Joblessness at 10 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment nationwide hit 10.1 percent in September, the first time the double-digit plateau has been breached since America was emerging from the Great Depression in 1940, the government reported today.

After months of steadily rising joblessness, which eclipsed the previous post-World War II recession highs, the unemployment rate jumped 0.3 percentage point last month.

Behind that fractional rise, however, was the loss of 450,000 more jobs, said the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Some 11.3 million Americans were out of work in September, the bureau said. And an additional 1.6 million people, a record, fell into the government's "discouraged worker" category — those who have given up trying to find jobs.

The agency also reported that the number of Americans forced to accept part-time employment, for lack of better jobs opportunities, soared to 6.6 million, another record.

The latest jolt in the job picture, while anticipated by President Reagan, private economists and top business leaders, produced fresh howls of protest from organized labor and civil rights groups demanding a reversal of administration economic policies.

Today's grim unemployment report was certain to fuel new anti-Reagan rhetoric from Democrats campaigning in the fall congressional elections, now less than a month away.

As the report was being released, a group of protesters camped out on the front steps of the Labor Department.

The demonstrators, members of the activist, Washington-based Community for Creative Non-Violence, carried placards declaring, "Remember 'Death Valley Days' " — a reference to the television series Reagan once hosted — and "Thanks, Ron, You Brought Back the Good Old Days: 1929."

Several of the protesters chained themselves to the building's main door and security officers made no immediate attempt to dislodge them.

The 10.1 percent jobless rate was the highest since the nation registered an annual unemployment average of 14.6 percent in 1940.

With one in every 10 eligible people out of work in September, however, the jobless picture wasn't nearly as grim as in the depths of the Great Depression in 1933, when one in four was jobless. Then, the annual unemployment rate was 24.9 percent.

Within the various population categories last month, nonetheless, several unemployment records were set:

—Blue-collar workers suffered a 15.6 percent unemployment rate, a full percentage point gain from the previous month.

—Adult males, the traditional family bread-winners, saw their jobless rate leap from 8.9 percent to 9.6 percent.

—Black unemployment climbed from 18.8 percent to 20.2 percent.

—Full-time workers saw their unemployment rate jump from 9.6 percent to 10.1 percent.

—Joblessness among whites reached 9.0 percent, a record, up from 8.6 percent. Unemployment among teenagers fell slightly from 24 percent to 23.7 percent, due apparently to the reopening of schools. The jobless rate for adult women edged up from 8.2 percent to 8.3 percent, and, among Hispanics, the rate held steady at 14.6 percent.

The total number of Americans with jobs declined slightly to 99.7 million from the 99.8 million level of the previous two months. That was accompanied by a growth of 336,000 in the labor force.

Since the recession took hold of the economy in the late summer of 1981, the jobless rate has jumped 2.9 percentage points and some 3.7 million Americans have lost their jobs.

In a separate survey of non-agriculture payrolls, the bureau said employment plunged by 230,000 from August. In this category alone, nearly 2.4 million Americans have been thrown out of work since July 1981.

Song appeals to unemployed

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Five years and scores of factory closings after Johnny Paycheck's hit song "Take This Job and Shove It," audiences are responding to another country-western tune called "I Wish I Had A Job to Shove."

"It's a timely song," singer Rodney Lay said this week by telephone from Tulsa, Okla. "It was cut in March when I had no idea unemployment would peak at the time the song would. When it was first recorded, some people said it was a gimmicky record. I had no idea it would be this big."

Some of the lyrics say:

"I've always been a steady, hard-working kind.

"Not the kind for standing in some welfare line."

And:

"I wish they'd open that old factory in the morning.

"Let Momma put that lunch box in my hand. I'd turn those nuts and bolts with a whole lot of love."

After performing in high-unemployment areas like Seattle, Baltimore, Chicago and Philadelphia, Lay says he feels the song has reached the emotions of a struggling working class looking for a new deal.

"People are singing along with me; it's kind of nice," he said.

The song, written by Ronnie Rogers and B.R. Reynolds, is listed as No. 45 this week on the country music chart of Billboard Magazine, the music industry trade publication.

Reagan: A picture of optimism

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

Question: What can President Reagan do to put the most optimistic face on unemployment figures showing 10.1 percent — 11.3 million people — of the nation's work force without jobs before the November elections?

Answer: Head for a West Coast pier, with a docked container ship in the background, to sign a bill intended to increase U.S. exports and services abroad. The measure, according to the president, will also create "hundreds of thousands of jobs at virtually no cost to the taxpayer."

And that is just what the president planned to do today as the government released the September unemployment statistics, which most experts had predicted would top the politically sensitive 10 percent mark.

Reagan's aides arranged to have the president sign the export bill in the Long Beach, Calif., harbor today. The measure, originally introduced in 1980 by a Democratic congressman and endorsed by the Carter administration, was passed by Congress a week ago.

Throughout the week, the president has been preparing for bad news, with economists predicting that unemployment would rise above the August level of 9.8 percent.

The unemployment figures were the subject of much speculation as the release date approached. The president is reportedly told about them before the public, but deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Thursday afternoon Reagan had not yet gotten the word.

Asked why not, he said Reagan was "concerned but not curious."

Making his way West on Thursday, the president reminded his audience at a political rally in Reno, Nevada, that the Democrats controlled both houses of Congress and the White House in the four years before he took office.

"They had the whole enchilada," he said. "They controlled everything except inflation, interest rates, taxes and an economy that was on a toboggan slide."

Inflation and interest rates have dropped since Reagan became president in 1981, but unemployment has crept steadily upward from the 7.4 percent rate when he took office.

"Right now, we're all paying the penalty of (the) tragic excesses of the past," the president said. "Unfortunately, many are paying with their jobs. Nearly 11 million people are out of work. And you know, the worst of it is, it didn't have to be this way. If only the big spenders in Congress had shown some restraint. If only they would now."

Major gas, oil discovery made in Midland County

Texaco USA has made an important field discovery of natural gas and oil in Midland County, it was announced today by Alan R. McDaniel, division vice president in charge of the Midland producing division of Texaco USA.

The Number 4 C. Scharbauer 'D' well is located about three miles southwest of Midland and tested at a rate of 256,000 cubic feet of natural gas and 160 barrels of 43 degree API gravity oil a day, through a 14/64 inch choke from perforations between 11,156 and 11,190 feet in the Pennsylvanian Lower Atoka formation. Flowing tubing pressure was 250 pounds per square inch.

There is little Atoka production in Midland County. The nearest production to the Scharbauer D-4 is in the Bradford Ranch Field, six to seven miles southeast of the well.

"The discovery opens a new and potentially significant oil and gas play in this area of the prolific Permian Basin," McDaniel said. "This find could mark the first commercial level of production in this area from the Lower Atoka formation."

In the Midland Basin the Atoka formation ranges in thickness between 150 feet and 650 feet. It is a mixture of limestones and shales, typically dark in color. The formation can be difficult to develop. Some recent attempts to gain production from the Atoka near Midland have failed because of the difficulty.

Texaco is now producing oil and gas from the Devonian formation — older and deeper than the Atoka — at the company's Bryant-G Field, located about two miles southwest from the discovery well. A confirmation well, named Number 7C. Scharbauer 'D' is now being tested at a drill site less than 3/4 of a mile southwest of the Scharbauer 4. Additional drilling is planned to evaluate potential reserves of the new field.

Texaco owns both the discovery well and confirmation well and has under lease more than 23,000 acres in the area of discovery.

Tylenol maker receives threat of more poisonings

CHICAGO (AP) — A man sent a letter to the manufacturer of Extra-Strength Tylenol threatening more poisonings like those that killed seven people if a $1 million ransom wasn't paid, two Chicago newspapers reported today.

The FBI is taking the alleged extortion attempt seriously, and has asked a bank to turn over the records of one of its customers — a Chicago businessman and formerly successful stock broker who suffered recent financial "reverses," according to the Chicago Sun-Times and Chicago Tribune.

In other developments in the case Thursday, Chicago police said there was no apparent connection between the cyanide death of a student in Philadelphia and seven Chicago-area deaths from cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol last week.

The Sun-Times and the Tribune said today the FBI was investigating the extortion attempt against the maker of Extra-Strength Tylenol, formerly the nation's best-selling pain reliever, but it was not disclosed whether the letter was sent before last week's deaths.

McNeil Consumer Products Co., the maker of Tylenol products, announced Thursday that consumers who return their full or partially empty capsule bottles will receive coupons for an equivalent bottle of tablets, along with a check for their postage costs.

Israel withdraws evacuation demand

By The Associated Press

Israel scrapped a demand for immediate withdrawal of PLO forces still in Lebanon after the United States reportedly pressured it to compromise. But the Israelis insisted the guerrillas leave in a phased pullout along with the Israeli and Syrian armies.

At the same time, officials in Jerusalem said Thursday that Israeli forces would not complete their evacuation before the armies of Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization leave.

They also said the Israelis would not leave southern Lebanon without a security agreement with the Lebanese government.

The Maariv newspaper said Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government softened its terms in response to an appeal from Washington, where U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib is consulting with Reagan administration officials on efforts to rid Lebanon of all foreign armies.

Israel's ambassador to Washington, Moshe Arens, said Thursday that he thinks all foreign forces will leave Lebanon in three to four months. He spoke at a symposium of the Washington forum, but a State Department official said later that Arens' remarks were not based on any pullout agreement.

Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon was quoted on state radio as saying Israel would not pull out of a 25-mile-deep security zone in southern Lebanon until it completed a security agreement with the Lebanese government.

However, the broadcast said Sharon did not repeat Israel's previous insistence on a formal peace treaty with Lebanon.

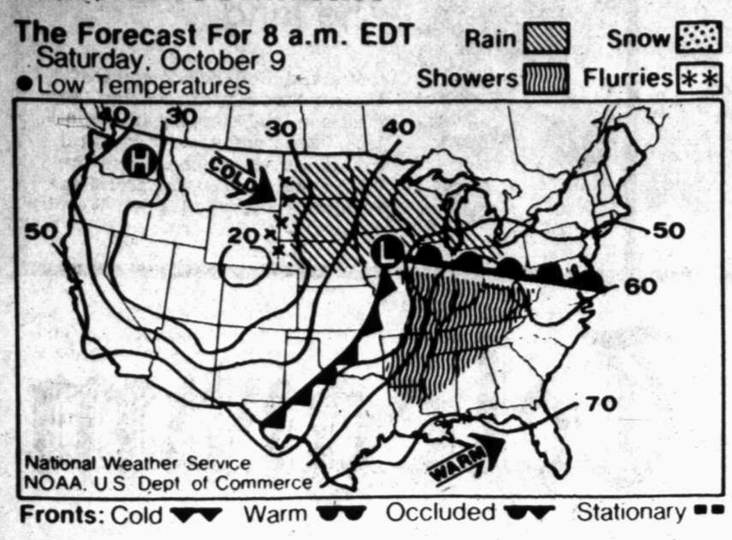

Syria has an estimated 30,000 soldiers in eastern Lebanon, remnants of a force that entered in 1976 under an Arab League mandate to police the armistice following Lebanon's 18-month Moslem-Christian civil war.

The PLO is believed to have 7,000-10,000 fighters remaining in eastern and northern Lebanon, areas outside the sweep of Israel's June 6 invasion. Thousands of PLO guerrillas were evacuated from west Beirut in August and September after a protracted Israeli siege.

Israel rolled 95,000 men into Lebanon to rout PLO forces it said threatened the Jewish state's northern frontier. It is not known how many Israeli soldiers remain in Lebanon.

In Beirut, Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan unveiled his new Cabinet Thursday, made up entirely of political newcomers. Wazzan ignored calls from members of Parliament that the new government draw from ranks of the legislature.

Begin denounces church burning

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Baptist Church of Jerusalem, a venerated house of prayer for Christian pilgrims and repeatedly a target of Jewish anti-missionary attacks, was burned to the ground by arsonists early today, authorities said.

Police and fire department officers said traces of kerosene were found in the wooden chapel in the residential Nahlaot quarter in Jerusalem's Jewish sector.

Dr. Robert Lindsey, the Oklahoma-born pastor of the church, said it would cost $1 million to rebuild the chapel, a gathering place for pilgrims and Jerusalem Christians since 1933.

In a statement, Prime Minister Menachem Begin called the burning "a malicious crime that should be condemned in every way possible."

Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek condemned it as comparable to synagogue burnings that have outraged Jews. Interior Minister Yosef Burg ordered a special police investigation.

No one claimed responsibility, but suspicion immediately fell on two groups — the militantly nationalist Kach movement founded by American Rabbi Meir Kahane, and a secretive anti-missionary sect of ultra-orthodox Jews based in the exclusively religious Mea Shearim quarter.

Contacted by phone for comment, Kahane said he did not understand why he was being asked about the fire, and hung up, saying,"I have nothing to say to you." No one could be reached for comment at the ultra-orthodox group's office.

Some ultra-Orthodox Jews have claimed the church engaged in missionary work, but Lindsey denied his church actively sought converts.

"It is a popular idea here that any evangelical is a missionary," Lindsey said.

Israelis are sensitive about Christian missionary activity in the Jewish state, but the government always has been mindful of its role as guardian of the major Christian holy sites and host to some 30 Christian denominations.

In 1978, the Begin government toughened its laws against missionaries, making it a criminal offense to offer money or other inducements to anyone for changing his religion. No religion was specified in the law.

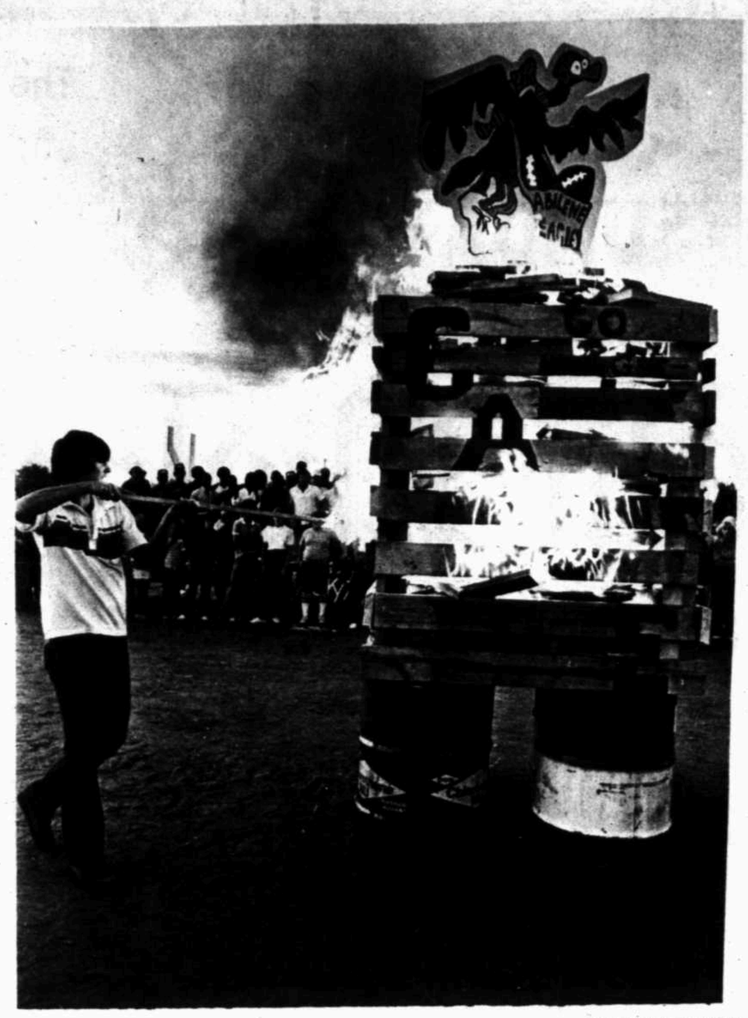

The fire was the among the worst cases in memory of anti-Christian activity. In the past decade there have been frequent incidents of window smashing and paint daubing at Christian institutions, and the Baptist center's bookstore was firebombed a few years ago.

Police spokesman Ziv Rotem said the blaze broke out about midnight (6 p.m. EDT) just after a routine squad car patrol passed the building. A neighbor, Cordelia Edwardson, who alerted the fire department, said "within two minutes the whole building was in flames."

Firefighters were able to save the church's bookstore in an adjoining building which Jewish extremists claim sells missionary material. The bookstore has been vandalized a dozen times in recent years.

Lindsey won international attention about 20 years ago when he crossed the former dividing line into east Jerusalem to bring back an Arab boy to his orphanage. The minister lost a leg in a land mine explosion during the rescue effort.

One of Jerusalem's most popular Christian leaders, Lindsey, 65, was asked to preach the sermon at services attended by former President Jimmy Carter on a 1979 visit to Jerusalem.

NOW convention opens in Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - The politics of the nation and of the women's movement are prime topics for the nearly 2,000 delegates gathered for the annual convention of the National Organization for Women that opens here today.

A major theme at the three-day meeting, which comes three months after the defeat of the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, will be how women can affect the congressional elections on Nov. 2 and in the future.

But the NOW elections — to pick a new president and other top officers — are of more immediate interest to the delegates than a congressional district race.

The future of the 220,000-member group is a key issue in the five-way balloting Saturday night that features two longtime NOW officials and feminist firebrand Sonia Johnson.

Electoral politics has been NOW's focus since the loss of the ERA on June 30. The constitutional amendment, passed by Congess in 1972, died because only 35 of the needed 38 states ratified it by the deadline.

UNDER OUTGOING NOW president Eleanor Smeal, the organization set up more than 80 political action committees to raise money and give it to candidates who support women's rights.

Even though the fund-raising goal is $3 million, Ms. Smeal does not expect major breakthroughs on the national level.

"I don't envision any total breakthrough in the House and Senate," she said in a recent interview, although she said she is pleased that more women candidates than ever are running.

But NOW does not simply support women candidates over men, Ms. Smeal said. Its endorsements are based on the candidate's stands.

In New York, for example, NOW endorsed incumbent Sen. Daniel Patrick Monyihan over Republican Florence Sullivan, in part because of her opposition to abortion.

At the state level, NOW is attempting to defeat the male legislators who helped beat the ERA, particularly in the crucial states of Florida and Illinois. In Florida for example, 14 of the state Senate candidates and 39 of the state House candidates have been endorsed by NOW.

AND NOW IS GOING to invest in the future, Ms. Smeal said, recruiting and encouraging good candidates to run.

"There is a shortage of candidates out there that we could give the kind of support that the issues deserve," she said.

In the NOW elections at the convention, Judy Goldsmith, one of two NOW vice presidents, is said to have Ms. Smeal's endorsement for the top post, although Ms. Smeal will not confirm it. Ms. Goldsmith, a longtime NOW activist from Wisconsin, worked closely with Ms. Smeal in the past 18 months.

The NOW executive board, at Ms. Smeal's urging, imposed a gag order forbidding organization officers from discussing the election with news organizations prior to the start of the convention.

Jane Wells-Schooley, the second NOW vice president, is also seeking the top spot. Her work as an organization leader has concentrated on fighting anti-abortion legislation, fighting for gay rights and other NOW activities now directly related to the ERA.

Ms. Johnson, 46, the only one of the candidates who is well-known nationally, came to public attention for her fight with the Mormon Church, which opposes the ERA. She was eventually excommunicated from the church for her activism.

ALL THREE CANDIDATES favor continuing the political activism of NOW, although just how much emphasis varies somewhat.

Two other women are running for the top spot, although NOW delegates said they appear to be trailing the top three. Mary McQuaid, 32, a former Oklahoma state NOW coordinator, and Ann Lang, a member of NOW's political action committee board, do not seem to have as widespread support as the other three.

But the NOW balloting is a complicated preferential system, in which all the delegates list their choices in order - 1 through 5. In a primary-like fashion, the trailing candidates are eliminated and their votes apportioned to the leaders on the basis of the delegate's preference list until one candidate receives a majority. Thus, being a frequent second choice could be a key to winning.

Mother Nature rewards area with rain

This morning's long-awaited showers, finally bestowed upon a dry Permian Basin by Mother Nature who provoked Midlanders all week with a tempting 20 percent chance of rain, pushed the yearly total above Midland's normal amount.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the 0.80 of an inch recorded by 7:30 a.m. had increased the total precipitation for the year to 12.42 inches. Normal amount for this time of year is 11.12 inches of rain. As it now stands, the rainfall is only 0.08 of an inch from the normal rainfall for the end of October.

According to spokesmen at area sheriff departments, rainfall ranged from a trace in Andrews to 0.75 and 1.25 inches recorded in different parts of Big Spring.

The forecast calls for decreasing cloudiness tonight and much cooler temperatures with the mercury dropping down into the middle 40s. Saturday should be a beautiful day with fair skies and mild temperatures expected to reach only into the upper 70s.

Winds should be westerly at 15-20 mph tonight, shifting to northwesterly at 15-25 mph and gusty Saturday.

Thursday's high of 89 was 10 degrees below the record high of 99, set for that date in 1979. The overnight low of 66 was over 30 degrees above the record low temperature of 33, set in 1976.

LTV Corp. says it will finance statewide broadcast of debates

DALLAS (SWN) — The LTV Corporation announced today it will underwrite the first statewide telecast in Texas of a live political debate featuring candidates for governor, lieutenant governor and state treasurer.

The 2-hour debate will be aired Saturday, Oct. 16, 8-10 p.m., on all 11 public television stations in Texas. Produced by KERA-TV, Dallas, the program is part of the station's "Texas Campaign '82" series. It will be broadcast live via satellite to other parts of the state.

The special program will give Texas voters their only chance to see candidates for major statewide offices appear face-to-face with their opponents. The program will include debate segments, as well as questions from a panel of prominent political journalists.

Participating in the debates will be gubernatorial candidates incumbent William P. Clements, Jr. and Democrat Mark White; lieutenant governor candidates incumbent Bill Hobby and Republican George W. Strake, Jr.; and three candidates for state treasurer — Libertarian Alma Kucymbala, Democrat Ann Richards and Republican Allen Clark. The Citizens Party gubernatorial candidate, Bob Poteet, will be seen in a separate interview segment.

LTV, a Dallas-based diversified operating company involved in steel, energy products, aerospace/defense and ocean shipping, is the sole underwriter of the Oct. 16 program.

LTV said its grant to underwrite the history-making telecast will give candidates an opportunity to speak directly to the public to fully explain their stands on major issues, and will give voters the chance to see candidates in action, hear their views and decide how to vote.

The program will be carried live by television stations KERA, Dallas; KUHT, Houston; KLRU, Austin; KAMU, College Station; KLRN, San Antonio; KEDT, Corpus Christi; KTXT, Lubbock; KCOS, El Paso; KIDZ, Wichita Falls; KNCT, Killeen; and KZLN, San Benito.

Midlanders may get to vote on legalizing bingo

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midlanders may have the option of legalizing bingo or deeming it still an illegal gambling game Jan. 15 if 1,894 of the 3,038 signatures on a petition calling for a local-option bingo election are valid.

"If it makes the ballot, we're going to do all we can to get it passed," Jack Leonard, commander of the 750-member Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7208 in Midland, said Thursday afternoon after he had submitted the petition to Midland County Judge Bill Ahders.

Ahders will turn the list over to Elections Administrator Janeice Builta who will verify if the signatures are those of registered voters.

State law requires that a special election may be called if signatures equivalent to 10 percent of the votes cast in the last gubernatorial election are submitted via petition. In the 1980 governor's race, 18,939 Midlanders cast ballots.

Members of the VFW and other veterans and fraternal organizations who have played bingo to raise funds have been collecting signatures since July.

Leonard's Tall City VFW post and some other fraternal and veterans groups had been playing bingo until Oct. 23, when State Comptroller Bob Bullock's "Raiders" barged into the VFW Hall in southeast Midland, broke up the bingo game, and took names of the approximately 150 players and eight operators. No charges have been filed.

Midland County Grand Jury is to consider any evidence against the operators. Under state law, operating a bingo parlor is a third-degree felony, which is punishable by a two- to 10-year prison sentence and a fine up to $5,000.

