Cable TV owner buys local S&Ls

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Adam

Two Midland-based savings and loan associations, along with nine others around the state, were acquired Friday by a cable television operator under the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's Southwest Plan.

Banc Home Savings Association and Petroplex Savings, both of Midland, plus San Saba-based Heart O' Texas Savings which opened a Midland branch earlier this year and Odessa Savings & Loan, will be merged into Olney Savings & Loan Association. The entity will be owned by Bryan businessman Don Adam and his Adam Corp./Group cable television holdings.

All local offices of the thrift institutions will reopen Monday as branches of Olney Savings, the company said in a prepared statement. "Depositors from the former associations will be able to conduct business as usual at a newly chartered...institution, which will operate out of all the former branch locations."

All deposits, even those above the $100,000 federal insurance limit were acquired and transferred under the transaction. In addition, "new Olney will continue to honor the rates and terms originally negotiated by depositors," according to the statement.

Local officials of the acquired institutions would not comment on the change in ownership when contacted late Friday afternoon. However, receptionists at the downtown offices of Petroplex Savings were answering "Olney Savings" before the thrift closed Friday at 4:30 p.m.

About that same time, workers at the Midland Heart O' Texas branch on North Big Spring Street said they were unaware of any change in ownership.

Telephones at Banc Home's administrative headquarters were still being answered "Banc Home" by an answering device after 5 p.m., but marketing manager Larry Hellums referred all inquiries to the FHLBB or Olney's headquarters.

Olney officials were unavailable for comment late Friday, but their Dallas advertising agency, Jones Communications, placed full-page ads in local newspapers by the end of the day to announce the ownership change.

With "$4 billion in assets" and "substantial new capital" Olney is promoting a "strength thru (sic) change" theme in their advertising.

The Adam group invested $65 million cash and pledged another $15 million investment within the next 26 months to acquire the ailing group of thrifts.

Federal regulators pledged at least $1.3 billion in financial assistance — $1 billion in various loan guarantees, plus a $303 million promissory note — to complete the transaction. That figure represented the "net present value" of the assistance.

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. will hold a 20 percent ownership stake in the new combined institution. At least 80 percent of any gains from the bad loans will go to the insurance funds, in addition to 60 percent of any tax benefits from the deal, the Associated Press reported.

Firefighting

Midland firefighters battled this blaze Friday afternoon that heavily damaged Front Street Automotive, 1906 W. Front St. No injuries were reported from the fire, which started about 2:30 p.m. in the manager's office. An automobile in storage at the business also was heavily damaged. The cause of the fire is under investigation.

Sharp says staffers lied about Bush's support of WPT

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The chairman of Michael Dukakis' presidential campaign in Texas Friday called George Bush a hypocrite and accused Bush's staffers of lying about the vice president's previous support of the Windfall Profits Tax.

"George Bush has publicly supported the Windfall Profits Tax, not once but twice," Democratic Railroad Commissioner John Sharp said. "And now the Bush campaign is denying that this ever happened."

At a Capitol news conference Monday, Sharp released the transcript of a speech Bush gave to the conservative American Enterprise Institute when he was running for president in 1979. At the time, Bush said he supported the tax coupled with the decontrol of oil prices and a "plow-back provision" where oil companies could avoid the tax if they spent their excess profits on energy research and development.

Dukakis openly supported the tax in the mid- to late-1970s. He first joined Bush in calling for the repeal of the tax in a campaign speech in Iowa about one year ago.

While one Bush staffer in Austin did not dispute that the Republican presidential candidate once supported the tax, his Texas deputy campaign manager Reggie Bashur told the Reporter-Telegram: "At no time did he ever support the tax."

On Friday, Sharp demanded an apology and released the transcript of a 1980 Wall Street Journal article in which Bush outlined a position similar to the one he staked out for the American Enterprise Institute. "Supporters of the vice president need to tell the truth," Sharp said.

"The last time George Bush ran for president, he supported the so-called Windfall Profits Tax."

"George Bush has criticized Mike Dukakis for his positions on gun control, on furloughs, on the Windfall Profits Tax, and on many other issues that he himself, George Bush, has supported," he added. "George Bush is a hypocrite."

Bashur said Friday he got his information Monday from Bush staffers in Washington who had worked with the vice president during his 1980 presidential bid. "The bottom line was if the Windfall Profits Tax was going to become law, the profits should be plowed back into the industry," he said.

"They're adamant that he did not support a freestanding Windfall Profits Tax."

Sharp on Monday called Bush's version of the tax "even harsher than Jimmy Carter talked about," and he maintained that position Friday. "Either way it is mandating that you take a certain part of your income out," he said.

"I think it's the worst form of governmental interference. The additional tax was bad enough without big brother big government telling you how to spend your money."

ADL worries 'skinheads' will spread

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Mark Briskman views it as a real "potential" for violence — a danger that could rejuvenate the hatred and prejudice that once undermined a nation.

"You don't need 100 people to create havoc," said Briskman, director of the North Texas/Oklahoma regional office of the Anti-Defamation League, referring to a sparsely scattered radical group called the "skinheads."

Briskman, who is spreading the word around Texas, was in town as guest of the Permian Basin B'nai B'rith.

His concern is real. Since November, at least 11 incidents have been reported in the Greater Dallas-Fort Worth area involving religious institutions that have been defaced as well as shot up with automatic weapons.

The latest incident, which occurred last Saturday at a mosque of the Islamic Association of North Texas, prompted Dallas authorities to form a police task force to investigate the group.

Briskman described the "skinheads" as an ideological group committed to white supremacy much like the Ku Klux Klan, but far more autonomous, with little or no organization in place.

Started in England in the early 1970s, the group has since emerged in the United States. Its participants, largely society dropouts between 13 to 19 years of age, have since surfaced in Dallas, Austin, Fort Worth, San Antonio and Waco, according to Briskman.

Houston 'hangin' judge' has affinity for victim

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

There are benign jurists whose heads might as well be topped with a powdered silver wig.

And then there are good ol' West Texas hangin' judges.

There is little doubt in which category the black-lizard-cowboy-booted, Jeep-driving, native Texan Ted Poe fits.

Convicted felons in the 228th State District judge's Houston courtroom have been known to opt for a prison sentence rather than endure one of his infamous probation sentences.

The magistrate blushes sheepishly and glances to the floor when acknowledging his nickname is indeed "Hang 'em High."

"But we haven't had a hanging in Texas since 1894," he protests.

Poe, 39, was in Midland Friday speaking to attorneys and legal secretaries at the Midland Country Club for Court Observance Week.

His hard-nosed ways in the court room don't preclude a fair trial for anyone, he says.

But the former Harris County Chief Felony Prosecutor — who never lost a jury trial in the eight years he held that post — has a special interest group he's constantly on the lookout for: the victim.

After his stint in Houston's District Attorney's office, he decided "probation was just a big joke."

He recalls the 1980 case of a woman named Lisa, a mother of two, who was pistol-whipped, raped and left for dead one night by a man who'd accosted her after her car broke down near the University of Houston.

The rapist, Lucius Johnson, "got 99 years," Poe said. But Lisa's punishment was worse.

"Lisa's husband left her, took the kids, she lost her job, dropped out of school and got involved in drugs," Poe said.

Inman no longer opposes income tax

Inman

DALLAS (AP) — A state income tax, traditionally an unpopular concept for lawmakers and taxpayers, remains a key ingredient for Texas financial reform, says the chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas.

Bobby Inman, businessman and retired U.S. Navy admiral, told a bank conference on the Southwest economy and foreign trade Thursday that Texas must "get going on getting a rational tax base" that includes an income tax.

Formerly an opponent of state income tax, Inman said his change of heart is tied to recent reform of federal tax policy.

"Here's a place where my own view has shifted fairly sharply in the past few years," said Inman. "I was opposed to a state income tax because there is such a large cash economy in the state that I saw a very, very difficult problem ahead policing taxes.

"Now, on the other hand, I see a federal tax hike where we don't get any tax deduction for sales taxes — and we have one of the largest in the nation — and yet the very big states with an income tax get to deduct that."

State income taxes are deductible. Congress, in the Tax Reform Act of 1986, eliminated deductions for sales taxes on federal tax returns.

"Texans pay more federal taxes because we continue to persist in holding on to the sales tax as the base in spite of the decision at the federal level," Inman said.

Past efforts to adopt a statewide income tax have been soundly defeated, with opponents saying other taxes were already high and likely to remain so. The Texas tax system could face a major overhaul in 1989, some key lawmakers have predicted.

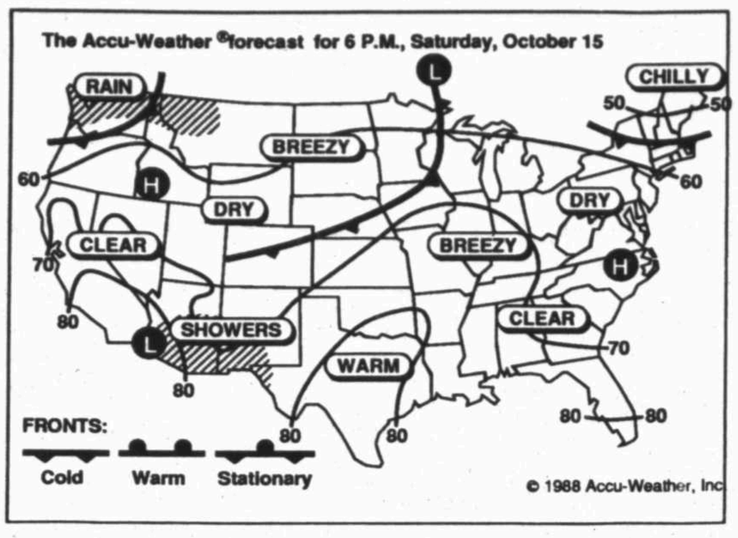
WEATHER SUMMARY



Weekend to be windy

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will become cloudy and the wind will blow in the Permian Basin this weekend, but temperatures will remain comfortable, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport.

Saturday will have considerable low cloudiness, becoming partly cloudy late in the morning. The high will be in the mid-80s. Winds will be from the south 10 to 15 mph, becoming 10 to 20 mph and gusty by late morning.

Saturday night will be partly cloudy with a high near 60.

Sunday will be partly cloudy with a high in the lower 80s.

The record high for the date was 94, which was eight degrees warmer than Friday's high of 86. Friday's low of 55 was 15 degrees warmer than the record low of 40.

STATE

A trough of low pressure pushed across the Central Plains and Panhandle Friday, creating a windy day for much of Texas. But high pressure over the eastern United States stretched into Texas and kept the state dry and warm with mostly sunny skies.

Today will not be as windy with partly cloudy skies common across the state. Overnight lows are forecast to be in the 50s and 60s. Highs Saturday will be in the 80s.

NATION

Severe rain and hail hit portions of Arizona on Friday but most other sections of the nation enjoyed calm and dry weather.

An inch of rain and hail of one inch in diameter pelted Phoenix, wind gusts of 40 mph hit Chandler and three quarters of an inch of rain landed in New River in 15 minutes.

There were a few showers and thunderstorms scattered from eastern Kansas to northeastern Missouri and in Washington state and northern Idaho. There were some snow showers in parts of Maine.

Clouds were over much of the nation west of the Great Plains and skies were partly cloudy to cloudy across New York state and northern New England.

Sunny and dry weather prevailed across the rest of the nation.

Today's forecast called for scattered showers and thunderstorms from eastern Arizona to extreme western Texas, in extreme southern Florida, from western New York state to northwestern New England and across western Washington state. Skies were expected to be partly cloudy to cloudy over the Rocky Mountain region and much of the Northwest. Sunny skies were expected in the rest of the nation.

POE

News came to Poe the other day that Lisa had killed herself. Her note read simply that she was "tired of running from Lucius Johnson in my nightmares."

"And a few weeks ago, I got a letter that Lucius Johnson will be released next month...Lisa paid the ultimate price for being the victim of a crime.

"We are imprisoned in our own homes while those who violate the law are running loose," Poe said. His solution is having Texas Department of Corrections inmates in Huntsville build more prisons for themselves. "It would keep them busy, teach them a trade and be cheaper," Poe said.

Probation, he charged, is comparable to telling the convict: "OK, go and sin no more."

"When I became a judge, I was determined to make probation count," Poe explained. Gov. Bill Clements appointed him to the bench in 1981, when Poe was a mere 32-years-old.

Today, some judges question his bold interpretation of the law granting him the power to set probation conditions.

The cons haven't dubbed it "Poe-bation" for nothing.

His fans, however, have christened the judge's common sense approach to battling crime "Poe-etic" justice.

There was the time earlier this year that he sentenced a Houston Intercontinental Airport baggage handler to 600 hours of shoveling horse manure out of city police mounted posse barns.

The unlucky shoveler was convicted in Poe's court of stealing two suitcases belonging to Clayton Moore, who starred on TV as the Lone Ranger. In one of the suitcases were Moore's two .45-caliber Colt Revolvers.

"What sort of a sentence does a judge impose on the man who steals the Lone Ranger's guns?" the judge asked a chuckling audience.

During the trial, defense attorneys became enraged when Poe allowed Moore, the jurist's admitted "hero," to testify donned in his white hat and black mask.

"Outlaws have been trying to find the identity of the Lone Ranger for years," he mused. "I was not going to go down in history as the man who unmasked the Lone Ranger."

Another time, he sentenced five men — three welders and two plumbers — to help restore the battleship Texas for their probation.

Today, those five felons continue to volunteer their time to work on the ship, although their probation is finished, Poe said. Convicts battle for that probation assignment, Poe says, but "it's full."

Other probationers have been sentenced to move out of their neighborhoods, restore aging Houston cemeteries, cut children's hair every Saturday at Houston's school for the mentally retarded or grow a vegetable garden and disburse the fruits among food banks.

The first time in Texas a corporation was indicted for a crime — an injury to a child charge resulting from the much-publicized lion-in-the-flea-market attack on an 8-year-old Houston girl earlier this year — Poe elected against fining its owner.

Instead, he was sentenced to produce a $30,000 series of child abuse prevention public service announcements for Houston television stations.

Poe has granted less probation than any other judge in a criminal district court in Houston. But when he does, the criminal must repay the victim, the community and help himself, he explained.

The convicted felon on probation must first write a letter of apology to the victim. If Poe doesn't like the letter, the con must do a rewrite, he says, explaining that the "first step toward rehabilitation is admitting you're wrong."

The con must get a job, and if he doesn't have a high school diploma he is ordered back to school because "dropping out is a sign of a bad attitude." GED courses aren't allowed. What the convict needs, Poe believes, is the "structure and discipline" of a high school.

If the convicted person suffers from an alcohol or drug problem, he must attend rehabilitation classes and undergo monthly drug tests. If he is found guilty of killing someone while driving drunk, he must erect a cross at the scene of the accident.

A convict must pay child support to his dependents, Poe said. In one case, a 19-year-old who killed a man while driving drunk was ordered to pay child support for 10 years to the dead man's child.

Poe initiated the Houston "house arrest" program whereby convicts wear special metal bracelets that electronically signal a telephone monitor should they attempt to leave their homes.

The system costs one-fifth the price of incarceration in the TDC, the judge said. Poe makes those under house arrest pay their own daily $7 "confinement tabs."

"I'm no great psychologist," the judge maintained. "But when a person does something for somebody else he feels better about himself. When he becomes a part of the community, maybe he'll change his ways. The agencies benefit and all this doesn't cost a dime.

"Maybe it's time the people convicted of crimes start paying the rent on the courthouse," the judge charged.

Poe acknowledges other justices often don't feel he's acting "judicially" when he doles out unorthodox probation sentences — or tools around town with the top off his Jeep Renegade.

"People are very opinionated about me. I think I'm considered a maverick in the judicial world," Poe said.

"By my court docket is smaller than anyone's, I take no nonsense from lawyers, I don't grant continuances...and my defendants usually aren't out on bond."

Famous Houston defense attorney Dick DeGuerin claimed of Poe's speediness — often less than three weeks per felony criminal case, "Ted, you've set the case for trial before the crime is committed."

Poe, one of 28 candidates rumored to be Sen. Phil Gramm's choice for the federal bench in Houston vacated last month by Judge Gabrielle McDonald, reveres the Lone Ranger because he identifies with the man's solitary mission for justice, he says.

"He's out there alone," Poe reflects of the masked man, nodding almost sadly that he feels the very same way.

In addition to the four local institutions, the six other West Texas thrifts being pulled under the Olney umbrella are: First Federal Savings & Loan Association, Amarillo; San Angelo Savings Association, San Angelo; Southwest Savings & Loan Association, Abilene; Southern Savings & Loan Association, Brownwood; Shamrock Federal Savings Bank, Shamrock; and Security Federal Savings & Loan Association, Pampa.

The 11 associations in the Olney transaction bring to 53 the total number of thrifts rescued under the Southwest Plan this year in Texas and the FSLIC has assisted in a total of 135 transactions nationwide.

Collapsing oil prices in 1986 and the subsequent break in real estate values have been blamed for the majority of the failures, although fraud and abuse of the state regulatory system have been cited in several of the Texas cases.

The Associated Press reported Friday that Rep. Doug Barnard, D-Ga., said a study to be published next week by his House Government Operations subcommittee shows that three-quarters of all S&L insolvencies appear to be linked in varying degrees to misconduct.

At the end of June, there were 7,350 pending federal criminal investigations involving 357 failed institutions and thousands of open institutions, Barnard said in a statement released by an aide.

The Olney transaction is the ninth largest rescue package in Texas since May, bringing total federal assistance to institutions in the state to $15.3 billion.

The accelerating pace of S&L closings and forced mergers by the bank board, which regulates the nation's 3,000 thrift institutions, has spurred new debate in Congress on how to restore the industry to health.

The bank board has not acknowledged that it needs more money, but nearly all private analysts say its insurance fund will have to be bailed out, very possibly with taxpayer funds. So far, all of the money used in rescues has come from fees charged the industry.

Legislation creating a blue-ribbon commission to study the problem and recommend a solution early next year is expected to pass Congress before it adjourns next week.

Geisler inducted in Hall of Honor

From Staff Reports

Geisler

Dr. Gerry Geisler of Dallas was inducted into the Midland High School Hall of Honor during Friday's halftime ceremonies at the homecoming football game at Memorial Stadium.

A 1953 graduate of Midland High, Geisler performed the first heart transplant in Dallas in 1985.

Geisler, the son of Ralph and Eulalia Geisler, was born in Midland in 1936. He completed his pre-medical training with a bachelor of science degree from the University of Notre Dame in 1957. He received his doctorate of medicine at St. Louis University School of Medicine in 1961.

Shortly after that, he married Mary Barnett Geisler.

He completed a four-year internship at the St. Louis University Group Hospitals in 1966 and a residency at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School in Dallas in 1968.

He spent two years in the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps, and served in Vietnam.

He returned to Dallas to practice medicine in 1970, and has held positions on the staffs of Southwestern Medical School, Baylor University Medical Center, Presbyterian Hospital, Children's Medical Center, Parkland Memorial Hospital, RHD Memorial Medical Center, and St. Paul Medical Center, where he has served as chief of cardiovascular and thoracic surgery.

Geisler is listed in the Marquis Who's Who in American Medical Specialties.

He and his wife Mary have three sons, Michael, Mark and Daniel, and a daughter, Elizabeth.

Other members of the Hall of Honor are Woody Adams, Dr. Michael Collins, Tom Craddick, Dr. Glenn Baker, Bob Baskin, Dr. Gregory Bartha, J. Evetts Haley, Dephane Tabor, and Woody Gwyn.

What Bush says on WPT

In an Oct. 19, 1979 speech to the American Enterprise Institute, George Bush said:

"...I do believe decontrol is the answer, and that it should be coupled with a Windfall Profits Tax. That may seem inconsistent for someone who fundamentally believes in a market economy, but when the price is driven, at least partially, by a cartel, free market forces do not operate. So I have favored a Windfall Profits Tax coupled with a plow-back provision, which means that corporations, to avoid that higher tax, must put more money into the ground, into alternative sources, into synthetics, into research, into something other than diversification, something that will affect the supply side, or even engineering for the conservation side, of energy.

"I believe that the combination of a Windfall Profits Tax, decontrol and plowback is the right mix to move the United States ahead. ..."

In an interview with the Wall Street Journal published Feb. 19, 1980, Bush was asked if the sharp year-to-year gains in oil companies' profits were "politically acceptable." He responded:

"It's tough politically. A case can be made, depending on what standard you use, that oil profits are in line with other industries. But the answer without any hesitation is, yes, politically it's very, very difficult, and the answer to it, in my view, is coupling the windfall profits with a plow-back. If oil companies plow back their profits into exploration and development, they wouldn't be penalized by the extra tax. I wouldn't support the Windfall Profits Tax if it was pure market driving the price. It's not."

SHARP

At Carter's urging, Congress instituted the tax in March 1980 as a tradeoff for decontrolling oil prices. Capturing 30 to 70 percent of oil company profits after oil reached $19.44 a barrel, the tax was originally expected to raise $227 billion by 1988. The drop in oil prices reduced that take to about $80 billion by 1986, and the tax has brought in little revenue since.

Earlier this year, Congress voted to repeal the tax, but President Reagan vetoed the trade bill that contained that measure. Reagan later signed a separate measure repealing the tax.

TAX

Inman said Texas must also improve its transportation system, adding he would support a statewide personal income tax unless Congress acts to make state sales taxes deductible on federal income taxes.

"In absence of that, I think we're just plain dumb," Inman said.

He said he favors taking on "bite-sized" problems rather than all financial system troubles at one time.

"We need a stable financial system in this part of the country," he told nearly 300 conference participants. "If we're going to grow, we need to deal with it much more abruptly. We need to take the shock and get it behind us."

Inman was director of naval intelligence, director of the National Security Agency and CIA deputy director before leaving the agency to head the Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp. in Austin in 1983.

Midlanders charged in drug case

From Staff Reports

Two Midland men who lawmen found with bagged cocaine valued at $600,000 late Thursday were charged Friday with delivery of the substance.

One of the men, 48-year-old Doyce Roy Row, 907 W. Dakota Ave., was released late Friday on $50,000 bond, according to Sheriff Gary Painter.

The other man charged, Roland Lynn Kinsey, 1105 W. Missouri Ave., remained jailed Friday in lieu of $50,000 bond, Painter said.

The men were arrested about 9 p.m. Thursday at Row's home on County Road 1208 South, according to Art Van Dorn, commander of the Permian Basin Drug Task Force.

At the home, lawmen found two kilos, or about 4½ pounds, of cocaine, Van Dorn said. Once diluted, the substance would have been sold on the street in more than 2,000 gram increments, he said.

The week-long investigation was kicked off by information received through Midland Crime Stoppers.

ADL

"We believe they're the primary suspects right now...many are kids that have just dropped out of school," said Briskman, who worries about "skinhead" activity spreading to other areas of the state, such as Midland or Odessa.

Members have been identified as having "clean-shaven heads" or "cropped haircuts," wearing tatooes either bearing a swastika or the two lightening bolts representative of the notorious World War II German SS secret police force.

While Briskman reiterated each group's autonomy, he said they do communicate with each other, either by letter or through "Oi" music that cannot be purchased in stores.

"Oi," a kind of heavy-metal slang, is performed by such groups as "The Final Solution" or "Romantic Violence," whose lyrics promote hatred of minorities.

ADL is inclined to believe the threat is so real that it plans to introduce a "hate crimes bill" during the next session of the State Legislature.

Briskman said destruction of religious property is currently treated by state law as a misdemeanor. "But we want to add a new section called intimidation," whereby such crimes would be treated as a felony.

ADL also will ask the Legislature for mandatory compilation of "hate act" statistics, which would require communities such as Midland to file such crimes on a periodic basis with the Department of Public Safety.

"These people aren't operating on all cylinders," said Briskman. "At this point, we can't tell whether Texas will remain immune from this."

While there is no evidence to suggest the group's influence has reached Midland or the Permian Basin, Briskman didn't rule out the possibility of such acts spreading.

