U. S. Asks Germany For Billion In War Claims

HUGE TOTAL IS SOUGHT AS PAY FOR DAMAGES

12,416 Bills Filed With Mixed Claims Board In Washington

GOVERNMENT LEADS

Sinking Of Lusitania Brings Flood Of Demands From Victims

Associated Press Dispatch

WASHINGTON, May 20.—America's bill of war claims against Germany amounts to $1,479,064,313.02, as it has been presented to the mixed claims commission for settlement.

The United States government itself is the largest claimant, asking for $366,113,000, while the smallest of the 12,416 claims filed with the commission is $1.

Lusitania Leads

Heading the list of claims by individuals are those growing out of the sinking of the Lusitania by a German submarine. They totaled $22,606,000, and may be disposed of first by the commission, Germany having already admitted liability, but not in definite amount.

The stupendous total involved in the proceedings is revealed for the first time in a report made to the state department by Robert C. Morris, agent for the United States before the commission. Work on determining the amounts Germany must pay already has been begun by the commission, which organized last October, and which consists of Edwin B. Parker of Texas, American commissioner, and Dr. Wilhelm Kiesselbach, German commissioner, with former Justice Day of the supreme court as umpire.

Long Task Ahead

How soon the commission can complete its work cannot be estimated, but it is to be expedited through classification by Morris, of most of the claims into test cases by which one decision of the commission will determine the law and principles to be applied to claims of similar character.

The American claims are to be disposed of without regard to the allied reparations claims, the report of Mr. Morris disclosing that the commission has entered a formal order that "the machinery provided by the Versailles treaty shall have no application to this commission."

Biggest Claim

The largest claim listed in the report is the American government's of $255,344,810.51 for costs of the army of occupation in Germany, now under negotiation with the allies in Paris by Assistant Secretary Wadsworth of the treasury department. It is understood, however, this claim will not be pressed in the event the Paris negotiations result in an agreement. Other government claims are for $67,266,626.23, for general damages growing out of German submarine warfare; $37,982,000, by the veteran's bureau for war risk premiums; $5,380,000, by the railroad administration, and $40,075 for war risk premiums of the shipping board.

The $1 claim is presented by Emery Roberts for loss of property while a German prisoner of war.

There are a few other small claims of $1.50 and $2 for loss of parcel post property by shippers, but most of the claims run into hundreds of thousands and millions.

The largest individual claims are $100,000,000 by Roger B. McMullen for alleged patent infringements; and one by William J. Quillon for $66,000,000 damages from German submarine warfare.

The largest Lusitania claim is $5,000,000 for the death of Fred S. Pearson, plus $300,000, for the death of Mabel Ward Pearson. Other large Lusitania claims include those of heirs or estates of the following:

Charles Klein, New York theatrical producer, $1,767,000; Charles Frohman, another former New York theater magnate, $250,000; and Alfred G. Vanderbilt, $250,000.

"CHRIST TO RETURN AGAIN TO EARTH," TRUETT DECLARES AT BAPTIST MASS MEETING

15,000 Support Dallas Minister's Contentions On Vicarious Atonement.

Associated Press Dispatch

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 20.—Fifteen thousand persons, attending a mass meeting today of the Southern Baptist convention, pledged themselves by a rising vote, to the propagation of the old fashioned gospel, embracing such fundamental tenents as the inspiration of the Bible, the virgin birth and diety of Christ, His vicarious atonement for the sins of the world, His bodily resurrection and His coming physical return. The occasion for the mass meeting was an address by Dr. George W. Truett, pastor of the First Baptist church at Dallas, Texas, on "What Think Ye of Christ?"

No Questions

"I think there is not a pastor in the nearly 30,000 Baptist churches of the south who would for a moment call into question the virgin birth of Christ, His diety, His vicarious death, His bodily resurrection and His coming again," Dr. Truett declared. "Christ and the Bible must stand or fall together," he continued, "and if critics succeed in destroying the Bible they will succeed in destroying Christ.

"But these critics are mistaken. We do not need any new gospel, or system of religion to reform or transform the world. We need a realization of Christ in the hearts of men everywhere. More and more the world is coming to a recognition of its need of God as exemplified and revealed in Jesus Christ, His son. The time is hastening when Christ will reconcile the differences between France and Germany and Great Britain and Russia and the Islands of the sea and the uttermost parts of the earth will recognize Him as Lord and Master."

No business was transacted by the convention today. Visiting ministers occupied the pulpits of local churches at the morning and evening services, and tonight missionaries from home and foreign mission boards of the convention addressed another mass meeting in Convention hall.

HARDING SEEKS DEVELOPMENT OF ALASKAN FIELDS

Vast Northern Possession On Decline Rather Than Increase

PLANS LONG VISIT

President To Obtain First Hand Information On Conditions

By B. N. TIMMONS
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, May 20.—President Harding will make the Alaskan visit this summer, barring unforseen events, because he looks on development of that great continental territory as one of America's most important domestic questions, it was announced today.

This trip, it is explained, has been staged for the purpose of drawing attention to that important and long-neglected country, because Alaska has been slipping rather than advancing. How it has been neglected it is stated is seen in the fact Mr. Harding will be the first president to set foot on its territory, one-fifth the total area of the United States, though it has been a possession of Uncle Sam since 1857, when it was acquired from Russia by purchase.

Cabinet to Go

Perhaps a half-dozen cabinet officers, beginning with Seward, have visited Alaska within the 56 years it has been a part of the United States, but they saw little of it, because they got no farther than the coast. President Harding proposes to go at least 467 miles into the interior, traveling on the newly built railroad to Fairbanks, a town named for the late vice president.

President Harding also intends that three or four of his cabinet shall see Alaska and apply their thoughts to its problems. Secretary of War Weeks, accompanied by several members of congress, is now en route to Alaska via the Panama canal, while (Secretary of Interior Work, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, and perhaps Secretary of Commerce Hoover will be members of the presidential party.

Population Decreases

Alaska has suffered a setback in recent years. Its population today, approximately 55,000, is less than a score of years ago. President Harding, recognizing that Alaska has immense undeveloped resources, believes this territory has been a victim of neglect. He proposes that Uncle Sam give it more attention, find out what is wrong, study its needs and give it a chance for extensive development. The president has had a concern about Alaska from the beginning of his administration. He desired to make a personal inspection of Alaska last summer, but the prolonged congressional session prevented. Unless something unforseen should prevent, the president will depart from Washington about June 20, and make a leisurely trip across the continent, stopping at from 20 to 30 cities in the states, and timing his arrival in Alaska for about July 10.

Discord Breaks Out In Bandits' Ranks; Death Promised 2 Foreigners

Chinese Officials Also Quarrel: Crisis Nears As Troopers Persue

Associated Press Dispatch

TIENTSIN, May 20.—Mrs. Manuel Ancira Verea, wife of Manuel Ancira Verea, a manufacturer of Guadalajara, Mexico, who, with her husband, has been held by the Chinese bandits, was released today. This now leaves 14 men captives of the bandits, who have moved to the top of the hills.

One officer and five Chinese troops were killed in the battle yesterday between the troops and the Chinese bandits, according to advices received here today. One brigand also was killed and one wounded.

More Soldiers Out

The military governor of Shantung province has ordered 1,500 additional soldiers foward the hills where the bandits are holding the captives notwithstanding the declaration of the bandits that it is necessary to withdraw the troops if the safety of their captives is to be insured.

The 14 men left as captives of the bandits were moved to the top of the Paotzuku hills today, according to a telegram from Lincheng.

Wang, the bandit chieftain, it is said, was furious at the pressure from the Chinese troops and said his patience is almost exhausted.

Officials Quarrel

Chinese officials at Tsao Chwang are reported to be quarreling among themselves. Their intriguing, it is said, is one of the main obstacles in the way of a settlement being reached.

Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, American minister, warned the Chinese officials as he passed through Lincheng enroute to Peking, that there must be no delay and that the foreign captives must be released immediately. Otherwise, he warned, serious international complications would follow.

The warning, it is said, had a most useful effect upon the Chinese officials, who for the first time realized the foreign powers were in earnest.

Bandits Also Quarrel

Bandits, it is reported here, are quarreling among themselves over the leadership and the disposal of their loot. However, an actual split has not taken place, it is stated.

Evidently determined to control Southern Shantung, the bandits already have persuaded numerous villages to support them. Their leader styles himself "commander-in-chief" of the self government governed army. In a proclamation the "commander-in-chief" deplores orders, depression, and despotism, and "the immorale of officers and wicked gentry who are co-operating to exact money from the people."

FOREIGNERS TO DIE

WASHINGTON, May 20.—The diplomatic corps at Peking, according to advices to the state department, has been notified by the Chinese bandits that two of the foreigners still held captive by them will be shot unless troops are withdrawn by Tuesday.

METEOR REPORTED TO HAVE FALLEN

Wichita Falls was all agog Sunday afternoon over the supposed devastation wrought by a huge meteor that was reported to have fallen somewhere to the north with a bang plainly audible in this city. A dozen or more calls were received by The Record News last night, inquiring as to where the aerial wanderer had landed.

Inquiry at Chattanooga, Lawton, Comanche and Waurika failed to find anyone who had seen the meteor, and rumors here that several houses had been shattered in Chattanooga were declared there to be without foundation.

Wichitans here reported that the meteor was seen to streak across the northern sky about 2 o'clock in the afternono, leaving a trail of smoke and sparks in its wake. Immediately afterward, it was said, a hollow thud was heard and a few persons here said they could feel the earth tremble.

If the celestial visitor actually did hit the earth, however, it seems to have kept its landing spot well concealed.

Special Dispatch to Record News

GRAHAM, Texas, May 20.—With a large bullet hole in her chest, Anna Jewel Martin, daughter of Liu Martin, living about nine miles east of Graham, was found lying dead on the ground about a mile from her home Saturday. A pistol was lying on a rock 30 yards from where she had fallen.

Her parents had gone to town that morning to do some shopping and she had given them a letter to be mailed, addressed to a publishing house, presumably an order for books.

About 7 o'clock she went to the springs about a mile from the house and at the foot of a rocky hill. When she did not come back at 12 o'clock for dinner, her sister and brother instituted a search for her. They found her at 3 o'clock a short distance from the spring with the pistol on a rock 30 yards away.

