Hurricane Erin

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Seeking sanctuary from Hurricane Erin, Jack Khorram and his family fled their beach home for a friend's house about eight miles inland. It was almost a fatal move. A giant oak crushed the driver's side of the Khorram family's van, just minutes after Khorram had heeded his wife's warning to stay inside and leave the van in the driveway. The storm blasted through the Panhandle and southern Alabama on Thursday, its second swipe at the state, before losing strength as it moved inland and dissipating into rain. When it hit the Pensacola area, it had 94 mph winds and gusts up to 103 mph. Story page 9A

Closer look

WASHINGTON — The Whitewater real estate venture once paid off a $5,000 personal loan for President Clinton, who was recently pressed for an explanation by investigators, according to documents released Friday that give a more extensive look at the Clintons' Arkansas business dealings. The president responded in writing to investigating attorneys that he had no memory of how the 1979 loan had been used. The documents shed new light on Mrs. Clinton's legal representation for the failed Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan owned by James McDougal, the Clinton's Whitewater investment partner. Mrs. Clinton has described her work for Madison as minimal, but a billing document from her firm suggested that 40 percent of the Madison billing had been ascribed to her. Story page 7A

Many express disappointment with Edmondson's sentence

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING —With the three-and-a-half-week jury selection and trial process concluded, many West Texas residents are unsatisfied with the life sentence for convicted state trooper-killer Levy Lee Edmondson.

A Big Spring jury failed by one vote to reach a consensus Wednesday in the punishment phase of Edmondson's capital murder trial.

The family of slain Texas Department of Public Safety Trooper Troy Hogue expressed rage at the loss of their loved one and disappointment over the jury's inability to reach a unanimous decision that would have given Edmondson the death penalty.

'A lot of us are ashamed of the fact that we could not reach a verdict.'

"Most folks were a little disappointed," said Capt. Gene Powell of the Midland Texas Rangers station. Rangers with the Midland office conducted the investigation of Hogue's murder.

But most law-enforcement officers understand that the final word in the Texas legal system belongs to the jury — and are content that Edmondson was given a severe sentence for his crime, Powell said.

Edmondson's capital murder conviction means that he must amass 40 years in prison before he can be considered for parole, Powell said. "That's a long time to be in prison," he said.

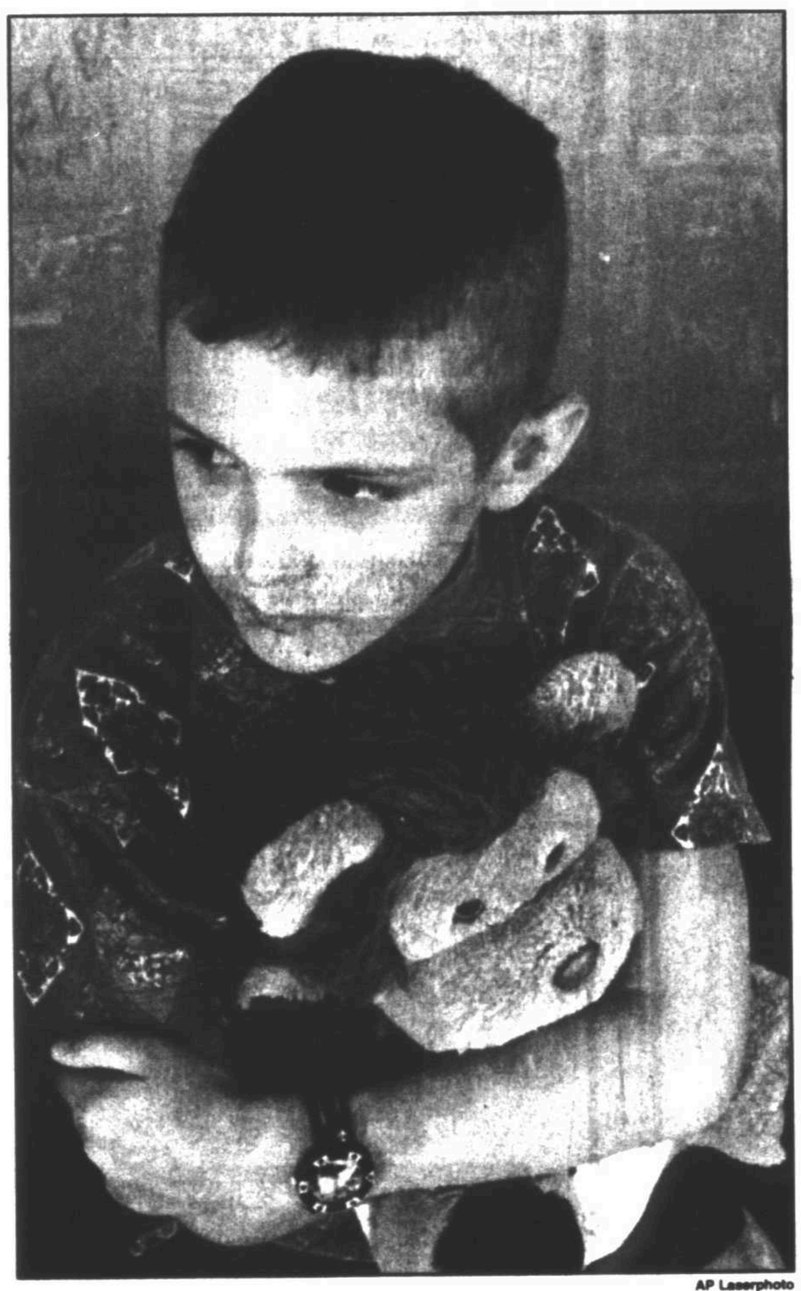

Most of the 12 jurors believed Edmondson should have been executed for his crime, voting 11 to one in favor of sentencing the 17-year-old murderer to death.

One female juror expressed frustration because of the fruitless end to 21 hours of deliberation in the punishment phase.

"A lot of us are ashamed of the fact that we could not reach a verdict," she said.

"I am really heartsick over it," said another juror who

Croatia rolls into Serb-held territories

KNIN, Croatia (AP) — Ignoring pleas to avoid all-out war, Croatia launched a massive attack Friday on breakaway Serbs, bombarding rebel towns and shelling U.N. peacekeepers who refused to get out of the way.

The thrust to retake Serb-held land — after nearly four years of a shaky truce — threatened to touch off the worst fighting in the Balkans since World War II.

Croatian troops claimed advances on front lines across Serb-held territory, but the Serbs resisted a massive government bombardment of Knin, their self-proclaimed capital.

NATO warned that attacks on U.N. peacekeepers would be met with airstrikes. But there was no immediate NATO response when one Danish peacekeeper was killed and two Poles were wounded in attacks on U.N. posts.

NATO warplanes did fire two missiles at a Serb radar site after the planes were threatened by surface-to-air missiles, said Capt. Jim Mitchell, an alliance spokesman. There was no

State puts local schools on 'low performing' list

■ High dropout rate hurts standing of Lee High, Midland High, Odessa High and Permian High schools.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Students dropping out of school before graduation put four area high schools — Midland, Lee, Odessa and Permian — on the list of the state's "low performing" campuses. While student failure rates on the math portion of the TAAS (Texas Assessment of Academic Skills) test accounted for half of the 265 campuses in the state receiving low rankings, such was not the case for Midland and Odessa high schools.

The local schools were placed in the low-performing category based solely on dropout rates, according to information from the Texas Education Agency.

Percentage of High School Dropouts for the 1991-92 and 1992-93 school years

	LEE HIGH SCHOOL '91-92	'92-93
All Students:	4.3	3.9
African American:	5.3	5.8
Hispanic:	9.2	6.2
White:	2.2	2.9
Econ. Disadv.	7.4	7.4

	MIDLAND HIGH SCHOOL '91-92	1992-93
All Students:	6.7	8.5
African American:	8.7	6.3
Hispanic:	10.2	16.7
White:	4.2	3.5
Econ. Disadv.	9.6	16.3

Under Texas Education mandates, schools are cited as low performing if the dropout rate is more than 6 percent for the student body as a whole, or for any ethnic subgroup. The rankings were done based on the 1992-93 school year.

"That is because students are not counted as dropouts until they fail to appear at school in the beginning of the next year," said Joe Cummins, executive director of administrative services, evaluation and planning for Midland Independent School District.

The 1992-93 dropout rate for area schools is 7.6 percent for OHS, 6.6 percent for PHS, 6.7 percent for MHS and 4.3 percent for LHS, according to Texas Education Agency reports.

If judged by the entire student body, Lee High School would have more than met the state standard with a low overall dropout rate of 4.3 percent. However, specific populations had higher dropout rates, such as Hispanics at 9.2 percent and economically disadvantaged (those who qualify for free and reduced lunch) students at 7.4 percent. The African American dropout rate at LHS decreased (slightly from the previous 1992-93 year) from 5.8 to 5.3 percent.

Midland High School's overall dropout rate for 1993-94 was 6.7 percent. "And the good news is that it decreased from 8.5 percent from the year before," Cummins said. The better news is that the MHS Hispanic and economically disadvantaged student dropout rates decreased from 16.7 to 10.2 percent, and from 16.3 to 9.6 percent, respectively.

Cummins said MISD has been trying to keep students in school through dropout prevention programs at Coleman High School. The high school offers flexible hours for students who work, and on-site daycare for young parents.

House approves historic legislation to revise telecommunications laws

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wrapping up a month of furious action, the House approved legislation Friday that would revise telecommunications policy for the 21st century, changing the way telephone and TV services are provided and what Americans pay for them.

The chamber voted 305-117 to rewrite the nation's telecommunications laws — the most dramatic change in policy in 61 years. The passage came shortly after the House, in a stunning defeat for the TV networks, approved an amendment requiring TV set makers to install a device, called a V-chip, that will let parents block violent and sexy shows on television.

Asked who big winners and losers are under the bill he largely wrote, Commerce Committee Chairman Thomas Bliley, R-Va., said in an interview, "Consumers win overwhelmingly. I don't know that there are any losers in our legislation." He predicted that customers' cable and telephone rates will decrease.

But Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., who led an effort to put more teeth in the bill, disagreed. "This is a bad bill," Markey said in an interview. "Cable consumers have no protection from rate gouging. There are still many media concentration issues that have yet to be

Thousands of anarchist punks gather in Germany for 'Chaos Days '95'

AP Laserphoto

Riot police chase punks in Hanover, Germany Friday, where thousands of youth and police clashed during the annual three-day gathering of those who raise havoc in the city by engaging in street fights, lighting buildings on fire and breaking glass windows.

By Arthur Allen
Associated Press

BONN, Germany — No one is an "organizer" of the ritualized disorder. But a program prepared for "Chaos Days '95" reads as follows:

Friday, 3 p.m.: Street fights.
Saturday, 11 a.m.: Games with fire.
Sunday: Glass-breaking demonstration.

It wasn't clear if the schedule, faxed to some reporters, would be followed. But then, rules were meant to be broken.

While most Germans head to the beach or mountains, thousands of anarchist punks have converged on the northern city of Hanover to spend a weekend drinking and trashing the city.

Last year's goal, according to leaflets distributed then, was to "reduce Hanover to rubble." The punks succeeded in racking up $42,000 worth of broken windows and burned cars. More than 1,000 were arrested.

This year's goal is 10,000 arrests, a leaflet circulated last month said.

They were off to a slow start. Police said only about 180 arrests had been recorded by Friday afternoon, not counting 421 people booked and released on condition they leave town — a warning most ignored.

The chaos actually began Thursday night, when punks torched a pile of wooden pallets and hurled rocks and bottles at police and firemen who came to put the fire out. Fourteen police and an unknown number of punks were injured.

Last year's goal, according the leaflets distributed then, was to "reduce Hanover to rubble." The punks succeeded in racking up $42,000 worth of broken windows and burned cars.

On Friday, police dismantling a second barricade came under another hail of projectiles, including Molotov cocktails.

Not all the punks joined the fray. Some were sleeping off the beer on the roofs of nearby buildings, according to television crews at the northern part of town where the punks converge to drink and hear bands play in vacant lots.

"I just came for the music," said a Leipzig lad dressed in grey camouflage and Doc Martens, his Mohawk hairdo tinted in Carmen Miranda-inspired shades of green, yellow and red.

After last year's "Chaos Days," Chancellor Helmut Kohl and others expressed amazement that city officials had permitted the punks to rage through the northern German city of 500,000 for three days.

"I don't think local people can understand this," said Hanna Geiger, a reporter at the Hannoversche Allgemeine Zeitung. She said shopkeepers have boarded up their stores and car-owners have parked their cars outside town.

The punks even let police know they would be back exactly one year later. They expect 5,000 to show up, though police estimate only about 2,500 have arrived. Still, 1,000 police have been assigned to rein them in.

Police spokeswoman Annette Bennefeld agreed it was strange but said police could only make preventive arrests when they had good grounds to suspect someone of violence. And they can usually hold suspects only for a few hours.

"There's going to be criticism, but we're following the law," said Ms. Bennefeld. "Not everyone who looks like a punk is a punk, and not everyone who is a punk is violent."

The punks are careful to distinguish themselves from Autonomen, another group of mainly young lower middle-class German youth who clash with police. Unlike the left-wing Autonomen, the punks aren't into politics.

"They just like to have fun," said Ms. Bennefeld. "Fun as they define it means beating people up, smashing windows, drinking a lot of alcohol."

Police clash with Panamanian demonstrators

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Police fired tear gas grenades at rock-throwing demonstrators Friday, the first day of a general strike by workers angered by legislative proposals to curb Panama's powerful unions.

Workers barricaded major streets through this seaside capital, blocking traffic. The violence began when police tried to remove the barricades. Police also fired weapons in the air in an attempt to open the thoroughfares.

Demonstrators smashed car windows, but there were no reports of injuries. Workers picked up some of the gas grenades and hurled them back at police.

Thursday night, riot police used tear gas against demonstrators trying to force their way into the Legislative Assembly, where the changes in the labor law were being debated. There was no indication of when a vote would be called.

The changes are a part of a larger economic reform package put in motion by the government to attract foreign investment and to make Panama more competitive internationally.

The current labor code, dating from 1972, gives sweeping powers to unions and often is cited as a reason many foreign companies are reluctant to locate in Panama.

The government maintains changing the laws would help lower Panama's 13 percent unemployment rate.

President Ernesto Balladares, a wealthy businessman who took office last Sept. 1, called the changes necessary for Panama's future peace and prosperity.

"I am not in favor of putting off difficult decisions forever and I am convinced that with the unpleasantness today we are saving the country social explosions beyond our expectations," said he said.

Suspension of Russian foreign adoption law leaves children in limbo

By Angela Charlton
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Stranded in a Moscow orphanage, 5-year-old Yulia Mazurkevich proudly held up photos of her would-be bedroom, a spacious toy-filled haven in a New York home.

"I want to go to Mama and Papa," said the mentally retarded girl, pointing to a picture of the American couple who have — almost — adopted her. She spoke to Associated Press Television.

Bureaucratic infighting has brought international adoptions in Russia to a standstill, leaving Yulia stuck in Children's Home No. 1.

Hundreds of children are floating in legislative limbo nearly five months after President Boris Yeltsin signed a long-debated foreign adoption law. The government has not yet established rules for implementing it, and adoptions by foreigners have been suspended until they are.

"I don't want to scare potential parents," said Alexander Melnikov, of the Washington, D.C.-based Cradle of Hope adoption agency. "But I'm afraid it will be a long time before this is straightened out."

Like hundreds of other foreign couples, Yulia's prospective parents began the adoption procedures before the new law was signed, but didn't get final approval in time.

'We're especially worried about children whose health problems will be exacerbated by staying in the orphanages.'

— Linda Perilstein, executive director of Cradle of Hope

Now they must wait until a slew of ministries, committees and commissions decide who will be authorized to give that approval.

"We're especially worried about children whose health problems will be exacerbated by staying in the orphanages," Linda Perilstein, executive director of Cradle of Hope, said in a telephone interview from Washington.

This applies to most of her cases, because under the old law foreign parents were only allowed to adopt sick Russian children. The moratorium, though temporary, could have drastic consequences for many of them.

The new law has been hailed by both Russian and foreign adoption officials because it will allow foreigners to adopt healthy children who are not wanted by Russian couples.

Dozens of foreigners with almost-adopted children waiting in orphanages have appealed to the international affairs committee of the State Duma, the lower house of Russia's parliament, to speed up the legal process.

This week, the influential committee responded by sending a letter to Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin urging immediate attention to the issue.

"This situation is restricting the rights of the most defenseless segment of the population — orphans -- and diminishing Russia's international prestige," the statement said.

In all, about 101,000 children in Russia are eligible for adoption, according to Viktor Parshutkin of the international affairs committee. Last year 34,000 kids were adopted, including 2,400 by foreigners. Americans adopted 1,700 — more than two-thirds of the foreign adoptions.

International adoptions have become a touchy issue in Russia since it first relaxed its adoption regulations in October 1991, shortly before the collapse of the Soviet Union.

The ensuing increase in foreign adoptions prompted nationalist fears of baby traders selling Russia's future generations to foreign parents. In December, Yeltsin vetoed a law that would have effectively halted foreign adoptions by banning intermediary adoption agencies.

Despite the slowdown, the U.S. Embassy in Moscow has processed nearly 650 adoptions since the new law was passed in March. However, it was not clear if the Russians had also done their part to complete those cases.

Meanwhile, as officials debate legislative details, Yulia sits playing with a doll sent by her possible parents in Rye, N.Y., surrounded by scores of other retarded and deformed orphans.

"She's such a sweet girl," said Raisa Degtyareva, director of Children's Home No. 1. "We are hoping for the best for her, and all our babies."

WEATHER WATCH

Today chance of rain, near 90

Staff Report

Rain or shine, today's weather promises to be mild.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport is suggesting a 30 percent chance of showers or thunderstorms today. And the temperature, under mostly cloudy skies, is to be near 90.

Winds are to be southeasterly at 5 to 10 mph.

For tonight, the weatherman is calling for a 20 percent chance of showers or thunderstorms under mostly cloudy skies. The low temperature is to be near 70 degrees.

Sunday's high temperature, under partly cloudy skies, is to be between 90 and 95 degrees.

Friday's peak temperature was 90 degrees, and the overnight low temperature was 71 degrees.

The record high temperature for Aug. 4 is 104 degrees set in 1944. The record low temperature is 61 degrees set in 1973.

STATE

Heavy rains and severe weather resulting from the remnants of Tropical Storm Dean continued to plague Texans on Friday.

Clouds and rain from the low pressure system that continues to swirl in the region kept cloud cover high and temperatures down. Mid-afternoon temperatures in north Texas ranged from the low 80s to the low 90s. Winds were light and variable in areas that didn't receive thunderstorms.

The western portion of North Texas received spots of locally heavily rain. The National Weather Service had the area under a flash flood watch in the evening.

A high pressure cell over South Texas resulted in mostly dry and sunny conditions throughout the region. Temperatures climbed into the upper 90s, and thermometers in the deep south once again broke into triple digits.

A few showers in Val Verde and Edwards counties were the only hints of precipitation in the region.

NATION

Tropical Depression Erin wound down Friday by pouring heavy rain on Alabama and Mississippi, while showers from a dying tropical storm soaked parts of the Midwest.

Erin's northwestern drift brought 2-3 inches of rain to southwestern Alabama in just about seven hours, while central Mississippi got 1-2 inches.

As Erin headed up the Mississippi Valley toward the Ohio Valley, up to 8 inches of rain was possible in spots.

At least 4 inches of rain fell at Cole Camp, in central Missouri. Heavy rain caused some flooding in the St. Louis area and Springfield, Ill.

While rain drenched much of the country's midsection, heat hung on elsewhere. Richmond, Va., set a record for 25 consecutive 90-degree days.

