Bush says he'll explore Iran's offer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush vowed Friday to explore "to the fullest" an overture by Iran's new leader to help resolve the hostage crisis, while decrying the "brutal process" the hostages and their families are undergoing.

"I don't want to raise hopes beyond fulfillment, but there's reason to be somewhat encouraged," Bush said when asked about comments by Iranian president Hashemi Rafsanjani.

Rafsanjani said there were "prudent solutions" to the hostage situation and offered to help find them. While Bush voiced guarded optimism, his chief spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said, "We are always skeptical of what we hear" from Iran.

Fitzwater said that while no efforts had been made by the president or other top U.S. officials to deal with Iranian officials directly, information was being exchanged with that country's leaders on the situation through third-country intermediaries.

Meanwhile, the president and his aides sought to play down talk of a possible military strike against targets in Lebanon if another U.S. hostage were killed.

"If I had made such a decision, I expect this would be the last place I'd be talking about it," Bush said, speaking with reporters during a picture-taking session in the Oval Office.

Fitzwater, meanwhile, denied that Bush had selected specific targets in Lebanon for an air strike if kidnappers had carried out a threat to kill American hostage Joseph Cicippio.

"I will say he did not make final decisions," Fitzwater said, referring to a story in Friday's New York Times that Bush was prepared to order the Sixth Fleet to launch air strikes against suspected terrorist strongholds, including a base in eastern Lebanon.

"It does not help the United States government or the United States to be discussing military tactics...to be flexing our muscles in public," Fitzwater said. "We do not believe it's in the best interests of releasing the hostages."

A day after Cicippio's captors said they had spared him, at least for the present, Bush said he was "certainly pleased that that brutal murder that had been threatened had been set aside."

On Rafsanjani's offer to help, Bush said: "When you see a statement that offers hope for the return of our hostages, I want to explore it to the fullest." Iran is thought to have strong influence over Shiite Moslem militants holding Americans captive.

Bush continued: "I'm encouraged. But I don't want to get the hopes of the hostages' loved ones up once again, to have those hopes dashed. This is a brutal process, where you see people paraded before cameras and their families get their hopes up."

Bush called the head of the Geneva-based International Red Cross, Cornelio Sommaruga, to voice support for that humanitarian agency's efforts.

Clements, Hance will participate in energy hearing

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements and Kent Hance, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, said they will take part in a U.S. Department of Energy hearing Tuesday in Tulsa, Okla.

The hearing is part of an effort by the federal agency to develop a national energy strategy.

"It is imperative that a plan of action be implemented to address our country's energy needs and the national security implications involved," Clements said Friday.

"Specifically, we must work to stabilize domestic production and stem our over-dependence on imported oil," he said.

The governor will be on a panel that also includes Oklahoma Gov. Henry Bellmon.

Hance said he will testify, as part of another panel, in support of a national energy plan he has proposed.

"Texas has been especially hard hit due to the lack of a national energy policy," he said. "Our state still has an energy-based economy, and the price of oil and gas affects thousands of jobs as well as state revenues."

One study showed that a $5 average increase in the price of oil per barrel, sustained over 10 years, would have more of an impact on the Texas economy than 25 superconducting super colliders, Hance said. He was referring to a federal research project scheduled to be constructed near Dallas.

Such an oil price increase would mean 182,000 new jobs, he said.

At the hearing, Hance said he will talk about the need to promote natural gas and to continue working with nations in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to stabilize world oil prices.

Hance said he also will urge the creation of tax incentives to bolster the domestic oil and gas industry.

According to the DOE, oil imports exceeded U.S. production for the first half of 1989, said the governor's office. This type of imbalance has occurred only once before, during the first half of 1977, it said.

The Tulsa hearing is the second in a regional series being conducted by the DOE. The first was in Washington.

Ceremony formally opens Mexican consulate

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

West Texas' teeming population of Mexican nationals and the potential for financial prosperity helped land the state's newest consulate in Midland, authorities said Friday.

"We know the importance of being where the action is," Consul General Oliver Farres of Dallas said Friday at ceremonies marking the opening of Texas' 12th Mexican consulate.

The chief duty of the new Midland office is to protect the interests of the estimated 400,000 Mexican nationals who live in the 40 counties in West Texas and the South Plains, Consul Ecce lei Mendoza explained.

Two consulates in Presidio and Lubbock were closed due to budget constraints prior to the opening of the Midland office, Farres said.

Nationals or illegal aliens can receive help at the consulate in securing identification documents, legal aid or humanitarian assistance, Mendoza said.

Representatives from both sides of the border also expressed optimism Friday the new office will enhance future trade and tourism endeavors between the two countries.

"This office will be what you members of the community want to make of it," Consul General Enrique Buj Flores of El Paso told the crowd of about 20 on hand for the opening."The opportunity is there.

"Mexico has just changed the laws and regulations related to foreign investment. And also everything has changing to promote tourism," the El Paso consul explained.

Flores anticipates charter bus travel between Midland and Mexico and an exchange program that includes everything from tamales to oil field equipment.

Midland and Mexican officials also believe direct air travel between West Texas and her neighboring country to the south is a real possibility.

Mayor Carroll Thomas and Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Elvia Hernandez concurred that direct air travel is at the top of their wish list.

"We hope we will be doing more and more business and pleasure travel with Mexico. We would like to have an airline flight," Thomas said.

Mendoza said of negotiations to secure direct air connections: "We will be getting into that. We are going to try very hard."

Consul Farres said the specifics of joint economic diversification and potential business ventures haven't been hammered out, but Mexicans believe the area is ripe.

"There is a tremendous potential here...the government of Mexico is extremely pleased to have opened what we consider a very important consulate office in Midland," the Dallas consul said.

"Midland was chosen after a thorough search by the Secretary of Foreign Affairs which is the equivalent to your State Department.

"Midland is the seat of a region with a tremendous economic potential."

Mexico's Trade Commissioner for the southwestern United States will study possibilities for trade between West Texas and Mexico, Farres explained during a press conference after the ceremony.

"But the trade that exists currently between Mexico and the United States consists of over 700 products. You're not talking about just tomatoes and apples."

He cited the need for both Texas and Mexico to divest themselves of heavy dependence on energy concerns.

"Of course oil is the basis of your economy and also is the basis of our economy.

"That's why you know the feeling that Mexico has had the last few years. We've gone through the same problems. We have a similar sensation in the feelings of crisis and frustration."

Mendoza will work to educate locals about the specifics of doing business with Mexico, the Dallas consul.

Concern was expressed by one attendee at the Friday ceremony that the Midland office would be shut down as were those in Lubbock and Presidio.

Ex-owners of winery win suit

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A three-year legal battle involving the Ste. Genevieve winery near Fort Stockton appears headed for resolution after a federal court jury in Austin last week handed down a $3.7 million verdict against a California bank.

The jury ordered San Francisco-based Bank of America to pay the money to two former owners of the business, which makes wine under the Ste. Genevieve label from grapes produced on University of Texas-owned land.

With the verdict, which was referred to U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton, Richter S.A. and Investments U.S.A.-Richter Corp. were to receive $2.9 million, and the Gill Wine & Grape Co. of San Antonio is to receive $791,000.

The companies had asked for damages totaling $19.5 million in a suit that accused Bank of America of misrepresenting its intention to negotiate a settlement during the summer of 1986 while the winery was up for sale.

As a result, plaintiffs had pumped more money into the enterprise during the harvest and winemaking season only to have the bank subsequently take possession of assets.

After the foreclosure, the bank operated the winery in a joint operating agreement with the university. Then, in July 1987, Cordier Estates, a former Richter partner, bought Ste. Genevieve.

Attorneys on both sides expect Bunton to reduce damages owed the Richter group by $400,000 because of a jury error in addition.

Pickens will soon decide on candidacy

DALLAS (AP) — Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens said Thursday that he plans to announce by Aug. 15 whether he will run for governor.

But Pickens also said he is trying to straighten out business problems before seeking the Republican nomination for next year's election.

"I'll either appoint a campaign treasurer by the middle of this month, or I'll tell you I won't be a candidate," Pickens told members of the Dallas Times Herald editorial board.

Pickens, chairman of Mesa Limited Partners, and his wife are moving from Amarillo to University Park. The firm's financial division also is moving its office from Amarillo to downtown Dallas.

Midland man files billion-dollar suit against four federal agencies

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A flamboyant Midlander who says he made about $24 million during the oil boom and then lost his fortune because the government reneged on a "confidential letter of agreement" has filed a $1 billion lawsuit in federal court in Midland.

Jones

Bill R. Jones, a 56-year-old entrepreneur, said that the Department of Justice betrayed him by abandoning a 1981 agreement by allowing information about his cooperation with the Department of Justice to be "leaked."

That "leak and other rumors and information put out by the co-defendants" — the Internal Revenue Service, FBI, and Department of Energy (DOE) — contributed to his financial demise and led to threats on his life, Jones said.

"This eventually caused me to lose all that I had earned, which would otherwise have been preserved, and then on to my financial demise," Jones said Friday.

"Then I lost all abilities to do business, rendering an inability to earn a living for my family and myself."

Jones did not elaborate on his "cooperation" with government prosecutors.

But he did say in his complaint he had "suffered a purported hit" on his life and suffered "years of mental anguish."

Jones' cooperation became "widely known in the business community" and "precluded his ability to continue to function in any of his businesses...for the past eight years," the complaint alleges.

"I never did anything wrong," Jones said.

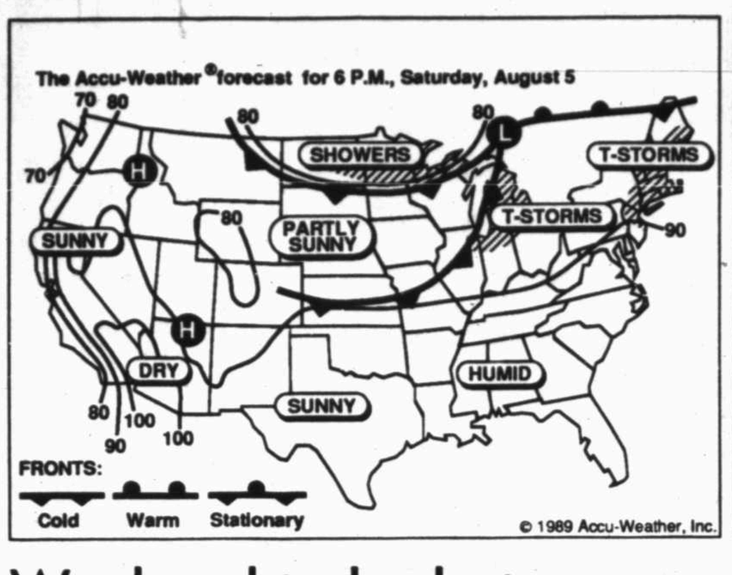

Jones, who said he made his millions in oil marketing from March 1978 to November 1980, said he turned around and lost the money in oil exploration, music-recording business, manufacturing, land acquisition and other interests.

"All money went back into the businesses and was lost," he said.

"This (loss) would not have happened had my financial abilities not been cut off due to all of the slanderous rumors and information put out by those agencies."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Weekend to be hot, sunny

From Staff and Wire Reports

The weekend should be hot and sunny with slight chances for evening rain, forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport said.

Today and Sunday should be mostly sunny with less than a 20 percent chance for late afternoon thunderstorms. The highs are expected to be in the mid- to upper-90s.

Tonight there will be a less than 20 percent chance of thunderstorms with a low in the lower 70s.

Friday's high of 100 was four degrees short of the record set on Aug. 4, 1944 when it reached 104, while the record low for today was set in 1978 when it dipped to 61.

STATE

Typical summer weather settled over Texas on Friday, as most of the state warmed under sunny skies.

Showers and thunderstorms were widely scattered in southeast Texas, and over the Trans-Pecos and Gulf regions.

Winds blew out of the south at 10 to 20 mph. That humid air made Friday afternoon temperatures in the 90s feel even hotter. State temperature extremes at 3 p.m. were a low of 87 at Guadalupe Pass and Galveston, and a high of 99 at several locations in northwest and extreme South Texas.

Temperatures were expected to be sunny and hot Saturday with isolated to widely scattered thunderstorms in the Far West, Southeast and along the coast. Highs were expected in the 90s and low 100s, and up to 106 in Big Bend.

NATION

Thunderstorms carrying heavy rain developed Friday around the Great Lakes and the Upper Midwest, and one stream flooded near Chicago.

Lower Michigan got the heaviest rain from showers and thunderstorms associated with the remnants of Hurricane Chantal. Tuscola County, in the "thumb" of the mitten-shaped state, got over 3½ inches in over four hours, the National Weather Service said. In west-central Lower Michigan, Grant got 5 inches of rain in the morning and Sparta reported 4½ inches.

Jones filed his lawsuit almost six weeks after the IRS lodged a $28.7-million tax lien against him for the 1978, 1979, and 1980 tax years.

Jones said that he owes the IRS nothing or relatively little due to losses in his failed business ventures, which included Broken Spoke Restaurant.

But Jones said the IRS tax lien was not filed in Midland until after his lawyer notified Attorney General Richard L. Thornburgh that Jones would sue the Department of Justice to "recover substantial sums of money" unless pending matters were waived according to the 1981 letter of agreement.

Jones said the Department of Justice did not respond to his request, but he heard from the IRS.

Jones said that his 1981 agreement with the Department of Justice states that "so long as my civil liabilities were not in the hundreds of millions of dollars, the Department of Justice would, in fact, recommend a total waiver."

Jones said he expected the Department of Justice "to fulfill its agreement in the same honorable fashion" by which Jones carried out his commitment.

Since 1981, Jones said he has lost all his possessions "with the exception of my home.

"I lost everything. I'm barely staying in this office," said Jones, who played a role in the October 1987 rescue of Jessica McClure from an abandoned water well by providing a high-pressure water cutting tool to get the child out of the well.

"I like to say I'm a self-made man," said Jones, a hefty 6-foot-2 West Texan who sports a 10-gallon hat and drives a Cadillac.

Even while he is intent on taking on the Department of Justice, the FBI, the IRS and DOE, Jones is planning on producing the autobiographical film "Along Came Jones." His current business operations are under the name of BRJ Productions Inc.

"I've been attempting to build a motion-picture production company here in Midland," he said. "But I have been stalemated by all of the litigation caused by the government for the past eight years."

His complaint alleges that the IRS and the FBI "leaked information and make slanderous statements" about him after the Department of Justice confidentiality statement was signed. The DOE leaked information, made "slanderous statements," and "harassed" him with "threatening letters of enforcement and prosecution," Jones said.

Jones said copies of his 10-page complaint are being served to Thornburgh, IRS Commissioner Fred Goldberg, Secretary of Energy James D. Watkins, and FBI Director William S. Sessions.

In 1978, Jones spoke out in industry circles about the "wrongs of government becoming involved in...government price-fixing practices, which is contrary to...the American way."

Jones called the DOE the "illegitimate child born of Congress."

Jones suggested his woes with the government began in 1979 when the DOE sought to audit his records on his oil transactions. Jones denied access to his records. Contrary to DOE suspicion, Jones said he never altered the classification of oil — from "old" oil to "new."

Nevertheless, said Jones, "things began to heat up in the industry and around me" in 1980 and 1981.

Jones' lawyers feared that the DOE would make him "a target...for an indictment."

Jones said his attorneys suggested that Jones talk to the Department of Justice about "cutting an immunity agreement."

"I hit the ceiling," Jones recalled, "and asked them, 'What for? I haven't done anything wrong. I'm not going to take a dive and end up having to testify against my friends or anyone else. I'll defend everything I have done 'til hell freezes over."

Eventually, Jones was persuaded by his attorneys to "negotiate the 1981 agreement with the Department of Justice."

Jones said that the case is "about more than money. It's about true Americanism, freedom and the rights that we as citizens of this country are guaranteed."

He is seeking a jury trial before U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

"I invite and encourage every citizen of this country to join me in speaking out to government," Jones said. "When government errs and does such wrongs to any citizen or any entity of this country, that government...must answer for and pay for its wrong-doing."

Of the outcome of his $1 billion suit, Jones said, "No one can ever call the shots. That's up to the court — the judge and the jury.

"But I have no doubts that this is a clear-cut case," Jones said. "I can't image a ruling other than in my favor, but I can't predict that.

"If I didn't think I could win, I wouldn't file the case," Jones said.

BUSH

"He (Bush) wanted him to know we appreciated their efforts. We hope they're successful," said Fitzwater. "The United States is willing to be of any help we can."

Efforts by the Red Cross were alluded to in Rafsanjani's statement, Fitzwater noted.

He said the United States would stand firmly behind its vow not to negotiate for the release of hostages. "We have our policy and that's what we follow," he said.

Rafsanjani made his comments during a prayer sermon at Tehran University, broadcast on Tehran radio. While warning against U.S. "bullyings, arrogant speeches and tyranny," Rafsanjani said: "Come, let us approach the problem reasonably."

"I tell the White House, the problem of Lebanon has solutions; the freeing of the hostages has solutions, reasonable, prudent solutions."

However, Rafsanjani's offer appeared conditional. He urged the United States to take the initiative by pressuring Israel to release the Shiite Moslem cleric it abducted a week ago, Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid.

The kidnapping triggered the apparent execution of Lt. Col. William R. Higgins and the death threat against Cicippio.

Although officials have said the United States would not seek to dictate hostage policy to Israel, Bush on Friday reiterated an appeal he first made Monday night for all countries holding hostages to release them.

"I would just appeal to the civilized world or any country anywhere in the world to lay aside this holding of people against their will — hostages — and do what is right and decent and honorable in terms of the release of those hostages that are still held," the president said.

Bush, who White House aides said had called more than a dozen world leaders over the past few days in an effort to bring pressure on the kidnappers, cited a "very extraordinarily broad exercise of diplomacy here in the last couple of days."

Fitzwater later said diplomatic contacts were continuing. "There are still a lot of people talking to a lot of people in the region about how to get the hostages out," he said.

He also said that "we've had high level and continuing talks with Israel."

Bush was asked if Cicippio deserved the full backing of the United States, in view of the fact that he ignored U.S. warnings to leave Lebanon.

"That doesn't mean we wash our hands of it," Bush said. "He's an American and he is entitled to the concern of the president, and every one of these senators and everybody in our administration."

CONSULATE

Farres said that would not happen.

"We're not opening an office just for one winter. This is not a matter of volume. This is not a business, this is a government operation," he said.

