Hutchison wants raid evidence suppressed

Wallaby watcher

Sam Sessions of Hereford watches one of his wallabies eat bits of apple and bread from a bowl in their pen behind his house. Another of the small kangaroo cousins watches from a safe distance. Sessions said he bought the wallabies for something to do in his retirement. He plans to sell some babies as they are born and weaned from their mothers. He currently owns four females and one male. Three of the females are definitely pregnant, and the other one probably is carrying a baby.

Hopping into new hobby/business gives Sessions something to do

By GARRY WESNER
Managing Editor

Sam Sessions needed something to do after he retired.

So, he jumped in to a new fad that is part hobby, part business and part pet.

Sessions, you see, decided that "when a feller gets 76 years old, he can't work as much," so he put aside his life's work with horses.

And while the family dog in the front yard was a good pet, it didn't occupy his time.

Raising ostriches was out -- they are ornery and expensive, costing tens of thousands of dollars to purchase and feed, making them "too rich for my blood."

Then he learned about the newest exotic pet craze and, on Nov. 22, bought five wallabies that he is raising out back of his house east of Hereford.

Sessions is not the only person in the area to take a stab at the small kangaroo cousins -- Bill and Wanda Rowland of Dawn own seven of the little critters.

Both Sessions and the Rowlands bought their wallabies from the same dealer near Fredericksburg.

"They're easier to handle to me than a pet dog," Sessions said as he walked among the four females and one male, feeding them pieces of bread and trying to lure them to a bowl filled with apple chunks. "I'm not having a bit of trouble with them."

Sessions said he was not really ready to buy the wallabies, but did anyway, putting them in a makeshift pen built around an old storage shed he enclosed for the miniature marsupials.

There is a metal self-feeder for their regular feed -- Sessions said he buys Purina brand kangaroo pellets -- and a heated container for water that keeps it from icing over in the night.

On one wall is a small bundle of hay, and there are small nests of hay around the enclosure. The hay not only makes comfortable beds, the wallabies also like to eat it.

Of the four females, Sessions knows three are pregnant. When they were picked out of the litter at the Hill Country wallaby farm, he was encouraged to feel the not-quite-born animals in their mothers' pouches, saying they were about half the size of a squirrel.

Those babies are expected to pop their heads out of their mothers' pouches soon and will be on their own and weaned this spring.

"I'm sure I'll have some sticking their heads out this month," he said.

Sessions said the fourth female is probably pregnant, but just has not started showing.

He said wallabies bear their young in an interesting manner.

A baby leaves the pouch when he is too large to get in, and is weaned by his mother.

If the mother has been impregnated before then, the fetus is delivered and, in about 15 minutes, climbs up the mother's front and into the pouch, attaching to a nipple for sustenance.

It takes about seven months from that point before the baby outgrows his mother's pouch.

Sessions said his male wallaby is capable of servicing as many as 10 females. The animals live for 15 to 20 years, and he knows "a 10-year-old female will still breed and raise babies."

Sessions compared his wallabies to cats -- they use their forepaws to wash themselves -- and to rats -- using sharp front teeth to bite through an ice-encrusted water pail.

They can be picked up by the tail safely, and use their tails and large back feet only for jumping and stability.

Sessions said he and Rowland will work together on their project, as they have been friends for years.

If a customer wants a gender not available from one breeder, a deal can be made with the other.

Or, Sessions continued, the two men might swap males at some point to bring new blood into their own herds.

Sessions said he plans to sell wallabies from the ones he raises, and may keep some to increase the size of his breeding stock.

They cost between $1,200 and $1,800 each, or $3,000 a pair.

Sessions said he enjoys just watching the animals play, adding that they will get to romping around in their pen, jumping over each other despite the advanced stage of pregnancy of three of the beasts.

"Four of them will eat out of my hand," he said. The other female is still a little bit too wild to trust a human being.

None of them has a formal name, although Sessions said he calls the youngest female "Pet," because she is very gentle and likes to receive attention from him.

When spring comes, Sessions plans to increase the size of the wallabies' pen, putting sheet metal around the bottom of the fence to reduce the wind and keep out wild animals that might attack the herd.

In addition, he plans to build more substantial shelters for them.

He also said he plans to spend a lot more time at the pen, watching his little charges play around the yard.

The wallabies Sessions and Rowland bought are Bennett wallabies.

"These are supposed to be the hardest" of the breeds available, Sessions said.

They are also, he said, very economical to raise.

He said each adult wallaby eats about half a pound of feed each day, plus treats.

Altogether, "I can feed one of them for 20 cents a day and that includes treats," he said. "That's what I like about them. There's no labor involved" and not much expense.

As for a financial future in wallabies as compared with ostriches, Sessions said, "in the ostrich business, if everything works, you can make some money," but it takes two years for the birds to start laying eggs and quite a bit of work to make sure those eggs hatch safely.

With the wallabies, "As far as I can see, they're the healthiest animals I've ever seen."

AUSTIN (AP) - The June 10, 1993 raid by authorities of the state treasury is at the center of a dispute between prosecutors and U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison.

Mrs. Hutchison, a Republican, is charged with using state employees and equipment for personal and political purposes when she was state treasurer.

In June she resigned as treasurer after winning a special election for Senate. Five days after her election, the Travis County district attorney's office served subpoenas at the Treasury to collect boxes of records.

In her pre-trial hearing, Mrs. Hutchison has sought to suppress evidence taken during the raid because she said the raid amounted to an illegal search.

In pre-trial testimony, prosecutors have said the raid was launched after Treasury employee Wesley McGehee told them that documents were being destroyed.

In the legal motion filed Tuesday,

Mrs. Hutchison argues with this.

The motion states that in a sworn deposition, McGehee claims he did not tell investigators that he contacted them to tell them that documents and records were in danger of being destroyed.

"The state has attempted to falsify evidence on this subject and has attempted to perpetrate a fraud on the court," the motion states.

In response to the motion, the state said that the raid wasn't based solely on information from McGehee.

Prosecutors said they issued the subpoenas for records because they had a "growing body of evidence ... that led to the conclusion that forthwith subpoenas were necessary to avoid further destruction of evidence."

Mrs. Hutchison's pre-trial hearing continues Friday. She denies any wrongdoing and contends that the case against her is a conspiracy by Democrats to derail her re-election bid next year.

New year brings old problems to Texas agriculture

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP)

Although 1994 is a new year, some problems from last year have carried over for agriculture. With only one cutting of hay last spring, Texas livestock producers are facing a hay shortage and a high pressure system moving into the state this week will bring little relief for winter pastures, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service reports.

Producers are trying everything to keep their herds physically strong into the calving season. However, most patches of winter wheat have been adversely affected by the dry conditions of this winter.

Jon Zeitler, meteorologist at the National Weather Service Agricultural Service Center in College Station, said the high pressure system that is moving through the state is going to bring fair skies, mildly cool nights and a few showers.

"There's a cold front that should be moving into Texas late in the week bringing a chance for showers in the north central and northeastern parts of the state, but not South Texas," Zeitler said.

Harvey Buehring, Nueces County Extension agent in Robstown, said weather has been a major factor in the hay shortage.

"Last spring, the rain was too heavy and this fall, there wasn't enough rain," Buehring said. "By November producers were supplementing their cattle and that usually doesn't start until December."

