MISD board gives Parchman approval

■ New Midland Lee football coach plans to scrap wishbone offense for University of Southern California-style power I.

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

As quickly as former Midland Lee football coach Earl Miller shocked the West Texas football world last fall with news he was resigning, new Lee football coach John Parchman is saying goodbye to the wishbone offense.

Parchman, named the 10th football coach at Lee following approval by the Midland Independent School District board on Friday afternoon, now begins life in the high-pressure world as a head football coach in District 4-5A where the demands are simple — just win, baby.

His first step in the shoes of the Rebels' head coach was to scrap the wishbone offense — which has become synonymous with the Lee program — for the University of Southern California style power I offensive set that Parchman used in Llano.

"It is really not that much different than what Lee has done recently," Parchman said. "People call it an 'I' formation just to hang a label on it, but really it is a multiple offense. We should have some more passing and be more wide open, but that is what things have been progressing toward. I think this might speed that progression up.

"When Lee had Farris Strambler (in 1989) they ran the "I" and gave

Economy grows 4 percent in '94, most in decade

■ Analysts see interest rate boost next week, seventh by Fed in 12 months, as inevitable.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The buoyant national economy, aided by a consumer buying surge in the fourth quarter, grew more rapidly in 1994 than it had since the middle of the Reagan era.

But analysts predicted the dazzling gains cannot last, as the Federal Reserve pushes interest rates higher and businesses trim huge stockpiles of goods. They said an interest rate boost next week — the seventh by the Fed in 12 months — appears inevitable.

The Commerce Department reported Friday that gross domestic product, measuring all goods and services produced in the United States, advanced at a 4.5 percent annual rate in the fourth quarter — the biggest three-month gain of 1994. Analysts expected the increase.

For the entire year, the economy grew 4.0 percent — the strongest showing since 1984, when it soared 6.2 percent during the final year of President Reagan's first term in office. The economy increased 3.1 percent in 1993.

"I thought it was good news," said Sung Won Sohn, chief economist of Norwest Corp., a Minneapolis bank. "We had strong economic growth combined with low inflation. What more do you want?"

President Clinton said the preliminary figures showed "the best combined rates of high growth and low inflation in 25 years."

His economic adviser, Laura Tyson, noted the economy did well even as federal spending dipped 5.4 percent last year.

House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, said the comparisons to 10 years ago are "hard to believe" and predicted the economy will "wane seriously" by the election year of 1996.

Inflation remained tame and actually declined in the fourth quarter, the government said. One price index tied to GDP rose 2.5 percent in the October-through-December quarter compared to 3.5 percent in the third quarter.

The gauge was up 2.7 percent for all of last year, its mildest showing since the government began the index in 1983.

House majority leader Armey sparks dispute with comment

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The House majority leader, Rep. Dick Armey of Texas, set off a dispute on Capitol Hill on Friday when he referred to Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., one of several openly homosexual members of Congress, as "Barney Fag.".

Armey, first privately and then on the floor of the House, quickly apologized to Frank for the remark, which the majority leader had made in an interview with a group of radio broadcasters.

Armey said he had simply mispronounced Frank's name, and in his statement on the House floor he attacked the news media for reporting the remark, which he had tried to squelch, and said they were casting it as an "intentional personal attack" on Frank.

Frank did not take the floor himself but, in a an interview with reporters that took place after he had met with Armey privately, seemed clearly upset. He said the remark reflected "a climate of meanness and intolerance with the

Ambulances expand hospital services

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Two new ambulances, gifts of the auxiliary to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, bring a new dimension to the hospital's patient-care program.

"It's much more convenient, and there's less (patient) stress (in transporting people)," Betty Hicks, president of the 227-member auxiliary, said Friday after the two one-ton trucks were delivered to the hospital. "There is more care involved."

Until arrival of the diesel-powered units, which cost more than $100,000, the hospital contracted with outside ambulance services to bring patients from clinics, nursing homes and other hospitals.

With its first in-house ambulance service, Memorial Hospital will be in a more competitive posture to attract patients from the region.

"There is getting to be a tremendous amount of competition among the tertiary hospitals," said Larry Elliott, the

POLICE REPORTS

Conviction

A federal jury found an Austin man guilty of possessing with the intent to deliver cocaine and possessing cocaine, according to a police spokesman.

Kenneth Morris Thompson, 26, was convicted on two counts of possession with the intent to deliver, two counts of possession and one count of conspiracy.

Thompson was arrested Sept. 5 at Garden City Highway and Interstate 20 after Midland police were tipped to a major drug haul coming in from Austin, according to Midland police Sgt. David Garcia.

"We got information that a large amount of cocaine was coming into Midland from Austin," Garcia said.

Officers from the Midland Police Department and Drug Enforcement Administration seized eight ounces of cocaine at the time of the arrest.

"It was a combined effort to stop a major supplier to this area," Garcia said. "The word on the street was this guy was going to beat the rap, but justice prevailed in this case."

Charlotte Merchant, 26, was involved in the incident. She pleaded guilty in November and was sentenced to 51 months in prison.

Thompson will be sentenced March 27.

AUSTIN (AP) — John C. White, former Democratic National Committee chairman and Texas agriculture commissioner for 26 years, was remembered Friday as "a gentle and genteel man who practiced the politics of joy."

"John C. White was always there for his country, for his party and for his friends," former Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen said. "He was a big 'D' Democrat who lived his life on the principles of little 'D' democracy."

White, known to friends and family as John C., died Jan. 20 after battling pneumonia. He was 70.

About 300 people gathered in the Texas Capitol rotunda for his funeral Friday. Former Gov. Ann Richards and former U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright were among prominent Texas and national political figures who attended.

A mahogany casket, draped with the Texas flag that stood in White's Texas and Washington offices, was placed in the middle of the rotunda.

White's widow, Nellie, sat with his two sons and other family members next to Bentsen and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Bentsen, whose unsuccessful 1976 presidential campaign was headed in Texas by White, called him a true friend, whose allies spanned the political spectrum.

"For him, friendship was not a matter of convenience. It was a matter of honor. He was a friend through thick and thin, through victory and defeat," Bentsen said.

Jackson said White helped fight for reform on such issues as racial equality.

"John had something rare in politics today — John had a core. If you have a core, right beats out politics and popularity," Jackson said.

"He was part of a ground crew of Texans who helped to steer America on a winning course. We thank you, praise God, for sending John C. White — the transformer — our way," Jackson said.

White's youngest son, Ed White, said his father was a caring, loving dad. "To me he was more than just Dad, he was my best friend."

The son of a tenant farmer, White was born in Newport, Texas, on Nov. 28, 1924. He entered politics at the age of 25, when first elected Texas agriculture commissioner in 1950.

In 1977, President Carter appointed him deputy U.S. agriculture secretary and later that year chose him to head the Democratic National Committee.

A confidant of presidents and leaders of both parties, White guided the Democratic National Committee through a turbulent period when Carter's presidency was challenged from within by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts.

After leaving the DNC, White became a lobbyist and established a political consulting firm with a roster that included the Chicago Board of Trade and Goldman Sachs.

President Clinton, in a letter read by Bentsen, said White "consistently displayed the best of America's spirt. His life's work is an inspiration to all of us in public life."

White was buried in the Texas State Cemetery.

Bush tort-reform push poses conflict of interest, group says

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. George W. Bush, who is pushing to reform liability lawsuits, Friday found himself accused of owning stock in a company that has been sued by more than 3,000 women over leaking breast implants.

The governor's office said Bush has no conflict of interest in civil lawsuit reform, which he has designated a legislative emergency.

The government watchdog group Public Citizen said Bush had owned stock in Baxter International Inc.

Public Citizen said federal Securities and Exchange Commission records show that Baxter — along with other companies — is a defendant in 3,445 lawsuits by women who have leaking breast implants.

Mary Thomas, spokeswoman at Baxter's headquarters in Deerfield, Ill., said the company never produced or marketed breast implants, but instead acquired a company in 1985 that had done so.

Bush said he doesn't know if he still owns Baxter stock. His financial assets were put in a blind trust after his election, he said.

According to his 1993 income tax returns, Bush earned $172 in dividends on his Baxter stock.

"I have got a blind trust now. I don't know what I own," Bush said.

Tom Smith, director of Public Citizen's Texas chapter, contended that Bush could personally profit from the passage of civil justice reforms that he has made a priority for the Legislature.

"Now it's clear why Gov. Bush declared the tort reform package an emergency," Smith said.

Smith said some proposed tort reform legislation could be detrimental to women who are pursuing breast implant claims. "Victims may be unable to sue if the reforms Bush is pushing are enacted," Smith said.

American issues headquarters employees job-warning letters

Staff Report

FORT WORTH — American Airlines Inc. headquarters' employees received letters recently warning them they could soon lose their jobs, according to a report in the Dallas Morning News.

The letters were sent out following the new year as a legal step by American in anticipation of cutbacks coming in several months, American spokesman John Hotard told the Morning News.

The federal Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act, also called the WARN Act or the plant-closing law, requires employers of at least 100 people to give 60 days' notice whenever they shut a plant or plan a major layoff.

Hotard said it was a procedural letter.

American is concluding a review of its 5,000-person headquarters staff, with a goal of cutting its labor costs there by at least $75 million.

Calls to American were not returned Friday afternoon regarding the status of Midland-Odessa based American employees.

Although layoffs of 20-30 percent of the work force have been discussed, Hotard declined to speculate on what shrinkage may occur.

American has set a goal of reducing its annual operating costs by $1 billion, including $750 million from labor costs. The $75 million represents headquarters' share of the cost reductions.

SPARK: Armey sets off dispute with remark

Republicans."

While Frank refused to wholly accept Armey's apology, he also declined to engage in a full-fledged attack.

"I don't think it was on the tip of his tongue, but I do believe it was in the back of his mind," said Frank, who has emerged as a Democratic floor leader in the Republican-controlled Congress. "There are a lot of ways to mispronounce my name. That is the least common."

Other Democrats, however, in a week when political feelings in Congress were already raw, seized on the episode and tried to turn it to their advantage.

"This Republican leadership seems to have a habit of calling its political opponents names," Rep. John Lewis of Georgia said at a news conference where at least 12 Democrats took turns attacking Armey and the Republicans. "There is no place for this kind of behavior in our political discourse."

The remark by Armey, a six-term conservative from Texas who is second in power in the House only to Speaker Newt Gingrich, also brought forth a host of denunciations by groups representing homosexuals. They said it not only was offensive but also encouraged a climate of anti-gay violence.

The events began as Armey was discussing with the broadcasters a book, to be published in April, that he has written about freedom. At one point in the discussion, he turned to the recent furor in the House over Gingrich's own book deal.

"Newt's a very patient fellow and able to handle a harangue going on around him better than I," Armey said. "I like peace and quiet, and I don't have to listen to Barney Fag — Barney Frank — haranguing in my ear because I made a few bucks off a book I worked on."

Later in the day, as the remark began to draw wide attention, Armey moved quickly to try to head off any adverse effects. First he implored the reporters who had been in his office for the taping not to broadcast the remark, and then he sought out Frank on the House floor to explain what had ocurred and to apologize.

But, on a day when Republicans had expected to bask in the glory of the House's passage of a balanced-budget amendment Thursday night, Armey's comment quickly became the talk of the Capitol and forced him onto the floor to address the matter publicly.

"I take strong exception to the airing of the tape and even the transcribing of a stumbled word as if it were an intentional personal attack," Armey shouted during a speech in which he was flushed with anger and his lips quivered.

"And I take this exception especially in light of the fact that I went to the press that had the tape and explained to them in the best humor I could that I had simply mispronounced a name and did not need any psychoanalysis about my subliminal or about my Freudian predilections."

Frank was not on the House floor when Armey spoke but watched the proceedings on television in his office.

Armey's comment came during a weekly briefing he holds in his office for radio broadcasters for their weekend programs. There were four reporters interviewing him, representing The Associated Press, ABC, CBS and Standard News.

Some clouds to cover Midland

Staff Report

Today should be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-50s and northwest winds 10-20 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-20s, according to a spokesman for the National Weather Service office in Midland.

Sunday calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the mid-50s.

After an overnight low of 40, Friday's high reached 63, compared to the record high for that date of 80 set in 1970. The record low was 9 set in 1948.

STATE

Afternoon skies were mixed across Texas on Friday, while a wind warning was issued in the mountain passes of far West Texas, where wind speeds topped 50 mph.

Elsewhere in West Texas, wind speeds of 25 mph to 35 mph were reported through the South Plains, the Low Rolling Plains, the Permian Basin and the Concho Valley. Winds of 25 mph to 35 mph with occasional gusts to 45 mph were common across the Big Country.

In North Texas, a wind advisory was in effect for the western two-thirds of the region. Winds were southwesterly at 10 mph to 20 mph and gusty.

West Texas skies were partly to mostly cloudy in the north and sunny elsewhere, and temperatures were mainly in the 40s and 50s.

Light rain is possible through parts of the Low Rolling Plains, possibly mixed with or changing to snow early Saturday. Highs from near 40 in the Panhandle to the mid- to upper-60s in the Big Bend Valleys are expected Saturday. Lows will be near 20 to the low 30s.

In South Texas on Friday, the skies were generally sunny except for the extreme southeastern sections, where a few showers lingered. Temperatures were mainly in the 70s with westerly and northwesterly winds at 15 mph to 25 mph. Highs Saturday will be in the 60s to near 70.

Skies were clear to partly cloudy over North Texas where temperatures were generally in the 60s to 70s across the region.

Saturday's forecast calls for cloudy skies with a slight chance of showers in the north, otherwise partly cloudy and cooler. Highs will range from 50 to 66 with lows in the 30s.

NATION

Storms and wind rocked Texas and Louisiana on Friday as a low pressure system over Kansas pushed a cold front through the region.

The cold front triggered heavy rain and strong thunderstorms, swelling streams and rivers across eastern Texas and central Louisiana. Some roads were inundated, but no serious widespread flooding was reported.

Some funnel clouds and possible tornadoes were seen, but the only damage reported was near Winnsboro, La. Winds gusting to 50 mph caused some damage to roofs, trees and power lines.

The highest rainfall total reported in the Lower 48 states was 1.78 inches at Laurel, Miss. Hail fell near Magnolia, Ark.

To the north, moisture spread over cold air in the Midwest, producing widespread sleet and freezing rain throughout much of Iowa, southern Minnesota and Wisconsin, and into portions of Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee.

Snow and rain fell overnight across Nevada, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming and Colorado. And another storm was bearing down on the central West Coast.

The coldest weather in two years settled across central Alaska. Fairbanks dipped to 48 below zero, while it was minus-50 at McGrath, minus-52 at Nenana, minus-53 at Fort Yukon and minus-54 degrees at Bettles. The coldest spot was minus-60 degrees at the Dalton Highway maintenance camp at Jim River.

In the lower states, the low Friday was minus-9 in Presque Isle, Maine. The high was 78 in Brownsville, Texas.

GROWS: Analysts predict interest rate boost

(From 1A)

Analysts said the GDP report showed signs of a slowdown, possibly accounting for statements this week by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan that he expects growth to moderate.

"Business inventories were stronger than expected. It suggests some involuntary accumulation," said economist Eugene Sherman of the Wall Street investment firm, M.A. Schapiro & Co.

Inventories built up more rapidly in the final three months last year than they had in 10 years, the Commerce Department said.

Analysts said that portends a cut in production this year as businesses slim down their stockpiles.

But overall, heavy consumer spending — particularly for big-ticket durable goods — propelled the fourth-quarter GDP growth, as it had throughout 1994.

Rising interest rates take hold slowly, analysts noted. "In no way has the consumer maxed out," Sherman said.

Sales of all goods grew 3.7 percent in the fourth quarter, compared to 4.3 percent the previous three months.

The Federal Reserve's key policy-setting body, the Federal Open Market Committee, will review the economy Tuesday and Wednesday in its first of eight meetings this year.

Analysts predict the central bank will push interest rates up a half-percentage point, adding to a 2.5-percentage-point increase engineered in six stages last year.

"I think the Fed will move into a holding pattern after that and perhaps wait several months," said economist David Jones of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a New York City government securities dealer. "Business will pull back in the early part of 1995 and that will lead to a drop in overall economic growth."

The most recent interest rate increase was on Nov. 15, when the Fed raised two key rates three-fourths of a percentage point, the biggest jump in 13 years.

Financial markets at first reacted positively to Friday's report but then stock prices fell. The Dow Jones industrial average closed off more than 12 points.

The Commerce Department said the economy's annual rate of growth was $59.8 billion in the fourth quarter, compared to $52.9 billion in the third.

GDP grew at a 4 percent annual rate in the third quarter, 4.1 percent in the second quarter and 3.3 percent in the first three months of 1994. The fourth-quarter rate was the highest since the economy boomed at a 6.3 percent rate in the final quarter of 1993.

The Federal Reserve, hoping to stifle inflation, would like to see economic growth at around 2.5 percent.

Consumer spending accounted for most of the fourth-quarter gain, as durable-goods purchases — items such as cars, computers and home appliances — soared 18.4 percent.

BOARD: Parchman to scrap wishbone offense

it to him around 35 times a game," said Midland athletic director Tim Whalen. "You have to plug the people into the system. I am confident that John will run a system that he has the talent to run."

Defensively, it will be status quo since Parchman used the same four-man front defensive alignment at Llano as was used when he was a defensive assistant at Lee.

Parchman said that he expected "one or two" changes in the assistant coaching staff with his arrival.

Ironically, the "I" returns with another Strambler in the backfield.

Lee's top returning running back is senior-to-be Alex Strambler, who rushed for 567 yards and nine touchdowns on 113 carries. He moved into the starting role after Melvin Dunson went out with a cracked shoulder blade in the opening District 4-5A game of the season against Midland High.

Parchman, a 45-year-old graduate of Texas Tech University was selected from a pool of 18 applicants by a selection committee consisting of MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr., Lee Principal George Cooper, Assistant Principal Don Mason, Tom Holland, director of personnel for MISD, Whalen, and Ricardo Torres, executive director of secondary schools.

After interviewing Jan. 19-20 with the selection committee, Parchman said Whalen contacted him Jan. 22 and they had serious discussions on Monday.

Parchman, an Acuff native, who was an assistant at Lee under Miller from 1989-93, returns to Midland after serving as the head football coach and athletic director at Llano for the past two seasons where he compiled a 14-7 record, including last season's 10-1 campaign before losing to Giddings 21-20 in the first round of the Class 3A state playoffs.

Parchman, who received his master's from Sul Ross University, has compiled a head coaching record of 74-50 in 12 seasons with stops at Frenship (1976-80), Cisco High (1983-85), El Paso Socorro (1985-89) and Llano.

"We wanted to keep our West Texas contacts," said MISD Athletic Director Tim Whalen. "Sometimes you bring people in from outside the area and after the first good sandstorm in the spring, his wife is cleaning dirt off the window panes . . . If mama is not happy out here then you are looking for a new coach in two years.

"West Texas people are different; football is very important to them. You can go to any small town on a Friday night in the fall and see what I mean."

Parchman is the 10th head football coach at Midland Lee, replacing the school's winningest coach Earl Miller (77-25-3 in nine seasons), who is moving to San Antonio. Miller led Lee to the playoffs in eight of his nine years, including capturing all or a share of five district championships.

Parchman will add his name to a list of coaches that includes: Duane Grissett (1961-62), Joe Newbill (1963-65), Bob Burris (1966-68), Willie Brooks (1969), Jim Acree (1970-77), Gil Bartosh (1978-79), Spike Dykes (1980-83), Jack Taryien (1984-85) and Miller (1986-94).

What about the pressure of following Miller?

"The pressure is the same everywhere you go and that's to win. That's the nature of the beast," Parchman said. "Earl and I are friends, we both worked on the defensive side of the ball. I have a lot of respect for Earl and what he has done.

"I think it takes being at Lee before you understand the pressure," Parchman said. "I think it would be a mistake if someone does not understand the level of competition in the district. After being here for four years, you understand things are a notch better."

Parchman said that Lee would not have spring drills, opting instead for the longer preseason drills.

"With the way the school calendar works out, if we had spring drills we wouldn't be able to have two-a-days until school was already under way. I don't think that is a fair trade-off."

EXPAND: Hospital receives two ambulances hospital's director of regional services.

"This service is going to play a major role for us in regional development . . . (and) will help us to take care of patient flow. This is cost-effective."

Until now, the hospital has "never had any control over our transportation system," Elliott said. "We have been at the mercy of someone else. We can more effectively and efficiently move our own patients . . . in our regional development."

The hospital's focus in its regional expansion is about the distance covered in an hour's drive, which would take in Big Spring, Andrews, Monahans, Crane, Rankin, Lamesa and Kermit.

> "This service is going to play a major role for us in regional development . . . (and) will help us to take care of patient flow. This is cost-effective.'
> — Larry Elliott, director of regional services

Elliott told the auxiliary's "pink ladies and gents," that the hospital's ambulance-service rates will be comparable with similar services.