Midland City Councilman Jose Cuevas Jr. believes, however, the influx of Mexicans from the surrounding 39 counties will mean more food and lodging dollars for Midland.

The other 39 counties Consul Mendoza will oversee are Andrews, Bailey, Borden, Cochran, Cottle, Crane, Crosby, Dawson, Dickens, Ector, Fisher, Floyd, Gaines, Garza, Glasscock, Hale, Hockley, Howard, Jones, Kent, King, Lamb, Loving, Lubbock, Lynn, Martin, Mitchell, Motley, Nolan, Reagan, Reeves, Scurry, Stonewall, Taylor, Terry, Upton, Ward, Winkler and Yoakum.

When it comes to economic and tourist development, "I see us in the role of a marriage counselor. We find the bride and groom, get them together and then give them a blessing," Farres said.

PICKENS

Although Pickens said the moves were for business and not political purposes, he also said he faced some business problems that could block his path in a race for governor.

Mesa holds large gas reserves as well as oil-producing properties. Pickens said declining prices had hurt Mesa's 1988 acquisition, for $700 million, of gas reserves from Tenneco. The company on Thursday announced a $13.4 million loss for the second quarter of 1989.

"I'm very hesitant to leave my people out on a limb and go off and do something else," he said. "I've got 176,000 shareholders, that's my big problem."

However, Pickens said he felt his credentials were the best among the Republican candidates who have announced for governor so far or have been mentioned as potential candidates.

Republicans who have announced for governor so far are Houston oilman-businessman Jack Rains, who was secretary of state until resigning this summer.

DEATHS

H.B. Johnson

H.B. "Wort" Johnson of Midland died Friday in a Midland hospital.

His body may be viewed from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. today at Ellis Funeral Home and on Sunday at Johnson Funeral Home in San Angelo.

Graveside services will be at Fairmount Cemetery in San Angelo Monday at 10 a.m.

He was born June 2, 1914, in Buckholtz, the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. F.M. Johnson Sr. He lived there until 1925 when he and his family moved to San Angelo.

He and his parents were stock farmers.

Johnson married Maurita Lowrie on Nov. 2, 1941, in San Angelo. In 1942, he entered the U.S. Naval Reserves. He was discharged in 1945 and he and his wife moved to Dumas where he worked in the jewelry business.

In 1952, they moved to Midland where he worked at several jewelry stores before his retirement from Houck's Jewelry in 1980.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; three brothers, Howard E. Johnson or Torrance, Calif., F.G. Johnson of Dumas, F.M. Johnson Jr. of San Angelo; six sisters, Leoto Dixon, Essie Bean, Birdie Castleberry, Jo Griffin, all of San Angelo, Wilda Collins of Albuquerque, N.M., and Laverne Milholland of Deerpark, and numerous nieces and nephews.

Horace Bell

PINE BLUFF, Ark. — Horace Bell, 86, died Thursday at a local hospital.

Graveside services were to be at 10 a.m. today at the Kingsland Cemetery in Kingsland, Ark., with the Rev. Lloyd Posey officiating.

Services are under the direction of Ralph Robinson & Son Funeral Directors.

He was born Feb. 16, 1903, in Kingsland and had lived in Pine Bluff most of his life.

Bell was employed by Matthews Hardware Co. for many years as a salesperson.

He was a member of the First Methodist Church and was preceded in death by a son, Horace Homer Bell Jr., in 1977.

Survivors include his wife of 59 years, Ivon Wood Bell of Pine Bluff; three daughters, Mrs. Jack Beshears and Mrs. William Hetzel, both of Midland, Mrs. Ike Wood of Pine Bluff; one brother, Clarence L. Bell of Fordyce, Ark.; and six grandchildren.

Memorials are requested to the First United Methodist Church of Pine Bluff.

Vera White

Services for Mrs. John F. (Vera) White of Midland are set for 1 p.m. today at the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Lucian Rudd officiating.

Interment will follow at Sunset Memorial Gardens in Odessa under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

She died Friday morning at a local hospital.

Pallbearers were to be A.J. Monzingo, B.J. Bonner, Guy C. Jamieson, Joe M. Overton, Joe W. Younger and R.W. Kretzler.

Texan uses own experience to teach 'survival English'

DALLAS (AP) — Only a few months ago, teen-agers Jose Mendoza, Jesus Mata and Ivania Parada were hiding from Salvadoran guerrillas who wanted to force them to take up arms.

But like the other students in Manuel Flores' classroom at Thomas J. Rusk Middle School, the youths survived the danger and unrest in their homeland and escaped to the United States.

Now they face another survival test: learning the English language from scratch relatively late in the education system.

These dozen Central and South American students range in age from 13 to 15; some are enrolled in school for the first time in their lives. They are too old to be placed with elementary schoolchildren in English classes, but they aren't advanced enough to keep up with students their own ages who are in the ESL (English as a Second Language) program.

Flores tells them if they don't learn English quickly, they won't make it to high school. They'll drop out. Worse, they could turn to crime.

But Manuel Flores — a migrant farmworker whose childhood was also one of struggle — is determined not to let that happen. Not the man who could barely carry on a conversation in English at age 14 and today has 10 years experience in bilingual education. Not the man who dropped out of school to help pay bills and later, at 34, earned a General Educational Development diploma and two college degrees.

"I relate to these kids. I share their frustrations and I share their dreams," says the 53-year-old teacher.

Flores is quick to point out that his class is helping only a small fraction of the immigrant students enrolled in DISD. Most simply have to try to keep up in ESL classes.

Of the 20,000 DISD students who are in the ESL, about 850 middle- and high-school students have the same background as the dozen Flores is working with, says Judy Meyer, director of bilingual education and ESL for the Dallas Independent School District. They are "new to the country and new to the American system of education."

Flores works at Rusk as a counselor and tutor for students who are at risk of dropping out. And he teaches English night classes to adults twice a week.

Through his counseling, Flores discovered immigrant teen-age students who could speak no English. So he started a class for a dozen of them, first meeting in a portable room an hour before school each day, then getting a classroom inside the school each afternoon. The goal is to push the students' language skills far enough to sustain them in ESL classes.

Since October, Flores has been drilling the dozen "survival English" students in simple words, phrases and concepts they encounter every day at Rusk.

"They need to know things like 'open your book,' 'turn to page so-and-so,' 'I want you to bring your homework tomorrow.' In some of their (ESL) classes it's sink or swim because of the language barrier, but with a class like this they might be able to stay on top of the water a little longer," Flores says.

Sheila Balcarcel, an ESL teacher at Rusk, has seen progress in the students who attend Flores' sessions.

"Their vocabulary is growing and that helps them better understand what's going on in their other ESL classes," Mrs. Balcarcel says.

The "survival English" students say the time spent with Flores is their favorite part of the day. They appreciate his constant reassurances and the fun he injects into his teaching. He makes games of introducing new words by using photographs, drawings and pictorial flashcards.

"Cat! Key! Chair! Tree!" come the loud answers in unison from the students who later individually use the same words in short sentences.

Their eagerness — hands shooting up to answer questions and unflinching attempts to pronounce words — is a breath of fresh air, Flores says.

And Flores is a source of strength for his students, a role model they have come to respect. They know that in his classroom they won't be ridiculed for mangling spoken English.

"I try to instill in their minds that even though they don't know English, that doesn't mean they're inferior to the other kids," he says. And every day Flores tells the students they can be whatever they want: doctors, lawyers, architects.

To better understand the students' background, Flores schedules weekly counseling sessions with each.

"Some of these kids have seen things that are horrifying," he says. "They are trying to overcome psychological problems because of what they've been through."

Jesus Mata, 14, recalls that six months ago he stripped off his clothes and jumped into a river near San Salvador to hide from guerrilla soldiers fighting the U.S.-backed government.

Jesus, who had no previous formal education, came to Dallas with his mother, two brothers and sister. His father had been here long enough to qualify for amnesty and to save $3,000 to pay a coyote, or smuggler, to transport the family out of El Salvador.

"I like it here," Jesus says in Spanish. "I watch 'Sesame Street' because I want to learn English. If you don't know English you won't get a good job, and I want to do something with my life," he says.

Ivania Parada, 15, is convinced she will learn the language that represents a new way of life for her and her 10-year-old brother, Nelson David. Six months ago both were still in San Salvador, separated from their mother, who was working here to make their trip possible.

"Freedom and English — that's what the United States means to me and my family," Ivandia says. "I want both with all my heart."

Bill would help Valley producers

Legislation provides loan guarantees

STATE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rio Grande Valley produce operations tottering at the edge of financial collapse after two years of severe weather and depressed markets would be eligible for loan guarantees of up to $2.5 million under drought legislation sent Friday to the White House.

McAllen Mayor Othal Brand said Valley agribusiness is in "dire" trouble and two large operations already have been forced to liquidate or reorganize financially.

"The rest of the industry is crippled and some others may be forced into bankruptcy," said Brand, chairman of the board of Griffin and Brand, a Valley produce importer, exporter, grower, shipper and freezer. "I've been in business 52 years and this is something I've never experienced before. This is the worst we've ever experienced."

Brand said thousands of jobs are at stake in the economically depressed area along the U.S.-Mexico border, but that the loan guarantee legislation will mean the likely survival of 60 percent to 70 percent of troubled farm operations in the Valley.

Others, however, "are irretrievably lost," Brand said.

"This situation has threatened to increase unemployment in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, an area where the jobless rate is already as high as it is anywhere in the country," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

Rep. Kika de la Garza, a Mission Democrat and chairman of the Agriculture Committee, included the loan guarantee relief in an $895 million drought relief package that passed the House early Friday morning. The Senate approved the bill late in the day.

According to congressional aides, Valley produce farmers planted crops three times this year before they had a harvest, and the fruits and vegetables came in at the same time as produce from California and Arizona, flooding the market and depressing prices.

De la Garza said loan guarantees for such devastated businesses, however, were limited to $500,000 until he sought the $2.5 million cap.

De la Garza said he was told by trade officials that if the Valley packers and producers were not helped, "we could have 4,000, 6,000, 8,000 unemployed beyond the norm, and certainly the norm is high."

The severe weather, however, has not been limited to the Valley, with drought conditions reported in the Panhandle and elsewhere.

"We're expecting state crop losses of $976 million so clearly we have been hit hard by the drought," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas. "The drought relief will not make up these losses, but will mean the difference of being able to stay in business for a lot of people in agriculture."

Gramm said the Texas Agricultural Extension Service also reports $500 million in livestock losses, and that the total economic impact of severe weather on agriculture in the state will reach $3 billion.

De la Garza said the drought bill would help farmers who lost their corn, cotton, sorghum, wheat, as well as those who lost fruit and vegetable crops.

The bill includes a provision for rural communities with populations of 15,000 or less to help improve water supplies damaged by severe weather conditions.

"Also, there is a provision very important to the Valley, to the packing shed, or the main street business that suffers due to the drought — for lower interest loans from the Farmers Home Administration," de la Garza said.

"I think we've come up with a good drought bill that will be very helpful to Texans that have been hurt by the drought. The primary reason that we have excellent provisions for Texas is because of Kika de la Garza," Gramm said.

Gramm credited de la Garza with obtaining the $2.5 million limit on loan guarantees for the Valley's agribusinesses, which employ as many as 10,000 Texans.

Although some growers may be eligible for drought assistance, "it doesn't actually solve the problem. What they need is operating money," a congressional aide said.

Bentsen said Valley vegetable operations have suffered "substantial losses," and that farmers and ranchers all over Texas "desperately need disaster assistance."

Bank-fraud trial juror dismissed

LUBBOCK (AP) — A juror in the bank-fraud trial of former Garland developer D.L. "Danny" Faulkner and six other defendants was dismissed Thursday without explanation.

U.S. District Judge Sam R. Cunningham appears to have issued a gag order on the matter, The Dallas Morning News reported.

No testimony was heard Thursday morning in the trial, which began Feb. 6.

Cunningham met with attorneys for both sides for more than an hour Thursday afternoon. When testimony resumed, one of the 15 jurors and alternates was absent.

If a juror has to be temporarily excused, the trial is recessed. Last spring a juror was excused for medical reasons.

There are 12 jurors and two alternates left who can hear the rest of the trial, which is expected to continue at least until September.

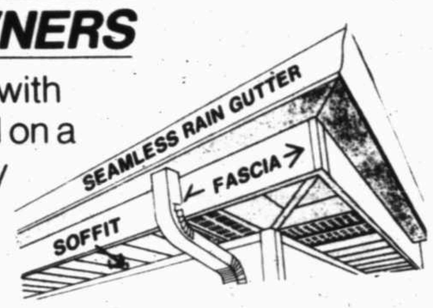

Officials involved in the case declined to comment Thursday on the missing juror, the newspaper said.

Faulkner, former Garland Mayor James L. Toler and five other men are being tried on charges that they conspired to steal $135 million from five thrifts in Texas and Arkansas in the early 1980s.

Battleship will return to water

HOUSTON (AP) — The Battleship Texas returns to the water on Saturday when crews at a Galveston shipyard slide the 75-year-old vessel from a drydock where it has been undergoing repairs since December.

The 27-ton national landmark is in the midst of a $6 million restoration meant to return the rusting and leaky ship to the way it looked in World War II when the Texas participated in the bombardment of Iwo Jima and Okinawa in the Pacific in 1945.

It has been an attraction at the San Jacinto Battleground near Houston since 1948 and was taken over by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department in 1983.

Last December, it was moved for the first time in 40 years when five tugboats guided it 40 miles down the Houston Ship Channel to Todd Shipyards in Galveston.

"We have completed the coating and all of the structural and repainting work on the underwater hull," Sue Moss, the project historian, said Friday.

On Saturday, crews were to return the ship to the water and float it to another pier at the shipyard for three to four weeks of work on its topside.

"We have replaced almost 350,000 pounds of steel on the ship, primarily on the hull but some on the main deck also," Ms. Moss said. "The remaining work topside primarily is sandblasting and coating."

Once it's painted, the ship will carry the same camouflage it wore during World War II, including a deep blue on all vertical surfaces and a gray-blue on the decks.

"Right now she's wearing a coat of many colors with various primers," Ms. Moss said. "She's pretty well striped and not very aesthetically appealing."

Once the Todd Shipyards work is finished, the Texas will be moved elsewhere in Galveston, then be transferred to a terminal near Houston for final repairs.

While shipyard work is being completed, work also will be done at the ship's berth near the San Jacinto Monument, so the Texas can be floating rather than be allowed to rest on the muddy channel bottom, where it was anchored for 40 years and visited by some 200,000 people annually.

The return of the ship there is not expected until next spring, Ms. Moss said.

The Texas, commissioned in 1914, is the only surviving U.S. combat ship to have served in both world wars.

Of the some $6 million restoration tab, $5 million is a grant from the U.S. Navy, while much of the remaining cash has been raised from private sources.

Archaeologist wants teeth of mammoth back

WACO (AP) — All Calvin Smith wants for Christmas or sooner are his four front teeth — his mammoth's teeth, that is.

Someone stole the fossils from an archaeological dig in Waco in late June. The teeth came from the mouth of "Big Mama," the matriarch of a herd of 13 mammoths discovered at the site.

Smith, director of Baylor University's Strecker Museum, offered the thief a chance to return the teeth without facing criminal charges. The grace period ended July 24.

"Maybe we didn't impress upon people the $500 reward," Smith said. "We're to the point now of relying on somebody who knows what happened and wants the $500 reward."

The money is for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the thief, Smith said.

Archaeologists discovered the teeth were missing on June 29. Police have few leads.

The pillager also stole a $250 toolbox and a security system, valued at $1,000, that had not been used. Smith said researchers have since installed another security system.

The bandit may have some knowledge of archaeology to have recognized the mammoth's teeth, Smith said, since the person broke the teeth from the mammoth's jaw, which was still embedded in the soil.

Smith said mammoth teeth are relatively common and are worth about $25 each. The scientific value is considerably higher because archaeologists would like the teeth as additional documentation of their find.

"Of all the ones they could have selected, this was probably the most important animal," Smith said.

The herd is the largest scientific discovery of a group of mammoths that died at the same time. Archaeologists theorized the herd formed a circle, tusks outward, before being killed by some act of nature, possibly a flash flood.

Judge leaving bench

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Margaret Mahoney said she is leaving the federal bench after two years to work in the Houston office of a New York-based law firm.

Ms. Mahoney, 40, said Thursday she will step down from the federal post Sept. 30. The job with Weil, Gotshal & Manges "was an offer that was too hard to pass up," she said.

In discussing her decision to leave the federal bench, she also cited Congress' refusal to raise bankruptcy judges' salaries from $82,340 and proposed legislation that could restrict her ability to practice law.

The proposed legislation, she said, could prohibit her from practicing before bankruptcy judges in the 43-county Southern District of Texas for a year.

Video recorders not likely to be put in squad cars

DALLAS (AP) — Having video recorders in squad cars, the newest in high-tech law enforcement, could help police, but at $5,000 apiece, Dallas officers can only dream about them.

It would cost about $3.5 million to put the systems the Dallas Police Department's 700-odd squad cars, which only recently were outfitted with sophisticated mini-computers, said Sgt. Sam Johnson.

Dallas officers probably won't be getting video recorders any time soon, Johnson said.

"I won't close the door on it. We'd certainly look at it," said Johnson, who works in the Division of Planning and Budget. "But, before we ever bought a system like that, we would do extensive field testing on our own."

"I can foresee a problem with the camera as far as a place to put them because our police cars are loaded" with electronic equipment, Johnson said. Besides the new computers, Dallas police cars also have cellular phones, police radios, and electronic siren consoles, and some have rifles.

"It's very cramped," Johnson said. "They're pretty overwhelmed with the technological equipment that they have. Maybe a smaller department with a larger budget might consider something like this, but I don't think the officers (in Dallas) would consider it any big advantage."

The Verifier 2000 is being used by the Florida Highway Patrol as well as several police departments in New Jersey and South Carolina, say officials of Vicon Industries of Melville, N.Y.

The system features a 2-inch camera, usually mounted near the rearview mirror, and linked to a small television set near the dashboard and a videocassette recorder locked in a metal case in the trunk.

"I can foresee a problem with the camera as far as a place to put them because our police cars are loaded."
— Sgt. Sam Johnson

The camera allows officers in the car to see nearly 1,800 feet away on a dashboard monitor. The system also can be used for surveillance, company officials said.

A wireless microphone worn by the officer records his conversations.

"We're trying to offer police officers a way of documenting everything that happens," said Kevin Whitley, a Vicon salesman. He said the tapes could show that an officer acted properly in case his actions were questioned.

