Strauss nominated to be ambassador

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush today nominated Robert Strauss of Dallas as ambassador to the Soviet Union and said he was certain the prominent Democrat was the right man to represent the United States in this period of "fantastic change" in Moscow.

Strauss is a former chairman of the Democratic National Committee and international trade representative under President Carter. His relationship with Bush crosses party lines; along with Secretary of State James A. Baker III, Bush and Strauss are Texans and longtime friends.

Bush said he was certain that no one was more talented to make sure that two big ships — the United States and the Soviet Union "don't pass in the night for lack of understanding."

Strauss, 72, had been mentioned midway in the president's two-year search for a replacement for career diplomat Jack Matlock. But he said recently he had turned down the job.

Bush sidestepped a question of whether he would be going to Moscow by the end of June for a summit with Mikhail Gorbachev. He said the administration would be deciding on a timetable in "the next couple of days."

Bush made his surprise appointment as the United States and Soviet Union are driving toward agreement on a treaty to slash long-range nuclear weapons and to forge closer economic ties.

Two die in crash of single engine plane

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

COLORADO CITY — Two Texas men died in the crash of a single-engine airplane about 6 miles east of here during thunderstorms early Monday, authorities said.

Wreckage of the 1977 Cessna 210 was found about 6 p.m. Monday following a day-long search by area law enforcement officials and the Civil Air Patrol, said Mitchell County Sheriff Wendell Bryant.

Killed were pilot Lee Terrell, 24, of Hurst and passenger John William Stokes, 46, of Weatherford. There were no other passengers aboard.

The plane was believed to have encountered bad weather, Sweetwater Highway Patrolman David Wisniewski said. It was en route from Ft. Worth and due in Midland at 7:32 a.m. when it dropped from radar view and lost radio contact about 15 miles southeast of Big Spring, authorities said.

Colorado City is 36 miles east of Big Spring.

"The wreckage was strewn over an area of maybe 200 yards in size or bigger," Bryant said. "There were numerous pieces there that could be seen. The fuselage was still semi-intact. The plane was folded up pretty badly."

Bryant said the bodies of Terrell and Stokes were still in the airplane when it was found after being spotted during an air search by members of the Civil Air Patrol. The bodies were taken to Dallas for an autopsy, he said.

The plane came down in a pasture near a cotton field about 25 yards south of Champion Creek and 1 mile east of Texas 208, Bryant said. The area was flooded with about 3½ inches of rain that came down early Monday, he said.

"It was a muddy mess. To get to the wreck we had to go through a field that was 90 percent under water," he said.

There did not appear to be evidence of a fire and it is unknown if there was an explosion, Bryant said. An investigator from the National Transporation Safety Board is expected to be at the crash site later today.

Bryant said he does not know of any calls for help from the pilot before the crash. "I don't know if the plane was in trouble," he said. "There was no notification of it."

He said his office received a call at about 8 a.m. Monday that the plane was reported missing. "We had been searching on and off all day as time allowed," he said.

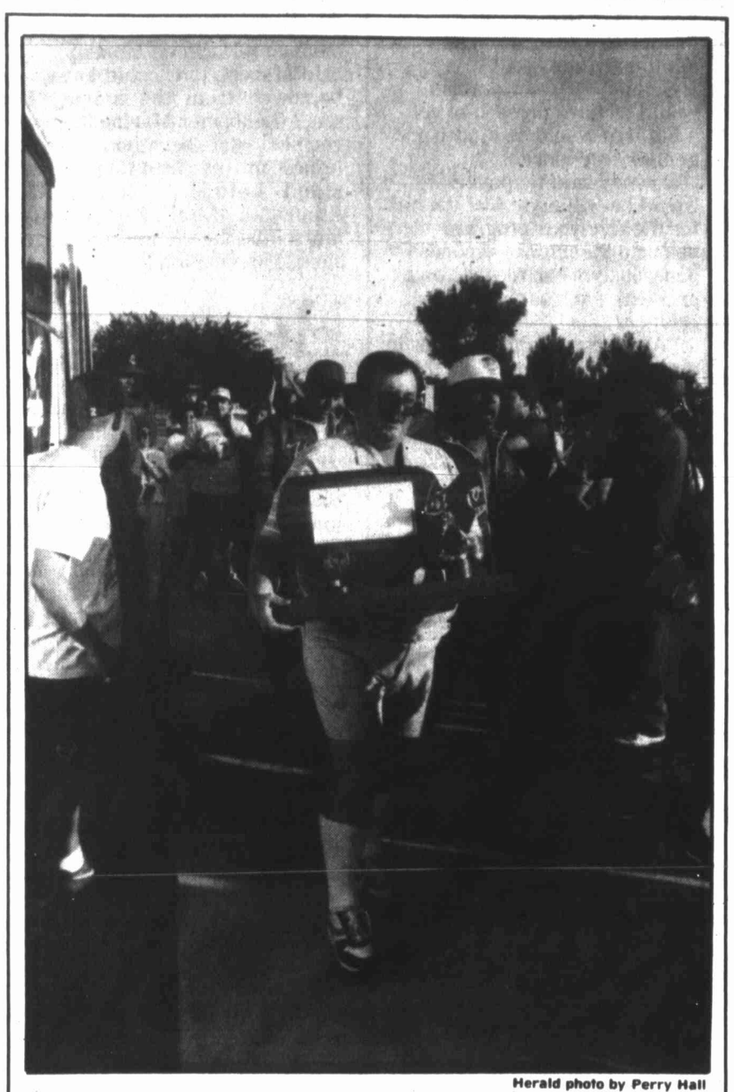

Also assisting in recovery of the plane was the Colorado City Police Department.

Howard College Athletic Trainer Everett Blackburn carries the championship trophy as the Hawks baseball team arrives home Tuesday afternoon. About 200 people greeted the team after it won the Junior College World Series in Grand Junction, Colo.

Hawks get rousing welcome from fans

The Howard College Hawks, fresh from their national junior college baseball championship, received a hero's welcome as the team arrived back in Big Spring Tuesday afternoon.

The Hawks won the national JUCO tournament with a 7-2 victory over Manatee, Fla., Saturday night in Grand Junction, Colo.

A six-car police escort, complete with flashing lights and sirens, preceded the team bus as it wound its way to the college campus. Along the route, small groups of people cheered and held signs congratulating the team on its accomplishment.

But the impromptu parade was only a harbinger for the main event: A raucous pep rally-style barbecue dinner at the college that 200 people attended.

After about 30 minutes of autograph-signing and interviews, the party moved indoors.

College President Bob Riley presented coach Bill Griffin with a resolution from the college board of trustees commending the team for its achievement, and City Manager Hal Boyd presented the team with a key to the city.

Fireman suspended after truck accident

By DEBBIE LINCECUM
Staff Writer

Big Spring firefighter Mark Settles has been suspended for his involvement in a May 25 accident that damaged a firetruck, officials said today.

Other disciplinary actions were taken as well, but Fire Chief Frank Anderson refused to give details.

Settles, 20, who joined the force May 16, was suspended for three 24-hour shifts in connection with the incident, which occurred at the intersection of Birdwell Lane and Fourth Street. Anderson said Settles was warned to slow down at the intersection but did not.

Settles could not immediately be reached for comment.

"I wanted to ensure he received that instruction, and he has told me that he did," Anderson said. "He was told to do something and did not do it."

Anderson said the department in the future will stand by its policy under which rookies may not drive for three months. Since Settles was authorized to drive by a superior, other disciplinary actions were taken in connection with the incident, said Anderson.

"It's nothing that drastic," he said.

Paul Brown, president of the Big Spring Professional Fire Fighters Association, said allowing Settles to drive was a violation of civil service law as well.

"He was told to do something and did not do it."

Frank Anderson

"It's against civil service rules to (advance) more than one rank at a time," Brown said. Settles, ranked as Firefighter I, would have to be promoted through Firefighter II to Driver in order to operate a vehicle during an emergency situation, Brown said.

"He can drive in a training capacity, but this wasn't training," Brown said. Settles and Lt. Robert Muller were en route to a grass fire in west Big Spring when the accident occurred.

Brown said Settles can appeal the suspension under civil service rules.

Anderson said the department will begin using more firefighters on the two shifts that include rookies, although the practice will require overtime pay for off-duty employees.

The department currently has one other rookie firefighter besides Settles. He is Kevin Gehrig.

The truck, a 1984 mini-pumper, was examined by Mondn insurance company representative, but no determination of its condition has been completed, Anderson said.

College: appraisal charges fair

By DEBBIE LINCECUM
Staff Writer

Howard County Junior College District trustees meeting on Monday expressed opposition to a proposed change in the tax appraisal district's charges.

Big Spring and Forsan school districts have petitioned the Howard County Appraisal District to change the system of figuring costs paid by each of eight county taxing entities.

"I was there (in 1982) when we set up (the system)," said board member Don McKinney. "We determined that (the current system) was a fair and equitable way . . . I don't know why they've come up and said it's not fair."

Currently, each entity pays a percentage of its total tax levy to fund the district's $400,000 annual budget.

School district officials want those costs based half on the total tax levy and half on the number of parcels — pieces of appraised property — in each district. The change would cost Howard College $38,126 in additional charges each year, but Coahoma, Forsan and Big Spring school districts would pay less.

Trustees were unanimously opposed to the proposal, as school district and appraisal district officials had predicted.

"It's not that we're uncooperative at all," said college President Bob Riley. "I think this board is within their bounds to leave things the way they are. This is the way we've budgeted and operated over the years."

A change in the appraisal cost system must be submitted to all taxing entities for approval between June 15 and Aug. 15. If opposed by the college in a formal resolution, the proposal will not pass.

Tax Appraiser Keith Toomire said the appraisal district's board of directors would meet June 12 to discuss the issue.

In other business, the board:

- Accepted a retirement plan for part-time, seasonal and temporary employees, as required by federal law. The employees will contribute 7.5 percent of their salaries to purchase tax shelter annuities that may be withdrawn later according to specific guidelines.
- Installed athletic trainer Everett Blackburn as a full-time employee. Blackburn, aside from his duties as trainer, will teach a course in sports medicine beginning this fall.
- Accepted the annual small class and enrollment reports, as required by state law. The reports include total enrollment for both fall 1990 and spring 1991 semesters, as well as a list of classes that contained less than 10 students.
- Agreed to the sale of delinquent tax property in Coahoma.
- Hired Lawrence Borchers as a counselor for the district's San Angelo campus.
- Accepted a bid from ATC Long Distance of Big Spring to become long-distance carrier for 12.5 cents per minute charge.
- Agreed to postpone its regular June meeting (June 24) until July and discussed the possibility of a special meeting to consider state finances.

Hawks victory expected to boost college

By DEBBIE LINCECUM
Staff Writer

Publicity surrounding the Hawks' national baseball championship should give a boost to both Howard College and the city of Big Spring, college officials say.

College President Bob Riley said "success factors" like the championship indicate to potential students that Howard College would support them.

"They should have the understanding that a college that would put the effort into having a national championship in baseball would give the same drive to have other outstanding programs," Riley said.

Cheri Sparks, vice president for institutional advancement, said students ideally should choose a school based on academics, but many will place emphasis on the full program, including athletics.

"It's all part of what a school has to offer," she said.

Riley said a national television broadcast into an estimated 8 million homes can only help Howard's recruiting. He said leaders have already been thinking of ways to capitalize on the national championship for advertising and publicity purposes.

Congressman says family act needed

AUSTIN (AP) — An $11 billion nationwide plan to help struggling familes and protect children from abuse would require new revenue, but the funding hasn't been worked out yet, congressional supporters said.

The bill's author, Tom Downey, D-New York, said Monday the Family Preservation Act of 1991 is needed to make up for what he called the "decade of neglect" during former President Reagan's administration.