High pressure dominated most of the West, although scattered thunderstorms hit Idaho and other sections of the Intermountain region. The Southwest had temperatures mostly above 115 through the lower deserts.

APPROVE: House OKs telecommunications revision

addressed."

President Clinton has threatened to veto the bill unless major changes are made. Greg Simon, domestic policy advisor to Vice President Al Gore, said after the vote that despite some improvements in the bill — notably a provision to lessen media concentration — the veto threat still stands. He cited problems with the bill's cable, local media and long-distance telephone provisions.

The House, which worked feverishly during the week to complete action on numerous spending bills, was set to recess for the rest of August. The Senate, however, was to remain in town for another week, including a Saturday session, to work on a major welfare bill and other legislation.

The telecommunications bill would allow cable TV and local and long-distance telephone companies to get into each other's businesses, offering Americans greater choice and potentially lower prices. Opponents say the bill would benefit a few big companies and lead to increases in cable and telephone rates.

The Senate passed a similar bill in June. But the House bill goes much further in deregulating cable rates and removing local ownership restrictions on media companies, prompting Clinton's veto threat. To become law, the House and Senate versions would have to be reconciled and passed by both chambers and then signed by Clinton.

In an administration victory, the House, 228-195, adopted an amendment by Markey that would bar any single media company from owning TV stations reaching more than 35 percent of all U.S. viewers, down from 50 percent the bill originally had called for. The provision is now identical to the Senate's.

Markey also authored the V-chip amendment, which passed 224-199. The chip, which would be installed in new sets, recognizes programs that are electronically rated for violence, sex or other objectionable content. It is identical to the Senate version. The House bill also contains a measure urging the TV industry to help fund and promote blocking technologies.

The TV networks say the V-chip would cut into their audience — and thus advertising revenues. They had sought to avoid the issue by having the House vote instead for a study of the industry's response to objectionable programming. Instead, through a surprise procedural move by Markey, the House passed both amendments.

In an action to protect children from computer-supplied indecent, obscene and other offensive communications, the House voted 420-4 for an amendment urging the computer industry to promote blocking and filtering technologies. It is much less restrictive than the Senate's version.

Earlier in the day, the House approved, 256-149, a package of amendments that included provisions that would make it easier for the regional Bell companies to get into the $68 billion-a-year long-distance business.

The amendments, offered by Bliley, change considerably the version passed 38-5 by the Commerce Committee in May and came at the urging of House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga.

"The fact of the matter is it was written in the darkness," complained Rep. John Bryant, D-Texas.

The bill's supporters — including the Bell companies and cable companies — say it would benefit consumers and U.S. business. They say it would boost investment in the $700 billion American telecommunications industry, create hundreds of thousands of jobs, spur innovative systems and eventually lower rates for cable, telephone and other services. The TV networks had supported the bill initially, but it was unclear whether they continued to support it given the changes made Friday.

Opponents — including consumer groups and long-distance companies such as AT&T, MCI and Sprint — say the bill will help business at the expense of consumers because true competition will take years to evolve, if it ever does. In addition, they assert that insufficient safeguards will let cable and telephone rates increase, allow Bell companies to use their local phone monopolies to block competitors and allow a few big companies to dominate news, entertainment and communications.

As for cable, the bill would deregulate most rates for small cable systems upon enactment, then lift price rules for all other systems within 15 months. The House voted 275-148 to kill a Markey plan to remove price constraints only on cable companies whose rate increases remain lower than rises in the consumer price index.

The Big Three networks and Fox had opposed Markey's successful move to bar any media company from owning TV stations reaching more than 35 percent of American viewers. However, it was welcomed by network affiliates and independent stations.

The bill, as revised by that amendment, also would retain a federal restriction barring a company from owning both a TV station and cable system in the same market.

However, the bill would eliminate other restrictions on local media cross-ownership, scrapping provisions barring a company from owning the local newspaper and TV station, a newspaper and radio station, or a newspaper and cable system. The bill also would erase provisions barring a company from owning more than one TV station locally, a TV and radio station, and multiple radio stations.

The bill is HR1555.

ROLLS: Croatian offensive targets peacekeepers damage estimate from the NATO attack, and missiles were never fired at the planes.

(From 1A)

In the evening, the Croatian defense ministry said the Serbs launched at least one rocket into Zagreb, the Croatian capital. Air raid sirens wailed through the city, but U.N. officials could not confirm the attack.

Knin shook under an artillery barrage that began at dawn and continued all day. Flames licked through buildings and streets were deserted except for the occasional car loaded with civilians fleeing in panic.

More than 1,500 shells fell on Knin, said Col. Andrew Leslie, commander of the U.N. peacekeepers in the rebel stronghold. He spoke of "serious loss of civilian life" in the town, 120 miles south of Zagreb. Doctors treated the wounded in the hospital basement.

By evening, U.N. officials reported Croatian troops were breaching defense lines, but there were no reports that the Croats had entered the town itself. The Serbs claimed their lines around Knin and elsewhere generally held.

Mitchell, the NATO spokesman, said two EA-6B electronic warfare aircraft, flying from the aircraft carrier USS Theodore Roosevelt in the Adriatic, fired two missiles at a Croatian Serb radar site near Knin.

The 6:55 p.m. attack came after the radar site "illuminated" the aircraft, flying overhead to provide support to U.N. peacekeepers if needed, Mitchell said. The NATO planes identified the threat to be from SA-6 surface-to-air missiles.

At the White House, President Clinton expressed concern that the conflict would spread but stopped short of condemning the Croat offensive. A full-scale war in Croatia could merge with the fighting in neighboring Bosnia and draw in Serb-led Yugoslavia.

The Muslim-led Bosnian army last month began coordinating its fight against rebel Serbs in northwestern Bosnia with the Croatian military. Bosnian soldiers were advancing Friday toward Croatia to aid in the fight against their common foe, Bosnian army sources told The Associated Press. U.N. officials would not confirm the reports.

Bosnian Serbs, meanwhile, lobbed shells across the border into the Croatian coastal town of Dubrovnik, the Bosnian Serb news agency SRNA reported.

In Croatia, the United Nations said government forces advanced along the 725-mile front line defining the Krajina, a crescent-shaped area around the northern Bosnian border that was captured by the Serbs in 1991.

Maj. Rita LePage, a U.N. spokeswoman, said Croatia appeared to have retaken at least two towns from the rebels, but U.N. officials had difficulty confirming conflicting claims as Croatian troops blasted peacekeepers with artillery and warplanes. The Croats detained about 90 peacekeepers.

U.N. officials said Croatian jets attacked a U.N. observation post near Gospic, in central Croatia.

"Soon after, Croats issued an ultimatum to the peacekeepers to abandon the position or face more of the same," said U.N. spokesman Chris Gunness in Zagreb.

Deputy Foreign Minister Ivan Simonovic said Croatia "sincerely regrets all (U.N.) casualties." But he said Croatia had warned peacekeepers where and when the attacks would come.

Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic condemned the attack and said Croatia was a threat to peace. He indicated, however, that he would not intervene militarily to help the rebel Serbs there, insisting that the crisis could be solved "only by political means."

Milosevic, widely viewed as chief instigator of the wars in Bosnia and Croatia, recently has publicly urged peace in the hopes of ending U.N. sanctions on Yugoslavia.

Friday's attack increased speculation that Milosevic and Croatian President Franjo Tudjman had made a deal in which Serbia would not intervene as long as the Croats do not attack rebel-held land in eastern Croatia, near the Serbian border.

Bearing out that theory, Croatian Foreign Minister Mate Granic told Hungarian officials that Croatian troops would not fight in those eastern regions.

Croatia had massed troops for days around Knin, threatening to retake it unless the Serbs agreed to give up their rebellion and rejoin Croatia. Yet on Thursday, the government dismissed the first Serb offer to discuss a peaceful reintegration of their territory.

Hours later, the Croats launched their attack on Knin. Serbs immediately responded with artillery fire, and the hills around town, where forests burned, resounded with the thud of shells.

Buildings throughout the town were on fire, said Ernst Rune Egelid, a captain with the Norwegian navy who was stationed in Knin.

"Many of (the houses) had holes in their walls from direct hits. Windows were broken all over the place, and several of the closest houses were on fire, but they had not collapsed," Egelid told The Associated Press by telephone. "There was no panic. Rather, people seemed somewhat resigned."

About 50 miles northwest of Knin, the Croats launched a large-scale tank attack near the town of Gospic, U.N. officials said. Associated Press Television reported 14 Croatians dead and 16 wounded in the fighting.

Croats also shelled Serb positions at Petrinja, southeast of Zagreb, where the Serbs reported one civilian killed and two wounded. The rebels claimed they destroyed three Croat tanks.

The Serbs shelled areas around Sisak and Karlovac, south of Zagreb. Two shells reportedly also landed near Sibenik on the southern coast.

Tensions have mounted steadily in Croatia since it agreed July 22 to bolster military cooperation with Bosnia. Croatia sent thousands of soldiers across the border to help Bosnia defend its northwestern enclave of Bihac. The troops made stunning gains against rebel Serbs and got within shelling range of Knin from the Bosnian side of the border.

Croatia then deployed tens of thousands of troops south of Zagreb, on the northern tips of Serb-held territory. Croatia has about 100,000 men — the full battle strength of its army — massed against about 50,000 well-armed Serbs.

Tudjman has sought to recapture the rebels' territory since the six-month war in 1991, which killed an estimated 10,000 people, displaced hundreds of thousands of people and left a third of Croatia in rebel hands.

LIST: Dropout rate hurts area schools

(From 1A)

"Our at-risk deans have also made an extensive effort to increase one-on-one counseling with students who show tendencies of leaving school," Cummins said. The deans begin working with a freshman class, then the deans move with that group of students each year through their junior year.

The school administrator noted that the African American dropout rate at MHS increased from 6.3 to 8.7 percent. "Since those students did not respond to our intervention efforts, we will need to beef up efforts," Cummins said.

Meeting the state standard of no less than 6 percent dropout rates is a struggle for many high schools across the state. Of the 265 low-ranked campuses in Texas, 148 were high schools, according to Joey Lozano, Texas Education Agency spokesman. He said there are 1,191 high schools statewide.

UPSET: Life sentence disappoints family, some jurors believed Edmondson should have been given the death penalty. "It was a bad situation," he said.

The jury deliberated three hours before finding Edmondson guilty of the crime. One week later, the jury asked to be released as they were hopelessly deadlocked on the punishment decision — leaving life imprisonment as the only legal possibility for Edmondson's sentence.

Jury foreman Tommy Duncan reportedly was the only hold out on the death penalty, and a week earlier had briefly been the only juror to vote for innocence on behalf of Edmondson.

Duncan, however, declined to comment on the deliberations, saying only: "I believe that each of the jurors voted their own conscience."

In the first vote of the punishment phase, there were three jurors who originally believed the details of the case suggested that there were mitigating circumstances that should save Edmondson from the executioner's needle.

After some discussion, however, two of those changed their minds, making the vote 11 to one.

"The mitigating circumstances (of the crime) countered all of the mitigating circumstances," one juror said.

During the grueling 21 hours of deliberation, tempers flared in frustration. There were pantomime reenactments of the murder scene by some jurors hoping to clarify facts for others, jurors said.

In the end, however, it became apparent that further arguments and examination of the evidence would not change the vote.

Mitigating circumstances stated in the deliberations reportedly had to do with Edmondson being "alcohol impaired" at the time of the murder — and a belief that the 17-year-old could one day be rehabilitated.

"None of us, except him, believed their was any chance of (Edmondson) being rehabilitated. That was the most ludicrous thing that was said," one frustrated juror said.

High school honor student pleads guilty to telephone bomb threat

FORT WORTH (AP) — A high school honor student faces up to 10 years in prison and a $500,000 fine for masterminding an elaborate bomb hoax at a school administration building in May.

Paschal High School student Peter Koh, 18, pleaded guilty Friday in federal court to one count of making a telephone bomb threat and one count of possession of a semi-automatic assault rifle, a weapon he had when he was arrested May 27 in Greenville, officials said.

U.S. Attorney Paul E. Coggins said Koh will be sentenced Nov. 3.

"We are pleased that the defendant, recognizing the strength of the evidence against him and the seriousness of his conduct, has chosen to plead guilty rather than force us to take him to trial," Coggins said in a prepared statement.

Tim Evans, one of Koh's lawyers, said he feared that federal sentencing guidelines, which assign points for things such as the seriousness of the crime, might not make probation possible for Koh.

"He's accepted responsibility ... and I just hope there is some way in the federal system that they can structure a sentence that will take advantage of his tremendous potential rather than destroy it," Evans said. "The problem is, unfortunately ... the guidelines can be unyielding."

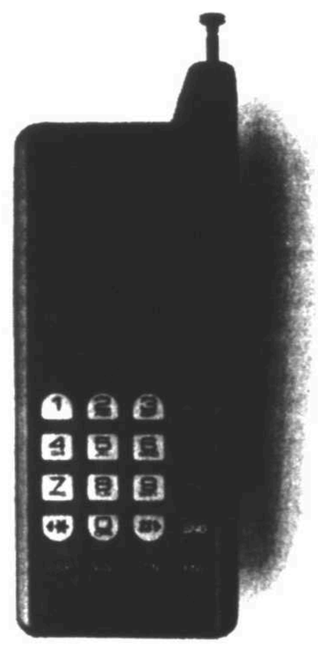

Koh did not graduate from high school, as he had been on track to do at the end of the last school year, Evans said.

He was a fugitive for 11 days before being arrested in connection with the threat that was called in to the Fort Worth Independent School District administration building. An unidentified teen alleged in an affidavit that he and Koh devised the plan to delay a calculus test.

Documents give in-depth view of Clintons' Whitewater dealings

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Whitewater real estate venture once paid off a $5,000 personal loan for President Clinton, who was recently pressed for an explanation by investigators, according to documents released Friday that give a more extensive look at the Clintons' Arkansas business dealings.

The president responded in writing to investigating attorneys that he had no memory of how the 1979 loan had been used.

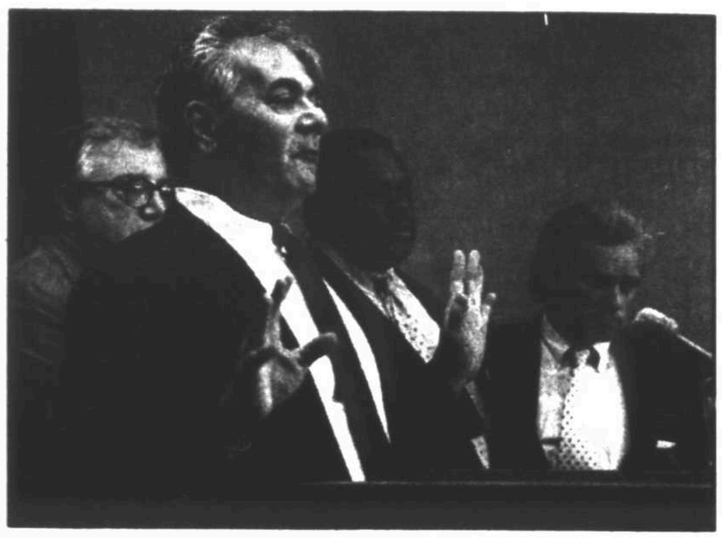

The documents shed new light on Mrs. Clinton's legal representation for the failed Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan owned by James McDougal, the Clinton's Whitewater investment partner. Mrs. Clinton has described her work for Madison as minimal, but a billing document from her firm suggested that 40 percent of the Madison billing had been ascribed to her.

The documents were released Friday by the White House along with formal written statements the Clintons gave this spring to answer questions about their Whitewater investment and their relationships with McDougal.

In the statements, the Clintons broadly denied any wrongdoing, said they were unaware of any wrongdoing by McDougal and asserted again that they were mostly "passive" partners in the real estate venture.

Clinton directly addressed the most serious allegation made against him in the Whitewater affair — that he pressured former Arkansas municipal judge David Hale to make an improper federally backed loan to McDougal's wife. Hale, convicted of defrauding the government, has made the allegation.

"I am certain I never pressured Hale or any company he owned to make any loan," Clinton wrote in his May 24, 1995 response to questions put to him by attorneys hired by the federal S&L cleanup agency to investigate Madison.

The attorneys confronted the Clintons with documents they had turned up in the course of their investigation. The papers shed substantial new light on their Arkansas business affairs — and raised questions among the investigators about some of the Clintons' previous explanations.

For instance, the Clintons have maintained that they invested and lost about $47,000 in Whitewater and never got any profit. They reasserted that claim in their written answers.

"I don't think we 'received back' anything from WDC over the years, in the form any of dividends, profits or earnings," Mrs. Clinton's response said.

But the investigators questioned the president about a $5,000 personal loan in 1979 — which previously has not been disclosed. In 1982, the Whitewater Development company paid off the loan.

The documents show Clinton made at least one payment on that loan out of his own checking account — for $244 in Feb. 17, 1981. On March 1, 1982, McDougal wrote to Clinton, saying their Whitewater company had repaid the debt.

"I have paid from Whitewater Development Corporation the note you owed .... You are correct in your belief that the sum of money borrowed was a part of your investment in Whitewater," McDougal wrote Clinton.

Despite McDougal's assertion, the Clintons' own accountants have never found evidence that Clinton had put the loan proceeds into the Whitewater venture and have never counted it as part of the Clintons' investment. "It's always been a mystery to us," a Clinton confidant confirmed Friday.

When asked about the loan, Clinton wrote in his response: "I do not recall what I did with any loan proceeds I may have received, and I do not recall how the loan was repaid."

The fact that many of the Arkansas events investigators were asking about were a decade or more old showed in Clinton's answers. In his 55-page response, the president said he could not remember or recall things well over three dozen times.

Other documents provide a detailed look at Mrs. Clinton's work as a private lawyer for Madison. The thrift failed in 1989 at a cost to taxpayers of more than $60 million and has been a central focus of the Whitewater affair.

Mrs. Clinton has portrayed her work for Madison as minimal, saying last year that when the Rose Law Firm was placed on retainer by Madison in 1985, she was the "billing attorney" while a young associate "did all the work."

In her written answers, she reasserted, "I was not 'in charge' of the Rose Law Firm's work for Madison Guaranty in 1985-86 ... I was not involved in the day-to-day work on the project." Even so, one billing summary from Rose indicates that 40 percent of all the law firm's fees paid by Madison were assigned to Mrs. Clinton — a total of nearly $7,600 out of $18,177.

When questioned, Mrs. Clinton wrote about the billing document: "I don't know whether it is 'complete or accurate,' since I don't know who drafted it ... what it was based on, or whether it is the final of a document or simply a draft."

Mrs. Clinton said Rose's work was mostly focused on obtaining state approval for a stock plan for Madison. "My name appears only three times in the many documents exchanged by Rose and the state regulators," she wrote.

However, investigators questioned her about numerous other documents in which she appears to be either the author or the recipient in which Rose did work on legal matters. Two examples were a brewery purchase and an Econolodge loan dispute.

When asked about the other work, Mrs. Clinton said she didn't "recall what work, if any, was done by the Rose Law Firm on these matters." However, the Rose billing summary, known as a "recap of fees," showed that fees were attributed to her for these two matters.

When asked Friday at an event whether the first lady has been treated unfairly in the Whitewater affair, the president said: "I think she didn't do anything wrong."

Other documents released Friday show:

—In 1985, then-Arkansas state banking commissioner Marlin Jackson personally attended to extending the payment period for a Whitewater-related loan for Clinton at a bank he owned. Jackson took care of the matter on his official state agency stationary, writing a subordinate at the bank to "please return the appropriate copy to me" of the extension agreement "and I will personally deliver it to Governor Clinton."