"It takes the technology out of the station house and puts it into the patrol car," said Ted Alberta, a product manager for Vicon. The system, being used mostly to document drunken drivers, was the highlight of a display for police here Tuesday by a local alarm company.

Colleen O'Connor, an attorney with the American Civil Liberties Union in New York, said the system "has the potential for raising some constitutional questions."

Wright reportedly spent $100,000 monthly on lawyers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former House Speaker Jim Wright was spending almost $100,000 a month on lawyers to defend himself against ethics charges that consumed his final three months in office, his campaign finance reports show.

Wright's campaign finance reports, filed this week with the Federal Election Commission, show that from March until May, he spent $282,000 to pay his lawyers from the Washington firm of Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg and Evans.

Last year, Wright paid $78,734 to the firm, his records show. That would bring the total to $360,734 from October through May.

Shortly before Wright announced in May that he would abandon his defense and resign, his supporters launched a fund-raising effort to cover legal bills said at the time to be approaching $500,000.

The supporters, who included Reps. Charles Wilson, J.J. Pickle, Jack Brooks and Martin Frost, all Democrats from Texas, helped organize a fund-raising event in Austin to finance Wright's legal defense.

That money was to be placed in a legal defense fund, which would have had to disclose its finances next year if Wright had stayed in office. However, under House rules, his departure means no such public disclosure of the fund is required.

Wright did non return telephone calls Friday to discuss the fund.

Wright relinquished the speaker's gavel and left the House in June.

Controversy still brewing over allowing stronger Icelandic beer

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — The doomsayers had said that allowing hard-working Icelanders to drink strong beer would turn them into lazy, round-the-clock drunks.

But since "B-Day" on March 1, when strong beer flowed legally for the first time in 74 years, the police have reported no increase in drunken driving and bar owners say people still restrict their hard drinking to weekends.

"Icelanders are happier and less drunk," said Gudrun Helgadottir, president of the Althing (parliament) and a sponsor of the legislation legalizing beer with alcoholic content above 2.25 percent.

Anti-alcohol campaigners, however, report backsliding by some recovered alcoholics and worry about more imbibing in general, especially among the young.

"B-Day" was celebrated with parties, pub openings and even a few free drinks, and although strong beer is expensive, it is now the favorite alcoholic beverage in this North Atlantic island nation of 250,000.

In the first month, Icelanders consumed nearly 1.3 million quarts of beer — about 5.1 quarts for every man, woman and child.

Hoskuldur Jonsson, general manager of the State Wine, Spirit and Tobacco Authority, said, once the novelty wore off, beer consumption dropped to between 635,000 and 690,000 quarts a month.

"The wave went over and we are now sailing on a rather calm sea," Jonsson said.

Olafur Arnason, director of the state-funded Liquor Prevention Council of Iceland, says total alcohol sales rose 25 percent in the first three months of 1989 and that state institutions for alcoholics are reporting more admissions of ex-alcoholics who had been sober for several years.

To combat an increase in drinking by 18- to 20-year-olds, the council has put out an advertisement showing a cartoon of a young person with no head.

"God gave you intelligence; don't drink it away," it says.

Until March 1, Icelanders could drink whiskey, vodka, wine, low-alcohol beer or Brennivin, the national strong spirit also called "Black Death." But they could not legally buy strong beer except at airport duty-free stores.

Iceland ended 25 years of total prohibition in 1933, but a legal quirk kept all but the weakest beers banned. A powerful temperance lobby kept it that way until May 1988, when the Althing lifted the prohibition.

"The argument of opponents was that beer would increase the consumption of Icelanders and they'd be drunk all day," Mrs. Helgadottir said.

Wilbur the peacock struts his stuff, leaving visitors speechless

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — At 14 feet tall and 30 feet long, Wilbir stands out from other peacocks.

Of course, it's foliage, not plumage that Wilbir shows off, and he can't strut around because he's a peat sculpture.

With 2,000 begonias blooming on his chest, head and tail, he has drawn some surprised looks at Michigan State University's new Horticulture Demonstration Gardens.

"When I first saw it, I thought it was a dinosaur," said Bobbie Haskell, who came for an evening walk in the gardens last weekend.

"We put in the peacock to get a little attention and show how spectacular it's going to be," said Michigan State horticulture Professor Will Carlson.

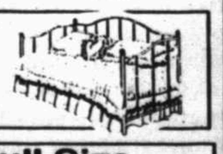

Wilbir is short for "Will's Bird," after Carlson, who is in charge of the five-year project to construct the new garden.

"It will be a world-class garden. It will probably be one of the finest in this country," he said.

Thousands join in weather network

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of Americans stop their normal activities once a day, head outdoors and officially record the weather in one of the nation's largest volunteer programs.

Harry U. Gibson, 83, trudged out into Idaho's record low temperatures last February, keeping up a tradition of never being late to report in a quarter-century as an observer.

To the south, in Red River, N.M., Robert W. Prunty is maintaining a 57-year family effort in volunteer weather observing.

Nearly everyone can call themselves a weather observer, of course.

But 11,650 Americans do it in a regular, formal system organized by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

These records, compiled over more than a century, constitute the formal climate record of the United States and are used in both weather and climate calculations.

The observers take readings of rainfall, temperature, river levels and other information, some collecting data at 7 a.m. local time, others between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. local time.

Their information is compiled with readings taken at National Weather Service offices and by observers around the world to constitute a global climate network.

NOAA annually honors its volunteer observers, selecting five for the Thomas Jefferson Award, named for the third president, who was an avid weather observer.

In addition, other volunteers are honored with the John Campanius Holm Award, named for the man who collected the first weather observations in colonial America, between 1644 and 1645 near Wilmington, Del.

The winners receive plaques citing their achievement.

The Jefferson award winners this year are:

■ Gibson, a retired farmer, until recently collected weather data in Boise and Kuna, Idaho for some 25 years. Going beyond his call of duty, Gibson also warned local farmers of sudden temperature drops that may threaten crops and livestock.

■ Prunty, a retired postmaster and assistant fire chief, has also distributed daily weather reports at the local post office and prepares weather summaries for the Sangre de Cristo Chronicle in Eagle Nest, N.M.

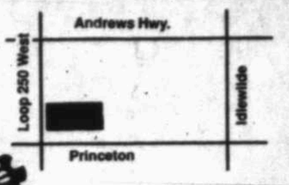

■ William B. Gillespie Jr., of Effingham, N.C., succeeded his father as local observer in 1946 to maintain a family tradition started in 1918. Gillespie has battled floods to gather river stage data and hasn't missed a report in 41 years despite the pressure of also managing a general store.

■ John O. Nellermoe, a former rancher in Trotters, N.D., has been a cooperative observer for 39 years. Besides reporting on crucial aspects of soil moisture and temperature, he also provides emergency assistance as a severe storms spotter.

■ Henry Cordes, of Cordes, Ariz., has been a volunteer observed for 51 years without ever missing an observation or turning in a late report.

WASHINGTON — American combat troops on Friday staged a practice pre-dawn helicopter assault on a U.S.-Panama military base that is within sight of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's command post.

The incident occurred just hours after Noriega forces opened fire on protesters.

The raid in which almost 200 U.S. troops landed at Fort Amador, a jointly administered base overlooking the Pacific entrance to the Panama Canal, was the latest demonstration of U.S. military power in a campaign designed to topple Noriega by Sept. 1.

The operation followed a bloody confrontation Thursday in which Panamanian Defense Forces opened fire with shotguns on about 100 demonstrators at the University of Panama, killing one student and wounding at least six others.

The students were protesting a plan by the Organization of American States (OAS) to call new presidential elections rather than honor the outcome of May 7 balloting won by the opposition.

The site of the mock U.S. raid also was the setting earlier in the week for an attempted provocation of U.S. forces by Noriega in which the flamboyant commander and some troops marched across the fort's golf course to a mausoleum honoring the late Gen. Omar Torrijos.

The march was legal on the jointly administered base and garnered Noriega a bonanza of publicity for symbolically standing up to the United States.

Jockeying between the United States and Noriega comes as a delegation from the OAS continues working against an Aug. 23 deadline to fashion an interim coalition to take power Sept. 1 when the four-year term of the Noriega-backed regime is scheduled to end.

WORLD

Under the OAS plan, new presidential elections would be called even though anti-Noriega forces prevailed in earlier balloting.

The U.S. combat exercise appeared to be among the most confrontational of a series of operations in an escalating campaign by the United States to show anti-Noriega dissidents that the 12,000 U.S. armed forces in Panama will assist any coup attempt.

The setting for the latest American operation is a lush manicured base with white stucco buildings and red tile roofs. It is within sight of Noriega's command post which is located at the end of a two-mile causeway out into the Pacific along jetties lining the entrance to the canal.

Noriega forces filmed the exercise, U.S. officials said.

American troops in five Blackhawk assault helicopters stormed across the canal from Fort Kolbe to Fort Amador in an operation that began at 4 a.m. The expedition "rapidly secured" eight sets of U.S. Army housing that were retained by the U.S. government following the withdrawal of American ground forces from the installation in 1979.

The U.S. combat exercise appeared to be among the most confrontational of a series of operations in an escalating campaign by the United States to show anti-Noriega dissidents that the 12,000 U.S. armed forces in Panama will assist any coup attempt.

The withdrawal was a first step in the gradual turnover of territory to Panama under 1977 accords to cede control of the canal in 1999.

The assault troops were backed by a platoon of anti-tank forces "air assaulted" into the site to "establish blocking positions" at key intersections, according to the Panama-based U.S. Southern Command.

The 5-hour operation was designed to "refine contingency operations for the protection of U.S. lives, property and interests," said Bill Ormsbee, a spokesman. The exercise also was intended to "reassure U.S. families of their security" and to "reassert" freedom of movement for U.S. forces "in the wake of repeated violations of those rights" by Panamanian forces in the last 18 months, according to Ormsbee.

The exercise followed operations last week in which about 1,200 ground forces, more than 100 combat vehicles and dozens of aircraft staged four separate combat exercises practicing reinforcement, civilian evacuation and defense of the 50-mile canal.

As deputy assistant defense secretary Richard Brown told Congress last week: "We intend to keep up the exercises and the pressure...until the crisis is resolved."

Ortega signs accord with opposition

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega signed an accord with opposition leaders Friday urging that the Contra rebels be disbanded, and he said he would press for the breakup at a summit of Central American leaders.

"I hope the U.S. government will respect this sovereign decision of the Nicaraguan people and change U.S. policy toward Nicaragua, and that it puts an end to the (1985) economic embargo," Ortega said before leaving for the weekend conference in Tela, Honduras.

The United States wants the rebels to stay organized until after Nicaragua holds general elections next year.

Ortega talked to reporters shortly after he signed the agreement, worked out during 22 hours of talks between the leftist Sandinista government and leaders from 20 opposition parties.

In the accord, the Sandinistas pledge to hold free and fair elections Feb. 25, without any restraints on campaigning or news censorship. They promise to suspend the military draft from September until after the balloting to prevent it from interfering with electoral activity.

The Sandinistas initiated the negotiations to defuse complaints by opposition leaders that their candidates were harassed in earlier elections, their movements constrained and their exposure to the public restricted by news censorship.

The presidents of Honduras, El Salvador, Costa Rica and Guatemala will join Ortega in Tela.

Adolfo Calero, a member of the rebel political directorate, already has expressed his determination to keep the Contras operating.

Opposition leaders told reporters they were generally satisfied with Friday's agreement, even though it was not all they wanted.

"No country, however powerful, has the right to interfere in the Nicaraguan electoral process," Jaime Bonilla of the Independent Liberal Party said, speaking for a coalition of 14 of the 20 parties.

"Even though the opposition is not completely satisfied, the electoral process is being channeled toward what the opposition wants. The accord reflects the common will to contribute toward the peace process at the summit."

Duilio Baltodano of the National Action Party called the accord "a triumph of patriotism" and said his group hoped the Sandinistas "will fulfill all their pledges. We will stand read to demand this of them."

"A great achievement, even though there are a lot of things...to be resolved," said Eli Altamirano of the Communist Party, also an opposition group in Nicaragua.

The Tela summit Saturday and Sunday will be the fifth held under a peace plan that President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica drafted in August 1987 to negotiate an end to Nicaragua's civil war and leftist insurrections in El Salvador and Guatemala.

The focus will be on Nicaragua and the 12,000 Contras, now living with their dependents in base camps in southern Honduras.

The United States provided the Contras with military aid until a year ago. It now sends them only non-lethal aid such as clothing and food.

President Jose Azcona Hoyo of Honduras says the Contras are an economic burden and that he wants them out of his country.

Ortega said he hoped "the Honduran government feels stronger now to push for the demobilization of the Contras in Honduran territory."

Friday's accord also calls for undercover activities to halt during Nicaragua's electoral process. The Sandinistas also promise to grant unconditional amnesty to all political prisoners, a move that will benefit 1,605 rebels in Nicaraguan jails.

The United States began supporting the Contras in 1982 and declared an economic embargo on Nicaragua three years later, arguing that Sandinista efforts to impose a leftist government and the Sandinistas' close military ties with Moscow and Havana threatened security in Central America.

The Bush administration supports the Arias peace plan but says the Contras should not be disbanded until after the elections. Bernard Aronson, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, visited Guatemala this week to press that point.

Aggies, Hogs tabbed as league favorites

By CHARLES RICHARDS

DALLAS (AP) — For the third straight year, Southwest Conference football fans filled a hotel ballroom on Friday to overflowing, paying $20 a plate to see last season's highlights, get a look at several top players and listen to all nine coaches discuss their 1989 chances.

The SWC Kickoff Luncheon in the Hyatt-Regency Hotel drew 1,200 people. Fans were led in singing Happy Birthday to the conference, which is celebrating its 75th anniversary.

In brief speeches to the crowd and in morning interviews with sports writers and broadcasters, the league's coaches agreed on Texas A&M and defending champion Arkansas as preseason favorites.

"I don't think you could name the team most likely to succeed without mentioning two in the same breath, and that would be A&M and Arkansas," Baylor Coach Grant Teaff said.

"Arkansas has a little advantage because they're defending champions, and that always helps momentum a little bit," Teaff said.

But the Aggies have the league's best player, running back Darren Lewis, the nation's No. 2 rusher last fall as a junior, when he rushed 306 times for 1,692 yards and was named first-team all-America.

"To tell you the truth, as long as A&M has Darren Lewis, I really think that when it comes down to it, A&M will win it. I just hate to show disrespect to Arkansas, because of the fact that they are the defending champions," Teaff said.

"If you take three or four teams, and look at the talent spread among them, and then suddenly you have to put Darren Lewis there. Whichever team you put him on, it would make the difference. He's sensational. We haven't had a back in this league in a long time compared to him," the Baylor coach added.

A&M is eligible for the conference championship and the Cotton Bowl berth after sitting out a year's probation from the NCAA. However, Houston is ineligible this season, although the Cougars' games will count in the standings and affect who does represent the SWC.

Behind Arkansas and Texas A&M, coaches generally put Texas, Baylor and Houston in a second tier, followed by Texas Tech and Texas Christian, with Rice and Southern Methodist on the bottom of the pack.

SMU is resuming football after the NCAA imposed the so-called "death penalty" because athletes received money and other fringe benefits. Rice was winless last season and has the nation's longest losing streak among major college teams of 18 games.

Rice Coach Fred Goldsmith, in his first year at Rice after being defensive coordinator last season at Arkansas, noted that Rice and Southern Methodist play in Dallas the first week of the season, on Sept. 2. The winner will be atop the SWC standings, since other SWC teams won't play league games until at least two weeks later.

"It's going to take a while for anybody to catch the winner," Goldsmith said.

Other coaches, while grouping Rice at the bottom, praised the Owls for playing well at times last season. Teaff and Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield said their teams were fortunate to beat the Owls.

Replied Goldsmith: "I just want to get out of that category. I don't want anybody patting me on the back and tell me how we almost won. I don't like those moral victories. I'm ready to move to another level."

Hatfield said despite winning the championship last season, the Razorbacks will have no trouble getting ready for the 1989 season.

"We didn't play our best in the Cotton Bowl, and people didn't see us the way we really were. Everybody is going to be ready to play us this year, and we're going to have to be ready to play," Hatfield said. "The biggest difference people will see in our team this year is that we'll throw the ball a little more."

At SMU last year, there were only practices every afternoon, but never any games, because of the troubles with the NCAA.

"This is what we have looked forward to since last season, getting to play," said Forrest Gregg, who resigned as head coach of the Green Bay Packers in early 1988 to take over the dismantled SMU program.

"We'll be playing, but with some very young men. We have only two seniors," Gregg pointed out. SMU has only 25 scholarship players, only a fraction of other schools in the conference.

Two of the Mustangs' three non-conference games this fall are against North Texas and Connecticut. The third is defending national champion Notre Dame. "I'm still looking for the guy who left Notre Dame on the schedule," Gregg joked.

Despite being outmanned, Gregg said: "We will not throw in the towel before we go into the ring. We will go into every game with the intention of winning. We will fight the good fight."

Midland shortstop Gary DiSarcina awaits a roller in Friday action at Angel Stadium.

Rose hits for cycle as Angels fall to El Paso

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland used five pitchers, Bob Rose hit for the cycle and the Angels scared the devil out of the Diablos, but it still wasn't enough to beat an El Paso team that had spent most of the day traveling and didn't arrive at Angels Stadium until an hour and a half before game time.

Still, the Angels took it right down to the final out and made lefthander Ed Puig, 22 saves, work for his sixth save this season against the Angels.

Down 11-9, Midland had the tying runs at second and third with one out in the ninth after Otto Gonzalez singled and Gary DiSarcina walked. Puig whiffed Ruben Amaro for the second out, but then Reed Peters chased centerfielder Rafel Skeete back to the green wall in deepest center with what was potentially the game tying blow. Skeete leaped up and one handed the ball as he rattled off the wall, holding on for the final out.

ALTHOUGH THE game moved at a snail's pace (3 hours, 51 minutes), there was no lack of action and situations.

Midland, behind 6-2, rallied for three in the sixth with Rose's being triple the big blow, to tie it at 6.

El Paso responded with five runs in the seventh as Andre David, the Diablos' answer to Rose, highlighted the rally with a his seventh homer to drive in two of his four RBIs.

Now it was 11-6, shades of a few years back when Midland scored 12 in the first and El Paso trumped it with 13 in the second, but the game was still far from over.

