Afghanistan says guerrillas shoot down airliner

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The communist government of Afghanistan claimed Saturday that guerrillas shot down an Afghan airliner with a U.S.-made missile, killing all 52 people on board.

The Afghan announcement accused the United States of being responsible for the attack and sharply denounced America.

Kabul Radio, the Afghan government station, said in a broadcast monitored in Islamabad that the airliner was shot down Wednesday as it was climbing after taking off from Kandahar Airport in the west of the country. The plane plunged to the ground and exploded, the radio said.

All 47 passengers and five crew aboard were killed in the crash, the radio said.

The plane belonged to Bakhtar Afghan Airlines, the country's domestic airline, and was on a flight from Kandahar to Farah province in the north, the report said. The type of plane was not identified, but the airline is known to use mainly medium-size, Soviet-made propeller planes.

Afghan guerrilla groups based in Pakistan said they knew nothing of the report and did not know if an airliner had been shot down at Kandahar.

"We know nothing of this. We will have to check," said one senior guerrilla official, who insisted on anonymity.

Earlier Saturday, Hezbi-i-Islami, one of the main anti-Marxist, Islamic guerrilla groups, issued a statement saying its forces had shot down a Soviet military transport plane while it was taking off from Kandahar Airport on Aug. 28. The plane was shot down with a missile and the entire Soviet crew was killed, the statement said.

That would have been nearly a week before the airplane downing reported by Kabul Radio.

A Hezbi-i-islami spokesman said he could not comment on whether the incident reported by his organization could be the same as that reported by Kabul Radio.

The Afghan broadcast said that the United States armed and trained the guerrillas and was the power behind their war against the Afghan government.

"The atheist bandits, the wage earners of the United States of America and Pakistan, once again have committed another inexcusable crime," the broadcast said.

It said the reported attack with an American-made missile was proof that the U.S. government was behind the guerrillas.

The radio said the insurgents and the Americans were resorting to such cowardly attacks because they could not take on the Afghan security forces in battle.

The communist government is battling the guerrillas with the aid of an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops. The guerrillas receive covert aid from the United States, China and several Arab nations.

The U.S. government officially refuses to say if it gives weapons and other supplies to the guerrillas.

Guerrilla leaders acknowledge privately that they do receive sch aid.

Soviet military forces intervened in neighboring Afghanistan at the end of 1979, overseeing the ouster of a Marxist government in Kabul and the installation of another Marxist government which leaned more toward Moscow.

The United States has repeatedly denounced the Soviet intervention.

Jet engine pieces found on runway

■ Witness describes crash scene — Page 2A

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Investigators probing the crash of a Midwest Express Airlines jetliner that killed all 31 people aboard found pieces of an engine on the runway used by the ill-fated jet, a federal official said Saturday night.

The parts from a Pratt & Whitney JT8D engine, the type of engine that was on the DC-9, were found under the flight path of the jet that crashed and burned just after takeoff Friday, said James Burnett, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board.

The twin-engine jet's voice recorder, which initially was feared to be heavily damaged in the fiery wreck, was intact and would provide an account of what happened in the cockpit during the last minutes of Flight 105, Burnett also said.

One witness said he heard a loud noise and saw the plane's right engine aflame before the jet, en route from Madison to Atlanta via Milwaukee, plunged nose-first into the ground.

Workers conducted a sweep from the runway to the crash site about half a mile away, and found the parts Friday and Saturday, said Burnett.

"We have found some parts of a JT8D engine, which is the type of engine that is on the accident aircraft," he said. "However, we cannot be sure at this point that these parts came from an engine on the accident aircraft.

Investigators found parts of a compressor blade and other parts that are "clearly identifiable as from a JT8D engine," Burnett said.

"They could have come from some other prior engine failure. And we won't be able to establish that until we're able to actually tear into the engines. That will required moving them to a facility where that can be accomplished."

He said the voice recorder, the so-called black box, "will have a recording of the proceedings in the cockpit as well as a lot of instrument noises, engine noises, things like that that are very valuable in the

Apartheid on its way out, say South Africa natives

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

■ Two white men attack mob; Guns becoming commonplace in South Africa — Pages 4, 9A

"If South Africa goes, we can kiss the continent good-bye."

In this statement, Clarence Chandler summed up the reasons why he and other Midlanders, including some who are native South Africans, oppose the economic sanctions proposed by the United States against that country. The situation of blacks against whites, segregation (commonly known as apartheid), and no voting power by the blacks may sound similar to the situation the United States encountered in the Civil War and the civil rights movement in the 1960s.

In some ways it is, they said. In the history of events leading up to the unrest today, though, it differs.

Blacks are calling for the end of apartheid and institution of one man-one vote, like the United States has. Apartheid is on its way out, said the Midlanders, but putting in the one man-one vote rule overnight will kill South Africa.

Nicole and David Willcox, 4489 Hackberry, and Lola Igou were raised in South Africa. They befriended Clarence and Dana Chandler, Jim and Paula Henry and Steve and Sally Melzer, and talked so much of the wonders of their homeland that the Midlanders visited South Africa during the summer.

Economic sanctions will hurt the blacks more than the whites in South Africa, according to the Midland residents. If South Africa falls, they added, it will mean a takeover by the Communists. That, in turn, will hurt the United States, which needs South Africa for its strategic military defense posture and for precious minerals, some of which are used in the defense program.

"If the United States would leave it (South Africa) alone and let them work out their problems, it may not be to our liking but it would be to everyone's advantage," said Chandler.

"If they got rid of apartheid tomorrow, there would be some backlash, just as there was here in America," said Willcox."But the one man-one vote rule would be the end of the country. The country couldn't survive. The blacks don't have the education to run a sophisticated

Students will learn how to run a business

By JULIE HILLRICHS

In the coming months, area high school social studies students will learn to mind their own business. Literally.

It's all part of new pilot program, sponsored by Junior Achievement Inc., that is designed to teach young scholars basic economic principles and the value of free enterprise.

Applied Economics was developed and incorporated as an 18-week supplement to economics courses for high school juniors and seniors. It is taught along with the regular curriculum and utilizes a common text, computer resources and a business consultant.

Program manager Robert Smith said the consultant, a local corporate executive, visits the class during one period each week while students participate in the formation and operation of a company and utilize the computer both in the company and for management simulations.

The result or final reward is "profit," he said.

Dr. Robert Carter, coordinator of social studies and foreign language with the Midland Independent School District, said MISD will implement Applied Economics as a pilot program on a "try-out basis."

Training astronaut visits Odessa museum

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

ODESSA — More than 200 Permian Basin residents were treated to a first hand discussion about NASA and the space shuttle program Saturday when Commander Manley "Sonny" Carter, an astronaut in training for upcoming space shuttle flights, met with the group at Odessa's Presidential Museum.

The visit was in conjunction with the exhibition, "Aeronautics and Space: The NASA Story," which ended Saturday at the museum.

Carter, 38, joked with children and discussed some of the peculiarities of the space shuttle as well as explaining little-known facts about the orbiter itself, before presenting a NASA film of recent missions.

"There's three very important words that you can go look up in the dictionary," Carter said to several children sitting in the front row. "Weight, mass and inertia. After you look them up, go ask your parents to explain," he quipped.

Carter answered questions for the group, explaining how astronauts trained for weightlessness by flying in a plane "up and down at very steep angles;" showed how even the simple act of opening a door in space would result in the astronaut spinning off and reiterated recent news coverage of space crew antics, such

A Milwaukee County sheriff's deputy puts some personal effects recovered from the crash site of a Midwest Express Airlines DC-9 into a plastic bag in Milwaukee Friday.

First thing man saw at crash site was woman in flames

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The first thing Dave Kobylinski saw when he ran to the site of a Midwest Express Airlines jet that crashed just after takeoff was what appeared to be a woman screaming inside a circle of flames.

"It looked like a lady," said Kobylinski, 24, of Greenfield. "She looked like she was in a (airplane) seat."

Kobylinski, who works for a company at Gen. Billy Mitchell Airport, said he tried to help the woman but the flames engulfed her.

"I couldn't get close to the fire," he said. "If I had had a blanket I would have gotten in there. Then I couldn't see in there anymore.

"I wanted her to live, but I couldn't get to her."

Jack Schroeder was driving near the airport when he saw the DC-9 begin its nosedive.

"It seemed to stall out and then very, very slowly, the wings began to tilt," he said Saturday in an interview from his Sheboygan home. "It took a nosedive and took two or three spins. Then it hit and there was a delay of about 10 or 15 seconds and then there was an explosion of flames that went hundreds and hundreds of feet in the air."

Crash victims wait years for compensation

EDITOR'S NOTE — The suspicion that wind shear contributed to the bouncing crash of a Delta Air Lines jumbo jet outside Dallas on Aug. 2 brought to mind another airplane tragedy in which wind shear took the blame — the crash three summers ago of Pan Am Flight 759 into homes and backyards in Kenner, La. As regional writer Scott McCartney reports, many relatives of the 154 Pan Am victims cannot put the disaster behind them — they are still awaiting compensation for their loss.

By SCOTT McCARTNEY

KENNER, La. (AP) — All that remains of Robert Giancontieri's home is a muddy lot, vacant but for street litter and strands of stringy Louisiana swamp weeds. Nothing remains of his family.

His wife and three sons were among the 154 people killed when Pan Am Flight 759 slammed into his suburban neighborhood on July 9, 1982.

Giancontieri still struggles with the memories, and although a jury awarded him more than $3 million, he has yet to collect. Federal appeals courts have sliced his compensation in half, saying that his wife's love, for example, was not worth nearly what jurors thought it was. His case remains on appeal.

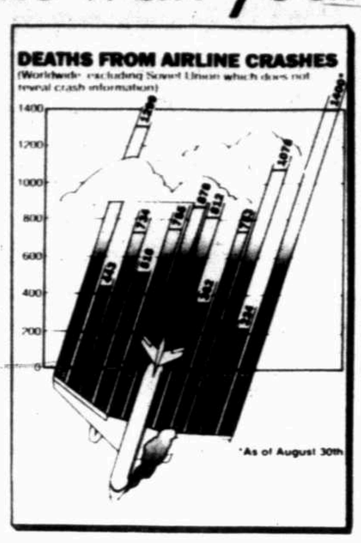

"It's amazing. It's been three years since the date he lost his wife, his kids, his house and everything but the clothes on his back, and he hasn't got a dime," said William Credo, one of Giancontieri's attorneys.

Three years after Pan Am's Boeing 727 plunged to earth in a thunderstorm wind shear, about 30 percent of the more than 125 lawsuits filed remain on appeal and unpaid. At least 12 have yet to go to trial, according to attorneys involved and a check of court records.

Federal courts have sliced almost $10.2 million from the $26.5 million juries have awarded so far. And despite the $5.5 billion asked for in the mountains of suits, the average price put on a life by juries has been just $409,600.

Lawyers say the families of victims of the Delta Air Lines crash near Dallas last month face a similar long, discouraging wait if they pursue their claims in court rather than settle with the airline and its insurance carrier.

"THE PEOPLE who had family on that Delta airplane don't know what they're in for," said Heyward Jeffers, an employee of the Louisiana state Senate who lost his mother on the Pan Am flight. "Those people have got a long road ahead of them. It's a very trying time."

The Pan Am and Delta cases share not only the same likely cause — violent winds — but also the same insurance carrier and the same appeals court. The 5th U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans, which also has jurisdiction over Texas' federal cases, has placed itself at the center of a developing legal debate by trying to limit the size of cash awards to crash victims.

"The trend seems to be to set some maximum limits," said New Orleans attorney Wendell Gauthier, who was involved in 62 Pan Am cases and already has several Delta clients.

"I'm concerned that the Delta people could be in an awkward position because of Pan Am," he said.

Robert Giancontieri was moving up the ladder at the local Pepsi-Cola bottling company and had been lured away for a better position at rival Coca-Cola. He was turning in his company car to Pepsi on July 9, a Friday, when someone said they had heard a plane had crashed in Kenner.

The Giancontieri house on Hudson Street was directly below the flight path for Runway 10 at the New Orleans International Airport. He telephoned home. No answer.

Giancontieri sped home, following a fire truck the final few blocks. He reached the scene so quickly that a police officer grabbed him, asked him if he had been on the plane and put him in an ambulance, according to court testimony.

AFTER BREAKING away from the ambulance, Giancontieri continued his search in the fiery rubble of more than three blocks and finally found where his house had been. There was nothing left but the concrete slab foundation and a camera containing the last pictures of his children — on a July 4 family outing.

Today, Giancontieri cannot yet talk about the tragedy, his attorney said. He still works for Coca-Cola, and has remarried.

"For three months he went through a bout with alcoholism and became suicidal," Credo said. "His behavior ever since has exhibited a planning-to-fail attitude. He's impulsive and feels like he always needs to be home to protect his family."

Jurors had said Giancontieri should receive $1.5 million for the loss of his wife's love, affection and companionship, $400,000 for the loss of each son, and other compensation for a total of $3.1 million.

U.S. Aviation Underwriters, which manages airline policies for several insurance companies, appealed the $3.1 million award to federal Judge Charles Schwartz Jr., who cut it by $600,000.

Pan Am's insurers appealed again, this time to the 5th Circuit. On Aug. 12, a three-judge panel of the 5th Circuit reduced the award to $1.5 million.

Citing a case from the crash of an Eastern Airlines jet in New York, the 5th Circuit ruled "$500,000 for the loss of love and affection of the wife and $250,000 for the loss of love and affection of each child are the maximum amounts which may be awarded in this case."

"I THINK some of the judges in the 5th Circuit have established maximum amounts in their consciences," said Gauthier, who also worked on the Giancontieri case.

Giancontieri's attorneys now will ask the full 5th Circuit to review the case. If that fails, they must either accept the reduced award or appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"He's somewhat surprised that the judicial system is not more responsive to the needs of victims," Credo said of Giancontieri. "He's disappointed in the judicial system."

The four children of Everard and Mary Ann Marks, who were killed on the plane, received a $5.2 million award from a jury, only to have it cut to $2.4 million on appeal.

Of the 200 or so claims from the crash, more than one-third were settled without going to court, attorneys said. At least 125 suits were filed (court records show more than 300 case numbers, but many duplicated earlier cases), and more than 80 of those were filed by families of the 154 dead.

OF THE 125 suits, at least 66 went to trial and received verdicts almost always higher than what the insurance company had offered for settlement; 47 were settled, and about a dozen await trial this fall. Approximately 40 of the verdicts remain on appeal, according to court records.

Because questions were raised about air traffic controllers' handling of Flight 759, Pan Am and the Federal Aviation Administration agreed in May 1983 not to contest liability for the accident. Since then, the federal government and the insurance carriers have split payments to victims' survivors.

Pauline Carter was in the front room of her house across the street from the Giancontieris' when the plane cartwheeled through the neighborhood.

"I ended up in my backyard and I have no idea how I got there," she said. "The Giancontieris' house was in my house, and everything was on fire."

Mrs. Carter settled out of court, and Pan Am paid to rebuild her home on the same lot. Of the 12 homes destroyed in the crash, the six that were rebuilt were owned by people who chose to settle. Four of the six vacant lots were targets of court battles.

"Pan Am couldn't have been nicer. They said to pick out whatever kind of house we wanted," she said. "They were fair with us."

Sunken pirate ship yields more than gold

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — The pewter spoons recovered from a sunken shipwreck off Cape Cod last week are as valuable as gold doubloons to historians because they provide a rare glimpse into the way pirates lived, an archaeologist said Saturday.

Treasure hunter Barry Clifford recovered pewter eating utensils and a dozen navigational tools Friday along with a swivel gun, a gold ring, about 2,000 silver coins and some small gold bars from a wreck he believes to be the Whidah, a pirate ship that sunk in 1717 in shallow waters off Wellfleet.

The treasures were just the latest of many recovered by Clifford, 39, and his eight-member crew.

Clifford did not answer his home and office phones Satuday, but Robert Cahill, former head of the Massachusetts Board of Underwater Archaeological Resources, said he was convinced the wreck was the Whidah and he estimated the worth of the entire treasure at $400 million.

"The value when the ship went down was estimated at the time at $4 million to $5 million, and with inflation it's much more. One silver coin Barry found was said to be worth $30,000," Cahill said Saturday by telephone from his Salem home.

Cahill, who left the state board in January after heading it for 10 years, got a glimpse of some of the treasure last December, when Clifford brought up 600 silver coins, a cannon and a broadsword, among other items.

But the navigational tools and pewter utensils brought up Friday were just as exciting because they told much about life on an 18th-century pirate ship, Cahill said.

"The navigational tools are a big find. There is a lot of treasure, but the great find is finding things that pertain not only to sailing but to pilots, what they used at the time.

"It wasn't until 1820 that ships really got into what we consider sophisticated navigational tools, so prior to that it was catch as catch can," he said.

Clifford and his crew covered 64 feet of the 100,000-foot site Friday in the first week of recovery after a summer spent preparing the site by the Army Corps of Engineers "to make sure the stuff stays where it landed when the ship sank," Cahill said.

He said the Army Corps put a coffer dam on the site and pumped water out to create a dry space for divers to collect items with care and log where they came from.

Divers blew 15-foot holes in the sand and suctioned layers of gold dust into plastic bags, where strands of gold ran through the wet sand "like chocolate through ripple ice cream," Cahill said.

He said he didn't know how much Clifford spent on the recovery, "but he spent a lot. He's got a great salvage vessel, some of best divers, one of the best nautical archeologists and the best equipment."

Clifford told the Cape Cod Times the ship may hold up to 1 million doubloons, but he said his principal interest was to raise and preserve the wreck.

Prosecutor plays 'Rambo' to poke fun at probe

SUTTON, W.Va. (AP) — A county prosecutor says he posed "just like Rambo," cinema's alienated veteran who will take on anyone, to satirize an investigation he considers politically motivated.

His face is painted dark and a feather juts from the back of a headband. The caption quotes him as saying, "Just like Rambo, I'll defend against the judges alone if necessary."

West Virginia's 14th Circuit Court ordered an investigation last month into the prosecutor's role in the sale of property owned by a man who had been declared mentally incompetent. A court official who refused to be identified said the inquiry was to see whether the sale was in the man's best interest.

Douglas said he came up with the idea of the Rambo pose after seeing Sylvester Stallone's movie, "Rambo," in which a Vietnam veteran goes on a violent rampage across the Asian country.

"I got to thinking about the movie — I've taken my son to see it and I've seen it twice myself," Douglas said. "He's such a focus right now."

Artificial heart patient receives human heart

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Doctors transplanted a human heart Saturday into the chest of Michael Drummond, the youngest man to receive an artificial heart, after the Jarvik-7 pump kept him alive for nine days.

Drummond was in critical but stable condition after receiving the heart of a 19-year-old accident victim in a four-hour, 45-minute operation, said Dr. Jack Copeland.

The surgeon put Drummond's chances of surviving for a year at 75 percent to 80 percent and of surviving for five years at 50 percent.

Drummond was wheeled into the operating room at 11:30 p.m. Friday after a medical team in Texas notified Copeland the heart of Tarro Griffin was compatible for a transplant.

At 2 a.m., doctors opened Drummond's chest and, at 2:28 a.m., a helicopter landed at University Medical Center with Griffin's heart carried in a red-and-white ice chest.

"The timing was just about perfect," Copeland said at a news briefing after the surgery.

Doctors removed the Jarvik-7 heart in six minutes and started to attach the human heart at 2:40 a.m. Drummond was on a coronary bypass machine until 4:13 a.m., when the donor heart took over. Surgery was completed at 6:45 a.m.

"We had to wait a considerable amount of time waiting for the bleeding to stop," Copeland said. "There was more bleeding than we had hoped for, but when we closed the bleeding seemed to be in control."

The surgery marked the first time the Jarvik-7 has been used to keep a patient alive until a human donor heart could be found for transplant. Five previous implants were intended to permanently sustain lives.

"I think if Mike does well and survives that this will have an impact on the use of the Jarvik-7 or other artificial heart devices in transplants," Copeland said. "The whole point of all this is to prolong life. For people who have bad hearts, there is a device now that can substitute for the heart."

"We're very excited," Copeland said. "We're happy that things have worked out well so far. But, I don't believe anyone on the team would really claim to have achieved (artificial heart) bridge to transplant unless the transplant is successful...We know we face days and weeks in the face of rejection and other complications."

Asked about Drummond's feelings as he entered the operating room, Copeland said, "Mike seemed to have a normal response, I think, to what was going on. He has a very strong will to live. He showed a lot of spirit and courage and, at the same time, he admitted fear."

Dr. Cecil Vaughn, a cardiac surgeon who assisted in the operation, said he spoke briefly with Drummond before surgery.

Vaughn said Drummond told him, "I guess the whole hospital's pulling for me." Vaughn replied, "How about the world?"

Drummond's parents, brother and two sisters were all "very happy, smiling and tired from sitting up all night," Copeland said.

The primary concern immediately following the implant surgery Aug. 29 was infection from the Jarvik-7, which was driven by a compressor.

"For a week, he was tied to the outside world with two lines or two tubes which could be a source of infection," Copeland said. But he said there was no immediate evidence of infection.

When the Jarvik-7 was implanted, Drummond was within 16 hours of death, doctors said.

The timetable for his transplant was escalated after Drummond suffered a series of tiny strokes Thursday morning, and Copeland said he feared further problems if the artificial heart was not replaced immediately. All other Jarvik-7 recipients have suffered strokes.

Dole predicts certain 'mayhem' in Congress

By EVANS WITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, predicting "it's going to be mayhem around here," says Congress will be so busy this fall with legislation on South Africa, school prayer, immigration and trade that there won't be time to pass President Reagan's tax reform package.

"I don't want to the be the fly in the ointment on tax reform, but you just look at all the issues we have piled up here," Dole said in an interview last week with The Associated Press. "I don't know when we'll get to it this year."

It was the Kansas Republican's most negative statement thus far on prospects for passage of tax reform in 1985 — the centerpiece of Reagan's agenda in the opening year of his second term.

But Dole added that Reagan might be able to speed things up with his "fall offensive" pushing the measure.

"The president's...got a lot going for him," Dole said. "He can get out there and stir the pot a little bit and put the heat on Congress."

As the Senate prepared to reconvene Monday after its August recess, Dole laid out a schedule loaded with bills, possible filibusters and cloture motions and many long days of work.

"Without a doubt it's going to be mayhem around here...in a legislative sense," he said.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole

The first item on the Senate agenda Monday is a compromise bill imposing economic sanctions on South Africa because of its policies of racial segregation. Dole said he expects a quick vote to shut off a filibuster by conservatives and then passage of the bill.

The Kansas leader said he didn't know if Reagan would veto the measure — as White House aides have indicated — but warned such a veto might be overriden.

"He'd have to switch a lot of votes," Dole said. "I doubt there will be 12 votes against" the compromise bill.

Dole voiced his own doubts about the bill. "It may be a big issue in Congress," he said. "If you go out to your state, you'd have to put it on a list to get asked about it."

"My own view is that the bill really isn't that strong, that it probably wouldn't damage South Africa that much if it were passed," Dole said.

Dole also continued to express doubts about Reagan's push for tax reform this year. Asked if he heard a public clamor for tax reform during the recess, he exclaimed: "Clamor? I mean it's dead silence...I think people have other things on their mind."

The GOP leader said House Democrats will try to win political points by blaming Senate Republicans if a tax bill doesn't pass. Dole promised to act on any House bill, but said the Senate would have to receive one by the third week of October for action this year.

The August vacation tempered Dole's rhetoric about the Reagan White House, at least compared to the heated exchanges in the final days of the summer session.

"We're certainly going to work with the president where we can and hopefully they will work with us where they can," Dole said. "We're just trying to be players in this game. We don't want to be force-fed by anybody."

Here is what Dole said on other matters:

— Farm bill.

Dole refused to commit himself on the shape of the new long-range farm bill due for action this month. But he said Congress has a better grip on the politics of the issue than the White House.

— Deficits.

Dole continued to harp on the dangers of huge federal deficits and said he found similar concerns back home among the voters.

"I still think that is the sleeper out there," he said. "It's hard to articulate in a political way. I think there is a lot of frustration about why we haven't dealt with it."

— Social Security.

Dole disclaimed any interest in leading future efforts to trim Social Security, after being slapped down by Reagan in a similar effort earlier this year.

"I don't have any plans to meddle with it. Sooner or later, entitlements have to be put in the pot.

Crop-duster sprays school bus with toxic chemicals

SALINAS, Calif. (AP) — A crop-dusting airplane accidentally sprayed a school bus with fungicides and a toxic insecticide, sending 32 elementary school students and three adults to the hospital, authorities said.

The bus passengers were taken to King City's Mee Memorial Hospital for tests Friday after the bus was sprayed with the insecticide Monitor and the fungicides Ridomyl and Kocide.

Six children suffered illnesses ranging from abdominal pain to nausea, and one adult complained of a burning sensation in the mouth, authorities said.

The shuttle, which returned from a week-long satellite repair mission in space Tuesday, left Edwards at 6:30 a.m. PDT perched atop the modified jet, said Don Weinberg, a National Aeronautics and Space Administration official at Kennedy.

Discovery's schedule called for a noon CDT arrival at Kelly Air Force Base near San Antonio, where it was to stay overnight until departing for Florida at 7:15 a.m. CDT Sunday, Weinberg said.

The shuttle will arrive in Florida about 11:30 a.m. EDT Sunday, he added.

During the recent mission, Discovery's space-walking astronauts fixed the lifeless $85 million Syncom 3 communications satellite and launched three other satellites for commercial customers.

The orange box protecting the voice recorder was crushed at one end. "Although (the recorder) is damaged, we do have a functioning tape," Burnett said.

Witnesses said the jet seemed to roll twice about 1,000 feet above the ground shortly after taking off from Gen. Billy Mitchell Airport, then crashed and burst into flames south of the runway.

Burnett told a news conference it appeared the jet's starboard engine had ceased running shortly before impact in the woods. The engine parts, however, were found on the left side of the runway, he said.

The runway would be closed temporarily, probably today, during a hunt for other clues to the cause of the crash, Burnett said.

The engine parts, he said, were found about 7,000 feet from where the plane began its takeoff on the 9,600-foot runway. Liftoff should have occurred about 4,000 feet after the plane started rolling, he said.

"It seemed to stall out and then very, very slowly, the wings began to tilt," witness Jack Schroeder said Saturday in an interview from his Sheboygan home. "It took a nosedive and took two or three spins. Then it hit and there was a delay of about 10 or 15 seconds and then there was an explosion of flames that went hundreds and hundreds of feet in the air."

Midwest Express president Timothy Hoeksema said the airline would resume service Sunday with its two remaining DC-9s, and said it was negotiating with another airline to lease a plane to replace the one that crashed.

The crashed DC-9 was manufactured in 1967 and was among three that Midwest Express bought from the Venezuelan airline Avensa in January 1983, Hoeksema said at a news conference.

"It's not like a car, if you bought it in 1967," Hoeksema said. "Aircraft are continually inspected and updated and components are regularly replaced according to a certain number of engine cycles or flight hours."

The airline's two remaining planes were being inspected, he said.

The Federal Aviation Administration conducted a routine inspection of one of the three planes on Wednesday, said Hoeksema, but he was unsure which jet was checked.

The flight data recorder was recovered Friday night.

Burnett said both recorders had been sent to Washington on a government plane for examination.

as allowing one's orange juice to flow out of the cup into a "ball shape" and then taking bites out of it.

Carter, holding a scale model of the space orbiter, showed the group how the vehicle is steered with reactionary control jets and how the shuttle returns to earth without burning up in the atmosphere.

"Those heat tiles on the back will protect the orbiter from up to 3,000 degree temperatures," he said. Shown in the film were views seen from the cockpit of the space shuttle upon take-offs and re-entering earth's atmosphere. Carter explained what was occurring during the entire film from the vehicle's launching to touchdown at Edward's Air Force Base in California.

Carter, a former Navy pilot, joined NASA in 1984 after logging 1,700 flying hours and 160 carrier landings in a jet aircraft. Although he has not flown in the space shuttle yet, he has just completed a rigorous training and evaluation program to qualify as a mission specialist for upcoming flights.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

He graduated with a bachelors of arts degree in chemistry from Emory University in 1969 and went on to earn a doctorate of Medicine from Emory in 1973. In July, 1974, he entered the U.S. Navy and completed flight surgeon school in Florida. In 1979, he was reassigned as a fighter pilot to duty, flying F-4 phantoms with Marine Fighter Attack Squadron 333.

Carter has received the Air Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Navy Achievement Medal, Meritorious Unit Citation, Stephen Decator Award 1981 and Marine Corps Aviation Association Special Category Award this year.

"We're very excited and quite honored that Sonny was able to take time out of his busy schedule preparing for his mission on the space shuttle to be part of the museum's special program," said Valerie Christensen, director of the Presidential Museum. "We had our fingers crossed that NASA would be able to send an astronaut to Odessa."

"Meet a Real Astronaut," was part of the museum's special programs planned in conjunction with the exhibition, "Aeronautics and Space," a collection of 85 color photographs which document the history of NASA.

Lawmaker: Loss of incentives disaster for industry

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

"It's almost a lead pipe cinch that depletion is gone, and the industry will have a real challenge to retain intangible drilling costs." That was the warning Dallas Congressman John Bryant, Democratic represenative from the Fifth District of Texas, gave to Midland oilmen this weekend at a fundraiser on his behalf.

He said the removal of these drilling incentives would prove a disasterous blow to the Texas oil and gas economy, reducing drilling by as much as 30 percent.

President Reagan's Tax Simplification proposals, introduced earlier this year, originally called for the elimination of both percentage depletion and intangible drilling costs as tax incentives for the drilling of oil and gas wells, but were later amended to retain IDC's and reduce depletion. Bryant thinks opponents of the oil and gas industry will attempt to make the original proposal the standard.

"We're in a situation now where we have a surplus of oil in the marketplace, and its hard to convince Washington that we need to get out and look for more oil and gas," he added.

The congressman said Texas, however, could count on the support of nearly all the Texas delegation to work actively for the industry to retain its drilling incentives.

"This is not a conservative-liberal issue, but a regional issue," said Bryant. "There are the seeds of a real compromise between the energy producing states and the high tax states such as New York and California. They need to retain the deduction for their state tax, and we need to retain drilling incentives."

Bryant said there was about a 50-50 chance the industry would lose on the intangible drilling costs in the Ways and Means Committee of Congress, and a 60-40 chance it would lose if it had to go to the floor of the House. He added that if the White House really got behind the industry, it stood a good chance of winning, but if it stood on the sidelines, and gave the impression that its Treasury II proposal to retain IDC's was just a political ploy, it would certainly lose.

Said Bryant: "The ego of Dan Rostenkowski (Chairman Ways and Means Committee) will play a big role in the outcome of this tax reform package. He is determined to be the author of this compromise legislation, and he will do whatever it takes to make it (tax reform bill) fly."

A member of the Fossil Fuels Sub-Committee, Bryant said he was also concerned about the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's (FERC) proposed rule to make natural gas pipelines common carriers.

He said the proposal looked good for independents to sell gas but it had inherent dangers. He listed the dangers as the right of utilities to reduce contracts by 25 percent per year, and a dual billing formula which would cause gas buyers to take older, cheaper gas first, thus penalizing those who explore for the more expensive new gas.

Bryant said he didn't think FERC should have the authority in the first place to require pipelines to become common carriers, but if something were going to be done in this regard it might be better to do it administratively, since a rider to re-regulate natural gas might be attached to any legislative remedy.

Two white men fire on mob; White school firebombed

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Two white men fired on a mob brandishing sticks in a mixed-race township near Cape Town, killing one man, and arsonists heaved a fire bomb into an empty white school, police reported on Saturday.

Also near Cape Town, police officers and soldiers ringed the black township of Guguletu, where an estimated 6,000 mourners attended a funeral for 11 young blacks killed during clashes with police.

Police reported in addition on Saturday that police fatally shot two black youths late Friday in separate incidents in Ciskei, a black homeland on South Africa's southern Indian Ocean coast.

Among the dead at Saturday's mass funeral was a two-month-old girl, said to have suffocated in a blast of tear gas Aug. 28. Only two of the 11 dead were older than 20.

There were unconfirmed reports of new violence after the funeral. Guguletu residents said gangs of youths set up flaming barricades across nearby roads.

Mandela, generally acknowledged as leader of South Africa's black majority, has been in prison for 21 years, serving a life term for planning sabotage.

AFRICA

country. It's the white man's fault for not putting enough money into education and the black man's for not wanting it."

Unlike the United States where the dissention came from one group of blacks, South Africa's blacks are divided into 14 tribes, Willcox said. Often the riots start with one black tribe fighting another tribe.

"It's tribal warfare," said Chandler. "Granted, they're having problems in the black townships with high unemployment. It's the teenagers out there that start the rioting and pelting cars."

The Zulus, led by Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, form the largest tribe with 6 million people, which compares to the white population of 5 million, according to the Aug. 5 edition of Time magazine. But Buthelezi isn't following the radical line of rioting that other black tribes are, according to the Midlanders who talked with citizens of that country and the Aug. 5 Time article. He, instead, is calling for compromise and negotiations and is urging other foriegn powers not to adopt economic sanctions against his country.

The most vocal blacks are members of the African National Congress, which the Midlanders said is a Communist-backed group. Henry produced a copy of the July 21, 1985, edition of the Sunday Times newspaper which published a photograph of what was described as black church leaders in front of the Soviet flag.

Other than the issues of apartheid and voting, blacks also are protesting the release of Nelson Mandela, a leader of the ANC who has been imprisoned since 1962 on charges of attempted sabotage and treason. Willcox said South African president P.W. Botha offered Mandela his freedom if he would promise not to use violence in trying to gain black rule. Mandela refused. "Botha said they could have tried Mandela for treason and executed him. Instead, they gave him a life sentence."

South Africa is the last country on the African continent where the government is run by whites and the Midlanders pointed to the results in other African nations when the blacks took over the government. Rhodesia, now Zimbabwe, was their example.

The entourage flew to the country that once was known as "the garden spot of Africa." It now follows the Communist form of government, the group insisted. At Victoria Falls Hotel, they discovered that even though the menu listed a wide variety of food, some of it wasn't available. The rooms included a "beautiful console, but no TV," said Melzer. "At some point, the TV quit working and it was never fixed."

"And Zimbabwe hasn't gone as far back as Mozambique," added Willcox.

The group pointed out that South Africa is America's only ally on the African continent and thus is in a strategic military position for the U.S. It also supplies most of the U.S. needs in platinum and vanadium. South Africa has 86 percent of the world's reserves of platinum, the Soviet Union has 13 percent. South Africa has 64 percent of the world's vanadium; Soviet Union has 33 percent, according to a report from one of the Midlanders.

Henry talked with a South African named Bob Carl Noffke who had lived in Washington, D.C. seven years to lobby for his country. He gave the Midlanders a comparison of South Africa with Canada, since both countries have the same amount of population, but South Africa has one-fifth the gross national product.

Much of South Africa's revenue comes from the sale of Kruggerands and foreign investments, according to Henry. Chandler said the group was told the country gets $550 million a year from the sale of Kruggerands, and with half the country's budget dedicated to providing services for the blacks, it will be those same people who will suffer the most from the economic sanctions.

"In visiting with the people of South Africa we found they're concerned about the future of their country," said Chandler. "But they want orderly change."

The issues of apartheid and voting are cover-ups for the underlying movements to spread Communism, they contended. The South African natives said they have watched as one country after another has fallen to Communist-supported black rule.

"What we would like to see is orderly change to a completely fair system where apartheid concepts are gone and the one man-one vote rule is in. But to think it will happen tomorrow or next year, we're naive. Their problems are so foreign to us," said Melzer.

And even the South African natives have a hard time understanding the country in which they were raised, according to Willcox.

"South Africa is very difficult to understand, even for someone who lives there," said the Exxon employee. "In two weeks there, you can't begin to grasp what South Africa and Africans are all about."

BUSINESS

Two programs will be implemented at Lee High School during the first semester while another will begin at Midland High School during the second semester. Greenwood Independent School District and Midland Christian School also are expected to incorporate similar programs into their high school social studies classes.

According to Carter, the Texas Education Agency endorses Applied Economics as a supplementary program only. "It's not a TEA approved course. Rather, it is a supplement to the regular social studies curriculum."

Carter said class topics to be covered by the program include: Income, production, role of labor, competition, government's role in the economy, taxation, monetary and fiscal policies and other economic systems.

In addition, consultants invited into the classroom to address one or more of these particular topics, will provide a businessman's view of the economy and advise the class in their simulation activities.

For instance, whenever the company, or firm, is discussed in marginal analysis theory, that theory will be supplemented with a simulation game that uses computers to illustrate the supply and demand theories and the consultant will share his or her experiences concerning the same topic, Carter said.

He added, MISD requested that the consultant chosen be someone from upper management who could discuss budgets and the effects of taxation, the government's role in the economy and the possible relationships to world trade, if indeed the company has overseas operations or sells products to foreign countries.

Senior program manager Steve Spackman, said business consultants are present in the classroom to "help the teacher expand on topics they've talked about in class" and to "correlate how this theory of supply and demand effects business in Midland." Consultants do not replace the teacher in the classroom.

According to Smith, the success of the program is documented statewide.

In general, most teachers believe that Applied Economics is more interesting to teach than regular economics, but that it also is more difficult and time-consuming to implement, Smith said.

He added, over 50 percent of the teachers indicate their opinions toward the business community had been affected positively because of teaching Applied Economics and that many students "come in during their off-period and try to utilize the concepts."

Arzell Ball, superintendent of the Richardson Independent School District, said RISD has been actively involved in the Junior Achievement Applied Economics and its sister program, Project Business, for the past eight years.

"We consider these programs to be excellent and found that students who take the courses learn first hand the values of the Free Enterprise System," he said. "These enriched programs greatly enhances our program offering in the social studies department, as we adjust to and implement the state mandates, House Bill 246 and 72."

PLANE

Kandahar has been the scene of some of the worst fighting of the war and much of the city has been badly damaged. The city airport is held by Soviet and Afghan government forces and used as a military airbase.

Afghan refugee sources in Islamabad suggested the plane might have been a military transport or carrying government officials because airline services have been severely disrupted by the war. Ordinary travelers going in and out of Kandahar must depend on vehicles, they said.

Another indication that the plane may have been a military aircraft or on a government mission was the report that it was flying to Farah province. There is no large civilian airport in the province, but it is the site for Shindand, the largest Soviet military air base in Afghanistan.

Afghanistan has claimed guerrilla attacks on its airliners in the past. The Kabul government said a DC-10 airliner with 308 people aboard was hit by a guerrilla missile Sept. 21, 1984. The plane, which was also taking off from Kandahar, managed to make an emergency landing at Kabul, the government said.

At the time the government also charged that American-made weapons had been used in the attack.

Angry songwriter wants to raise money for boy with AIDS

KOKOMO, Ind. (AP) — A singer-songwriter, outraged at what he terms the "absolutely disgusting" way residents have acted toward an AIDS-stricken boy who was barred from school, says he will produce a song to raise funds for the youth's treatment.

Alex Tiensevu, of Fair Lawn, N.J., has written a song called "A Little Boy's Dream: Ryan's Song," about the plight of 13-year-old Ryan White, who was barred from classes at the Western School Corp. in suburban Kokomo.

Tiensevu said the song's message is summed up in this line: "When our broken hearts appear beyond the point of mend, God usually sends our way a very special friend."

"The friend is anyone who buys a cassette" recording of the song, which will be distributed privately, Tiensevu said Friday.

Ryan, a hemophiliac, contracted AIDS through a blood transfusion. School officials said they feared other children would contract the deadly disease from the boy. Meanwhile, Ryan receives seventh-grade instruction through a telephone link with his classes.

AIDS, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a usually fatal affliction that destroys the body's immune system. It is believed to be caused by a virus and apparently can be spread by sexual contact, contaminated hypodermic needles and blood transfusions, but not by casual contact. Some children of mothers with AIDS may be born with the disease.

Last week, the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said each child with AIDS should be evaluated individually but that most should be allowed to attend school. The CDC said the benefits would outweigh "the apparent nonexistent risk of transmission."

In New York City on Saturday, a Board of Education panel ruled that one of four children with AIDS who have sought admission to the city's schools should be allowed to attend this fall.

Two others should receive instruction in the hospital, and the fourth should find some other means of education because the child has been interviewed and identified on television, and might face social discrimination in school, the panel said.

Ryan was released Friday from Riley Hospital for Children in Indianapolis after being hospitalized since Monday night with a cough and a fever. His mother, Jeanne White, said Ryan attended Bruce Springsteen's sold-out concert in the Hoosier Dome Friday night.

Tiensevu said his cassettes will sell for $5, with 80 percent of the proceeds going to the Friends of Ryan White Foundation, a trust fund established by Tiensevu. The other 20 percent of sales will go to covering production costs, he said.

Tiensevu said he wants to raise at least $50,000 to help Mrs. White finance treatment for the boy.

"But ideally I'd like to come to Kokomo some day and hand Jeanne a check for $250,000 or more. I want badly to come there with a six-figure check, enough to hire a private tutor for Ryan," Tiensevu said.

Mrs. White said she approved of Tiensevu's efforts and added, "Who would have thought Ryan would have touched so many people?"

Tiensevu is angry at Kokomo's lack of support for a charity established last spring, the Ryan White Foundation. Ryan's case of AIDS was diagnosed last December.

NATION IN BRIEF

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — Damage from this city's worst flood was estimated Saturday at more than $10 million after torrential rain collapsed basement walls, swallowed cars and forced some people to swim from their homes.

City crews slogged through standing water and cleaned up debris left by Friday morning's flood that followed more than a foot of rain in some areas.

The downpour flooded 10,000 homes, 20 percent of the city's residences, said William Ewing, city water and sewers director. No serious injuries were reported.

"I saw automobiles with just the tops sticking out," Ewing said Saturday.

Residents of 40 water-drenched homes evacuated because of the flood had returned home by Saturday morning, said city spokeswoman Valerie Reaves.

Ewing said only isolated pockets of standing water remained in the aftermath of up to 12.25 inches that fell in some areas of the city during an eight-hour span Friday.

Fraud lands man in prison

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A man accused of bilking 61 people of nearly $1 million by getting them to invest in a non-existent gold-mining venture was sentenced to eight years in prison.

Nelson Radabaugh, 62, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., received the maximum term Friday. Originally charged with 61 counts of grand theft, Radabaugh pleaded guilty July 18 to 10 counts in a plea bargain arrangement.

Most of the investors were "high rollers, anyway," said defense attorney Roy Gunner

But San Diego Superior Court Judge Kenneth Johns said, "Even if it's true that these were high rollers or gamblers, they were betting on this venture and were still entitled to house odds, (but) this was a rigged game from the beginning."

Girl missing for 10 years

MIAMI (AP) — One of the city's most-baffling missing persons case hit another dead end in Texas last week, but the parents of the teenager who vanished more than a decade ago say the news isn't too upsetting.

A detective and a Miami dentist, hoping to find Amy Billig, who has been missing since March 5, 1974, flew to Vernon, Texas, on Friday to examine an exhumed body of a young woman.

They determined through dental records, however, that it wasn't Miss Billig's body.

The Billigs say they believe their daughter, who was 17 at the time of her disappearance, was abducted by a motorcycle gang that rumbled through Miami. Miss Billig was last seen walking down a Coconut Grove street on the way to her father's art gallery.

Law mandates child care

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Mayor Dianne Feinstein has signed an ordinance requiring some office developers to provide child care services in new or renovated buildings.

"We are absolutely thrilled," said Abby Cohen of the Child Care Law Center in San Francisco. "It's a great day for parents."

The measure, to take effect in 30 days, affects development outside downtown and requires developers of new or rehabilitated office space of at least 50,000 square feet to pay $1 per square foot into a child care fund, or to build a child-care facility on the property.

"I believe this is a basic solution to getting people to work and to stay off welfare, particularly where there is just a mother and children," said Feinstein, who signed the ordinance Friday.

VA finds suspect doctors

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Veterans Administration said Saturday it has identified 87 doctors with licenses that have been revoked, suspended or restricted in some way who are working at VA facilities.

VA spokeswoman Donna St. John said the agency has given administrators of its hospitals until Sept. 20 to report back on the circumstances and to explain why the doctors are still working for the VA.

The names were turned up in a check of records of state medical boards, conducted by the Federation of State Medical Boards, Ms. St. John said.

The VA inspector general's office referred the cases to a credentials committee that will make a recommendation on each doctor to the VA's chief medical director, Dr. John Ditzler.

Why has Farm Credit System soured?

By JIM DRINKARD

WASHINGTON (AP) — For decades, the Farm Credit System has been a government success story, paying its own way as it provided the money that helped make the United States a world leader in agriculture.

Why, then, have things turned sour for the nation's largest farm lender?

Causes range from the system's loose organization and overzealous lending practices during the 1970s to a lack of adequate regulatory controls. But leading the list is the severe recession in the farm economy, now in its fifth year and with little prospect for relief in sight.

After months of keeping a stiff upper lip, the system's top regulatory official last week admitted that Farm Credit needs government help within the next two years to stay afloat.

"This is the most severe crisis the Farm Credit System has faced since the Depression days," Donald E. Wilkinson said, adding that the system had exhausted all internal remedies.

The announcement was frightening not only to farmers, 1 million of whom depend on the system for cash to buy land and supplies, but to the many investors who have bought Farm Credit bonds believing they were nearly as safe and dependable as those issued by the U.S. Treasury.

The system is quasi-private in nature, and its notes are not federally guaranteed.

The Farm Credit System dates back to the early 1900s, when farmers had difficulty getting long-term land mortgages from town and city banks that preferred to put their money in short-term investments. In 1916, the government stepped in, provided seed money and set up land banks patterned after successful similar banks in Europe.

UNITS TO make shorter-term operating loans and to provide money to farm cooperatives were set up in subsequent years, and by 1933 the system looked much as it does today: a network of 37 banks in 12 regions, each with its own board of directors. Hundreds of smaller production credit associations and land bank associations in each district process loans and deal directly with farmers, and they have their own local boards.

The laws establishing the system provided for no central cash reserve or administrative coordination, and there was no provision for outside audits.

"There have been a lot of mistakes made by many groups, including Congress," said Rep. Cooper Evans, R-Iowa, who has introduced legislation aimed at remedying many of the system's problems.

Special tax benefits conferred by Congress and the perception that the system was a protected child of the government have made it dominate farm lending since its inception. The system's financing arm in New York has been able to sell bonds at only 15 to 20 basis points above the interest rate commanded by Treasury securities (A basis point is one-one hundredth of a percentage point). It now holds more than one-third of the $212 billion U.S. farm debt.

In 1968, the system paid off the last of its government money and has operated entirely with private funds since then, a point of distinct pride among the independent-minded farmer-borrowers who are the cooperative system's owners.

"THE FARM Credit System has made possible the great productivity of American agriculture as we know it today," said Wayne Rasmussen, historian for the Agriculture Department. "They did what we so often say these kinds of organizations should do: get started with the help of the federal government, make a success and pay back the federal money, and become a vital force on their own."

That vitality has been severely impaired, however, by the worst farm economic conditions in 50 years: land values have plummeted as much as 50 percent in some areas since 1981, a bumper grain crop this year threatens to further depress commodity prices and exports of farm goods have dropped alarmingly.

"It's the worst of times for agriculture, so it's bound to be the worst of times for the Farm Credit System," says Evans.

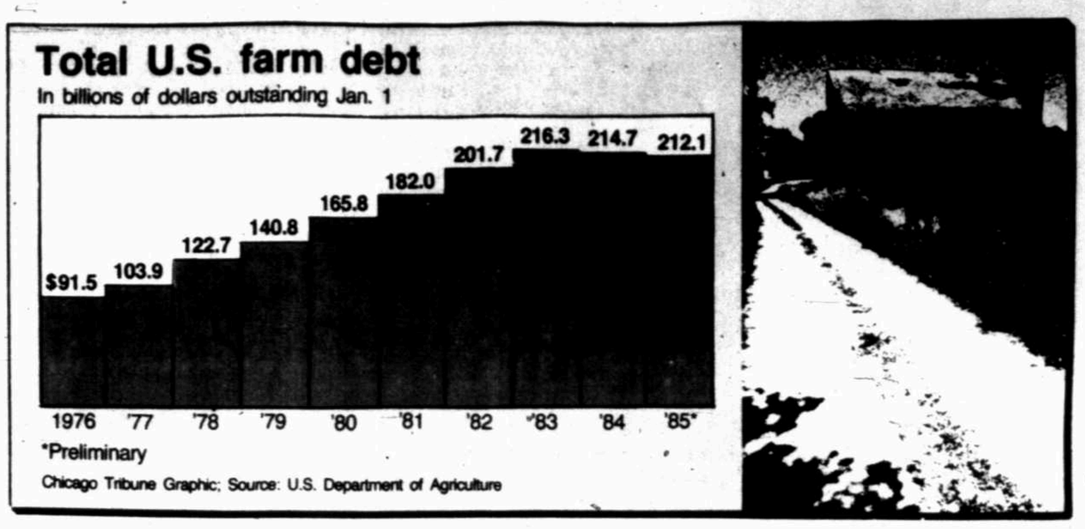

Part of the problem, he says, is that the system and the Reagan administration have been slow to admit the system's plight — the administration because it fears the cost of a bailout will exacerbate an already fearsome budget deficit, the system because it fears centralization and tighter regulation.

Six months ago, the cost of a bailout would have been about $5 billion, Evans estimates. Now, the potential cost has risen to $10 billion to $20 billion.

Wilkinson's admission of the problem last week had an immediate effect on the financial markets. Within hours, the interest rate on system bonds had climbed 40 basis points or more.

"THE BIG holders are not panicking, but the little guys are getting a little bit panicky," said Maury Harris, chief economist for PaineWebber in New York. "The problem is going to be worked out, but it's going to take time. The financial markets are going to be nervous. There's going to be more bad news out and the spread (between Treasury notes and Farm Credit bonds) will probably widen some more before this is all over."

System regulators, the administration and Congress now must look at the best way to pull the system back from the brink.

"The Farm Credit System has made possible the great productivity of American agriculture as we know it today. They did what we so often say these kinds of organizations should do: get started with the help of the federal government, make a success and pay back the federal money, and become a vital force on their own."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retired Admiral Thomas Moorer accused the U.S. and Israeli governments Saturday of covering up evidence surrounding the 1967 Israeli attack on the American intelligence ship USS Liberty.

Thirty-four American crewmen were killed and 171 wounded in the combined air and sea attack June 8, 1967, against the reconnaissance ship, cruising in international waters 15 miles off the Sinai Penninsula during the Six-Day War.

Israel maintains its fighter pilots, who buzzed the ship for eight hours prior to the attack, and torpedo boat crews mistook the Liberty for an Egyptian ship.

"The Israelis maintain this was simply a case of mistaken identity, but this clearly does not hold water," said Moorer, who was chief of naval operations at the time of the attack "In clear visiblity, this unique ship was very easy to identify."

"The Israeli forces circled the ship and then proceeded to attack over an extended period of time. There is simply no way the fighter pilots and torpedo boat crews could have come to such a conclusion," he said.

Moorer said the electronics-laden ship could not have been misidentified by highly-trained Israeli pilots.

He suggested the incident was a deliberate attack to prevent the Liberty from picking up signals that would have forewarned the United States of an Israeli military push into Syria the next day.

Israel occupied the Sinai Peninsula, the Gaza Strip and East Jerusalem during the Six-Day War, and drove 12 miles into Syrian territory.

The retired admiral charged that President Johnson "significantly understated the extent of the casualties," and said no formal congressional hearings were held on the incident, as was the case following the capture of the USS Pueblo by North Korea in 1968.

"Based on the way this tragedy was handled, both in the United States and Israel, one must conclude there is much information that has not been made available to the public," said Moorer, who was a member of President Reagan's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board from 1982 to 1984.

The U.S. Sixth Fleet, positioned nearby, received a distress call from the Liberty, and one carrier dispatched a squadron to search for the disabled ship. Before the ship was found, the fleet received orders from Washington ordering the planes back.

New York's Mayor Edward I. Koch, center, City Council President Carol Bellamy and Manhattan Assemblyman Herman Farrell shake hands before a mayoral debate this August in New York. Tuesday is election day in New York City and Koch is running for a third tem.

Koch baffles opponents with campaign capers

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — The mayor of New York stood in front of home plate at Yankee Stadium, scanned the crowd, and made a startling declaration.

"I simply want to say to you," he began. "If you didn't know it before, you'll know it now. I'm Italian!"

The crowd, assembled for the Yankees' Salute to Italian-Americans, roared its approval.

The next day, Edward I. Koch slipped into a Latin American guayabera shirt for the annual Ecuadorian parade in Queens. Then he put on an Indian shirt for the Indian parade in Manhattan.

"I am a son of India," proclaimed the man who calls himself O'Koch every St. Patrick's Day, "and I go to every Hispanic parade."

In New York City, that's called politics.

Tuesday is Election Day in New York, and Koch — who actually is the son of eastern European Jewish immigrants — is running for a third term. It has been a campaign the Founding Fathers never could have anticipated.

City Council President Carol Bellamy, Koch's main opponent in the Democratic primary, has compared the campaign antics to the television program, "Family Feud." Assemblyman Herman D. Farrell Jr., another key challenger, says it reminds him more of "The Honeymooners," with Koch and Bellamy doubling for Ralph and Alice Kramden.

Farrell, the candidate chosen by a coalition of black leaders, says he feels like "the other fellow in the living room with a fighting couple."

Bellamy apparently agrees — she tried to kick Farrell out of the house. After she challenged his nominating petitions, Farrell was ordered off the ballot, then back on, then back off again, and finally back on.

Koch, who stood to benefit by a split in the opposition, was indignant that Bellamy would interfere in the ballot process. Bellamy recalled that Koch had done the same thing in the past.

"Assume that I did it," Koch told City Hall reporters. "Assume that I was as bad as she is. Should you replace me with someone who is as bad as I am?"

Koch, who in the past has called Bellamy a "horror show," likes to remind people that he once made her cry. Bellamy, who says she didn't really cry, calls Koch "a fraud and a phony."

The campaign hasn't been entirely personal. There have been issues, many of them serious: the city's desperate housing situation, its derelict transit system, crime, education, race relations.