Winter wheat is behind schedule and because of rain shortages in early fall, there wasn't any hay harvested.

Buehring said producers will be lucky to raise forage in April before it gets too hot.

"We're 60 days behind schedule for winter pasture. And because there is no hay, that means a lot of producers are starting to cull herds and sell calves and cattle that they normally wouldn't," he said.

Dr. Don Dorsett, Extension forage specialist in College Station, said producers are mixing concentrates, feeding cattle salt meal and molasses, and planting other grasses.

"There has been more rye grass planted this year than in the past five years," Dorsett said. "There is no hay available and the producers are trying to stretch what they bought last year."

Because hay is short, Dorsett said prices are rapidly climbing to $15 to $20 higher than they were last year.

"The price has been steadily escalating since August," Dorsett said. "If a man had a full barn of hay right now, he would make a fortune in no time."

Most producers are going to try to plant and harvest hay this year so they won't be in the same situation next year, he said.

Buehring said some cattle are in poor condition and won't sell well when it comes time to market them.

"Late re-breeding is a possibility, but not many calves will go to market unless there is a warm spring," he said. "This is a bottom-line, nip-and-tuck deal. If the mothers aren't getting enough protein, calves' weights are going to be down and that's a loss of money."

The following specific livestock, crop and weather conditions were reported by district Extension directors:

PANHANDLE: Soil moisture is short. Range cattle good, receiving supplemental feed. Wheat dormant and making little growth. Land preparation for spring planting moving ahead of schedule.

SOUTH PLAINS: Soil moisture short to very short. Livestock still requiring supplemental feed. Dry weather limiting pastures, small grains. Beet harvest winding up this week. Preparing land for next year's crops.

Mexican 'Zapatistas' appear to be home-grown revolutionary group

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico (AP) - The rebel group that seized city halls in surprise attacks on New Year's day appears to be a home-grown group of admirers of Mexican revolutionary Emiliano Zapata, human rights leaders and academics said Wednesday.

"They are not guerrillas. They are Zapatista revolutionaries," said Andres Aubre, a researcher with the Institute of Anthropological Research for the Mayan region.

"All of their texts use the vocabulary of the Mexican revolution."

"We say 'enough,'" the Zapatista Army for the National Liberation said in its first declaration of war against the army and the government of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

"There is no time, nor energy to wait for others to take care of our problems. We have organized ourselves and have decided to make our demands with arms just as the greatest sons of Mexico have done throughout history," it said.

Aubre and others who work with indigenous people in this southern state of Chiapas rejected suggestions the rebels are Guatemalan rebels who have been in a civil war at home for more than 30 years.

Local media have quoted residents in some of the towns seized as saying the rebels have Guatemalan features and Guatemalan accent.

"First of all their declarations are very Mexican," said Aubre. "And how do you tell the difference between a Guatemalan and a Chiapan. They are all Mayan."

He said everytime there is an insurrection in Mexico, the government blames foreign influence.

WASHINGTON - President Clinton may let his plan to overhaul the nation's welfare system slip this year while he pursues health care reform, administration officials and welfare experts say.

UNDATED - A storm that piled up snow and ice 2 feet deep in the Northeast left vacationers stranded in Florida today.

WASHINGTON - MCI Communications Corp.'s decision to cut local phone companies out of MCI's long-distance calling network is in line with a push by federal policy makers to expand telecommunications competition.

UNDATED - A $590 annual increase in the cost of a federal license for dealing guns wouldn't put Frank Kendrick out of business. But the Houston manufacturer and part-time dealer of competition pistols said some friends who hold licenses to obtain discounts probably wouldn't pay the higher fee.

NEW YORK - When Fernando Mateo began selling carpets on the Lower East Side 17 years ago, he made a promise: "If God gave me health and success, I would come back and help my community in any way that I could." Today, Mateo is fulfilling that promise with Goods for Guns. The idea: Turn in a gun to the police, and get a $100 gift certificate, no questions asked.

AUSTIN -- The June 10, 1993, raid by authorities of the state treasury is at the center of a dispute between prosecutors and U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison. In her pre-trial hearing, Mrs. Hutchison has sought to suppress evidence taken during the raid.

AUSTIN -- A Republican state lawmaker Tuesday says the GOP has missed an opportunity in the state treasurer's race. Months before Democratic state Treasurer Martha Whitehead announced she would work to abolish her office, State Rep. Bill Siebert of San Antonio said he had the idea of running against her with the same proposal.

HOUSTON -- U.S. Senate candidate Jim Mattox thinks federal troops patrolling the U.S.-Mexico border is an answer to illegal immigration and crime along the boundary.

SPACE CENTER, Houston -- The Hubble Space Telescope repair squad did all it could to rehabilitate the nearsighted instrument last month. All there is to do now is wait.

HOUSTON -- The world's best-known fireman -- Paul "Red" Adair -- is hanging up his red coveralls. The 78-year-old veteran of more than 2,000 land and offshore oil well fires sold his Houston-based Red Adair Co. to Global Industries Ltd. of Lafayette, La., Tuesday for an undisclosed amount.

LAFAYETTE, La. -- William J. Dore, who bought Red Adair's wellfire-fighting company, chucked his job as a New Orleans insurance agent in the early 1970s and bought what was then a struggling offshore diving business.

AUSTIN -- Government watchdog groups say it makes sense for the Public Utility Commission to study customer savings that might come from mothballing the idle South Texas Project nuclear power plant, rather than restarting it.

SAN ANTONIO -- The State's second Class I horse race track is officially under construction after years of planning and months of financial maneuvering.

NEW YORK -- Airlines are curtailing smoking on more international flights -- restricting the last refuge for flying smokers -- in hopes of attracting more appreciative non-smoking passengers.

Participants in the horse program have the opportunity to compete in the Llano Estacado Horse Association and in District I judging and riding events.

Additional information may be obtained by calling Johnson at 364-3573 or Ed Crawford at 276-5718.

PUC asked to study South Texas plant

Watchdog groups suggest mothballing nuclear facility

AUSTIN (AP) - Government watchdog groups say it makes sense for the Public Utility Commission to study customer savings that might come from mothballing the idle South Texas Project nuclear power plant, rather than restarting it.

"What we're asking is to have a definitive study done by a neutral third party, and that's the PUC," said Tom Smith, director of Public Citizen.

Smith was joined Tuesday by representatives of Texas Citizen Action, Greenpeace and the Texas Nuclear Responsibility Network in calling for the study concerning the plant near Bay City. The facility hasn't produced electricity since February 1993 because of maintenance and equipment problems.

"It just makes sense to quit throwing good money after bad," Smith said.

Officials with Houston Lighting & Power Co., the plant's managing partner, have a Friday meeting scheduled with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. Other plant owners include Central Power and Light of Corpus Christi and the cities of Austin and San Antonio.

HL&P spokesman Graham Painter said his utility's officials believe the plant can be running again around the end of this month. He said HL&P's studies have indicated the plant should be operated because of savings to customers when compared with other fuels.

But Tim Curtis of Texas Citizen Action said HL&P should look at putting the money for power plant repairs into conservation and energy efficiency programs instead. He said that would eliminate the need for the power plant.

PUC spokesman Guillermo Garcia said the state agency's staff already has recommended a review of the South Texas Project to determine whether managers have acted prudently in operating it. Ratepayers don't have to foot the bill for imprudent costs.

