Moluccan siege broken, hostages freed

ASSEN, Netherlands (AP) — Dutch marines firing heavily stormed a local government complex in this northern Dutch city today and freed 70 hostages held by Moluccan terrorists since Monday, a government spokesman said.

The spokesman said no hostages were killed during the assault. Officials confirmed, however, that a man whose body lay outside the building since Monday was dead. He said it was not known how he died.

The spokesman said one man whom the Moluccans claimed to have killed as the assault began was found in the building alive and wounded. The spokesman said three other hostages were slightly wounded during the attack by 60 men of the 100-member marine anti-terror squad, the same one that broke a siege by South Moluccan terrorists last year.

Three young Moluccan gunmen were reported captured in the 20-minute operation, which came 40 minutes after the 2 p.m. (8 a.m. EST) deadline set by the terrorists for the government to meet their demands or face the execution of hostages.

Earlier reports had indicated five or six terrorists in the building.

"They're free, they're free," a marine officer yelled into his radio as the marines secured the four-story Trente provincial government headquarters in wooded suburban parkland of this northern Dutch city.

The marines went in after a shot was heard inside the concrete-and-glass building and the terrorists telephoned the government crisis center and claimed they had killed a male hostage, the spokesman said.

"As soon as we heard that, the marines were ordered to attack," he said.

The anti-terrorist unit, which had been airlifted in transport helicopters to the siege scene Monday night, attacked from two sides under a withering barrage of covering gunfire from marine sharpshooters on roofs of nearby buildings.

The Moluccan militants seek Dutch intervention to obtain the independence of their home islands from Indonesia. Both the South Moluccas and Indonesia are former Dutch colonies.

The terrorists, who called themselves the South Moluccan Suicide Squad, had demanded in a letter to the Justice Ministry the release of 21 South Moluccans imprisoned after the terror action last summer and one in 1975, a plane to take them all out of the country and $13 million ransom.

Earlier, the gunmen at the five-story building in this northern Dutch city had released a woman hostage — Mrs. M. de Reeper — after talks with Moluccan community leaders invited by the terrorists to act as go-betweens with the government.

"They gave no reason for releasing this woman," a government spokesman told reporters.

The three left the building through a ground-floor window, climbed down a ladder and walked across a park to a government aid center set up in a

Probe into bird deaths going to federal agency

By MARLEEN RAY

After looking into the deaths last Friday of hundreds of birds at Edison Freshman School, Richard Endress, special agent of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Department in San Angelo, said Monday he would turn his findings over to the department's Division of Animal Control.

Endress, in Midland Monday for his investigation, said the Division of Animal Control will get in touch with Edison Principal R. L. Williams within the week to let him know what action the department will take. He refused to comment on the details of his investigation or say whether the department will take any legal action against school officials.

Endress said he came to Midland to see if any federally-protected, migratory birds had been harmed or killed. He said under the federal Migratory Bird Treaty Act, about 600 species of migratory birds are protected, but about 10 of these species may be killed "under specific deprivation."

"In this case," he said, "Edison apparently has a deprivation problem, especially with the brown-headed cowbird." He said the birds seem to be a "nuisance and a health hazard." He said the cowbird is one of the exceptions to the migratory bird act.

Williams, who has been quoted as saying he shot some birds Thursday night, said Monday that roosting birds in the school patio were killing the trees and the grass with their droppings. He said students first told him about the problem the birds were creating about three weeks ago.

Edison is a closed campus so students are asked to stay in the patio during lunch time. He said some go out to the patio because the bird droppings were covering the benches and other parts of the patio. He said an odor was noticeable on humid days, too.

Saying the custodians "do a great job" in keeping the campus clean, Williams declined to comment on what measures he had tried or considered to get rid of the birds. He said the school never has had this problem before.

Midge Erskine, a Midland bird rehabilitator, Friday filed a complaint with Assistant City Attorney Bill Clifton against Williams.

Jolly's job to locate jobs for MC students

Richard Jolly is a seeker of jobs and of places to dwell... for others.

He knocks on doors by way of the telephone, letters, bulletins, notices, person-to-person visits, and via publicity, such as this newspaper.

"I've tried to open up new avenues," said Jolly, who is into his first year as director of housing and placement at Midland College.

He's really trying.

"We've got students here who are looking for jobs... students who are looking for housing," he said.

ROUSTIN ABOUT with Ed Todd

In other words, Jolly is saying that the days of "students working their way through college" aren't over at all.

Not all parents believe in or can afford giving their youngsters a "freebie" education.

If the dollars it takes to pay for tuition, room and board, garb, books and supplies, other necessities and seeming necessities aren't stashed away in dad's checking account or in a savings plan, then somebody has got to get busy and make some greenbacks. It takes money, money, money.

Uncle Sam and his state compadres help some. So do grants and scholarships.

Still, though knowledge is free, education isn't.

True, the college provides about 100 on-campus work-study jobs, funded by the tax dollar, to keep some students more or less solvent.

But those are only the relative

Disappointed French left unites for runoff election

PARIS (AP) — The Socialist-Communist alliance launched a desperate runoff campaign today after agreeing to support joint candidates.

It was a last-ditch effort to salvage victory in the final round of voting Sunday for the National Assembly and wrest power from the conservative-centrist majority that has been in office since 1958.

Restoration of leftist unity became necessary after the Socialists and Communists turned in a surprisingly weak performance in the first round Sunday, polling almost nine percentage points below the 54 percent predicted.

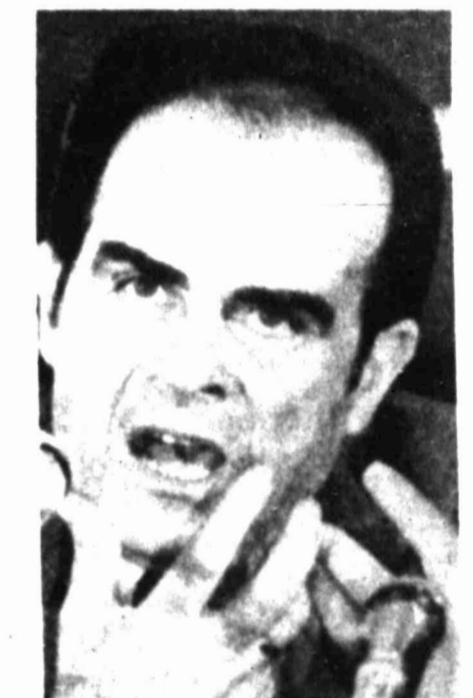

The agreement by Socialist party leader Francois Mitterrand, Communist Georges Marchais and Robert Fabre of the small Left Radicals was stitched together Monday night. It called for mutual withdrawals to ensure full support for the best-placed leftist candidates in the 423 races still to be decided in the runoff elections.

The three leaders urged all local party organizations to meet immediately to ensure "loyal cooperation" in backing the leading leftist in each district. There will be a new poster campaign naming the selected candidate, and all other leftist candidates were told to take part in the chosen man's campaign meetings.

The Communists abandoned demands they pressed for months, right up to Monday morning, for prior agreement on a radical revision of the joint leftist platform and a commitment on Communist cabinet posts.

Francois Mitterrand

Georges Marchais

They also agreed to shelve for the time being a discussion of major differences with the Socialists which split the alliance last September, notably over the extent of nationalization and defense policy.

Only 68 seats were won in the first-round voting, and all but five went to government supporters. The Communists, Socialists and Left Radicals trailed the government forces in the popular vote also, 45.1 percent to 46.5 percent. Though 6.5 percent went to other leftist and ecologist candidates, the combined total was short of the 53 percent considered necessary because of gerrymandering to insure a majority in the assembly.

"We're beaten," Communist journalists conceded privately.

The first-round turnout was nearly 83 percent of the nation's 35.2 million voters, a record in national parliamentary balloting.

Jacques Chirac's conservative Gaullists led the voting with 6,451,454 votes, or 22.6 percent, followed closely by the Socialists with 22.5 percent. Then came President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's centrist Republicans with 21.5 percent, the Communists with 20.5 percent, the Independents with 2.4 percent and the Left Radicals, 2.1 percent.

Uninhabited JP precincts illegal?

By LINDA HILL

The brother of a former Midland County constable Monday told Midland County commissioners he believes the present division of the county into peace justice precincts is illegal.

Bob Coonce, whose brother Fred Coonce was at one time a constable in what was then Precinct 4, appeared before the commissioners to protest the fact that three of the four peace justice precincts are "out in the pasture" and uninhabited.

All of Midland County, with the exception of three small tracts of land owned by Texaco, is included in Peace Justice Precinct 1, which has two peace justices. The remaining plots of land, with no residents at all, constitute precincts 2, 3 and 4.

Coonce pointed to the constitutional requirement that each county be divided into between four and eight peace justice precincts, and that the Commissioners Court fill vacancies among peace justices and constables for the county.

"Nobody lives in those precincts, so we can't appoint anyone," County Judge Barbara Culver told Coonce.

Judge Culver said she has recommended that, when the county needs more than two peace justices, it be divided into four precincts, using the same boundaries as county commissioner precincts.

But, she said, it would be expensive to set up four peace justices, with the necessary staff and offices, before they are needed.

That might involve a tax increase, she added.

"You really know how to threaten a guy," Coonce responded.

In response to Coonce's repeated statements that the present division was illegal, Judge Culver said, "Well, sue us. We're aware of the problem, and I think we're considering the possibility of setting up some more (precincts)."

Steve Bickerstaff of the Texas Attorney General's Office told The Reporter-Telegram Monday that it is "not an uncommon practice among the counties" to have peace justice precincts without any people in them.

"There's not a one-man-one-vote requirement for peace justice precincts, so you don't have to have an equal population," Bickerstaff said.

He said the requirement doesn't exist for peace justice precincts because each peace justice is independently elected and has no jurisdiction outside his precinct.

Lucille C. de Baca, deputy director of the Elections Division of the Secretary of State's Office, said Monday all four precincts must be listed on the general election ballot.

But, she said, "the constitution is silent" about whether anyone must live in those precincts.

lives" in its response to the "wanton terrorism." But the statement did not specifically ask Israel to refrain from retaliation and said Israel "has legitimate security interests which must be protected."

Meanwhile, the White House announced that Begin had rescheduled his trip to Washington, postponed because of the Palestinian attack, and would arrive next Monday.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohamed Ibrahim Kamel told U.S. Ambassador Hermann Eilts in Cairo that "any military reprisal by Israel would lead to more violence and consequently more deterioration in the Middle East situation," the semi-official newspaper Al Ahran reported.

Kentucky fried libel suit won by colonel

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Col. Sanders was not talking about a single restaurant when he said Kentucky Fried Chicken's gravy tasted like wallpaper paste, the Kentucky Supreme Court ruled today.

The court threw out a libel suit against Harland Sanders, whose fried chicken recipe created the far-flung empire. The suit had been brought by the Kentucky Fried Chicken of Bowling Green (Ky.) Inc. outlet.

"My God, that gravy is horrible," Sanders was quoted as telling Dan Kauffman, a reporter for The Courier-Journal of Louisville, Ky. "They buy tap water for 15-20 cents a thousand gallons and then they mix it with flour and starch and end up with pure wallpaper paste."

"And another thing," he continued. "That new 'crispy" recipe is nothing in the world but a damn fried doughball stuck on some chicken."

In a unanimous opinion, the court said that in the context of the whole article, it was plain Sanders did not have the Kentucky Fried Chicken of Bowling Green or any other particular restaurant in mind.

"He was discussing Kentucky Fried Chicken generally," the judges said. "To defame a class, the statement must be applicable to every member of the class."

The court noted that there are more than 5,000 Kentucky Fried Chicken outlets around the world and said that nothing in the newspaper story identified the Bowling Green restaurant as the object of the remarks.

The reporter and newspaper also were named defendants in the suit.

JERUSALEM (AP) — Despite U.S. and Egyptian cautions, Israel is still expected to hit Palestinian bases in Lebanon in retaliation for the terrorist attack in which more than 30 Israelis died.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin vowed "to cut off the arm of evil" of the Palestine Liberation Organization whose Al Fatah guerrillas claimed responsibility for the raid Saturday, the worst in Israel's 30-year history.

"We will do what we have to do," Begin declared in a speech to the Israeli parliament Monday before Washington indicated its disapproval of retaliation. "We shall in no way and in no circumstances agree that this hand be raised over a Jewish child or a Jewish woman."

Yasser Arafat, the head of Al Fatah and of the PLO, claimed in a speech Monday night that three brigades of Israeli tanks, paratroopers and mechanized units were deployed to hit guerrilla strongholds.

Syrian peacekeeping forces in Lebanon were reported moving big guns and missile batteries to the Sidon coast, 25 miles south of Beirut. Hundreds fled from the ports of Tyre and Sidon, both of which are controlled by the Palestinians and their leftist Lebanese Moslem allies. South Lebanese schools were closed.

All 13 Palestinian camps in Lebanon were on a "red alert," and extra anti-aircraft guns were deployed in Beirut's Sabra shantytown, where the PLO command is located.

In Washington, the State Department called on Israel not "to add to the suffering and loss of innocent

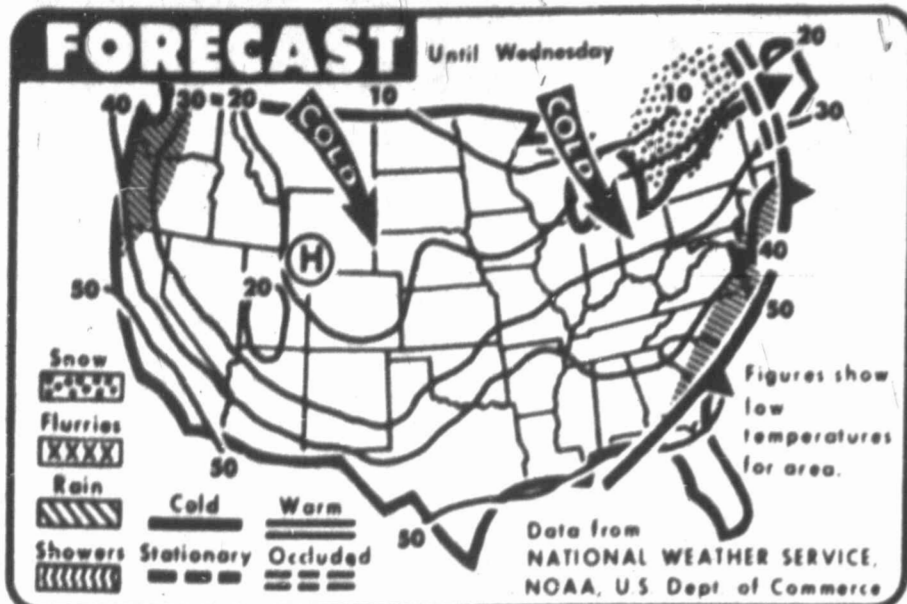

The 11 raiders landed on the Israeli coast 37 miles north of Tel Aviv, hijacked two buses and tried to make it to Tel Aviv with some 70 hostages to seize a hotel and free imprisoned terrorists. They were stopped by a roadblock seven miles north of Tel Aviv, and in the ensuing gun battle a bus exploded, nine of the terrorists were killed and the other two were captured.

