(By Associated Press)
PITTSBURGH, Kansas, Feb. 7. (AP)—A dynamite bomb wrecked the home of Mrs. Earl Mayberry and killed her two children—a girl of ten and a boy of six, as they slept last midnight. Mrs. Mayberry was severely injured but probably will recover. Earl Mayberry, arrested soon after the explosion as he lay in bed in his room six blocks away, is held and is being questioned by officers. He denies all knowledge of the crime. He and his wife have been separated about a year and suit for divorce, filed by Mayberry is pending.

Harvey Davis and his wife, former close friends of the Mayberry family, are in jail. Davis figured in the Mayberry domestic troubles. The dynamite was placed on the floor in the corner of a small bedroom and under the bed near a window. It is the theory of officers that the perpetrator of the crime opened the window and placed the dynamite with a long fuse attached. Mrs. Mayberry, 38, years old, was found by neighbors who were aroused by the blast, sitting amid shredded bed clothing. She appeared dazed and asked what had taken place. Later it developed that she was injured in the explosion and she was taken to a hospital where it is believed she will recover.

Tribute To A Failure

JUST exactly what is a man's real "life work"? How are we to tell whether he has made a success or a failure of it?

These questions seem a bit strange, perhaps. Yet a few days ago, in more than a dozen states, business was stopped so that people might pay tribute to the memory of a man who failed utterly to gain his ends and who went down to an overwhelming defeat after years of heart-breaking struggle.

The man was Robert E. Lee, one-time commander of the armed forces of the southern Confederacy. Our nation does not worship failures. We have no palms to spare for those who could not succeed. Yet—Robert E. Lee is one of our chief heroes. Why—since he failed?

Perhaps it is because we are growing to realize that there are failures more dazzling than any success. Perhaps we are coming to understand that it is not altogether what a man does that counts, that how he does it may be more important.

Time has swallowed up the mighty armies that marched the banks of the Mississippi, the Mississippi and the James. The hosts that fought at Gettysburg, at Shiloh and at Chancellorsville have marched on into the dim mists of the past, so that blue and gray uniforms alike are hardly distinguishable from green grass covers the remains of the trenches at Cold Harbor, and Fort Sumter is only a relic. The battle flags are in museums.

Yet Lee has not been swallowed by time. The cannon smoke has drifted away only to reveal his heroic figure looming larger, more majestic than ever. The country has forgotten, gladly, that he fought for a lost cause; it remembers only the valor, the skill and the shining manliness with which he fought.

What the Railroads Do

When the average man sets out to discuss America's present prosperity, you'll usually find him mentioning such things as improved manufacturing systems, better banking facilities, high wages and efficient advertising as the chief contributing causes.

Taught By War

Kansas, apparently, is about to repeal her famous anti-cigarette law. News dispatches state that the repeal campaign has received most of its strength from the ex-service men, who recalled the solace and comfort given them in trying times by "fags" and who also remembered that all the welfare agencies helped to supply them.

The first international attempt to limit armaments was made at the Hague convention in 1899.

The Liberty Bell was cast in London in 1752 and recast the next year in Philadelphia.

Four flags have flown over the state of Florida, those of England, France, Spain and the United States.

IN NEW YORK SEE-SAWING and DOWN BROADWAY

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—Along the river front of this great city there is a strange nomad population, as foreign to Broadway and Fifth avenue as Australian bushmen, that lives its own secluded, peculiar life, unheeded by the throngs that come and go about it.

It is made up of the 3000 men, women and children who live on the coal barges that float lazily up and down the river. The coal barges are ancient wooden hulks, many of them dismantled square riggers shorn of their former trim beauty, dismantled and reduced to mere oblong boxes with rounded ends, covered with hatches from stem to stern and fitted aft with little deck houses, usually containing a couple of rooms, each of which measures about 6 by 8 feet.

Each barge has its bargeman, who lives in the cabin, tends the lights, handles lines and looks after the bulk generally. Some of these men are bachelors, living in solitary comfort, strange hermits surrounded by millions of people; others are married and their families live on the barges with them.