—During the 1992 campaign, one of the Clintons' friends and lawyers, Jim Blair, wrote McDougal's lawyer just days after the first newspaper story revealed the Clintons investment in Whitewater. In the letter, Blair wrote that the Clintons will "characterize it as a bad business deal where money was lost." It added: "there is no intent under the current state of developments to try to prosecute, sue or even point a finger" at anyone.

Jobless rate continues to climb

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate crept up to 5.7 percent in July as continued weakness in manufacturing and construction held back the creation of new jobs.

But analysts said the factory sector should strengthen as an earlier inventory buildup is depleted, and there have been signs recently of a rebound in the housing industry.

The Labor Department reported Friday that unemployment in July rose 0.1 percentage point from June's 5.6 percent rate. It was the first advance since the jobless rate climbed to 5.8 percent last April and matched the 5.7 percent rate in May.

At the same time, the department said, nonfarm businesses boosted their payrolls by a smaller-than-expected 55,000 in July after adding 250,000 new jobs a month earlier, even more than the initial estimate of 215,000.

Treasury bond prices ended higher after seesawing earlier in reaction to the report. Stock prices were mixed, with the blue-chip Dow Jones industrial average falling 17.96 to 4,683.46, while broad-market indexes rose.

"The weakness in manufacturing was striking, but it reflects a shakeout of inventories," said economist Stephen S. Roach of Morgan Stanley & Co.

Police charge couple with 4-year-old's murder

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Therressa Jolynn Ritchie and her neighbors spent five days searching for her 4-year-old daughter, Samantha. Police knocked on doors, dogs sniffed through the woods and leaflets were handed out with the girl's picture.

Then Samantha's body was found in a watery pit at an abandoned foundry one block from her house.

After nearly two weeks of investigation, police on Thursday arrested Samantha's own mother and a neighbor on murder charges. Ms. Ritchie, 24, and Ernest Vernell Brooks were scheduled to be arraigned Friday.

"This has been a very painful incident, and I'm sure that we're very saddened by the way this story has unfolded," Police Chief Ronald Lowe said. "But now there's a time for healing."

The arrests shocked this city, whose residents had seen Ms. Ritchie give tearful interviews on television about her daughter's disappearance.

To some, it was a reminder of the Susan Smith case in South Carolina. Ms. Smith had blamed a black carjacker for the disappearance of her young children and pleaded for their return on national television before confessing that she drowned them. Last week, she was sentenced to life in prison.

Ms. Ritchie was divorced in June from Samantha's father, Denton Ritchie, and had three boys, ages 7, 8, and 9, from a previous relationship. The family lived in a rented duplex in a run-down neighborhood on Dayton's north side. Ritchie couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

Authorities said Ms. Ritchie and Brooks confessed to the slayings, but they would not disclose a motive. They also said they recovered a murder weapon but wouldn't say what it was. All Lt. Scott Barker would say is that Samantha died of head injuries.

Ms. Ritchie reported her daughter missing the morning of July 18. She said she had put the girl to bed late the previous night, then had gone to sleep at 2:30 a.m. and believed Samantha was in bed with her. When she awoke at about 10 a.m., the girl was gone, she said.

Neighbors speculated that Samantha crawled out one of the open windows in the apartment, which had no air conditioning. They said it was common for the girl to do so.

Samantha's aunt, Jeanne Kauffman, organized the leaflet distribution, and the search began.

Inland homes offer little safety from Erin's fury

Four deaths were blamed on Erin, and another seven people were reported missing at sea.

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Seeking sanctuary from Hurricane Erin, Jack Khorram and his family fled their beach home for a friend's house about eight miles inland. It was almost a fatal move.

A giant oak crushed the driver's side of the Khorram family's van, just minutes after Khorram had heeded his wife's warning to stay inside and leave the van in the driveway.

"If that tree had fallen that way, it would have killed all of us," Khorram said Friday as he surveyed damage in the upscale neighborhood in northeast Pensacola, overlooking Escambia Bay.

The storm blasted through the Panhandle and southern Alabama on Thursday, its second swipe at the state, before losing strength as it moved inland and dissipating into rain. When it hit the Pensacola area, it had 94 mph winds and gusts up to 103 mph. On Wednesday, Erin cut a swath across central Florida, lost strength over land and then regained hurricane force from the warm Gulf waters.

Four deaths were blamed on Erin, and another seven people were reported missing at sea. The Coast Guard was to continue searching for them today.

The barrier island stretching from Pensacola Beach to Navarre Beach absorbed the brunt of the storm as it came ashore for the second time Thursday.

The storm blew trees onto homes, cars and businesses, peeled roofs from buildings, ripped shingles and siding off homes, and blew out windows. The county said 186 structures were damaged.

Several of the hardest-hit homeowners said they had been housing friends from beach communities who had fled inland to ride out the storm, only to find they were no safer there.

Khorram, his wife, Vickie, and their two small children had left their house in Pensacola Beach, on the barrier island of Santa Rosa.

Some residents and officials complained the Panhandle was caught unaware because forecasts had predicted Erin would move past them and hit Gulfport, Miss., or New Orleans.

"It was Gulfport, Gulfport, Gulfport all last night, then all of a sudden: 'It's coming!' " said Susan Kuehne, a shelter manager in Santa Rosa County.

Officials at the National Hurricane Center in Miami disputed the criticism, saying they posted the warning for the Panhandle at 3 p.m. Wednesday.

President Clinton signed an emergency declaration to provide federal assistance to state and local agencies in 19 counties.

Officials projected insured losses as high as $360 million from Erin's two-day trek through Florida, a fraction of the $16 billion in insured losses from Andrew in 1992.

In northeast Pensacola, where giant oaks and 80-foot pine trees were uprooted, chain saws roared Friday as driveways were cleared and roofs uncovered.

"I didn't think we'd catch anything with all the tree support, being up on the bluff," said Ed Woolam, a retired Navy officer.

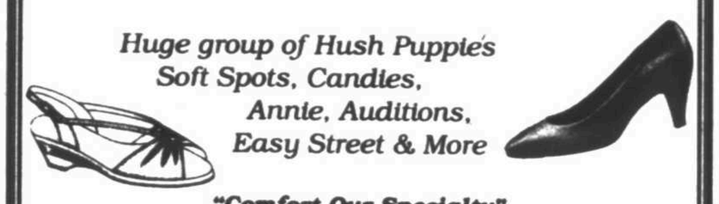

Woolam had moved with his wife five months ago from a Pensacola Beach home, which they had evacuated last year during Tropical Storm Alberto.

Woolam said they had considered their new home hurricane-proof.

"I felt as secure here as I would in a foxhole somewhere, then all of a sudden, 'Boom!' " he said.

President orders ban on security clearance discrimination

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton officially ended the government assumption that homosexuals can't be trusted with national secrets by ordering an end Friday to discrimination based on sexual orientation in granting security clearances.

Homosexual rights groups praised the order. Elizabeth Birch, executive director of the Human Rights Campaign Fund, called it "an important step toward ending governmentally sanctioned job discrimination against gay and lesbian people."

But Rep. Bob Dornan, a long-shot candidate for the GOP presidential nomination, called Clinton's action "something else he didn't have to do that's gotten in our face."

"I wouldn't trust them with a $5 loan, let alone the nation's secrets," Dornan, R-Calif., said of homosexuals, whom he also labeled "promiscuous by definition."

The 13-page order adds the words "sexual orientation" to the non-discrimination clause covering access to classified material. It also states, "No inference concerning the standards in this section may be raised solely on the basis of the sexual orientation of the employee."

The order establishes the first uniform standards for U.S. agencies in granting security clearances and it requires federal agencies to recognize each other's security clearances.

"The order completes a process of careful honing, spurred by findings of the Joint Security Commission in February 1994, by the Intelligence and National Defense agencies in their reviews of such espionage cases as that of Aldrich Ames," White House press secretary Mike McCurry said in a statement.

An executive order has the force of law, but it can be overturned by Congress.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., one of three openly gay members of Congress, welcomed the order. He worked with the Bush and Clinton administrations in an effort to change the policy on homosexuals.

"We all know that innumerable lesbians and gay men have served their country loyally and well throughout its history without betraying its trust or giving away its secrets," Frank said in a statement. "But, shamefully, until now, the federal government was unwilling to acknowledge this fact."

A memo dated Aug. 3 from Marsha Scott, deputy assistant to the president for political affairs, said the order would be effective immediately upon its publication in the Federal Register. The memo was released by the Human Rights Campaign Fund.

Leonard Hirsh, president of Federal GLOBE, a group of gay, lesbian and bisexual federal employees, said his organization would work with government agencies to make sure the new policy is followed.

Federal agencies for years denied security clearances to homosexuals on the assumption that all gay people are at risk of being blackmailed or otherwise compromised.

But last March, a General Accounting Office study found that eight government agencies apparently had stopped using homosexuality as a reason for denying security clearances to civilian workers.

The GAO reviewed selected records of clearances for civilians and contractors from the departments of Defense, Energy and State; the Office of Personnel Management; the U.S. Information Agency; the Federal Bureau of Investigation; the Secret Service and the U.S. Customs Service.

A requirement for federal employees who handle classified information to be trustworthy grew out of a loyalty program established by President Truman in 1947, a time of growing concern over communism. Executive Order 10450 modified the loyalty program in 1953 and, for the first time, included "sexual perversion" as a basis for removal from the federal service.

Christopher makes first official visit to Vietnam for Americans' remains

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — It was meant to be a healing journey opening an era of cooperation with Vietnam, a nation that humbled American military power and defined a generation.

But Secretary of State Warren Christopher's first official event in Vietnam — accepting remains of Americans killed in the war — was a stark reminder that old wounds are slow to heal.

"We're going to turn the page in connection with our relationship with Vietnam," Christopher said at a news conference in Cambodia before flying to Vietnam on Saturday. "It's time to put the war behind us."

For some that wasn't so easy. Republicans in Congress quickly moved to deny funds for opening a U.S. embassy in Vietnam.

Chairman Benjamin Gilman, R-N.Y., of the House International Relations Committee, accused Vietnam of "coldbloodedly using the remains of missing Americans as pawns in a sordid game to extract maximum concessions from our government."

President Clinton said that normalization of relations would bolster efforts to learn the fate of Americans missing in Southeast Asia.

Christopher was to receive the remains of GIs recovered by the Vietnamese before opening a U.S. embassy in Hanoi.

America's monument to the Vietnam War is not a celebration of a military triumph, but a solemn remembrance of the more than 55,000 Americans who died in the conflict, a black wall containing the names of the dead.

The Vietnam War went on for a decade with mounting casualties. Its memory created a reluctance on the part of the military and politicians and the population at large to see U.S. forces committed in areas where they would suffer casualties and where there was no clear plan for pulling out.

Vietnam was the standard for judging the wisdom of becoming involved in places like Bosnia and Somalia.

Ironically, while the United States had neither diplomatic relations nor trade with Vietnam, the Asian country welcomed the dollar. Americans who travel to Vietnam today need not worry about exchanging money. The dollar is accepted for purchases large and small.

The same is true of Cambodia with which the United States resumed diplomatic ties only in 1993 after the country held democratic elections.

Before going to Vietnam, Christopher spent a day in Phnom Penh to get a firsthand look at a country that suffered horribly on the margins of the Vietnam War.

After the United States left Saigon in 1975 and the North Vietnamese unified the country, Cambodia was taken over by the Khmer Rouge guerillas, a radical communist group blamed for the deaths of more than 1 million Cambodians between 1976 and 1979.

"It's horrible beyond belief," Christopher said as he stood before a collage of human skulls in a Khmer Rouge prison turned into a memorial to that regime's victims.

Christopher also met with government officials and promised to press for congressional approval of most-favored-nation trade status for Cambodia as well as to maintain the current level of foreign aid to the Southeast Asian country. Cambodia is receiving $40 million in the current fiscal year.

Anti-cancer tomatoes

Go for red tomatoes. They may help save you from cancer. The red pigment in tomatoes is lycopene, a strong antioxidant. New tests by British researchers find lycopene four times stronger than other vegetable antioxidants at neutralizing the cell-damaging cancer-promoting effects of cigarette smoke. In another recent study, investigators in Hawaii found that lycopene actually destroyed cancer cells.

Fortunately, you get oodles of lycopene in both fresh tomatoes and all kinds of canned tomato products. Lycopene is not destroyed by heat. Here are the milligrams of lycopene in tomato products, according to a new analysis from the U.S. Department of Agriculture: 1 cup tomato soup (27); ½ cup tomato sauce (22); 2 tablespoons tomato paste (21); ¼ cup tomato puree (21); ½ cup spaghetti sauce (20); ¼ cup tomato juice (20); 1 medium red ripe tomato (11); ½ cup canned tomatoes (11); 2 tablespoons ketchup (5).

More vitamin C

If you smoke and are pregnant, you may need twice as much vitamin C as nonsmoking pregnant women to deliver normal amounts of vitamin C to your baby, according to researchers at Our Lady of Mercy Medical Center in New York.

In a study tracking 400 pregnant women, researchers found that smokers had about 15 percent less vitamin C in their blood than nonsmokers, despite the fact smoking women took in about 30 percent more vitamin C than nonsmokers, and even seemed to crave foods rich in vitamin C. Clearly, smokers use up more antioxidant vitamin C in attempts to combat cell-damaging free radicals in smoke.

But even when smokers did have as much vitamin C as nonsmokers, there was still a problem. The vitamin C in smokers did not seem to be adequately transported across the placenta to the fetus. Normally, newborns have twice as much vitamin C in their umbilical cords as found in their mothers' bloodstreams. In the new study, this was true of nonsmokers. However, infants born to smokers had only one and a half times as much vitamin C in their cord blood. Bottom line: Pregnant women who smoke need to double up on vitamin C.

Take heart quiz

True or false? Foods from animal sources do not contain dietary fiber. Plant foods don't contain cholesterol. The answer in both cases is True. Yet, about one-third of heart patients, according to a new study by psychologists at Wesleyan University, gave the wrong answer – even though they had been given dietary information, and most felt diet was important in combating heart disease.

Of 606 heart patients around the country, the average score on a nutrition test was 3.5 right out of 10 questions. That was no more than they could have got by flipping a coin. Only 7 percent knew that an ounce of chicken contains as much cholesterol as an ounce of beef. Only 39 percent knew that hydrogenated vegetable oil (hardened margarine, for example) increases cholesterol more than nonhydrogenated (liquid) oils. Only 37 percent knew that 4 grams of fat per 100 calories of a food was more than 30 percent of total calories in fat. Each fat gram has 9 calories.

Soybeans help

Eating lots of soybean foods may prevent or relieve the symptoms of menopause in women, according to accumulating evidence. In fact, diets rich in soy foods may be one reason only 10 percent of Japanese women complain of hot flashes, night sweats and other side effects of menopause, say researchers at Tufts University. That complaint figure for menopausal American women, who typically eat few soybeans, is about 60 percent.

Soy protein foods, such as tofu, tempeh, soy milk, miso and the whole beans themselves contain plant estrogens, hormones known as phytoestrogens. The theory is these phytoestrogens boost estrogen levels in women, warding off menopausal symptoms. However, unlike synthetic estrogen, such plant estrogens also seem to deter, rather than promote, hormone-related cancers, namely breast and ovarian cancer. Japanese women also have about one-fifth as much breast cancer as American women.

Tufts researchers are now testing a new soy bar – packed with phytoestrogens – on women as a possible alternative to hormone-replacement therapy.

Maggots bred for back-to-nature therapy

By Randi Hutter Epstein

OXFORD, England (AP) — In a dank, fly-infested basement lab, David Rogers proudly displayed the fruit of his labors: a bite-size chunk of liver smothered with thousands of slimy, squirming maggots.

Enough maggots, Rogers estimated, to help heal the wounds of 10 patients — figuring 10 maggots per square centimeter of open sore.

Rogers, an Oxford University entomologist, is a pioneer in the fledgling field of maggot therapy. The notion is that maggots devour dead tissue and bacteria lurking in the wound but avoid healthy skin and muscle. In an age of increasing antibiotic resistance, the maggots may do a better job than medicine, proponents say.

"It's got global appeal. It's ludicrously cost-effective and low-tech," said Dr. John Church, an orthopedic surgeon. He, along with Rogers and fellow entomologist Paul Embden, aim to launch maggot therapy here. It is already up and running in one U.S. hospital.

"We just have to get past, what I call, the Yuck Factor," said Church. "It's this immediate reaction of disgust."

The Oxford team has a fertile family of flies, capable of producing hundreds of thousands of offspring every few weeks.

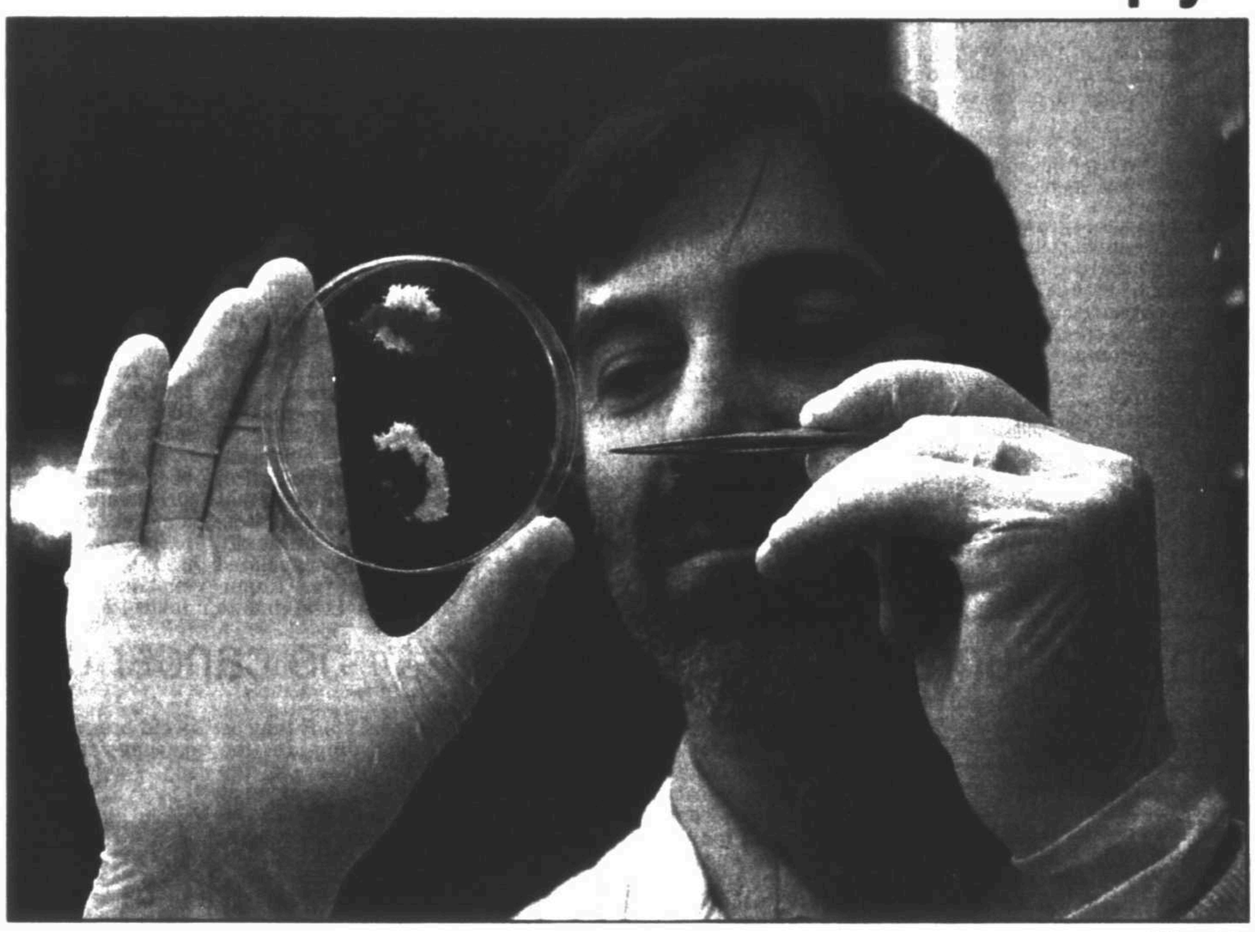

"We can produce phenomenal quantities, the biggest problem is overproduction," said Embden, swatting flies buzzing around the scientists and a visitor.

