Pipeline threatened as skipper charged

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Authorities issued an arrest warrant for the tanker captain suspected of drinking before his ship ran aground, causing a 1,000-square-mile oil slick that expanded Saturday under shifting wind and currents.

And Alaska's governor threatened to close the Trans-Alaska Pipeline if the oil industry fails to protect against future spills.

The bulk of the 10.1-million-gallon slick began moving toward Cordova about 50 miles southeast of here, threatening the home waters of fishermen who have struggled to save endangered fish hatcheries.

About 800 miles of beach have been tainted so far in the biggest oil spill in the nation's history, officials said.

Gov. Steve Cowper said the state will require "absolute proof that equipment is in place" to combat future oil spills. "If it's not done, we're authorized to close the pipeline," he said.

■ Clean-up effort hampered by disorganization; Related stories — 6-7A

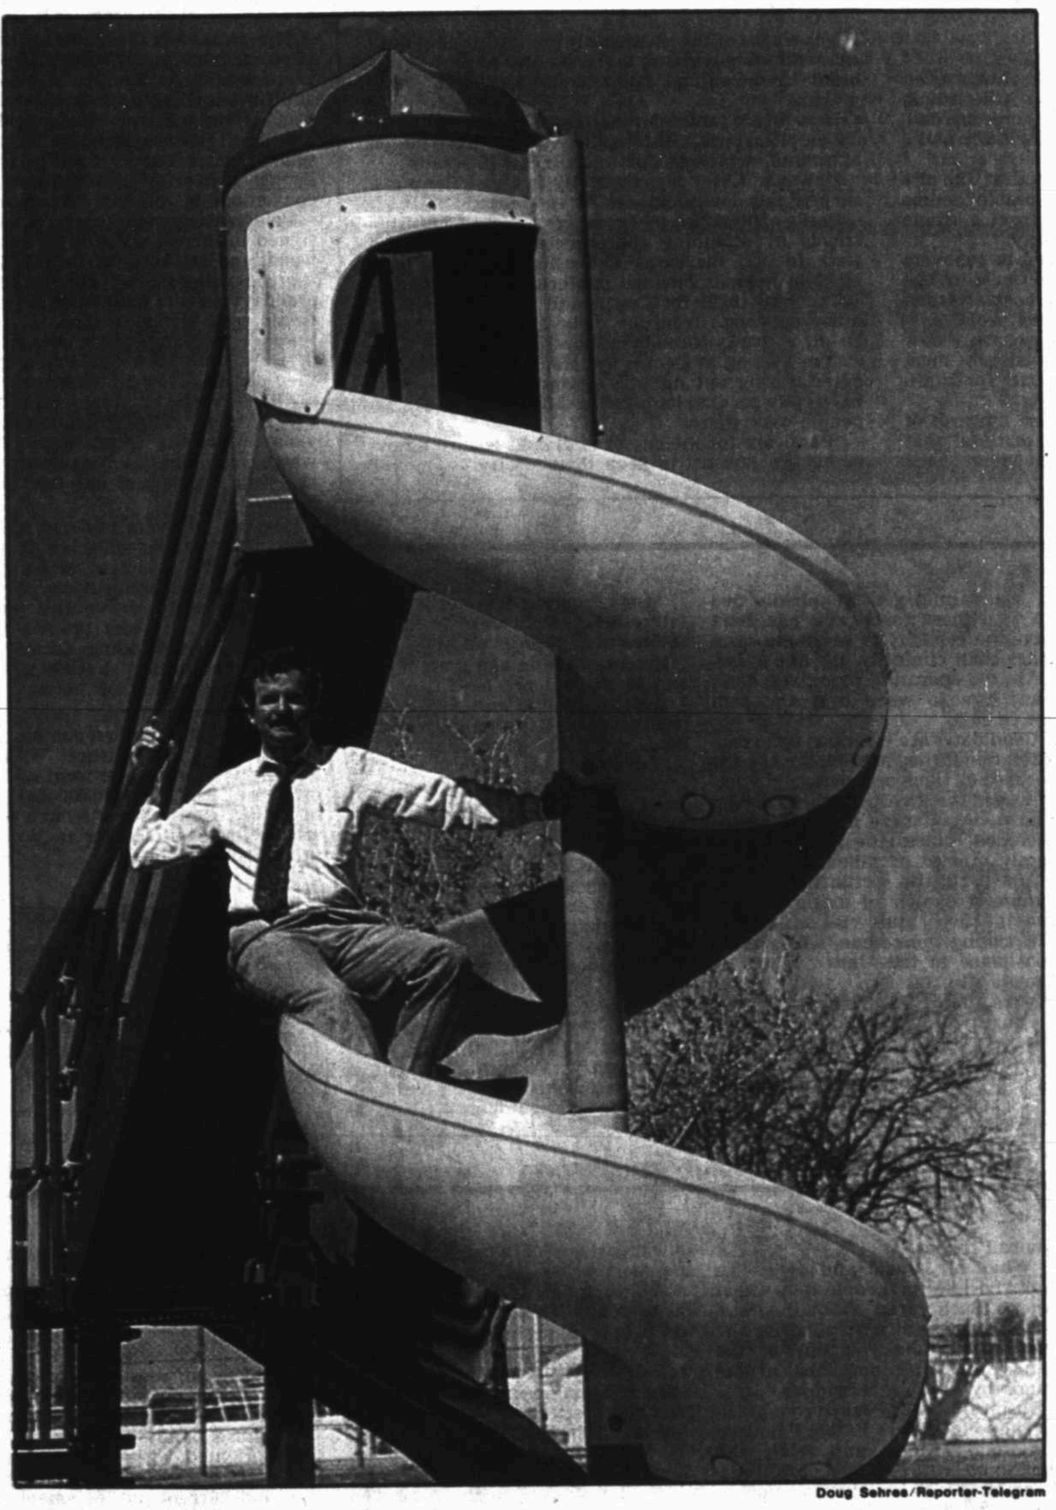

Some 85 percent of the state's $2 billion budget comes from the pipeline, and although the state has a $10 billion savings account, oil production on Alaska's North slope accounts for 25 percent of U.S. production.

Alaska Attorney General Doug Baily said Saturday that criminal charges were filed late Friday against Joseph Hazelwood, 42, captain of the tanker Exxon Valdez, which crashed into Bligh Reef in Prince William Sound on March 24.

Exxon fired Hazelwood on Thursday, the same day the National Transportation Safety Board revealed blood and urine tests taken about nine hours after the accident showed he had been under the influence of alcohol.

Charges filed in Valdez District Court accuse Hazelwood of operating a motorcraft while under the influence of alcohol, reckless endangerment and the negligent discharge of oil, all misdemeanors.

City of Midland Parks Superintendent Mike Casey takes pride in the 40 parks he oversees. The parks department is gearing up for another active season of play and fun.

Despite funding changes, parks remain 'priority'

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas pulled $36,500 in federal funds earmarked for tennis courts and other city park renovations and committed it to relocating Lamesa Road sewer lines at this week's council session.

The move didn't phase George Logan, the city's parks director. By virtue of a hefty grant that same day, Logan's department netted more than $200,000.

"I'm not upset a bit," Logan said last week. "We are here to serve the people, but serve them through priorities. Parks and recreation are high priorities in the city, but without waste water lines, we can't have people there."

City of Midland Parks Superintendent Mike Casey was allowed to spend $7,500 of his department's money making areas surrounding swingsets safer, thus reducing the city's potential liability should someone be injured during play.

Municipalities nationwide have been known to treat parks and recreation departments as a budgetary frill, Casey acknowledged. However, he and Logan concurred the majority of city officials for whom they work place high regard on the parks and recreation system.

"Parks are very important for the mental and physical health" of local residents, Casey explained. "They're giving kids things to do to keep them out of trouble.

"In times of economic downturn, it's a cheap way to bring families together."

On the boards currently is a new amusement haven, a 33-acre tract in northwest Midland temporarily named Bluebird Lane Park. Although Midlanders rejected the city's $4.2 million parks and recreation bond issue last fall, officials agreed to forge ahead with park plans using private monies.

The Abell-Hanger Foundation agreed this month to match any funds the city raises up to $250,000. Sporting organizations are expected to help raise funds for the new park.

Midland already has spent $110,000 to clear the land and is now installing an irrigation system and fencing and planting grass, Casey said.

George W. Bush, partners take sporting chance on Rangers

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

George W. Bush hopes to bring the Dallas-Fort Worth area something its fans haven't seen in 18 summers: A winning professional baseball team.

For almost two decades, the Rangers have started each season with a bang, only to fade without a whimper as the dog days of August invaded Arlington.

The Rangers were the most active baseball team in the off-season, acquiring several proven players to bolster their offense and defense.

The busy winter months built to a climax last month when a trio of businessmen, led by Bush, purchased Texas' American League team from beleaguered Fort Worth oilman Eddie Chiles.

Nolan Ryan, the former Houston fastballer whom the Rangers signed to a $1 million contract early this year, is now one of two former Astro fans to bring new hope to the Rangers.

Bush, a former Midlander and son of President George Bush, joined with fellow businessmen Edward W. "Rusty" Rose and Richard Rainwater to purchase the club.

"When all is said and done, I'd like for people to say that George Bush cared about the fans. You're successful in baseball by the number of fans you put in the stands, and you put fans in the stands by building a winner."

Despite additional interest, local station won't air Ranger games

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Despite likely added local interest in the Texas Rangers, the program manager of Midland's local independent station said this weekend that his station has no plans to broadcast any additional Ranger games this season.

Former Midlander George W. Bush became majority owner of the American League franchise last month, but KPEJ-TV program manager Joe Sugg said Bush's purchase would not have an immediate effect on the station's Ranger programming.

After 85 years, commission still honoring heroes

By TARA BRADLEY-STECK

PITTSBURGH (AP) — When petite Gail Mazzetti Hooks spotted two thugs beating a Houston police officer and going for his gun, she attacked with uncharacteristic fury — scratching, kicking and punching — until the two men fled.

"I thought they were going to kill him," said Ms. Hooks, a waitress who had been watching the events from inside a restaurant. "He had the prettiest face, but he was purple. ... I kept thinking, 'That could be my brother.'"

Ms. Hooks ran after one of the bad guys until reality caught up with heroism on that warm, humid evening of April 20, 1986. In a back alley, alone and shaking, she abandoned the chase, threw up in the bushes and hurried home to bed.

Nevertheless, the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission proclaimed her a hero, and a forever-grateful officer James Whitley sent flowers and his own thank yous.

Ms. Hooks is one of 7,313 men, women and children honored by the commission since its founding in 1904 by industrialist Andrew Carnegie, who was moved by the bravery displayed following a mine explosion near Pittsburgh.

Carnegie heroes receive $2,500 and a bronze medal on which is inscribed the New Testament verse: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

For the self-effacing Ms. Hooks, who moved from Texas shortly after the fracas because one of the attackers remained at large, the "term" hero is one she is uncomfortable with.

"That was the way I was brought up. If you saw someone who needed help, you just helped them," said Ms. Hooks, now 31 and living in Charlotte, N.C. "You don't think about it, you just do it."

To Whitley, however, Ms. Hooks and another waitress who came to his rescue deserve the title.

"I couldn't believe they tried to help me like that when they could have easily gotten killed or hurt," recalled Whitley, 28, who is still on the police force.

"I probably wouldn't be here today if not for them. Something had to occur or else I probably would have died."

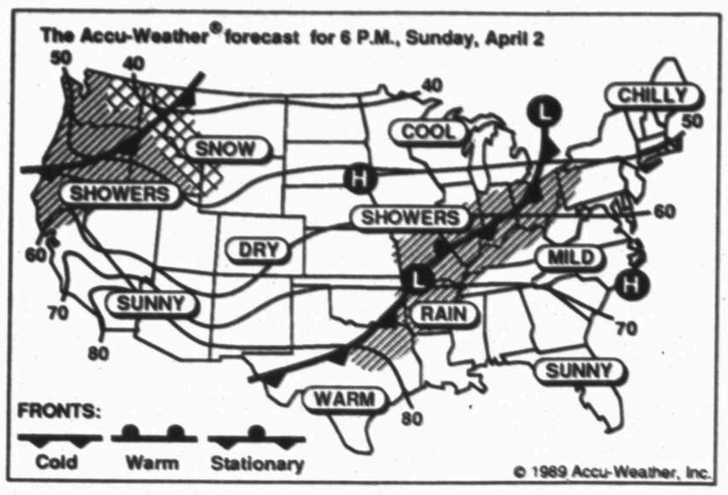

In establishing the fund, which he endowed with $5 million, Carnegie said he wasn't trying to "create heroism ... knowing well that heroic action is impulsive."

"We live in a heroic age," Carnegie wrote. "Not seldom are we thrilled by deeds of heroism where men or women are injured or lose their lives in attempting to preserve or rescue their fellows; such the heroes of civilization. The heroes of barbarism maimed or killed theirs."

WEATHER SUMMARY

High near 90 degrees anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in near 90 and 10 to 20 mph winds out of the west, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Sunday night and Monday will be fair with lows in the mid-40s followed by afternoon highs in the mid-80s, NWS said.

Saturday's high was 87 degrees after an overnight low of 41.

STATE

Southerly winds gusting up to 40 mph continued sweeping across Texas for a second day Saturday. Lake wind advisories remained in effect for much of the state.

Winds mostly stayed in the 25 mph to 30 mph range, but gusted up to 40 mph throughout the day.

A veil of high clouds drifted across the Panhandle, where winds were northerly, but sunny skies prevailed elsewhere.

An increase of moisture from the gulf produced a few scattered low clouds along the coast and Southeast Texas.

Afternoon temperatures were mostly in the 70s and 80s across Texas. Dalhart had the state's lowest high reading at 70 degrees. Sherman and Beaumont were Texas' hottest areas with an afternoon reading of 92 degrees.

The National Weather Service predicted a slight chance of showers or thunderstorms Sunday morning in the northwest part of the state.

The rest of Texas should see continued warm temperatures with gusting winds, the NWS said.

Forecasters said highs should be in the 70s and 80s in most areas, with readings in the 90s in the Big Bend.

NATION

As much as a foot of fresh snow fell on the Colorado Rockies on Saturday, and about six inches fell in parts of New York state and Vermont before an Eastern storm began to fizzle.

A cold front moved across the upper Mississippi Valley and the central Plains, producing rain from Iowa into western Wisconsin. Wet snow fell in central and northern Minnesota.

Light snow tapered off across portions of the central Appalachians and northern New England after dumping a half foot of snow across the Adirondacks and the St. Lawrence River valley of New York state and Vermont.

Snowfall totals early Saturday included 6 inches at Massena and Rochester, NY., 5 inches at Buffalo, N.Y., and 3 inches at St. Albans, Vt.

Heavy snow fell over the northern and central mountains of Colorado, where overnight accumulations included 12½ inches at Vail and 11⅛ inches at the Beaver Creek ski area.

Snow and strong winds made driving difficult over mountain passes. An advisory for snow and blowing snow was posted for the northern and central mountains of Colorado.

In the far West, a cold front produced rain over the Pacific Northwest. Snow advisories were posted for the Cascades of Washington state and northern Oregon.

Another cold front moving across Southern California brought gusty winds to the Mojave Desert.

Business coverage cited by editors

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas newspapers' 1988 coverage of business news, the Delta 1141 plane crash, immigration and politics was cited Saturday by the Texas Associated Press Managing Editors.

The APME, holding its 60th annual convention, named Fort Worth Star-Telegram business writer Kirk Spitzer as winner of its Jack Douglas Sweepstakes Award for his reporting on a secret military fighter aircraft project of General Dynamics and the government of Taiwan. Photographer Barron Ludlum of the Denton Record-Chronicle won the sweepstakes award for a series on the life of a Mexican immigrant family in North Texas.

The Star-Telegram, The Dallas Morning News and the Dallas Times Herald were honored for coverage of the Delta 1141 crash at Dallas-Fort Worth airport in August.

■ Gov. Bill Clements addresses gathering — 4A

The Denton Record-Chronicle also won a community service award for investigative reporting that led to the conviction of Denton County Sheriff Randy Kaisner on an election campaign bribery charge.

The AMPE also cited the Corpus Christi Caller-Times' coverage of a gang rape in San Diego, the Del Rio News-Herald's coverage of a tornado spawned by Hurricane Gilbert, and The Brazosport Facts' coverage of the mentally retarded. Also honored for news reporting were the Mount Pleasant Daily Tribune, the Paris News and the El Paso Times.

Other community service awards went to the Dallas Times Herald for reporting on mental illness, to the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal for coverage of rural health care, and to the Seguin Gazette-Enterprise for a special project on the city's 150th anniversary.

Cited for photojournalism were David Woo of The Dallas Morning News for coverage of Israel's 40th anniversary; Ceasar Maragni of The Odessa American for a series on hunger, and David Gottschalk of the McKinney Courier-Gazette for coverage of Hurricane Gilbert. Gottschalk also won a first-place photo award for news photography. Steven D. Reece of the Palestine Herald-Press won three first-place awards for photography.

Wendy E. Lane, Lubbock correspondent and sports writer who helped cover the summer Olympics in Seoul, was named Texas Associated Press staffer of the year.

The University of Texas-Arlington Shorthorn was honored as the state's best university newspaper.

Also honored for business coverage were the El Paso Times, the Denton Record-Chronicle and the Plainview Daily Herald.

The Dallas Morning News, the Corpus Christi Caller-Times, the Greenville Herald Banner and the Borger News-Herald won awards for sports reporting.

The Beaumont Enterprise won two first-place photography awards.

The Dallas Morning News and the Pampa News each won two first-place feature writing awards, and the Borger News-Herald won two first-place awards for column writing.

The newspapers were honored at the conclusion of the Texas APME's annual convention, held this year in Houston at Inn on the Park.

PARKS

Once built, Bluebird Lane Park will contain seven T-ball fields, 12 soccer fields and four little league baseball diamonds. An additional four acres are dedicated to playgrounds, a .89-mile jogging track and a gazebo and picnic area.

Bluebird Lane will be the city's 41st park. The city also owns four public pools and two "usable" tennis courts. Others serve areas ranging from a single neighborhood to the entire community.

The city doesn't get federal funding to renovate parks unless "it's an emergency," Casey said. In the last several years, his department has been awarded a little more than $200,000 for various projects.

During the department's ongoing purchase of new play equipment and picnic tables, officials now must keep in mind liability and the potential for theft, Casey said.

Modular play equipment that can cost upwards of $6,000 per set is made of a plastic material that prevents dangers associated with sharp or hard edges. Parks officials currently are purchasing sand that will placed around the perimeter of play equipment to soften the fall a child may take while playing.

New picnic tables purchased are coated in a sturdy vinyl material. Historically, vandals have stolen aluminum table-tops for scrap metal proceeds.

However, Casey says for a city this size, there is a surprisingly low incidence of vandalism.

Parks officials keep abreast of the latest industry trends by attending conferences throughout the state. In 1991, the Texas Recreation and Parks Society will hold its biennial conference in Midland.

The real thrill for Logan and his counterparts, however, comes from the daily "conventions" that go on at parks throughout the city.

"I'm looking at Dennis the Menace Park," Logan noted gazing out his office window Friday afternoon. "My parking lot is full and there are easily 300 people over there.

"Parks are for the city of Midland's leisure enjoyment. We just try to keep them pretty."

HEROES

In 85 years, more than 63,000 people have been nominated for awards. Only 7,313, or about 11 percent, were chosen to receive them.

"We are up to our whatever in nominees," said commission spokesman Walter Rutkowski, whose office in downtown Pittsburgh is watched over by a somber portrait of Carnegie. "We give away as many awards as we have cases that meet our requirements."

Nominees are scrutinized by three investigators before they are voted on by the commission's 21-member executive committee.

Like "Dragnet's" Joe Friday, investigators want to know "just the facts."

'In a drowning case, we go for the water temperature, the distance of the swim, the current and the rescuer's swimming ability. We don't get into a person's psyche," said Rutkowski.

"You cannot get emotionally tied up with these cases. You just don't have the capacity to see these cases other than clinically. It's like a doctor in the operating room. You don't want him to weep over the pain you're in."

Candidates are excluded from consideration if they are obligated to act because of their occupation, such as lifeguard or firefighter. A person who saves a family member also is excluded, unless the rescuer is severely injured or killed.

Above all, the victim must be in imminent danger of losing his life, and the hero must risk his life in performing the rescue, which must take place in the United States or Canada.

More than 1,500 Carnegie heroes, or roughly 21 percent, died performing their rescues, the most common of which involve drownings or fires.

Surprisingly, perhaps, a candidate isn't excluded if he fails to save a person's life.

"It may sound crass, but we're not interested in the victim so much as the rescuer," Rutkowski said.

Heroes range in age from 8 to 80, and 91 percent are male.

Most are modest and hard-pressed to explain what prompted their actions, the investigators said.

"I don't think anyone can truthfully claim to understand why anyone stands by or gets involved," said Marlin Ross, a Carnegie investigator since 1983.

Carnegie hero Robert Jameson said the act of heroism is instinctual.

"If you don't react immediately, you're going to be overwhelmed by what happens. You'll just freeze," said Jameson, 36, of Roebling, N.J., who last April saved a woman from a knife-wielding attacker.

"It has nothing to do with bravery," said Andrew Mathieson, 60, of Pittsburgh, who was shot three times trying to save his secretary, Jane Celender, from a gunman on Feb. 19, 1986.

BUSH

With the completion of the transaction, Bush, a confessed follower of the Astros, is now the majority owner of the Rangers.

"I'm now a Ranger fan," Bush said in a telephone interview Friday. "I pull for the Astros in the National League and the Rangers in the American League. And I'll pull for the Rangers when they meet the Astros in the World Series."

Bush, who lived in Houston during the Astros' early years, said approval of the purchase by a majority of the club owners will not be a problem.

Bush said he can't recall the exact moment when he first wanted to own a sports franchise, but said it has always been a dream of his to own a baseball team.

"I don't care to own a basketball or football franchise," he said. "I guess there were two inspirations: my great uncle was one of the initial investors of the (1962) New York Mets, so I saw first hand how much he loved it. And, awhile back when John McMullen bought the Astros, the people of Houston sat on the sidelines and watched him move that team.

"(McMullen) showed me that if you want something you have to move and move quickly," which, Bush said, is what he did in his quest for the Rangers.

Bush indicated he would be hands-off type owner, but said he couldn't pattern himself after any existing baseball owner.

"When all is said and done," he said, "I'd like for people to say that George Bush cared about the fans. You're successful in baseball by the number of fans you put in the stands, and you put fans in the stands by building a winner."

Despite notable winter acquisitions like infielders Rafael Palmiero and Julio Franco, and Ryan, the sure-to-be future Hall of Famer, there always exists the question in Arlington of whether the Rangers will go through their annual late summer letdown.

"We'll have to deal with that at that time," Bush said. "You don't change your basic long-term philosophy regardless of what happens in the short term.

"We're basic business people," Bush added. "We will hire good baseball people to do the job." Bush added, though, that he, Rose and Rainwater were pleased with the current Ranger management, consisting of field manager Bobby Valentine, general manager Tom Grieve, assistant GM Sandy Johnson and club president Mike Stone.

The Rangers are in the American League West, considered by many baseball experts one of the two toughest divisions in the majors. Bush, though, is confident, and likes his team's chances at being competitive, despite having to contend with the heavyweights who rule the division.

"I think the Rangers are underdogs," he said. "You've got a team like Oakland (last year's AL champions), which strengthened their franchise in the off season; Kansas City has good pitching and Minnesota has great hitting. It's a tough division."

The Bush family has always been sports-oriented, with the president a former Yale University first baseman and current outdoorsman and horseshoe pitcher.

When telling his father about his purchase of the Rangers, the younger Bush said he told the president that "first base was already taken."

Having recently been mentioned as a candidate for the 1990 governor's race on the Republican ticket, Bush said his position as owner of the Rangers would only raise his already-high public profile.

But, he added, "I kept the business opportunity separate from the political aspect," in buying the team.

Bush offered no further hint regarding his decision to run for governor, saying only "I don't know. I haven't made up my mind yet."

The Rangers open the season Monday in Arlington against the Detroit Tigers. Former Dallas Cowboy coach Tom Landry will throw out the first pitch.

Landry's name, too, has been bandied about concerning a possible run for the governor's seat. When asked what he would do if pitted against the coaching legend in the republican primary, Bush said, "I'd punt."

RANGERS

"We have not contracted any deals with the Rangers to carry games," Sugg said. "We have scheduled a number of Houston Astros' games."

KPEJ (broadcast channel 24, Midland cable channel 14) is an affiliate of Fort Worth independent station KTVT, which is the Rangers' flagship station. Sugg said his station's relationship with KTVT is very good, and that the two stations have worked closely together on past sports broadcasts.

Sugg said the station will not carry any Rangers' games before June, adding it would be "sometime in May before we make any determination" on future Ranger telecasts.

Sugg said KPEJ has had success with the Astros because "Texas likes a winner — (the Astros') stock has been higher.

"I can tell you that it is in our interest to carry the sport that is the hottest thing going at the time."

KPEJ carried just three Texas Ranger games during the 1988 season.

SPILL

The three offenses carry combined maximum sentences of two years and three months in prison, and fines totaling up to $10,000. District Attorney Larry Weeks said if convicted, Hazelwood would have to spend at least 30 days in jail because he has two prior drunken driving convictions in the past five years.

Valdez Magistrate Tracee Schnell signed the arrest warrant for Hazelwood, and set bond at $50,000. Authorities believe he left the state several days ago, but Baily said the state would seek his extradition.

Police in Hazelwood's hometown of Huntington, N.Y., said Saturday they did not know his whereabouts.

FBI officials in Washington say they're investigating possible felony violations of the Clean Water Act, which prohibits the "negligent discharge of a pollutant into navigable waters."

Exxon is liable for millions of dollars in fines under state law if it is proven to be negligent in causing the spill and cleaning it up.

Shifting wind drove the main body of the slick east toward Hinchenbrook Island, which forms the primary boundary between the sound and the Gulf of Alaska.

Leaders in the fishing and tourist town of Seward, the first community downstream from Prince William Sound to the west, also went on the offensive, deploying 10,000 feet of boom the town ordered from a Massachusetts manufacturer to protect salmon river habitats.

Time change made

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most Americans are back on daylight-saving time.

The switch occurred at 2 a.m. Sunday with the shift of clocks one hour forward, except in the handful of states which have exempted themselves from taking part.

Daylight time remains in effect until Oct. 29.

nar•theks•

narthex — (noun) The "narthex" is an enclosed passage between the entrance and main part of a church or other large buildings. Long ago the narthex was a western porch of a church used by persons who were considered second-class citizens, such as women and penitents. They were not permitted to enter the church itself. "Narthex" can be traced to the ancient Greek "nardos," which is a plant. The words are apparently linked because the shape of the narthex resembles this plant.

Wright says his constituents know what kind of man he is

FORT WORTH (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright isn't answering allegations from an ethics probe that were leaked to a newspaper, maintaining instead that his constituents know he is an honest man.

At an appearance at the Texas Gridiron Show Friday, Wright brushed off questions from reporters about the ethics investigation of his financial dealings and instead spent time working the crowd of 600, shaking hands and greeting old friends.

"It's very simple," Wright told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "These folks know me. I've lived among them for 35 years so they know what kind of person I am."

The Star-Telegram reported Friday that a source close to the ethics investigation said Richard Phelan, special counsel heading the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, wrote a 450-page report detailing about 100 potential violations of congressional rules.

Though the committee has not yet decided whether it concurs with Phelan's findings, the sheer number of citations — coupled with release of the report for full public inspection — could spell trouble for Wright, the Star-Telegram reported in Friday's editions.

But Wright's spokesman Mark Johnson said it will be the House ethics committee's report and not the one by its lawyer, Phelan, that matters.

Johnson said, "We are confident the committee will conclude that the Speaker did not knowingly violate any house rules."

The Star-Telegram reported Friday that the committee has decided in recent closed-door meetings it will release Phelan's report after its deliberations. Congress returns from its Easter recess next week.

But Wright's constituents seem to be ignoring the controversy.

University of Houston joins 'Bush league' for library

HOUSTON (AP) — University of Houston officials believe the school would be the logical place to house President Bush's library, in part because it's in the city where the president launched his long political career.

Kenneth L. Lay, chairman of the Houston system's board of regents, said he has sent Bush a letter asking him to consider the university as the site for the presidential library. Lay said he has not received a response to the March 21-dated letter.

"First, Houston, Texas, is George Bush's hometown, and I think it would be good for him to have the presidential library in the town where he pretty much had his business success and began his political career and to this day calls his hometown," Lay said Friday.

"Second, I think it would go to the larger (campus) where it could be used and enjoyed by the largest number of students and faculty and citizens."

Earlier this year, Newsweek magazine quoted Bush as saying he has already decided his presidential papers should go to a Texas university but that it was too early for him to make a definite selection.

Last month, a White House official said Texas A&M had approached Bush about the library. Rice University — where Bush taught a graduate course in organization theory in 1978 — the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and Yale University, his alma mater, also have expressed interest in getting the Bush library.

University of Houston President Richard Van Horn, like Lay, is interested in establishing the presidential library at Houston.

"Obviously, it's President Bush's decision. (But) we are the largest university library in the city of Houston, by far," he said.

Lay said a campus site for the library has not been chosen, but construction could be funded through a private campaign and would not present a problem for the university.

A White House spokesman said Friday he was unsure when the president will choose the library's location.

Bush, who was born in Massachusetts and grew up in Connecticut, claims Texas as his home state and has maintained a Houston address — and local support — for about 30 years.

That support includes Lay, who is chairman and chief executive officer of Enron Corp. He was the Harris County chairman for a $1,000-a-person Republican fund-raiser in September for President Reagan and Bush.

Clements opposes moves to limit Open Records Act

HOUSTON (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements said he does not support efforts in the Legislature to reduce public access to records of governmental agencies.

An assortment of bills pending in Austin would narrow the Texas Open Records Act by cutting back on the amount of governmental records open to the public.

Clements

"I generally would be opposed to that sort of thing," Clements said Friday during a question-and-answer session at the Texas Associated Press Managing Editors 1989 convention. "The more open government we can have, the better I like it and the better it is for our state."

Nancy Monson, executive director of the Freedom of Information Foundation of Texas, welcomed Clements' remarks.

"We were very pleased to hear the governor say that he supports openness in government and are counting on him to keep his word," Ms. Monson said.

Bills aimed at narrowing the Texas Open Records Act include measures to allow university and public school officials to keep the names of job candidates a secret, protect parts of teachers' college transcripts from disclosure and limit disclosure of law enforcement files, according to Texas Media, a coalition of media groups that opposes narrowing the records act.

Woman faces third trial on sexual abuse charges

AMARILLO (AP) — An El Paso woman who twice has been found guilty of sexually abusing children at a YMCA day care center has been granted a chance for a third trial.

Gayle Sticker Dove was found guilty in her second trial by a Lubbock County jury of aggravated sexual assault of a child and was sentenced to 20 years in prison.

But Amarillo's 7th state Court of Appeals struck down her conviction for a second time Friday and ordered a new trial, based largely on the fact that outcry statements from parents of children involved in the case presented extraneous material and were hearsay.

Ms. Dove, who had worked with 3-year-olds at East Valley YMCA preschool in El Paso, was accused of subjecting several children to sexual acts during the 1984-85 school year.

Her co-worker, Michelle "Mickey" Noble, was convicted in March 1986 of 18 counts of sexually abusing eight preschool students and was sentenced to life in prison.

Initially, an Amarillo jury in October 1986 found Ms. Dove guilty of abusing three of her students. But the trial court ordered a new trial, and a change of venue was granted to Lubbock County because of extensive media coverage of Ms. Noble's case, the Amarillo Globe News reported.

Testimony in the two cases showed Ms. Dove and Ms. Noble had sole care of several children, including a 3-year-old boy who became the main complainant against Ms. Dove. Witnesses said during the school year, the women would leave the school, going on field trips or walking to a nearby park playground near Ms. Noble's home.

An outcry witness is a person who testifies to the complaints of a victim.

An investigation showed that during these excursions, some of the children were taken to Ms. Noble's residence and sexually abused.

An investigation by the Texas Department of Human Services prompted a grand jury indictment alleging that in February 1985, Ms. Dove "caused the penetration of complainant's anus by the means of a pencil."

In her second appeal, Ms. Dove attacked her conviction on five grounds, including the alleged hearsay testimony of parents of the children. The high court ruled that outcry statements from children were of extraneous offenses not material to any issue and were prejudicial. The reversal on that point made addressing Ms. Dove's other arguments unnecessary.

An outcry witness is a person who testifies to the complaints of a victim, such as a parent explaining what their children told them.

The court of appeals said the conviction rested primarily on the testimony of the outcry statements of the 3-year-old boy and the outcry statements of three other children.

None of the children testified at trial, though statements by them were videotaped as part of the investigation.

Ms. Dove has denied acts attributed to her.

House speaker has inside track on UT antelope hunts

AUSTIN (AP) — State House Speaker Gib Lewis has hunted on University of Texas ranch lands — a privilege usually reserved for regents, staff and big contributors to the school, a university lobbyist said.

Gerald Hill, who gave up his seat in the Legislature to become a lobbyist for the university, said he accompanied Lewis on antelope hunts on UT lands in 1986 and 1988.

Hill said he did not recall any other elected officials joining in the antelope hunts in the five years he has been with the UT System. Those usually invited are regents, staff and big donors to the university, he said.

He said he did not recall who invited Lewis on the hunts.

One of the trips, in 1986, occurred days after a heated legislative session concerning budget shortfalls in the university's funding. During that session, Lewis endorsed a tax increase and backed off his call for deep cuts in education and other state spending.

Lewis, who has hunted big game around the world, killed a record-class pronghorn antelope last fall on university property in Hudspeth County near El Paso, said a Texas Parks and Wildlife Department employee who requested anonymity. Lewis hunted with a party that included Charles D. "Dickie" Travis, head of the department.

Lewis was in Hawaii for a conference of nursing home operators and could not be reached for comment Friday. Tim Conger, his press secretary, said he knew nothing about the hunts.

In recent weeks, Lewis has been the subject of news reports of alleged "political stockings" of deer, elk, turkey and fish on his ranches by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

Hudspeth County is considered one of the best antelope-hunting areas in the state, according to wildlife officials, and competition is keen for the limited number of permits issued for the annual nine-day hunts.

Private landowners charge antelope hunters up to $1,500, according to a Parks and Wildlife Department official familiar with the area.

"The permits get scarcer in that part of the country because of all of these quality animals that have come out of there," he said.

In 1986, 85 antelope permits were issued by the Parks and Wildlife Department for university-owned lands in West Texas, according to state records. The number was increased to 286 in 1988 at the request of UT officials.

Corpus Christi mayor seizes big lead in re-election bid

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Mayor Betty Turner seized a commanding lead in her bid for re-election Saturday with more than half the ballots counted in the city election.

With 56 of 98 precincts counted, plus absentee ballots, Mrs. Turner had 10,723 votes, for 58 percent. She had more than twice as many votes as her closest rival, attorney Jon Kelly, who had 5,012 votes, or 27 percent.

None of five other challengers was close.

Mrs. Turner sought a second term as the first female mayor of Corpus Christi, where she said a slow but steady economic recovery is under way.

A new naval homeport under construction at nearby Ingleside, and the Texas State Aquarium project being built here fits into her economic development plans, the mayor said.

Mrs. Turner has been the odds-on favorite throughout the mayoral campaign in the state's seventh-largest city.

An endorsement from San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros boosted the campaign of Mrs. Turner, a 57-year-old transplanted New Yorker. She won the 1987 mayor's race in a runoff against Tony Bonilla, former national president of the Corpus Christi-based League of United Latin American Citizens.

The mayor is one of nine city council members in Corpus Christi's council-manager form of government. Despite the mayor's limited veto power, the distinction from the rest of the council is largely ceremonial, but one that carries some agenda-setting clout with its $9,000-a-year salary.

She pledged to "forge a vision with a pro-active, creative approach to economic development." She listed regional economic development and diversification as her top priorities.

The depression in the domestic oil industry made the city's unemployment rate more than double from 6.2 percent in Jan. 1980, to 13.6 percent in Jan. 1987, according to the Texas Employment Commission. The jobless rate has started dropping slowly, and in Jan. 1989 was down to 9.1 percent.

Her best financed challenger was Kelly, who accused Mrs. Turner of conflicts of interest involving local development projects because of her architect husband, Jack Rice Turner.

Kelly, a 44-year-old attorney said his goals as mayor would be to "bring good business practices" and end ethnic division.

Kelly represented a group that led to the ouster last year of a city councilman for a real estate-related conflict of interest, the first time the council had ousted one of its members on ethical grounds.

The mayor, however, defended her record. Conflict of interest charges also arose in Mrs. Turner's three successful races for city council before running for mayor in 1987.

Proposed gun bills trigger Austin protest

AUSTIN (AP) — In a "freedom rally" on the Capitol steps Saturday, about 2,500 gun owners and firearms rights activists rallied against federal and state measures that would ban ownership of semi-automatic weapons.

Speakers at the rally, sponsored by the National Firearms Association, decried proposals they said are aimed at controlling crime, but that leave its victims defenseless.

"No city, no state, no nation has ever reduced its crime rate by passage of a gun law," said Neal Knox of The Firearms Coalition based in Silver Spring, Md. "But the anti-gunners don't care that their laws have failed to reduce crime."

Knox, in a prepared speech, said the Constitution guarantees citizens the right to bear arms "for the common defense."

"Hunting and target shooting are not a constitutional right," Knox said. The Second Amendment "is intended to guarantee you the means to defend yourself, your family, your state, your nation."

Knox and other speakers urged those present to contact Texas and U.S. lawmakers and President Bush to object to the laws being considered.

Congress is considering a proposal that would outlaw possession of any detachable ammunition magazine, which would render obsolete many self-loading target pistols and rifles, said Paige Massey, an NFA director.

"It's sort of a backdoor approach to banning large numbers of firearms," Massey said.

A Texas House bill, sponsored by Rep. Harold Dutton, D-Houston, would ban self-loading weapons themselves.

Dutton could not be reached Saturday by The Associated Press for comment about the bill or the rally.

"The emphasis (of both proposals) is in the wrong area," Massey said. "The emphasis needs to be on crime control, not gun control."

"99.8 percent of all firearms are never used in crime, according to statistics compiled by the NRA (National Rifle Association)" Massey said.

In the crowd were a number of Tennessee residents, who said they came to support moves against gun controls.

"Davy Crockett came down here to help 153 years ago and we came down now to lend our support," said Vernon Currier.

Protesters had gathered several hundred signatures on petitions to state and federal officials asking that gun control legislation be killed.

The Rev. Mike Green, a Baptist minister from Palestine, hushed the boisterous crowd for a prayer after the national anthem was played.

Green said he strongly opposes gun control but urged the crowd to be responsible about the use of guns and its protests against controls.

Wayne Burnham, president of the North Texas Arms Rights Coalition, said those attending the rally were told not to bring weapons, drink alcohol or wear camouflage clothing.

"But, I think you'll find that most of the people here are not the paramilitary type," Burnham said. "They're just your general gun owner."

Capitol Police Lt. James Joslin said carrying firearms on state property is a crime. He said several undercover Capitol Police and Austin Police officers were in the crowd.

"To walk around, see what they're saying, see if anything's going to happen," Joslin said. He said no incidents had been reported.

Officer who fatally shot 3 people loses job after notches found in gun

ARLINGTON (AP) — A police officer who fatally shot three suspects in six months was fired over two notches found etched into his pistol.

Brian Farrell, who was cleared of any criminal wrongdoing in each of the shootings, was fired by Arlington Police Chief David Kunkle Friday after investigators probing the third killing found the notches on the gun.

Farrell, 25, who insisted that he knew nothing about the nicks discovered on the trigger guard of his 9mm pistol, was fired because the police chief didn't believe him, police spokesman Dee Anderson said.

Anderson stopped short of saying whether investigators believed the marks represented a death tally. He refused to describe the markings, except to say they were similar.

Farrell's attorney, Jim Lane, told The Dallas Morning News that he would meet with Kunkle Monday to urge him to reconsider.

The markings were discovered by Dallas police investigators probing the killing of Michael Robinson, 21, who was fatally shot by Farrell while being served a warrant Feb. 1 in University Park, near downtown Dallas.

Robinson was wanted on a forgery charge.

Farrell also killed Ray Soto Jr., 32, of Arlington, as the man sat in his pickup truck and raised a handgun toward Farrell and a fellow officer on Aug. 2, 1988.

STATE IN BRIEF

Animal rights protesters picket snake roundup

TAYLOR (AP) — Animal rights protesters waved placards outside a yearly rattlesnake roundup here Saturday, but that didn't stop daring exhibitions and bagging contests involving hundreds of the writhing reptiles.

The two-day event sponsored for charity by the Taylor Jacyees drew hundreds of spectators and about 25 protesters to a city park, where a see-through, enclosed platform held the animals and contestants.

The 17th annual show was to continue today, which protesters said they would also picket.

A few protesters Saturday exchanged pleasantries with Jaycees' organizers, who allowed the activists to line the area near the entrance gate.

"I know some of these Jaycees. They're great guys — they're just misguided," said Charles Allen Dews of Austin, who heads a group called Varmint. "We're here to show them they can have a good time doing something else besides killing helpless animals."

The Jaycees, who bring in $20,000 to $40,000 yearly from the event, denied protesters' claims that the snakes are mistreated or that capturing them unbalances the area's ecology.

"I don't think that we're the least bit cruel to them. I've heard (protesters) say that we stomp 'em and kick 'em in the pit, well that's being said by people who've never been to the show and never seen it," said the Jaycees' David Gay, announcer of the event.

Louisiana inmate captured

BENTON, La. (AP) — One of four men who made a daring escape from the Bossier Parish jail last week was captured early Saturday morning in Columbus, Texas, Bossier Sheriff Larry Deen said.

Meanwhile, the sheriff said, deputies have issued an arrest warrant for a San Antonio woman believed to have smuggled pencil-thin hacksaw blades to the escapees last Saturday.

The woman was identified as Vicki Valeen Vanderburg, 30, daughter of escapee Richard Montgomery, 47, of Haughton. Deen said she is wanted for aiding the escape.

Montgomery, Dennis Dwight Daniels, 21, of Haughton, and Jerry Alan Kelly, no age available, and Ronald Roy Gillespie, 30, both of Shreveport, escaped from the Benton jail early Wednesday morning. Authorities concentrated their search for the men in Texas after Dallas police recovered a pickup the four allegedly stole while making their getaway.

Course's coyote to be freed

HOUSTON (AP) — A coyote found roaming a local golf course will stay at a wildlife center near San Antonio for several weeks before being released into the wilderness, the city health director said.

The animal, believed to be pregnant, originally was going to donated to Texas A&M University for use in a research program on coyote birth control, said Dr. Robert Armstrong, head of the city's Animal Control Bureau.

But John Arradondo, the city's health director, overruled Armstrong's decision and said Friday that the animal was turned over to the Texas Wildlife Rehabilitation Coalition.

Coalition members Friday night took the coyote to a wildlife shelter near San Antonio run by the Wildlife Rescue and Rehabilitation.

Arradondo said the coyote will be kept there about 60 days, then released into the wild. If it is pregnant, it will be kept about 30 days after it delivers, he said.

High-tech cleanup plans didn't mesh with low-tech reality

By DAVID FOSTER

KNIGHT ISLAND, Alaska (AP) — Before the first oil tanker steamed through Prince William Sound 12 years ago, oil companies boasted of a high-tech operation that would be "the safest in the world."

This past week, that bright promise died as a dark and slimy reality coated the shores of this rugged island.

Globs of tar and sticky brown oil stuck fast to gravelly beaches. Bitter fumes rose from a swirling slick offshore as oil-smeared ducks dove again and again, hunting for food.

Such scenes are occurring throughout the island-studded sound, where once-pristine bays and shores are absorbing the biggest oil spill in U.S. history.

The cleanup attempt — marked by disorganization, finger-pointing and lost opportunities — shows the oil industry's ability to handle a major spill is not as advertised.

For more than a week, up to 500 workers and experts have chased the runaway slick. They have caught precious little of it.

The spill stunned local residents, outraged state officials, and overwhelmed oil officials, who apparently had grown to believe their own promises.

The disaster, said Exxon Shipping Co. President Frank Iarossi, "is just something no one ever contemplated having to face."

In the end, technology and safety precautions could not protect Prince William Sound from a complacent petroleum industry, an oil tanker captain smelling of booze and a third mate uncertified to pilot a ship through the area.

Early the morning of March 24, the 987-foot tanker Exxon Valdez had just left the terminal of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline in Valdez, riding low with 1.2 million barrels of North Slope crude on board.

A LOCAL PILOT, required to guide the ship through tricky narrows at the mouth of Valdez Arm, had just left the ship in command of Capt. Joseph Hazelwood.

But Hazelwood apparently was not feeling up to the task — investigators later found his blood-alcohol content to be 50 percent over the legal limit for piloting a commercial vessel.

Hazelwood left Third Mate Gregory Cousins in charge, even though he was not qualified to operate in those waters.

When the ship encountered icebergs in the southbound shipping lane, the bridge radioed Coast Guard officials in Valdez, 25 miles to the north, for permisson to cross into northbound shipping lanes. Visibility was 10 miles, and no other ships were nearby, so permission was granted.

"This was not a treacherous area," Coast Guard Commandant Paul Yost said later. "It's 10 miles wide. Your children could drive a tanker up through it."

The tanker crossed into the northbound lane, but instead of turning again to the south, it steamed on, stopping only when it rammed into the hard rock of Bligh Reef, a well-charted hazard half a mile outside the shipping lanes.

A rocky pinnacle tore holes in eight of the tanker's 13 compartments, and 10.1 million gallons of oil gushed out.

When the pipeline started up in 1977, tanker safety was a major focus of oil industry and government officials in Alaska. But as time went by with no major accidents, early restrictions were relaxed.

Nighttime tanker traffic started to be allowed. Pilots familiar with the local hazards weren't required for as long. The Coast Guard cut back the distance it monitored tankers once they left the tricky narrows at the head of Valdez Arm.

AT ALYESKA Pipeline Service Co. which runs the oil terminal in Valdez, a full-time, professionaly trained cleanup crew of 20 was eliminated, replaced by dock and office workers with little oil spill experience.

Alyeska responsible for first response to any tanker spill in the sound, had drawn up a contingency plan for just such an emergency.

But when the big spill happened, things didn't go according to plans.

Its lone containment barge, normally loaded with 7,000 feet of oil booms, was in dry dock with its booms removed. Because it was Good Friday, a company holiday, it took extra time to marshal cleanup crews.

By the time Alyeska responded 10 hours after the spill, twice the time called for in the plan, the oil was already beyond the reach of the available booms. All five skimmers on hand were in place by Saturday, but it was not enough to stop the oil's spread.

In the words of an angry local fisherman, Lynn West: "They got caught with their pants down."

Exxon Shipping flew in experts from around the globe, but the weekend saw little cleanup and much hesitation, testing and debate over which method to use.

Exxon expressed confidence that it had adequate expertise, and yet it was revealed that the corporation's senior environmental officer and eight other oil spill experts left Exxon during personnel cutbacks in 1985-6.

Every kind of technology available to fight oil spills has its limits. Containment booms cannot be deployed in high seas; chemical dispersants don't work well in calm water.

AS OFFICIALS tried to figure out what to do, the oil kept spreading. By Sunday, only 3,000 barrels of oil had been recovered, and the finger-pointing had already begun.

The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation called the response "inadequate and slow." Alyeska and Exxon officials shot back they they were ready to use chemical disperants Sunday morning but did not get state and Coast Guard permission until Sunday evening.

Lt. Gov. Stephen McAlpine was quoted as saying that permission for chemical spraying was indeed withheld until Sunday night because the waters had been too calm for the dispersants to work. Blaming the spill on Alaska, he said, "is something that just cannot and should not be done."

Fishermen who waited by their boats for officials to accept their offers of help were frustrated with everybody.

"If the fishermen had been handling the cleanup with Exxon's pursestrings, we'd have a lot more oil cleaned up," said Michelle Hahn O'Leary, spokeswoman for the Cordova District Fishermen United.

Finally, on Sunday night, Exxon's Iarossi announced they were ready to tackle the spill with all resources available.

It was too late.

For three days, the weather had been unseasonably calm, slowing the spread of oil and keeping it where cleanup crews could have reached it.

But Sunday night, the wind started blowing and didn't let up for more than 24 hours. Gusts up to 70 mph and rough seas mixed the oil into a frothy scum and sent it scuttling across the sound.

CLEANUP BOATS were forced to take refuge in protected coves, and airplanes were grounded. Tentacles of oil stretched 40 miles overnight, and by Monday afternoon, beaches on four islands were blackened. The spill had grown to an estimated 100 square miles.

Cleanup officials lowered their hopes. It would be impossible to contain the oil, they conceded, but said they would concentrate on burning it off and using chemical dispersants to break it up and sink it.

Once again, it was too late. Tests of dispersants and burning proved ineffective. By Wednesday, 10 islands were fouled, and the spill was estimated at 500 square miles.

The plan changed again — they would concentrate on pinching off selected bays and coves with plastic booms, hoping to protect fish-spawning areas and three salmon hatcheries.

With the help of the Cordova fishermen, they succeeded, only to see the winds shift Thursday to carry the oil onto other, unprotected islands to the southeast.

Oiled birds and sea otters started showing up in greater numbers. A U.S. Fish and Wildlife biologist estimated more than 15,000 seabirds have been exposed to the oil. Mortality among them will be high.

By Thursday, Exxon officials acknowledged they would never collect most of the oil while it was still on the water.

Exxon spokesman Don Cornett said they would rely instead on beachside scrubbing as the oil comes ashore in the weeks ahead.

Those costs may prove hard to compute. "How do you place a dollar figure on a marine mammal or seabird?" asked Cindy Lowry, representative of the environmentalist group Greenpeace. "How much is an endangered humpback whale worth?"

She said she fears the oil companies won't learn the right lesson from this spill.

"We fear that they're going to chalk it off to someone who may have been drinking, and leave it at that," Lowry said.

The real issue, she said, is allowing oil development in sensitive environments. Spills inevitably happen, and when they do, the oil companies can't clean them up properly, she said.

Investigation of oil spill hampered by delays, confusion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pinning down and correcting the cause of the nation's worst oil spill may be as difficult as cleaning up after it.

The federal inquiry into why the Exxon Valdez ran aground in Alaska's Prince William Sound is inhibited by the time it took to get authorities onto the ship, delays in taking urine and blood samples from key personnel, and the refusal of two top officers to talk to investigators.

Among important questions investigators have been unable to answer:

■ Why the southbound ship, which had radioed the Coast Guard that it was moving out of its own shipping lane to avoid an iceberg, moved across both the separation lane and the northbound traffic lane into a charted reef just after midnight March 24.

■ Why the third mate who was unqualified to pilot the 987-foot tanker through the sound was put in charge while the captain, who was qualified, had left the bridge.

■ Whether the captain, who was determined to be drinking 11 hours after the accident, also was drinking when it occurred.

The Coast Guard arrived 2½ hours after the vessel ran aground and started spilling oil into the once pristine waters.

Blood and urine tests of the ship's officers were not completed until nearly 11 hours after the accident. And investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board were not on board until two full days after the ship ran aground.

Coast Guard spokesman Capt. Randy Peterson in Washington said the time it took to get Coast Guard officers to the ship appeared to be reasonable given the late hour and the 25-mile distance to the ship from Valdez.

"By the time we got there Sunday morning, Exxon officials had moved into the captain's cabin to set up a crisis command, and any evidence that was there would have been of no use."

— NTSB spokeswoman Drucella Andersen

ACCORDING TO communications logs sent to Washington, the Coast Guard received first word of the 12:04 a.m. (local time) accident at 12:28 a.m. and within two minutes ordered Port Valdez closed to all traffic and dispatched the commercial tug Stalwart to assist the oil-spewing tanker.

Coast Guard officers left Valdez for the ship at 1 a.m. and arrived at about 2:30.

Urine and blood tests of the captain, the third mate, the helmsman and a lookout couldn't be conducted before qualified personnel were available to conduct them, said Coast Guard spokesman Rick Meidt in Valdez.

Only the captain, Joseph Hazelwood, tested positive, with a .061 alcohol content in his blood. A level of .04 would disqualify him from operating the ship.

In most states, an auto driver is considered drunk only at a substantially higher blood alcohol content — typically .10 or higher.

For an average-size man, the consumption of one beer within an hour of the test likely would show up at about the .03-to-.04 level, meaning a person has to drink three or more beers or equivalent drinks in most states to be considered legally drunk for the purposes of driving a motor vehicle.

Board spokeswoman Drucella Andersen said investgators have no way of detecting from blood tests whether Hazelwood was drunk or even drinking at the time of the collision.

They determined, based on interviews with other crew members, that Hazelwood had turned over the bridge to his third mate, Gregory Cousins.

BUT THEY HAVE not been able to tell whether Hazelwood's blood alcohol level was due to drinking before or after the accident. If the test result stemmed from drinking prior to the accident, he would have had a higher count if tested within minutes after the ship ran aground.

Thursday, Exxon fired Hazelwood, citing violation of company rules that prohibit alcohol on board company ships.

But Ms. Andersen, in a telephone interview from Valdez, said investigators had been unable to determine whether Hazelwood or anyone actually had alcohol on board.

"By the time we got there Sunday morning, Exxon officials had moved into the captain's cabin to set up a crisis command, and any evidence that was there would have been of no use," she said.

Both Hazelwood and Cousins have refused to talk on the advice of lawyers, she said. The Coast Guard and civilian authorities have said they are considering action against them.

Ms. Andersen said the board could subpoena the men but investigators could not provide them with any immunity without approval of the full five-member safety board and the Justice Department.

She said both men had tried to make a deal that would protect them from prosecution early in the investigation.

The safety board has no power to bring charges or compel actions but only determines the probable cause of an accident and recommends steps to prevent future accidents involving shipping, aviation or ground transportation.

MS. ANDERSEN said the board expected to complete its field investigation early this week, after several more interviews and an examination of ship personnel records to determine the competence of its officers and crew.

In addition to cause of the accident, the board also is looking at initial response to the spill and will assess the Coast Guard's monitoring of traffic in the port "to make the passage of vessels to and from port as safe from human error as possible."

Ms. Andersen said the tanker had received Coast Guard permission to go around the ice, but there was no indication of Coast Guard error in directives given to the ship.

A civilian worker in a Coast Guard radar room in Valdez where the tanker was being monitored had a blood-alcohol level of 0.20 when he was tested 15 hours after the accident. But Ms. Andersen said the worker, Bruce Blandford, had come on duty only a few minutes before the accident and said he drank only after getting off work 12 hours later.

Early events in grounding listed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is a chronology of events in the first few hours after the 12:04 a.m. (local time) March 24 grounding of the oil tanker Exxon Valdez on a reef in Alaska's Prince William Sound, based on Coast Guard transmissions monitored in Washington:

12:28 a.m. — The Exxon Valdez is reported "hard aground" with 1.26 million barrels of North Slope crude oil and "approximately 150,000 barrels" initially released. Initial pollution reports are described as "uncertain due to darkness."

