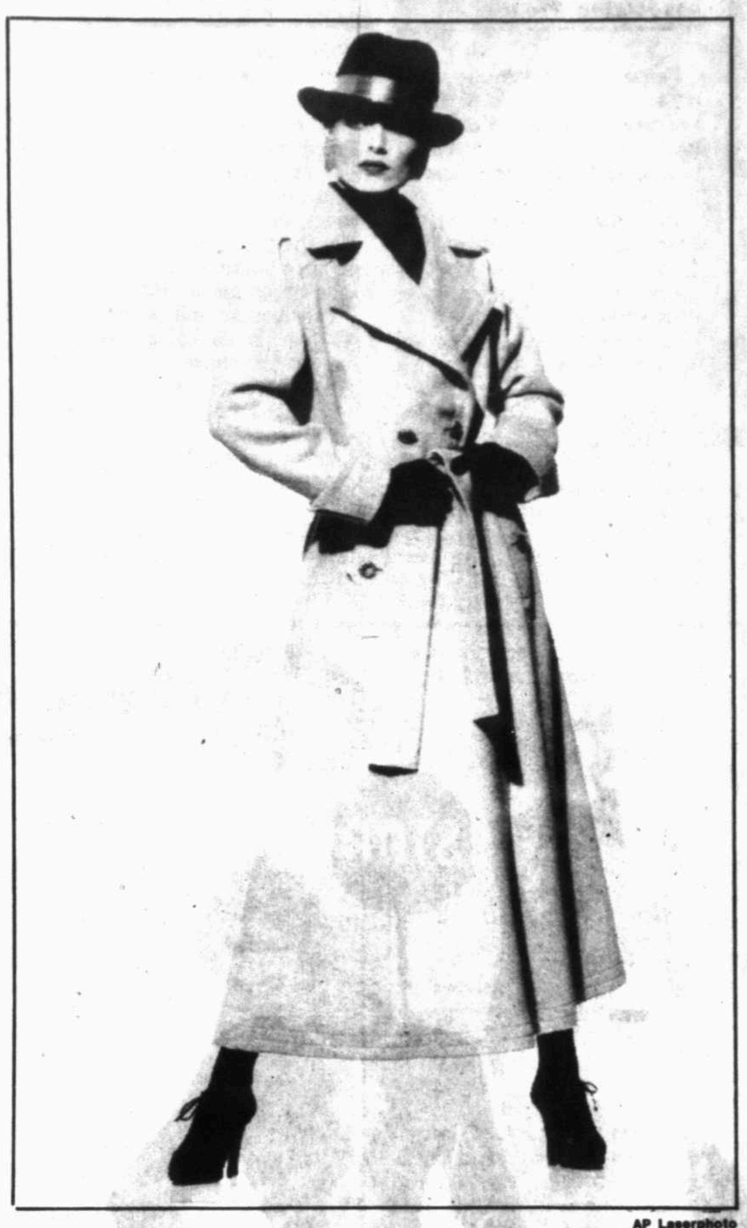

■ Plaids are more luminous than ever, based on royal blues, indigo, emerald greens, fuchsia, orange, raspberry, flame red.

■ Folkore patterns are looking good at Ungaro and Lacroix, and Jean-Paul Gaultier has gone in for Nordic patterns.

■ Glowing patchwork silks are a big item all over, and Valentino is holding out for wild cat prints, looking handsome — though they've been around for a long time.

■ Shiny and soft leather is a hot (if not necessarily warm) item for winter, outstanding at Chanel, lovely and more feminine at Dior.

■ Caviar or salt-and-pepper tweeds are very tempting for fall, as are rustic weaves, smooth jerseys, and light broadcloth.

Southwest look, rich colors featured in new fall fashions

By Linda Anderson
Staff writer

Jewel-tone colors, the Southwest look and big, bold jewelry — these are some of the fashion trends to look for during the fall/winter season.

"Plaids are big — plaid skirts, plaid shorts, plaid blazers," said Della Neal, owner of The Gazebo in Midland.

Another popular look, she said, is "Southwest with Guademalan bright skirts. We sell a lot of sarong (skirts) in Guademalan prints. You put them with denim shirts."

Colors this season are navy, teal, a rusty brown, and the Guademalan shades of jade green, navy, orange and yellow, she said.

Accessories with a Southwest look are big, Ms. Neal said, such as leather belts with conchos or silver buckles on them. "Silver is big in jewelry because of the Southwest look."

Lou Peters, owner of Lou's Fashions, agreed that the Southwest look is hot this season. "The Southwest look in denim is coming back strong again," she said. "Denim never went out, but it's going to be strong again."

Red and black will still be strong colors, she said, as will tiger and leopard prints.

A hot new look in jewelry seems to be big and bright, "a lot of colorful bracelets and earrings," Ms. Peters said. These accessories are "multicolored, big, gaudy and beautiful."

The traditional fashion question of what are lengths skirts are going to be, will have a more liberal answer this season. "Dress lengths vary," Ms. Peters said. Some are short, some mid-length and some long. "They are showing a whole bunch you can almost trip on," she added.