He added, "George Bush would be hard pressed to veto a bill that would be kinder and gentler to children."

Downey said taxpayers would be willing to foot the bill for the five-year program because the nation responds generously when focused on a problem, such as the Kurdish refugees.

"America's children suffer in many the same ways" as those refugees, Downey said, but added that the crisis is not as visible because abused children are scattered throughout the country.

Lake group drops further concessions

WACO (AP) — Representatives of cities that recently won permission for construction of a lake on the North Bosque River decided against pursuing with the Texas Water Commission other concessions they had sought.

In their first meeting since the agency reluctantly granted a permit last month to build Lake Bosque, the representatives said Monday they'd prefer to avoid further hearings.

Both sides have 20 days after the May 22 permit date to ask the commission to reconsider any part of the final order.

Lake Bosque would be a 5,000-acre reservoir on the North Bosque River about 5 miles northwest of Meridian. Participants in the lake include Meridian, Clifton, Waco, Woodway, Hewitt, Bellmead, Lacy-Lakeview and the water district that includes Elm Mott.

BRA officials said they will update the lake's estimated $44.5 million cost after they get a better idea of what legal action opponents might use to slow down the project. An attorney representing foes of the lake said he will ask the TWC to reconsider.

Southern Baptists give hero's welcome to North

ATLANTA (AP) — Thousands of Southern Baptists waved American flags and sang "Yankee Doodle Dandy" in a patriotic salute to Oliver North, who urged them to battle a "Sodom and Gomorrah" in the nation's capital.

"To some, he's controversial. But to the vast majority of us, he's an American patriot," the Rev. Richard Lee, president of the Southern Baptist Convention's Pastors Conference, said in introducing North on Monday.

In a scene that could have been borrowed from the movie "Patton," the former Marine lieutenant colonel who became a central figure in the Iran-Contra affair stood before a 40-by-60-foot American flag. He portrayed himself as the victim of a congressional "inquisition."

He urged the crowd of more than 15,000 Southern Baptists to become more politically active to counter "a veritable Sodom and Gomorrah on the banks of the Potomac."

Only a handful of people protested. "To me, his coming supports the merger of Christian faith and politics, which is idolatry," said Jerry Gentry of Decatur, Ga.

But North's speech to the pastors conference was only a preview of the patriotic tenor of this year's convention, which opens today. "Call to Prayer for Spiritual Awakening in America" is the theme for a Wednesday revival and President Bush is to speak Thursday.

Les Roberts, a director of missions from Phoenix who handed out flags before North's talk, said the denomination is riding a wave of patriotism from the nation's success in the Persian Gulf War.

"Southern Baptists are tremendously patriotic. They always have been. There is a commitment to country and to God," Roberts said. "I think Oliver North represents a commitment to God."

The convention also is the first one since 1979 in which the denomination's so-called moderate faction is not expected to pose a challenge to the fundamentalist majority.

Thousands of moderates last month formed their own group, the Cooperative Baptist Fellowship, and announced plans to bypass the convention.

Also Monday, Harold C. Bennett, the denomination's chief throughout the fundamentalist-moderate conflict, announced that he would retire in October 1992.

"I'll be 68 by that time. It's time to retire," he said.

A medley of patriotic songs from "Yankee Doodle Dandy" to "God Bless America" were sung in the Georgia World Congress Center before North was introduced as an "American patriot."

North spent a week in 1987 telling Congress in televised hearings about his efforts to sell arms to Iran in exchange for American hostages and to use the profits to help the Nicaraguan Contras.

Hearing to focus on property tax system

AUSTIN (AP) — The countywide property tax districts created by the state's new school finance law will be the focus of a court hearing that starts in two weeks, said lawyers who met with the judge overseeing the case.

Wealthy school districts have challenged the law, which is designed to shift hundreds of millions of dollars in local property tax revenue from wealthier to poorer school districts within the new education taxing districts, drawn largely along county lines.

"The issue that's going to be tried is the issue of the ad valorem (property) tax system as used in the statute, and whether that's constitutional or not," said Al Kauffman of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, representing a group of poor school districts.

"That seems to be the guts of the issue that will be before the court," he said Monday.

The new law sets a minimum property tax for the countywide taxing regions to levy for public education.

The school districts also may tax more without sharing the revenue. The state will make up the difference, up to a certain level, if poor school districts cannot raise enough money through local taxes alone.

State District Judge F. Scott McCown has scheduled a hearing in the case to begin June 17.

The hearing should last about a week, said lawyers representing the state and wealthy and poor school districts.

School districts with high property wealth say the new law sets up an unconstitutional state property tax, and that it wrongly shifts funds from one school district to another.

The state will argue that the county education taxing districts are constitutional, said Gray McBride, a spokesman for Attorney General Dan Morales.

Kauffman said McCown will decide whether to consider if the state may constitutionally rely so heavily on local property taxes to support public schools. State money and some federal funds also go into public schools.

Some wealthy school districts say the funding system depends too much on local property taxes, and that it is not adequately financed.

If McCown looks at whether the state puts enough money into the school finance system, that would take another hearing, Kauffman said.

The state contends that the Legislature has the authority to determine the financial structure for public education, McBride said.

Kevin O'Hanlon, Texas Education Agency general counsel, said, "Basically, what we're telling McCown in blunt terms is if they (wealthy school districts) are right, they're asking the court to impose an income tax ... If you can't use the ad valorem tax, there's only one game in town."

Perry touts Texas plan

AUSTIN (AP) — A 12-city tour continued today as Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry touted a drive toward in-state processing of state-grown crops and livestock.

"You'd give an A-plus to production agricultural, but you'd barely give a passing grade on our processing of agricultural products in the state of Texas," Perry said Monday at a news conference in Austin.

Perry launched the "Make it Texas" program designed to lure investors to build tanneries, fiber mills, packing facilities and processing plants.

"We can brag that we produce more cotton, cattle, goats, wool and mohair than any other state," Perry said. "But the bragging stops when it comes to processing those products and reaping the resulting profits."

After Austin, Perry planned visits to Houston, San Antonio, Fort Worth, Dallas, Tyler, San Angelo, Abilene, Lubbock, Amarillo, Waco and Mission.

Although Texas' $11 billion per year in agricultural sales leads the nation in the production of several commodities, only eight percent of those products are processed in Texas, he said.

The department has produced a seven-minute video to spread the message of Texas agriculture and labor to seminars and conventions throughout the world.

NASA prepares jellyfish to load onto Columbia

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A fresh batch of 2,478 tiny jellyfish was counted, rinsed and ready to load onto space shuttle Columbia today for NASA's third attempt to launch the biomedical research mission.

Columbia is scheduled to blast off at 8 a.m. EDT Wednesday with the jellyfish as well as 30 white rats and seven astronauts. The first two tries were thwarted by equipment trouble.

NASA test director Mike Leinbach said the latest countdown, which began Monday, was going well. Technicians loaded 20 of the rats this morning. The other rats and all the jellyfish were to go in this afternoon.

The countdown was halted less than an hour before scheduled liftoff Saturday because of a faulty navigational unit.

Bad fuel temperature sensors and computer components stopped the first countdown on May 21, a day before the scheduled liftoff.

Dorothy Spangenberg, a biologist from Eastern Virginia Medical School in Norfolk, Va., who's in charge of the jellyfish, said the delays were frustrating but not surprising.

"We know this is a complicated operation, so we just planned for that," she said. "We're in for the long haul, if necessary."

Spangenberg needs 2,478 new jellyfish, at just the right stage of development, for every launch attempt.

As of Monday, Spangenberg had rinsed her new spacebound creatures five times — she wants them "super clean." She also counted them twice "to be sure we have the exact number."

She and her team planned one more rinse and one more count today before putting the jellyfish in water-filled plastic bottles and bags for flight.

During the nine-day mission 184 miles above Earth, the astronauts will videotape the behavior of the jellyfish. Iodine will be added to the water of some jellyfish to induce development.

The jellyfish and the rats will be examined after Columbia returns to Earth so scientists can better understand how the weightlessness of space affects living things.

Most of the mission's experiments involve Columbia's human crew. Three doctors and one cell biologist will draw blood from one another and monitor each other's hearts, blood pressure and lung and kidney function in orbit.

Cardiologist F. Andrew Gaffney has had a catheter threaded from his arm to a large blood vessel above his heart since Friday. Doctors decided to leave it in place until Wednesday's launch attempt.

Gaffney will be the first person to fly in space with a catheter. He will remove the plastic tube with help from the other physicians about eight hours into the flight following blood pressure checks.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is particularly interested in space motion sickness, a medical mystery.

Young pilot likes planes, video games — not girls

KILL DEVIL HILLS, N.C. (AP) — Daniel Shanklin, the Texas schoolboy who appears to be the youngest pilot to fly across the United States, is a typical second-grader.

He likes airplanes. He doesn't like girls. He doesn't really like news conferences, but puts up with them. He likes video games.

Why doesn't he like girls?

"Because they're always slapping me. Ugh," the little pilot said Monday as he flew toward First Flight Airstrip, where he bounced to a landing and a place in unofficial aviation history.

During the flight from Raleigh-Durham International Airport to the coast, Daniel pretended to zoom faster than the 122 mph his Cessna 172 was flying. He also made bullet noises, "fffppptt" noises, clucking noises, whistled and once hit his instructor on the head.

Daniel peppered instructor Stuart Moon with questions: "How does a helicopter fly? What's a Loran? Where's that TV helicopter? Is that the airstrip we're going to? It looks small."

"He's a little squirrely with all the excitement," Moon said.

"Video games. That's what I like," Daniel said. "Next time we'll stop at a Stop 'N Go with a quarter and play video games."

Daniel told reporters waiting for him that they all asked the same questions, but that his grandfather coached him on answering them. Still, Daniel stuck to one-word answers much of the time.

The flight started about 10 a.m., when Daniel and Moon, sat at the end of a runway going through the final preflight checklist. Then Daniel pulled the throttle out and held the brakes, letting the single-engine aircraft vibrate as they checked instruments.

Daniel landed at the airstrip adjacent to the Wright Brothers Memorial about noon, bouncing twice after touching the airstrip.

"That was the worst landing I've ever had and I wanted it to be the best," Daniel said as Moon gave him instructions for getting the aircraft under control.

"I'm glad I'm finished," the boy said, exchanging high-five hand slaps with Moon in the cockpit as they taxied to a stop. The flight began May 26 in San Diego, Calif.

About 300 schoolchildren from elementary schools in nearby Kitty Hawk and Manteo cheered as the youth flew over before landing. Moon, 30, of San Antonio, Texas, said his pupil's rough landing may have been caused by a cross wind blowing off the Atlantic Ocean, less than a mile away.

Daniel received tee shirts and commemorative pins from local merchants and a birthday cake in the shape of an airplane. Daniel's eighth birthday is today, and the children serenaded Daniel with "Happy Birthday."

The boy's grandfather Dr. Ken Shanklin, 59, a plastic surgeon from Fresno, Calif., said he believed the flight was a record for youngest pilot to fly coast to coast.

Darman tries to save space station

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House Budget Director Richard Darman urged Congress today to reverse a decision by a House committee to kill the planned space station, warning that the United States risks abandoning its role as a world leader.

Darman's plea to the House Science, Space and Technology Committee came a day after the Bush administration threatened a veto showdown with Congress over a bill terminating the space station and transferring much of the money to environmental, housing and other domestic programs.

"America is the world's number one politico-economic power, an inspiring beacon of hope," Darman told the lawmakers. "America will not preserve its position — or fulfill its historic responsibility — with shortsighted votes of retreat."

On Monday, the House Appropriations Committee voted to provide none of the $2 billion President Bush requested for next year to build the Earth-orbiting, manned station Freedom. Instead, the panel provided just $100 million to study less expensive alternatives.