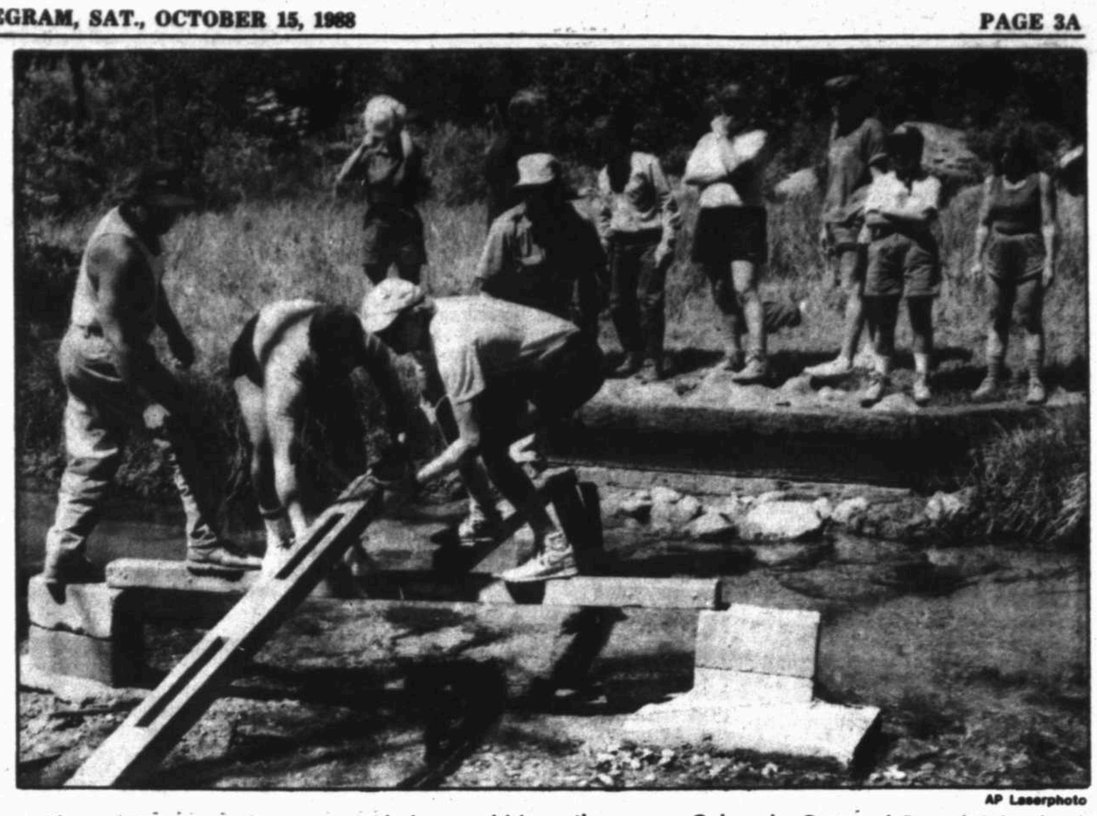
Many executives attend adventure training to learn leadership skills



AP Laserphoto

The task is to cross the stream with three wobbly boards. It's a different kind of problem-solving from their usual workday challenges for the executives on a Colorado Outward Bound School adventure training course in Leadville, Colo.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Scaling sheer cliffs, sometimes blindfolded, is not every executive's idea of a good time. But adventure training, which matured into a big business in the economic expansion of the 1980s, is here to stay. Outward Bound challenges managers to test themselves by taming the wilderness on five continents, and dozens of competing programs are offering variations on the adventure theme.

By RICK GLADSTONE

LEADVILLE, Colo. (AP) — In the cold pre-dawn light of the Rockies, a dozen executives of the Champion Spark Plug Co. shiver into jogging gear.

They wheeze through a 20-minute run on a winding pine-forest trail, reluctantly plunge half-naked into a rushing mountain stream, and then head off to climb some rocks.

It's all in a day's work at the Colorado Outward Bound School, where hard-charging managers learn teamwork in the wild.

Over the next five days, the spark-plug executives would discover gears they never knew they had. Among their daily feats, they clawed up a 70-foot cliff blindfolded and scaled a 13,000-foot peak, posing for photographs at the summit like an Everest assault team.

"In a couple of days I'll be back in the office saying, 'Wow, did I do all that stuff?' " says Jerry L. Brasiola, manager of Champion's international manufacturing operations.

THE EXECUTIVES were sent to Outward Bound as an experiment by Champion, one of a growing number of companies introducing adventure into management training to build camaraderie and cultivate leadership.

Having come of age in the long economic expansion of the 1980s, executive training camps have themselves become a growth industry with scores of programs attracting thousands of corporate customers.

No longer dismissed as a passing fad, the programs have become standard operating procedure for many companies.

Part of the idea is to confound, surprise, shock and scare managers into breaching preconceived limits and thinking about new ways of doing things. The programs often are a mixture of seminars, scout camp, serious self-reflection and good-natured jokes about sore muscles.

"We'll give you just enough advance warning about what you'll do, so you won't spend a lot of time worrying about it," the Champion group was told by Stephen McCormick, head of Colorado Outward Bound's Professional Development Program.

The training partly reflects a shift in what companies are seeking in a leader. They still want scrappy soldiers who aren't afraid to brawl with rivals to achieve success. But they also want people with compassion, humility, vision and willingness to manage by consensus, not edict.

Though its heyday arrived only recently, adventure education has been around since Outward Bound first trained British sailors to withstand the ordeal of German U-boat attacks in World War II.

TODAY, THE school offers courses in wilderness settings on five continents, from Himalayan mountaineering to sailing off the coast of Maine.

Outward Bound remains by far the largest adventure trainer among at least 70 competing programs. Enrollment has nearly doubled to more than 4,000 men and women annually over the past few years, according to Donna Thompson, spokeswoman for Outward Bound USA national headquarters in Greenwich, Conn.

Clients range from giants like General Electric Co. to entrepreneurs in the pizza business, which pay anywhere from $150 to more than $300 a day to throw people into physical challenges they've never faced before.

"Most people at these events will say, 'I can't do that.' And most people don't want to try because it scares the hell out of them," says Roy Yamahiro, a Federal Express Corp. vice president who helped design the Colorado Outward Bound corporate program.

"It's the worst thing that can happen in life and business," he says. "If you're fearful of taking risks, your whole life is limited. That, in a simplistic way, is what Outward Bound does. The wilderness is a classroom for coming face to face with conquering things you can't do."

But some critics contend adventure training can be counterproductive and hurt morale, especially among workers who may be physically disabled.

Others say most adventure trainers have no hard-core business acumen and don't understand the reality of the work place. A few wonder how climbing rocks or dangling from ropes will translate into higher productivity and profits.

"MY SENSE is that it's a beginning, a first step," says Warren Bennis, professor of management at the University of South California. "How do you re-create that same environment within the company? That's the real issue. Unless the environment is supportive and compatible with the kind of lessons you learn in outdoor education, it can have a backlash or even lower morale."

Ironically, part of the backlash may be a function of the programs' popularity. They have become so ingrained in some corporate cultures, the thrill of participation seems to have worn thin. In the Champion group, for example, some participants balked at quitting cigarettes, complained about the alcohol ban and vowed to gorge themselves on steak and liquor when it was over.

Others grumbled about the hard bunks in the school's Leadville base camp, the early-morning jogs and bone-chilling dip in the stream, which instructors cheerfully describe as an Outward Bound tradition.

ADVENTURE

Still, at the end of the Champion course, many members of the group said they had enjoyed it despite blistered feet and altitude headaches from the thin mountain air. A few had second thoughts.

"It depends on the people," says Kjell Karlsen, 30-year-old chief of Champion's European financial operations. "You could have a 300-pound manager who works great in the office. But if you stuck him out here, you'd kill him."

Although accidents are rare, outdoor corporate training programs strictly enforce safety, partly because of tragedies that have befallen executives who venture into the wilderness on their own.

In late July, the chief executive officer of New England Electric System was struck and killed by lightning while peak-climbing with his wife in Aspen, Colo. About a year ago, five advertising executives died in a white-water rafting accident in British Columbia.

ANYONE OVER age 45 on an Outward Bound course needs a doctor's permission to participate. Climbers must wear helmets. The school's rule No. 1 for peak expeditions: Quit in a thunderstorm and head below timberline.

Many companies have found staff resistance to such programs fades when participants discover the joys of conquering physical challenges. Those feelings are carried back to the job and often have a profoundly positive impact.

Thomas Bruggerre, head of Mentor Graphics Corp., a computer concern in Beaverton, Ore., decided last year to enroll himself and 17 subordinates in an Outward Bound rafting expedition down the Rogue River in southern Oregon. He said his goal was to strengthen manager relationships within the rapidly expanding company.

"I legislated that we were going to do it," says Bruggerre, 42. "No one else wanted to. We had people who had never slept outside before. Their idea of roughing it was checking into the Maui Hyatt Regency without a reservation."

After a few days, the reticence disappeared. Bruggerre says the catalyst was an exercise in which everybody slid down a sheer cliff on a rope.

"When people got through that, it really lifted their confidence and experience," he says.

There are some failures. When a large soda bottler retained Outward Bound to help it absorb managers of a newly acquired subsidiary, many participants simply followed orders from the highest-ranking member of their group, a senior vice president who was to be their new boss.

"THE DYNAMICS don't work sometimes," says an Outward Bound instructor who had helped teach that course. "This guy was just so autocratic, everybody else was afraid of him."

Despite Outward Bound's pre-eminence, criticism of its rigid, spartan philosophy has helped engender the competition. Some rivals claim to offer more flexibility, soft beds instead of sleeping bags, filet mignon instead of freeze-dried soup.

One example is Atlanta-based Executive Adventure Inc., founded about six years ago by Robert Carr, a 38-year-old former head of an insurance concern who had attended a 15-day Outward Bound course. Sites for Executive Adventure courses range from the Blue Ridge Mountains to Florida's Amelia Island resorts.

About 175 companies have contracted with Executive Adventure for outdoor-based executive training, including Hewlett-Packard Co., Wheat First Securities, Days Inns of America Inc. and Domino's Pizza.

"The physical nature of our program is such that 99 percent of the people can do what we do," says James D. Hickey, Executive Adventure's sales and marketing director.

"We've had groups filled with macho guys who want everything we can throw at them, including rope courses and rock climbing," Hickey says. "On the other hand, we have some groups who say, 'We're only going to be with you for a day, we don't want to sweat.' That's fine, too."

Executive Ventures Group, a Denver-based consulting concern formed by five former Outward Bound instructors, offers companies the option of sending people to its rustic Colorado Springs ranch or bringing courses to them by setting up outdoor activities on the lawn.

FOUNDED A few years ago, Executive Ventures has attracted clients that include American Cyanamid Co., Arthur Young & Co. and Citicorp Diners Club.

Outward Bound officials admit their strict policies have driven potential clients elsewhere. They have turned away company executives who reject its alcohol prohibition or want to play golf in the afternoon.

"There are people who consistently come and say, 'Isn't there any way we could do Outward Bound and still stay in a resort?,' " McCormick says. "What makes us special is that it isn't an ordinary event. The one cardinal sin for Outward Bound would be if it were ordinary."

On the other extreme, some adventure trainers pride themselves on offering even tougher programs. The most stressful appears to be Hell Camp, a U.S. affiliate of a famous Japanese management institute, Kanrisha Yosei Gakko.

Based at the Calamigos Ranch conference center near Malibu, Calif., the 13-day, $2,480 Hell Camp course has been described as a mix of Marine drill training and samurai warrior school for managers.

Instructors require students to complete a 25-mile night hike with a misleading map, shout slogans by rote and croon a memorized song about salesmanship in a public place to crush their inhibitions.

"This is where it ties into the samurai, by promoting the most alert, highly skilled and efficient," says Teresa L. Abass, a Hell Camp graduate and sales representative. "If a person acquired these characteristics, they'd be pretty formidable. They could not be conquered."

BUT DESPITE newspaper advertisements and considerable publicity, Hell Camp has not attracted significant corporate interest. Most students are small-business managers or independent salespeople, Ms. Abass says, acknowledging that "our marketing is not right."

"Most people at these events (adventure training) will say, 'I can't do that.' And most people don't want to try because it scares the hell out of them. It's the worst thing that can happen in life and business," he says. "If you're fearful of taking risks, your whole life is limited. That, in a simplistic way, is what Outward Bound does. The wilderness is a classroom for coming face to face with conquering things you can't do."

— Roy Yamahiro
Federal Express Corp. vice president

Many corporate users of adventure-training consultants have been so pleased they've created in-house programs. Federal Express, for example, has established its own school in Logan, Utah, similar to Outward Bound.

General Electric, an Outward Bound client for the past three years, has adopted some of the school's methods in its executive education center in Ossining, N.Y. The company still frequently sends managers to Outward Bound's three-day sailing courses on Hurricane Island, Maine.

Nevertheless, there are no significant studies yet on the long-term effects of adventure training. Some management specialists say it's too early to draw conclusions.

"There are zippo evaluations today because they're so new," says Denise Rousseau, a professor of organizational behavior at Northwestern University's J.L. Kellogg Graduate School of Management.

Even without proven results, supporters of these programs say they are here to stay. Moreover, they say the relatively modest cost makes them less vulnerable to corporate cutbacks in times of recession.

"In my judgment, the smarter, more visionary companies would abandon Outward Bound or a similar program only as a last-ditch measure," says Arthur Levitt, chairman of the American Stock Exchange and an Outward Bound alumnus. "Better-managed companies now recognize this as an essential tool."

Durban's whites enjoy luxury, while blacks live in squalor

By GREG MYRE

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — As the sun sets, the yachts glide into the docks, surfers catch the day's last wave and tourists settle down to drinks on oceanfront verandas.

A few miles away, darkness envelops the makeshift shanties of almost 2 million black squatters in a sprawling shadow city where tap water, toilets and electricity are unobtainable luxuries.

In a country of sharp contrasts, one of the most pronounced is the beauty and affluence of modern Durban and the destitution of its squatter settlements.

Durban is South Africa's vacation capital, annually attracting 2 million tourists drawn by a sub-tropical climate and the "Golden Mile" of beachfront hotels, painted in soft pastels of peach and pink and blue.

The city hall is half-hidden by palm trees. Lush gardens with poinsettias, bougainvillea and orchids abound, enhancing an architectural cornucopia that ranges from 19th century Victorian structures to ornate mosques and post-modern skyscrapers.

Durban also boasts the busiest harbor in Africa, bustling day and night with cargo ships that supply goods throughout the southern half of the continent.

But on the edge of the Indian Ocean city, shacks of plywood, tin and plastic form a vast crescent of poverty.

Some settlements are known only by all-too-accurate nicknames such as "Odlameni," Zulu for "place of violence."

Black schoolchildren line up for charity lunches of soup and bread in the neighborhood where a century ago a young Indian lawyer named Mohandas K. Gandhi began non-violent protests against race discrimination. A settlement Gandhi left behind to be used by people of all races was burned down in widespread factional fighting and anti-apartheid violence that has rocked the black areas in recent years.

Of the 3.5 million people in the Durban area, 2.5 million are black, and at least 1.7 million live in informal squatter settlements, according to private welfare groups.

South Africa has a severe shortage of black housing nationwide, and some 7 million of the country's 26 million blacks are squatters, says the Urban Foundation, a private group that operates low-income housing programs.

The government says it wants more black homeowners but is not building nearly enough homes to meet demand and is attempting to toughen anti-squatting laws.

"The government says the squatters can't stay, but they have nowhere else to go," said Peter Rutsch, a white lawyer with the Durban Legal Resources Center, which assists squatters.

"Nobody chooses to live in a shack. It is simply the only option for most blacks in this region even if they can afford better housing."

Rutsch added that no new homes have been built in Durban's black areas in 20 years.

Despite overcrowding and inadequate facilities, Durban has experienced less racial confrontation over the years than several other urban areas.

Durban and the rest of Natal Province generally are known as the home of relatively liberal Englishmen, epitomized by the late Alan Paton, author of the anti-apartheid novel "Cry, The Beloved Country."

Durban's image as a place of tolerance has been further augmented by its laid-back beach atmosphere, its hospitality toward tourists and the largely successful assimilation of an Indian population that outnumbers whites (553,000 to 317,000).

But the massive squatter settlements and a rapidly expanding population have strained public services and created hostilities.

Mayor Henry Klotz's decision last year to open most of the city's beaches to all races has unleashed a white backlash led by the Civil Action League, a private group that wants strictly segregated public facilities. Shortly after Klotz advocated integrated beaches, he was thrown out of the National Party, which has ruled South Africa for 40 years. He has chosen not to run for re-election in the Oct. 26 local elections.

Also, Indians and people of mixed-race have been moving illegally into "whites only" neighborhoods, as they have in other large cities.

But these racial controversies are trifling matters compared to the potentially explosive problems posed by the squatter population, according to Klotz.

South African elections may not deliver PR coup

By DAVID CRARY

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Punctuated by violence and black defiance, the campaign for local elections in South Africa is developing into a high-stakes showdown between the government and its adversaries.

Two powerful challenges, from opposite directions, threaten to foil the government's hopes for political and public-relations triumphs Oct. 26, when for the first time, voters of all races go to the polls on the same day.

Black anti-apartheid clergymen are defying emergency regulations by urging a boycott of the elections, which they view as an entrenchment of segregated, white-controlled political structures.

Among whites, the far-right Conservative Party, which depicts even minimal reforms by the government as surrender to the black majority, is campaigning vigorously for an intensification of apartheid. It is favored to win control of most white municipal councils in two of the four provinces, including Transvaal, the most populous.

President P.W. Botha's National Party, which rejects black participation in national elections, says in its campaign leaflets that the local elections prove "democratic participation for all has become a reality."

Information Minister Stoffel van der Merwe suggests the turnout among registered black voters could reach 40 percent, in contrast to about 20 percent in the previous black local elections in 1983.

To maximize the turnout, the government is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on advertising. In a series of print and television ads, a pair of squirrels discuss the virtues of voting; billboards in white and black communities bear the slogan: "You Can Make It Happen. Vote Oct. 26."

A black newspaper columnist, Joe Latakgomo, wrote of the slogan: "Nobody has got around to telling me what it is I can make happen."

Predicting that militants will try to intimidate would-be black voters, the government will allow ballots to be cast in advance by virtually anyone who asks to do so. Critics claim this "prior vote" system could be easily abused to produce fraudulent turnout statistics in townships where few voters show up on election day.

Roughly half the 26 million blacks are not allowed to vote because they are considered citizens of semi-autonomous or nominally independent homelands. Hundreds of thousands of other blacks are ineligible for other reasons. These include residents of illegal squatter camps and servants who live at their employers' homes in white areas.

In some black townships, the nomination deadline expired with no candidates entering the election. In many other townships, most candidates are running unopposed and will take office for five-year terms no matter how low the turnout. Nowhere are prominent black anti-apartheid activists seeking office.

Several major black opposition groups have been banned from functioning since February, and dozens of activists have been detained.

In June, the government outlawed calls for election boycotts; those who do can be sentenced to prison terms as long as 10 years.

A leading black newspaper, The Sowetan, has responded by rejecting ads promoting the election.

Archbishop Desmond Tutu of the Anglican Church has risked prosecution by telling blacks the election is ludicrous and will "perpetuate your oppression."

Unsigned pamphlets distributed in townships denounce blacks running for office as "a bunch of crooks, murderers and highly paid apartheid agents...who should be met with the people's anger."

One black candidate, David Nkomo, was assassinated in Soweto in August by two unidentified gunmen. Earlier, assailants threw hand grenades at a rally organized by Nkomo's Sofasonke Party, and candidates' homes were set afire in the Cape Province township of Bhongolethu.

A Johannesburg security company is conducting one-day workshops in major cities, costing the equivalent of nearly $200 per participant. Civil defense and bomb-disposal experts provide advice on countering "the possible increase in terrorist activities" before the election.

For most of the 5 million whites, the drama surrounding the black elections is overshadowed by the Conservative Party's assault on the National Party, which has held power for 40 years.

The Conservatives, who won 26 percent of the vote in 1987 general elections, believe whites are confused by Botha's reform program and prefer the clarity of an unabashed pro-segregation policy.

Cisneros says he had 'close relationship' with another woman

H. Cisneros

M.A. Cisneros

L. Medlar

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros, the popular Hispanic leader once considered as a potential Democratic vice presidential candidate, Friday acknowledged a close, personal relationship with a woman outside his marriage, but said he will try to serve the remainder of his fourth term with dignity.

The 41-year-old mayor, who has announced he won't seek a fifth term or run for state office in 1990, talked to reporters outside his home after reading a newspaper article detailing his relationship with Linda Medlar, 39.

Mrs. Medlar has helped the mayor in various fundraising campaigns. She told the San Antonio Express-News in a front-page column Friday that she loved the mayor.

"He's the love of my life," she said. "I've never before met such a charming, talented man. Our rapport is marvelous and we hope to be able to live out the rest of our lives together."

Cisneros, who frequently touted the institution of family in his lectures, recently acknowledged problems in his 19-year marriage. On Friday he said he was sorry that his private life had generated countless rumors the past six months.

He said he wants to work out his problems to protect his wife, Mary Alice, his teen-age daughters, Teresa and Mercedes, and toddler John Paul Anthony, who was born with a congenital heart defect that will require surgery.

The mayor declined to elaborate on his relationship with Mrs. Medlar, but said it was not the major problem between him and his wife.

"This is a discussion that has gone on for some period of time. It is nothing new, but it is painful to see it on the front pages of the newspaper," Cisneros said.

"I think this is a deep and profound personal situation and it requires an expediant decision because so many people involved have been hurt," he said.

"Linda is a very intelligent, bright, attractive person. Clearly we have been very close," he said.

"She, I think, understands the great difficulty of my present situation — that is to say I am a public official with responsibilities and a sense of wanting to serve the community in standards and examples which it merits and deserves and that I have a son who is going to require my personal attention and I felt that would best be accomplished by being in the home.

"I am saying that I am a human being in addition to being mayor. That I am not perfect and that I have various kinds of needs of friendship and support," he said.

"I have weighed this very heavily in my mind because I have wanted to serve the dignity of the office. I have wanted to maintain some sense of leadership and role model in the community because I have wanted to deal with the personal obligations that I have," he said.

Mrs. Cisneros, who declined to speak with reporters Friday, has said she still loves her husband and will not immediately seek a divorce.

Cisneros said he spoke with Mrs. Medlar on Friday and that she seemed OK. She is married to Stan Medlar, who co-owns a jewelry store that was closed Friday.

Cisneros, who left for Denver Friday afternoon to give a speech in support of Mayor Federico Pena, said he did not know how his personal problems would affect his lectures.

The mayor's salary is less than $5,000 and most of his earnings come from lectures and writings.

Boulter: Bentsen forced to campaign in Texas

Rep. Beau Boulter

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican Senate hopeful Beau Boulter, saying the latest presidential debate has "locked it up for George Bush," Friday predicted that Lloyd Bentsen now will be forced to come home to Texas and campaign for his Senate seat.

"I think the race for the White House is effectively over. I think that a lot of people are going to start looking in Texas at the second race on the ballot. I think Lloyd Bentsen's going to have to start looking at this race," Boulter said.

"Texans are just now asking themselves, 'Well, who is Bentsen's opponent?' He's not the Sen. Bentsen they thought he was, and they're trying to find out something about his opponent," Boulter said. "We're going to win on Nov. 8."

Democrat Bentsen is simultaneously seeking the vice presidency and re-election to a fourth Senate term. Recent polls have shown him substantially ahead of the Republican challenger.

But Boulter told a news conference that he looks forward to the day when Bentsen must tell Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, "I'm sorry Mike...I don't think I'm going to make it, and I've got to go back (to Texas) and campaign." He said that day "is fast approaching."

Responding, Bentsen spokesman Jack DeVore said, "Was this Beau Boulter or Thomas Dewey talking? Sounds very much like Tom Dewey in 1948," a reference to the Republican presidential candidate who lost to Harry Truman.

Boulter, a two-term Amarillo congressman, said he will spend $600,000 for television advertising over the next 10 days that touts his ties to President Reagan and Bush, and attacks Bentsen's record on Social Security.

In one of the commercials, Boulter talks about his pride in being on the same team as Reagan, Bush and Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

"I'm for Texas and I'm for you," he says on the ad, which then shows a film clip of Bentsen saying: "And I'm delighted to be on the Dukakis-Bentsen ticket." After that, a narrator says, "The choice is obvious. Beau Boulter for Senate."

On the second commercial, an elderly woman says Bentsen supported giving Social Security benefits to illegal aliens. DeVore said the charge is wrong.

Disaster fund won't aid governments hit by storm

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Federal aid offered in the wake of Hurricane Gilbert's destruction won't provide the relief needed, according to officials of hard-hit Texas communities.

The financial burden stems from a decision by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the state's Division of Emergency Management to provide disaster assistance only to individuals and businesses, not government entities.

The city of Brownsville and its publicly-owned utility are facing some $500,000 in storm-related costs that City Manager Steve Fitzgibbons originally thought was covered in the disaster declaration.