The bullet had gone downward through her chest and come out in the lower part of her back. No reason could be assigned for her death and the parents and neighbors think that it was an accident. An inquest was held by Judge W. P. Stinson, County Attorney John B. Rhea and Deputy Sheriff Cooper with the finding that it was accidental.

The body will be buried in the center Ridge cemetery Monday morning.

Bryan Doesn't Overlook Anything In Attack On Sunday Violations

Associated Press Dispatch

INDIANAPOLIS, May 20.—Presbyterians, in "Popular meeting" today, unanimously endorsed a resolution presented by William Jennings Bryan, calling on the general assembly of the church in session here, to pass a resolution asking every Presbyterian minister and church member, and the presidents, teachers and pupils in all of the denomination's schools and colleges, to sign a pledge of total abstinence.

As outlined by the Commoner, he proposes that every minister first sign the pledge, then every church officer, and finally every church member. In the denominational colleges, he would start with the presidents, then the faculty, and finally put the pledge before every student.

Sunday baseball, Sunday night theatre going and the size of Sunday newspaper were attacked by Mr. Bryan and other speakers, representing the Lord's day alliance.

This morning and tonight the advocates of modernism and liberalism in religion, and the exponents of fundamentalism, aired their views in a score of the city's pulpits. Mr. Bryan did not return from Kansas City in time to preach this morning, but tonight at Westminster church, he delivered an attack on the believer in the Darwinian theory of evolution and on the liberals who question the virgin birth of Christ.

Mr. Bryan covered everything from Sunday golf to the whiskey fleet of rum runners off Jersey coast.

King Moved.

Mr. Bonar Law's resignation was taken to the king at Aldershot by Colonel Waterhouse, the prime minister's private secretary, and Sir Frederick Sykes, his son-in-law, who motored from London. They had a long audience with the king, who appeared much moved by the news of the aggravated condition of Mr. Bonar Law's health.

It is officially stated that the king has no intention of interrupting his visit to Aldershot. In any case, if necessity arises, he is only an hour's drive from London. According to present plans, he will return to Buckingham Palace Friday.

Baldwin Mentioned.

Stanly Baldwin, chancellor of the exchequer, returned to London suddenly from the country Saturday night and will return to Chequers Court, the prime minister's summer residence, today, without disclosing the object of his trip.

BIG OIL OUTPUT CAUSE OF CUTS

Statement Of Production Shows Increases In April

Recent closing of contracts, calling for the delivery of approximately 100,000 barrels of mid-continent high grade crude oil daily to major crude oil purchasers by the independent producers of this region, has been blamed for having a considerable bearish effect on the crude market. Analyzation of these contracts, however, makes it appear as though it is the large over production itself, rather than the contracts, which has weakened the price.

One of the large executives, in conversation recently, said that the big refining interests, when the crude supply declines to a certain stage, become panicky almost over night for fear that they are going to be caught short of a raw material supply and have their large manufacturing establishments on their hands, that being responsible for the price of oil being raised at times much sooner than the trade expects it. For this reason, crude oil contracts with responsible producers is a wonderful thing for the refiners. On the other hand, however, a sufficient supple of oil is now available to any purchaser who is responsible whether he is on contract or on daily purchases.

Marland's Large Contract.

Of all the contracts now in force the one whereby Marland Oil company of Oklahoma, delivers 30,000 barrels daily to the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, is perhaps the most outstanding. Marland is delivering 11,000 barrels daily on this contract, and as soon as pipeline facilities are provided, maximum runs will be made. Marland has over 100,000,000 barrels of oil in storage to draw on the fulfillment of this contract. It has never been announced by Marland whether the contract has a minimum price provision or not, but it is presumed that it has not—that it calls for the sale of the oil at the "market price," and that alone. The company is well satisfied with its arrangement because it gives it about let for about 3,000 barrels of gasoline daily, the product of its Ponca City refinery.

Phillips Petroleum company, it has been authentically learned, has no actual contract which binds it to sell oil to the Magnolia Petroleum company. It is authentically reported that Phillips could discontinue its runs to the Magnolia at any time, even though the Magnolia has run a six-inch line from Yale northward to Burbank to take the oil. This report is encouraging inasmuch as it was thought by operators that another large Midcontinent producer in the person of Frank Phillips had tied himself up to deliver a large amount of oil at the market price, regardless of the quotation.

Others Not Important.

Compared to the Marland and Phillips contracts, others, which bring the total to about 100,000 barrels, are of little consequence. They extend all over the Midcontinent, and involve the larger refining and producing interests.

One of the major pipeline companies has compiled a statement of production for the different pools of the entire Midcontinent region and found that during the month of April every state showed an increased production over March, and furthermore, that nearly every pool in the entire region increased. In Oklahoma, the only producing subdivisions of the state not showing increases were Bristow-Slick, which decreased only 146 barrels, and southern Oklahoma, which declined but slightly. In Kansas, the only pools declining were the shallow ones in the southeastern part of the state, which decrease was negligible. This proves that it is the big production, rather than contracts, which is causing the price depression.

"Operators Scared To Death" Says Oil Head In Optimistic View of Market

PONCA CITY, May 20.—That he has never seen the oil business in a healthier condition than at the present time is the declaration of E. W. Marland of Ponca City, head of the Marland Oil and associated companies. This was the answer of Marland when his opinion was asked as to present oil conditions. He is as usual an optimist.

"I believe that the heads in the oil industry is in their usual condition, half scared to death" Marland said. "They are either always afraid that we are not going to have enough oil, or afraid we are going to have too much. A few months ago, there was a great fear that ther was not going to be enough light oil to go around and every one was scrambling for light crude. Today, the leaders of the industry seem to be in a panic for fear that there will be too much light oil this year, and they are cutting prices regardless of previous cost or present cost, with the result that only a very few companies are today making any money; only those with a production of light oil that has cost them little.

"I have no doubt that within a comparatively few months the leaders of the industry will have forgotten their present fear of over production of light oil and will be anxiously grabbing all the light oil connections they can make.

"It is my opinion that the consumption of gasoline in the United States east of the Rocky mountains during the balance of this year will exceed the production east of the Rockies during the same period. California will probably have a surplus but all of that surplus will not be available for eastern markets due to the limit of tanker facilities. It is highly probable that domestic consumption and exports in and from the United states this year will exceed consumption and exports of last year 50 per cent. Such increase would not only take the current production of our eastern refineries, but would cause them to draw upon stocks. If the next six months are months of exceptionally good weather, and if the general prosperity of the country continues to increase, we will have an increase in consumption this year over last of 40per cent. Such an increase would cause a recurrent panic among the heads of industry regarding our ability to supply the demand.

"I have been in the oil business a long time, and I might say that I have never seen it in a healthier condition. In the producing end of the business we seem to have caught up with consumption for awhile. For how long depends pretty much on the weather. Personally, I am not worrying as much as some of the other fellows. We are always worrying because we have too much or too little. I would rather worry about having too much, and this is my company's situation now.

MEXICAN OIL FIELDS NOT MENACE TO LOCAL MARKET, SAY OIL MEN JUST BACK

Two Tulsa (Okla.) citizens, oil men, who have operated in both Texas and Oklahoma fields in the past, and who are at present interested in oil development in Mexico, have returned to their homes and, although refusing to be directly quoted, have given out some very valuable information regarding conditions in Mexico. As Mexico's production has a very marked effect on Texas and Oklahoma marketing, the news they bring is of special interest at this time, when the crude market is not in the best shape. They say, in part:

Production in Mexico is declining steadily—not alarmingly—and the wildcatting campaign in that country for the past year has been a practical failure. Therefore, there is nothing to fear in the way of an overproduction from that part of the globe, they say.

All Show Slumps

There are 12 fields in southern Mexico, and all of them are showing declines in production. Their 15-day output for the period ended March 16, 1923, was 2,807,601 barrels and it is estimated that their present production is about 50,000 barrels less for the same period. The fields, with their production March 18, for 14 days, are:

Chiconcillo, 21,032 barrels; San Miguel, 2,365 barrels; Tepetate-Juan Casano, 90,141 barrels; southern Chinampa-Los Naranjos, 281,576 barrels; southern Amatlan, 303,300 barrels; Zacamixtle, 35,423 barrels; Totoco, 408,389 barrels; Cerro Azul, 700,000 barrels; Alazan-Portrero Cerro Viejo, 273,375 barrels; Tierra Blanca, 381,000 barrels; Chapapote Nunes, 331,000 barrels; and San Geronima wells, owned by the Dutch Shell, are heavy gravity producers, and have all been shut in. The other fields are making 21 gravity oil.

Cerro Azul, the principal producing field, is owned almost exclusively by Huasteca Petroleum company (Mexican Petroleum) now known as Pan-American Petroleum and Transport company. Chapapote Nunez and Tierra Blanca are also Huasteca-owned fields.

One Booming Field

The only field in the country where a "boom" is really on is the Cacalilao field, in the Panuco district. Here, about 120 wells are drilling, and the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, Freeport and Corona companies dominate the production. Standard Oil of New Jersey has about 70,000 barrels daily; Freeport 30,000 and Corona 90,000 barrels. Freeport is Sinclair owned, and Corona is the Royal Dutch. In this field it takes about 60 days to drill a well, and some of them make 10,000 to 15,000 barrels in time pays from 7,570 to 2,700 feet. They do not produce from a sand. The lime is known as the Tamasopa lime.

Fifteen to 20 wildcats have been put down in southern Mexico during the past year, and all have been failures. Only a dozen or so wildcats are now being drilled, the work being at low ebb for the reason that it is not known just what attitude the Mexican government is going to finally assume regarding Article 27, which promises to take many properties from the oil companies. A commission from the United States is now in Mexico conferring regarding this article.

BIG OPERATOR AT PANHANDLE

Humphreys Enters Field By Closing For 1,500 Acres

PANHANDLE Texas, May 20.—Entry into the Panhandle field of large independent operators, large sales of royalty and leases and a gradual increase in the development of the natural resources of the Texas Panhandle, are under way on an enormous scale at this time.

