Dole, Gephardt post wins in Iowa

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Republican Sen. Bob Dole and Democratic Rep. Richard Gephardt led the presidential caravan into New Hampshire today, victors in Iowa caucuses that boosted Pat Robertson in the GOP contest and jarred Vice President George Bush.

Bush, third-place finisher here, was up early shaking hands at a New Hampshire factory gate proclaiming "a new day." But Robertson said he didn't expect Bush to remain "a major contender," adding, "I don't think he's very popular."

Gephardt celebrated a narrow victory over Illinois Sen. Paul Simon but third-place finisher Michael Dukakis was satisfied with his Midwestern returns and told supporters, "I hope you feel as terrific as I do."

New Hampshire holds its first-in-the-nation primary next Tuesday, and Dukakis, governor in next-door Massachusetts, is the leader in the polls.

Iowa voters shuffled the cards enough to permit several contenders to declare victory.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson savored his double-digit Iowa vote totals and said he was looking past New Hampshire for Super Tuesday, when 20 states hold contests, including many across the South.

Gary Hart got almost no support in Iowa and he looked to make one last stand in New Hampshire. Bruce Babbitt, disappointed in fifth place, was also in Democratic jeopardy along with another fifth-place finisher, Republican Pete du Pont.

Gephardt, who appealed to economic nationalism, told cheering backers that his narrow win means "the Democrats of Iowa delivered an unmistakable message: this isn't just an election, it's a fight for America."

Dukakis told ABC, "I feel terrific... to come in here and do what I did against two next-door neighbors."

Gephardt won the battle in the first round for 52 Iowa delegates to the national nominating convention. With practically all precincts reporting, he had 20 delegates, compared to 17 for Illinois Sen. Simon and 13 for Dukakis. Two were uncommitted.

Bush, up before dawn to greet factory workers in Nashua, N.H., said he would do much better in next week's primary in New Hampshire where he is "one of them" — a turn on Kansan Dole's ads in Iowa that he was "one of us." And Bush, who has an oceanfront home in Kennebunkport, Maine, told reporters at the Nashua plant in New Hampshire, "Just get my message out.... I'm one of them...I understand this area."

Robertson, however, interviewed on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," said when asked what happened to Bush, "I don't think he's very popular."

The former television evangelist said that Bush has been in President Reagan's shadow of popularity, "but once that shadow burns off, I don't think he's going to be a major contender."

Dole, the big winner, said simply, "I'm not taking anything for granted." He was flying to New Hampshire where he has trailed Bush in opinion polls.

Simon and Dukakis, interviewed in Des Moines today before leaving for New Hampshire, gave upbeat assessments of their second-and third-place finishes among the Democrats.

Midland man questioned in girl's shooting death

Midland police this morning were continuing interrogation of a 27-year-old man in connection with the Monday afternoon fatal shooting of an 11-year-old fifth-grader and the wounding of her mother, the man's fiancee.

Police spokesman Cpl. Jim White said the shooting was the result of a domestic dispute. "They've had a lot of domestic problems, and it just seemed that it escalated beyond their control," White said of the couple.

Pronounced dead Monday afternoon at the north central Midland apartment complex where the pair lived was 11-year-old Gena Lee Frazier, who was shot once in the chest at close range with a .22-caliber rifle, White said.

Her mother, Debra Frazier, 33, was listed in serious but stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital today after about 1½ hours of exploratory surgery Monday afternoon, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Ms. Frazier had suffered a single .22-caliber gunshot wound to the abdomen.

The man's arraignment was expected early this afternoon, White said. On Monday he was treated and released from the Midland hospital for a gunshot wound to his left side, which may have been self-inflicted, according to the spokesman.

White said the couple had argued "off and on" all day Monday, but the dispute which ended in tragedy began about 1:15 p.m., when a man and woman were heard struggling in a downstairs apartment at 2408 Faulkner Ave.

Though perhaps not the summit of his career, Midland oil investor and attorney Barry Williamson will begin sculpting a new life in Arlington, Va., next Monday when he starts his new job in the U.S. Department of Energy's "think tank."

Midland oil investor taking energetic views to capital

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

At least some energy is being exported from the state these days. It's domestic and quasi-Texan, though assuredly not crude.

"It" is Barry Williamson.

The oil investor, attorney, past Midland County Hospital District director and staunch Republican leaves this week for Washington, D.C., and a new post as Special Assistant to the Director of the U.S. Department of Energy's Policy, Planning and Analysis Office.

He and wife, Holly Holt Williamson, 27, will pack up their station wagon and car — he "had to get rid of the pickup" — and exit West Texas Thursday for a new home in Arlington, Va.

Williamson said the "Texan" in him mandates that he drive to work each morning, though he'll be just 20 minutes from the nation's capitol by train.

Basically, the new appointment will call for him to think and write barrels and barrels about the type of energy he loves most — petroleum.

The work entails — according to its lengthy job description — duties like "interfacing, briefing and negotiating."

"It's a good opportunity and a fun thing to do. And I'll have an effect on shaping a national energy policy," said Williamson, 30.

According to the U.S. Government Manual, published by the Federal Register, Williamson's office "formulates and recommends the overall national energy policy, coordinates the analysis and evaluation of policies and programs and conducts a continuing assessment of the national energy situation."

Midland youth to represent Dallas group at soccer meets

By TERRY WILLIAMSON

A European soccer holiday is in store for 18 members of the Midland Soccer Association, chosen to compete in tournaments this summer in Denmark and Sweden.

Bobby Moffatt, a former player with the Dallas Tornado who stayed in Dallas to develop the Flame Soccer Club, held tryouts recently for five boys teams and three girls teams to make the European trip.

Moffatt has taken youth soccer teams to both Europe and South America for the past 11 years, utilizing talent primarily from the Dallas area.

This year, Moffatt decided to enlarge his scope and scout talent in all of the North Texas Soccer Association, of which MSA is a member.

Tryouts were slated for Amarillo, Lubbock, Tyler, Longview, Arlington and the New Mexico towns of Carisbad and Las Cruces.

Midland's Steve Parnell saw one of Moffatt's tryout adverstisments in a soccer trade magazine and took three Midlanders to the Lubbock tryout.

"We took Sean Parnell, Peter Allen and Toby Walker to Lubbock and all three were picked to make the trip," said Parnell. "Only about five or so kids were picked in that tryout, so we felt very fortunate."

Moffatt, too, was impressed because he set up an unscheduled tryout stop in Midland while returning from the Carisbad, where he had picked five youngsets from 130 participants.

Charges get FBI's S&L probe well under way

DALLAS (AP) — Charges of financial wrongdoing filed against five businessmen were the opening salvo in the government's sweeping investigation into fraud among Texas' ailing savings and loan institutions, officials said.

U.S. Attorney Marvin Collins of Dallas on Monday described the investigation as the FBI's most extensive probe ever into white-collar crime in the Southwest.

"This is a significant step early in the life of the task force," Collins said. "We're now seeing the first results of this investigative effort.

"We're hopeful this early success tends to cause others who are under investigation to decide what they are going to do."

Four of the five men either pleaded guilty or agreed to enter guilty pleas and cooperate with the investigation by a 50-person task force formed last year to investigate corruption in the savings and loan industry, Collins said.

The task force represents the largest commitment of human resources and money ever to investigate white-collar crime in the Southwest, said Bobby Gillham, special agent in charge of the FBI's Dallas division.

Airlines report increased delays in December

WASHINGTON (AP) — Airline delays rose sharply in December, according to the latest government statistics, but a survey of travel agents done the same month raises doubts over how concerned air travelers may be about punctuality.

In its latest monthly statistics on airline delays, the Transportation Department reported Monday that one-third of the flights by major air carriers arrived late in December. It was the largest percentage since the airlines began reporting on-time statistics in September.

There were 660 flights late at least 80 percent of the time during the month, compared with only 71 such flights the previous month. Eighteen flights were late each time they took to the air during December, compared with only one in November, the department said.

But the American Society of Travel Agents reported Monday that a survey of 1,600 agents during December showed only one in five agents as ever having had a client request on-time performance information when booking a flight.

The group said that 78 percent of the 1,600 agents who responded to the survey said they had never had a client request on-time information when making reservations or ordering tickets.

"When asked, they said their clients were more interested in safety and other matters," said ASTA spokeswoman Janet Bennett.

In the Transportation Department survey, Pan American World Airways replaced American Airlines as having the best record for promptness in December. American, which had led the other 13 airlines in each of the three previous months, dropped to fourth.

Sen. Phil Gramm presents quality control award at TI

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

In town to tour the Texas Instruments plant and present a quarterly award for quality control, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said he was looking forward to the 1990s, when a 40,000 square foot module would be added to the existing facility, creating an additional 200 jobs.

Gramm also commended the plant both because of the 1,200 jobs it has added to the local economy, and because of the "valuable job" it's doing for national defense. "The computer impulses that go through the semiconductors you manufacture here fire the missiles that keep the Russians away from the gates of America," he stated.

He noted that defense spending has been under siege by the Congress for three years and that Congress had consistently voted to cut defense. He said he was working to block spending cuts.

He added that defense overruns had been reduced from an average 11 percent under the Carter administration to less than 1 percent under the Reagan administration.

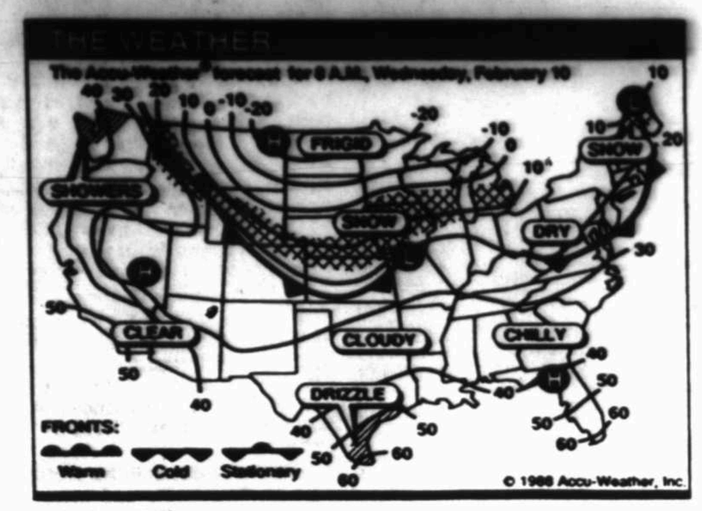
WEATHER SUMMARY



Fair weather forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Weather in the Permian Basin should be fair tonight and Wednesday, forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport said.

Tonight should be fair with a low in the mid 30s. Winds will be from the southeast at 5-10 mph, but increase speed and direction to the north at 10-20 mph by morning.

Wednesday will be partly cloudy with a high in the mid 50s. Winds should be from the north at 10-20 mph.

The record high for Monday was set in 1963 when it reached 80. The record low for today was set in 1936 when it dipped to 12.

STATE

Widely scattered light snow showers are being forecast Wednesday along the Red River in extreme North Texas and Northwest Texas.

An Arctic cold front was expected to move closer to Texas by Wednesday, dropping temperatures by as much as 20 degrees across extreme northern portions of the state.

It will remain continued fair over West Texas and partly to mostly cloudy over the rest of the state tonight and Wednesday with scattered showers or light rain expected over eastern and southern portions of the state.

Lows tonight will be in the 20s and 30s over West Texas, the 30s and 40s over North Texas and in the 50s and 60s in South Texas.

Highs Wednesday will be mostly in the 40s and 50s over West Texas, ranging from the mid 30s in the Panhandle to the lower 60s in extreme West Texas and in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas, in the 40s and 50s over North Texas and in the 50s and 60s across South Texas.

Dense fog was reported across the South Plains early today, prompting the national weather service to issue a dense fog advisory.

Fog reduced visibility to about one-fourth of a mile at Lubbock, but visibility was near zero in some portions of the Lubbock area.

A trough of low pressure was located early today along the Red River into the Abilene area. The trough extended southwestward into the Permian Basin and Trans-Pecos area.

Patches of light rain, drizzle and fog were scattered over the coastal plains, Lower Rio Grande Valley, South Central Texas and Southeast Texas.

Elsewhere, skies were mostly clear over West Texas and mostly cloudy over the rest of the state.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 30s and 40s, ranging from the 20s in the Panhandle to the 50s in extreme South Texas and along the coast. Extremes ranged from 24 at Amarillo to 54 at Brownsville, Laredo and Corpus Christi.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 40 at Wichita Falls, 45 at Fort Worth, 46 at Waco, 47 at Austin, 49 at San Antonio, 46 at Houston, 40 at San Angelo, 33 at Lubbock, 30 at Midland and 39 at El Paso.

NATION

Snow lingered in the Great Lakes region, the northern Rockies and the northern High Plains today, but there were no major winter storms active in the continental United States, forecasters said.

An advisory for snow was in effect for the northwestern and north central sections of Wyoming and Montana, where up to 8 inches of snow were expected by tonight.

Light snow or snow showers were common over much of the upper Great Lakes region early this morning, with 2 inches at Milwaukee and Madison, Wis., and 1 inch at Chicago.

Rainshowers were scattered over the northern and central Pacific Coast, coastal sections of the Carolinas and south-central Texas.

Temperatures were below zero early this morning in Wisconsin and southeastern Minnesota, northern North Dakota and upstate New York.

Temperatures were still above freezing over the southern Plains, the lower half of the Mississippi Valley, the Gulf Coast and along the southern Atlantic Coast.

Readings were still in the 50s in south central Texas and in the 50s and 60s across central and southern Florida, and in the 50s in Southern California and southern Arizona.

Iowa results won't weaken Texas fight

DALLAS (AP) — The victory by Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole in Iowa's presidential caucuses and Pat Robertson's surprising finish does not mean that the expected battle between Robertson and Vice President George Bush for Texas' delegates will be any less intense, Robertson's chief Texas campaign official says.

Near-final returns gave 37 percent of the GOP vote to Dole, 25 percent for Robertson and 19 percent for Bush. Further behind were New York Sen. Jack Kemp with 11 percent and former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont with 7 percent.

"This is going to affect not only the Texas campaign but all campaigns," said Richie Martin, director of the Robertson campaign in Texas.

"It's the de-throning of Bush. He was to a certain extent the king of the mountain, especially in Texas, and this shows he can be beaten. I think that's going to be reverberated in Texas," Martin said in the Dallas campaign headquarters of the former television evangelist.

"I think it's going to be Bush and Robertson in Texas in spite of what Dole just did. As far as Dole's organization in Texas, I just haven't seen it so far," Martin said.

In the Democratic caucuses, with about three-fourths of the vote tallied, U.S. Rep. Richard Gephardt led with 27 percent, followed by Illinois Sen. Paul Simon with 24 percent and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis with 21 percent.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson had 11 percent, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt 9 percent, and Gary Hart 1 percent.

The candidates vie again next week in New Hampshire's first-in-the-nation primaries.

Bush's finishing third behind Robertson was a surprise, but Robertson is the kind of candidate who fares strongest in a caucus situation rather than in a primary, said former U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler, co-chairman of Bush's campaign in Texas.

"This is the first major step out of the blocks, but we've always had a campaign that's national in scope as opposed to the regional appeal that Dole used in Iowa. I look forward to next week in New Hampshire as well as to March 8 in Texas and the South," Loeffler said.

"Texas is certainly going to make its own decision. We're strong in New Hampshire, and we're strong as horse riders in Texas," Loeffler said.

The director of Dole's Texas campaign was ecstatic Monday night and said Dole supporters were intent on delivering a win in Texas.

"The mood is elevated, I've got to tell you that," said John Stevens, regional political director for Dole's campaign in Texas and Oklahoma.

"Everybody is real excited. All of our faith in our candidate and his message is being reinforced tonight and it's going to go on from here," Stevens said from Dole campaign headquarters in Dallas, where he said about 100 people had gathered and more Dole supporters were streaming in.

"Because this is his home state, Bush has had widespread support here, but we've felt all along that it was shallow," Stevens said.

"These numbers in Iowa are well above landslide proportions, and I see the potential for mass erosion of support for Bush in Texas because people now have a reason to go for someone else. The myth has been shattered that because Bush is the vice president he automatically will inherit the GOP nomination," Stevens said.

State Republican chairman George Strake said he still thinks Bush will do well in Texas.

"I think this is the opening game of the season, but not the most important," Strake said from his home in Houston.

"Everyone likes to win," he said. "I'm sure Gephardt and Dole are pleased and I congratulate them. But I would say the main ball game will be March 8."

Strake said he was not surprised by Dole's strong showing but was "a little bit surprised" that Bush, who calls Houston home, came in third behind Robertson.

Strake said the scandal involving alleged forged petitions among GOP presidential candidates will not have any effect on the state's March 8 vote.

On the Democratic side, state Democratic chairman Bob Slagle of Sherman said the Iowa caucus results are "not real meaningful" since Gephardt, Simon and Dukakis were bunched so closely together.

"It sounds like it's good news for Gephardt. I don't know what it means for Simon. It doesn't mean anything for Dukakis because he's going to carry the dickens out of New Hampshire," Slagle said.

DOE

There's more energy in the U.S. than what's underground in Texas, he explained. The DOE, of course, deals with fossil fuels (coal, petroleum and gas), but also with nuclear, electric, solar, wind, geothermal and alcohol-based energy concerns.

The DOE also directs the nation's nuclear weapons research, development, testing, production and surveillance program. Hence, Williamson's prerequisite need for three White House and FBI security clearances.

Williamson plans on calling Midland experts and friends for advice on oil matters that crop up in the capital because herein lies the "pulse on the heartbeat of the industry," he said.

He wants to devote some of his energy to curing the country of its petroleum-related weaknesses — the vacillating price of domestic oil, soft natural gas markets and the existence of a windfall profits tax.

The new special assistant fluctuated Monday afternoon on whether there is a need for an oil import fee.

Once — maybe still — he opposed the threat of governmental interference and red tape a fee like that could create, he said.

"But if this situation (the nation's importing large amounts of foreign oil) continues...we are going to reassess it. I'm not ruling it out. I don't like it, but if it's the only thing we can do...."

The University of Arkansas Razorback earned degrees in political science and jurisprudence before coming to Midland in 1982 to practice litigation and banking law with the firm of Turpin, Smith, Dyer, Saxe and MacDonald.

"Then entrepreneurship got the best of me in 1985.

"I went into the oil business in October 1985 when the price of oil was $28 a barrel. Three months later, it was at $14," he musingly lamented.

His oil operation differed from that of an independent landman's, he explained.

He put oil deals together, bought into productions and "tried to make a living."

While he said making it in the oil business was a combination of skill and a "little bit of luck," he claimed he'd "rather be lucky than good."

Williamson will leave his new post when President Reagan leaves his, he said. Certainly, there is the possibility he may have a chance at a job in what he hopes is a new George Bush administration come January 1989, he added.

Hospital district President Frank Cahoon said he'll remember Williamson's "very definite opinions" at board meetings.

"But I think he did the board a real service by the fact he was willing to serve and give the board his input even though at times...he was controversial."

Williamson said "hell would freeze over" before he ever advocated a totally single member district hospital board, and left as a legacy to Midlanders the hope all citizens would "take a position" on the redistricting matter.

"It is the most important political issue that's come up in this city in a long time," Williamson said.

"Every chance I got, I spoke" on the hospital board, he remembered. "I at least made them listen to me."

IOWA

"It was very close to a dead heat," said Simon on NBC-TV's "Today" program. He said he was optimistic going into New Hampshire, though he conceded Dukakis would likely win that primary. Overall, he said, "I think we have a real shot at doing this thing."

Dole said Monday night's results gave the campaign a "whole new focus," but he wasn't talking about his own win. He was referring to the big evangelical Christian turnout and Robertson's second-place surprise at the expense of Bush, who was battered in the precinct caucuses that represent the 1988 campaign's first major test of candidate strength.

"Tell them I'm coming after them," Bush said after leaving Iowa early Monday night for New Hampshire. "We're in friendly territory here."

With 70 percent of precincts reporting, an incomplete count not likely to be advanced, Gephardt had 24,136 votes for 27 percent of the Democratic vote, followed by Simon at 21,403 with 24 percent and Dukakis with 18,041 and 20.5 percent. Jesse Jackson ran fourth with 9,773 votes and 11 percent, ahead of Babbitt, who had 9 percent and 8,049 votes.

Six percent were uncommitted, and Hart all but disappeared, receiving just 896 votes, less than 1 percent and edging non-candidate Mario Cuomo who had 223 votes. Hart called himself "a sprinter, who is in the race to stay."

A missing element in Iowa was Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore, a critic of Iowa caucuses whose strategy is to look for big wins in the March 8 "Super Tuesday" primaries in his native South. He had 192 votes.

On the Republican side, with 98 percent of the precincts reporting, Dole had 40,661 votes for 37 percent of the vote. Robertson had 26,761 votes for 5 percent to Bush's 20,194, 19 percent. New York Rep. Jack Kemp was fourth with 12,088 votes and 11 percent, while former Delaware Gov. du Pont had 7,999 votes and 7 percent. Former Secretary of State Alexander Haig registered less than 1 percent, having dropped out of Iowa weeks ago. The remaining voters expressed no preference.

Dole, who emphasized his humble background and his Senate experience, said, "With all these good Republican candidates, there was one candidate who was closer to the people."

Officials refused to say how many people are under investigation, but confirmed they are looking into irregularities at 25 thrifts and 10 banks in Texas. The investigation by the task force is expected to last for three years, Collins said.

John G. Smith, former senior executive vice president of Vernon Savings and Loan, agreed to plead guilty to making a false statement on a quarterly report to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Collins said.

Sam Thomas III, former chief executive officer of Commerce Bank of Plano, pleaded guilty to misrepresenting the financial condition of his bank.

The three other men charged over the past week were cited in connection with an alleged 1983 loan kickback scheme at the State Savings and Loan Association of Lubbock, officials said.

Tyrell G. Barker, owner of the thrift, has agreed to plead guilty to a charge of misapplication of funds in the scheme through which he received a $100,000 kickback on a $2 million loan, Collins said.

Also charged were West Texas real estate brokers Larry K. Thompson and Donald W. Nahrwold. Thompson pleaded guilty on charges of misapplication of funds, and Nahrwold faces a three-count indictment alleging conspiracy, aiding and abetting misapplication of funds, and making false statements to federal regulators, Collins said.

State Savings and Loan Association of Lubbock, Vernon Savings and Loan, and Commerce Bank of Plano all have failed, but officials said they could not link the failures directly to the alleged irregular activity.

GRAMM

Gramm then presented the Willoughby Award, an award that is presented each quarter to an employee who has shown outstanding performance for a full quarter in production or quality control. Attendance, overall performance on the line and zero defects are some of the criteria considered in presenting the award.

Gramm presented the award for the last quarter of 1987 to Jesusita Pallan and Tai Suk Lee.

Texas Instruments asks high-ranking officials each quarter to make the presentation of the Willoughby award. Gramm is the ranking minority member of the Senate Subcommittee on Defense Technology, a part of the Senate Arms Committee.

Gramm also availed himself of the opportunity to make a fact-finding tour of the Midland Texas Instruments plant, since it is a major supplier of semiconductors for the military, according to Hank Henry, director of personnel.

SOCCER

"On Jan. 11, when Moffatt came to Midland, it was cold and windy, but we had 31 kids show up," said Parnell. "And we did pretty good. Out of the 31 who showed up, Moffatt picked 19 Midland kids. Eighteen of those picked have made the commitment to make the trip."

Those headed for Europe as members of the 11-year-old team are Peter Allen, Chad Barden, Ross Hunter, Jeremy Inman, Sean Parnell, Davey Van Houten and Toby Walker.

Tom Tipton and Donnie Trentham will be on the 12-year-old team while Paul Fuentes and Molly Starr are both 13.

Eric Williams, Joseph Martinez, Matt Dickey and Chris Murray are the 14-year-old representatives while Shane Barden, Sikes Johnson and Greg Pepper are 15.

Miss Starr is the only girl from Midland selected to make the European trip.

All will travel as members of the Flame Soccer Club of Dallas. They are scheduled to play in the Dana Cup in Copenhagen, Denmark, and in the Gothia Cup in Stockholm, Sweden, July 9-24.

Midland mayor Carroll Thomas issued the soccer players a proclamation this week, making them "Midland's Good Will Ambassadors to the people of Europe" during their tour.

There will be a two-week training camp in June, which will be conducted by Moffatt in Dallas. The MSA members will live with their Dallas counterparts for 10 days.

"Even though this is quite an honor for the kids chosen, it is going to cost a lot of money. It will take $2,200 for each kid to make the trip and we would like to help ease that burden," said Parnell.

"We are setting up a general fund that will be divided through the participants by need."

Phyliss Van Houton is overseeing the fund. Tax deductible donations may be made by mailing checks to the Flame Soccer Club, 2211 Culver, Midland, Texas 79705. For more information, call 682-4336 or 697-4204.

Two fund raisers also are being planned. A bowl-a-thon is slated at Dellwood Lanes at 2 p.m. Feb. 21. The tournament format has a $5 entry fee per team and teams will consist of an adult, a senior and a junior bowler. Teams will take pledges per pin.

Also, in cooperation with the Midland Angels, another fundraiser will be held sometime this spring.

SHOOTING

Investigators are unsure what happened next, except that the man allegedly opened fire with his rifle, White said.

Police were notified of the dispute by the girl's grandfather, Reese Thurston of Midland, White said. The girl apparently had called Thurston, but lawmen are unsure whether she placed the call before or after she had been shot, said White.

The girl's body was found in a bedroom, said the spokesman.

Investigators this morning had not yet interviewed the mother about the shooting, said White, adding that "She will definitely be contacted."