"These are some real costs. They are very substantial and they're putting a terrible strain down here," Fitzgibbons said earlier this week.

President Reagan's declaration following Hurricane Gilbert's damage technically authorizes "public assistance" to the political entities only if deemed necessary by FEMA. As of Wednesday, FEMA apparently had not made such a designation.

Three counties in Texas were declared eligible for disaster assistance after Gilbert moved into Mexico south of Brownsville last month. Much of the damage in the counties was caused by tornadoes spawned by the hurricane.

Requests of nearly $1 million in assistance by Cameron and Hidalgo counties, as governmental entities, were turned down, county officials said. That total includes storm preparations, overtime for emergency personnel and cleanup costs.

Ed Laundy, the state's emergency management coordinator for Hurricane Gilbert, said public assistance was not granted because "we didn't think there was sufficient need to request outside assistance."

Reagan thanks astronauts 'for taking us into space'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan borrowed a phrase from Vice President George Bush on Friday to hail the five Discovery shuttle astronauts as "America's heroes."

Giving the men a hearty White House welcome, the president appeared with the astronauts at an affectionate Rose Garden ceremony as many NASA employees and some of their family members looked on.

"Thank you for taking us into space...and welcome home," Reagan said, evoking a round of applause from the crowd of several hundred observers.

The president told the five-member crew that he agreed with a statement made by the vice president during his debate Thursday evening with Democratic rival Micheal Dukakis.

"The vice president was right last night — you are America's heroes. You are his heroes and mine...what you have done for the program and the country will be long remembered," Reagan said. "You...and the entire team that made the mission of the Discovery a success, deserve the praise of a grateful nation."

Although Reagan mentioned that the space program had had "setbacks," he did not specifically mention the tragic fate of the shuttle Challenger.

The Discovery flight, which began on Sept. 29, was the first shuttle mission since the Challenger blew up on liftoff, killing all seven aboard.

Reagan asserted that the Discovery mission symbolized a return to space for the country and "America intends to stay there."

President Reagan holds up a jacket presented to him Friday by the crew of the shuttle Discovery. The crew had removed the mission patches, carried them into space and then put them back on the jacket during their meeting with the president.

"We just want to say thanks again for this mission and for all that it has meant to this country," Reagan said.

The president also saluted the astronauts' wives, telling them they were "just as brave as these gentlemen."

The shuttle's commander, Frederick H. Hauck, presented the president with a blue astronaut's jacket, complete with patches from the mission that had been taken into space aboard the shuttle.

Reagan beamed as he held the shiny, royal blue jacket aloft.

In contrast, the five astronauts appeared a bit out of their element, dressed in business suits and ties.

The crew had met with Reagan at the Johnson Space Center in Houston late last month, just days before their space mission began. At that time, the astronauts had pledged to bring the jacket and its patches back to the president at the White House.

"This is a great team that we work with," Hauck told the president, adding, "The team is only as good as its leader, and as far as we're concerned, you're the captain of the team."

Hauck and his crew, pilot Richard O. Covey and mission specialists John M. Lounge, David C. Hilmers and George D. Nelson, were completing a two-day capital tour. On Thursday, they visited the House gallery, where they were met by the applause of members on the floor.

Moody sentenced to five-year terms

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge Friday sentenced Galveston insurance heir Shearn Moody Jr. to two concurrent five-year prison terms and ordered him to pay a $500,000 fine for his part in an elaborate scheme to cheat his family's charitable foundation of almost $1.5 million.

Moody, 54, was convicted in November 1987 of 17 counts of mail and wire fraud in what prosecutors described as a "holy war" against the legal system.

U.S. District Judge Kenneth Hoyt also ordered Moody to repay the money he was convicted of stealing, perform 200 hours of community service and serve a five-year probation after his jail term.

Moody's sentence Friday came despite his doctor's testimony that Moody suffered from extremely high blood pressure and his attorney's pleas for probation, telling the judge that sending him to jail was comparable to "a death sentence."

During the hearing, Moody told the judge that he didn't feel well, and he continued to plead his innocence.

"I am not motivated by greed or money, but by what I feel is fair and right," Moody told Hoyt. "I am motivated by noble causes."

"I have never stolen money from people before in my life and I don't do business that way," he said. "I know I'm not guilty of trying to steal money to pay lawyers."

Prosecutors had succesfully argued that Moody abused his position on the Moody Foundation board to funnel nearly $1.5 million in grants to three unqualified organizations between 1984 and 1986. The funds were kicked back to Moody and others, largely to pay for legal costs in Moody's entangled bankruptcy case, officials said.

After his conviction, Moody was ousted from the board of the Moody Foundation, where he had served for about 30 years.

Moody, who sat calmly through the proceedings Friday, did not immediately comment on the judge's orders. "I think you might say that he's resigned to it," his attorney, Marian Rosen, said when asked how Moody felt about the sentence.

Moody faced a maximum of 85 years in prison and $4.25 million in fines.

"This is one instance where the system has failed," Moody's brother, Robert said. "He didn't do anything. He got bilked by some con men who were given immunity. Shearn didn't get any money."

Baptist church searching for new pastor

DALLAS (AP) — Deacons at Prestonwood Baptist Church have begun the process of finding a replacement for the Rev. Bill Weber, who resigned last Saturday after admitting to an extramarital affair.

Larry Littleton, chairman of the church's 120 deacons, said the deacons appointed an advisory committee to recommend a search committee to the church early next month. Prestonwood Baptist deacon Hewt Hamlin said he did not know how soon a new pastor would be found.

The action came amid rumors that Weber might return. But the deacons voted against Weber's return Tuesday night during a special meeting. Their last meeting had been last Saturday morning, when Weber, pastor of the 10,000-member church since 1979, resigned.

"We love him and we wish him well," Littleton said. "But we're going on, and it's not with him.

"To the extent there's been rumors of a hidden deal to bring him back — that's untrue."

Weber, 45, shepherded the congregation in North Dallas from its modest beginning with 150 members to its present status as Dallas' second largest Southern Baptist church.

Littleton said the deacons also asked the personnel and budget committee to recommend a financial settlement with Weber. The church has not disclosed the pastor's salary, but Littleton said Prestonwood had a share of ownership in Weber's home.

Littleton said he had no preconceived notion of the type of man who would be called to the church, but he said Weber's ability to motivate and lead made him effective.

Personal tragedy spurs woman to throw out Lifeline

LAREDO (AP) — Two years ago, Thelma Garza's son committed suicide. He was 14 years old.

The personal tragedy brought home to Mrs. Garza a need in her community to help young people with their problems. In 1986, she and Dolores Arce-Vasquez founded Lifeline, a suicide crisis hot line offering telephone counseling and referral services in Laredo.

"The majority of the calls we receive are from people in crisis," Ms. Arce-Vasquez said.

The program is open seven days a week from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m., staffed by a total of 14 volunteers.

Lifeline is funded by a grant from the South Texas Development Council, and also will receive money from the United Way this year, Ms. Arce-Vasquez said. Private donations also help, she said.

"We need a lot more volunteers also," she said. "We all have jobs, so time invested is usually after hours and sometimes that can be the wrong time to be doing things. It can get a little hectic at times."

Ms. Arce-Vasquez said the program focuses on helping people who may be "at the end of their rope" and gives them the opportunity to talk to a telephone volunteer without fear of exposing their identity.

Sara Cerda, 16, a Lifeline volunteer, says it is easier for people to open up to someone they do not know, who they feel will not be judgmental.

"People in general find it hard to talk about their problems with someone they know," Miss Cerda said. "So they go to someone they don't know because it's easier."

"We give them the information they need because often they don't know who to go to," Ms. Arce-Vasquez said. "We refer them to the different agencies in the community according to whatever their needs may be."

Those agencies range from the Rape-Crisis center to LINKS, a teenage support group.

"Unfortunately, we do get calls that are high-risk suicides where they have a gun or have taken pills," Ms. Arce-Vasquez said. "In those cases, we try to locate them and get an ambulance out to them as soon as possible."

"Although they may be ambivalent when they call, there's still the last attempt of trying to convince them there is some hope, that someone cares for them," Ms. Arce-Vasquez said.

For many callers, Lifeline seems to be a last resort, Ms. Arce-Vasquez said.

"If we can instill some hope, they may still give us a name or tell us how we can help them."

There seems to be a seasonal variation in the number of calls, she said. "At the end of the summer, we have a lot of adolescents call in," Ms. Arce-Vasquez said. "During holidays, more adults call in."

For young people in school, it is sometimes difficult to enjoy their summer without their peers. "Holidays are also a long stretch," Ms. Arce-Vasquez said. "During this time they can't reach their friends when they are troubled and they call lifeline."

Miss Cerda says teen-age boys often call about trouble with girls. "When a girl doesn't want to go out with them it really brings them down," she said.

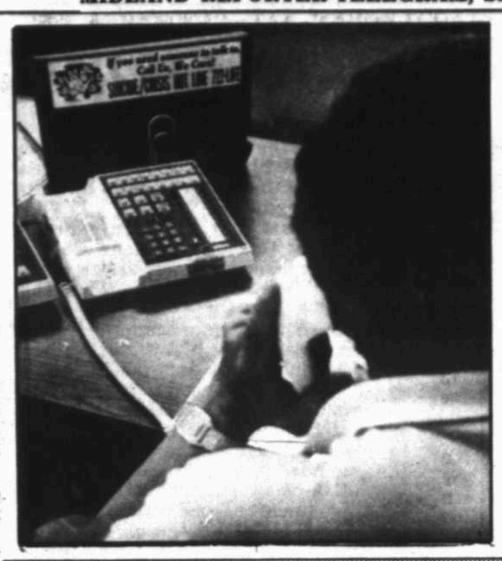
Teen-agers who call also seem to find it hard to deal with peer pressure on subjects such as sex and unwanted pregnancies.

"They hear things like 'You haven't?' and 'You have to'," Miss Cerda said. "But girls are realizing it's not that important to do what is considered the thing to do," she said.

Ricky Lozano, 15, said a series of suicides and suicide attempts at his school led him to volunteer at Lifeline.

"I had been approached and didn't know what to say to them," Lozano said. "I was in the dark about what to tell these people, so I often went by my instincts just to get them to talk."

Lozano is also involved in a youth program called LINKS which originated at St. Patrick's Church. LINKS sponsored a suicide prevention workshop where Lifeline volunteers gave lectures on what to say to someone contemplating suicide



A volunteer answers a call at Lifeline, a suicide/crisis hot line which offers telephone counseling in Laredo.

Dukakis: 'Road ahead of us going to be tough'

Associated Press

A confident George Bush launched his stretch drive for the White House on Friday on the wings of a highly acclaimed debate performance. Democrat Michael Dukakis vigorously attacked his rival but conceded, "The road ahead of us is going to be tough."

Bush campaigned in California beneath a large helium balloon reading "Say goodnight Mike." Party leaders radiated optimism about his chances for victory while aides warned against overconfidence in the final three weeks of the race.

Dukakis, campaigning with running mate Lloyd Bentsen, ripped into Bush with a vigor unseen in his debate-night performance. He cited Bush's record on the environment, drugs, taxes and a variety of other issues and said, "Think of where we'll be four years from now if we try to get by on Mr. Bush's diet of old chestnuts, new baloney and the same old voodoo stew."

A presidential preference poll by the Los Angeles Times immediately following the debate found Bush leading Dukakis 52 percent to 42 percent.

A CBS News survey echoed two earlier surveys Thursday night that found Bush had beaten Dukakis in the debate. The CBS survey found Bush the victor 48-25, and found he was supported for the presidency by a margin of 54-43.

A larger sample was examined than just the debate viewers, and of those who did not watch the debate there was no change in their support, CBS said. The last CBS poll found the Republican ticket leading 50 percent to 46 percent.

Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis, center, with his wife Kitty, and vice presidential running mate Lloyd Benten, attended a rally Thursday at the State Capitol in Sacramento, Calif.

Said Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole, once the vice president's harshest primary campaign critic: "It seems to me George Bush is going to win this election and he's going to win it by a big margin, particularly in the Electoral College."

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, told a television interviewer on NBC, "If I were working for Michael Dukakis I'd be sending out resumes this morning."

Sen. Dan Quayle, the man who would be vice president, also touted Bush's performance and took a shot at Dukakis. He said the Democrat lacked the "common courtesy" to say something nice about Bush when given an invitation to do so by a debate questioner.

For his part, Bentsen said he thought Dukakis had done well in the debate, then added the race would be a "tough fight down to the end."

Bush took the morning off after his debate-night labors, then sought votes in California. "I believe that I moved my campaign forward by what happened last night," he said. But he told reporters, "There's no overconfidence at all. I can remember how these polls can change."

Campaign manager Lee Atwater said much the same thing, adding, "These big states are all still very close."

Dukakis was up early for a rare joint appearance with former primary opponent Jesse Jackson.

He seemed subdued. But later in the day, with running mate Bentsen at his side, Dukakis attacked Bush as a candidate of complacency. He also replied in personal terms to the vice president's campaign-long criticism of Dukakis' record on crime.

"Now I didn't learn about crime, as Mr. Bush did, from a Clint Eastwood movie. I learned about it when my father, a doctor, 77 years old, was gagged, beaten and robbed by a thief looking for drugs in his office. I learned about it when my brother was struck down in the prime of life by a hit-and-run driver."

NATION

Confidant John Sasso said the Massachusetts governor "scored with the undecided and swing voters last evening," in the second and final presidential debate of the campaign. "That's what we were looking for."

Sasso conceded that the Democrat trail in the polls, but he said, "It's well within range" and announced new television advertisements featuring the candidate talking in his shirtsleeves about campaign concerns.

In one ad Dukakis says that as a nation America is "getting out of shape...Instead of doing the right thing we began doing the easy thing. And now we're in danger of falling behind. I'm not going to let that happen."

There was little to argue with Dukakis' own post-mortem that the final 25 days would be tough for him and the Democrats.

He went into the debate needing a breakthrough to transform the race in the final three weeks.

But Republicans were swift to claim victory after a clash in which Bush repeatedly pinned the liberal label on Dukakis, citing stances on crime, national defense and arms control as evidence.

Bush campaign chairman James A. Baker III said Bush "clearly won" the debate.

He said that Dukakis faced a seemingly impossible task — to appear more likable to the voters and at the same time attack Bush. "So it was a very difficult situation for him, I think. And it enabled the vice president, pretty much, to keep him on the defensive for most of the evening."

While both campaigns awaited polling information that could show how the debate influenced the race, the available results pointed to an advantage for Bush.

An ABC News survey called the vice president the debate winner, by 49 percent to 33 percent and the Los Angeles Times poll had it 47 to 26 with the rest unsure. An Associated Press panel of debate judges also rated Bush the winner, reversing the judgment from the first debate Sept. 25 when Dukakis was perceived the victor.

Ex-Nazi waiting deportation to U.S.S.R. believed to have fled to West Germany

WASHINGTON (AP) — Boleslavs Maikovskis, an 83-year-old who was awaiting deportation to the Soviet Union on charges that he committed Nazi atrocities in his native Latvia, has secretly left the country and is believed to be in West Germany, government sources said Friday.

Maikovskis had been living in Mineola, N.Y., since 1951, and was sentenced to death in absentia by the Soviet Union in 1965. He had been awaiting deportation since 1986, when the Supreme Court turned down his appeal. Jewish groups in New York had recently been calling action on Maikovskis' case long overdue.

"The order of deportation has been accomplished," Neal Sher, director of the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations, said Friday.

OSI had had lost track of Maikovskis several months ago, Sher said, but "we just found out a day or so ago" that he had left the country. Sher declined to say how OSI learned this or where Maikovskis might have gone.

But a government source, speaking on condition that he not be identified, said Maikovskis was in West Germany.

"We have no way of knowing how he got there," the source said. Maikovskis had no passport or other travel documents.

Maikovskis' leaving came to light Friday because the Anti-Defamation League issued a press release calling on Attorney General Dick Thornburgh for an "immediate investigation into Maikovskis' whereabouts and prompt action to bring him to justice."

"The whole thing is a little bit strange," ADL National Director Abraham Foxman said from New York. "We are baffled why the secrecy around this issue."

Foxman said the ADL confirmed Thursday that Maikovskis was missing from his Mineola home and called the Justice Department.

"They said in confidence they know that he's missing and they know where he is," Foxman said. "So we said, 'Why don't you tell the American people?' They said they can't do that."

Sher suggested that the ADL deal with the German authorities. "His being brought to justice is out of our hands," he said.

Maikovskis had been a chief of a Nazi-created police force in Latvia during World War II. He is accused of having ordered the mass arrest of residents in the Latvian village of Audrini and then burning the town. The 200 villagers were later killed by the Nazis. Deportation proceedings against Maikovskis began in the United States in 1976 and dragged on through several appeals.

Maikovskis had designated Switzerland as the country to which he wanted to be deported, but that country refused him and he faced deportation to the Soviet Union.

Couple renovates 19th-century structure into arresting home

BENJAMIN, Texas (AP) — A skylight has replaced the gallows and the only ropes around are wisteria and honeysuckle vines that hang from shading arbors.

But the old Knox County jail that has stood for a century like a citadel in the prairie looks substantially the same. Only the interior and tenants have changed.

The two-story sandstone structure, a county jail from 1887 until the late 1940s, is now the home of Wyman and Sarah Meinzer and their two children, Hunter, 5, and Pate, 3.

The jail had been on the market for six months when the Meinzers bought it five years ago from the estate of another family who had lived there.

The new owners remodeled the interior of the original jail and the A-frame wooden addition on the ground floor, built for the sheriff's family, and moved in three years ago in September.

Why did they want the old jail for a home?

"To tell you the truth there isn't a whole lot of available housing in Benjamin. We were renting and had not even bothered to look at it," Mrs. Meinzer explained.

"I really liked the place on the outside. Once we went through it, there was no doubt. We decided to live here. There were so many possibilities.

"The walls are two feet thick and the ceilings are real high, two things we both really liked about the place," she said. To duplicate a structure like that, with its abundance of rock, would have "cost a fortune," she said. They bought the jail for $6,000, "a bargain for such a historical treasure."

The Meinzers did the designing and much of the redecorating work themselves. They had help for structural remodeling.

"Before I went into social work, I planned on getting a degree in interior design. It was something I was interested in anyway," said Mrs. Meinzer, a graduate of Midwestern State University and director of the Wichita Falls State Hospital's outreach center at Haskell.

"I did all the woodwork," she said. "It took six months to get 100 years worth of paint off!"

Her husband, a graduate of Texas Tech University who is a freelance wildlife photographer, put down all the 12-by-12-inch Saltillo tile, the focal point of redecoration that reflects Southwestern and Mexican influence.

Antique furniture and metal trunks as well as other eclectic items — "a little bit of everything," said Mrs. Meinzer — are among the furnishings.

The Meinzers have their master bedroom and bath upstairs, where the prisoners' cells used to be. Bars were removed in about 1950. High above the staircase that leads to their bedroom is the space where the gallows were. A skylight now illuminates and beautifies the area.

The couple is remodeling another area adjacent to the living room in the A-frame addition for the boys' bedroom and bath. Both the living room and the upstairs bedroom have fireplaces. Ceiling fans that are reversible cool the house in the summer and circulate warm air in the winter.

Meinzer's office is on the ground floor where the sheriff's office used to be. Walls are decorated with wildlife photographs and wildlife mounts. His desk is an old-fashioned rolltop. The old metal door that separated the office from the jail area is still being used.

State's population increased by smallest margin in 1980s decade

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas' population increased by its smallest margin of the decade last year, according to Census Bureau figures that show the state's best growth along a corridor between Dallas and San Antonio and troubling losses among rural counties.

For the first time in the decade, more people left Texas than migrated into the state, said Census Bureau demographer-statistician Ed Byerly. But there were enough births to overcome a net outmigration of about 90,000 people and pace a slim growth of 0.6 percent between July 1986 and July 1987.

The state's total population grew by 100,000 to reach an estimated 16,785,000 in July 1987, but the growth lagged behind the national rate of 1 percent, Byerly said. Texas is still the third-most populous state, behind California and New York.

While the suburbs appear to be doing the best job of keeping their population, the rural areas are losing ground and have trouble with population retention, says demographer Steve Murdock, a professor of rural sociology at Texas A&M University.

Murdock said 53 percent of Texas' 254 counties lost population in 1987 and 64 percent had net outmigration. Rural counties and especially the Panhandle are suffering "extensive problems in population retention."

While growth has continued along the central corridor from Dallas to San Antonio, Murdock said even those increases have been substantially reduced and appear healthiest at both ends.

Elsewhere in the state, counties have either retained population or had small declines.

Even Harris County, home of Houston, lost population last year, falling from 2,828,100 in 1986 to an estimated 2,793,500 in 1987. Harris is still the nation's third largest county, behind Los Angeles County and Cook County, Ill., home of Chicago, said Ron Prevost, regional analyst for the Census Bureau.

Demographers say the Texas slowdown mirrors downturns in oil, agriculture and service industries, just as the oil boom in the early part of the decade accounts for a parallel population boom that put the overall growth rate between 1980 and 1987 at a substantial 18 percent, an increase of 2.6 million.

Between 1981 and 1982, the height of the boom, the state grew a dramatic 4.1 percent, Byerly said.

Murdock, who works with the Census Bureau, said the 18 percent growth rate is deceiving because of losses in recent years.

"It's the half-empty, half-full glass routine," Murdock said.

Murdock said the decline has been pervasive and reverses growth patterns of the 1970s and early 1980s, bringing the state closer to trends of the 1960s, when 57 percent of counties had population declines and 71 percent had outmigration.

In the 1970s, 17 percent of counties had population declines and 33 percent had outmigration while from 1980 to 1982, only 12 percent of counties had population declines and 18 percent had net outmigration.

The bureau's county-by-county figures indicate growth continues in the large metropolitan centers, with the state's second-largest county, Dallas, making gains in 1987. Dallas County grew to 1,852,000 in 1987, up from 1,841,000 in 1986. In third place is Bexar, with 1,196,800, up from 1,174,200. Tarrant County is the fourth largest, with 1,110,400, up from 1,084,100.

At the other end of the scale is Loving County, tied with Yellowstone National Park, Mont., for the nation's smallest county.

Will Houdini speak at Halloween seance?

APPLETON, Wis. (AP) — Followers of Harry Houdini will be looking for his ghost on Halloween.

A secret location will be the spot for the annual Official Houdini Seance, as organizers hope to rouse the spirit of the magician who died more than 60 years ago.

Houdini was born Ehrich Weiss, the son of Mayer Samuel Weiss, Appleton's first rabbi. He devoted a substantial part of his career to debunking people who claimed they could communicate with the dead through certain mediums.

Houdini died Oct. 31, 1926, in Detroit, from peritonitis caused by an unexpected blow to the abdomen by a young man who wanted to test Houdini's strength.

The seance has been held on Halloween every year since Houdini's death, and it has never made contact with the spirit of the escape artist.

Organizers of this year's seance are Thomas J. Boldt of Appleton and Sydney H. Radner of Holyoke, Mass.

Radner will bring along a set of handcuffs Houdini said he would unlock if ever he returned from the dead. Henry Muller, owner of the Houdini Hall of Fame in Niagara Falls, Ontario, will be present with an envelope said to contain a code Houdini devised to prove or disprove that his spirit was among the seekers.

Steers stampede, 38-6

By JOHN FREY
MRT Sports Correspondetn

SAN ANGELO— Big Spring Steer fans have been waiting for this night all season, a game where the offense and defense put it altogether on the same night. And they did that Friday, soundly defeating the San Angelo Lake View Cheifs, 38-6.

The offense was supberb on all counts. The normallyt pass-happy Steers ran the ball with tremendous efficiency, finishing with 292 yards rushing. Dennis Hartsfield was the main cog in the Steer ground attack with 146 yards on only 12 carries.

Hartsfield was quick to give credit for his night to his offensive line. "The line did a great job. They opened up huge holes and all I had to do was run through them."

Quarterback Rance Thompson had another solid night for the Steers. While he completed only six passes, he made them count, throwing going for 134 yards and two touchdowns.

The defense held up its end of the bargain as well, limiting the Chiefs to only 33 yards rushing and recovering two fumbles. The Chiefs did not get a rushing first down until there was less than four minutes to go in the third quarter.

After a poor opening kickoff that was returned only to the 10, the Steers took just five plays to go 90 yards for the score. A 31-yard run on third by wingback Tony Lewis set up Hartsfield's 49-yard TD run.

The Steers squandered two good scoring opportunities in the first quarter. After recovering a Chief fumble at the 39, BS went backwards to the 45. Then, later, after driving to the Chief three, they ran out of gas.