For months, Bellamy has attacked Koch at every turn, accusing him of dividing the city and favoring wealthy suburbanites over the city's own residents. "Ed Koch is a bandit," she says. "He's robbing New Yorkers of jobs."

She also accuses Koch of changing his political positions to suit shifting public opinions. One day, both Bellamy and Koch held City Hall news conferences to list each other's "flip-flops."

Farrell has accused both Koch and Bellamy — he tends to lump them together — of bickering over services to the rich while ignoring the poor. He has made education the pet issue of his campaign.

Comparable worth debate relies on question of proof

WASHINGTON (AP) — At bottom, the "comparable worth" debate amounts to a question of proof: Do statistics showing that American women earn 68 cents for every dollar earned by men prove illegal discrimination?

Those spearheading the comparable-worth movement say employers nationwide, public and private, are violating federal law by paying lower wages for predominantly female jobs requiring similar skill, mental alacrity and accountability as jobs held mostly by men.

A federal appeals court in San Francisco last week refused to order the state of Washington to close a purported 20 percent pay gap between men and women in "comparable" state jobs.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling, a major blow to the coalition of unions and women's groups seeking greater equity in salaries, centered on a federal law known as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The law makes it illegal for any employer "to discriminate against any individual with respect to compensation...because of such individual's...sex."

Women who claim to have been victimized by such discrimination must prove it in one of two ways:

— Show that an ostensibly neutral employment practice not justified by business necessity has a disproportionate adverse impact on women. The federal courts call this the "disparate impact" theory.

— Show that an employer chose a particular employment policy because of its effect on women. Proof of such impermissible intent may be inferred from circumstantial evidence.

Australians return to Newport in search of millions from tourists

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Australians took away the sailing trophy that helped make this city famous and now they've come back in a quest for the tourist money that keeps it that way, but nobody seems to mind very much.

Tourist representatives from the "land down under" were in Newport this weekend at the International Sailboat Show to lure people to Perth in 1986-87 for the first non-American defense of the America's Cup, yachting's greatest prize.

One might think the blokes who took the "Auld Mug" from its 132-year-old home in 1983 would get a bum's rush out of Newport, but that hasn't happened.

"There's been nothing at all but positive response," said Henry Kujda, a Perth resident who is East Coast and Canada marketing development manager for the Western Australian Tourism Commission.

"It's been great here in Newport and all over," Kujda added. "In Norfolk (Va.) a policeman rushed over to me and said 'You're Australian? I want to shake your hand. You guys did a great job winning the Cup.'"

"Most people in the States are definite about wanting to win it back. But it's not like they spit and scratch...," added Claudia Keech, North American public relations chief for the tourism commission.

As they spoke, a handful of people walked up to them and a man in a kangaroo suit with boxing gloves to ask for information on tours, accommodations for the races and Australia in general. The "boxing kangaroo" is the symbol of the victorious yacht, Australia II.

Even Mayor Patrick Kirby gave them a warm welcome Friday.

One explanation for the warm reception might be that 12-meter yachting is a gentlemanly avocation, suited more for sporting pats on the back than spiteful kicks in the pants.

Another may be the Australian accent, which Keech said "people here just love."

Keech estimated $13 million from their government-sponsored budget will be spent this year to promote Perth and neighboring Fremantle for the October 1986 through February 1987 Cup races. That's about $10 each for the 1.3 million people expected in Perth, a port city of 900,000 on Australia's western coast.

Their efforts — and the Cup — have jetted Australia to the top of what travel experts call the "desired destination" list, said Kujda, who likens the ranking to "sort of a flavor-of-the-month type thing."

And while they're spending here, the folks at home are working on 107 tourism-related projects and spending $2 billion on capital projects including a new airport, hotels, convention centers and marinas, they said.

"It's the greatest thing that can possibly happen to Perth, and we've got to take advantage of it," said Kujda.

All that money is aside from the estimated $200 million the 10 prospective American challengers are spending to wrest the Cup from its new home at the Royal Perth Yacht Club.

Bloody spirit of Wild West lives on in South Africa

By TOM BALDWIN

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A popular play that pokes fun at apartheid has a scene where an elegant white matron slips into the ladies room to powder her nose.

Rummaging through her handbag, she pulls out the car keys, a tissue, her address book, a parking lot receipt, and before she locates her compact, a silver-plated revolver with a foot-long barrel.

This splash of drama is closer than ever to reality in a country where 5 million whites stare at an uprising by 24 million blacks who are frustrated with apartheid, the government's segregation policies that deny them civil rights and the vote.

Gun sales are soaring, dealers and police reported Saturday.

But to say South Africa's whites are arming is like noting that the sun will rise.

Weapons dealers note the increase in ammunition sales is far more dramatic than the increased business in guns.

"They're walking out of here with both arms full," said Geoffrey McClure, a dealer in suburban Randburg. An incident near the town two weeks ago underscored the role of guns in the day-to-day life of whites.

It was close to dusk on a Saturday night. A white father was retrieving his child from a doctor's office in a neighborhood almost identical to the leafy New York suburbs of Westchester County or Philadelphia's Main Line.

At a stop sign, the man said, he heard the patter of stones landing on his car. Yanking a handgun from beneath his seat, he leaped out and began blazing away at his attackers, a group of blacks clustered near a bus stop. One was wounded.

Incidents such as this are common.

On Friday night near Cape Town, a car carrying two whites stalled near Ravensmead, a segregated township for people of mixed racial ancestry, officially called "coloreds."

Police spokesman Attie Laubscher said 10 to 15 people of mixed race armed with sticks and knives threatened the whites, who then opened fire on them, killing one.

Four months ago, a white motorist became enraged when another white driver apparently swerved over too suddenly. The first driver followed the second one home, where both began firing away on a suburban street, and both died.

The case of Bernhard Goetz, the white who shot four black teen-agers on a New York City subway last Dec. 22, made news in South Africa, as does every overseas event that reminds whites they are not alone with racial problems.

But many whites who discussed the case, whether with American visitors or on radio talk shows, displayed puzzlement that the issue revolved around the vigilante aspect as much as race.

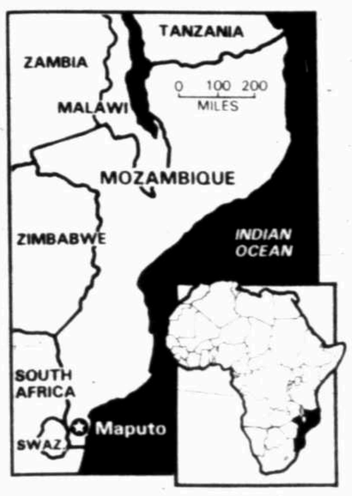

It is accepted in South Africa to shoot first.

Take the "jackal's cannon." This is a shotgun anchored to an interior wall, or maybe to a tree at the edge of one's property, and rigged with a trip wire that discharges the gun.

Last year, a small boy on a picnic in the woods set one off and lost most of his face.

It never made news here in April when white farmers whose property abutted the black township of Soweto, near Johannesburg, laid ambushes each night for suspected black cattle rustlers.

Mozambique, Zimbabwe hit key rebel base

SERRA DA GORONGOZA, Mozambique (AP) — Mozambican and Zimbabwean warplanes and paratroopers smashed the mountain headquarters of the Mozambique National Resistance and killed hundreds of rebels, the semi-official Mozambique News Agency reported today.

Rebel commanders, including resistance leader Afonso Dhlakama, fled from the mountain hideout at the height of the attack. Troops were hunting Dhlakama and other guerrillas in the surrounding bush.

"We have broken the back of the snake," President Samora Machel told reporters. "The tail will still thrash around for a while. Now we are pursuing the head of the snake."

The National Resistance was formed in 1977 by the white minority government in the British colony of Rhodesia to harass the Marxist rulers of this East African country, then the main supporter of black nationalist guerrillas fighting for independence in Rhodesia.

Rhodesia was renamed Zimbabwe at independence on April 18, 1980.

Arms and supplies from Zimbabwe were halted, but South Africa replaced Rhodesia as the resistance's main supporter until signing a nonaggression treaty with Maputo in March 1984.

Machel toured the ruins Thursday of Casa Banana, the name for the rebels' nerve center on Serra Da Gorongoza Mountain in the central Manica province of this East African country.

The Mozambique News Agency (AIM) said the guerrillas suffered their most crippling blow in a five-hour air-and-ground attack Aug. 28 on what was described as the rebels' supreme command base.

AIM quoted Mozambique authorities as saying they withheld official disclosure of the assault until today, the 11th anniversary of the end of Mozambique's war for independence from Portugal.

AIM said the joint forces also destroyed two other bases in a series of strikes beginning in July. The bases were identified as the central regional command at Muxamba in Manica province, with its own 800-yard landing strip for arms and supplies, and a training camp at Gogogo, about 25 miles west of Casa Banana.

Exact casualty figures were not released, and there was no report of casualties among the Mozambican and Zimbabwean troops.

From Muxamba, the guerrillas reported launched attacks on powerlines and the oil pipeline and railway linking the Mozambique port of Beira with landlocked Zimbabwe.

Several thousand Zimbabwe soldiers have been guarding the pipeline and railroad against sabotage attacks by the rebels.

Bomb meant for Irish police injures woman

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A bomb apparently meant for two police cars exploded on a road in County Down, injuring a woman who was driving ahead of the police cars, officials said.

The attack occurred near a bridge on the road to Warrenpoint, the same spot where 18 paratroopers were killed in an Irish Republican Army ambush in August 1979.

A police spokesman said the officers in the two police cars were unhurt.

Security forces on both sides of the Irish border launched a search for the bombers.

Police said they also were investigating an apparent attempt on the life of Michael Hassan, a member of the IRA's legal political wing, Sinn Fein.

Hassan, a councilman in Limavady in County Londonderry, told police he saw two men when he answered a knock on the door Friday night, and one aimed a pistol at his head. He said he heard the gun click as he slammed the door shut.

Iraq claims warplanes bombed Kharg Island, merchant ship

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraq said its warplanes bombarded Iran's huge Kharg Island oil terminal with tons of incendiary bombs Saturday and also struck an unidentified merchant vessel in the Persian Gulf.

Iraq also said it wrested a forward position from Iran in the northern part of their 730-mile border-frontline.

The Saturday raid on Kharg was the second Iraq claimed in less than 24 hours.

Neither raid was confirmed by Iran or by independent maritime executives in the gulf region.

Arab diplomatic sources in the region viewed the escalation in the five-year-old Iran-Iraq war as Iraq's response to a threat Friday by President Ali Khamenei of Iran.

Khamenei said Iran would block all countries in the region from exporting oil should Iran's exports be stopped.

"Should the export of oil from Iran's terminals be affected, Iran will not allow a single drop of oil to be exported from the gulf," Khamenei told Moslems at a Friday congregational prayer at Tehran University.

Iraq's military high command in Baghdad said eight tons of incendiary bombs were dropped on Kharg, in the northeastern Persian Gulf, in raids at 9 p.m. Friday and 11 a.m. Saturday. Kharg normally handles 90 percent of Iran's oil exports.

Iraq's official news agency quoted an unidentified military spokesman as saying the raids were meant to impede Iranian efforts to repair damage caused to the island's three jetties in five previous air strikes.

The Iraqis damaged at least one jetty in a strike Aug. 15. But the Iranians have been able to keep exporting oil at nearly their pre-strike rate of 1.5 million barrels daily, according to gulf-based marine shipping executives who monitor navigation through the gulf tanker lanes.

The Iraqis hit Kharg anew on Aug. 25, Aug. 30, Sept. 2 and Sept. 5, according to military communiques issued in Baghdad.

Shipping sources said the later raids were less destructive than the first.

In at least one case, however, the bombs hit a workers settlement, killing nine Iranian technicians and injuring scores, the same sources said.

To ease the impact of the raids, Iran has chartered six supertankers to shuttle crude oil to Sirri Island, near the Strait of Hormuz, which is out of Iraqi bomber range.

The Iraqi military spokesman also said the jets "dealt a successful blow to a large maritime target near the Iranian coast," Iraqi parlance for an oil tanker.

British Airways takes engines out of service

LONDON (AP) — British Airways said Saturday it has withdrawn from service 22 Pratt & Whitney engines similar to the one that exploded and turned a Boeing 737 into a fireball at Manchester Airport last month, killing 55 people.

The state-owned airline said the 22 JT8D-15 engines were being fitted with new combustion chambers to replace those found to be suspect in X-ray checks ordered after the Aug. 22 crash of a British Airtours jet.

The airline said in its in-house newspaper that it was "erring on the side of caution" in replacing more combustion chambers than might be required by formal guidelines.

British Airways, which along with its British Airtours subsidiary owns 44 Boeing 737s, said all other JT8D-15 engines now have been cleared for service after stringent tests.

After the Manchester crash, British and American air safety authorities ordered checks of the JT8D engines made by East Hartford, Conn.-based Pratt & Whitney company. The engines power most 737s and are the most widely used engines in commercial aviation.

A British Airways spokeswoman said only four round-trip flights out of 600 a day had been canceled since the checks began. The airline has used its Tri Star planes and Boeing 747s on some domestic and European routes.

The spokeswoman said the 22 engines withdrawn from service had been replaced by other engines which had passed inspection.

Lebanese minister calls for Syrian intervention

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanon's prime minister called for the deployment of Syrian troops in Beirut Saturday, as gunbattles thundered across the center of the city and Moslems carried on a bloody siege of a Palestinian camp.

"I say it frankly, an effective force must be deployed in Beirut to enforce all security plans that have been agreed to but failed to be fully implemented," Prime Minister Rashid Karami declared after an emergency meeting with other Moslem leaders in the capital.

"I see no other force capable of doing this but the Syrian army."

A few hours later, a 120-man company of Syrian special forces with a 20-man team of intelligence agents, moved into the Christian town of Zahle, 32 miles east of Beirut, security sources in Zahle reported by telephone.

The Syrians, in camouflage combat fatigues and helmets, began patrolling the streets and surrounded the town's Palace of Justice, the sources said.

However, the operation was not seen as a direct response to Karami's appeal. The Syrians have sought to curb Moslem attacks on the town on the western edge of the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley.

The Syrians control the region, but had not entered the town since 1981.

Sixteen people were killed and 50 wounded in a car bomb explosion in Zahle on Wednesday.

Karami has called for Syrian help before, but this was believed to be the first time he said publicly that the Syrians alone — not some combination of Syrian and Lebanese security forces — could end the fighting.

Education Minister Salim Hoss called for Syrian forces to be deployed all over Lebanon to end the country's 10-year-old civil war, in which an estimated 100,000 people have been killed.

Hoss said the Syrians should be used to bolster government efforts. The Syrians would temporarily replace the 32,000-man Lebanese army, which is fragmented along sectarian lines.

The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said two soldiers were killed and four wounded Saturday when Moslem fighters hit their post on the Christian side of Beirut's dividing Green Line with rocket-fired grenades and machine-gun fire.

Christian and Moslem militias along the 3-mile demarcation line fired artillery and mortar shells at each other. Radio reports said shells hit residential districts, but there was no immediate word of civilian casualties.

Security sources, demanding anonymity before speaking, said seven people were killed Saturday in fighting around the sprawling Bourj el-Barajneh refugee camp, where Shiite Moslem Amal militiamen pounded Palestinian guerrillas.

That raised the toll to at least 40 killed and 175 wounded since fighting at the camp began Tuesday.

The toll did not include Palestinians killed or wounded inside the camp, which has been closed to medical workers and reporters.

"We've lost several men," one unshaven Amal fighter said as he leaned on his Soviet-made rocket-propelled grenade launcher.

"But we'll get them in the end. We hit them hard yesterday. It was wonderful."

Sniper bullets smacked into walls as the fighters moved up jeeps mounted with machine guns and 106mm recoilless rifles to blast the Palestinian marksmen.

Security sources said the Palestinians so far have not received any support from guerrilla gunners in hills east of Beirut.

PLO flag once again common sight in Jordan

By JOHN RICE

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — The red, black and green flag of the Palestine Liberation Organization has become a common sight in Jordan's hilly capital. It flies over at least eight PLO office buildings where hundreds of people work.

But 15 years after the bloody Black September war between Jordan and the PLO, there is no sign that Jordan is letting the organization build up its guerrilla forces or carry out anti-Israeli attacks from Amman, according to diplomats and others who monitor the guerrilla organization led by Yasser Arafat.

The PLO started expanding its Amman diplomatic and administrative offices in 1982, when Israel's invasion of Lebanon drove the organization out of Beirut.

Several additional offices, notably the Palestine National Council and National Fund, moved to Jordan from Syria this year as King Hussein and PLO's Arafat worked toward a common approach toward peace with Israel. That approach is opposed by Syria and anti-Arafat elements in the PLO who now are linked with the Syrians.

Arafat himself recently found living and office quarters in Amman and uses them when he visits.

The PLO's main headquarters and several of its departments remain in Tunisia. Pro-Arafat military groups are scattered in North Yemen, Tunisia and Algeria.

SINCE AUG. 1, Israeli officials have repeatedly blamed the PLO presence in Amman for a series of anti-Israeli attacks on the West Bank, which Israel captured from Jordan in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

"Week after week, we see more and more terrorist elements under the leadership of Yasser Arafat arriving in Jordan enjoying freedom of planning and initiative," Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Israel said Aug. 22.

He warned of possible military action if Jordan did not rein in what he said were PLO "command posts."

Earlier, Ariel Sharon, Israel's former defense minister and its current industry minister, demanded that Jordan "remove the terrorist bases that have been established on its soil."

Rabin said more recently that although Jordan did not allow guerrillas to train there, to cross into Israel or to fire missiles, PLO officials in Amman were recruiting visiting West Bank residents to carry out attacks.

Prime Minister Zaid Rifai of Jordan responded that the PLO has no terrorist bases in Jordan. He described the Israeli allegations as "a cheap attempt...to explain away the increasing resistence on the West Bank and occupied territories."

"Those instances of resistence are from the people in the occupied territories," he added. "They are not directed from Jordan and there are no bases here for conducting them."

MOHAMMED Milhem, a PLO Executive Committee member, said the Israeli claims were groundless and also attributed the West Bank incidents to local grievances, such as poor economic condintions and unemployment.

Some Jordanian and diplomatic officials have suggested that the Israelis are trying to drive the United States away from the Jordanian-PLO agreement, which calls for Israel to give up the occupied territories and to deal with the PLO.

The PLO, however, continues to advocate armed struggle against Israel and PLO officials have praised several of the West Bank attacks.

Amman also is the home of Arafat's chief military deputy, Khalil Wazir, who was involved in planning an apparently unsuccessful seaborne attack on Israel's coast in April. He insisted the operation was planned and launched from outside Jordan.

About 1,300 to 3,000 Palestine Liberation Army soldiers are stationed at a barren camp east of Amman under tight control of the Jordanian army.

There is also an office for Force 17, an elite group that guards PLO officials and offices and which has been implicated in some guerrilla actions. One of the diplomats observing PLO activities estimated that Force 17 has about 30 men in Amman.

"I'VE SEEN nothing to indicate" that the PLO has set up guerrilla bases or is guiding anti-Israeli attacks from Jordan, said the diplomat, speaking only on condition of anonymity because of the nature of his post.

He added that many of the attacks on the West Bank — small-scale knifings and shootings — did not fit the pattern of PLO guerrilla operations.

Soviets name diamond after Samantha Smith

MOSCOW (AP) — A diamond "of rare beauty" found in eastern Siberia has been named after Samantha Smith, the 13-year-old American peace envoy killed in a plane crash in Maine on Aug. 25, the official Tass news agency said Saturday.

It said the diamond was found by the diamond mining enterprise in the village of Mirny, which means Peaceful in Russian, and was named after the Maine schoolgirl because she "is well-remembered in the U.S.S.R."

Tass did not say when the jewel was found or give any other details about the stone, but said it would be sent to the Soviet diamond treasury in the Kremlin in Moscow.

The Soviet news media had offered tributes to Samantha, who visited the Soviet Union in July 1983 as the guest of the late President Yuri V. Andropov after she wrote to him urging that world leaders pursue peace.

Rebels claim 15 killed

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Communist Khmer Rouge guerrillas claimed Saturday they killed five Vietnamese soldiers and wounded three in an attack a week ago on Cambodia's northwestern provincial capital of Battambang.

A Khmer Rouge broadcast, monitored in Bangkok, said the guerrillas also destroyed two "military houses" and arms and ammunition in the Aug. 31 attack in Battambang's downtown area.

The claim could not be verified. The Khmer Rouge have previously reported destructive ambushes on Vietnamese positions in Cambodia's interior.

Communist Vietnam invaded Cambodia six years ago, and replaced the Khmer Rouge government with a pro-Vietnamese communist regime. Vietnam's continued military presence in Cambodia is opposed by the Khmer Rouge in alliance with two non-communist guerrilla groups.

Hungarians convicted

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Nine people, including ranking government and science officials, were convicted of fraudulently misappropriating public funds and sentenced to prison terms and fines, Hungarian dailies reported Saturday.

The funds were for promoting inventions and technological development projects.

Budapest's Metropolitan Court sentenced Janos Fueloep, head of the chemical engineering department of the Academy of Sciences' Technological Research Institute, to one year, 10 months imprisonment and repayment of state funds.

Miklos Machacs, a senior official at the Ministry of Industry, drew a year and 11 months in prison. Fueloep and Machacs were said to be the chief beneficiaries in a kickback scheme that involved other ministry officials and company executives.

Jet makes emergency stop

PARIS (AP) — A Pakistan International Airlines 747 carrying about 400 passengers made an emergency landing Saturday at Paris' Orly Airport after an air traffic controller saw something fall from the plane as it took off, officials said.

No injuries were reported.

Sajjad Ahmed, station manager for the airline, said the air traffic controller ordered the pilot to circle above the airport, using up fuel, before attempting an emergency landing.

After circling for about an hour, the pilot attempted one landing but aborted it. He landed safely on the second attempt, although two of the plane's tires blew out, Ahmed said.

The flight originated in London and was traveling to Islamabad, the capital of Pakistan.

"We were really worried," said John O. Koehler of Stamford, Conn., a passenger. "But the pilot was fantastic. He informed us immediately that something fell off the plane and there was some technical difficulty and after dumping fuel we would return to Orly."

Barges block river traffic

PARIS (AP) — Hundreds of barges blocked river traffic around France on Saturday to protest alleged unfair competition from the state-owned railway system.

Scattered blockades began over the previous week, and more river barges joined the protest this weekend. Barge owners said they would allow most commercial traffic to pass but would keep blocking pleasure craft.

Among craft prevented from sailing are those which ply the Seine in Paris carrying thousands of tourists each day.

Barge owners also set up barricades along several rail lines and announced they intended to block traffic on a major highway leading out of Paris.

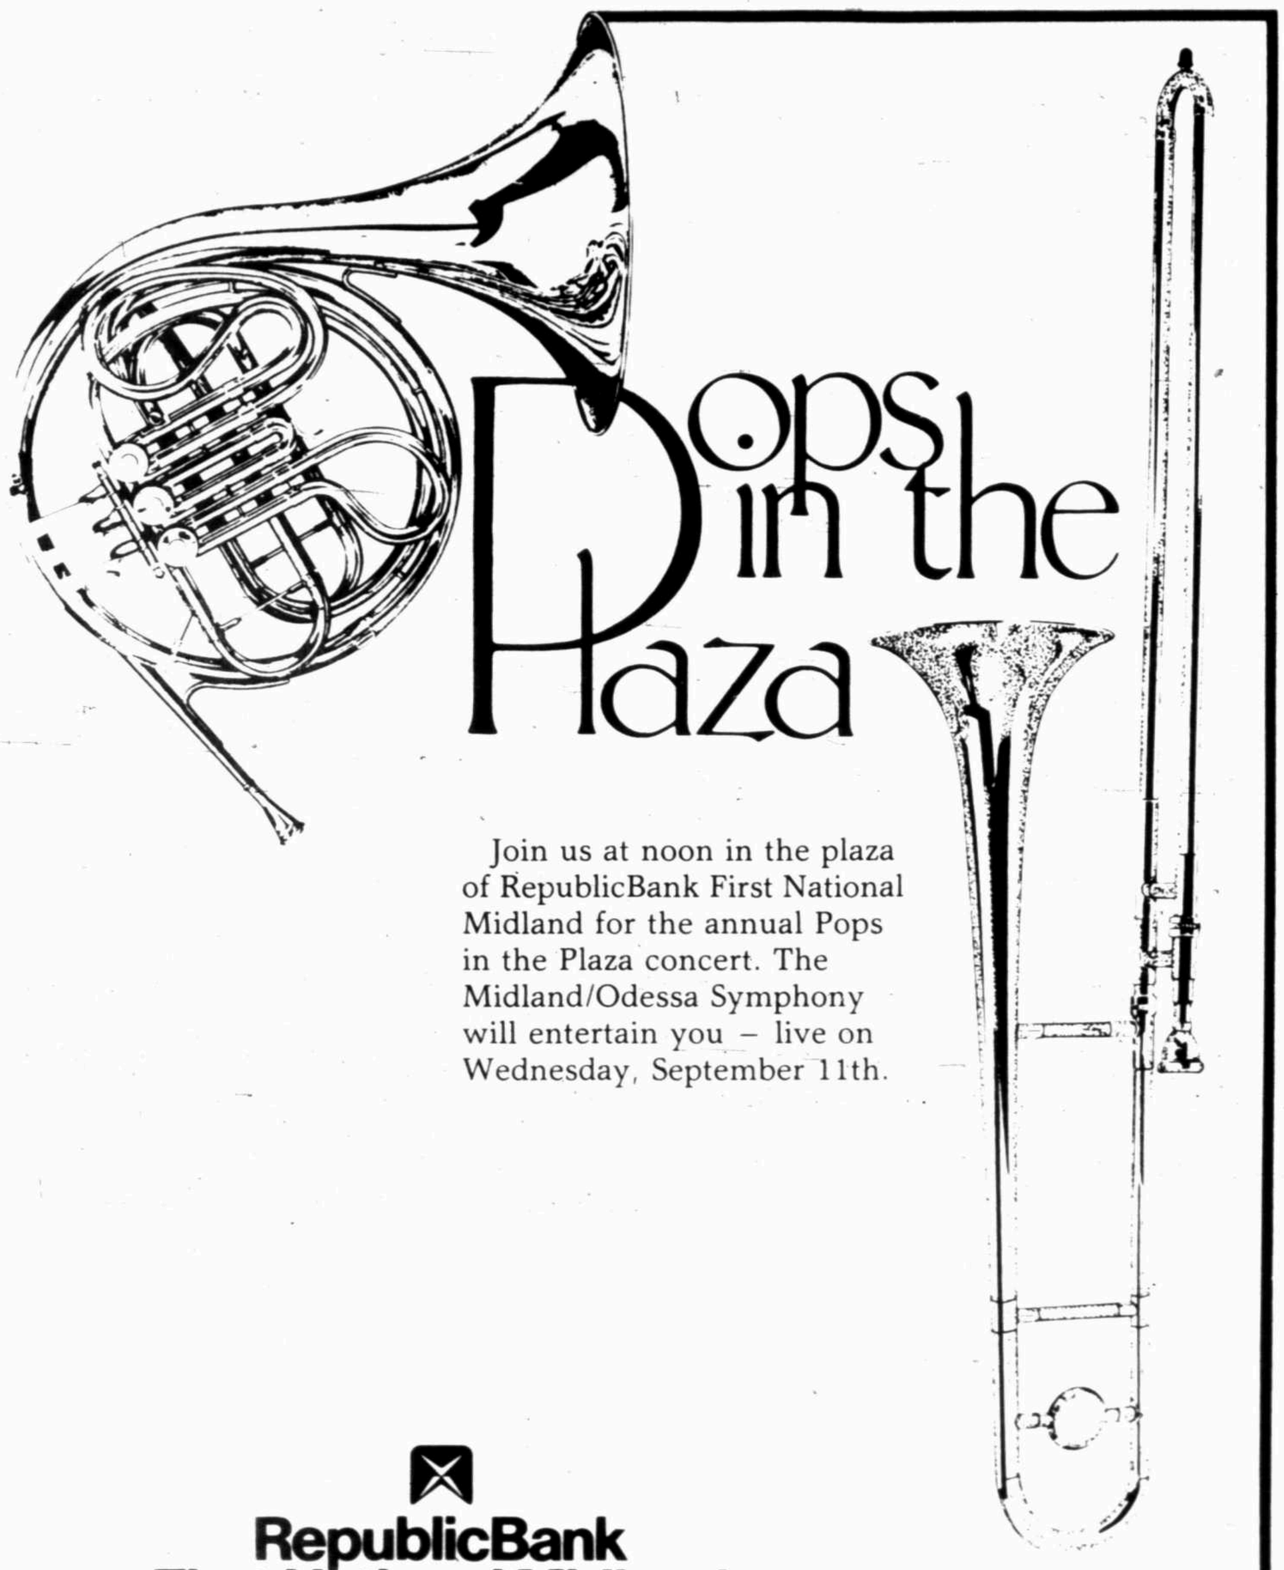

The owners say they are being driven out of business by artificially low prices, particularly for hauling grain, being offered by the state-owned French National Railway Society.

Ukrainians discuss church

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Bishops of the Ukrainian Catholic Church living in the West will hold a synod here starting Sept. 22 to discuss the situation of their church, Ukranian Cardinal Myroslav Lubachivsky announced Saturday.

The announcement came on the first anniversary of the death of Cardinal Josef Slipyj, Lubachivsky's predecessor as Ukranian Catholic Church leader.

The church, which has 4.3 million followers worldwide, was forced underground in the Soviet Ukraine after Josef Stalin ordered that it become part of the Russian Orthodox Church in 1946. Priests and dissenters were deported, imprisoned, or shot, their churches razed or burned.

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — Swimming where no human dares venture, a new generation of nimble mechanical divers is mapping ocean canyons, hunting strange life forms, poking through nuclear power plant tunnels and measuring the rust on deep-sea oil rigs.

This summer, two dramatic feats showed off their versatility and prowess. One designed to fix underwater telephone cables retrieved the flight recorders from the crashed Air-India jumbo jet 6,700 feet beneath the Atlantic. Another that will chart the ocean floor snapped the first pictures of the Titanic 13,000 feet down.

These and an assortment of other remotely controlled submersible vehicles are eyes and hands in waters far below the reach of mortal divers. Their exploits have brought unaccustomed attention to a quiet branch of science that is vastly expanding humans' ability to explore and work in the oceans that cover 70 percent of the planet.

"ONE OF the major spinoffs of the discovery of the Titanic is to bring the public, which is the basic funder of oceanography, a return on their small investment," said William Marquet of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. "There's a wonderful world out there that hasn't been discovered yet, and we're developing the tools for scientific exploration."

Marquet is senior engineer at the institution's Deep Submergence Laboratory that designed Argo, the submersible that spotted the Titanic.

Craft such as Argo are towed behind research ships, something like lures trolled after fishing boats, and they scan and measure the seafloor beneath them. More common are robot subs that have mechanical arms and propulsion systems, they're dangled into the water on tethers. Still others have tractor treads that let them creep along the ocean bottom.

Engineers are dreaming of even more talented divers, even ones that can think for themselves. At the University of New Hampshire, Richard Blidberg is working on one of these called Eave. (Like most submersibles, Eave's name is an acronym. It stands for experimental autonomous vehicle.) Eave's computer brain is gradually being endowed with artificial intelligence.

"We want to make it able to think, able to cope with unpredictable things it sees in the oceans," said Blidberg. "And we want to make it smart enough to stay reliable enough to go off and do rather complicated missions."

So far, Eave has been taught to follow a pipeline, pick its way through an underwater structure and do a simple cleaning chore.

SUCH SUBMERSIBLES would carry their own electrical power, so they won't be hooked to the surface with cables. Tethers are a major drawback, since they can become tangled and limit mobility.

Smart, untethered submersibles could conduct searches, roam beneath the arctic ice or tend underwater waste disposal yards.

Some of the first submersibles were developed three decades ago so the Navy could fetch torpedoes from ocean test ranges. They grew into workaday tools for industry in the 1970s.

As fuel prices rose, oil companies drilled in deeper waters. Human divers had to inspect the offshore platforms and help with installations.

"The remotely operated vehicle technology was available at the time, so it began to be accepted to use the vehicles as observation tools, to go down, look around and act as a diver's buddy," said Robert Wernli, an engineer with the Naval Ocean Systems Center in San Diego.

"The more the vehicles were used, the more they were accepted and the more they were allowed to do," he said. "Now they are an integral part of offshore oil field operations."

The oil industry now uses almost 400 of them, he said. Typically, an operator, called a pilot, sits in front of a control panel on the oil platform. The vehicle's sonar locates its target, and cameras send TV pictures back to the surface as the sub maneuvers in for close-up work.

Hydraulic thrusters scoot the vehicle about, and three or four mechanical arms and tools let them cut cables, make repairs, monitor corrosion and do other routine jobs.

"THEY ARE not necessarily replacing the diver, but they certainly support him in many ways and remove him from many dangerous operations," said Wernli.

Cheaper, shallow-water versions are being used by police departments to hunt for bodies and by utilities to maintain dams and inspect power plant pipes.

Some submersibles carry people. Perhaps the best known of these is Woods Hole's Alvin, a tadpole-shaped craft that can carry three people down 13,120 feet. Alvin has made more than 1,500 dives, and often it works with remote-controlled subs.

For instance, in 1977, a camera-toting craft named Angus discovered hot springs on the Pacific floor. Alvin went down for a closer look, unmanned but armed with cameras, and found tube worms, giant clams and other forms of life never seen before.

Alvin and its cousins are expensive to operate, however. Since they carry people, they must be failure proof. And they can stay down only a few hours at a time.

The mechanical submersibles, however, can work nonstop for weeks at a time, and experts say they are more efficient for routine tasks.

EXAMINE PRICE - VALUE RATIO

Many people who are buying a house automatically tend to relate house price to house value. Now be very careful about this relationship. Price and value are not necessarily the same thing. While price is a specific thing, value can mean different things to different people.

Now that you have settled on the price you can afford, or are willing to pay for a house, get down to the even more difficult task of deciding what you want your home to offer. When you consider things like proximity to transit, access to schools and shopping, project yourself years hence toward possible family growth or job changes and other factors. In addition to all the usual physical considerations such as construction quality, lot size, condition of fixtures, review your own personal needs. Do you like to have parties? Perhaps you need a finished recreation room. Do you use a typewriter at odd hours? Consider the location of your study. Value is more than just a financial matter.

Fair weather in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

The slight chance of isolated thunderstorms has dropped off the weatherman's forecast for the remainder of the weekend. In its stead is fair weather for today and Monday.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for highs both days in the mid-90s and a low tonight in the upper 60s. Winds today are to be southerly at 5 to 15 mph.

The peak temperature reading Saturday was 97 degrees, which was two degrees short of tying the record high of 99 degrees on Sept. 7 in 1930. The overnight low was 67 degrees. The record low for Sept. 8 is 55 degrees in 1957.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms were widely scattered across much of Texas Saturday, with the heaviest storms in northwest, west and south Texas.

Heavy thunderstorms peppered southeast Texas near Houston and LaGrange, and the Kent and Fort Stockton areas in West Texas. In the northwest, the storms were located between Throckmorton and Breckenridge.

Skies were partly cloudy elsewhere, with a 10 to 20 mph south wind pushing afternoon highs well above normal.

By 4 p.m., temperatures in the 90s were reported statewide except in rain-cooled parts of southeast Texas. A thunderstorm dropped Houston's temperature to 82, while a half dozen sites between Childress and McAllen were an even 100.

NATION

Low temperatures and a blanket of snow spread across Montana on Saturday, while unseasonably high temperatures into the 90s baked parts of the East and Midwest for a third day.

A mixture of rain and snow reached across central and southwestern Montana during the morning. A threat of locally heavy snow ended and winter storm warnings were discontinued, but the storm had left up to 16 inches of snow at Glacier National Park and 3 inches of snow at traditional cold spot Cut Bank.

Elsewhere in the Northwest, a low temperature record for Sept. 7 was tied when Yakima, Wash., reached 36 degrees.

But east of the Rockies, hot weather continued with mid day temperatures in the upper 80s and low 90s from southern Pennsylvania west across southern Wisconsin, Iowa and much of Nebraska.

Joy Stacy talks to her 3-year-old daughter, Rebecca Joy, recovering in Midland Memorial Hospital from a freak accident in which a child's plastic bow embedded in her brain. Not expected to live at first, Rebecca is out of her coma and slowly recovering.

Mother believes 'miracle' girl will be totally cured

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

"You're a miracle, Becky."

It was a pediatrician who wrote these words on the chart of Rebecca Joy Stacy after the 3-year-old opened her eyes on Aug. 26, 11 days after she entered a coma resulting from a freak accident at home.

When the mother, Joy Stacy, carried her lifeless daughter into Midland Memorial Hospital she was given the prognosis the girl might not live through surgery. Later, the family was told the girl may never come out of a coma, and if she did, the brain damage might be too severe.

But she came out of the coma and each day is taking another step toward a life the doctors never thought she would have.

For the family — Bobby and Joy Stacy and sons Jonathan, 7, and David Benjamin, 4 — it's as if their world turned upside down Aug. 15. Not only are they suffering the emotional pains from Becky's accident, but the family has no medical insurance to cover the bills.

Through it all, the family is growing stronger through their faith in God, according to Mrs. Stacy.

"I believe with all my heart that God's going to touch her. She'll have a complete miracle. The doctors are amazed at the progress she's made," said Mrs. Stacy, sitting in Becky's hospital room.

From early morning until 8 at night every day, she watches constantly the girl stretched out on the hospital bed, her once long, silky dark brown hair shaved off, and physically unable to run and play and ride her favorite toy, her Hot Wheels.

She was on her Hot Wheels the afternoon of Aug. 15 and her brothers were playing with children's bow and arrow sets. They had taken the strings off and were throwing the bows into the ground. Becky, who had celebrated her third birthday July 25, somehow fell off the Hot Wheels and into one of the bows, which imbedded in her brain.

"I was scrubbing the tub when Jonathan came running into the house yelling 'We have to go to the doctor.' " By the time she reached Becky, the bow had been pulled out by one of the children and "I saw part of her brain coming out."

Mrs. Stacy scooped up Becky, herded the children into the car and raced to Midland Memorial Hospital. The medical staff "took her from my arms and rushed her into a room. I thought, 'Oh, my baby's dying.' "

It took almost three hours to stabilize Becky for surgery. Halfway through, "the doctor came out and said he didn't think she would live."

Joy and Bobby went to the chapel to pray. "Lord, I can't live without my baby," Mrs. Stacy prayed. "But then we realized she was the Lord's. And then we prayed that if she couldn't be whole again for Him to take her. Then we felt such a peace. If God wants her to live, he'll have a reason for her. I'm believing God will restore her."

Becky held on to life.

The Stacys prayed and have been supported spiritually by their church, Calvary Assembly of God, and people from other churches in Midland and West Texas cities. Becky's room is decorated with brightly colored balloons, stuffed animals and a plaque with Care Bear and the words "Jesus Loves Me." A much-used Bible sits on top of a small chest of drawers.

On a Saturday morning Mrs. Stacy remembered Becky always liked to watch cartoons, and she turned on the television set to "The Muppet Babies." Becky's deep blue eyes opened, watched the television screen for five minutes and then closed. "I liked to have had a fit," laughed Mrs. Stacy. From that point, Becky has slowly rallied from the depths of her coma.

"It's been like having a new baby, watching each new thing. She's still sucking her finger," said the mother, pulling Becky's right index finger out of the child's mouth. "When she was in a coma, I would pray for her to suck that finger. We take for granted so much in our kids' lives. Each little thing they do deserves an audience. This has made us closer to our children."

Consultant to discuss government waste

From Staff Reports

A New York financial consultant will outline attacks on wasteful government spending and proposals to cut the federal deficit by multi-billions of dollars in his talk "The Problem of Big Government" in a public meeting 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Midland Center.

The consultant is 38-year-old George Goldberger, assistant to J. Peter Grace, who is chairman and chief executive officer of W.R. Grace & Co., an international investment corporation.

Goldberger was a project director for the Grace Commission, which was established in 1982 by President Ronald Reagan "to scrutinize government spending" from the viewpoint of the private-business sector. The Grace Commission's 47-volume comprehensive report documented 2,478 recommendations to reduce government spending and to cut the federal deficit by $424 billion over a three-year period without weakening the U.S. defense program or harming any social-welfare program.

Goldberger told the Midland Reporter-Telegram that the Reagan administration is endorsing 1,148 of the recommendations but that 73 percent of those proposals require congressional action.

"It's now up to Congress to get this thing done," he said. Goldberger said he is seeking "to get grassroots pressure" on congressmen to goad Congress to implement the proposals. He is suggesting that citizens write their representatives and senators to encourage them to put the cost-savings proposals into action.

The proposals recommended by the Grace Commission include the closing of unneeded military installations, eliminating errors in Social Security payments, curtailing food-stamp fraud, reducing military and civil-service retirement pension benefits to bring them in line with comparable benefits in the private sector, shutting down superfluous weather stations, and getting the Internal Revenue Service promptly to deposit weekly payroll taxes to collect interest.

U.S. Congressman Tom Loeffler of Hunt and Texas Sen. John Montford of Lubbock will also speak at the free public meeting. Loeffler, a Republican who is campaigning for the Texas governorship, is a 39-year-old lawyer who was elected to the 21st U.S. Congressional District of Texas in 1978. He took office in 1979. Proud couples dote on their 'precious' grandchildren

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

A walk through Rheba William's rambling eastside Midland home is a tour of love. Plaque-studded walls with Hallmarkish sayings — all revolving around her role as mother of 10 children and proud grandparent to 32 grandchildren and 26 great-grandchildren — fight for space among the hundreds of photographs of children that paper those walls.

"I just found out that I have two more great-grandchildren that I didn't even know I had," said Mrs. Williams, 75. Both were born about a month ago.

With today's national celebration of Grandparents Day, a youthful holiday founded in 1978 by the efforts of a West Virginia woman and passed into law by Congress, Mrs. Williams is likely to have her share of recognition.

"I got a card a couple of years ago from one of my grandchildren and I was a bit fluttered," she mused. " 'National Grandparents Day,?' I thought every day was grandparents day."

Indeed, Mrs. Williams was honored by her church in recent years as "mother of the year." Her love of her family may well stem from her own mother's nature, acknowledged by a large painting and a plaque bearing the inscription: "Harriet Ethel Johnson Martin, died December 1936 — as a daughter, obedient; as a wife, devoted; as a mother, affectionate; as a friend, ever kind and true."

Mrs. Williams insists that she never tires of all her grandchildren.

"I love every stinking one of them," she said. "I look at the pictures of them and wonder, 'how could I ever do without them?' I really feel sorry for people who don't have children and grandchildren."

She also states that she plays no favorites with her expanding family.

"Everyone of them is just as precious as if they were the only one," she said.

Mrs. Williams, described by her pastor as "the ultimate grandma," wears the label comfortably. With cookie jar in hand, she brags about her clan. Naming off her children — all living in Midland — she proceeds to show off a recent gift from them — a ceramic kiln with which she produces enough gifts herself to meet the Christmas needs and still have something for a visitor to haul out the door.

"When my husband died I had to do something to keep from being bored and lonely so I took up ceramics," she said. Today, Mrs. Williams home has an addition — a crafts room complete with a quilting area, another prolific hobby.

Despite the sheer numbers of her offspring, the doting matriarch keeps up with the family.

"Many of the grandchildren have come to live with me at times and I keep up with all the birthdays with cards," she said.

While Mrs. Williams remembers her family despite its size, another Midland grandparent spends time with her grandchildren despite a hectic schedule.

Dorothy Blackwell and her husband "Blackie" run three businesses between the two of them. The couple own and operate American Roustabouts, American Bookkeeping and Envoy Travel Agency.

"I always liked to travel so I thought it would be exciting to own an agency," said the 48-year-old Mrs. Blackwell. "We've gone to Australia, Israel and Europe."

How does the wandering grandparent find time for her grandchildren.?

"We take him with us," she said. To date, the travels of her worldly 9-year-old grandchild, Larry Don Burton, have been within the United States. Another grandchild, Billy Wayne Monroe, 5, is "not quite old enough to go with us yet."

Larry, however, has clearly picked up the traveling bug from his grandparents.

"We've taken him to California to see Disneyland, San Francisco and to Washington D.C.," she said. "We didn't get to take him anywhere this year but have promised him a big trip next year. He wants to go to Hawaii."

Mrs. Blackwell does not necessarily fit the mold of a grandmother, with her business and travel and youthful looks. Nor does she get asked to babysit very often.

"The kids don't ask us to baby sit much," she said. "When they were young we used to take them camping and went on trips across the country, so we didn't push them off on our parents too much."

Still, Mrs. Blackwell is "Granny" to her grandchildren.

"They call Blackie 'Pa-Pa'," said Mrs. Blackwell of her 52-year-old husband.

"I used to see Larry Don on a daily basis when my daughter worked with us at the bookkeeping business," she added.

The grandparents are remembered, as well, by the two children who send them cards for special occasions.

Grandparents have had their day since '78

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

It's a little known holiday, but one that's catching on since Congress signed it into law in 1978.

"It's something that's been missing," said Russell Smith, of the Texas Department of Aging. "We've got Mother's Day and Father's Day — why not Grandparent's Day?"

Smith, whose department is offering certificates for grandparents, has received "a very large response this year."

"This is the first year we have had the certificates and we printed up 70,000 of them. People are really responding," he said.

The holiday, although readily apparent to anyone who walks by a greeting cards display the first week of September, still does not enjoy the popularity of other familiar celebrations.

But still, grandparents and grandchildren are slowly becoming aware of its existence.

"Oh, I'm being taken out for dinner," said one woman involved in activities at Midland's Senior Citizen Center.

Other grandparents present acknowledge that they have received cards and are being remembered on Grandparent's Day.

GARY OTT

For some reason, many sportswriters become fiction writers

Mike Cochran, a funny man of sorts who doubles as an Associated Press writer, was in town the other day and, as usual, he stopped by the office to swap stories and catch up on local happenings.

Our conversation eventually got around to sports writers. We laughed about the now-legendary sports staff of the old Fort Worth Press, which, back in the '50s, consisted of, among others, Blackie Sherrod, Dan Jenkins, Bud Shrake and Gary Cartwright, all of whom have gained a certain amount of literary fame over the years, often in fields other than sports.

For some reason, a good many fiction writers have started in sports. Paul Gallico, who wrote The Poseidon Adventure, is another example. He wrote for the New York Daily News.

I'm not sure why that connection exists, but it does. Here are a few theories on why aspiring authors often lean toward sports when they enter journalism.

1) Sports writers get into events free and this appeals to those people who would rather spend what little spare cash they have on junk food and cheap booze than tickets to football games.

2) They are expected to be less-than-classy dressers. You rarely see sports writers in three-piece suits. Their normal attire consists of baggy pants, an out-of-style shirt, tennis shoes, and on those few occasions when it becomes necessary, a skinny tie that never matches the out-of-style shirt. When they attend formal events they add a windbreaker, usually a blue one. I have yet to figure out why they lean toward that particular color, but they do. Maroon is a distant second. No logic for that choice, either. Sports writers are strange.

3) Due to the nature of the job, they work weird hours. Sporting events rarely take place between 9 and 5. They happen at night. That, along with newspaper deadlines, means sports writers often find themselves all alone at the office pecking away on a computer terminal at 11 o'clock at night. Their best friends are a half-eaten ham and cheese on rye and a tout sheet highlighting next weekend's best college picks, which probably explains why their divorce rate is so high. Some wives don't appreciate friends like that.

But the best explanation for why so many sports writers eventually move on to fiction is because they already live in a fantasy world. Their lives are full of games. The characters they write about are people who get paid hundreds of thousands of dollars for throwing a ball and getting arrested for cocaine possession. These heroes live in the fast lane, surrounded by a hero-worshipping public willing to heap money and praise on their every move.

A good sports writer gets close enough to action to absorb the craziness of of it all and, if he is astute enough, he collects a gold mine of one-liners and plots for future best-sellers. He needs only to stay sober enough to remember them. The books will write themselves.

Jenkins, who is best known for writing "Semi-Tough," was asked if the book's main character, a cynical football player named Billy Clyde Puckett, was based on him.

"To a degree," he acknowledged. "But he's also got a little Don Meredith, Billy Kilmer, Sonny Jurgensen and Alex Hawkins in him. You hang around guys like that long enough and their lifestyles rub off on you."

Or, as an old retired sports editor once told me, "Writing about sports may not be the most honorable profession it the world, but it sure beats working."

They were returned to directorships Saturday night at the 46th annual meeting of the co-op in the Stanton High School Football Stadium.

BECKY

Mrs. Stacy smiles and laughs at each thing Becky can do. She recognizes people, can move her right arm and left leg, and is saying words. But she feels pain and one morning when a doctor was trying to find a vein to insert an IV for antibiotics, Becky wimpered and the mother watched apprehensively.

Later, a nurse played with Becky and a piece of sticky tape. Becky's eyes followed the tape waving in the air above her, slowly raised her right arm and with her index finger caught the tape.

Becky's brain is still swollen from the accident and subsequent surgery. A one-inch scar on her left temple shows where the bow entered. Other long dark lines indicate the surgery.

The Stacys have gone through a gamut of emotions, feeling anger, hurt and numbness. "At first, I got so mad," she said. "I kept thinking, 'Why, Lord?' And then there was a numbness. You think you'll wake up and it'll just be a nightmare. We still hurt a lot. We don't understand why these things happen."

But God has given them a peace and the inner strength to accept it, she said.

Bobby Stacy has worked with Mr. Tune Diagnostic Center since the first of January. "It's a new business and Bobby was trying to help it get on its feet," said Mrs. Stacy. But there is no hospitalization coverage. Earlier in August, the Stacys were told the house they were renting had been sold and two days ago they found another place to rent.

A fund has been set up at RepublicBank First National Midland to help pay Becky's medical costs, which could run as high as $50,000. To date, about $3,500 has been donated. Donations may be sent to the bank and directed to Lobby Service Staff or Valerie Fields, account 3130827.

"I said, 'Lord, it's up to you. You'll have to help us. I can handle only so much," said Mrs. Stacy. "You've got so much on your mind that you don't worry about other things. The material things don't mean as much. All that matters now is Becky."

Their lives will never be like they were, she said, and the family is still trying to adjust.

"I know we can make it, no matter what happens. It's really brought us closer together as a family."

HOLIDAY

"Ask Gladys," several chime in deference to Gladys Newton, 87 and grandmother of 13, great grandmother of 14. "She's got more grandchildren than any of us."

Mrs. Newton stated that she too would be remembered on Grandparent's Day.

The group of six grandparents — ambitiously involved in a card game they jokingly said was "learned around the time of the Civil War," — represented 28 grandchildren and 21 great-grandchildren at one table.

Although Grandparent's Day falls on Sept. 8 this year, Smith added that it changes every year, since it was set up to fall on the first Sunday of September.

The holiday was the result of lobbying by Marian McQuade, a West Virginia woman and today, a grandmother of 18, who pushed state legislators to establish a state holiday in 1973.

Further efforts resulted in the creation of Public Law 95-325, said Smith, which was signed into law by President Jimmy Carter on July 28, 1978.

"Mrs. McQuade had always known that grandparents contributed enough to society that they should have their own day," said Smith. "She began writing letters in 1973 to each of the 50 governors with her children helping to stuff envelopes and her husband funding the mail-out campaign."

"She eventually began making trips to Washington D.C. and met (President Gerald) Ford in 1976 who said he would do his best," he added.

Ford, however, lost the next election which stalled the campaign until 1978.

Smith added that Mrs. McQuade made an appearance on the Today Show with the help of the Hallmark Corp.