ROSE, WHO singled in the first and doubled in the third, soloed to left for his 11th homer to make it 11-9 in the eighth. After Chris Cron followed with a double, Puig relieved Mark Chapman and managed to keep the lid on, but barely.

Jesus Alfaro, who has made more Midland and El Paso uniform changes than the Gabors change husbands, related the details of the tedious Diablos' journey to Midland, following Thursday's doubleheader in Wichita. "We drove by bus to Tulsa. It took three hours. Then we flew in from there. We just got here a few minutes ago, about 5:30."

Gee whizzes by with first-round 64

By BILL GRIMES

Bobby Gee wasn't taking any chances in the first round of the Men's City Golf Championships Friday at Hogan Park.

"I just tried to play solid," the Texas A&M junior-to-be said. "I didn't want to take many risks."

He didn't have to.

Gee hit 17 greens in regulation and made seven birdie putts en route to a personal-best 64 and the first-round lead. He leads Kelly Cox by two strokes after the latter fired a 66, while two-time city champion Steve Whiteside lurks five shots off the pace.

Gee struggled through his sophomore season at A&M, shooting no better than 70 in any round this past spring.

Putting was the main problem, he said, and it's something he plans to do something about in order to place among the top echelon of Southwest Conference golfers next season.

"I feel like I've got my putting back on track," he said. "I'm stroking the ball really well."

Gee shot 32's on both nines Friday. And, he was able to fight off hot conditions to birdie two of his last three holes.

"I just tried to keep calm," he said.

Cox, a former Midland High golfer who did not play competitively in college, hadn't played the Hogan Park layout often since his high school years in the early 1970s. But the 34-year-old made himself at home right quick with four birdies on the front nine, before coasting on the back nine.

Cox said he simply tried to play consistent golf, rather than take unnecessary risks.

"I just tried to keep the ball in the fairway," Cox said. The blond hit 16 greens in regulation en route to his sparking round.

Cox played in the first group, and he received every indication from well-wishers that he would go home as the first-round leader. But that was before Gee caught fire on the last several holes, including birdies on the 16th and 17th greens.

Whiteside, playing in the same group as Gee, had trouble with his putter at times en route to a round that included three birdies and two bogeys.

"I three-putted a couple of holes today. I think what I need to do is to go out and shoot a solid round."

Whiteside used to play in some high-level amateur tournaments, but this season he's stuck close to home and played mostly partnership tournaments — in which his team invariably places near the top.

Golfers in the championship, first and second flights tee off beginning at 7:20 a.m. today. The final round is Sunday afternoon.

Saturday's Question: Who recently set an American high jump record?

Friday's Answer: Cuba's Javier Sotomayor leaped 8-0 Saturday in Puerto Rico.

JIMMY PATTERSON

Gregg's attitude makes it hard not to root for SMU

In about a month, a new era begins at Southern Methodist University. The latest group of Mustangs — of which only three have ever played college football before — takes the field in refurbished Ownby Stadium to begin what might very well be the most devestating year of futility in the history of the Southwest Conference. Lord, when all the dust settles SMU might lay claim to the worst year of college football in history, period.

Patterson

Two seasons after the NCAA imposed the death penalty, ridding SMU of football for one season, followed by the Mustangs' self-imposed punishment, the Ponies are back and anxious to get the show going when they host Rice, September 2.

And Forrest Gregg is the fall guy. It's his duty to guide a group of what amounts to fifth-year high school seniors against teams like Notre Dame, Texas A&M and Houston.

But Gregg wouldn't care to do anything else. One would suppose he is either a masochist or someone who possesses an intense loyalty to his alma mater. And after listening to Gregg speak last week in Dallas, it is the latter — the desire to bring SMU back to respectability — that motivates the former Green Bay Packer head coach.

"I do not build in excuses," Gregg said. "I won't let my kids build in excuses. We'll play to win. We'll fall short at times, but we'll get back up and play again."

Gregg said the Ponies' only realistic goal this year is to improve each week. If they can do that, "then we'll have accomplished what we set out to do the first year."

One of the most pleasing angles of the SMU story is the support the team is getting. Support from those you may not expect. Baylor head coach Grant Teaff is genuine in his backing of SMU and Gregg's attempts to bring the team back to the forefront.

"I've said it behind his back, now I'm going to say it to his face," Teaff began. "I don't think SMU could've found anybody more suited from a talent standpoint and from a mental standpoint to get SMU back.

"I want to see Forrest succeed. I know what he's got to go through and what it takes. I want him to be successful, but not too successful on a certain day."

Gregg appreciates the kind words from his peers and he's not about to scurry away from the truth when asked about the '89 season. He knows the Mustangs will be trampled on week in and week out. He expects it. But it doesn't seem to bother him.

"I'm a pretty realistic person," he said. "I knew we had a job to do. If you know what's in front of you, you can handle it a little bit easier maybe.

"It's hard for me to talk about stars or anything else right now until you see them actually play, and see what their calibre of competition is all about. But we're looking forward to it.

"We'll start out with probably 100, 125 kids. And you can break it down pretty easily. Forty-three will be scholarship players. The remainder will be walk-ons."

Gregg is a hard man to read. If ever anyone looked like a college football coach, it is Forrest Gregg. If ever a movie was made about him, Gregory Peck would get the starring role.

As stonefaced as he is, his allegiances to SMU come shining through when he explains why he insisted on the Mustangs starting their football program over in Ownby Stadium:

"Ownby is not enough to carry a Division I college football program. It'll hold just a little over 24,000 people. But our No. 1 priority was to move SMU football back to the campus. That's where college football should be played. It'll help the school spirit, and if school spirit is improved, that will help team spirit.

"If you're an alumni, you like to go back to the college where you had a good experience. We didn't have that at Texas Stadium. Part of the criticism we got for moving back to SMU was that Texas Stadium was a good recruiting tool. Texas Stadium is for the Dallas Cowboys. Ownby is for SMU."

Gregg, who says he hopes to be in the running for the SWC title by 1994, said SMU is the only college job he would've considered. "If the opportunity had come along, I don't think I'd have gone anywhere else."

Added Teaff on the new SMU: "I think it's gonna work fine. We'll all make it work."

For the sake of the league's integrity, let's all hope it does.

Toronto pitcher misses third no-hitter

Associated Press

TORONTO (AP) — Dave Stieb, baseball's heartbreak hurler who lost consecutive no-hit bids with two outs in the ninth inning last September, came within one out of a perfect game Friday night before settling for a two-hit 2-1 victory for the Toronto Blue Jays over the New York Yankees.

Stieb's near-gem came in the 28th game since the opening of the Blue Jays' new SkyDome and was witnessed by a sellout crowd of 48,789, the largest home crowd in Toronto history.

After retiring the first 26 batters and striking out 11, including pinch hitters Hal Morris and Ken Phelps to start the ninth, Stieb fell behind 2-0 on Roberto Kelly, who lashed the next pitch into left field for a double. The Blue Jays have never had a no-hitter in their 13-year history.

Steve Sax singled singled Kelly home on the next pitch but third baseman Kelly Gruber made a diving stop of Luis Polonia's smash — the Blue Jays' only difficult fielding chance of the game — and forced Sax at second.

Stieb came into the game with a 4.11 ERA but a 10-6 record. His only other complete game this season was a one-hitter against the Yankees on April 10. Jamie Quirk, no longer in the majors, singled with one out in the fifth inning.

Over the firtst 8 2-3 innings the Yankees hit several balls hard but all went directly at Toronto fielders. Sax and Don Mattingly lined out to center fielder Lloyd Moseby in the first inning, Polonia lined sharply to shortstop Tony Fernandez in the fourth and Sax lined to right fielder Mookie Wilson in the seventh.

Athletics 5, Mariners 3

Oakland right-hander Dave Stewart became the first American League pitcher to win 16 games, beating Seattle for his fourth victory over the Mariners this season.

Stewart, 16-6, improved his record over the Mariners to 11-0 since joining the Athletics in June 1986. He has a 13-2 career record against Seattle.

Stewart allowed eight hits and one walk and struck out six before he was relieved by Dennis Eckersley after giving up a leadoff homer to Jeffrey Leonard in the ninth. The homer was Leonard's 16th and first since June 27.

AL Roundup

Indians 4, Red Sox 3

Joey Belle and Brook Jacoby hit consecutive second-inning homers and Jacoby went 4-for-4 as the Cleveland Indians edged the Boston Red Sox.

Bud Black, 9-8, whose only loss since June 11 was last Saturday against Boston, gave up three runs and five hits in 6 1-3 innings for the victory. Doug Jones pitched a perfect ninth for his 26th save, tops in the American League.

Twins 5, Royals 1

Gene Larkin's three-run homer and Allan Anderson's eight-hit pitching led the Minnesota Twins past the Kansas City Royals.

Minnesota led 2-1 going into the bottom of the fourth when Greg Gagne and Al Newman singled off Luis Aquino, 6-5, with one out. After Randy Bush flied out, Larkin hit Aquino's first pitch for his third home run of the season.

Angels 6, Brewers 2

Chili Davis hit a pair of two-run homers and Wally Joyner also homered as the California Angels beat Milwaukee, rocking veteran left-hander Jerry Reuss in his debut with the Brewers.

Winner Chuck Finley, 13-7, allowed three hits in five innings and Willie Fraser finished for his first save as the Angels remained one-half game ahead of Oakland in the American League West.

Rangers 6, Orioles 4

Julio Franco hit a three-run homer and Charlie Hough posted his first victory since June 18 as the Texas Rangers handed the Baltimore its 14th loss in 16 games.

The Rangers jumped to a 5-0 lead as eight of their first 12 batters got hits, including Franco's first-inning homer, and handed the Orioles their first loss in four games with President Bush in attendance.

White Sox 5, Tigers 4

Doubles by Carlton Fisk and Ozzie Guillen keyed a two-run rally in the bottom of the ninth inning gave the Chicago White Sox a triumph over the Detroit Tigers for their 12th consecutive home victory.

Cubs win, but still in second

Associated Press

Vance Law broke a ninth-inning tie with a run-scoring single, and Ryne Sandberg and Mark Grace homered to give Chicago a 3-2 victory over Pittsburgh, the Cubs' 11th win in 14 games.

The Cubs have won 12 of their last 17 against Pittsburgh, including all four games at Three Rivers Stadium this season. The loss was the Pirates' seventh in their last eight games, including four of their last five at home.

With the victory, the second-place Cubs moved within one game of the first-place Montreal Expos in the National League East.

The Cubs had managed only one hit off Pirate starter Doug Drabek, 8-8, since Sandberg and Grace had homered in the third, when Damon Berryhill singled to lead off the ninth. Joe Girardi ran for Berryhill and moved to second on Mitch Webster's sacrifice.

Law, who broke into organized ball in the Pirates' organization, then dropped an RBI-single just inside the right field line.

Mike Bielecki, 11-5, a former Pirate, allowed seven hits over eight innings. He checked the Pirates on one hit over the last five innings he worked after allowing solo homers to Andy Van Slyke in the second and Benny Distefano in the third.

Mitch Williams worked the ninth for his 28th save.

Bielecki has won four of his last five decisions and is 2-1 against the Pirates this season. Drabek lost to the Cubs for the first time in four decisions the last two seasons. Drabek, who had allowed only one earned run in his first 20 innings against the Cubs this season, allowed nine hits, struck out six and walked one in 8 1-3 innings.

Drabek had limited Chicago to one run in 20 innings this season until Sandberg and Grace hit solo homers in the third, giving the Cubs a 2-1 lead.

Sandberg's homer was his 16th.

NL Roundup

Grace, who has a .500 career average at Three Rivers Stadium, hit his eighth of the season a batter later.

Drabek retired nine straight hitters after Grace's homer until Damon Berryhill singled in the sixth.

The Pirates, who had taken a 1-0 lead on Van Slyke's homer in the second, tied the score at 2-2 on Distefano's solo homer leading off the third.

Van Slyke's homer, his fourth, was his first since July 4 and broke a 1-for-19 slump. Distefano's homer, also off Bielecki, was his first of the season and only his second in the majors since 1986.

Mets 11, Expos 5

Howard Johnson hit a three-run homer to highlight a four-run first inning and the New York Mets started a key three-game series against Montreal with a victory over the first-place Expos.

The victory moved the Mets within six games of Montreal in the National League East, with eight games left against the Expos.

Johnson, who has two or more hits in 14 of his last 19 games, also had a single, triple, three runs scored and two stolen bases.

Juan Samuel had three hits, including a two-run homer, and Dave Magadan added a pair of run-scoring doubles to pace the Mets' 15-hit attack. Darryl Strawberry also had three hits for the Mets.

Bryn Smith, 9-5, entered the game having allowed only two earned runs to the Mets in 19 innings this season. But in three innings, he allowed seven hits and six runs.

Keith Miller and Samuel led off the first inning with singles and Johnson followed with his 27th home run. Magadan added an RBI double for the fourth run of the inning.

Johnson is 18-for-41 against the Expos this season with five homers and 10 RBIs.

The Expos came back against Bob Ojeda, 7-9, on Spike Owen's RBI single in the second and added two more runs in the third on Tim Raines' run-scoring single and a throwing error by catcher Barry Lyons allowing Andres Galarraga to score.

Ojeda settled down and finished allowing eight hits in 7 2-3 innings. Wally Whitehurst pitched the final 1 1-3 innings.

Reds 5, Braves 4

Mariano Duncan led off the 10th inning with his first home run of the season, giving the Cincinnati Reds a win over the Atlanta Braves.

Duncan slammed an 0-2 fastball from Joe Boever over the right-center field fence to give the Reds their sixth victory in their last eight games.

Boever, 4-4, came on in relief to start the ninth and surrendered the tying two runs to the Reds. The win went to John Franco, 3-4, the sixth Reds' pitcher, who pitched one perfect inning.

The Reds tied the game in the ninth when Boever walked Eric Davis and Ken Griffey. After stolen bases moved them into scoring position, they scored on Todd Benzinger's single.

The Reds missed an opportunity to win the game in the ninth, when with the bases loaded, Scotti Madison failed to deliver on a squeeze bunt and Benzinger was caught in a rundown between third and home.

Cardinals 6, Phillies 3

Joe Magrane pitched a three-hitter through eight innings, and Vince Coleman and Pedro Guerrero each homered, to lead the St. Louis Cardinals over the Philadelphia Phillies.

The victory moved the third-place Cardinals within five games of the National League East-leading the Montreal Expos, who lost 11-5 to the New York Mets.

Magrane, 13-7, had one strikeout and no walks in beating the Phillies for the third time in three decisions this season. Todd Worrell pitched the ninth for his 16th save.

Dorsett retirement imminent

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — Denver Broncos running back Tony Dorsett suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee and possible other damage, placing his career in jeopardy, Broncos trainer Steve Antonopulos reported Friday.

Dorsett, 35, was scheduled for arthroscopic surgery Saturday morning.

Dorsett injured his knee while running a pass pattern in shorts on Thursday. There was no contact, and the knee gave way when Dorsett planted his left leg to make a cut.

A sophisticated magnetic resonance imaging test administered Friday afternoon in Denver disclosed the damage.

Besides the ligament tear, Antonopulos said Dorsett may have sustained cartilage and other ligament damage as well. The arthroscopic procedure, set for 7:30 a.m. Saturday, should reveal the exact damage, the trainer said. Major reconstructive surgery then may be prescribed.

Asked if the MRI report confirmed his worst fear, Antonopulos said, "Yes. At this point, I would say his career definitely is in jeopardy. At his age, I imagine he has to think about (retiring)."

Antonopulos said "numerous people have come back from this type of surgery," but he admitted he didn't know if any 35-year-old running backs had been able to recover from it.

Dorsett, entering his 13th NFL season, is the No. 2 rusher in NFL history with 12,739 yards, trailing only Walter Payton's 16,726 yards.

Dorsett had intended to make this season his last one, but had been given an ultimatum in the off-season by coach Dan Reeves to improve his receiving skills or risk being released. He played sparingly last season in his first year in Denver after 11 seasons in Dallas, rushing for 703 yards.

End nears for Lomax

By WALTER BARRY

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — Quarterback Neil Lomax said Friday his arthritic left hip was so bad it was unlikely he could play for the Phoenix Cardinals and that he will decide by Monday whether to retire.

If Lomax doesn't retire, he likely would be placed on the team's injured list.

ANGELS

If the Diablos were leg weary, it didn't show. They stole six bases, Ramon Sambo stealing a run in the second when he reached on a fielder's choice, swiped second and then third, coming home on the wild throw into the outfield by catcher Otto Gonzalez.

IN THE Midland rally that tied it in the sixth, Rose didn't just hit a two-run triple off the wall in left-center, but came home himself when the relay to third skipped past third baseman D.L. Smith.

Starter Steve Monson, 7-4, looked like he had been designated to go all the way after Thursday's pitcher-draining doubleheader until Chris Graves knocked him out of the box with a 1-5-3 RBI carom off his leg in the seventh. Monson by this time had given up 10 hits, eight runs (six earned) and walked six.

This was the opener of a five-game series and by winning El Paso trimmed Midland's Texas League West lead to one game and it will be David Martinez' job to protect that slim margin in today's 7 p.m. game at Angel Stadium.

Martinez is 9-5 for the season and if he wins tonight, he will have topped his combined victory production of the last two years.

Former major leaguer Brian Clutterbuck, 0-2, will pitch for El Paso.

HALO HOOPS: Until Skeete's catch in the ninth, play-of-the-night belonged to Midland shortstop Gary DiSarcina, who backhanded Tim McIntosh's hit bid in the hole. And from his knees, Gary threw out the runner at first. Cron making a nice stretch to dig out the ball ... Lefty Jim Townsend, 3-1 at Palm Springs, got Angel baptism as Midland's fourth pitcher ... El Paso manager Marc Bombard played the game under protest, pointing out what he felt was a lineup irregularity during the Angels' first inning at bats. As it turned out, it didn't matter, thanks to Skeete.

Brooks back at hot corner

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Hall of Fame inductee Brooks Robinson hasn't set foot in the Alamo City since playing 187 games for the San Antonio Missions in 1956-57.

But that will all change with his appearance in a Missions-sponsored Old-Timers game Saturday night.

The former Missions player and Baltimore Orioles third baseman will give San Antonio fans a taste of the baseball talent that earned him spots on 17 All-Star teams, the World Series Most Valuable Player award and a place in the Hall of Fame in 1983 after a 23-year career.