In the second period, Big Spring wasted few opportunities. Only 35 seconds into the period, Lewis took a screen pass from Thompson and raced 26 yards for the score.

After a short punt, the Steers went 46 yards in four plays to score. The big play was a 40-yard pass from Thompson to Joe Downey to put the ball on the six.

Lee romps; Bulldogs pull another Houdini

Rebs batter AHS, 35-0

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

ABILENE — The Midland Lee Rebels took advantage of the weak left side of the Abilene High defense, wracking up 20 rushing first downs on their way to a 35-0 win over the Eagles Friday night.

Halfback Ferris Strambler carried 24 times for 129 yards and one touchdown. His counterpart in the Rebel backfield, David Whiteside, only garnered 47 yards on 11 tries, but more importantly ran for three scores.

Strambler was held to just 45 yards on 10 carries in the first half as the AHS defense had prepared almost solely for his running attack. While the Eagle defense keyed on Strambler, Whiteside (9-for-35 in the first half) and Quincy White (5-for-30) took charge.

The AHS operation, though, changed in the second half as Strambler was allowed to run more freely, picking up 84 yards in the final two quarters.

"That's what football is," Rebel coach Earl Miller said. "Whiteside carried well and he's a good blocker. That's what you've got to have if you hope to be a good football team."

The Rebels were highly selfish with the football in the first quarter. Taking the opening kickoff, the Rebs ate up 7:04 on their way to their first score, a 2-yard run by Whiteside.

After two meaningless possessions followed, Lee lined up again, used up another 4:26 and took a 14-0 lead on Whiteside's 19-yard run around left end.

At the half, the game was by no means in the bag for Lee. The Eagle offense at times showed they could stop Lee if they worked hard enough and their was the always frightening aspect of sophomore quarterback Robbie Duran finally coming into his own.

Starting only his third game, Duran, a left-handed passer, had considerable amounts of poise in the pocket considering his lack of experience. If he continues on his present path, Duran will be a quarterback who'll be remembered in District 4-5A.

Friday night, though, Duran stumbled more often than he succeeded, connecting on 8-of-14 passes for 66 yards and one interception.

Whiteside added another touchdown in the third quarter, a 4-yard run, again over the left side of the Eagle defense. Strambler and Jason Fletcher tacked on Lee's final two strikes in the fourth from four and two yards out, both over left guard.

The Lee defense held throughout the game, but particularly in the first half as Abilene High was limited to just 22 yards rushing and 40 yards through the air. The Eagles' four penalties for 49 yards in the first 24 minutes helped their effort not one bit.

How bad did things get for Abilene High? An Arthur Donnelly kickoff in the fourth quarter angled toward the sideline. Eagle after Eagle kept waiting for the thing to roll out of bounds. It never did. Finally, as the ball rolled dead on the 19, return man Kerry Sims had no option but to pick up the dead ball. He proceeded to lose another three yards, setting up AHS at its own 16 late in the game.

Yet another spell of rotten luck occurred when a Roland Flores punt from the AHS 46 rolled dead on the one inch line.

Midland's Chris Bakke (83) bears down on Cooper's Tim Hester.

MHS edges Cougs, 25-21

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Walking down the lane of District 4-5A's playoff path is just about as easy as walking over a snake pit on a circus tightrope. Just ask the Midland High Bulldogs.

The Purple Pack had to score three unanswered touchdowns in the third quarter and quell two Abilene Cooper scoring bids in the fourth quarter to pull out a 25-21 victory at Memorial Stadium's panicky Homecoming Friday night.

The 6-1 Bulldogs are serious contenders for a state playoff berth. The 2-5 Cooper Cougars aren't. But there was some confusion about which team was wearing that mantel Friday.

Cooper jumped to a 21-7 lead with 8:11 left in the third quarter when Kenneth Lacy broke for a 51-yard touchdown. At that point, MHS' dreams of a playoff berth was somewhere between the dream stage and the up-in-smoke stage.

But then came the rally. The Bulldogs marched 59 yards in 14 plays to narrow the margin to 21-13 when quarterback Russell Page hit Max Reyes with a four-yard TD pass. But Shaun Savas' extra point bid was wide.

"That was a key touchdown because if we don't score there, Cooper has a chance to put the game away," said MHS coach Doug McCutchen.

And then Cooper self-destructed. Unexplainably, no one jumped on a loose kickoff and MHS' Julius Bowers jumped on it at the Cooper 28-yard line. Three plays later, Dwane Roberts scored from three yards out. However, the bid for two points failed and Cooper held to a 21-19 lead.

Cooper then ran three plays before Tim Hester fumbled and MHS' Kevin Rychel recovered at the 18-yard line to set up another short three-play scoring drive that ended with Roberts getting his third TD of the night, a 11-yard bust up the Cooper middle.

"The third quarter turnovers by Cooper were big motivational factors in the game," noted McCutchen. "Those were two big changes in the game and we took advantage of them."

Cooper coach Larry Peel added, "This is a tough game to lose. We played very well, but went through a period of seven or eight minutes where we couldn't keep from turning the ball over. You still have to credit Midland High of taking advantage of those mistakes. But we gave up only one long drive and two short ones and that killed us."

But even though the Bulldogs came out on the long end of the scoreboard, this was a shocking turn of events. MHS went into the game as a prohibitive favorite, yet managed a meager 163 yards of total offense.

Roberts had 129 yards rushing to go with his three touchdowns, but it was Cooper quarterback Scotty Pugh who stole the show.

One could expect Pugh to kill you in the passing lanes. His arm is known wide and far. But it was his running off the option play that netted 154 yards rushing and TD runs of 49 and 37 yards for a 14-7 lead at the half.

Stanton Buffs spill McCamey, 12-7

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

STANTON — The Stanton Buffaloes used big plays and clutch defense to overcome a lopsided yardage deficit in a big 12-7 win over the McCamey Badgers in District 5-2A play here Friday.

The Buffs, 5-2 overall and 2-0 in district play, capped a second-half comeback with a 36-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Brad Holland to wide receiver Barry Cain with 56 seconds left in the game.

The Holland-Cain combination set up the winning play with another 36-yard pass three plays earlier. Holland was zero-for-six before completing those final two pass attempts.

The pivotal drive was also aided by an illegal participation penalty on McCamey that nullified an interception by Daniel Flores on fourth down and long yardage. The Badgers had too many men on the field, some anticipating a punt and others assuming the hosts would go for the first down.

On the ensuing fourth-and-one situation, George Reyna picked up the first down and advanced to the McCamey 45. Holland then threw three straight incomplete passes to set up another fourth-down situation, though the pass on third down bounced off Anthony Inman's shoulder pads to thwart a possible TD play.

That got the Badgers' attention, however, and Holland took advantage of double coverage on Inman to hit Cain down the middle for a 36-yard play to the nine.

"Both of their guys came with me," Inman said. "Brad just threw it down there."

Despite the back-breaking big plays, McCamey wasn't quite dead. Flores nearly broke a kickoff return, but several Buffs converged on him at about midfield to preserve Stanton's lead after a 45-yard runback. Safety Randy Nevarez then drove in WATER VALLEY— Rankin's Red Devils remained unbeaten with a 28-7 victory over Water Valley here Friday night and next Friday head into a District 8-A showdown against Garden City, also a winner Friday and unbeaten.

Water Valley struck first on Casey Bunnell's 130-yard run with 2:24 left in the first period.

But Rankin retaliated against the unbeaten home forces when Terry McCravey returned an interception for a score, but the kick failed. With 1:02 left in the half, McCravey broke a 20-yard TD and Doug Braden ran the points for a 14-7 halftime lead.

Rankin scored in each of the last two periods, Doug Braden on a five-yard run in the third period and Jody Abalos streaking 55-yard in the final period.

Rankin had a 22-11 edge in first downs and compiled 385 yards rushing to 159 for Water Valley, now 14-1 and 0-1.

Monahans nips Andrews

By KEVIN TEMPERLY
MRT Sports Correspondent

MONAHANS — Fans who love low scoring, hard hitting, defensive battles had to love this game Friday night-especially Monahans Loboes fans. The Loboes downed Andrews 7-6 in a showdown of District 4-4A unbeatens.

"This was a great, hard hitting contest with bodies flying all around," said Monahans coach Bren Holland. "This is as close to the Texas-Oklahoma game as you can get in high school football."

The Loboes scored all the points they would need on their second possession of the game, driving 67-yards with tailback Ronnie Ramsey going in from eight yards out for the touchdown. Few would have thought at the time that Nile Martinez' extra point would be the difference in the game.

Monahans had another scoring opportunity midway through the second quarter when following an 18-yard Andrews punt, they started on the Mustangs' 44-yard line. The Loboes drove as deep as the 13-yard line, but Martinez' 30-yard field goal attempt was wide to the right. Andrews then drove into Monahans territory to the 28-yard line. But on a first down play, the Mustangs' Joe Don Finley was decked by the Loboes' Mark Pipkin and Ralph Sanchez and the ball popped loose with Sanchez making the recovery, ending the Andrews scoring threat.

Monahans took the opening kickoff of the second half and marched deep into Andrews' territory to the 26-yard line, but Loboes' quarterback Carlton Jordon lost the handle on a snap and the Mustangs' Mike Hernandez recovered. Andrews couldn't move the ball on offense and was forced to punt. Monahans' Ramsey returned it 14 yards to the Mustangs' 48-yard line to give the Loboes good field position. But Andrews defense stopped Monahans on fourth-and one to give the ball back to the Mustangs' offense.

Keyed by a 29-yard run on a reverse by Stephen Hines, Andrews drove 62-yards in 11 plays with the Mustangs' touchdown coming on a three yard run by Hernandez. Now trailing 7-6 with 1:59 to go in the third quarter, Andrews coach W.T. Stapler elected to kick for the extra point. The kick failed and the Mustangs would get no closer.

"We thought about going for the two points and had it been later in the game we would have," said Stapler. "But there was a lot of time left and we were moving the ball against them pretty well."

After a short kick on the ensuing kickoff, Monahans' Chris Molina fumbled after a 5-yard return and Andrews' Teddy Jennings recovered at the Loboes' 40-yard line giving the Mustangs new life. Andrews drove to the Monahans' 20-yard line but on fourth down and four, a motion penalty wiped out a run by quarterback Robert Morris that would have given the Mustangs' a first down inside the Loboes' 20-yard line. Morris' fourth down pass fell incomplete and Monahans took over on downs.

"The biggest thing we had to adjust to was their cotton-pickin' speed," Stapler said. "Monahans has so dad gum much quickness that we just couldn't keep up with 'em."

The Loboes' are now 3-0 in district play and 5-1 overall, and will play at Ft. Stockton next week before a big showdown with Sweetwater in Monahans in two weeks. Andrews falls to 2-1 in district play and 4-2 overall. The Mustangs host San Angelo Lakeview next week.

the final nail for the Buffs by intercepting a Chris Phillips wingback option pass with 38 seconds left, after which the hosts were able to run the ball out.

Inman had kept the Buffs within striking range with a 67-yard TD punt return near the end of the third period. The senior speedster simply circled around McCamey's coverage after a long punt by Manuel Martinez.

"The coaches told me to get way on the left side," he said. "I took a step right, got two key blocks and we were there."

McCamey two-way tackle standout Anatascio Dominquez kept the Badgers ahead by blocking the extra-point try, however. Dominquez was key to a McCamey front that held the Buffs to 58 yards rushing, while also opening holes for a Badger running game that piled up 175 yards rushing.

McCamey outgained the Buffs 274-149, but the Badgers blew three chances to score inside the Stanton 10-yard line to negate an 103-yard night by fullback Servando Venegas. The 150-pound junior rushed 28 times and scored the only Badger TD on a five-yard run midway through the first period.

The Badgers drove 66 yards on 15 plays after the opening kickoff. Quarterback David Anglin engineered three successful third-down conversions to fuel the drive, including a third-and-15 safety-valve pass to Flores that set up the TD.

But that would be all for the Badgers, much to the chagrin of coach Danny Wilhelm.

"I don't know so much if they stopped us than we stopped ourselves," Wilhelm said. "The whole key was not scoring when we were down at their goal line."

The Buff defense first came through after McCamey had driven to the Stanton nine with five minutes left in the first half. Anglin was wide of the mark with a fourth-down pass on that drive.

But the Badgers got another chance after an exchange of punts when Anglin hit backup tailback Steven Terry with a 52-yard strike to the Stanton five. Venegas drove the ball to the three, but McCamey couldn't get off a field goal attempt and Stanton ran out the half two plays later.

The young Badgers (only 12 seniors on a 30-man roster) had yet another chance in the fourth quarter after Ivan Barriga recovered a Stanton fumble on the Buff 34 on the next-to-last play of the third quarter.

McCamey drove to the Stanton one, but Anglin fumbled a snap from center and Matt Myrick recovered for the Buffs.

"It was just a lack of execution on our part," Wilhelm said.

Stanton mentor Dale Ruth said his entire team contributed to the win.

"The kids never gave up. The whole defense did a super job," Ruth said.

Ruth cautioned against undue optimism despite the Buffs' undefeated status in district play.

"We have to take things one game at a time," he said. "We still have Iraan and Marfa to play."

Holland was less reserved.

"We feel great. We're going to win district."

The University of Texas may move its game with Colorado next season to Moscow, if Raycom TV has its way. Raycom also has suggested a game matching UT and Florida in the Soviet Union if Colorado rejects the switch, offering to help buy Colorado out of its contract with UT. UT AD DeLoss Dodds opposes the proposal because UT has a contract with Colorado, and Colorado opposes the idea because it would lose a home game, which could hurt season ticket sales.

Texas and Oklahoma will discuss next week whether to move the annual football game between the two schools from Dallas to a home-and-home series, a move Texas opposes because it would ruin tradition. UT AD Deloss Dodds has talked with representatives of the State Fair, whose contract for the game expires this year about landing a corporate sponsor and raising the payoffs for both teams. The game brings in about $700,000 for each team...

Mary Decker Slaney, America's greatest woman's distance runner ever but still without an Olympic medal, has no intention of quitting, at least not until after the 1992 Barcelona Games. "The Olympics have been so elusive to me, if I stop trying, it's like I've given up."

When San Diego pitcher Eric Show signed a two-year contract for a guaranteed $2.25 million, the signing continued the trend of players agreeing to take less money in 1990 because of the possibility of a players' strike. Show, who made $887,500 this year, will get $1 million next year plus an additional $200,000 in deferred income...

Hogs 6 to beat Horns, but tradition balks

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

Although Arkansas was a six-point favorite over the Texas Longhorns on Saturday in a critical Southwest Conference showdown the Razorbacks have only won once in Austin in the last three decades.

Arkansas pulled off a 21-14 upset of Texas at Memorial Stadium in 1986 under Coach Ken Hatfield so the Hogs know how to at least win for him in the Memorial Stadium pressure cooker.

SWC

Hatfield says the home field disadvantage doesn't worry his 17-ranked Hogs.

"I doubt it will be a factor," Hatfield said. "We bus three hours and stay in a hotel when we go to Little Rock. It will be no different than going to Texas this week and Houston next week."

In other games involving SWC teams, Texas A&M was a 13-point choice over Baylor at College Station, Texas Tech was a 7-point favorite at Rice, Houston was a 13-point pick over Tulsa in the Astrodome, and Brigham Young was a 10-point favorite over Texas Christian in Salt Lake City.

Arkansas sophomore fullback JuJu Harshaw said he looked forward to the road experience.

"The field is sill 100 yards long and the clock still ticks 15 minutes at a time," Harshaw said. "The crowd still goes crazy wherever you play."

Texas coach David McWilliams said Arkansas "worries" him.

"I think Arkansas has the best team it's had in the '80s," McWilliams said. "They have a more wide open offense. They don't just try to run over you. I think Quinn Grovey is just a tremendous quarterback."

McWilliams said Arkansas will probably try to bomb Texas' young secondary.

"They'll go after our secondary and we know it," McWilliams said. "You used to feel good when you had Arkansas third and long but the Razorbacks are a lot more scarey now when they get there because of Grovey.'

McWilliams is 2-0 as a head coach against Arkansas. He won as Texas Tech coach in 1986 and the Longhorns won last year 16-14 on the final play of the game.

As a player, McWilliams was 3-0 against Arkansas. As a Texas assistant, McWilliams was 13-3.

The 1 p.m. game will draw some 70,000 fans in the 77,000-seat stadium. There will be no live television for only the fourth time in 24 years.

Raycom, the SWC's syndicated television network, selected the Rice-Texas Tech game before the season started as part of its package, thinking ESPN would pick up the Texas-Arkansas game like it did two years ago. Instead, ESPN decided upon another game.

Rice has lost 11 consecutive games, longest streak in major college football while Tech will be trying to bounce back after two league losses.

Defending SWC champion A&M, which can't claim the title or go to a bowl because of NCAA probation, has won two straight games against conference teams.

The SWC race looks like this: Arkansas 2-0, Texas 1-0, Houston and TCU 1-1, Texas Tech 1-2, Baylor and Rice 0-2.

Oakland to face former teammate Belcher

Dodgers' Steve Sax waits his turn at batting cage as NL champs get ready for the Oakland A's tonight.

By BEN WALKER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Too bad they already made a movie called "Trading Places" with Hollywood actors. There's a better plot at the World Series starring the Los Angeles Dodgers and Oakland Athletics.

Tim Belcher, the Dodgers' starter in Game 1 Saturday night, was traded away by Oakland in late 1987 as baseball's version of a stand-in, the player to be named later.

"Yeah, I'm excited to pitch against them," Belcher said during Friday's workout. "Fourteen months ago, I was 2½ years away from the major leagues as far as the Oakland A's were concerned."

Dave Stewart, a two-time 20-game winner, will open for heavily favored Oakland. He was traded by the Dodgers in 1983.

Another twist: Stewart and Belcher were both involved in trades for Rick Honeycutt, now an Oakland reliever.

Then there was the big deal. Dodgers general manager Fred Claire and Oakland counterpart Sandy Alderson went jogging last fall and talked about their team's needs.

At the winter meetings, they produced this: Bob Welch and Matt Young from the Athletics to Los Angeles with Jay Howell and Alfredo Griffin going the other way, part of a three-team trade with the New York Mets last winter.

All except Young, who missed the entire season with elbow problems, played major roles. Welch won a career-high 17 games, Griffin solidified the poroous Los Angeles infield and Howell gave the Dodgers a relief ace.

"When you make a trade, you always hope it works out well for both teams. This one did," Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda said. "When we made it, I told (Oakland manager Tony) La Russa, 'we just traded you the American League West title.' He didn't say the same thing to me."

In a bit part, there's Mike Davis. He spent several productive years in Oakland and signed with the Dodgers as a free agent in December.

"I went out to dinner last night with some of those guys I used to play with," Davis said. "We talked about bragging rights."

Honeycutt said the talking will stop when the games start.

"I have a lot of friends over there," Honeycutt said. "But you forget that when the game begins."

Belcher said he was not carrying "a vendetta or anything."

"They never gave me a shot to play in the major leagues and I regret that," he said. "But I never gave them a reason to put me there.

"I'm looking forward to playing against my friends and ex-teammates."

Belcher reached the Triple-A level with Oakland before Los Angeles traded Honeycutt to Oakland on Aug. 29, 1987. Five days later, Belcher was wearing Dodger blue.

Belcher went 4-2 down the stretch with his new team, and this year, his rookie season, went 12-6. He won twice in the playoffs against the Mets.

Howell can't stand heat, Baylor

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With the first World Series game scheduled to be played Saturday night, Oakland Athletics designated hitter Don Baylor slashed away at Dodgers relief pitcher Jay Howell, contending Howell can't handle big-game pressure.

Saying he's "tired of being diplomatic," Baylor unleashed some undiplomatic remarks about Howell on Thursday.

"What's he ever done? He couldn't save games over here (with Oakland), so they got rid of him," Baylor said. "We want him in the game, all right.

"He was right where he wanted to be in Games 4 and 5 at New York. He didn't want to be pitching with all those people screaming at him. He can't handle that. He couldn't handle it when he was in New York with the Yankees. I know; I played with him."

Dodgers executive vice president Fred Claire said the comments seemed atypical for Baylor and he wasn't swayed.

"I have confidence in Jay Howell, whether he's pitching in Oakland or anywhere else we play," he said.

Howell was traded by the Yankees to the A's in 1985, then went to the Dodgers in December in a three-way trade that sent pitcher Bob Welch to Oakland.

Stewart gets chance against Dodgers

By JIM DONAGHY

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Oakland's Dave Stewart and Los Angeles rookie Tim Belcher each have a little extra incentive in Game 1 of the World Series on Saturday.

Stewart pitched three years for the Dodgers before being traded to Texas in 1983 and the Athletics sent Belcher to the Dodgers in 1987 as the player to be named later for pitcher Rick Honeycutt.

"I had a great time in the Dodger organization," Stewart said. "But it would be special to beat them in the World Series here at Dodger Stadium."

It's not the first time Stewart has been in the World Series. He appeared in two games without a decison in the 1981 Series when the Dodgers beat the New York Yankees in six games.

Stewart spent three years with the Rangers and two brief stints with Philadelphia without much success.

He was signed by Oakland as a free agent on May 23, 1986 and went 20-13 last season.

"Dave always had the ability," Oakland manager Tony LaRussa said. "It was just a matter of becoming a pitcher rather than a thrower."

Stewart also developed a forkball as his bread-and-butter pitch. He makes it sink and gets a lot of groundballs. He also has a moving fastball and struck out 192 in 275 2-3 innings.

Prior to 1987, Stewart's career high in victories was nine for the Dodgers in 1982. He was 1-0 in the American League playoffs against Boston in two starts.

"Dave Stewart is a fine pitcher, I love the guy," Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said. "He gives you everything he has. His success couldn't happen to a finer young man."

Belcher won Games 2 and 5 in the NL playoffs and was the first rookie to win two games in the playoffs since the format was started in 1969.

He finished the regular season 12-6 and won nine of his last 11 decisions.

The Dodgers will start Orel Hershiser in Game 2 against the A's Storm Davis and proabably John Tudor in Game 3 against former Dodger Bob Welch.

"I told Tony LaRussa when we traded them Bob Welch we had just traded them the AL West title," Lasorda said.

Foreigners pay extra for kidney transplants

Favoritism shrouds kidney transplants

What started out as hope quickly turned to despair. The miracle of organ transplant was rife with greed.

Kidneys were traded like commodities. Sold through a worldwide network, not to the sickest, but to the richest.

That's what a couple of reporters learned when they set out to do an uplifting story.

Thanks, in large to their 10-month in-depth investigation and their 6-part series for a Pittsburgh newspaper, major revisions have begun in the field of organ transplant.

Revisions that might not have occurred if a couple of reporters hadn't been looking for a story.

Irish, 'Canes battle for No. 1

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

Fourth-ranked Notre Dame's streak-breaking specialists get a chance to write another chapter in college football's most storied history book Saturday when the No. 1-ranked Miami Hurricanes come calling.

Miami, 4-0, owns a 36-game regular-season winning streak, the fifth longest in NCAA history, along with an overall 16-game streak — 12 of which carried the Hurricanes to the 1987 national championship — and 20 straight on the road.

Notre Dame's penchant for streak-snapping includes an 0-0 tie that ended Army's 25-game winning streak in 1946, a 27-14 victory that ended Georgia Tech's 31-game unbeaten streak in 1953, a 24-11 triumph in the 1971 Cotton Bowl triumph that ended Texas' 30-game winning streak, a 23-14 win that ended Southern Cal's 23-game unbeaten streak in 1973, and, of course, the 7-0 victory in 1957 that ended Oklahoma's record 47-game winning streak.

If you include basketball, Notre Dame also ended UCLA's record 88-game winning streak with a 71-70 victory in 1974 — in South Bend.

SO MUCH for precedent. On the other side of the coin, this marks the 20th time Notre Dame has faced the No. 1-ranked team since the AP began its college football poll in 1936 and the Irish are only 5-13-1 in those games. But they also are 5-0 this year, the best start since 1980.

"This is what college football's all about — for us, for Notre Dame, for you guys," Miami quarterback Steve Walsh told a news conference earlier this week. "If you can't get psyched up, if you can't play well in a game like this, when can you play well? This is what it all comes down to."

SATURDAY'S schedule includes two other games between members of the AP's Top Twenty — No. 16 Washington at No. 3 Southern California and No. 10 Oklahoma State at No. 7 Nebraska.

Meanwhile, second-ranked UCLA visits California, No. 5 Florida State entertains East Carolina, No. 8 South Carolina is at Georgia Tech and No. 9 Oklahoma plays host to Kansas State.