Seven Houston residents die when car collides with 18-wheel truck

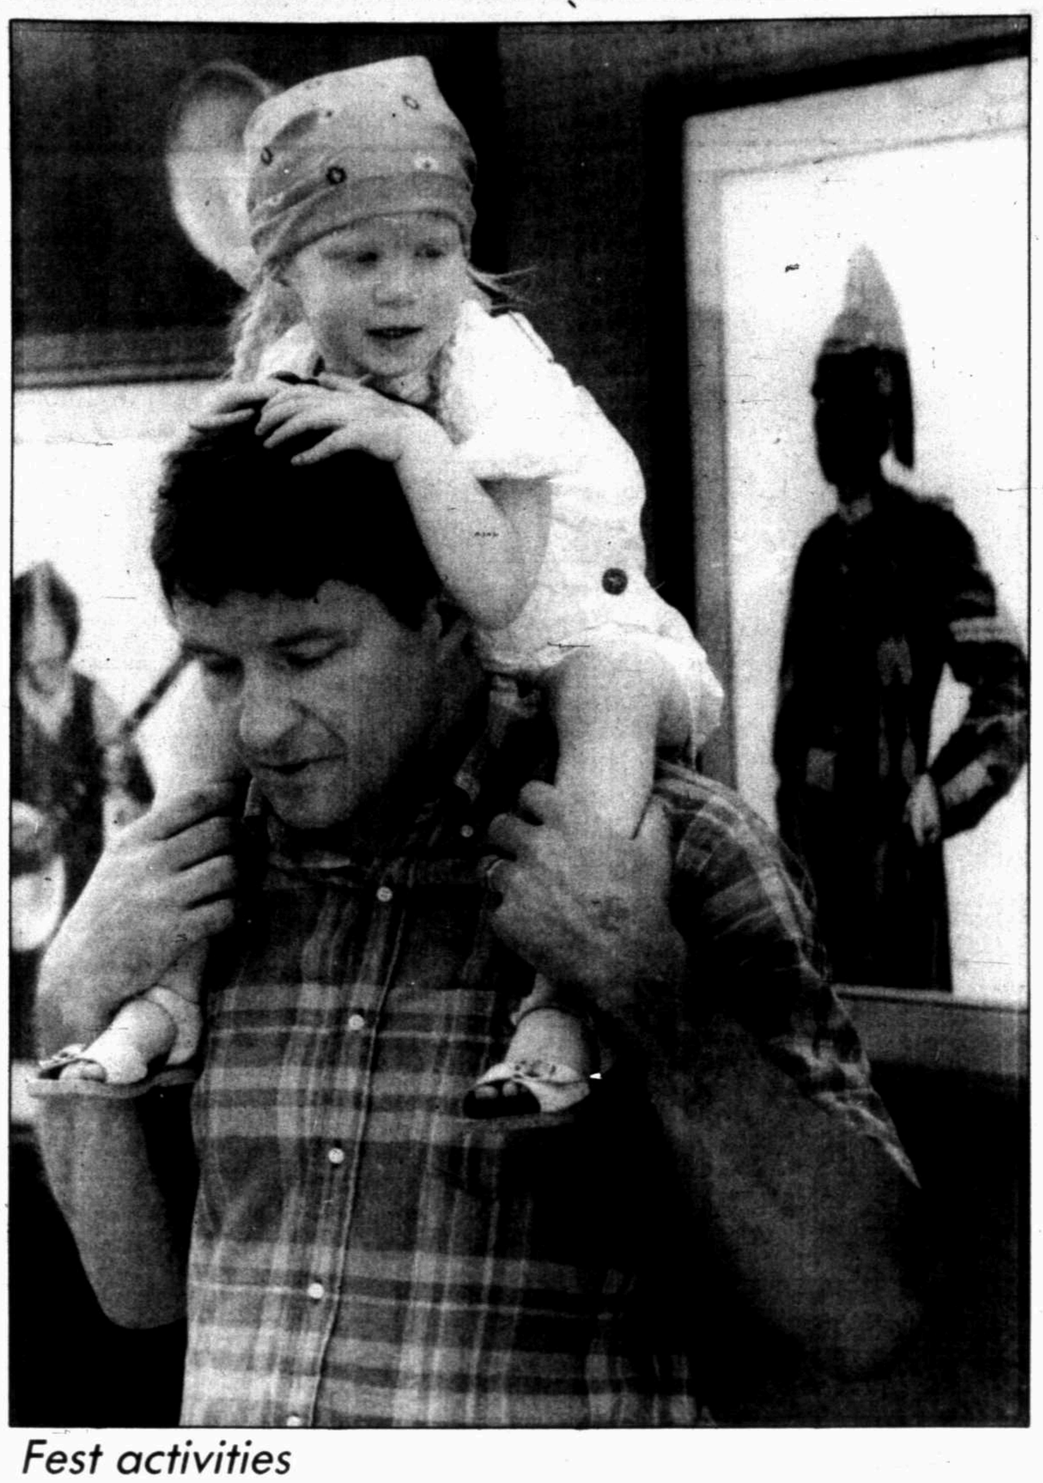

SAN AUGUSTINE, Texas (AP) — Seven members of two Houston families riding in the same car were killed near this East Texas town when their car collided with an 18-wheel truck, authorities said.

Another passenger, Kenneth Ray Steward, 28, also of Houston, was taken to Nacogdoches Memorial Hospital where he is listed in serious but stable condition, a hospital administrator said Saturday.

The truck driver, indentified as Jerry D. Hale Jr., 32, of Huntington, was not injured, said DPS Trooper Bobby Perry.

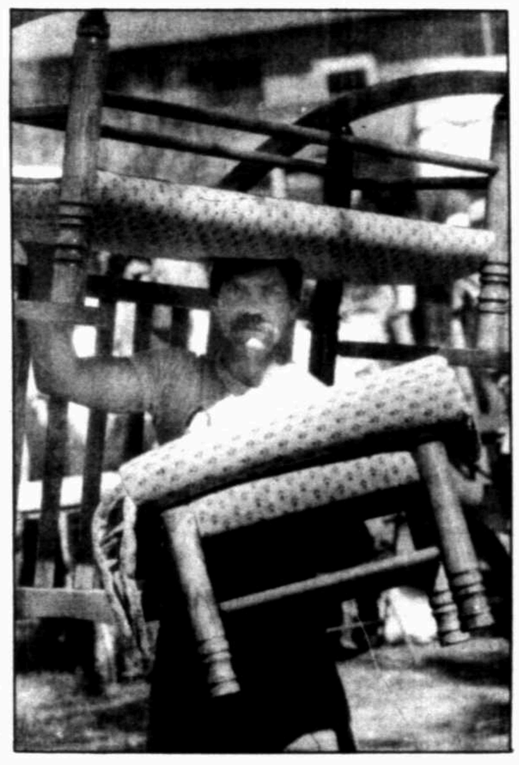

Perry said the eastbound car had crossed the center stripe and was returning to the eastbound lane when it and the westbound truck struck broadside about 3:45 p.m. Friday.

Thomas new DPS commander

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Thomas

Most visitors to the Midland office of the Texas Department of Public Safety probably don't realize it, but issuing driver's licenses is not the office's main concern.

The building on Loop 250 just south of Highway 80 is the regional headquarters for a 50-county area stretching from El Paso to Breckenridge and from Eagle Pass to Seminole, which is a lot of territory to cover for Maj. Dudley Thomas, the new regional commander.

"Time and distance will be the things that will be extremely difficult" in trying to administer the DPS' largest geographical region, said Thomas, who began his duties Sept. 1.

Thomas was transferred from Austin to replace Maj. Ira Dees, who has retired after 28 years with the department. For Thomas, a 46-year-old northeast Texas native, it's the latest step in a DPS career which began in 1960.

"Nearly everything I've ever done has been DPS," Thomas said. "Dad had been a deputy sheriff when I was a kid. I've always been interested in law-enforcement."

As Thomas rose through the ranks of the Highway Patrol, he moved around a lot, living in such places as Houston, Mineola and Mount Vernon.

"It affects your family life," said Thomas, who is married and has two children, a 19-year-old daughter and a 23-year-old son. Though there were "some sacrifices" involved in so many moves, "I think it's worth it."

Thomas had taken engineering classes at East Texas State, but went into the DPS "because I thought I might be able to have some impact." He eventually earned a bachelor's degree from Southwest Texas State. Adding to his educational credentials was a year at the Northwestern University Traffic Institute in Evanston, Ill., though the winter winds howling in from Lake Michigan were tough for a southern-bred boy to bear.

"It was a killer," he said, but it was another step in a career which has now brought him from Austin, where he was Highway Patrol Captain, to Midland.

As regional commander, Thomas oversees the Driver's License Service; the vehicle-inspection program; the License and Weight Service (which weighs trucks and supervises the transportation of hazardous materials); the Highway Patrol Service; a 24-hour communications department; and the Safety Education Service, which promotes defensive driving.

Also headquartered in Midland, but not under Thomas' direct command, are regional offices for the DPS narcotics and intelligence divisions and the Texas Rangers.

The DPS is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year, and Thomas will mark his 25th anniversary with the department in December. Looking back over his years of service, the biggest change he has seen was brought about by the introduction of the 55-miles-per-hour speed limit on highways in 1974.

"I don't think there's ever been a statute, including prohibition, which has met with the resistence" of this law, which was designed to cut down on gasoline use and traffic fatalities.

"The level of voluntary compliance (with highway speed limits) went way down" from about 80 percent to perhaps 15 percent, Thomas said, "And it has a trickle-down effect on other laws."

He hopes for a better compliance record on the state's new seatbelt law. Traffic deaths have decreased about 2-3 percent since 1984, "And we believe that the use of seatbelts will help" continue the downward trend.

Moving to Midland from Austin takes some getting used to, Thomas concedes, but he and his wife Brenda are looking forward to getting involved in their new community. Meeting new people is one of the good things about working for the DPS, he said:

"We deal with some of the finest people in the world, and some of the sorriest. But I always look for the good."

This Week in Government

Council, commissioners to meet jointly

Midland City Council has scheduled a public meeting at 4 p.m. Tuesday with the Midland County Commissioners as part of the council's regular meeting.

The joint session will be held in City Hall's basement conference room. Items to be discussed include:

— State Highway 158 construction beyond Interstate 20.

— City-County Health Department concerns, including budget allocations and EMS allocations.

County Commissioners

Midland County commissioners will hold a public hearing on the county's proposed tax rate at 4 p.m. Monday in the Midland County Courthouse and then will adopt the tax rate to fund the county's $14.3 million budget for 1986.

The rate is proposed at 19.9 cents per $100 valuation and is 7.9 percent above the effective tax rate.

In business earlier in the day, commissioners are to open bids for a pickup truck for the sheriff's office and for a motor-grader for the county's Road and Bridge Department, to consider a plan to comply with handicapped-related requirements for county buildings, to consider cancellation of West Park Subdivision, and are to consider signing a resolution honoring Exxon USA and its employees.

Volunteers available for museum tours

Las Manos volunteers, an auxiliary of the Museum of the Southwest, are available througout the week and on weekends to provide guided tours to youth from public and private schools during the upcoming school year.

The docenting program provided tours for over 3,000 students and visitors last year. Dr. Peggy Dildy, coordinator of elementary education with the Midland Independent School District, works with classroom teachers and the museum to schedule tours of featured exhibits for all fifth- and sixth-grade students.

Special training is provided for featured exhits by the Museum of the Southwest staff and consultants in museum education. Nancy Berry, curator of educationwith the Meadows Museum at Southern Methodist University, will conduct a workshop for about 30 Las Manos docents on Tuesday at the museum.

The seminar is designed to prepare docents to conduct tours of "Karl Bodmer's Journey Through America," an exhibit featuring water colors of the 1830's American frontier.

Out of the closet

It's exactly the sort of topic that 10 years ago or so was taboo conversation at social functions in staunchly conservative parts of the country. Maybe that fact actually helped it become a topic society no longer can avoid to confront. "It" is homosexuality and the nightmarish disease called AIDS which, suddenly, has thrown open the closet door.

The spread of the mystery disease the name of which is an acronym for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome and the report this summer that popular film star Rock Hudson is suffering from the disease startled the world into reluctant recognition that this taboo topic is not going to stay silent. It is going to demand the attention of every segment of the American population, along with medical researchers from around the globe, because it no longer threatens only those people classified as homosexuals or "gays" but married heterosexuals, people who receive blood transfusions, even children.

AIDS is a widespread medical concern. First diagnosed in 1981, it already has killed half of its 12,000 victims, and it usually proves fatal within two years of its onset, according to information from Editorial Research Reports.

It was once referred to as the "gay plague" because it was prevalent among homosexuals, but now it's apparent that it is not restricted to the homosexual population. Says Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases at Bethesda, Md., "The virus that causes AIDS somehow got introduced into the homosexual population in which the lifestyle tends to spread the disease, but it is not and never has been a gay disease. And that has been a problem of public perception."

Lately the federal government has been giving more attention to the spreading problem of this mysterious disease, largely in light of its threat to the public in general. Only this week federal health officials issued a recommendation that any man who has had a sexual encounter with another man even once in the last eight years refrain from donating blood. The recommendation falls short of actually asserting that any man who has ever had homosexual sex is at increased risk for AIDS. However, Susan Cruzan, a spokeswoman for the Food and Drug Administration noted, "... We would certainly consider them able to be carriers."

That appears predictable in light of the disease's history and its spread, which is expected to continue and to reach 250,000 cases in the United States alone by 1990.

The federal government is correct in getting more concerned about the AIDS problem and in tightening up regulations regarding blood donors, which is proven to be one way in which the disease can be transmitted to the heterosexual population. This disease deserves the attention it is garnering from a humanitarian standpoint.

Avoiding talking about this disease won't help. Maybe increased regulations and research will, though.

Another View:

'Reaganomics' works

President Reagan once commented that after "Reaganomics" started working, his critics stopped calling it Reaganomics. Quite true. So don't expect the White House to get much credit in liberal circles for the fact that the nation last year experienced its first significant decline in the poverty rate in nearly a decade.

Liberals already are protesting that President Reagan's policies had nothing to do with the fact that 1.8 million Americans recently managed to climb above the poverty level. To admit that Mr. Reagan's pro-private enterprise philosophy had anything to do with the economic good news would be political bad news for the tax-and-spend liberals.

First, the facts: Gordon W. Green Jr., the man in charge of socioeconomic statistics for the Census Bureau, said that "economic recovery and (the reduced level of) inflation are important factors in the continuing decline of poverty."

President Reagan hailed the fact that the poverty rate had declined nearly one percentage point to 14.4 percent as "news for which every American can be thankful. I believe these numbers are further proof that the greatest enemy of poverty is the free enterprise system," Mr. Reagan said.

But next, we hear from the nay-sayers:

"There is little reason to believe this will be more than a one-year phenomenon," said Robert Greenstein, head of a Washington-based think tank.

Christopher Matthews, an aide to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, said: "The bottom line is that there are more people in poverty today than before this (Reagan) crowd took office."

In other words, Mr. Reagan's critics are telling us not to be fooled even if we all become wealthy under Reaganomics, that the dollars in our pockets are illusory and even detrimental.

President Reagan's economic policies, no matter how much they benefit the public, will never be acknowledged as anything but disaster by his more dedicated critics. They are firmly committed to the precept that the only way to help the poor is through increased taxation and bigger federal budgets.

Fortunately, most Americans can read economic facts better than Speaker O'Neill and his like-minded advocates of the thoroughly discredited "tax-and-spend" experiments of some previous administrations.

The latest Gallup Poll indicates that 65 percent of Americans approve of President Reagan's job performance. Not since the "honeymoon" period just after his inauguration has the president received a significantly higher public approval rating.

Mr. Reagan's high public rating tops those received by President Richard Nixon, Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Harry Truman at this point in their tenures.

It is reasonable to believe that a high percentage of the 1.8 million Americans who have recently climbed above the poverty level also approve of the president's performance.

They might even go so far as to praise Reaganomics.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Sept. 8, the 251st day of 1985. There are 114 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Fifty years ago, on Sept. 8, 1935, Sen. Huey P. Long, the "Kingfish" of Louisiana politics, was shot and mortally wounded inside the state capitol in Baton Rouge. He died two days later at age 42.

On this date:

In 1565, a Spanish expedition established the first permanent European settlement in North America at what is now St. Augustine, Fla.

In 1664, the Dutch surrendered New Amsterdam to the British, who renamed it New York.

In 1900, Galveston, Texas, was struck by a hurricane that killed 6,000 people.

In 1951, a peace treaty with Japan was signed by 48 other nations at a conference in San Francisco.

Synthetic Fuels' fate rests with Senate

WASHINGTON — World oil prices continue to slide. OPEC sheiks are driving last year's limousines and watching with dismay as their cutthroat cartel dissolves like a sand castle at high tide.

Jack Anderson

But the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp., created five years ago to find fuel substitutes that would save the country from disaster in an anticipated era of skyrocketing oil prices, is still hanging in there, long after the price skyrocket has fizzled out. The House voted a few weeks ago to strip SFC of all but $1 billion in phase-out funds, and the corporation's generously paid employees are now pinning their hopes on the Senate for continued slurping room at the public trough.

It should be an easy decision for the Senate to make. For years we've been chronicling the mismanagement, opulence and internal bickering that have made Synfuels the spending Spindletop of Washington boondoggles. It has brought in a gargantuan gusher of gravy for the corporations it has lavished its grants and subsidies on, but not a drop of fuel has yet been produced by the squandering of millions of taxpayers' dollars.

Pursuing their wastrel ways to the bitter end, SFC's directors plan to beat Congress to the punch by giving away $744 million to three lucky companies this week. Obviously, if the money has already been spent, Congress can't take it away from the agency.

One of the corporate welfare clients lined up for the mid-September handout is Union Oil, which would get $500 million for an oil shale project in Colorado. That's in addition to $400 million the company has already received. But even with the infusion of nearly $1 billion in Synfuels largess, Union Oil is so uncertain about the future of its plant that it has suspended further attempts to get it working for at least five months.

How in the world has Synfuels managed to stay in business for five unproductive years in the face of $200 billion federal budget deficits? By a one-two combination of doomsday pessimism and pie-in-the-sky optimism.

Synfuels officials have warned Congress that the United States is toying with strategic suicide if it fails to develop alternative energy sources and is left at the mercy of the oil sheiks. On the other hand, they persist in dazzling Congress with the fantasy that Synfuels will actually turn a profit some fine day. Last year, for example, SFC chairman Ed Noble assured Congress that once the synthetic fuels start flowing the corporation will "have a net profit of roughly $6 billion."

Fortunately, not everyone on Capitol Hill was blinded by this snow job. Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., was skeptical of the Synfuels claim of future profitability, and asked the General Accounting Office to turn its cold-eyed auditors loose on the SFC projections. Our associate Corky Johnson has reviewed the GAO study that resulted.

The congressional auditors found that Noble's rosy estimates were based on voodoo calculations. Actually, they concluded, the corporation would lose several billion dollars on just a handful of projects.

The crucial figure in any prediction of synthetic fuel projects' success or failure, of course, is the price of the fuels — primarily oil — with which their products will be competing. If oil prices go through the roof, synfuels companies will prosper by offering competitive prices; if oil prices go down, synthetic fuels will be priced out of the market. It's that simple.

What the GAO auditors found was that SFC officials' optimistic claims of future profits were the result of feeding wildly exaggerated future oil prices into their computers. The GAO investigators compared SFC's oil-price predictions with those of respected industry forecasters and found that the figures weren't even close. In one case, the SFC estimate of the future price of oil was 50 percent higher than that of the professional analysts.

"Our comparison showed that SFC's price projections were generally much higher than the others," the GAO reported.

GEORGE F. WILL

Fred is dead, but Victoria's doing fine!

CHEVY CHASE VILLAGE, Md. — Fred is dead and philosophic thoughts fill all minds at the Will home. One mind is especially somber. On the eve of her fifth birthday, Victoria, special friend and confidante of Fred the goldfish, has seen death and has decided, after mature deliberation, that life is still good. The time will come when she will see that there is much to be said for mortality.

George F. Will

Fred was named by Victoria for Fred Lynn, the Baltimore Orioles centerfielder. (Victoria certainly has got her father's number.) Fred lived into the sear and yellow leaf and died of the most natural cause, old age. Neither cholesterol nor automobiles nor handguns played a part. Irrational eating and drinking, negligence about exercise, and similar foolish behaviors kill only creatures who can think and who therefore stand at the pinnacle of creation.

Victoria noticed Fred's decline the night before he died. Her attention wandered to the tank beside her bed, even though her father was giving an especially stirring reading of "Bread and Jam for Frances," a cautionary tale about a young badger who has an incontinent appetite for bread and jam. Victoria noticed that Fred, usually a trencherman, was peckish. At 10:23 the next morning, he died.

Victoria, having glimpsed, for the first time, the skull beneath the skin (in this case, the scales) of life, needed a few words from Leon Kass, a University of Chicago philosopher and biologist and medical doctor. Kass has just published a collection of essays to which I shall refer again in December when I award it the citation as the year's best book. It is "Toward a More Natural Science: Biology and Human Affairs" (Free Press). The essay Victoria needed in her sorrow is "Mortality and Morality: The Virtues of Finitude."

Kass says that retarding senescence and preserving youthfulness is part of the scientific project of controlling biological aging. These objectives are continuous with the aspirations of medicine — longer life, better health. But suppose sensational success; imagine an indefinite extension of life. Consider, Kass says, what would be lost.

Could life without the limit of mortality be serious? Homer's immortals are beautiful and vigorous — and shallow and frivolous. Their passions are only transiently engaged. They are spectators of the moral dramas of life. Those dramas are the monopoly of mortals. As Kass says, "Mortality makes life matter — not only in the chemist's sense." This is in part because finitude — the sense of not having world enough and time — is a spur to achievement.

Kass argues that not only seriousness but some beauty, too, is related to impermanence. He refers not just to the beauty of a flower or sunset, but especially to the distinctively human beauty of good character, of virtue. Immortals, says Kass, can not be noble. They can not meet the challenge of transcending concern with mere survival; they can not put their lives at risk. (This indicates why pacifism, far from being a form of idealism, is a renunciation of all ideals in favor of a mere material thing, biological existence.) "Immortality," say Kass, "is a kind of oblivion — like death itself."

The case Kass makes for mortality does not make a virtue of necessity. Rather it says that the necessity of death is the mother of virtue. The human longing that is assuaged by love and addressed by religion — a longing deriving from the sense of incompleteness — can not be cured by longevity, however protracted. It can not be cured by "more of the same."

Far from bringing happiness, the obsessive pursuit of longevity distracts us from the soul's natural quest. It is a distraction from the duty to master the fine art of living well, which requires rising above concern for mere bodily continuance.

Biology teaches what moral philosophy concludes: We are social, communal creatures, with strong impulses, physical and spiritual, for reproduction. We are constituted for concern for the species; our lives point beyond themselves, toward perpetuation. Children are our participation in the enduring.

A craving for physical immortality is childish in the sense of being narcissistic and incompatible with a mature devotion to posterity. It also is hostile to children. Children are the bearers of our hopes and if they are to flower, Kass notes, "we must wither and give ground."

Those who come after, who take our place, are "life's answer to mortality, and their presence in one's house is a constant reminder that one no longer belongs to the frontier generation." That is why to have children is to come as close as is possible to reconciliation with the human condition.

That is what Fred's death, and Victoria's tears, caused me, with Kass's incomparable help, to think. But all I told Victoria is that Fred is in fish heaven. She can read Kass when she has mastered "Frances."

Fred now rests beneath Maryland soil. His tank is home to a member of the next generation, Eddie. Eddie is named for Eddie Murray, the Orioles first baseman. Victoria, obviously, is fine.

RUSSELL BAKER

Life's great—but things are breaking down!

We stand at the outermost frontier. Human enlightenment is far advanced. We can now say "chairperson" without feeling absurd. Technological progress is miraculous. We have the digital wristwatch.

Russell Baker

Yet things are breaking down.

Three weeks after I bought a roll of 22-cent stamps from the postal authorities, the stickum had dampened sufficiently to glue the entire roll tightly together. Stamps ripped apart in my hands when I struggled to salvage enough of one to pass the Postal Service's rigorous inspection. In a temper, I hurled them out the window.

"Things are breaking down," I shouted.

The splendor of our science tells us everything about breakdown. Old folks had to get by with only appendicitis, shingles and boils, but we have a stunning array of medical terrors. We have stress. We have Type A behavior. We have stroke induced by insertion of artificial hearts. Thanks to the electronic picture miracle, we have doctors available at breakfast to inform us about the newest bodily plagues.

Yet things are breaking down.

"Speaking of the Postal Service," said a woman who had seen me throw the useless stamps out the window, "what about the time the mailman threatened not to deliver any more mail unless you shoveled the snow off the steps?" Yes, I recalled that and recalled speaking to the mailman:

"Shame! Now as we stand at the outermost frontier, are we to have couriers whom snow can stay from the swift completion of their appointed rounds?" Too late, I realized he was drunk.

"Things are breaking down," I told him.

We have psychiatrists, and politicians to give comfort or warning. We have pills to distract one's mind from the breakdown. The young can be placed in front of miraculous boxes producing incredibly fast-changing pictures, which leave their minds too incapable of sustained thought to realize that things are breaking down. Persons unwilling to risk chemical or electronic help can be persuaded to think happier thoughts if cautioned that it is unpatriotic to notice that things are breaking down.

Yet things are breaking down.

Two months after ordering a washing machine for a vacation house he bought, my friend Bob came by to weep. He had been to the huge national mail-order retail-house outlet that had taken his order. Why hadn't the machine been delivered? The human robot manning the inquiry booth checked his electronic miracle box and said, "Because you never ordered one." Bob said the miracle box was an imbecile. The robot said, "You can reorder with me now if you want, or buy one someplace else."

"Things are breaking down," Bob said.

Yet the machinery of efficiency has never been more complete. Police squads and ingenious barricades at transportation centers and public buildings, combined with seat belts and ingeniously designed highways, insure an all-time standard of safety. We have the most advanced weapons ever built. We have the car burglar alarm.

Yet things are breaking down.

A young relative of mine, ticketed by highway police for driving 10 miles an hour over the speed limit, recently had her insurance canceled, though she had 14 years of driving experience without ever being previously ticketed for a moving violation. The police miracle box had reported her ticket to the insurance industry, which had not been turning a profit in her part of the country. Because she shared ownership of the car with her husband, for good measure the insurance company canceled his insurance, too.

He phoned me long distance, wanting me to tell him, "Things are breaking down, boy, and the best thing for you to do is set your brain down in front of that miracle box with the fast-changing pictures or else take a pill."

He could not reach me. I had thrown the telephone wire out the window in a fury at a mechanical voice that had been constantly telling me to dial my miracle calling-card number again because the miracle number I had just dialed was "not valid."

It had got so that I had to dial the "not valid" number three or four times before the mechanical voice would say "thank you" and let the call go through. So during a marathon session when the voice had told me for the fifth time running that my perfectly valid card number was "not valid," I told the voice, "Things are breaking down," and threw the phone wire out the window.

That was childish, because we stand at the outermost frontier where human enlightenment, far advanced, permits us to say "chairperson" without feeling absurd. We have the digital wristwatch, we have stress — not just boils and shingles — and we have the artificial heart that can induce strokes. We have the car burglar alarm, the human robot, the miracle box. We have couriers threatening to be stayed from the swift completion of their appointed rounds by snow.

Yet things are breaking down.

Bill Modisett

Just about everyone seems to have a suggestion for President Reagan regarding the best way to approach his November meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. I do, too.

Mr. President, the only way you can possibly fully prepare yourself for the stresses and demands of the upcoming meeting is to: Take a vacation trip with a 2½-year-old.

Don't giggle, Mr. President. It's unstatesmanlike.

Negotiating with the hard-headed Soviets really can't be all that different — or more difficult — than negotiating with a hard-headed 2½-year-old. Both of them are:

— Demanding.
— Frustrating.
— Inexplicably irritable.
— Fascinating.
— Unpredictable.

So, it stands to reason that anyone who can master the delicate art of keeping a 2½-year-old reasonably pacified on a vacation (which includes, among other horrors, an 11-hour drive to reach the destination) has to be well on the road in preparations for sitting down at the table with the Soviets. In both instances, one must be:

— Constantly alert for unanticipated changes.
— Prepared to be subjected to a great deal of bluffing.
— Capable of addressing unreasonable demands.

Besides, Mr. President, whether negotiating with the Soviets or traveling with a 2½-year-old, one has to remain always at the ready to end up doing nothing but playing games!

With the start of school each year, football excitement again begins to build.

I've heard a number of individuals who've moved to Midland from other states remark that they've never seen a state in which high school football has such a following or received so much emphasis.

That's probably so. I've heard that for years and from what I've seen, it's true. All of Texas is that way, but I think West Texas probably takes top award for being rabid about high school football. Why? Probably for a lot of reasons, but one indisputable factor is the vast land area of this region of the state.

It isn't uncommon for a football team to have to ride three hours on a bus just to reach the opponent's community. And typically all the parents, friends and supporters of the visiting team will follow, taking off work early to make the trip, if necessary.

That breeds loyalty and a degree of team spirit unsurpassed in my experience.

Is it any wonder West Texans are so crazy about their high school football teams? Not really.

SPEAKING OUT

Skits, magazine material may be too explicit

By ALICE PATTERSON

Alice Patterson of Odessa is president of Permian Basin Eagle Forum. She has lived in Odessa since 1970.

I am writing in response to the letter from Dana Frazee, executive director of Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin, and Tricia Shelton, producer/director of Teen Esteem Machine, which appeared in the "Speaking Out" column on Aug. 11.

Since I was the one Mrs. Frazee and Mrs. Shelton quoted as saying on KOSA-TV news that I enjoyed the Teen Esteem Machine performance, I thought I should set the record straight. It seems there is a little variation from what I actually said and the ladies' explanation of my quote.

First of all, let me say that I did see the Teen Esteem Machine performance at the Globe Theatre on July 26 and have also read Bridging the Gap. Bridging the Gap is the magazine which Mrs. Frazee and Mrs. Shelton describe as "an extremely thoughtful and wide-ranging source of information for teens. We use it in our Straight Talk II classes for young teens accompanied by their parents."

I agree that the magazine is a "wide-ranging source of information." It is so wide-ranging that I believe most parents, educators and church officials would be shocked to read the quotes which had to be left out of the full-page ad because of their offensive nature. Only mild quotes about children feeling a need to tune out parents' voices, trying out beliefs (such as stealing a candy bar from the school cafeteria), and suggestions to a teen-ager who is having intercourse or considering pregnancy to get facts from somewhere other than parents or health classes were printed in the ad. All of those I have named are from Bridging the Gap as were most of the quotes listed in the ad. I have the magazine in my possession if anyone is interested in seeing statements made in the magazine which we could not print because they were too explicit.

Now for the performance. I would like to state that I thought the young people in the Teen Esteem Machine did an excellent job as far as acting goes, and I do not fault them with any of the objectionable elements of the skits. It is the content of the skits which is disturbing to me, not the actors. And to set the record straight, I did not state on KOSA that I "enjoyed the performance," as Mrs. Frazee and Mrs. Shelton suggested. What I did say was, "And in these skits, they were so well done, that you would find yourself laughing even if you did not agree with it." That is one of the reasons I feel Teen Esteem Machine is so harmful for teen-agers. As they watch the skits, and everyone is laughing, they are being de-sensitized to right and wrong.

One instance of offensive material to me was the monologue by a teen girl who equates abstinence in sexual intercourse before marriage with "becoming a cake of ice." Also there was the girl and boy who are pressured by friends to "do it." They respond that they will make a mutual decision — when they are ready for sex and are responsible (which means using birth control, not getting married). "To go to bed or not?" "Nothing is good or bad, but thinking makes it so." There are no absolutes — no right, no wrong — only individual decisions.

Planned Parenthood's attitudes and philosophies are throughout the skits. Planned Parenthood's Five Year Plan, 1976-1980, a published document, states their "need to infiltrate professional organizations and community health agencies" with the goal of "asserting leadership in promoting sex education among youth with the objective of modifying attitudes, behavior change and/or skills." A large part of this behavior change seems to be aimed at parents for trying to pass on their beliefs to their children. It is the parents' responsibility to teach their children everything they can to make them strong, responsible, and principled citizens. That, in my opinion, includes some clear-cut explanations of right and wrong.

Mrs. Frazee and Mrs. Shelton also want us to make a clear distinction between the local affiliate of Planned Parenthood of America and the mother organization. If the local Planned Parenthood affiliate does not subscribe to the federal standards and ideals, as it seems the ladies are endeavoring to lead us to believe, I suggest that they change their name and stop paying dues to the national organization.

Planned Parenthood also seems to be trying to make their message of "right or wrong depends on your own perception of it" more palatable by sugar-coating it with information on suicide, drinking, and alcohol abuse. That's like trying to purify a glass of arsenic with a few teaspoons of water. Of course, some will swallow it because of the attractive packaging and will not read the dangerous ingredients on the label. Others will not be taken in by the ploy. Not all the signers of the ad saw the troupe performance, it's true. But many people are already educated about Planned Parenthood's activities in birth control without parental involvement and sex education with no moral absolutes.

Readers' views on: Seat belt law

Seat belt law takes government too far

While it is good common sense to wear seat belts, I have to go along with Sen. Roy Blake's (D-Nacogdoches) opinion that the seat belt law takes state government too far into the private lives of Texans and should be repealed.

This law should be repealed solely for the fact that our dearly beloved governor, Mark (Tax 'Em Where It Hurts the Most) White, signed it into effect.

Let me explain that comment above. It seems that every time I go to license my various vehicles and equipment I have a tendency to cast a glance over my shoulder expecting Big Brother Mark to be standing there with cool, green-stained, dry palms, anxiously rubbing them together with calculator clicking wildly in his tax conscious mind.

I am seriously considering flagrantly violating this law, even though most folks will consider it a foolhardy decision. But really, isn't enough enough?

Next will it be no smoking in your vehicle? Ever had a cigarette fall between your legs while driving? Dangerous? Ever had a bee smack you in the face while driving? How are they going to police all the fates? How are they going to try to save my life next? I am really weary and leary of people trying to save my life.

Go back to arresting drunk drivers, put them away, and let me kill myself in the privacy of my own vehicle — without Big Brother looking in and constantly lining his pockets with such as the big kickback Detroit doled out.

When are we Texans going to wise up and put a stop to Big Brother government, not to mention bad governorship in our state?

Let's write our representatives and tell them. I'm not against seat belts; I'm against the way it was handled.

The lure of big bucks surely can't fell us folks out here in Dreamland 'cause the big bucks aren't coming to us common people. The bucks, big and small, stop at the mansion in Austin.

Seat belts take time, bothersome

I would like to offer a suggestion that could lighten the trouble with seat belts.

Why cannot the law be that you buckle up if you leave the city limits, whereby you would be going faster than in town? They do take time and are bothersome to many who have not used them regularly.

It does seem unnecessary to have to buckle up when a person leaves one store to go to another a block away. In fact, I went to Safeway, then to "M" System and this is only a half a block.

Those traveling on the highway may be safer with them, but one cannot be going fast by going one block or a few blocks.

Most people have to go 20 miles an hour as they go through so many school zones. So why would seat belts be necessary in the city limits?

Time spent bussing students is wasted

Recently I spent several hours following around buses that my kids were on, making sure for their peace of mind as well as mine that they were heading to the correct school.

This is stupid! The kids are scared to death besides being tired of spending several hours on buses that are added to school hours.

My kids, as well as others, get on the bus at 6:40 a.m., get off at one school, on another bus to go to another school. That's two hours before classes even start at 8:40 a.m. for them. Then when school is out, they get on one bus to go back to the other school, get off, then on a different bus to get home, which is not until 5 p.m. That's a total of 3¼ hours spent riding a bus plus the seven hours of classtime every day! Then it's time for homework because it is so late. What a waste! Each year just gets worse.

You can bet the children (if they ever had any) of the big shots who decided that busing was good for our kids never spent or even thought about the hours spent sitting in a crowded, noisy bus every day.

I feel so sorry for all these kids and there is nothing that can be done.

School board decision step in right direction

The recent decision by the school board, favoring on-campus hours, was difficult at best, but from the standpoint of drug abuse, it was a bold step in the right direction.

It will enable the school system and the city of Midland to jointly put forth a strong statement that Midland is a no-nonsense town when dealing with narcotic problems.

'Traveling ambassador' deserves to be praised

Front page material? You better believe it!

Who is Marcelle Watts?

After reading Marcelle Watts letter in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, I have concluded that she can't see beyond her obviously high altitude nose.

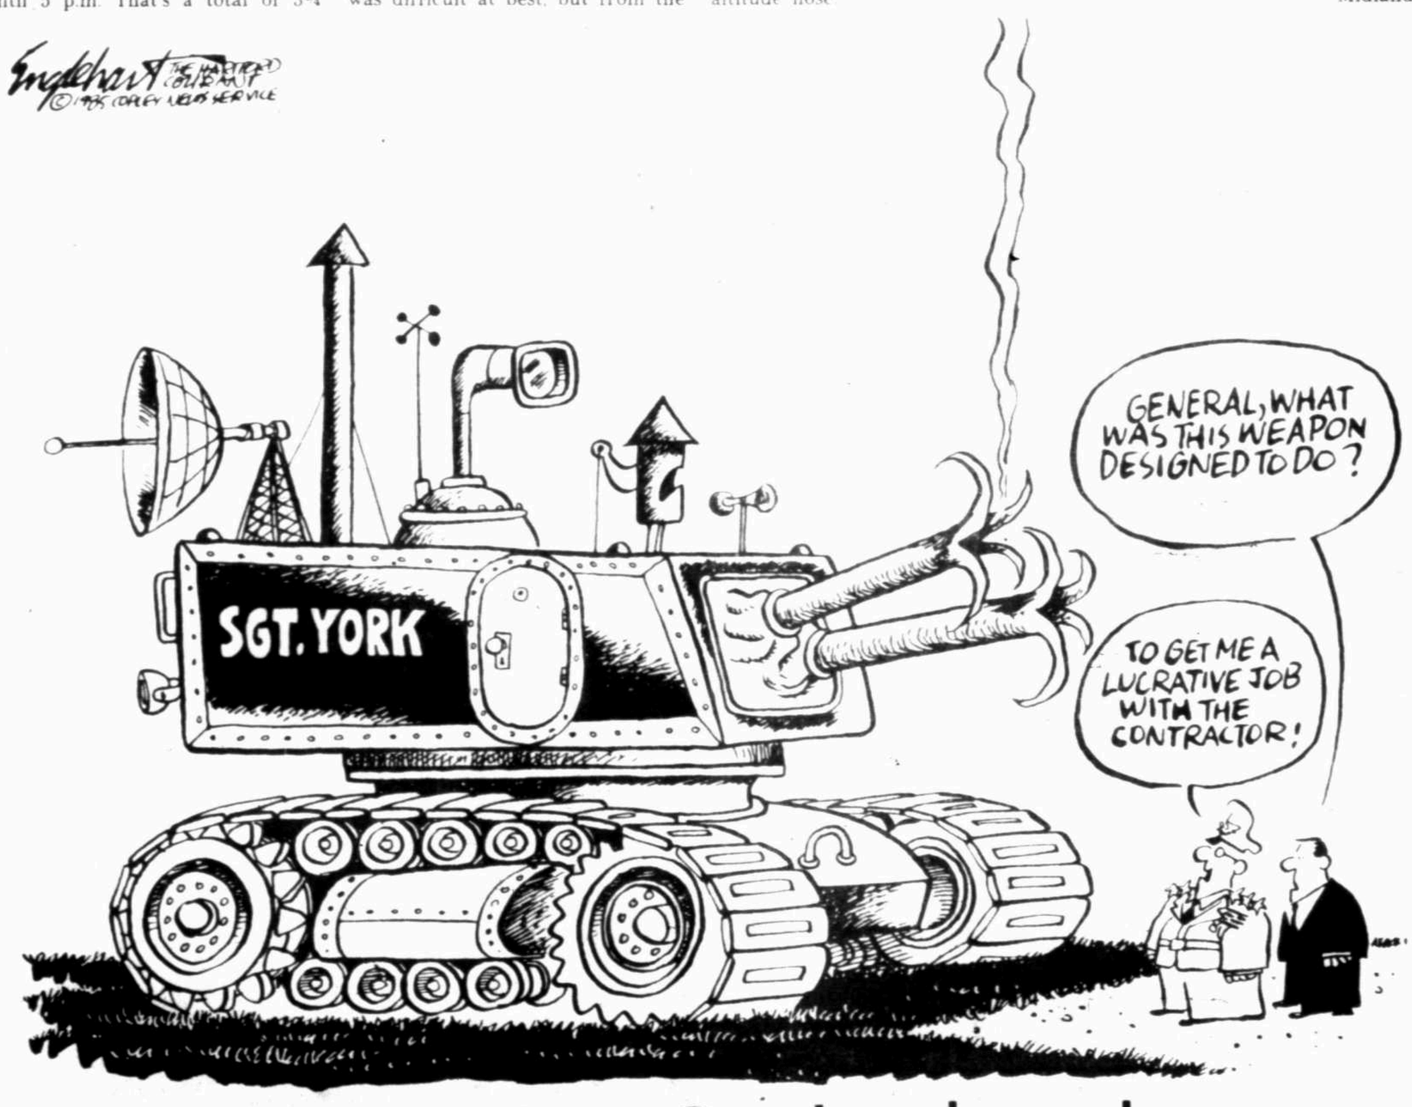

In the past, high regards and praise have followed those individuals who have traveled abroad to represent our community. I see no reason why Marcelle Watts feels that Miss Dyer should not enjoy the praise and publication afforded her predecessors.

I can't believe that Marcelle Watts expected a rosy report on Africa from our traveling ambassador. Marcelle Watts obviously reads the front page of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Surely Marcelle Watts is aware of the turmoil that exists in ALL of Africa.

Hats off to you Miss Dyer, I'm proud of you and I'm sure there are a few Midlanders out there that will join me.

Senate delegation returns repeating Gorbachev theme

By WILLIAM RANDOLPh HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — It's back to work or school for most Americans, except for a few straggling senators returning to Congress from far-flung junkets abroad. The number of foreign trips at taxpayers' expense has fortunately been reduced by a fair amount in the last few years, but there was one to Moscow that seemed to me quite disheartening.

A delegation of three U.S. senators — two Democrats and one Republican — conferred with Soviet party leader Mikhail Gorbachev. The senatorial team, I found, didn't ask hardball questions. Eager to get American TV time, the senators repeated principally the Gorbachev theme that the U.S.S.R. is "flexible," and seeks compromise, but the Reagan administration foments hatred and distrust of the Soviets.

Well, Soviet intentions and deceit have been recorded for some 60-odd years. Back 17 years ago, for instance, when the late President Lyndon B. Johnson held a two-day summit at Glassboro, N.J., with Soviet Premier Aleksei Kosygin, the visitor from Moscow startled L.B.J. and his advisers by pounding the conference table and raising his voice to emphasize: "Defensive weapons are moral, offensive weapons are immoral."

The shoe is on the other foot today. With the huge U.S.S.R. lead in nuclear weapons over the U.S., the Soviet Union is going all out to kill American efforts for a defensive weapon, in this case the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), critically called "Star Wars."

Cranking up the Kremlin's well-lubricated propaganda machine, Gorbachev told the visiting senate delegation that he was prepared to be "flexible" in his upcoming summit meeting at Geneva in November with President Reagan, who has the toughest job in the world.

During a 3½-our session with the U.S. senators, the Russian leader criticized what he called American "militarization of outer space," and, contrary to his predecessor's remarks about the morality of defensive weapons, he opposed any research on defensive weapons that is not carried out in laboratories.

Specifically, he said that if the U.S. gave up its research on the Strategic Defense Initiative program, Russia would make "radical proposals" to reduce strategic and intermediate range nuclear arms. At no point did Gorbachev bother to mention the offer by Reagan for both superpowers to eliminate all stockpiles of nuclear weapons possessed by each country.

Obviously, Gorbachev is seeking to position himself for his meeting at Geneva with Reagan. For his part, Reagan has said that he is willing to meet the Soviets half way in an effort to solve the problems.

And interestingly, Reagan challenged Moscow to give him the same exposure to the Soviet people that their leaders have had to the American public when he said that he would like to have "direct" access to the Soviet people as a way to improve relations between the two nations.

Reagan's comments about appearing on Soviet TV were made in response to an interview in Time magaine in which the Russian leader said relations with the U.S. were becoming worse despite the approaching summit.

Gorbachev accused the Reagan administration of waging a campaign of hatred against the Soviet Union and did it in an American publication. The Time interview appeared to accept Grobachev's attacks on the U.S. without questioning him on Soviet policies toward the West, let alone his East European captive nations.

The supremacy of Soviet nuclear weaponry is described in letter by Sen. James McClure (R.-Idaho). The senator, who wants a joint hearing on the estimate of Soviet growth in nuclear arms, has been researching and collecting data for a long time.

A couple of aspects of his own report are troubling to me as they would be to most Americans. First, it shows the Soviets' stockpile of strategic nuclear warheads growing to over 12,000 by 1990 within the provisions of Salt II. Moreover, these warheads will be deployed on modern systems like submarines and the SS-22 nuclear missiles.

Second, the report also reveals that the Soviets built a capacity for a nationwide anti-ballistic missile system that could be deployed in what military people call a "breakout" of the ABM treaty.

Contrary to what the senators brought back from their talk with Gorbachev and the Time magazine interview, former President Richard Nixon had this to say in a forthcoming article to appearing in "National Review":

"The Soviets' goal is a victory without war. Ours is peace without victory. Thus the major danger to the United States is not nuclear war but surrender to nuclear coercion."

Tuesday last day for MC registration

From Staff Reports

Tuesday is the final day for full-time students to register for credit courses during Midland College's fall semester. Those who plan on taking from one to three courses can late register through Sept. 18.

Registration is handled in the Office of Student Services, located in the Administration Building, between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m., Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday.

By Friday, the enrollment reached, 3,184. This is just 72 behind the count for the same time last year. The 1984 fall semester's final enrollment count was a record 3,502.

"By the time late registration is concluded, we expect that our head count will be very near last year's," said Dee Windsor, associate dean of student and registrar. "Much of it will depend upon those people who decide at the last minute to take one or two classes.

Windsor urged prospective students to register as quickly as possible. He noted that some classes are closing due to space limitations and that others might be cancelled if their enrollment count remains low.

Course bulletins listing classes being offered this fall are available in all Midland banks, the Chamber of Commerce, the Midland County Library and the college Administration Building. Information about classes may be obtained by calling 684-7851, extension 166.

Akins dedicates sports course for handicapped

From Staff Reports

Participants in wheelchairs and on walkers and motorized carts queued up Saturday morning to "workout" as Mayor Thane Akins cut the ribbon at dedicatory ceremonies at the new Wells Fargo Gamefield, a wheelchair sports course for the handicapped.

The course, consisting of 20 exercises at 10 stations, was dedicated by members of Midland Parks and Recreation, the Optimists Club, Midland Parks Commission Board, Cerebral Palsy Center and others.

The project, already established nationally — largely due to grants from the Wells Fargo Gamefield Grant Committee of San Francisco, Calif., was constructed by the Parks Department and the Optimists Club.

"This is something we have been working on for several years," said a spokesman for the Parks Department. "We are very grateful to the Optimists for helping."

Akins acknowledged the course as a "welcome addition to the park," and presented a plaque of appreciation to the Optimists before cutting the blue ribbon strung across the first station.

The course is divided into three areas for warm-up, conditioning and agility and cool-down exercises. Participants are encouraged to take their pulse rate regularly and are offered a "course extension" if desired. The course extension involves leaving the gamefield, a large square concrete slab with wooden posts and exercise equipmennt, for "uninterrupted aerobic activity."

The participants may exercise at three different fitness levels, equivalent to beginning joggers, runners in training and competetive athletes.

The program was conceived by sports medical experts at the Stanford University Heart Disease Prevention Center and the Arizona Heart Institute.

Houston artists paint 'trompe l'oiel' on blank Victoria wall

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK

VICTORIA (AP) — In the world of French art, the technique of using shadows to create a three-dimensional perspective is known as "trompe l'oiel," meaning "fools the eye."

Houston artists Susan and David Frye have done just that in downtown Victoria, turning an 80-year-old brick wall into a colorful representation of a turn-of-the-century street scene.

The effect is so authentic that pigeons flying into the nearly block-long scene try to land on the "windows" of the wall and instead get stunned when they bump into a flat surface.

"It was intententional, with shadows and things like that," Susan Frye says. "If we fooled the birds, we must have done a pretty good job."

The lights and sidewalk are real. The dozen businesses depicted on the 3,000-square-foot mural are real-looking, complete with a dog walking toward a fire hydrant and a boy tossing a paper airplane out of a second-story window.

Victoria Bank and Trust Co. commissioned the project last year after some old buildings across the street from the bank were razed for a parking lot, leaving a blank wall in the heart of town.

"We wanted to do something as a salute to the business community of the early days," says Jimmy Traber, the bank's executive vice president. "So we selected 1910, did a bunch of research as to the type of businesses that were here and came up with a design that was representative of that period."

The project then went to Houston-based Flat Lizard Graphics, an illustration and design studio.

"We did several sketches of different ideas," says owner Dan Glidden. "They (the bank) selected the old storefronts, which gave them the opportunity to show a replica of their original building.

"You can tell from the street that it's painted, but if you don't really know, you accept it as storefronts," he said.

Glidden's firm constructed a three-eighths-scale model of the project, then let the Frye's bring the model to life on the wall. They started in October and finished in May. The work, done with house paint, should last at least 10 years, according to Glidden.

"We would like to do more of this," David Frye says. "It's the most unselfish form of art. Everyone enjoys it. You don't have to wait for visiting hours to enjoy it. You just walk up to it."

The mural, 24 feet high and 124 feet long, will be dedicated in ceremonies Sept. 21. It's also to be reproduced on postcards in conjunction with the Texas Sesquicentennial, Traber says.

EPA says firms sold regular gas as unleaded

HOUSTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency is seeking fines of $1.5 million from 10 gasoline distributors and retailers in Houston for allegedly selling regular gas as unleaded gas to make an extra profit.

Richard Wilson, director of EPA's office of mobile sources in Washington, said Friday that 60 shipments of leaded gasoline were sold to motorists as unleaded fuel from about July 1984 until December 1984.

Agency officials said the crackdown was the result of a six-month EPA investigation that started in December.

"We think we have evidence that everybody in the chain knew what was going on and was making money on it," Wilson said. "It was a scam of the first order."

The EPA charged the mislabeled fuel was sold at six Abco Food Stores operated by Lion Boulus and at four Ana Food Stores operated by his brother, Assaud Boulos.

The EPA also charged that mislabeled fuel was sold at the OST Food Store, run by Fouad Mekeessi and the Handee Stop, operated at the time by Alvin Keil.

The EPA is seeking penalties of $240,000 from Abco for 40 violations; $27,000 from Ana for 12 violations; $5,000 from the OST Food Store for 5 violations and $4,000 from Handee Stop for 4 violations.

"A mistake was made when leaded gas was put in the wrong tank," he said. "It was corrected as soon as it was brought to our attention. We will be responsible for any damages caused, and we will work with the EPA to resolve this situation."

Gas distributors and transporters named by the EPA as violators were Total Gas and Energy Corp. of Houston, a $348,000 penalty for 58 violations; Gatten Enterprises Inc. and Richard D. Gatten Jr., both of Lufkin, $60,000 each for 60 violations; the Russell Corp. of Decatur, Ga., and Houston, $360,000 for 60 violations; Tom Aycock Transport Inc. of Pharr, $210,000 for 35 violations, and Houston-Pasadena Apache Oil Co. Inc. of Pasadena, $150,000 for 25 violations.

The Boulos brothers also are owners of Total Gas and Energy, Wilson said.

Apache Oil dispatcher Richard Bierman said his trucks and drivers had not delivered mislabeled gas to anyone.

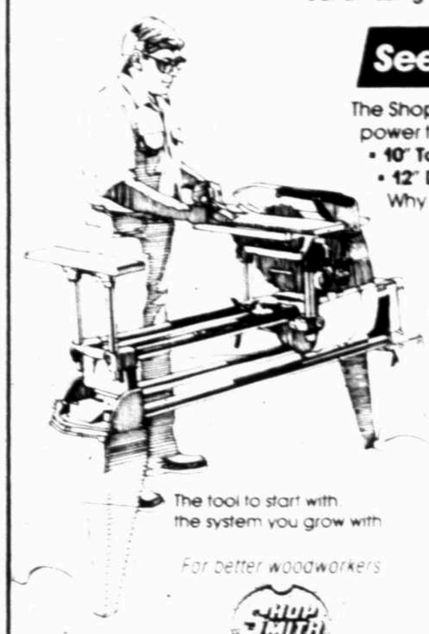

Stephen Paxson, an attorney representing Russell Corp., said the firm never misrepresented any gasoline it had distributed.

'Fruit pickers' find steady work near edge of theatrical world

By KAREN BRANDON

Kevin Murray, left, shares a scene with Wendy Wolff in the Repertory Theater of America's production of "The Last of the Red Hot Lovers" at Rockport.

AP Laserphoto

ROCKPORT (AP) — "In show business," Orson Welles once said, "you're a fruit picker. You go where the work is."

You may even go to the middle of Old Downtown in Rockport, a place that, from the hubs of the business in Los Angeles and New York City, seems very near the edge of the earth. But there is fruit to be picked from Rockport, and the season is 10 months long, guaranteed.

You go there to become of the the Alpha-Omega Players, the migrant actors who find work with Drexel Riley and his company, the Repertory Theater of America.

Rockport is the training ground. After six weeks of rehearsal, you are in one of the three troupes that cover both coasts and much of the ground in between. Performances may be in sports arenas, airplane hangars, cathedrals, clubs, biology labs or student lunges. (Once, a troupe performed in a church graveyard.)

You go around the country in a van that holds sets, costumes, you and your stuff, three oter actors and their stuff. For 10 months. For 150 shows. For 50,000 miles. For 100 bucks a week. But mostly, for The Experience.

For this, 24-year-old Devon Dabbs took a leave of absence from her job at a San Antonio radio station and found a new home for her dog. "All my non-acting friends ask 'How can you just leave everything for 10 months?' Other actors say, 'Gee, you're getting paid,'" she said.

Riley, the owner and director of the company, used to tour himself. He says the job is as demanding as marriage. "It's the hardest thing that anyone can do because it's so constant. Everything is heightened — the good times are great times, and when it's bad, it's horrible," he says. "Acting is a small part of what you do every day. But one of the things you find out here is 'Do I want to make this a career?'."

What are you getting into?

Ask a veteran, like 24-year-old Jeff Whitman, who is one of the four actors returning this summer to prepare for a second season on the tour. Near the end of last year's tour, he talked with a waiter who said, "Hey man, you make people laugh for two hours. Your reward is people right here laughing and having a good time." Whitman said. "It made me feel really good to hear something like that."

His last-minute decision to tour again broke up his engageent to his college girlfriend, he says. But he wanted another challenge. "I had never presented myself with that kind of challenge before," he said. "It became a thing for me that I could see something through to the end."

Not everyone is able to see it through. Last year, the Repertory theater of America lost four of its 12 actors. But over 19 years, about 200 actors have seen the tour through a total of nearly 2 million miles. One of the former members gave Whitman advice that he still remembers: "Everybody quits. You quit every day. There are some times when you quit four or five times a day, but you go on."

Midland firm building Reeves County's novel 'jail for profit'

By JUDY GIANNETTINO
Associated Press Writer

PECOS — Seeking to diversify an unstable economic base, Reeves County officials have set out to prove that crime does pay.

With the help of unique escrow financing, the county has entered into a "lease-purchase" agreement with a Midland company to build a corrections facility that will be operated for profit.

"It's strictly a revenue-making deal," said Reeves County Judge Bill Pigman, explaining that neither construction nor operation of the $4.5 million prison for federal inmates will cost local residents any money.

First Continental Financial Corp. in Dallas fashioned the financing package, which sidesteps traditional cash outlay and bond issue arrangements.

First Continental deposited the entire facility cost in advance in a fund from which construction-related expenditures are being drawn.

Once construction is completed, the federal government will pay the county $35 a day to house each prisoner, Pigman said. That money is to be placed in an interest-bearing account, which will be used to satisfy operating costs, as well as monthly lease installments to First Continental.

"After five years, the money on deposit will bpaid back, and we'll own the jail," Pigman said. "We'll also be making a profit from whatever money in our account is left after operating costs."