"They're looking for Brooks Robinson to do something spectacular," he said. "I might do it. You do what you can do. Most of the time you can't do a whole lot, but you try to.

"It was only 19 years ago I was MVP in the World Series. Who knows? I might make a diving catch and throw a guy out again."

The game is scheduled on the second night of a five-game series between the Missions and the Wichita Wranglers.

Round Rock officials talk with investors

Associated Press

AUSTIN (AP) — Round Rock officials have met with Dallas investors who want to buy a minor-league baseball team and possibly move it to the Williamson County area north of Austin.

The group, represented by Kenneth Luce and Thomas Williams, is trying to purchase an existing minor-league team.

"I understand Round Rock is looking for a team, so I came down to make a preliminary visit," said Luce, who works for a real estate brokerage and consulting firm based in Dallas.

"I think it's a wonderful area for a franchise and would consider moving a team here," he said.

More than two months ago, Round Rock officials made public their desire to attract a minor-league team. Two weeks ago, an independent accounting firm hired by the city reported the Travis-Williamson county area would be a good region to support a Double-A team.

Luce said he will review the feasibility study during the next several days.

He said he has enlisted the help of George W. Bush, the president's son and part owner of the Texas rangers.

"George Bush is not part of our group," Luce said. "He's just giving me advice."

The Rangers have a Double-A Texas League franchise in Tulsa, Okla., but Luce would not say if that is the team he is trying to buy.

Littler blows 18th, still leads

JEREMY RANCH, Utah (AP) — Gene Littler survived an 18th-hole bogey to shoot a 5-under-par 67 Friday for the first-round lead at the U.S. West Showdown Classic.

Dale Douglass and Lou Graham were tied for second at 68, followed by qualifier Al Kelley, Homero Blancas, Billy Casper, Bobby Nichols, Tom Shaw and Orville Moody at 69.

Two-time defending champion Miller Barber shot a 74 on the par-72, 7,103-yard Jeremy Ranch Golf Course.

Littler, was at even-par after seven holes but birdied the next three to move into contention. After three more pars, Littler birdied the 14th, 15th and 16th holes to go 6-under before his final-hole bogey.

Littler was close to the hole all day. His only long putt was a 30-footer for birdie on the 14th hole. The other birdie putts were from eight feet or less.

Littler has won one Senior tournament this year — the Aetna Challenge in Naples, Fla. in February — and has earned $145,435 this year with eight top-10 finishes.

Douglass, No. 12 on the Senior Tour's money list with $191,220 this year, played his last 10 holes in 3-under, including four birdies. He also saved par on the fifth hole after putting a shot into a bush, and chipped to within a foot to save par on the seventh hole after pitching over the green.

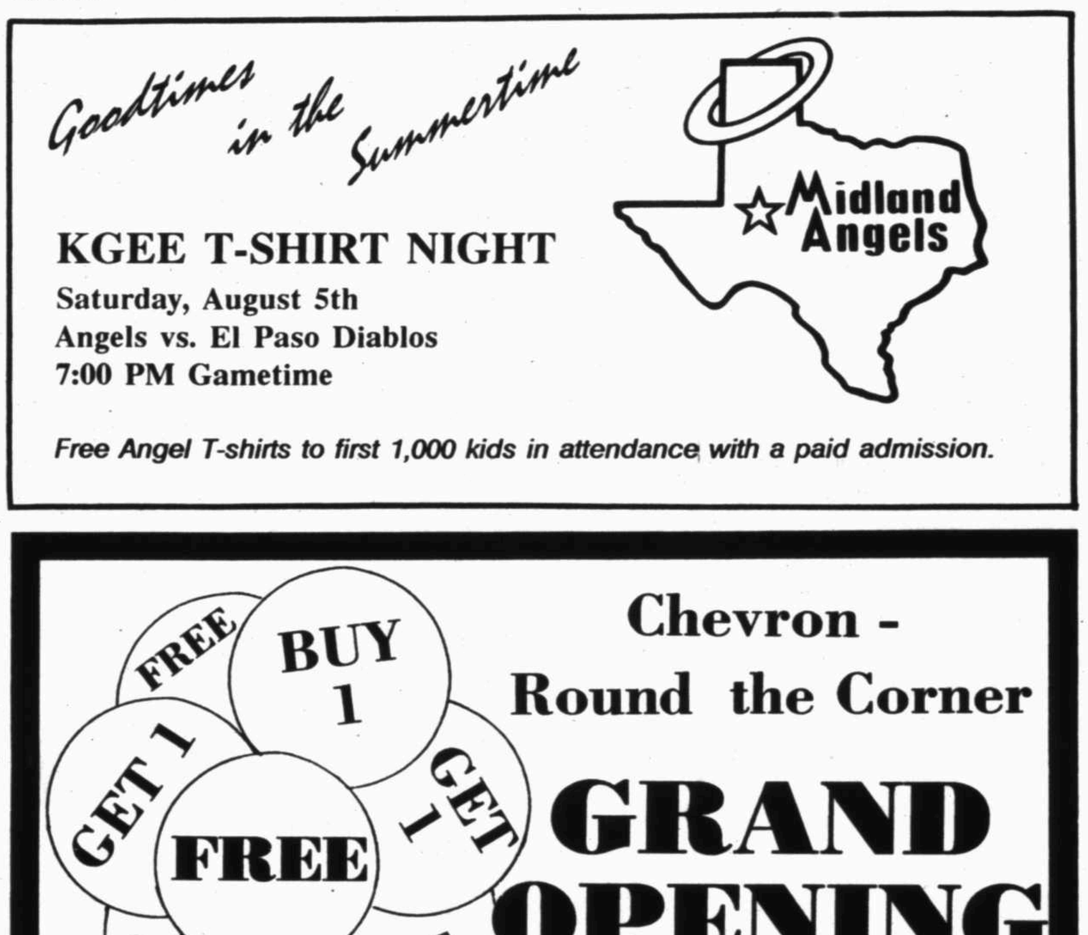

Graham, the 1975 U.S. Open winner, overcame three early bogeys for his 68.

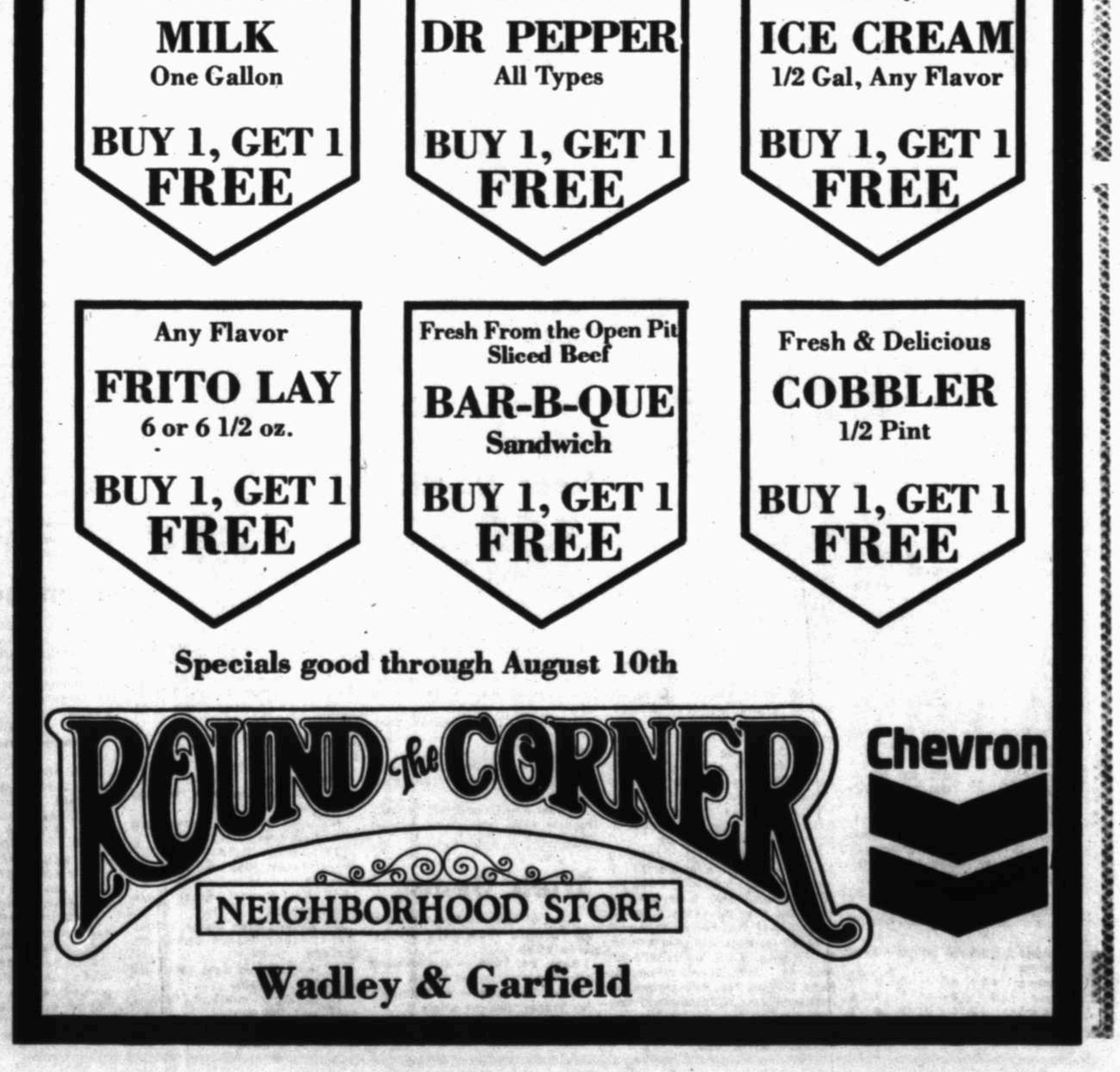

Midland slugs Andrews 10-6

From Staff Reports

Midland upended Andrews 10-6 in Friday action of The Shootout, a 14-15 age group Little League tournament.

Brian Rounding was the winning pitcher for Midland, striking out 13 Andrews' batters along the way. Rene Barrientes took the loss for Andrews.

In other Friday action, Lamesa felled Big Spring, 10-4. Marty Martinez provided offensive heroics for Lamesa, scoring three runs, knocking another in and going 2-for-2 at the plate.

Mike Lucio took the win for Lamesa, striking out 12; Shane Myrick struck out six in a losing effort.

In Thursday action, Midland beat Odessa No. 1, 12-7, behind the pitching of Jimmy Patton and Julian Urquidez and four hits by Allen Chase.

Patton and Urquidez each allowed but one hit. Starter Patton struck out five in three innings, while Urquidez finished with five K's over the last four innings.

Chase's hits included a double and triple, while Smiley Hinojos added a double and triple.

Also Thursday, Lamesa beat Odessa No. 2, 11-6.

The Shootout continues today and Sunday.

Niners, Rams receive foreign crash course

By DAVE CARPENTER

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's crash course in American football extends from the field to the boardroom and even to the subway.

So far, the students get "A" for doryoku or effort and "incomplete" for results.

A wide receiver for the St. Paul's Rushers, one of 500 university teams in Japan, hung his head after dropping a long pass from Kevin Sweeney, the San Francisco 49ers' reserve quarterback, at a clinic Friday. But he charged back up the field and hung onto the ball the next time, to the cheers of his fellow Rushers.

"No doubt it'll be a few years till they catch up to Notre Dame's level, but you know they'll work at it hard," Sweeney said. "They were real receptive to us today. They're a hard-working people."

Ninety uniformed players from the Rushers and the Seijo Orange Beams, whose nickname is catchier than their record, received instruction from 49ers and Los Angeles Rams players here for Saturday's American Bowl preseason NFL game. It was a lesson the Japanese players said they will repeat over and over in practice.

"This is a very good chance for us," said Nori Saito, a 5-foot-7, 140-pound safety.

"Their throwing is very quick, and the wide receivers move very fast. And the linemen are so huge — they are like bears and we're like rats."

Even football cheerleaders went to school Friday. Cheerleaders for the 49ers and Rams ran a two-hour training camp for cheerleaders from six universities in Tokyo at Meiji University.

Meanwhile, Japanese corporate executives are working overtime to turn the citizenry into hard-core football fans. The months-long promotion of the game is culminating this week in a flurry of TV commercials, billboards, subway placards and sponsor hype.

Corporate executives in three-piece suits, wearing white "American Bowl '89" caps, have stood on the sidelines at each of the 49er and Ram practices. The game is a nonprofit venture, they claim, but they are watching it with the scrutiny of speculators looking to invest in a new market.

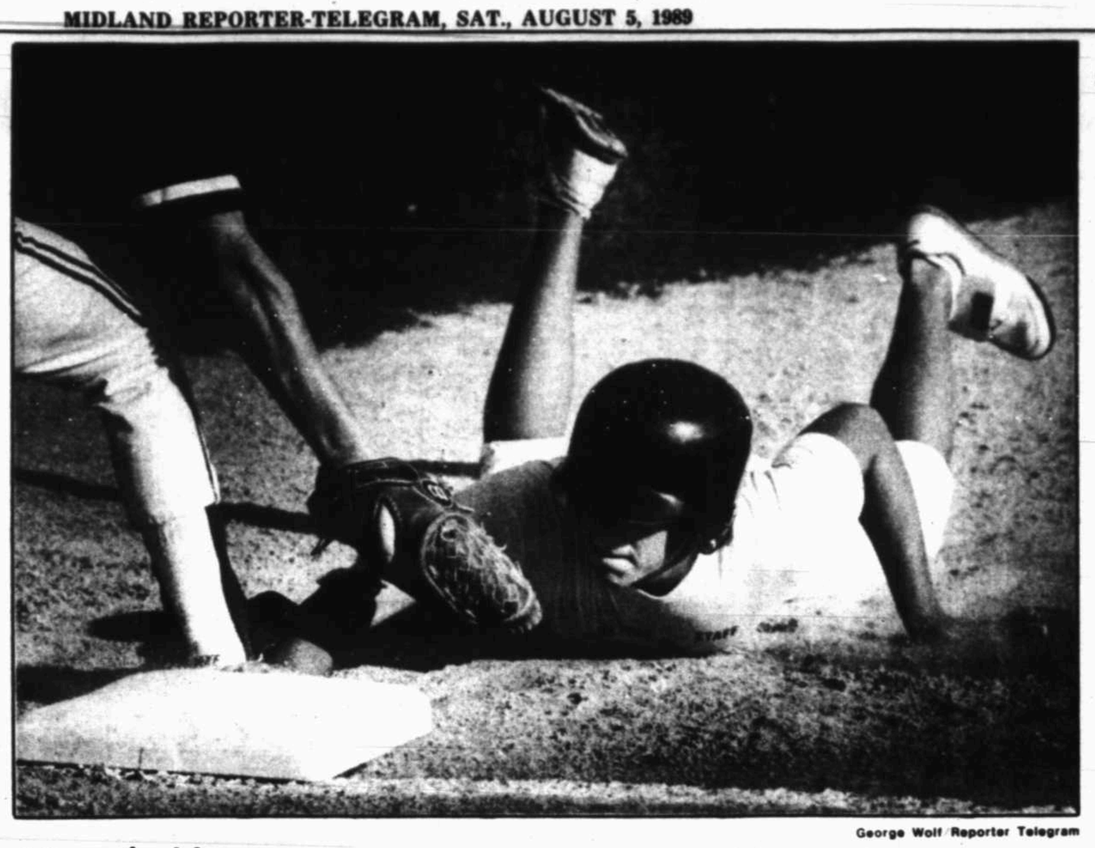

"Since Japan has become so strong economically and there is a lot of friction with the U.S., we'd like to promote better understanding between our two countries," Gyo Ishiguro said through an interpreter wearing a black and silver Los Angeles Raiders cap.

Ishiguro works for the culture and sports promotion department of Yomiuri Shimbun, the world's largest daily newspaper with a circulation of 9.3 million and co-sponsor of the game.

"Since football is very popular in the States, we'd like to show it to the Japanese public," he said. "It's modern, it requires a lot of knowledge and it's exciting physically, so it has the potential to be a big sport here."

The game was a quick sellout — two days or two hours, depending on which promoter is talking. But corporations are believed to have purchased many or most of the tickets, which average $90 apiece.

Still, if the sponsors have their way, the Japanese will see football until they learn to like it.

Heads Up

Erich Hartmon of Odessa's 14-15 Little League team, slides back safely in recent action. Midland beat Odessa No. 1, 12-7, in Thursday action. Lamesa beat Odessa No. 2, 11-6, in The Shootout. The tournament continues through Sunday.

MEN

NOTES: It certainly wouldn't be unprecedented for Whiteside to make up five strokes in the next two days. The former Texas A&M standout rolled to a 14-stroke victory last year with three straight 67s on the same course.

Gee tied for ninth in last year's tournament after winning it all in '87, while Cox did not compete in last year's city tournament.

Golfers should benefit from relatively cool temperatures in today's morning round. Last year's participants teed off Saturday afternoon.

'Who could ask for anything more?'

By JOHN BEYROOTY
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — If he plays it right, the heavyweight champion of the world can make millions of dollars in endorsements, right?

Not so with Mike Tyson.

For all the success he's achieved in the boxing world, it may be a while before Iron Mike does another commercial involving a product in the United States.

Something to do with his image.

So Tyson, who is not exactly hurting for money, will continue to defend his undisputed title.

And for the champ to earn some change on the side, he'll do commercials, but because of his well-documented past troubles we won't see them here.

Somewhere in Los Angeles Friday, Tyson was to begin shooting a Toyota commercial to be aired in Japan for a year.

Tyson and his buddy, Don King, formally announced on Thursday that the champ had signed a seven-figure contract with Toyota Motor Corp. in Japan.

"I'm delighted to be working with the people of Toyota and the people of Japan," Tyson said. "I'm a fighter first, but I enjoy doing commercials. I look forward to improving my commercial status."

Tyson, of course, has done commercials before. Even a Toyota commercial. That one, like the previous others, was negotiated by his estranged manager Bill Cayton. They included Tyson's first endorsement — with Summit Bank of Virginia (worth $125,000) — his first TV commercial for Kodak (worth $200,000) which featured Tyson and his late mentor, Cus D'Amato, and a two-year deal with Nintendo.

This new deal with Toyota, the first for Tyson put together by King, is worth more than $1 million.

Search for rig workers abandoned

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Coast Guard and Chevron abandoned the search for six workers missing from a capsized rig in the Gulf of Mexico, Friday.