"We are not an emergency service," Elliott said. "You still need to call 911" to summon paramedics and emergency ambulances in life-threatening situations. Emergency ambulances are operated by the Midland Fire Department.

But if the need arises, Elliott said the hospital's ambulances "would assist the local emergency services.

"We are equipped for transferring patients," Elliott explained. "We are not equipped for on-the-scene disasters."

However, Walt Haislip, a paramedic who is in charge of the hospital's patient-transfer service, said the hospital's ambulances — "critical-care transport" units — are equipped with heart monitors, oxygen systems and intravenous setups.

In addition to the driver, each ambulance will be staffed with "one or two people (paramedics) in the back, depending on what the situation is," Haislip said.

Funds for the hospital's ambulances were raised by the auxiliary's popped corn and gift-shop sales, shoe sales, bake sales and auxiliary members' dues.

"We make money any way that's legal," said Ann Kleine, past president of the auxiliary. "We made $600 in a bake sale in an hour and a half."

Since 1950, the auxiliary has donated more than $1.3 million in equipment to the hospital.

Auschwitz visit triggers painful memories

By Frank Bajak
Associated Press

OSWIECIM, Poland — The thought still haunts Mel Mermelstein. On this visit to Auschwitz-Birkenau, it brought the 68-year-old man to tears.

When his family of Hungarian Jews was unloaded at the extermination camp in May 1944, the Nazis selected Mermelstein's sisters for slave labor, his mother for immediate death in the gas chamber.

"Yet they leaped across to go and be with my mother because they didn't want to leave her," he said. Now, a few paces from where he last saw them, Mermelstein summoned his sisters:

"And I almost asked them to tell me, tell me please: Are you angry at me that I abandoned you?"

So much is unresolved at this place of unspeakable horror.

About 1.5 million people, 90 percent of them Jews, died at Auschwitz. But the camp complex was built for Poles who resisted the Nazi occupation, and for non-Jewish Poles it became a symbol of their nation's martyrdom. Disputes over the ceremonies led Jews to organize their own memorial on Thursday.

At Friday's main commemorations of the camp's liberation by Soviet troops exactly 50 years ago, President Lech Walesa decided against more Jewish-Polish discord and chose reconciliation.

The devoutly Roman Catholic politician finally acknowledged what the world's Jews had demanded he make clear — that the Nazi's premier slaughterhouse was above all a place of Jewish suffering.

Auschwitz "stands for the suffering of many nations, especially of the Jewish nation," Walesa said in a speech in the camp.

His words — "especially of the Jewish nation" — were missing from a prepared text of his speech, and Walesa hadn't mentioned Jews during his public speeches Thursday marking the liberation.

About 5,000 sick and emaciated people in the camp were liberated by the Soviet Red Army on Jan. 27, 1945. A week before, Mermelstein, future Nobel laureate Elie Weisel and 58,000 other inmates had been marched west with the retreating Nazis. Most were murdered by Nazi guards or died of cold and hunger on the way.

On Friday, about 5,000 mourners gathered: Survivors wearing imitations of the striped prisoners' uniforms; others waving Israeli flags, silently weeping, praying and stamping their feet against the cold.

Some lit candles on the railroad tracks that once brought Jews from all corners of Nazi-held Europe for slaughter.

Leading the crowd, Walesa, Wiesel and Israeli Knesset speaker Shevah Weiss walked side by side under Auschwitz's cruel entrance sign: "Arbeit Macht Frei," or "Work Shall Make You Free."

Beneath the flags of the 32 nations from which the camp's victims came, Poland's gray-bearded chief rabbi, Menachem Joskowicz, intoned the Kaddish, the Jewish prayer for the dead, rhythmically swaying back and forth. Catholic, Protestant, Christian Orthodox and Muslim prayers followed.

Survivors came from Ukraine, from the former Yugoslavia, from Germany.

"I came back because I've got this fantastic feeling that I can say to my driver, 'Wait for me at the gate. I will be back in three hours, and we will go back to Warsaw,'" said Noah Kleger, 69, a French Jew who survived Auschwitz with his parents. "It's a feeling I cannot explain."

Twenty-six countries sent delegations. Russia sent parliament speaker Ivan Rybkin, but none of the soldiers who liberated this place.

Many Poles at the camp were exploited for labor, rather than being sent straight to the gas chambers as most Jews were.

"Most of the people who died here were Jews. But most of the people who lived in the barracks were Poles," said Irena Wojtaszczyk, 82, who had watched in 1941 as a Gestapo man put a gun to the head of her husband, a Warsaw resistance leader, and shot him.

A couple holds hands as they walk balanced on the rails of the railroad tracks that brought more than a million people to their deaths at the Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp Thursday.

Taken later to Birkenau, about two miles away, Wojtaszczyk watched the Nazis herd the Jews — "5-year-olds, little girls with dolls, elegantly dressed gentlemen" — to their death.

She herself once hid in a pile of corpses to avoid death.

"In front of each barracks there were piles of bodies," she said. "Just plain skeletons with skin." People were worked, beaten, tortured to death.

Weiss, the Israeli Knesset speaker, quoted from the diary of an SS doctor at Auschwitz who described one gassing of French Jews that ended with a gift of vodka, cigarettes and sausage for the murderers.

The head of the Auschwitz museum's international board, Wladyslaw Bartoszewski, read an appeal to the world against racial hatred and anti-Semitism.

Wiesel appealed to the power of memory: "Close your eyes and listen to the silent screams that terrify mothers, listen to the prayers of anguished old men and women, listen to the tears of children."

Not a few speakers noted that the world still isn't listening.

The Jewish-Polish dispute almost soured the observances — and led Jews to organize a separate ceremony on Thursday.

"Auschwitz and Birkenau happen to be on Polish soil. And they (Poles) are nationalistic and there's not much you can do about it," said Mermelstein, who also lost his brother and father. He later settled in Los Angeles.

In 1985 Mermelstein won the first U.S. judicial finding that the Holocaust actually occurred — a $5.25 million libel judgment against a man who claimed it was a hoax.

Mermelstein wrote a book about the case and it was the subject of a 1991 TBS television movie, "Never Forget."

Auto workers prepare for worst of slump

By Sara Silver
Associated Press

PUEBLA, Mexico — Auto workers at the Volkswagen housing project are using this week's work suspension to fix up their Beetles, hash out rent increases on their apartments and prepare for the worst.

As the auto workers gathered around one of the five-story concrete apartment buildings, they worried that expected layoffs after this one-week temporary closure will be permanent. And that lists have already been drawn.

Volkswagen has announced that it will cut 1,400 office employees — about 35 percent of the entire administrative staff, Mexican news media reported Friday, quoting union officials. The automobile manufacturer also has announced plans for another week-long shutdown at the plant in central Mexico beginning Feb. 17, the union officials said.

"Where will we find work?" asked David Herrera, a 15-year machine shop veteran and father of five. "There's already so much unemployment here."

Last year, Mexico's auto industry was the showcase of the nation's manufacturing sector, producing more than 1 million cars and trucks — half for export.

But now the nation's financial crisis is putting the brakes on domestic car sales, making auto workers some of the first and most visible victims of the Mexican peso's recent plunge.

Volkswagen, which makes 36 percent of all cars sold in Mexico, closed its Mexican factory and sent 14,000 workers home this week because of an expected drop in car demand. Ford has closed an assembly plant in northern Mexico.

Nissan, the only Japanese automaker with a plant in Mexico, has announced it will lay off 1,000 workers beginning Monday. It also suspended delivery of U.S.-made cars to Mexico.

Volkswagen officials expect last year's sale of 160,000 cars inside Mexico to fall 30 to 50 percent this year.

Even if they keep their jobs, Mexican auto workers will have to fight for salary increases, whose purchasing power has returned to 1980's levels.

Before the devaluation, auto manufacturers paid an average of $2 an hour in salary, benefits and taxes for Mexican workers, compared to the $40 an hour cost of U.S. workers.

The Mexican peso began its slide Dec. 20 — less than three months after new President Ernesto Zedillo took office — and ultimately lost 40 percent of its value against the U.S. dollar.

Now, some worry that if Mexico's financial crunch continues long enough, it could affect jobs in the United States.

"The North American Free Trade Agreement was supposed to guarantee a flow of goods on both sides of the border," said Coopers and Lybrand auto analyst Dave Eisenhart. "Half of the equation just disappeared."

Troops from Peru, Ecuador clash in disputed border area

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Peruvian troops were dispatched Friday to the wild jungle frontier with Ecuador after each country accused the other of cross-border attacks in the long-disputed area.

Peru said an Ecuadorean helicopter bombed one of its outposts Thursday afternoon. Ecuador denied the helicopter attack and said its troops repelled Peruvian offensives Thursday and early Friday.

There were no confirmed reports of casualties, and it was not possible immediately to verify either account.

In Tumbes, a city 620 miles northwest of Lima, Peruvian troops were placed on alert and tanks were moved toward the border, according to news reports. A radio report said 100 infantry soldiers were flown from Lima to Tumbes.

Ecuador reportedly began evacuating the sick, elderly and children from the town of Macara, five miles from the border.

Cesar Navarro Torres, a transportation union official in the Peruvian border town of Aguas Verdes, said cross-border traffic was normal. An international bridge links Aguas Verdes and the Ecuadorean town of Huaquillas.

Peru's president, Alberto Fujimori, met all day with the National Defense Council, and Foreign Minister Efrain Goldenberg received the ambassadors of Argentina, Brazil, Chile and the United States, which have mediated the border dispute in the past.

Peru and Ecuador fought a war in 1941 over their 1000-mile border, and animosity has been strong ever since. The disputed area is a 50-mile stretch of a remote, jungle-covered mountain chain called the Cordillera del Condor.

Ecuadorean officials said Peruvian troops launched an attack early Friday against the Lt. Hugo Ortiz border post. They said the attack was repelled without Ecuadorean losses.

Ecuador also said its troops intercepted a Peruvian patrol on Thursday near the Cenepa River, about 220 miles southeast of Quito. The river begins in the Cordillera del Condor.

There was no comment Friday from the Peruvian government on the alleged combat. Peru contends the Cenepa River, about 560 miles northwest of Lima, is completely within Peruvian territory.

Peru accused Ecuador of aggression in a statement issued late Thursday.

"Ecuador's belligerent and aggressive attitude contradicts its supposed pacifist position and breaks the peace," the Foreign Ministry said of the alleged helicopter incident.

Ecuador's foreign minister, Galo Leoro, denied any attacks by Ecuadorean helicopters but said Quito would "defend its territorial integrity."

Ecuador contends it lost almost half of its territory with the signing of the 1942 Protocol of Rio de Janeiro after the 1941 war.

Russians gather Chechen males of fighting age

SAMASHKY, Russia (AP) — Russian troops, anxious to crush the final resistance in the capital of breakaway Chechnya, are rounding up Chechen men of fighting age in villages near Grozny.

Allegations of atrocities came from both sides Friday in what appeared to be the final days in the battle for the ruined city.

Much of Grozny has been blasted by Russian artillery, rockets, mortars and missiles, and the city's defenders have been driven into its southern neighborhoods.

Thousands of people have been killed in the brutal Russian assault that began New Year's Eve, and most of Grozny's 400,000 residents have fled.

Chechen fighters said they were counterattacking, but artillery shells rained down Friday upon southern Grozny, flattening the little street market where until two days ago the city's last residents had gathered. More civilians were sent running for their lives.

Villages and bridges to the south of Grozny are now becoming Russian targets as well, for many fighters commute to Grozny from those villages.

Many other people, however, are simply struggling to get on with their lives in the face of a crippling war.

Officials in Chechnya and neighboring Ingushetia were irate Friday about a wave of arrests by Russians.

"The Russians think all men here are fighters," said Magomet Batayer, head of local administration in the Sunzha district south of Gronzy.

"Many people fleeing Grozny — refugees — have been arrested at checkpoints," she said. "Nobody knows what happened to them."

At a news conference in Moscow, elite Russian commando officers, wearing balaclava masks to conceal their identities, accused the Chechens of using women and children as shields while shooting Russians in the back.

For their part, the Chechens say Russian troops have turned increasingly brutal since taking control of much of Grozny.

Russian commando teams in black ski masks are now moving from checkpoint to checkpoint, sometimes swooping away with prisoners in helicopters. In at least one village near Grozny, they carried out house-to-house raids.

Local officials said Russians refuse to discuss the detentions, and the whereabouts of the detainees, most between the ages of 15 and 40, are unknown.

"Russian soldiers are arresting people everywhere," Batayer said, adding that about 40 men in her district have been detained.

Unconfirmed reports abound of a secret detention camp at Mozdok, headquarters for the Russian troops that poured into Chechnya Dec. 11 in a bloody campaign to end its independence drive. The mostly Muslim republic is located in the Caucasus Mountains.

Azamat Nalgiyev, an adviser to Ingush President Ruslan Aushev, said as many as 200 prisoners, both Chechen and Ingush, are believed to be in Mozdok.

Soldiers manning one strategic checkpoint near the Chechen-Ingush border, about 18 miles southwest of Grozny, confirmed that six men pulled off a refugee bus Tuesday and taken away in helicopters were sent to Mozdok.

Several witnesses independently confirmed the arrests. They said the men were stripped to the waist and forced to sit in the snow with their hands behind their heads.

In Moscow on Friday, the Russian government showed more evidence of its eagerness to put the widely unpopular war behind it.

President Boris Yeltsin issued a decree establishing a committee — presumably to be composed of Chechens opposed to rebel leader Dzhokhar Dudayev — to supervise Chechnya's return to the Russian fold.

Extraterrestrial search moves to skies of 'land down under'

By Geoff Spencer
Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia — The huge radio astronomy observatory sits in the outback 220 miles west of Sydney — and perhaps less than five light years away from extraterrestrial civilization.

For five months starting Thursday, scientists funded by top computer industry whizzes will use the Parkes telescope to scan billions of radio waves across the galaxy in search of extraterrestrial life on 200 stars.

The scan is part of a larger project, dubbed Project Phoenix, in which observatories around the world are focusing on 1,000 stars for at least the rest of the decade.

It will be the biggest and most systematic sweep of its kind across the southern skies. It continues the quest for proof of alien life that was begun by NASA, which had its funding cut by the deficit-conscious Congress in 1993.

Some U.S. lawmakers have dismissed the search for other beings in the universe as pointless. But SETI, the private California-based institute that has picked up where NASA left off, regards it as vital.

"It is the most important question the human species has asked itself ... are we alone or are we not? Either way it's mighty important," said scientist Jill Tarter, one of a group of former NASA astrophysicists now with SETI, which stands for search for extraterrestrial intelligence.

The search is backed by Hewlett-Packard Co. co-founders David Packard and William Hewlett, Intel Corp. co-founder Gordon Moore, Paul Allen, co-founder of Microsoft Corp., and science fiction author Arthur C. Clarke.

Most of the stars that will be watched are similar in age and size to our sun and so could have Earth-like planets capable of sustaining life, said project spokesman Seth Shostak.

The closest is about 4.5 light years from Earth; the most distant 150 light years away. A light year — the distance light travels in a vacuum in one year — equals 5.88 trillion miles.

The project's aim is to identify artificial signals amid the deluge of natural radio waves constantly pulsing through the cosmos. Such a find could be a sign of extraterrestrial civilization, the scientists say.

"It's like Columbus getting his sailing ships together and heading out for America," said Kel Wellington, of Australia's Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organization, which operates the Parkes observatory.

Attempts to listen in on alien signals have gone on for decades. This exercise will be much more than twiddling a radio dial.

Intricate computerized equipment, developed by NASA for its now defunct research effort, has been attached to the 210-foot Parkes dish.

It will monitor and analyze 28 million radio channels simultaneously in a spectrum which covers radio, television and microwave signals.

"If an (alien) signal is found, it won't be heard by a human ear. We'll see it first on a computer screen," said Shostak.

Such messages might have taken generations to cross vast distances of space — and it's unlikely any earthling would understand it.

Earth itself has been sending artificial signals since radio was invented a century ago — perhaps not enough time for distant extraterrestrials to know of our existence, Shostak said.

Bad weather claims lives of at least 16 in Europe

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — Furious winds flipped planes and flung trees, while heavy rains flooded homes and blocked trains Friday as freakish weather lashed Europe. More bad news was forecast.

At least 16 people have been killed in a week of storms that have flooded thousands of homes. Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Luxembourg, Switzerland and the Netherlands have been the hardest hit.

Gusts up to 130 mph ripped across Switzerland, where streets and highways throughout the country were blocked by fallen trees. The temperature in Lucerne plunged by 18 degrees in one 15-minute period.

Officials in Zurich estimated millions in damage at the airport alone as fierce winds pushed parked airplanes along the tarmac. The planes crashed into each other or flipped over.

In Austria, Germany and Belgium strong winds ripped off roofs and knocked down trees over widespread areas. Winds of up to 100 mph hit southern Germany, blocking roads with fallen trees.

Two men were killed near Cham in northern Bavaria when their car skidded off an icy road, and another German man was killed when he was hit by a falling tree while driving in neighboring Austria.

The Main, Rhine and Mosel rivers and their tributaries continued to flood in Germany. In Frankfurt, the Main poured muddy water onto low-lying streets near city hall and the Intercontinental Hotel. Miltenberg, Worth and other towns along the Main in Bavaria were also flooded.

Barge traffic on the rivers was shut down as the Rhine rose toward the 32.5-foot level that would flood Cologne's historic Old Town district.

In Koblenz, where the Mosel flows into the Rhine, about 7,000 people were trapped by water surrounding their homes. Rescuers used boats to get them out, but police said many elderly residents refused to go and simply moved upstairs.

German, French and U.S. soldiers helped with sandbagging and evacuations. Military planes, including Tornado jet fighters, patrolled overhead to provide early warning to downstream communities, the Defense Ministry in Bonn said.

Rains tapered off in inundated northern France, but more showers were forecast for the coming days. At least three people were killed in the past week's floods and three others were reported missing and presumed dead.

Six high school students were killed in Toul, near Nancy, on Thursday when high winds toppled a crane onto a school.

In Belgium, high winds and rains hit overnight. A man in the town of Aalst was killed by a flying pigeon coop blown by a strong gust. The Meuse river flooded at Dinant, blocking roads and railroad tracks. Schools were closed.

In Luxembourg, a child was washed away by flood waters in the town of Meersch but managed to crawl out before being drowned. About 60 people were evacuated from their homes in the village of Steinheim where the Sure river overflowed.

Authorities in the southern Dutch city of Maastricht said waters in the river Maas were nearing record level. More than 1,000 residents have already been evacuated from their homes in the region.

Japan suffers aftershock during reconstruction

KOBE, Japan (AP) — A mild aftershock jolted the city center today, rocking thousands of half-destroyed buildings already in danger of collapsing from last week's devastating earthquake.

Today's quake had a magnitude of 3.0, the Central Meteorological Agency reported. That was enough force to jounce precariously standing highway overpasses and apartment buildings.

There were no immediate reports of damage from the 8:12 a.m. aftershock, which was centered six miles underground in eastern Hyogo state.

More than 15,000 soldiers and police continued today to clear smashed concrete in the search for 29 people still missing from the Jan. 17 quake, which claimed 5,090 lives.

The 7.2 magnitude quake was the second-worst to hit Japan this century. In addition to the heavy loss of life, 88,000 buildings destroyed or severely damaged.

In desperation, but with perseverance, tens of thousands of quake victims queued in orderly lines Friday to apply for new homes they're unlikely to get.

Noriyoshi Kochi, a 26-year-old accountant, was one of the first of more than 37,000 victims to apply for just 2,700 units of temporary government housing. His tale is like many others in Kobe: His home was flattened and his job is in jeopardy.

"My company is open, but I'm not sure our clients can pay their bills because many had their businesses destroyed," Kochi said.

But Kochi and his mother, who lives with him, don't fall into any of the top-priority categories — such as being elderly or handicapped — for housing. So he rates his chance of getting a place to live as "most likely zero."

The housing line was neat and without commotion, but its length showed how edgy the 225,000 homeless in Kobe are getting. People don't have to apply for the housing until Feb. 2, but many lined up Friday — the first day applications were being accepted — just to be sure.

This devastated port city lies on a narrow strip of land between the sea and the mountains, leaving limited space to build housing.

The government, meanwhile, has come under increasing fire for allowing turf battles between ministries to interfere with the rescue efforts — and for accepting assistance from only 22 of the 59 countries that offered to help.

While officials are saying no thanks, hundreds of thousands of refugees are still packed into cold shelters in gymnasiums, government buildings or tent camps. Many now face an outbreak of influenza.

Among many other items, Japanese officials have turned down:

■ a country club's offer to shelter victims. Yoji Koori of the Arima Royal Golf Club said city officials told him it wouldn't be fair for some homeless to enjoy heat and clean toilets while most stayed in the cold.

■ an offer to house 2,000 victims on the aircraft carrier USS Independence. Kishichirou Amae, a Foreign Ministry spokesman, said many victims like to return periodically to their damaged homes, and they couldn't do that from the carrier.