12:30 a.m. — Coast Guard closes Port Valdez to all traffic and dispatches the commercial tug Stalwart from Alyeska Marine Terminal to assist the Exxon Valdez. Two vessels designed to skim oil off the water are "being prepared ... for delivery and deployment."

1 a.m. — A pilot association boat leaves Valdez carrying Coast Guard officers and Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation pollution personnel to the Exxon Valdez.

2:06 a.m. — The Coast Guard notes that high tide was reached and the ship remained moored on the reef.

2:27 a.m. — A merchant ship reports the oil slick a half mile south of the Exxon Valdez.

2:30 a.m. — Coast Guard personnel arrive at the Exxon Valdez for the first time.

3:23 a.m. — Coast Guard officers aboard the ship report back that 138,000 barrels of crude oil has been lost.

4:14 a.m. — The Exxon Baton Rouge is sent to begin taking oil from the Valdez.

Mystery spill in Hawaii threatens sea turtles, humpback whales

HONOLULU (AP) — Endangered sea turtles and humpback whales have been sighted off Hawaii beaches soiled by at least 10,000 gallons of oil from a mystery spill, and officials were concerned about the long-term effects of oil on the animals.

Crews Saturday continued to clean bunker fuel oil from more than 20 miles of beach on the islands of Lanai and Molokai, two of the most undeveloped in the main Hawaiian chain.

John Naughton, a biologist with the National Marine Fisheries Service, said he saw whales surfacing through an oil slick and witnessed green sea turtles feeding just off a tarred beach. Humpback whales and green sea turtles are both listed as endangered species.

Although no marine animals had been harmed by the oil yet, "There may be some long-term effects," he said.

Naughton was particularly concerned about the sea turtles, which feed on algae that may have been tainted by toxic substances in the oil.

Oil was first spotted between Molokai and Lanai last Sunday. Authorities said at the time the spill appeared minor and most of the oil would likely drift out to sea.

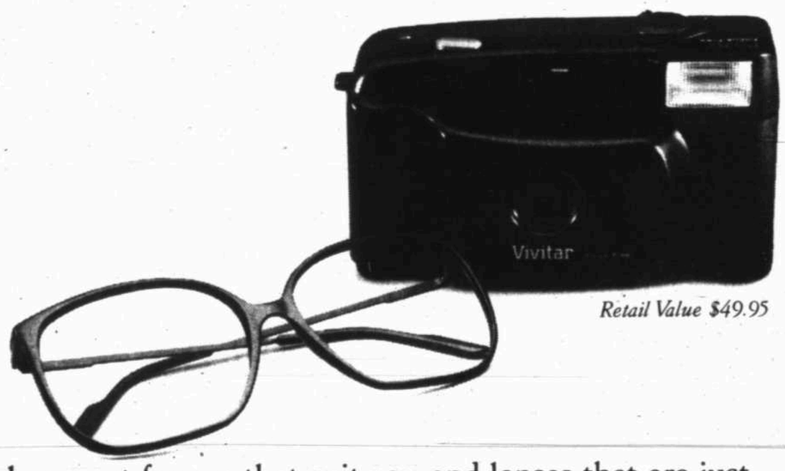

However, the oil sullied a nine-mile stretch of Molokai's south coast and about 10 miles of Lanai's shore in the form of tar balls and small puddles.

Beachgoers have been warned, said State Health Director John Lewin.

Officials Friday upgraded the spill from "minor" to "medium," although the precise amount of oil spilled had not been determined.

NATION IN BRIEF

Panel releases report on computer infection

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — A rogue computer program designed at Cornell University that crippled a nationwide computer network last fall was neither the creation of a genius nor the act of a criminal, a university commission has concluded.

Cornell graduate student Robert Morris alone created the program that infected thousands of military and university computers on Nov. 2, 1988, says the panel's 45-page report obtained Saturday by The Associated Press.

Morris, 23, who is on a leave of absence from Cornell's doctoral program in computer science, declined to be interviewed by the commission, which was left to speculate as to the reasons Morris created the "worm."

"It may simply have been the unfocused intellectual meanderings of a hacker completely absorbed with his creation and unharnessed by considerations of explicit purpose or potential effect," the panel wrote.

Technically, the program was not a "virus," which inserts itself into a host program to propagate; it was actually a "worm," or an independent program that endlessly duplicates itself once placed in a computer system.

Cornell officials and members of the special panel were scheduled to discuss their findings at a news conference at 10 a.m. Monday.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is diverting $5 million from AIDS research, prevention and education programs so states can continue providing the costly drug AZT to AIDS patients who cannot afford it.

Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan said the action Friday, hours before the federal AZT program expired, was in response to a request from Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and other senators.

But Sullivan said that while he agreed with the "compassionate purpose" of the transfer, "a series of 'one-time' appropriations is not the most desirable way to address the issue of support for purchase" of AIDS drugs.

The funds, which Sullivan said are being diverted from AIDS research, prevention and education, should continue the program for six months. The administration says federal support for AIDS research, prevention and treatment will exceed $2.1 billion this fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30.

Nearly 7,000 of the estimated 30,000 AIDS victims using AZT are receiving the drug under the program, created by Congress in 1987 and extended for six months last September.

The drug, which has been shown to extend the lives of many AIDS patients, costs about $8,000 a year when taken at full dosage. It is currently the only drug approved by the government to treat acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Beer breaks tapped out

SMITHTON, Pa. (AP) — Jones Brewing Co. has shut the tap on twice daily beer breaks for its employees.

"When you get 20 minutes and drink a couple beers, grab one here, grab one there, you're less than 100 percent," said Gabriel "Gabby" Podlucky, who became president when his family bought the 82-year-old brewery in southwestern Pennsylvania from actress Shirley Jones in June.

"It also goes along with what we believe should be responsible drinking. I could never face the family of one of our workers if they got hurt because of it," Podlucky said.

Thirty-one of the brewery's 75 employees voted unanimously earlier this week to discontinue the practice, he said Friday.

Workers enjoyed scheduled 20-minute breaks in the morning and afternoon, during which they could visit the brewery's taproom and drink up to two glasses of Stoney's, Stoney's Lite, Esquire Extra Dry or Fort Pitt beer. They also were allowed to drink during lunch and after work.

Woman charged in killings

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A former rooming house landlady, who was arrested when the bodies of seven tenants were unearthed in her front yard last year, has been charged with eight more counts of murder.

Dorothea Montalvo Puente was charged with the additional counts Friday, bringing to nine the number of elderly or disabled people the woman is accused of poisoning in order to get their Social Security checks.

Puente, 60, pleaded innocent to each of the charges before Municipal Court Judge John V. Stroud. She faces the death penalty if convicted. She previously had been charged with a single count of murder.

Scientist warns against spreading 'fusion fever'

NEW YORK (AP) — A scientist who reported that a simple apparatus may create fusion power at room temperature said his work gives hope for a new energy source, but warned that "fusion fever" enthusiasm is premature.

"I think we have a new approach to fusion," but it is too early to say whether it will prove useful for generating electricity, said Steven Jones of Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah.

The results still must withstand scientific scrutiny and be confirmed by other scientists, and until that happens, "don't sell your oil well," Jones said.

Even if the results hold up, it would take many years before the process could be put to practical use, Jones said Friday at a physics colloquium and a later press conference at Columbia University in New York.

Fusion is the process that powers the sun and stars, where tremendous amounts of energy are released when the nucleus, or core, of one hydrogen atom fuses with the nucleus of another hydrogen atom.

In contrast, today's nuclear power plants get energy from fission, which is the splitting of atoms.

Scientists hope to harness fusion power, saying it provides an environmentally benign energy source with a virtually unlimited source of fuel: "heavy" hydrogen, which occurs naturally in water.

Standard fusion experiments use extremely high temperatures to get the hydrogen atoms to fuse. But Jones and scientists at the University of Utah announced recently that they had independently found a simple way to produce fusion reactions at room temperature.

Essentially, they used electrical current to herd hydrogen atoms into metal electrodes, where the hydrogen atoms apparently fused.

The University of Utah researchers said their apparatus produced four times as much energy as it consumed. Jones, in contrast, said the Brigham Young device appeared to produce only about one ten-trillionth of the energy put into it.

Jones said he had not read the other team's scientific paper and could not explain the difference.

The Brigham Young apparatus included a pair of electrodes immersed in "heavy water," in which hydrogen atoms contain an extra particle called a neutron in the nucleus. This kind of hydrogen is called deuterium.

When low voltage was applied to the electrodes, deuterium nuclei were drawn into one of the electrodes.

If you are currently wearing corrective eyewear, it is equally important to have a periodic eye checkup. FRAMING YOUR FASHION

What do your eyeglasses say about you? Are you fashion-conscious? Trendy? Conservative? Elegant? Athletic? Maybe all of these at different times? Your eyeglasses are a fashion accessory, and smart men and women are discovering that it makes fashion sense to change their glasses when they change their clothing. While shatter resistant lenses in a heavy duty sport frame may be ideal for a fast game of raquet ball, they are not quite right for a dinner jacket. The woman who looks just right in the boardroom in a tailored suit and tortoise shell half glasses may want something a bit more glamorous to wear out for an evening on the town. Perhaps a delicate gold wire frame in the latest European design will set off her gown to good advantage. For good looks and good vision, it makes sense to treat glasses as part of your wardrobe.

Soviet women on hunger strike hauled off church steps

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — Four women who began a hunger strike March 20 to demand the return of a provincial church to religious use were hauled off the church steps Saturday by police and ambulance personnel, a human rights activist said.

Alexander Ogorodnikov, editor of the Bulletin and Chronicle newspaper in Moscow, said the four women have refused even water in their fast in Ivanovo, 150 miles northeast of Moscow.

Before dawn Saturday, six carloads of police and ambulance personnel took the women to a local hospital after taking them away from the church, where they have been since last month. Their relatives have been denied access to them.

The women want the church, built in 1914 and known as the Vedenskaya or Krasni Church, returned to religious use. Since 1938, it has housed the city archives, which are soon to be moved to a new building.

Most churches in the Soviet Union are closed or used for non-religious purposes. However, a few, most notably the cathedral in Vilnius, Lithuania, have been returned to use as churches in the past year as President Mikhail Gorbachev eases restrictions on the practice of religion.

Ogorodnikov quoted the local Communist Party Chief, identified only as Knyazuk, as saying the hunger strikers could continue for a year but the church would never be returned for worship.

Gorbachev's talks with Castro likely to focus on reforms, money

HAVANA (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev arrives in Havana today for talks that focus attention on the contrast between President Fidel Castro's doctrinaire Marxism and the pragamatic reforms of his communist sponsor.

It will be the Soviet leader's first visit to a Latin American country and only his third meeting with Castro, who traveled to Moscow for the 27th Communist Party Congress after Gorbachev took power and participated in the November 1987 Kremlin ceremonies marking the 70th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution.

In addition to the formal talks beginning Monday, Gorbachev will participate in ceremonial wreath layings and visit a health clinic, a genetic engineering center, and a crew of people who build housing on a voluntary basis.

He is expected to address the National Assembly in a nationally broadcast speech Tuesday and leaves the next day for London and meetings with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Queen Elizabeth II.

Gorbachev will be accompanied by his wife Raisa.

Both nations have stressed in recent public statements the friendly nature of the visit and the healthy relations between the two communist countries.

But Castro in the past has been openly critical of "perestroika," Gorbachev's ambitious modernization program, for borrowing free-market concepts from capitalism. There are indications the Soviets have substantially reduced their aid to the island nation 90 miles off the Florida coast.

The Soviets highlighted another difference in the two systems when they held a news conference in Havana on Friday to trumpet the Soviet Union's March 26 parliamentary elections.

In Cuba, most forms of dissent are still banned as counterrevolutionary and can carry long prison terms.

At a time when Gorbachev is searching for new ideas and proposing experiments to spur economic development, Castro has warned that financial incentives for individuals and decentralizing the economy are dangerous.

"We must watch over the ideological purity of the revolution," Castro told his nation on the 30th anniversary of his victory on July 26. "That is why we cannot use any methods that reek of capitalism."

Soviet officials and Western observers agree Gorbachev is unlikely to lecture the Cuban leader in public or respond directly to his charges that Soviet reforms take too much from capitalism.

That would be seen as a direct contradiction of Gorbachev's often-stated view that there is no one correct route to socialist development.

Diplomats in Havana and Moscow said it is unlikely Gorbachev is willing to continue subsidizing the Cuban economy at present levels while faced with widespread shortages, deficit spending and increasingly difficult economic problems at home.

According to U.S. estimates, the Kremlin provides Cuba from $4 billion to $6 billion annually in economic and military assistance, and the aid programs and subsidies account for as much as 20 percent of the Cuban gross national product.

The diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Soviets already appear to have reduced their purchases of Cuban sugar, which they buy at higher-than-market prices as a way of providing Cuban foreign aid.

Some diplomats said they expect Gorbachev to tell Castro bluntly — but in private — that Cuba must put its economic house in order.

But they suggest Gorbachev may make a public show of superpower support by announcing the Soviet Union's willingness to forgive all or part of Cuba's ruble debt, which has accumulated in the 30 years since the Cuban Revolution.

To forgive a debt that is unlikely ever to be repaid actually would cost Gorbachev very little, one diplomat said, while raising the ante for Western industrialized countries that hold most of the Third World debt.

Israeli troops kill Palestinian; Arabs claim 16 wounded

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli troops shot and killed one Palestinian in a clash Saturday in a West Bank village, and Arab reporters said 16 Palestinians were wounded in confrontations throughout the occupied territories.

The army said a second Palestinian died Saturday of gunshot wounds suffered last week. It confirmed that two Palestinians were wounded in the West Bank and said it was checking the other reports.

The deaths raised the Palestinian death toll to 417 since the uprising against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip began in December 1987. Eighteen Israelis have been killed.

Hospital officials identified the Palestinian killed Saturday as Akram Mustafa Mahmoud Yassin, 24, and said he was shot in the heart. They said Yassin's family took his body from the hospital and held a funeral that quickly turned into a nationalist demonstration.

The military said the Palestinian was critically wounded after a group of Arabs stoned an army jeep patrol and two soldiers suffered minor injuries. The soldiers took the wounded Arab to Muqassed hospital in annexed east Jerusalem, where he died.

Hundreds of Arab youths waved Palestinian flags as Yassin's coffin was carried through Bethany. The funeral march broke up after troops said no more than 40 people could participate in the procession and fired in the direction of the crowd.

There were no reported injuries. The army imposed a curfew on the village's 4,000 residents after the funeral.

Hospital officials identified the other Palestinian who died as Tareq Awad Farah Amir, 23, from the West Bank town of Hebron. He was wounded Thursday.

An army spokesman said the military was investigating reports that Jewish settlers shot the man.

In the West Bank, 12 Palestinians were wounded, including a 13-year-old who was shot in the back and a 15-year-old who was shot in the stomach, Arab reporters said.

Four Arabs, including a 12-year-old, were wounded in Gaza City when troops opened fire to break up a demonstration in the area's commercial center, sources at Arab hospitals said.

South Africa claims SWAPO broke pact

WINDHOEK, Namibia (AP) — South Africa reported major clashes with guerrillas hours before Namibia began its transition to independence Saturday and said it may ask the U.N. force monitoring the process to leave.

Foreign Minister Pik Botha of South Africa said 38 guerrillas and two territorial policemen were killed when guerrillas of the South-West African People's Organization, or SWAPO, infiltrated from Angola on Friday evening.

"This is a most serious development," said Botha.

The reported attack came hours before a formal cease-fire took effect and a 20-nation U.N. peacekeeping force began overseeing the end of South Africa's 74-year rule over Namibia.

Police blocked thousands of SWAPO supporters who tried to march in the capital to celebrate the transition.

Botha accused the rebels of a flagrant violation of a pledge to halt hostilities and said he had complained to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Unless there is a satisfactory response from the United Nations, Botha said, South Africa would feel compelled to ask the peacekeeping force to leave "until SWAPO can be brought to its senses."

In New York, U.N. spokeswoman Nadia Younes released a statement from Perez de Cuellar saying: "The secretary-general is greatly concerned that such incidents have been reported. He has told Mr. Botha that UNTAG (the U.N. Transition Assistance Group) is immediately sending a team to investigate the reports."

U.N. officials here said a team would travel to the border today.

An official of SWAPO, which has waged a war for independence since 1966, said the organization would need a day or so to determine what had happened but added that SWAPO "has gone out of its way to avoid conflict."

According to Botha, Perez de Cuellar indicated he might agree that South Africa could reactivate its troops to guard against SWAPO operations. But the U.N. spokeswoman said the secretary-general would have no comment on Botha's remarks.

Later at a news conference, Botha said South African troops will be allowed to leave their bases to search for the guerrillas involved in the fighting if police can't control the situation.

South African and SWAPO forces were confined to their bases as of Saturday under the U.N. plan but Namibian Administrator General Louis Pienaar said SWAPO units had not complied.

Botha interrupted his airport news conference to take a call from Pienaar. He then said that Pienaar, U.N. Special Representative Martti Ahtisaari and Gen. Prem Chand, the UNTAG commander, said certain South African units would be released from their bases to provide support to the police and the U.N. group would monitor the South African movement.

Fewer than 800 of the 4,500 military personnel assigned to the UNTAG have arrived in Namibia.

There had been no fighting since September between South African and SWAPO forces, which were supposed to be restricted to their bases as of midnight Friday under U.N. Resolution 435.

The resolution establishes a process for elections in November leading to independence early next year for Namibia, Africa's last territory.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, completing an African tour, flew into Windhoek to meet with Botha, U.N. officials and British members of the monitoring force.

Mrs. Thatcher said a special session of the U.N. Security Council should be called to consider the alleged SWAPO incursion.

"This a most serious challenge to the authority of the United Nations and the agreement, and we condemn it totally," she said.

There was a tense 30-minute standoff outside the capital when about 100 policemen confronted up to 20,000 SWAPO supporters marching to Windhoek from the black township of Katatura, seeking to celebrate the start of the independence process.

3 more bodies found on ranch near U.S. border

AGUA PRIETA, Mexico (AP) — Three more bodies were found Saturday on an abandoned ranch about 1,000 yards south of the U.S. border, bringing to 12 the number of dead in a suspected drug ring reprisal, officials said.

Also Saturday, a spokesman for the Sonoran Attorney General's office said authorities believe an American is behind the killings. Spokesman Jose Luis Peraza also said two people have been detained for questioning.

The three bodies were found in a well where five other victims were found earlier in the week, said Tom Petropoulos, a homicide detective with the Pima County (Ariz.) Sheriff's office. Four other bodies were found in a nearby septic tank.

Petropoulos said the three bodies found Saturday were all Mexican men believed to be in their 20s, and all showed signs of being strangled.

Petropoulos, who has been assisting Mexican officials in the investigation, said earlier he had never seen anything like a bathroom in an abandoned house on the ranch where some of the victims were believed to have been tortured.

"There's a strong smell of death in the air. It's a very terrible thing, a very gruesome scene. Blood was splattered and strewn, you can tell there was a lot of suffering here," Petropoulos said.

This Mexican border city of about 75,000 residents has emerged over the past two years as the center of "Cocaine Alley," because of the increased drug trafficking through the area.

Mexican officials say they believe the slayings are drug related, but stopped short of connecting the slayings here with the mass murder of five men in Tucson last weekend.

Two of the Tucson victims were from Nogales, Mexico, one from Hermosillo and two from Tucson.

Tucson Police said they are still trying to determine if the slayings in the two cities, about 130 miles apart, are linked.

Mexican officials have said two of those arrested told state judicial police that the killings were related to the disappearance of more than 220 pounds of drugs in recent weeks.

Moslem nations build up missile arsenals

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Moslem countries are building up long-range missile arsenals in the Middle East, including systems capable of carrying nuclear and chemical warheads to Israel, military analysts say.

Four Arab countries — Iraq, Syria, Egypt and Saudi Arabia — now possess missiles capable of hitting targets in Israel. All except Saudi Arabia are capable of producing their own chemical weapons, analysts and diplomats say.

Jane's Defense Weekly said last week the Middle East missile race is eroding Israel's traditional aerial supremacy and could "dramatically change the balance of power" in the region.

Jane's said that in addition to the four Arab countries that have missiles, Libya is "rushing to catch up."

At a time of East-West detente and arms reductions, military developments in the Middle East have rung alarm bells in Washington and Moscow.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze warned recently of a Middle East arms race that "sooner or later would degenerate into a nuclear face-off."

Arab states in the region are pressing ahead with major arms programs costing billions of dollars, but analysts do not believe the missile spread has reached a critical stage yet.

"The real question is what kind of warheads these missiles are going to carry. High explosive and chemical warheads basically cause very localized damage," said Don Kerr of the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies.

Kerr said the countries do not have enough missiles to ensure that they could hit all targets and prevent retaliation.

Saudi Arabia disclosed last year it has acquired Chinese-made DF-3A ballistic missiles. They have a range of 1,600 miles and can carry a 1.3-megaton nuclear weapon or a warhead containing 4,500 pounds of high explosive.

The Saudis insist the missiles, the most powerful in the region, will only carry conventional warheads. Intended primarily as defense against Iran, the missiles can also easily reach Israeli targets.

Missile warfare in the region started during the 1973 Arab-Israeli conflict.

The Iran-Iraq war spurred the spread of missile acquisition. The use of outlawed chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq conflict made the Israelis more aware than ever of the nightmare they faced in any new Middle East conflict.

Iran, Iraq, Syria, Jordan and Libya have Soviet Scud-B surface-to-surface missiles with a range of 180 miles.

Syria, Israel's main Arab foe, has more than 100 Scud-Bs. It also has an estimated 36 of the more accurate and powerful Soviet SS-21 Scarab tactical missiles, which have a range of 120 miles and are capable of carrying chemical warheads. These can reach key Israeli targets.

The Syrians also have Soviet-built SS-C-1 Sepal and SS-C-3 anti-ship missiles.

Iran has some Chinese-made Silkworm surface-to-ship missiles and appears determined to build a missile arsenal to match Iraq's efforts.

Israel has long held the offensive edge in the volatile Middle East through its vaunted air force, and it is widely believed to have built up a stock of nuclear weapons.

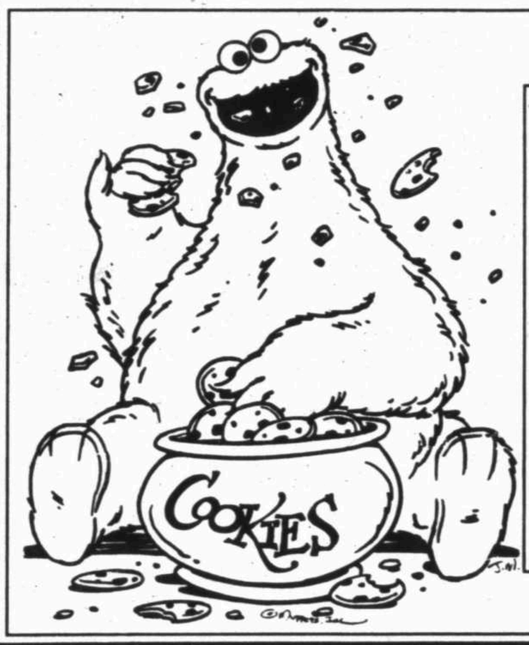

The superpowers' influence in restricting access to missile technology has been undercut by the emergence of sophisticated arms industries in South America and the Middle East.

Argentina, Brazil and China have become major arms exporters. Egypt and Israel are the main producers in the Middle East, but Iraq and Iran are building up their own defense industries, even though their technological capabilities are still limited.

Iraq and Egypt are working with Argentina to develop the Badr-2000 missile with a 620-mile range and a warhead that can contain explosives, a nuclear device or poison gas.

Libya is reported to be negotiating with Brazil to buy Oteiba MB/EE-600 missiles with a range of 375 miles, enough to hit Israeli targets.

WORLD in brief

Readers rocked by joke

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A multimillion dollar effort will dump tons of rock on Mount Kenya's snow-capped peak to make it Africa's highest mountain, a newspaper claimed today in an April Fools' Day story.

Haroun Wandala, the reporter who wrote the front-page piece for The Standard, estimated at least half the readers who called the newspaper about Mount Kenya's purported facelift thought the story was true.

"One fellow asked if we'd considered the ecological impact such a project would have on the mountain's streams and rivers and surrounding area," said Wandala with a laugh.

Mount Kilimanjaro in Tanzania is Africa's highest peak at 19,340 feet. Mount Kenya, which straddles the equator, is the continent's second highest peak at 17,058 feet.

The Standard story claimed the distinctions in altitude would reverse by 1991 after an internationally-funded project costing hundreds of millions of dollars succeeded in dumping enough 10-ton buckets of rock and soil on its peak to add 2,500 feet to its height.

Austrian empress buried

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Austria on Saturday buried its last empress, Zita, with all the pomp and pageantry of a vanished monarchy that for centuries ruled territory from Poland to the Mediterranean.

The nation's biggest funeral since Emperor Franz Joseph was buried in 1916, in the waning days of the Hapsburg Empire, seemed like an act of reconciliation, with the family that brought Austria greatness but was driven into exile after World War I.

An elaborate Requiem Mass in Vienna's towering St. Stephen's Cathedral climaxed a week of ceremonies honoring Zita, who died in Switzerland two weeks ago at 96. When she and her husband left the country in 1918, she was denounced as a spy for her role in a plot to end the war.

Police estimated the number of spectators at 40,000, including hundreds from Hungary, Italy, Yugoslavia and other parts of what was once the Hapsburg Empire.

Zita's son, Otto von Hapsburg, who fled Vienna's sprawling Schoenbrunn Palace with his parents, led mourners who included President Kurt Waldheim.

Poles celebrate freedom

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Underground writers and publishers rubbed elbows Saturday with critics, actors and film makers in a coming-out celebration of independent culture, seven years after the icy chill of martial law.

The festive and animated gathering in a packed Warsaw University auditorium reflected the thaw taking place in Poland this spring during talks between the Solidarity-led opposition and the communist authorities.

"I never dreamed ... that an official meeting would be held for the outstanding creators of Polish culture and activists of the second circulation — publishers, journalists, editors, printers, distributors and workers in the conspiracy," said publisher Grzegorz Boguta in a letter to the meeting.

Minority teacher recruitment could narrow the gap between the 14 percent minority make-up of the staff and a student body which is nearly 40 percent black and Hispanic.

MISD drawing minority teachers

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

She could have taken a job almost anywhere, but Karen Mosley has decided to pry herself away from the hills, trees and lakes of Arkansas and start her teaching career in Midland.

Ms. Mosley, a black student soon to graduate from the University of Central Arkansas, will teach special education in Midland Independent School District. Ms. Mosley is one of three minority teachers who have signed contracts with MISD as part of a head-start recruiting program.

Rather than waiting until spring — the traditional hiring season — teams of administrators and community representatives from MISD and the Ector County Independent School District hit the national recruiting trail last fall in hopes of bolstering the number of minorities in the teaching ranks.

MISD and ECISD also increased their recruiting budgets. MISD plans to spend $15,000 on hiring visits this year, compared to $6,400 in the 1987-88 school year, while ECISD has increased its spending from last year's $10,000 to $16,000 this year.

But the "yellow brick road" to minority recruiting for both districts has been plagued with potholes because of an increased demand for minority educators with little supply coming out of college, MISD personnel coordinator Alma Marshall said last week.

Artist focuses on 'The Kid'

Midlander's works detail outlaw's life

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Billy the Kid seems nearly as enigmatic in legend today as he was in life in the West more than 100 years ago.

"Some say he was a psychopathic little killer," said Howard Suttle, a Midland artist-historian who specializes in Billy the Kid. "Others think he was a victim of circumstances. There may be a few that thinks he's even a hero."

Suttle

Regardless, Suttle, a 64-year-old retired bus driver, tries to portray Billy the Kid as he best understands "The Kid" — Henry McCarty, alias William H. Bonney — from fact, fiction and conjecture.

The Kid was born in November 1859 in New York City and somehow ended up in the Wild West, first in Silver City, N.M., in 1868. And by some legends, he killed his first man when an unfortunate follow insulted his mother.

"Evidently, he loved his mother a lot and was taking up for her," Suttle figures. "They were in a strange land — a tough land."

His mother died in 1874. So, by that account, The Kid was 15, at the most, when he shot down his first man.

Legend says The Kid may have killed out of "honor," or vengeance, or self-defense, or just for the fun of it.

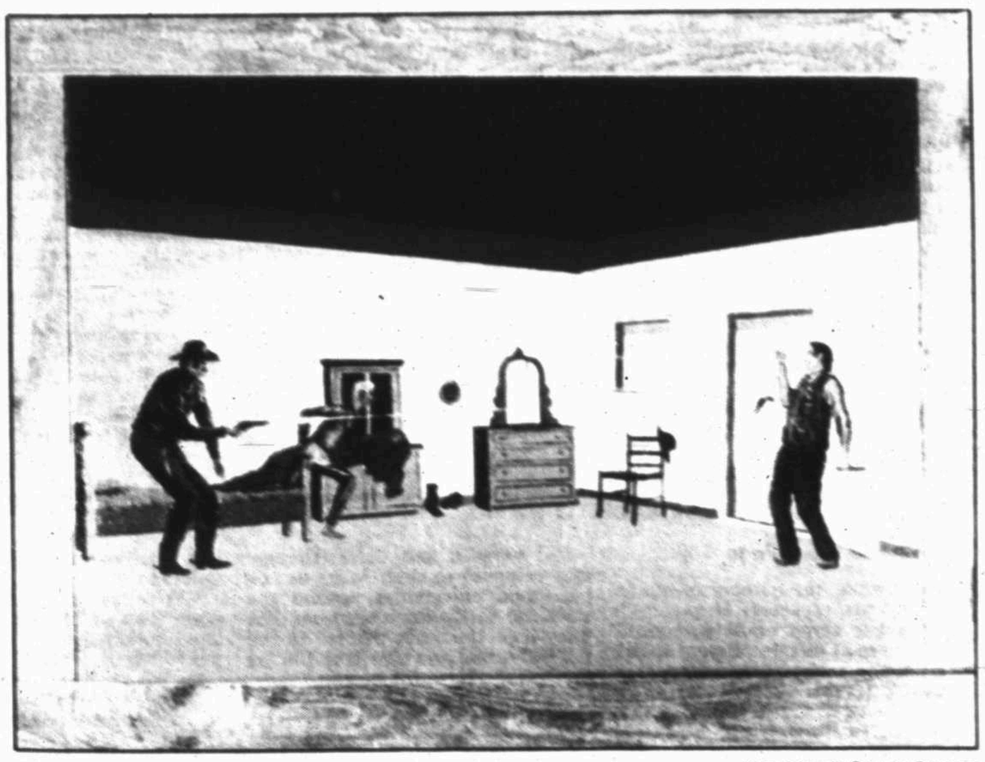

He was a cattle rustler who lived — and died — by the gun.

The Kid got entwined in the ways of outlaws.

"In order to survive," Suttle said, "an outlaw then was kind of like a lawman. You put your gun on in the morning and hoped you made it 'til sundown. Whether you had a badge on or not was immaterial."

Suttle's wife, Maxine, perceives The Kid as "just an innocent victim of circumstances" and who "got killed only at the age of 21."

"After his mother's death, he was involved in a robbery and fled to Arizona, where he earned a reputation as a reckless boy-gambler and gunslinger before returning to New Mexico and becoming involved in the notorious Lincoln County War," Suttle said.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Howard Suttle's oil painting depicts his interpretation of Sheriff Pat Garrett shooting down fugitive Billy the Kid in 1881 in Fort Sumner, N.M. Pete Maxwell, a friend of both the sheriff and The Kid, appears startled.

Suttle, whose work is on exhibit in Billy the Kid's Old Fort Sumner Museum near The Kid's probable grave, has painted 14 oil paintings that detail the more salient events of the outlaw's life. The paintings range from Suttle's colorful rendition of the famous tintype pose of The Kid armed with a lever-action rifle and sidearm to his being gunned down by Lincoln County Sheriff Pat Garrett in July 1881 near Fort Sumner.

Garrett had sought out The Kid after the outlaw had killed two lawmen in escaping from jail in April 1881. Earlier at Stinking Springs, Garrett had trapped The Kid, who was wanted for three murders. The Kid was convicted and sentenced to death by hanging.

Historians and history buffs debate over whether The Kid was armed at the time Garrett shot him. In Garrett's version, The Kid was armed, Suttle said. And history seem to agree that The Kid, given the opportunity, would have gunned down the sheriff without quibbling.

"You have to remember," Suttle said, "he had a price on his head. And he knew there was a posse after him. He had just killed two lawmen. So, would you go across the courtyard at night without your gun?"

Midland's DWI Task Force has run dry

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Drunken drivers won't have to fret about the return of the Midland police DWI Task Force, but they will have to worry, according to Police Chief Richard Czech.

The highly successful task force — formed Oct. 1, 1988, and dismantled New Years' Day — won't return because of a shortage of patrol officers, according to Czech.

"We felt we needed more people working general patrol than on the special DWI team," Czech said. "We need the officers to handle the increase in calls we have had."

The task force originally consisted of three officers, who searched for drunken drivers from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m. Tuesday through Saturday. The trio was cut back to two officers when manpower became a problem, then eliminated after the busy New Year's weekend, traditionally the favorite of revelers who drink and then drive.

A recent check of department statistics showed officers were dispatched to 150 calls during the 24-hour period on March 30. During the 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. "A" shift that day, 10 patrol officers and two supervisors were on duty, according to records.

"And some days are a lot heavier, call-wise, than that," said police spokesman Cpl. Jim White. "We just needed more people taking calls. It was a good move to have the task force, but with the manpower shortage, we had to get more people available to answer calls."

County Attorney Mark Dettman, whose office prosecutes drunken drivers, is pleased with the number of recent DWI arrests made by Midland police.

"Very much so," Dettman said. "They brought a whole sackful in from the Easter holiday" weekend. "They even called me at home because they ran out of videotapes."

Czech said patrol officers have "been told to be on the lookout for drunk drivers, and to make arrests when necessary."

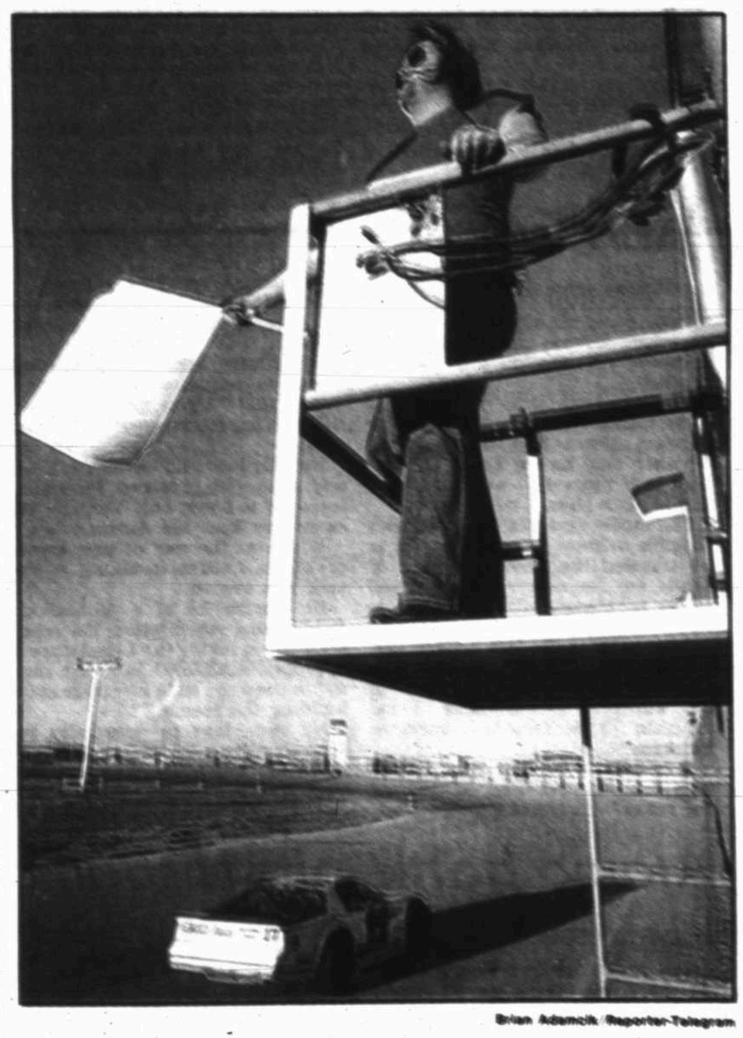

"We encourage all our officers to be on the lookout for DWI's," he explained. "That's why we want to have enough patrol officers to have enough patrol time to do those kind of things."

The department has maintained its six-officer Special Enforcement Team (SET), which concentrates on "hot spots" of crime in Midland, such as burglaries and robberies.

"But if they see something happening with DWI's, they could start working on them," Czech said.

During the first three months of 1989, patrol and traffic officers without the task force have made 107 DWI arrests, up from 94 the first three months of 1988, before creation of the task force and the emphasis on DWI arrests.

PTA program to alert parents to 'Child Lures,' crime risks

From Staff Reports

The Child Lures program is geared to raise awareness that "big-city" crimes against youths — such as abduction, murder, molestation and incest — can happen in Midland-sized communities, a Midland City Council PTA spokesperson said.

Adults can see for themselves by attending the program on Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Lee High School auditorium, 3500 Neely Ave.

The PTA and Midland Independent School District will sponsor the Child Lures community awareness program addressing the subject of youth exploitation and crimes against children. The program will be conducted by Jeff McKissack, a Child Lures representative.

The program will address concerns such as abduction and murder, molestation and incest, child pornography and prostitution, and cults.

Dianne Anderson, City Council PTA parent education chairman, said the public in a community as small as Midland generally is unaware of the potential danger awaiting children.

"It's not unique," Anderson said about the crimes against children. "It happens all the time."

Superintendent Joe Baressi said McKissack's training and information is of the highest level. It promises to be a interesting and informative program, he said.

The program has been previewed by MISD and PTA representatives, Baressi said.

Funding effort could revive plans for state memorial

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — For three legislative sessions, Rep. Frank Collazo, a former Korean War artilleryman, has fired away at his goal of a veterans' memorial on State Capitol grounds.

Bad economic times have brought construction delays for the project intended to honor servicemen killed in Vietnam and Korea and donations remain at a fraction of what's needed.

But a new funding initiative and a move for Capitol renovation may offer the idea new life.

Initial memorial plans were scrapped when the Legislature decided a proposed sesquicentennial park adjacent to the Capitol was too expensive to fund. A hurting oil-based economy had cast a shadow over at least one aspect of the state's 150-year celebration.

"It would have been a tremendous project," Collazo, a Beaumont Democrat, said of the three-block park that "would have enhanced the hell out of" visits to the Capitol area.

Despite the setback, the Legislature approved the concept of a memorial, if not the funding or a location.

Progress last session came in the form of architectural plans and a model. A circle of pink granite about 45 feet across has two 12-foot-high, curved walls on its east and west sides. Each wall holds a large bronze replica of the military service medal awarded for each war.

Midway between the walls lies a circular pool 28 feet in diameter. A hollow block of pink granite containing bowls and brass renderings of the Texas Lone Star rises 12 feet from the pool and forms a fountain.

GARY OTT

...And the place card to my left said 'The President'

WASHINGTON — I don't want to sound pretentious here — oh, what the hell, sure I do — but I had lunch with the president of the United States the other day.

Ott

That's right, George Bush.

It was Friday at the White House.

And when I say with the president, I mean WITH the president. There were eight of us at the table and I was seated to his immediate right. We talked about his grandchildren, baseball, Dan Jenkins, Larry McMurtry and a host of other less important subjects such as budget deficits, the Alaskan oil spill and taxes.

Confused?

Of course you are. Let me give you a little background.

About three weeks ago, the Reporter-Telegram was invited to send a representative to Washington for something called the "Regional Press Briefing and Luncheon."

What that means is that the White House invites a group of journalists, mostly from out of town and who don't normally spend time covering the important national issues, to Washington for a briefing with the president and some of his top aides.

To make a long story short, I got to be the Reporter-Telegram's representative. So here I am in Washington typing this column after just having had lunch with the president.

My day, a memorable one to say the least, has gone something like this:

9 a.m.: Show my press credentials to a security guard at the Old Executive Office Building.

9:02 a.m.: Get snapped at by the security guard for walking through the metal detector before my credentials are properly checked.

9:03 a.m.: Apologize profusely.

9:10 a.m. to 10 a.m.: Stand around, drink coffee, visit with strangers and feel incredibly stupid about the metal detector screw-up.

10 a.m.: Enter a large briefing room and listen to comments from William Bennett, the country's new drug czar.

10:30 a.m.: Participate in a question and answer session with Bennett.

11 a.m.: Listen to comments from Roger Porter, assistant to the president for legislative affairs.

11:15 a.m. Participate in a question and answer session with, you guessed it, Roger Porter.

11:40 a.m.: Head for the White House for lunch with the president.

That's where the fun begins.

There were about 65 journalists participating. Once we arrived at the State Dining Room there were eight tables, each seating eight people. We were told to look for our name plates. I found mine at Table 6.

Out of curiousity, I glanced around the table to see who would be eating with me. There was a woman from Miami, a gentleman from Columbia, Mo., and a few others I can't remember.

But to my immediate left was a card that said, "The President."

I did a double-take. Yep, it said "The President."

Those of us at the table — the president had not yet entered the room — were giggling with anticipation and congratulating one another on our good fortune. Then a voice said, "Ladies and gentleman, the president of the United States."

Everyone rose.

I started to applaud, but when no one else did, I refrained.

It was probably a wise move, since I had already made a fool of myself once with the metal detector.

The president then came straight to our table and began shaking hands. "Please be seated," he said.

We obeyed.

George Bush, I have decided, is a very nice human being. He made small talk with each of us. Someone asked him about his grandchildren. The president broke into a huge grin and discussed in great detail their last visit to the White House. "It was noisy, but great," he laughed. For a second there, he wasn't the president, just another doting grandfather.

There is something truly special about grandparents when they talk about their grandchildren. They get a look of pride that is difficult to describe. You just know there is love in their words.

Then out of the clear blue, President Bush asked, "Does anyone here read Dan Jenkins?"

I nearly leaped out of my shoes.

"He's my favorite writer," I blurted out.

We then spent the next five minutes discussing "Semi-Tough," "Dead Solid Perfect," "Life Its Ownself" and several other novels by Jenkins.

We agreed he has a wicked sense of humor and is a master of telling hilarious stories about sports and the people who play them.

Finally, as we were wrapping up lunch, I had to ask him one final question.

I said, "Mr. President, does the fact I'm from Midland have anything to do with why I'm sitting next to you?"

He grinned and said, "Of course, it does."

Don't tell me being from Midland doesn't have its advantages. Take that, New York.

The late Western author-researcher Louis L'Amour, in a 1983 letter to Suttle, figured that Billy the Kid "was not a hero — just a man doing what he had to do at the time, embroiled in a range war as many others were. Many others were involved in killing, too, but he was the only one indicted of it. Billy was a product of his times, no better and no worse than many others."

And Suttle is convinced that The Kid was killed by Garrett in 1881. However, some maverick Billy-the-Kid historians dispute that and claim that The Kid lived an adventuresome, heroic, exciting and, paradoxically, a relatively inconspicuous life well into the 20th Century.

Suttle thinks not.

"There were five people present who helped dress his body," Suttle claimed. "Common sense tells you and me that five people would not live out their entire lives, and that secret not get out. It don't make sense. That's just my opinion," he said. "Five people could not keep their mouths shut that long. Those five people would not have gone to their deaths without somebody spilling the beans."

Deluvina Maxwell, who loved The Kid "just like a son" and who helped prepare him for burial, daily placed flowers on his grave, Suttle said.

"Why would she put flowers out on that grave for the rest of her life" Suttle asked, were she not convinced The Kid's bones were there?

Besides, had The Kid lived well into the 1900s, Suttle said, it is unlikely that a person of his apparent egocentrism would have remained quiet and would have avoided attention.

"The Kid was 21 years old, with such notorious background, that by that time (1881) he probably had a whopper of an ego," Suttle said. "And I don't think he would have gone to a ripe old age and not said a word to nobody?"

Rumors say that The Kid had killed 21 men — one for each year of his life.

"I doubt that," Suttle said. "You know how the law was back then to clear up some cases that they couldn't find anybody to immediately pin it on. I think they just happened to blame it on the outlaw who happened to be in the area. Now, that's just my opinion."

But Suttle said The Kid was a smart, cunning fellow who "used his noodle" to arrange a killing to his advantage or to avoid being caught by the law. The Kid, who organize a gang, found out that he could "steal cattle and make more money than he could from working," Suttle said.

"He was running from the law anyway most of the time," Suttle said. "He would go over into the Texas Panhandle and steal cattle out of Old Tascosa and drive them over to Stinking Springs," New Mexico.

"They said when he was across the border gambling a few times, he would shoot someone, and he just would go into hysterical laughter. It was just a high-pitched laugh."

At 5-feet 8-inches tall, The Kid had reddish brown hair, blues eyes, prominent front teeth and a "fuzzy" upper lip that suggested a perpetual smile, Suttle said.

"He had a disarmingly good nature and a vindictive temper," Suttle said. "He was built rather strange. His wrists were larger than his hands," which could slip out of handcuffs," Suttle said. "And he got away a lot of times."

Suttle, the son of a Texas Baptist minister who died of consumption when he was 10 years old, quit school to work in the cotton fields of the Texas Panhandle to help support his family, served in the U.S. Army in World War II as a tank commander in Europe, and took up a career as a bus driver and an avocation as a Western artist.

Suttle was drawn to the Western lifestyle of the cowboy.

"It's a way of life that has gone with the wind," he said. But "this country was built because of the cowboy and the farmer."

In retirement, the self-taught artist who has painted more than 2,000 works, said he plans to expand his art works to illustrations and editorial cartoons. "I'll probably be much more of a gambler and go-getter from here on out than I was before," he said, "because I believe that's the way the Lord meant for us to be."

Suttle said he enjoys coming up with anything beautiful in his paintings. But he paused to consider: "Well, it doesn't even have to be beautiful." His artistic interpretations of Billy the Kid "were not painted for their beauty."

TEACHERS

Meanwhile, the number of minority students, especially Hispanics, is destined to comprise 50 percent of MISD and ECISD enrollment, possibly by the early 1990s, reflecting a statewide trend.

Ms. Marshall said trying to match the trend in student representation by hiring more minority teachers has been difficult because college-bound blacks and Hispanics go for careers with higher earning potential than teaching.

MISD's 1,159-member certified staff — including 46 administrators and five maintenance, purchasing or transportation personnel — was 6.3 percent black, 7.7 percent Hispanic and 85.3 percent white during the 1987-88 school year.

Of ECISD's 1,482 teachers in 1987-88, 5 percent were black, 8.4 percent Hispanic and 86.5 percent white.

Despite early recruiting by both districts this year, the number of minority teachers hired so far will not have a dramatic impact on the minority percentage representation in the schools.

Thomas Holland, MISD executive personnel director, said one black and two Hispanics have signed contracts with MISD, while five blacks and three Hispanics have received offers.

Bill Clark, ECISD elementary personnel specialist, said his district struck out during the early recruiting, with no contracts or letters of intent signed.

Ms. Marshall and Clark, though, said response to their visits at colleges and universities around the state and nation have been positive. They hope the seeds planted in the fall will sprout and bear fruit during the spring recruiting season.

"It's not for lack of trying," Ms. Marshall said of why the early visits yielded only a few prospects. "We just haven't found them."

She said MISD recruiting teams so far have hit every Southwest Conference school, Paul Quinn College in Waco, Louisiana State University and Eastern New Mexico University among other institutions, including some predominantly black colleges.

Trips had been planned to two Georgia colleges, but all the senior education majors had signed contracts with other school districts, Ms. Marshall said. Undaunted, recruiters will try Prairie View A&M, Huston Tillotson, Texas Southern, New Mexico State and other universities from Illinois and Virginia to Florida, she said.

On Thursday, Clark had just returned from a visit to Northern Arizona University, which followed trips to Sul Ross State, West Texas State, Texas A&I, Laredo State, Paul Quinn and Baylor universities.

"They've been pretty positive and I think we'll have some positive results out of them," Clark said, noting planned visits to Tulsa, Oklahoma State, Angelo State, Texas Southern, Prairie View A&M, Pan American, Grambling, North Texas State and the University of Northern Colorado.

"We're trying to hit it hard," he said. "It's a lot of hard traveling and late hours, but that's all part of the job."

Ms. Marshall said that to compete with other districts — which can sometimes offer trees, lakes and big-city life — MISD recruiters promote the city as a relatively crime-free, family-oriented community.

"One of the things you try to tell them is that Midland has one of the top school systems in the United States and certainly in the state of Texas," Ms. Marshall said. "We tell them that we are known for academic excellence and we have a good teaching environment."

She said the prospects who browse the MISD table at job fairs are given packets full of information about things to do in Midland and about its friendly people.

"I tell them that if they want to work after-hours in the classroom, she or he can do it without fear of being attacked," Ms. Marshall said.

MISD, she noted, can also offer them a higher starting salary than last year and maximum state supplements if they make the career ladder. School trustees this year raised the annual starting salary from $19,500 to $20,250 and approved maintaining career ladder payments at $2,000 for Level II and $4,000 for Level III.

Clark said ECISD's community-promotion strategy is similar to MISD's.

"They're (prospects) going to have some choices and we'd like them to know who we are," he said.

Ms. Marshall said the competition still will be stiff, no matter what MISD can offer.

"In the last few years the number of minority kids entering college has decreased," she said. "Fewer kids are going into education.

"There's a lack of job satisfaction as far as being appreciated and recognized by the public. That problem has as much to do with it as the pay. Teachers do not enjoy the same status in education as they did 30 years ago when I started."

But regardless of the attraction to the big city, some students, like Ms. Mosley, have found their academic Oz in the Permian Basin.

"I looked at all the schools and read their literature," Ms. Mosley said, "but Midland had the things I was looking for. It's a nice-sized city with theatres and museums.

"It seemed perfect to me."

Ms. Mosley, fully aware of the area's environs, said it was MISD's recruiters that convinced her to join the team here.

"I enjoyed talking to the recruiters," she said. "She (Ms. Marshall) seemed very together with what she wanted. The literature that they had on the school was very well prepared.

"Their school district seems to be excellent with the services they provide to the students and teachers."

MEMORIAL

Collazo and his supporters made a conscious decision not to include the names of veterans killed in the two conflicts.

The representative feared that some names would be left off. The decision also avoids the question whether only native Texas servicemen or if those who were stationed in the state should be included.

The model gave Collazo something tangible to show veterans groups as he traveled the state in search of funds, but the nearly $26,000 raised so far is substantially short of construction needs.

State veterans leaders helping Collazo agree that fund raising has proceeded "at rather a slow pace," in the words of Samual Bier, Texas chaplain for the Disabled American Veterans.

"We haven't been able to get off high center," said Glen Gardner of the Texas Veterans of Foreign Wars. The public's receding memory of Vietnam, not to mention Korea, may be part of the problem, Gardner added.

In addition, veterans sift through donation requests from so many causes that "it gets more and more difficult to get a piece of the pie," he said.

But Gardner said he doubts a second memorial proposed for Dallas, intended to honor only Vietnam veterans, has hurt the Austin work.

Whatever the root of past money problems, Collazo is taking a new tack this session.

On the advice of a professional fund-raising organization, the representative is asking the Legislature to appropriate $300,000 in "seed money" to show the state is serious about building the memorial.

He also plans to personally put "the touch" on the 31 senators and 149 other representatives for $500 each.

Given that accumulation, the project still would stand about $500,000 short, money Collazo hopes to raise privately after lawmakers offer their hoped-for vote of confidence.

House Speaker Gib Lewis suggested a home for the memorial in front of the John H. Reagan Building, a structure 450 feet northwest of the Capitol in which House committees meet and maintain offices.

But that prospect may be up in the air, too.

John McCree, architect of the Capitol, has proposed a $147 million facelift and expansion of the domed structure because studies show it to be a serious fire hazard.

About 1,300 workers call the Capitol home every day during legislative sessions, but it should house only about 700, based on the number and location of fire exits.

Potential hazards lie in antiquated electrical transformers under the rotunda and a food preparation area near one main fire exit, McCree said.

As a solution, the architect wants to restore the Capitol to its original capacity and build a four-level underground addition north of the structure.

The subterranean addition would contain additional offices and committee rooms and two levels of parking — solving another source of perennial complaints.

Legislation currently in the hopper would let Texans vote on the question of whether to fund the project.

Depending on the outcome, the impact on Collazo's veterans remembrance could be major. If Texans give the go-ahead, renovation construction would occur in just the place Lewis suggests for the memorial.

But McCree offers a happy solution. Approval of the underground addition means substantial re-lanscaping on the surface above.

Within those plans, he proposes to allocate several areas as focal points, areas that would add interest to the landscaping in the form of gardens, or, possibly memorials.

The big "if" in the project is whether Texans will approve the expansion. McCree is unsure, but offers hopes.

"It's an education project," he said. "You just have to show people, do the best you can and just hope.

Alamo battle pits Hispanics, caretakers

By DAVID SEDENO

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — More than 150 years ago, legend has it, Alamo commander William B. Travis drew a line across the grounds of the old Spanish mission. He asked his men to step over it and defend the Alamo against thousands of Mexican troops.

Today, the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, who have cared for the Alamo for 84 years, are emulating Travis' legendary gesture as they battle with legislators and Hispanic leaders who want to wrestle control of the Alamo away from the 6,000-member group.

Travis lost his battle to Santa Anna in March 1836, but Texas troops rallied with the cry "Remember the Alamo!" and later defeated Mexican troops to regain the Alamo and win Texas' independence from Mexico.

Now, critics of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas say the mission would be better run by a state agency accountable to the public, particularly in light of an audit that showed the Daughters' Alamo chapter with a budget surplus of nearly $2 million.

"We aren't hiding anything. Our books are open and we are complying with the open records and open meetings laws," said Marjorie Hardy, a chapter chairwoman. Tourism officials estimate chapter members usher close to 10 million visitors a year through the mission in the heart of downtown.

Shifting control to the state, Ms. Hardy said, would cost taxpayers because state workers would be paid for duties that volunteers now perform. As for the surplus, Ms. Hardy said it was being saved to build a larger theater in the complex.

"We are very proud of what we have done with the Alamo, but we are not bragging about ourselves. Maybe we should," Ms. Hardy said.

Daughters of the Republic of Texas are descendants of people who lived in Texas between 1836 and 1845, when it was an independent republic before becoming part of the United States. The Daughters received a state charter in 1905 to operate the Alamo.

The complex includes a chapel with artifacts and flags, a souvenir shop and research library, a small building where documentaries are shown and enclosed grounds with several cannons on display. Admission is free, and operating expenses are covered by souvenir sales profits. No state money is used.

Recently, the Daughters asked Attorney General Jim Mattox to clarify their legal status; he ruled that the group must comply with the state open records law because it manages a state-owned site.