In response, Bush sent Darman and NASA chief Richard Truly to the science committee to make the administration's case for the full $2 billion.

The money was part of an $80.9 billion measure for space, housing, veterans and environmental programs for fiscal 1992.

Handicapped car tags discussed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A New Jersey congressman is trying to make parking a little bit easier for handicapped people driving away from home.

Democratic Rep. Robert G. Torricelli wants all states to recognize out-of-state handicapped license plates.

His concern stems from two incidents involving a constituent, Harry Katz of Fort Lee, N.J., who has two artificial hips. In the first incident, Katz visited friends in Brooklyn, N.Y., and parked in a handicapped spot, only to find a parking ticket on his car when he returned.

When he drove to a doctor's appointment in Manhattan on another day, he parked at a metered spot, believing he could remain there up to 24 hours with handicapped tags, just as New Jersey allows.

In both cases, the officers writing the tickets didn't believe New Jersey handicapped plates were valid in New York.

Torricelli on Monday introduced legislation that would strengthen what Congress enacted back in 1988 when it authorized the Transportation Department to come up with guidelines for a universal handicapped parking system.

The guidelines, which took effect March 11, carry no penalties.

Security tight for mail bomb trail

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Extra officers were called in and metal detectors set up at the courthouse for the trial of a Georgia man accused of using mail bombs to kill a judge and a civil rights lawyer.

The trial of Walter Leroy Moody Jr. was to begin today with jury selection, followed by opening arguments.

"This is considered a high-risk trial," U.S. Marshal Tony Bennett said. "We're being very tight because of the nature of somebody using a bomb."

He said metal detectors were placed at every entrance to the federal courthouse.

Moody, a self-employed literary consultant, is accused of making and mailing pipe bombs that killed U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Robert S. Vance in Mountain Brook, Ala., and attorney Robert E. Robinson, a Savannah, Ga., alderman and civil rights lawyer. They were killed in December 1989.

WALTER LEROY MOODY JR.

The 72-count indictment also accuses Moody of mailing bombs to the Jacksonville, Fla., offices of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Atlanta offices of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Two cities waging war of parades

NEW YORK (AP) — Long before war broke out in the Persian Gulf, the two rivals regarded each other with contempt, suspicion and jealousy. Now that the war is over, New York and Washington are openly fighting over who's best at celebrating the peace.

New York's June 10 Desert Storm parade is three hours longer, but Washington's is two days earlier. Washington has a stealth bomber, but New York has 6,000 tons of confetti. They both have Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, but he isn't exactly scarce these days.

Even though the two parades will figuratively cover much of the same ground, each city insists its gala will be the gala.

Hostilities flared after Harry N. Walters, president of the foundation behind the D.C. bash, denigrated the New York event as "a community parade" instead of a parade dedicated to soldiers, and suggested cynical New Yorkers would stay away in bunches.

The animosity spread to the families Grucci and Zambelli, who will do fireworks shows in New York and Washington, respectively. Behaving like the Hatfields and the McCoys, the short-fused pyrotechnicians blasted one another over the quality of their shows.

DUARTE, Calif. — Leukemia victim Anissa Ayala, now 19, holds her newborn sister Marissa who was conceived in the hope she would have compatible bone marrow to donate to her big sister. Anissa was to receive bone marrow today from her now 13-month old baby sister.

Patient to receive marrow from sister

DUARTE, Calif. (AP) — Anissa Ayala was to receive bone marrow today from her baby sister, who was conceived in the hope she could save 19-year-old Anissa from leukemia.

Abe and Mary Ayala of Walnut were the first couple to publicly admit they conceived their child, Marissa, now 13 months old, in hopes of finding a compatible donor for their older daughter.

Doctors at the City of Hope National Medical Center said they timed the operation to give Marissa time to grow while also considering the progression of Anissa's cancer.

Anissa was diagnosed four years ago with chronic myelogenous leukemia, which kills 80 to 90 percent of its victims within five years if they don't get bone marrow transplants.

In the procedure, a long needle is used to extract marrow from an anesthetized donor's hip bone. It is delivered intravenously into the recipient's bloodstream, from which it travels to bones and grows there.

The procedure is virtually risk-free for Marissa. But Anissa, who had radiation and chemotherapy to destroy all of her cancerous bone marrow, could reject her sister's marrow, get an infection or develop transplant pneumonia.

The case was widely publicized when the couple announced their intention to have a child to be a donor after a nationwide search for a donor failed.

The couple's approach was considered unique, but the sponsors of a recent survey say they found at least 40 other cases and other transplant doctors say that may be only a fraction of the actual number.

Abe Ayala had a vasectomy reversed and Mary Ayala was 42 when she conceived. There was only a one in four chance that the baby would have compatible tissue.

Mrs. Ayala had amniocentesis while she was pregnant with Marissa but says she would not have aborted had the tissue been incompatible.

The testing was to determine whether to save blood cells from the baby's umbilical cord. Those cells were frozen and will be transplanted along with the marrow.

Dr. Stephen Forman, head of the center's marrow transplant unit, said 72 percent of City of Hope patients who have received transplants for Anissa's type of leukemia are doing well.

Dr. Arthur Caplan and Dr. Warren Kearney of the Center of Bioethics at the University of Minnesota last fall surveyed 15 out of the nation's 27 bone marrow transplant centers, including the 10 largest ones, asking doctors whether they knew of similar cases.

They were told of at least 40, Caplan said. "In none of the cases has there been public acknowledgment," he said.

Dr. Patrick Beatty, a bone marrow transplant specialist at the University of Utah, said the survey might have uncovered just a fraction of the cases.

"Most of the time patients don't say 'Dr. Beatty, should we have another baby to try to have a match?' Instead, the women just show up pregnant and the doctors do not ask why," Beatty said.

Pope urges support of abortion ban

RADOM, Poland (AP) — Pope John Paul II pressed his anti-abortion campaign today before tens of thousands of countrymen, telling them their parliament has no moral right to maintain the liberal abortion law adopted by the Communists.

Although he spoke in a soft, measured tone, it was the pontiff's strongest statement on abortion of his fourth pilgrimage to his homeland, where parliament has been considering a church-backed bill to criminalize abortion.

A decisive vote on the measure was put off until after the papal visit.

"What human institution, what parliament, has the right to legalize the killing of an innocent and defenseless human being?" the pope told the gathering at a military air field in this city.

The crowd listened silently and there was polite applause.

"What parliament has the right to say, 'You are free to kill," or even, 'Killing is in order,' where the biggest efforts should be made to protect and help life in the first place?"

Poland currently allows abortions almost without limits.

John Paul based his homily on the Fifth Commandment, "Thou shalt not kill."

He urged followers to "help your neighbors accept with joy their child who — speaking in human terms — has arrived, shall we say, at the wrong moment."

Volcano turns back rescue workers

SHIMABARA, Japan (AP) — Soldiers in firefighting gear ventured today into the shadow of a suddenly ferocious volcano, recovering four bodies and sighting 24 more before being turned back by Mount Unzen's searing gas, ash and rock.

At least 31 people, including three researchers and 16 journalists, were reported missing following Monday's first serious eruptions of the 4,485-foot volcano in southern Japan.

The deaths were the first from a volcanic eruption in Japan since 1962.

People with severe burns and their clothes in shreds were taken to nearby hospitals after the volcano began sending torrents of molten ash, gas and rock down a valley in a fast-moving flow that is the most destructive known.

The liquid fire set dozens of homes ablaze in the mountainside town of Kamikoba, from which authorities evacuated about 5,000 people, scorching everything in its path.

Officials said 20 people were injured, 15 of them seriously burned.

Much of what Mount Unzen was spewing is known as pyroclastic flow, or glowing avalanche.

Much faster than any lava stream, a glowing avalanche can move dozens of miles per hour and consists of a superheated, fluidlike emulsion of volcanic ash, gas and rock fragments.

Police assure quiet anniversary

BEIJING (AP) — With a few subtle, anonymous gestures in a capital swarming with armed police and camera-carrying security officers, Chinese today remembered the army killings of pro-democracy protesters two years ago.

No disturbances were reported and official scrutiny was most evident around Beijing's university district and central Tiananmen Square, which student-led protesters had occupied for several weeks before the 1989 crackdown.

But early today, a few dozen white paper flowers were scattered on a sidewalk and quickly snatched up by passersby who could not mistake the significance. White is the color of mourning.

Empty beer bottles were smashed from university dormitories in another unmistakable gesture. The word for little bottle, "xiao ping," sounds like the name of senior leader Deng Xiaoping, who is believed to have ordered the army to open fire on demonstrators in Beijing streets on June 4, 1989.

Ethopian ammo dump explodes

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — An ammunition dump blew up in a series of thunderous explosions in a heavily populated area early today, sending a huge fireball across the capital's southeast side. The interim government blamed it on sabotage.

By midmorning, officials said 31 people had been hospitalized and one person was known dead. The death toll was expected to rise.

"I saw two bodies that had obviously been decapitated by shrapnel," said Norbert Schiller, a photographer for The Associated Press. "The devastation is incredible."

The explosion occurred one week after a cease-fire was declared in Ethiopia's long civil war and a rebel group that took over the capital struggled to maintain control in Addis Ababa.

Several square blocks were flattened and fires and explosions spread for blocks. Thousands of people were seen fleeing the area, a neighborhood of small factories and flimsy wood-and-mud homes about a mile from the central Revolutionary Square.

"We still haven't been able to get into the center of the area. It's still burning too hot," said Dr. Tebebe Yemane Berehan, chairman of the Addis Ababa Red Cross.

Dean warns against sexual harassment

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — The dean of Stanford University's Medical School warned male professors not to treat female colleagues as sex objects after the school's top female surgeon quit over alleged sexual harassment.

"This medical school will not tolerate inappropriate sexual behavior," Dean David Korn said at a news conference Monday, three days after Dr. Frances Conley announced her resignation.

"I think we have a lot of work to do to take the stereotypical behavior out of the profession and the community," Korn said, adding that changing attitudes in the male-dominated medical profession could take time.

Conley, a 50-year-old brain surgeon, resigned effective Sept. 1 from her tenured professorship after 25 years at the medical school where she became one of the nation's first female neurosurgeons.

She said some male colleagues called her "honey" in the operating room and some fondled her legs under the table or made demeaning or sexual comments.

"Male faculty members are in this time warp. They believe in male superiority and female subservience," Conley said.

"The only reason I put up for it as long as I did is I really wanted to advance," she said. "You put up with a lot to try and be one of the crowd. I feel very guilty for having put up with it."

DR. FRANCES CONLEY

Conley said she was "jolted" by a meeting last week before the medical school's faculty Senate, of which she was chairwoman for two years.

Students presented allegations of subtle harassment and inappropriate comments and behavior by professors, including one alleged incident in which slides of Playboy centerfolds were used to "spice up" lectures.

"I suddenly realized that things had not changed much," she said. "I had not realized how pervasive the sexism was. I couldn't brush it off. I couldn't pretend to be one of the boys any longer."

Korn said that only two specific complaints of sexual harassment have been filed at the medical school in the seven years he has been dean; one was prosecuted, the other is pending.

Charlotte Jacobs, a dean of education and student affairs, said she was shocked at Conley's resignation, but she was aware of complaints from students about "the sexual insensitivity of some professors."

About 15 percent of the Stanford Medical School staff is female, compared with a national medical school average of about 25 percent, the school said.

Dr. Lucy Shapiro, who came to Stanford from Columbia Medical School two years ago, said sexual harassment is a problem at all medical schools.

"Stanford is no better nor worse than other schools," said Shapiro, who added she hasn't felt harassed at Stanford.

"I think Frances Conley has done a courageous thing in exposing it. I hope she decides not to leave, though. I think you can be much more effective fighting these old attitudes from inside rather than from the outside."