Some of the married bargemen hardly have ideal domestic establishments. In many cases a man and his wife and three or four children live all together in the two little cabins of a barge. This is not because of any love for river life, but because the bargeman's wages—around $90 or $100 a month—do not allow a separate home ashore.

The children usually miss school entirely. They are out of reach of truant officers. Their quarters, often filthy in the extreme, they grow up stunted, uneducated, sickly. Bargemen have no time off. They are required to be on their craft at all times, including Sundays and holidays. To be sure, their work is not extra arduous, and some of the single men enjoy a lazy, carefree existence; but it is hardly a life for a family man.

New York, home of some 2,000,000 Jews, has just disproved an old tradition—namely, that most Jews are engaged in commerce. The first edition of "Who's Who in Jewry," just published, shows that of 227 Jews listed as prominent, only 60 are bankers, 9 are brokers, 7 are capitalists and 9 are real estate operators. On the other hand, 414 physicians and surgeons are listed, 310 lawyers, 277 rabbis, 125 engineers, 93 artists, 89 musicians and 93 professors. Ninety-four merchants and 22 manufacturers are mentioned.

The average Broadwayite might be inclined to laugh if you mention Cratfordville, Ind., to him—but three present-day Broadway successes are the work of people born in Cratfordville. The movie "Ben Hur," was written by the late Lew Wallace, the satiric melodramas, "Chicago," is the work of Maurice Watkins; and the new play, "The Barker," is from the pen of J. Kenyon Nicholson. All of these people first saw the light of day in Cratfordville. (Copyright, 1927, NEA Service, Inc.)

The Bootlegger's Stuff Begins to Work

WASHINGTON LETTER

Since the first of the year District of Columbia motorists have been wondering what would happen if they wandered too far from home.

Some have been a bit uneasy because 1927 license tags failed to arrive on time, and as a result automobilists have been doing their January driving with 1926 tags on their cars.

It's all right with the police here, and with the authorities in the adjoining states of Virginia and Maryland, but some drivers have been afraid that no amount of explaining would do any good with alert motor cops or country justices in more distant sections.

The tags—200,000 of them—were ordered for delivery in December. A Chicago concern agreed to turn them out but it failed to make good on the contract. It now appears that enough tags for all automobiles will not be available before mid-February.

Typewriters on which letters from members of congress to President Roosevelt may have been written finally have succumbed to old age after nearly a quarter of a century of service. The architect of the capitol, reporting to congress that a large number of the machines had been traded in for new ones, remarked that they included three or four purchased as early as 1904. Several came to "the Hill" in 1906 and a few during the administration of William Howard Taft.

Reminders of the time when Washington's larger cities did not find it necessary to employ large corps of traffic rule makers to keep pace with the rapid multiplication of automobiles have just come to light in the basement of the interior department. During a general clean-up of the big buildings a remote corner yielded evidence of the calm and stately manner in which former secretaries rode when their duties carried them outside their offices. The official carriage was gone, but fur robes, watches and leather holders that were part of the equipage were found, together with a pair of saddles. The late Franklin K. Lane was the last secretary of the interior to use horses which were replaced by the speedier automobile ten or eleven years ago.

At the beginning of a new year, when most of our large cities did not find it necessary to employ large corps of traffic rule makers to keep pace with the rapid multiplication of automobiles have just come to light in the basement of the interior department. About $60,000 in cash and negotiable inclosures, received annually in the dead letter office, goes into the exchequer of the office. Each successful claimant for advertised unclaimed letters is assessed one penny. A suitcase on wheels is a recent invention. The carrier folds up when not in use and only the small wheels project. A dust attack from airplanes has been used with some success in Russia in combating grasshoppers.

Contemporaries

HE DID NOT KNOW A 16-year-old student of the University of Rochester ended his life and left as his final message that "everything was dark and worthless," that he had found life "barren and futile."

One cannot help marveling that at 16 life should seem barren and everything futile. In fact, at 16 one has scarcely begun to live, and he knows not realize that in his young life it was scarcely yet dawn, and there was the sunrise and the bright forenoon and the warm noontide and perhaps the mellow evening yet to come. Life barren, when he had as yet caught but the merest glimpse of it. And here again there is pity that such sophistication had come to one so young.