Humphreys Oil company has entered the field on a large scale with two wells drillins and a drilling contract closed on 1,500 acres of promising oil and gas land in the Johnson ranch, south Hutchinson county. Pittsburgs, Chicago, Tulsa, Pioneer Fort Worth, Oklahoma City and Denver operators are in the field to close drilling contracts or purchase proven acreage. Geologists are surveying the field from Pampa, in Gray county; Wheeler and Shamrock, in Wheeler county, through north Carson and south Hutchinson counties into the Potter county gas field, where Fensland and P. & A. interests have recently closed a deal for 250,000 acres of gas land.

The Carson-Hutchinson field was extended two miles northwest this week when Plains Oil No. 1, Weatherly, near the center of section 17, block Y, Hutchinson, scratched the first pay at 2,975 feet. Eight-inch pipe has been run, and ten million feet of gas braidenheaded. Drilling will be continued to the second or big pay sand, 150 feet lower. Whittington No. 1, Sanford, section 82, block 46, Hutchinson, eight miles northwest of the proven district, has resumed drilling near the pay depth, following a two weeks' shutdown while the eyes of the drillers were being treated, due to injury from escaping gas and cuttings, and the laying of an auxiliary water line. Thirty million feet of gas daily has been conserved in this well, and the prospects of the oil pay sand being had with little further drilling is extremely promising. In the north Carson proving district, the W. W. Silk 55,000-barrel storage tank is nearing completion, and Silk No. 2, Texas No. 2 and Gulf No. 3, all in Burnett pasture, are nearing completion.

Tipton No. 1 McConnell, between Pampa and White Deer, in east Carson, is producing forty million feet of gas, and is drilling near the pay depth. This test is 15 miles east of the oil producing wells, and continues to log with the producing wells.

Heavy Rains At Graham Help Crops

GRAHAM, Texas, May 20. — A small rain amounting to a half inch, fell here Friday night accompanied by some wind. It was of great benefit to the grain crop, though cotton was not in need of it. The dust which was getting bad had been settled.

Reports from Loving, a few miles north of here indicate that one or two small houses were blown over by the strong wind at that place and that other slight damage was done.

Flying Chaplain Speaks To Large Crowds At Baptist Church Sunday

After speaking at both the morning and evening services at the First Baptist church yesterday, Chaplain A. Foltz left Wichita Falls to visit his brother, John Faltz, who is seriously ill at Alva, Okla.

Chaplain Foltz' sermon last night, delivered to an unusually large crowd, was based on the text, "Weighed in the balance and found wanting."

Chaplain Foltz arrived Friday night by airplane from Fort Crockett at Galveston. In Galveston he is connected with the army camp, and it was in the interests of army welfare work that he is conducting the series of services throughout the state. The collection taken here yesterday, $125, will go to buy phonographs for army hospitals for the entertainment of disabled veterans.

A special feature of yesterday's services was the singing of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Blankenship of Dallas, who sang sevgral selections from well known devotional songs.

COTTON MARKET PRICES ADVANCE

Close 66 to 142 Points Over End Of Last Week

Associated Press Dispatch

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 20.—Prices were at the advance in the cotton market during the greater part of the week just ended, active positions at their lowest being 10 points under to 21 points over the close of the preceding week, while at their highest they were 99 to 165 points over. Fluctuations were within a range of 78 to 165 points. The close was 6 6to 142 points net higher on the week, July closing at 25.52 after having traded as high as 25.75 and October at 22.53 after havings traded as high as 22.90. In the spot department prices gained 150 points on middling, which closed at 26.25c a pound against 20c on the close of this week last year.

Shorts Advance

The main reason for the advancing tendency was the disposition of shorts to cover as the result of less confidence in the new crop outlook. Less was heard of a very large acreage, and many sections of the belt reported slow progress with the crop, some sections reporting no progress at all, because of low temperatures, and too much rain, although during a good part of the week it was a question of temperatures rather than moisture. At the end of the week the market was supported by reports of heavy rains over large areas with prospects of more to come. While the moisture was said to be beneficial in some sections of Texas, it was dearimental nearly everywhere else.

Pastor Assails Rumors About Faculty Misdeeds

International News Dispatch

FREDERICK, Okla., May 20.—John R. Abernathy, president of the Methodist Episcopal church (South) college, in process of organization in Oklahoma, in a sermon at the Methodist church in this city Sunday morning, warned against accepting remarks of heresey hunters without a grain of salt, saying that if such assertions as were made at Fort Worth against faculty members at S. M. U. and Texas Woman's college could be proved, or were true, charges would have been filed in the regular manner and the matter settled.

Can't Back Assertions

"It's easy enough to blacken a man's character, or an institution's character by false assertions, but it's a different thing to back up wild assertions before a church court," he said, after his sermon.

Mr. Abernathy is also educational secretary of the East and West Oklahoma conferences of the Methodist church.

He stated that the plan pursued by the church in this state for the erection of a college was to secure plenty of funds for the erection of suitable buildings and an endowment for the college, before expending a nickle. He cited numerous instances where colleges in Oklahoma had gone to the wall from lack of endowment.

HOW TO BUILD, FINANCE BETTER HAPPINESS HOMES AND FURNISH A HOME

Copyright, 1923

Electricity Now Servant Of All Modern Homes

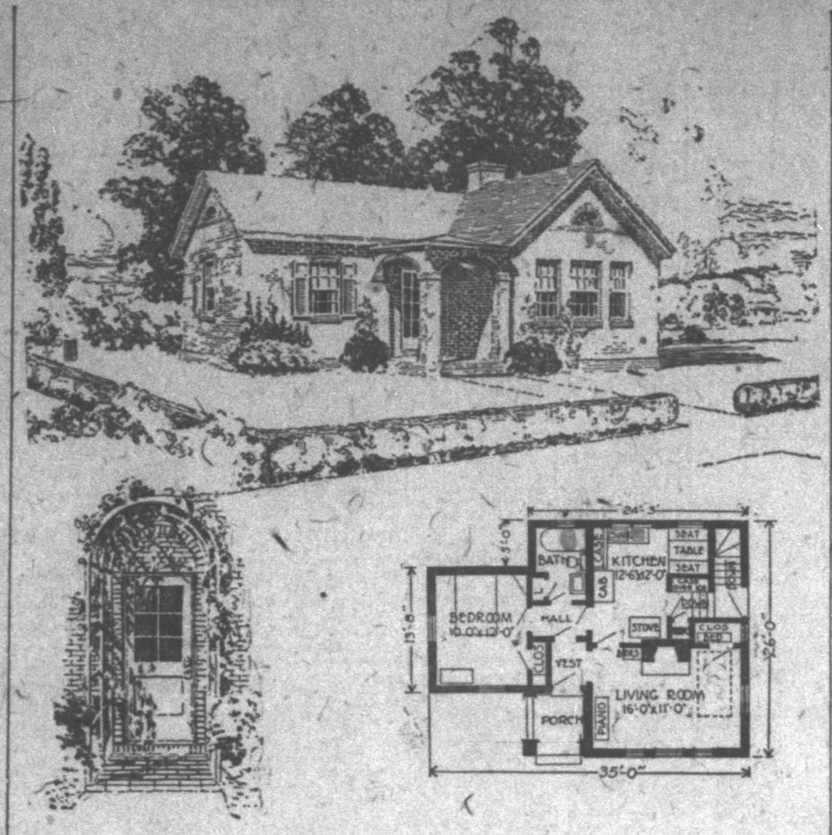

By GERTRUDE FISHER

For services rendered 4.2c. If the light bill could only carry an itemized account, after the manner of the butchers bill, perhaps so many women wouldn't pucker their brows over it when it comes. For every house-wifely instinct dictates that one must know exactly what one pays for. One mentally recounts—"fourlights going every evening — iron five hours a week"—

But are these all we really pay for? Doesn't electricity also perform many services which never could even be paid for if their value could be calculated? One woman after a little thought decided that this was what she was getting for her money. Perhaps you can think of many more.

"When the baby took sick one night and the quick need of light and heat and hot water might have made some anxious moments—that was the time when all the doctors in the world couldn't have taken the place of electricity. And in the week following when the room became a sick-room, the electric cleaner was used when a broom would have been forbidden, an immersion heater saved many a trip for hot water and a heating pad brought comfort at a moment's notice. Light, too, could be made soft and soothing, or concentrated in a searching beam on the patient for the doctors examination—its flexibility had never really been appreciated before."

"Beauty and atmosphere from lighted lamps are a potent influence in drawing the family together, and even the young people pay tribute to it. Daughter Alice frankly said the other day that one reason why the meetings of her friends took place so often at her house was 'that they thought the lamps here were so pretty.' Well—if that's all one needs to keep the children at home, the cost is all out of proportion! Certainly the home was transformed with electric light as surely as though a painter's hand had touched each part of it. Perhaps after all, rather than buying new living room furniture this spring, it would be more economical and just as satisfying to buy two or three new lamps instead."

A young couple starting out in life will find in this plan the solution of a big problem. The original cost and the maintenance are small and the furnishings simple, enabling them to live within their income. They will enjoy the comfort and pleasure of their own garden and fireside while saving and planning for future days. They will find it cozy to breakfast in the dining alcove or dine by the fireside in the living room.

And it will be far superior to a small, crowded apartment involving high rent bills which would better be applied on paying for a home. The rooms of this charming little colonial bungalow are large, light, and cheerful, while the exterior is exceedingly attractive. A large lot is not needed unless one wishes an extensive garden.

All told it is a very attractive and livable little home for any young couple until increasing fortune permits or justifies a larger and more pretentious house.

It is moreover, a most attractive and substantial little house. The fine proportions, the splendid placing of windows, the covered entrance porch, the simple and effective brickwork all give it a distinctive charm. It is a house that will sell easily when the young family graduates to large quarters, and in the meantime it will not have deteriorated. It is the kind of house that almost invariably sells for more money, after five years, than it cost to build.

The living room is large enough for entertaining and has a real fireplace, a feature sadly lacking in most apartments. A disappearing bed in an adjoining closet makes a second bedroom which required for an occasional guest.

There is no dining room, as the dining room alcove in the kitchen will serve all the family requirements, while upon more formal occasions a gate-leg table in the living room will accommodate a large dinner party.