"We don't have a clear understanding of what went on inside the house," he said.

The man, who listed his occupation as a student registered nurse, told officers when he was booked into the city jail that he lived at the Faulkner Avenue apartment. His Texas drivers' license listed a McCamey address, White said.

Mrs. Frazier's ex-husband, an employee of the U.S. Postal Service, went to the hospital when notified of the shooting, White said.

A spokesman for the school where the girl attended class — Santa Rita Elementary Assistant Principal Bill Mauer — said that teachers today would be alert for students who exhibit abnormal behavior resulting from the shooting.

"Our counselors are on call and will be available," he said. The girl had transferred to Santa Rita from Emerson Elementary School two weeks ago.

A woman who sees family violence daily expressed surprised Monday at the escalation of emotion at the Faulkner Avenue apartment.

"We usually find the violence is directed at the spouse and not so often at a child," said Tedda McAnear, coordinator for the Victim-Witness program at the Midland County District Attorney's office.

"We have had women come in here with black eyes, their hair all pulled out, and beaten up pretty good. But a homicide is the exception to the rule," she said.

Ms. McAnear and her staff get "almost daily referrals" from law enforcement agencies about women who are afraid of physical violence from a husband, ex-husband or boyfriend.

AIR

Complaints from air travelers to the Transportation Department's consumer affairs office rose from 3,125 in December to 3,610 in January. The consumer complaint statistics are released along with the on-time performance statistics, but apply to a later month.

Continental Airlines had the worst complaint record in January, with 30.56 complaints for every 100,000 passengers flown, followed by Eastern Airlines with 19.17 complaints.

Boulter says Bentsen could do more to help energy industry

LUBBOCK (AP) — Rep. Beau Boulter, who hopes to face Sen. Lloyd Bentsen in the U.S. Senate race this fall, claims the incumbent Democrat could work harder to support the domestic energy industry.

An aide to Bentsen denied the charge, citing the passage last year of the Energy Security Act, designed to ensure that the nation's consumption of imported energy doesn't exceed 50 percent.

In a letter sent Monday to Bentsen, Boulter, R-Amarillo, urged support of the National Petroleum Security Act, co-sponsored by Boulter and Republican Sen. Phil Gramm.

The legislation includes provisions for repeal of the windfall profit tax, a 10 percent tax credit for the first $10 million spent on exploratory and marginal wells and decontrol of natural gas prices.

"You have in the past indicated your support for these provisions, but thus far we have seen little willingness on the part of the Finance Committee to act," Boulter said in the letter. Bentsen is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Boulter, who faces three other Republicans bidding to unseat Bentsen, told reporters Monday that times will continue to be tough on oil and gas producers unless legislative action is taken.

"Our lenders have very little confidence in the industry so that loans are hard to come by," Boulter said. "The real loser is not just the giant that invests money in wells and tries to put deals together and drill, but also the loser is people whose livelihoods are dependent on the oil patch."

"He (Bentsen) talks a good game for the domestic petroleum industry but he hasn't done one thing," Boulter said.

An aide for Bentsen said Boulter's comments missed the mark.

"The fact is that the Finance Committee has taken many actions at the behest of Sen. Bentsen, both as chairman of the finance committee and before he was chairman, to try to encourage domestic energy production in this country," said Bentsen aide Jack DeVore.

"The letter demonstrates, certainly in the case of the repeal of the windfall profits tax, that the chairman of the Finance Committee has already acted on that," said DeVore, noting that such a provision was included in an omnibus trade bill, now in conference committee.

Perot donates $1 million to SMU

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist University received a $1 million gift from billionaire H. Ross Perot, who said he is confident the school can overcome its turbulent football scandal through academic excellence.

"Dallas and this region will benefit tremendously over the coming decades from the rebirth and the new SMU," Perot said Monday.

Perot said the university's new president, A. Kenneth Pye, and athletic director, Doug Single, have shown the school has straightened out its priorities.

The university announced Friday it faced a deficit of at least $4 million in next year's budget. Trustees said tuition would be raised 8 percent and room and board fees would be increased 2.5 percent to meet the shortfall.

"The reason why tuition is increasing and the reason why salary increases are not taking place is we have a need for unrestricted funds to meet the general purposes of the university," Pye said.

School officials said they would be able to defray costs of some scholarships with the gift.

Known for his support of public and private education, Perot said SMU could use the donation from the Perot Foundation as it sees fit.

"Out of adversity with leadership can come great progress. Those of you who know me know I wouldn't put a penny into a second-rate operation," he said.

"Just having a bunch of gorillas who can't read and write, and none of them are going to get a degree, and they all get a full scholarship and a Mercedes...now that's the Texas way, that's not the SMU way. That's the Southwest Conference way," Perot said.

SMU was slapped with the NCAA's stiffest sanction, the death penalty, after an investigation revealed football players were being paid from a slush fund. The National Collegiate Athletic Association banned football at SMU in 1987 and the school voluntarily suspended its 1988 season.

Donations to SMU also declined after the pay-for-play scandal.

Perot said he gave SMU the money because the school resolved problems stemming from the scandal. He said the university convinced him it would be serious about academics when trustees dipped into their own pockets to cover the expenses of a Methodist bishops' investigation of the scandal and to pay outstanding contracts to former athletic department staff members.

"I can't think of a higher or better use of the foundation's money than to give an unrestricted gift to SMU at this point in time as SMU starts to rebuild what I'm convinced will be an absolutely magnificent future," Perot said.

Perot, who has built his fortune in oil, gas, real estate and computers, led Texas in its attempts to overhaul public and higher education.

Air Force base to furlough workers to meet budget cuts

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Air Logistics Center at Kelly Air Force base will furlough permanent employees and terminate 641 other workers to save $13.6 million during the last month of the 1988 fiscal year, officials say.

The reductions are needed to meet budget cuts by the Defense Department.

U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, and Kelly AFB officials said Monday that 404 "on call" workers will be terminated March 20 and 237 temporary workers will be terminated March 31.

Officials say they hope to recall the "on call" workers by Setp. 20.

Permanent employees also will receive furloughs, days off without pay, on a staggered basis, beginning April 1, to help reduce defense spending.

At one time, furloughs were estimated at 10 days for each of the 15,090 logistics center employees here, but that number has been reduced to six and may even be less than that, said Col. Stan Frost, center comptroller.

If employees are given 10-day furloughs, the total savings here would be nearly $20 million, according to Ken Christensen, deputy director of personnel and civilian personnel officer.

"It's the first time in the Air Force that we've ever had a furlough," Christensen said.

The three officials explained that various steps have been taken to block the need of a reduction in force of permanent employees. The last such reduction in force was in 1976, Christensen said.

"The point we must make clear for people is the avoidance of a reduction in force, permanent layoff of permanent employees," he said.

The center now has has 16,107 military and civilian personnel, compared to the all-time high of 28,000 during the Vietnam war.

Tax increase, improved economy wiping out deficit, Richards says

By JEANETTE ALLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Thanks to a $5.7 billion tax increase and a recovering economy, the state's treasury is recuperating from a record $1.9 billion deficit, state Treasurer Ann Richards said Monday.

"We've seen small and significant gains in the Texas economy and they have produced better than we expected in tax collection," Ms. Richards said.

Ms. Richards said she has "good news" to report for a change after a year of bringing news of cash flow problems in the state's coffers. During the summer special sessions Ms. Richard was said to have "pushed the panic button" by warning that the state government would shut down unless legislators took quick action to replace plummeting revenues.

Although the improved cash flow is expected to eliminate the deficit by January 1989, the imbalance between tax collections and spending will likely produce temporary deficts during the 1990-1991 budget cycle, Ms. Richards said in a report to the Legislature released Monday.

The Treasury estimates the state's debts will not come near the December 1987 peak deficit of $1.9 billion before the next biennium because the tax collection rate is up and the state's cash management notes are paying off.

The state sells cash management notes — short term bonds — to pay its debts until tax dollars are received. Ms. Richards said the notes serve the taxpayer better than the past practice of borrowing from cash reserves, which costs the Treasury interest dollars. The cash management notes are expected to save $20 million in interest this year, she said.

"As long as tax collections and expenditures occur at different times and you have cash going in and out you are always going to experience some kind of deficit," she said.

Ms. Richards said if voters approve a referendum in November to create a rainy day fund financed with borrowing from cash reserves, the deficit may increase slightly.

However, Ms. Richards said, economic recovery in the state should keep the deficit down. Rising oil prices have contributed to a 26-percent increase in oil revenue and the state's unemployment rate has dropped about 2 percent since December 1986.

Betty Stuart holds Pete Rodriguez at a party before the boy leaves Austin's Seton Medical Center, where he has lived since his birth two years ago.

Boy with intestinal disorder leaves hospital for first time in his life

AUSTIN (AP) — Nurses say they will miss the brave 2-year-old boy who is finally going home after spending his entire life in the hospital because of a condition that made digesting food impossible.

Pete Rodriguez was born prematurely and soon after birth contracted an infection that destroyed much of his intestines. Surgery to combat the problem left Pete with "short-gut syndrome."

Seton Medical Center officials said he was scheduled to go home today.

"This is the day we have been waiting for," said his mother, Martha Rodriguez. "It's the answer to our prayers. We are very happy."

"All of us are sad to see him go," said Betty Koger, director of Seton's Regional Neonatal Center. "We've become so accustomed to having him in our daily lives; he has been a part of our family. I think the whole hospital is going to miss him."

Pete has never eaten normally, and is kept alive by tubes that feed him fluids and remove wastes. Nurses at Seton say Pete's intestines are slowly replacing the damaged section that was removed and hope that one day he will be able to digest food.

On Sunday, many of the folks who have looked after Pete since he was born hosted a send-off party for him. There was punch and cake and ice cream, and presents to be opened.

"All of us are sad to see him go. We've become so accustomed to having him in our daily lives; he has been a part of our family. I think the whole hospital is going to miss him."

— Betty Koger of Seton's Regional Neonatal Center

Although Pete could not eat any of the goodies, he stuck his fingers in the cake to get a sample of the taste.

During his two-year stay, Pete has grown close to many of the nurses who have cared for him. They are used to seeing him run around the halls of the eighth-floor neonatal unit, and say his courage and determination have been a source of pride to them.

Pete will continue to receive around-the-clock nursing care. Nurses from Seton Holy Cross Home Health Care Program and from Seton Medical Center will monitor his progress at home.

His mother and father, Pedro Rodriguez, recently moved into a larger apartment to accommodate him.

Robertson outspends others in Texas, data shows

FORT WORTH (AP) — Former television evangelist Pat Robertson far outdistanced all other presidential aspirants in campaign spending last year in Texas, federal elections documents show.

Robertson, a Republican, spent $817,318 in Texas during 1987. Vice President George Bush spent $169,800 in his adopted home state. His chief GOP opponent, Kansas senator Robert Dole, spent $60,772 in Texas, approximately $50,000 of which was spent during the last three months of 1987.

Former Secretary of State Alexander Haig spent $8,644 and Rep. Jack Kemp of New York spent nearly $8,000. Former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont did not report that he spent any money in Texas.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, who said he spent more money in Texas than any other state except Iowa, led Democratic candidates in spending at $207,504, only about one-fourth as much as Robertson.

According to year-end reports filed by candidates to the Federal Election Commission, the candidates spent most of their money during the final three months of the year.

"Some of the spending now is based on laying the groundwork so you can be competitive in November," said Tom Cosgrove, Dukakis' Texas campaign manager. "You can't just come into a state the size of Texas and drop a few bucks and expect to win."

Among other Democrats, former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart spent $36,300 in Texas and Illinois Sen. Paul Simon spent $31,000. Sen. Al Gore of Tennessee spent $32,673.

"In 1987, it was really a matter of introducing Al Gore to Texas," campaign strategist George Shipley said. "The game plan really kicked in in January, 1988."

Democrat Jesse Jackson reported no campaign spending in Texas in 1987. Figures were unavailable for former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt or Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt.

Dark horse independent candidate Lyndon LaRouche, dogged by legal problems most of the year, reported expenditures of $48,500 in Texas.

The first criminal charge has been filed at Houston in connection with allegedly fraudulent signatures on petitions filed to qualify Republican presidential candidates.

A notary public from suburban Missouri City was named in a Class A misdemeanor charge of official misconduct accusing him of allegedly failing to properly notarize election petitions for candidates Bob Dole and Alexander Haig.

Sylvester Neely, 39, failed to take sworn oaths from campaign workers that the petition signatures were valid, Harris County Assistant District Attorney Casey O'Brien said Monday.

Neely, who could receive one year in jail and a $2,000 fine, surrendered to the Harris County Sheriff's Department and posted a $500 bond.

O'Brien said Neely accepted more than $300 in return for notarizing election petitions at 35 cents a page during early December. The signature collectors were not present as required when the petitions were notarized, the prosecutor said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Chemicals used in illegal drug operation found after explosion

DALLAS (AP) — Chemicals apparently used in the manufacture of illegal drugs were found after an explosion and fire that damaged 12 units of an apartment complex Monday, authorities said.

One witness reported seeing a man blown through the window of the first-floor apartment where the fire started. The man, who had burns and cuts on his face, was driven off in a car by another woman before emergency crews arrived, said Michelle Kelly, 24, who was visiting friends at Brookshire North Apartments.

Fire damage was estimated at $150,000.

Deputy Fire Chief Tom Walker said firefighters at the scene found intense fire coming from the doors and windows of a first-floor unit.

Ms. Kelly said she was walking through the parking lot when she saw a man blown through a window. "He was holding his face, which had been cut by glass, and it looked like his face had been burned."

Police narcotics agents found a nearly empty 5-gallon can of ether as well as other chemicals they said indicated a drug-manufacturing laboratory had been operated in the apartment.

Texans charged with possession

ROLLA, Mo. (AP) — The Missouri State Highway Patrol may have made its largest marijuana seizure when a trooper discovered nearly 800 pounds of the drug after a weekend traffic stop, officials said Monday.

"It is a considerable amount to be seized by anybody, certainly by somebody making a traffic stop," said Lt. A.J. Viessman of the patrol's office in Rolla. "It's the largest amount we've seized in this area. I believe (it is) the largest amount the patrol has ever seized."

Viessman said a trooper who had stopped a truck Friday afternoon on Interstate 44 just west of Lebanon discovered about 800 pounds of processed marijuana. A McAllen, Texas, couple in the truck was arrested.

The patrol said the Texans, whose names were not released, were charged with felony possession of marijuana. Laclede County Prosecutor Jack Miller was unavailable for comment Monday.

Viessman said the investigation continued with the help of the patrol, Illinois state police and police in Hammond, Ind., where the Texas couple had been headed. Authorities took a portion of the marijuana to Hammond and made three arrests there, he said.

Inmate escapes from federal prison

EL PASO (AP) — An inmate serving time on a drug conviction has escaped from La Tuna federal prison near Anthony, officials said Monday.

Charles Ben Romero, 31, turned up missing at the 10 p.m. inmate count Sunday night, said prison spokesman Ron Nicholas. Prison officials said they were not sure when Romero escaped, but assume he cut through the perimeter fence sometime after 9 p.m. Sunday.

"We have not found any tools, but we assume he used some cutting instruments, some wire cutters perhaps," Nicholas said.

Romero is an Albuquerque resident who began serving an 8-year term for the manufacture of methamphetamines July 11, Nicholas said.

Auto dealer receives award

AUSTIN (AP) — Gene Fondren, president of the Texas Automobile Dealers Association, has received a national award for his part in promoting safety belt use in the state.

Fondren, who received a 1987 President Award from Traffic Safety Now in San Francisco Friday, was active in the 1985 effort that resulted in the state law requiring safety belt use.

Dallas council may have to lay off more workers

DALLAS (AP) — City Council members got another gloomy fiscal forecast, with more layoffs and service cuts predicted to cope with shrinking revenues and a about $35 million in new expenses.

City Manager Richard Knight, who has vowed to present a no-tax increase budget for next year, said Monday he hasn't changed his mind.

"That's what we're saying. That (not to raise taxes) is our intent," he said after an informal briefing with City Council members. "It also will mean some very tough choices."

The deficit is the result of declining property values and a soft sales tax base coupled with new expenditures to which the council has agreed.

The new expenses include $8.7 million to hire 150 more police officers and fund other Police Department reforms. City officials also predict $11 million in new debt service next year and $14.2 million in general fund expenditures.

Last year, the council laid off about 60 people in city government because of budget shortfalls.

Knight, who is to present his 1988-89 budget proposal in August, has said he intends to follow a consultant's recommendations and lay off 28 people from the Water Utilities Department and trim other departments. He said Monday he will also look at cutting basic services, including parks, fire, police and streets.

Most council members said they would not cut uniformed officers or firefighters, but said the city might reduce the number of other employees in both the police and fire departments, and possibly reduce the number of fire stations in the city.

"We're going to have to be ready to take a lot of heat and unpopular votes," said council member Craig Holcomb, chairman of the Public Safety Committee.

Homeowners already face a potentially higher tax bill because of a state law reducing homestead exemptions from 30 percent to 20 percent this year. The lower exemption would cause a $1.3 billion expansion in the city's tax base, but that won't generate enough revenue to offset the overall slump in declining property values, officials said.

The tax base is projected to decline from $51.4 billion to $50.8 billion next year.

Rep. Richard Gephardt gives a thumbs up to his supporters with his wife Jane following the results of the Iowa Democratic presidential caucuses in Des Moines, Iowa, Monday night.

Gephardt promises to fight 'forces of greed'

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Rep. Richard Gephardt is promising to use his Iowa Democratic caucus triumph as the linchpin for a crusade against "the forces of greed."

"We've won the first battle, but the struggle does not end here," Gephardt said after edging Sen. Paul Simon and Gov. Michael Dukakis Monday night. "It's only begun."

"The Democrats of Iowa delivered an unmistakable message," he told supporters Monday night in a victory speech. "This isn't just an election. It's a fight for America, and it's your fight too."

Gephardt scheduled a speech today at the courthouse in Manchester, N.H., and said he would not depart from the themes he emphasized in Iowa.

During a television interview, he acknowledged that Dukakis, governor of Massachusetts, is "clearly the front-runner" in the New Hampshire primary, a week from today. But he said "I think I can can come in second and do a good job."

Terry McAuliffe, Gephardt's campaign finance chairman, said the congressman's victory will give the campaign "a tremendous boost. People who have been sitting on the sidelines are now ready to move. And we have the mechanism ready to take advantage of that."

Gephardt's victory culminated a nearly 2-year-long campaign.

He complained incessantly about the decline of the family farm and the loss of markets for agricultural products. He preached a get-tough policy toward U.S. trading partners and bemoaned plant closings and the export of jobs overseas.

The message was summed up in a television commercial, broadcast in the last days of the campaign, in which Gephardt promised to reclaim "the soul of America."

He repeated these themes Monday night as his wife Jane and other members of his family looked on in the glare of television lights.

"We celebrate tonight, but tomorrow, the fight starts anew," he said. "I ask for your help, not just to win an election. I ask for your help to change America and give it back its soul."

"I will never leave behind the memories and the concerns, the hopes and the hurts of the Iowans who opened their hearts and their homes," Gephardt said.

"There are some that are cynical among us," he said. But Gephardt said he's convinced that New Hampshire Democrats, and those around the country, share the Iowa Democrats' concern about the future of the economy.

"This is our America, and we're going to take it back from the vested interests," he said, lambasting an over-abundance of business mergers, the "agri-business establishment" and corporate polluters.

Gephardt struck out against those who "sell off American assets and sell out the workers."

"It's time to tell the forces of greed, 'Enough is enough.'

"In their America, pollution is the price we pay for profits...and we're going to demand that the byproducts of selfishness be cleaned up. It's time to say to the apologists of the status quo, 'Enough is enough.' "

"In our America, in our struggle to protect the Social Security of senior citizens, we will never surrender," Gephardt said.

Bush picks up on Dole's Iowa campaign theme

NASHUA, N.H. (AP) — Vice President George Bush today told the voters of New Hamsphire "I'm one of you," taking a new theme for his battered campaign from rival Bob Dole a day after Dole crushed Bush in the Iowa caucuses.

Looking for a victory in the newly critical New Hampshire primary one week away, the Republican presidential hopeful made a plea for support as a long-time neighbor of this New England state and as the candidate whose positions are most in tune with people here.

After an embarrassing third-place finish in Iowa, Bush vowed to work hard to win the Feb. 16 primary here, where he is the leader in the polls.

"I'm fighting back," Bush said as he greeted workers outside the Nashua Corp. plant in Nashua. "I'm not going to be discouraged over one blow in some other state. Every state stands on its own."

Later, at the Hopkinton High School in Contoocook, N.H., Bush made a backhand apology to Dole for taking his message.

"If it hadn't been for Joe Biden, I'd have a new slogan for my campaign. And that slogan would be: 'I'm one of you,' " Bush told several hundred students. "The reason I'd want that slogan is because I am."

"I was born in Massachusetts, grew up in Connecticut...and have a home across the way in Maine...I understand New Hampshire. A lot of my platform and program is a New Hampshire program and platform.'"

In Iowa, Dole's theme of "He's one of us" worked well next door to his home state. Bush hopes the same affinity will work in his direction in New Hampshire's primary.

His mention of Biden, the Democratic senator from Delaware, refers to the allegations of plagiarism in speeches that helped drive Biden from his party's presidential race last September.

Bush said his positions on the budget deficit, taxes, the environment, education and energy are in tune with those of New Hampshire residents.

"And I'm one of you because in this state there is steadfast loyal support for the president of the United States and I have that," Bush said. "When the going gets tough, I have not jumped away from the president for my own personal political gain, nor do I intend to do it."

Bush's link to Reagan will be further emphasized this week with a mailing to 125,000 GOP households in the state of a brochure featuring Reagan on the cover. "He trusted only one man to stand by him — through thick and thin," said the campaign flyer of Reagan's feelings about Bush.

With New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu standing at this side, Bush talked to a small stream of well-dressed workers entering the plant.

"Iowa made a mistake. New Hampshire will correct it," Sununu told reporters.

Bush missed talking to several workers as he was answering reporters' questions, saying at one point, "missed a voter, darn it."

Bush's staff had hurriedly scheduled the pre-dawn handshaking tour to kick off an effort to "hit the ground running" with a vigorous effort aimed at victory next week in the New Hampshire primary.

"Tell them I'm coming after them," Bush warned rivals Dole and Pat Robertson following the third-place Iowa finish that both embarrassed and surprised him.

"I'm a fighter. I'm going to come back. I'm not going to be slinking around here," Bush said late Monday night after the defeat.

Dukakis 'going for the gold' against Gephardt in primary

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, cheered by his third-place finish in the Iowa caucuses, said today he was "going for the gold" in New Hampshire with an aggressive campaign against Iowa winner Richard Gephardt.

"If I can get out of New Hampshire in good shape, and I fully expect to, I think we're going to do well in the South and be on our way to the nomination," Dukakis said. "I think the South is wide open."

Before he flew this morning to New Hampshire, where he is heavily favored in the Feb. 16 presidential primary, Dukakis took a potshot at Gephardt for the protectionist trade stance that the Missouri congressman stressed in Iowa.

"It's not going to play in New Hampshire, and it's not going to play in the rest of the country because most of the American people know that we've got to be competitive in the world," Dukakis said in an interview with The Associated Press.

"We have to encourage more trade, not less trade, and we can't be putting walls up around the country," he said. "We did that in the 1930s, and it led to disaster."

The governor told several hundred supporters Monday night that "we came out here 10 months ago to do a good job in Iowa, and we've done it." He added:

"Tonight we captured the bronze. Next week we're going for the gold and we're going to win it."

Dukakis finished behind Gephardt and Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois in the Democratic field here, and predicted that the New Hampshire contest would be close despite a poll showing him with a 3-1 lead over his nearest challenger.

The governor said his Iowa showing was a success because "we've shown that this is a national campaign" and that he can capture the Democratic nomination and the November general election.

Dukakis aides were quick to declare him the Democratic frontrunner.

"We proved to the people of New Hampshire and the people of this country that we have the candidate and the campaign to do well outside our home region," said Dukakis campaign manager Susan Estrich. "It was a very close race here and for Mike to do so well shows he's the man to beat."

Supporters reach out to hug GOP presidential candidate Pat Robertson at a celebration following the Iowa caucuses in Des Moines Monday night.

Second-place showing no surprise to Pat Robertson

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Pat Robertson said today he wasn't surprised by his strong second-place finish in Iowa's Republican caucuses and suggested a main reason he beat Vice President George Bush was that "I don't think he's very popular."

"I would have been surprised a week ago. I wasn't surprised yesterday," said Robertson in an appearance on CBS-TV's "This Morning."

Roberts, who campaigned in a 53-city, four-day bus tour of Iowa, said in an interview Monday night that he saw the support building as he brought out "a new spectrum of people who've been disenfranchised."

"I won Dubuque. Well that is a Roman Catholic, Democratic, blue collar worker city and I won it...so this is a new side of my coalition," he said.

Today, on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," he was asked what happened to Bush, who finished third in Iowa behind Kansas Sen. Bob Dole and Robertson.

He said Bush's popularity has been based to a large extent on his association with President Reagan, and "once that shadow is burned off I don't think he's going to be a major contender."

Robertson's "invisible army" made itself quite visible. Folks who normally stay away from politics crowded into churches and county courthouses to stand up and be counted.

"He's pro-family, he's for moral values, which our country is sorely lacking, he's for a strong defense and he's opposed to abortion," said Alan Torgler, 32.

"I think this shows there are more conservative people than you realize," said Bonnie Johnson, 64. "They want good government with traditional values.