"Chevron has exhausted all efforts for the search for the missing people by divers," the company said in a prepared statement.

Avis Bourg Co., the company that owns the rig, will salvage it and continue the search for the workers, Chevron said.

Avis Bourg officials did not return repeated calls to their office.

The Coast Guard next week will begin its investigation of the accident which killed at least four men when an oil rig capsized Monday.

The lift boat, or "jackup rig," with legs that can be moved up while traveling or down while working, remains on its side in 30 feet of water. It was heading inland as Hurricane Chantal approached when it toppled.

THE OLD WAY

The old pump handle was the counterpart of our modern water faucet. You simply had to be thirsty enough to want to pump water.

New ways often bring little that's new. They just make it easier to satisfy our necessities.

But those who spiritually thirst—for souls that are dry. There is no new way. There is no way to pipe the water of a new life into the soul of a person.

It isn't difficult to overcome the spiritual drought of our time. But you've got to realize your own thirst for God. And you've got to draw on the deep, refreshing resources where they are. Let the church or synagogue of your choice help you rediscover the old way.

Crestview Baptist presents musical

The musical "The Majesty and the Glory" is being presented by the Sanctuary Choir of Crestview Baptist Church at 7 p.m. today.

The work is composed of favorite hymns and spiritual songs arranged by Tom Fettke. Two of the numbers that the choir will be doing will be signed by Kathy Blossom.

This special concert concludes the 1988-89 season for the choir, which is conducted by Ty Morris Jr., minister of music at Crestview Baptist Church.

The public is invited to attend.

Crestview Baptist Church has regular Sunday morning worship services at 8:30 and 10:50 a.m. Bible study is at 9:30 a.m. Evening worship is at 7 p.m. A mid-week prayer service is held at 6 p.m. Wednesday in the church's Educational/Activity Center.

Folklife festival begins

SAN ANTONIO — Texas Catholic Conference on Community Ethnic Affairs will sponsor the 13th annual Multi-Ethnic Folklife Mass Sunday at 9:30 a.m. at Arneson River Theater in San Antonio's historic La Villita.

Some 26 ethnic groups will participate in a colorful worship ceremony with flags, costumes, music, arts and crafts of their lands — as well as prayers in many languages.

Presiding celebrant and homilist will be the Rev. John Yanta, pastor of St. James the Apostle Parish and a past president of TCCCEA.

Music will be provided by the Gospel Choir of Holy Redeemer Parish and the Vietnamese Catholic Parish Choir.

Texas Catholic ethnic groups participating include: Alsatians, Asian Indians, Belgians, Blacks, British, Canary Islanders, Cubans, Czechs, Dutch, Filipinos, French, Germans, Hungarians, Irish, Italians, Japanese, Lebanese, Mexicans, Native Americans, Polish, Puerto Ricans, Scottish, Spanish, Ukranians, Vietnamese and Welsh.

Held annually on the Sunday morning of the University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures' Texas Folklife Festival, this celebration acknowledges the many immigrant groups who came to Texas — and their descendants who now populate the state.

Each group brought unique customs and traits — but these groups also brought their Catholic faith from the far corners of the world as they sought freedom and opportunities in Texas. This Mass demonstrates the diversity of their languages, costumes and customs while celebrating the unity of their Catholic faith.

Suggested dress is ethnic costume or casual dress appropriate for attending the Texas Folklife Festival.

For more information, call Theresa Gold, general arrangements chairperson, at 1-512-344-7229.

Group to meet Thursday

Midland Church Recreators meets at noon Thursday, Aug. 24, in the Fellowship Hall at First Baptist Church.

The purpose of the meeting is to discuss the upcoming volleyball season.

Fee for the volleyball is $20 per team. The league will begin Sept. 11. Entry deadline is Sept. 1.

Reservations are required by noon Wednesday, Aug. 23, for lunch at the noon meeting Aug. 24. Cost for the meal is $3.

For more information or to make reservations call First Baptist Church Activities Building, 682-7669.

Appreciation service set

The third appreciation service for the Rev. S.V. Ferguson will conclude Sunday at 3 p.m. at Greater St. Luke A.M.E. Church, 401 South Adams Street.

The Rev. John Frank Campbell of New Jerusalem will preach the appreciation sermon. Choirs from several churches will render selections including Hollowell United Methodist Church, Macedonia Baptist Church, Mt. Olive Baptist Church, Mt. Zion Baptist Church and Mt. Rose Baptist Church.

Singers set to perform

ODESSA — The Reach Out Singers are coming to Odessa to the Kingston Avenue Baptist Church Wednesday as part of the group's international tour.

The program begins at 7 p.m. and the public is invited to share the contemporary and traditional music.

A love offering will be taken.

Gospel meeting planned

Lee Street Church of Christ, 101 N. Lee, will begin its Annual Gospel Meeting Sunday and will continue through Friday.

Guest speaker for the week will be Rufus Johnson of Abilene. Services will commence at 7:45 p.m.

The public is cordially invited to attend.

Summer session continues

The Youth Spiritual Enlightenment (YSE) '89 Summer Session for teens grades seven through 12, is continuing its summer session which began on Thursday.

Youth volleyball and basketball tournaments began at Washington Park at 8 a.m. today.

Sunday at 3 p.m. the outgoing president of YSE, Paul Dunn, will deliver hs farewell address and the YSE mass choir will be in concert at Mt. Rose Baptist Church, 21 Tyler St.

For more information, call Wanda, 699-1607 or Linda, 684-4659.

Fort Bliss chaplain says Lord his only weapon

FORT BLISS, Texas (AP) — Maj. James Winn looks dangerous in his camouflage fatigues and black combat boots.

In fact, at 6 feet 4 inches tall and 195 pounds, he looks downright deadly.

But if the Fort Bliss officer is ever sent off to war, he'll be carrying a Bible, not an M-16.

"My only weapon is the word of the Lord," he said. "If it came between me and the enemy, I would have to be killed.

"I would never carry a weapon. First of all, it's too heavy."

That doesn't mean he or other Army chaplains avoid combat — they follow the troops.

Winn, 41, said he knew he might be called to war when he joined the Army 13 years ago as a minister of the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

"I had to make a very clear decision that one day we might have to get the bombs and guns and whistles out and I would have to do my part," the Chicago native said. "And I've always known that wherever the soldier goes, I'll go.

"But we all have a mission, the artilleryman, the infantryman, the chaplain. And mine is to preach the word of God. Not only do I believe it, the soldiers expect it."

Winn, who's married and has two children, said the life of an Army chaplain is filled with challenges, many of them unique to the military.

"The chaplain must know that, yes, I'm a child of God, but I'm a soldier, too. We have to keep our boots shined and meet all the physical requirements of other soldiers," Winn said.

He does almost an hour of aerobics every day to keep trim since "the cav (armored cavalry) troopers aren't going to listen to someone whose belly is out to here."

Most of his Army time, including duty in West Germany and Greece, has been spent in the field serving "a troop ministry. I never had a congregation, where I was 'the man.' "

That changed when he came to Fort Bliss last year.

AP Laserphoto

Chaplain Maj. James Winn has served in the Army 13 years as a minister of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. He is also pastor of one of the largest congregations on Fort Bliss at Centurion Chapel.

He was appointed the post chaplain staff resource manager — in charge of money, supplies and people — and named pastor of a special congregation.

"At Centurion Chapel, the other side of my dream came true," Winn said. "After 13 years of troop time, I had a congregation."

The congregation is unusual, he said, because it's mostly retirees. About half his congregation has attended the same chapel for a decade, unlike some Army chapels filled with transient soldiers.

Winn's boss, post chaplain Col. Clyde Brown, said Centurion is the largest Protestant service on post, averaging about 500 people.

"I think they're one of the most vital congregations," Brown said. "It includes 15 to 20 denominations, has five choirs, and has a parish council organization of retired and active people."

Brown said Winn personifies what the Army wants in a chaplain — and those requirements are stringent:

"First, a chaplain must be fully ordained by his denomination. He must have 120 hours of undergraduate study and 90 hours of graduate study, so he will usually have his master of divinity degree."

Then each chaplain candidate is selected by an endorsing committee of his denomination. Next, he must be interviewed and recommended by a military post chaplain.

Then his credentials and medical information are given to the Army's chaplain headquarters.

Once in the Army, Brown said, the chaplain goes to school for nine weeks. Then he faces 18 months of evaluation.

"It's about three years before they are prepared for full military chaplain duties," Brown said.

"Our chaplains' primary mission is to go where the soldiers are," he said. "We try to do our best to serve families, but that's not our main effort."

Winn said it's a life he never wants to leave.

"I know I want to be around soldiers the rest of my life. It gets in your blood after a while," he said. "I guess I love to be around soldiers because I am one.

"It is a service — serving your fellow man and keeping the peace. I believe God smiles on our peacekeeping."

Protestants modifying abortion positions

NEW YORK (AP) — Most major Protestant denominations which once widely condoned abortion now either oppose it or specify limitations to it. They've modified their positions.

The changes have come over the last decade as abortions went on at the rate of about 1.5 million a year and advances in embryology increased understanding of the developing fetus.

Aware of such factors, denominational conventions, one after another, have qualified their stands on abortions, voicing misgivings about it and condemning use of it for various purposes.

"They've back-pedaled," said the Rev. J. Robert Nelson, director of the Institute of Religion of the Texas Medical Center in Houston.

He said the "staggering statistics" and the new therapeutic embryology on distinctive characteristics of the fetus as not part of the woman's body, "have made for second and third thoughts" about abortion.

"The whole movement toward more conservative religious positions also doubtlessly accounts to some extent for the shift," he added in a telephone interview.

The revisions began long before the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision expanding state jusisdiction on the issue, but became general among mainline denominations in the 1980's.

Although recognizing abortion's legality and individual decision-making about it, four major Protestant denominations last year added extensive circumstances in which it was rejected.

The Episcopal Church, stiffening its past stance, sanctioned abortion "only in extreme situations. We emphatically oppose abortion as a means of birth control, family planning, sex selection, or any reason of mere convenience."

The United Methodist Church, while recognizing "tragic conflicts of life with life that may justify abortion," added opposition to it as a means of birth control or gender selection.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) added language saying abortion "should not be used for convenience or to ease embarrassment or as a means of birth control." The church, now engaged in a major reappraisal of the abortion issue, has scheduled a pro-and-con dialogue on it Nov. 17-19 in Kansas City.

American Baptist Churches, in a revised, middle-ground stance, denounced "irresponsible sexual behaivor" contributing to the "large number of abortions each year," and says:

"As American Baptists we oppose abortion, as a means of avoiding responsibility for conception, as a primary means of birth control without regard for the far-reaching consequences of the act."

However, the United Church of Christ maintains a clearly pro-choice position, reaffirming it in July at a general synod in Fort Worth, Texas, at the same time the high court upheld some state prerogatives on the issue.

The denomination deplored the court decision, charging it would make "freedom of choice" difficult for the poor. A denominational committee set a special "theology colloquy" on the subject Aug. 13-18 in Craigville, Mass.

While Roman Catholicism, Eastern Orthodoxy, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons), the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod and various evangelical churches have steadily condemned abortion, several Protestant bodies joined that effort near the turn of the 1980's.

About that time, the nation's biggest Protestant body, Southern Baptists, began stiffening opposition to abortion, and now condemns it in all cases except to save the life of the mother.

The former American Lutheran Church, now merged into the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, toughened its stand in 1980, declaring that abortion "ends a unique human life."

The statement deplored "the absence of any legal protection of life from conception to birth."

Episcopalians, revising their position about it last year, voted down proposed language that would have opposed legislative restrictions on abortion. Such legislatives moves incubated following the recent high court decision.

Orthodox Jews condemn abortion except when the mother's life is endangered, while Conservative Judaism sanctions abortion in cases of "severe anguish" while Reform Judaism upholds woman's choice about it.

The National Council of Churches, including most major Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations, has never taken a position on abortion because of diverse views about it.

Most churches historically had condemned abortion prior to the 1973 Supreme Court ruling allowing it, but mainline Protestant bodies afterward moved to support the decision and right of women to abortion.

United of West Texas has seminars

ODESSA — "Becoming All That You Can Be" will be the subject of the seminars to be held at Unity of West Texas, 210 E. 12th St., at 7:30 p.m. Sunday and Monday.

These seminars will be conducted by Mary Katherine MacDougall, pastor of the Unity Center of Positive Prayer in Austin.

MacDougall

Ms. MacDougall received a B.A. degree from the University of Michigan and continued graduate study at the university and the University of Texas at Austin.

She has taught English, creative writing and journalism in secondary schools in Michigan and Texas and at UT Austin, and has been the woman's editor for the Abilene Reporter News and the Austin American-Statesman and founding editor of an insurance trade journal.

Her "Now" books that she has written describe how to be happy, prosperous, healthy and loving. Eight of her books and several hundred articles have been published in both English and Spanish.

For 15 years she has presented "Truth to South Central Texas" in weekly radio broadcasts, and she has given lectures and conducted workshops throughout the United States, Canada, Jamaica, Puerto Rico, Venezuela and Trinidad.

In 1986, the Association of Unity Churches honored her with a special award for being an "outstanding expressor of God's Light." She is a member of Women in Communications, Inc., Delta Kappa Gamma and is listed in Who's Who in American Women, Who's Who in the South and Southwest, Contemporary Authors, Bicentennial Memorial Edition of Community Leaders and Noteworthy Americans, 2,000 Women of Achievement and Notable Americans.

She is the mother of five children and has six grandchildren.

Child care will be provided.

"Becoming All That You Can Be" seminars are open to the public.

Odessa man to be ordained as priest

Following a tradition of almost 2,000 years, the calling down of the Holy Spirit and the imposition of hands marks the ordination of another priest for the Diocese of San Angelo.

Herrera

Bishop Michael D. Pfeifer, OMI, Catholic Bishop of San Angelo, will be the ordaining prelate in the ancient rite as Deacon David Lee Herrera of Odessa becomes a priest of Jesus Christ.

The Mass of Ordination will take place at 10:30 a.m. Aug. 12 at Sacred Heart Cathedral in San Angelo. Herrera will celebrate his first mass at 10 a.m. Aug. 13 at St. Mary's Church in Odessa.

The public is invited to both services.

Herrera, 27, is the son of Manuel and Grace Herrera of Odessa, members of St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Parish. At the time of his entrance into the seminary, the family were members of St. Mary's Parish, before the creation of the new St. Elizabeth Seton Parish.

Herrera has elected to consider St. Mary's his home and will celebrate his first Mass there.

The new priest graduated from Odessa Permian High School and received an associate degree in business administration from Odessa College.

He enrolled in St. Mary's Seminary, Houston, where he received his bachelor's degree in philosophy from the University of St. Thomas.

Herrera then was assigned to residence at the Pontifical North American College in Vatican City. He completed his theological course of studies at the Pontifical Gregorian University, Rome.

"I can see that there are different issues for different peoples, and that when Pope John Paul II speaks, he must generally speak to the 'universal' church, an aspect which many people, including Americans don't consider," Herrera said.

Baptists to have evangelism conference

ODESSA — The Baptist of West Texas will convene at Immanuel Baptist Church, 4020 E. University, Aug. 17-18 for the annual West Texas Evangelism Conference.

Sessions will begin at 7 p.m. with a morning session on that Friday at 9:45 a.m.

The conference is sponsored by some 170 Baptist churches composed of seven associations: Big Bend, Big Spring, Castle Gap, Midland, Odessa, Pecos Valley and Permian.

Featured speakers are the Rev. Kenneth Hemphill, the Rev. Morris Chapman and the Rev. James Semple. Dale Durham will coordinate the music.

Chapman has been pastor of First Baptist, Wichita Falls since 1979. He is a graduate of Mississippi College, Clinton, and received the master of divinity and doctor of divinity degrees from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth.

Hemphill has been pastor of First Baptist Church of Norfolk, Va., since 1981. He received his bachelor of arts degree from Wake Forrest, his master of divinity and doctor of ministry degrees from Southern Seminary, Louisville, Ky. He authored "Spiritual Gifts: Experiencing the New Testament Church."

Semple is director of the State Missions Commission of the Baptist General Convention of Texas. He received his bachelor and doctor of divinity degrees from Southwestern Seminary, Fort Worth. In 1968, "On Wings of Eagles" was published.

Durham is minister of music and education at First Baptist Church, Plainview. He is a graduate of East Texas Baptist University and Southwestern Baptist Seminary. He has two recordings, "This is My Song" and "The Durhams Sing of His Love." He has served churches in Kerrville, Houston, Brownfield, Anaheim, Calif., and more recently in Hobbs, N.M.

The theme of the conference is "Biblical Basis for Evangelism."

The public is invited to attend. No admission is charged.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 6, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Look to the future, not the past. Your parents' expectations may be unrealistic. Be true to yourself. A financial coup is part of the picture. Think big, whether you have money or love in mind. Learn to keep some of your accomplishments to yourself. Other people will be more impressed if they find out about your successes on their own.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: film star Robert Mitchum, artist Andy Warhol, actresses Stepfanie Kramer and Soleil Moon-Frye, legendary comedian Lucille Ball, slugger Bob Horner, Toronto shortstop Tony Fernandez, designated hitter Ken Phelps, cowboy star "Hoot" Gibson, poet Alfred Lord Tennyson, first lady Edith Roosevelt.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get extra rest today. A very busy week lies ahead. A raise or promotion will come through sooner than hoped. Your decisive manner is a big plus in business now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your dreams will come true if you have the patience to see them through. A romantic encounter lifts your spirits, making you feel very desirable. Look for happiness close to home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can learn a lot about people if you go with the flow today. Someone shares a secret. Be discreet. Get more rest and you will soon be operating on all cylinders again.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A relationship returns to its normal rhythm. Your personal beliefs come into clearer focus. Take time out for vacation, love and children. Making overdue changes on the domestic scene boosts your confidence.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be realistic. Nobody is perfect, not even you. Decorate or renovate your home and you will want to do more entertaining. Travel is invigorating for both mind and body. Invite someone special along.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A decision about a relationship should not be postponed. Travel is possible if the spirit moves you. False starts will land you in more hot water than no start at all.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not become a drudge. Pamper yourself with a few luxuries for a change. A romantic encounter brings happy thoughts this evening. Go out to dinner with someone special.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A new beginning is possible if you believe in yourself. More stable conditions will prevail in the coming months; your finances should show steady improvement. Put some funds aside for a rainy day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Today is perfect for entertaining or taking a romantic excursion to the countryside. Imaginative and poetic ideas abound. You feel on top of the world! Pay attention to what mate has to say.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The domestic scene should be more peaceful now. Be open and aboveboard with partner. Delays are likely if you are careless with the facts. Protect your reputation for reliability.