But Michiyo Hayama, a Tokyo housewife, said she was shocked that offer was turned down. "Think of all the people who have had to suffer in makeshift shelters without heat and water as a result."

■ U.S. military offers of transportation and medical assistance, road clearing, rubble removal, power generation and mass casualty care. Officials did, however, accept water, some tents and 60,000 blankets from U.S. forces in Japan.

■ an offer of 40,000 pounds of rice from Louisiana. Officials said Japan had enough of its own rice.

Those decisions don't sit well with ordinary Japanese.

"I don't care what the color of soldiers' eyes are, as long as they could have saved my wife," an elderly man was quoted as saying in Friday's Yomiuri newspaper.

Government officials have defended their actions by saying that Japan does not have the infrastructure to accept outside aid, and the wrong kinds of aid could actually hinder relief efforts.

Critics, though, say caution and territoriality among officials, and a desire not to depend on outsiders contributed to the decisions.

As victims hope, and bureaucrats wrangle, reconstruction moved ahead in Kobe, the port city that suffered the brunt of the quake. A main expressway into the city reopened Friday, allowing trucks to ferry in emergency supplies. That vital link soon slowed to a crawl, however, and traffic backed up 20 miles at some points.

Most states favor budget amendment, survey says

Associated Press

A majority of states would ratify the balanced budget amendment now working its way through Congress, but perhaps not the three-quarters margin required, a nationwide survey of legislative leaders suggests.

The Associated Press interviewed nearly 300 legislators across the nation Thursday and Friday, and found most ready to ratify what would be the 28th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

But while some legislators predicted quick, enthusiastic passage — it will pass "like grain through a goose," crowed Utah House Minority Leader Frank Pignanelli, a Democrat — others said their states were wary of crimping the flow of federal dollars.

By the legislators' assessments, the measure appears likely to be ratified in 32 states. It's likely to lose in two, New York and Vermont, and faces uncertain prospects in the remaining 16.

The amendment, requiring the federal government to balance its ledgers in all peacetime fiscal years, passed the House of Representatives on Thursday and now goes to the Senate.

Its passage is far from certain there. If it does pass, it would be sent to the state legislatures, and would need to pass 38 to be ratified.

There is a seven-year time limit for ratification. At least one state, Idaho, would need at least two years for passage because all such amendments require a vote of the people. Other states appear likely to pass the measure within days of any Senate approval.

"It will move through this Legislature with the speed of a boat under full sail with a high wind on smooth water," predicted Indiana Senate President Pro Tem Robert Garton, a Republican.

All states but Vermont require their own budgets to be balanced, and many have long called on the federal government to do the same. But even many legislators who philosophically support the idea of balanced budgets are worried about the effect the amendment could have on the states.

Marcus Gaspard, the Democratic majority leader of the Washington state Senate, spoke for many when he said he would vote for the balanced budget amendment only if he could be sure Congress wouldn't balance the budget by shoveling "unfunded mandates" onto the states.

Unfunded mandates are laws requiring the states to provide services, but providing no federal money to do so. The U.S. Senate passed a bill Friday designed to sharply curtail the practice; the House is still debating the issue.

"There is a bipartisan mood out there that we'd all like a balanced budget, but we don't want to be part of a shell game for that to be accomplished," Gaspard said.

In Missouri, Senate President Pro Tem James Mathewson expressed the same concern.

Commerce department makes rosy decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Madame Delbard, Diplomat, Obsession and other popular imported roses should be plentiful in Valentine bouquets. But here's the thorn: A government ruling Friday could eventually lead to higher prices.

The Commerce Department agreed with U.S. rose growers that Colombia and Ecuador were "dumping" flowers on the market, selling roses to U.S. distributors at illegally low prices to undercut domestic growers.

But their overall culpability was ruled to be vastly less than Commerce Department officials had determined in a preliminary decision last September.

Both sides found something to smile about.

Even though far less dumping was found than U.S. growers had alleged, the decision should promote more discipline by Latin sellers and give the beleaguered U.S. rose industry "a little relief," said James Cannon, attorney for the domestic Floral Trade Council.

"We are very happy; our industry will survive," said Ecuador's ambassador to the United States, Edgar Teran.

Whether the ruling leads to tariffs — which ultimately could raise consumer prices — depends on an International Trade Commission determination of whether U.S. growers were adversely affected by the dumping. That ruling is due in 45 days.

In any event, rose availability for Valentines' Day shoppers should not be affected, industry officials said. And for the future, a price increase of a few cents would not be enough to keep the popular Latin imports out of the U.S. market.

As sweethearts browse for just the right shade of red — be it California's standouts, the Royalty and the Kardinal, or Colombia's hearty, deep-hued Madame Delbard — they will be paying premium prices as usual come Valentines Day. That's because flower prices vary widely during the year, and are always high on peak demand holidays.

Any future increase depends largely on whether tariffs are imposed.

"Prices won't necessarily increase by 6 percent, but it's going to put upward pressure on prices," said Bryan Riley, trade expert for the Citizens for Sound Economy, which opposes tariffs. "That's not a good thing for consumers."

Florists Transworld Delivery, the delivery network of 78,000 florists worldwide, estimates that more than 130 million roses will be sold for Valentine's Day. That includes not only the popular red and pink hues but Ecuador's selection of exotic orange, brown, black and zebra colors.

FTD officials say they rely heavily on imports to meet demand.

In Friday's decision, the Commerce Department found that Colombian growers were selling on average 6.4 percent under market prices, and Ecuador 6.3 percent. That compared to September's preliminary findings of 22 percent against Colombia and 50 percent against Ecuador.

It means, according to Ambassador Teran, that Ecuador's fledgling rose industry will not be priced out of business, which he predicted would occur if the preliminary decision were upheld and resulted in a 50 percent tariff.

Boy receives governor's pardon, talk show offers

By Maria Fisher
Associated Press

GLADSTONE, Mo. — One day, Cody McGannon was just another 10-year-old grounded for telling a lie.

Now, the fourth-grader has a pardon from the governor — and offers from the Phil Donahue and Jay Leno shows.

"Can you believe this? I know I can't," Cody's mother, Elisabeth Jones, said Thursday. "Donahue wants to fly Cody and I out to New York City. Then Jay Leno's office called last night. And he was in The Washington Post yesterday."

Cody captured all the attention when he wrote to Gov. Mel Carnahan, asking for "amnesty" from being grounded.

The crime: telling his mom and stepfather he hadn't opened his bedroom window when he had. Mrs. Jones said it was simply a matter of principle.

The punishment: no privileges for one week. That meant no allowance, no television, no bike riding, no visiting friends and no guests.

"No way. Unreasonable," said Cody, who lives in this Kansas City suburb with his parents and three siblings.

If he didn't like it, maybe he should take it up with the governor, Cody's stepfather, Alex Jones, told him.

Fine, Cody said.

After serving four days of his punishment, Cody wrote a two-paragraph, handwritten letter to Carnahan, dated Jan. 19, and explained what happened. He wanted a pardon so he could play football with his friends.

"I hope you will grant me amnesty on Saturday, January 21, 1995. Love, Cody."

Mrs. Jones faxed Cody's letter to the governor Jan. 20 from her job as a trucking company dispatcher. She included a cover letter saying she was impressed by Cody's commitment and sincerity.

"I told (Cody) that if the governor gives him a pardon, then he's off the hook. ... But we never expected to a get a letter back."

Parents of accused man express regret

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — A man charged in two deadly abortion clinic shootings was obsessed with Catholicism and had visions of "an evil birdlike figure," his parents said Friday, expressing regret they hadn't helped him seek mental treatment.

In their first public comments since the shootings, John C. Salvi II and his wife, Anne Marie, said they might have prevented the attacks if they had recognized the seriousness of their son's torment.

They also extended their condolences to the families of the two receptionists killed in the shootings.

"We only wish we could bring them back and erase the pain of their loved ones. Unfortunately, we cannot," Salvi read from a statement at a news conference as his wife sat weeping nearby.

John C. Salvi III, a 22-year-old apprentice hairdresser from Hampton, N.H., is charged in the Dec. 30 rifle assaults on two suburban Boston abortion clinics. Shannon Lowney and Lee Ann Nichols were killed and five others were wounded.

The following day a clinic in Norfolk, Va., was raked by gunfire. No one was hurt, but Salvi was arrested minutes later.

In a low voice, the elder Salvi detailed his son's bizarre behavior. He also urged other parents not to dismiss similar expressions by their children, as he and his wife had.

The couple refused to answer questions.

"John has been obsessed with his Catholic faith and has had delusions about conspiracies against Catholics, the end of the world, the need for currency printed by the church and the presence of an anti-Christ among us," Salvi said.

He said his son had once claimed to "have seen a big, black evil birdlike figure over his shoulder" in the family's home in Naples, Fla.

Another time, the younger Salvi told his parents he had seen evil in a rented apartment and "stayed up all night in prayer to keep it away from him."

"We took his silence and recent behavior as an improvement over things that have happened in the past," the father said. "We know now how wrong we were. ... If we had gotten him help, maybe this terrible tragedy might not have happened."

Boston attorney William Crowe, center, with John Salvi II, left, and his wife Anne Marie Salvi, right, talks with reporters Friday during a news conference in Boston.

The younger Salvi is charged with two counts of murder and five counts of attempted murder. He is being held without bail. He also faces state charges in Virginia and federal charges. His next court date is Feb. 1.

William D. Crowe, the parents' lawyer, said the Salvis had noticed a rising religious fervor in their son since he was a teen-ager, expressed most recently through regular Bible readings.

The attorney for the younger Salvi, J.W. Carney Jr., plans to meet with U.S. Attorney Donald Stern on Monday.

Appeals court supports Murdoch's purchase of Post

The 1993 waiver was the first time the FCC had relaxed its rules on cross ownership. The regulatory agency said it acted because hundreds of jobs were at stake.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 1993 action by federal regulators that allowed Fox Television's principal owner, Rupert Murdoch, to buy the New York Post was upheld Friday by a U.S. Court of Appeals panel.

At the time that he bought the financially strapped Post, Murdoch owned WNYW-TV in New York. The Federal Communications Commission then issued a permanent waiver of rules that prohibited common ownership of a broadcast station and a daily newspaper in the same market.

"The FCC's detailed decision ... was not arbitrary and capricious or unsupported by the record," a three-judge panel of the court ruled in rejecting challenges brought by the Metropolitan Council of NAACP Branches and others.

"We conclude that none of their arguments is meritorious," the court said.

The 1993 waiver was the first time the FCC had relaxed its rules on cross ownership. The regulatory agency said it acted because hundreds of jobs were at stake.

More recently, Murdoch has been before the FCC in a dispute with NBC, which alleges that the stations that make up the foundation of Murdoch's Fox TV network violate foreign ownership restrictions.

That case figured in news reports shortly after last year's election when Murdoch met with then-incoming House Speaker Newt Gingrich. Democrats attacked Gingrich for that meeting because Murdoch also owns HarperCollins, the publisher who had agreed to pay Gingrich a $4.5 million advance for two books.

Gingrich has announced since then he would forgo the advance and would be paid only royalties on sale of the books. He said he had no idea Murdoch owned HarperCollins.

When Murdoch acquired the New York TV station in 1986, he already owned the Post. He was given two years to divest his interest in the newspaper to satisfy the cross-ownership requirement. But one buyer went bankrupt, another bought it then had to back out and the newspaper went into bankruptcy.

Various officials, including then-Gov. Mario Cuomo, asked Murdoch to repurchase the paper and other potential buyers surfaced. Murdoch agreed to assume management of the Post on the condition he would obtain the permanent FCC waiver.

His presentation to the government regulators was twofold: There was no other viable buyer willing to take on the large financial burden, and enforcing the longstanding cross-ownership rule would result not in diverse ownership but in elimination of a competitive voice, the Post's.

The purchase was authorized by the bankruptcy court on Sept. 15, 1993.

Gingrich incurs anger of mayors at conference

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Newt Gingrich raised the ire of mayors Friday by saying Congress would cut back the new crime law that mayors lobbied hard to pass. President Clinton urged them to fight any attempt to "fix what ain't broke."

The mayors, mostly big-city Democrats, accused Republican leaders of engaging in double-talk and said Gingrich is trying to cram a GOP agenda down their throats.

"His system is filled with contradictions," said Mayor Paul Soglin of Madison, Wis.

The U.S. Conference of Mayors, which enthusiastically backed President Clinton's anti-crime package last year, later heard Clinton exhort the group to fight any attempt to repeal the assault-style weapons ban or any other part of the hard-fought legislation.

"It is very important that we not fix what ain't broke and that we not become diverted by issues that can only divide us when there is so much we can do that will bring us together," Clinton said.

Referring specifically to the firearms ban, Clinton said, "Let's let this alone and go on about the business of the country. ... I hope we can put an end to this war."

The mayors' group closed its winter meeting Friday without endorsing Republican changes to the plan. Mayors complained that Republicans were ignoring them.

"Congress can debate crime all they want. The mayors and police chiefs deal with the problems every day," said Chicago Mayor Richard Daley.

Mayor Victor Ashe of Knoxville, Tenn., who is a Republican and president of the mayors conference, said mayors didn't feel a formal position was necessary, since GOP leaders in Congress likely would revamp the crime law anyway.

"It's not a matter of advocating or not advocating," Ashe said. "It's a matter of looking at what's going to happen, and if you want to help shape the change or if you want to sit by and watch the change happen."

Gingrich told the mayors that he would convene hearings and consult city leaders on GOP revisions to the $30 billion crime law passed last year. That law banned certain assault-style weapons and provided funds for prison construction, 100,000 new police officers and a variety of crime prevention measures.

Republicans have said they plan to dip into the prevention money to make more funds available for punitive measures, such as prisons. While Gingrich spoke, a House committee was writing the reforms — on a bill some mayors said they have yet to see.

"To pass the bill without the input of the mayors ... is really kind of silly," said Denver Mayor Wellington Webb. "No matter what passes here, it's only going to be as effective as our ability to do it in our cities and on our streets."

Gingrich said the mayors would have a chance to participate in decisions on "seven or eight pieces" of the bill over the next four months. Ashe said the mayors conference would hold Gingrich to his word.

But other mayors were confused about whether they would get this promised input, since another Republican, Rep. Bill McCollum of Florida, previously said there would be no hearings and urged mayors to send in their suggestions by phone or by fax.

"I'd like to find out what the reality is," said Detroit Mayor Dennis Archer. "We hear one thing coming from a leader representing the Republican Party, saying no dialogue, no hearing. Today what I heard was entirely different. Everybody is chomping at the bit."

Soglin accused Gingrich of violating his agreement with mayors in gaining their support for some GOP reforms in the crime bill last August. He asked the speaker what now was so unacceptable about the crime bill "that we have to go back and revisit it?"

"What I hear you saying is everything that happened prior to Labor Day doesn't count," Soglin said.

Gingrich pulled a laminated copy of the GOP's "Contract With America" from his coat pocket and said, "I'm saying everything that happened prior to November 8th doesn't count."

New Simpson book refutes murder charges

By Hillel Italie
Associated Press

NEW YORK — In a book filled with letters of support and loving family photographs, O.J. Simpson responds to the charge that he murdered ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson by insisting: "I could never do such a thing."

"I could never kill anyone, especially Nicole," he writes in "I Want to Tell You," which arrived in bookstores Friday. "Nicole always used to say to me even after we split, 'I love you.' And I'd say back, 'I love you.' We tried to say these things whenever we parted because you just never knew."

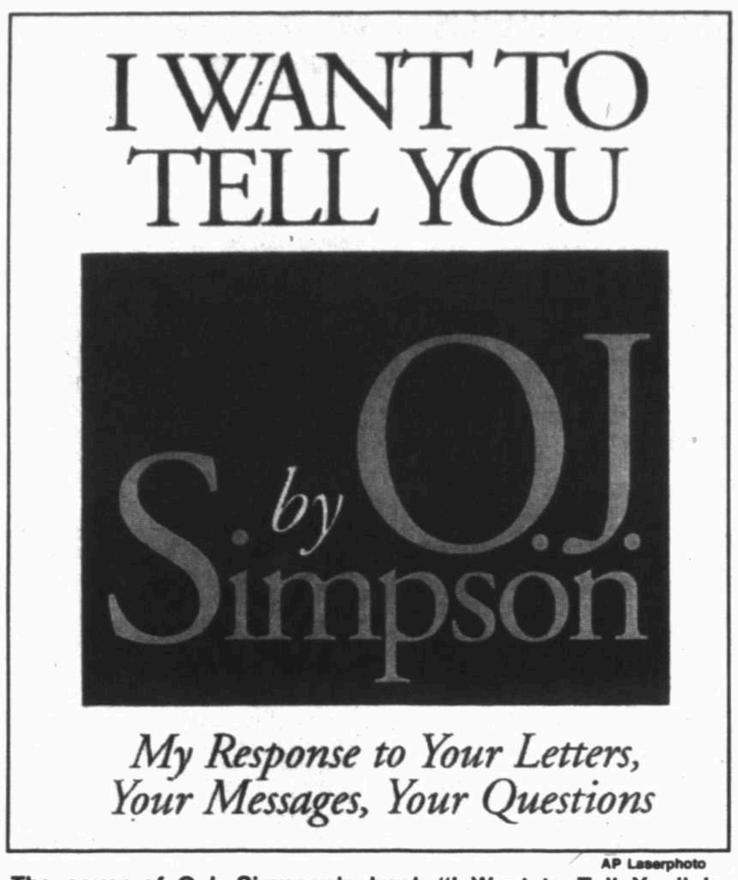
Simpson, also charged with murdering Ms. Simpson's friend Ronald Goldman, presents himself as a caring, spiritual man victimized both by an untrustworthy legal system and by a sensationalist, often racist press.

"Now," he writes, "I am able to relate to Job."

Prosecutors in the murder trial have portrayed a very different O.J. Simpson, however. In opening statements earlier this week, Deputy District Attorney Christopher Darden said Simpson killed his ex-wife so no one else could have her. And fellow prosecutor Marcia Clark outlined a list of physical evidence and test results that she said provided "devastating proof" of Simpson's guilt.

No courtroom action was scheduled Friday; a battle Thursday over last-minute witnesses mentioned in the defense's opening statement led Superior Court Judge Lance Ito to adjourn the proceedings until next week.

Much of Simpson's book alternates between letters received in jail and his responses. Among the chapter titles: "Spousal Abuse," in which he writes, "The public needs to be awakened to the issue," but shouldn't use him as an example.



AP Laserphoto

The cover of O.J. Simpson's book "I Want to Tell You" is shown in this handout photo from publishers Little, Brown and Company, Monday January 9.

In the back, a chronology of his life includes everything from 1949 ("O.J. gets rickets") to 1989 ("Nicole calls 911 on New Year's Eve").

Reached by telephone Friday at her Dana Point, Calif., home, Ms. Simpson's mother, Juditha Brown, said she was not offended by the book. "If that's what you can do in jail to make a million dollars, I guess that's the thing to do," she said.

In the past, Goldman's father, Fred Goldman, has criticized the book as a "disgusting attempt at commercialism."

The tone of "I Want to Tell You" often is self-pitying, similar to the Simpson letter released around the time of his arrest last June, when he said at times he felt like a "battered husband."

Several pages of family photographs are included in the book. In one picture, Simpson's son Jason is wearing a Los Angeles Police Department cap.

"This picture was taken at my Rockingham home," Simpson writes, "back when I supported the LAPD."

Simpson's book was published by Little, Brown & Co. A 90-minute audiocassette, with a subdued-sounding Simpson reading sections dictated into a tape recorder, was released Friday by Time Warner AudioBooks.

While Little, Brown gave "I Want to Tell You" an initial printing of 500,000, reaction from many booksellers ranged from muted to hostile.

"We will not do anything special for it," said Barry Martin, co-owner of BOOK'em Mysteries in South Pasadena, Calif. "Our readership is so discerning and we are so saturated by the media. People come here to get away. With mystery books, there is a beginning, a middle and an end. With the O.J. case, there seems to be no end."

Paulette Hutt, manager of the Paperback Booksmith in Sarasota, Fla., said her profits would be donated to a local women's shelter.

Kathryn Bullington, owner of Your Local Bookie in Naples, Fla., said proceeds will go to a fund for the two children of Simpson and his late ex-wife. "I find the purpose of the book distasteful," said Bullington, who added she collected more than 400 signatures protesting the book.

"If Jeffrey Dahmer had run out of money for his defense team, this country would have been outraged, but because O.J. is a star, there is a double standard."

Charles Hayward, president of Little, Brown, said he felt "no qualms making money off of Mr. Simpson's or of any of the books we publish."

President heads meeting to discuss welfare reform

WASHINGTON (AP) — Warming up for today's bipartisan meeting on welfare reform, President Clinton cautioned against trying to cut off benefits to people "without regard to what will happen to their children."

Republicans who are on the weekend guest list said they're already well on their way to writing a welfare reform plan, with or without the White House.

"I think the train is way down the track on welfare and that the president is jumping on the caboose. But I'm happy to have him on board," said Rep. Tim Hutchinson, R-Ark., who will attend the meeting at Blair House, the presidential guest quarters.