"We never looked at it (bingo) as gambling," Leonard said after he had turned the petition over to the judge. "We just called it 'bingo,' and I don't think the players realized it was (gambling), too. And it certainly wasn't taking no groceries off the table." Players paid from $2 to $5 for sets of bingo cards at the VFW Hall; top prize money per individual was $500 per game.

In 1980, a Texas Constitutional amendment authorized the Texas Bingo Enabling Act. Beginning last Jan. 16, this allowed each city, precinct or county in Texas to hold local elections to legalize the otherwise illegal game. Once approved, bingo games only can be operated by non-profit organizations, and proceeds must be given to charity. Organizations which may be granted license to operate the game include religious societies, fraternal and veterans organizations, volunteer fire departments, and groups which support medical research or treatment programs.

Leonard, who noted that the VFW has been playing bingo for charity since the Tall City veterans group was chartered in 1970, said that 70 percent of the funds are given to charitable groups, such as orphanages and hospitals.

"It (Bullock's raid) just stopped all of our fund-raising," said Leonard. "I'll sure be glad when we get bingo back, so we can help these people."

In the meantime, the VFW is serving breakfast, dinner and supper daily in an effort to raise funds for its charities.

"It's all volunteer work," Leonard said. "It's just a group of people that volunteer to do things, and we're all veterans of foreign wars."

Charity work the VFW does includes handouts to transients.

"When we come across transient people, we buy them a tank of gas, some food" to help them along, Leonard said. "And there's been a lot of transients since the boom."

"Everybody knows we sure had a fair game," said Leonard, a 58-year-old veterans of the U.S. Army Air Corps. "We wouldn't have it any other way.",

"It (Bullock's raid) stopped all of our fund-raising. I'll sure be glad when we get bingo back, so we can help these people."

Police seek shooting suspects

Police are looking for two suspects in an early morning shooting that left a southside man in critical condition at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Louis Cruz Arreguin, 43, of 1004 S. Dakota, was shot several times with a small caliber revolver outside the Dog House Bar, 307 S. Mineola, about 1:30 a.m., according to police.

Arreguin was shot in the back, abdomen and chest. Police said two Amarillo men, one who was just released from prison, are being sought for questioning in the case.

Also under investigation today is the reported armed robbery of McLoyd's liquor store at 1801 S. Big Spring St. A clerk told officers a man walked into the establishment about 8:10 p.m. Thursday and left with an undisclosed amount of cash after brandishing a small caliber revolver.

He was described as white, in his 20s, about 5 feet, 10 inches tall, having brown eyes and brown hair, and wearing a brown shirt and blue jeans.

Seven gas ranges and a Kenmore dishwasher worth a total of $2,675 were reported taken in burglaries of several homes under construction near the 4400 block of Palmer Drive. The break-ins occurred during the past month, police were told.

Jack O. James of 1200 Alpine reported his home was broken into Thursday. Taken were a fur coat, stereo equpment and a camera valued at a total of $1,000. A window was broken to gain entry.

Woman in hospital after traffic mishap

ODESSA — An Odessa woman is listed in critical condition at Medical Center Hospital today after a traffic accident police say was caused when she kissed the driver of the car in which she was riding.

Daphne Carrasco, 20, was in MCH's critical care unit this morning with undetermined injuries, according to police, who said a 1977 Mazda driven by Richard A. Castello, 19, of Odessa, hit a utility pole in the 1800 block of East 8th Street shortly after 2 a.m.

Police said Castello, who was released following emergency treatment, lost control of the vehicle when Carrasco leaned over and kissed him. The car jumped a curb and slammed into the pole.

National health center examines Midland Hispanics

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

National Center for Health Statistics officials threw open the doors to diagnostic medicine in miniature Thursday, embarking on the physical examination portion of Midland's participation in the Hispanic Health and Nutrition Examination Study.

Ramon Rivera, coordinator for the study, escorted interested Midlanders through a maze of medical examination and testing cubicles inside three interconnected trailers parked at 1003 S. Midkiff Rd. There, NCHS employees will study more than 400 Hispanics from Midland and Glasscock counties as part of the first extensive health study of Hispanics — the country's fastest growing minority group.

U.S. Public Health Department officials are conducting similar tests in 30 randomly selected areas of the Southwest in an attempt to gain reliable health statistics and determine the health needs of Mexican-Americans, Puerto Ricans, Cubans. Officials expect more than 16,000 Hispanics to take part before the study is complete.

Rivera said about 435 Midlanders are scheduled for examinations, enough to keep about 25-30 NCHS employees busy through November. He said the examinees were obtained after conducting hundreds of interviews in randomly selected areas of the two counties. Examinations will be conducted in other Texas cities, including Beeville, Brownsville, El Paso, Houston and San Antonio.

"At this point in time, it's a pretty good response," said Rivera, as he led a tour group through the trailers, explaining the path followed during a typical, three-hour long examination.

Participants are quizzed on their eating habits and consumption of medicine. Dental and hearing exams are conducted. Eye tests are performed with the aid of a mirror, to approximate the necessary distance between patient and chart in the confines of the cozy cubicles.

Precise body measurements are recorded, lab tests completed and X-rays are taken and developed as the subject proceeds through the exam. Finally, doctors perform a complete physical examination.

Rivera said the testing will continue an average of 11 hours per day for five and sometimes six days a week. When the Midland work is completed, he said they will take their traveling medicine show on the road once again.

Survey results could be published by 1984, he said, when U.S. health officials may be better able to assess the health problems facing more than 14.5 million Hispanics, representing 7 percent of the country's population.

Dance not for elementary

The Greenwood High School Student Council will host a homecoming dance only for high school students, junior high students and adults from 10:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. following the football game tonight. Elementary students are not invited, as reported in information received earlier by the Reporter-Telegram.

An admission fee will be charged and no jeans will be allowed.

Dinosaur eggs studied in hopes of solving evolution riddle

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PEKING — When he was an 18-year-old geology student, Zhao Zhikui listened with fascination as a professor described the Mesozoic world of dinosaurs, some of which were small, delicate creatures and others the biggest beasts the earth has seen, and he wondered why they had disappeared so abruptly from their lush habitats about 65 million years ago.

Today, Zhao is 46 and a senior researcher at the Chinese Academy of Sciences' Institute of Vetebrate Paleontology and Paleoanthropology, and he still wonders why.

"This is still a major riddle of evolution," he said.

"Why did the dinosaurs die out? And, at the same time, it is one of the most fundamental questions about the history of Earth. If science can answer this, we would learn not only about the past but what possibly could happen in the future."

The answer is to be found, at least in part, in the dinosaurs' eggs, Zhao believes.

"THE SHELLS got thinner and thinner, with less and less calcium to harden them, until they reached the point where the shells simply could not protect the eggs until they hatched," Zhao said.

That suggests significant changes in the dinosaurs' diet and thus in their environment, particularly the climate, he continued, "but that is about as far as we can take it for now."

But that is enough for Zhao and other Chinese scientists to dispute as "totally speculative" suggestions that dinosaurs became extinct through a "great cosmic event," such as a solar or supernova explosion, a collision of planets, a huge meteorite crashing into Earth or a tremendous volcanic eruption.

"While there are bits and pieces of evidence to support these Western theories, they seem to us to be mostly science fiction," said Dong Qiming, another senior researcher at the paleontology institute here. "I know such theories are fashionable but they simply do not fit the facts."

One American scientist, for example, has argued that giant meteorites hit the Earth with such force that they caused widespread volcanic eruptions whose clouds of ash prevented the plant growth on which the dinosaurs depended, directly or indirectly, for food.

Chinese scientists, however, have found no evidence of either the meteorites or volcanic eruptions and can see from their studies a steady growth of both plant and animal life, Dong said.

"WE DO not discount environmental changes, not at all," he said, "but we do insist on scientific evidence to establish that they occurred and explain why?"

Chinese research into the life and times of the dinosaur is of considerable importance because China has fossils from more than 100 different species of dinosaurs, some found nowhere else, nearly 500 eggs from 40 of those species and a large amount of evidence in the dinosaurs' habitats. Each year, more fossils are excavated — an area in the southwestern Chinese province of Sichuan has yielded more than 200 large packing crates of dinosaur bones in the last two years — and field research is being stepped up.

"China is one vast cemetery for dinosaurs," Dong said. "As a continent, Asia emerged earlier and was never submerged again, as were North America and Western Europe, so we have continuous strata from bottom to top, a continuous record of geological formation. That helps to chart the dinosaurs' development without a break."

The Chinese began finding and examining dinosaur bones more than 3,000 years ago — they are the "dragon bones" of Chinese legends and traditional Chinese medicine — but formal research began only 50 years ago, after foreign scientists trained Chinese assistants.

"Some of the greatest finds of dinosaur fossils were made by foreigners working in China," said Zheng Jiajian, another researcher at the paleontology institute, "but they took them away to America, Sweden, the Soviet Union. In the last 30 years, however, we have found hundreds — actually thousands — of fossils, including a number of whole dinosaur skeletons, and hundreds of eggs. This gives us the possibility of making major contributions to the study of dinosaurs."

THE CURRENT focus of Chinese dinosaur research is on the late Cretaceous Period of the Mesozoic Era, about 70 million years ago, when dinosaurs began to die out.

"Why did they become extinct?" Dong said. "This is the No. 1 question. It is really essential for our understanding of the evolutionary process, and it has clear implications for the future. If we knew why dinosaurs, some of the largest creatures ever to appear on Earth, disappeared, we would be in a position to make judgments about many other things."

A working hypothesis developed by Dong, Zhao and other Chinese researches is that over their 115-million-year history dinosaurs grew larger and larger, requiring increasing amounts of food, whether they were meat or plant eaters, until they were so big that they could not get enough to eat, particularly of certain essential foods.

"We know they were not getting enough calcium," said Zhao, who specializes in the study of dinosaur eggs, "and that alone may have been fatal."

Dong added that given the amounts of food the big dinosaurs required — the largest skeleton found in China is nearly 72 feet long, more than 11 feet tall, and the dinosaur probably weighed 50 tons — any change in climate could have a tremendous impact.

"When we have a two- or three-year drought today, we can cope, but only with difficulty," he said. "What if there were successive droughts? What if there were a small but significant change in the climate that over a million or two million years raised temperatures, reduced rainfall, affected certain plants that supported the dinoaur population? There is evidence of such changes, and so we are studying their impact."

Biologist tries to establish eagle on Catalina Island

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post
News Service

SANTA CATALINA ISLAND, Calif. — "Hot damn, there's one," David Garcelon shouted as he hit the brakes.

His battered Jeep skidded and stopped on the hilltop road high above Avalon Bay on Santa Catalina Island, 26 miles off Los Angeles, as he grabbed his binoculars, always close at hand, and leaped out.

The glasses focused on a young bald eagle dominating the sky off to the north as it glided leisurely, majestically in a wide circle.

It was by no means the first time the bearded 28-year-old biologist in sweat-stained cap and work jeans had seen a bald eagle. He has worked with them for 10 years.

But this one was special. It was one of "my kids."

For three years, Garcelon, with the help of three graduate students, has carried on a unique project to reestablish the bald eagle on Catalina.

Once the island was home for as many as 12 pairs and their young, he estimates, but hunters, pesticides and World War II and the testing of military arms wiped them out.

A graduate of Humboldt (Calif.) State University with a degree in wildlife management, Garcelon became associated with an organization concerned with the welfare and care of sick and injured wild animals. His interest centered on birds of prey and, specifically, the bald eagle.

Part of the organization's program involved relocating injured bald eagles in a place that would afford some protection for them as they recovered their strength, and San Clemente island was chosen.

While there, Garcelon learned the bald eagle had populated Catalina and perhaps others of the offshore islands and, he recalled, he began thinking about a project that would reestablish the birds on Catalina.

And he was also about to get another education — on the art of fund raising.

Working alone with a university or foundation behind him, Garcelon discovered the difficulties of trying to raise money for his project.

"There was a lot of skepticism about my idea," Garcelon said. "California at the time had a hands-off policy for bald eagles, a belief that it was better to leave them alone." They were then and remain an endangered species.

Down but not out, Garcelon said he heard of a New York project in which two young bald eagles were released in 1976 and by 1980 had survived, matured and borne young.

Encouraged, Garcelon established the nonprofit, tax exempt research organization he called the Institute for Wildlife Studies, a necessary step if he was to tap the money sources among corporations and foundations.

The first year, in 1980, he raised $34,000, and $40,000 the next year. This year he has $28,000. A major and consistent contributor has been the Burns Family Foundation of Newport Beach, Calif.

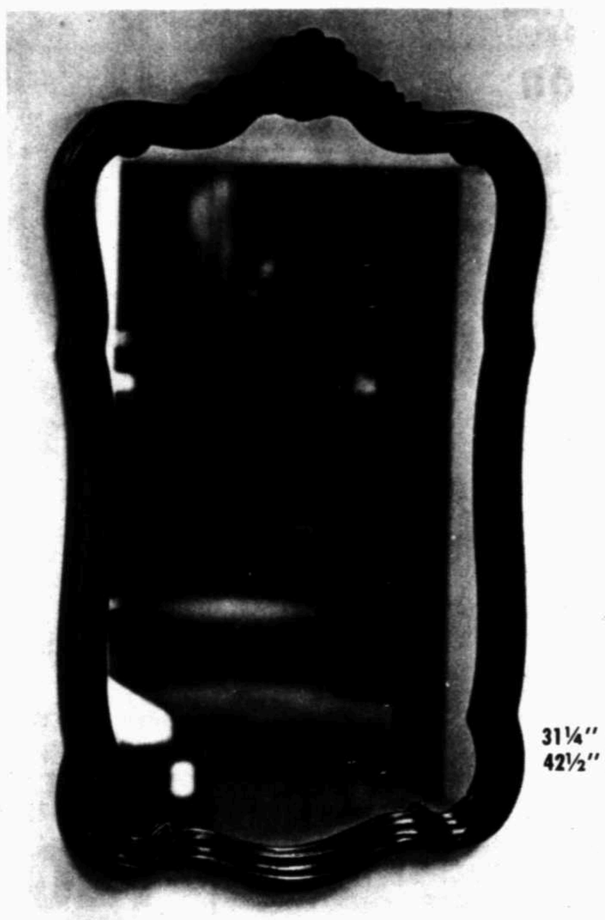

He has also found an ally in the Santa Catalina Island conservancy, a nonprofit organization that owns 86 percent of the island and whose aim it is to maintain the natural environment.

The project began in 1980 with the raising of six bald eagle chicks, obtained in Washington and Northern California through a lengthy state and federal permit system.

Three aeries at scattered locations were built, and the chicks, two in each, were placed in nests within a cage eight feet by eight feet with a six-foot ceiling.

Shock still lingers over guard's bloody rampage

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — At about 2 a.m., police say, George Banks — an ex-convict who had gotten a job as a prison guard — pulled the trigger on a semi-automatic rifle that the military likes for its killing power.

Before he would surrender nine hours later one week ago Saturday, 13 people at two homes would be dead; another wounded. Among those killed were five of Banks' children and four of the women who bore them out of wedlock.

This week, Banks faces preliminary hearings on murder charges. He is under guard in Luzerne County Prison after suicide threats. His motive has not been disclosed.

"It's like looking at one of those horror movies — all this gore and blood," said Luzerne County Coroner George Hudock.

THE SHOCK lingered in northeastern Pennsylvania's Luzerne County after its bloodiest rampage in 85 years, as the story of Banks' tangled family life, criminal past and suicidal threats began to emerge.

Banks, 40, is the illegitimate son of a black father and white mother. He reportedly told one of his victims: "You called my son a nigger," before pulling the trigger.

"Georgie's father was black. I'm white," his mother Mary Yelland told reporters. "He was born out of wedlock and the people here never let us forget that. They called me a nigger lover and they did the same thing with Georgie's women."

Banks was an ex-convict. He pleaded guilty in 1961 to attempted armed robbery and assault with intent to kill. He tried to escape, and served 7½ years before being paroled in 1969.

He was estranged from his wife, Doris, living in Dayton, Ohio, with two of his daughters. Their divorce was never final and Banks never remarried.

IN 1962, when Banks was being transferred from Luzerne County Prison to the state prison at Graterford, psychologist D.L. Schaeffer wrote in a report: "Eruptions of violent and hostile behavior are not out of the question."

But there was no violence after he left prison. He became a mail-order minister in the Universal Life Church of Modesto, Calif., and held several jobs, including one with the state Bureau of Water Quality.

In February 1980, Banks was hired as a $16,836-a-year state prison guard.

There is no state law barring ex-convicts from working as prison guards, and until a new corrections commissioner changed the rules in April 1980, former inmates were considered on a "case-by-case basis," said prisons spokesman Kenneth Robinson.

"They felt he (Banks) was going to be good for the job," he said. "They considered he was an ex-offender, but it was almost 18 years and he had had no other trouble and was working most of the time."

Today, Banks couldn't get the job. Since the Sept. 25 shootings, applicants must take a psychological test. Hiring practices and work records are being reviewed.

BANKS WAS relieved of duty from his watch tower at a state prison in Camp Hill on Sept. 6 after threatening to kill himself.

He had sought psychiatric help at a hospital and the Luzerne County mental health center. Just before the bloody rampage, two follow-up appointments with counselors had been scheduled.

John Creek, executive director of the Luzerne-Wyoming Mental Health Center, where Banks was examined eight days before the deaths, declined to say what was bothering Banks. But the troubled guard apparently was not considered dangerous — "If he wasn't committed, that should tell you something," Creek said.

On the night before the killings, police say, Banks was drinking. He would later tell prison nurse Margie Collins he'd been drinking a fifth of gin a day for four days.

Police say they don't know the exact time when Banks returned to the house he shared with three women. But the trail of blood began when a Colt AR-15 rifle which Banks had received as a gift from one of the victims was first fired at 2 a.m.

DOROTHY LYONS, 29, was shot in the chest. Her 11-year-old daughter by another man, Nancy Lyons, died in bed along with Nancy's half-brother, Foraroude Banks, 1.

Regina Clemens, 29, who bought the rifle, was shot in the head. The body of her 6-year-old daughter, Montanzima Banks, was found with her downstairs.

Susan Yuhas, 23, sister of Regina Clemens, also was shot through the head. A son, Bowendy Banks, 6, died downstairs with Ms. Yuhas. Upstairs, a daughter, Maritanya, 1, was shot through the eye.

Police say Banks met people leaving a party as he fled. "You guys saw all that, didn't you?" neighbors heard Banks say before more bullets flew.

Raymond Hall Jr., 24, was shot through the chest and died later at a hospital. A companion, James Olsen, 22, was critically wounded.

Minutes later, at a nearby bar, Banks stole a car at gunpoint and drove six miles to the Heather Highlands Trailer Park where Sharon Mazzillo, 24, was keeping their son, according to police.

AT A CUSTODY hearing in July, Sharon had agreed to give up Kissmayu, 5, to Banks. Neighbors, however, say Sharon failed to do so on the Sept. 6 date.

Inside a mobile home, Angelo Vital, Sharon's 9-year-old stepbrother, was asleep when he heard Banks break into the trailer.

"I shot some of my family and now I'm going to kill you," Banks told Sharon, according to a statement Angelo gave to police.

Kissmayu Banks was asleep on the couch when his father shot him between the eyes, Angelo said. Sharon was shot in the back as she tried to flee.

Meanwhile, Scott Mazzillo, a nephew of Sharon's who was staying at the trailer that night, ran down the hall.

Banks clubbed Scott with the rifle butt, placed his foot on the boy's head and shot him behind the right ear, according to young Angelo.

"YOU CALLED MY son a nigger," Angelo quoted Banks as saying as he pulled the trigger.

By this time, Alice Mazzillo — mother of Sharon, Angelo and Keith Mazzillo, 12 — had picked up the phone to call the police. Banks stopped her with a bullet through the head, officials said.

After Banks fled, Angelo picked the phone off his dead mother's chest and dialed the police.

Banks sped to the home of his mother, Mary Yelland, and made out a crude will, leaving his possessions to her, according to investigators.

"It's all over, Mom. It's all over. I did it. I killed everyone. I killed all the kids and the girls," a weeping Banks reportedly told his mother. Mrs. Yelland then drove Banks to a friend's home, where he barricaded himself inside.

AFTER A TENSE standoff with police wearing bullet-proof vests and assault gear, Banks gave up at 11:15 a.m.

A friend, 36-year-old Robert Brunson, talked Banks into surrendering.

DJ sticks foot in mouth

YANKTON, S.D. (AP) — A local disc jockey is preparing to sling hash at a local restaurant as part of his apology for calling waitresses "fat and ugly."

It all started two weeks ago during a sports quiz show on radio station WNAX. In awarding the prize, a gift certificate at JoDean's steak house, disc jockey Dan Christopherson commented on the waitresses.

"I said, 'JoDean's offers enjoyable dining and good food but oh are their waitresses ugly,'" Christopherson recalled. "I just made the comment on the air that the waitresses at JoDean's are fat and ugly."

That didn't sit well with the waitresses, and 15 of them picketed outside the radio station.

"It got to the point where we got phone calls that asked if I was the fat one or the ugly one," said waitress Ruby Guthmiller.

The maligned waitresses, wearing JoDean's uniforms of blue calico blouses and denim skirts, marched in front of the station for hours, at times chanting, "Dan, Dan, he's our man, he can say 'sorry,' sure he can."

One little boy carried a sign reading, "My mom is not dumb and ugly."

Both sides made a joke out of the tongue-in-cheek comment, and Christopherson said he realizes how hard waitresses work and how much their good will means to customers.

Christopherson said he wouldn't wear a skirt during his stint as a waitress Saturday. But the picketing waitresses agreed to make him a calico blouse.

Festival held in honor of okra

IRMO, S.C. (AP) — Okra Man and Mother Okra, 191 booths, a parade and 35,000 people were all part of the annual Okra Strut in honor of the South's slimiest vegetable.

Activities for okra fans included an okra-eating contest and singing the Okra Strut Blues.

In the Okra Bowl, Irmo High beat North Augusta 23-17 in overtime.

"This is the best one yet," an exuberent Mayor Libby Green said of the ninth annual event held last week.

"It's unbelievable, they came en masse. This is absolutely the biggest crowd and the most successful. People just love these festivals." Okra Man and Mother Okra reign over the festival.

Pot smokers endanger newborns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists say they have the first substantial evidence that smoking marijuana during pregnancy causes potentially harmful effects in newborn babies.

The study found that pregnant women who smoke marijuana are more likely to have smaller than average babies with a tendency toward other abnormalities, scientists said Thursday.

Researchers at Boston University Medical School said their findings are the first significant link between maternal marijuana use and effects on offspring.

At a briefing here sponsored by the U.S. Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration, which funded the research, scientists cautioned that their findings are preliminary.

New arthritis treatment draws from cancer research

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Writer

Borrowing an idea from cancer research, doctors have devised a new drug treatment for severe cases of rheumatoid arthritis that has halted the painful disease in five of the first 17 patients tested.

The treatment also prompted some regrowth of damaged bone, according to a report in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The treatment consists of a combination of three drugs known to be effective individually against rheumatoid arthritis — cyclophosphamide, azathioprine and hydroxychloroquine.

All have dangerous side effects, said Dr. Guillermo Carrera, one of the authors of the study. "This was used only in people with advanced, unremitting rheumatoid arthritis," he said. "It was an effort to save their lives."

The idea was to use a combination of the drugs in lower doses, thus reducing the side effects. Cancer researchers have found that combinations of anti-cancer drugs can allow better treatment with fewer side effects.

Carrera, a radiologist at The Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee, said X-rays showed some damaged bone had been restored by the treatment.

"Some of the damage to the bone that people thought would never go away seemed to get better," he said. "It startled us."

In an accompanying editorial in the journal, Dr. George Ehrlich of Hahnemann Medical College in Philadelphia wrote that, "No other current treatment program can claim such successes with this type of patient, except as anecdotal reports in isolated instances."

DEATHS

Biological tests aid in depression

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors have developed several promising biological tests aimed at taking the guesswork out of diagnosing severe depression. Now it is the patients' turn to see if they really work.

The National Institute of Mental Health announced Thursday that it would assemble a battery of these tests and evaluate them with psychiatric patients heading for treatment.