Grant favored status one year

President Bush was booed over the weekend for recommending renewal of trading privileges for China. The graduation audience at Yale University, Bush's alma mater, didn't like the idea of rewarding a nation that for two years has made a mockery of human rights.

Human rights isn't the only problem the United States has with China. Beijing has used its Most-Favored-Nation trade status to build a trade surplus with the United States — $10.4 billion last year and growing. And it has refused to follow reasonable guidelines on the export of missiles and other sophisticated weapons to hot spots, like the Persian Gulf.

Since the mission to Beijing earlier this month of State Department Undersecretary Robert Kimmitt, there is evidence that China is getting the message. On balance, we think Bush is right: The best way to continue the positive trend is to renew China's Most-Favored-Nation status for one year only.

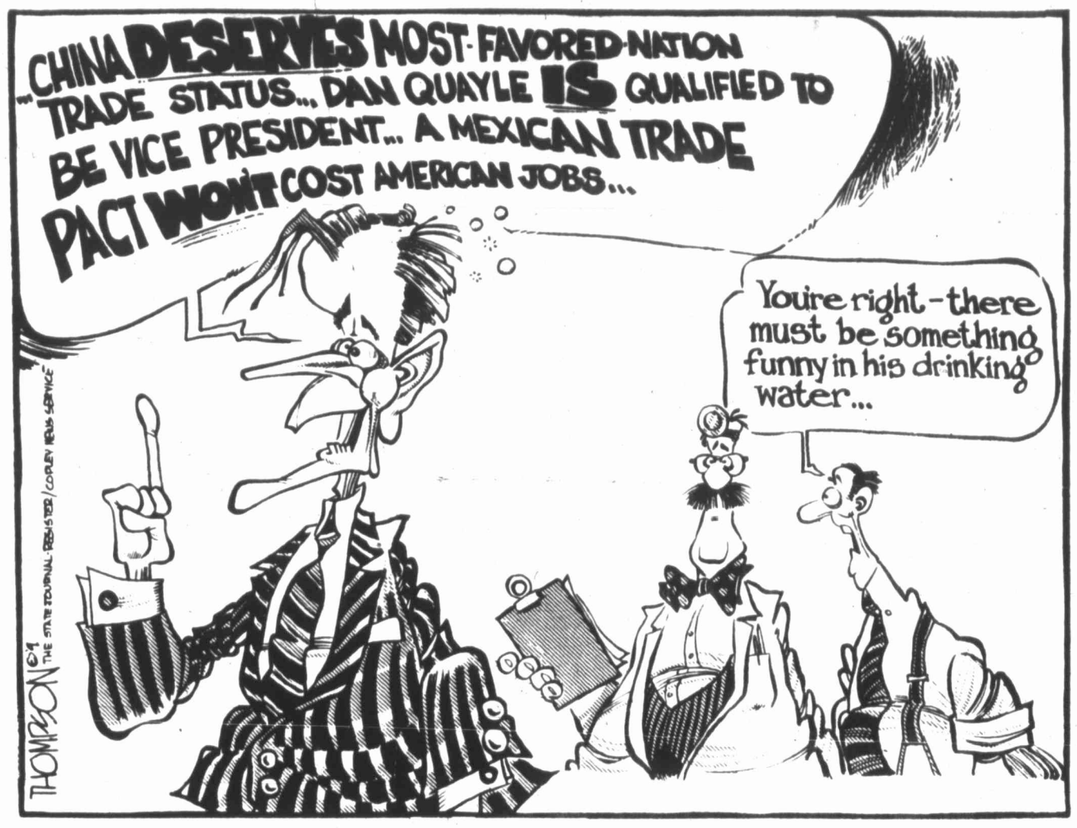

China was hurt badly by economic sanctions imposed following its crushing of the democracy movement two years ago. Foreign credits dried up, tourism fell off, development projects were delayed or canceled. China's leaders learned about the economic costs of reckless political behavior. China no longer is isolated from the world, either politically or economically.

China needs to do more. To grant China, which still jails dissidents and denies emigration, Most-Favored-Nation status while denying it to the Soviet Union is illogical. The solution is to grant it to the Soviet Union, while making China's status contingent on progress in the three sensitive areas — human rights, trade and arms exports.

Congress will try to block Bush's policy, but will need a two-thirds vote to disapprove of Bush's Most-Favored-Nation extension. Any member of Congress who votes to disapprove will be arguing that the best way to influence Beijing is to punish China.

California's delegation should support Bush. Let's follow the trends for one more year: Will Beijing show leniency toward political prisoners, will it show restraint in its arms exports, will it open up to imports to the United States?

Logic, experience, common sense and empirical evidence all suggest we'll see more progress in these areas by using the carrot than by using the stick.

Matter of choice in burgers

A group of us were having a cookout in K.K. Bigelow's back yard. The guests were equally divided between those who believed that they should have a choice about how their hamburgers were cooked, and those who maintained that there was only one way to cook them.

When Bigelow, a pro-choice lawyer, asked everyone whether they wanted them rare, medium or well done, Keith Fulk, an anti-choice advocate, declared that Bigelow had no right to tell his guests what kind of grilled hamburgers were available.

Bigelow retorted, "I can too, as long as there is no government money involved. When it comes to meat, many people need guidance about what's cooking. I'm not just talking about hamburger — I'm talking about mustard, relish and sliced onions. Each burger must be treated as an individual problem."

Dave Miller, a vegetarian lawyer (almost everyone who shows up at a cookout in Washington is a lawyer), took exception to Bigelow's response.

"Everything in this town involves federal money. That chopped steak was U.S. government inspected. Therefore, a citizen cannot advise another on how to eat it."

"Says who?"

Waldorf answered, "The Supreme Court. If you recall, in MacDonald's v. Burger Chef, MacDonald's planned to open a free hamburger advisory service for members of the public who couldn't make up their minds.

Burger Chef objected saying that such a service would require tax dollars and, since it was aimed at teen-agers, would be unfair competition.

"The Court ruled in favor of Burger Chef by five to four, with Justice Souter casting the swing vote."

Pro-choice advocate Virginia Newhouse said bitterly, "With Souter on the bench, we'll never have freedom of choice at a cookout again."

"Why did Souter vote for the other side?"

"Because he's not married — and everyone knows he hates cookouts," David Turner, another lawyer explained.

S. David Brookes said, "Then let's get him married. If he's married, he won't have time to spend on so many stupid Supreme Court decisions."

Bigelow added, "Maybe his wife would beat some sense into him."

Teitelbaum, who was also a "guess-what," laughed, "You can't force a Supreme Court Justice to marry if he doesn't want to."

Bigelow disagreed, "You can if you're a friend of the court."

"As I see it," Newhouse said, "the pro-choice people have to take a stand. If we don't raise our voices now, then freedom of speech has had it. Heaven knows where the Supreme Court will go next."

"What are you trying to say?"

"They could soon rule that we can't ask for guidance concerning what topping we're allowed to have on our pizzas," Newhouse told the group.

"They would be right," said anti-choice guest Bill Reinbeck. "Everyone knows that the only good topping for pizza is pepperoni."

Dining on bean curd and kelp

By EUNICE CHOATE
For the Herald

My word

The closest I ever came to starving to death was in Shimada, Japan in 1975. Shimada is a beach resort area located south of Tokyo. A group of five American military families went down to spend a weekend and soak up some Japanese culture; most of which consists of Sumo Tournaments, two-day tea ceremonies, and raw fish.

We formed a convoy at the gate of Yakota Air Force Base one Friday morning at four o'clock. We intended to take the Beach Road for the scenic beauty and wanted to get a head start on the traffic. It caught up with us at about 4:15. For the next three and a half hours we crept up one side of a mountain road that overlooked the beach below. The trip down was the same, and we were seven hours on the road to travel eighty miles.

Bumper to bumper traffic is very Japanese. We knew that, and were all in good spirits when we pulled over at a Mom and Papa-san store at the top of the mountain. The men gassed up the cars, the kids ran for the Coke machines, and I used up one of the four Japanese phrases I knew.

"Benjo, doka-desika?" I asked the lady behind the counter, and she pointed me to a small shed that was hanging from the outside wall of the store.

It was my first encounter with restroom facilities in a rural area. There was no light. I held the door open and looked around. I was standing on a dirt floor. In the center of the room rested a ten-by-fourteen inch aluminum tray whose top was flush with the floor. It sat in a hole dug out beneath it. The idea was — I was supposed to put a foot to either side of it and bend gracefully at both knees. Well, folks, I can't squat. When I try, I tilt slowly backwards and list to the left.

I sighed and started back to the car. Everyone else was coming out of the store with little bags of snacks to munch while inching down the mountain toward Shimada. "You should have gone before you left," said a real smart-aleck who had already learned about rural benjoes.

We got to the inn about lunchtime and went to put on bathing suits and meet at the beach for a picnic. The Japanese are big on clean, but shy on space. Our room was the size of a nice throw rug, and bare, except for the futons in the closet that we would unroll on the floor to sleep on that night. We left our bags and headed for the beach with our cooler to eat the lunch we had brought. It was the last good meal I had until late Sunday night.

Late in the afternoon we went back to get ready for dinner at the inn — hungry as bears from all the frolicking in the sand, and the appetite-whetting sea air. We rinsed off with a hose outside, dressed, and went to the dining room.

My husband, our teenagers Mark and Linda, and I made 21 at the table. If we hadn't left our shoes at the door, we couldn't have gotten in. The room was long and narrow and so was the table. Its top was about eight inches off the floor. By the time we had all knelt on our knees around it, our backs were to the wall, and the only way to serve us was to pass all the food from the end of the table nearest the kitchen, hand over fist, until each dish made its slow way around the room.

I passed without taking: raw fish, raw eel, raw squid, and sea kelp. When the dishes began to slow down, in desperation, I helped myself to some seaweed, pickled eggs, and bean curd. Seaweed tastes like it sounds. The pickled eggs were sulphuric, and the bean curd was a great deal like the art-gum erasers I used to chew on in grade school.

Back in our room, we scrounged around in the crushed-up picnic sacks for pop-tarts and stray potato chips, then stretched out on our futons to wait for breakfast.

Some of the teenagers skipped breakfast and went scavenging for food in a nearby village. That left room at the table for me to stretch my legs underneath it and poke my feet up on the other side. The little Japanese waitress found my size nines so funny she could hardly pass the tiny bowls of steamed rice with the water thin orange slice on top.

At our last pot-luck picnic on the beach we had Vienna sausage, bananas from the village, and bags of sunflower seeds.

Mark climbed the cliff (that rose from the sand forty feet high) and picked tiger lilies for each of the women. They put them behind their ears. I clutched mine in my hand and took a nap — with an eye toward eating it when I woke up.

Hard haggling will be over definitions in Mideast arms control

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the effort to curb the Middle East arms bazaar, the hard haggling will come when competing weapons salesmen and ancient enemies set about defining a deceptively simple word: need.

President Bush said his plan for Middle East arms control is aimed at halting the weapons buildup "while supporting the legitimate need of every state to defend itself . . . "

Translate that into a formula, and the rest will be easy. But in arms control, as Bush said, nothing ever is.

Indeed, the question of how much defense is enough to meet national needs is central to a permanent political debate about U.S. priorities. The answer depends on the judge; in the Air Force Academy speech that outlined his arms control plan, Bush said he'll veto the defense budget if Congress tries to cut too much from strategic weapons spending he deems essential.

The Bush plan stresses curbs on the spread of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons in the Middle East, aimed ultimately at making it a nuclear weapon-free zone.

"We are committed to stopping the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction," the president said. But even on that point, defining terms can be troublesome. The Israeli government said the potential for mass destruction lies in enormous arsenals of conventional weapons in other Middle Eastern countries.