In the Second Ten, Duke is at No. 11 Clemson, Akron at No. 12 Auburn, New Mexico at No. 14 Wyoming, No. 15 Michigan at Iowa, No. 17 Arkansas at Texas, Minnesota at No. 18 Indiana, Kentucky at No. 19 LSU under the lights, and No. 20 Florida at Vanderbilt.

Sixth-ranked West Virginia and No. 13 Georgia are not scheduled.

Rankings aside, the most talked-about aspect of the Miami-Notre Dame game is revenge. Miami has won the last four games by a combined 133-20 score. But what especially rankles the Notre Dame faithful is that 58-7 shellacking the Hurricanes handed the Irish three years ago in Gerry Faust's last game as Notre Dame coach.

Notre Dame's legions of fans have been anxiously awaiting Miami's visit and it figures to be anything but northern hospitality.

"We're really not concerned with what their fans are saying because it's not their fans that have to play the football game, it's their team," Walsh says.

College Football

MIAMI coach Jimmy Johnson also has been saying all the right things.

"I think Notre Dame's a class operation," is Johnson's party line. "They have classy football players and they play the game the way it's supposed to be played. But I also feel like ours play the way it's supposed to be played, as well.

"I have great respect for the tradition and the history of Notre Dame. It probably means more to me as a coach, or any coach, than what it might for a football player of today.

"A lot of people feel that it's good for Notre Dame to have success, and I think it's good for college football to see Notre Dame have success."

Despite the record, Notre Dame Coach Lou Holtz says the Irish "are not a great football team by any stretch of the imagination. It is a football team that has to go out and work each week and play well on Saturday. Just because they've done that thus far does not mean the ball's going to bounce the right way or that we're going to be superior to everybody we play."

IT'S TROY vs. Troy at Berkeley, Calif., and Southern Cal won't even be involved.

UCLA, led by quarterback Troy Aikman, second nationally in passing efficiency, is a three-touchdown favorite over California, a team it has beaten 16 straight and 32 of the last 36.

But Coach Terry Donahue says Cal "looks like the rest of the Pac-10 — awfully good. Cal has a nice system of offense. (Quarterback) Troy Taylor knows their system, he understands it."

Having knocked Oregon out of the Top Twenty last week, Southern Cal will attempt to do the same to Washington. A victory would make the Trojans 6-0 for the first time in 13 years.

"This will be a physical, rough-and-tough Pac-10 game," Coach Larry Smith predicts. "It's a must-win game for both teams. We want to stay on top of the Pac-10 standings (3-0), and Washington (1-1) wants to stay in the Rose Bowl race.

OKLAHOMA STATE coach Pat Jones is tired of hearing about his team's 0-25-1 record against Nebraska after winning the first two games of the series.

"I'm going to start a writing award," Jones told the Big Eight coaches' briefing this week. "It's an award for originality in sports literature to see if anybody can come up with any original stories on this subject. But you're disqualified if you write how old anybody was the last time we won that game (1961)."

Duke, 5-0 for the first time since 1957, will find out just how good it is at Clemson, the perennial Atlantic Coast Conference power.

"For us, it's a big game," Coach Steve Spurrier says. "I don't think we're going to go down there and run it down their throat. We've got to keep them from running it down our throat."

Led by Anthony Dilweg (104-of-203, 1,814 yards, 12 touchdowns), Duke is second nationally in passing, averaging 363.2 yards a game.

Whitworth, Palmer lead Founders' golf

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Defending champion Kathy Whitworth and Sandra Palmer each shot 3-under par 70 Friday to lead the second annual Marilynn Smith Founders' Classic after the first round at the Las Colinas Country Club.

The $150,000 tournament is the only one that matches senior players of the Ladies Professional Golf Association.

Whitworth, who has not won on the regular LPGA Tour since 1985, carded six birdies and three bogeys on the way to her 70.

Palmer, who finished third last year, birdied four and bogeyed one to get to 70. She said the wind handicapped her play.

Each pro was teamed with four amateurs, making the day's round longer than normal.

Corey Pavin follows 64 with a 63

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Corey Pavin added a 63 to an opening 64 and came within a single stroke of an all-time PGA Tour scoring record Friday in the second round of the $600,000 Texas Open Golf Tournament.

Pavin's 127 total for two trips over the 6,576-yard Oak Hills Country Club course is 13 under par and one shot off the Tour record for the first 36 holes of a tournament. The record of 126 was set by Tommy Bolt in the 1954 Virginia Beach (Va.) Open.

PAVIN, who established a 3-stroke lead at the halfway point of the tournament, said he was unaware of the record. And he had two good, late chances to tie or break it, he said.

On the par-4 eighth hole — his 17th of the day — Pavin nearly made eagle. His sand wedge approach hit the back of the cup but spun out. He tapped in for birdie from six inches.

On the ninth, his last hole of the day, Pavin's 15-foot putt grazed the hole for the birdie that would have tied the old standard.

"It was a good putt and I had a good read on Bob Wrenn's putt, but it just didn't fall," Pavin said.

THE ALMOST-record was nice, Pavin said. So were the nine birdies and two eagles he's scored in two days. But there was another factor even more pleasing: he has yet to make a bogey.

"That's something I cherish more than all the eagles and birdies," he said.

"I feel very seure with what I'm doing," said Pavin, who won twice in each of the last two seasons but hasn't finished higher than seventh this year. "It's been a while since I've played like this and that just makes it more fun."

First-round leader Mike Sullivan dropped to second at 130 after a 67.

Tom Kite finished a 64 with birdies on the last three holes and moved into a tie at 131 with Jay Haas and Tom Pernice. Haas had a 65, Pernice 66.

BEN CRENSHAW, Ed Fiori and Rick Pearson were another stroke back at 132. Fiori had a 63, Crenshaw 65 and Pearson 66.

Tom Watson, needing a high finish in this event to qualify for the rich Nabisco tournament he won a year ago, could do no better than match par 70 and dropped nine shots back at 136.

Pavin, who started play from the 10th tee, opened with an eagle-3. He hit a 4-wood second shot to 10 feet and made the putt.

He holed a 40-foot sand shot for a birdie on the 15th, then went to 4 under for the day with an eight-foot putt for birdie on the first hole.

He began a string of three consecutive birdies with a 10-foot putt on the sixth, holed from 30 feet on the next one, then just missed an eagle on the eighth.

Strange hopes dashed in Dunhill Cup tourney

ST ANDREW'S, Scotland (AP) — Curtis Strange's hopes of following up his U.S. Open triumph by leading his country to victory in the $1 million Dunhill Cup tournament were dashed Friday when his top-seeded team was upset by Ireland.

Ronan Rafferty set the eighth-seeded Irish on course for victory when he edged Mark McCumber by one stroke with a 1-under-par 71. Then Chip Beck, playing St Andrew's for the first time, halved his match with Des Smyth as they both scored 71.

By the time the first two matches had finished, Strange already was three down to Eamonn Darcy with only two holes to play.

The 33-year-old Strange, who set a course record 62 in the same tournament last year, this time carded a 68 and lost by two strokes to Darcy, whose 66 gave Ireland a 2½-½ victory.

In the other quarterfinals, Australia, Spain and England also were victorious.

Australia, which won the trophy in 1985 and 1986, overcame a sparkling start by Wales and defeat for captain Greg Norman to win 2-1 and reach the semifinals.

Spain, led by Severiano Ballesteros, whipped Japan 3-0, while England came from behind to edge Scotland 2-1, thanks to a birdie putt on the final green by Nick Faldo over U.S. Masters champion Sandy Lyle.

After Scotland's Gordon Brand Jr. shot a 71 to beat Barry Lane by two strokes, England's Mark James leveled the match with a 69 to beat Colin Montgomery by the same margin.

It was then up to the two captains, who met head-to-head five days earlier in the final of the World Match Play championship at Wentworth. Then, Lyle triumphed 2 and 1.

But this time, Faldo gained revenge as the two British golf giants matched each other birdie for birdie until the last. Both had similar putts from some 15 feet and, after Lyle left his short, Faldo rolled his home.

In the Australia-Wales quarterfinal, David Graham, the former U.S. Open champion, swept to a nine-stroke victory over Mark Mouland. Graham carded a 5-under-par 67 against his opponent's 76.

Then Rodger Davis edged David Llewellyn by a single stroke, 69-70, to clinch a semifinal berth for the Australians.

In the final match, Norman went down 71-73 to Welsh captain Ian Woosam.

Walker tests ailing Bears

By JOE MOOSHIL

CHICAGO (AP) — Herschel Walker will test the Chicago Bears' injury-riddled but top-ranked defenses Sunday when the Dallas Cowboys invade Soldier Field.

Walker is third in the National Football League in rushing with 577 yards, and first in the league in yards from scrimmage with an additional 300 yards in pass receiving.

The Bears, despite a series of injuries to regulars, are No. 1 in the NFL in total defense and No. 1 against the rush.

"Playing against the Bears will be a terrific challenge, but that's what I love," said Walker.

"I know the defense will try to key on me, but that could be a mistake. We have a lot of good receivers and other backs."

Not only will the Bear defense be concerned with Walker — quarterback Steve Pelluer bears watching.

Pelluer had two excellent games before a poor outing in last week's 35-17 loss to Washington, when he was intercepted three times, two of which led to Redskin touchdowns.

"Pelluer has talent and a good head on his shoulders," said Ditka. "He had his problems against Washington, but before that he was outstanding."

Compounding matters for the Bears is the loss of defensive regulars.

Safeties Shawn Gayle and Dave Duerson will miss the game. Gayle is out for the season with a fractured vertebra at the base of his neck and Duerson has a bruised kidney.

"It's all over the league," said Coach Mike Ditka. "Everybody is having the same problem with injuries to key people. Usually, the replacements don't play as well, but the Bears have been fortunate."

The Cowboys also have been hit with injuries. Free safety Michael Downs went down with a pulled groin muscle last week and backup Victor Scott, who suffered a dislocated shoulder, is out for six weeks. If Downs can't play against the Bears, rookie Billy Owens will replace him.

Wide receivers Kelvin Martin and Ray Alexander also have been hit by injuries, along with Michael Irvin.

"Our receiver corps is pretty well beat up," said Coach Tom Landry. "We have a lot of questionables."

Offensively, the Bears did not pick up game-missing injuries in their 24-7 victory at Detroit. Quarterback Jim McMahon had a slight concussion but will start against Dallas.

Random drug tests suggested at Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — The men's athletics council at the University of Texas has recommended a more random drug testing program for male athletes, with a computer choosing 10 to 20 athletes a week to be tested for performance-enhancing and recreational drugs.

Twenty percent of those tested also would be tested specifically for steroids, according to UT men's athletic director DeLoss Dodds.

Dodds said under current procedures a trainer selects athletes from different squads, such as golf or tennis, or different positions, such as football linebackers, to be tested.

In other action Thursday, the council:

— Approved scheduling a football game at Syracuse on Sept. 12, 1992, with a game in Austin against the Orangemen on Sept. 18, 1993.

— Voted to add new scoreboards at Disch-Falk baseball field and Memorial Stadium, where the football team plays, at an estimated cost of $750,000.

All action taken by the council is subject to approval by UT President William Cunningham.

18 countries to compete in tennis

TOKYO (AP) — A field of 64 boys and 64 girls from 18 countries will compete in the JAL Super Junior Tennis Championship Oct. 25-30.

The participants, born between Jan. 1, 1970, and Dec. 31, 1975, include Nicolás Pereira of Venezuela.

TED BATTLES

Stallings working a miracle?

Battles

Let's see, the St. Louis/Phoenix Cardinals were the team we were supposed to be making sport of by this stage of the football season while bewailing the fate of Gene Stallings for finding landing in a can't-possibly-win situation.

It was Stallings' lot to coach Texas A&M back in the days before coeds became legal at College Station, or at least before there were enough of them to become a recruiting factor.

Even so, he managed to win a SWC championship, remarkably after opening season with what easily could have been a demoralizing four straight losses. One was a heartbreaker at the hands of SMU and Jerry Levias in the final seconds.

The season was about to go down the drain with A&M losing a fifth straight game to Tech at Lubbock when Quarterback Edd Hargett ran for a touchdown on the last play of the game.

THAT WAS the turned around point for Gene in a season which ended with Bear Bryant hoisting his one time student to his shoulders after A&M upset Alabama in the Cotton Bowl game.

After the Aggies, Stallings spent so many years as a Tom Landry assistant, it was almost a surprise when the St. Louis offer was extended and, considering the state of the Cardinals, almost as much of a surprise that he took it.

However, it was a now-or-never chance to be a head coach in the NFL and Gene couldn't afford to pass it by.

This was an organization that scrapped bottom talentwise, one in which the coach had little or no input into draft picks and a franchise in which disenchantment between owner and city was mutual.

THE MOVE to Phoenix meant more money, but two season opening losses indicated it was the same old Cardinals....and, by the way, who would succeed Stallings next year?

Now, six weeks into the season, the Cards and Eagles are battling for first in the NFC East and if Phoenix should win at Washington Sunday, let's print up the playoff tickets.

Will it happen?

Cardinals plus 6 1/2 over Redskins- Cards beat Skins in Arizona a few weeks back, but Mark Rypien has some experience under his belt. Washington should win at RFK, but Cards keep it interesting.

Bears minus 7 over Cowboys- This Dallas team has tried so hard only to be frustrated so many times on the brink. It now becomes a question of sustaining intensity and desire in the face of disappointment.

Oilers even against Steelers- Warren Moon's return is vital to success here.

Bengals minus 5 over Patriots- Cincinnati is behaving like a team on the way to the Super Bowl.

New Orleans plus 2 1/2 over Seattle- Saints win it in the fourth period.

49ers plus 1 1/2 over Rams- Give me Montana and the points.

The SWC....

Texas plus 6 over Arkansas- Six points and Austin, too, how can I resist.

to the Longhorns.

Texas A&M minus 13 over Baylor- Aggies win another.

Texas Tech minus 8 over Rice- Owls have a habit of giving Raiders trouble and this one isn't at Lubbock, still, the Raiders are desperate for a win.

Tulsa plus 13 1/2 over Houston- How excited can Cougars get after last week week's loss facing a non-conference foe it once scored 100 points against at this stage of the season.

The Big Ones....

Notre Dame plus 3 1/2 over Miami- Irish don't have the fire power to pass with the Hurricanes in a high-scoring game, so they'll have to consume the clock with long, productive drives.

BYU minus 11 over TCU- at Provo

Florida minus 7 1/2 over Vanderbilt- Gators lost to Memphis State and Vandy beat Rutgers....could this be an upset?

Washington plus 14 over USC- Huskies can't beat Trojans, but, gosh, 14 points.....

Oklahoma State plus 8 over Nebraska- How can Cornhuskers, 25-0-1 against the Cowboys take OSU seriously?

Arizona minus 2 1/2 over Washinton State- Cougars looking good, but this one is at Tucson.

The others....

Clemson minus 12 1/2 over Duke- Blue Devils find out about the facts of big time football life.

Penn State minus 3 1/2 over Syracuse- After last year, Lions get revenge.

Iowa plus 6 1/2 over Michigan- Hawkeyes surprise Wolverines.

Rutgers plus 5 1/2 over Boston College- Scarlet Knights pull off another stunner.

UTEP minus 11 over Colorado State- Miners could wind up in the Sun Bowl if they keep this up.

Steelers out to get well against Oilers

By ALAN ROBINSON

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Steelers are 1-5 and are enduring their longest losing streak in 20 seasons, but it seems everybody's talking about their AFC Central Division game Sunday against the Houston Oilers.

Actually, the opposing players and coaches are doing most of the talking.

"The Oilers and Steelers just don't like each other — never have and never will," Oilers defensive end Ray Childress said. "When we get together, it won't be to bake a cake."

"You're never safe against them, not even in the huddle," Steelers running back Dwight Stone said. "When we played them last year, it was ugly, like a street fight."

"There's a lot of extra stuff done after the play," Oilers tight end Jamie Williams said, mentioning extracurricular activity such as fists to face masks and knees to stomachs.

Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll hopes playing one of their most vocal rivals Sunday will provide the swift kick the Steelers need to end their five-game losing streak, their longest since they lost 13 straight in 1969.

If the players don't like each other very much, Noll and Houston Coach Jerry Glanville like each other a whole lot less.

"They've led the league in personal fouls wherever Jerry has been, but they never get called for it," Noll said. "I think they have the philosophy that the officials get tired of throwing a flag on every play."

Glanville, on his weekly KPRC radio show, was asked if he would shake hands Sunday with Noll. During their post-game handshake after the Oilers' 24-16 victory in Houston last year, Noll wouldn't let go of Glanville's hand while angrily lecturing him about the Oilers' alleged dirty tactics.

"I used to coach in Georgia and there was a saying down there: He can kiss my grits," Glanville said.

The cross-country finger-pointing between the Oilers, 4-2, and Steelers resulted from a pair of intense, fight-marred Oilers' victories last season, Houston's first series sweep against Pittsburgh since division play began in 1970.

Steelers running back Earnest Jackson bruised his back in the Oilers' 23-3 victory in Pittsburgh, the result of what Noll alleged was spearing by nose tackle Charles Martin.

Later in the season, two Oilers and a Steeler were ejected in Houston. That prompted Noll, at the NFL's annual meetings, to demonstrate to reporters how the Oilers allegedly take cheap shots at their opponents' knees.

"There's no doubt that (Noll's remarks) started everything they're saying about us," guard Mike Munchak said, referring to the Oilers' league-wide reputation for aggressiveness.

"That was the main thing as far as it getting national attention. We were getting a lot of (penalty) flags the first few weeks, but it's calmed down the last few weeks."

The rivalry certainly hasn't calmed down.

"Our defense has always played that way, aggressive, since I've been here," Munchak said. "The difference, I guess, was that we've started to win with it. The Steelers always had the same kind of defense, and I never considered them cheap or dirty."

Despite Pittsburgh's record, Glanville expects the Steelers to have plenty of fight in them for Sunday's 1 p.m. EDT game.

NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST CHURCH

In the Sleep Hollow Cemetery at Concord, Massachusetts, one will find the grave of Ezra Ripley. Who Ripley was or what he did is unknown.

On Ripley's tombstone the following epitaph is cut: "He came of a long line of Pilgrim ancestors and Concord ministers, and he was worthy of his lineage."

Although the epitaph is brief, it says a lot about Ripley's character.

Learn with us how God can improve our characters.

IN GOD WE TRUST

In God we trust—this motto inscribed on all our coins and currency is familiar to us all. Yet, how often do we pause to consider its meaning.

Our forefathers saw the dangers that would threaten their nation. They knew that we would constantly need to turn to God for strength and guidance.

Take time to think about this principle and renew it in your heart—

IN GOD WE TRUST

Hayes to speak at local seminar

Samaritan Counseling Center of West Texas, Inc. is hosting Helen Hayes in a seminar and performance Nov. 2 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Various programs will include a seminar, "Creativity: The Foundation of Youth" and a viewing of Miss Hayes film "Farewell To Arms."

Miss Hayes was born in Washington, D.C. on Oct. 10, 1900. At the age of 6, she appeared on the stage with the Columbia Players for four seasons. Her Broadway debut followed at the age of 9. She has long been recognized as the First Lady of the American Theater. Among her theatrical performances are: "Victoria Regina," "Mary of Scotland," and "Harvey" with James Stewart.

In 1961-62, Miss Hayes toured for the United States State Department, 14 European and Middle European countries and 13 South American capitals with "The Skin of Our Teeth" and "The Glass Menagerie."

Miss Hayes joined the APA-Phoenix Repertory Company in 1966 and remained with the company for three seasons. She appeared in Sheridan's "The School for Scandal," "Right You Are If You Think You Are" by Pirandello, and was unanimously acclaimed by the critics for her portrayal of Mrs. Fisher in a revival of George Kelly's "The Show Off."

In 1955, a Broadway theater was named for Helen Hayes and on opening night, she received the Gold Medal of the City of New York from Mayor Robert Wagner.

The First Lady of the American Theater has received 51 Honorary Degrees, including Doctor of Fine Arts from Princeton University, Hamilton College, Smith College, Columbia, Brown, Denver, Brandeis, etc.

Her fifth book, "Our Best Years," which addresses older Americans, was recently published by Doubleday.

The Samaritan Counseling Center of West Texas was incorporated as a religious not-for-profit organization in October, 1973 as the Pastoral Counseling Center of Midland, Inc.

It was once described as "an idea whose time had come." In January, 1973, this "idea" was shared with two men who were and are very active in their respective churches and community — Ron Schwisow, a member of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, and John Ingram, a member of St. Ann's Roman Catholic Church.

In the fall of 1973, a board was formed, a facility located, a constitution and by-laws prepared, and part-time staff employed. In 1980, the present building and property, located at 202 Pilot Road, Air Termianl, was received as a very generous donation. The building was donated in sections over a period of three years.

The major emphasis of the ministry has been to offer individual, marital, and famly therapy by trained perofessional therapists within a Christian perspective.

In addition to therapy, premarital counseling, group consultation, consultation for pastors, churches, schools, businesses, industry, and other agencies; enrichment experiences through seminars, workshps, and retreats; education and training on such topics as family life, human development, effective parenting, communication and other areas of interest; and psychological testing are also offered.

A long range planning committee is now at work putting together a five-year plan for the center. The goal is to continue offering a high quality of Christian counseling for the Permian Basin.

Science inspires attention toward Shroud

RELIGION

By PETER STEINFELS

NEW YORK — The Shroud of Turin has probably received more widespread and intense attention in the last 90 years than in all of its long history as the reputed burial cloth of Jesus.

It was not popular enthusiasm, rumors of visions or reports of miracles that accounted for this modern interest, however. It was science.

In 1898, Secundo Pia, an Italian lawyer and amateur photographer, revealed the shroud's image clearly when its lights and darks were reversed in a photographic negative, and ever since then, the 14-foot piece of linen has been the center of a scientific detective story.

Leading figures in this story have included pathologists, computer analysts and a team of scientists from the Air Force Academy, the Los Alamos, N.M., laboratory and other military research centers who mounted the Shroud of Turin Research Project in the 1970's.

The three laboratories selected to conduct the radiocarbon dating were at Oxford University, the University of Arizona and the Federal Institute of technology in Zurich, Switzerland. And among these scientists have been agnostics as well as believers.

Sheer curiosity about the uncertain origins and puzzling characteristics of the shroud motivated some of these efforts.

But even for the nonbelievers, the elusive hope was that science might corroborate what piety had long maintained: that the image might provide a direct physical link to the first-century and Jesus Christ.

But that hope was dispelled when the carbon tests showed that the shroud could not be the authentic burial cloth of Jesus since it was created only 598 to 728 years ago, between 1260 and 1390.

Now that the science has dealt a serious blow to the idea that it could be the burial shroud of Jesus, the question remains of its meaning for believers, some of whom may be unwilling to surrender even in the face of modern scientific testing methods.

One of them is the Rev. Adam Otterbein, a Roman Catholic priest who heads the Holy Shroud Guild, which has led in promoting interest in the shroud. More than 20 years ago, he called for carbon-14 testing of the linen.

Thursday, Otterbein acknowledged that if the recent test results were accurate, the shroud could not have been Jesus's burial cloth.

But citing the many unresolved questions about the shroud, including claims that it featured images of first-century Roman coins, he remained strongly reluctant to accept the results without further investigation.

At the same time, Otterbein also repeated the position of the Catholic Church, "so often misunderstood," he said, that objects like the shroud were not worshiped.

Relics are valued, he said, as means of helping believers honor the holy person with whom they are connected.

"We don't believe in Christ because of the shroud," he said, "but honor the shroud because of our belief in Christ."

James J. Davitt, a lawyer in Brooklyn, is a Catholic layman who contacted the Holy Shroud Guild because of his interest in the relic.

Davitt was impressed by analyses of the shroud's image showing wounds like those that the New Testament says were inflicted on Jesus. The shroud, he said, made the suffering and crucifixion of Jesus more concrete and real.

Davitt expressed skepticism about other objects reputed to be relics, including pieces of what is said to be the cross of Jesus. And he said he had never viewed the shroud as a proof of Jesus's existence or of His Resurrection.

Nevertheless, he said, "to me it's inspirational."

Not all Christians have been so cautious.

Because some writers have suggested that the mysterious origins of the shroud's image might somehow be linked to the Resurrection, the National Association of Evangelicals issued a pre-emptive warning about the carbon-14 testing in March.

