Imported oil

HOUSTON (NYT) — Imports accounted for 52 percent of the United States' oil consumption in May, or 8.5 million barrels a day, the American Petroleum Institute said Wednesday.

May was the third month in the last 12 in which the nation has met less than half its needs from domestic production, according to the institute, which is the industry's main trade association.

Now in custody

DALLAS (AP) — Since federal regulators forced Donald Dixon from the controls of Vernon Savings and Loan Association in 1986, seven of the thrift's former officers and employees have been convicted on bank fraud charges.

On Thursday, Dixon himself surrendered to the FBI on 38 counts including conspiracy, fraud and furthering racketeering. He could face 190 years in prison and a $9.5 million fine if convicted of all counts.

Also Thursday, former Vernon Chairman Woody F. Lemons surrendered at the federal prison in Fort Worth to begin a 30-year sentence for his part in the $1.3 billion collapse.

Taylor released

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Elizabeth Taylor was released from the hospital Thursday night after a two-month stay in which the celebrated actress nearly lost her life, her publicist said.

"She's so happy to be going home; she's very excited," said spokeswoman Chen Sam. Miss Taylor, 58, will go to her home in Beverly Hills "to recuperate for a couple of months," Ms. Sam said.

House hearing

Somers

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Actress Suzanne Somers told lawmakers that alcoholism crushed her self-esteem as a child and would have made her entertainment career impossible had she not sought professional help.

"If you don't feel good about yourself, you can't win," Miss Somers told the House Subcommittee on Substance Abuse on Wednesday. She urged them to create programs to help children of alcoholics seek treatment.

She said she and members of her family would cower in a locked closet during her father's drunken rages.

Sobriety checkpoints legal

■ The Supreme Court Thursday upholds a Michigan court's ruling that checkpoints established to catch drunken drivers are necessary and don't violate Fourth Amendment freedoms.

By Dan Freedman
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Police checkpoints aimed at nabbing drunken drivers do not violate constitutional privacy guarantees, the Supreme Court ruled Thursday.

In a 6-3 decision, the court said the state's interest in cracking down on intoxicated drivers outweighs the "slight" inconvenience that motorists face in passing through police roadblocks.

The case involved a Michigan checkpoint program invalidated in lower state courts.

Thirty-one states, including California and New York, permit police to operate such checkpoints.The remaining states, including Texas and Washington, do not.

California and the Bush administration supported Michigan in its appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Six Michigan legislators filed suit against the program in state court in 1986. They argued that roadblocks violate Fourth Amendment guarantees against "unreasonable searches and seizures" because police require all drivers to stop, regardless of whether officers have "probable cause" to believe an individual driver is intoxicated.

The state responded that the roadblocks were necessary to maintain highway safety.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist, writing for the high court majority, said: "No one can seriously dispute the magnitude of the drunken driving problem or the Reaction to ruling mixed among officials, attorneys

Local law enforcement officials said they don't anticipate setting up sobriety checkpoints for motorists unless a need arises in light of Thursday's Supreme Court ruling that such practices do not violate privacy rights.

"If we feel we have a need, we are certainly going to (set up checkpoints)," said Lt. Jerry Morris of the Midland Police Department."(But) At this point we don't intend to do anything different than in the past," he added.

Morris said it has been more than 10 years since the department has set up checkpoints to weed out drunk drivers.

"We haven't because of the unfavorable rulings in the past," Morris said.

But Morris said he thinks Thursday's decision is reflective of the times. "Drinking and driving is totally unacceptable to the public at large," Morris said, adding that at one time in the past drunk driving was more permissible in the public's eye.

Fox family

Midland bird rehabilitator Midge Erskine is nurturing two orphaned baby gray foxes, which are to be returned to the wild. Meanwhile, five baby foxes, called cubs or pups, that likely are rabies carriers have been given away to families in the Midland-Odessa area. The pups were taken from a den in Crane County.

Keeping wild animals poses rabies threat

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

People who are harboring fur-bearing wildlife, particularly foxes and skunks, may be placing their lives and those of others in danger due to the rabies virus that is prevalent in some wild mammals.

Recently, someone who robbed a Crane County fox den of five baby foxes gave those pups to families in the Midland-Odessa area.

At least one pup already has bitten an Odessa woman and others, said Midland bird rehabilitator Midge Erskine. The woman had telephoned Ms. Erskine after she had called Odessa Animal Control, which referred her to Ms. Erskine, who learned of the robbing of the den earlier this spring, the bitting by the foxes, and the giving away of the pups.

"We are in a life-threatening situation," Ms. Erskine said Thursday. "This is life-and-death." The Odessa woman, whose name is unknown to Ms. Erskine, was to bring the fox to her Wednesday but did not. Afterward, Ms. Erskine

Bush returns to emotional issue of flag

■ A campaign theme, honoring the Stars and Stripes, is again unfurled as the president finds other issues more difficult to deal with.

By Matt Quinn
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Bush marked Flag Day Thursday with an early morning visit to the Vietnam War Memorial here as part of a new White House offensive in one of his most successful issues: honoring the Stars and Stripes.

Bush's return to the emotional flag controversy, which he stressed in his 1988 presidential campaign, comes at a time when the political ground may be shifting out from under him on other "hot button" political issues such as defense, taxes and abortion.

Said Democratic political consultant Geoffrey Garin: "One of the reasons Republicans are glomming onto the flag issue is they're losing control of the agenda on other fronts."

The White House flag campaign began within hours after Monday's Supreme Court ruling striking down a year-old law outlawing flag desecration. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater immediatly called for a constitutional amendment that would permit Congress and the states to enact such laws.

Tuesday, in a Rose Garden ceremony where he received a replica of the Iwo Jima Memorial, Bush said flag burning "endangers the fabric of our country" and urged Congress to approve the amendment by July 4.

With many Democrats opposed to the amendment on constitutional grounds, the Republican political apparatus swung into action.

Edward Rollins, co-chairman of the National Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, called the amendment an "excellent issue" for GOP candidates to use against their Democratic opponents this fall. Senate Republican leader Robert Dole said a vote against the amendment "would make a good 30-second spot" for GOP candidates.

At dawn Thursday Bush made an unexpected visit to the Vietnam War Me-

Crews attacking oil slick as parts of Mega Borg still burn

GALVESTON (AP) — Crews in the Gulf of Mexico battled a 30-mile oil slick from the still-burning supertanker Mega Borg as state officials geared up to unleash oil-eating bacteria on the crude.

Meanwhile, a Norwegian inquiry board learned there was trouble with one pump on the ship about six hours before the explosion rocked the tanker carrying 38 million gallons of oil.

Also, a pumpman testified that was he opening a valve when the blast ripped through the pump and engine room area last Friday.

Mosvold Rederi of Farfund, Norway, owners of the Mega Borg, already have spent $2 million for firefighting, salvage and pollution control efforts on the crippled vessel located 57 miles from Galveston, said Robert L. Klawetter, attorney for firm.

"It looks like the fire is being contained to a very small area in the engine room," Coast Guard spokesman Gene Maestas said.

Flames could be seen on the deck's rear section, and four fireboats showered the Mega Borg with water cannons. The rear section, shrouded in gray-brown smoke, continued to be awash.

Sound checks on the No. 4 tank Thursday determined there was 26 feet of oil in the tank. On Wednesday, sound checks showed there were 28 feet in the tank. But Coast Guard officials did not know how much oil remained in the tank. No other leaks have been found.

The 886-foot Mega Borg, which is carrying light African crude oil, already has lost about 3 million gallons of oil since the explosion, but most of it has burned off or evaporated.

About 12,000 gallons remained on the water Thursday, Coast Guard Capt. Thomas Greene said.

Salvage crews planned to begin transferring oil from the No. 4 cargo tank, where the leak occurred, to the No. 5 cargo tank, which is empty, Greene said. The effort is expected to stop the oil spilling from the vessel and cut off the fuel to the fire as well as help correct the listing of the ship.

"This could put the fire out," Greene said.

An oil slick stretched about 12 miles northwest of the ship, with scattered patches extending another 18 miles. It varied in width, but Coast Guard officials said they did not have any specific figures Thursday.

The previous day, the Coast Guard said the width of the slick stretched to 10 miles in spots.

PUPS: Animal activist concerned

became even more alarmed.

"Most of the mammals, particularly if they are a skunk, fox or bobcat coming out Crane County, probably carry rabies," Ms. Erskine said. "It's probably 95 percent sure it has got rabies. And foxes are natural carriers of rabies. They can carry rabies and not show the symptoms."

Rather than mere days, the incubation period for rabies in humans may be months or years, noted Karen Huffman, assistant director of Animal Control in Midland.

"The incubation period varies," she said. "You never know for sure."

A person who has been bitten by a rabid or suspected rabies-carrying animal can be injected with anti-rabies vaccines, which signal the body to build up antibodies to ward off the usually fatal disease.

"The too-late period is when you start exhibiting symptoms (of rabies)," said Ms. Huffman.

The virus, which destroys brain nerve cells, travels slowly though the body, which, Ms. Huffman said, is not alerted of the virus until it travels to the brain. Until then, "the body does not realize it (the virus) is there and is not building up antibodies."

If saliva from a rabid mammal gets into the eye of a person, the infected person can be in imminent danger.

"The eye is an extension of the brain," Ms. Huffman said. "You had better get to a doctor immediately." Otherwise, "you are a goner."

Symptoms of rabies include pain and burning at site of the infection, headaches, restlessness, muscle spasms, difficulty in swallowing, convulsions, and unconsciousness.

"The people are definitely in danger," Ms. Huffman said of anyone who has been bitten by a rabies-carrying fox. "They are playing with their lives. They are taking a chance that is so unnecessary. By the time the signs of rabies appear, they'll be (virtually) dead. There's no more treatment."

Gary Mitchell, who is a game warden with the Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife, is investigating the case.

"We are looking into it. We still don't know who has the foxes," he said.

Mitchell said rabies in foxes is natural. "Foxes are a species that is a carrier of rabies," he said.

"Foxes are a fur-bearer," he said, "and you cannot (legally) possess them without a permit. The permit has to be obtained before you get the foxes."

Ms. Erskine, who is permitted to possess raptors and fur-bearers, handles foxes and other fur-bearing animals with thick gloves to avoid bites and scratches.

Mitchell said the illegal harboring of wild animals, such as foxes, is a "fairly normal" occurrence.

"A lot of folks every year pick up things they can't handle," he said.

And if, for example, a fox bites someone, the animal must be killed and its brain sent to the Texas Department of Health for testing for the rabies virus.

If the rabies virus is confirmed, the vaccine would be administered to those who were bitten by the infected animal.

"We won't know if it is (rabid) or not until we send the head in," Mitchell said. "Especially with foxes and skunks, you have to assume they are rabid. Most of them are carriers of rabies. And whether or not they manifest rabies depends on the individual."

REACT: Lawyers feel individual rights prevail

(From 1A)

"A little bit of inconvenience is worth it all if you save one individual or one family," Morris said. "We (the police) are not out to harass anybody," he said, adding that he supports such practices only if conducted in "a professional manner."

On the flip side of the coin, local criminal defense attorney Tom Morgan said he thinks checkpoints can be inconvenient and that prevailing public attitudes should not negate an individual's rights.

"The Fourth Amendment says rights of an individual are more important than any sort of public safety exception, especially when considering that the great majority of drivers are not legally intoxicated," Morgan said.

John Hinkley, a local civil and defense attorney, also disagrees with the court's ruling.

"The essence of the police stopping an individual is whether there is probable cause. Instead of having probable cause to stop someone, they're saying 'we'll stop you first then see if we have reason,' " Hinkley said,"but I guess now they don't need a reason."

Hinkley, who describes himself as a staunch constitutionalist, said the court's decision poses a question of where the line should be drawn concerning an individual's Fourth Amendment right.

"I don't want drunk drivers on the road but I don't want my constitutional rights abridged either," Hinkley said.

"You and I and everyone else have the right to walk down the street without being stopped by the police without probable cause," Hinkley said,"... they can just keep expanding this thing."

Captain Coy Clanton of the Texas Highway Patrol agrees that the checkpoints are an intrusion but are outweighed by the public's safety.

"I think it's an intrusion but a minor intrusion compared to the potential hazard that drunk drivers impose," he said. "Statistics seem to indicate that up to 50 percent of fatal accidents are alcohol related."

Both Clanton and Morris said they feel no one has a right to drive intoxicated emphasizing that driving is a privilege and not a right.

County Attorney Mark Dettman agrees.

"I don't think those checkpoints violate a person's rights to privacy ... with any privilege comes certain restrictions and responsibilities," Dettman said.

"I would say it (stopping motorists) is a temporary dentention for public safety which I consider resonable," he added.

COURT: Checkpoints upheld despite 'probable cause' fears states' interest in eradicating it. Media reports of alcohol-related deaths and mutilation on the nation's roads are legion. Conversely ... the intrusion on motorists stopped briefly at sobriety checkpoints is slight."

In 1988, according to a brief submitted by the U.S. solicitor general's office, close to 24,000 highway deaths — about half of the total — involved alcohol.

Sobriety checkpoints, Rehnquist wrote, are similar to roadblocks set up near the Southwest border aimed at apprehending illegal aliens. The Supreme Court approved border checkpoints in 1976.

Joining Rehnquist were Justices Byron White, Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia, Anthony Kennedy and Harry Blackmun.

In a dissenting opinion, Justice William Brennan, joined by Justice Thurgood Marshall, wrote, "I would hazard a guess that today's opinion will be received favorably by a majority of our society."

But he added, "Consensus that a particular law enforcement technique serves a laudable purpose has never been the touchstone of constitutional analysis ... the court today abdicates its role as the guarantor of that fundamental (privacy) right."

Justice John Paul Stevens, writing a separate dissent, said the court record showed the checkpoints were of dubious value. The effect of checkpoints on "traffic safety is infinitesimal and possibly negative," he said.

Stevens cited a similar program in Maryland, which was included in the court record of the Michigan case. In checking 41,000 drivers, police arrested only .3 percent.

The court's majority "overvalues the law enforcement interest in using sobriety checkpoints (and) undervalues the citizen's interest in freedom from random, unannounced investigatory seizures," Stevens added.

"Any time the police can stop you without any reason to believe you're violating the law, we see it as a very serious potential intrusion," said Deborah Gordon, a Detroit lawyer who opposed the program in the lower courts in conjunction with the American Civil Liberties Union.

President George Bush pauses to read names at the Vietnan Veterans' Memorial.

BUSH: Flag Day includes emotional presentation

memorial a few blocks from the White House. With his just-washed hair still wet, Bush presented a Marine guard with a flag that had flown over the White House and watched as the guard raised it over the memorial.

Bush made no public comments and spokesman Marlin Fitzwater denied any link between the visit and Bush's push for the constitutional amendment.

During his 1988 presidential campaign against Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, Bush made the flag a major issue.

Highlighting Dukakis's veto of a state law that would have made it mandatory to have daily recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag in public schools, Bush toured flag factories and opened his political rallies by leading supporters in the pledge.

When the Supreme Court last June upheld the right of a Texas protester to burn a flag, Bush jumped back into the fray by calling for the constitutional amendment.

The Democratic-controlled Congress balked, however, and enacted an anti-flag-desecration statute instead. That law was thrown out by the Supreme Court Monday as unconstitutional.

The decision has allowed Bush and the Republican leadership to return to a popular theme. Last month a CBS News-New York Times poll showed that by a margin of 59 percent to 20 percent, Americans favored a constitutional amendment if it were the only way to make flag desecration illegal.

GOP political consultant Charles Black calls the flag amendment "a salient issue" and predicts that "any Democrat who votes against it is going to have trouble."

But the political landscape may be shifting on other issues.

With the Cold War ending, the Bush administration is resigned to defense budget cuts, and the president has set a goal of knocking $180 billion out of planned outlays through 1997.

As Bush gives up the strong pro-military posture that was a mainstay of the Reagan administration, the Republicans may be losing one of their most powerful issues: a strong national defense.

Public sentiment also seems to have shifted on the volatile abortion issue away from the anti-abortion-rights view that Bush has adopted.

Republican Chairman Lee Atwater announced last January that the GOP would have no "litmus test" on the issue for its candidates, and last month the New York state GOP, for the first time in its history, approved a platform backing "reproductive rights for women."

In California last week, Democrats nominated former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein to oppose Republican Sen. Pete Wilson in a gubernatorial race that is a top White House political priority.

Exit polls of voters showed that Feinstein was aided by "pro-choice" sentiment among voters in the Democratic primary. "Abortion was a real cutting issue," said Warren Mitofsky, whose firm conducted the exit polls.

Wilson, like several other GOP candidates that Bush supports, is also pro-choice. Yet the president — who once held such views himself — has not veered from the anti-abortion position he adopted when he joined Ronald Reagan's 1980 national ticket.

near the ship Thursday, while at least a dozen skimmers and several booms were used to suck oil off the water's surface. Five of the booms were working in the vicinity of the ship.

Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said officials planned to apply oil-eating bacteria to parts of the slick Friday. The experimental process, called bioremediation, would be used as a demonstration and is not considered a major part of the cleanup.

The dispersant works by breaking up the oil, creating tar balls — a rather common sight on Texas beaches — and a light sheen on the water.

"Tar balls are ugly but they're not that environmentally damaging," said B.J. "Buck" Wynne III, chairman of the Texas Water Commission.

Coast Guard officials said the slick was about 30 miles from Galveston, but they declined to predict where the oil might reach shore, if it does.

Sharon Christopherson of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said some of the tar balls could hit the Texas shoreline as early as Friday.

Klawetter, acting as spokesman for Mosvold Rederi, released names of the dead and missing crewmen Thursday. Those killed were Chief Officer Tojo Sagar, 27, of India, and Seaman Bernardo T. Cortez, 41, of the Philippines.

Two men believed to have been in the engine room who remain missing and are presumed dead are 4th Engineer Wilfredo S. Gulfan, 36, and wiper Vincent M. Pastor, 37, both of the Philippines.

Klawetter said of the 17 other crewmen injured in the blast, four were admitted to Brazosport Hospital and only one remains hospitalized.

Also on Thursday, the Mega Borg's chief engineer told a Norwegian panel meeting in Galveston that one of the vessel's pumps had been leaking about six hours before the blast.

Balinder Singh said the pump, located in the pump room where the blast is believed to have originated, leaked as the tanker's crude oil cargo was being transferred to a smaller ship.

Singh said he had stopped the leak by tightening a coupling about six hours before the blast.

He said he was told about the pump by Putham Mahamood, who works in the pump room. Mahamood told investigators through an interpreter that "very little measurable maintenance work had been done (Friday)," before the blast.

Mahamood, who was injured in the blast, spoke with inspectors by telephone from his hospital bed. His left leg was injured by flying debris.

About three minutes before the explosion, the chief officer Sagar, told Mahamood to open a valve for a crude oil washing, Mahamood said. He did not elaborate on the procedure.

As Mahamood was trying to open the valve, the explosion occurred, he said.

WORLD

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Tens of thousands of miners accosted people at random and ransacked opposition party offices Thursday after being summoned by the president-elect to help put down anti-government protests.

Few police and soldiers were visible in the capital by late Thursday, and the miners, armed with cudgels and their faces and work clothes still smudged with coal dust, were apparently left to maintain order as they chose.

The miners arrived after two days of violence in which security forces clashed with demonstrators who claim the governing National Salvation Front is dominated by Communists associated with the ousted Ceausescu regime.

The government said at least five people were killed and 350 injured when police cleared a 2-month-old demonstration from a central square Wednesday, then fired on protesters who attacked government buildings later in the day.

It was the worst violence in Romania since a pro-democratic revolution in December ousted Ceausescu, paving the way for free elections last month that were won by interim President Ion Iliescu and his National Salvation Front.

In Washington, President Bush's office condemned "in the strongest possible terms" what it called "government-inspired vigilante violence." White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the violence "departs from the commonly accepted norms of democracy and the rule of law."

Late Wednesday, Iliescu called in a televised speech for all "democratic forces" to come to the aid of his embattled government.

Early Thursday, soldiers fired at demonstrators who threw firebombs at police headquarters and sporadic gunfire echoed across Bucharest. Then the miners arrived, streaming into the capital from as far as 240 miles away.

Dozens of people were assaulted, some clubbed, others butted repeatedly by the helmeted miners, who were estimated to number about 100,000.

As a Western radio reporter was pulled away from a group of grim-faced miners in central University Square, a heavy-set woman egged the miners on, urging them to kill the reporter's colleagues.

The miners also occupied opposition party headquarters.

Medellin bomb blast kills four

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Police delivered another blow to the powerful Medellin cocaine cartel by killing the man who masterminded a 10-month-old terror campaign that has killed hundreds of people, police said Thursday.

Hours after police killed the drug chieftain during a shootout Wednesday night in an exclusive Medellin suburb, a car bomb exploded near a police station in the same area Thursday.

The blast killed four people, including two suspected terrorists inside the car, and injured 43, a police spokeswoman said on condition of anonymity.

The bomb may have been in retaliation for the police killing of Juan Jairo Arias, who officials said led the Medellin cocaine cartel's vast network of hired killers.

Arias resisted arrest and police shot and killed him, said the spokeswoman, who commented on condition of anonymity.

A 175-pound car bomb in the exclusive neighborhood of Medellin caused extensive damage to buildings and vehicles. Police said the blast killed four people and injured 43. Material damage was estimated at around $1 million.

Vietnamese hand over skeletons to U.S. Embassy

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Skeletons that Vietnamese refugees said were those of 30 Americans killed in the Vietnam War were handed over to the U.S. Embassy today, officials said.

The bones were to be flown to Hawaii for tests, but embassy officials said they did not know when that would happen.

The bones, stuffed into seven barrels, were handed over to Malaysian police by nine Vietnamese boat people who landed Monday on the beach at Tanjung Sedili, 150 miles southeast of Kuala Lumpur.

The Vietnamese brought along with the latest bones identification tags bearing names and other details. They said they were found on the skeletons.

Young policeman survives rebel massacre

KANDY, Sri Lanka (AP) — A young policeman who was shot by Tamil separatists and left for dead among the bodies of his colleagues said Thursday he crawled into the jungle and hid while more policemen were killed.

Piyeratna Ranaweera said he was one of 115 policemen who were captured at Kalmunai police station Monday when the rebels overran 11 police stations in the Eastern Province.

The fighting, which began Monday, was the worst violence since negotiations began between the government and the Tigers in May 1989.

