Budget-cutting battle cuts into party lines

WASHINGTON (AP — House Democrats are moving toward undoing some of their own proposed spending cuts, which President Reagan says "they know can't be made" and would only lead to congressional backsliding on the budget.

And if Democrats don't keep the faith on the budget targets set last month, Reagan says, he's willing to fight once again on the House floor for a substitute package of spending reductions.

The administration has declared that some of the $37.4 billion in budget cuts recommended by Democratic-controlled House committees for next year were designed to be so severe, counterproductive or phony that the full House would be forced to reject them. That, the reasoning goes, would open the way to possibly saving some programs to be cut under Reagan's budget blueprint.

Reagan echoed those charges and stepped up the criticism during his nationally televised news conference Tuesday.

"There is now clear danger of congressional backsliding and a return to spending as usual," he said. "Some House committees have reported spending cuts they know can't be made," such as closing one-third of the nation's post offices.

House Democratic leaders chided Reagan for his remarks.

Rep. Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif., a key member of the House Budget Committee, said this is "a fine time to start picking and choosing who's being hurt by a $37 billion cut."

"There has never been an administration in my recollection that has demanded to dictate so thoroughly to Congress," added House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas. "The committees of the House very faithfully and in some cases very painfully responded to the mandates of the...budget which President Reagan so forcefully supported."

Despite the tough talk from Democrats, there were indications that some of the cuts Reagan objected to would be amended.

Democrats on the House Education and Labor Committee met privately Tuesday and the full committee was scheduled to meet today to consider restoring some funds cut from such politically popular programs as student loans, special impact aid for school districts with federal installations, Head Start classes for pre-schoolers and meals for the elderly.

Under one plan discussed Tuesday, nearly $1 billion previously retained for public service jobs would be cut and shifted to education and nutrition programs.

Rep. Carl Perkins, D-Ky., the committee chairman, had said he had received "an absolute guarantee" from House leaders "that we will be allowed several votes on the House floor in order to reverse some of the worst cuts."

But that strategy appeared to be fading.

A top House Democratic aide, who asked not to be quoted by name, said Democratic leaders "no longer find the amendment approach as attractive."

Republicans and some conservative Democrats, wary of the work done by the committees, have been drafting a substitute package of cuts that more closely follows Reagan's plan.

That's the same strategy used last month to pass Reagan's spending targets over those pushed by the Democratic leadership, and the president said Tuesday he is prepared to go that route again if necessary.

If the Democrats push their own package, Reagan said, "let me be clear, my administration will have no other choice than to support the proposal of a number of representatives in the House to offer a budget substitute on the floor that matches the resolution they voted for in May."

That may not be necessary.

House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois said in an interview that if Perkins' panel makes the anticipated changes, it "narrows down the areas of difference."

A Republican aide who asked to be anonymous said the contemplated changes being discussed by the Education and Labor Committee "sound like the Reagan program without the block grants." If the changes are made, "what's the fight going to be?"

House committees almost unanimously have rejected the block grant program proposed by Reagan to transfer control from the federal governments to the states for nearly 100 programs that now distribute money directly for specific purposes. Under the plan, states generally would parcel out the money as they see fit.

Arabs amend call for condemnation

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Arabs are asking the Security Council to condemn the Israeli destruction of Iraq's nuclear reactor and call for Israel to pay compensation. But they apparently are omitting a specific demand for sanctions because the United States would veto it.

In a statement read to the council Tuesday by Iraqi Foreign Minister Saadoun Hammadi, the 46-nation Islamic Group "strongly condemns the premeditated and unprovoked aggression as an act of state terrorism" and demands that Israel "pay prompt and adequate compensation for damages suffered by Iraq."

The statement made no mention of the sanctions the Arabs had been expected to ask the council to vote against the Jewish state. Instead it asked that "the international community take the measures envisaged in the (U.N.) Charter to prevent Israel from pursuing such action in the future."

The Arab League's U.N. observer, Clovis Maksoud, told reporters the statement embodied the "thrust" of a resolution that would be presented to the 15-nation council. A vote on the resolution is not expected before Thursday.

It takes nine votes to adopt a resolution, but a negative vote by any of the five permanent members — the United States, Britain, France, the Soviet Union and China — constitutes a veto that kills the resolution.

American officials have said privately that the United States might support a resolution condemning the raid and calling for compensation but certainly would veto sanctions or reparations.

Israel says its attack on the nuclear reactor in Baghdad was an act of self-defense prompted by solid information that Iraq, which still is technically at war with Israel, was planning to use the reactor to build atomic bombs to be dropped on the Jewish nation.

Speaking in the council debate Tuesday, Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Blum said a French proposal that reparations be demanded of Israel was bizarre.

"Did the Allies pay reparations for the Nazis' atomic plants at Peenemuende and elsewhere which they destroyed in World War II?" Blum asked. Peenemuende was Nazi Germany's research and missile center on the Baltic Coast.

France sold Iraq the reactor and weapons-grade uranium to fuel it and was installing it. A French technician was reported killed by the Israeli raiders.

Blum said four days of debate had not explained why Iraq was obtaining equipment and radioactive material that could be used for bomb production if its only plans for the reactor were peaceful.

Ismat T. Kittani, an undersecretary in Iraq's Foreign Ministry, refused to answer Blum's questions, saying, "One would think that it was Iraq that was brought to account before this council."

In Washington, President Reagan softened his earlier condemnation of the Israeli attack, telling a news conference Israel "might have sincerely believed" its raid was a defensive attack and "had a reason for concern" because Iraq has never signed an armistice with Israel or recognized Israel as a nation.

Permian Airways head says firm will fly again

Permian Airways is an airline with no planes to fly.

Its four aircraft sold, the president and current stockholder of Permian Airways contends the airline still is a Texas corporation.

"Permian has liquidated its planes," said Andrews, "but we are not doing away with the airline. We have some problems to solve before we can get in the air."

A spokesman for the Texas Aeronautics Commission in Austin said that Permian's six-month extension granted by the TAC to resume operations or lose its operating certificate ended at 5 p.m. Monday.

Tom Butler, TAC's hearing examiner and staff attorney, said that under conditions of the order, if Permian hadn't resumed service within the six-month period the commission would issue an order canceling the firm's operating certificate. Butler said Permian has not complied with the December order and appropriate action would be forthcoming.

The six-month extension had been granted on Dec. 15, 1980.

Butler added that Permian Airways has not notified the TAC of its plans. An investigation into Permian's operating status will be initiated, said Butler.

C. Harry Rogers with the TAC said this morning that the order was canceled "without prejudice. If they want to get started again, they can apply for another certificate."

As it was, permission from the Federal Aviation Administration already had been canceled, said Rogers, when the airline quit flying last year.

"We've set on our hands a good long while," he added. "A dormant certificate could be a deterrent to another airline. It's time to let the free enterprise system work."

Permian Airways, based at Midland Regional Airport, began service in 1979 from Midland to San Angelo, Lubbock, Amarillo and San Antonio. It used a fleet of four Navajo Chieftain aircraft which have since been sold to a non-commuter group in Arizona, according to Andrews.

Permian canceled its flights Sept. 16 in what it called a "temporary" action pending a reorganization of the company's financial structure.

Going up in smoke

The fire at Corbett Estate Well No. 1, located six miles southwest of Rankin off Highway 67, may not be extinguished for another two weeks. Officials are waiting for wind changes to allow them to remove the remains of the rig before the fire can be put out. Smoke from the blaze can be spotted 48 miles away.

Firefighters awaiting shift in wind

RANKIN — Smoke clouds from Corbett Estate Well No. 1 can be seen 48 miles away as the fire in the oil well continues to rage. Firefighters are waiting for a wind change to allow them to extinguish the fire, but that may not be for some time.

According to Coots Matthews of Boots and Coots, a Houston-based fire-fighting team, the position of the well is causing difficulties. The well is located beside a ridge which does not allow firefighters a full 360 degrees in which to fight the fire. The wind position determines which way the fire will lean, which, ideally for fire-fighting efforts, will be toward the ridge.

Matthews indicated Tuesday afternoon the fire might not be put out for up to two weeks.

Dynamite will be used to extinguish the fire after the remains of the rig have been pulled away.

About 50,000 barrels of water from a makeshift reservoir system will cool the flames during the extinguishing process.

According to Bill Hopson, area drilling engineer for Terra Resources which owns the well, water has been brought in by truck for several days. He predicted that approximately 90 percent of the water will evaporate during the fire-fighting operation. The remainder will be recirculated through the reservoir system.

Colorado-based Rival Drilling Company had started drilling on Rig Two approximately 25 days before the blowout. It was the second well drilled by Rival Drilling Co. in the West Texas area.

The fire surprised the Rival crew. "Everything happened so damn fast," Hopson said, "By the time they (the rig crew) realized what had happened, it was too late."

Timing was cited as a cause of the fire. "We can't exactly know who was at fault or why," Hopson stated. "If any number of factors had been different, it wouldn't have blown out."

In Hopson's opinion, drillers probably hit a reservoir of sand and a pocket of gas. The gas displaced the well's mud, which holds everything in form, and "literally blew it out of the hole, and then it's too late," Hopson said. The workers were unable to control the blow at the surface.

The well started blowing gas at 8:30 a.m. Friday and caught fire around 11 a.m.

He added that the drillers had seen no indication of trouble, which would have been drilling into the sand and finding background gas.

The fire has changed in appearance since Friday, Hopson observed. At first, the fire was burning more gas, which meant less black smoke. Currently, the fire is belching black smoke, indicating burning oil.

Pointing to steel rigs that have been warped by the intense heat, Hopson acknowledged that he could not esti-

Parliament preparing to impeach Bani-Sadr

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — As thousands chanted outside for his downfall, the Iranian Parliament laid the groundwork today for impeaching President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

The Parliament, dominated by Moslem clergymen opposed to Bani-Sadr, gave preliminary approval to a bill that outlined procedures for the impeachment debate, then recessed until Saturday, reliable sources reported by telephone. Previously, there had been no impeachment provisions in Iranian law.

Impeachment by the Parliament, or Majlis, could clear the way for Bani-Sadr's dismissal by revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. That might be followed by a trial for alleged violations of the constitution and disobedience of Khomeini.

A spokesman for the Parliament's public relations office said several thousand people were demonstrating outside, chanting slogans that urged the deputies to speed up the debate.

It was not clear whether Bani-Sadr would appear to conduct his own defense. The switchboard at the president's office was not answering long-distance calls today for the first time since he was fired as commander-in-chief of the armed forces a week ago.

Reporters attending the session said none of Bani-Sadr's supporters was present at the debate on the 47-year-old president's "competence" in office.

The debate was scheduled in response to a demand from the cleric-dominated Islamic Republican Party and the government headed by Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai.

Bani-Sadr, the front man for the Westernized moderate and leftist forces in the Iranian revolution, and his conservative, fundamentalist Moslem opponents were each given 10 hours to argue their cases before the Majlis.

Pars, the government news agency, said Bani-Sadr could be declared incompetent by a majority vote. A spokesman for Khomeini said Monday the 81-year-old supreme leader would decide whether Bani-Sadr would be removed from office, the procedure specified in the constitution.

The president was reported in the presidential palace compound in the Iranian capital and apparently was under house arrest. Revolutionary guards surrounded the compound Tuesday, replacing security forces loyal to Bani-Sadr.

Thousands demonstrated in front of the Majlis building and marched past the compound Tuesday, chanting "Death to Bani-Sadr."

The Newspaper BIBLE

WOULDN'T YOU BE EXCITED TOO?

When the church at Jerusalem heard what had happened, they sent Barnabas to Antioch to help the new converts. When he arrived and saw the wonderful things God was doing, he was filled with excitement and joy, and encouraged the believers to stay close to the Lord, whatever the cost.

Barnabas was a kindly person, full of the Holy Spirit and strong in faith. As a result large numbers of people were added to the Lord.

Then Barnabas went to Tarsus to hunt for Saul. When he found him, he brought him back to Antioch; and both of them stayed there for a full year, teaching the many new converts. (It was there at Antioch that the believers were first called "Christians.")

During this time some prophets came down from Jerusalem to Antioch, and one of them, named Agabus, stood up in one of the meetings to predict by the Spirit that a great famine was coming upon the land of Israel. (This was fullfilled during the reign of Claudius.)

So the believers decided to send relief to the Christians in Judea, each giving as much as he could. This they did, consigning their gifts to Barnabas and Saul to take to the elders of the church in Jerusalem.

City folks head for the hills—and Utopia

EUREKA SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — Ross Sackett can see himself in this picturesque Ozarks town.

The plush Madison Avenue office is behind him. So is the sprawling home in suburban Chicago. Ahead, at age 51, is retirement in this idyllic little community.

"I've always had a peculiar approach to life," he says. "I wanted to experience as many things as I could."

The tanned face, framed by graying hair that winds around his ears and over his collar, turns to the window — and the oak and sugar maples.

"I'm sure no one could ever move here without learning a great deal more about themselves," Sackett says, puffing on the cigarettes that haven't been as easy to abandon as his lifestyle.

"I've confirmed permanently that quality in people is where you find it," he says. "People who are raised and live their lives in the affluent suburbs are permanently cursed. They never learn how people put food on the table."

Such cerebral musings are forgiven in Eureka Springs, a town of some 2,500 diverse souls separated from its nearest neighbor by 12 miles of two-lane road and a world away from other lifestyles.

Most folks here talk of beauty: the sea of green trees that turns a mountain range into rolling prairie and the sunshine that floats down from a sky the color of the blue jay.

They talk of recreation: fishing in the cool, clear streams teeming with fat trout and water skiing on the expansive, placid lakes.

Ross Sackett and his wife, Skip, like to talk about the people.

"We've never lived in a more cosmopolitan and heterogeneous town," Sackett says. "There's so much stimulation here, so many interesting people."

Scenery predates the people here. "I never tire of the beauty of this place — it's very sustaining," Sackett says.

It wasn't so long ago that Sackett was a heavyweight in the publishing world. He became president of Holt, Rinehart & Winston Inc. at age 36, added the presidency of CBS Education & Publishing Group at 37, becoming a director of CBS, and quit to take over Encyclopedia Britannica Educational Corp. in Chicago at 42.

The Sacketts fell in love with Eureka Springs during a Christmas vacation a decade ago and began buying Victorian houses here. When he was 48, Sackett shrugged off the three-piece suit that fit so well and pulled on a pair of corduroy pants, plaid shirt and hiking boots.

Then Ross, Skip, son Stuart and dogs Eloise and Schnapps moved into a graceful Victorian home, filling it with their antiques and oriental rugs. A daughter now attends college in Missouri, and two of their three older children have moved into the area as well.

The other houses they own here — a "baker's dozen," Sackett says — have become their pension. But retirement still is just another word for work. They still own a California firm that makes toys for institutions, and they've opened a small publishing firm here.

Ross has started a national newsletter for preschool educators and produces films in economic education. Skip is president of Friends of the Library, a member of the Humane Society's board of directors and a member of the local school board.

And they both manage to do some traveling overseas and to their vacation home in the Florida Keys.

A decade ago, folks like the Sacketts began to see this northwest Arkansas town as a refuge from the city, the suburbs and even from the high-rise retirement villages.

Eureka Springs had been a town of 13,000 in the 1890s, thanks to its mineral springs. But modern medicine took over the healing business.

Today it is a quaint village, clinging to the steep Ozark hills.

Busloads of Sunday school classes come to a huge outdoor theater where Christ's last days are recreated in "The Passion Play." Hippies, hill folk, musicians, craftsmen, gays, artists and middle-class retirees coexist in the town. It's a community where misfits fit, some here say.

"This town has a mystique that's hard to describe," Sackett says. But there is a problem.

"It's so seductive and beautiful here that some people come here to put their life together," Sackett says. "This is no place to come unless you've already got it together. It may look peaceful and sleepy, but it's not."

Silver Dollar City hub of Ozark vacation area

BRANSON, Mo. — While most Americans have heard of the area, only a small percentage have visited the "real" Ozarks — yet even that percentage totals more than two million visitors per year.

A famed-for-fishing place far back into the previous century, the Ozarks were then inhabited only by a long-standing population of Anglo-Saxon frontier folk and a rather exclusive group of rugged-outdoors sportsmen.

All that is in the past, however; for most of this century the Ozarks have maintained a steady growth that has made it one of the country's top "discover" vacation areas. Today the hub of it all is Silver Dollar City, a reconstructed mining town of the 1870s on the site of a settlement built, according to local legend, by miners who sought valuable ores — including silver — within huge Marvel Cave.

Its numerous wonders — including a room with a ceiling 20 stories high — have lured tourists to Marvel Cave continuously since 1884. This year is the 30th anniversary of operation of the cave by the Herschend family, who originally were themselves tourists from Chicago's north shore. Today the family is Mary Herschedn, named in 1977 "Missouri's First Lady of Tourism" by the state's Chamber of Commerce, and her two sons, Jack and Peter, both in their early 40s. Mary is now partially retired, but Jack and Peter often find themselves on seven-day-a-week duty, working alongside as many as 1,100 employees, who serve about one and one-half million visitors each season.

Silver Dollar City boasts a location an hour's drive sought of Springfield and "nine mountain miles" west of Branson on Missouri State Highway 76, smack dab in the middle of the "real" Ozarks, overlooking Table Rock Lake, famed for largemouth, smallmouth and Kentuck spotted bass. The facility's reconstruction as a fun place to visit was beguns for the entertainment of visitors to Marvel Cave, which incidentally recently was named a Registered U.S. Landmark.

Now dozens of old-timey buildings of various shapes and sizes, it is best descrived as an historically themed entertainment park. People brought in from "way back in there" show their age-old skills in basket making, log cabin construction, smithing, spinning and weaving; the making of candy, apple butter and soap; along with a score or more of the other skills once so essentional to the well-being — indeed the survival — of the earliest white residents of the Ozarks Mountain Plateau.

Three annual special events are hosted by Silver Dollar City — the Spring National Crafts Festival in May, the Mountain Folks' Music Festival in June, and, come September and October, the Fall National Crafts Festival.

Perhaps the city's most colorful character is blacksmith Shad Heller. Hard to miss with his huge chest and arms usually displaying bright red underwear no matter what the weather, Heller always has time to show you how square-sided nails, hinges and other hardware are properly made by hand.

There's always music at Silver Dollar City. As the visitor moves from one densely wooded area to another shady street, the timbre or tempo may change — but you can bet the sounds will be pure Ozark. An outstanding young musician is John Goldsberry. He plays three unusual instruments: the pianolin, a rare one that is both picked an bowed; the primitive mouth bow, one end of which in held in the mouth while its single string in picked or bowed (his preference); and the ancient hammered dulcimer.

Silver Dollar City has comedy and musical shows you might have attended a century ago. You also might find yourself doing such unusual things as exploring a flooded mine or submerging to the bottom on Lake Silver in a Rube Goldberg-like diving bell.

The Silver Dollar City — Marvel Cave Park complex is surrounded by literally hundreds of other attractions large and small. Foremost is the Shepherd of the Hills Farm, just five minutes' drive to the east on Mo. 76, on the site where author Harold Bell wrote his stirring "Shepherd of the Hills" novel about natives to the Ozarks at the turn of the century. The book's nighttime dramatization is the most popular outdoor play in America.

At Branson is Lake Taneycomo, the state's most famous trout pond. A couple of miles to the south, at Point Lookout, a ridge overlooking the White River Valley, is School of the Ozarks, a fully accredited four-year college for more than a thousand students who can pay their own way by feeding livestock, cultivating vegetables, making ceramics and furniture, or even gassing planes at the school's own airport.

Lookout Mountain Caverns claims deepest waterfall

CHATTANOOGA — Caverns, like people, have personality and individuality. No two are the same. When you've seen one, you haven't seen them all.

True, most have stalactites (from the ceiling) and stalagmites (from the floor), but some boast underground lakes and rivers, with boats to ride on them. Others have vaulted chambers and unusual ceiling or wall decorations. One, in New Zealand, even offers thousands of glow-worms glistening in the dark.

But Lookout Mountain Caverns, near Chattanooga, Tennessee, 1120 feet below the summit of Lookout Mountain, has the world's deepest waterfall open to the public. Mysterious, awesome and unexpected, Ruby Falls, believed to be 12 million years old, drops a sheer 145 feet into a misty pool. Although all kinds of scientific research has been done, even the experts can't say for sure where the water comes from, or where it goes. Many suspect internal mountain springs, and that it eventually winds up in the Tennessee River, and after that the Mississippi, but they have not yet come up with scientific proof.

Nearly half a million visitors a year make the pilgrimage to this rare underground phenomenon which remains open year round, including Christmas Day, 7:30 a.m. til 9:30 a.m. summers, 8 a.m. til 6 p.m. winters, and 8 a.m. til 8 p.m. April, May, September and October. Most are couples, honeymooners, retirees or family groups with children. A few are true cave buffs who have visited many of the country's 44 caverns open to the public. All appreciate the constant 58 degrees temperature which makes a walk-through comfortable even on the hottest day of summer or the coldest day of winter.

Ruby Falls was discovered almost by accident. For centuries man has known that Lookout Mountain is honeycombed with caverns. Two of the larger ones, known as Twin Caves, provided shelter for hundreds through the years. French names have been found inscribed on the walls, leading to the theory that early French traders camped here. So, too, apparently did the Cherokee Indians. Indian relics have also been found. During the Civil War, both Union and Confederate troops (who were to fight in the Battle Above the Clouds on the sides of the mountain above) sought shelter from the elements here. At one time during the war, the underground chambers were used as a hospital. Andrew Jackson is said to have visited. The date 1833 is etched into the limestone along with Jackson's autograph "scratched into the rock with his sword" the guides surmise.

The original entrance to Twin Caves, located under those now open to the public, was closed when the highway and railway were built well below the overlook dominating Moccasin Bend of the Tennessee River. Speleologists,hoping to reopen the caves, in 1928 began sinking a shaft part way up the mountainside, intending to link the caves to the surface by elevator.

At the 260' level, after a 14 man crew had drill-blasted through solid limestone for 92 days to reach a depth inside the mountain that more than equalled the height of the Empire State Building, a crevasse suddenly showed up. Enterprising Leo Lambert, one of the leaders, decided to explore.

With only a lantern and flashlight to show the way, Lambert wriggled and crawled through the narrow opening, inching himself back into the mountain. Seventeen hours later he returned with a tale of a fantastic giant waterfall. But only his wife, Ruby, was convinced. She returned with him to the falls, and was rewarded by having them named in her honor.

Wriggling and crawling are no longer necessary, and the "rooms" and passageways are well lighted. It takes but 40 seconds for the electrically-operated elevator to descend the equivalent of 26 stories. From this point a mostly level pathway leads through tunnels and chambers, past formations called Wedding Cake, Bridal Veil, Elephant's Foot, Cactus and Candle, Frozen Niagara and Texas Potato Chip, all easily distinguishable.

To clue visitors in on both history and geology, guides (mostly high school and junior college students from the area) take special courses for their underground work. Thus a guide can explain confidently, "At one time the ocean level came to the floor of thie cavern. We are now 160' above the city of Chattanooga. We know this because of the tiny marine fossils we've found in the limestone. A prehistoric earthquake, or perhaps a series of them, pushed this mountain up, split it open and sent water gushing through, creating an underground river. Water dripping through the rock deposited calcium and thus the formations began growing down from the ceiling and up from the floor. Some are still growing; come back in 100 years and they'll have increased a whole inch."

The trip to the falls and return takes a little over an hour and covers not quite a half mile in each direction. Visitors hear the rush of water as they near the falls. At just the right moment the guide says, "I'm going to turn off the lights so you can appreciate the falls better."

Once eyes become accustomed to the inky darkness, a crescendo of music—aptly named "Engulfed Cathedral Symphony"—fills the vaulted "room". Crimson lights are dramatically focused on the falls, and heads look up—and up. It takes several seconds for visitors to come out of their private reveries and realize that the guide is inviting them to walk behind the falls on the specially constructed walkway—with an iron railing for those who are timid about taking the venture. A youngster, to express the feeling of the group, said, "It's like walking through fairyland."

It isn't until the group gets nearly back to the elevator that another youngster brings the group back to reality. "This 'dern' basement's bigger'n grandma's," commented Miss Sixyearold.

Admission remains at $2.50 for adults, free for those under six, the same price charged when the caverns, featuring Ruby Falls, were first opened to the public, December 31, 1929. To ensure that every visitor gets his money's worth, guides are fond of advising, "See that round knob. We call if Old Baldy. It's our Wishing Stone. Everyone rubs its head. We don't guarantee anything, but why don't each of you give it a bit of a rub. You wouldn't want to miss out on good luck, would you?"

National Climatic Center tracks nation's weather

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Farmers who want to know precipitation levels for their areas, school children curious about what causes rain and professors researching meteorology can find the answers to their questions at the little-known National Climatic Center.

From its national headquarters in North Carolina's Blue Ridge Mountains, the center keeps an eye on the nation's weather from Alaska to Puerto Rico.

The weather center, a branch of the U.S. Department of Commerce, has been located in downtown Asheville for 28 years in what was built as the nation's first indoor shopping mall.

As the custodian of all U.S. weather records, the center collects data generated by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the weather services of the U.S. Air Force, Navy and Coast Guard, the Federal Aviation Administration and from observers from all over the country, said meteorologist Ray Nybro.

"If our shelves of information were stretched end to end, they would cover about 25 miles," Nybro said.

The climatic center originally was called the National Weather Records Center when it was established in 1951. In 1952, five regional weather centers were consolidated and moved to Asheville.

Climatic information compiled by the center includes hourly observations from various land and ship stations, upper-air readings, radar observations, satellite data, hourly and daily solar dta and spcial projects.

Services include data and map reproduction, statistical summaries, supply of publications on weather patterns all over the country and certification of records for legal cases.

Nybro said the center handles thousands of requests for weather data every month.

"The price we charge for our services depends on the time and people involved in researching a job," he said. "For instance, most of our services cost less than $25."

The center employs about 330 people, including meteorologists, computer technicians, print-shop workers and dozens of administrative and clerical employees.

The center uses millions of dollars worth of sophisticated computer equipment to gather and print out weather data.

"Much of our work is done for, or in cooperation with, the military services," Nybro said.

Extended forecasts

Friday Through Sunday

West Texas: Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms with no important temperature changes. Lows 60s north to mid 70s south. Highs 90s north to near 100 Big Bend.

North Texas: Partly cloudy and warm with scattered showers and thunderstorms Sunday. Lowest daily temperatures will be in the 70s and highs in the 90s.

South Texas: Widely scattered mainly day time thundershowers most sections, more numerous south and east portions. Little change in temperatures. Afternoon highs in the 80s to a few 90s southwest. Lows in the 70s.

Temperatures are expected to warm up in Permian Basin

The cool temperatures may be leaving the Permian Basin soon, as afternoons gradually become warmer, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

This morning's low of 49 degrees set a new record low for the second night in a row. The 49-degree reading replaces the previous record low of 55 which stood since 1945.

Tonight should be warmer, however, as the temperature is forecast to be in the mid-60s. Southeasterly winds will round out the evening at 10-15 mph.

Generally fair days will continue through Thursday, as temperatures begin to force the mercury up toward the century mark when the high is expected in the low 90s.

Winds will increase to 15-20 mph Thursday.

Tuesday's high reached 82 degrees — quite a ways from the all-time high for the date of 105 degrees set June 16, 1975.