"Should tests prove that the Shroud of Turin comes from the time of Jesus Christ, the question will still be there: Was this actually the shroud that covered Christ's crucified and resurrected body?" said Arthur Climenhaga, a theology professor who heads the association's theology committee.

Climenhaga said belief in Jesus and the Resurrection was rooted in the Scriptures, adding, "No matter what the Shroud of Turin may prove to be, it is no more than an interesting investigation."

Clergyman seeks to put drama into worship

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Rev. Clarence Rivers wants to pump life and music into Roman Catholic services, which he says have become boring rituals that parishioners endure rather than enjoy.

"What's wrong with enjoy? It's a perfectly good word," he said.

One of two blacks among about 250 priests in the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, Rivers said he seeks to inject some of the livelier feeling and music of black churches into the celebration of Mass.

A liturgist, musician, dramatist, lecturer and teacher of English literature, he emphasized that he is not advocating doing away with traditional Catholic rituals.

"I'm not an anti-traditionalist," Rivers said in an interview. "I'd keep everything." A demonstrative man with an easy laugh, he added:

"I try to explain to people, if you're not entertained, you're bored. To entertain them doesn't mean you're standing on your head, spitting nickels.

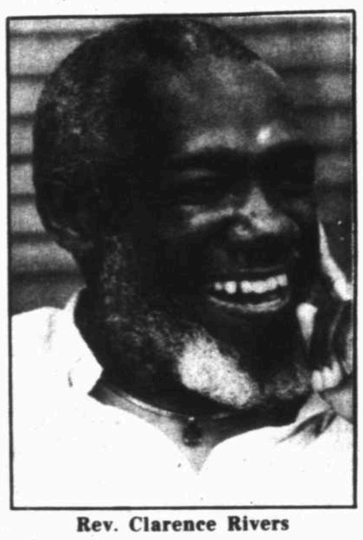
"When I was first ordained, I noticed that ushers were the greatest watch-watchers in the world. If the service was longer than it was supposed to be, the ushers were the first in the congregation to go (look at their wristwatches).

"They don't do that at a ballgame. If it goes 14 innings, they don't get up and say, 'It was only supposed to go nine innings.'"

The bearded priest, clad on a hot day in shorts, unbuttoned shirt and high-top sneakers, has founded a non-profit organization called Stimuli, based in his home, to push his efforts to enliven church services.

A veteran of 10 years as a parish priest after his ordination in 1956, he no longer is assigned to a parish, but is financially supported by the archdiocese — although not to the extent he would like.

Rivers, 56, who also has pursued studies in Europe, said the black community has something to contribute to worship services in what he refers to as "the European church." In a 1987 interview, he told The Community News, an inner-city neighborhood newspaper in Washington, D.C.:



Rev. Clarence Rivers

"I am interested in transporting to the Catholic Church some small part of the black spirit. The Catholic Church has good rituals and ceremonies, but they are done without style, without beauty and without grace...

"In the Western world the word 'churchy' means dead, but if blacks say 'we had church' it means they could have partied all night long."

Rivers, a native of Selma, Ala., moved to Cincinnati as a child and stayed. He was ordained there in 1956 and has since traveled widely to study, lecture, and produce and oversee plays and musical presentations.

His credits include founding and directing a theater company that specialized in Shakespeare.

He said the clergy needs to learn techniques of acting to convey messages to the congregation while entertaining them and holding their attention. He said that message wasn't lost on the ancient Greeks, whose dramas that formed a foundation for today's theater took on the fervor of religion.

Unfortunately, the clergy is not often trained in the performing arts, Rivers said.

"You'd probably do much better if you got a Hollywood producer who knew about worship," he said. "People don't realize that worship is drama. It's very difficult for people to accept that."

Rivers proposes to instruct the clergy in acting and drama as well as enlivening worship music.

He said he is disappointed that the archdiocese has not financially supported his ideas to liven up the Mass. Rivers said a Hollywood agent once asked him to come to Los Angeles and market his ideas in search of support. He said he turned down the proposal out of loyalty to the archdiocese.

"I felt it would only be a matter of time before the archdiocese would reciprocate. I'm still waiting," he said. "At this point, I don't have realistic expectations that the Church is going to do anything, institutionally. It may be that a group of parishes is going to band together locally or nationally and say, 'We'd like to hire your services.' But I'm not holding my breath.

"I like my work. I'd like to pursue it," Rivers said.

The Rev. Ted Kosse, a spokesman for the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, said the archdiocese supports and appreciates the work of Rivers.

"He basically wants to go full steam ahead in his enterprise efforts, and we're not in a position to fund him as fully as he would like," Kosse said.

16 members make small barn a house of God

LONE OAK, Texas (AP) — With a membership of 16, the Hallelujah Missionary Baptist Church in Lone Oak is probably one of the smaller churches in North Texas. But what it may lack in numbers it more than makes up in vigor.

This small, breakaway group consists of three families who became discouraged two years ago with their religious circumstances.

"We weren't spiritually fed," said lay preacher Marvin Ford. "When we entered our church we were given a schedule of events, and then we might as well go on home because we could say we had been to church. We felt that God was being left out of the service and man's needs had become too important."

The three families formed their own church in the home of the Ford family. For legitimacy they became a spiritual arm of the Bethel Temple Missionary Baptist Church in Big Sandy.

This move let the families form a recognized church with non-profit status.

The group finally moved from the large old house into some rental property in Lone Oak and with the permission of the landlord, had a small barn built on the property for Wednesday and Sunday worship services.

Ford has a rather unique approach to speaking the word of God. He just lets his thoughts flow and never prepares in advance for the sermons.

"I get my sermon right out of here," said Ford, pointing to his head. "I am a transmitter and the Lord uses me as a mouthpiece."

'Amazing Grace' most popular hymn

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A Southern Baptist committee working on a new hymnal says a random survey of music directors finds that "Amazing Grace" is the most frequenly sung hymn in Baptist churches.

Nine of the next most frequently sung hymns in this order were:

"To God be the Glory," "Victory in Jesus," "Just As I Am," "Blessed Assurance, Jesus Is Mine," "Standing on the Promises," "Living for Jesus," "There is Power in the Blood," "At the Cross" and "At Calvary."

These and 190 other frequently sung hymns were recommended for inclusion in the new hymnal to be published in 1991, a revision of a 1975 edition.

Author to discuss 'God's Nobodies' at conference

Victor Hamilton, author and professor of religion, is discussing "God's Nobodies" at the Fall Bible Conference today and Sunday at St. Paul United Methodist Church, 4501 Thomason Drive.

The conference, which began Friday night, resumes today at 11 a.m., followed by lunch and another lecture at 1 p.m. A covered-dish supper will begin at 6:30 p.m., with another session at 7:30 p.m.

The conference will conclude Sunday when Hamilton will be the featured speaker at all three morning worship services, held at 8 a.m. 9:30 a.m. and 11 a.m.

Hamilton will lead a study of "lesser" known New Testament figures. He is currently professor of religion at Asbury College, Wilmore, Ky. He is a graduate of Houghton College, Houghton, N.Y. and Asbury Theological Seminary, Wilmore. He received his doctorate from Brandeis University, Waltham, Ma.

In addition to teaching, Hamilton has written extensiveiy in his field and has been published by "Bible Almanac," "Theological Wordbookof the Old Testament," and "New King James Bible." He is also the author of "Handbook on the Pentateuch" and is currently preparing a massive commentary on Genesis for the "New International Commentary of the Old Testament" series.

Hamilton has also engaged in a broad preaching and teaching ministry that includes summer camp meetings, youth retreats, weekend Bible conferences and preaching/evangelistic campaigns in local churches. He and his wife Shirley have four children, Heather, Paul, Dawn and David.

The public is invited to attend, and a nursery will be provided. For more information, call 694-2544.

Forbes receives honorary degree

Forbes

ALAMOSA, Colo. (AP) — Multimillionaire Malcolm S. Forbes was formally dressed in the requisite pin-striped suit, but he approached the question of business success with informal humor and a bit of irreverence.

"If it's not too late, pick out parents who are in business," Forbes told students at Adams State College Thursday. "So when they die...then you're in business."

Forbes, 69, was at Adams State to collect an honorary degree as this year's Distinguished Executive in Residence — a role he fulfilled with his talk.

"I didn't balloon in, but as you'll soon find out, I brought the hot air with me," Forbes said.

Forbes, editor in chief of the business magazine that bears his name, has made headlines for everything from escorting actress Elizabeth Taylor to piloting a hot air balloon into a high-security Chinese military base.

In the animated talk to more than 600 people he spoke of the promise he sees in the decline of communism and the "breaking out of peace."

"The American economy is in such extraordinarily good shape that we can withstand either one of these guys getting elected," he said, commenting on presidential candidates Michael Dukakis and George Bush.

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Olympic weightlifting champion Naim Suleymanoglu was joined in Turkey Friday by his family, which was finally allowed out of Bulgaria, state radio reported.

Suleymanoglu, an ethnic Turk, defected to Turkey two years ago. He won the country's first gold medal in 20 years in the Seoul Olympics last month, breaking a world record by lifting 342.5 kilograms.

The semiofficial Anatolia news agency reported that Suleymanoglu's parents, his two brothers and their wives, and his nephew crossed into Turkey from the Kapikule border post in Thrace.

Suleymanoglu used his victory to appeal to Bulgarian communist authorities to let his family join him.

Cavett

DANNEBROG, Neb. (AP) — Nebraska-born entertainer Dick Cavett will participate in the third annual National Liars Hall of Fame induction ceremony Oct. 28 in this central Nebraska community of 380 residents.

Folklorist Roger Welsch, cofounder of the hall, said Thursday that Cavett will produce a segment for his weekly "Comedy Hour" radio show while participating in the ceremony at Eric's Big Table Tavern.

Welsch said one person will be inducted into the Liar's Hall and several will receive Pinocchio Awards for the best lies of the year.

The first hall inductee was Roy Harpham of Harvard, who said: "I once met an honest fisherman."

Last year, Robert Peterson Sr. of Dannebrog was inducted for saying that one day in February it was so cold he saw a lawyer with his hands in his own pockets.

Welsch said politicians are not considered for awards because "It is open only to amateurs."

LONDON (AP) — Cardinal Basil Hume sent a message to Pope John Paul II Friday congratulating him on the 10th anniversary of his election.

The cardinal, president of the Bishops Conference of England and Wales, said the Roman Catholic Church here had "a special tradition of loyalty" to the pope because of the country's history and therefore could congratulate the pope "with particular warmth."

Polish Cardinal Karol Wojtyla was elected pope on Oct. 16, 1978.

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The mother-daughter country singing duo The Judds, saying they remember lean times, lent their support to a food drive for God's Pantry, which serves families in Lexington and surrounding areas.

"I have to tell ya'll how tickled we are just to be here in Kentucky," said mother Naomi Judd. "We're home."

"It's encouraging to me to know that we can give back something that we've been given," said daughter Wynonna, 24. "I remember when times were rough."

The food drive, which began Thursday, is to raise 200,000 pounds of food for the program, said Mary Jo Votruba, director of God's Pantry.

The Judds won the Country Music Association's duo of the year Monday night.

Volcker

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Paul A. Volcker, the former Federal Reserve Board chairman known for an ever-present cigar, says the nation needs to raise taxes on some commodities — including cigars — to cut the nation's deficit and promote exports.

But now it turns out that Volcker, who left the Fed in August 1987, has quit smoking. He told a dinner audience here Thursday that the government should move at least $30 billion annually into deficit reductions by cutting spending and raising taxes.

He suggested raising taxes gradually on gasoline, alcohol and tobacco products, including cigars.

"I don't smoke them anymore," he said of cigars during the fund-raising dinner in Indianapolis for the American Center for International Leadership in Columbus, Indiana.

Volcker said presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis shouldn't trap themselves into promising not to raise taxes.

"I don't hear them saying much, but that's the good news. When I hear them say something, I don't like it," he said.

PARIS (AP) — Thousands of visitors streamed into the refurbished courtyard of the Louvre on Friday for their first close-up look at a giant glass pyramid destined to be the museum's new entrance.

President Francois Mitterrand cut a tricolored ribbon leading to the Cour Napoleon, a vast esplanade between the museum's two main wings that had been closed to the public for four years.

The pyramid, 71 feet tall and costing $15 million, was designed by I.M. Pei, also on hand for the inauguration.

Surrounded by three smaller glass pyramids and set off by seven triangular basins in deep blue granite, the pyramid seemed to change with the weather — dull gray when clouds blocked the sun, then brilliant in the sunshine.

"It's like a jewel, a diamond sparkling in the outdoors," said Christiane Weiler, a visitor from Toulon. "It's much more beautiful than I expected."

The Louvre, built by King Philippe Auguste in 1200 as a fortress, underwent many structural changes according the tastes of its inhabitants over the centuries before it became a museum after the French Revolution in 1789.

The pyramid had been the subject of heated debate since the project was unveiled at the beginning of Mitterrand's term of office.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

Disciples of Christ to share ministries

CORPUS CHRISTI — More than 25 congregations of the Christian Church, Disciples of Christ, in the Southwest will tell others about their successful ministries and programs while the church meets for its biennial regional assembly now through Monday.

These congregations will tell their stories through booths in a special "Sharing Ministries" display today. Members of the sponsoring congregations will staff the booths to answer questions and elaborate on information in the displays.

Representing First Christian Church of Midland as voting delegates are Dr. and Mrs. Ray Bristol, Mr. and Mrs. Bob Leibrock and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Singleton.

One thousand disciples from Texas, New Mexico, the Oklahoma Panhandle and one congregation from Kansas were expected for the assembly, which began with a worship service Friday night. The assembly will close with worship and installation of officers Monday morning.

Also on the program are major speakers, Bible study, workshops and meal events, with time set aside for recreation.

Midlander Pam Liebrock will conduct an hour workshop for the Assembly on "Children's Church: Come, Worship and Wonder." She will present the concepts and content of the Good Shepherd model being used at Children's Church at First Christian Church, Midland.

Blessitt to give testimony

Sherry Blessitt, wife of evangelist Arthur Blessitt, will share her testimony in the Fellowship Hall at First Baptist Church from 10 to 11:30 a.m. Oct. 22.

"All women are invited to hear this unusual testimony of Sherry's role as wife of the only man that has carried a 12-foot cross and walked literally around the world for the past 20 years sharing the message of Jesus Christ," says a release from the church.

Refreshments will be served.

Arthur Blessitt will speak at First Baptist Church at 7 p.m. Friday.

His talk will feature the never before shown documentary video about his carrying his cross all over the world.

Also, he will speak at 7 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 22, at the Midland High School Auditorium for a citywide rally. No admission will be charged.

All women are invited to a time of special prayer at the Arthur Blessitt Rally to be held at Midland High School Auditorium. The prayer time, where people may come and go or stay the entire time, will be from 5 to 9 p.m. Tuesday in the First Baptist Church sanctuary.

McKeithens to perform

Calvary Assembly of God, 908 S. Johnston, will host The McKeithens Music Ministry, at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Over twenty years ago in Bastrop, La., two couples, Joel and LaBreeska Hemphill and their nephew, Tim McKeithen and his wife Dixie came together to form the musical group "The Hemphills." After many years traveling with the family, Tim and Dixie felt the Lord leading them into their own ministry.

"Music has always been important to the McKeithens," says a release from the McKeithens. "Tim's dad was a member of the McKeithen Brothers who sang throughout the South in the 1930s and 1940s.

"Through the years God has blessed them sufficiently to be able to add a full-time band and travel 60,000 to 70,000 miles yearly."

The group's composition "Something Better Than Gold" brought the McKeithens national attention by being the No. 9 song for the year. The McKeithens record for the Eddie Crook Co. on the Morningstar Label.

"A family Christian experience with testimonies, stories, songs, music — a Christ-centered program, that's what the McKeithens are all about," the release says.

The Rev. Gayle Reeves, pastor of Calvary Assembly of God, invites the public to participate in this event.

McDowell series begins

"How To Help Your Child To Say No To Sexual Pressure," an eight week video taped series, designed by author and lecturer Josh McDowell is being presented by the Children's Educational Ministry of Golf Course Road Church of Christ on Wednesdays.

The weekly series is based on McDowell's best selling book, "Why Wait?" the basis for a weekly television series by the same name.

"This course is designed to equip parents to impart a Christian understanding of sexuality to their children," says a release from the church.

"Sexuality is viewed as a gift of God to be used in the development of our personality as God shapes us into adults capable of mature and loving relationships including the commitment of marriage. Parents will learn how to help young people reject premature sex involvement as a counterfeit of the relationship God intends within marriage."

The series is being shown in the church's fellowship hall, with entrances on the north side of the building at 7 p.m.

New York Times News Service

ROUND TOP, N.Y. — Dressed in the black, floor-length habit of her traditionalist Catholic order, Sister Mary Cecilia was taking a walk down a quiet country road some 300 yards from the entrance to her convent here when a rented silver car pulled up and made a sudden stop.

Her brother, David Greve, a fireman from Ohio, got out of the car, lifted the 22-year-old nun by the waist and tossed her into the back seat.

With their father at the wheel and two other brothers inside to restrain her, the car sped off.

That day, June 26, was the last time Sister Mary Cecilia was seen near the convent, St. Joseph's Novitiate, some 35 miles south of Albany, N.Y.

But a few days later — with the New York state police and the FBI still looking for her — the young woman surfaced in Cincinnati and renounced the convent, the name it had given her and the religious life to which she was pledged.

No longer Sister Mary Cecilia, she used her given name, Mary Sue Greve.

"I'm very thankful that my parents and my brothers cared enough for me to do what they did," she said a few days later on national television.

She explained that she had spent the days immediately after her abduction in a cabin in Pennsylvania with her family and "a very nice woman," who "spoke to me about cults and mind control."

"I listened to her and found that the advice I was given by people at the convent and the pressures they put on me were wrong," she said on the "Donahue" program.

Her mother, Susan Greve, was more explicit. She called the convent a "cult," adding that "Mary Sue had lost her free will."

In an interview here, however, the head of the convent, the Rev. Clarence Kelly, denied the allegations. "That's an absurdity," he said. "They took her by force and brought in a woman who was paid a lot of money to brainwash her. If there's anything cultish about it, it's the way the Greves acted."

Beyond the charges and countercharges of brainwashing and mind control, the "Case of the Kidnapped Nun," as the tabloids called it, has revived an emotional debate over the responsibility of parents and the freedom of their children, a debate rarely heard in the decade since a man named Ted Patrick made "deprogramming" a household word.

The twist to this deprogramming is that it did not occur to someone under the influence of the Hare Krishnas or the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, but to a young woman in a traditionalist Catholic convent.

The convent, in which the women see their families only four times a year and observe silence at mealtime, is very much like all Catholic convents were before the Second Vatican Council of the 1960s.

Mrs. Greve, who readily admits that she masterminded the abduction, said she acted out of love and a knowledge of what was best for her only daughter.

"We knew the risks, but we also knew Mary Sue," she said in a telephone interview from her home in the Cincinnati suburb of White Oak.

"She always wanted to go to college and get married and have kids. We really didn't think she had a vocation."

"But kids sometimes have to do things," Mrs. Greve said. "And you have to give them the freedom to do it. She was 20 when she went in. I figured she would never stay. She was never happy there."

Kelly, however, insisted that the young woman was happy, noting that along the way from first-year postulant to second-year novice, she had to promise before God that she was acting of her own free will.

"She could have left any time she wanted to," he said. "She stayed because she was happy here."

"We're not talking about a family rescuing their daughter from some danger," he said.

"Here, we have a healthy mind, devoting herself to something noble, robbed of some deeply held and deeply felt convictions. I think it's monstrous. In the United States of America, I say that parents have no right to do that to a 22-year-old woman."

St. Joseph's Novitiate was started by Kelly on the grounds of a rundown 14-acre Catskill resort that he bought for $99,000 in 1984.

The nuns live in the 100-year-old former guest house and pray in a newly built cedar church that is ringed with flowers.

Days at the convent, which begin at 6 a.m. with the chanting of the "Divine Office," are filled with prayer, study, reflection and brief periods of recreation.

Kelly is a leader in the Society of St. Pius V, a group of a dozen traditionalist priests who broke away from the French archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, an outspoken conservative opponent of Vatican II who was excommunicated by Pope John Paul II on June 30.

Kelly's group believes that Lefebvre is too liberal. Mrs. Greve has said she was disturbed that her daughter was giving her life to "a splinter of a splinter group."

Exhibit shows lifetime of Moore's works

ENTERTAINMENT

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE

LONDON (AP) — The life's work of sculptor Henry Moore has gone on show in London in a comprehensive way that was never managed while he lived.

"We discussed an exhibition with him in 1964 to mark his 90th birthday this year, but he died in 1986. Now this is his memorial," said Roger de Grey, president of the Royal Academy of Arts.

The venerable academy, which has been presenting art exhibitions since 1768, has done Moore proud, spreading 112 sculptures and 127 drawings by him through its 12 main galleries to show all the stages of his career.

There are Giant abstract bronzes and lifesize human figures in stone that had to be lifted in by crane, and little plaster figures smaller than a hand.

His famous drawings of restless sleepers who sought refuge in the London subway to escape bombings in World War II also are shown, along with sketches of coal miners, trees, elephants, sheep, landscapes and ideas for sculpture, often based on bones, stones and bits of wood which he picked up.

Dr. Susan Compton, a British art historian who organized a popular exhibition of Marc Chagall at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, spent 15 months arranging the exhibition, which runs through Dec. 11.

Compton recalled in an interview that Moore's work was constantly criticized by the British public until the outside world recognized him as a great artist.

"But other artists regarded him highly and bought his works," she said.

Among Moore's supporters was Jacob Epstein, the New York-born sculptor who came to England in 1905 when he was 25 and spent the rest of his life here.

"Epstein was even more vilified than Moore and Moore often paid tribute to Epstein for having borne the brunt of public hostility for a new view of sculpture," Compton said.

The art historian said that, although Moore became extremely successful with his late works, some people thought he was boring. "That was because they saw only one thing by him and did not know about his variety," she said, pointing to four masks by Moore.

"Two of them are in cast concrete, a material he more or less invented for sculpture in the 1920s. He felt that as it was used for modern architecture, sculptors should exploit that material."

Besides wood, stone, bronze and cast and reinforced concrete, Moore worked in marble, slate, terra cotta, lead and cast iron.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher called Moore the most important sculptor in modern times, when she opened the exhibition.

Moore was the son of a Yorkshire miner and decided to be a sculptor when he was still a boy. His works are in private collections, museums and the open air across the world, and fetch large sums when they rarely come up for sale. A large bronze reclining figure brought $1.7 million in New York in 1986, and a drawing fetched $300,000 there three years earlier.

The exhibition, with loans from 10 countries, starts with a marble carving, "Head of the Virgin," which Moore made as a student in 1922, and ends with a 1983 charcoal drawing of a reclining figure, based on an idea from the shape of a bone.

There is his first major sculpture, the "Reclining Figure" stone carving of 1930, the first of the many forms of that title which brought him fame, and the 1944 lifesize "Madonna and Child" from an English church at Northampton that has not been moved since it was installed.

Moore, who was not known to be a religious man, said afterward that the "great tradition of religious art seems to have got lost completely in the present day."

He said that while the mother and child theme was a "fundamental obsession" for him, the Madonna and Child "should have an austerity and a nobility, and some touch of grandeur which is missing in the everyday mother and child idea."

A display case holds the tools he used to make the plaster maquettes, which are models for sculptures. There is a toothbrush, a drawing compass, surgical scalpel, emery paper, files, a bowl full of plaster and a flintstone of fantastic shape.

Moore was forever keeping bones and picking up stones, bits of wood and shells that might give him an idea. The shelves around his studio at Much Hadham, a village 26 miles north of London, were filled with them.

He said in 1963: "Finding driftwood and pebbles and bones, anything that starts one off with a reality which one alters and changes, for me now is a much better start than a drawing.

"I look at them, handle them, see them from all round, and I may press them into clay and pour plaster into that clay and get a start...This may be the value of certain kinds of modern sculpture, that it opens people's eyes to nature and they pick up things which they wouldn't look at otherwise."

In the year he died, Moore said: "The whole of my development as a sculptor is an attempt to understand and realize more completely what form and shape are about, and its reaction to form in life, in the human figure, and in past sculpture. This is something that can't be learned in a day, for sculpture is a never-ending discovery."

Part of Carnegie Hall setting for cabaret

NEW YORK (AP) — Four special performers have inaugurated a cabaret festival at Carnegie Hall, the first time the venerable building has staged a series celebrating this most intimate style of popular song.