Predictions are that the county could make as much of a net profit as $2 million annually with a 73 percent occupancy rate, said First Continental president Barry L. Friedman.

"This is a pioneering approach on several levels," Friedman said. "It enables the federal government to cut the cost of transporting prisoners to a facility outside the immediate area, it helps the county to build the facility without using tax revenue, and it provides a solid return to investors on their money."

But the uniqueness of the 65,000-square-foot jail, which is to be called the Reeves County Correctional Facility, is not limited to the financing, Pigman said.

"It's a modular facility, so it can be moved," he said. It also can be expanded, Friedman said.

Current plans call for the jail to be able to house 548 minimum-security federal prisoners on behalf of the U.S. Marshals Service.

"It's conceivable that it could be enlarged to hold up to 2,000 inmates," Friedman said.

Modular Facilities Inc. of nearby Midland is building the prison about one mile southwest of Pecos, the county seat of Reeves County.

And, Pigman said, the jail has received the approval of local residents.

"I know a lot of towns wouldn't want a prison in their area, but we had no opposition whatsoever," he said.

Pigman said he thought the support for the jail was prompted, in part, by the county's economy, which is rooted in the unpredictable oil and farming industries.

"We sold 'em on that it was minimum security and that we were trying to find jobs for people," he said, adding that the county has had an unemployment rate of more than 11 percent for several months.

About 100 jobs are expected to be created once the jail opens, the judge said.

"We need this to help the economy of the town, to put people to work," he said. "And since it's not a maximum-security unit, it should be no problem."

Pigman predicted 90 percent of the inmates would be illegal aliens.

Construction began in late June, and the first prisoners are expected to be moved to the facility by February 1986.

"I have no fear of keeping it full," Pigman said. "The whole proposition is based on revenue. We'll make more money the fuller it is, and I know it will be full."

TDH withholds payments from Denton State School

DENTON (AP) — Texas Department of Health is withholding Medicaid payments to the Denton State School for the mentally retarded for the second time in 13 months because it failed to meet state standards.

Officials said the freeze was imposed Friday, two months after it was first recommended by an inspection team from the Texas Department of Health.

Agency spokeswoman Charlene Stowers said the school will begin getting federal funds again if it corrects the problems in 60 days.

"It's going to take a minor miracle for us to do everything everybody wants us to do," School Superintendent Burtis Hollis said Friday.

Stowers said inspectors found 34 deficiencies, most involving training and special treatment programs for the mentally retarded.

"We're just not providing all the active treatment we would like to provide," Hollis acknowledged. "I'm not making excuses."

Hollis said money is the problem.

"It really boils down to a decision: Do we provide active treatment that is required and overspend the budget? Or do we stay within our dollars and not meet (state and federal) standards?" he asked.

Ms. Stowers said that if the freeze hadn't been postponed, the school would have lost its Medicaid contract, a total fund cutoff that would have cost the school about $1.4 million a month.

Any school that has had its funds frozen twice in 12 months or less loses its Medicaid contract, she explained.

Sex-oriented firms raided; Gorilla suit confiscated

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Police vice officers said Saturday they intend to make more raids on nude modeling studios, peep shows and adult book stores and issue citations to those not complying with a new city ordinance.

Officers issued 39 citations Friday. The crackdown began after a federal judge refused Friday to issue a temporary restraining order to keep police from enforcing the ordinance.

The new regulations require sex-oriented businesses to have police permits and say that video viewing areas must be well-lighted and the entire interior of a store must be visible from the manager's station.

Investigator Dan Ramsey said Saturday the vice officers would make more raids over the weekend.

Among the businesses raided in the Friday sweep was the Follies Bergere, a theater which offers a simulated sex act between naked women and a man dressed in a gorilla suit. The raid was the third on the establishment this week.

Five people were arrested and charged with public lewdness and the manager of the theater was arrested and charged with promoting of an obscene performance, Ramsey said.

The gorilla suit was confiscated, he added.

Of the 47 known sex-oriented businesses in Houston, 11 were closed for the day when vice officers arrived to investigate, Ramsey said.

Vice Sgt. Bill Brown said none of the peep shows that were raised had a permit.

Brown said nine of the peep shows had shut down the arcade portion of the business to comply with the ordinance, and two other peep shows had gone out of business.

Officials say the Class C misdemeanor fines of $150 to $200 don't appear to be large enough to force compliance by businesses making profits of more than $800 a day.

Bank's failure blamed on real estate market

HOUSTON (AP) — The city's troubled real estate market is being blamed for the failure of Houston's ninth largest savings association, a spokeswoman for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said.

Heights Savings Association was declared insolvent by federal savings and loan regulators Friday and taken over by a new federal savings association.

The thrift was placed into receivership after closing time Friday by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. The takeover was handled by Federal Home Loan Bank Board officials who said the regulatory action will not have any impact on its customers.

Under the regulatory action, the FSLIC added several million dollars to replenish Heights' capital and hired San Antonio Savings Association to manage the association.

"Factors which contributed to the institution's conditions included direct investments in real estate and acquisition, development and construction loans which went sour," said Rebecca Speece, a spokeswoman for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board in Dallas.

The association, which was opened in 1964 by Houston civic leader Marcella Perry, had $418.8 million in deposits and 11 branches in the Houston area. It held a state charter until Friday.

Ms. Perry was removed as chairman, but has been asked to remain in an advisory position, Ms. Speece said. The rest of the association's staff will not change, she said.

San Antonio Savings is one of the state's largest thrifts. It has $2 billion in assets and 44 branches.

Heights, which has lost money since the second half of 1983, showed a loss of $11 million for the first six months of this year, according to financial statements filed with the Federal Home Loan Bank in Dallas.

Two branches were closed last year "because they weren't making any money," Ms. Perry said.

At the end of June, Heights had a negative net worth of about $9 million, according to the Federal Home Loan Bank in Dallas.

According to Harris County foreclosure records, Heights Savings repossessed more than $15 million in lots, townhomes and other Houston real estate in August alone.

Heights will operate under the same name and under the guidance of a new five-member board of directors approved by the loan bank regulators said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Police search home of 'Night Stalker' suspect

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Night Stalker" serial murder suspect Richard Ramirez' boyhood home in Texas was searched by investigators from Los Angeles, his brother says.

The Ledo Street home in El Paso was searched Wednesday, according to Roberto Ramirez, who was quoted in Saturday's Orange County Register in Santa Ana, Calif.

No details were provided about the search.

Last Thursday, Los Angeles sheriff's spokesman Lt. Richard Walls said property allegedly stolen by Ramirez had been recovered in El Paso, San Francisco and the Los Angeles area.

Teen-ager gets new heart

HOUSTON (AP) — A New Mexico teen-ager got a heart for her birthday Saturday in a three-and-a-half hour transplant operation at Methodist Hospital, a hospital spokesman said.

Nona White of Clovis, N.M., who turned 13 Saturday, received the heart from a 14-year-old Salt Lake City girl who died in a bicycle accident Friday, hospital spokesman David Blackshear said.

The teen-ager had been in Houston two weeks waiting for a heart donor, Blackshear said. She suffers from a congenital problem which deteriorates the heart, he said.

The donor heart had been considered for a transplant for Michael Drummond, whose artificial heart was replaced with a human heart in pioneering surgery Saturday in Tuscon, Ariz. But doctors at Methodist said the girl's organ was too small.

The teen-ager remained in critical but stable condition Saturday afternoon, Blackshear said.

Church can bar woman

HOUSTON (AP) — A state district judge has allowed a church to bar a 69-year-old woman from attending Sunday services because she was a "disruptive force."

Judge David Hittner issued the restraining order Friday against Odessa Shanklin, who was expelled from the Antioch Missionary Baptist Church in July for refusing to move from a pew usually reserved for newcomers to the congregation.

The church alleges Ms. Shanklin served herself Holy Communion in a Sept. 1 worship service "to make a mockery of a very sacred part of the church's worship." In that same service, her 47-year-old daughter "shouted obscenities and abusive language," the suit says.

Ms. Shanklin says the church's action stemmed from her filing an assault charge against the Rev. Michael Patrick Williams for which he was found guilty and fined $100.

She, however, said she would follow the restraining order and not attend Sunday services.

Wife may stay in U.S.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A federal magistrate has recommended against the deportation a restaurateur's wife, saying the action may be an indirect attempt to deport her controversial husband.

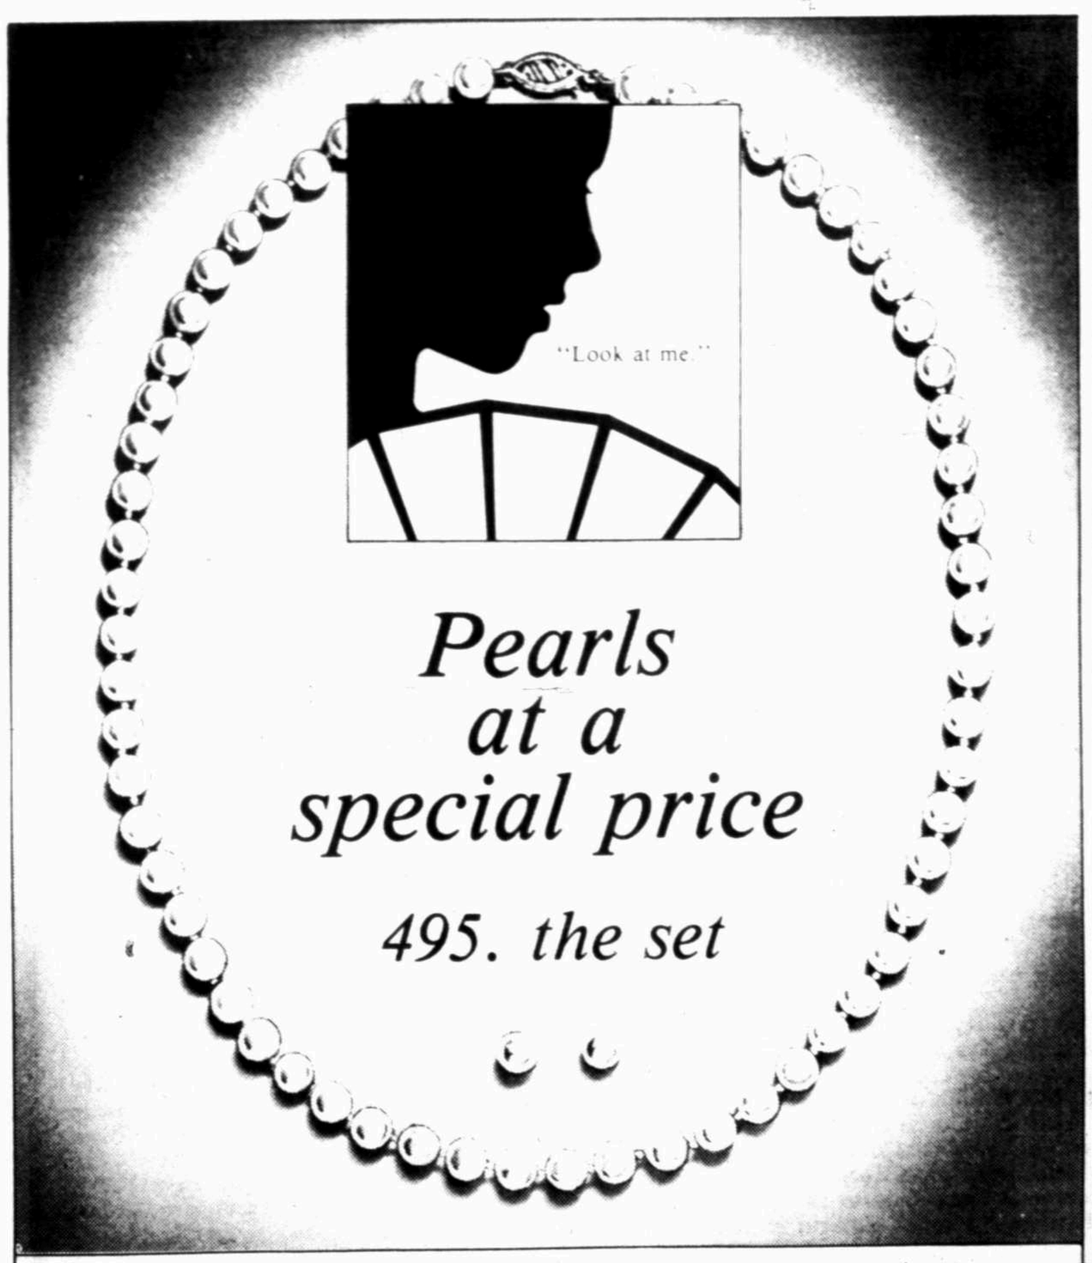

U.S. Magistrate Jamie Boyd issued the recommendation to U.S. District Judge H.F. "Hippo" Garcia Friday in tdhe case of Elke Otten, the wife of restaurateur Otto Otten, a native of Germany.

Boyd's report says that a decision by Immigration and Naturalization Service District Director's Richard Casillas "to resume deportation proceedings now — after a 12-year hiatus — may to some degree have been an indirect attempt to deport the petitioner's husband and possibly may have been a reaction against publicity about the proceedings."

John Abriel, assistant director of INS, said he was frustrated by Boyd's decision.

Irish woman gives Hagman thesis she did on soap operas

Hagman

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — A 21-year-old college graduate presented her thesis on soap operas Saturday to actor Larry Hagman, the crafty oil baron J.R. Ewing on television's "Dallas," as thanks for helping to give her something to write about.

Hagman read through one or two pages of the 150-page thesis by Caroline Kennedy called "Melodrama and Women's Issues" and said he was impressed.

"This is really interesting. I'll take time off to read it, and I'll pass it on to the 'Dallas' producers to see if they can learn something from it," he said.

"I've always wanted to meet Larry Hagman," said Miss Kennedy, who is from Thurles in County Tiperary and earned her communications degree this year from the National Institute of Higher Education in Dublin. "My thesis was based on melodrama from the Victorian times, and let's face it, the villain is the central character in any melodrama. In this respect, J.R. is the perfect villain."

Hagman was in Dublin helping to raise $350,000 for arthritis victims in the Irish Republic. He met Miss Kennedy at Phoenix Park racecourse, where he was a guest of Jacqueline O'Brien, the wife of Irish horse trainer Vincent O'Brien.

EPSOM, England (AP) — Actor Oliver Reed, the 46-year-old wild man of British cinema, married his 21-year-old girlfriend Saturday and vowed that his brawling days were over.

"It's all finished, the game's up. I am an old married man by five minutes now," Reed said after the 10-minute civil ceremony in the Epsom Register's Office.

Reed said his marriage to Josephine Burge was the culmination of "a wonderful five years" and had proved wrong the cynics who predicted their relationship wouldn't last.

Reed turned up for the ceremony in a black Rolls-Royce, and his bride showed up in a white one. She wore a three-piece pink ensemble with matching hat.

Reed's wedding eve drinking spree with best man and pub owner Nobby Clark made headlines in Britain's tabloid newspapers Saturday.

After the wedding, the newlyweds returned to the actor's Surrey home for a reception attended by 200 guests.

The couple haven't planned a honeymoon because Reed starts filming "The Heroine" in London on Monday and then flies to the Cook Islands to film "The Castaway."

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — U.S. Secretary of Education William Bennett got high marks from students he taught for one period at San Jose's Willow Glen High School.

"He's a real teacher...I thought it was going to be how good the Republicans and Reagan are," 16-year-old Ladan Manteghi said Friday after Bennett worked as a substitute teacher.

A former professor at five universities, Bennett appeared at ease as he grilled the 27 students in the history class.

His appearance was part of an eight-city teaching tour of the nation's schools.

NEW YORK (AP) — A teen-ager who left New York three months ago to sail solo around the world says she has discovered one thing that really frightens her: a thunderstorm at sea.

"There is no escape or place to hide," said Tania Aebi, 18, whose only company on her 26-foot sloop is her cat, Dinghy. "I just cuddled up with Dinghy and prayed."

Ms. Aebi, who has sailed through the Bermuda Triangle, the Caribbean Sea, the Panama Canal and is now somewhere in the Pacific Ocean, wrote in a letter:

"I feel that when I have a thunderstorm, nature is trying to show me all her power and is keeping up my respect. One has to respect nature and the elements because it is the one thing man hasn't been able to conquer."

Ms. Aebi's father, Ernst, 47, a graphics artist, gave her the $40,000 sloop Varuna in lieu of a college education on the condition that she support herself by writing stories during her global trip.

If successful, Ms. Aebi would be the youngest woman ever to sail alone around the world.

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — New Orleans chef Paul Prudhomme was the special guest at an under-the-trees buffet held on the state Capitol grounds to kick off a campaign to promote Louisiana food and culture.

To take advantage of the recent prominence of Cajun cooking, caused in part by Prudhomme's operation this year of a temporary restaurant in New York City, the state has adopted the slogan "Louisiana — We're Really Cookin" for its tourism campaign.

Noelle LeBlanc, secretary of Culture, Recration and Tourism, said her agency will take Louisiana food, music, and artisans to key cities in the South in the next few months to persuade people to visit Louisiana.

Desmond

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer-actor Johnny Desmond, who rose to fame as a vocalist with Glenn Miller's swing music band during the Big Band Era and entertained troops during World War II, has died of cancer. He was 65.

Desmond, who lived Los Angeles, died Friday night at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, spokesman Ron Wise said.

"He had been sick a long time. He was a patient at Cedars for quite a while," Wise added.

Patti Martin, one of Desmond's two daughters, said her father succumbed to cancer that had spread throughout his body, but he peformed as recently as May in New York City's Rainbow Room.

"Most people remember him from the Big Band Era and, more recently, from night clubs and Broadway," Ms. Martin said. "He didn't retire. His engagement at the Rainbow Room was in May. He was scheduled to go back in there in three weeks. When I heard him sing in May, he never sounded better."

Desmond, a singer, composer and actor, was a vocalist with Miller, Gene Krupa and Bob Crosby. He made many radio and television appearances and acted in the Broadway musicals "Funny Girl" and "Say Darling."

"He had his first fame with the Glenn Miller Army Air Force band," during World War II, said Chuck Cecil, who hosts the syndicated radio show "Swingin' Years."

Desmond's more popular songs included "How Much Will I Miss You," "Oh, My Darlin'," "Please Don't Forget Me Dear," "I Wonder What Little Dogs Dream Of," "Dancing Man" and "When."

"I was young, fresh out of the Army, inexperienced and I didn't know how to handle a career," Desmond said in a 1958 interview. But he worked as a ballad singer, recording such hit tunes as "C'est Ci Bon," "The High and the Mighty" and "Yellow Rose of Texas."

His films included "Calypso Heat Wave," "Escape From San Quentin," "Desert Hell" and "China Doll."

Ms. Martin said her father was 65 when he died, having been born in Detroit on Nov. 14, 1919, even though his birthdate was listed as Nov. 14, 1925, in one biographical dictionary of musicians.

Survivors include Desmond's wife, Ruth; his mother, Lillian DeSimone; two daughters, Diane Desmond and Ms. Martin; and two grandsons.

Philadelphia's two papers go on strike

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The city's two daily newspapers halted publication early Saturday when members of nine unions went on strike in a contract dispute.

To fill the void, television stations planned expanded news shows and special strike coverage while newsstands scrambled to satisfy readers by importing suburban and out-of-town papers.

Picket lines formed at 12:01 a.m. Saturday at the plant that prints The Philadelphia Inquirer and the Daily News. The nine unions represent 4,774 employees, who had been working under the old contract for seven days while talks continued.

"There are no meetings this weekend. I don't know when there will be any. There's no reason to call any meetings," said federal mediator Robert Kyler. "Every issue on the table is economic."

The strike killed publication of the Sunday Inquirer, which has a circulation of 1 million. Only 15,000 copies of Saturday morning's Inquirer were printed when the presses stopped. The dawn press run of the afternoon Daily News, which has a circulation of 280,000 but does not print on Sunday, never began.

Management offered a package that would raise salaries and benefits 17 percent over three years, but the unions demanded boosts worth 38 percent, said William Broom, spokesman for the Knight-Ridder subsidiary.

Luthier gives 'Boss' his 'secuirty blanket'

OCEAN TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — With millions of fans, and probably as many dollars in the bank, Bruce Springsteen still relies on Phil Petillo for his security blanket.

Petillo, 39, is a luthier — a guitar maker — whose clients include Springsteen and many other well-known entertainers. His custom-made instruments fetch from $500 to $8,000, and he can hardly build them fast enough.

The tall, mild-mannered craftsman has worked with his most famous customer for 17 years. They grew up along the same stretch of New Jersey shore that plays through many of Springsteen's songs. Petillo went to high school in Asbury Park, the resort town that Springsteen put on the show business map.

Petillo took up his trade as a teenager and sold Springsteen his first guitar in 1969 for $150. Springsteen is still playing the 1954 Fender Esquire, now called a Petillo for the amount of reworking the guitar maker has done, and used it during his recent sold-out concerts in New Jersey.

"It's kind of a security blanket," Petillo said. Springsteen also plays a Petillo acoustic model.

The Boss spent nearly six hours in Petillo's basement shop making sure everything was just right for his home stand at Giants Stadium. But Petillo and his wife, Lucille, steadfastly refuse to spill the beans about Springsteen's private comings and goings.

They stood their ground against 100 telephone calls a day from people pleading for tickets to the late August concerts.

"Even my relatives get mad," said Mrs. Petillo. "We provide a service and we provide confidentiality for our customers."

Petillo has other big names among his clients. Two members of Springsteen's E Street band — guitarist Nils Lofgren and bassist Garry W. Tallent — play Petillo instruments. Others include singer James Taylor, the late Jim Croce, the Canadian group Loverboy and members of Elvis Presley's former band.

Petillo, who apprenticed with guitar maker Jimmy DiSerio, said his vanishing craft is made more challenging by the influx of mass-produced guitars, mainly from Japan.

"We decided that everything we do should be done here," he said.

He works in a catacomb of climate-controlled rooms, storing customized tools and exotic woods, some aging from the 1940s.

He makes about 14 guitars a year, and has more orders than he can fill. Each project takes up to six months, beginning with a meeting between the guitar maker and his client during which the player's hands are measured to ensure a custom fit.

His credo is: "Can I figure a way to do it better than anyone else has?" He has even developed his own patented guitar strings and frets.

"Phillip treats his guitars like they were his children," his wife said. They have five sons, one of whom is already building his first guitar.

A mail-order gift house is including an $8,000 Petillo electric guitar in an upcoming catalog. The instrument is decorated with mother of pearl and fine wood inlays known as marquetry, another woodworking skill practiced by Petillo.

The Smithsonian Institution once sent a Stradivarius violin to Petillo in an armored car. He repaired it while guards stood by.

Jones easily strolls to 10-K title

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Bobby Jones wasn't exactly expecting a stroll in the park, but with picture perfect early race conditions, that's just about what it turned out to be for the one-time Wisconsin native in the Septemberfest Lite Run for Fun 10-kilometer race downtown Saturday.

Jones, an employee at the Central YMCA, took control about 2 ½ miles into the race catching up to early leader Joe Hernandez and stretching out in front with eventual runner-up Dave Moore. As Hernandez felt the effects of his early efforts, Moore and Jones opened a gap between them and the pack. But Moore, the winner of Midland's Run for the Arts and a graduate of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., was soon to fall off the pace leaving Jones alone at the finish line.

"I just couldn't hold the pace we were setting," said Moore, more conditioned for longer marathon runs. "I was able to pick it up a little after a while, but I couldn't gain any more distance on (Jones)."

JONES, WHO ran cross-country for Wisconsin-Lacrosse, was pleased with his time of 31:51, but termed the course a bit on the short side. Moore was 35 seconds back at 32:26, and Hernandez, the early pace-setter, took third in 33:14.

"You never know if you're going to win a race like this," said Jones, a finisher in the Boston Marathon this past year. "It usually depends on who shows up for the race.

"We had a good pace going, not too fast. But I usually start slow and pick up after that."

While Jones was picking up his early morning pace and strolling to an easy win, 20-year-old Pam Allen of Odessa was coasting to the women's title by more than two minutes over the next best women's finisher. Allen's time of 39:29 bested that of runner-up Karen Gilmore's 41:49. Cindy Baird was third in 41:57.

"I DON'T run for a school or anything, I just run for these kinds of races," Allen said. "I took a break for two or three weeks before this race, though, I was kind of tired of it. I don't really know where the other (women) runners are, I just get out in front and try to stay there."

In the two-mile run held Saturday, it was David Felice, a Midland fireman who took top honors with a 9:09, than dashed back to the station where he was taking a break from on-call duty. In second place was Fred Ongaga, the defending champion of last year's 10K run, who ran a 9:15. In third it was John Bednarski at 9:51.

Both Ongaga and Bednarski are former runners at perennial national track power Texas-El Paso though they never ran as teammates.

WINNER OF the women's two-mile run was Robin Orchard, known more for her soccer playing in Midland than as a runner. Orchard ran a 12:44, far from her best time which she set in high school as a cross country runner in Wyoming.

Tech's wishbone finds a victory

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK - The dramatic debut of Texas Tech's new Wishbone offense had to undergo a mysterious second half metamorphosis to pull out a wild 32-31 victory here at Jones Stadium Saturday night over the New Mexico Lobos.

For the better part of three quarters, the Red Raider Wishbone looked like it belonged somewhere in Walt Disney's Fantasy Land. It was only dreaming of moving the football while the Lobos were running and gunning to a seemingly insurmountable 31-10 lead with just 4:10 left in the third period.

But off the bench came halfback Timmy Smith, donning his red and black cape to put fire where only smoldering coals had been.

Smith erupted for touchdown runs of 31 and 42 yards to help Tech close the gap to 31-24, but the New Mexican reserve from Hobbs was injured on his 42-yard TD effort and never returned to the game.

It appeared that Tech's Wishbone would go back into hibernation of its own neat cocoon, but quarterback Aaron Keesee, who didn't have a great opener, finally hit a big strike of 58 yards to Wayne Walker to set up Ansel Cole's five-yard TD run with only 1:24 left in the game to make it 31-30 New Mexico.

"The blocking was right there up the middle. I saw the TD and knew I had it," said Cole. "I was frustrated after the fumble in the third quarter and knew I had to make it up."

That forced Tech to go for two points and halfback Gerald Bean gave 35,118 Tech fans a victory celebration by running for a two point conversion after bobbling Keesee's pitchout around the left side of the Tech offense.

"I knew I had to do it. I fumbled it for a second, but I knew I had to get into that end zone some way," said Bean.

Smith ended up with 97 yards rushing on only seven carries for Tech and fullback James McGowan had 110 yards on 18 carries. Keesee completed only five of 15 passes for 87 yards, but his 58-yarder to Walker was a big one.

IN THE first half, the Tech offense was giving up more points than it was scoring. New Mexico turned a McGowen mid-air fumble into a 17-yard touchdown by linebacker Frank Reina and gave the Lobos a 14-0 margin after New Mexico had field goals of 24 and 27 yards by Bill Bell.

"We were frustrated during the first half," said Tech head coach Jerry Moore. "There was not a time when the defense or offense played well. I could hear the cat-calls, but the wishbone just takes time and patience. Keesee did a great job in keeping his composure. He was confused early, but Coach (Tom) Wilson did an excellent coaching job with him."

Tech trailed only 14-10 at the half as McGowen's 48-yard run set up a 7-yard scoring plunge by Keesee. Marc Mallery also had a 40-yard field goal for Tech.

New Mexico threatened to put the game away in the third period, scoring 17 points the first three times it touched the ball. Bell kicked a 40-yard field goal for a 17-10 lead and quarterback Billy Rucker counted in two more quick TDs with a 15-yard TD run before dialing Chris Buford with a 48-yard TD pass. Rucker's 15-yard run was set up by Cole's fumble at the Tech 20.

Six former Midland Lee players performed in the victory, including freshman Tyrone "Smurf" Thurman, who returned punts, kickoffs and played some wide receiver.

Thurman returned six punts for 84 yards, returned one kickoff for 20 yards and was wide open behind the New Mexico defense on one pass play, but Keesee overthrew him.

Tech lists Thurman at 5-foot-2¾ and 128 pounds, down from the 140-pounds he was listed while at Lee. Tech also claims he is the littlest player in college football this year and the smallest in the Southwest Conference since Tech entered the league in 1960.

"He's a good one and he did a great job for us tonight," said Moore. "You can only see half his number. The other half is tucked in his pants."

Thurman was the first Tech offensive player to touch the ball in 1985 with a 12-yard return. He almost broke one return before being halted after a 31-yard effort.

Fullback Isaac Garnett, Lee's first 1,000-yard rusher in 1983, made his debut, gaining six yards on three carries, all in the first quarter. He didn't play again.

Nicky Tomlin, who snaps deep punts for Tech, injured a right knee in the game. It is not known when, or if, he will return to the Tech lineup this year. Former Lee star Walter Jones, a freshman, and former Midland High standout Jerry Zachery didn't get in the game.

Seminoles stun Cornhuskers, claim 17-13 victory

Associated Press

College Football

LINCOLN, Neb. — Sophomore quarterback Danny McManus hit 15 of 27 passes for 171 yards and one touchdown to lead 17th-ranked Florida State to a 17-13 victory over 10th-ranked Nebraska Saturday.

Nebraska drew first blood in the contest when fullback Tom Rathman darted through the line for a 60-yard touchdown run on the Cornhuskers' first series with just 1:40 gone in the game.

McManus brought Florida State back with a 15-yard scoring toss to Darrin Holloman, and Derek Schmidt put the Seminoles up 10-7 with a 20-yard field goal early in the second quarter.

The Cornhuskers regained the lead on a 1-yard Doug DuBose run with 8:05 to play in the half after Florida State held Nebraska three times at the one.

But the Seminoles grabbed the lead again, 17-13, when Cletis Jones scored the eventual game-winner on a 2-yard run with 3:27 left in the second period. That score was set up when Husker punter Dan Wingard tried to run after a bad snap from center and was tackled at the Nebraska 6-yard line.

USC 20, Illinois 10

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Sixth-ranked Southern California turned three first-period Illinois turnovers into 17 points, including a pair of touchdown passes by Sean Salisbury, and deflated the error-prone No. 11 Illini in the season-opener for both teams.

Cornerback Matt Johnson's interception of a poorly thrown Jack Trudeau pass and nine-yard return to the Illinois 15 set up Salisbury's three-yard scoring pass to Hank Norman at 6:09. It was the first of six Illinois giveaways — four interceptions and two fumbles.

The Trojans made it 14-0 barely 3½ minutes later on Salisbury's 46-yard pass to Randy Tanner. It came on the first play after USC tackle Matt Koart recovered a fumbled pitchout by redshirt freshman Keith Jones. Tanner beat safety Ed White at the five-yard line and cruised into the end zone.

The Illini were as cold as they could be in the steamy 89-degree weather and they promptly made it three turnovers in as many possessions on a strange play. Trudeau unleashed a bomb from his 33 which Junior Thurman intercepted at the USC 24 and returned to the 33, where he fumbled.

The ball was recovered by Illinois' Ray Wilson but the Illini were penalized for clipping while on defense during the interception return and USC retained possession at its 43.

Six plays later, on the opening play of the second period, Don Shafer kicked a 46-yard field goal to give USC a 17-0 halftime

Boston College 28, Temple 25

NEWTON, Mass. — Shawn Halloran threw touchdown passes on Boston College's first two second-half drives and the Eagles survived two Temple touchdowns in the last four minutes for the victory.

Boston College erased an early 7-0 deficit to even its record at 1-1. Temple, which trailed 9-7 at halftime, is 0-1.

Halloran, the successor to Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie, had scoring strikes of 14 yards to Troy Stradford and 11 yards to Darren Flutie, Doug's younger brother. That gave the Eagles a 22-7 lead with 5:01 gone in the third quarter.

Boston College built a 28-10 lead on a two-yard run by John Mihalik midway through the fourth quarter. But Temple rallied to score on a one-yard run by quarterback Lee Saltz with 3:57 remaining and an 11-year pass from Saltz to Chris Chambers with 46 seconds to go.

Penn St. 20, Maryland 18

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Massimo Manca's 46-yard field goal put Penn State ahead in the third quarter and the 19th-ranked Nittany Lions held on in oppressive heat to edge No. 7 Maryland, beating the Terps for the 21st straight time.

The Terps overcame a 17-point deficit to go ahead in the 100-degree heat. But they failed to come back for a second time when Ramon Paredes missed two fourth-quarter field goal attempts of 34 and 51 yards and Alvin Blount fumbled away a pass reception on the Penn State 30 with 38 seconds remaining.

Penn State quickly turned two pass interceptions into a 10-0 lead and extended its margin to 17-0 early in the second quarter before the Terps rebounded.

Mandlikova takes U.S. Open title

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

Mandlikova stunned the second-seeded Navratilova 7-6, 1-6, 7-6 one day after she had eliminated top seed Chris Evert Lloyd, to become the first foreign citizen since 1973 to win the women's singles title at the Open.

McEnroe came from behind to eliminate Sweden's Mats Wilander 3-6, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, 6-3, while Lendl crushed five-time U.S. Open champion Jimmy Connors 6-2, 6-3, 7-5.

"To beat two champions in the same tournament is a dream," said the tempestuous Mandlikova, a 23-year-old right-hander who was broken in the ninth game of the third set as she served for the match. "Martina, I think, is a great champion . . . she always has been and always will be."

But, although she beat the world's top two players, Mandlikova and Navratilova agreed that she shouldn't be considered No. 1.

"I think that Martina and Chris are still on top," Mandlikova said. "I'm not ready yet to be No. 1.

"She has been a great champion; she always will be," Mandlikova said of Navratilova, who failed in her bid to win her third straight title on the hardcourts here at the National Tennis Center.

"I thought I was pretty disappointed in 1981 when I lost," Navratilova said, referring to her loss to Tracy Austin in her first trip to the women's championship game. "I think this beats it, but you can bet I'll be back."

PLAYING INSPIRED, confident tennis, Mandlikova took the first-set tiebreaker 7-3, then wrapped up the hard-won victory by capturing the third-set tiebreaker 7-2.

She became the first foreigner to win the women's title in America's premier tennis event since Margaret Smith Court of Australia 12 year ago.

Plagued throughout her career by inconsistency, Mandlikova was a model of consistency as she displayed every aspect of her exciting game during this two-week tournament, the third of the four Grand Slam events.

It is her third Grand Slam title, having won the Australian Open in 1980 and the French Open in 1981. And, with the victory, she becomes the first woman since Austin's 1981 U.S. Open win to snap the stranglehold on Grand Slam tournament titles held by Navratilova and Lloyd.

Between the two, the world's top two players had won 16 consecutive Grand Slam women's singles championships.

This was only the second time the two have met in the U.S. Open. Mandlikova has won both times. She defeated Navratilova in 1980 in their very first career meeting.

Mandlikova streaked to a 5-0 lead to begin the match, then saw Navratilova battle back to pull even 5-5.

"I had to hang in there," Mandlikova said. "Coming back from so far, that just shows how good she is. And to tell the truth, I choked a little bit. I could have put in better serves."

IN THE 11th game — a marathon that saw the two battle to deuce nine times — Mandlikova fought back from love-40 and staved off five other break points to hold service.

Navratilova held at 30 to force the tiebreaker.

In the second set, the defending champion went to work, dropping only the second game, which Mandlikova held after the two twice went to deuce. When she walked off the court after leveling the match at one set each, she shook her hands in determination.

But Mandlikova wasn't deterred. She ripped service returns for winners, ran down every ball, rifled passing shots off both sides and hit 60 percent of her first serves. She finished with five aces to just three for Navratilova.

It was Mandlikova who got the first service break, in the eighth game, to take a 5-3 lead. Then, serving for the match, she had her serve broken right back.

Then two then held their services to send the match into another tiebreaker, this one for the title in this $3 million tournament.

Mandlikova won the first six points of the tiebreaker, and it was only time before she would sink to her knees, then fall onto her back, her arms stretched skyward in the thrill of victory.

Lendl had very few problems disposing of the 33-year-old Connors, the man who beat him here in the championship match in both 1982 and 1983. Last year, Lendl lost in the final to McEnroe.

Lendl captured the only service breaks in the first two sets, breaking Connors in the sixth game of the first at love and the fourth game of the second set, again at love.

Connors, a favorite of the New York crowds, took a 2-0 lead in the third set when he finally broke Lendl's service in the second game. But the right-hander from Czechoslovakia broke right back, then took the lead when he broke in the seventh game.

Somewhat hobbled by a slightly sprained ankle suffered during a workout earlier in the day, Connors fought back gamely. He broke Lendl, who was serving for the match in the 10th game, but then dropped his own service again in the 11th game.

That gave Lendl a 6-5 lead, and the Czech closed out the match in the next game by holding serve.

It is the second consecutive year that MEnroe and Lendl have played in the championship match, and the second straight year they were the two top seeds.

ASKED WHO he would rather play in the championship match, McEnroe said: "Hopefully they'll both hurt themselves and I'll get a default in the final."

Down 2-1 in sets and a service break in the fourth game, McEnroe, who had looked lethargic early in the match, raised the level of his game to begin his dramatic comeback.

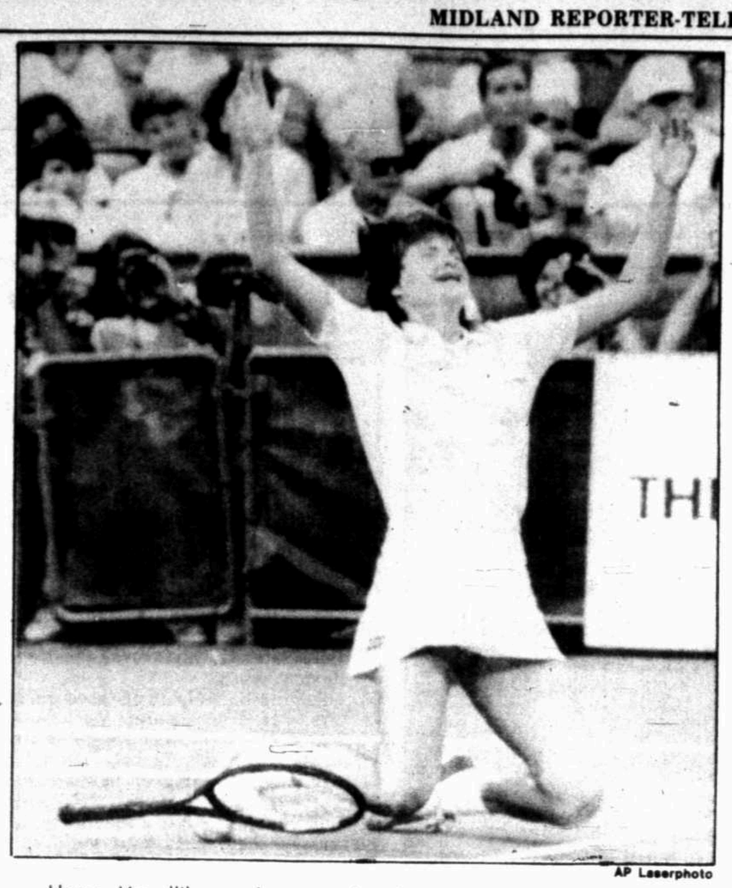

With the on-court temperature soaring to 114 degrees and in high humidity, the brilliant New Yorker broke Wilander in the fourth game at love to level the set, then again in the sixth, pulling away after a deuce.

"Every changeover I was pouring water on my head, all over my body, just to try to cool it off," McEnroe Said. "At one point in the fourth set, I started to feel a little bit faint. But luckily I started feeling all right.

"It happened to be the time when I broke back in the fourth set."

When he held his own serve at 15, McEnroe had a 5-2 advantage, one he wouldn't let slip away. He held service in the ninth game to send the match into the decisive fifth set.

This is McEnroe's hometown, and since the tournament moved from the cozy confines of Forest Hills to the concrete-and-asphalt complex in Flushing Meadow, only McEnroe and Connors have emerged victorious in the men's singles.

Texas Football

Associated Press

BEAUMONT — A 68-yard touchdown scamper by Lamar fullback George Landry iced a 32-20 victory over Texas Southern here Saturday night in a non-conference college football game.

The 1-0 Cardinals, who led by just five points after a 53-yard touchdown pass from TSU's Johnnie Cole to Leonard Moon with just under two minutes of play left in the game, scored on Landry's run on their second play from scrimmage.

Texas Southern, 1-1, opened the game with a 73-yard scoring drive that ended with a 6-yard pass from Cole to Darrell Colbert. The Cardinals then scored on a 44-yard field goal from Mike Andrie to close within 7-3.

In the second quarter the Tigers took a 14-3 lead on a 30-yard pass from Cole to Colbert but the Cardinals came back with an 11-yard pass from Brent Watson to Ezell Seals and a two-point conversion pass from Watson to Bruce Miller to make it 14-11 at the half.

Lamar tailback Burton Murchison scored on a 48-yard run and a 1-yard run to take a 25-14 lead.

Lawrence 24, Trinity, Tex. 0

APPLETON, Wis. — Senior defensive back Bob Sell returned a punt 91 yards for a touchdown and kicked a field goal and three extra points to lead Lawrence to a 24-0 non-conference college football victory Saturday over Trinity of Texas.

Sell's return came in the third quarter and broke the game open. The 5-foot-11, 195-pound Sell opened the game's scoring with a 34-yard field goal.

Texas A&I 30, Southwest Texas 7

KINGSVILLE — Quarterback Darcy Davis threw for two touchdowns and ran for another, and placekicker Walter Rule kicked three field goals, including a school record 54-yarder, as Texas A&I upset Southwest Texas.

The victory ended a four-game victory streak for SWT in the series, and ends the long South Texas rivalry with the Javelinas ahead, 29-19-2.

Davis ran for a two-yard score to start the Javelina point production, and a six-yard pass to tight end Mike Dyal produced the second touchdown. Rule then got his 54-yard field goal.

Southern Arkansas 21, Bishop 12

DALLAS — Southern Arkansas' Kenneth Brown returned a punt 51 yards for a touchdown early in the first quarter and snared a 49-yard touchdown pass in the third quarter to pace the Muleriders to a win over Bishop.

Brown's punt return came with 12:44 left in the first quarter. His touchdown pass from quarterback Jerry Copeland came with 12:20 to play in the third period. In between, Bishop got on the board with a 39-yard touchdown pass from Jeff Crawford to Calvin Witherspoon, with 14:45 left in the first half.

Sul Ross 21, W. New Mexico 20

ALPINE — A clipping penalty on a 2-point conversion try spelled the difference as the Sul Ross Lobos took a win over Western New Mexico.

The Mustangs drew within one point with 16 seconds remaining in the game. But quarterback Adam Gragnano's two-point conversion was nullified by a clipping penalty.

Western went for two from the Lobo 17-yard line after the penalty, but Gragnano's pass into the end zone was knocked away.

MHS-Lee Tennis

From Staff Reports

Midland High opened its fall tennis season with comfortable twin drubbings of Big Spring, winning 8-1 in both boys and girls while Midland Lee fell twice to San Angelo, 5-4 in boys, 9-0 in girls.

The Bulldogs weak link proved to be in No. 5 singles in both matches as all other singles and doubles players carded victories. Leading the way for MHS were No. 1 players Chris Jauz, a winner in three sets over Mark Slate, and junior Jill Bramlett, who lost just one game in defeating Lara Cunningham.

The Bulldogs No. 2 girl, Laura Legg posted a whitewash in her match over Angie Wilson of Big Spring winning 6-0, 6-0.

For the Rebels, the boys match was close all the way with both sides taking three singles matches but the Bobcats taking two out of three in the doubles to come away with the win.

The girls had trouble getting untracked against the tough San Angelo team and was unable to pull out a single match.

U.S. OPEN

"I thought I was pretty disappointed in 1981 when I lost," Navratilova said, referring to her loss to Tracy Austin in her first trip to the women's championship game. "I think this beats it, but you can bet I'll be back."

PLAYING INSPIRED, confident tennis, Mandlikova took the first-set tiebreaker 7-3, then wrapped up the hard-won victory by capturing the third-set tiebreaker 7-2.

She became the first foreigner to win the women's title in America's premier tennis event since Margaret Smith Court of Australia 12 year ago.

Plagued throughout her career by inconsistency, Mandlikova was a model of consistency as she displayed every aspect of her exciting game during this two-week tournament, the third of the four Grand Slam events.

It is her third Grand Slam title, having won the Australian Open in 1980 and the French Open in 1981. And, with the victory, she becomes the first woman since Austin's 1981 U.S. Open win to snap the stranglehold on Grand Slam tournament titles held by Navratilova and Lloyd.

Between the two, the world's top two players had won 16 consecutive Grand Slam women's singles championships.

This was only the second time the two have met in the U.S. Open. Mandlikova has won both times. She defeated Navratilova in 1980 in their very first career meeting.

Mandlikova streaked to a 5-0 lead to begin the match, then saw Navratilova battle back to pull even 5-5.

"I had to hang in there," Mandlikova said. "Coming back from so far, that just shows how good she is. And to tell the truth, I choked a little bit. I could have put in better serves."

IN THE 11th game — a marathon that saw the two battle to deuce nine times — Mandlikova fought back from love-40 and staved off five other break points to hold service.

Navratilova held at 30 to force the tiebreaker.

In the second set, the defending champion went to work, dropping only the second game, which Mandlikova held after the two twice went to deuce. When she walked off the court after leveling the match at one set each, she shook her hands in determination.

But Mandlikova wasn't deterred. She ripped service returns for winners, ran down every ball, rifled passing shots off both sides and hit 60 percent of her first serves. She finished with five aces to just three for Navratilova.

It was Mandlikova who got the first service break, in the eighth game, to take a 5-3 lead. Then, serving for the match, she had her serve broken right back.

Then two then held their services to send the match into another tiebreaker, this one for the title in this $3 million tournament.

Mandlikova won the first six points of the tiebreaker, and it was only time before she would sink to her knees, then fall onto her back, her arms stretched skyward in the thrill of victory.

Lendl had very few problems disposing of the 33-year-old Connors, the man who beat him here in the championship match in both 1982 and 1983. Last year, Lendl lost in the final to McEnroe.

Lendl captured the only service breaks in the first two sets, breaking Connors in the sixth game of the first at love and the fourth game of the second set, again at love.

Connors, a favorite of the New York crowds, took a 2-0 lead in the third set when he finally broke Lendl's service in the second game. But the right-hander from Czechoslovakia broke right back, then took the lead when he broke in the seventh game.

Somewhat hobbled by a slightly sprained ankle suffered during a workout earlier in the day, Connors fought back gamely. He broke Lendl, who was serving for the match in the 10th game, but then dropped his own service again in the 11th game.

That gave Lendl a 6-5 lead, and the Czech closed out the match in the next game by holding serve.

It is the second consecutive year that MEnroe and Lendl have played in the championship match, and the second straight year they were the two top seeds.

ASKED WHO he would rather play in the championship match, McEnroe said: "Hopefully they'll both hurt themselves and I'll get a default in the final."

Down 2-1 in sets and a service break in the fourth game, McEnroe, who had looked lethargic early in the match, raised the level of his game to begin his dramatic comeback.

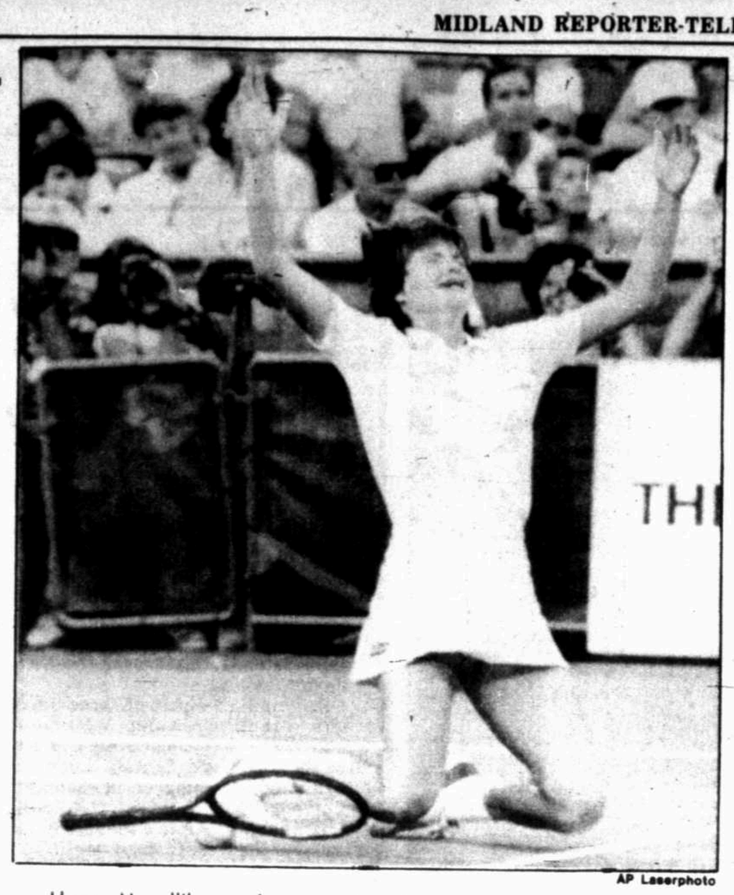

With the on-court temperature soaring to 114 degrees and in high humidity, the brilliant New Yorker broke Wilander in the fourth game at love to level the set, then again in the sixth, pulling away after a deuce.

"Every changeover I was pouring water on my head, all over my body, just to try to cool it off," McEnroe Said. "At one point in the fourth set, I started to feel a little bit faint. But luckily I started feeling all right.

"It happened to be the time when I broke back in the fourth set."

When he held his own serve at 15, McEnroe had a 5-2 advantage, one he wouldn't let slip away. He held service in the ninth game to send the match into the decisive fifth set.

This is McEnroe's hometown, and since the tournament moved from the cozy confines of Forest Hills to the concrete-and-asphalt complex in Flushing Meadow, only McEnroe and Connors have emerged victorious in the men's singles.

Texas Football

The 1-0 Cardinals, who led by just five points after a 53-yard touchdown pass from TSU's Johnnie Cole to Leonard Moon with just under two minutes of play left in the game, scored on Landry's run on their second play from scrimmage.

Texas Southern, 1-1, opened the game with a 73-yard scoring drive that ended with a 6-yard pass from Cole to Darrell Colbert. The Cardinals then scored on a 44-yard field goal from Mike Andrie to close within 7-3.

In the second quarter the Tigers took a 14-3 lead on a 30-yard pass from Cole to Colbert but the Cardinals came back with an 11-yard pass from Brent Watson to Ezell Seals and a two-point conversion pass from Watson to Bruce Miller to make it 14-11 at the half.

Lamar tailback Burton Murchison scored on a 48-yard run and a 1-yard run to take a 25-14 lead.

Lawrence 24, Trinity, Tex. 0

APPLETON, Wis. — Senior defensive back Bob Sell returned a punt 91 yards for a touchdown and kicked a field goal and three extra points to lead Lawrence to a 24-0 non-conference college football victory Saturday over Trinity of Texas.

Sell's return came in the third quarter and broke the game open. The 5-foot-11, 195-pound Sell opened the game's scoring with a 34-yard field goal.

Texas A&I 30, Southwest Texas 7

KINGSVILLE — Quarterback Darcy Davis threw for two touchdowns and ran for another, and placekicker Walter Rule kicked three field goals, including a school record 54-yarder, as Texas A&I upset Southwest Texas.

The victory ended a four-game victory streak for SWT in the series, and ends the long South Texas rivalry with the Javelinas ahead, 29-19-2.

Davis ran for a two-yard score to start the Javelina point production, and a six-yard pass to tight end Mike Dyal produced the second touchdown. Rule then got his 54-yard field goal.

Southern Arkansas 21, Bishop 12

DALLAS — Southern Arkansas' Kenneth Brown returned a punt 51 yards for a touchdown early in the first quarter and snared a 49-yard touchdown pass in the third quarter to pace the Muleriders to a win over Bishop.

Brown's punt return came with 12:44 left in the first quarter. His touchdown pass from quarterback Jerry Copeland came with 12:20 to play in the third period. In between, Bishop got on the board with a 39-yard touchdown pass from Jeff Crawford to Calvin Witherspoon, with 14:45 left in the first half.

Sul Ross 21, W. New Mexico 20

ALPINE — A clipping penalty on a 2-point conversion try spelled the difference as the Sul Ross Lobos took a win over Western New Mexico.

The Mustangs drew within one point with 16 seconds remaining in the game. But quarterback Adam Gragnano's two-point conversion was nullified by a clipping penalty.

Western went for two from the Lobo 17-yard line after the penalty, but Gragnano's pass into the end zone was knocked away.

MHS-Lee Tennis

Midland High opened its fall tennis season with comfortable twin drubbings of Big Spring, winning 8-1 in both boys and girls while Midland Lee fell twice to San Angelo, 5-4 in boys, 9-0 in girls.

The Bulldogs weak link proved to be in No. 5 singles in both matches as all other singles and doubles players carded victories. Leading the way for MHS were No. 1 players Chris Jauz, a winner in three sets over Mark Slate, and junior Jill Bramlett, who lost just one game in defeating Lara Cunningham.

The Bulldogs No. 2 girl, Laura Legg posted a whitewash in her match over Angie Wilson of Big Spring winning 6-0, 6-0.

For the Rebels, the boys match was close all the way with both sides taking three singles matches but the Bobcats taking two out of three in the doubles to come away with the win.

The girls had trouble getting untracked against the tough San Angelo team and was unable to pull out a single match.

Lee will face Abilene High next Saturday while the Bulldogs will tackle Abilene Cooper.

Baylor, SMU post victories; Tulsa dumps Houston

Associated Press

WACO — Quarterback Cody Carlson, who did not start, threw two touchdown passes and safety Thomas Everett returned a punt 75 yards for a score Saturday night as Baylor defeated Wyoming 39-18.

Everett also intercepted a Scott Runyan pass to set up Terry Siler's 37-yard third-quarter field goal as Baylor, of the Southwest Conference, enlarged its 7-3 halftime lead in the season opener for both teams.

It was the first time Baylor and Wyoming, of the Western Athletic Conference, had played since 1950.

Carlson capped an 80-yard second-quarter drive with a 12-yard scoring toss to split end Matt Clark, and threw 37 yards to Leland Douglas, who made a diving catch at the goal line, for a third-quarter touchdown.