Outnumbered by the troops, tanks, artillery and other weaponry of Arab states, Israel wants curbs on those conventional weapons. Since Israel is believed to have nuclear arms, other Middle Eastern nations seek controls on non-conventional weapons of mass destruction.

Bush had promised to come up with a Middle East weapons control plan in his March 6 victory speech after the Persian Gulf War, but there were congressional complaints that he wasn't moving fast enough and wasn't pushing to curb conventional weapons.

That led to Democratic calls for a moratorium on U.S. arms sales pending negotiations for international curbs. The Canadian and French governments proposed Middle East curbs.

Now Bush has reclaimed the issue. A House Democrat who had been critical of the delay said Bush had restored the momentum for arms control. The president proposed a conference of senior officials of the big five arms sellers — the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council.

The Soviet Union tops the list of arms sellers, the United States is second, followed by France, Great Britain and China.

Among them, they've supplied nearly 90 percent of the conventional arms flow into the Middle East over the last decade.

There's a certain irony in the dual roles. "The fact is most of the hardware that Saddam Hussein had in his inventory he acquired from companies or countries that are members of the U.N. Security Council," Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney told a congressional committee after the war against Iraq.

Under the Bush plan, the five nations are to meet in Paris within the next month to talk about guidelines that would "restrain destabilizing transfers of conventional arms . . . "

Of course that will require defining another term; different capitals have differing views as to what is destabilizing and what is not. "If we're going to have an intelligent policy, it can't just be arms sales are bad," Cheney told a Senate committee on May 21.

The defense secretary said that balance should be the objective in Middle East arms control efforts, and that any plan should be evaluated for its contribution to the security of U.S. allies and to U.S. interests in the region.

That hasn't changed. Cheney, in Jerusalem on Thursday, said the American commitment to Israel's security is "absolutely unshakeable," and announced arms aid including nearly $150 million for a missile defense system and 10 used fighter planes.

U.S. arms deals also are planned with Saudi Arabia and Egypt, key allies in the Persian Gulf war against Iraq.

The White House guidelines would entitle Middle East nations to obtain "the conventional capabilities they legitimately need to deter and defend against military aggression," and planned U.S. sales presumably would fit that description.

Of course other arms-selling nations may think the same thing about deals they intend to make.

"The devil is in the details in arms control proposals," says Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind.

And in the definitions.

If it's very personal, deliver it in person

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: About 12 years ago, I gave a beautiful handmade quilt to my nephew and his wife as their wedding gift. I made it myself, and everyone who saw it said it was a work of art.

I did not deliver it myself. Another relative carried it to my nephew's home. I got a thank-you for the gift, but it was not said that the gift was a handmade quilt.

To make a long story short, a few months ago I was at this nephew's home and I saw the quilt hanging on a quilt stand in their bedroom. I asked who made the stand and my nephew's wife said, "My brother made the stand, and my grandmother made the quilt."

I asked, "Where is the one I gave you?" She said, "This is the only one we have."

Now, the grandmother has lived with that lie on her conscience all these years — letting people believe that she made it when she knows perfectly well that I made it.

My advice to anyone who has a nice gift to give: Deliver it yourself! And, Abby, don't you think somebody owes me an apology? — STILL HURT IN OHIO

DEAR STILL HURT: Good advice! But it wouldn't hurt to have enclosed a gift card with the quilt with a brief message: "Made with love from Aunt ( ) to ( )."

Since this is irritating you, why don't you set the record straight and tell your nephew and his wife that you made the quilt that was delivered to them by another relative, who took the credit for having made it?

DEAR ABBY: The copy of "Please God, I'm Only 17" appeared in today's Chicago Tribune, and its appearance was very timely. Just yesterday, I confiscated my 17-year-old son's driver's license after overhearing a conversation with a friend in which he boasted of doing 60 in a 45-mile zone on a small residential country road. (I didn't know yet how long I would keep it or what else I might have him do in order to make an impression.)

I decided upon the following course of action after reading your column. I clipped it and gave it to him with the following:

"Dear John: When you copy this little piece, 'Please God, I'm Only 17,' 25 times in your neatest writing and on good paper, and prominently display all 25 copies in your bedroom (nope, make an extra two copies, one for each car), you may have your license back. John, this is called tough love. Remember it. You may have to use it some day with one of your own children. I love you. Mom"

Thanks, Abby. — TONI WEAVER, McHENRY, ILL.

Finally, a passing grade

COMPTON, Calif. (AP) — It's not the kind of legal practice law students dream about, but Maxcy Dean Filer failed the State Bar exam 47 times, flunking the arduous test twice a year since 1967.

This year, the 1966 graduate of Los Angeles' now-defunct Van Norman University took two preparatory classes and prayed. And the scales of justice finally tipped in his favor. On Tuesday, he found out he'd passed.

Certain he'd blown the exam, the 60-year-old city councilman initially didn't bother opening the test-result envelope.

Then his son Anthony, a Legal Aid attorney, looked in the packet and saw a slip of paper that said "roll of California attorneys."

"I cried happily and hugged all my children and my wife," Filer said. He has vowed to keep working in his son Kelvin's law office. "I can stop washing windows, and I have to pay bar dues," he said.

Is the Sphinx leftover from Atlantis?

By MIMI MANN

GIZA PLATEAU, Egypt (AP) — Lovers of legend have been tantalized since antiquity by tales of Atlantis, the paradise washed into the sea without a trace.

Now comes John Anthony West, an American author, playwright and travel guide. He wants to prove survivors of Atlantis built the Sphinx, the half-man, half-beast that wears a Pharaoh's crown and crouches at the foot of the pyramids.

Egyptologists say West is wasting his time, that his premise is nonsense.

West, undaunted, said: "If we can prove the Sphinx is older than we think, then we can get around to which lost civilization built it," and the lost civilization that easily comes to mind is Atlantis.

"It's impossible to believe ancient Egyptians could produce the Sphinx if you believe Egyptologists that ancient Egyptians were an intellectually inferior race obsessed with the afterlife," he said.

Advanced writing and the technology to move stone blocks weighing 200 tons, like those in a temple beside the Sphinx, are not a development but a legacy from unknown benefactors, said West, a native of Saugerties, N.Y.

In a newspaper article, Egyptologist Zahi Hawass called West's theories "American hallucinations." Hawass is antiquities director of the pyramids area, including the Sphinx.

"We have older monuments in the same area," he said. "They definitely weren't built by men from space or Atlantis."

With a geologist and a geophysicist in his 10-man team, West came to Egypt in April hoping to prove the monument is much older than its generally accepted age of 4,500 years. They planned to spend two weeks alongside the 240-foot-long limestone statue, but their close-up work was restricted to three days.

Hawass described West was an amateur with "absolutely no scientific base for any of this. It's nonsense, and we won't allow our monuments to be exploited for personal enrichment. The Sphinx is the soul of Egypt."

"Egyptologists think of him as a nut case," West said. "Our work could prove him right."

"If we can prove the Sphinx is older than we think, then we can get around to which lost civilization built it,"
John West
Author

As evidence to support his theories, West said the Sphinx and two adjacent temples differ architecturally from any Old Kingdom monuments.

Also, he said, the Sphinx is too eroded, marred by fissures unexplainable by wind or sand erosion, considering the monument has been buried by the desert for most of its recorded history. Similar erosion is evident in the temples.

Egyptologists trace the Sphinx to Chephren, an Old Kingdom Pharaoh who built the second pyramid, reigned 26 years and died in 2494 B.C. His face on statues and the Sphinx's face look alike.

This is West's version:

The Sphinx and the two temples were built 10,000 to 15,000 years ago, about the time the Greek philosopher Plato said Atlantis disappeared. The flood came. The monuments lay undiscovered for thousands of years, until ancient Egyptians found them and spruced them up.

Thomas Dobecki of Houston, West's geophysicist, used seismological sounding devices to scan the Sphinx area for evidence of hidden cavities or buried relics.

"The data is good," he said, "but I've got to go back and study it. Then I'll tell West the age of the Sphinx. He may like it or he may not."

The Greek statesman Solon first mentioned Atlantis in the 3rd century B.C., saying he learned of it from Egyptian priests.

Plato later embellished the story. His pupil Aristotle said the aging philosopher fabricated the whole thing.

Some scientists theorize the Minoan civilization on Crete was Atlantis, and what Egyptian priests described to Solon was a devasting volcanic eruption in 1470 B.C. that destroyed several Mediterranean islands.

Geologist Robert Schoch of Boston University, whose academic credentials got the West team its permit from the Egyptian Antiquities Organization, said two visits to Egypt convinced him the Sphinx predates Chephren.

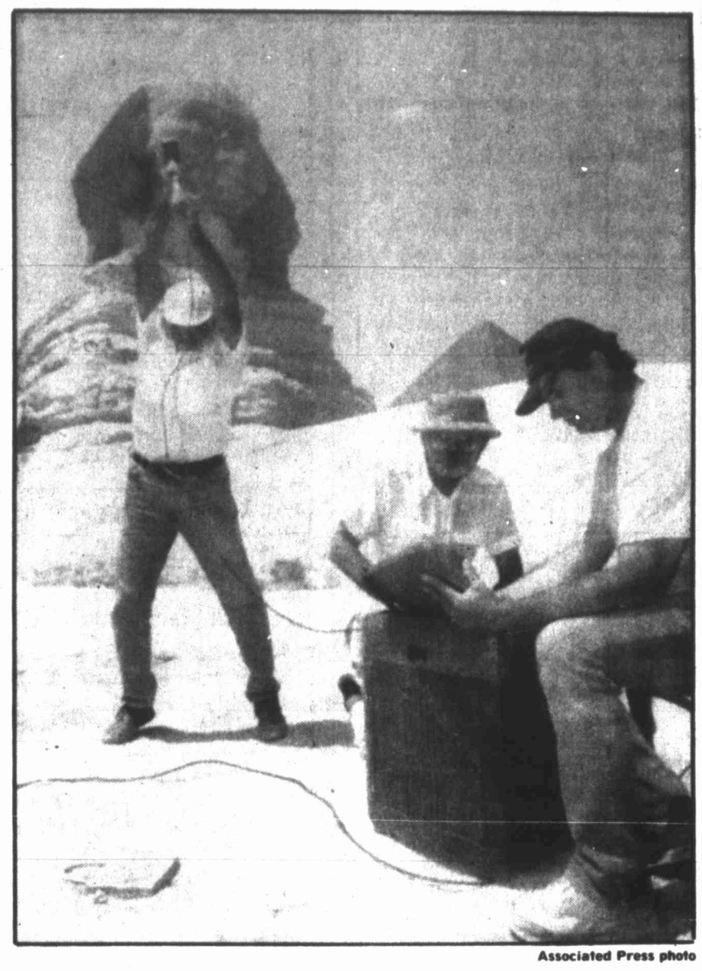

"How much older is it?," he said by telephone from Boston. "I don't know, but older. I'm not saying 10,000 or 15,000 years old. It needs more study."

Lal Gauri, a University of Louisville geology professor, has conducted detailed studies of the Sphinx. "It's clearly absurd to assume that the damage we see couldn't have been caused in the past 5,000 years," he said.

"In fact, I suspect much of it is modern and continuous. You can stand any day at the Sphinx and see rocks fall. As for the flood, there are no telltale signs, like salt or water marks."

Kent Weeks, an Egyptologist at American University in Cairo, said there is no doubt the Sphinx was created by the Egyptians. He said no civilization older than Egypt's left a record of anything like the Sphinx.

"The fact is the Giza Sphinx is the first of its kind and unique," Weeks said. "Every kind of Sphinx we know, whether in Paris or on the steps of the New York Public Library, came later."