Widely-scattered showers and thunderstorms spread across the Appalachians and the mid-Atlantic Coast early today, as well as from central Texas into southwest Mississippi.

Severe thunderstorms downed power lines in western Pennsylvania, western New York and parts of Vermont. Showers and thundershowers hit the northern Rockies and eastern Oregon.

The mercury soared past the 100-degree mark Tuesday across the South, along the Atlantic Coast and in the inland Southwest and California. Florida sweltered through the fifth day of a heat wave that killed thousands of chickens, while firefighters got the upper hand on Southern California fires that have charred 24,000 acres. Flood waters meanwhile retreated in Kansas, Indiana and Texas.

When there's a partner to Boots

Coots Matthews of Boot and Coots, an oil well fire-fighting firm from Houston, is handling the oil well fire near Rankin. He's been in the business for 24 years and has put out approximately 400 oil well fires.

This oil well firefighting team really gives a Coots

By DORIAN MARTIN
Staff Writer

RANKIN — His name is Coots Matthews and he's one of the premiere oil well firefighters in the world. He's currently heading up the effort to extinguish the well fire that's been raging southwest of here since Friday.

Matthews, half of the Boots and Coots team of Houston, has had plenty of experience in the oil field. He's worked there for 35 years and has been fighting oil well fires for the last 24 years.

He entered the world of firefighting because "I decided I'd like to make more money and travel." His work has taken him to every country in the world except China and Russia to fight approximately 400 oil well fires "and no two of 'em are alike."

Along with Red Adair and Boots Hansen, Matthews learned the art of oil well firefighting from M.M. McKinley, a pioneer in the field. Adair took over McKinley's company in 1959 and Hansen and Matthews followed. Boots and Coots then broke away in December 1978 to form their own company.

So far this year, the company has handled 27 oil well fires. Last year's total was 64. "Everybody's building rigs and everybody's drilling oil wells," Matthews observed. Inexperienced workers at the well sites, he said, cause 95 percent of all oil well fires.

Contrary to most people's beliefs, Matthews noted that the actual fire is not that dangerous because the heat gives the worker a sign on whether he is getting too close. "We feel the most dangerous part is when it's out," he said.

There are three stages in putting out an oil well fire. The first is to "move all of the iron out of the way." This is to ensure that after the fire is put out, a red-hot piece of metal on the rig does not cause reignition.

After the area is clean, dynamite wrapped in asbestos is placed in the fire by a boom and detonated in the fire. The explosion of the dynamite snuffs out all of the oxygen around the fire, thus extinguishing the blaze.

After the fire is out, the well is capped.

The Rankin well fire is currently in the first stage. Work has been stymied by wind changes which may delay putting out the fire, but "it's an average fire," Matthews said.

Assisting him with the fire are Odessans Ace Barnes and J.D. Gray. The boom will be driven by George Curry, another Odessan. Curry, who will be 71 next March, has driven the booms in approximately 50 oil well fires.

States fight the elements

By ANDY O'CONNELL

Heat that wiped out a multitude of Florida chickens crawled up the East Coast and forced some schools to close early, while exhausted Southern California firefighters got the upper hand on fires that have burned 30,450 acres.

Flood waters retreated in Kansas, Indiana and Texas, where at least 22 people have died in violent storms since the weekend.

Fort Myers, Fla., suffered under triple-digit temperatures for the fifth consecutive day and the mercury hit a record 102 degrees for the second straight day in Jacksonville, Fla.

"Birds don't have sweat glands like humansdo, so when tey get hot, they literally roast in the heat," said Wayne Muir, broiler manager at the Paramount Poultry Co. of Jacksonville, which has lost 20,000 chickens since Saturday.

The temperature hit 105 degrees in Kenansville, N.C., and the heat set records for the date in Raleigh and Asheville.

Los Angeles also sweltered under record-breaking heat as the mercury hit 105 degrees.

It didn't get quite as hot in New York City, but the 93-degree heat that made Tuesday the hottest day of the year was coupled with a temperature-humidity index of 86, which matched the highest reading for all of last summer.

Chill-seeking New Yorkers bought plenty of cold drinks and Italian ices from Manhattan vendor Paul Ramirez, but he asked, "What good is getting rich if you die of the heat?"

Temperatures hit triple digits across the South, along the Atlantic Coast and in the inland Southwest and California.

Washington, D.C., suffering its hottest June in history, sweltered under 100 percent relative humidity and schools in suburban Virginia and Maryland closed early because of failing air-conditioning systems.

Southern California fires fed by hot, dry winds have destroyed 65 homes in six counties: Riverside, San Bernardino, Los Angeles, Orange, Ventura and San Diego. Several firefighters and residents were reported injured in the increasingly successful battle against the fires, but there were no deaths.

There was more rain but no new flooding in Texas, where at least nine people have died in floods. A search was underway in San Antonio for a man in his early 30s who was seen "bobbing up and down" after being swept into the overflowing San Antonio River.

Indiana residents were cleaning up after tornadoes and high winds Monday night damaged several buildings, overturned cars and uprooted trees. One construction worker drowned and two others were missing after they fell into a rain-swollen river Tuesday in South Bend when part of a bridge they were working on crumbled.

Some areas in Great Bend, Kan., were still under water after weekend floods forced 1,900 to flee from their homes, but all roads were open and residents were cleaning up yards as the weather turned sunny Tuesday.

Fire still raging

mate the fire's temperature. He added that the general estimate was that the steel rig melted within seven minutes of ignition, but doubted that anyone actually timed it.

Asked if the well will be usable, Hopson replied, "More than likely. We don't know what we've got right now. We've got to get some of that (rig pieces) out of there."

Surety company files suit to recover funds

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The National Surety Corp., which paid Midland's First National Bank $139,123.89 last year in covering the bulk of the bank's loss in an embezzlement scheme by a loan officer, has filed a suit in federal court in Midland to recover its money from the ex-banker who purloined the funds.

Object of the surety company's suit is 41-year-old Lonnie M. Bartley, who embezzled more than $250,000 from two Midland banks in 1978, 1979 and 1980, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Bartley, convicted of misapplication of funds, is serving a 10-year sentence in the Federal Correction Institution at Big Spring for white-collar criminals.

He pleaded guilty to four counts of embezzling $22,200 from the two banks last year, and was sentenced last June 17 by U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Bartley was an assistant vice president at The First National Bank, where he was a consumer loan officer from July 1974 to May 1979, and then became a vice president at Commercial Bank & Trust Co.

NSC was surety of First National Bank under a banker's blanket bond and as such was obligated to insure the bank for losses caused from "larceny, theft, embezzlement, forgery, misapplication or misappropriation of funds, or any other act of fraud or dishonesty...."

On Feb. 19, 1980, The First National Bank discovered the loss due "to loans to ficticious customers, diversions of funds from loans to legitimate customers and as a result of issuance of bogus bank money orders...done entirely by the fraud or dishonesty" of Bartley, according to the suit's petition.

The First National Bank sustained losses of $125,128 via loans to fictitious customers; $45,761.37 via diverted loans to legitimate customers, and $19,477.64 via bogus bank money orders.

Bartley reportedly had invested the funds in ventures which went sour or which did not pan out soon enough for him to replace the money he had taken from the banks.

Representing the NSC in the civil suit is Midland attorney James Boldrick.

At time of his sentencing last June, Bartley told the court that he regreted his deed.

"I'm well aware of the fact that what I did was inappropriate," he told the judge in open court, "...and I assure you that it'll never happen again."

His defense attorney, John Hyde, told the court that Bartley was a man of "great potential." The banker "lost his family and lost his community standing. He has disgraced himself."

Shooting victim takes stand despite protests

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A defense attorney's attempt to keep the victim of a shooting off the witness stand was thwarted here Tuesday though the lawyer, Russell Busby, charged that the prosecution had knowingly violated the law by not reporting that the victim was an illegal alien.

"I think it is against the law," Busby said in 142nd State District Courtroom, to know of an illegal alien but to not report it to a federal agent.

"I don't understand it to be that way," Presiding Judge Pat Baskin said before opening testimony began.

Busby also admitted that he wasn't certain if concealing such knowledge was or was not a crime.

"I submit," countered Assistant District Attorney Mary Ann Oakley, "everybody in this courtroom has committed that 'offense.'"

"Let's avoid that (subject)," Baskin said.

Apparently no attempts have been made to deport the victim-witness, Carlos Delgado Gonzales, since the shooting last November. "That's the risk (deportation) he's been taking since the shooting," Ms. Oakley said.

"He may have a 'green card' (designating a legal alien) for all Mr. Busby knows," Ms. Oakley said tersely.

The victim-witness who was subject of the discourse was Spanish-only-speaking Carlos Delgado Gonzales, 24, who was shot four times by a .25-caliber automatic pistol at a bar at 200 E. Kentucky Ave. about 11 p.m. last Nov. 26. His interpretator was police officer Victor Rivera.

Gonzales has been twice convicted of the misdemeansor offense of illegal entry into the United States from Mexico.

ON TRIAL in the attempted-murder case is Martin Munoz Minjarez, a 31-year-old Odessan who is accused of slapping his ex-girlfriend who was dating Gonzales and then shooting Gonzales.

The girlfriend, Josie Marquez Martinez of Midland, was one of 17 witnesses, including eight policemen and detectives, called by the state in its bid to persuade the eight-man, four-woman jury to convict Minjarez.

And defense attorney Busby also objected to the state calling Ms. Martinez to the witness stand. He took that stance that since the defendant and Ms. Martinez had lived together for sometime until 1978 and since she bore his child that Minjarez and the woman enjoyed a common-law marriage.

"The relationship has been broken off," argued Ms. Oakley.

But Busby countered that the relationship, if common law, cannot simply be dissolved at will.

"It requires a divorce before it can be broken off."

The judge allowed Ms. Martinez, who said she was now pregnant with Gonzales's baby, to testify. Whether or not her relationship with Minjarez was a common-law marriage was not an issue taken up by the court; Busby's view was that a woman cannot testify against her husband in a criminal proceeding.

THE WOMAN DID testify that Minjarez had walked into the bar, where she and Gonzales were sitting, slapped her, and twice shot her boy friend. She said that Minjarez apparently intended to shoot her, but that Gonzales raised his arm to protect her, and her ex-boyfriend again shot Gonzales.

"He (Minjarez) told me that he was going to kill me," Ms. Martinez said.

Under cross-examination by Busby, Ms. Martinez admitted that she had been convicted for theft in the early 1970s in Odessa and Midland and had served an 18-month prison term.

"That has nothing to do with it (the case on trial)," protested Ms. Martinez.

"Is that (the convictions) a true fact?" Busby asked.

"Yes," she admitted, but contested: "What does that have to do with this?"

Another state witness, Isidro Carrillo, a carpenter who said he was "pretty drunk" at the time of the shooting, said he heard one gunshot, though Busby tried to get him to admit that more shots could have been fired.

"I didn't say I heard 15 or 20 shots," he said after he apparently tired of Busby's harping on the number of shots fired. "I heard one shot.

"When I heard the shot, I tried to leave the bar," Carrillo said. The jurors laughed, but the witness remained impassive and unsmiling.

"I understand," said Busby.

BARTENDER Raul Gomez testified that the bearded defendant walked up "to them (Gonzales and Ms. Martinez) and he slapped Josie, and he (Gonzales) got up.

"All the guys (playing pool), as soon as they heard them shots, they got close to the door," Gomez said.

Midland policeman Danny Neal, who was driving a "roving unit" on the night of the shooting, said he "heard what sounded like four gunshots," as he rounded a corner near the bar.

Neal said he arrested and handcuffed Minjarez after the defendant had tossed the pistol on the bar's roof.

"He told me he was 'cool' — not to shoot him."

About that time, the officer said "two females" were attending to the wounded Gonzales, who by that time had staggered from the bar and was lying in middle of the street.

After he was arrested and in the police car, Minjarez told his ex-girl friend in Spanish "You're next," Neal said.

Complaints lodged

Two burglary complaints claiming a total loss of nearly $10,000 were lodged with police during the past 24 hours.

In the first complaint, Brent Wilson of 3606 Anetta Drive told officers someone entered his home through a side door and took assorted stereo and musical equipment worth $5,150.

And Danny Howard of 1009 W. College St. said a TV set and assorted jewelry and tools valued at $4,052 had been stolen from his residence. Entry was gained through a side window.

China wants U. S. assurances

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

PEKING (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. came to Peking to dispel doubts about President Reagan's commitment to good relations between the United States and China.

He appears to have achieved his purpose in part. But China put him on notice it wants to see his words backed up with deeds before being completely satisfied it has a friend in the White House.

Haig's announcement that the Reagan administration has agreed in principle to sell lethal arms to the People's Republic of China captured most of the attention at the end of his visit, the first by a high-level member of the administration.

But it couldn't obscure completely the cool remarks about the visit by Foreign Minister Huang Hua at a closing banquet Tuesday night.

An Analysis

HUANG SAID Haig's visit was "very useful" and that the Chinese were "very glad to have had the opportunity of hearing the secretary's authoritative explanations of the foreign policies of President Reagan and his administration."

Then he made the point in his toast that "our two sides do not entirely share the same views" and added that the two nations "must also prove with our actions" that the relationship can endure.

Apparently the Chinese did not want to let Haig leave in a cloud of triumph.

Haig himself saw only success, telling reporters at a news conference after the banquet that the visit was "unusually productive" and foreshadowed "a major expansion of Sino-American cooperation and Sino-American friendship."

He said he was sure the Chinese felt the same.

Reagan himself, in a Washington news conference just four hours later, gave the Chinese cause to remain cautious. He denounced communism as an "aberration" and predicted its rapid demise as a major political system.

WHATEVER OTHER changes have been made in China in the last decade of its move toward the West, it still remains a communist nation tightly controlled by its Communist party.

Reagan also reaffirmed U.S. friendship with Taiwan and said he would uphold the provisions of the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979.

While those statements, by themselves, don't mean Reagan would upset U.S.-Chinese relations, the timing was a pointed reminder to the Chinese that unconditional trust of the Reagan administration would be risky right now.

Haig offered no public assurances that the United States wouldn't sell high-performance jet aircraft to Taiwan. He said it was a "very sensitive issue" and refused to answer any further questions about it at the news conference.

He also said he reaffirmed the administration's intention to maintain "unofficial relations" with Taiwan, and while he said this was "understood" by the Chinese, he didn't say they agreed to it.

The announcement that the administration might sell weapons to China could well be less significant than it sounded. Even before coming here, senior U.S. officials said they didn't think China was interested in buying U.S. arms, at least in large amounts.

And Haig said any arms orders by China would have to be approved on a "case-by-case basis."

Midlanders suing Gulf Oil

The owners of oil, gas and other minerals in three leases owned and operated in Pecos County by Gulf Oil Corp. are seeking compensation for losses they claim they suffered by Gulf allegedly failing to pay the mineral owners royalties based on the "highest" market value of gas, gasoline and other petroleum products from the leases.

Plaintiffs in the suit are Sam F. Hurt Jr. and James R. Hurt, both of Midland; Rex H. Richardson of Colorado; Midland National Bank, trustee of the Cecil Hurt Trust, and The First National Bank of Midland, trustee of the Freddie Wheeler Hurt Moore Trust.

The plaintiffs claim that Gulf breached its "covenant and duty by failing to obtain the highest price available to defendant (Gulf) for said gas and by failing to act in good faith in selling gas."

The amount in litigation is undetermined but "greatly" exceeds the $10,000 minimum jurisdictional limits of federal court.

However, the plaintiffs are seeking the difference between royalties they realized on what Gulf accepted as the market value of gas and other petroleum products and royalties which they would have received had Gulf sought the "highest price" available at date of sale.

Plaintiffs' attorney is Tom Reavley of Austin.

No joking matter

The motive behind the firing of blanks at Queen Elizabeth II remains unclear, but British authorities seem to have the right attitude about the incident.

A 17-year-old man was arrested shortly after the incident on Saturday as the queen was riding horseback from Buckingham Palace to a Trooping of the Color ceremony at the Horse Guards' Parade. Reports indicated six blanks were fired about 10 feet from the queen.

It could be that the young man staged the incident for his own amusement with no consideration of the potential consequences of his actions or of the serious nature of the incident. But the incident was a serious one and should be viewed in that context.

Public officials and others in the limelight are understandably edgy at the current time. Much of their uneasiness is directly attributable to the assassination attempt earlier this year of President Ronald Reagan and the wounding later of Pope John Paul II. Those two incidents alone were enough to arouse concern.

But when news of this latest incident spread across the globe, there were more than a few who sadly shook their heads and muttered, "What is this world coming to?"

The answer to that rhetorical question eludes us, as it does most of the rest of the world. It seems that 1981 is destined to be one of the more violent years of modern times.

That's why it's imperative that the British view this latest assault with the proper degree of seriousness. The growning wave of violence sweeping the nations of the world must be addressed swiftly and with conviction.

Even if the assault on Queen Elizabeth II was performed with no intent of physical harm (and apparently it was since only blanks were fired), to treat it lightly would be to take a step toward condemning all public figures to live in a shooting-gallery world.

The incident involving the queen was no joking matter and the punishment shouldn't be either. As Queen Victoria once said, "We are not amused."

Utilizing real estate

Critics of President Reagan's budget proposals complain that contemplated cuts in Amtrak funding could bring railroad passenger service to a virtual halt.

But Amtrak officials don't share the doomsday predictions. Amtrak president Alan S. Boyd believes that the agency can be relieved of its federal dependency by 1985. His goal is to put Amtrak real estate to work.

Boyd said that passenger stations such as the 30th Street Station in Philadelphia and Washington's Union State should be developed with private investment for multiple use.

Boyd believes that trains will pay their own operating costs by 1985 and that the envisioned additional sources of revenue will finance Amtrak's capital needs.

If the site occupied by Washington's ghostly terminal can be made to produce revenue instead of draining funds for maintenance, the plan should be pursued.

In its eagerness to become competitive with airline and bus companies, however, Amtrak must be wary of the extent of its own involvement. Amtrak should stick to operating trains and leave its subsidiary endeavors in the hands of specialists.

The agency should concentrate on being a carefree landlord and leave the complexities of hotel operation or officebuilding operation to those who know those businesses best.

Ride on shuttle airline makes cab ride seem fun

Art Buchwald

Anyone who has been flying tourist class these days has noticed that the airlines are placing their rows closer and closer to each other, making it more difficult to get your entire body into a seat.

I was on a shuttle to New York City the other morning, and the stewardess announced that all carry-on luggage had to be placed under your seats.

The man next to me called her over and said, "What do I do with my knees?"

The stewardess said, "I beg your pardon?"

"My briefcase is under the seat in front of me, but I don't have any place for my knees."

"Neither do I," I told her.

"Could I put my knees in the overhead rack?" he wanted to know.

"No," she said. "That would be against regulations. It would present a safety hazard in case we hit turbulence."

"Why don't you put them on your chest?" I suggested to my seatmate.

"I was hoping to read my newspaper," he replied. "It's almost impossible to turn a page if you have your knees on your chest."

The stewardess said, "FAA regulations forbid you to put your knees on your chest while the safety belt sign is on."

"Why doesn't the FAA have a rule that an airline has to provide room for a passenger's knees?"

"Because the airlines have been deregulated to increase competition. They can now put the rows as close together as they want. The government is no longer concerned with leg room."

My seatmate said, "I'm in the cattle business and the government still has strict regulations as to how many cattle may be shipped in a car. You'd think we would have the same rights as animals."

"I'm just a stewardess. If you have any complaints, why don't you make them to management?"

"Could I check my knees in the baggage compartment?" he asked.

"I'm sorry, we're just about to take off and we can't check anything."

The stewardess went away. I turned to the man and said, "I have a suggestion, if you don't mind. Why don't you put your knees on my lap and I'll put my knees on your lap. In that way we'll both be more comfortable."

"You're not gay are you?" he wanted to know.

"Heck no, and I assume you're not either."

"Well, let's give it a try," he said.

"Try not to take the crease out of my pants," I begged him. "I have to speak at a lunch today."

"I'll be careful."

We put our legs across each other's laps.

The pilot announced we were third in line for takeoff.

The stewardess came down the aisle to check if our safety belts were fastened.

"That's not permitted," she said sternly.

"Where does it say so in the regulations?" my seatmate demanded.

"Look what you've started," she said. "Everyone is putting his legs in the person's lap next to him."

It actually wasn't a bad trip, and when we got to La Guardia we shared a taxi into New York. Fortunately it was a Checker cab and we could both stretch our legs as far as we wanted. The ride put shuttle airline to shame.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Justice covered up Carter-Vesco dealing

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Twice in seven years, federal grand juries probably would have indicted the president of the United States if the Justice Department had not dissuaded them.

The first president to arouse a grand jury's suspicion, of course, was Richard Nixon in the Watergate case. By a 19-0 vote, the grand jury named Nixon as a co-conspirator but refrained from indicting him after the prosecutors strongly advised against it.

The second president to become involved in a criminal investigation was Jimmy Carter. In the Robert Vesco case, "the Justice Department told the grand jury there would be no indictments," the foreman reported to the judge, "because they would sign none." But the grand jury flatly refused to exonerate anyone, including the president.

The grand jury had received evidence that Carter was implicated, perhaps unwittingly, in a $10 million attempted political fix. The evidence is contained in Justice Department documents, intended for official eyes only, which my associate Indy Badhwar has examined. Here are the highlights:

— The notorious Vesco, an international swindler on the lam from the law, gave some Georgians a $10 million cut of his allegedly stolen stocks. In return, they promised to use their influence with the Carter White House to get the federal government off Vesco's back.

The contact man between the Georgians and the Carter crowd, Spencer Lee IV, dropped by the White House on Feb. 8, 1977. Afterward, he told one of the Georgians, R.L. Herring, that he had discussed the Vesco deal with both the president and one of his aides, Richard Harden.

Lee later denied this under oath. But a Justice Department memo, describing "the results of two polygraph examinations administered to Lee," tells a different story. It states that Lee showed "deception" when he denied telling Herring "that he had spoken to the president" and, again, when he denied disclosing "details of the Vesco offer ... with Harden in the White House."

— A key figure in the plot was Costa Rica's President Daniel Oduber, whom Vesco boasted was in his "hip pocket." In January 1977, Vesco arranged for Lee to meet with Oduber's foreign minister in Costa Rica.

Vesco wanted Lee to put President Carter in touch with Oduber. The day after Lee visited the White House, Carter placed a telephone call to Oduber. Carter explained to FBI agents that he had called merely to congratulate the Costa Rican president for receiving a "conservation award."

It seems unlikely that Carter, who had served less than a month in the White House and was steeped in the overwhelming problems of the presidency, would stop everything to congratulate a minor Central American ruler over some obscure award. Certainly, the jurors considered the timing of the call to be suspicious.

— According to the White House, Harden learned about the $10 million bribery plot the evening of Feb. 8, 1977, and admonished Lee to withdraw from the conspiracy. This is disputed not only by Lee's lie detector test but by telephone records and other witnesses.

Then by the White House account, Harden waited a week to tell the president that a fugitive from justice had tried to bribe his aides. Harden related the full details of the bribery scheme, according to the official version, to Carter on Feb. 15, 1977.

Yet the Justice Department investigation established that Harden had spent no more than five minutes with the president on Feb. 15. This was hardly long enough to explain the elaborate details of the Vesco plot to a president who should have been inquisitive about this blatant attempt to corrupt his staff.

Five minutes was just long enough, however, for the president to scribble a note asking his attorney general to "please see Spencer Lee from Albany when he requests an appointment." The note didn't ask the attorney general to investigate the bribery attempt, as Carter was required by law to do. The note merely sought an appointment for Lee, who had been asked by Vesco to halt extradition proceedings against him.

Shortly thereafter, the extradition proceedings were halted, though there is no evidence that Lee ever spoke to the attorney general. It is quite clear, however, that the president never sought an investigation of the bribery plot. Rather than investigate Lee, the president appointed him to a judicial nominating committee to help select federal judges.

The Carter administration tried to dismiss the Robert Vesco case as merely "a little bit of influence peddling." This was reminiscent of the Nixon administration's attempt to characterize the Watergate case as a "third-rate burglary."

It took an uncompromising federal judge, a determined special prosecutor and a relentless investigative press to bring the Watergate conspiracy into the open. Except for my own modest effort, which at least forced a grand jury investigation, none of these pressures were brought to bear on the Robert Vesco case.

This made it easy, in the words of the grand jury foreman, for "the cover-up activities (to be) orchestrated within the Department of Justice under the concept that the (Carter) administration must be protected at all costs."

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

The Supreme Court ruled that the nude dancing policy of a club in Mt. Ephraim, N.J., is legal. Just think — now they can do "Chorus Line" at half the cost.

●

The justices cited the First Amendment, which is perfectly clear: "Congress shall make no law prohibiting the free activity of nude dancing in Mt. Ephraim, N.J." What foresight!

●

Our Founding Fathers didn't say Boston or Tulsa — they decided that if the people wanted to dance nude, they must go to Mt. Ephraim, N.J.

●

With a little imagination, this town can take advantage of such distinguished sanction. First, they'll need a slogan — "Welcome to Mt. Ephraim, where the justices conclude — we can dance in the nude — and a prude is booed."

●

Or — "Here in Mt. Ephraim the dancin's fine — drop off your clothes at the city line."

●

This ruling may not have the same place in history as the Dred Scott decision or Madison vs. Marbury, but perhaps the citizens of Mt. Ephraim could put up statues of Warren Burger and his fellow justices — fully clothed, of course.

NICK THIMMESCH

Licensing journalists would be blow to press freedom

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — The freedom to express ideas and the free flow of information are so much taken for granted in our republic, that it's always startling to realize that much of the world doesn't enjoy these liberties, or even rejects them.

The latest survey by Freedom House — official scorekeeper of civil and political rights — shows that a bare 23 percent of the world's nations have print and broadcast media considered free. The rest of the world press is under controls ranging from the strictures of Communist and other totalitarian regimes to partial controls in some Third World nations.

You would hope that the trend would be toward the side of a free media, but it isn't. In fact, for six years now, there has been a raging debate in the U.N.'s Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) over the role of the media in the world.

Soviet-bloc and Third-World Marxist countries keep pushing for all manner of press controls, including licensing of journalists and plain old censorship. Nations advocating a free media, led by the United States, the United Kingdom, and West Germany, have managed to fight a successful holding action on the assault from nations wanting to use the press to control society.

Next week, in Paris, there will be another wrangle between the free and anti-free press forces. The way this battle has been going, it seems the "controllers" have forgotten or ignored Article 19 of the Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the U.N. General Assembly in 1948, which reads:

"Everyone has the right . . . to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers."

But the controllers want a New World Information Order, a euphemism for making it tough or impossible for journalists from free nations to work in nations which aren't.

When I was in Moscow in 1975, shortly after the Helsinki Conference where one provision of the agreement called for increased access of the press, I interviewed Georgei Arbatov, director of the Institute of U.S. of America. Arbatov, mindful that the Free World press might request greater access to the Soviet Union, grumped to me: "Don't think that this agreement means that we will allow your rude TV network crews to come here and run up and down our alleys looking for trouble."

That is the Communist view of the free press. Another view opposed to our concept was expressed to me last winter by Joseph Garba, a friend, who was Nigeria's foreign minister, but is presently at Harvard University. "Your newsmen only report about the troubles in Africa or what makes us look bad," he said. "You do not report our accomplishments, or try to tell our story."