Garcia said if the plant is not operating by the end of January, "then the economic viability question that the consumer groups are raising probably becomes a more important issue."

The three-member state regulatory commission, if it decides a review is warranted, would tell the staff what issues to include in it, Garcia said. "Stop the bleeding now," said

Curtis, citing a $462 million cost to replace steam generators at the plant.

Painter said plant repair costs total about $110 million and that while there have been indications of corrosion on the generators, HL&P is not immediately planning to replace them. He said HL&P is suing to try to ensure the company that made the generators would bear the cost of replacement if that becomes necessary.

Curtis also pointed to electric rate increases in Austin and San Antonio, saying consumers are paying not only for the non-producing South Texas Project but for replacement power.

Painter said that argument amounts to saying, "Because the customers have had to pay more for fuel, let's arrange for them to pay more all the time. It only makes sense to anti-nuclear activists."

NASA tests of Hubble continuing

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - The Hubble Space Telescope repair squad did all it could to rehabilitate the nearsighted instrument last month. All there is to do now is wait.

"We knew when we did our part that that was not enough. A home run does not win the ball game. You've got to win the game," astronaut Story Musgrave, who led Hubble repairs, said at a news conference Tuesday.

The $3 billion Hubble was hauled aboard the shuttle Endeavour Dec. 4 and four spacewalking astronauts spent the next week installing 11 new parts, including two sets of optics designed to correct the telescope's myopia. New guidance and power systems and an upgraded computer memory also were put in.

Hubble scientists say tests so far have found the instrument in perfect working order, but it will be late this month or early February before final results are in.

"We have good indication that it works," astronaut Claude Nicollier said. "I expect good news about the optical components, but we don't have the final answer yet."

The Hubble was launched in 1990 with a primary light-gathering mirror ground too flat along its edges, prohibiting the telescope from clearly seeing stars at the edge of the universe.

Aside from the two sets of corrective optics that were installed, the other repairs had been planned as part of maintenance scheduled throughout the Hubble's expected 15-year lifespan. NASA spent $629 million on the mission.

After a year of lost satellites and funding fights, a fully restored Hubble is likely to mean a badly needed image boost for NASA.

Endeavour commander Richard Covey said his seven-member crew didn't set out to repair the agency's reputation, but he hopes that will be a fringe benefit.

"That's a lot of baggage to carry with you," Covey said. "We had a task and that was to fix the Hubble. That was all we were thinking about during the course of the mission."

Number of dealers to decrease

By FRED BAYLES
AP National Writer

A nearly $600 increase in the cost of the federal license for firearms dealers wouldn't put Frank Kendrick out of business.

But the Houston gun manufacturer and part-time dealer in competition pistols says some acquaintances who hold licenses to take advantage of manufacturers' discounts and enjoy other conveniences probably wouldn't pay.

"Unless they buy a lot of guns," he said, "it won't be worth it anymore."

That is the goal of a proposal Tuesday by Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, who wants to see the fee for dealer licenses raised to $600 a year. Dealers who sell across their kitchen table or out of car trunks are often the source of powerful weapons for criminals, Treasury officials said.

The license fee was $10 a year before Congress increased it last year to $200 for a three-year license - or $66 a year - and $90 for a renewal.

Federal officials contend that raising the fee would reduce the 258,000 licensed dealers by 80 percent, cutting down on the flow of guns and making it easier to trace weapons and enforce existing laws.

While many dealers agree $10 was too low, they worry a sudden fee increase would drive many buyers and sellers into the unregulated sales arena of gun shows and want ads, making many more guns untraceable.

"Gun traceability is directly tied to quality gun dealers doing the paperwork for federal government," said Tom Koessl, a custom firearms dealer in Baileys Harbor, Wis. "If we eliminate 75 percent of existing gun dealers, they are just going to increase two- or threefold the number of people selling guns without any of their previous responsibilities."

Since 1968, anyone with a clean criminal record and no history of mental problems has been able to get a firearms license from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, an agency of the Treasury.

The license offers several advantages: the ability to ship guns across state lines, access to wholesale prices and federally endorsed legitimacy to buy and sell guns without going through constant background checks.

The one major requirement for those holding licenses is filing information on every gun they buy and sell. This paperwork allows ATF to trace firearms used in crimes.

A 1992 ATF study found 74 percent of those holding licenses conducted their gun business from their homes.

Two Hereford companies listed in Texas 'Top 500'

Two Hereford-based companies are listed in the top 500 businesses in Texas.

Based on annual sales, AZTX Cattle Company is No. 413 on the list. Barrett and Crofoot, LLP, is the 417th company listed.

Published by The Reference Press, Inc., of Austin, The Texas 500: Hoover's Guide to the Top Texas Companies, provides information on annual sales of companies, number of employees and corporate officers.

The largest company by sales is Exxon Corporation, which recorded $103,160,000,000 in business. No. 500 is H and H Meat Products Company, Inc. $67,000,000. AZTX sales are reported at $100 million and Barrett and Crofoot, $98,000,000.

In addition to the 500 top businesses, the reference book provides information on the wealthiest Texans, from a magazine, and large employers that are headquartered in other states.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Several weeks ago, "Clyde" and I celebrated our 20th wedding anniversary. We gave a small but elegant family party. It was spoiled for me because Clyde's sons insisted on adding their mother to the guest list.

Several days later, his ex-wife sent us an invitation to have dinner at her home, where she lives alone. Without consulting me, Clyde accepted for both of us. The next thing I knew, he invited her to OUR home for lunch.

This woman has confided to another family member that she still loves Clyde, which doesn't surprise me. Our marriage is solid, but I am troubled by his desire to include his former wife in our family get-togethers.

I know his ex-wife can be devious, but I don't want to provoke her children. It is apparent to me that they are trying to get their parents back together again. What should I do, Ann?—Feeling Insecure in Mexico City

DEAR MEXICO CITY: You need to have a frank talk with Clyde. Let him know you feel uncomfortable and the all-too-frequent get-togethers with his ex-wife. The boys are grown now, and there is no good reason for the ex to be included in your family celebrations.

It is up to your husband to ask his sons not to request that their mother be placed on future guest lists. If they want to see her, they should do so on their own time.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have a comment to make regarding the 17-year-old high school senior who wrote to you. He said he accidentally got his girlfriend pregnant without sexual intercourse by ejecting semen outside her body when they were "fooling around." Twenty-one years ago, my self-proclaimed virgin girlfriend said she had become pregnant under similar circumstances.

When I accompanied her to the doctor's office to verify her condition, we were informed that she was approximately six months along in her pregnancy. I had known her only three months.

As I stared ahead in shock, the doctor advised us not to rush into marriage. (I was 17, and she was 15). Three months later, she gave birth to an 8-pound baby girl, still insisting that she had never been with anyone else and the child was mine.

We went our separate ways, and five years later, she finally admitted who the real father was. So, Mr. 17-year-old From Buffalo, it appears that history has repeated itself—Portsmouth, N.H.

DEAR PORTSMOUTH: History did not repeat itself. Your story is very different from Buffalo's. You were lied to. He was unlucky.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I will soon be marrying a very sweet woman. I understand it is customary for the bridegroom to carry the bride through the doorway after the nuptial ceremonies and the reception.

I am of medium stature, and my bride is a wine barrel of a woman. "Lola" weighs close to 300 pounds. I'm afraid of making a total fool of myself if I try to carry her through the doorway. I know damn well I can't do it.