The compact little kitchen, with its alcove and china cabinet and well-lighted sink, will prove to be a saving convenience and constant joy to the lady of the house. In the rear entry is space for the ice box with a stoorage cabinet above, and also a broom closet.

The bedroom and bath are connected with the main part of the house by a small hall. The bathroom has a fine cabinet for linens. The basement has heating plant, fuel room, laundry, and vegetable cellar.

THE DINING ROOM

The dining room should be one of the most cheerful and inspiring rooms of the house. It is the place where the family gathers to enjoy meals to gether, and nothing insures a better start than having breakfast in a bright, cheerful room.

If possible, a dining room should always have an eastern exposure. This plan admits the morning sun at breakfast, which insures a bright and cheerful start for the entire day.

If the dining room and living room are connected by wide doorways, have the walls of both rooms alike. If they are connected by a small door, the walls may be in some light cream, buff, grey, tan, or putty color. Because there is so much blue china, persons feel that they want blue dining rooms. This is a mistake, as blue used in large quantities in either walls, china, or hanging absorbs the light and makes a room gloomy. Do not display china or glassware in a so-called china closet. A built-in corner cupboard, or a small mahogany or rosewood cabinet, which might hold rare bits of pottery and china is permissible. It is far better to use the pantry shelves for china than to crowd it into a china closet.

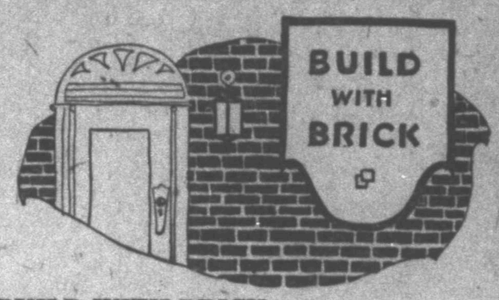

It is best to use a rug with small figures. The hangings should be in plain colors, taken from the predominating colors in the wall covering; or if the walls are the same as the living room, the hangings should be of the predominating color in the living room. This will bring the rooms into perfect harmony, without having them just alike.

BUILDING MATERIAL

The dwelling house is no better than the building materials used in its construction. Neither is the building more beautiful than the outer and interior finishings.

The durability and beauty of the home therefore depend largely upon the selection of the materials that go into it. Since there are several grades of lumber, brick, stucco and stone, the selection of the materials that go into a home should invariably be left to an experienced person, one who is accustomed to handling building materials, who should specify in his order the quality and the dimensions of the materials enabling the lumber man to fill the order to the satisfaction of the contractor, and also to the person who is paying for the job.

The selection of the doors, windows, trimmings and other finishings should be conducted by the owner, assisted by someone who is accustomed to matching and beautifying both the outer and the interior home. Lumber yards usually are supplied with plans and specifications of homes of various sizes, and are always ready to assist in making the selections that will be most appropriate for the kind of a home the person wishes to build. This service is free and is always gladly given. It is also to the advantage of the lumberman to fill orders in a satisfactory manner so there will be no discontent after the home has been finished, which might interfere with future business, so that you may be sure that if you specify what you want, the material man will see that you get it.

"Wired for Electricity"
The "house for sale" advertisement boastfully says: "Wired for Electricity" but what it should in most instances say, is: "Just wired for a few lights."
Rapidly changing times have brought forth new standards—in the electrical industry as well as others. The time was, not so long ago either, when people would ask: "Is there running water in the house?" For many folk still drew water from a well in the back yard, and a house with 'plumbing" was modern with no further questions asked.
Today, however, the moderness of the home depends not upon the mere fact that it possesses plumbing and is wired but upon the standard and quality of that plumbing and wiring.
To, many who have recently built homes which they thought complete and modern, there has come the realization that too little attention was paid to the electrical plans and specifications. They unfortunately thought the wiring of the house just a detail—to be consiered on a price basis only.
The time has come when the completeness of the wiring in the home is the thing that counts. Three outlets per room and an allowance for electrical work of at least three per cent of the total building appropriation are conservative standards by which to judge the completeness of any wiring job.

"WHAT ARE WE HERE FOR?"

President Richard A. Dana of the National Civil Service Reform league declares that Postmaster General Harry S. New has made a farce of civil service and that politicians, regardless of fitness, are given the postoffices. "What are we here for?" Mayor-elect John Tobin of San Antonio is a Jacksonian democrat. After the votes that had elected him had been counted, Mayor-elect Tobin said that to the victors belong the spoils and that all the offices would go to the winners. Andrew Jackson, a patron saint of the democratic party had a slogan: "Put none but friends on guard." That is what the wideawake political leaders have been doing every since Jackson's time. Why should a man place his enemies on guard?

Salt Lake City has a $380,000 public bath house and it is believed that the annual attendance this summer will reach the 300,000 mark. Mormans insist that cleanliness is akin to godliness. They practice what they preach.

LABOR DEMAND

New York is a great manufacturing state and the factories of that state are employing 200,000 more men this year than last year. A bulletin issued by the state labor commission says that if the demand for labor continues and manufacturing keeps up, the labor shortage may become acute. Luck is with the republicans most of the time. When work is plentiful there is a full dinner pail and the wage earner is partial to the party in power.

A NATION OF BILLIONS

Fifteen years ago American oil fields produced 12,000,000 barrels of petroleum valued at less than $100,000,000. Now there is domestic production of 551,000,000 barrels with imports of about 129,000,000 barrels, or a total of 680,000,000 barrels valued at more than $1,000,000,000.

Fifteen years ago, capital employed in the industry was $700,000,000. Now there is more than $8,000,000,000 employed.

There must be money in petroleum. Steel represents an investment of billions; the auto industry represents an investment of billions; the packing industry represents an investment of billions; the petroleum industry represents an investment of billions.

Not many years ago the people talked in the language of millions. Now they are speaking the language of billions.

More than 6,000,000 liquor prescriptions were handled by one prohibition director in Illinois last year and the director says it is legally impossible for more than 3,000,000 to be issued. A physician with a permit receives $3.00 for a prescription. This placed $18,000,000 in the pockets of Illinois doctors who held permits last year. Pickings must have been rich.

Florida lawmakers continued to investigate the horrors of prison camp life in the Everglade state. It is not necessary to go to Russia for brutes or their brutalities.

NO·MAN'S·HAND

By Hugh MacNair Kahler

Corcoran refuses to leave town, in spite of the threatened danger, and Larsen infers that he has some money-getting scheme that makes him want to stay. Rackham, paroled, explains he plans no vengeance of violence against Corcoran, but hopes to get back a sum equivalent to that stolen.

"Your Protective Measures Have Failed"

"I feel that way, too, Mr. Larsen. Harry and I have had our bad times and learned our lessons," said Amy Weldon. "We feel as if we owed it to other people to keep this man from doing it all over again to somebody else. We've got to do that to feel content with our own happiness."

"When are you going to be married?"

"Tomorrow." The girl flushed deeply.

"That's fine. Take a good, long time for your honeymoon. The money—"

"That's all arranged, thanks to Mr. Enfield." Rackham's eyes brightened suddenly. "You people have certainly been white to us. If we can ever get back at you—"

"When you're ready to go to work let me know," said Larsen, "and I'll tell you how you can pay back my part of it with interest."

He shook hands and went out, well content. Once those two were unmarried, the necessity of retributive justice on Phil Corcoran would be far less important than the matter of paying the rent. He dined leisurely and had settled himself for a comfortable evening with his books when his telephone interrupted him.

"I wonder if you could come to my house at once, Mr. Larsen. An idea has occurred to me which I should like to discuss with you."

He recognized Alfred Bleeker's pompous speech.

"I'll come right up," he promised.

A magnificent footman piloted Larsen to a small room fitted up as an office, with golden-oak desk, letter files, and a small typewriter on an oak pedestal.

"I've spoken to Phil," Bleeker began. "He ridicules the idea of danger and insists on staying. He says he can't afford to go at present. He has some business in view which requires his presence here. I have been thinking that possibly that business might be adjusted. If your investigations have shown what it is—"

"We haven't any line on that as yet," said Larsen. "I suppose it couldn't be any sort of a deal with you, could it?"

Bleeker meditated. "There is nothing direct between us. But there is a chance, now that I think of it, that he may be involved in a project I have been considering. There is a real estate transaction pending—several men have secured an option on the old Elton farm, and have offered it to me at a figure which has rather tempted me. Once or twice Phil has betrayed a knowledge of the matter. It is just possible that the vendors have offered him a commission in case I buy. They would assume that he had some influence with me. It may be that."

"Well, if you feel so strongly about it as you seemed to the other day, it might be a good idea to close the deal and let him take his profits and go. One of the dangers we thought most threatening has been settled for the present, but there are plenty of others."

"I'll speak to him about it this evening," said Bleeker. "He's in the house now—dined with us. I'm really concerned about him. Lovable as he is, I'm afraid he's been very foolish in the past—very foolish, indeed."

"You might call it that," said Larsen, dryly. "He has the curse of good looks. It's hard for a man like that to walk a chalk line."

"Yes. He's a remarkable handsome fellow, isn't he?" Bleeker brightened at once. "He—he reminds me very much of myself—when I was his age."

Larsen bit back a grin. Looking at Bleeker's swollen figure, he thought that he resemblance probably confined itself to the fact that he had as many arms and legs and eyes and ears as Corcoran. There was very little else in common.

There was a sound at the door. Larsen turned in time to see it open, and recognized the stately figure of Bleeker's wife.

She was in coldly formal evening dress, her fine, slender body enveloped in pale blue silk, innocent of the foaming and frilling effects which the mode of the moment imposed on most women.

"Oh, I didn't know you were engaged," she said. Her voice was like her beauty—cold, remote. "It was nothing of consequence."

"One moment, Carol," said Bleeker, "I beg to present Mr. Olaf Larsen, in charge of the municipal detective bureau. He has been very obliging in helping me to protect Phil from some people who seem to be bent on annoying him."

Larsen saw, but could not fathom, the change in her at the words. Her eyes seemed to widen and darken for an instant.

He fancied that there was, below the frozen surface, a brief flow of something warm and human. But the look faded almost before he had seen it. She seemed to recede again.