Pipeline break spews out natural gas and oil

HERALD STAFF REPORT

A pipeline break about 20 miles north of Big Spring has spewed 1-2 million cubic feet of natural gas into the air and an undisclosed amount of oil on the ground, authorities said.

There were no injuries.

Farm Road 669 was closed about six hours Saturday for a cleanup operation, said Department of Public Safety Trooper Don Rannefeld, Abilene. The leak occured just east of the road, he said.

"Natural gas was blown into the air and was evaporated. Condensate water (50 barrels) was moved to a proper disposal site," Rannefeld said in a report. Contaminated soil was also removed.

Oil spilled "all over" FM-699, said Howard County Sheriff Deputy Tony Chavez.

Called to the scene to oversee cleanup operations was Texas Water Commission investigator Ralph Johnson of Odessa. Johnson could not be reached for comment early today.

The 10-mile long, 12-inch diameter pipeline, which was under 550 pounds of pressure, belonged to Texaco Exploration and Production Inc., according to reports. Officials with the company could not immediately be reached for comment.

Spring will be repainted to reflect the baseball team's standing, and T-shirts celebrating the win have been ordered, Riley said.

"Anything that can get a kid to think about your college, your location, it will all help," he said. Riley described a "ripple effect" that he hopes will benefit the entire community.

"I think a lot more people are aware of not only Howard College but also Big Spring, Texas," Sparks said.

"There's the possibility of our name being furthered throughout the entire country," she said. "That name recognition helps, especially with (out-of-town) students who are thinking of going away from home."

Suicide counselor tries to kill client

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Ben Carlson called a suicide prevention center for help. What he got was a counselor who took him fishing, introduced him to relatives and then, police say, tried to kill him.

Amid the gruesome details — that Carlson's wrists were slit nearly to the bone and his neck was slashed — a prosecutor described a chilling motive: former counselor Frank Snyder found Carlson too demanding and "didn't think he had the guts" to take his own life.

"It's frightening that someone like him could be working for a suicide prevention center with an undetected emotional state such as his," said Thomas Johnson, the deputy district attorney prosecuting Snyder for attempted murder.

Snyder, who is to be arraigned Wednesday in Superior Court, could be sentenced to life in prison if convicted. Authorities are looking for another man they say helped Snyder carry out the attack Feb. 12 at Carlson's house.

Johnson said Carlson, 52, called the Suicide Prevention Center numerous times over several months, speaking to Snyder and other volunteers. Johnson said Carlson was depressed, but had no history of mental illness and never intended to kill himself.

Sheriff's detectives said Snyder told them he attacked Carlson because Carlson had become too demanding and threatened his stability.

"Carlson talked several times with Snyder and they met socially several times. Carlson went fishing with Snyder. Carlson met his family," Johnson said.

Sheriff's detectives said Snyder told them he attacked Carlson because Carlson had become too demanding and threatened his stability.

Johnson said Snyder, 29, who had no previous criminal record, had a history of mental problems. He did not elaborate.

Sheriff's deputies said Snyder and another man forced their way into Carlson's suburban Sacramento house, ransacked it and attacked Carlson. They said Snyder slashed Carlson's wrists and the other man slashed his throat because he was not dying fast enough.

Carlson was rescued because another counselor happened to call the house. The call was prompted by Carlson's earlier report to the center that he had been threatened by Snyder.

Carlson answered the phone and told the counselor to call police. Snyder was arrested after he left the house. The other man escaped.

Snyder's attorney declined to discuss the case, as did representatives of the privately operated Suicide Prevention Center. Authorities said Snyder, who had no other job, no longer worked at the center when the attack occurred.

Snyder is in jail. His wife, Cheryl, could not be reached for comment; her telephone was disconnected.

Carlson, who has recovered and is expected to testify against Snyder, also declined to talk about the case.

Sheriff's Sgt. Joseph Dean testified that Snyder said the attack was carried out with "very little emotion."

According to Dean, Snyder said, "This was what needed to be done. . . . I remember . . . holding his puppy. and watching him bleed."

The crime is "shocking . . . and particularly unusual because of the callousness, the depravity, the premeditation," Johnson said.

trophy — a four-foot high trophy that the national champion keeps for a year — were prominently displayed at the head table.

Griffin then recounted some of the highlights of the tournament and introduced players that had won individual honors at the World Series.

All-tournament selections for Howard were first baseman Franklyn Johnson, shortstop-leftfielder Jose Gomez and pitchers Frank Rodriguez and Jesse Armendariz.

In addition, Rodriguez was named most valuable player and outstanding pitcher of the tournament, and Griffin was selected as the junior college coach of the year.

After the formal ceremonies, it was then time for more autograph-signing.

"This championship is certainly a goal that Howard College has dreamed of," Riley said. "It will bring the recognition the college deserves, and the community will also reap benefits for years to come.

"When people are interested in going to a college, they want to go where something is happening," Riley added. "This success is indicative of what the college is willing to do . . . to provide what it takes to be No. 1. This will certainly help with recruiting.

"This is a wonderful day for Howard College," he said.

"This was a pleasant surprise," Griffin said. "We knew we had excited Big Spring, but we had no indication that it'd be like this.

"I think Howard College represented itself well and promoted the area well," he said, "and we definitely made friends up there."

Griffin, who won the national crown while coaching at Panola Junior College in Carthage in 1969, was hesitant to compare the two titles.

"I really can't compare," he said. "I couldn't be more excited for this one. I'm just very proud of the team. I knew we could do it, and to win in the fashion we did showed we were the better team. . . . It's a great feeling and I feel really pleased about the turnout today."

"I thought it was great," reserve pitcher David Kelly said afterward. "I never expected anything like that. They said people were waiting for us, but I never thought it'd be anything like this."

"It was great; something I really didn't expect," utility player Keith Cosby said. "It was a great welcome, and it really meant a lot to me."

Rabid coons may reach New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Forget about budget cuts and higher taxes, New York City has something new to worry about this summer: thousands of raccoons that are potential rabies carriers.

With rabies already a problem among raccoons in the suburbs, city officials say it's inevitable a suburban animal will eventually run into a city critter and spread the disease.

Animals easily pass the disease from one another — and to people — through saliva, usually by way of a bite that breaks the skin.

"So far, we've had no reports of rabid raccoons, but it's to the north of us in Westchester (County) and to the south in New Jersey," Peter Lynn, a spokesman for the city's Department of Health said of the suburban areas surrounding the city.

And given New York City's large raccoon population, officials say there are plenty of animals to spread the disease once it gets into the city limits.

Based on the number of road kills and nuisance calls, officials believe New York City has the highest density of raccoons in the state, said Ed Feldmann, a spokesman for the state Department of Environmental Conservation.

"These critters, like deer, are . . . comfortable in a suburban-urban environment," he said.

Even New York, with its hundreds of skyscrapers and its paved sidewalks and streets, isn't too harsh an environment for raccoons, said Feldmann.

"People don't necessarily see them," he said.

The animals normally only come out at night, living quietly during the day under porches, in sewers and garages.

Meanwhile, officials fear New York City's large population of raccoons could quickly spread rabies to domestic animals such as dogs and cats, as well as to people.

Rabies' symptoms in unimmunized dogs and cats can take five days to appear.

The symptoms in humans — convulsions, fever, headaches and uncontrollable behavior — may not show up for a year, said Mary Landrigan of the Westchester County Health Department.

Yet humans must be treated immediately after contact. Once the symptoms appear, the disease is fatal and untreatable, she said.

Rabies has been moving up the East Coast since the mid-1980s, New Hampshire's state veterinarian, Dr. Clifford McGinnis, said.

McGinnis said the migration is advancing at a rate of 25 to 75 miles a year, and that five or six weeks ago the virus was reported in Connecticut.

VIENNA, Austria — OPEC Secretary General Subroto, right, speaks during the opening of the summer conference of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Vienna Tuesday as Algerian Mines Minister Sadek Boussena looks on. Boussena made a pitch for higher crude prices.

OPEC leader wants higher crude prices

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — OPEC should take steps to drive oil prices several dollars higher to reach the cartel's target of $21 a barrel, its president said today.

Sadek Boussena, the Algerian mines minister, opened the summer conference of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries by making the pitch for higher crude prices.

He complained about weak prices to colleagues gathered to set a production cap for the summer months, saying the cartel has lost $7 billion in earnings because of low prices from April to June.

Boussena said members should carefully consider the effect on prices of any decision to change its production level.

"I hope that this meeting will . . . take the appropriate decision for the restoration of the $21 minimum reference price," he said.

The average price of an OPEC basket of crudes was $17.68 a barrel last week, far short of its $21 reference price. It had surged past $37 a barrel in October.

Prices for light American and European crudes are generally several dollars higher.

Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Aqazadeh, whose country is the cartel's second largest producer, also complained about weak prices.

He said the cartel would have to slash production below its estimated 22 million barrels a day to get prices back up. He said his country would not accept a higher ceiling on output if it meant lower prices.

But Hisham Nazer, Saudi Arabia's influential minister, said the kingdom could not accept a cut in production.

He said his country supported the reference price but not by "deliberate creation of a shortage" of oil in the world market.

Yankees make Taylor top pick

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Yankees went for youth over experience, making 19-year-old Brien Taylor of Beaufort, N.C., the top pick in the amateur draft.

New York had considered taking Arizona State outfielder Mike Kelly, who went to Atlanta on the second pick. Instead, they made Taylor the first high school pitcher to be selected No. 1 since the Texas Rangers took David Clyde in 1973.

Taylor is 8 2 this season with an 0.86 ERA for East Carteret High School. He's allowed 18 hits in 84 innings, walking 24 and striking out 203. He also pitched consecutive no-hitters.

Kelly, 21, batted .373 with 15 home runs and 56 RBIs for Arizona State this season. Minnesota, picking third, took Stanford first baseman David McCarty, who hit .418 this season with 23 homers and 61 RBIs and was named Baseball America's Player of the Year.

Vincent confident about expansion

NEW YORK (AP) — Commissioner Fay Vincent said he thought owners would accept the recommendation of the National League expansion committee and that he will decide later this week on the American League's request for part of the $190 million in expansion money.

Vincent said that it was "not very likely" that owners would reject the recommendations of the expansion committee, made up of NL president Bill White, New York Mets president Fred Wilpon, Pittsburgh Pirates chairman Doug Danforth and Philadelphia Phillies president Bill Giles.

The younger Lasorda, an artist, had been ill for about five weeks and was hospitalized briefly at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center. Dr. Allen Metzger said he died of pneumonia and severe dehydration.

Hit Man wins sixth title

LAS VEGAS — Thomas Hearns, right, backs up champion Virgil Hill with a jab during the second round of their WBA Light Heavyweight title fight Monday in Las Vegas.

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The Hit Man became the Slick Man, and in the process became a world champion for the sixth time.

Fighting as controlled a fight as he has in his 13-year pro career, Thomas Hearns turned back the clock and his critics Monday night to beat Virgil Hill on a 12-round unanimous decision and win the World Boxing Association version of the light heavyweight title.

"I never felt I was through or finished," Hearns said. "I thought I had a lot more left and a lot more to prove."

And prove something he did against Hill, outboxing a boxer who had won all 30 of his previous fights and taking the 175-pound title that Hill had defended successfully 10 times before.

It may not have been the vintage Hearns of old, but the 32-year-old version wasn't too bad as Hearns patiently dictated the pace of the fight and scored the heavier exchanges of a tactical and quite interesting bout.

"This meant more to me than any fight in the world," said Hearns, who won his first title at 147 pounds when Jimmy Carter was still president. "I have to put this above my other titles. They all mean something to me, but this means a lot more."

A 9-5 underdog at fight time, Hearns was supposed to be too old, too weak in the legs and not strong enough to win the title from the 27-year-old undefeated champion.