It has been said that the thoughts of youth are "long, long thoughts," but in this instance they seem to have been pitifully short, not reaching beyond the horizon of some passing phase of his environment. We wonder what experiences might have been that had so taken the glamour off a "whole world" of wonder, interest and beauty that he had not yet reached an age to clearly comprehend. Certainly, he had only sipped the froth and did not know the taste of life itself.

If this boy had but realized it, life was ready and waiting to yield him treasure in return for everything he gave. What a pity he did not know.—Amarillo Globe.

CRREDIT SYSTEM DOOMED Considerable argument pro and con on the credit system is going on wherever there are men to argue on the question of whether or not the credit system is going to be a thing of the past within a few years, so far as retail merchandising is concerned. The credit system as we have known it in the past, practiced in the cotton sections of the state is certainly not good economically and is doomed to go. However, all credit in the retail merchandising business is not unsound and to a certain extent will be practiced as long as men buy and sell. That portion of the credit system which has for its backbone the crop lien should be abolished.—Floyd County-Hesperian.

Eighty per cent of the population of Portugal is illiterate. Canadian national railroads are experimenting with a locomotive whistle placed in front of the smokestack. When thermometers fail to register, men in the far north can determine the temperature approximately by building a wood fire. SAINT AND SINNER

BY ANNE AUSTIN COPYRIGHT 1926 NEA

THE mysterious letter, copied from the original in Bob Hathaway's neat, small handwriting, like copperplate engraving, was brief and ominous: "It'll be out of this hell soon, Cluny, and you've got to make restitution. Ten years of hell from which you might have saved me if you had not lain down on the job. Drunk when you made your summation before the jury. Drunk! Good God! And I've paid by ten years in hell for your spree."

"You cannot give me back the ten years, but I shall hold you to an accounting for the fortune you took from me to defend me. Defend me! God, I could tear out the ears of this damnable place with my bare hands when I think of you and the weak-kneed, doddering, drunken defense plea you put up for me. I shall come out a penniless, prematurely old man, but you shall restore to me the fortune you took from me for what no right-minded lawyer would consider a defense. If you do not—but you know me, Cluny. You know that if you do not meet my just demands, you will pay. This is the last warning I shall give you. The next time I will warn you face to face. H."

"What a horrible letter!" Faith's hands quivered away from the sheet with disgust. "It should be easy to trace the writer, darling. Oh, it is a clue isn't it?" Bob's face was more grave than she expected it to be. "I'm afraid it won't be so easy as it looks, sweetheart. The original letter was written by a very crafty man. I shall come out a penniless, prematurely old man, but you shall restore to me the fortune you took from me for what no right-minded lawyer would consider a defense. If you do not—but you know me, Cluny. You know that if you do not meet my just demands, you will pay. This is the last warning I shall give you. The next time I will warn you face to face. H."

"But if 'H' was in prison, and had been defended by Mr. Cluny, it is safe to assume that he was in a state prison here, isn't it?" Faith asked.

"He might have been a federal prisoner in Leavenworth or Atlanta, or in some other prison," Bob pointed out. Unfortunately the envelope was not kept.

"But he says this as a 'last warning,'" Faith reminded him. "Didn't you find other letters from him?"

"Not a trace of one," Bob answered gloomily. "Uncle Ralph probably destroyed them or there is a bare possibility that he turned them over to the district attorney. I doubt it, though. Uncle Ralph was not afraid of God, man or devil. I don't understand how he happened to file this one. Probably dropped into the file basket, instead of destroying it."

"The writer accuses your uncle of having been drunk during the trial," Faith shuddered. "Do you think that's true?"

"I don't believe it for a minute," Bob asserted defiantly. "Uncle Ralph was never a hard drinker, and I never heard of his being drunk on a case, or any other time. This chap has simply hooded until he's lost his mind. He undoubtedly paid Uncle Ralph a big sum of money, and the jury found him guilty. The fact that he was evidently denied a new trial indicates that the supreme court thought the sentence was just."

"What did Churchill say?" Faith asked hopefully.