Would it be OK if I rented a wheelbarrow and made a lighthearted joke of it?—Skinny in Schenectady

DEAR SKINNY: Skip the lighthearted joke, and walk hand in hand with Lola across the threshold. She'll understand and appreciate it.

Lady Whitefaces claim district win

By JAY PEDEN
Sports Editor

The Lady Whitefaces basketball team gladly took what Caprock gave them Tuesday in Amarillo and picked up the program's first district win in nearly two years.

Hereford took a 20-6 lead in the first quarter and didn't look back, eventually winning the District 1-4A opener 74-49. After going winless in district last season, Hereford is 1-0 this year (7-11 overall).

In Hereford Tuesday, the boys' team fell 59-46 to an excellent Frenship team.

Girls' coach Eddie Fortenberry said that Caprock played right into Hereford's hands.

"They gave us basically what we wanted," he said. "It was like the old saying: 'Like taking candy from a baby.' They gave us the high post, and that's our offense. If you give us that, we'll score."

Hereford scorched the nets, shooting 56 percent from the floor. Mindi Davis led the team with 20 points, followed by Stephanie Wilcox with 17, Heather Hodges with 16 and Misty Dudley with 11.

The Lady Whitefaces also hit the boards: Wilcox had 11 rebounds, Hodges and Davis eight each. The team shot 68 percent from the foul line, a figure which Fortenberry said represents improvement.

In Hereford, the boys' team scored its points three at a time but still couldn't keep up with Frenship, which won 59-46 in a non-district game. Hereford hit five 3-point shots in the first half, but hit no 2-point shots until very late in the second quarter. By that time, Frenship led 30-18 after pulling away late in the first quarter.

More of Hereford's offense came alive in the second half. Runs of six and seven points by the Whitefaces

Dribbling in traffic

Hereford's Elijah Walker (center, white jersey) tries to dribble through two Frenship defenders during the game Tuesday in Whiteface Gymnasium. Looking on is Hereford's Jason Colston (right). Hereford lost the game, 59-46.

Hereford to host JV hoops tourney

Hereford will host a basketball tournament for boys' junior varsity and sophomore teams Thursday and Saturday.

Games will not be played Friday because of the varsity girls home date with Randall.

All JV games will be played in Whiteface Gym. Sophomore games will be played at Hereford High School on Thursday and in the junior high gym on Saturday.

Hereford's JV team will start by playing Dimmitt at 7:30 Thursday. Randall, Estacado, Pampa, Borger and Frenship round out the field.

The Hereford sophomores also will play at 7:30, against the Dalhart JV. Borger, Palo Duro, Tascosa, Caprock and Amarillo High round out the field.

A&M hit with probation

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) - Texas A&M's athletics program today was placed on five years probation by the NCAA and its football team was barred from television and bowl appearances for one year.

The NCAA found that players were paid for work that was not actually performed, that prospective student-athletes improperly were given financial aid, that athletes received improper extra benefits and that the school shows a "lack of institutional control" in its athletics program which had been involved in an infractions case in 1988.

"While the university administration is committed to compliance, it is apparent that some alumni and student-athletes still believe they can violate NCAA rules with impunity," the NCAA Committee on Infractions said.

"What is even more unfortunate is that the alumnus who was involved (See AGGIES, Page 5)

THE ROADS OF TEXAS is the culmination of a mammoth project that has involved many individuals for over two years. When you get your copy of THE ROADS OF TEXAS you'll wonder how you ever traveled the state without it.

This 172 page atlas contains maps that show the complete Texas road system (all 284,000 miles) plus just about every city and community! Texas A&M University Cartographics Laboratory staff members produced the maps, based on county maps from the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation. The details shown are amazing—county and local roads, lakes, reservoirs, streams, dams, historic sites, pumping stations, golf courses, cemeteries, mines and many other features too numerous to list.

Washington fires Petitbon; Atlanta sends Glanville packing 'Skins want Cowboys' offensive coordinator

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

Nearly a year after defensive coordinator Dave Wannstedt left Dallas to coach the Chicago Bears, the Cowboys may be on the verge of losing offensive mastermind Norv Turner.

The Washington Redskins, only a matter of hours after firing first-year coach Richie Petitbon, received permission Tuesday from Cowboys owner Jerry Jones to interview Turner.

"I'd be awfully interested, and again you still want to sit down and talk about specifics and details and all of those things, but it sure seems like a great opportunity," Turner said after learning of Washington's interest. "If I am contacted, I certainly am interested."

That hadn't happened by Tuesday night, but appears to be a certainty. Cowboys spokesman Rich Dalrymple said he expected the Redskins to interview Turner next weekend.

"The interview will not take away from the Cowboys' preparation for the playoffs," Jones said.

Dallas has a first-round bye next weekend.

Turner and Washington general manager Charley Casserly chatted two weeks ago on the field at Texas Stadium prior to the Cowboys' 38-3 victory over the Redskins.

Meanwhile, Turner also appears to be on the short list in Atlanta, where the Falcons fired Jerry Glanville on Tuesday.

Additionally, Houston Oilers defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan, who stirred controversy this weekend by punching offensive coordinator Kevin Gilbride on the sidelines Sunday, said he is interested in both openings.

"I'd like to talk to anybody who has a head coaching job available," Ryan told the Houston Chronicle in an interview published today.

Ryan, who last coached Philadelphia, has made no secret about his ambition to become a head coach again. Some NFL observers say he ruined his chances with Sunday's nationally televised slugging incident.

Petitbon, whose success as defensive coordinator helped the Redskins to three Super Bowls, was let go a year after he succeeded Joe Gibbs. Wracked by injuries and age, Washington - which began the season with a stunning 35-16 upset of defending Super Bowl champion Dallas - finished 4-12 for its worst showing in three decades.

"With regret and after much thought, I have decided to release Richie Petitbon as head coach of the Washington Redskins," owner Jack Kent Cooke said in a statement after meeting with the coach for more than an hour.

"It was a done deal," said the 55-year-old Petitbon, a veteran of 35 years in the NFL as a player and coach. Asked if he thought he could have changed Cooke's mind, Petitbon said no.

"Personally, I would have liked more time, but that's not my call," he said. "When you get into this business, as a player, you have to be prepared to be cut."

"As a coach, you have to be prepared to be fired. It's not an easy business."

pulled them within eight points twice in the third quarter, but Frenship answered by hitting some big shots and a lot of free throws. Frenship was 20-of-24 from the free throw line, while Hereford had only 10 opportunities and hit six.

"We just had an off night shooting the ball," coach Randy Dean said. "We had some really good opportunities in the first half, but our failure to convert inside hurt us real bad."

"We were right on the verge of getting back in it all the way through," Dean said, adding it was "innopportune turnovers, and the shooting" that kept the Herd from coming all the way back.

Hereford fell to 5-13, while Frenship improved to 17-3.

Hereford was led by Benton Buckley's 12 points, and Jason Colston added 10. For Frenship, Damon Harris had 20 points, including 12-of-13 from the line.

The girls' offensive performance was better than Fortenberry expected, he said, considering point guard Brittney Binder is out for two weeks with a shin injury. He said the win could give the Herd confidence going into Friday's game with Randall.