But the snapping left jab of earlier days was still there, and the legs held out just long enough for Hearns to win by a 115-113 margin on two scorecards and 116-112 on the third.

"This was a tough, tough fight for me," said Hearns, who added another $4.2 million to his career earnings. "Every second I had to think, because if I wasn't thinking, there's no telling where I'd be now. I might still be asleep."

Hill, venturing outside his native North Dakota for only the third time in 11 title defenses, fought cautiously in the early rounds and took a pounding from Hearns in the sixth round.

The champion won the last round on all three ringside scorecards, but by that time it was too late and Hearns had the fight in his grasp.

Sierra having great 1991

RUBEN SIERRA

ARLINGTON (AP) — Ruben Sierra would rather not remember last season, and his improved defense in right field has Texas fans forgetting about 1990, too.

Sierra fell out of favor with Rangers fans last year when his play in right field suffered from his over-concentration on hitting.

So he turned to Rangers coach Davey Lopes, who hit him more than 1,000 extra flyballs during spring training.

"He came right from day one and started working hard," Lopes said. "Last year he lost confidence in his defensive skills. He got a little gun shy of the wall and the sidelines. So come spring training, we went to work on making him a much better outfielder."

Hundreds of fungo flies later,

MONTREAL — Former Montreal Expos manager Buck Rodgers waves to friends before a farewell news conference in Montreal Monday. Rodgers was fired and replaced with third base coach Tom Runnells.

Montreal gives Rodgers the ax

MONTREAL (AP) — Buck Rodgers had an inkling his seven-year term as manager of the Montreal Expos was up when he learned general manager David Dombrowski was flying to Montreal.

"I knew he wasn't coming to see us off on our road trip," Rodgers said of Dombrowski, who had been in West Palm Beach, Fla., with other Expos administrative personnel to prepare for Monday's draft of amateur players.

Dombrowski's hastily arranged trip was a bad omen for Rodgers, who was called by Dombrowski and told that third base coach Tom Runnells would be replacing him at the helm of the struggling National League club.

The Expos, with a 20-29 record, have lost 10 of their last 11 games and are 13 games behind the East Division-leading Pittsburgh Pirates, farther back than any club in major league baseball's four divisions.

"I wasn't surprised at the phone call," Rodgers said. "I think we both knew it was going to happen.

"No reason was necessary and no reason was asked by me. He said he had decided to make a change and I said you've got to do what you have to do."

While his teams of questionable talent often excelled, Rodgers' teams never finished higher than third, with his best season a 91-71 mark by the 1987 Expos.

"I think my overall record (520-499) in Montreal has been good, but, yeah, I'm disappointed with the way things have gone the last two weeks," he said.

Despite the fact a half-dozen of his players have been in a slump for the entire season and his bullpen has blown 11 save oppor

New-look Lakers get respect

CHICAGO (AP) — It's no surprise that the Los Angeles Lakers were a longshot to make it to the NBA Finals.

They had their worst start in 12 years after their earliest exit from the playoffs in nine years. They had changed coaches, systems and personnel.

Expectations for "The Team Of The '80s" also had changed.

"People thought there would be a cloud of confusion over the whole season," six-year Laker veteran A.C. Green said, "and after the first couple of weeks it looked like it was true."

But the Lakers survived that 1-4 start, knocked off favorite Portland in the Western Conference finals and made it to their ninth championship round in 12 seasons.

Where, once again, they were underdogs.

The Chicago Bulls, trying to extend their NBA record of 15 consecutive home playoff wins, had the homecourt advantage. They had lost just one of their 12 postseason games and won their last six. And they had Michael Jordan, the league's most valuable player.

Now they have problems.

The Lakers, winners of five of the last 11 NBA titles, won Sunday's opener 93-91. They have three consecutive home games after Wednesday night's second game in Chicago. No team has

Baines comes back to haunt Chicago

AL roundup

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Chicago White Sox thought so much of Harold Baines that they retired his number. Baines had their number this time.

Baines broke out of a slump by going 4-for-4 against his former team, including a three-run homer in the first inning, as Oakland beat Chicago 5-3 Monday night.

"I have a lot of great memories from my years in Chicago," said Baines, who hit his first homer in the new Comiskey Park.

"How many fans were out there tonight," Oakland manager Tony La Russa asked. Told a crowd of 36,341 saw the game, La Russa said, "I guarantee it, 36,000 have seen him do it many, many times."

And they have.

Baines is second on the White Sox all-time home run list with 186. He was No. 1 when traded to Texas in 1989, but has since been passed by Carlton Fisk's 198.

"They decided to go with young players at the time, and they're a better team now than a couple a years ago," Baines said.

Elsewhere in the American League, it was Cleveland 2, Detroit 0; Minnesota 3, Baltimore 2; and Toronto 5, New York 3.

The National League took Monday off.

The Athletics and White Sox split a four-game series, which included a bench-clearing brawl on Saturday when A's catcher Terry Steinbach was hit in the head by a Bobby Thigpen pitch. Steinbach was released from a hospital on Monday.

Joe Slusarski (2-2) won for the first time since April 11, allowing two runs and three hits in six innings. Joe Klink pitched 1 2-3 innings and Dennis Eckersley finished for his 15th save.

Greg Hibbard (3-4) lost for the fourth time in his last five starts, allowing 11 hits and five runs.

Indians 2, Tigers 0

Charles Nagy pitched seven strong innings and Beau Allred drew a bases-loaded walk from Walt Terrell (2-6) in the sixth as Cleveland beat visiting Detroit to complete a four-game sweep.

It was Cleveland's first four-game sweep of the Tigers since June 1977. The Tigers have lost six straight, all on the road. They are 1-12 in their last 13 road games.

Nagy (2-5) got his first win since April 22, gave up eight hits, striking out six and walking one. Shawn Hillegas pitched two innings for his fourth save, allowing one hit.

Twins 3, Orioles 2

Jack Morris gave up two runs in eight-plus innings and Kent Hrbek snapped a scoreless tie with a fourth-inning homer as Minnesota won for the sixth time in seven games.

Blue Jays 5, Yankees 3

Joe Carter hit his third homer in three days in a two-run fifth inning to lead Toronto and Jimmy Key past New York. The game was stopped by rain with the Blue Jays batting in the top of the sixth, and play didn't resume for 2 hours, 8 minutes.

Carter opened the fifth inning with his ninth homer, snapping a 3-3 tie, after the Blue Jays had erased a 3-1 deficit with two runs in the fourth inning off Tim Leary (3-5).

Justice, Glavine honored by NL

NEW YORK (AP) — Atlanta teammates David Justice and Tom Glavine were named National League player and pitcher of the month, and Ruben Sierra of Texas and Scott Erickson of Minnesota took the American League honors. For the month, Justice hit .381 with five homers and 28 RBIs, Glavine was 6-0 with a 1.76 ERA, Sierra led the AL with a .386 average, and Erickson was 5-0 in six starts.

Winfield AL player of week

NEW YORK (AP) — Dave Winfield of the California Angels was named American League player of the week and Mike Felder of the San Francisco Giants received the National League honor. Winfield hit .458 with four homers and 12 RBIs during the week. Felder hit .448 with two triples.

Jordan racks up more NBA honors

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Chicago Bulls guard Michael Jordan was named The Sporting News NBA player of the year and Houston Rockets coach Don Chaney was selected coach of the year. New Jersey Nets forward Derrick Coleman was selected rookie of the year and Bucky Buckwalter, vice president of basketball operations for the Portland Trail Blazers, was named executive of the year.

Tark pleased with response

LAS VEGAS (AP) — UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian emerged from a five-hour session with University of Nevada regents saying he was pleased with their response to his explanation of the latest troubles of his team.

Tarkanian asked for a meeting with the regents in the light of growing pressure brought on by contacts between three former players and convicted sports fixer Richard Perry. Tarkanian said the remaining two years of his current contract weren't discussed.

Doctor suspended from practicing

TORONTO (AP) — Dr. Jamie Astaphan — who prescribed steroids for sprinter Ben Johnson and other athletes because he feared they "would kill themselves" if they continued to administer their own treatments — was suspended from practicing medicine for 18 months and fined $5,000.

An agreed statement of facts outlined how the doctor prescribed steroids, obtained black-market steroids, lied about Johnson's steroid use after the athlete tested positive during the 1988 Seoul Olympics, falsified his patients' medical records to omit references to steroids and improperly billed the provincial health insurance plan between 1983 and 1988.

Astaphan, 45, pleaded no contest to the charges.

Seeds advance to quarterfinals

PARIS (AP) — Top-seeded Stefan Edberg and ninth-seeded Jim Courier advanced to the quarterfinals of the French Open. Edberg defeated Andrei Cherkasov 7-6 (7-4), 6-4, 6-3 and Courier beat Todd Martin 6-2, 6-3, 6-3.

In other fourth-round matches, 12th-seeded Michael Stich beat Fabrice Santoro 6-3, 6-1, 6-2 and unseeded Franco Davin deefeated Arnaud Boetsch 7-6 (7-2), 4-6, 6-3, 6-1.

AHL teams hold draft

CLEVELAND (AP) — Eric Lindros, the all-but-certain No. 1 pick in the NHL draft later this month, was selected No. 1 overall by Hamilton in the inaugural draft of the six-team North American Hockey League. Cleveland selected New York Islanders center Pat LaFontaine with the second pick.

Each team — including Miami, Atlanta, Cincinnati and Indianapolis — selected 60 players — 35 forwards, 18 defensemen and seven goalies. The league is slated to begin its 70-game schedule on Nov. 7.

Sabatini staves off defeat at Open

PARIS (AP) — Twice a point away from defeat, third-seeded Gabriela Sabatini reached the semifinals of the French Open today with a gritty 5-7, 7-6 (12-10), 6-0 victory over Jana Novotna.

Former champions Steffi Graf and Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario advanced in much easier fashion to a semifinal match against each other.

Graf, the second seed, improved her career record against France's Nathalie Tauziat to 14-0 with a 6-3, 6-2 victory. Sanchez-Vicario, seeded fifth, overpowered No. 4 seed Mary Joe Fernandez, also 6-3, 6-2.

Andre Agassi became the first men's player to reach the semifinals. Playing as if he had a plane to catch, he raced to a 6-3, 6-1, 6-1 victory over Switzerland's Jakob Hlasek.

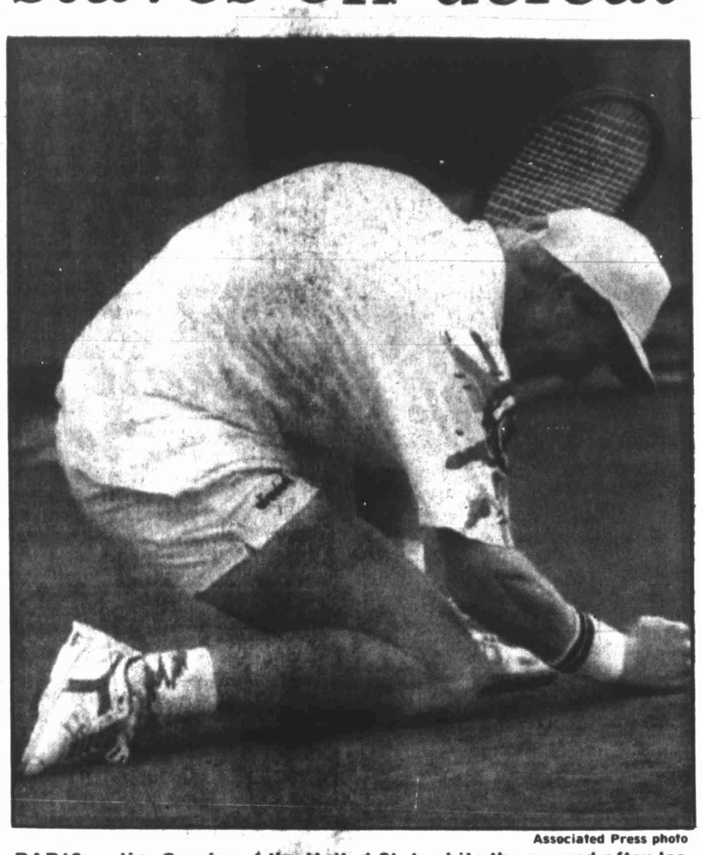

Sabatini trailed 5-2 in the second set, before rallying to draw even. In the tie-breaker, she twice saved match points and wasted six set points before winning.