"I'm sure that's very good of him, Alfred." She bowed slightly toward Larsen and turned. She closed the door softly. The two men faced each other, a slight constraint upon them both.

"I wished to reassure Mrs. Bleeker, Larsen," Bleeker seemed to feel an explanation necessary to account for the introduction. "She does not wholly share my attachment for Phil, but she has shared my concern for him, on my account more than on his, I fear."

Larsen nodded. He was again possessed by the conviction that this woman played a larger part in the puzzling little drama he was witnessing than the circumstances seemed to indicate.

"Well, sit down again, Larsen. If you're in no hurry—"

Larsen, his speculations interrupted, was in the act of lowering himself into his chair when something stiffened him in the awkward posture—his brain was stunned by the dull, flat roar which echoed through the hallway.

His ear identified the sound instantly; so, when sent in by stout walls and muffled by heaving hangings, the spiteful report of a fire-arm is flattened and prolonged.

He found himself running along the passage, aware of confusion before him, of Bleeker's clumsy, pounding steps behind.

As he came out upon the main hall he saw Mrs. Bleeker emerge from a doorway, her self-control as fardless as ever. He stopped short.

"What's happened? We heard—"

"Some one has shot Mr. Corcoran," she announced, her voice as even as if she had commented on the weather. "I'm afraid your protective measures weren't very effective, Mr. Carson."

It was a false note, Larsen thought. If she had not intentionally mispronounced his name, he might have gone on, merely marveling at her self-mastery. As it was, he thrust past her into the library beyond with a nascent distrust of her already in his brain.

The scene photographed itself on his memory in one flashing, inclusive glance.

Phil Corcoran had fallen forward, upsetting the smoking taboret in his fall, so that his limp body sprawled over it, his hands outflung as if groping for the scattered silver fittings, the fat, gold-headed cigars which lay strewn about the rug from the open humidor.

A moment's examination told him that Phil Corcoran was dead. The bullet had struck him square in the mouth.

Larsen spared a thought for the poetic justice in the mere location of the wound. Corcoran had lived by those clever, lying lips. Death had found him through them at the last.

He straightened, a little impressed by a sudden realization that Phil Corcoran would not be beautiful in death. There was justice in that, too.

From the position of the body, Larsen figured Corcoran had been facing the doorway through which Mrs. Bleeker had emerged to the hall after the murder.

Olaf Larsen looked grim.

Was it possible that Mrs. Bleeker had done it? Could any woman have turned away from a murder as cold, as self-controlled as she had been?

Not many, he thought. But Carol Bleeker? Possibly. He'd find out—later.

Bleeker burst in upon him, babbling. "Oh, who did it? How could it have hapuened? Why didn't you prevent it, Larsen?—"

"Keep still!" Larsen shot a level, menacing look at the hysterical little man. "I'm giving orders here now. This is my business. And don't touch that body, or anything else in this room!"

Bleeker stared, purpled. "Why, you insolent—"

"That's enough. I'm representing the law here. I've no time to bother with any nonsense. Sit down and keep quiet."

Bleeker subsided in a leather chair. The august footman stood staring. Larsen spoke to him curtly: "Find Mrs. Bleeker and ask her to come here at once." The man departed.

The shaded lights of the combre room kept the illumination low, so that the upper rows of imitation bindings of the book cases were in darkness. Larsen saw a wall switch beside the doorway.

"Does this light up the chandelier?" he asked one of the gaping domestics. The man nodded.

Larsen threw the switch, and the ornate, glass-spangled fixture overhead burst into a many-faceted blaze. The room leaped into visibility, its pretensions again exposed, eccentuated. Larsen passed a deliberate inspection about him.

Suddenly he stood motionless, transfixed by that he saw below the settee which stood before the hearth. He drew a short, flat gun from his pocket and bent down.

"You can come out from under that couch now. And come out with your hands up and nothing in them before I count three."

There was a scuffling noise. A man crept out, empty-handed. As he straightened Larsen heard himself swear softly.

Harry Rackham had made a bad matter very much worse!

There was a hush, broken by a faint rustle and scuffle among the group of servants in the doorway, while the detective stared at his prisoner and the prisoner stared back. It was Rackham who broke the silence:

"Oh, it's you, Mr. Larsen! Thank Heaven for that, anyway! You know I didn't do it—you know I—"

"I'm glad you're pleased!" retorted Larsen. "I'm not. You've done a fine night's work for yourself, Rackham!"

"I didn't do it, I tell you! I didn't!" Rackham's voice lifted a tone. "I thought you'd believe me, anyway, I—"

"Tell me what happened. All I want is the truth. If you didn't do it, why were you under that settee? Begin at the beginning. What made you come hereafter your promise not to? No lies now. The truth or nothing."

"Why—why, he asked me to! He telephoned to Amy right after we left you, and said that if I'd come up this evening he'd square things with me. We—we thought he was frightened and—"

Britain Amazed At Roaring Rail System of U. S.

By A. MAUDE ROYDEN
Noted English Woman Preacher
(Written and copyright, 1923, by International News Service.)

LONDON, May 20.—The American railway system is the best on earth. Impossible not to admire the largeness of its engines, the thunder of their wheels and the sound of their bells.

When I first saw and heard an American train, there was no spirit left in me. How huge it looked, compared with our little English toy engines. The earth shook as it drew near. People stopped talking or drew close together and screeched into one another's ears.

And what a novelty riding on the American railway system.

Every night when the ontinuous roar of the train has lulled you comfortably to sleep in your Pullman car, the bell breaks in upon your slumbers.

In the day time, the American train provides splendid facilities for seeing America. No small carriages and narrow windows for them. Long cars with huge sheets of glass and chairs that you can swing right around to the window.

Whenever you do, you find every shade drawn down two-thirds of the way. I do not know why. No one knows why. I have asked hundreds of people.

The baggage system is the best of all. By it you are enabled to lose sight of your baggage permanently and travel without a care in the world. Traveling every day, as I did, I found that I must send off my baggage the day before I arrived, and must not expect to see it until the day after I left.

It is a great system, and no wonder Americans despish us stnuid English who like not only to know that we have luggage, but even sometimes to get things out of it and wear them.

TOO MUCH ROT IN MOVIES.

Peter B. Kyne, famous short-story writer, told a Los Angeles business organization that he could "see no future for the moving picture industry until it gets down to brass tacks and establishes a code of ethics. The drama of today, as represented in the motion pictures, is for the most part mere hokum. Those who control the pictures do not want good, clean, wholesome stories. The people are tired of hokum. What they want is pictures which appeal to the heart, here and there a vagrant tear and a laugh. The pictures now being shown are built on the theory of shocking the nervous system, rather than by appeal to the heart."

Less Propaganda and More Action To Be Policy of Prohibition Bureau

By B. N. TIMMONS
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, May 20. — A more vigorous enforcement of the federal prohibition act, with less attention to propaganda for observance of law has been demanded of the prohibition unit by President Harding.

The veto of the policy of Prohibition Commissioner Haynes to educate the people to enthusiastic acceptance of the provisions of the Volstead act has come, it is understood, because the president and his advisers were convinced by the growing disregard of law, that a continuance of the program of education was confession of weakness, and that the same logic might be applied to publicity appeals in behalf of laws against counterfeiting, for instance, as had been used to have compliance with the liquor regulations. At the same time, word has been passed for amendment of the regulations prescribed by the prohibition unit under authority of the Volstead act, so that they will be kept within the exact provisions of the act, and not pave the way for court attack which might tend to weaken the law by adverse judicial holding.

Recent jolts to the prohibition cause, such as the adverse duling of the supreme court of the Daugherty-Palmer opinion barring liquor from American ships outside the three-mile limit; the concurrent international question as to right of foreign ships to carry liquor within the three-mile limit for use on board, either for medicinal or beverage purposes, and the repeal of the state enforcement act in New York, have caused administration leaders much worry. They see, as a result, injection of prohibition questions as the principal business of the next congress which meets in December and runs well into the next presidential campaign, and a demoralization of administrative functions having to do with prohibition enforcement.

There is no indication that attention of the chief executive toward activities in the prohibition unit will go farther than the general direction which has been issued. From the time of his appointment until now, Prohibition Commissioner Haynes has been allowe dfree rein so far as President Harding is concerned, and the president has acted with great reluctance whenever issue has been raised between Mr. Haynes and his immediate chief, Commissioner of Internal Reveine Blair. Nor at this time, so far as known, has President Harding suggested any details of administration, or advised a general policy which would not have the approval of leaders of the Anti-Saloon league. No expression is forthcoming, either at the executive office, or at the prohibition unit, as to change of policy, but the golden rule preachment has stopped, and taking its place is a vigorous statement that the laws will be enforced, as far as possible, with a call issued to the law-abiding citizens to make themselves law-enforcement agents. President Harding has refused to discuss the New York situation with anyone and only an indication can be secured from white house spokesmen that "the government of the United States cannot be futile."

Publications of the statements from time to time showing the amount of bootlegging, an illicit manufacture, sale and use of liquor, was held to refute theclaims of the prohibition unit, and make the government a laughing stock, in the face ofh the "educational program," which bespoke daily better results in enforcement. The capsheaf was the announcement in a leading journal of high repute that Washington, recently made dry by the combined efforts of noted prohibition agents called here from all parts of the country, was "the wettest city in the United States." And so the order is for more enforcement, less talk and less education. With it comes a direct order for attention, from Commissioner of Internal Revenue Blair, to the industrial alcohol laxity, with a promise that synthetic gin, and "out" liquors will soon disappear. But hope of quelling the evil at once is not held, and until the full effect of the supreme court decision and the New York repeal may be felt, predictions are at low ebb.

To gai na better co-operation in law enforcement, administration heads hope to change regulations under which alcohol permits are issued, both for manufacture and sale. Now the prohibition unit officials are supreme in autocratic sway, and can deny permits for the way a man combs his hair. They boast that appeal from their rulings will meet with persecution, regardless of the merit of the appeal.