Now they just need the go-ahead from nurses, squeamish about changing bug-ridden bandages, and hospital managers, antsy about condoning infested wards.

Church said he has treated one patient successfully, but he would not reveal the patient's details.

For at least three centuries, observant doctors had noted that patients with maggot-infested wounds healed faster than those without fly eggs, said Church. But only recently have a few clinicians sought to bring nature's remedy to hospital wards.

Dr. Ronald Sherman, entomologist-turned-doctor at the University of California, Irvine, completed one of the first studies comparing maggots to medicine. He has been breeding and treating patients at the Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Long Beach for about five years. The findings, based on 10 patients and published in the April issue of The Journal of Spinal Cord Medicine, indicated that the bugs could heal wounds that defied medicine. Patients got maggots after medicine failed. The maggots, said Sherman, shrunk the wounds by about 20 percent to 25 percent a week. All the patients healed completely within about a month, said Sherman.

Entomologist David Rogers examines a dish containing bite-sized chunks of liver surrounded by maggots at the Department of Zoology at Oxford University in England on May 30. Rogers is a pioneer in the fledgling field of maggot therapy. The notion is that maggots, baby flies, devour dead tissue and bacteria lurking in a wound but avoid healthy skin and muscle. In an age of increasing antibiotic resistance, the maggots may do a better job than medicine, proponents say.

Maggots thrive off dead meat and bacteria, and can "get into the nooks and crannies that antibiotics can't reach," Church explained. Within about five days, maggots mature into pupa, a hardened cocoon-like stage in which the full-grown fly develops. Bandages must be changed before the flies fly away, said Church. Most patients require at least three batches of maggots.

Both Shermans and Church's teams breed green-bottle flies, a common housefly formally known as Lucilia sericata. They suspect that other species are just as effective but caution that it is also possible that other types of maggots could invade healthy tissue.

In other words: Don't try this without medical assistance.

Besides treating patients, the scientists seek to unravel the mysteries of maggot's inherent anti-bacterial traits. Such findings may yield clues to design more effective antibiotics. Sherman has a hunch the mechanism may be too complex to replicate. Then, again, if you have the real thing, why settle for an imitation?

"As an entomologist," said Sherman, "I don't see why anybody wouldn't be just as happy with the maggot. But I'm sure if we could come up with a different delivery system without live critters, it would be more acceptable to most people."

Experts debate safety of current polio vaccine

By Lauran Neergaard

WASHINGTON (AP) — At 4 months, David Salamone had barely learned to crawl when he got polio — from a vaccination that was supposed to protect him from the paralyzing disease.

It's a nightmare that happens to about eight Americans a year. And now that naturally occurring polio has disappeared from the Western Hemisphere, doctors are debating whether to give children a safer vaccine. But many fear this path could lead to a resurgence of the disease.

"It's a very difficult decision," says Joanne Binkley, a consumer safety officer for the Food and Drug Administration.

Polio epidemics once swept this country, but thanks to decades of vaccination, the last naturally occurring case here was in 1979.

Special camp helps grieving children

By Carolyn Poirot
N.Y. Times News Service

GRANBURY — The six smallest girls sat in a circle on the wooden floor of their dark, screened-in cabin holding flashlights in their laps so that their hands were free to eat popcorn and hug stuffed bears and rabbits.

They were called the Rainbows.

Amber, who had just turned 8 and was the oldest of the Rainbows, said she wasn't afraid of anything, except snakes and robbers. Her biggest concern was that her father might be in hell, "down there in the dark," she said, pointing to the ground. A young friend had told her that's what happens to people who take their own lives.

All six of the youngest group of campers at El Tesoro de la Vida that year had lost their fathers; one was killed in a motorcycle accident, two died of cancer, and three committed suicide.

I met the girls three years ago when I had the privilege of spending a couple of days out at Camp El Tesoro de la Vida (Spanish for the Treasure of Life), better known as "grief camp." The special camp is organized through the First Texas Council of Camp Fire each year for children 6 to 16 who are grieving over the loss of a family member or close loved one, usually a parent, grandparent, brother or sister.

Children swim and dance and cry and ride horses and shout their anger and laugh and chant cheers and express shame and draw pictures of their happiest memories and their saddest.

Many of them start the week numb, still shellshocked, not saying anything to anybody. They end up talking about their tragedies everywhere — in the swimming pool and on horseback and while walking in the shallow creek that meanders through the camp, located about 45 minutes southwest of Fort Worth, near Granbury.

The camp is designed to help grieving children work through their fears, anger, humiliation, guilt and sorrow. I remember them saying ironic things like, "I'm so mad that my dad left me that I could just kill him."

The year I was there, the deaths included seven murders, a lot of cancer and heart attacks, two drownings, a plane crash, 10 motor vehicle accidents and 18 suicides.

Some of the children witnessed their loved ones' deaths; some blamed themselves for not being there when it happened. All the ones I met seemed to truly benefit from their week in the woods with trained, understanding counselors and, more importantly, with other children their age, who really did know how they felt.

Cancer therapy from sharks?

By Lisa M. Krieger
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — So far, the most effective thing about shark cartilage is its marketing.

I. William Lane vows to change that.

A former W.R. Grace Co. executive with no medical degree, Lane says he has discovered the cure for cancer — and he's just won approval from the federal Food and Drug Administration to do the tests to prove it.

Lane stopped in San Francisco on Wednesday night on a multi-city tour to tout his product, one of the hottest new agents in "alternative healing" circles: a fishy-smelling powder, ground up from the animal's skeleton, selling for $4,000 to $6,000 a treatment.

"We're on to something," said Lane. "It could be big."

The public has gotten the message: an estimated 10,000 individuals have bought the product and another 250,000 have bought Lane's 1992 book "Sharks Don't Get Cancer."

In fact, experts say, sharks do get cancer. Several dozen cases of malignancy have been recorded in sharks by John C. Harshbarger, director of the registry of tumors in lower animals at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

Scientists add that the purported antitumor characteristic may be found in other kinds of cartilage — like that found in the ribs and noses of cows.

Moreover, they say, these animals aren't cured by eating the substance — nor are humans. Since proteins in cartilage are broken down by the intestines and rendered inactive, scientists say it is unlikely that eating cartilage does any-

Horticulturalist believes pawpaw is trendy

Associated Press

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Move over, kiwi. The native American pawpaw is likely to become the next trendy fruit, says Purdue University horticulturalist Bruce Bordelon.

"Pawpaws are shaking out as having good market potential already. They should start showing up soon in expensive restaurants as a novelty item," says Bordelon, an assistant professor who coordinates Purdue's pawpaw trial, part of a 14-university effort to determine the best varieties of the fruit.

Because of a unique taste, the fruit — yellow-brown, about the size of a potato and textured like a ripe banana outside — could become a popular flavor, says Carol Karahadian, Purdue flavor chemist.

thing except add calories.

Even if it worked, they say, you'd have to eat hundreds of pounds to derive any benefit.

Said Ruth Kava, director of nutrition at the American Council on Science and Health: "Shark cartilage proponents have spun a pseudoscientific web of evidence to support their claims and sell their products."

FDA spokesman Arthur Whitmore said that "until there are clear results from carefully conducted clinical trials, the office cannot endorse or comment on the use of shark cartilage as a treatment for cancer."

Lane is out to prove them all wrong.

He says there is a substance in shark cartilage that inhibits development of blood vessels that feed cancerous cells, a process called angiogenesis.

"Tumors cannot grow without a network of blood vessels to nourish them. When that network is affected, developing tumors starve, shrink and usually die," he said.

He claimed that of 29 "terminal" cancer patients — all suffering from advanced brain, prostate and breast malignancies — 14 are now tumor-free.

"They are completely normal. They swim, climb mountains and go to the beach," he said. "Thirty-five months after treatment, they are tumor-free.

His product, made from shark heads and backbones left over from the production of shark fin soup at an Australian processing plant, is sold by a Woodcliff, N.J.-based company run by his son Andrew.

The upcoming trial will test the agent in a dozen volunteers to determine safety, dosage, and possible efficacy. It could result in a much larger trial in thousands of volunteers.

But for now, the FDA is skeptical: "It is illegal to promote a product until there is medical justification that it is effective," said Whitmore. "Any promotion is a violation of federal law."

VACCINE: Wisdom of current vaccine questioned

however, so doctors still immunize four million U.S. children a year. They use a highly effective oral vaccine made of live but weakened polio virus that protects not just individuals but society.

Oral polio vaccine, or OPV, is the only drug that causes immunity in the intestine, where polio grows before it causes paralysis. The vaccine prevents healthy carriers from infecting other people and also sheds enough virus into the community to offer some immunity to the unimmunized.

But OPV gives polio to about eight people a year, either children or adults who come into contact with them, usually by changing diapers. At risk are people with weak immune systems, particularly infants who get their first two doses before they're old enough for doctors to know their immune strength.

With polio no longer a scourge in the United States, some doctors say it's hard to justify that risk. So the government is considering switching to at least partial use of a shot made of a killed virus that can't spread polio — but that doesn't provide intestinal immunity either. The federally appointed Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices is slated to decide in October.

'Why should we play russian roulette with our children?'

— John Salamone, whose son contracted polio from a vaccination

Dr. Samuel Katz of Duke University, who supports a change, says it's very difficult to say to a parent that getting polio from the vaccination only happens once in two million doses.

"That one is 100 percent if it's your child," he says.

"Why should we play Russian roulette with our children?" says John Salamone of Oakton, Va., whose son was born with an initially undetected immune disease. Now 5, David walks with a brace on his atrophied right leg.

The inactivated polio vaccine, or IPV, is a stronger version of the first polio shot, which was invented by Dr. Jonas Salk, who recently died.

The debate over using it is fierce because IPV causes only bloodstream immunity — enough to protect a child from paralysis but not to prevent him from infecting unimmunized playmates, explained Dr. D.A. Henderson of Johns Hopkins University.

Take Holland's 1993 polio outbreak. Religious communities that refuse immunizations got polio and spread it to IPV recipients. Those people didn't get sick, but health officials determined they spread the virus all the way to Canada, exposing countless unimmunized people along the way.

Also, IPV would add another four injections to the dozen shots American children already need by age 2, Henderson said. He fears the pain and extra expense of polio shots would mean fewer protected children.

The World Health Organization has asked the United States not to abandon OPV, fearing it would lead polio-plagued nations such as India to do the same.

Worried parents can request IPV. Manufacturer Connaught Laboratories sells 300,000 doses here a year. But other doctors note that France, Holland, Scandinavia and some Canadian provinces already use IPV exclusively.

Katz supports a compromise: Give those risky first two doses of polio vaccine with the killed-virus version so infants can build up initial immunity before getting the last two doses with OPV that will prevent polio's silent spread. The vaccine advisory committee is considering that plan.

Henderson wouldn't go that far until doctors can offer IPV combined with another vaccine so that children don't need extra shots.

The FDA expects North American Vaccine Co. to complete testing of one such combination vaccine late this year. Connaught sells one in Canada already, and is preparing a new formula for the United States that won't be ready until 1998.

High heat, unrefined cooking oils may be cancer cause

By Dolores Kong
N.Y. Times News Service

Lowering wok's heat may reduce cancer risk.

Chinese women have one of the highest lung cancer rates in the world, but not because they smoke a lot of cigarettes.

Studies of lung cancer in China have implicated indoor air pollutants from cooking with the traditional wok.

To assess that theory, researchers from the National Cancer Institute, the Shanghai Cancer Institute and the Research Triangle Institute tested heated Chinese and US cooking oils for possible cancer-causing agents.

They conclude, in a study in a recent issue of the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, that high-temperature wok cooking — at 464 to 536 degrees Fahrenheit — with unrefined Chinese rapeseed oil may increase lung cancer risk. That is a common oil and cooking temperature used by women cooks in Shanghai.

US cooking oils are more refined and do not appear to pose the same risk, although more study may be warranted, according to the researchers. In any event, the researchers suggested cooking at lower temperatures and increasing ventilation during cooking to avoid breathing possible cancer-causing vapors.

Scholars scramble after clues to Unabomber

By William J. Broad
N.Y. Times News Service

'They've thrown a bomb into the community. My impression is that we're all scurrying around in our minds, thinking of people who might be suspects.'
— Stanley Goldberg, science historian in Washington

Last October an agent from the Federal Bureau of Investigation showed up in New Orleans at the annual meeting of The History of Science Society, the main professional gathering for academics studying the origins of science and how the discipline has transformed the world.

The agenda featured esoteric items like a discussion of 19th-century social attitudes toward the germ theory and a detailed analysis of the inks Galileo used in one of his manuscripts.

Carrying court papers, the agent subpoenaed the society's membership records and questioned scholars for clues to the identity of the serial killer, often called the Unabomber, who during 17 years has killed three people and injured 23 others with homemade bombs.

That subpoena, and the disclosure that the FBI believes the bomber is heavily immersed in the most radical interpretations of the history of science, has roiled the usually placid waters of the discipline. And across the country, professors have begun reconsidering old suspicions, acquaintances and tracts to help solve the crimes.

"They've thrown a bomb into the community," said Stanley Goldberg, a science historian in Washington. "My impression is that we're all scurrying around in our minds, thinking of people who might be suspects."

The bureau had detected the bomber's interest in the history of science, as well as a number of other disciplines including behavioral psychology, by pouring over a number of letters he had sent to newspapers and to intended victims as long ago as a decade.

The 35,000 word manifesto he sent to The New York Times and two other publications in late June not only corroborated that interest but also gave the bureau new insight into the issues that concerned the bomber, the depth of his reading and the authors he respected.

More than a few historians of science, who blanched at the possible link between their usually staid area of study and the object of the most intense manhunt in FBI history, have taken pains to distance the discipline from a maniacal murderer who seems to be familiar with their debates and lines of thinking.

But Landon Winner, a political scientist and technology expert at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., said he was disappointed the FBI had not consulted with him on the bomber.

"I feel left out," he said. "It's like being left off the guest list for a really good party."

Scholars of the history of science investigate the origins of science from the early Babylonians and Greeks onward. They study figures like Ptolemy, Copernicus, Newton, Galileo, Mendel and the Curies, and examine questions like how calculus was developed, and how telescopes, atom smashers and computers were invented and helped change the world.

In some history departments with no emphasis on the subject, professors sometimes believe their pursuits are not considered quite as serious as those studying political or philosophical history.

"It was always regarded as a quixotic thing they let me play with," said Prof. Harold Bauman, who has taught a variety of history courses for 30 years at the University of Utah in Salt Lake City.

Bauman has been interviewed three times by the FBI since the bomber left a booby trap bomb on campus in October 1981 that was defused before anyone was hurt. Bauman said he was to be interviewed again by the FBI Friday and to be shown a copy of the manifesto to review.

Several other professors in the field have also been given copies of the tract, which condemns technological society and the scientific progress that scholars in this arcane field usually champion.

"They've got to be desperate," said David C. Lindberg, a physicist at the University of Wisconsin who specializes in medieval optics and religion and who is president of The History of Science Society, which received the subpoena in October.

"These are extremely tenuous inferences they're making. But if it's the only thing they've got, then it seems to make sense."

Some academics, while endorsing the bureau's all-out search, take umbrage at the mention of the field and the bomber in the same breath.

"It's like saying an appreciation of Beethoven has something to do with the Nazis," said David A. Hollinger, a professor of history at the University of California at Berkeley.

He maintained that the ideas he read in newspaper excerpts were less out of the realm of the history of science than "generally from a more amorphous critical discourse that moves out of environmental groups and religious groups and some literary discourses."

"I would be looking more toward alternative education courses of the '70s," he concluded.

While conservative and scholarly for the most part, and sometimes downright stuffy, the field of history of science also has dark undercurrents and factions that have sometimes mounted intellectual attacks on the science establishment, blaming the military, industrial and academic worlds for social ills like unemployment and pollution.

That radical milieu seems to have been the breeding ground for the bomber, whose treatise says that science and the industrial revolution have undermined human values and calls for returning to a pre-industrial world better in tune with nature.

This week Louis J. Freeh, director of the FBI, announced that agents were talking to college professors around the country about the manifesto. The bureau, he said in a statement, "is taking this investigative step in an effort to determine whether that community might recognize the writer's work or be able to shed light on important or telltale aspects of the manuscript's general topic, the history of science."

In its hunt for the bomber's origins, the FBI is focusing on Northwestern University and the Chicago campus of the University of Illinois, where the bureau believes the killer might have lived in the late 1970s.

In the course of its inquiry, the agency has sown dissension among university officials quick to disclaim any kind of culpability.

"This is a working-class campus," Jan Rocek, dean of the graduate school of the University of Illinois, Chicago, said in an interview. "These characters tend to come out of more affluent families."

Charles Loebbaka, a spokesman for Northwestern University, said, "University officials are cooperating with the FBI and have been for sometime." But he refused further comment, saying details would have to come from the FBI.

New software blocks inappropriate portions of 'Net, on-line services

NEW YORK (AP) — Craig Fifer's job is the cyber-age equivalent of the school field-trip chaperone.

As a technology training assistant in the Roanoke, Va., school system, Fifer has been working on ways to allow teachers to use the Internet and on-line services without exposing students to pornography and other offensive material.

"I like to compare the Internet to a field trip," Fifer said. "When teachers take students on field trip, they take certain risks."

Amid demand from people like Fifer and a surge of attention in Congress, several software companies in recent weeks have started selling programs that provide more control over what kids see on line.

The products have names like NetNanny and Cybersitter and cost $30 to $50. Some provide monthly lists of on-line files and computer sites that may be inappropriate for children.

Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., displayed some of the products Friday during the House telecommunications reform debate.

"It is possible for our parents now to childproof the family computer," said Wyden, who sponsored an amendment, passed 420-4, that discourages government control of the electronic networks.

The three biggest on-line services — America Online, CompuServe and Prodigy — have some safeguards built into their software.

Prodigy, for instance, keeps a record of how the owner's computer is being used to visit the World Wide Web, allowing a parent to review what a child has seen.

But the new stand-alone products go further by blocking out individual on-line sites or even screening for offensive words.

The newest, Cyber Patrol by Microsystems Software Inc., allows parents to limit the amount of time children can be on line and control what sites they can visit. The company will also sell a subscription to a monthly list of on-line files and computer locations that might be offensive.

"We tried to set up a thoughtful framework for parents to be able to work their own choices," said Nigel Spicer, president of Microsystems. "All of us are going to have different ideas about what is appropriate."

SurfWatch Software Inc.'s program, called SurfWatch, blocks more than 1,500 on-line files. The company sends subscribers a monthly update so that they can block more.

"It's a moving target," said Nelson Heller, publisher of two Chicago-based newsletters about the use of high technology in education. "What's not there one day is there the next, and it's very difficult for schools to keep up."