At least 110 government troops have died, but one unconfirmed report said the Tamil Tiger rebels also killed 125 to 150 policemen who were among the 600 officers captured. A spokesman for the Tigers said the report could be anti-rebel propaganda.

Ranaweera said that all 115 policemen captured with him were blindfolded and the Tigers took their watches and wallets, tied their hands and gave them water. They were then taken in three buses from Kalmunai, 135 miles east of Colombo, to a rebel camp 20 miles to the south.

Ranaweera, lying in a hospital bed with his broken left arm in a sling and bloodstained cotton on the bullet wound in his left ear, said one busload of the captive policemen were taken from the Tiger camp shortly before midnight Monday.

"At 12:45 (that) night they took the second busload again to the jungle," he said in a weak voice.

He said he was blindfolded when he got off the bus so he could not see if the men from the first bus were there.

"They lined us all up and made us lie on the ground face down and they opened fire with T-56 rifles. Then they held a torch to our heads and if they heard a cry they shot again."

He said he crawled into the jungle and realised his left arm was broken and he fixed a sling for it.

While he was lying in the jungle he heard the third bus arrive and then he heard more shots. He estimated it was about 3 a.m. He said he saw no one else alive.

After the third bus left he started making his way inland towards government lines but "I fainted a couple of times. I was very thirsty. I found a lake with elephants ... and I drank."

The young Sinhalese policeman said he came to a small farmer's hut. "Some Tamil people were there. I explained what happened but they left me."

Ranaweera was admitted to the Government Hospital in Kandy, the largest town near Damana.

The spokesman for the Tigers, Dominic, said the mass killings of policemen "could have happened or it could be anti-Tiger propaganda. Communications are difficult and we are trying to find out what really took place."

Dominic, who uses only one name, was speaking to reporters in the northern town of Jaffna, the headquarters of the Tigers.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Socialists win first round

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — A party comprising former Communists won the opening round in Bulgaria's first free elections in 58 years, results showed Thursday. The United States said there may have been widespread voter intimidation.

A coalition of opposition groups is challenging the governing Socialist arty in runoff elections Sunday to prevent the party from gaining a majority in the 400-seat parliament.

The Socialist Party, formerly known as the Communist Party, won 172 among the 319 seats in last Sunday's balloting, according to the results.

It needs only to win 29 of 81 seats up for grabs in the second-round for a majority of the 400-seat unicameral Grand National Assembly, or parliament.

But a possible alliance among the 16-party Union of Democratic Forces and smaller opposition parties could keep the Socialists from their goal, observers said.

Bulgaria is the only country in the disintegrating East bloc where the Communists, who changed their party's name in April, remained the strongest political force.

In Washington, the State Department said there were reports of polling booths without curtains, transparent ballot envelopes and local officials handing out the ballots.

British target of bomb

HAMELN, West Germany (AP) — A powerful bomb exploded at a British Army training area outside Hanover on Thursday, badly damaging an unoccupied building and breaking windows in nearby homes.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack. However, the British military has been the target of a rash of bombings and shooting attacks in Western Europe carried out by the Irish Republican Army as part of its terror campaign to end British rule in Northern Ireland.

Maj. Leslie Hutchison, spokesman for the 4th Armored Division, said no one was near the site of Thursday's explosion.

A 4th Armored Division spokeswoman, Lynne Gammond, later told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that investigators had determined the explosion was caused by "a bomb, probably made up of plastic explosives."

She said the bomb also broke windows in German homes across a busy highway about 25 yards away.

Levy hospitalized

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's new foreign minister, David Levy, was hospitalized Thursday in the intensive care unit following complaints of weakness, hospital officials in Afula said.

Levy, 52, was taken to Haemek Hospital in the northern Israeli city near his hometown of Bet Shean, said the hospital's deputy director, Dr. Udi Kantor.

Kantor said there was no sign of immediate danger, adding that Levy was hospitalized for medical observation.

Fired workers strip

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Fired Ford Motor Co. workers bared their complaints — and their bodies — at the labor mediation board to protest the slow pace of talks on their reinstatement, newspapers said Thursday.

Newspapers reported that 20 of about 200 protesters stripped off all their clothing to demand that more than 700 fired Ford workers get their jobs back. Some others stripped to their shorts and the rest took off their shirts.

Missing Cole painting on exhibit in Fort Worth

FORT WORTH (AP) — A major work by American painter Thomas Cole will be shown publicly Friday for the first time in 159 years at the Amon Carter Museum, which purchased it from a private owner.

Cole's "The Garden of Eden," was last exhibited in 1831, three years after he is reported to have painted the idyllic landscape with Adam and Eve greeting the morning sun.

"It's never been on public view, never been photographed. It was last seen in 1831," Ervin Lippman, assistant director of the museum, said Thursday. "That's the extraordinary thing about the rediscovery of it."

The painting has been kept primarily in one family's bank vault since it disappeared from public view, Lippman said. The museum declined to give details of its previous ownership or acquisition.

"The Garden of Eden" was not forgotten by art historians, who knew of the work only from preliminary drawings, descriptions, and an engraving of the painting produced as the frontispiece of an 1831 edition of the Bible.

"It's an enormously important picture," said Cole scholar Ellwood C. Parry III, of the University of Arizona at Tucson. Parry discussed the missing canvas in a 1988 publication on Cole and his art, part of the Hudson River school of landscapes.

"It's the biggest, major beautiful exhibition picture by an American painter" now available to public view, Parry said.

Killeen fighting to keep 2nd Armored

KILLEEN (AP) — In response to the Army's announcement that it is formally deactivating the 12,000 soldiers of the 2nd Armored Division at Fort Hood in Central Texas, Killeen leaders have said that they will not give up the troops without a fight.

Representatives of the group Keep Hood Alive and Kicking Inc. said they still are seeking an injunction to try to prevent the Army from deactivating the 2nd Armored — one-fourth of Fort Hood's troop complement — until it has completed a full-scale environmental impact study.

"We're not surprised. We knew it was coming. That's why we went ahead and filed the suit," said KHAKI chairman Gaylon Christie.

The group contends that reducing the number of troops at the base could make the site untenable for an endangered bird called the black-capped vireo.

But the Army last month completed a study that found the reduction would have no impact on the environment. A 30-day time period for public comment on that study elapsed last week.

Army spokesman Major Joe Padilla said the Army decided to go ahead with the reduction after considering the public comments. He did not elaborate.

State Rep. Hugh Shine, R-Temple, who is seeking the congressional seat being vacated by U.S. Rep. Marvin Leath, pinned some hopes to save the division on KHAKI's lawsuit.

"The best situation is for KHAKI's lawsuit to succeed to protect Fort Hood as it is now," Shine said. "However, I also believe it is prudent to have an alternative plan."

Killeen Mayor Major Blair said he wouldn't comment on the closing until he received formal notification of it. But, he said the decision may not be final.

"There are some things out there that probably or may happen that may alter that decision somewhat," Blair said. He said he might be able to elaborate "in two or three days."

In addition to the approximately 12,000 troops, the Army said the deactivation may result in the loss of 69 other military and 300 civilian jobs that provide support to the division.

The Army said 3,537 military jobs will be cut by Sept. 30, the end of the fiscal year. Another 8,615 military jobs will be cut by end of fiscal year 1991.

The reduction was first announced in late January when the administration made its 1991 budget proposal.

The action is part of the Army's restructuring efforts because of changes in the international political climate, particularly U.S. relations with the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries, said Col. Bill Mulvey, Army spokesman.

Texas leaders have said they hope some troops being moved by the Army to the United States from Europe will be placed at Fort Hood, offsetting some of the loss.

The division is composed of the headquarters staff, two maneuver brigades, three armored battalions, three mechanized infantry battalions, an aviation brigade, artillery, support and troop units.

MALDEF point ignores diversity

That's what you think, according to Al Kauffman of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund (MALDEF). Kauffman plans to argue during a hearing June 25 that the new school finance law, enacted after many months of dawdling, haranging and posturing, hasn't remedied the basic inequity that exists in the state in that "rich" school districts can still spend whatever they want on their schools while the "poor" districts are left with what they were allowed.

"I don't think there's any real change in the system," said Kauffman. Richer districts can basically spend whatever they want, and poor school districts cannot.

"It (the new law) didn't put enough money into the system to counteract those differences," Kauffman added.

The problem appears to be that Kauffman and the districts he represents are more concerned about the inequity that money represents than they are about providing a good, basic education to all of the state's public school students.

If the complaint against the old school financing system — the one thrown out by the courts as too inequitable — was that it did not spread around the state's education "pie" fairly enough to guarantee a comparable level of education to students throughout the state, fine. The new school financing bill, which makes an additional $528 million available to poor districts, should remedy the problem.

If, on the other hand, Kauffman's goal is to render all the state's school districts into clones of the richest district, he has no hope. The state's taxpayers would revolt with justification!

There will always be some degree of inequity in whatever financing plan the state utilizes. The reason is simple: The cities and towns of Texas are not identical, not peas in a pod. To its credit, it is that diversity which makes this state strong and attractive.

A state comprised of 1,086 clones of the Dallas Oak Cliff school district would not accomplish the goal of providing better education to all the state's youngsters, a fact which undermines the contention that more money spent on education would necessarily translate into an improved education for all students.

An example is the public school system in Washington, D.C., where per capita spending on education was among the highest in the nation for the year 1986-87 at $5,742. Yet student performance there did not reflect the level of spending, resulting in many congressmen pulling their children out of that public school system in favor of private schools.

Obviously, more money can benefit particular districts to a point. Beyond that, however, education depends on dedicated and inspiring teachers, an atmosphere conducive to learning, and a thousand other variables that cannot be controlled.

Texas taxpayers have a definite responsibility to make certain that every public school student is provided with a sound basic education. That will mean that some school districts will get a larger slice of the school financing pie than others.

But it doesn't mean that unlimited taxpayer "milking" is justified or that school districts which can afford to spend more cannot do so. That, again, is diversity.

Calling long distance can leave me short-tempered

I used to understand telephones.

That's when you simply picked up the phone and when an operator answered, you said, "Ethel, get me the sheriff's office. I'm fine. How 'bout you? I'm sorry to hear that. I always thought a lot of Raymond."

Grizzard

But back then there was only one telephone company that I knew of. Then, the government got involved and now there are Lord knows how many companies trying to get your long distance business.

I can handle my telephone at home. I have AT&T. That's because that's what I had when all the new phone services began popping up, and I wouldn't have known how to change over anyway. Besides, I trust Cliff Robertson.

But I was in a hotel recently, and I needed to make a long distance credit card call.

I punched "8" then "O" and the number I was calling. When I heard the customary tone, I punched in my credit card number.

But every time I did that, I would hear a recording that said, "Your call cannot go through. Your credit card is invalid."

In a pig's eye, my credit card was invalid. I called the hotel operator and explained my dilemma.

"Is your credit card AT&T?" she asked.

"Yes," I answered.

"We don't have AT&T in the hotel," she said. "We have HT&T."

"What's that?"

"'Harvey's Telephone and Telegraph.' Harvey's the manager's first cousin."

In order to make my call, the operator had to find Harvey, who signalled a satellite somewhere and found me an AT&T operator. I had to give her all my numbers, about 30 of them, and I finally got my call through after 45 minutes of trying.

Yet another time, I was waiting in my lawyer's office. I asked his secretary if I could make a long distance call.

I said, "What long distance service do you have?"

She said, "ET&T 'Ethel's Telephone and Telegraph.'"

It couldn't be. I punched in the number of ex-wives I've had, and the average monthly alimony payment they required. An operator came on the line.

I identified myself and asked, "Ethel is that you?"

It was Ethel.

"How did you wind up with your own telephone company?"

"After Raymond got hit by the truck," she explained, "I decided to go into business for myself. So I opened my own long distance service."

"Great," I said. "Can you get me the sheriff's office?"

"You can call him yourself," she said. "Punch in Joe Friday's badge number on 'Dragnet,' sing 'dum-da-dum-dum,' and an operator will be on the line to assist you."

Emigres bilked by visa con game

WASHINGTON — Many would-be emigrants will do almost anything to get out of oppressive countries, and those who have money will pay almost anything. The combination of desperation and cash is like a beacon to con artists.

Anderson

Some residents of Hong Kong were hoodwinked into buying bogus visas to non-existent islands in the Pacific. They were in a hurry to get out of Hong Kong before the Chinese government takes it over in 1997, but the only place they were taken was to the cleaners.

Some Hong Kong residents thought they had bought their way into Venezuela. But in February, Venezuela's top immigration official, Felix Arroyo, was fired after Chinese immigrants began appearing in his country carrying fake visas with his signature on them. According to local police, more than 1,000 people had bought fraudulent visas for nearly $10,000 each through the Venezuelan consul in Hong Kong.

The immigrants are now being detained in Venezuela as the investigation into the multimillion-dollar racket continues. Sources tell us that Arroyo was the second Venezuelan immigration chief fired for falsifying documents.

Venezuela isn't the only place with a visa problem. Last year, authorities in Paraguay issued arrest warrants for four former Cabinet members known as the "golden quartet." Among their many crimes under the rule of former dictator Alfredo Stroessner was the sale of Paraguayan immigration papers to high-bidding foreigners.

For years, Asians have paid top dollar for bogus Paraguayan documents. International terrorists have also bought papers through the racket. Although at least two of the former Paraguayan Cabinet members have been arrested, sources told our associate Dean Boyd that officials in the new government are up to the same old tricks.

High ranking government ministers have been fingered, but the local authorities lack the stomach to investigate the charges.

Ciro Noriega, the consultate general of Panama under his uncle Manuel Noriega, has also been accused of running an illegal passport ring in Hong Kong. Panamanian immigration officials estimate that since 1985 people in China and Hong Kong paid between $10,000 and $15,000 each for papers to enter Panama.

The profit from a single document sale amounted to more than the annual salary of many of the Panamanian bureaucrats involved in the scam. Panama has allowed many of the unfortunate immigrants to stay, but some 1,200 have been sent back home.

Cubans trying to get away from Fidel Castro have met a similar fate at the hands of Manuel Noriega and his minions. Over the years, Panama has had a deal with the United States and Cuba to allow Cuban emigrants to stay in Panama while they apply for U.S. visas. In reality, the halfway house concept has been hell for the Cubans. Thousands of them were stranded in Panama for nearly a decade and harassed by the Noriega regime.

Noriega's people would routinely seize the Cubans' passports when they arrived and then charge the Cubans $300 to get their own documents back. Other Panamanians specialized in preying on the Cubans by selling them fake documents.

Roberto Diaz Herrera, a former aide to Noriega, is reported to have made a personal fortune off the Cubans. The new Panamanian government estimates that over the past five years, some 30,000 Cubans have paid corrupt Panamanian officials as much as $15,000 per bogus document.

CHARLEY REESE

Money's worthless with nothing to buy

To use comedian George Carlin's terminology, we ought to remember the difference between stuff and claims on stuff.

Once we understand that, then our economic difficulties become much clearer.

Reese

What Carlin calls stuff, economists call real wealth — property, real and personal, tools, food, equipment, clothing, and so forth. Money — either cash or credit — represents a claim on stuff, an opportunity to acquire real wealth in exchange for the money.

Why the difference is important can be illustrated easily. Suppose you were a drug dealer marooned on a deserted island with two suitcases containing $5 million. The $5 million would be worthless. It would represent a claim on real stuff — meaning you could buy $5 million worth of stuff — but on the island, there would be no stuff to buy and without stuff to buy, money is worthless.

That's the reason oil sheiks in Saudi Arabia spend so much money in other countries. There just isn't much in Saudi Arabia to buy. Japan is prosperous, not because of any sneaky trade laws or political actions, but because Japan decided to concentrate on making stuff. If you make good stuff, then people will exchange money for it. If you don't make any stuff, then money will tend to flow out of your country and into those which do make stuff.

The reason for that is that while you can live with stuff but no money, you can't survive with money but no stuff. Money is worthless as clothing, housing, food, or even fuel. Try covering up with a credit card on a cold winter's night.

Primarily because stuff can only be created by applying human labor to natural resources and money can be created by the flick of a pen or the punch of a computer key, there is today throughout the world an enormous imbalance between money (in its various forms, cash, credit, and debt) and real wealth.

When that happens, the per unit value of money declines and we have what is called inflation. The U.S. government attempts to hide the degree of inflation by regularly changing the basis of its statistics. Ideally, there should be a rough balance between money in all its forms and real wealth. That's what gives you that proverbial stable dollar — a dollar that maintains its purchasing power.

Unfortunately for us, there are two additional problems. Not only is there more money than stuff, more of the money is tied up in the form of debt and there is generally a maldistribution of money, with the overwhelming majority of it concentrated in relatively few hands.

Measured in 1977 dollars, average weekly earnings in the U.S. have declined from a high point in 1969 of $189.44 to $166.52 in 1989. Working men and women in America are getting poorer, not richer. This decline in income was masked somewhat by the liberalization of credit rules (nothing down and five years to pay).

To correct the imbalance, we could increase production of real wealth, devalue the currency, deflate the currency, or levy more taxes. Since Congress handed over control of U.S. money to the banks, which hate devaluation, that won't happen. Nobody in Washington knows how to increase production. So what's left are deflation and taxation.

Deflation is accomplished by the banks calling loans and raising interest rates, taking money out of the system. This makes each unit (including those owed them) worth more. It also causes bankruptcies and unemployment. The political smokescreen laid down is always fighting inflation, though runaway inflation is impossible with the banks in control, and they don't mind gradual inflation at all.

If we ever elected a Congress courageous enough to fight the bankers and repeal or seriously revise the Federal Reserve System, as the late Rep. Wright Patman tried to do for decades, we'd at least have a chance. Eventually that day will come.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Flag-burning act of overgrown delinquents

Little events, no less than large ones, "alter and illuminate our times," as Walter Cronkite used to say on the old TV show, "You Are There."

Such an event is the flag-burning fracas. The fracas was reignited Monday by the Supreme Court's decision striking down the Flag Protection Act of 1989. It tells us much about ourselves — provided we look carefully.

Murchison

Everywhere the story is Page One — an occasion for shaking of heads and likewise of fists. Public rostrums resound with invective.

The court's decision, truth to tell, was entirely predictable. Any jackleg lawyer — for that matter, any attentive reader of the public prints — knew that if the Supreme Court was willing to strike down a state flag-protection statute, as it did a year ago, it would strike down a federal one.

The only proper recourse was constitutional amendment, but a Democratic Congress didn't want to get into that; it wanted to pass something fast and shelve an issue likely to inspire and rally the Republicans.

All Congress did was buy a little time. The federal statute now lies in the dust. "Punishing desecration of the flag," writes Mr. Justice William Brennan, "dilutes the very freedom that makes the emblem so revered, and worth revering." The controversy is alive today as it was a year ago.

Constitutional amendment or no, the nation will survive. It has survived worse affronts, as when William Lloyd Garrison, the abolitionist, burned the Constitution itself.

The flag-burners are termites in a cathedral; ants crawling on a marble statue. They have insufficient mental wattage to keep a porch light burning overnight. My own feeling is that these overgrown juvenile delinquents owe more to the media than to the Supreme Court. If, every time they whipped out a pocket lighter and set the flag ablaze, the TV cameras didn't start churning, the dumbbells might find other ways to spend their time. Any parent knows that when a child indignantly holds his breath, you just fold your arms and wait for him to abandon the whole pointless exercise.

The problem with flag-burning isn't so much the act itself, base and contemptible though it is. The problem is contempt for America and its past — a contempt preached and taught by so-called intellectual leaders during most of the past 25 years.

Mental midgets burn the flag, not because they hate the flag, but because they have learned to hate or despise the nation whose symbol the flag is. We can thank the professoriate for that; we can thank the news media, a goodly portion of it; we can thank priests and pastors; yes, and even a number of parents.

It goes back to the dirty, rotten, flyspecked '60s, as does so much of what's the matter with America and the once-civilized world. America's intellectuals, during the '60s, came to portray America — land of the free and home of the brave — as an evil, fascist empire. The more playful of these intellectuals began spelling the name "Amerika" — an attempt at comparison with the Third Reich.

We think it doesn't go on today? Of course it goes on. The student strikers of the '60s have donned tweeds and now preside over the classroom. America is routinely portrayed in books, movies, college lectures, and tv programs as the oppressor of blacks, gays, women, and the Third World in general.

I've got a better idea than jailing the flag burners. Let's make selected representatives of the intellectual establishment get out on the streets, and on the Capitol steps, with brooms and dustpans and sweep up the charred remnants of Old Glory. A job you're willing to start is a job you should be willing to finish.

Court: FDIC delay wasn't bad faith

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court Wednesday in a Midland case ruled the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. did not breach good faith when it delayed in foreclosing a lien and selling property to settle a debt promptly after the debtor's default.

The state's highest civil appeals court, on a 5-3 vote, reversed the judgment of the 8th Court of Appeals in El Paso and affirmed the judgment of the trial court in Midland County in the case of the FDIC vs. Willie R. Coleman and W. Dwayne Powell.

The case involved Judico Enterprises Inc., which Dec. 8, 1981, took out a $460,000 promissory note payable to the First National Bank of Midland.

Six weeks before the note matured, on Oct. 26, 1982, Judico filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. Six months later the bank sued Coleman, Judico's president, and Powell, its secretary, the note's guarantors, and the bank moved to foreclose on real estate pledged as security. The FDIC took over the note when the bank became insolvent.

Coleman and Powell in November 1983 reportedly sought to enable the FDIC to sell the property as soon as possible, and the FDIC obtained the order from the bankruptcy court allowing it to foreclose on the property Aug. 15, 1984, when the property was appraised at $568,000. The FDIC sold the property on June 7, 1985, for $357,000, leaving Coleman and Powell liable for $486,000 to pay off the balance of the note and interest.

Coleman and Powell complained that FDIC delayed sale of the property when it knew the market value was declining, which increased their liability on their guarantees.

After a hearing, the trial court granted the FDIC motion and rendered its judgment against the guarantors for $450,475, but the court of appeals reversed the judgment and sent it back for trial, holding that whether or not the FDIC had breached its duty of good faith by undue delay in foreclosing was a question that should be left up to a jury.

Justice Nathan Hecht wrote the opinion for the majority that "to impose a duty of good faith on a creditor in these circumstances is an impossible burden."

In dissent, joined by Justice Frankin Spears and Justice C.L. Ray, Justice Oscar Mauzy wrote that ... a jury should be allowed to decide the disputed issues.