Meanwhile, state Rep. Ron Wilson filed a bill that would transfer control of the Alamo from the Daughters to the Texas Parks & Wildlife Department, which operates numerous state parks and museums.

Keep Midland Beautiful planning two citywide events during April

From Staff Reports

The Keep Midland Beautiful organization has planned two major events in conjuntion with "Keep America Beautiful Month" in April.

Monday will mark the first day residents can call in for pick up of garbage as part of the Citywide Clean-Up program.

Midlanders are being encouraged to clean out their alleys, garages and yards and have the resulting debris hauled away free, according to KMB executive director Sharla Hotchkiss.

The Midland Board of Realtors, one of the events sponsors, will be accepting trash pick-up calls until April 14 at 682-0253. Pick-ups will be scheduled for April 24 to May 5.

Saturday, hundreds of volunteers will attack the city's railroad right-of-way along Highway 80, cleaning the area up as part of the Glad "Bag-a-thon."

Prizes will be awarded to the top teams — neighborhood organizations, businesses, schools and scouting, church and civic groups — in the trash pick up event. Union Pacific will have a locomotive and flat car cruising the track to pick up trash bags, being provided by Glad Wrap & Bag, once they are filled.

"We're proud to be a Glad 'Bag-a-thon' city, only 70 cities in the U.S. were asked to participate in the program and that speaks well of the success wee have shown," said Richard Wigzell, chairman of Keep Midland Beautiful.

But "there's still a lot of work to be done," he said.

"Highway 80 is Midland's most traveled highway and its cleanliness will speak well for our city as tourists and potential investors pass along it," said Bag-a-thon project chairman Jody Sneed.

Saturday's event will run from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Weight Loss Pill Approved for U.S. Gov't. Patent

'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight Already Sweeping U.S.

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)— An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising".

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W841, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) Do you know how to protect your family from storms?

By LYN MILLER

A storm is approaching! Do you know what to do to protect yourself and your family?

At this time of the year, the National Weather Service and those involved with public safety review their plans and obtain training in order to be better prepared for potential problems should severe weather occur.

Numerous workshops are being conducted by the National Weather Service with regard to weather spotting and safety throughout the West Texas area, whereby weather spotters are trained to identify and report possible severe weather conditions.

Preventing personal injury, however, remains the responsibility of each individual. In an effort to ensure safety, plans should be formulated well in advance of storm warning or tornado watch announcement by the weather service.

Each family member should know exactly where to go and what to do when severe weather in imminent. Be prepared by keeping a battery-powered radio in operating condition, keep flashlights ready, learn tornado and thunderstorm safety rules, find the safest place in your home and at your place of work and make sure all members know where emergency supplies are stored in the event of a thunderstorm or tornado.

Stay informed by listening to the local broadcast station for the latest weather information or to a National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) radio. During a severe weather, it is safer to stay in your home, rather than a car or place of business. Most of all, do not attempt to "track" a tornado unless you are a trained weather spotter.

Unnecessary traffic only hinders the situation.

Two terms often confused by the average citizen are "watch" and "warning" in relation to a tornado. A watch indicates the possible occurrence of severe weather and a warning indicates that severe weather is already occurring.

Some safety rules to follow should a tornado occur are:

- Stay away from windows, doors and outside walls;
- In homes or small buildings, go to the basement or an interior part on the lowest level;
- In schools, nursing homes, hospitals or shopping centers, go to the predesignated shelter areas or interior hallway;
- In high-rise office buildings, go to interior small rooms or hallways;
- Leave mobile home or vehicles and go to a substantial structure.

Citizens are urged not to call the 911 dispatch number for information regarding severe weather regarding severe weather or precautions to take. The 911 is for fire, police or medical emergency use only and should not be used in other circumstances. A critical call for help could go unanswered if the 911 line is blocked by an unwarranted call.

Weather safety information pamphlets useful in preparing for various types of severe weather are available in the Emergency Management/Operations Center, Room B10, City Hall, 300 N. Loraine.

Come by or call the coordinator, R.G.Edgerton, at 685-7440 to obtain information or answers to questions regarding severe weather.

Help make this storm season the safest possible.

Earthquake study worth expenditure

An earthquake study being conducted in the Salton Sea area should be expanded and accelerated because it promises early warning that could save thousands of lives and substantially reduce property damage.

Scientists of Columbia University's Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory, the U.S. Geological Survey, California Institute of Technology, and the University of California, San Diego, are investigating the developing premise of an earthquake-triggering mechanism.

In 1987, a small fault or earth crack that crosses the San Andreas Fault zone in California slipped and produced a moderate quake. What made this mild temblor significant was the slippage 11 hours later of an adjoining fault in the San Andreas system. Scientists believe the first quake triggered the second. They believe several small cross-faults in the study area slip in such a way as to loosen, or decompress, the big fault.

The likelihood of a shattering San Andreas earthquake increases after pressure is relieved between opposing chunks of earth crust along the fault. Indeed, the scientists are observing a pattern in the cross-fault earthquake activity that suggests a cross-fault named the Extra Fault could slip next and produce a major earthquake. According to the theory, such cross-fault slippage could cause at least one segment of the San Andreas Fault to break, unleashing the much-anticipated "Big One."

Three segments of the San Andreas fault now are loaded with accumulated strain. The southern segment, connected with the slippery Extra Fault, extends from Palm Springs 60 miles south to a point half way down the Salton Sea's east shore. The other two strain-loaded segments extend 120 miles north of Palm Springs to a point west of Bakersfield. A break of the southern segment alone could produce a major quake and if the other two segments slipped as well, a great earthquake could result in a matter of minutes, hours, days or weeks.

A federal report estimated that such a quake would kill 3,000 to 14,000 persons, seriously injure 12,000 to 55,000 and cause up to $17 billion in damage.

What's even more sobering is the fact that scientists say an earthquake can occur almost anywhere, though quakes are more prevalent in certain parts of the world such as California. In fact, a moderate tremor was noted several years ago not far from Midland.

Much more than the $2 million a year now spent on the study is needed to gain new information for quake prediction. The study is scarcely more than a spare-time project for most of the involved scientists, who divide their time with other projects. In some cases, these expert earthquake watchers even have to pay their own field-research expenses.

Earthquake scientists say they could make good use of a $10 to $15 million budget by setting out a sophisticated array of strain and creep meters and seismometers to gather the information they require. If earthquakes in California can be predicted, and this forward-thinking research can be applied to other parts of the globe, this relatively modest appropriation would pay its way many times over.

JACK ANDERSON

Cleanup at PEMEX will benefit U.S.

WASHINGTON — In Mexico, some call the leaders of the oil workers union "Al Caponescas." The American mobster would be proud. The Mexican union has become an untouchable clique that operates outside of the law.

Jack Anderson

The new Mexican president, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, started his administration by jailing the leader of the union — Joaquin Hernandez Galicia, also known as "La Quina." The next moves by Salinas must come quickly. He must end a number of practices that have netted the union billions of dollars at the expense of the impoverished Mexican economy. He must hobble the union that has become a state within a state. And he must find the kind of honest leaders who have been squashed by La Quina.

When everyone in a union is prospering, the little guys do not question if the big guys live well. Mexican oil workers for years have paid 2.5 percent of their wages as union dues, and have considered it money well spent. But evidence accumulated that La Quina and his inner circle took money from the pockets of rank-and-file members to enrich their own business enterprises. And then, not satisfied with using union money to start up other businesses, the union leaders required members to patronize those businesses.

The leeching begins the moment someone applies for a job with the state-owned oil company, PEMEX. According to one confidential PEMEX document we obtained, more than 90 percent of the company payroll goes to union jobs. The situation is tailor-made for victimizing the job seeker.

The union leadership has been selling jobs for several decades. A lifelong position with the company is worth thousands of dollars up front.

For years, La Quina criticized job selling, but that was only a public show. The practice flourished. Workers, like Carlos Garcia Martinez, whom we interviewed on an offshore rig in the Gulf of Mexico, absolve La Quina of any blame: "La Quina is a man of ideals. But sometimes he is surrounded by people who deviate from the goals he is after."

Fresh out of school, Garcia and his friends applied for PEMEX jobs. A union leader told them the jobs would not be free. When they refused to pay, another union leader hired them anyway, but such cases are the exception. Garcia was one of the few union members we interviewed during a three-year investigation who would allow us to use his real name. The anonymous sources were critical of La Quina's excesses.

The union owns its own stores and coerces workers to shop there by giving them coupons that are not redeemable anywhere else. Since PEMEX pays most of the overhead for the stores, the money spent by the workers is gravy for La Quina.

An oil worker's debt to the union doesn't end with retirement. Retirees on modest pensions are vulnerable to manipulation and are sometimes asked to work for free on union farms or for the union leaders. Even in death, the workers must satisfy the insatiable appetite of the union. In the town of Poza Rica, the union local deducted the equivalent of 105 days' salary from the death benefits of union workers to pay for elaborate funerals. Why? Because union leaders owned the funeral parlors and they couldn't resist taking one last bite out of their workers.

"It would be foolish to say the labor union smells like roses," oil worker Artelio Gutierrez told us. "But, on the other hand, you cannot say that it actually stinks."

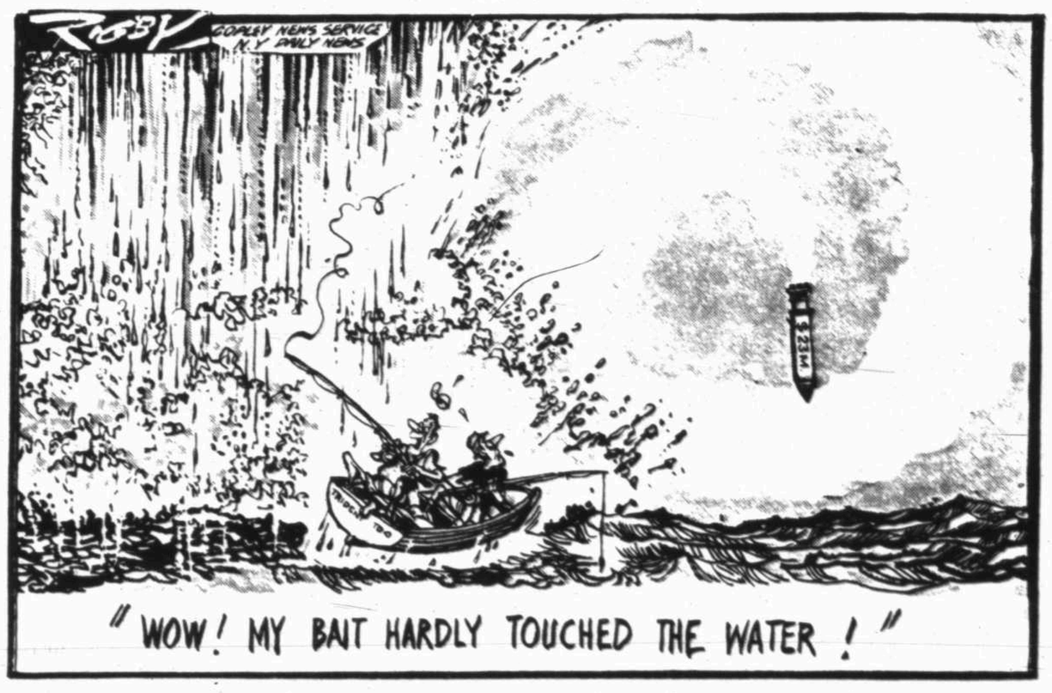

Take another wiff. The quality of life for oil workers has not improved, even though the union has won them comfortable salaries. A confidential PEMEX document we obtained says that "In spite of a betterment of living conditions over the last 25 years, the low cultural level of the average oil worker, together with the particular conditions of (his) environment ... make of him, in general terms, an easy victim of alcoholism, prostitution and excessive consumption. These facts negatively affect his quality of life."

Of course, that survey didn't measure the quality of life of La Quina and his friends. Looking up at them from below, oil workers must conclude that unquestioning allegiance to the union, not hard work, is what counts. La Quina's entire philosophy can be summed up in one word — loyalty.

The reward for devotion to La Quina is obvious to the little people. Even La Quina's mistress learned that lesson. Once a second-rate singer known as "La Estrellita," the little star, she now has a home finer than La Quina's, and owns an office building in Tampico and a motel in Texas.

The arrest of La Quina is the beginning of a cleanup that will benefit all Mexicans, even the oil workers. Salinas deserves applause for this house cleaning and needs encouragement to do more. Mexico's problems inevitably affect the United States. Millions of Mexicans seek refuge here and Mexico's $100 billion foreign debt threatens to become a burden for U.S. taxpayers.

If nothing else, we should care when our neighbor has the political will to act against a strong enemy for the good of people living in incredible poverty.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On April 2, 1917, President Woodrow Wilson asked Congress to declare war against Germany, saying, "The world must be made safe for democracy."

On this date:

In 1513, Spanish explorer Juan Ponce de Leon landed in Florida.

In 1792, Congress authorized establishment of the U.S. Mint.

In 1805, storyteller Hans Christian Andersen was born in Odense, Denmark.

In 1834, Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, the sculptor who created the Statue of Liberty, was born in Colmar, France.

In 1860, the first Italian Parliament met at Turin.

In 1865, Confederate President Jefferson Davis and most of his cabinet fled the Confederate capital of Richmond, Va.

In 1872, Samuel F.B. Morse, developer of the electric telegraph, died in New York.

Another View:

Don't send Marines!

President George Bush says he is "not ruling anything out" in the effort to curb the murderous drug war now raging in the nation's capital, including the use of National Guard or regular federal troops. Sens. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., have proposed a federal takeover of the city's police force. Mr. Rudman compared the situation — 114 murders so far this year — with that of a "Third World capital presided over by a despot."

No doubt the situation is serious, but with everyone tripping over themselves to look tough, few seem to have really thought through the implications of such "shock treatment." Would it really curb the rash of violence and mayhem? And are there alternatives available? The shock treatment that the federal government uses in its own back yard may have implications for other cities.

The enthusiasm for using the military against both domestic and foreign drug suppliers, especially on the part of newly appointed "drug czar" William Bennett, is understandable at first glance. It conveys the appearance of getting tough about drug traffickers. And the federal government probably can assert jurisdiction in the District of Columbia without too much difficulty. But has anybody thought about what the troops would actually do once they were on the scene?

Would they start making arrests, kicking down doors and conducting house-to-house searches for weapons and drugs? Or would they merely stand on street corners in hopes that their mere presence will be enough to deter the lawbreakers?

The British sent troops into Northern Ireland to administer some shock treatment 20 years ago. They are still there. Or suppose the presence of troops had the desired effect, decreasing the number of murders substantially and running the drug dealers out of town. What would happen after the troops left? Indeed, wouldn't it then be politically difficult to withdraw the soldiers for fear the dealers would return.

Troops are supposed to win wars against external foes. They are trained to kill or be killed. They have no training in the intricacies of individual civil rights, the exclusionary rule, probable cause, search warrants and all the other legal niceties a police officer must know to do his job effectively. Indeed, the Founders feared that a standing army would become an oppressive police power. And, inevitably, soldiers will start getting offers from dealers to "look the other way," and a whole new problem of corruption will start.

The problem Washington faces is not so much lack of police manpower as a lack of prison space. Mayor Marion Barry's plan to jail for five years anyone caught with an illegal weapon sounds fine, but to implement it would mean releasing lesser offenders. Something useful the feds might do is set up detention areas in disused military facilities.

Congress might look into ways of modifying the exclusionary rule, which prevents the use in court of evidence seized in a search conducted without probable cause. A review of other federal regulations that tie the hands of police could also be undertaken. Mr. Bennett can help expedite experimental education and treatment programs.

Getting a handle on the drug problem is not nearly so easy as sending in a battalion of the National Guard. In the long run, the drug scourge can be attacked only by convincing people that taking drugs inhibits them from reaching their fullest potential. The street thugs and dealers will disappear only when they buyers finally do.

Prestigious prizes part of spring scenery

It's prize time all over America. First the Oscars, then the Pulitzers. Next the Windermeres. Or is it the Ludwigs? At this time of year they come so thick and fast it's hard to keep them sorted out.

Russell Baker

Not that one doesn't know the difference. The Windermeres, taking their name from Oscar Wilde's sly 1890's side-splitter "Lady Windermere's Fan," are awarded to authors of the year's 10 best fan jokes.

The Ludwigs go to the year's three best symphonies containing choral movments by composers with hearing losses of more than 90 percent.

If people get muddled about Windermeres and Ludwigs it's because newspapers never call them "prestigious." To win the "prestigious" accolade, a prize must guarantee its winners they can raise their lecture fees 50 percent and still get as many bookings as Gerald Ford.

The Windermeres' lack of prestige results from the decline of the fan joke. It's not just that few Americans compose fan jokes anymore; American audiences don't want to hear fan jokes.

What modern Americans want to hear are luggage jokes. People who program Las Vegas conventions would probably pay $15,000 for a lecturer who wins the Gladstone prize for luggage jokes. But there isn't any Gladstone prize, prestigious though it would be if the suitcase cartel would wake up and create one.

That's what the fan industry did back at the turn of the century with the Windermeres. When fan tycoons discovered there was an advertising gold mine in cardboard fans bearing print ads for undertakers, a Windermere winner could double his old lecture fees simply by playing conventions of embalmers, florists and pipe-organ manufacturers.

With the advent of air-conditioning, of course, the fan was doomed and so was the Windermere's prestige. Today with all America immobilized in air-conditioned airports and nothing to do but worry about the fate of its luggage, it doesn't want fan jokes, it wants luggage jokes.

One award in danger of becoming as obsolete as the Windermere is the Tony. This, the last award of the spring prize season, is conferred in June for work in the Broadway theater.

Like the fan industry after air-conditioning was invented, the Broadway theater is in danger of joining the horse collar in oblivion. Its plight is evident this spring in an appalling shortage of new musicals worth a hoot, much less a Tony.

To lighten their embarrassment the Tony people have made "Jerome Robbins' Broadway" eligible for some of the musical awards, though it is not so much a new musical as a retrospective re-creation of Robbins's best production numbers in shows of the vanished golden age.

After the New York theater's murderous economics made the so-called "serious" non-musical play an endangered species, the musical has been Broadway's meal ticket. Lately, though, even musicals have been more about scenery than much else.

What's happening? Is it the onset of brain death? A case of Broadway clinging to fan jokes at a time when only luggage jokes speak to the American heart?

The Nobel Prizes, oddly, are never called "prestigious." This is because their cash value runs into six figures. In Prizeworld six-figure money is not merely prestigious, it is awesome.

Is it America's inordinate respect for big money that protects the Nobels from the abuse freely heaped on the thousands of other prizes distributed every spring?

The likelier explanation is that most Nobels are given for research in science, hence above criticism because incomprehensible to America's masses of science illiterates.

Lacking the faintest notion of what that Nobel research is all about, one relies on what the high-school physics teacher said 30 years ago, and cries "Gee whiz!"

On Nobel matters less arcane, skepticism comes more readily. Can a Literature Prize be any less absurd than a Ludwig when its givers award it for work written in languages none of them can read?

Can one economist really be superior to another when there is scarcely an economist alive who can forgo a chance to dismiss the bulk of his colleagues as ninnies?

Studying such questions can raise suspicion. What if Nobel's science prizes are awarded as quixotically as its Literature, Economics and Peace Prizes?

If it weren't for that big Nobel payday, would it be any more respectable than the tawdry Oscar and the gasping Tony? If...

Stop it! It's spring and, silly or not, spring is shad roe, and new asparagus, and prizes.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

'Sure cure' for flu may be voodoo to you

For ten days I had the flu. I don't remember feeling so rotten. Ever see a glass that has recently been emptied of buttermilk? I felt the way that glass looks.

Grizzard

I didn't go to the doctor because every time I go to the doctor, he puts me in the hospital and a guy slices my chest open.

I decided I would see if I could heal myself. I went for certain natural healing processes.

It took ten days, but I finally did return to the pink, and I am convinced it was my carefully selected home remedies that did the job.

I offered my story and my explanation of my remedies for the flu to various journals of medicine, but I was turned away each time.

"We don't print such drivel," I was told by one editor. "Your remedies are comparable to voodoo."

"Voodoo," the man said. Voodoo, indeed. I didn't resort to any voodoo; I used a little common sense and tossed in a little knowledge passed down from my grandmother who could cure everything from warts to an ingrown toenail. People came all the way from other counties to seek her medical counsel.

"Bury a dead chicken in your yard at midnight under a full moon," was Grandmother's cure for just about everything.

I didn't bury any dead chickens at midnight under any full moon, but what I did try I offer here at no other charge rather than what you paid for this newspaper. See if you can get your doctor's help for that price.

My remedies:

COCA-COLA ON CRUSHED ICE: Drink one every four hours but don't prepare it yourself. Have somebody — a friend, a lover, a husband or a wife — do it for you and have them bring it to you in bed.

The Coke and the ice will ease your head and settle your stomach and the realization there is somebody who feels sorry enough for you to wait on you hand and foot will make you feel even better.

WATCH OLD BLACK-AND-WHITE MOVIES ON TV: Anything with Barbara Stanwyck, Bette Davis, Robert Cummings or Claude Rains is perfect. Old movies calm the nerves. Stay away from any channels owned by Ted Turner, however. He's colorized all the old black-and-whites and seeing Claude Rains with a green face will make you feel sicker.

CALL YOUR FRIENDS AND WHINE: They feel good and you don't and that's not fair. Calling to whine does the most good when you know your friends are quite busy.

REFUSE TO BATHE: If you don't bathe, after about three days, you will smell like a dead chicken. This will drive away the germs that have attacked you, not to mention the individual who was bringing your Coke on crushed ice to your bedside.

TELL YOUR FAMILY AND FRIENDS YOU ARE RETHINKING THE WILL: You will be surprised how many suddenly will develop a keen interest in your health and offer to do anything to make you feel better so as to get on your good side. That's also how you get your Coke on crushed ice delivered to your bed again even after the smell gets thick enough to see it.

I guarantee you these methods will work. In the unlikely event they don't, then bury a dead chicken in your yard at midnight under a full moon and call me in the morning.

Terrorists triumph if fear rules choices

PARIS — No, I have to remind myself, it certainly isn't the first time I have succumbed to intimidation.

Flora Lewis

And yet it is with a degrading feeling I hadn't known before that I decided to change airlines to fly to the U.S., taking a less convenient but less threatened route.

Several years ago I stopped visiting Beirut. It would seem an absurd, almost provocative risk.

The Associated Press correspondent Terry Anderson has been kept in painful captivity there for more than four years, for no reason except the crazy idea that the whole United States and its policy can be humbled by attacking a few of its citizens.

The idea cannot be validated. But Terry Anderson should not be sacrificed. What to do? At the least, stay away.

And there are parts of certain cities I avoid, especially alone, especially at night.

At times I have crossed the street or made a detour so as not to confront a vague possibility of danger. I have my own rules of thumb for staying on the fringe of massive demonstrations that could turn into trampling riots.

In war zones I take what care I can to keep out of the line of fire, and I don't feel ashamed to duck or run when that seems advisable.

Prudence always seemed a sound approach to me. I don't ask for unnecessary trouble; I don't think it proves anything except foolhardiness.

A few times, quite unexpectedly, I have felt acute physical symptoms of fear, a light-headedness and constriction of the muscles, which leaves you with a sense that you have to concentrate very hard on just keeping normal control.

But it was always at the wrong time. I was imagining a danger that turned out not to be there. When there was a real but arbitrary threat, where would the next bomb or the next mortar round fall, a compensating fatalism set in that enabled useful reaction and precaution. There are no guarantees, but panic is no help.

Judgment has to rate the odds and the wisdom of fear. There are always things to watch out for, but I can't let them run my life and turn me into a cringing ninny. That is why I feel so uncomfortable about changing flights.

It's giving in to a vague, immeasurable menace deliberately magnified by its authors to proportions vastly beyond their capacity to harm. Their power is minimal. Their attempt to intimidate is almost all they have.

And I am angry, of course.

Angry with these people who try to inflate themselves into masters of the world with a few sordid criminal acts and rabid words.

When Ayatollah Khomeini offers a reward for the murder of Salman Rushdie and threatens all who distribute his book or defend him, it is not only free speech under attack.

Khomeini is trying to take us all hostage, in our own cities going about our own business.

We should mock his effrontery, not earnestly denounce him as the omnipotent scourge he pretends to be.

It serves him nicely that the European Community pulls its ambassadors out of Tehran in symbolic indignation at his antics, and then without a whisper of regret or recantation on his part sends them scurrying back.

He did not hesitate to gloat aloud at this proven ability to humiliate with a mere flick of his tongue.

The radicals in Iran have apparently benefited from this demonstration, despite a lost war and the terrible need for help in reconstruction. Deputy Foreign Minister Mohammed Javad Larijani, who argued for conciliation and opening to the West, has just been unceremoniously dumped.

After IBM announced that it was advising all its employees to avoid taking American planes in Europe and the Middle East, other companies said they too would have to consider the question.

A Conservative member of Britain's Parliament, Michael Mates, said it made sense because there might be vulnerability to legal action in the U.S. if there was no warning.

This is partly because of harsh debates in Commons over responsibility for the Pan Am plane blown up over Lockerbie, Scotland.

Was there security negligence? Should the public have been told that terrorists might act? What is reasonable caution and what is mindless surrender to a few fanatical thugs?

There are all kinds of dangers in the world, some increased by traveling. Airplanes crash for other reasons.

Automobiles are the biggest killers. Accidents can happen anywhere. I thought about all this.

Still, for some reason I don't understand, I changed my reservation at the last minute. I'm ashamed, and I resent being made to feel that way. The reign of fear is triumphing on the cheap because we are too ready to capitulate.

It's time to defy.

Luigi's staff shows honesty, integrity

Recently my girlfriend and myself had lunch at a local restaurant called Luigi's.

Upon returning from our meal, she had discovered that some of her jewelry was missing.

She then proceeded to call all of the places where she might have misplaced the jewelry. Luigi's included, but no one knew anything of it.

Later in the day the manager of Luigi's called her at work and said one of the busboys had found her missing jewelry. Not only was he kind enough to call her, but he personally returned it to her at her place of employment!

Thanks to this man and his staff for their honesty and integrity.

Adoption, not abortion should be supported

Most pro-choice groups such as Planned Parenthood, state that their mission is to ensure that every child is a loved and wanted child. These groups also support a woman's right to abort a child if it is not wanted. Each year 1.5 million children are aborted, and 98 percent of these abortions are for reasons other than the mother's life being in danger or the child being a product of rape or incest. So nearly 1.5 million children are aborted because they are unwanted but are they really unwanted?

Each year, while 1.5 million unwanted children are being killed, 1.6 million adoption requests go unanswered. By doing some simple arithmetic, you'll find that there really isn't such a thing as an unwanted child. How many abortions would be performed if the pro-choice groups such as Planned Parenthood directed the time, effort, and money they spend on supporting a woman's right to have an abortion toward encouraging and assisting women who don't want their babies to give them up for adoption? Let's give these wanted children a chance by supporting adoption, not abortion.

Will the U.S. make a fist or open its hand?

Albert Schweitzer, the greatest of the great humanitarians, once said that the degree of civilization achieved by a society is measured in proportion to the care and treatment of its animals.

Can we take this axiom of intelligent benevolence still further and apply it not only to our endangered and imbalanced wildlife and pet situations, but also to our fellow-human-being relationships? Are we willing to apply this, as well, to a rapidly engulfing "sea of troubles" that encroaches further and further into the receding shore of a once free and peaceful nation?

As problems loom daily on the horizon of a changing and frantic world, can we apply truth, selflessness, and intelligence to their satisfactory solutions? Sometimes the remembrance of the exquisite simplicity of the Golden Rule can change and elevate thought, consummating a resolution that benefits all. On occasion, a significant recollection such as Sir Winston Churchill's "post-Blitz" visits to the docks of London can be especially inspiring.

How long are we going to ignore and tolerate the waste and destruction of wildlife; pet population; children's minds, bodies, and souls; the English Language (bought with blood and tears); human dignity; education; decency; the ecological balance; morals; and "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"?

While we sit aghast astride the fence of indecision, mesmerized by hurry, worry, greed, administrative corruption creeps, the Soviets smirk and the immigrants inundate our schools, our employment pools, our health-care facilities and our peace of mind.

Every fiber of the sagging fabric of society is being stressed to the breaking point; can we do something before the final seam is ripped? Is there anybody out there who is willing to card, thread, spin, and weave a new fabric on the loom of human progress?

The most encouraging part of all this needed constructive action is that its leverage can be applied to any human relationship, parent/child — yes, human being/pigeon.

Our degree of civilization lies in our own hands. Will we close the fist of malice and greed over it, or will we open the outstretched hand — wider and higher — toward beauty, justice, tolerance, tranquility, benevolence, true equality, and harmony?

Think it; live it; do it, America, now!

In response to Teddy Maddox's recent tirade on Charley Reese and his column, I must say that I disagree with Teddy on all counts except one — his right to agree or disagree as he sees fit. However, I think Teddy is way out of the ball park when he asks our paper to stop printing Charley's column.

Let me ask you Teddy, has anyone or anything ever forced you to read Charley's column? Just remember, you are not the only apple on the tree. I and many of my friends and acquaintances like Charley, and we look forward to reading it each and every time it's printed.

Keep the faith and keep Reese's column

I regularly read your editorial page and have noticed of late that certain people around here have been complaining about Mr. Charley Reese's column and the "crazy, half-cocked" things he's been writing of. If precedent holds here, (like elsewhere in the U.S.) some minister or city official or whatever will put a little pressure on the local newspaper to cease buying this syndicated columnist's writing because it's either unchristian or it's liable to cause the natives to rise up and not pay the parking tickets, etc.

Whatever the excuse, generally when some newsman or columnist starts poking the stick at a soft spot, the heat goes on and soon thereafter the offending columnist is dropped.

My hearty congratulations to whomever has the "grit" to effect the decision to subscribe to Charley Reese's syndicated column and stick to it. This columnist holds opinions closer to the mainstream than most will admit and if very many people could take time out of their busy lives to see what goes on in our state houses and the Federal government and how manipulated our information gets — perhaps their attitude would change a little more and then, of course, the uninformed would call them crazy, and half-cocked too!

Brushy Bill Roberts legend in his own time

My father, R.H. Beasley of Monahans, brought The Legend of Billy the Kid story (text by Linda Anderson) to my attention while visiting Easter weekend.

The article about Brushy Bill Roberts was very interesting to me especially after I learned that my father knew Brushy Bill Roberts or Billy the Kid from 1935-37 in Gladewater, Texas. In fact, Brushy Bill and his wife lived two houses down from my dad's family in a settlement about a mile outside of Gladewater.

My father said the following about Brushy Bill: "When I knew Brushy Bill I was about 14 or 15 years old. He went by the name of Brushy Bill Roberts at that time. He was a likable person and known around town for his cowboy stories. Bill wore a cowboy hat and a red bandana around his neck every day. He didn't own a horse or car and walked everywhere he went. Once he told me he was 77 years old and that in his younger days he was a horse wrangler for Jesse James. He never claimed to be Billy the Kid back then although he was plenty old enough to be."

My father isn't sure if Brushy Bill Roberts was Billy the Kid and neither am I. We both agree that the mystery of Brushy Bill as The Kid will live on. There was one thing my dad said he was sure of that differed from Tunstill's notes on Brushy Bill. "Brushy Bill Roberts was 77 years old and certainly was no plain clothes policeman when I knew him."

Readers' views on: Poisoned birds

Birds also killed by lawn pesticides

If you are bothered by the dead and dying pigeons on the downtown streets, stop and think! Many more beneficial birds are killed every time yards and trees are sprayed with chemicals or artificial fertilizers.

Is your lush green yard worth the lives of so many beneficial birds?

You don't see or handle the multitude of deformed or dying birds that result from spraying that I do. These birds come from neighborhoods where people spray or have the job done by lawn services. The birds either suffer a long and agonizing death or slowly die from starvation as they go blind. Many of their young are born with only a wing and leg on one side.

The large dying pigeon on the bare street is easily seen and people are horrified by its unnecessary suffering, but they don't see the beautiful insect-eating birds dying the same way in their own shrubbery.

Shouldn't we be just as concerned about more humane treatment for the birds in our own yards as we are for the pigeons downtown?

Poisoned birds still can fly up to 40 miles

I would like to add a little information that has not so far been added on the pigeon killing. If a pigeon eats the poison early before it has had other food, it will die within a short time. But if the pigeon has any food in its craw, then it will die a very slow death and can fly as far as 40 miles away from where it was poisoned.

This is not only cruel, but a danger to the environment. These poisoned pigeons can be caught by eagles, hawks, and other birds/animals of prey and, in turn, they too will be poisoned. Domestic animals as well can be poisoned by either catching and eating a dying or dead bird.

Some people seem to have forgotten that Midland is a bird sanctuary, that we have many species of birds migrating through this area in spring and fall. How many of the migrant birds are going to be put in danger from this poisoned food? I am sure we will be told none, but this is an untruth.

The smart way to rid the city of excess pigeons would be through birth control. One should check with an Audubon Society or the EPA; they will be more than happy to help with a humane, safe solution.

Soviet elections may mark beginning of end for communism

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — In what history will surely record as one of the most momentous events of this century, the recent elections in the Soviet Union marked what I believe may be the beginning of the end of communist totalitarian control of that country and its empire.

Hearst

The Communist Party will continue to rule the Soviet Union for some time — perhaps years. The elections were deliberately rigged to make sure of that. But Marxist communist ideology is not likely to continue indefinitely dominating the Russian people and their conquered ethnic nationalities with the one-party dictatorship imposed by V.I. Lenin more than 70 years ago and ruthlessly maintained by his successors until Mikhail Gorbachev came to power.

The same type of people power that brought an end to the Ferdinand Marcos dictatorship in the Philippines sowed in the Soviet Union the seeds of democracy.

It led to the election of numerous independents, mostly supporters of Gorbachev's reform program, and to the defeat of several leading communist officials in Moscow, Leningrad and elsewhere. Full results of the balloting will not be released for days pending a final tally.

However, the elections last Sunday for the new Congress of People's Deputies appear to have swept in a substantial minority of independent candidates, creating the first opposition group in government since Lenin established the communist dictatorship.

In a quarter of the 1,500 electoral districts, no one ran against the party's candidate — perhaps out of fear. One had to show an identity card before entering the polling booth, but the ballot showed no voter's name when cast in the ballot box, and voters were allowed to cross out any name on the candidate list.

In Leningrad alone, 130,000 voters crossed out the name of the regional party leader, who was thus rejected along with the two other leading Leningrad communist officials.

Voters were to elect 1,500 members of the new Congress of People's Deputies, but the party reserved enough additional seats to assure a strong majority against nonparty winners. The elections, therefore, were not fully contested free elections.

However, they were the freest elections held in the Soviet Union since 1917, and it is a step, albeit small, toward an eventual democratic political system in the Soviet Union.

The Congress of People's Deputies will be the highest government body. It will elect the president of the Soviet Union, undoubtedly Gorbachev, for a five-year term, and members of the Supreme Soviet — the parliament.

One of the many successful opposition candidates in the new-style Soviet elections was historian Roy Medvedev.

In a Moscow-Paris telephone interview with our chief European correspondent, Bernard Kaplan, Medvedev described the results as an economic rebellion by ordinary people no longer willing to accept the "drudgery" of their lives under the communist system.

It was, he added, because of the people's "disgust" with economic conditions that some of the high-ranking party and government officials, running unopposed for seats in the new Congress, were repudiated by voters who struck their names from the ballot papers.

One of the biggest upsets for the Communist Party hardliners was the landslide victory of Boris Yeltsin, a former close associate of Gorbachev, who was deposed last year as the party leader in Moscow because of his caustic criticism of high-ranking officials for luxury living.

"What the vote said," Medvedev told Bernie, "was that the people aren't prepared to live on promises of a better life indefinitely. The endurance of the traditionally long-suffering Russians is wearing thin."

My own sympathies are with the Russian people. They suffered terribly during the Nazi invasion of Russia and they fought valiantly to help us win World War II.

During my visits to Russia to interview Nikita Khrushchev and other Soviet leaders, I found the ordinary Russians with whom we came in contact in Moscow, Leningrad and elsewhere very friendly.

I experienced that warm friendliness in food shops, restaurants, theaters and even with people on the streets with whom we struck up a conversation through our interpreters.

In their sense of humor, quickness to smile, and willingness to work hard, I found them similar to our own American people.

I am confident they don't want war with us, and I don't believe they want to dominate the world for communist ideology or any other reason. Given the opportunity, I'm confident they would opt for democracy and the free enterprise capitalistic system.

The week concludes with one of the major events. — at least for die-hard basketball fans! It's the annual Midland Jaycess' Texas vs. USA Junior College All-Star Game, which begins at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Chaparral Center. Billy Tubbs, basketball coach at the University of Oklahoma, will speak at the banquet on Friday night.

Tubbs has found a happy hunting ground at Midland College. He got Ricky Grace, Mookie Blaylock and Skeeter Henry in the last three years and has signed current MC star Smokey McCovery.

McCovery will be on the Texas team, along with Larry Johnson of Odessa, Keith Stewart of South Plains, Carl Herrera of Jacksonville, who was MVP of the 1988 Chaparral Classic, and many others. OC's Dennis Helms will coach the Texas squad, which has won all three previous All-Star games.

Phi Theta Kappa chapter at Midland College is having a Trivial Pursuit Contest Saturday at 10 a.m. in the Midland High Activities Center, pitting teams from Phi Theta Kappa against faculty-staff teams. Since PTK is comprised of honor students in community colleges, it should be a tight contest. The last time the two groups played Trivial Pursuit, the faculty won in sudden-death. The fund-raising event benefits the Midland Victim Assistance Program.

Midland High's drama groups advance to area competition

"For the first time in at least five years, both Midland high schools have earned the right to compete in the area one-act play contest, and its probably been ten years since Midland schools have taken both the best actor and best actress titles in district competion," noted Horace Griffin, drama instructor at Lee High School.

In UIL competition, Midland's high school drama groups acted on a challenge to sweep district in the one-act play contest.

Both Midland High and Lee High teams will compete Saturday in Area 2 5-A competition at Snyder. Midland's high school teams will meet drama troupes from Dallas, the Panhandle and West Texas.

Performing on the Permian High School auditorium stage in Odessa, Lee High's Rico Enriquez earned the title of best actor. The same stage yielded a best actress award for Midland High School's Elaine McKinney.

Both schools also produced All-Star Cast members. Honorees were Ashley Wood of Lee High School and Jamie Milios of Midland High School.

Honorable mention All-Star Cast members included Clarence King and Luke Swift of Lee. Lee High School won distinction as the campus earning the most individual awards in district competition. The winning plays were Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman," performed by Lee students and John Guare's "House of Blue Leaves," performed by Midland High School students.

Performing students for Midland High School were: Kirk Billings, Mickey Boyd, Laura Keller, Elaine McKinney, Stephen Madrid, Greg Milios, Jamie Milios, Susanna Morrow and Greg Snow.

Lee High School particpants were: Andy Baker, Rico Enriquez, Sara Coffey, Brenda Drake, Kim Gibson, Todd Giese, Michelle Hayes, Clarence King, Jessica Lesser, Maggie Roe, Dee Rose, Matt Rose, Tori Stutes, Luke Swift, Michelle Watkins and Ashley Wood.

Drama students are under the direction of Bob Fennell, Midland High School, and Horace Griffin, Lee High School.

The points earned by the Midland ISD troupes put the city's two high schools in the lead for UIL District 4-5A literary contests. To date, Lee has earned 67 points and Midland High has 59. Other district schools trail with: Odessa Permian, 40; Abilene's Cooper High, 16; and San Angelo, Odessa and Abilene High, with 12 points each.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

The guidance counseling staff of Lee High School is holding four nighttime neighborhood meetings with parents of students identified as academically "at risk."

The state has given four guidelines of identifying students who are academically at risk. Guidelines for students who are in grades 7-12:

- Who were not advanced from one grade level to the next two or more school years;
- Have mathematics or reading skills that are two or more years below grade level;
- Have not maintained an average equivalent to 70 on a scale of 100 in two or more courses in a semester or is not expected to graduate within four years of the date the student began the ninth grade; or
- Did not perform satisfactorily on the current level of the TEAMS test.

Any student who meets one or more of these criteria is identified as "at risk." The Lee High staff is working to confer with parents of these students.

Parents of students who have been identified as at risk have received letters from the students' grade-level counselors informing them of this identification.

Parents are asked to attend one of four evening neighborhood meetings: April 4, at Lee Freshman High cafeteria; April 6, Goddard Junior High cafeteria; April 11, Ben Milam elementary cafeteria; and April 13, Alamo Junior High auditorium.

All meetings begin at 7 p.m.

RELIGION in brief

Dallas abortion clinics picketed

DALLAS (AP) — A handful of white-robed Ku Klux Klan members picketed three Dallas abortion clinics Saturday, but were met at each place by pro-choice advocates.

The demonstrations were peaceful; Klan members carried signs with slogans like "Help the future - stop abortion" and pro-choice advocates asked passing motorists to honk in support of their view and chanted slogans.

"There's been no kind of conflict, just people exercising their right to free speech," said Diane Hotinski of a Southern Methodist University group called Students for Choice.

"We don't hate women, we're just against abortion," said James Knight, a Dallas-area KKK member, as he and five others walked for an hour in front of the Routh Street Women's Clinic.

"A lot of people don't realize the Klan is against abortion, pornography and other slime in our society," Knight said.

"Everyone knows how horrifying the Klan is," said Victoria Hellman, an administrator of the clinic who said it was the second time KKK protestors had picketed the facility.

None of the well-known right-to-life groups marched with the KKK.

"I'm not surprised none of the right-to-life advocates are here," said Daphne Spray, who was marching with the pro-choice group. "There are not a lot of people who support the KKK."

Can Bakker rebuild?

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Defrocked PTL leader Jim Bakker is staying at a Florida retreat for ministers suffering from emotional distress and plans to re-establish his TV ministry while awaiting his fraud and conspiracy trial, a retreat official said Saturday.

"We extended an invitation to him," said the Rev. John Dawsey, chairman of the board of directors of the Lake George Ministries Retreat in the tiny community of Lake George, Fla., about 40 miles west of Daytona Beach.

Dawsey, who is pastor of the Church of God in the nearby community of Salt Springs, Fla., said Bakker arrived Wednesday at the 30-acre retreat.

Under terms of his bail, he was allowed to travel to Florida. On Friday, a federal magistrate in Charlotte gave him permission to move there.

Dawsey would not say whether Bakker's wife, Tammy Faye, or other family members were staying at the retreat.

"It's a place for ministers to come and rest and recuperate," Dawsey said in a telephone interview. "Most pastors that come here have been hurt or devastated or have emotional problems or distress."

Bakker received the go-ahead to move to Florida after U.S. Magistrate Paul Taylor was told Bakker has found a location in Lake George to live and to broadcast the "Jim and Tammy" show, at least temporarily.

The Bakkers had been broadcasting his show from the living room of their home outside Pineville, N.C., near Charlotte. But they were told the operation violated Mecklenburg County's zoning ordinance and must cease by May 7.

Bakker resigned from the PTL ministry in March 1987 after a 1980 tryst with a church secretary, Jessica Hahn, and subsequent payments to her were revealed. The Assemblies of God later stripped him of his ministerial credentials, and the PTL ministry filed for protection under the bankruptcy laws.

In December, Bakker and his former top PTL aide, Richard Dortch, were indicted on mail fraud, wire fraud and conspiracy charges stemming from a 16-month federal grand jury probe into PTL and its fund-raising practices.

Bakker, who is free on $50,000 bond, must agree to conditions outlined by Taylor, according to court documents obtained by The Charlotte Observer.

Bakker cannot leave Florida without permission from court officials and he must maintain weekly and monthly contact by telephone and in person with court officials in Jacksonville.

Orders gain approval

New York Times News Service

Pope John Paul II has given a passing grade to American religious orders in a letter bringing to a close what was once viewed by those orders as a hostile Vatican inquiry into the changes in their activities and organization over the past two decades.

In the 3,000-word letter, addressed to Roman Catholic bishops in the United States and made public Wednesday, the pope praised the largely positive assessment of religious orders reached in an evaluation the bishops carried out at his request from 1983 to 1986. He also affirmed the status of the two leading conferences representing men's and women's religious orders.

The assessment followed a period when many American religious orders, inspired by the Second Vatican Council, had democratized their governing procedures, revoked many strict rules of dress and behavior and grown increasingly active in social and political causes.

When John Paul called for the evaluation in 1983, there was a "fear of a crackdown," Archbishop John R. Quinn of San Francisco recalled. But eventually the commission of investigating bishops, which Quinn headed, established much agreement with leaders of religious orders.

Thousands visit church where crucifix closed eyes

AMBRIDGE, Pa. (AP) — The curious, the devout and the doubting Thomases are flocking by the hundreds to a Roman Catholic church to gaze upon a life-size crucifix, whose once-open eyes reportedly closed during a Good Friday service.

"I brought everyone who could fit in my car," said Evelyn Borrelli, 44, of Glassport, who drove about 40 miles with two children and five other adults to this Ohio River mill town on Friday.

"I wanted to be as close as I could be, and I wanted my children to experience it too. I truly believe it was a miracle," she said.

Since Easter, when the Good Friday occurrence was reported in the media, more than 1,000 people from several states have been visiting the Holy Trinity Church each day, according to the Rev. Vincent Cvitkovic, the church pastor.

The parking lot has been continually full, and there's a constant stream of traffic on the narrow, brick street in front of the white church 15 miles northwest of Pittsburgh.

A spokesman for Bishop Donald Wuerl, head the Roman Catholic diocese of Pittsburgh, said church officials are withholding judgment on the event until they can complete an investigation.

But many of the worshipers say that, miracle or not, they feel better after gazing at the luminescent statue suspended on a cross 15 feet above the altar.

"It's touching. You feel cleansed," said Joanne Smallwood, 66, of nearby Aliquippa.

"I feel a little bit calmer within myself," said Louise Zbihley, 51, also of Aliquippa. "It just made my faith a little bit stronger."

The downcast eyes, which now appear as small slits that conceal the pupils, were about one-third open when the plaster crucifix was moved in January from a corner of the church where it hung at eye-level. It was suspended in a more prominent position in front of a modern stained-glass window depicting a resurrected Christ.

Cvitkovic said he often pointed out the crucifix to his congregation of 300 families, saying it was unusual in that it depicted a still-living Christ, with open eyes and mouth.

Domenic Leo of Beaver, an artist who helped restore the 58-year-old statue in January and had touched up the eyes with acrylic paint, confirmed the eyes were open when the crucifix was hung.

But during a three-hour prayer meeting on Good Friday, worshipers noticed the eyes had almost closed.

Cvitkovic said it would be nearly impossible for someone to have tampered with the crucifix because the church is locked when services are not held.

"I don't know how to explain it," said Don Otto of Coraopolis, who attended the Good Friday prayer meeting. "It was like electricity running through you. It was an overwhelming experience. Tears came to me."

A member of the Queen of Peace prayer group, which studies the Virgin Mary's reported manifestations in the small Yugoslavian village of Medjugorje, claimed he then received a spiritual message while on his knees praying following the service.

Those who have come to Holy Trinity since the Good Friday event sit quietly, hands folded and eyes transfixed on the crucifix.

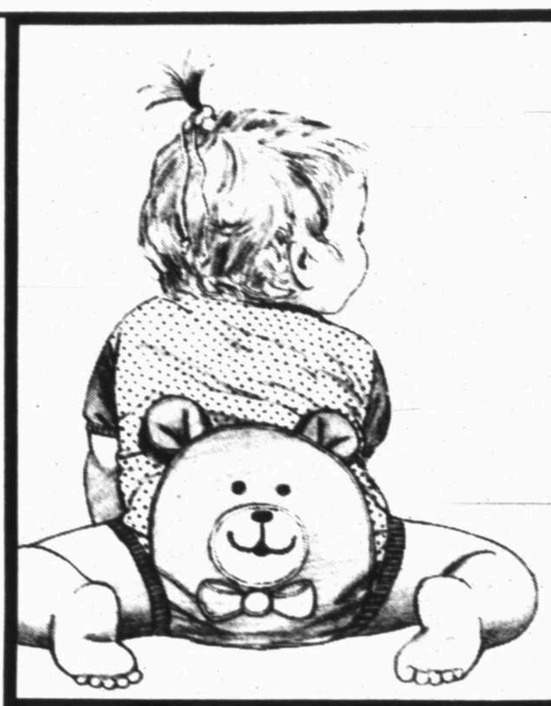

Some, like Clare Paonessa who brought her 4-year-old deaf daughter, seek religious healing.

"She can use all the help she can get through the Blessed Mother," said Mrs. Paonessa, of Sharpsburg.

Some people are clearly moved, breaking into tears, while others come only out of curiosity.

"I'm kind of skeptical," said Betsy O'Donnell, 50, of Pittsburgh. "People want miracles because of all the unhappiness in the world."

Health problems not serious, abortion foes assert

NEW YORK (AP) — The "bad old days" before abortion was legalized were not so bad, say anti-abortion advocates who contend women's lives would not be imperiled if abortion should be outlawed once again.

They argue that better antibiotics, intensive care units and surgical techniques were already halting the serious bleeding, infections and other complications of illegal abortions before the U.S. Supreme Court overturned state bans on abortions in 1973.

"Legalization of abortion in the United States apparently did not save a single woman's life," asserted Dr. John Willke of Cincinnati, president of the National Right to Life Committee.

He contends that before 1973 there were not many illegal abortions and says that very few women died from abortions.

Federal health officials agree that statistics show the death rate from complications of illegal abortions was declining before 1973.

But supporters of women's right to abortion dispute that a renewed ban on abortions would not have serious health consequences. They note there are no statistics on the number of women who suffered non-fatal health problems from illegal abortions.

The debate over abortion is intensifying as the Supreme Court prepares to hear arguments April 26 over Missouri regulations that restrict the availability of abortions. Both sides expect the court to use the case to reexamine the landmark Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized abortions in 1973.

Opponents of Roe-Wade, including the Bush administration, are asking the court to declare there is no constitutional right to abortion and return to the states the power to restrict or outlaw abortions.

In a telephone interview, Willke said "nobody has the slightest idea" how many illegal abortions took place before 1973.

However, he said, the number of abortion-related deaths was more concrete because "a perforated uterus — which is evident on autopsy — a massive infection, a hemorrhage ... (make it) pretty obvious what has happened."

Willke said that in the 1950s, an average of 250 women a year were reported to have died in the United States due to illegal abortions. But by 1966, while abortion was still illegal everywhere, the annual number of reported deaths had dropped to 128.

In 1972, the year before Roe-Wade, 5 million pregnancies and 39 abortion-related deaths were reported.

After 1973, when the ban ended in all states, "illegal abortion presumably disappeared," Willke said. "If, in fact, the elimination of illegal abortion eliminated back alleys, there should have been a perceptible drop in the number of women dying. That didn't happen. The line didn't even blip from 1967 to 1973 and 1974. ... It just kept going down at the same slow rate. There was no evidence of a decline in mortality from legalization."

Dr. Hami Atrash, acting chief of pregnancy epidemiology at the federal Centers for Disease Control, said, "The trend has been going down since 1940, just like for any other cause of death."

The CDC did not begin keeping thorough records on abortion-related deaths until 1972. It has two sets of slightly inconsistent figures covering some years before 1972 that essentially back up the anti-abortion group's figures.

Sandy Smith, a spokeswoman for the CDC's National Center for Health Statistics, said it was possible some doctors falsified death certificates to protect victims of illegal abortions.

"There's no way to know," said Atrash. "Even today, some people say women die of abortions and they're not reported."

The CDC also does not have figures on how many women suffered severe bleeding, infections, hysterectomies and other complications from abortions but survived.

David Andrews, acting president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, said statistics from the time "are not terribly reliable because it was an illegal procedure and nobody kept count."

"But people who lived through that period know that women were dying, women were maimed, many women lost their fertility" due to botched abortions, Andrews said.

Willke predicted that if abortion should become illegal again, about 100,000 women a year would have the procedure anyway.

An estimated 1.5 million abortions have been performed annually since 1973.

"I do know that this time around, illegal abortions will be considerably safer than they were," Willke said. "People who do them have had a great deal of experience."

Andrews disagreed.

"Doctors who are capable of providing the service ... would not risk their professional careers," he said. "What you would get would be inadequately trained, back-alley practitioners — probably people who are not doctors — who simply have as their goal the exploitation of women."

Willke says the best ways to address the problem of unwanted pregnancies would be to grant tax incentives for adoption and place nonwhite children with white adoptive parents.

He contends a significant percentage of all abortions are "birth control abortions."

"People know they have this backstop so they take chances," he said. "... When you can't get abortions, you're more careful — or you don't do it (have sex)."

New York served as an abortion haven

By KILEY ARMSTRONG

NEW YORK (AP) — Women seeking alternatives to "back alley" abortions found a scattering of oases even before the U.S. Supreme Court legalized abortions 16 years ago.

Most of the attention focused on New York, which quickly became a mecca for women who wanted to end their pregnancies after the Legislature erased a ban on abortions in 1970.

New York wasn't the first state to ease abortion restrictions, but it was the only one that did not limit abortions to state residents and it was one of only three that did not require the consent of a parent or spouse.

Women seeking abortions began flooding into the state.

The first legal abortion in the state was performed July 1, 1970, and by the time the Supreme Court made abortions legal nationwide on Jan. 22, 1973, nearly 400,000 women had traveled to New York to terminate pregnancies.

They found clean facilities, counseling and a matter-of-fact candor that contrasted sharply with the shadowy world of illegal abortions.

Abortion clinic staff members, some sporting pink carnations in their lapels for easy recognition, met flights at airports and escorted patients into vans or limousines.

The Alan Guttmacher Institute says legal abortions were performed for 48,000 women from other states in 1970, 155,000 in 1971, 172,000 in 1972 and 84,000 in 1973. New York residents had 41,000 abortions in 1970, 101,000 in 1971, 110,000 in 1972 and 120,000 in 1973.

The rush tapered off after the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade decision. But supporters of the right to an abortion fear the current court may reconsider that ruling when it hears arguments in a case involving Missouri abortion rules April 26.

About 80 clinics and hospitals were licensed to perform abortions in New York City. Each year, they aborted as many pregnancies as there were live births in the city, said Jean Pakter, who was director of the health department's Bureau of Maternity Services and Family Planning.

Polly Rothstein, director and cofounder of the Westchester Coalition for Legalized Abortion, recalled limousines from posh, private clinics "meeting patients at airports and bringing them to abortion clinics in New York, for no questions asked, safe abortions."

A visit to one such clinic as an observer in 1972 "was an eye-opener for me," she said.

"It was a blessing — just a blessing for people to have it done by a doctor in a sterile clinic. Breaking the law, the sneaking around, the anxiety attached to it — 'Will I get it? Will I get it?' — was removed," she said.

"We were seeing women coming from all over the country," said Libby Antarsh, then director of the Eastern Women's Center. "Many of the women who came — really, there were a lot of young girls — had never been to New York. Some had never flown or been out of their small towns. They were terrified.