On Friday alone, according to one Internet access provider, there were five new adult-oriented sites on the global data network.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Romance will have its up and downs but should stabilize towards the end of 1995. Listen to your intuition and become more independent. New perks at work or a December promotion mean greater job satisfaction. Keep in close contact with those who labor behind the scenes. The year 1996 will bring new friends and an amazing business proposition. Save money for investment purposes or a vacation hideaway.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Loni Anderson, former astronaut Neil Armstrong, Knicks' star Patrick Ewing, soap actress Erika Slezak.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Expect the unexpected today! Someone's plans could go awry. Keep a tight rein on your purse strings if friends urge you to invest in a dubious scheme. A conservative approach will protect your assets.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A business partnership requires careful thought. Do nothing in haste. Although this is not a good time to lend money, you may decide to make a small financial donation. Resist lecturing a hapless friend.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Greater frugality will lead to eventual economic independence. Protect your valuables when traveling. A decline in the love temperature is normal now. Try not to lose your cool if your mate wants time alone.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Good nutrition is more important than ever. Try to eat a wider variety of foods. An interest in philosophy, law or religion grows stronger. Start keeping a diary of the major events in your life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are at your best when entertaining or educating. Resist the temptation to make purchases you cannot afford. Your attention turns to music and dance tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your morning gets off to a productive start. Be on the lookout for splendid news or an exciting offer. Avoid acting selfish. Use your medication skills to create a more harmonious atmosphere at home.

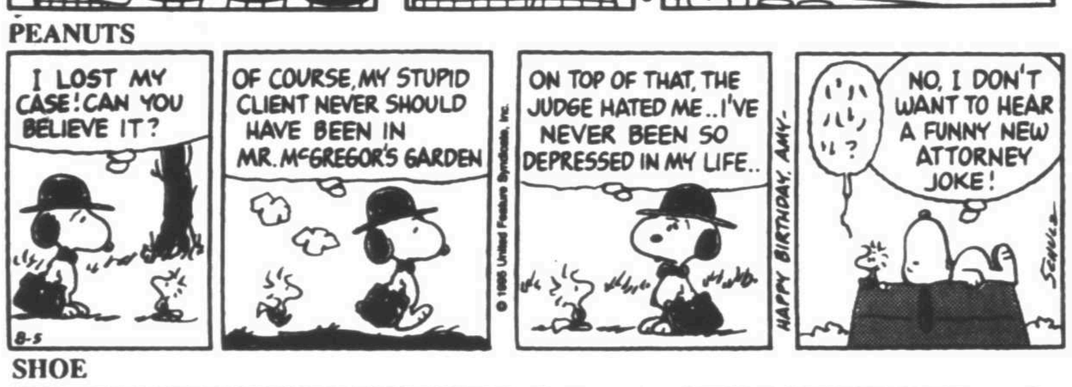

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friends may be pressuring you about money; resist their entreaties. Home is a cozy place to be today. You and your loved one are on the same wavelength. Dine under the stars if you can.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Conciliatory forces restore your optimism and self-confidence. Change your ways if need be. A brainstorming session with a friend or relative produces a nifty solution to a recurring problem.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Certain domestic developments could disturb you. Try to see things from the other person's point of view. Sympathetic friends offer their services. Remember to return the favor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A dream can come true if you do not falter. A need for money reinforces your determination to succeed. Do not let family squabbles cause irritability. Build bridges of love.

Portable typewriter that gave birth to Superman is up for sale: $65,000

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The typewriter that gave birth to Superman is up for sale for $65,000.

Superman creator Jerry Siegel, now 80, said he got a lot of ideas while traveling and used the portable Royal on trains and in hotel rooms to write the Man of Steel's early adventures in 1938 and 1939.

Comic book dealer Robert Roter recently put the machine up for sale. He wouldn't say who sold it to him.

"The value is not in the fact that it's an antique typewriter, but that it's a part of history," Roter said Thursday.

Siegel collaborated with artist Joe Shuster to create Superman in 1938.

LONDON — Queen Mother Elizabeth took it easy on her 95th birthday Friday, greeting hundreds of well-wishers from the comfort of a golf cart.

Queen Mother Elizabeth greets well-wishers on 95th birthday.

Traditionally, the mother of Queen Elizabeth II had taken a walk around outside Clarence House to chat with the crowd, but her right leg has been heavily bandaged for months to protect an injury that has reportedly ulcerated. She had a cataract removed last month.

The Queen Mother did stand for a while to collect flowers from children.

LOS ANGELES — If he ever has to do another kissing scene with a guy, "Wings" co-star Steven Weber plans to ask a favor: "Shave! Shave! Shave!"

Weber and "Days of Our Lives" heartthrob Michael T. Weiss smooch in the new gay-themed movie "Jeffrey."

"It was easy to do. It's not mysterious at all. The only thing that was slightly odd that I wasn't used to was getting beard coming back at me," Weber told the TV show "Extra" in an interview for broadcast Monday. "That was a bit of a drag."

The movie opened Friday.

Meantime, Weber said he married MTV executive Juliette Hohnan on July 29 in the bride's hometown of London.

TOKYO — Yoko Ono is letting fans, in Japan at least, hear the result of her reconciliation with Paul McCartney.

A song about Hiroshima that Ono wrote and recorded in January with backup by McCartney and his family will be broadcast Sunday on Japan's public television station NHK, station officials said Friday.

In January, 25 years after the rift began, Paul and Linda McCartney invited Ono and her son, Sean Lennon, to visit the McCartneys' home outside London.

McCartney proposed the recording session, NHK said. Ono suggested her song "Hiroshima Sky Is Always Blue." They recorded it in a single take. Ono sang and Paul played stand-up bass, while Linda, Sean and the McCartney children played backup instruments.

The song will be broadcast Sunday morning, exactly 50 years after the bomb was dropped on Hiroshima. Ono hasn't said whether she will give the song wider release.

BOSTON — A man doing time for stabbing his wife reportedly has written more than 200 sexually explicit and threatening letters to Mary Hart. And he's supposed to get out of prison Oct. 8.

The "Entertainment Tonight" host sent the letters to the state parole board on the condition they be kept confidential, the Boston Herald reported Thursday.

Prisoner Willie J. Dawson was convicted of armed assault in 1987 and was sentenced to 10 to 15 years. The letters to Hart started in 1988, the newspaper said.

The state Correction Department is trying to use the letters to get Dawson committed to a mental hospital, the Herald said.

Dawson, 45, already has been transferred to the hospital, but he can't be held past Oct. 8 — when his prison sentence ends — unless a court finds he has a psychiatric disorder that makes him dangerous.

The Correction Department won't comment on the case. Neither will Hart.

NEW YORK — The case of the con man and Mrs. Colombo is over.

Alfonso Cacace agreed to repay the $1 million in cash, property and jewelry he bilked from Peter Falk's mom, 92-year-old Madeline Falk.

Cacace, 50, pleaded guilty Thursday to grand larceny and received five years' probation.

Falk, TV's disheveled Lt. Colombo, asked for an investigation in October.

Education pays off for some inner-city youths

By Alyssa Gabbay
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The Rev. Tom Johnson has an effective way of getting young people to sit down to their studies.

He pays them.

Ten students in Johnson's three-week church-sponsored summer school graduated recently, some of them having earned as much as $265.

One by one, they walked up to the altar at the Allegheny United Church of Christ on Pittsburgh's North Side, received a certificate bearing their name and later an envelope full of dollar bills.

"I'm going to buy some clothes," 15-year-old Veronica Marrow said as she counted her cash. Another 15-year-old, Reena Ray, said she was going to spend her money on outfits for her 1-year-old daughter, Shanequa.

People get paid for learning on the job, Johnson reasons, so it makes sense to give inner-city students the same kind of incentive.

"This is a mirror of what goes on in the workplace," he said. "I did not know all I needed to know, or all I do now, about being a pastor for a church, and I got paid while I learned. Doctors get paid for learning to be doctors."

The program, conducted for the first time last summer, includes lessons in social studies, math, sex education, public speaking and word-processing. It is characterized by an intimate, personal flavor.

Every weekday morning starting at about 8:30 a.m., Johnson picks up the children in his white Dodge van. He drives them back to the church, where a short worship service is followed by breakfast of French toast or pancakes cooked by a church member.

Next, the children split up into three groups for classes, which are taught by Johnson and volunteer teachers from the Shady Side Academy, a private school in Pittsburgh for which Johnson is a trustee.

A field trip to a nearby museum to see a civil rights photography exhibit might be part of the day, or a behind-the-scenes visit to a television station.

The students also spend three days a week at Carnegie Mellon University, where members of the computer science department teach them how to do word-processing and use graphics programs.

"One of the issues these kids face is cultural illiteracy," Johnson said. "They don't move much beyond their neighborhoods. This gets them out in the world in ways they ordinarily wouldn't."

The children, who are selected by Johnson from two youth groups he works with, earn $20 per day. Bad behavior such as cursing or fighting gets them docked $5. So does missing class.

Two students who began the program dropped out before it ended, but the rest stuck with it. And many seem to have benefited from it in other than financial ways.

Sixteen-year-old Darrell Mitchell was up at about 7 a.m. every morning, at least an hour before the van was supposed to arrive, according to his grandmother, Annie Pool.

"He couldn't wait to get there," Mrs. Pool said.

Darrell said the classes were better than those at public school because they were smaller and more tightly focused. "There's less people to distract you," he said.

Johnson came up with the idea for the program about two years ago after being frustrated with what he saw as a "chaotic" situation in Pittsburgh's inner-city public schools. The approximately $6500 needed to fund the school — including money for field trips, food and to pay the students — is supplied by the congregation and the national United Church of Christ.

Susan Schotz Rhodes, head of history at the senior school of Shady Side Academy and the children's social studies teacher, said she saw many students perking up and taking an interest in learning by the end of the three weeks.

Although she said she would prefer not to have to pay them to take the classes, "if that's what it takes to get them into a disciplined environment, where learning can take place, I'm willing to do it."

Church threatens to oust nearly 200 who haven't paid pledges

PORTSMOUTH, Va. — The message to parishioners was simple: Pay up or find another church.

Nearly 200 people, about one-fourth of the members of Noble Street Baptist Church, received a form letter recently warning them that they would lose their membership if they did not make good on pledges.

"If you have found another church home, we certainly want to wish you well," the letter said.

Members deleted from the church rolls are still allowed to worship at the church, but cannot vote at church meetings. If they want to have a wedding or funeral in the church, they must pay to rent it.

"In the New Testament, Jesus talked more about money than he talked about salvation," said the church's pastor, the Rev. Ronnie T. Northam Sr. "What does that say to me? When you get to the point in your life where you can give to him, then you are willing to follow him."

People who can't afford to pay what is owed get a clean slate by talking to a deacon about their problems, Northam said.

"Say 'Brother deacon, I can't meet my financial obligation and I want to be forgiven,' " he said.

At least one family, long a member of the church, is looking for a new place to worship.

"It's like you have a credit card or something," said Kathy Chambliss, a 32-year-old secretary who has attended Noble Street for 16 years. "I'm so glad God is not that way."

COLUMBIA, S.C. — African Methodist Episcopal churches must respond to a dangerous time filled with hate, Bishop John Hurst Adams says.

"Affirmative action is under attack (and) the budget is being balanced on the backs of those least able to defend themselves," Adams said recently at a district leadership conference at Allen University.

More than 500 representatives from AME churches attended the conference to discuss the role of the church in the political arena.

There is an ugly and hateful climate in the country, with the most recent general election bringing enemies of freedom and progress into political power, Adams said.

Most troubling about the political climate, he said, is its fundamental religious tone.

"This new vision has been vigorously supported by those who blasphemously call themselves the 'Christian right' ... and push a brand of religion that is neither Christian nor right," Adams said.

GREENVILLE, S.C. — Results of a four-month investigation into a church where children were tied to chairs and pounded on the back to drive out "demon devils" will be turned over to the state Department of Social Services.

No criminal charges will be filed against the Grace and Truth Fellowship Church, though the findings raise "serious concerns," prosecutor Joe Watson said recently.

Deputy Solicitor Regan Pendleton said former and current church members indicated children were given the harsh discipline after they misbehaved.

"My understanding from the statements given by witnesses, any misbehavior or even the inability of the child to sit still, was treated as demonic type things. It was the devil. It was not done allegedly to punish the child, but allegedly to rid the child of the demons making the child misbehave," she said.

SALT LAKE CITY — The Mormon Church's "Homefront" radio and television advertisements have won an award as part of the inaugural National Parents Day.

The National Parents Day Foundation included The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints among the organizations it honored recently in Washington for their work to strengthen families.

The church's Homefront series, launched in the early 1970s, has been sent to 1,400 television and 11,000 radio stations nationwide. The series also has won three Emmys and 18 Clios, the top award of the advertising industry.

Church officials say that while the United States has been the primary audience for the ads, they also have been sent to several other countries.

"Wherever I go, people say, 'Oh, yes — you guys are the ones who do those fabulous commercials about families,' " said T. LaMar Sleight, public affairs director for the church's North America Northeast Area.

"We believe in strong families — they are the basic unit of the church — and we believe that our society will only be as strong as its families," he said.

Singer Pat Boone, who served as honorary chairman of the first observance of National Parents Day, echoed the church's affirmation of the family.

"I think (God's) favorite people are parents, because he's trusted into their hands other people who are created in his own image," Boone said. "Parenting is a sacred challenge and perhaps the most important one in this or any society."

Christian video network offers alternative to MTV

By David Briggs
Associated Press

The president of a Christian music video network has some advice for parents who would welcome a religious alternative to MTV into their homes: Chill.

The message on the rapidly growing Z Music Television is different, but the musical styles — from rock to rap to heavy metal — have the sound and fury found on other music television networks.

About the only thing that could derail the rapidly growing Nashville-based network is a too vocal parental seal of approval, said its president, Ken Yates.

"What the parents ought to do," he said, "is take a good look at it, realize its content, and then just keep quiet."

Since its start in 1993, network officials say, Z Music Television has grown to be offered in 17 million cable households and reaches another 13 million households at least part of the day on broadcast stations.

The goal is to reach 30 million cable households alone by 2000, Yates said.

In making its case to cable system operators, Z Music officials portray it as an alternative to the often controversial MTV for the more than 50 million adults who listen to and buy Christian music. What The Nashville Network is to fans of country music, Z Music is for people who enjoy contemporary Christian music, company officials say.

There are no videos by Nine Inch Nails or Snoop Doggy Dogg on Z Music television. Excessive sex or violence are out.

"Any illicit activity, if it's too libertine, we don't put it on the air," said Graham Barnard, network programming manager and host of Z Buzz segments featuring artist interviews and news about the Christian music industry.

The hit artists and groups on Z Music are popular Christian performers such as Amy Grant, Petra, DC Talk, Michael W. Smith and Gary Chapman.

And their messages are ones of hope and encouragement, according to Yates.

"The videos that we play on Z have a very high standard, both the visual and lyrical content," he said.

But tuning out videos glorifying violence or sex outside of marriage does not mean the music or images have to be dull, network officials say.

Young people turning on Z can hear rap, rock and other contemporary music that appeals to their generation, Barnard said.

One Z Music show that Barnard says should blow away any remaining stereotypes about Christian music is The Brimstone Chronicles. On the show, a long-haired host introduces heavy metal and grunge music from an industrial club set.

Strawberry returns

DETROIT — Darryl Strawberry's long-rumored return to the majors became a reality Friday night when the Yankees promoted him from the minors and put him into the starting lineup against Detroit.

He batted sixth as the designated hitter and went 1-for-4, singling in his first at-bat, popping out to second in the fourth, flying out to center in the sixth and striking out swinging against lefty Kevin Wickander in the eighth during a 4-1 victory over Detroit.

"I just want to take full advantage of the opportunity and play baseball and not be a distraction to the New York Yankees," he said at Tiger Stadium.

Duck hunter news

AUSTIN — Good news for duck hunters continues for a second straight year, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department says.

Record breeding populations of some duck species and good production have combined to produce a fall flight of ducks estimated at 80 million birds in 1995. That's up from 71 million in 1994 and would be the largest fall flight since 1979.

Most goose populations are at or near record levels, and average production this year should lead to another large flight of fall geese as well, the department said Friday.

Three shoot 68 for lead at city golf championship

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Wally Brown plays in Friday's first round of the NationsBank City Golf Championship where he shot a 75 to trail the leaders by seven strokes.

■ The three leaders of the NationsBank Men's City Golf Championship all say they could have had even better rounds.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

At the end of the first round of the NationsBank Men's City Golf Championship Friday, three competitors stood eyeing the leader board and replaying the last 18 holes.

"On the front nine I had seven pars and two bogies," said Kirk Branum who, along with former champions Jeff Moses and Steve Whiteside, shot 68 to tie for the lead of the three-day tournament held at Hogan Park Golf Course.

"I missed a six-footer on No. 10 for a birdie and I wish I could have that back but I guess everybody out there can say that," said Branum. "That's what it's all about."

While the trio holds a two-stroke lead over the rest of the Championship Flight field, Branum, Moses and Whiteside all gave examples of missed opportunities for lower scores. Even though there are still 36 holes to play before a city champion can be crowned, getting that first-round lead is a confidence booster for what is to come.

The second round begins today as the leaders tee off at 7: 15 a.m. at Hogan. The remaining four flights start the first of two rounds today at 9: 45 a.m.

Behind the leaders are Mac McGee and Harry Bettis, tied at an even-par 70. Bobby Welborn, Bill McEntire and Gary Johnson are three strokes back at 71 while Jeremiah Luttrell, Knobby Sanchez, Heriberto Cruz and Derek Edmonds finished with 72s.

While the three leaders were contemplating how they could have made one more putt to shave another stroke off their scores, they all were pleased with their performances on Friday.

"I made some stupid approach shots and that cost me a few strokes," said Moses, who won his only city title in 1993. "But overall I feel good about the way I played. I double-bogeyed No. 8 and three-putted No. 18...Those two holes cost me three shots."

Whiteside, who won his first championship at age 21 in 1976 before winning in 1988 and in 1992, said he started off the round better than he finished.

"I played pretty well but I had a chance to play real well," said Whiteside, who golfed collegiately at Texas A&M and played against Curtis Strange and Nick Faldo, both of whom have gone on to successful professional careers.

Whiteside birdied No. 9 to open the back with a 3-under-par and was on a roll as he birdied the next two holes. "But when we came through on 12 — another hole I should have birdied — the wind gusted up and I just didn't get up and down well."

Whiteside, unlike Moses and Branum, was pleased with his play on No. 18. Whiteside birdied that hole to finish in the tie.

"I ended the round well and that made me feel a little better," said Whiteside.

Angels lose by 1 again

■ Midland falls to the Missions for its 10th one-run game and 10th loss in the last 12 contests.

By Sean Wallace
Midland Reporter-Telegram

Ryan Hancock got his fifth complete game of the season Friday night for the Angels, but he'd probably trade all of them for a couple of runs.

Hancock was hung out to dry for his second straight start as the San Antonio Missions made a two-run first hold up to beat Midland 2-1 at Christensen Stadium.

The win vaults the Missions (20-22) into sole possession of second place in the Texas League's Western Division second-half pennant chase. Midland, which won the first half, falls to third with a record of 19-23.