There was still confusion over the number of Israeli dead, with the police reporting 32 and the army 36. Nine were buried Sunday and Monday, and 12 funerals were scheduled today.

Some of the dead were so badly burned by the explosion that they have not been identified.

Police were questioning witnesses in preparation for a trial of the two surviving terrorists.

Calm comes after winds

The gusty winds which created a dust bowl in Midland Monday should die down today and become even calmer Wednesday, according to the weatherman.

Skies are expected to be fair through Wednesday with temperatures turning cooler Wednesday. The low temperature tonight should dip near 40 degrees with winds decreasing to 10 to 15 mph this afternoon and tonight. Wednesday's high temperature is expected to reach the middle 60s.

Monday's high temperature was 70 degrees, the National Weather Service said.

at Midland Regional Air Terminal said. The overnight low temperature was 44 degrees.

All area towns reported gusty winds Monday with fair skies and rather cool temperatures this morning.

Fair skies across Texas caused temperatures to drop a little today, but a gradual warming trend is forecast through the weekend.

Over most of the state, temperatures were in the 40s and 50s, with extreme highs and lows at 4 a.m., being from 30 at Dalhart to 56 at McAllen.

44 killed in riot at prison

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) - Police said 44 persons were killed today when guards and police crushed a riot at an Argentine prison holding many political prisoners.

Police sources said 30 others were seriously injured, most of them from burns. The Villa Devoto prison, Argentina's largest, is about 10 miles from the center of Buenos Aires. Both inmates and guards were said to be among the casualties.

The outbreak started at about 6:20 a.m. (8:20 a.m. EST).

Area residents told reporters they heard shouting and explosions inside the high-walled facility and then saw smoke pour into the sky.

The prison is meant for about 2,500 inmates but local human rights groups claim the population has increased to between 4,000 and 5,000 because of political prisoners sent there since the military junta seized power in a 1976 coup.

"There was pandemonium," said one resident who didn't want to be identified. "People were screaming inside and there were sounds like gunfire."

The independent news agency Noticias Argentinas said the rioting started in a wing housing nonpolitical prisoners. Federal police riot squads armed with automatic weapons and supported by helicopters cordoned off the prison.

Ector chosen 'sponsor applicant'

Midland County commissioners Monday approved a resolution designating Ector County as a "prime sponsor applicant" for Permian Basin Manpower funds.

Ector County is eligible to become a prime sponsor because its population now is officially more than 100,000, said Willie Taylor, Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission Manpower director.

Joining a 17-county consortium, with Ector County as prime sponsor, would increase by 10 percent the amount of money coming to the region under the Comprehensive Employment Training Act, County Judge Barbara Culver said.

Taylor said a decrease in the amount of red tape required under the new system would mean that the area could net 30 to 40 percent more money for programs.

Also, he said, the Governor's Office of Manpower Assistance could not operate in the consortium area, a benefit that Judge Culver said was "the part that appealed to me most."

The regional commission will be administrator of the consortium, she said, and Ector County will have no new control over disposition of Manpower funds.

The resolution was approved unanimously.

In other business at Monday's meeting, the commissioners accepted a deed to Barbara Lane in the Ridge Heights subdivision, and agreed to maintain it as a dirt road.

Keith Berger, who said he is developing a subdivision next to Ridge Heights, appeared before the commissioners to urge them not to pave Barbara Lane. Berger said he had been required to pave the roads in his subdivision, which increased the price of the lots. For the county to pave Barbara Lane would be "unfair competition," Berger said.

Judge Culver said the Ridge Heights subdivision is covered by an earlier policy of the commissioners by which a subdivider could give the county a dirt road, but the county would maintain it only as a dirt road.

Also Monday, the commissioners set June 20 as the beginning day of the Commissioners Court's meetings as an equalization board.

The commissioners delayed action on bids for road materials so they can meet with County Road and Bridge Superintendent Albert Stewart.

Sadat criticizes attack on Israelis

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) - President Anwar Sadat today condemned the Palestinian terrorist raid in Israel over the weekend in which more than 30 people were killed and described it as a "sad and tragic" event.

At the same time, the Egyptian leader urged restraint and called for an end to the "vicious circle" of strike and counter-strike that has engulfed the Middle East for three decades.

"Anything against the civilians I shall always condemn," Sadat said in the first Arab denunciation of the raid. He spoke to reporters in the Nile valley town of Beni Suef, about 70 miles south of Cairo.

The statement in English was broadcast live by Cairo radio.

"Believe me, I describe it as a very sad and tragic incident and when I heard that the Palestine Liberation Organization declared their responsibility about it I asked myself what will be the result?" the Egyptian president said.

Sadat said he would "have liked action towards the establishment of peace instead of starting revenge again and the vicious circle again."

But the Egyptian leader also noted that no peace can be achieved without settling the Palestinian question. Negotiations between Egypt and Israel are hung up over this issue, with Egypt demanding an independent state for the Palestinians and Israel claiming this was impossible because of the security threat it would pose.

It was Sadat's second attack on the Palestinians in recent weeks. He strongly criticized them after the murder of Egyptian newspaper editor Youssef el-Sebaei in the Nicosia Hilton Hotel Feb. 18. That killing led to the abortive attack by Egyptian commandos on a commandeered jetliner at Larnaca airport in which 15 commandos were killed.

Eleven Palestinian raiders landed on the Israeli coast Saturday 37 miles north of Tel Aviv, hijacked an interurban bus and then a tourist bus, and tried to go to Tel Aviv with about 70 hostages to seize a hotel and free imprisoned terrorists.

They were stopped by a roadblock seven miles north of Tel Aviv and in the ensuing gun battle, the bus exploded. Nine of the Palestinians were killed and the other two were captured.

Reports of the number of Israeli dead were varied. Police reported 32 were killed and the army said 36 died.

Absentee ballots ready for voting

Those Midland residents who will be out of town April 1 may cast their ballots now for the election scheduled for that date by the city of Midland, the Midland school board, the Midland County Hospital District and Midland College.

Absentee voting began Monday and continues from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday until March 28 in the school administration building, 702 N. N St.

Voters will select school board members, city council members, hospital district directors and Midland College trustees. Also on the ballot will be a $500,000 city bond issue for expansion of the Hogan Park Municipal Golf Course and a referendum on proposed use of Crier Park for a new Central Fire Station.

Greenwood residents may vote those same dates at the Greenwood school district offices for school trustees for that district and hospital district directors.

In addition to persons who plan to be out of town on election day, persons 65 or older, persons who are ill or have physical disabilities, those who will be working as election clerks and poll watchers and those confined in jail may vote absentee.

those who can show financial need."

The pay is not tops. "Wages are at the federal minimum or slightly higher if there is merit or favor."

"It's not a lot, but it's something to keep you going," said Jolly. "Pays the gasoline... puts some groceries on the table."

So Jolly would like to extend an invitation to all those businesses, industries and firms in and about Midland.

That invite is this: If you need some part-time help and are willing to pay fair wages, kindly give Jolly a buzz.

"I know that there are people in businesses who are looking for help," said Jolly, who is only a dissertation away from getting his doctorate at Texas Tech University. His specialty is student personnel services.

Jolly seems fairly certain that the students can match up to the task in about any field. Perhaps they'll be try-hard tenderfoots.

He tossed out a few work areas: shop work, welding, mechanics, electronics, drafting, field and office jobs in petroleum, secretarial, restaurant, general office and so on.

The college has a "diversified" vocational-education program, which prepares students for livelihood.

And then there's the liberal arts, which open you to a world of ideas and fantasies. There are, of course, skills within the arts and sciences. Certainly. The pay may not be as attractive as the ideas.

And then, for Jolly, there's housing to worry about.

Midland College has no dormitories. The trustees, viewing the junior college as a community endeavor, reason that dormitories aren't necessary. Students can live with their parents before showing off to senior colleges, or into full-time work, or into the marriage bit.

But teen-agers like to leave home after high school and to get away from the purview of their parents.

And those that do "really, by and large, have a hard time finding... liveable and reasonably priced... housing," Jolly said.

Now, what about dormitories? "They're a headache," Jolly ventured. "They're a lot of work, but, to me, they do have assets" for the college.

Meanwhile, said Jolly, "There's a real need here for student housing... something reasonable."

The mediators, See Noes Sousa, 48, and Abe Manuputy, 36, had to use the ladder to get into the building because the gunmen blocked the doors.

A Justice Ministry spokesman refused to give details of the talks the mediators had with the terrorists but said "it leaves little room" for negotiating.

He said Dr. Dirk Mulder, a psychiatrist who directed the government's war of nerves in previous Moluccan sieges, had been recalled from Canada and was meeting with cabinet ministers at The Hague, the Dutch capital.

More than 400 police and troops ringed the Assen provincial government headquarters which four to six armed members of the South Moluccan independence movement took over Monday.

Cook stock fraud retrial begins in district court

The retrial of William Robert Cook, charged with stock fraud, began Monday in federal district court in Midland.

Cook has been serving 10 years in concurrent sentences after being convicted in May 1976 of 15 counts. The new trial was ordered by the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

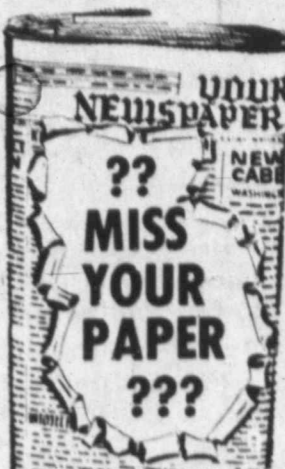

Also Monday, U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. selected juries for and set March 27 as the trial date for three cases. The Rev. Roy E. Honea, a Big Spring minister, is charged with two counts of subscribing to false income tax returns.

Ronald Lynn Marby of 220-A Mitchell St. in Midland is to be tried on a charge of false loan application. And Jessie Perry Merrifield, whose address is listed as the corner of Midkiff Road and Farmer's Market Road, is to be tried on a fraud charge. All three were indicted Jan. 31.

In other court business Monday, Richard Dale Weddle pleaded guilty to one charge of receiving a firearm in interstate commerce and one of escape.

Wood did not set a sentencing date. A charge against Norman Jean Sulaica of escape from a halfway house was dismissed by Wood at the request of the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Also Monday, Wood sentenced Donald Maurice Betts to two years imprisonment, probated to six months, and fined him $2,000. Betts pleaded guilty in January to a charge of embezzlement by a bank employee.

Action against inflation sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's chief inflation watchdog, warning that the administration's anti-inflation strategy is not working, is recommending stronger action to avert significant price increases, government sources say.

Barry Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, recommended that Carter take actions that are "immediate in their impact and not just a request for restraint by the private sector" to keep prices from increasing at a faster pace.

Bosworth, in an internal White House memorandum last week, maintained, for example, that contracts coming out of the current coal industry dispute have the potential of causing "inflationary damage."

A spokesman for the council, Tom

Joyce, confirmed the memorandum, but emphasized that it reflected only one point of view within the White House, has not yet been debated by key economic advisers and has not been seen by the president.

The memorandum originally included a suggestion that the administration reverse itself on supporting the Social Security tax increase approved by Congress last year, an administration source said.

The source, who declined to be identified, said Bosworth still believes that Social Security taxes should be rolled back by $6 billion to help harness inflation, but that the recommendation was deleted from the memo because it "just wouldn't fly."

In the memorandum sent to Carter's six top economic advisers, Bosworth warned there would be substantial increases in consumer prices in coming months and that "it would be better for the president to anticipate, rather than to react to, public criticism."

The memorandum was written before the wholesale price figures for February were announced last week. They showed a 1.1 percent jump, the highest monthly increase in three years. The February figures would be equivalent to 13.2 percent for the year. The administration has been shooting for a 6 percent annual inflation rate.

Bosworth suggested the government set an example by cutting the federal employees' proposed pay hike from 7 percent to 6 percent and that Carter go on national television to announce the cut as well as address the inflation issue.

He suggested that, for the short term, Carter:

—Push harder for congressional action on his year-long hospital cost containment bill, which has been watered down in Congress. He said the recent consumer price indexes "substantially understate" increased medical cost.

—Expand meat imports to hold down meat prices, and expand the timber harvests on federal lands to hold down rapidly rising lumber prices.

—Announce an executive order requiring regulatory agencies to consider the inflationary effect of new actions and of regulations already on the books.

$1,800 of items said taken from apartment

Midland police today are investigating the theft of approximately $1,800 worth of items from the apartment of a west Midland resident.

Ruth Seitzinger, of the 2700 block of North Midland Drive, reported the theft Monday of a color television, a stereo component system, a clock radio, a black and white television set and a microwave oven.

LEAD STOLEN

Police detectives also are investigating a "heavy crime." They are looking for the person or persons who took approximately 5,000 pounds of scrap lead from a back area of Troy Vines Building Supply Co., in the 2900 block of the Rankin Highway.

The lead was reported stolen Monday from four 50-gallon barrels. The lead was valued at $200 on a basis of four cents to the pound.

TRAILER STOLEN

A one-half ton trailer carrying a dolly was stolen from Dunn, Monroe and Smith Music Co., in the 3400 block of Industrial Avenue, police reported. The dolly reportedly was worth $50 and the trailer $500.

Odessa store reports theft

ODESSA — A man wearing overalls, a straw hat and no shirt took an undetermined amount of money Monday night from Cecil's Liquor Store in the 6100 block of Andrews Highway here, according to the Ector County Sheriff's Office.

The man used a revolver in the robbery, a spokesman for the office said. The robbery occurred about 8 p.m.

Utah prison prepares for two more executions

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Utah State Prison, where killer Gary Gilmore was executed by a firing squad 14 months ago, is preparing for the simultaneous firing-squad executions next week of two convicted killers.

Lawyers for both men say they will file necessary appeals and are confident the executions won't be carried out as scheduled at sunrise March 22.

If the executions are carried out, they will be the first in the nation since Gilmore died Jan. 17, 1977. His death was the only execution in the country in nearly 10 years.