In Waterloo, Gloria Widman, a Robertson backer, told a reporter: "He just stands for godly issues — the Bible and Jesus. He operates in miraculous wonders in terms of what the Bible says — prophecy, healing, miracles."

Robertson, who became a public figure because of his TV ministry but must reach beyond the religiously motivated to succeed as a politician, compares his candidacy to the 1960 campaign of John F. Kennedy.

Religion was an issue then, and Robertson told Iowans it's being used against him now.

"Obviously I'm a person who stands for strong moral values. I believe in God," he said. "And I believe that we should have God central in the concerns of this nation. After all, we say we're one nation under God, in God we trust and I think that's a good concept to keep before us."

But his faith, he says, should not be held against him. And in the Sunday Des Moines Register, his campaign ran a two-page ad, with Kennedy on one page and Robertson on the other.

Talk with Noriega about drugs, officials say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rear Admiral John Poindexter talked with Panamanian strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega during a disputed December 1985 meeting about stopping drug-running, not about invading Nicaragua, according to U.S. officials.

Poindexter's principal message during the meeting was a demand that Noriega curb drug smuggling, the officials said, denying Noriega's claim that the former National Security adviser had sought Panamanian cooperation in a U.S. plan to invade Nicaragua.

Noriega's comments, made in a television interview broadcast Sunday, drew sharp denials Monday from the White House and the State Department.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, traveling with President Reagan to an anti-drug conference in Durham, N.C., said Noriega's comments lacked credibility because of his legal problems.

"Noriega's willing to say anything at this point," he said. "These are just the idle charges of a man indicted for drug-running."

Two federal grand juries in Florida handed down indictments last Friday, portraying Noriega as a key member of an international drug trafficking conspiracy.

In 1985, shortly after becoming NSC adviser, Poindexter met with Noriega, accompanied by Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams and former White House aide Oliver L. North. During the meeting, Noriega was "asked to clean up his act," said one official, referring to Noriega's alleged involvement in drug-related activities. This official and another who corroborated the account spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Their version was confirmed by Norman Bailey, a former NSC aide who left government in 1983 but who said he was told by Poindexter two years ago that the admiral "read the riot act to Noriega" and asked him to be a "good boy." In fact, Bailey said, some illegal activities did decline in 1986.

The indictments appeared to remove any remaining ambiguity about American policy toward Noriega, who has served as Panama's de facto ruler since 1983.

At times in recent years, Noriega had a cooperative relationship with the Central Intelligence Agency and he received letters of praise from the Drug Enforcement Administration for assisting U.S. anti-smuggling efforts.

In contrast to the DEA, federal prosecutors made him the principal target of an investigation. The State Department, meanwhile, has been hostile to Noriega for years.

Robert M. Morgenthau, the district attorney for Manhattan, testified at a Senate hearing Monday that law enforcement officials long believed that Noriega was involved in drug trafficking. But he said action against Noriega was delayed because of his ties to "high people in the U.S. government." He did not identify the "high people."

If Noriega was receiving mixed signals from the United States, he was sending some of his own to Washington. While cooperating with the CIA and allowing Panama to be a center of U.S. intelligence gathering activities, Noriega also had a constructive relationship with Cuban President Fidel Castro, according to the officials.

The DEA's letters of praise to Noriega angered State Department officials, who contended that the Panamanian's "crackdown" on drug traffickers perceived by the agency was limited to those who declined to give Noriega a share of the profits.

DEA spokesman Cornelius Dougherty said Monday that Noriega "was helpful and cooperative."

But when asked if Noriega might have only turned in drug dealers who refused to do business with him, Dougherty said, "That might be true."

Cuba making conciliatory gestures to U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cuba has made a series of gestures in recent months that indicate a fundamental decision to pursue less hostile relations with the United States, according to American officials.

The Cuban moves involve not only bilateral matters but also other issues that have strained relations for years, including human rights and Cuba's military presence in Angola.

"Cuba has made a clear decision to treat us more pragmatically, less hysterically," said one U.S. official, insisting on anonymity. "Cuba has decided to cooperate when there is a mutual interest."

The Cuban actions go well beyond the November decision to revive an agreement that, among other provisions, calls for the repatriation of about 2,700 Cubans from the Mariel boat lift who are ineligible to remain in the United States.

Cuba also has:

— Indicated for the first time a willingness to withdraw, under certain conditions, all 40,000 Cuban troops from Angola — a high-priority Reagan administration objective. Previously, Cuba had said its troops would remain in Angola until South Africa's apartheid system of racial segregation was dismantled.

— Dealt more respectfully with the new head of the U.S. diplomatic mission, John Taylor, than it did his predecessors. Taylor has been allowed to visit a nuclear power plant construction site and, in a break with previous practice, has been receiving government invitations to attend diplomatic functions in Havana.

— Restored the practice of allowing the State Department to send supplies to its diplomatic mission in Havana by way of charter flight from Miami. That privilege had been suspended during late 1986 and part of 1987.

— Held businesslike discussions with U.S. officials on allowing Cuba to beam radio broadcasts to the United States. This would compensate for the Voice of America's Radio Marti broadcast operation to Cuba.

— Allowed a U.S. human rights delegation, including Rep. Bruce A. Morrison, D-Conn., to visit a group of long-term political prisoners. Morrison called the visit "unprecedented" and a "major breakthrough."

Several administration officials who were asked were unable to agree on why Cuba has become more accommodating after an extended period of acrimony toward the United States.

Some perceive a desire on Cuba's part be in step with the friendlier attitude of the Soviet Union toward the United States. Others say Cuba may be laying the groundwork for an improved relationship with the United States once President Reagan leaves office in January 1989.

Releasing killers would mock justice

Justice was mocked recently when a military appeals court in El Salvador freed three convicted gunmen in the June 1985 massacre of four U.S. Marines and nine civilians. The murderers remain in custody, while the Salvadoran government seeks to vacate the order, but the court appears unswayed by reason.

The victims had been sitting at adjacent outdoor cafes in San Salvador when gunmen later claiming to be members of a left-wing guerrilla outfit opened fire with machine guns. Four off-duty Marines and two American computer technicians were among the 13 killed in the hail of bullets.

The so-called Central American Revolutionary Workers Party claimed responsibility for the attack. It is the smallest of the five self-styled armies in the communist Marti National Liberation Front that have been trying for more than a decade to overthrow El Salvador's constitutionally elected government.

After the suspects were arrested by Salvadoran police and arraigned before a civilian court, the case was turned over to a military tribunal. That was the tipoff that trouble was brewing. Earlier, military courts have used the recent amnesty law to free suspects in right-wing death-squad killings.

The civilian magistrate agreed with a defense motion that the attack was politically inspired, not criminally motivated, because the target was military. Oh? Do the lives of nine civilians count for nothing in El Salvador's concept of justice?

Equally absurd was the military court's statement that its action complied with the letter and spirit of El Salvador's amnesty law, which went into effect last November as part of the regional peace plan signed by five Central American presidents.

To suggest that there is some sort of moral equivalence between murderers and pamphleteers, as the court did in ordering the suspects freed, is a shameful affront to the rule of law and common sense.

The government of President Jose Napoleon Duarte stands to lose $18.5 million in sorely needed U.S. aid if the gunmen go free. Last December, Congress voted to withhold 10 percent of the $185 million in economic aid approved for El Salvador this year if the suspects were released. The cutoff would be automatic.

If these murderers are freed in a gross miscarriage of justice, El Salvador will lose more than its self-respect. But that insufficient penalty can hardly repay the families of the victims or the grave insult done to to El Salvador's steadfast ally, the American people.

Traffic needs study

We would like to add our support to the need to upgrade the traffic light at Wadley Avenue and I Street from a 24-hour-a-day light to a traffic-activated signal, operating during the hours of 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. It is extremely aggravating and a waste of time and fuel to get caught by the red light at I, and nothing enters or crosses Wadley. Not even pedestrians. This has happened to us time and time again.

We have never observed children walking across Wadley in the area of Hillander School to attend school. And I just cannot believe anyone would send a 3-year-old child (alone) across Wadley to school or anywhere else for that matter.

People that do that can expect to find their child's name in the obituaries or their picture on a milk carton. Having raised three children ourselves, we have a pretty good idea of the capability and judgment of a 3-year-old.

The council also might study the intersection of Big Spring and Airpark Road. Traffic control of some type is badly needed now, especially at business starting and quitting times. With new businesses coming into that area, the post office opening and a planned hospital, entering Big Spring out of that area is very hazardous.

Residents come first

I was dismayed to read on the front page of your paper Wednesday, Jan. 27th, the news that the school trustees had selected a Fort Worth architect in connection with the design of 50 new classrooms for the Midland Independent School District.

This action represents an export of jobs to an area 300 miles away from our community. It may be that the trustees operate with the misconception that our local economy is flourishing, and there is no reason to be especially aware of local needs and concerns. Perhaps it is merely the operation of a "low dollar" philosophy to the exclusion of all other considerations. Perhaps it is only bad judgment.

I cannot, however, fail to record my complete disagreement with this action, especially when the community and its citizens need special concern and commitment from all public officials to meet current economic stringencies. Keeping employment opportunities here in Midland or in nearby areas is of paramount importance in maintaining a core of skilled professionals as an asset in attracting new business and economic life to this area.

The action of trustees is a blow to anyone concerned with maintaining and improving our community and its potential for the future. I can only hope that voters will judge this attitude and behavior at the polls.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Feb. 9, the 40th day of 1988. There are 326 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 9, 1943, the World War II battle of Guadalcanal in the southwest Pacific ended with a U.S. victory over Japanese forces, who were forced to evacuate.

On this date:

In 1773, William Henry Harrison, ninth president of the United States, was born in Charles City County, Va.

In 1825, the House of Representatives elected John Quincy Adams president after no candidate received a majority of electoral votes.

In 1870, the U.S. Weather Bureau was established.

In 1889, an act of Congress elevated the Department of Agriculture to Cabinet-level status.

In 1933, the Oxford Union Society at Oxford University debated, and approved by a vote of 275-153, a motion stating "That this House will in no circumstances fight for its King and Country."

In 1950, in a speech in Wheeling, W.Va., Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis., charged that the State Department was riddled with Communists.

In 1962, Jamaica became an independent nation within the British Commonwealth.

In 1971, Apollo 14 returned to Earth after its crew made man's third landing on the moon.

In 1977, Queen Alia of Jordan, the third wife of King Hussein and the first to be named queen, was killed in the crash of a military helicopter.

In 1984, Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov died, less than 15 months after succeeding Leonid Brezhnev.

Ten years ago: The U.S. Senate confirmed Judge William H. Webster to a 10-year term as director of the FBI and Frank Carlucci to be deputy director of the CIA.

Today's birthdays: Former Secretary of State Dean Rusk is 79. Actress Kathryn Grayson is 65. Television journalist Roger Mudd is 60.

Top scientists blocking AIDS study

The White House has canceled a conference that would have forced the country's premier AIDS researcher to confront claims that the virus he has identified as the cause of the lethal disease might not be the cause at all.

Jack Anderson

Dr. Robert Gallo, the star scientist at the National Institutes of Health, is the man who pinpointed the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) as the cause of AIDS. Since Gallo's discovery, the NIH, which controls the largest share of the money for AIDS research, has denied funds to scientists with other ideas, even though they have published their theories in respected journals.

Foremost among the researchers with a fresh point of view is Dr. Peter Duesberg of the University of California at Berkeley. A member of the National Academy of Sciences, Duesberg has 24 years of experience with the family of retroviruses to which HIV belongs. He studied the virus in Gallo's own laboratory under a prestigious fellowship and concluded that it did not meet the standard criteria for a disease-causing agent.

Duesberg questioned the HIV theory in an article in the medical journal Cancer Research last March. As yet, there has been no official response from Gallo. The editor of Cancer Research, Dr. Peter MacGee, is surprised at the silence from Gallo. "Dr. Duesberg is an excellent scientist. He has a very good reputation. We had expected that there would be more official response to it," MacGee told our reporter Sallie Dinkel.

Instead, Gallo apparently dismissed Duesberg's theory without explanation. "Peter doesn't understand the biology of what he's talking about. Period. Simple as that," Gallo told a reporter for Spin magazine.

Gallo did not return at least a dozen calls for comment.

Among those seeking an answer to Duesberg's challenge was Jim Warner, a senior analyst for domestic policy at the White House. Warner called Dr. Harvey Bialy, the research editor at the medical journal Bio/Technology who had planned a workshop called "How Does HIV Cause AIDS?" to discuss Duesberg's claims, among other topics.

According to Bialy, Warner offered to co-host the workshop under the auspices of the White House because he was frustrated about the inadequate responses he had gotten to Duesberg's theory. The White House label would guarantee the attendance of Gallo and other experts. "Warner is quite skeptical himself about the veracity of the virus-HIV hypothesis," said Bialy. Warner would not respond to our questions.

In spite of initial enthusiasm, the White House conference, scheduled for Jan. 19, was finally taken off the calendar shortly before that. Warner tried to get it rescheduled, but he couldn't, and it was permanently canceled, according to Bialy. Doug McCormick, chief editor of Bio/Technology said: "The impression was that the pressure came from the NIH." When we asked Warner about the conference, he said, "I can't talk about that."

Several researchers we talked to said AIDS has become a maker and breaker of scientific reputations. Dr. Stephen Caiazza, a New York clinical researcher who is also skeptical of Gallo's hypothesis, put it this way: "The bottom line to everything, as I have through rather unpleasant experience found out, is money and ego, reputation, Nobel prizes, all the things that we doctors took oaths to ignore. The patients don't count any more. I think that's the ultimate tragedy that's come out of AIDS."

Gallo plays a big role in directing the flow of money to AIDS research, according to many scientists who work in the field. "Robert Gallo doesn't support any alternative views," said Duesberg. "As long as this (the HIV theory) goes unchallenged, it will have an inhibiting effect on research."

Hundreds of millions of research dollars are spent each year on the assumption that HIV causes AIDS. Medical experts we questioned believe that federal health authorities would be embarrassed if that assumption were wrong.

LOW-TECH TERRORISTS — About the only way that international terrorist groups have used computers has been as targets, according to a secret Pentagon report. "Terrorists have blown up computers and set fires in data processing centers, but not tried to disrupt or destroy data in a sophisticated fashion," the report says. Nor is there any sign that terrorists are interested in going hi-tech. Innovations in the criminal use of computers, the report speculates, will probably come from "computer hackers who turn malevolent or ordinary criminal extortionists who turn political."

MINI-EDITORIAL — The last time we checked, it wasn't against the law to express a dissenting point of view. But there is new evidence that the FBI has been wasting its resources harassing people who don't agree with the administration. One apparent focus of FBI attention is the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador, a group that doesn't appreciate the U.S. position on Central American issues. Even after 200 years, the federal government doesn't seem to understand its own Constitution. William Webster, the FBI director under whose watch the investigation of CISPES allegedly took place, is now director of the CIA. Maybe he was just practicing.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Those 'living monuments' are not short-term!

Two very close friends of mine recently became fathers for the first time.

Another friend's wife is scheduled to deliver their first child soon.

Grizzard

All three of these men are 40 or older.

"It's never too late," each has said to me at one time or the other during their wives' pregnancies.

I guess they're right. I'm 41, been down one time, two times, and three times in marriage, but, as far as I know, I have held on to my ability to father a child.

We actually tried in my first marriage, but there was a problem she later overcame with medical help. Now, with her new husband, she is the mother she always wanted to be.

Second time was a whirlwind. Third time, she already had two, one out in the playroom screaming, the other outside riding his Big Wheel.

Ever hear the sound a Big Wheel — a plastic tricycle — makes as it is pedaled across a driveway?

Severe nervous breakdowns have been spawned from less.

"Men," a wise person once said to me, "often want children to satisfy their egos. They want to look down in that crib and say, 'Hey, that's my boy!'

"They look upon their children as proof of their manhood, and as their link with immortality, but some never quite understand the responsibility that comes with being a father to a child.

"It takes a real grown-up to be a good parent. And some men never really grow up."

I've thought about those words, often, especially lately when previously childless friends suddenly turned fruitful and multiplied.

Why would I really want a child? To satisfy my ego? To leave a living monument?

To have something I could love without conditions and be loved in return in the same manner? (That sort of thing is difficult to find, you know.)

In order to be the father I never really had? To be able to pass along what I have learned, what I think to be the truth and the way?

But a number of things stand between me and fatherhood. No. 1 being the fact I'm not married.

But even if I did marry again, I'd probably still think twice about children.

I've proved I'm not a good marriage risk. I came from a broken home. I don't want my child to have to do the same.

There remains childlike tendencies in my own repertoire. I have not quite given up on the idea of finding the ultimate party, and sometimes I have trouble giving up the night.

And there is the fact most things have an escape clause. You can leave a bad marriage, a bad job, and a city where the sun never shines. But children are forever.

What I could do rather than have children of my own is become the friendly uncle to my three buddies' children.

I could joke with them and bring them small gifts and enjoy their company while I am around them and then split with no responsibility for them when the spirit moves me.

I'd miss the "goodnight-daddy's" but I also wouldn't have to put up with strange, loud music coming from the upstairs bedroom and explaining to my son if he didn't take off that earring, I would cut him out of the will.

This entire discussion, quite frankly, has made me nervous. Maybe I'll bring it up again next year.

Unilateral free trade policy won't solve woes

America's trade problems cannot be fixed with a single piece of legislation, but here are a few principles, which if followed, might do the job.

Charley Reese

First, we should discard the free-trade vs protectionism argument which is handy for political and journalistic rhetoric but does not reflect the reality of world trade. In the real world, it's not either or. At the present time there is free trade and protectionism and various degrees of both depending on which products and which countries you are talking about. Every country tries to buy what it wants to buy, sell what it wants to sell, and protect what it wants to protect.

Japanese, for example, want to protect their farmers and the method they have chosen is high tariffs against most foreign agricultural products. We, on the other, have chosen direct subsidies as a way to protect our agricultural base. We tax everybody to subsidize the farmers. The Japanese force food-buyers to subsidize farmers by paying higher prices than an open market would sustain.

We should view tariffs as tools to protect some industries which for national security reasons we might prefer to keep in operation, as a threat in bargaining with other countries to open their markets, and as a leveling device to offset price advantages gained by inhumane working conditions.

But the most important thing to do is to recognize that right now we have no coherent trade policy. An ideological commitment to free trade, imperfectly implemented, is not a trade policy. Neither is an ideological commitment to protect all American industry from foreign competition. Nor is a piece of legislation a trade policy.

One solution might be to form a national trade commission made up of representatives from government, heavy industry, small business, agriculture, and the military. Trade policy needs to be approached from an overall view, not on a piecemeal basis. There is very little communication between industry, agriculture, business, and government on trade matters.

The procedures for bringing an unfair trade practice to the government's attention are so cumbersome as to be worthless. By the time the bureaucratic and legalistic barriers have been crossed, the damage has been done. Under the present system, one never knows if the executive branch is negotiating trade matters with no over-all policy, on behalf of a few special interests, or just as a theoretical exercise.

Recognizing that no single trade policy will satisfy everyone, we should establish a mechanism for arriving at as much of a consensus as possible. We should recognize that mere economic efficiency — meaning the cheapest price — is not a rational sole basis for trade policy. Nor is the need of a bank to collect a foreign debt a rational basis for trade policy.

Some industries, such as machine tools, might need to be protected simply because they play a key role in military production and in time of war, foreign sources would be unreliable. The impact of trade policy on our people needs to be assessed and those concerns not simply dismissed with a ideological bromide.

Another factor to be considered is that some countries, like the communist countries, use trade as a political weapon and that the true costs of production are not a factor in their pricing policies. The Soviet Union, for example, has long undercut free world shipping not because it wants the business but because it wants to weaken the maritime industries of the democratic countries.

Another factor to consider is that we have, as a society, imposed certain costs on our manufacturers and producers for health, safety and environmental reasons and that tariffs should be used at least to cancel out the competitive price advantage gained by countries which ignore these factors.

The so-called level playing field cannot be achieved by unilateral free trade policy. It can be achieved only by hard bargaining and judicious use of tariffs.

Mofford puts key Mecham aide on leave

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Acting Gov. Rose Mofford, in her first day on the job, put a key aide to impeached Gov. Evan Mecham on leave, and called for the Legislature to enact a holiday honoring the Rev. Martin Luther King.

Mecham, whose troubles started after he rescinded a King holiday last year, expressed concern Monday that his impeachment trial would be conducted under less than stringent rules of evidence. But he said he expects to win his job back by clearing himself in a criminal fraud trial and by winning a recall election May 17.

"I look at this strictly as an interim affair," the Republican Mecham said at a news conference after he turned over power to Mrs. Mofford, a Democrat who is secretary of state.

"I expect to continue to be your governor when this present moment of confusion is over," said Mecham.

In one of her first acts as acting governor, Mrs. Mofford put Department of Administration director Max Hawkins on paid leave and said he may be offered another assignment. Hawkins, responsible for drafting Mecham into the 1986 campaign, was considered by some to be the cause of many of Mecham's problems.

State personnel director Alberto Gutier also said he was told he would be given a new assignment in a few days.

Mrs. Mofford said she would like the Legislature to vote a Martin Luther King holiday for Arizona, adding, "This has been a national symbol of our disunity."

Mecham last year canceled a King holiday for state workers, saying that former Gov. Bruce Babbitt had declared it illegally, without legislative action.

Mecham was impeached by the House Friday and is expected to go on trial in the Senate on Feb. 22. Monday, the House voted 42-18 to approve 23 specific charges against the governor. The list of charges was sent to the Senate, which is expected to organize as an impeachment court Thursday.

A copy of proposed rules for the Senate trial, obtained by The Associated Press, showed the verdict would be based on whether evidence was "clear and convincing" rather than the tougher, "beyond a reasonable doubt standard" used in criminal trials.

Arizona's Acting Gov. Rose Mofford

Told of the draft rules, Mecham said he considered the lower standard unfair, and added "I've had the feeling I have almost no rights."

The House has accused Mecham of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan, misusing $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund by lending it to his auto dealership, and trying to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat by a state official.

He also faces a criminal trial i April on six felony counts of failing to report the $350,000 loan.

Mecham reiterated Monday his assertions that he has broken no laws that should require him to give up the governorship.

Also Monday, Mrs. Mofford met with four former governors — Democrats Sam Goddard and Raul Castro and Republicans Jack Williams and Paul Fannin — and said afterward they had advised her to take an active role in running the state.

Mrs. Mofford told reporters she wants to be "a healing governor, forceful governor and one that will act."

Mecham said later, "I don't know how anybody can talk much about healing when these kinds of events have happened...I don't think we can have a healing process until after May 17."

A Delta rocket successfully lifts off Monday from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station. The rocket carried a Strategic Defense Initiative payload designed to test the system's ability to track ballistic missiles.

Satellite tracks mock missiles in test of SDI

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A 6,000-pound research satellite tracked 15 mock Soviet nuclear missiles around the globe today in a major test for the "Star Wars" plan to build a missile shield in space.

Seven sensors on the satellite and hundreds at ground stations gathered data that could help determine if it is feasible to build a split-second response system in space and whether it could distinguish a real missile from a decoy.

The $250 million exercise began Monday evening with the launch of a two-stage Delta rocket from Cape Canaveral. The entire second stage shot into orbit more than 250 miles high. Within four hours, it had deployed all 14 simulated Soviet rockets and began the first of 200 tracking maneuvers like those that would be needed for an orbiting Star Wars battle station.

A 15th target satellite was orbited by a small rocket launched from the Pacific Missile Range at Barking Sands, Hawaii.

"I would characterize the mission as a success, with the qualification that we still have a lot of data to analyze," Lt. Col. Terry Monrad, a spokesman for the Strategic Defense Initiative Office, said today.

All the mock Soviet payloads were deployed successfully and were tracked by the second stage, he said. The only glitch, he said, appeared to be a problem with one of the satellite's seven sensors.

The tracking mission ended today but so much information was collected it will take 10 days to assemble it from the satellite and from the ground stations, Monrad said.

After the first few hours, officials said they were elated with results.

"We will have a suite of sensors looking at 15 objects over many orbits," Gordon Smith, deputy director of the Strategic Defense Initiative Office, said at a news conference. "Altogether we're very, very pleased with the start."

The office said four of the payloads contain motors that were fired to simulate a Soviet rocket as it climbs off a launch pad. The 11 others played the roles of Soviet missiles coasting through space before releasing their multiple nuclear warheads.

Lasers, radars, optical devices and infrared and ultraviolet sensors followed the payloads against varying backgrounds such as land, ocean, horizon and space.

"One of the things that's most important to us is what we refer to as target characterization," said Col. Ray Ross, director of the program's kinetic energy directorate. "Exactly what does the object look like, how does it behave, what can we expect to see against varying backgrounds...This data will build the data base on how the Strategic Defense Initiative System will observe objects in space."

Contras break off talks to raise funds for war

MIAMI (AP) — Contra leaders have postponed peace talks with the leftist Nicaraguan government and are asking Americans to donate money to help fund their civil war because Congress rejected military aid.

"We are now faced with the challenge of conserving the integrity and morale of our forces," Azucena Ferrey, a director of the Nicaraguan Resistance, said Monday. "In order to surmount this challenge, we need your financial support and appeal to the generosity which has always characterized the American people.

"This support is essential to overcome the present situation, even though it cannot substitute the aid of the American government nor match the aid received by the Sandinistas from the Soviet Union," she said.

Contributions already have been received from presidential candidate Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., and from Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz. Dole gave $500 and McCain $400.

The Contra leaders said they have set up two foundations in Washington, the Nicaraguan Resistance USA Office and the Nicaraguan Resistance Educational Foundation. Donations solicited by the groups will be used only for non-lethal aid, they said.