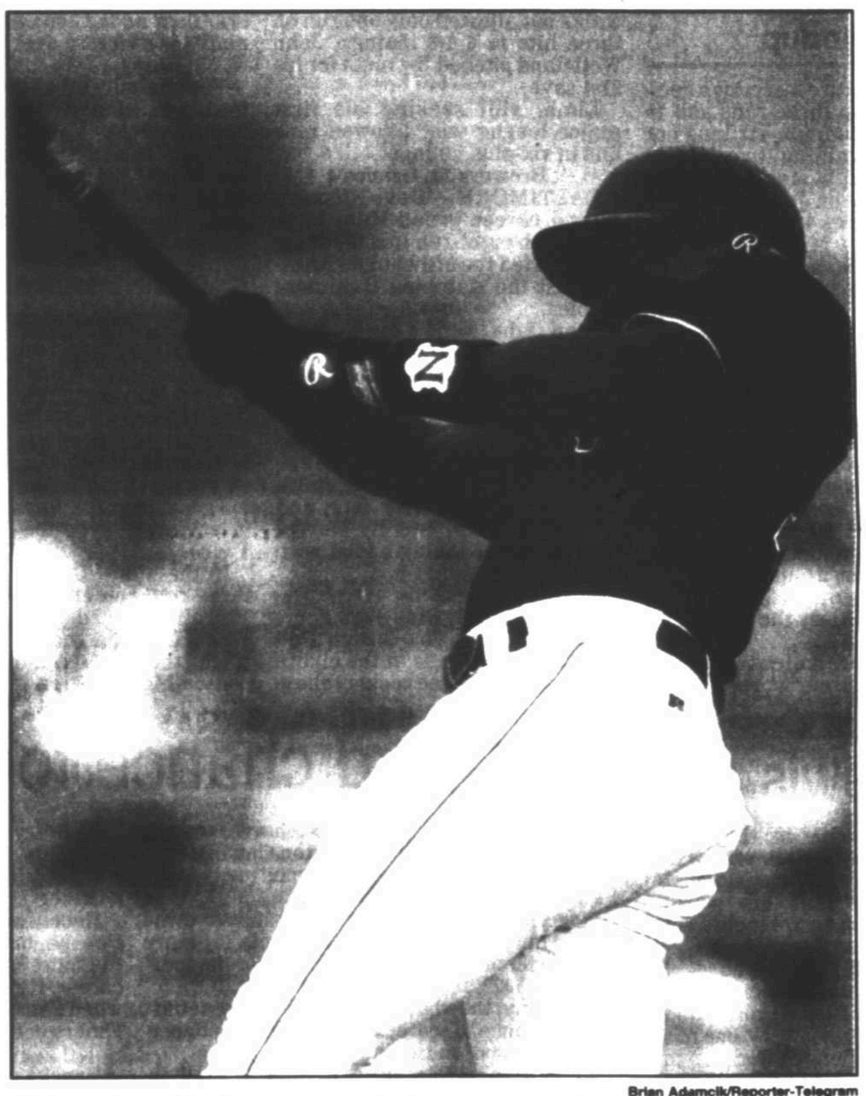

The Angels played and lost yet another one-run game in what has become a disturbing trend in the past few weeks. Ten of Midland's past 12 games have been decided by one run, and the Angels are 2-10 in that span.

"This is really getting old, playing these one-run games," center fielder Michael Wolff said. " At the beginning of the year, the pitching was struggling and the hitting was on. Then the pitching turned it on and we won the first half. Hopefully we can pull out of it before the playoffs start."

Hancock has been the Angels' hard-luck pitcher lately. He has pitched two straight complete games and despite giving up a total of four runs, has two losses to show for it.

"I've had some struggles in the

Miller lands linebacker job in San Antonio

■ Fomer Lee head football coach to work as defensive assistant at MacArthur.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The job hunt is over for Earl Miller.

Miller, who resigned from the position of head football coach at Midland Lee following the 1994 season to join his new wife in San Antonio, is now among the employed after joining the coaching staff of the San Antonio MacArthur Brahmas of District 26-5A.

Miller

Miller will coach the defensive linebackers at McArthur and will teach physical education.

He stunned the high school football world prior to the 1994 football campaign, announcing that it would be his last season to coach at Lee in order to join his wife in San Antonio when he remarried earlier that summer.

"She's making more money than I am, so I'm the one who has to move," was the way Miller put it when he made his announcement before the Rebels ever played a game last season.

He promised that he would do his best coaching job and went on to lead an underdog squad to a 7-4-2 record and a state quarterfinal berth where the Rebs lost to Arlington High, 28-18, at Memorial Stadium. Lee advanced twice in the playoffs last season with ties to Amarillo High and Arlington Lamar, winning both on penetrations.

Miller wanted to find a coaching job near San Antonio. He stayed in Midland until the end of the school year to fill out

At 45, Ferguson seeking second life as QB with San Antonio

■ The former Arkansas and Buffalo signal caller could play in tonight's CFL game against Memphis.

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — Joe Ferguson left the NFL after 17 years, but he never gave up football.

This week, he's proving it.

Ferguson joined the San Antonio Texans of the Canadian Football League on Wednesday, becoming the league's oldest player at age 45. So far, the forty-something quarterback is keeping up with his twenty-something teammates.

"Physically, I haven't had any problem at all. Mentally is the thing," Ferguson said. "Getting in a game and playing some will be the key, naturally, because the games are a lot different than practice."

His first test could come Saturday, when he may play against the Memphis Mad Dogs in the Alamodome.

Texans coach and general manager Kay Stephenson on Friday compared Ferguson's personality and condition to that of baseball pitcher Nolan Ryan, who retired in 1993 at age 46.

"(Ferguson) has always worked very, very hard. I think one of the reasons that he had so few injuries like Nolan Ryan is that he worked so hard at it physically," Stephenson said.

Mad Dogs president and head coach Pepper Rodgers brought up 46-year-old boxer George Foreman.

"I guess if George Foreman can get in the ring and slug it out with a guy who's trying to knock his head off, I'm sure Joe Ferguson can play quarterback at 45," Rodgers said with a grin.

Ferguson last played professional football in 1990, when he spent seven weeks with the Indianapolis Colts. He started his NFL career in 1973 with the Buffalo Bills, the year O.J. Simpson had his 2,000-yard season.

After 11 years with the Bills, Ferguson played with at Detroit from 1985-87 and Tampa Bay from 1988-89.

Since leaving the NFL, Ferguson has sold real estate and has been a color commentator for University of Arkansas football games. He's also managed to keep his arm in shape throwing the football with the high school team at his children's school, Shiloh Christian School in Springdale, Ark.

Stephenson, who coached at Buffalo when Ferguson was there, had been trying to talk Ferguson into joining his team for some time, but family and business reasons prevented it.

After starting quarterback Dave Archer hurt a hamstring, Ferguson agreed to sign on. Ferguson said one of his goals is to help younger players learn from his

Practice over, gametime for Cowboys-Raiders

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — If familiarity breeds contempt, the Oakland Raiders and the Dallas Cowboys should have plenty of it stored up for tonight's preseason matchup in Texas Stadium.

The two teams hammered on each other for three straight days at the Cowboys training camp facility at St. Edward's University in Austin. Fewer fights and skirmishes occurred this year, but any unsettled grievances can be dealt with on the field.

It's the Cowboys second game of the exhibition season. They beat the Buffalo Bills 21-15 last Saturday with Troy Aikman throwing a touchdown pass to Emmitt Smith and rookie Sherman Williams scoring on two runs.

The Raiders will be playing their first game of the preseason and the first as Oakland again after leaving the city to play in Los Angeles.

It will be the debut of Mike White as Raiders head coach. He replaced Art Shell on Feb. 2, becoming the 10th head coach in the Raiders 36-year history.

Oakland Raiders at Dallas Cowboys 8 p.m., FOX (Midland Cable Channel 5)

The Raiders will have an all-veteran starting offense led by quarterback Jeff Hostetler, entering his 12th NFL season and third with the Raiders. Billy Joe Hobert and Vince Evans are also expected to play against the Cowboys.

Dallas will showcase its first team again and then turn the evening over to the rookies and free agents trying to make the club.

Bell paces Astros to sweep of Pirates

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Derek Bell drove in three runs with a go-ahead homer, double and single and the Houston Astros completed a doubleheader sweep by beating the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-4 Friday night.

Bell had two hits in the opener as Houston rallied from five runs down to win 6-5. Bell is 18-for-33 (.545) with three homers and 12 RBIs as the Astros have won seven of eight from Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh has lost seven of eight, 13 of 15 and has been swept in both of its doubleheaders. The Astros have swept both of their doubleheaders.

Bell drove in runs with a first-inning double and third-inning single before hitting his seventh homer in the sixth off Steve Parris (4-4).

John Cangelosi and Craig Biggio added RBI singles in the seventh off Dennis Konuszewski, the 14th Pirates rookie to debut this season. The Astros have outscored Pittsburgh 42-21 while going 5-0 in Three Rivers Stadium.

Doug Brocail (4-1), making only his second start, got the victory by allowing two runs on four hits over 5 1-3 innings. Brocail is 2-0 with a 1.62 ERA in four career appearances against Pittsburgh.

Jeff King, Nelson Liriano and Orlando Merced had RBI singles for Pittsburgh. Mark Parent's run-scoring double made it 5-4 in the eighth, but Dave Veres got Jacob Brumfield to ground into a force play at the plate and Jay Bell to ground out with the bases loaded.

The Pirates put runners on second and third with one out in the ninth, but Todd Jones, who saved both games to give him 12 this season, got Freddy Garcia on a grounder to the mound. After John Wehner walked, Jones got Angel Encarnacion on another grounder to the mound.

Pittsburgh's Jay Bell tags out Houston's Orlando Miller on his attempt to steal second base Friday in the Astros' 6-5 first-game win.

In the opener, pinch-hitter James Mouton's run-scoring single broke a ninth-inning tie and the Astros pulled off their first five-run rally of the season. Before Friday, they hadn't overcome a deficit larger than four runs.

Pittsburgh took a 5-0 lead against ex-Pirate Doug Drabek in the second inning, but Paul Wagner, tied for the major-league lead with 11 losses, couldn't hold it.

Reds 1, Phillies 0

CINCINNATI — John Smiley, weakened by a stomach virus and a groin pull, pitched six shutout innings to lead the Cincinnati Reds to a victory over the fading Philadelphia Phillies.

Smiley (11-1) allowed just two hits as he won his sixth consecutive decision and remained unbeaten in nine starts since June 16. He left the game after the sixth inning bothered by the pulled groin.

Chuck McElroy pitched out of a one-out, bases-loaded threat in the seventh, and Jeff Brantley pitched the ninth to finish the combined five-hitter and earn his 23rd save.

Reggie Sanders hit a sacrifice fly in the first inning off Jeff Juden (0-1) for the run that sent the Phillies to their sixth loss in seven games. Philadelphia fell to a season-high 10 games behind Atlanta in the NL East.

Cincinnati has won four straight and six of eight to move 25 games over .500 (57-32) for the first time since 1990, when it won the World Series.

Marlins 7, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Jeff Conine and Kurt Abbott each drove in two runs as the Florida Marlins won their franchise-high seventh straight, beating the New York Mets.

John Burkett (9-10) gave up eight hits and two runs in five innings to win for the third time in four decisions.

Rookie Jason Isringhausen (1-1) lasted only three innings in his fourth major league start. Isringhausen gave up eight hits and five runs, four in the second as the Marlins sent 10 batters to the plate.

Conine hit his 17th homer in the first. In the second, Greg Colbrunn doubled, went to third on a balk and scored on a wild pitch. Three straight singles by Andre Dawson, Charles Johnson and Jesus Tavarez loaded the bases, then Burkett walked for one run, Quilvio Veras singled for another, and Abbott hit a sacrifice fly to make it 5-0.

Braves 4, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Greg Maddux won his career-high 10th straight game as the Atlanta Braves beat the Montreal Expos.

Maddux (12-1), who leads the National League in wins and ERA at 1.74, allowed three runs on seven hits in 8-plus innings. He struck out nine and walked one.

Maddux, who has a major league-leading six complete games, left in the ninth after allowing Wil Cordero's RBI single. Mark Wohlers got his 13th save despite allowing an RBI single to pinch-hitter Darrin Fletcher.

The three-time Cy Young Award winner is 14-0 with an 1.03 ERA in his last 15 road starts, and 10-0 with a 1.35 ERA in his last 14 starts.

Ryan Klesko and Charlie O'Brien hit back-to-back homers off Pedro Martinez (9-7) in the second inning as Atlanta won its third straight. Montreal has lost four in a row and six of seven.

Cubs 5, Cardinals 3

ST. LOUIS - Steve Trachsel retired 12 in a row and won his first game in almost a month, and Ozzie Timmons hit a two-run homer as the Chicago Cubs beat the St. Louis Cardinals 5-3 Friday night.

Randy Myers pitched the ninth for his 26th save.

ONE: Hancock touched up early

later part of the season, so I'm glad I'm pitching well," Hancock said, who gave up only six hits. "You can't just go out there and expect to get a win every time. You just have to go out there and pitch well, and that's pretty much what happened tonight."

The Missions got to Hancock for both of their runs in the first inning before Hancock finally got into a groove. He gave up only two hits after the first, striking out three and walking two.

"I just left some pitches up and they got to them," Hancock said. "I think I was trying to pitch too fast and after the first I slowed it down and got into a good rythym."

The Missions hit Hancock for three straight base hits in the first to score their first run. Miguel Cairo singled to open the game and scored on Wil Romero's double. Chris Latham singled up the middle and looked to drive in Romero but a great throw by Wolff from center field cut Romero down at the plate, keeping the score at 1-0. Following a ground out, Hancock gave up a two-out, RBI single to Willis Otanez to make it 2-0.

The Angels scored their only run in the eighth on an RBI ground out by Orlando Munoz, despite out-hitting San Antonio 9-6.

Wolff and designated hitter Ty Boykin both singled to open the inning, then moved to third on a balk by Misisons relief pitcher Jose Garcia. Munoz, pinch-hitting for J.D. Ramirez, hit a chopper back to the mound and Garica's only play was to first, scoring Wolff and cutting the lead to 2-1.

"Right now, I'm just trying to get on any way I can," said Wolff, who went 3-for-4 on the night. "We outhit them tonight, but we really didn't get many back-to-back hits or the big hit when we needed it. This slump's got to stop; it has to."

Missions' starter Wil Brunson (4-3) breezed through the first six innings with five strikouts before the Angels seriously threatened, leaving the bases loaded in the seventh.

The two teams finish their five-game series and the Angels' homestand tonight at 7 p.m. when Midland's Jeff Schmidt (4-8, 5.84 ERA) faces San Antonio's Jose Prado (5-8, 3.60).

Cleveland homers overpower White Sox, 13-3

The Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Manny Ramirez hit his first career grand slam, Cleveland's second in three games, and Paul Sorrento also homered Friday night as the Indians overpowered the Chicago White Sox 13-3.

The game got so lopsided that acting Chicago manager Joe Nossek brought in outfielder Dave Martinez to pitch the eighth inning. Martinez, who also pitched in 1990 for Montreal, walked two but didn't give up a hit.

Eddie Murray had two RBIs and three hits — moving past Al Kaline into 17th place with 3,009 career hits — and Jim Thome drove in three runs for the Indians, who improved baseball's best record to 62-27.

Ramirez matched his career high with five RBIs.

Cleveland is 5-0 against the White Sox at Jacobs Field this year. Chicago swept the three meetings at Comiskey Park in June.

Charles Nagy (10-4) won his career-best sixth consecutive decision, giving up three runs and 10 hits in seven innings, striking out seven and walking two. He is unbeaten in eight starts since losing in Chicago on June 23.

■ AL Roundup

Yankees 4, Tigers 1

DETROIT — Mike Stanley and Ruben Sierra homered and Darryl Strawberry was 1-for-4 in his Yankee debut as New York beat the Detroit Tigers.

Strawberry played his first AL game after being called up from the Yankees' Class AAA club in Columbus, Ohio, earlier in the day. To make room on the roster, outfielder Luis Polonia was designated for assignment.

With owner George Steinbrenner watching from a box seat behind the Yankee dugout, Strawberry singled to right in his first at-bat against Jose Lima (0-3) in the second but was hitless the rest of the night.

Scott Kamieniecki (3-2) matched his career worst with six walks but allowed only one run on three hits in 5 1-3 innings. John Wetteland pitched the ninth for his 21st save.

Lima, still seeking his first major league win, allowed nine hits in six-plus innings.

Brewers 12, Orioles 4

BALTIMORE — Dave Nilsson's second career grand slam highlighted an eight-run fourth inning that carried the Milwaukee Brewers past the slumping Baltimore Orioles.

John Jaha went 4-for-4 with a homer and Greg Vaughn and Jeff Cirillo also homered for the Brewers, who won for only the second time in eight games.

Milwaukee sent eight players to the plate in the fourth before the Orioles got an out. Three Baltimore pitchers walked four and allowed six hits, two by Darryl Hamilton. The inning ended with Milwaukee ahead 11-2.

Red Sox 7, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — The Boston Red Sox scored two runs in the eighth inning against three rookie relievers, then added four more in the ninth for a victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

The late rally broke open a game that was tied 1-1 after seven innings. John Valentin and Mo Vaughn began the eighth with walks off Jimmy Rogers (0-1), who replaced starter Juan Guzman after seven innings.

Tim Crabtree then walked Jose Canseco and struck out Mike Greenwell before walking Naehring to force in the go-ahead run. Ricardo Jordan surrendered Willie McGee's pinch-hit sacrifice fly, making the score 3-1.

Royals 12, Twins 4

MINNEAPOLIS — Edgar Caceres hit his first major league home run, a three-run shot in the eighth that put Kansas City ahead for good, and the Royals went on to a victory over the Minnesota Twins.

In the ninth, Gary Gaetti hit a three-run homer, his 23rd, and Phil Hiatt added a two-run blast. When Caceras scored on a wild pitch, the Royals had tied their season-high for runs.

Injury could keep Lewis out

GOTEBERG, Sweden — Track and field's fifth world championships unfurled Friday with the opening ceremonies and a potentially closing chapter in the glorious, fading career of Carl Lewis.

As 1,959 athletes from 192 countries gathered for nine days of competition that begin Saturday, Lewis said a hamstring injury suffered last weekend may prevent him from entering the long jump, the event at which he has won three Olympic gold medals.

"If I had to make a decision now, I couldn't compete," Lewis told reporters after a morning workout. "But I'm not going to 100 percent rule it out."

If he does not jump, Lewis's only chance of competing here would be on the 400-meter relay team. He is the first alternate. He is 34 now, has not run 100 meters under 10 seconds since 1991 and has jumped poorly this season, failing to reach even 27 feet at altitude last weekend in Colorado Springs at the United States Olympic Sports Festival.

Ivan Pedroso of Cuba is a prohibitive favorite in the long jump. Friday, Pedroso was informed by track's world governing body that his world record of 29 feet 4 3/4 inches set last weekend at Sestriere, Italy, would be nullified because of wind-gauge interference.

The Cubans filed a protest and asked further review. No one has seriously challenged Pedroso in recent weeks. Mike Powell, the reigning world champion whose record of 29-4 1/2 was restored Friday, is tired and injured.

The focus of these world championships, held every two years, will be on athletes who are trying to win not one but two events. The sprinter Michael Johnson of Dallas is the most prominent of this group as he seeks an unprecedented double in the 200 and 400 meters.

Jackie Joyner-Kersee is competing as a rare underdog in the women's long jump and the seven-event heptathlon. Heike Drechsler of Germany, the Olympic champion, is favored in the long jump and is returning to the heptathlon after a long absence.

Brickyard chance for Petty, Penske redemption

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Richard Petty is the winningest driver in Winston Cup history, so how come he is constantly turned away from Victory Lane as a car owner?

Roger Penske is the most successful car owner in American racing, so how come his star-studded team couldn't even qualify for the Indianapolis 500?

Saturday, they both get a chance at redemption, a chance to soothe their wounds, a chance to halt some of those annoying questions.

Petty's No. 43 Pontiac, with Bobby Hamilton behind the wheel, will start from the outside of the first row in the second Brickyard 400 at Indianapolis Motor Speedway (1:15 p.m. EDT, ABC).

"I'm glad the fans still associate me with that car," Petty said, noting the huge cheers that went up when Hamilton turned his fast lap in the familar red, white and blue STP car. "I have to get on Bobby that much more so he keeps his act clean, you know what I mean? I don't want him to ruin my reputation."