Journal suggests fraud possible in A&M research

WASHINGTON (AP) — Experiments at Texas A&M University may have been manipulated to give results that supported the concept of cold fusion, a prominent science journal says in a report to be published Friday.

Science, published by the American Association for the Advancement of Science and one of the mostly widely read learned journals in the world, said the Texas institution has conducted no formal investigation though fraud is widely suspected.

"The result is that after a year of experiments that most scientists view with a great deal of skepticism anyway, the A&M researchers are still haunted by this specter of possible fraud," the journal said.

John Fackler, dead of the College of Science at A&M, said in an interview Thursday he had no reason to believe that fraud has occurred and that there were no plans to investigate the cold fusion experiments.

"I have no concrete evidence of anything other than possibly fairly sloppy chemistry," he said.

Cold fusion experiments in the A&M laboratory of John Bockris last year were among the first in the world to report finding tritium, a form of hydrogen that can be key evidence of a fusion reaction.

Fusion is the merger of hydrogen atoms into helium with the release of substantial energy. It is the principal reaction of the sun and of thermonuclear weapons, and is believed by most scientists to take place on a substantial scale only when the hydrogen has been heated to millions of degrees.

"Cold" fusion, in which the reaction would take place and liberate energy in the form of heat at ordinary temperatures, would be a stunning scientific breakthrough — and mystery — if it really happens.

The magazine said that some scientists had suggested that the tritium detected in the A&M experiments was a result of someone deliberately "spiking" the chemical analysis. This could be done, Science said.

Mega Borg Capt. C.M. Mahidhara, left foreground, and Chief Engineer Singh Balinder, right foreground, take part in a maritime investigation held by a panel of Norwegian officials in Galveston, Texas, Wednesday. Mahidhara told the board of inquiry he does not know what sparked the explosion that set the tanker ablaze.

Chief engineer says pump leaked

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — The Mega Borg's chief engineer said Thursday that a pump used to transfer oil when the Norwegian ship exploded in the Gulf of Mexico had been leaking about six hours before the blast.

Balinder Singh told a Norwegian maritime inquiry panel that the pump, located in the pump room where the explosion is believed to have originated, leaked as the tanker's crude oil cargo was being transferred to a smaller ship.

Singh said he stopped the leak by tightening a coupling about six hours before the Friday blast that rocked the 886-foot tanker and left it crippled, burning and spilling oil.

Singh said he didn't know how long the pump had been leaking or how much spilled.

He said he was told about the pump by Putham Mahamood, who works in the pump room. Mahamood told investigators through an interpreter that "very little measurable maintenance work had been done (Friday)," before the blast.

Mahamood, who was injured in the blast, spoke with inspectors by telephone from Brazosport Memorial Hospital. His left leg was injured by flying debris.

Norway consul general Erik Leikvang, who convened the hearing, said Thursday's testimony — in which conflicting comments were made about the condition of the ship — was inconclusive.

"It is virtually impossible to draw any conclusions at this point," Leikvang said. "It would be very dangerous because it is hard to tell right now."

Crewmen and maritime inspectors said the supertanker was in good condition two months before it exploded.

Coast Guard Petty Officer Richard Miles told the panel that he spent five hours during a routine inspection in April examining the vessel, including the engine and pump rooms.

"Both the engine and the pump rooms were in very good condition," Miles testified. "I didn't see any excessive leaks. The bilges were clean and the vents were intact."

But a Norwegian inspector said some equipment was overdue for maintenance checks, however, he would not say whether he thought that contributed to the cause of the blast.

About three minutes before the explosion, the chief officer, Tojo Sagar, who was killed in the blast, told Mahamood to open a valve for a crude oil washing, Mahamood said. He did not elaborate on the procedure.

As Mahamood was trying to open the valve, the explosion occurred, he said.

Rare book theft brings arrest

AUSTIN (AP) — A rare book by Charles Darwin, valued at $12,000, has been recovered from an Austin man police allege was attempting to sell the 131-year-old volume to a local book dealer.

The 27-year-old man, who authorities identified as vice president for an insurance company, was arrested by University of Texas campus police Wednesday.

Authorities said they expect to charge the man in the theft of Darwin's "On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection," from the fifth-floor reading room of UT's Harry Ransom Humanities Research Center.

The Ransom center is the main depository for UT's collection of rare books, manuscripts and art. UT police said the man isn't connected with the university.

"At this point, we don't know how he got it out of the library. We don't know if he just walked out or what," said investigator Curtis Funke.

Homeport in doubt

WASHINGTON (AP) — The future of Naval Station Ingleside remained uncertain Thursday as rumors circulated in Washington about a list the Pentagon is preparing of military construction projects to cut.

The Pentagon's moratorium on construction ends Friday. Both Texas senators expect it to be extended, however, which would further delay the final phase of construction at the homeport near Corpus Christi.

"It looks like the moratorium is going to be extended. That is not necessarily good news and we are going to continue under that impediment," said Brad Arvin, coordinator of the Homeport Steering Council, a group helping local governments and school districts prepare for growth from the military base.

Sen. Phil Gramm, in Thursday's editions of the Corpus Christi Caller-Times, said sources told him the moratorium would be extended 45 days.

Unusual presents sent

HOUSTON (AP) — They looked like trash or just another marketing gimmick to some.

But they turned out to be more than that. They were free stock certificates, sent out by an electronics company to more than 1,500 graduate students and faculty members in the company's attempt to gain a seat on the New York Stock Exchange.

It worked, too.

Kent Electronics Corp. mailed the shares recently to 1,518 unsuspecting graduate students and faculty members at the University of Houston's College of Business Administration.

The shares, each valued at $11.63 on the American Stock Exchange Wednesday, were given away to satisfy the shareholder requirement for a listing on the Big Board, said Morrie Abramson, chairman of the electronics products distributing company in Houston.

Voters may determine water plan

■ Texas Water Commission has advised Midland, Upton and northern Reagan counties to prepare for critical underground water problems in the next 20 years.

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Voters in Midland, Upton and Reagan counties may decide whether their counties need underground water districts to prepare for groundwater problems that are expected in the next 20 years, under a Texas Water Commission ruling.

The three-member commission Wednesday determined that the area will experience critical groundwater problems in the next 20 years and the counties need to start planning on how they will protect and manage their water resources.

The state agency has identified southeastern Midland County, northwestern Upton County and northern Reagan County as critical areas because of the shortage of surface or underground water, contamination of underground water supplies and possible ground slippage.

The commission ordered an examiner to hold a hearing in the affected area to determine whether an election should be held to create an underground water district to manage water resources.

The examiner would take input from local residents on whether they would rather join existing water districts in Glasscock or Martin counties, create their own water districts, or take other measures to manage the water resources.

If the commission orders an election and local voters reject the water districts, which would have taxing authority, the commission could not order creation of a district under the provisions of the Texas Water Code, said Brad Cross, a geologist for the commission, but the area would become ineligible for Texas water development funds.

Commission staff held a preliminary hearing May 15 in Midkiff, at which area farmers and ranchers expressed concern about the state telling them how they can use the water, as well as the creation of another taxing authority.

Larry Persky, an attorney for the commission who attended the Midkiff hearing, said most people agree there is a problem. "As usual, everybody seems to have a different solution," he said.

"We're available to help them plan for their groundwater needs," said Bill Colbert, a spokesman for the commission.

Unexpected winds destroy Marfa's aerostat balloon

MARFA (AP) — Investigators blamed a "meteorological phenomenon" for destroying a helium-filled balloon considered by government officials to be a key player in the war on drugs.

A sudden wind severed the balloon's bridle lines, which moor the unmanned blimp slightly above ground, Kathy Hamor, U.S. Customs spokeswoman, said Thursday. The wind gusts, recorded at about 57 mph, also peeled away patches that hold the bridle to the balloon and switched on the balloon's automatic deflation device, she said.

The Marfa aerostat, designed by General Electric Government Services, ripped in three pieces during high winds in April and its look-down radar also suffered damage. The balloon was still undergoing testing by GE and will have to be replaced. It will be turned over to U.S. Customs once all its bugs are worked out, possibly within a few months.

"We are anticipating operations of the aerostats by early fall or winter," Ms. Hamor said.

Three balloons, each with a 260-mile radar range, are supposed to monitor the Texas-Mexico border against drug-smuggling aircraft that avoid conventional radar by flying low.

But the program had been put on hold and the Marfa balloon was grounded after an Eagle Pass balloon snapped a tether and floated away. Workers deflated the balloon by remote control, allowing it to crash at Carrizo Springs, about 46 miles southeast of Eagle Pass.

A GE investigation revealed lightning had struck the moist tether where it had been previously repaired. The company is redesigning the tether.

Texans fight for defense projects

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tenuous condition of several Texas military projects again became evident as the Pentagon Thursday extended a moratorium on new construction until the fall.

Sen. Phil Gramm said Defense Secretary Dick Cheney told him the military budget is in a free fall.

"Because we're being driven by the budget (summit), the Pentagon is being forced to make decisions that they wouldn't make if they had more time to make the cuts," said Gramm, R-Texas.

Cheney told Gramm the Pentagon has to be prepared for whatever spending cuts are recommended by participants in the budget summit.

Last month, Cheney ordered a deputy to prepare a list of military construction projects that could be cut. Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said Cheney next week would cancel "a substantial number" of projects.

When he ordered the list, Cheney suggested cuts to 207 projects, including Naval Station Ingleside and the other Navy homeports.

Navy officials told Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, Thursday they didn't expect any Navy projects to be included on a recision list next week. The officials told Bentsen the Navy had not completed its own studies, aides said.

The biggest — and now almost certain — victim of military reductions in Texas is the 2nd Armored Division at Fort Hood. Late Wednesday, the Army gave formal word that it was deactivating the 12,000-troop division.

Gramm said Cheney decided after a meeting with congressional leaders last week that four divisions would have to be cut. The only Army base with two divisions is Fort Hood, Gramm said.

"He told me yesterday, 'My budget is in a free fall and the only way I have any chance of meeting the budget without destroying the military is to move out quickly with deactivation,' " Gramm said.

Area residents have been bracing for the reduction since it was first proposed in January. A suit is pending against the Army to stop

Judge Bunton sentences six in federal court Thursday

■ Florida woman receives a five-year prison sentence in connection with the embezzlement of more than $232,000 from an Odessa Olney Savings and Loan Association branch.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton sentenced a Florida woman to five years in prison Thursday for embezzling more than $232,000 from an Odessa Olney Savings and Loan Association branch.

Mary Ann Sarabia, 29, pleaded guilty in May to two counts of embezzlement in return for dismissal of five other counts. Bunton gave her a suspended five-year sentence on the second count and ordered her to pay $10,600 in restitution to Olney, now known as AmWest.

Court records indicate that between 1982 and 1988, while an Olney employee, Ms. Sarabia took $232,895 from the savings and loan.

"I fully intend to pay back everything I took," Ms. Sarabia said, arguing that she would be better able to do so if allowed to remain out of prison and work.

Bunton sentenced five others Thursday.

■ Joe Robert Grist, 24, was given five years probation for misapplication of bank funds. Grist, now an Abilene resident, pleaded guilty in May to taking $11,700 in February from the Midland American Bank, where he was a teller.

Grist's attorney, H.W. Leverett Jr., said his client was addicted to cocaine when he took the money. Grist has since entered a treatment program and has been drug-free for more than three months, Leverett said.

■ Keith Little, 28, and his father Kenneth Little, 57, of Odessa were each given five years probation and each ordered to pay a $10,000 fine for selling illegal television satellite signal de-scramblers. Each will also have to spend four months in an Odessa halfway house.

Both Littles pleaded guilty in May to illegal interception of electronic communications. The maximum penalty is five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

"I'm very sorry I brought my son into this," the elder Little told Bunton. "I've always been on the side of the law...it hurts me deeply to see my son have to stand up here with me."

■ Ismael Lujan Ramirez, 35, was given three years probation for passing counterfeit $50 bills at Odessa's Bunny Club, 2337 E. 8th St., in April.

Bunton ordered Ramirez to pay restitution to the club, where he reportedly passed six counterfeit $50 bills, and to an Odessa service station where he reportedly passed one.

■ Martha Alicia Aguilar, 23, of McAllen, was sentenced to three years probation and ordered to enter a General Equivalency Diploma program for possession of marijuana.

She pleaded guilty in May.

DEFENSE: Project positions tenuous

(From 1B)

the move for environmental reasons.

Meanwhile, extending the construction moratorium until Nov. 15 leaves five projects at Naval Station Ingleside on hold. Also in limbo are projects at Fort Hood, the Red River Army Depot and Bergstrom Air Force Base.

But Rep. Solomon Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi, said Pentagon officials told him bases could apply for waivers to the moratorium. Base commanders would have to ask for the waivers through the chain of command.

He expressed optimism for both the Ingleside homeport and a $5.2 million project at the Corpus Christi Air Depot.

The homeport, started in 1985 and originally scheduled for completion next year, is the proposed home of the battleship USS Wisconsin and aircraft carrier USS Lexington. The $142 million project is about 75 percent complete, officials say.

Local officials estimated the base would bring an extra 11,000 new residents to the area, including 4,700 uniformed Navy personnel.

"I think the whole area is concerned about Homeport Ingleside," said Ingleside City Manager Steve Fitzgibbons.

Meanwhile, Rep. Greg Laughlin has been leading officials from the Beeville area around Washington to muster support for Naval Air Station Chase Field.

Laughlin, D-West Columbia, called two days of meetings "productive and encouraging."

In Killeen, a group called Keep Hood Alive and Kicking Inc., or KHAKI, filed suit to reverse the 2nd Armored Division cut by seeking an environmental impact statement. The Army issued an environmental impact assessment last month.

"There's a difference between an assessment and statement," KHAKI chairman Gaylon Christie said. "The statement is a very detailed look at the environment."

The suit says a shared sewer system would become harmful without minimum usage provided by the division.

Gramm and Rep. Marvin Leath, D-Waco, expressed confidence in the suit and said some U.S. troops abroad will likely be moved to the base. Leath also said he may seek some legislative relief for the area.

"The tragedy is that we're going to see a lot of cost imposed on good people who have been partners in national defense," Gramm said. "And the Army is going to be coming back to them and asking them to be partners again.

The 2nd Armored Division comprises one-fourth of all troops at Fort Hood.

KHAKI also contends that removing the troops would harm the black-capped vireo, an endangered bird in Texas, Louisiana, Nebraska, Kansas and Mexico.

Christie said the bird thrives in a disturbed habitat.

"You go in there and tear down some tree, make some tank tracks, the black-capped vireo loves it," Christie said.

About 10 percent of the known breeding pairs of the bird are in the Fort Hood area, he said.

KHAKI attorneys say the loss of the 2nd Armored Division will reduce the population in Killeen, Harker Heights and Copperas Cove by 50,000. One study shows the area will lose $812 million annually without the division, Christie said.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Stabbing death investigated

Staff Report

BIG SPRING — Police are investigating the homicide of a 52-year-old man found in Comanche Trail Park Wednesday morning, officials said.

The body of Richard Lauderdale was discovered about 11:30 a.m. in a secluded area of the park about 150 yards from the historic springs, police said.

Lauderdale died from a single stab wound to the chest according to an autopsy report from the Southwest Institute of Forensic Science in Dallas, said Justice of the Peace China Long, who ruled the death a homicide. Long said she did not have any information as to what caused the stab wound.

Cause of death was not apparent when the body was initially discovered, police said.

Police said they were led to the park after Lauderdale's vehicle was found parked nearby at about 7 a.m. Wednesday. Lauderdale's family had notified police that he was missing the night before, officials said.

Authorities said they are still investigating the incident.

Health was motive

Staff Report

BIG SPRING — The alleged murder of a 70-year-old woman by her husband, who committed suicide afterwards, was apparently motivated by their declining health, police officials said.

Elizabeth Whatley, 70, was found dead Wednesday at her eastside home as a result of a single gunshot wound to the head, police said. Her husband, whose name has not been released, was also found dead at the scene due to a single gunshot to the head, police said.

According to police, questioning of neighbors and a relative indicated that the couple's deaths were intentional due to failing health.

This is the first time the Sons of Confederate Veterans has held its convention in West Texas, Surratt said.

Registration begins at 2 p.m. Friday at the Midland Hilton, 117 W. Wall Ave., and will be followed by an executive council meeting from 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m., and a reception beginning at 6:30 p.m. A barbecue will be held beginning at 7:30 p.m. on the grounds of the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana.

Two noted speakers will be featured during Saturday's activities. Dr. M.E. Bradford, professor of English at the University of Dallas, will address those present for the noon luncheon Saturday. Guest speaker for the Saturday evening banquet will be B. Byron Price of Oklahoma City, Okla., executive director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame.

Saturday's activities also will include business sessions for the Sons of Confederate Veterans and the Military Order of the Stars & Bars along with tours of the Brown-Dorsey Home and the Scarborough Home.

Another special guest expected in Midland for the convention is Pete Orlebeke of Dallas, commander of the Texas Division.

The convention is being hosted by Dunn-Holt-Midkiff Camp 1441 of the Sons of Confederate Veterans and the Haley-Holt Chapter of the Military Order of Stars & Bars.

Woman pleads guilty

Staff Report

An 18-year-old Chaparral, N.M., woman pleaded guilty Thursday in federal court for her role in an apparent attempt to distribute 471 pounds of marijuana seized near Pecos in May.

Champa Allen, described as an El Paso nude dancer, was found guilty by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton for using a telephone to facilitate the commission of a felony.

The plea was part of a deal in which Ms. Allen agreed to cooperate with the government in prosecuting her partner, described as a 51-year-old Cuban immigrant, on more serious charges.

Ms. Allen's sentencing is scheduled for July 17 in U.S. District Court in Pecos.

Prosecutors said Ms. Allen was stopped by police near Pecos May 12, driving a rented van with 471 pounds of marijuana in the back.

Comp offices planned

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Workers' Compensation Commission announced the creation of four regional offices to manage 25 field offices, which would be an increase of 14.

The regional offices in Houston, Dallas and San Antonio will open Aug. 27, with the Midland-Odessa office becoming operational on Sept. 10, the commission said Thursday.

Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, said the organizational changes will greatly improve service to injured workers and employers.

Brooks, a member of the Workers' Compensation Oversight Committee, said for the first time every field office will have an ombudsman to assist injured workers and persons claiming death benefits, and a safety inspector to help reduce work-related injuries.

Murder verdict read

ANDERSON, S.C. (AP) — A Texas man was sentenced to life in prison after an Anderson County jury found him guilty of murdering his estranged wife in a motel room.

Ronald R. Dove, 32, of Odessa, shook his head as the verdict was read Wednesday afternoon. When Circuit Judge James Lockemy asked him if he had anything to say before sentencing, Dove said, "I'm innocent."

He took the stand in his own defense Wednesday morning, telling jurors that his 31-year-old wife, Sandra Jo Dove, shot herself in the head on the night of March 9 after she tried to shoot him.

In his hour-long testimony, Dove said he and his wife were separated at the time of her death, and he had come to Anderson from Texas to visit with her and their two children.

Dove said he and Mrs. Dove argued the night she died over a credit card he had stolen from his sister-in-law.

"I told her I was sorry and it didn't have nothing to do with her," Dove said from the witness stand. "We set down and talked and argued. And then I went in the bathroom. I came out and she shot at me and I ran back in the bathroom and locked the door."

When he came out of the bathroom, he said, he saw his wife lying on the floor. He said he did not call an ambulance.

Authorities discovered Mrs. Dove's body in the motel room March 10 when they came to serve Dove with a bad check warrant.

Candidates duel

AUSTIN (AP) — The two gubernatorial candidates are fussing over written records and tax returns, with Ann Richards offering to show Clayton Williams 23 boxes of her old papers if he'll make public a decade of his income tax returns.

The first volley was fired by the Republican's campaign, when Williams aides sought to see papers Ms. Richards donated to a University of Texas library in 1983.

The papers reportedly include old campaign strategies, and documentation of Ms. Richards' first year as state treasurer.

EARNEST KIKER

Plan now for colorful autumn flower garden

Prior planning can mean a brightly colored landscape this fall. Four popular plants are well-known for their fall brilliance. They are the chrysanthemum, candle tree, copper plant and Joseph's coat. Each has advantages and distinctions all its own. All have beauty and eye-pleasing color.

Kiker

The chrysanthemum, also simply called a mum, is considered the queen of fall flowers. The plant is generally from 12 to 24 inches tall, and are covered with colorful blooms. They require a well-drained soil with ample water and fertilizer. Tip cuttings of old plants root very quickly and provide relatively disease-free plants. Six to 8 inch cuttings stuck half their length into sand or sand-and-peat mixture will usually root in 8 to 10 days. Old clumps can also be divided at this time. It is best to complete transplanting in June or early July. Keep terminal buds pinched through July to promote side branching.

Showy yellow flowers are characteristic of the candle tree. These fall-blooming plants are best used as background for wide flower beds. The plants also have attractive foliage over their height of 4 to 6 feet. Candle trees prefer rich, moist soil and should be fertilized each month with a complete fertilizer. Plants are started from seed in spring.

The copper plant is attractive in summer as well as fall. The main reason bronze foliage is grown is because it combines well with fall flowers. While they can grow much larger, copper plants normally grow 15 to 30 inches tall in good soils. New plants are started from cuttings in spring and early summer.

Several varieties of Joseph's coat, Alternanthera, are available. The plant is famous for its colors of red, orange, green and yellow. Usually under 15 inches tall, this native of Brazil is most commonly used as a low-spreading border.

Joseph's coat also flourishes in a moist, well-fertilized soil. Use a complete and balanced fertilizer. Small plants are available now or cuttings may be easily rooted from larger plants.

North Dakota still battles drought

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — On windy days, when black clouds of soil bury farm fences and blot out the sun baking North Dakota's prairie, Don Nelson wonders if the loss of precious earth will ever end.

"We're so hopelessly behind," Nelson said. "With these winds we've had, it sucked almost all the moisture out."

North Dakota, entering its third straight year of drought, leads the nation in acres of land lost to wind erosion.

Figures from the federal Soil Conservation Service show a record 1.6 million acres in North Dakota were damaged by wind erosion from Nov. 1, 1989, through February. That compares with 474,200 acres for the same four months of 1988-89.

Farmers like Nelson are the underdogs in the fight to save the soil.