Because of the growing number of these tests, some of which are expensive, government researchers want to find out which ones are most useful in diagnosis and in monitoring the effectiveness of treatment.

"Despite the attractiveness of biological tests for depression, we are not sure how successful they ultimately will be," said Dr. David Pickar, a psychiatrist coordinating the program.

Pickar estimated that 10 percent of the nation's psychiatrists already are using some of the tests and that their popularity is increasing.

The institute, part of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration, is sending letters to psychiatrists around the country asking them to volunteer patients for the tests.

Patients would receive, free of charge, a comprehensive diagnostic workup using the most advanced technology. The information obtained would help their doctors design an optimal treatment program and help researchers evaluate the tests.

"A major aim of the experimental program will be to determine the extent to which any of these biological changes are specific to depression," Pickar told a news briefing.

Biological tests for psychiatric problems stem from findings that physical changes accompany many mental conditions.

For example, changes in the levels of hormones or other chemicals that help nerve cells communicate, called neurotransmitters, are evident in some mental disease.

Sometimes, there are fluctuations in the number or nature of certain molecules, or receptors, on brain cell surfaces. These receptors are triggers, activated by brain chemicals, that spur cells to carry out certain functions.

One test looks at blood levels of a hormone called cortisol that, studies indicate, increases in about half of patients during major depression and drops to normal after clinical recovery.

Another examines a byproduct of a neurotransmitter called serotonin. Patients with lower than normal levels of this chemical appear to have a high suicide potential.

"We will be systematically evaluating the clinical usefulness of eight or more biological tests for hormonal, neurotransmitter or receptor alterations associated with major affective disorders," Pickar said.

Patients accepted for the study will be admitted to the Clinical Center at the National Institutes of Health and will stay for up to two weeks. All fees and transportation costs for participants will be paid by the program.

McDonald's halts trading as hamburgers, disease linked

ATLANTA (AP) — McDonald's Corp. halted trading on the New York Stock Exchange after the national Centers for Disease Control reported a link between ground beef and a new disease, but the hamburger giant said the action doesn't mean its sandwiches aren't safe.

"You bet it's safe to eat at McDonald's," McDonald's Vice Chairman Edward H. Schmitt said in Chicago. "We've served 2 billion hamburgers since these isolated incidents were first reported."

Company officials said they expected trading of the fast-food giant's stock to resume today.

The Atlanta-based national Centers for Disease Control traced several cases of the illness, which has been named hemorrhagic colitis, to McDonald's restaurants in Oregon and Michigan.

But a CDC epidemiologist said Thursday that sporadic cases discovered since then have been linked to other hamburger chains and private homes.

Symptoms of the disease include severe stomach pain, bloody diarrhea but a lack of fever.

The non-fatal illness seems to be transmitted through hamburger meat, according to epidemiologist Mitchell Cohen, who presented his data on the disease at a medical conference in Miami on Wednesday.

Cohen said only one in 1,000 people who ate hamburgers at McDonald's during the outbreaks in the two states became ill.

There were 26 reported cases of the illness in February and March in Medford, Ore., with 17 people hospitalized for short periods, Cohen said.

There were 21 confirmed cases and 26 reported cases in another outbreak in Traverse City, Mich., in May and June, Cohen said.

Cohen declined to name other fast food chains linked to the disease because the actual organism causing the disease was not found in their meat.

McDonald's might have reported more cases simply because so many people eat there, he said.

Susanne Bruneau inspects a group of pewter-handled, miniature Christmas bells for Hallmark after the final hand-buffing of their antiqued finish. Hallmark says the "merry minstrel" figurine, produced in Cranston, R.I., proved so popular on Christmas cards that it was adapted this year for the bell.

Young Sherpa guide first person to conquer Everest for third time

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — A young Sherpa mountain guide who lost most of his toes to frostbite and ignored his mother's pleas to quit climbing has become the first man to conquer Mount Everest three times.

His name is Sungdare and he has watched people die on the slopes of the world's highest peak. He says that he once thought he would meet the same icy fate as he descended the mountainside alone and snow-blind.

His worried mother begged him not to go up again.

But the 27-year-old guide refused to listen and on Tuesday he stood on Earth's frozen rooftop for the third time since he began working with expeditions as a teen-ager to save his family from starvation.

Only six men have made it to the summit of Everest twice.

This time, Sungdare and another Sherpa guide, Lhakpa Dorje, led 34-year-old Canadian Laurie Skreslet up the 29,028-foot Himalayan peak on the border of Nepal and Tibet.

Skreslet, the first Canadian to scale Everest, said the feat would have been impossible without the help of the two Sherpas.

The Sherpas, an ethnic Tibetan people who live on the southern slopes of the Himalayas, are famous as mountain climbers. They call Everest the "abode of the gods" and consider it a kind of Buddhist pilgrimage to make the climb.

An indication of Sherpa bravery and loyalty is found in a harrowing report Sungdare filed with the Nepalese government after the death of two climbers during his first successful assault on Everest in October 1979.

Sungdare and another Sherpa, Ang Jambu, were descending the summit with Hannelore Schmatz, wife of German Everest Expedition leader Gerhard Schmatz.

Mrs. Schmatz was exhausted and already had consumed the oxygen that most climbers carry at high altitudes to compensate for the thin air. Jambu hurried to the lower base camp for help.

Sungdare, Mrs. Schmatz, and an American member of the expedition, Raymond Genet, camped in bitter cold without food or drink. Genet died during the night.

At first light, Sungdare rushed down to camp and returned with two bottles of oxygen.

He and Mrs. Schmatz began their descent but after three hours the oxygen was gone and she died.

Alone and snow-blind, Sungdare thought he also would perish. But on his way down, he met the expedition's doctor and another Sherpa.

"This saved my life, and I am still alive because of it," he wrote in his account of the ordeal.

Last autumn, descending Everest after his second triumphant climb, Sungdare spotted the frozen corpse of Mrs. Schmatz at 27,000 feet.

He later described it to friends as a "severe emotional shock."

Born April 12, 1955, Sungdare (pronounced Sundare) is from the village of Pangboche. He began his career eight years ago when the family's potato crops did not earn enough, said his cousin, Lhakpa Tsering.

Sungdare earns the standard, Nepalese government-set rate of about $4 a day, food, and the right to keep equipment provided by the expedition.

"Sungdare enjoys climbing and looks upon it as a sport, similar to us," said John Amatt, a 38-year-old member of the Canadian team that tackled Everest. "So we look upon him as a member of the expedition and not as a porter."

Amatt, who spent about a month with Sungdare at the start of the climb, said the guide "did not do it for the money."

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The late John Lennon was born on this day in 1940. Also sharing your birthday: New York Yankee minor league batting instructor Joe Pepitone. A feeling of optimism accompanies your birthday and you find the strength you need to pursue your ambitious goals. Financial pressures abate over the next few months, leaving you free to travel. Be willing to use the new technology that can help you advance faster in business. Your good humor and thoughtful ways make you very appealing to potential romantic partners. Choose a mate who will give you the same loving support that you have to offer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Copy the style and manner of a family member you have long admired. A change in lifestyle wins you the strong support of your loved ones. Romance needs time to cool off.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your ability to manage money makes this a happy time. Guard your valuables. You need to play your cards close to your chest or someone could thwart your plans.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Plan a quiet weekend and catch up on both your correspondence and some long overdue household repairs. Your intuition is very keen now. A family member makes a big concession.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be fair, but firm. Assert your independence if you disagree with the way a family matter is being handled. New friends open exciting social doors. A blind date turns into something wonderful.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A refusal proves lucky. Lavish entertaining will cut into your budget without accomplishing your goals. Avoid getting in over your head. Turn to an older family member for advice.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lay all of your cards on the table and you will win over a family member. Honesty is the only possible policy now! You enjoy good luck in romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Curb a tendency to quibble or others will give you a wide berth. A promising investment opportunity comes your way. You meet with goodwill wherever you go this evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Investigate other people's long-range objectives. Ask questions before signing on the dotted line. A friendly exchange of views could lead to romance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Mutual endeavors contain an element of surprise. Initiative and courage serve you well in ticklish situations. Parenthood is trying but ultimately rewarding.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A close encounter will be unexpectedly pleasant! Rearrange your schedule to accommodate a stranger. Be more diplomatic when dealing with family members.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A very happy day for romance. Be careful not to let your emotions get the upper hand. A close friend's suggestions will help you stretch the family budget.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not leave too much to chance. The people around you today give your ego a healthy boost. Stretch your mind and imagination. Seize a splendid financial opportunity that comes your way.

South, declarer at three no trump, made a slight technical error. His punishment was, perhaps, unduly harsh.

The auction was routine. After his partner's no trump rebid, showing a balanced minimum, North correctly decided that his side's best chance for game was three no trump, so he got there without further ado.

West led his fourth-best heart, and declarer captured East's queen with the king. Unless hearts were going to split evenly, it was obvious that declarer would need tricks in a hurry. It was equally obvious that the diamond suit would have to provide those tricks, and that declarer could not afford to lose a trick in the suit.

So at trick two declarer led a diamond to the king. He came back to hand with the ace of spades and led a diamond to dummy's ten. The finesse succeeded—the contract did not. When East failed to follow to the second diamond, declarer could make no more than eight tricks.

Declarer's technique was reasonable, but inaccurate. To lead a diamond to the king before taking the finesse gains only in the event that East has a singleton and it is precisely the queen. However, even if you knew that East held a lone diamond, the odds are 4-1 against it being the queen.

Obviously, declarer was going to take a diamond finesse. If the suit broke 3-2 and the queen was onside, any line would work. But against a 4-1 break declarer would need to finesse twice!

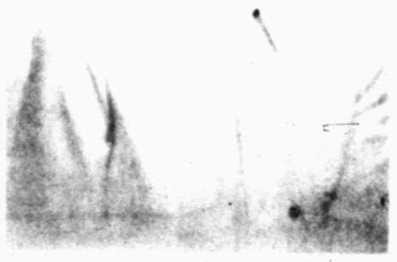

Therefore, the winning play at trick two is to take an immediate diamond finesse. When that succeeds, declarer can return to hand with the ace of spades and repeat the finesse. That lands six diamond tricks. Now, declarer can afford to cash the king of spades to bring his trick total to nine, and then take the club finesse for another over-trick. As a result, he scores eleven tricks instead of eight.

Buckingham Palace denies reports that queen ordered Andrew home

Koo Stark

LONDON (AP) — British tabloid accounts today claimed an embarrassed Queen Elizabeth II has ordered Prince Andrew home from his Caribbean beach fling with American blue-movie star Koo Stark and banned him from hosting "overnight guests" at Buckingham Palace without permission.

The palace strongly denied the reports, which came as a London girlie magazine announced plans to publish full-color nude photographs of the 22-year-old prince's latest sweetheart.

In Los Angeles, Miss Stark's father, movie producer Wilbur Stark, said Thursday he was "nauseated" by the treatment his 25-year-daughter has received from the British press.

She appeared nude in the 1975 film "Emily," which features Miss Stark as a teenager who indulges in a torrid lesbian affair and frolics in the nude with male lovers.

"I resent the fact they call it soft porn," Stark said. "She is not a sex goddess."

Stark, producer of "Cat People" and "The Thing," said he characterizes "Emily" as a romantic drama.

Since their flight Tuesday to the Caribbean hideaway island of Mustique, British tabloids have plastered stories of the trip complete with blaring front-page headlines and nude photographs of the actress.

WASHINGTON (AP) — CIA director William J. Casey received a Dutch decoration from Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands for participating in a cloak-and-dagger operation against German forces occupying Holland in 1944.

Casey was one of 16 veterans of the U.S. Office of Strategic Services awarded the Resistance Memorial Cross in a ceremony Thursday.

In 1944, Casey was head of secret intelligence for the organization in London. Most of the other participants parachuted behind the German lines as part of "Operation Melanie," one of the most successful moves for gathering intelligence on German forces. Two other reby the dropping of the worthe mission, Ides van der Gracht, now in retirement in Switzerland and Jan Laverge, who lives in Richmond, Va.

Janet Gaynor

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Actress Janet Gaynor, whose chances of survival were in doubt after she was critically injured in a car crash, may be out of intensive care in as little as a week, her doctor says.

Miss Gaynor underwent successful surgery this week to remove a blood clot and is in serious but stable condition in San Francisco General Hospital, Dr. Frank Lewis said Thursday.

Lewis said he operated Monday to remove a blood clot from Miss Gaynor's pelvis. She might leave the intensive care unit in one to three weeks, he said.

She was injured Sept. 5 when a van slammed into a taxi carrying Miss Gaynor and her husband Paul Gregory, Broadway actress Mary Martin and her manager, Ben Washer.

Washer, 76, was killed. Gregory, 62, and Miss Martin, 66, star of Broadway's "South Pacific," "The Sound of Music" and "Peter Pan," have been released from the hospital.

Miss Gaynor, who turned 76 on Wednesday, is recovering slowly but surely. She has been breathing with a respirator, but is becoming less dependent on it, said hospital spokeswoman Linda De La Ysla.

Miss Gaynor won the first Academy Award for best actress in 1928.

Walter Cronkite

WASHINGTON (AP) — Newscaster Walter Cronkite was honored by the National Mental Health Association for his contributions to reporting the ups and downs of humanity.

"As the spirit and faith of this country was tested during his 19 years as anchorman for 'The CBS Evening News,' Cronkite consistently provided reporting, interpretation and analysis of human events that gave us perspective, hope and rekindled our spirit," the association said Thursday.

Cronkite, 65, who retired from his weekday anchor post in 1981 but remains active in the news business, also was honored for his "commitment and distinguished career in reporting to the public the problems, successes, tragedies and humor" of mankind.

They make it no mystery that these conventioners are devoted fans

By C.W. MIRANKER

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The talk is of arsenic in teacups, muffled gunshots in dark alleys or even a murder on the Orient Express as connoisseurs of violent deaths and surprising solutions — at least on paper — gather at an annual convention of mystery fans.

Autograph hounds can get their well-thumbed books signed by the authors. Collectors of detective fiction can learn about tax shelters while debating the crime-solving merits of drawing-room deduction vs. back-alley sleuthing by dedicated gumshoes.

Fans at the 13th annual world convention can compare the elegant prose of Sherlock Holmes mysteries with the hard-boiled slang of detectives in pulp magazines. Admirers of the Boston-based private eye Spenser can hear a talk by his creator, Robert B. Parker. And moviegoers can see a marathon of rare mystery films, including two versions of "The Maltese Falcon" made before the Humphrey Bogart classic.

The Bouchercon convention, named for the late mystery writer and critic Anthony Boucher, has met annually since 1970. The 1982 gathering runs today through Sunday at the Cathedral Hill Hotel.

This convention pays special tribute to San Francisco's premiere detective writer, the late Dashiell Hammett, who created Sam Spade. The father of the hard-boiled detective, Hammett set most of his stories and some of his novels, including "The Maltese Falcon" and "The Glass Key," in the fog-shrouded streets of San Francisco.

Mayor Dianne Feinstein has proclaimed October as Dashiell Hammett month to mark renewed interest in the writer that includes three new biographies, a Francis Ford Coppola film, a public television documentary and popular walking tours pointing out scenes from the novels.

The renewed attention to mysteries by Hammett and others "has to do with the chaotic state of the world," speculates Don Herron, who leads the tours. "(Fictional detectives) go through the chaos and emerge in control of things."

Nostalgia and escapism play a part, too. "With so much crime in the world, people turn to mysteries for entertaining solutions," Herron said.

The image of a "single guy against the world" makes mysteries perennially attractive, says writer Bob Randisi, whose newly formed Private Eye Writers of America will present its first awards Saturday.

"A lone private eye who comes into town and gets into trouble...looking to right wrongs, that's the same sort of thing that endears lone gunfighters to the public," he said.

The novels' implicit recognition of a license to kill also intrigues readers, said private investigator Jayson Wechter, who helped organize this year's convention with Herron and Bruce Taylor, owner of the San Francisco Mystery Book Store.

"Cops, detectives and cowboys all can kill people — they're always shooting or punching their way out of situations. Violence is appealing," Wechter said.

But local mystery writer Collin Wilcox takes a jaded view of the popularity of run-of-the-mill mysteries. "I think frankly that this has become a less literate society...and the genre offers refuge to people," he said.

"It's not unlike situation comedies," Wilcox added. "When people read a mystery, they want the same book over and over again. It's like Chevrolets — a new model, but not too new."

Tryouts scheduled for MCT production

Tryouts for Midland Community Theatre's production of Neil Simon's "Barefoot in the Park" will be held Sunday at 3 p.m. and Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Redfern Room at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The show will be presented in Theatre I Nov. 19 through Dec. 11.

Roles are available for two women and four men. The players are Mrs. Banks, a middle-aged matron of pronounced ladylike gentility who tries not to be too startled by the domestic arrangements of her newly married daughter; Cori and Paul Bratter, the newlywed couple; Victor Velasco, a charming, middle-aged, deadbeat neighbor who is also a connoisseur of exotic foods; and the two cameo parts, a delivery man and a telephone man. No age requirements exist on the cameo roles.

"Barefoot in the Park" will be directed by MCT's executive director, Don Bachmann. Perusal copies of the script may be checked out from the MCT business office. For more information call 682-2544.

The production is funded in part by a grant from HBF Corporation.

11 million visitors sought

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — With just four weekends left before the World's Fair shuts down, fair officials say reaching an 11 million break-even attendance figure is "going to be close."

There will be at least two visitors this weekend — former President Jimmy Carter and his wife, Rosalynn. They will participate in formal ceremonies at the energy-theme fair's Court of Flags, as well as tour the fair site this afternoon.

On Thursday, fair officials reported a daily average 59,598 visitors was needed to hit 11 million by Sunday, Oct. 31 when the fair closes.

Reagan, de la Madrid to meet

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan and Mexico's president-elect have an "open agenda" for their get-acquainted meeting but undoubtedly will discuss the Mexican financial crisis that is causing immigration problems for the unemployment-plagued United States, U.S. officials say.

Reagan planned to slip across the border this afternoon to Tijuana, Mexico, where he was to lay a wreath at a statue honoring Benito Juarez, the 19th century Mexican revolutionary leader.

Then, Reagan and Mexican President-elect Miguel de la Madrid were returning to the United States for a meeting and luncheon in Coronado, Calif., a suburb of San Diego.

The conference represented the first top-level session between Mexico and the United States since falling prices for oil and other raw materials led to Mexico's severe financial problems this past summer.

Besides the economy, the two leaders are likely to discuss the illegal immigration problem that has been made worse by the fact that Mexico is entering a period of economic stagnation, officials said.

A U.S. OFFICIAL in Mexico City, who asked to remain anonymous, said, "It's an open agenda and anything could and probably will come up."

The meeting provides a chance "for the two men to get to know each other, talk about their philosophy of government, and talk about possible problems in the future," said another U.S. official, who also requested his name not be used. Topics would include "the economic situations in both countries," and possibly, trade, fisheries and border questions, he said.

The meeting is taking place on a day when economists are expecting the United States' unemployment rate to continue its climb from the August figures of 9.8 percent.

Concerned about the potential political damage of higher unemployment, the White House also arranged a bill-signing ceremony aboard a docked cargo vessel in the Long Beach harbor so the president could highlight the employment possibilities of the Export Trading Company Act.

That measure is intended to boost sales of U.S. products and services abroad.

DESPITE THE MEXICAN government's increasing control of the country's economy, capped by outgoing president Jose Lopez Portillo's decision to nationalize Mexico's private banking on Sept. 1, de la Madrid has insisted that his country is not slipping toward socialism.

"It is not, nor can it be the intention of the Mexican government to lead the country through a process of socialization," de la Madrid said in a television interview Sunday."My commitment is with the Mexican revolution and not with socialism."

Lopez Portillo's decision puts about 80 percent of the nation's business and industrial output in government hands, according to unofficial estimates.

> "My commitment is with the Mexican revolution and not with socialism," Miguel de la Madrid, Mexico's president elect, says.

He also imposed stiff currency controls to halt the flow of dollars out of Mexico, which needs the currency to pay a foreign debt of $81 billion, greater than that of any other Third World country.

Reagan was taking Secretary of State George P. Shultz, and William Clark, the White House national security advisor, with him to the conference with de la Madrid, a 47-year-old Harvard-educated administrator who was elected last July and will take office Dec. 1.

THE MEETING IS similar to one held on Jan. 5, 1981, in Juarez, Mexico, near El Paso, Texas, between Lopez Portillo and then-president-elect Reagan.

Since that 1981 meeting, U.S. officials have said the U.S.-Mexican relationship has continued ot improve after rocky years in the middle and late 1970s.

But differences remain, particularly over Central America. U.S. officials say they see no sign that de la Madrid will alter his government's friendly relations with leftist factions in El Salvador, to the dismay of the Reagan administration.

"There are some important differences on foreign policy matters, particularly in regard to Central America," said a senior administration official, who spoke with the understanding that he would not be further identified.

NO NEGOTIATIONS were planned on further U.S. assistance for Mexico.

When the Mexican crisis broke this summer, the two nations reached a series of agreements:

—A $1.85 billion multinational support package was put together with one-half of the assistance contributed by the United States.

Nazi sympathizer to leave U.S.

DETROIT (AP) — A deportation agreement between the government and Romanian Orthodox Archbishop Valerian Trifa, a Nazi sympathizer accused of inciting riots that killed hundreds of people during World War II, could lead to similar deals, a federal official says.

"I would hope that the other defendants will take notice," said Allan A. Ryan Jr., director of the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations.

Trifa, 68, agreed Thursday to be deported after admitting he lied to immigration authorities 32 years ago to cover up his fascist sympathies when he entered the United States.

Trifa's attorney, William Swor of Detroit, said his client would like to relocate in Switzerland. Trifa wanted to avoid "dragging it on...He's old and ill," said Swor. "It was a no-win situation."

Heinz Wey, consul at the Swiss Embassy in Washington, said he could not predict whether the archbishop's request would be granted.

"Switzerland is not very eager to accept convicted ex-Nazis," Wey said.

Trifa has denied inciting anti-Semitic violence, but acknowleged that when he entered the United States he concealed his activities in the Iron Guard, a pre-World War II anti-Semitic group.

"This is the first time in 30 years a person has been ordered deported for fascist activities...and it won't be the last," Ryan said Thursday at a news conference, following the trial that began Monday before Immigration Judge Bellino D'Ambrosio.

Ryan said his office is investigating 210 known fascist immigrants living in the United States. Twenty-five of those cases are in the courts.

The settlement requires Trifa to leave the United States within 60 days after receiving travel documents.

Trifa is the spiritual leader of the Romanian Orthodox Episcopate, a 35,000-member church based in Grass Lake, Mich., a suburb of Jackson about 90 miles west of Detroit.

The government was prepared to show that Trifa had been an ardent Nazi supporter who wrote inflammatory newspaper articles and made anti-Jewish speeches.

U.S. officials said a Jan. 20, 1941, speech by Trifa in Bucharest touched off four days of riots that killed 300 Christians and Jews.

The charge of inciting riots and others alleging persecution of enemies of the Nazis were dropped in Trifa's agreement to be deported.

When Trifa entered the United States in 1950, he said he had been confined to Nazi concentration camps. In opening arguments Monday, however, Kathleen Coleman, a Justice Department attorney, said Trifa lived "much like a tourist in Nazi Germany" after leaving Romania.

Valerian Trifa

In the agreement, Trifa admitted he had been a member of the Iron Guard; that he misrepresented and concealed facts from immigration officials when he entered the United States; and that he could be classified as an excludable alien because he had lied to get his entry visa to the United States.

Trifa, a naturalized U.S. citizen, lost his citizenship in September 1980 after a five-year legal battle.

Israelis may leave Lebanon in few months

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli Ambassador Moshe Arens says he thinks the withdrawal of Israeli and other foreign forces from Lebanon will be completed within the next three to four months.

Arens made the statement Thursday in an off-the-cuff answer to a questioner who expressed doubts about whether Israel would keep its promise to withdraw from Lebanon.