Warden Samuel Smith said he is organizing volunteers for two firing squads for Death Row inmates

LUMBER FIRE

The fire was quelled without damage to any portion of the campus, firemen reported. The fire was believed to have been set shortly after noon Monday.

Trial opens on county commissioner

AMARILLO, Texas — State District Judge H. Bryan Poff says he'll rule on a change of venue motion after jury selection is completed in the felony theft trial of suspended Potter County Commissioner Bob Hicks.

Jury selection resumes today after no jurors were selected Monday. District Attorney Tom Curtis asked for the change of venue.

Hicks is charged with illegally using a county-owned air compressor, which was found on his property. He has been suspended from his job following his indictment last November.

Curtis, held in contempt of court by Poff last week after a heated exchange, claims Poff and publicity about the case create an environment favoring the defense.

Curtis unsuccessfully tried three times Monday in the change of venue hearing to call Poff to the stand. "I don't intend to be a witness in my own court," Poff told him.

The district attorney also questioned KAMR-TV News Director Ben Boyett about a series of news reports on the theft and official misconduct charges against several county officials.

Under questioning, Boyett also said a KAMR editorial praising Poff for his contempt ruling against Curtis reflected what the station believed to be public opinion.

Mitchell to testify

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Attorney General John N. Mitchell will remain on furlough from his prison sentence for at least two more weeks so he can testify on what he knew about alleged South Korean influence-buying in Congress.

The hearings begin Wednesday before a House international relations subcommittee.

William Andrews, 23, of Dallas and Dale Pierre, 25, of Brooklyn, N.Y.

"We're in the preliminary stages, setting the format and getting the material ready," Smith said.

Last Friday, the State Supreme Court denied a stay of execution for Andrews. His lawyers said he would appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court for a stay while it reviews the state's capital-punishment law.

Gilbert Athay, Pierre's attorney, said Monday he also plans a request for a stay from the state court and an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Andrews and Pierre were airmen at Hill Air Force Base near here when convicted in 1974 of killing three persons during a robbery in Ogden,

AFL-CIO reviews Texas candidates

HOUSTON (AP) — The political arm of the Texas AFL-CIO, the Committee on Political Education, considered endorsements today of candidates in the upcoming state primary elections.

On Monday the committee heard from three men seeking the Democratic nomination for governor — incumbent Dolph Briscoe, Attorney General John Hill and former governor Preston Smith.

For endorsement it will take a two-thirds vote of the delegates, representing about 255,000 union members from across the state.

State AFL-CIO President Harry Hubbard said he believes a large majority of the delegates support Briscoe, but declined to predict if the two-thirds vote could be reached.

Hill supporters meanwhile, realizing they are outnumbered, fought to come out of the convention with no official labor endorsement of any candidate. However, an official of the United Steel Workers in Houston said his group and the machinists are firmly in Hill's column.

Briscoe backers claim support of two of the state's largest unions — the Communications Workers of America and the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers.

Navy may control sub construction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy says it might take administrative control of construction of 16 attack nuclear submarines at General Dynamics Corp.'s Electric Boat shipyards if the firm carries out a threat to halt work on the vessels in a war over a $544-million cost overrun.

About 14,000 jobs in Connecticut and Rhode Island hang in the balance. Electric Boat is the second largest private employer in Connecticut and the largest in Rhode Island.

Navy Secretary W. Graham Claytor said the Navy may seek a court injunction to force Electric Boat management to keep working on the submarines.

An alternative to court action would be for the Navy to take over the contract, an option called "unlikely" by Rep. Christopher Dodd, a Democrat whose district includes Groton.

Claytor, who denied the Navy has done anything to breach its contract for the submarines, said the Navy will announce within 10 days what action it will take.

Electric Boat has a $1.4 billion contract to build 18 of the high-speed, fast-attack submarines. Two have been completed, and the last ship is expected to be delivered within six years, or up to three years behind schedule.

The company said Monday it would stop work on the subs April 12 if no settlement is reached with the Navy.

Golf course expansion

The building of Hogan Municipal Golf Course back in 1959 has proven to be one of the wisest investments ever made by the City of Midland — from community growth and public recreation standpoints.

It fits into much the same category as public tennis courts, swimming pools, softball diamonds and other facilities provided for the use and enjoyment of citizens who join in such participating sports.

A very few residents perhaps ever use all or even two or three of the municipal facilities mentioned. Some do not use any of them, but most of us benefit from them in one way or another.

And the beautiful part about the Hogan course is that it produces sufficient revenues to pay for all of its operating costs. In addition, it last year had a net income profit in excess of $12,000, which went into the city's general fund.

Hogan is the Tall City's only golf course which is open to anyone and everyone who pays the required green fees. It is true that Midland has two country clubs which have fine private golf courses, but both clubs have full memberships and lengthy waiting lists. This makes Hogan course all the more important from the public standpoint.

But it now has become necessary to expand the facilities at Hogan course in order to take care of the ever-increasing public demand. Midland's growth has been tremendous in recent years, as is well known, and the number of golfers has increased in like proportion. The course was crowded even before the recent population explosion, and you can imagine what it is now. The saturation point has been reached.

It is essential that the course and its facilities be enlarged, and the city council has decided to submit a $500,000 bond issue proposal in the April 1 city election, to finance the Hogan project. This is a comparatively small amount insofar as most bond elections are concerned, but it is a most significant election in terms of community betterment. It is a "must" if Midland is to maintain its enviable position as one of the Southwest's better cities.

There were those who were opposed to providing a municipal golf course when the matter first was proposed back in 1959, but fortunately the vast majority favored the proposition. It goes without saying that the Tall City of Midland would not be the fine, progressive, growing community it is today had not a municipal golf course been built at that time. And the very same condition holds true in today's expansion program to meet increased demands.

The Reporter-Telegram endorses the expansion proposal and urges voter approval in the April 1 election.

A 'sandy' greeting

A former West Texan, who was reared in our neighboring city of Andrews and was graduated from high school there, is the guest speaker at Presbyterian Week services presently under way in the Tall City.

He is the Rev. Dr. Jack Maxwell, president of Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Austin. He is a graduate of The University of Texas, Austin, and Princeton Theological Seminary. He has served in the mission field and was minister of a Presbyterian church in Pennsylvania before being named president of Austin Seminary.

He has seen a lot of country and done a lot of things since departing West Texas, but he knew he was back at home Sunday morning when he was greeted with a good, old-fashioned West Texas sandstorm.

"This is the first time I have seen this much real estate in the air and on the move since leaving Andrews in 1960," he commented from the pulpit in the First Presbyterian Church.

Welcome back to Wonderful West Texas, Dr. Maxwell.

NICK THIMMESCH

Pecksniffs and buttinskis check Guatemala election

WASHINGTON — Oh, how well-intentioned we Americans are, and how stupidly we sometimes act. How else to explain how a pair of do-gooder House members dispatched two Americans — uninvited — to Guatemala to monitor the recent elections there; how one monitor cried "fraud," and thereby angered many Guatemalans, who might regard their voting booths as sacred as ours, and wish Uncle Sam would mind his own business.

It turned out that the Guatemalan elections weren't so fraudulent after all, and besides, haven't there been some ballot box problems in the U.S. over the years? Who are we to poke around elections in other countries, shaking a Calvinistic finger at our Latin neighbors?

The genius behind this stunt is Rep. Donald M. Fraser, (D-Minn.) chairman of the House Subcommittee on International Organizations. His partner is Rep. Millicent Fenwick (R-N.J.). Both profess great concern for human rights and vote fraud in other countries.

So Fraser got the Democratic Party to sponsor a trip by professor John Plank of the University of Connecticut to Guatemala to observe the elections. The United Auto Workers union paid Plank's expenses. Since the Republican Party wouldn't sponsor or pay for Rep. Fenwick's representative, John Richardson, president of Freedom House, she became his sponsor and paid his way from her own private funds.

Guatemala, unfortunately, has long been torn and suffered violence by extremists of the Left and Right. The March 5 elections were the first held in many years, and featured a military cast. Voters were asked to choose a President among two army generals and a colonel. A general already runs the country.

Naturally, a scene like this attracted representatives of Europe's democratic parties as observers. Only now, for the first time, the U.S. got into the act. While the Guatemalan government didn't invite any of these "monitors," once this inspection gang set foot on their territory, they were well received and treated cordially.

But after the elections, whose outcome isn't clear yet, Professor Plank cut loose with: "The fraud perpetrated here is so transparent that nobody could expect to get away with it." He also noted that the fraud "simply reinforces the deep cynicism of the Guatemalan voters."

Fraser and Fenwick are now trying to play down the criticism of their inspection team because the uplift effort is getting mixed review in Guatemala.

Vietnam battling with Cambodia

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — The communist Vietnamese are now confronted, ironically, with a "Vietnam" of their own. Just as the United States became hopelessly entangled in Indochina, the Vietnamese are waging a war that cannot be won against dedicated Cambodian guerrilla fighters.

Accurate information about this mysterious, poorly reported conflict in Southeast Asia is hard to come by. But competent sources are convinced that the unsophisticated but fierce Khmer Rouge forces can never be totally defeated.

The Vietnamese, equipped with captured and abandoned U.S. weapons, have been able to defeat Cambodian troops in head-to-head combat. Vietnamese forces, our sources believe, could march through Cambodia and take the capital city of Phnom Penh in a day, if they wished.

They have wisely shown restraint. When the Khmer soldiers are driven from the battlefield, military experts told us, they resort to hit-and-run tactics that have proven very effective. Even the battle-hardened Vietnamese veterans are impressed with the pugnacity and high morale of their foe.

Vietnam is embarrassed over the war because it appears unseemly to be fighting with a neighbor, and a communist one at that. But the Vietnamese, our sources believe, would eventually like to create a unified Indochina with its neighbors as satellites.

Cambodian strongman Pol Pot is stubbornly opposed to Vietnamese domination. He is capitalizing on the centuries-old hostility his people have felt toward the Vietnamese, and is ignoring the displeasure expressed by the Red Chinese.

The fighting thus far has been largely confined to the jutting border area known as "Parrot's Beak." To the north and west, the Khmer Rouge are also battling resistance fighters operating out of the jungle borders of Thailand.

These insurgents, the Cambodians believe, are getting assistance and encouragement from the government of Thailand. According to our sources, however, there is no proof of this charge.

'ROO REVIEW: State Department cables reveal that the Australian government has been quietly pressuring the United States to lift its import ban on kangaroo products.

The Interior Department placed the kangaroo on the threatened species list and imposed an import ban in 1975. Australian companies have been trying to get the restrictions lifted ever since. Before the embargo, the Australians had traded millions of dollars worth of kangaroo skins and hides to the United States to be converted into shoes, fur coats, purses and other items.

If the ban is lifted, environmentalists fear the kangaroo will be in danger of becoming extinct. The Australian government, however, has privately expressed its commitment to kangaroo industry leaders to try to get the import ban lifted. A recent cable from Canberra to the State Department blasted the embargo as "an unjustified barrier to international trade."

When the State Department failed to react favorably, the Australians sent three diplomats to lobby the Interior Department. The State Department then relented and notified the Australians by cable that the Interior Department "is willing to reconsider the entire kangaroo question."

Footnote: Interior Department officials claim they are only carrying out the law by offering to consider a review. A spokesman at the Australian embassy told us we were "the last persons in the world that we want to speak to."

ART BUCHWALD Buchwald has his say at solving the coal strike

WASHINGTON — We've been seeing an awful lot of miners on television these nights. Without taking sides in the dispute, the one thing that comes across is that they're a tough breed and very free spirits. They don't like to be pushed around by anybody, including the government, the courts, the President of the United States or their own union leaders. If anyone orders them to do anything, they have no hesitation in telling them to "Stuff it."

Art Buchwald

It is for this reason that I do not believe invoking the Taft Hartley Act makes any sense in getting the coal miners working again. It was written to give everyone a cooling-off period in a major labor dispute. But in the case of the coal miners it's made them hotter than ever, and more determined to hold out against the mine operators.

I believe President Carter would be much further ahead of the game right now if he had gone on television last Thursday and announced that during the Taft Hartley period no miners would be permitted to go back to work. He should have said that, as President of the United States, he would see to it that not one ton of coal left any shaft of a union-operated mine, even if he had to use troops.

He also might have said that if the miners attempted to go to work without a contract, he would fine the unions $10,000 a day and ask the courts to hold them in contempt.

Can you just see what would have happened if Mr. Carter had said that? The miners would have been in high dudgeon.

They would have met in their union halls where their leaders would have broken the news to them.

"Carter says we can't mine coal unless we have a contract."

"Down with Carter."

"He says he's going to use the Taft Hartley Act to keep us out of the mines instead of going down into them."

"No President of the United States is going to tell us when we can or cannot mine coal. If we want to mine it, we'll mine."

"He says he'll use troops and federal marshals to keep us out."

"Let him try it. We'll break their heads with our pick axes if they won't let us down in the shafts."

"We're sick and tired of the government telling us what's good for us. If they don't want us to mine, we'll dig out so much coal they'll choke on it."

"They'll have to build 50 new railroads to haul it all away."

"We'll dump tons of coal on the White House lawn."

"Suppose our union president, Arnold Miller, says we can't go into the mines?"

"Then we'll dump him on the White House lawn with the coal."

"All right then, are we agreed that if the court upholds the President and says we can't mine coal, we all go back to the pits?"

"We're ready now, even before the court acts. Let's go into the mines and show them who is really running this country."

"Any guy who refuses to mine coal gets his tires blown out."

"Are we going back into the mines?"

"YESSSSSSSSSS!"

"When?"

"NOWWWWWWWWWWWWW!"

"Shout it so they can hear in the Oval Office!"

"NOWWWWWWWWWWWWW!"

That's what President Carter should have done. But his problem is he doesn't watch enough television.

Mark Russell says

Chief Justice Burger says that half of the nation's trial lawyers are unqualified. Not bad — that's still 75 percent better than Congress.

There's only one thing to do with the unqualified half — make them judges.

The bar association says that only one in five is not exactly a wizard in the courtroom. Why is it the one I always get?

I have a case still pending. The judge wants to dismiss it, but my lawyer wants to plea bargain.

Since attorneys can now advertise, my lawyer has his phone number on a wall at Sing Sing.

Coalfield confrontation unwanted

By OWEN ULLMANN Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite striking miners' overwhelming defiance of a back-to-work order, federal officials are trying to avoid a coalfield confrontation in the hope that negotiators are nearing a contract settlement that could end the 99-day coal strike.

"We don't plan any hasty or ill-conceived actions. We don't seek any confrontation," said Justice Department spokesman Mark Sheehan. "What we don't want to do is create any situation...that could interfere with the collective bargaining process."