"The waiting room was enormous, but on Saturdays not an inch of floor space was visible," she said. "The patients and visitors, mostly jeaned, smoking, young, scared, blond, from (states like) Ohio, were everywhere."

The center provided abortions seven days a week, with a sliding fee scale that topped at $150, and ran a free van service to and from LaGuardia Airport.

"There was a counselor on board as well as a driver. We would meet the flights, try to calm them down, talk to them about what they might expect for the day," said Ms. Antarsh. "You can imagine the tension and feelings of those young women."

The patients went home the same day, she said. "It was easier for young women to have an unexplained absence for (just) a day. On a Saturday, they could fly in the morning, come home at night and no one would know about it."

MEASLES

Measles or Rubeola is different from German measles or Rubella. It is caused by a virus which is transmitted from one person to another through respiratory tract secretions.

The incubation period, which is the time from when one is exposed to the virus to the time symptoms start is 10-12 days.

The patient with measles starts to spread the virus from about the fifth day of his incubation period to the first few days of the typical rash. This means that he was infectious and probably infecting others several days before he knew that he was sick. The most contagious time is actually just before the rash appears.

The symptoms of measles are fever, brassy cough, red watery eyes, abdominal pains, diarrhea, headaches and eye pain aggravated by bright light. The rash is bright red and starts on the face and spreads downward. A diagnostic feature of measles is the presence of Koplik's spots on the mucous membrane inside the mouth. These spots are white, and look like salt granules stuck to the buccal mucosa. The red, watery eyes and eye pain caused by bright light constitutes a recognizeable pattern of clues to the experienced examiner.

TREATING MEASLES

Since measles is a virus infection and there is no specific treatment for it, the best therapy includes bed rest, judicious use of acetominophen to control fever, cough suppressants if the cough is troublesome, increased humidity and a darkened room. This often is all that is needed. The patient should also be isolated until the third day of the rash.

About 10 percent of patients with measles develop complications, mainly secondary bacterial infections such as middle ear infections, mastoiditis or pneumonia and they are treated with appropriate antibiotics.

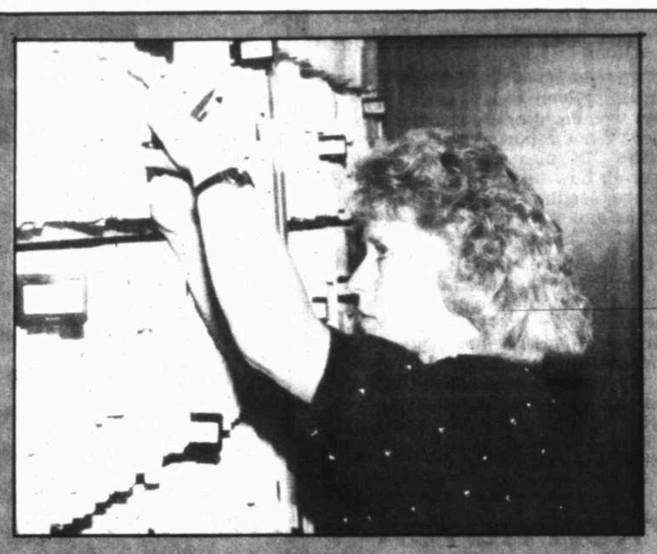

VACCINATIONS

Measles vaccination is accomplished by the injection of a single dose of vaccine in which live but weakened (attenuated) measles virus is present. This produces rapid and long-lasting protection in about 95 percent of the vaccinated persons.

Measles vaccination usually is given in combination with the mumps and rubella vaccine in the so-called MMR (Measles, Mumps, Rubella) vaccine. The shot usually is given to children at 15 months.

Since measles vaccine involves a live, though weakened virus, the vaccination itself may produce a mild case of measles. This produces fever and a very faint rash about 10 days after vaccination. This, however, is not communicable.

The book states, "Where there is doubt about the details of the measles immunization history, vaccination should be carried out, as no deleterious effects have been observed following re-vaccination in previously vaccinated or naturally immune individuals."

Shelly Holm, R.R.A., pulls a Medical Record for review.

The Growing 'Heart' Of A Hospital

Its role has grown in importance until this one department almost has become the "heart" of the hospital.

With the increasing role that Diagnostic Related Groups (DRGs) play in how hospitals are reimbursed for Medicare-/Medicaid patients, the quality of the Medical Records Department can determine the financial future of a healthcare institution.

Shelly Holm, R.R.A., joined Physicians and Surgeons Hospital recently as manager of the Medical Records Department. Previously, she had been employed at Bozeman, Mont., Deaconess Hospital.

"The Medical Records Department plays a major role in the financial aspect of the hospital due to the Prospective Payment System utilized by Medicare/Medicaid," she said. Under PPS, the hospital is reimbursed for its care of Medicare/Medicaid patients according to illnesses. Each illness is placed into a DRG, and the government has established various reimbursement limits for those categories.

When a patient is discharged, it is Ms. Holm's job to review that person's medical records to determine a specific reason for the patient's hospitalization, taking into consideration any existing medical conditions. "This is done to determine the optimum reimbursement for the hospital," Ms. Holm said.

It is not a singular job. She requires the help of the physicians and each hospital department. "All departments that are related to patient care tie into Medical Records," she said.

Once she has assigned a DRG to that record, the physician also must agree before Medicare/Medicaid can be billed. "The physician has to sign an attestation statement where he certifies all diagnoses and procedures coded are accurate," she said. It works as a checks and balances system involving the patient, the physician and the hospital.

And as of April 1, all physicians offices will have to code their Medical Records in the same manner as hospitals must now follow, she noted.

Before 1983 and the institution of DRGs, Medical Records personnel "were more like clerks who filed Medical Records and only retrieved them for statistical studies," she said.

Today, the job for Medical Records personnel has become a technical position, requiring extensive knowledge of medical terminology, IDC-9-CM coding, DRGs, medical conditions, and Medicare-/Medicaid policies and procedures.

It's business, law and medicine all rolled into one," Ms. Holm said:

For Maximum Benefit, Take As Directed

By CAMILLE SABBEY, R.Ph.
HPI Healthcare Services, Inc.

With a meal or without. Before breakfast or after the evening meal. These are a few of the decisions a person taking prescription medications will have to make.

How to take the medicine to obtain the maximum effect of the drug depends on the medication and the medical problem.

Following is a list of drugs and their generic names along with recommendations on how each should be taken.

If someone is taking tetracyclines (symacyn), or doxcycline and vibramycin,that person should avoid consuming any antacids, iron, salt, milk or other calcium products one hour before or two hours after taking the tetracyclines.

Medications for the stomach such as cimetidine (Tagamet), ranitidine (Zantac), sucralfate (carafate) should be taken half an hour before eating.

Lasix (Furosemide) and Dyazide (Triamterene) and hydrochlorothiazide are medications to lower blood pressure. It accomplishes this by causing the patient to urinate frequently, thus ridding the body of excess fluid. However, these medications should be taken in the morning with breakfast.

Medications that help control diabetes should be taken half an hour before meals or as the physician prescribes to get the medicine into the system for the maximum effect.

Anyone taking medications for relief of inflammation, stiffness or joint pain should consume the drugs with their meals or with antacid to reduce the amount of stomach irritation the medicines can cause. Falling into this category are Sulindal (Clinoril), Naproxen (Naprosyn), Phenybutazone (Buzaolidin), Ibuprofen (Motrin), Indomenthacin (Indocin), and Piroxicam (Feldene).

With all medications, a patient should follow directions given by the physician.

On-Site Programs Reduce Corporate Health Costs

By JERRY L. COCHRAN, M.D.
Founder and Medical Director
The Texas Institute of Sports Medicine

One of the largest concerns, both for the government and for corporate America, is the ever-escalating costs of health care. In 1985, American health care expenditures totaled $425 billion, about $1,721 per person, a record 10.7 percent of the Gross National Product.

Last month, the Texas Institute of Sports Medicine, in conjunction with the Cooper Clinic and the Institute for Aerobics Research, presented the first of a series of symposia on reducing corporate health care costs. Dr. Brenda Mitchell, director of Behavioral Sciences and Health Promotion, presented some startling facts:

In 1983, employer health-related costs for the average hourly employee was $2,455 or 11.8 percent of payroll; this yielded a business-wide health care bill of more than $101 billion.

--American businesses spent about $90 billion in health insurance premiums in 1984, 38 percent of their pretax profits, more than they paid to their shareholders.

--Government estimates put the annual direct cost to business for cardiovascular disease at more than $16 billion.

--The American Heart Association estimates that more than $52 million man-days of productivity are lost each year because of cardiovascular diseases.

--About 30 million workers (30 percent of employed Americans) have high blood pressure or are taking antihypertensive medication.

--Almost 125,000 deaths occur among employed people each year because of high blood pressure-related cardiovascular disease.

--About 29 million workdays (more than $2 billion in earnings) are lost because of high blood pressure-related diseases.

--Among employed persons, the number of deaths from high blood pressure-related disease is more than 10 times greater than the number of deaths from industrial accidents.

Dr. Mitchell also indicated the benefits of worksite health promotion:

--A large number of controlled research studies have shown that worksite health promotion programs can positively affect employee health and fitness (i.e., reductions in weight, blood pressure, blood cholesterol and smoking rates, improvements in exercise capacity, stress management skills and others).

--Several studies have documented the effects of worksite health promotion programs on employee absenteeism and health care costs.

--At Prudential, a 20.1 percent reduction in average disability days was seen for program participants.

--Among Canadian Life Assurance Company employees, the most active participants experienced nearly a 50 percent drop in average absenteeism.

--In the Dallas Independent School District program, a reduction in absences of 2.1 days per year were seen for program participants, yielding actual savings of $149,578 for the district.

--The Prudential program led to a 45.7 percent reduction in average major medical costs.

--Tenneco reports a 48.2 percent ($553) difference in annual medical costs between exercisers and non-exercisers in its program.

--At Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Indiana, long-term (4.5 years) differences indicated that for every $1 in health care costs for program participants, $1.73 was spent on non-participants.

--At Prudential, a 1.91 benefit-to-cost ratio for program participants was shown; thus, for every $1 spent on the program, Prudential realized a $1.91 savings in short-term disability and medical care costs.

--At the H-E-B Independent School District, the benefit-to-cost ratio for the one-year program was 1.41.

--In the Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Indiana program, the benefit-to-cost ratio for the five years of the program was 1.45.

Given these facts, it becomes obvious that the most efficient method to reduce health care costs is by preventive medicine. It is much cheaper to enhance health and prevent disease than it is to treat chronic health problems.

'Evaluations may demonstrate a person has a cholesterol level of 400. However, unless some action is taken, the patient is still going to have a cholesterol level of 400 six months later...A comprehensive fitness program is an absolute necessity.'

By virtue of the large and continually expanding data base maintained at the Institute for Aerobic Research, these health enhancement programs are constantly being refined. Why should a company pay for a laboratory test that has no predictive ability? This data base of more than 125,000 people provides the answers.

Through its affiliation with the Institute for Aerobic Research, the Texas Institute of Sports Medicine can offer these programs to governmental entities and corporations in the Permian Basin. Currently, we are working with two employers to establish programs that will affect positively the health of more than 1,000 people. The bottom line for the people will be better health and an improved lifestyle; for the employers, lower health care costs, less absenteeism and greater corporate productivity.

Obviously, accurate health and fitness testing is extremely important in this process, but unfortunately it's a very small portion of the entire effort. Evaluating a person concerning his health and fitness status, blood work and cardiac function does not ensure health. All that does is indicate the health status of the person. It does not improve it.

Evaluations may demonstrate a person has a cholesterol level of 400. However, unless some action is taken, the patient is still going to have a cholesterol level of 400 six months later. The same thing is true about high blood pressure or high blood sugar. The majority of companies who travel around the country doing fitness tests do nothing to help the company or the employees. Simple testing, in itself, has no value. A comprehensive fitness program is an absolute necessity. This will affect cholesterol, high blood pressure, cardiac disease andmany other disease processes in a positive manner.

For larger companies, an exercise program can be done at the worksite in such a way that no time is taken away from work. This also provides a unique type of togetherness that usually is enjoyed only by Japanese companies that insist upon Worksite Calisthenic Programs.

Exercise programs take many forms, and are designed to fit the employees' needs and the type of facilities particular to each company. A gymnasium is not necessary. We have been able to develop fitness programs in almost any worksite. These are the programs that brought success to the Dallas Independent School District, the H-E-B School District and the Prudential and Canadian Life Assurance Companies.

We find dietary modification also is required for many people. Even if we are able to test the health and fitness levels and develop a fitness program, if certain people persist in eating the wrong kinds of food, then inevitably their cholesterol level, as well as their blood pressure, will remain high. If we can, very subtly, modify the employees' diet so they will stay away from fat-laden foods and excessive salt, then this is a great help in enhancing health.

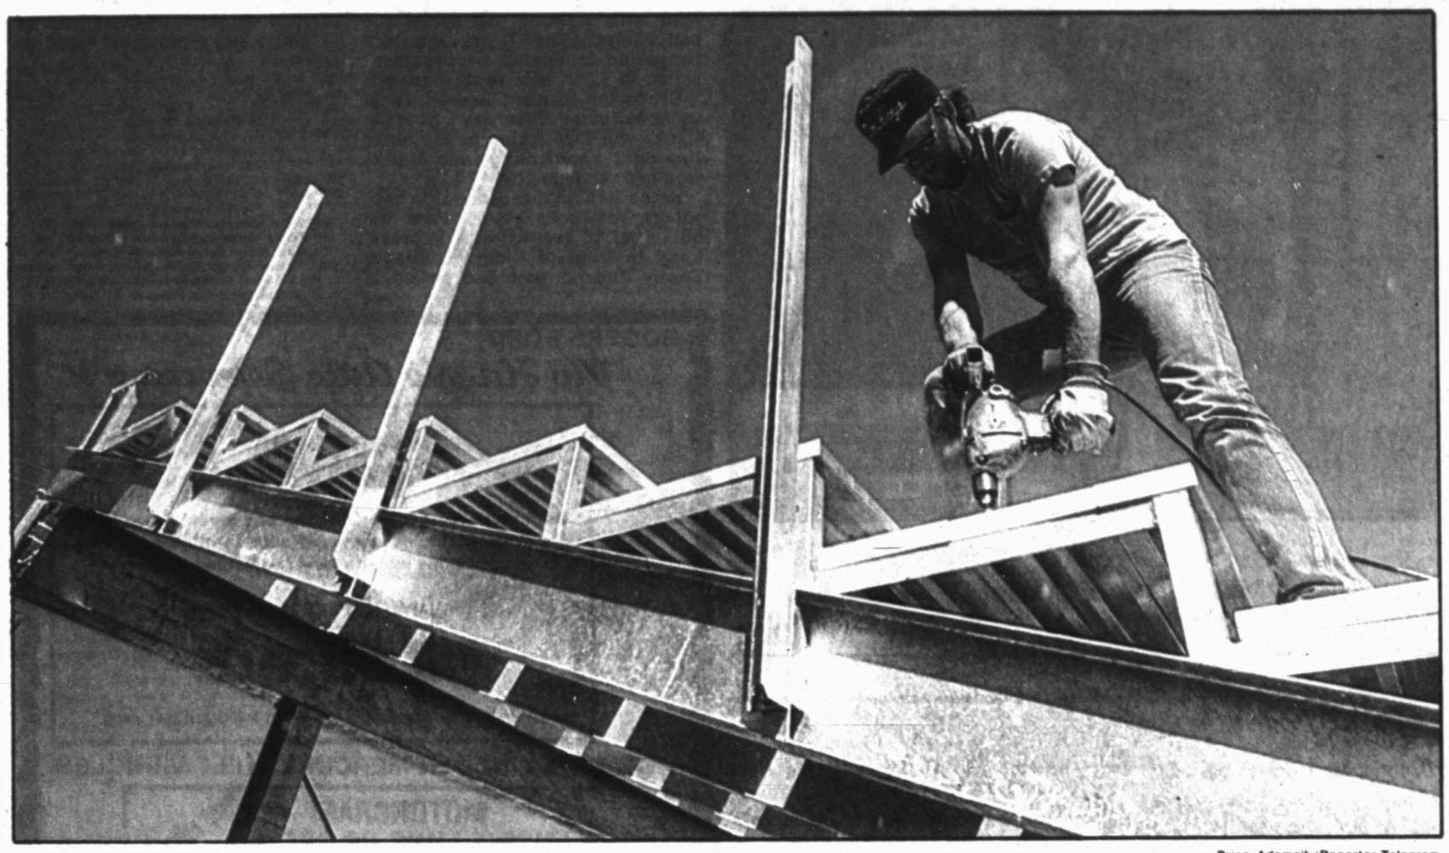

We find that re-evaluation of the employees' health status also is necessary and this is done at appropriate intervals. This allows us to individualize a program for an employee even though he or she is only one in a thousand people working at a corporation.

Employees who demonstrate health problems are referred to their personal physician for appropriate medical treatment. At the Texas Institute of Sports Medicine we strongly believe in close coordination with the family physician. After all, they know the patient much better than we do and have had a much longer association with them. In this manner, the family physician actually works as a "team member" at the Institute. It is this joint effort that makes the difference.

Our goal with the employee and the corporation simply is to make these people healthier. Not only will the corporation see financial benefits from this effort, but the patient will enjoy a much healthier and active lifestyle. With the complaints we hear from patients who state that, "My insurance is not good any more," and from corporations stating, "The cost of health care literally is ruining our bottom line" something has to be done.

The traditional approach of treating disease processes once they occur no longer is cost effieient. We need to try to attack these problems before they get started. Most employees, unfortunately, do not realize that with the escalating costs of insurance permiums, companies are being forced to go to insurance plans that are less than totally protective. If we can decrease the incidence of chronic diseases and improve health, then everyone should enjoy the benefits.

In summary, corporate America is facing a true financial crisis. Health costs are consuming an ever-increasing proportion of pre-tax profitability. In terms of cash outlay and lost productivity, treating chronic diseases is much more expensive than preventive medicine.

Paul Burgess drills holes in bleachers being added to Angels Stadium as preparations for Friday's Texas League opener against San Antonio.

Midland awaits Angels' arrival

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Angels will embark upon their 18th Texas League season 7 p.m. Friday at Angel Stadium in the Lone Star version of the Freeway Series, the Chisholm Trail drive.

San Antonio's Dodgers, the farm club of the world champion Los Angeles Dodgers, provide the opposition in the first of a five-game series and 10-game homestand.

As usual, the type of club Manager Max Oliveras will bring to Midland from spring camp in Mesa, Ariz., will remain a mystery until the big cutdown Monday or Tuesday. And, for that matter, just what kind of team Midland will have may remain a mystery until a few weeks into the season.

The carefully manicured infield at Angel Stadium may provide a clue.

"THIS YEAR we are tailoring the infield to the type team the Angels usually send us." explains Angel General Manager Bill Davidson. "In the past, the Angels haven't sent a lot of hard throwing pitchers here.

"We have had home run-hitting teams and breaking ball pitchers, so the grass will be longer."

In the past, the Angel infield grass has been kept to less than a 1/4 inch. It might has well have been artificial turf or sheer ice.

This year, with grass an inch deep, balls will not dart through the infield as though shot from an AK-47.

LONGER grass and the addition last year of a second deck of outfield signs are the Angels' answer to the WT altitude and pitcher-intimidating winds.

California has expressed concern over the anxiety pitching here does to its young pitchers. After Palm Springs, Midland and El Paso come as a shock.

WHILE the Angel roster remains in limbo for another day or two, Davidson has had a hint or two.

"We thought at first we would have a very young team. Now, it looks as though we'll have some veterans. Tom Alfredson and Mark Doran will be back and Reed Peters will be here from Palm Springs."

Outfielder C.L. Penigar was also slated to return, but was traded to the Chicago White Sox organization Saturday.

Pirates, Wolverines surprise NCAA finalists

Seton Hall easily routs Duke, 95-78

By JIM O'CONNELL

SEATTLE (AP) — Seton Hall's first Final Four started the same way Danny Ferry's third one ended — with a blowout.

But the Pirates were able to turn the game around just as they have their program, a Big East doormat until two seasons ago.

Seton Hall rebounded from an 18-point deficit with improved shooting and tough second-half defense on Ferry for a 95-78 victory Saturday and a trip to the championship game.

When the game started, though, it sure looked like Duke would be the team to play in the championship on Monday night against Michigan, a 83-81 winner over Illinois in the second game.

THE BLUE Devils jumped to a 26-8 lead with 8:55 left in the first half. Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo had to call his second timeout of the game.

Things can't get much bleaker than 2-for-14 shooting and seven turnovers. Ferry had outscored the Pirates 14-8.

"Duke really took it to us for the first eight, 10 minutes," Carlesimo said. "We may have been a little bit tight but they didn't allow us to do anything."

The Pirates came out of the timeout with a 25-12 run to get within 38-33 at halftime. The shooting improved to 9-for-16 and no one gave the ball away again the rest of the half.

WHAT DID Carlesimo say at the timeout to turn things around so markedly?

"We didn't say anything," Carlesimo said. "I told them 'Let's just play like we're capable of playing."

Apparently, the Pirates can play defense.

Ferry had 21 points at halftime and had made eight of 13 shots from the field.

The second half was decidely different for the 6-foot-10 All-America forward who was making his third Final Four appearance in a storied career that ended without a national championship.

He made five of 14 in the second half and every Seton Hall player over 6-7 had a chance at guarding him.

"They play good team defense, that's one of their strengths," said Ferry, who finished with 34 points and 10 rebounds. "We came out real hard and had a lot of momentum then we lost track of what we were doing. The defense, turnovers, things started to fall apart."

THEY DIDN'T on the other bench as Seton Hall turned things around so much that it took an 87-69 lead with 3:02 left. The Pirates even got to clear their bench in the final minute as Ferry and his teammates sat disconsolate on the other side of the court.

Michigan turns tables on Illinois

By JOHN NELSON

SEATTLE (AP) — The lead changed hands 33 times, but the biggest change of all was for Michigan. The Wolverines finally beat Illinois, and are headed for college basketball's national championship game.

Sean Higgins took a rebound of a missed 3-point attempt with two seconds left and scored from short range, giving Michigan an 83-81 victory over Illinois Saturday in a Final Four semifinal.

The victory sends Michigan, playing in its first Final Four since 1976.

The victory was sealed when Glen Rice, Michigan's hottest hand during the tournament, intercepted a length-of-the-court inbounds pass by Illinois' Steve Bardo as time ran out.

Rice led the Wolverines with 28 points, three less that his tournament average, in a game that was so close in almost every statistical category that the only difference was the final score.

Illinois, ranked third in the nation at season's end, had the speed. Michigan, ranked 10th, had the size. In two previous Big Ten Conference meetings this season, speed won.

This time, Michigan used a combination of its size advantage, the scoring of Rice, the ball-handling of Rumeal Robinson and the 16 rebounds of center Loy Vaught to prevail.

They also beat Illinois at its own game.

The Illini led the nation in offensive rebounding this season, but it was Higgins' rebound off Terry Mills' miss that set up the winning basket. Michigan beat Illinois 17-13 on the offensive boards.

The lead changed 17 times in the first half, which wound up with Michigan holding a 39-38 lead.

For Michigan's interim coach, Steve Fisher, it was the fifth straight victory in an undefeated coaching career that began in this tournament. For Illinois' Lou Henson, whose career record is 535-249, it must have been a major disappointment.

Permian retains grip on 1st in 4-5A race

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

ODESSA — Baseball is alive and well in Odessa.

This town should no longer be thought of solely for it's football prowess. The Permian Panthers, while not exactly overwhelming, defeated the Midland Lee Rebels 4-2 on the diamond Saturday.

Last year at this time, the Panthers were having attendance problems, but these days, fans flock to Panther Field in droves to watch the Permian hitting machine.

That machine did not disappoint on Saturday, either. Panther leadoff hitter Arvey Villa popped a two-run homer to break a 2-2 tie in the fifth inning, leading the Panthers to yet another district win. Permian is now 10-1 overall, 5-1 in District 4-5A. Midland Lee falls to 7-7 and 2-3.

In other action, Midland High romped past Odessa High, 15-3, while Abilene High outlasted San Angelo Central, 11-10.

It was Villa's shot that made the difference concerning the win-loss column, but, according to Lee head coach Ernie Johnson, it was another play that led to the homer that won the game for the Panthers.

Two batters before Villa's blast, Shawn Almond reached first on a single. Lee starting pitcher Michael Pearson threw to first on an attempted pick off and the umpire signaled safe, although it appeared an excrutiatingly close call.

Midland 15, Odessa 3

Maybe they were being nice. Nevertheless, Midland High's newly anointed slugging stars refused to ascribe Saturday's 15-3 win over Odessa High to inferior Broncho pitching.

Instead, player after player pointed to the fact that Bulldog coach Tim Whalen — in distress over mediocre hitting during the first few weeks of the District 4-5A season — kept his charges in the batting cage longer than usual.

"We don't want to take anybody lightly," leadoff man Tony Perez said. "We've been taking a lot more batting practice.

"Everybody was trying to pull the ball," designated hitter Brian Conaway said. "We realized if we took it to right field, we could still get a base hit."

THE BULLDOGS' 15-hit attack, coupled with a complete-game pitching performance by Gabe Salazar, helped MHS keep pace with district leader Odessa Permian while gaining ground on third-place Abilene Cooper.

MHS trails Permian by one game, but also leads defending state champion Cooper by a full game, since Cooper was idle Saturday.

OHS, 2-11 overall and 0-6 in district play despite several close calls, looked as though it would give the Bulldogs a battle with single runs in the first and second innings that neutralized MHS' two-run spurt in the first.

Arehart first in high jump

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

SAN ANGELO — If someone could find a way to keep Midland Lee's David Arehart from losing his shoes, he might turn into a pretty good high jumper.

Arehart turned in a career best 6-foot-8 here Saturday in the 31st annual San Angelo Relays to win the Division I high jump, but he had to do it the hard way.

"Someone stole my shoes Friday night and Coach (Mike Quimby) had to scrounge up some for me to use," noted Arehart, before adding, "However, the shoes he got were a size too small."

It was the first major high jump victory for Arehart, who had a second place 6-7 three weeks ago in Odessa. He just missed at another attempt of 6-9½, just nipping the bar with his trail foot.

"Everyone said that I was two inches over the bar when I missed, so I think I can go 6-10 or 11 if I get it all together."

But that was one of the few highlights for the Rebels, who scored only 32 points for a sixth place finish.

Troy Oliver had a career day with two thirds in the hurdles and Bill Swearingen was third in the 800 in a test voyage after switching from the 400.

"I think I could get out of district with Lloyd Hill in the 400, but that would be the end of it. We think I might have a better shot at state in the 800," said Swearingen. "I haven't been over 2:03 in three tries and the wind was really blowing today."

Lee's Marcus Strambler, a state qualifier in the 300 hurdles last year, came up lame again in his sprint relay leg and had to drop out of the 200. Lee injuries seem to mount with each passing week.

Division I was really a two-team race with San Antonio Judson beating San Angelo for the title, 163-140.

PERMIAN

With Almond keeping his claim on first, Villa hit the homer that won the game for Permian.

It is hindsight to look back on such a judgment call, but Johnson said it was what cost the Rebs the game.

"It was a bad call," Johnson said. "I hate to see that in a crucial situation in a game involving kids.

"But we squandered two scoring opportunities in the early innings. We played with a lot of poise and played the best that we could."

Pearson said the key for the Panthers was their ability to finally spot his pitches and connect on them.

"I really didn't lose anything," Pearson said, "they just kind of got the rythym of my fastball. They got their eyes on it on the up and outside corner and started going with my pitches."

Aside from the home run inning, Permian scored two runs in the fourth on a Jeff Martin double, an RBI single by Stoney Case and an RBI triple by Arturo Ontiveros.

Before Pearson had his late inning troubles, he pitched three of the best district innings he's had this season. Pearson retired nine of the first 10 batters, allowing just a single to Martin, the game's second hitter.

Midland Lee's two runs were both unearned, coming in the top of the fifth. Three Panther errors, two throwing and one fielding, led to runs scored by Lee's B.J. Parrish and Blaine McAnally, the No. 8 and 9 hitters in the Rebel lineup.

Lee had seven hits to Permian's eight. The Panthers, though, strung the hits together when they counted most, with three in the fourth and four in the fifth.

Permian boss Bob Highly said his team played well, but could have done better.

"We left people on base when we shouldn't have. We were a little flat and played just well enough to get by.

'Lee played good enough to beat us. Pearson pitched a real good game."

Concerning his team's overall success, Highly said, "our kids are concentrating. It has a lot to do with the confidence factor. They think they can hit, no matter what the (ball-strike) count is."

As if coming off a Permian loss and regrouping weren't a big enough chore, the Rebels host Abilene Cooper Tuesday.

El Paso booters win

From Staff Reports

El Paso made a pair of first-half goals stick in a 2-0 shutout of Wichita Falls Rider in area playoff action Saturday at Wyllie Field.

The District 1 runnersup blew through their second playoff opponent with superior foot speed and ball control. The Tigers will face Grapevine in Region I tournament action at Lewisville next weekend.

Grapevine blanked Denton 4-0 in its area game Saturday. El Paso Hanks will face Irving in the other Region I semifinal, since Hanks smashed Abilene High 7-1.

In the 20th minute of the first half, Albert Velasquez got El Paso the only goal it needed with a break-away in front of Rider goaltender Danny Holland, who had posted 12 shutouts this season. Carlos Hernandez capped the scoring with a direct free kick from near the corner in the 34th minute.

Rider's best shot to score came when Emiliano Belillo broke away from his mark in the eighth minute of the second half, but EP goalkeeper Tony Colquitt smothered the ball — and Rider's last good shot at a score.

But Midland High put the game away with six runs in its half of the second inning, knocking out OHS starting pitcher Anthony Cobos and treating reliever Rogelio Salcido with no small measure of disrespect.

Cobos all but knocked himself with six walks in the first two innings of his first start of the season after just coming off the academic ineligibility list. His early departure wasn't something Broncho coach Milt Thompson was counting on.

"We had to go to our relief much earlier than we wanted to," Thompson said. "We played two or three good innings, but Midland really hit the ball on us."

MORE SPECIFICALLY, the Bulldogs roughed up Salcido immediately upon his arrival with Perez on second and out in the second. Perez had broken the game up open by doubling with the bases loaded off Cobos.

Salcido had thrown a three-hitter against Cooper, but MHS solved him immediately upon his arrival Saturday with consecutive singles by Scott Melzer, Conaway and Kevin Rychel, and a sacrifice fly by Pat Mowles.

Salcido settled down in the third and fourth innings, but MHS racked up six more runs in the fifth to force an early end under district run rules.

MHS coach Tim Whalen was just glad to get a win.

"We needed a big win," he said. "We needed this confidence before going to Abilene (Tuesday for a game with Abilene High)."

Righthanded ace Rychel toes the rubber for MHS against Abilene. Almost lost in the shuffle Saturday was Salazar's complete game performance — only two weeks after he failed to retire an Odessa Permian batter.

Salazar allowed only four hits in his five innings of work, walking five and striking out seven.

"Gabe wasn't real sharp, but he'll be all right," Whalen said. "We wanted him to go all the way today.

"Now we have Kevin and (James) Madrid rested for Abilene, and we can use (Dorey) Thompson if we need to.

ANGEL

While California left Erik Pappas, one of the prime catching prospects in the system unprotected in the winter draft, Davidson suspects Midland will have the best defensive catcher in the Angel organization if John Orton, a No. 1 draft pick in 1987, is sent here.

"Third baseman Bob Rose, at Palm Springs last year, is one of the better prospects," says Davidson, "And the fans will really like Hedi Vargas.

"He is a 10-year veteran from the Dominican Republic and hit clean up at Chattanooga, last year's Southern League champions. He could hit 40 home runs."

THE ANGELS are scheduled to arrive in Midland Tuesday and will have open-to-the-public workouts Wednesday and Thursday night at 6 p.m.

"The early arrival gives us the home field advantage," points out Davidson. "Arriving the day before the game is like playing a road game. You have no edge on the visitors. This way the players get a chance to become acquainted with the field and find a place to live."

But, Davidson's primary concern is keeping those turnstiles clicking, regardless of the on-field success of the ball club, and last year's Texas League Promotional Executive of the Year, is ready.

"We will have the chicken in twice, three fireworks displays plus nights for cap, jersey, bat and glove giveaways," Davidson explains. Actually, there is some kind of promotion every night of the season.

The Angels, for the second straight year, will be broadcasting all games, home and away, with Deene Ehlis again at the KCRS mike.

"We doubled our advertising from last year. It's nice to know last year's investment in broadcasting the games is showing benefits."

Abilene outslugs San Angelo, 11-10

From Staff Reports

For the third straight game, the Abilene High Eagles came from behind in the late innings, this time defeating San Angelo Central, 11-10, Saturday.

Down by a 10-1 count, Abilene High scored seven runs in the sixth and an additional three in the bottom of the seventh to ice the win.

Inkster widens lead to 5-strokes

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Juli Inkster, playing steady, if unspectacular golf, shot a 1-over-par 73 Saturday and stretched her lead to five shots after three rounds of the Dinah Shore tournament, the first of the LPGA's four majors

Inkster, who assumed quick command with a first-round 66 and followed with a second-round 69, was at 8-under-par 208 after 54 holes.

Shooting her way into contention with her third consecutive 71 at Mission Hills Country Club was LPGA Hall of Famer JoAnne Carner. She has won 42 tournaments over her career, but a victory in the Dinah Shore, generally considered the tour's most prestigious event, has eluded her.

Carner, 49 and looking for her first victory since 1985, finished the third round at 213, tying her with Lynn Adams and Jody Rosenthal.

Mike Donald survives 74

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) — Mike Donald held a two-stroke lead despite five bogeys and a 2-over-par 74 in Saturday's third round of the $800,000 Independent Insurance Agent Open.

Donald started the day at 10-under-par with a four-shot lead over Seve Ballesteros. His problems started early when he bogeyed two of the first three holes, and he reached the 54-hole mark with a 208.

Ballesteros, after a par 72 Saturday, was tied for second with John Inman and Lance Ten Broeck,

Baseball off to shaky start even before openers

By BEN WALKER
Associated Press

The season hasn't even begun and already baseball is off to a shaky start.

A cloud is hanging over Pete Rose. Wade Boggs still might be on the move. Dave Winfield, Jose Canseco and Paul Molitor are out with injuries and Orel Hershiser won't be pitching on opening day.

But all those troubles seem to disappear every year — at least for a sunny afternoon or so — when they start playing for real and the boxscores begin showing up.

President Bush, a former baseball player at Yale University, will throw the first pitch Monday in Baltimore. His Texas friend, Nolan Ryan, suggested Bush go with a fastball.

"You get more of an 'ooooh' if you heave it over the (catcher's) head instead of going with the fast-breaking deuce into the dirt," Bush said.

Yep. Everyone is ready, even the First Fan.

How will it all come out? No one knows, and that's one of the beauties. Six months stretched by 162 games, all waiting to take their twists and turns.

Will the Dodgers become the first World Series winner to repeat since the New York Yankees in 1977-78? Can the Mets and Oakland dominate or could St. Louis and Texas surprise? How good can Jim Abbott and Ken Griffey Jr. be?

There's just no way to know. And many times, there's no way to tell until something like any injury comes along.

Milwaukee, picked by many to win the American League East, begins the season with Molitor, Ted Higuera, Juan Nieves and Dale Sveum on the disabled list. The Yankees are missing Dave Winfield through the All-Star break and could be without Don Mattingly on opening night. Canseco's wrist trouble will keep him out for awhile.

Hershiser, who starts the season with a streak of 59 scoreless innings, will miss Monday's opener in Cincinnati because of the flu. He'll pitch Wednesday against the Reds.

Mike Schmidt, Fernando Valenzuela, Bob Ojeda and some other big names are going the other direction, trying to come back from injuries that could have ended their careers.

"I'm feeling pretty good right now. I don't think there will be any problem," said Schmidt, who missed the end of the season with shoulder trouble.

Valenzuela and John Tudor, two keys to the Dodgers' pitching staff, are both trying to recover from arm problems. Ojeda, who nearly severed a finger on his pitching hand late last season, is back in the Mets' rotation and will make his first start next weekend.

Rose and Boggs will begin the season in familiar surroundings. But they may not be there by October.

Public golf plentiful in West Texas

EDITOR'S NOTE: With summer approaching and a boom in full swing, golf again looks to enjoy a no-holds barred summer. There are four municipal courses within driving range on which to play, and over the next several days, MRT sports writer Jimmy Patterson will detail what each course offers.

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Unless it is snowing or dark, it is darn near impossible these days to find a vacant golf course on which to play.

72 Holes

Some days the traffic is lighter than others, but this country — and the world for that matter — is in the midst of a golf boom previously unheard of, which makes a lesiurely round more difficult than ever before, even in West Texas.

There are four municipal courses within easy driving distance — Midland's Hogan Park (27 holes), Odessa's Ratliff Ranch (18), Big Spring's Commanche Trails (18) and the Martin County Country Club (9) in Stanton. Seventy-two holes, the normal round played in a major tournament, within reach and low cost for any golfer in the area.

FACE IT, crowded courses are here to stay. Despite that, people are beginning to play in record numbers.

According to PGA Magazine, America will have to build one golf course per day for the next 11 years in order to accomodate the deluge of golfers expected at the turn of the century.

Price Courter, course director at Hogan Park, says his course is no exception to the rising numbers. From the fiscal year Sept. 30, 1987 to Sept. 30, 1988, a six-percent increase in the number of golfers was recorded at Hogan. In the first quarter of '89, a 10 percent increase in revenue was experienced as compared to the same first quarter in '88.

"What we're noticing is a shift in our clientele," Courter said. "We're finding that we're fitting into a changing group of demographics. We're getting more of the 28-45 age group than before.

"TYPICALLY what happens in golf is a public course will pick up the 25-40 age group and the seniors; then what occurs is they play at our course for eight or 10 years and when they reach a higher earning capacity, they find a need to move into a private club atmosphere."

Courter said some the changing demographics and increasing revenues could be attributed to the course itself. Hogan Park has undergone changes in the last five years which makes it "much better than it was before." Courter said if it is a nice one, golfers "don't mind playing on a public course."

The National Golf Federation and PGA of America both keep tabs on the game and its future. Both organizations contend that golf is growing 28 to 30 percent each year, and the real difficulty facing the game is finding available land on which to build new courses to accomodate the new players.

National demographics are also accomodating the game, as a majority of the population is reaching the 30-to-50 age bracket, which is the age group which most prefers the game of golf.

"They've got a little bit more disposable income because of the higher income category," Courter said of the 30-50 bracket. "Plus, they're finding that golf is a little bit easier on the body at that point than a lot of other sports."

Hogan Park Outline

Course director: Price Courter

Busiest days: Weekends, Fridays, holidays.

Lightest days: Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Green fees: $6 weekdays; $11.50 weekends and holidays.

Cart fees: $7 for 9 holes; $13 for 18 holes.

Lessons offered: $20 per lesson; (Mens and ladies clinics also offered thru the summer).

Most difficult hole: "The ones that typically give players some trouble are 19 through 27," Courter said. "It seems like par-three, 26 is toughest as far as three-pars go, and as par-4 goes, 25 gives most people the most trouble. It's possible to hit it in the hazard to the right which acts as a double hazard on both 25 and 26."

Easiest hole: "There's a couple on the original 18 that could possibly fit into that description," Courter said, "just due to the length of the hole." If a hole plays down-wind during the majority of the year, those type holes could be considered a little easier. To pick one out might be a little hard."

Total course yardage: Twenty-seven hole course. Holes 1-18: 5,775 yards (ladies' tees); 6,320 yds. (regular tees); 6,615 yds (championship tees).

Hole 19-27: 2,710 yards (ladies); 3,080 (regular); 3,410 (championship).

Sooners' Billy Tubbs Juco speaker

From Staff Reports

Tubbs

In view of the strong ties developed between Midland College and the University of Oklahoma programs, it seems only natural that OU's all-time winningest coach would come to the Midland to participate in the city's biggest weekend of the year.

Billy Tubbs, Oklahoma's head coach, will be the featured speaker at the NJCAA All-Star banquet 6:30 p.m. April 7 at the Holiday Inn Convention Center.

The event precedes the fourth annual Junior College All-Star basketball game which matches Texas' All-Stars against the U.S.A. All-Stars.

Tubbs needs no road map to find Midland. He has recruited players from Midland College the last three years.

Ricky Grace and Mookie Blaylock, who recorded over 200 assists and 100 steals in a single season, played on last year's Final Four team. This year Blaylock and Skeeter Henry were prominent as the Sooners gained national attention. And next year, Charles "Smokey" McCovery, who will play in Saturday's classic at the Chap Center, will go from MC to OU.

It took Tubbs only seven season to lead his Sooner teams to 200 victories, upping his 14-season career record to 306-140. Five times Oklahoma has been in the NCAA championship final 16, going to the championship game in 1988.

The Sooners set 54 Big Eight and five NCAA records while averaging 102.9 points per game.

Tickets for banquet are $15 each and reservations may be made by calling the Midland Jaycees (683-7330).

Texas white-tail deer harvest drops drastically in 1988, says TPWD

AUSTIN (AP) — The harvest of white-tailed deer in Texas during the past hunting season declined by 30,000 from 1987 to 475,000, the state Parks and Wildlife Department reported Friday.

The department's big game survey also indicated that the turkey harvest of 38,700 was down 39 percent from 1987, while the mule deer harvest increased by 9 percent to 7,300, and the javelina dropped 12 percent.

No. 1 battles No. 2 for NCAA women's cage title today

By THOMAS GEORGE
N.Y. Times News Service

TACOMA, Wash. — When top-ranked Tennessee battles second-ranked Auburn for the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I women's basketball championship Sunday afternoon in the Tacoma Dome, two teams that have been so close for so long at the top will bring the title home to the Southeastern Conference.

Tennessee (34-2) has earned its fourth consecutive Final Four berth and ninth in 12 years.

Auburn (32-1) is making its third consecutive Final Four trip. But Tennessee has won only one title, in 1987, while Auburn is seeking its first.

Tennessee advanced to the championship game with a 77-65 victory over fourth-ranked Maryland in Tacoma on Friday night, and Auburn advanced with a 76-71 triumph over third-ranked Louisiana Tech, the defending national champion.

"Somebody said for us beating Tech was like beating the Yankees," said Joe Ciampi, the Auburn coach, "but we don't care if we had beaten the Yankees, the Celtics or the Flyers. We're just glad to be in the finals."

Pat Summitt, the Tennessee coach, said: "All year long, this team has gotten better. That's what makes me so proud, that they haven't settled for less or for just being a good team."

Tennessee is the favorite.

Its losses were to Auburn by 67-59 and to Texas by 69-67.

But the Lady Volunteers also beat Auburn by 66-51 and have won 15 of their last 16 games.

Auburn has won 22 consecutive games.

"It's not often that No. 1 gets to meet No. 2 in a championship game," Summitt said. "It's great for our conference and great for the kids. We tell them when we recruit them that it can end this way, and to be able to experience that promise is a treat."

Summitt's word to her players is golden. Sixty of her 69 players have appeared in the Final Four.

But the Division II race was something else as Andrews and Big Spring went to the final event before the Mustangs nipped the Steers, 96½-84½. Big Spring won the mile relay, but Andrews finished third to keep the lead.

It used to be that Andrews would score heavily in the field events and then fall in the running events. The Mustangs are stronger this year and got victories from Mike Criswell in the 200 and strong showings in the relays. Ronnie Seals, natch, won the shot put with a season best 58-3¼.

Still, the star of the Division II show was Big Spring's Ben Gonzales, who paced the Steers with wins in both the 800 and 1600 while anchoring a leg on the winning mile relay team.

"I wasn't running for time in any of my events. The wind was really a factor and I just wanted to run for the win since I had to do three hard races. I tried not to tire myself out," said Gonzales.

Gonzales is trying to make up for lost time. He placed third in the state mile as a sophomore, but grades caught him last year and he wants to go back to Austin.

"I didn't think it was fair last year, because I didn't get to go because of a late term paper. But my teacher had a baby and was out several weeks. I've got to make up for all that this year."

Gonzales teamed with Chris Mintor for a 1-2 sweep in the 800 and beat Andrews' John Davila in the 1600. Davila was third in the 800.

In Division III, Wylie won with an 81-68 margin over Breckenridge when the Buckaroos were disqualified after winning the mile relay.

Greenwood's Kane Harris placed second in both the 800 and 1600 in a nasty wind. Harris led most of the 800 before being caught by Breckenridge's Craig McKoy down the stretch.

"The field let me have the lead and I took it. But I paid the price running against the wind," said Harris.

Greenwood's Randy Donnell fell hard in the high hurdles and scratched from the intermediates — and this after showing signs of recovering from an ankle injury.

Mason was the Division IV winner with a 79-68 edge over Rotan, but one of the best races of the day came when Stanton's Anthony Inman battled Rankin's Doug Braden to the wire.

"I knew I had to win the last sprint after we went over the last hurdle and that's how I won it," said Inman. "The two of us have had some great races in the past."

Braden responded, "I beat him two weeks ago in Forsan, but I have a bad knee and knew if I didn't have him when we went over the final hurdle, I couldn't get him."

Reagan County's Shane McCutchen won the 400 and Rankin took the 1600 relay. Stanton's Kevin Barnes had a close race with Coleman's Curtis McCreight, but narrowly lost that duel.

Only three records fell in the meet, but they were beauties. Odessa High sophomore phenom Dallas Cowan won the 100 in a wind-aided 10.33 for one meet record while San Angelo's Joey Bonds had a wind-blown 13.65 meet record in the high hurdles. Rotan's Joe Huitt had a Division IV mark 10.47 in the 100.

Battles

Well, it happened. Jim Abbott, the most newsworthy pitcher in spring training, has been plucked from the Midland Angels roster without so much as a "May I", "You don't mind, do you?" or even a "Thank You."

He pitch the U.S. to an Olympic baseball gold. He performed such wonders for the University of Michigan and teams representing the U.S. against foreign foes intruding upon "our" National Pasttime, he was named Sullivan Award winner a couple of years ago.

He was supposed to pitch for the Midland Angels. The California Angels didn't exactly promise, but they put him on Midland's roster. The Angels, understandably, probably sold some tickets because of his name.

REPRESENTATIVES of some of the nation's most prestigious news services undoubtedly had made reservations to cover Abbott's professional baseball debut in the Texas League. ESPN, CNN and Time would have been here for sure.

Who knows, the Wall Street Journal might have deemed the event worthy of mention and you know what this would have done for Midland in the eyes of the New York Times.

Remember, a few years back, wind got back to the Times that the local network TV outlet would preempt the major league baseball playoffs to televise a high school football game....New Yorkers couldn't imagine a high school football game between Permian and Lee preempting the baseball playoffs

The NYT couldn't believe it. The inquiry to the MRT from the NYT was almost a "Say it isn't so?"

Abbott would have been assurance for the NYT that the misguided WT oil town had finally gotten its priorities in order.

ABBOTT coming here would have put Midland back on the national sports map where the Lee-Permian game put it and Alysheba kept it, but California decided to keep the talented pitcher. He showed that much promise in spring training.

It's a blow and it is just hoped here that Jim fairs better than the first time it happened to the Midland ball club.

That was 1972. The Chicago Cubs were moving their AA franchise from San Antonio to Midland and one of the most impressive names on the preseason roster belonged to a pitcher, although it's hard to recall why he was regarded as something special before he ever made it to the majors.

Well, he made the majors, all right, even was a 20-game winner, but rotator cuff problems ruined his career.

He tried to come back, but Chicago gave up on him and while he showed signs of recovering at Pittsburgh, leading the club in just about every significant pitching statistic, the Pirates saw a limited future.

So he was passed on to San Francisco, where his days may be numbered. After all, Rick Rueschel won only 19 games for the Giants last year. How far can you go with a guy like that?

Forget football

Baseball is SWC's sport

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

WACO, Texas (AP) — On a day all the nation's sports hoopla was directed at college basketball, there was a game being played in Ferrell Field last week that spotlighted something the Southwest Conference is good at — baseball.

Mickey Sullivan's Baylor Bears were hosting Cliff Gustafson's Texas Longhorns, and it was fun.

The quality of play certainly rivaled and surpassed some major league games witnessed last year at Arlington Stadium and the Astrodome.

The crowd was lively: One Baylor student wore a T-Shirt saying "You can buy the Cowboys but I'm not hollering soooo-iiiii-eeee pig!"

There were good natured gibes flying from both sides of the stands as the Longhorns finally prevaled 5-4 in 10 innings.

Kirk Dressendorfer lasted the distance for the Longhorns while Baylor's Tommy Echols hit a monster homer over the leftfield fence and the ball rolled into the nearby Brazos River.

A crowd of 2,500 fans paying $4 a ticket attended the game. The next day 2,700 jammed the facility for a doubleheader that the two clubs split.

SWC baseball is a big-time sport, not just an afterthought as it is in some conferences.

Texas A&M, with a 29-1 record when the week ended, was rated the No. 1 team in the nation in all the polls.

Arkansas (23-4) and Texas (30-8) are in the Top 20 and Baylor at 26-6 deserves to be there.

Houston lost a weekend series to Arkansas but still had 29 victories.

At one time last week A&M, Texas, Houston and Arkansas were rated among the top 17 teams nationally.

There are many reasons for the SWC success in baseball, but perhaps the primary catalyst is number 18 in your program, Gustafson.

In 1988, Gustafson saw his baseball team win for him his 1,000th game. He's only the third man in NCAA Division I history to surpass that mark.

He's fewer than 300 wins shy of the all-time mark of 1,332 set by Southern California's retired Rod Dedeaux.

Gustafson has two national titles and 19 SWC titles to his credit.

In the College World Series, his teams have also finished second two times, third six times, and fourth on three occasions.

His winning rate of 82 percent is amazing.

Gustafson has caused other SWC schools to upgrade their programs and become more competitive. He has noticed it's harder for him to win.

"The competition just keeps getting better," Gustafson said. "Other schools are recruiting harder; there is increased emphasis on college baseball. There are new parks, and a lot of ambitious, eager guys who are coaching."

Recruiting for Texas' excellent high school baseball talent is so tough that Gustafson has reached down for an ace in the hole — son Deron.

"He has taken over the bulk of our recruiting," Cliff said. "We want to make sure we do the best job we can of showing off our program, our University and our city.

"It's become a fulltime job. Now, recruits are coming in during the fall and are commiting to universities then. The professional draft is the next June. Following that, a player can sign a pro contact until he enrolls in school. We have to stay on top of it from September until August, and then it starts all over again."

Schools are doing everything they can to get more fans through the turnstiles, including the installation of lights.

Night baseball is coming to the SWC to accommodate the growing crowds who want to see their favorite team play after work.

For example, Texas A&M and Texas had series scheduled this weekend under the lights.

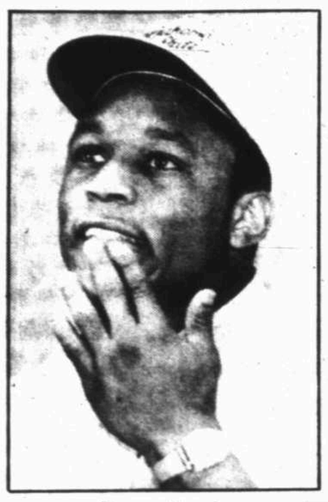

During the Baylor-Texas game last week, Baylor assistant sports information director Terry Tacker made periodic announcements asking the public to support a drive to put lights around Ferrell Field.

SWC baseball is being seen frequently on national television (ESPN) and getting lights also helps national exposure.

The SWC might not be able to get to the Final Four, but baseball is another story.

Through games of March 19, SWC clubs had a 168-37 record against outside competition, an .820 winning percentage.

Probation, finances point Sanders to NFL

Barry Sanders

DENVER (AP) — Citing his school's recent probation and a desire to help his family financially, Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders said Saturday he is prepared to challenge the NFL in court, if necessary, in order to turn pro.

Sanders, a junior running back from Oklahoma State, notified the NFL on Thursday that he wants to become eligible for this year's draft. His petition sets up a possible test of the league's restrictions against drafting underclassmen.

Sanders said Saturday he has signed contracts with sports agents David Ware of Atlanta and Lamont Smith of Denver. As a result, OSU officials have declared him ineligible for 1989.

"For the past three months, I have been giving a great deal of thought to my future as a football player," Sanders said at a news conference. "I've talked with my parents, Coach (Pat) Jones and other OSU representatives.

"I have come to the conclusion that it would be in my best interests and in the best interests of my family to renounce my last year of college eligibility and pursue a career in professional football.

"This decision in based, in part, on the financial hardship that my family and I are presently faced with, and the opportunity to relieve some of the pressure. I come from a family of 11 children, and I feel a duty to try to assist them.

"The probation OSU is faced with the next few years also played a part in my decision."

The January the NCAA banned OSU from bowl games for three years and from television appearances for two, citing recruiting violations.

Sanders also said the pressures of being a Heisman candidate "made it impossible for me to concentrate on my studies. In fact, I'm still working on first semester finals. My father advised me that my days of running the football are limited, and I can always go back to school. I intend to do that, and at least get a bachelor's degree in business administration."

Andrews golf teams make hay in 4-4A

From Staff Reports

ANDREWS — The Andrews Mustangs and Lady Mustangs continue on the road to athletic success — this time of year it's in the game of golf.

The Lady Mustangs — with four out of the top five individual medalists — lead Fort Stockton by an impressive 28 strokes after second round action in the District 4-4A race at Andrews.

The Lady Mustangs' Lisa McQuatters, No. 5 in the medalist race, shot an 80 Saturday for the low round of the day. Jen Galloway, No. 2 medalist, was close behind with an 82. April King leads in the medalist race with a two-round total of 166; Nikki Martin is third in individual competition with a 171.

Monahans' Melinda White is the only non-Mustang in the top five individual race. White is shooting a 174, good for fourth place after two rounds.

"We switched our teams around trying to give the junior varsity a chance to catch up," Andrews' girls coach Frank Bice said. "They moved from 38 strokes out last week to 14 out this week. Last year we managed to get both the junior varsity and the varsity to the regionals. We may not get that far this year because the competition in the district is much better."

The Andrews' girls JV is in fourth place, just 14 strokes behind second place Fort Stockton.

Rangers whip Astros

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Jim Sundberg and Julio Franco each homered twice Saturday night as the Texas Rangers defeated the Houston Astros 12-4 in exhibition baseball.

Nolan Ryan picked up the victory, pitching seven innings against his former teammates and pronouncing his left calf muscle healthy enough for him to make his scheduled start in Texas' second game of the season Thursday against Detroit.

Ryan was pitching in a game for the first time since he strained the muscle while pitching against Baltimore's Class AA Hagerstown team on March 23. He gave up seven hits and struck out four in only his fourth appearance in an exhibition game this spring.

Sundberg's three-run home run and Franco's two-run shot, both off starter Jim Deshaies, highlighted a seven-run second inning. Rafael Palmeiro also homered in the inning.

Sundberg also hit a two-run home run off Bob Forsch in the fifth inning, and Franco added a solo home run off Forsch in the sixth. Steve Buechele also homered off Forsch in the sixth.