Andrew Swartz of Swartz agreed that skirts lengths will vary. "There has been a resurgence in skirts of various lengths," he said. Longer skirts are "not prairie skirts, ... they are long, slender skirts with a slit that allows some movement.

"With more diversity in skirt length, women have more options to wear whatever length they think appropriate."

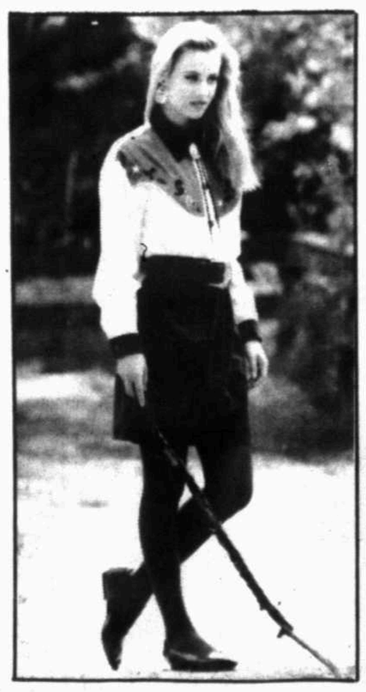

This season "there is a continuing trend toward more interest in accessories," he said, including multiple chains worn as necklaces or belts, and scarves. "We're seeing a lot of chains with fall stones — sort of a Chanel look. You can wear them with sportswear as well as daywear."

Accessories are the key to individuality of expression in fashion, Swartz said. Accessories are versatile and "allow women to individualize their outfits.

"People don't want to be limited to a 'uniform' sort of look. Accessories give them the chance to express their individuality without a lot of expense."

Plaid will be hot this season, as fashions such as this plaid suit from Basler, worn with a bold red sweater adorned with brilliant diamond forms in dark green and yellow, take center stage.

A novelty western shirt and sarong skirt from You Babes, and available at most JCPenney department stores, offer ranch dressing with style.

COLORS FALL FASHIONS

Colors shift into neutral; Red brings welcome fireworks

AP Laserphoto

This sandy-colored jacket was designed by Gianfranco Ferre for Dior's 1992 Fall/Winter Haute Couture collection.

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Fall fashion's color story should be called tales from the dark side.

Menswear looks are flooding the racks, painting a palette of haberdashery neutrals rivaling the main floor of Brooks Brothers. Designers are investing in banker's gray, brown, black and camel.

On the bright side, red heats up entrance-making ensembles, head-to-toe or as an accent.

"The best-selling color for us this year is no color," says Ron Leal, a Vancouver, Canada, designer for Jax. "We did a black and camel group that's been reordering for three weeks across North America like crazy. Anything that is neutral is the first to go. We've been overkilled with color. Last fall we ran 18 colors in one group — now we're running two to four."

At Calvin Klein, "The news is gray, for everything from day to evening," the designer said in an earlier interview. Klein rounds out the picture with signature hues of olive, bronze and brown. Donna Karan, too, proclaimed gray the staple of her collection, along with black and navy.

Bloomingdale's New York fall campaign to promote menswear looks, launched Aug. 9, is called "Gray Expectations." The accessories launch is "Going with Gray."

Black ruled runways around the world. In Paris, Rei Kawakubo set the tone with an almost all-black collection of semi-destroyed clothes for Comme des Garcons. Black leather made a strong showing — in vests at Donna Karan, evening gowns at Versace, biker jackets at Valentino and bombers at Dior.

About half of New York designer Karen Kane's fall collection is solid black.

"I see black as a seasonless foundation, a color that I do 12 months a year," Kane says. "It looks great on everyone's coloring, and there's a reason everyone calls it a basic."

Brown is making a bid as a rich alternative to black. It's a popular hue for leather coats, at Yves Saint Laurent, Donna Karan, Genny, Claude Montana, Gianfranco Ferre and Isaac Mizrahi.

"Brown is the new color," says Norma Kamali. "We noticed it last fall in France, and it works well with both menswear and animal prints. It's comfortable and has a classic quality. That's why there's so much of it this season."

With all the subdued tones, red brings some welcome fireworks. It blazed through Karl Lagerfeld's fall Chanel show in Paris in a monochromatic fiery finale. On the other side of the Atlantic, Louis dell'Olio did the same for Anne Klein.

Red made sparks in every shade and on everything from python jeans at Perry Ellis to the lining of black jackets at Isaac Mizrahi. Designer Rei Kawakubo went all out with frizzy red hairpieces for Comme des Garcons.

"Once you have a neutral base, throw on a red beret," Donna Karan said after her show. It's a formula for easy dressing.

"We're offering colors that provide opportunity for long-term wearability," says Kamali. "Color is probably the first thing that changes from season to season, so it's one of the main things that dates a purchase.

"It's very important to select clothing that doesn't scream out what season you bought it. For a jacket or suit you really want longevity, and that's where this season's colors come in."