Petty was only joking, but he turned serious when he pondered how the sport has passed him by over the past decade. The King's last victory as a driver came in 1984, and his best finish in nearly three years as a full-time owner is fourth.

"I'm trying to get my reputation built up," said Petty, which sounded peculiar from a man who set a NASCAR record with 200 victories as a driver.

Recent success hasn't been a problem for Penske, but most people continue to focus on the most embarrassing moment of his racing career. It came right at this same track in May, when Penske's Indy-car duo of Al Unser Jr. and Emerson Fittipaldi, both two-time 500 winners, failed to even qualify for the Indy race.

Penske won't be on hand for the Brickyard — he's on a business trip to Sweden — but his Winston Cup car, a Ford Thunderbird driven by Rusty Wallace, will be.

"Yeah, I would like to be able to carry the banner for the team and say, 'Hey, we had a problem in May but we made up for it here at Indy,'" Wallace admitted.

In their daily telephone conversations, however, Penske kept stressing that Wallace not put too much emphasis on redeeming the team's honor at Indy.

Unlike the tortuous Indy 500 qualifying procedure, where only the fastest 33 qualifiers get in, Penske's team was assured a spot in the Brickyard because NASCAR awards provisional starting positions. Wallace, as the 1989 series champion, knew he would get in no matter what his speed.

"If all hell broke loose, I would still start (Saturday) because of my past champion status," Wallace noted.

Still, Wallace was disappointed that he managed only the 24th-best qualifying speed after having one of the fastest cars in practice. There seems to be something about the Penskes and time trials at Indy.

"It was disgusting to qualify that bad after the way we've been running," Wallace said. "This isn't a deal where Roger came in here with the Indy cars and suffered the whole month and hoped he could pull something out.

"They knew they weren't running. The difference with me is I know we're running well and I just screwed up," he added. "It was disappointing for (Penske) to be so excited that we practiced so good and were running so good, and then all of a sudden he calls home and we're 24th. It was like, 'What happened?' I was asking myself that."

Hamilton, on the other hand, turned the lap of his life in qualifying. Only 13th in the Winston Cup standings, his speed of 172.222 mph was second only to the sport's resident wunderkind and defending race champion, pole-sitter Jeff Gordon.

MILLER: Reunion of sorts for ex-Lee mentor

(From 1D)

the remainder of his contract. At times the search was frustrating to Miller.

"Who knows? I may end up being a clerk at some 7-11 store," Miller joked last spring. "I'd like to coach a few more years. I'll find something."

That search ended recently when he landed the assistant's position at McArthur. It's a reunion of sorts for Miller since he will be working directly under Cade King. King, a former assistant for many years at Odessa Permian, is the defensive coordinator for McArthur. You can bet that some high-powered defense will be taught at McArthur this season with those two on the field at the same time.

Miller was the head man at Lee for nine seasons, becoming the winningest coach in Rebel football history with an official 77-25-3 mark. On the field, Miller posted an 80-22-3 mark, but three victories were taken away from him after the 1992 season when the University Interscholastic League ruled that Lee played an ineligible player for three games that season.

Miller took Lee to the playoffs in eight of his nine seasons (missing only in 1992), reaching the state quarterfinals twice. His overall playoff record was 11-7-3.

But Miller will always be remembered as the coach who could beat Permian. He ended up with a 5-5 overall record against Mojo, but he beat the Panthers the first three years he was the head coach and four of his first five seasons. He lost to Permian 14-7 in his last meeting in 1994.

New Lee head coach John Parchman, one of Miller's former assistant coaches, will be put his first Rebel team on the field Wednesday when Lee begins preseason workouts.

Miller could not be reached for comment Friday about his new position.

McNair to get taste of NFL against Cards

HOUSTON (AP) — Though Steve McNair's first live NFL action will come against a familiar opponent, he won't have an easy time.

Houston's first-round draft choice is scheduled to enter in the third quarter of the Oilers' exhibition opener tonight against the Arizona Cardinals in the Astrodome.

After starter Chris Chandler and backup Will Furrer lead the offense in the first half, Oilers coach Jeff Fisher will send in McNair to play against the defense of Buddy Ryan, who used to be Houston's defensive coordinator.

"Steve's going to face a pressure-oriented defense," Fisher said. "He'll see some variations of things he hasn't seen here. He'll have a package of 15 to 18 plays that he's comfortable with."

McNair, who signed a seven-year, $28.5 million contract that is the highest for a rookie in NFL history, says he's ready.

"This is not added pressure, I'm looking forward to getting this first game under my belt," McNair said. "Once I get on the field, it's all blocked out anyway. I just go out and do what I can."

At Alcorn State, McNair became the first player in NCAA history to surpass 16,000 passing yards.

But he never faced the pressure he'll get from Ryan's 46 defense, which specializes in confusing blitzes.

"They didn't blitz him in the scrimmage (against Dallas), but he'll be pressured by the Cardinals," Fisher said. "We're looking to see improvement from him to show us what he's learned since the scrimmage."

Ryan isn't too worried about McNair or a return to the Astrodome. Ryan and the Cardinals beat the Oilers 20-12 in Houston last Dec. 12.

"I never get excited about anything except that it's a game," Ryan said. "Last year was a regular game, so you get excited about that, but a preseason game you don't get excited.

"We're going to play the first defense about 15 minutes, so you know how I feel."

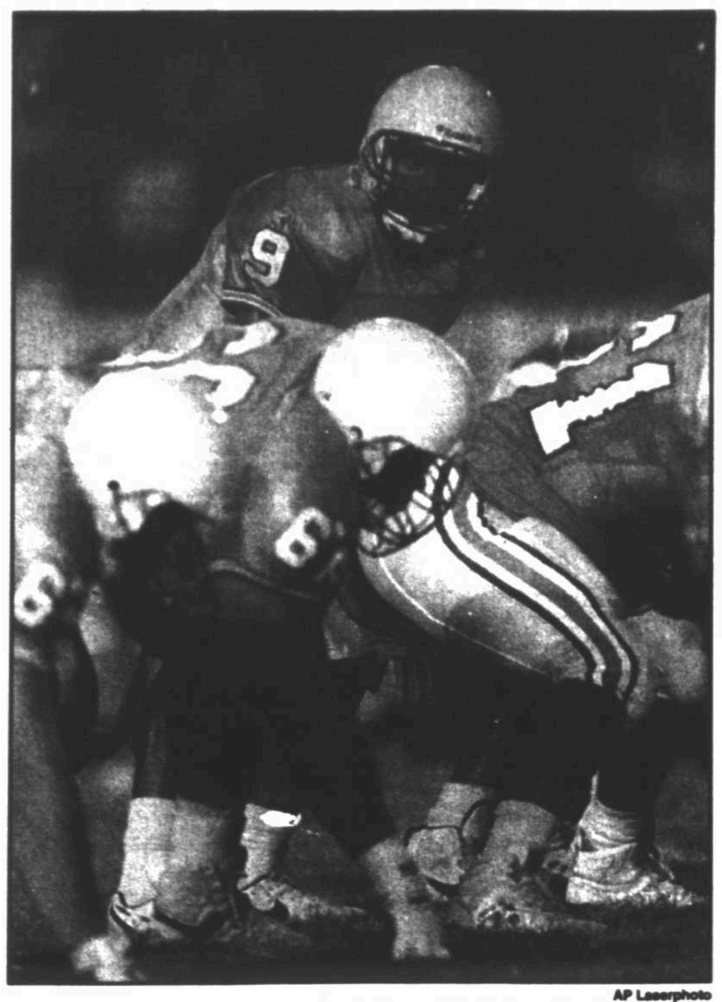

Fisher isn't concerned about Ryan or the Cardinals, and Ryan feels the same about the Oilers.

"We're worried about ourselves right now," he said. "He's well regarded with a lot of key players on this team and they'll be excited to see him, but we've got a lot of work to do for ourselves to get concerned about individual opponents in the preseason."

Ryan said: "We're trying to get ready for Washington and Philadelphia and those people, not Houston. Whatever they do, we'll play 'em."

Arizona running back Garrison Hearst, whose 1993 and 1994 seasons were shortened by knee surgery, is anxious to play against a defense other than that of his own team.

"I'm really looking forward to it," Hearst said. "For me, the scrimmage in San Diego (last week) was like a game. You just get tired of going against the same guys over and over again."

Unknown leads Buick after record-tying round

The Associated Press

■ Golf Roundup

GRAND BLANC, Mich. — Little-known Woody Austin tied a course record today, firing a 9-under-par 63 for a two-shot lead after the rain-delayed first round of the Buick Open.

Austin and 77 other golfers completed their first round play today after heavy rain forced a delayed start Thursday. Austin completed seven holes and was 5 under before darkness drove the players from the course Thursday.

The 31-year-old from Tampa, Fla., carded 10 birdies and one bogey on the Warwick Hills Golf and Country Club layout. His 63 tied six other golfers — most recently Scott Hoch in 1991 — for the tournament's best score.

Payne Stewart, Bruce Vaughan and J.L. Lewis all shot 7-under 65 and shared second place with Thursday's clubhouse leader, Paul Goydos. Four golfers, including today's finishers Russ Cochran and Justin Leonard, were three shots back at 6 under.

Thursday's six-hour rain delay turned the golfers' locker room into a giddy playpen for millionaires.

Play had begun at 7:30 a.m. off both the first and 10th tees. But thunderstorms in the area, about 60 miles north of Detroit, halted play after just 45 minutes. It didn't get started again until 2 p.m.

"There was a lot of silly stuff going on in that locker room during the long wait," said Jeff Sluman, who shot a 66 Thursday. "It was pretty zany."

McCall's Classic

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. — Newcomer Catrin Nilsmark and veteran Allison Finney each shot 5-under-par 67s on to share the first-round lead of the rain-delayed LPGA McCall's Classic.

Nilsmark, from Sweden, and Finney took advantage of morning tee times, and four players who shot 68s also got off the course before the wind picked up in the afternoon.

After a late afternoon thunderstorm delayed play for 1 hour, 40 minutes, three finished at 68, and Lauri Brower also was at 4-under with three holes left when darkness halted play.

Those still on the course will finish their round Saturday morning before the start of the second round.

VFW Seniors

BELTON, Mo. — Buddy Allin, a Bronze Star winner during service in Vietnam, shot a 7-under-par 63 and took the early lead in the first PGA tournament ever sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Allin, a former artillery officer and seniors tour rookie had seven birdies and 11 pars on the rain-soaked Loch Lloyd course and led Jay Sigel by two strokes after the first round of the VFW Senior Championship, formerly known as the Southwestern Bell Classic.

Jaguars top Miami for first win

The Associated Press

■ NFL Preseason

MIAMI — Ryan Christopherson scored three touchdowns and Scott Sisson kicked a 32-yard field goal with one second left Friday night as Jacksonville beat the Miami Dolphins 24-21 in an NFL exhibition, the expansion Jaguars' first victory.

The 237-pound Christopherson, a fifth-round draft choice out of Wyoming, scored on a 1-yard run in the second quarter, a 2-yarder in the third to tie it 14-14 and another 1-yarder in the fourth to make it 21-21.

Jacksonville (1-1) drove 65 yards after forcing a Miami punt with about 5 minutes to play. Mark Brunell quarterbacked the drive, which was highlighted by his pass of 22 yards to Greg Shorp to the Miami 46 and a 14-yarder to Charles Davenport to the 30.

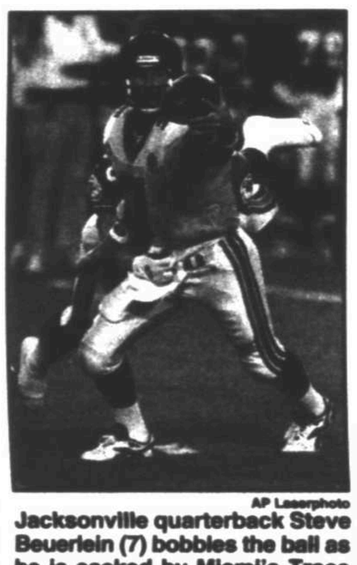

Miami, losing its exhibition opener, beefed up its defensive front in the offseason with the addition of Steve Emtman and Trace Armstrong, who both made big defensive plays early. But the Jaguars, led by James Stewart's 79 yards, rushed for 230 yards, most coming after the first period when Miami reserves took over.

In the third quarter, Stewart sprinted for 56 yards to the Miami 7, setting up Christopherson's TD run that made it 14-14.

Steelers 31, Bills 10

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — The Pittsburgh Steelers' defense did not appear to have lost much since last season. Just ask Buffalo Bills rookie quarterback Todd Collins.

Pittsburgh's blitz, orchestrated this year by new defensive coordinator Dick LeBeau, sacked Collins twice, forced two interceptions and scored a touchdown in a victory over the Bills.

AP Laserphoto

Jacksonville quarterback Steve Beuerlein (7) bobbles the ball as he is sacked by Miami's Trace Armstrong Friday in Miami.

So far, little has changed from the No. 1 unit in the AFC last season.

Pittsburgh's first touchdown came on an interception by Kevin Greene, and the second after a sack and a punt from deep in Buffalo's zone. The Steelers had a 24-3 lead when Jim Miller, who was eight of 16 for 113 yards, threw a 32-yard TD pass to Charles Johnson.

Pittsburgh and Buffalo accomplished most of what they wanted, even though both teams were sloppy. The Steelers played all four of their quarterbacks, and the Bills had a chance to see their rookies.

Lions 30, Patriots 17

FOXBORO, Mass. — Finding a returner to replace Mel Gray could be easier than the Detroit Lions thought.

Johnnie Morton returned a punt 77 yards to set up the go-ahead touchdown and lead the Lions to an exhibition victory over the New England Patriots.

Gray, who signed with Houston as a free agent, returned three kickoffs for touchdowns last year en route to his fourth Pro Bowl. Morton, who's bidding to replace him, had a 93-yard kickoff return TD of his own in 1994.

Morton didn't quite make it into the end zone this time — he was forced out by Ty Law at the 1 — but it didn't slow the Lions down much. On the only play of the drive, Scott Mitchell hit David Sloan to make it 17-10 with 4:28 left in the first half.

Bengals 34, Colts 21

INDIANAPOLIS — Ki-Jana Carter isn't the Cincinnati Bengals' only rookie running back worth noticing.

Jason Burns, playing much of the second half, ran for 52 yards and scored a third-quarter touchdown as the Bengals beat the Indianapolis Colts in their NFL preseason opener.

Carter, the No. 1 pick in this year's draft, did not play because of a strained Achilles tendon. The Bengals shuffled their backfield throughout the game but did not take control until early in the third period when Burns entered the game.

Bears 18, Panthers 15

CHICAGO — Kevin Butler kicked a 51-yard field goal with 1:52 left and the Chicago Bears rallied behind third-string quarterback Shane Matthews to beat the expansion Carolina Panthers.

The game was the Bears' exhibition opener. Carolina beat fellow newcomer Jacksonville last week in its first game.

After Carolina's John Kasay kicked his fifth field goal, a 44-yarder with 7:49 left, the Panthers had a 15-7 lead.

Matthews then led the Bears on a eight-play, 79-yard drive, hitting Anthony Johnson for a 13-yard touchdown pass.

Younger swimmers knock off stars

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Janet Evans was teary-eyed, Mel Stewart got mad and Crissy Ahmann-Leighton looked stunned after losing to younger swimmers in the Phillips 66 National Championships.

It was a bad week for the sport's biggest names, leading many of them to reassess their training less than a year before the Atlanta Olympics.

With the exception of two American records, times were slow as most swimmers trained through the meet to prepare for the Pan Pacific Championships beginning Thursday in Atlanta.

"As a coach, you always think it's going to be a little faster," said Richard Quick, head coach for the U.S. women's 1996 Olympic team.

"But when you look at it and truly think a lot of people are on a two-year cycle, then you can understand why it's not quite as fast as it might be under different circumstances."

Stewart admitted he was tired and made mistakes in Pasadena, but believes he'll have a better idea of where he stands after the Pan Pacific.

"My 100 and 200 (butterfly performances) are off. I'm upset about losing, but I'm really curious about what's going to happen with seven more days' rest," he said. "I felt awful this week. I was fighting for my life."

Stewart, 26, continues to tinker with his technique in the 100, where he swims nearly half the race underwater using a dolphin kick. He was first to the wall at 50 meters, then faded to third.

"You're going to see some people who are using this kick do really well. It's the future of fly," he said. "I felt tired. The plan was to rest enough to win here. The plan went awry."

Evans decided not to swim in the Pan Pacific meet after losing the 1,500 freestyle Friday night. A case of inflamed tonsils affecting her breathing and she will have surgery next week.

A badly beaten fourth in the 800-meter freestyle, Evans came back strong to finish second in the 400 free and faded to fifth in the 1,500. At 23, she remains the world record-holder in those events, yet trailed in losing each race to 15-year-old Brooke Bennett.

Former Redskin gets four-year prison sentence

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Washington Redskins defensive lineman Dexter Manley pleaded guilty Friday to two counts of cocaine possession and was sentenced to four years in prison.

As a part of a plea bargain, two other drug possession charges pending against Manley were dropped.

Manley, 37, admitted to possessing a controlled substance last Nov. 13 and on July 26.

This latest drug arrest was the fourth in eight months for Manley, who had just completed a four-month drug treatment program at a Houston hospital.

Manley's lawyer, Paula Asher, said the plea bargain was her client's choice.

"He felt the most comfortable with it because it would allow him the opportunity to continue his treatment while being incarcerated and upon being released from jail, then this would be behind him," Asher said.

Manley remained at the Harris County Jail Friday night awaiting transfer to a prison. The former player spent last December at the Betty Ford Center.

JOE: New QB could attract Texan fans

(From 1C)

experience.

Archer, 33, is expected to be out another week. Jim Kemp, 24, son of former Housing Secretary Jack Kemp, is Saturday's starter.

It's possible Ferguson will play, Stephenson said.

"I wouldn't hesitate to put Joe in the ballgame if things aren't going well," Stephenson said. "That can happen. Certainly he's there in case of injury and in case he's needed."

The Texans are coming off a big week that included a 36-15 victory over the Saskatchewan Roughriders. San Antonio running back Mike Saunders, who rushed for 170 yards and one touchdown, was named CFL offensive player of the week and Texans guard Chuck Esty was named the week's top lineman.

Although Stephenson said Ferguson was signed because of his ability and his familiarity with the Texans' offense, he didn't brush off Ferguson's potential for attracting more fans.

"Certainly there should be tremendous interest, I would think, in a quarterback of Joe Ferguson's ability, his experience, his tenure in the professional football league," Stephenson said.

The Texans, playing their inaugural season in San Antonio, have averaged about 16,000 per game at the 65,000-seat Alamodome.

The Texans will offer fans another big attraction next week when 1984 Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie and the Calgary Stampeders come to town.

This week, though, the attention centers around Ferguson, who, along with his family, is still trying to get used to the idea of his playing again.

"My wife thinks I'm a little crazy, my daughter thinks I'm real crazy," Ferguson said. "My son (age 9) doesn't care — he's too young. But they've supported me. My wife said, 'Hey, go do it. If you can do it, fine. If you can't, you come home, so what?' "

Ferguson intends to make the most of the opportunity.

"Hopefully it'll work out," he said. "However long I'm here, I'm going to try and enjoy it."

CITY: Branum seeking first city title

(From 1C)

For Branum, the back nine was welcome after shooting two-over on the front.

"I had four birdies on the back side and that pulled me back into it," said Branum, who played for the University of Texas and later turned pro to play on several mini-tours before retaining his amateur status about 10 years ago.

Branum is still seeking a first city championship.

"But I missed a 10-footer on No. 18 and I could have finished with a 67," he said.

Moses, who finished with five birdies, said his round was pretty even.