In winning for the 15th time in their last 18 games, the Rangers raised their exhibition record to 17-10, two more victories than they have ever had in spring training.

They close out the exhibition season here Sunday with an afternoon game against Houston.

BASEBALL

Rose is being investigated by the commissioner's office for "serious allegations," most likely linked to gambling. A decision is due in about a month and there is speculation that the Cincinnati Reds manager will be suspended.

The Boston Red Sox, meanwhile, are still trying to trade Boggs. Team management is afraid his affair with Margo Adams will disrupt the club and might rather see him somewhere else.

Boggs could be headed to Seattle in a deal for Mark Langston and Jim Presley. The teams are talking about the trade and it is a possibility.

Boggs and Rose made most of the news during spring training off the field. On the field, San Diego and Toronto played the best ball.

The Padres, who added Jack Clark, Bruce Hurst and Walt Terrell in the off-season, had the best record in the exhibition season. The Blue Jays, who have not made a major trade since August 1987, were also impressive.

Griffey, son of the past and present Reds player, won a job with Seattle by setting a team record for hits in spring training.

Yankees spill Mets in Subway Series

Associated Press

New York finally got its Subway Series. And a pretty good game, too.

Tom Brookens' RBI single capped a four-run rally in the seventh inning Saturday that led the Yankees over the Mets 4-3.

A crowd of 52,119 at Yankee Stadium saw the first meeting in New York between the two teams since April 21, 1983, when the Yankees beat the Mets 4-1 in the final Mayor's Trophy Game. The clubs conclude their spring training season Sunday at Shea Stadium.

The Yankees won without their main power sources, Dave Winfield and Don Mattingly. Winfield will be out several months after back surgery and Mattingly is day-to-day with back problems.

"This is what I expect us to do. It's how we can win," Yankees manager Dallas Green said. "If we don't feel sorry for ourselves we can play competitive baseball."

Ron Darling, Darryl Strawberry and Gregg Jefferies of the Mets were the most impressive. Darling pitched five hitless innings, Strawberry hit a two-run homer that almost reached the upper deck and Jefferies had three doubles.

"Darryl can thrill you. But it wasn't as long as Mickey Mantle's," Green said.

Trailing 3-0, the Yankees loaded the bases in the seventh with one out. After Roger McDowell struck out Randy Velarde, Roberto Kelly singled in two runs. Don Aase relieved McDowell and Bernie Williams tied the score with an infield hit off Aase's glove.

Brookens then put the Yankees ahead with a hard single to left.

McDowell, 1-5, has allowed 30 hits and 16 earned runs in 14 1-3 innings this spring.

Lee Guetterman, 1-0, pitched one inning and Dave Righetti got his first save.

Orioles 6, Pirates 4

Rookie Bob Milacki pitched three hitless innings and Phil Bradley and Rick Schu each hit two-run homers as Baltimore beat Pittsburgh.

Milacki, scheduled to be the Orioles' third starter, finished the spring with a streak of 10 shutout innings.

Bobby Bonilla, Sid Bream and Junior Ortiz homered for the Pirates.

Tigers 4, Red Sox 2

Mike Heath and Pat Sheridan hit solo homers as Detroit downed Boston.

Jeff Robinson, Charlie Hudson and minor leaguer Randy Bockus combined on a five-hitter. The Tigers scored three runs on six hits and three walks in five innings off Boston starter Wes Gardner.

Atlanta 5, Cleveland 2

Ron Gant went 3-for-3 with two doubles as Atlanta beat Cleveland.

It was the first major league exhibition game played in Greenville, S.C., since 1966 when Baltimore played the Mets. A overflow crowd of 9,559 packed the 7,028-seat stadium.

Derek Lilliquist, 2-2, scattered five hits and permitted one earned run in seven innings. Bud Black, 3-1, was the loser.

Blue Jays 5, Phillies 1

Rob Ducey drove in three runs, two on a bases-loaded single to lead a four-run ninth inning as Toronto beat Philadelphia.

Ducey, who had homered in the second, raised his spring batting average to .439.

Duane Ward, 1-0, got the victory and Larry McWilliams, 0-2, took the loss.

Reds 4, Cardinals 0

Jose Rijo pitched four hitless innings and combined with four relievers on a four-hitter as Cincinnati defeated St. Louis.

Cris Carpenter lost despite allowing just one unearned run in five inning. Athletics 3, Giants 2

Dave Henderson hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning to lead Oakland over San Francisco.

Dennis Eckersley, 1-0, faced eight batters, allowing three hits and striking out four for the victory. Jeff Brantley, 0-1, took the loss.

Other local finishers included brothers Jim and John McCool, who were running their second marathon. Jim finished in 3:52, while John ran a 3:58.

A&M sweeps Bears

From Wire Reports

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Eric Albright's squeeze bunt in the bottom of the 10th inning lifted top-ranked Texas A&M to a 9-8 victory over Baylor in the first game as A&M swept a SWC twinbill with a 12-2 nightcap win as Albright drove in six runs.

SWC

Texas A&M improved to 33-1 on the season, 6-0 in the SWC. Baylor is 27-9, 4-5.

Terry Taylor led off the 10th inning with a single, and one out later John Byington singled Taylor to third. Albright followed with the bunt, which losing pitcher Bruce Aguilar, 5-3, 1-2, could not field.

Winning pitcher Scott Centala, 4-0, 1-0, came on in the fifth inning and retired the final 14 batters he faced.

Rice 4-4, Texas 0-5

AUSTIN — David Lowery's sacrifice fly in the bottom of the ninth scored Kevin Pate with the winning run as seventh-ranked Texas salvaged a split with a 5-4 victory over Rice. Rice won the opener 4-0 as Rob Howard stifled the Longhorns on three singles and extended his scoreless streak to 19 1/3 innings.

Texas is 33-10 overall, 4-2 in the SWC. Rice is 21-18, 2-7.

Sophomore Kirk Dressendorfer, 9-1, 3-0, who gave up the tying run in the top of the ninth, picked up the victory in relief of Shane Reynolds.

Dressendorfer was the complete-game winner in Texas' 6-0 victory over Rice on Friday night.

Howard, 6-2, 2-1, has only given up two runs in the past 35 innings. The sophomore right-hander walked three and struck out six in seven innings.

Loser Mark Smith, 4-2, 0-2, lasted only 4 2/3 innings after allowing five hits and three runs.

Arkansas 3, Texas Tech 2, first game
Arkansas 6, Texas Tech 5, second game

LUBBOCK, Texas — Arkansas' bullpen saved both ends of a doubleheader Saturday, with Mark Swope and Phil Stidham stifling rallies.

Arkansas, 27-4, stayed atop the Southwest Conference with a 6-0 record. The Red Raiders fell to 19-14 and 0-6.

Houston 5-9, TCU 4-3

HOUSTON — Russell Stockton and Mark Hooker hit home runs on consecutive pitches in the sixth inning, rallying Houston victory over Texas Christian in the first game. Houston hit three more home runs in the second game for a three-game sweep of the weekend series.

The Cougars, ranked 19th nationally, improved to 32-5, 3-3 in the SWC. TCU fell to 22-12, 2-4.

CAUCASIAN female 30, 130 lbs., brown hair and eyes and been divorced 7 years. Still haven't found Mr. Right. I have one son. Looking for a man taller than me for friendship. Must like fishing, camping, c&w dancing, occasional drinking, serious, humorous and romantic. I know you are out there we just haven't met yet. Send phone number when responding. (MP-438)

TOTO, I don't think we're in Kansas anymore! Sagittarius lady, 26. Intrigued with life, love comedy, wit, sarcasm. Collect books; don't have time to read. Collect coffee cups; they take less time to read! Torture plants mercilessly. Don't do drugs, drink or smoke. Like dancing, walking, travel, King, Koontz, Bradbury, rain, sunshine, full moon, movies, Garfield, almost all music, introspection. Interested? (MP-448)

ONE time divorced, 40'ish caucasian female. I'm 5'8" and not overweight. I'm a hard worker, devoted, smoker and social drinker. Looking for that special someone who is tall, nice looking and sincere. My interests vary, really easy to please in that manner. No drug users please or one night stands. Reply with phone number or letter, all will be answered. (MP-450)

DO you laugh a lot? Can you have intelligent conversations? Do you see the colors of sunsets or just the darkness afterward? Single female, 33, attractive and physically fit seeking single, caucasian male 30-40 who correctly answers these questions. Interests vary from country to cultural indoors to outdoors. Save me from being just "one of the guys!" (MP-453)

A bay window brightens the formal dining room which is decorated in shades of mauve.

Home, Sweet, Home

Living in the country — only minutes from downtown Midland or Midland Park Mall — a family can enjoy raising horses, with all the conveniences of the city. Located in Kniffen Estates, this week's featured home is situated on 1¼ acre of land and has many elegant appointments.

A circle drive leads into this three bedroom and three bath home. A leaded glass front door, with matching side panels, opens onto a marble foyer that is highlighted by a taupe wallcovering with white flowers and rose accents.

A STEP leads to the sunken living area that focuses on an Austin stone wall and fireplace. Built-in cabinets are situated on both sides. Pale mauve walls above a light stained wainscoting, a cathedral ceiling and a skylight are the other amenities in this wonderful room.

A door from the living area provides access to the backyard and covered patio. The patio is enclosed on three sides and has two skylights and ceiling fans. A cinder block fence separates this yard from the horse arenas, as well as allowing for privacy.

An arched doorway leads from the living area into the formal dining room. A bay window provides many rays of sunshine into this room which has a mauve silk wallpaper, also over a lightly stained wainscoting.

THE KITCHEN is found next to the formal dining room and behind the living area. The finish on the kitchen cabinets match the wainscoting in the living and dining rooms.

The appliances would delight any gourmet cook and include a Whirlpool cooktop, a continuous self-cleaning oven and dishwasher, an Amana microwave/convection oven and a Toastmaster warming oven. This kitchen even comes complete with a restaurant grill which is great for pancakes or for Oriental stir fry. A plant window above the kitchen sink is not only great for house plants, but provides a view of the front yard which is landscaped with large trees that have Austin stone tree wells.

The kitchen is designed around a central work island and the lower cabinets all have pull-out drawers. One cabinet has a stained glass front which is ideal to be used as a china cabinet. A breakfast bar is situated at one end of the kitchen and can accommodate four stools.

THE BREAKFAST room is found in an alcove off the kitchen and five windows make this room a circular shape. These windows provide a view of a side patio. A flame stitch wallcovering adorns the walls of the kitchen and breakfast room.

From the kitchen, a doorway leads into the utility room that has space for a freezer, a sink with a hand-painted rooster tile splash backs and a built-in ironing board. An etched rooster motif in a glass door opens into a spacious pantry that has an shelf for unlocking groceries. Floor-to-ceiling shelves line the pantry and provide many places for storage of food and kitchen items. Two doors in the utility room open onto the side yard and the extra-wide two car garage with automatic door openers.

A half-bath is adjacent to this area and is decorated in shades of mauve, peach and gray.

To the right of the front foyer, a hall leads to three, very colorful bedrooms. Shades of teal and mauve decorate the first bedroom which has a large bay window that views the front yard. This room also has a spacious closet with built-in shelves.

The second bedroom is highlighted by a peach decor, with a silk wallpaper accenting one wall. This room has a cathedral ceiling and a large closet with built-ins.

A hall bath is situated between these two rooms and has a very unique feature — a bay window lines one wall of the bath. The bath also features a long marble vanity with a shell shaped sink and make-up area. The sink has an antique brass swan fixture. A beveled edge mirror reflects this beautiful bath which includes a bathtub and built-in storage cabinets.

Pale lavender highlights the master bedroom which has a cathedral ceiling and two spacious closets. One closet has been designed with floor-to-ceiling shelves for shoes.

The master bath has two stained glass windows. One window is situated above a lavender jacuzzi tub with a dolphin fixture. A marble step leads into this bathtub which is ideal for a relaxing bubble bath at the end of a busy day. A marble vanity is located across from the tub. A circular stained glass window is situated next to the over-sized shower. This bath also has a walk-in closet with built-in drawers and shelves.

The other amenities of this country home are a concrete shake roof, an alarm system, nine ceiling fans and a sprinkler system.

RE/MAX of Midland is offering this home for $187,500.

Husband helps juggle family's moves

For Gary and Karen Endorf, managing their recent move from Bartlesville, Oklahoma to Midland was no real paroblem. This was their seventh move since 1980 and they have learned more of the important "ins and outs" of relocation with every move. And juggling all the factors of a move probably come easy to Gary since his primary hobby actually is juggling.

"I began juggling when I was just a kid playing baseball and would sometimes find myself with several baseballs in hand at one time," said Gary. Gary is a member of the International Juggler's Association and has been reported to have been the "life of the party" on more than one occasion.

Gary and Karen attended the University of Arizona where they both obtained degrees in chemical engineering. Karen later obtained an MBA from the University of Tulsa. Gary has his masters degree in chemical engineering and is also working toward his MBA. Both are employed with Phillips Petroleum.

When asked how their company had handled their relocation since they were both employees of the company Karen said, "Phillips was supportive in coordinating the dual transfer to the Odessa office. They worked hard to ensure the move provided new and challenging positions for both Gary and I."

Karen and Gary felt the most important aspect in preparing for a home finding trip, Gary stated, "We spend a lot of time on the phone prior to the trip so we are able to have a lot of work done before we get there. That way, instead of having to look at areas that really don't fir our needs and 30 or 40 houses, our agent has zeroed in on six or eight houses for us to look at on our original trip."

Ruth Young, their agent, added, "Karen was very specific about what she wanted and never really waivered. I was able to use that specific information in a computer search in order to select the best possibilities for us."

Gary continued, "We also depend a lot on personal referrals. That's how we were connected with Ruth. Prior to going into an area, we will talk to people already in the area or people who have lived there and learn as much about the areas that will best fit our needs as we can. We'll also learn which is the best real estate company to work with and the best agent. Conversely, we're always happy to pass along similar information to people following us to fill our positions or someone just being transferred to the area we're in or we've already lived in."

Ruth Young, right, of Don Harvey, Realtors recently helped Gary and Karen Endorf, as well as their children Laura and Erin, with finding a new home after being transferred from Bartlesville, Okla.

When asked to compare the various places they've lived, Gary commented, "Each one has been different in that we've usually moved from a larger metropolitan area to a small one or vice versa. At first, we anticipated some adjustment problems with this but all the transitions have been very smooth. We like the larger cities for all the diversity they have to offer and we like the smaller towns because they have been excellent places for raising a family."

"We're very pleased with our neighborhood and neighbors here in Midland," said Gary. "Many of the families here are about our age and even though we work for different companies there is a common bond because most of us work for oil or oil related industries."

"The day we moved in, people brought us things to welcome us," added Karen. "And there are a lot of children around the age of our daughters, Laura and Erin who are 6- and 4-years-old."

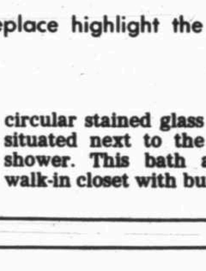

We're certainly happy to have the Endorf's become members of our member community and hope they won't be juggling a move out of here for some years to come.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Inventory, overpriced listings, Langston Realtors

Q. Is the number of properties on the market still stable? R.A.

A. We are happy to report that the number of residential listings in M.L.S. is still stable: 1136 as of March 14,1989, or 6 percent less than the same time period in 1988.

Langston

Even though the overall residential market is stable, it is encouraging to us that the number of new homes on the multiple market are increasing: 45 as compared to 26 last year. We believe this signals confidence in the market by our builders. An increase of 42 percent in new home sales for the first quarter of the year (17 vs. 12 in 1988) indicates this confidence is justified!

Q. How does Langston rate in size in real estate firms in the city? J.A.

A. We are the largest firm in the city and are also the oldest multiple agent firm still owned by its original founders. With 43 licensed agents, we are 23 percent larger than our nearest competitor, according to the Midland Board of Realtors records. The growth of our company has been consistent and gratifying, in spite of intensive recruitment programs conducted by a limited few of the other offices.

That our agents choose to remain with our firm, and that it continues to grow with new, unsolicited associates, is not much a compliment to the Langston organization as it is to the loyalty, cooperation, pride, respect and friendship that exists among our sales associates and staff.

Q. The home next door to me has been on the market for two years! This is a great neighborhood and the property is in good condition; why won't it sell? B.L.J.

A. Not knowing the specific property, I can only give some general answers as to why some homes do not sell, even over an extended period of time.

Most of us at Langston's believe that overpricing is a factor in as many as 85 percent of the cases. Poor condition of the property, architecture that does not blend with the rest of the neighborhood, and a home located in the extreme higher end of the market (where there are few buyers) account for slow sales in the remaining 15 percent. If a property is in more than one of these categories, (ie, is overpriced, is in less than optimum condition, and "sticks out like a sore thumb" in the neighborhood) the problem is only compounded.

How does a seller know his property is overpriced? Two events can indicate to a seller than his home is priced above the market. First, if he is getting lots of lookers but no contracts then buyers are telling him his home is priced above the compitetion.

Second, if he is getting few lookers and the other homes in his neighborhood or in his price range are being shown, then buyers are telling him that his home is so far above the competition that they do not even want to consider it. Also, if the market comparables prepared by his Realtor indicate his home is above the competition, then it probably is.

We also believe that selection of a listing agent and broker can affect the marketing time for a property. Is the agent enthusiastic and competent; does he have strong support from a large, aggressive agency sales team, and does he have respect and cooperative working relationships with Realtors in all other offices. Putting up a sign, an ad in the newspaper and a listing in the MLS are only the first steps in selling a property.

In a competitive market such as ours, it is more important to price the property competitively, extensively "sell" to the other 305 Realtors in multiple and to develop an innovative marketing plan. A case in point: one of our associates, Linda Miller, did just that recently. She and Gloria Lott, another of our agents, put the new listings under contract in three days!

"NOTE: This representation is based in whole or in part on data supplied by the Midland Board of Realtors or its Multiple Listing Service. Neither the Board nor its MLS guarantee or is any way responsible for its accuracy. Any market data maintained by the Board or its MLS necessarily does not include information on listings not published at the request of the seller, listings or brokers who are not members of the Board or MLS, unlisted properties, rental properties, etc."

If you have any questions on real estate that you would like answered in this column, you are invited to call or write me at Langston, Realtors, 1908 West Wall, Midland, Texas, 79701, (915) 682-9495.

Mixed bulbs ideal for indoor gardening

By Patrick Denton
Copley News Service

Among those who love to pot spring flower bulbs for indoor bloom it's traditional wisdom that just one variety goes into each pot. This ensures a full bouquet of flowers at one time from each container.

But today, for something just a little different and adventurous, I would like to describe how to combine different kinds of bulbs in one pot for a mixed bulb flower garden, one that will simulate in miniature fashion an outdoor spring bulb display.

What you need for such an indoor bulb garden is a fairly large, shallow container that is at least 5 inches deep and 10 inches wide. It can be wider, depending on the scope of your ambition in this artistic endeavor. It can be a plain plastic or clay pot, or a decorative ceramic one. You may even choose to kidnap the family soup tureen or salad bowl for the occasion.

The container must be scrupulously clean, so wash it with soap and hot water to eliminate any harmful bacteria that could infect your potting soil and bulbs. Cover any drainage holes with pebbles or pieces of broken crockery so that the soil mixture will not escape.

With these preparations finished, you are ready to fill the container halfway with a potting mixture. What you use will depend on the type of soil mix you feel comfortable with, but the mixture must be sterilized.

There are many soil mixes on the market. Peat mixtures are very popular, and I like them for hanging baskets and other containers where weight is a key factor. But for potting bulbs, my own preference is a rather heavy purchased potting soil on the sandy side, mixed with equal amounts of damp peat and perlite. To each 2-gallon pailful of this soil mixture for bulbs I blend in about 3 tablespoons of bone meal.

The containers half full, you are ready to set in your bulbs. Keep in mind both the heights and the time of bloom of each of your bulb types. Among the tallest in your bulb garden will be the standard daffodils and most tulips. Mid-sized will be hyacinths, low double early tulips and small daffodil types. The smallest will be crocuses and the miniature iris reticulata.

The iris and crocuses will bloom first followed by the hyacinths, daffodils, then tulips. With a progression of bloom, a bulb garden can last several weeks.

The tallest group of flowers can be placed either at the back or in the center of the container. The sides and front can then be filled in with the shorter growing bulb flowers.

One possible combination whose blooms would roughly coincide instead of offering a progression, would be a grouping of Ice Follies daffodils??? complemented by clusters of the shorter rose-colored Peach Blossom double early tulips and dark blue Bismarck hyacinths.

Another mixed grouping that would bloom at the same time could contain groupings of the pure white hyacinth L'Innocence and the deep pink Tubergen's Scarlet hyacinth, with a backdrop of Dutch Master, a stocky daffodil with upward-facing blooms.

Once your bulbs are chosen and you have decided how to place them, set them close together on top of the soil in the prepared container so that the tips of the bulbs will be just covered when the container is filled to just below the rim. Water the planting and place it in a cool, dark location, between 40 and 50 degrees Fahrenheit for eight to 10 weeks. Water when the soil feels dry.

When roots show through the drainage hole and shoots begin pushing through the soil, bring the bulb garden first into a cool room with low light for a few days. Then move it gradually to a bright location.

Dene Kelly associates work for people, not properties

At Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors, the real estate associates understand that choosing a home can be a complicated decision, involving personal feelings and goals.

So from the start, according to Dene Kelly, we focus on finding your ideal home — saving financial and legal matters for later. Our agents listen carefully to your preferences and show you only the homes which best suit your needs.

"Then, we step back — giving you room to make this important selection. There's never any hassle or pressure to make a snap decision. But, we're always there if you have questions or need an honest opinion."

Once a person or couple has made their choice, the professional staff goes to work again, helping to get the best price possible on a new home and seeing the customer through the final closing.

So, whether you're looking for that special first home or growing with your family into larger quarters, Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors can help you make that important move.

ramses

There isn't a ruler in the history of the world whose conquests, achievements, riches and legends rival those of Ramses the Great.

Ramses was a famous warrior before he became king. He built at least one temple or monument in every city and town in Egypt. He regularly dismantled structures of other pharaohs and used those stones and columns for his own buildings.

He was no doubt the single most powerful person in the world at the time of his death and the legends about him have only grown during the last 3,000 years.

Now the exhibit as legendary as Ramses himself is in Dallas through Aug. 27. The largest collection of ancient artifacts ever to leave Egypt, it features 74 priceless treasures from the Golden Age of the last great pharaoh, Ramses II.

Since the exhibit arrived in the U.S. two years ago, more than 3 million people have flocked to museums from Boston to Denver to see the once-in-a-lifetime display of 3,000 year-old massive gold jewelry, breath-taking mummy cases and stunningly crafted works of art.

"The Ramses exhibit will have a positive economic impact on the community. We are proud to be a part of such a tremendous undertaking," said Reece Overcash Jr., chairman and chief executive officer of The Associates, a sponsor of the five-month-long exhibition.

The centerpiece of the exhibit — the incredible 51.5 ton, 27-foot tall "Colossus of Memphis" — depicts the youthful Ramses II striking a traditional Egyptian male pose — left foot leading first. His right hand clasps a bolt of folded cloth — symbolic of royalty — and he wears the white crown of Upper Egypt.

Ramses the Great's first and favorite wife, Nefertari, bore the king's first-born son. Ramses honored her with the most beautifully decorated tomb in the Valley of the Queens and allowed her the rare privilege of a political role.

DALLAS

The Venetian-style water taxis are one of the many attractions along the beautiful Mandalay Canal in Irving.

Dallas/Fort Worth.

The names of these two cities conjure up images of soaring glass skyscrapers and neon lights as readily as they do cowboys.

Dallas was settled in 1841 by John Neely Bryan, a Tennessee lawyer who established a trading post on the banks of the Trinity River. He envisioned the area becoming a hub of activity with steamboats carrying goods up the river from the Gulf of Mexico.

Although his dream of a great inland port never materialized, Dallas did become a thriving trade center via the railroads which helped establish it as a hub from which locally produced goods were sent to both coasts and the Midwest.

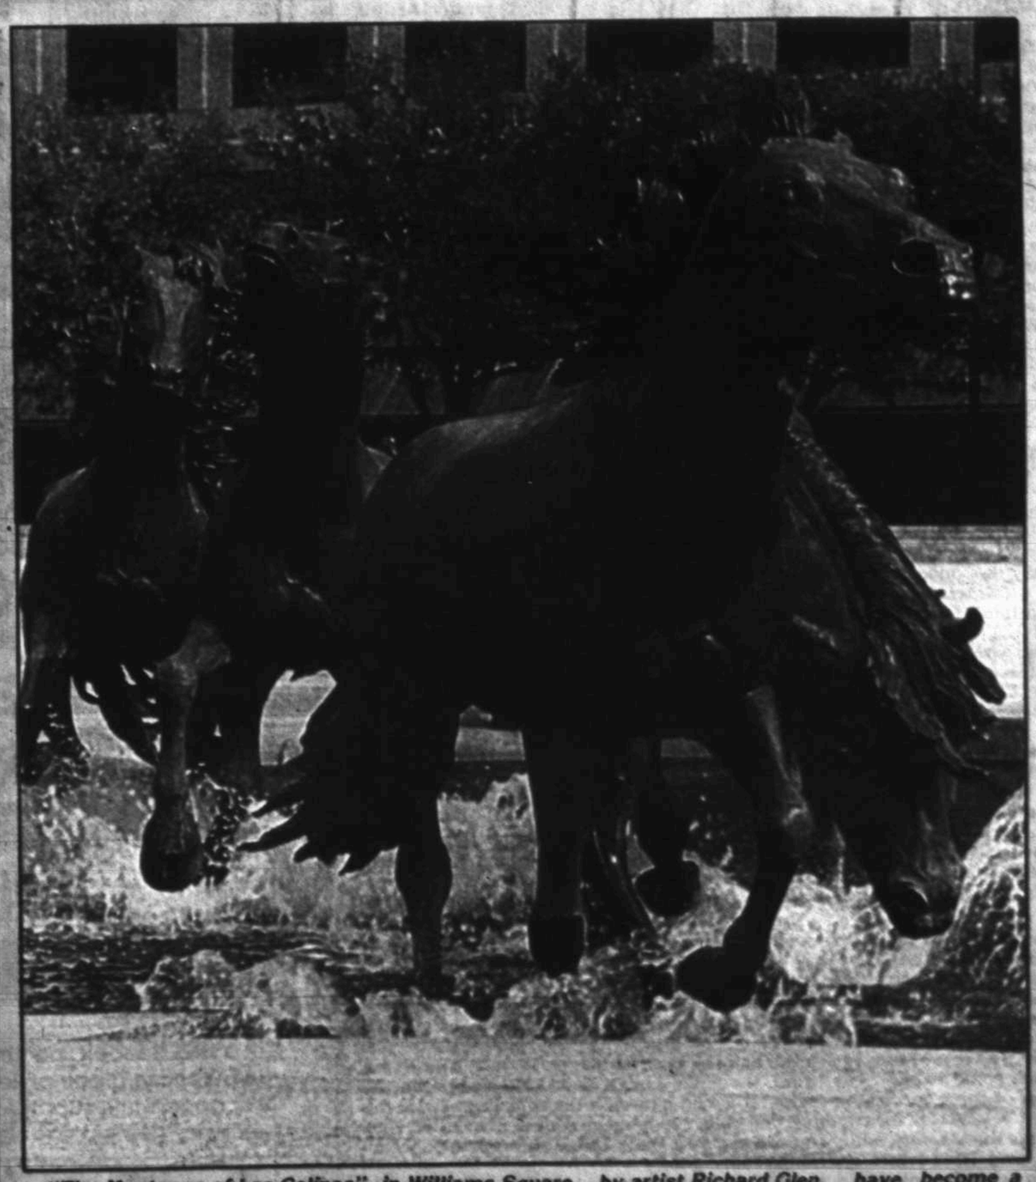

Fort Worth, originally settled in 1849 as an army outpost at a fork of the Trinity River, was one of eight forts assigned to protect settlers from Indian attacks. But progress helped the growing settlement survive long after other such towns had blown away with the dust of departing pioneers.

After decades of dependence on the cattle industry, Fort Worth again prospered with the arrival of the railroads. Later, during World War II, publisher and businessman Amon Carter used his friendship with President Franklin Roosevelt to attract defense contractors to Fort Worth.

In Israel, snow is main attraction at ski slope

By RONI RABIN

MOUNT HERMON, Israeli-Annexed Golan Heights (AP) — Drivers ignore the sign: "Closed Military Area." Hundreds of cars loaded with ski equipment climb the winding road each weekend to the only snow-capped mountain available.

Mount Hermon borders on Syria and Lebanon and affords the Israeli army with a strategic look into enemy territory. But that has not prevented the mountain from becoming a popular ski resort for Israelis, most of whom rarely see snow and are more accustomed to sun-drenched Mediterranean beaches.

As skiers whizzed down Israel's side of Mount Hermon one recent weekend, soldiers with submachine guns gingerly stepped around toddlers on sleds, brought to the resort by parents who might have driven four or five hours just so the youngsters could get their first taste of fun in the snow.

"It's not much, but it's all we've got," said veteran skier Aryeh Morris.

Morris said he first learned to ski in 1968, a year after the Golan Heights were captured by the Israelis from Syria. There were no cable cars then and no ski resort, but there was an army base and a shack at the top of the 6,000-foot mountain.

"I used to hitch a ride up in a command car with troops, and then I skied down. That's how I learned how to ski," he said.

Since then he has joined the Israel Ski Club and has taken annual trips to European resorts.

Crowding takes some of the pleasure out of skiing at Mount Hermon. One complaint is the snow blanket has been worn thin by too many skiers, but there also is grousing about short trails, high prices and an irregular policy on opening.

A day of skiing costs the equivalent of about $80, a price one Israeli characterized as "an arm and a leg." Israel's average monthly wage is $800.

When there's a heavy snowstorm the resort is usually closed for the day because the owners can't clear access roads. Other times the army closes the mountain without warning for security reasons.

Skiers also complain that their compatriots are rude on the slopes. Indeed, there seems to be no Hebrew equivalent for "Passing on the right!" or "Coming by on your left" — only an occasional grunt, which usually comes too late.

"They're wild animals, I wanted to clobber one kid," said Shmuel Shene, a 52-year-old Israeli businessman, who prefers skiing in Chamonix, France. "They're just like they are on the roads, trying to show off."

The army usually doesn't enforce the "Closed Military Area" warning, but security is tight. Soldiers man the cable car stations, using the mountain tops as lookout points to scan the area.

"We live inside the army," said Eli Sagron, who manages the resort. "They need us and we need them."

Mount Hermon is popularly known in Israel as "the eyes of the nation," a name that stuck after it was captured in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war and an army officer used the phrase to stress the mountain's strategic importance.

Israel annexed the Golan Heights in 1981, though Syria still claims the territory. The ski-lift is just two miles from the border with both Syria, Israel's most hardline foe, and Lebanon, where guerrilla attacks often originate.

On the recent weekend, troops spotted a man parachuting onto the slopes and were about to open fire when they were told he was a soldier who had permission to make the jump. The soldiers thought he was a guerrilla using a new method to infiltrate.

Last year, just about 10 miles southeast of Mount Hermon, a Palestinian guerrilla hang-glided into Israeli from inside Lebanon and attacked an army base, killing six soldiers. Nearby Mount Dov has been the site of numerous Arab infiltration attempts from Lebanon.

But with all the troops on Mount Hermon, said one soldier, "This is probably the safest place in Israel."

At least 300,000 visitors flock to the mountain each year during the December-April season, according to Sagron.

"Ninety-five percent of them don't ski," Sagron said. "They come to play in the snow, sled on the little plastic sleds and go up the cable car to see the view."

New Zealand offers more than sheep, kiwis

By JACKIE DEMALINE
Hearst News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — Nine days. That's how long guidebook author Arthur Frommer says tourists should visit New Zealand.

Frommer has missed the mark in the land of Kiwis (the fruit, the bird and the national nickname). New Zealand merits more time.

As winter blankets us, the Southern Hemisphere awakens to summer. Breathtaking beauty, moderate climate, a favorable exchange rate and an English-speaking population make New Zealand an attractive alternative; exotic, inexpensive, safe.

Poke through small shops in the cities of Wellington and Christchurch and find some of the most stunning knitwear in the world. In a land of three million people and 70 million sheep, young designers have made their mark. But to see the real New Zealand is to leave its cities behind.

After landing in Auckland, at the northwest tip of North Island, wend your way south to Wellington, the capital city. The trip can take a week or more, depending on your inclinations. Car rentals, unfortunately, are expensive: the cheapest we could find was $100 a day.

Wonderful accommodations can be had for a song throughout New Zealand. The government operates a subsized chain called THC Hotels, many in far-flung points of scenic beauty where corporate chains fear to tread. The hotels all are whimsical, and feature excellent lodgings and service at great prices.

AT WAITOMO, a rumbling wooden resort nestles above the glow worm caves. The guides will tell you gleefully that the strange glow illuminating the cave ceilings is caused by hundreds of thousands of maggot larvae clinging to the cave tops. It looks better than it sounds.

Back at the hotel, the staff is hard-working, accommodating and gracious. Our room had been decorated recently in the Laura Ashley style, and were cozily equipped with electric blankets, teapots and remote controls for the TV — something of a joke, since Kiwi TV is on for only a few hours a day.

In the off-season — May through August — hotels rates at Waitomo were $12 (U.S.) a night. Where there is no THC, scan the guide books for motor inns, a wonderful designation that translates to unbelievably inexpensive motels (as little as $16 American a night) which come with a fully equipped kitchen — plates, pots, utensils, milk in the fridge — along with the basics.

Bed-and-breakfasts are a good option, but even better are farm stays. In the interior of North Island, several major sheep stations (the Kiwi eqivalent of a Texas cattle ranch) open their doors to visitors.

There is tremendous climate and topographic change in New Zealand. To the far north are barrier islands, still accessible only by dairy boat, although these days tourists are invited along for the ride. Just to the east are the gold mines, though the gold rush is long dead.

Drive south through farmland as intensely green as Ireland to Rotorua, bastion of the Maori culture and the Maori Institute — a center of controversy for the Maoris, who comprise 60 percent of the New Zealand population.

A CENTURY ago, these original New Zealanders submitted without fight to European rule. Now they are trying to rediscover their roots, reclaim their rights and save their traditions. The Maori's is a culture of storytellers and pictures. With no written language, the Maoris rely on intricate carvings and remembrance — much of it sung — to perpetuate their tribal history of love, suffering, defiance.

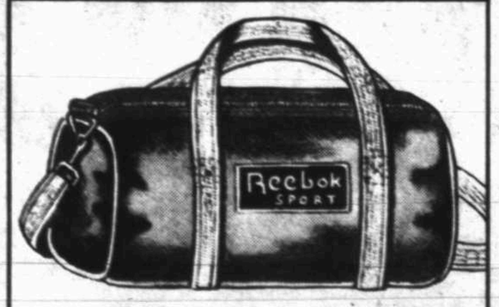

Not far from Rotorua are the nation's poshest lodges. Royalty and Robin Leach come to stay. The finest, the Huka Lodge, is at Lake Taupo, in the heart of the trout-fishing region. It would be worth the splurge at twice the price — $350 U.S. for two buys one night's lodging, pre-dinner cocktails, five-course dinner with wine, and country breakfast. Game and fish are specialties, and Kiwi wines are remarkably good.

To take the inland route to Wellington, you must travel the Great Icy Desert Road. That's actually printed on the official map, and it's accurate.

As the highway hooks past a live volcanic mountain range, the scrub brush along the roadside gathers just enough moisture so that at cooler temperatures the ever-shadowed turns become treacherous.

Americans who visit New Zealand's cities may suffer culture shock. Movies are dated, but a visit to a cinema is priceless. Ushers escort you to reserved seats and the screens befit a modern-day movie palace. It's a long way from the local mall's eight-plex.

Ships cruise by lands of Bible

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

Lapping at the shores of ancient kingdoms, fabulous empires and the lands of the Bible and the Koran, the blue Mediterranean is unlike any other sea.

Around it, nations as diverse as Spain and Turkey and Greece and Egypt recall our earliest civilizations. Yet historic cities and treasures are but some of the lures of the Mediterranean. The unmatched cultural and scenic diversity and a string of conveniently located ports are other key reasons for the popularity of cruising this sea that links three continents.

The unfortunate events on the Achille Lauro four years ago prompted so many American cruise fans to sail elsewhere that several lines pulled their ships out of the region altogether.

The hiatus is expected to end with the return of the first of more than 30 ships scheduled to sail Mediterranean itineraries this season. Many will concentrate on the eastern end of these waters, including such seas as the Adriatic, the Ionian and the Aegean.

As varied as the more than 50 ports of call are the vessels that will sail the Mediterranean. They range from Cunard's 1,740-passenger Queen Elizabeth II to the delightful yachtlike Stella Maris of Sun Line Cruises, which carries only 180 travelers.

THE LATTER and its sister ships, the Stella Oceanis and the Stella c18, are very popular with both Americans and Europeans; from late March though October, they will be offering some of the better itineraries.

Founded 31 years ago by the late Charalambos A. Kéusseoglou, Sun Line is one of the few cruise companies owned and operated by a family. Athens-based M.P. "Pilli" Keusseoglou is president; younger brother Alex is head of marketing, with offices in New York; and their mother — the much-admired "Mrs. K" — still takes an active role in the operation from the family home in Monaco and the New York office.

A few months ago I cruised aboard Stella Solaris, the 18,000-ton flagship, on a weeklong itinerary that included some fascinating Greek and Turkish ports. I then switched to the 3,500-ton Stella Maris for a fast-paced, but thoroughly rewarding, four-day voyage around the Greek Islands.

It was my first time on these ships, and I was pleased with just about every aspect of the journeys. As colleagues had told me, the service was superb, on-board facilities excellent, the food varied and well prepared, the itineraries imaginative and the cruise staff outstanding. I was most impressed by the hospitality of crew members, who acted as if they were members of a single family hosting friends.

This season, the line will offer three- and four-day cruises around the Greek Islands; seven- and 14-day sailings to Turkey, Egypt and Israel; and weeklong voyages between Nice and Venice. All of these options can be combined with land packages available through Sun Line Tours.

ONE OF THE MOST unusual offerings may be a new weeklong itinerary for the cozy Stella Maris that combines three ports in Turkey and five islands in Greece.

With Friday departures from Piraeus, the port of Athens, these sailings in April, May, September and October will include an overnight call at Istanbul, the bustling Turkish city of mosques, bazaars and palaces, where Europe and Asia meet. Other features include daylight passage of both the Dardanelles and the Bosporus straits; a call at the seaside resort of Kusadasi, in Turkey, to visit the spectacular ruins of the nearby marble city of Ephesus; and visits to Rhodes, Crete, Santorini, Delos and Mykonos.

A trunkful of delights, to be sure, and all seen in a week. The calendar may be a blur that puts you in an "If it's Tuesday, it must be Rhodes" mode. However, considering that your air-conditioned hotel is traveling along with you, I cannot imagine a more appealing alternative for sampling such diversity of great sights in seven days. With rates starting at $1,165 per person, double occupancy, Sun Line offers good value as another staple.

Equal in rates and length, Stella Maris' "Around Italy" cruises in June, July and August are equally unusual — visiting great ports in five European countries.

From Venice, the often ecologically troubled but always glorious city on the Adriatic, the itinerary for the six westbound departures includes calls at Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia's renowned walled city on the Dalmatian coast; Corfu, the greenest of Greece's islands; Valletta, the fascinating 400-year-old capital of Malta; and Italy's Messina, gateway to one of my favorite destinations — the hillside town of Taormina, with its 2,300-year-old Greek theater. The ship also visits Capri, with its famous 11th century Byzantine church, Blue Grotto and seafood restaurants; the island of Elba, which belongs to Italy and is the site of Napoleon's first exile; Portofino, a gem on the Italian Riviera best known for its jet-set visitors and artists; and finally Nice, the glamorous hub on the French Riviera.

IN THE OTHER direction, from Nice to Venice, the six eastbound departures follow a slightly different route. From the French port, Stella Maris sails to Portofino; Elba; Sorrento, for the ruins of Pompeii; Messina; Katakolon, the gateway to ancient Olympia where the first Olympic Games were held; Corfu; and Dubrovnik.

Meanwhile, in the Eastern Mediterranean, the recently refurbished Stella Solaris will be doing a series of weeklong itineraries that can be combined into a grand 14-day voyage. The two-week cruise may be one of the better deals in the entire region.

I prefer the intimate ambience of the Stella Maris, but two of America's most respected cruise experts have nothing but raves for Sun Line's flagship Stella Solaris.

Antoinette DeLand, the author of "Fielding's Worldwide Guide to Cruises," has bestowed five of her rare stars — the top rating — on this luxurious yet casual liner.

Douglas Ward, the meticulous author of the just-published "Berlitz Complete Handbook to Cruising" and executive director of the International Cruise Passengers Association, gave the ship four of his equally spare stars. Ward described the Solaris as a ship "for the discerning passenger who seeks a more relaxed, unhurried cruise experience in fine surroundings, at reasonable cost (and) highly recommended."

Stella Solaris is all that, and then some.

From April through October, the 620-passenger liner will be sailing seven-day Greek Islands and Turkey cruises as well as weeklong Greek Islands, Egypt, Israel and Turkey itineraries. There will be eight departures in June, July, August and September for the 14-day itineraries — one of the more fabulous voyages in the Eastern Med.

Teenager's first credit card a milestone or tragedy?

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

Your son opens the envelope and his first credit card falls out. Is it his first taste of maturity? Or his last meal before execution?

Suddenly, small moments from the past invade the present like a pesky gnat that won't go away. You remember the first time he emptied out his piggy bank and tried to buy a $30 wagon with $1.57. But he was a naive child then. Not to worry.

Later, for no reason, you recall when he bought a $60 sweater for a girl he met in a line to see "Kiss of the Spider Woman," whom he dated for two weeks. If he didn't eat lunch or put gas in the car for three months, he could afford it. But he was only an impulsive teen-ager then. Not to worry.

Then you remember how he borrowed $40 for a concert ticket from you in 1984 and still hasn't paid you back. It's time to worry!

It's all your fault. You piffled away all those years telling him not to talk with food in his mouth and never to sit on a public toilet seat, but you didn't teach him about money. He thinks all you have to do is insert a bank card in a slot in a brick building and it drools 10s and 20s into a little tray.

Hey, he'll be all right. He's older now. Once he sits down and reads all the small print about interest rates, and checks the charges against the slips he's going to file in his desk each month, and keeps tabs on how much he's spending by keeping a little notebook in his billfold, he'll ... end up in jail. That's what he's going to do.

Remember his first checkbook? He thought it was a scratch pad for phone messages and shopping lists. When he wasn't ripping out one to wrap his gum in, he was scribbling out a check for something minor. He once was clocked at writing 23 checks in one week under $2.

What are you worried about? The credit card will be different. He has only one little piece of plastic to keep track of. ... Wait a minute, what if he gets more than one credit card! No one has just one credit card. His name and address are already in a worldwide computer system to alert everyone on this planet that another "big spender" is in tow.

A picture begins to form. He'll charge, charge, charge until all he is paying is interest. He'll get a second job to keep up with his time payments. He won't be able to afford his car. Without a car, he won't get dates. Without a date, he won't get married. Without marriage, you'll never be a grandmother. Why is he ruining your life!

As he prepares to leave the house, sanity returns. There is no reason in the world why he can't change into a responsible human being who is committed to being accountable for his own actions. Maybe he isn't the flake you thought he was.

As the motor of his car turns over, you see the credit card on top of the toaster. Should you keep the card and sleep at night? Or should you run out and give it to him?

What do you mean, give you a minute to think!

Intelligence a top trait for mates

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Men tend to look for young, attractive mates and women for older mates with good financial prospects, according to a researcher who says that overall, kindness and intelligence are the most-sought traits.

"When I first found these sex differences in samples within the United States, people were skeptical that they would be found across cultures," said University of Michigan psychologist David M. Buss. "I was skeptical as well. But after the data from 37 cultures were analyzed statistically, I was surprised at how pervasive the sex differences were."

Buss directed the International Mate Selection Project in which 50 scientists studied more than 10,000 people from 37 cultures in 33 countries to rate the desirability of 31 characteristics in a mate.

Among other findings of the five-year study:

- Western European and North American men preferred mates at least a year younger than themselves, those from Greece, Iran, Colombia and Bulgaria wanted mates three to four years younger, and Nigerian and Zambian men preferred women six or seven years younger.
- British and Zulu women put the least value on money-making ability, while American women considered finances important but not critical.
- Men from 23 of the 37 cultures considered marrying a virgin more important than did the women, both sexes in Taiwan, Israel, China, India, Indonesia and Iran held chastity important, and most Western Europeans found it irrelevant.

Women automobile buyers prefer Japanese

Like men, three women out of four buy U.S. cars. But when women buy imports they are more likely than men to purchase Japanese cars and less likely than men to buy European makes. American Demographics magazine reported that Honda is the most popular foreign make among women.

A horse and buggy ford a stream in the Wiapio Valley near Hilo, Hawaii. This is one of the few ways to see the nearly inaccessible valley, an idyllic paradise.

Hawaii's Valley of Kings is empty throne today

Copley News Service

The Valley of the Kings was the cradle of Hawaiian civilization, and the spirits of ancient royalty still pervade the lush tropical retreat.

The valley is guarded by nearly vertical 2,000-foot cliffs. The jungle foliage that fills the valley floor cascades out onto a black sand beach washed by the Pacific Ocean.

The valley is nearly inaccessible now. There is only one road into the valley, a tortuous, steep, narrow, twisting pathway with grades reaching 26 degrees. A four-wheel-drive vehicle with good brakes is essential.

The ancient Hawaiians who lived or visited here had to sail in on canoes or walk into the valley on a steep, zigzag path carved into the cliffs. The path still is used by hikers today.

The Valley of the Kings, now known as Waipio Valley, is located near the town of Honokaa about two hours' drive north of Hilo, Hawaii. Several operators provide tours of the valley.

Peter Tobin, a longtime Hawaiian resident, is the newest of these. He is owner and driver for Waipio Valley Wagon Tours, a unique way to see the unique valley. Two-hour mule-drawn wagon rides delve into nearly every corner of the valley.

TOBIN ALSO is one of the few residents still living in the valley. Only about 50 are left. When the valley population was at its height, there were from 10,000 to 20,000 people living there.

"The valley was like a Garden of Eden" to the ancient inhabitants, Tobin said, "a Shangri-La."

Abundant rain, amounting to 100 inches a year, created superb growing conditions for taro, a staple of the Hawaiian diet. Several crops a year could be grown, so there was no fear of famine.

Archaeological evidence shows that the first inhabitants came into the valley between A.D. 500 and 1000. It quickly became the economic, political and cultural center of the Big Island of Hawaii, Tobin said.

The valley became home to a long line of kings, thus giving Waipio the name, Valley of the Kings.

Tours start 900 feet up from the valley floor, at the Waipio Valley Lookout, easily accessible by Route 24. For those not taking a tour, this is the best place to see the valley.

The view is spectacular. The black sand beach spreads out into a graceful curve, held tight at both ends by soaring green cliffs, like bookends on a shelf. The waves crash in white billowy foam on the dark volcanic sand. A gentle river, fed by a cascading waterfall at the far end of the valley, flows through the deep green jungle and empties into the sea.

From the lookout, a harrowing four-wheel-drive descent into the valley ends by the riverbank, where Tobin and his team of mules wait patiently. Then it's off through the valley.

THERE IS only one unpaved road that snakes through Waipio. And there are no bridges. So vehicles must splash through the streams that wash down from the lofty heights above. When it rains, the road often floods, too, turning into a rutted quagmire.

At the height of the Hawaiian occupation, the valley floor would have been covered with taro patches, sugarcane fields and banana plants, while the Hawaiians would have lived in small villages against the walls of the canyon. But now the jungle has reclaimed the valley, covering nearly everything.

Tobin tells his passengers that for some reason, population of the valley began to decline. By the time Capt. James Cook set foot on the islands around 1790, the population of Waipio had declined to 4,000. When the first missionary arrived in the valley, the Rev. William Ellis in 1823, the population had dwindled to 1,325.

By the 1880s, the population had dwindled to about 200, thanks to a combination of disease brought by the white man and a lack of enthusiasm for the Spartan lifestyle by the residents of the valley, who moved on to other parts of the island. But even so, there were three schools, a restaurant, two churches, a pool hall, two jails and a post office.

Tobin's tour passes the sites and foundations of some of these buildings. But now the village is just a ghost town overgrown with tropical plants.

THE VALLEY'S most prominent resident was King Kamehameha I, the Hawaiian chief who united the islands into one kingdom. He spent most of his childhood years in the 1700s in the valley. It was here that he received his warrior god at one of the eight temples that once graced the valley. All are gone now, though.

The valley also was the site of one of the king's greatest battles. A rival chief from Kauai attacked the villages in the valley in 1782, burning and destroying them, handing Kamehameha a stunning defeat.

But in 1791, Kamehameha returned. He borrowed three cannons from a Boston sea captain he had befriended and mounted them on a seagoing war canoe. He met the rival chief in the waters just off the point by the Waipio, and in the first use of cannons in the Hawaiian islands, King Kamehameha soundly defeated his enemy and regained his throne.

Near the end of Tobin's tour, he brings his carriage out onto the sandy beach and lets his passengers wander along the deserted black sand beach. It is a postcard scene to be sure. The black beach topped with a frothing white mantle of sea foam dead ends at green vertical cliffs. Off at the far end of the valley the cascading waters of 1,300-foot Hilawe Falls fades into the mist.

Occasionally, the valley's resident herd of wild horses wanders down to the ocean's edge. Throughout the years, these horses have been set free by departing owners, and now run free through the valley, splashing in the rivers and feeding on vegetation alongside the road. They are not afraid of people, though, making them perhaps the tamest wild horses around.

The mule-drawn odyssey ends shortly thereafter, and passengers reboard the four-wheel-drive van for the slow climb out of Waipio Valley, leaving the paradise to the ghosts of the ancient Hawaiian kings.

World's most photographic sights listed

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

Before we tell you what we consider to be the most photogenic spots on this planet, we must share our overall philosophy about photographing well-known picturesque places.

Although you may have traveled a long distance, you might come to a vista that has been replicated hundreds of times in all of the media.

For example, you might be in San Francisco's Presidio, and there's a magnificent view of the Golden Gate Bridge. You aim your camera and suddenly freeze because the potential photograph has been done to a fare-thee-well. We say take the picture anyway, because it's your subjective interpretation of the Golden Gate Bridge.

The daylight, the clouds in the sky, the sparkle of the water in the bay are all unique to that particular moment — so capture it for your private posterity. It may not be as professional as others, but it's your very own.

Remember, you are the artist with the camera, and the shot you have lined up captures all of your personal decisions about something that is beautiful. With all of that in mind, we want to reminisce about our favorite photo stops.

THE SPHINX, EGYPT

You travel outside of Cairo, and in the shadow of the pyramids — still one of the seven wonders of the world — you will see the fabled sphinx. We were particularly disarmed by its immense size.

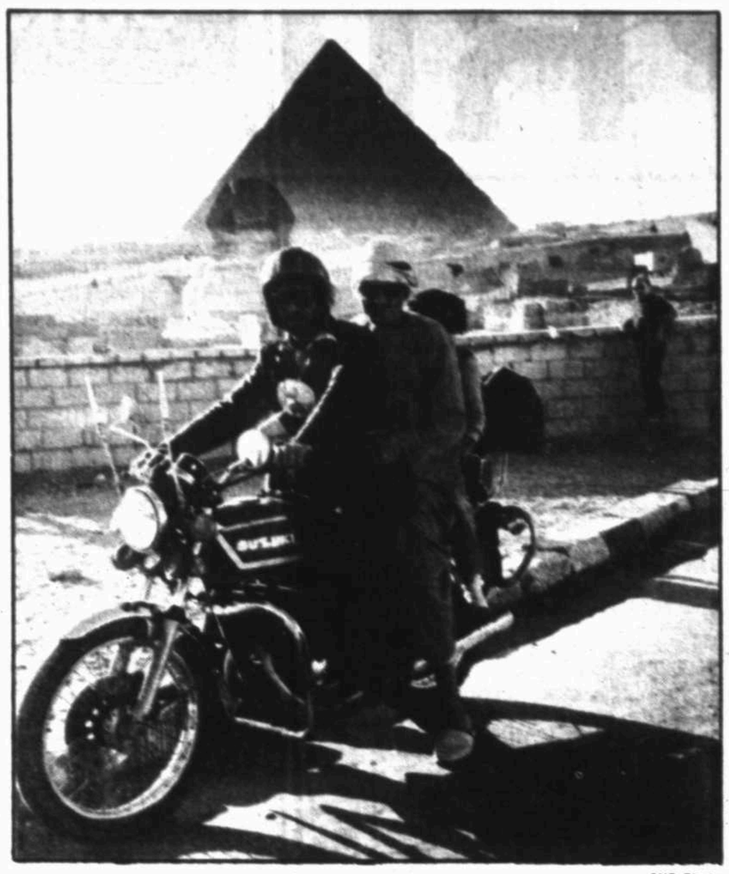

Because of the damaging effects of the environment on this ancient statue, you are preserving a moment in history by recording it on film. We applaud the Egyptian government's efforts to restore the face of the sphinx, and perhaps your photos will reflect the recent progress of the restoration.

THE GRAND CANYON, ARIZONA

We had an absolute photographic field day on our last visit to the South Rim of the Grand Canyon.

What makes this miracle of nature so phenomenal for photography buffs is how each season produces such different photos.

When you are there, you will want to certainly take photos at different times of the day since the colors of the limestone formations change so rapidly. Our favorite time is dawn when you can catch the growing light embrace the canyon's cliffs and crevices.

CNS Photo

A view of the Sphinx and Cheops' Pyramid near Cairo, Egypt, is one of the most photographed — and photogenic — travel sights in the world.

THE RINGSTRASSE, VIENNA

Austria's capital city is fabled in legend, history and song, and within this gracious metropolis is the Ringstrasse, literally an oval-shaped street on the map, radiating out from the Imperial Palace.

We actually have spent an entire day just circumnavigating this illustrious street by foot with our cameras.

Here, you'll obtain photos of some of the most beautiful 19th century buildings with exquisite rococo facades.

Along with your color photographs, be sure to take along a camera loaded with black-and-white film. We got some incredible, dramatic pictures in black and white.

One of the nice bonuses of working your way along the Ringstrasse is that you'll pass many lovely sidewalk cafes where you can take needed coffee breaks to stoke up on some of Vienna's glorious pastry under mountains of whipped cream.

THE FLOATING MARKET, BANGKOK

The photographic adventure begins when you take off in one of the many excursion boats that are lined up in front of the Oriental Hotel.

You must leave at dawn when the water of the Chao Phraya River is still and pitch black. The boat moves silently to the klongs — Bangkok's famed canals, which is why Bangkok is often called the "Venice of Southeast Asia."