Nelson, 53, leads a double life. He does research and consults with doctors as a pathologist at a Bismarck clinic, then dons a plaid shirt, blue jeans and hat, lights up a cigar and heads for his wheat and barley fields east of Bismarck.

Farming is a life he has known since childhood in Beresford, S.D., near Sioux Falls. But two years of drought have sapped the moisture from his 3,000 acres, and Nelson has been fighting to keep the soil from blowing away.

"This year, I'm going to do less tilling and use more chemicals," Nelson vowed last week as he maneuvered a huge planting drill into a shed.

"I don't know what the answer is. I'm beginning to think more about continuous cropping. But we may not ever solve the problem."

The main problem comes on land left to rest before its next crop is planted, Nelson said. The drought has reduced cover crops like grasses and small grains that would keep the soil in place.

Tilling leaves the soil more vulnerable to erosion, and herbicides could seep into water supplies. Nelson, however, said chemicals may be the lesser evil because they are not used as intensely in North Dakota as in other states.

Myron Senechal, a conservationist with the North Dakota Soil Conservation Service, said farmers gradually are changing their style of farming to cut down on erosion, mainly by tilling less.

"Producers are aware of the erosion out there," he said. "It's a learning process we have to promote on a day-to-day basis."

"Part of the problem is the winter," adds Doug Gasseling, state SCS agronomist. "We've had 60-degree temperatures in February, and it just broke the soil structure down. A lot of our farmers didn't have moisture to start with."

The persistent drought also has taken an emotional toll. Rain and snow that fell last week were the talk of the state, bringing smiles to farmers' faces and a touch of green to the grass. But much more is needed.

"I don't see signs yet that the pattern has changed," Nelson said. "As you get close to planting time, you think the drought can end with a rainstorm. I was waiting the last two years for that rainstorm, and it never came."

Nelson, who is unmarried, said his double life keeps him on the go, but he likes it that way. He relaxes by going to medical meetings.

"It's like dealing with nature in different levels. I probably diagnosed 15 different cancers this morning and I don't know whether I can control them. I know I can't control the drought.

"It gives you a pretty good vision of the magnitude of the struggle," Nelson added.

Grasshoppers, drought tax Texas farmers

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Deepening drought and invasions of super-size grasshoppers in some areas of the state are adding to the woes of farmers and ranchers, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service reports.

The dry weather contrasts sharply with the big rains and flooding in recent weeks, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, Extension Service director, but hot, moisture-sapping conditions during the past week have brought quick changes.

He said the only regions in Texas with adequate soil moisture are the Rolling Plains, and north central, northeastern and eastern counties. All other areas could use rain.

The driest districts include Far West, upper South Texas, Southwest Texas and the Coastal Bend, the latter two being under siege by large, plant-eating, windshield-splattering grasshoppers.

Carpenter said the pests are gnawing their way through crops, pastures, lawns and shrubs. In Atascosa and Frio Counties, heavy infestations are chomping Bermuda grasses, watermelons and peanut fields.

Dr. J.W. Stewart, Extension Service entomologist based at Uvalde, said tree leaf-eating, giant katydids and giant walking sticks also are troubling southwestern counties and the Hill Country.

The big grasshoppers, often called lubbers, are invading Wilson, Gonzales and Karnes counties in the Coastal Bend, and the outbreak is the worst in many years, said Dr. Roy Parker, Extension Service entomologist at Corpus Christi. The pests are working watermelons, peanuts and pasture grasses.

He said giant walking sticks and mesquite cutworms in the Coastal Bend also are defoliating mesquite and other trees from Alice north across a number of counties.

In West Central Texas, jumbo grasshoppers are adding to drought and crop problems, said Extension Service entomologist Dr. Tom Fuchs of San Angelo.

"A jumbo on an emerging cotton plant spells death," he said. "One bite and the seedling is gone. A few hoppers can do a heck of a lot of damage. In a two-day period, a single hopper will take out three to four plants. High populations can reduce a stand very quickly."

Fuchs said other plants highly vulnerable to grasshoppers are sorghum, corn, fruit trees, vegetable and flower gardens.

Carpenter said wheat harvesting is starting in the Panhandle, South Plains, Rolling Plains and in North Central and South Central Texas. Twenty thousand to 30,000 acres of cotton destroyed by hail two weeks ago have been largely replanted in the South Plains.

He said such major dryland crops as corn, cotton and sorghum are stressing for rain in central and western areas of the state.

District Extension Service directors reported the following specific crop, livestock and weather conditions during the past week:

PANHANDLE: Hot, windy weather has left soil moisture generally short. Ranges are stressed, but cattle remain in good condition. Wheat is maturing fast, and some harvesting has begun. Irrigated crops, such as corn, look good. Sorghum is 60 to 80 percent planted, and all cotton is planted and up to good stands.

SOUTH PLAINS: Soil moisture is going fast under hot, dry conditions. Corn and vegetable crops require frequent irrigation, and growers are preparing to irrigate cotton sooner than usual. Some of the 20,000 to 30,000 acres of cotton ruined by hail two weeks ago has been replanted.

ROLLING PLAINS: Soil moisture is generally adequate except in southwestern counties. Wheat harvesting is active and peanuts are up to good stands in most areas.

FAR WEST: Despite scattered showers, soil moisture is short to inadequate. A recent Pecos County tornado has damaged or destroyed houses and barns, and other violent weather has killed 200 to 400 sheep and goats. Irrigated cotton is growing well. Ranges are parched, but livestock are in good condition generally. Some maintenance feeding is required. Melons, peppers and peaches look good.

Environmental activists regarded as 'agitators, extremists'

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Environmental activism is the new target of political suspicion and surveillance, and law enforcement agencies are stepping up action against those who demand radical change.

Calling them "agitators," "outsiders," "the mafia" and "extremists," local, state and federal investigators and prosecutors say they suspect them of violent acts — or the potential for them. They have responded in the last year with arrests, seizures, broader searches, questioning and the threat of charges.

Targeted groups say the suspicion is unwarranted. They say U.S. activists have suffered persecution and prosecution for decades because they advocate social change.

Among recent developments:

In Oakland two weeks ago, two Earth First! supporters injured when a bomb exploded in their car instantly became the only serious suspects. Friends said they were en route to their base in Berkeley, and then to Santa Cruz to recruit for a summer campaign to save forests. But police arrested the pair within hours. Days later, they were released without charges.

In Mobile, Ariz., three Greenpeace organizers were among dozens of people hauled out of a hearing on a toxic waste incinerator. Five were stun-gunned, some collapsing in the aisle. Deputies handcuffed them for hours at a desolate airfield until the hearing was over. The three and 15 others face misdemeanor and felony charges, and have been under surveillance since the May 7 incident.

Also in Arizona, the government is preparing to try Dave Foreman, a founder of Earth First!, and four supporters. They were indicted on conspiracy charges last year after an undercover FBI agent tried to involve Foreman in a plan to disable a pumping station with other Earth First!ers. The FBI charges — and Foreman denies — that it was a trial run for actions against three nuclear plants.

Investigators found no evidence of firearms or bombs.

In Missoula, Mont., last year, the FBI began investigating alleged tree spiking in a national forest. Earth First! was suspected and disclaimed knowledge. A grand jury subpoenaed seven people, including a University of Montana professor. A center of Earth First! activities was searched. Everything bearing a name and a face was confiscated. No one was charged.

Earth First! and Greenpeace say they are under attack because they are the vanguard of profound environmental change. They have been among the most successful groups in drawing public attention to development's threat to natural resources, and in inspiring the young to act — to save trees, whales and diminishing wilderness and to fight thegovernment over hazardous waste incinerators.

They say their tactics aren't violent because they don't hurt people.

U.S. law enforcement, however, often assumes dissenting groups are violent, and has a long history of violating their civil rights to safeguard the "public," said Brian Glick, a New York public-interest lawyer who wrote "War At Home," a book about U.S. covert action against progressive movements.

The government has a long record of "neutralizing" emerging groups by smearing and factionalizing them. In the 1920s and '30s, miners were prosecuted for trying to form unions and linked to crimes committed by provocateurs. In the '40s and '50s, communism was the target, and in '60s it was civil rights and anti-war protesters.

In the '70s, dirty tricks and inflammatory acts by FBI agents sought to disrupt the Black Panthers, the American Indian Movement and Students for a Democratic Society. More recently, the FBI waged a secret campaign against opponents of U.S. policy in Central America, infiltrating CISPES (Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador) and investigating nuns, civil rights workers and unions.

While state and local officials are criticized, it's the FBI's work that is at the center of the new harassment and suspicion of environmental groups.

A staff member of the Rainforest Action Network, where an Earth First! co-founder is on the board of directors, was questioned by two FBI agents the night of the Oakland bombing, according to Randy Hayes, a network founder.

"It reminds me of the fox guarding the hen house," said Hayes. "If the FBI is involved in trying to undercut Earth First!, and they're supposed to investigate bombing incidents, I don't trust that their investigation will be thorough."

FAMILY MATTERS

Arguments need solutions

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: My husband and I never seem to ever be able to end an argument and agree on what we are going to do. We can talk to each other, and do. We don't fight but we don't avoid arguing. It seems like we have the same old arguments over and over. My husband says we are getting just like my parents. He has always said that they are just like two old cows chewing on their cuds. They do fight and it does seem like it's the same old fights that they have had with each other ever since I can remember.

May

I don't want us to wind up like my parents. I want us to change what we are doing, only I don't know what we are doing. Can you tell from this what we are doing? Do yo have any suggestions? TIRED

DEAR TIRED: Perhaps you two aren't resolving your arguments each time. Often, we avoid reaching a decision and taking an action because we want to avoid possible consequences. We drop the discussion without realizing that there was no resolution.

Noted family therapist Virginia Satir said that discussions between couples seemed to have three phases: First, someone starts the interaction ("I'm sick and tired of coming home and the bed still not being made."); second, the other person responds ("I'm sorry but I have not made that a priority, but since it bothers you I will make the bed every morning."); third, the first person responds to the response ("That's really super, thank you for being so considerate.").

While some interactions are not resolved this quickly, the phases still are generally apparent. Many couples don't move to the resolution phase, which an acknowledgement that the "solution" is accepted and will be acted on.

I encourage you and your husband to start practicing this process with the "resolution" concept in mind. When you have an argument, one of you say out loud, "We are going to try and resolve this argument, OK?" If the other agrees, stay to point. Work on the problem at hand. After you have agreed on a possible solution, repeat it. Finally, implement the solution.

If you are unable to implement the solution, call another meeting to discuss the reasons. Utilize the same technique to resolve this problem. I know that this sounds very elementary but it will work.

DEAR FAMILY: We are driving to my sister's house in Michigan this summer. I am dreading taking our 2-year-old in the car for that long. Do you have any suggestions short of tying him up? AFRAID

DEAR AFRAID: Have a family meeting to tell him the rules and consequences for rule violation on the trip. For example, when he starts throwing a fit, you may need to stop the car and deal with him immediately. Discipline is most effective when consequences immediately follow inappropriate actions.

Bring lots of "car safe" toys with you — toys that won't hurt anybody or anything if they are thrown. Bring lots of books and songs. Be prepared to periodically get into the back seat with him.

Playing such learning games as "I Spy" and "Find the First (red car, for example)." You can also help him learn more about himself by helping him identify his feelings — hungry, bored, tired, sleepy, angry, etc.

Choices in dogs reflect their owners' lifestyles

By Shari Spires
N.Y. Times News Service

Americans count themselves only once every 10 years. We do a better job keeping track of our dogs.

There are more than 50 million dogs in the country, according to the Pet Food Institute. Over at the American Kennel Club (AKC), the registered dog population is counted and analyzed in even greater detail each month. Once a year, the results are compiled.

Americans then try to extrapolate some sort of social significance in their choice of pets.

This spring, the AKC announced that the top dog — not just of the year or the decade but of all time — was the cocker spaniel.

Riding on the popularity of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Fala, the cocker spaniel was the most popular dog for 17 years between 1936 and 1952. In 1983, it pushed out the poodle for the top position and stayed there for the rest of the decade.

According to John Mandeville, a writer for the magazine "AKC Gazette," dogs that become hugely popular tend to be cute, trainable and able to live in a variety of conditions.

With its long, wavy hair and big brown eyes, the cocker spaniel fulfills the cute criterion. Medium to small in size, it is also adaptable to apartment living, a reflection of modern American lifestyle. The cocker's ability to be trained is a matter of varying opinion.

That doesn't mean Americans are no longer interested in macho dogs, however. Rambo-dogs of the 1980s were Rottweilers and chow chows — the two breeds with the greatest increase in popularity this decade.

Forty-fourth on the list 10 years ago, the Rottweiler now ranks sixth in popularity with a 991 percent increase. Chow chows attained seventh place in 1989, up 244 percent from 24th place in 1979.

Although enormously popular now, Mandeville predicts one or both breeds will drop out of the Top 10 by the end of the 1990s.

"They are what I call fad dogs," Mandeville said, comparing them to fad dogs of the late 1960s and early 1970s, the Irish setter and the Saint Bernard.

Last year, Saint Bernards were 44th in popularity and Irish setters were 51st.

The Irish setters' downfall was their inability to be trained. Even owners of Irish setters often joke about their pets' mental abilities, but Mandeville was kind.

"Stupid is an anthropomorphic term," he said, when asked about the dog's intelligence.

Mandeville thinks pet selection is pretty much a reflection of the individual..

"You get the dog that fits you," he said. "Maybe you want something big that just lays around, or a dog that is highly charged with energy."

A broader application of this theory would conclude that Americans now share more traits with cocker spaniels than with poodles.

Memory functions on trivial pursuits

By David Grimes
N.Y. Times News Service

As I get older, I find that I have more and more trouble remembering things.

Not all things, just the stuff that's occurred recently. For example, I cannot remember the title of the movie I rented yesterday. I can, however, still recite all the words to the Pepsi Cola jingle I learned in the second grade:

"Pepsi Cola hits the spot

"Five minutes later you hit the pot.

"Push the button and pull the chain,

"Away goes Pepsi down the drain.

"Roto-Rooter."

Clearly, this is an essential memory, the kind of memory that should take precedence over such trivial things as doctor's appointments, the whereabouts of the car keys, children's first names, etc.

I sometimes have difficulty remembering my phone number. I have, however, indelibly stamped in my memory the words to the theme songs for "Green Acres," "The Flintstones," and, of course, the classic "Gilligan's Island."

One of these days I'm going to burn down the house because I can't remember to turn off the coffee maker. That's OK, though, because I retain these important memories:

"Brylcreem, a little dab'l do ya

"Use more only if you dare.

"But watch out, the gals will all pursue ya

"They'll love to get their fingers in your hair."

And:

"You'll wonder where the yellow went

"When you brush your teeth with Pepsodent."

(And the parody, also memorized from second grade: You'll wonder where your teeth all went/If you brush your teeth with fresh cement.)

I could go on like this for days, but I think you get the point. The question is, why does this occur?

Some people say that as you get older, your memory gradually fills up until there's no room for anything new.

I don't buy this. My memory has plenty of room for new material, so long as the new material is useless, irrelevant chaff. It will join forces with the volumes of worthless junk that's already locked in my brain, then the wad of clutter will begin to swell and grow until it's pushed out what few useful memories I still retain.

The day will finally come (probably before I turn 40) when all of my memory will consist of soda pop jingles, sitcom theme songs, cartoon dialogue, Three Stooges routines and the lyrics to "Sympathy for the Devil" by the Rolling Stones.

If you see me wandering aimlessly down the street, please point me in the direction of my home. It's the one with the smoke coming out of it.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I did a terrible thing. I got mad at a friend and accused him of raping me. I didn't mean for it to go as far as it did, but my father got into the act and there was no backing down.

Van Buren

My friend is now serving time because he was too stubborn to plead guilty. If he had, he could have gotten out of it with a suspended sentence, but he refused.

Now I can't sleep at night. I know I should have admitted that I lied, but I didn't have the guts. Is there a solution to my problem? — SICK OF LYING

DEAR SICK: You bet there is! Tell your father — and the lawyer who represented you — that you lied and be prepared to take your lumps. Unfortunately, you didn't sign your name or address, or I could be of more help to you and the innocent person on whom you perpetrated this terrible injustice. Please write again and let me know how I can contact you — even indirectly.

DEAR ABBY: After six years of marriage, my husband (I'll call him Joe) and I adopted a beautiful baby boy — born on April 24. I was thrilled at the prospect of giving Joe my father's diamond stickpin for Father's Day in June.

In May, Mother's Day came and went, and Joe didn't even give me a card. At the end of the evening, he said, "I hope you don't feel hurt because I didn't give you anything for Mother's Day, but after all, you're really not a mother."

Abby, he might as well have slapped me! From that moment on, I took a closer look at him and saw a stingy, selfish man who gave little to anyone — physically, emotionally or financially.

I went ahead and gave him my father's diamond stickpin for Father's Day in June, but through the next 10 years of our marriage, he never wore it.

Soon after, he was stricken with cancer. I stuck by him, supporting the family and nursing him back to health. When he was back on his feet, I left him.

I took the stickpin from his jewelry box and left a note that said: "I am taking my father's stickpin and my son because you're really not a father." Today, my loving son makes sure I'm not forgotten on Mother's Day. Sign me ... WHAT GOES AROUND COMES AROUND

P.S. My ex died alone — without friends or family around him.

DEAR ABBY: Concerning your response to "Curious in San Diego," the longest word in the English language is not "antidisestablishmentarianism" (28 letters). How does "pneumonoultramicroscopicsilicovolcanoconiosis" grab you? It's 45 letters, and the definition is: "a lung disease caused by inhalation of silicate dust." — J.S. SCHILDHAUS, SAN DIEGO

DEAR J.: Since this is a medical term, it will not be found in all dictionaries.

"How to Write Letters for All Occasions" provides sample letters of congratulations, thank-yous, condolences, resumes and business letters – even how to write a love letter. It also includes how to properly address the clergy government officials, dignitaries, widows and others. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Experts focus on problems of America's children

By Greg B. Smith
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Public opinion polls increasingly show that Americans would not oppose higher taxes to fund programs aimed at helping the country's troubled youth, experts on childrens' issues said Monday.

The experts — who included educators and authors as well as Curtis Sliwa, founder of the Guardian Angels — gathered during a symposium to assess the problems facing children such as AIDS, child abuse and poverty.

"I believe the public wants to see these problems solved," said Justice Rosemary Barkett of the Florida Supreme Court. "Why then are politicians misunderstanding or misperceiving the message these people are sending?"

Barkett, speaking on the first day of the two-day meeting marking the 15th anniversary of Children's Express, a news service run by children and teenagers, cited a recent poll by the Florida Bar Association that found the majority of respondents were willing to raise taxes and spend more money to help solve children's issues.

A similar attitude was discovered by a University of Michigan poll, which found almost 90 percent of those queried favored spending money on the treatment of rather than punishment of juvenile offenders, according to Ira Schwartz, director of the university's School of Social Work.

Schwartz also said more than half of the respondents felt the issue of juveniles convicted of drug crimes should be treated as a public health issue — not a criminal justice issue. The poll results, he said, "shocked" politicians and "derailed" a planned prison facility slated to be built in his state.

Concern about children's issues has shown up in more than polls. In recent years, state courts have gotten into the act, answering lawsuits that charged several states with supporting schools systems that favored the rich at the expense of the poor.

Author Jonathan Kozol noted that in the last year, courts in Texas, Kentucky, Montana, and most recently New Jersey have ruled state school systems were funded inequitably, hurting poorer school districts.

"It shows how the state courts are going to be more progressive on this issue than the state legislators or the U.S. Supreme Court," Kozol said. "That does suggest a new role for the state courts."

In the Kentucky case, officials have tried to balance state authority and local autonomy in governing a school system the courts last June ruled unconstitutional, according to Richard F. Sexton, director of the Prichard Committee for Academic Excellence, one of the groups that assisted in the lawsuit against the system.

"If we can't get quality education to these kids and families in a system that has not been producing with this approach," he said, "then we're going to have to go back and ask whether those local systems deserve to exist."

Beyond education as an obstacle, some felt youths face the uphill struggle of simply being recognized as having potential. That was the message of Sliwa, wearing the white tee-shirt and red beret of his youth crime prevention group, the Guardian Angels.

"When empowered, young people can make amazing contributions to society, but they must be given recognition," he said. "We call them the dispossesed, the human fallout. I believe they are the greatest resource America has."

Products for elderly need design, style

By Marsha Kay Seff
Copley News Service

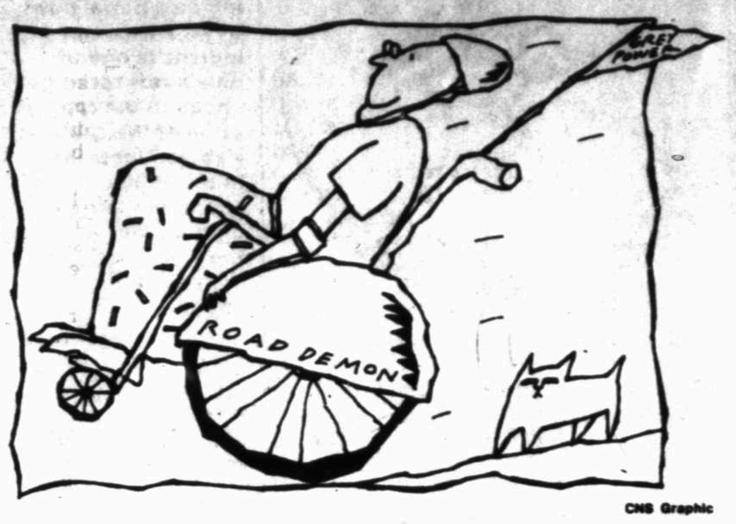
SAN FRANCISCO — Technology that enhances senior living has come a long way since the rocking chair.

Products include everything from low-tech designer grab bars and adjustable sinks to high-tech lights that respond to sound and wearable devices that can summon emergency help or track people prone to wandering off. Now it's time for manufacturers and housing contractors to turn their attention from the technology itself to its design and style, said Lorraine Hiatt, an environmental psychologist and gerontologist.

Design is as important as function, she said, adding that functional design for the aging does not need to look utilitarian and clumsy. She calls it "fruit-and-fiber" design — design that is good for you but doesn't look like it is.

Products that simplify life need to be aesthetically pleasing, she said. Besides allowing seniors to live more independently, these appliances need to protect and enhance the users' dignity. That means design should be subtle and appear conventional to the casual observer, Hiatt said.