"I would only suggest that we maybe meet together three to four months from now and we will find the Israeli army is not in Lebanon anymore," Arens said.

Asked about Arens' statement, made at a symposium of the Washington Forum, a State Department official said it was not clear on what basis the ambassador was speaking because no agreement has been reached on a withdrawal of foreign forces.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said the United States is hopeful the withdrawal can be completed before the timetable outlined by Arens. The United States wants a speedy evacuation, recognizing that a prolonged delay could lead to renewed fighting.

Arens also said he understands that U.S. special envoy Philip Habib is "reasonably optimistic" about the prospects for a simultaneous or synchronized withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon. Habib, who just returned from the Middle East, reported to President Reagan on Wednesday.

According to some estimates, Syria has 30,000 troops in Lebanon, and the PLO has 7,000-10,000. Israel's troop force number is secret but it is reported to have carried out the June invasion of Lebanon with 95,000 troops.

In Jerusalem, Israeli officials told reporters Thursday they have dropped their initial demand for an immediate pullback of Palestinian forces.

These forces will be allowed to leave in a phased pullout along with the Syrians and the Israelis, but Israel will not complete its own evacuation ahead of Syria or the PLO, the officials said.

The daily newspaper, Maariv, said the softened Israeli approach was in response to a U.S. appeal to ease negotiations for the departure of hostile armies from Lebanon.

In his speech, Arens said Israeli military operations in Lebanon over the past four months have underscored the need for a total revision of previous assumptions about the efficiency of American weapons in comparison with Soviet armaments.

He said the war demonstrated that Soviet aircraft, surface-to-air missiles and tanks are far more vulnerable to American weaponry than was generally assumed.

Protests stop cars

MEXICO CITY (AP) — An Interior Ministry spokesman acknowledged that street demonstrations snarl already congested downtown traffic, but says "this is preferable to repressing them."

Suburban wife, mother on strike against her family for 'unfair labor practices'

NATICK, Mass. (AP) — A suburban wife and mother of two is on strike against her husband and daughters to protest what she calls unfair labor practices.

"The dishes can pile up to the ceiling, and the laundry too," Roberta Wilson says. "I'm not going to do anything and let them see for themselves how much I really do."

Mrs. Wilson, who works three 12-hour shifts each week as a nurse's aide at a local nursing home, set up picket signs on the front lawn of the family home on Monday to dramatize her complaint that her family doesn't help enough with the chores.

The signs read, "Wife and Mother on Strike Until Further Notice."

"You tell them to do (housework) and then you kill yourself screaming," she said Wednesday. "Then you look at it (the house), and it's the same way."

"The last couple of years I started working so the kids could have riding and music lessons," she said. "It's not fair...I work and do stuff so the kids can do extra. I think it's about time they all start working."

Mrs. Wilson acknowledged her husband also works full time and her daughters attend school. But she feels her daughters and husband can do more.

The jobs factor

The Republicans are trying to pin the blame on the Democrats while the Democrats are trying to associate the nation's high unemployment rate with the current GOP administration. In less than four weeks, the voters will tell the politicians who they blame for an unemployment rate of 10.1 percent.

President Ronald Reagan had hinted earlier this month at the possibility that the rate could exceed 10 percent. After all, the August figure was 9.8 percent. But the president attempted to minimize the psychological repercussion of that high an unemployment rate by noting "there is a higher percentage of the eligible workers in the land ... employed today than has been true in the past." That's mainly attributable to the fact that there are more families today in which both the husband and wife work.

Even at home in Midland the unemployment rate has continued to climb in recent months. The rate stood at 4.9 percent in August, according to the Texas Employment Commission, but that extremely low figure still is considerably higher than the 3.5 percent unemployment rate of a year ago. At that, it's a most favorable rate compared to Odessa's 6.5 percent, El Paso's 11.1 percent and the state of Texas' 7.0 percent.

That unemployment remains a nagging problem this close to the Nov. 2 election is a political reality neither party can fail to overlook. The Republicans stand to lose more to the unemployment situation than do the Democrats, who hope to benefit. It's happened before, and many Republican officeholders remember the recession of 1957-58.

Unlike the economic downturn of 1953-54, which came during a time of general price stability and declining federal expenditures, the 1957-58 recession coincided with rising prices and rising defense spending, Editorial Research Reports says. In those two years unemployment grew from 2.5 million workers in October to 5.2 million in March and then began to subside only slowly and stubbornly.

In the midterm election of November 1958, Republicans suffered one of their greatest electorial reverses of modern times. Democrats scored net gains in Congress of 13 Senate members and 47 House members. They also picked up five additional governorships.

While the Democratic surge could not be attributed solely to the unemployment situation that year, election analysts agreed that it was a major factor. Republicans remember, as does President Reagan, no doubt. That's why the approach of this November's general election while unemployment remains so high is politically troubling.

Another View:

Looking for compromise

The House of Representatives acted properly in voting down a proposal that would have reversed President Reagan's embargo on the shipment of American-made or designed equipment for use in the prospective natural-gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe.

The embargo, which was extended to apply to foreign subsidiaries or licensees of U.S. companies as well as to American firms, was a mistake. But the way to correct that mistake is through patient negotiation with this country's European allies, not through legislative action that would impair Reagan's credibility in dealing with the Soviets on arms control and other key issues.

The Reagan administration is convinced that West European participation in the Soviet pipeline project is a mistake. Under the president's order, foreign companies manufacturing turbines for the project under American licenses were forbidden to go through with shipments called for by longstanding contracts.

Although the situation in Poland is frequently cited as a reason for the embargo, the real reason is administration concern that the pipeline, when completed, will earn billions of dollars in hard currency that the Soviets will spend to buy Western technology.

In the White House view, Western participation in the project helps to ease the economic pressures that might otherwise force a reordering of Soviet priorities away from military spending.

The Europeans, who take a fundamentally more relaxed view of East-West trade than does the United States, were especially incensed because they felt that Reagan was trying to dictate policy to his allies in arrogant disregard of their domestic laws and contrary opinions. So they have defied the embargo order, and Reagan's response has been to put the offending foreign companies on a blacklist.

U.S. firms with similar contracts for the pipeline have no choice but to obey the presidential order. But they inspired a movement in the House, led by Republican leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois, that would have overturned the embargo.

Although an essentially meaningless version of the bill did pass, the Michel proposal was voted down — appropriately, in our view.

The independent, assertive role in foreign policy that has been taken by Congress in recent years has its good side. But it should be used with wisdom and restraint, because a side effect has been to make the Soviet government, in particular, wonder whether give-and-take negotiations with the executive branch are worth the time and trouble.

Unless these doubts can be assuaged, it will be very difficult, among other things, to persuade Moscow to get down to realistic bargaining in the arms-control talks in Geneva.

It is imperative that the United States and its allies smooth over the rift in the alliance, but the way to do it is through a negotiated compromise.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz has wisely recognized that both his president and the European leaders have committed too much prestige to their respective stands for direct negotiations on the pipeline issue to succeed. So he has begun an effort to submerge the issue in broader negotiations aimed at producing an overall agreement on credits, technology transfer and other facets of East-West trade.

Such negotiations will be difficult; they may in the end prove futile. But Shultz's conversations with European foreign ministers in New York last week suggest that the allies are willing to give them a try.

Letters Policy

Readers are invited to submit letters to be considered for publication. They may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must include the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

No letter will be published anonymously and names will appear. Addresses and phone numbers are for verification only and will not be published.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved. They will be published as soon as possible after being received.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702 or brought to the newspaper's editorial department.

CHARLEY REESE

Americans should be the emphasis

When Martin Luther got fed up with the corruption and abuses in his church, he nailed a list of demands on a church door and started the Reformation.

Charley Reese

I feel like flying to Washington and nailing a list of demands on the White House door. They would consist of the following:

No American farmer shall lose his land to foreclosure.

No American family shall lose their home to foreclosure.

No American shall die early for lack of adequate medical care.

No American shall go to bed hungry.

No American child shall suffer malnutrition.

No American shall suffer cold from lack of shelter and heat.

No American child who wants an education shall be denied one.

No politician who refuses to do all in his power to achieve these goals shall survive the next election be he Democrat, Republican, conservative, liberal or mugwump.

Frankly, I am angry. I want to know why the government of the United States is giving $75 million to rebuild Lebanon when unemployed Americans are losing their homes.

I want to know why the U.S. government is more concerned about bailing out Mexico and Poland than it is about the depression in our farmlands.

The knowledge that $2 billion is being taken out of our pockets and sent to Egypt while American citizens are losing their homes infuriates me.

If we can just give away billions to foreigners, then we can give it to Americans to meet their mortgage payments and to farmers to meet their debt payments. If we can prevent foreigners from going into default, then we can stop Americans from going into bankruptcy.

I want an end to foreign aid and an end to subsidies to the United Nations and the World Bank. Instead of a $350 million Caribbean Basin Plan, I want an Ohio River Valley plan, a Calumet Region plan, a Mississippi Valley plan. Instead of building roads in Sudan, I want American bridges and roads repaired and restored.

The political and intellectual leadership in this country has lost its collective mind or sold its soul. They are not looking out for America and Americans. They are, in some cases, actively working against their interests.

You see, we have drifted along since World War II just accepting what our leaders told us we ought to accept. We must begin to think for ourselves and not let them play the game of "just because we did something in the past, we have no choice but to keep on doing it forever."

Maybe, after the end of World War II, foreign aid served a purpose, but after $250 billion of foreign aid, we find ourselves increasingly surrounded by hostile nations. Benjamin Franklin was a lot wiser than these monkeys we've had leading us lately. He said if you want to make a friend, ask that person to do you a favor; don't do him a favor.

You can see what an insight into human nature Franklin had. When you make somebody a charitable gift, he often resents you because it makes him feel inferior. The poor nations who have been given foreign aid resent us bitterly. We should have made them do something to earn it.

But foreign aid stopped being charity a long time ago and became simply a scam. It is only one part of a big package the internationalists have to keep us entangled in foreign affairs to the benefit of the multinational corporations and megabanks.

Today, we need to shift the emphasis of our government back to the American people, back to the American economy, back to American institutions, back to the homefront.

This will not happen, however, unless we, the people, make it happen by putting such unbearable pressure on our elected officials that they can see plainly that no matter how much money they get from the big bucks boys it won't save them from the wrath of American working men and women and small businessmen.

It's either a political reformation now or revolution later.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

U.S. almost canceled contract after scandal

WASHINGTON — Reagan administration officials, concerned about the possibility of criminal activity reaching high into Egyptian and American military and intelligence circles, seriously considered canceling a multimillion-dollar contract early this year. The only thing that dissuaded them, I'm told, was fear of offending the Egyptian government.

Jack Anderson

I reported a year ago on the suspicious circumstances surrounding the contract, which was awarded to the Egyptian American Transport and Services Corp. (EATSCO). This led the FBI and a federal grand jury to investigate the deal. They're trying to find out whether Egyptian and-or American government officials were bribed to assure that EATSCO got the exclusive contract to ship U.S. arms to Egypt.

The contract came up for renewal in April, and administration officials discussed canceling it. But it is traditionally up to the recipient country to select and oversee U.S. arms shipments, and there was a strong possibility that Egypt would resent this intrusion on its prerogative.

Pentagon sources told my associates Dale Van Atta and Indy Badhwar it was this diplomatic consideration that caused the State, Defense and Justice departments to decide jointly that the contract should be renewed despite the cloud hanging over it.

The amount of money involved in the arms-shipping contract isn't peanuts. Shippers' charges are based on the value of the cargo carried.

Not all of the $3.5 billion in military aid promised to Egypt constitutes hardware, and EATSCO was not allowed to handle classified items and some planes. But the value of the shipping contract is still enormous.

According to the secret contract, EATSCO is entitled to charge "up to 9.875 percent of the value of materials shipped." Egyptian sources suggest that an even more secret contract actually boosts the company's fee to 15 or 25 percent.

Most of the arms aid is provided on credit. As it has done for years with Israel, the government is planning to forgive some of these loans to Egypt — which means the American taxpayers are providing a lot of arms free, and also paying the shipping costs.

Up to Aug. 7 of this year, EATSCO had been paid $71.4 million out of the Egyptian credit account, according to a Pentagon official. Another source said that EATSCO so far has shipped $750 million worth of arms. That would jibe roughly with the terms of the secret contract; under the supersecret contract, EATSCO would stand to collect up to $190 million.

On a single shipment of 16 tanks last summer, one of EATSCO's subcontractors charged $750,000 for shipping and $118,000 for handling.

A big problem from the start was Egyptian officials' lack of experience in handling money and the bureaucratic paperwork that is involved in U.S. arms deals. They were used to the Russians, who simply accepted Egyptian arms requests and eventually dumped the stuff on the docks at Alexandria, practically unannounced. There was no oversight.

The Egyptians' procurement mission "is not real sophisticated yet," as a Pentagon source put it. When given bills to audit, for example, they simply rubber-stamped them and forwarded them to the Pentagon. When U.S. auditors began checking after my disclosures a year ago, they turned up discrepancies.

Because of the Egyptians' inexperience in U.S. bureaucratic methods, the No. 2 man at the Defense Security Assistance Agency in 1979, Erich Von Marbod, was assigned to expedite the process. One source said Von Marbod was "an obstructionist" in the award of the shipping contract to a Geneva-based firm called Tersam, whose secret owner turned out to be a Palestinian.

Ultimately, after an internal furor over the Palestinian-owned company within the Pentagon, Tersam disappeared from the scene. In its place, in the same offices and with the same cable number, EATSCO appeared and got the contract. The company's new president was Thomas Clines, a former high CIA official who had worked with Von Marbod on arms shipments to the late shah of Iran.

JOLT FOR JOBLESS: Millions of jobless Americans probably don't realize it, but they'll be giving part of their unemployment benefits back to Uncle Sam next April 15 in the form of income taxes.

As part of the administration's $100 billion tax increase, the rule governing taxability of unemployment compensation was tightened. A single person used to be able to make $20,000 in combined income and jobless benefits without having to pay tax on the benefits; for married couples, the total was $25,000.

But under the new regulation, the ceiling on combined earnings and benefits are $12,000 and $18,000. This means a lot more jobless will find they owe income taxes on all or part of their unemployment compensation.

Taxes will be owed on either the entire amount of compensation or on one-half of the excess of all income over the newly lowered ceiling, whichever is less. John May, author of an unemployment-survival book, gives these examples: If you worked eight months and earned $12,000, then collected $2,400 in jobless benefits, you'll pay taxes on half of all your excess ($1,200) instead of on the full $2,400 in benefits. But if you earned $16,000 and collected $2,400 in jobless benefits, you'll pay tax on all the benefits instead of on half the $6,400 you took in above the ceiling.

INSIDE REPORT:

Anti-Israeli reaction should help Gemayal

WASHINGTON — Shortly before his assassination, Lebanon's President-elect Bashir Gemayal was "coerced" by armed Israeli troops into boarding a helicopter to be flown south just across the border for a final confrontation on Israel's unsatisfied demand that he sign a peace treaty.

Rowland Evans

That was not the first journey by Israel's man-in-Beirut to talk face-to-face with Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Defense Minister Ariel Sharon. Their alliance had been solid.

Robert Novak

Gemayal's decision to thwart Begin was thus a seminal turnaround in which the U.S. played a major role. For the first time since the 1975 civil war began in Lebanon, Gemayal's refusal to play Begin's Quisling ended Israel's dominance over Lebanon's bloody politics and enthroned the U.S.

The only concession that Begin could extract from Bashir Gemayal was half-baked: At an appropriate time following his swearing-in as president, he told Begin, he would agree to end the state of beligerency between the two countries.

Gemayal's late-night flying visit to Prime Minister Begin on Sept. 10, four days before his assassination, has been reported (but never confirmed by either the Israeli or Lebanese governments). Not known until completion last week of a confidential Reagan administration intelligence study are these new facts: that the Israelis "coerced" the Lebanese president-elect ("kidnapped" him, one Middle East insider told us) to get him into an Israeli helicopter for the short trip south — and browbeat him when he got there; and that Begin knew that if the U.S. could maneuver itself into the role of chief mediator between Lebanon, Syria and Israel, Begin's dream of an Israeli-made peace treaty with Beirut would fade away.

For Begin, a peace treaty on Israel's terms with its northern Arab neighbor was the one certain way of justifying Israel's casualties, military and diplomatic, during the bloody invasion of Lebanon. A treaty with Bashir Gemayal, Israel's Christian-Falangist partner for six years, would also guarantee continuity for Israel's aggressive commercial and economic exploitation in southern Lebanon, with an open border assured.

President Reagan's diplomatic agents saw disaster in tha sequence of events: prolonged Israeli hegemony. A Lebanese-Israeli treaty drafted in Begin's Knesset office could not conceivably advance the U.S. peace plan to settle the Israeli-occupied Palestinian West Bank problem. Indeed, Israel's favored position with Bashir Gemayal would contribute to new outrages against the nearly half million non-armed Palestinian refugees in Lebanon Senior administration officials believe that Israel envisaged a political partnership with Lebanon that might promote a flight of those Palestinians to Syria, spreading the virus of homeless Palestinians even wider.

Bashir Gemayal — only four days before his assassination — had listened closely to Reagan's emissaries. With a pledge of long-term American involvement in Lebanon, backed by the president's Sept. 1 peace plan, he cast his lot with Reagan and for a new and united Lebanon. Summoned by Begin twice in those final days, once in late August, then on Sept. 10, he refused the Israeli demand for an instant treaty.

Exhaustive study by U.S. intelligence agencies has discovered no link of any kind between Bashir Gemayal's defiance of Begin and his assassination by Lebanese extremists on Sept. 14. American specialists insist, however, that with Israel's closest collaborator dead, his then unknown successor would be even less pliant in dealing with Israel. That dictated an immediate Israeli advance into West Beirut to give the Falangist militia their chance to "purify" the Shatila and Sabra Palestinian camps of PLO remnants — and perhaps frighten unarmed Palestinian refugees into headlong flight.

The massacres followed. In their aftermath came an anti-Israeli reaction far harsher than Bashir Gemayal's defiance over a new treaty. American mediators are counting on that reaction to help solidify the new regime of Bashir's brother, newly-elected President Amin Gemayal, and America's new role as the dominant power in Lebanese affairs, the last bequest of Bashir.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Oct. 8, the 281st day of 1982. There are 84 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 8, 1934, Bruno Hauptmann was indicted for murder in the death of the infant son of aviation pioneer Charles Lindbergh.

On this date:

—In 1939, Germany incorporated western Poland into the Third Reich after conquering it at the start of World War II.

—In 1945, the United States announced it would share its atomic secrets only with Britain and Canada.

—In 1961, Prince Souvanna Phouma was chosen premier of the new provisional coalition government in Laos.

—In 1976, President Ford apologized to Polish-Americans for saying in his debate with Jimmy Carter that the Soviet Union did not dominate Eastern Europe.

Ten years ago: U.S. presidential advisor Henry Kissinger negotiated with North Vietnamese representatives at the Paris peace talks.

Five years ago: The leader of Spain's Basque minority, August Uncena Barranech, was assassinated in Guernica.

Today's birthdays: Civil rights leader Jesse Jackson is 41 years old.

Lt. Gov. Hobby reveals five-point water policy proposal

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby has announced a five-point proposal for state water policy, including state assistance for water projects and consideration of a low-interest loan program to assist farmers in financing water-saving equipment.

Hobby said he is in "broad general support" of the recommendations which have been made by the Governor's Water Task Force and Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council on water development and conservation.

After studying those proposals, he said, he was recommending the following:

—That the state insure the water-related debt of local political subdivisions.

—That the Water Development Fund be continued and expanded, "especially in the water quality area."

—That the state's storage acquisition program and role in reservoir financing be restructured.

—That the state address the "very real needs of agricultural water users."

—That the state give increased attention "to conservation and better management of state water."

Hobby says that a bond insurance program "would get the best possible bond rating for the water bonds of Texas cities and special districts, thus lowering interest rates and directly saving money for ratepayers."

But even with such a program, Hobby says, there would be "hardship cases" which would need assistance that would be provided by the Water Development Fund (which has been in existence since 1957).

Hobby comments that "perhaps the most important long-range water problem faced by this state is major reservoir construction," which historically has been handled in large part by the Corps of Engineers.

"Unfortunately," he notes, "as in so many other areas, the federal government's willingness to play this role of banker is diminishing."

"One way of partially filling this void is to restructure the state's storage acquisition proram," Hobby says.

Under this existing program, the state issues bonds and uses the proceeds to purchase water storage space in a reservoir.

But, Hobby says, the problem with the current program is that "it coexists with the state's direct loan program within the Water Development Fund," and when the fund is low, "no money is available for storage acquisition since hardship loans are of a higher priority."

The storage acquisition program would work better if set apart with a separate debt authorization, Hobby argues, "with legislative approval required before an investment is made in a given project."

The program "would have to be carefully constructed to insure that the state responds only to reasonable foreseeable growth and does not act as a speculative developer," he says.

For many years, Hobby comments, "agricultural users have planned on the possibility of water imported from other states. But it is becoming apparent that such an event, if it ever occurs, is a long way off."

Therefore, he says, "it is important to proceed with other more immediately practical plans," including the possibility of a state bond finance, low-interest loan program to aid farmers in purchasing "the capital equipment necessary to use water more efficiently."

"In some cases, the technology currently exists to cut agricultural water applications by 40 to 50 percent," Hobby says.

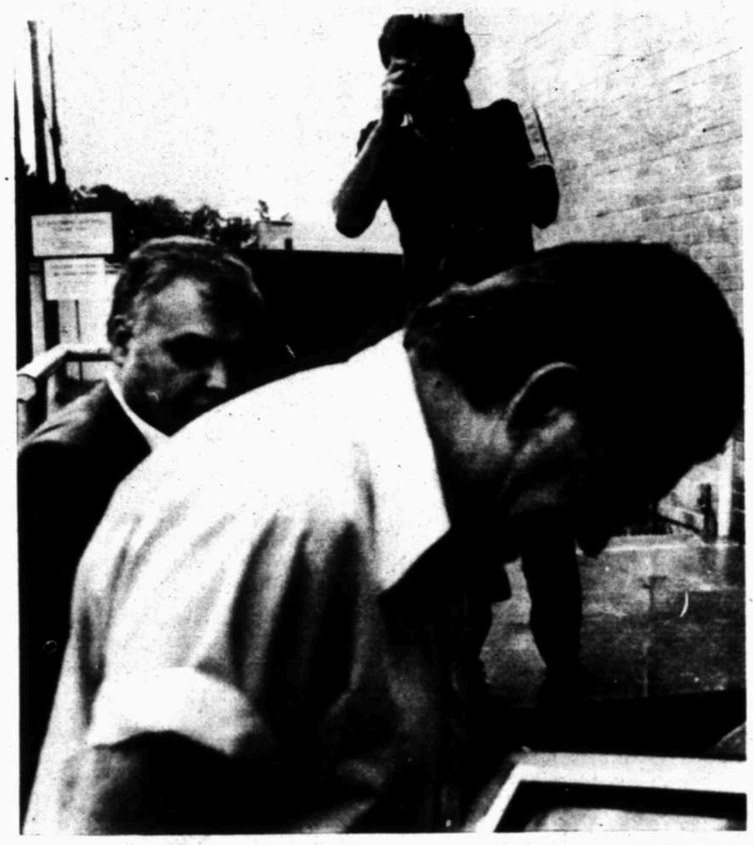

"And since over three-quarters of the water used in Texas is used in agriculture, the potential for saving is enormous."

Hobby says he has instructed his staff to begin preparing recommendations on how to implement such a program.

"If such a program — implemented through underground water conservation districts and tied to existing irrigated acreage — proves workable and can prolong the life of our underground water supplies by several decades, all Texans will be winners."

Hobby also urges increased research and development efforts aimed at agricultural water use.

The final part of the program, Hobby says, should be increased attention to conservation and better management of state water.

Being escorted into the federal building at McAllen following his surrenger to authorities on alien smuggling charges is Robert James Manners. He and another man turned themselves in; a third suspect has not been apprehended.