That seemed to demoralize Novotna, the sixth seed, who succumbed meekly in the final set after seeming to have an edge in the first two.

"It's good to have this kind of match," Sabatini said. "It makes me ready for the next ... I never stopped fighting.".

Novotna headed back to her hotel without granting the obligatory post-match press conference, and officials of the women's tour said the Czechoslovak might be fined.

Sabatini's semifinal opponent was to be decided later today in a match between top-seeded Monica Seles and Spain's seventh-seeded Conchita Martinez.

PARIS — Jim Courier of the United States hits the ground after losing a point during his fourth round match against fellow American Todd Martin in the French Open tennis tournament Monday. Courier won, 6-2, 6-3, 6-3 to reach the quarterfinals.

Agassi, a finalist last year and the No. 4 seed this year, beat the unseeded Hlasek in 1 hour, 15 minutes, the fastest victory of the week involving a top players.

Several times, Agassi was back on the court ready to resume play before the umpire announced the end of a break.

Hlasek, ranked 20th in the world, appeared helpless against Agassi and drew derisive whistles from the center court crowd early in the third set when he made a string of unforced errors.

"I was expecting a tough match today," Agassi said. "I don't think he was playing up to his game. I was just keeping the ball in play."

In the semifinals, Agassi will play the winner of a match later today between second-seeded Boris Becker and 10th-seeded Michael Chang, the 1989 champion.

"I certainly wouldn't take either one for granted, but I'd be pretty confident going into it," Agassi said.

In all, three Americans and two Germans, all of them seeded, reached the men's quarterfinals, reflecting the strength of the two nations that have won the last three Davis Cups.

Of the other three quarterfinalists, only top-ranked Stefan Edberg is a favorite. Argentina's Franco Davin, like Hlasek, was unseeded.

In the other half of the draw, 12th-seed Michael Stich of Germany is favored to win his quarterfinal Wednesday against Davin, ranked 69th in the world. But a German-American semifinal in that bracket is far from certain, with Edberg favored against the hard-hitting No. 9 seed, Jim Courier.

Courier demolished his friend and practice partner, 243rd-ranked Todd Martin, on Monday to reach a Grand Slam quarterfinal for the first time.

"Edberg is capable of playing great on clay," Courier said.

London, Dragons prepare for first World Bowl

LONDON (AP) — The World League of American Football is confident its first championship game will outdraw the first Super Bowl.

Officials believe Sunday's World Bowl between the London Monarchs and the Barcelona Dragons at Wembley Stadium will attract a bigger crowd than the 61,946 who watched Green Bay beat Kansas City at the Los Angeles Coliseum in 1968.

They're hoping for a sellout of 80,000.

"Tickets have been selling at the rate of 1,000 an hour," Bob Payton, American restaurateur and World Bowl organizer, said Tuesday. "It's got to be the hottest ticket in town."

Joe Bailey, the WLAF's chief operations officer, said the World Bowl will be the most important football game to be staged outside the United States.

"The NFL's first Super Bowl attracted almost 63,000 and now we have the opportunity to beat that," Bailey said.

"When the fans walk in there on Sunday, it will be like walking into America. These are the best two teams in the league and the fans will get the best football that this league can offer."

Sunday's game gives the Monarchs the chance to avenge their only loss of the season. They won the European division with a 9-1 record, losing 20-17 to the Dragons (8-2) in the final game of the regular season at Wembley om May 27.

In the semifinal playoffs, the Monarchs blitzed the New York Knights 42-26 while the Dragons labored to a 10-3 triumph over the Birmingham Fire.

When the two teams gathered together here again Tuesday, Monarchs' head coach Larry Kennan said his players will not be out to even the score. But they will be out to win the final.

"We want to win it because it's the World Bowl, not because they are the only team to beat us," Kennan said.

Monarchs' quarterback Stan Gelbaugh, the league's offensive MVP and top-rated passer, said he did not see the game as a chance to showcase his talents.

Hearns

"I thought it was close," Hill said. "When you're fighting a legend, it's like fighting a world champion. You have to make it decisive."

Hill, who lost for the first time in 31 fights, earned his biggest payday — $1.5 million — and got the exposure that had been lacking after a career of fighting mostly in North Dakota and in the relatively obscure light heavyweight division.

But he didn't get what he needed most — a win over Hearns that would have propelled him to the bigger paydays and recognition that come with beating a big name.

"I'm pretty disappointed because it's going to take me awhile to get back up there again," Hill said. "I still might get my career to the next level. I'll get it back as soon as I can."

Hill revealed he had broken his nose during the third week of training for the fight, and also suffered a hyperextended elbow. The nose, he said, was rebroken by a Hearns punch in the third round, and the elbow caused his right arm to go numb for 30 seconds at a time during the bout.

But Hill conceded it was probably Hearns' night anyway.

"I have no excuses," he said. "I just didn't execute. I didn't listen to my corner. I stood there and posed a bit."

Although neither fighter was knocked down during the bout, both provided a series of exchanges that kept the pace going and kept the attention of the announced crowd of 8,125 at an outdoor arena at Caesars Palace.

Fighting in moderate temperatures in the mid-80s, both fighters had enough left in the late rounds to get into some good exchanges.

"I wanted to take my time and set Virgil up for the heavy shots," said Hearns, who improved to 50-3-1. "But Virgil was slick. Everytime I hit him with a good shot and set him up for another, he was out of there."

For his part, Hill threw his right hand only sparingly and allowed Hearns to dictate much of the pace, a mistake that trainer Freddie Roach said cost him the fight.

"I wanted him to back Tommy up more," Roach said. "Tommy doesn't fight too well going backwards."

While Hill tried to cope with the loss that dropped him to 30-1, Hearns savored the moment.

Rodgers

tunities, Rodgers refused to blame his personnel for hastening his demise.

"No one tried harder than guys like (Tim) Wallach and (Delino) DeShields," he said, referring to two of the struggling regulars. "The bottom line is our 4-5-6 hitters are batting about .220 right now."

Wallach, the third baseman, said: "I'm going to miss him. He let me play, even though I went through some tough times."

A member of the Expos since 1980 who is currently hitting .213, Wallach said, "Everyone's unhappy because it's our fault."

Wallach said he learned about the change from a clerk in a Montreal toy store before boarding a plane for Houston.

"I wasn't surprised. It was almost inevitable," he said. "We'd been reading for two months that it was possible."

Right fielder Larry Walker, a second-year player who hasn't fulfilled the promise he showed last season, agreed. "It's our fault, not Buck's," he said. "There are games we've had a chance to win if we'd just driven in a key run, and we didn't do it."

Relief pitcher Bill Sampen said it was the first time he had been on a team that fired its manager.

"It's a funny feeling," said Sampen, 28, whom Rodgers brought up from the minors. "He's the one who gave me my first chance last year and I'll always be grateful."

Dombrowski said he made the managerial change because he could not see a spark that might change the team's fortunes under the current regime.

"This game is not always measured — at least by my aspect — by wins and losses," he said.

"Sometimes it comes down to 'Are you getting the most out of what you have?'

"At 20-29, it's obvious that we aren't because I think we're much better than a 20-29 ball club."

Rodgers said his immediate plans are to play golf "until my back gives out."

He said that if he does manage again, he would prefer that it be with a National League team.

"There's really not much difference, because I've managed in both the American (Milwaukee) and the National League," Rodgers said.

STAR SEARCH

Seattle outfielder Ken Griffey Jr. leads American League players in early fan balloting for the 62nd All-Star Game. Griffey a first-time All-Star last year when he was voted into the starting lineup, has 366,934 votes, more than 58,000 ahead of Baltimore shortstop Cal Ripken.

Sierra

it's paid off.

Through 44 games, Sierra has no errors and he's reaching balls he never could get to before and routinely making highlight film grabs. Last year he made 10 errors.

"He's playing a gold glove type of outfield right now," Lopes said.

To top it off, Sierra said he can relax at the plate now that the fans are back on his side.

"When you got thousands of fans upset with you, it's hard to go out and concentrate and hit the ball when you come up," Sierra said. "Then they just get on you some more.

"I worked hard in spring training so that I could have a good year and show them that I can play the outfield," he said. "It was no fun when they booed me. I got tired of that."

Sierra has an 11-game hitting streak to go with his flawless defense. He has hit .489 during the streak to raise his average from .307 to .353, tops in the league. He has eight home runs and 35 RBIs.

His 44 hits in 27 games in May were the most ever by a Ranger.

"He's doing everything for us, hitting, stealing, making spectacular plays. What more can you say?" Texas manager Bobby Valentine said.

Bothered by a sore ankle last season, Sierra also had an off year at the plate — by his standards. After hitting .306 with 29 homers and 119 RBIs in 1989, Sierra slipped to .280 with 16 homers and 96 RBIs last year.

"This is like '89, only it's going to be better," said Sierra, still motivated by resentment over his being snubbed for MVP honors that year, losing out to Milwaukee's Robin Yount, who hit .318 with 21 homers and 103 RBIs.

Lakers

won an NBA title after losing the first two games at home.

"It will be tough to win two out of three in LA," Jordan said. "Wednesday is a crucial game. We have to even things up."

Los Angeles won without center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who retired after the 1988-89 season, coach Pat Riley, who stepped down after last season, and their fastbreak attack that new coach Mike Dunleavy de-emphasized.

They won with center Vlade Divac, who made the NBA's all-rookie team in 1989-90, and Sam Perkins, a free agent forward who signed last August.

"We haven't gotten the respect we deserve all year long. It's a slap in the face," Los Angeles' Byron Scott said. "We've been there every year, proving everybody wrong. It's nothing new."

"A lot of people thought we couldn't get here without Kareem and Riley, so getting here is more special," Magic Johnson said. "No one gave us a chance to be here."

Last season, the Lakers were eliminated in the second round by Phoenix, four games to one, after going to the Finals in seven of the previous eight years.

"We knew after losing last year we needed some scoring off the bench and we needed a big man," Johnson said.

So the Lakers signed Teagle, a scoring threat from Golden State, and the 6-foot-9 Perkins, whose intensity was questioned in his six seasons with Dallas.

Duo to host pageant

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Here they are, the new hosts of the Miss America Pageant — Regis Philbin and Kathie Lee Gifford?

A source close to the pageant, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said the pair would be named today as the new hosts. The pageant's director and officials for NBC-TV, which televises the annual event, declined comment.

"I'm not telling you," said Leonard Horn, the pageant's director. "People can speculate all they want."

Pageant co-host Gary Collins announced earlier this year he was quitting to devote more time to his own television program, "The Home Show." Horn has refused to say if co-host Phyllis George would also be replaced.

Pryor recovering

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Pryor is recuperating at home after undergoing triple heart bypass surgery last week, the actor-comedian's spokesman said.

He went home Monday, said his spokesman, John Sepler.

"He was released in good condition and he is on the road to recovery," Sepler said.

Pryor, who suffers from multiple sclerosis, had a heart attack 14 months ago.

He nearly died in 1980 when he was badly burned while freebasing cocaine.

He later recounted the experience and his recovery in the concert film "Richard Pryor Live on the Sunset Strip" and the movie "Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life is Calling."