Now Arbatov and Garba are not in the same ideological camp, but they have similar complaints about the "Western" press. In the same way, leaders of Moslem and/or Arab nations charge that the Western press has no idea what Islam is, that their press coverage is ignorant at least and a cruel stereotype at worst.

Altogether the totalitarian states and the nations aggrieved by Western press coverage amount to a majority of the world's countries and, therefore, have considerable sentiment in the U.N. for establishing press codes and standards for journalists.

The trouble with such codes is that they can be used arbitrarily by officials to intimidate foreign journalists, or even keep them out by declaring them unqualified by virtue of education, unsuitable responses in "tests," or character reputation.

U.N. Resolutions often don't mean much, but they can signal governments to carry out politics. The anti-free press sentiment in the U.N. has given the Associated Press, United Press International, Reuters and Agence France-Presse — just to name some — cause to wonder if their people will be able to be stationed in the Third World or get visas to carry out assignments.

Presently, seven Latin American nations require that journalists be licensed, meaning that they must conform to the wishes of totalitarian regimes. Other nations are considering the licensing technique. There is proposed legislation even in Puerto Rico, which is part of the U.S., to license journalists.

The situation isn't one-sided. It's true that Western journalists often look only for trouble in the Third World and show small interest in how a nation struggles to improve itself. The stereotyping of Islamic nations and Arab peoples is sometimes a scandal in the American press. And because many American news agencies cannot afford to keep a correspondent (at upwards of $100,000 a year in expense) in a Third World nation, visiting "paratrooper" journalists often go away with superficial impressions.

As always the case with earnest Americans, we're trying, we're trying. A new UPI advisory on foreign reportage states: "Special regards shall be given to the sensitivities and needs for a more balanced flow of news to and from all nations."

The more we in the free-press nations talk with officials from the Third World, the more we will understand each other, and my hunch is the free-press gang will win out and do a better job of reporting in the process.

Worries about water are rippling through Florida

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Bubbling with springs, speckled by lakes and blessed with ample rain, Florida has water, plenty of water, but not everywhere, and many drops are unfit to drink.

Some 10,000 miles of rivers and streams and 7,000 lakes mark the peninsula, and springs gurgle up some 7 billion gallons of pure water daily. Underfoot is a porous foundation estimated to hold 100 times as much water as Lake Mead behind the Hoover Dam.

Nevertheless, this spring's drought prompted mandatory water use curbs of up to 25 percent in southern Florida for a time and triggered voluntary limits elsewhere. Lawns turned brown, cars went unwashed and in some places giant sinkholes opened up.

Mandatory curbs are over for now, with the advent of the rainy season, but the drought continues, and concern over the state for the state's water is rippling beyond a few wary environmentalists and sportsmen.

"We're using more water than we get, and sooner or later we're going to be brought to account for that," said John Betz, a biologist at the University of South Florida. "As the population has grown, the use of water has grown tremendously."

In 20 years, Florida's population has doubled to nearly 10 million. It is projected to reach 20 million by the year 2000, as more people are lured by the state's warm climate and 1,000 miles of ocean coast.

So far, most growth has been in southern coastal cities and in central Florida's belt of tourist attractions. But much of the state's fresh water is in northern Florida.

In addition, development has ruined many of nature's ways of preserving and protecting fresh water. Wetlands have been drained, streams rerouted and lakes used for sewage. Industry has taken over floodplains. Rainwater rushes into the sea, prevented from soaking into the ground by acres of concrete.

Some environmentalists say state officials have smiled on growth at any cost. But Gov. Bob Graham says the state — which passed a wide-ranging water use act after the 1971 drought, the worst in modern Florida history — has changed its ways.

"I believe there is a high level of public recognition that effective water management is a key to the future of Florida," he said. "This attitude has been growing since the 1960s. Until then, water policy was a policy of discharge, of getting the water off the land so the land could be used."

There is much to do: many canals in southern Florida are brackish and filled with bacteria. Filth has wiped out oysters in Tampa Bay. Lake Apopka in central Florida, once a bass fisherman's paradise, is virtually a septic tank.

Most of the state's 54-inch annual rainfall — second in the nation only to Louisiana's 55 inches — occurs from June through September. The dry months are a struggle for southern Florida. Many over-taxed wells suck salt water from the sea. Even Biscayne Aquifer, the area's chief freshwater source, is tainted with salt.

The 1972 Water Resource Act, prompted by 1971's drought, established a statewide water policy and creating five regional boards to set and enforce local policies. For the first time, large-scale water users had to get permits. And the boards may impose controls on water use.

Because of the Water Act, blighted waterways like Biscayne and Tampa bays are getting cleaner. The Apalachicola River has a new lease on life mainly because it is being left alone. And the St. John River, which lost much of its floodplain to developers, may get some of the land back through purchases sought by water managers.

"The restorative powers of earth are fascinating if you just give it a chance," said conservationist Marjorie Carr, president of the Florida Defenders of the Environment. But she and other environmentalists are cautious.

"I think the next decade is going to be the crucial one," Mrs. Carr said. "Either we will have devised a way to maintain Florida as an excellent place for man to live or it will be over-exploited and its quality decreased a great deal."

Graham has pushed for a nickel increase in the 40-cent documentary stamp tax on every $100 in land purchases, with the new revenues going to buy floodplains and marshes. And his cabinet rejected a request to drill for natural gas in a sensitive Panhandle estuary.

But he also approved a $16 million drainage plan to allow more farming in Hendry County, a plan that conservationists say will jeopardize water and wildlife. And one of his top goals in attracting industry, which critics say will bring pollution and overuse of water.

Idaho town claims to be trout capital of world

By CHARLES HILLINGER
The Los Angeles Times

BUHL, Idaho — At lake and mountain resorts all over America restaurants often feature "fresh local trout."

"Don't you believe it. Oh, the trout is fresh and darn good. But 99 out of 100 times it isn't local," Roger Oberg says. "It's trout raised in Southern Idaho and flown i fresh daily."

There are 200 trout farms within a 15-mile radius of Buhl supplying 90 percent of the trout sold in grocery stores, supermarkets, restaurants and served in institutions throughout the United States and Canada.

Trout is a $35 million annual industry in Buhl, population 2,500. It claims to be the trout capital of America.

"The trout industry is growing like crazy," says Oerg, 37, general manager of the Thousand Springs Trout Farm here. "Its growth rate the past few years has been phenomenal. Trout is becoming more and more popular at restaurants across the nation."

There are four major trout processors, 25 good sized growers and many potato and grain farmers who raise trout as a sideline on farms in and around Buhl.

The farms lie between the north bank of the Snake River and the spectacular palisades that rise from he floor of the canyon. Spilling out of the cliffs are thousands of springs from the subsurface Lost River.

"It's the abundance of this sparkling, cold, clear spring water that makes this country ideal for raising trout," says Oberg. "The spring water is 58 degress every day of the year — some of the purest water in the country."

More than 1,000 men and women derive their livelihood operating or working for the trout farms. The Thousand Springs Trout Farm, celebrating its 50th year and the cradle of the industry, has 160 employees.

It was 50 years ago that Jack Tingey, a Utah State Fish & Game Department biologist, laid out the ponds for the Thousand Springs farm and started growing trout commercially.

"Raising trout is like operating a cattle feed lot," says Oberg. "We spawn our fish, then spend 12 months fattening them up for the market place."

Large trout farms operate feed mills producing anchovy-herring meal pellets for fish food.

The trout weigh 12 to 16 ounces and measure 11 to 14 inches when taken from ponds, processed, packaged and shipped to the 50 states and Canada.

Midland's Ed Phariss, Veterans of Foreign Wars District 25 Commander-elect for 1981-82, will attend the Department of Texas Business Sessions and New Council of Administrations meetings in Houston Friday through Monday.

NASA scientists develop plant support system

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Inhabitants of space stations someday may be able to raise their own crops with a "space suit" for plants developed by scientists working for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Ecologist Steven Schwartzkopf says he has developed a plastic cylinder that supplies all of the plants' basic needs and uses sensors to follow their growth patterns.

The cylinders, which Schwartzkopf hopes someday will be placed on orbiting space stations, could help serve a threefold purpose: plants grown in space would supply food, provide oxygen and recycle human wastes.

But Schwartzkopf, who developed the cylinders at NASA's Ames Research Center here, warns there still are problems to be worked out in the laboratory.

Plants growing in a small closed environment sometimes are killed by toxins that build up in a small closed environment, he said. The "space suit" is 5 feet long and 18 inches in diameter.

Another problem is the production of oxygen, a by-product of plant metabolism. The buildup of oxygen creates more pressure than carbon dioxide, and if the excess oxygen builds up in the cylinder, its greater pressure could cause an explosion, he said.

In one experiment, he sealed a tomato plant inside the chamber for eight days, and it "seemed quite happy, although it did take the carbon dioxide level down during the day."

The space suit, which looks like a plastic cylinder within a cylinder, has hemisphere-like ends, also made of plastic, which seal it at the top and bottom. Plants are grown on a stainless steel screen disk.

As the roots grow down, they are bathed constantly by a spray of liquid fertilizer that Schwartzkopf calls a "nutrient fog" and are monitored constantly by sensors that keep track of light, humidity and other factors.

Because NASA demands absolute reliability for any system being used to help support astronauts, he said, "We're not talking just about maximizing yields, we're talking about getting the plant to do what we want it to do."

Swing to the right being marked by war of words

WASHINGTON (AP) — The swing to the political right in the nation's capital is being marked by a new war of words in Congress.

For instance, when the House was in the process of passing a resolution expressing "solidarity with the Soviet Union's 3 million oppressed Jews," Rep. John M. Ashbrook jumped up.

He asked the resolution's chief sponsor, Rep. Robert Garcia, D-N.Y.: "Where does the gentleman come up with this 'solidarity?' Do we not have a more American word we can use?"

Garcia said he didn't think the word was necessarily un-American.

"I will not object, but I would point out to the gentleman I would think he could find a little better word," Ashbrook said.

"The solidarity that was so prominent among the communists in the past decades seems to be waning and the word has taken on a more lofty and a more positive complexion," Garcia argued.

"With that assurance and the comfort that we are winning the war in the battle of the words, I withdraw my reservation of objection," Ashbrook replied.

Then there was Rep. Robert K. Dornan, R-Calif., who was briefing the House on his recent visit to El Salvador and who seemed to be suggesting a theory that could form the basis for distributing future U.S. foreign aid.

"It struck me that the name of this nation, separated from my state of California only by Mexico and the nation of Guatemala, is a particularly beautiful name," Dornan told his colleagues.

"It is not a name like Nicaragua or Vietnam or other geographical names that have fallen under a Marxist, a Leninist government," he said.

There is no Constitutional requirement that members of Congress live in the district they represent — although few would deny it offers a distinct political advantage. Therefore, only rarely do members live in one district and represent another.

The newest member, Rep. Steny H. Hoyer, a Maryland Democrat sworn in several days ago, is the exception.

The winner of a special election to create a vacancy caused by the illness of former Rep. Gladys Spellman, D-Md., Hoyer actually lives in the district of Rep. Marjorie S. Holt, R-Md.

Both represent Washington suburbs and Hoyer doesn't live far from where his district begins — just several blocks.

But in his maiden speech to the House, he made it clear that if Republican Holt "does not vote the way I like, I will vote against her in the next election."

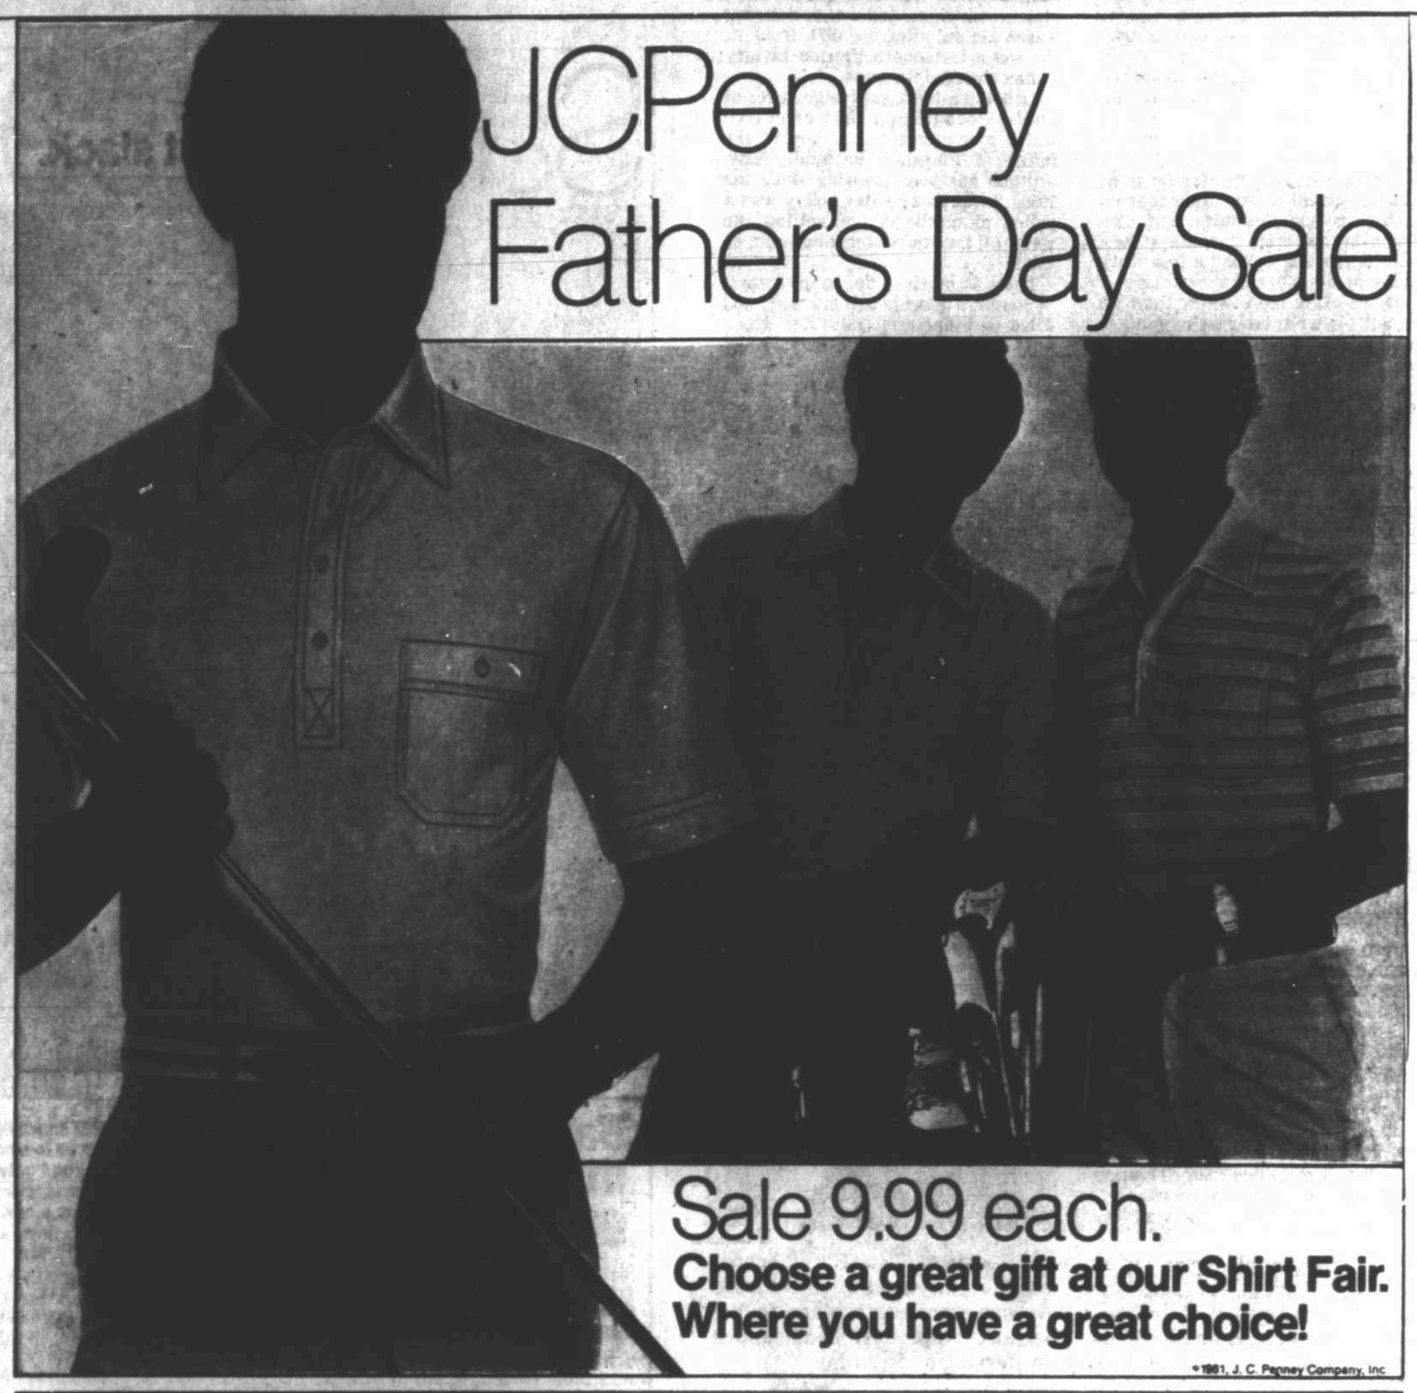

Holt's response: "We are going to redistrict you out of my district."

Almost all congressional districts in the country will be redrawn in the coming months to reflect changes in population reported in the 1980 Census.

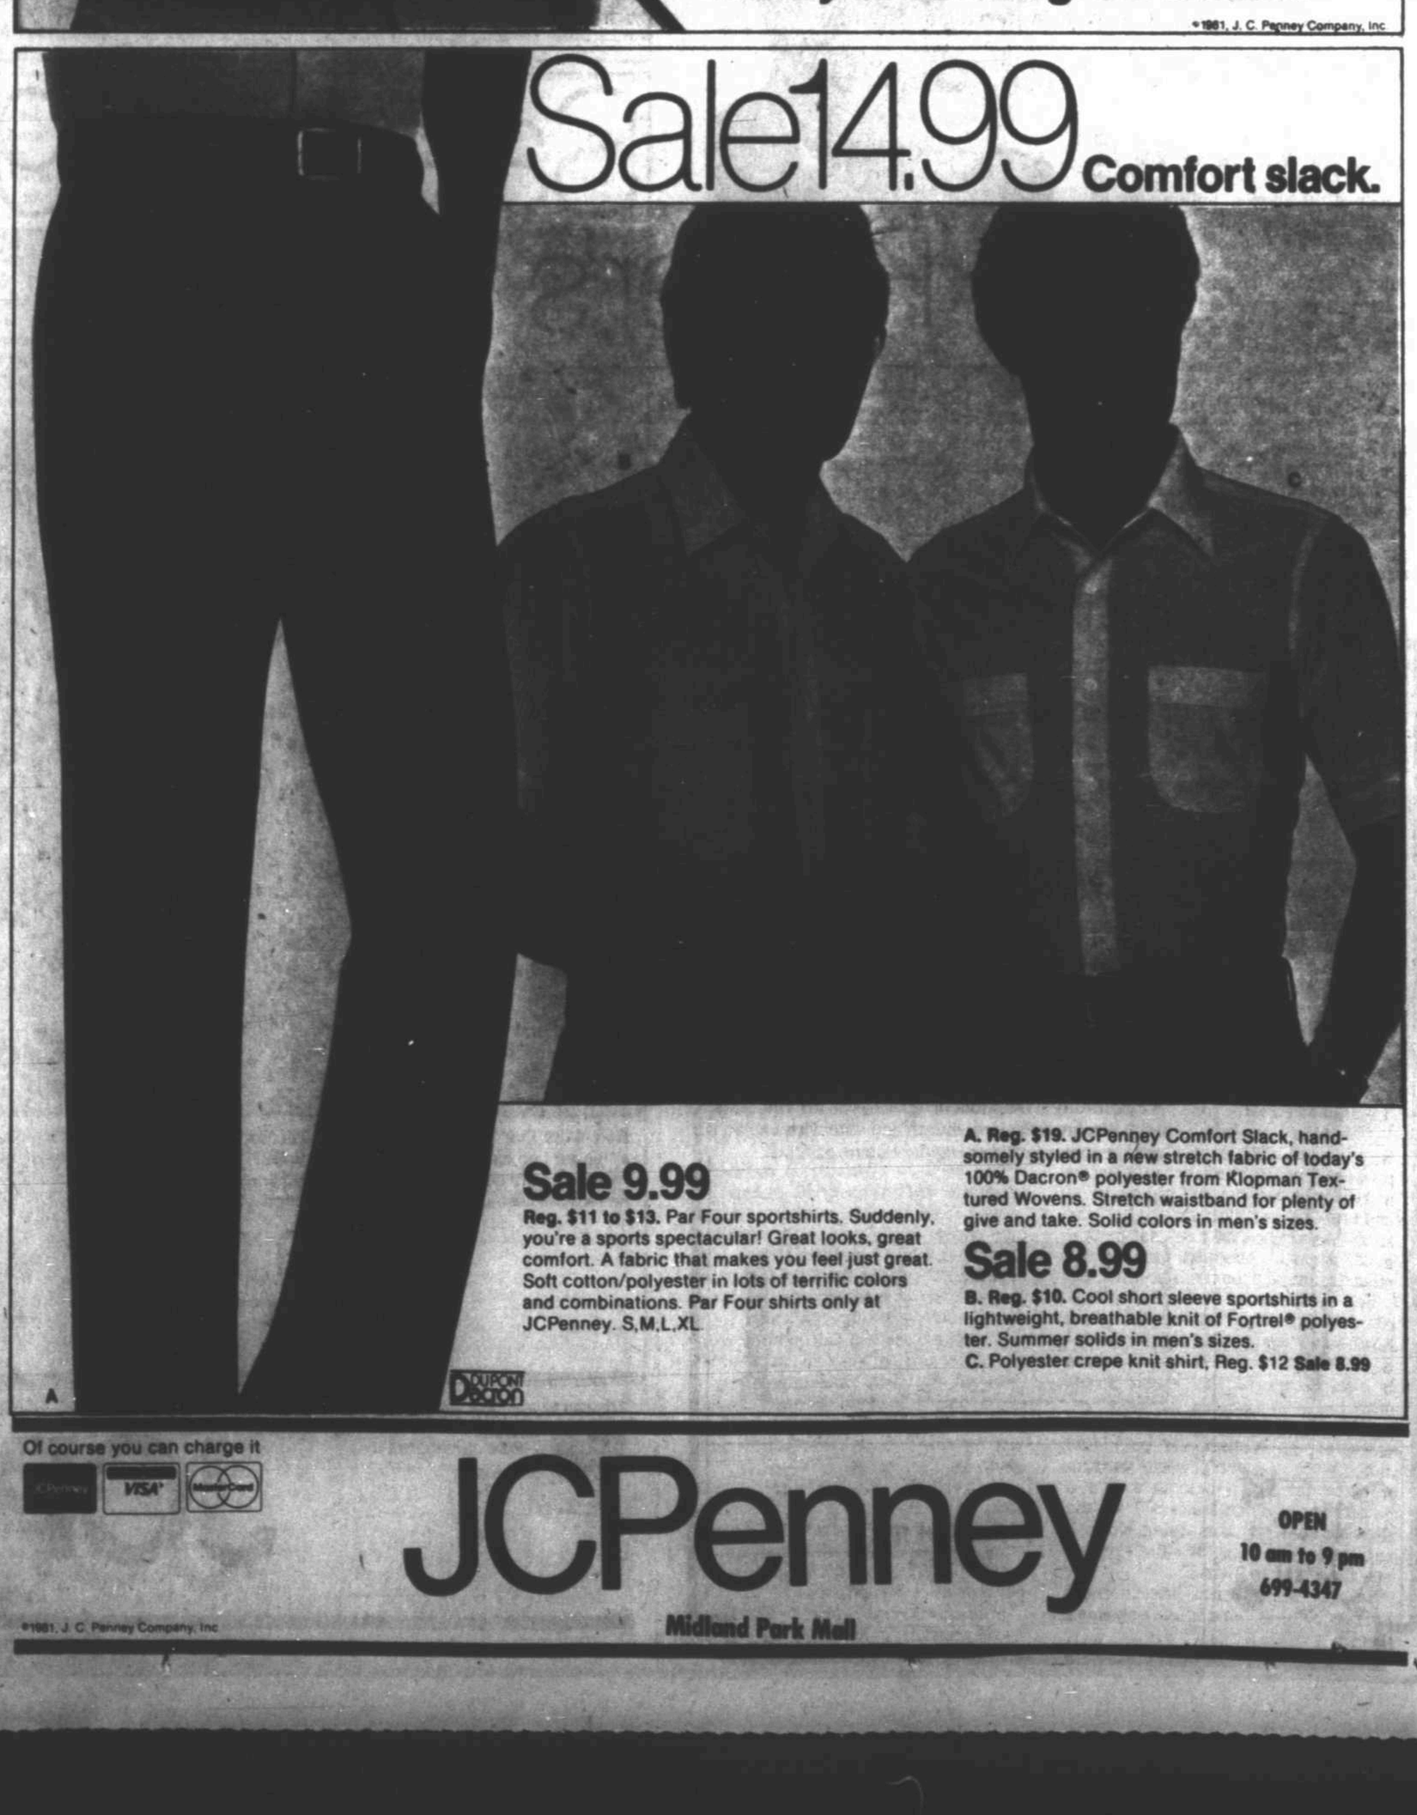

Hoyer said that would be fine with him "so that I have my own district" — and without even having to move his household.

Reagan puts some pomp into ambassador's welcome

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the realm of the ceremonial presidency, nothing could be much more ceremonial than the welcome President Reagan gives to foreign ambassadors newly assigned to Washington.

While Reagan was taking it easy in April and early May recuperating from a gunshot wound, the merry-go-round of ambassadors kept turning, dropping new envoys into town waiting to hand in their credentials at the White House.

With Reagan back at work full time, the gates were opened the other day, and five ambassadors were in line. A few more are on the schedule.

In keeping with the Reagan administration's efforts to restore some pomp to the presidency, the previously low-key ceremony has been upgraded.

During the Carter presidency, each arriving ambassador, often accompanied by family members, was escorted into the Oval Office without much fanfare. Reporters and photographers were allowed in, and the president had a few words to say about the state of U.S. relations with, say, Luxembourg.

When Reagan performed the chore, a military honor guard and band were deployed in the White House backyard and performed their duties for each arriving limousine.

As each ambassador met the president, the two posed in front of the fireplace in the Oval Office. Reporters and photographers were ushered in, and the president spoke:

"We're welcoming the ambassador from Djibouti to the United States here today...

"We're welcoming the ambassador from Surinam...

"We're very happy today to welcome the ambassador from the Republic of Liberia...

Each man presented a large envelope to Reagan and each received from him an envelope bearing a formal welcome. Each remained in the Oval Office, sometimes with families, just long enough for the journalists to shuffle out and get back in line for the next diplomat.

Each arrival of a foreign leader visiting the White House brings a new wrinkle to a traditional ceremony.

The Reagan White House has upgraded the program handed out to guests on the South Lawn, where the ceremony is held.

When Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki of Japan flew to Washington last month, a heavy-paper, four-page program was prepared in flowing, script-like printing. The Seal of the President of the United States was embossed on the front.