Rather than make seniors feel out of place, support products should make them feel in place, she said. Grab bars, for example, might be designed in a geometric style and decorator colors rather than one straight silver bar that looks institutional. And safety bars for the bathtub can be portable so the home owner can tuck them in a closet.



CNS Graphic

Another major limitation of current design is that it is "stage" oriented rather than transition or "aging" oriented, Hiatt said. Houses, as well as the support products in them, need to evolve with the changing needs of residents, she said.

For example, walls might be built with extra support studs which would be ready when grab bars need to be installed. Bathroom floors need to be reasonably slip-proof, and vanities can double as passive hand rests or leaning devices. Toilets could adjust to different heights, and cabinet doors unsnap to accommodate a wheelchair.

Functional design should anticipate potential frailty and stress independence, Hiatt said. Such design also should: minimize hazards and risk of falls; encourage appropriate exercise, communication and action; and maximize learning, recall and coordination, she said. Products for the elderly need not be geared to the disabled, she said, but rather to people with minor, multiple and hidden impairments.

As product design and sales increase in importance, manufacturers are making strides in high-tech devices for the senior market. Given the technology available, however, Hiatt said she is surprised there aren't more "smarter houses" to accommodate aging home owners.

According to her definition, a smarter house might have the following: a single cable that consolidates all wiring; appliances with automatic shutoffs; a built-in diagnosis system for faulty appliances; and devices that convert sound to light for the hearing impaired. Computers would: diagnose malfunctions and communicate problems; permit nearby family to monitor the house and its occupants; and store billing information to be transported directly to the telephone, electric and gas companies.

The objective of a residence designed for the aging is to create a quality of life "that makes it worth living all the way through," according to Jack Holeman, executive director of a luxury life-care facility in Palm Beach, Florida. His facility includes such high-tech amenities as a computerized security system.

So the doors don't have to be locked, residents wear computerized devices that identify them and their movements. In case of fire or medical emergencies, the computer system identifies victims and prints out vital health-related information that is available immediately when help arrives.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

More elderly couples found in rual areas

By Steve Edwards

Rural populations have a greater proportion of elderly residents than urban populations do.

Edwards

In these rural areas, the elderly population has fewer helpful neighbors to assist them in time of need, as well as a scarcity of both doctors and public transportation.

About 150 rural counties have no doctors at all. More than 150 counties have no public transportation at all. Religious and voluntary agencies, which often provide a variety of services, may not exist in rural areas. State-provided services may be less available in rural counties.

On the positive side, more rural elderly have spouses than urban elderly, which means these elderly couple can help care for each other.

Too often, government and agency funds aren't available for programs designed for the rural elderly. Nevertheless, rural counties do have some social, medical and volunteer support services. Rural elderly and their adult children may seek help through some of the following sources:

- The elderly parent's minister, who can provide counseling about issues faced by the elderly and their adult children. He might help arrange for a church member to make regular visits to a dependent parent, help with the housework or sleep overnight.
- The county social services, human resources or welfare department can provide information about Medicare, Medicaid, SSI food stamps, local supporting services and other state and federal government programs.
- The county health department, which will try to arrange for special care in the home, may have mobile units to bring some health services to distant residents and can provide other medically-related services. Some rural counties have comprehensive health centers. The county health department can provide information about area nursing homes.
- Farmers' organizations such as the Grange, whose 5,000 chapters offer such volunteer activities as transportation, telephone reassurance calls, friendly visitors, Meals on Wheels, clinics for eyes and hearing tests.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Grocery Express helps elderly with shopping

Grocery Express is a grocery shopping and prescription delivery service designed for elderly or handicapped individuals who, because of health, safety or weather or being alone, cannot do their own shopping.

The grocery list is given to a volunteer who completes the shopping and delivers the items to the needy participant the same day items are ordered. All items must be paid for at the time of delivery by check or cash — no food stamps can be accepted. The minimum amount of purchase is $10.

The Grocery Express is available 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Mondays through Fridays through the Dellwood Senior Citizens Center as a program of Community and Senior Services. For more information call 699-5023.

Indians saw supernova 900 years ago

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A pottery bowl painted with a 23-pointed star shows that an exploding star witnessed by ancient Asians and Arabs also was seen by New Mexico's prehistoric Indians, scientists said Tuesday.

"The bowl provides us with the best supported historic record from the Western Hemisphere of the supernova that created the Crab Nebula," said R. Robert Robbins, an astronomy professor at the University of Texas at Austin.

"In fact, the bowl is the most certain record of the supernova that has ever been discovered outside China and Japan," he said during the 176th meeting of the American Astronomical Society.

The white earthenware bowl, from the Mimbres Indian Classic Period between A.D. 1000 and A.D. 1150, also shows the black-painted figure of a rabbit curled into a crescent shape to symbolize the moon, Robbins said.

The rabbit is a god in the folklore of ancient cultures stretching down toward Central America, Robbins said.

In many Indian cultures in the New World, the rabbit commonly represents the moon because Indians tended to see a rabbit in the moon rather than a man in the moon, he said.

Chinese astronomers recorded the appearance of the Crab Nebula supernova in 1054 in the constellation Taurus. Their records showed the star was so bright it could be seen in the daytime for 23 days.

The supernova also was recorded by the Japanese, Robbins said.

Steve Maran, senior staff scientist at the Goddard Space Flight Center at Greenbelt, Md., said the supernova also was noticed in Bagdad, where it was recorded in an 11th century medical publication.

The Mimbres bowl is decorated with a small black-painted sunburst with 23 rays at one of the rabbit's rear feet.

The 23 rays represent the 23 days that the supernova was clearly visible during the day, Robbins said.

The Crab Nebula is a huge cloud of gas in space that is the remnant of the supernova. Supernovas are dying stars that blow up and eject matter in all directions.

Astronomers believe that all but the lightest elements in the universe were created by supernovas, and therefore planets and all life on them are made of star dust from the ancient explosions.

The Crab Nebula is about 6 light years wide and about 6,500 light years from Earth. One light year equals almost 6 trillion miles, which is the distance light travels in one year.

American astronomers discovered early in this century that the Crab Nebula is expanding at a rate implying an explosion beginning about 900 years ago when first seen from Earth.

A computer analysis shows the position of the sunburst and the rabbit generally coincides with the location of the supernova and the crescent moon on the morning of July 5, 1054, Robbins said.

"It shows us how sophisticated these people were," Robbins said.

"I think if people would go outside and look up at the sky and begin to watch, they'd begin to realize how much effort and how much ingenuity and thought ... it takes to really be able to understand celestial phenomena," he said.

The Mimbres lived in small farming villages in what is now southwestern New Mexico.

Their early bowls contained mostly geometric designs suggestive of lightning and water. But the Classic period depicted rabbits, deer and other animals found in the Mimbres Valley.

University of Texas astronomers recently announced that a centuries-old painting on a burial bowl by New Mexican Indians is one of only a few references to the creation of the Crab Nebula. Unearthed in the 1930s, researchers initially didn't understand the significance of the painted image.

AP Laserphoto

The figures showed scenes such as hunting, fishing, making love and giving birth, Robbins said.

The figures also are linked to the heavens, said Robbins and his colleague, Russell Westmoreland, a photo technician in the University of Texas at Austin's astronomy department who helped make the supernova-bowl link.

The bowl was from a village called Galaz, which was excavated by scientists from the University of Minnesota, Robbins said.

The bowl was found in the 1930s under 5 feet of earth in a burial room, he said.

Westmoreland said he was researching links between Mimbres pottery and astronomy at the time he showed a movie two years ago on the Crab Nebula. The rabbit-and-the-star bowl was in the back of his mind.

Robbins said that at the time, Westmoreland was a student of his in an archaeo-astronomy class.

"For a term paper, he wanted to write about the pottery of the Mimbres and whether or not he could find any astronomy in it," Robbins said. "He did find some astronomy in it, starting with the rabbit."

Futures drop

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices dropped toward the end of trading Thursday to lose gains made earlier in the session on short covering and concerns about dropping supplies.

The contract for July delivery of WTI fell 45 cents to $17.13 a 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercentile Exchange. Later contract months posted smaller losses.

When the market reached $17.94 a barrel, buyers began to disappear, said Peter Beutel, who follows the oil market for Merrill Lynch.

Beutel said the buying was generated by short-covering, lower production numbers on other grades of oil and a refinery strike in Brazil.

S&L owner

DALLAS (AP) — Donald Dixon rode the Texas boom to the top of an S&L empire in a few short years, living a life of luxury and hobnobbing with the powerful. His decline was just as fast and steep.

Dixon

Since federal regulators forced him from the controls of Vernon Savings and Loan Association in 1986, seven of the thrift's former officers and employees have been convicted on bank fraud charges.

And on Thursday Dixon himself surrendered to the FBI on 38 counts including conspiracy, fraud and furthering racketeering.

Gold plunges

NEW YORK (AP) — Gold prices fell sharply Thursday while the dollar finished mostly higher in domestic dealings.

Gold bullion lost about $5 a troy ounce. On the Commodity Exchange in New York, gold bullion for current delivery settled at $346.80 a troy ounce.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 153.53 Japanese yen. The British pound was quoted at $1.7080 late in London.

Dollar rates in New York: 1.6948 West German marks; 1.4355 Swiss francs; 5.7015 French francs; 1,244.50 Italian lire; and 1.1713 Canadian dollars.

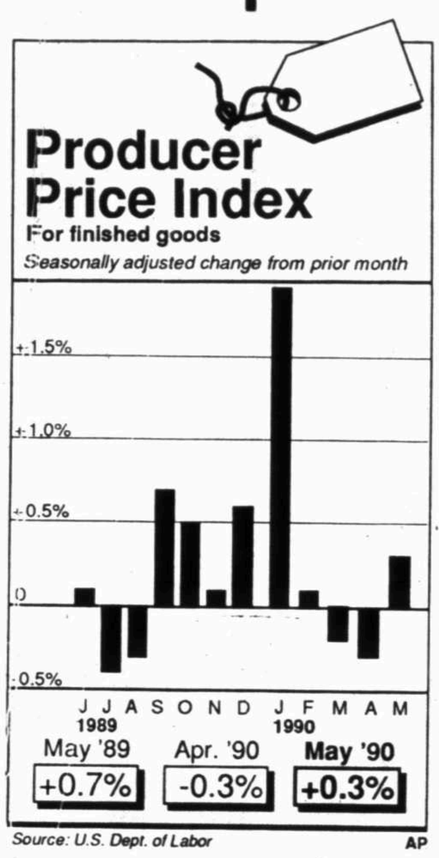
Southland payoff

DALLAS (AP) — Debt-ridden Southland Corp., owner of 7,000 7-Eleven convenience stores, said today it has worked out a revised proposal to pay off bondholders and preferred stockholders, and also said it would miss an interest payment due June 15 on its public debt.

Southland called the proposal the first step of a two-part debt and equity restructuring plan. In March, the company agreed to sell a controlling interest to its Japanese partners, Ito-Yokado Co. Ltd. and 7-Eleven Japan Co. Ltd., for $400 million and the assumption of debt.

Southland reported a first quarter loss of $69.4 million.

Cheaper energy helps wholesale prices



■ Overall wholesale prices were held to a moderate 0.3 percent by a fourth consecutive drop in energy prices, which analysts viewed as encouraging news on the inflation front.

By Karen Ball

WASHINGTON (AP) — A fourth consecutive drop in energy prices helped offset higher food costs in May and hold overall wholesale prices to a moderate 0.3 percent increase, the government said Thursday.

Analysts viewed the soft increase in the Labor Department's Producer Price Index for finished goods as encouraging news on the inflation front, especially given last winter's huge price gains caused by a severe cold snap. That freeze sent wholesale prices spiraling 1.9 percent in January for a 15-year record.

"We're back on trend after the wiggles of December and January," said Donald Ratajczak, director of economic forecasting at Georgia State University in Atlanta.

"The inflationary fears that picked up in the winter months clearly did not have a good foundation," Ratajczak said.

The report should help dampen inflation worries for the Federal Reserve, which has been under pressure to ease its inflation-fighting campaign and lower interest rates, analysts said. Still, most analysts expected no immediate shift in the central bank's policy.

"The question is how long does the Fed feel it can keep the economy subdued? They may say, 'Let's keep our nose to the grindstone on inflation and really see a payoff,'" said Robert Dederick, chief economist at the Northern Trust Co. of Chicago.

On Wall Street, investors took the inflation report as a disappointing sign that the Fed would not move anytime soon to relax interest rates. By midday, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 12.62 to 2,917.08.

Many economists were awaiting the government's data on consumer prices, due out Friday, for a better picture of the nation's inflation situation.

Consumer prices, up at an annual rate of 6.8 percent for the first four months of 1990, have been rising at a steeper pace than wholesale costs. Producer prices reflect only the cost of goods while consumer prices are heavily influenced by the cost of services.

For the first five months of the year, overall inflation at the wholesale level was running at a 4.0 percent annual rate, down from 4.8 percent for all of 1989, the government said.

Over the past 12 months, wholesale prices have risen a modest 3.1 percent.

"This report shows that we are neither veering into recession or are we in a situation where inflation is accelerating rapidly," said Ron Schreibman of the National Association of Wholesaler-Distributors.

In May, energy prices dropped 1 percent after having fallen by even larger amounts the previous three months. Gasoline prices were down 2.1 percent and fuel oil fell 6.2 percent. Natural gas increased 0.9 percent.

Food costs overall were up 0.6 percent after having declined by that amount the previous two months.

Excluding the volatile food and energy sectors, prices rose a mild 0.2 percent, the identical increase of a month before. Economists often consider this "core" number a better indicator of underlying inflationary pressures on the economy.

The various changes put the index for all finished goods at 117.7 in May. That means a hypothetical selection of goods that cost $100 in 1982 cost $117.70 last month, up from $114.20 a year earlier.

Price pressures in earlier stages of the production process were down in May. Intermediate goods and crude goods both fell 0.1 percent. An example of the three processing stages would be bread for finished goods, flour for intermediate and wheat for crude.

State offices headed to Midland or Odessa

■ A Senate bill organizing the Texas Workman's Compensation Commission will result in jobs for Midland or Odessa, but it will be a month before the selection.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Midland, along with Odessa, is in line to gain two offices and 15 employees of the newly organized Workers' Compensation Commission.

The Commission plans to establish both a regional and a field office in the Midland-Odessa area and whether or not the offices will be in Midland or Odessa should be known within four weeks.

"We don't know if the office will be in Midland or Odessa," said Linda McKee, a spokesman for the Workers' Compensation Commission. She explained that as a state agency it would be necessary to place lease specifications with the General Services Administration, which would in turn seek bids for the offices.

The Midland-Odessa Regional Office of the Workers' Compensation Commission would employ three and be responsible for field offices in El Paso, Del Rio, San Angelo, Abilene, Lubbock and Midland-Odessa. It would be one of four regional offices in the state, with Houston, Dallas and San Antonio having the other regional offices.

Midland-Denver air service explained

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The newly created direct air service from Midland to Denver could result in a direct, non-stop flight if demand increases, said a spokesman for American Airlines.

"We keep a close watch on loadings," said Gary E. Baker at a press conference Thursday to explain the new service. "I have notice a definite increase in demand for Midland to Denver service within the past four or five months, and if it continues to increase it could result in a direct, non-stop flight."

He noted that summer and winter vacation travel, along with increased business travel could increase the loadings. Currently about 35 to 40 passengers load out each day, destined for Denver, accounting for nearly one-third of a total plane load. "Economics just don't permit a direct, non-stop flight at this time, but we are always looking."

American Airlines announced Wednesday that it would initiate direct, one-stop service from Midland to Denver, with a brief stop in Dallas.

American Airlines says flight 861 which will originate at Midland is a flight that formerly originated at Corpus Christi. "We found there weren't that many passengers boarding at Corpus Christi for Denver and moved it to Midland," said Baker.

Formerly, passengers going to Denver from Midland had to change plans at

Midland cost of living continues to increase

Staff Report

The cost of living in the Tall City continues to rise, according to figures from ClayDesta National Bank.

The bank's monthly survey found that Midland's cost of living rose 0.4 percent in May, continuing April's trend. Annualized, Midland's rate of inflation would be 4.9 percent.

Odessa's cost of living rose a ninth consecutive month, 0.2 percent.

The only category to show a decrease in May was utilities, which fell 5.7 percent, the second consecutive drop. Electric bills fell 15.1 percent and were assisted by a 0.3 percent drop in gas bills, which fell a third consecutive month. Water rates remained stable, also for a third consecutive month.

Clothing costs showed the sharpest increase, climbing 4 percent last month as higher price tags were seen across the board. Higher price tags for women's apparel broke a two-month trend, while costs for men's wear had been lower in April. Children's clothing costs were higher for a second consecutive month.

A third month of higher gasoline prices helped fuel a 2.3 percent rise in transportation costs in May, reversing April's decline.

For the fifth month in a row, Midland residents paid more for health care costs, which rose 2 percent. A fifth consecutive increase in prices for non-prescription medicine, combined with a second month of higher costs for a doctor's care, caused the increase.

Food at home costs rose 0.4 percent as decreases in prices for produce were offset by higher prices for meat, shelf items and alcoholic beverages.

Higher rental costs helped reverse April's decline in housing costs, which rose 0.4 percent in May.

The cost of eating out in May remained stable after three months of increases.

Organization studies auto insurance rates

By Jane Bryant Quinn

Quinn

NEW YORK–The hard way to find good auto insurance is to study up, learn the angles to every provision and compare six policies point by point. But who has time for that? The easy way is to follow the advice of the National Insurance Consumer Organization (NICO), which has done the studying for you.

NICO suggests that you start with a quote from State Farm (which sells through its own agents) and GEICO (selling by mail from Washington D.C.; call 800-841-3000). Both companies tend to fall in the lower price range. Present or former military officers, including their spouses, widows and widowers, should try USAA in San Antonio, Tex. (800-531-8080). Officers' grown children can insure with a USAA subsidiary, which charges slightly more.

A few consumer-minded state-insurance commissioners publish price guides, showing what the various auto-insurance companies charge. It's a true public service–something all states should do, since they have each company's rates on file. To see if your state has a buyer's guide, call the insurance commissioner's office in the state capital. Some policies are cheaper than others by 25 percent or more.

Some more tips for saving money on auto insurance:

■ Buy a car that's cheap to repair. Your insurance agent can tell you which cars are money-eaters and which aren't.

■ Raise the deductible on your collision insurance from $250 to $500. On an older or battered car, collision coverage is a waste of money. Your insurer won't pay one dime more than the car is worth–as I was reminded just recently, when I found I'd been carrying a collision policy on a car worth only $162.92. Your car's fair market value equals its book value, minus the cost of making repairs, minus a charge for unusually high mileage.

■ Earn a discount, by insuring all your cars with the same company and by buying your homeowner's or tenant's insurance there, too. There may be additional small discounts for teenagers who take driver education; teetotalers; nonsmokers; senior citizens; families whose kid drivers go to schools more than 100 miles away (so they can't get at the car!), cars with four-wheel antilock braking systems, drivers who car pool, and so on. Your insurance agent will have a list.

■ Tell your insurance company about any changes that might lower your rate. For example, you should pay less when: The young driver in your family graduates from college and leaves home. You retire and stop using your car for commuting. You start car pooling or move closer to your place of work. You install an anti-theft device. You move from the city to the country. You divorce, and your spouse (with all the speeding tickets) stops using your car.

■ Share your car with your teenager (if you can stand it). When teens have their own cars, or drive your car more than half of the time, they're "principal drivers" and cost more to insure. They cost less when they're "occasional drivers," using your car less than half the time.

■ Drive safely. Your rates go up if your record shows convictions for drunk driving, "chargeable accidents" (meaning they're at least partly your fault), other motor-vehicle violations or several speeding tickets. If you once had a poor record, but have driven safely for a year or two, you should qualify for coverage at a lower rate.

■ Make all valid claims. Drivers may not make small claims on their company, for fear of driving up their insurance rates. But those little accidents might make no difference to the price at all.

For example, you're normally not "charged" for certain types of physical damage, like a windshield broken by flying gravel; for accidents caused by animals; for accidents that aren't your fault; and for claims below a certain limit, like $300 or $600, even if you were at fault. Ask your company for a detailed statement, in writing, of what claims make your rates go up.

OFFICE: Handle hearings in 14 surrounding counties

(From 1C)

The Midland-Odessa field office would employ 12 and would handle workers' compensation claims and hearings in Andrews, Martin, Howard, Midland, Ector, Reagan, Crane, Reeves, Loving, Winkler, Glasscock, Upton, Ward and Pecos counties. In all there will be 25 field offices around the state. The number of employees could increase, depending on the case load, says the Workers' Compensation Commission.

The regional office will be open by August 27 and the Midland field office is scheduled to open September 1. Other field offices in the region would be phased in over a three year period. San Angelo would be opened in 1992 and Del Rio in March of 1993.

The new offices are the result of Senate Bill No. 1 which was passed December 13, 1989 and mandated the reorganization of the Texas Industrial Accident Board into the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission.

SERVICE: Flights to Denver could expand

(From 1C)

DFW, but will now remain on the same plane. Baker said the fare would be the same, and that passengers would have a 45 minute stop at DFW, and would be permitted to leave the plane if they desired.

The flight from Midland to Denver will leave at 6:30 a.m., arriving at Denver at 9:31 a.m. The return flight from Denver to Midland will leave at 6:12 p.m., arriving at Midland at 11:08 p.m.

A survey recently commissioned by Midland International Airport showed that Midland to Denver was the sixth most frequently route, primarily because both cities are oil centers.

The last direct, non-stop service to Midland was provided by Continental Airlines and discontinued in 1988.

Government prepares second S&L auction

By Dave Skidmore

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is offering personalized computer lists of properties as it begins the second phase of its campaign to sell repossessed savings and loan real estate.

Beginning Thursday, the Resolution Trust Corp. will accept offers on 35,908 properties valued originally at $14.9 billion. More than half the properties — 19,067 with a value of $10.2 billion — are in Texas. The rest are scattered through 45 other states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.

The RTC, set up by the government to oversee the restructuring of troubled savings and loan associations is offering mostly residential parcels — 29,977 properties. But it is also listing 232 pieces of land and 5,699 commercial properties.

"We have everything available from a $15,000 pool hall in Houston to uranium mines," said Lamar C. Kelly Jr., RTC director of asset and real estate management.