"It's one of the crazier things I've done," laughs Kristin Kuhr, director of Carnegie's Weill Recital Hall, a small, 268-seat space off the main auditorium where the celebration began Wednesday. "The word 'cabaret' has always seemed kind of vague to me but I've always liked songs that have come from it."

With the help and guidance of Donald Smith, a New York cabaret promoter and enthusiast, she came up with the series.

For four consecutive evenings, audiences have heard four distinct artists. The festivities opened with Adelaide Hall, the legendary American singer who has lived in London for more than 50 years. She was accompanied by pianist Ronny Whyte who could headline himself if he hadn't agreed to play for her.

Miss Hall made her Broadway debut in the 1921 Broadway musical, "Shuffle Along," written by Eubie Blake and Noble Sissle. She later introduced such songs as "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" and "Digga Digga Doo" in "Blackbirds of 1928." She also was the first performer to sing the wordless part of Duke Ellington's "Creole Love Call."

The following night the stage was occupied by Karen Mason, a Chicago-born singer who slowly has made a name for herself in cabaret, particularly at such nightspots as the Royal George in Chicago and Don't Tell Mama in New York.

Friday, Steve Ross took center stage.

"Steve Ross is an established singer," Smith says. "If you were to say Bobby Short or Julie Wilson, Steve goes in that group. And he's such an expert interpreter of Cole Porter and Noel Coward that we decided half of his evening would be Porter and Coward and half a potpourri of all the other wonderful things he does."

For the finale tonight, Andrea Marcovicci will perform. Miss Marcovicci established herself as a television and film actress in the 1970s, but it is only within the last two years that she has started to develop a large following, especially in Los Angeles where she plays the Gardenia Club and at the Algonquin Hotel in New York.

"Andrea informs what she does with the sensibility of the 1980s," Smith says. "She does those wonderful old songs very simply but she comments on them for today. She has a wonderful view of it."

Miss Kuhr wanted to create the feeling of a cabaret in the recital hall space yet retain the room's identity as part of Carnegie Hall.

"There is a blue room here where the artists generally receive their guests," Smith says of the recital hall. "For the first time, a bar will be set up and drinks sold. The setting will feel as if it were a small room."

But Miss Kuhr didn't want audiences to forget they were in Carnegie Hall.

"It's not a garage or another wonderful theater, it's someplace special, she says. "So we're trying to find the right balance with the use of things like special lighting."

Man sacrifices career to find Nazi sympathizers

EDITOR'S NOTE — An Irish-Catholic with a law degree, John Loftus was moving up in the ranks of the Justice Department when he joined a special unit created to find and deport Nazi war criminals living in the United States, figuring it would help his career. But Loftus became obsessed with the hunt and when his superiors tried to rein him in, he decided it was time to pursue the investigation on his own. It was a costly decision.

By BRIAN MURPHY

ROCKLAND, Mass. (AP) — Sometimes John Loftus wishes he had simply walked out of the classified government vaults 10 years ago and turned his back forever on his knowledge of Nazis living quietly in the United States.

By this time, Loftus figures he could have been a veteran Justice Department prosecutor or perhaps he might have started a lucrative law practice in his home state of Massachusetts. He thinks he might have even spared his wife a disabling injury, and that he might have been able to keep his spacious Rockland home.

Instead, Loftus' search into documents showing Nazi officers and sympathizers smuggled to the West as anti-Communist informants led to his resignation from a special federal Nazi-prosecution unit in 1981. That's when he began his one-man probe into the government's collaboration with fugitive Nazis.

His quest has been costly.

Loftus' research and travel is barely covered by his magazine articles and royalties from his 1982 book, "The Belarus Secret," which chronicles the paths taken to the West by Nazis who led the massacre of nearly 40,000 Jews in the Byelorussian section of Eastern Europe.

His wife was left partially crippled after a 1983 attack at a psychiatric hospital, where she had taken a job to help pay bills. He had to put his home up for sale. A Kentucky-based fund for Loftus' work doesn't even offset phone bills, he says.

"God, I think often about what it would be like if I just walked out of that vault," says the 38-year-old Loftus. "My family would be healthy. I wouldn't be constantly on the edge of bankruptcy.

"BUT I THINK if I would have done that, I would have been ashamed for the rest of my life."

Loftus, the crusader, was once a comfortable insider with a stepping-stone resume.

Like many Irish-Catholic boys, he went from Boston Latin School to Jesuit-run Boston College, where he took political science classes with other aspiring attorneys and public servants. After graduating from Suffolk Law School in Boston in 1977, he accepted an honor's placement in the Justice Department.

Loftus was moving up the Justice Department ranks when he noticed a posting in 1979 seeking applicants for the Office of Special Investigations, created to find and deport war criminals.

"I joined OSI for purely selfish reasons," Loftus says. "I thought being a Nazi prosecutor would be good for my career — and I might even get a free trip to Germany out of it. But it was my honest feeling that it was a waste of the government's money to reopen cases against 60-year-old men for crimes committed 40 years ago. I thought we had more important targets.

"I knew nothing about the Holocaust, like most Americans. There were six sentences about the Holocaust and war crimes in all my public education."

Loftus' education began with his first cases. He was assigned OSI files connected to Byelorussia, or White Russia, a section of the Soviet Union occupied by the Nazis from 1941 to 1944 when nearly all Jewish natives were exterminated by local Nazi collaborators.

While researching the cases, Loftus spent hours studying old files in the vaults in Suitland, Md., tracking the subjects from White Russia to the United States. Many of the paths, he learned, passed through shadowy anti-Communist groups established in Allied nations to coordinate espionage against Joseph Stalin and the rising Soviet regime.

LOFTUS ESTIMATES nearly 10,000 Nazi officers and sympathizers were brought into the United States through intelligence networks using the Displaced Person's Act at the height of McCarthyism. Many were given citizenship and have lived openly without recrimination. Nearly 6,000 survive, he estimates.

AP Laserphoto

Author John Loftus in his Rockland, Mass., home, discusses the preoccupation that changed his life: tracking down Western bureaucrats who helped spirit Nazi officers and sympathizers to safety after World War II.

In South River, N.J., for example, Loftus and three other OSI officials in 1980 checked gravestones near a monument bearing the symbol of the Belarus SS outfit in White Russia. Ironically, Loftus has become close friends with one of the few surviving Byelorussian Jews, who also lives in New Jersey.

"Here is someone living in the shadow of the people who murdered his family...We're not talking about somebody serving as a clerk for the Nazis or someone who swept out the mess hall or some poor kid drafted into the Nazi army; we're talking about politicians who climbed to power over the bodies of children."

Loftus says the benefit of bringing in the Nazis was marginal, and perhaps even damaging to national security. Few of those sheltered by the intelligence community had actual links to underground networks in Europe. In fact, some were Soviet counter-agents, he says.

Harold "Kim" Philby, who coordinated many Nazi emigrations as leader of the Anti-Bolshevik Bloc of Nations, defected to the Soviet Union in 1963 as one of the highest-placed moles in Western intelligence. Philby, 76, died in May in the Soviet Union.

By late 1980, Loftus' work was about to be tested. He was named principal prosecutor of Stanislaw Stankievich, a high-ranking Nazi collaborator in the White Russian city of Borissow, who was the first to face deportation and loss of citizenship on OSI charges.

Stankievich died in November 1980 in New York City, only weeks before his hearing was scheduled to begin.

A FRUSTRATED Loftus used the court file to probe further into the Nazi-recruiting networks that brought Stankievich into the United States. His research began to irritate OSI officials, who wanted to focus on information directly linked to deportation cases, Loftus says.

"I was told to stay out of the vaults," he said. "I knew then I would have to pursue this on my own."

In 1981, Loftus took down the sign he hung in his Justice Department office: "Wahrheit Macht Frei," "Truth Shall Make You Free," taken from the phrase "Work Shall Make You Free" that was placed in some Nazi concentration camps.

Since the Stankievich case, OSI has filed charges against about 60 alleged Nazis and deported about a dozen, including Karl Linnas, who died in July 1987 in Leningrad after being convicted of war crimes by a Soviet Court, and John Demjanjuk, who is appealing his death sentence in Israel.

"People see the Holocaust as a Jewish issue," Loftus says. "They don't see the larger covert abuse issue...I'm not a Nazi hunter now. I'm not a Simon Wiesenthal. I'm hunting those Western bureaucrats that recruited them, that handful of the '40s and '50s who made Nuremberg meaningless. They created a statute of limitations for genocide."

Over recent years his reports have included word from South American sources that Nazi Dr. Josef Mengele, accused of concentration camp atrocities, was keeping on the move in South America; that some people in the Vatican had helped Nazis flee after the war, and that several dozen Nazis who had worked for Allied intelligence had been permitted to settle in Australia.

Loftus recently wrote an article contending the United States and the Soviet Union stockpiled a deadly Nazi nerve gas, Sarin, during the Cold War, and are only now considering its destruction.

He is lobbying for a House resolution calling for full disclosure of postwar intelligence operations. He is also finishing work on a book about an Irish Republican Army gun-smuggling operation uncovered in Boston in 1984 and is researching documents from Canada and the United Kingdom on Nazi spy networks.

"I think I've learned in the last six years there are three great evils in this world: communism, fascism and indifference," he says.

Black stirs controversy with conversion

EDITOR'S NOTE — Julius Lester has written 19 books, many for children. His early works include a paean hymn to black power. His latest book, "Lovesong," caused an academic uproar and his exile from the Afro-American studies department at the University of Massachusetts.

By CAROLYN LUMSDEN

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Julius Lester wrote the book on black power in 1968 with a title he meant to be funny: "Look Out, Whitey! Black Power's Gon' Get Your Mama!"

The title, however, was taken seriously by at least one newspaper, which headlined the story: "White Mamas in Danger, Says Black Militant."

That same year Lester was branded an anti-Semite for having a teacher read a student's poem on his radio show, beginning: "Hey, Jew boy, with that yarmulke on your head/-You pale-faced Jew boy — I wish you were dead."

Twenty years later, the maverick Lester is again provoking controversy, much of it related to his conversion to Judaism.

"There's a feeling among some that by becoming a Jew I am now to be considered a traitor to black people," said Lester, 49. "I've had black people say to me that they don't consider me to be black, which is news to me, since I look in the mirror and very clearly I'm black."

The man who was once, in his own words, "anathema to Jews" now exchanges his cowboy hat on Saturdays for a skullcap and prayer shawl and leads a conservative synagogue in song.

"There's a kind of intellectual climate in black America today that really demands a conformity of thought," he says. "If you are critical of certain things, Jesse Jackson for example, then people really treat you like a pariah."

Ironically, his book about his conversion, "Lovesong," has made him anathema to another group, the Afro-American studies department at the University of Massachusetts, where he has taught for 17 years.

IN THE BOOK, published in February, Lester accused writer James Baldwin of making anti-Semitic remarks in a 1984 lecture. But Lester refused to debate the matter with members of the Afro-American studies department who said he was misinformed about the speech.

Colleagues saw the charge as pernicious and called Lester, in a preface to a transcript of Baldwin's speech that they sent him, an "anti-Negro Negro...seeking compulsively to slay the birth-people enemy who exist in his malicious and unforgiving imagination."

"He will blow in any wind that comes," says Michael Thelwell, who recruited Lester into the department in 1971. Thelwell was among 15 department members who signed a letter suggesting Lester would be "infinitely more comfortable" elsewhere.

At the center of the storm is a lanky, long-faced man who loves playing pool, baking loaves of hallah for Sabbath dinners and collecting stamps with the youngest of his four children, David, 9.

"I guess I just don't care that much about how I appear to others," he says, sitting cross-legged by a field where David plays ball. "What's important to me is, whom does God see when God looks at me?"

The writings that land Lester in such hot water are only a sideline to his teaching, he says. His classes are always over-booked and he is the only faculty member to have earned the university's top three teaching awards.

He also is studying to be a cantor and writes children's books, which make up more than half of the 19 books he has written so far. His latest project is the fourth volume of the retelling of Joel Chandler Harris' "The Tales of Uncle Remus" in a modern dialect.

"A LOT OF people just know me for children's books," he says, chuckling.

Lester was born in 1939 to a Methodist minister who was a pillar of black parishes in Tennessee and Kansas and who would race away from a gas station rather than accept the services of a white man who called him "boy."

Lester's great-grandfather was a Jewish immigrant from Germany who married an ex-slave in the late 1800s and built a house that stood apart from both the white and black neighborhoods of Pine Bluff, Ark.

In his will, his great-grandfather pledged his love to his wife and wrote that he considered her "my true and honest wife" despite the anti-miscegenation laws of the time.

Lester grew up a model minister's son, learning the Bible better than some of his teachers.

As a child, he was fascinated with "Kol Nidre," a Hebrew melody played on the eve of Yom Kippur, and with Shakespeare's Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice." He later wrote that he identified with Shylock in ways he could not with black leaders.

Lester graduated from Fisk University in 1960 and headed for New York. Even then, the lure of Judaism was strong. Although Lester, who has been married twice to whites, made a living as a folk singer, the black spirituals he played failed to move him as powerfully as Jewish songs did.

He eventually joined the increasingly militant Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee and in 1968 drew attention through publication of "Look Out, Whitey," an exposition of the black power principles. Lester now says he's embarrassed by the book.

"IN MY SOUL I had very serious questions about black power. I left all of that out because I felt it had to speak for the movement. The book is honest as far as it goes, but is a betrayal of my soul," he says.

"My problems with black power had to do with wondering whether it would be different from white power...It seemed to me we were in danger of becoming more like white people while we were thinking we were being different."

On a talk show he led for several years on WBAI-FM in New York, he broadcast an anti-Semitic poem, he said, to focus on strong feelings aroused in some blacks by a struggle with Jews over the control of schools in Brooklyn.

The reading unleashed even stronger feelings. It brought death threats, demonstrations and calls from the Jewish Defense League for his ouster from the station.

So it was with shock that Lester's friends and foes read in 1979, 11 years later, his article beginning: "And so, Jews are being used as scapegoats again."

The article criticized black leaders who accused Jews of pressuring Andrew Young into resigning as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations after he met secretly with the Palestine Liberation Organization's representative to the United Nations, against U.S. policy.

Those leaders, Lester wrote, "merely show that blacks, too, can be Germans."

Lester, who by then had been teaching at the University of Massachusetts for nine years, nearly ended up in a fistfight with a professor over the article. He stopped attending department meetings.

THE YOUNG episode was followed in 1985 by an article criticizing Jesse Jackson for his "race for power" and whites for overlooking his "Hymietown" gaffe.

"An unfortunate legacy of the '60s has been an almost total, moral abdication on the part of whites where anything black is concerned," he wrote.

The final straw for his departmental colleagues came in "Lovesong," with Lester's account of Baldwin and the Jews. Lester wrote that Baldwin somehow held Jews responsible for the outcry over the "Hymietown" remark. Later he conceded that might have been a misinterpretation.

He had also written that he knew that Baldwin was not an anti-Semite, "but his remarks in class were anti-Semitic and he does not realize it."

A month after the book's publication, a department meeting was called to talk about the charge. Soon the letter suggesting Lester's transfer was on its way to the dean of humanities.

"We have nothing against his Judaism," department Chairman Chester Davis told the Amherst Bulletin. "But when one develops a vicious attitude toward blacks and black organizations, Jackson, Baldwin and civil rights, there is some question as to the appropriateness" of remaining.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey termed the meeting "an inquisition" and said it raised questions about Lester's academic freedom. Professor Thelwell said the book raised questions about his professional standards.

"There is no issue of academic freedom," Thelwell said in a prepared statement. "Elements of the media and the academy created one in order to vent an ugly racist bias: 'See, we've always known that these black academics are culturally and intellectually deficient, crude nationalist ideologues with no tolerance for or understanding of the nuances of civilized discourse and the protocols of free inquiry. Without the lowered intellectual standards caused by affirmative action, they would not even be in a university.'"

A faculty committee that investigated found no evidence Lester's academic freedom had been violated by his transfer to the Judaic studies department, which both parties agreed to.

The appointment is for one year. Chairman Shmuel Bolozky says making Lester a permanent member of the department would be "tantamount to putting him in a straitjacket." Lester himself, a man not fond of artificial boundaries, would rather be free to teach without departmental confinement.

Indians acquitted in hostage-taking at newspaper

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Two Tuscarora Indians who staged an armed takeover of a newspaper office and held hostages for 10 hours, in what they said was a protest of local corruption, were found innocent of all charges Friday.

"Thank you, Jesus," someone in the federal courtroom shouted after the jurors returne their verdict. The jury began deliberations Thursday.

Eddie Hatcher, 31, and Timothy Jacobs, 20, both of Pembroke, faced charges of making and possessing illegal firearms, conspiring to make those weapons and conveying false information about explosives. A federal charge of hostage-taking was dismissed earlier this week against Jacobs but remained against Hatcher.

"The jury has made what is going to be a historic verdict, a verdict that people will remember," Hatcher said as he left the courthouse for the first time in two weeks without wearing shackles. "I don't think people realize yet how important this verdict is."

Hatcher and Jacobs never denied walking into The Robesonian office Feb. 1, chaining the door shut and brandishing sawed-off shotguns. They held as many as 20 people during the 10-hour siege, in which no one was injured.

They surrendered to authorities after they were told the governor had agreed to set up a task force to investigate their allegations.

The pair said they did it to bring attention to allegations of official corruption and drug trafficking in Robeson County, in southeastern North Carolina, which has a population of one-third Indian, one-third black and one-third white.

"I'm just glad that Timothy and Eddie did something to draw attention to the conditions in our county," said Eleanor Jacobs, mother of Jacobs. "I hate they used guns. But they did draw attention to something that was needed. The jury had compassion. They understood things."

Hatcher said after the verdict that he didn't have any faith in the criminal justice system of Robeson County.

"It is the people who have brought justice, not the system," Hatcher said. "It has always been that way."

Jacobs said he was uneasy about returning to the county.

"I'm afraid. I'm really afraid of going back," Jacobs said. "But it's my home, and where my family is, so I am going."

"I'm not afraid," Hatcher said. "I'm as safe there as I would be anywhere."

Robesonian Editor Bob Horne, one of the hostages, said he had no immediate comment on the verdict.

"I believed in God and I believe in him today," said Thelma Clark, Hatcher's mother. Hatcher uses his grandfather's surname.

Robeson County Sheriff Hubert Stone said he hated to see the trial become a forum for Hatcher and Jacobs "at taxpayers' expense."

"I usually don't comment on trials when they're over with," Stone said in a telephone interview. "But all circuses have to come to an end. We have to see where the clowns will put on their next act."

Hatcher had sat throughout the 13-day trial without a lawyer because his attorney of choice, William Kunstler, was busy in a New York case. U.S. District Judge Terrence Boyle ruled that Hatcher would act as his own lawyer after he refused help from other lawyers.

On Thursday, Hatcher delivered his own closing argument, telling the jury that prosecutors had talked about the Constitution "and how it allows peaceful protest. When those sworn to uphold the Constitution won't, what do you do?"

"Can you imagine 60,000 frightened, abandoned people crying out?" he asked, in a closing statement partially written by Kunstler. "From 150 miles away, they're crying out. Some are faint, they're tired, they're wore out. Please don't abandon me and Timmy."

Assistant U.S. Attorney John Bruce argued that even if the defense's allegations of corruption among officials in Robeson County were true, the defendants' actions at The Robesonian were not justified.

"If everything in this whole scenario they have spun out is true, it still does not justify their putting innocent people in terror of their lives," he said.

Reagan not abandoning issue of aid for Contras

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Friday he "would not hesitate" to call Congress back in special session if the Contra rebels are threatened, a statement apparently designed to keep the rebels' hopes alive until a new president can take up their cause.

Reagan's message to Capitol Hill had been anticipated for days, following acknowledgments from both White House officials and GOP lawmakers that prospects were nil for obtaining a $16.5 million cache of weapons for the rebels in the waning days of the 100th Congress.

A special session is considered very unlikely.

But White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the administration wanted to send the message that one of Reagan's most passionate causes is not being abandoned in the final days of his administration.

Fitzwater said the purpose of the letter "was to reassure those who are concerned about the Contras."

"The conclusion was that we didn't have the time — we may not have had the votes — and there was not a crying need" to seek the military assistance at this time, he said.

"We want to reassure everyone that we stand behind the resistance, as the president has often repeated. And we're prepared to call Congress back if it's necessary," the spokesman added.

Earlier in the week, Fitzwater had said administration officials had come to the realization that "we will just have to wait until there is a new president and new Congress to see what happens next on aid to maintain the resistance as a fighting force."

At present, the dwindling Contra forces are subsisting on $27 million in food, clothing and medical supplies approved by Congress last month as part of a Pentagon money bill.

They have received no weaponry from the United States since February, when lethal aid was suspended in deference to efforts at reaching a peace accord between the rebels and the leftist Sandinista government.

The mood in Congress remains strongly opposed to sending new military aid. But under the defense appropriations measure, a complicated process was established for Reagan to request the release of the $16.5 million in weapons, if certain conditions were met.

But Congress would again have to approve the release, meaning that a special session would be necessary if the request came after Congres adjourns, which is expected next week.

In his statement, Reagan warned the Nicaraguan government against taking advantage of the fact that U.S. lawmakers were leaving town soon and would be unable to send any aid until a new Congress convenes in January.

"In the event the Sandinistas attempt to capitalize on this situation, they should know I would not hesitate to call the 100th Congress back into session to consider emergency assistance to the freedom fighters," Reagan said.

Fitzwater said the White House would prefer not to call a special session, particularly since any other subject could be put before the lawmakers.

Asked about the threat on Wednesday, House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said:

"I hope the president doesn't try to grandstand and make a political football out of Central America...It's a bit of show biz to come around after we have gone home. Surely he won't do that."

Reagan's statement also contained the expected pledge of continued support for the Contra rebels.

"America must stand with those who fight for freedom in Nicaragua," Reagan said. "We have an obligation to share the blessings of our liberty with those who yearn for freedom in Nicaragua. Their struggle is our struggle — and together we can achieve democracy in Nicaragua."

Fitzwater denied that Reagan was abandoning the Contras, saying the decision against pushing the military aid issue at this time is "a long way from backing off from the Contras."

"The president will stand with this until the end" of his term in January, the spokesman said.

Senate passes tough drug bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate passed a campaign-year drug bill on Friday that would expose traffickers who kill to the death penalty, funnel more money to treatment programs and bolster law enforcement agencies across the country.

The two-year, $2.6 billion measure passed on a 87-3 vote and contained grist for everyone's campaign mill. Conservatives got the capital punishment provision and stiffer penalties for trafficking and possession, along with an extension of mandatory drug testing to transportation industry workers and federal parolees.

Liberals managed to tone down provisions that would have broadened the right of police to conduct searches and limited prisoners' abilities to appeal their sentences. They also inserted language ensuring that 60 percent of the bill's money would be directed to prevention and treatment programs and just 40 percent to law enforcement.

Objections to the bill came from liberal lawmakers who argued that it contained provisions that sounded strong but would likely do little to stem the use of drugs by millions of Americans.

"Just to grow hair on your chest here on the Senate floor so you can send out press releases back home and tell everybody how tough you are on drugs is no solution," said Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark. "It is a multi-faceted problem and the solutions are multi-faceted."

But conservatives argued that strong penalties were the only real way to combat drug dealers and discourage users.

"If I had my druthers and we had a lot of time, I'd push for legislation that would make this look like child's play," said Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y. "If you really want to stop the criminal element from the sale of drugs, I think you need even tougher penalties."

Senators will now hav to shape a compromise measure with members of the House, which passed a harsher version of the bill on Sept. 22. Leaders of the two chambers hope a final version will be completed next week, which would allow Congress to adjourn for the year and let legislators campaign for re-election boasting about a law-and-order anti-drug bill.

White House officials distributed a statement to senators Friday saying President Reagan "strongly supports enactment of a sound, prudent, and effective anti-drug bill substantially like the House-passed version without further delay."

Lawmakers also must decide how to pay for the programs the legislation creates. Lawmakers and aides say Congress might consider a separate bill next week or in 1989 that would actually provide the money — and add to the deficit.

The 600-page bill was written by senators from both parties over a four-month period. But over the last several days, lawmakers submitted more than 100 amendments, some of them unrelated to illicit drugs but offered because the bill could be the last to pass Congress this year.

Thus, the legislation contained language requiring warning labels on alcoholic beverage containers, strengthening child pornography laws, inducing police to seize the drivers' licenses of drunken drivers on the spot, and banning the sale or possession of plastic guns that cannot be detected by screening devices.