Today's 5½-hour conference will bring White House officials together with legislators, mayors and governors as Clinton looks for ways to influence fast-moving legislation to radically change the nation's welfare system.

But even the White House sought to play down expectations. Just identifying the scope of the problem and areas of agreement and disagreement is a "reasonable goal," said White House press secretary Mike McCurry.

To prepare for the meeting, Clinton met Friday with four current and former welfare recipients who he said had "made the decision to choose work over welfare."

"I think the train is way down the track on welfare and that the president is jumping on the caboose. But I'm happy to have him on board.'

— Rep. Tim Hutchinson, R-Ark.

Asked his chief worries about GOP proposals, Clinton said some Republicans "seem to say that we should cut people off of assistance without regard to what will happen to their children and without regard to whether they will have the skills they need to move into the work force."

He said his other areas of concern are ensuring that no states are unfairly hurt by the reform effort and that people who need to go on welfare briefly when they hit a "bump in the road" get the help they need.

Rep. Dave Camp, R-Mich., said he is willing to look for common ground, but questions the White House commitment. "If they were serious about being players in welfare reform, we would have had this meeting months ago," Camp said.

Hutchinson said he does not believe a significant agreement will be reached, particularly because so many people — Republicans and Democrats, mayors and governors, House members and senators — will be involved.

Robert Rector, a welfare expert with the conservative Heritage Foundation, dismisses Clinton's role altogether, saying "he is not a player right now and it is unlikely that he will be."

A House Ways and Means subcommittee headed by Rep. Clay Shaw, R-Fla., will have held four hearings on welfare reform by Saturday's meeting, and Republican lawmakers and governors have already met twice as they try to shape their reform plan.

"We're way down the line over here in the House," said Shaw.

Lawyer intercedes on behalf of child, his adoptive parents

CHICAGO (AP) — Baby Richard's lawyer asked the U.S. Supreme Court on Friday to allow the 3½-year-old boy to stay with his adoptive parents, the only family he has ever known.

Cook County Public Guardian Patrick Murphy asked Justice John Paul Stevens to delay the boy's transfer to his biological father, Otakar Kirchner, pending a full appeal to the high court.

The boy "will suffer irreparable harm" if the court refuses to hear the case, Murphy wrote.

Lawyers for the boy's adoptive parents, known in court documents only as John and Jane Doe, filed a similar motion late Friday.

The Supreme Court has previously refused to hear the case.

Baby Richard's adoption by the suburban Chicago couple he has lived with since birth was invalidated last year by the state Supreme Court, which ruled that Kirchner had been denied his parental rights.

Richard was put up for adoption by his mother, who believed Kirchner had abandoned her. They have since married and Kirchner, who was led to believe the boy had died, began fighting for custody before the boy was 2 months old.

On Wednesday, the state court granted Kirchner's request to have the child turned over to him. And on Thursday, it refused to delay its order.

Kirchner's lawyer, Loren Heinemann, said his client would not attempt to take custody of Baby Richard until he hears from the U.S. Supreme Court.

Also stepping into the fray Friday was Gov. Jim Edgar's wife, who pleaded with Kirchner not to take the boy. Her husband has criticized the courts' decisions.

"Love him so much that as an adult, you endure the pain of the choices made when he was a baby," Brenda Edgar said in a letter to Kirchner.

Kirchner, 38, has proposed a gradual transition that would end with Baby Richard going to live with him and his wife, Daniela, 27, who is the boy's biological mother. The adoptive parents would have visitation rights.

Houston superintendent hopes for more job stability

By Susan Besze Wallace
The Houston Post

HOUSTON — Black Lucchese lizard cowboy boots. That's what Houston schools Superintendent Rod Paige got for Christmas from his 20-member Cabinet.

His predecessor got a desk chair.

Since he was asked to lead the Houston Independent School District last January, Paige hasn't had a chance to do much sitting. It's been a year marked by crises, consternation, lots of re-evaluation and little celebration.

Even so, the shiny new boots, a symbol of Paige's professional-yet-downhome demeanor, could likely be around HISD longer than former Superintendent Frank Petruzielo's chair was.

Though his one-year contract expires in June, Paige would like to stay a little longer. And several members of the school board, who this month begin the superintendent's annual evaluation, hope he does.

"In a perverse way, I've enjoyed the last year," said the superintendent. "I'd be interested in staying on a while."

Paige, 61, said it will take about another year to institute the changes he wants to see in administration, and attitudes.

In the last 12 months he has reorganized the district's flow chart in hopes of providing more help, more quickly, to each of HISD's 244 campuses. He has also opened up HISD's operations to scrutiny from area professionals, another effort aimed at streamlining the way the city's largest employer does business.

'I came into a system that was right on the edge of very difficult problems. I'm a veteran now. I've gotten five years experience in 12 months.'

— Rod Paige, Houston schools Superintendent

Paige said it will take time for those changes to jell. And time to change the culture of the school district — the "mistrust, unwillingness to respect colleagues . . . and conniving" — that has been a big disappointment to him.

"We're all wearing the same color uniform," said the former coach who wears Pittsburgh Steelers cufflinks. "But sometimes you still get blindsided."

The Hispanic community felt that way last January when the school board surprised everyone by tapping Paige, a fellow board member and college dean without experience leading a school district. A newly formed Hispanic Education Committee protested and sued for a year to stop Paige's superintendency and institute a traditional search process.

The suit was dismissed this month, and the group plans to appeal.

Despite the protest, Paige wasted no time in announcing sweeping changes at Wheatley High School and Dowling Middle School. Just one week after his first day on the job, he instituted administrative teams to help both schools overcome low academic performance and a spirit of hopelessness.

It wasn't long, however, before Paige's attention was pulled back by another explosive controversy. The district's Alternative Certification Program, a major source of HISD's bilingual teachers, was discovered to be fraught with fake transcripts, payoffs and unqualified teacher candidates. Reconstruction of the program is still ongoing.

"I came into a system that was right on the edge of very difficult problems," Paige said. "I'm a veteran now. I've gotten five years experience in 12 months."

Paige said his biggest regret is not releasing an investigative report on the Alternative Certification Program earlier than he did, a hesitation that prompted several open records requests and a fair share of criticism.

"It's rare that I don't go with my instincts," said Paige, who withheld the report on legal advice. "I wanted to throw it out into the street for everyone to see. I learned a good lesson."

This month, school board members are filling out evaluations and scheduling one-on-one meetings with the superintendent, a precursor to the board's annual retreat in two weeks.

Six trustees told The Houston Post they have given or will give Paige glowing reviews. Three others could not be reached for comment or declined to be specific about their evaluations.

"Just about every time I think I have a great idea and I go in to tell him, he's always one step ahead of me," said trustee Don McAdams. "Personally, I can't imagine HISD finding a better superintendent.

"He is a very secure human being. He does not have his ego out on the line. That inner security. . . . It's enabled him to throw open his arms and make some desperately needed changes.

"I hope he stays for a long time."

Houston Federation of Teachers President Gayle Fallon, however, is critical of Paige.

"He's the most anti-teacher superintendent we've had in the past decade," Fallon said. "He has given them nothing."

Fallon fought unsuccessfully for teacher raises during budget proceedings last summer. Paige maintained that a raise takes a tax hike, a tax hike takes public support, public support takes public faith, and the district had yet to earn it.

"We have a different mission," Paige said of Fallon. "We are here for teaching and learning and she is trying to gain members for her organization. I respect that, but no one can tell me I don't think teachers are the most important part of our organization."

Fallon also asserts that her biggest concern about Paige's appointment has come true. She said Paige hasn't been running the show — the school board has. "I can empathize with that view now," Paige said. "In those first few months, in my head, I was still operating as a school board member. I wanted to satisfy the board all the time. . . . I collaborated with them on tough decisions."

Disagreements over personnel changes brought about "natural tension" with board members, Paige said, and a true transition into his role as superintendent.

Paige is on two years leave as dean of education at Texas Southern University and misses teaching. But elementary school students have a wide-eyed wonder that graduate students don't and he likes that.

One of the high points of his tenure came on a Sunday afternoon several months ago. Paige was watching television at home when his phone rang and a voice asked, "Are you superintendent of HISD?"

When Paige answered yes, the voice declared an interest in computers, and wanted Paige's advice on how to go about learning more. The voice was that of Jermaine Thibodeaux, then a sixth-grader at Blackshear Elementary.

"I have no idea where he got my number," Paige laughed.

The two struck up a friendship. And Paige, struck by Thibodeaux's determination, arranged for him to shadow an employee of HISD's technology department.

Weeks later, Thibodeaux called Paige at home again, this time wanting to borrow a computer which he could learn on at home. Paige was at Office Depot, struggling with writing a $1,400 check for the computer, and realized he could probably find a business donor to help Thibodeaux plan for his future. He did.

There are several students Paige talks to regularly, and then there are those who don't always approve of him.

Paige was shaking hands after attending Wheeler Avenue Baptist Church one Sunday. He reached out to a woman, and then to her son, and the boy wouldn't offer his hand.

"I'm leaning way down," Paige said, "and all of a sudden this finger starts shaking in my face saying, 'You were supposed to be at my program and you weren't.'

"That's what it's all about right there," he said, "the kids."

Paige said despite the turbulence, he's having fun.

"But I'm not interested in a long tenure as superintendent of schools," he said. "It doesn't permit the other facets of my life."

Paige — who hasn't taken a vacation or sick day and worked through the October floods and holidays — said he misses having the time to play tennis, lift weights and read, and misses the freedom to work on political campaigns.

Paige, a Republican, said last November's upheaval was the first major campaign he's sat out in decades.

Country club golfers mourn mascot's death

AMARILLO (AP) — Members of a Panhandle country club are outraged over the shooting death of the dog they had raised from a pup to be the club mascot.

"Kujo" turned up about 10 years ago at the Clarendon Country Club, about 60 miles southeast of Amarillo, and began to follow the golfers around.

She observed golf course etiquette, refrained from chasing balls or blocking tee shots and stayed out of the pool. So club members fed her, and she made her own bed from a sack thrown under a bench.

Kujo became the club's mascot and her picture showed up on club caps, T-shirts, towels and even its flag.

"She really had a personality," said member Ellis Knight. "When she showed her teeth, it really looked like she was grinning at you. Everybody around here just fell in love with her."

Member Carol Hinton said she and other members speculated that Kujo was a German shepherd-coyote mix. If so, the coyote in her is probably what got her killed, she said.

Club members found 14 shell casings near U.S. 70, where somebody in a passing car is believed to have shot Kujo. No club members witnessed the shooting, but several reported hearing gunshots around noon Jan. 16.

When they realized the dog was missing on Jan. 17, club members began a search and found her body in some brush in the southeast corner of the course.

"Whoever did it just absolutely blew her up," Ms. Hinton said. "Even if the person thought she was a coyote, that's no excuse."

Clouds soak up solar energy, surprise scientists

WASHINGTON (AP) — New studies show clouds soak up large amounts of energy from the sun, casting a shadow over some basic ideas scientists use to explain the atmosphere and to forecast greenhouse warming.

The finding could force a re-evaluation of the complex computer models used to predict climate change.

Clouds are "absorbing a lot more energy than we ever thought," said Robert Cess of the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

"We had, for a long time, known that clouds are shielding the ocean surface and land surface from solar radiation by reflecting back to space," added Veerabhadran Ramanathan of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in San Diego.

Now, Ramanathan said, "We are finding that it's a double whammy here. They are shielding not only by reflecting but also by trapping a lot more solar radiation in the atmosphere."

"We had thought that clouds were like a mirror; now it seems like they are a dirty mirror," he said.

Cess and Ramanathan reached similar conclusions in separate papers appearing in Friday's edition of the journal Science.

Francisco Valero of Scripps made a comparable report to the American Meteorological Society last week and much the same findings are included in papers being prepared by Thomas Ackerman of Pennsylvania State University and Patrick Minnis at the Langley Research Center in Hampton, Va.

The findings raise questions about the way complex computer models mimic the atmosphere. Those models are a mainstay in the concern about greenhouse warming — the theory that gases released into the air could cause the planet to overheat.

Does that mean the computers are overestimating or underestimating the greenhouse threat? The scientists aren't sure.

"It's premature to know what effect it will have on the predictive aspect" of the models, said Jeffrey Kiehl of the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo.

"It's too soon to determine what the change would be," added Ramanathan.

"I'll punt on that," concluded Cess.

The researchers found that clouds appear to absorb energy equivalent to burning a 100-watt light bulb for every three square meters of the earth's surface — a square roughly 5.6 feet on each side.

The discovery that so much energy is being absorbed by clouds means that in order to keep things in balance, scientists must reduce their estimate of the energy added to the air by the water that evaporates from the oceans, lakes and rivers and then condenses into clouds.

And that means the water evaporated and then rained back to earth may be as much as one-third less than had been estimated, the researchers said.

"If this is a global phenomenon it will force us to revise our understanding of how energy is partitioned and distributed between the surface and atmosphere," said Kiehl, a co-author of both papers in Science.

Cess used data collected from a half-dozen sites around the world, noted Kiehl.

But while the reports point to a flaw in the current computer models, they don't explain why or how clouds are absorbing the energy, he said.

"It's actually increased the level of frustration" for researchers, said Kiehl.

When the computer programs are told to include the extra cloud heating they show the circulation of the atmosphere slowing down, evaporation declines and "the model in many ways looks closer to (actual) observations than we've ever been able to get the model to look," he said.

But before this phenomenon can be used regularly in the computer programs scientists must understand how it works, he said.

For example, Ramanathan said that if the heating occurs low in the atmosphere it could mean clouds rising higher and more weather activity, while if it takes place higher up the heat could form a cap and make the air more stable.

The earth absorbs more solar heat at the equator and balances the climate by moving that heat to the cold poles.

Finding unexpectedly large amounts of heat being absorbed by clouds could mean the atmosphere is handling a lot more of that transfer than scientists had thought.

Three California cities rank safest; Atlanta most dangerous

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Three California cities were ranked the safest cities in America in a new survey released Thursday, while Atlanta came in at the bottom of the heap as the most dangerous place to live.

"City Crime Rankings," published by Morgan Quitno Press of Lawrence, ranks Huntington Beach, Calif., as the safest city in America. The book details the status of crime in America's largest 100 cities and 255 metropolitan areas.

Glendale, Calif., and Fremont, Calif., placed second and third, respectively. Rounding out the five safest cities were Honolulu and Virginia Beach, Va.

Atlanta ranked as the most dangerous city, followed by St. Louis; Newark, N.J.; Little Rock, Ark., and Kansas City, Mo., in that order.

Arlington was ranked 14th as the safest city in Texas, while Dallas ranked 77th as the most dangerous. In between were Lubbock, 15; Austin, 21; El Paso, 28; San Antonio, 31; Corpus Christi, 33; and Fort Worth, 68.

The rankings were based on a city's or metropolitan area's average ranking in six categories: violent crime, murder, rape, aggravated assault, robbery and property crime. The data were compiled from 1993 FBI statistics.

Violent crime includes murder, forcible rape, robbery and aggravated assault but was listed and computed as a separate category.

Seven cities — including Chicago, Houston and Detroit — weren't given overall ratings because of incomplete information.

"Americans worry so much about crime that it is important to somehow measure just the facts," said Scott Morgan, president of Morgan Quitno, which also publishes three other annual reference books: "Crime State Rankings," "Health Care State Rankings" and a general volume "State Rankings."

"Certainly every city and metro area has high crime areas and low crime areas, but our findings enable people to learn how their hometown as a whole compares with all the other cities," Morgan said.

Huntington Beach ranked among the top five safest in the categories of property crime, murder, rape and robbery. Glendale ranked safest in the rape category and was among the top five safest in violent crime, property crime and aggravated assault. Fremont had the lowest incidence of property crime and was among the top five safest in the rape and robbery categories.

Honolulu had the lowest incidence of violent crime and was among the five lowest in the categories of robbery and aggravated assault. Virginia Beach was the safest in terms of aggravated assault and had the second safest violent crime rate.

Atlanta had the highest violent crime rate and came in among the top five most dangerous cities in the categories of property crime, robbery and aggravated assault. St. Louis was among the top five in all six categories except rape.

Newark ranked highest in the number of robberies and among the top five in the violent crime category. Little Rock ranked highest in the category of aggravated assault and in the top five in the violent crime category. Kansas City didn't rank in the top five in any category but had an overall ranking of 89 out of 93.

TV styles shape perception at Simpson trial

By Scott Williams
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — Reality has found a way of intruding into "live coverage" of the O.J. Simpson trial, despite tape delays, the judge's blackout switch and network graphics using "forensic animation" and 3-D models.

The networks all advertise "live" coverage, using the pool camera operated by cable's Court TV, but what viewers actually see lags behind real-time events.

Ito has imposed a 10-second delay, which CBS and NBC use to edit audio and video feeds, imposing the familiar electronic "mosaic blur" when the evidence gets gory, and hitting the "bleep" button when the language gets blue.

ABC, CNN and E! Entertainment Television don't use any filters beyond the initial 10-second delay, but Court TV, in an abundance of precaution, adds an additional 10-second gap "to protect privacy and keep things relatively clean," Steven Brill, the network's chief executive officer, noted in an internal memorandum.

An unidentified Court TV "lawyer-journalist" also is supposed to ensure that nothing privileged gets on the air and threatens a mistrial, and the judge himself can forbid court cameras to show the monitors and jurors, using his own cutout switches to silence the microphones and black out evidence.

Despite all the precautions, however, an alternate juror's face was broadcast across the nation Tuesday, angering Superior Court Judge Lance Ito so much that he threatened to eliminate TV from the courtroom altogether.

After a hearing today, Ito accepted Court TV's apology and allowed the camera coverage to continue.

The mistake happened when the juror leaned forward in her chair as the pool camera followed prosecutor Marcia Clark walking in the courtroom. Court TV promised it wouldn't happen again.

Intellect: Now the villain?

By Caryn James
N.Y. Times News Service

Forget the theory of relativity. As the new movie "I.Q." tells you, what really matters about Albert Einstein (played by Walter Matthau) is that he is a great little matchmaker, able to see at a glance that his brilliant mathematician niece, Catherine (Meg Ryan), is secretly pining for a local mechanic named Ed (Tim Robbins).

■ Commentary

Ed is not a stupid guy, but he's no rocket scientist. In the lexicon of current American movies, Ed's lack of erudition is enough to hint that he's a decent man.

"Forrest Gump" is the most successful film to equate low I.Q. with inner goodness, but it has a lot of company on screen. In "Nell," which David Letterman more accurately called "Bride of Gump," Jodie Foster holds the moral high ground as a backwoods woman deprived of education and ordinary language. The doctors who study her discover that book learning is bad, primitivism is good.

"Nell," "I.Q." and "Forrest Gump" are breezy and enjoyable, with vast amounts of surface charm. But underneath, they are chilling in the way they link virtue with lack of intelligence. It is a theme that goes far beyond coincidence. Both "Nell" and "I.Q" were planned long before "Forrest Gump" became a catchword for holy innocence, so the newer films are not clones. Instead, they suggest a virulent anti-intellectualism in the air.

These anti-intellectual films are not the same as the goofy movies like the hit "Dumb and Dumber," a thoroughly uninventive comedy in which Jim Carrey's chipped front tooth and bowl haircut pass for humor.

There have always been silly comedies about characters so inept they're funny, from "The Three Stooges" to "Wayne's World" and "Beavis and Butt-head." But films have rarely reveled in their own idiocy with the bluntness of "Dumb and Dumber," whose very title suggests that you just can't be stupid enough on screen.

So-called hiatus begins

■ Even with thousands of fans of "My So-Called Life" rallying together in computer cyberspace via online services, ABC pulls the plug on the program.

Claire Danes, center, stars as 15-year-old Angela Chase in the popular ABC series "My So-Called Life." Appearing on the show with Danes are Tom Irwin, left, and Bess Armstrong who play Danes' parents on the show which aired its final episode of the season Thursday night.

NEW YORK — You've seen it all before.

A certain TV series ignites passion in millions. But not enough millions. Its Nielsen ratings are low. It faces oblivion. Its fans scream bloody murder.

Sometimes, their SOS (Save Our Show!) is heeded by the network bosses. Much more often, it falls on deaf ears, and the show disappears.

The fate of "My So-Called Life," which began its so-called "hiatus" after Thursday night's so-called "season conclusion" won't be decided for as much as three months.

Maybe, just maybe, it will be back next fall. Then, viewers can resume their odyssey through the minds and hearts of Angela Chase, a 15-year-old girl living near Pittsburgh, and the friends and family that surround her. Then, the audience can rejoin this show's brilliant cast, including Claire Danes, who, playing Angela, earned herself the Golden Globe for best actress in a dramatic TV series last weekend.

Maybe "My So-Called Life" will return in a more hospitable berth than this season's, up against NBC's hit sitcoms "Mad About You" and "Friends." Maybe then its ratings will be better than its current season-to-date ranking of 119th out of 142 shows.