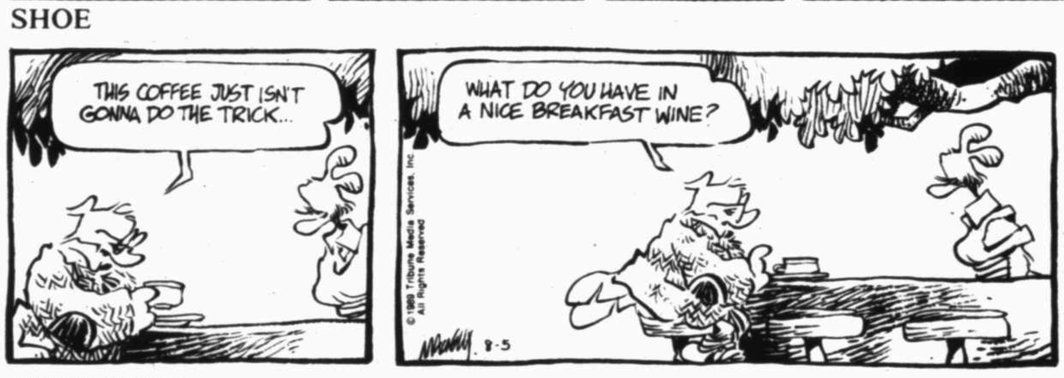

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You have an outstanding opportunity to strengthen a close relationship. Let loved ones know you are in their corner. Romance takes on a new luster. Wear your heart on your sleeve if you like.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You could hit the jackpot in love if you edge further out of your shell. Forget past disappointments and look to the future. Take a child into your confidence. Joint undertakings are favored.

Entrepreneur offers walking tour of places Onassis may be seen

NEW YORK (AP) — For those with nothing better to do on Sunday than dog Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis' footsteps, an entrepreneur has made it easy: a $10 walking tour past the former first lady's apartment house, supermarket, florist and drugstore.

"The chances are really slim," tour leader Sam Stafford admits, of seeing much more than an apartment house, a supermarket or the usual drugstore facade since Mrs. Onassis usually spends weekends on Martha's Vineyard and also is "laying low since the book came out."

Onassis

The recent publication of "A Woman Named Jackie" and her 60th birthday on July 28 prompted Stafford, founder of Sidewalks of New York, to come up with the tour. Also included are churches where she has worshiped; her bank and favorite shops; the Carlyle Hotel, where President Kennedy allegedly had trysts with Marilyn Monroe; the Pierre Hotel, where Aristotle Onassis kept a suite; and the homes of her daughter, Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg, and other relatives.

Stafford did exhaustive research.

"There are about 22 different books written on Jackie through the years and I have all of them," he said. "I've seen her several times. About four years ago, we were walking up Fifth Avenue when my friend screamed, 'There she is!' I tripped and fell at her feet. One of her bodyguards picked me up by the collar."

JUPITER, Fla. (AP) — Burt Reynolds has given his Jupiter Theatre to a community college, but the actor's not giving up the stage without a final bow.

Saturday night's farewell performance will include appearances by Reynolds and his wife, actress Loni Anderson, and "some surprises," but no one's saying what those surprises will be.

Reynolds

"This is our night, our last fling, and we'd like to do it our way," said BRJT producer K.R. Williams. Reynolds has had the theater for more than 10 years.

When the transfer of the theater to Palm Beach Community College was announced earlier this year, Reynolds declined to comment, but earlier he had said it lost $1.5 million in 1987 and 1988.

Saturday night's benefit performance of "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum," at $100 a ticket, is sold out.

Florida Gov. Bob Martinez is expected to attend.

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Texas woman says her daughter, who she said is dating the nephew of Britain's Queen Elizabeth, is returning home to escape the nagging British press.

Pat Horton of Houston says her 24-year-old daughter, Laura Horton, has been hounded by British royalty watchers since she began dating Princess Margaret's 27-year-old son, David, the Viscount Linley.

"I told Laura that being royal was kind of like having a handicap because you don't have much privacy," Mrs. Horton told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "Laura says they can't really do anything because of all of the publicity."

Mrs. Horton said her daughter plans to fly back to Texas soon to take a break. The daughter is a 1986 Texas Christian University graduate with a degree in music, who is a model and singer in London.

LONDON (AP) — Thousands of devoted admirers of Queen Mother Elizabeth vied to show their devotion to the former monarch on her 89th birthday Friday with flowers, cakes and poetry at her residence, Clarence House.

Barry Millard, 7, wearing an Irish Guard uniform, gave the Queen Mother flowers encased in glass, saluted and executed a crisp about-face before the grown-up Irish Guards made their annual march past the residence.

Queen Mother

The Queen Mother, widow of King George VI and one of the most popular royals, looked cool in a blue, lilac and yellow floral print dress and a lilac hat. The Irish Guards played several refrains of "Happy Birthday" and the crowd, estimated at 3,000, joined in.

She spent about 25 minutes accepting flowers from children and appeared to have a smile and a word for each one. Servants circulated afterward to collects armloads of bouquets.

The party inside the residence was joined by Queen Elizabeth II, Prince Charles and Princess Diana, the Duke and Duchess of York, Prince Edward and Princess Margaret's two children, Viscount Linley and Lady Sarah Armstrong-Jones.

Many in the crowd outside were veteran well-wishers and staked out places early.

Julia Fox, 24, from Horsham, was the first on the scene, at 4 a.m.

"I've been coming here for six or seven years now. I just enjoy it because it is a chance to see the Queen Mother with other members of the family," she said.

Emily Coughlan, 64, from Wakefield, said she had been coming every year for about 15 years. She brought a basket of flowers including, she said, heather from Balmoral, the royal estate in Scotland. She also had a big yellow sign saying "Happy Birthday, Ma'am."

Colin Edwards, a local government officer from Macclesfield, Cheshire, brought a basket of fruit, three photographs he had taken of the Queen Mother and a poem.

Joyce Brereton came from Manchester with a home-baked version of the Queen Mother's favorite cake recipe.

The Queen Mother left for Scotland on Friday for the royal family's annual holiday.

On Thursday, the National Gallery unveiled an unconventional portrait of her without her customary hat, wearing a simple dress and staring almost grimly out of the canvas.

Alison Watt, the 23-year-old Glasgow artist who painted it, says she didn't want the portrait to look particularly royal.

"She always appears fluffy, light, wearing flowing clothes and I wanted to make her more solid. She has a lot of character," Ms. Watt said Thursday. "I didn't want her to come across as a wee waif."

The Queen Mother, Ms. Watt said, was happy with the portrait, but that could not be confirmed.

"I do not know what the Queen Mother thinks of it," said a spokesman at Clarence House on Thursday. "Presumably she has seen it because she sat for it, but we do not issue statements on silly little things like this."

House approves $286.5 billion military spending bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic-controlled House, ignoring threats of a possible veto, overwhelmingly approved a $286.5 billion military spending bill Friday that would slash billions of dollars from President Bush's strategic weapons programs.

After deliberating less than an hour, the House voted 312-105 to adopt appropriations legislation that would cut $1.8 billion from Star Wars, strictly curtail production of the B-2 bomber and eliminate all funds for the Midgetman nuclear missile, the advanced tactical fighter and cruise missile.

In a rush to complete its work before a monthlong recess, Congress also took up a compromise $159 billion savings and loan bailout plan, legislation on financial liability for oil spills, aid to farmers hit by the drought and a temporary $70 billion extension to the $2.8 trillion federal debt limit.

While Congress pushed for speedy action on a series of bills, Bush complained to Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, about Senate delays on 120 of his appointments.

"The president wanted to register his deep concern that these were being held up for artificial reasons not related to the candidates themselves," presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater told reporters at the White House.

The "artificial reasons," according to administration officials and Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., are party politics.

Among the nominations the Senate has not yet acted on are Bush's selection of Donald Gregg, who has been linked to the Iran-Contra affair, as ambassador to South Korea and several nominees to the scandal-plagued Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Away from the legislative action and White House complaints, the House ethics committee said it had decided to investigate three lawmakers accused of sexual improprieties.

The committee voted in secret session Thursday to conduct preliminary inquiries into the conduct of Reps. Gus Savage, D-Ill.; Donald E. "Buz" Lukens, R-Ohio, and Jim Bates, D-Calif.

Lukens was convicted in Ohio on a misdemeanor charge of contributing to the unruliness of a child. He was sentenced June 30 to 180 days in jail and fined $1,000 for having sex with a teen-age girl.

Two former aides to Bates have filed a complaint alleging he sexually harassed female members of his staff. Three Democrats filed a complaint against Savage after news reports said a Peace Corps volunteer complained the congressman fondled her while he was traveling in Zaire.

Sen. David Durenberger, D-Minn., disclosed that the Senate ethics committee has completed a preliminary inquiry of his previously disclosed book contract that an opponent claimed was a device to circumvent limits on fee income. The senator said the committee had decided to proceed with its investigation.

The last major legislative battle before the recess concerned the thrift bailout.

A tenuous compromise with the Bush administration, agreed to late Thursday night, was threatened as key House Democrats announced opposition. In particular, they objected to financing provisions that would keep much of the cost of the bailout outside the official federal budget figures and, they said, add substantially to the overall expense to be borne by taxpayers.

With savings and loan losses mounting at a rate of $20 million or more a day, Bush wrote to the lawmakers, "Final passage remains critical to the stability and solvency of the financial system."

The landmark bill would close or merge hundreds of insolvent savings institutions.

Setting the stage for the difficult task of deciding the S&L bailout, the House moved quickly on the defense appropriations bill that largely conformed to the military authorization plan passed by the chamber last week.

Despite word from the White House budget office that the president's senior advisers would recommend a veto, and a similar assessment from the ranking Republican on the House Armed Services Committee, the chamber gave overwhelming approval to the plan.

In fact, the vote for the appropriations plan — 312-105 — amounted to a stronger statement than the 261-162 approval of the authorization bill.

"They have conformed," Rep. William Dickinson of Alabama, ranking GOP member on Armed Services, said of the two pieces of legislation. "But that still makes it veto-bait in my opinion."

Dickinson said he hoped that when members of the Senate and House meet early in September to craft a final version of the bill, the "most egregious add-ons and deletions can be modified and limited to make it acceptable to the administration."

Bush meets with paraplegic climber

WASHINGTON (AP) — A paraplegic Park Service ranger who used only his arm strength to climb a 3,200-foot rock face in Yosemite presented President Bush on Friday with an American flag that he and his partner carried.

"This is great," the president told climber Mark Wellman, who came to the Oval Office in his wheelchair. "You certainly captured the imagination of the whole country."

Wellman later said the Park Service needs more federal money to spend on making the national parks accessible to the handicapped. But he said he did not have time in his brief meeting with Bush to discuss such issues.

"We just need more attention brought to it," he told reporters after the meeting.

Wellman, a naturalist for the park service and director of Yosemite's program for the disabled, said he and Bush discussed the president's love of the outdoors and fishing.

The 29-year-old climber, dressed in his park ranger uniform, and fellow climber, Mike Corbett, gave Bush an American flag that was in the gear they cut loose before they reached the summit of El Capitan on their climb of seven days and four hours.

President Bush meets with paraplegic climber Mark Wellman Friday in the Oval Office. Wellman presented Bush with the American flag he carried to the top of El Capitan in Yosemite National Park.

Also attending the meeting were Park Service Director Jim Ridenour and Jack Moorehead, associate director of operations for the Park Service.

Wellman and Corbett completed the climb on July 26.

Wellman hauled himself, six inches at a time, to the top of the cliff, one of Yosemite's most well-known landmarks.

Their climb captured widespread media attention, including a news conference attended by some 55 reporters and rangers when they reached the summit.

Wellman, whose legs were paralyzed in a 1982 fall from another Yosemite peak, was the first paraplegic to make the vertical trek, doing 7,000 pullups on ropes placed by Corbett.

Wellman chose a route that was almost straight up because it was more practical for him.

The route included tackling the Shield Roof, a ledge jutting 40 feet out from the monolith at 2,000 feet above Yosemite Valley. Wellman and Corbett had to dangle beneath it and hoist themselves up a rope with the valley floor far below them.

Shuttle Columbia once again ready for space mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Columbia spent much of the past 3½ years as a "hangar queen," stripped of spare parts like an old car, but it's ready to fly again on a mission set to begin next week.

The countdown was scheduled to begin at 12:01 a.m. Saturday, with liftoff between 7:30 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. Tuesday. The Defense Department will not be more specific, citing national security but not making it entirely clear why the secrecy is needed.

Columbia, the oldest space shuttle, last was launched on Jan. 12, 1986, its seventh flight. It returned to Earth on Jan. 18, and 10 days later its sister ship Challenger exploded 73 seconds after liftoff, killing its crew of seven and grounding the remaining three shuttles.

The post-accident investigation dictated more than 200 changes on each shuttle to improve safety and performance.

With a shortage of manpower and new parts, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration decided that Discovery and Atlantis, newer than Columbia and more easily refitted, would have priority in the overhaul.

For most of the time since then, Columbia languished in a hangar, with no engines, most of its protective skin torn away, no workers scrambling around on scaffolds. The once-proud spacecraft became a source of spare parts so Discovery and Atlantis could fly.

Workers once hung a "hangar queen" sign on Columbia because it never left its air-conditioned home.

Because of its age — it first flew in 1981 — Columbia also would require the replacement of more than 3,000 of its heat protection tiles and the replacement of more than five miles of wiring.

Thirty-two months after the Challenger accident, on Sept. 29, 1988, American astronauts returned to space aboard Discovery. Atlantis followed in December, Discovery flew again in March and Atlantis again in May.

Workers began in earnest last November to put Columbia back together, under the direction of Ann Montgomery, the first woman to manage the processing of a shuttle for launch.

NASA several months ago set July 31 as Columbia's launch date. Launch director Bob Sieck said he's pleased the agency is missing it by only a few days, considering all that had to be done. "It will be a tremendous relief to get this one done," he said.

Once in orbit, Columbia's all-military crew reportedly will release a 10-ton reconnaissance satellite with high-resolution cameras, along with a much smaller scientific payload.

This will be the fourth of 30 shuttle flights dedicated fully to the Defense Department. As on the earlier ones, the Pentagon is mum about most details, including the length of the flight — expected to be about four days.

Defense officials would like to launch these military missions in complete secrecy, but, with thousands of people working on the shuttle, they know that would be very difficult.

So the Pentagon allows NASA to announce a four-hour launch "window" — from 7:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Tuesday, in this case — and to make the countdown public just nine minutes before the planned liftoff.

Once Columbia is safely orbiting, there will be a news blackout, except for three brief announcements. Four hours after launch, there will be a report on the shuttle's condition; at 24 hours, a four-hour landing "window" will be disclosed; and 24 hours before landing the precise touchdown time will be revealed.

The silence will be broken only if the astronauts experience a serious problem.

The Defense Department contends the secrecy makes it more difficult for Soviet satellites and spy ships off Cape Canaveral to monitor the flight and learn its purpose.

Critics argue that such secrecy is unnecessary because the Soviets undoubtedly already know a great deal about the mission and that once Columbia's satellite is in orbit, the Soviets will be able to track it precisely and know what it is doing.

Senate OKs oil-spill legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Friday approved legislation to boost companies' liability for oil spills, create a nationwide system to clean them up and establish a $1 billion trust fund to help compensate for damages.

The oil-spill legislation was adopted a little more than four months after the tanker Exxon Valdez struck Bligh reef in Alaska's Prince William Sound, rupturing the ship's hull and spilling 11 million gallons of oil that stained the coastline with sticky black ooze.

The bill was approved 99-0, with Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., not voting. Similar legislation is pending in the House.

The legislation directs that contingency plans be drawn for dealing with oil spills on land and water and requires the establishment of cleanup teams with pre-placed equipment.

The $1 billion trust fund will be financed by a 3-cent-a-barrel fee — or tax — on all domestic and imported petroleum.

The bill provides for increasing the limit of compensation for each oil spill from $500 million to $1 billion.

Although similar legislation has been under consideration for years, the bill got a boost from the Exxon Valdez disaster and its cleanup costs, estimated as high as $2 billion.

Other triggering events this year were smaller oil spills in a 24-hour period off Rhode Island, in the Delaware River and in the Houston Ship Channel.

"The purpose of this bill is to make sure that we never again allow an oil spill to become an ecological disaster," said Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., the bill's floor manager.

"This legislation, when enacted into law, will discourage such oil spills in the future and reduce the potential for damage to our nation," said Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell of Maine, who worked for passage of oil-spill legislation for eight years.

"And if they do occur, they will be cleaned up and compensated much more readily than has been the case," Mitchell said.

In Alaska, Gov. Steve Cowper praised the action.

"This bill is a major step forward for Alaska and all other coastal states whose residents face enormous economic, environmental and human damage from oil spills," Cowper said in Fairbanks. "This bill won't end the suffering, but it will make major spills less likely and the response to them quicker and better."

In acting on a series of amendments, the Senate sharply raised an owner's liability for compensating for oil spills and their destruction of property and the environment.

On Thursday night it adopted an amendment by Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., imposing unlimited liability for spills from off-shore oil rigs. The original bill had capped such liability at $100 million.

The Senate on Friday also adopted an amendment by Sen. Howard H. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, that raised liability for spills from deepwater port facilities from $100 million to $350 million.

Metzenbaum's amendment also sharply increased the liability for spills from oil tankers. Liability to owners was raised from $500 a gross ton to $1,000. The bill sets the minimum liability per incident at $10 million.

During debate, some senators contended that raising the liability ceilings would sharply increase insurance costs for owners and lead to a boost in domestic oil and gasoline prices.

"The argument is made that it will come directly out of the pockets of consumers," Metzenbaum said. "I'm not prepared to accept that because there is still some competitiveness in the oil industry."

Bush to form commission to investigate terrorism

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush announced Friday he was forming a seven-member commission to investigate air terrorism, with particular emphasis on the bombing last December of Pan Am Flight 103.

Bush, in an executive order, said the Commission on Aviation Security and Terrorism would study the adequacy of security procedures.

"The commission also shall review options for handling terrorist acts involving aviation," Bush's order said.

The commission will be composed of seven members appointed by the president — including two senators and two members of the House. The chairman of the group would be picked by the president from among the members.