"I had three birdies on the front nine and two on the back. But I missed a two-foot birdie putt on No. 1 and there were about five times I could have birdied but didn't," he said.

DALLAS: Switzer to take look at special teams

(From 1D)

Aikman and Smith are expected to play in the first quarter only before calling on Wade Wilson and Jason Garrett at quarterback and Williams at running back.

"We'll let them go about like they did last week," said Dallas coach Barry Switzer. "We want to take a good look at our special teams in this game. They need a lot of work.

"The game will probably be a little emotional because these guys have been going at us all week. We had some good practices with the Raiders. I know they are very pleased with the way things went, and it's something they say they'd like to do every year."

Said White: "It was good work going against some different colored jersies. We'll try to get a lot of players into the game on Saturday night. We've got a lot of guys to look at. Sure, I'd like to win my first one, but the basic reason for these games is to get work for the players and see them under game conditions."

The Raiders are 10-4 against Dallas in preseason games, including a 27-19 victory last year in Texas Stadium.

AUTOMOTIVE TODAY & Classified

It starts out as an occasional drip. Then you notice the small greenish puddle under your car every morning. Even a minor leak in your engine's coolant system may be enough to cause serious mechanical problems.

The cooling system's task is to dissipate the heat created within your engine during the normal course of events. A system that's not operating up to snuff may not be able to keep up with the engine's heat production. The result can be an overheated engine. In the case of many modern engines with aluminum cylinder heads, that can be a disastrous ending, leading to warped cylinder heads or other costly mechanical problems.

To help ensure that you don't end up sitting by the side of the road watching a geyser of steam billowing from under your car's hood and risking serious engine damage, inspect the cooling system now and repeat the inspection three or four times a year.

The inspection should include all of the system's hoses, clamps and connections, as well as its major components, like the radiator and water pump. In fact, regardless of condition, it's good maintenance practice to replace all the hoses, clamps and the radiator cap every two to three years.

Inspect the cooling system when the engine is off and cooled. Run your hand along the length of each hose. Check the hoses for wetness that would indicate a leak, check each section as well for mushy sections, cuts, slits or cracks. Firmly squeeze each hose making certain it has not become brittle. Replace any suspect hoses.

Pay extra attention to the areas around the hose clamps. Be sure that each clamp is snug without cutting into the hose. Also carefully check the part of the engine that the hose is attached to—look for signs of corrosion, rust, coolant stains and even small puddles.

Make certain that you inspect all the hoses: the upper radiator hose runs from the top of the radiator to the thermostat hosing atop the engine; the lower radiator hose attaches the water pump to the bottom of the radiator; the heater hoses run from the firewall to the water pump and to the cylinder head.

You should also inspect the water pump, if it's accessible. Not all water pumps are readily accessible. However, all water pumps do have a small hole designed to let leaking coolant drip outside the pump rather than leak into the engine. If you can reach your vehicle's water pump, you may be able to feel coolant at the hole if the pump is leaking. A leaking water pump must be replaced.

Also inspect the radiator. Check its fins—on both sides—for signs of rust, stains or wetness. A leaking radiator must be repaired or replaced. As you inspect the radiator, use a soft-bristle brush and some soapy water to wash bugs and debris from the fins.

Check the radiator cap. It' s rubber seals and the spring on its pressure-relief plunger must be intact. Don't gamble on a questionable radiator cap; replace it with one of the proper pressure rating.

To help you spot trouble between system inspections, check the coolant level weekly. On most modern vehicles, this is easily done by glancing at the translucent plastic coolant-recovery reservoir. This plastic tank catches the coolant that boils out of the radiator and resupplies the radiator with coolant as the radiator needs it.

Check the coolant level against the reservoirs markings. If the system is low, top it up with a mixture that's half antifreeze/coolant and half water. If your car or truck doesn't have a reservoir, check the coolant level by opening the radiator cap and looking inside the radiator. Remember, only open the radiator cap on a cool engine. If the top of the radiator is hot to the touch, you can get seriously scalded if you loosen the radiator cap!

Open the cap by twisting it counter clockwise and pushing down on it as you twist. If the cap is in the middle of the top of the radiator, the coolant should be right up to the bottom (about 1/2-inch) of the radiator's fill neck. If the radiator cap is at one side of the radiator, the coolant should be about two inches below the bottom of the fill neck. Add enough antifreeze/water mix to bring it up to where it should be.

New Nissan is Sentra spin off

By Bob Plunkett
Special to the Reporter-Telegram

Picture this Texas test site at the 'burbs beyond Dallas on a drizzly day in a flat and empty parking lot with time to play in Nissan's latest sporty coupe creation.

With so much slick asphalt stretched in all directions, and not a bump nor divot or fender to block my forward progress, what else could a driver do but practice racy take-offs, power slides and snap-shut hand-brake turns?

After all, the argument went, you need to find this little coupe's limits, see where it balks, learn how it zips or where it slides and swirls, as we dance together across that wet stage of blacktop.

Nissan's new coupe, a 200SX in sporty SE-R trim with the bigger engine, 15-inch rubber rollers and tight stick shifter, leaped into action.

Tires protested my take-off, as the rpm needle zipped toward its red mark. Nice, smooth acceleration, despite the pavement's lack of grip on this rainy day. Shift quickly up one gear, then, with a lip of the asphalt approaching, it's time to test the liveliness of rack and pinion steering with a hard cut that locked both front wheels.

Reliable power, pumped forcefully to forward wheels as they broke free of traction, produced a wild — but still vaguely controllable on the wet — power slide.

(Kids: Don't try this on Mom's supermarket lot.)

Another straight shot across the blacktop to center stage, where a combination of brake jamming and my daring yank of the hand brake's lever sent that SX twirling in twin pirouettes, artfully spinning like a mechanized top.

This was a balanced spin, I noted, with the weight distributed nicely front to rear, and it concluded quite gracefully with only slight inertial adjustments of suspension settings to that mass of stylized metal.

Nice work, 200SX — and thanks for all that fun.

This newest Nissan, flowing from a Tennessee plant, spins off in 2-door fastback coupe fashion from the reincarnated Sentra. It's billed as "the affordable sports car," although with a surprisingly spacious rear seat it's hard to call this cute little coupe a genuine sports car.

The name, borrowed from previous Nissan models NX1600 and NX2000, sounds sporty in its own right, though, and if you select the aggressive SE-R top trim level with boosted horsepower, bigger tires and firmer suspension tweaks, you can achieve some assertive performance characteristics of a sports car, like I managed on that bare Texas stretch of slippery asphalt.

Market packaging of 200SX — in colorful TV spots blasting Batman music with cartoonish lettering popping across the screen like POW! ZOOM! and WOW! — obviously aims at the twentysomething set, those up-and-coming young men and women seeking sporty expression of their alter ego but who must nevertheless remain faithful to budget constraints.

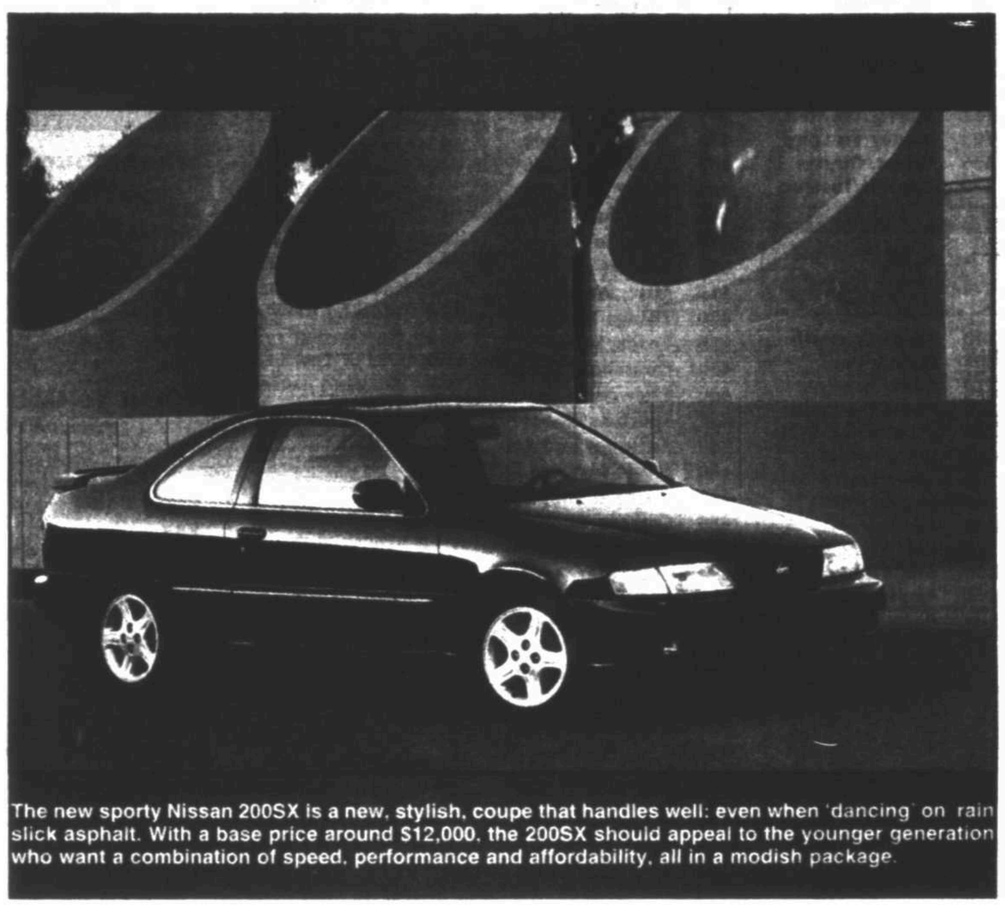

With its subcompact dimensions, 4-cylinder horsepower and domestic production facility, Nissan addresses the budget issue by bringing 200SX to market with highly attractive sticker figures.

The base 200SX — with front bucket seats, more than adequate power, plus complete instrumentation and favored comfort features like power remote-controlled exterior mirrors — lists for $11,999. Pile on a package of popular equipment including air conditioning, and the tag runs to only $13,369.

A second tier, labeled 200SX SE, comes with the same equipment, plus 14-inch wheels and tires, sport bucket seats, power windows and door locks, a split-folding rear seatback, along with 4-speaker stereo sound package of AM-FM radio and cassette tape deck. It adds up to $14,269.

My choice, 200SX SE-R, stocks the bigger engine and serious sport accouterment like 15-inch rollers, 4-wheel disc brakes, limited-slip differential, leather-wrapped steering wheel and shift knob, remote keyless entry and security device, plus handsome side sill extensions and tough rear spoiler — for $15,269.

The base 200SX and SE editions tote Nissan's compact 4-in-line engine lifted from new Sentra. Displacing 1.6 liters and rigged with four valves in each cylinder and dual cams on top, it's a sophisticated piece of machinery recently enhanced through microfinishing crankshaft journals, boosting compression ratios and recalibrating the variable timing control system.

The new sporty Nissan 200SX is a new, stylish, coupe that handles well: even when 'dancing' on rain slick asphalt. With a base price around $12,000, the 200SX should appeal to the younger generation who want a combination of speed, performance and affordability, all in a modish package.

Output increases by 5 horsepower to 115 as a result of these modifications, and fuel economy figures bump forward by as much as 2 mpg — up to 40 mpg for highway cruising with the standard 5-speed transmission.

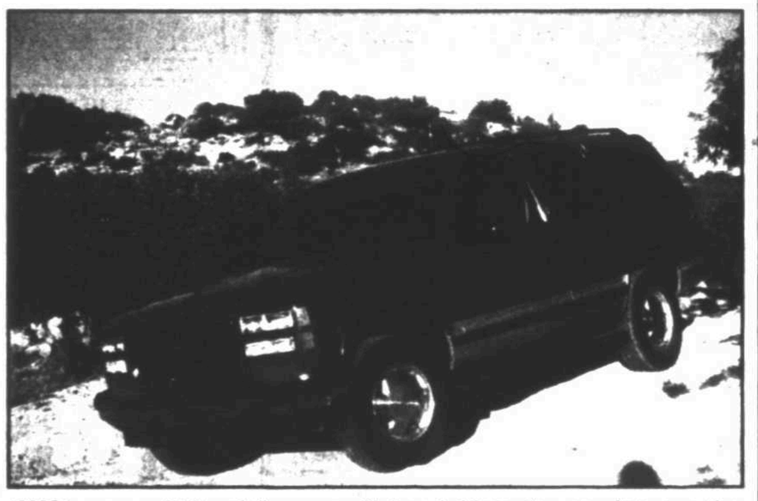

The SE-R receives even more go-power.

Its 2.0-liter four, also with multi-valve design and dual overhead cam configuration, punches out 140 hp.

Even when spinning on the parking lot, Nissan's new coupe appears slippery smooth and sensuous in style with its aerodynamic front fascias and broad sloping hood, aggressive B pillar cant and expressive slope to the rear decklid.

The 200SX sold me rather quickly on that Texas parking lot, but I'm a soft touch for such attributes as sporty exterior styling, assertive ride and drive qualities, spunky acceleration — and affordable price tags.

Yukon feels right

GMC's new, middle of the range Yukon bridges the gap between the Jimmy and the enormous Suburban. Powered by a 5.7 V-8 it doesn't sacrifice power despite its smaller frame.

General Motors has built a cure for the Goldilocks syndrome. Previous GM sport-utility owners chose either the compact Jimmy or the king-size Suburban; the choice being big comfort or small truck sporty drive.

For 1995, here's something that feels just right. GMC introduces a middle child into its family of sport utility vehicles: the Yukon 4-Door.

The Yukon is more than a foot and a half smaller than the Suburban, slicing off fourteen inches of wheel base and seven inches of rear overhang. Yet it still comes with four doors and the powerful 5.7 liter V-8 or optional 6.5 liter turbo-diesel. This puts the Yukon, and its twin, Chevrolet Tahoe, in a whole new category of full-size sport utilities.

These vehicles come with the front styling and car-like interior of the redesigned C/K truck series. GM has done a complete make over of the instrument panel with readable dials, back lit switches, well-placed controls, and a driver-side airbag. An airbag for the passenger side isn't due until 1997.

Front seating is offered as either bucket seats or a 60/40 bench, giving the option of fiveor six-person seating. In the model we drove, the high-back bucket seats with lumbar support gave the illusion of a luxury sedan.

A glance over the shoulder reveals room rivaling a full-size van. The Yukon offers a split-bench rear seat that comfortably seats three. Although legroom is more cramped than in the Suburban, even tall adults should find it adequate. The spare tire is slung beneath the chassis for more cargo room. The rear bench folds flat to open up almost 123 cubic feet of storage. That's about half again more room than the top-selling compact SUVs.

Although the interior styling is car-like, the ride is all truck. An independent front suspension and a two-stage leaf spring rear suspension with shock absorbers and jounce bumpers create a surprisingly comfortable ride. But over 5,100 pounds of weight is evident in the heavy body lean when cornering, and owners stepping up from a compact SUV will become instantly aware of all that extra vehicle when braking. A four-wheel anti-lock brake system provides secure stopping control.

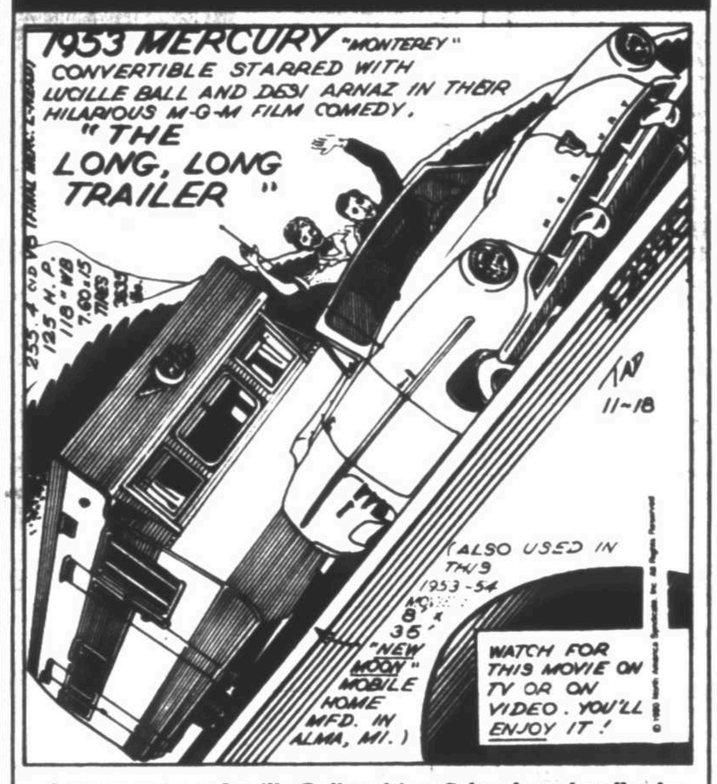

The Yukon is available in both two-wheel and four-wheel drive. To get the most out of this truck's capability, FWD should be the preferred choice by most buyers. The standard Insta-Trac system is a pleasure with an easy flip of the lever to shift in and out of FWD at any speed.

Off-road, the Yukon displayed plenty of power straddling rocks and climbing upgrades. As expected, it was less nimble than compact sport utility vehicles. Maneuvering along well-rutted trails between tight trees and boulders required extra vigilance. But the Yukon will take off-roaders most anywhere, and rated at more than 1,600 pounds of payload and 6,500 pounds of towing capacity, the Yukon carries plenty with it.

Other standard niceties make the Yukon competitive with luxury SUVs, including: deep-tinted glass, rearview mirror with electronic compass, cruise control, six built-in cup holders, rear heating ducts, and two extra power outlets. Options include leather upholstery, keyless entry, a CD player, and running boards. The Yukon is also available in the shorter two-door version in either 2WD or FWD.

With a base price of $28,585, GM has priced the four-door Yukon in range with its popular but smaller competitors. For those seeking a sport utility vehicle, and discovering everything either too-small or too-large, the new 1995 GMC Yukon may be the just-right choice.

1953 Mercury

In 1953, actress Lucille Ball and her Cuban-born bandleader husband, Desi Arnaz, co-starred in a new movie. Married in real life since 1940, Lucy and Desi were already famous from long careers in—respectively —movies and Latin-American dance music. And in the 1950s, Lucy and Desi were particularly famous for their wildly popular "I Love Lucy" TV show, which began in '51 and would still be on re-runs nearly 40 years later.

Their 1953 movie was "The Long, Long Trailer." Lucy and Desi play a married couple who buy a 35-foot-long New Moon house trailer, and attempt to haul it cross-country with their new Mercury convertible. Trailers that long were intended for semi-permanent settling in mobile home parks, and not for continued traveling!

Lucy and Desi ran into one frustrating problem after another, hauling the behemoth behind their car, up and down grades as steep as what you see in this illustration. (It was a job for a heavy truck, not a car.)

The pleasant and appropriate theme song of the movie was an oldie from 1926: "(I'm just) Breezin' Along With the Breeze."

The '53 Mercury was changed only slightly from the totally restyled '52 model, but there were a few visible differences (new grille, etc). And 1953 was the final year that Fords and Mercurys used the old-style L-head V4s. In 1954, both would switch to overhead-valve V-8 engines.

The popularity of New Moon trailers was greatly enhanced by the movie. New Moon's manufacturer (formerly Redman, but changed to New Moon in '53 to match the brand name) proudly advertised that their trailer was selected for the movie over U200 others." The 1952 to 1955 New Moons had the distinctive frontend styling you see here, and were instantly recognizable, even from a distance. Many of these are still found in older trailer and mobile home parks across the U.S.A.!

Lucy and Desi weren't always on the road in the film—they did visit a couple of nice trailer parks. The casual, neighborly lifestyle and the low cost of mobile-home living appealed to many who saw this movie when it made the rounds of the theaters in early '54.