Your camera will be in constant motion as you catch daily life awakening along the canal banks.

Thatched huts sit alongside tiny, jewel-like temples; fishermen are beginning to get their catch of the day; families will wave to you as hardy young boys ask to dive for coins thrown in the water.

Slowly, small boats carrying vegetables, fruit, savory snacks and even hardware will come toward your boat to sell their cargo. This aquatic market is typical in this part of the world, but what a feast for your film.

JEFFERSON MEMORIAL, WASHINGTON MONUMENT, WASHINGTON, D.C.

No matter how often we travel to Washington, D.C., we always bring along our cameras to get even more photos of the Capitol Building, the Lincoln Memorial and the White House.

However, our most favorite vista is that elegant diadem, Thomas Jefferson's Memorial, with his beloved dome and Greek columns, that sits alongside the gorgeous Tidal Basin. If you walk along the basin, you'll find the exact spot where you can include the white spire of the Washington Monument in the background of your frame of the Jefferson building.

Everyone talks about the beauty of the cherry blossoms in the area during late spring, but unfortunately our nation's capital is jam-packed with visitors at that time, and you may find yourself among an army of photographers — all trying to get the same picture. We love the autumn when the multihued fall foliage makes an even grander statement surrounding these historical buildings.

MANHATTAN SKYLINE, NEW YORK CITY

New York City may get a bad rap for many things, but so far, we've never met anyone who didn't love the look of Manhattan Island any time of day. Whenever we're lucky enough to have our commercial airliner fly over the city, we are still breathless.

Our favorite photo of this awesome cityscape happens to be from Brooklyn Heights, which is just across the East River from downtown New York. From the Esplanade, we like to aim our camera at dusk, and we keep clicking away until all of the famous buildings are sparkling with lights. Move your camera's direction up and down the waterfront, and the results will keep you and whomever is looking at your photos exclaiming with appreciation.

'Restful' oceangoing cruise bustles with activity

By FRED FERRETTI
Copley News Service

I don't know about you, but the architectural adornment furthest from my consideration would be a moving sculpture hanging over my head on an oceangoing cruise ship. There are, after all, other things about which to concern one's self when at sea, all of them somewhat hazardous, without worrying about some mobile crashing down upon me.

These days it would seem to be silly to go aboard a cruise ship just to rest because, if what I read in the travel pages is true, then cruises are for activities.

But how do you avoid the aerobics classes, those people charging about, as you try to drink your bouillon? How do you avoid the joggers chalking up the miles as they weave in and out of the deck chairs? How do you avoid dressing for distressing dinners? That sort of thing, like doing one's best to miss attending "Broadway-style productions?"

So you will probably understand how I felt when I heard that the newest "Love Boat," soon to be launched, will have as its artistic centerpiece a two-story "moving sculpture that will hang in the atrium lobby," the same lobby where there will be music and dancing each evening at sea.

I mean, I have seen a sufficient number of these disasters-at-sea movies to know, absolutely, that I do not wish to have large sculptures swaying over me as I dance.

And that's not all this most recent of the "Love Boats" will have for us.

Not satisfied with six meals a day?

Try the built-in pizzeria or patisserie. Weary of reading the ship's daily paper? "Spend time viewing the $1 million museum-class collection of contemporary international works of art by some of the best-known artists of today," whatever all of that means.

Why, oh why, won't they allow us to rest? Isn't that what cruises are for? It would seem not, for today the cruise ship holiday can be a floating bridge tournament, a spa visit with as Spartan a regimen as might be wished. It can be a week of Elizabeth Arden, time spent shooting layups with the Boston Celtics or discussing batting averages with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Your cruise can be the equivalent of a short summer session with your favorite tenured professor talking earnestly about Gothic arches, neo-Classical stucco, Egyptian mythology, Gainesborough oils or Tuscan terra cottas. Or it can be Las Vegas afloat, for shipboard entertainment has escalated from the days of accordion-playing duos who did background music for dinner and dance music after. It is a frenzy.

Your cruise is apt to include alleged chefs demonstrating how to whip up a proper butter sauce, or political practitioners telling you how your mayor is really elected, or lecturers talking about growing tea in the India highlands, or emissaries from Weight Watchers telling you how to avoid moving your belt buckle out one more notch while on the cruise.

It was not so long ago that the universe of the ocean liner was described, in asides, by those agents who sold staterooms, by the crews and stewards who staffed them, and even by the passengers who lolled about on them as experiences in "float and bloat."

Actually, I think this is perfectly fine, basically my kind of cruise — breakfast, morning coffee, lunch, afternoon bouillon, dinner, drinks, late supper — an enormous non-stop floating buffet.

In other words, cruises were once designed for the likes of me. With care taken to see to my excessive hunger pangs, with comfortable chairs, but without all of that activity that can serve no purpose except to disturb digestion. Nor do I remember all of that attention to hanging sculptures and other hazards to my health.

But now comes another "Love Boat" and at a time when the first one is still in reruns in secondary markets. And as I read through its pedigree I become steadily depressed — 13 decks high, a huge wraparound observation deck, swim-up bars and pools with waterfalls, casinos and piano lounges and, ugh, a fitness center.

When will it all end?

Not in the near future, it would seem, because the builders of these new cruise ships seem intent upon not building ships but floating motels, places in which I can do everything I do on land while I am sailed from port to port.

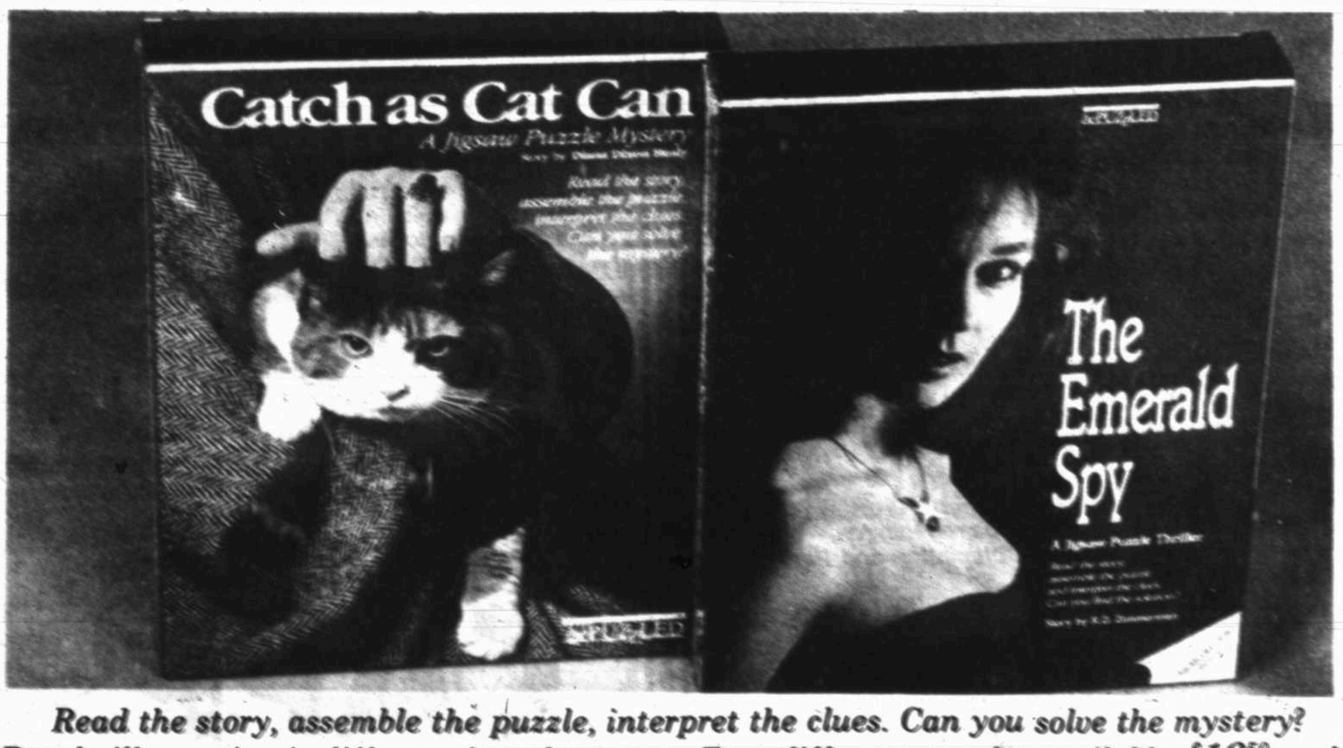

Which of course makes cruises not different at all, in my view, from any other holiday. Except that probably you will not become seasick in a Boca Raton cabana. And there is that hanging sculpture that would sway over me as I danced, if I were going to dance. I guess I just won't dance, don't ask me.

Permian Basin CAPP is a child abuse prevention program of Family Services of Midland. This non-profit program is dedicated to helping every child in West Texas grow up without ever experiencing abuse of any kind - physical, sexual, emotional or neglect.

CAPP has educational programs for adults who intervene in child abuse and for those who work with children daily. These adults learn to recognize and be alert to the way a child looks and acts when abuse is occurring and to know the right things to say to help these children.

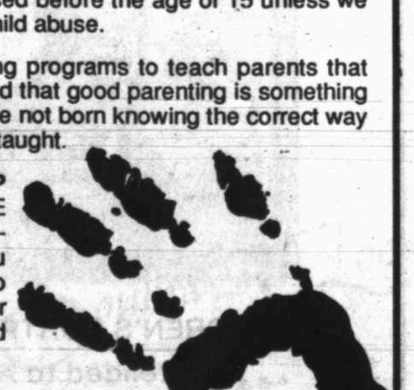

CAPP works with the community organizations who present child safety and anti-victimization programs. Teaching a child what abuse is and that no one has the right to abuse them is a message CAPP wants every child to hear.

CAPP wants to "wake-up" adults to the fact the 1/3 of all children probably will be abused before the age of 15 unless we all work together to prevent child abuse.

CAPP is developing parenting programs to teach parents that discipline means guidance and that good parenting is something everyone has to learn. We are not born knowing the correct way to rear a child, we need to be taught.

Permian Basin CAPP believes that CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION IS EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS! If you want to join CAPP's effort to prevent child abuse (whatever your age) call 685-3007 and ask for Carol Steele.

Egyptian tomb re-created in Chicago

Museum exhibit includes dioramas, authentic mummies

By JAMES V. GILL
Copley News Service

By JAMES V. GILL
Copley News Service

The Egyptian nobleman Unis-ankh died almost 5,400 years ago. Unis-ankh was not a pharaoh, an Egyptian king, so he didn't deserve a pyramid. But he was the son of a pharaoh and, befitting his social position, received a royal send-off.

HIS TOMB, called a mastaba, was built as part of a burial complex at Saqqara to house his mummified remains and the gifts prepared to ease his journey to the afterlife.

The mastaba was a rectangular, flat-topped tomb used for burial of nobility and courtiers. They were commonly found around a pharaoh's pyramid.

Unis-ankh's mastaba has been re-created in a corner of the great hall at the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago as part of a $2.2 million "Inside Ancient Egypt" exhibit.

The three-level mastaba, which measures 30 by 68 feet, contains two of the original tomb chambers or chapel rooms that were excavated and brought from Saqqara in 1908.

At a press preview prior to the exhibit's opening to the public, Michael Spock, the museum's vice president for public programs, said "Inside Ancient Egypt" was the first of a series of thematic exhibits the museum plans to be built between now and its centennial celebration in 1993.

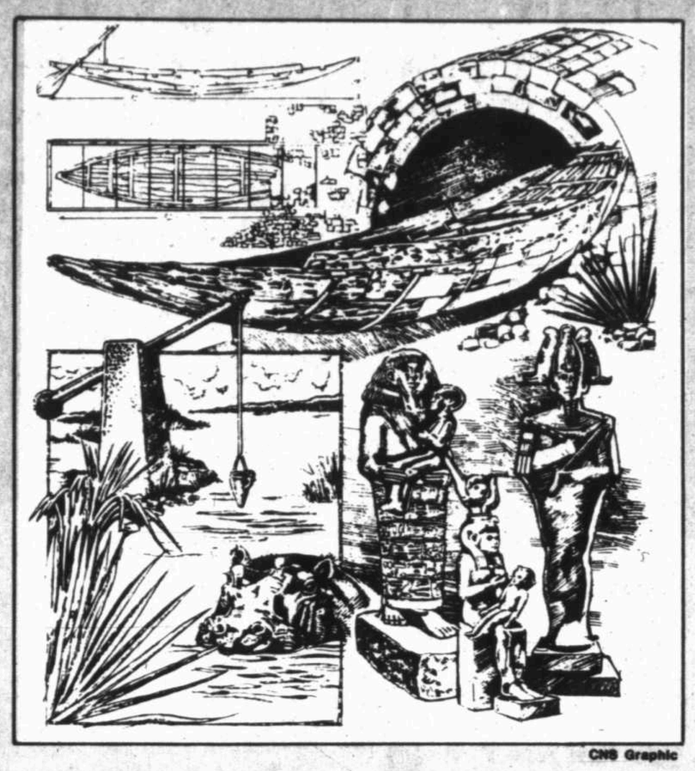

It is, according to Field President Willard (Sandy) Boyd, "an example of what is to come."

ISMAIL HAFEZ, consul general of Egypt in Chicago, hailed the exhibit as "a significant constructive event" which emphasizes the ancient origin of Egyptian culture.

Hafez said he hoped Americans would be excited to visit his country after viewing the exhibit.

The sign on the door to the re-created mastaba, inscribed in hieroglyphs, gives Unis-ankh's name and titles: "King's son, Unique courtier, Overseer of Upper Egypt, First one under the King, Priest of Truth, Unis-ankh."

In one of the excavated chapel rooms is the original, 14,000-pound limestone "false door," through which, the ancient Egyptians believed, the deceased's soul could enter and leave.

CNS Graphic

After a tour of the tomb's antechambers and chapel rooms, visitors will make their way to the roof of the mastaba. From there, they will descend a spiral staircase through the 35-foot burial shaft to the burial chamber and empty sarcophagus directly below the false door. (Elevators also are available.)

Unis-ankh's sarcophagus is empty because archaeologists have never excavated his burial shaft. Although the experts aren't certain, they feel it likely his mummy was pillaged and destroyed centuries ago by tomb robbers or by the ravages of time. Most were.

In the dim burial chamber, visitors will be presented the story of the ancient tomb robbers and how the Egyptian pyramids and tombs were looted.

The exit from the burial chamber is through a roughly hewn tomb robbers' tunnel past displays of some of the treasures the thieves were after.

THE TUNNEL leads from the dim to the grim, from the empty sarcophagus to the section of the exhibit that houses 23 authentic mummies and dioramas that graphically explain the ancient Egyptians' 70-day mummification process.

"This could well be the most fascinating part of the exhibit for many visitors," said exhibit developer Janet Kamien.

Its purpose is to help visitors understand the Egyptian's religious beliefs and the practices that were part of their elaborate preparation for death and the afterlife.

Squeamish parents and nightmare-prone children might wish to give this section of the exhibit only a cursory visit.

From the mummy room, visitors emerge into the bright Egyptian sunlight of a Nile Valley scene. Included are a water-filled canal and a living marsh with growing papyrus. The area is designed to explain the geography and climate of Egypt and the importance of the Nile River to the Egyptians' survival.

A part of the river scene is the royal boat used in the funeral procession for the Pharaoh King Sen-wosret III in 1850 B.C. — 3,838 years ago. The boat, and three others like it, were excavated in 1894 from the pharaoh's pyramid complex at Dashur.

Some experts argue that the boat was intended to take the pharaoh on his afterlife journeys to the sun and stars. Others believe the boats were merely used in the transporting of the dead king and his goods to his pyramid burial complex.

Near the pharaoh's boat, the museum has re-created a small village shrine to the cat goddess Bastet.

EGYPTIANS BELIEVED the gods could appear in any form, but especially as animals. One of their favorites was Bastet, the cat goddess who represented domestic harmony. Displayed inside the shrine are statues of Bastet and of her alter-aspect, the savage lioness Sekhmet.

Because of the Egyptians' respect for animals, many were mummified after their deaths. A small animal cemetery niche is opposite the Bastet shrine.

Also near the Nile scene is the museum's prized statue of Senmut, the loyal and favored aide (and possible lover) of the pharaoh, Queen Hatshepsut.

Only 28 likenesses of Senmut have been uncovered and most were badly mutilated — perhaps by political enemies of his time.

The museum's statue of Senmut is intact, showing him holding the queen's daughter, Princess Neferu-re. The quality of the workmanship and the fact the statue is intact lead Egyptologists to believe it may have been commissioned by Hatshepsut herself.

The final stop in the exhibit is an Egyptian marketplace, unfinished at the time of the press preview. The museum promises that it has been designed from market scenes found on the tomb walls of two Egyptian barbers buried together 4,500 years ago in Saqqara, near the tomb of Unis-ankh.

Special activities are being planned for this area to give visitors a chance to explore and engage in activities such as papyrus making, amulet casting and hieroglyph writing.

THE FIELD MUSEUM is located on Lake Shore Drive at Roosevelt Road on Chicago's lakefront.

Admission to the "Inside Ancient Egypt" exhibit is free with regular Field Museum admission. Admission is free on Thursdays. The museum is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. except Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day and New Year's Day.

Further information on the museum is available by contacting the Field Museum of Natural History, Roosevelt Road at Lake Shore Drive, Chicago, Ill., 60605; (312) 922-9410.

DEAR ABBY

Divorce announcements becoming acceptable

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: After a sincere but futile effort to make her marriage work, our daughter, Barbara (her real name), decided it was hopeless, so she has filed for divorce.

Since her father and I officially announced her marriage by sending engraved announcements to friends and family, we think it fitting and proper to do the same for her upcoming divorce.

Perhaps this has never been done before, but we feel that it will set the record straight officially, and we hope that friends and relatives will not call to ask us if what they heard is true. — BARBARA'S PARENTS

DEAR PARENTS: Your "idea" is both clever and practical, but it has indeed been done before.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter is being married soon. We have exchanged visits with the groom's parents, but our families have not met yet. Because our daughter and her fiance have both been in medical school out of state, neither family knows more than a few of their classmates and colleagues.

Would it be improper to provide name tags for family members and guests at our daughter's wedding reception? They would certainly be helpful. — FATHER OF THE BRIDE

DEAR FATHER: Improper? I think it's ingenious! I promise that more guests would bless you than blast you. And if anyone criticizes you, tell 'em that Abby said it was a great idea.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "HAVING A BALL IN CHARLOTTE, N.C.": What is so "sweet" about forbidden fruit when afterward you have to pray for a crop failure?

Dear Abby's Cookbooklet is a collection of favorite recipes — all tested, tried and terrific! To order, send your name and address plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Abby's Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Cruise offers sailing with scuba diving

By BOB McKNIGHT

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Alfred Convenuto's wife liked to spend her vacations near the water; he liked to spend them under the water.

Under those conditions, said Kristi McElroy, it was hard to have fun together; either she was bored while he was out diving or he was bored without his fins.

So they started taking separate vacations, until finally Convenuto thought it might be possible to combine two vacations in a way that satisfied both tastes.

That, McElroy said, is how Convenuto got the idea for Ocean Quest International, a company that offers what she calls a new kind of Caribbean cruise starting next month. McElroy is the company's director of sales services. Convenuto is the company's vice president of sales.

For the lover of shipboard fun and terra firma ports of call, Ocean Quest offers an ordinary cruise. For the scuba enthusiast, there are excursions four times daily via a fleet of 32-foot launches that will ferry divers to secluded reefs the big ship can't get to.

The cruise-scuba idea might make scuba divers a little easier to vacation with, said Mike Gomez, owner of Panama City Dive Center in Panama Beach, Fla.

Divers like to find isolated reefs and exotic underwater locations and — if they're real fanatics — they like to spend as much time down there as possible, he noted.

But he said those aquatic beauty spots are often nowhere near the entertainment a diver's dry-haired companion would want.

And vice-versa.

"Most of the cruise lines don't offer anything but snorkeling. At least 90 percent is snorkeling," Gomez said.

But the 457-foot Ocean Spirit will pull out of its home port of New Orleans on weekly trips with a water sports staff of 31, said Bret Gilliam, the ship's director of diving operations and aquatic activities.

Each of the eight launches carries 20 scuba divers and 46 oxygen tanks — enough room for each diver on the 340-person capacity Ocean Spirit to go diving as much as he wants, said McElroy.

She said that only about half of the passengers on a cruise will want to take advantage of the sport.

"What's intriguing about the concept to us is that a non-diving family member can go on the cruise and enjoy it while the diving member goes diving," said Pepe Merrick, owner of Dive Connections in New Orleans.

He said, however, that serious divers might hesitate to spend the extra traveling time going by sea that they could save by flying.

Henry Ford Museum depicts industrial revolution in its heyday

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

Revolution!

There have been many revolutions in the world — the Russian Revolution, the American Revolution, the French Revolution — but none has been as far-reaching or profound as the industrial revolution.

The industrial revolution changed the world. No more would peasants be forced to labor from dawn to dusk behind an oxen plowing a dried-up field. No longer would craftsmen be forced to huddle in poorly lit, barely heated cottages slaving over a workbench.

WITH THE ADVENT of the machine, now they would be forced to labor long hours in often dangerous, noisy and ill-ventilated sweatshops. But at the same time, the industrial revolution brought a wealth of labor-saving devices that would forever change the way the world lived.

The story of this revolution is best told at the Henry Ford Museum and adjacent Greenfield Village in Dearborn, Mich.

The industrial revolution got its start in the 1700s and picked up steam rapidly. The first giant machines were crude iron and wood affairs. Although very inefficient, they still accomplished much more than men or animals could.

Several of these giant "walking beam" engines, once used to pump water from English coal mines in the 1700s, are on display in the museum's 12 acres of indoor space. A crude iron "teapot," looking like a large riveted beehive, produced just enough steam to power a cylinder connected to a giant wooden beam, which rocked back and forth to draw water from hundreds of feet below ground.

THE MOST MODERN of the giant steam engines came from Ford's own Highland Avenue auto plant. This two-story behemoth was so large that a Model T could be driven through the core of one of the giant flywheels. And the auto plant had a dozen of these machines producing the tremendous power needed to drive the endless assembly lines.

The museum's collection includes dozens of these early machines. A number have been rebuilt in brick pseudo-buildings on the museum floor. They are certainly impressive, some standing several stories high with huge flywheels 10 or 15 feet in diameter. They must have been impressive, indeed, with giant iron and steel wheels spinning, pistons hissing and beams rocking.

The machines are silent now, at rest after a lifetime of hard labor. To see early steam engines at work, head outdoors to adjacent Greenfield Village.

Ford brought a number of industrial buildings into the village intact, to show future generations the mechanical warriors in the revolution. Although the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration has temporarily quieted some of these steam engines and associated equipment, most visitors can find at least one or two of them huffing and puffing come spring.

ONE OF THESE is likely to be the 19th century steam engine in the restored Armington & Sims Machine Shop and Foundry. A coal-fired boiler pumps steam into the shining piston of the steam engine, which in turn whirls a giant flywheel. A giant leather belt, big enough to girdle Paul Bunyan, reaches to the ceiling to turn long rods connected by smaller belts to dozens of machines.

When in operation, visitors can see belt-driven lathes, band saws, shapers, planers and other machines form a variety of steel and iron objects for industrial use.

At the Edison power station, a steam engine turns an early electric dynamo. And at the 1832 Loranger Gristmill, the engine turns grindstones, transforming corn into flour. Other engines power a sawmill, printing press or cider press.

Throughout the village, beginning in mid-March, craftsmen will be demonstrating early industrial methods. A tinsmith may use a crude machine to crimp and bend the metal in his shop, while in the Textiles Building, a long-skirted seamstress may be demonstrating a hand loom. Potters shape wet clay into mugs and jars, while a printer turns out copies on machines as much as 150 years old.

Transportation played a big part in the industrial revolution. In the Ford Museum, one of the earliest steam locomotives, DeWitt Clinton's barrel-shaped steam engine, pulls stagecoaches. But they are dwarfed by the gigantic 600-ton Allegheny locomotive, the largest ever built, standing two stories high with wheels taller than a man.

Out in the village, an operating steam locomotive pulls visitors on a circuit around the outdoor museum, amid a cloud of black coal smoke. On the far side of the park, they pass by the Suwanee riverboat, with its steam engine huffing and puffing around a lake.

THE VILLAGE also is home to Wilbur and Orville Wright's bicycle shop, complete with a workshop filled with propellers and wing frames. In the museum a 1925 Fokker and a 1929 Ford Tri-Motor are on display.

Of course there are automobiles. The village has a reconstructed Ford Motor Co. workshop where some of Ford's earliest autos were assembled. Model Ts and other antique cars offer rides around the village to visitors.

The museum has a brand-new car exhibit "The Automobile in American Life," complete with antique cars, Texaco gas station, roadside diner and McDonald's hamburger stand.

The museum and village, although often overlapping in technology, tend to complement each other. For instance, the museum has a display of early lighting fixtures, while the village includes the restored Menlo Park, N.J., laboratory and workshop of Thomas Edison, where the inventor and his assistant perfected the light bulb and hundreds of other devices that transformed everyday life.

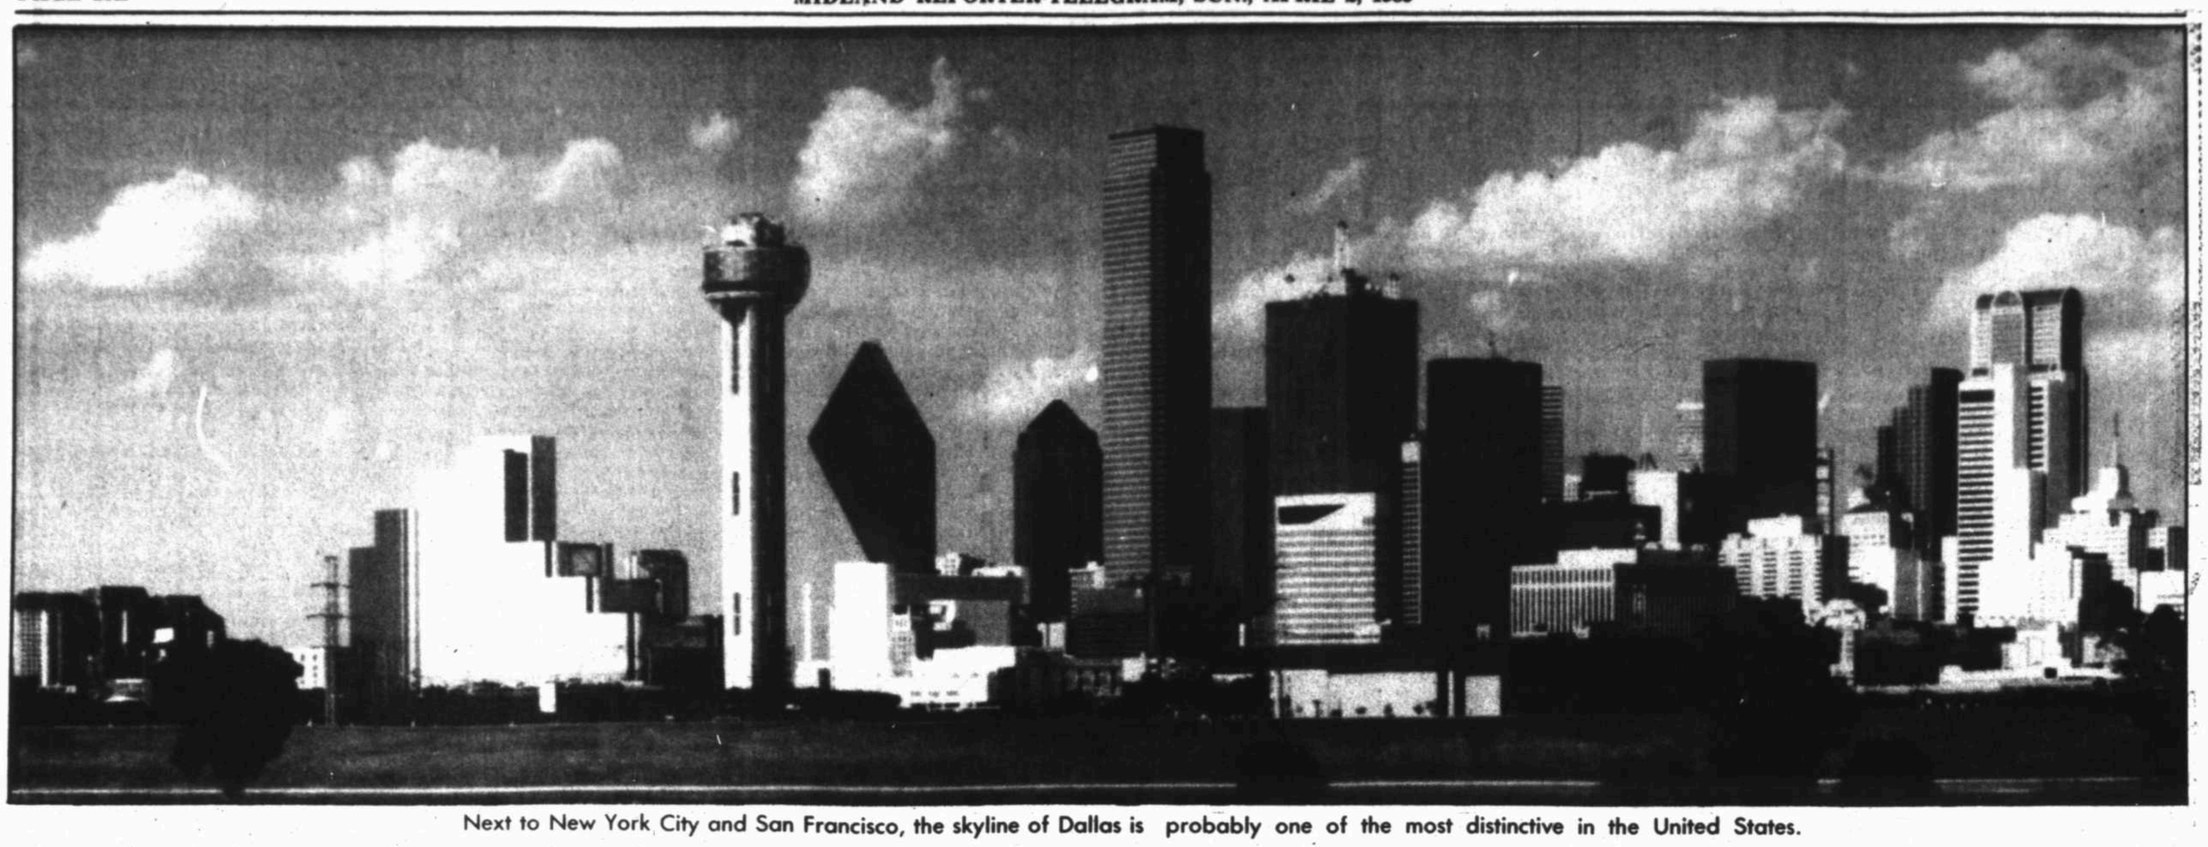

A museum display of farm tools and implements, such as steam tractors, plows and reapers, is enhanced when visitors see the 1880s Firestone Farm where costumed farmers can be seen plowing fields with horse-drawn equipment or planting a vegetable patch.

THE MUSEUM HAS displays of early kitchen utensils, such as apple corers, cook stoves and spinning wheels. In the village, a costumed woman cooks a meal over the open hearth in the 1760s Connecticut saltbox house.

The museum also has collections of decorative arts, such as glasswork and furniture. The fine craftsmanship is in sharp contrast to the simple furnishings of the 1700s English Cotswold stone house. Other buildings include Noah Webster's house, a courthouse where Abraham Lincoln spoke, the Ford birthplace and McGuffey's Readers school.

The two museums charge separate admissions. The museum is open daily all year long. The village is open all year, too, but interiors of village buildings are closed in winter until mid-March.

Next to New York City and San Francisco, the skyline of Dallas is probably one of the most distinctive in the United States.

DALLAS

Today, the Dallas/Forth Worth Metroplex is a leader in many industries. Both world-class cities are home to several corporate headquarters which do business throughout the world.

Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport, the fourth busiest in the world, has been a major factor in the cities' national and international appeal, placing both within three hours or less of other major U.S. cities and linking them to the rest of the world.

Nov. 22, 1963, President John F. Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas, giving the city its own place in history. This tragic event captured the attention of the world and visitors from every country still travel to the site to learn about an event that has had a profound impression on people of all nations.

The Dallas County Historical Foundation was established in 1983 to create an educational display dealing with the history and the meaning of the Kennedy assassination and to properly honor his memory. This exhibit, known as the Sixth Floor, is open daily except major holidays. (Please see related story, Page 11E.)

Not only is Dallas the business capital of the Southwest, it is the entertainment and cultural capital as well. You will find Dallas to be a dynamic, cosmopolitan city offering the kind of arts, culture, nightlife, shopping and dining you would expect in an U.S. metropolis.

Blending legend and reality into a contemporary western experience, Dallas is a city where you can sample French cuisine at a four-star restaurant one evening and spend the next night at a Texas steak house, complete with country and western band and 50-ounce porterhouse steaks.

THE PEOPLE of Dallas are friendly and visitors always are welcomed. Many of the finest hotels can be found in the area, each with superb service. Special weekend bargains — up to 50 percent off room prices — for tourists are offered at many of these establishments, especially during the showing of Ramses the Great. Bed and breakfast programs and economical motels also are available.

Ramses the Great is the largest collection of ancient artifacts ever to leave Egypt, and the exhibit will be in Dallas through Aug. 27, featuring more than 74 priceless treasures from the Golden Age of the last great pharaoh, Ramses II. (Please see related story, Page 1E).

Although Dallas is known for its modern cowboys — the Dallas Cowboys — football is not the only game in town. With professional basketball, baseball, indoor soccer, tennis, golf, polo, rugby and bronco-busting rodeos, Dallas is a sports enthusiast's paradise.

If you'd rather participate than watch, Dallas has a multitude of lush green parks and lakes that provide wonderful setting for picnics, water sports, camping, hiking, cycling and jogging. White Rock and Bachman Lakes and the Dallas Arboretum and Botanical Gardens offer convenient oases away from the hustle and bustle of city life.

Dallas is fun for the entire family. The Dallas Zoo is a great place to take the whole crew for an outing. Thrilling rides, shows and entertainment await you at Six Flags Over Texas in Arlington. Splash away the summer heat at Wet N' Wild water park, or go on a Texas-style safari at International Wildlife Park.

Although Tom Landry is no longer coach of the Dallas Cowboys, the team and Texas Stadium — complete with a hole in the roof so that God can watch His team play — are still Texas legends.

VARIETY IS the name of the game when it comes to shopping. Stroll through the arts and crafts of Olla Podrida mall, rummage through the antique stores of McKinney Avenue or spend the day in stores such as Neiman Marcus, Bloomingdale's, Saks Fifth Avenue and Macy's.

One of Dallas' newest retail centers is the West End MarketPlace, located in the West End Historic District in downtown Dallas. The West End has brought life back into the urban center where blocks of warehouses have been renovated into restaurants, nightclubs and retail stores.

A cluster of more than 125 unique shops, fast food eateries and street vendors, the MarketPlace has a festive atmosphere complete with jugglers, mimes and musicians.

And since a trip to Dallas would not be complete without a night out on the town, be sure to check out some of the night spots.

For dinner, choose the romantic wine cellar of La Cave or barbecue ribs in a bucket at Dick's Last Resort. For nightlife, try Dallas Alley, a part of the West End MarketPlace. Patrons will find contemporary music at the Boiler room, rhythm and blues in the Plaza Bar, live jazz sets in Take Five, live rock'n'roll in Froggy Bottoms and a chance to sing along with the piano players in Alley Cats.

Late night shopping is possible at the West End MarketPlace, as well as horse-drawn surrey rides along the brick-paved streets.

IN ITS YOUTH, Fort Worth was a rough-and-tumble frontier town, dusty and lawless, home to the brave and the brawling, the soldier, the frontiersman, the outlaw.

But the grit of those early settlers, combined with the fortunes made from cattle, railroad and agricultural industries, Fort Worth has aged gracefully into the modern, bustling city it is today.

Fort Worth is like a well-heeled cowboy, true to its western heritage, but with a hearty appreciation for the finer things in life.

It is home of the Southwestern Exposition Livestock Show and Rodeo as well as the prestigious Van Cliburn International Piano Competition. Its companies manufacture hand-crafted saddles, and F-16 fighter aircraft. World-class museums offer everything from agricultural exhibits to multi-million dollar masterpieces.

Today, the Historic Stockyards District looks very much as it did 100 years ago when Exchange Avenue was filled with cattle bound for the Kansas packing houses and railroad yards.

Three miles to the south, glittering skyscrapers form a ring around Sundance Square, Fort Worth's historic business district that is now restored to its original Victorian beauty and filled with restaurants, gift shops and galleries.

The Fort Worth Water Gardens, a spectacular complex of sculpture and fountains, occupies what once was "Hell's Half Acre," a brothel- and saloon-packed district where cow hands had their last bit of fun before heading to Kansas on the Chisolm Trail. It also was their first stop on the way home, and their first chance to spend the wages burning holes in their pockets.

MANY NOTORIOUS outlaws, including Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid hide out in Hell's Half Acre while the law was looking for them.

Still, not all of Fort Worth celebrates the wild and wooly.

In Fort Worth's cultural district, about two miles west of downtown, the Amon Carter and Kimball Art museums, the Modern Art Museum of Fort Worth, and the Museum of Science and History are within walking distance of Casa Manana Playhouse and the Will Rogers Memorial Coliseum.

The Sixth Floor museum transport visitors back to the assasination of President John F. Kennedy.

'Sixth Floor' honors Kennedy

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

DALLAS — Chills run up the spines and tears stream down the faces of many visitors to The Sixth Floor museum in the 88-year-old Texas School Book Depository building.

Onlookers may peer below at Elm Street while standing next to the corner window against which a former U.S. Marine named Lee Harvey Oswald braced himself and fatally shot President John F. Kennedy and wounded former Gov. John Connally 25 years ago.

On Presidents' Day, Feb. 20, 1989, The Sixth Floor opened to 100 members of the public and partially closed what has been a gaping wound in the city's psyche.

Candy Thompson, a Dallas native, exited the museum earlier this month visibly shaken by the ordeal.

"I cried all the way through it. In Dallas, we claim the site, but we don't claim the assassination."

The museum tour housed in the red brick building transports the visitor back in time to an America many citizens today might not remember.

It was not a federal crime in 1963 to assassinate the president of the United States. Jurisdiction that fateful Nov. 22 fell to the Dallas Police Department.

Hence the appearance of Oswald in the innards of the DPD two days later when Jack Ruby, a nightclub owner and longtime friend of the department, shot and killed Oswald during a transfer to the county jail.

At the time, Kennedy had been perceived by members of the liberal left as a "war monger" while right-wingers believed he was a "Red-sympathizer."

In addition, the Texas Democratic party was splitting into distinctively "left" and "right" factions. Kennedy's arrival in Texas was an attempt to heal discord festering within the party.

At 12:49 p.m. Nov. 22, 1963, the presidential limousine turned onto Houston Street near Dealy Plaza and the famous Grassy Knoll. Nellie Connally, glancing at the nearly 250,000 people turned out to see the President, commented: "Mr. Kennedy, you can't say Dallas doesn't love you."

The $3.5 million Sixth Floor museum features 400 historical photographs, six specially commissioned documentary films (one featuring Walter Cronkite) and a range of interpretive displays to document the political climate of the early 1960s, the events of the assassination, the findings of the official investigations and the historical legacy of the national tragedy.

Two key evidential areas — the corner window and the staircase where Oswald's $12-mail order rifle and clipboard were found — are on view behind glass.

Other exhibit sections include:

■ The Early 1960s: an outline of the major social movements and political events, lifestyles and fashions of the era, and the national and international milieu. A part of this introductory section, which includes a short film on the Kennedy presidency, chronicles his life and career.

"The first thing that I thought is 'God, let it be a firecracker.' "

— former Texas Gov. John Connally

■ The Trip to Texas: an examination of the reasons for the trip to Texas that November. A short film is shown using historic television footage to recreate the enthusiastic reception the Kennedys received in Texas despite the building chasm within the Democratic party and nation.

■ The Corner Window: Alongside an accurate recreation of the southeast window area as it looked Nov. 22, 1963, are photographic enlargements and radio and tickertape documentation of the first news of the assassination. The window area is protected behind glass. No original evidence is displayed.

■ Views into Dealy Plaza: Views from the sixth floor onto Dealy Plaza and the motorcade route speak volumes about the events of Nov. 22, 1963. All south-facing windows are available for viewing with informative graphics interpreting the area below.

■ The Crisis Hours: The events of the weekend, from Friday noon until midnight Monday, are outlined in this section. A film, composed entirely of historic film footage and audio broadcasts, summarizes the events leading up to Kennedy's funeral. Along one wall, a full chronology explains the sequence of events as they unfolded in Dallas, in Washington, D.C. and around the world.

■ The Investigations: There have been four major, official investigations into the crime, beginning with the local investigations in November 1963. This section places the investigations into historical sequence, outlining the participants, the procedures and the major findings. A film explains the chronology of investigations over a 25-year period, and visual displays examine the acoustical evidence, photographs, forensic and ballistics tests and other evidence examined during each major investigations.

■ Who Did It: Nearly 85 percent of the American public believes Kennedy was killed as a result of a conspiracy. Alleged conspirators and their motives are discussed in this section. Criticisms of the various investigations are explained historically in this section.

Southfork Ranch, just north of Dallas in Plano, is the site for the filming of the television series, "Dallas," staring Larry Hagman as the ruthless J.R. Ewing.

FORT WORTH

Downtown, the Sid Richarson Museum of Wester Art offers a collection of Russell and Remington Paintings and bronze sculptures.

The Caravan of Dreams entertainment complex in Sundance Square has become one of the nation's premier jazz clubs, attracting top-name entertainers, including Herbie Hancock, Dizzie Gillespie and Winton Marsalis.

Yet, evidence of Fort Worth's "cowtown" heritage is everywhere — from the carvings of longhorn skulls on bridge pillars and public buildings to the wall-sized portraits of grand champion steers on display at Cattleman's Steak House.

In the Stockyards, cowboy balladeer Don Edwards performs regularly at the White Elephant Saloon, and some of the world's best rodeo competitors have made West Exchange Avenue saloons their regular hangouts.

ABOUT FIVE minutes north of the D/FW International Airport, the city of Grapevine and its small town charm boasts of having some of the best golf courses anywhere.

Originally settled in 1844, Grapevine offers some of the best shopping and dining in North Texas on historic Main Street. Also in the center of Grapevine's historic district is the "world famous" Grapevine Opry, which presents the best live Country and Western Revue this side of Nashville.

Lake Grapevine — the premier sailing and windsurfing lake in North Texas — is 19 miles long, has 146 miles of shoreline and is the fourth busiest lake in the state. Lake recreation also includes fishing, windsurfing, picnicking, swimming, skiing or just relaxing in the Texas sunshine.

The turn-of-the-century Tarrant County Court House sits at the end of Main Street, near the historically preserved Sundance Square.

Considered one of the fastest growing cities in Texas, Irving is a progressive city attracting Fortune 500 companies from around the globe.

Irving is probably most famous as the home of the Dallas Cowboys football team and the site of the Cowboys' headquarters, located in Valley Ranch.

Irving also is the home of Las Colinas, a 12,000 acre planned development, where visitors may enjoy leisurely strolls down Mandalay Canal, and shop and dine at the various boutiques and restaurants. If you prefer riding to walking, you may board the venetian built water taxis that float along the canal.

AMONG THE favorite attractions in the Urban Center — located in the heart of Las Colinas — is Robert Glen's Mustangs of Las Colinas, nine larger-than-life bronze mustang sculptures set in full gallop across a granite enclosed stream.

The Mustang sculpture exhibit is the latest attraction in Las Colinas and its museum gives visitors insight into the artist and the seven years it took to create the sculpture.

The Dallas Communications Complex in Irving is one of the most complete studio facilities outside the West Coast and was used in the production of "Silkwood," "The Trip to Bountiful," "Robocop" and other feature films.

The communications center also is the site of the National Museum of Communications that houses antique communication equipment, radios, television sets and phonographs.

This 51.5 ton, 27-foot-tall granite statue of Ramses the Great, known as the Colossus of Memphis, is the largest ever to leave Egypt. Originally, the granite statue guarded the sacred temple of Ptah in the ancient capital of Memphis in Egypt's Delta region.

The long, straight beard strapped to his chin proclaims his royal status. Jewels adorn his strong neck and powerful wrists, and a dagger hangs from his belt. Ramses the Great is identified by name on the belt of his pleated kilt and on the statue's base.

Carved from a single granite slab, the statue is the largest to ever leave Egypt, having originally been transported 600 miles from where it was mined at Aswan to Memphis.

Originally, the statue was one of 11 that guarded the outer portion of the sacred temple of Ptah in the ancient capital of Memphis in Egypt's Delta region.

RAMSES THE GREAT, one of the most amazing pharaohs or kings of ancient Egypt, ruled in the Golden Age of one of Africa's earliest civilizations.

Ramses the Great had it all — including eight wives and 90 children. He was the greatest and possibly the most pompous king of what is now called the African continent. And according to many scholars, he was probably the Pharaoh of Egypt to have a plague-filled confrontation with Moses.

During his 66-year reign, Ramses II built colossal statues which glorified the gods and reminded Egyptians of the pharaoh's power. He also covered other king's faces on statues with his own.

His reign was marked by great propriety throughout Egypt, extended territorial conquests and magnificent works of art and architecture. More than half of the Egyptian temples and monuments still standing today are works of or additions made by Ramses II.

Ramses II also was known as a powerful warrior. His long reign included periods of conflict with other Eastern Mediterranean powers. As a child of 17, he trained in the art of combat under his father, Seti I. The most famous battle associated with Ramses was the Battle of Kadesh, fought against the Hittites in Syria.

BUT RAMSES II is as famous for international diplomacy as he is for his skills in battle. An eventual treaty between Ramses' Egypt and the Hittites is the first negotiated settlement in which versions from both sides survive. A replica of the treaty is displayed in the Delegates' Lounge at the United Nations in New York.

Another application of his diplomatic skills, was his acceptance of two Hittite princesses into his large harem. His first and favorite wife was the beautiful Nefertari, for whom Ramses II built one of the temples at Abu Simbel.

Perhaps the most important opinion to those whose heritage includes the Old Testament is that of many Egyptologists who believe Ramses the Great was the pharaoh of the Biblical exodus.

Moses may have been Ramses' contemporary, for the oppression of the Hebrews came very near his time. The possibility is even more likely because the pharaoh's incredible building program demanded the additional labor of slaves.

RAMSES DIED in the 67th year of his reign at the age of 92, an extraordinary life span for any era. While his son was being crowned as his successor, priests prepared Ramses' body for burial.

In accordance with ancient mummification rituals, the priests preserved and dried the pharaoh's body which was then encased in a series of gold coffins. On a royal barge, his mummy was delivered to the Valley of the Kings outside Thebes.

It took ancient Egyptians 70 days to mummify the body. First, the Egyptian priest removed four vital organs — the lungs, liver, intestines and stomach.

In earlier days, each of these organs was mummified separately and put into its own container. But by Ramses' time, these organs were replaced in the body before mummification.

The body fluids were drained, and the body stuffed with drying salt. Finally, it was wrapped in over 20 layers of linen, each finger and toe wrapped separately. Then the body went into an inner coffin, which then went into an outer coffin, and then into a sarcophagus.

RAMSES II spent 20 years preparing his burial tomb and at his funerary temple stood a 66-foot-tall, 1,000-ton image of the pharaoh, which he inscribed with his epitaph. The burial chamber was among the largest and was laden with precious objects.

But, like the burial chambers of other pharaohs, it had been plundered and found empty. His mummy, however, was recovered and hidden in a tomb at Deir el Bahari, where it rested undisturbed until it was discovered more than 2,800 years later. It is now in the Cairo Museum.

The blockbuster exhibit of the legendary king's 3,000 year-old treasure presented by the Dallas Museum of Natural History Association is being housed in the Automobile Building at Fair Park.

Exhibit hours are from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily in March and April; and from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily May through August.

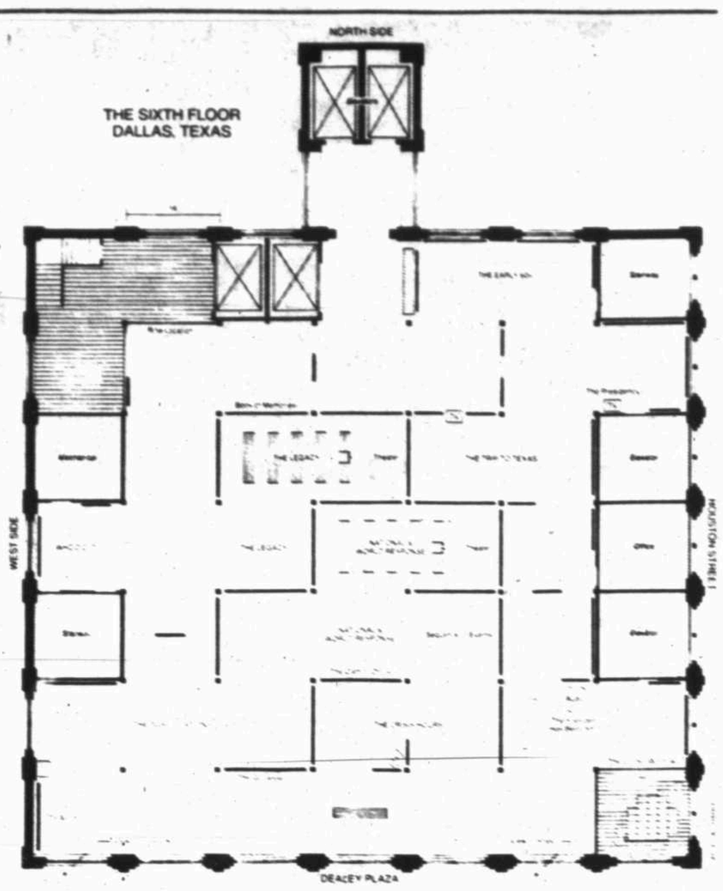

Antiquities of gold, alabaster, silver and painted funerary art, as well as household items and tools, portray life in the Golden Age of Egypt. The priceless artifacts range from the world's first known clock to the 19-pound solid gold collar known as the Gold of Valor.

THE STATUE of Ramses II and the gods of Armant is one of the many striking and dramatic images of the kingship that were created under Ramses' rule, and tells quite a lot about the role of the Pharaoh in the New Kingdom.

Rising over Ramses' forehead, there's a cobra — the symbol of the sun god — protecting the pharaoh, who was at the height of his strength and vigor.

The long false beard on the statue could only be worn by kings and the gods because it's a symbol of divinity. Ordinary men couldn't have a beard like this one. And the particular type of headdress he's wearing was restricted to kings also.

Please see STATUE, Page 13E

KENNEDY

■ The Legacy: A 10-minute film hosted by Walter Cronkite deals with the long-term consequences of the assassination — such as Kennedy's legacy of hope, the impact of his administration's programs and the influence of his death on American and international thought. The film is presented in one of the exhibits seated theaters. An adjacent wall displays visuals of major Kennedy memorials from around the world.

■ The Corner Staircase: This second evidential area, where the sniper exited and where the rifle was found, is reconstructed as it appeared Nov. 22, 1963. (The rifle is not on display).

Kennedy once said that "history is the memory of a nation. You don't serve history by burying your past."

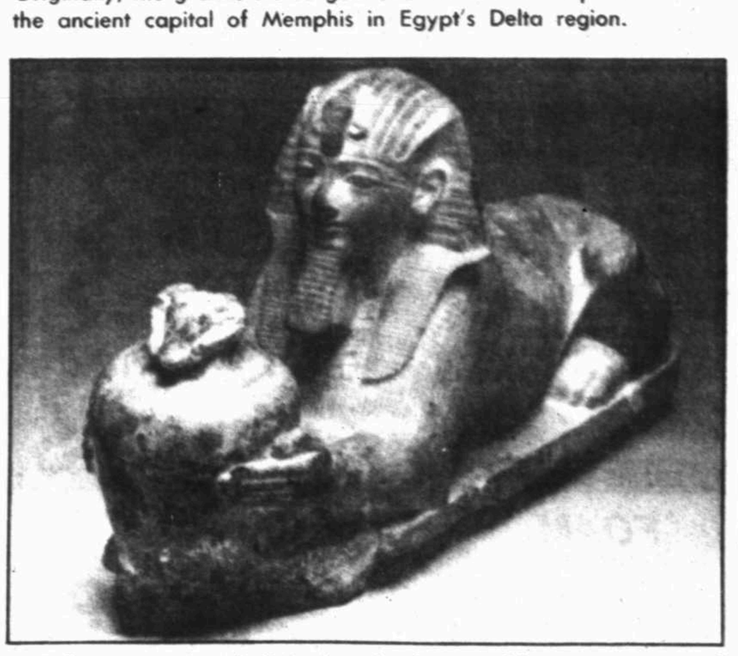

And as members of the Dallas County Historical Foundation have agreed, Americans have a right to learn more about the assassination despite the emotions surrounding the event.

"The life and death of John F. Kennedy have become the stuff of legend," said Conover Hunt, curator of the exhibit. "Over and over again, they expressed a profound regret that there was nothing here to clarify the information they've read or to interpret what they saw.

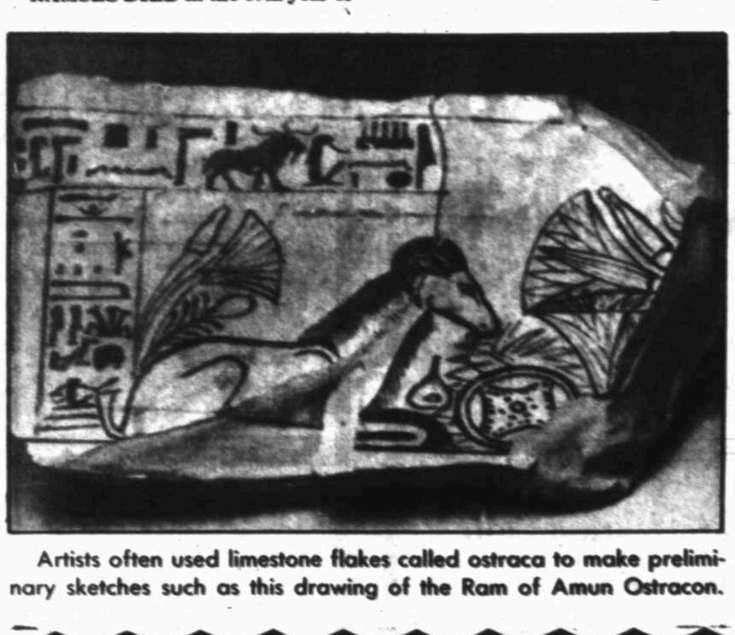

"I believe visitors come here to find something tangible, to get a sense of reality."

Depressing is how most visitors describe the meaty slice of history the museum offers.