Each event on the agenda, from the arrival at 10 a.m. to the 19-gun salute, inspection of the honor guard and reception for a welcoming committee in the White House Blue Room, was listed.

For those who needed instruction, guests were told, under the heading "White House Customs," that certain behavior was expected:

"During the playing of Honors for the President and Visiting Dignitary, it is customary that White House Guests observe the following:

"Stand at attention during the playing of Ruffles and Flourishes (Musical Salute.)

"Stand at attention during the playing of Hail to the Chief.

GOP now just about even with Democrats

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — For nearly 20 years, Republicans have been arguing among themselves over the way to rebuild the dwindling ranks of their party.

In simplest terms, the debate went this way: Conservatives called for ideological realignment of the parties to give voters a clear choice, while liberals and moderates said the way to do it was to broaden the base of the GOP even if that meant programs and policies with a Democratic flavor.

While the rival wings disputed those rival theories, the roster of voters who call themselves Republicans declined steadily.

Now that trend has turned, and dramatically so. Riding a conservative groundswell and the coattails of a popular Republican president, the GOP comes out just about even with the Democrats when pollsters ask voters which party they prefer.

"We're on the threshhold of majority status," says Republican National Chairman Richard Richards.

"In the next few years, if we relate properly to the American people, we will be the majority party," adds Richards' deputy, Chuck Bailey. "If we're successful, and I think we will be, we will involve all Americans."

Not long ago, Republicans were bemoaning their status as a shrinking minority, even while they held the White House.

When former Chairman Mary Louise Smith left office, she spoke of a gap between the party and the voters it sought to enlist.

"Too many Americans believe that Republicans don't care about people problems, but only about such things as balanced budgets and big business and lots of things without souls," she said. "As long as we are cast in that mold, we will languish outside the mainstream of American politics."

Her successor, Bill Brock, was a conservative who ran into criticism from some more militant conservatives for arguing that the party had to broaden its appeal, that it said no too often.

"The Republicans in too many cases, in my opinion, sat back and said, 'Well, we don't want government to do it,'" Brock once told a conference of union leaders. "All the Republican Party was doing when it said that was saying, 'We don't recognize there's a problem.'"

But the mainstream has changed course. These are conservative times.

One of President Reagan's favorite lines is that government is not the solution, it is the problem.

Balanced budgets are popular with the voters and with both political parties. Some Democrats argue that Reagan doesn't plan to balance the budget fast enough.

There is talk, promoted by Republican leaders, that some conservative Democrats will switch parties and join the GOP before the 1982 elections. "I think we may see ... a realignment of parties, and some of these people coming over to join us," Richards says.

That's what conservatives were saying all those years. But it hasn't happened yet. Nor is there any way to measure the durability of the Republican climb in the polls, at least not now. Congressional elections are nearly 18 months away, and the success rate of Reagan's economic programs will be a major factor in shaping that campaign.

An Analysis

Still, the Republicans are doing very nicely in the only measurements available now.

An Associated Press-NBC News poll showed more Americans say they would vote for Republican congressional candidates than for Democrats if the elections were held now — the first time since the Dwight D. Eisenhower era that Republicans have held the lead in such surveys.

Forty-three percent of those questioned said they would vote for the Republican candidate for the House, 35 percent picked the Democrat, 22 percent weren't sure.

The survey on May 18-19 showed a dramatic shift in party identification as well. Twenty-eight percent of those questioned said they usually think of themselves as Republicans, 31 percent identified with the Democrats, 36 percent called themselves independents, and the rest weren't sure.

When the same 1,599 people were asked how they lean in preference between the two major parties, it came out 41 percent Republican, 40 percent Democratic and the rest insisting they were firmly independent.

Richard Wirthlin, Reagan's pollster, said his survey on a similar question showed 39 percent of Americans regard themselves as Republicans, 40 percent as Democrats, 21 percent as independents.

A year or so ago, surveys like those were showing a 20 percentage point margin in favor of the Democrats.

Two men undergo questioning in slaying of Telex chairman

OKMULGEE, Okla. (AP) — Two men held in connection with a Tennessee shooting have been questioned by Tulsa detectives because they resemble suspects in the killing of Telex Corp. Chairman Roger Wheeler, police say.

Tennessee authorities were headed to Oklahoma today to question the two Arizona men, who were arrested near here Tuesday morning in connection with the Monday shooting.

"They fall into the realm of possibilities so we're going to check them out," Tulsa police Major Stanley Glanz said of the two men.

Four Tulsa detectives questioned the two men Tuesday and brought fingerprints and photographs of the men back to Tulsa for further processing.

Wheeler, a millionaire industrialist, was shot once in the face at Southern Hills Country Club on May 27 by a burly, bearded gunman who jumped into a getaway car driven by another man, according to a police account based on information provided by witnesses.

Neither the car nor the men have been found despite a $100,000 reward posted by officials of Telex, the Tulsa-based electronics corporation.

One of the Arizona men has a beard and has other characteristics similar to those described by witnesses to the Wheeler slaying, police said.

The men, identified as Moses Coury, 39, and Kennon D. Laird, 46, both of Mesa, Ariz., were held without bail in Okmulgee County Jail pending arrival of Tennessee authorities, officials said.

Warrants seeking the arrest of the two men on charges of shooting with intent to commit murder were filed in Williamson County, Tenn., Tuesday, said Lt. James Tanksley of the county sheriff's office.

The two men were sought in an attack on William James Wilson at his residence near Franklin, Tenn., about 15 miles from Nashville.

The two were arrested in Schulter, about eight miles south of Okmulgee, after a police officer learned their pickup truck fit the description of the Tennessee getaway vehicle.

Okmulgee County Sheriff Gene Rice said that when the two men were arrested, authorities confiscated a .38-caliber revolver.

Wheeler was slain with a weapon of that caliber, investigators said.

Tennessee authorities said Wilson, a local businessman, was wounded Monday evening when four or five shots were fired at him. He was wounded in the hip. The circumstances of the shooting were unclear.

Court order requested against news leaks

ATLANTA (AP) — The lawyer for a man seeking a court order to stop police from leaking information that links him to the slayings of 28 young blacks admits such an order would be difficult to enforce.

But the attorney, former Atlanta Solicitor Mary Welcome, said the order would help slow the leaks by making police officials responsible for details that reach the news media about her client.

Ms. Welcome's comments came Tuesday during a break in a closed hearing on the man's request for a court order against law enforcement officials. U.S. District Judge Orinda Evans took the request under advisement.

Meanwhile, a survey released in New York Tuesday indicated that black Americans believe overwhelmingly that national and black community leaders and police are not doing enough to solve the killings.

Seventy-three percent of the 1,284 blacks questioned in April by Data Black Public Opinion Polls said there was too little attention from law enforcement authorities, and 58 percent felt black leaders were not doing enough. Sixty-nine percent said there was too little attention from national leaders in general, regardless of color.

Seventy-three percent of those responding to the telephone poll also said more attention would have been paid had the victims been white.

Ms. Welcome's client, a black, 23-year-old free-lance cameraman, has been under police scrutiny since he was stopped briefly May 22 by officers staking out the Chattahoochee River, where the bodies of six of the 28 victims have been found.

Two days later, the body of the 28th victim, 27-year-old Nathaniel Cater, was found in the river.

The man was questioned for 12 hours at FBI headquarters June 3 and 4 before being released. He has not been arrested or charged in any of the slayings.

News organizations objected to the closed hearing Tuesday, asking the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans to order it opened. But the appeals court refused to grant the request.

Judge Evans, however, indicated after the hearing that transcripts of the proceedings would be made available to the public and press.

The man's original suit asked for court orders to prevent both the police and press from linking him to the slayings. But Judge Evans on Monday ordered the complaint divided.

Ms. Welcome asked in an amendment to the original suit that police be stopped from making statements concerning the man's background; events surrounding his questioning; investigative procedures, including the results of lie detector tests; any statements the man made, and any evidence concerning him.

Prospective bidders get jail tour

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Bexar County Commissioners took prospective bidders through the Bexar County Jail Tuesday to allow them to formulate bids for a fire warning system ordered by a U.S. District Judge.

The smoke detection unit was one of the improvements U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions ordered as part of the settlement of a federal lawsuit filed by the American Civil Liberties Union and the Justice Department.

Bexar County Sheriff Joe Neaves had recently declared that the jail would refuse to keep federal prisoners after June 16, but he said he backed off that threat because the Texas Jail Standards Commission gave the county until Sept. 30 to comply with a state standard requiring the jail to house no more than 691 prisoners.

Neaves said bids on the fire warning system will be opened Thursday.

Medical help for veterans exposed to Agent Orange heading toward approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — Free medical care for Vietnam veterans whose illnesses were caused by the defoliant Agent Orange is heading toward final congressional approval.

The Senate passed a $232 million, four-year package of veterans' benefits Tuesday after adopting an amendment extending eligibility for care to victims of the defoliating chemical.

Veterans exposed to nuclear weapons tests would also be covered for any illnesses arising out of radiation.

The House version of the bill, passed June 2, would cover veterans exposed to Agent Orange and other defoliants but not those affected by nuclear weapons tests. A committee of House and Senate members will work out the differences between the two bills, but cannot eliminate provisions that are in both of them.

Meanwhile, eight Vietnam veterans, some of whom have been without solid food for almost a month, flew here from California on Tuesday to press their demands for Veterans Administration reform.

Bobby Phillips, spokesman for the hunger strikers, said the group, which began their protest May 20, planned to set up at least one tent on the White House lawn and deliver to President Reagan six 20-minute, tape-recorded pleas from veterans about their complaints regarding the VA.

A scheduled Fourth of July march on Washington by veterans from all over the country has been canceled, Phillips said, but one will be held at the end of September.

He said the Senate's vote on Agent Orange funds represents "a big part of the demands that we have been demanding."

In both the Senate and House bills, the Veterans Administration or a VA-approved doctor would have to determine that an illness was indeed caused by Agent Orange for a veteran to be eligible for care in a VA hospital or nursing home.

Vietnam veterans have claimed that exposure to Agent Orange resulted in ill effects including birth defects among their children, cancer, skin conditions, liver damage, unexplained rages and impotence.

The Veterans administration is conducting a study, ordered by Congress, to determine what, if any, medical effects the defoliant has had.

The Senate and House bills also extend for three years a program in which Vietnam veterans receive readjustment counseling in 91 storefront centers around the country. The Senate bill provides for the program to be phased out, in favor of treatment at traditional VA hospitals, during the third year.

Entebbe survivors settle

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli survivors of the 1976 hijacking of an Air France jetliner to Uganda have reached an out-of-court settlement with the airline, the Jerusalem Post reported today.

Air France's Tel Aviv office declined to comment on the report. The newspaper said the accord amounted to more than $1 million and covered claims of 67 former hostages and heirs of the four civilians killed when Israeli commandos stormed the Netebbe airport in a daring rescue operation.

The Post said the settlement was reached May 14, after five years of litigation.

Anti-Communist's trial postponed

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The trial of four anti-communists charged with plotting to overthrow the Polish government was postponed today for two weeks.

Judge Czeslaw Szablowski gave the defense until July 2 to study the 16 volumes of evidence. Defense attorneys had asked for a month-long delay, and prosecutors had objected to any postponement.

The judge rejected a motion for clarification, saying the indictment of the members of the Confederation of Independent Poland, or KPN, would stand without changes.

The trial of the four confederation members comes amid Soviet pressure on Poland to deal with "counterrevolutionary" elements.

The four defendants have yet to make formal pleas in court but have proclaimed their innocence and vowed to fight the charges. Conviction could carry a penalty of from five years in prison to death.

The leader of the group is Leszek Moczulski, 51. He and Romuald Szeremietiew, 36, Tadeusz Stanski, 33, and Tadeuse Jandziszak, 33, were arrested last fall after criticized Poland's leaders in an interview with a West German magazine and suggested Poland might leave the Warsaw Pact military alliance.

The chapter of the independent union Solidarity in the southern Polish city of Katowice suggested today that a riot quelled Tuesday by police at the Katowice train station may have been "stage-managed."

Police detained 80 people after a brawl between two men mushroomed into a riot. Station police called for help after one of their colleagues was injured when struck by a bottle, the Polish news agency PAP said.

Navy brass denies drug use caused Nimitz jet crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy is denying that drug use contributed to last month's crash of a radar-jamming plane on the deck of the aircraft carrier Nimitz despite autopsies showing "traces of marijuana" in some of the crewmen killed.

"I can categorically state that drug use or abuse did not contribute to the tragic crash," Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr. said in a letter to Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y.

Rep. G. William Whitehurst, R-Va., a member of the House Armed Services Committee, said Tuesday that Navy officials had told him that pathologists detected the marijuana traces in the bodies of six of the 10 flight-deck crewmen who were killed.

Three dead Marine officers in the EA6 radar-jaming jet that crashed had no drugs in their systems, Whitehurst said. The body of a fourth Marine in the jet was lost at sea.

Lehman did not deny that some of the dead sailors may have taken drugs before the fiery crash during a night landing May 26. Other Navy officials said he felt confident making that statement because an investigation indicates the crash was caused by pilot error rather than anything done on deck.

"There was no trace whatsoever of any kind of drug in the recovered remains of the air crew," according to a Navy statement.

Navy sources acknowledged the traces of marijuana found in the sailors' bodies. "But we believe that nobody was under the influence of drugs on the flight deck," said one source who asked to remain anonymous.

Italian boy's body to be frozen in well

ROME (AP) — Experts decided today to freeze the body of 6-year-old Alfredo Rampi to prevent decomposition while workmen dig a new shaft to recover his corpse from a deep and muddy well.

A statement issued after a meeting of experts at the Interior Ministry said liquid nitrogen will be pumped into the well to conserve the boy's body, which fell 200 feet down the narrow shaft.

Alfredo was playing last Wednesday near his grandparents' hillside home in Frascati, 15 miles south of Rome, when he slipped and fell into the well. Efforts by rescue workers to pull him out failed, and he was declared dead Sunday after a television camera and microphone lowered into the shaft detected no signs of life.

The plan announced by the Interior Ministry calls for reinforcement of the well to prevent cave-ins for freezing of the water below the body in the well.

AT A GLANCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here, at a glance, are highlights of President Reagan's nationally broadcast news conference Tuesday:

THE BUDGET

—Reagan accused Democrats in the House of approving "unconscionable" budget cuts "they know cannot be made." He said there is "a clear danger of congressional backsliding and a return to spending as usual."

TAX CUTS

—The president called tax cuts "the second major economic item on the agenda," behind the budget, and said "we must quickly have legislation on the books" so changes in tax laws can be effective in October. He said there is growing congressional support for the tax bill, which would reduce taxes 25 percent over three years.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

—He demanded that Congress "live up to its original commitment and deliver to my desk before the August recess not one but two bills — a spending bill and a tax bill.... Let us never forget the mandate of November. The people of this nation have asked for action — and they deserve it now, not somewhere down in the misty future."

COMMUNISM

—Reagan reiterated the "beginning of the end" is in sight for world communism. "I think it is impossible...for any form of government to completely deny freedom to the people.... I think the things we are seeing in Poland and the word coming out of Russia itself show that communism is an aberration. I think we're seeing the first cracks, the beginning of the end."

THE SHOOTING

—Reagan said he has recovered from the March 30 assassination attempt and feels fine. "If I'm a medical miracle I'm a happy one." He said there have been changes in security since the shooting but he still wants to meet with people and "you can't spend your life worrying."

GUN CONTROL

—He said again he is opposed to gun control because they are "virtually unenforceable" and divert attention from better ways to fight crime. Reagan noted that the District of Columbia has tough gun control measures but they did not prevent the assassination attempt that left the president and three others wounded.

SECOND TERM

—The 70-year-old president declined to discuss a second term, noting "having only been here five months no one should be making a decision about what they're going to do three years and seven months from now."

CHINA ARMS

—Reagan said he didn't "know how the Soviet Union will react" to the announcement the United States is lifting the ban on weapons sales to China. "I think this is a normal part of the process of improving our relations there," Reagan said.

TAIWAN

—Reagan said increased dealings with China won't affect relations with Taiwan. "I have not changed my feelings about Taiwan.... I intend to live up to the Taiwan Relations Act." Reagan said.

Reagan loses cool, launches Congressional offense

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — On a 99-degree day, President Reagan decided to turn up the heat.

After five months of talking about cooperation, partnership and bipartisan efforts to deal with the economy, the nice guy in the White House took out after the Democrats in the House of Representatives.

His news conference rhetoric was as hot as the sweltering city. He saw sleight-of-hand in the Democrats' budget cuts, demagoguery in their leader and political trouble in their future.

"Let us never forget the mandate of November," Reagan said, in a favored phrase he doesn't let anybody forget. "The people of this nation have asked for action and they deserve it now, not somewhere down in the misty future."

Reagan said he wants his budget cuts, intact, and his three-year tax reduction, in a hurry. He gave Congress about six weeks to deliver a tax bill to his desk, and that would be record time.

On spending, he won virtual assurance Tuesday that the securely Republican Senate will deliver $39.6 billion worth of budget reductions. But he accused the Democratic House of funny business in shaping the $36 billion slash it is supposed to produce.

"There is now a clear danger of congressional backsliding and a return to spending as usual," Reagan said. "Some House committees have reported spending cuts they know can't be made, closing, for example, one-third of the nation's post offices. ...

"This practice is unconscionable," Reagan said, and he warned that the administration will if necessary try to reassemble a coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats to discard the handiwork of the Democratic-controlled committees and pass a substitute budget.

Reagan has played congressional hardball before, on the budget and in demanding his three-year tax reduction bill instead of the abbreviated, revised version the Democrats favor. But even when he was getting tough, he didn't talk that way.

The tone changed Tuesday — especially when he came to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.

O'Neill had said on national television that Reagan's tax bill was geared to the rich because the president had no concern for the common man. "Because of his lifestyle, he never meets those people, and so consequently he doesn't understand their problems," O'Neill said. "He's only been able to meet with the wealthy."

That matter wasn't raised in the news conference questions, so Reagan volunteered a footnote without being asked.

"I know very much about the working group," he said. "I grew up in poverty. ... And I think it is sheer demagoguery to pretend that this economic program which we've submitted is not aimed at helping the great cross-section of people in this country that have been burdened for too long by big government and high taxes."

"The people of this nation have asked for action and they deserve it now, not somewhere down in the misty future."

Liver, tripe, kidneys: They're not so awful

By DONNA LEE
Hearts Special News Service

Many people think offal is awful.

Offal means innards, an equally unlovely name for delicacies such as calf's liver, tripe, chicken livers, sweetbreads or kidneys.

People either love them or hate them.

Although I grew up eating liver smothered with onions, tolerated braised beef heart and would happily live on liver pate, I balked at brains.

Some colleges require that you pass English to graduate. Mine insisted that I cook and eat brains.

They tasted as squishy as they looked. Although sophisticates have subsequently gushed with praise over brains with scrambled eggs, I remain untempted.

On the other hand, perfectly cooked liver, lamb kidneys or sweetbreads can be genuine treats. Tripe, when well prepared, has a mild flavor and an intriguing tender chewy texture that some people love.

You often have to pay a high price in the rare restaurant that serves sweetbreads. These tender, delicately flavored pieces of veal are considered delicacies. Specifically, sweetbreads may be the thymus gland of young veal, or the pancreas gland.

Weight Watchers and Diet Workshop are both enthusiastic about liver because it's so rich in iron and vitamins. Kidney and heart are also rich in iron. It's difficult for a woman of menstrual age to get enough iron, especially if she's dieting, and iron is not absorbed nearly as well from pills as it is from food.

The drawback is that all organ meats...brains, sweetbreads, liver, kidneys and heart...are high in cholesterol. Some health authorities question whether dietary cholesterol increases risk of heart disease. It's still a controversy.

The liver is the body's main production site of cholesterol. Yet in most cases, the good in liver counterbalances that drawback. "Because of its micronutrient strength, unless you're on a strick low-cholesterol diet, it would be worth your nutritional while to eat liver say once every week or two," writes Jane Brody, the New York Times personal health columnist, in "Jane Brody's Nutrition Book."

Dietician Louise Bayle at Massachusetts Nutrition Resource Center agrees that in reasonable amounts liver is worth eating for the iron, despite its cholesterol content. She adds that some people limit their liver consumption because they're concerned about pesticide residues which may be found in the liver, which is the detoxifying organ of the body. She said that such residues do not collect in the kidneys.

Kidneys are neglected by Americans, so the price is usually under a dollar a pound. Lamb kidneys or veal kidneys are the most tender and delicately flavored and to me taste even better than calf's liver. Kidneys when sliced and cooked look like mushrooms. They're delicious tossed in butter with sauteed mushrooms and a bit of sherry.

Tripe, which is the muscular lining of beef stomach, is at its best cooked Italian style, often in a tomato sauce.

Another Italian favorite has disappeared. That's soffrito, a stew made of lungs (sometimes called lights). A meat inspector in Boston explained that cleaning lungs is so difficult that slaughter houses sell them for dog-food. George Puchta, a USDA supervisor in New York, said that it's too difficult to remove foreign matter that has been inhaled. "They did extensive tests but just couldn't come up with a method to clean lungs sufficiently, so they were declared inedible eight or 10 years ago," he said.

Although liver and tripe are usually in supermarkets, you may have to ask the butcher for sweetbreads, kidneys or heart, or go to a specialty butcher.

I freeze chicken livers when I get them in a whole chicken and cook them when I accumulate enough.

Good tips to trim ribbon

By BETTY M. KINSER
Copley News Service

Ribbons are the rage. They are on dresses, sundresses, skirts, tops and children's clothes. Ribbon is decorative and serves well as a "touch of color" for your garment.

There are no big secrets to sewing on ribbon, but a few tips might help you avoid the pitfalls.

— Ribbon should be preshrunk. Allow to soak in warm water for several minutes. Spread on a towel to dry. Press if necessary.

— Do not cut your ribbon lengths to the exact measurement you need. Always allow extra. The longer the piece, the more extra you should allow. The safest way is to stitch ribbon in place, then cut it off.

— To hold ribbon in place until you can make the first row of stitching, use basting tape or basting glue stick. Be sure to remove the tape before making the second row of stitching. Stitch both sides of ribbon in the same direction and do not pull ribbon as you stitch.

— Do not stick pins through satin ribbon

— Because the cut ends of ribbon will fray, be sure those are well tucked in.

Expert says women to own businesses

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The 1980s will be a decade when women begin to take over their own businesses in greater numbers, in the opinion of an expert on small business at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania here.

According to Susan Garber, director of Pennsylvania's Small Business Development Center at the university, women will participate in the mushrooming number of small businesses as never before.

Ms. Garber added that women will have to overcome more obstacles to success than men, since they will be dealing with a 99-percent-male financial community.

Pamper your cut flowers

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

Those of us who spent a large proportion of our leisure time dabbling in the backyard soil or pampering our apartment houseplants look upon whatever flowers result from our efforts as a well-earned harvest.

But sometimes, often through errors of omission, the flowers we cut to brighten our indoors decor droop like a platoon of infantrymen after a 10-hour march. Let us, therefore, consider certain techniques which may help to ensure we get the most for our green-thumb efforts.

As we get into the hot weather season, the first thing to remember is that flowers should never be picked in the heat of the day. Instead, go about this pleasant activity in the early morning — a pre-breakfast appetizer — or later in the evening to put the cares of the day to rest. At these times,your flowers will be at their freshest.

Aside from timing, it's also most important to execute the task using a sharp knife or well-honed flower-cutters. Take along a pail of water with you and place the stems into the pail the moment they are cut.

Then, when you bring them indoors, re-cut the stems on a slant under water. This cutting under water prevents air from getting into the conducting vessels. blocking the water intake upwards into the stem. Cutting on a slant prevents the base of the stem from being blocked by the bottom of the vase.

Without wishing to appear too much of a fuss-pot, I'd also point out that it is most desirable for the water in the vase to be warm, about 98 degrees F. (37 C.) is right. There's a sound reason: flower stems can absorb warm water much quicker than cold and the more water they take in, the longer they'll remain attractive.

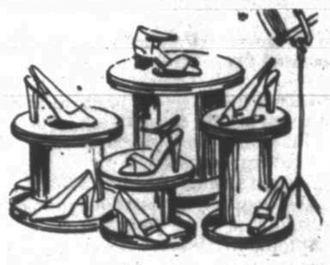

Remove any leaves that will be under water in the vase — especially important with specimens like marigolds which can produce a foul odor — and take off any foliage that makes for crowding above the water level.

You may wish to add a commercial preservative to the water. They are sold under various brand names and one of the principal ingredients stops microorganisms from growing and clogging up the stem. It's additional insurance that food and water can reach the bloom and preserve its freshness.

Keep the water level high in the vase and make sure the vase is away from excess heat and out of direct sunlight. If you really want to pamper your cut flowers, you can go a step further and place the container on a cool basement floor at night, which will contribute to their lasting power.

A tiny part of the commercial preservatives is sugar. When flowers are cut, their leaves contain enough sugar to feed theplant for a day or two but when it's used up, more is needed. The sugar also helps the bloom retain its fresh color throughout its life.

Supply of frogs declining

BY JOANN RODGERS, Science Writer,
Hearst Special News Service

Oh to be a frog, my lads, and live aloof from care.

When the Greek poet Theocritus penned those lines in the third century B.C., he never foresaw the role frogs would play in modern high school biology classes.

Generations of students have toiled in ribbet-ridden laboratories, dissecting these anything but carefree critters.

Now, it seems, that the frog in or out of its formaldehyde bath, may soon disappear from these classes.

There is a fast-growing frog shortage.

Millions of frogs are used in the U.S. each year in public and private schools, colleges, medical schools and scientific research labs, says Richard J. Wasserug, a University of Chicago frog anatomy specialist. Some people, he adds, also eat them.

In the bulletin of the National Society for Medical Research, the scientist explained that humans are fast encroaching on fragile frog pond environments, bulldozing them for development, constructing highways over migration paths and polluting waters in which frogs lay their eggs, grow from tadpoles and hibernate.

Agricultural growers also contribute to the problem by using insecticides which wash into ponds and kill insects, a staple item in most frog diets.

As a result, according to Wasserug, suppliers who collect most of the frogs from ponds are finding the pickings thinner and thinner.

If the shortage continues at its present pace, experts say, researchers are likely to have first claim, leaving high school students to share-a-frog, catch their own or learn only by watching the teacher.

All of which, Wasserug suggests, is bound to inhibit biology teaching and research.

Next to the mouse, the frog is one of the best experimental animals for genetic studies. Laboratories around the world breed them, clone them, and analyze their chromosomes for clues to inherited diseases.

Couples waiting to divorce, leaving fewer kids behind

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women opted for divorce in 1979 at twice the rate they did 12 years earlier, according to a new government study.

But the National Center for Health Statistics says couples destined for divorce courts are waiting longer to make the split and are leaving fewer children behind from each broken marriage.

The number of divorces granted in the United States tripled in the last 20 years to reach 1.181 million in 1979. Nearly a third, 439,000, occurred in the 17 states counted as the South, the center said in its report released recently.

The 1979 national total is the largest ever recorded in the United States. It compares with 1.13 million divorces granted in 1978 and 395,000 granted in 1959.

The divorce rate also has climbed significantly over the past two decades. Some 5.4 divorces per 1,000 population were granted in 1979, nearly 2½ times the rate for 1959.