Alien smuggling suspects in custody

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — Authorities had two suspects in custody but few answers in their investigation of the deaths of four Salvadorans who suffocated in an abandoned truck during an alleged alien smuggling operation.

Robert James Manners, 51, and Edward Gene Hunter, 38, appeared here Thursday before U.S. Magistrate Susan Williams on federal charges of transporting illegal aliens and conspiracy to transport illegal aliens within the United States.

The suspects, both from the Pharr-Edinburg area, were being held at the Hildago County Jail in Edinburg on $500,000 bond each, magistrate's clerk Olga Sauceda said.

The third person named in a federal arrest warrant remained at large, Border Patrol staff officer E.J. Vickery said.

Jim Kerr, assistant chief of the Border Patrol here, said it was unclear what roles Manners and Hunter allegedly played in the smuggling operation. "We still don't have all the answers," he said.

Kerr said the men surrendered Thursday after their lawyer called Border Patrol officials to ask if warrants had been issued for them. He said the surrender came as a surprise, but noted they were under "a lot of pressure."

"Once they realized what had happened, probably there was a lot of panic at the time when they opened the trailer," he said. "Instead of having people in there that they would turn a profit on, they found a lot of problems."

The maximum penalty for alien smuggling is five years in prison and a $2,000 fine for each person smuggled.

Hidalgo County Medical Examiner Dr. Ruben Santos said the three men and one woman died of suffocation compounded by heat stroke after being left in the stifling, sealed truck.

The truck, abandoned by the smugglers, was found Monday night about 15 miles north of the Mexican border. Its air conditioning had failed, leaving the Salvadorans locked inside to suffer and die.

Of the 12 surviving Salvadorans found in the rig, four remained hospitalized and eight were in the custody of the Border Patrol.

The Patrol also was holding seven other Salvadorans found in an orange grove Wednesday about three miles west of the trailer near Edinburg.

Witness places Harrelson at scene of Wood slaying

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Shortly before U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. was assassinated, a lawyer ran "smack dab into" alleged hit man Charles V. Harrelson near where the fatal shot was fired, a prosecutor says.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ray Jahn said Thursday in his opening statement in the trial of Harrelson and two women that Chrys Lambros would place Harrelson at the scene of the killing on May 29, 1979.

Ms. Lambros, who lived in the same luxury townhouse complex as Wood, left her apartment about a hour before Wood was slain and "ran smack dab into Charles Harrelson in the carport area...," Jahn said.

He said the government also would call several witnesses who saw a man fitting Harrelson's description at the complex the morning Wood was shot and a car resembling one belonging to Harrelson's wife speeding from the scene.

Walton attends conference

Glen Walton, administrator of Permian Basin High School, attended the fall regional conference of The College Board held at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Walton and other administrators and school counselors attending the meeting were told that the basic academic competencies for students preparing to enter college are going to change.

"In the '60s, education allowed too much permissiveness in offering a lot of 'play' courses," said Don Beshara of Austin, member of The College Board who coordinated the meeting with UTPB.

He added that requirements for entrance into colleges would be tightened following the standards of the College Board's Educational Equality Project.

The project, a statement of what academic preparation for college in the 1980's ought to be, represents the collective judgment of more than 400 school and college teachers and administrators. It was hammered out in the course of countless meetings conducted during 1980-81 under the aegis of the College Board's Educational Equality Project. It is being presented for consideration to the members of the College Board and other schools and colleges, to policymakers and to the public.

"You may have heard that the University of Texas at Austin is tightening up on their entrance requirements," said Beshara.

Recommended are increased competencies in basic academic areas, such as reading, writing, speaking and listening, mathematics, reasoning and studying.

Other topics of discussion included procedures for giving college entrance examinations, advanced placement tests and financial aid.

Following the morning workshop chaired by Beshara, the group attended a luncheon program hosted by Robert T. Warrmann, director of admissions and registrar at UTPB. Speaker was Dr. Robert Reeves, dean of the college of science of engineering at UTPB.

Sagging farm economy emerges as major election issue

From Our Washington Bureau

By PHILLIP SWANN

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7 — Texas politicians will have a tough row to hoe this November if they fail to reap the farm vote.

This week, they began to plant the seeds:

— Gov. William Clements flew to Washington this week to discuss the state's ailing farm economy with President Reagan, Agriculture Secretary John Block and House Agriculture Committee Chairman Kika de la Garza, D-Mission.

— A group of Texas Democrats who are supporting Clements' opponent, Attorney General Mark White, traveled across West Texas this week attacking the governor's farm record.

— Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, who is being challenged by Rep. James Collins, introduced legislation last week that would give aid to farmers during farm embargoes. Bentsen also announced the formation of an 83-member "Texas Farmers and Ranchers for Bentsen" committee.

— About two dozen farmers and their families drove their tractors to a weekend rally at the state capitol to protest economic conditions. Speakers, including Democratic agriculture commissioner candidate Jim Hightower, called for a coalition to stem the increasing number of farm bankruptcies.

The message is clear: The sagging farm economy has emerged as one of the most important issues in this year's state races. Farmers, who are facing their worst year since the Depression, are angry, and angry people usually turn out at the polls to vent their frustrations.

"Every effort will be made to line up (farmer) votes," says Ed McKay, director of national affairs for the Texas Farm Bureau. "We have a lot of farmers and ranchers in trouble and upset."

National farm experts say that Republicans this year could be hurt by an outpouring of protest in November. Many farmers are unhappy with President Reagan's opposition to higher support payments and other programs that would offer immediate relief.

This especially bodes ill for Texas Republicans, because farmers in the state traditionally vote Democratic. The farm vote could be the difference in a close contest, such as the Clements-White race.

Clements' trip this week was a clear signal that he feels he needs the the farm vote. It was a perfect vehicle for him to show that he is concerned about the slumping farm economy.

"The governor feels that he's going to have to shore up some of the agriculture support," said David Senter, national director of the American Agriculture Movement.

In a reference to Clements' huge campaign warchest, Senter added: "Clements can't buy the farmer's vote."

Bill Dunn, a spokesman for White, says Clements has never had a "farm policy" and must go on a publicity tour to win the farmers' support.

But not every governor can stop by at the White House to have a little farm talk with the president. And Clements wisely brought several Texas farm leaders and a campaign television crew with him to Washington, prompting one Agriculture Department official to say, "We've got 50 governors, but thank goodness only one is from Texas."

Clements and White must court the unhappy farmers, but so do Bentsen, Collins, and every other candidate who is involved in a tough race.

"It's a big political issue," said Ron Slover, the Republican candidate who is challenging Rep. Jack Hightower in the 13th Congressional District with its large farming constituency. "The farm program is breaking our backs. There's no market, low prices and tremendous reserves."

Slover says that all incumbents, including Democrats, may be in trouble with farmers who are looking to strike out at the status quo.

Farmers sell livestock by computer

AGRICULTURE

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — In what some farm economists say is the most radical change in selling livestock since biblical times, stockmen are turning to computers to market their animals.

If set up correctly, they say, an electronic marketing system can mean better prices for sellers, more profit for buyers and animals that go to slaughter in better condition.

Most cattle and sheep in this country are sold in a manner almost unchanged in thousands of years. Though trucks and railcars have replaced drovers and shepherds, animals still are brought to a marketplace, auctioned off and reshipped to a buyer.

Today's methods are "a little more sophisticated haggling system, but still haggling," says Jim Bell, extension economist in agricultural marketing at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

The advantage of computers, he says, is that animals stay on the ranch, buyers and sellers stay in their offices and the haggling is done in milliseconds.

Last month, Bell and other Virginia Tech officials held conferences in Atlanta, Chicago, Oklahoma City and Salt Lake City to explain how electronic gear can be used to sell livestock and even such farm products as grain and cotton.

"Here in the West, we have no choice but to look at it," says Earl Brown, manager of the Salt Lake City-based Producer's Livestock Association.

"I still have some reservations about some of the problems we're going to run into in the cattle industry," says Brown, who attended the final conference late August in Salt Lake City. "But I think the electronic marketing process has fairly well proven itself where it can establish fairly large numbers with equitability of product."

Brown, whose association markets about 1 million head a year in six Western states, says he was so impressed by the meeting that "very likely within the next several months or year we'll be in the electronic marketing of sheep."

One system showcased at the conferences was Electronic Marketing Association Inc., which Virginia Tech and the Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services helped launch in 1978 under a U.S. Department of Agriculture grant.

EMA, the only livestock auction in America run entirely by computer, allows buyers from Canada to Texas to bid for slaughter lambs over computer terminals. The system presently serves the Eastern Lamb Producers Cooperative in Virginia and the Corn Belt Lamb Auction in Wisconsin.

Under the system, sellers list their animals with the cooperative or auction, which may combine smaller consignments into lots for sale. The morning of the auction, descriptions of lambs, pickup points and general market information is available for buyers to call up on computer screens.

At a preset time, buyers gather at terminals and the computer lists a lot for sale and an opening price. If no bid is received within a set time, the price drops $1 and continues to do so until a buyer hits a bid key on the terminal keyboard.

That bid registers on all terminals, along with a countdown of how much time others have to bid. If someone hits the bid key, the price goes up 25 cents and the countdown starts again. If no bid is received, the computer "gavels down" the sale.

The computer tells the successful bidder the lot number, size, average weight, location, seller, sale price and estimated cost. It also thanks him for his business.

EMA officials say the system encourages more potential buyers to bid, since they don't need to travel to remote auction yards to inspect and bid on sheep. Small lots, which might be sold among just two or three bidders at a local yard, can be offered to buyers in a dozen states. Animals also avoid the stress and subsequent weight loss of a trip to market.

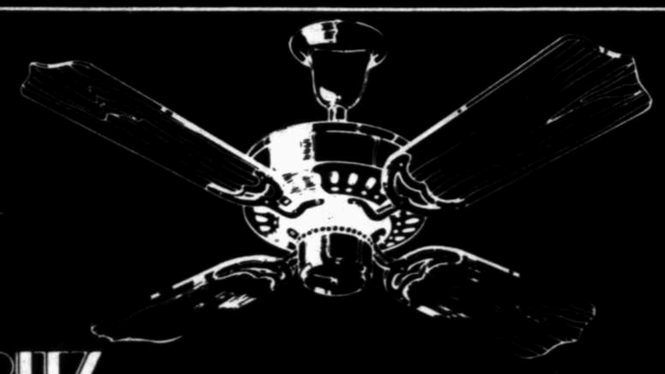

Since buyers save travel and shipping costs and can expect a better animal backed by the cooperative's or auction's reputation, they tend to bid higher — in some cases, up to $10 more a hundredweight, EMA says.

In both Wisconsin and Virginia, "there have been improved prices and numbers marketed," Brown says. "You can't argue with that."

Another valuable byproduct, says Virginia Tech economist Paul Rodgers, is information — buyers and sellers have access to continually updated figures on market trends.

The marketing conferences, attended by about 400 people in the four cities, also discussed telephone or teletype auctions used for livestock and for cotton in the South. And they dealt with adapting computer programs to sell cattle and hogs.

Belgian art show honors french fries

By ROBERT WIELAARD
AP Writer

ANTWERP, Belgium (AP) — A high-spirited campaign has been launched in defense of french fries and Belgium's countless grease emporiums that vend them.

It reflects the not wholly tongue-in-cheek view of promoters Paul Ilegems and Jef Meert that a stand must be made, primarily in art, for quintessentially Belgian food.

"Too many Belgians are ashamed of fries because they figure so prominently in Belgian jokes in (neighboring) Holland and France," said Ilegems, an art history teacher at Antwerp's Royal Academy of Fine Arts.

"We try to remove that shame and replace it with pride."

He and art dealer Meert, another Dutch-speaking Belgian, have put together a traveling art show of 40 pop art works having french fries as a theme, such as the lard sculpture of a bag of fries.

They also sell "french fries jewelry" (large lapel buttons showing a smiling bag of fries in the colors of Belgium's red, yellow and black flag) and a booklet of french fries poems.

His and Ilegems' fascination with french fries is understandable. Whoever thought up the name "french fries," never travelled to Belgium: the greasy potato sticks are the ultimate Belgian food.

Belgians — though split into two languages — show uncharacteristic solidarity in their zest for "frites" or "frieten," which are served in heaping quantities with every meal and along every highway.

French fries stands (called "frietenkoten" or "baraques a frites") fit into Belgian cityscapes the way drive-in hamburger joints do in America.

Multicolored, steel-sided eyesores that can masquerade as Swiss chalets on wheels or castles puffing greasy steam, the stands are becoming victims of urban renewal.

The "Society for the Preservation of Belgian Frites Stands," was founded by Meert and Ilegems. "We are not a pressure group ... We merely want to draw attention to the fact we are losing typically Belgian landmarks," said Meert recently.

Last year, two such landmarks were closed down here. While this hardly leaves Antwerp strapped for fries, Meert and Ilegems fear a trend has been started.

To fuel some pride in fries, Meert and Ilegems started their art show last fall by commissioning Belgian artists to do "Frites Art." It has been to several Belgian cities and to Amsterdam.

It includes more than 100 photographs of Belgian fries stands, a collage of the kind of plastic forks dispensed with any order of fries and the lard sculpture that smells worse than a busy fries stand.

"It is 'Frites Art,'" said Meert. "It's Belgium's answer to typically American works by artists such as Roy Liechtenstein, Andy Warhol or Claes Oldenburg.

"We started this because we noticed a dearth of art works dealing with fries in this country. The only thing we found was a 1949 Belgian comic strip hero who runs a fries stand."

"We also envisage a 'frites museum' for Belgium," said Ilegems. "We expect a 'merits-a-detour' notation in the Michelin guide."

Munching on a steaming order of French fries in downtown Antwerp, Ilegems said his fancy for the greasy food dates back to the 1950s when, as a child, he collected the small forks.

He now has 30 different models including metallic-colored, two-pronged, sleek samples used at New York's World Fair in 1964.

For fries to be good, Meert said, they must be made from a good potato and must be cooked twice in ox fat.

"But the true secret of good french fries," added Meert, lowering his voice to a whisper and stabbing a tiny fork into a bag of fries smothered in relish, "is that they must be fried by Belgians."

Florida is home to thousands of Finns

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
AP Writer

LAKE WORTH, Fla. (AP) — In a land of eternal sunburn, where the only chilly winds come from overworked air conditioners, and where cool Baltic waters and blocks of Juhla cheese are only memories, Florida's Finlandia thrives an entire hemisphere away from the midnight sun.

Fifteen thousand Finns, far from their Scandinavian homeland, have transplanted their own Finnish bakeries, restaurants, meeting halls, cultural societies and choirs, old-folks home, Finnish-speaking beauticians, doctors, dentists, radio announcers and some 40 sauna-equipped hotels to this resort just south of West Palm Beach.

In Lake Worth, being bilingual means "suomea puhutaan" — Finnish spoken. "Back there" means Finland, the old country for some, but just a name reverently mentioned by mothers and fathers for others.

Why did the Finns choose to settle in the Palm Beach County city of Lake Worth and neighboring Lantana, where the supermarket tabloid the National Enquirer is published?

"Why here? Couldn't say, really," puzzles Frank Lampe, 65, a retired accordion player who leads Florida Finns in foot-stomping weekend bashes at the American-Finnish Tourist Club.

Lampe moved to Lake Worth from Greenwich, Conn. "I'd been coming here often from the North to give concerts, and grew to feel at home."

To Americans, Lake Worth is only another Florida seaside spa. If they're film aficionados, they may know it as the sizzling backdrop for the recent 1950s-style movie, "Body Heat," starring William Hurt and Kathleen Turner.

But to native Finns or first-generation Finnish-Americans and Finnish-Canadians, Lake Worth is something unique — their own little slice of Florida's sun and fun that they started colonizing when it was pineapple-producing country in the 1920s.

Marku Konttinen of the League of Finnish-American Societies estimates Lake Worth and Lantana lure 90 percent of his sun-starved compatriots who visit the United States — more than any other tourist area.

Many who live here are first- and second-generation American and Canadian citizens, but many others retain Finnish nationality, according to Lake Worth's Finnish consul, Edwin Lammi.

Florida's Finlandia keeps growing.

Flaming-haired Maria Multisilta is one newcomer, along with Nordic entrepreneurs contracting to build cottages in the Florida sand, merchants hawking homestyle foods or handicrafts, and retirees seeking year-round warmth.

The 18-year-old Helsinki student flew to Lake Worth at the beginning of the summer to improve her English. Her desire to leave melted away in the Florida sun.

"I don't think I really want to go back to Finland," she says. "It's too cold in the homeland. Here is better...warm."

Miss Multisilta hasn't obtained permanent resident status, but she says she has friends and family among Lake Worth's 29,000 inhabitants to house and feed her.

Many become residents of Florida's Finlandia after long layovers in Brooklyn's "Finntown" neighborhood in New York, or in the giant enclaves of northern Minnesota, Michigan's Upper Peninsula and the Boston suburbs.

The Greater Lake Worth Chamber of Commerce prints brochures extolling the area in Finnish, for distribution throughout Scandinavia. Blue-and-white crosses flap from restaurants and gift shops, and hotels bear familiar names, such as Midnight Sun Apartments & Hotel and the Altai.

The population of Florida's Finlandia explodes by another 6,000 to 10,000 tourists during a typical winter, says Onni Lanne, a retired radio broadcaster and now correspondent of the Finnish-language newspaper Amerikan Uutiset, printed in New York Mills, Minn. Around Thanksgiving, Finns by the hundreds flee the 18-hour nights and subzero temperatures of home for Florida.

In season, Finnish is heard as much as English. A tobacconist says he struggles to secure a supply of Scandinavian cigarettes. One taxi company hires Finnish-speaking drivers to cater to its Scandinavian clientele.

But like an arctic snowball whisked to the tropics, some Finns have trouble adapting to Florida.

Bourse building stages successful comeback

By ERICH SMITH
AP Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was once the financial center of the city and a major grain trading center of the nation. Later, it would be a wax museum.

Now, the Bourse building is staging a comeback as one of the more fashionable shopping centers and office buildings in Philadelphia, after a two-year, $19 million renovation.

"It was the chance to produce a beautiful public place — and to make money," said Ronald Kaiserman, one of the developers. "We felt the building had financial viability and the potential to be a magnificent landmark."

Located within sight of historic Independence Hall and the Liberty Bell, it serves as a reminder that Philadelphia was a leading city in the United States long after the days of the Continental Congress.

The Bourse was built in 1895, modeled after an exchange in Hamburg, Germany. Large Corinthian columns finished in Mycenean marble flanked the trading floor where brokers wheeled and dealed. In its heyday, it housed offices of AT&T, McCormick Steamship lines, grain dealers and export agents.

There were machinery exhibits for visiting businessmen, a swank cafeteria for the brokers and a large ball on a pole on the roof that dropped each day at noon to help ship captains set their clocks in the harbor.

Each year after Christmas, the brokers stopped trading so they could have a grain fight, flinging flour, oats, rye and wheat in a wild battle. The hijinks were briefly interrupted by World War I, then resumed during the 1920s.

But the building began a long decline during the Depression. The Board of Trade left for Chicago. AT&T cut back on its rental space and then left. By 1967 the once-proud building was the home of a wax museum. Finally, it stood vacant.

Kaiserman bought the building for $2 million, "about what we would have paid for vacant ground."

It was a wreck. There was water damage from a leaking roof, chunks of the Corinthian columns were missing, the tiled floor was damaged beyond repair.

The renovation started in 1979. The columns were repaired, the tile in the Great Hall was replaced and a skylight at the bottom of a light well was raised seven stories to the roof.

Most ambitious of the changes was tearing out two brick walls on either side of the light well, reinforcing them and replacing them with a new glass curtain wall that opens up what had been a closed, confining space.

"We thought we could do something different," Kaiserman said. "We were trying not to create your typical mall."

Typical the stores are not. They tend to be highbrow — and high-priced. Yves St. Laurent has a large store for men and women in one corner. In another, the centuries-old Caswell-Massey Co. offers exotic perfumes, including one they used to sell to George Washington.

Different flavor in potatoes

DINNER FOR FOUR Lamb Chops With Peas
Fresh Pear Pie

PIMIENTO POTATOES

Prepared ahead and reheated before serving.

4 medium baking potatoes (about 1½ pounds)

¼ cup (½ of a ¼-pound stick) butter, at room temperature

¼ cup well-drained sliced pimiento, from a 4-ounce jar

¼ cup grated (medium-fine) cheddar cheese

Paprika

Bake potatoes on the middle rack of a preheated 425-degree oven until centers feel soft when fork-pierced — about 50 minutes. Cut a thin lengthwise slice from the top of each potato. Scoop out all pulp, reserving shells. Mash pulp with butter; stir in pimiento and one half (2 tablespoons) of the cheese. Spoon back into shells. Sprinkle with remaining cheese and paprika. Refrigerate. Before serving, reheat potatoes on a cookie sheet in a preheated 425-degree oven until hot through and browned — 30 to 40 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Large polio outbreak strikes Taiwan

ATLANTA (AP) — The largest outbreak of polio in Taiwan in 16 years has struck 388 people, the national Centers for Disease Control reports.

Dr. Walter Orenstein said Thursday that CDC scientists are working with Taiwan health authorities to find the cause of the outbreak.

"We recommend that any traveler traveling to any area where polio is occurring continuously or epidemically be immunized against polio," Orenstein said.

Most cases were in children under the age of 2, the CDC said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

A mass vaccination program has begun on the island aimed at the high risk group of children under age 5, Orenstein said.

Ensemble dedicates album to Sousa

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The 30-year-old Eastman Wind Ensemble has devoted its first digital recording to John Philip Sousa.

Titled "Sousa Spectacular," the album features the wind ensemble performing such marches as "Anchor and Star," "The Washington Post," "Liberty Bell," "King Cotton," and "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

The founding of the ensemble at the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music in 1952 began the symphonic wind ensemble movement in the United States. The ensemble has recorded over 45 albums.

Anatomy of A Valley Girl

'Valley Girls' craze creates booming new business for enterprising 'Valley Boys'

By NOEL OSMENT
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — The second wave of Valley Girls is coming in for the attack.

The song "Valley Girls" is the razor-edged parody (played incessantly all summer on AM radio) of inane teen-age talk endemic to the bourgeois brats of the San Fernando Valley.

In the song, Moon Unit, Frank Zappa's overachieving 14-year-old daughter, backed by her father's band, runs through three minutes of such banalities as "Gag me with a spoon," "I'm sure, that's like gross, barf out!" and "Oh ma' gawd."

Just when it seemed like the whole scene was totally over and the song would slip comfortably into obscurity, a bunch of other people began mounting a new assault.

There's the Beverly Hills speech pathologist working with recalcitrant teen-agers dragged in by parents to be cured of such "Valspeak" defects as "grody to the max."

A 19-year-old University of Southern California business major, Mike Singer, is producing the Totally Awesome 1983 Girls of the Valley Calendar — using 30 genuine Valley girls as models — with props supplied by General Motors, Merle Norman cosmetics and several Valley clothing purveyors.

And two young men, partners in a corporate communications firm, have published "The Valley Guide to Reality," complete with maps delineating the communities of the San Fernando Valley and photos of cultural landmarks such as the Valley's late performing arts center, now a Jehovah's Witness temple.

The pair, Matt Hunter, 31, and David Korobkin, 28, were Valley boys themselves, growing up in what they call an "air-conditioned shopping mall society."

The "were" is very important. Both escaped the Valley upon coming to maturity and have set up shop in Newport Beach, Calif.

For an interview both were dressed in casual pants — Hunter in chinos, Korobkin in jeans — with preppy-looking summer sports jackets and shirts.

"If I'd stayed in the Valley my clothes would be highly flammable," Korobkin said.

Maybe so for Korobkin — not likely for Hunter. For it is very important to understand that Hunter is an S.O.B. while Korobkin is an N.O.B., which means they represent two very different parts of the Valley.

Hunter grew up south of the boulevard — Ventura Boulevard, that is — in "a really good part of Encino" (a No. 1 Valley Girl goal, according to the book), and went on to be a frat-rat at the University of Southern California.

Korobkin, however, grew up north of the boulevard in Reseda, right in the flatlands — described in the book as "the armpit of the Valley." (This description has not endeared the pair to Korobkin's mother, who still lives there, they said.)