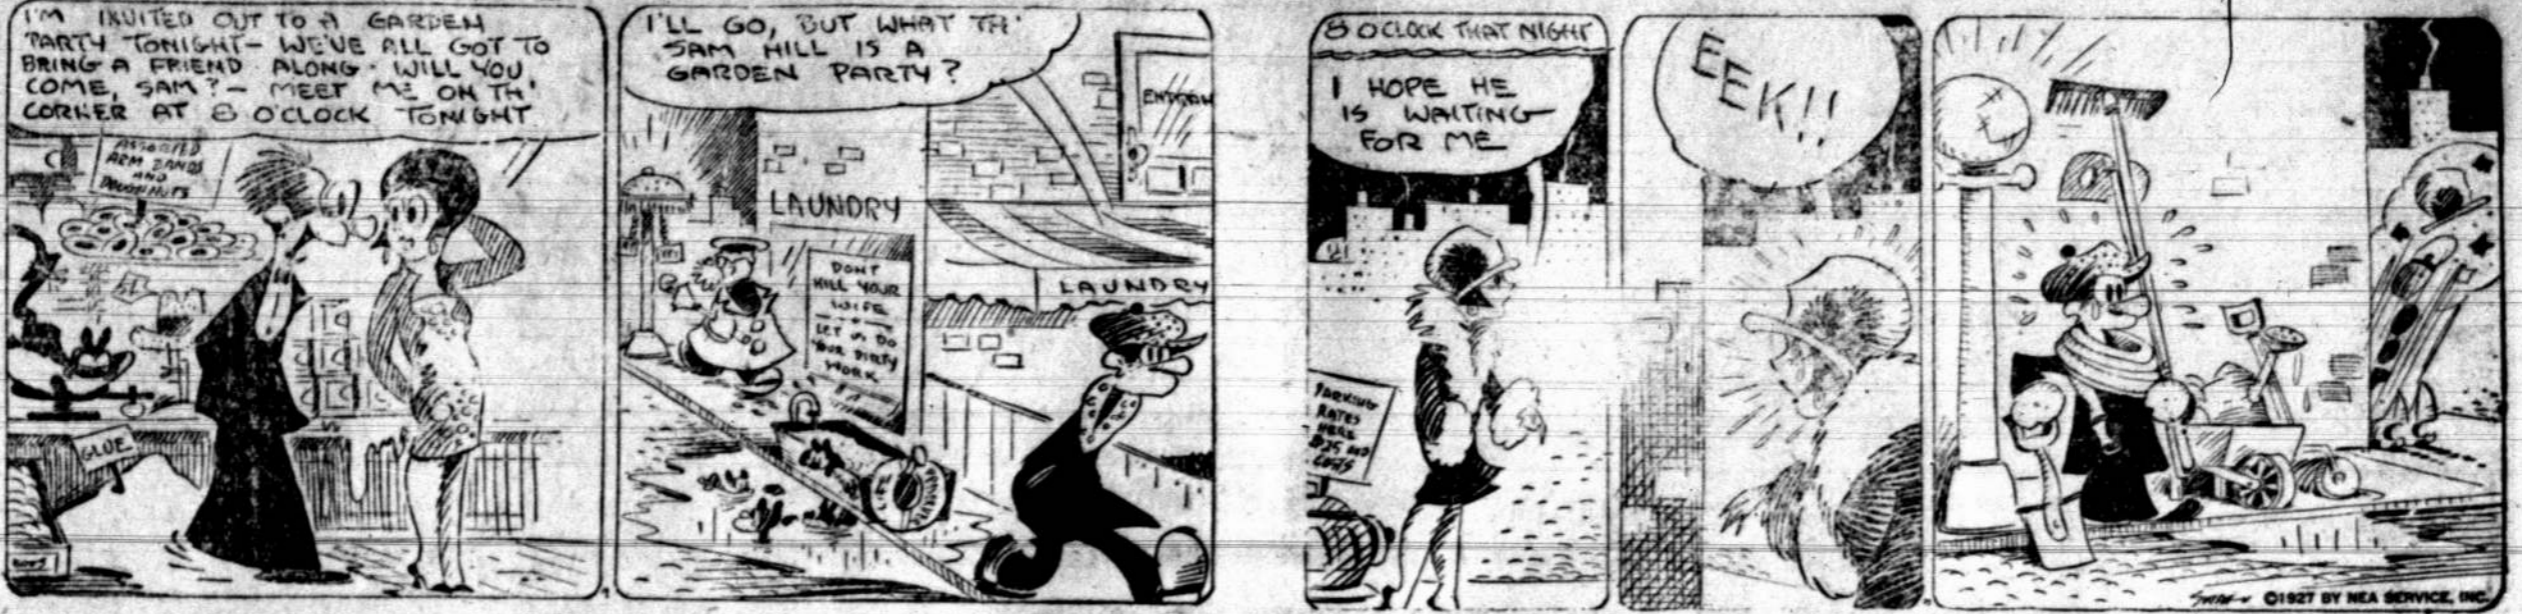

TOMORROW: Faith begins asking questions.

Radium Fails to Live Up to Its Reputation as a "Cure-All"

BY DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN Editor Journal of the American Medical Association and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

WHEN the Curies first announced the discovery of radium, medical science greeted the announcement with great optimism. Here was a new and potent substance which unquestionably had definite effects upon tissues when applied directly, and which therefore might apparently be used for all sorts of conditions. Leaders of medicine in Germany and Austria suggested the use of radium for rheumatism, gout, inflamed joints, neuritis, neuralgia and all sorts of pains generally.

Not only was the radium used through drinking water containing the emanation of radium, but also by exposure, in special emanatoriums, directly to the inhalation of the radium emanation.

Optimistic at First Fifteen years ago all sorts of optimistic reports appeared on the use of radium. Manufacturers began to develop radium emanators which were supposed to contain radium in their walls and to have the power of activating the water within them by the emanation.

These were sold both to the physicians and to the public with the claims that they would greatly benefit high blood pressure and other diseases that have been mentioned. Recent investigations just completed by the physicians mentioned and controlled by the study of other cases not treated by these methods are disappointing.

The physicians say that radium will sometimes lower blood pressure, but that the same results can be obtained easily by other and simpler methods; that it will relieve pain, but that the same results can usually be obtained by other and less expensive methods.

They argue that radium may be used provided all other methods have failed, but that under the present circumstances the results are in general disappointing.

A person who is suffering from a chronic disease and who is beset with offers to sell him expensive radium apparatus for drinking radium water or inhaling radium emanation will do well to consult scientific advice before making any such outlay. There are moreover, numerous radium devices which do not provide enough radium to have even the slightest appreciable effect.