Meanwhile, bargainers for the United Mine Workers and the coal industry planned to resume negotiations today amid hints they were closing in on a new agreement.

The two sides, which held intensive talks over the weekend, did not meet Monday but remained in telephone contact.

White House press secretary Jody Powell said some officials involved in negotiations were "at least cautiously optimistic" about putting together a settlement.

But a United Mine Workers spokesman said Monday that UMW President Arnold Miller had not yet summoned the union's bargaining council to Washington. The council must approve any contract settlement before it can be submitted to the rank-and-file for ratification.

The Carter administration obtained the back-to-work order under the Taft-Hartley Act last week, hoping it would allow at least some mines to resume production while bargaining continued.

Monday was the first real test of the court order, as strike-bound mines stood ready to reopen and federal marshals completed serving copies of the order to more than 800 UMW districts and locals.

But only a handful of the 160,000 striking miners in Appalachian and Midwestern coalfields obeyed the order. In most areas the number was too small to form maintenance crews, and companies simply sent the workers home.

In Keystone, W.Va., about 30 members of a 150-man shift showed up at 8 a.m. Monday and worked on maintenance. Less than a dozen showed up for the 4 p.m. shift, and they were sent home.

But in Pennsylvania, club-carrying pickets traveled in a 150-car caravan to shut down non-union mines.

"If any mines are open, they shut them down, then they move on," said state police Maj. Homer Redd. "We've had some rocks thrown, but most of it's heckling."

Some picketing — specifically forbidden by the court order — was reported in Colorado, Kentucky and West Virginia, although most areas were quiet.

In the face of almost total defiance of the order, administration officials said they remain hopeful that the miners gradually would return to their jobs.

"We never expected they would go back immediately," Sheehan said, adding that the administration has adopted a policy "of responsible restraint" while waiting to see if the union and industry can put together a settlement.

But, while trying to avoid a confrontation, Sheehan added, "We can't just turn the other way and ignore our law enforcement responsibilities."

Attorney General Griffin Bell reminded U.S. attorneys that they should "consider arrests of any persons threatening to interfere with coal miners returning to work" under the court order.

"I am also instructing them to be particularly alert to any action by union officials which could have the effect of discouraging miners from returning to work," Bell added. "Any such action in violation of the court order."

Moore chosen airport operator

ODESSA — The Ector County Commissioners approved on Monday the appointment of Joe Moore as the county's new airport operator.

Prior to approving Moore's 10-year lease at Schlemeyer Field with two five-year options, County Judge Gary Watkins and Commissioner Julian Pressly voiced concern that such a lengthy lease might result in tying the hands of future commissioners.

Moore said that he needed an initial 10-year lease on the operations — with option provisions — in order to secure new financing.

Moore said it was rare that financing is given for county airport operations without a 10-year initial lease. When pressed, Moore, a Pecos resident, admitted he had not talked with any banks in Odessa.

Wife of general out of hospital

ALAMOGORDO, N.M. (AP) — Kitty Bradley, wife of Army Gen. Omar Bradley, was treated and released at a Fort Bliss, Texas, hospital after the Rolls Royce she was driving overturned near Alamogordo Sunday night, a military spokesman said.

Mrs. Bradley, 55, was treated for minor bruises after her 1977 Silver Shadow overturned as she went around a curve on slick, icy U.S. 70 and left the roadway, the spokesman said.

She was taken to nearby Holloman Air Force Base, then transferred by helicopter to William Beaumont Hospital at Fort Bliss.

Mrs. Bradley's passenger, Maj. Peter Cadigan, an aide to Gen. Bradley, also was treated and released, the spokesman said. The vehicle was towed to El Paso, Texas, state police in Alamogordo said.

Hijacker surrenders after crewmen escape

DENVER, Colo. (AP) — A man who said he was trying to get cancer treatment hijacked a United Airlines jet over San Francisco Bay Monday, let all the passengers out in Oakland, Calif., then surrendered when the crewmen escaped by leaping from the cockpit after it landed in Denver.

The surrender came just after the FBI had decided to have the Boeing 727 refueled at Stapleton International Airport. The Federal Aviation Administration said the man first demanded to be flown to Memphis, Tenn., but later said he might want to go to Cuba.

All 68 passengers and the four flight attendants left the plane in Oakland, where the plane landed just a few minutes after leaving San Francisco for Seattle.

The FBI at first said the hijacker had let the crewmen go, but Ted Rosack, special agent in charge of the FBI's Denver office, said later that the crewmen escaped when the hijacker was in another section of the plane.

One of the men suffered a sprained ankle in the jump, but they were otherwise unharmed, Rosack said.

The hijacker was identified by the FBI as Clay Thomas Jr., 27, nicknamed "Buddy," an unemployed Army veteran who lives in Mountain View, Calif.

He was arraigned before U.S. Magistrate Royce D. Sickler Monday night and was charged with air piracy, which Sickler said carries a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison. Bond was set at $250,000, and Thomas was put in the custody of the U.S. marshal.

Thomas described police about what he himself to Sickler as "a considered to be a psychiatric case" and suspicious things going asked to see a on his neighborhood, psychiatrist.

A preliminary hearing was set for March 23. Police in Thomas' hometown say he has a police record, including a 1970 arrest for auto theft. Mountain View Police Lt. Gary Smith said Thomas has also filed frequent complaints with the

Dating between cadets causes few problems

By JOHN HILDEBRAND
Newsday

Civilians, over the years, have perfected their response to the coworker who dates the boss: the lifted eyebrow, the cool silence. But how to respond to a cadet who dates the company commander? That sort of question now confronts cadets and instructors, psychologists and administrators at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. Two summers ago, women enrolled for the first time at the 176-year-old institution, and 79 of them have now moved on to their second year. As "third-classmen" or sophomores, they are free to date other upperclass cadets, within certain limits. But opinion is split on whether they should.

"I'd say it's fairly common," said Donna Wright, 19, a second-year cadet from LONG Island, N.Y., who has dated other cadets this year. "And I would say that most cadets don't see anything wrong with it. Of course, some do, and usually, the minority is more vocal." "It's really frowned upon," said Martin Jimenez, 22, a third-year cadet from Albuquerque, N.M., who like Wright is assigned to Company A-2. "Peer pressure, that'd be one reason. And you know, guys really have to eat their words if they say they'll never date a girl (enrolled at the Point) and then they do. That's a great opening for their classmates to jump on them."

The most publicized relationship between a male and female cadet is that of Kevin Downey, 21, of LONG Island, and Cynthia Bianca, 19, of Saratoga Springs, N.Y. Last summer, Downey was told that he might be kicked out of the academy because he had accumulated too many demerits, including 110 for alleged "fraternization" with Bianca, who has since left the academy. Downey filed a court suit against the academy, but the Army agreed Friday to drop the disciplinary proceedings.

But the Downey-Bianca case was unusual, because Bianca was a first-year cadet, or "plebe." Plebes are expressly barred from informal socializing with upperclassmen, who are responsible for much of the disciplining of younger cadets. (The academy even spells out circumstances under which they may shake hands.) And such occurrences are rare. Since the beginning of September, only nine fraternization cases have resulted in demerits at West Point, according to a spokesman. Four of these cases involved male and female cadets; the remainder involved only males.

More common, and also more perplexing in some ways, is the dating command.

Small wonder, then, that some cadets should question their ability to date with cool detachment a steady date. The problem is made more complex by rotating assignments. A cadet who is one's equal the first semester may be one's squad commander the second. Some of the unwritten rules of conduct were described by an academy spokesman, Maj. Miguel Monteverde: "I think you'll find some unspecified kinds of things. For example, it would be very awkward for a cadet company commander to date a woman...within his company."

Some female cadets say that any dating between cadets is likely to be met with initial sarcasm, but that it can be overcome. Jennifer Johnson, 19, a second-year cadet from Phoenix, Ariz., who has been dating a senior since October, said, "At the beginning, we got a lot of comments, like 'Ohhhh, look at that. What's she going out with him for — his car?' That's because the seniors can drive their own cars...But it's gotten better, once they realize that two people really do like each other."

LIFESTYLE

between male and female upperclassmen. It is permitted, within the limits of military decorum that prohibits hand holding in most public places. It is not unusual for male and female cadets to meet for a few minutes after dinner, to get together for a weekend on-post shopping of a movie like "Looking for Mr. Goodbar." Some visit each other in their barracks rooms, with the doors left open, or join for a weekend leave on the Jersey Shore. They can also meet privately at the outdoor Flirtation Walk on the banks of the Hudson River, when the snow is not too deep or the mud too thick.

For many cadets, nevertheless, dating raises questions of personal conflict, not unlike those facing the civilian office manager who invites a subordinate of the opposite sex out to dinner. One West Point senior said that he and his girlfriend, a second-year cadet, waited for three months to go out on their first date and then dated only after they knew that they would not be assigned to the same unit.

The problem is this: Unlike civilian college students, West Point cadets are continually rating each other. Twice a year, for example, every third-year cadet rates every first- and second-year cadet within the same company. Meanwhile, regimental commanders rate their battalion commanders, battalion commanders rate their company commanders, and so forth down the line. Ratings cover a wide range of qualities. Cadets rated highly by their peers and by regular Army officers eventually get the choice assignments — such as the command of a cadet company. Cadets who rate low may find themselves as "snuffies," sergeants without a

A further complication is the attitude of male cadets toward women. While many have accepted the idea of women joining the corps, many others have remained openly skeptical. For the more conservative cadets, it was one thing to meet a busload of women from Vassar and escort them to a weekend dance. It was quite another to deal with women who wore the same gray-and-black uniforms that they did.

Testing by academy psychologists indicates that the average male cadet is much more skeptical of female officers than are regular Army officers. "My feeling, for one thing, is that the cadets have never been out in the real Army," said Robert Priest, a civilian research psychologist at the academy. "The cadets are very idealistic...so they'll adopt an old-guard attitude. Another thing is that cadets are under a lot of pressure. I think some feel threatened by women."

The Naval and Air Force Academies also ban dating between plebes and upperclassmen, as does the Merchant Marine Academy. However, a spokesman for the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo., Capt. Ron Bell, said that he saw little potential conflict in dating among upperclass cadets of different ranks. "After all," Bell said, "there's no restriction on dating between a general and a captain, of which I've known a couple."

Miss Tidwell re-elected Altrusa president

Mary Alice Tidwell was re-elected president when the Altrusa Club of Midland, Inc., met for a business session in the Midland Hilton. Other officers named were Myrtle Bearden, vice president; Mrs. Clay White, recording secretary; Mrs. Berry Dyer, corresponding secretary; Pam Johnson, treasurer. New directors are Marilyn Van Petten and Mrs. Guy Saunders. Hold-over directors are Mrs. L. G. Simmons and Mrs. Robert Cain Jr. Committee chairmen reporting included Mrs. E. E. Cunningham, who introduced and explained the new classification guide; Mrs. Van Petten, vocational services, who announced the club would be compiling and publishing a booklet containing guidelines for women, who have, through death or divorce, become heads of their households and need advice on insurance, legal, medical, tax and other similar matters. She stated the committee would be working with other civic agencies and that the booklet would also be published in Spanish. Mrs. J. P. H. McMullan Jr., community service, announced the club would participate again in "Christmas in April." Each year the club makes a contribution to the project, and this year will furnish complete lunches for 50 workers. Mrs. Larry

Grimm and Mrs. Loleta Guffey will be chairmen for the project. New-member awards were announced for Dollie Miller and Virginia Hoffman. Mrs. W. E. Stirman, international relations, announced the annual International Relations Dinner will be held at 7 p.m. March 23 at Midland Country Club. The hospitality committee will be in charge of arrangements. Mrs. Cain is chairman. The public is invited. Reservations may be made with Mrs. Cain or Miss Tidwell. Mrs. Stirman introduced Mrs. Lois Rogge, co-ordinator of English in grades four through eight in the Midland public schools. She discussed the Title I program, a federally-funded project to help emotionally disadvantaged children. Mrs. Rogge explained the assistant packets furnished for the volunteers needed to work with the children on a one-to-one basis. She noted there is a training program for parents and volunteers who would be interested in working with these students. Volunteers, Mrs. Rogge said, are asked to work with a student 30 minutes twice a week or 45 minutes once a week, and, since the school lunch periods are staggered, employed persons could work during their lunch hour. Emphasis is placed on reading problems, and Mrs. Rogge stated that reading problems cause other problems with the students, but many times other problems in the life of the student are the cause of the reading program. Persons wishing to assist with the program may contact Mrs. Rogge or Dr. James H. Mailey. Miss Tidwell welcomed Jolly Schram as a new member, and guests, Carol Reinert and Lisa Covington.

Elusive child learns to eavesdrop early

By ERMA BOMBECK

My kids couldn't wait until they walked. At eight months they were pulling themselves up to tables. At nine months they were teetering unsteadily from room to room. At 14 months, they were running away from home. When I called them in to take their baths, they were playing in the house in the next block. When I wanted them to help me unload groceries from the car, they were digging in a cave and couldn't hear me. When I called them to dinner they were on a raft in the middle of a major river. Through years of yelling varicose veins of the neck from shouting for them, I discovered only one sure-fire way to get them at your elbow...have a friend

"It isn't a matter of telling. It's just that this is big people's talk."
"You want me to grow up, don't you?"
"Not in one day."
"If you don't want me to listen, why don't you go someplace and talk where you can be alone?"
"We're sitting in a parked car now. Look, if you were talking to your friends and I just barged in and sat down in the middle of your conversation, what would happen?"
"You'd fall asleep."
Somehow, that elusive child who is never around when you want him has managed to eavesdrop on every conversation I've had.
"Why don't you come right out and send him packing?" asked Marge.
"He knows too much," I said slowly.

who dropped by to "talk."
I had a kid once safely tucked away for two weeks at camp. My friend Marge dropped in to tell me about Elaine's hysterectomy and before she got out the details, he parked himself between our coffee cups and said, "Dogs get fat after their operation. I hope poor Marge can hold the line."
"What's with Mary Worth?" asked my friend, amazed.
"Don't you have something to do?" I asked.
"Nope."
"Then go play."
"What'll I play with?"
"Try the $800 worth of deferred payments in your bedroom."
"The batteries are all burnt out. Why don't you want me to listen? I won't tell."

What price safety?