There were 22.8 divorces for every 1,000 married women (15 years and older) in the population in 1979, more than double the 11.2 divorces per thousand married women in 1967, the report said.

The median length of marriages dissolved in 1979 was 6.8 years compared to 6.6 years in 1977 and in 1978 and a range of between 6.5 and 6.7 years during 1970 to 1976.

While the report showed that more children were involved in broken marriages — 1.18 million chidren in 1979 compared with 562,000 in 1963 — the average number of children per divorcing couple has declined steadily from the all-time high of 1.36 in 1964. In 1979, it amounted to one per couple.

The center's statistics are based on sample dta from 30 sites which comprise a divorce registration area. Besides the 439,000 divorces in the South there were 293,000 in the north central states, 272,000 in the West and 177,000 in the Northeast.

The West had the highest divorce rate with 6.6 per 1,000 population. It compared with 6.1 per 1,000 in the South, 5 per 1,000 in the north central states and 3.6 per 1,000 in the Northeast.

The states granting the largest numbers of divorces were California 137,683; Texas 92,399; Florida 69,707; New York 64,420; and Ohio 59,548. North Dakota, a state with one of the smallest populations, had the fewest divorces, 2,094, in 1979.

I.D. tags spell difference between lost and found

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I work in the baggage department for Eastern Airlines. Today I am sending an unclaimed piece of luggage to our tracing center in Miami because there is no identification IN or ON it. It is filled with small antiques and personal items. I'm sure the emotional loss to the owner will be enormous. I completely unpacked the case, hoping to find a clue that would lead me to the owner. There was none. This case will join thousands of other unidentified pieces of luggage in our warehouse to be auctioned off eventually.

Abby, please tell your readers to put ID tags on their luggage (outside and in), and also on their carry-on items — cameras, eyeglasses, raincoats, books and company documents! So many beautiful unidentified items are left on airplanes and not even missed until the plane is 1500 miles away.

Travelers spare no expense to buy nice clothes, costly souvenirs and gifts on vacation trips, pack them into expensive luggage, and don't bother to label anything! I hope you will think this is important enough for your column. It's heartbreaking to see so much valuable property lost forever. — DONNA T. IN SEATTLE

DEAR DONNA: Thanks for a timely contribution to this column. (Now, where did I put my nametags!)

DEAR ABBY: I am a 21-year-old, reasonably attractive girl. I live at home and work in a large office.

How can I refuse a date without hurting the man's feelings, and at the same time keep him from asking me again? If I say I am busy, he asks me again, or worse yet he'll ask for my first free evening, and then I am really stuck.

You see, I don't want to date anyone outside my own religion. I'm not that hung up on religion, but my parents are so much against it, I decided it would just eliminate lots of arguments at home if I just dated men of my own faith. My parents have been wonderful to me and I don't consider it too big a sacrifice if it will make them happy.

So, how can I politely turn down a date without appearing rude, and at the same time discourage that fellow from asking me again? — THERESA

DEAR THERESA: What's wrong with telling him the truth?

DEAR ABBY: You told ANONYMOUS in a recent column to resolve her anger, and then you quoted a line from a poem that was written by George Roemisch, a former schoolmate of mine. The quote: "Forgiveness is the fragrance of the violent on the heel of the one who crushed it." That is only part of his poem titled "Forgiveness," which I am enclosing in its entirety.

Thank you, Abby, for using that particular quote, for it reacquainted me with George's poem.

And thank you, George, wherever you are. — DONNA SMITH IN THE BRONX

DEAR DONNA: Unfortunately, space does not permit printing the entire poem, but the following portion merits quoting, and I thank you for it:

"Forgiveness is the broken dream which hides itself within the corner of the mind, oft called forgetfulness so that it will not bring pain to the dreamer.

"Forgiveness is a God who will not leave us after all we've done."

DEAR ABBY: Why is it considered questionable taste for a woman, other than the bride, to wear a white gown at a wedding? — TILLAMOOK, ORE.

DEAR TILLAMOOK: Because it might appear that the white-gowned woman was attempting to compete with the bride.

'The Workplace Hustle' is no joke, documentary says

By LISA LEVITT
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The stare that lasts too long, the playful pat on the posterior, the proposition that sounds like a joke — it's all part of a ritualistic on-the-job dance that two San Francisco filmmakers call "The Workplace Hustle."

In an award-winning, 33-minute documentary that makes some men squirm and women cheer, co-producers Woody Clark and Al Brito have captured the rite of sexual harassment as it is performed in offices, factories and universities from coast to coast: a pervasive exercise in degradation that many men can't seem to take seriously and women can't take at all.

The film, narrated by Ed Asner, star of the "Lou Grant" television series, features actors in situations all too common to American workplaces, from the boss who lets a woman know she can buy a promotion with sexual favors to the waitress whose leering customer wants something "that isn't on the menu."

"We did a film about the prevalent problem, the one that's been historical, the one that's really at the guts of our society in terms of working," said Clark, an anthropologist who left academia three years ago to start Clark Communications Inc.

"From the male point of view — there's a line in the film — 'the office is the hunting grounds, the promotion becomes the bait,'" he said.

"The Workplace Hustle" also tells the story of Helen Young, a former Oregon bank executive who lost her job after refusing the advances of her boss. She sued and won.

More and more, Clark said, companies are being forced to pay damages to women who take legal action after being fired or demoted for refusing to bed down with their bosses. And corporations realize that employees who are fooling around can't be getting much done.

"The bottom line is profit. When you have sexual harassment on the job, you're interfering with work performance and people's economic productivity," he said.

And because of this growing corporate awareness, "The Workplace Hustle" — which won awards at the San Francisco Film Festival and the New York Film Festival — has found its way into training sessions of several Fortune 500 companies, among them Xerox and Hewlett-Packard, and of government agencies, including the Coast Guard and Army.

The average film of its type sells 500 copies total — Clark has sold almost that many in 10 months, at $520 a copy.

So far, no television network has chosen to air the film. Clark said broadcast executives have complained "Hustle" is too one-sided.

Clark maintains his film addresses a problem that touches many lives. "The office is where people traditionally have met and married, and that's what often happens. But sexual harassment isn't love and marriage. It's clearly something else."

That something else ranges from stares and crude jokes to physical assault, Lyn Farley, author of "The Sexual Shakedown," says in the film.

"A stare becomes sexual harassment when it begins to make the woman feel uncomfortable," Clark said. "The point we make in the film is, it's not up to (women) to draw the line. (Men) should know that it's inappropriate behavior."

Seventy percent of all women have experienced sexual harassment at least once, according to studies conducted by Redbook magazine, by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and by Ms. Farley at Cornell University. More than half of all women have left a job — or been fired — because of it, the studies indicate.

While few people deny that sexual harassment exists, there is disagreement about why and how often it occurs.

Phyllis Schlafly, for instance, told a Senate subcommittee in April that no "virtuous woman" would be subject to sexual harassment. The testimony by the outspoken opponent to the proposed Equal Rights Amendment and other feminist goals was contrary to that of most other witnesses, who agreed that sexual harassment on the job is a serious national problem.

Scenes in the film of groups of men and women discussing their perceptions of the problem help support Asner's statement that men and women "see sexual harassment through different eyes, hear it through different ears."

The women's scene took two hours to film; the men's took twice as long and included much joking.

"It's almost like, if you want to be a real man in these situations, you've got to harass your secretary, right? You're fulfilling social expectations," Ms. Farley says in the film. "That again brings it back to society and to the way our social attitudes have aided and abetted this whole behavior. The jokes. Laughing about it. That's why the accurate information interrupts all that. Because it's not a joke."

AP Laserphoto

San Francisco filmmaker Woody Clark, along with co-producer Al Brito, have teamed up to produce an award-winning 33-minute film called "The Workplace Hustle." The sexual harassment documentary has become part of awareness training for a raft of Fortune 500 companies, and Clark has sold nearly 500 copies in the last 10 months. But so far, no television network has been brave enough to air "Hustle."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Keeping mice out of dog food

DEAR HELOISE:

Recently, I was having a problem with field mice chewing into my dog's large bag of food which is kept in the garage.

I thought I had the problem solved when I considered buying a plastic pail with a lid to hold the dog food.

Much to my dismay, the ones with lids were much too large and those of the appropriate size didn't even have lids.

I was perplexed as to what to do when I happened to spot a baby's diaper pail. It had a lid, was large enough to hold all of the dogfood and was cheaper than the other containers I had priced.

The lid fits snugly so the food stays fresh and, best of all, no bugs, moisture or mice can enter.

Another advantage is that one does not have to struggle with a large bag to lift and pour — just scoop out what is needed, replace the lid and that's that! — Nancy Denton

Nifty idea! That's using the old noggin. Thanks for taking the time to write. — Hugs, Heloise

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: You had a letter in your column once from a lady who felt bad because she couldn't always reciprocate when she received a gift.

You were right when you said a present should always be a "gift of love" and anyone giving such a gift, expecting something in return, has missed the whole point.

What I've always cone is request family and friends, who wanted to give me a gift, to give me something from their God-given talents.

Be it needlework, painting, a special recipe, or just a good hug and a visit, I appreciate them all equally.

It isn't a true gift if one only thinks of the price tag. It's the beautiful thought that you are remembered that is really meaningful. — Mildred Lober.

CURTAIN WEIGHTS

Dear Heloise: My long, white sheer curtains behind my favorite chair were always sailing up over my head like playful ghosts... that is, until I thought of putting clip clothespins on the hem.

These weight the curtains down while the windows are open, but can easily be removed when company is coming. — B.C.

SNAPPY SEWING TIP

Dear Heloise: Have you ever tried to sew on snap fasteners with your sewing machine? Then you know how easy it is for them to slip out of place. But still, the machine is so much faster and better than when doing it by hand.

So...here's my solution to this frustrating problem: Just place the snap where you want it and put transparent sticky tape over it, then slide it under your machine's presser foot.

Tear the tape off after the snap is sewed on. A fast and fantastic job! — Lena Gurney

RECYCLE THEM

Dear Heloise: Know those little foam circles you buy to keep a candle in a holder?

You can cut your own out of those versatile little blue fabric softener sheets.

I cut six out of one sheet — after it had been used, even! — Mrs. R.H. Lavigne

MICROWAVE POPPING

Dear Heloise: If you have a microwave oven and no microwave corn popper, put a handful of popcorn in a brown paper bag.

Put it in your microwave until popped and you will have the nicest, crispest popcorn ever! — L.P. Kandel

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: A house is where you hang your hat...

A home is where love is involved! — V.R.

I.D. FOR KIDS

Dear Heloise: Each of my youngsters has a bicycle and all tend to ride beyond our street boundaries.

I worried about their being hurt or something and no one would know who they were or how to contact us.

So, I bought each of them an I.D. bracelet and, using an engraving pencil, put their names, address, and phone number on the bracelet.

Believe me, I worry a lot less now when they go for a ride. — Karla Bass

KEY KEEPER

Dear Heloise: I would like to share an idea for making a fastener in your purse to hold your keys.

Purchase a strip of self-gripping tape at your local fabric shop. Cut a piece long enough to loop around the key ring and stitch the ends together.

Cut another piece about an inch long and either glue or stitch it inside your purse near the top.

When placing your keys in your purse, press the two pieces of tape together. The keys will stay in place within easy reach.

No more digging and fumbling for keys in the bottom of your purse. — Inez Shannon

IRON-FILLING TIP

Dear Heloise: One day, while filling my steam iron with water, I spilled it all over my ironing board which, as you may know, made a mess!

So, to keep this from happening again, I filled a clean dish detergent bottle with distilled water and replaced the the push-pull type cap.

When I need to add water to the iron, it's a simple matter with no danger of water being spilled all over the board.

This has since saved me many a clean-up. — Sally

Education plan now released

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements has released the state's plan for the desegregation of Texas colleges and universities, which is designed to eliminate vestiges of a dual system of public higher education.

The plan, to be submitted to the federal government Monday, was sent to U.S. Secretary of Education Terrel Bell. The desegregation plan was mandated in an agreement between the Department of Education and Attorney General Mark White.

The plan sets specific numerical goals for increasing enrollment and graduation rates of black and Hispanic students in all sectors of public higher education.

Statewide, the plan calls for the enrollment of an additional 2,955 black students and 3,872 Hispanic students by 1986.

Officials at Sul Ross State University are proposing to increase black enrollment there by 13 students.

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin also would have an enrollment of 10 additional black students and five additional Hispanic students under the plan.

Midlander awarded scholarship

GEORGETOWN — Brian Davis of Midland has been awarded a $1,500 academic scholarship to attend Southwestern University at Georgetown this fall.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Davis, 2503 Fannin Ave., was chosen for the scholarship for his scores in the Scholastic Aptitude Test and by his class rank and grade average in high school.

Davis graduated from Midland High School where he served as a band officer and as a Student Council Representative.

Davis plans on majoring in the field of pre-law or pre-med at Southwestern.

Special farm-fuel allocations asked

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department energy officials say they will send Congress a plan within three months to ensure that farm interests have needed fuel in times of severe supply disruptions.

The plan, just being developed jointly by the Agriculture and Energy departments, would replace special farm-fuel allocation provisions set to expire this fall, Martin Fitzpatrick, head of the Agriculture Department's transportation office, said Tuesday.

"We will have a proposal that will address the problems of farms in a severe situation," Fitzpatrick said. He said it will be aimed at ensuring both adequate fuel supplies and fair prices.

Earle Gavett, acting chief of the department's energy staff, also told the Senate Agriculture subcommittee on rural development, oversight and investigations that without the special allocation regulations about to expire, farmers would not have been able to harvest winter wheat or plant spring crops two years ago.

Officials of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers Union and the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives strongly supported retention of some emergency allocation plan.

Sen. Mark Andrews, R-N.D., subcommittee chairman, was critical of what he said was the Energy Department's "abysmally indifferent attitude" toward fuel priority for farmers because no Energy Department representative appeared at the hearing.

And Andrews charged that the special fuel allocation regulations were not invoked in the spring of 1979 until "the situation got so bad that the president and the secretary of agriculture got together and told DOE to stop dragging its heels."

He called the problems farmers faced in 1979 "an example of what can happen even when we had in law the type of emergency allocation requirements we are about to see expire."

Corn planting falls behind schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corn planting in the major production states was about 69 percent completed as of mid-June, compared with 88 percent last year and the normal rate of 85 percent, says the government's Joint Agricultural Weather Facility.

In the eastern Corn Belt, heavy rains and saturated soils continued to delay planting of corn and soybeans, the facility said Tuesday.

"The soil moisture supplies were adequate to surplus in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississipi and Tennessee," the report said. "Elsewhere, supplies were short to mostly adequate."

Looking at winter wheat, the report said the crop was in fair to good condition and about 94 percent headed, up from 93 percent a year ago.

Soybean planting in the major states was 69 percent complete, lagging behind last year's rate of 88 percent.

U.S. trade team set to visit China this month

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. trade team led by its second-in-command will visit China later this month, the Agriculture Department says.

Deputy Secretary Richard E. Lyng said Tuesday that his team will leave June 20 and will meet with Chinese leaders "to develop specific plans for expanding technical assistance to foreign users of U.S. agricultural praoducts, improving credit programs and determining quantities of U.S. grain to be purchased" in the year ahead.

Administration works without deadline on Soviet grain deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — No timetable has been set up to work out a new long-term grain agreement with the Soviet Union, a senior Agriculture Department official says.

Undersecretary Seeley G. Lodwick says efforts to determine whether a new agreement is feasible carry a "very high priority" within the Reagan administration.

"We'll pursue this just as rapidly as we can," Lodwick said Monday. "There is no deadline, no fixed deadline."

A U.S. team led by Lodwick met with Soviet counterparts for two days last week in London. The United States agreed to sell the Soviets an additional 6 million metric tons of grain — half wheat, half corn — for delivery through Sept. 30.

Lodwick, in a meeting with a group of reporters, said the Soviets made no commitment on whether they would actually buy the grain and declined to speculate further.

President Regan lifted a partial embargo on U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union on April 24. It had been imposed by former President Carter 16 months earlier in response to the Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan.

But the embargo order exempted 8 million metric tons of wheat and corn annually that was specified under terms of a five-year supply agreement with the Soviets. The pact expires Sept. 30.

If the Soviets buy the full 6 million tons now allowed them, that would boost U.S. corn and wheat sales to Russia to 14 million tons for the last year of the agreement.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat or 39.4 bushels of corn.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Breast feeding requires extra nutrients in Mother's diet

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am now pregnant for the first time and am planning to breast-feed my baby. Will I have to follow a much different diet than I had before becoming pregnant? — Mrs. B.R.L.

Dear Mrs. L.: A woman who breast-feeds her baby requires extra nutrients in her diet. In general, nursing mothers should have from 500 to 800 more calories each day than they needed before their pregnancy. They also need additional amounts of vitamins and minerals, such as calcium and iron, and 20 grams more of protein each day.

Nursing mothers who do not have an adequate, well-balanced diet may not only find that their milk supply is insufficient, but that they feel tired and rundown as well. The best assurance of getting the necessary nutrients for your own and your child's health is to select foods from each of the four food groups; milk and milk products, meat, fruits and vegetables, and breads and cereals.

In addition to making certain that you eat the proper foods, you should include in your diet an adequate amount of fluids. This can include two to three quarts of water, fruit juices, soups, and other liquids. Your doctor may also recommend a vitamin supplement during this time.

Dear Dr. Solomon: It seems I devote a great deal of my energy to trying to keep my children from stuffing themselves with cake and candy and similar foods with a high sugar content so that they'll have the kind of nutritionally well-balanced diet you recommend. Is this fondness for sweets a recent development? Whenever we visit friends, or they visit us, it is almost expected that some form of cake or pastry or similar sweet will be served. What did people use before sugar became available? — Mrs. A.L.

Dear Mrs. L.: Neither sweeteners in general, nor sugar in particular, is a new development. In fact sweeteners were probably used in prehistoric times when honey was first discovered. There is some evidence from drawings found in Egyptian tombs as long ago as 2600 B.C. that the people of that time had a knowledge of beekeeping practices for the production of honey.

Even sugar and sugar cane were mentioned in a scroll as long ago as 375 A.D. Sugar refining eventually spread from Egypt throgh Europe and then to North America.

Of course honey and sugar are not the only sweeteners that humans have cultivated. The sweet pulp of the carob pod, which is also referred to as St. John's bread, has been used in the Mediterranean area for some time, and North American Indians were making syrup from the sap of the sugar maple tree long before the Pilgrims ever set foot in Massachusetts. Moreover, a method of obtaining sucrose from beets was devised more than 200 years ago.

Today, of course, in addition to the products I have mentioned, we have synthetic sweeteners that contain few, if any, calories. You can see that the desire to satisfy a sweet tooth goes back several centuries.

Prison guards call for strike vote

DETROIT (AP) — Guards at Southern Michigan Prison are calling for a statewide strike vote to protest disciplinary actions taken against 16 guards whose "insubordination" was blamed for sparking the first of recent prison riots in Michigan, the Detroit News reported today.

About 100 members of the Michigan Corrections Organization branch at the Jackson prison overruled their leaders' recommendations Tuesday by calling for the vote, the newspaper said. No strike deadline was set.

Meanwhile, guards from Jackson and Ionia planned a Thursday march on the Capitol to protest the disciplinary actions and conditions at Michigan's riot-torn prisons.

Before going along with the demand for a strike vote next Tuesday, Jackson MCO President Gerry Fryt said a walkout would "play into the hands" of state Corrections Director Perry Johnson, who fired Fryt and union steward Tim Voris on Monday. Johnson also suspended 14 other guards for "insubordination" in connection with a May 22 prison riot.

A state report concluded that the guards' unauthorized attempt at a "lockdown" of inmates at the prison led to the first of Michigan's recent prison riots. Violence broke out later that day at the Michigan Reformatory at Ionia, and outbursts occurred May 26 at Jackson and the state's maximum-security prison at Marquette.

Fryt told MCO members a strike would give Johnson further ammunition against the union and claimed a walkout could cost many other guards their jobs. About 750 corrections officers at Southern Michigan Prison belong to the MCO.

The state Corrections Department has said it has contingency plans involving the use of state police and National Guard troops in the event of a state or local guards' strike.

Fryt and other union leaders said they would contact MCO local presidents at Michigan's 11 other prisons to notify them of the coming vote, and also urged members not to discuss Tuesday's actions with reporters or prison adminsitrators.

"We'll let them know what we want (at the demonstration Thursday), and if we don't get satisfaction, we'll hit them with the strike vote Tuesday," Fryt said.

Attorney negotiates plea-bargain for gypsies

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Guilty pleas entered Tuesday by seven Gypsies charged with transporting stolen property were negotiated by a New Jersey attorney, who said she was hired by a friend of the defendants to replace their present attorneys.

Attorney Linda George told federal District Court Judge Richard Erwin, on the day after jury selection in the case, that she wanted to arrange a negotiated plea.

Ms. George, who speaks Polish, had immediate rapport with the defendants, according to several interpreters involved in the case.

Attorneys for both sides reached a plea bargain agreement for three women and four men arrested April 11 in Greensboro after a high-speed chase with police. An eighth defendant, Danuta Lechowska, 40, has been sent to a federal facility in Lexington, Ky. for psychiatric evaluation after reportedly attempting suicide several times. A trial date for her has not been set.

The Gypsies had been detained for 45 minutes and were being escorted in two cars to police headquarters when one car broke away, police said. Officials said silver goods valued at $250,000 were thrown from the fleeing vehicle. The government contends that the items were stolen from Atlanta, Ga. and Jackson, Miss.

Under terms of the arrangement, the government agreed to recommend a sentence of not more than five years for the three women on one count of transporting stolen silver, furs and jewelry across state lines. Two other counts of the same charge will be consolidated for sentencing with a 10-year sentence and five years probation.

Barbara Langer, 30; Maria Szczawinska, 28; and Maria Kochanowska, 40, also agreed to pay restitution to defray the government's expenses.

The charges against the men will be consolidated with a 10-year sentence and restitution as in the women's cases. The difference with the men's sentences is that they will serve a three-year probation, provided they serve the entire term.

The four Gypsy men signing the agreement were Edward Dabrowski, 24; Peter Langer, 30; Kazimierz Malinowski, 22; and Tadeusz Wisniewski, 28.

The seven Gypsies also promised to return to Poland after serving their sentences. The defendants, prior to the agreement, faced a maximum 30-year sentence and $30,000 fine.

They face up to seven years in prison if Judge Richard C. Erwin approves the agreement. Plea agreements are not governed by federal statutes and final discretion lies with the judge, who can reject an agreement if he feels either side has been treated unfairly.

Guilford County District Attorney Michael Schlosser said Tuesday the state will drop its charges against the gypsies if they receive prison sentences on the federal charges. Schlosser said the state charges they face are possession and transportation of stolen property.

Hijacking attempt foiled

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Two men were to be arraigned today in connection with the hijacking of a tractor-trailer loaded with 800 cases of cigarettes earlier in the day, an FBI official in El Paso said.

Ronald A. Hoverson, special agent in charge of the El Paso FBI office, said the Arizona man and the New Mexico man were arrested Tuesday and being held in the El Paso County Jail after being questioned by FBI agents.

The men turned themselves into Authony, Texas, police, who turned them over to the FBI, said Anthony Police Chief Jerry Posey.

Hoverson said the FBI is trying to locate and arrest another New Mexico man, who along with an unidentified female, aided the men in the hijacking. The female is wanted for questioning, he said.

El Paso County Sheriff Ray Montes said the four forced a Sante Fe Trail tractor trailer truck driven by James E. Gooden of Albuquerque off the road near the Texas-New Mexico border early Tuesday morning. Montes said a car driven by the female suspect pulled in front of the truck, forcing Gooden to come to a halt on the shoulder.

The hijackers bound Gooden with shipping tape and left him in a brushy area near the Rio Grande, said El Paso Sheriff's patrolman Joe Medellin.

Anthony, Texas Police Chief Jerry Posey said the hijackers drove the Santa Fe Transit Co. truck to a used car lot in Anthony, where they loaded the cigarettes onto two rented trucks.

Hoverson said the tractor trailer contained an unidentified amount of pharmaceutical supplies, clothing and auto parts, as well as the cigarettes, valued at $240,000.

Hoverson said the men would appear before the U.S. Magistrate today to be informed of their charges and have bond set.

One hurt when light plane, helicopter collide

ANGLETON, Texas (AP) — A Danbury man was in fair condition Tuesday after a helicopter and a light plane collided as both craft were landing at Bailes Airport in Brazoria County, officials said.

Timothy Salaika, a 32-year-old flight instructor, sustained a compression fracture of the spine, according to an Angleton Danbury General Hospital Spokesman.

Alejandro Cortes, an 18-year-old flight student from Vera Cruz who also was in the helicopter, was treated for minor injuries and released.

The name of the pilot of the plane was not immediately available, but he was uninjured, according to Barney Woodard, a Brazoria County Sheriff's Department investigator.

The plane made an emergency landing in a nearby rice field, officials said.

Woodard said it had not been determined who was flying the helicopter at the time of the accident.

Felton Baker, president of the firm that owned the helicopter, said the plane apparently struck the helicopter near the rear rotor when both craft were about 300 feet off the ground.

Man suffers from drug leak

HOUSTON (AP) — Doctors hope laxatives will save the life of one of two men accused of trying to smuggle cocaine into the country by inserting cocaine-filled condoms into their lower intestinal tracts.

Robert Gilson Brown, 44, of Los Angeles, was in poor condition at Ben Taub Hospital late Tuesday after one of the packets ruptured and the drug began leaking into his system.

James Robert Taylor, 29, of Seattle, was in fair condition.

Both have been charged with possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance. Bond was set at $50,000.

"The X-rays showed 11 packets inside one of the men's bodies," said Charles Conroy, U.S. Customs public information officer.

Brown and Taylor were arrested about 10 a.m. Monday after getting off a flight from Mexico City at Houston's Intercontinental Airport, Conroy said.

Blast injures two

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A second explosion in three days left two inmates slightly injured when a bomb blew a hole through the roof of the Salt Lake City-County Jail, authorities said.

Al Britton, director of county Emergency Services, said the blast shortly before 11 p.m. Tuesday apparently was caused by a bomb tossed onto the roof of the three-story downtown jail. No evacuation was necessary.

City police said an explosion early Sunday blew a 2-foot-wide hole in the lawn outside the jail building. No injuries or damage to the building occurred from that blast.

Tribune Company buys Cubs for $20.5 million

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Cubs, charter members of the National League who have not won a pennant in 36 years, have been sold for $20.5 million by William Wrigley to the parent firm of the Chicago Tribune.

Wrigley, a chewing gum magnate and head of the William Wrigley Jr. Co. whose father and grandfather before him owned the club, agreed Tuesday to the sale of the team to the Tribune Co., a privately owned firm with newspapers, radio and television stations and cable TV operations.

The sale was quickly approved by the club's board of directors and now needs the approval of the National League and the club's stockholders.

Stanton R. Cook, chief executive officer of Tribune Co., said he was elated over the transaction, noting the Cubs and Tribune Co. broadcasting properties have been associated for years.

Cook said Tribune Co. newspaper and broadcast subsidiaries would continue independent coverage of the news of baseball consistent with the company's editorial tradition.

In announcing the sale, Wrigley said he is turning the club over to a stable and well established entity committed to keeping the Cubs in Chicago and that the Tribune Co. is financially able to meet its commitments to the shareholders of the club and the National League. Wrigley controlled 81 percent of the stock.