Whatever immediate results may come from the change in policy of the prohibition unit, and kindred agencies, the turmoil has created a situation which means a wet and dry fight in the next congress. The personnel of both the senate and the house is evn mor dry than was the last, or its predecessor, which passed the Volstead act, but the feeling at the time of its assembling as to the benefit or futility of present administration will have much to do with future legislation. Among the bills already penared for consideration are the Edge bill to legalize 3 per cent beer; the Hill bill to permit sale of beer and light wines; the Sterling bill to extend the Volstead act to American ships everywhere, and to create a nine-mile limit exemption for foreign ships, an administration bill, meeting international requirements, legalizing stores in seal on foreign ships within sea limits; and the Spencer bill to create a commission to ddetermine what is intoxicating liquor within the meaning of the constitution. More stringent enforcement features will be sought by the Anti-Saloon league, with the indication that all dry bills will be combined in one measure. Against this the liberals will contend with divided forces, because of the peculiar political conditions which are fanning personal ambitions.

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

WHAT'S THE USE OF "WHAT'S THE USE?

This is an editorial for the "What's the Use-r."

He is a very prevalent pest.

At home or on the street, wherever he is, he is continually questionnig the purpose of existence.

"Why are we here?"

"Why do anything, now that we are here?"

"Why worry along for years, only to die sooner or later?"

"Why be good or industrious or ambitions when so many worthless people get along?"

"What's the use of it all, anyway?"

Well, my dear young friend, suppose there isn't any use of it all? But you're here. You can't help that. Here you'll stay as long as you can. With all your "What's the use-ing" you would be just as quick to dodge an automobile or send for a physician if you had a heart attack as the most hopeful person in the world.

This being the case, why not accept conditions?

You cannot alter the fact that you exist.

But by continually wondering "what's the use" you can abolish any use of your particular life.

Doing that will not help you any. It will only make things harder for you.

The other people who are here demand that everybody be of some use.

Suppose, dear "what's the use-r" that, for a change, you figure there is some use in living, and that you are here for some useful purpose.

You are here for quite a while, if you have average luck.

There is time to get quite a bit of work done, to look at many beautiful and interesting things, and to get a great deal of enjoyment out of the world.

It may not be your ideal of a world, but at any rate it is the only one you are in now.

If you will reason that there must be some use for existence or existence would not exist, you will be happier, and more cheerful, and have a better time.

You will get more profit out of life if you believe the profit is there and look for it, than if you insist that it isn't there and look only for loss.

What Today Means To You

By MARY BLAKE

GEMINI

The Sun enters Gemini the latter part of this day. The aspects are of a nature that tends to activity and effort, but caution is required to avoid misjudgments and errors by being deliberate and careful much can be accomplished, especially in doing and clearing up old and long standing letters.

Children born today will not be happy and successful as they should be until their spiritual natures are developed.

If today is your birthday changeability makes you a type peculiar to yourself. The complexity of the sign of the twins will be demonstrated through your life. You can be generous—and at the same time niggardly—bold, yet cringing; warm hearted, yet cold; unhappy, yet enjoying the intellectual analysis of your own misery. In other words, you have a dual nature which will always be an enigma to others as well as your own self.

Delighting in mental pursits, you may lack the continuity to follow them.

Your likes and dislikes will be strong and instantaneous even against your conscious judgment, but you will find that your natural reaction to another personality is almost invariably right and you will learn to trust it entirely. If a woman you have the additional faculty of intuition in a degree which will be a constant wonder to yourself and your associates.

Women of this date are charming and affectionate and as they are extremely feminine, they are extremely fliritatious. But there is no malice in this and their inconstancy ceases the minute they see they are injuring someone. It is simply what the flappers know as "pep."

You should really try more to concentrate your affection on one chosen man. It will be terribly hard for you, as one day you think that you have found just the right man and in a week's time you wonder what in the world you ever saw in him. Don't let this worry you, however, for when "Mr. Right" comes along you will feel the same toward him 365 days of the year.

Well known people born on this date are: Glen Curtiss, pioneer aviator, Edward W. Scripture, psychologist, Edmund J. James, educator.

Spudders Sling It On Cats In Final, 5 to 4

ATZMEN HAVE RAGGED DAY IN FIELD AND MEINE SCORES WIN OVER STONER; EVENING SERIES

Cats Do Things All Wrong and Spudders Are Quick to Take Advantage—Grigsby's Hitting and Bescher's Final Catch Feature Local Work.

FORT WORTH, May 20.—Baseball that would have shamed a school boy was put out by the Cats today while Lil Stoner was pitching brilliant ball against the Spudders who evened the series by taking the game, 5 to 4. The Atzmen did everything wrong. They dropped pop flies, booted and kicked and had Stoner continually in the hole. Meine, who twirled for the visitors, did not pitch a bad game but Stoner had him edged on actual mound work.

Meine got in a hole in the first inning when Clarence Kraft mauled a home run into the right stands with Stellbauer on base. The Spudders got one in the third when Moore dropped Elliott's easy pop foul and the latter then beat a scratch to first which scored Bescher. Stoner, who was hitting the ball as well as pitching a grand game, drove in the Cats' third run in the fourth when he slammed a double to right.

Stellbauer Muffs

In the sixth, Elliott sent out a fly to Stellbauer which was as easy an out as ever popped up in a ball park. Bill made an inglorious muff and Elliott went to second, scoring on Grigsby's hit to center.

The seventh was a big inning for the Spudders and a sorry one for the Cats. The Cat infield played terrible ball in this round, there being only one good smash in the works. With Tanner and Elliott on base, Grigsby caught hold of one and drove it over Sears' head for a double, scoring both runners. At that, Elliott should have been out at the plate with any kind of fielding.

Bescher Saves It

The Cats came near pulling it out of the flames in the ninth and only a great catch by Bescher saved the day. With one out Stoner singled and took second on Calvo's out. Sears doubled to right scoring Stoner. The tying run was on second and Stellbauer drove deep to left but Bescher ran up against the fence and made a catch that was a life-saver for the Salmites.

The hitting of Grigsby was the brightest spot of the Spudder attack. The game as a whole was a ragged exhibition on the part of Fort Worth.

The Restless Sex—In Sports

The phrase "restless sex" must have originated in athletics. For the original restless birds are those mixed up in the different branches of the sport.

There seems to be very few athstarletes who are contented to remain and continue to star in their own and original realms. At some time or other the fit to conquer other worlds attacks them and then all is off—temporarily at least.

The recent announcement by Carl Mays, star hurler of the New York Yankees that he would like to forsake baseball and seek fame as a heavyweight fighter was not a startling one in view of past occurences. It is of interest, though, in that it draws attention to this restless spirit of the worthy athletes.

Mays' announcement follows closely on Joie Ray's debut as a fighter. Ray, Chicago mercury, has about cornered the distance running records. He stands out as one of the greatest cinder path men the game has known. His home is full of cups and trophies and his scrapbook full of clippings. Honor enough for any man, you'd think. But Joe was restless. Wanted some new thrills. So he decided to climb in the ring and get 'em via the socking route. He's been getting them —aplenty. Be it said to his credit, however, that he shows promise of becoming a pretty good miller.

A dozen other sport luminaries have sought and won fame in other branches of sport.

HOUSTON TAKES COMEDY OF ERRORS

Associated Press Dispatch

SAN ANTONIO, May 20.—Bill Bailey, while inclined to be wild, kept San Antonio's hits well scattered except in the third and fourth, when a brace of bingles in each inning put over two runs. Houston won 8 to 4. Payne, who started for the Bears, was knocked out of the box in the second inning, and Morrison finished the game.

The game was sloppy, in that six errors were chalked up, four against Houston and two against San Antonio. The score:

SPUDDERS HOME FOR LENGTHY STAY OPENING WITH SANTONE

Locals Piled Up Record Of .462 On Last Road Trip

With their heads up after a road trip which had its ups and downs but in which the Spudders fought under adverse conditions for a fine record, Salm's charges will open a long home campaign on their own pasture this afternoon with the San Antonio Bears as their guests.

The day the club left here, Rip Wheeler left in another direction which was a telling blow. The pitching staff had its troubles on the road to add to the loss of their ace but in spite of this, the club won 6 and lost 7 for a percentage of .462. This is a very creditable showing on the road. In their first home stand the Spudders played a percentage of .700 and if they can repeat against the southern clubs who are coming in this trip, they will be in the gravy.

With the race as close as it was, the Spudders managed to hold fast on the trip and they have a good opportunity to get a solid footing in the upper society while they are home.

New Pitchers Please

According to Secretary Gray who returned home yesterday, Pitchers Meine and Stauffer who joined the club on the road, have shown the stuff and are ticketed to travel well under the Wichita standards.

The Bears, who open here today, made a clean sweep of the series, taking all three games when the Spudders dropped into Santone. There is much to be avenged and the locals have the chance to repay the visitors now that they have them on their own ground.

Bob coleman, veteran of the game who won a pennant with Terre Haute in the Three-I league last year, is leading the Bruins and is said to have a live and scrappy club which will cause trouble before the season is over.

Following the Bears come Houston, Galveston and Beaumont for three games each, the latter playing a double header on Decoration day. June 1 is an open date and the Dallas Steeers then arrive for three games before the Spudders hit the trail again.

Today's game is called at 4 o'clock.