"We will go to third countries and people living outside the United States" for funds to buy weapons, said director Adolfo Calero, adding that no other countries have yet been approached.

It was the search for funds after the first U.S. aid cutoff that led then-CIA director William Casey and National Security Council aide Oliver North into selling arms to Iran with the profits going to the Contras.

One idea currently under consideration by the Contras is offering bonds similar to the Israel Bonds sold in the United States to support that nation.

Rejection of a $36.2 million appropriation by the House of Representatives last week removed pressure on the Sandinistas, Calero said.

"The lack of a 'yes' vote in Congress did undermine the peace effort and the democratization of Nicaragua," he said. "It served a self-defeating purpose."

The Contras said neither they nor the Roman Catholic Church mediators will attend Wednesday's scheduled peace talks with the Sandinistas in Guatemala.

Contra director Alfredo Cesar said the leaders have received word of a Sandinista offensive to be launched in the next few days.

Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Mercedes Borge said the government wants a cease-fire "as soon as possible."

"It is fundamental to avoid more bloodshed, to save lives," she said in the Nicaraguan capital of Managua.

No kid gloves for Bork as he takes swings at critics

GROVE CITY, Pa. (AP) — Robert H. Bork came out swinging in his first public appearances since resigning from the U.S. Court of Appeals, saying Sen. Edward M. Kennedy "painted a nightmare of fascist repression and attributed it to me."

Bork said Monday night that his rejection by the Senate for a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court was engineered by the Massachusetts Democrat in "a long-planned and carefully calculated assault by a skillful politician."

Bork addressed more than 2,500 cheering students at Grove City College, a conservative Presbyterian school known for a 1984 Supreme Court decision narrowing federal influence over colleges by limiting the reach of a law against sex discrimination.

The conservative jurist said he left the District of Columbia appeals bench Friday so he could speak without restraint about the politics surrounding the Senate's 58-42 vote against him on Oct. 23.

"Even for a political campaign, it set record lows in mendacity, brutality and intellectual vulgarity," Bork said. "Kennedy painted a nightmare of fascist repression and attributed it to me."

Bork said that Kennedy, as chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, used his contacts with organized labor and Southern black leaders to mobilize liberals against him.

Although his record as a judge and previously as the U.S. Justice Department's chief trial lawyer showed his support of civil and women's rights, Bork said, "Those facts were obscured and millions of blacks were told I was their enemy."

"The claim that I am hostile to black civil rights was a lie," Bork said. Kennedy was traveling Monday night and was unavailable for comment, spokeswoman Melody Miller said in Washington.

Bork said media coverage of his nomination fight was mostly limited to "the propaganda war against me."

"No one in the White House, or anywhere else for that matter, troubled to respond," Bork said.

He went no further in criticizing the White House staff, which some of his supporters harshly accused of inadequate lobbying and poor strategy.

Last week, President Reagan's third choice for the court, Anthony M. Kennedy, was confirmed 97-0 for the seat.

Speaking earlier Monday in Washington in his first news conference since the Senate rejected his nomination, Bork said he and the Reagan administration were caught off guard by an intense advertising campaign opposing his confirmation.

In his evening appearance, Bork received a standing ovation from an overflow crowd of students and professors at his first stop on a lecture tour as a member of the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research, a conservative think tank.

The college, "as a matter of principle," in 1977 had refused to sign a compliance form declaring it did not discriminate against women.

NATION IN BRIEF

NASA losing advocate for manned space station

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA, already facing intense congressional pressure to lease a robot space factory until a manned U.S. space station is built, is losing one of the station's most articulate defenders.

Andrew J. Stofan, who has headed the NASA space station program for less than two years, is retiring from the agency effective April 1. A spokesman, Mark Hess, says he is going into industry but has not accepted any offers yet.

Stofan is known to have been frustrated by divisions on Capitol Hill over the space station, by slow progress in getting it built and by less-than-enthusiastic support from the Reagan administration. He was traveling and not available for comment today.

Hess said Stofan was not leaving out of bitterness, "although he'll be the first one to admit there were times he was frustrated that the program was not moving as quickly as he would like for it to have moved. He would also admit it was a difficult job."

Three influential members of Congress are withholding $90 million in space station funds, appropriated last year but not yet spent, until NASA administrator James C. Fletcher submits new proposals for use of a robot space platform called the Industrial Space Facility.

Voting rights suit settled

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Dover has reached an out-of-court settlement in a voting rights lawsuit brought by the NAACP, and agreed to hold City Council elections by districts instead of at-large.

Districts also will be redrawn as part of an agreement the City Council voted 6-2 to accept Monday night.

The council refused to pay legal fees of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which will leave that decision in the hands of U.S. District Court Judge James L. Latchum, who must give final approval to the settlement, according to a report today in the Delaware State News.

The NAACP sued the city in 1985, charging that at-large election of council members and dual registration requirements were discriminatory and violated the Voting Rights Act of 1964.

The NAACP demanded that elections be by district and that the council redesign districts so that at least one would contain a 65 percent minority population.

At the time the suit was filed, despite the city's large black minority, no black held a council seat. Now one black person, William H. Daisey, sits on the council.

PTL executives lose raises

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Employee complaints caused PTL trustee David Clark to suspend pay raises he granted last month to five executives.

"I still don't fully understand the response to it, but, boy, it really hit the place in the wrong way," Clark said. "It wasn't worth jeopardizing the morale of the employees over it."

Last week, Clark said he had granted annual raises ranging from $4,000 to $12,000 to executives who took on increased responsibilities in the wake of staff shakeups.

Clark said the raises were justified because several waves of layoffs in the last 10 months trimmed the number of vice presidents from 20 to eight, and several departments have been combined.

But Clark said Monday that other employees "were so upset that I met with the people involved, and they said, 'This isn't worth it. We're doing a salary and wage study anyway, and we will gladly forgo these raises until that is completed.'"

Biden protecting INF treaty

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. intends to attach a binding resolution to shield the new missile-ban treaty with the Soviet Union from reinterpretation by future administrations.

Biden, D-Del., said Monday that no assurances from U.S. officials would protect the treaty covering medium-range nuclear missiles from a repetition of the "unconstitutional reinterpretation" of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

Biden's statement said the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, of which he is a senior member, should resume hearings next week and set the stage for ratification of the treaty.

BEE SMART

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1988 Regional Spelling Bee March 20 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 25. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

lor'e-a-shən

laureation — (noun) It is apparently the Romans who began the custom of presenting a crown or wreath of laurel leaves to individuals they sought to honor — heroes, conquerors, athletes, scholars — people of distinguished achivement. The act of doing so is a "laureation." Today, a laureation includes any exercise or ceremony conferring honors or recognizing accomplishment. A high school or college commencement or scholastic honors ceremony are examples.

Carthage ruins yield insight into sacrifices

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH

CARTHAGE, Tunisia (AP) — With the repeated cry "Cartha-go Delenda Est" — Carthage Must Be Destroyed — ancient Rome's Senator Cato in 149 B.C. demanded the end of an enemy that had dominated the western Mediterranean for five centuries.

The victorious Roman legionaries did their work thoroughly. The city was burned to the ground and its half-million inhabitants were killed or transported into slavery.

The Romans thought they had obliterated Carthage, but they did not count on the scientific methods devised by archaeologists 21 centuries later.

Today, parts of ancient Carthage are emerging from the ruins — at least those parts not buried under modern luxury villas and railroad tracks or destroyed anew by looters and bulldozers.

In 1974, the Punic, or Carthaginian, remains were designated as part of mankind's universal heritage by the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization. Since then, archaeological missions from the United States, Britain, France, Sweden, Canada, Italy and other countries have made massive efforts to save what still can be saved of the ancient city.

Said Mohamed Assine Fantar, director of Tunisia's National Institute of Archaeology: "A century ago, archaeologists believed that the Romans destroyed the city so thoroughly that literally nothing of it was left. Since then, whole sections of it have been unearthed and most is still waiting to be dug out of the rubble."

The sinister site known as the Tophet (sacred pyre) has recently yielded new insight into the human sacrifice practiced in ancient Carthage. Urns buried nearby contain the charred bone fragments of at least 20,000 children sacrificed to the gods Baal and Tanit to ward off evil fate.

The victims' families erected small stone monuments to commemorate each sacrifice. The inscriptions, in one of the world's first phonetic alphabets, show that sheep often were substituted for children when danger seemed remote.

But as the Roman legions approached the gates, the slaughter of human victims reached its zenith.

AP Laserphoto

Mohamed Assine Fantar of Tunisia's National Insitiute or Archaeology, stands among ruins containing the charred bones of sacrificed Carthagian children in an area south of Tunis.

The circular harbor from which Punic galleons sailed the oceans of the entire known world has been partially excavated. There, traders landed tin from Cornwall, spices from the Orient, and elephants for Hannibal's legions from West Africa.

Fantar believes a 2,500-year-old Punic sailing ship with its cargo may be lying in mud at the bottom of the harbor.

With the exception of one ship preserved in Marsala in nearby Sicily, no seagoing Punic vessel has ever been found.

Many specialists consider that what is being done to save Carthage is too little and too late, particularly since UNESCO wound up its active contribution four years ago.

Much of the 1,235-acre site of ancient Carthage fell victim to vandals, fanatics and speculators. For centuries, the ruins were used as a quarry where local inhabitants dug up finely carved Carthaginian stone for use as building material.

In 1270, France's King Louis IX — later canonized by the Roman Catholic Church as St. Louis — died of the plague here on his way back from the Crusades. After Tunisia became a French colony in 1881, a huge Roman Catholic cathedral dedicated to St. Louis was built on the summit of the Byrsa hill that was the center of ancient Carthage.

Tunisia's population is 97 percent Islamic and felt no need for a cathedral. The building was deconsecrated long ago and converted into a museum of Punic remains. Unknown treasures lie buried under its foundations, says Abdelmajid Ennabli, curator of the Carthage archaeological museum.

The Romans buried the ruins under up to 22 feet of rubble and spread salt over the ground so nothing could ever grow there. Less than a century later, they built a city of their own on the site. Most of the structures now admired by tourists are of Roman or Byzantine origin.

In the 7th century, the Arabs overran North Africa and destroyed Carthage a second time.

Now a fashionable suburb of Tunis, Carthage is connected to the Tunisian capital by a commuter railroad that runs for 10 miles over the buried ruins.

Ennabli said the commuter line, built by the French in 1907, cut the site in two and "did irreparable damage."

More recently, the builders of a new sewage system brought in bulldozers that cut deep trenches into some structures left undisturbed for 21 centuries. The workers who built the sewers often pocketed priceless treasures.

An American war cemetery in the center of the site contains the bodies of 2,800 Americans who died in North Africa in 1943 and 1944.

Egyptians still cling to customs, traditions of ancestors

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one of a series of periodic reports by Associated Press correspondents on the way of life in other countries.

By DALIA BALIGH

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Dressed in an elaborately embroidered white gown, 7-day-old Ali slept as his grandmother laid him in a sieve filled with seven kinds of beans. Then she banged on iron kitchen utensils to wake him up.

Following a custom that goes back 5,000 years, the grandmother began chanting a plea for him to obey his parents.

Elsewhere in the house, another family elder sprinkled cooking salt through the rooms to drive out evil spirits.

Little Ali's numerous cousins milled around a brightly decorated clay kettle in the living room, eating sugar-coated almonds, holding candles and singing.

Ali's upper-middle-class family was celebrating his "soboa," the celebration of his first week of life.

The ritual goes back to times that predate the Pharaoh Cheops building his Great Pyramid at Giza.

The "soboa" is one of many social customs and traditions that have survived to this day from Egypt's ancient times — long before the Islamic religion arrived in the 8th century.

"Any society, as its level of sophistication develops, loses some of its cultural traditions and gains new ones," said Adly Ibrahim, professor of social customs and traditions at the Folklore Institute for Graduate Students.

"The more developed and sophisticated a society becomes, the less the role of customs and folkloric traditions."

But more than in other Moslem countries, Egypt's society, with a 60-percent illiteracy rate and a long pre-Islamic cultural history, has retained some of the ways of its ancestors.

In the "soboa," the beans symbolize fertility. Banging a mortar and pestle, used for grinding grain, and beseeching the newborn to obey his parents are based on an ancient belief that although his week-old brain does not understand, his soul does and will remember.

Another custom dating from ancient Egypt is "Sham el-Nessim" — "smelling of the breeze."

A celebration of the start of spring, it entails eating salted fish, green onions and certain other vegetables — also fertility symbols — preferably outdoors, in the breeze.

A quest for fertility is prominent in many holdover traditions.

To ensure a fruitful marriage, a prospective bride soaks her feet in water with green leaves in it as her father and the groom sign the wedding contract.

Barren peasant women walk around the 4,600-year-old Great Pyramid seven times, invoking its supposed magical powers to help them conceive.

Women in Alexandria drink the blood of sea turtles to encourage conception, and young married women who have not conceived step seven times over burning incense.

"Egyptian society over the centuries always has been concerned by fertility, which shows clearly in its traditions," ethnologist Ibrahim said.

"An example is the way all folkloric stories end: '...and they got married and lived happily ever after, and had boys and girls.' "

The beliefs would seem to be superfluous in today's Egypt. Its population of more than 51 million is growing by a million every nine months.

Another lingering custom is the "evil eye."

The blue-colored Egyptian eye, identical to that painted on countless pharaonic tomb walls, is used along with blue beads and incense.

Ancient Egyptians threw a beautiful girl into the Nile River to ensure a good flood. Some Egyptians maintain the ceremony at flood season, throwing a paper doll into the river instead.

In southern Egypt's Nubia, devoutly Moslem old people often refuse to eat perch caught in the Nile.

In pharaonic tradition, a perch ate a part of the body of the god Osiris after his evil brother Seth killed him, hacked up his corpse and threw it into the river. Because of that, Osiris' mother Isis was unable to deliver his body to Ra for resurrection.

To ensure a fruitful marriage, a prospective bride soaks her feet in water with green leaves in it as her father and the groom sign the wedding contract. Barren peasant women walk around the 4,600-year-old Great Pyramid seven times, invoking its supposed magical powers to help them conceive.

Because of the low standard of education, beliefs in evil spirits, genies and sorcerers are widespread.

As in the West, an Egyptian bride is carried across the threshhold by the groom or a relative, but not for the romantic notions Westerners hold. In Egypt, if a spell has been cast on a new marriage, it usually was cast at the couple's front door. By being carried across the threshold, the Egyptian bride avoids the evil.

Ibrahim pointed out, however, that many customs evolve as society changes.

"Centuries ago, a bride went from her father's home to her husband's home on a camel, then a horse," he said. "In more modern times, the bride went in a car.

The members of the Fraternal Order of Police - Midland Regional Lodge #11 are concerned about the quality of law enforcement in Midland County.

As law enforcement officers, we believe in and support the Constitution of the United States which we have sworn to uphold. We agree and believe that an accused person has guaranteed rights and protections under the Constitution. We also agree and believe that the same Constitution has guaranteed rights and protections to persons who are not accused of crimes - but instead have become victims.

In our Judicial System, these rights and protections (for both the accused and the victims) must remain in balance. Without this balance, efforts to reduce or control the crime in our community are hopeless.

As citizens of Midland County, we are concerned about our Judicial System. So much of the time, the scales of justice seem to be tipped in favor of the accused. These scales need to be returned to a "balanced" state.

Therefore, let it be known that the Fraternal Order of Police - Midland Regional Lodge #11 is supporting Nick Taylor for District Judge in the Republican Primary on March 8, 1988.

Sincerely,
Leonard D. Hendon, Jr.

Abused women victims of control, director says

Center's goal to help women 'secure an independent lifestyle'

Rebecca "Becky" Criswell, executive director of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, says "There are a lot of different forms of abuse."

Battered and abused women who find themselves caught up in spiraling and seemingly hopelessness often are victims of frustrated control.

"It's really an issue of control over another person," said Rebecca "Becky" Criswell, executive director of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children. "It's really a complicated problem."

Ms. Criswell's charge is to provide a temporary haven for battered and abused women who are suffering physically, emotionally and spiritually.

"There are a lot of different forms of abuse," she said. "I have seen a lot of black eyes and bruised ribs" and sensed various degrees of emotional trauma. "Of course, our goal is to get them (battered women) in a safe place at that point and give them support."

The center's ultimate goal is "to help battered women secure an independent lifestyle if that is their objective," Ms. Criswell said. "We try to help them identify goals for themselves — to determine what they want to do."

The center provides "a safe, temporary, emergency shelter" and offers "professional and lay counseling for female victims of family violence."

There are cases in which battered women have been reconciled with their recovering mates, although many more women leave their abusive mates than stay with them.

The Battered Women's Center in Midland has rooming-and-boarding facilities for 64 battered women and their children, said the 44-year-old Ms. Criswell, who formerly was executive director of Trinity Towers, a non-denominational retirement center in Midland. She holds a bachelor's degree in health services administration from The University of Texas Health Science Center in Dallas. For Ms. Criswell, changing job roles offered her an "opportunity to grow in a new area" and to "help people who need help."

A BATTERED WOMAN may stay in the center up to 90 days, Ms. Criswell said. The stay largely depends on the commitment of the battered woman who seeks relief, shelter and alternative living. Her stay may be brief if she does not commit herself to a new way of living.

"The Battered Women Center is in a period of transition, being in a new building," Ms. Criswell said. The center, which is undergoing a "fine-tuning of services," is "a vital part of the community." It is a United Way of Midland agency.

Ms. Criswell noted that battery often involves emotional, psychological, and sexual abuse and physical injury. Though abuse of alcohol is found in 60 to 70 percent of abusive families, alcohol abuse is a symptom rather than a cause of abuse.

In Texas, an estimated 1.3 million women reported that they were physically abused by their "living partner" — whether that partner be spouse or live-in boyfriend. Eventually, 65 percent of battered Texas women permanently leave their abusive mates.

In the 15-county Midland-Odessa area, there are an estimated 7,000 battered women, Ms. Criswell said.

Aside from help afforded the battered woman, there is help available for the batterer.

THERE IS TREATMENT for the batterer — the man or woman who physically and emotionally abuses a spouse, another family member, or a live-in mate.

Batterers Anonymous offers counseling and treatment for those who compulsively batter others. Batterers Anonymous offers an eight-step program for recovery. Fellow batterers share experiences with one another to free themselves of battering others and to raise their self-esteem and the esteem for others, especially women.

"Their goal is to completely eliminate any physical and emotional abuse to women," said Tom Burns, a Midland chemical-dependency counselor who has special training in family violence.

Abuse often is rooted in "controlling another person's behavior" for the "ego trip or a power trip" that may come out of that physical and emotional control, he said.

"Some of it can be organic, deterioration of the central nervous system," Burns said, "but that is fairly rare. It does happen." Some batterers may suffer from functional psychosis or neurosis — disorders in adaptive adjustments.

Mostly, from what Burns has observed, a person's propensity to abuse others comes from learned behavior.

"They (batterers) have experienced it themselves as a child, or they have learned by parents battering each other or other family members," Burns said.

STEPS IN THE recovery program include becoming more aware of women's needs and learning to accept and respect women's rights and privileges.

"It's to eliminate the physical violence and emotional abuse," Burns said, "and to learn to deal with other people without physical aggression."

"The batterer is caught up in a conflict cycle, and we try to teach these people how to break the conflict cycle without battering or being physically abusive or emotionally abusive."

One means, Burns pointed out, is to teach the batterer how to separate the individual from the event which may tend to enrage or upset him and to talk about his anger.

For example, "Instead of being mad at your wife because the dinner is burned, you can direct your anger at the burned dinner, and it (the redirection) takes her out of it, and it's not personal," Burns said.

Batterers Anonymous, which is a "God-centered program," meets at 7:30 p.m. each Thursday in St. Stephen's Catholic Church, 4601 Neely Ave., Midland.

Burns said that there are several thousand batterers in the Midland-Odessa area.

Odessan describes 'nightmare' of attack in Mexico

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — One of the survivors of a vacationing family attacked in southwestern Mexico by men dressed in military uniforms, said, "We would have never gone if we had heard of something like this going on.

"I want it known what can happen," said Josie Melendez, 29, of the incident Feb. 3 during which two family members were killed and two others injured.

She said while she was at the hospital in Lazaro Cardenas, the doctors indicated "this is something that happens everyday...The people down there said this is very common."

Describing the ordeal as "a nightmare," Mrs. Melendez said, "We have no intention of going back."

The attack late last Tuesday night occurred as Catarino Melendez, 61, his wife, Maria Concepcion, sons Hector, 20, and Reyes, 28, and their wives, Blanca, 17, and Josie, along with three children, traveled along a highway in southwestern Mexico on their way to Acapulco, Mrs. Melendez said.

About 10:30 p.m., they were confronted by approximately five heavily armed men, dressed in military uniforms, who stopped them, took over their vehicles and transported them to a remote area, she said.

Once there, the armed men robbed them of their money and papers, then began shooting, she added.

Speaking of her husband, Reyes, Mrs. Melendez said, "When he saw his father — they started killing the men first — when he saw that they killed his father and his brother, he was the only one (man) left, so he began fighting with one of them, trying to take one of the rifles."

During the struggle, she said, a silver crown Reyes had on a tooth "either got knocked off or, he says, he bit one of them and lost it that way."

During the attack Maria Concepcion suffered a gunshot wound to the left knee and Blanca was beaten on the head with a rock.

Mrs. Melendez criticized Mexico police in the area, saying, "My husband was treated like a criminal for just picking up the bodies (of his father and brother). They (local authorities) couldn't understand why we picked up the bodies (and moved them to a hospital, thinking maybe something could be done)," she said.

"We were scared and didn't want to leave the bodies because we thought if they (the attackers) did come back they'd take them," Mrs. Melendez said. "They were the only proof we had."

She said she kept asking for copies of reports, because the U.S. Embassy had told her they would need certain file numbers for transporting the bodies. "They gave us only a report on an accident, but nothing stating what happened. It's just like a coverup," Mrs. Melendez said.

There were no reports in the media while they were there, she said, except for a brief item and no details appeared in the Chihuahua City newspaper after they arrived there.

Criticizing U.S. embassy personnel in Guadalajara, Mrs. Melendez said, "You know, when I was there (in Mexico) I always thought if something happened they were the people to contact. As far as I'm concerned, they didn't do anything to help us."

Saying she was "really scared" and had too many things to take care of, Mrs. Melendez said she felt she could depend on the embassy for help. Money that was supposedly sent was never received and had it not been for a friend's parents who live in Chihuahua who was able to get them money for airplane tickets and another plane that came to transport the bodies, the bodies would never have been released.

The bodies were initially taken to a funeral home in Lazaro Cardenas on the recommendation of the U.S. embassy in Guadalajara because the man at the funeral home "would supposedly take care of everything and do it right," she said.

Commissioners expected to renew insurance plan

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

In a special meeting Friday County Commissioners are expected to renew a group hospitalization insurance plan that could cost taxpayers $11,000 more than last year.

Commissioners, meeting Monday during a regular court session, postponed until Friday the renewal of the group health plan until a committee — appointed by County Judge Bill Ahders — studies the coverage and its financial burden on the county coffers.

Commissioners Durward Wright and Guy McCrary, County Treasurer Dee Thomspon and Don Crawford of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Texas Inc. are expected to hold talks throughout the week.

Due to an unexpected rise in the premium rate, the five-member court agreed that meetings to scrutinize the plan would be necessary before they considered renewal. However, Mrs. Thompson stressed to commissioners the need to approve some type of plan before the existing group policy expires March 1.

During Monday's hour-long discussion, the court learned that a plan written under the status quo would raise the county's premiums by an estimated 19.2 percent or $15 per employee per month.

"This medical-legal thing is one of the most baffling problems facing our nation," said McCrary of the premium rate hike. "This is a problem with any employer that provides medical insurance to its employees."

To reduce the overall rate, commissioners are considering a variety of cost-containment measures that would raise the co-insurance maximum of $1,000, increasing the lifetime maximum from $250,000 to $1 million, establishing a pre-certification requirement for elective surgeris and setting up a 90-day pre-existing condition clause and a 90-day waiting period before coverage is effected.

Commissioner Win Brown said the type of coverage would be virtually unchanged under the proposed plan.

"We feel that we'll be able to have excellent coverage and minimal cost," he said. "We're trying to keep the additional cost down to spouse and family members. I think we will be able to do it."

"This medical-legal thing is one of the most baffling problems facing our nation. This is a problem with any employer that provides medical insurance to its employees."

— Guy McCrary

The county had budgeted about $351,000 for hospitalization insurance this fiscal year. Should commissioners approve the proposed policy, that figure would increase to about $361,000, McCrary said.

The commissioner predicted that changing insurance carriers would only be a short-term situation — not a viable option — because rates on alternative policies would increase eventually under a different carrier.

In other action Monday, commissioners signed a resolution divesting itself of any interest ($28,000 in taxes) in the Wild River Canyon property. In doing so, the county relinquished its hold on the property to the city of Midland for $1.

County Attorney Mark Dettman said city officials will take over the property and clean it up at a cost somewhere in between $60,000 and $90,000.

Should the city sell the property, the profits would be distributed equally among the county's five taxing entities.

City officials also will consider converting the property to some public purpose, such as a park or baseball field.

Commissioners also recorded the certification of Culver Youth Home following a Jan. 22 inspection of the facility. Grand opening of the home — which has undergone extensive renovations during the past year — is slated for 1 p.m. Feb. 18.

Family lives in fear neighbors will learn its secret

By RUTH SORELLE
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Parents care for their terminally ill children in a bittersweet atmosphere of love and despair. But those with children who have AIDS live with extra grief because they must keep their sorrow secret.