The Cubs are one of eight original charter members of the National League along with New York, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Hartford, Louisville and Cincinnati. The Cubs are the only team of that group to remain in the same city where they started in 1876.

The Wrigley family came onto the baseball scene in 1916 when William Wrigley Jr. and several other Chicago businessmen purchased the club from the Taft family of Cincinnati. Wrigley became majority stockholder in 1921 and ran the club until his death in 1932.

P.K. Wrigley took over at that time and ran the team until his death in 1977 when young William Wrigley assumed operation of the club.

Wrigley, 48, apparently ran into financial problems brought about by estate tax difficulties stemming from the deaths of his parents within a short time of each other.

The Chicago Sun-Times reported the club faces a possible $3 million loss this year. Attendance is down more than 220,000 compared to the same number of home dates last year.

The Wrigley hold is believed to be the longest continuous ownership of a team in the National League. In the American League, the Griffith family has owned a majority interest in the Minnesota Twins, formerly the Washington Senators, since 1912.

The Cubs last pennant was in 1945. After William Wrigley took over in 1977 the Cubs finished fourth, third in 1978, fifth in 1979 and last in 1980. Currently the club is in last place in its division and has the worst record in the National League.

Wrigley Field remains the only park in baseball without lights and night baseball. P. K. Wrigley always considered baseball a day game and he felt lights and night games would hurt the neighborhood.

Schammel sees minor league improvements ahead

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

Bill Schammel, general manager of the Midland Cubs, said Tuesday that the impending sale of the Chicago Cubs to the parent company of the Chicago Tribune should not affect the operation of Midland's minor league team at least through the rest of the season.

Midlanders Max Christensen and Bernard Lankford are the owners of the Midland Cubs. They have a working player development contract with the Chicago organization. That contract does not expire until the end of the 1981 season, which is early September.

"The sale of the Chicago club is subject to approval of the board of directors, stockholders and the National League," Schammel said. "We have a working agreement with Chicago with a player development contract, so the sale of the Chicago Cubs won't bother us. That contract is up at the end of the season, but it would have been up regardless whether the Cubs were sold or not."

Schammel sees the move by the Wrigleys in Chicago as a positive move for the team and is very excited about recent moves to help the minor league operations.

"I think the Cubs are taking positive strides toward improving the minor leagues and I really think we will be a force in the second half. They have already begun to move to players our way," Schammel noted.

Three new players have joined the Cubs since they left on the current road trip. Mike King, who was acquired by Chicago from Oakland in a trade that sent Cliff Johnson to the A's, won his first outing against El Paso Monday.

Joe Carter, Chicago's 1981 first round draft pick in the free agent draft, is also with the Cubs. He is an outfielder with good power and played college ball at Wichita State. Henry Mack, who was with Midland last year, has also returned to the Cubs.

Schammel also noted that pitchers Carlos Gil and Tom Spino have been placed on the disabled list.

"We're just guessing at this end, but the Wrigleys may have a cash flow problem with state taxes," Schammel stated. "Both senior Wrigleys died within a one-year time period and the young Wrigleys may have trouble with state taxes.

The Wrigleys, who have owned the team for 60 years, own 81 per cent of the stock in the Chicago Cubs. Tribune Company is privately owned. It has newspapers, radio and television stations and cable TV operations in the United States and newsprint-forest product operations in Canada.

Tribune Company also owns WGN-TV, which broadcasts Chicago Cubs games. The Cubs and the Tribune Co. broadcasting properties have been associated for many years. The first WGN radio broadcast of Cubs' baseball was in 1924 and WGN-TV began its television coverage in 1948. The Tribune Co. owns both broadcast outlets.

Changes are bound to occur from top to bottom in the Chicago Cubs' organization if the impending sale is consummated. How all this will affect the Midland Cubs will not be know for some time. A new working agreement will have to be reached after the season anyway. Lankford and Christensen have a three-year working agreement with Chicago and that agreement is completed at the end of the current Texas League season.

But for now, the Midland organization seems to be excited about actions being taken within the organization and are looking forward to the upcoming second half race in the Texas League.

Open hopefuls should be in NFL camp

ARDMORE, Pa. (AP) — At least four potential leading contenders — including defending champion Jack Nicklaus — are suffering from a variety of ills and ailments on the eve of the first round of golf's 81st United States Open Championship.

Lee Trevino, Johnny Miller and David Graham join Nicklaus on a list of the walking wounded that would be more appropriate to a National Football League training camp than a golf course.

And still another top player, Andy Bean, is injured so badly he isn't competing. Bean, winner of the Bay Hill Classic three months ago, has his hand in a cast in an attempt to repair some torn ligaments.

Nicklaus, who is gunning for a record fifth American national championship, has been troubled by a stomach ailment for three months. He checked himself into a clinic for diagnosis and treatment last week and has been given a clean bill of health.

Trevino, who beat Nicklaus in a playoff for this title in 1971, the last time the Open was played at the historic Merion Golf Club, hasn't played competitively in a month and had a brief hospital stay for treatment of a chronic back ailment.

"I strained it doing some work around the house and then aggravated it jogging" late last month, said Trevino, who had surgery on his back several years ago. The condition worsened.

"I spent a couple of days in bed and when that didn't work, I went to a hospital for medication and treatment. I bought an electrical shock machine and carry it with me."

MILLER, A former Open champion and a two-time winner this season, has been troubled by a shoulder injury that, at one time, threatened to knock him out of the 156-man field. He took cortisone shots early this week and said "I'll play if I have to crawl around."

Graham, a former PGA champion and winner at Phoenix early this year, declines to discuss his physical problem but has sought medical help in the last couple of weeks.

Nicklaus, greatly relieved that his problem was of a relatively minor nature, shot a 65 in his first praptice round at Merion and appears to be near the peak of his game.

"I'm playing pretty well and, at times, I'm putting pretty well. I'm not unhappy with any part of my game," said Nicklaus, holder of a record 17 major professional titles and seeking to become the first man in 30 years to make a successful defense of his Open title.

He has not won this season but, at age 41, he plays a light schedule and concentrates solely on golf's majors, the U.S. and British Opens, the Masters and PGA.

HIS CHIEF rivals are Ray Floyd, Tom Watson and Tom Kite, all of whom are healthy.

Floyd, enjoying the best season of his 19-year career, scored his third victory of the season last week. A former Masters and PGA champion, he has finished lower than 12th only once since January.

"I'm pleased that I'm playing very well right now," Floyd said. "I'm not predicting I'll win it, but I'm very optimistic."

Watson is, quite simply, the best player in the game. He has won the Masters and two other events this year, holds his customary spot atop the season's money-winning list and is seeking a fifth consecutive Player of the Year title.

Although he has played well in the Open, with top 10 finishes in six of his last seven appearances, he has yet to win it. And that is his greatest ambition.

"My goal is to win the U.S. Open It is my No.1 priority in golf. And, until I do win ht, it will remain my No. 1 priority," he said.

KITE, ONE of the steadiest players in golf, has a remarkable record of consistency. He has been seventh or better in his last seven starts. And Merion, relatively short but demanding of accuracy, seems ideally suited to his game.

Other major standouts include three-time 1981 winner Bruce Lietzke, Ben Crenshaw, Hale Irwin, John Mahaffey, Craig Stadler, Jerry Pate and Lanny Wadkins.

Trevino cannot be counted out.

"The back's fine," he insists, but admitted that if this were a routine tournament he'd probably would have skipped it."

"Nobody expects me to do well. I'm coming in not expecting to do well. But sometimes when you're playing hurt, things happen.

The foreign field includes Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Gary Player of South Africa, Greg Norman of Australia, Sandy Lyle of Great Britain and Isao Aoki of Japan.

Mediator wants verbal night games

NEW YORK (AP) — Ken Moffett, the federal mediator in the stalemated baseball talks, says he hopes today's bargaining session between representatives of the club owners and the players turns into a night game.

"I hope, if there is any conversation as far as compensation, that we would go through the night." said Moffett, the almost-eternal optimist of these talks.

Moffett scheduled the talks to resume today at 2 p.m. EDT.

TUESDAY WAS the first negotiation session since last Friday, when the 6-day-old strike began. While a nation of baseball fans is looking into the future and wondering when the walkout would end, negotiators were rehashing the 18-month history of the dispute.

According to Don Fehr, general counsel to the Major League Baseball Players Association, that history has covered over 100 meetings, and the negotiators reviewed them in less than two hours Tuesday.

"We had a brief but good meeting," said Ray Grebey, the owners chief bargainer as director of the Player Relations Committee. "There was an effort to clear the air, clear some misunderstandings after 18 months. There was just a general airing of the situation."

Bob Boone of Philadelphia, the National League's player representative, said he "wasn't real excited with (the meeting) because we're still on strike. Nothing really happened."

And Moffett, who said the attitude of both sides was "a tad better" than "lousy" — his description of last Friday's session —

He added: "We explored the past history of the situation bringing us to where we are right now. I would characterise the meetings as amicable without any progress toward ending the strike."

Another 13 games went by the boards Tuesday, raising the total of canceled games to 64, with no reason for optimism in sight.

The bleak prospect for a quick settlement led three owners to meet Tuesday with Commissioner Bowie Kuhn. Ed Chiles of Texas, Edward Bennett Williams of Baltimore and George Steinbrenner of the New York Yankees all have expressed unhappiness with the stalled talks. They appeared eager to become more involved at the bargaining table, and reportedly to get Kuhn to use his influence in obtaining a settlement.

KUHN CALLED the meeting with the owners "useful." He said those calling for more involvement by the commissioner did "not understand the internal dynamics. But the emphasis should be on the two bargaining teams. That's where the solution should be found."

Grebey, demanding one voice at the negotiations, has resisted any owner's participation at the table. He said the talks with Kuhn "had absolutely nothing to do with the negotiations today."

One management official, who requested anonymity, said the Kuhn meeting had nothing to do with the reality of resolving the dispute. The source called the owners' session with Kuhn "a grandstand play, a public spectacle."

In his testimony in federal court in Rochester, N.Y. two weeks ago, Kuhn said he spoke only as an individual and had no leverage with the owners' bargaining unit.

Boone and four other players led the union's negotiating team, as Marvin Miller, executive director of the players association, continued to stay away from the talks. He had said several owners considered him an obstacle to the settlement.

There are finally five state champions

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — This year's state schoolboy baseball tournament probably will be remembered by spectators as the year the rains came.

For five teams, however, the delays were worth the wait — and the cost.

Bremond in Class A, Shiner in 2A, Somerset in 3A and South San Antonio West in 4A all won their first state baseball championships. Lubbock Monterey's Plainsmen seemed a little less excited in capturing the school's third title in eight trips to the tournament since 1961.

Heavy rains washed out opening day last Thursday and all but one game on Saturday and extended the two-day tournament to six days

Monterey Coach Bobby Moegle estimated his team's expenses at about $800 a day for meals and lodging, plus charter bus rental. He said the Plainsmen had to switch hotels twice — first to get into a cheaper one and then because their reservations ran out.

The Saturday game proved important to Shiner, which was able to pitch Kenneth Machacek that day, then rest him until Tuesday, when he beat defending champion Waskom 3-2 for the championship.

Waskom had to wait until Monday to play its semifinal game, and pitcher Kenneth Jackson — throwing with less than 24 hours rest on Tuesday— pitched only one scoreless inning, with shortstop Tom Bowen relieving.

Shiner scored the winning run in the eighth inning on a hit by catcher Dennis Kaspar, who made up for a two-run throwing error by lashing a single to short left field with the bases loaded and two out.

Bowen walked two batters intentionally in the eighth — the first extra inning. Kaspar, who had struck out twice, foiled the strategy.

Machacek allowed Waskom only four hits, including one in the last four innings, as he raised his record to 16-2. Shiner's season record was 19-4, which illustrates how important it was to be able to rest him.

Bowie outhit Somerset 10-3, but Bowie pitcher Kent Fluitt's wildness led to all Somerset's runs in a 5-2 victory.

Fluitt walked eight batters and threw three wild pitches in 2-13 innings before sophomore Kevin Roth relieved and pitched no-hit ball for 3-23 innings.

Somerset scored three runs in the first on four walks, singles by Mark Mares and Robert Worley and a throwing error by Bowie first baseman Kerry Clement.

Somerset scored a single run in the second on two walks and Mares' double and another run in the third on two walks and the wild pitches.

Jacob Hernandez gave up all 10 Bowie hits, including three by shortstop Matt Hill and a double to Clement to open the seventh. Ricky Cruz, 16-0, relieved Hernandez and got the final three outs without a run scoring to save the victory.

The botton of the second inning proved to be a nightmare for a veteran Palmer team that included three all-tournament players from its 1980 state finalist team.

Leading 3-0 on three walks, three stolen bases and a bunt single by pitcher Wayne Mathis, the Bulldogs' defense fell apart behind Mathis, who was the team ace with a 16-2 record.

Bremond combined four walks, four consecutive singles and five Palmer errors, including four wild throws by three different infielders, to score 10 runs in a 13-3 victory.

The 10-run outburst tied South San Antonio for the second biggest inning in tournament history. Only Palmer, which scored 13 runs in a single inning in 1979 against Windthorst, has ever scored more runs in one inning.

Texas Rangers manager Don Zimmer, right, is all smiles as he welcomes first round draft choice Ron Darling at a news conference at Arlington Stadium Tuesday. Darling, a pitcher from Yale, signed with the Rangers Tuesday and will join Tulsa in the Texas League.

Rangers nail down a Darling

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers have signed the young right-hander they feel they stole in the recent major league draft. Now, pitching instructor Paul Richards must teach him to throw a big league curveball.

While their owner, Eddie Chiles, was in New York City Tuesday trying to hurry along the strike negotiations, the Rangers showed off 20-year-old Ron Darling, who was 48-28 for Yale in the Ivy League, to the press.

"He can pitch...he's certainly not unpolished," said Joe Klein director of player procurement and development. "He needs to work on his mechanics and breaking pitches. We hope his stuff improves because it doesn't need to improve much for him to become a big league pitcher."

Darling, who signed a one-year minor league contract which included a bonus estimated at $100,000, was immediately assigned to the Rangers' Class AA Texas League farm team at Tulsa. He was expected to make his first start next Monday or Tuesday.

Darling achieved national notoriety in May when he pitched a no-hitter against St. John's for 11 innings but lost 1-0 in the 12th when a batter singled, then stole second, third and home for the only run in the game.

The 6-foot-3, 195-pound Darling, a native Hawaiian who was reared in Worcester, Mass., said he doesn't expect to make the Ranger roster right away.

"I would like to have a good summer, have an impressive spring training, then pitch for the Texas team in two years," he said.

Eddie Robinson, executive vice president of the Rangers, quipped "If he is as good as I've heard he might be here (the major leagues) before that."

Robinson added "We feel he is a premium prospect and we think he will make our starting rotation in the near future. He'll start out in AA ball then go to AAA to start next year. It is conceivable he will be here (Arlington) next year."

Darling was the ninth pick in the first round of last week's draft and the Rangers were surprised he was still around.

"We had heard the price was too high and that might have scared some people off," said Robinson. "We took our chances and it worked out well."

Klein said "We had him rated as the third best player in the draft. I just held my breath I wanted him so bad. When St. Louis, drafting ahead of us, said we'll take shortstop...then I knew we had him unless Ron had switched positions on us."

Darling was voted the Most Valuable Player of the semi-pro Cape Cod League last year.

"I think that's where the major league scouts noticed me," said Darling.

Darling, who has a fastball clocked at 90 miles an hour, had a 2.00 earned run average in three years at Yale with 256 strike outs to 114 walks. He had one year of eligibility left when he signed with the Rangers.

Katt points finger of blame

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The second-oldest player in the major leagues Tuesday blamed Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and negotiator Ray Grebey for the players' strike — and predicted both would lose their jobs.

"If you want to point the finger of blame in this, you can pick Kuhn and Grebey," said Jim Kaat, pitching in the twilight of his career as a reliever for the St. Louis Cardinals.

Kaat, playing in his 22nd major league season, said he had called Kuhn several times before the strike to ask the commissioner to become active in the dispute.

"Kuhn could have taken action, in the best interests of the game," Kaat told the St. Louis Globe-Democrat in a telephone interview from his Philadelphia farm. "And if the owners had been allowed to speak out on the strike, without fear of a $500,000 fine, it never would have reached this point."

The 42-year-old Kaat, who has a career 275-229 record, said he reached a $60,000 salary in 1967 after winning 25 games for the Minnesota Twins the year before.

"But when I weat 16-13, 14-12, 14-13 and 14-10, (Twins owner Calvin) Griffith assessed me 10 percent cuts three of those years, then a token cut," Kaat said. "I think I contributed to the club, but another of his favorite quotes was: 'Go out and get a job.'

"I had no choice," added the lefthander. "My salary went to $48,000."

Kaat said the free agent system, at issue in the current dispute, prevents arbitrary salary cuts.

"What do you think I could have gotten as a free agent with my record for the Twins?" he asked. "I realize it's all relative, but if the owners had been fair and honest in earlier years, I'm sure the players would have reciprocated."

The owners should "come out of the woodwork and say how they feel about all this," said the relief pitcher, who was 3-1 with three saves and a 1.75 earned run average before the strike.

"Then they might tactfully ease Grebey out of the picture," he added. "His stance is to blame for this mess. We have been talking compromise, when we don't have to give back a nickel."

The fans realize "it's all give on our part," said Kaat, who added he was encouraged by an NBC-TV poll which showed 53 percent of the fans favor the owners.

"In other years, they would have yelled about the greedy players and the result would have been something like 90 to 10 percent," he said.

Kuhn and Grebey promised the owners if they accepted the settlement last May which averted a strike then, they "would have compensation this year," said Kaat.

"It wouldn't surprise me if the owners fired Kuhn and Grebey," said Kaat. "I'm not exactly coming from left field. They've had ample time to do their jobs and haven't.

"If we failed as often as they did, we, as athletes, would be long gone."

Watson sides with baseball owners

ARDMORE, Pa. (AP) — Tom Watson says he's for management in the baseball strike.

Watson, golf's leading money winner, talked about baseball's problems before a practice round at Merion Golf Club for Thursday's U. S. Open.

Watson appeared happy to talk about something other than golf, and the fact that he's never won the Open in his more than 10 years on the pro golf tour.

"I think the players' salaries are out of hand," said Watson, who has won three tournaments this year and earned $332,492.

Watson said he agreed with a statement by Bill Veeck, former owner of the Chicago White Sox and other teams.

"Veeck said, 'I don't mind the high price of stardom, I don't like the high price of mediocrity,'" Watson declared.

"If a club isn't winning it isn't making money," said Watson. So how can they guarantee big salaries?

Watson said even the young players in baseball believe they are owed a lifetime earnings very quickly.

I think we in sports should remember we're actually playing a children's game. And with all the problems in the world today it really doesn't seem that important."

Watson, one of the favorites to win the Open over Merion's 6,544-yard par 70 course, insisted that somewhere down the road there is a compromise to the baseball hassle.

Watson suggested that players in pro team sports "can play for what they're are paid or don't play."

How does he relate the big money earned in golf to that made and sought in baseball through the free agent market?

"Golf is a unique game. It's individual. You pay your own expenses," and he estimated his at $40,000 per year.

"We're not salaried like ballplayers and those in other major league sports. If we don't play well, we don't eat. I wouldn't want to give up working for myself."

Watson portrayed himself as a baseball fan. He said he saw a dozen games in his home Kansas City, went to the first five games of the World Series last year.

Watson said he applied his sports money philosophy to himself.

"When I started, my basic plan was that if I couldn't make it in five years I'd leave the tour," he said.

What would you have done? he was asked.

"I don't know, maybe been a sports writer," he replied.

Watson was asked if there couldn't be a strike in golf.

"I don't think so," replied the 31-year-old winner of 25 tournaments during his career.

"How can we strike?" he asked.

A lot of schemes have been proposed for the PGA tour over the years, but I think the majority of the players and the sponsors are satisfied the way it is," added Watson, also winner of three British Opens, Player of the Year and top money winner the last four years.

Watson says the only comparison he could make was the desire of some of the younger players for a guarantee of $1,000 everytime they made the cut in a tournament.

"I don't believe in that," Watson said. "If you can't earn money get off the tour."

Borg tabbed as Wimbledon favorite

WIMBLEDON (AP) — Bjorn Borg has been selected as a 4-5 favorite to win the Wimbledon tennis tournament.

After the Swedish superstar on Tuesday drew bearded Californian Peter Rennert in the first round of next week's tournament, bookies made Borg the odds-on favorite to win his sixth straight championship.

Other odds quoted by the bookies were 7-4 against John McEnroe, 12-1 against Jimmy Connors, and 20-1 against both Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl and American Roscoe Tanner.

As defending champion, Borg will open the tournament on the famed Center Court of the All-England Club next Monday.

Borg defeated McEnroe in five dramatic sets in last year's final, while Tanner took the super Swede to five sets in the 1979 championships.

Quinones tosses gem

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Rene Quinones faced the minimum number of batters in pitching a no-hitter Tuesday night as the Vancouver Canadians defeated the Edmonton Trappers 3-0 in the first game of a Pacific Coast League doubleheader.

Quinones, 24, walked Rod Allen in the third inning and Jay Loviglio in the fourth inning. Allen was wiped out in a double play and Loviglio was caught stealing.

Quinones, a right-hander, struck out four for his first victory this season. In his only other start this year on June 11, Quinones threw two innings of hitless baseball against the Phoenix Giants.

Quinones, a native of Puerto Rico, now is in his fifth minor league season. He began the season on the disabled list after suffering a badly strained tendon in his right ankle during spring training with the Milwaukee Brewers, the Canadians' parent club.

The Canadians got the only run they needed on Terry Lee's fifth home run of the season in the second inning.

NC Yankees, Mid City win playoff tilts

Leonard Hillock blasted two doubles to lift the North Central Yankees to an exciting 10-7 win over the Eastern Tigers Tuesday in the opening round of the National Little League tournament to determine the Midland National Little League city champion.

Bobby Hopkins picked up the win for the Yankees while James Madrid was tagged with the loss.

In the game played on Field "B" Tuesday at the North Central League diamonds, Joel Dunn pitched the Mid City Pirates to a 10-7 win over the Orange squad from the Tower League. Mickey Gines and Jessie Ortega hit doubles in the losing cause for the Orange team. Guy Peterson suffered the pitching defeat.

The defeats eliminate Manager Alex Mardrid's Tigers and Jimmie Kemp's Orange from the single elimination tournament.

In the only game today, Craig Stewart will send his Pirates, winners of the Tower League, against the Red team, winners of the Western League, at 6 p.m. on Field "A".

Lee Davis' Red club drew the first round bye.

The North Central Yankees, with their win Tuesday, advance to the tournament finals with a bye. The championship contest will be held at 6 p.m. Thursday on Field "A".

The American Little League double elimination tournament will be staged next week.

Bosetti fires darts at Jays' Mattick

TORONTO (AP) — Rick Bosetti says the Toronto Blue Jays should get rid of manager Bobby Mattick if the team wants to improve.

"The team has proved that the guys won't produce for Bobby, said Bosetti from his home in Anderson Calif. "That's the general attitude among the players."

The Jays sent Bosetti to the Oakland A's last Wednesday after he repeatedly asked the team to trade him.

"All I know is I wanted to get out of Toronto, and I did," said the outfielder.

Mattick was not available for comment.

Bosetti played four years for the Jays, as a regular in 1978 and 1979, but missed most of last year's play because of a broken arm.

"I played for two managers in Toronto," he said. "Roy Hartsfield and Bobby Mattick.

"Roy wouldn't say anything and Bobby wouldn't stop talking. I think the pressure got to Roy his final year ... but if they want to improve this year, they have to get a new manager."

Bosetti said the players on the team aren't relaxed.

"There's no fun at the games. No fun on the bench, no bench jockeying. You need that to keep loose.

"Bobby had a policy that, if anyone got hurt horsing around, it was an automatic $500 fine. He wouldn't treat you like a grown man."

Jays President Peter Bavasi was upset with Bosetti's comments.

"This player has a very short memory, since it was Bobby Mattick who guided the team to its best finish ever last season, a year when Bosetti was not playing," said Bavasi. "I don't think either Bobby Mattick or the Blue Jays should be put in the position of dignifying such a childish outburst.

"Especially from a player who insisted on being traded and whom the Blue Jays attempted to satisfy."

However, Mattick has had problems with other players, said Bosetti.

"On the bench, he was bad-mouthing everybody," he said.

Evans' single nips Midland in ninth

EL PASO — Johnny Evans singled home the winning run with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning here Tuesday night as the El Paso Diablos defeated the Midland Cubs, 5-4, and moved one-half game ahead of the rain idled San Antonio Dodgers in the Texas League Western Division.

With the score tied at 4-4 heading into the ninth, Bill Schroeder reached safely on an error by Cub first baseman Jack Upton and was sacrificed to second by Ed Irvine. At that point the Cubs replaced Tim Milner on the mound with Norm Churchill. Milner had not given up a run in three innings of work.

Pinch hitter Jerry Lane, the first batter to face Churchill, who recorded a save Monday in the series opner, singled, but Schroeder was nailed at the plate by a throw from rightfielder Randy LaVigne.

With two outs, Churchill hit Bob Skube with a pitch and Evans produced the game winner with a single to left.

El Paso had tied the game in the sixth with a three run uprising off Cub starter Phil Nastu. Skube's double plated one run while Evans and Willie Lozado each came through with run scoring singles.

Midland jumped to a 1-0 lead in the second inning when Fritz Connally connected for his third homer of the year off winning pitcher Richard Cook, 5-2. The Cubs touched Cook for another run in the third when Mike Shepston doubled and scored on Craig Kornfield's single.

El Paso cut the lead to 2-1 in the fifth when Lozado doubled and scored on Schroeder's single.

The Cubs added two in the sixth on a single by Mel Hall and Upton's eighth homer of the season. However, Cook blanked the Cubs the rest of the way as his teammates came up with three in the sixth and won it on Davis' single in the ninth.

The two teams meet again tonight with the series tied at 1-1, and the Cubs are playing the role of spoiler against the Diablos. The first half race ends Saturday night here and El Paso needs some victories to keep their ½-game lead.

Sheppard predicts football strike

BEREA, Ohio (AP) — Professional football players should pay close attention to the strike by their baseball colleagues, says Cleveland Browns guard Henry Sheppard.

"We, the football players association, can learn a lot from the baseball players," Sheppard said. "The baseball players are a much more cohesive union than we are, and we should follow their example of sticking together."

For some time, football players have been discussing the possibility of a strike in 1982, when their contract with club owners expires.

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Andrea Jaeger enjoys being out of the limelight.

The 15-year-old American, the subject of much publicity before last year's Wimbledon, slipped into the last 16 Tuesday of the $125,000 BMW women's grass court tennis championships at Eastbourne without attracting much attention.

"I don't feel under any pressure at all," she said. "Everyone is talking about Kathy Rinaldi, or Hana Mandlikova being seeded No.2 for Wimbledon next week, and that makes it much easier for me."

Andrea advanced with a 6-4, 6-2 second-round victory over Lesley Charles of Britain.

"Last year everyone made a big deal about me. It didn't worry me, but it is nice when you don't have to worry about interviews and things like that," she added.

Jaeger is seeded No. 5 for Wimbledon, despite being ranked in fourth place in the world computer.