BROWNIES WIN SEE-SAW GAME

Associated Press Dispatch

ST. LOUIS, May 20.—St. Louis broke its losing streak of four straight games by defeating Washington 9 to 8, in 10 innings here today. It was a see-saw affair, with the Senators knocking Urban Shocker out of the box for a two-run lead in the ninth, but the Browns tied the score in their half. Washington put across a run in the tenth, but the locals tallied twice in their half, Walter Johnson forcing in Jacobson, who was hit by a pitched ball, by giving Schulte a base on balls. The score:

"Hot Tips" Fail To Pan Out In Mount Case

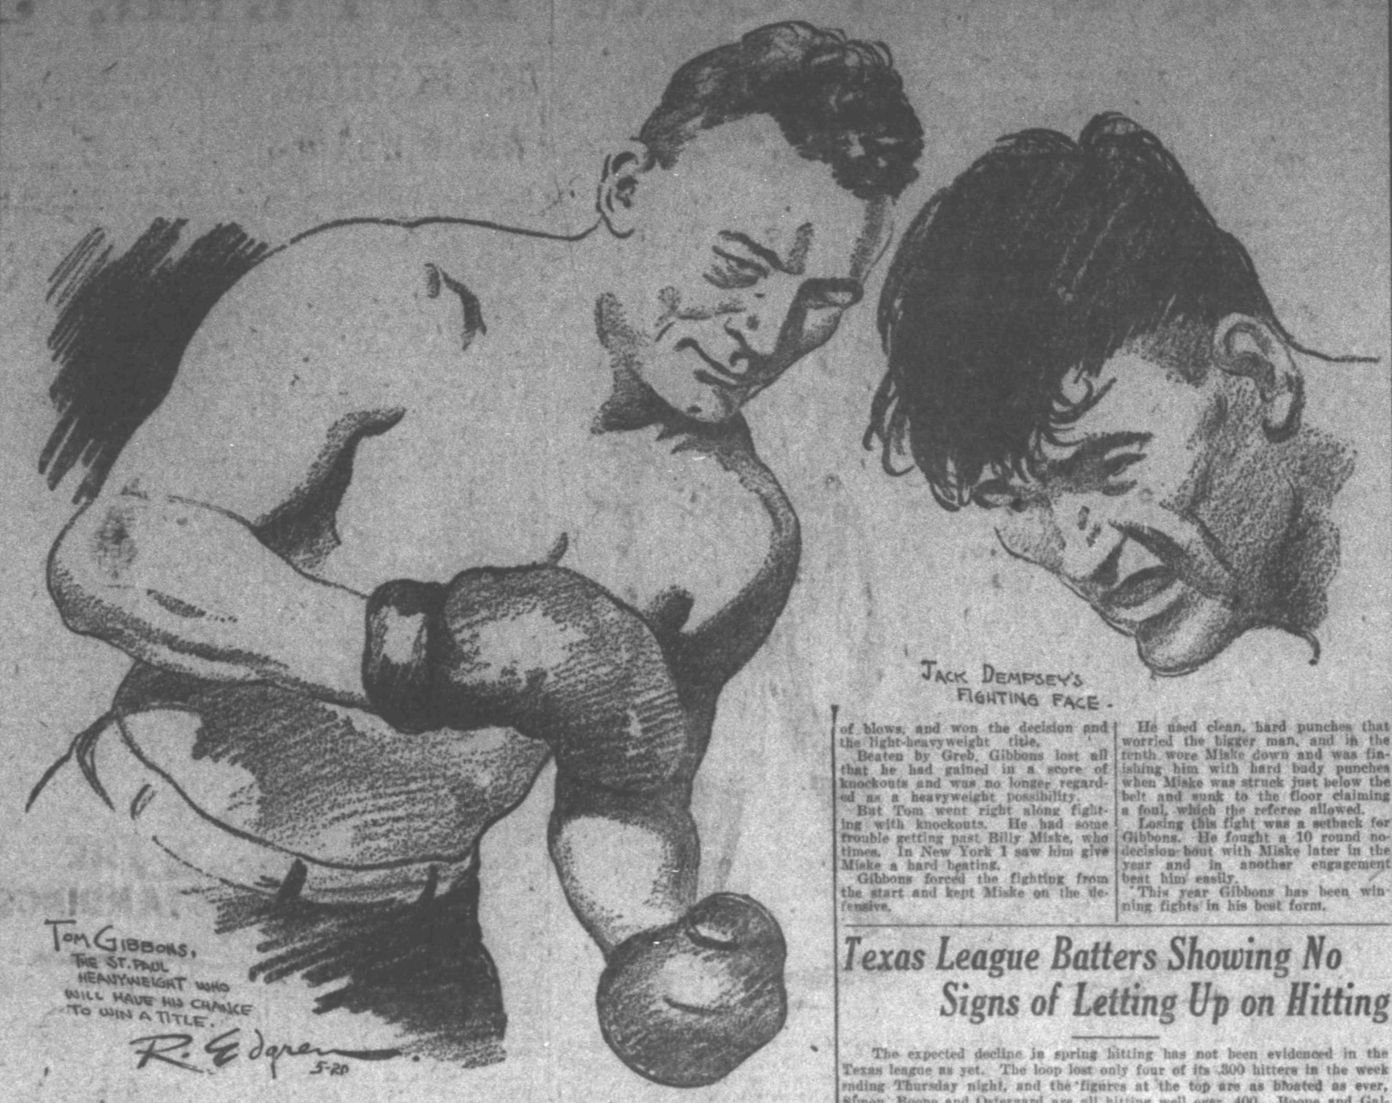

CHICAGO, May 20.—"Hot tips," and anonymous communications have been largely worthless in solving the mystery surrounding the disappearance, following a class rush, 20 months ago of Leighton Mount, Northwestern university freshman, assistant state attorneys announced today, after investigating the latest anonymous information without result.

Plans for the immediate future will be made tomorrow in conferences between Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney, and his assistants. The grand jury, which last week devoted little time to the Mount investigation, reconvenes tomorrow, but no intimation as to whether evidence would be laid before it was made.

GIBBONS THE TYPE OF BOXER DEMPSEY FEARS

Jack Dempsey's fighting face.

By ROBERT EDGREN

Tom Gibbons wanted a long time for a chance to win the world's heavyweight championship. The match at Shelby, Mont., with Jack Dempsey, July 4, is the reward of his patience. As Tom is to be paid out of the second $300,000 taken in at the gate, it may be his only reward. But he seems willing to take a chance.

The division of the purse in that match is an example of modern commercialism in sport. Dempsey is to receive $300,000, with $10,000 for training expenses, and Gibbons 50 per cent of the second $300,000 of gate money, and some further percentage of what money comes in after that, with $2,500 for training expenses.

Loy Molumby, state commander of the American Legion of Montana, who is one of the promoters of the battle, says that he expects a million-dollar gate, proving that optimism runs high in the Northwest. Shelby is a small town. The Dempsey-Carpentier fight at Jersey City, the bout run by Tex Rickard—with New York city, Philadelphia, Jersey City, Newark and a score of neighboring cities to draw from—brought a gate of a little over $1,600,000. And there was, sentimental interest in that international affair that can hardly be duplicated by any bout between Dempsey and his other rivals.

Gibbons has as much right to consideration as any of the heavyweight challengers. Tom is now at the peak of his fighting form, and as he is 34 years of age, it's rarely likely he'll ever be better.

Tom comes from a fighting family. His brother, Mike, was one of the cleverest boxers ever known in the middleweight class. When Tom began boxing Mike told me that his younger brother would soon be a better fighter than Mike ever was. This may have been brotherly enthusiasm, but Tom has made good in a long list of fights in the light-heavyweight classes.

Tom's Knockout Record

In 1921 Tom started what looked like a rush to the championship. He won 20 fights with straight knockouts. It's true that a lot of his victims were hand-picked second raters, not dangerous to a boxer of Tom's fine skill, but they were all tough, and the mere fact that he knocked most of them out in a round or two showed that Tom had a punch. Among the men that he flattened quickly were Al Reich, Tommy Melcher, Sergt. Norcross, Jack Hannan, Willie Meehan, Fred Allen Hope Mullen, Clay Turner and George Asche—all in the first round. He knocked out Paul Sampson, Porky Flynn, Jack Clifford, Pat McCarthy and a lot of others in a few rounds each. No great fighters in the lot, but some that were fairly good.

Gibbons was the talk of the country about this time. He claimed the light-heavyweight title, but had a with a long list of winning fights to back his pretensions. Greb took on Greb as the final step to a heavyweight championship bout.

This was where Tom stubbed his toe, for in 15 rounds in Madison Square Garden, March 13, 1923, Greb rushed Gibbons off his feet kept, kept him on his heels, discounted Tom's skill with a constant flurry of blows, and won the decision and the light-heavyweight title.

Beaten by Greb, Gibbons lost all that he had gained in a score of knockouts and was no longer regarded as a heavyweight possibility.

But Tom went right along fighting with knockouts. He had some trouble getting past Billy Miske, who times. In New York I saw him give Miske a hard beating.

Gibbons forced the fighting from the start and kept Miske on the defensive.

He used clean, hard punches that worried the bigger man, and in the tenth wore Miske down and was finishing him with hard body punches when Miske was struck just below the belt and sunk to the floor claiming a foul, which the referee allowed.

Losing this fight was a setback for Gibbons. He fought a 10 round no-decision bout with Miske later in the year and in another engagement beat him easily.

This year Gibbons has been winning fights in his best form.

Texas League Batters Showing No Signs of Letting Up on Hitting

The expected decline in spring hitting has not been evidenced in the Texas league as yet. The loop lost only four of its .300 hitters in the week ending Thursday night, and the figures at the top are as boasted as ever. Simon, Boone and Ostergard are all hitting well over .400. Boone and Galloway of San Antonio lead in run getting with 31 and 30. Simmons of Shreveport has six home runs to his credit.

Although his run of consecutive victories was stopped at seven, Conley of Dallas is the only flinger in the league who has won that many games. Pate lost his chance to tie the mark Thursday. Jacobus of Beaumont and Roberts of San Antonio have each four wins without a defeat. Pate leads Pitchers winning half or better of their games:

Ouimet Discusses Star's Best Shots

By FRANCIS OUIMET

I have often been asked which is the hardest kind of shot in golf. Generally I have to reply that they are all hard, the next one is always the hardest. However, I believe that one which is as hard as any I know of to control and to keep on a line is the full No. 1 iron or cleek. I don't know exactly why this is such a shot unless it is because mainly of the distance, but I do know that there are very few golfers who ca nreally play the shot well.

Gene Sarazen and Jim Barnes are probably the two finest long iron players we have. And that is one of the reasons why I think both of these men will do well at Troon, for there are many long iron shots for seconds on that course which have to be played with precision and with accuracy if one is to score well there.

Barnes has always been a great man with the irons, particularly with the mid-iron, which he uses often where others are using a spoon or a brassie. Most players are inclined to top or to slice this shot, while several of our well-known professionals invariably hook the shot in trying to get distance with this club. But Barnes generally seems to be able to keep the ball on a dead line with the club and to get tremendous distances.