Or maybe this unique and deeply affecting drama will call it a so-called day with episode No. 19, after which the antiquated and anything-but-unique "Matlock" takes over the time slot.

Maybe, schmaybe. But don't think the disciples of "My So-Called Life" are just sitting back and waiting for ABC to render its verdict.

For starters, they have mounted a letter-writing campaign — just as viewer activists did a decade ago to successfully save "Cagney & Lacey" from an early demise.

Meanwhile, "Never say die!" echoes through cyberspace. Self-proclaimed "So-Called Fans" are wielding the same high-tech tools in the defense of "My So-Called Life" — a computer, a modem and various on-line services — that they embraced to share their devotion to the show from the moment it premiered last August.

Loveless not just any good ol' girl

Patty Loveless

By Paulette Flowers and Otto Kitsinger

■ Country Music Memo

It's still not easy to be a "girl singer" in country music. This isn't because Music Row is full of good ol' boys (which it is). Rather, it's because those good ol' boys have read marketing studies. Most country albums are bought by women, who tend to buy albums recorded by men. This is a business; that's the bottom line.

The odds against becoming a successful female country singer are astronomical. Patty Loveless beat those odds. Twice.

The first time, she was 14-year-old Patty Ramey, a coal miner's daughter from Pikeville, Ky., who came to Nashville with 30 songs she'd written. Porter Waggoner and his then girl singer, Dolly Parton, liked what they heard and gave her a hand. Dolly even gave Patty makeup lessons in the backstage bathroom at the Ryman (which also served as the ladies' dressing room).

Two years later, Patty was the girl singer with the Wilburn Brothers show and a songwriter for their publishing company. But in 1975 she married the band's drummer, Terry Lovelace and moved to North Carolina to sing in his rock band. Fade out.

Fade in. In 1985, Patty Loveless, newly divorced (but using a variant of her married name) and working in a Nashville music store, stood in line at Fan

No industry does dumb like Hollywood

Patterson

Hollywood has a rich history of producing dumb movies. Movies that are intentionally dumb, like Steve Martin's "The Jerk," or most anything by Jerry Lewis, and movies unintentionally dumb, such as most anything by Seagal, Van Damme or post-"Rocky" Stallone.

Perhaps not since Lewis rose to fame has Hollywood invented a star that so thrives on being dumb. Jim Carrey has taken the nation — particularly the younger set — by storm. Kids flock to his movies and emerge from theaters imitating him, which no doubt results in countless injuries by kids who think their face will stretch just like his.

But if you want a few movies that are dumb and dumber — and very funny — rent these videos to see how the really clever comic actors show how it's done:

John Belushi in "Animal House." College-age dumb, which is often where dumb begins in earnest.

Steve Martin in "The Jerk." "I was born a poor, black child." Several years later, the movie itself is sort of dumb, but if you want Martin doing his stand-up routine on the silver screen, this is the closest thing to it.

Steve Martin in "Dirty Rotten Scoundrels." Martin and Michael Caine as con-men who prey on unsuspecting women. Martin transposes himself into the intellectually-challenged Ruprecht to prove just how funny dumb can be.

Marty Feldman in "Young Frankenstein." The movable hump on Igor's back was a classic Mel Brooks touch.

Cary Grant in "Monkey Business." Completely taken aback by Marilyn Monroe's beauty and charm, Grant proved you could be both eloquent and bumbling. Grant, in fact, was the master of gentlemanly charm, yet with a bumbling side from time to time. There was hope for the regular guy.

Smits, Franz share 'NYPD Blue' notes

By Steven Cole Smith
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — It was a tough case to solve: How to replace one well-liked detective, who decided to leave the force after one season, with a new cop.

But Jimmy Smits has succeeded, silencing the critics who said no one could replace David Caruso, who departed ABC's "NYPD Blue" to pursue a film career. Caruso agreed to stick around for the first few episodes this season, and then Smits — the "L.A. Law" actor — took over as Detective Bobby Simone, partner to Dennis Franz's Detective Andy Sipowicz.

The cry of "David, how could you?" turned to "Jimmy who?"

Smits, appearing at the Television Critics Association winter press tour here, said that he consciously stayed away from the controversy surrounding Caruso's departure. "I did not want to get into a situation where I would be adding fuel to what was going to be this big comparison thing," he says. "I come from that place anyway where you just let the work speak for itself."

Franz says that the chemistry between the two characters developed quickly. And that Smits' hiring was not a complete surprise: Producers Steven Bochco and David Milch, who had worked with Smits on "L.A. Law," said that "Jimmy was actually the first one considered for the role from day one," Franz says.

"And what a difficult task to ask of any human being when, in the midst of that controversy, to throw another actor into that position. The comparisons were expected, and overwhelming," Franz says. "It was a challenge, and he's come up to it terrifically."

"NYPD Blue" is seen in Dallas-Fort Worth on KTXA/Channel 21, an independent station that is one of the inaugural affiliates of United Paramount Network, because the ABC affiliate, WFAA/Channel 8, considers the series too hot to handle. "Blue" quickly became known for its occasional, brief scenes of partial nudity. One much-heralded such scene occurred this season, featuring the portly Franz and his girlfriend, played by Sharon Lawrence.

Franz said the scene, which took several hours to shoot, was a challenge. "The first time you take that robe off, you feel a little discomfort."

'Frasier, you have a call on Line 1'

By Lynette Rice
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The calls seem innocuous enough.

A poor fool tells Frasier Crane that he can't seem to shake his weight problem — evidenced by the fact he's phoning from a fast-food restaurant. The fatty in question? Jay Leno.

A lecherous scholar rings up Frasier and claims Roz as his next conquest. The cad on the line? Malcolm McDowell.

And some shut-in seeks Crane's advice in finding a way out. The phoning agoraphobic? Christopher Reeve.

They aren't real problems, but they are real actors calling in to "Frasier," the witty Tuesday night hit starring Kelsey Grammer that is doing to real-life comedy what "The Simpsons" did to prime-time animation — pulling in top celebrities to perform the show's voice overs.

These days, it seems everybody seems to want to lend their voice in the name of good comedy. An impressive list of luminaries have signed on to NBC's "Frasier" in what's become the hottest bit part in Hollywood, including not just actors but athletes, musicians, cartoonists and clothing designers.

Problem callers have included actors Linda Hamilton, Joe Mantegna, Jeff Daniels, Carl Reiner, James Spader, Lily Tomlin, Macaulay Culkin, cartoonist Garry Trudeau, menswear designer Tommy Hilfiger and country-music star Reba McEntire. Even Super Bowl-bound 49ers quarterback Steve Young has provided his voice for an upcoming show.

Unlike "The Simpsons" on Fox Television — where famous folk like Michael Jackson and Elizabeth Taylor get their fair share of publicity before the show airs — "Frasier" producers prefer to stay mum about the celebs on the other end of the line. The voice-over actors are credited, but only at the end of the show when their names are listed with other cast members.

"We tend to shy away from people whose voices are recognizable," said Jeff Greenberg, "Frasier's" casting director. "We tend not to like people who are known as voice-over spokespeople because you hear their voice on the radio all the time, and it takes the fun out of it."

The virtual anonymity in the roles doesn't seem to dissuade actors from taking the bit parts — though it was rather difficult finding voices at first.

"Initially, when the show wasn't established yet, we were asking people as a favor," Greenberg said. "Once the show became a critical success as well as a success for the audience, the awareness level went way up. It's an easier sell for different celebrities. It's a prestige thing to do."

Rock guitarist Eddie Van Halen was one of those celebrities who agreed to do the show early on as a favor to Grammer. Van Halen played a guy named Hank who couldn't hear Frasier because his radio was on too loud.

"We're friends, and I said sure. It was as simple as that," Van Halen said.

Nowadays, actors are actually calling Greenberg for a stint on the show. (He won't divulge their salaries but he claims it isn't a fortune.) Sharon Stone has expressed interest, as have Halle Berry ("The Flintstones") and her husband, Atlanta Braves player David Justice, Greenberg said.

Roles are created first, and then Greenberg seek celebs who best the fit the bill. And it's not just Greenberg who comes up with potential voice-over actors; often, the cast and crew throw their two cents in. He maintains a wish list that also includes those who have offered their services.

"We try to come up with fun people who might enjoy doing it, who are sort of quirky and interesting and different," he said. "We want people who don't do this kind of comedy who tend to like to do it if they get the chance."

His ultimate pick is Sophia Loren. "She's already indicated she likes the show," Greenberg said.

What makes the show so attractive is its convenience. To maintain the sound of an actual call, the actors are asked to phone a Burbank sound studio, where producer Maggie Randell waits to tape their voice. And it doesn't matter where they call from: Reeve, for instance, called from Calgary.

Who are those nuts?

LOS ANGELES — Here are some of the famous people behind some of those extraordinary problems on NBC's "Frasier":

- Mel Brooks as Phillip: Sad because his only memory of Christmas is of his dead dog.
- Rosemary Clooney as Gladys: Has pins in her hip, her sister is sick, she can't get to her husband's grave that is overgrown with weeds, and her cat is losing its hair.
- Eric Stoltz as Don: Thinks he did a good deed by allowing a homeless man to keep his shoes that accidentally flew off his car roof — where he last left them.
- Henry Mancini as Al: Dislikes the sound of his own voice.
- Judith Ivey as Lorraine: Obsessed with what she may be missing — and then she uses call waiting while talking to Frasier Crane.
- Carl Reiner as Roger: Wants to name his yacht Intrepid, while his wife wants to dub it Lullubelle.
- Patti LuPone as Pam: Her in-laws drop by uninvited.
- Griffin Dunne as Russell: He's been depressed for seven years.
- Linda Hamilton as Claire: Her boyfriend dumped her.
- Joe Mantegna as Derek Mann: He's a newspaper columnist who hates Crane's show.
- Jeff Daniels as Doug: Has a problem with his mother and intellectuals who correct his grammar.
- Reba McEntire as Rachel: Her husband keeps his previous wife's ashes in the bedroom.
- Steve Young as Blake: So busy imagining that he's on a tropical island, he forgets he's driving.
- Garry Trudeau as Louis: Forgets his 10th wedding anniversary.
- Steve Lawrence as Howard: Can't say "I love you."
- Eydie Gorme as Lois: Can't say "I love you," either.
- Mary Tyler Moore as Marjorie: Has a problem with her boss.

TRIAL: Networks rely on precision technology

(From 1B)

But Ito said he was particularly stressed because both the camera operator and the person at the "kill" switch failed to black out the shot.

Whether coverage is "near-live" or blacked out, ABC, CBS and NBC have developed ingenious electronic graphics systems to enhance the viewer's reality.

"NBC NewsView" comes closest to providing "virtual reality" to viewers, using digitized photographic images of the crime scene and Simpson estate.

"It's a whole new computer display technology for orienting information and locations," said David Bohrman, NBC's executive producer of news specials. "It's not a model. It's not a computer graphic. It's the actual location."

A computer video display allows the viewer to perceive the spatial relationships of the locations, and to move around within them.

"We have a full, 360-degree perspective," Bohrman said. "We can go up, down, and around. For the first time ever in television news graphics, it lets us, in a reasonable way, enter a graphic and explore."

The "point and click" system can be called up virtually instantly, so that its images can accompany testimony and elaborate on "two-dimensional" courtroom exhibits.

The software and computer system, operated by trial anchor Jack Ford, was developed by Apple Computers Inc. and is based on its QuickTime VR software. Bohrman said it worked well in its on-air tryout Monday.

"I want to downplay the hype potential, because it's a really useful tool," he said. "We've seen similar technology in ... games and artificial environments, in graphic environments. But here, it's using 100 percent real images. There's nothing made-up or reconstructed about it."

ABC News uses precisely scaled, three-dimensional models of the Simpson locales, filmed by a "snorkel" camera, to move viewers through the environment. Citing rehearsal and production constraints, the network declined to preview the system, however.

CBS News uses computer-generated animation compiled by "forensic animator" Alexander Jason, who based his drawings on extensive physical measurements and coroners' statements from grand jury and preliminary court hearings.

"He constructed a series of three-dimensional animations that we've used to represent the physical reality ... of ground-level shots, sidewalk shots and aerials," said Steve Jacobs, CBS' executive producer for special events.

"We're not trying to re-create anything beyond our scope of knowledge," he said. "We're using Alexander Jason's expertise where we felt it is appropriate and clearly directed by factual information."

Given these realities and virtual realities, will television be able to keep your attention when the trial gets dull?

Just watch the E! Entertainment channel, which plans to keep your attention on "the biggest story in Hollywood" if it has to pluck your eyeball from its socket.

An ultraslimmed Kathleen Sullivan anchors E!'s extensive, live coverage, with court reporting by the doe-eyed antipodean Greg Agnew, and "interactive" viewer access through fax and on-line computer services.

E! alone has offered detailed analysis of prosecutor Marcia Clark's wardrobe choices. "I think she has a soft look," offered legal correspondent Charles Rosenberg.

The Republic is, for the moment, safe.

(From 1B)

Fair to get Vince Gill's autograph. She told Vince, "I'm going to sing with you someday." That same year she signed with MCA Records.

Patty has gone through some changes over the years, the least of which was dying her blond hair red "because I fell in love with Julia Roberts' hair color in 'Pretty Woman.'" She admitted in a 1993 People magazine article that her past included bouts of alcohol and drug use. Now she says, "I've accepted a lot of things in my past that I'm not proud of ... I don't like the person I was 10 years ago. I didn't like myself. I didn't like what I'd become. But I learned a lot from it."

By 1992, she was ready to do something most "girl singers" have a hard time doing: Trust their own instincts. She changed labels (to Epic) and management teams. She also underwent surgery on her vocal chords.

She has good instincts. Her 1993 album, "Only What I Feel" was certified platinum and her new album, "When Fallen Angels Fly," is already gold. Patty says, 'I think I'm beginning to do what I want. I think you really need to please yourself first and just trust your own feelings."

Her current single, "Here I Am," is racing up the charts and she's finishing work on the video for her next single, "You Don't Know Who I Am," due for a March release. She also rehearsing for her upcoming tour ... with Vince Gill.

DUMB: Intelligence Hollywood's new villain

(From 1B)

tween thoughtless, goofy movies and more serious ones, like "Forrest Gump," that think brains are bad, both may flow from similar sources. As the historian Richard Hofstadter noted in his classic 1963 book, "Anti-Intellectualism in American Life," suspicion of intellectuals runs deep in American history, ranging from the evangelical fervor of the colonists to the public distrust of an "egghead" like Adlai Stevenson in the 1952 presidential campaign.

That suspicion recurs in cycles and is especially prevalent when rational thinking seems to fail society.

In movies like "Nell" and "Forrest Gump," with their simple-is-good conservatism, the uneducated heroes reflect discontent with supposedly smart political leaders. (How many Rhodes scholars does it take to pass a health care bill?) They also reflect discomfort with the technological sophistication that threatens to overwhelm everyday life.

People who can't yet navigate the information superhighway feel great next to Nell, who can't even drive a car. Viewers are reassured by an Einstein who suggests that physics is piffle next to love.

No one wants to discount the importance of love, emotion and goodness, of course. What is insidious about these films is that they do the opposite, creating a head-heart split that makes intelligence the villain. When people in the movie industry began to wonder why the critically praised "Quiz Show" was a box-office disappointment, a frequent guess was that the film was too intellectual for mainstream audiences.

In fact, honor, not intelligence, was the issue "Quiz Show" explored, and there were other factors, like marketing, that might have let the film down at the box office. But Hollywood's quick response was that viewers don't want to think too hard and won't warm up to characters smarter than they are, whether it's the college professor Charles Van Doren or the knowledgeable working-class Herb Stempel.

That was not a problem with "Forrest Gump." The film's allure relies entirely on Tom Hanks, an actor so appealing he makes stupidity seem an attractive option. With his low I.Q., Forrest Gump at first appears to be an idiot savant; instead he is a 20th-century American Candide, an innocent for whom everything turns out all right.

The Gumpism "Stupid is as stupid does" sounds awfully convincing when it comes from a guy who survives Vietnam, becomes a shrimp tycoon and makes another bundle of money investing in Apple computers.

As he floats through decades of United States history, Gump embodies the American dream: he is an uneducated, self-made millionaire. Gump does have a kind heart. The film's bedrock belief, and most pleasant fantasy, is that simple virtue brings earthly rewards. As Gump stumbles into successes that wilier characters could never approach, his success is always tied to his lack of intellect.

"Forrest Gump" is part of a long tradition of anti-intellectualism in American movies. The new live-action "Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Book" and the classic, animated "Jungle Book" are part of that tradition. They are variations on the Tarzan myth, in which a man raised in isolation from the civilized world is all the better for it.

And though Jodie Foster is a far cry from Johnny Weissmuller, the theme of "Nell" is not all that different from that of a Tarzan film; Nell's simple goodness come from her isolated upbringing, away from corrupt society. Directed by Michael Apted, "Nell" is much smarter than a jungle movie.

In fact, the film flatters its audience's intelligence with Nell's teasing private language, which viewers can partly figure out. "Chickabee, chickabee," she says, a word that sounds like chickadee and seems to be some term of endearment.

Liam Neeson and Natasha Richardson, as the doctors who observe Nell in her shack, find that "eviduh" means evildoer and "ga injuh" is guardian angel. The audience gets to feel as smart as the doctors, only to learn, as they do, that smart isn't everything.

Nell is kind and trusting and has a grasp of emotions the doctors lack. She urges them not to fight with each other. She croons "chickabee" when they are distraught. Eventually, in her private language translated by Dr. Lovell (Neeson), Nell pleads before a court for the right to return to her simple life, which she prefers to the big, civilized world.

In the movie's view, society is full of educated eviduhs, and primitives like Nell are blessed.

There are no primitives in "I.Q." Ed, the mechanic, reads popular-science magazines, making him unlearned only in relation to Einstein and his genius pals.

In this film, deftly directed by Fred Schepisi, intelligence is not bad until it interferes with the emotions. Einstein worries about Catherine, who thinks she should marry a man as intelligent as her uncle — or at least as intelligent as herself. "She's too smart here," Einstein says, pointing to his head. "But not here," he adds, pointing to his heart, and illustrating the great suspicion of the mind on which all these films rest.

PATTERSON: Murray proves to be the definitive dumb guy

(From 1B)

Martin Short in "Three Fugitives." A modern-day Jerry Lewis long before Jim Carrey ever came along.

Eugene Levy and John Candy as two goofy security guards in "Armed and Dangerous." Still a mildly funny movie and probably John Candy's funniest role.

Chevy Chase in "Caddyshack." Chase has never approached his comic form from this movie since.

Joe Pesci and Daniel Stern in "Home Alone." For purely physical, slapstick comedy, this is a modern role-model from which all other movies copy in the '90s. Pesci is both Moe and Curly in what is for some strange reason turning into a Christmas standard.

Nicholas Cage and Holly Hunter in "Raising Arizona." Cage and Hunter are not just dumb, but plain stupid in one of the most offbeat movies ever.

Christopher Guest and Harry Shearer in "This is Spinal Tap." Cutting their teeth on "National Lampoon's" early projects, these two are as off-color and funny as comics come.

Bill Murray in "Stripes." Murray's best role, unless you include his priceless dumb performances on Saturday Night Live.

Bill Murray in "What About Bob?" Not a great movie, but Murray displayed his best dumb self.

Rick Moranis in "Ghostbusters." The movie for which Murray will always be remembered, yet in terms of the dumb par excellence, it was Moranis.

Richard Pryor and Gene Wilder in "Stir Crazy." Two innocent, dumb guys thrown into prison. When the two walk into a cell proclaiming "We bad, we bad," it may be the funniest acting moment for either of them.

Peter Sellers in "The Pink Panther" series. The master of bumbling comedy.

My only concern over the influx of this type of movie and the fact that it has now been written about is that people will come up to me Monday morning and say, "Hey, I read your dumb column."

Jimmy Patterson writes about radio, television and music for the Reporter-Telegram.

MSCL: 'Life' support groups started for defunct program

(From 1B)

27-year-old author who lives in San Francisco, in a lengthy e-mail missive he posted in December. "It touches us in ways we never thought television could."

The "pamphlet" by this computer-age Thomas Paine called for a pressure group he dubbed Operation "Life" Support.

Since then, this cyber-group has published a newsletter, raised several thousand dollars to buy imploring ads in TV industry publications, and helped organize a flood of e-mail onto ABC's hard disks.

"It's the first on-line campaign I know of that has been organized to save a show," Susan Choy, manager of ABC Entertainment's multimedia services, said earlier this week. She counted a total of more than 4,500 e-mail messages to the network, as well as an overwhelming volume of postings for "My So-Called Life" in the ABC network "folder" of American Online, a commercial on-line service.

It was to that forum that Susan Krashinsky of Ontario, Canada, directed her message for "fellow MSCL lovers" a few days ago, to thank them for their varied rescue efforts. "You all know how intelligent and true this show is," she wrote.

"I identify so much with so many aspects of mscl," wrote another fan, Margery Cohen, who added that its future "is a personal issue for me."