"I think I'm the person who has really been hurt by the seedings controversy," Andrea said. "I have been bumped out of the top four and will face one of them if I reach the quarterfinals.

"I don"t want to make a big thing about it, but I'm not happy."

Jaeger said she was delighted with the improvement in her play over the last 12 months.

"I think last year I relied a lot more on my opponents missing their shots," she said. "I still do it to a certain extent, but now I go for my own shots and try for winners off my serves."

Serve is important for Tanner

BRISTOL, England (AP) — Roscoe Tanner, one of the hardest servers in tennis, knows he also has to return service well to be a threat at Wimbledon starting next week.

Tanner defeated Australian Rod Frawley 7-6, 6-4 in the first round of the Lambert and Butler tennis tournament Tuesday, breaking Frawley's service just once.

The big-serving Tanner won the opening set in a 7-3 tiebreaker after both players held service to 6-6. Then the American broke Frawley in the 10th game to decide the second set.

"I can't complain about my serve," Tanner said. "I am getting about 60 percent of my first serves in. But my biggest fault in the last two or three weeks has been returning service.

"I just have to keep going and hope it all comes together in time for Wimbledon."

STAN SMITH, playing his first tournament on grass since last year's Wimbledon, also won a close opening-round match, beating South African Bernie Mitton 7-5, 6-4.

In other maches, Paul McNamee of Australia defeated Ilie Nastase of Romania 7-6, 6-4; Bill Scanlon beat Robert Reininger of Austria 6-3, 6-0; Robert Hightower outlasted John Austin 2-6, 6-3, 6-2; Buster Mottram of Great Britain ousted Christophe Roger-Vasselin of France 6-2, 6-2; Onny Parun of New Zealand defeated Hank Pfister 7-5, 6-3; David Carter of Australia beat Butch Walts 5-7, 6-1, 6-1 and Ismael El Shafei of Egypt stopped Tony Giammalva 6-4, 6-2.

Cavaliers pluck Silas

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Cavaliers, foiled in an attempt to steal guard Otis Birdsong from the Kansas City Kings, have instead turned to the San Antonio Spurs for backcourt help.

The Cavaliers on Tuesday acquired veteran James Silas from the Spurs in exchange for a 1982 second-round draft choice and an undisclosed amount of cash.

Silas, 32, was the lone remaining player from the original Spurs franchise, which started as the Dallas Chapparals in the old American Basketball Association.

"James can still play," said Spurs general manager Bob Bass. "He is far from finished. He was our quarterback. But with young guards Ron Brewer and Johnny Moore, we felt we had to make a change."

The Spurs were also reportedly willing to part with Silas because he was nearing an impasse on renegotiating his contract. He has two years remaining on an eight-year deal calling for an estimated $200,000 a year.

Cavaliers owner Ted Stepien said he anticipated no problem concerning a contract with Silas.

Cleveland sought Silas after being shut out in its attempt to sign Birdsong as a free agent about a week ago, when the Kings traded him to New Jersey.

"James is a quality player," said Cleveland Coach Don Delaney. "We need a veteran like him. He can help the younger players."

The 6-foot-3 veteran averaged 18.2 points a game in four years in Dallas, then compiled a 13.9 average in his first three years at San Antonio. He boosted that with a 17.7 points per game performance during the 1980-81 National Basketball Association season.

He has recovered from 1976 knee surgery, the Cavaliers said.

Bum to give up blue boots

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Coach Bum Phillips will give George Rogers two pairs of blue cowboy boots — one made of ostrich necks and the other of elephant ears — when the 1980 Heisman Trophy winner signs a million-dollar contract with the New Orleans Saints today.

"Like to have some?" asked Phillips when he spotted Rogers eyeing the boots worn by the coach to their informal tete-a-tete Tuesday.

"Sure would," replied Rogers, a big, durable running back from the University of South Carolina.

"Tell you what, I'll bring you two pair tomorrow," promised Phillips. "I've got a pair of ostrich necks and a pair of elephant ear. They're both blue, a color I'm no longer particularly partial to."

Blue is one of the team colors of the Houston Oilers, which fired Phillips at the end of the 1980 season.

Phillips and Rogers had lunch, then sat down and talked awhile — mostly about fishing — in the coach's office. Neither would talk much about the contract the National Football League's No. 1 draft choice was expected to sign today.

But their mood was jovial.

"Let me see your hat," coaxed Phillips.

"We wear the same size," said the coach, trying on Rogers' peak-billed cap.

"I'm going to mark it and try it on every once and awhile. Anytime that hat don't fit me, we're going to have a talk. But I'll bet it won't get any bigger."

To which Rogers replied: "I've never had a swelled head, coach."

"That's the reason I picked you," said Phillips. "I've seen some good folks fall by the wayside because it's hard for some to keep the same hat size. Those kind fall by the wayside."

Rogers wanted to talk about the fishing trip Phillips promised to take him on Thursday.

"Look, George, you've got to be properly attired for the trip," the coach said. "Wear a three-piece suit. You know what that is, don't you? That's overalls and two straps."

Thelma still pitching after 26 seasons

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Out of the hands of babes come the baseballs that have been beaning, bopping and bruising Thelma Williams for 26 seasons, but she's still in there pitching to the peewees with the patience only a 70-year-old grandmother could muster.

"Some other people have been doubtful about me, but mostly they've been great," says Mrs. Williams, a white-haired septuagenarian who has managed youth teams in San Francisco since the day in 1955 when an umpire threw her husband out of a game.

Her husband, Sy, was long on baseball know-how but short on patience. Thelma had the patience, but she wasn't sure about the game.

"But I studied the rules over and over and over, and every time I'd get stuck, I'd call up a good friend and get things clarified," she recalled. "My husband taught me pretty well in the fundamentals, and I'm a Leo. I don't believe in people stepping on me."

Neither do her kids.

"Once," she said, "I caught one of my players headed over toward the other team with a bat in his hands. When I asked him what he was doing, he said, 'They can't talk about you that way. I'll murder them!'"

There were a couple of other female managers in San Francisco youth baseball when Mrs. Williams broke in. But, she says, "I'm the only one who stayed with it," much to the surprise of her five children.

"They call me 'baseball-happy Mommy," Thelma said. "The day I was sewing my daughter's wedding dress, I was making out the next day's lineup at the same time."

In Thelma's league, managing means offer just enough advice, but never too much.

"I only talk to my pitchers about control, about getting the ball over the plate," she said. "And I don't like my shortstop jumping all the time to second base. I want him to cover the shortstop's hole and leave second base to the second baseman."

Over the years, Thelma has chatted with more than a few baseball scouts about her kids' prospects.

"They used to ask me all kinds of questions, and I think I'm a pretty good judge of talent," she admits. "I can pick out the kids who are going to make it."

But talent isn't the only way to Thelma's heart.

"I've had teams that have won it all, and teams that haven't won at all, and I've enjoyed it either way," she said. "I love these kids. I've never been paid to manage and coach, but it doesn't feel like work."

Dominica plot was secondary

By KEVIN NOBLET
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — With boxes of high-powered rifles and military gear stacked nearby, a Houston man testified he hatched a plot to invade the tiny Caribbean island of Dominica after discarding a "bloody" plan to take over nearby Grenada.

Michael Perdue, 32, the admitted ringleader of the bizarre scheme, told a U.S. District Court jury Tuesday that his invasion plans were prompted by his quest for money and power. He admitted telling lies to recruit a nine-member band of makeshift mercenaries to help him.

Perdue's comments came as a trial opened for three of the would-be invaders: Ku Klux Klan grand wizard Steven Donald Black, 27, of Birmingham, Ala.; longtime active Klansman Joe D. Hawkins, 37, of Jackson, Miss., and former Klansman Michael Norris, 21, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Testimony before U.S. Distriot Judge Lansing Mitchell continues today.

The three face various charges, including weapons violations and planning an armed expedition against a friendly nation. If convicted, each could receive up to 50 years in prison and $38,000 in fines.

Seven other men, including Perdue, pleaded guilty in a plea bargain with authorities. They have not yet been sentenced.

Black, giving his own opening address to jurors Tuesday, said it was not money but patriotism that moved him to get involved in the plot.

He accused Perdue of lying when he told the would-be mercenaries that the coup would prevent a communist government from taking over Dominica and would help to thwart the spread of communism in the Caribbean.

"Perhaps we were naive in all of this. Perhaps we were stupid. But we were duped," Black said. "We were motivated by the highest motives, by patriotic ideals.

"Certainly there was a sense of adventure in all of this," he conceded. "It was a romantic thing to do. It was exciting, perhaps more exciting than we thought it would be."

A State Department specialist in Caribbean affairs, Richard Howard, testified that U.S. officials were unaware of any communist leanings in Dominica.

Perdue testified that his scheme began with an offer to help ousted Grenada leader Sir Eric Gary regain power in exchange for money and position on the small, mountainous island in the southern West Indies. He said he spoke to Gary in San Diego.

His focus switched to Dominica when the first plan proved overambitious, he said. "We decided it would take a major force, and it would be bloody to take Grenada," he said.

Besides recruiting the nine mercenaries, Perdue said he spent the next year trying to get money to fund the Dominica operation, getting about $40,000 from Houston businessman James C. White and another $10,000 from L.E. Matthews of Jackson, Miss.

Perdue said former Dominica Prime Minister Patrick John agreed to give him tax-free rights to gambling, lumbering, tourism, a high military post, posts for 30 military "advisers" and $350,000 in return for deposing current Prime Minister Eugenia Charles.

The other mercenaries would receive $3,000 each, military positions and a small percentage in a business he would form, Perdue said. Investors also were promised a part of the profits, he said.

The 10 men were arrested April 27 at a marina near New Orleans where they had gathered with weapons and explosives to begin their 2,000-mile trip to Dominica.

House panel opens first hearing on Israeli attack

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. aid to Israel is not in jeopardy despite Israel's use of American-made fighter planes to bomb an Iraqi nuclear reactor, says the chairman of a House subcommittee opening hearings on the incident.

Rep. Lee Hamilton, chairman of the House Middle East subcommittee, said an unconditional finding by either President Reagan or Congress that Israel violated U.S. law by using the planes for aggression would force a cutoff of U.S. aid "and we're not going to do that."

Reagan administration officials were called before the committee today for public questioning on the bombing and whether Iraq was really developing atomic weapons, as Israel claims.

"I do not expect Congress to take action against Israel," Hamilton said Tuesday.

The Indiana Democrat said lesser action, such as strengthening the U.S. law, is possible later. But he said the subcommittee's only plan for the present is to gather information on Iraq's nuclear program, the Israeli raid and its effects in the Middle East.

Reagan already has ruled that Israel's use of the American jets "may have been a substantial violation" of U.S. law and suspended delivery of four F-16 jets to Israel pending further review.

At his press conference Tuesday, Reagan indicated he expects some sort of advice from Congress, saying "I have not heard back yet from the Congress and that review is not yet complete."

But Hamilton said he believes Congress will simply accept Reagan's ruling that it "may" have been a violation because going further would force a cutoff of U.S. aid to Israel.

The president said at his news conference that regardless of whether Israel's raid was aggressive or defensive, "Israel might have sincerely believed it was a defensive move."

Prime Minister Menachem Begin has said Israel destroyed the reactor because of intelligence from the scene that it was part of an Iraqi program to develop nuclear weapons for use against Israel.

However, he has given no details publicly to support that defense.

The U.S. officials testifying today reportedly told senators and House members at3bings shortly after the raid that it would have taken Iraq four to 10 years to develop nuclear weapons unless France simply supplied weapons-grade plutonium.

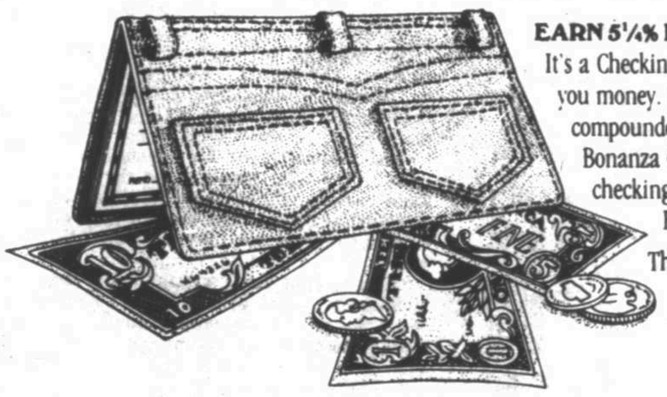

French and Italian companies helped Iraq build the reactor and French technicians have said in press interviews that they saw no indication Iraq intended to develop atomic weapons with the reactor.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has scheduled a similar hearing Thursday.

Fires continue to burn in Southern California

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Overworked firefighters and worried homeowners hoped for relief today from a record-breaking heat wave that has parched Southern California and created the conditions for the more than 20 blazes that burned near exclusive residential areas.

Fires since the weekend had burned 65 houses and more than 30,450 acres by Tuesday.

As firefighters battled the 2-day-old blazes Tuesday, new fires erupted. A 400-acre blaze in Los Angeles forced evacuation of homes and the police academy, shrouding empty Dodger stadium in smoke.

City arson officials were questioning a person Tuesday night about a blaze in the nearby Mt. Washington area, where three homes were destroyed and three others badly damaged.

Meanwhile, in Burbank, a five-acre grass fire near the Disney Studios damaged roofs of two houses and three garages before being controlled.

Tuesday night an "explosive" brushfire raced up four steep canyons in the exclusive Rancho Palos Verdes area overlooking the Pacific Ocean south of Los Angeles, said Los County Fire Department spokesman Dick Friend. The fire threatened 70 ridgetop houses but burned out without destroying any. The homes range in price upward from $250,000.

About the same time, a fire broke out in a hilly, residential area in Pasadena, threatening several houses before it was contained, a Pasadena Fire Department spokesman said. He said a report was being investigated that two children were seen starting that blaze.

Oppressive heat smothered the area for the second straight day Tuesday despite some letup in the hot, dry Santa Ana winds.

The mercury touched 105 degrees in downtown Los Angeles, a record for the date and 5 degrees shy of the 110 degree all-time record of Sept. 1, 1955.

Today's high was expected to be a bit lower — about 95 degrees.

Power usage set a record in Los Angeles as residents turned up air conditioners. The 4.2 million kilowatts in use by 3 p.m. topped the previous record of 4.14 kilowatts used on June 28, 1978, according to James L. Mulloy with the Department of Water and Power.

Speech draws groans at AFL-CIO convention

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — Cities and counties may not have a rosy future when it comes to state revenue handouts, says Gov. Frank White.

In a speech Tuesday to the state AFL-CIO convention in Hot Springs, White said the city and county governments will have to be self-supporting, without financial aid from the state.

He spoke in favor of the local option of imposing a 1 percent sales tax, an idea the convention officially opposed in a resolution adopted Monday.

The reception for White, who was not endorsed by the AFL-CIO in the gubernatorial race last year, was cool and there were moans and groans from the audience during his speech.

Of the local sales tax option, White said, "You may call it unfair, but looking from my perspective and Arkansas' future and the demands on revenue, I see very little opportunity for substantial continued funding for cities and counties."

Fake bomb nets $3,000

STEPHENVILLE, Texas (AP) — A man who told a loan officer he was carrying a bomb in a wooden box made off with about $3,000 from Cross Timbers Savings and Loan Tuesday, a company vice president said.

Charles Duren said seven bank employees were evacuated after the robber fled and left the box behind, but police later discovered that no bomb was in the shoe box-sized container.

Police investigator Pat Davis said the suspect, described as a white male in his mid-30s, scooped all the money from the cashier's stations but took nothing from the vault before he fled in a car.

The FBI is investigating the robbery.

Los Angeles fireman rescues baby from burning hotel

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A firefighter tucked a 1-year-old girl in his coat and helped her mother and grandmother walk to safety along a ledge on the fifth floor of a burning residential hotel, witnesses say.

Twelve people suffered minor injuries during the Tuesday night fire, which was confined to the second floor but sent heavy smoke billowing through the 200-room building.

James D. Bryan, an 18-year veteran of the Los Angeles Fire Department, reached through a hotel-room window to scoop Elizabeth Ann Foster from the arms of her mother, Helen Foster, according to witnesses and officials.

With the baby secure in the front of his jacket, Bryan guided Ms. Foster and the baby's grandmother, Violet Brown, 70 feet along the 2-foot-wide ledge leading to a roof, fire department spokesman Ted Aquaro said.

Bryan was the last to leave the roof, waiting until many of the hotel's 400 residents were evacuated by fire escape to the second floor and then down ladders to the ground, witnesses said.

Aquaro said the blaze was fought by firefighters who were "bone-tired" from their day-long battle against a score of brushfires fanned by Southern California's record-breaking heat and high winds.

"Everbody's ben out all day," Aquaro commented. "Nobody's had a free ride today in this town."

The cause of the fire had not been determined.

Three of the injured — two civilians and one firefighter — were taken to Queen of Angels Hospital and treated, primarily for smoke inhalation and exhaustion, said hospital spokesman Ken Gosting. Aquaro said nine other injured civilians were treated at the scene for smoke inhalation.

The hotel, near downtown MacArthur Park, was inhabited primarily by elderly, handicapped and non-English-speaking residents, Aquaro said.

Discrimination complaint dropped

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The former longtime Bexar County Medical Examiner has dropped a discrimination complaint and any plans to sue the county.

Civil Rights Attorney Ruben Sandoval said Dr. Ruben Santos, who was fired last Dec. 4, withdrew the complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission because Santos "did not want this to become a racial thing, and that's what it would boil down to.

"Plus, Santos feels the people of Bexar County have been good to him, and that the people should not have to pick up the tab" of a lawsuit, Sandoval added.

Sandoval said another factor in Santos' decisionwas the adverse public reaction last week to news that the federal complaint had been filed and that Santos planned to sue the county.

"He decided it wasn't worth the trouble. He made his point," the attorney said.

Santos, now a deputy medical examiner at McAllen, could not be reached for comment.

His firing last year culminated a year-long dispute with District Attorney Bill White over a controversial natural death ruling in the case of high school sophomore Billy Barnett and alleged poor management of the medical examiner's office.

Santos ruled that Barnett, 15, died of a congenital aneurysm, but White obtained indictments against several youths who allegedly beat and kicked the teen-ager.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

First signs of mental problems are usually disruption in sleep pattern

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

Often the first indications that a person is experiencing a mental health problem are a disruption in the person's sleep pattern and a general feeling of uneasiness, which many call nervousness or anxiety. These symptoms may be present in a wide variety of mental health problems, ranging from marital distress to major psychiatric illnesses.

Many times the person is not aware that these symptoms are due to mental distress, and such a person may turn to his family doctor for "something to take" to quiet these disturbances.

Doctors, as well as the general public, are becoming increasingly aware of the dangers associated with the long-term use of medications designed to lessen day-time anxiety or to promote sleep. Since the target symptoms may be a sign of any number of physical or mental problems, doctors are very careful about simply prescribing something for the symptom.

Studies also are indicating that the drugs which are used to treat these two common complaints often produce a psychological or even physical dependency, and they also show evidence of decreasing effectiveness over a period of time. These drugs all depress the functioning of the person's central nervous system, thereby quieting the sense of anxiety or making sleep somewhat easier. These drugs are commonly abused because of their relatively quick action. When combined with other central nervous system depressants such as alcohol, the effects of these drugs may be greatly multiplied.

Sleep medications, which are called sedative-hypnotics, have been shown to produce sleep which is physiologically quite different from natural sleep. One of the principal differences in the quality of sleep is the fact that sleep medications generally interfere with that stage of sleep known as REM-sleep. REM sleep means rapid eye movement sleep and is that stage of sleep which occurs three to four times each night. During this stage, there are definite changes in the person's brain wave patterns and the rapid movement of the eyes can be observed through the closed eyelids. Dreaming also occurs during this stage of sleep.

Most sedative-hypnotic drugs suppress or greatly interfere with this stage of sleep, leaving the person feeling less rested after a night's sleep. When such drugs are discontinued, there often may be a rebound effect in which the person experiences a resumption of his sleeping difficulties, but more severely, or the person will experience frequent and intense dreams or even nightmares.

Sleep difficulties or anxiety rarely exist by themselves. Since they are usually symptomatic of other problems, the careful mental health professional or doctor is attempting to be as accurate as possible in the diagnosis and assessment of the person's problem.

When underlying problems are identified and dealt with, the need for a specific drug for the management of anxiety or sleep disorders often disappears. Such dealing with one's problems increases the person's ability to deal with similar problems in the future. This increased ability to cope with the problems of life does not take place when the person merely takes a drug to lessen his symptoms.

Unemployment rises in Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Film and TV officials are forecasting a "catastrophic" labor shutdown for the second summer in a row as writers continue a walkout and a directors' strike looms.

Studio craftsmen — from painters and plasterers to caterers — have been laid off by the thousands, pushing unemployment in behind-the-scenes film and TV unions to 50 percent, officials said Tuesday.

Many of the unemployed still have not recovered from the 10-week actors and 24-week musicians strikes last year.

The strike by the Writers Guild of America has been going on since April 11. Directors are threatening to walk off the job when their contract expires July 1.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, June 18

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: World-famous rock star Paul McCartney was born on this date, as were actors E. G. Marshall and the late Richard Boone. For you, today is the start of a hectic but very rewarding year. Be careful not to rush into projects without first examining all that they involve. The outlook for both career and finance is vastly improved. Romance adds spice and variety to your daily routine although marital differences could upset some social plans. Let your love of peace win out over a tendency to be argumentative. Although honesty is a virtue, too much frankness can alienate those closest to your heart.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Enjoy mental pursuits today. Get in touch with those who share your long-term goals. You may consider a new partnership. Keep spending within reasonable limits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A financial situation improves following a change of attitude on the part of an obstinate associate. Count your blessings! Romance treats you well; your love is returned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Work commitments keep you on the go today. Reorganize your schedule to accommodate someone else and you will make a friend and win new respect. A romantic encounter should be postponed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): To avoid embarrassment, tend to routine tasks early in the day. Do not allow yourself to become upset by an associate's rudeness — it has nothing to do with you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Save some time for yourself today! Friend's advice may not be accurate. Seek a second opinion, preferably from an expert. Wear cheerful colors to express your high spirits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your good humor is infectious now. Try to get out and mingle more! Financial affairs improve due to a stroke of luck. Speak plainly when talking with your business partner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Move ahead with confidence where business, financial discussions are concerned. An influential person who has proved elusive in the past may suddenly be available.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lively discussion with friend or neighbor could produce some very worthwhile ideas. Plan to market them with special care. Relax at home this evening with a good book.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accept any career challenges that come your way today. Your chances of achieving success are greater than ever now. Tend to your regular work before taking on new responsibilities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A wonderful day for love and courtship! An exciting romantic encounter may be part of the picture. Be sure you know your own mind. Nothing will stop you from attaining short-term goals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): This should be a very positive period for you. Make the most of it! Ask your friends for help. You may be accident-prone today. Be extra careful around electrical appliances.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Financial consideration should come first now, especially in any plans you make. Be prepared to answer questions from your romantic partner. You may have overlooked something.

North was not overjoyed at the prospect of playing a no trump contract, so he made the mistake of rebidding his diamonds. This led South to believe that his partner had a six-card suit and better hand. Since South had the top diamonds, North had to have strength in the major suits, so South's decision to go to game cannot be faulted.

West led his top club, and East did not like his chances of defeating the contract. The opening lead marked declarer with at least four clubs headed by the king-queen-ten, and neither spades nor diamonds were likely to be a source of tricks for the defense. That left hearts as the only suit where the defenders were likely to earn some grist.

East knew that he could not expect to find more than 3-4 points in his partner's hand. If West held specifically the ace of hearts, there was some slight hope for the defense. All that remained was for East to find the best method to tackle the suit.

If South held three hearts to the queen and West a doubleton ace, the contract was unbeatable. There was only one real chance — that declarer held specifically a doubleton queen.

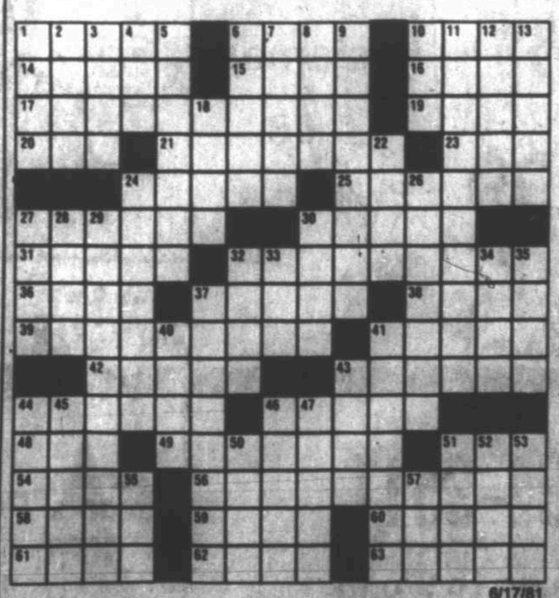

Once that was established, the defense became simple. East shifted to the king of hearts. West did his share by following with the eight to unblock the suit. The deuce of hearts to the ace felled the queen and, when West led a third round of the suit, East held the jack-seven over dummy's ten-six. Thus, the defenders raked in four heart tricks and the ace of clubs to defeat the contract, and East modestly acknowledged the kudos for his excellently reasoned play.

Beaming apparantly in anticipation of victory, President Ferdinand E. Marcos casts his ballot in his northern Phillipine hometown of Batac in Tuesday's first presidential election in 12 years. To his left is his daughter Emee.

Marcos claiming victory

By RUBEN G. ALABASTRO
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos, claiming recharged confidence from his election victory, vowed today to crack down on grafters and communist rebels.

His major opponents accused Marcos' party of intimidating the voters and vowed to continue their efforts to end his rule.

"It is with the deepest sense of gratitude and, understandably, some renewed pride and confidence that particularly today I speak for the Filipino people whose sovereign voice was made manifest in yesterday's election," Marcos told visiting foreign ministers of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations. He made the remarks in the opening he ASEAN nnual ministerial meeting.

The 63-year-old Marcos, who has ruled since 1966, claimed victory in Tuesday's election as unofficial returns gave him 86 percent of the vote for another six years in power. Under law, citizens had to vote or face jail. Opponents, who boycotted the election, charged massive fraud.

Marcos admitted the boycott was his main obstacle, describing boycott leaders as "mischievous individuals."

"All those borrowed ideas that they tried to foist upon the people resulting in this strange phenomenon of boycottism do not fit into our culture," the president said.

Earlier, Marcos offered reconciliation to his opponents, saying he preferred to deal with them with "a soft hand."

Apparently referring to U.S.-based Filipino opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino and others, Marcos called on his foes to come home and join him in a national "reunification and conciliation."

He faced 12 little-known opponents. With half the votes in, Marcos had 11.3 million votes. Former Defense Secretary Alejo Santos garnered 1.1 million, while Assemblyman Bartolome Cabangbang, who pledged to make the Philippines the 51st U.S. state, had about 450,000.

It was the first time Marcos had claimed a mandate by election since 1969 when he was re-elected to a four-year term. A year before his term expired, he proclaimed martial law. He ended martial law last January, but retained power to legislate by decree in emergencies or when he believes the National Assembly does not act fast enough in important matters.

Marcos told reporters his victory was a mandate to intensify the drive against government grafters and the New People's Army, a communist group. Marcos has long promised to weed out corrupt officials.