Sarazen, if anything, is even a little better than Long Jim in the use of this club. I never saw anyone hit a full heavy iron shot like this boy and hold the line as well as he does. All of his long iron shots look as if they were shot out of a gun, they are hit so firmly and with such great power.

Hagen Best In Difficulties

Speaking of long hitting, did you ever notice that most long drivers are generally good putters. Take this list. Barnes, Hagen, Hutchison, Jones, Mitchell, Ray and Trolley. There is an array of hitting talent that will satisfy the most ardent enthusiast of long driving.

All of these great golfers are also fine putters. They combine long hitting ability with a beautifully delicate touch on the greens that usually enables them to score well. That is really the best possible combination for good scoring I know of. Glance over the list of tournament scores and you will observe that the fellow who is driving well and putting steadily is close to the top.

Of course, all good scores are not made with the use of these two clubs alone. In fact, each noted golfer has some favorite shot he can usually rely upon on each hole to enable him to score and to save strokes that he might otherwise take.

Hagen, for instance, is the king of them all on the putting green. He can be having what most golfers would call a pretty bad day, experiencing trouble with his drives and his irons, and yet he will generally be found to be getting down puts of 10 fet or more with consistent regularity and scorking like a demon.

What is the most important piece of general advice you can give about baseball playing?

Answered by

JOE DUGAN

Third baseman, New York Yankees, one of the speediest guardians of the "hot corner" in either league.

Keep cool, and use your head. A baseball player must think, and he cannot do this when he is all excited. If you make a "bonehead" play, don't stop to tell the world about it, but resolve not to make the same break next time. Keep calm. Play your best game. Thousands of games have been lost by men "blowing up."

Curing Your Golf Troubles

By Jim Barnes

"Dear Sir:

My greatest trouble is slicing, and I would like to know what is the best way to avoid it. My tee shots are especially disastrous. I occasionally get good distance and I am wondering if the trouble is due to lack of hitting through or poor pivoting, or improper balance. I have been told to bring my left hand over to the right more, but I find this very uncomfortable, and furthermore, when I do, I often smother the shot. Is it possible that I get my hands ahead of the club? I use a deep straight-face driver and my stance is slightly open.

W. J. B."

There are numerous things, of course, that may cause you to slice, and it would be hard for me to try to say where your trouble lies without watching you swing. However, here are a few pointers that you might take note of:

On starting the club back, see that it swings back inside the line of flight, or rather, an imaginary line from the ball to the hole. Also keep your arms in close to the body on the backswing, and try a rather flat swing, where the hands are carried more around and behind the body.

It may be that your wrists are too rigid on the backswing and that the backswing is made largely with the arms without getting enough turn of the body in. Try keeping your left arm as straight as possible at the top of the swing, but not stiff at the wrist.

On the downswing you are possibly turning the body too quickly for the hands and arms. The body should follow around with the swing, but must not be allowed to turn ahead of the swing. It is also possible that you are hitting with your wrists too stiff. Keep the wrists fairly flexible and try to throw the club head into the ball from the wrists just before it gets down to the ball on the sweep of the arms.

There is no need to grip with the left hand any further over to the right, than where the V formed between the thumb and forefinger points to the right shoulder.

(Jim Barnes will suggest a remedy for your golf faults. Write him care of the sport editor, enclosing stamped envelope if you want a personal reply.)

TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT

By "DINK" ADDINGTON

The Spudders had the Cats eatin' condensed milk yesterday.

* * *

Eenie, meanie, Meine, moe,
Look at Mr. Meine go;
Gave the Cats a licking sound,
Did it on their own home ground.

* * *

And Kid Heinle cracked out a double to bout.

* * *

With Wheeler coming back and Prexy Harvey seeking another hurler from the Philadelphia Nationals, the old gate will be swinging for somebody. Wonder who it'll be. Steve, himself!

* * *

Grigsby was busy knocking in the counters yesterday.

* * *

WELCOME HOME.

The Spudders amble home today,
To show the folks their stuff;
They battle all the southern clubs,
We hope they treat 'em rough.

They've been away for quite a while,
Upon a southern trip;
They're home to win a batch of games,
We're ready—let 'er rip!

They captured 6 with 7 lost,
A pretty nifty mark;
But now they'll beat that record,
In Prexy Harvey's park.

So fight 'em, Spudderinoes,
And fill our hearts with joys;
We're glad to see you back again,
Welcome home, my boys!

* * *

There are 15 games on this home stretch. And we can use all we can get. The sky's the limit.

* * *

The Bears will exhibit another one of those many performers who get their early baseball education on the sandlots of St. Louis. Graveyard Phil Todt was once a star of the Mound City "Muny" league and tied up with the Browns after somewhat of a jumble.

* * *

Then he went to Tulsa, had a good year and was shipped to Columbus in the deal that sent Dave Danforth to the Browns. Now he's holding down any job the Bears put him on. First base and the outfield are his specialties just now.

* * *

No need to get all tangled up on the pronunciation. It sounds just like "road" with a "t" on the end of it.

* * *

Before I lay me down to sleep,
To wrap myself in slumbers deep;
May angels hear my fervent prayers,
And make the Spudders beat the Bears.

WEIRD TALES OF BERNHARDT.

A life time friend (maybe) of the great Bernhardt is writing a biography about her and telling some weird stories about Bernhardt's early life. On one occasion the Elder Duma's said: "She has the heart of a virgin and the heart of a broom stick." When a portrait of Sarah with a Scotch deerhound lying at her feet was exhibited at the Salon, a famous critic described it as "a portrait of a bone thrown to a dog." Once Bernhardt disappeared from Paris as a result of an unfortunate love affair and for several months it is believed, earned her living as a dancer in Madrid. About this time the death of a younger sister Regina, occured. Sarah watched over her like a mother. When the girl, a consumptive, took to her bed, Sarah gave up all work to nurse her. Warned she must not sleep in the same bed with her sister, for fear of contracting the disease, Sarah brought a coffin into the room and slept in it. When the doctor came he was horrified. "Take that thing out!" he ordered. "It is not yet time." Sarah convinced him the coffin was not for her sister but was her own bed. Bernhardt was a most temperamental and did do grotesque things, but much now said of her may have been press agents' work originally.

HANDMADE SMOKE

J. P. Ault in the National Geographic Magazine.

In Samoa we saw a native man clothed with a soiled piece of calico twisted about his waist, sitting alone on the warm sand of the beach in the shade of the palm trees, gazing out over the surf. Apparently unable to concentrate his thoughts, he decided to have a smoke. Glancing around, he selected a dry stick, split it, and, rubbing one part on the other leisurely until a groove had been formed and a small pile of powered wood had been collected at one end he suddenly began moving one stick rapidly back and forth in the grove of the other until the heat thus generated started the powdered wood to smoking and glowing.

Twisting a small dried handle of dried banana and cocoanut palm leaves, he set this on fire by fanning the glowing pile of wood powder upon it and holding it up to the breeze. When it was well ablaze he dumped it on the ground and began piling twigs and branches over it until he had a fire going. Then, searching amid the debris at his side he selected a long dry piece of banana leaf and split it to proper width; next he tore off a leaf and laid it upon his knee. Reaching into the twisted piece of calico about his waist, he pulled out a roll of tobacco leaf, selected a small amount, replaced the balance, and leisurely rolled the tobacco in the dried piece of banana leaf, fashioning a cigarette some six inches in length.

Picking up one of the glowing twigs from the fire, he was soon enjoying his long smoke. All this was done without moving from his position, and apparently he was oblivious to the foreigner who was seated on the sand not far distant watching the whole performance. Thus does the native brake the monotony of existence in the South Seas. When he tires of smoking, he will rest and philosophize again.

HOLT TO MANAGE NEW HOTEL

Westland Will Be Renamed Hotel O. K.

Announcement was made Sunday by George M. Holt, manager of the Hotel William-Mary, that he is severing his connection with that institution the first of this week to become manager of the Westland hotel. The Westland will be renamed the Hotel O. K., Mr. Holt stated.

Long-Time Lease

Mr. Holt has acquired a long time lease on the hotel from the present owners, and will begin work at once on cleaning and renovating the building. The entire structure will be thoroughly gone over from top to bottom, and will be put in first class shape. Special attention will be paid to caring for the wants of the transient public, Mr. Holt announces.

As soon as possible, after the hotel has been made ready for use, the lunch room, cafe and catering departments will be opened for business.

New Hotel Needed

In making public his decision to leave the William-Mary, rechristen the Westland and build it up to a point where it will take rank with the leading hosteiries of the city, Mr. Holt declared that he believed there was a need for increased hotel facilities here with good service and reasonable rates. He is also confident, he stated, that the new Hotel O. K. will fill this demand acceptably.

Mr. Holt has been engaged in the hotel business here for several years, having been manager of the Kemp at one time, and later taking over the direction of the William-Mary.

Conference On Railway Shop Location Today

A conference that may be of far reaching importance is scheduled for today between a chamber of commerce committee and F. E. Clarity, general manager of the Fort Worth and Denver railway, relative to the moving of the Denver shops at Childress to Wichita Falls. The shops there burned last week and must either be rebuilt on the old site or moved to some other locality.

It is understood that Denver officials have as yet made no decision as to where they will locate the new plant. Wichita Falls has advocated the moving of the shops here for some time past and it is understood that a spirited fight is to be made to secure this now. Childress, on the other hand, is equally anxious to retain the shops at that point.

Today's meeting, while it will in no way result in immediate action, may have an important bearing on the future decision of the company officials.

Work Started Rebuilding Derricks Blown Down In Saturday Storms

Work has already been started in rebuilding derricks and buildings destroyed in the storm that hit the Freeman-Hampton oil field Saturday morning. Many derricks are already being erected in place of those torn down by the high winds. More than 24 derricks were destroyed in the wind and the fire that followed, and crews were put to work early yesterday in the fields.

Only three men were injured in the storm. They were burned as their bunk house became a mass of flames, near Holliday. The fire was caused by the falling of a derrick which was blown to the ground by the wind.

In the Electra field, the situation is much the same as in Archer county, and workmen are rebuilding 20 derricks blown down by the wind at the same time. The damage in the two fields is roughly estimated at more than $50,000, but it is thought that all the wells affected by the storm will be in operation again by Tuesday.