"You're reliving that nightmare all over again," explained Susan Leigh of Tulsa, Okla., as she stood outside in Dealy Plaza. "You're so close to it all and yet you know there isn't an answer. Looking up at that window you think you can stop it and yet ... it's already happened."

Following ancient beliefs that the king could appear in animal form, here, Ramses the Great is in the form of a sphinx — half lion, half man. However, note that this sphinx is missing the traditional lion's forepaws. Instead, Ramses is depicted with human hands, offering a vase to the god Amun.

Artists often used limestone flakes called ostraca to make preliminary sketches such as this drawing of the Ram of Amun Ostracon.

STATUE

The grand statue stood in front of the temple in the town of Armant, and the king is holding two standards that represent the chief god and the goddess of that city.

This type of image could be found all over Egypt under Ramses' reign, especially in courtyards outside temples that were dedicated to the gods.

RAMSES AS a child of the god Hauron shows the complicated way the Egyptians expressed themselves.

The whole statue is designed to spell out Ramses. Over his head is the sun disk, the symbol of the sun god "Ra." The word for child is "mes," the one who's born. And he's holding the plant that represents Egypt, called the "su" plant. So it's "Ra-mes-su."

Behind him is an enormous falcon, the embodiment of the god Horus. The message here is that the god is protecting the infant child, who is really the divine king. The Egyptians have a wonderful saying, "the king in the egg," meaning the king before he becomes manifest as king. So this, in a way, is a newly hatched king.

The other interesting thing about this statue is that the god isn't really Horus. It's a Near Eastern deity called Hauron, and it's been incorporated into the Egyptian pantheon.

The Egyptians felt that because of the expansion of their empire, certain areas of the world had become more acceptable, more "Egyptian." Therefore, the foreign gods were also Egyptianized, and they could be assimilated into the pantheon.

THE OUTER coffin lid of Ramses II is not the splendid, ornate coffin that one would expect for Ramses' burial, and it's not even Ramses' original coffin.

Ramses' original tomb is in Western Thebes, in the Valley of the Kings. Just after the New Kingdom, there was an outbreak of looting and the royal necropolis, and many of the tombs were plundered and the mummies were unwrapped.

The priests and officials of Thebes moved all the royal dead from the original tombs to save them from any further desecration, and reburied them together in a safer spot.

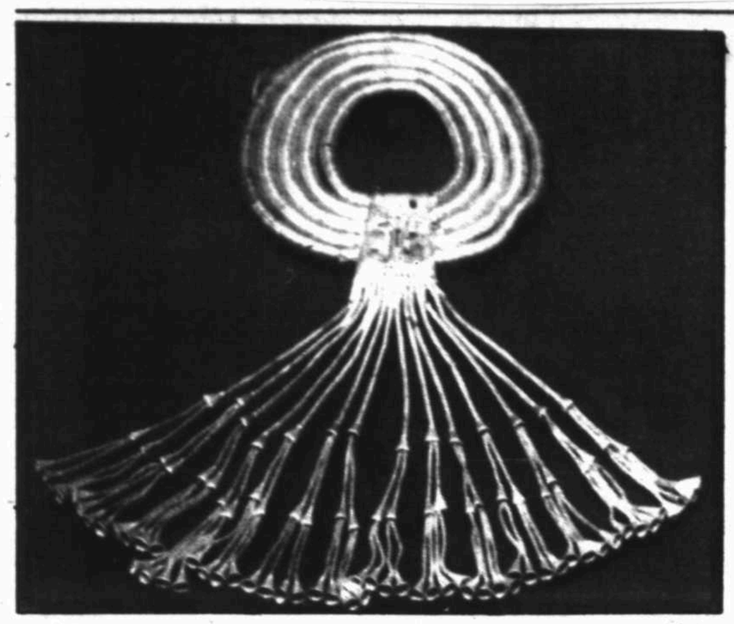

The mummy of Ramses II had been taken out of its gold coffin by the robbers, and the priests placed it in a much less expensive wooden coffin.

The lid is very similar to the one on Ramses' original coffin, stripped of its gold and precious stones. The sceptor, crook and flail, long false beard, and divine cobra on the forehead are symbols of kingship.

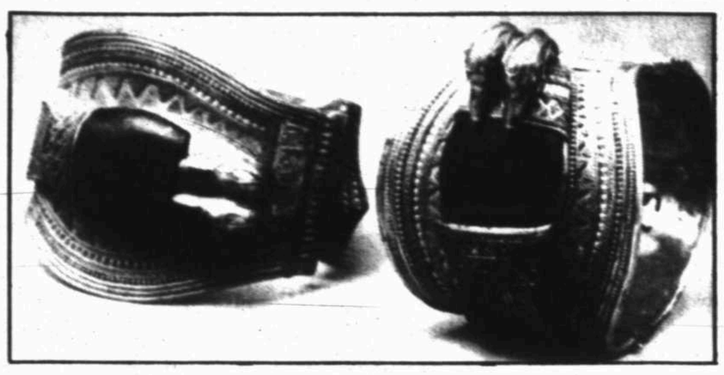

PSUSENNES I's Gold of Valor collar comes from the royal burial of King Psusennes, just after the Ramsesside Period. It's the kind of necklace, known as the "Gold of Valor," that was made during Ramses' time and during earlier periods in Egypt.

Five circlets made of individual gold disks — some 5,000 of them in all — surround a large clasp, inlaid with the name of the king in hieroglyphs.

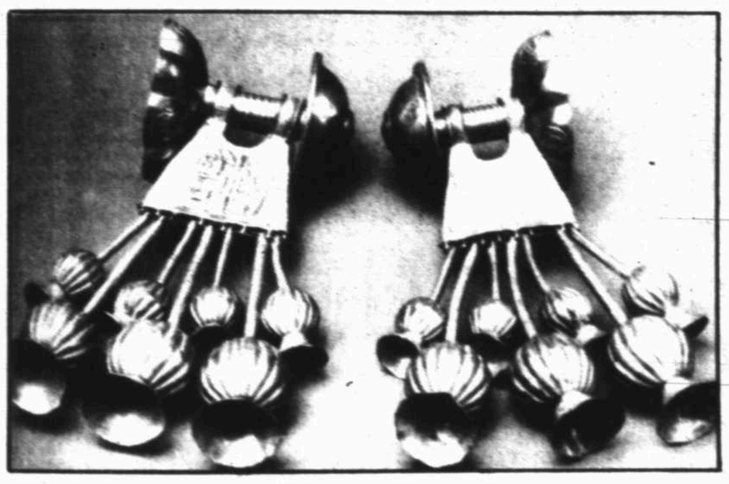

The king would have ceremonially awarded golden collars, like this one, to outstanding officers or generals as acknowledgment of heroism in battle or maybe as recognition of some meritorious deed.

This 19-pound gold necklace was a symbol of bravery worn by a king, god or official. This is one of three found on the mummy of King Psusennes I.

These skillfully rendered bracelets bear the coronation name of Ramses II. The position of the heads of the pairs of ducks represents offerings to the gods.

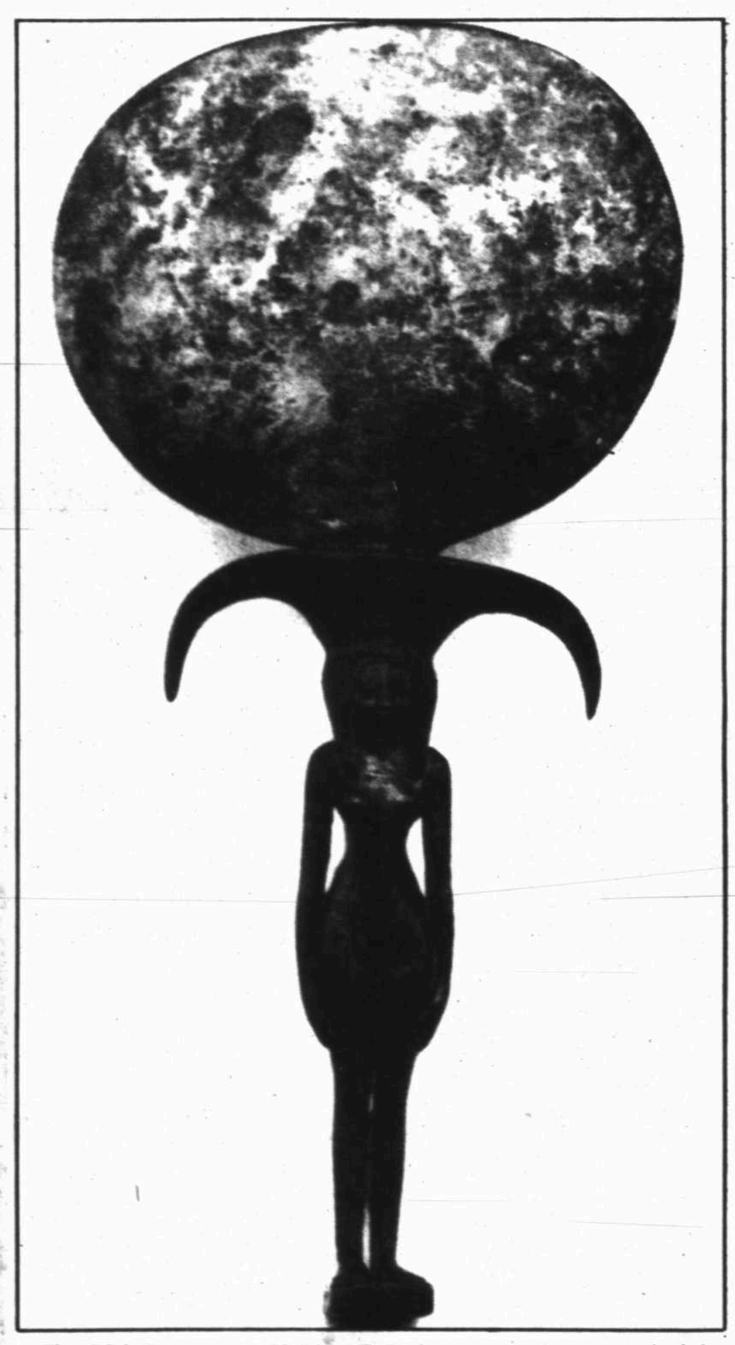

In ancient Egypt, both men and women pierce their ears. These were the earrings of King Seti II.

The golden ewer belonged to King Ahmose who lived more than 200 years before Ramses. It was used for a long time, because it was found in the tomb of Psusennes I, a ruler several hundred years after Ramses.

The limestone column drum was actually made in the 18th Dynasty for another Pharoah, Tuthmosis IV, but about 200 years later, Ramses appropriated it and put his own image and name on it.

This 18th Dynasty (1570-1314 B.C.) bronze mirror is typical of the people who were known for a preoccupation with cosmetics. The mirror itself represents the sun; the curved form of the papyrus flower was associated with Hathor, the goddess of love.

The "Goat Vessel" is one of the exhibits' strong points. The vessel portion of this object is sterling and the handle is gold. A rectangle on the belly of the pomegranate-like belly of the vessel depicts the royal butler and the owner of the vessel praying for years of life and power.

AT YOUR LEISURE
By Sue Snelson

One of my tour managers has just returned from Spain, where she inspected some of the hotels and paradors which make traveling so exciting there.

Basically, staying in a parador is the opportunity to spend the night in a castle or a royal palace. Managed by the government, paradors are historic castles, artistic palaces, unique monasteries and convents restored to the high standards of modern hotels. Spanish paradors offer the unique opportunity for one to sleep where kings, queens and courtesans once lived.

Also renowned for personal and attentive service, most paradors are scenically situated or are located in historic regions. They offer spacious rooms, antique furniture and large bathrooms.

Compared to other European countries, Spain is still very much a bargain and your dollars exchange well. Good food and great shopping will make Spain a memorable vacation. If you like olives or paella, you'll enjoy eating in this country.

Shop for Lladro porcelain, leather goods, Cordoba steel cutlery, Majorca pearls, lace mantequillas and tablecloths. These are more than souvenirs, they are keepsakes to be treasured.

I like to use Madrid as a hub to enjoy Spain. Madrid is the political, historical and cultural center of the country. It is noted for its great sweeping boulevards, glistening fountains, magnificent monuments, parks and gardens. While Madrid is a very cosmopolitan city, it also contains a medieval section, or "old town" with traditional architecture and cultural flavor of the past.

Art lovers will enjoy strolling through the Prado museum, the home of famous works by Salvador Dali, Picasso, El Greco and other well known artists.

The royal palace is another great place to visit. The royal family lives there, and it's often possible to tour through and see their dinner table set for their next meal.

Madrid is easily accessible by taxis, the Metro and buses. Transportation is inexpensive.

Day trips from Madrid might include El Escorial, home of Spanish kings; the Valley of the Fallen, a memorial to the Spanish Civil War dead; Segovia, an ancient Roman town; Toledo, a town noted for its architecture; or a trip to a bullfight.

Other exciting Spanish cities include Cordoba, with its great pillared Mezquita cathedral; Granada, home of the Alhambra, straight from the "Arabian Nights,"; Seville, a romantic city with beautiful cathedrals and Barcelona, a great seaport and cultural center.

Spain is a very Catholic country, and its cathedrals are one of the highlights of a Spanish vacation. Interestingly, in Cordoba, the great cathedral there was originally a Moslem mosque. It was once one of the largest mosques in the world before its conversion to a church.

We recommend an escorted trip to see the beauty of Spain. We will be taking a group from Midland during September 13-28, 1989. The trip will be an American Airlines Fly Away vacation. For 16 days and 15 nights, our group will lodge in beautiful paradors inspected by my tour manager. The land price will be $2199 per person, twin occupancy.

Please consider Spain for your vacation this year, and come with us! For more information, please call Midland Travel at 684-7428.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Many seniors manage to lead vigorous, healthy lives

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Today's "older generation" is rapidly dispelling the myth of the decrepit, useless, worn out and dependent elderly person.

Seniors are volunteering in community service programs, teaching activities, enrolling in college-level classes, starting second careers, launching new businesses and working in the political process. They represent a vital market for business, industry, education and travel. Most people over 75 years of age are still vigorous, healthy and eager to live full lives.

Even though retirement is an option for many elderly persons, they prefer to work. However, 6 percent of persons eligible for retirement who work constitute the poor sector. About 75 percent of the men and 35 percent of the women 65 and older are still living with a spouse. Only about 5 percent are living in nursing homes or institutions, where the average age of admission is 80.

Persons 65 and older comprise 11 percent of the total population, or 24 million persons (compared with 3.1 million at the turn of the century), and those ages 55 to 64 represent another 20 million.

The median age has risen from 23 years of age in 1900 to 30 years of age in 1989. Life expenctancy at birth has improved from about 47 years in 1900 to 69 years for men and 77 years for women.

With these gains, however, there are realities to be faced. About half the elderly must deal with two or more chronic illnesses.

For many, the physiological changes or losses are compounded by the psychological effects of aging. Loss of meaningful work roles or retirement, acompanied by a physical impairment, can be devastating and lead to withdrawal or depression. The prolonged longevity of dependent elderly can be a complex and frustrating situation for family.

Fortunately, other stereotypes are being disproved by research as well.

The social myth that elderly persons are alienated from their families and children has no substance. The belief that old persons who live alone are neglected by their children and relatives also is a myth.

The family is the primary unit for the elderly. Even though they are often unprepared for the unexpected changes in the lives of their older relatives, most families adjusts in a responsible manner.

There is quality life available after retirement. It is reassuring to younger generations that the seniors of today work for their rights as individuals, their entitlement to comfort and the opportunity to live with dignity and purpose.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

New housing developments such as this one shouldn't impact the city's current housing inventory.

Local real estate market improving

Home prices rise while inventory falls

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

When Kay Sutton became president of the 380-member Midland Board of Realtors last December, she took over a troubled market.

She presides over a community of Realtors who have seen Midland real estate battered by falling home prices, a rising number of houses on the market, and foreclosures, all due to a depressed oil-based economy.

The Lubbock native became involved in real estate when her five children were all in school and she was looking for a constructive way to spend her time. She received her license in 1972 and has been affiliated with Don Harvey Realtors since 1975.

However, Sutton insists local Realtors can expect a good 1989. In an interview with the Reporter-Telegram, she discusses current market conditions.

Q. What are the current statistics on Midland housing?

A. In February, we closed 82 homes for an average of $64,500. In February 1988, the average sale price was $61,350. Currently the average asking price is $93,500, up from $81,500 in 1988. Though the total number of properties is down, the total market value is up.

And, as of the end of February, we have around 1,135 residential properties on the market, which is, I believe, the least we've had since 1982.

Q. Who seems to be buying homes?

A. I think we're seeing a lot of first-time homebuyers moving out of apartments into houses while interest rates are down. We're also seeing a steady flow of people coming into Midland. And, of course, there are those that are moving up to bigger, more expensive houses. We have a pretty good mix of all three.

In addition, the FHA last fall raised its limit to $101,250, which allowed a lot more homebuyers into the market. You can get FHA loans with just a 5 percent downpayment.

Q. With interest rates on an upward trend lately, has that had an impact on the Midland market?

A. I don't think the current rate increase has had that much of an impact on mortgage rates. However, if rates continue to increase, we'll see buyers lowering their target price.

Meantime, we're still quoting rates at 10.5 to 10-3/4 percent.

Q. What about property values?

A. What impacts property values is the law of supply and demand, and as we continue to decrease our housing supply, property values will stabilize or increase.

We have had a large inventory of small, inexpensive homes, which helped lower the average price of a home, but the difference between small and larger homes is evening out.

Q. Midland has seen a rash of foreclosures the past few years. How are we handling them?

A. Midland has seen a number of foreclosures, but most are listed with Realtors in the Multiple Listing Service.

Retirment efforts paying off

From Staff Reports

If the Midland real estate market is showing improvement, part of it is due efforts to make Midland a retirement center, as evidenced by continued ground breaking for new retirment housing.

The latest project for which the ceremonial shovel was called out is the construction of five new new townhouses in Manor Park. The project is part seven of Phase I, and calls for three phases on the 40-acre tract when all construction is complete.

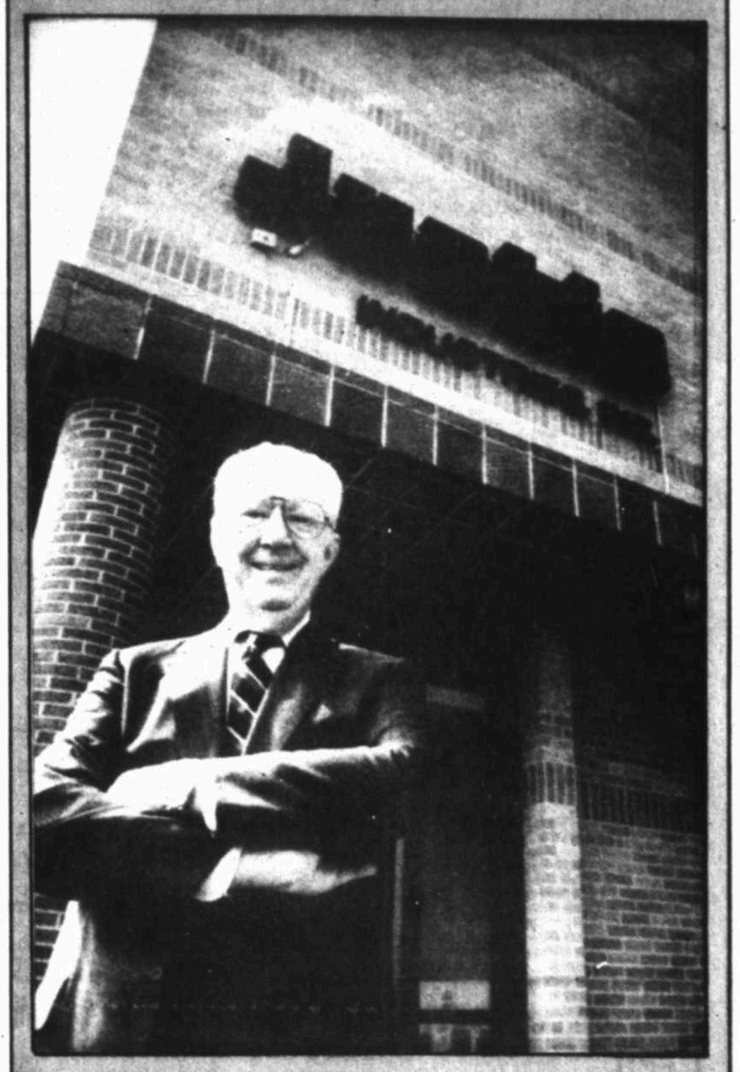

Now 87 percent occupied, Manor Park has 125 independent living units, and when Part 7 is complete, the center will have 130 units plus the Mabee Health Care Center, which holds 60 private rooms and is licensed by the state for 120 semi-private beds.

Part 7 of Phase I, to be constructed by Dave Leonard Construction Co. will cost $252,000, and brings construction to date to $15 million. Started in 1982, the first residents of Manor Park moved in in 1983, and now about 40 percent of the inhabitants are from outside Midland.

The retirement effort in the Permian Basin, led by Midland-Odessa Health and Retirement Endeavor, is promising to become one of the leading means of economic diversification.

The retirement center is now in the process of becoming certified through the State Board of Insurance. Being a Continuous Care Retirement Community, and will be one of the first four CCRCs in the state to receive the certification.

TEXAS BUSINESS

John Justin, 72, chairman of Justin Industries, shows off his Fort Worth headquarters.

Justin boots prevail through boom, bust

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — John Justin is a survivor. In his 72 years and more than a half-century in business, Justin has prevailed through a depression, a world war, leather shortages and even a term as mayor of Fort Worth.

But Justin, chairman of Justin Industries, may have earned his greatest triumph in this decade; he and his boot company met the trial by fire known as "Urban Cowboy."

In 1980, lines formed outside theaters to see the movie depicting, more or less, the working side of the oil boom. The post-disco John Travolta, reconsituted as a refinery worker, reigned as the national hulk. Millions of American men began their day by singing Mickey Gilley's version of "Stand By Me," in the shower, and Gilley's nightclub in Pasadena became a mecca.

Above all, western clothing became the mandatory "in" thing to wear in places where cowboy boots had seldom been seen — the Boston Common, mid-Manhattan, Georgetown, Sunset Strip and even downtown Dallas.

It should have been the best of times for a bootmaker like Justin, and in a sense, it was. Justin's footwear sales rose 55 percent to $60.6 million and operating profits were $7.6 million. But boots accounted for just 35.5 percent of Justin Industries Inc. sales for 1980 and 33 percent of its profits. Justin's Acme Brick Co., riding the crest of the boom in the Southwest, provided most of the rest of Justin's sales and earnings.

"The trouble with the Urban Cowboy period," Justin says, "Was that it brought a lot of buyers into the market who wanted the exotic, way-out boots, like those made with lizard or ostrich skins. Our market always has been driven by the regular buyers, the people who wear the boots to work."

Justin's misgivings were confirmed in 1982 when Urban Cowboy gave way to Preppie and bootmakers were stuck with huge inventories that could be sold only at discounts. The result was an operating loss of $8.9 million for Justin's footwear operations that year.

But boot sales in 1988 surpassed bricks for the second consecutive year, to $123.4 million, more than double that recorded in the Urban Cowboy year and amounting to 50 percent of Justin Industries' total revenues for 1988.

Homebuilding in the Southwest market served by Acme brick limped through its fourth consecutive down year in 1988. Brick sales that had reached $133.5 million five years earlier were now down to $105 million. Brick profits fell from a record $21 million in 1984 to $1.8 million last year, and that was achieved only by closing several plants and other severe cost-reductions.

But boot profits were $7.6 million last year, almost identical to 1980. While boot profits had been only a third of Justin Industries' earnings eight years earlier, they were almost 70 percent of operating profits in 1988.

If such a development surprises followers of trends and fads, it would astound John Sullivan Justin Sr.

John Sr. inherited the company founded in 1879 by his father, H.J. Justin, at Spanish Fork near the Oklahoma border. The H.J. Justin & Sons boot company moved soon to nearby Nocona, and then to Fort Worth in 1925. From the beginning, Justin's boots won the West.

Computer industry needs to make new friends, converts

By KATHLEEN SULLIVAN
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO – The personal computer industry may have reached a plateau.

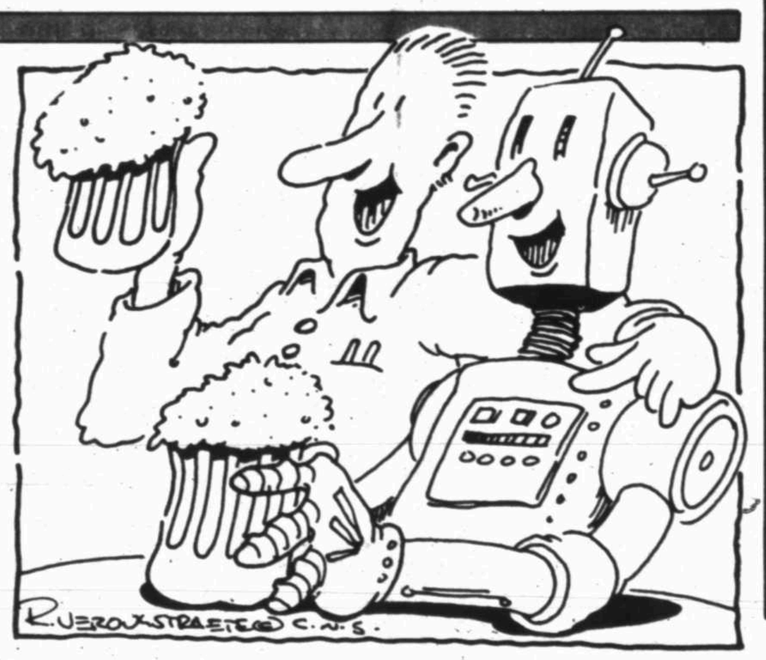

While the youthful industry has demonstrated its ability to sell improved versions of products to existing customers, it hasn't been successful in winning new converts.

"The industry is creating virtually no new users," said David Liddle, chairman of Metaphor Computer Systems, based in Mountain View, a San Francisco suburb. "We must escape this plateau if we are to grow."

The fault lies in part with the software industry, Liddle told an audience of 1,125 people who gathered for a conference on desktop publishing, sponsored by Seybold Seminars, a Malibu, Calif. firm.

Once heralded for innovative programs like VisiCalc – an electronic spreadsheet program which helped launch the personal computer industry 10 years ago – software makers are now concentrating their efforts on doing "the same old things better and faster," Liddle said.

Please see COMPUTERS, Page 3F

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Will the same old, same old ever end?

Pitts

When I first came to Midland in 1976, the Permian Basin Petroleum Association was engaged in a series of political battles. Not much has changed.

Off hand I don't even remember the specific issues of 1976. But I do remember Ed Thompson and local oilmen were running back and forth to Washington, trying to bend the ear of friendly and hostile politicos. They are still burning up the skies between here and Washington.

From year to year, the game plan and rhetoric has changed little: "They (Washington) are threatening to do this...they may do that...this bill can kill us, but this one helps...we can't live with this regulations or that tax...this politician is friendly...this one is an enemy."

Permian Basin oilmen have spent thousands of manhours and millions of dollars in this petro-political version of the Hundred Years War. Some political ground was taken, but mostly it was given.

When we put conservative Ronald Reagan in the White House, we thought: "At last, he's our kind of man. Things will be better. They weren't." Sadly, the oil industry is worse off today than in anytime in history.

The verdict is still out on George Bush, but thus far it appears that even this former Midland oilman will be unable to do anything to revitalize the oil industry. The best incentive package he could come up with is only a band aid.

Certainly, things might have been in a lot worse shape if PBPA hadn't been in there fighting the bureaucrats and hostile politicians at every turn.

But through it all one lesson comes through loud and clear: knocking heads with Washington is not an effective way to rescue or revive an ailing industry. New approaches seem to be in order.

Given the federalist, liberal mentality of a bloated and ineffective bureaucracy and the petty, partisan power playing in Congress, the most the oil industry or any industry can hope for in Washington is to stay even and keep damage to a minimum.

For an industry to make significant turn around or forward progress it usually must find help outside "Lawyerville" on the Potomac. Bold, innovative direction at the corporate or state level is usually what it takes.

That's why I was disappointed last week, when PBPA voted to take a neutral position on Land Commissioner Gary Mauro's bold and innovative Texas Clean Air Act, which would mandate the burning of compressed natural gas or CNG in certain municipal and school bus fleets and in utility company boilers during certain months.

While PBPA wholeheartedly supports increased use of natural gas and CNG as a transportation fuel. The petroleum organization may have missed a historic opportunity to line up with legislation that could finally make a difference.

But, in light of the embattled history of the organization, it is easy to understand some of the reasons that went into its decision to remain on the sideline.

It is easy to see why an over-regulated industry, over-penalized industry would not want to support legislation that creates mandates for anyone. But mandates are not necessarily evil. Texans are already mandated to have auto insurance, drive safely, stop at red lights. Restaurants must abide by mandated health standards. Without mandates society would be unbearable chaos.

Is a bill that mandates the burning of compressed natural gas for reasons of safety, clean air, health and and a brighter economic future for a sickly industry so bad?

Both the Midland County and Ector County school districts objected to the legislation because it would have mandated the conversion of school busses to CNG. That's understandable. No one wants to do what they don't have to do and will avoid it for as long as they can. That's human nature, but it is not the kind of motivation that changes destiny.

It was also argued that incentive alone should be the factor that brings CNG into the market. "If CNG can't get into the market on profit motive alone, maybe it's not that good an idea."

Basin count stands at 101

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts headed higher this week, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The company reported that the number of working oil and gas rigs jumped 26 to stand at 766 in the U.S.

In the Permian Basin, the count rose five to stand at 101.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active in the Permian Basin, gaining five to stand at 20 this week. Andrews County was second with 10 rigs.

Reagan County was left without any activity this week, and no counties saw renewed drilling.

Among major oil producing states, Oklahoma had the biggest increase with nine additional rigs, followed by Kansas and Louisiana, four each; California and North Dakota, three each, and Colorado and Michigan, one each.

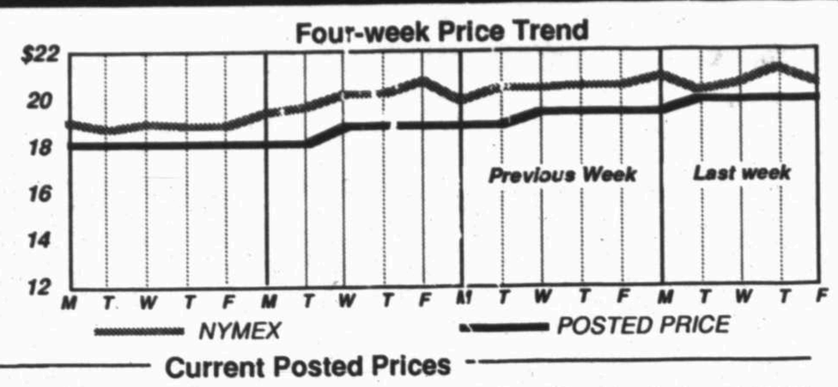

New Mexico saw the only decline with two while Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, and Wyoming were unchanged for the week.

According to the TRC, Texas crude oil production averaged 1,841,824 barrels daily, up from preliminary December production of 1,837,819 barrels daily. Final production reports for December 1988 indicated average production at 1,851,844 barrels daily.

At the same time, Texas wells produced 487,322,990 Mcf of gas, down from December 1988 production of 488,364,490 Mcf. January production decreased 2 percent compared to January 1988 production of 500,810,590 Mcf.

Commission chairman Kent Hance said the preliminary Texas oil production figure for January is 57,096,548 barrels, up from 56,972,402 barrels in December 1988.

December marketed gas production up

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission has announced that Texas marketed gas production in December totaled 387,449,327 Mcf, compared to the November production total of 375,203,966 Mcf.

The December total reflected a 2 percent decrease when compared to December 1987 production of 396,613,111 Mcf. Total gas productin in Texas in December was 488,364, 498 Mcf.

Exports of Texas-produced gas in December totaled 161,964,267 Mcf as compared to 171,058,321 Mcf in November.

December exports of Texas gas reflected a 4 percent decrease when compared to December 1987 totals of 169,019,289 Mcf.

The commission says the state's top two exporters were Natural Gas Pipeline Co. with 41,193,149 Mcf, and Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co. with 28,338,850 Mcf.

Operators reported a total of 351,659,739 Mcf in Texas stroage facilities in December, up from 344,639,525 stored during November.

December's total reflects a 12 percent increase when compared to December 1987's volume.

The top two storage operations were Natural Gas Pipeline of America with 134,498,612 Mcf and Exxon Co. with 68,935,216 Mcf.

Marketed gas production is the gas left after liquid hydrocarbons have been separated on the lease from the "west" gas that is usually produced at the wellhead.

REAL ESTATE

Q. What about the new housing developments around Midland? Why are they being built, and who's buying them?

A. We Realtors have certain buyers who want new homes, and others who don't want to go to the hassle of having to put in a yard and so forth. And both groups feel very strongly about their preference.

Developments like Trinity Meadows are selling very well, but I don't see them flooding the market at this time.

Q. In light of Midland's economy and soft real estate market, is real estate a good profession to go into?

A. It's definitely a good profession, because we have a big turnover in Midland due to job transfers.

Q. Looking down the road, what do you see impacting Midland's real estate market, good or bad.?

A. The price of oil can always impact this market. Interest rates, also. When the interest rate goes up, it affects what the homebuyer can comfortably afford.

What would really affect this market is any large occurrence, such as a large move-in or move-out of families by a major oil company.

Q. In summary, how would you characterize the Midland real estate market?

A. I'd say we're cautiously optimistic.

Midland Realtors do more than sell houses — they get involved in the community. The local Realtors will be participating in the Clean Midland Campaign by taking calls April 3-14 for the citywide clean up campaign.

In addition, they will be participating in Christmas in April on April 29, are taking donations of toilet items, sweats and money for the Victims Witness Assistance Program, will participate in the Glad Bag-A-Thon April 8, and man phone lines seeking donations for the American Heart Association May 2-4. Proceeds from their annual Las Vegas Night will go to the Naressa Clark Medical Trust Account for the six-year-old girl suffering from a life-threatening arterial disease.

Realtors are also gearing up for American Home Week and will have a booth at Midland Park Mall May 6 that will include representatives from the Allison Cancer Center, voter registration, and free blood pressure screening by the American Heart Association.

PITTS

That's good logic except it overlooks one very important factor and that's social inertia. Even with the best of incentives it would still require legislative mandates of some sort to turn a nation of 224 million away from 80 years of gasoline use and launch a new fuel.

There was also concern in PBPA that Mauro's CNG bill was politically inspired, and little more than a device for getting him to a higher office.

Frankly, that's probably the case, most politicians are politically motivated.

But having less than noble motivation doesn't mean politicians can't come up with some very good and noble ideas — especially if it makes them look noble. That's why they are called politicians, and not statemen.

But whatever Mauro's motivation, his bill is historical. Benefits to oil operators may not be immediate, but the Texas Clean Air Act could become the legislative model for much of the nation, and position Texas as the leader of a nationwide fuel revolution.

The bill could become the catalyst for overcoming social inertia to: create a massive new hydrocarbon market, put hundreds of thousands of Texans back to work, send the Texas economy soaring, reduce dependence on foreign imports, improve national security and clean up the putrid air of our cities. It is hardly the kind of legislation about which one can be neutral.

But, the real question is: Do we keep on playing the same old head-butting, door-knocking, ear-bending winless game in Washington, or we do something different?

JUSTIN

But by the time John Sr. moved the company to Fort Worth, he was convinced that the future was in shoes, which he began producing at the Fort Worth plant.

John Sr.'s reservations weren't shared by his son. John Jr.'s earliest memories are of being fascinated by the designing, stitching and cobbling of boots at Nocona and Fort Worth. But his attraction to the boot business caused an odd conflict with his father, who didn't want to see his son trapped in a dying business.

John Jr. left home while still in school. He spent three years in Washington, D.C. at the depths of the Great Depression, and graduated from a night high school. He returned to Texas as a government worker, attended college for a while at what is now Oklahoma State University and then at Texas Christian University.

John Jr. quit TCU in 1938 without a degree. He borrowed $1,000 from a bank, and started the Justin Barton Belt Co. with W.D. Barton, aiming successfully at the western customer. The firm prospered, even while John Jr. did World War II service in the Merchant Marine, and he bought out Barton in 1943.

The H.J. Justin & Sons boot company, by contrast, was struggling. While Justin's boots always had their distinctive niche, its shoes could only be described as pedestrian. By the late 1940s, losses were piling up. Some family members saw John Jr. as a possible salvation, but it wasn't unanimous.

"There was quite a dispute among the family about what role I would play," John Jr. says today. "My father and two uncles couldn't agree. I told them I would come in only with the idea that I would have total control."

Eventually, John Jr.'s uncle, Sam Justin, sold him what amounted to a controlling interest. In October 1950, John Jr. became vice president and general manager of the firm. One of his first acts was to end shoe production.

John Justin Sr., who died in 1959, lived to see the success of his son's strategy. Within two years, business had doubled, and in 1952 John Sr. stepped down and made John Jr. president and chief executive officer.

Two years later, Justin introduced the round-toed "Roper," a hybrid work and cowboy boot that became the best-known of Justin's line and today still accounts for half of the company's boot sales.

COMPUTERS

Desktop publishing – in which specialized software is used to create flyers, documents and brochures using a personal computer –is one of the few markets creating new users, Liddle said. But it is also characterized by imitation.

"It's just doing electronically what we did with scissors and paste, although it does allow most users to make their memos look like ransom notes," Liddle said.

The economics of the software industry work against innovation, since it is costly and risky to develop new programs, and the needs of buyers are often specialized. One solution, Liddle said, is to put programming into the hands of computer users, by giving them the tools they can use to "build" their own software applications.

A trio of computer companies based in northern California's "Silicon Valley" have taken that tack, including Apple Computer; Next Inc., an educational computer firm started by Apple co-founder Steve Jobs; and Liddle's Metaphor Computer, which sells systems that give sales, finance and marketing professionals the ability to interpret information stored in a variety of databases.

Church's head axed, new CEO named

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Ernest E. Renaud, who tried to resurrect Church's Fried Chicken Inc. management and marketing problems before tackling a hostile takeover bid by Popeyes Famous Fried Chicken & Biscuits, was fired as president and chief executive officer of Church's, company officials said Wednesday.

The company's new board of directors, which changed last week, named Alvin C. Copeland as chairman and CEO and James Flynn as president, titles they hold at New Orleans-based A. Copeland Enterprises, which owns Popeyes.

Renaud, a former executive with Long John Silver's restaurants and a company that owned Golden Corral restaurants, said he gave Church's a 30-day notice.

"They've askd me to stay on as a consultant, but that doesn't make sense. They don't need me," Renaud said. "I felt like I was doing him a favor. It's just an extra layer of management that they don't need."

After a four-month battle, Popeyes initiated a $390 million merger for San Antonio-based Church's, which will be the surviving corporation, Renaud said.

He said gradual layoffs are continuing at Church's and that numerous workers are moving to Popeyes headquarters in New Orleans.

"Letting people go is a very tough thing to do. There's a lot of sadness, but a lot of people have found jobs," Renaud said.

Renaud, who had joined Church's last summer and closed 120 restaurants to make the company more profitable in order to fight the takeover bid, will remain on the Church's board until the merger is completed in June.

THE RIGHT CHOICE WAS MADE. WESTERN IS READY TO MOVE FORWARD.

Thanks to the loyalty of our customers and suppliers, the dedication of our employees and the understanding of our creditors and shareholders, Western has survived the most difficult time in its 50-year history.

The Western Company of North America is entering a new era. On March 27, 1989, the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Texas confirmed our reorganization plan.

Chapter 11 has worked for us. It gave us the breathing space we needed to develop a reorganization plan that would ensure the long-term survival of the company. Our filing in February 1988 was a planned decision made with everyone's best interest in mind. And it was the right decision. Our goal was to preserve the company and the services it provides to our customers, the livelihood it brings to our employees and the return it gives to our shareholders and creditors.

This goal has been achieved. In only 14 months, we have emerged from chapter 11 as a much stronger, viable company with a future.

We are ready to move forward.

Hyatt eyes senior citizen housing

DALLAS (AP) — The Hyatt Corp. plans to use its expertise at running high-end hotels to crack the market for senior citizen housing, with a goal of buying up other projects the controlling Pritzker family believes will become available.

Although congregate care living for seniors is a "very fragmented" business, "ultimately it's going to be a business for larger players," said Penny Pritzker, the family member who serves as president of Classic Residence by Hyatt.

Classic Residence "was a family-generated idea," she said. "I was very much involved in it, but we do things as a family."

Those "things" include 95 U.S. hotels and 50 more in foreign countries, plus Chicago's Pritzker & Pritzker law firm, casinos, farm land and about 60 industrial concerns. The family also has been rumored to be a potential bidder for MCorp banks taken over last week by federal regulators.

Hyatt researchers found that the top 10 providers of congregate care living for seniors had less than 10 facilities each, she said in a telephone interview from Chicago, where the family's operations are based.

"It's been basically a developer-driven business," she said, "and in our view it's a service business and that's something we know very well."

She predicted there eventually will be "brand consolidation, and we'll be able to capitalize."

"Our expertise in food and beverage and maid and linen service, and our general knowledge of consumer services, will give us an edge in the business."

Hyatt currently has five Classic Residences in various stages of development, with ones in Dallas; Teaneck, N.J., and Reno, Nev., scheduled to open within weeks of each other this summer. Others are under construction in Riverdale, N.Y., and Chevy Chase, Md.

"Our hope is to do four or five projects a year," said Ms. Pritzker, who will participate in Sunday's opening of the Dallas sales office.

The Dallas version even includes an atrium, a trademark of Hyatt hotels, but that is just coincidence, according to Gary Anderson, the on-site director of the 147-room project.

It won't be cheap to live in one of the Hyatt homes — rents in Dallas range from $1,800 to $2,600 per month — but Anderson said, "once a person sits down and puts a pencil to what it costs" to maintain a house, buy groceries and pay for transportation, the price becomes reasonable.

There'll be maid service, linen service, 24-hour security, planned activities, a full-service library, 25 meals a month and even a concierge on duty most of the day to handle requests.

"Hyatt got into the business because we think ... our ability to provide quality service, as well as our brand recognition, is something that is familiar to seniors," Ms. Pritzker said.

Potential residents are "individuals who have generally set aside some money for retirement," Anderson said. "We're looking for the retired school teacher, the guy who retired from GM ... fairly everyday people."

AP Laserphoto

Gary Anderson, director of operations for the Souther Division, Hyatt Corp., discusses the company's new apartment building for senior citizens in Dallas.

The idea is that seniors who have recently sold a house will have a wad of cash that they can add to pensions and Social Security to afford the rent easily.

"The only concern we have ... is the real estate market," Anderson said. Houses in Dallas frequently sit unsold for months at a time.

"It's just a fact of doing business in Texas right now," he said.

In the short-run, Anderson said Hyatt will appeal to folks who have sufficient resources to rent out their homes and live at the Classic Residence.

But "we believe very strongly in Dallas," Ms. Pritzker said. "We think that the market is receptive to a Hyatt-quality product. We believe very much in the product, that there's very much fundamentally good doing on in the Dallas economy."

Anderson, who oversees the southern region for Classic Residence, said Hyatt is "foreseeing a major presence in Texas," with expansions in San Antonio and Austin already being considered.

Expansion also is being considered in Florida, but Anderson said, "we'll wait and see which acquisitions make the most sense in Florida."

Included in the rent is long-term care insurance which will pay residents $40 a day toward nursing home care should they need it eventually. Anderson said the insurance, combined with what residents already were paying in rent, should cover nursing homes charges.

Unlike the other projects, the Dallas version is in a 10-story converted apartment building; elsewhere Hyatt has built its own facilities, ranging from three to 13 stories.

The building began as condominiums, shifted to apartments, but couldn't charge enough rent to make ends meet, even though it was full, Anderson said.

Hyatt was able to buy the building, which is within a block of a nursing home and two blocks of a major Dallas hospital, for less than it could build a in a similar location, he said.

Houston shopping centers seeing better times

HOUSTON (AP) — Conditions for the city's shopping center owners are improving with retail rental rates going up and the number of foreclosures down, statistics for last year indicate.

E.D. Wulfe, president of Wulfe & Co., said offering limited periods of free rent as an incentive to merchants is disappearing in the Houston marketplace.

Houston's retail real estate, which was devastated by vacancies and foreclosures in recent years, is experiencing an upturn, he said.

"The whole market is firming up. Not in giant strides, but in positive little steps," Wulfe said.

Revac, a Houston real estate reserch firm, reported that foreclosures of Houston shopping centers dropped nearly 50 percent last year. Foreclosures, or the sale of centers in lieu of foreclosure, declined from 123 in 1987 to 66 in 1988, Revac said.

"The worst of the shopping center foreclosures seem to be behind us and increased investor activity coupled with Houston's improving economy points to a brighter picture overall for Houston-area shopping centers in 1989," Gary Cairns said in a summary of Revac's 1989 retail survey.

"Everything is pointing in the upward direction," he added.

Revac said eight centers, with a total of 1.3 million square feet, were constructed in 1988, a 78 percent increase over 1987.

And six centers totaling 985,822 square feet were under construction as of Jan. 1.

Revac reported that 77.6 percent of Houston's 89.3 million square feet of shopping center space was occupied at the end of 1988, a slight improvement over occupancy rates at mid-1988. The survey included all 990 of Houston's retail centers with more than 20,000 square feet.

Other highlights of the Revac report included:

- Houston ended last year with positive absorption of 145,016 square feet of retail space. In both 1987 and 1986, Houston had more than 1.5 million square feet of negative absorption, meaning more space was emptied than filled with new leases.
- Rental rates paid by merchants to landlords averaged $11.43 cents per square foot at the end of 1988, up 37 cents from the end of 1987.

Houston merchants as a whole have been becoming more diligent in paying rent to their landlords, said Lenny Friedman, president of the Lefmark Group.

In the last three or four years, collection of rent has been a big headache for the owners of Houston retail centers because so many merchants were victims of Houston's sluggish economy, Friedman said.

"Collections (of rent) have improved quite a bit, which to me indicated the retailers are probably doing a little better," Friedman said.

Shopping centers in good locations are performing well if they are anchored by supermarkets or other big stores, Friedman said.

Revac reported shopping centers with big anchors have an occupancy rate of 83 percent and average rents of $10.35 per square foot. It said centers without anchors have a 55 percent occupancy rate with average

MCI cuts long-distance rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — MCI Communications Corp. said Thursday it will reduce its long-distance rates by $200 million annually beginning April 1 in response to federally ordered cuts in the charges it pays to connect with local phone systems.

The reductions will apply to residential and business customers and could amount to cuts of as much as 12 percent for some callers, the company said.

Hotels realizing kids tag along on business trips

By CHRIS BARNETT
Copley News Service

Married road warriors tired of traveling alone, eating by themselves at tables for one and running up fat phone bills calling home, are now starting to take their families and children along on business trips.

Or businesspeople are meeting their families on a Thursday and taking a three-day weekend vacation to decompress after a grueling conference or four days of sales calls, hotel executives report.

Conventioneers have long taken the spouse to Miami, Maui or Madrid as a reward for a mate's selling a million dollars of life insurance or refrigerators.

"But now we're beginning to see young children check in on business and pleasure trips," says Chuck Sweeney, former president of Amfac Hotels and now an owner/developer of Embassy Suites on the West Coast and in Hawaii.

Sweeney's new Embassy Suites Resort in the Kaanapali Beach region on the Hawaiian island of Maui is a prime example. Each of the 413 suites is bigger than most New York apartments and has a $2,000 big-screen (36-inch) color television, a dual-tape audiocassette recorder and a VCR built in to an "entertainment center" in the living room. There also is a "library" of 200 movies at the front desk for rent at $4 each.

Each suite has a kitchen with oven, refrigerator and dishes, plus a dining table with four chairs. The bathroom is "family size" with two sinks at opposite ends of the room, a giant sunken tub and a stall shower.

And while there is only one bedroom with a king-size bed and another color television, the sectional sofa in the living room folds out into a queen-size bed ideal for bunking youngsters. No rollaway beds here. Rates start at $169 a night, about $100 below what other Maui hotels charge for a room that size.

Sweeney says the "all-suite" concept was originated by his partner, James Woolley, who created the Granada Royales exclusively for business travelers. Renamed Embassy Suites when Woolley sold to Holiday Inns, the lure was a room for working, a room for sleeping, a free cooked-to-order breakfast and complimentary cocktails after work — all for as low as $59 to $89 a night on the mainland. When businesspeople started bringing their wives, husbands and kids, Woolley spotted a trend.

"While 80 percent of our guests are on vacation, we see businessmen and women who pursued their careers first before having children doing their business in Honolulu and hopping over here with the kids for a vacation," Sweeney says.

Because there is more time to relax, the beachfront resort has embellished some of the traditional Embassy Suites amenities.

At breakfast, there is a lavish island buffet in addition to the traditional cooked-to-your-order meals, and youngsters are included free. A gratis cocktail hour includes some tropical drinks. There is a massive swimming pool and whirlpool, plus an on-premises store with food if families want to cook in their suites.

There is at least one flaw to the new concept that could cause the business traveler grief. The telephone has a built-in answering machine so calls bypass the front desk. If the red light isn't flashing, you have to play back all calls. On a recent visit, the room maid hadn't reset the machine and I had to listen to five calls for the previous guest.

Worse yet, you cannot call the front desk from outside the hotel and get your messages. Nor can you access the message machine from another telephone. It's a problem that needs Sweeney's attention. Meantime, he is working on a two-bedroom, two-bath Embassy Suites hotel in Seoul, South Korea, designed especially for the businessperson who travels with family.

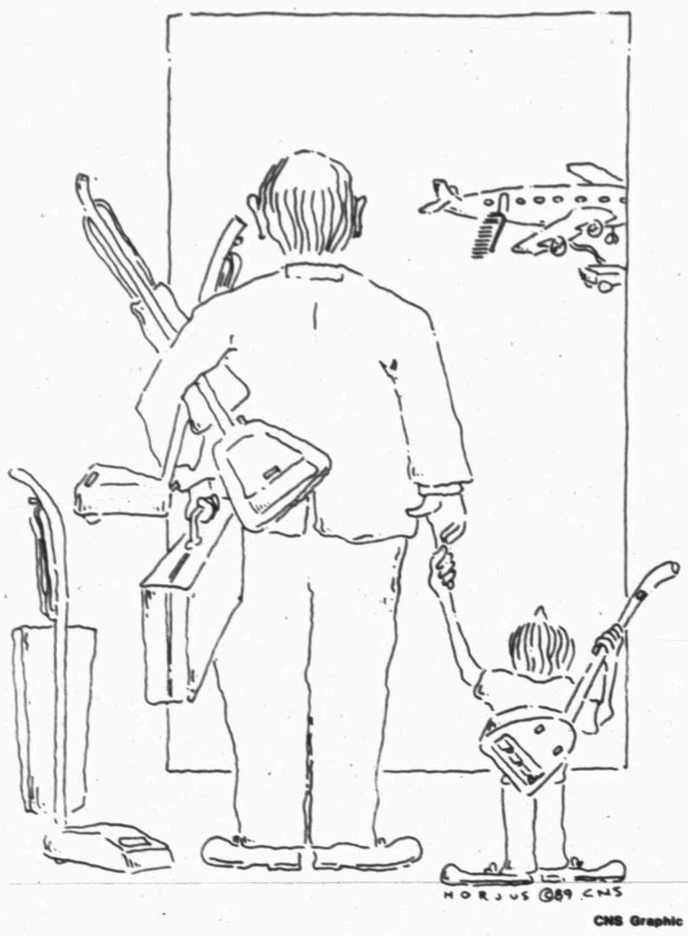

In the United States, other hotels, such as the Lodge at Vail, is trying to convince business travelers to wind up their week on the road in Denver and hop up with the family for a weekend of skiing. The lure: a sharply reduced rate of $20 per night for youngsters under 12 who stay with their parents.

In the Bahamas, Windermere Island Club is offering bonded baby sitters at $5 an hour, about half the rate many hotels charge for sitting with youngsters while parents relax.

Still, these essentially are resorts. In major centers of commerce such as Boston, the 278-room Ritz Carlton has designed a special children's etiquette program called the Weekend of Social Savvy. Conducted by Judith Re, who operates her own "academy in the social graces" in Boston, the weekend is for 8- to 12-year-old children and covers table manners and proper use of utensils, telephone etiquette and thank-you note writing.

The weekend also includes how to introduce one's self correctly, plus ballroom dancing, personal finances, even how to make meringue swans and chocolate-dipped strawberries. The latter is taught by the Ritz Carlton's head pastry chef, Paul Masse. Cost is $200 a youngster and includes overnight accommodations, meals and personal amenities. But for parents who check in and enroll their youngsters, their room rate is $150 a night, instead of the normal $220 a night fee.

The Sheraton Plaza in Chicago, a 333-room upscale business hotel, is publishing the second edition of its "Kids' Guide to Chicago." The 16-page coloring book, "written through the eyes of a 7-year-old boy named Joey," features the museums, boat rides, double-decker bus rides and the Lincoln Park Zoo.

Studies: 'Quick Response' answer to foreign competition

DALLAS (AP) — Advocates of a concept dubbed "Quick Response" claim the system could save retailers $9.6 billion a year, and at the same time help the nation's apparel and textile industries battle foreign competition.

But analysts are divided on whether retailers will sign on in high enough numbers to reach the levels needed to reap those savings.

Two studies released in Dallas this month tout the advantages of Quick Response, a concept generally credited to Roger Milliken, chairman of textile manufacturer Milliken & Co., as an offshoot if his Crafted With Pride campaign to bolster the domestic textile and apparel industry.

Milliken conceived of textile and apparel manufacturers and retailers sharing product and sales information across the board in an effort to "play the competitive advantage (of U.S. manufacturers) — time," according to Doug Smith, a partner in the Dallas office of Andersen Consulting, which opened a permanent exhibit on the concept at Dallas' Infomart trade center.

Andersen Consulting, a unit of Arthur Anderson & Co., and Kurt Salmon Associates, presented results of separate studies to about 100 top executives of apparel, textile and retailing companies in Dallas recently.

The studies were done for the Voluntary Industry Communications Standards Commttee, which is seeking to develop uniform methods of gathering and sharing sale and inventory data among the industries.

Advocates concede that despite the technological demands of the system, the key is a willingness for all parties to share information, for example, of competing retailers telling a common supplier how sales are going.

"Quick Response is, first and foremost, a new and different way of doing business," Andersen's study says. Companies must "create new partnerships across the pipeline, with the manufacturers and textile mills, and ... share sales information through the entire pipeline."

Monroe H. Greenstein, a retail analyst with Bear, Stearns & Co. in New York said he doubted fashion retailers would be willing to participate, although he said retailers who sell basic apparel, which makes up the bulk of the market, probably will go along.

But Kay Norwood, who follows retailing, apparel and textiles for Interstate-Johnson Lane in Charlotte, N.C., said the competitive advantages offered by Quick Response will force competitors to go along.