In Seattle, Cynthia Chapman was trying to get a group together "to watch (and possibly bid farewell to) our favorite show," and, from Portland, Ore., Benjamin Schoenberg wrote, "The world is very quiet as I wait for Thursday night, not knowing if it's the last."

But Schoenberg added hopefully, "I think Ted's leaning positively."

He was referring to Ted Harbert, president of ABC Entertainment, who had fielded questions about "My So-Called Life" almost to the exclusion of any other ABC program during his session on America Online a few days earlier.

"MSCL has not been canceled!!!!!!!" Harbert responded with graphic insistence.

"I love this show but I wish more viewers felt the same way I do," he wrote. "It deserves higher ratings, so I need you fans to try to convince everyone you know to watch it."

OK, Ted. Count me in as a fan. And rest assured I tried to convince everyone to watch it.

Miss America pageant incorporates old tradition with new technology

By John Curran
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Miss America Pageant is venturing into cyberspace, joining hands with the White House and renewing its commitment to the disadvantaged in hopes of shedding its image as a mere beauty contest.

But some things never change: The bathing suit competition will still be part of the annual nationally-televised pageant when it takes place Sept. 16 in Atlantic City, N.J. The broadcast will stretch to three hours this year.

Pageant organizers and winners from each of the past seven decades Thursday kicked off its 75th anniversary year by announcing a series of new initiatives.

Among them: Putting Miss America herself and pageant officials "on line" for computer users nationwide, forming a partnership with President Clinton's Corporation for National Service and giving the pageant a platform.

"Our hope is to enter the next millennium by replacing the beauty pageant image that some people continue to perpetuate about this program with its more substantive aspects and its intrinsic value to our society," said chief executive officer Leonard Horn.

Among the past winners on hand were former network television sportscaster Phyllis George (1971), actress Lee Meriwether (1955), former war bonds saleswoman Jean Bartel (1943) and the reigning queen, Heather Whitestone, who is the first Miss America with a major disability.

The pageant began in 1921 as a bathing suit contest on the Boardwalk in Atlantic City. It was dreamed up by civic leaders eager to get people to stay at the shore past Labor Day.

Sixty-eight winners, 14 U.S. presidents and three wars later, the pageant is still stung by criticism that it patronizes women by parading them in front of a national television audience in swimwear.

The pageant shucked the spiked heels traditionally worn by bathing suit contestants last year. Officials haven't said whether the heels will be back this year.

Horn announced plans Thursday for:

■ Formation of a Miss America Foundation so the pageant can give money and get attention for social programs benefiting women and girls. The foundation is working with Better Homes Fund of Newton, Mass., on a pilot project that will see state pageant winners serving as mentors for school-aged children. It also will pay to send poor and homeless children to college.

■ Establishment of a partnership with the Corporation for National Service, a Clinton initiative formed to get more Americans to do community service work. State pageant winners will work with Corporation programs in their states.

Teacher awards provide one night of magic in profession overlooked by many

By Lynda Richardson
N.Y. Times News Service

It is back to the chalkboard for Beverly Davidman, an award-winning math teacher at Norman Thomas High School in Manhattan. But for a brief moment last semester, she was Cinderella.

There she was among celebrities in a gilded Washington theater as part of the televised American Teacher Awards presented by Walt Disney Co.

Her glittery gold and black velvet dress was courtesy of Disney wardrobe, to be returned the next day. A limousine took her from airport to hotel. The actress Melanie Griffith asked for "the envelope, please" and announced Mrs. Davidman as the country's outstanding teacher in mathematics.

It was heady stuff for a veteran teacher who until a year and a half ago was toiling virtually unnoticed in the New York City school system.

But in recent years, teachers like Mrs. Davidman are increasingly finding themselves in the bright lights of center stage. Corporations, private groups and organizations are bestowing recognition on teachers, partly to promote education and partly to polish civic images, educators say.

The recognition for teachers, however, comes with a price.

In many cases, there is furious politicking, self-promotion and a bit of a letdown when the attention fades. And while few would deny that teachers should be recognized, some suggest that the awards, however much deserved, are tangential to structural educational change, and even propel the best teachers out of the classroom altogether.

"I have not been back to my classroom since the day I left and got my award," said Rae Ellen McKee, the 1991 recipient of the National Teacher of the Year award, which is sponsored by the Council of Chief State School Officers and is considered the oldest of the recognition awards.

"To be very frank, it's because I was making $20,000 with a master's degree and 14 years' experience," said Ms. McKee, who was teaching remedial reading to elementary-school students in West Virginia and is now a textbook publishing consultant there.

"The award put me into contact with so many things. It allowed me to explore other avenues for using my talent."

New York City Schools Chancellor Ramon Cortines said he is all for showering teachers with praise, especially when money is involved. But he is critical of programs that do little more than reward the teacher as a sort of flavor of the month.

"I'm concerned that people feel they can salve their conscience by giving out a little certificate and a piece of paper," Cortines said Wednesday.

"I want it to be more than a once-a-year kind of thing. How do we find a way in which people understand that to change and improve education takes a commitment? I'm far more interested, and schools and teachers are, too, in people in the community working in the schools."

Many recognition programs were created out of the desire to stroke teachers for thankless work. There are no figures on how many awards are available nationally for teachers, but they range from a crystal apple or a shiny plaque to a jackpot prize of thousands of dollars.

Sallie Mae, the quasi-governmental agency involved with mortgages, doles out awards to first-year and veteran teachers.

Purina honors excellence in teaching about poultry, animals and dairy science. Tandy Corp., the electronics retailer, recognizes 100 outstanding high school teachers who specialize in math, science and computers with $2,500 stipends annually.

Inland Steel Co. rewards outstanding high school teachers with a plaque and $300 in areas where its employees live.

"It's a very recent thing for teachers," said Jon Quam, director of the National Teacher of the Year award, which was established in 1951.

"In the last 10 to 15 years is where you see most of them building. But seldom do you find recognition programs for teachers that have a longevity of more than 5 or 10 years."

"A lot of times, programs fold because an individual business person who has been championing the effort moves or leaves or is replaced," said Rae Nelson, the executive director of the Center for Work Force Preparation at the Chamber of Commerce.

Only in the last few years have some businesses begun to question the way they were investing in education, Ms. Nelson said.

At some corporations, including International Paper Co., AT&T and Exxon, recognition programs have given way to teacher mentoring or training efforts that are part of more comprehensive initiatives to produce tangible results in education.

'I'm concerned that people feel they can salve their conscience by giving out a little certificate and a piece of paper.'

— Ramon Cortines, New York City Schools Chancellor

A Disney spokesman, Cory O'Connor, said he hoped that money was not the reason teachers sought his company's award.

He said the purpose of the Disney recognition program was to bring "attention to these people who are day in and day out doing extremely noble work."

The National Teacher of the Year remains the most prestigious of the awards, many educators say. Its recipient does not receive a cash bonus as in some other programs, but the teacher is announced at the White House by the president, receives a crystal apple and represents the nation's 2.5 million teachers, traveling most of the year.

The finalists this year are from Alaska, Hawaii, Massachusetts and Texas; the winner will be announced in late April by President Clinton.

The last time that a New York teacher was selected as the National Teacher of the Year was 1981, when Jay Sommer, a foreign languages teacher from New Rochelle High School, was named.

In the national awards, as in others, teachers are selected by other educators. In some cases, teachers nominate themselves. Often, the process seems as arbitrary as with fellowships in the academic world, where getting one can make it easier to get another.

'In the last 10 to 15 years is where you see most of them building. But seldom do you find recognition programs for teachers that have a longevity of more than 5 or 10 years.'

— Jon Quam, director of the National Teacher of the Year award

Mrs. Davidman said she began to be widely recognized after a New York Times article a year ago mentioned her use of rap music to explain complicated geometry theories.

She struts around the classroom, dressed hip-hop style in imitation of the rap performer Queen Latifah. She calls herself Queen Math Teacher, dispensing both attitude and wisdom.

Suddenly, she was flooded with calls from reporters and invited to appear on two German radio shows and a Japanese public broadcasting station. "People wouldn't have known me," she said.

A few months later, Mrs. Davidman was one of 11 educators to be presented the 1994 Citibank Success Fund Award for Excellence, which is sponsored by the bank and the Fund for New York City Public Education, a private reform group. She received a check for $2,500, a plaque and $2,500 for her school.

It was after that success that Mrs. Davidman decided to give Disney a try. Two years ago, she nominated herself for the Disney award and was turned down. "I got a form letter and I was crushed."

But this time, she was seriously considered, and was flown to Washington last November as a finalist for outstanding teacher in mathematics. She met Vice President Al Gore. Extras hired by Disney called out her name and sought her autograph as she went into a movie premiere of "Santa Clause."

During that week, Mrs. Davidman said other teachers, who were finalists like herself in their subject areas, lavished her with little gifts like state pins and rulers.

She soon realized there were ulterior motives. The 36 teachers would cast secret ballots to decide who, among the 12 teachers named outstanding in their subject areas, should be named the outstanding teacher of 1994.

That teacher, who turned out to be Huong Tran Nguyen of Long Beach, Calif., received $25,000 for herself, another $25,000 for her school and $10,000 for her school district.

"It was kind of like politicking, all this handing out of state pins," Mrs. Davidman said. "I don't even know what our state thing is. What is it? I was so shocked when people kept coming up saying, 'This is for you.' "

The politicking was noticed by Ed Schroeder, Disney's 1991 top teacher.

"I was turned off by it," he said. "I didn't think it was the time or place to start blowing your own horn. It was no different from running for a political office."

Schroeder, 54, still teaches junior high school students in Granite City, Ill., but not for long.

He is taking early retirement this year after 32 years of teaching. Schroeder, who has made several television appearances, including on the "Tonight" program, intends to capitalize on what he has learned on the award circuit. He is going to spread the word about education through public speaking.

"Before I won, I felt that I had a lot to say, but I didn't really have an audience that wanted to listen," he said. "Winning the award for being an exemplary teacher has given me newfound credibility."

Eight years ago, yet another top educator award was established by two brothers, Lowell and Michael Milken. Michael Milken is the convicted financier who came to symbolize Wall Street's unethical excesses in the 1980s. It offers $25,000 to the teacher, no strings attached.

Linda Alston, a kindergarten teacher in Denver, learned she was a recipient of the Milken award last fall, but the Milken name didn't register.

"I don't know, but certainly if that's the case, they're doing wonderful penance," she said, adding that she plans to use the Milken money to take her three sons to Egypt and elsewhere in Africa this summer.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

■ Special service set

Golf Course Road Church of Christ will present a special service of song and praise from 8 to 11:30 a.m. Sunday.

Classes for children will be offered during the middle of the extended service. Titled "Encounter with God," the service will debut the newest recording by Ken Young, worship director for the church, with his singing group "Hallal." This release, entitled "Worthy," is the fifth professional release by the group.

No evening services will be held in order to allow families extra time for this special service.

■ Group to perform

St. Stephens Episcopal School Madrigal Singers, a high school age a cappella singing group from Austin, will perform here Feb. 5 and 6.

The Madrigals, led by Warren E. Dickson, director of vocal music at St. Stephen's, will perform at 5:15 p.m. at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church Feb. 5, and at 11 a.m. Feb. 6 at Trinity School.

The Midland appearances begin a 7-day tour that includes performances in Odessa, Pecos, El Paso, Carlsbad, N.M., and Albuquerque, N.M.

■ Mardi Gras planned

St. Ann's School will be hosting its second annual Mardi Gras Celebration from 7 p.m. to midnight Feb. 4 at Midland Country Club.

Proceeds from the gala will benefit the school's endowment fund.

The evening will be filled with a variety of Mardi Gras activities. Upon arrival, guests will be welcomed by lively Dixieland music. Dinner will include a range of New Orleans cuisine. Live music and a silent auction round out the evening.

The benefit will culminate the activities of Catholic School Week at St. Ann's School.

■ Sexuality class set

The Midland Lutheran Church Education Committee has invited Linda and Richard Goddard of CLER Ministries to conduct their biblically-based human sexuality workshop for junior high-aged youth and their parents.

Deadline for registration is Monday. Registration forms are available through the church office, 694-1373, or from Lynda Morris, 699-0606, or Danny Shutt, 689-2144.

The sessions will be held at the church, 2705 W. Michigan Ave., on Wednesdays from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Feb. 1 and 8. Junior high youth from all Lutheran churches in the area have been invited to attend. Friends are welcome.

Cost is $20 a family and an additional $5 if more than one child from a family attends. Both parents are encouraged to attend.

Parents and others interested in learning more about the workshop are invited to attend a session that includes a 30-minute video at 9:15 a.m. Jan. 29 in the church's youth room.

■ Temple funds needed

The members of Templo Bautista la Hermosa, 1514 W. County Road 121, have been building a new temple and have run short on funds.

To volunteer services or financial aid, call Simon Bernal, 684-5688.

■ Men's retreat slated

The Rev. Paul Meaden from the Pecos Benedictine Monastery will be the guest speaker. Meaden, a native of Minnesota, joined the Pecos Community in 1977 after spending 17 years mostly on the West Coast in the engineering and construction fields.

Meaden graduated from Colorado School of Mines in engineering and geology in 1958 and following graduation he spent two years in the U.S. Army.

He attended seminary at St. John's, Camarillo, Calif., receiving his master of divinity degree and his master of arts there. He also studied for a semester in Israel and was ordained to the priesthood in Rome in 1984.

■ Survivor to speak

ODESSA — Mike Jacobs of Dallas will recount his experiences as a Holocaust survivor at Temple Beth El at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 15.

The public is invited to attend.

The Inquirers Class at First Presbyterian Church meets Sundays this month during the 9:45 a.m. Sunday School hour.

This class is specifically for visitors and is designed as an introduction to First Presbyterian Church. The programs and mission of the church will be discussed as well as Presbyterian theology and policy.

Poorer Americans often count financial blessings, survey says

NEW YORK (AP) - Jesus said no one can serve the dual masters of God and money, but he has not convinced a majority of well-off Americans.

In a national survey on faith and finances, nearly two-thirds of lower-income Americans agreed with Jesus' admonition, but less than half of the respondents earning more than $50,000 agreed.

Meanwhile, poorer Americans were most likely to count their financial blessings, ask God for guidance on financial affairs and believe their financial situation is a reflection of God's regard for them.

The findings show that while church leaders are often stereotyped as being preoccupied with money, in practice many clergy are uncomfortable with the topic and avoid it, said a leading researcher on religious giving.

"I think basically, in our society, the church has not provided a constructive agenda, or even a theological context, for money," said Sylvia Ronsvalle of the Champaign, Ill.-based research organization empty tomb inc. "People don't know what a biblical approach to money is."

A random sample of 1,009 people were interviewed by telephone in the faith and money survey conducted last fall by Louis Harris & Associates for the Minneapolis-based Lutheran Brotherhood, a nonprofit insurance and financial services company. The survey had a margin of error of plus or minus three points.

The poll found 81 percent of Americans, including 86 percent with incomes of $25,000 and less, have thanked God for their financial well being.

Seventy percent of the respondents, including three-quarters of those in the lowest income group, said their own financial situation reflected God's regard for them either a great deal or somewhat.

The positive response does not mean lower-income people think God holds them in low regard, Thoreson said.

Rather, she said, "I think they do feel God is taking care of them, and they are grateful."

In findings resonant of Scriptural passages, a substantial gulf emerged between richer and poorer Americans in their attitudes toward money.

Numerous passages in the Bible warn against placing too much emphasis on possessions. In a famous saying in the Gospel of Mark, at the end of a parable in which a rich man rejects the faith rather than give his money to the poor, Jesus says "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for someone who is rich to enter the kingdom of God."

In the Gospels of Luke and Matthew, Jesus says pointedly that no one can serve two masters: "You cannot serve God and wealth."

In response to a survey question framed in the biblical language, 65 percent of both the lower-income and middle-income respondents agreed with the statement "You cannot serve both God and money." Forty-seven percent of the respondents earning more than $50,000 agreed, while 48 percent disagreed.

More than three-quarters of the lower-income respondents also agreed that the love of money is the root of all evil. Half of the high-income respondents disagreed.

Who has prayed for guidance in how to manage their finances? Sixty percent of people with incomes of $25,000 or less, compared to 40 percent of people making more than $50,000, according to the survey.

Ronsvalle said the survey results show that despite some 2,000 biblical verses about the relationships between people and possessions, many clergy "have abandoned their members to a secular mindset about a very important topic."

Churches across nation plan to blitz flocks with Super Sunday message

By Matt Harvey
Associated Press

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Eight hours before Steve Young starts slinging footballs, the Rev. William Ellis will hurl football terms at his congregation.

A few hours later, in Illinois, part of Pastor Bill Cissna's flock will gather around an 8-foot television screen in their church to watch quarterback Young and his San Francisco 49ers play the San Diego Chargers.

Cissna, Ellis and other clergy across the country see Super Bowl Sunday as a super chance to score with nonbelievers. They also say it's a challenge to keep regulars from a one-week walkout.

"It's a time when people are focusing their attention on the Super Bowl," Ellis said. "So it seems to me an ideal time to talk about life's Super Bowl."

The bulletin for Ellis' sermon at the First Church of God in Oceana won't be too different from the programs at Joe Robbie Stadium in Miami.

Ellis' bulletin starts with his "kickoff" at 10:45 a.m., then an invocation, or "pregame prayer."

Instead of "The Star-Spangled Banner," Ellis' flock will sing what he terms the unofficial anthem of churches: "Amazing Grace."

"Then I have a united cheer ... and the next thing I have on the program is the huddle with the team owner," Ellis said.

"Sounds like Jerry Jones and the Dallas Cowboys, doesn't it? The huddle's led by coach Ellis. It simply means it's time to pray, and God owns the church. It doesn't belong to me or anybody else. It's his."

For added authenticity, Ellis throws in commercial breaks.

"Commercials are the time when I'll make the announcements and receive the offering," he said. "You've got to pay the bills, you know. Now I won't get a million dollars for 30 seconds like the Super Bowl, but we'll get enough to pay the bills, keep the lights on, that sort of thing."

His theme is full of sports cliches.

"We're all involved in a spiritual battle and a spiritual struggle," Ellis said. "We don't always score a touchdown. We don't always gain big yardage. We don't always win by a lopsided score.

"Sometimes in life we are thrown for a loss," Ellis said. "We may even fumble the ball. We may get hurt. We may get our nose or our face rubbed in the muck and mire of life.

"But like a good football team, you don't quit, you don't stay down, you don't give up," he said. "You play until the game is over. ... And it's not how you win or lose, but how you play the game."

Cissna, of the First Church of God in Decatur, Ill., said his church holds potluck dinners, sponsors sports teams and has other activities to foster fellowship and attract new members.

His church's Super Bowl party, complete with a junk-food buffet and a 12-minute video at halftime featuring religious testimony by NFL players, is just another facet of that ministry, Cissna said.

"We're getting real good response from a number of people who never come to our church who'll say they'll be there," he said. "In fact, we have 10 men — men seem to be real tough to reach — who say they'll be here for this program who have never been to a service before."

The video is distributed by Radio Bible Class of Grand Rapids, Mich., in conjunction with the athletes' group, Sports Outreach America, of Pasadena, Calif.

Radio Bible Class also is distributing a special Super Bowl edition of its magazine Sports Spectrum that includes interviews with players.

"What we're trying to do is use an event that everybody's interested in and get people's attention, then tell what is a very important message: The Gospel and salvation through Jesus Christ," said Dave Branon, the magazine's managing editor.

On Thursday, Clinton ordered mediator W.J. Usery to resume talks and set the deadline for progress.

Cooper zeroes in on title

■ Bench play helps Abilene Cooper beat the Midland High boys in a crucial District 4-5A basketball tilt.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Abilene Cooper's Cougars may well be on the way to winning their third District 4-5A basketball title in four years after a 93-88 victory against Midland High Friday night before a standing room only crowd in the MHS gym.

The only problem is that 7-1 Cooper still has four district games left on the loop schedule and first-year head coach Greg Gober doesn't want any part of the big "C" word.

"There are just too many games left to say this was for the championship," Gober said. "There isn't a team left on our schedule that we can't lose to.

"But it does mean that we are now No. 1 with four to play. It was at least that big."

And it was an unlikely post off the bench in the form of Brandon Schmitz who was huge in the victory. Schmitz, a sophomore transfer from Greece who is playing basketball for the first time, scored four points in the last 14 seconds of play and 18 in the game while Cooper was hurting in the post position with foul trouble to both starters Jason Pillion and John Hirsch.

"We were using a three-man rotation at the post since Nigel Walker has a sprained ankle and couldn't play," Gober said. "Schmitz picked a great time to have a great game and it was probably the difference. Also, our guard Eric Honeycutt never came out of the game and he was playing on a sprained ankle and we didn't even know if he would be able to go. This was a huge win for us under the circumstances."

Schmitz broke open alone under his goal for an easy layup with 14 seconds left to give Cooper a 90-88 lead. Midland High's Jumon Hailey missed a three-point shot and then sent Cooper's Kareem Mitchell to the line with a foul.