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — What price safety? Well, for Sam Lugash, it was a wad of $20 bills. Lugash, 72, was knocked to the ground by the pistol of an attacker and robbed of $700. Glendale police officer Ron Seeley said when he was hit, Lugash dropped a briefcase containing $700. As the attacker went for the briefcase, Seeley said, a 34-year-old Los Angeles woman saw what was going on and drove into action. "She crossed over the double yellow line and tried to run the suspect over," the officer said. "She told me she just missed him by inches." But in the confusion, the robber, who lost his glasses, took a shot at Lugash. Seeley said officers found no wound or bullet. "About 1 1/2 hours later, Lugash called up and said, 'Hey, I found your bullet,'" Seeley said. Lugash, Seeley said, had pulled up his shirt and looked inside his money pouch. The bullet was nestled in a wad of bills.

DEAR ABBY

Grandchildren always fighting for attention

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have three adorable grandchildren, ages 6, 8 and 9. I love them all dearly (and equally) but they are extremely jealous of each other, and there's always a fight for my attention when I visit them.

I am careful never to bring one a gift (even on birthdays) without bringing a gift for the other two. I am also very careful not to praise one too much in the presence of the others, and I never make comparisons.

However, the rivalry and jealousy persist. I'm sure other grannies have the same problem. Have you any suggestions?—TORN IN THREE

DEAR TORN: Sibling rivalry has been with us since Jacob and Esau (not to mention Cain and Abel), but you can minimize the competition by spending time with each child individually—instead of trying to divide yourself into three parts, like Gaul.

DEAR ABBY: It's getting so I hate to go out with my husband. He's 32 and I'm 31, and all he wants to do is go to X-rated movies and look for girls to pick up on the way home. He says he gets a real turn-on thinking about being with me and another woman.

We never have actually picked up a girl, but after every movie we just drive around, wasting baby-sitter money, looking for one.

I hate to say no to him because that gets his "poor me" attitude going and then he is unbearable.

He is a college-educated man working in a respected field. Does he need help or do I?—TURNED OFF

DEAR TURNED OFF: He definitely needs help. And if you go along with his kinky ideas, you do too.

DEAR ABBY: May I speak on behalf of a group of people who sometimes have difficulty speaking for themselves? The group I'm speaking of (and for) is usually sensitive, shy, insecure and gentle. Their problem? They are QUIET. They simply find it difficult to speak up in a crowd or to make small talk.

I just returned from a class I joined as part of my continuing battle to overcome this problem. While in class, someone embarrassed me by saying, "Gee, you're quiet!" I am aware of that fact, and commenting on it publicly is just as rude as saying to someone, "Gee, you talk a lot!"

Abby, please tell your readers that many quiet people have deeply rooted problems that they are trying hard to overcome. If people really want to help a quiet person, they should ask him a question, thus giving him a chance to talk. But never make an issue of his quietness.—SUFFERING (QUIETLY)

DEAR SUFFERING: Thanks for taking the time and trouble to speak out for the quiet ones.

CONFIDENTIAL TO TAMMY IN TORONTO: No matter what your past has been, you have a spotless future.

Noted cooking teacher will present program

Ailene Martin, famed for her cooking schools and television programs, will be the guest speaker for the Midland Country Club Ladies' Association's luncheon and program Friday in the clubhouse.

The social period will begin at 11:30 a.m. preceding the luncheon.

Ms. Martin is a well established cooking teacher in her native America and her "home away from home," France. She has studied with almost every notable personality in the world of cuisine. She has studied with the three "kings" of French cuisine, LaNotre, Paul Bocuse and Michele Guerard on the famed French Courmandise Tour. She also observed Guerard at his own famous spa for cuisine minceur, Eugenie les Bain.

She has studied with Simone Beck for several years and the two have become close friends. She also attended the historical Luberon College summer program in Provence taught by author, food and wine expert, Richard Olney, as well as attending the James Beard cooking series in Venice. She has attended classes at the Cordon Bleu in London and Paris and has studied at the highly publicized New Paris School, LaVarenne. She also was privileged to study with the late Michael Fields, and has attended private classes with Camille Cadiex, Madame D Unda and Edward Agopian.

For the depth and extensiveness of her study and knowledge, she remains a casual and lighthearted teacher, whose personal comments and "asides" make every class or demonstration memorable in their exuberance and fun.

Ms. Martin has given programs all over the United States, as well as making television appearances and maintaining cooking schools in Tulsa, Okla., the lake country of Michigan and in her 18th Century watermill in the Haute Savoie area of France. This summer she will direct the Luberon College's 1978 cooking series, "The Secrets of Great French Restaurants," and will teach a two-week series for 20 participants in her mill, "Moulin."

Boyhood obsession becomes eulogy writing career

DAVID LARSEN

The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES —

Years ago, when Jules Maitland was a boy, a funeral would sometimes be in progress at the mortuary he passed on the way home from school.

Maitland would sneak in and sit in the last row of the chapel. He liked to hear the music.

The boy has grown up now and he still goes to funerals. Lots of them. The reason is that he is a professional writer of eulogies.

"It started about two years ago when I was writing TV and movie scripts," Maitland recalled. "A friend's mother died and the family asked if I would compose a eulogy. I did and I had an actor read it.

"After the service the priest walked up and said: 'You ought to bottle that stuff.'"

Maitland did just that and formed a company here called Personal Words. For $50 he will put together a few kind thoughts about the deceased and for another $25 his partner, Stanley Johnson, will deliver them at the service.

They are averaging about five funerals a week.

Donn McKnight, owner of the A. M. Gramby Mortuary in Lomita, is a frequent client.

"Nowadays, a lot of people don't go to church," McKnight said. "When a person passes on, quite often a clergyman is called in who doesn't even know him. The funeral lacks a personal touch."

"Jules saw the emptiness and he fills a void. We tell families there is a different way to have a service."

That different way is from the pen of Maitland. And it is not necessarily maudlin.

"I once had a boss who was the world's worst businessman," he remembered. "At his funeral were people who had gone into bankruptcy because of him, and also creditors.

"I pointed out that he was a man who discovered that hisl have downslopes. I observed that he could stand in the middle of a flaming house and comment on what a beautiful view it was through the burnt roof."

"Afterward, people came up to me and said: 'That was Gene. You caught him.'"

Another client was the family of a man who enjoyed having his granddaughter come over and dance for him. So Maitland spoke of it in the eulogy, and the girl danced at the funeral.

For a man whose love in life was dogs, Maitland wrote of dogs, as two of the departed's Great Danes sat next to the coffin.

"Another guy had been building a cabin in the mountains when he died," Maitland went on. "I wrote of how it had been his dream and how his relatives and friends planned to finish it for him."

When the phone rings in the office of Personal Words and Maitland is asked to create something, he makes two calls: one to the mortuary for the hour and date of the service, the other to someone in the family for background on the person.

Then, using cassettes of humans for inspiration, he begins to scribble on a notepad. Within an hour or so he usually has on paper what he wants.

For a father who was an incorrigible poker player, Maitland quoted his daughter: "I remember going to sleep many a night with the sound in my ears of cards being slapped down on our kitchen table. Dad was playing his second favorite game — solitaire."

Although he doesn't have to, Maitland usually attends the funeral and listens as 50-year-old Stanley Johnson, a stage and screen performer, reads the lines.

"I try to deliver them with feeling," Johnson explained. "I don't want it to sound like items from a birdseed catalogue."

"I try to deliver them with feeling," Johnson explained. "I don't want it to sound like items from a birdseed catalogue."

"I try to deliver them with feeling," Johnson explained. "I don't want it to sound like items from a birdseed catalogue."

"And I never wear black. That's not the image we want."

The typical eulogy takes about eight minutes.

"A funeral," she replied, "is a way of saying thank you and good-bye."

Coffee prices continue to fall

By CHERYL DEBES
AP Business Writer

Most supermarket food prices keep climbing, but coffee is dropping and apparently will go even lower.

The idea of cheaper coffee may be hard to believe for shoppers who watched prices rise over two years from $1.27 to nearly $4 for a pound of America's most popular beverage.

But the latest federal figures show the average retail price down 12 percent, from a record $3.93 a pound last June to $3.47 in January.

The price now is down to about $3.40, and last week Folger's Coffee Co., the second-largest U.S. processor, cut wholesale prices by 15 cents, to $3.03 a pound. This foreshadows a further retail drop since store prices usually follow wholesale prices by three or four weeks.

Most coffee analysts think the price will continue to fall. Fred Gray, a U.S. Agriculture Department economist, says the retail price might be $2.25 a pound next winter.

"It's essentially a question of supply and demand," Gray said. "Americans are drinking less coffee, mainly because of the high prices. As a result, domestic roasters aren't importing as much."

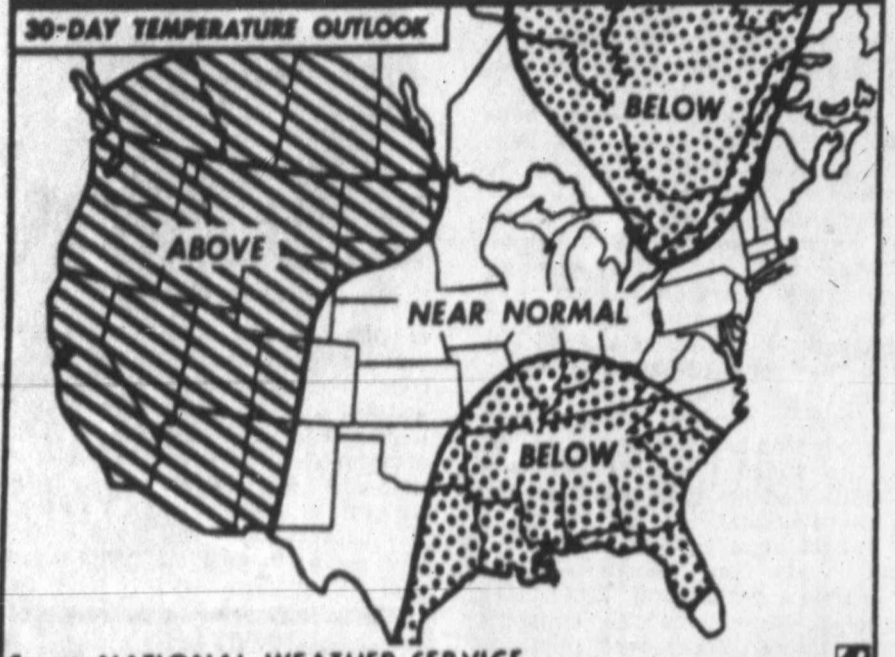

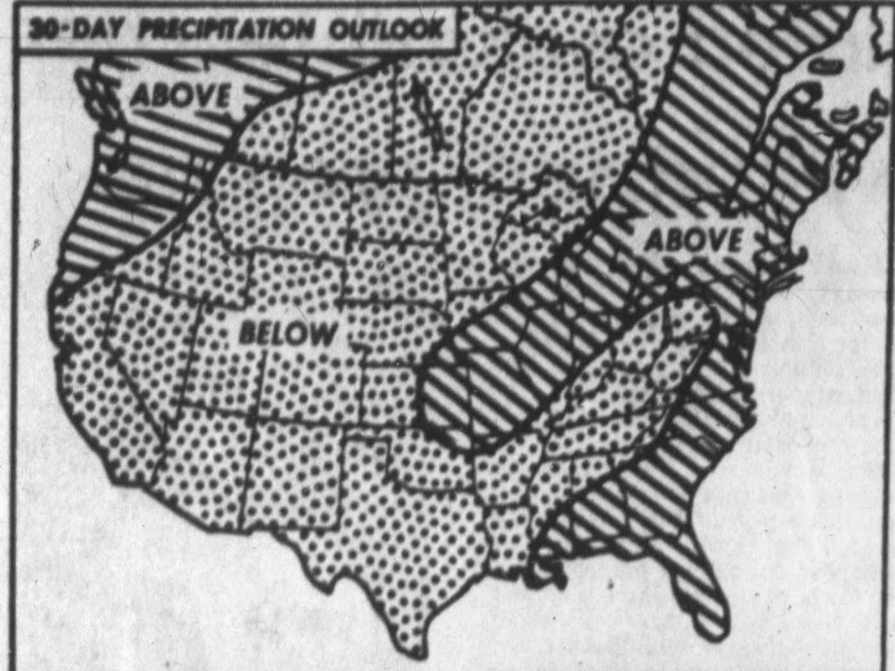

As analysts explain it, the price increases for coffee resulted from fears of a world shortage after a severe frost in Brazil in July 1975, when Americans were paying an average $1.27 a pound. Prices shot up, and then two factors set in to bring them down.

The first was consumer reaction. Last year, U.S. per capita coffee consumption dropped 27 percent — from 12.8 pounds to 9.4 pounds of beans — as many people switched to tea or soft drinks.

The second was that the predicted coffee shortage never occurred, and analysts now see prospects for a substantial recovery in world production, already up 11 per cent from last year. At first, Brazil and Colombia, the largest coffee-growing nations, tried to hold the price of green beans above $3 a pound. But then they saw the trend and let go. Beans now sell for under $2 a pound.

Passage of treaties looking dim in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is encountering new Senate dissatisfaction over the Panama Canal treaties despite the passage of two amendments the White House had hoped would ensure the pact's approval.

As Thursday's scheduled vote on the agreement guaranteeing the canal's neutrality neared, both treaty supporters and opponents were feverishly hunting votes.

And, with several previously uncommitted lawmakers declaring they would not support the treaties without further changes, prospects that had seemed bright for the White House over the weekend dimmed.

Unofficial counts showed treaty backers apparently still one or two votes short of the total needed to guarantee victory — 67 if all members were present — and the anti-treaty forces, needing 34 to block ratification, lacking from one to three.

Two senators, Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., and Wendell Ford, D-Ky., said Monday they would not vote for the pact without a provision "binding" Panama to keep the canal open to U.S. ships in the event of a strike.

Another, Sen. Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., said he would oppose the pact unless an amendment was added dealing with the United States' right to keep its forces permanently in Panama.

Their announcements appeared to offset any improved prospects for the agreements resulting from a "reservation" put forth Friday to permit talks on an agreement ensuring the U.S. right to maintain bases in Panama after turning over the canal in the year 2000.

The administration had hoped Friday's proposal would win over DeConcini and Ford. Both, however, said they wanted more solid assurances Panama could not shut down the canal.

DeConcini criticized the administration for "feeling they could push the treaties without giving anything other than the leadership amendments." Ford, asked what the chances were that the White House could meet his objections, replied, "slim to none."

One of those "leadership" amendments, spelling out "head of the line" privileges for U.S. ships in emergencies, passed 85-3 Monday. Afterward, Assistant Minority Leader Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, a leading treaty foe, said the proponents evidently had the needed two-thirds majority.