In the manner of affluent, liberal and mobile good-part-of-Encino residents, Hunter's divorced parents now live elsewhere and, Hunter said, virtually none of his high school friends now live in the Valley.

Korobkin's high school friends have stayed in working-class Reseda, Calif., where, he said, most are doing well in businesses like construction, often working in family businesses.

"There's a closeness among people there," he said.

And on weekends, he said, they take off in their RVs and pickups for camping by a river. "Not one of my friends has ever gone to Europe."

Nor, he said, did any of his friends venture beyond Valley limits for their college educations. He insists he felt no need to leave the Valley until he graduated from California Institute of the Arts and learned there was not much need for graphic artists in the Valley.

Hunter and Korobkin say they didn't intend the book as a snob kind of thing, but as a tongue-in-cheek look at a place they were both perfectly happy living in — although neither would consider returning.

"I don't think we thought of ourselves as 'Valleyites' when we were living there, although I got straightened out when I went to USC," Hunter said.

But that was before the days of "No Vals" bumper stickers and a discovery by the media of a whole society of people who, it would appear, spent the better part of their lives "cruising the boulevard" — Van Nuys Boulevard, that is.

Neither Hunter nor Korobkin did a lot of the much-publicized "cruising the boulevard," although it is certainly common, they said.

Although, Hunter said, he occasionally went with friends from other parts of the Valley, it wasn't really part of the S.O.B. lifestyle, which ran more to surfing.

Two exhibits on display

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Two exhibits will be shown at the New Orleans Museum of Art Nov. 7 through Jan. 16, 1983.

One will consists of paintings, drawings, sculptures, lithographs and wood engravings by the French artist Honore Daumier (1808-1879). All of the items come from the Armand Hammer Collection, which contains over 4,000 works by Daumier.

The other is an exhibition of 60 photographs by Mother St. Croix (1854-1940). Mother St. Croix was a Roman Catholic nun of the Ursuline Order in New Orleans, and the photographs depict life in and around the old Urusuline convent near the turn of the century.

Fashions for fall show 'new chic' look in many designs, fabrics

By ELEANOR ROBERTS
Hearst Feature Service

BOSTON — Call it what you will — total dressing, the pulled-together look, the polished air — this fall's fashions are geared to turn you into a superstar, a smoothy.

Even sports or casual clothes have a new chic. Case in point: Ralph Lauren's fatigue jacket of 100 percent cotton teamed with fatigue pants and two shirts, no less — a green and a red workshirt. There's smartness in every line.

Stores are filled with beautiful clothes. And tight budget or not, if you're going to keep up your image, you'll be buying the perfect jacket — long, aristocratically straight and close-cut — or the hit of the season, the pinstripe suit which is as right with a crepe de chine, ruffled jabot blouse for cocktails at the Ritz as it is for the office.

What are women buying?

Suits and more suits. There's a definite move to menswear fabrics — the finest tweeds, plaids and herringbones. Some are terribly Brooks Brothers. Others, like Bill Blass, are high fashion; his glen plaid suit in black and white with a jacket that is half-plaid, half-velvet, is the ultimate in chic.

Black has so taken the country by storm that when you go to a big benefit or a posh party, it looks like a wake. So, if you're shopping for the dinner dress, while the good "little black" (sometimes brightened with a pleated white tuxedo yoke and an alluringly bare neckline with only spaghetti straps to titillate your escort) is great, think about color — purple, blue, rose or sizzling red.

DEAR ABBY

Absent father shows concern for welfare of child, young mother

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: In the summer of 1979 I met and fell in love with a boy I'll call "Joe." He was 23 and very handsome and charming. I had just turned 17. I was a virgin and had always planned to wait until I was married to have sexual relations, but Joe put a lot of pressure on me so I finally gave in because I didn't want to lose him.

I didn't use any birth control and got pregnant. Joe and I broke up and he left the state before I knew I was pregnant. I didn't know where he went or how to contact him. I never thought to ask him his last name. It just never came up.

Anyway, I had my baby alone and put "father unknown" on the baby's birth certificate. Well, last week Joe showed up. He was surprised to hear about the baby and wants to help any way he can and be a father to "little Joey." He is willing to help with my expenses like day care so I can go back to school, work part time and get off welfare.

He also wants his name on the baby's birth certificate, but he's afraid that he will have to pay back welfare for the money I was paid for the last two years. Is that true? It amounts to about $15,000. Thank you. — NEEDS HELP IN TEXAS

DEAR NEEDS HELP: The rules and regulations of welfare departments vary in each state. Your caseworker can answer your questions. I think the welfare department would be delighted to learn that the baby's father returned and is willing to assume the responsibility of supporting his child.

DEAR ABBY: "Sock Fight in Winona" asked if there was a right sock and a left sock, and you said, "No. And if I'm wrong, I'm sure some sock designer will sock it to me."

Well, I'm no sock designer, but you are wrong! When one puts on a pair of socks, after putting on one sock, the other one is always "left," right? — EVAN W. PATTERSON, SEATTLE

DEAR EVAN: Right, until you put on the one that's left, after which neither is left, which follows as the night the day, they are both right, right?

DEAR ABBY: In a recent letter you apologized for your "thoughtlessness and insensitivity" to "Brown and Burning," because of your response to "Cooled Off in Coos Bay." ("Cooled Off" was having trouble responding to her husband's sexual advances, so you suggested that she fantasize that he was Robert Redford, Burt Reynolds and Paul Newman rolled into one.)

"Brown and Burning" wrote to say that the three glamour models you listed wouldn't do for her because she happened to be an Afro-American woman, and why didn't you include at least one black male?

Abby, you also failed to include a Latin-American, Chinese, Japanese, American Indian, Eskimo and several other ethnic minorities.

Since I am of Chinese, Japanese, Polynesian and American Indian origin, I would also appreciate your mentioning at least one representative of MY national origins. Admittedly, by having to do this, you might somewhat dilute the point you are making, but at least you wouldn't be guilty of discrimination. — MULTICOLORED AND BURNING

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's excellent booklet, send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

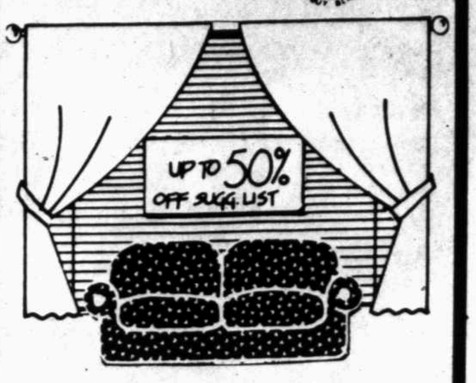

The first baby show, on Oct. 14, 1854, included 127 exhibits, including a child of 5 months who weighed 27 pounds.

German peasants once believed that they could cure an animal's broken leg if they bandaged a chair leg.

Preserves make quick loaf great

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: Early last summer my husband and I went strawberry picking in a commercial field. I used most of the berries to put up a good many jars of preserves. A while ago you wrote that homemade preserves are likely to lose some of their flavor and color if kept for more than six months. I have your recipe for Jam Cake, but I'd appreciate another recipe in which preserves are called for. — BE PREPARED.

NEW OAT LOAF

1¼ cups quick-cooking oats
2 cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup strawberry preserves
½ cup commercial sour cream
¾ cup butter
¾ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 large eggs
½ cup finely chopped walnuts

In a food processor with the metal blade or in an electric blender, grind oats until they are as fine as flour — about a minute; there should be 1 cup oat "flour."

In a medium bowl thoroughly stir together oat flour, all-purpose flour, baking powder and salt.

In a small bowl thoroughly stir together preserves and sour cream.

In a large bowl cream butter, sugar and vanilla; beat in eggs, one at a time, until blended. Add oat-flour mixture in 4 additions, alternately with preserves mixture, stirring each time until dry ingredients are moistened. Stir in walnuts. Turn into a greased and floured 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pan.

Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven for 1 hour; place a tent of foil over the pan; continue baking at 350 degrees until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 25 to 30 minutes. Place on a wire rack to cool for 10 minutes; with a small spatula loosen edges; turn out on the rack; turn right side up; cool completely. Slice ¼-inch thick.

Cancer fund research income

NEW YORK (AP) — The Damon Runyon-Walter Winchell Cancer Fund pays its administrative costs with income from 18,000 ticket sales a year to Broadway shows. Contributors pay $10-$25 over the box office price and receive a tax deduction.

The fund can thus devote all its income from a $7 million endowment, plus annual gifts, to cancer research. The fund awards some $2 million a year to candidates whose projects survive the screening of a scientific advisory committee.

Subtle curves and pierced carvings form a striking silhouette for a focal-point cocktail table from the new "Heritage Old World" collection. With design details adapted from 17th- and 18th-century French antiques, the piece also reflects later-day touches, with its beveled-glass inserts and straight legs. The finish is a chalk-white base with an overall burnt-sienna tone. To achieve the custom "Antique Bisque" effect, areas have been gently hand-rubbed to bring out the light shades of the chalk coloration through the sienna.

Denial 'pipe dream' biggest block on alcoholics' road to recovery

By RICHARD SALTUS
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Pounding the table and sobbing, actor Jason Robards Jr. cried, "Oh, Christ...I loved her so...I began to hate that pipe dream." More than 1,000 doctors applauded.

The "pipe dream" was playwright Eugene O'Neill's metaphor for the way that alcoholics, their spouses and families weave a web of self-deception about the addiction that claims 10 million Americans. And Robards, by performing a powerful soliloquy from O'Neill's play, "The Iceman Cometh," dramatically set the stage for a discussion of alcoholism at the opening session recently of the 34th annual convention of the American Academy of Family Physicians.

Robards, a recovered alcoholic, portrayed the hard-drinking salesman Hickey who finally admits that he killed his wife in part because she allowed him to deceive the two of them about his alcoholic compulsion. "She was always a sucker for a pipe dream," the character says, recalling that no matter how often he slid off the wagon, Evelyn always forgave him.

For Robards, winner of two Academy Awards, it was a brief return to the off-Broadway role that helped launch his career. And after the audience of physicians and spouses gave him a standing ovation, Robards talked about his struggle to confront his own drinking.

"I was repeating the same destructive relationships in three marriages," he said. "It cost me a lot of alimony and made me do a lot of bum movies."

He had clung to the illusion that as long as he could work, it was not imperative to confront the problem. "But I got into a play of O'Neill's ("A Moon for the Misbegotten") and played a brother who dies from drinking," he said. "I started drinking again, and then I realized that the work was gone, that everything was gone."

He also had a car accident that shook him into action. He credits those events and his wife for getting him into successful therapy. Now, said Robards, he drinks only coffee and soda.

By turning to O'Neill, a master at illuminating human weakness, the family physicians sought to emphasize the role of denial in alcoholism. Denial is a psychiatric term for the almost unconscious avoidance of a painful thought, such as the fact that one's drinking is out of control.

Denial may be useful in undergoing risky surgery or even when approaching death, but in alcoholism it is the first and most stubborn obstacle to recovery, said specialists at the session who treat alcoholics.

Research shows pets good for health

By DON FREEMAN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — In a previous existence, as any reincarnation buff will tell you, Harry Reasoner was a noble beast — specifically, that most handsome of hunting dogs, a Brittany spaniel. What Harry never was, in any of his prior lives, was a cat. And good for him!

Don't even talk to me about cats. You have read, of course, about the fellow over in the Borrego desert whose life was saved by his dog, name of Dooley. The fellow had been driving, dog at his side, on a steep, treacherous, 4,000-foot grade. There was an accident and the car went 300 feet down a rocky ravine.

Meanwhile, Dooley the dog, injured in the mishap, traversed through the rain on a freezing night, going up that grade and seven miles beyond to his master's home — it took that dog more than two days but he got there. And then he led a rescue mission back to the scene of the accident and saved his master, who lay severely injured and immobile in the overturned vehicle.

What a wonderful story! I will add to it only the obvious fact that if, instead of a dog, he had owned a cat, this man would have been sunk.

Now back to Harry Reasoner and the segment of "60 Minutes" called, quite properly, "The Human Touch." Its thesis is simple — pets are good for us.

"What I am doing right now could prolong my life," says Reasoner as we see him petting a dog. "Recent studies have shown that the interaction between men and women and their pets can result in a lowering of tension, help for feelings of loneliness, reduction of high blood pressure. It's not quite clear what it does for the dogs."

What does it do for the dogs? It gives them a sense of purpose and fulfillment. Ask Lassie. Ask Rin Tin. Garfield the cat wouldn't know what you were talking about. Morris the cat would ignore the question and do a silly little dance.

Actually, we are talking about serious business here. A psychologist from the University of Maryland tells Reasoner: "Pets are important for your health. Pets can influence your blood pressure — sounds strange to a nation that's been advised to alter their cholesterol, to jog for their health, to play tennis."

And then this psychologist provides this vital statistic — people who have suffered heart attacks are given a much better chance of survival after leaving the hospital if they have a pet.

We see children having their blood pressure measured. "The scientists ran a study with about 40 children," Reasoner says. "They had their blood pressure taken when they were quiet, then while they were reading aloud from a book ... and then they did the same thing with a pet dog nearby. The blood pressure was consistently reduced when the dog was present."

One of the scientists involved was Dr. Aaron Katcher of the University of Pennsylvania, a leading specialist in pet therapy.

"When people talk to people," says Katcher, "blood pressure tends to go up because you always wonder how the other person is evaluating you. With pets it's really quite different. You have trust in a pet. You know the pet will always accept you. ... The pet listens, the pet's available. ... That gives people the kind of comfort which is manifest in a decrease in tension, a loss of anxiety, a loss of stress.

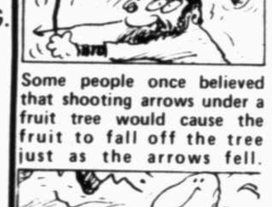

"We know that an essence of having a pet is the ability to gently touch and stroke the animal," he continues, "but for some people it's a very scarce kind of commodity. For an older person whose wife or husband may have died, a pet may be the only being that they can touch and cuddle and talk to, giving them that kind of intimacy which is so important for human existence."

To which Reasoner adds: "What people are learning now is not new. We've always suspected that pets are a good thing, even when they get sick on the rug."

Harry goes on to say: "We're not at the point where doctors are going to write out a prescription, 'Rx — One dog.' But it's nice to know what we've always suspected, that in a strange and lovely way these fellas can earn their keep. It reinforces an old instinctive love."

And so saying he pets his dog.

Cooking questions given right answers

By MINNIE BERNARDINO
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Q: A recipe for oatmeal cookies called for the use of quick-cooking oats. Can I substitute old-fashioned oats for the quick-cooking type in cookie recipes? Will the old-fashioned type become cooked in the short baking time? What is the difference between the two kinds of oats aside from the cooking time involved? Which is better nutritionally?

A: The answer to your first question is "Yes, in virtually all cases, quick-cooking and old-fashioned oats are interchangeable in cookie recipes," according to Ann Clark, manager of the consumer foods group at the Quaker Oats Company. Both types of oats are pre-cooked or steamed to soften them slightly before they are sent through large steel rollers where they are rolled or "flaked" to the desired thickness. Because of this pre-cooking process, the "uncooked" oats in cookies are safe to eat just as "raw" oats in the box are being eaten throughout the world without adverse reports at this time. However, if you want to improve the flavor and texture of oatmeal cookies, toast the oats on a baking sheet at 300 degrees for 8 to 10 minutes before folding them into the other ingredients.

The main difference between the two kinds of oats is that in the old-fashioned oats, the groats (the parts left after oat grains are hulled) are left whole whereas in the quick-cooking type, the groats are cut in several pieces and rolled thinner than the old-fashioned oats to shorten the cooking time. As for nutritional value, there is no difference between the two.

Progeny of two old political families battles in Tennessee

MORRISTOWN, Tenn. (AP) — The young progeny of two old political families, Baker and Cooper, are battling to represent a new Tennessee congressional district, one of the biggest east of the Mississippi River.

Regardless of whether the winner is Republican Cynthia "Cissy" Baker, 26-year-old daughter of Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., or Democrat James Cooper, 28, son of a former governor, the rural 4th District is likely to have the youngest representative in Congress.

There are a handful of equally young candidates in other races around the nation, but they all are long-shots to upset older candidates.

Miss Baker, a former television newswoman in Nashville and Washington, D.C., says politics is in her blood.

Her paternal grandfather, Howard Baker Sr., lost a race for the governorship to Cooper's father, Prentice, in 1938. The senior Baker then was elected as a congressmen, to be succeeded by his wife, Irene, when he died in 1964.

Miss Baker's maternal grandfather was long-time Senate Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen, R-Ill.

At age 8, Miss Baker was shaking hands and pasting bumper stickers on cars for her father's unsuccessful 1964 run for the Senate. Since he was elected two years later, she has campaigned for him in two Senate races and a brief bid for the presidency.

Cooper also bears a revered Tennessee family name, albeit one few people remember.

The Shelbyville native's great-great grandfather was a state senator during the Civil War, and his grandfather was speaker of the Tennessee House in 1915. His father, governor from 1939 to 1945, died 13 years ago.

"It's more like he was my grandfather instead of my father," Cooper said. "You have to be almost a student of history or a senior citizen to remember him."

Miss Baker's name has been both a blessing and a curse to her campaign.

Her father's political connections helped raise a sizable amount of money. Before the Aug. 5 primary, Miss Baker spent $486,000 to Cooper's $258,000. Cooper says he will spend an additional $100,000 to $200,000 before the general election, but Miss Baker refuses to divulge her spending plans.

Miss Baker has devoted much of her time on the campaign trail trying to convince voters that she is not her father's puppet and won't be elected on the strength of his name alone.

"Howard Baker cannot shake the hands that Cissy Baker has to shake," she said when she opened her campaign in May at the family home in Huntsville.

Baker stayed out of his daughter's campaign before the primary, but in the past few weeks he has quietly made some telephone calls to solicit support from county officials.

Family wants Liberian man to stay in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — David Willett is pedaling his bike from California to the nation's capital where he hopes to convince the government not to deport the Liberian man who has lived as a member of his family for 10 years.

But government officials suspect the Willett family adopted the 27-year-old Liberian, whose name is Sam, for the purpose of serving as a hired employee, according to Rep. Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky.

David M. Willett Sr., the father, flatly rejects that argument. "There are four kids in our family and Sam has chores like the rest of them. But there's no way he's a servant, no way," he said.

The younger David, an apprentice engineer who turned 21 on his three-week journey, plans to arrive here today from San Juan Capistrano, Calif. He will spend Friday meeting with officials from the Reagan administration, Congress and the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

If David is unsuccessful, Sam will be deported Jan. 15, 1983.

The case began a decade ago when the Willetts served as Peace Corps volunteers in Liberia.

RUTH WILLETT, the mother, said the family hired Sam as a houseboy when they arrived in the West African nation. After a few months, Mrs. Willett said Sam participated in family activities and was treated like a member of the family. They hired other people to do household chores so he could spend more time on his school work, she said.

The family decided to adopt Sam, who had no parents and was not sure of his age, since he had no birth certificate, according to Mrs. Willett. He estimated that he was around 16.

What Mrs. Willett said they did not realize was that U.S. immigration law said that at 16, Sam was too old to be considered an adopted child and was ineligible for permanent residence in the United States.

That was 10 years, two special congressional bills and hundreds of letters ago.

The first private bill to grant Sam adopted child status was defeated in 1980. A second private bill, sponsored by Rep. Robert Badham, R-Calif., was rejected last summer by the House subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees and International Law.

HOWARD SEELYE, Badham's district administrator, said the congressman is sympathetic to the Willett's problem but doubts the case will be reopened.

"We've done everything we could under the rules to get him citizenship," Seelye said in a telephone interview. "It's taken an abnormal amount of time. We understand why Congress feels he doesn't meet the requirements."

Rep. Mazzoli, chairman of the subcommittee, said the case was turned down by his subcommittee and the House Judiciary Committee which oversees such questions.

"There's concern whether it was a valid adoption," Mazzoli said Wednesday. "There was a question of whether he was a hired employee who was adopted for that purpose. We have to be careful of that. The information we had before us (didn't present) a clear picture."

The Willetts insist that Sam has not been a household servant since the first few months they knew him.

"They didn't do their homework or they'd know that he worked for us as a household kid for two months and then after school for three or four months," said the senior Willett, a credit union manager for a health care company.

"WE TAUGHT HIM to read and write and then asked ourselves, 'How can we abandon him?' " he said.

Sam lives in the family home in California and was enrolled in college before his student visa was revoked last year. Now he works as a maintenance man at a fast-food chain.

"I want to stay here," Sam said Wednesday in a telephone interview. "We've been together as a family for 10 years. There's nothing in Liberia for me. I'm a real member of this family."

Ron Chirlin, a private immigration lawyer in Washington and former Peace Corps volunteer, said the Willett's last hope is that President Reagan, Attorney General William French Smith, or the Immigration and Naturalization Service will defer Sam's deportation to allow him to stay until his problem can be solved.

"Apparently, the subcommittee has decided against the bill because of its belief that Samuel was a household servant for seven years in Africa," Cherlin said in a letter that will be delivered to government officials Friday. "No one has ever given any factual basis for this belief. He was a servant for several months. That's all."

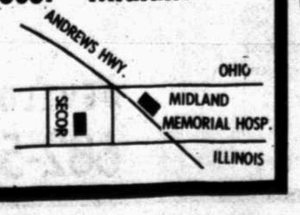

Tropical Storm Rosa hovers off Pacific coast

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The remains of Tropical Storm Rosa hovered off the Pacific coast Wednesday, but the national weather service said it continued to lose strength and posed little threat.

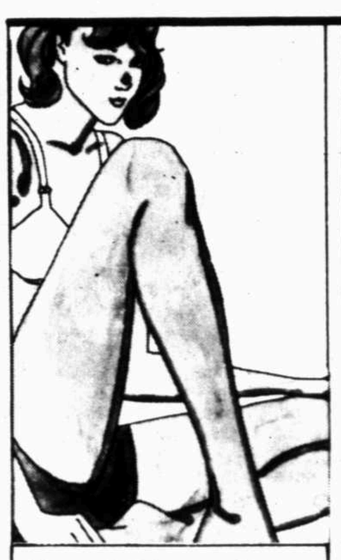

Its center was located 60 miles southwest of Manzanillo in Colima state.

The storm caused street flooding and at least two deaths in the resort city of Acapulco further to the south over the weekend before diminishing.

Justice drops 40-year-old suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department says it tentatively agreed to withdraw a court order in a case dating back 40 years involving Ford Motor Co. and its affiliated credit companies.

Attorney General William French Smith said the agreement was filed Thursday in federal court along with motions by Ford and C.I.T. Financial Corp., once Ford's finance arm, to terminate a consent decree entered by the court Nov. 15, 1938.

The consent decree settled a civil suit filed in 1938 by the Justice Department against Ford and its affiliated credit companies. That suit charged Ford had conspired with the finance companies to restrain trade in Ford automobiles by requiring Ford dealers to patronize only the finance companies affiliated with Ford. Similar suits were filed against Chrylser Corp. and General Motors Corp. and similar consent decrees were entered against those two automakers.

In its filing with the court, the government noted that in the 1930s there were 400 finance companies engaged in automobile financing nationally compared to thousands today.

The motions must be approved by the court.

C.I.T. Financial is the successor to certain credit companies which in 1938 were affiliated with Ford Motor Co. It now is a unit of RCA Corp., and deals in commercial lending.

Ford Motor Credit Co. now is Ford's financing arm. Highly profitable, it earned $144 million for the automaker last year, financing 24.8 percent of Ford's retail deliveries in 1981 and 67.2 percent of Ford and Lincoln-Mercury dealer inventories.

Consumer confindence stalled

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumer confidence in the economy, like so many economic barometers, remains stalled, according to the Conference Board.

The privately funded business research group said Thursday its consumer confidence index registered at 53.5 last month, almost unchanged from August's 53.7.

The Conference Board also reported that its buying plans index fell to 74.7 in September, down from 89 in August.