The inventory being released Thursday is current through March 31. In January, RTC released its first list of 30,123 properties, current through Sept. 30. The agency has sold 13,200 of those, leaving about 17,000 to be carried over to its new list.

The first list generated a huge response. The agency sold 180,000 sets of the bulky volumes.

Kelly said RTC hopes a new marketing strategy — using computers — will expose the agency's real estate to 10 times as many buyers.

Paper copies of the inventory will no longer be available for sale, although potential real estate buyers can review a copy at 1,400 libraries across the country. Callers can find out which library is closest to them by calling 1-800-431-0600.

The RTC is encouraging small investors to call a toll-free number, 1-800-RTC-3006, to request a list of the type of properties in which they are interested. A retiree in Michigan, for instance, could ask for a list of condominiums in St. Petersburg, Fla.

The RTC will provide up to three such personalized lists for $5 plus a 10-cent-per-property fee for packages of more than 50 properties.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Beware of 'hi-yield' mutual fund shares

By Bill Doyle

Q. Beginning in April 1986, I made a stupid investment. Over a 13-month period, I put $100,000 into a "government hi-yield" mutual fund. The monthly dividends, which I had been reinvesting to buy additional shares, were good and produce an annual yield of 9.63 percent on my investment. But when I realized what was happening to my principal, I started taking my dividends by check.

My average cost, based on my original investment and the dividends I reinvested, is $10.09 per share. The shares can be redeemed today at $7.10. I intend to get out of this and invest the money more wisely. Should I redeem all the shares at one time or should I redeem them gradually?

Thanks for not publishing names or even home towns of readers whose letters appear in your column. I would hate for my friends to realize I have been so stupid as to follow the advice of the broker who put me into this.

Doyle

A. Don't be too harsh on yourself. Many, many investors were suckered into buying shares of mutual funds holding bonds and having words such as "hi-yield," "high-yield" and "income plus" in their names. As those monikers indicate, such funds aim at providing high dividend yields. Most have done just that.

But their share values have been different stories. Virtually all funds of that type have been investment disasters, as their share values have plunged — many much worse than yours.

I can't fault your decision to unload that investment lemon. Warnings about the dangers of high-yield mutual funds have been sounded in this space for several years.

However, since you moved into that investment gradually, my suggestion is to get out the same way, thereby averaging the share price you receive. It's seldom wise move a large amount of money into or out of any investment in one shot.

Q. I have never understood why bond prices go in the opposite direction of interest rates. Can you explain?

A. The explanation is best done by an example.

Let's say you buy a 10 percent $1,000 face value bond issued today by XYZ Corp. Your purchase price is $1,000. Interest is paid as a percent of face value — also called "par"" value. So you collect $100 interest per year.

Now, let's say interest rates in the marketplace dip to 9 percent six months from now. If XYZ Corp. then comes out with a new bond issue, it will have to pay only 9 percent to attract investors. An investor buying one of XYZ's 9 percent $1,000 face value bond will pay $1,000 but will receive only $90 annual interest.

That makes your bond more valuable. If you sell it in the open market, you will get approximately $1,100.

Conversely, if marketplace interest rises to 11 percent, no one who has any financial savvy whatsoever will pay $1,000 for your 10 percent bond. At that point, $1,000 invested in a newly issued bond would produce $1,100 annual interest. So if you sell your bond, the most you will receive will be about $900.

These sales numbers are not exact. They do not reflect brokers' commissions or markups and markdowns. Nor do they take into account the complicated calculation of "yield to maturity."

Ryan to start

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Rangers ace Nolan Ryan has a stress fracture in his back, but should be able to start against Seattle on Saturday.

Ryan

California Angels orthopedist Lewis Yocum says Ryan has a hairline break in a bone caused by overuse, The Dallas Morning News reported Thursday. Yocum has prescribed a change in the medication Ryan has been taking for back trouble, plus an exercise program.

Ryan is expected to throw some on Friday.

The 43-year-old pitcher went to Los Angeles Wednesday to be examined by Yocum. The visit had been scheduled for Tuesday, but Ryan postponed it after recording his sixth no-hitter the night before.

Ryan would be pitching Saturday in "Guaranteed No-Hitter Night," a promotion announced before Ryan's no-hitter on Monday. If neither pitcher tosses a no-hitter, Mariners fans will get a free ticket to another Kingdome game.

Make theirs a double

■ The Detroit Pistons leave no doubt that they are again the best team in professional basketball with a last-gasp victory at Portland.

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Nine straight points and a last-second jumper by Vinnie Johnson were what the Detroit Pistons needed to repeat as NBA champions and complete an improbable three-game sweep in Portland.

And they got it.

Johnson, held to one point for three periods, scored 15 in the fourth quarter, including a 15-footer with seven-tenths of a second left that gave the Pistons a 92-90 win and a 4-1 victory in the NBA Finals.

Johnson scored seven of the nine consecutive Pistons points in the last 1:50. The other two were by Isiah Thomas, the unanimous finals MVP, who scored 29 points in the final game and averaged 27.6 in the championship series.

The Pistons, only the third franchise to repeat as champions, trailed 90-83 with 2:07 left. Johnson had seven of those nine. Thomas scored the other two, a jumper with 36 seconds left that tied the score at 90-90.

"My shot couldn't have come at a better time," Johnson said. "Bill Laimbeer told me, 'I don't care if you miss 500 in a row, I'm still with you.' The shot felt good when it left my hand and it fell. I got real lucky."

Said Pistons coach Chuck Daly: "We got the Daly double. I wanted this one more than any of the last three trips. This team worked really hard."

The Pistons had lost 20 straight games in Portland since 1974, then won three straight on the Trail Blazers' court.

Thus, they became the first team ever to win five consecutive road games in the NBA Finals. In addition to winning the three at Portland, they completed a four-game sweep against the Los Angeles Lakers last season by capturing the final two games at the Forum.

Detroit is now 30-7 in its playoff runs to consecutive championships. Five of the losses were to Chicago in the 1989 and 1990 Eastern Conference finals. They lost once each to New York and Portland this year.

The only franchises besides Detroit to win consecutive titles are the Boston Celtics and Minneapolis-Los Angeles Lakers. Minneapolis did it in 1949-50 and 1953-54, the Celtics from 1959-1966 and 1968-69 and Los Angeles in 1987-88.

Thomas, Johnson and Joe Dumars combined for 153 points in the previous two games — an average of 25.5 apiece — but only Thomas was effective on Thursday until Johnson brought the Pistons back in the fourth quarter.

Mother Nature atop Open

N.Y. Times News Service

MEDINAH, Ill. — Perhaps the United States Golf Association fooled with Mother Nature a little too aggressively in making the Medinah No. 3 course a verdant torture chamber for the 90th United States Open.

Thursday, nature seemed to be striking back, as lightning flashed in the Chicago sky during an overnight thunderstorm, and one and a half inches of rain dropped onto Medinah's 7,195 yards.

With the downpour, the majestic golf course, which the officials had sharpened to a razor's edge, became as comfortable as a pincushion for the first round Thursday.

Tim Simpson and Jeff Sluman, with six-under-par 66s, led a cavalry charge of players who ran roughshod over Medinah. The course had provoked terror in practice rounds, and Simpson was so astounded at how much it had changed that he wondered about divine intervention.

"I had been hoping the greens would soften," said Simpson, who conceded that in his 14-year career he had rarely putted well on the ultraslick surfaces that are a staple of the United States Open. "I knew the USGA wouldn't do it, so God did it."

■ Moral victory declared as the United States holds World Cup favorite Italy to one goal.

Associated Press

ROME — The United States lost to Italy 1-0 in the World Cup Thursday night and, in almost every way, it was a victory.

No one gave the Americans a chance of staying close to the Italians, one of the best teams in the world. But the U.S. team hung tough and showed that it could handle itself at soccer's highest level.

"There are a lot of doubters in our country and in Europe and South America as well," U.S. coach Bob Gansler said. "I still think we have to gain respect from the media, from the referees, from a lot of folks. I think we took a giant step tonight."

Giuseppe Giannini scored in the 11th minute and, for the next hour, the Americans played as if they were content with only a one-goal loss, drawing strength after the Italians missed a penalty kick late in the first half.

But, in the 70th minute, the United States suddenly came to life, forcing Italy's Walter Zenga to make two diving saves.

After that, the Italian fans booed and whistled as the "Azzurri" — their name for the local team — didn't give U.S.

Ryan without equal in Ranger history

Anticipating Nolan Ryan's record-breaking sixth career no-hitter Monday night was a lot like waiting for the birth of a child. It was nerve-racking, but in the end, everything turned out beautifully.

Patterson

Having to work that night — and since the MRT is not equipped with a satellite dish — we, like most everyone, were forced to rely on ESPN, as well as the Associated Press sports wire.

ESPN was busy bringing us not-so-live coverage of the ever-so-exciting off-road vehicle championships or some such animal, and was apparently unable to provide live coverage.

(You'd think after spending all those millions to carry baseball, the folks at ESPN would be equipped to handle such emergencies. As a matter of fact, it's been said enough the last several years that Ryan's a threat to hurl blanks everytime he sets foot on the mound. So why were cameras not in place to catch the magic?)

Since ESPN couldn't do it, we were forced to check AP for any bulletins. Sure enough, there it came shortly after midnight. AP ran its bulletin shortly after ESPN broke in with taped footage of Willie Randolph fouling out for the final out.

I will say one thing: Seeing emotion from Ryan is about as good as it gets. He so rarely displays it that when he finally does, you know something of import is happening.

Watching Texas right fielder Ruben Sierra hurry for the final catch of the night, Ryan sticking his fist into the air, then being mobbed by his teamates and emitting that sly little smile of his, is worth watching over and over again.

What displays Ryan's apparent immortality on the mound even better than six career no-hitters is throwing no-hitters in three different decades, the only pitcher to ever achieve that feat. The first one came in May of 1973, a 3-0 win for California over the Kansas City Royals. The only team Ryan played for not represented by one his jewels is the New York Mets.

As a follower — and yes, I admit, a miserable, suffering fan — of the Rangers in each of their 19 futile years, it is safe to say that Ryan's no-hitter Monday is without equal when it comes to team highlights. Nothing even comes close.

And if there's anybody who needs to be seen in baseball before retirement creeps in — sometime in the next decade, perhaps? — it has to be Ryan.

They just don't make 'em like Nolan anymore.

As the Sherman Democrat said in a Tuesday editorial, "We often lament the loss of innocence in today's youth. The drugs, the permissive state of television and movies, the self-centered attitudes of today's entertainers and sports figures seem to have us on a one-way street. We can't find a turnaround. Then along comes a Nolan Ryan, and we realize that there really can be heroes today worth admiring ..."

From 1D

"This was much sweeter," than last year, Thomas said. "This is a special team."

Dumars, whose father died Sunday, was 2-for-13 from the field and scored eight points. Johnson was 0-for-3 and scored one point in the first three quarters, before going 6-for-8 in the final period.

"I want to go home and get this over with. I didn't want to play anymore," said Dumars, whose father will be buried in Louisiana on Saturday.

A dunk by Buck Williams by 2:07 left put Portland ahead 90-83, and it appeared the series would go back to Michigan. But Johnson converted a three-point play 17 seconds later, starting the decisive 9-0 run. The foul was the sixth on Clyde Drexler, who finished with 20 points.

Kevin Duckworth, who tied Terry Porter to lead Portland with 21 points in the final game, then missed two shots, allowing Detroit to take possession with 20 seconds left.

Thomas dribbled out most of the remaining time before Johnson took the clutch winning shot from 15 feet.

"We had control of the game until the final two minutes and you have to give Detroit credit, they made every shot when they had to," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "They're the champs and they deserve it."

Johnson scored eight consecutive points in a two-minute span, giving Detroit a 77-76 lead with 6:34 left after it trailed 76-69 at the 8:59 mark.

The game was tied three more times, including a drive by Williams that made it 81-81 with 5:27 to go and started an 11-2 run that gave Portland its short-lived 90-83 lead.

Thomas made nine of his first 12 shots, including two 3-pointers, and scored 20 points in the first 15:18 of the game, helping Detroit lead by as many as eight.

Portland came back to tie the score and then trailed by only four at halftime.

Duckworth had a three-point play and a jumper early in the second half, sparking an 8-2 run that Portland ahead 50-48. The lead changed four more times in the next three minutes — there were 18 in the game — before Porter made the second of his three 3-pointers in the third period giving the Trail Blazers a 58-55 lead with 6:07 left.

Porter, who had 10 points in the quarter, hit his third 3-pointer with 3.8 seconds left giving the Trail Blazers a 69-65 advantage.

Thomas made seven of nine shots and scored 15 points in the first period, carrying the Pistons to a 26-22 lead. Four of Thomas' seven baskets in the quarter put Detroit ahead, accounting for four of the nine lead changes in the first 12 minutes.

A 3-pointer by Danny Young and a tip-in by Kersey gave Portland a 27-26 edge early in the second quarter, but Thomas' second 3-pointer of the game keyed an 11-2 run that put Detroit ahead 37-29 with 7:34 left in the half.

Duckworth, meanwhile, made five baskets in 6:39, helping the Pistons tie the score 41-41 with 1:37 left in the period.

Dumars, who missed his first five shots, then made his only basket of the first half and converted a three-point play, helping Detroit take a 46-42 halftime lead.

The Pistons won the series opener 105-99, extending their playoff winning streak at home to 10 games, after trailing 90-80 with seven minutes left. Thomas scored 16 of his 33 points the rest of the way, including 14 in a five-minute span, to bring Detroit back.

A 30-15 run gave Portland a 53-45 halftime lead in the second game, but the Pistons came back again behind consecutive 3-pointers by Laimbeer to take an 89-86 lead with three minutes left.

The Trail Blazers forced overtime, but three more 3-pointers by Laimbeer, giving him six in the game, helped the Pistons lead 105-104 with 4.1 seconds to go. Two free throws with 2.1 seconds left by Drexler, who scored 33 points, put Portland in front for a 106-105 victory.

Portland, 9-0 at home in the playoffs, had a chance to win the championship with three more wins at Memorial Coliseum, but Detroit quickly canceled that scenario with a 121-106 victory in Game 3.

Thomas hit four 3-pointers and scored 22 of his 32 points in the third quarter.

Pirates strike early to win B League title

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The Northern Pirates scored 10 runs in the first two innings and went on to a 12-10 victory over the scrappy North Central Cubs to win Midland Little League's "B" city championship tournament Thursday at Sparks Park.

The Cubs made a comeback run late in the game, but when they look back on this one, it will be the first inning that will hurt their memory the most.

Northern scored five times with two outs in the top of the first to gain the early momentum as Blake Johnston knocked in two runs with a single and Joel Warren knocked in two more with a triple. Another run scored on an error.

Northern came back with another five spot in the second, which was highlighted by a montrouous three-run homer by Alex Jacobs. Jacobs' blast cleared some trees and a pick-up beyond the left field fence. Warren and Brent Winter also knocked in runs in the inning.

But despite the early lead and the look of a real rout, North Central came back with five runs in the third inning as Eric Clodfelter knocked in a couple of runs with a double and Matul Patel plated another with a single. Two other runs scored on Pirate errors.

In the fourth, the Pirates added to their big lead with two runs. One run scored on a Cub error and Brooks Stevens produced another run when Cody Elliott scored on a groundout by Brooks Stevens.

The Cubs stayed in the game with two runs in the fifth on a two-run triple by Jarrod Ellis.

Then the Cubs made a run toward victory with three runs in the sixth and final inning. Tyler Nobles had a run scoring single and Eric Clodfelter produced a run scoring double and later scored on a passed ball.

However, the Pirates countered by replacing Brent Winter with Brett Powell as pitcher and he got the next three batters to end the game and pick up the save. Winter got the victory. The Cubs' Eric Neatherlin took the loss.

Northern was unbeaten in four games to win the city championship tournament. North Central was 3-1 in the tournament.

The North Central Indians took the consolation title with a 4-2 win over the Mid-City Cardinals.

Barry Abel struckout 12 Cardinals to get the win. Losing pitcher Cody Marcum had eight strikeouts in a defensive gem by both teams.

The tournament ends the season for "B" league players.

Resurgent Sox suddenly become hot Chicago item

CHICAGO (AP) — The second-place Chicago White Sox are suddenly selling — and club officials and ticket scalpers alike are rejoicing as the division-leading Oakland A's open a four-game series Thursday.

"Everybody wants Sox tickets for the upcoming weekend, and we just weren't prepared for it," said a broker at North Shore Ticket Connection in Skokie who would identify himself only as Larry.

"This business is a lot like the commodities market — a lot of guesswork and hunches. And nobody expected the Sox to be hot."

This year many predicted the biggest draw to Comiskey Park would be nostalgia — it's the last season for the stadium, which is being torn down in favor of a new one across the street.

But Chicago's 36-20 record changed that, and set up the weekend battle between the defending champion A's and the youngsters on the South Side.

"This is certainly the biggest thing around here since the 1983 season," said White Sox spokesman Chuck Adams, referring to the year the club won the division by 20 games.

"We are being inundated," Adams said. "We have national media coming and calls for tickets flooding the office.

Fielder, Tigers get by Cleveland

Associated Press

Good hitters hit good pitches and Detroit's Cecil Fielder is proving to be one of the best hitters in the majors.

Fielder continued his feast on Cleveland pitching Thursday night with a tie-breaking two-run homer in the fifth inning that powered the Tigers t a 7-3 victory over the Indians.

The homer, on a 1-1 count, came on a wicked forkball from Sergio Valdez that broke down and probably out of the strike zone.

"He hit a very good pitch," Cleveland manager John McNamara said. "You talk to other people for advice and we try to pitch him with a lot of care. But he's hitting other people, too. That pitch might have been out of the strike zone. He just goes down and gets that pitch."

Fielder, who is 12-for-23 against Cleveland, broke a 3-3 tie with his major-league-leading 24th home run with two out and Tony Phillips on first with a walk. He also leads the majors with 59 RBIs and is hitting .329.

"My first two times at-bat he was just basically tricking me," Fielder said. "That time, I just took a chance that me might throw the forkball, and he did. I had to try something. The first two times up (strikeout and groundout) were terrible."

Mark Salas' third homer in the seventh and Lloyd Moseby's seventh an inning later off Rudy Seanez gave the Tigers insurance runs.

Fielder has five home runs — three in one game — and 11 RBIs in six games against Cleveland.

"It's no mistake for him," Detroit manager Sparky Anderson said. "He's so strong and he's got such fast hands. He's chasing, but he's working at laying off pitches. He could become a good hitter."

Detroit's Frank Tanana (5-4) allowed three runs and five hits in six innings for only his second victory at Tiger Stadium this year. Valdez (2-3) gave up six runs and six hits in seven innings.

Blue Jays 7, Twins 1

Pat Borders hit a tie-breaking three-run homer in the sixth inning and Dave Stieb won his fourth straight game as the Toronto Blue Jays beat Minnesota, the Twins' seventh straight loss.

Stieb (9-2) allowed five hits in seven innings, including a first-inning home run by Gene Larkin. Jim Acker and Duane Ward each pitched one scoreless inning. Loser Allan Anderson (2-9) yielded five runs and 10 hits in 6 2-3 innings and suffered his fifth straight loss.

Borders, who entered the game in an 0-for-11 skid, hit his ninth home run with two out and Kelly Gruber and Fred McGriff aboard via singles. Toronto made it 5-1 in the seventh on Manny Lee's double and a single by Junior Felix, who doubled home two more runs against Gary Wayne in the ninth.

The Blue Jays took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Felix singled, stole second, moved to third on a groundout and scored on Gruber's sacrifice fly. Minnesota tied it on Larkin's fourth homer.

AL Roundup

Yankees 3, Red Sox 1

Chuck Cary, knocked out in the first inning of his last start, held Boston to four hits and a run in seven innings as the New York Yankees beat the Boston Red Sox 3-1.

With the score tied 1-1, Jesse Barfield opened the seventh with a double, only the fifth hit off rookie Dana Kiecker (1-3), who struck out a career-high nine and did not walk a batter.

Barfield took third on Mel Hall's groundout against Rob Murphy and scored on Jerry Reed's wild pitch. Catcher John Marzano moved out for a pitchout but Reed threw the ball low and near the plate and it went to the backstop. The Yankees added an insurance run on a single by Jim Leyritz and Bob Geren's double.

Brewers 8, Orioles 5

The Milkwaukee Brewers blew a four-run lead, then defeated the Baltimore Orioles on Robin Yount's tie-breaking sacrifice fly in the seventh inning and a ninth-inning single by Gary Sheffield, who also stole home.

Bill Spiers opened the Milwaukee seventh with a single off reliever Brian Holton (2-2) and took second when Paul Molitor swung at a pitchout with Spiers running and grounded out. Spiers took third on a wild pitch and, after Sheffield walked, scored on Yount's sacrifice fly off Mark Williamson.

White Sox 3, Athletics 2

The Chicago White Sox climbed within a game of first-place Oakland in the American League West by defeating the Athletics and Dave Stewart as Lance Johnson singled home the decisive run in the second inning.

The game was the first of the season between the teams with the best records in the American League. The A's are 39-20, the White Sox 37-20.

Winner Eric King (6-1) gave up 10 hits but only one run in 5 2-3 innings.

Cohen Stadium already treat for surging Diablos

Staff Report

EL PASO — Cohen Stadium, El Paso's new minor league ball yard, isn't finished yet, but the Diablos like what they have seen in two games — victories.

The Diablos put a 6-2 loss on the Midland Angels here Thursday night in the opening night of a six-game series, and in the process, moved to a 2½-game lead over San Antonio and Wichita in the final week of the first half race in the Texas League. San Antonio and Wichita were rained out Thursday. El Paso beat Wichita in 10 innings Wednesday in the stadium debut.

Meanwhile, El Paso scored three times in the third to get all the runs they needed. Former Midland Angel/Cub Jesus Alfaro had a two-run single to highlight the Diablos' big inning.

Midland managed to score both its runs in the seventh on consecutive hits by Mark Howie, John Scurla and Barns.

Glenn Carter, 1-5, took the loss for Midland.

The two teams meet again today at 8:30 p.m. (CST) with Mark Holzemer, 1-7, going for Midland against Cal Eldred, 1-2.

NL to expand, but officials won't release city names

Associated Press

CLEVELAND (AP) — The National League expects groups in at least a dozen cities to apply for the two franchises that will be added to the league in 1993.