The American Medical Association, 535 North Dearborn St., Chicago, is glad to give information concerning the reliability for any such radium devices.

As A Woman Sees It

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

POOR DAD RESERVES HIS BIT OF REST LATE IN LIFE.

By Olive Roberts Barton HIS children had always had everything he was able to give them from the time when they greeted him with shouts of "What did you bring, Daddy?" to the years later on when motors and college were taken pretty much for granted.

The greater the need the harder he had worked. His aches in the early days had been cracked from too much polishing. He was always planning to get things for himself but a new suit would likely as not be side-tracked by a case of sickness, and a much-needed vacation would be stopped before it started because the bills were bigger than usual.

He had always made ends meet by stretching himself across the gap. He seldom worried his wife with money troubles and was known as a "good provider."

Eventually he prospered. Slowly at first, but with a little working capital he was able to forge ahead. He did not indulge himself. He felt guilty even now if he discarded a pair of shoes that were not quite split through. But he was thankful that the demands of a modern family of growing children could be met without embarrassment.

Twenty years of doing without so that his family could be comfortable had aged him. He wanted no thanks. The children were grateful in their way, but his real reward lay in duty done. He had given each one of them his chance in life, a heritage of health and knowledge. He had had a hard time growing up himself. He had spared them that.

They had their own friends and interests, and one was married. Their parents saw little of them now. Home was chiefly a repair station.

Well, it didn't matter! Most boys and girls were that way. He and his wife were only fifty. They could leave and play a bit and make up for lost time.

Suddenly his wife died. There followed three of the loneliest years he had ever known. He met a very fine woman of forty and married her, eventually.

And what did those children say about it? They said "Father, how could you be so selfish? Why could you not think of us?" And others said, "Isn't it like a man to give his second wife luxuries the first wife saved for?" I say he did exactly right.