Both indexes are based on an 100 reading in 1969-1970.

"Consumers' deflated spirits continue to be consistent with the flow of uninspiring economic news," said Fabian Linden, director of the board's consumer research center. "There is not likely to be a significant upswing in consumer confidence until the employment situation shows signs of improvment.

Consumers' reluctance to spend more in a recession provided the nation's major retailers with sluggish sales again in September, and industry analysts said that sales might show little improvement until the Christmas season begins.

Two of the top five retailers reported sales declines, while the other three — including industry leader Sears, Roebuck & Co. — said sales rose less than 3 percent.

Town has most cold hard cash

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alaska and the Washington suburbs dominate the list of communities with the nation's highest incomes, the Census Bureau reports.

The lowest per capita incomes were concentrated in rural areas, the bureau said Thursday.

Newly released statistics from the 1980 census found the nation's highest per capita income in the Bristol Bay, Alaska, census area, at $14,948. Bristol Bay is the nation's largest salmon fishing area.

A distant second in income, at $12,885 per person, was the city of Falls Church, Va., one of the most affluent sububs of the nation's capital.

Alaska had four other areas in the nation's top 14, as did the Washington suburbs in Virginia and Maryland.

Alpine County, Calif., near Lake Tahoe, placed third with a per capita income of $12,861, followed by Juneau, Alaska, $12,757, and Arlington County, Va., $12,565.

Shannon County, S.D., had the nation's lowest per capita income at $2,637, closely trailed by Buffalo County, S.D., at $2,642.

Starr County, Texas, had the third lowest income at $2,668, followed by Owsley County, Ky., $2,946, and Ziebach County, S.D., $3,042.

The figures, collected in April 1980, are for 1979 income. They are for counties, except in the cases of Alaska's census areas and cities in Virginia.

August credit spending weak

WASHINGTON (AP) — American consumers took on just $66 million more in installment debt than they paid off in August, the weakest credit-spending performance since last December, the Federal Reserve Board reports.

The report Thursday was seen as a new indication of the economy's weakness in August. But it was not a surprise since retail sales, including items bought on credit, had fallen 0.9 percent during that month.

Government officials and private economists alike said spending on credit was likely to begin rising faster soon as recent declines in some interest rates finally reach the consumer-loan level.

Analysts have been saying for months that the best hope for recovery from the recession lay in a substantial increase in spending by consumers — an increase that theoretically would then lead to rising production and declining unemployment.

But the new figurs have shown conclusively that no spending surge had shown up by August — a full month after the July 1 tax-rate cut added at least a bit of money to many Americans' pocketbooks.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, in a statement distributed by aides, said "consumer borrowing remained subdued in part because of the high finance charges on consumer loans."

Autoworker layoffs increased

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. automakers say the number of employees on indefinite layoff rose this week to 236,650 from 235,775 a week ago.

Meanwhile, an industry trade journal said Thursday that September car production in the United States fell to a 21-year low.

The automakers attributed the increase in autoworkers idled without a recall date to more furloughs at Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp.Temporary layoffs fell to 26,540, from 53,225 last week. Workers were recalled at General Motors Corp., Ford and American Motors Corp.

Automotive News said the five major U.S. car companies built 425,533 autos in this country in September, down 7 percent from 457,731 assembled in September last year. It was the lowest tally since 355,202 were built in September 1961.

The month wrapped up an also dismal third quarter, with production in July-August-September at its lowest in 12 years, Automotive News said.

EEC pushes steel agreement

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — European Community officials say the Common Market is pushing ahead with plans to implement its steel trade agreement with the United States on Oct. 15 despite uncertainty over whether the the deal would go through.

Hugo Paeman, the top aide to industry commissioner Etienne Davignon, briefed ambassadors of the 10 member states Thursday on the outlines of a possible agreement on shipments of steel pipes and tubes, an EC source said.

He said Davignon would be reporting to the ambassadors next Thursday, one day ahead of the deadline for acceptance or rejection of the pact by U.S. producers.

"The U.S. industry still hasn't made up its mind," a community spokesman said. "Its approval may depend on the community's attitude on tubes and pipes."

Officials said they were unaware of a U.S. industry demand for limiting the EC's share of the U.S. market for 11 products to 5 percent, instead of the 5.75 percent provided for in the settlement worked out between the EC and the United States in August.

They added that an emergency meeting of EC foreign ministers could be convened next week to consider the EC reaction to possible new U.S. offers for a revised trade accord.

Some think Aggies joking about gas

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Researchers at Texas A & M University announced Thursday that they have found a way to produce hydrogen cheaply from water, a feat, they said, that could point the way to solving the nation's energy problems.

But other scientists working in the energy field said they are skeptical of the claim, which may have been motivated by wide publicity given a similar announcement from the University of California, Berkeley a few weeks ago.

Thursday's announcement was made before any scholarly account of the work was accepted by a scientific journal, which is the normal path for reporting such work, and is the latest example of a trend among scientists in recent years toward publication by press conference.

Because of a pending patent application, the Texas scientists declined to be specific about how they had achieved the results they claimed. "I suppose that you'll have to trust me," said the chief researcher, John R. Bockris, in a telephone interview.

Normally, a paper is submitted to a scientific journal, where it is reviewed and evaluated by other experts in the some quality control on the claims that are made.

"The competition should be for good science, not for bad press," said Bruce Parkinson of the Solar Energy Research Institute in Boulder, Colo., who expressed skepticism about the claims of both the Texas group and those made in Berkeley by Prof. Gabor Somorjai.

Parkinson said he thinks the Texas announcement was "almost a backlash of Bockris being jealous of Somorjai getting all this press, and he decided he had better get some, too."

Bockris, a professor of chemistry at Texas A&M, did not deny it. "The reason I did it, quite frankly, was because my colleagues seem to be doing it all over the place," he said.

"Prof. Somorjai had the New York Times, the national press, the international press, broadcasting all over the place. And a great deal of publicity has attended other people. It seems that at the present time, it is necessary to do this kind of thing."

If his claims are well-founded, they are important. "We believe that we field before it is published, ensuring have made a very significant breakthrough," Bockris said.

What Bockris and his colleagues say they have accomplished is the efficient use of solar power to split water into its constituent elements, hydrogen and oxygen. The hydrogen could be used as a clean and abundant fuel in, say, cars, planes and buses.

Most people probably recall a demonstration in general science class in which an electric current is passed through water, electrolyzing it into hydrogen and oxygen, with the hydrogen occupying twice the volume of the oxygen, as in the formula H20.

The trouble with this scheme is that the amount of electricity required makes the hydrogen too expensive for practical use.

In the last several years, many researchers have sought to use sunlight to generate the necessary electricity. Up to now, those who have been successful have had to rely on components made of rare and very expensive materials, defeating the cost savings.

"The field is really quite young," Parkinson said. "There are a lot of fundamental things that we don't understand. It's just too early for people to go around grandstanding like this."

In the September issue of the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, the Berkeley group, led by Somorjai, described their process, which uses ordinary iron oxide and achieves efficiencies of 0.05 percent.

In Thursday's announcement, Bockris said his group used inexpensive silicon covered with a secret catalyst to make the anode and cathode, and they achieved efficiencies of 10 percent to 12 percent, high enough to make the process economically feasible.

But Bockris emphasized that many years of work are still ahead before the process could be done on an industrial scale and before a fleet of cars that burn hydrogen instead of gasoline could be on the road.

"We have not claimed that we have a commercial process," he said.

Parkinson, meanwhile, said he doubted that silicon — which is the stuff of which photovoltaic cells are made — could be used as Bockris describes it. "Right now they have photovoltaic cells that make electricity at 18 percent or 20 percent efficiency with silicon, and because they're so expensive we don't see houses with silicon solar cells," he said.

S&L industry counting on big boost from aid package

WASHINGTON (AP) — The savings and loan industry is counting on the new aid package passed by Congress to give it a big enough boost to overcome its worst financial battering since the Depression.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board estimates that 1,018 S&Ls are weak enough to qualify this year for the assistance program, outlined in legislation newly passed by Congress and expected to be signed into law by President Reagan.

The bank board, which regulates S&Ls, estimates that even with the legislation 152 associations will run out of capital this year and need additional help from the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. The fund insures savers' money up to $100,000 in some 3,500 S&Ls.

Savings and loans, which have large portfolios of old, low-interest mortgages, have been hurt by the lengthy spell of high interest rates. They have had to pay more for new money than they are taking in from the home loans.

The insurance fund has been arranging mergers of weak savings and loans to protect itself from losses it would incur if an institution failed and depositors had to be paid off. There have been 37 mergers so far this year, compared with 23 in 1981 and 11 in 1980.

But the merger policy has angered some who see it as a threat to the current structure of the industry. They view the aid package, which shores up weak institutions with a transaction akin to a promissory note, as necessary to keep the industry intact.

The legislation also gives S&Ls new powers to operate more like commercial banks and directs federal regulators to create a new high-paying savings account.

But it was the aid program the industry wanted foremost.

"It was clearly essential," said James Christian, chief economist for the U.S. League of Savings Associations.

Richard Pratt, the bank board chairman, told reporters this week, "In a relative sense, (the condition of the industry) was much worse before the legislation than it is now."

The bill, he said, "is not a cure-all, but it's certainly the best possible cure at this time."

Jonathan Gray, analyst for the New York investment firm of Sanford C. Bernstein, predicted the package would "significantly reduce the rate of loss at many institutions" and sharply cut the number of forced mergers of failing institutions.

Pratt, too, expects fewer mergers arranged by the regulators.

But he thinks that over time, associations will opt to combine with others, and "we will continue to see substantial consolidation in the industry."

At least one analyst, Andrew Carron of the Brookings Institution think-tank here, considers the aid plan as "rather inconsequential."

Associations that were going to fail still will collapse, he said. The aid won't cover 100 percent of the losses, and an S&L must have some life left to qualify, he said.

The aid plan, which runs for only three years, is modeled after a note transaction already used by the insurance corporation.

It lets a weak S&L swap notes with the corporation in what is basically a hybrid loan-contribution transaction that adds to an institution's net worth but must be redeemed once the institution is in the black.

To qualify, an S&L must have a net worth — assets minus liabilities — equal to or less than 3 percent of its assets. But it must have a net worth of at least 0.5 percent, after assistance.

It must have lost money in the previous six months, but the losses must not result from speculative activities or mismanagement. It must have 20 percent of its loans in real estate.

Under the legislation, the weakest institutions will get the most help.

S&Ls with a net worth of between 3 percent and 2 percent will be able to get up to 50 percent of their losses covered by the note; those between 2 percent and 1 percent, 60 percent of their losses; and 1 percent or less, 70 percent of their losses.

For example, an S&L with $1 billion in assets and a $25 million net worth would have a net worth ratio of 2.5 percent. If it had lost $5 million in the previous six months, it could get coverage of up to half its losses — $2.5 million.

Under the program, it would exchange $2.5 million in notes with the insurance fund, which would bring its net worth up to a 2.75 percent ratio. If its losses continued, it could get more notes. Once it started making money, it would redeem the certificates, on which interest would be paid.

The bank board estimates that the insurance fund will issue $340 million worth of notes this year, $680 million next year and $220 million in 1984. By 1984, it expects some associations to start redeeming the notes.

The legislation lets the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. apply the same note-swap program to weak savings banks and commercial banks.

But it doesn't appear it will be widely used for banks.

The number of eligible savings banks is estimated by the industry at about two dozen. The number is thought to be even less for commercial banks. Moreover, an official of the insurance corporation, who asked not to be named, said the fund will likely be reluctant to use the program to benefit the stockholders of a commercial bank.

The legislation also spells out the priority the insurance funds must follow in arranging mergers, with the highest priority placed on mergers of like institutions in the same state.

Los Angeles Times Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — A Los Angeles Superior Court jury Thursday ordered an Encino, Calif.-based securities company, its president and two related companies to pay nearly $30 million in civil penalties for misleading investors in 1976 limited coal-mining partnerships.

Jurors reached their 11-1 verdict in the court of Judge Roberta Ralph after a seven-month trial and 15 days of apparently heated deliberations.

They assessed $7,348,500 each against Cal-Am Corp.; its president, Joseph R. Laird Jr.; Dixie Natural Resources Inc., a New York City-based corporation with offices in Las Vegas, and Allstate Securities Inc., a California corporation.

The state Department of Corporations had sought a $2,500 civil penalty for each of 23 purportedly misleading acts or statements made to each of more than 3,000 investors who had put from $750 to $10,000 into 296 limited partnerships.

Jurors assessed the stiff fines for only four acts — transferring investors to another company without notification or consent, promising that investors would quickly make a 10 percent return on their investment, and claiming in two separate arrangements that the limited partnerships would be sold by registered broker-dealers.

The jury either was unable to reach a decision or absolved the defendants in each of the other 19 charges.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street burst into a frenzy of buying today and closed with major gains in stock, bond and bullion prices as falling interest rates sparked record-breaking volume.

"What started yesterday has really exploded," said Eldon Grimm, an analyst at the brokerage firm of Birr, Wilson & Co. "We have this theory that the Federal Reserve is going to let the money supply grow faster. That sparked a rally in the bond market and spilled over into the stock market."

Volume was so heavy throughout the day that as soon as the market opened the New York Stock Exchange tape fell several minutes behind in reporting trades. By midday it was nearly 30 minutes behind trading but caught up a little during the lunch hour.

The buying spree was attributed to a widespread feeling that interest rates would fall further. That anticipation also fueled a buying binge in credit markets today, pushing bond prices higher.

The drop in interest rates caused the value of long-term Treasury bonds to jump by more than $25 for each $1,000 in face value today. The yield on one-year Treasury bills was down two-thirds of a percentage point.

Gainers outpaced losers more than 10 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Big Board volume totaled a record 147.07 million shares, against 93.57 million in the previous session. The previous record was 137.33 set Aug. 26.

The NYSE's composite index rose 1.57 to 73.77.

BUSINESS MIRROR

U.S. taxpayers pay for loans to foreign nations

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — If you find it difficult to pay your taxes, meet tuition payments, buy a house, finance a car, run a farm on a businesslike basis or just pay the interest on bills, you may want to listen to James Dale Davidson.

Davidson traces some of these problems, and lots of others as well, to the bank practice of pouring American capital into foreign "ratholes," that is, the profitable practice of loaning billions on inefficient foreign projects.

Coolly, quietly, the 35-year-old, Oxford-trained Davidson says "it is an absolute outrage." Because the projects are extremely risky from the start, the banks charge and earn interest-rate premiums.

But, he says, they avoid the risk. They can escape responsibility for making good on loans that go bad because in effect they believe they are too indispensable for the U.S. government not to bail them out.

It is tough, he said, for Americans to pay the domestic budget deficit, "and the deficits of dozens of other countries too."

The banks are aware, he says, that projects on which they lend might be unprofitable and doomed to die, and that the loans cannot be repaid. They know, he said, that at best the borrower will recycle the loan but never repay.

By 1990, at current trends, Davidson insists, 90 percent of the loans will be recycled or renegotiated and that the only payments made will be for interest on the loans, with the principle never reduced at all.

Eventually, he maintains, such debts to the banks will be monetized. That is, the Federal Reserve will be forced to rescue banks because of the dangers of letting them fail. They'll print more U.S. money and create inflation.

In effect, says Davidson, founder and chairman of the National Taxpayers Union, that procedure would mean that ordinary American taxpayers would pay. In fact, he insists, they are paying now. Witness, he says, the cost of getting a home or farm loan, or simply meeting the high cost of interest on a car.

And yet, continues Davidson, whose Washington, D.C.-based organization claims 120,000 members, the overseas ratholes into which money is poured are so lacking in credit-worthiness "they wouldn't qualify for a credit card loan."

He feels the situation is worsening. In 1980, he points out, only a handful of countries were forced to reschedule loans because of inability to repay, and the total amount involved was just a bit over $3 billion. In 1981, the number of those unable to pay jumped to 14, and the amount renegotiated to more than $10 billion. If existing trends continue, he states, next year will be worse.

By his rough count, at least $100 billion of domestic capital has been exported in the past seven years, $20 billion of it to Mexico alone. So much has gone for "wildly impractical capital acquisitions" in Poland, such as an unneeded steel plant, he says, that some bankers want to quiet Solidarity, the Polish-worker movement that threatens economic upheaval.

There may be a further adverse complication to the practice. Each time a superfluous steel mill is erected in a jungle, as Davidson puts it, free trade is warped even more. The country with the new but inefficient mill seeks to protect it through subsidies or tariffs. And lenders, to protect their investment, sometimes call for even more government aid to the debtor country.

Davidson claims that without testimony or hearings, Paul Volcker, Federal Reserve chairman, won authority under the 1980 Monetary Reform Act to buy debt obligations of debtor nations, and with that collateral, issue printed money.

That, he insists, is the beginning of the monetizing of foreign debts made through American banks.

"We're looking at the danger of economic catastrophe brought on by our stupidity, our refusal to come to grips with the realization these loans can never be repaid," said Davidson. Instead, he said, we call them bank assets.

Davidson supports Rep. Andrew Jacobs, Jr. R-Ind., who would seek to remove Federal Reserve power to monetize or issue money backed by such "assets," and also involve commercial bank lenders in costs involved in bailing them out.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Better to stay put with wise investments

By BILL DOYLE

Q. When I retire in a couple of months, my husband and I will have annual income of almost $40,000. I have stocks and bonds worth approximately $55,000 and about $33,500 in a bond mutual fund. I went into the mutual fund a few years ago on the advice of a broker, who said it was an investment I wouldn't have to worry about.

Now my present broker advises me to sell everything and put the money in a municipal bond mutual fund managed by his firm. He suggests this tax-free fund, because we have good income and few income tax deductions.

Since I actually do not need the income from these investments, I want to put as much of this aside as possible as an inheritance for my 12-year-old granddaughter. Where would you suggest I put this money?

Doyle

A. I'd suggest, rather than put it someplace else, you "stay put" and keep what you have. The long list of stocks and bonds you sent along makes up a sensible investment portfolio. And that mutual fund, which holds many different bonds, is also suitable for you.

I go along with the adage, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

You would save income taxes by making the move the broker suggests. Because a municipal bond mutual fund holds bonds paying tax-free interest, it passes on that income as tax-free dividends to its shareholders. That makes such funds wise investments for high-income people whose aim is to reduce taxes.

The securities you now hold are more likely to rise in market value than shares of a municipal bond mutual fund. And the dividends paid on your stocks will probably increase in the years ahead.

Your present holdings seem right for your retirement years and should provide an outstanding inheritance for your granddaughter.

A suspicious mind might come up with the thought that your broker has his own best interests in mind by recommending the big switch. Remember, a broker collects commissions only when you buy and-or sell.

Explosive discovered

HOUSTON (AP) — FBI agents and experts from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms today planned to examine a bomb found outside an oilfield supply company building after a telephone warning.

The device was safely defused after a caller warned Thursday that a bomb planted outside Pecos U.S.A. would explode in an hour, said police Sgt. Bobby Morgan.

Authorities said there is no apparent connection between Thursday's incident and a bomb threat — part of a $15 million extortion plot — that shut down Gulf Oil Chemical Co.'s Cedar Bayou refinery 30 miles east of Houston.

Five bombs were found inside the Gulf plant last week. Four were deactivated and one exploded harmlessly.

Kevin O'Keefe, assistant sales manager at Pecos U.S.A., said he "backed off real quick" and called police after finding the device and seeing that its timer was set on zero.

"It was a timing device with a mason jar with a couple of wires leading into it," he said.

O'Keefe said he found the device in a cardboard box in hedges in front of the building.

"We received a phone call at 9:15 a.m., a bomb threat saying there was a bomb in front of the building and it was set to go off in an hour," O'Keefe said. "I evacuated the building and I went out in front and there was a box in the hedges with what appeared to be a bomb."

Eight people were evacuated from the Pecos U.S.A. building. A tire store and an auto tune-up business also were evacuated, he said.

O'Keefe said the caller telephoned 10 minutes after the first call and delivered the same warning to another employee.

Donoghue's MONEY FUND AVERAGE
(Averages for all 211 taxable funds)		39	9.4	9.6

Yields represent annualized total return to shareholders for past seven- and thirty-day period. Past returns not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. x - average term to next rate adjustment date. (e) - figures as of 10/5/82. Reprinted in condensed form with permission from Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORTr of Holliston, MA 01746. 617/429-5930.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 211 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORTr of Holliston, MA 01746 decreased $514 million to $223.4 billion for the week ending October 6, 1982.

The funds' 7-day average yield decreased slightly, to 9.42% from 9.46%. The funds' 30- day average yield decreased to 9.58% from 9.70%.

The funds' average maturity figure remained at 39 days for the second week.

Publisher William E. Donoghue says, "The assets of funds available to individual investors increased this week by $559.1 million. The asset decrease experienced by all funds resulted from the $905.7 million decrease caused by the flight of institutions-only funds. Assets of Delaware Cash Reserves, the Philadelphia-based money fund plagued by a series of unfounded rumors last week, decreased 256.7 million to $2.1 billion. The Securities and Exchange Commission has given the fund a clean bill of health following an examination of the fund."

Rebs face Abilene High as playoff push begins

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee Rebels showed what they were made of last week when they upset the fourth ranked team in the state — San Angelo — after losing to Odessa High in their opening game of the District 4-5A season. Now it's time to see if they can keep it up and start the big push toward one of the two state playoff berths available.

There are five games remaining on the 4-5A schedule for the Rebels, the first of which is Abilene High tonight at Memorial Stadium at 8 p.m.

Coming off the win over San Angelo is a big plus for the Rebels. Their spirits are flying high. And, according to Coach Spike Dykes, "effort and mental attitude" were major keys to the victory.

"I think the victory proved that you've always got a chance to win a football game if you give it everything you've got each time the ball is snapped. A great part of this game is effort and mental attitude. You can't measure the value of those two.

"I feel like our players prepared well, fought hard and gave a great effort to winning the ball game. It certainly doesn't always work out that way. Due to some breaks and the effort, we were able to win the game."

That "effort" is going to be needed again tonight against the Eagles, who are coming off a 30-0 loss to No. 3 ranked Odessa Permian. Coach Dykes is sure of a tough game because Abilene High has won against some tough foes and they have a strong team with several good players.

"They've got a good football team," said Dykes. "They proved that three weeks ago when they beat the No. 7 team in the state in Longview. They beat a good Longview team 20-15."

"Their strengths are the fact that they have a great big play offense with a great running back, who is No. 2 in the district rushing stats, Ron Lewis (who isn't listed as a starter for the Lee game), a good strong fullback, Russell Christian, and two good quarterbacks, (Steve) Stacy and Albus. Both are good runners and good passers."

In front of the quarterbacks and running backs is what Dykes calls "a big, strong, veteran offensive line, spear headed by a guy named Areal Doolittle, a 6-foot-5, 235-pound guard, and another guard, Craig Griffis at 210. They are a good offensive football team."

Also, Dykes sees a "good kicking game up to this point and a very aggressive, quick, hard-hitting defense."

"Quick" was a key word Abilene High coach Louie Spinks used for Midland Lee. "They're so quick and their linemen are so quick," he said. "That's a key. I think high school linemen that are smaller and quicker are sometimes in better shape than some of the bigger players.

"I think it will be a good football game and we're looking forward to coming over there. Spike does a good job over there, he's a heck of a coach. We like to play teams that are well coached like Midland Lee. I think our kids are ready to play a good ball game."

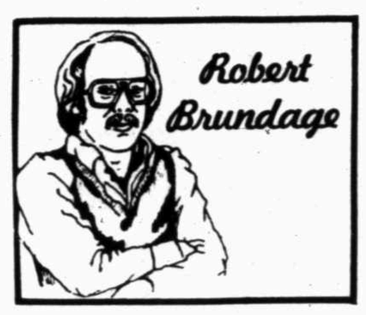

With a lot riding on each game, it isn't difficult for a team to get up for an opponent, but this week the Lee

District 4-5A is 'safety' pins and answered prayer

'Junk Yard' safety attack adds points at too slow a rate

Midland High's "Junk Yard Dawgs" have proven, on several occasions, that they have the ability to put points on the scoreboard this season. They've punched the ball across the goal line from short range as well as long and that scoring threat has kept them in three of the five ball games they've played.