"We have no way of knowing for sure until we have responses from our questionnaires," expansion committee chairman Douglas Danforth said Thursday after baseball owners announced their expansion timetable.

"There are, for sure, six or seven cities. We're 'guesstimating' there may be 12 or 14."

The committee will begin ferreting out the leading contenders next month. Questionnaires will be sent to interested groups, and any serious applicants that emerge will be invited for presentations in New York by the end of September.

A short list of three to five finalists will be selected by the end of the year, and committee members will visit those cities in the first quarter of 1991. The committee will present recommendations to owners next June, and the winners will be chosen by Sept. 30, 1991.

The new franchises can begin fielding minor league teams as early as 1992, and they will participate in the June 1992 amateur draft.

In November 1992, an expansion draft will be held, with each of the new franchises choosing 36 players off the rosters of existing NL teams. Each existing team will lose six players.

"We're going to play ball in 1993," Danforth said. "What we'll leave open is the structure of the minor league system prospective owners might have in place at that time."

The entry fee to be paid by each franchise will be set by next month.

The American League's Seattle Mariners and Toronto Blue Jays were baseball's last expansion teams, in 1977. The Mariners paid $6.25 million and the Blue Jays $7 million as their entry fees.

The last two NL expansion teams, Montreal and San Diego, paid $10 million each to join in 1969. The 1993 entries will likely have to pay $50 million to $75 million, and possibly as much as $100 million.

They also will not share in revenues from the current TV contract, which runs through 1993. They will participate in the next one.

Suggestions that St. Petersburg-Tampa, Denver, Buffalo or any other city has a lock on a franchise were premature, Danforth said.

"Everybody is starting from the gate at the same time," he said. "No one has a leg up at this time."

NL president Bill White said owners of expansion teams must have the money "to be able to support a major league baseball franchise through a few years of possible losses."

"We would prefer a baseball only stadium and a grass field," White said. "If it's a multi-purpose facility, baseball must be the prime tenant. Obviously, if you have a place that's going to have 100-degree temperatures every day, you're going to want the fans to be comfortable."

A city may be considered even if it does not have a suitable stadium currently, as long as there are assurances a new field will be built within a year or two after the team begins playing, Danforth said.

Geographic concerns are not as important as the stability of prospective owners, he said. It would be possible, for instance, for both new teams to be located in the eastern half of the country; the two NL divisions could be realigned to accommodate the newcomers.

"We're not going to worry about the relative geographic locations at this juncture," he said.

Buffalo is the smallest of the three leading contenders, with 1.2 million people in its metropolitan area, and it is surrounded by major league teams in Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Toronto.

Denver has 1.8 million people and St. Petersburg-Tampa has 2 million; neither is near another big-league team.

Reds escape with win over Braves

Associated Press

Barry Larkin singled home Paul O'Neill with two outs in the ninth inning to give the Cincinnati Reds a 4-3 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

O'Neill started the rally with a two-out walk from Joe Boever (1-3), and took third on Billy Hatcher's single to left, his fourth hit of the game.

Larkin fell behind in the count 0-and-2, took two balls, then lined a single to center.

The Reds took a 3-2 lead into the ninth, but Rob Dibble (4-1) gave up the tying run as Dale Murphy snapped out of series-long slump. Dibble has blown five of his 11 save opportunities this season.

Ron Gant singled with one out and moved to second on Jim Presley's groundout. Murphy, 2-for-15 with seven strikeouts in the four-game series, then grounded the first pitch up the middle to score Gant and tie the game.

The start of the game was delayed 43 minutes by rain, and a shower brought another 34-minute delay after Hatcher opened the bottom of the first with a single.

NL Roundup

Larkin forced Hatcher at second, and Chris Sabo doubled down the third-base line for a 1-0 lead. Eric Davis walked, and Glenn Braggs hit a soft single to right to score Sabo and send Davis to third. Todd Benzinger's groundout scored Davis.

Sabo is 18-for-36 (.500) with four homers and 10 RBIs this season against the Braves.

A walk to Murphy and singles by Jeff Blauser and Greg Olson gave Atlanta a run in the second, and Jeff Treadway's infield single with the bases loaded in the sixth cut the lead to 3-2. Sabo prevented further damage by making a diving stop on Gant's grounder and forcing Treadway at second to end the inning.

It was just another missed opportunity for Atlanta, which stranded seven runners in scoring position in the first eight innings.

Giants 6, Padres 2

Kevin Mitchell doubled twice and drove in three runs as the San Francisco Giants beat the San Diego Padres.

The win gave the Giants a sweep of the three-game series in San Diego and brought their record for June to 12-1. San Francisco has won 14 of its last 15 and trails San Diego by just one-half game for second in the NL West.

The Padres led 2-0 against Francisco Oliveras, making his first National League start. Garry Templeton homered with two outs in the second, his fifth of the season, and Tony Gwynn tripled and scored in the third on Joe Carter's single.

Hurst (3-6) who hasn't won a game since May 18, walked Brett Butler and Rick Parker to start the inning.

The Giants scored their finals runs on Mitchell's second double and Carter's solo homer to lead off the ninth off reliever Mark Grant.

Expos 3, Cardinals 2

Mike Fitzgerald singled home the tying run with two outs and Tim Raines drew a bases-loaded walk from Ken Dayley as the Montreal Expos scored twice in the ninth inning to beat the St. Louis Cardinals.

It was the fourth consecutive loss for the Cardinals and the second straight time they blew a ninth-inning lead.

Tom Niedenfuer (0-2) relieved starter Bryn Smith to start the ninth with a 2-1 lead. Larry Walker led off with a single and Spike Owen walked with one out.

Foreman to use new 'belly bump' if all fails

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — The word is out on how George Foreman is going to fight Adilson Rodrigues.

"When I miss him with my right hand, then with my left, I'm going to belly bump him," said the 41-year-old Foreman, who has brought the middle-aged spread to boxing.

Introduced by promoter Don King as "The Rip Van Winkle fighter who went to sleep for 10 years," Foreman stole the show at Thursday's news conference for his fight against Rodrigues and for Mike Tyson's comeback against Henry Tillman on Saturday night.

"I'm still growing," said the former heavyweight champion, expected to weigh 260 pounds for the 22nd fight of his unbeaten comeback.

"When I first got into boxing, it was about fame and fortune," said Foreman, who won the Olympic heavyweight title in 1968 and was world champion in 1973-74. "Now it's about eating — and fame and fortune."

Foreman is getting $1 million, while Tyson is getting $3 million for his first fight since he lost the heavyweight title to James "Buster" Douglas in Tokyo on Feb. 11.

The 29-year-old Tillman is getting $350,000 and Rodrigues $175,000.

"In order to become a great fighter, you have to fight great fighters," said the 29-year-old Tillman, who outpointed Tyson in three-round bouts at the 1984 Olympic Trials and boxoffs. Tillman won a gold medal at the Olympics in Los Angeles.

Since turning pro in 1985, the 23-year-old Tyson has won 37 of 38 fights, including 10 heavyweight title matches. Tillman is 20-4 since turning pro in December 1984. Many of his fights were as a cruiserweight (195 pounds), and he has fought only four times since 1987.

One question that may be answered on Saturday is what effect Tyson's knockout loss to Douglas has had.

"I'm in a great frame of mind," Tyson, who appeared relaxed and in good spirits at the news conference, said. "I'm in the best shape I've been in long time. I'm going to glow on the 16th."

Both scheduled 10-round fights in a 15,374-seat outdoor arena at Caesars Palace will be televised by HBO.

The Foreman-Rodrigues fight will begin about 9 p.m. CDT. Tyson is to meet Tillman at about 10:15 p.m.

Foreman's 69th fight — he has won 66 — will be his third of the year.

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Jeff Smulyan likes to be different when it comes to Seattle Mariners promotions. When he scheduled "Guaranteed No-Hitter Night" in the Kingdome for Saturday, the owner got lucky as well.

Pitching for the visiting Texas Rangers that night will be none other than Nolan Ryan, who threw a record sixth career no-hitter Monday night in Oakland.

"Jeff's timing is impeccable," said Matt Young, who's scheduled to start for the Mariners against Ryan.

If neither Ryan nor Young (1-7) pitches a no-hitter, fans attending the game can use their ticket stubs for a $4.50 general admission seat at a game with the California Angels on July 11.

"So basically, it's a two-games-for-one deal or you get two shots to see a no-hitter," Aust said.

The Mariners didn't schedule "Guaranteed No-Hitter Night" until last Saturday — after flirting with a second no-hitter in a week.

Russ Swan had a no-hitter through seven innings in Detroit, where the Mariners won 5-2. The previous Saturday night, June 2, Randy Johnson pitched the first no-hitter in the Mariners' 14-year history, beating the Tigers 2-0 in the Kingdome.

"Looks like every Saturday, so we thought we'd have some fun," Smulyan said.

Smulyan, in his first year as owner, is also 43.

"He's an inspiration to us all. I've even thought about playing, but our scouts tell me to stay where I am."

Aust said he first heard Smulyan talk about "Guaranteed No-Hitter Night" during a winter promotional tour.

"He said, 'We have a lot of crazy ideas, like a guaranteed no-hitter night,' At the time, I just looked at him and said, 'What's he talking about?'

"But Jeff's not a traditionalist when it comes to marketing a baseball club," Aust said. "He understands we have to do the little extra things in this market. He's not afraid of new things. He likes to be a trendsetter."

Dave Niehaus, who's broadcast Mariners games since the team was formed, said he has never heard of such a promotion.

"When they first told me last Saturday night, I didn't know what they were talking about. But it's show business, you know. We're in show business."

Niehaus broadcast Ryan's first no-hitter for the Angels in 1973.

"I wouldn't go out on a limb to predict a no-hitter," he said. "But I know every time Nolan Ryan goes out to the mound, there's that possibility."

Young, with a fat 4.63 earned run average, will try to end a string of four consecutive defeats.

"I think this will turn around for me soon," he said. "Things have got to change. I feel good that I've been keeping us in games."

No-hitter aside, Young doesn't even have a one-hitter in the big leagues. He did pitch a two-hitter for the Mariners at Yankee Stadium in 1983.

Copley News Service

The Cincinnati Reds should have figured it was a bad omen when their chartered flight had to circle San Francisco's airport for an hour on the Sunday night they had to wait for a landing by Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's advance party.

In the next three days, the runaway National League West leaders scored only four runs in three games against the Giants, losing 10-1, 6-1 and 3-2.

It was the first time in almost a third of the season that the Reds had lost more than two in a row, or more than two straight against any one opponent. Afterward, Manager Lou Piniella complained that his hitters weren't being aggressive enough, especially with runners on base.

As of June 8, however, the Reds were 9-6 in a stretch calling for 18 road games. They're still comfortably ahead without much help from Eric Davis, who was hitting .202 for the season after leaving the disabled list two weeks ago.

Led by Rey Quinones and Ken Griffey Sr., Cincinnati pinch hitters have batted .323 (20-for-62). Also, the Reds are getting the best pitching in the majors with a 2.92 staff earned-run average.

But the Giants' sweep revived NL West title hopes in San Diego and Los Angeles, as well San Francisco.

The Giants were 14½ games out of first only recently, but had closed to 11½ with a six-game winning streak.

The return of Don Robinson from the disabled list, a return to form by Scott Garrelts and surprising performances by rookie John Burkett have stabilized San Francisco's rotation.

Also, Will Clark, Kevin Mitchell and Matt Williams are hitting better than most realize. Clark's average is down, but he is on a pace to finish with 30 homers and 117 RBI. Mitchell is on a pace for 45 homers, two fewer than last year, and 87 RBI. Williams already had nine homers.

The Giants are disappointed that right fielder Kevin Bass will miss most of the remaining games following surgery on his left knee. But replacements Rick Leach, Mike Kingery and Rick Parker have combined to bat .339.

MANAGING THE YANKEES

Matt Nokes had the dubious distinction recently of playing for three managers in as many days. On June 4, he said goodbye to Sparky Anderson after Detroit traded Nokes to the Yankees. The next day, Nokes was welcomed by Bucky Dent. The following day, the Yankees replaced Dent with Stump Merrill. Dent's departure bothered Don Mattingly, among others.

"I've said year after year that we've got to get some continuity in this organization," said Mattingly. "Somebody's got to stay for a while."

George Steinbrenner has made 18 managerial changes in his 18 seasons as Yankees owner. The Yankees were playing in Boston when Dent was cashiered.

Copley News Service

MEDINAH — At age 34, Tim Simpson has gained a new attitude about himself, his golf game and his life.

Put additional emphasis on the word "game." True, Simpson does make a living playing golf. He has been for 14 years now. But several events — one in particular — convinced him not to take it too seriously.

The change began about 3 years ago when Simpson's wife, Kathy, had just given birth to their second child, daughter Katie. Something wasn't right.

"Katie wasn't expected to live," Simpson said. "It was a fluke thing. They had to do an emergency Caesarean section. The doctor came running out and said 'You can come with us if you want. We're going to intensive care. There's an 80 percent chance she (Katie) won't live.'

"I'm standing there, watching them work on my daughter, trying to keep her alive. And I'm standing there thinking, 'Why is golf so important? Why's it the most important thing in your life? Your life's gotten out of hand.'

"And I think it had. Golf had consumed me. My moods and feelings were dictated by how I was playing. It made me realize that life was more than golf."

Don't misunderstand. Simpson was "tickled" to shoot a Medinah No. 3 course-record 66 in Thursday's first round of the United States Open. But this Georgian has a lot more than golf on his mind now.

"I just don't take it as seriously anymore," he said. "I want to do my best. I want to play great. I want to win championships.

"But I realize that when I shoot a bad round, the sun's gonna come up tomorrow. And I've got a little girl (and son Christoper, 6) who's happy and healthy. She lived and beat the odds. My family's the most important thing to me.

"That was a pretty good slap in the face and turned me in the right direction."

Another, more golf-oriented change took place about two years ago. Simpson tended to eat himself up in self-criticism if things didn't go just so — especially on the greens.

A lengthy session with sports psychologist Dr. Bob Rotella provided Simpson with a much-needed change in attitude.

"He (Rotella) talks about it more than I do," Simpson said. "I basically had to make the commitment to turn my whole life around.

"To change ingrained habits of the way you think about your putting, thinking you're not a good putter and being too hard on yourself. I had to make the commitment to being positive, win, lose or draw. It's tough. We all get down.

"In a nutshell, the difference in me the last two years has been how to get out of my own way. I was too hard on myself."

So Tim Simpson will try to maintain the even keel for the balance of U.S. Open weekend. While he wouldn't admit it, an Open title would be a grand victory for a guy who's never won in 14 years on the tour.

"It's a major, but it's just another tournament to a lot of us," Simpson said. "We have to keep doing the same things we've been doing."

Nightmare Medinah turns dream course for golfers

MEDINAH, Ill. (AP) — So much for the toughest U.S. Open course ever. For one day, at least, Medinah was the easiest.

Exactly a quarter of the 156-man field broke par. Add the others who simply matched par and the barrage appears this great: Defending champion Curtis Strange, at the 1-over he had predicted would be near the lead, found himself instead seven shots back with more than a third of the field in front of him.

Altogether, there were 39 subpar rounds, an incredible 15 more than the previous Open record, set in 1985 at Oakland Hills in Birmingham, Mich.

Most of the par-busting came in the morning, when 23 players took advantage of a course softened by heavy overnight rains.

The total broke down like this: three course-record 66s, two 67s, two 68s, four 69s, 12 70s and 16 71s. There were 21 par rounds of 72.

The U.S. Open may be one of golf's major events, but you wouldn't have known it by the leaderboard after the first round.

The names on top definitely had a commoner's ring: Tim Simpson, Scott Simpson, Jeff Sluman, Mike Donald, Steve Jones, John Huston and Mark Brooks.

Jack Nicklaus, bidding to become the first golfer to win the Open in four different decades and the only five-time champion, had a 1-under 71 and said he should have been up with the leaders.

"I didn't play very well. My iron game is not good," Nicklaus said after an erratic round that included four birdies and three bogeys. "I should have been about four or five more under."

OPEN: 'Symmetrical perfection' leads to tie

soft greens held hot iron shots, and slower putting surfaces took the fear out of severe slopes.

Simpson's and Sluman's 66s were one better than the four-under 67 that was the best ever shot in the two previous Opens at Medinah, when the course was a par 71.

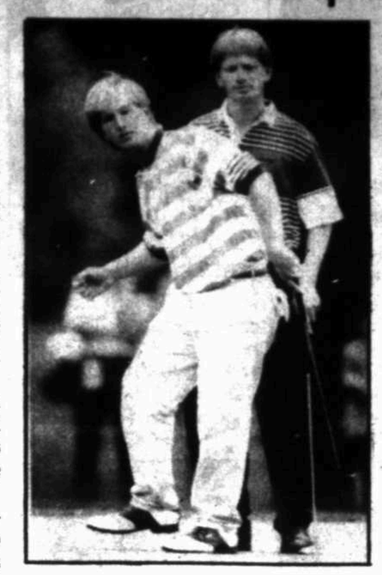
And their 66s had a symmetrical perfection, which, despite the soft conditions, made the round one of the finest ever shot in Open competition.

Simpson played each nine in three-under 33, as did Sluman, and his ball was never off short grass as he hit all 14 fairways on the driving holes and all 18 greens.

"I played awfully well; I'm tickled to death," said Simpson, who missed the cut in five previous Opens and never finished better than a tie for 11th at Winged Foot in 1984. "I used to be too hard on myself, but I've learned to get out of my own way."

With much of the field still on the course, Simpson was closely followed by the five-under 67s turned in by Mike Donald and Steve Jones.

"I kind of run the opening kick-off back to the 20-yard line," Donald said. "Right now I feel like I'm playing a lot better than I was at Augusta. I feel like I'm going to do all right."



AP Laserphoto

David Duval, at 18, the youngest golfer at the Open, shot a first-round, even-par 72.

While some lesser players thrived in the conditions, some of the tournament favorites had a hard time adapting.

Curtis Strange, the defending champion, began his much-anticipated attempt at three consecutive U.S. Open titles by missing a four-foot par putt on the first hole and struggling to a one-over 73.

"It was frustrating, because Medinah was there to be taken advantage of today," said Strange, who had three three-putt greens.

Among the prominent players who finished early, Greg Norman had a par 72, Ian Woosnam 70, Peter Jacobsen 71, Mark Calcavecchia and Jose Maria Olazabal 73, Fred Couples 74 and Tom Kite 75.

Although the easier conditions broaden the number of players who can win the tournament, and although thunderstorms are predicted to continue throughout the week, the good scores do not necessarily mean Medinah will continue to play easy.

Donald was quick to remind reporters that the 1975 Open at Medinah was won with a 72-hole score of three over par after Tom Watson led at 36 holes with a score of seven under.

If there was a common theme among the leaders, it was a lack of conventional preparation for the championship. Donald didn't play in the Western Open the week before because he forgot to enter. Jones didn't play practice rounds Tuesday or Wednesday because he was tired.

The least prepared was Simpson. He came to Medinah after a two-week break from golf that included a week of salmon fishing in Alaska.

"I think I've had a tendency to overprepare for majors," said Simpson, who has three career victories on the tour. "This year, I made the commitment to relax and not burn up all my energy beforehand. Still, I told my wife, 'I've got to be crazy.' But she reminded me that after I went elk hunting for two weeks last year, I came right back and won the Walt Disney."

A former all-state football player in Georgia, Simpson played a round as solid as his 5-foot-10, 185-pound frame. He hit an 8-iron to four inches on the third hole for a birdie, hit a wedge to a foot on the fifth hole, and holed an 8-footer for a birdie on the sixth.

Opening lead: Ace of ♡ Almost every tournament produces its share of perfect problem hands. The Omar Sharif World Individual, held last month at the Showboat Hotel and Casino in Atlantic City, N.J., was no exception. Consider this hand.

South's opening two-diamond bid was of the weak variety. West's cue-bid was Michaels, showing a major two suiter of limited strength and North bid what he hoped his side could make. A trump lead would have sealed declarer's fate quickly, but West chose to lead the ace of hearts and continue the suit. Now you must decide—do you want to play or defend five diamonds?

At the table, declarer won the second heart, crossed to the ace of spades and cashed the ace-king of clubs, discarding a spade from hand. Next, he came to hand with a heart ruff, on which East discarded a spade, then ruffed a spade in dummy. But when he tried to trump his remaining spade, East was able to overruff with the ten. Down one.

Despite the result, that doesn't mean you should elect to defend. Since West is marked with length in the majors and is probably short in diamonds, you can get home if that defender has two clubs and East's diamond holding is as in the diagram.

Come to hand by ruffing a club with the eight of diamonds. When that holds, ruff a spade, ruff another club high and ruff your last spade. Now lead the nine of diamonds, taking the marked finesse for the ten if East plays low. Making five-odd.

'Dick Tracy' film premieres at Florida Disney Complex

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Warren Beatty came to town for the 10-screen premier of his film "Dick Tracy" on Thursday, but co-stars Al Pacino and Madonna missed the opening at Walt Disney World.

The Touchstone Pictures movie based on the famous comic strip opens at theaters nationwide Friday. It features Beatty in the title role, Pacino as villain Big Boy Caprice and Madonna as the vixen Breathless Mahoney.

The film was set up for simultaneous showings on 10 screens for about 3,000 invited guests, said theater general manager Hal Garrett.

The stars attended a round of parties at the Disney-MGM Studios but made no pubic appearances. Would-be star gazers lost out because no one was allowed near the theater complex.

Kidman

Miss Kidman co-stars in Cruise's "Days of Thunder," a soon-to-be released auto-racing drama, and attended this year's Oscars ceremonies with him in the wake of his marital split with actress Mimi Rogers.

But the Australian-born actress isn't boasting about her relationship with the star of "Rain Man," who was nominated for best actor in "Born on the Fourth of July."

"There's nothing more to say except, yeah, we're together," the actress tells Rolling Stone in its July 12 issue.

She says she and Cruise have gone skydiving but she doesn't share his passion for the automotive world. Cruise has driven competitively, and he portrays a race car driver in "Days of Thunder."

"I'm not a very good driver," she said. "There's a scene in the film where I have to drive an automatic BMW, and I had trouble doing even that."

HOUSTON (AP) — "Gonzo" journalist Hunter S. Thompson was more than fashionably late to a free-form "lecture," but the packed house that waited for him didn't care.

The irreverent writer and syndicated columnist arrived two hours late before fielding questions Wednesday from a feisty crowd of 700 who paid $17.50 each for an evening with the literary anti-hero.