Baylor clinched the game in the fourth quarter as Jackie Ball sped 77 yards for a score and Tom Muecke, Baylor's other quarterback, hit John Simpson on a 39-yard scoring pass.

Wyoming drove to the Baylor 1-yard line four times and got only Andy Covington's 24-yard field goal midway through the first quarter. Twice, 5-yard penalties pushed Wyoming back.

After the third defensive stand, Wyoming recovered Muecke's fumble at the Baylor 5, and Runyan ran for Wyoming's first touchdown with 12:39 left in the game to make it 25-10

With just over a minute left in the game, Steve Vana returned a Baylor punt 23 yards to the Baylor 25, and on first down sub quarterback David Gosnell threw to running back Stan Waddell, who was wide open in the end zone.

Gosnell ran for a two-point conversion to close out the scoring.

SWC

Marsh barely missed an interception at the line of scrimmage on Wyoming's second play, knocked down a Runyan pass and raced across the field to tackle Toriano Taylor after a 29-yard gain to the Baylor 43.

That series ended when Taylor was stopped on fourth-and-one for no gain with just over a minute left in the first half.

Marsh had another key stop in that series when he tripped up Runyan for a yard loss on second-and-three.

Tulsa 31, Houston 24

TULSA, Okla. — Junior quarterback Steve Gage rambled for three touchdowns and passed for another as Tulsa upended Houston, in the season opener for both teams.

After a 10-10 first-half deadlock, Gage scored all three Hurricane touchdowns down the stretch. His 8-yard jaunt climaxed an 85-yard drive with 4:02 left, giving Tulsa a 31-17 advantage.

Houston running back Michael Simmons, who finished with 131 yards, ran 17 yards for the Cougars' last score but Tulsa ran out the clock.

The win, in what was a designated Missouri Valley Conference game for Tulsa, marked Don Morton's first as an NCAA Division I coach. Morton formerly coached at North Dakota State, a Division II school.

Houston, defending Southwest Conference co-champion, took a 17-10 lead early in the third quarter when quarterback Gerald Landry hit tight end Carl Hilton with a 4-yard touchdown pass.

Gage scored on runs of 3, 1 and 8 yards in the second half, finishing with 22 carries for 102 yards. He hit five of 10 passes for 127 yards, including a 59-yard scoring toss to Eric Brown in the first quarter.

Southern Meth. 35, Texas-El Paso 23

IRVING - Shocked Southern Methodist watched a 14-point lead melt away to the aroused Texas-El Paso Miners Saturday night before the third-ranked Mustangs rallied to a non-conference victory behind the tough running of Reggie Dupard and the passing of Don King.

SMU, which hasn't lost a season opener since 1971, fell behind 17-14 in the third period on a 33-yard Miner field goal by Chris Jacke.

The Mustangs, who were installed as 42-point favorites by the oddsmakers, charged 62 yards in 9 plays with Dupard scoring from two yards out.

King then put the Miners away with a 48-yard scoring pass to Marquis Pleasant with 5:42 to go after freshman John Harvey had dashed 55 yards for a Miner touchdown.

The surprising Miners, who lost to Air Force 48-6 last week, fell behind two touchdowns then tied the score 14-all at halftime.

Dupard ran two yards for a touchdown and Jeff Atkins scored from three yards out as the Mustangs built a 14-0 lead.

A 39-yard run by Harvey setup quarterback Sammy Garza's one-yard sneak for a score.

Then Garza flipped a 14-yard touchdown pass to Harvey with just 15 seconds left in the half to begin the anxious moments for the small turnout of 24,611 fans in Texas Stadium.

UCLA's 27-24 win over BYU snaps streak at 25

Associated Press

Lee connected on all four of his field-goal attempts, from 25, 35, 20 and 25 yards away, as UCLA, playing its season opener against the defending national champion and eighth-ranked Cougars, scored but one touchdown on offense.

That touchdown came late in the game with UCLA trailing, 24-19, following a 1-yard dive by Cougar quarterback Robbie Bosco with 2:54 remaining in the game.

Lee's four field goals marked the seventh time the senior from Downey, Calif., had kicked that number in a game — an NCAA record.

BYU, a 28-14 winner in its opening game against Boston College in the Kickoff Classic, suffered five turnovers, including an interception by UCLA strong safety Craig Rutledge, who carried the theft 65 yards for a touchdown to make it 10-3 for the visitors late in the first quarter.

The victory in the second meeting between the two schools avenged a 37-35 loss in 1983 to BYU early in the Cougars' win streak.

Auburn 49, SW Louisana 7

AUBURN, Ala.— Bo Jackson raced to four touchdowns and piled up 290 yards rushing on 23 carries as No. 2 Auburn unveiled its new I-formation by pounding Southwestern Louisiana.

Jackson, the 222-pound senior tailback who was a 1983 All-American but injured half of last season, galloped on touchdown runs of 7, 47, and 76 yards to put Auburn up 21-0 in the first quarter. He added a 12-yard scoring burst in the third quarter to make it 42-0.

Auburn, switching to the I in the Tigers' season opener after four years of the Wishbone under Coach Pat Dye, dominated the outmanned Ragin' Cajuns before some 60,000 fans.

Along with Jackson's four scores, quarterback Pat Washington hit Kyle Collins with a 5-yard touchdown pass. Bobby Walden connected with Jeff Parks on a 15-yard scoring toss and Brent Fullwood, the backup to Jackson at tailback, streaked 70 yards for the final TD.

West Virginia 52, Louisville 13

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — John Holifield ran for three touchdowns and 177 yards and John Talley tossed three touchdown passes as West Virginia crushed Louisville, spoiling Howard Schnellenberger's return to coaching.

The Mountaineers erupted for four second-quarter touchdowns to break a 7-7 tie, scoring three times in five minutes.

Talley then hit scoring passes of 45 yards to Grantis Bell and 35 yards to Calvin Phillips, and Holifield ran 5 yards for another touchdown with 41 seconds left to give the Mountaineers a 35-7 halftime lead.

Talley, who completed 13 of 17 passes for 166 yards, also tossed a 9-yard scoring pass to tight end Gary Basil in the first quarter.

Duke 40, Northwestern 17

DURHAM, N.C. — Quarterback Steve Slayden tossed two touchdown passes and reserve tailback Stanley Monk rushed for two scores as Duke downed Northwestern.

Northwestern cut the Duke lead to 24-17 on John Duvic's 36-yard field goal with 8:43 left in the third quarter, but Duke came back with two touchdowns in a six-minute span to win the first game between the two teams.

N. Carolina 21, Navy 19

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — North Carolina's Kevin Anthony threw to Earl Anthony for an 82-yard touchdown that sparked North Carolina to a victory over Navy.

Navy pulled to with two points in the final minute of the game but failed to gain a tie when a two-point conversion pass completion was nullified because of an ineligible receiver downfield.

The key North Carolina touchdown came just two minutes into the second half after the two teams had traded turnovers at the Navy goal line.

Mississippi St. 22, Arkansas St. 14

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Tailback Rodney Peters ran 13 yards for one touchdown and threw a surprise 14-yard pass for a second in the fourth quarter Saturday night to let Mississippi State escape Arkansas State.

Trailing 14-7, Mississippi State scored two touchdowns in 1:21 to avoid an upset by the Division I-AA Indians, who fell to 1-1.

In its opener, Mississippi State used a new motion back offense, but fumbled six times and put together only two sustained drives — the last setting up the go-ahead touchdown and two-point conversion.

Mississippi State drove 64 yards in six plays to close within a point with 3:41 remaining on Peters' second touchdown and then gambled on a two-point conversion. Quarterback Don Smith squeezed over the right corner of the end zone to give the Bulldogs a 15-14 lead.

After Arkansas State ran on fourth down deep in its own territory with 2:55 to go, Mississippi State took over and went 16 yards for another touchdown with Peters throwing to Calvin Robinson over the middle for the touchdown.

Peters, a 6-foot-1, 205-pound sophomore, gave Mississippi State an early lead with a 5-yard touchdown run to cap a 66-yard drive, but then Arkansas State's defense dominated until the final six minutes.

Washington St. 20 Cal. 19

PULLMAN, Wash.— Washington State quarterback Mark Rypien turned the ball over three times but threw two touchdown passes as the Cougars overcame a 19-0 California lead in the last 10 minutes to stun the Bears in a Pacific-10 game.

With 10:14 to go, Rypien launched WSU on three long drives, capped by touchdown passes of 16 yards to wide receiver Kitrick Taylor and six yards to wide receiver Rick Chase sandwiched around a seven-yard scoring burst by running back Rueben Mayes.

Colorado 23, Colorado St 10

BOULDER, Colo. — Sophomore quarterback Mark Hatcher scored two touchdowns as Colorado's newly installed wishbone attack dominated in-state rival Colorado State.

The Buffaloes, one of the worst rushing teams in the nation a year ago (59.9 yards per game) during a dismal 1-10 season, ground out an impressive 358 yards against CSU. The Rams were unable to stop the Buffs' four-pronged running attack of Hatcher, fullback Anthony Weatherspoon and halfbacks Ron Brown and Sam Smith.

Florida 35, Miami 23

MIAMI — Kerwin Bell threw four touchdown passes, including fourth-quarter scoring strikes of 16 yards to Ricky Nattiel and 8 yards to Frankie Neal, to lead fifth-ranked Florida to a victory over intrastate rival Miami.

The victory before an Orange Bowl crowd of 80,227 was Florida's 10th straight over two seasons and extended its unbeaten streak to 11 games — longest in the nation thanks to Brigham Young's loss to UCLA.

The triumph also avenged the Gators' only loss of a year ago, and improved Coach Galen Hall's record to 9-0 since replacing Charley Pell during the latter stages of an NCAA investigation that cost the school last season's Southeastern Conference championship.

Bell's 16-yard TD toss to Nattiel was his second of the night to the speedy wide receiver. Combined with a two-point conversion run by Neal Anderson, it gave Florida a 28-21 lead with 7:50 remaining.

Trailing 20-7 at halftime, the Hurricanes stormed back to take a 21-20 lead as quarterback Vinny Testaverde directed two touchdown drives and the Miami defense held Florida without a first down until the 11:40 mark of the final quarter.

Alonzo Highsmith ran three yards for Miami's first second-half TD, and Testaverde — making his first college start — scrambled 13 yards to give the Hurricanes their only lead on the second play of the fourth quarter.

Nattiel, who had an 18-yard scoring reception in the first period, caught three passes for 57 yards in the 11-play, 79-yard drive leading to his go-ahead TD catch.

Bell, who also threw a second-quarter scoring pass of three yards to John L. Williams, finished with 20 completions in 28 attempts for 248 yards.

Oklahoma St. 61, Washington 17

SEATTLE — Sophomore tailback Thurman Thomas rushed for 237 yards and a touchdown and passed for a score as the 16th-ranked Oklahoma State Cowboys came from behind to beat No. 12 Washington.

It was the opener of the college football season for both teams.

The 5-foot-11, 186-pound Thomas, from Missouri City, Texas, who was Most Valuable Player in the Gator Bowl as a freshman, snapped a 17-17 tie with 11:22 left in the game when he fired a six-yard scoring strike to Bobby Riley. He had 40 carries in the game.

The Cowboys broke the contest open with 5:14 remaining when free safety Mark Moore intercepted a Hugh Millen pass and raced it back 49 yards for a touchdown.

Washington led 17-10 at halftime despite a 35-yard touchdown burst by Thomas in the opening quarter.

Oklahoma State tied the score with 4:06 gone in the second half when strong safety Mike Hudson recovered a fumble by the Huskies' David Toy in the end zone.

The Cowboys' defense, which surrendered a pair of Millen-to-Lonzell Hill touchdown passes in the first half, completely throttled the Washington offense in the second half. Jeff Jaeger of the Huskies missed field goal tries of 30 and 49 yards in the third quarter.

Millen was intercepted three times in the second half by the Cowboys, twice by Moore.

S. Mississippi 28, Louisiana Tech 0

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Senior quarterback Robert Ducksworth rambled for two touchdowns and connected on key passes to spark Southern Mississippi to a victory over Louisiana Tech.

Marcus Lott led Permian with 91 yards on the ground. Quarterback Rich Fletcher ran for one touchdown and threw for another on a 10-yard connection to Greg Anderson to open the scoring.

Fletcher was seven of 12 for 141 yards in the air on the night.

Three Way fells Midland Christian

From Staff Reports

Midland Christian opened its six-man season Saturday with a 60-36 loss to the Three Way Eagles.

The Mustangs were led by senior Robert Willoughby who rushed for 127 yards on nine carries, good for two touchdowns. Willoughby scored on runs of two and 15 yards for Midland Christian. He also caught three pass for 21 yards.

On defense, Robert Franklin paced the home team with an interception and five tackles before leaving the game with a knee injury.

Midland Christian showed more competitiveness against the tough team from Three Way this season nearly pulling equal with the Eagles in first downs with 19 to their 21. Last season the Mustangs went home early as Three Way went over the 45-point rule.

Midland Christian travels to Carlsbad, N. M., next week to take on Bethel Christian.

Dodgers nip Mets, 7-6

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike Marshall singled with two outs in the ninth inning, driving home pinch-runner Jose Gonzalez from second base Saturday and giving the Los Angeles Dodgers a 7-6 victory over the New York Mets in a brawl-interrupted game.

With one out in the ninth, pinch-hitter Franklin Stubbs singled off Terry Leach, 2-3, the fifth New York pitcher. Gonzalez, just promoted from Class AA San Antonio, ran for Stubbs and stole second for his first major-league stolen base.

Leach struck out Dave Anderson and intentionally walked Ken Landreaux before Marshall, who had homered earlier, lined his single to left.

Reliever Tom Niedenefuer, 7-5, got the victory despite allowing Darryl Strawberry's game-tying home run with one out in the top of the ninth. It was Strawberry's 23rd homer.

New York had closed within 6-5 in the eighth against Niedenfuer as pinch-hitter Len Dykstra doubled and scored on a single by Wally Backman.

Pinch-hitter Len Matuszek singled home the tiebreaking run during a three-run rally in the seventh that gave Los Angeles a 6-4 lead.

With the Mets leading 4-3, Bill Madlock led off the seventh with a single against Roger McDowell and stole second. Mike Scioscia followed with a double just inside the right-field line that tied the game. McDowell retired the next two batters, but threw a wild pitch that allowed Scioscia to reach third.

Cubs 9, Reds 7

CHICAGO — Gary Matthews' two-run homer followed by a three-run shot by Leon Durham keyed a six-run seventh inning to lead the Chicago Cubs to a victory over Cincinnati, snapping a five-game losing streak.

Cincinnati's Pete Rose was hitless in four at-bats and struck out twice. He walked once. Rose still needs three hits to break Ty Cobb's alltime record of 4,191.

Shawon Dunston opened the Chicago seventh with a double off reliever John Franco, 11-2, went to third on a sacrifice bunt by pinch batter Billy Hatcher and scored on Dernier's single after Dernier had fouled off a suicide squeeze bunt attempt.

Matthews followed with his 10th homer to give reliever Jay Baller, 1-3, his first major league triumph. Ryne Sandberg then singled and Ron Cey walked before Durham hit his 17th homer.

Cincinnati's Dave Parker hit his 27th homer, his fourth career grand slam, in the ninth inning off reliever Lee Smith to reduce the margin to 9-7. Singles by Bo Diaz, Ron Oester and a two-out walk to Rose loaded the bases.

National League

Phillies 2, Padres 0

SAN DIEGO — Mike Schmidt hit a solo homer and a run-scoring triple and John Denny hurled a five-hitter as the Philadelphia Phillies blanked the San Diego Padres.

Denny, 10-11, went the distance for the sixth time this season in gaining his second shutout. He walked two and struck out four.

Andy Hawkins, 17-5, was the loser, going seven innings, allowing six hits and both runs.

With one out in the fourth, Schmidt drove a 2-2 offering from Hawkins into the left-field bleachers for his 26th homer of the season. It was his 451st career home run, leaving him one short of Carl Yastremski for 17th place on the all-time list.

Expos 7, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Floyd Youmans pitched five strong innings and contributed two hits as the Montreal Expos beat the San Francisco Giants.

Hubie Brooks had a pair of run-scoring singles and Mitch Webster had two hits, including a homer, for the Expos.

Youmans, 2-2, shut out the Giants for the first five innings and was lifted after giving up a run in the sixth. The rookie pitcher aided his cause with a single in the second and a run-scornig double in the fourth.

Braves 3, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS — Steve Bedrosian, Zane Smith and Bruce Sutter combined on a five-hitter, leading the Atlanta Braves over the St. Louis Cardinals.

St. Louis, which had won four straight games, remained 1½ games ahead of second-place New York in the National League East. New York lost to Los Angeles 7-6 earlier.

Joaquin Andujar, 20-9, gave up three runs on nine hits in seven innings. He has won only three of his last nine starts while losing five times.

Bedrosian, 6-11, has both of Atlanta's victories over the Cardinals this season. The Braves are 2-9 versus St. Louis.

Pirates 7, Astros 1

HOUSTON — Lee Tunnell teamed with Pat Clements on a six-hitter and Joe Orsulak got three hits and scored twice as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Houston Astros.

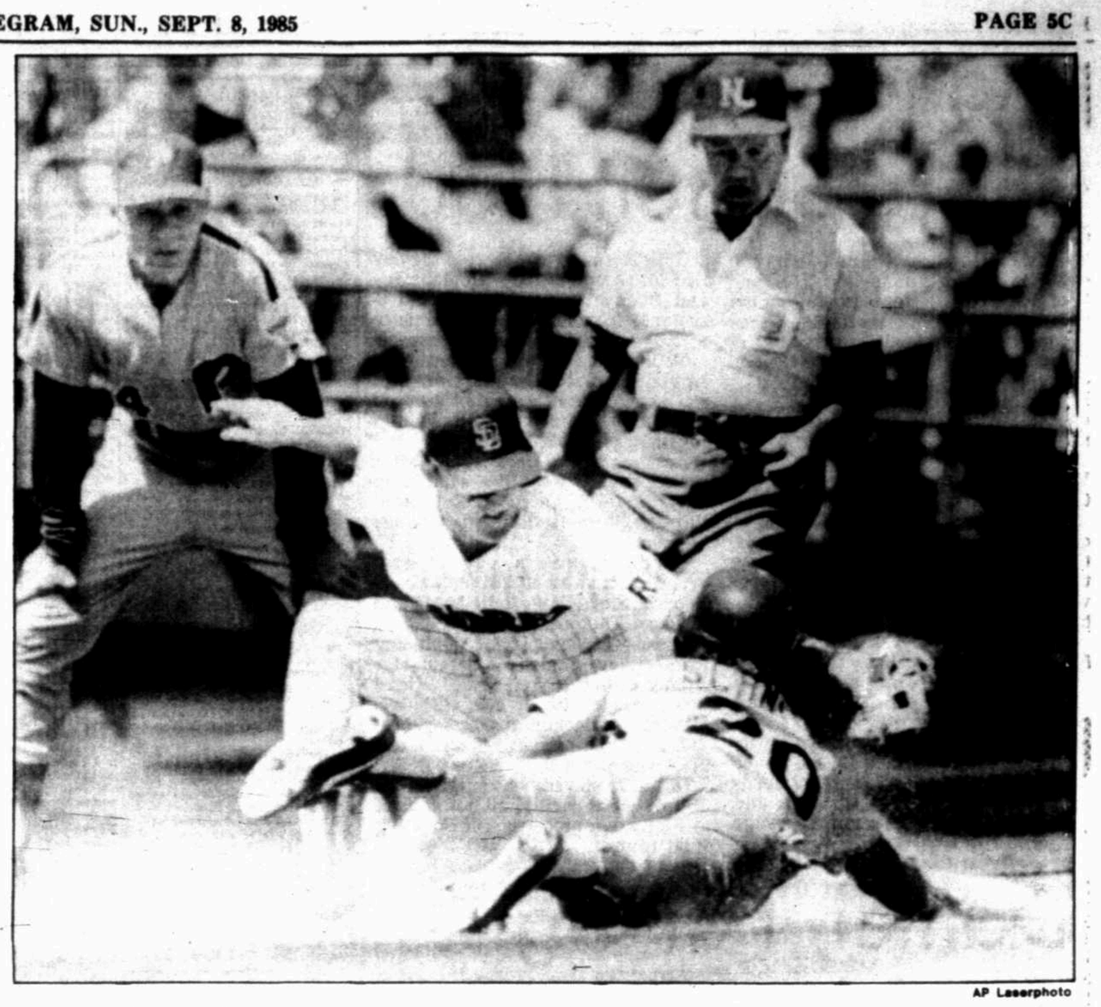

The victory was just the second in the last 24 road games for the Pirates.

Tunnell, 3-9, won his second straight decision while striking out seven and walking one before leaving with a blister in the seventh inning. Tunnell gave up five hits.

Rookie Charlie Kerfeld, 1-2, was the loser. He gave up six runs on eight hits in 3⅓ innings.

Pittsburgh took a 3-0 lead in the first. Orsulak and R.J. Reynolds led off with singles and Johnny Ray followed with a single that left fielder Jose Cruz misplayed for an error, allowing Orsulak to score. Jason Thompson singled home Reynolds, and Tony Pena's groundout drove in Ray.

A sacrifice fly by Sammy Khalifa made it 4-0 in the third, and the Pirates added two runs in the fourth. Orsulak led off with a single, stole second and went to third on catcher Mark Bailey's throwing error. After walks to Ray and Thompson, Mike Brown hit into a forceout that scored Orsulak and Ray also scored on the play on second baseman Bill Doran's throwing error.

Puckett's single snaps tie, leads Twins past Jays

Associated Press

TORONTO — Kirby Puckett snapped a 3-3 tie in the seventh inning with an RBI single and Kent Hrbek and Tom Brunansky slugged consecutive home runs in the first inning to supply the Minnesota Twins with a 6-3 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays Saturday.

It was the first victory by Minnesota at Exhibition Stadium since the final game of the 1983 season, snapping a string of 10 consecutive defeats.

The loss reduced Toronto's lead in the American League to two games over New York, which played Oakland Satuday night.

Toronto shortstop Tony Fernandez paved the way for the Twins in the seventh when he bobbled a Mark Salas grounder for an error. One out after Salas was sacrificed to second, Puckett stroked his single to right. The Twins added two insurance runs in the eighth on consecutive doubles by Brunansky, Dave Meier and Mark Funderburk.

Red Sox 11-7, Indians 9-4

BOSTON — Glenn Hoffman hit a two-run homer and Bill Buckner, Wade Boggs and Tony Armas added triples as the Boston Red Sox beat the Cleveland Indians 7-4 in the second game for a sweep of their doubleheader.

In the first game, Rich Gedman connected for a three-run homer with two outs in the eighth inning to rally the Red Sox. Steve Crawford picked up saves in both games.

Armas, who homered and tripled in the opener, staked Al Nipper, 8-10, to a 1-0 lead in the first inning of the nightcap with a run-scoring infield hit. Boggs was hit by a pitch by Curt Wardle, 6-7, took third on Buckner's single and a flyout and scored on Armas' single.

In the first game, Gedman homered off Jerry Reed, 0-5, and drove in Buckner and Steve Lyons, a pinch-runner for Mike Easler. Both had walked earlier in the inning.

Crawford came on to strike out Cleveland's George Vukovich with the bases loaded in the ninth inning to register his seventh save.

Cleveland had taken a 9-8 lead in the top of the eighth on Jerry Willard's two-run homer off Bruce Kison, 4-3.

The Red Sox had led 8-7 in the fifth inning on Boggs' bases-loaded fielder's choice that scored Marty Barrett.

Rice drove in three runs, Buckner had three hits and two RBI and Armas had a two-run homer and a triple for Boston.

White Sox 3, Rangers 2

ARLINGTON — Carlton Fisk doubled home the tying run and then scored the go-ahead run on a wild pitch, capping a two-run rally in the eighth inning that gave the Chicago White Sox a victory over the Texas Rangers.

The White Sox entered the eighth trailing 2-1, but Harold Baines led off with a single. One out later, Fisk doubled in pinch-runner Reid Nichols. Fisk took third on a grounder and scored on a wild pitch by Dwayne Henry, 1-1.

Fisk was the hero for Chicago for the second straight day. On Friday night, he hit two homers and drove in seven runs as the White Sox routed Texas 12-1.

Juan Agosto, who pitched to just one batter, picked up the victory and raised his record to 4-3. Bob James pitched the last two innings for his 23rd save.

Fisk scored the game's first run in the second inning. He was hit by a pitch from Dave Stewart, stole second and came home on a single by Ozzie Guillen.

Mariners 12, Tigers 5

DETROIT — Alvin Davis homered and drove in four runs while Gorman Thomas and Phil Bradley both hit three-run homers, powering the Seattle Mariners past the Detroit Tigers.

Jim Presley also homered for Seattle, while Detroit's Chet Lemon drove in five runs with a homer and a single.

American League

Davis and Thomas each delivered key hits during a five-run outburst in the fourth inning that gave the Mariners an 8-2 lead. Two walks and a two-out error by third baseman Tom Brookens loaded the bases, and Davis singled home two runs. Thomas followed with his 29th homer.

Yankees 3, A's 2

NEW YORK — Dave Winfield escaped a rundown to score the go-ahead run in the sixth inning and Ron Guidry won his American League-leading 18th game as the New York Yankees beat the Oakland A's for their eighth straight victory.

The triumph pulled New York within 1½ games of AL East leader Toronto, which lost 6-3 to Minnesota earlier in the day. The Blue Jays' lead is their smallest since July 21.

With the Yankees trailing 2-1, Don Mattingly led off the sixth with his 28th home run of the season. Winfield followed with his second double of the game and was sacrificed to third.

On a 2-1 pitch to Billy Sample, the A's called for a pitchout and foiled an attempted suicide squeeze. Winfield was trapped between home and third base, and catcher Mike Heath ran Winfield back toward third. When Heath flipped the ball to third baseman Tony Phillips, Winfield broke home and he scored when Phillips' throw was high to pitcher Tommy John at the plate. Winfield was credited with a steal of home.

Orioles 4, Angels 3

BALTIMORE — Mike Young singled through a five-man California infield with the bases loaded and no outs in the ninth inning, giving the Baltimore Orioles a triumph over the California Angels.

Lee Lacy led off the ninth with a single against reliever Donnie Moore, 7-8, and stole second. Cal Ripken had an infield single and Eddie Murray was walked intentionally, loading the bases.

California Manager Gene Mauch inserted Gustavo Polidor, in his first major- league appearance, as a fifth infielder and positioned him between first and second, but Young singled down the right-field line for the game-winning hit.

Don Aase, 9-5, pitched two innings for the victory.

California had tied the score 3-3 in the seventh when Brian Downing led off with a single, took second on a sacrifice, one of five in the game by the Angels, and scored on Bobby Grich's single.

Royals 7, Brewers 4

KANSAS CITY — Omar Moreno kept up his hot hitting, connecting for a three-homer during a five-run sixth inning that led the Kansas City Royals over the Milwaukee Brewers for their seventh straight victory.

The triumph gave Kansas City a 1½-game lead in the American League West over California, which lost 4-3 in Baltimore. The Royals' lead is their largest of the season.

Moreno, who had three hits and knocked in four runs, drove the second pitch from reliever Bob Gibson high off the bullpen wall in right field, giving the Royals a 7-2 lead. Moreno, acquired by the Royals last week, is batting .615 with two homers and eight runs batted in during four games with his new team.

Ole Miss, Memphis St. tie

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Don Glosson kicked a 20-yard field goal with 31 seconds left Saturday night to let Memphis State salvage a 17-17 tie with Mississippi.

Despite the score, the statistics were solidly in favor of the Rebels who rolled up 302 yards total offense to the Tigers' 209.

Ole Miss quarterback Kent Austin completed 18 of 31 passes for 245 yards while the Tigers' Danny Sparkman struggled for 79 yards while completing 12 of 21.

Memphis State is now 1-0-1. It was the Rebels' first game of the 1985 campaign.

Ole Miss took a 10-7 halftime lead when junior Bryan Owen drilled a 46-yard field goal at the horn. That capped a 63-yard drive that got an assist from a Memphis State pass interference call.

Drake 24, Northern Iowa 9

DES MOINES, Iowa — Tim Ray broke loose on two touchdown runs to cap a 21-point fourth-quarter explosion that gave Drake a victory over Northern Iowa in a nonconference game.

Quarterback Ed Cheatham scored on an 11-yard run to trigger the late rally and Ray uncorked touchdown runs of 38 and 47 yards as Drake wiped out a 9-3 Northern Iowa lead and squared its record at 1-1 in a game played in 93-degree heat.

Arizona 23, Toledo 10

TUCSON, Ariz. — Arizona fullback Charles Webb scored two touchdowns and Max Zendejas kicked three field goals as the Wildcats beat Toledo.

Webb's first score came on a 1-yard run on Arizona's second possession. He added a 2-yard touchdown run midway through the second period with Zendejas' two extra-points resulting in a 14-3 halftime lead.

Wichita St. 16, Kansas St. 10

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Valasco Smith caught an 8-yard touchdown pass and set up a field goal with a 33-yard run in leading Wichita State to a stunning upset of Kansas State.

The Shockers of the Missouri Valley Conference mounted a 10-3 halftime lead and then completely dominated their favored hosts from the Big Eight in a wild third quarter.

Sergio Lopez-Chavero, Wichita State's record-setting place kicker, booted a 42-yarder in the second period and Smith caught an 8-yard touchdown pass from Brian McDonald.

But Kansas State in the third period, despite having a stiff wind at its back, suffered three turnovers and mounted no offense whatsoever.

Mahaffey, Burns share Boston lead

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — John Mahaffey fired a 5-under par 66 on one of his favorite courses and pulled into a tie with veteran George Burns for the 54-hole lead Saturday in the $400,000 Bank of Boston Golf Classic.

While Burns, the 36-hole leader by two strokes, played virtual error-free golf in the final threesome behind him, Mahaffey was aggressive in carding six birdies and one bogey on the 7,102-yard Pleasant Valley Country Club layout.

That enabled Mahaffey to overtake Burns and tie the 54-hole course record of 201 he set here two years ago, when he was runner-up for the championship.

Burns, who shot 67 and 66 in the first two rounds, had three birdies without a bogey for a 68 and 201 heading into the final round, with $72,000 awaiting the winner.

Mahaffey still trailed Burns, winless on the tour since 1980, after 45 holes. However, he caught Burns with birdies on the 11th, 12th and 15th greens on putts set up by wedge shots.

Greg Norman, who started the day tied for second at 135 with Mahaffey and Buddy Gardner, also had a 3-under 68. That left him in third place at 203, still two strokes off the pace.

Young Brad Faxon, former New England amateur champion and Furman All-American, shot a 65 on the rain-soaked course to move into fourth place at 204.

There were six players, including former New England amateur star Jimmy Hallet, locked at 207. There was a 12-way tie at 208, with two players deadlocked at 209, seven at 210, 13 at 211, nine at 212 and six at 213, even par.

Of the 79 players who survived the 36-hole cut at par 142, all but 12 were at regulation or better for Sunday's final round.

Daniel, Farwig share Ping lead

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Beth Daniel and Stephanie Farwig shared the lead Saturday as the other top contenders faltered in the second round of the $175,000 Portland Ping Golf Championship.

First-round leader Patty Sheehan and Nancy Lopez both slipped from first place as the players struggled on the narrow, tree-lined Riverside Golf and Country Club course.

Only three players have managed to break par on the par-72, 6,285-yard course through two rounds.

Four others were two shots back at even-par 144.

Daniel and Farwig both had erratic rounds and both had chances to take the lead alone.

Daniel, seventh on the Ladies Professional Golf Association earnings list, began the round at 1-under-par 71 but had a double-bogey on the first hole and a bogey on the second.

She regrouped with five birdies the rest of the way and held a one-shot lead going into the 18th hole. But her tee shot sailed to the left into the trees, and a bogey dropped her into a tie with Farwig.

Farwig, a three-year tour veteran who has never won a tournament and is 72nd on the 1985 earnings list, was alone in the lead when she missed a three-foot putt for a bogey on the par-4, 338-yard 16th hole.

She began the day tied with Lopez at 3-under-par 69, one shot behind the leader.

Lopez, the tour's leading money winner, had a one-shot lead at 4 under par through nine holes Saturday, but she stumbled to a 5-over-par 41 on the final nine holes to finish at 1-over-par 145.

Sheehan, who shot a 68 Friday, dropped out of the lead in a hurry with a double bogey on the first hole and a bogey on the second Saturday.

The field was cut to 75 players for Sunday's final round in the 54-hole event, which carries a first prize of $26,250.

Alice Miller, third on the 1985 earnings list, was disqualified for not signing her score card. She said she didn't sign it deliberately because she was frustrated by her poor play and wanted to allow others to make the cut. She was 8-over-par 152 for two rounds.

Saturday's best score was LeAnn Cassaday's 67, but she still was at 3-over-par 147 because she shot an 80 on Friday.

Crestgate

Epitomy of Distinctive Lifestyles

So many times, a peaceful lifestyle in an uncrowded neighborhood setting of a city is permanently interrupted by "growth and progress."

But in one sector of Midland, these factors have actually enhanced the area, allowing residents to maintain a content lifestyle.

The area is Crestgate, located just north of North Loop 250. This addition features many single family and townhome dwellings by some of the top builders in West Texas.

The developers of Crestgate 9, Tom Canton and Hoyle McWright, wanted to provide amenities within the area to enhance each portion of property available. Some of these features include underground utilities, paved alleys, several culdesac lots, a planned city park and all are within a short distance of many shopping areas and several public schools.

With 38 lots available and seven currently under construction, the builders in Crestgate, including such prominent names as Gilbert Bates, Tom Canton, Jack Townzen, Jerry Hayes, Bill Woodruff and Mack Sellars, stay very busy.

"We have several 'spec' houses available at various stages of construction," said Bates.

And deep in the heart of Crestgate, at 3609 Bermuda Court, lies a custom-built home by Gilbert Bates. Its custom design allows the owners to live an unchaotic life in the comfortable setting of one of the most popular urban housing additions in Midland.

The formal dining room to the right of the entry hall provides an elegant first impression. A lovely contemporary chandelier reveals the diamond patterns in the stark white, silk-finished wallpaper. This room is large enough to serve and seat several guests. Custom white sheer drapes and tiebacks with contrasting carnass board and ties provide a traditional touch to the Oriental and modern-style furnishings.

Beyond two sets of louevred doors is the immense kitchen carpeted in earth tone shades. A tunnelled skylight with recessed lights seem to enlarge this all-electric kitchen with many cabinets of ash. Muted floral wallpaper on alternate walls enhance its light, airy personality.

From one of the sets of louevred doors to the kitchen lies the great room. The focal point of this room is a handsome brick fireplace with a wide hearth, perfect for singing Christmas carols by the fireside. An alcove to one side accommodates a wide desk. And to the other side, a wide built-in bookcase of ash adds character.

Off the great room is a large carpeted sitting room/sunroom. Through windows with white miniblinds and a convenient door, one can enjoy the beautifully landscaped backyard and patio with foliage so rare to this area. An airy theme is enhanced with the addition of two skylights and a ceiling fan. Another door provides access to the two-car garage with a workbench.

In the adjoining bath, the design fulfills the busy needs of each user with a double marble vanity, custom mirrors, separate tub and shower, large walk-in closet and convenient linen cabinet. The stylish taste of the owners is reflected in the decor of the room with sunshine floral wallpaper, long vertical windows with shades and miniblinds and accents in a rich, apricot.

Several homes are currently under construction in the Crestagate addition.

Throughout the Crestgate addition, beautifully landscaped yards enhance the beauty of this new development.

Many new homes line the streets of the Crestgate addition in one of the most popular residential settings of New Midland.

To further serve all of your financial needs, First City banks are now making home mortgage loans.

And for openers, we're making them easier to understand.

Even before you apply for a loan, we'll explain the differences in terms. In simple terms. So you'll know which type of mortgage is best for you.

Then, when you do apply, we'll do our best to approve your loan quickly and efficiently. We'll make it clear up front what the terms are, and what information we need from you and when.

And we'll tell you what your costs will be, every step of the way. So there'll be no last minute surprises.

Currently, we're offering 15- and 30-year fixed and adjustable rate mortgage loans, ranging from $30,000 to $750,000, with more options soon to come.

For buying or building, refinancing or remodeling, see us first.

FIRSTCITY.

In the past fourteen months, Richwood Homes has built, sold, closed thirty-one new homes.

How? Why?

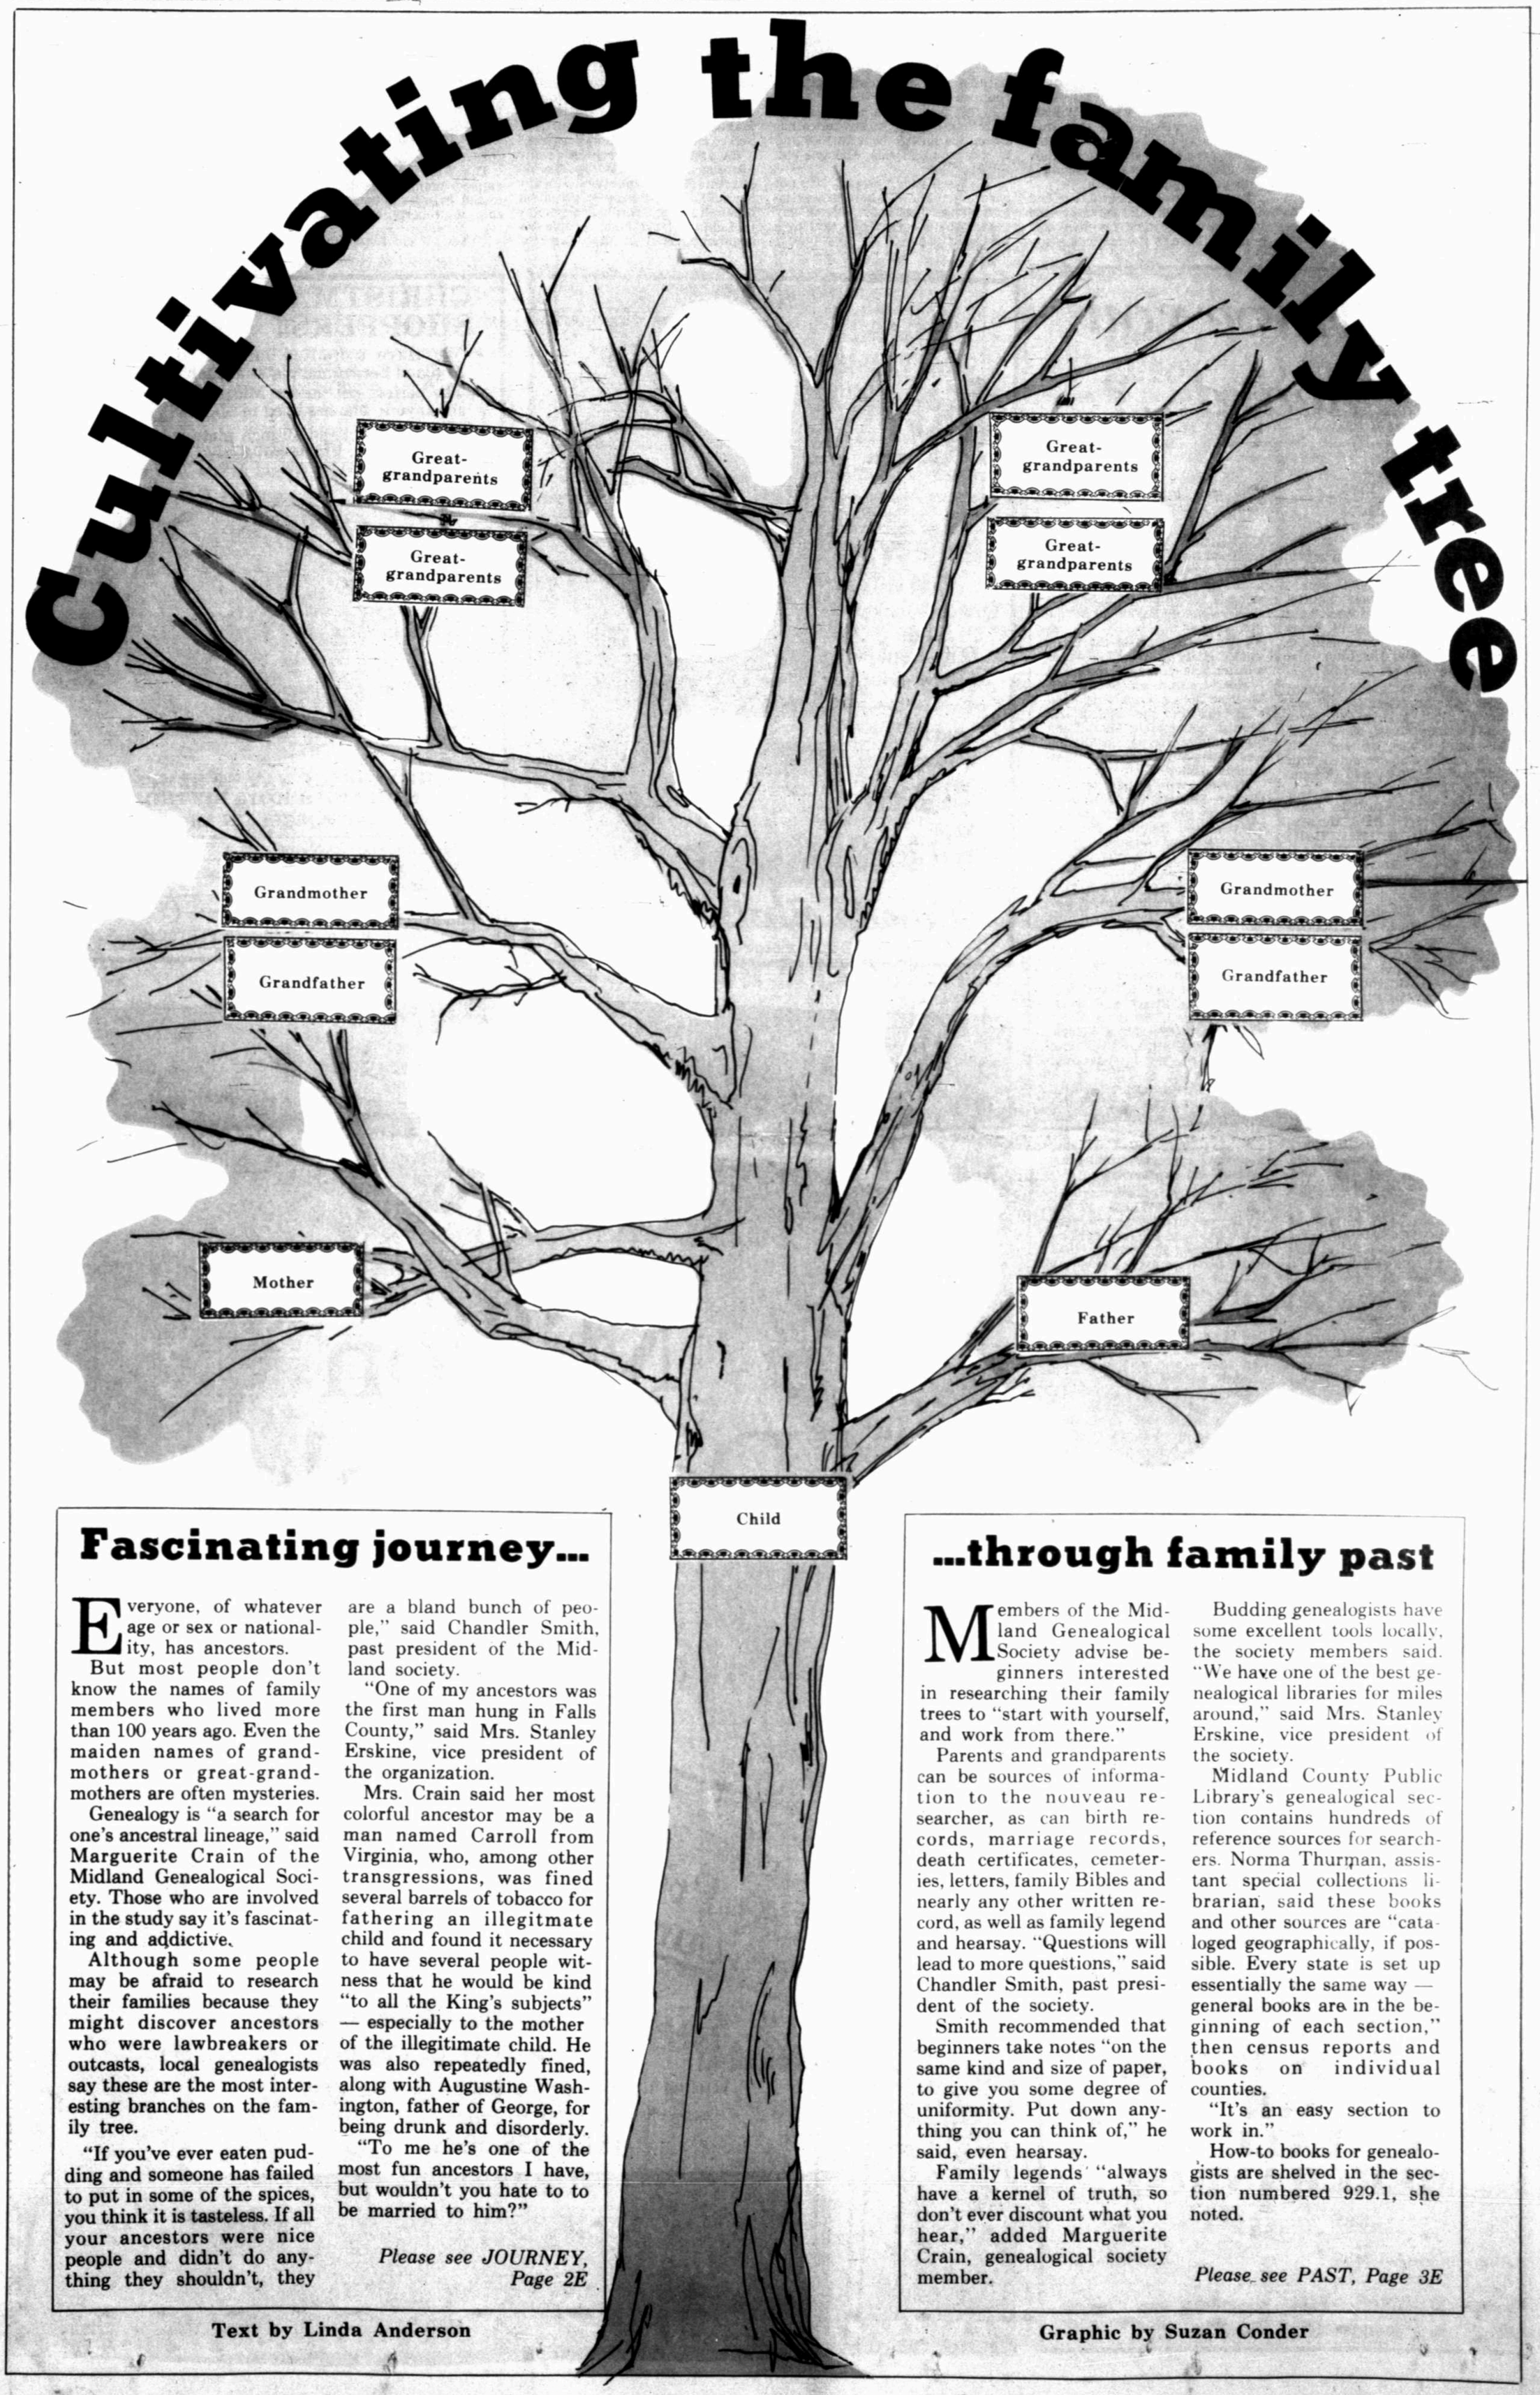

Last time we saw our banker he said the reason is very simple. "You sell them too low for all the quality you put in."

Come out this afternoon and see for yourself. We have five available now. They are usually open in the afternoon or call Regency Realtors at 699-6417 for a key.

"Building Solid Quality in Every Home"

Cultivating the family tree

Fascinating journey...

Everyone, of whatever age or sex or nationality, has ancestors.

But most people don't know the names of family members who lived more than 100 years ago. Even the maiden names of grandmothers or great-grandmothers are often mysteries.

Genealogy is "a search for one's ancestral lineage," said Marguerite Crain of the Midland Genealogical Society. Those who are involved in the study say it's fascinating and addictive.

Although some people may be afraid to research their families because they might discover ancestors who were lawbreakers or outcasts, local genealogists say these are the most interesting branches on the family tree.

"If you've ever eaten pudding and someone has failed to put in some of the spices, you think it is tasteless. If all your ancestors were nice people and didn't do anything they shouldn't, they are a bland bunch of people," said Chandler Smith, past president of the Midland society.

"One of my ancestors was the first man hung in Falls County," said Mrs. Stanley Erskine, vice president of the organization.

Mrs. Crain said her most colorful ancestor may be a man named Carroll from Virginia, who, among other transgressions, was fined several barrels of tobacco for fathering an illegitmate child and found it necessary to have several people witness that he would be kind "to all the King's subjects" — especially to the mother of the illegitimate child. He was also repeatedly fined, along with Augustine Washington, father of George, for being drunk and disorderly.

"To me he's one of the most fun ancestors I have, but wouldn't you hate to to be married to him?"

Members of the Midland Genealogical Society advise beginners interested in researching their family trees to "start with yourself, and work from there."

Parents and grandparents can be sources of information to the nouveau researcher, as can birth records, marriage records, death certificates, cemeteries, letters, family Bibles and nearly any other written record, as well as family legend and hearsay. "Questions will lead to more questions," said Chandler Smith, past president of the society.

Smith recommended that beginners take notes "on the same kind and size of paper, to give you some degree of uniformity. Put down anything you can think of," he said, even hearsay.

Family legends "always have a kernel of truth, so don't ever discount what you hear," added Marguerite Crain, genealogical society member.

Budding genealogists have some excellent tools locally, the society members said. "We have one of the best genealogical libraries for miles around," said Mrs. Stanley Erskine, vice president of the society.

Midland County Public Library's genealogical section contains hundreds of reference sources for searchers. Norma Thurman, assistant special collections librarian, said these books and other sources are "cataloged geographically, if possible. Every state is set up essentially the same way — general books are in the beginning of each section," then census reports and books on individual counties.

"It's an easy section to work in."

JOURNEY

Mrs. Crain, who can trace her family to colonists at Jamestown, said she began her own research about 20 years ago because of a family belief that somehow, through her mother's side of the family, she was related to Texas pioneer Stephen F. Austin. "I never found any relationship to Stephen F. Austin, but I did find four of my mother's great-great-grandfathers came with Austin to his first colony." She can also place other family members in Missouri, near the residence of Moses Austin, Stephen's father.

Family fables can "serve as a catalyst that gets you going," said Mrs. Crain. She never found Stephen F. Austin on her family tree, "but look at all the wonderful things I did find."

Mrs. Thomas J. Friday, president of the Midland society, said she became interested in genealogy partly because "my maiden name was Humphries, and ever since I was a little girl I had heard rumors that the Spindletop oil field was once owned by a man named William Pellham Humphries and that they were looking for the heirs." She has never been able to establish a family relationship, but became fascinated with genealogical research.

People of every lifestyle, age and economic background are interested in researching their families, said Smith. "There is no particular pattern; anybody can be interested in researching their ancestors — men, women, teenagers."

Troy Lawrence, 17, a senior at Odessa High School, said he became interested in his family's history from listening to his grandparents' stories. "I also wanted to know if they had any influence in setting up counties in Texas."

In the year since he began researching his family, Lawrence has traced his lineage back to 1800 and to Mississippi, Florida, Alabama and Illinois.

"It's fascinating," he said. "It's not hard if you know" where to seek information. "I had help from my grandfather's cousin. She sent us a packet of papers."

Now that school has started, Lawrence said he will have to work his genealogical research into his fall schedule. "It's one of my main interests because it's my family — and it gives me so many interesting stories." Discovering that some of his ancestors were prominent people — some did help found Texas counties, one has a town named after him — makes Lawrence "feel great. It makes me feel more important, makes me feel better about myself."

Reasons for researching family histories are as varied as the researchers themselves. Mary McClurg, immediate past president of South Plains Genealogical Society in Lubbock, said many people become interested in their families' pasts because knowing who their ancestors were gives them more information about themselves.

"That's what makes you want to know what your family did, what part they played in every area of history. It makes history more real."

Some "pursue their genealogy simply to establish eligibility for the many heritage societies," such as the Daughters of the American Revolution or the Magna Carta Dames, said Mrs. Crain.

The West Texas oil business has caused many genealogies to be traced, in order to determine ownership of property, Mrs. Friday said.

"When oil was found under West Texas, everyone wanted to know who owned it," said Smith.

A family health history — touching on, for instance, cancer or hemophilia or any inheritable condition — can be valuable medical information, said Mrs. McClurg.

"Once you start, what you have learned will stimulate you" into continuing genealogical research, according to Mrs. Crain.

Genealogy is "the most interesting and fascinating thing I have ever undertaken because it has no end," Mrs. McClurg said. "Everyone should be proud of their ancestry — that's part of you. Without our ancestors, we wouldn't be here."

Parties continue here for Susan Cowden and Kyle Raybourn, who are to be married Sept. 28 in the First Presbyterian Church.

The latest was a cocktail buffet and "Honey-Do" shower held poolside at the home of Betsy (Mrs. Edwin) Dwyer. Co-hosting were Poddy and Jim Lucas and Beth and Charles Priddy.

The buffet table was centered with an arrangement of multi-colored gladioli, large mixed daisies and greenery. Guests were seated at round tables, covered with print cloths and decorated with baskets of multi-colored flowers.

A Christmas in August shower was given by Phyllis (Mrs. John) Grimland, Merle (Mrs. Merwin) Haag, Lillie B. (Mrs. Holt) Jowell, Louise (Mrs. Garland) Lang, Robbie (Mrs. Roy) Davidson and Lucille (Mrs. John Jr.) Nobles.