Meanwhile, Sen. William Roth, R-Del., joined treaty foes with an announcement that he regarded the leadership amendments as inadequate to guarantee the canal would remain open if the Panamanians took control.

Rail nationalization not favored by Adams

The Los Angeles Times

(The growing list of recent railway freight disasters continues to generate anxiety about the safety of those aboard trains and of residents of areas through which trains pass. Because many of the recent railroad accidents involved combustible freight, the public has begun to look to the railroads' regulating agency, the U.S. Department of Transportation, for action. In this article, U.S. Secretary of Transportation Brock Adams discusses what the government is doing to diminish the potential for such railroad disasters.)

After the tragic railway accidents in Tennessee and Florida, a reporter asked me if I favored nationalization of the nation's railroads.

I replied that I was not supporting nationalization of the railroads or their roadbeds because the U.S. government does not have the billions it would take to buy out the roadbeds and keep them all in good condition. The nation needs financially strong railroads with good management from top to bottom, but they should not be run from Washington, D.C.

The federal government is already spending much more money than in the past to help marginal railroads repair their roadbeds. Moreover, although railroads vary in both financial condition and adherence to safety rules, it must be remembered they constitute an interdependent industry.

Freight and passenger cars travel throughout the country on track owned by different railroads, some weak and some strong — a fact that suggests the industry can only be as strong as its weakest link.

In the past, when railroad safety regulations were not enforced as vigorously as they are today, some railroads in poor financial condition decided to defer maintenance on their track, as well as on their freight and passenger cars, preferring to risk a fine rather than doing the necessary repairs.

We are now witnessing the results of that neglect. With 7,000 to 8,000 derailments a year — many involving hazardous materials — the safety of our nation's railroads has become a matter of grave concern.

Obviously, more inspectors would help. More than 400 federal safety inspectors will soon be on the job if Congress approves the Department of Transportation's budget request of $24 million for rail safety, which includes the cost of adding about 100 new inspectors.

In an effort to ensure safety, the Department of Transportation has taken action when unsafe rail conditions are discovered. For example, the Federal Railroad Administration (FRA), a part of my department, recently ordered a 130-mile stretch of the Illinois Central Gulf in Missouri shut down for its failure to meet safety standards. This represented the first time in many years that track was ordered closed down for safety reasons. Immediately after the order, the railroad completed the necessary work.

In several instances, the movement of propane gas into sections of the Northeast was halted temporarily until dangerous rail conditions were repaired. Any shutdowns such as these cause severe economic hardship in an area. So rather than shut the railroads down, our inspectors try to find the defects and then we help the railroads with the funding to do the repairs.

Furthermore, we will be giving more attention to helping local communities respond to emergencies involving hazardous materials. The Department of Transportation is in the process of developing a training course to be offered through independent instructors to local police and fire departments, civil defense personnel and others.

Moreover, last October the Department of Transportation issued new safety regulations requiring that front and rear steel shields, special couplers and protective insulation be installed by December, 1981, on tank cars carrying hazardous materials. The refitting will cost at least $100 million and will take more than three years to complete, largely because existing industrial capacity will not permit it to be done sooner.

Although the tank car refitting will improve the railroads, overall safety and economic health vary from one railroad to another. Obviously, the better the financial condition of a railroad, the more likely it is to maintain its track and equipment. In Southern California where the Union Pacific, Santa Fe and Southern Pacific are still profitable, the track and roadbed are in better condition than in the Northeast or Midwest, where many railroads remain in poor financial condition or have become bankrupt.

Other examples of well-maintained railroads can be found in the Southern Railway and the Missouri Pacific. Where they are financially able, the railroads spend more for track and equipment maintenance. But those railroads with money problems have let their facilities deteriorate while using their revenues for operating expenses.

Levying fines when necessary, the FRA collected almost $3.5 million last year for safety violations, more than double the 1976 total. This policy will continue.

Sometimes I wonder what the national rail system would look like today if strict enforcement had been a long-term policy. Certainly, the railroads would be in much better shape. Perhaps they would also be financially stronger because, if it had been clear that deferred maintenance and casual observance of the safety regulations led to heavy fines, many railroads would have cut out unprofitable or marginal branch lines.

The deterioration of track, resulting from neglect by the railroads, and poor economic conditions, is most clearly seen in the Northeast and Midwest. In the Northeast, the Penn Central and six other bankrupt lines were reorganized into Conrail with the help of $2.1 billion in federal aid. In the Midwest, the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad recently went bankrupt, and other lines in the region are in financial trouble.

The Midwest situation does not call, however, for another Conrail. The Penn Central had been the dominant Northeast carrier. Manufacturers depended on it or another single line. We also had to worry about maintaining commuter service in major Eastern cities — which is not a Midwestern problem except in Chicago.

In the Midwest, a great deal of extra track could be eliminated or reduced in service, since many lines traveling through the same area were built in the Plains during the last century. For example, Iowa and Kansas each have more than 7,500 miles of track, compared to New York state with only 5,200 miles and California, with its large area, with just 7,000 miles of track. As much as 20 percent of Midwestern track may not be really needed.

But in both the Northeast and Midwest, a commonality of reasons has caused the depressed economic state of the railroads.

First, railroads are not permitted to charge rates which would allow them to earn a return sufficient to maintain their equipment. Moreover, they cannot abandon routes even if insufficient income is generated to maintain their track and equipment or to earn a reasonable profit.

Second, railroads face competition from trucks and barges which do not need to spend large amounts of money on maintaining highways or waterways. These largely unregulated carriers can set their own rates and drop routes when they want to, while the federal government through the Interstate Commerce Commission makes these decisions for the railroads.

Service to shippers must be improved. Although shippers are understandably concerned about price, reliability and careful handling of the goods, many railroads seem unconcerned or unaware of their customers' requirements.

Railroads must get as much as possible from their track, terminals, yards, repair shops, engines and cars.

Labor and management must find ways to compromise. Other industries and unions have been able to work together to make certain that private companies survive. If both parties take reasonable positions, the same result will happen in the railroad industry.

Finally, railroads must push harder for technological innovations.

Despite the importance of the nation's railroads, no colleges or universities offer any courses on railroad management or engineering. To attract bright, young people into the industry, the situation must change. If it is possible for the department to make funds available for such courses, we will do it.

But the railroads must provide scholarships and fellowships.

The railroads' problems are difficult, but curable if these strong internal measures are taken. With government and industry working together, I believe the railroads can provide safe and energy-saving transportation service for the nation.

Radioactive waste disposal becoming urgent in Hanford

The Washington Post

HANFORD RESERVATION, Wash. — The shell of a single white-framed building is all that remains of the community of 55,000 people who worked here during World War II to produce plutonium for atomic bombs.

Against a backdrop of bluffs on the eastern banks of the Columbia River, the lone building stands as a monument to the World War II production of plutonium, the first batch of which went into the bomb tested in the New Mexico desert and the second into the bomb dropped on the Japanese city of Nagasaki to end the war. All the other buildings were razed when the nearby city of Richland was built to house the people from the plutonium plants, the town of Hanford no longer exists.

(The bomb dropped on Hiroshima was a uranium bomb, supplied by Oak Ridge, (Tenn.) National Laboratory.)

A grimmer but less visible reminder of the dawn of the Nuclear Age also exists here, buried in a maze of underground steel tanks the waste of the nuclear and chemical processes that produced the plutonium for the two bombs remain radioactive after all these years.

The wastes of 35 years of plutonium production lying in the ground at the Hanford Reservation, make it the largest nuclear garbage dump in the world. There are 12 million gallons of liquid waste and another 38 million gallons of slurry stored below ground at Hanford. There is more radioactivity under the ground at Hanford than in all the debris that fell out from the 369 nuclear weapons tests in the atmosphere in the last 30 years.

Nowhere is the question of what to do with radioactive wastes posed in starker terms than it is at Hanford, where the wastes are not only vast but accumulating. Hanford is in microcosm what the nation's nuclear wastes will look like in 20 years. At Hanford, to borrow a phrase from former Redskins coach George Allen, the Future is Now.

For years, the question of permanent disposal of the waste was swept under the rug at Hanford. Programs to turn the waste into glass were begun and stopped. Money to find ways of permanent disposal never reached more than a trickle. Top priority was always production of plutonium.

No longer. The winds of change have finally reached the Hanford Reservation.

For the first time since the first pound of plutonium was produced here, plans are being hatched to do something with Hanford's radioactive wastes. Hanford might even turn out to be the repository for most if not all of the nation's nuclear garbage.

"The wastes at Hanford are liquid and they're close to the ground," said Roger Le Gassie, associate director for program analysis at the Department of Energy. "We don't want to leave them that way forever."

Basically, two disposal plans are being studied. One would involve leaving the wastes where they are, but beefing up the burial site to make it essentially permanent. The 149 storage tanks would all be "bermed," covered with tons of concrete and gravel to entomb the wastes for as long as 600 years.

"Putting gravel and concrete on top guarantees that future winds won't erode the soil cover over the tanks," said Frank Standerfer, assistant manager of the Richland Operations Office that runs the Hanford Reservation. "In other words, a guy couldn't go in there with a shovel and dig up any of the wastes even if he wanted to do it."

The alternative is to dig the waste up and move it, though not necessarily off the Hanford Reservation. Underlying the reservation are layers of basalt, a hard volcanic rock that might make a suitable encasement.

Geologists have already sunk test holes more than half a mile down, and they find evidence that the basaltic lava flows have been unchanged for 20 million years. This means it should be safe for permanent disposal of just about all the waste accumulating at Hanford.

The National Academy of Sciences suggested last week that Hanford tunnel into the nearby Rattlesnake Hills for suitable disposal grounds, but Hanford engineers worry that burial in the hills won't eliminate the "stumble factor" — someone in the future digging into the burial grounds by mistake. Engineers also worry that the hills won't give them the burial depth they want for permanent disposal of radioactive waste.

"You know, 2,500 feet below the Columbia River is a lot better than a few hundred feet above it," said D. J. Cockeram, vice president and general manager of the Rockwell International Atomic Division that operates Hanford for the Energy Department.

Pecos homers defeat Rebels

PECOS — Home runs by third baseman Charles Michaelis and centerfielder Bobby Mosby, sent the Lee Rebels to a 7-3 defeat at the hands of the Class AAA Pecos Eagles here Monday night in baseball action.

Michaelis blasted a pair of two-run homers and Mosby chipped in with a solo shot of his own off junior righthander Terry Willis.

The loss gives Coach Ernie Johnson's Rebels a 7-3 season record going into today's game with Monterey in Lubbock.

Willis scattered eight hits, but those three homers were too much to overcome. That and some great fielding by the Eagles, according to Johnson.

Lee took a 1-0 lead off Danny Garcia in the top of the second inning when after two were out, Chris Sapya and Doug Schmidt walked.

Pat Moore singled in Sapya, but the short rally ended when Todd Clements flew out to right.

Pecos matched the score with Mosby's homer in the bottom of the second.

The Rebels went in again in the top of the third inning when designated hitter Clay Calhoun started things off with a single. Van Horn walked and Willis moved the runners down on a sacrifice.

Steve Pitts also sacrificed and Tyler Alcorn knocked in the other run with a single.

Michaelis then rapped a two-run homer in the bottom of the third to tie the game, 3-3 and added another two-run clout in the fifth when the Eagles scored three runs.

Pecos added an insurance run in the sixth inning on a wild pitch.

Pitts worked Garcia for a walk in the fifth inning after two were out and Alcorn doubled, but the two runners died on base when Sapya flew out to left.

Pecos is now 3-2 on the year with the win and splits the two-game series with the Rebels. (Lee won in the Tall City, 6-1, last week).

Score by innings:
Midland Lee 012 000 0-3 5 2
Pecos 012 001 2-7 8 1
Terry Willis and Craig Van Horn; Danny Garcia and Renee Pitts; 2B-Tyler Alcorn (Lee); 1B-Charles Michaelis-2, Bobby Mosby (Pecos); WP-Garcia (1-0); LP-Willis (3-1).

Pack hosts Mustangs

The Midland Bulldogs entertain the Lubbock Coronado Mustangs today while the Lee Rebels play their second road game in two days in a date with the Lubbock Monterey Plainsmen in Lubbock.

Coach Larry Peel's Purple Pack takes a 3-5 mark into the game today at the Memorial Stadium diamond while Lee sports a 7-3 record after losing to the Class AAA Pecos Eagles, 7-3 Monday night in Pecos.

Midland has blown hot and cold so far, but wins over Snyder and Monterey prove that the Bulldogs can play with anybody on any given day.

Coronado dropped a doubleheader to Hobbs, N.M. over the weekend and stands 3-6 on the year coming into today's game with Midland.

Monterey stands 2-2 on the year with all four games coming in the Tournament of Champions in the Tall City over the past weekend.

The Plainsmen beat Midland Lee and El Paso Burges while losing to touring champion Duncanville and Midland High.

Leading the Bulldog hit parade are sophomore Tracy Gann, James Allen, Ricky Goode and Jimmy Zachry.

Gann is hitting the ball at a .400 clip and went on a hitting spree in the Tournament of Champions. Allen is hitting .368 while both Goode and Zachry own .348 averages. Joe Mowles is also hitting well with a .313 average on the average on the year.

Bartosh adds two aides to Lee staff

David Browning, a former Texas Tech tackle, and Eddie Wolski, who played high school ball at Coahoma and college ball at Angelo State, have been added to Coach Gil Bartosh's Midland Lee grid staff. It was announced by Midland Schools Athletic Director Sam Cox.

Browning, who played for the Red Raiders' 1970 Sunday Bowl team against Georgia Tech, comes to Lee from Lubbock Coronado, where he coached the offensive line last year.

Wolski graduated from ASU in 1969 with a BS in Physical Education and his most recent coaching stints were at Odessa Permian, as offensive and defensive line coach, and three years as head coach and athletic director at Shallowater.

BROWNING, 28, a three-year starter at Tech, captained the 1971 Red Raiders and received the Donny Anderson award. At Fort Worth Southwest High School from 1973 to 1975, nine of his linemen made all district and Southwest won two city and district championships while compiling a 41-8 record.

While at Coronado, seven linemen were named all district. Browning also coached the wrestling team.

Wolski played for Spike Dykes at Coahoma and was a member of the 1964 district champions. He played two years at Angelo State before injuries ended his career.

In addition to Shallowater and Permian coaching stints, the 31-year-old also coached at Alice, and Mexia. In addition to his football duties, he also was head track coach at Mexia and Shallowater and assistant basketball coach at Permian.

Is peace good for the Yanks?