"Friday's going to be tough," he said. "If we can get over the mental block of, 'Hey, we're not supposed to beat Randall,' we'll be all right."

The girls will host the Lady Raiders at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Whiteface Gym. The junior varsity games will start at 6. These times have been switched from the way they were on the original schedule.

The boys will play Estacado at 7:30 Friday in Lubbock. Only the varsity will play. The boys' district opener will be Jan. 14, when Borger comes to Hereford.

The boys' junior varsity team, playing before the varsity game, came from behind to beat the Frenship JV 62-54. Hereford trailed 42-37 going into the final period, but the Herd's press got to Frenship.

Todd Dudley scored 14 of his 26 points in the fourth quarter, and Brian Torres scored nine of his ten, including two straight jump shots to give Hereford the lead. Gregg Kalka added eight points for the Herd JV.

Before the JV game, the Herd sophomores played Palo Duro and lost 42-32. Brian Betzen led Hereford with six points.

In Amarillo, the girls' JV buried Caprock 50-15. Julie Cole led Hereford with 16 points, Deanna McCracken added nine and Beth Weatherly had eight.

in these violations was a prominent member of the university's athletics support group. What is particularly troubling is that his actions led student-athletes to violate NCAA rules and the Texas A&M 'Code of Honor.'

A&M officials met with the NCAA for 4-1/2 hours on Nov. 14 and proclaimed the school's innocence to wrongdoing in allegations that involved nine players, including star running back Greg Hill.

The Aggies said in a 1,227-page response it should not be held accountable for the actions of the players during their summer jobs.

An investigation revealed that the nine players received payment from an A&M booster for work they did not perform.

Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum dismissed two of the players accused in the case - wide receiver Percy Singleton and lineman Darius Smith.

The other players were declared ineligible for portions of last season for accepting payment from Dallas businessman Warren Gilbert. Singleton later said he also received rent money from Gilbert.

Although it considered the violations major, the NCAA said it chose not to impose even stricter penalties because the only one booster was involved, because the school president has taken over supervising the athletics program in the wake of the earlier infractions and because A&M was prompt and thorough in its investigation after the violations were disclosed.

A&M could have lost expense-paid recruiting visits, could have been banned from off-campus recruiting and could have been ordered to fire staffers.

SuperSonics eclipse Suns

By The Associated Press

The fact that the NBA playoffs are still 3-1/2 months away doesn't stop the Seattle SuperSonics from looking ahead to them.

The Sonics got an important road victory and grabbed a two-game lead over defending Western Conference champion Phoenix with a 112-106 decision over the Suns Tuesday night.

Elsewhere in the NBA, it was New York 100, Orlando 95; Miami 100, New Jersey 83; Atlanta 133, Charlotte 94; Indiana 104, Cleveland 99; Chicago 97, Detroit 91; Houston 106, Portland 95; San Antonio 107, Philadelphia 84; the Los Angeles Lakers 119, Denver 118; and Golden State 115, Sacramento 112.

Rockets 106, Trail Blazers 95. Hakeem Olajuwon scored 12 of his 33 points during Houston's 22-5 third-quarter spurt.

Super Bowl could become all-Texas tangle

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

A Dallas-Buffalo repeat in the Super Bowl? The teams that met in Pasadena last January (52-17 Cowboys) enter the NFL playoffs as the top seeds in each conference.

But look out for the Houston Oilers. Not only are they playing at least as well as the Bills, but they're bickering a lot better, making the first all-Texas Super Bowl a very real possibility - assuming Emmitt Smith returns in two weeks from his separated shoulder.

That could make for a fun week in Atlanta leading up to the Jan. 30 title game.

The Oilers, who will be off next week, begin the playoffs at home a week from Sunday.

Whether they can repeat their performance of Sunday night, when two separate fights broke out between assistant coaches, is another question. The fights break the record of one set in 1989 - the season of the truly bickering Bills - when Buffalo assistants Nick Nicolau and Tom Bresnahan slugged it out in the locker room.

These were in public view - Charlie Baggett and Frank Bush fought to a draw on the undercard in the press box, and Buddy Ryan hit Kevin Gilbride with a right cross in the nationally televised feature before referee Curtis Duncan stopped the fight.

"They may go to the Super Bowl if their coaches don't kill each other," Jets quarterback Boomer Esiason said after the 24-0 beating by the Oilers.

The biggest problem for Houston, which started 1-4 and then became the first team since the 1973 Dolphins to finish the regular season with 11 straight wins, is winning in Buffalo, where the elements cause trouble for a run-and-shoot team that plays indoors.

That was the site of their last loss, a 35-7 thrashing on Oct. 11, and was also the place where they blew a 35-3 lead in last year's playoffs. Because of it, owner Bud Adams hired Ryan to run the defense, turned Pardee into an impartial arbitrator...

And also turned the Houston defense into a major force.

Or, as Joe Theismann put it Sunday night: "Buddy Ryan is a great coach even if he is a jerk at times."

Here's a look at the playoffs, narrowing down the legitimate contenders to Houston, Buffalo and Kansas City in the AFC; Dallas, San Francisco and New York in the NFC.

NFC first, since it's won nine straight Super Bowls.

NFC

Jimmy Johnson feels good about the Cowboys' chances, even though he's taken to whining lately about injuries.

Has he checked with Don Shula in Miami lately, or Rich Kotite in Philadelphia? Or even Dan Reeves, whose New York Giants almost beat them despite the absence of deep threat Mike Sherrard, and a banged-up Jumbo Elliott and Michael Brooks?

Still, Dallas (12-4) has home field and remains the NFL's best team on paper if they have Smith back in two weeks when they play either the Giants or Green Bay Packers.

"The doctors are talking like I'll be out three to four weeks, but it will be seven to 10 days," Smith said Monday, after a night in the hospital resting the right shoulder he separated in the 16-13 overtime win over the Giants that won the division and got home field for the Cowboys.

This week's games are Minnesota

(9-7) at the Giants (11-5) and Green Bay (9-7) at Detroit (10-6) in the second game of a doubleheader - the Lions beat the Packers 30-20 Sunday to win the NFC Central.

If the Packers win, they go to Dallas and the Minnesota-New York winner goes to San Francisco, West champion and second seed. If the Lions win, they go to San Francisco and the Vikings or Giants play the Cowboys.

The logical seeding would be New York at San Francisco and Green Bay at Dallas - the Giants, Cowboys and 49ers are the only teams with realistic chances to get to Atlanta. Despite the loss Sunday, a lot of the Giants felt more confident afterwards.

"Everybody was trying to tell us we couldn't play with them, but we knew," said safety Greg Jackson, whose tackle on Smith at the end of a 46-yard run caused the shoulder injury.

The Giants-Cowboys shows the making of a class rivalry - unlike the one between feuding Houston coaches.

Jim Jeffcoat of Dallas, for example, had a couple of chances to body slam his longtime adversary Phil Simms and didn't. "It seems like I've been playing against him forever," Simms said after the two exchanged a hug and a handshake after the game.

And the Giants refrained from trying to do further harm to Smith after he injured his shoulder. "They respected me," he said. "They helped me off the ground. They knew I was in pain. They're a class act."