The party was held in the Grimland home, which was decorated throughout for the holidays. Guests were greeted by planters filled with red poinsettias and a Christmas wreath on the front door. A small Christmas tree displayed the ornaments and other gifts which the guests brought for Susan and Kyle's first Christmas. The serving tables also were in full Christmas array.

Friends were invited to the Racquet Club for a "Fajita Fiesta para Senorita Susan and Senor Kyle" recently. The party was hosted by the bride-elect's aunts and uncles, Liz and Joe Walter Jr. of Houston and June and Frank Cowden Jr., and her cousin, Linda Isbell.

A mariachi band entertained on the patio. The Mexican spread was served buffet style, and guests were seated at round tables, adorned with brightly colored cloths and chair coverings. Colorful flower arrangements decorated the tables.

Parents of the prospective newlyweds are Margaret and Courtney Cowden and former Midlanders Frances and Paul Porter of Arlington.

IT WAS SO GOOD to have longtime friends and former Midlanders, Roseann and Ches Herndon of Oklahoma City, in town for a visit recently. During their brief stay, they enjoyed seeing numerous old friends, dining in favorite restaurants from the past and observing the growth and changes in the Tall City since their last visit here four years ago.

Among the social courtesies extended them was a luncheon at Midland Country Club hosted by Pris Boyd and Mary Lou Brahaney. Guests included Doris (Mrs. Van) Howbert, Evelyn Hall, Marianne (Mrs. Will) Green, Carolyn (Mrs. Jim) Fitz-Gerald, Jerry (Mrs. Ford) Chapman and her daughter, Martha (Mrs. Brian) Fowler, who was visiting here from her home on the island of Maui, and this columnist.

MICHELE PRUETT recently returned from a five-week trip to Europe, where she participated in a "Baylor in the British Isles" summer school program. She has since reentered Baylor for her junior year.

Prior to the start of the three weeks' study at London's Westminster School, the group toured Wales, Ireland and Scotland. Their schooling was interspersed with trips into the English and Scottish countryside. One of the highlights of her stay in London was seeing Princess Di at Westminster Abbey.

Michele was joined by her mother, Sharri (Mrs. Jim) Ketcham, for her last week abroad. They visited Belgium, Amsterdam, Cologne, Germany, Paris and London.

NOMA (MRS. W.W., JR.) WALLACE accompanied her son, Warren Wallace III, and his wife Sandra and children Adam and Allison, on a delightful 19-day automobile trip recently.

They joined another son, Jeffrey Wallace, his wife Nancy and children, Cal, Stuart and Greg, at their home in Saratoga, Wyo., for a trip to the Grand Tetons, Yellowstone National Park and Watterton-Glacier International Peace Park.

The family was enthralled with the beautiful scenery and breathtaking sights along the way and enjoyed gorgeous weather for the most part. Being West Texans, they could appreciate waht rainfall they did experience.

JANE BLACKWELL and her family were in O'Donnell over the Labor Day weekend for a celebration honoring her father, Noah Hampton Thompson, on his 90th birthday.

An old-fashioned barbecue was held on the land where Mr. Thompson has farmed for the past 62 years. The farmhouse was decorated in a country and western theme and adorned with brightly colored lights.

Festivities included a slide presentation of Mr. Thompson's life from the early 1900s to the present, a friendly Texas "42" tournament and western music. Highlight of the evening occured when the guest of honor entertained with harmonica music. Known to family and friends as Hamp, Mr. Thompson has five children, 11 grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren.

Also attending the celebration from Midland were Jane's husband, Ray, and their children, Twyla and Bob Doty, and sons, Brandon and Bryce, and Francie and Stacey Blackwell. The Blackwell's daughter, Kim Conley, came in from Abilene with her husband Steve and children Mackinzie and Ashleigh, for the party. The Conley family formerly resided in Midland.

Genealogist also have a "wonderful resource" in the "library of the Latter-day Saints in Salt Lake City," said Mrs. Crain. Family records from all over the world have been filmed and filed in this Utah library, and can be ordered through local Mormon church branch libraries, including the one in Odessa.

"The Mormons do a lot of genealogical work," said Smith.

And the Ector County Public Library contains almost all the states' census records from 1790-1900, said Mrs. Thomas J. Friday, president of Midland's genealogical society.

Information on researching genealogy is being explained during a series of free classes, conducted by members of the Midland Genealogical Society. Open to the public, the classes began last week and will continue at 6:30 p.m. the next three Wednesdays at St. Luke's United Methodist Church, 3011 W. Kansas Street. Topics included in the remaining three lessons are definitions of legal terms found in court records, how to organize materials and a potpourri session of questions and answers from participants.

One of the nicest results of family research is communicating with other researchers, said the genealogists. "It gets you to where you correspond with people you don't even know," said Smith. "You establish warm friendships through correspondence."

"If it gets too exciting, you telephone," said Mrs. Friday. "Sometimes you can't wait to write!"

Though historical accuracy is of vital importance to genealogists, adding color to family stories is not uncommon. "Like a lot of Texans, we don't mind telling a little lie now and then if it makes the story sound better," Smith said.

Makeovers become computerized

Hearst News Service

Beauty and computers. The words don't hang together too well, do they? But the folks from Elizabeth Arden think they solved that problem by naming their million-dollar makeover computer "Elizabeth."

Surprisingly, it seems to have worked. When they began trotting "her" around the country last year, "Elizabeth" grabbed so much attention that other cosmetics companies went scurrying to develop their own beauty makeover computers. The result, says Jerry Hamilton-Catty, former international makeup artist and now merchandising adviser to "Elizabeth," is that "Elizabeth" clones will become permanent fixtures in stores. Make up counters will be altered forever.

"In probably sooner than five or 10 years," he says, major cosmetics companies will all have consultants using computers to do makeovers.

For $25 (appointments only), "Elizabeth" will produce three makeovers for you, with nary a touch of blush-on to your cheek, pencil to your brow or embarrassment to your ego by sitting in a department store and blinking blankly through a bare-naked face, waiting for a makeover to begin.

"But once they get going and involved, they look at the picture and become more objective," says Hamilton-Catty. "After a while, they see their good points, not their bad points. We can show them how to play up their positive areas."

After a beauty consultant "paints" your three computer faces for 30 minutes (your own real face would take 45 minutes to do over), "Elizabeth" gives you color printouts of yourself in three different versions: the heavily made-up vamp on the town, the sensible woman at work, and a punk style with black lips and shaved eyebrows — if you like. She also gives you a list of the cosmetics used, to which you can refer when you buy them.

Couples debate bearing children

Associated Press

To be or not to be child-free is a decision that can divide otherwise loving couples — and often it is the woman who does not want children and the man who does.

The 1983 Census revealed that up to 40 percent of married women in their early 20s chose to remain childless, according to an article in the September issue of Cosmopolitan, while 10 percent of women in their late 30s made the same choice.

They are backed in their decision by recent studies of childless women that show the same degree of happiness, maturity and satisfaction attained by parents can be had by those who do not have children.

A counselor at the American Institute of Family Relations said that households in which the man wants a child and the woman does not are not uncommon.

Most couples reach a decision about parenting before marriage, but some marry assuming they agree on children, only to learn later that they do not. Child care therapist Merle Bombardieri said others drift into nondecision, which sometimes ends with an "accidental" pregnancy.

Reaching a decision is difficult, and as child-free broadcaster and author Betty Rollin has said:

"Look, I feel I missed something, which I'm occasionally wistful about. But that doesn't mean I'm sorry or that I wouldn't make the same decision again. I think people who do have children miss something, too."

Couples struggling with this problem often experience feelings of helplessness, frustration and anger, as well as tension and anxiety. Talking openly and honestly will help. Writer LeeAn Lowe, the mother of two children who wanted her current relationship to be child-free, offered these suggestions for keeping discussion direct and forthright.

— Listen to your partner without anger, and express in words your understanding of his position.

— Don't assume you can read his mind or that he can read yours. Ask questions about his feelings and explain your own.

— Concentrate on feelings and avoid accusations and hostile outbursts.

— Recognize that you are partners and there is no right or wrong in this situation.

Women still dress for success

Hearst News Service

Women can learn how to operate computers, get an MBA at Harvard or run a company more easily than they can learn how to dress for success, say authors Karen Anderson and Lee Hogan Cass.

"It's still considered frivolous to ask questions about clothes or makeup," Anderson says. "It's like a taboo subject. You're supposed to know about it. But how are you supposed to if you can't talk about it?"

The two wrote "Look Like a Winner!" to remedy the situation, because, they say, the more that women dress for success, the more likely they are to achieve it. And they don't mean the little fitted jacket, straight skirt and floppy bow tie advocated by John Molloy in his "Dress for Success" book for women. That costume can now be regarded as entry-level dress, in their opinion.

The new "power suit" is likely to be a dress, such as a coat dress, or separates, including an unconstructed jacket, they say. A less "powerful" but businesslike look for a serious meeting might be a short-sleeved, short jacket with fitted waist over a light-colored skirt.

Cass speaks with experience gleaned during her rise to vice president and fashion coordinator of the Broadway, Southern California's biggest department store chain, with 43 stores and a business volume of $1 billion a year. Anderson speaks as a former fashion writer for the Los Angeles Herald Examiner.

Shoes often are where the career woman has feet of clay, defeating her authority with open-toed shoes below a suit, for example, "as if anything below the knee doesn't count," says Anderson.

Old terms come out of mothballs

DALLAS (AP) — Researchers here have buttonholed the origin of some of the terms for men's clothing, including the practice of calling one article of clothing a "pair" of trousers: Until the 14th century each leg covering was separate, not sewn together, making it literally a pair of trousers.

Slacks: It was in 1926 that the Haggar Co. started business, making what founder J.M. Haggar Sr. and his son Ed called slacks — pants that didn't match a suit jacket.

Blazer: This term for a solid-color sports coat traces its roots to the sea. During the 1860s, the captain of the HMS Blazer ordered all of his sailors to wear identical jackets, which had metal British Navy buttons; the jackets were, of course, navy blue.

Tuxedo: In 1886, Griswold Lorillard shocked New York society by wearing a black jacket without the then-obligatory tails to the exclusive Tuxedo Club. A new standard for men's formal attire was born.

Jeans: Although jeans didn't become popular casual wear until the 1950s, the word originated in 1810 as pants made of jean, a twilled cotton fabric.

Views on marriage change

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — A new trend is developing in marriage, according to a cleric here, who says couples seem to be taking a different view of their vows.

"I think more and more churches, Catholic and Protestant, are taking marriage preparation a lot more seriously," said the Rev. Tim Davern. "We're doing everything we can to make sure couples know each other before they get married. It's not perfect, but we're hoping it works."

A vice chancellor to the bishop at the Phoenix Diocese, Davern spends much of his time in marriage tribunal work, meeting with divorced Catholics who want to remarry in the church.

In recent years, Davern said, there seems to have been a change in the way couples viewed marriage.

"You hear a lot of stories about people getting married on the third date. They're more common than people think," he said. "I would say up until the mid-'70s, you were getting a lot of marriages that were too quick, too fast. People didn't really know each other then."

Davern left his post as associate pastor at St. Thomas the Apostle in Phoenix to study canon, or Catholic Church, law. After two years of special training at The Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., the native Arizonan is living and helping out at the Church of the Resurrection in Tempe and working as vice chancellor.

"Lamentably, our (Catholic) divorce rate is about the same as everybody else. It's a little lower, but not by much," he said.

For a divorced Catholic to remarry in the church, his previous marriage must be declared invalid by the church. "It's not that the Catholic Church doesn't allow divorce, but we don't say the divorce makes you free to get remarried," he said.

The church considers divorce a civil action, which means that a divorced Catholic is still married in the eyes of the church.

Without an annulment of the previous marriage, a priest will not perform the wedding ceremony and the remarried Catholic would not be able to receive communion or go to confession.

"We're in the business to help people get everything straightened out with the church," Davern said.

Davern also will talk to friends and relatives who knew the marriage, in addition to the Catholic who wants an annulment. "You have to judge everything with the background," he said.

Sometimes people enter marriages not intending to live according to the Catholic ideal of faithfulness, he said. Other times, people choose to marry when they really aren't equipped to make the decision because of serious psychological problems.

Many couples, especially those who married 20 or more years ago, were pressured into marriage because the bride was pregnant.

DECORATE FOR YOUR LIFE STYLE

Whether one lives in a house, an apartment or a loft, one area undoubtedly will be designated as a living room. Faced with decisions about what furnishings to buy and how to arrange them, it is wise to plan the space with care. A good decorator or designer will recognize that every part of the home should be able to be comfortably used. Having a "front parlor" only for show is an old-fashioned concept. Yet, many people still seem to feel that some unwritten rule obliges them to purchase "sets" of furniture or other "time honored" styles. It is much more interes ag to put together a personal life-style environment than to simply transpose a group assembled by a manufacturer or furniture store.

When you need help on making decisions on window or wall coverings talk to our knowledgeable staff at WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 685-0875. We can come to your home or office and put your ideas into a design for living, and we'll work within your budget. Hours: Mon. thru Fri. 8am-4:30pm, and by appointment.

Saudis studying sharks in Red Sea

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Saudi Arabian scientists exploring Red Sea waters have reported the region to be one of the most prolific breeding grounds of sharks in the world.

A total of 63 sharks were caught in one area in four hours, Khaled Allam, marine biologist at the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Resources' fishery division, told The Associated Press in an interview.

He said that a study of the sharks had been conducted recently off the southern Saudi coast of Jizan.

Allam stressed that there had not been any official reports of shark attacks in the Jidda area. But he said that he had recently read a Coast Guard report which reported the death of a Jizan fisherman by a tiger shark.

There are four shark species in the Red Sea that can be dangerous to man: the tiger shark, the hammerhead, the white-tipped and the black-tipped, said Allam.

The tiger shark is the most deadly of the four, he said. Long known as a man-eater, the tiger shark is distinguished by its brown spots and vertical bars on its body, giving it the appearance of its namesake.

The tiger shark is found in most of the world's oceans and is omniverous, feeding on fish, other sharks, mollusks, carrion and garbage. It is extremely aggressive.

Just as dangerous is the black-tipped shark. Smaller than the tiger shark, it is distinguished by the black tips on its fins. Closely related is the white-tipped shark. As its name implies, it is distinguished by white tips on its fins. It is less aggressive than the tiger or black-tipped, according to Allam.

The fourth potential man-eater in the Red Sea is the hammerhead. Easily identified by the distinctive shape of its head, which may either be like a spade or a hammer, hammerheads are unusual in that they have nostrils and one eye on either side of the "hammer."

Allam says that hammerheads are less aggressive than tiger and black-tipped sharks and if one is spotted, it is best to keep still until it passes.

Shark attacks here are decidedly rare, but if a shark is spotted it should be considered dangerous, said Allam.

Artist specializes in painting whale murals

HONOLULU (AP) — Earning just enough money to move on to his next destination, Robert Wyland has been traveling around the Pacific painting life-sized whale murals on buildings.

"Hawaiian Humpbacks," touted as the largest marine-life mural in the world, is the sixth mural Wyland has painted since his obsession for giant canvases — and giant subjects — began in 1981.

Wyland says his work, "The Art of Saving Whales," is designed to glorify the whale and show people the mammal is worth protecting.

He paints for free, using materials donated by local businesses.

The murals provide a cutaway glimpse of the deep, complete with native species of whales, dolphins, reef fish and rocks. Wyland studied his subject up close while diving off the coast of Maui, Hawaii.

"I try to get a mental image of their world and transfer it onto the canvas," Wyland said.

Since Wyland doesn't get paid for painting murals, he earns his keep by selling posters and small paintings on the street.

"Fortunately, I've developed a technique that lets me paint very fast," Wyland said. It took only two days to paint a 60-foot whale rising from the ocean in full breach.

After "Hawaiian Humpbacks" Wyland tackles another challenge: To paint a sperm whale mural in the heart of downtown Tokyo next November.

Americans living longer

ROCKVILLE, Md. (AP) — With few exceptions, death rates are continuing their general downward trend and Americans are living longer, says Family Practice News.

Reporting on statistics for 1982, the latest government figures available on mortality, the publication notes that the 1982 death rate of 852 deaths per 1,000 population is down from the rate of 862.4 for the previous year. This sets a record low, dropping under the previous record low death rate of 852.2 deaths per 1,000 recorded in 1979.

Death rates declined for every age group in 1982 with the smallest decline noted for those aged 65-74 (1 percent) and the largest decline for those aged 15-24 and 35-44 (6 percent each).

The decline of death rates for almost all age groups of both sexes between 1981 and 1982 represents a continuation of a general downward trend since 1950.

The average life expectancy of Americans rose to a record high of 74.6 years in 1982, up from 74.2 years in 1981.

Many Americans choosing to retire younger than age 65

WASHINGTON (AP) — A study conducted for Congress concludes that age 65 is no longer the standard retirement age for most people with private pensions.

Instead, the median age for workers to start drawing private pensions is 62, according to an analysis of Census Bureau records by the General Accounting Office.

"Almost 60 percent start receiving (private pensions) before reaching 65," according to Richard Fogel, director of the GAO's human resources division. "Thus, 65 no longer appears to be the retirement age chosen by most Americans with private pensions."

The GAO studied the retirement question at the request of Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, the chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee on civil service, post office and general services.

Stevens sought the information to help guide his panel's work in drafting a new pension plan for federal workers hired after Dec. 31, 1983, who are all covered under Social Security, as well.

Workers hired before then have their own pension plan that allows them to retire at the age of 55 after 30 years' service. The Reagan administration has argued that this is out of sync with private sector practices and that the retirement age for full benefits should be raised to 65 for all federal workers.

Most Social Security beneficiaries also claim reduced benefits before 65. They can get 80 percent of full benefits at age 62, with the amount increasing each month that they wait until 65.

The GAO cited a government survey of those collecting Social Security benefits for the first time in 1980 and 1981. It "found that 76 percent of the men and 84 percent of the women were under 65," the report said.

Two years ago, President Reagan and Congress raised the normal Social Security retirement age to 67 in the next century to help keep the system in the black.

The GAO report said a separate study by the Department of Labor also supports the conclusion that most people with private pensions stop working before 65.

Fogel said that private pension coverage has expanded rapidly since World War II. "Pension coverage increased from 24 percent of private wage and salary workers in 1950 to 49 percent in 1979," he said. "Moreover, most private plans allow employees to retire as early as age 55 with reduced benefits."

The Social Security Administration has reported in the past that many of those who take early retirement do so for reasons of poor health.

Parkinson's disease cause, cure still not determined

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Although 168 years have passed since Dr. James Parkinson first described as "shaking palsy" the disease that now bears his name, medical science has thus far been unable to unravel the cause or causes of most Parkinson's cases or to devise a cure.

Nonetheless, dramatic progress has been made in treating the disease, which is known to afflict about half a million older Americans, or one person in 100 over age 50. This figure does not include the untold thousands with symptoms of the disease that are not severe enough to prompt them to seek a diagnosis.

But early diagnosis is important. Through medication, exercise regimens and tips on adaptive living measures, modern treatment can forestall or reduce the symptoms of Parkinson's disease, allowing patients to lead full and active lives for years after diagnosis and often for the rest of their lives.

PARKINSON'S DISEASE, though potentially devastating to those afflicted, has not received a lot of public attention and research support, probably because it is not fatal and because most of its victims are elderly. The late stages of the disease, however, can leave patients vulnerable to pneumonia, blood clots and bodywide infections that can be fatal.

The disease is known to involve a loss of cells in an area of the brain called the basal ganglia, which is responsible for balancing the activity of opposing muscles; to bend the arm, for example, one muscle must contract while the opposing muscle relaxes. This region also becomes deficient in a chemical called dopamine, which transmits messages from muscle cells to the brain.

In nearly all cases of Parkinson's disease, the loss of brain cells and of dopamine progresses slowly, gradually disrupting the patient's ability to control body movements.

Three categories of symptoms are considered hallmarks of the disease: tremor; bradykinesia, which is a gradual loss of spontaneous movement, and rigidity or stiffness, which results in jerky movements. Often the first sign of the disease is difficulty getting up from a deep comfortable chair, a problem readily dismissed as a consequence of age rather than disease. In more advanced stages, Parkinson's patients commonly assume a stooped posture with arms turned upward at the elbow. Handwriting also changes, becoming smaller, cramped and unsteady.

TREMOR, OF THE shaking palsy Parkinson described, occurs in about two-thirds of patients. It is most apparent in the hands and, oddly enough, may become more pronounced when the person is relaxed. Tremor can interfere with a person's ability to transfer food from plate to mouth or hold steady an object, such as a newspaper or needle.

Bradykinesia makes it difficult for a Parkinson's patient to start moving, especially after being in one place for a while. A loss of control of facial muscles can result in a flat, expressionless appearance and speech pattern, creating the incorrect impression that the person cares little about a subject being discussed. Emotions are not affected, just the person's ability to show them.

The breakthrough in treatment came in the 1960s with the devlopment of the drug L-dopa, which helped to supply the brain with the dopamine it lacked. (Dopamine itself is not a useful treatment because it will not cross from the blood stream into the brain.) L-dopa greatly reduced problems with tremor, rigidity and bradykinesia, the most crippling of Parkinson's symptoms. Ways were found to administer L-dopa that overcame its side effects, such as nausea and vomiting, heart problems and low blood pressure.

About three-fourths of patients with Parkinson's disease are dramatically helped by L-dopa. But the treatment has one serious limitation: In about half the patients, prolonged use diminishes its effectiveness until it becomes completely ineffective.

Exercises are another crucial aspect of treatment. They do not slow progression of the disease, but they can maximize a patient's mobility. Exercises include those for speech, swallowing and overall muscle tone.

HERE ARE SOME helpful hints he and others offer for coping with the disease:

- Learn all you can about the disease and its treatment and become a partner in your care.
- Accept your limitations and change your living and working arrangements accordingly, but make the most of your remaining abilities.
- Find purpose in your life and have fun, retaining ties with friends and family you enjoy.
- Follow your drug and exercise prescriptions faithfully; never change doses or routines without first consulting your doctor.
- Install railings and handles throughout the house to reduce the risk of falling. Consider using a cane to improve balance and decrease the risk of falls.
- Do not let others do things for you or speak for you when you can still do and speak for yourself, however slowly.
- With your family, join a support group and attend the group's meetings; there, you and others can share problems and solutions and reduce your sense of isolation.

Shadows of the past in San Angelo

It's not easy these days to look at San Angelo sitting quietly by the green banks of the Concho River and visualize the shady past of the once harsh 19th century frontier town.

Col. Benjamin H. Grierson described fledgling San Angelo in 1875 as "about two doz. mud & stockade buildings or rather hovels.

"Everything in the place is a whiskey shop or," he added ominously, "something worse."

In November of 1870, Dr. William Notson, first post surgeon at Fort Concho, noted that "Within the last six weeks there has been seven murders in a population of less than a hundred, men, women and children all told" and that more than 100 murders were committed near San Angelo in less than three years "in a population which has never at any time exceeded two hundred and fifty."

In August of 1876, another post surgeon treated six percent of the troops for venereal disease and 30 soldiers — out of a garrison of 326 men — deserted that month, according to Midlander J. Evetts Haley's book, "Fort Concho and the Texas Frontier.

While San Angelo was apparently anything but a garden spot in the 1800's, the city's Convention and Visitors Bureau now cheerfully promotes the nickname "The Oasis of West Texas" — although it does discreetly mention "the wild and wooly days of the West" in some of its visitors' brochures.

San Angelo — originally Saint Angela — was born as a tiny trading post catering to the lonely and often bored troops at Fort Concho, which was established on the southern bank of the river in 1867 to guard the Texas frontier against Indian raids.

"There is a little town across the river, just outside the military reservation, that is full of human sharks, and as every inducement is held out there to soldiers to spend money, the nights succeeding pay day are hideous. There are so many gamblers, cut-throats, murders, horse thieves living and finding harbor at San Angela it is never considered safe to pass through there at night, and no officer even thinks of leaving the garrison after dark." — Dr. S.L.S. Smith, surgeon at Fort Concho, in April 1878.

It was from Fort Concho that Col. Ranald S. Mackenzie — one of the greatest cavalry commanders in Texas history — rode out in 1874 to fight in one of the last great Indian wars on the South Plains.

EVEN THOUGH the Army abandoned the post on June 20, 1889, when it was no longer necessary for frontier defense, Fort Concho remains the most prominent attraction in San Angelo.

Restoration work began on the fort in 1929 and still continues. There are now 24 restored or reconstructed buildings on the fort grounds, most sturdily built of limestone by German masons from Fredericksburg in the 1870s.

Although visitors expecting to see a Hollywood Western movie-style wooden palisade may be somewhat disappointed by the spartan, sparsely-furnished stone buildings, the fort is a registered National Historic Site and generally considered one of the best preserved in the state.

The headquarters building, constructed in 1876, still has its original pecan wood floors in all but two rooms. The building houses a wide — and sometimes puzzling — variety of artifacts.

One exhibit case is dedicated to Lt. Theodore Chadbourne, namesake for Fort Chadbourne which was a forerunner of Fort Concho. The most forlorn memento displayed is Chadbourne's leather shoulder sword strap, which is cleanly punctured by the bullet that killed him at the Battle of Resaca de la Palma during the Mexican War in 1846.

The neighboring wall exhibit includes a lock of hair and the bloodstained handkerchief carried by Tom Green, the Confederate general for whom Tom Green County is named, when he died at the Battle of Blairs Landing, La., in 1864.

OTHER EXHIBITS in the building mention — perhaps in too little detail — the famed "Buffalo Soldiers," the all-black regiments made up of emancipated slaves that helped defend the frontier against Indians, but who also often ran afoul of white settlers. Haley even devoted an entire chapter of his Fort Concho book to "Racial Troubles on the Conchos."

One small wall exhibit notes the unhappy career of Lt. Henry O. Flipper, the first black graduate of West Point, who served briefly at Fort Concho. Born of slave parents in Georgia in 1856, Flipper was commissioned in 1877, but was charged with embezzlement during a controversial court martial at Fort Davis.

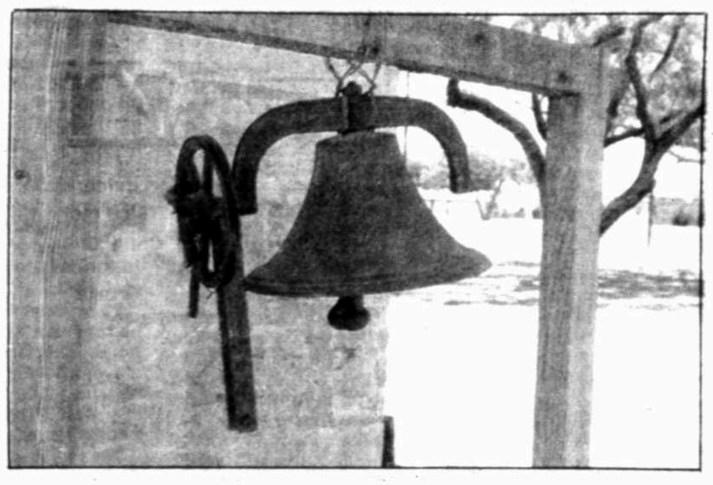

Even though he was cleared of the charge, Flipper was dismissed from the service on June 30, 1882. He died in 1940 after spending most of his life as a civil engineer in the El Paso area trying to clear his name. Finally, in 1976, the Army officially awarded him a posthumous honorable discharge.

Two of the enlisted men's barracks are open to the public. The 16th Infantry Squad Room is furnished much as it would have been by its troops. The other barracks building has been turned into a museum with an eclectic assortment of exhibits, including, oddly, part of an old bank from Rowena. There is also a wool and mohair exhibit dedicated to the local sheep ranching industry.

CONCHO—— Western movie sets popular locations

One of the messhalls behind the barracks has been converted into a very tiny natural history museum.

For natural history of an entirely different sort, there is "Miss Hattie's," a restored bordello now serving as a small museum on the second floor of an antique store a few blocks north of the fort. All the furnishings are original to the era and above the doors of some of the bedrooms are the names of the women who actually occupied them.

"Miss Goldie was reputed to be the number one star attraction and commanded the highest price, the kingly sum of $2," according to the San Angelo Chamber of Commerce.

Miss Hattie's is on East Concho Street, the oldest street in San Angelo, which also features several other restored 19th century buildings. At one time, Concho Street was the address for more than 35 saloons and brothels serving Fort Concho troops.

Time has provided some startling juxtapositions, though. Only about a block from Miss Hattie's is San Angelo's newest and most tranquil attraction, the recently completed Concho River Walk. This is a nicely landscaped strip of park land along the Middle Concho River, which resembles Austin's Town Lake greenbelt more than San Antonio's commercialized Riverwalk.

The cool, grassy banks are enough to make any water-loving Midlander jealous and feature many pretty picnic areas. The central River Plaza area also has a couple of other family-oriented attractions, the modest little Neff's Amusement Park and the conveniently-located Texas Putting Courses miniature golf course.

One wonders what the ghosts of those tough troops, hardened gamblers and infamous prostitutes would think if they could see children riding carrousels right in the shadows of the shady past.

Western films may have lost their popularity over the last decade, but interest in the lore of Western films has never been greater.

The latest evidence of this interest is a boom in old Western movie locations as prime tourist attractions. From the red rocks of Sedona ("3:10 to Yuma," "Broken Arrow") to the canyons of Kanab ("The Outlaw Josey Wales,") smart chambers of commerce are discovering that an association with the Western movie past can be a prime asset in attracting the tourist trade.

The inspiration for this phenomenon seems to be Old Tucson, Ariz., a movie studio and amusement park 10 miles outside Tuscon that has been steadily increasing its business to the point where it now is the second-largest tourist attraction in Arizona, second only to the Grand Canyon.

This little adobe town representing Tucson in the 1860s was painstakingly constructed in 1939 by Columbia Pictures as a set for its epic Glenn Ford Western, "Arizona." After the premiere, the studio gave the site to Pima County, where it stood for the next 20 years as a minor tourist attraction looked after by the Tucson Jaycees.

Over those years, it badly deteriorated but was still used sporadically as a movie location. Some 21 movies, including Howard Hawks' classic "Rio Bravo," Jimmy Stewart's "Winchester '73," and (more unlikely) Bing Crosby's "The Bells of St. Mary's," all did location shooting there in the '40s and '50s.

In 1959, promoter Robert E. Shelton convinced the county government and a group of investors to restore the crumbling buildings, add some new ones and transform the old location into a major movie-making center and Western movie theme park.

SHELTON ALSO went on a campaign to attract movie-makers. In 1968, he added all the facilities of a major studio, including a complete sound stage. Since then, some 45 movies (including such non-Westerns as "Revenge of the Nerds"), 60 television TV programs and movies, and 100 episodes of "The High Chaparral" have been filmed there.

In the '70s, the place took off as a tourist attraction —ironically, at a time when the Western film itself almost died out — and now each year thousands of fans take the winding road into the desert to ride the stagecoach and trains, eat ice cream in the saloon where John Wayne shot it out in "Rio Bravo" and "El Dorado," wander through the adobe ruins where Burt Lancaster and Kirk Douglas fought "The Gunfight at OK Corral," and buy souvenirs in the mercantile store where Stewart shopped in "Winchester '73."

It seems unlikely that any of the budding Western movie locations will ever become tourist attractions on the scale of Old Tucson. But one that is trying hard is the Texas site of "The Alamo," a 1960 epic directed by and starring Wayne. Called Alamo Village and located outside San Antonio in the town of Brackettville, this elaborate set was built when the Conservation Society of San Antonio refused to allow Wayne to film his movie inside the actual Alamo. He retaliated by hiring a crew to build an exact duplicate, a task that took 5,000 workers over two years to complete.

THIS, TOO, was transformed into a frontier theme park and has proven to be enormously popular over the past 25 years — so popular, in fact, the location Alamo often gets more visitors than the real thing.

While Old Tucson and Alamo Village may be the most elaborate standing movie sets, no single geographical area is more closely associated with the Western film than Monument Valley, a remote desert area in the Navajo Indian Reservation between Utah and Arizona where unique, massive monoliths and buttes served as the backdrop for half of John Ford's Westerns, including "She Wore a Yellow Ribbon," "Fort Apache," "Stagecoach" and "The Searchers."

Goulding's Lodge, a trading post and hostel started by Harry Goulding, the man who originally lured Ford there in the '30s, has had a monopoly on the Monument Valley tourist business for 50 years, offering Jeep rides and minitours of the old movie locations of a half-dozen Western classics. But Goulding now is getting competition from a number of other tourist businesses, both locally and from the big-city packagers.

The most comprehensive of these is a movie-location tour put together by Western Leisure Inc. in cooperation with the Utah Media Center. Each September (Monument Valley is oppressively hot in the summer), a busload of movie fans from all over the country is taken on a guided tour of Monument Valley and the rest of the prime movie location country of Utah. Included in the itinerary are stops at the locations of "The Searchers," "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," "Drums Along the Mohawk," "The Electric Horseman," "Jeremiah Johnson," "Wagonmaster," "Cheyenne Autumn" and dozens of others.

THIS TOUR, which includes nightly screenings of the movies filmed at the locations, has been so successful that additional tours and locations are being added this year. Western Leisure's Lynn Calhoon says he hopes to get some of the actual Western stars who appeared in the movies to help guide the tour next year.

How long this trend will continue is hard to say, but it shows no sign of abating. Towns like Moab, Utah, are now proudly advertising their Western movie legacy. Kanab, Utah — the site of over 50 Western shoots — is now calling itself "Little Hollywood." Kingman, Ariz., has as its main tourist attraction a museum of memorabilia of Western sidekick star Andy Devine. Prescott, Ariz., is memorializing a ranch outside the town where Tom Mix filmed many of his silent Westerns.

The interest in movie sets and movie locations also seems to be extending beyond the Western. Last year, a group of archaeologists started to excavate the buried set of Cecil B. DeMille's 1923 Biblical epic, "The Ten Commandments," in the California desert near Santa Maria.

For some reason, the massive set was ordered buried by DeMille (possibly so another movie company couldn't use it), and a group has been carefully recovering the intricate plaster columns and imitation artworks, most of which will go to museums or perhaps remain at the site as a monument or park.

At first, this project was treated with some amusement by the media, but it has since been the object of so much fascination and interest that the general consensus now seems to be that this old movie set is well worth saving — and celebrating — as an important part of our cultural heritage.

Outlaw legend lives on

By WILLIAM ARNOLD
Hearst News Service

One of the more persistent rumors floating around Hollywood this summer is that that a big-budget movie about Billy the Kid will go into production sometime in 1986.

Given the less-than-spectacular success of Westerns this summer, such competition to do another one might, at first, seem unlikely. But the truth is that the Billy the Kid movie is a genre almost unto itself and, from the dimmest nickelodeon days, this character has held a fascination for filmmakers (and actors) that has been very near irresistible.

The outlaw Billy the Kid has been portrayed as a leading role more times in more movies than any other figure in history, not excluding Abraham Lincoln, Wyatt Earp, Jesse James, George Washington, Julius Caesar, Moses, Henry VIII and Jesus Christ.

He was born William (or perhaps Henry) Bonney (or McCarty) in 1860, probably on the Lower East Side of New York City. His father died when he was 5 and, after marrying a man named Antrim, his mother brought her two sons west in the 1870s, settling near Silver City, N.M.

Mrs. Antrim died when Billy was 14, and the boy became an itinerant saddle tramp and day laborer who roamed the territory throughout his teens. He gradually gravitated to the cattle country in Lincoln County, N.M., and by 1877 he had killed his first man —a blacksmith who made the mistake of casually referring to him as "a pimp."

In the late 1870s, competition between two rival economic factions in the town of Lincoln exploded into one of the Old West's greatest range wars, and Billy found himself right in the middle of it. When his employer — a wealthy English cattleman named John Tunstall — was killed, Billy went on a personal vendetta, tracking down the perpetrators and killing them off one by one.

Arrested for murder and jailed in the Lincoln County Courthouse in 1881, Billy made a daring escape, killing two deputies in the process. Offered amnesty by the governor (Lew Wallace, who later wrote the novel Ben Hur), he surrendered, was jailed again and, after the amnesty did not come through, escaped again. A few months later, he was trailed to Fort Sumner, N.M., where he was killed by a lawman (and old friend) named Pat Garrett.

Part of the attraction of this story, of course, has to do with his youth (he was 21 when he died), his daring (his escape from jail is the centerpiece of every Billy the Kid movie), his loyalty to his friends (which seems to have prompted most of his killings) and his extreme affability (Pat Garrett called him "the nicest boy I ever knew").

But exactly why it is so appealing to generations of Americans and such a phenomenon in the American motion picture — is a mystery, and has intrigued me enough over the years that I finally decided this latest potential round of Billy movies was occasion enough to go to Lincoln, N.M., and take a look at the legend at its source.

As it turned out, this was not all that easy. With no bus, train or air service, the only way to get there is to drive south of Albuquerque for several hours, turn off on a two-lane road at San Antonio (a tiny town that is the home of Conrad Hilton and the site of the first Hilton hotel), drive for hours on the edge of White Sands Proving Grounds (directly past the closest public view of the Trinity atomic testing site), into the rolling Sacramento Mountains, past miles and miles of nothingness into a charming little valley in the middle of nowhere.

To anyone who has spent time in Tombstone, Virginia City, Dodge City, or any of the other Old West historic towns, the actual town of Lincoln comes as a bit of a shock. Designated a state monument (no touristy signs or souvenir shops anywhere in sight) and miles off the beaten track, it is easily the most authentic Old West town in existence — a perfectly preserved remnant of its heyday, with scarcely a building that does not date from the 1800s.

Here, one can browse in the courthouse where Billy made his most daring escape (now a museum), inspect the bullet holes Billy made in the stairway, rock on the veranda of the old Worley Hotel (which has been in business, relatively unchanged, since 1872), shop in the two mercantile stores that were the centers for the two factions in the trade war, stand before the house where Billy and Gov. Lew Wallace secretly met to work out his surrender.

The only concessions to commercialism seem to be a small arena just outside of town, where the annual Old Lincoln Days pageant is held every April and the Kid's escape from the Courthouse is re-enacted; and a rather "rustic" Billy the Kid Museum that a Roman Maes — Lincoln's resident expert on the Kid (as Billy is referred to here) — has been running since the '30s.

Chatting with Maes and reading the yellowing newspaper clippings tacked to his walls, one discovers some interesting asides to the legend — not the least of which is how Lincoln and Fort Sumner fought a year-long court battle in the early '60s over the Kid's bones (Fort Sumner won); and how a 91-year-old named Ollie Henry Roberts stepped forward in 1950 claiming to be Billy (Garrett, he said, had just wounded him) and actually convinced many experts for a time, including Universal Pictures, who used him to publicize their latest Billy movie (he was later officially declared a fake by the governor of New Mexico).

Sights, tastes found on road from Taos to Santa Fe

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

The route from Taos to Santa Fe covers 150 miles, but you should allow an entire day to fully savor the sights and cuisine to be found along the way.

From Ranchos de Taos take New Mexico 3 over the spectacular 9,100-foot Taos Pass, which cuts across the Sangre de Christo mountain range. Look for the junction to New Mexico 75 (the highway signs in this part of the country seem to have been designed only for hobbits) and head west through the village of Penasco to pick up New Mexico 76 heading south to Las Trampas. Here stands what we consider to be an architectural jewel of a church.

Continue on New Mexico 76 through the interesting mountain communities of Ojo Sarco and Truchas, where nearly all the inhabitants speak only Spanish. Throughout this area live a large number of Penitentes, a Catholic sect that has been condemned by the church for its practice of crucifying a member each Good Friday. Although the members claim to have taken the men off the cross before they died and to have lately abandoned the practice altogether, the Penitentes are still suspect. Look for their moradas — windowless buildings on hilltops — where they practice their secret rites.

Pace yourself for two of the area's better restaurants within the next 10 miles. The first is Rancho de Chimayo, a lovely 19th century hacienda with white adobe walls and Mexican wall hangings in all five cozy dining rooms.

For an appetizer, the burrell tortilla is filled with jalapenos and cheese. The platillo especial is a combination of enchilada, tamale, taco, chile relleno and boiled frijoles, while the combinacion pecante is a more interesting melange of beef in red anche chili sauce, green chili enchilada and excellent posole. Round off your meal with nantilla, a tapiocalike pudding.

CONTINUE INTO town to visit the Santuario de Chimayo, the Lourdes of New Mexico with alleged miraculous healing powers, which should at least cure any indigestion from too much chili.

Remain on New Mexico 76 as you make your way to Espanola, which has one of the finest Mexican restaurants in America: El Paragua. The dining rooms have stained-glass windows and striking tiled walls that give the feeling of dining in a Mexican wine cellar.

Founded in 1609 and the oldest state capital in the United States, Santa Fe provides the same exhilaration to first-time visitors as does San Francisco. Maybe it's the rarefied atmosphere (at 7,000 feet) that suffuses the city with an almost poetic energy.

Santa Fe's unique style is defined as a horizontal city of low brown adobe, but within this picturesque architecture there lives a paradoxical group of citizens. No other American community has such a dramatic dichotomy of extreme wealth and poverty uneasily coexisting: The affluent have converged, seeking a luxurious but ostentatious lifestyle abetted by the absence of industry and a short tourist season, while the poor — some of whom have been on relief for generations — find it hard to survive in a place offering so few economic opportunities. As a visitor, be prepared for some depressing sights along with the historical and the splendid.

REPUTED TO be one of the gourmet centers of the Southwest, Santa Fe does have some outstanding restaurants — along with a few that somehow still exist on kudos from a decade past.

For lunch, The Shed in Prince Patio is a local institution where patrons start lining up for lunch at 10:30 a.m. Another excellent choice for lunch is The Periscope where owner-chefs Shirley and Joe Pisacane serve up original fare in an attractively austere, high-ceilinged room with white walls and cane-and-chrome chairs.

Among the many restaurants to choose from for dinner, sample the Creole and Mexican fare at the famous Pink Adobe, which has a homelike setting of cozy candle-lit dining rooms with fireplaces and unusual wall hangings. Eating at the Steaksmith provides an atmosphere of woody ambience with the predictable salad bar.

The Compound divides most savvy Santa Feans into two groups: those who consider it the nonpareil in the Southwest and those who find it overrated, over-priced and overbearing. The stark-white interior is elegantly simple with its patterned ceiling, contrasting objets d'art, smart bar area and soft lighting.

Because so many of the interesting sights are centrally located near or around the heart of town, walking is our preferred mode of seeing Santa Fe. Start at the Palace of the Governors, built around 1610, which is the oldest public building in the country. Across the courtyard is the Hall of the Modern Indian with exhibits showing Indian life for the past century. On the next block is the Musuem Of Fine Arts, featuring regional artists with particular focus on Indian works.

Tourists may steam into Dodge City

DODGE CITY, Kan. (AP) — A steam locomotive's distinctive whistle may soon pierce the silence of southwest Kansas' sand hills as a tourist train chugs from a cowtown to two farm towns and back.

"It is not a group of railroad buffs playing railroad. It's a group of community people working on an economic development project," said Dick Ranney, 57, one of the biggest boosters of the Dodge City Ford & Bucklin Railroad.

Ranney enjoys taking skeptics on a drive along the railroad's right of way. He delivers a spiel passengers may one day hear from a DCF&B conductor or a tour guide dressed as a cowboy.

For their $10-$12 fare, riders would get a three-hour round trip complete with a staged holdup and other trackside activities.

Ranney suggested the possibility of the project after becoming director of the Dodge City Convention and Visitors Bureau in 1982.

So far, about $39,000 has been spent to administer the non-profit foundation and acquire its estimated $1 million in assets. Ranney said the group is debt-free and has spent money on the project only when the funds already were pledged or in the bank. A white elephant sale and a telethon brought in about $10,000.

Travelers bringing bargains home

Hearst News Service

Shopping trips to Europe have grown into a booming business, benefiting virtually every sector of the travel industry by capitalizing on the strength of the dollar overseas and combining it with special bargain air fares, low-season hotel rates and discounts from European manufacturers and department store chains.

"The more you spend, the more you save is the obvious rule of thumb," says Robert Bloch, New York public relations representative for the famed London department store, Harrod's.

"An American couple flew from New York to London and back on the British Airways' Concorde — that's a fare of $5,006 per person. They did all their shopping and flew back the very next day. They claim what they saved amounted to far more than their expenses. Obviously, they purchased things like jewelry and furs and fine china. But on most goods — the traditional cashmeres, knitware, raincoats, perfumes and so on — the savings is between 20 to 30 percent over what you'd pay for the same goods in America."

What an increasing number of Americans are going overseas for is hardly traditional: Cars, furs, fine bone china, jewelry, expensive watches, porcelainware, works of art.

"We just aren't seeing more Americans shipping home new European cars, but a lot of used ones, too," says James Groccia, port director for U.S. Customs at the Port of Albany, N.Y. "That's creating quite a headache for us, because a lot of them are nonconforming vehicles — they don't meet U.S. safety and emission standards. In 1982, 200 non-coforming cars entered the Port of Albany; this year, we expect that number to exceed 5,000."

SUSAN ALPERT of Cunard Lines says the company's customers are increasingly running into another kind of problem — a shortage of garage space on the luxury liner, the QE 2. More Americans are flying to London by the Concorde and buying cars, which they bring back with them on the QE 2, she says. The one-way passenger fare per passenger from Southampton to New York ranges from $950 to $6,525 and garage space can set them back up to $1,795 per vehicle.

"We can only accommodate about 70 cars per sailing," cautions Alpert, "so it's a good idea to check in advance."

Harrod's is among the growing number of European businesses that don't have sales outlets in the United States but now maintain a presence here to lure Americans to their stores in Europe. This year, Harrod's expects to sell more than 25,000 catalogs, at $5.50 each, in the United States, and has already aired 60 30-second TV spots in New York, Boston and Washington.

BLOCH, OF HARROD'S, says European shopping sprees got a tremendous boost last winter when hordes of Americans descended on Harrod's for its January sale, and their mad hunt for bargains was carried live on American TV.

Michel Couturier, New York representative for the giant French fashion houses and department store chain, Au Printemps, has tailored shopping tours specifically for Americans.

"Our American customers are met at our stores in France and helped by special hostesses. We offer them a 10 percent discount on everything they purchase and we even deliver everything they buy, free of charge, to their hotels. If you add that 10 percent discount to the lower prices in France and the strong value of the dollar, you are talking about 20 to 40 percent savings over American prices. Americans know it, and our business is growing in every direction."

Just what do they buy, and why European?

MEN'S AND WOMEN'S apparel and accessories, leather goods, fine bone china, crystal, perfume, shoes and wollens top the list, retailers and travel agents say. Furs, watches, jewelery and cars are making a strong showing, they add.

"Nobody brings duty-free liquor and cigarettes anymore," says Ann Neville of the Belgium Tourist Office. City. "They're spending even that money on things like scarves and chocolates instead."

European quality and styling are in, industry spokesmen say, and, because the dollar's value has soared against most foreign currencies over the past few years, European goods finally are affordable.

In addition, they add, because there is a growing demand for European goods in the United States, prices of imported items have been raised to whatever the American market will bear. In the case of European cars, for example, prices are pegged to the dollar rather than to reflect its strength, thus widening the gap between prices in Europe and the United States.

Those in the travel industry say that while savings in Europe can range from 20 percent to 40 percent over prices stateside, be prepared for ripoffs and bad buys. The deal you may be landing in Europe may be the cheaper "seconds," a quality that is not shipped to the U.S.

BEWARE OF AIRPORT duty-free stores, travel agents say: A lot of what they sell is cheaper in town. And in town, be careful what you buy.

Says Groccia, of U.S. Customs: "Americans don't realize it's illegal to bring back many furs and leather goods from animals and reptiles on the endangered-species list at home." Other goods you can't bring back to the United States range from liqueur-filled chocolates to Cuban cigars.

DEAR ABBY

Smoking's 'good' suggested

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Numerous articles in your column lead me to believe that you are not very sympathetic toward smokers.

Shame on you. Smokers and the institution of smoking are a driving force in our economy. Putting aside the social problems and suffering it causes, consider the "good" it does by creating jobs at all levels of society.

Smoking keeps huge numbers of people employed. Imagine how the following would be affected if there were no smokers in the nation: tobacco farmers, truckers, stockholders, advertisers, distributors, salespeople, janitorial services, insurance agents, makers and sellers of soaps, air-fresheners, chewing gum, mouthwashes, breath deodorizers, the manufacturers of medical supplies, as well as all those in the medical profession such as nurses, doctors, laboratory technicians and hospital personnel.

And just imagine what would happen to the American Cancer Society if tomorrow all the smokers stopped smoking! Add to that, lobbyists, lawyers and journalists — including columnists such as you, Dear Abby. — D. IN CITRUS HEIGHTS, CALIF.

DEAR D.: And don't forget the casket makers, headstone manufacturers, engravers, morticians, grave diggers, and the greeting card people who make it easy for us to say, "Please accept my sympathy."

DEAR ABBY: I hope you won't think I'm foolish, but I need your help. I am 76 years of age and have been a widow for 20 years. Three years ago I started going with a widower who is now 72. The trouble is he doesn't talk much. All he wants to do is kiss, kiss, kiss. He gets real horny and is ready to jump right into bed, which is all right once in a while, but he wants sex every time he comes over, which is often.

As soon as he walks in, he starts pestering me. He can't just sit and visit, watch TV or play cards. No, he wants sex; then he's ready to leave.

He used to do all the repair work on my house, but he doesn't want to help me any more because I've been saying no too often.

Can you advise me? — ENOUGH IS ENOUGH

DEAR ENOUGH: Tell this insensitive man that you feel used, and would like a little more love and a little less lust. And if he refuses to work on your house unless you let him work on your body, then he's buying, and you're selling, in which case it's business, not pleasure, and it's time to say goodbye.

DEAR ABBY: I am trying to decide whether I should elope or have a big wedding. Years ago, weddings weren't as expensive as they are today. The cost of putting on a wedding has gone up, but the amount of money people spend on gifts has not.

On the average it costs $15 per person for food and $5 for drinks — that's $40 a couple, right? So unless each guest gives a gift worth $20 — $40 a couple — you won't even break even!

Many people go to weddings because it's a cheap night out. Where can you eat and drink all you want, and dance all evening for $20 a person? Nowhere!

I've seen people show up at weddings and give the couple a $15 gift. Half the people invited to a wedding don't pay any attention to the bride and groom; they're too busy getting drunk and dancing.

Years ago, weddings were put on to give the new couple a good start. Nowadays, people are so cheap, the couple would be better off eloping.

I would like your input on this. — BRIDE TO BE

DEAR BRIDE: I have always believed that the purpose of a wedding was to exchange vows before friends and relatives with whom the couple wanted to share their joy.

Whether the couple "broke even" or not didn't occur to me. But since it occurs to you, I think you should play it safe and elope.

Exercise termed best medicine for emphysema

Hearst News Service

Taking it easy is the worst medicine for the more than 25 million Americans affected by emphysema, chronic bronchitis and chronic asthma. The best medicine is an active life.

So say Myra and Berton Shayevitz, husband-and-wife physicians who have written a book on breathing difficulties, "Living Well with Emphysema and Bronchitis."

The illnesses — known collectively as chronic obstructive pulmonary disease — are a growing health problem because the disease develops slowly, largely as a result of smoking. Consequently, people who began to smoke around the time of World War II are now suffering the consequences.

"It's very insidious, and it gets severe after 30 to 40 years," said Shayevitz, director of intensive care at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Northampton, Mass.

Patients in the VA hospital's pulmonary unit are given portable oxygen units from their first day on the floor and told to get out of bed.

"We start them walking," Shayevitz explained. "Traditional medical advice was to rest, but the new way is to get up and get moving. The more you do the more you're able to do. Strength leads to strength. We don't start them out running 100 yard dashes. We gradually build them up."

Even so, patients first must overcome their fear.

"It's an insidious disease, unlike a heart attack, which is dramatic," Shayevitz said. "These people gradually through the years become more and more limited. They gradually find they can't have sex or walk as far as they used to, and they begin to give up things and get socially isolated. They end up losing jobs, giving up friends and withdrawing into themselves."

But such a downward slide into isolation is not necessary.

"The idea of this book is to break them out of that. What we do is get them moving. We tell them, 'You can do it and you should do it. We teach people to exert themselves despite feeling short of breath. The basic philosophy is what you can do, you should do. Get moving."

The book was written after the Shayevitzes shook themselves out of the midlife doldrums with some of their own medicine.

"When we hit our midlives we found ourselves somewhat overweight and not feeling well," he said. "I had disc disease and ended up with a paralyzed leg, and I couldn't get any specific medical advice. Most of it was what I shouldn't do, like not stepping off a curb. Finally I found a physician who said, 'Look, you have to exercise. You have to risk it. Otherwise you'll just go downhill.' "

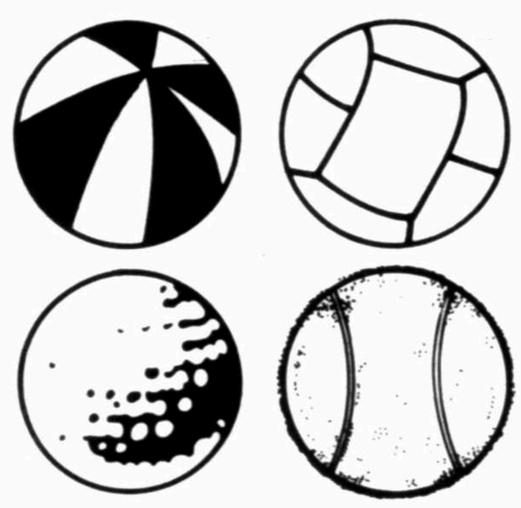

Following that advice, Shayevitz, 54, and his wife, 51, began an exercise program of regular jogging and recreational sports. They lost weight and generally felt better. What worked for them, they reasoned, would work for their patients as well.

The idea was not a new one. Indications of the therapeutic value of exercise have been noted by physicians for 30 years, Shayevitz said. But the value had been largely overlooked.

"There had been glimmerings of it in the medical literature, particularly with pulmonary patients," he said. "It was first described in the mid-1950s that people with illnesses who exercised got benefits similar to athletes on conditioning programs."