Lady Rebs fall to Abilene knockout

■ Abilene High wrests second place from the Midland Lee girls with 56-48 win.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

If basketball is anything like boxing, Abilene High and Midland Lee staged a "15-round slugfest" in District 4-5A girls basketball action Friday night at the Lee gym.

At least that's the way Abilene coach Sam Nichols saw it as his team kept the Lady Rebels on the ropes and let fly with the knockout punch in the fourth quarter. The Lady Eagles connected on 12-of-19 free throws in the final round to pull away for a 56-48 win which vaulted them into second place in the league standings with two games to go.

"We knew that we would not be able to come in here and score a knockout in the first round," Nichols said. "It was going to be a 15-round slugfest and we were in it for the duration."

The loss dropped the Lady Rebels to 15-9 overall and 6-3 in league play and is ½-game behind Abilene High (19-7, 7-3). Odessa High topped San Angelo Central on Friday to move into a tie with idle Odessa Permian at 5-4 for fourth place.

Pierce avenges '94 loss

N.Y. Times News Service

MELBOURNE, Australia — Mary Pierce more than avenged her 1994 French Open final loss to Spain's Arantxa Sanchez Vicario on Saturday afternoon beneath the gathering clouds at steamy Flinders Park.

■ Australian Open

Hitting with a man's power and a woman's venom, Pierce captured the Australian Open women's singles title, her first Grand Slam title, with an efficient 6-3, 6-2 decision.

This doubly destructive defeat not only cost the top-seeded Sanchez Vicario an opportunity to convert her seventh Grand Slam final into a fourth slam crown, but it also denied her the chance to become the first Spanish woman ever to acquire the No.1 ranking.

Champions unfazed by NFL parity

Butts

NFL officials wallowing in the hoopla of Super Bowl XXIX this week surely paused a few times to congratulate themselves on the league's parity. Yes, practically every team in the NFL this year still had a shot at the playoffs with three weeks left in the season. And yes, 24 of the league's 28 teams finished with 6-10 or better records.

But the parity the NFL has achieved by design and then proudly pointed out over the last several years has not made its way to the top of the league. Barring the biggest upset in Super Bowl history Sunday, the San Francisco 49ers will win the NFL title for the fifth time in 14 seasons. And they will join only four franchises that have taken the Vince Lombardi Trophy home in the last nine years.

Since the Chicago Bears won their first Super Bowl after the 1985 season, only Dallas, the New York Giants, Washington and San Francisco have managed to capture Super Bowl titles. Each of those teams has won twice in that span.

Of the four teams that have won four Super Bowl championships, three of them — Dallas, Pittsburgh and San Francisco — were among the four teams playing in this year's NFC and AFC championship games. Dallas and San Francisco have hovered at the top of the NFC for over 20 years. Since the NFL and the old AFL merged for the 1970 season 25 NFC championships games have been played, and the Cowboys and 49ers have made 24 appearances in those contests.

If fans check further back into Super Bowl history, they'll see few more teams added to the four franchises that have dominated the game the last eight years. Only three more — Pittsburgh, the Oakland-/Los Angeles Raiders and Chicago — can say they have won Super Bowls over the past 20 years. That makes seven of the 28 NFL franchises that have won the big game since 1974.

Where's the parity there?

To be fair, the NFL is not alone in lack of balance at the top. Both the NBA and the NHL have experienced similar domination by a few franchises. Only baseball, with 10 different winners in the past 12 World Series, has escaped the trend.

The good news for fans is that if your favorite team has done well in the past, chances are it will continue to do well. If not, your beloved ne'er-do-wells may stay that way for decades to come. The Redskins or Giants will probably win another Super Bowl before Phoenix or Indianapolis does.

Behind the success of the franchises that stay competitive stands not coaches or players, for their tenures don't span the decades of winning. A more likely reason for teams staying on top through the years is tradition and front office competence. The teams that know how to win keep doing it and the teams that don't never seem to figure out how it's done.

Owner Eddie DeBartolo has been the constant through all of San Francisco's Super Bowl successes. Jerry Jones never would have bought the Cowboys and brought in Jimmy Johnson if Dallas hadn't had a winning tradition from the 1970s and early '80s. Would Johnson have left Miami to take a job coaching the Seattle Seahawks?

The NFL has gotten the parity it desired among most of it's teams. Balance at the top seems out of its hands.

Midland, Odessa teams square off

■ 5-5A Soccer

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

The Midland-Odessa rivalries hit the soccer field today with Midland High's teams taking on Odessa Permian's and Midland Lee's doing battle with Odessa High's.

The Midland High boys, 4-1 and 2-0 in District 5-5A, will look to keep their a share of the district lead when they host Permian at 2:00 p.m. In other action, the Midland Lee boys travel to Odessa High to play the Bronchos at 2 p.m. In girls' play, Lee hosts OHS today at 2 p.m. while the MHS travels to Permian for their 2 p.m. start.

MHS is coming off two straight district games where they have kept the opponent scoreless (in their 5-0 win over Lee and Tuesday's 7-0 win at Abilene Cooper). To keep a share of the district lead, they need a win over 3-3, 0-1 Permian.

Offensively, MHS has a potent offense with many capable scoring threats. In their two district games, seven MHS players have scored with Tyler Berry leading the team with four district goals. Patrick Sample and Sean Parnell have notched two goals each for the Bulldogs in the two wins.

Lee's Rebels (3-3 and 1-1) rebounded from their district opening loss by shutting out Abilene High 4-0 at Lee on Tuesday. Lee coach John McCulloch knows that the Rebels will have to keep that kind of intensity when they go up against the 6-1 and 2-0 division-leading Odessa High Bronchos.

"They (OHS) beat Permian 3-1," McCulloch said. "And Permian is supposed to be a pretty good side. So it should be a tough game."

Lee is led by forward Henrik Madsen, who scored two goals in Lee's win over Abilene High Tuesday. Madsen has six goals for the season. Lee strengthened the defensive side of their game switching highly-skilled players to the back before the Abilene High game.

The Lee Lady Rebels take their high-power offense to face a struggling OHS ball club coming off two district games where they were outscored 20-2 (Tuesday's 8-1 loss to San Angelo Central and last Saturday's 12-1 loss to crosstown rival Permian).

Leading the way for the 5-1 and 2-0 Lady Rebel team is Jamie Welch. Welch is the teams' leading goal scorer and playmaker with six goals and four assists. Angie Boyd is also high on the Lee scoring charts with three goals and three assists.

Lee's girls are coming off a 2-1 shootout victory over Abilene High. The win left a sour taste in the mouth of coach Van Gravitt because Lee faces an important stretch of games next week. He hopes to get rid of that bad taste with a victory over the 0-4 and 0-2 Lady Bronchos.

The Midland High girls' soccer team is looking to get through the worst part of their schedule. The Lady Bulldogs, 1-2 and 0-2, are coming off Tuesday's 4-1 loss to last year's district champs, Abilene Cooper, in a game where MHS controlled the pace for most of the match. Girls' coach Scott Hodkinson hopes that kind of play will net them a victory over the tough Permian team.

"People that saw both our losses would say there's not a lot we've done wrong," Hodkinson said. "This year's team has a more postive outlook. However, the only tangible proof is a win."

The Lady Bulldogs are looking for offensive help to go along with their strong defense. Anchored by goalkeeper Tina Richardson and sweeper Sonya Lackey, the Bulldogs will have their work cut out hosting a strong Odessa Permian team. Permian, 4-0 and 1-0, is looking to place itself in the playoff hunt this season.

Teams at top of SWC mostly want respect

■ The crowd at the top of the SWC men's basketball race would like some national recognition.

■ SWC Roundup

Associated Press

They're all crowded at the top of the Southwest Conference basketball standings with one league loss — and what they really want is respect.

Texas Christian, with the nation's leading rebounder and No. 2 scorer and a 12-5 record, hasn't been in the top 25 nationally ranked teams this season. Neither have the league's other front-runners, Texas, Texas Tech and Rice, going into Saturday's games.

"Whether we're ready now I will leave for others to decide," TCU coach Billy Tubbs said. "I don't have time to lobby. But I think we're getting up there. They at least mentioned us in the coaches' poll. That's what we're looking for."

Texas (11-4, 3-1) and Texas Tech (9-6, 3-1) have a showdown in Austin, where Texas needed two overtimes to beat DePaul 99-92 on Thursday night.

In other games, Texas A&M (9-10, 2-2) is at Texas Christian (12-5, 4-1), Houston (3-13, 1-4) is at Southern Methodist (4-12, 1-4), and Rice (8-7, 3-1) is at Baylor (6-11,1-3).

"Realistically, we're about where we expected to be but we dropped a couple of games early that could we could have won," Tubbs said. "If we'd done that it would have made a difference.

"I really think we're a little better than our record indicates but you know you can never satisfy the coach."

Rice coach Willis Wilson says the Owls must win the SWC tournament to get into the NCAA playoffs because they likely would not be invited as an at-large team.

"We're not the type of team that's going to get 24 to 25 wins and get on into the NCAA tournament," Wilson said.

"Based on our power ratings and people that we've played, we're going to have to do some things in terms of preparing for conference play and seeding in the SWC tournament.

"If we're able to do the things we think we can do ... then certainly it can set us up for some sort of post-season opportunity."

The Red Raiders will have to contend with the Running Longhorns, who specialize in capitalizing on opponents' turnovers.

"They're forcing 25 turnovers a game, but what is so impressive about that is what they do with the basketball after they get the turnover," Tech coach James Dickey said. "They depend a lot on turnovers to get their running game going."

Texas coach Tom Penders doesn't object to sharing his formula for beating the Longhorns' running game.

"You look for the quick score and if you're hitting you have a good chance but if you miss you're in trouble," Penders said. "If you try to tempo the game against us you're in bigger trouble because we try to force the extra pass."

SMU and Houston are two teams trying to dig out of slumps. The Mustangs were blown out twice last week by Texas and Texas Tech. They came back Wednesday with a competitive performance against TCU before losing 113-101.

"I can see light at the end of the tunnel," SMU coach John Shumate said. "They've come back and worked their way through some barriers."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Boosting your income should be a top priority. Experts come to your rescue in March. Your love life begins to look up! One of your friends could send lucrative business your way. Fight any reclusive tendencies while building a network of valuable contacts. October will bring an unexpected windfall or legacy; invest in your future. By this time next January, you could be attending school again!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Bridget Fonda, author Susan Sontag, author Jose Marti, golfer Nick Price.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Refrain from acting on information you receive from an unreliable source. It would be much wiser to conduct your own investigation. A willingness to compromise will reduce domestic stress.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Who you know is more important that what you know today. Go ahead and launch a cherished project. A cooperative and friendly spirit will help bridge the gap between you and estranged loved ones.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not resort to ultimatums in an effort to get your way. Teaming up with a like-minded friend or neighbor will increase your influence. Act responsibly. Support your allies and they will support you!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Creative urges are likely to lead to artistic pursuits. Buy good-quality materials. Be more selective when choosing confidants and business partners. A budget revision will relieve tension.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not allow your financial world to collapse like a house of cards. Turn to new methods and take a few well-calculated risks. Friends are willing to help out in an emergency. Repay favors.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Financial gains come from striking while the iron is hot. Do not let a golden opportunity slip through your fingers. Share your expertise with those unable to pay for it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Set aside more time for charity or community work. It will lift your spirits while providing valuable social and business contacts. A new romantic attachment is possible; take your pick! Keep spending within reasonable limits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Talking with an old friend will restore your self-confidence. A newspaper column may hold a special message for you. Cheer up a loved one. Watch your step when walking in crowded areas today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A first-class day lies ahead. Your relationship with someone at a distance hits a new high. A truly delightful companion will enter your life soon. Self-improvement activities are favored. Do your best.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Making new friends will benefit you in both tangible and intangible ways. Your views on a complicated issue are reinforced by those in the know. Avoid saying "I told you so" to a friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not rely on hunches or insiders' tips. Check someone's record very carefully before investing your money. VIPs are impressed by your shrewd business judgment. Let family members know your plans in advance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Complete your household chores before going shopping. Exercise acts as a tonic for your spirits. Other people sense that you are the strongest link in a chain. Set a good example for youngsters.

Cher's new catalog includes Gothic accessories selection

LOS ANGELES — If you're looking for a teak chair, a chain-mail lamp or the "Astrological Guide to Relationships," Cher's got a deal for you, babe.

The actress has started a catalog called "Sanctuary," and besides the above items, it includes faux crocodile storage boxes and clothing she designed herself.

Her specialty is Gothic accessories, but she doesn't think she's starting a trend.

"I don't think it's me," she told the Los Angeles Times. "Who knows about this stuff? Madonna does it a lot better than I do. Madonna is the forefront of the superficial lifestyle. She's brilliant at cashing in."

* * *

LOS ANGELES — Anthony Edwards isn't too impressed when he looks back on his role as Tom Cruise's sidekick in "Top Gun." But he says the part served its purpose.

"'Top Gun' doesn't really interest me at all," Edwards said. "I find it really jingoistic. . . . We all do things to help us do other things that we want."

Help it did. He now stars as Dr. Mark Greene in NBC's new hit series "ER." In fact, out of 100 actors considered, the balding, bespectacled Edwards was the only one who read for the part.

LONDON — God save the Prince of Wales — from his admirers, it seems.

An unscientific survey taken by Majesty magazine found that Prince Charles is second only to his sister-in-law, the Duchess of York, as least popular royal, and that most respondents blame him for the breakdown of his marriage.

The glossy magazine devoted to the doings of royalty — primarily the House of Windsor — mailed a questionnaire to its 150,000 readers. About 5,000 responded.

While Princess Diana was one percentage point behind the queen as favorite royal, (21 percent to 20 percent), Charles was just two behind "Fergie," the Duchess of York, as least favorite, at 18 percent to 16 percent.

Sixty-five percent blame Charles for the breakdown of his marriage, 70 percent hope he and Diana will divorce and 79 percent wish that she will find "lasting happiness with another man."

Two-thirds thought Charles should be allowed to remarry, but 55 percent thought he shouldn't be king if he does. Asked whether Charles or his son Prince William should be the next king, Charles was the choice, 53 percent to 46 percent.

DENVER — The adopted son of authors Michael Dorris and Louise Erdrich has been cleared of charges he threatened them, trying to get money and get them to publish a manuscript he wrote.

A Denver District Court jury acquitted Jeffrey Dorris, 22, of one count of attempted theft on Thursday and couldn't reach a verdict on a second count. The judge dismissed it.

Dorris and Erdrich adopted Jeffrey, a Yankton Sioux, when he was 2. Michael Dorris is author of "The Broken Cord," which is about the effect of fetal alcohol syndrome on his oldest adopted son, who died, and "A Yellow Raft on Blue Water." Erdrich wrote "Love Medicine" and other acclaimed novels about American Indians.

RALEIGH, N.C. — Dennis Hopper is going to help North Carolina chase down film projects.

Hopper joined the newly created North Carolina Film Council, Gov. Jim Hunt said Thursday. The council was created in May to boost efforts to recruit the film industry to North Carolina.

Hopper said he has had ties to North Carolina for several years.

"I filmed 'Blue Velvet,' 'Super Mario Brothers' and 'Chasers' in North Carolina," Hopper said.

Hopper bought the historic Masonic Temple in downtown Wilmington while filming "Chasers," and plans to turn the building into a nonprofit acting school.

ATLANTA — As Scarlett said, tomorrow is another day. And time for another sequel.

St. Martin's Press paid $4.5 million this week to the estate of Margaret Mitchell for the rights to a second sequel to her "Gone With the Wind."

OPEN: Drought broken

From 1C

Instead, the 20-year-old Pierce, a well-traveled citizen of the world who carries three passports but claims France as her nationality, became the first French woman to win a slam title since Francoise Durr prevailed at the 1967 French Open.

As has been the case for the last two years, Pierce's father and former coach, Jim, was not on hand to see his daughter seize her milestone by playing just the way he taught her.

Jim Pierce continues to be banned from the WTA Tour for his habitual disruptions of Mary's matches on the court and his alleged abuse of her off the court.

But the fourth-seeded Pierce, although she prefers to keep her father at arm's length, did give him credit for grooming her ground strokes, and developing her hunger for a slam title during her flawless run here.

Now coached by Nick Bollettieri and Sven Groeneveld, Pierce has apparently gained the missing link to her game, composure, that enabled her to reach this new height — and a career-best ranking of number three in the world.

Neither player had dropped a set heading into the final, but Pierce, always imperious and occasionally foul-mouthed on the muggy stadium court, was not only the more powerful performer but also the most accurate playmaker.

Sanchez Vicario's forehand failed her repeatedly as she tried to keep pace with Pierce's power. Forced to race around the back of the court playing catch-up, the Spaniard was unable to launch her replies with sufficient control to damage Pierce, who calmly waited on the baseline to pick off whatever came her way.

A pair of double faults in the fifth game of the second set gave Pierce a break for 4-2, and Sanchez Vicario never threatened her again.

Irwin, Crenshaw not conceding

Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Hale Irwin and Ben Crenshaw, two 40-somethings who aren't ready to concede anything to youth, showed why in Friday's second round of the Phoenix Open.

Irwin, six months shy of qualifying for the 50-and-over Senior PGA Tour, shot his second consecutive 5-under-par 66 and Crenshaw, 43, joined him as a co-leader after a round of 64 which included a five-hole stretch played in 6-under.

Their 10-under totals of 132 were two shots better than Jim Carter, who also shot 64, and Tom Watson, another of the game's old guard.

"It's almost us vs. them, the old guys against the young guys," Irwin said. The two-time U.S. Open champion has won 20 titles and nearly $5.7 million. Crenshaw has 18 victories, including the 1979 Phoenix event, and $5.5 million.

Crenshaw said he and Irwin, a former Colorado defensive back who had a shot at the NFL, were in good enough shape to win.

"It's a mental game," Crenshaw said. "It obviously helps to be in great shape, but a golfer plays by his instincts."

■ Golf Roundup

John Morse, who won the Hawaiian Open, made it three January 1995 champions in the final field of 70.

Johnnie Walker Classic

MANILA, Philippines — While the unheralded had another big day with Swede Robert Karlsson shooting a course-record 65, Nick Price seized the lead for the elite of the golf world at the Johnnie Walker Classic.

Price, the world's top player, carded a 5-under-par 67 to stand at 138 after 36 holes of the $960,000 European PGA Tour event. The Zimbabwean led by a stroke over Karlsson and American Fred Couples, the world's No. 7 player and winner last week at the Dubai Desert Classic.

But less familiar names still were asserting themselves. At 141 were big-hitting Darren Clarke of Northern Ireland and Australian Robert Allenby.

They were tied with Scotland's Colin Montgomerie, the European Order of Merit champion the past two seasons.

First-round leader, Mats Hallberg of Sweden shot a 73 for a two-day total of 142. He wasn't discouraged, however.

"My main target when I came here was to make the cut," he said. "Who knows? Maybe I can go on and take the title on Sunday."

He was tied with Andrew Coltart of Scotland, Mark Davis of England, Isao Aoki of Japan, Constantino Rocca of Italy, Sam Torrance of Scotland, Greg Norman of Australia and Michael Campbell of New Zealand.

Chicago won't ask Jordan to be replacement

■ Stand from ownership not to make former Bull a strike-breaker.

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan will not be asked to be a replacement player during the strike, the Chicago White Sox said Friday.

"He will be in camp, definitely. He needs to improve his skills," general manager Ron Schueler said. "But he will not be asked to be a replacement player. That's a stand from ownership to not put him in that position."

Earlier this week Schueler told the Chicago Tribune that the former NBA star wouldn't be asked to serve as a replacement player because of his "high profile." Jordan said earlier he would not break ranks to play in replacement games.

The White Sox are slated to open camp in Sarasota, Fla., on Feb. 17 with pitchers and catchers reporting to Sarasota, Fla. One of those pitchers is scheduled to be Oil Can Boyd. Jordan, who probably will play in Class AAA this season, will report later in the month along with other minor leaguers.

Schueler said he almost had completed his replacement team.

"There are a few avenues," he said. "You can go after veteran Triple-A players who may not get that opportunity to guys who are recently retired. You may have to dip down into the minor leagues and give the guys who may not be your top prospects a chance. There are a lot of directions. ... We're still looking to improve. If somebody asks me April 3, yeah, I feel I'll have enough guys."

MHS: Hailey's career-high 38 points for naught

(From 1C)

Mitchell hit the first one, but missed the second, but Schmitz got the rebound and the put back to seal the fate of the 'Dogs for the final margin.

"I'm kind of new to this, but I expected to step up late in the season and help out," Schmitz said. "I was a little surprised that I got this much playing time in this kind of game, but it's a good feeling."

The loss leaves MHS with a 6-2 league mark, but still in sole possession of second place and no real threat to dropping out of the playoff hunt. Still, the loss hurt since the "C" word team gets a first round bye in the state playoffs.