"If your competitor is doing this, and has a better apparel assortment than you, and getting sales because of it, for you not to be involved is cutting off your nose to spite your face," she said by phone.

Under the VICS system, retailers would daily gather sales information generated from using Universal Product Scanning, point-of-sale terminals.

That information would be used to reorder needed products immediately, all using computer tie-ups with apparel suppliers.

The system can significantly reduce the lead time needed to order and restock items, with some studies indicating the time from making fabric to shelf can be reduced from 66 weeks to 30 weeks or even further.

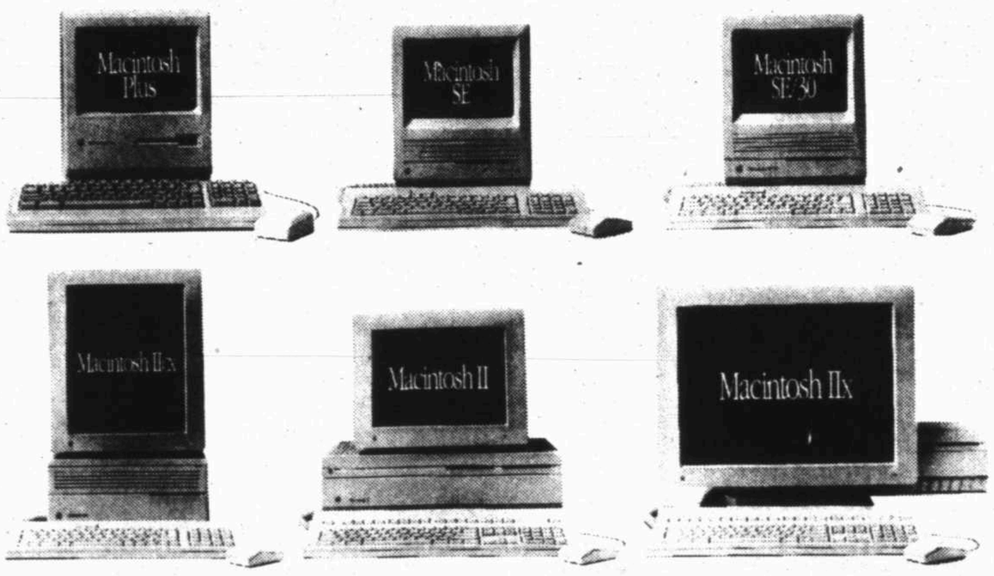

Andersen Consulting's study says department stores could save $3.7 billion a year, after an initial investment of $1.6 billion and annual maintenance of $139 million. Mass merchants would save $3.9 billion, after $1.3 billion in startup and $159 million annual costs. Speciality stores could reap $2 billion in annual savings, with startup costs of $684 million and annual costs of $219 million.

Kurt Salmon's study says Quick Response can increase basic merchandise sales as much as 25 percent, and can significantly shorten lead time needed to stock shelves.

The study cites four pilot programs with J.C. Penney Co. Inc, Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and regional retailers Dillard Department Stores Inc. in the Southwest and Belk's in the Southeast.

The retailers reported between a 25 percent to 59 percent increase in sales.

THE BMW 525i IS SLOWER, LESS ROOMY AND COSTS $10,000 MORE.

MAYBE IT'S THE NEW MATH.

It didn't seem odd to our engineers that the new Volvo 740 GLE 16-valve outperformed the BMW 525i from 0-55 mph.* After all, the 153 horsepower, twin-cam may be Volvo's most advanced engine to date.

It certainly wasn't peculiar to our designers that the Volvo offers more front headroom and rear legroom. With standard amenities such as heated seats, a power sunroof and a four-speaker audio system, the Volvo interior is a model of ergonomic achievement (i.e., it's a pleasure to sit in).

INTRODUCING THE 740 GLE 16-VALVE.

And it didn't come as a surprise to Volvo enthusiasts that the 740 GLE 16-valve provides safety features such as a driver's side Supplemental Restraint System (unlike the BMW) and an anti-lock brake system (just like the BMW).

What everyone agreed was bizarre, however, was the fact that the BMW costs an alarming $10,000† more. (Perhaps that follows the same "Pay more, get less" equation fancy restaurants employ.)

Test drive the new Volvo 740 GLE 16-valve. For an understandable sum, you'll not only acquire a vehicle deemed a joy to drive, you'll be investing in Volvo's legendary reputation for safety, reliability and longevity.

And that, unlike many of today's sticker prices, makes all the sense in the world. A car you can believe in. VOLVO

MCorp's downfall started with Easter Sunday phone call

By NATHANIEL C. NASH
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Robert L. Clarke, the comptroller of the currency, had just arrived home from Easter church services Sunday afternoon when the telephone rang.

The caller was Gene H. Bishop, chairman of MCorp, the second-largest banking concern in Texas, telling him that three small creditors had sought to force the ailing bank into involuntary Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

Thus began a drama that culminated at 2:45 Wednesday morning when federal regulators finished taking over 20 of MCorp's 25 banks.

In his call to the comptroller, Bishop said that company officers had decided they had no choice but to proceed with their own Chapter 11 voluntary bankruptcy filing to avoid forced Chapter 7 liquidation.

Though MCorp's troubles, including a halt in payments on $466 million in debt, had been widely publicized, as of last week its depositors had not lost confidence.

In part, that was because the FDIC was seeking a buyer for the troubled bank and had elicited interest from several prominent investors, including Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co.

But the bankruptcy filing by the bondholders began to bring the house down, since action by a federal bankruptcy judge could have thrown a cloud over any deal to buy the bank.

And the announcement by MCorp on Monday that it planned to file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection only aggravated concern.

Two MCorp banks that had lent large amounts of surplus cash to MBank Dallas realized they might risk losing those assets in a bankruptcy proceeding and took their money back.

Clarke said that Monday started out quietly, but he and other regulators began sending hundreds of examiners and supervisors into Texas just in case a major operation was necessary.

And all remained quiet until he got off a plane that evening in New York, where he was scheduled to give a speech, and was informed that "there had been withdrawals" from the MBank Dallas "by a couple of these subsidiary banks."

On Tuesday, the primary concern was that if these withdrawals continued, the corporate community would soon get wind and begin withdrawing their funds as well, possibly creating a full-blown run and an erosion of depositor confidence not only in MCorp but other Texas banks as well.

More requests for withdrawals came from other MCorp banks on Tuesday morning, and finally by afternoon word had spread to the corporate customers. To make things worse, the Dallas bank was not honoring the withdrawal requests from its affiliated banks.

"It just became apparent to us that it was not a situation that should be allowed to drift," Clarke said. "We needed to go ahead and move."

By 6 p.m., said the FDIC chairman, L. William Seidman, the agency decided the bank was too far gone to be sold. The Federal Reserve Board demanded repayment of its large loans to the Dallas bank.

Since the bank could not repay, the comptroller declared it insolvent. Then, one by one, other banks in the MCorp system were declared insolvent.

The day before, the comptroller's office had chartered a new bank, the Deposit Insurance Bridge Bank, for the FDIC, and as federal judges in four districts in Texas approved receiverships for the insolvent banks, they were put into the new bank.

By early morning, the process that had started at 6 p.m. was finished.

Clarke and Seidman said that at 2:45 a.m. they received calls from their lawyers in Texas that the last of the 20 MCorp units had been put into receivership.

The government was now the new owner of a $15 billion failed Texas bank.

After a deposit run, FDIC chairman L. William Seidman decided MCorp was too far gone to sell, and seized 20 of the firm's 25 banks. He's shown Wednesday discussing the move with reporters.

Cola makers sell image, not product in ad wars

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Madonna, in sleek black jumpsuit, slumps comfortably in an overstuffed chair with a can of Pepsi and purrs at the camera: "Make a wish."

George Michael swaggers into a pale blue spotlight at center stage in an auditorium packed with adoring fans, all of them cheering wildly and many holding up cans of Diet Coke.

Such charged scenes are the ammunition in the latest battle of the television advertising wars between the Coca-Cola Co. and Pepsico Inc.

In their relentless focus on celebrities even more than on the product being advertised, the commercials exemplify a shift in modern advertising — from sales pitch to pure entertainment. And they have generated a debate among marketing professionals, not only about the effectiveness of the ads but about the very purpose of modern advertising.

Many of the current cola spots present themselves as one-minute movies, rock concerts, or music videos. In some, the soft drink is scarcely mentioned or even seen.

The cola companies say that, in a global business climate, music and celebrities transcend cultural barriers and raise international sales. What is more, identifying products with youth and glamour helps to create a distinction between goods that are otherwise essentially identical, some marketing executives say.

"Coke and Pepsi aren't in the product business anymore," said Clive Chajet, chairman of Lippincott & Margulies, a corporate identity firm, based in New York, that designed Coke's "wave" logo. "They're in the image business, in show business. There is almost no differentiation between Coke and Pepsi, so they have run out of things to say about their products. They have to do it via image."

But some say the ads stray from tested advertising principles, betray a lack of creativity, and ignore the essential task of any commercial: to make a sale.

"It's very entertaining, but, at the end, you turn to your wife and say, 'What was that they were advertising?' " said Tom Collins, a marketing consultant and author. "You have a hard time remembering whether it's Coke or Pepsi."

Officials of both Coca-Cola and Pepsi say that statistics showing steadily growing soft-drink consumption prove that celebrity advertisements work. The roster of celebrities touting each cola now reads like the lineup in a game of superstar tug-of-war: Michael J. Fox, Madonna, Patrick Swayze, and Robert Palmer, among others, for Pepsi; George Michael, Don Johnson, Wayne Gretzky, and Robert Plant, among others, for Coke.

But statistics suggest that even if its commercials are more popular, a product may not fare as well as its rival.

A respected industry survey has found Pepsi commercials to be more popular than Coke commercials in four of the past five years, with ads featuring Michael Jackson, Lionel Richie, and Michael J. Fox. (In 1986, Coke won with its series featuring Max Headroom, a stuttering robotic character.)

Yet since 1979, Coke's market share has increased by 7 percent and Pepsi's by only 2 percent, according to John Maxwell, a soft-drink industry analyst. Coke percent had 32 or 33 percent of the soft-drink market in 1988; Pepsi had 25 percent, analysts say.

Coca-Cola executives attribute that success to superiority in areas other than advertising, like distribution and pricing.

Michael Beindorff, Coca-Cola U.S.A.'s associate director for marketing, said Coca-Cola regularly polls thousands of consumers to determine how closely they identify Coke with 18 important attributes, including "young," "modern," "warm," "friendly," "my kind of drink," "refreshing" and "thirst quenching."

When a dip in one of those attributes is spotted, advertisements are created to reinforce it in the public mind. The George Michael ads, for example, are an attempt by Coca-Cola to improve in the areas of "young" and "modern."

The disastrous result of the introduction of a new formulation of Coke in 1985 offers the ultimate proof that image is the primary factor in advertising soft drinks today, Beindorff said. The reformulated, sweeter Coke consistently beat regular Coke in blind taste tests, but was vigorously rejected by consumers who said they felt a deep loyalty to original Coke.

Pepsi maintains that taste tests show people prefer its drink over Coke — a difference it flaunts in its "Pepsi Challenge" ads. But it also proclaims the importance of pure imagery in soft-drink advertising.

Music marketing is especially crucial to increase international sales, said Alan Pottasch, Pepsi's senior vice president for advertising.

"Internationalism is a major part of the soft-drink business," Pottasch said, "and music is one of the three things that transcend cultural barriers — music, sports, and sex. We're not about to use sex, and we think sports has been somewhat overdone. Music is 100 percent universal."

Indeed, Pepsi says that imagery and entertainment are so important that it is not concerned about reports that neither Madonna nor Jackson, its two biggest celebrities, actually drink their product.

"It's not an issue," said Tod MacKenzie, a Pepsi spokesman. "What we are tying into is Michael Jackson's ability to provide some entertainment, not whether or not he drinks the product."

While Coke and Pepsi have used celebrities for decades, the numbers have increased dramatically in the 1980s, as has the size of the contracts.

Jackson is reported to have received $5.5 million from Pepsi in 1984 for appearing in its commercials. This year, Pepsi paid Madonna more than $5 million for her appearance in the two-minute "Make a Wish" commercial.

Such enormous contracts make up a sizable portion of the annual advertising budgets of Coca-Cola and Pepsi; in 1987, those budgets were $142 million and $135 million, respectively, according to Jesse Meyers, editor of Beverage Digest.

Some marketing experts say large expenditures on celebrities may not be warranted by market testing — or even by the tests of common sense and individual reaction.

ENTERTAINMENT

'Cirkus Berzerkus:'

Treat for the whole family

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Audience involvement is a trademark of Mimewock Company productions. After all, the producer is Nobody's Phool.

"To us, we don't perform for an audience. We perform with an audience," says performer Philip Joseph, show director and business manager of the Kansas City, Mo.-based company.

"A lot of performers along the way, forget why they perform. We don't forget.

"If we don't have an audience, there's no reason to perform. They are very important people for us. That doesn't mean they come up on the stage with us, but we really include the audience in the show."

Mimewock Company brings its circus parody — "Cirkus Berzerkus" — to town Saturday for the Children's Performing Arts Series. The series closes May 13 with "Mozart on Fifth."

"Even though people may think of us as a children's theater group, we aren't," Joseph says. "Our favorite audiences and our most successful shows are done to a general audience. We want to have children and grandparents there because there's something for everyone to enjoy."

All performances in the CPA Series are held at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave. Showtimes are 1:30 and 4:30 p.m.

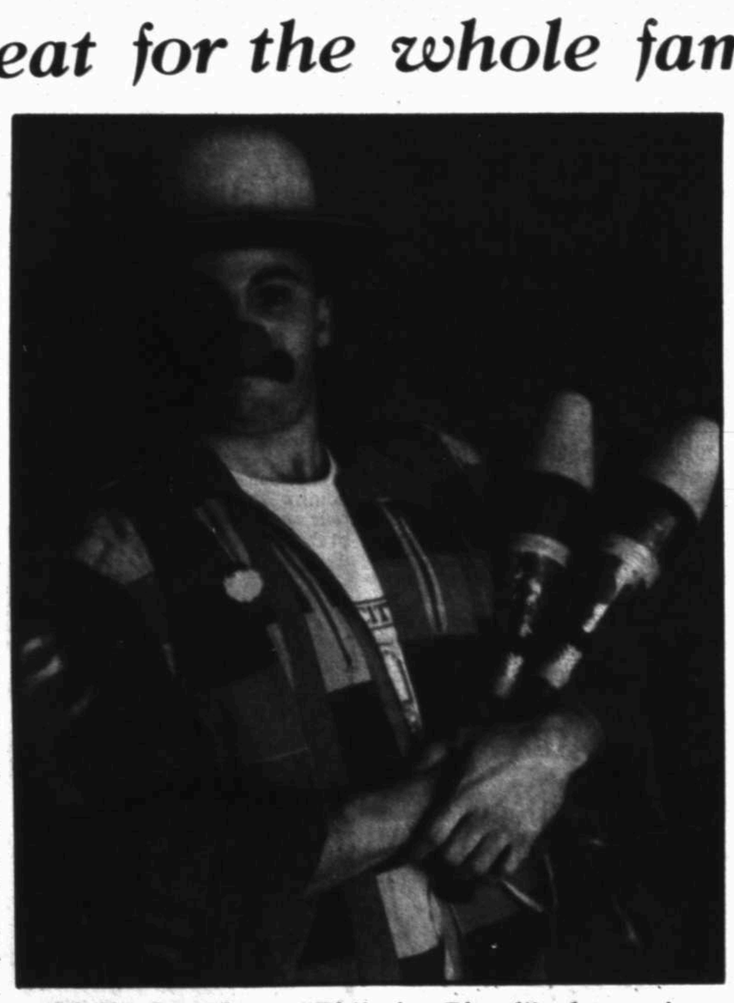

Now in its 12th season, Nobody's Phool has produced over 6,000 performances in 40 states with an array of shows ranging from opening acts for stars to main-stage performances with 20-member casts.

The Kansas City Star has called the company's "Cirkus Berzerkus" a "balance of sophistication and tomfoolery hard not to enjoy, a wondrous treat for the entire family."

Highlights include fire-eaters, a balancing act, a human pincushion, an unusual tap dance, juggling and magic.

The three-members of "Circus Berzerkus" — Joseph, Mark Sparks and Richard Renner — have performed together for five years. Although they have similar skills, each has a specialty.

For Sparks, it's magic and fire eating.

Philip Joseph as "Phil the Phool" clowns it up before Saturday's "Cirkus Berzerkus" performance to be held in the Yucca Theatre.

"It ('Cirkus Berzerkus') can't really be described; it has to be seen...We're a cross between Marcel Marceau and Red Skelton. There's the very traditional, very artistic, sophisticated side our training is based in, and then there's what we've done with it, which is a whole lot of fun and very different than what people are used to seeing."

— Philip Joseph

"The magic is very untraditional," Joseph says. "We can saw ladies in half if we want to, but people have seen that before, so we try to do something else. The magic sort of happens in the show, as opposed to in a traditional magic show."

Renner's special training is as a clown.

"He's excellent," Joseph says. "He's an acrobat, a unicyclist and does a lot of physical comedy."

Joseph refers to himself as a juggler and comedian.

"I used to do a lot of physical humor, but that was in my younger days," Joseph says.

At 36, Joseph is the "old man of the company."

When Joseph joined Mimewock at its inception in 1977, he had no idea what a change it would make in his life.

"I just started taking classes there as a person interested in taking classes. I had a degree in theater from college knowing that it is a very difficult career to pursue. After taking classes for about 9 months, I found a real interest and a real knack for it."

As a youngster, Joseph was the "class clown" in school.

"I always had a knack for humor, but even after college I didn't plan on doing this. I was a diamond setter; I was a jeweler. It was really timing and that's really part of show business anyway — being in the right place at the right time."

In 1977, Mimewock was very traditional, in the white-faced, Marcel Marceau-style of mime, Joseph says.

"I call it mimeish mimey, cutsie-wootsie. Although that was very artistic and all of us enjoyed it...there wasn't very much of a market for it."

When Joseph took over management of the company in 1980, the company became a non-profit organization and switched from a traditional style to a very "untraditional" one.

"We are now is what's termed — at least on the East Coast — new vaudeville. We still use a lot of mime technique and a lot of silent theater, but we don't rely on that style. We're variety entertainers, and the training and the skills range from mime to clowning to juggling, to magic and to what I just kind of generally call circus arts, which includes stilt-walking and unicycling."

Joseph emphasizes the production is "good, clean fun, family entertainment." But, he hesitates to describe what the trio does.

"If we say that we're mime, they expect to see us in white-faced makeup. They won't. If we tell them we're clowns, they expect to see us in a big, froufrou costume with big 30 size shoes, but we aren't. If we tell them we're magicians, they expect to see us in a tuxedo. It can't really be described; it has to be seen.

"We're a cross between Marcel Marceau and Red Skelton. There's the very traditional, very artistic, sophisticated side our training is based in, and then there's what we've done with it, which is a whole lot of fun and very different than what people are used to seeing."

The performances are sponsored by Casa de Amigos and the Midland Reporter-Telegram and serve as a benefit for Casa. Honorary chairmen for the CPA Series are Andrea and Richard Catania.

Tickets, priced at $10, may be purchased through Casa, 1101 E. Garden Lane and at the door. For more information call 682-9701.

Big Bird

'Sesame Street'

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Big Bird tells the Sesame Street story at Midland's Chaparral Center Tuesday and Wednesday.

"The 'expose' is in fact a highly fanciful Muppet version of an important bit of Sesame Street history — how the now-renowned boulevard and its furry and feathered residents came to television and world-wide stardom," says Nancy Pilhofer of Sesame Street.

This year's production marks the fourth time "Sesame Street Live!" has played Chaparral Center.

"The show has obviously done real well or they wouldn't be bringing it back," says Mike Stevens, director of Chaparral Center. "A key indicator for any family show is that if you're having success with it, it will return."

Part of the popularity of the live production lies in its freshness each season.

"Even if they have a 7 year old and a 2 year old, they will not see the same show. This is our fourth year, and this is our fourth new show. Even though the characters are the same, it's a totally different show."

This year's live production stars all the familiar faces known and loved by children who watch the television program as well as some special guests.

On stage will be Big Bird, Bert, Ernie, Grover, Cookie Monster, Prairie Dawn, Oscar the Grouch, The Count and special guests Elmo, Barkley the Dog, Betty Lou, Telly Monster and Hoots the Owl.

MCC

"Our entertainers are professional and versatile and daring. For example, Hector Olivera brings an organ which is one of a kind. It's synthesized and creates the sound of a full orchestra."

A child prodigy, Olivera entered the University of Buenos Aires at age 12 and became head of the organ department when he was 18. In 1968, he was offered a scholarship to The Juilliard School in New York City and placed first in the National Improvisation Contest sponsored by the American Guild of Organists. In 1980, he conceived a custom electronic touring organ that would permit him to perform anywhere in the world.

"The result was the 'O-1 Orchestra,' a custom-crafted instrument that Olivera assembled over a three-year period whose tones rival world renowned orchestras, bands and pipe organs," says a release from Columbia artists Festivals. "It is the only instrument of its kind in the world."

Both Mrs. Chase and Ms. Perkins have been associated with MCC for many years. Ms. Perkins remembers "the greats we've had — like Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops, Fred Waring and the Pennsylvanian, Jose Iturbi, Jose Greco and his dancers, Peter Nero — twice.

"I remember like a 99 percent success record," Ms. Perkins says. "We've had a couple of duds, but most of them have been very, very successful programs."

The 42nd annual MCC campaign drive for membership begins today and runs through April 15. Attendance at concerts is by membership only; no single event tickets are sold.

The campaign headquarters, manned by volunteers in the lobby of the Lexington Motor Inn, opens Wednesday and will operate daily, except Sunday, from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

The office will be open April 15 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. MCC holds its general meeting at 2 p.m. April 15 at the Lexington Motor Inn. All members are invited to attend.

"We have 78 workers helping us this year, which is larger than usual and we've expanded our mailing list," Ms. Perkins says. "We're expecting good results."

So far, the renewal response has been "very brisk and exciting," Mrs. Chase says.

"Our attendance in this past year has been great, and our enthusiasm is building," Mrs. Chase says. "We'd be really excited if we could sell out this year. And, you never know once the momentum gets going."

MCC is a non-profit membership organization with no paid workers, the sole objective of which is to present musical artists and attractions in an annual concert series.

Membership cost is $20 per adult. Half-price admission for students applies through high school. For more information call 699-2444 on campaign days or 684-4557 anytime.

Decisions on what acts to bring to Midland are made by MCC's board of directors and are based on budget and scheduling considerations, Ms. Perkins says. All MCC performances are held at Midland High School Auditorium.

"We try to get two concerts in the fall and two in the spring, within the limitations of our stage," she says. "There are some — especially the big dance spectaculars — we can't handle. For example, the Shanghai Acrobats couldn't do all of their numbers because of the height and width of the stage."

"When the representative comes here from New York, she has any number of programs to offer, but we are highly selective, we choose the best, and the programs that are especially requested by our Midland audience," Mrs. Chase says.

The lineup of concerts for the upcoming season includes the Mac Frampton Trio; Olivera; The Outrageous Romantics featuring pianist Mona Golabek, violinist Andres Cardenes and cellist Jeffrey Solow; and The Swingle Singers, called by the Boston Globe "the world's most unique vocal group."

For several of the performers, this season's concert is not their Midland debut.

"Mac Frampton was here one time with the symphony," Ms. Chase says, adding, "Not his trio, but just himself as a pianist."

And, Cardenes won the Midland-Odessa Symphony National Young artist Competition when he was 14.

"Then, he came back when he was in college and won it again," Mrs. Chase says. "I think this not only speaks well for our national artist competition, it also is a reflection of the type of talent that Columbia Artists seeks."

A 1980 Bronze medalist at the Sibelius International Competition and Laureate of Queen Elizabeth, Cardenes captured the Bronze in the 1982 Tchaikovsky International Violin Competition. A cultural ambassador for UNICEF, Cardenes has performed with such orchestras as the Helsinki and the Moscow philharmonics and Orchestre Nationale Belgique.

"The 'Outrageous Romantics' explores the music of the great romantic composers of the 19th century as a reflection of their fascinating and often turbulent personal lives," says Columbia Artists Festivals. "Composers of the period, such as Chopin, Schumann, Liszt and Brahms, were greatly affected by the extraordinary women closest to them. Ms. Golabek's eloquent discourse on the events and feelings which precipitated the creation of the world's most sublime music, adds another dimension to our appreciation of it."

In addition, new members will be able to attend, along with current members, the Harvey Pittel Saxophone Quartet concert April 8. Memberships for the upcoming season will be sold at the door that night.

Pittel has appeared as soloists with numerous symphony orchestras including the New York Philharmonic and the Los Angeles Philharmonic with such conductors as Zubin Mehta, Seiji Ozawa, Neville Marriner and Michael Tilson Thomas. His recitals around the world, including seven major New York appearances, have brought him such praise from the New York Times as "The program not only glorified Adolphe Sax's 139-year-old invention, but brought glory to the music that was played on it."

HPSQ members James Rotter, Debra McKim, Allen Won and Pittel perform on 12 different saxophones. The program material may include Bach, Mozart, Glazunov and Debussy as well as Jopin, vaudeville, swing and jazz favorites.

"We feel so strongly about this quartet, they possibly are the highlight of this past season," Mrs. Chase says. "And, we'd like to give new members an opportunity to sample the kind of programs they can expect for the next season."

Trying to control others may be 'root of all evil'

This column reflects my opinion so read with caution.

Temple

Now that I've issued that warning, I'm ready to admit I've done a lot of thinking lately. Whether that's good or bad, I don't know.

Among the questions which have filtered through my mind is the following: For all our grand inventions in the 20th century designed to ease the human condition, have we come any internal distance as human beings or are our hearts and souls still bogged down in a quagmire pit?

To me, many of the actions of governments in the free world, U.S. businesses and individuals in this country indicate the latter is true.

For example, I find among life's ironies in the 1980s, the movement in the free world to restrict the individual and the individual's choice, while the communist world appears to be moving in the opposite direction.

Control — the desire to exercise restraining or directing influence over others — is, to me, the root of human evil. It is this desire to manage others which builds walls in relationships and separates us from one another.

I call it the "Playing God Syndrome."

Its participants may clothe their desire in words spoken softly or harshly. Regardless, the intent is the same — getting their way. Somehow from somewhere we think we have the answers for another human being...

We've all got the disease. I work hard at keeping mine in remission. It's not easy, but the daily examples of people trying to control others makes it simpler for me. I'm constantly reminded of how I don't want to be.

And I stay tuned for stories which reflect the positive side of human nature.

Thus, it was refreshing to talk this week with Tony Butala, the remaining original member of The Lettermen. A story he told me brought to mind a line I read years ago: "Who knows how far the power of a positive example carries?"

Tony moved back in time to the late 1960s, the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco and an audience which included then-President Ferdinand E. and Imelda Marcos of the Philippines.

As a child, he had sung with Bob Mitchell's boys' choir. The choir sang in 21 languages and one of them was Tagalog, the language of the people of the Manila area of the Philippines.

The night the Marcoses' were in the audience, on "the spur of the moment," he went into the crowd and sang in Tagalog "Da Hilsaiyo (Because of You)" to the Phillipine first lady.

"She was thrilled I cared enough to do something like that," Tony says.

As a result, she bought every available Lettermen album and record in San Francisco, took them home with her, and The Lettermen began years of highly successful tours of the Philippines.

The trio will be performing April 14 at Midland Center. The $100-per-couple, black-tie event is a benefit for The Opportunity Center and the Chris Davidson Opportunity Park.

Georgia Todd Temple is entertainment writer for the Reporter-Telegram.

Ceramics artist to lecture

Noted ceramics artist David Aguirre of Tucson, Ariz., will serve as an artist-in-residence at Midland College April 3-17.

Aguirre's own works are small three-dimensional figures, sometimes whimsical, occasionally bizarre, always interesting.

While at MC, Aguirre will talk with ceramics and sculpture classes, give a public lecture about his own work, and do some demonstrations of his techniques of construction, glazing, and firing.

The public is invited to attend any of the lectures or demonstrations without charge. Arrangements can be made by calling MC art instructor John Harmon at 685-4652.

Davis works on exhibit

ODESSA — An exhibition of mixed media art works, entitled "The Life of Obe Garcia, A Psycho-Drama Autobiography," is on display through April 14 in Odessa College's art department gallery in the Instructional Building.

The collection of works by Lee Baxter Davis, an art professor at East Texas State University, may be viewed from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday.

The show features 11 pieces of art, including etchings, watercolor and ink drawings.

Davis is currently chairperson of the fine arts printmaking division at the university.

McEntire to sing at MC

Reba McEntire and Ricky Van Shelton perform at Midland College's Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. April 14.

In March 1988, Miss McEntire received her fourth consecutive Academy of Country Music award as Top Female vocalist and the Gallup Youth survey announced that American teen-agers had picked her as one of their Top 10 Female Vocalist, ranking her ahead of Pat Benatar, Cyndi Lauper and Stevie Nicks.

A native of Grit, Va., Van Shelton was singing gospel music in the local church by the time he was 3 years old. Van Shelton's debut album, "Wild-Eyed Dream," is nearing platinum certification.

For ticket information call Chaparral Center.

ODESSA — The Presidential Museum is hosting its fith annual Photography Competition and Exhibition, Southwest Images. It is open to amateur and professional photographers to show their best work and compete for prizes.

The exhibition opens April 24, and will hang through May 26. Entries will be accepted until April 15 and should be delivered to the museum during regular hours — 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday.

Entry fee for each photograph is $5, and there is no limit to the number of entries per entrant.

For more information contact The Presidential Museum, 1-332-7123.

Group to sing Brahms

The Permian Basin Meistersingers will present Brahms' "A German Requiem," at 8 p.m. April 18 at St. Ann's Cathloic Church, 204 N. "M" St.

Until Brahms completed the work in 1868, a requiem was a service for the dead. Since Brahms' composition is one of hope, faith and expectancy for life everlasting, it paved the way for more universal style compositions.

The PBM will be joined by members of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, directed by Dr. William Lucas. Soloists are sopranos Beverly Newsom and Pam Priebe and bass-baritone Tom Laney.

The performance is free.

Evangelist to perform

Christian evangelist and comedian Mike Warnke is performing at Ector County Coliseum Saturday.

Showtime is 7:30 p.m. A $3 suggested donation will be accepted at the door, and an offering will be received for the "War on Satanic Crimes" during the service.

Warnke was a Satanic high priest and his evangelistic career began after his first book, "The Satan Seller," was published in 1972. His second book, "Hitchhiking on Hope Street," was published in 1979 by Doubleday and Company.

For more information, call 362-1911 or 606-748-9961. The concert is sponsored by Warnke Ministries and Life Unlimited Christian Center.

SESAME

"During the 90-minute stage musical, they sing and dance their way through a variety of upbeat numbers designed to entertain and involve members of the audience while telling how 'Sesame Street' came to the air waves," Ms. Pilhofer says.

Also appearing with the Sesame Street crew is a new character, Tedious J. Molehill, a bumbling broadcast mogul who serves as vice president in charge of New Kiddie Shows in "The-Place-Where-They-Make-Television-Shows."

Now in its ninth season, "Sesame Street Live!" is presented by VEE Corp. and is produced by Bob Shipstad in cooperation with Children's Television Workshop.

The script for "Big Bird's Sesame Street Story" was written by Jon Stone, a director and creative consultant for Sesame Street. Set designs were created by Jim Waters and musical arrangements were contributed by Paul Walberg. The show was directed and choreographed by Marilyn Magness.

There will be three performances of the musical-variety stage revue. Tickets may be purchased at Chaparral Center and area Sears stores. All seats are $9 reserved, with a $1.50 discount for children 12 and under. For more information call 685-4584.

Opening night's show at 7:30 p.m. is "Big 2/KNFM Radio/Dairy Queen Family Night," and all seats are $4 off with a Dairy Queen store coupon.

Also, a milk and cookie treat for youngsters, courtesy of Albertsons, will be part of the Wednesday 4 p.m. "KWES Radio Milk and Cookies Matinee," which features a $6 ticket price for adults and children of all ages.

The revue closes with a 7:30 p.m. show Wednesday, sponsored by the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Winners of the "Sesame Street Live! Coloring Contest" have received four free tickets to this showing and the opportunity to go backstage and meet Cookie Monster.

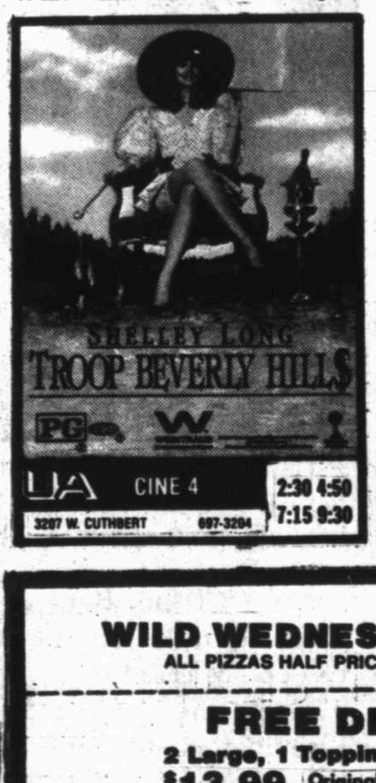

Even though last year there were four performances, ticket sales are ahead of the same time period last year, Stevens says.

"You continually have new Sesame Street children viewing the show, so you continually have a new audience," Stevens says. "And, in turn, they continually put out new shows so the people aren't seeing the same show."

'Cousins' explores lunacies of love

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Amazingly, the films "Cousins" and "Chances Are" have the same opening and closing scenes. Each film begins and ends with a wedding, and the bride who gets married in the beginning of each film is the same one who appears in the final wedding.

Salcedo

But "Cousins," which is like a sunny version of "Moonstruck" is the superior film of the two, one of the only films this year that I've wanted to go back and see again.

Like "Three Men and a Baby," and "Three Fugitives," "Cousins," is an American adaptation of a French film. The source of "Cousins" is "Cousin, Cousine," a film which garnered two major "non-foreign" Oscar nominations.

The fun begins when Ted "Three Men and a Baby" Danson takes his wife Sean "No Way Out" Young to a wedding. Ms. Young sneaks off for a quick tryst with Danson's cousin, William Petersen, the egotistical husband of the sensitive Isabella Rossellini.

Soon Ms. Rossellini and Danson get together to discuss their spouses' affair. Though they decide to keep their relationship platonic, they find themselves falling in love. "Cousins" is a poignant romance which explores the differences between love and lust in couples of all ages.

Some of the best scenes, however, belong to a rambunctious grandfather (Lloyd Bridges) and his equally effervescent grandson (Keith Coogan). My favorite moment involves young Coogan applying mousse to Bridges' hair, Samurai style, before a hot date. Although the two are constant scene stealers, Ms. Rossellini — with her subtle charm — often carries the film. She has never resembled her mother (Ingrid Bergman) more, both in talent and beauty.

Danson, as a dance instructor, also gives his best performance to date. Ms. Young does a fine job of presenting herself as a fetching airhead, the type who would think nothing of peddling cosmetics at a wedding reception.

The film is shot in soft focus and the script exercises restraint while indulging in the lunacies of love, American-style. There are plenty of lines that have the ring of truth in them, using the nuances of real speech. For example, after a botched luncheon date, Danson says to Ms. Rossellini, "It was nice not having lunch with you."

There are some nice human touches, such as the tasteless video of the first wedding made from a teen-ager's veiwpoint by Coogan, and a scene where wedding guests, hoping to sit by attractive people jumble up the seating arrangement by switching their place cards around.

Although none of the acting is Oscar material, none of the acting in "The Accidental Tourist" was really stellar either (Sorry, Geena Davis, you were my last choice to win in the Best Supporting Actress category. I thought the best supporting actress of "The Accidental Tourist" should have been Amy Wright.

As engaging and ruefully romantic as "Cousins" is, "Moonstruck" still fares better. "Cousins" has too many plodding moments to make it a truly perfect film. But both are heartfelt charmers, in their own right.

"Cousins" rates 3½ rigs.

"Cousins," rated PG-13 for fleeting nudity and some sex scenes, is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'Chances' has potential to be better

"Chances Are," is another "invasion-of-the-body-switchers" film. But this film has a twist. Instead of characters switching bodies, the soul of one character — a Washington, D.C., lawyer named Louie (Christopher McDonald) — returns to Earth in the reincarnation of the body of an adorable young man named Alex (Robert Downey Jr.).

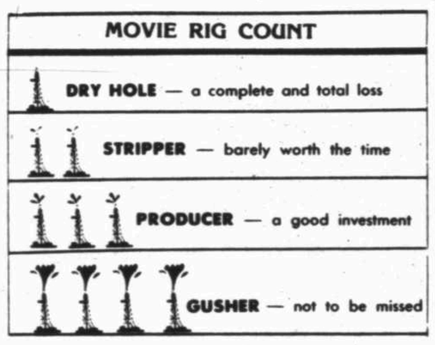

After idyllic scenes involving Louie and his wife, Corinne (Cybill Shepherd), Louie is hit by a car and killed on their first anniversary, just after learning his wife is pregnant (enter violins).

He arrives at some way station in the sky, where there are long lines, strange inoculations being given and heavenly functionaries who exhibit extremely poor taste. When Louie complains about not feeling well, one of the women in charge rudely says, "What do you expect? "Your body's a cream sauce all over Wisconsin Avenue." Ha. Ha.

Fortunately, the gaffes are few and far between, and much of "Chances Are" is entertaining and watchable. The characters, however, (with the exception of Downey) are insipidly drawn and not very sympathetic. Corinne has pined after her dead husband for 23 years and has lived in a state of celibacy all those years. Her husband's former best friend, Philip (Ryan O'Neal) has pined after Corinne even longer, but has been too much of a mouse to assert himself. This makes O'Neal's character unbelievable, since he is supposed to be a reporter for the "Washington Post."

Just when Philip thinks he might confess his feelings to Corinne, Alex shows up and confuses the situation. Alex meets Corinne's daughter, Miranda (Mary Stuart Masterson), at college. At the time he doesn't realize the appealing young woman is also his daughter. Then when he meets Corinne, his memory is jogged (which is marked by annoying Tinkerbell chimes).

The rest of the film evolves into a sort of French bedroom farce, complete with slamming doors and mistaken bed partners. The object is for Corinne and Philip to get together or for Corinne and Alex to get together without Alex and Miranda ending up in the same bed. Whew.

Everybody has to end up with the right mate before the reincarnation fairy returns and inoculates Alex against past-life memories.

The best scene involves Alex's visit to a psychic (Susan Ruttan), who is delightfully kooky. Ms. Ruttan has a great sense of comic timing, and her brief time on the screen is a real bright spot. "Sometimes I wonder why I'm so concerned with past lives," she mutters at one point, "I'm having so much trouble with this one." Even though her lines aren't that funny, her delivery is hilarious.

But the psychic's trouble is small potatoes compared to that of all the other characters. The ending becomes confusing and I had a real problem with the insinuation of incest between Downey and Masterson. Their situation moves from uncomfortable to downright offensive.

Although all the actors are easy on the eye, their roles are lacking in characterization, and the dialogue misses more than it hits. Sadly, the potential was there to make this a much better film. Chances are — in a different life — things would have worked out better.

"Chances Are" rates 2½ rigs.

"Chances Are" is rated PG ("Parental Guidance Suggested"). It includes some mild bedroom scenes and innuendo.

MCT staging 'I Ought to be in Pictures'

Neil Simon's comedy "I Ought to be in Pictures" is onstage at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., through April 15.

Remaining production dates for the third membership show of the 1989 season are 2:30 p.m. today, and 8 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday through April 15.

Odessans Buster Tieman and Pam Lester team up with Midlander Flo Hughes to bring Simon's comedy to life for area audiences.

This stage comedy, Simon's 18th, opened on Broadway April 3, 1980. Like all his plays before, "I Ought to be in Pictures" was a box office success.

The storyline centers around a writer with a writer's block, the daughter he left behind 16 years before and the woman he loves on Tuesdays only.

The Broadway version of "Pictures" opened with Ron Leibman, Dinah Manoff and Joyce Van Patten. Ms. Manoff returned in the movie which also starred Walter Matthau and Ann-Margaret.

For more information or reservations call Midland Community Theatre's box office, 682-4111. Memberships still are available for the 1989 season.

Collins concert to benefit museum

Judy Collins performs at the Holiday Inn Convention Center at 8: 30 p.m. April 21.

Not only did her million-selling successes establish her prominence among vocalists, her choice of material also helped audiences discover songwriters like Joni Mitchell, Randy Newman and Leonard Cohen.

The performance, sponsored by Las Manos, is a benefit for the Museum of the Southwest's Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum. Las Manos is the museum's auxiliary organization.

Tickets are priced at $37.50 per person and include light hors d'oeuvres. For more information, call 699-4671 or 682-6319.

Dubus makes fiction seem like fact

"Selected Stories," by Andre Dubus. Godine. 476 Pages. $22.50.

By PHIL THOMAS
Associated Press Books Editor

A Review

After years of neglect, the short story form is flourishing, and Andre Dubus can take much credit for its return to favor.

Dubus not only writes beautifully, he also has that rare talent to make fiction seem like fact. His stories are imagined by him but are strikingly real to the reader, often painfully so.

Consider the opening sentence of "Killings," one of the 23 offerings in "Selected Stories":

"On the August morning when Matt Fowler buried his youngest son, Frank, who had lived for 21 years, 8 months and 4 days, Matt's oldest son, Steve, turned to him as the family left the grave and walked between their friends, and said: 'I should kill him.'"

Not many words, but so well chosen that the reader instantly feels a part of the Fowler family and identifies with its loss. Matt is the main character here and he develops into a well-rounded human being as he remembers how he worried about his children and how hard he tried to protect them.

This inner search for resources to get one through a seemingly impossible situation also is evident in "Cadence," a grim but all-too-real exposition of the rigors of military basic training. Here, two young men have voluntarily entered the Marine Corps as officer candidates. Neither knew what awaited him during the training course, and the sheer physical and mental brutality of it takes them completely by surprise. One survives the course, the other does not. Why this comes about makes for a most powerful story.

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

Natalie Honeycutt's lovable hero, Jonah, is back in rare form in a sequel to "The All New Jonah Twist."

In "The Best-Laid Plans of Jonah Twist," his first "best-laid plan" is to convince his mother to let him keep a kitten. The kitten, who does stay, is accused of devouring Woz, a hamster belonging to Jonah's older brother, Todd.

Jonah and his classmate, Granville, plan to be partners for an animal habitat study and are assigned to work with Juliet, the bossiest girl in class. When Jonah goes to visit an elderly neighbor, the neighbor is missing.

Jonah grows in accepting responsibility as the tale continues. Jonah and Granville discover how lonely Juliet is and learn to respond to her positive points. Jonah's and Todd's alternate weekends with their dad are a smooth part of the story, as are the facts the kids uncover in search of the habitat of the elephant seal.

The hardcover book from Bradbury Press is an excellent choice for independent readers, but will also be a favorite with the read-aloud set.

Writer of thrillers has no experience with spies

By JAMES O. CLIFFORD

PORTOLA VALLEY, Calif. (AP) — Fans of author Alfred Coppel might be surprised to know he seldom wears a trench coat, de rigueur for spies and reporters, his favorite subjects.

An even bigger surprise is that he has no practical experience in either intelligence work or journalism.

"However, I did major in journalism at Stanford (University) and worked in public relations after World War II," said the author of 28 books, including "Show Me a Hero," "Thirty Four East" and his latest, "A Land of Mirrors" (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, $18.95).

As for espionage, a suggestion that he's been on the cloak-and-dagger circuit only brings a laugh from Coppel, 67, who lives in a two-story rustic home in this exclusive San Francisco Peninsula community.

The writer admits that in the 1950s, when caught in a "fit of patriotism," he offered his services to the CIA. He was interviewed but was never contacted again.

Coppel, a P-38 pilot in World War II, wondered why.

"In 1961, when a brigade of poor sods stormed ashore at the Bay of Pigs without air cover, I stopped asking," he said.

The alleged CIA connection has haunted Coppel and, he said, he has paid a price.

"For the last 30 years the critical establishment has become less part of the literary world than of the world of media and politics," he said. A conservative writer, according to Coppel, is not likely to be invited to appear on network television shows.

The literary establishment suffers from what Coppel calls "slavish liberalism."

For that matter, so do most reporters, he says. Just read "A Land of Mirrors," a tight suspense yarn about the rivalry between CIA and KGB agents that is rooted in the Vietnam War and serves as an indictment of the mass media.

The villain is Jean Thierry, a French journalist who uses his job as a cover for his KGB work. The book is filled with lines such as these:

— "The press hated the whole war effort.... "

— "The army was more the enemy than the Vietcong... "

— "The media people made a separate peace with the enemy after the Tet offensive."

Don't get the impression that the CIA is always sitting pretty. One of the most repulsive characters in "A Land of Mirrors" is CIA agent Charlie Blaisdell.

Because his books carry a tone of authority, it's easy to see how some people might surmise that Coppel's been a spy. But it's just a matter of keeping your eyes and ears open, claims the author who said many of his characters are drawn from life.

"My aging gone-to-fat CIA field man is a synthesis of intelligence officers I have known," he said.

Some characters are pure fiction, of course. But Coppel had many "macho" chapters in his life that could have provided him with such people, who would include his son, a Green Beret in Vietnam.

Not only was he a fighter pilot, Coppel still holds a commercial pilot's license. He's also been a race car driver and sail boat racer.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, APRIL 3, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Keep an eye on your main goals. Thrilling events lie just ahead! Have the good sense to recognize when a relationship is over. Do not let work tensions affect the serenity of your home. Your self-image will improve after a special occasion in the fall.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: author Washington Irving, actor Marlon Brando, actress Doris Day, Chancellor Helmut Kohl, comic star Eddie Murphy, Time-Life founder Henry Luce.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be more realistic where finances are concerned. Paddle your own canoe but seek experts' advice when necessary. Your kindness pays off in unusual ways. Romance gives you new hope for the future.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Forge ahead with your career plans. Learning high-tech skills will boost your earning potential. Set aside time to tend to an older person's needs. A child shares a big secret.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Many different concerns will occupy your attention today. Put business first, however, and use your authority wisely. A work change will increase not only your efficiency but your comfort. Welcome innovative ideas.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your financial affairs may be linked to someone else's. Make sure you retain your share of control. Partners are more cooperative than in the recent past. Show appreciation for their efforts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You recognize a golden opportunity and pursue it. A heavier workload is part of the picture. If swamped, do not hesitate to ask for help. Keep family expenses within reasonable limits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Commitments made today will bring you new prestige and financial security. Higher-ups become aware of your improved work performance. Return phone calls promptly to avoid missing an unusual opportunity. Adventure beckons!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Postpone signing papers or traveling. Events on the home front demand your attention. A challenge is settled, giving you a chance to try your wings. Showcase your talents to best advantage.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Expect good news, welcome invitations and more romance! Expanding your social circle will lead to some wonderful times. Do not rock the boat at work or you could cause unnecessary problems for yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A new project receives backing from an unexpected quarter. You are surprised and delighted! Do not try to borrow money or valuable items today. Learn to keep friendship separate from business.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Communication with an attractive member of opposite sex becomes difficult. Cool it until you are in a more positive mood. A job tip could lead to a second career. Follow up.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A conflict with authority figures will require all the patience and diplomacy you can muster. However, do stand your ground if someone tries to take unfair advantage. Your high standards are admirable.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be tolerant if you have to deal with emotional family members or people at a distance. Business will look better later this afternoon. Entertaining potential customers is a smart move.

4 ♡	Pass	4 NT	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	6 ♠	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♣

It is surprising how even good players can fail to spot seemingly obvious lines. An expert played too fast on this one.

North's bid of four hearts was a cue-bid confirming spades as trumps and showing a maximum no trump. South trotted out Blackwood just in case (the heart cue-bid in theory denied the ace of clubs), then settled in a small slam when he discovered that one ace was indeed missing.

The opening club was taken by East's ace and a club was returned. Since he had an unavoidable heart loser, declarer discarded one from hand. He drew trumps and, after frittering around for a while, tried the diamond finesse. When West showed out on the second round, declarer became aware of his fate—down one.

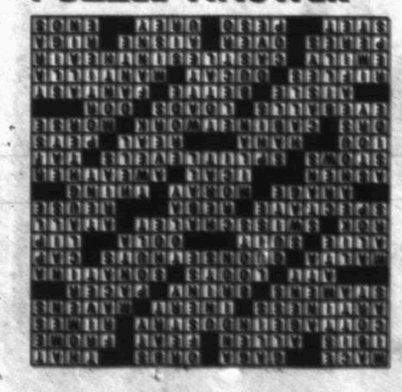

Declarer made a critical error. At trick two, he failed to announce that, barring a 5-0 diamond break, he was claiming his contract!

Instead of a heart, declarer should have discarded a diamond on dummy's club winner. After drawing trumps in as many rounds as necessary, he should go after setting up the diamonds. As long as both defenders follow to the ace of diamonds, the contract is secure.

Declarer continues with a second diamond to the king, then ruffs a diamond. A heart to the king is the entry for the second diamond ruff, which sets up a long card in the suit. The ace of hearts serves as the dummy entry to let declarer take a heart discard on the long diamond.

Gallery 1114 to host 'Invited Artists '89'

Gallery 1114 opens its "Invited Artists '89" show Saturday with three-hour public reception at 7 p.m.

In addition, an artists' talk will be held at 2 p.m. April 9. Both events are free and open to the public.

The exhibition, which runs through May 11, features the work of Teresa Buckley of Midland, Didencio Duran of Austin and E. Barry Phillips III of Odessa.

Ms. Buckley's works ask classic realist questions in a personal way. In her meditative and often introspective interiors and self-portraits she says she uses "emblems, symbols and suggestions to elevate the image beyond mere imitation of nature."

Ms. Buckley holds a master of fine arts from Southern Illinois University and is an art instructor at Midland College.

Duran's paintings are a narrative of his experiences in growing up in a large Texas Mexican family and contain an open and social quality.

Duran received his bachelor of fine arts degree from the University of Texas at Austin. He has painted several murals in civic projects around the state, and his work is included in "Expressiones Hispanas," the National Hispanic Art Exhibition & Tour.

Phillips explores the relationship of the naive to the sophisticated and the transformation from child to adult. He uses the juxtaposition of childlike elements with more realistic ones to create visual tension and make statements on various issues.

Phillips received his master of fine arts from East Texas State University and has received a Mid-American Art Alliance Fellowship. He is an art instructor at Odessa College.

Currently hanging through Thursday at Gallery 1114 is an exhibition of photographs by Jerry Uelsmann.

Gallery 1114 is a contemporary artists' cooperative located at 1114 N. Big Spring and is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

NBC barely beats ABC to tie Nielsen record

By KATHRYN BAKER

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC barely beat out ABC to tie the 26-year-old record of 40 weeks atop the Nielsens last week held by CBS.

"We were lucky," said Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for research projects. Since ABC broadcast...Academy Awards, NBC would be lucky to win again next week to become the all-time record-holder, he said.

But for the week ending March 26, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co., NBC had an average, prime-time rating of 14.9, half a rating point in front of ABC, which had a 14.4. CBS trailed with 11.6. NBC has won all 27 weeks in the season to date, plus 13 in a row before that. The last time a network won 40 weeks in a row was when CBS did it during the 1962-63 television season.

It appears unlikely that CBS will catch ABC for second place this season. With only three weeks to go — the 1987-88 television season has an asterisk beside it because of delays caused by last summer's writers' strike — NBC has an average 16.1 to ABC's 12.9 and CBS' 12.6.

ABC's "Roseanne" was the top-rated show of the week for the third week in a row, with a rating of 25.7 and a 38 share. The second half of "The Women of Brewster Place," starring Oprah Winfrey who was also co-executive producer, had a 24.5 and a 38 share. It became the highest-rated, two-part movie this season.

Each rating point represents 904,000 households with televisions. The share is a percentage of sets in use.

The rest of the top 10 were: "The Cosby Show" NBC, "Who's the Boss?" ABC, "The Wonder Years" ABC, "The Golden Girls" NBC, "Day by Day Special" NBC, "Cheers" NBC, "Empty Nest" NBC and "L.A. Law" NBC.

CBS was shut out of the top 10. Its highest-rated show, "60 Minutes," was 13th.

Some venerable old-timers made a showing. The 29-year-old tape of Mary Martin's performance as "Peter Pan" ranked 21st with a 16.1 rating and a 27 share. NBC broadcast it Friday night for the first time since 1973.

ABC also got a decent showing out of the 1956 epic "The Ten Commandments." It was 31st with a 14.7 rating and 26 share.

Among the spring tryouts, NBC's "Quantum Leap" premiered at a respectable 30th. CBS' two new Monday comedies, "Live In" and "Heartland," had mediocre performances, landing in 41st and 44th place, respectively. ABC's new "Men" was a lowly 71st in the rankings.

The lowest-rated network shows of the week were: "Hard Time on Planet Earth," "NCAA Basketball Championship Thursday Pregame," "A Man Called Hawk," "Mission Impossible," "Purple Hearts," "The Shaggy Dog, Part One," "HeartBeat," "West 57th," "Men" and "TV 101."

"ABC World News Tonight" won the news race, edging the "CBS Evening News."

Area museum to mark 25th anniversary

SNYDER — The Diamond M Museum of Fine Art will mark its 25th anniversary with a reception from 1 to 4 p.m. today. The public is invited to attend.

On display, along with works from the museum's collection, will be winning entries from the annual show of the Watercolor Art Society of Houston.

The art works in the Diamond M collection originated from the private collection of the late C.T. and Claire McLaughlin. In the beginning, the collection was in their home in Wichita Falls and later on the Diamond M Ranch southwest of Snyder. On April 4, 1964, the McLaughlins opened the museum in the Diamond M Building at 909 25th St.

The museum collection focuses on the American West and also includes non-American West subject matter executed by renowned artists of the United States and Europe. Included in the collection are 12 paintings by N.C. Wyeth which were created as illustrations for famous books by such authors as Jules Verne, Mark Twain and James Fennimore Cooper.

Frederic Remington and Charles Russell are represented by bronze sculptures.

Contemporary artists whose works are included in the collection include Fried Pal, Emily Guthrie Smith, Joseph Imhof, Dalhart Windberg, Dwight Roberts, Manuel Acosta and George Phippin.

Among the newer artists of the Southwest whose works have been added to the collection are Wayne Baize, George Kovach, Julian Robles, Glenna Goodacre, Harold Maples and Ray Vinella.

Ivory carveds from the Orient, a Dresden china collection, original Currier and Ives prints and wood and soapstone carvings also are on display.

The Diamond M Museum is supported by the Diamond M Foundation. Four seats on the board are held by family members — Mark McLaughlin of San Angelo, Ruth McLaughlin Riddle of Paris, Jean McLaughlin Kahle of Forth Worth and Evelyn McLaughlin Davies of Snyder. Other board members are Jay Huckabee, John Jarrell and Max von Roeder of Snyder.