Bob and Sue (not their real names) talked about their 5-year-old daughter because they wanted people to know that she is a normal child who just happens to carry a deadly virus.

But they did not want her real name used. In this story, she is called Danielle.

Twice the family moved when neighbors and landlords learned about her illness. Because of that, they would not reveal the location of their present home and asked to be interviewed at the public hospital in Houston where their daughter receives treatment.

Danielle was born at that same hospital more than five years ago. With five healthy children already, Sue worried little about the infant she carried in her womb. But during her eighth month of pregnancy, she began to hemorrhage. "At the hospital, the doctors said I had to have blood," Sue said.

Danielle was born a few days early and small at 5 pounds. "She was fine," Sue said. The baby remained healthy and basked in the approval of her older siblings until age 4. That's when she started to get really sick.

AFTER THREE or four bouts with pneumonia, doctors checked her for cystic fibrosis. Then, they tested her for HIV, the AIDS virus.

"They had a conference with us," Sue said. "I could hear them talking at me, but I didn't really hear. My day ended right there."

Further tests showed that only Sue and Danielle had the virus. They acquired the disease from transfusions of infected blood.

"The months that followed were a living hell," said Sue. "I don't wish this on my worst enemy or anyone."

The 34-year-old housewife had devoted her adult life to her children. She delighted in playing with them until they went to school. Then she waited for their after school chatter.

Now she could only look at her youngest and cry. "I shed tears every day," she said. For a while, she could not cook, she could not clean, she lacked the will to deal with her children's problems. "We lost interest in everything for a while," Sue said. "Our days weren't the same. Nothing was the same.

"We lost everything, even a place to live."

Sometimes, it got too much, and Sue would just walk away from her tasks, running from the anxiety she couldn't escape. One of her sons would take her in his arms and hold her tight. They told her to maintain her strong religious faith and her love.

FINALLY, HER oldest son, 16, took his parents to task. "You need to get back on your feet," he told them. They listened and started the long struggle to recover.

Sue took a strong stand with her side of the family. "I told my husband, I'm going to tell my family. I want them to hear it from me." Her mother called a meeting. Sue's brothers and sisters stood by her. Their children play with Danielle and her siblings. Bob's family's support remained as staunch.

But they cannot tell friends and neighbors. After rumors drifted through the apartment complex where the family lived, landlords refused to accept a late rent payment and issued an eviction notice. "It had to be because they knew," Bob said.

At their next home, vandals slashed their car's tires and broke the back window after neighbors and the landlord learned of Danielle's condition.

They live in daily fear that their present neighbors will find out.

"I could cry 24 hours a day, every day" said Sue. "But I still have her. I must enjoy her while I can."

Bob and Sue don't know how much Danielle understands. The doll-like child sat quietly on her mother's lap while her medical condition was discussed. She eyed nearby patients and smiled when nurses she knew stopped by for a chat. But she is shy, said Sue. She does not speak in the presence of strangers.

When doctors asked if she could talk, her mother taped her lively chatter at home. She's a bright child who could write her name last year and loves to color and draw.

"SOMETIMES, I think she understands what's going on," said Sue. "She said she may be going to visit the Lord sooner than everybody. She said, 'Let's make a deal: If I go first, I'll wait for you; if you go first, you'll wait for me.'"

Her mother smiled. "We spoil her some. My boys say she is so spoiled." Sue offers no apologies, but she wants Danielle to experience life the way a child should. That means playing, going to school and learning.

Only the school's principal, nurse and Danielle's teacher know she has the disease. At school, she is treated the same as any other child.

Danielle presents no threat to the general public, nor to her parents or her siblings. AIDS is transmitted only through sexual contact or contaminated blood or blood products. But because many people remain unconvinced, the family must keep Danielle's disease a secret.

Bob cannot discuss it easily. Sometimes, he must get up and pace occasionally as he talks about his fears and his grief. He doesn't cry. He doesn't rage. He just tries to cope.

Bob said, "We live day by day."

"Sometimes I get so angry," Sue said. "Why did this happen to me and her?"

But she could not describe her pain until she watched a 16-year old rage against his disease on a television special. "He said, 'I don't want it (the virus) in me. I want it out.' That's how I feel. He described how I feel. I want it out of her."

SUE IS angered at politicians who refuse to allocate money for AIDS care because most people who get it are drug users or homosexuals. She does not agree that those groups should be shunned or punished. And, Sue said, "What about my daughter? She's not a drug user. I wasn't one. She's still got the disease."

Adversity pulled an already close family together. They talk about their problem; they pray for a cure. The other children said little when their parents told them about Danielle's disease. But Sue later found her oldest son crying in his bed.

They center their attention on Danielle. Even though Sue also carries the virus, she cannot deal with that now. "I feel I've lived my life," she said, even though she shrinks from the notion of dying and leaving her children behind.

Eventually, she would like to get more involved in helping children and adults with AIDS.

But now she concentrates on Danielle and her quality of life. She wishes there was no need for secrecy, that other parents could accept her child. She's not asking for sympathy, just understanding.

Perhaps they would be kinder if they understood the pain they cause. She has only one request: "Have a heart."

Anthony wants to be known as world's 'Leap Year Capitol'

By HOLDEN LEWIS

EL PASO (AP) — New Orleans has Mardi Gras, Boston has St. Patrick's Day and the small town of Anthony wants similar fame as the Leap Year Capital of the World.

Anthony, a town of 8,000 that straddles the Texas-New Mexico border 16 miles north of El Paso, already bills itself "The Best Little Town in Two States." The slogan is right there on a sign along Interstate 10.

Residents hope that someday, the town may be famous for its Feb. 29 celebrations as the "Leap Year Capital of the World."

It's a pretty hefty title, but Mary Ann Brown — who was born Feb. 29, 1932, — said town leaders had to seize the opportunity when they had the chance.

"We just voted arbitrarily to name this as the leap year capital of the world because no one else has," she said Monday, a week after the Anthony Chamber of Commerce claimed the title. The vote was unanimous except for one abstention.

It all started when Mrs. Brown and her neighbor across the street, Birdie Lewis, noted at the chamber meeting they were both Leap Year Day babies, though Mrs. Lewis refused to divulge on which Feb. 29 she was born. They noted that Anthony native Laurie Larock, who has since moved to California, also was born on Feb. 29.

The coincidence seemed strong enough for chamber members to dub the town the leap year capital, sponsor a Worldwide Leap Year Birthday Club and hold a celebration, all to promote the town.

"We think it's kind of a unique thing, and because there were two people who were born on that day who were members of the Chamber of Commerce, we decided to have a celebration," she said.

Because planning started so late, this year's Feb. 29 fete will be simple. Savings bonds of $50 will go to the oldest and farthest-away Worldwide Leap Year Birthday Club members who send in their $10 dues by Feb. 29, and a birthday cake will be served at the offices of the Mesilla Valley Perspective, a semi-weekly newspaper that Mrs. Brown publishes.

Mrs. Brown said she hopes people from other countries hear about the club in time to join and be eligible for prizes. It's open to anyone born Feb. 29, and dues are payable in February of every leap year.

"We plan to use the mailing list we get from that to build a bigger celebration in future years," she said. Future observations could include parades, banquets, sports events and Sadie Hawkins dances.

"I think we're really going to work at making it a big celebration in Anthony," she said.

About 3,000 people live in Anthony, Texas, which is incorporated. Unincorporated Anthony, N.M., has about 5,000 residents. The major industries are steel and cattle.

The Rio Grande, which takes a northward turn at El Paso and briefly becomes the border between Texas and New Mexico before meandering west, runs through Anthony. The U.S. post office is on the New Mexico side and serves both towns.

The address for the Worldwide Leap Year Birthday Club is care of Anthony Chamber of Commerce, P.O. Box 1086, Anthony, New Mexico-Texas 88021.

Store seeded with old-fashioned feeling

By MECHELLE BALL

NACOGDOCHES (AP) — Nancy Ross has been working at Jinkins Seed Store since she was a little girl.

"In fact," she muses, "I was 7 years old. I worked on a little apple box and sold seed and peanuts and cold drinks out of a box where we kept them on block ice."

In all those years she has learned a few things.

"You treat your customer like you would want to be treated. It's fellowship. We do everything from praise the Lord here to a little gossiping on the side," Mrs. Ross says with a laugh.

Her parents, Jesse J. and Rosa Jinkins, went into the seed business in 1942. At the time, their store was located next to where the Hoya Land Title Office is now in Nacogdoches.

"I remember my parents' first customer. It was Doc Lampkin. He bought a box of crackers and an orange soda water for 15 cents. He worked at the Chevrolet place which was down from Mahdeen's," she reminisced.

"Doc used to come in at 9:30 in the morning. We had a big cigar box for a cash register. We were just a little general store. Our big thing then was selling parched peanuts to the college."

"A nickel a bag," she said with a chuckle. Mrs. Ross recalls with a twinge of regret that her father later sold the peanut machine. "Both my sons played in that bin. One of them even had a peanut route," she says.

Forty-six years have passed since Jinkins Seed Store first opened its doors, but little has changed with the business. If Mrs. Ross has her way, there won't be a lot of changes. Her dream is to restore the building to its original condition.

Located in downtown Nacogdoches, the seed store is housed in a building that boasts a brass plate inscribed with the date Oct. 4, 1887, on a hand-carved storefront beam. A foot mark was added to the building in 1890.

The old-fashioned feeling created by the store front carries on across the threshold. One whole wall is lined with seed bins and antique items — kitchen utensils, garden tools, plows and some not so easily identified trinkets. Shelves are filled with all sizes of glass jars, which brim with numerous varieties of seed.

The shop is pleasantly cluttered with bags of seed potatoes, boxes of garlic and onions. Toward the back of the shop are old scales and other items that are clearly antique, some of them so old they are not easily named by the average person.

But probably the most impressive to the city slicker are the seeds.

You won't see many packaged seeds in Jinkins' — Mrs. Ross won't hear of it. Bulk seed is the only way to go. "My customers like to feel their seed. They like to look at their seed and it's cheaper," she says.

AP Laserphoto

From the bulk seeds in bins to the antique items that adorn the walls, an old-fashioned feeling is created at Jinkins Seed Store in Nacogdoches. Nancy Ross began working at her parents' store when she was a young girl.

She proved her point by grabbing one package of lettuce seed tape which was priced at $1.69 and measured 15 feet. She pulled down a jar of lettuce seeds and poured them into one of her brass scales. As she did so she said, "All you've got is convenience with the tape."

After measuring some seed into the scale, Mrs. Ross pulled out her specs and made some calculations. "A quarter ounce (of bulk seed) will plant 100 feet for 20 cents," she says. Point made, she laughs.

"I have a lot of senior customers that can't afford seed like that (packaged)," Mrs. Ross explains.

She also places a lot of emphasis on the quality of seed she sells. "I will not," she said emphatically, "accept anything without at least 85 percent germination. I guarantee my seed."

DEATHS

Rev. Irye Townsend

ABILENE — Services for the Rev. Irye L. Townsend, 87, of Abilene will be held at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Abilene Community Church. Graveside services will be held at 4 p.m. at the Fairview Cemetery in Midland with the Rev. Max Tipton officiating.

Pallbearers were to be Ken Van Hoozer, Stan Van Hoozer, Steve Van Hoozer, Jimmy Little, Dale Little and Rick Stevick.

ATTACK

When the bodies arrived in Chihuahua, she said, they were told the bodies had never been embalmed and it would have to be done at a cost of $1.5 million pesos. Upon arriving at a funeral home in Ojinaga, Mrs. Melendez said, she was told the bodies had never been embalmed and it would have to be done.

"The man in the funeral home in Ojinaga is supposed to write a letter saying that it is true," she said, noting that pictures were taken of the bodies and "he says, anybody knowing how to embalm bodies can tell whether it had been done or not," she stated. "I feel like I've been cheated on top of everything else."

The bodies of Catarino and Hector were buried Sunday in Ojinaga, she says, "Because we couldn't afford to bring them home."

Once they arrived in Odessa via Aero Vista, the family members were transported to AMI Women's and Children's Hospital at no charge by Easterling Funeral Home. All medical care, including surgery required on the knee of Maria Concepcion, is being provided by the hospital and its doctors at no charge.

The silver crown Reyes lost during his struggle to protect remaining family members is scheduled to be replaced sometime this week, at no charge, by Dr. F.R. Boyles, a local dentist.

Mrs. Melendez says says that, while "everybody is relaxing a little bit for now, we do want this pursued and I want to take it to the maximum because I want it taken care of," she stated.

"I know they can't bring back the lives of our relatives, but I do not want this to happen to anybody else," Mrs. Melendez said.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Workshop to deal with toys for babies

From Staff Reports

Jo Miller of Creative Schoolhouse will present a workshop, "Toys for Babies from Birth to Two Years," at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 23, and Thursday, Feb. 25.

The workshop will present unique toys that can be made from "trashables and savables." Developmental stages will be discussed in relationship to these toys.

Parents and parents-to-be as well as full-time caregivers will benefit from this workshop.

A resource guide containing developmental information and patterns will be given to each participant. Participants may register for either of the workshops by calling the schoolhouse at 686-9804. There is a $10 fee for the workshop and preregistration is required.

Candidate forum slated

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Republican Women's Club will sponsor a local Republican candidate forum Wednesday at 11:30 a.m. at the Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The candidates will speak on issues facing their races.

Archaeology club to meet

From Staff Reports

Bill Berilgen, a native of Ankara, Turkey, will speak at the monthly meeting of the Midland Archaeological Society Thursday, 7:30 p.m., at the Blakemore Planetarium, behind the Museum of the Southwest.

The ancient civilizations of the Anatolian Peninsula will be discussed, as well as sites such as Cappodolia, Hattusas and Troy.

Berilgen came to the United States in 1967 on a Mobil Oil scholarship, earning his bachelor's and master's degrees in engineering from the University of Oklahoma. A Midland resident, he has been employed by Forest Oil Corp. since 1984.

The public is invited to attend.

Style show raises funds for MMH pediatric equipment fund

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

The outside temperature still feels like winter, and the wind hasn't begun to blow yet, but spring has arrived in the Permian Basin, thanks to the Junior Woman's Association benefit style show, presented 11 a.m. Monday at Holiday Inn Convention Center.

Spring-Summer designs of Adele Simpson, shown courtesy of Julian Gold, were featured at the annual event to benefit Midland Memorial Hospital's pediatric equipment fund.

The center was dressed in a circus theme for the luncheon and style show. The room was decorated with balloons, ribbons, colored popcorn and candy-coated chocolate pieces. Clowns Sparkles and Toes, Lobo Joe and Valentine greeted each guest with a hug and a "I Hugged A Clown Today" sticker.

According to Laurie Johnson of Midland Memorial Hospital, "Since 1977, the Junior Woman's Association has donated over $56,000 to the pediatric and nursing units of the hospital."

Equipment purchased with these funds in the past have included a fetal heart monitor and a pulse oximeter, she added. "Last year the association gave $5,000 to the hospital. With it we purchased 12 sleeper chairs for the pediatric and oncology units, which allow the parents to stay with the patients while they are in the hospital."

John Ingram, speaking on behalf of Julian Gold, said, "It gives us a particular pleasure to be able to participate ... in all the wonderful things this organization has given to the hospital. That's what Midland is all about."

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Many of Adele Simpson's fashion presented Monday were dotted.

The Adele Simpson fashions for spring-summer showed the much-touted shorter hemlines, as well as more conservative lengths. Colors ranged from black and white to hot pink and teal blue. Formal designs featured full bell-shaped skirts of graduated lengths — above the knee in front to floor-length in the back.

More than 400 women attended the presentation, according to Chairman Greta Rigney. "We hope to raise $10,000," she said. "They (MMH) need more of the sleeper chairs like last year. ... They need more 'creature comforts,' like rocking chairs, high chairs, play pens — things to make life easier, especially for long-term patients."

Sponsors played a part in this years benefit style show, Ms. Rigney said. "This is the first time we've ever had sponsors. This will help us continue to grow."

Sponsors were Action Realty, Mr. and Mrs. Rick Alexander, Baytech Inc., Mr. and Mrs. Bill Black, Bullock Scott & Neisig, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Busby, ClayDesta Bank, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Kelly Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., First City Bank, First RepublicBank, Kerr Fitz-Gerald Kerr, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Jon Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Pearson, David Pine Chaparral Realtors, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Rigney, Texas Refreshments, United Bank, Mr. and Mrs. James W. Walton, Mr. and Mrs. Ken Yates, and Mr. and Mrs. W.D. Kleine.

Door prizes included items from A La Carte, Fancy Fans and Gifts, Jackson Morgan, Upstairs-Downstairs, Peppertree Florist & Gift Shop, Zody's Ice Cream Parlour, The Total Table, Jenkins Jewelry and Luggage, Margaret's Maternity, Joanne's Fine Gifts, Backstage, Luigi's, Pappagallo, Needlework, Holiday Inn, Candace McFarin Designs, The Shop, Julian Gold, Trader Shoes and Hollis Studios.

DEAR ABBY

Woman dreads admitting her expensive goof

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our son has been very kind to handle our retirement nest egg. Several days before "Bloody Monday," he advised me to close out an account, send a bank wire for $8,000 to a very conservative fund, and keep $2,000 cash just in case of a possible bank closing. I did as he recommended.

We aren't accustomed to having much cash around the house, so I put the envelope with the $2,000 in a wastebasket until I could think of a safe hiding place. You guessed it. I thoughtlessly emptied the wastebasket in the trash! I didn't realize what I had done until the next morning. I didn't call the garbage people because I figured it was hopeless; besides, I didn't want to advertise the fact that we kept so much cash in the house.

Shortly afterward, a letter appeared in your column about the stash of gold coins hidden in a shoe box and accidentally thrown out.

Recently our son wrote and instructed me to deposit the $2,000 and send a cashier's check to the fund. I can't bring myself to tell my family what a dumb thing I did. But when the money doesn't show up on the statement, oh, my! I can't even die to get out of this one, as the family will go crazy tearing up the house and digging up the yard trying to find the missing $2,000.

I can't bring myself to lie about it, but I'd do almost anything to avoid a horrible show-and-tell time when we hold our next semiannual finance and affairs meeting. Any honorable, face-saving suggestions? — PERPLEXED IN PHILLY

DEAR PERPLEXED: 'Fess up, then forget it. The money's gone — and everybody goofs occasionally. Your goof was just a little more expensive than most.

DEAR ABBY: For years I have wanted to carry a sign on my back that read: "I had two brothers, one brother-in-law and one husband who all died early deaths because of cigarettes and alcohol." I cringe when I see beautiful young girls and boys puffing away.

Today, I saw a "first" in the obituary column of the Springfield (Ohio) News-Sun. It read: "(The man's name), age 29, of Lutherville, Md., and formerly of Springfield, Ohio, died of chronic alcoholism ... etc." then it went on to name his kin.

I wonder what your readers think about printing the cause of death in such cases. I would like to see much more revealing obituaries. — STILL GRIEVING IN SPRINGFIELD

DEAR STILL: Obituaries are usually given to the newspaper by the family of the deceased. If the family wishes to disclose the cause of death for any reason, and the newspaper has no policy with regard to "cause of death," it's all right with me.

DEAR ABBY: I live in a nice place, but my landlady drives me crazy. She comes into my apartment while I'm at work. I've asked her not to do that because I have a cat who runs out the door the minute it's opened. Also, I feel violated when I know she's been snooping around, which I'm sure she does.

Have you any suggestions? — WENDY IN WEST HOLLYWOOD

DEAR WENDY: Yes. Write a letter to your landlady and tell her that you have been made aware of your legal rights. In California, when someone leases an apartment, according to Civil Code 1954, 24-hour notice must be given the tenant before anyone enters the apartment in his or her absence.

Tell your landlady that if your privacy is violated again, you have the basis for a lawsuit.

For current renter's laws in the other 49 states, contact your local fair housing organization.

DEAR ABBY: Two of my relatives moved in with me and my family while they looked for a place of their own. Well, it's been a year and they're still here. This has caused a tremendous burden on us. They are in no hurry to find a place. They're not even looking.

My wife, our children and I have been terribly frustrated living like this. Our two sons had to give up their bedroom.

How can people be so inconsiderate of others? What should I do? I hate to hurt their feelings. — CROWDED IN CORONA

DEAR CROWDED: What feelings? These relatives have the hides of rhinoceroses, and unless you give them a time limit, they will be with you indefinitely. A solution to hasten their departure: Help them to find a place of their own.

DEAR ABBY: Your answer to "Private Person" was fine insofar as it went: "You need not answer personal questions." However, never leave blank spaces, giving someone else the opportunity to later fill in answers that aren't yours. Either draw a line through the question, or fill the space with "irrelevant" or something similar. — E. SCHILDKRAUT, BROOKLYN

DEAR ABBY: When I was 12 years old, my mother cut an article out of your column and gave it to me. Seven years later, it's still up on my wall, though yellowed and worn from the many times I've touched it and reread it.

I am 19 now, and I'm still wishing, waiting, wanting and working for this article to come true for me.

Will you please reprint it so another "ungrateful" teen-ager, and perhaps his/her mother, can see it before the child is grown and gone.

DEAR ABBY: So many adults keep asking us "ungrateful" teenagers what we want. I finally have an answer that I think says it all:

I want time to be alone; alone with my thoughts.

I want to be accepted for what I am.

I want to be loved by those who brought me into the world.

I want a home that is rich in honesty, sharing and caring.

I want to be heard; I just might have something that you need to hear.

I want to know more about myself, my sexuality, my desires, my goals.

I want to know God and worship him in my own way.

I want to live my life one day at a time; for only then will I know its fullness.

And as I would live my life for me, so would I have you live your life for you. — A TEEN-AGER

Fashion instinctive for Frenchwomen

By CARRIE DONOVAN
New York Times News Service

PARIS — Whatever you call it — chic, cachet or "chien," that odd French expression — it is something Frenchwomen just seem to have.

In Paris, admirably turned-out women of all ages and incomes are everywhere, from the elegant boulevards of the 16th Arrondissement to the twisted alleys of the Marais.

One sage American who lives in Paris explained that the French "are born with a sense of proportion: they know how to follow fashion but in their own way, and they shape it to fit their figure."

"They play up whatever is their best feature: eyes, hair, et cetera," the American went on. "Their bad features seem to fade away because they ignore them."

Choosing classic clothes and splurging on a few really good accessories is a key to the Frenchwoman's art.

Carlyne Cerf de Dudzeele, a Frenchwoman who is director of special projects for fashion at American Vogue, said that if you are French, "You instinctively know the quick, elegant little things to do to be original."

Some chic Americans claim that they learned their lessons not only from observing Parisians but also from perusing French fashion journals like Marie Claire and Elle, handbooks in the small but important nuances of style.

Left-side driving wrecks terror in tourists' hearts

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I suppose a lot of you think your ancestors came to America to escape religious and political persecution, don't you? Did it ever occur to you that these brave immigrants migrated to a new world so they could drive on the right side of the road?

My husband and I have just returned from a vacation to a British-owned island where drivers drive on the left (or wrong) side of the road and frankly, we are lucky to be alive.

From the moment we climbed into the rental car, we sensed something was amiss. My husband said, "Where's my steering wheel?"

I said, "I have it."

"I thought you didn't want to drive."

"Crawl over the gearshift and it's yours."

He eased the car out of the parking lot and into the traffic. I'm here to tell you, we have lived life in the slow lane and life in the fast lane, but until you've spent a few days in the left lane, you have nothing to talk about.

Every time a car approached, my husband came to a dead stop and shut his eyes until it passed. Everything about the car defied familiarity. When he tried to turn on the lights, he succeeded in releasing the hood. When the windshield wipers began racing back and forth, I asked, "What are you doing?"

"Signaling for a left-hand turn," he said.

In the entire two weeks we were there, we never passed another car, put our car in reverse, parallel parked or made a right-hand turn. About the 50th time I told him he was drifting to the wrong side of the road, he reminded me that he was doing the best he could while I just sat there and sucked in my breath. That's when I exploded. "Being a passenger in this car is no day at the beach," I said. "I have been flogged to death by tree branches, drenched by gutter water, and have seen fear in the eyes of pedestrians that will haunt me for the rest of my life!"

I don't know why the Europeans make it so hard on themselves to drive. They've got enough problems without driving on the wrong side of the road. In retrospect, that could have been one of the reasons the war went badly for them. They were going the wrong way and didn't know it.

I'm just glad that my ancestors dreamed of a new land — a place where passengers didn't have to impale themselves on the brake to get to their seats, where you didn't have to be left-handed to shift gears, and where the tranquility of the countryside was not interrupted by a hysterical wife shouting at her husband, "Idiot! We're turning left! Put on your windshield wipers!"

Langdon calls for philosophic shift

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Langdon

The Texas Railroad Commission must adopt a fundamental change in philosophy that recognizes the shift in the Texas petroleum industry from one that has historically been driven by crude oil to one now driven by natural gas, says a candidate for the commission.

"The Railroad Commission stabilized oil prices for almost 50 years by regulating and allocating surpluses equitably among all producers," said Midlander Jerry Langdon, a natural gas consultant running for the democratic nomination for the TRC.

The natural gas industry developed primarily as a by-product of oil exploration. If enough stability can be built into the gas business to encourage gas exploration, more incremental oil will be discovered while drilling for gas — "casinghead oil, if you will," Langdon said. Casinghead gas is the term which refers to associated gas produced by oil wells.

When the oil surplus disappeared, along with price stability in the early 1970s, the TRC became unable to affect stability on oil prices. However, as the largest natural gas producing and consuming state, Texas can lead by example in controlling disparities between supply and demand and develop a balanced energy program, Langdon said Monday at a press conference in Midland.