By HAL BOCK

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — It has been a century or so since major league baseball teams began fleeing winter for the bone-thawing climate of the south and the rites of spring training. And, as long as it insists on snowing and freezing up north, you can expect the tradition to continue.

This is a wonderful time for baseball. It's a time for hope, a time for positive thinking, a time for harmony. And all three abound — yes, even the harmony — in this beach-front town that serves as the winter home of the often-turbulent New York Yankees.

Ball players in Yankee pinstripes have been working out winter kinks for a month now and life has been strangely peaceful so far. Oh, sure, there has been the occasional demand for more money, more contract years, or more of both from Sparky Lyle, who fears going stale in the overworked bullpen. But for the most part, serenity has settled on Yankeealand.

AS IF to prove how peaceful life is in the nest of the World Champions, ABC sent Good Morning America host David Hartman, on what once might have been baseball's most perilous assignment. Hartman's job was to get catcher Thurman Munson, captain of the team, and slugger Reggie Jackson, the World Series hero, to sit down for an interview. Together.

Now, if you were paying attention last year, you knew that it would not be the best idea to invite Thurman and Reggie to your next cocktail party. Congenial, they were not.

But that was last year, a world championship ago. This is a brand new spring and Munson and Jackson seem tuned in to the same wavelength. At least they were when Hartman talked with them.

These are two marvelously talented athletes cut from conflicting molds. Munson is an introvert, gruff, often irritable. Jackson is an outgoing, engaging personality who can charm you to pieces, if he feels like it.

NEITHER'S approach is wrong. Rather, it is right for them. They are, after all, individuals from different backgrounds. And they approach their business, this little boy's game that occupies their summers, differently.

It is a safe bet that the Yankees could never have achieved the title if one of them were not around in that turbulent season of '77. And if nothing else, Munson and Jackson gained one important edge from their summer of discontent and that is the mutual respect for each other's abilities on the baseball diamond.

Hartman asked Reggie about Munson and got a straight forward reply. "I think Thurman Munson is the best pressure player I've ever played with," Jackson said.

No ifs, ands or buts. Straight out, Hartman seemed surprised at the answer. Jackson continued:

"If I didn't feel that way, I would either dodge the question or wouldn't come back because he's straight forward to me and I'm straight forward to him, no matter what it is."

PERHAPS MUNSON, not always the most articulate Yankee, put his relationship with Jackson best. Hartman asked how the two stars felt about each other and Munson brought up the question of hate, which is mentioned so often when their names are linked. Hate, after all, is a pretty strong word.

"I think we're both too fortunate in life to hate anybody, to hate anything," the catcher said.

Think about that. The man said in this country who can't wait for some sunshine and warm weather so that they can get out and play this game just for the love of it. Think about the ones who can't. And then think about the Munsons and Jacksons, who are paid thousands upon thousands of dollars to play that very same game.

Thurman went on. "We've been given a talent to come out, we end up with the same ball club and we both like to play baseball. To say we have any malice or animosity toward each other, I think it's completely wrong."

IT ALSO would be wrong to say that genuine warmth exists between them. But there's nothing wrong with that. They march to different drummers and they realize it.

MARQUETTE'S JEROME Whitehead (54) nails Miami's John Shoemaker with an elbow which proved to be the turning point that saw the defending NCAA champions eliminated from the tournament. Marquette led by 10 at time. Whitehead was ejected and Coach Hank Raymonds was tagged with a technical foul which touched off Miami rally. (AP Laserphoto).

What was UH doing in NCAA?

In a desperation effort to quell the howls of outrage swelling from the parched throats of Weber State fans in West Texas, it seems only fair to ask what the University of Houston was doing in the NCAA playoffs?

The same question was asked after Arkansas dismantled Weber State before the horrified eyes of a TV audience Saturday.

After watching what Notre Dame did to Houston the next day, the appropriate solution would have been to have Houston and Weber State on TV against one another.

AND AFTER the Cougars' performance against the Irish, we'd have to take Houston against Weber, provided we got 30 points.

While Arkansas was advancing the prestige of the SWC a couple of years Saturday, Houston set it back 10 years.

The Cougars were so bad, it made any Texan worth his salt cringe with embarrassment. The only consolation was that there were very few Texans on the team. Most of the Cougars came from the Bahamas, Florida, New York or Iowa.

If the names hadn't been familiar, one would have suspected the Cougars were victims of a flu epidemic and Coach Guy Lewis had recruited a team of students to fulfill the tournament obligation.

NOW THAT Weber State fans have been appeased, for those who are cognizant of the tortuous trail the Cougars took to reach the NCAA, the question might more appropriately be, what happened to the SWC tournament champions between those breath-catching victories over Arkansas and Texas and Sunday?

The game figured to be one of the better matchups in the first round of the playoffs. Both teams had similar records. Notre Dame at 20-6 had played a far more taxing schedule and handed UCLA its only two defeats of the season.

Houston was 25-7, but five of the losses were by one point and, of course, that blazing finish indicated the Cougars were ready for bigger game.

As it turned out, Notre Dame, which has been a TV regular this year, never looked better and the Cougars left the court wondering if they had been rewarded or punished for winning the SWC tournament. It seems that the SWC's No. 1 team should have gotten something softer than the toughest-at-large the NCAA could find, but that's what Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton meant when he said it would take some NCAA victories to earn respect and better pairings in the post-season playoffs.

WATCHING HOUSTON lose Sunday, reminded us of last spring in Phoenix and the feeling we got at a Phoenix-Denver game.

Chances are we wouldn't have gotten to see Ira Terrell, the pride of the SWC the year before, if it hadn't been for the "must-lose" situation the Suns found themselves in.

It hadn't been a good year for Phoenix and the papers were emphasizing the fact that it would be to the Suns' advantage in the draft to lose.

In comparison to the smooth, fluid grace of Denver's David Thompson and the gung-ho, kamikaze abandon with which the Suns' other rookie, Ron Lee, played, Terrell looked like a gas pump on the court as play swirled around him.

On defense, he never raised a hand and on offense teammates' passes knocked his finger out of his ear or bounced off his chest. It was hard to believe this was the same Terrell we had seen in the state AAAA playoffs or read about in the SWC.

When questioned about Terrell's presence on an NBA roster, a Suns regular admitted Ira Terrell had no basketball background, but was a tremendous athlete and the Suns kept him around for his possible potential.

In reciting the incident to a SWC coach later, we softened it by noting that we probably caught Ira on an off night. "He couldn't be that bad."

The coach said, "No, you saw it the way it was. He never played defense in the SWC either."

BUTCH Lee, Marquette, was named AP College Basketball Player of the Year and received the Adolph Rupp trophy in recognition.

Big-Time segregation in NCAA is flopping

By DOUG TUCKER

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A plan to segregate big-time college football conferences and independents from the game's lesser lights is failing, the Associated Press has learned, with potentially ludicrous results.

Today marks the end of the 60-day period the NCAA's football-playing schools had for declaring a three-year commitment in divisions I-A or I-AA, which were created at the NCAA's convention in January.

A check by the AP discovered the five conferences and perhaps all 17 independents being urged to comprise the bulk of I-AA, the "minor league," are adamant in their decision to opt for big-time IA.

Designers of the restructuring plan hoped for roughly 80 members in I-A and 80 in I-AA. But now it appears I-

AA will contain as few as 28 or 30 members — comprised mostly of the Big Sky, Yankee, Ohio Valley and Southwestern athletic conferences. And a bulky I-A will contain as many as 130.

A SPOKESMAN said the NCAA would have no announcement of the divisional breakdown — for several days. And after the results are announced the schools will have another 30 days to change their minds.

But confusing Roman numerals aside, if they stick by their decisions several things are likely to happen:

—A relative handful of small football programs will begin reaping windfall television profits while another, larger group faces dwindling finances and uncertain futures.

—The 60-member College Football Association can be expected to discard its low profile. The CFA, chief spearcarrier for the big-time powers, may become more aggressive, launching renewed efforts to gain a measure of autonomy within the NCAA membership for the Notre Dames, Oklahoma, Penn States, etc.

The four-year, $118 million contract the NCAA signed with ABC-TV last spring lies at the heart of the issue.

The contract guaranteed 16 appearances each two years for a "tier group" of 57 schools — 17 independents who had not been on television the past three years, plus the Pacific Coast Athletic Conference, the Missouri Valley, Southern, Southland and Mid-America conferences.

UNDER THE restructuring plan of the NCAA Council, these guaranteed appearances were transferred to I-AA, where the "tier group" would presumably locate. For I-AA there is no guaranteed television. ABC is free to choose its games with only the continued stipulation that nobody can be on more than five times every two years.

Under the mathematical ratio used to figure the television guarantees, a division I-AA of around 28 members would be guaranteed about 10 regional appearances every two years, each with a payoff in the neighborhood of $450,000.

Thus, Boise State of the Big Sky and Vermont of the Yankee — two examples of schools which never before even glimpsed a television check — could be banking hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Schools like Tulsa of the Missouri Valley and Kent State, of the Mid-American may see a disappearance of already-slim TV revenue.

Other bonanzas await the small band in I-AA. A national championship tournament will kick another $750,000 or so into the television kitty, according to NCAA figures. ABC is under contract to telecast regionally at least two semifinal games and give nationwide exposure to the championship match.

"If things keep taking shape like this, you could say we're pretty happy all right," said Andrew T. Mooradian, executive director of the Yankee Conference.

NFL seeks to open up offense

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Defense may be the way you win games — but it's also a pretty good way to lose fans. So the National Football League plans to open up the offense a bit more in 1978.

The league's 28 owners were expected to vote today on a package of proposals to give quarterbacks more protection by slowing down the defensive charge and to give him better targets by limiting defensive tactics against his receivers.

To get these and other rule changes in the books, 21 owners have to approve. Commissioner Pete Rozelle repeatedly stressed at a late Monday news conference that the changes were only proposals — but it seemed unlikely they would be rejected. They were drawn up in 10 days of meetings by the Competition Committee — Cincinnati General Manager Paul Brown, Green Bay General Manager Coach Bart Starr, Cleveland GM Peter Hadhazy, Dallas President-General Manager Tex Schramm and Miami Coach Don Shula.

Rutgers, Indiana State heads NIT

By The Associated Press

All-American Larry Bird leads Indiana State against Rutgers tonight in the quarterfinals of the National Invitation Tournament, and both coaches are looking forward to it.

"We feel that Larry is the most complete player in the country," says Indiana State Coach Bob King. "He's not just a scorer. He does it all."

"It should be a super game," says Rutgers Coach Tom Young. "Bird's appearance at the Athletic Center will surely create added excitement."

The 6-foot-9 Bird leads Indiana State, 23-8, with averages of 30 points and 11 rebounds per game. He's shooting 53 percent from the field, 80 percent from the free throw line. He also leads the team in assists with 122 and is second in steals with 28.

RUTGERS, 22-6, has a 6-9 star of its own in James Bailey, who like Bird has one year of college eligibility left.

Bailey tops the Scarlet Knights with averages of 24 points and 9 rebounds per game and totals of 110 dunks, 64 blocked shots and 50 steals for the season.

The two will probably not go head-to-head very often, however, as Bird plays forward while Bailey is Rutgers' center.

Indiana State, which uses a one-guard offense, will have a size advantage with Bird, 6-11 DeCarsta Webster, 6-7 Harry Morgan and 6-8 Brad Miley. Rutgers has Bailey in the middle with 6-6 Hollis Copeland and 6-7 Abdel Anderson at the forwards.

Preacher tries, fails to resurrect mother

REEDS SPRING, Mo. (AP) — A preacher whose prayers over a freezer holding his mother failed to bring her back to life Sunday says he has until Easter to resurrect her.

"We have not given up, and we haven't lost heart," said evangelist Daniel Aaron Rogers. "People are still praying with us and standing with us in our faith. We're going to keep praying for at least another two weeks."

Earlier Sunday, he told about 500 persons gathered at a mortuary here that the two-hour attempt to bring his mother back from the dead had failed and "we don't know what went wrong."

The congregation, many of whom wept, moaned and prayed, waited in the chapel and sang gospel songs as the preachers prayed in an adjoining visitation room over the body of Gladys Rogers. About a third of the onlookers represented newspaper and radio and television stations.

Evangelist J.T. Williams of Pea Ridge, Ark., recruited by Rogers to help in the service, could be heard raising his voice in prayer. At one point, he shouted: "Oh, her eyes are moving... Thank you, Jesus!" Rogers later said he did not "personally" see any movement in his mother's eyes.

"Come out of there," urged Harold Bogan, an associate of Rogers' in Harrison, Ark.

"Raise her up," Rogers pleaded.

After more than an hour of pleading and praying, Williams emerged from the tiny room.

"We have tried everything Jesus told us to do, and we don't know what is wrong," he told those gathered in the chapel. "She has not risen from the dead."

About an hour later, Rogers appeared in the chapel and announced: "We have done everything we can think of and it hasn't worked. What we want to do is get back in our closet and pray some more."

After the service, the congregation was allowed to file past the freezer, which was hidden behind a large screen.

The ceremony culminated Rogers' month-long battle for custody of his mother's body and permission to take it from his Arkansas home to the Reeds Spring, Mo., mortuary.

Mrs. Rogers, 80, died Feb. 2 in Harrison, Ark., 25 miles south of this southwest Missouri town. Rogers packed her body in dry ice for six days, then had it placed in the freezer.

Rogers had said his mother would rise from the dead and give a sign that "the end of this age is near" because "Jesus commanded us to preach the gospel, heal the sick, raise the dead."

The congregation in the chapel — nearly matching this town's population of 280 — waited as the men emerged to preach, pray and, at one point, bring two members of the congregation into the room. Another 150 persons waited outside the mortuary.

Rogers said he may contact S. A. Makal, an Indonesia faith healer who says he has had a vision that Mrs. Rogers would be raised. He said he would like to bring Makal to Reeds Spring.

Rogers says he has told Missouri health officials he will either resurrect or bury his mother within two weeks.

Asked Sunday morning how he would feel if his mother was not raised from the dead, he said, "I can't anticipate that. I would be surprised, but I don't anticipate it."

Among the skeptical sightseers Sunday was Tina Carr of Branson, Mo.

"I came to see a miracle. But I want to know one thing. How do we know they haven't got an old hog frozen in that freezer?"

When that question was put to Rogers, he allowed two reporters to view the body. They said Mrs. Rogers, wearing a blue dress, was sitting in an upright position with her hands folded in front of her.