Reagan understands Israeli raid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, softening his condemnation of Israel's raid on an Iraqi nuclear plant, says the Jewish state might have sincerely and justifiably believed that it was acting in self-defense.

"I do think that one has to recognize Israel had reason for concern in view of the past history of Iraq, which has never signed a ceasefire or recognized Israel as a nation," Reagan said Tuesday at his first news conference in 3½ months.

The day after the June 7 bombing on the nuclear plant outside Baghdad, the United States condemned the Israeli raid, which utilized American-made warplanes, as a "possible violation" of an agreement barring use of the aircraft for offensive purposes. Reagan then suspended delivery of four more F-16 jets to Israel.

Nevertheless, Reagan reserved judgment Tuesday on the nature of the raid, saying he is awaiting the completion of a congressional review on the incident.

"But what I would have to say is I think, in looking at the circumstances that I outlined earlier, that we can recognize that very possibly in conducting that mission Israel might have sincerely believed it was a defensive move," he said.

The president said he hasn't "given very much thought" to the fact that Israel has refused to sign a nuclear non-proliferation treaty and said it would be difficult to view Israel as a threat to its neighbors.

However, the raid "is further evidence that a real peace, a settlement to all of the Mideast problems, is long overdue," Reagan said, adding that he told representatives of several Arab counties it is a "compelling reason why we should once and for all settle this matter and have a stable peace."

Reagan said he does not believe the raid has ruined the Mideast peace mission of special U.S. envoy Philip Habib, who has been conducting shuttle diplomacy in an attempt to ease the Syrian missile crisis in Lebanon.

"I think that he's done a miraculous job so far when you think that when we sent him there they literally had the weapons cocked ready for war," Reagan said. "Until he comes home and says, 'I give up,' why, I'm going to believe that we can do it."

Defending his foreign policy in general, Reagan said that in his 5½ months in office he already has met with eight heads of state and representatives of nine other nations and has sent Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. on two trips abroad.

"I don't necessarily believe that you must, to have a foreign policy, stand up and make a wide declaration that this is your foreign policy," he said.

The president said the workers' movement in Poland and resistance among young people in the Soviet Union to government controls were "an indication that communism is an aberration."

"It's not a normal way of living for human beings," he said, "and I think we are seeing the first beginning cracks, the beginning of the end."

Lifting restrictins agains arms sales to China was "a normal part of the process" of improving relations with Peking, Reagan said. He refused to say if Pakistan, in accepting a $3 billion U.S. aid package, had given assurances it would not seek to build an atomic weapon.

The news conference was the first by the president since the attempt on his life March 30. "I feel fine," he said. "The doctors say I've recovered. Ifi'm a medical miracle, I'm a happy one."

World's largest sub begins sea trials

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — The largest submarine ever built began sea trials today with a motley flotilla of private and official boats tagging along, anti-nuclear arms protesters jeering from shore and a Soviet spy ship waiting nearby.

The 560-foot-long Trident submarine Ohio, built at a cost of about $1.2 billion and two years behind schedule, departed shortly before 5 a.m. for three days of tests.

More than 50 protesters, backed by the American Friends Service Committee, stood on Eastern Point Beach at the mouth of the Thames River, waving signs and jeering as the Ohio passed slowly by.

The protesters were demonstrating against the submarine's potential to carry nuclear missiles.

The Ohio ambled toward the open sea with a police escort, three company ships and a flock of small private boats.

At General Dynamics Corp.'s Electric Boat Division shipyard where the Ohio was built, two men were arrested and charged with criminal trespassing, police said.

John Bach, 34, and Timothy Quinn, 27, both of Hartford, Conn., swam from the Thames River onto EB property, unsuccessfully trying to affix a peace sign to the side of the vessel as it passed, said Groton police Sgt. Richard Horan. The men were to be held pending processing, police said.

Brilab trial in recess until Thursday

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Defense lawyers had all day today to figure out how to deal with the curve thrown them by prosecutors in the Brilab federal bribery trial.

The trial was in recess until Thursday.

After waiting anxiously to get at Joseph Hauser, a twice-convicted swindler from Los Angeles who turned to undercover work for the FBI, defense lawyers found themselves hobbled by his sketchy testimony on Tuesday.

Cross-examination normally can go only into areas brought up during the direct examination of a prosecution witness. The examination of Hauser covered only a few specific incidents — and did not open him up to questions about areas the defense wanted to get into.

These included monologues Hauser apparently faked in an attempt to create damaging evidence against Brilab defendants.

Nearly the entire case was presented in testimony from FBI agent Michael Wacks.

When Hauser was brought on, they hit the high spots and that was it.

Eades Hogue, head of the New Orleans office of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Strike Force, replayed snatches of several 1979 conversations secretly recorded by the FBI.

Once again, the jury heard the offguard conversations of the defendants, who include reputed Mafia godfather Carlos Marcello, 71, of New Orleans, and Charles Roemer, 58, Baton Rouge, state commissioner of administration at the time..

Other defendants are I. Irving Davidson, 59, Washington; New Orleans lawyer Vincent Marinello, 43; and Aubrey Young, 58, Baton Rouge.

They were all charged with conspiracy, racketeering, interstate travel to bribe, and wire and mail fraud.

The indictment resulted from a covert operation code-named Brilab. In it, Hauser and two FBI agents, posing as crooked insurance salesmen, offered bribery "opportunities" to politicians or labor leaders in big insurance deals.

Hogue replayed snatches of allegedly incriminating conversations on each defendant except Young, a former aide to Lt. Gov. Bobby Freeman who also was Marcello's contact man in state government.

The defense has been waiting for nearly 12 weeks to get a crack at Hauser. They hope to make him the villain for the jury — a man who sold out his friends to save his own neck.

"He even looks like a devil, don't he," Young said, during a recess, as Hauser remained seated in the witness chair. Two U.S. marshals, assigned as bodyguards, hovered nearby.

Hauser reduced his weight to trim size during the past few months of his 18 months in prison, which ended last June 5. The feds won't say where he spent the time but the sun tanned his high cheek bones and jutting brow to the color of an old saddle.

A black toupee, the subject of some merriment during earlier testimony, contrasts with streaks of silver along Hauser's temples. He came to this country from Poland as a boy and his bass voice carries an odd accent.

Hauser turned undercover operative in a plea bargain deal with the government that reduced the amount of prison time he faced in two federal court convictions in bribery cases.

In addition to this Brilab trial, Hauser also figures as a prime prosecution witness in a separate Brilab trial to be held in Houston.

Daughter sues parents over kidnap incident

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Debra Parsons, a former high school cheerleader with long strawberry-blonde hair, was working part time in a sandwich shop here when she was allegedly abducted.

One of the purported abductors was her father.

Now the 26-year-old mother of two young boys, Debra Parsons Rausch is suing her parents and others for $1 million over the 1977 incident which her father says was a gesture of love.

As his daughter, the plaintiff, sat across the courtroom Tuesday, Richard Parsons, the defendant, described how the family had decided to whisk the young woman away four years ago because they feared she "would become a robot" without religious deprogramming.

"They had no free thinking of their own," Parsons, a Hellertown, Pa., manufacturing engineer, said of followers of The Way Ministry, a fundamentalist religious group based in New Knoxville, Ohio.

"They were like robots. They were told what to do and when to do it and to do it without question," he testified in U.S. District Court.

Parsons, questioned by American Civil Liberties Union attorney Carol Mayes, said the family was so worried they took out a second mortgage on their home and sought out deprogrammers.

They obtained a state court order declaring their daughter mentally incompetent, he testified.

They didn't notify Debra of the guardianship hearing because the family feared she "would be moved to some obscure location" if the sect got word of their intent, Parsons said.

Accompanied by a deputy sheriff and two police officers, they went to the sandwich shop where Debra worked part time, he said.

Although his daughter offered no resistance, Parsons said the officers had to prevent several young men in the shop from barring their way.

As the family drove off with the young woman, "we heard a loud crash," Parsons said. "Later, we found out there had been a scuffle and a police officer and one young man — we were told (he) was a follower of The Way — had gone through a plate glass window."

Dressed in a dark suit, white shirt and conservative tie, Parsons glanced frequently at his wife, Betty, seated with their son and son-in-law in the front row, as he described how the family drove their daughter to a cabin in Peterboro, N.H., for several days of "deprogramming." A few weeks after she had been moved to a "rehabilitation home" in Bradford, N.H., he said, they took her out for dinner for her 22nd birthday.

The young woman with waist-long hair sat quietly with her husband, Larry Rausch, on the opposite side of the courtroom as her father told how she had spent eight weeks in homes in New Hampshire and Minneapolis before being pronounced "cured."

Her mother had wept quietly upon seeing her daughter, now living in Lafayette, Colo., in the courtroom Monday. But she only showed signs of strain Tuesday when her husband described Debra's return home to the small town 60 miles outside Philadelphia after the deprogramming.

"There comes a time when you have to show some trust," Parsons said recalling how, despite parental misgivings, he and his wife had let Debra borrow the family car to meet her fiance, a follower of The Way with whom she had been living here. It was about a week and a half after her return home.

"The next time we heard from her was when she called, she wouldn't say from where, to tell us she wasn't coming back," Parsons said.

Parents face eviction from mobil home park

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The parents of a 6-month-old girl face eviction hearings next week because a court has upheld an "adults only" policy at their mobile home park.

Steven and Barbara Zipp lost their fight Tuesday to prevent the owner of the park from filing an eviction action against them.

Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Robert Weil noted that there is a specific state law giving mobile home parks the right to restrict residents to adults.

"I am not, repeat not ... getting into the constitutional arguments," Weil said, adding that the couple would have an opportunity to raise their objections at a regular eviction hearing in Municipal Court.

"We're not just trying to stop their eviction. We're trying to get rid of these laws that allow discrimination against children," said the Zipps' attorney, Gloria Allred.

She claimed that the case is the first such test of the legality of an adults-only policy in a mobile home park.

Policies banning children in apartment buildings already have been ruled legal by the state Court of Appeals in a decision to be argued before the California Supreme Court this fall.

In the appellate court ruling, Associate Justice James Hastings said that of all society's laws, "none is more basic than an infant's unfettered right to cry when it is hungry, but in a court of law that right stands on an equal footing with a landlord's right to the quiet of his property."

Walter Talley, the attorney for the owners of Pt. Dume Mobile Home park and the management company, said eviction proceedings against the Zipps would begin sometime next week unless the couple decides to leave.

Talley said that after the Zipps' baby, Shifra, was born in December, 150 residents of the park signed a petition asking that the ban on children be enforced.

John Phillips of the J.R. Phillips management company said, "We've tried to cooperate with Mr. Zipp all along. He'll probably make $25,000 to $30,000 on his home when he tries to sell it. We still want to cooperate so there's no hardship to anybody."

Zipp admitted after the court session that when he bought the property and mobile home in 1978, while he was still single, he signed a paper agreeing to the adults-only policy. He said the document was presented to him after escrow proceedings had already begun and that the deal would have fallen through if he had not signed the agreement.

His wife, Barbara, admitted that she had signed a lease when she married and moved into the mobile home park with Zipp in July 1979. Weil said the adults-only policy was stated in the lease she signed.

Asked about the rights of the other park residents to have the policy against children upheld, Ms. Allred said, "If the issue was race discrimination, there wouldn't be any question about whether the other people that live there like them or not. They shouldn't make the assumption that all children are going to be noisy."

Men charged in slayings

HUGO, Okla. (AP) — Three Hugo-area men face arraignment on first-degree murder charges filed in connection with a rash of slayings in which three elderly men were beaten during apparent burglary attempts, investigators say.

A charge also was filed in connection with the death of a 35-year-old man, a Choctaw County sheriff's office spokesman said.

"We've had a rash of it, and it's all been on older people," said Sheriff Bill Hall.

The string of violent deaths began about a year ago, and most of the victims were "just pensioners with not much money," he said.

Named in the charges were David Paul Campbell, 26; Roger Dale Morris, 28, and Bobby Ray Horne, 27. Bond has not been set for the men, and formal arraignments will be in August, investigators said.

Campbell and Morris are accused conjointly in the Dec. 8, 1980, fatal beating of Tomie Rolen, 80, and the fatal stabbing on Friday of Monti Dink Karr, 84. Both victims lived in Hugo. Rolen died in a hospital Dec. 9 of injuries he suffered during a beating some two days earlier, authorities said.

Man finds stolen baby in stolen car

HOUSTON (AP) — An insurance agent who suspected a car parked in his company's lot did not belong to an employee found a stolen baby as well as a stolen car Tuesday.

Eight-month-old Bonnie Decker was wedged between the driver's seat and the door of her mother's closed car when Irven Atkinson discovered the abandoned car about 10:30 a.m.

"It's good we found her when we did," Atkinson said. "She might have died because of the heat."

Atkinson and other employees of the National Life and Accident Insurance Company bathed the child in cold water and fed her a crushed popsicle to cool her off.

Mary Decker said her car was stolen about 11 p.m. Monday night when she left it running as she went to look for a friend inside a bar. She spent the rest of the night helping police look for her daughter, who was lying on the front seat.

Memo shows supervisor allowed disapproved pour

HOUSTON (AP) — A memo introduced at a hearing on the South Texas Nuclear Project shows that an inspector refused to approve a concrete pour that was eventually cited in a report that led to a $100,000 fine.

Intervenors opposing the $2.7 billion project produced the memo, written by lead inspector R.C. Forte, during testimony Tuesday before a Nuclear Regulatory Commission board which will decide whether to grant an operating license to Houston Lighting & Power.

Forte wrote in the April 1979 memo that he refused to approve the pour because he found sand, mill scale and rust, paper, cigarette butts, candy wrappers, scrap wire and other debris on the pour surface.

But, he said, the pour was made after quality control supervisor Charles Singleton gave his consent after a cursory check.

The NRC cited that pour in a report that led to the fine and an order that Houston Lighting & Power show cause why construction should continue at the plant.

In other action Tuesday, the NRC board questioned Brown & Root executive Dr. Knox M. Broom Jr. about the high turnover rate of project managers and site managers in the past four and one-half years.

Board member Ernest E. Hill said that in that period, there have been six project managers and seven site managers.

Broom responded that some managers were removed because of cost overruns and construction lags, and others apparently left for other jobs.

Refinery fire won't curtail production

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — A spectacular fire at the Pride Refining Co. that ripped the roof from a storage tank and burned for 2½ hours won't significantly affect production at the facility, a company spokesman says.

"It has not affected our production to any great extent except when concerning the use of that storage tank," vice president Tommy Broyles said Tuesday.

The blaze, which broke out late Monday after lightning hit a 70,000-barrel tank that held fuel oil, was visible from two miles away. About 90 firefighters finally brought the fire under control.

No injuries were reported and a damage estimate was not available.

Two years ago, a fire ripped through the refinery, injuring 14 workers and halting production for 4½ months.

Plasmatics lead singer Wendy O. Williams smashes a television set belonging to the Valentine family of Pasadena, Calif. The destruction was first prize in a contest sponsored by a local radio station.

Punk rock singer delivers death blow to television

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Wendy O. Williams, the outrageous lead singer of the Plasmatics, has delivered another blow against "pushbutton pleasure."

As 17-year-old Bill Valentine and his parents looked on Tuesday, the punk rocker, dressed in skin-tight leather pants and a white undershirt, destroyed one of the Valentines' televisions.

The Valentines and about two dozen neighbors and reporters cheered as Miss Williams transformed the wood-console TV set into a pile of broken glass, vacuum tubes and splinters.

The visit by Miss Williams and the trashing of the television set was Bill Valentine's first prize in a contest sponsored by local radio station KROQ and Miss Williams' record label. The elder Valentines were happy because the radio station had also thrown in a brand new TV for the winner.

"It's a good day for smashing a TV," Miss Williams said, displaying the heavy sledgehammer in 100 degree-plus heat.

Afterwards, she brandished the big hammer high above her head and declared: "I love to smash TVs. We see the establishment as being totally into pushbutton pleasure. So much for pushbutton pleasure."

CHICAGO (AP) — Pssst! Rona Barrett and Tom Snyder are on the rocks again.

Rona Barrett

The Hollywood insider is quitting NBC's late-night "Tomorrow Coast-to-Coast" program immediately because she doesn't "want to be on any show with Tom Snyder anymore," according to the Chicago Sun-Times.

In a story from Hollywood, the newspaper quoted Miss Barrett saying she might also resign from NBC's "Today" show if the network does not live up to its contract with her.

Of her co-host Snyder, Miss Barrett said: "We are philosophically miles apart. I wish him all the luck in the world, but I won't play second fiddle to him or anybody else any longer."

Earlier this year, the two wrangled over Miss Barrett's complaint that she was not getting enough airtime. That dispute was patched up by attorneys for both sides.

The newspaper said an NBC spokesman in Los Angeles could not confirm or deny the story, but acknowledged that Miss Barrett's lawyer, Jordan Ringel, was to meet in New York with network executives.

HONOLULU (AP) — Increasing America's foreign trade is the most important international issue of the day, according to Maureen Reagan.

Maureen Reagan

President Reagan's eldest daughter, who returned Tuesday from a trip to Asia as head of Sell Overseas America, said at a news conference that "the U.S. must either limit imports, which would be catastrophic, or increase exports."

Miss Reagan said she found a strong demand for U.S. products during her trip to Japan, South Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong on behalf of SOA, which she founded last year.

"We want to tell American companies they don't have to depend on foreign buyers to come to the United States," she said.

Sell Overseas America is a private organization with more than 2,000 corporate members that encourages U.S. companies to trade in international markets, Miss Reagan said.

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The orchestra's rehearsal was "cloaked in secrecy," because the maestro, avant garde rock satirist Frank Zappa, needed privacy for his special project.

Frank Zappa

"He was here, practically speaking, to see how long it would take to rehearse the music before he could present it on a stage," Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra spokeswoman Vicki Vigorito said Tuesday.

Zappa, known for his theatrics and relentless innovation, provided his own conductor, Joel Thome, to lead the 120-member orchestra in a secret rehearsal of several original scores on Monday. They reportedly included pieces from a 1969 film, "2000 Motels," and several unreleased compositions.

The experiment cost several thousand dollars and it took nine months to copy the scores for the orchestra. "Financially, I could have done something better, but musically it was something I had to find out," Zappa reportedly told an orchestra aide.

Protests will greet Prince Charles

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Royalty rubbernecks, Irish-American protesters and $300,000 worth of security were on hand to greet Prince Charles as Britain's No. 1 son flew to New York today for a 24-hour visit.

Charles was to spend his day in America on a yacht cruise with first lady Nancy Reagan and as guest of honor at a gala 50th anniversary performance of the Royal Ballet.

Charles' fiancee, Lady Diana Spencer, and Mrs. Reagan's husband, the president, were staying at home.

A level of security usually reserved for heads of state was to be in force, and even reporters were to be limited in number and kept at a distance. No interviews were to be allowed.

At least one major Irish-American demonstration was planned — at a park across the street from Lincoln Center.

Organizers said relatives of several Northern Ireland hunger-strike victims would be among thousands on hand.

While calling for moderation and restraint, New York Lt. Gov. Mario Cuomo said Tuesday that the prince's visit should not be viewed with "unalloyed pleasure."

Cuomo said Prince Charles "is a symbol of Britain's policy of maintaining and enforcing by military might an oppressive system in the northern part of Ireland."

"We should serve notice on Prince Charles and Her Majesty's government that the people of this country will not be silent before a centuries-old policy denying basic civil rights to the inhabitants of a nation conquered and colonized many years ago," Cuomo said.

His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, was in for a busy day, arriving at Kennedy International Airport shortly after 10 a.m. EDT and immediately hopping on a helicopter for a flight to the Wall Street Heliport, where official greeting ceremonies were to be held.

The chopper ride brought a worried New Yorker to Queens Superior Court on Tuesday. Michael Skeehan argued that if the crown prince's horsemanship is any guide, Charles should be kept away from the helicopter controls because he might create a hazard.

Justice Sidney Leviss denied the request for a temporary restraining order, saying he had no jurisdiction over whether Charles takes to the skies.

However, the airline's lawyer assured that the prince will "neither pilot nor co-pilot" the British Airways whirlybird.

The 32-year-old prince then was to be driven to the South Street Seaport Museum, where he and Mrs. Reagan were expected to join 60 other guests for a 90-minute cruise around Manhattan aboard publisher Malcolm Forbes' 126-foot yacht "Highlander."

Chef Richard Caward was to serve a sumptuous meal while First Steward Jordan Forbes, no relation but an accomplished bagpiper, was to treat guests to tunes such as "I Love New York" and the Welsh national anthem.

After resting at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, the prince was to attend a reception at Avery Fisher Hall, then view the Royal Ballet's performance of "The Sleeping Beauty" from the state box at the Metropolitan Opera House. A grand ball was to follow at nearby Damrosch Park.

Proceeds from the fundraiser boat ride were to go to the ballet. Tickets, at an undisclosed price, were by invitation only. Plans called for the yacht to float up the East River, then back down and around the Battery, up the Hudson River south of the George Washington Bridge and pass by the Statue of Liberty before heading back to the museum.

Defense special ranks high for CBS

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS broke new ground with its five-part series, "The Defense of the United States," and the premiere installment won the network an extraordinarily high rating for a news documentary, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. showed.

The rating for Part I in the series, which started Sunday night and continues through Thursday, was 16.2, compared with a rating of 19.8 for "M-A-S-H," the No. 1 show in the week ending June 14.

Nielsen says the rating means that of all the nation's homes with TV, 16.2 percent saw at least part of the "CBS Reports" production Sunday night.

The rating was good for a tie for 20th place and contributed to CBS' fourth consecutive first-place finish in the weekly competition. CBS had the three top-rated shows and five of the first 10.

Only two programs — ABC's broadcast of the heavyweight championship fight between Larry Holmes and Leon Spinks, in sixth place, and ABC's "20-20," tied for eighth — were original programs among the Top 10. The rest were repeats.

CBS' rating for the week was 14.4 to 13.7 for ABC and 12.7 for NBC. The networks say the rating means that in an average prime-time minute during the week, 14.4 percent of the nation's homes with TVs were tuned to CBS.

Two first-run movies, both made for TV, were moderately successful in the week's ratings. "Shadow of the Hawk" on ABC was No. 35, while an NBC film, "Adventures of Nelly Bly," finished 39th.

NBC, which fell to third place after a week as runnerup, had three of the week's five lowest-rated programs, including "Walking Tall" 62nd, "Sanford" 63rd and "Lobo" 64th. CBS' "White Shadow" was No. 65, and the third chapter in a repeat of "Roots: The Next Generations" on ABC, was 66th.

Here are the week's 10 highest-rated programs:

"M-A-S-H," with a rating of 19.8 representing 15.8 million homes, and "The Jeffersons," 19.3 or 15.4 million, both CBS; "60 Minutes," CBS, and "Facts of Life," NBC, both 19.2 or 15.3 million; "Three's Company," 18.9 or 15.1 million, and WBC Heavyweight Championship, 18.6 or 14.9 million, both ABC; "Diff'rent Strokes," 18.3 or 14.6 million, NBC; "Alice," CBS, and "20-20," ABC, both 18.1 or 14.5 million, and "House Calls," CBS, 17.9 or 14.3 million, CBS.

Dancers advance

MOSCOW (AP) — Five out of seven U.S. dancers qualified for the second round of the Moscow International Ballet Competition, the Soviet organizers said today.

"With one exception, we're pleased with the results. It reflects the way everyone is dancing," said U.S. team chief Randolph Swartz of Philadelphia.

On the basis of their opening performances at the Bolshoi Theater, 59 dancers from 18 nations were chosen by the international jury to compete in the second of three rounds starting Thursday.

The starting field was composed of 103 competitors from 23 countries, and the host Soviets led the way by qualifying all 16 entrants for the second round.

Begin widens lead in new poll

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Likud Bloc, riding a wave of popularity following the bombing of the Iraqi nuclear reactor, has widened its lead over the opposition by four points, according to an opinion poll published today.

The sounding by Hanoch Smith, one of Israel's leading pollsters, showed Likud leading the opposition Labor Party by 38 percent to 33 percent — up from a thin 34-33 edge a month ago.

Most of the 1,200 participants were polled after the June 7 raid that destroyed the reactor and — by Begin's account — eliminated the threat of Iraqi nuclear bombs falling on the Jewish state.

Smith reported that Likud was enjoying the same level of support as it had in May 1977 when Begin ousted the Labor Party in a general election and took office.

Elwood, Ind. Fire Chief Jack Leisure reacts after being told that he must cut five men from his 17-man fire department due to a city financial crisis. Elwood Mayor Webb Morris also cut five men from the 16-man police department.

Union, industry reach agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Striking mine construction workers are withdrawing pickets after gaining a tentative contract that would allow full-scale coal production in the East and Midwest for the first time in almost three months.

Three hours after negotiators returned to the bargaining table here Tuesday, they announced settlement on a 40-month contract likely to end the 83-day strike by 11,500 construction workers, whose picket lines delayed the return to work by as many as 60,000 miners in seven states.

Willard Esselstyn, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, said the pickets would be withdrawn, meaning that some 160,000 miners who approved a 40-month contract of their own on June 6 will be free to dig the coal. He said he didn't expect any problem in winning approval of the contract in the coalfields.

Firefighters want raise

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Firefighters here, negotiating with city officials, say they want at least a 12.5 percent pay raise and a four-hour reduction in their work week.

"We want nothing less than the cost of living last year, somewhere between 12.5 and 13 percent," said Buddy Mass, president of the local International Association of Firefighters union. "That will be our bottom line."

Currently a rookie firefighter earns $1,131 a month, while a veteran entering his sixth year makes $1,461.

Mass said that Austin now has passed San Antonio in firefighter pay.

"We are doing a study," he said. "We think San Antonio now ranks fifth or sixth, maybe even seventh, among Texas cities." The city ranks third in population.

Mass said all city employees should be given a pay boost equal to the annual cost-of-living increase in negotiations with city officials that opened Monday.

George Noe, city labor relations coordinator, would not comment on the firemen's pay demands because he said it had not mentioned during formal negotiations.

The union was pushing for a reduction in work week from 56 to 52 hours.

Houston police find recruits

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Houston's police department, which is looking for a few thousand good men and women, may have found most of them in its first foray to upstate New York.

The Gulf Coast metropolis, which packs one of the loudest booms of the Sun Belt population explosion, hopes to double its 3,100-officer police force within a decade

In the past nine months recruiting efforts moved north, finally reaching New York this week with results that stunned even optimistic recruitment officer Lt. William Elliott.

He said there were 2,000 calls on Monday alone — an average of one, on each of 14 lines, every five minutes for 11 hours — and the calls continued into the week.

"It's overwhelming, really," said Elliott. "It's as good or better than anything we've ever done. I've got some recruiters with cauliflower ear on both sides."

Houston offers a starting salary of $19,000 a year and the prospect of steady jobs.

That lure, to readers of the papers in Albany, Rochester, Syracuse and Newark, N.J., was irresistible. Rookie police in Albany get $15,000 and new New York state troopers a mere $12,715.

Houston has been recruiting out-of-state police trainees for years. The city is adding 1,000 residents a week and desperately needs officers to protect them. Once confined to an eight-state area of the south, the recruiting effort since last fall has centered on the Ohio Valley and, now, the Northeast.

"I started a (police academy) class yesterday and in that class we had 75 cadets," Elliott said by telephone from Houston Tuesday. "Fifty-two were from outside of Texas. Sixteen were from Michigan and 11 were from New York State."