AFC

Buffalo (12-4) and Houston (12-4)

Birthdays, special days, a year-around remembrance? Send them The Hereford Brand, a gift that reminds the recipient of your love and concern about 255 times a year!

are the clear favorites although Kansas City (11-5) could be a spoiler if Joe Montana stays healthy and gets hot. The Chiefs' biggest weakness is what used to be their strength - they don't have the big smashmouth back like Christian Okoye and Barry Word to change up on the slashing attack built around Marcus Allen.

The Chiefs could have trouble with enigmatic Pittsburgh (9-7) Saturday because of that - the quick but undersized Steelers defense can best be attacked with a 250-pound rusher.

"Now that we're in the playoffs, we hopefully can get straightened out," says Rod Woodson, the Steelers' All-Pro cornerback. It took a tongue-lashing at halftime by linebacker Greg Lloyd to wake up Pittsburgh against Cleveland on Sunday and qualify for this game.

The other AFC game this week is Sunday - the Broncos (9-7) at the Raiders (10-6), reprising Sunday's 33-30 overtime win that got Los Angeles into the playoffs.

That was the Raiders' eighth win in its last nine games against the Broncos. It also was the 17th game in their last 21 meetings decided by less than a touchdown and the sixth of those 21 to go into overtime.

Buffalo and Houston get a week off.

If Kansas City wins, it goes to Houston and the Raiders-Broncos winner goes to Buffalo. If the Steelers beat the Chiefs, then they go to Buffalo while the winner of the Raiders-Broncos game goes to Houston.

In any case, Buffalo and Houston will be favored to meet in the AFC title game in Buffalo.

Perfect - it's where the collapse last year got owner Bud Adams to hire Buddy Ryan.

And set up the fisticuffs.

Life story told for Pioneer Study Club

Hester West Moore, author of Kept In His Care, told of her life when members of the Pioneer Study Club met recently in the home of Mary Panceria.

Mrs. Moore explained that she was born in Floydada in 1908 during a snowstorm. She attended Baylor University School of Nursing and went to China as a missionary where she became a prisoner of war. She returned home to marry Ian Moore and they reared foster children. Her book is available for purchase at King's Manor Retirement Home where Mrs. Moore is a resident. Members provided homemade candy and baked goods for the meeting which were served with tea by the hostess and co-hostess, Mary Jane Burrus. Before the conclusion of the meeting, plates of holiday treats were arranged which were shared with shut-ins and acquaintances.

Guests attending were Sidney Kerr, Genevieve Veigel and Hester Mobré. Members present were Rosemary Thomas, Catherine Gripp, Helen Langley, Burrus, Maria Escamillia, Billee Johnson, Nell Culpepper, Willie Wimberly, Virginia Wood, Gladys Miller and Panceria.

Eunie West is honored at birthday celebration

In honor of Eunie West's 90th birthday Dec. 31, 1993, a party was held for her at the Hereford Care Center.

The event was hosted by her children: Bill and Dixie West and Robert and Elsie Lloyd, all of Hereford; Odie Rohde, Las Vegas, Nev.; and Wanda Riddle, Lubbock. Also, assisting with the party were the honoree's two granddaughters, Beth Altman of Hereford and Vicki Peterson of Lamesa.

The honoree was born in Gillespie County in 1903. Eunie Lesly married Lewis West in 1922 in Wheeler and the couple moved to Hereford in 1948.

All of Mrs. West's sisters attended the party. They included Ruby Hickman of Hereford; Ola Walcott, a resident of the Hereford Care Center; Elsie Meason, Plainview; and Vohndell Burroughs, Reno, Nev. Also, present was her brother, Luther Lesly of Hereford.

Several of Mrs. West's 13 grandchildren were in attendance as were some of her 20 great-grandchildren. Also, present was the honoree's great-great-grandchild, Sawyer McCracken of Hereford. Five generations of the family were represented.

Other out of town guests were Christine Zornes, Clydie Black and Mary Moseley, all of Friona; Leslie McCain, Bovina; and Claudie Hill, Littlefield.

Five generations present

Hints from Heloise

Dear Heloise: I bake a lot of cakes and have several plastic cake-keepers stacked in my cabinets.

Sometimes they become compressed and very difficult to separate. I remembered that heat makes things expand and cold makes things contract, so I put the stack in the freezer for about 10 minutes and they separated easily! — Jennifer Coffey, Missouri City, Texas

Now aren't you smart! I'm sure there are a lot of folks out there who've had the same problem. Thanks for the hint. — Heloise

SHEET EXTENSIONS

Dear Heloise: When I buy sheets for my queen-size bed, I sew about 12 to 14 inches of extra material to the foot of the sheet to be tucked under. The sheet never pulls out. — Helen M., Huntington Beach, Calif.

Public is invited to meeting

Rachael Ann Caraffa of Santa Fe, Argentina will be the guest speaker at the Hereford Flame Fellowship meeting planned at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Hereford Community Center.

Rachael is the daughter of former Hereford residents, Milford and Avis Grisham who are missionaries in Argentina. The speaker was born in Africa where her parents were missionaries who later moved to Santa Fe, Argentina where Rachael was raised and then married Julio Caraffa.

Hamilton, Minchew tie for Toastmasters honor

Dee Hamilton and Linda Minchew tied for best speaker honors when the Hereford Toastmasters Club met recently at the Ranch House with Rick Jackson presiding.

During the business meeting, it was announced that the club's annual installation meeting and family night is scheduled at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Hereford Community Center.

Joe Weaver gave the pledge and Mike Harris gave the invocation.

Toastmaster was Joe Weaver; timer, Joe Don Cummings; "ah" counter, Jigger Rowland; grammarian, Sharon Ruland.

Speakers and their topics included: Charles Minchew, "Organize Your Speech"; Linda Minchew, "Keeping It Straight"; Dee Hamilton, "Don't Think Of Buxom Blondes"; Dave Kimmel, "Apply Your Skills"; Sharon Cramer, "Apply Your Skills"; Wayne Winget, "Vice President of What?"; and Rick Jackson, "President of Hereford Toastmasters."

Chris Leonard served as general evaluator.

Others attending were Jim Muldoon and Jim Gaynon, both of Clovis, N.M., and Don Graham and Bryce Garrett, both of Dimmitt.

Installation Banquet set Thursday

The Women's Division's "Woman of the Year" will be announced during the organization's Annual Installation Banquet and quarterly meeting planned at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Hereford Community Center.

To make reservations for the dinner, call the Deaf Smith County Chamber of Commerce office at 364-3333.

NEW YORK (AP) - Christian Slater has it tough.

"It's always difficult or nerve-racking when someone like Christy Turlington is doing it with you," Slater told Harper's Bazaar magazine, which features the supermodel resting her head on the actor's shoulder on this month's cover.

"My palms sweat a bit. She's just incredibly beautiful and wonderful and sweet," said Slater, who stars in Barry Levinson's upcoming movie, tentatively titled "Jimmy Hollywood."

With school violence increasing across Texas, the State Board of Education will begin the new year with a comprehensive look at the problem.

At its January meeting, the board plans to vote on a "Safe School Checklist," required by a new state law to help schools assess their strengths and weaknesses.

Education officials say they haven't collected statewide information on incidents of school violence, but the Texas Education Agency is surveying school districts to try to get solid figures.

QUESTION: What is the difference between rabbits and hares?
ANSWER: Though we call the long-eared mammals rabbits, most are hares and there is a distinct difference.

Hares are larger than rabbits, have longer ears and hind legs, and have a digestive system that differs in structure. The young are born with their eyes open and able to run around shortly after birth.