"The commission's overriding consideration and No. 1 responsibility on any issue should be creating stability for the industry it regulates," Langdon said. Incentives should encourage producers to carry surplus productive capacity by allocating surplus among all producers, he added.

In addition to spurring the discovery of incremental oil as part of increased gas exploration, a model energy policy which would balance producer and consumer concerns would would also result in:

- guaranteeing domestic energy needs;
- offsetting imported oil (fuel oil) by increasing consumption of natural gas supplies, which would be perceived as more stable; and,
- encouraging development of reserves, the health of of industry — even during slack times — would be improved, said Langdon, who is challenging incumbent James Nugent to be the Democratic candidate for the three-member commission.

He isn't convinced that statewide prorationing using a depth bracket yardstick allowable, as has been suggested by some members of the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association, is the answer. The current contractual environment and the crediting procedures that would be necessary doesn't appear to be workable.

"What we need to end up with is a procedure to allocate allowables in an equitable manner based on performance. But the current G-10 (72-hour test) is not a good way to determine the delivery capacity," said the 36-year-old Midlander, whose father served on the commission for 14 years in the 1960s and '70s.

"A lottery system which would test, at random, one-twelfth of the state's wells every month, would reconcile where we are in terms of supply. The test would be scheduled far enough in advance to allow operators to schedule remedial workover or mechanical work on wells to improve their deliverability. That would overcome one of the problems of the current system — the unpredictability of peak demand periods, when peak production will be required.

First charges revealed in thrift probe

DALLAS (NYT) — Officials heading a federal investigation of fraudulent transactions in the Texas savings industry Monday disclosed the first set of what they said would be dozens of criminal charges against former industry executives and real estate brokers.

The government said that a former senior vice president of the Vernon Savings and Loan Association, John G. Smith, had agreed to plead guilty to a charge of falsifying documents that overstated the institution's net worth by more than $2 million at the end of 1985.

Vernon was closed in November by federal regulators at a cost of $1.3 billion, the largest bailout in the history of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. As of Nov. 30, the Texas savings industry had a negative net worth of $4.9 billion.

The charges were brought against five people who were active in financing and packaging deals during the three-year boom in real estate activity in north Texas that lasted through 1985.

"You are seeing some fairly early results of what is a tremendous investigative effort," said Bobby R. Gillham, the special agent in charge of the FBI's Dallas field division. "You are certain to see more."

Fifty officers from the Justice Department, the FBI, the Internal Revenue Service and the Federal Home Loan Bank system began the investigation in November, Gillham said. Marvin Collins, the U.S. attorney in Dallas, said that four of the five individuals named in the cases had agreed to cooperate in the investigation, which is expected to last between three and five years.

"They are getting in early to try to cut their losses," he said.

In one case, Tyrell G. Barker, the former chairman of State Savings & Loan Association of Lubbock, agreed to plead guilty to accepting a $100,000 kickback from a real estate broker on a $2 million loan.

Reagan, raisins debut at toy fair

NEW YORK (AP) — Ronald Reagan and Ed Koch trying to sell a game called Corruption?

If it's February and you're standing on lower Fifth Avenue, you may well see such a sight (actually, two people dressed as the president and the mayor) because the American International Toy Fair is under way.

Buyers from stores around the country gathered here Monday for the opening of the 10-day trade show, as the toy industry plots a comeback from the disappointments of 1987.

Besides political impersonators handing out fliers for a new game, buyers encountered a walking pitcher of Kool-Aid and an assortment of clowns outside the Toy Center.

In the midst of the hubbub was a protester quietly holding a sign: "War Toys Teach Hatred."

Inside, there were more clowns. Visitors bumped into larger-than-life versions of Garfield, the California Raisins and a duck, each trying to attract buyers and reporters to separate showrooms on a single floor.

On the same floor, a woman walked by holding an incredibly lifelike doll — and several people did a double-take. It was a real baby, but at Toy Fair, it's hard to tell who's selling and who isn't.

Underneath the hoopla is an air of caution. Many toys on display will never make it to stores. Some of the most touted products from the 1987 fair are nowhere to be found, and manufacturers who lost money last year are hoping their new lines will turn their balance sheets around.

The manufacturers know their products are competing with thousands of other toys for limited store shelf space, so they tried to outdo each other with displays, videos and demonstrations.

The toys were shown off to their best with special lighting and backgrounds, and some companies previewed television commercials for buyers.

The larger companies hired suitably attired models to show off their lines.

Male action figures were exhibited by fatigue-garbed men barking like drill sergeants. At the Lewis Galoob Toys Inc. office, a model in a business suit exhibited a game based on the television series "L.A. Law." She even looked a little like actress Susan Dey, a star of the series.

Some showrooms were so busy that visitors had to wait to see the toys. Others, selling less glamorous items like school supplies and Christmas boxes, were nearly deserted.

Among the new toys shown were Hit Stix, electric drumsticks that emit sounds even if they're played in the air; a California Raisin board game; and Maxie, a fashion doll introduced by Hasbro Inc. as Barbie's latest rival.

But many manufacturers were sticking with the tried and true. Instead of investing heavily in new products, they concentrated on expanding already successful lines and ideas.

Coleco Industries Inc. added several variations to its line of toys based on the television series "Alf." And Hasbro, which sold 3 million Pogo Bals last year, offered new versions of the spherical toy that works like a pogo stick.

Toy Fair is also a chance for the industry to take stock. At a press conference Monday, the Toy Manufacturers of America recounted the woes of 1987. Shipments in dollar terms fell 1.5 percent from 1986, although the number of toys sold rose 13 percent, said Robert Cooper, chairman of the trade group.

But the industry was looking forward to a better year in 1988. Cooper predicted sales would rise about 5 percent on both the wholesale and retail levels.

Murdoch, unions clash on Post survival

NEW YORK (AP) — Eight unions meet Wednesday to consider their options at the New York Post, which owner Rupert Murdoch says he will close Feb. 19 without $24 million in concessions from organized labor.

George McDonald, president of the Allied Printing Trades Council, called Murdoch's terms ridiculous, and called the meeting of the council's eight unions.

"At this point, whether or not the Post survives is entirely up to the cooperation from our unions," Murdoch said in a statement Monday after he met briefly with union leaders.

He said the money-losing newspaper will close Feb. 19 if its 1,200 workers do not agree to a 12 percent pay cut and other concessions totaling $24 million over three years.

"If February 19th comes and this paper closes down, it will be Rupert Murdoch who closes this paper — not the unions," McDonald said at an impromptu news conference in the Post lobby.

McDonald charged the concessions were imposed to sweeten a deal in which Murdoch agreed to sell the paper to real estate developer Peter S. Kalikow for $37 million.

"We've been betrayed," McDonald said. "We've been used for him to get his price."

Murdoch announced Sunday that the Post, founded n 1801 by Alexander Hamilton, would be sold to Kalikow, 45, who owns about a dozen buildings in Manhattan and has a fortune estimated at $500 million.

The paper, Murdoch said, had been losing $15 million a year, but losses were now running at a much higher rate "that could no longer be justified."

Kalikow said, "It is my intention to stop the hemorrhaging of the New York Post. I am committed to expanding its readership base through millions of dollars in promotion and greatly expanding its advertising revenues to make the paper profitable on a long-term basis."

Murdoch said his contract with Kalikow called for the buyer's withdrawal by Feb. 19 if the concessions were not granted.

The Post at a glance

Associated Press

Publisher Rupert Murdoch agreed over the weekend to sell the New York Post to New York real-estate developer Peter S. Kalikow.

Here are some facts and figures about the New York Post and the sale agreement:

PRODUCTION AND CIRCULATION

The Post last year cut daily production from nine editions to two, and circulation is estimated at about 500,000 copies, down from a peak of 960,000 several years ago.

The paper operated last year with an estimated deficit of $15 million or more.

CURRENT OWNER

Murdoch bought the Post in 1976 for about $31 million. The paper acquired a reputation for racy headlines, but never attracted enough advertising to become profitable.

Murdoch was under pressure to sell the Post because of federal regulations barring cross-ownership of a newspaper and a television station in the same city. Murdoch has filed a lawsuit questioning the constitutionality of the laws.

POTENTIAL OWNER

Peter S. Kalikow is president of H.J. Kalikow & Co., a real-estate concern, and owns about a dozen buildings in Manhattan. His fortune is estimated at $500 million. He has no previous publishing experience.

POTENTIAL DEAL

Kalikow would pay $37 million for the Post and its assets, including valuable waterfront property in lower Manhattan. The property alone is estimated to be worth $35 million.

Hanna

Lions to hear expert address tax alternatives

Mark J. Hanna, an Austin attorney, will address the Downtown Midland Lions Club at their Wednesday luncheon at the Midland Center.

Hanna, who represents several major trade and professional associations such as Realtors, CPAs, dentists and engineers, will give an overview of the new tax alternatives to be considered during the next legislative session.

These alternatives, according to Hanna, include tax on services, corporate income tax, tax on non-corporate income, and personal income tax.

WTI close highest in a month

Oil prices rose world-wide Monday, supported by rumors of a developing supply "squeeze" in Europe like the one that buoyed prices in early January, according to the Wall Street Journal.

Prices were also helped by anticipation that weekly American Petroleum Institute statistics due tonight will show a fall in heating-oil stocks.

In early trading today, prices were off about 20 cents, at $17.45. In New York Monday, crude closed at $17.66 a barrel, up 38 cents, the highest close in a month.

Technical-oriented traders were heartened that the New York market broke from its $16.70 to $17.50 range. Chris McCormack, a Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. broker, said "17.50 was a key level. People had been talking about it for weeks." Still, Richard D. Donovan, head of Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.'s international energy desk, said while the technical move was "a positive sign," he doesn't put too much emphasis on it.

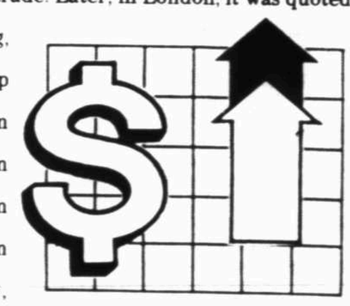
Optimism bolsters dollar prices

LONDON (AP) — The dollar registered some small gains today amid expectations of improved U.S. trade figures. Gold was lower.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.23 yen to a closing of 129.07, recovering from a lower rate of 128.85 at the start of trade. Later, in London, it was quoted at 129.25 yen.



Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Monday:

— 1.7035 West German marks, up from 1.7010

— 1.3950 Swiss francs, up from 1.3875

— 5.7483 French francs, up from 5.7265

— 1.9132 Dutch guilders, up from 1.9085

— 1,253.00 Italian lire, down from 1,253.32

— 1.2665 Canadian dollars, unchanged

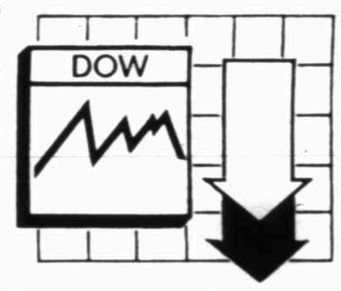
In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.7455, compared with $1.7550 Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $441.65 a troy ounce, compared with late Monday's $443.50. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $439.25.

In Zurich, the bid price was $439.40, down from $442.50 late Monday. Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose 51 cents to close at a bid of $443.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.32 a troy ounce, down from Monday's $6.34.

Dow drops fourth straight session



NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices sagged in quiet trading Monday, faced with a rise in interest rates and caution in advance of a report due later this week on U.S. international trade.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which fell 13.09 on Friday, was off another 14.76 to 1,895.72.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by 5 to 3 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 584 up, 963 down and 432 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 168.85 million shares, against 161.31 million in the previous session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $15.53 billion, or 0.63 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped 1.01 to 140.34.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials fell 2.02 to 284.45, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 1.68 at 236.36.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market lost 1.23 to 344.52. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 267.80, down 2.31.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Connally elected to Coastal Corp. board

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Texas Gov. John Connally was one of four people elected to the board of directors of The Coastal Corp., company officials said Monday.

The Houston-based company expanded their board from 12 to 16 members.

Connally filed for bankruptcy protection in July after real estate and development ventures started at the peak of the oil boom went bust.

Connally and his wife, Nellie, last month concluded a four-day auction of hundreds of possessions, many of them collected during his years as governor from 1963 to 1969, Navy secretary under President Kennedy and Treasury secretary under President Nixon.

Others elected to the Coastal board include David A. Arledge, senior vice president of finance for Coastal; Micheal L. Beatty, senior vice president and general counsel for Coastal; and Kenneth O. Johnson, senior vice president of refining operations for Coastal.

EDS posts 46 percent earnings increase

DALLAS (AP) — Electronic Data Systems Corp. reported Monday a 46 percent increase in earnings for the final quarter of 1986, attributing the rise to several government and private industry contract awards during the year.

Revenues rose from a 1986 total of $4.38 billion to $4.44 billion last year, the Dallas-based electronics firm said. Earnings in the final three months last year totaled $104.2 million, up 46 percent from $71.5 million in the corresponding 1986 period.

Total net income for 1987 rose 24 percent from $260.9 million in 1986 to $323.1 million in 1987.

NYSE, SEC investigating violation rumors

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Stock Exchange and the Securities and Exchange Commission are investigating rumors that subversion of a key selling rule may have contributed to the October crash, according to NYSE chairman John Phelan.

Phelan also said Monday that the nation's biggest stock exchange was discussing possible ways to limit trading in so-called baskets of stocks, a key component of computerized selling strategies linked by some to the market's collapse.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Phelan said persistent rumors about violations had prompted the exchange and SEC to probe possible violations of the "uptick rule," which bans the sale of borrowed stock except in instances when the previous sale raised the stock's price.

Consumer confidence still gaining steam

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumer confidence continues to post gains even though a quarter of adults polled in a recent survey thinks jobs are hard to come by, according to a Conference Board study.

The Conference Board said Monday its Consumer Confidence Index stood at 110.9 in January, up 3 points from December. With the increase, the index has regained two-thirds of the loss it posted following October's stock market collapse.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

All T-bills traded in secondary market

By BILL DOYLE

Q. We have purchased U.S. Treasury bills with maturities as short as 30 or 40 days through our stock brokerage firm. As I understand it, our T-bill purchases are made in the "open market." Are these T-bills different than the usual T-bills, which have longer maturities?

Doyle

A. No. T-bills are issued with maturities of 13, 26 and 52 weeks. The U.S. Treasury Department sells the 13- and 26-week bills every Monday, unless Monday is a holiday, and the 52-week bills once a month.

The T-bills you bought have either 13-, 26- or 52-week maturities but are not newly issued bills. After the Treasury sells T-bills, they can be bought and sold in the marketplace — the "open market" you mention, which also is called the "secondary market."

Billions of dollars worth of T-bills are traded every business day. The T-bills you bought were sold by individual or institutional investors who previously had purchased them. Brokerage firms and banks buy and sell "outstanding" — already issued — T-bills for customers and for their own accounts all the time.

Anyone who wants to invest a bundle of cash for a short period of time can put it into T-bills, secure in the knowledge the T-bills will be redeemed at face value on their maturity dates.

If you have $10,000 or more you won't need for anywhere from one to 364 days, your brokerage or bank can buy you T-bills due to mature quite close to the date you pick. And if you own T-bills and are in need of cash, you can sell your T-bills.

Because T bills are short-term investments, backed by the full faith and credit of our federal government, they are counted as "cash equivalents" — meaning they are similar to folding money in your wallet or purse. But T-bills accrue interest.

Q. You have explained that, when a person buys U.S. Treasury bills through a local bank and the bank fails, the customer's T-bills are safe because they are not part of the bank's assets.

I buy T-bills through a brokerage firm and receive a statement showing my name, address, amount of T-bills, etc. If the brokerage should fail, would the same procedure apply?

A. Not really. But don't fret. Your T-bills would be safe.

When buying T-bills the way you do, the brokerage firm becomes the registered owner of the T-bills in the book-entry computerized record system. The brokerage is the nominee for you — the "beneficial" owner.

If the brokerage goes belly up, the Securities Investor Protection Corp., created by act of Congress, will see to it that the T-bills and all your other securities — up to $500,000 per customer — held by the brokerage are returned to you. Many brokerages have private insurance protecting customers' account for even large amounts.

Q. I always purchased U.S. Treasury securities by submitting tenders to my district Federal Reserve Bank. I stopped because the new "Treasury Direct" system requires that discounts on the purchase of Treasury bills, semiannual interest payments on Treasury notes and bonds, as well as maturity values of all three be sent electronically to a bank account designated by me.

I do business with three banks and have no way of knowing, in advance, which particular bank I will want the money sent to. There should be a provision in the Treasury Direct system permitting investors who wish to receive their discount, interest and maturity money by check to do so — as was the case before Treasury Direct went into effect. If not, won't large numbers of investors stop buying Treasury securities?

A. Some probably will. But it's doubtful they will be in "large numbers." More likely, larger numbers of investors will start using the Treasury Direct system. The electronic deposit of money under the new system does away with lost, stolen or destroyed checks. That appeals to lots of people.

Infomart's third birthday may be time to celebrate

By ROBERT G. WIELAND
Associated Press Writer

BUSINESS MIRROR

DALLAS (AP) — Three years is a long time by high-tech standards, but Infomart is beginning to show that computers can be hawked from a trade mart just like clothes and chairs.

The center was built by developer Trammell Crow, who earlier erected the World Trade Mart in Dallas where competing companies share space to sell apparel and furniture in huge quantities.

Infomart, a $97 million replica of Queen Victoria's Crystal Palace that is celebrating its third birthday this week, is still half empty and has yet to break even.

But the concept already has spawned one computer "clone" in California and others are on the way in Washington and Atlanta.

"Infomart is the attraction ... allowing vendors to let buyers know who you are and what you do," said Dick Terrell, operations for Xerox's center at Infomart.

Xerox, an original tenant in the elaborate white metal-and-glass buildings, was so pleased with the results from its 23,400-square-foot display area that it recently cut a hole in the floor for a staircase leading to an 8,000-square-foot executive communications center.

"The second year was better than the first and the third year was better than the first and second," said Terrell.

Xerox is one of 88 tenants leasing about 54 percent of the 874,000 square feet of available space, Infomart President Bill Winsor said.

The break-even point of 62 percent occupancy could be reached by the end of the year, said Gerald Allen, Infomart's vice president for leasing.

While the existing tenants increasing their amount of space, Infomart continues to woo industry holdouts such as Apple, Digital Equipment, Hewlett-Packard, Data General and Lotus Development.

Some of those companies have been leery of pooling space with rivals in such a secretive and competitive industry, but it is the presence of so many companies that has made Infomart work, Winsor said.

"There's a trend in the mind of the buyer toward multi-vendor capability, and the concept fueling the whole information industry is connectivity," Winsor said.

That means buyers can choose a mainframe computer from one vendor, terminals from a second and printers from a third.

Catering to that idea, Infomart provides free presentations from its tenants that respond to specific problem-solving requests from corporate buying teams looking to spend more than $100,000 on information-processing equipment.

"We did 110 executive briefings in 1986 and expect to do more than 250 this year," Winsor said.

He said evaluations had found that 73 percent of the briefings resulted in a sale.

As part of the education process, Infomart also offers computer classrooms, 17 theaters, a resource center and specific centers for electronic publishing and computer automation.

When Infomart opened in January 1985, not a single vendor tenant offered electronic publishing equipment. Now more than 30 tenants do.

There are 150 full-time Infomart employees, among 1,000 jobs the Dallas Chamber of Commerce estimates Infomart has created.

A smaller copy of Infomart has been developed in Silicon Valley by Kimball Small Properties and the city of Santa Clara, Calif.

Techmart, with about 40 tenants, has been open just over one year, its chairman, Kim Small, said. Its 300,000-square-foot building is about 66 percent leased, including University of California classrooms on the ground floor, he said.

In addition to Techmart, a Techworld is being developed in Washington and Inforum in Atlanta.

Superconducting coil ideal energy storer

Research gets boost from SDI

By MALCOLM W. BROWNE
New York Times News Service

AP LaserPhoto

Researchers such as Sungho Jin at AT&T Laboratories are pushing back the barriers of supercoductivity reasearch, working with liquid nitrogen and other super-cold materials.

Engineers have long dreamed of a near-perfect energy storage system in which a huge current of electricity would circulate indefinitely without resistance, always ready for use. The basis for such power storage would be a superconducting coil, but the cost of the device has prevented its development by utility companies. Now, an infusion of money from the "Star Wars" missile defense program may be bringing the superconducting storage coil nearer to reality.

The Defense Nuclear Agency, acting on behalf of the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization, has awarded nearly $30 million to two competing engineering concerns, Ebasco Services Inc. of New York City and Bechtel National Inc. of San Francisco, to start a coil project.

Clearly, the main purpose of the program is to give SDI weapon makers the means of producing huge, brief pulses of electrical power — the power needed to drive antimissile lasers, particle beams and electromagnetic cannons. A superconducting coil could also be useful to electric utility companies as an economical means of storing excess electricity for use during periods of high demand. Conscious of a need to maintain a favorable public image, the SDI organization tries whenever possible to find civilian applications for the technology it develops.

According to present thinking, large superconducting coils would be built underground near cities. In peacetime, the storage capacity of a coil would be used to even out the fluctuations in supply and demand that now plague electric power companies. But in a military emergency, the power stored in the coil could be poured almost instantly into antimissile weapons dependent on giant pulses of electricity.

"The coil would be directly connected to the civilian electric power grid," said Robert C. Iotti, a vice president at Ebasco, "and it could either draw power or feed the grid, depending on the balance between supply and demand."

The heart of the system would be an electromagnetic induction coil the size of a football field, confined in a huge pit and chilled by ultracold liquid helium. The wire used in the coil would be made of metal alloys that conduct electricity without resistance when cooled to near the absolute zero of temperature, which is minus 459 degrees Fahrenheit.

During the past year, scientists in many laboratories have experimented with a new class of superconducting materials that do not have to be chilled to the ultra-low temperature of liquid helium. Despite the difficulty of making these materials into useful devices, many scientists think the day may come when high-temperature superconductors could be fabricated into wire for superconducting coils. The current SDI project calls for exploring the possibilities of such high-temperature superconductors, but concentrates on conventional liquid-helium superconductors of proven capacity.

Ebasco and Bechtel have until the end of 1989 to draw up their designs, select materials and choose potential building sites. The company judged to have produced the best plan will be eligible for a new contract for about $75 million to build the experimental plant, which is tentatively scheduled for completion in 1992.

A superconducting coil could store and discharge electricity without transforming it into any other type of energy, and this fact could reduce energy loss to a bare minimum. Iotti said in an interview that the efficiency of the coil would be "better than 95 percent," substantially more efficient than conventional storage systems.

Iotti said the test facility would be 328 feet in diameter and 33 to 49 feet high. The entire coil would be embedded in a pit excavated into rock, which would help confine the outward pressure exerted by magnetic fields intrinsic to an electrical coil.

A major expense, designers acknowledged, would be the coil's refrigeration system. The niobium-titanium alloy used as the superconducting cable in the coil must be maintained at the temperature of liquid helium — minus 452 degrees Fahrenheit. Surrounding the coil and its liquid helium bath will be an insulating system similar to that used in thermos bottles, in which a vacuum vessel encases the cold core and prevents heat from entering.

Further insulation could be provided by several jackets containing successively colder liquefied gases. Even with such insulation, some heat would enter the liquid helium and boil it away, necessitating a helium refrigeration plant to make up the losses.

A detailed plan for storing electricity in a superconducting coil was put forward in 1978 by Dr. Roger Boom of the University of Wisconsin at Madison. Boom and a team from the university have been engaged as partners by Ebasco, and the researchers will collaborate with the Madison Gas & Electric Co. and other businesses involved in power generation. Bechtel is evaluating proposals from nine commercial utility companies but has not yet selected a partner.

Eastern contract talks on hold

MIAMI (AP) — After one session with Eastern management and a federal mediator, a labor leader requested and received a one-week delay in contract negotiations.

National Mediation Board mediator Harry Bickford, who had been meeting separately with the two sides, sat down with Eastern management and officials of its biggest union for the first time Monday.

But the meeting was brief, said Machinists leader Charles E. Bryan.

"We met, and based on the developments in the company, as far as we are concerned they're in violation of the status quo with the actions they've taken," Bryan said.

"I felt it was very important that we talk to legal counsel before continuing negotiations," Bryan said.

He said the mediator, assigned after Eastern declared an impasse in talks on a new two-year contract last October.

POST

He said Kalikow had made a one-year written agreement to publish the Post and had assumed responsibility for severance pay and pensions totaling nearly $40 million.

Union officials said their lawyers would file an unfair labor practice complaint with the National Labor Relations Board because they were presented with a non-negotiable package.

They also said they were working on their own proposal as buyer of last resort under an employee stock ownership trust.

Howard Rubenstein, a Post spokesman, called that idea a dangerous mirage, adding that Murdoch said it was too late to consider such a plan.

Murdoch has been under pressure to sell the Post because he has been operating it and WNYW-TV under a temporary waiver of a Federal Communications Commission rule barring cross-ownership of a newspaper and a television station in the same city.

Late last year, Sens. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., and Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., inserted an amendment into a budget bill that bars extensions of such waivers.

"A lottery testing proposal would also provide at least some measure of an exploration incentive by guaranteeing an operator at least one month per year of flush production, which pipeline companies would be required to purchase," said Langdon.

He added that there "ought to be penalties against pipelines" who exploit the nomination and ratable take regulations.