Exercise therapy is meant to complement other treatments for breathing illnesses, including medication regimens and diet.

Routine chest X-rays questioned

Copley News Service

There is a growing consensus that routine chest X-rays required for admission to many hospitals is of little benefit to many people, according to Family Circle Magazine.

It says patients under 20, pregnant women and some patients admitted for surgery have a very low incidence of heart or lung disease, and for these groups chest X-rays may be nothing more than a costly nuisance. Yet, at an average charge of $50, these X-rays cost about $1.5 billion a year.

Female managers harassed

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — Female managers and supervisors are most likely to be the victims of sexual harassment on the job, a recent survey shows.

More than a third of the women managers surveyed said they had been victims, compared with about a fourth of the secretaries responding.

"The stereotype is that secretaries are the main targets of sexual harassment," according to Bernard P. Erdman of Padgett-Thompson, a business seminar firm that conducted the survey. "The problems that women managers have aren't as well known."

More than half of the female managers surveyed said they knew someone who had been sexually harassed in the workplace.

More than four out of 10 questioned also said they had observed such harassment on the job.

AT WIT'S END

Nest not empty

By ERMA BOMBECK

When we speak of the empty nest, we instinctively picture a woman in her late 40s ... bored, depressed, neurotic and unfulfilled peeking through starched lace curtains, holding a plate of freshly baked brownies and eagerly awaiting the arrival of her son's laundry.

Now try this picture. A 50-year-old father, ridden with guilt and full of regrets, standing by the window holding a baseball glove eagerly awaiting the arrival of his son to talk about life.

It happens. The empty nest isn't a female condition. It happens to a lot of men who, during the child-raising years, are busy establishing themselves in a successful career. When they finally have the time to devote to the children, the children have grown up and gone.

It might be tragic if the state of the economy hadn't returned a whole generation of kids to the nest. As my husband said when our kids moved back home, "God has given me a second chance. This time I'm going to be there for them. This is going to give me an opportunity to tell them all the things a father should pass on to his kids."

The first night at dinner he asked, "Where are they?"

"Your daughter gets her nails done after work and your son has a date and won't be home until late."

"Oh. Was it always like this? I mean, eating alone?"

"Always," I said. "They were never home."

On Saturday morning, he came into the kitchen numb. "I just dropped by their rooms and asked someone if they wanted to hit a few balls. I put a mirror near their lips to see if they were still breathing. Do they always sleep this late?"

"I should have told you they're nocturnal," I said. "Always have been. I used to try to keep awake until they went out for the evening."

One day I saw my husband sitting outside the bathroom door looking very depressed.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"I just spent 30 minutes talking to my son behind a closed door about life. When I asked him how he felt about it, he said, 'I'm for it' and took off."

During the weeks that followed he tried to establish rapport. He made a stab at discussing sex with our daughter who said, "What don't you understand, Dad?" He shouted advice to them as they rode away in a cloud of exhaust and told amusing stories about his childhood as they watched MTV.

One night he fell exhausted into a chair and said, "I give up. I don't know how to reach them."

"Have you tried the phone?" I said.

"It's easy for you. You had them as children. They were here then, weren't they?"

I shook my head, "They're no different now than they were then."

"Then how did you know the nest was empty?"

"It wasn't easy, but the day I took my first hot shower, I knew something was different."

Successful counseling includes teen mom, family

Copley News Service

SACRAMENTO — Teenage motherhood, at its very best, is a tough proposition. But it is particularly tough when the young mother fails to find support from parents and family. And the toughest time of all seems to come when the baby of such a mother reaches the age of about 2 years.

"If there is to be a strain in the mother-child relationship, it is likely to surface at this age when babies are outgrowing their 'cuteness' and becoming more independent and assertive," says Susan B. Crockenberg, associate professor of human development at the University of California at Davis.

Crockenberg recently completed initial studies of 61 mothers, aged 13 to 19, and their 3-month-old babies, seeking clues to how mother-child relationships are established. Her interest was piqued by the fact that teenage mothers, on the whole, have more problems than older mothers, she said.

Three months, she pointed out, is an important stage of development in the mother-child relationship. In 42 of the cases, she was able to follow the study until the babies were 2 years old.

Crockenberg said she wanted to learn to what degree the mother's parenting abilities are affected by her background and by her current support from the child's father and her own family.

She found that mothers with histories of being rejected as children by their own mothers and who currently lacked support from their families were more angry and punitive with their children.

"If they were rejected by their parents, but their current support system was strong," she found, "then they looked good. But, mothers who were rejected as youngsters were also likely to be the ones lacking in current support."

The anger of these mothers also was reflected in their children, Crockenberg noted. Children of mothers who expressed excessive anger were more angry and aggressive themselves, were less confident in their actions, and appeared to avoid contact with the mothers.

Hoping to translate her research results into public policy, Crockenberg studied how professional support might be provided to teenage mothers to compensate for a lack of family support.

"We can't legislate family support, but professional support services can encourage the kind of family support upon which adolescent mothers depend," she said.

Current service programs for teenage mothers have a major weakness, though, Crockenberg found: They are directed only at the mother.

"The effect is not to include the extended family. This may signal to the family members that they are not needed, or the professional service may give different advice to the mother than she received from her family, putting her in conflict with the family. Inclusion of the family in the professional support programs would convey to the family that they have an important role in the mother's life and would assure that the mother and her family all receive the same advice regarding the child's care."

Informed teachers can help children survive divorce

Hearst News Service

Johnny may have more to adjust to than a different grade and a new teacher this fall. Many parents divorce during the summer, and unless they have a change of address they often don't think to notify the school about the divorce.

"It's very important to tell the school, just as you would if a parent had died, because a family usually undergoes a significant amount of change that may affect the child's performance in school," says Susan Arnsberg Diamong, the author of "Helping Children of Divorce: A Handbook for Parents and Teachers."

A teacher alerted to the fact that the child's parents are getting a divorce can spot changes that the custodial parent might not notice, she says.

"After all, the parent now has a lot more day-to-day demands, and she can't always be sensitive to her child's psychological reactions. The teacher, however, has more opportunity to notice any difference in behavior, since he or she is with that child most of the day, at least in elementary grades."

Parents may contact the school just to give information, or they may come for support or guidance, says Diamond, a counselor at Scarsdale (N.Y.) High School District.

"The ideal response from school personnel is one of non-judgmental caring," she says. "But sometimes the teachers and school officials respond in a manner they think appropriate, and often it isn't."

To help schools be more responsive, Diamond suggests that parents going through a divorce convey the following information:

• When did the separation or divorce occur? Diamond noted that sometimes, it hasn't yet, and this too is important for the school to know. This cues the teacher, principal or counselor to go very gently with the child.

• When did the parents tell the child? Teachers need to know if the parents haven't told their children. Sometimes, parents will ask school officials what is the best way to do so.

• Has the father or mother left? When? Where did he or she go? Should the school have his or her phone number and address? This information gives the school personnel some sense of whether they might be hearing from the non-custodial parent. If a child's father is far away, for example, teachers might be more careful in mentioning fathers in general to avoid upsetting the child. If both parents still are in the house, this sometimes clues counselors and others dealing with the child to the fact that this is a difficult time for the child.

• Does the father or mother visit regularly, or are there plans for them to visit regularly? Sometimes children exhibit different behavior after visiting the non-custodial parent, so teachers might better understand why a child seems to behave in a different way on a Monday after a weekend visit.

• Do both parents want to be informed about school progress or functions, such as an open house, back-to-school night, concerts? By letting teachers know this, they can make arrangements to do so. That's better than having an angry non-custodial parent storm in, wondering why he hasn't heard about a certain event. Parents have told Diamond, too, that schools sometimes promise to send reports and news bulletins and then end up doing nothing, because that's the simplest thing to do. So that should be clearly spelled out.

• What is the school's responsibility to the non-custodial parent if he or she contacts the school? Unless there is a court order against the release of certain information, both parents have a right to their children's school records. If there are exceptions, school officials need to be informed of them.

• Are there any other changes in the home situation? If a mother gets a job full-time, it helps the teacher to know this information, in case the mother must be contacted during the day. It also lets school officials know which students are latchkey children, going home to empty houses in the afternoon.

Study determines non-paid work develops teen's skills

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Teenagers getting ready for the world of adult work might be better off playing on a tennis team or cooking a fancy meal than working at a paid job, according to a University of Rochester study.

Paid teen employment tends to require less sophisticated work skills than some of the things teen-agers do for no pay, conclude two professors in the university's Graduate School of Education and Human Development.

For example, they say, cooking an elaborate dinner requires more skill than waitressing, and playing tennis well takes more discipline than being a ballboy.

Harold Munson and Dale Dannefer, along with several associates, went into 27 suburban homes where teen-agers lived and as unobtrusively as possible watched how they worked and played.

Among their conclusions:

• Parents should make rules about jobs explicit and logical. Teen-agers who perform work poorly tend to come from families in which the message is, "Do it because I say so."

• Judging the outcome of a job is not enough. Parents should show by example, as well as instruct, supervise and evaluate their children's jobs. For instance, one boy who was good at cooking began young when his mother gave him a cup of water or dough to play with while she cooked.

• Don't intrude. One mother insisted on hovering over her teen-age daughter even when she was preparing simple, packaged meals. The girl was consequently unsure of her ability to perform even simple tasks.

Their 300-page study of how to instill work habits in children was supported by a grant of about $75,000 from the William T. Grant Foundation. It was completed last year, but Munson said he and Dannefer had not published anything on it yet.

Teen-agers learn less from tedious chores like washing dishes or emptying the garbage than they would from complex tasks like helping remodel a room, plan a trip or run a garage sale, Munson said.

"Many parents today don't see the opportunities that they have for helping their young people (develop work skills)," he said.

Munson concluded that good work habits begin well before the teen-age years. In fact, he wants to do his next study on how parents instill the work ethic in 2- and 3-year-old children, by getting them to pick up their toys and other such discipline.

Brisco-Hooks...

...U.S.' premier runner

By LINDA-MARIE SINGER
King Features Syndicate

Three-time Olympic gold medalist Valerie Brisco-Hooks, who recently won the 100 meters at the Bruce Jenner Classic, is talked out at the mention of the XXIII Olympiad, where in both the 200- and 400-meter sprints, the 5-foot, 7-inch Los Angeles star broke U.S. and Olympic records. (She ran the 200 meters in 21.81 seconds; the 400 meter in 48.83. Her third medal came in the 4 x 400 relay.)

Inevitably first question is: How did she feel becoming the first American Olympian (male or female) since Wilma Rudolph in 1960 to capture three gold medals in track? She smiles. It's old hat by now to this happy-go-lucky 25-year-old with the distinctive French braids hairstyle.

But while these feats had gone unmatched for 25 years, Valerie Brisco-Hooks, after such tumultuous victories last summer, had gone virtually unnoticed by the media who deferred instead to Carl Lewis, Mary Lou Retton and Mary Decker.

"Those guys were the consistent athletes," Brisco-Hooks maintains. "You expected them to win. But I hadn't been around and I didn't have a name. When I won it was like, 'Who's that girl?' So when the press didn't jump all over, it never bothered me, 'cause I went into the games to win — and I did."

Such determination has followed the feisty runner all through life, although it was her late brother Robert who was the initial motivator that dictated her lifestyle when she was growing up.

"He'd tell me to do things like 'Val, go beat this boy up!' Or, 'Val, go on, rassle with him.'" She did.

Most always Robert made a constant wager with his impressionable sister. "Bet you can beat this guy," he'd yell to her, as they streaked wildly down the block in pursuit of their next gullible target.

"Mother would always throw me off on him, and every day it's like we were running in the streets. You know, Robert broke a lot of track records at Locke High School (in the Watts area of Los Angeles). Maybe he could have made a mark in track, but when he turned 18 some little guy shot him as he jogged around the school."

Brisco-Hooks retells the painful story and of the subsequent unsolved death of Robert's killer. "I guess this boy bragged too much to his friends about the shooting, and months later someone shot him and his sister coming out of a house. That was the end of it."

Had justice been served? "No!" comes the emphatic response. "If you believe in an eye for an eye, then it was justice. But I didn't feel the boy should die, because the whole thing was accidental. I mean, he didn't say, 'OK, Robert, I'm going to kill you.' Oh no. It was just a terrible accident. More than that, it was fate. God must have wanted Robert to die; he wasn't meant to live past 18."

A short time later the Locke High School track was dedicated to the memory of Robert Brisco. With his name in everyone's minds, the moment his sister began school there, the track and field coach automatically added her to the roster without consulting her. "Suppose he assumed all Briscos could run," she states in her crackly voice.

Someone else also believed in the sprightly teen-ager from the first moment he saw her zoom around the field. Bobby Kersee, women's track and field coach at UCLA, attended a Locke High School meet in 1978. Catching her buzzing by the other competitors, he proclaimed: "I had never seen such feet turnover that fast for anyone her size. Valerie had speed, raw speed."

She also had something else — a lackadaisical nature which Kersee still endeavors to pound out of her. Around that time Alvin Hooks, an aspiring professional football player, entered the promising track star's life. She had enrolled at California State University at Northridge in 1979 and that same year took the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women title in the 400 meters.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Jack Coleman

Q. Can you tell me everything about Jack Coleman, the actor who plays Steven on "Dynasty"? Will the show be renewed?

J.R.
Selma, Calif.

A. The show has definitely been renewed, and according to Coleman, there will be even more episodes this season. The cast is scrambling, shooting at least two episodes at the same time, so they'll be able to make all of the airdates. He has, though, managed to get some idea of where his character is going this season.

"Steven's going to cool out and get more involved in the business and in the rivalry with Adam," he explains. "I think his personal life will take a back seat for awhile, which is probably a good idea at this point."

You'll also see him in two specials that he filmed during the show's hiatus: a two-hour "Love Boat" filmed on the French Riviera in which he plays a bicycle racer and a "Battle of the Network Stars" shot in Mexico.

Now, for the basic facts: He's 27, from Easton, Pa., the youngest of seven children of a retired history professor and a former fashion model. (His mother's father, Herbert Agar, won the 1934 Pulitzer Prize for history; another ancestor was Benjamin Franklin).

He graduated from Duke University with a B.A. in drama in 1980, landed a part in a Long Island production of "Grease," and later spent a year on the soap "Days of Our Lives." He lives in L.A. and has a girlfriend, actress Christine Kellogg.

Jack Nicholson

Q. Please tell me about Jack Nicholson: Is that his real name, where did he grow up, how old is he, is he married, does he have any children and what will he be doing next?

Margy Davies
Scranton, Pa.

A. That is his real name, he's 48 and from Neptune City, N.J., but the circumstances of his family life were not what they appeared to be while he was growing up. The woman he thought was his mother, hairdresser Ethel May, was, in fact, his grandmother. His 17-years-older sister, June, was actually his mother. He found this out about 10 years ago, after June died.

Regarding his children, he has a 21-year-old daughter named Jennifer from his marriage to actress Sandra Knight. He is not married now, but he has been involved with "Prizzi's Honor" co-star Anjelica Huston for 12 years in a relationship that, according to their friends, closely approximates marriage.

As for plans: As we go to press, he's trying to resurrect "The Two Jakes," the "Chinatown" sequel that collapsed a few days into production, and get "The Murder of Napoleon," based on a novel that he optioned last year, going.

A rabid Lakers fan, he is also looking into the possibility of buying into his own professional basketball team. He's also just stepped into "Heartburn" co-starring with Meryl Streep.

Q. Please tell me what Martha Raye has been up to lately.

Misty Verstriater
Colona, Ill.

Martha Raye

A. She recently filmed her role as the Duchess in the all-star production of "Alice in Wonderland" due to air on CBS later this year. She's also been touring in "Annie" and "Everyone Loves Opal" and filming her spots for Polident.

Next up may be a Broadway show: One project, "The Prince of Central Park," has been in the works for months but may be switching producers, thus slowing it down, and another, "Maggie and Jiggs," to co-star Mickey Rooney, is now in the talking stage.

Q. I would like to know about Mary Hart, a bit about her background.

Jim Rees
Maysville, Ky.

A. Mary Harum (the name is Norwegian) is 34, from Sioux Falls, S.D., and a former Miss South Dakota (1971). After college, she taught English, then went to work on a cable TV station in South Dakota.

Her then-husband, a sales executive, was transferred to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in 1975 and she soon had her own talk show in Iowa. When he was transferred to Oklahoma City, she co-hosted a local TV show there for three years.

The marriage broke up and she went to L.A. on her own, became co-host on th L.A. edition of "PM Magazine" and then on the short-lived "Regis Philbin Show." That exposure led to "Entertainment Tonight."

Currently, besides her work on that show, she put in an appearance on the "Circus of the Stars" special set to air in December — she walked the high wire.

Mary Hart

Romantically: "There's no one special right now," explains a representative. She has been linked in the past to Sylvester Stallone and "Little House on the Prairie" actor Dean Butler.

Q. Please tell me about Ralph Macchio. Will there will be "The Karate Kid II"?

Susan Crawford
Fresno, Calif.

A. He's 23, from Huntington, Long Island, where his parents own a trucking business. He started tap dancing lessons at 3 and was performing in a local dance recital seven years ago when an agent saw him and promptly began to send him out on commercial auditions. That led, in 1980, to a part in a comedy called "Up the Academy," a move to Los Angeles and a role in the TV series "Eight Is Enough" as Betty Buckley's adopted nephew.

His biggest break, and the first role he ever energetically went after, was that of Johnny in Frances Coppola's "The Outsiders." "The Karate Kid," of course, followed, as did the less successful "Teachers." He starts shooting "Karate Kid II" (for which he's getting a reported $1 million) in Los Angeles and Hawaii this month. He also has a film, "Crossroads," due out early next year.

He describes himself as a romantic, old-fashioned and very Italian.

VALERIE

"Alvin used to hang out a lot with us at our badminton class. 'Who was that guy?' I kept wondering. Didn't know much about him 'cept that he was Alvin Hooks, a football player. Well, this one day he asked if he could play badminton with us, and afterwards we went to lunch." The couple married in 1981.

By 1982 Brisco-Hooks felt there was a void in her life, and was ready to have a child. But after Alvin Jr. was born, she ballooned to over 170 pounds and stayed there. "Yeah, I was a real 'Young and Restless' fan. All I did was eat and sit. I mean, I did not move. But my husband knew I wasn't happy staying at home and not running."

Enter Bobby Kersee. Again. Putting his pupil on a round-the-clock workout program that would weaken physical fitness gurus, the teacher began achieving results. So did Alvin Jr.

"Emotionally it was Little Al who made me a nicer, more understanding person. I used to be ornery. Never tolerated a lot of stuff, and when little things bothered me, I hollered at everyone, especially my family."

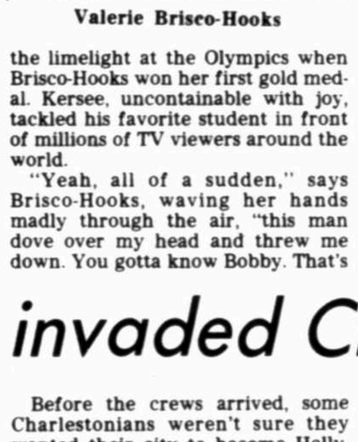

"But with a child you have to have patience. It's simple for my husband. He's nice and easygoing by nature. Not me. If I see someone staring at me, I get up and say, 'Hey, what you lookin' at?' Alvin doesn't move. Instead, he tells me, 'Why don't you just sit back and stare at them?' "

Friends will tell you that Brisco-Hooks hasn't changed much; she's still crazy after all these years. However, it appears that only Kersee can redirect her frenetic energy. Eventually, he'd like to see her break the world's 100, 200 and 400 meters records.

"But I'm in a lazy period now after the Olympics. I don't want to push my body totally. I suppose Bobby is right: I am lazy, but with a little child you have to conserve your energy. Look it, he'll run all over my body if I didn't move. He'll act like I'm a piece of furniture even. Believe me, I got to have energy when I go home, or else I'm in trouble."

She says her son doesn't understand that his mother is the women's superstar of running or "happened at the Olympics. Only when he saw me later on TV going through the motions, did he get the concept. Now when he goes down on the blocks with me, he says, 'Yea! I'm a winner!' " the limelight at the Olympics when Brisco-Hooks won her first gold medal. Kersee, uncontainable with joy, tackled his favorite student in front of millions of TV viewers around the world.

"Yeah, all of a sudden," says Brisco-Hooks, waving her hands madly through the air, "this man dove over my head and threw me down. You gotta know Bobby. That's his normal reaction, but only when he's happy does he go crazy. He hadn't realized that he could have easily hurt me, because I had other races left to run."

Similar to a Hulk Hogan-Mr. T. Tag Team event, Kersee has had other inexplicable high-spirited moments. "Let's see, one time at Madison Square Garden when I won, he jumped way over the railing, ran onto the track, picked me up by my legs and carried me around in broad daylight — in front of the television cameras! But, there again, that's Bobby — a-huggin', kissin' and cryin'. I'm used to it by now.

"And there's no jealousy. Alvin's happy for me, and works out with us. He's the one who videotapes me, and when we're not on the road together, he assists Bobby in the track program at UCLA." (He also works for his wife's World Class Athletic Club team.)

Yet, Alvin Hooks' favorite role is that of "Mr. Mom" when his wife is away or in dawn-to-dusk training. However, when asked about her love for any other sport, like football, Brisco-Hooks doesn't mince words. "I only like running. That's it."

But what about when Alvin played pro ball with the Philadelphia Eagles? "Well, that was different. I used to watch him, but when he wasn't on the field I headed for the hot-dog stands."

When pressed about 1988, Brisco-Hooks remains outspoken, unlike another gold medalist, Mary Lou Retton, who waffles on the issue. "I'm definitely looking to Seoul. By then I'll be 28, and for women in track and field, that's the peak."

Coach Kersee also has an eye on the Olympic Games three years from now, where he hopes his friend will shine and "become the greatest all-around female sprinter in history."

Thus far in 1985 the performer has added to her impressive agenda of wins: At the Michelob Invitational in San Diego she set a world indoor record of 1:02.3 in the 500 yards. She chalked up another record at the USA/Mobil Indoor Championships in New York with a 22.95 in the 220 yards.

Has success moved the sprinter to life's fast lane? "Let's see now. Yes, I moved from a Mazda 626 to a Saab Turbo SL! Is that what you mean? Oh, I don't know. People tell me I'm down to earth. Really, I haven't changed. I'm still loud and crazy. Anyway, even before the games I thought I was good!"

But did her family also offer those smiles? With 10 children to raise, Arguster and Guitherea Brisco still shy away from becoming stage parents. "They were quiet supporters and didn't come to workouts or time me. Always a big 'Yea!' from the stands when I win. But my father, you know, when I lose, he says, 'Vara.' Yeah, he calls me Vara and he says it real slow. Like, 'Va-ra, why-you-let-this-girl-beat-you?' "

These days Brisco has few fears about his triple gold medalist losing. For that matter, the only thing she's in danger of losing is her collection of medals and trophies to her son. "Give it here!" he yells to his mother, when she brings home a new one.

"What a comedian he is — so goofy sometimes. And if you laugh at him, he'll do it again, so you have to adapt to his ways. See, we live upstairs and I think we've conditioned him about coming downstairs by himself. He absolutely refuses to come down unless we pick him up." She gives a devilish grin. "So I actually have to get in the car and drive away before he'll walk down!"

Valerie Brisco-Hooks is lost in reverie. "The closing ceremonies...Every time I see them on videotape, I just go 'Oooh, aaaah.' But when I visit my mother and see my gold medals in her showcase, it's hard to believe. I still cry."

Hollywood film crew invaded Charleston for 'North and South'

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) -- Across the harbor from Fort Sumter, a riotous celebration erupts on Charleston's Battery as the South again secedes from the Union.

A few blocks away in the Mills House Hotel, Hal Holbrook, in the guise of Abraham Lincoln, reviews the text of his inaugural address. Across town Elizabeth Taylor portrays a madam in the setting of a New Orleans bordello.

This past spring, antebellum America was being recreated for the $25 million television series "North and South" in the city where the Civil War began.

Warner Brothers crews filmed here before moving on to Natchez, Miss., St. Francisville, La., and Reader, Ark. Filming began in California in February.

State officials say the 12-hour production, which will be broadcast in six parts on ABC starting Nov. 3, is the largest film project in the state's history and was worth $4 million to the local economy.

"North and South: Book II," a 12-hour sequel scheduled to air on ABC in the spring of 1986, now is in production, and one shooting locale again will be Charleston.

The two series are based on John Jakes' popular novel about two families — one from the North and one from the South.

"North and South" stars Patrick Swayze and James Read, with cameo roles for Miss Taylor, Holbrook and Morgan Fairchild. The executive producer of both productions is David Wolper, who brought "Roots" and "The Thorn Birds" to television.

Before the crews arrived, some Charlestonians weren't sure they wanted their city to become Hollywood South, if even for a few weeks.

Residents of the historic district objected to dumping sand on the streets to create a 19th century look. They said blocking streets for filming would be an inconvenience, and there was talk of a lawsuit to prevent what residents said was a commercial use of a residential area. Some stuck yellow and black bumper stickers reading "Enough!!!" in front of their homes.

Reporters who wanted access to Elizabeth Taylor during filming at the Blacklock House, which was used as the film bordello, had to sign a release saying they would not mention the location in their stories. The building is owned by the College of Charleston Foundation.

But all the concerns seemed to have faded in the excitement of moviemaking.

"In all honesty, this thing has worked a lot better than we thought," said Henry Grimball, a board member of the Charlestowne Neighborhood Association which claims the membership of 700 historic district residents. "Some (area residents) even enjoyed it. They didn't think it was as much of a problem as they thought it would be."

The filming gave about 3,000 local residents a taste of Hollywood as extras. That number includes Sen. Strom Thurmond's daughters Nancy Moore and Julie, who each have a line of dialogue in a scene recreating a plantation barbecue.

The project also provides a chance to promote the city's ever-growing tourism industry. In April, local officials wined and dined 40 national travel and entertainment writers, showing them historic sites and filming locations.

"The dateline will be Charleston," said J. Mac Holladay of the Charleston Trident Chamber of Commerce. "My feeling is whatever the topic, if they feel good about Charleston, it's possible to get the continuing spin-off. Their next piece might be on the future of certain communities in terms of moviemaking."

'American Ninja' hits Asians hard

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

This has been a bad season for Asians in the cinema. The summer's biggest hit, "Rambo — First Blood, Part II" was basically a bloody, non-stop massacre of Vietnamese by Sylvester Stallone.

One of the most controversial recent movies, Michael Cimino's "Year of the Dragon" so outraged Chinese-Americans with its negative racial overtones that MGM/UA finally had to send out disclaimers with the film saying that it "does not intend to demean or ignore the many positive features of Asian-American and specifically Chinese-American communities."

On a less lofty level, a fairly modest comedy, "Volunteers," managed to ruffle the Peace Corps' feathers with its satirical depiction of the Corps' work in Thailand and of the Thais themselves. Although packed with Oriental stereotypes, at least "Volunteers" mitigated this a little by making fun of all its American characters also.

Even a low-grade teen fantasy, "My Science Project," had a brief scene in which three time-traveling high school students machine-gunned down some Oriental people in their school's hallways supposedly because they were Vietcong.

One of the newest entries in the bad Asian sweepstakes is "American Ninja," another martial arts potboiler cranked out by producers Menahem Golan and Yoram Globus, who specialize in that low-budget, low-quality subgenre.

This film, which borrows liberally from "Rambo" and — unlikely though it may seem — "Romancing the Stone," stars Michael Dudikoff as an American soldier named Joe (as in "GI Joe").

The story, a vague plot about a conspiracy involving arms smugglers in the Philippines, is primarily intended just to provide Joe with an excuse to kill a lot of Japanese Ninjas as well as quite a few Filipinos.

Ninjas, by the way, were highly skilled assassins in medieval Japan recently resurrected in action films aimed at fickle martial arts fans, who long ago became bored with old-fashioned kung fu flicks.

The movie does have one token Asian good-guy, an old Japanese soldier who hid out on an island in the Pacific for decades after World War II ended, but, of course, he ends up getting killed off by a Japanese bad-guy.

Otherwise, there isn't a single honest, likable or even remotely human Japanese or Filipino character in the entire film.

To be fair, most of the Americans aren't too impressive, either. Dudikoff is a former fashion model and his zombie-like performance indicates he should stick with still photography instead of motion pictures.

Native Texan Guich Koock is a good comedian but he's horribly miscast in "American Ninja" as a villainous American colonel. Judie Aronson looks good but acts little in her poorly written role as Joe's romantic interest.

The very worst thing about this plodding film is that, unlike "Rambo," the action isn't even very interesting and there isn't much of it.

Maybe Cimino's "Year of the Dragon" was racist at times and somewhat violent, but at least it wasn't boring like "American Ninja."

"American Ninja," rated R for violence and strong language, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Former actor likes it better behind camera

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After three soap operas, more than 200 commercials and dozens of movies, Tom Holland called his acting career to a halt 13 years ago.

"It was after I played the third lead in 'A Walk in the Spring Rain' with Ingrid Bergman and Anthony Quinn," the rugged 39-year-old director recalled. "After working with dozens of directors, I concluded that I could block scenes better than most of them. I realized how powerless I was as an actor, and I decided to quit and learn to be a filmmaker."

This month brings the culmination of Holland's effort to change his act: "Fright Night," the Columbia Pictures release which he wrote and directed. Despite the title, he pleads, "This is no 'Halloween' or 'Friday the 13th,' not a slasher or gore movie..."

The movie poses a straightforward problem: What would you do if a real, live vampire moved in next door? Charley Brewster (William Ragsdale) is a normal 17-year-old who can't seem to convince anyone that his new neighbor Jerry Dandridge (Chris Sarandon) enjoys nibbling other people's throats. His only ally is Peter Vincent (Roddy McDowall), an oldtime horror movie star.

Holland is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of the University of California at Los Angeles, but he refused to attend film school. "When I was in college, the ethos of the film students was: 'Let's rip off the old movies.' That's why we've seen so many imitations of Alfred Hitchcock. Earlier in the 1960s, the big thing was aping the Fellini and Antonioni non-linear films. So we got a flock of imitations of 'Blowup,' '8½' and 'Red Desert,'" he said.

With his good looks and athletic frame, Holland had no problem finding work as an actor. But that wasn't enough, and in 1970 he decided to train for the other side of the camera. "I offered to do anything — script reader, gofer, production assistant," he said. "Nobody was interested. So I decided to write screenplays. Ten years later, I sold my first one."

That was "The Beast Within." He followed with such films as "Psycho II," "Scream for Help" and "Cloak and Dagger." Being an obsessive man, he wanted desperately to direct his own scripts. Why not a vampire movie?

"I had a great affection for the AIP (American International) and Hammer vampire movies," said Holland. "They were so bad they were delightful.

"The genre had died out, and I thought it was time to bring it back in a straight-forward manner. I resent those films that try to hide the genre, like 'The Hunger,' which never mentioned vampire, or 'Greystoke,' which avoided naming Tarzan."

ABC's stars appearing in malls

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC, firmly in third place in television's Nielsen ratings, has decided to take its case to the people in an effort to fight its way back to leadership in viewers and advertising rates.

Perceiving America's shopping malls as the town squares of the modern era, major stars from ABC's shows are being featured in personal appearances to drum up excitement and support for the fall television season.

"For a long time, we've been trying to find new ways to reach teen-agers, particularly during summer when TV viewing by teen-agers is down a bit because they're not home a lot," said Peter Murray, ABC director of visual communications.

Among actors making appearances at malls are Tony Danza of "Who's The Boss" and Jack Scalia, star of the network's new "Hollywood Beat." And video screens also are set up, featuring a bouncy 45-minute tape on fall shows.

ABC's promotion jingle, set to the tune of Randy Newman's "I Love L.A.," booms from the set as crowds watch clips from shows like "The Insiders," "Lime Street," "MacGyver," "Lady Blue" and "Growing Pains."

The idea for the mall appearances originated with Rick Giacalone, network vice president for visual communications, Murray said. "Rick felt that the malls today are like the new Main Street USA, where all the kids hang out, and we thought the one way to reach the teens would be to go to the malls."

Auditions slated for classic comedy

ODESSA — Open auditions for Oliver Goldsmith's classic comedy "She Stoops to Conquer" are slated for 7 p.m. Monday and Tuesday at the Globe Theatre.

The production will be directed by Paula Thompson, head of the Odessa College drama department. The play has parts for 15 men and five women. Parts are available for actors and actresses ranging in age from late teens on up. Volunteers are needed for technical and backstage work.

Written in 1773, "She Stoops to Conquer" has endured the test of time to become a classic of English comedy. The play's continued popularity is based on its fast pace and its witty lines.

The story of "She Stoops to Conquer" recounts the confusion that occurs when two young men, Marlow, on his way to meet and court the refined Kate Hardcastle, and his friend, Hastings, lose their way and are mischievously misdirected by Tony Lumpkin, Squire Hardcastle's step-son. He sends them to the Hardcastle home with the false impression that it's an inn.

The Odessa production is a cooperative one between the Globe Theatre and OC's drama department. The show will be performed at the Globe Oct. 18, 19, 25, 26 and 27. Perusal copies of the script are available at the Globe. For more information call the Globe, 1-332-1586.

Study: Video sex, violence implied

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Cable TV's rock channel, MTV, is as full of sex and violence as critics claim, but they're implied rather than explicit in most cases, say researchers who expected the videos to be more blatant.

"Basically, they know they've got a young audience and they're not going to get away with truly risque (videos)," said Cynthia De Riemer, one of the authors of "A Preliminary Content Analysis of MTV Music Videos."

The University of Tennessee-Chattanooga study of 62 MTV videos found that almost 60 percent contained sex or violence. It is to be published in the fall issue of the Journal of Broadcasting and Electronic Media.

"When we started, we expected to see more blatant, more sexually explicit videos," she said. "It was there, but geared for a more adolescent audience."

Madonna and Billy Idol are among the artists whose videos were most suggestive sexually, said Mrs. De Riemer. "The ones I remember most as being very suggestive and violent were the Billy Idol videos. Lots of bondage, women as objects, that kind of thing."

The study was conducted during a two-week period in March and April 1984. UTC students were asked to study 62 videos taken from MTV and tallied 23 topics ranging from sex to religious symbols, listing the most common. They viewed the videos without sound to concentrate on the visual images.

The study found sex in 59.7 percent of the videos and violence in 53.2 percent. But the most common image was special effects — unusual camera angles, special lighting, fog — showing up in 90.3 percent of the videos. Dance was portrayed in 56.5 percent.

Provocative clothing and physical contact led the list of sexual images, in 31 percent. Sexually suggestive dancing was in 27 percent. Deviant themes such as sado-masochism and sexual bondage were in 5 percent or less.

Calcium-rich foods strengthen bones

By SANDRA SCOTT KLINK
King Features Syndicate

Pick up any publication these days and you're likely to encounter an article on calcium in the diet. Advertising campaigns are touting the high calcium content of certain products. Calcium supplements are virtually leaping off the shelves of drug stores. Milk- and yogurt-haters are giving new thought to their eating habits.

So what is all the fanfare about? The fact is that studies are now beginning to turn up evidence that many people, particularly American women, are deficient in calcium. The effects of this deficiency can be devastating, leading to brittle bones and, ultimately, osteoporosis, or loss of bone mass. Estimates have been made that up to 40 percent of American women may eventually develop it.

There are a number of reasons why so many people have this deficiency, and many of them are directly traceable to our lifestyles. Consider the fact that too little exercise, taking up smoking, frequent dieting, high stress and overconsumption of alcohol and caffeine are all factors that can lead to osteoporosis.

Unfortunately, the symptoms are not always obvious, but a few to watch for are pain in the upper or lower back, a fracture or broken bone, a curved spine, or loss of bone from the jaw.

The simplest course to take, however, is prevention. And it is possible to take steps that will insure good bone health. First of all, exercise. It produces a physical stress on the bones which makes them stronger and thicker, as well as encouraging blood flow to them, which promotes new bone formation.

Second, take a close look at your diet. It's your best source of calcium. Supplements are fine to fill in the gaps (the average American diet only supplies 450 to 550 mg per day), but far and away the best source is what you eat — or drink.

The current recommended daily amount for adults is 1,000 mg a day, up 25 percent from the 1980 RDA. This amount should be maintained by women until they reach menopause, then increased to 1,500 mg if they do not take estrogens.

Most people know that milk is an excellent source of calcium, but the following list of calcium sources may contain some surprises.

Calcium in Food

Food Amount	Calcium (mg)
Skim milk 8 ounces	302
Low fat milk 8 ounces	297
Whole milk 8 ounces	219
Buttermilk 8 ounces	285
Low-fat yogurt 1 cup	415
Low-fat yogurt (with fruit) 1 cup	314
Frozen yogurt 1 cup	200
Cottage cheese, creamed, ½ cup	16
Swiss cheese 1 ounce	272
Parmesan, cheese, grated, 1 ounce	390
Cheddar 1 ounce	204
Mozzarella 1 ounce	183
American cheese 1 ounce	174
Sardines with 3 ounces	372
Salmon with 3 ounces	285
Oysters 1 cup	226
Shrimp 1 cup	147
Bean curd 4 ounces	154
Collards 1 cup	357
Turnip greens 1 cup	267
Kale 1 cup	206
mustard greens 1 cup	193
Dandelion greens 1 cup	147
Broccoli 1 cup	136
Bok choy 1 cup	116

As you can see, sardines, salmon, Parmesan cheese and yogurt are loaded with calcium. Bear them in mind as you stock your refrigerator and kitchen shelves. Gather recipes that use these ingredients. Consider adding ½ cup of nonfat dry milk when you make instant pudding.

And a further benefit of increased calcium intake: Recent studies have shown that calcium is a promising substance for reducing high blood pressure.

Once you've embarked upon a calcium-intake plan, there are a few other facts to consider. Calcium absorption has its friends — and enemies. Allies include vitamin D, which increases the body's efficiency in absorbing it. You'll find it in sardines, salmon, herring, mackerel, tuna, egg yolk, liver, fortified milk and other fortified foods — and the sun.

Veal Sardinia

A second ally is lactose, or milk sugar. It's found primarily in milk and yogurt and, to a lesser degree, in cottage and ricotta cheeses and hard cheeses.

The enemies? Many calcium-rich foods also contain oxalates, or oxalic acid, which keep the body from using the calcium they supply: beet greens, Swiss chard, spinach, sorrel, parsley and rhubarb are a few offenders. High fat levels are a distinct hindrance, along with alcohol and caffeine. Additionally, watch out for higher-than-recommended amounts of protein and phosphorus, also thought to be inhibitors.

For those interested in increasing calcium intake and learning the facts in a straightforward, clear way, "The Calcium Bible" by Patricia Hausman, M.S. (Rawson Associates, $13.95) is an excellent guide.

Chef Michel Stroot of the Golden Door Spa in Escondido, Calif., specializes in creating healthful, nutritious meals that are also appetizing. Sardines were a favorite food during his childhood in Belgium, and he has created using this calcium-rich food.

VEAL SCALLOPINI SARDINIA

4 slices veal scallopini (about 12 ounces), pounded
1½ teaspoons dry basil
Pepper
Unbleached white flour
1½ to 2 tablespoons olive oil
½ cup dry white wine
2 tablespoons chopped capers
1 tablespoon minced shallots
1 (3¾-ounce) can sardines in water
2½ tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 to 3 tablespoons light veal broth or chicken broth
3 tablespoons chopped parsley
4 thin lemon slices

Season veal with basil and pepper; dust lightly with flour. In large heavy skillet heat oil. Add veal; saute quickly, about 1 minute on each side. Remove from skillet; keep warm. Add wine, capers and shallots to skillet, stirring to loosen browned particles from pan.

Break up and add sardines and their liquid, lemon juice, butter and broth. Cook and stir over medium heat 2 to 3 minutes to reduce slightly. Sprinkle with parsley.

Arrange reserved veal on four plates. (Add any juices that have collected to the sardine sauce). Spoon sardine sauce over veal, dividing equally. Garnish with lemon slices and additional chopped parsley.

Colleges: 'Buyer's market'

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features Syndicate

"So many good colleges are after me, I don't know which one to choose," says Kristen Blackman, an Illinois high-school senior. "They all send pretty brochures, like the kind my parents get when they write for vacation information."

Twenty years ago, before collegiate public relations and the current shortage of warm student bodies, a prospective college student sent applications to a list of the best schools she could afford (where she planned to major in the humanities), then waited to be accepted by one of them. Her goal was to achieve the finest general education her family could buy.

Today's student has changed. She is apolitical by yesterday's standards; she has minimal interest in the liberal arts. She may be many years past 18. No matter what her age, her goal is job training.

The system to which she seeks admission is already vastly changed — and will change even more before the decade is out.

Critics of American higher education — and there are many — contend that the mass education developed to accommodate post-war Baby Boomers is an inferior product. They are especially hard on one class of schools: the non-selective state institutions, those with few admission standards, willing to accept any student who graduated in the top 50 percent of his high-school class — and many of those who didn't.

During the last decade, admission standards were lowered in other schools too, in part to help poor and minority students who were recognized as being at a cultural disadvantage in the testing race with middle- and upper-class white students.

Also, in the '70s rampant inflation forced budget cuts and faculty reductions, increasing student-faculty ratios on many campuses. Finally, easy courses which appealed to students were added to curricula to fill space.

In coping with the changing class size and composition, many college teachers began using shortcuts: teaching facts rather than helping students to analyze concepts and problems.

Writing in The New York Times, educator Milton A. Loewenthal said colleges have some of the same problems besetting the public elementary and secondary schools. American education, on all levels, he contends, is not the rigorous experience it once was.

He says, "Too many teachers seem to rationalize the acceptability of the nuts-and-bolts approach to subject matter rather than undertake the difficult task of trying to achieve as much student growth in conceptual thought and analysis as possible."

Twenty years ago the liberal arts curriculum was the heart of most colleges and universities. Now these institutions have shifted emphasis — and financial resources — into engineering, business and other career-oriented programs. Concern about "computer literacy" seems to have replaced concern about "literacy."

Many educators think the growing shift away from liberal arts in the '80s will further weaken a system already in trouble.

Michael Unseem, writer and professor at Boston University, says, "We are weakening the liberal arts at our own peril. There is an insidious sleeper effect of undereducation in the liberal arts. It may be years before we feel the impact."

While college grads in the sciences and business are "initially advantaged" as they enter their career fields, new research conducted by a team of psychologists (including Harvard's David McClelland) indicates they are disadvantaged at a later point. They don't have the reasoning skills needed in more responsible managerial positions.

"The curriculum of the liberal arts prepared students to think critically and conceptually; adapt to new environments; integrate broad ranges of experience; set goals and develop independence of thought; and seek leadership roles," Unseem says.

Ironically, the college system which was changed and expanded to accommodate a huge group of students is now too big. And once again, we've proven in typical American fashion, "big" and "better" aren't necessarily synonymous. In 1985, almost any student who wants to go to college can be accepted somewhere. But in four years' time, the degree may not have its expected market value.

Some observers are calling higher education "a buyer's market" because there are more spaces open in colleges and universities than students to fill them. Ten years ago, when the Baby Boom wave was at its collegiate crest, 4,000 colleges existed to meet their needs. By 1982, the number shrunk by one-fourth to 3,000 colleges and universities.

Many of the large state schools have closed branches, discontinued some programs and merged others. Some of the small private colleges have closed their doors, no longer able to meet expenses.

This trend is expected to continue through the '80s. In 1976, 3.2 million youths graduated from high school. In 1983, only 1.5 million did.

"There will never be a better time to be applying for college," says Richard Moll, Dean of Admissions at the University of California, Santa Cruz. "Many good institutions are no longer superselective."

Is College Worth the Cost?

Some observers are calling higher education "a buyer's market" because there are more spaces open in colleges and universities than students to fill them. Ten years ago, when the Baby Boom wave was at its collegiate crest, 4,000 colleges existed to meet their needs. By 1982, the number shrunk by one-fourth to 3,000 colleges and universities...

— Richard Moll, University of California, Santa Cruz

COLLEGES AND universities are aggressively marketing themselves now, competing with other schools for the best of the shrinking pool of college-age youth. The discreet and boring college catalog has been replaced by technicolor brochures pushing adventure, fun, excitement and career development to a target audience, often a computerized list purchased from The College Board's Student Search Service.

The elite schools are only becoming more so. The universities with open spaces are largely the non-selective state universities and the small colleges, with small endowments and middle-class clientele, hurt most by tuition hikes.

While the small colleges have not come under as much criticism as the state institutions, some are also beginning to lose prestige as enrollments and budgets decline.

The best schools, the ones which boast a five-star rating in "The Selective Guide to Colleges," are even more selective than they were in the past.

As the cost of a college education, any college education, continues to rise, more families seem to be deciding the $35,000 to $50,000 they're going to spend on a bachelor's degree might as well be spent on the very finest degree in the market. Harvard, Princeton, Yale and Stanford will have no shortage of outstanding applicants, no matter how small the nation's pool of 18-year-olds.

Nor are the second-echelon schools, those ranked four-star, hurting for applicants.

According to Steven Cohen, co-author of "Getting In," the definitive work on the college admissions process, "These second-tier schools are cutting back on class size and faculty in order to maintain their selectivity. In fact, all of the top 200 schools are making it tougher to get in today than it was a few years ago."

They are raising standards, not lowering them, and intensifying their recruiting efforts nationwide to bring in the most talented students. Recruiting is expected to get even hotter because many educators feel the ranks of very bright and talented students are increasing.

In 1980, for the first time in 17 years, the SAT scores stabilized. And a nationwide survey of college officials conducted by the American Council on Education in 1984 found that 60 percent believe the quality of new students is either holding steady or improving, especially among those studying science or engineering.

That is good news to the top 10 percent of their high-school classes. Good colleges may be vying for the privilege of paying them to attend. Their classmates, however, will face a different situation.

GENERALLY ADMISSIONS committees accept the top 20 percent of their freshman applications, reject the bottom 20 percent, then sift through the remaining 60 percent looking for those students who fit the institution's needs — for athletes, children of alumni, musicians, foreign students, minorities or whatever.

These applicants in the vast middle must sometimes be very creative to get selected. But before they plunge into the effort of getting in, they should question something they've probably taken for granted: Is getting in the smart thing to do at all?

There are three questions you should answer before you try:

What do you want to gain from an education?

Can this particular school provide it?

Can any university or college?

"A lot of people could get good vocational training and make more money than they'll ever earn with a Brand X degree. College, especially any college, isn't always the answer," says Marsha Schumacker, guidance counselor and writer.

Analyzing what you want from college before applying has never been more important. In spite of the almost religious awe with which Americans regard higher education, a college degree is no longer a passport to high salaries and promotions. Some students (and their families) focus so heavily on the admissions process, they miss the whole point: Should they really want to be admitted to this school in the first place?

Ms. Schumacker says, "There are a host of alternatives to college which lead to good jobs. They make very good sense for students who barely qualify for admission to a non-selective state school."

She lists broadcast schools (one- or two-year programs leading to employment in radio or TV), community college programs which accord two-year certificates in everything from horticulture to inhalation therapy, sales training institutes and many other options.

"Investigate entry-level salaries and opportunities for advancement in some of these fields. Compare this set of facts with information about the kinds of jobs any U. grads can get.

"If you can get into a plumber's union, you'll probably be ahead of most people."

What if you are a student, bent on college, who more than meets the non-selective school's minimum standards but still aren't near the top of your class? How much choice do you have? Maybe more than you think.

"I DON'T know if I'm special enough for a place like Vassar or Smith," Kristen Blackman argues. "I'm not that bright. And I'm not really well-rounded in the sense that I'm good at everything, which is what I think you'd have to be to get in a Seven Sisters school."

J.S. Ferguson, a former admissions adviser at a large Midwestern school, says, "Colleges are looking for well-rounded classes, not well-rounded people. They want a mix: some scholars and athletes, some artists and political types. Big-name schools also want students from other parts of the country. You might get accepted by one of them simply because you're from rural Tennessee and they want that kind of diversity."

Or a school may accept a student with modest SATs and grades, on the basis of strong personal recommendations from employers, Scout or church leaders, teachers. One young man was admitted to an Ivy League school last fall because he impressed the admissions committee with his dedication to a hobby: photography.

Ferguson says, "He began as a kid of 8 with an Instamatic. By the time he was a senior in high school, he'd won numerous local and state contests. When admissions people see that kind of interest in something, that level of perseverance, their eyes light up.

"The top schools could fill their freshman classes each year with student-council presidents who had A averages and belonged to all the right clubs. They don't because they don't want boring classes."

But Cheryl Murphy, a high-school guidance counselor, believes "the kind of variety these top schools are looking for is a very special one. Students without outstanding grades and test scores do need to be outstanding in some other way to compensate. I've seen so many kids apply to Ivy League schools with modest grades and achievements. They don't make it."

"Select several schools, then visit them with your parents. Learn all you can about them, so you will know why you want to be there, how you'll fit into the school, what you will contribute. Your application essay and interview will reflect all this thought; and you stand a good chance of being accepted."

The admissions process at these smaller schools is an intimate one. If you really want to get in, you'll have the chance to prove it.

"That depends on what you hope to accomplish with the degree," Ferguson says. "Just getting in a school doesn't guarantee a magic carpet ride into the future."

"It's a lot to think about," says Kristen Blackman. "Whatever I do now will determine the course of my whole life. I'd like to get the best education, in the old-fashioned sense of the word, my family can afford.

"BUT WHEN it comes down to making the decision, I'll probably major in engineering at one of the good state universitites — not liberal arts at an expensive private school.

"I feel like I'd better get every dime I can out of this education since my parents are going to be paying so much for it no matter where I go."

GOREN BRIDGE

DEAR MR. GOREN

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

© 1985 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

Q.—From time to time, the Negative Double appears in your column. Could you give us a brief explanation of this convention? — H.B., Norfolk, Va.

A.—How many times do you remember doubling a one-level overcaller and inflicting a substantial penalty on him? If your answer is that you don't remember when last that happened, don't worry—most bridge players would give you exactly the same response.

On the other hand, how often have you been in this sort of predicament: Your partner has opened the bidding with one club, right-hand opponents has interven ed with one spade and you hold something like:

♠83 ♡KJ95 ♢A873 ♣J62

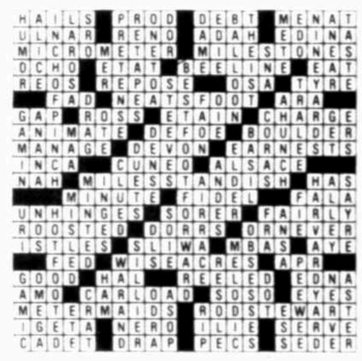

You would like to take some action, but nothing is appropriate. A free bid at the two-level virtually guarantees a five-card suit and is forcing, so that is ruled out. You can't bid one no trump because you don't have a stopper in the enemy suit. Since you have two much to pass, your only choice is to reluctantly raise to two clubs and hope that you haven't missed a partial, or even game, in hearts.

About 30 years ago Alvin Roth, one of the greatest bridge players of all time, suggested a solution. Since immediate low-level penalty doubles of an overcall occur so seldom, why not use the double to describe the problem hand above: a hand with 7-11 points, support for the unbid suits and tolerance for opener's suit.

You do not even have to give up the low-level penalty double. If you have a hand where you want to penalize the opponents, you simply pass. Partner is expected to reopen with a double on all hands where he would have sat for a low-level penalty double, and you convert to penalties by passing.

This use of the double was originally called the "Sputnik" double, because it was devised in the same year that the Russians orbited Sputnik. The term Negative Double is far more graphic, since it makes it clear that it is not a penalty double.

PUZZLE ANSWER

After summer over all that's left on beach are sea gulls, memories

By ELISE BELL
King Features Syndicate

The town beach where I swim all summer has come back into its own in autumn. The lifeguards are gone and the sea gulls have taken over. Their delicate spider-webby prints cover the sand and they strut with a confident, even arrogant, air. No longer are they the intruders. Now we are.

The people have disappeared with their blankets and towels, their radios and umbrellas. Only a few hardy souls like me are there. We greet each other smiling, silently, with knowing eyes. There is no need for words. We know we have something special, something precious in the autumn beach.

The water is clear and clean and warm, and the air has a soft coolness to it, very different from the summer air. The sea gulls' raucous cries as they swoop down gracefully for fish do not have to compete with rock music or children's screams.

I have been swimming at this beach for 30 years, and as I sit there I think of how much a part of my life it is. When our children were small, I would bring them to the beach every day, lugging their pails and shovels, towels and change of bathing suits, thermoses and a picnic basketful of sandwiches and crackers and fruit, and we would spend the day there.

I always carried a book but seldom read a word. The air and the sun and the water and the sand lulled me. I loved to watch the children making sand castles, digging tunnels and letting the water run into them as the tide came up, gathering pebbles and shells and playing in the water.

The beach slopes down gently and is perfect for children, who can walk gradually into deeper water and feel secure. Our three children all learned to swim there. Our approach was to leave them alone and let them enjoy the water and feel at home in it. I would show them how the salt water kept them up when they floated so that they could even sleep as I liked to do, dozing for a few minutes on top of the water.

We played games, too. "Ring Around the Rosie" was especially popular, with all of us dunking ourselves on the last line. And there is nothing more delicious than hugging a small child in the water.

When they got older and expressed an interest in learning how to swim properly, I took them down to the beach early in the morning when the lifeguards gave swimming lessons.

I look over at the town dock, now deserted, and remember how our son had been fascinated by the creatures in the water — how he would try to catch the small fish in his hands and how intrigued he was by the ugly, prehistoric-looking horseshoe crabs. When he grew older, he spent hours on that dock fishing.

Summer evenings we had beach parties with our friends. We all would bring food and settle down at a table near the grills.

Usually we cooked hamburgers, drank iced tea from a big jug and ate watermelon for dessert. Then we would talk and wait for the sunset, which gradually would fill the skies over the hills with colors, sometimes soft and sometimes brilliant.

It was changed in many ways. The town built a big cement walk with lots of lights. It runs buses in for senior citizens, who have an area of activities at one end. On weekends the beach is so crowded you can't get into the parking field. And there are signs in Spanish.

But the beach still curves gently around the harbor. And across the water there are still hills of green trees and the sun still sets behind them.