Rabbits tend to live in groups, in complex burrows. The young are born naked, blind and helpless.

Rabbits include the cottontails, swamp rabbits and the domesticated Belgian rabbit.

Hares include the snowshoe, arctic hare, European common hare and the "jackrabbit."

I have fond memories of hunting the jack where I grew up near San Angelo. We used to hunt this speedy animal at night in wheat fields and with dogs during the day.

My greyhound dog caught many of these elusive hares. The hound usually prevailed if the ground was soft, as plowed soil. However, the dog was no match for the "jackrabbit" on hard ground and roads.

The hare is one of only three animals whose hind feet hit the ground in front of the forefeet when running. The other two are the cheetah and the greyhound.

If your backyard has a scattering of eggs at Easter time, rest assured that they were probably laid by hares, not rabbits.

Texas business strong in '93, NAFTA may give boost to new year

By SUSAN HIGHTOWER
 AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) - Despite a worrisome downturn in oil prices, 1993 was strong for Texas business, as the state's economy grew faster than the nation's and many looked forward to a boon from the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"Far and away it was a net positive year, with NAFTA outweighing everything else," Baylor University economist Ray Perryman said.

The free trade agreement, which passed in November and takes effect Jan. 1, links the United States, Canada and Mexico in a single market, eliminating tariffs and other trade barriers over the next 15 years.

While some critics contend the pact will lure U.S. companies to Mexico, many Texas and national leaders hail it as good news for the state.

"It's got to be a huge shot in the arm in small business here in the state of Texas," said Robert Howden, Texas director of the National Federation of Independent Business.

The year was one of solid growth in Texas, seasoned with several corporate relocation announcements. Unemployment slowly declined and pretax personal income rose. Employment should finish about 2 percent higher for 1993, while sales climbed in all major markets, Perryman said.

Real estate strengthened until average existing home prices returned to their peak level of the mid-1980s, said James Christian, an economist who heads Texas A&M University's Real Estate Center.

"You kind of felt like popping the champagne and saying, 'It's over! We're back!'" Christian said.

"I think that kind of makes for an interesting perspective on where the state is going. Our wounds of the middle-1980s have largely healed. The process of healing has largely changed the structure of the state economy in many parts of the state," from dependence on natural resources such as oil and agriculture to a diversified economy that includes services, computers and biotechnology, Christian said.

"We're a couple of beats ahead of the national economy in getting ready and building our platform in growth and the global economy."

Negatives for Texas business in 1993 included cancellation of the superconducting super collider, defense cuts and recent weakness in the oil market.

Congress killed the $11 billion collider under construction near Waxahachie in October, costing about 2,400 jobs.

Defense cutbacks were not as significant in 1993 as in 1992, the economists said. "Texas did get a lick, but it was more like a glancing blow," Christian said.

The oil industry began the year healthier, with crude prices around $19 a barrel. However, prices began dropping in the fall and have plunged since late November, when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries unexpectedly decided against reducing oil output in the winter. Prices for U.S. oil have fallen to their lowest levels in five years, dipping below $14 a barrel.

"We still remain hopeful that natural gas will be a prime fuel, and that modern technology will cut costs substantially in both production and in finding new production. But it's going to take correction in price before we can move substantially in those fronts, and that didn't happen, of course. It went the other way," said Julian Martin, executive vice president of the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

Martin said he believes prices will ease up to $15 after the start of the year.

Brian Schaible, spokesman for the Texas Railroad Commission, said oil production likely will be down in 1993, compared to 1992, while gas production, prices and prospects were up.

Farmers and ranchers had a strong year overall, Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry said. The year's cotton crop is shaping up as among the best ever, and grapefruit, pecan and corn were very strong. Wheat production and peanuts were down, Perry said.

Austin and San Antonio were at the forefront of the state's overall growth, led in part by San Antonio's tourism and electronics and high-technology in Austin.

The state suffered a temporary black eye when Williamson County commissioners voted against offering tax breaks to Apple Computer Inc., jeopardizing an $80 million customer support center expected to bring 1,700 jobs to the area north of Austin by the end of the decade. But the commissioners - who objected to Apple's benefits policy for unmarried employees, including gays - reversed their vote a week later.

Austin-based Dell Computer Corp., the nation's fifth-largest PC company, reported its first-ever loss in the second quarter. Dell returned to profitability in the third quarter, but said it would not meet its $3 billion sales target.

"It was a year of transition. We had problems, as everyone knows, in the notebook area of our business, and that caused a dramatic lag in our performance," company spokesman Roger Rydell said.

In other Texas technology developments, Houston's Compaq Computer Corp., the world's third-largest PC maker, outperformed its rivals after a round of price-cutting that Compaq started in the summer of 1992.

San Antonio-based Southwestern Bell Corp. and Cox Cable Communications agreed to form a $4.9 billion partnership to spur faster, two-way voice, video and data communications.

And Texas Instruments said in August it would build a $1 billion semiconductor factory in Dallas, after announcing in February it would eliminate 875 jobs, mostly through layoffs at plants where it makes computer chips for the military.

The year was marred by turbulence for another of the state's leading industries: its airlines.

Houston-based Continental Airlines emerged from 2 1/2 years of Chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization in April but continued to struggle for profits, announcing in August that it would cut 2,500 jobs.

An Austin drama was played out in a Galveston courtroom as Continental and Northwest Airlines sued giant American Airlines, seeking $1 billion in damages for alleged predatory pricing. The jury ruled in favor of American in July, after a 21-day trial.

Fort Worth-based American suffered a setback this fall, however, when its flight attendants' union struck over failed contract negotiations.

The 21,000-member Association of Professional Flight Attendants called the walkout just before November's peak Thanksgiving travel season, crippling the carrier for five days, until President Clinton got the two sides to agree to binding arbitration.

Trying to avoid Clinton's personal, financial life

White House on PR offensive

By TOM RAUM

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House is on a New Year's public relations offensive, hoping a blizzard of activity will divert attention from topics it wants to leave back in 1993.

In this first working week of the year, President Clinton has been everywhere: prepping for next week's NATO summit and trip to Moscow, ordering an investigation of Cold War radiation experiments, praising the intelligence community at the CIA and getting a top-secret briefing, planning strategy for advancing health-care legislation.

On Thursday, he goes to Milwaukee for a foreign-policy address. On Sunday, he's off to Brussels. Then to Prague. Then to Moscow. Then to Minsk. Then to Geneva.

The activity is helping the White House force to the back pages questions about Clinton's personal and financial life that erupted in late December. The allegations frustrated the administration's efforts in the closing weeks of 1993 to trumpet his first-year accomplishments.

"The fact that we were unable to spend the holidays bragging about his record does not deter him," said White House political adviser Paul Begala.

White House aides deny being manipulative. But they agree it doesn't hurt to keep attention focused where they want it focused.

And at that, they've been fairly successful.

Officials worked hard over the past few days to minimize exposure to questions on the controversy over the Clintons' Whitewater Development Co. partnership with the owner of a failed Arkansas savings and loan.

The Whitewater controversy, and salacious allegations by several former members of then-Gov. Clinton's security detail involving marital infidelity, put Clinton uncomfortably on the defensive last month.

The White House retains considerable power to shape and steer messages. After all, spin control was one reason David Gergen - who helped guide messages in two Republican administrations - was hired as a top White House strategist.