To implement rules which would stabilize the supply side of the industry without adversely affecting consumer concerns, would serve as an example of leadership to the nation. Said Langdon: "The current commission appears to be content in waiting for the 'bubble' to burst."

Midland College's "masked avenger" Charles McCovery (24) battles with New Mexico Junior College's Steve White for possession of loose ball during cage action Monday at Chaparral Center.

Chaps end NMJC streak

First half explosion allows sleep-walk finish

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland College, alias Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, was so good in the first half that it managed to win 79-67 over New Mexico Junior College, although seeming to sleep-walk through the second half Monday night at the Chaparral Center.

The Chaps have never been more devastating than in the first half of this Western Junior College Athletic Conference game that was supposed to be a cardiac special.

The previous three meetings were decided by a total of four points, NMJC the winner all three times, and Monday's game was expected to be more of the same.

The second half? Well, you couldn't really expect a team to maintain that kind intensity for a full 40 minutes.

"We haven't had a better half defensively all year," said MC Coach Reggie Franklin. And, coach, it wasn't bad offensively, either, although defensive turnovers created a bunch of the points.

STILL, NOT impressed. The Chaps led 18-0 a little over four minutes into the game against a Thunderbird team that not only scores in 90 point bundles but brought a 21-4 record into the game.

"Midland took out those last three losses to us in one game," said NMJC Ron Black, still in a state of shock after it was over. "Midland was defensively ready and they took us completely away from our game. We didn't get inside and, when we did, Midland took the ball away from us."

Black added, "We aren't a good shooting team and we didn't show the patience we must to score."

Despite the devastating defense, Midland lost the shutout when 6-7 Rodney Jones scored with 15:20 left in the half and the Thunderbirds continued to rally on a Steve White two-pointer before Midland answered with another 10-point run for a 28-4 lead with 11 minutes to go in the half.

SIX-SEVEN Herman Henry, Charles McCovery, playing with a guard to protect a broken nose, and Billy Ray Smith speared-headed the early onslaught. Henry was awesome, scoring 13 of his game high 18 points in the opening nine minutes.

"Herman has been playing like a man possessed in the last few weeks," Franklin admitted.

The Chaps enjoyed spreads of 32-7, 36-9 and finally a 47-20 halftime edge.

The less said about the final 20 minutes, the better. And the final two minutes were pure agony, 23 free throws in the final 1:43 and 30 of the game's 68 charity tosses in the final five minutes.

"You get someone down by 27 points at half and the tendency is to relax," said Franklin, "I think the refs relaxed a little, too."

"In the second half we applied more defensive pressure and exercised more patience offensively," Black commented. "We never made it close, but when it was 18-0 and 47-20, we could have quit. But we didn't. Honest, we aren't that bad."

THE CHAPS managed to "hang on" in the second half, although they weren't the same Green Machine that won the first half. NMJC came back, but never got it below 17 points until White and Marshall Taylor twice hit successive three pointers to trim MC's lead to 72-60 with two minutes left. Neither team scored a basket after that, but, good grief, the free throws.

Midland could have sunk the Battleship New Jersey, if it had converted all of its opportunities...or won by 27 points.

The big story for the Chaps in the second half was 5-8 Stewart Barnett, who came off the bench to give the offense the boost it needed to keep the Thunderbirds at arm's length.

"He could be a starter," Franklin advised, "but off the bench he gives us that upbeat tempo I'm looking for."

The win enabled the fourth-place Chaps (7-4) to keep pace with third place South Plains and kept fifth place Howard County from gaining any ground. The win gives MC an 18-6 record for the year.

The loss was damaging NMJC's hopes of catching Odessa College. The Thunderbirds are 9-2 while OC went to 12-0 with an 83-56 win over NMMI in Roswell.

Pack faces 'must' outing

MHS girls close out tough season

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The fickle destiny of District 4-5A basketball teams waltzed to an uncertain tune last week, mixing lows with highs and leaving fans wondering just how it will all end in the next couple of weeks.

For Midland High and Midland Lee, destiny took both teams to the top of the mountain and the bottom of the valley.

Lee's Rebels defeated league leading Odessa High on Tuesday and lost to basement dweller Abilene Cooper on Friday. Midland High leaped into playoff contention on Tuesday with a win over Odessa Permian and then saw a dramatic fourth quarter comeback fall short in an 80-75 loss to San Angelo.

When last week's smoke had cleared, destiny was kindest of all to San Angelo. The Bobcats defeated second place Abilene High at home and then won their first district road game of the year against Midland High, leaving San Angelo right in the thick of the 4-5A playoff chase.

Just where all this is heading will be answered in a large part this week. San Angelo hosts Odessa High tonight in a game that league eyes will certainly be on and Midland High will travel to Abilene High.

San Angelo has not lost at home in district play this year, which should be a worrisome sign for the high flying Bronchos, who could find themselves in big trouble with a loss.

Abilene High's district position is also in question. How will the Eagles react after losing to San Angelo? That's a question the Bulldogs of MHS will help answer. And if the Bulldogs still believe in stretch run miracles, this is a game the Purple Pack will have to have. The Bulldog season is on the line. Win or start thinking about next season. It's really pretty simple for the guys in the purple shorts.

4-5A Basketball

It would seem that Lee's Rebels are now out of the hunt with a 4-5 loop mark, and Lee will have the night off tonight.

In the girls 4-5A race, Midland Lee had a sweet week, winning two games including a "must" win over Abilene Cooper to keep the 8-3 Lady Rebs hoping for a shot at the playoffs.

San Angelo vaulted into the state playoffs for the third year in a row Friday with a 57-37 win over defending league champion Midland High, running its record to 10-0.

But Lee's 46-40 win over Cooper threw a monkey wrench into the Lady Cougars' playoff plans. Lee is idle tonight and will travel to Odessa Permian Friday for the last night of 4-5A girls competition.

However, the big game for 8-2 Cooper comes Friday when it plays host to San Angelo. Cooper will go to the playoffs for the first time in girls basketball if they can pull off the major upset. If the Cougars can't perform that duty, they will have to face Lee in a one-game district playoff for second place next week at a neutral site with the winner going to the playoffs.

MHS, after tasting a rare victory on Tuesday, suffered a big setback against San Angelo on Friday. The Lady Bulldogs will not be back in the playoffs this year and will end a rugged season tonight at the MHS gym against Abilene High.

Regardless of what happens, it appears to be an interesting week ahead in 4-5A basketball.

TCU gives ignored Crow chance

ODESSA (AP) — Odessa Permian High School running back Shawn Crow says he has verbally agreed to accept a football scholarship from Texas Christian University.

Crow, who rushed for 2,288 yards in 1987 and was a first-team All-State selection, had not received wide interest from other Division 1-A programs.

Crow said it took him "about a heartbeat" to decide to accept the TCU offer. He will officially accept the scholarship Wednesday, he said.

"I had decided if I got a Division I offer, I was going to take it," Crow said.

Crow made four official recruiting visits to Abilene Christian University, TCU, West Texas State University and the University of Missouri. Crow also visited Sul Ross State University, although he said he was not considering attending the Alpine school.

Permian's all-time leading rusher with 3,651 yards, Crow said he received a phone call Monday night from TCU offensive backs coach Bob DeBesse informing him the Horned Frogs would make a scholarship available to him if he wanted it.

Crow said he was unsure of how he will fit into TCU's offense, but he made his decision based on his impressions of DeBesse and head coach Jim Wacker.

"The way the coaching staff is, they're so friendly and they're so honest," Crow said. "To me, they're a program on the way up."

The Horned Frogs finished the 1987 season with a 5-6 overall record, 3-4 in Southwest Conference play.

TCU also lost its leading rusher this season, senior Tony Jeffery. Jeffery was the nation's third-leading rusher when he was suspended for improper contacts with a sports agent the week before TCU's final game, a 42-24 loss to Texas A&M.

Gretzky high on All-Star game

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Wayne Gretzky, who in eight seasons has already set almost every NHL scoring record imaginable, says he learned early not to take All-Star Games too lightly.

"I played with (Hall of Famer) Gordie Howe when he was in about his 23rd or 24th All-Star game," Gretzky said. "He was the first guy to the rink, the first guy on the ice. He was more excited than I was."

Howe, still the NHL's all-time leader with 801 career goals, will be among those watching the league's 39th All-Star game tonight at The Arena.

Howe's son, Mark, is a defenseman for the Wales Conference, which has won nine of 11 games from the Campbell Conference since the current format was instituted in 1975. Gretzky is the leader of an explosive Campbell Conference lineup that is chafing for respect.

"I think there's been this little bit of feeling that has developed that that conference is better than our conference," Gretzky said.

"This is a chance for us to come down here and show people that we can play as well as they can. We feel that we've got a good conference. We feel that we've got a lot of talent."

For starters, there's the matchup between the incomparable Gretzky, the seven-time NHL scoring king, and Mario Lemieux, his heir apparent and this season's pacesetter.

"It's a good thing for the fans to come and see. He'll do his best and I'll do my best," Gretzky said. "If there is any kind of (rivalry), I think it comes from the younger player and that he wants to show people that he can do the job."

A midseason knee injury that sidelined him for 29 days has dropped Gretzky 16 points behind Lemieux in the scoring race.

"I think a guy like that comes along once every 8-9-10 years. You just don't find a player (with) that amount of talent every year," Gretzky, 27, said of Lemieux, 22.

"I've got my work cut for me. I've got a long way to go," Gretzky said of his chances to overtake Lemieux. "I can't have any off nights. I'm not going to quit hockey if I don't win, but I think as a professional athlete you've got to have pride."

Gretzky's supporting cast includes Edmonton teammates Jari Kurri, Mark Messier and Glenn Anderson, all forwards, along with defenseman Kevin Lowe and goaltender Grant Fuhr.

Lemieux, the Wales Conference's vote-getter in the fan balloting, will center for starters Kevin Dineen of the Hartford Whalers and Michel Goulet of the Quebec Nordiques. Philadelphia's Ron Hextall is the starting goaltender, with Boston's Ray Bourque and Pittsburgh's Paul Coffey on defense.

"It should be more of a wide-open game. I just hope we have a good game," Campbell Conference Coach Glen Sather of Edmonton said.

High-scoring forwards Denis Savard of the Chicago Blackhawks, Dale Hawerchuk of the Winnipeg Jets and Steve Yzerman of the Detroit Red Wings lend even more firepower for the Campbell squad.

Wales Conference Coach Mike Keenan of Philadelphia has the game's two oldest players on defense, with 34-year-old Denis Potvin of the New York Islanders and 36-year-old Larry Robinson of the Montreal Canadiens.

Greenwood keeps rolling

From Staff Reports

KERMIT — Tommy Lawson's shot with two seconds left here Monday night lifted Greenwood's Rangers to a 72-70 victory over the Kermit Yellowjackets in a key District 4-3A basketball game and the No. 9 state ranked Greenwood Rangerettes notched their 20th victory of the season with a 72-45 bombing of Kermit.

The two games were make-up dates from Friday when snow forced postponement. The Rangers are now 17-7 on the year and 7-1 overall in district play while the Rangerettes are now 20-4 and 8-0.

The Rangers were down to Kermit's boys by 10 points with five minutes left to play, but ended up outscoring Kermit 24-15 in the final period to escape with the victory. Lawson's winning basket gave him 21 for the night, but teammate Randy Donnell led all scorers with 23 points. Greenwood also got 11 points from Kane Harris. Tom Marvin stole the ball from Kermit in the final seconds of the game to keep the Yellowjackets from having a game ending shot.

The game featured nine three-point baskets.

The Rangerettes used a balanced attack with four players in double figures, headed by 17 points from Denisa McMullan. Robbie McCullum had 16, Cheryl Martin 13 and Tina Blackwell 11.

Greenwood will host Crane tonight in a boy-girl doubleheader as district action resumes quickly.

YMCA's Poe places second

From Staff Reports

The Alamo YMCA Sandstormer Gymnastics team recently competed in the San Angelo Tumbleweeds' Class III Optional tournament with Stacy Poe winning a second place in the all-around competition in the 15-up division.

Other teams in the meet were the San Angelo YMCA Concho Pearls, Midland School of Gymnastics, Odessa Twisters and Big Spring YMCA.

Poe won the floor exercise with an 8.75 score to pace the all-around score of 27.85. Hollyn Kinsey placed second in the 15-up vault with a 7.95 while Sonya Matschull was second in the vault with an 8.25 in the 12-14 competition.

M'Lee Ditmore, who hasn't turned 12 yet, competed in the 12-14 age group and scored fourth in the all-around with a 31.50.

9-11: Tina Keathley: 7th in vault, 7.70; 6th in beam, 6.95; 9th all-around, 26.80.

Kelly, WTSU settle dispute

CANYON (AP) — Bill Kelly, fired last month as head football coach at West Texas State, will continue to receive his $4,000 monthly salary for the next two years, his attorney said.

Kelly also will be allowed to teach at the school while seeking another job, attorney Jim Bob Brown said Monday in announcing terms of a settlement over Kelly's dismissal.

Under the agreement, Brown said, State District Judge David Gleason will be asked to determine if Kelly's dismissal was proper.

Although Kelly no longer will serve as the university's head coach, WTSU officials have agreed not to hire a new coach until the matter is resolved by Gleason and by the board of regents, Brown said. WTSU officials can name an interim head coach if they wish.

Under terms of the agreement, Kelly will be paid through January 1990.

Brown announced the agreement Monday morning following a meeting with attorneys for the university.

In courtroom proceedings Monday afternoon, school president Ed. D. Roach testified about differences that led to Kelly's dismissal.

Bruce Grimes, vice president for external affairs, announced Kelly's dismissal on Jan. 29.

"Major philosophical differences between Coach Kelly and the university are such that an effective and compatible working relationship is no longer possible," Grimes said when he announced the firing.

Attorneys for both sides asked the court to rule on whether Kelly is entitled to due process as a faculty or non-faculty member, and whether Kelly may be reassigned while still at the university.

Brown said if Gleason is asked to rule on Kelly's reassignment, he should also rule on whether Kelly can be reinstated as head coach following due process.

During his testimony Monday, Roach said Kelly was reassigned and not fired.

Roach said Kelly repeatedly made public statements he no longer wanted to work at West Texas and that Kelly's applications for other head coaching jobs around the nation embarrassed the university and disrupted its recruitment program.

SMU geared to sign 15 players

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist football technically is dead, but the Mustangs will sign 15 players to scholarships Wednesday and expect an additional 35 to 45 to join the squad in the fall as walk-ons, Coach Forrest Gregg says.

"We have had a tremendous response from young men from around the country," Gregg said. "Our thrust has been geared toward student-athletes in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, but we have had inquiries and been in contact with athletes from all over."

Last year, the National Collegiate Athletic Association slapped the Southwest Conference school with its stiffest punishment after finding SMU had paid athletes to play while it was on probation for similar violations.

After losing its 1987 season to NCAA sanctions — the so-called "death penalty" — SMU voluntarily dropped football for 1988. Meanwhile, the school's athletic director and head coach resigned.

Last month, Mustang football found new life from out of its past when Gregg — an SMU alumnus, pro football Hall of Famer and Green Bay Packers coach — signed on as head coach.

"We had quite a few calls before his taking the job, but since then it's increased many, many times," said associate athletic director Dudley Parker, who served as interim athletic director until Doug Single came on board and who has coordinated football recruiting efforts since last fall.

The second job only involved answering telephone and mail inquiries since under NCAA sanctions, SMU officials are prohibited from visiting recruits or paying for their visits to the campus.

"We can't do anything except give them free tickets if there's a basketball game when they visit," Parker said. "We can't even buy them a Coke."

Even so, he said, SMU has seen "a considerable number" of prospects drop by, mostly from the local area.

"But we've also had them coming in from West Texas and even outside the state, flying in here at their own expense," he said. "We're talking a cross-section of football players. We'd like to think that there are a lot of blue-chippers, and to my mind there are.

"But how do you distinguish exactly at 18 years of age that a kid won't play four years from now because he's gained 30 pounds and grown 6 inches in the last year and maybe doesn't move his feet too well?

"He might be a Forrest Gregg, who comes in here at 185 pounds and ends up playing tackle in the pros for 14 to 16 years," Parker said.

Academics is at least half of the SMU recruiting equation now. In one of his first acts after taking over as the school's president, A. Kenneth Pye last fall decreed that athletes wouldn't be treated differently than the rest of the students in academic entrance requirements.

"I think the parents are really interested, more than I've ever seen before, in their youngsters getting a quality education," Parker said. "We start asking questions ... on academics pretty quick to let them know that is the prime reason they're going to be at SMU, to get an education."

The program also is limited to 15 scholarships during the 1988 season. Some football players can get student aid if they qualify, Parker said, while some parents might foot their sons' bill at SMU, which costs $12,000 to $14,000 a year to attend.

No games next fall also is a recruiting advantage, he said.

"This is a unique situation where a youngster gets a chance to be a regular student, mix with the student body and get to know somebody besides those on his athletic dorm floor," Parker said.

Temple vaults to No. 1

Associated Press

Temple Coach John Chaney knows he's in good company. He's just not sure where.

"I don't think we're better than anybody else that's in the top 20 or the top 35," Chaney said Monday after his club was voted No. 1 in The Associated Press college basketball poll. "I think we're in the company of somewhere between 35 and 40 teams."

Temple, with a 18-1 record, became the fifth team this season to be No. 1 in the AP poll. It's the first-ever No. 1 ranking for the Owls.

Temple jumped from fifth to first with 23 first-place votes and 1,204 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters after a week that saw 13 teams in the Top Twenty lose at least one game.

"The polls do not concern me," Chaney said. "Because to me, what's important is not to be first in February. Being first last is what counts."

SYRACUSE, North Carolina, Kentucky, and Arizona also have been ranked No. 1 this season. There have been six changes in the top spot since Syracuse was voted No. 1 in the preseason poll.

Purdue, 19-2, rose from sixth to second with 16 first-place votes and 1,191 points after beating then-No. 11 Michigan 91-87 on Sunday.

Arizona, No. 1 for six weeks, including the last four, fell to third with 15 first-place votes and 1,162 points, 28 more than Oklahoma, which jumped from seventh. The Sooners, 20-2, beat Kansas and Missouri last week.

Arizona suffered its second defeat in 23 games when it lost a Pacific-10 game at Stanford. It was the first conference loss for the Wildcats.

Pittsburgh, the only other team to receive first-place votes, finished with two and 927 points after beating then-No. 20 St. John's in its only game of the week. Pitt, 16-2, retained first place in the Big East with a 6-1 record.

North Carolina, 16-3, jumped two places to sixth with 905 points, five more than Nevada-Las Vegas. The Runnin' Rebels were second last week, but lost to Cal-Santa Barbara for the second time this season. Nevada-Las Vegas, 20-2, had a chance to take the No. 1 spot after Arizona's loss, but failed, as did Brigham Young, 17-1.

The Cougars, the last major undefeated team in the nation, suffered their first loss of the season Saturday at Alabama-Birmingham and fell from third into a tie for eighth with Duke at 859 points.

The Blue Devils, 16-3, won three games last week, but lost at home to North Carolina State, 77-74.

Kentucky, 16-3, rounded out the Top Ten for the second straight week with 749 points, 48 more than Syracuse.

FOLLOWING Syracuse in the Second Ten were Michigan, Iowa, Kansas State, Bradley, North Carolina State, Vanderbilt, Wyoming, Indiana and Villanova.

Last week's Second Ten was Michigan, Syracuse, Iowa, Georgetown, Vanderbilt, Iowa State, Illinois, Bradley, Florida and St. John's.

Of the five new teams in this week's ratings, only Kansas State hadn't been in the Top Twenty this season. The Wildcats, 14-4, are in first place in the Big Eight and are ranked for the first time since March 1982, when they were also 14th. Kansas State beat Iowa State and Nebraska last week.

"It's an honor for our program, but at this stage it doesn't mean anything," Wildcats forward Mitch Richmond said. "The only time it means anything to be ranked is at the end of the season and that would be to be ranked in the top 64."

North Carolina State, which also beat Virginia last week to improve to 14-4, was ranked 20th for two weeks earlier in the season. Wyoming, which had been ranked as high as fifth before falling from the poll, beat Texas-El Paso and New Mexico last week to improve to 17-4.

Higuera, Hershiser avoid arbitration with contracts

NEW YORK (AP) — Five players, including pitchers Teddy Higuera and Orel Hershiser, agreed to new contracts Monday, reducing the players remaining in arbitration to 44.

Higuera agreed to a one-year contract with the Milwaukee Brewers for $1,025,000, a $690,000 raise. Hershiser late in the day agreed to a one-year contract with the Los Angeles Dodgers for $1.1 million.

Hershiser lost in arbitration last year and had his salary cut from $1 million to $800,000. He had asked for $1,250,000 in arbitration while the Dodgers offered $950,000 and the final salary split the difference. He was 16-16 last year with a 3.06 earned run average.

In other agreements Monday, Sid Fernandez and the New York Mets settled at $580,000, Bob Walk and the Pittsburgh Pirates settled at $450,000 and Dave Anderson and the Dodgers settled at $262,500.

John Franco of the Cincinnati Reds and Tom Henke of the Toronto Blue Jays had their hearings Monday. Two players are scheduled to have hearings Tuesday, Dave LaPointe of the Chicago White Sox and Mike Pagliarulo the New York Yankees.

Higuera can earn an additional $175,000 in incentive bonus clauses, $25,000 for attendance and a maximum of $150,000 for various player awards.

He had asked for $1.25 million and the Brewers had offered $900,000.

The contract makes him the third-highest paid Brewer this season, following Paul Molitor at $1.4 million and Jim Gantner at $1.15 million.

"Teddy has had three fine years. We are glad we were able to negotiate an agreement that satisfied him as well as the club. We look forward to having him with us for a long time," Brewers general manager Harry Dalton said.

COM places second in Austin meet

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The City of Midland Swim Team racked up 358 points here over the weekend to place second in the Longhorn Aquatic Invitational Swim Meet at the University of Texas Swim Center.

Longhorn Aquatic won the meet easily with 912 points. COM outdistanced Space City Aquatics of Pasadena for second. Space City had 268.5 points while Alamo Area Aquatics of San Antonio was fourth with 256.5 points.

"We were extremely pleased with the results," said COM swim coach Brad Swendig. "We've never placed this high in this meet. There were over 30 teams competing."

COM's Matthew Houston won high point honors in the 13-14 boys competition, placing in eight individual events. Fourteen COM individuals and seven relays qualified for the Texas Age Group Championships later this year.

Chaps dominate NMSU tourney

From Staff Reports

LAS CRUCES, N.M. — Midland College ran roughshod over the field in winning the New Mexico State University Men's Tennis Tournament.

The Chaparrals defeated host NMSU 6-0 and then whipped Odessa College 8-1 in Sunday matches to close out three days of action.

Because of an abbreviated schedule, the MC-NMSU doubles weren't played. The Chaps lost only four matches in defeating all five opponents in the field. They beat UT-El Paso 9-0, New Mexico Military 7-2, and Northern Arizona University 8-1 during the first two days.

MC served notice that they are the team to beat in the men's division of the Western Junior College Athletic Conference as they knocked off New Mexico Military 7-2 and Odessa 8-1. Those three schools are the only ones fielding men's teams this season.

Sophomore Johnan Dysholm got to Las Cruces Saturday night from Minneapolis, where he had played two days in the Rolex Small College National Championships. Although he normally plays the top singles spot, he played at number two against NMSU and then moved back to number one against Odessa, winning both outings.

The Midland College men now are 12-1 for the season.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Go "first class" in business and you will attract the customers you need to succeed. Economic trends bear careful watching. Stick to tradition at home, but try new methods in the workplace. Adapting to high technology now could help you save something very precious. Treat partner with greater respect. Ignoring someone's suggestions or doubts would be a big mistake. Polish your management skills. Romance thrives on tenderness.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Robert Wagner, opera star Leontyne Price, singer Roberta Flack, comedian Jimmy Durante, playwright Bertolt Brecht, actress Dame Judith Anderson, Russian novelist Boris Pasternak, pitcher Billy O'Dell.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Practice self-control so your emotions work for you instead of against you. Angry outbursts will be considered unprofessional by those you hope to convince. If someone you love needs you, go to them.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your ability to get the best out of others puts you in line for a leadership role. You can only achieve greatness if you eliminate negative influences from your life. Stand firm.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Meet your responsibilities willingly and on time. Climb a career mountain until you reach the pinnacle. A good day to launch a self-improvement project. You feel inspired by another's example.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Open the windows of your mind to fresh ideas. You will need to be very innovative to solve a job problem. Stop rejecting the outstretched hands of people who want to help you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You feel up to almost any challenge today. You should be able to make the kind of grand entrance you love at an evening social event. Romance moves into a new mode.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Take your ideas right to the top. Refuse to accept "no" for an answer. Romance is about to blossom. Singles feel headed for lasting happiness. Creative work fills your spare time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Early morning obstacles can be overcome to make this a fulfilling day. Take time out to attend to household repairs. A relationship can be strengthened if you are willing to make a commitment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) A lack of pressure means that you will be able to plan your day. Tackle piled-up paperwork. Loved ones show consideration if you work from home base.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Find new outlets for your natural talents. Do not be afraid to speak your mind. Opportunities to make your projects more valuable are there for the taking. A love relationship intensifies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Look for less complicated schemes for making money. The less you rely on other people, the better. Re-examine your plans and prospects, especially those that are wide-ranging. Welcome a visitor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Employment matters may not run as smoothly as you would like. You need to set some new priorities. Get better organized. Discard outmoded methods.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Teamwork is helpful in handling distant affairs. Make efficient use of the telephone to avoid expensive business travel. Guard against forgetfulness today.