The bill also contained a provision restoring legal weapons that prosecutors had used in public corruption cases until they were stripped by the Supreme Court last year. The government would once again be able to use a broad interpretation of mail fraud laws to prosecute public and private corruption cases by charging defendants with breaking the public trust.

In McNally v. U.S. last year, the court ruled that mail fraud laws could be used in such cases only if public property or money were involved. Mail fraud laws were used to bring the Greylord judicial corruption cases in Chicago, and one conviction was overturned as a result of the Supreme Court decision.

Courts could decree the death penalty for people engaged in illegal drug activities who kill civilians or law officers. Liberals tried but failed to substitute mandatory life imprisonment.

The bill would distribute $676 million to federal agencies to hire 3,287 additional law officers, to purchase helicopters and other equipment and to build new prisons. Another $275 million would be dispersed among state and local authorities.

A new Cabinet-level post would be created for a "drug czar" to oversee federal anti-drug activities, and the government would be permitted to transfer some foreign aid from countries that combat drug trafficking ineffectively to those that do a better job.

The measure states as a goal the provision of treatment for all alcohol and illegal drug abusers who want it. The government would provide $1 billion for treatment programs, including for the training of teachers and health professionals, the construction of rehabilitation facilities and the initiation of corporate anti-drug programs for their employees.

On a 78-11 vote, the senators included a provision on Friday that would allow courts to strip many federal benefits — including farm payments, mortgage assistance and radio station licenses — from people convicted of possession of even small amounts of illegal drugs. Those found guilty could lose the benefits for one year for their first convictions and up to 5 years for repeaters.

The bill allows judges to fine by up to $10,000 people convicted of possessing drugs, and also increases penalties for drug trafficking that involves minors.

Goats used in training exercise

CAMP DOUGLAS, Wis. (AP) — Live goats are playing the part of trauma victims in a training exercise this weekend, but the Army will avoid flak from the Humane Society by not giving the animals real bullet wounds.

The goats will be used for surgical procedures during the training at Camp Williams, part of the Volk Field complex in Juneau County. The participants from around the state will be physicians, dentists, physicians' assistants and nurses in the Army Reserve and National Guard.

Army Maj. Morris Jackson of the mobile training unit, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, said surgical incisions will be used on the goats. The animals are anesthetized during the procedures and are subsequently killed by injection so they will suffer no pain.

Jackson, whose unit sponsors the training program, did not say how many goats will be used. The advanced trauma life support training involves two hours of laboratory work, he said.

The training, however, differs from the program used at Fort Sam Houston and elsewhere that involves shooting. No goats will be shot, and the advanced trauma life support training will involve surgical incisions, such as those used to clear airways or drain fluid from the heart sac, he said.

"We don't do ballistic wounding. We do all surgical procedures and they're by the book," Jackson said.

"We're not going to endorse it, but we're not going to openly oppose it," said David Fanfarillo, a cardiac pathologist on the staff of the Humane Society's Washington, D.C., headquarters.

He said the society does oppose the Army's practice of shooting goats, and would have acted to prevent that training, had it been planned at Camp Williams.

"If the animal," said Fanfarillo, "is completely and fully anesthetized, then, granted, it probably doesn't feel any conscious pain. But there is a moral and ethical consideration."

The goats used in the Camp Williams training are not allowed to retain consciousness, Jackson said. Under past training rules, they were allowed to recover but there was no way to ensure they were free of pain, he said.

"We're sensitive to the issue," Jackson said.

Jackson said the training at Camp Williams will benefit Wisconsin physicians. They will practice the sort of procedures often used in a rural state, such as treating a farmer whose tractor overturns and requires an incision to free a breathing passage or relieve pressure on a heart.

This is the kind of medical response that is critical in the first few minutes after a mishap, and Jackson said it is the kind of rigorous training that not all physicians successfully complete.

Jets' sonic booms threaten old fort

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Fort Jefferson, a hexagonal, 140-year-old fort 70 miles offshore in the Florida Straits, never faced enemy attack but its caretakers say it is fighting a losing battle with the U.S. Navy.

For about two weeks, sonic booms from jet fighters on maneuvers from the Key West Naval Air Station have rattled windows and dislodged bricks at the fort, said Mike Finley, superintendent of Fort Jefferson and Everglades National Park.

Despite threats of legal action by Finley and several pleas from Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., to reroute the flights, the Navy has no immediate plans to alter the flight exercises.

Capt. William Denning, head of air station at Boca Chica, said the weather is ideal for fighter training and the fort is in the station's radar tracking zone.

"The Navy is not being cavalier or thumbing our noses at what's going on with Fort Jefferson," Denning said. "We try not to go supersonic any more than we have to."

Passengers become ill after eating on plane

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Hundreds of Northwest Airlines passengers have been stricken with an illness that state health officials said Friday may be linked to contaminated food served aboard at least four flights.

"We have cases all over the country," said state epidemiologist Michael Osterholm. "This morning, we were dealing with a family as far away as Germany.

"The one common phrase being reported (to investigators) is people thinking they have never been so sick, that they thought they were going to die," Osterholm said.

Four reports were confirmed Thursday as cases of the bacterial illness shingellosis, and Osterholm said he expects more than 100 additional cases to be confirmed.

The people who were confirmed with the illness were on stretches of a Northwest flight that originated in Minneapolis-St. Paul and went to Nashville, Detroit and Seattle, as well as on a Minnesota Vikings football team charter flight to Miami, Osterholm said. The flights were between Sept. 25 to Oct. 4.

"We have no reason to believe it is happening now," Osterholm said.

The outbreak first came to light after 21 players and staff members of the football team became acutely ill two to five days after their game in Miami Oct. 2.

All the illnesses confirmed so far have been traced to food prepared in Marriott Corp.'s airline kitchen at the Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport.

Yugoslavia plans to ease unpopular austerity program

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The government announced plans Friday to ease an unpopular austerity program, three days before it meets to consider widespread demands for resignations in its leadership.

The Central Committees of four of Yugoslavia's six republics and of ethnically troubled Kosovo province also met Friday to iron out political rifts as fiery politicking continued before Monday's meeting of the policy-setting national Central Committee.

Several Serbian Communist Party groups, including the influential Belgrade city organization, joined calls for the resignation of national party chief Stipe Suvar.

Milanko Renovica, a member of the ruling Communist Party Politburo and a former party chief, became the third member of the 23-man body to offer his resignation in the past three weeks, the state news agency Tanjug reported Friday. The move was expected to be ratified Monday.

Deputy Premier Janez Zemljaric said Yugoslavia would import $600 million in emergency staples — triple the amount announced Oct. 8 by the government — to ease the worst economic crisis in the country in four decades.

Belgrade dailies said the government also would increase wages for workers in profitable companies and in social services.

The Serbian Communist Party groups attacked Suvar Friday for criticizing Serbia the day before. Belgrade Communist chief Rados Smiljkovic was among leading Serbian officials who charged that Suvar is trying to turn Monday's meeting into an indictment of Yugoslavia's largest republic.

Suvar has promised a shake-up of top personnel following three months of economic protests and nearly daily ethnic rallies led by Serbian nationalists.

During the Kosovo meeting, Communists representing the province's ethnic Albanian majority and others from its Slav minority clashed on several issues, Belgrade radio said.

Serbians have demanded more control over its autonomous province in rallies and prompted an unprecedented power struggle. The mainly Christian minority accuse mainly Moslem ethnic Albanians of harassment.

At the Kosovo meeting, Serb and Montenegrin representatives demanded the resignation of the province's mostly ethnic Albanian communist leadership, the official news agency Tanjug said.

In Albania, the Communist Party daily Zeri i Popullit charged Yugoslavia's Serbian leader, Slobodan Milosevic, and his followers with spearheading a campaign of discrimination against Albanians similar to apartheid in South Africa.

"It seems the hotheads of Serb chauvinism seek to set not only Kosovo and Yugoslavia on fire, but the Balkans as well," said the newspaper in comments carried by the official Albanian news agency ATA. "We would advise them not to play with fire."

In Yugoslavia's liberal northern republic of Slovenia, its official youth organization demanded direct elections and the "formal abandonment of a one-party system," the Belgrade daily Borba said.

The government imposed an austerity program last May designed to curb a $21 billion foreign debt and 217 percent annual inflation by reducing or freezing wages and allowing prices to rise.

The new pay increases will be adopted by Parliament by the end of the month, Belgrade dailies said.

The newspapers said the International Monetary Fund had approved the measures. The IMF and other Western creditors insisted on the austerity program before rescheduling debt payments and extending new loans.

At the meeting of Kosovo's Communist leaders, representatives of Kosovo's Serb and Montenegrin minority demanded the resignation of the province's mostly ethnic Albanian Communist leadership, Tanjug said.

In the southern republic of Montenegro, where police used tear gas and clubs to break up anti-government protests last weekend, republican party chief Miljan Radovic complained that "anti-Socialist and anti-Communist" outbursts never heard before are now so common that "it gives a man the chills."

Hundreds of Montenegrin students are boycotting university cafeterias to press demands for the leaders' ouster and free elections.

A U.S. Army official, center, tells journalists how Pershing II erector-launchers will be destroyed at the U.S. military depot Hausen at Frankfurt, West Germany. Starting Wednesday, European-based Pershing II missile launchers will be destroyed as part of the recently enacted Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces treaty.

Army describes missile-launcher destruction

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — U.S. military officials outlined plans Friday for turning rocket launchers into scrap under the U.S.-Soviet treaty eliminating intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

Starting Wednesday, torches and electric saws will cut in half the first nine of the Pershing 2 launchers at a U.S. Army site in the Hausen section of northwest Frankfurt.

Work crews will don welding suits and helmets, safety glasses, leather gloves and safety shoes, said Chief Warrant Officer Richard Moore.

U.S. and Soviet experts, wearing hards hats and goggles, will watch from behind a glassed-in partition about four yards away, the site supervisor told a news briefing.

Late Friday, the U.S. European Command in Stuttgart said the team of Soviet inspectors would arrive in Frankfurt Monday. It did not say how many Soviets were expected.

All 114 of the Pershing 2 rocket launchers stationed in West Germany will be destroyed in Hausen within a three-year period, said site commander Christopher Evans.

The launchers themselves are flatbed trucks outfitted with beams designed to raise the missiles into a vertical position for firing. The launchers were designed for both transport and firing of the mobile rockets, and each is about 31 feet long.

Evans, a civilian employee of the Army, stressed that the missiles themselves were being taken back to the United States.

"I would like to emphasize that this facility has nothing to do with the actual missile and never has had," Evans told reporters invited to the pre-destruction briefing. "This facility only works with the launchers and ground support equipment."

Evans said the launchers will be brought one by one into a covered work area, where the trailer part and the erector mechanism will be cut in half.

The work will take about two days for all nine launchers, and the remains will be taken to a facility in suburban Frankfurt to be used as scrap metal, he said.

"All personnel involved have the proper training and certification and there is no, I repeat, no adverse environmental impact," Evans said.

The first nine launchers to be destroyed were stationed at a base near Stuttgart and were hauled away along with the missiles Sept. 1. That was the first U.S. missile removal under the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Force treaty signed by President Reagan and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev in December.

U.S. officials said in September the remaining 420 intermediate-range U.S. missiles will be removed from Western Europe over a 36-month period. Of the missiles deployed, 108 Pershing 2 missiles and 96 cruise missiles were stationed at four bases in West Germany.

Stationing of the missiles had sparked massive protests in Western Europe, including a coordinated demonstration in several cities that drew hundreds of thousands of people to the streets in October 1983. Deployment of the missiles began the following month.

The Soviet Union began removing its missiles from Czechoslovakia and East Germany in February, before the U.S. Senate ratified the treaty.

Under the treaty, the Soviet Union and the United States agreed to eliminate all land-based, intermediate-range nuclear missiles, which have ranges of 300 to 3,000 miles.

Thatcher pledges to back next U.S. president

Thatcher

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — A triumphant Margaret Thatcher wound up her Conservative Party's annual conference Friday rejecting the notion of a politically unified Western Europe and pledging to support the next U.S. president.

To thunderous applause and chants of "10 more years" from the 4,500 delegates, the prime minister also declared her Conservatives will hold power into the 1990s — "And who knows, beyond."

"We are all too young to put our feet up...I include myself," said Mrs. Thatcher, who turned 63 Thursday.

Mrs. Thatcher came to power in 1979, has won three elections in a row and already is the longest-serving leader in the Western world.

On the subject of the European Economic Community, Mrs. Thatcher charged that advocates of closer political union wanted to use the 12-nation trade bloc "as a vehicle for spreading socialism" and sought to "bring about a federal Europe by stealth."

In remarks widely regarded as setting a new agenda to focus on social issues, the prime minister also urged Britons to maintain a "generous society" and exercise civic responsibility.

Millions of Britons have become richer through nearly a decade of Mrs. Thatcher's right-wing economic policies. But unemployment, at 8 percent, is twice as high as in 1979, and critics charge Britain has become a greedy, materialistic and uncaring society.

At the end of the prime minister's 45-minute address, delegates waved Union Jacks and huge, blue party flags while Mrs. Thatcher, her grip on the Conservatives unchallenged, stood with arms raised acknowledging the cheers.

As Mrs. Thatcher left the hall in this south England resort to the strains of the favorite Tory anthem, "Land of Hope and Glory," some delegates waved signs declaring "Bush-Thatcher 88" and "Bush-Quayle."

Mrs. Thatcher did not mention by name Republican presidential candidate George Bush and his running mate, Dan Quayle, or Democratic contender Michael Dukakis.

Of President Reagan, with whom she has developed a particularly close relationship through the 80s, Mrs. Thatcher said he "has rebuilt the strength and confidence of the West — not without a little help — and inspired the democracies to go out and win the battle of ideas."

"It is vital that Britain and America should always stand together. So the next president of the United States too will have the United Kingdom as a staunch ally," she added.

Mrs. Thatcher's blunt remarks on the EEC followed a controversial speech last month in which she rejected moves for closer political or monetary union after 1992, when all trade barriers among member nations are to be dismantled.

"We haven't worked all these years to free Britain from the paralysis of socialism only to see it creep through the back door of central control and bureacracy from Brussels," Mrs. Thatcher said.

U.S. pays part of debt to U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States on Friday paid $85.6 million to the financially beleaguered United Nations, reducing its debt to the regular budget to $366.3 million.

The payment was made one day after the Soviet Union pledged the equivalent of $600 million to U.N. relief and reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan.

A U.N. statement said the payment was the second installment of the $188 million that President Reagan promised to pay by the end of the year. The United States earlier paid $15.2 million.

A check for $85.6 million was delivered Friday afternoon by U.S. Ambassador Vernon A. Walters, the permanent U.N. representative, in a surprise visit to Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Despite the U.S. payment, the United Nations still faces a financial crisis.

"The United Nations remains financially weakened and unstable because reserves are substantially depleted," said a U.N. statement.

"If this situation is not corrected, it could impede the carrying out of new peace missions," it said, referring to U.N peacekeeping forces currently in the Persian Gulf.

Egyptian's prize seen as good omen for Mideast peace

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The awarding of the Nobel Prize for literature to Egyptian novelist Naguib Mahfouz is being interpreted as a boost for Arab-Israeli relations and a good omen for Middle East peace.

The 76-year-old author, who on Thursday became the first Arab writer to win the award, has been attacked in the past for supporting the U.S.-brokered Camp David agreement between Egypt and Israel.

Egyptians compare Mahfouz with England's Charles Dickens and France's Victor Hugo.

But he calls himself only a "third-rate writer," naming William Shakespeare and Leo Tolstoy as first-rate writers, and Dickens and George Bernard Shaw as second-rate.

Mahfouz's admirers laud his stubborn advocacy of the ideals of democracy.

While his critics speak out openly, his supporters seek anonymity, saying the movement for peace in the Middle East remains largely defenseless against terrorist violence and political maneuvering.

"Mahfouz's glorious gain will fire the minds of generations of Arab writers to emulate his example and stress Arab-Jewish peace," said one admirer, a highly placed Arab official.

The Swedish Academy said that Mahfouz's work, which includes 40 novels, had advanced the art of the novel, a relatively new genre in Arabic literature.

Several Arab writers contended that Mahfouz was favored for the prize because of writings that allegedly are pro-Israeli. Jordanian novelist Fakhry Kaawar insisted that Mahfouz had "contributed greatly to push Zionism."

Many Arab intellectuals believe the Swedish Nobel Prize committee comes under a strong Jewish influence.

Bahrain's information minister, Tariq al-Moayyed, said Mahfouz's award was a source of pride for Egypt and all Arabs.

After decrying the monarchy of King Farouk and the British occupation of Egypt in his early books, Mahfouz resorted to allegory to condemn dictatorial practices in his country that were being justified on nationalistic grounds.

At one point, Mahfouz lamented Egypt's loss of identity, depicting the nation in a novel called "The Road" as an illegimate boy moving from a small town to the crowded capital in search of his father. The boy aimlessly roams through Cairo, turns into a criminal and ends up dying on the gallows.

In another novel, "Miramar," Mahfouz took a more obvious swipe at dictatorship, portraying Egypt as a maid at a boarding house called Miramar, with a clientele of suitors representing former feudalists, emerging revolutionaries, counterrevolutionaries and opportunists.

The maid rejects all the suitors as deceitful and awards her favors to a poor but honest newspaper delivery boy.

After the defeat of the Arabs in the 1967 war with Israel, Mahfouz almost totally shed his allegory and confronted Gamal Abdel Nasser's police state more directly.

"Al-Karnak," a novel about arrests and torture of decent Egyptians by hated intelligence officers, has a theme that carries echoes of the Gestapo in Nazi Germany.

One novel cited by the Nobel judges is "Children of Gebelawi," written in 1959 and still banned in Egypt. The characters are based on Adam and Eve, Moses, Jesus, Mohammed and a modern scientist.

Polish opposition refuses posts

Rakowski

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Prime Minister Mieczyslaw Rakowski said Friday that he had offered Cabinet posts to four opposition figures, but they turned him down.

As a result, he said he was forming a government that was less-broadly based than he had hoped.

He also said political reform can proceed without Solidarity.

Rakowski spoke at his first news conference as prime minister just after Parliament voted 363-1 with no abstentions to approve a Cabinet made up mostly of members of the ruling Polish United Workers' (Communist) Party.

"In my opinion (opposition) entry into the goverment would have changed quite strongly the political situation in Poland and created a new situation favorable to the idea of national reconciliation," Rakowski said.

Rakowski said he had offered posts to Catholic church adviser Witold Trzeciakowski, independent economist Julian Auleytner, Catholic intellectual Andrzej Micewski and journalist Alexander Paszynski.

All four turned down the offers, said Rakowski, who told Parliament on Thursday he was leaving the jobs open in case the opposition changed its mind.

When he was named prime minister Sept. 27, Rakowski said he hoped to broaden the communist-dominated government and gain popular support.

But Rakowski hesitated before answering a reporter's question about the role of Solidarity and indicated that political reform could proceed without the banned independent union federation.

"I don't limit democratization to the recognition of Solidarity. I don't think that the restoration of Solidarity may be proof of the fact that our country is becoming more democratic," he said.

Rakowski spoke at a packed 90-minute news conference brodcast live on national radio.

"I think the democratic processes being implemented in Poland for several years now are accelerating at present, and it is all happening without the participation of Solidarity," Rakowski said.

But a Catholic deputy said in a Parliament speech Friday that authorities must regard Solidarity, the first independent union in the Soviet bloc, as a permanent feature of the political scene.

"There is no doubt that union pluralism is today a basic but one of the many problems to be solved from the wide package of reform which awaits us," Zygmunt Kostarczyk said.

On Thursday, Rakowski nominated a new generation of young party members to oversee economic affairs, but senior party members retained the key interior, defense and foreign ministries.

Andrzej Wroblewski, 38, became the head of the important Ministry of Finance. Dominik Jastrzebski, 46, took charge of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Cooperation.

Mieczyslaw Wilczek, a wealthy, private businessman who is also a party member, heads the Ministry of Industry.

One of Rakowski's chief tasks as prime minister will be to revive the failing economy. Inflation stands at 60 percent. Consumer goods from cheese to winter coats are in short supply, and workers continue to press for wage increases.

In all, Parliament approved nine new ministers. Five represent the Communist Party, one is from the Peasants' Party, and two are from the Democratic Party. Both parties are allies of the Communists.

The only non-party member and woman appointed was the new minister of health, Izabela Planeta-Malecka.

Solidarity was crushed with the imposition of martial law in 1981. Its leader, Lech Walesa, agreed to end a wave of strikes in August after the government agreed to talks on legalizing the movement.

Rakowski declined to say when the talks would begin, and he seemed cautious about the results.

"I am against getting excited about the round table," he said. "We will see how the first round will go, what kinds of positions or views will appear.

The talks are scheduled to begin next week.

Rakowski replaced Zbigniew Messner, whose entire Cabinet resigned Sept. 19 after fierce criticism for mishandling the party-approved economic reform program. It was the first time the entire government stepped down in postwar Poland.

Iran closes border with Turkey

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Iran closed its border with Turkey to prevent further crossings by Kurdish refugees who fled Iraq during an army offensive, a Turkish official said Friday.

Regional Governor Hayri Kozakcioglu said Iran received 2,178 Kurdish refugees from Turkey one month ago but then closed its border to the refugees, saying it had no shelter for them.

Turkish news agencies say up to 19,000 Kurdish refugees have voluntarily transferred to Iran.

Iran offered to accept any of the 60,000 Kurdish refugees who poured into Turkey starting in late August, after Iraq began an offensive against the ethnic minority. The Kurds claim Iraq used chemical weapons against them.

Kozakcioglu said 3,000 Kurdish refugees were taken this week in buses and trucks from two tent cities in southeast Turkey to Alan, a village on the Iranian border.

But the regional governor said the Iranians refused to accept the refugees and, after waiting at the border for two days, the refugees were taken back to the tent cities.

Kozakcioglu said he discussed the incident with Iranian authorities at the border village of Esendere on Thursday.

He said he submitted a list of 3,000 Kurds who wanted to go to Iran to join their families there. Iran was studying the list, he said.

Iranian Deputy Premier Ali Reza Moayyeri arrived in Ankara Friday and delivered a message to Premier Turgut Ozal from Iranian Premier Mir Hussein Musavi.

The content of the message was not disclosed. But a government official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press it dealt with the Kurdish refugee situation. He did not give further details.

Koreans attack U.S. building

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Students shouting "Drive out Yankees!" attacked a U.S. government office, firebombed a police bus and injured 13 officers Friday, police and U.S. officials said.

Two police were seriously hurt in the battle in the southern city of Kwangju, the U.S. Embassy said in a statement. Police said four protesters were arrested.

About 100 protesters, many with iron pipes and clubs, hurled rocks and about 150 gasoline bombs at the U.S. Information Service building, the statement said.

Some bombs hit a police bus by the gate with about 30 people aboard, said The Chosun Ilbo, a leading newspaper in Seoul.

No one was injured in the building, but a car inside the compound was destroyed by firebombs and another was slightly damaged, the embassy said. About 10 windows at the center's library were damaged, it said.

U.S. Embassy officials said seven assailants scaled the center's roof from nearby inns while police outside fought back protesters for about 10 minutes.

"From there, they hurled Molotov cocktails, steel pipes and tiles which they ripped from the center roof," the officials said.

The students on the roof carried a placard that read "Repeal armistice agreement, conclude peace treaty," said Yonhap, the South Korean news agency. The 1950-53 war between North Korea and South Korea ended with an armistice, and both sides are technically still at war.

Yonhap said the students denounced the United States and demanded the arrest of former President Chun Doo-hwan, who has been under parliamentary investigation for alleged corruption and brutality during his seven-year rule. Chun left office in February.

The students also hurled firebombs at a downtown police station, shatterring windows, Chosun said.

The U.S. Information Service building has been the target of frequent attacks by radical students demanding the withdrawal of U.S. forces in South Korea under a mutual defense pact. Radicals contend the United States has enforced division of the Korean peninsula.

On Thursday, hundreds of students firebombed a government party building and protested in downtown Kwangju when police blocked them from approaching the U.S. center.

Dissidents and radical students stepped up an anti-U.S. campaign after the Olympics. Government officials are concerned about growing anti-U.S. sentiment fueled partly by trade conflict.

About 300 students Friday battled riot police at Hankook University of Foreign Studies in Seoul after burning effigies of President Reagan and President Roh Tae-woo.

Radicals contend the Roh regime is a front for a military dictatorship supported by the United States, despite substantial reforms being carried out by Roh.

The students threw dozens of firebombs and rocks at riot police, who responded with tear gas. Several students were bleeding, but it was not known how many people were injured or arrested.