The White House has been using all the tricks of the presidential trade to get across the image of an activist president, hard at work.

Growing public alarm about radiation experiments conducted by federal agencies in the 1940s and 1950s was a ready-made issue for the White House - enabling it to demonstrate concern for victims and to criticize two Republican administrations at the same time.

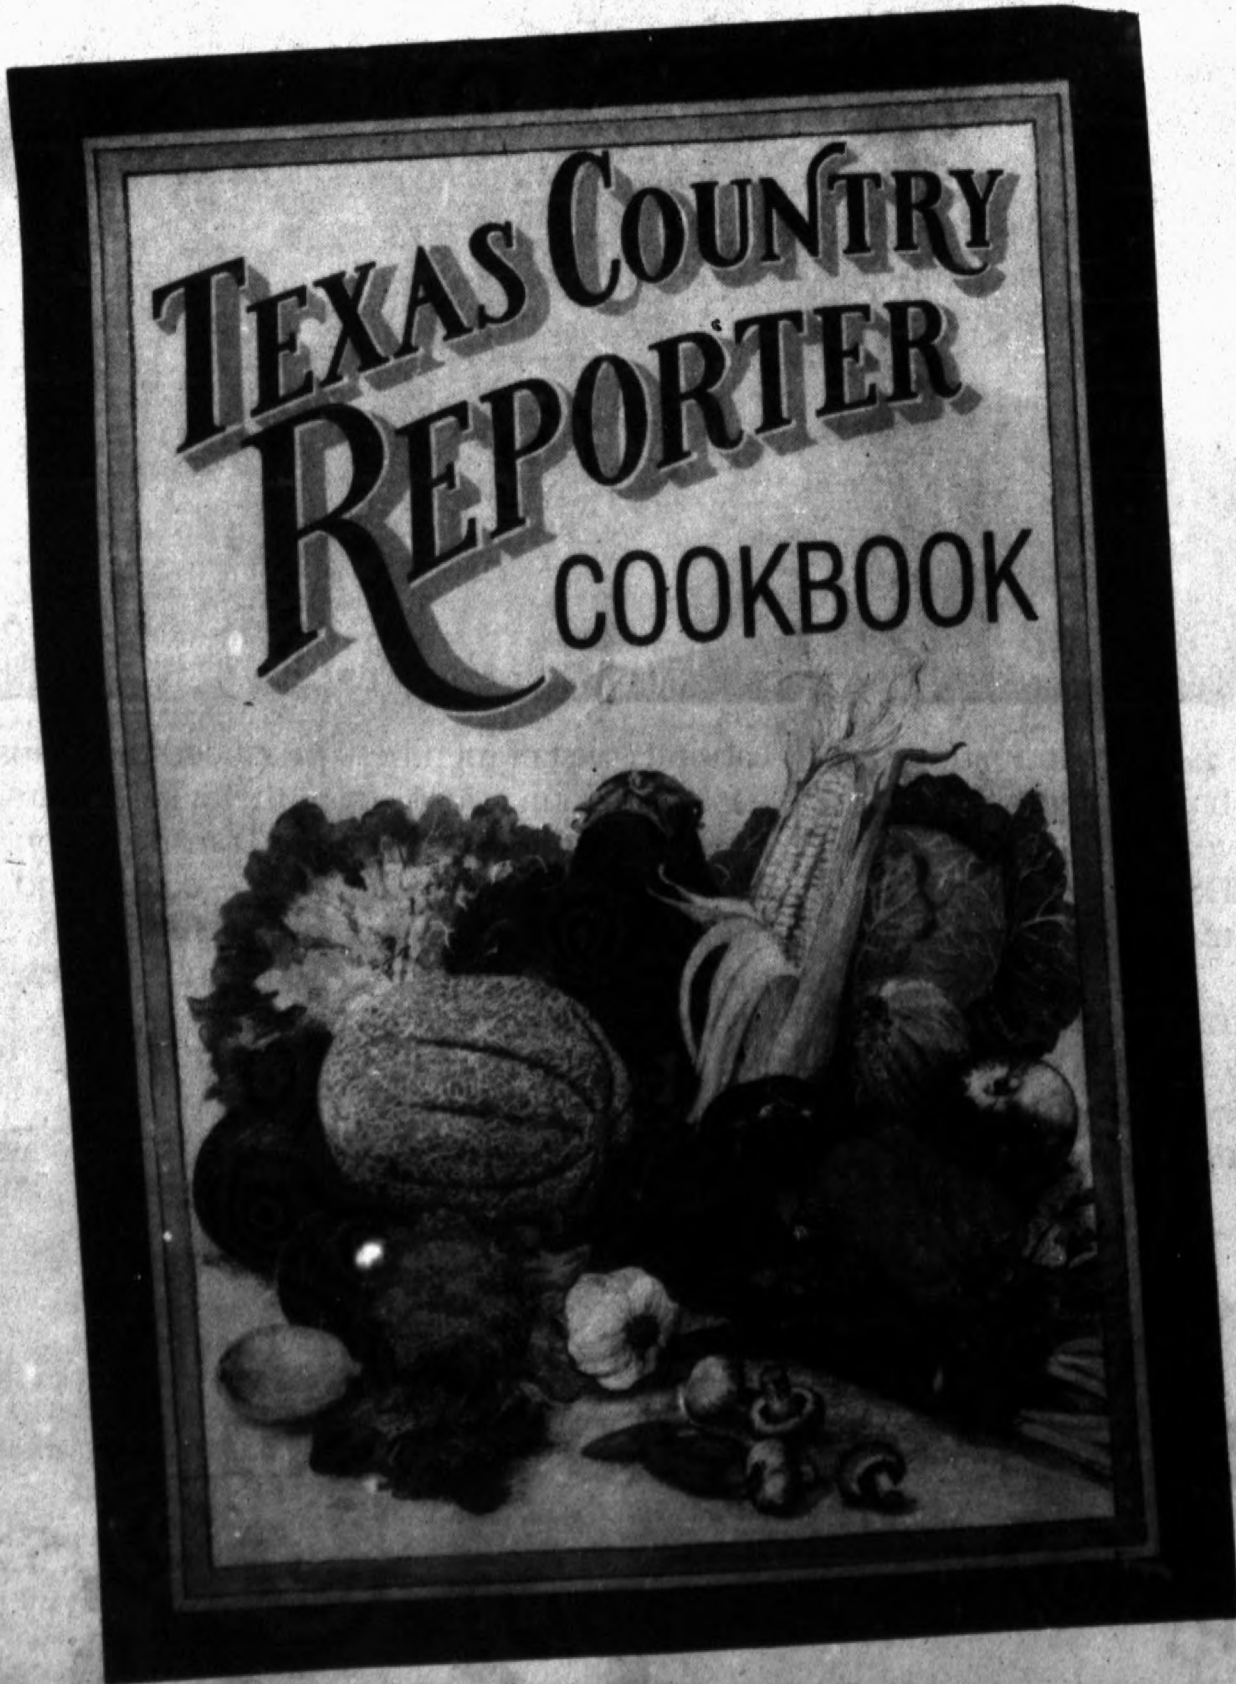

"Two administrations have failed to answer these questions," White House communications director Mark Gearan said. "And we intend to step up to the plate and to do our very best to get to the bottom of the facts at hand."