The panel also will study the issue of public notification of bomb threats, the order said.

Presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said in a statement that "ongoing, intensive investigations into all aspects of the destruction of Pan Am Flight 103 will not be affected by the commission's work. Rather, the commission will focus on the need for additional measures to improve aviation security."

The move was applauded by Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, and Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., who had worked with Bush in forming the panel.

"Every American has grieved for the victims of Flight 103 and shared the grief of their families. Although the headlines of the tragedy have faded, questions still linger," Mitchell said.

"They involve basic factual questions such as what kind of aviation security measures may be necessary under what conditions? What kind of warnings should be given to the traveling public? Where, exactly, responsibility should lie between airports, airlines, the federal government and foreign governmetns in seeking to protect the security of Americans travelling abroad."

China says it won't attack educated

BEIJING (AP) — China said Friday it would not crack down on intellectuals even though some participated in recent pro-democracy protests, but it also stripped leading dissident Fang Lizhi of his post on an academic board.

The Foreign Ministry, meanwhile, refused immediate comment on reports by a Japanese news agency that senior leader Deng Xiaoping is gravely ill with prostate cancer.

An unsigned commentary in the Communist Party newspaper People's Daily appeared aimed at reassuring China's educated elite, some of whom have come under sharp attack for supporting what the party calls "bourgeois liberalism" — Western liberal ideas — and the student-led pro-democracy movement.

"There has been some concern as to whether the party's policy toward intellectuals would change. It is necessary to reaffirm that (it) has not changed and will not change," the commentary said.

It called the intellectuals who took part in the student movement "scum of the intellectuals (who) do not represent the intellectuals" and "enemies of the party and of the people."

"It is in the interest of the workers, peasants and intellectuals to punish them, and the party will protect that interest," it said.

"Those who were under the influence of the wave of bourgeois liberalism...will elevate their understanding and continue to make contributions" to China's modernization program, it said.

The army's violent crackdown on mass demonstrations in early June has ushered in a new era of repression. Chinese are urged to turn in friends and family members who participated in the protests, and many must attend weekly political study sessions reminiscent of the ultra-leftist Cultural Revolution.

The crackdown has brought an end to a period of relatively free political debate. Newspapers once more are under strict party control, and the works of 10 writers, including Fang, have been banned.

The official Xinhua News Agency said Friday that Fang, an astrophysicist, was relieved of his position on the Academic Degrees Committee under the State Council, China's Cabinet, and of his qualification to tutor doctoral students.

Fang, who took refuge inside the U.S. Embassy in Beijing with his wife shortly after the crackdown, already had lost another minor post but apparently still retains his main job at the Beijing Observatory.

The government has issued arrest warrants for Fang and his wife, physics professor Li Shuxian, for allegedly inciting pro-democracy protests and has demanded that the U.S. Embassy turn them over to Chinese authorities.

Thousands of students, intellectuals and others are believed to have been arrested for participating in the seven-week movement.

During the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, intellectuals were severely persecuted as "class enemies." Since then, Deng hasd emphasized the need for skilled and talented intellectuals to help China modernize.

The educated elite, however, remains among the lowest paid and most politically vulnerable of all Chinese.

In Japan on Friday, the Jiji Press quoted unidentified Chinese sources as saying the health of Deng, 84, had deteriorated seriously a few days ago, and that emergency medical personnel were sent to care for him at a coastal resort east of Beijing. It quoted doctors as saying they were discussing whether Deng was too ill to be moved to Beijing, where better facilities were available.

An employee in the information department of China's Foreign Ministry said he had received many queries about Deng's health but could issue no immediate response. There was no answer Friday night at the Communist Party's news office.

In another development, Britain's Home Ofice said it has granted political asylum to three Chinese diplomats and is considering an application from a fourth.

A Home Office spokesman identified one of the diplomats given asylum Nin Hongshan, a second secretary in the embassy's educational section. He said the others were all middle-ranking diplomats but would not identify them.

In New York, two Chinese exiles said a group that aims to provide a democratic alternative to China's Communist Party will hold its inaugural congress of 120 delegates from around the world next month.

The congress will be held secretly in the West and will involve exiled student leaders and intellectuals as well as individuals traveling surreptitiously from China, said the exiles, Wan Runnan and Yan Jiaqi.

Wan is former chairman of the Stone Corp., a large computer company that is one of China's most successful private enterprises. Yan is a former member of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and a former close adviser to deposed Communist Party leader Zhao Ziyang.

Palestinian leaders denounce opposing factions

JERUSALEM (AP) — The underground leadership of the Palestinian uprising Friday denounced groups that have threatened Arab nationalists, claiming the infighting is inspired by Israel.

"Nationalists have been accused of collaboration and their cars have been burned in the name of the uprising," said a leaflet signed by the Unified Leadership Strike Forces and circulated in the West Bank.

It urged Palestinians to "declare war" on those issuing false leaflets, which it said were "inspired by suspicious elements working in the enemy's (Israel's) intelligence."

The statement comes amid a growing trend of violence, threats and factional rivalry within the Arab community in the 20-month-old uprising.

At least 87 Palestinian deaths have been blamed on other Arabs since the revolt against Israeli rule began in December 1987. Army gunfire and Israeli settlers have killed 527 Palestinians. Thirty-eight Israelis also have died.

The army said Friday it is investigating the stabbing death of an Arab man whose body was found near Kufr Zibad village, 30 miles northwest of Jerusalem.

Israel radio quoted residents as saying the man was suspected of collaborating with Israel and had been interrogated by uprising leaders before he was slain.

The underground leadership's leaflet condemned statements issued by 10 largely obscure groups, including the Palestinian Popular Army.

A statement issued in the name of the Popular Army on July 16 threatened Bir Zeit University Professor Sari Nusseibeh for allegedly misusing uprising funds and cooperating with Israel.

Prosecution papers filed in an Israeli case against several uprising leaders alleged Nusseibeh was paymaster of the uprising. But the professor, a Palestine Liberation Organization supporter, never was charged.

Jamil Tarifi, a West Bank lawyer, was threatened by wall slogans signed by the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. The leaflet did not refer to that group, which participates in the unified leadership.

U.S. sailors treated like celebrities by Soviets in sea port

SEVASTOPOL, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Sailors of the first U.S. warships to visit this Black Sea port were treated like celebrities Friday, posing for snapshots, signing autographs, kissing babies and even dodging coins tossed by admirers.

More than 1,000 whistling, waving Soviets climbed on the pier as the Aegis-class cruiser U.S.S. Thomas S. Gates and frigate U.S.S. Kauffman pulled into the headquarters of the Soviet Union's Black Sea Fleet.

The port call mirrored a visit last month by three Soviet ships to Norfolk, Va., in the first such Soviet-American naval exchange in 14 years.

"That's for ice cream when you come ashore," called one woman in the crowd as she lobbed a 20-kopeck coin toward the sailors lined along the ships' decks in their summer whites.

"You have to understand, for Americans to visit us is about the same as if Martians visited you," said a Soviet Navy officer who would not give his name.

"This is great," said U.S. navigator George Hughes, dodging a coin. "I can't wait to hit the beach."

Crewmen were handed babies to kiss, asked to pose for photos and given rubles, souvenirs and food. A brass band played marches and two women in traditional Russian costumes met the ship with bread and salt, traditional symbols of hospitality.

"My whole soul is happy that we finally did this great thing and that we will be friends," said Zinaida Kolisinchenko, 18, of Sevastopol. "And the American sailors, they are so attractive."

The Americans were equally excited.

"It just feels great to be making history," said Greg Marlatt, medical officer of the cruiser Gates.

The city hosted former U.S. Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci a year ago, but Navy public affairs officer Paul Weishautt said this was the first time U.S. warships had docked at Sevastopol. The 6th Fleet's flagship, the USS Belknap, also was supposed to visit but was diverted to be at President Bush's disposal during the Lebanon hostage crisis.

Sevastopol is normally a closed city, even for Soviets. But it opened its gates wide to greet the American sailors.

Throughout the day, crewmen could be see strolling the city's streets, often surrounded by female admirers. The carnival atmosphere lasted into Friday evening.

Vladimir Zverev, the military commandant of Sevastopol, looked with amusement at the crowd on the pier. "We didn't expect so many people," he said. "This is the biggest reception for a ship I have ever seen here."

But he said the welcome was appropriate "given the state of our relations today."

Adm. Mikhail N. Khronopulo, head of the Soviet Black Sea fleet, said Friday he could not have imagined even two years ago he would be receiving senior U.S. Navy officers in such a friendly atmosphere.

But now, he said, the idea that Soviet and U.S. captains might share a cup of tea as their ships pass "is difficult to imagine, but not impossible."

The American sailors, too, commented on the strange sensation of suddenly being treated as such good friends.

Aviator Matt Zentry of Seattle recalled having been trained to recognize Soviet ships from afar. "And now, here were are right next to them," he said.

The agenda for the American sailors includes a tour of state farms, a vineyard, an art museum, an aquarium, a war museum and naval installations. They will be entertained at concerts, eat meals aboard Soviet ships and play basketball, soccer and volleyball with their Soviet counterparts.

Sevastopol, in its strategic position on the Crimean peninsula, has been the target of many invasions since it was founded on a Greek colony in 1422 B.C.

South Carolina widow final link to Civil War

New York Times News Service

SUMTER, S.C. — In a region where commemorating the War Between the States was once akin to a civil religion and where the mythology of the "lost cause" still occasionally fuels a wistful peroration or two, Daisy Cave is a living icon.

Mrs. Cave, who is believed to be 97, is the last living widow of a Confederate Army veteran, a status she has held since the death of Kate Nelms in Corinth, Miss., in 1987. And this month she collected her 59th widow's pension check from the State of South Carolina.

She is unself-conscious and wryly unimpressed with her celebrity as she sits on the porch of the Hopewell Nursing Home in Sumter. By her own admission the tales her husband, Henry Benjamin Cave, told of the war "have been told so many times, they done rusted."

In any case, she said, her husband didn't tell many stories about his time as a soldier with the Third South Carolina Cavalry.

She was in her 20s, and he was 75, when they got married in 1919, and out of respect, she did not press him on the subject.

"He didn't talk about it," she said. "He always said it was just too bad. He'd been through it one time and that was all there was to it."

Still the little she does retell, and much that she simply is, evokes a flavor of the war and its aftermath.

For one thing, Cave, a poor farmer whose family did not own slaves, may have represented the many soldiers whose fighting had little to do with preserving the plantation system or a life of privilege, said Lee Conner, a commander in the Sons of Confederate Veterans.

"Some joined just for the salary," he said. "It was an economic necessity for them."

In Reconstruction the federal and state governments appropriated large sums for veterans, widows and war orphans in an effort to heal the nation's wounds.

But much of the money was misappropriated by state legislatures made up of blacks and Union loyalists who stole many of the veterans' benefits, according to South Carolina's comptroller, Earle Morris.

"Their attitude," he said, "was that these people ought to be punished."

In many ways the veneration of the Confederacy had to wait until Reconstruction ended and federal troops left the region in 1877, said Charles Reagan Wilson, a historian at the University of Mississippi who is the author of "Baptized in Blood: The Religion of the Lost Cause."

But by 1920, benefit payments to Confederate veterans and their widows was the third largest expenditure of South Carolina, said Morris.

Times were hard then, as well, and many young women, like Daisy Cave, married older men who had veterans' benefits.

Mrs. Cave recalled that she was a farmworker employed by a neighbor of Cave when they met. At first he asked her to be his housekeeper, but her modesty and concern about gossip led her to decline the offer.

For the 10 years they were married before he died, she said, she always called him Cave because she could not imagine calling someone that much older by his first name.

She said the stories told by Cave and Confederate veterans who visited him were more about hunger and loneliness than about the heroics and drama of battles.

"They liked to starve to death and he was just hungry all the time," she said. Sometimes, she said, they ate rats "and they was glad to get them."

Then there was the time he put a kernel of corn on a fish hook and lured a goose from a farmer's yard. The farmer chased him and the goose bit him, but he had a meal.

Truce halts 20 years of family tensions

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A feud between two families erupted in gunfire before city officials negotiated a truce, hoping to halt a 20-year squabble that had neighbors taking sides.

Fistfights, threats and arguments between the McDonald and Jones families have been common since the late 1960s. Last weekend, the tension exploded into a series of shootings in the inner-city neighborhood that left both houses pockmarked but no one injured.

"We're extremely lucky over the weekend that someone wasn't killed," Sgt. Greg Mills, a police spokesman, said Wednesday. "The way the violence was escalating, it was just a matter of time before someone was seriously injured or killed."

The families said many of the arguments during the past 20 years began between children. But no one can remember what specifically started the feud, shortly after the Joneses moved to the neighborhood 23 years ago.

"One of them would get into it with one of my daughters and she would curse her and then naturally I'd say something," Clarencine Jones explained. "It just got bigger. We've had fights and arguments but never guns."

"It stayed between the kids before," Barbara McDonald said as she stood on the front porch of her home.

After the gunfire Saturday, police called the city's human relations department. Director Alvin Brooks met with 22 members of both families Monday. On Tuesday, Mrs. Jones and Ms. McDonald signed an agreement aimed at ending the feud.

Clarencine Jones looks out her front door to the McDonald's house across the street in her east side Kansas City, Mo., neighborhood.

Fistfights, threats and arguments between the McDonald and Jones families have been common since the late 1960s...

It calls for the families to discourage violence, threats or hostile remarks. It also said the families won't use weapons and will be responsible for actions of people who visit their homes.

The agreement requires both families to discourage neighbors from getting involved in any disputes, as they had in the past.

Brooks said the feud will end up in court if either family violates the pact. Mrs. Jones and Ms. McDonald say they will abide by the agreement.

"I think we can end it. I think it's pretty much over right now," Ms. McDonald said Wednesday.

The weekend gunfire resulted from a children's argument during a football game more than a week ago. Police reported a shootout Friday night, and two more episodes the next night. Three people were arrested, one juvenile and two adults who were charged with assault.

Mrs. Jones said she just missed being shot when the shooting began Friday on Flora Avenue, which is interspersed with vacant, weed-choked lots. Bullet holes cover the front door of her small beige home, and she pointed out bullet marks in the dining room, curtains and windows.

"My nephew came and grabbed me from the dining room. I would have been dead. Everybody just hit the floor," she said.

Across the street, gunfire broke the windows of Ms. McDonald's neat brown and yellow house and holes dot the exterior.

The city will stay involved as long as it needs to, Brooks said.

"It's something that's been going over 20 years and just signing the paper one day, it's not going to go away," he said.

Mrs. Jones' daughter, Cheryl, said she would abide by the agreement.

"It's dangerous for all of us, especially with the little kids around," Cheryl Jones said. Five of Mrs. Jones' grandchildren live with her.

"If they keep going around trying to be Al Capone, it won't get better."

Emperor holds press conference

Questions asked in advance; Reporters told how to act

TOKYO (AP) — Reporters bowed in respect as Japan's Emperor Akihito broke with imperial tradition Friday and held the throne's first televised news conference since 1975.

Akihito, seated beside Empress Michiko, began the news conference by expressing gratitude to 10,000 people who attended the state funeral and the hundreds of thousands who lined the streets after his father, Hirohito, died in January at 87.

"What I felt while I was in personal contact with Emperor Showa gives me, I think, an important guideline in what an emperor should be," said Akihito, referring to Hirohito's posthumous name.

Hirohito's 62-year reign — the longest in Japanese history — covered Japan's disastrous war in Asia and its subsequent rise to an economic superpower.

Because of the constitution's strict ban on his exercising political powers, Akihito could not comment on the crisis facing Japan's governing conservatives, plagued by money and sex scandals.

He said he would be willing to visit China and Korea — two victims of Japanese aggression — if the government decided it was appropriate. He said the same for Okinawa, Japan's southernmost prefecture, where many people remain bitter about the casualties and destruction they bore in the U.S. military assault. Hirohito never visited Okinawa after the war.

Akihito said the Daijo-sai, an elaborate ascension rite with strong Shinto significance, should be carried out in accordance with the law. Many critics already argue that by its very nature it violates the constitution's ban of state involvement in religious affairs.

In that mystical ceremony to be held next year, Akihito is to have his first communion with the gods and then be reborn divine. Media reports have estimated it could cost as much as $70 million. The government is studying how to conduct the rite.

Reporters representing 43 Japanese and 12 foreign news organizations attended the news conference. Journalists were given a detailed explanation of when to rise and bow, and who would sit where in the palace's Stone Bridge Room, a large hall with Japanese sliding paper doors and Western-style red carpeting.

Sitting behind a low table draped with gold brocade cloth embroidered with chrysanthemums, the imperial symbol, the royal couple spoke slowly and distinctly. At times the empress, wearing a light green dress, spoke so softly her voice was drowned out by the clicking of cameras.

Akihito also spoke in polite but common Japanese, unlike his father, who often used archaic or stilted words no longer understood by the general public.

Akihito repeatedly stressed that his proper role is to uphold Japan's postwar constitution, which limits his role to that of a "symbolic" figurehead.

Four of the 12 main questions, all submitted weeks in advance and subject to government approval, were about Hirohito. Along with the main questions, several follow-ups were allowed, but by pre-decided Japanese questioners.

One Imperial Household Agency official requested the scheduled time limit of 30 minutes be carefully observed, because traffic restrictions had been set for streets on the imperial couple's way home. The conference lasted 37 minutes.

Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko

In (the ascension rite) to be held next year, Akihito is to have his first communion with the gods and then be reborn divine. Media reports have estimated it could cost as much as $70 million. The government is studying how to conduct the rite.

Akihito is the first emperor to ascend the throne under the postwar constitution, which limits his role to mostly ceremonial tasks. The previous constitution gave Hirohito nominal powers, and the wartime government asserted it was acting in his name.

The constitution also omits all references to the emperor's special relationship with the gods of Shinto, Japan's indigenous religion, which angers some conservatives.

Japan's monarchy can trace its history to at least the 8th century, and by legend until the 6th century B.C. and Emperor Jimmu, who is said to have descended from the sun goddess, Amaterasu.

Michiko, rarely changing her expression of polite concentration, said that because of her husband's heavy responsibilities she must "make the home a place where he can...find peace and relaxation with his family."

The royal couple split with the past by raising their two sons and daughter by themselves. Akihito was raised by chamberlains from age 3.

Their eldest son, Crown Prince Naruhito, 29, is now seeking a bride, and when asked about his growing independence, Michiko said, "It would make me happy if he would come, even if only from time to time, to play the viola for us."