"Cooper played really well and they beat us bad on the glass (37-26)," said MHS coach Jack Stepenson. "This one really hurts because we are better than they are, but we didn't play that way tonight. We just didn't do the things we needed to do to win the game. But we'll be right back."

It also had to be a bitter loss for the Bulldogs' Jumon Hailey, who hit a career high 38 points, including 15 points in the fourth quarter crunch time. He had 19 points at the half. MHS also got 20 points out of John Marc Sanon and 10 from Cornelius Mitchell, but little else.

Meanwhile, Schmitz was aided by 21 points from 6-4 Bart Fehr, 15 coming in the second half. Pillion added 17 points while Hirsch, who fouled out in the fourth period, had 11.

Cooper held a lead 14 different times in the game while MHS took the lead four times. The game was tied 12 other times, including 88-88 with 32 seconds left in the game when Schmitz took control.

Midland High must rebound quickly when they go to Odessa Permian to face a team that is struggling for its playoff life.

Abilene High, despite turning the ball over on four of its first five possessions, managed to build a 14-8 lead in the first quarter by holding the Lady Rebels scoreless for the last four minutes of the period.

Much of Lee's lack of offensive production in the first quarter came from the Lady Rebel guards inibility to get the ball inside to Krissy Woodard, the Lady Rebels' 6-foot-2 post. Woodard took only two shots in the first quarter and didn't shoot in the second.

"In the first half we didn't get it to her," Lee coach Elise Kail said. "She was wide open. I guess they couldn't see her."

It is a big turnaround for the Lady Eagles, who began district with two straight losses before righting themselves with a win over the Lady Rebels in the third game.

"One of the hidden tools to get focused is to lose your first two games," Nichols said.

Despite the early knockdown, however, the Lady Rebels were not down for the count. They stood toe to toe with Abilene in the second quarter, which reestablished their confidence, and in the third, they threw a few punches themselves.

Down 28-23 to begin the third, the Lady Rebels came out swinging as junior point guard Claire Wright nailed her second three-point goal of the night and sophomore wing Jamie Rhoads drove the left side of the Abilene defense for two of her game-high 17 points to tie the game at 28-28 with 6:42 to play.

Rhoads drove for two more buckets to give Lee a 32-30 lead with 3:04 to play and senior Michelle Benson added another off an offensive rebound to give Lee its biggest lead of the night at 34-31.

In the fourth, the Lady Eagles held Lee to three points in the first four minutes of the fourth and kept the Lady Rebels scoreless from 4:19 to play until 1:15 as they built a 46-39 lead. With about two minutes to play, Kail ordered her squad to start fouling in an attempt to rally.

The plan backfired. The Lady Eagles took their cue and sank 11 free throws from 2:45 to seal the win.

It was the second straight league loss for the Lady Rebels, who host Odessa High at 6:15 p.m. Tuesday at Chaparral Center.

"It makes us have to play harder for the next three games," Kail said. "If we lose the next three games (Odessa, San Angelo and Permian) we can kiss the season goodbye. If we win, we'll be in good shape. But they're crucial."

In junior varsity action, Abilene High defeated the Lady Rebels 53-42. Angie Seibold scored 15 points to lead Lee, which fell to 9-15 overall and 3-6 in league play.

Palmer, 65, finds time to for game

■ Senior Skins

KOHALA COAST, Hawaii (AP) — His life is full and busy. If he's not flying around checking on the construction of golf courses, he's putting in time on The Golf Channel, or maybe doing some advisory work on clubs and equipment.

Arnold Palmer, still going strong at 65, even manages some time to play the game.

"I find myself in the same dilemma I'm in every year at this time. I say I'm going to take a little time off and not work as hard," said Palmer, who tees it up Saturday with Jack Nicklaus, Lee Trevino and Raymond Floyd in the Senior Skins Game at Mauna Lani Resort.

"Then, after I've taken a couple days off, I find myself getting busy again and my schedule is getting pretty heavy."

Golf course construction is among those demands.

"We have contracts to do approximately 40 golf courses; that number stretches us everywhere in the world," he said. "That has been a real joy to me. Creating golf courses is a lot of fun."

Then there is The Golf Channel, a 24-hour, pay cable offering. One of the forces behind The Golf Channel, Palmer also plans to spend some time in front of the camera.

"I anticipate increased business with The Golf Channel as time goes on," he said. "I worked for NBC for awhile as an announcer. Now I'm getting to the stage where there are some things I can do with The Golf Channel as part of their programming."

Although past his prime driving and putting, Palmer remains probably the most popular figure in golf, and he also hasn't lost that all familiar fire.

"I am working on my game as time permits," he said. "I've spent a lot of time the last five or six years trying to lengthen my swing to keep up in distance with the younger guys on the Senior Tour and the regular tour.

"I've scrapped all that. I'm going back to swinging the club the way I used to and know how to swing it."

Stakes to increase in America's Cup

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The America's Cup stakes will increase Sunday when remodeled yachts sporting brand-new keels, masts and sails arrive for the start of the second round of competition in sailing's most prestigious event.

Three syndicates from the United States and seven from New Zealand, Australia, Spain, France and Japan spent the past week speeding up their sloops for the races, which are worth two points each.

After the first round-robin, among the defenders, Pact 95's Young America leads with five points, Team Dennis Conner's Stars & Stripes has three points and the all-women America3 has one point.

Each of the first round races were worth only one point

Young America and America3 will race Sunday in the first defender contest of the second round. Stars & Stripes has the day off. The challenger matches will be drawn Saturday morning.

The winning defender will represent the United States in the America's Cup that begins May 6.

Any changes to the yachts in preparation for the second round are top secret. The work was done at each team's compound rimmed by tall fences, security cameras and heat sensors.

The surgery ranges from subtle to significant. The underwater appendages have undergone the most crucial alterations, developed by yacht designers. Each syndicate has a quiver of keels that will be tested on the race course this time around.

But just like a Super Bowl game plan, the strategy and keel technology of each team is a closely guarded secret.

At Team Dennis Conner, the week-long break was officially spent on maintenance, which may or may not mean a new keel will debut.

"The boats are much more similar this time than the last Cup and the appendages play a much more important part," said Bill Trenkle, operations manager for Conner's yacht, Stars & Stripes.

"There are all kinds of foils, bulbs, fins, ringlets and rudders," he said. "We don't know what the others are doing and they don't know what we are doing."

No significant changes have been made to leader Young America's keel for the second round robin, said team chairman John Marshall.

The America3 syndicate lost five of six first-round contests on a 3-year-old yacht. Syndicate chief Bill Koch said last week he was considering making a keel change to America3 for the second round and said there would be some changes to the yacht.

"This second round is still a round to learn as much as we can, and we're doing all we can to improve," said starting helmswoman J.J. Isler.

America3 will get its new yacht in February.

Among the defenders, Young America won five of its six first-round races.

"To stay ahead is going to require significant progress every month, and I don't think that our team or any of the teams are the America's Cup polish you will see later on," said skipper Kevin Mahaney.

The strategy for each syndicate is different. Some teams treat the first rounds as a venue for testing and evaluating the competition.

"These early races, you could consider them demonstration races, relative to the points in round-robin 3 and 4," said fourth-placed oneAustralia skipper John Bertrand.

Stars & Stripes is mindful of the importance of later races.

"I think we tend to build momentum," Trenkle said.

But with double the points up for grabs, there will be more on the line for everyone in the second round.

"There is no substitute for winning," said Japan's sailing coach, Pete Gilmour.

Team New Zealand leads the challenger fleet and has not lost a race yet.

"We think that even a one-point race is very valuable," said Team New Zealand spokesman Alan Sefton.

"If you lost this whole thing by one point, you would kick yourself. Every race is valuable and we are not taking anybody easy."

UPSET: Watters says Chargers deserving of San Fran's respect

(From 1C)

mate chance of winning."

Can they lose? That's been the most popular question asked of the San Francisco 49ers this week.

"The team that we're playing deserves to be here," running back Ricky Watters said. "This is a team that went on the road and beat a Pittsburgh Steelers team that was clicking on all cylinders. That's enough of a wakeup call to let us know that if it could happen to them, it could happen to us."

Can it? Can the 19-point favorites to win an unprecedented fifth Super Bowl really fall short against a newcomer to the NFL title game?

Can a 49ers team that has routed just about everyone for three months — including the Chargers, 38-15 in December — be the victim of the biggest upset in Super Bowl history. Perhaps even in all of sports history?

"My favorite story is David and Goliath," Chargers safety Darren Carrington said. "I saw it in the paper, and I read it the other night to refresh my mind. I'm glad it's been brought up. It has a good ending."

This Super Bowl could use a good ending, because the buildup to it has been, well, kind of boring. Sure, Watters, William Floyd and a few other 49ers broke into an impromptu rap at media day Tuesday. A day earlier, Jerry Rice hinted at retirement if the Niners win. And several Chargers bristled at the underdog role on occasion, believing their achievements in getting this far were being overlooked.

So the overwhelming theme all week has been what the Chargers can do to stay in the game. Never mind win, just make it more presentable than most AFC teams have managed in the current 10-year NFC winning streak.

"I don't think we have to play a perfect game, because there never is a perfect game played," Ross said in his final pregame news conference. "But we have to play a very good game."

And keep their cool, which Ross said has not been a concern — yet.

"I haven't sensed that right now," he said of any nervousness on the part of his players and coaches. "My best gauge is our practices, and our practices have been good. We've probably been more relaxed and loose in our practice sessions than anytime in this season.

"The closer we get, we'll probably have some sweaty palms. That is going to happen for all of us. If you don't have that, then you're probably missing something. I'm at a certain age myself and mine still sweat going into a ballgame. I'm sure there will be some degree of nervousness.

"When we kick that ball off or they kick that ball off, then it is all gone and you start to play the game."

The 49ers have played the game at a level few teams ever have reached. It doesn't make them invincible, of course, but it does make them very formidable.

They bring to the Super Bowl an offense that can be overwhelming (505 points, plus 84 more in two playoff games) and a rebuilt defense packed with stars. They bring a history of Super success with a 4-0 record in the NFL title game. And they carry a load of expectations, particularly after revamping so much of the roster for an immediate run at the championship after falling short the last four years.

"Inheriting a winning tradition and trying to maintain that can be extremely stressful," 49ers coach George Seifert said. "But at the same time, that is the kind of environment that we all live in as coaches. It's part of our lives.

"I would prefer that it be this way than any other. I'm not complaining about the fact that the expectations are high. I think it helps us going into each of the seasons."

Rarely has so much been expected from a Super Bowl team. Rarely has a team been held to such high standards.

The last team in this position probably was the Baltimore Colts in 1969. And as Joe Namath can tell you, they didn't win.

49ers respect foe, but confident of win

By Glenn Dickey
New York Times News Service

MIAMI — All week long, the story has been whether the 49ers respect the San Diego Chargers, or whether they'll dissolve in gales of laughter when they take the field at Joe Robbie Stadium Sunday.

Center Bart Oates, who has been through this scenario before with the New York Giants, put it in perspective. "It's not that we don't respect the Chargers," he said, "but we know that, if we do the things we can do, we'll win the game. It's as simple as that."

That's the kind of confidence the 49ers have going into this game. It's not just the veterans, either. "When I was in my first couple of years with the Redskins," said defensive end Charles Mann, "I followed the veterans around like a puppy dog. I knew I had so much to learn.

"But these kids (Dana Stubblefield, Bryant Young) don't do that. They feel they already know how to play, and they're right."

If you're still worrying that the 49ers will be overconfident, look at the regular season, which is when that type of feeling — and upsets which result from it — usually happen.

In fact, the 49ers did a remarkable job of staying on an even keel. It often seemed, reading the papers or listening to talk shows, that the 49ers had a one-game season, the game against the Cowboys. Yet, once they righted themselves after the horrendous loss to Philadelphia, they were able to take the games one at a time, which meant the rout of the week.

The only scare they got aside from the Dallas game was when they fell behind against the Rams, the week after their Cowboys win. No doubt, that was a psychological letdown, but even in that game, they were able to come from behind in the closing minutes to win.

The 49ers organization has always concentrated on keeping the team together, developing almost a family feeling. Of necessity, the 49ers had a different strategy this year, going after the free agents they needed to bring the defense to a level capable of competing evenly with the Cowboys.

Yet, they've developed the cohesiveness, on and off the field, they've needed to win.

It is, of course, a much more demonstrative team than the past 49ers, and coach George Seifert has learned to accept and even enjoy that.

Seifert has seemed more relaxed this season than in any other. One sign: He makes small jokes at news conferences. Asked Friday if he was relieved that there had been no off-field incidents this week, or at least, none that had come to the attention of the media, he said, "I'm relieved that they haven't come to your attention."

When you talk about a football coach being relaxed, of course, everything is relative. "People in San Francisco have seen George smile three or four times on the sidelines this year, which they never expected," said tight end Brent Jones. "Still, three or four smiles a year ... that doesn't sound like a lot of enjoyment to me."

The 49ers team on which players were closest was the 1981 team, which had young players who were getting their first chance at a championship, some of them, like Randy Cross and Keith Fahnhorst, who had played on the back-to-back 2-14 teams of the '70s.

The current 49ers are probably just as close because they also have a common goal.

Several free agents came to the team to get this opportunity. "Rickey Jackson might have been as good an outside linebacker as Lawrence Taylor," said Toi Cook.

Holy Bull makes it official with honor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Holy Bull's performance in the Woodward Stakes left jockey Mike Smith trying in vain to assess the gray colt.

"There are no words in the world to describe him," Smith decided that September afternoon at Belmont Park.

Well, a lot of people started calling the colt Horse of the Year, and that's what Holy Bull officially became Friday night during the Thoroughbred Racing Assocation's Eclipse Awards Dinner.

"Never in my wildest dreams did I think I would own and train the horse of the year," owner-trainer Jimmy Croll said. In accepting the trophy, he mentioned the "excellent job, professional job done by Mike Smith" and also thanked the rest of a staff which he said "not only looks after Holy Bull but looks after me."

It was the colt's second Eclipse. On Jan. 12, he was selected as champion 3-year-old in voting by the National Turf Writers Association, Daily Racing Form and the racing secretaries of TRA tracks. All three groups gave Holy Bull first-place votes in both the 3-year-old and Horse of the Year categories.

Holy Bull launched his 1995 campaign Sunday with as easy victory in the 7-furlong Olympic Handicap at Gulfstream Park.

■ Horse of Year

The colt earned 1994 honors his way — and the way of Croll, the 75-year-old Hall of Famer. Their way resulted in eight wins in 10 starts, and earnings of $2,095,000.

Holy Bull won his first four starts of the 1994, then finished 12th as the favorite in the Kentucky Derby on a sloppy track May 7. The colt was held out of the Preakness because of low blood count before returning to action with a wire-to-wire win over older horses in the one-mile Metropolitan Handicap on May 30 at Belmont Park.

Held out of the Belmont Stakes, Holy Bull scored front-running victories in the 1 1-16-mile Dwyer on July 3 at Belmont and the 1⅛-mile Haskell Handicap on July 31 at Monmouth Park.

Holy Bull then answered critics by winning the Travers Stakes at the classic distance of 1¼ miles Aug. 20 at Saratoga. In winning, he gave up the lead to the rabbit Commanche Trail at the start, stalked him for a half-mile, then took the lead and held off the challenge of stretch-running Concern for a neck victory.

Croll said that 1⅛-mile Woodward against older horses Sept. 17 would be Holy Bull's last start.

UMass edges West Virginia

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Mike Williams hit a 3-pointer with 16 seconds left in overtime Friday night that broke a tie and helped top-ranked Massachusetts, which overcame a late 18-point deficit, beat West Virginia 97-94.

West Virginia (8-8, 3-5 Atlantic-10) led 80-62 with 4:48 remaining in regulation before Massachusetts (15-1, 7-0) went on a 24-6 run to tie the game 86-86.

WBA denies Foreman fight with Schulz

NEW YORK (AP) — The WBA championship committee on Friday unanimously denied George Foreman's request to fight Axel Schulz and threatened to strip him of the world championship if he doesn't reconsider.

WBA president Gilberto Mendoza, one of five voting members of the committee, said, however, that he would try to meet as soon as possible with Foreman, and he was confident the champion "will change his mind."

In Las Vegas, Foreman's promoter, Bob Arum, indicated the Schulz fight would go on as scheduled and said he and Foreman's attorneys were considering legal action.

"Title belt or no belt, George is the heavyweight champion," Arum said. "The entire world saw him knock out Michael Moorer in the ring, so I guess that the WBA is saying that it is bigger than reality, bigger than the truth."

The 46-year-old Foreman won the WBA and IBF portions of the championship last Nov. 5 with a 10th-round knockout of Moorer. He is scheduled to fight Schulz, a German, in Las Vegas on April 22.

WBA Rule 5.4 says that if an unranked contender, which Foreman was, wins the championship, he has 120 days to fight the No. 1 contender, in this case Tony Tucker. That gives him until March 5, although WBA attorney Jimmy Binns said extensions usually are granted if additional time is required to promote the fight.

"We don't want to strip the title from George Foreman," Mendoza said. "The title should be won in the ring.

"After we talk, we will make a decision," Mendoza said, adding that if Foreman doesn't then comply, "we will apply the rules and strip him."

The IBF is expected to allow Foreman to continue as its champion.

Neither Foreman nor Arum was at the hearing. In a videotaped presentation, Arum argued that the Foreman should be granted special permission to fight Schulz under regulations that allow the rules to be bent if the fight is of special significance to boxing.

"Let us all really revel in the achievement of George Foreman and what it has meant to the sport of boxing," said Arum, who was in Las Vegas.

Ex-Red Raider ordered to make child payments

LOVINGTON, N.M. (AP) — Former Texas Tech and Washington Redskins running back Timmy Smith has been ordered to make good on $73,000 in back child support payments in New Mexico.

State District Judge Patrick Francoeur ordered Smith to start making monthly payments by February to the children's mother, Natalie Smith, and to tell the state Child Support Enforcement Bureau about any changes in address or job.

Smith, who played for Hobbs High School and Texas Tech before joining the Redskins and starring in a Super Bowl, topped New Mexico's 1994 list of the 25 people "Most Wanted for Failure to Pay Child Support."

Elizabeth Cunningham, a special assistant attorney general, said the state has been trying to get Smith to pay child support for his two children since he was a student at Texas Tech.

As a student, Smith was supposed to pay $100 a month for his children's care, Cunningham said. She said that by the time he signed with the Redskins in 1987, he was in arrears by several thousand dollars.

He was supposed to pay $1,000 a month child support while playing for the Redskins, but the state filed for wage withholding when payments became delinquent. New Mexico garnisheed his wages when he played for the Redskins in 1987 and 1988, then lost track of him after he left the Dallas Cowboys in 1990.

OFFICIAL GAME RULES

It's fun and easy! Anyone 18 or older can play the Welcome to the Oil Patch Game, except employees (and family members of employees) of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Associated Publishing Company, Brite Systems, Inc. and their advertising and promotion agencies. The Welcome to the Oil Patch Game is designed for people in Andrews, Crane, Ector, Glasscock, Howard, Martin, Midland, Upton, Ward and Winkler counties. No purchase is required to play or win prizes, but you must have a Permian Basin Area Wide Book lucky number to enter and win a prize. Long distance charges may apply in some areas. If you live in the above counties and do not have a Permian Basin Area Wide Phone Book, call 687-1756, 563-5440 or 800-588-1756 to find out where to pick one up without charge.

Here's How to Play

Turn to The Game Page in the Midland Reporter-Telegram or in other area publications and look for this week's question. Then call CityLine, 560-2400. enter category 1111 for the correct answer and to find out if the number on the card following page 256 in your phone book has made you a winner of one of this week's three prizes of a tank full of gasoline (valued at up to $25) and $75 in cash or the grand prize, gasoline for a year (valued up to $1,300) and $1,000 in cash.

Each week three numbers will be selected to win a prize valued at $100 or more. If the number in your phone book is a winner, keep listening. CityLine will tell you how to claim your prize. Keep calling.....new lucky numbers will be added many times in the same week promotion.

You could win one of the unclaimed weekly prizes and enter the drawing for the grand prize. Here's how: Complete the official entry form and mail it so that it arrives before the deadline or hand print your name, address and daytime phone number on a plain 3"x5" piece of paper. Be sure to include your Permian Basin Area Wide Phone Book lucky number and the correct answer to this week's question. The more often you enter, the better your chance of winning. Mail entries - one per envelope to: Welcome to the Oil Patch Game, Associated Publishing Company, 4400 N. Big Spring, Suite 201, Midland, TX 79705. All entries become the property of the sponsors. None will be returned.

Each week for six weeks ending January 15, 1995, the winning numbers will be selected at random and will win one of that weeks prizes. If the winners are not identified by CityLine, they will be drawn from mailed entries. Half the fun of owning knick-knacks is displaying them artfully. The other half is displaying them on a shelf you've built yourself. We make it easy for you. This project was designed for the beginning woodworker. The corner shelf pictured here is approximately 30" tall and the width is approximately 15". The pattern is full-size. Just lay it onto the wood of your choice, trace, saw and assemble.