A PEACEFUL SETTING is created by a large red-orange sculpture located in a pool in front of the new Dallas City Hall. The sculpture was acquired for the city by the late Mrs. Mary (Billie) Marcus, wife of Neiman-Marcus chairman Stanley Marcus. Mrs. Marcus died in her sleep Friday. (AP Laserphoto)

Consumers prepare for battle

WASHINGTON — Since the death of the consumer agency bill last month in Congress, consumer advocates, congressional staffers and White House consumer office staffers have been drawing their wagons into a circle for the next fight.

The new battle will be on behalf of S-270, the public participation bill that would authorize federal agencies to provide funds to consumer interest groups to finance their participation in agency proceedings.

"Consumers are effectively shut out of agency actions, according to the Senate's own Government Affairs Committee," said Congresswatch's Mark Green. "Since Congress voted against an agency solution to this underrepresentation, it should now vote for a non-agency solution."

Green said, "Right now the federal government operationally subsidizes business interests in their representation with hundreds of millions of dollars in tax deductible legal fees to make their arguments — the least it can do is appropriate $10 million for consumer representation."

Green says another advantage of S-270 is that it is a "nonbureaucratic solution" to the problem. One of the major objections to the consumer agency bill was that it would create still another government agency at a time when nearly everyone agrees that the government needs more consolidation.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., is preparing the Judiciary Committee, which bottled up the bill last summer with an 8-8 vote every time it came up, to look at S-270 one more time.

The addition of Sen. Paul Hatfield to the committee to replace the late Sen. John L. McClellan, D-Ark., who had led the opposition, has given supporters what they hope is the extra vote to break the deadlock.

Several agencies, on their own initiative, have created consumer offices to fund some public participation, including the Federal Trade Commission, Environmental Protection Agency, Food and Drug Administration and the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

And one innovative proposal before the CPSC would have chain saw industry representatives, seeking to develop voluntary instead of mandatory safety standards, underwrite consumer representation at CPSC hearings.

"It is meaningless to talk of effective citizen involvement in government unless citizens have some means of competing with special interests on an equal basis," said Sen. Kennedy last August, when the Senate Judiciary Committee failed to report the bill by an 8-8 vote.

"We must establish a mechanism to insure that public viewpoints are expressed with equal technical and legal competence as those of business and industry," Kennedy continued.

After taking the king of hearts, West shifted to diamonds, hoping his partner would get the king and give him a ruff.

South took the king of diamonds, followed by the ace and ten of trumps, but the bad break prevented South from drawing trumps and staying in dummy for the diamonds.

Declarer led the ace of diamonds, discarding a club. West ruffed, cashed the ace of hearts and led a third heart to make dummy ruff with the queen of spades.

West still had a trump, and declarer was in dummy for the last time. Down two.

COMPLAINT
"We were cold for three notrump," South quickly complained. "I can't blame you," he added graciously. "Only a good player would bid it with your hand."

North was too busy defending his bidding to think of the play. South should discard a heart on the ace of diamonds. The heart in his own hand and lead a trump to dummy's queen. That draws trumps, and he can run the rest of the diamonds.

As dealer, you hold: S-Q103; H-Q5; D-AQJ108; C-852. What do you say?
ANSWER: Pass. You have 11 points in high cards and 1 point for the doubleton. That might be enough for an opening bid if you had your points in aces and kings, but not when you have 6 of your points in queens.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Massage doesn't prevent hair loss

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been losing a good deal of hair, and my hairdresser said that massage would help stop this. Is this true?—Estelle W.

Dear Estelle: According to skin and hair experts of the American Medical Assn., massage is of absolutely no value in preventing hair loss. In fact, it may make the individual hairs fall out faster, although it doesn't do any damage to the hair roots.

The same goes for those famous 100 strokes a day. Vigorous brushing is liable to break or split your hair. The best advice is to go easy on your hair and avoid any excessive manipulation.

And remember that you normally lose anywhere from 25 to 100 hairs a day, and these grow back in due course. If your loss is really excessive, the best thing to do is to check with your family doctor or dermatologist.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have read that you should have a "procto" with a regular physical examination, but my doctor has never given me one. Is it something I should ask him to include?—Adelaide H.

Dear Adelaide: According to the American Cancer Society, a "procto" is extremely important. The reason is that colon-rectum cancer is quite easy to cure if you get it at it early enough. And it is also one of the easiest cancers to detect. The proctosigmoidoscope—a procto for short—is a slim, lighted tube through which the doctor can examine the rectum and lower bowel up to a distance of about 12 inches. He can spot not only early cancerous growths but precancerous ones, too. And at an early stage, lesions can often be removed without major surgery.

Many doctors test a small sample of the stool for any trace of blood. The ACS, however, says that a routine procto examination should also be included in the annual physical examination of every man and woman over 40 as well—and that this one check might save more lives than any other step in the whole health examination. Colon-examination—just as no woman should be embarrassed at having a pap test. And if you have never had one, why not call up your doctor and see about having it fairly soon—without waiting until the time of the annual physical rolls around.

Transplants can hurt purse

By ROBERT WALLACE, Ed.D. Copley News Service

Doctor Wallace: I am 20 years old and I am almost entirely bald on the top of my head. I am considered handsome and have a good build but being bald has hindered my social life.

Wearing a hairpiece or shaving my head a la Kojak is out of the question. Can you please tell me how much it would cost to get a full hair transplant and if it hurts to have it done?—Sylvester, St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Sylvester: I'm told that it is painful to have a hair transplant operation. I'm also told that it costs about $4,000 which also could be very painful.

Doctor Wallace: I'm 16 and got my 15-year-old girl friend pregnant. She told her mother and had an abortion. Her brother and sister and my parents know nothing about it.

I really love her but she has chosen not to see me anymore. She doesn't realize how much she is hurting me by her actions.

You would not believe how many times I've tried to get back with her but to no avail.

Her birthday is coming up soon and I would like to send her flowers. Do you feel it would be appropriate?

Whenever I think of her, I feel guilty. —Terry, Anaheim, Calif.

Dear Terry: Yes, send her flowers for her birthday but don't try to see her again for some time.

Your girl friend has gone through great physical and emotional strain and it appears she needs time to recover. When and if she wants to see you again, you will be the first to know.

Doctor Wallace: My mom does not have one ounce of sales resistance. Every salesman or peddler who comes to our house goes away happy. Daddy has given up. He is still paying for an encyclopedia we never use.

I am getting married in six months and I have been carefully purchasing good quality items that will be necessary after we are married.

Last week a pots and pans salesman sold me $600 worth of pots and pans. She said they are for me and she paid $10 down and she will have monthly payments of $23 plus interest until they are paid for.

The pans are nice but I don't want them. What can I do? —P.R., Colorado Springs, Colo.

Dear P.R.: Call the company and tell them to cancel the order. Ask for a refund of the $10. If they don't refund the deposit, forget it.

For your protection follow up the call with a registered letter. Don't forget to thank mom for her thoughtfulness.

Questions may be sent to Dr. Robert Wallace, Copley News Service, in care of this newspaper. Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

California refiners say they're swimming in oil

The Los Angeles Times
LOS ANGELES — An oil glut has arrived in California. Pipelines are flowing. Tankers are arriving daily. Storage tanks are filling to the top.

But in a state where just a few years ago, in the aftermath of the Arab oil embargo, such a situation might have seemed like nirvana, the sudden oil deluge isn't sending anyone into second heaven.

Oil producers, refiners, and marketers are groaning under the Panama Canal to Eastern markets, partly because it is in the middle of a political dispute between Sacramento and Washington. So far it hasn't tried to cut prices here to dispose of the excess crude.

—Federal officials have stalled on allowing California producers to export some excess crude oil to Japan.

—Independent oil refiners are having to curtail their production of gasoline, which could lead to a shortage if there is no change in current trends. They can sell all they can produce, but each barrel of crude processed by the refinery also yields a certain amount of heavy fuel oil, and they are running out of places to store unsold fuel oil.

—Electric power utilities, which ordinarily would be eager to buy the fuel oil for use in their generating plants, have ample supplies of natural gas this winter, which they are using instead.

The glut, most analysts agree, is likely to be temporary, both here and around the world. By the late 1980s, oil supplies are widely expected to be tight again.

But that doesn't make the glut any easier for California oil producers to deal with. In fact, they say, without quick help from government regulators in Washington, the situation is due to get worse.

"The crisis is here now," said Joseph A. Helyer, vice president of the Independent Refiners Association of California. Gasoline output is down about 100,000 barrels a day because of the dropoff in refinery runs from 2.6 million barrels a day last fall to about 2 million barrels now.

"No one at the Department of Energy really understands the California problem," said James H. Woods, executive vice president of the California Independent Producers Association. "Even though we keep beating them over the head with our predicament, those Washington bureaucrats have awfully thick skulls."

As Woods sees it, the federal government has failed to recognize the impact Alaskan oil is having on California production at a time when the government says it is trying to reduce foreign oil imports.

Woods traces the problem California oil is in finding a market to "bureaucratic ineptness" in handling the complex federal entitlements program, under which refiners with access to low-cost domestic crude oil must make compensatory payments to refiners dependent on expensive foreign crude. The purpose is to equalize the cost of crude oil for all U.S. refiners and thus avoid giving certain companies and regions an unfair advantage.

But the entitlements program, which until recently relied on average oil prices, has worked to the disadvantage of California producers because their oil is heavier and more sulfur-laden. In January, the DOE changed the program to benefit one class of local oil production. More recently, on Feb. 23, the agency proposed to stimulate further the production of California crude oil by again altering the entitlements system.

The essential dilemma of the glut remains, however. With the California independents at the bottom of the pecking order in terms of oil supplies, they are most vulnerable to any price war or market struggle.

THE RACE IS ON to be the first oil company to drill an exploratory well in the Atlantic Ocean, and the Exxon Corp. appears in the lead. If all goes according to schedule, an Exxon drilling vessel, the Glomar Pacific, above, will arrive 95 miles east of Atlantic City, N. J., Saturday and begin drilling within two days, a company official said. (AP Laserphoto)

Discoveries, field stepouts, new oilers reported in WT counties

Enrich Oil Corp. of Abilene No. 1 Ellie B. Underwood Jr. and Enrich No. 1 J. P. Hord have been completed discoveries in Runnels County.

No. 1 Underwood, an upper Capps lime gas strike, finished for a calculated, absolute open flow of 3.2 million cubic feet of gas per day.

The well, seven miles south of Ballinger, completed through perforations from 3,480 to 3,485 feet after a 2,750-gallon acid treatment. Total depth is 4,050 feet and 4 1/2-inch casing is set on bottom.

The location is 2 1/2 miles south of the TJC (Capps gas and oil) field and 4,377 feet from south and 1,667 feet from west lines of section 333, T&NO survey.

NO. 1 HORD
Enrich No. 1 Hord, an upper Fry and discovery 1/2 mile southeast of the Deike (Geon and Fry) field, finished for a 24-hour flowing potential of 60 barrels of 42-gravity oil and 30 barrels of water, through an 18/64-inch choke. Gas-oil ratio was not reported.

Production is from the zone behind perforations from 4,356 to 4,366 feet after a 250-gallon acid wash and a 12,000-gallon fracture job.

Location is 660 feet from north and 500 feet from east lines of section 26, H. L. Bays survey No. 444 and three miles south of Wingate.

The 3,600-foot operation is 1,470 feet from north and 467 feet from east lines of section 47, block 11, H&GN survey and separated from the field by depleted producers.

SUTTON TESTS
William Periman of Houston announced locations for a pair of projects in the Shurley Ranch (Strawn and Canyon) area of Sutton County.

No. 1-131 Ida Cauthorn will be drilled 1 1/4 miles southeast of production and 933 feet from north and west lines of section 131, block C,

HE&WT survey. Ground elevation is 2,135 feet. Periman No. 1-35 Cauthorn is 3/4 mile south of production and 1,400 feet from north and 933 feet from east lines of section 135, block C, HE&WT survey.

The projects are 14 miles southwest of Sonora and contracted for 7,500-foot bottoms.

HNG PROJECT
HNG Oil Co. of Midland No. 1-43 Wade is to be drilled as a 2 1/2-mile northwest outpost to the southeast extension area of the Sawyer (Canyon gas) field in Sutton County.

It is 31 miles southeast of Sonora and 1,033 feet from north and 933 feet from west lines of section 43, block 7, TW&NG survey. It is slated for a 4,250-foot bottom. Ground elevation is 2,156 feet.

CROCKETT TEST
Methane Gas Co. of Dallas announced location for a 1 1/4-mile northwest outpost to the Adams-Baggett Ranch (Canyon sand gas) field in Crockett County.

Location is 1,796 feet from north and 467 feet from east lines of section 15, block U, T&P survey. The reef production is from 5,000 to 5,100 feet. The well originally produced at 5,990 feet.

RE-ENTRY SET
Amoco Production Co. will attempt recompletion as the second well from the Canyon reef in the Franklin multipay field of Stonewall County.

The project, No. 3-D T. A. Jean, is a former Ellenburger well 10 miles southwest of Aspermont.

Location is 1,796 feet from north and 467 feet from east lines of section 15, block U, T&P survey. The reef production is from 5,000 to 5,100 feet. The well originally produced at 5,990 feet.

BECKMAN ENTERPRISES, Inc., of Midland staked a pair of 3,200-foot Delaware wildcats in Loving County, 10 miles northeast of Orla.

The No. 1 Lindsay is 2,184 feet from north and 2,202 feet from east lines of section 1, block 57, T-1, T&P survey.

weight of excess supply, with the smaller, independent concerns suffering the brunt of the problem.

Consumers, meanwhile, are reaping few benefits from the oil surfeit, because — for a variety of reasons — there has been relatively little price cutting so far on gasoline and other oil products.

The oil glut is not unique to California. In fact, the entire industrialized world has more oil now than places to put it. The situation stems from a combination of factors: new production from Alaska, the North Sea and elsewhere, along with lower-than-expected demand because of reduced rates of economic growth in Europe and Japan.

In Saudi Arabia, the Arabian American Oil Co. (Aramco), jointly owned by four American oil companies and the Saudi government, has cut production to about 7.5 million barrels a day from 9 million.

"We're drowning in crude," says an executive of a major refinery on the East Coast.

But it is on the West Coast, and particularly in California, that the glut is greatest.

The output from the Alaska pipeline, opened last year, is jumping this month to 1.2 million barrels a day from 800,000 barrels earlier. At the same time, the federal government has increased substantially, to 120,000 barrels a day, the flow from its Elk Hills field in the state. There is plenty of foreign oil available as well.

The result has been a confusing series of developments, as producers struggle to cope with the excess supplies amid a tangle of complex and sometimes competing government regulatory programs. Among the developments:

—One oil company is shipping much of its new Alaskan crude (at a cost of about $2 a barrel) through the