He was asked about his recent court case in Colorado that started when a former X-rated film producer accused him of sexual assault.

"I wouldn't have taken her to a concert around the corner," he said.

All charges were dropped in that case last month.

Thompson, the author of "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas," "The Great Shark Hunt," and "Generations of Swine: Tales of Shame and Degradation in the '80s," was introduced by longtime friend C. David Burgin, editor in chief of The Houston Post.

Thompson's lecture never materialized in a conventional sense. He ranted for a few moments about American youth and then opened up the evening to questions.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Donald Trump's casino tour for tennis star Gabriela Sabatini broke state gaming rules because she's too young to go into the pit, but no action is planned against him, authorities said.

The Argentinian athlete was 19 when Trump led her on a tour of the Trump Plaza Hotel and Casino in September. Visitors to casino gambling areas must be 21, but officials said no one is complaining.

"If we get a legitimate complaint, we'll investigate it," said Wayne Marlin, spokesman for New Jersey's Division of Gaming Enforcement.

A casino official who spoke on condition of anonymity said Ms. Sabatini had not gambled. The official said Trump merely showed her around the casino.

DANNEBROG, Neb. (AP) — The governor's husband is the author of a cookbook but he lost the not-so-coveted title of "His Blinding Magnificence, the King of Cornhusker Cookery" in a cookoff on main street.

The spoof culinary showdown pitted Bill Orr, husband of Gov. Kay Orr and author of "The First Gentleman's Cookbook," against Roger Welsch, a regular contributor on CBS' "Sunday Morning."

The challenger provided both competitors' entries, offering a plump mesquite-broiled steak for himself, while Orr was judged on a scrawny piece of meat spotted with green food coloring and accompanied by a pail of cow chips as seasonings.

"I came in a close second while Welsch finished next to last," Orr said after the gag Wednesday.

U.S.: Team comes alive

From 1D

goalkeeper Tony Meola much work.

The result, which qualified Italy for the second round, was a bit astonishing, given that the game was soccer's equivalent of a college all-star team playing the Oakland Athletics. After America's 5-1 loss to Czechoslovakia on Sunday, nearly everyone expected a blowout. But it wasn't to be.

"They said we were 50-1 underdogs for this game," midfielder Tab Ramos said. "The last 15 minutes, it didn't look that way."

On a warm spring night in the Eternal City, the Americans played a game they'll long remember, despite the defeat.

"We had to show that we deserve to be here," team captain Michael Windischmann said.

"We've had so much adversity to deal with," said Meola, whose parents were born in Italy and who had been looking forward to this night for months. "We learned a lot from this and we proved a lot. We've gotten some great experience."

There were 73,423 screaming fans packed inside Olympic Stadium, rebuilt for the World Cup. At the monument to Benito Mussolini, which still stands at the entrance, scalpers were selling tickets to the sold-out match eight hours before kickoff.

Inside, the scene was a spectacle rivaling any in sport. Thousands of fans began chanting and waving Italian flags an hour before the start, creating a sea of red, white and green in the steeply banked oval.

Then the game began. The fans chanted the Triumphal March from Verdi's "Aida." The way Italy came out dominating the ball, it looked like a decisive triumph was ahead.

Gansler said the Americans had no choice but to let Italy take control.

"We couldn't make it a 120-yard game," he said. "We were going to lose the horse race if we did."

The Italians weren't nearly as sharp on this night as they were in their 1-0 victory over Austria last Saturday. But they made a great play for their goal.

It came off a dazzling combination of one-touch passing. Andrea Carnavale gave the ball to Nicola Berti, who sent it on to Roberto Donadoni, who dished off to Giannini after GianLuca Vialli let the ball roll by.

"He pushed the ball in and then lifted it over me," said Windischmann, who rushed over to help Armstrong.

The missed penalty kick came in the 32nd minute after a questionable call, and appeared to psych up the Americans for the rest of the first half.

Berti ran past Paul Caligiuri at the top of the penalty area and went down after he collided softly with Caligiuri's leg. Referee Edgardo Codesal of Mexico awarded the penalty kick, but Vialli — Italy's star striker — missed the shot, putting the ball off the lower left post even as Meola was diving the other way.

"That said to us, 'These guys aren't bigger than life,'" Armstrong said. "We can play with them."

The best U.S. chance came with 20 minutes left, when Murray took a free kick from about 25 yards. Zenga dived to his right to save it, got up and dived forward to stop Vermes on the rebound, slowing the ball down as it hit his thighs and bounced through his legs.

Jackson pushes for Barry plea bargain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Marion Barry returned to court Thursday, a day after announcing he wouldn't seek re-election, as supporters called anew for a plea arrangement that would spare him a jail term.

The field of Democratic hopefuls resumed politicking, sniping at each other rather than Barry, as jury selection wound through a ninth day at his drug possession and perjury trial.

There was no indication his announcement had spurred any plea bargaining discussions, as supporters had hoped. There was "no movement at all" toward an agreement that would allow Barry to plead guilty to a misdemeanor, said one source close to Barry's defense team.

Meanwhile, Jesse Jackson called on U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens and defense lawyer Mundy to resume plea bargaining negotiations.

The mayor has pleaded innocent to 10 misdemeanor cocaine possession charges, one misdemeanor charge of cocaine conspiracy, and three felony charges of lying to a grand jury about his alleged drug use.

Prosecutor Stephens would not comment Thursday but has said in the past that Barry's political plans would not affect his determination to proceed to trial.

U.S. backs off India sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration said Thursday it would not impose economic sanctions against India even though that country has refused to negotiate over trade barriers the United States deems offensive.

In announcing the decision, the administration said it would pursue the issues in the current round of global free-trade talks but would not retaliate by boosting tariffs on imports by India into the United States.

India was targeted last year along with Japan and Brazil for a possible sanctions under the toughest section of the 1988 trade law. Known as Super 301, the provision required the administration to draw up a priority "hit list" of the most offensive barriers to U.S. trade exports.

Both Japan and Brazil negotiated their way off the Super 301 list by reaching market-opening agreements. However, India has steadfastly refused to negotiate over U.S. claims that it is unfairly blocking foreign investment and operation of foreign insurance companies.

But U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills said the administration was encouraged by India's announcement on May 31 that it would remove some of its investment barriers.

"Our message that foreign investment brings jobs, technology and prosperity may be getting through," she said.

The administration has made the Uruguay Round, named for the country where the talks began in 1986, its top trade priority for the year. India is considered a key participant in those talks, being held under the auspices of the 96-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, because of its influence over other developing countries.

The United States hopes to win support from developing countries for its push to eliminate farm subsidies, strengthen copyright protection for U.S. companies and expand GATT rules to cover trade in services such as banking and insurance.

The Indian government, which has contended that the United States was violating global trading rules through its unilateral threats of retaliation, praised the U.S. decision.

Panel OK's balanced-budget plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Judiciary Committee on Thursday endorsed a constitutional amendment to require a balanced federal budget.

The amendment was sent to the full Senate by a vote of 11-3.

If approved by two-thirds of the Senate and the House, and then by 38 states, the amendment would prohibit federal spending from exceeding revenues except in time of war or if both chambers waive the requirement by a 60 percent vote.

It would also require that a majority of each chamber of Congress, instead of just a majority of those present and voting, approve any tax increase.

The amendment would take effect in the second fiscal year after ratification.

Balanced-budget amendments have been approved before by the committee. The provision most recently was subjected to a full Senate vote in 1986 and failed by one vote. It passed the Senate in 1982 but died in the House.

Thursday's action came as House, Senate and White House negotiators continued their budget "summit" in the Capitol, aimed at reducing the federal deficit. Democrats and Republicans have been unable to agree on how to bring the fiscal gap below $100 billion, never mind zero.

They met for less than two hours and participants said they discussed a variety of budget process reforms without reaching any agreements. The talks are scheduled to resume next Tuesday.

Pentagon honors cartoonist

WASHINGTON (AP) — Beetle Bailey, the lazy but lovable GI who has stumbled through comic pages for the past 40 years, finally won an admiring salute Thursday from the U.S. Army.

In a Flag Day ceremony at the Pentagon, cartoonist Mort Walker received a framed "certificate of appreciation for patriotic civilian service" from Brig. Gen. Bill McClain, who declared an armistice in the Army's decades-old hostilities against the slovenly buck private.

"Through it all, you have entertained us, although sometimes we haven't always liked it," said McClain, the Army's public affairs chief. He observed: "If you can't laugh at yourself, something is intrinsically wrong with you."

Tongue in cheek, Walker replied that it was always "the dream of Gen. Halftrack and mine to hear from the Pentagon," and it took 40 years to get the call.

"I can't believe I'm actually here," Walker said. "As hard as it is to find anything in the Pentagon, they finally found a sense of humor."

Since Walker created the popular comic strip in 1950, based on his experiences as an Army draftee in World War II, Beetle Bailey and his cartoon friends have annoyed some Pentagon brass who complained they presented an unflattering image of Army life.

In 1954, the Tokyo edition of The Stars and Stripes military newspaper drummed Beetle off its pages because the strip poked fun at officers. The official explanation was that "Beetle Bailey had a low interest value," but the move was denounced in newspaper editorials as silly.

Stars and Stripes banned the strip again in 1970, as did some Southern newspapers, when Walker introduced Lt. Flap, a feisty black character. Miss Buxley, the bosomy secretary to Gen. Halftrack, drew protests from feminists.

Accompanied by life-size Beetle and Sarge characters, Walker gave Army officials a cartoon diorama based on his special Flag Day strip. It appeared Thursday in the more than 1,800 newspapers worldwide that carry Beetle Bailey. The diorama will hang on permanent display in a Pentagon hallway near the main entrance.

White House phone jam Baker's doing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Calls swamped the White House switchboard after Secretary of State James A. Baker's public entreaty for Israeli officials to call the number "when you're serious about peace," a spokesman said Thursday.

Baker publicly gave out the number during a House committee hearing on Wednesday, and by the end of the day, some 6,000 to 8,000 calls had clogged the White House lines, said President Bush's press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater.

"The switchboard was finally blocked to the point where it couldn't handle it anymore. And they had to put it on automatic thank-you tape," Fitzwater told reporters.

On Thursday, the call volume remained heavy.

It took 24 rings for a switchboard operator to answer one call. "It's busy here today," she acknowledged.

Baker, whose State Department office is at a different location and different phone number, sent flowers Thursday to the operators, his spokeswoman, Margaret Tutwiler said.

Although Baker's remark about the telephone number came during a discussion of Israel, Tutwiler made the point that at several times in his testimony he referred to the "parties" in the peace process, in the plural.

As to whether Baker intended to pinpoint the Israeli government, she said, he "intended the phone number to be used by all."

Asked if the Bush administration questions whether Israel wants peace, Fitzwater said, "We have not yet seen the dialogues start, so there is a question, certainly, on both sides."

Baker sarcastically recited the White House number, 202 456-1414, in the House hearing where he bluntly prodded Israel on its commitment to peacefully settling the Mideast turmoil.

Asked about giving out that number instead of his own, Baker told reporters on Thursday, "I worked over here four years and I had that one memorized."

Baker was chief of staff to President Reagan.

He said in his testimony Wednesday that his message to "everybody over there," was "when you're serious about peace, call us."

But the Israeli government did not call, said Fitzwater.

Bourbon Street woos Southern Baptists

By Ari L. Goldman
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW ORLEANS — There are many signs on Bourbon Street, some advertising Dixieland jazz, others telling of spicy Cajun specialties and still others hawking "Girls, Girls, Girls."

But one of the most surprising signs on the raucous French Quarter street this week was in the window of a bar.

It said, "We sell non-alcoholic beer, wine and champagne."

To most Southern Baptists, liquor and pornography are tools of the Devil, but New Orleans did its best to make the Baptists feel welcome.

New Orleans loves tourists; since the oil bust, tourism has become its No. 1 industry. Some 6 million tourists visited this city last year.

The visit of the Southern Baptists gave New Orleans a chance to tout its virtues as a place for wholesome, family visits, with attractions like the Audubon Zoo, the children's museum and the new waterfront parks.

"There are a multitude of things to keep you busy all day, every day," said Jinx Broussard, press secretary to Mayor Sidney Barthelemy.

But still, it is the night that has given this city its reputation as the Big Easy, a place to lose yourself in earthly pleasures.

Since arriving over the weekend, some Southern Baptists have mingled with the nighttime crowds on Bourbon Street, but the Baptists were more apt to stroll and look than to linger and partake.

"We haven't sold too many," Samantha Leachman, a bartender at the Famous Door Bar, said of the non-alcoholic drinks.

"Southern Baptists are kind of iffy about going into bars."

"I know," she added over the rhythms of a five-piece jazz band, "I grew up a Southern Baptist."

While this largely Roman Catholic city was eager to accommodate the Southern Baptists, there were limits.

Two thousand convention delegates, known as messengers, had hoped to march en masse down Bourbon Street to share the Gospel with people they meet along the way — a process they call witnessing.

The delegates looked to repeat their massive effort of last year, when they met in Las Vegas, Nev.

Led by an 8-foot cross, hundreds made their way down the main strip of casinos and nightclubs, handing out Bibles and talking about Jesus.

AP Laserphoto

The problem in New Orleans was that the evangelists would arrive in the French Quarter during the evening rush hour from a revival meeting of their own more than a mile away at the Louisiana Superdome.

The only way to get there in a group was by using chartered buses.

"The city begged us not to do it," said the Rev. Jay Strack, president of the Conference of Southern Baptist Evangelists, a group of 800 itinerate preachers.

"It just wouldn't be workable," said Mrs. Broussard, the mayor's press secretary.

She warned of gridlock in the central business district and of damage to the delicate facades of the early 19th-century buildings of the French Quarter from the caravan of buses.

A city ordinance prohibits buses in the quarter, she said.

Instead of the mass assault on Bourbon Street, the evangelists wound up their revival meeting with "a prayer for the city of New Orleans" and then fanned out in different directions in the 90-degree heat by foot, taxi, minibus and private cars.

A few made their way to Bourbon Street, which Strack called "the edge of hell."

There are few things that serve a street preacher as well as a profligate past.

The Rev. Jerry Pipes, an evangelist from Louisville, Texas, said he went to Bourbon Street because he had been there before.

"I once spent a night here drinking myself sick," he said.

At the age of 17, while in jail overnight for public intoxication, Pipes said he turned his life around and accepted Christ as his Saviour.

"I come back to Bourbon Street as a Christian to help people who are hurting like I was hurting," he added. "I want to give them what I have."

People on Bourbon Street were polite, but most were noncommittal. They smiled, listened and accepted Bibles. Some prayed.

One taxi driver, Isaiah Watkins, said he had heard it all before. He was already a Christian, he said, a member of a different denomination, the American Baptists, and kept a Bible on his dashboard.

Cocaine price hikes may herald more violence, Bennett says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A shortage of cocaine evidenced by rising prices in some cities may trigger increased violence as "the same number of dogs" compete for "a smaller number of bones," national drug control director William J. Bennett predicted Thursday.

Bennett said wholesale price increases found by the Drug Enforcement Administration in Los Angeles and New York City indicate there is a shortage of cocaine, a conclusion the DEA itself has not yet drawn.

"It looks as if we are beginning to have positive effect on the flow of cocaine into this country," Bennett said. "This can change. This can bump up and down, as time goes on, but it looks like some real impact is occurring.

"We're putting some tremendous pressure on drug traffickers and I think it's starting to pay off," he said, crediting the crackdown by Colombia on the cocaine cartels as well as interception and investigative efforts by U.S. agencies.

Although Bennett has long cited a need to get rid of drugs to help cut down the violence connected to drug-trafficking in the cities, he said disruption of the cocaine flow may have the opposite effect.

"We've got a long summer ahead of us, and in some of our communities where there is a shortage of cocaine, there will be violence as a result of that," he said. "There will be the same number of dogs fighting over a smaller number of bones. And we can anticipate some of that this summer."

The DEA was much more cautious than Bennett in its analysis of the increase in wholesale cocaine prices in Los Angeles and New York.

"We are not saying the United States has experienced any cocaine shortage," spokesman Frank Shults said. There has not yet been any determination that this is a nationwide trend, he noted.

A kilogram of cocaine (2.2 pounds) today can fetch as much as $35,000 at wholesale in New York City. Officials last fall said it cost $14,000 to $18,000.

Hospitals may sue states

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hospitals and nursing homes may challenge a state's Medicaid reimbursement system, the Supreme Court ruled Thursday in a decision that could have a major financial impact.

The justices, in a 5-4 vote, said the Virginia Hospital Association may use a federal civil rights law to sue Virginia over the state's Medicaid payment rates.

At a time of soaring medical costs and an increasing demand for Medicaid services, the decision could force the federal and state governments to cough up more money for the program that provides medical care for the poor.

"This should increase ... the amount of reimbursement that hospitals will get for providing Medicaid patients with care," said Fredric J. Entin, general counsel for the American Hospital Association.

He said he could not estimate how much reimbursements might rise if hospitals are successful with their lawsuits.

B-2 bomber top priority

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's nominee for Air Force chief of staff said publicly on Thursday what has been hinted at for weeks: The service's top priority is the B-2 bomber and land-based nuclear missiles can wait.

Gen. Michael J. Dugan, now Air Force commander in Europe, confirmed reports that the service has proposed to Defense Secretary Dick Cheney that modernization of land-based missiles be delayed.

Cheney still has the final say on whether the Pentagon will slow down development of the single-warhead Midgetman missile and delay plans to move the multiple-warhead MX missile from silos to rail cars.

"This is a proposal. It hasn't been reviewed. It's subject to lots of further discussion," Dugan said.

In April, Cheney said the Bush administration supports the MX rail-basing program, which accounts for $2.8 billion in the defense budget for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. The budget calls for $202 million for the Midgetman.

'Justify,' judge asks

MIAMI (AP) — A federal judge Thursday demanded that prosecutors in Manuel Noriega's drug case justify their seizure of all his assets, saying failure to do so violates the deposed Panamanian leader's constitutional rights.

U.S. District Judge William Hoeveler rejected the government's claim that the seizures, which involved treaties with third countries, were not subject to judicial review.

"The government has not only placed defendant's assets out of his reach without affording him any meaningful opportunity to be heard, but has indeed done so without showing that the assets are tainted by illegal activity," the judge wrote.

That violates Noriega's constitutional protections against illegal search and seizure, and effectively deprives him of his right to counsel, he said. Under laws allowing assets to be seized, the government must first demonstrate they are illegally obtained, Hoeveler noted.

Lyme disease risk up

ATLANTA (AP) — The summer months mean trips to the outdoors and the risk of Lyme disease, the tick-borne illness that increased 62 percent last year.

Federal health officials reported Thursday that the largest increase came in Georgia, where reporting of Lyme disease zoomed from 53 cases in 1988 to 715 a year later.

Nationwide, Lyme disease is up 15-fold in the seven years since reporting began, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control said. Preliminary 1989 reports indicate 7,402 cases, compared with 4,574 in 1988 and 491 in '82.

Bush to stump South

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush will visit Huntsville, Ala., and Charlotte, N.C., next Wednesday to help raise funds for Republican candidates, the White House said Thursday.

In Huntsville, he will attend a fund-raising luncheon for Republican Gov. Guy Hunt, then visit the Marshall Space Flight Center and address employees, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

In Charlotte, Bush will attend a fund-raising dinner for the re-election of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Postal Service weighs changes in some deliveries

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service is reconsidering its policy of refusing to automatically forward the mail of nursing home residents who move, a spokesman said Thursday.

It is part of a broad review in which postal officials also will examine the handling of mail for the homeless, Postal Service spokesman Lou Eberhardt said in an interview.

The forwarding policy has come under fire from elderly-rights advocates who say it treats nursing home residents like inmates by placing the burden on the home to forward mail — as the Postal Service requires for prisons.

The review "is not a cursory glance," Eberhardt said. "They are going to assemble various sections of the Postal Service — delivery, marketing, mail processing — and sit down beginning next week."

The purpose, Eberhardt said, "is to determine whether changes should be made not only from a standpoint of the nursing homes, but mail for homeless, mail being handled by agents. It's hard to say exactly where it's going, but it may require some procedural changes where nursing homes are concerned."

Since all residents of a nursing home are at the same address, the Postal Service says the home should be the "agent" for their mail. The mail is delivered in bulk, like at a prison, and then distributed.

While other people may submit change-of-address cards to local post offices, nursing home residents must rely on the institution to write their new address on individual letters. Once the mail is re-addressed, the post office delivers it at no extra charge.

Allowing automatic forwarding is not "practical operationally," the Postal Service says. Since mail for individual residents is not sorted at the post office, the agency says it could not easily distinguish mail that needs to be forwarded from the rest.

"It's absurd," Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., said Thursday. "The Postal Service says, 'We can only deliver in bulk.' But people are paying for first-class postage on that mail."

Louisiana Legislature passes tough anti-abortion measure

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — The Louisiana House of Representatives passed the nation's harshest state anti-abortion bill Thursday, a measure that would provide up to 10 years hard labor for doctors who perform abortions.

The bill passed on a 74-27 vote, and moved to the state Senate.

Its proponents said they hope the conservative U.S. Supreme Court eventually will receive the bill and use it to overturn the court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion.

Earlier Thursday, House legislators twice voted against including exceptions to the law that would have allowed abortions in cases of rape.

The bill, which also provides fines of up to $100,000 against those who perform abortions, would allow abortion only to save the life of the woman.

Democratic Gov. Buddy Roemer repeated his pledge to veto any bill that does not contain exceptions for victims of rape and incest.

Sen. Mike Cross said he expected it to pass in the Senate, although that version might contain exceptions for rape and incest.

The bill would not penalize women who receive abortions. Jenkins has claimed that abortion is tantamount to abuse against women.

The Louisiana Legislature has a history of enacting tough abortion laws, all of which have been stayed or declared unconstitutional over the past 15 years.

Abortion rights advocates said they would fight the bill.

"What the House has done will awaken a strong majority in this state," said Robin Rothrock, leader of an abortion rights coalition. "People will come to this Capitol and tell the Legislature to stay out of our business."

This sun-trellis extends the living area of your home or adds shade to your patio. Western woods such as cedar or Douglas fir are used in the post and beam construction. A complete plan shows how to build either a 12 x 16 or 12 x 24 cover. Photographs, drawings, a complete materials list and cutting schedule take you step-by-step through the construction.