A bastion of male chauvinism has fallen! New York's bridge club of renown, the Cavendish Club, has elected it's first woman president, Mrs. Claire Tornay.

A tournament player of considerable skill and a former national titleholder, Mrs. Tornay sat South on this deal from a recent tournament. North's single diamond raise was strong and forcing, and South's jump to four diamonds, by partnership agreement, was Key-Card Blackwood, in which the king of trumps counts as an ace. When she learned that one key card was missing, Mrs. Tornay settled in the small slam.

West led a top-of-nothing spade, solving declarer's problem in that suit. At first glance it might seem that the fate of the contract hinged on the trump finesse. However, declarer realized that a strip and end play, combined with the possiblity of dropping a singleton king of trumps, offered a better chance.

She captured the queen of spades with the king and cashed the ace of trumps in the hope of felling the king. When the monarch failed to appear, declarer cashed the high clubs and ruffed a club in hand, crossed to the ace of spades and ruffed another club. The jack of spades was cashed to complete the strip of the black suits, and declarer exited with a trump.

Whichever defender held the king of diamonds would be forced to return a heart to avoid giving a ruff-sluff. Had that defender been East, declarer would simply have had to hope that he was leading away from the king of hearts. As it was, West held the trump king and when he shifted to a heart, declarer was faced with a nasty guess. We might have been inclined to play dummy's queen, but women's intuition triumphed—South inserted the ten from the table and, when East produced the king, the slam was home.

Fighter Mike Tyson marries

NEW YORK (AP) — Undisputed heavyweight boxing champ Mike Tyson scored a knockout with actress Robin Givens: He married her.

The marriage took place in Chicago after Sunday's NBA All-Star Game, which Tyson attended, said Jimmy Jacobs, the 21-year-old boxer's co-manager.

Jacobs said Monday the marriage to Miss Givens, who appears in the ABC-TV series "Head of the Class," won't affect the training schedule of Tyson, who fights Tony Tubbs in Japan on March 21 and has an agreement to fight Michael Spinks sometime in June.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A compromise between "Dynasty" star Joan Collins and ex-husband Peter Holm headed off a trial this week over the former Swedish rock star's demand for a half-million dollar divorce settlement.

"Joan and I faced the facts and we both decided 'Let's call this mess quits,' " said Holm, who contended he could have gotten more money from Miss Collins but it wasn't worth the effort.

The settlement was announced Monday by attorney Marvin Mitchelson, who represents Miss Collins, in the court where Holm's claim to spousal support from his ex-wife would have gone to trial Wednesday.

The actress agreed to pay Holm $180,000 and give him a $40,000 car, and he gave her back a half interest in a house in the south of France.

Miss Collins, 54, and Holm, 40, married in 1984 and split 13 months later.

Burnett

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Carol Burnett, whose dramatic acting skills were showcased in a movie about alcoholism, plans to take her sobriety message to the Soviet Union, along with her daughter, actress Carrie Hamilton.

Miss Burnett, who grew up in a home where alcoholism was a problem, is studying Russian so she can speak at the Soviet-U.S. Joint Conference on Alcoholism and Drug Addiction in late July, said organizer J.W. Canty III, an Episcopal priest.

Miss Burnett's topic will be alcoholism as a family disease, which was the subject of her television movie "The Life of the Party — the Story of Beatrice."

Miss Hamilton, 23, had drug and alcohol problems but has been sober for six years, Canty said.

LONDON (AP) — The Pet Shop Boys won the British record industry's 1988 best-band award, while former Wham! star George Michael was named best male artist and Alison Moyet was honored as best female star.

The Boys, Neil Tennant and Chris Lowe, who rose to fame with their songs "West End Girls," "It's A Sin" and "Always on My Mind," won over the Bee Gees, Level 42 and Def Leppard in Monday's ceremony at Royal Albert Hall.

The best British single award went to Rick Astley for "Never Gonna Give You Up," and best album award to Sting for "Nothing Like the Sun."

Michael Jackson won the award for best international solo artist and Ireland's rock group U2 was named best international group.

New Order took best music video with "True Faith" and Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Phantom of the Opera" won for best film or theatrical soundtrack.

Albert

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Prince Albert, heir to the throne of Monaco, is lending a touch of royalty to the Winter Olympics in the unroyal sport of bobsledding.

Begun as a raucus diversion for big-bellied beer drinkers in the Alps and in upstate New York, bobsledding has evolved into a high-technology sport, with aerodynamic sleds that zip along the ice-walled hairpin course at 85 mph.

"You feel the air and you feel the speed and you're sort of hit by every corner," he said Monday. "It's all going pretty fast in front of you, but you know where you are at all times."

The 29-year-old son of Prince Ranier and the late Princess Grace is one of the youngest members of the International Olympic Committee. He also is the only active committee member competing in the Games and the first since Finnish yachtsman Peter Tallberg in 1980.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Steven Spielberg's movie "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial" will be released worldwide as a videocassette in time for Christmas, then withdrawn from the market, MCA Home Entertainment Group announced.

The movie, which grossed a record $700 million at the box office after it premiered in June 1982, was re-released in the summer of 1985, but has not been available to the public since then.

Leary

CINCINNATI (AP) — After a dozen years on the lecture circuit, Timothy Leary, the best-known advocate of the hallucinogen LSD in the 1960s, says he has no regret that he gave up respectability to become a drug guru.

Leary, fired as a Harvard University psychology professor in 1963 because of his drug experiments, is scheduled to lecture Wednesday at a Cincinnati nightclub.

"I like being a philosopher who can make a modest living by going into strange cities and inviting people to come to a club for an evening of fast-moving talk and ideas and outrageous concepts," said Leary, 67, in an interview Monday in the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Panama shuts down large radio network

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — The government shut down one of the country's largest radio networks after it broadcast interviews with opposition figures calling for a general strike to demand the removal of Gen. Manual Antonio Noriega as military chief.

An opposition newspaper, La Prensa, said La Exitosa was closed down Monday evening by the Justice Department because it broadcast the opposition interviews.

The closure was the third such action against news media in as many days.

In telephone interviews today, officials at the government's News Media Bureau said they knew nothing about the action against La Exitosa. No one answered the telephones at the main offices of the radio network.

The pro-government newspaper La Estrella reported Radio Chiriqui, a small privately-owned station in Chiriqui province, near the Costa Rican border, was also shut down by police Monday night.

Officials at the News Media Bureau also said they did not have any information on Radio Chiriqui, and the telephones at the provincial radio station went unanswered.

Sunday, the police searched the newsrooms and printing plant of El Siglo, an opposition newspaper, and the government ordered it closed.

Noriega, meanwhile, continued his criticism of the United States, charging that the presence of the U.S. Southern Command in the Panama Canal Zone impedes Panama's development and threatens the nation.

Noriega, who was indicted in Florida for drug smuggling, did not say in a nationally broadcast speech Monday night what measures might be taken against the U.S. military presence.

The general, who heads Panama's Defense Forces, is the power behind the government of President Eric Delvalle.

About 10,000 U.S. troops make up the Southern Command, the nerve center for all U.S. forces in Latin America. They have about 30,000 dependents.

Earlier Monday, the officer corps of the armed forces urged Delvalle to order the command out of the canal zone. The military accused the United States of trying to divide it and secure indefinite control of the Panama Canal.

The command is located in the canal zone, over which the United States maintains sovereignty until the year 2000. U.S. troops would not be compelled to comply with any order from Delvalle to leave.

"We reject the Southern Command as a military directorate or leadership inside another territory," said Noriega. "The command constitutes another point of aggression against the Republic of Panama."

The speech was taped earlier Monday as it was delivered to the chiefs of staff and ranking officers of the army and police force.

He said U.S. bases on the canal "converts Panama into a target on the list of its (the U.S.') enemies."

The solution to the country's problems, he said, should be pursued through elections scheduled for 1989.

Noriega claimed U.S. authorities indicted him because they "cannot any longer use invasions or the policy of the big stick or that of the iron fist."

In its communique, the military officers claimed the continued presence of the Southern Command was not contemplated by treaties signed in 1977 by former President Jimmy Carter and the late Panamanian leader Gen. Omar Torrijos that commit Washington to turn control of the canal over to Panama by 2000.

Friday, Army Gen. Frederick F. Woerner Jr., head of the Southern Command, said the Reagan administration had been trying to encourage democracy in Panama without threatening direct U.S. intervention.

In an interview broadcast Sunday on CBS' "60 Minutes" program, Noriega claimed the drug indictments stemmed from his refusal to cooperate with a U.S. plan to invade Nicaragua.

He said he was asked about the plan at a meeting in December 1985, with John Poindexter.

Waldheim knew of atrocities, international commission says

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — President Kurt Waldheim knew about Nazi wartime atrocities and aided them by following orders while a lieutenant in the German army, an international commission has concluded.

The six-member government-appointed panel also found there was no evidence Waldheim committed Nazi war crimes, but said his assertion that he did not know about the fate of Jews deported from Greece was "not believable."

Waldheim, a 69-year-old former U.N. secretary-general, has repeatedly denied any wrongdoing during his World War II service in Hitler's army. After meeting with the commission Monday, he told Austrian television he was happy that the commission chairman said "there is no kind of guilt on my part."

However, a copy of the report's conclusions obtained today by The Associated Press said Waldheim had a "deep and comprehensive insight" into the bloody campaign the Nazis waged in the Balkans, where thousands of civilians were shot or deported between 1942 to 1945.

During that time, Waldheim served as a German army lieutenant in the Balkans.

The panelists said they found no case in which Waldheim opposed "an order to do something he undoubtedly recognized as unjust."

"On the contrary, (Waldheim) repeatedly went along with unlawful acts and thereby made it easier for them to be carried out," the report concluded.

The report said "a certain guilt" can emerge from knowledge of violations of human rights "if the person concerned — out of lack of strength or courage — violated his human duty to take steps against injustice."

"Such steps on Waldheim's part have not become known," the 10-page conclusion said at another point.

"In many points," the report said, "Waldheim's presentation of his military past is not in harmony with the results of the work of the commission. He tried to let his military past pass into oblivion and, as soon as this was no longer possible, to make it harmless."

Commenting on Waldheim's role, the report said he was "certainly more than a second-rank 'desk officer.'"

Waldheim was often present at important meetings with his superiors and took an active part in discussions, the report said.

"Thus his general insights were comprehensive. They related not only to tactical, strategic and administrative orders, but in some cases also included actions and measures which contradicted military law and the principles of humanity."

But, Waldheim countered in the Austrian television interview: "To deduce that knowledge constitutes some kind of crime is simply not correct."

"The report shows that during the war, I wasn't involved in any kind of war crimes actions," the president said after meeting with the head of the historians' commission, Hans Rudolf Kurz. Waldheim said he felt the report would have no political repercussions.

There was a 90-minute delay in giving the full report to the government Monday, leading to speculation it was blocking release of the document.

A Greek adviser to the commission, Hagen Fleischer, said the Austrian government tried to get the panel to tone down the 200-page report's conclusions. He told Austrian radio the pressure came too late to have a major impact.

The World Jewish Congress also said the Austrian government pressured the commission, and it contended the pressure was successful.

The World Jewish Congress, which spearheaded the public campaign to expose Waldheim's wartime activities, said the Austrian government forced the panel to remove references to Waldheim's "moral guilt."

Foreign Minister Alois Mock, a Waldheim supporter, denied applying any pressure.

But, in an impromptu talk with reporters, Mock vigorously asserted the commission had overstepped its bounds and dealt with matters of opinion.

"I reject that part, that is opinion," Mock said, declining to elaborate.

Yehuda L. Wallach, the Israeli member of th panel, told an Israeli television interviewer the material the commission collected could be used as a basis for legal proceedings against Waldheim.

"There is no doubt that Waldheim knew about orders that violate international law," Wallach said. "There is no doubt that he transmitted such orders." He would not elaborate.

"Catastrophe," was how Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal described the report's consequences for Austria.

Church of England rejects plan to end anonymous letter

LONDON (AP) — Leaders of the Church of England today rejected a proposal to stop publishing an anonymous church commentary despite the suicide of a theologian who lambasted their spiritual leader, Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie.

The latest commentary, a preface to Crockford's Clerical Directory, sharply criticized Runcie and accused of him being too liberal and indecisive.

The policy-making General Synod of bishops, clergy and laity voted 250-200 against a motion to halt publication of the preface in the directory, a list of Anglican clergy published by the church every two years.

The synod took no action on another motion to lift the anonymity of the preface's author.

Bishop of Guildford Michael Adie noted there was strong sentiment for abandoning an anonymous preface. Discussion time for the agenda item expired before action was taken, however.

"Conflict is often a sign of vigor. But we do not need an anonymous preface to ensure criticism and conflict," he said.

The 66-year-old Runcie, leader of 70 million Anglicans worldwide, including 3 million U.S. Episcopalians, was accused in the commentary of weak and ineffectual leadership.

No injuries, damage reported in strong Mexico City quake

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Authorities say there were no reports of injuries or damage from a strong earthquake that shook Mexico City.

People rushed out of buildings and traffic stopped, mostly in the south side of the city where the 30-second earth tremor at 7:52 a.m. Monday was felt strongest. But many others said they did not even feel it.

The quake measured 6.0 on the Richter scale, according to a report by the National Autonomous University's Tacubaya seismological institute. It located the epicenter at 17.66 longitude north and 102.17 latitude west, in the Pacific Ocean 187 miles southwest of here.

The tremor was felt throughout the coastal state of Guerrero, which includes the resorts of Acapulco and Ixtapa-Zihuatanejo, and in the states of Mexico and Morelos, but authorities there also reported no damage or casualties.

"We have sent out a helicopter to fly over the city and check, but the people in it have reported no damage or anything abnormal," Marco Antonio Gonzalez, a dispatcher at the Red Cross in the capital, said in a telephone interview.

At least 9,500 people were killed in the September 1985 earthquake disaster that devastated large sections of the capital. A "great quake" measuring 8.1 on the Richter scale on Sept. 19 was followed by a second quake measuring 7.6 on the scale, the next day.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph.

Every increase in one number means that the ground motion is 10 times greater. A quake of magnitude 6 can cause severe damage.

Israeli soldiers kill Palestinian teen-ager

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Palestinian teen-ager was shot to death in a clash with Israeli soldiers, and villagers claimed a Jewish settler fatally shot an Arab man with a submachine gun, news reports said today.

The army confirmed the deaths and said it was investigating their circumstances.

Latif Abu Khalil, 16, was killed by Israeli soldiers during a protest Monday night in the West Bank village of Atteel, the Arab-run Palestine Press Service reported.

In another West Bank village, Kafr Qaddum, a Palestinian man was killed Monday. The news agency identified the victim as Abdel Basit Abdullah, 25, and quoted villagers as saying he was shot by a Jewish settler.

The army did not say whether a settler had been involved but it said security forces were not in the area at the time.

The Jerusalem Post quoted witnesses as saying they recognized the assailant as a Jewish settler from nearby Kedumim. They said he drove into the village in a blue Volkswagon van accompanied by another man, who carried a pistol.

Witnesses told the Post the driver got out and opened fire with a submachine gun when he encountered a roadblock set up to block Arab laborers from going to work in Israel.

An army spokeswoman said the case was turned over to police for investigation. The Nablus District police spokesman was not in his office to provide details about the incident, and National Police refused comment.

An official who answered the phone at the Jewish settlement of Kedumim said he knew nothing about the shooting.

Army officials have said confrontations between Arab protesters and the West Bank's 65,000 Jewish settlers could further escalate tensions.

"If there's something that worries me very much, it's that Jewish residents will take it upon themselves to punish or provoke (Arab protesters)," Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, the West Bank's army commander, told Israel radio. "It's the most dangerous thing in the field today."

According to U.N. figures, 51 Palestinians have died at the hands of Israelis, most shot by soldiers, since disturbances began in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip on Dec. 8.

Meanwile, U.S. envoy Richard Murphy arrived today for talks with Israeli leaders on how to start a peace process with the Arabs.

Israel Radio reported Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir rejected Foreign Minister Shimon Peres' suggestion that the two meet jointly with Murphy, who arrived from Cairo after visits to Syria and Saudi Arabia.

State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said Murphy's mission was to bring about "early face-to-face negotiations to resolve the problems" between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

Bernard Mills, the British director of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency in the Gaza Strip, claimed Monday that soldiers on Sunday beat Iyad Mohammed Aql, 15, who was later found dead, and Aql's cousin, who suffered a broken arm.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Americans claim abuse

RAMALLAH, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Eight Americans have accused Israeli troops of abusing them, and most said the U.S. passports or other American identification they provided offered them no protection.

One of the eight is a young man of Arab origin who went to the U.S. consulate with a bleeding scalp, U.S. officials said.

"We've recorded these complaints and forwarded them to Washington. Some cases have been brought up with Israeli officials," said David Good, spokesman for the consulate in Jerusalem.

Israeli soldiers have been trying to suppress two months of rioting in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

A senior Israeli officer showed a reporter his handwritten orders telling soldiers to refrain from "behaving violently towards foreign citizens," noting that there are many American citizens among the Arab population.

American officials estimate 8,000 of the 850,000 Arabs in the West Bank are U.S. citizens. The 65,000 Jewish settlers include some 8,000 Israeli-Americans.

Mob attacks police station

MASAYA, Nicaragua (AP) — A crowd stoned this town's police headquarters and a Sandinista Youth office and burned at least two cars when Sandinista soldiers began rounding up young men to serve in the army.

Witnesses said at least 150 people took part in Monday night's attack on the police station. Interior Minister Tomas Borge said six were detained.

Radio Sandino, voice of the leftist Sandinista National Liberation Front, said two people were hurt by stones.

The burned-out chassis of two vehicles were visible near the police station in Masaya, a town located 20 miles southeast of Managua. The streets were littered with stones and broken glass.

The Interior Ministry sent about 200 security troopers in camouflaged uniforms, who took up posts around the city.

Demjanjuk defense begins

JERUSALEM (AP) — The defense in John Demjanjuk's Nazi war crimes trial began its final arguments today, accusing the prosecution of failing to prove its charges and of violating judicial procedure.

Israeli lawyer Yoram Sheftel compared the state's case against Demjanjuk to a "dry, barren desert gully devoid of substantiating evidence."

Earlier, a smiling Demjanjuk, dressed in a gray suit, waved and blew a kiss to his wife, Vera, 63; his daughter, Irene Nishnic; and his son, John Jr., 22.

Rabbi takes seat in House of Lords

LONDON (AP) — A rabbi who fled Nazi tyranny as a teen-ager donned robes and took his seat in the House of Lords today as the first chief rabbi of Britain to be ennobled since Jews were formally allowed to resettle in England in 1656.

Rabbi Immanuel Jakobovits, who turned 67 on Monday, is not the first Jew to sit in the unelected upper house, but he is the first holder of high Jewish religious office to be thus honored.

Jakobovits took the title Baron Jakobovits of Regent's Park in Greater London, referring to the area where he lives.

The solemn ceremony of ennoblement strictly followed tradition laid down in the 17th century upper house of Britain's Parliament.

The tall, goateed rabbi entered the gilt-ceilinged chamber wearing his skullcap and the red cloak trimmed with ermine designating him as a baron.

He was flanked by Lord Young of the Conservative Party and Lord Mischon of the opposition Labor Party, two Jews selected for the ceremony to highlight Jakobovits' desire to be seen as a nonpartisan peer.

After taking an oath "to be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II," on the Old Testament, Jakobovits took his seat on the chamber's crossbenches, signaling himself as an Independent.

Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, spiritual head of the Church of England and a friend of Jakobovits, was among the Anglican prelates attending the ceremony.

Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Apvner was in the public gallery, along with many of the chief rabbi's relatives and prominent members of Britain's Jewish community.

As a lord, he joins some 1,200 peers who are entitled to make speeches on issues of the day and vote on legislation.

Tips for good-looking wood from Zubiate's

Richard Zubiate, of Zubiate's Furniture Restoration, is a meticulous worker who can restore your damaged furniture to its original beauty.

Hidden treasures found in that old attic need not stay hidden any longer. Bring that piece of history into Zubiate's and receive in return a piece of furniture any homeowner would be proud of.

"In restoration work what you should try to do is leave the work as much like the original as possible," Richard explained. "Then you only replace the parts that have been damaged or may cause problems later on."

There are also things you can do at home to keep your furniture looking its best. Richard Zubiate supplied these tips on how to keep your wood looking good:

"Stay away from silicone-based wax products," Richard advised. "Over time these products will dissolve the finish on your wood, leaving it sticky and unable to keep a shine."

Richard suggested using an emollient paste wax every three or four months, or as needed. "Most of the spray polishes have the silicone base," Richard said. "If you do use a spray, never apply it directly to the wood surface. Spray or pour polish onto dust rag." The liquid tends to centralize in the spot sprayed, whereas when applied to rag, the polish is spread more evenly over surface of the wood.

"The purpose of a polish or spray is to cut down on static, allowing you to pick up more dust," Richard pointed out. "The wood should never look oily - that's when the polish is eating through the finish to the wood."

A paste wax will give the wood a shine, while preserving the finish and wood from scratching, finger prints, water and soiling at the same time.

"Use an old t-shirt or bed linens for a dust rag," Richard suggested. "These materials are very soft, with nothing to scratch the wood. Keep the rag in a can and before storing spray a bit of polish inside, then put the cap on. When the rag becomes dirty throw it away."

You may have a new piece of furniture that has suffered damage. Zubiate's Furniture Restorations can repair those wobbly chairs or that scarred coffee table that you shopped hours to find.

If you have furniture that needs restoration call Richard Zubiate at 682-5773 or go by 1611 E. Taylor today.

Restoring your furniture to "like new" condition is the goal at Zubiate's Furniture Restoration. Paul Zubiate is shown working on an armoire which the owner had found stored in an attic. One side of this heirloom piece had been misplaced over the years, but thanks to Zubiate's, no one will be able to tell which is the replacement and which the original. For more information on how Zubiate's Furniture Restoration can restore your precious antiques or brand new furniture, call 682-5773.

The only place with more fun for kids is Dimension Cable.
They call the circus "the greatest show on earth." And it's a place that offers lots of fun for kids. But there's one place that offers even more fun.
Dimension Cable.
On Dimension Cable you'll find hundreds and hundreds of programs created specially for kids. Every month. And not only are they fun, but they're educational, too.
For quality and variety, it's pretty hard to match The Disney Channel. It offers programming that's certain to delight every kid in your household.
Just as delightful are the original programs on Nickelodeon, an entertaining and educational channel that's exclusively for kids. Plus, the USA Network has great stuff for kids, after school and on weekends.
On Dimension Cable there's something for everyone, no matter what the age. Quite simply, it's the best home entertainment value around.
With Dimension Cable, you can find more to watch under your own roof than you'd ever find under a big top.

TO ALL INTERESTED PERSONS AND PARTIES

Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S. Inc., as Agent for Mobil Producing Texas & New Mexico Inc., has made application with the Texas Air Control Board for Permit No. C-18466 to modify the acid gas flare by combining the acid gas stream with the main flare gas stream and abandoning the acid gas flare at their Pegasus Gas Plant in Midland County, Texas. The proposed location is approximately eighteen and one-half miles south of Interstate 20 on FM 1788. This facility modification proposes to emit the following air contaminants: Sulfer Dioxide, Hydrogen Sulfide and Natural Gas Hydrocarbons.

A copy of all materials submitted by the applicant is available for public inspection at the Texas Air Control Board, Odessa Regional Office, at 1901 East 37th Street, Suite 101, Odessa, Texas 79762, telephone (915) 367-3871 and at the Texas Air Control Board, 6330 Highway 290 East, Austin, Texas 78723. All interested persons may inspect these materials and submit written comments to the Executive Director of the Texas Air Control Board. Any person who may be affected by emissions of air contaminants from the proposed facility may request a contested case hearing from the Board on the Construction Permit Application, pursuant to Section 3.271(c) of the Texas Clean Air Act. All comments and hearing requests must be received in writing by March 11, 1988. All written comments submitted to the Executive Director shall be considered in determining whether to issue or not issue the permit. All comments will be made available for public inspection at the Texas Air Control Board office in Austin.

★ JOBS ★
U.S. POSTAL SERVICE

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT...MIDLAND AND ALL AREA POST OFFICES STARTING WITH THE ZIP CODE OF 797 HAVE JUST RECEIVED AUTHORIZATION TO ACCEPT APPLICATIONS FOR THE CLERK-CARRIER EXAM IN MARCH.

A recent issue of Newsweek magazine noted that the average Postal worker earns $27,500 in salary and benefits. Men and women, regardless of age or experience are eligible to apply. Courses to help you prepare for the above exams will be offered by Postal Exam Workshops. Instructors Larry Herman and Bill Harold are considered by many to be the most qualified on how to gain employment with the Postal Service. These exams do not test general knowledge, proper preparation is the key to getting hired, because people are hired for these positions based on their exam score. The easy to learn techniques taught in these courses were designed by Mr. Harold. He is a former Postal employee, the author of 3 Postal Exam Guides, and has repeatedly scored 100% on Postal tests.

3 HOUR WORKSHOP: SCORE 95-100%

GUARANTEE: The time saving and accuracy-increasing methods taught in this course are so powerful that we will enter into a written agreement.
*You will score 95% or higher or your money will be refunded.
*If you do not receive a job application/interview within 90 days of your score, your money will be refunded.

WORKSHOP TUITION is $30 and includes the guaranteed workshop, workbook, interview hints, study guide with 25 complete take-home exams, follow-up program kit, personal notification of future application dates, and more...WANT TO RELOCATE? We offer the free Postal Alert Bulletin giving you postal exam dates nationwide. You are invited to bring your tape recorder to record the workshop for personal review.