And during the summer the beach is still full of families. Many of them don't speak English. But they hug their children in the water, admire their sand castles and teach them how to float. Some of the mothers bring books — but don't read them.

Woman goes crazy because she can't write business phone on form

By LINDA PUNER
King Features Syndicate

Like the calming reassurance of a mother tucking her child into bed at night or the highwire performer's safety net, I used to love filling out forms. Pressing down hard for triplicate copies, printing last name first and first last, translating the complicated process of birth into simple numbers separated by slashes, gave me self-confidence. I knew my Social Security number, therefore I was.

As I named, dated and aged myself, I was part of a historically significant group. Decades of Americans have filled out voter registration cards and income tax forms. Three weeks after arriving in this country from Russia, my grandmother opened a department store charge account and bought a dining room full of furniture on time. By jotting down the digits of my bank account, I am carrying on a family tradition and participating in the American way.

The nature of standard questions was satisfying too. No form worth its No. 2 pencil asks you to describe the condition of your house in the morning. Just your address is sufficient. School officials never require a thoughtful analysis of your neighbor's personality. Only her phone number, in case of emergency, is requested. In a turbulent world where nothing is true or false, black or white, fill-in-the-blank is as close as we can come to tranquility.

Admittedly, I learned my love of forms late in life. In fifth grade I was a vague student, good at rambling essays about fall leaves but uncertain about which fractions to invert and when. So when Gertrude Callahan, my quite specific teacher, warned that those attendance cards slapped down in front of us had to be filled out exactly, I got nervous.

Distrusting my innate abilities, I turned to a more reliable source — the smartest kid in the class. Painstakingly, I copied his card precisely. Only after printing "Chattman, Martin" at the bottom of my card, did the error of my ways transpire.

Since that time, I've smartened up some. But now my hard-learned street address savvy isn't enough. The latest in school, camp and health forms asks the devastating question that even Miss Callahan didn't equip me for — Mother's Business Phone. The truth is, I don't have one. My present occupation remains as vague as my fifth-grade skills. Whatever it is that I do doesn't include an office with a phone.

The first time I confronted this new-found inadequacy, I fudged it. Pretending that I didn't see the line reserved for me, I scrawled my husband's business phone number so big, fat and juicy that it seeped over into my space.

Later I worried that readers of my form might mistake my sloppiness for an ego problem. Better to suffer from the lack of a business phone than a sense of identity, so the next time I drew an assertive line smack through the question. Take that, you nouveau number nuts.

Then the trouble began. By acknowledging the possibility of the existence of a Mother's Business Phone and yet confessing that I didn't have one, I opened the lines of communication with every teacher, PTA chairperson and school administrator looking for available, inexpensive help.

Overworked and unpaid, I lied when next queried about my business phone. I made one up.

Panic forced me to lie about my lie. I called the school and said that it could no longer reach me at my business phone; I was fired. No, I wouldn't be able to rejoin the mothers-unemployed-outside-the-home in the lice squad. I would be too busy looking for work.

Homemakers can thank feminists

By BETTY McCOLLISTER
King Features Syndicate

Gloria Steinem

You might think that a mother of six and grandmother of 11 is an odd person to thank Gloria Steinem, of all people. Well, it's because I've been thinking a lot lately about women's options and whether it's better or worse to work outside the home, and I just figured out, to my surprise, that if I could live my life over, I'd want to be a full-time wife and mother again and, to my greater surprise, that feminists like Gloria Steinem raised my consciousness to the point where I'd choose it knowing I'd be terrific at it.

Armed with assurance that my job was vital, my values higher than those that equate worth with money, my place in society significant and my contribution unique, I'd do exactly what I did. But I'd do it better thanks to the new self-respect that all my delight in family could never offer in the bad old pre-feminist days.

It's true that Gloria Steinem and I don't have much in common. I was married for 35 years and raised six kids. She was never married and raised no kids. I was an unpaid, incompetent household drudge. She was a well-paid competent author-editor-lecturer. I dressed to suit my lowly occupation and usually looked like a rummage-sale leftover. She dressed to suit her higher-class occupation and looked smart.

Just the same, she and her sisters are those who manned — or womaned — the battle stations while the rest of us were mired in diapers, dishes, diseases and experts. They're the women who in one generation improved things for all of us.

For starters, note that I said I'd choose to be a full-time wife and mother. Right off the bat, I'm light-years ahead of where I was when society arbitrarily shunted me there. When women my age were having babies, post-World War II and pre-Betty Friedan, we didn't have much choice. A woman who wanted a career had tough sledding.

In a different way, we had tough sledding, too. Taken for granted when we weren't disdained, we were at the same time compared to a supposed model who was devoted mother, supportive wife, gourmet cook, impeccable housekeeper, fantastic bedmate and ardent community worker all rolled into one, and in her spare time laid patios and ran up swanky evening clothes from old drapes and elegant drapes from old tablecloths.

Unable to come remotely close to such expectations, we got through our days and collapsed at night feeling hopelessly inadequate. What's more, we weren't paid. That, in a culture where money means status, signified that neither we nor our work had any. A chronic sense of guilt and inferiority plagued us.

Do you follow me? It's one thing to be slotted willy-nilly into the home. It's something else entirely to choose to be there. It's one thing to be told that your work in the home isn't important and you do it badly. It's something else entirely to forgo salary and status in favor of homemaking because you know you have the best qualifications in the world for your special family.

I should add that it's one thing to be forced to work outside the home and something else entirely to choose to do it, buttressed by confidence that you can handle it plus, if you're lucky, a cooperative husband.

Just as I owe my option to stay at home with dignity to feminists, the woman who combines home and career owes her option, and her cooperative husband, to them.

There are those who view with alarm today's broken homes, female-headed families and increased, or perhaps just more visible, female promiscuity and other contemporary dislocations — and conclude that the last 30 years have spelled disaster for women.

They see the hole, not the doughnut; the disruptions that always go with rapid transitions, not the steady gains; the one step back, not the two steps forward.

In perspective, and a long perspective it is, it's the agricultural revolution, which began a few thousand years ago and continues to the present, which has spelled disaster for women.

For hundreds of thousands of years, our ancestors lived and evolved in hunter-gatherer societies. There were sex roles, yes: e.g., a woman with a nursing infant would be a liability on the hunt. The women who gathered, however, brought three times as much food to the tribe as the men who hunted, and did so more consistently. Their roles were different from but not inferior to the men's. Women were partners in a sharing way of life.

Comes the agricultural revolution and the concept of land as personal property to be exploited, not a resource to be appreciated.

Its carrying capacity, which had placed limits on family size, is no longer regarded. This is when women become chattels and breeding machines. In patriarchal Judaism, women ranked below men but retained honor in the all-important Jewish family.

In Christianity, their standing plummeted as marriage was accepted only as a necessary evil and celibacy was exalted above it. Their general lot has been indignities without recourse in our culture.

Think again about the last 30 years. What were women up against before 1955?

Credit: unavailable.

Jobs: unavailable beyond a certain level.

You call the progress from those situations disaster? Hardly. And who worked for these gains? Not, for sure, the religious, pro-family contingent. They opposed them as adamantly as ever.

It was feminists, that's who. It was feminists who, above and beyond all this, gave us self-confidence and self-esteem. And can anyone doubt that such positive attitudes produce women who function better?

I predict that once the dust settles, women who proudly, exultantly choose to be full-time homemakers will create better and happier homes for better and happier husbands and children. For that we can thank the feminists.

Ten-year-old son stranger to mom

By SUSAN WOJCIECHOWSKI
King Features Syndicate

Where is my open, totally transparent little boy?

My 10-year-old son is gone. The comely, curly-haired imp who used to hug me for the sheer joy of it has vanished and left in his place a brooding, private, impatient boy of 11.

This stranger, who looks so like my son but couldn't possibly be, has taken down the Mickey Mouse poster and tacked up Cheryl Tiegs instead. The convoy of Matchbox cars is tossed in the closet, as is the Star Wars garrison. In their place I find jumbles of body-building equipment.

The Ritchie Rich comic book collection my 10-year-old cherished lies scattered across his baby sister's floor. Space on his own bookshelf was needed for the Kung-Fu handbooks. Amidst it all my new son reigns, holding raucous audience with his subjects — the Rolling Stones and AC/DC.

I want to ask this moody boarder what he's done with my lively little boy, but it's difficult. First, I must get beyond the bedroom door, which orders me in ominous scrawl to "Knock first and don't come in till I answer...and this means YOU."

Then I need to push beyond the pulsing waves of rock music and, finally, I've somehow got to penetrate the invisible wall of calculated aloofness. It's not often I get beyond all three hurdles.

I need to, though. I need to get near enough to ask him where he's hiding my uncomplicated, candid son, the one who once ordered "Mommy, whatever you do, don't look under my bed." (A shoe box of cookies lay squirreled among the dustballs).

What little I learn of his new self does not come easily. I get snatches while standing over the washing machine emptying his jeans pockets. Clues lie buried there in wadded notes passed deftly during study halls.

"Dear Mouse," they all begin. Mouse? My weed-tall, skinny bundle of muscles — Mouse? "How are things going with you and Sue?" they continue.

I plead too, in my own way, by invading the privacy of his pockets, an act I once considered unpardonable. More tidbits are gleaned from teachers' offhand remarks, scraps of phone conversations, and from the few tiny chinks in his armor of privacy.

I wonder if anything makes this child happy. But, yes, his friends do. They understand him. Hours are spent wisecracking on the phone and grunting through body-building sessions.

With his family he retreats into a closed shell. I sense he doesn't like this tedious group he's forced to share the refrigerator with. He rations his words to us, like water during a drought.

No, he really doesn't seem to like us anymore. But, worse yet, he seems to dislike himself most of all. Mornings find my son stationed at the bathroom mirror slicking his naturally curly hair into temporary submission.

In his complex journey from child to adult, from dependence to self-sufficiency, I am his most formidable stumbling block right now. I am the authority figure he must come to terms with. And he must work out our new relationship deep within himself — alone.

Patience and self-control are my strongest virtues. A touch, a smile or a bite of the tongue sometimes helps. But beyond that the process of his maturation like that of his birth 11 years ago is largely out of my hands.

Giving of oneself gets something in return

By MARGARET EDWARDS
King Features Syndicate

It was the usual lovely candlelight service. The Sunday School children, freshly scrubbed and well rehearsed, had recited their messages in clear young voices. Now it was time for the collection to be taken, and for proud parents to gather their families together and leave for home. Over the years, I had watched six children take part in similar, rather predictable ceremonies of this kind. In short, I'd seen it all.

Or so I thought. Actually, that evening awakened in me a realization. Through a unique experience, I became aware that my responsibility to others did not end with a cash donation on the collection plate.

This is how it happened. After the offering had been received, our minister stood. "Take a moment and think of something you can do for others," he said. "Then write your pledge on a piece of paper. We are going to pass the plates a second time and gather your promises."

What on earth could I write? I had a large family and never seemed to have a spare moment or dollar, for that matter. There was nothing I could contribute that would be of any consequence.

Still, the minister had not said that our pledge had to be important or impressive. Furtively, I scribbled "a cup of tea with someone lonely." I quickly folded the paper, thankful that no one else could see that small thought.

Yet the very fact that I had put my promise into words and had offered it for the service of others appeared to give it significance. Since that memorable evening, I can honestly say that I have tried to keep that promise.

At least once a week, I seek out someone I know who is alone. I do not have to know her very well. In fact, often I don't.

That never matters — there is always something we find to talk about. I am constantly amazed at life's possibilities as I listen to other people's experiences. The tea is warming and the hour or two passes quickly.

Actually, I have branched out a little now that my children are older. I know from my own busy days how much a mother appreciates a little freedom. I often do some gardening or sunning in the company of a toddler while a mother shops or simply gets caught up on her mending, without distractions.

Oil restructuring hits independents

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — T. Boone Pickens, the controversial chairman of the Mesa Petroleum Co. of Amarillo, Tex., has long warned oil company chiefs to find ways to get the best return for their shareholders.

Recently Pickens said that the way Mesa, one of the leading independent oil companies, would do this for its own shareholders would be to create a limited partnership that in 1987 would replace Mesa itself.

Although the form it took was somewhat surprising, Mesa's attempt to funnel maximum benefits to stockholders had been expected.

Nonetheless, it did underscore the point that the restructuring of the oil industry, so easily noticed among the major oil companies, has also made sharp inroads among the independents, which are smaller entities that generally engage in a limited range of oil activities, such as exploration and production.

Boone Pickens

INDUSTRY ANALYSTS say that hundreds of these companies, whose assets range from barely $1 million to $2 billion, have disappeared in recent years.

"They just can't cut it any more in today's competitive environment," said John C. Sawhill, a director of McKinsey & Co., who was deputy secretary of the department of energy in the Carter administration, referring to the long-term decline in oil prices that has sharply squeezed oil industry profits. "They borrowed too much and are way overleveraged."

"The more prices soften," Sawhill continued, "the more susceptible these smaller companies will become to being gobbled up by some of the majors and larger independents who are looking for cheap reserves and greater economies of scale in their own operations."

Besides the outright acquisition of one company by another, the industrywide restructuring includes such activities as buying and selling reserves and other company assets, repurchasing company stock and setting up royalty trusts and limited partnerships.

AMONG THE RECENT examples are these:

■ The Louisiana Land and Exploration Company, based in New Orleans, has conveyed 8.9 million barrels of oil and 23 million cubic feet of gas into its royalty trust and repurchased more than 10 million of its shares since 1983.

■ The Wainoco Oil Corp. of Houston last week said that it would spend $17 million to buy the oil and gas assets of the Waverly Oil Co. The purchase will more than double its proven oil reserves.

The Maynard Oil Co., the Shell Oil Co., the Exxon Corp. and the Ladd Petroleum Corp. are among the companies that have recently bought reserves.

Industry analysts said that the substantial trading of reserves indicates that companies are striving for increased efficiency and competitive advantages. Such purchases reflect the widely held view that, given the industry's depressed state, buying reserves is far cheaper than drilling for them.

Thomas A. Petrie, senior oil analyst for the First Boston Corp., said that the days of owning reserves willy-nilly for future appreciation "are clearly giving way to renewed focus on efficiency, reduced overhead and enhanced value due to skillful operatorship."

PETRIE ADDED that this "strategic commitment" is perhaps the single most important factor in the surge of independent-sector divestitures.

Robert F. Vagt, president of Madison Oil and Gas, a division of Madison Resources Inc. in New York, said: "There's a certain critical mass you need not only to withstand whatever the prices and the markets will do, but to take advantage of the opportunities the downturn brings."

In July, Madison and the Adobe Oil and Gas Corp. of Midland, Tex., agreed to merge into a new company to be called the Adobe Resources Corp.

"We've seen a number of leases and producing properties come on the market because the companies don't have the cash to take advantage of them," Vagt said, "and we want to be able to."

Vagt said that the merger with Adobe, which has 18 million barrels of oil reserves and 129 billion cubic feet of natural gas reserves, will more than double Madison's oil reserves and quadruple its gas reserves.

The causes of the consolidation among the independents are basically the same as those that resulted in the purchase of such onetime oil giants as the Gulf Corp., the Getty Oil Co. and the Cities Service Co. Lower worldwide demand for oil led to a five-year decline in prices and a substantial surplus of oil, which, along with other energy-related developments, has sharply squeezed oil companies' profits.

SUCH A SITUATION has proved disastrous for the independents, many of which are high-cost producers started a decade ago when expectations were that prices would be $60 a barrel and above by now.

Alan L. Edgar, senior vice president at the securities firm Schneider, Bernet & Hickman Inc. of Dallas, said that the consolidation is necessary "because there are too many inefficient companies."

He said that although consolidation activity has slowed somewhat because many independents are debt-laden, he expected that "sooner or later the banks will start precipitating transactions by pulling the rug on these companies because they're nervous about the price of crude and the collateral behind their loans. There'll be a further consolidation and it'll be fairly brisk."

The impact of the consolidation among the independents that has already occurred can be gauged in numerous ways.

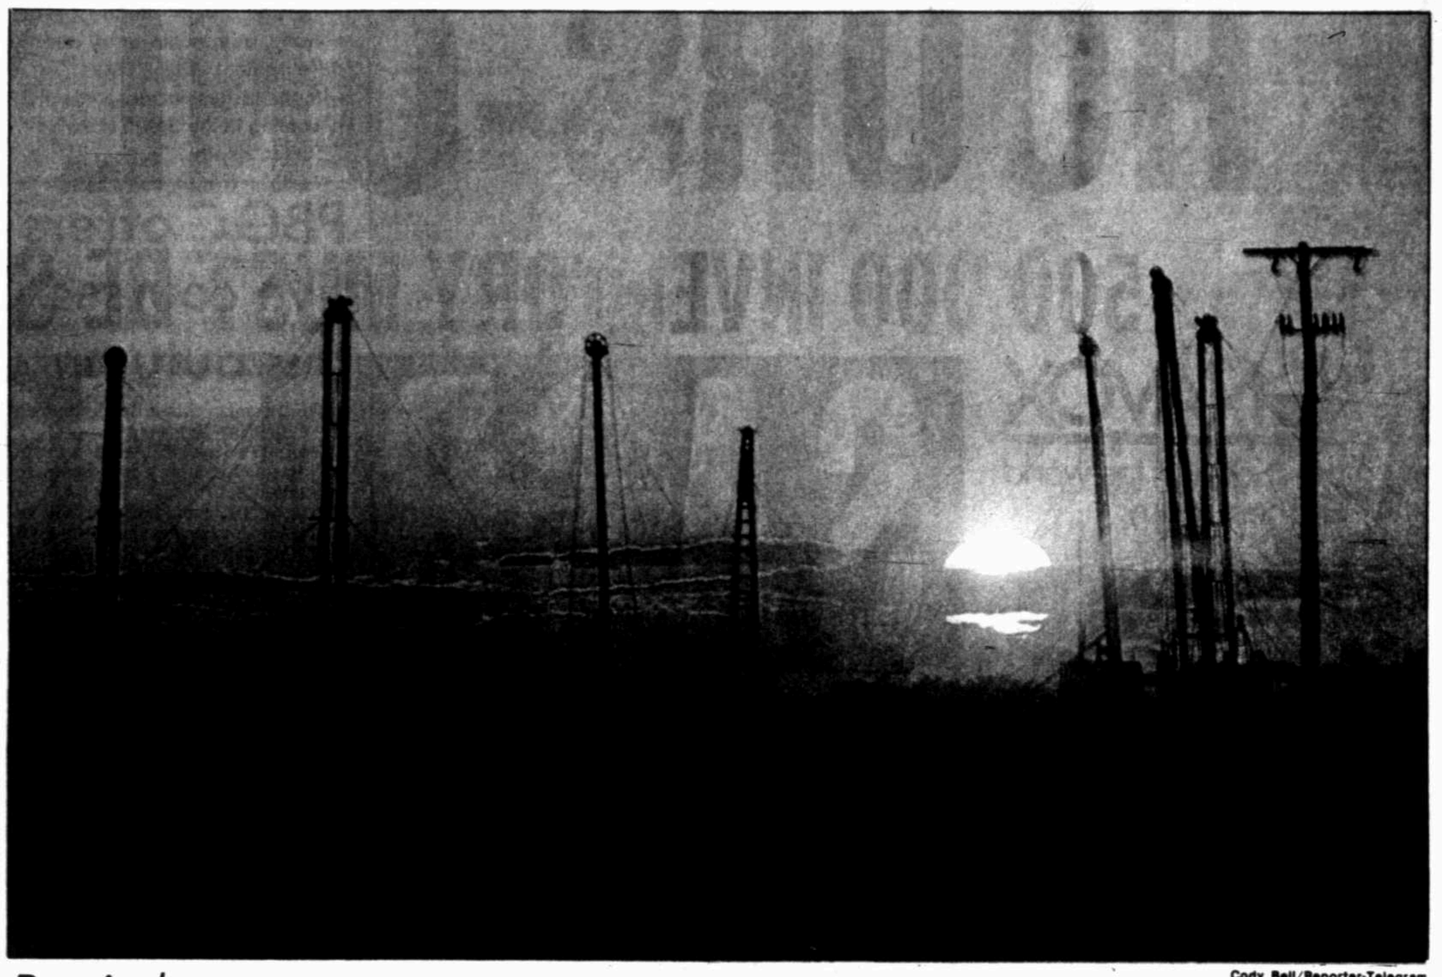

For example, the Independent Petroleum Association of America, an industry group, has seen its membership drop from more than 8,500 companies two years ago to about 6,300 members now, said Peter Wellish, its director of communications.

"Some oil companies, especially those founded during the days when people were predicting $60-a-barrel prices, have simply gone out of business," Wellish remarked. "But there's no question mergers have played a large part in the decline."

FURTHER EVIDENCE can be seen from the list of the 100 leading independent oil and gas companies in the United States in 1984 as ranked by The Oil Daily, an industry publication: The second-, third- and fourth-ranked companies for 1983 — the Superior Oil Co., Aminoil Inc. and the Champlin Petroleum Co. — are no longer listed, having been swallowed by other companies.

Since January 1984, there have been more than a half-dozen billion-dollar mergers of major energy companies, including Texaco Inc.'s $10.1-billion acquisition of the Getty Oil Co. and the Chevron Corp.'s $13.4-billion purchase of the Gulf Corporation, the biggest merger in corporate history.

Mervyn's will bring 200 jobs to Midland

By MELLA McEWEN
Business-Oil Writer

Mervyn's, the California-based chain of department stores, is coming to Midland and bringing about 200 jobs to the city.

The highly promotional, value-oriented soft goods chain will be a tenant at the planned Midland Plaza, a 202,000 square foot shopping center being built at Midkiff and Loop 250 behind the Courtyard at Midland Park. Plans call for the store to open in early 1986.

Mervyn's offers family apparel and home furnishings such as linens, window treatments, decorative housewares and toys. The store does not carry electrical appliances, or hard goods, according to Public Relations Manager Valerie Cooke.

The store's primary outlet, Cooke said, is a weekly tabloid inserted in the local paper, usually on Mondays, that lists the store's specials for the week.

Founded in 1949, there are 139 stores in 10 states, including Texas, California, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, New Mexico, Washington, Oregon and Colorado. Texas currently has 30 stores in Dallas, Houston, Austin, Fort Worth, El Paso, San Antonio and Lubbock. Stores in Odessa and Denton are scheduled to be open soon.

The company ended 1984 with 126 stores, and plans to open 21 additional stores during 1985. Cooke said the company is undergoing an aggressive expansion phase, planning to open 142 new stores between the end of 1984 and 1989, for a total of 268 stores. The firm presently employs about 30,000 people and closed 1984 with $2.1 billion in sales.

The regional office in Plano will handle buying, self-promotion and distribution for the Midland and Odessa stores, as well as housing the regional executives.

The 75,000 square foot, one-story store will be a tenant in the Midland Plaza along with Service Merchandise, which carries a broad line of products, jewelry and diamonds, sporting goods, toys, computerware, home improvement goods and home and garden equipment.

Safeway testing computerized shopping

AUSTIN (AP) — Safeway stores in Austin are test marketing a new computerized shopping service, housed in a refrigerator-sized machine and featuring an electronically operated catalog of 3,000 brand-name items.

Touch the television-like screen, and a young woman named Debbie appears, smiles warmly, and introduces herself and the Touch-n-Save shopping network that she describes as "the first automated discount warehouse right here at your fingertips."

There also are weekly specials and clearance sales.

Touch the screen again directly over the particular department, and all the items for sale in that department appear.

There are easy instructions every step of the way. Finally, the customer inserts a Visa or MasterCard to complete the transaction. Postage paid envelopes are available on a shelf just below the screen if a customer wants to pay by check or money order.

Safeway officials hope Touch-n-Save will be another merchandising vehicle that will bring more customers to its stores.

"It's another way of retailing," said Day Coyle, manager of industrial engineering for Safeway's Houston division, which includes Austin.

Dennis Green, district manager for Safeway stores in south Austin and San Marcos, said the electronic shopping network offers a way to build on the one-stop shopping concept that large grocery chains have been fostering in recent years.

Hortencia Hernandez tires out a new computerized shopping service termial in an Austin food store. The terminal features a television-like screen from which a customer can shop electronically from a catalog of 3,000 brand-name items and order on the spot.

"Electronic shopping means low overhead, and that means big savings," Debbie says on videotape.

Computer takes hassle from mileage reporting

Everytime the government sticks it to the citizens it's usually the lawyers and bureaucrats that benefit. It's refreshing, however, to see that in the case of the new required auto record keeping for tax purposes, Milog, Inc., a Salt Lake City manufacturer, and private citizens may make a killing.

The firm has come up with a unique little computer that provides a permanent daily printed record of miles driven and the purpose of the miles categorized as to business, charity, medical or personal.

Each time the engine of the vehicle is started a light and beeper comes on and stays on until the driver punches in the proper category for his trip. The computer then logs the number of miles. If the trip is for business purposes, a print out provided at the end of the day will provide a space for the driver's name and the purpose of the business trip.

At midnight each night (even if the car is in the garage and the driver asleep) the computer automatically prints out the mileage summary for the day, and on appropriate days prints monthly, quarterly and annual mileage summaries.

BUILD YOUR OWN CHEVVY? You can do it! No assembly line needed. All that is required is a personal computer and the "Chevvy Tech" diskette, a software package that allows consumers to put together a Chevrolet car or truck to their specifications. Thomas A. Staudt, Chevrolet general marketing manager, says the program was designed to create interest in the firm's products that will translate into visits to dealerships, a high tech image for Chevrolet and possibly additional sales. The program allows the user to put together a model, its options and prices and arrive at a suggested retail price within minutes.

Also included on the diskette are: a finance calculator to determine monthly payments; an operating calculator to evaluate costs of current vehicles and compare them to Chevrolets and a vehicle maintenance record keeper, to be used to compile fuel, mileage and maintenance costs of the vehicle.

Staudt says the program has been successfully tested in California and will soon be available in other areas.

A DIETER'S CREDIT CARD is being marketed by a Somers Point, New Jersey firm. American Leadership Group Inc. says its Diet Card will make losing weight easier than balancing one's budget.

Supposedly the credit card-sized Diet Card contains a temperature sensitive patch known as the "craving indicator" which lets you know faster than a punch in the automatic teller if hunger pangs are real or imagined. The deeper the color, the more intense the craving, says the manufacturer. Sounds like a takeoff on the mood ring. Snake oil, anyone?

THE MEDICAL INDUSTRY could feel a pinch and the consumer could feel some relief if a proposal by the Senate Special Committee on Aging is adopted. The Committee has called for mandatory second opinions for surgery. The Committee says that up to 36 percent of all surgeries done under the Medicare program are unnecessary and cost taxpayers billions of dollars. The proposal simply calls for the patient to get a second opinion before surgery. The second opinion would be paid for in total by Medicare. In addition to saving the taxpayers billions, the Committee says the proposal would result in human savings as well, sparing thousands of patients the danger and pain of unnecessary surgery.

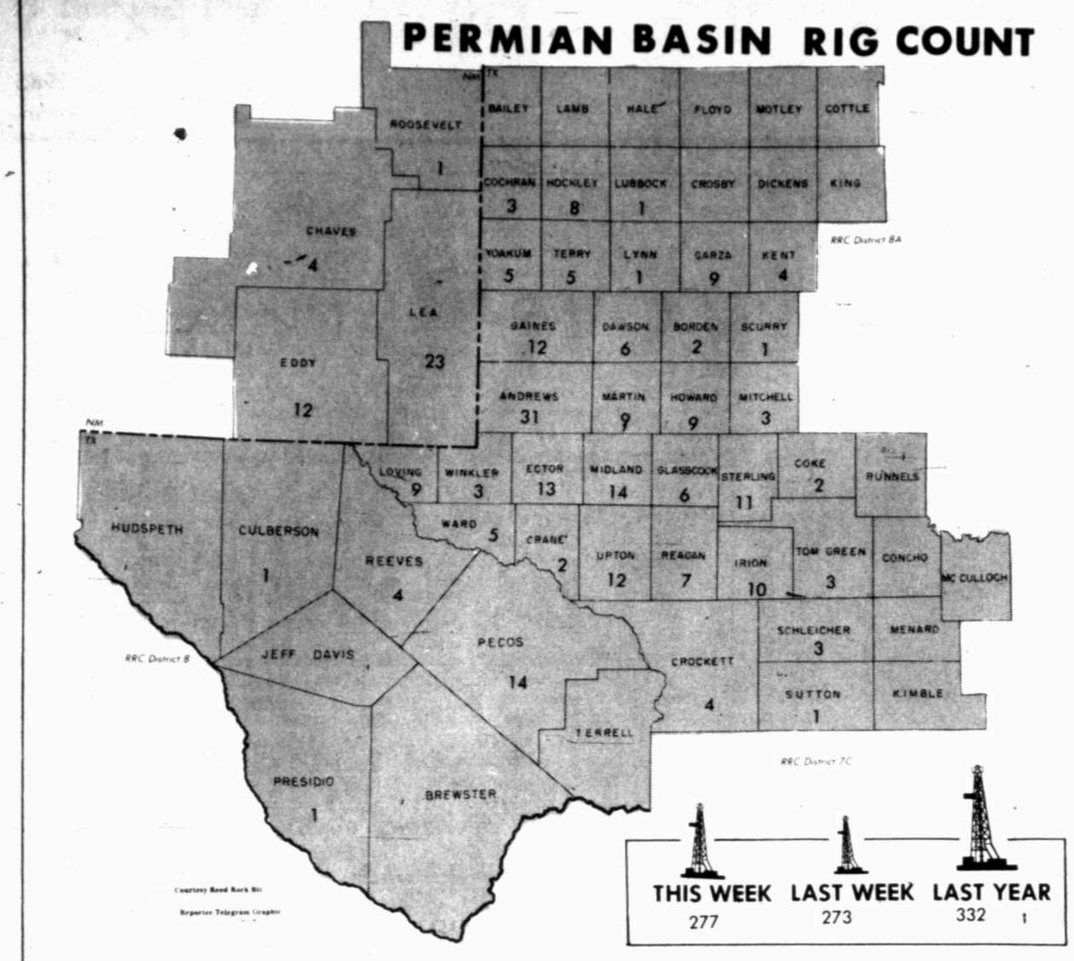

There is nothing new or unusual about the second opinion proposal. Today two thirds of all Blue Cross plans require second opinions prior to elective surgery. Savings of up to 60 percent have been reported for some procedures as a result of the second opinion policy.

The company's research department claims that hundreds of front seat passengers are severly injured or killed each year by unrestrained rear seat passengers (mostly children) flying into them. Permian Basin rig count climbs four

The Permian Basin rig count took a jump this week, climbing four rigs for a total of 277. The U.S. count did not fair so well, dropping eight for a count of 1,932 this week.

Locally Midland County stayed at 14 while Ector County slipped two, down to 13. Andrews County had no new rigs for the first time in several weeks, but maintained last week's count of 31, still the most active county in the Basin.

Nationally, Colorado lost seven rigs for a total of 48, while Louisiana, North Dakota and Ohio each dropped five rigs.

Oklahoma gained 18 rigs, jumping to 260 and Pennsylvania added five to their total.

Texas lost three to post a total of 631 this week. Of that number, 40 were offshore rigs and 5 were working inland waters.

This week's totals compare to last year's totals of 332 in the Permian Basin and 2,424 in the U.S.

Hanson to speak to Desk & Derrick

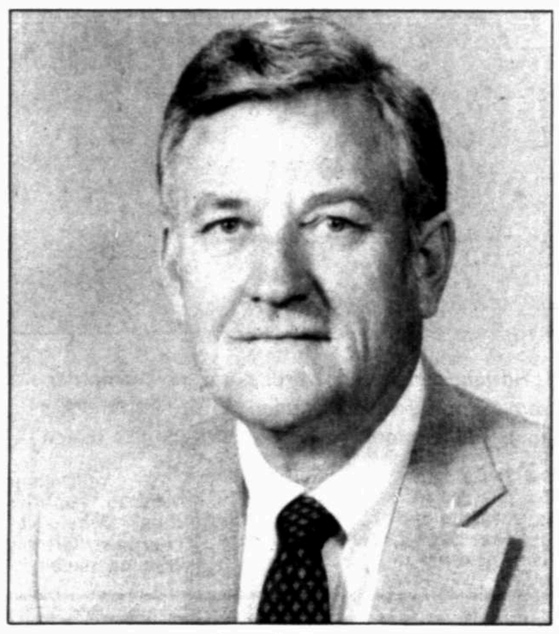

Bernold M. Hanson, president of Hanson Corp., and the president of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists for 1986-1987, will be the featured speaker at the Desk & Derrick Club of Midland's monthly meeting at 6:30 p.m. Thursday at the Petroleum Club.

His talk will center on "Effects of the Petroleum Industry on the Environment."

Hanson received a bachelor's degree in engineering geology from the University of North Dakota in 1951, and his master's degree in geology from the University of Wyoming in 1954.

After five years with Humble Oil & Refinging Co. (Exxon), Hanson became an independent oil operator and consulting geologist, both in the U.S. and abroad, in 1960. He formed the Hanson Corp. in 1966, and still serves as president of the company.

Besides the AAPG, Hanson's professional affiliations include a 25-year membership in the Society of Professional Engineers of the American Institute of Mining Engineers and an honorary life membership with the West Texas Geological Society. He is the chairman of the Advisory Committee for the geology departments of both University of North Dakota and the University of Wyoming.

Activity rises

The Basin had two more rigs working last week, with an increase in development drilling while exploratory drilling experienced a slight decline .Nationally, both exploratory and development drilling rose, with the largest increase in activity coming in the 5,000 ft. to 7,500 ft. depths.

Argonaut Energy announces record quarterly earnings

AMARILLO (SWN) — Argonaut Energy Corp. has reported the results of operations for the fiscal first quarter ended June 30, 1985.

Total operating revenues were down 35 percent to $672,000, as compared to $1,033,000 in the comparable quarter last year, due primarily to soft market demand, gas curtailments and the sale of 23 gas properties during last fiscal year.

Net loss for the quarter was $201,000, or $0.04 per share, as compared to a loss of $47,000, or $0.01 per share, in the prior year.

Effective July 29, 1985, the previous management of the Company resigned and a Director, Robert L. Patterson, was elected the new Chairman and President.

Demands upon the Company by various trade creditors for payment of past due trade accounts incurred principally during the last half of the last fiscal year have necessitated drastic action by new management. The Irving, Texas executive office is being closed leaving only the Amarillo, Texas office and a 50 percent staff reduction is nearly complete. At the same time, the Company is endeavoring to increase cash flow from wells heretofore heavily curtailed and implementing cost reduction measures.

The Company's inability to timely pay material indebtedness owing to trade vendors who have filed involuntary liens against Company leases has resulted in the Company being in a default position under its lines of credit with its bank.

Sonar images from Gulf floor reveal hundreds of features

NEW ORLEANS (SWN) - Preliminary sonar images from the first systematic mapping of the sea floor in the western Gulf of Mexico were displayed in New Orleans, revealing hundreds of features, including salt domes, landslides and submarine channels.

The joint mapping project of the U.S. Geological Survey and the British Institute of Oceanographic Sciences was able to map nearly 50,000 square miles of sea floor in the deep water of the western Gulf of Mexico in one month, despite a direct hit of the research ship Farnella by Hurricane Danny and high seas from Hurricane Elena.

At a briefing aboard the research ship in New Orleans, Robert Broadbent, an assistant secretary of the Department of Interior, praised the initial results as another step forward in planning the nation's future resource development and protection effort.

Noting the nation's enormous appetite for energy and mineral resources, Broadbent said, "By some estimates we will have to find and develop in the next several decades the same volume of resources we consumed in the first 200 years of our history.

"Finding these energy and mineral resources needed to build and fuel the needs of now and future generations is a tremendous challenge," Broadbent said. "Much of that challenge will continue to fall on private industry, but the Interior Department has a basic responsibility to assess the potential resources and to supervise any development of those resources on the public lands.

"Two years ago President Reagan vastly increased the size of the National Domain and hence the resource target area when he declared the offshore exclusive economic zone, giving the United States jurisdiction over the sea-floor resources out to 200 nautical miles off the coasts of our continental and island territories."

Noting that the total area of the EEZ is about 30 percent larger than the land surface of the United States, Broadbent said, "The president challenged the Interior Department to move ahead with the effort to map and explore the new frontier of the EEZ. Last summer the U.S. Geological Survey and our British colleagues aboard the Farnella mapped nearly 250,000 square miles of the EEZ off the Pacific Coast. The results were spectacular. This summer we intend to map 160,000 square miles of the deeper water of the Gulf. We have now finished, despite two hurricanes, nearly 50,000 square miles of that mapping effort. The initial results look quite impressive. I think we are well on our way to meeting the challenge set by the president."

Bonnie McGregor, a USGS marine geologist and chief scientist for both the first and upcoming second leg of the Gulf of Mexico mapping effort, listed some of the initial results:

- Mapping of a former Ice Age stream channel that cuts and meanders about 160 miles across the sea floor. Preliminary evidence suggests the channel is still actively depositing sediments. Understanding how such channels become blocked by salt domes and filled with sediment could help in the search for potential oil and gas deposits that are associated with such structures, such as has been found recently in the Green Canyon area.
- The Sigsbee Escarpment, which marks the edge of the salt beds in the Gulf of Mexico, shows up in vivid detail in the sonar images. Most surprising in initial study of the images is the evidence of active slumping along the face of the escarpment, which suggests that the escarpment is less stable than previously believed. Even more striking are submarine canyons cut in the front and a salt dome that has pushed vertically through the cover sediments, perhaps within the last several thousand years, at the very edge of the escarpment.

Setback won't alter Penney's sales strategy

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Penney's, after some disappointments, is trying again.

A two-year-old strategy by the J.C. Penney Co. to upgrade its image, its merchandise and its customers is not working. That is evident from almost two years of reduced earnings. And it is something the company's executives now acknowledge, both privately and publicly.

But the company is not about to abandon its new formula. Rather, it believes that better execution of the strategy, including a more conservative buying policy and a more balanced assortment of merchandise, will gradually pay off.

"We'll stay through the heat of the battle and ultimately we'll come through," said William R. Howell, Penney's chairman. He predicted that many of the company's efforts would begin to bear fruit in the next year or two, and that Penney's would be more profitable then.

Of the group that has tried to move upscale to capture families with incomes of $35,000 or more, Penney's, the third-largest retailer in the United States, after Sears and K mart, may have made the most dramatic changes.

The company took a pair of giant risks. It gave up $1 billion in sales by dropping its household durables and auto accessories departments to concentrate on soft lines, such as clothing and sportswear. And it added the expensive Halston line of women's clothes (with dresses, for example, in the $90 to $200 range) to spearhead its offensive against the Macy's and Bloomingdale's of the world.

Seeking to shed its low-priced, Middle America image, Penney also spent $1 billion to remodel hundreds of its 2,000 stores, giving the Halston III line and other higher-profit clothing the space formerly occupied by household durables and paint and hardware.

Revlon's chief executive fights against takeover attempts

NEW YORK (AP) — Michel C. Bergerac's latest challenge is to keep Revlon Inc. out of Pantry Pride Inc.'s hands.

It's certainly not the first for the French-born, 53-year-old chief executive, who was handed the company a decade ago by its legendary founder, the late Charles Revson.

Bergerac successfully diversified Revlon into health-care and has begun to turn around the beauty business after some very bumpy years.

Adversity, he says, is "very good for the character. It prevents you from getting complacent — that's a fatal disease."

"He's shy," said Roger Shelley, a vice president of the company. "He doesn't like to talk about himself."

Bergerac is, however, more forthright about the unwanted Pantry Pride offer than are most bid-fighting CEOs.

Pantry Pride, which recently offered $47.50 per common share and $26.67 per preferred share, said it would have to raise about $650 million of the $1.9 billion in cash through a public offering, which is unusual. It also said it would sell off

Michel Bergerac

Bergerac calls the offer "a scandal." He says Pantry Pride wants to "destroy cheap what had taken generations to build."

Pressed for his own management philosophy, Bergerac, who was born in Biarritz, said: "The one thing I've learned is stop using any patented recipes. They usually don't work."

He added: "You go through a thought process and you try to identify the problem. You find a solution, and you get it done. And to do that, you have to have good people."

Bergerac presides over what sounds like a grueling monthly management meeting at which he and his staff sit at one side of the large table and the operating heads sit on the other, one by one reporting on their units.

"He is fastidious in making sure that individuals who are supposed to do something, do it. He remembers whatever he says. If that problem still exists that person is most unfortunate," Shelley said.

The vice president added: "He has the ability to shout while keeping his voice quiet. He has the ability to get under everybody's defense mechanism and assault their consciousness."

Revlon employees are motivated, and work late hours at the boudoir-like headquarters, Shelley said.

The French furnishings were American-born Revson's choice, he said.

"I think we did a good job of diversifying the company into health care," he said.

Analysts agree.

Daniel Meade, at the investment firm First Boston Corp., said, "I think he has done a very good job in building a very substantial health-care business really almost from the ground up, and he's done it by buying companies at pretty reasonable prices."

Over the years, Bergerac presided over 11 significant acquisitions, and last year, health care business accounted for two-thirds of Revlon's $298 million in operating profit and one-half of its $2.4 billion in sales.

Ironically, Bergerac is now going to sell $250 million worth of assets — in health care, a source said — as part of his defense against Pantry Pride, which is based in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Revlon also plans to buy up to 10 million, or 26 percent, of its own common shares for $57.50 each in new securities.

Revson recruited Bergerac away from International Telephone & Telegraph Co., now ITT Corp., to take charge of Revlon in 1974.

"He (Revson) said, 'Michel, I've searched all over the world and I want you because your are tough and soft and that combination is the secret to life,'" Shelley said.

Revson founded the company in 1932 with the late Charles Lachman, a chemist. Originally a nail-enamel business only, Revlon grew into the largest seller of cosmetics at retail in the United States.

Bergerac barely knew Revson, who had pancreatic cancer and died at age 68. The founder left within weeks of Bergerac's arrival and never returned.

Much more influential in his life, Bergerac said, has been Harold Geneen, the former, long-time chief executive of ITT. Geneen was known as a blunt "conglomerateur" who tightly controlled his company and was very demanding of his people.

It must have been quite an ajustment for Bergerac, going from ITT to Revlon.

He won't talk about it, saying the transition occurred long ago.

But he described to Fortune magazine this early meeting at Revlon about the Jontue fragrance: "One bearded fellow gets up and says, 'I see her, I see her.' Everything stops. Somebody asks, 'How is she?' He says, 'She's sensual but no too far from innocence." Everybody says, 'Wow.' Somebody else says 'How does she walk?' He says, "She's soft, misty, she's walking through the woods.'

"I thought, 'My God, I just walked into an insane asylum.'"

Revlon in its first years under Bergerac performed spectacularly. From 1975 to 1980 earnings quadrupled. And Revlon's board of director's granted Bergerac a contract that runs until 1992 and makes him one of the nation's highest paid chief executives. He makes about $1.3 million a year in salary and bonuses. He owns less than 1 percent of the company's stock.

But in the early 1980s earnings plummeted because of troubles in the beauty business. Revlon was slow to respond to competition and failed to bring out new big-hitting products, analysts said.

Apparently, Bergerac still feels the sting of the criticism industry watchers leveled against him then.

"When it's not justified it hurts. If it is justified, we have to accept it and use it constructively and correct something," he said. "Sometimes it is difficult."

What does he regret?

Bergerac won't get specific, saying only, "You always think what could have been done differently, at a different time.'

Right now, he is particularly proud of Revlon's new Custom Eyes, eye shadow that is sold so that women can choose the colors they prefer and fit them into one easily refilled compact.

"I know it sounds terribly simple — and this was a revolution in this business," Bergerac said.

He joined ITT, where he moved up the ranks until he was named executive vice president of the parent. For several years, he served as president of ITT Europe Inc.

Bergerac received a bachelor of arts degree in philosophy from Lycee de Biarritz and a master's degree in economics from the Sorbonne in Paris. A Fulbright scholar, he also received a master's of business administration degree from UCLA.

INDEPENDENTS — Study says number of clerical jobs to fall

During that same period there have also been some 50 mergers among smaller, independent oil companies, according to Petrie of First Boston.

In dollar terms the transactions in the independent sector pale by comparison with merger activity among the majors. In fact, the Mobil Corp.'s $5.7-billion acquisition of Superior Oil last year by itself matched the total amount of independent-sector mergers during the period.

The volume of energy-related mergers by oil companies and natural gas companies reached $45 billion last year, compared with about $16 billion in 1983, and about $10 billion for each of the three years before that, Petrie said.

MORE THAN $80 billion of that was the result of just 17 mergers among major energy-related companies. This total includes natural gas companies, which have also been pushed toward restructuring by many of the same economic forces.

Nonetheless, Daniel Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates, a consulting firm, said that the activity in the independents is important because that is where the impetus toward consolidation is now focused.

In a recent Cambridge report, "The Reshaping of the Oil Industry: Just Another Commodity?" Yergin stated that the energy mega-mergers are on the wane because fewer companies are now able to buy the giants and because judicial decisions and corporate defensive tactics have acted to "brake" such undertakings.

Yet, he maintained that rather than signaling the end of the industrywide consolidation, "it suggests that the terrain of activity will shift away from the large, highly visible enterprises to the smaller companies."

Sawhill of McKinsey suggested that the consolidation of the independents would not produce "the pitched battles for control" that have marked much of the restructuring of the majors because "it's being triggered more by fundamental industry economics, not by corporate raiders."

AS FOR CONSUMERS, Sawhill said that they "can only benefit as the industry gets rid of uneconomic assets." He added, "There'll still be plenty of healthy competition — no one's going to get a dominant share of the market. But to the extent that high-cost operators are driven out of business, it ought to bring consumer prices down."

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

A new study by the National Association of Working Women contradicts a widespread belief that the jobless rate, still hovering above the 7 percent level, will be gradually reduced by a growing number of jobs in the service industry, particularly white-collar clerical jobs.

In reality, the study says, the country is in for a prolonged period of relatively high unemployment because those anticipated white-collar jobs will be replaced by automation.

In recent years, the jobless rate has been higher after each recession than it was when the recession began. Yet industry and government leaders seem complacent about the problem because the rate hasn't gone much higher than 7 percent, even though that is nearly twice the rate once considered proper in non-recessionary times.

The willingness of so many Americans to accept what once was considered a totally unacceptable jobless rate is probably due in large part to a general acceptance of steady increases in foreign imports that are responsible for layoffs in smokestack industries and drastic job losses in other industries.

Imports are being accepted by President Reagan and many others because they hold down prices by forcing U.S. producers to keep prices down to stay competitive. Ironically, in that context, unemployment is viewed on the positive side and considered anti-inflationary because jobless workers do not have the buying power to push prices up. Those with jobs are often not unduly worried by the unemployment rate and are willing to accept the trade-off: high unemployment for lower prices.

Nevertheless, even those who are complacent about the current jobless rate don't seem to want it to go any higher and, as the nation looks about for new areas of employment to achieve at least that minimal goal, many experts see hope in the predictions of continued increases in the number of low-paying, white-collar clerical jobs traditionally filled by women.

Part of the explanation for the continued high jobless rate is that more women than ever are entering the work force: An estimated 40 percent of U.S. women today are working outside their homes or looking for jobs, compared with about 25 percent in 1965.

Despite new areas of employment for many women in jobs traditionally dominated by men, most traditionally female jobs are still held by women. The Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that about 97 percent of all secretaries, stenographers and typists are women, and 79 percent of all clerical workers are women. Nevertheless, even if discrimination against women continues to decline, more clerical jobs, either for women or men, could help cut the unemployment rate.

But the new study doesn't have such an optimistic outlook. The organization's own surveys, combined with data from the federal and state governments, shows that the predictions of continued increases in the number of clerical jobs are not going to be realized.

In a statement accompanying the report, which was issued Monday, the union's executive director, Karen Nussbaum, said, "Contrary to popular opinion, clerical employment is beginning to decline, not grow, in the Midwest, and it is beginning to stagnate in the rest of the country." So far, Nussbaum said, the cuts have been largely unnoticed because they have come about through attrition, without the highly publicized, more massive layoffs in other areas of employment.

The automation of more and more offices has resulted in the need for more office skills, giving workers increased responsibility and also increasing their productivity. But wages are not keeping pace with the increases in skills and productivity, and the office productivity increases mean that fewer workers are needed than had been predicted, the study says.

The report shows that, until 1980, the number of clerical jobs did increase faster than the overall increase in employment. But since then, the growth rate for clerical jobs has slowed substantially and is now 2 percentage points below the growth rate for all employment.

To deal with the problem, the study recommends, among other things, that major new job-training and retraining programs be started and that jobs be "de-feminized" through "comparable worth" laws and union contracts.

"Grace Commission Report"

Speaking at this month's meeting is Mr. George Goldberger, Assistant to the Chairman of the Grace Commission and W.R. Grace and Co. Prior to joining Grace in 1977, Mr. Goldberger was a Management Consultant with Booz, Allen & Hamilton. George Goldberger holds an MBA degree from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania and was graduated from the Polytechnic Institute of New York with a BS degree in Systems Engineering.

This Commission was formed in 1982 by President Reagan, in an attempt to scrutinize government spending through the eyes of private sector business. Eighteen months after its conception, the Grace Commission turned in a comprehensive report consisting of 47 volumes that documented nearly 2500 specific recommendations to reduce government spending. If implemented, the actions proposed by the Commission would result in a reduction in the federal deficit of 424 billion dollars over a three year period without weakening the needed defense program or harming any social welfare programs.

TAB, formed in 1922, is a statewide non-profit alliance of businesses, advocating the merits of the private enterprise system. It is also designed to provide innovative, educational, and legislative programs which strengthen the economy, provide for fair and equitable taxation, and prevent unnecessary regulation.

More mid-career executives hitting the books

New York Times News Service

EVANSTON, Ill. — At 8 a.m. in one of Northwestern University's dining halls, a group of students are doing what students often do before class: cramming. Between spoonfuls of cereal, the students use yellow markers to furiously highlight lecture notes, making occasional wisecracks about professors.

What is unusual is that these students are mid-career managers mosty in their 40s and 50s. Rather than boning up for a lecture on, say, Thomas Hardy, they are about to hurry to a 90-minute case study on how corporate directors should choose a chief executive.

Each summer, thousands of executives take time off from their jobs for one week to two months to attend executive education programs such as the one at Northwestern's J.L. Kellogg Graduate School of Management. There, they get updates on the latest thinking in finance, marketing and production.

"Executive education is extremely hot and destined to become even more important than ever in the development of senior-level managers," Ray Watson, associate dean for executive education at Duke University's Fuqua School of Business, said. The number of business schools offering such programs has quadrupled since 1970, to 800, he said.

Sending managers back to school to catch up on current business research is not new. Top-ranked business schools, such as Harvard, Stanford, Wharton and Columbia, have been doing it for years during the summer months when classrooms would otherwise be empty.

Microsoft on top of world and worried

New York Times News Service

BELLEVUE, Wash — Something is gnawing at Microsoft.

By all accounts, the Microsoft Corp., the first major company spawned by the personal computer to reach its 10th birthday, has a lot to celebrate. Clearly the company has prospered, with revenues leaping by more than 40 percent in its last fiscal year.

It has by far the broadest product line among software companies. And recently it signed a long-term agreement with the International Business Machines Corp. that is seen as cementing Microsoft's position at the center of the personal computer universe.

"They're just on top of the world right now, as far as I'm concerned," said David S. Wagman, co-chairman of Softsel Computer Products, a leading distributor of software.

But what is spoiling the party is that the company was eclipsed last year as the largest personal computer software concern by the Lotus Development Corp., creator of the highly successful 1-2-3 spreadsheet program. Lotus's revenues totaled $200 million for the 12 months ended June 30. Microsoft's revenues came to $140 million in that same period.

While Lotus and Microsoft remain friendly rivals, Microsoft and its 29-year-old chairman, William H. Gates, clearly want to be No. 1 again. "It drives him up the wall," said one friend of Gates.

To catch up to Lotus, or even merely to continue to grow, Microsoft must continue to expand beyond systems software, which governs the basic functions of the computer, to the far larger market of applications programs, such as word processors and spreadsheets, which guide the computer in particular tasks. Lotus sells only applications software.

Microsoft is now unleashing a barrage of programs, including Excel, a spreadsheet program for the Macintosh computer, and Access, a communications package for the IBM computer. It is also finally bringing Windows to market. That program, a key part of its strategy, is more than a year behind schedule.

But selling software to consumers is different from selling highly technical operating systems directly to computer companies. To compete against sophisticated marketers like Lotus, Microsoft is also undergoing a corporate makeover, trying to shed its "techie" image in favor of a flashier one. The corporate image perhaps is a reflection of Gates himself, who is a technical genius but is much less outgoing than Mitchell D. Kapor, Lotus's chairman.

"We're taking a look at everything," said Jean Richardson, a former Apple official who now heads Microsoft's corporate communications. "A year from now you will see a very different image of Microsoft."

Going public next year is also part of the plan. Officials say that the need for money is not the primary reason for a public offering. The company has been consistently profitable and is believed to have more than $15 million in cash on hand. But going public is expected to win increased attention and credibility.

Microsoft is now unleashing a barrage of programs, including Excel, a spreadsheet program for the Macintosh computer, and Access, a communications package for the IBM computer. It is also finally bringing Windows to market. That program, a key part of its strategy, is more than a year behind schedule.

But selling software to consumers is different from selling highly technical operating systems directly to computer companies. To compete against sophisticated marketers like Lotus, Microsoft is also undergoing a corporate makeover, trying to shed its "techie" image in favor of a flashier one. The corporate image perhaps is a reflection of Gates himself, who is a technical genius but is much less outgoing than Mitchell D. Kapor, Lotus's chairman.

"We're taking a look at everything," said Jean Richardson, a former Apple official who now heads Microsoft's corporate communications. "A year from now you will see a very different image of Microsoft."

Going public next year is also part of the plan. Officials say that the need for money is not the primary reason for a public offering. The company has been consistently profitable and is believed to have more than $15 million in cash on hand. But going public is expected to win increased attention and credibility.

Microsoft was founded in 1975 by Gates, then 19, and a friend.