However, as far as I can tell, there are a couple of flaws in that scoring ability — "Junk Yard Dawgs" is the nickname for the defensive unit and those points are only coming two at a time.

With half of the 1982 football season gone and five games remaining in District 4-5A play, MHS is easily leading the league in safeties with an average of one per game. Most teams are lucky to get one a season.

FOR SOME reason, the "Dawgs" keep coming up with the efforts needed and the scoreboard flashes their production for all to see. But those efforts aren't winning many ball games and the offense isn't adding many points.

Against Lubbock Monterey in the season opener, the final score was 17-2 after the Plainsmen rallied from a 2-0 deficit in the third quarter for the win. Clifton Hines was credited with blocking Kevin Short's punt in the Monterey end zone to post the first safety of the season.

One week later against Andrews, Midland High scored its first points of the game on a 48-yard safety in another punting situation. Mustang Floyd Cornejo was in to do the kicking and it looked like he had a chance to bury the Bulldogs deep in their own territory. He probably would have, except the ball sailed over his head on the snap from center and by the time he caught up with it he was inside the 10-yard line.

On that safety, the "Dawgs" came storming down field shutting off all alleys of forward escape and were sure to take possession of the ball within easy scoring range. The one alley they left open was to the rear and that's where Cornejo ran. He retreated into his own end zone for safety No. 2. Before the game ended, the Bulldogs came up with 14 more points a quicker way — seven at a time — and did go on to win the game, 16-2, but they have yet to win since.

A TWO week dry spell against Lubbock Estacado and Odessa Permian seemed to end the string of safeties. It also saw two one-sided losses of 23-6 and 37-0.

And then came Big Spring, the Bulldogs' last outing, which ended up as a 9-6 defeat for a 1-4 season record and a 0-2 mark in 4-5A play.

The Steers jumped out to a quick 9-0 lead and with the way things were going offensively for Midland High, that almost seemed like enough to insure victory.

However, on three successive possessions in the third quarter, the Steers ended up in their own end zone and the "Dawgs" were rolling up the points, 9-2, 9-4, 9-6. That's three scores and still Midland High trailed

Picking up two points here and there is OK when a team can contribute to the scoring offensively, but Midland High hasn't been able to do that except for the two touchdowns against Andrews and one (without the extra point) against Estacado.

IN THIS league with teams of high-scoring potential, the offense has to produce. You can score safeties all night and it won't be enough to win. Look at the Permian game, the 37-0 defeat. Midland High would have needed 19 safeties to beat the Panthers and, let's face it, that's a little more than can be expected of any defense.

In the five games that remain, Midland High can be a winner. I believe that any team can beat any other team on any given day because history tells us that time and time again. But unless the offense shows remarkable improvement and moves the ball, those last five games could make for a long season.

The defense has shown what it can do. It just needs some help.

Forsch shames Braves with 7-0 shutout

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Not even the no-hitter he pitched in 1978 could top the exultation Bob Forsch was to feel following a three-hit masterpiece.

"I think this was a lot more important than a no-hitter," the 32-year-old right-hander said after hurling the St. Louis Cardinals to a 7-0 victory Thursday night over the Atlanta Braves. "This was a start toward something we need to do."

Indeed, on the strength of Forsch's performance and an attack that featured 13 hits, St. Louis got off on the right foot in the best-of-five National League Championship Series.

While their pitcher was facing only 30 batters, the Cards were making the most of 11 singles and daring baserunning. "This was kind of typical for us," said Manager Whitey Herzog.

"Embarrassing? No, I wouldn't call it embarrassing," said Atlanta Manager Joe Torre in response to a reporter's post-game query.

"I know the guys wanted it. We just didn't play well. It's just that the Cardinals, with their speed, can do a lot of things once they're ahead."

Torre said the Braves may call tonight on 43-year-old knuckleballer Phil Niekro in an attempt to get even.

"We'd like to come out of here with a split and go home and win two out of three," said the Atlanta pilot. "You never like to be 0-2. It's very important."

A decision on whether Niekro will be able to come back 48 hours after a stint of 41-3 innings in Wednesdays's washed-out opener was to be made this afternoon.

"I don't want to wait until game time," said Torre. "I know Phil will be honest with me. He's ready emotionally. We just want him to have a good time out on the mound. We need it."

Against St. Louis on Thursday night, rookie Pascual Perez of the Braves was effective enough — at least until the sixth inning.

Then the lanky right-hander surrendered three straight singles with none out, the final by George Hendrick to give the Cards a 2-0 lead. That brought on Steve Bedrosian in relief, and the roof caved in as St. Louis sent 11 batters to the plate.

The Cards' five-run inning tied an NLCS record, and the club set league playoff marks with its six hits and number of batters.

"There never were a lot of homers hit in this park," said Torre, a former St. Louis player, in respect to a Cards attack which included only two extra base hits. "That's just not their style. They don't need it. Whitey (Herzog) likes for them to run."

One St. Louis hitter who didn't run far enough was rookie Willie McGee, whose smash over the first base bag to start the third was the Cards' first hit.

McGee, his head down, fled around second base as Atlanta right fielder Claudell Washington pursued the caroming drive at the fence. Although Washington failed to come up with ball, the Cards outfielder was guilty of not looking for his coach's sign and stopped at third base.

"That's the first time in a long time I've seen a guy run a home run into a triple," Herzog was able to say afterward with a chuckle.

"I think everybody was surprised that he didn't score on the play, but you can't dwell on it," said shortstop Ozzie Smith, who picked up McGee with a sacrifice fly to put the Cards in front 1-0. "We felt that with three chances to get him home, we would score."

In the game-breaking St. Louis sixth, Darrell Porter worked a walk off Bedrosian to load the bases following Hendrick's RBI single McGee and Ozzie Smith then drove home two more runs with singles, and Forsch delivered a sacrifice fly. The uprising finally drew to a close after Ken Oberkfell singled home the fifth run.

"It wasn't really all that easy," Oberkfell said after Lonnie Smith had delivered an anticlimactic run with a sacrifice fly in the eighth.

"It was just a combination of things," said Braves third baseman Bob Horner. "They had everything good happen for them and everything bad happened to us."

California shoots for Brewer sweep

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Milwaukee Manager Harvey Kuenn emphasized that he would have no alibis if the California Angels eliminated his Brewers from the American League playoffs.

But Kuenn said Thursday that the Angels had a significant advantage because the Brewers had to play their previous nine games on the road — all under intense pressure.

The Angels, behind the combined 12-hit pitching of Tommy John and Bruce Kison, won the first two games of the best-of-five series in Anaheim Tuesday and Wednesday. They could clinch the series by winning Game Three here today (2:15 p.m. CDT).

Games Four and Five, if needed, were scheduled here Saturday and Sunday.

The Brewers closed their regular season with three games in Boston and four in Baltimore and won the East Division title by defeating the Orioles 10-2 in the final game Sunday. They flew from Baltimore to Anaheim on Monday.

"Coming from Baltimore to California can be very tough because we lost three hours in the flight," Kuenn said. "You can't be 100 percent when you lose that kind of time with your body. We had just clinched the East Division, and there's no question that takes something out of you.

"The Angels got excellent pitching from John and Kison, but we weren't hitting the ball very well," he said. "There's no question they had an advantage because they had their pitchers rested and we didn't, and they had their players rested and we didn't.

"If we had clinched last Friday, our pitchers would have been ready and it might have been a different story in California," he said.

Kuenn said he had toyed with a lineup change that would have moved Cecil Cooper and Gorman Thomas from third and sixth, respectively, in the batting order to first and second, and Paul Molitor and Robin Yount from first and second to third and fourth.

"I said that to myself because somebody told me our 3, 4 and 5 hitters were 0-for-18," Kuenn said. "But what the hell good would changing the lineup do because there would be nobody for Molitor or Yount to get on base for?

"I've had the same lineup for left-handers and right-handers, and we won 95 games," he said. "I'm not about to change."

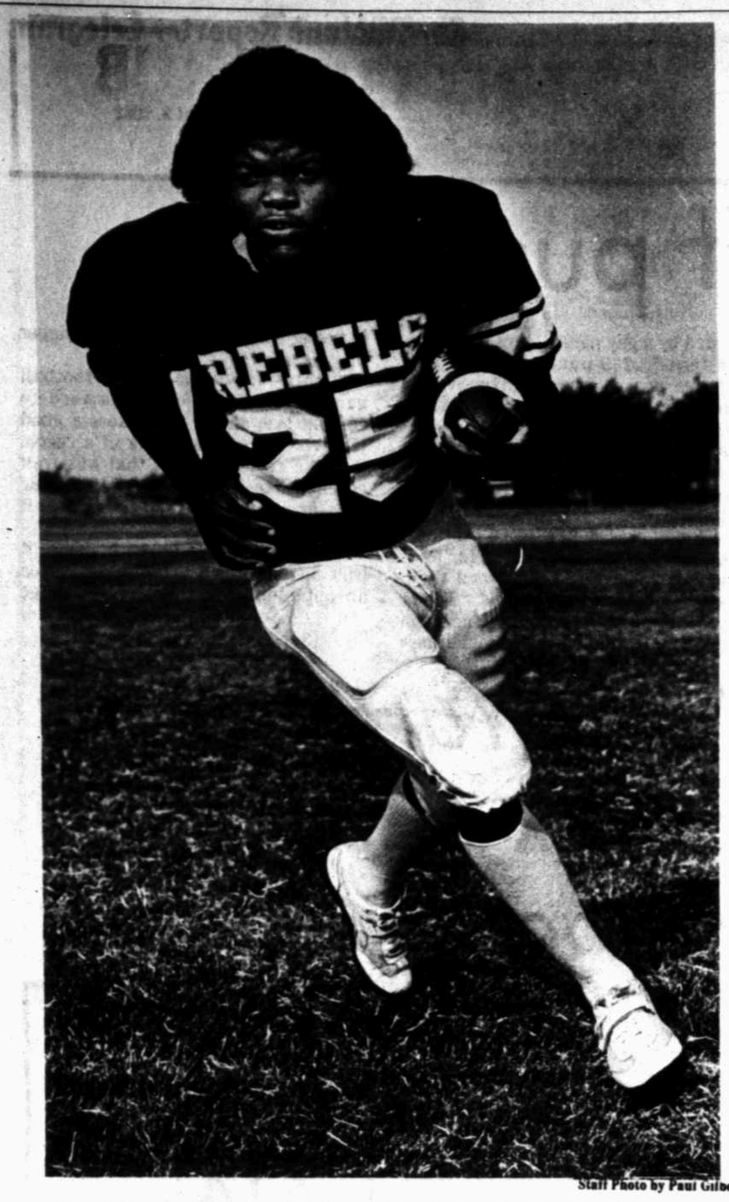

Don Sutton, scheduled to pitch for the Brewers today against California's Geoff Zahn, agreed that the rest and home field had worked to the Angels' advantage.

"If you're at home, seeing friendly faces and in more comfortable surroundings, it's easier than living in a hotel and busing to the park," Sutton said. "I honestly feel that if the first two games had been here, the outcome would have been different. I think they would have pitched as well, but we would have felt more comfortable."

But Sutton gave full credit to the Angels.

"On a scale of 10, they've played at about a 9.9," he said. "They haven't made too many mistakes.
"John and Kison pitched as well as you can to our lineup. There were not too many 2-0 or 3-1 pitches, and when there were they made good pitches."

Much of the credit for the Angels' pitching should go to catcher Bob Boone, Sutton said. Both Sutton, who joined the Brewers Aug. 30 from Houston, and Boone have spent most of their major league careers in the National League.

NFL strike talks continue to deteriorate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Football League players' strike has deteriorated to where the negotiators cannot even find a common meeting ground to resume contract talks.

The Management Council, which bargains for the club owners, Thursday rejected the union's proposals both for private mediation and for a round of non-economic negotiations aimed at ending the 18-day players' strike.

Jack Donlan, the council's executive director, officially turned down the union's request for renewed discussions Thursday night in a brief phone conversation with Ed Garvey, the association's executive director.

Jim Miller, spokesman for the management council, said Donlan again told Garvey there could be no further talks until players' withdraw their demand for a wage scale.

The wage scale, the cornerstone of the union's $1.6 billion, four-year financial demand, was rejected on Sept. 17.

"We sincerely believe that the wage scale is the impediment," Miller said. "None of the other issues are holding up the strike. Settle the wage scale and the other issues can be settled in a very short time."

Earlier Thursday, union president Gene Upshaw vowed the association's allegiance to the wage scale.

"The main reason we are out there (on strike) is for a wage scale. We are not out there because we like it. We are there because we want more money," he said.

Thursday morning, Garvey released a list of nine candidates he said would be acceptable to mediate the dispute.

Before the list, which included the names of former Supreme Court Justice Arthur Goldberg, former Watergate investigator Archibald Cox and three former U.S. secretaries of Labor, was two hours old, the management council had said "no."

Miller said the idea of trying to choose a private mediator when the two sides had not reached agreement one single item in nine months of negotiations was just another issue to be added to the already stalled talks.

The management negotiators continue to press for intervention by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The union, feeling it was burned in the past with a federal mediator at the table, is reluctant to go that route again.

"In 1970, management broke off the talks after a mediator entered the dispute. In 1974, management asked for a federal mediator and then after he entered, the NFL tried to break the union," Garvey said. "It took us three years to get a contract after we went to federal mediation in 1974."

Also, Garvey is thought to feel that Donlan has some friends in the service where he worked in the 1960s.

Volleyball race heats up

The Midland High Bulldogs lost a chance to move back into a tie for first place in the District 4-5A volleyball race Thursday night by losing a 15-12, 13-15, 15-12 to upstart Odessa Permian and Midland Lee failed to find the winning formula again in a 15-13, 12-15, 15-4 loss to Odessa High.

The Bulldogs, now 6-2 in the district race and 18-6 on the year, still own sole possession of second place, but could have tied San Angelo for the league lead with a victory. San Angelo fell for the first time this year in loop play, falling to 5-3 Abilene Cooper, 10-15, 15-6, 15-17.

"Our sophomore, Denise Lanz, was called for holding her set shots five straight times and we haven't had that called all year," noted MHS coach Linda Jolly after the loss to Permian. "I finally had to replace her and we had to change our offense and defense. Still, Permian played really hard and did a good job. We just kind of lost our cool there for a while I guess."

Permian is now back in the thick of the 4-5A race with a 5-3 record, the same as Cooper. Both share third place with six games left to play.

MHS ended up losing three times to Permian Thursday. The MHS junior varsity fell 11-15, 15-9, 15-1 while the MHS sophomores tumbled, 15-3, 15-12.

Lee jumped to a 13-7 lead in the first game against Odessa High, but ended up losing that game by a 15-13 margin and that left Lee coach Janice Baulch scratching her head.

"It's not the first time that has happened to us. We play everyone close and stay in the games, but we seem to choke when we reach 13 points. At least the junior varsity gives us some hope for the future."

The Lee varsity is now 1-7 in district play, but the junior varsity is 7-1 after Thursday's 15-6, 15-8 win over Odessa High. Lee's varsity is 7-16 for the year while the JV is 11-4.

Odessa High is now 4-4 in district volleyball play.

Midland High hosts Big Spring Tuesday at the MHS gym at 7 p.m. while Lee travels to San Angelo to face the Bobcats. Lee could be Midland High's best friend come Tuesday if the Rebels can pull off an upset.

Lee's Rebels hope to light Homecoming fires tonight players will have Homecoming to think about and that is usually good for some extra spirit. However, Dykes doesn't see homecoming as a major factor in the game unless it causes distractions.

"We've got great spirit all the time anyway," said Dykes. "I'd say anytime you play a Homecoming game when you're the host, you've got to be careful of being distracted. You have to remember that our part of Homecoming is playing the game."

"I hope it doesn't help them any," said Spinks. "I have mixed emotions on Homecoming and it's hard to answer whether it will help or not."

Whether it does or doesn't, the Rebels and Eagles should provide a good game for those who will witness it.

Susan Britton claims 14th MCC women's golf crown

Susan Britton won the Midland Country Club Women's Golf Association Club Championship for the 14th time with a 6-5 match play victory over Sylvia Roberts in the finals Thursday.

Britton won her first MCC title in 1958 as a teenager and has dominated the MCC field in most of the years since.

Gerry Zoller defeated Fran Locker, 2-1, to win the consolation championship.

Carolyn Roden won the first flight title over Jean Banks while Margaret McIntosh took consolation honors over Sherry O'Kelley. Evelyn Anderson won the second flight over Edie Stahl while Sylvia Laufer beat Pat Carey for consolation.

In the third flight, Dorothy Melzer won top honors over Barbara Duke while consolation went to Bobbie Jean McDaniel over Dot Cotner. Sue Campbell won the long drive contest while Edie Stahl took the putting title. Rachel Lyman won the 18-hole medal competition.

Bell may seek trade

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Ranger third baseman Buddy Bell, citing poor prospects for the immediate improvement of the American League team, says he may ask to be traded this winter.

"The decision I have to make will be this winter. I'm almost 100 percent sure that if I'm here for next year, that I'll be here for the rest of my career," Bell said Thursday. "That is the test — whether I'm going to play here the rest of my career or not."

Ranger general manager Joe Klein said the club has not considered trading Bell, but added that the possibility "would increase 100-fold" if Bell requested a deal.

Bullpups nail Cooper

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

The Midland High Bullpups scored four unanswered touchdowns at Memorial Stadium in the fourth quarter to steal a 39-26 win from the Abilene Cooper junior varsity Thursday night.

Showing a flare for the dramatic, the Bullpups scored three touchdowns on fourth down plays.

Cooper took the lead on the opening play of the game when Jay Beyers returned the kickoff 83 yards and held it until the fourth quarter onslaught.

It was fourth-and-two from the 16-yard line with 1:26 left in the game when Midland scored the lead touchdown.

Trailing 29-26, James Welborn lofted a pass into the end zone where Dennis Cano leaped between two defenders, hauling in the wining score.

"IT WAS a big win for us because of the way we won it." coach Rick Wood said. "We came from behind and when you haven't been winning, it's important to be able to do that."

The Bullpups improved their record to 2-4 with the win.

The winning play was set up when Bret Flynn fumbled a Cooper punt before returning it 31 yards, putting MHS on the 24-yard line.

Trailing for the first time, the Cougars went to the air but on third down Kenny White intercepted a Doug Hadley pass and raced 68 yards for the final TD. White help set up the first score of the final stanza when he intercepted Hadley in the third quarter.

The Bullpup offense took advantage of the turnover as they marched 68 yards for a touchdown. It was fourth down play when Welborn hit tailback Jeff Longabaugh on a 15-yard scoring strike with 11:14 left in the fourth quarter.

EARLIER IN the fourth quarter Welborn was the victim of an interception that set up a 35-yard field goal attempt by Scott Anderson. But Tom Cowles blocked the kick and the Midland offense responded by marching 74 yards for another score.

Longabaugh capped the drive when he lunged over from the one, pulling the Bullpups within three. Longabaugh kept the drive alive when he made a spectacular catch on a third and nine situation.

The sophomore was hit when he caught the ball and held on as the defender fell. He then ran for additional yardage making the play good for 39 yards. Gary Browning followed with a sweep around left end for 18 yards to give MHS first and goal at the five.

MIDLAND SCORED in the first stanza when Browning carried the ball over from the three. The two point conversion made the score 14-8 and was the only PAT that Midland made.

Last week coach Wood said Browning's blocking was the differnce in the Bullpups win over Big Spring. This week it was the fullback's running that made the difference.

"Browning is a fun kid to coach because he goes hard every down," Wood said. Browning had six carries over 10 yards, with his longest an 18-yarder off a trap play.

Midland's second TD was set up by another Cooper turnover. In the second quarter Cowles recovered an errant pitchout giving the Bullpups the ball on the Cougars five-yard line. A third down a pass interference call gave Midland the ball on the nine. On fourth-and-six Welborn hit Darren Thorpe in the endzone making the halftime score 22-14.

MEANWHILE, the Midland Lee sophomores added victory No. 6 to their undefeated season Thursday at the Lee Field with a surprisingly easy 42-0 shutout over Odessa Permian.

The Lee sophs led 35-0 at the half and scored again in the third period before calling it a day.

Tyrone Thurman scored three touchdowns, including runs of 48 and 18 yards. His other score came on an 80-yard punt return. Danny Rivas scored on a nine-yard pass play while Earl Davis and Willie Walker scored on seven-yard runs. Craig Kamradt kicked all six extra points.

The Lee sophs host Monahans at the Lee Field Thursday at 5 p.m. The Lee junior varsity, also unbeaten, travels to Abilene High Saturday for a 10 a.m. game.

LaJet golf field assaults helpless Abilene layout

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Some ideal conditions — warm, sunny weather and the rare absence of West Texas wind that stripped the Fairway Oaks Golf and Racquet Club course of its natural defenses — helped Wayne Levi, Craig Stadler and Jay Haas lead the massive assault on par in the first round of the $350,000 LaJet Classic.

In all, 71 men in the field of 156 broke par 72 Thursday.

But Ray Floyd, the PGA champion vainly struggling to overtake Stadler on the money-winning list, was not among them.

Neither was Tom Kite, who's attempting to nail down a second consecutive Vardon Trophy in what may be his last start of the season.

Nor was Tom Watson, holder of the U.S. and British Open titles and leading in the race for a fifth Player of the Year title.

The weather didn't help them. Floyd, who has missed the cut in his last two starts, matched par 72. Watson, holding a narrow lead over Stadler in the standings that will determine Player of the Year, was one stroke higher. And the weary Kite had an opening 74 for the second consecutive week.

All must improve today if they are to qualify for the final two rounds of play Saturday and Sunday.

While they were struggling, however, Levi birdied six of his last seven holes for an 8-under-par 64 that set the first round pace and, he said, could have been better.

Levi, who has quietly collected more than $200,000 in earnings this season and recorded his fourth career victory early this year, missed putts of eight feet or less on his first five holes.

"I had a real good chance to shoot in the 50s if I'd made some putts early," he said. "But if I did, who's to say I would have made the late ones."

Mike Morley, who said he has "been in a reasonable slump," scored two eagles on his way to a 65 that left him alone in second.

Stadler, the Masters champion and leading money-winner, made a late rush with birdies on four of his last five holes for a 66 that put him only two shots back and in position to challenge for a fifth title of the season. He was tied with John Fought and Vance Heafner.

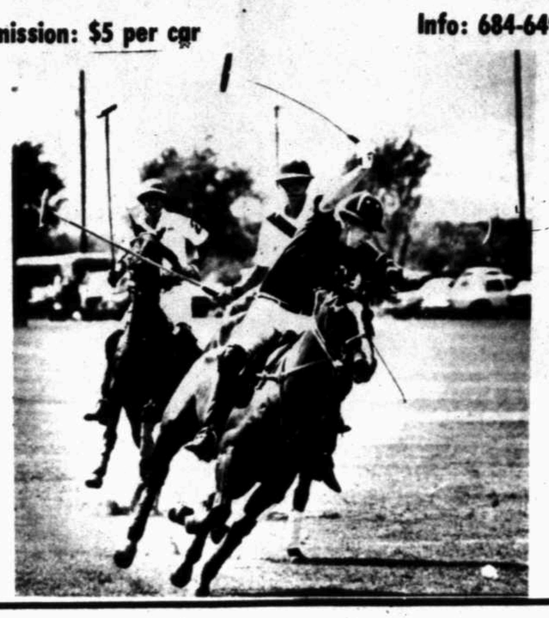

Haas, who has won his last two starts, again played without a bogey and recorded a 67.

UT-OU game gets some TV

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Two television stations prepared today to air this weekend's annual college football grudge match between the University of Texas and the University of Oklahoma.

UT officials announced Thursday that stations KTVV-TV in Austin and KXAS-TV in Dallas will broadcast the game live from the Cotton Bowl, beginning at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Bill Dillon recently had the new IBM Echo Computer installed at his insurance offices located at 1202 Andrews Hwy. According to Dillon, the five-terminal computer system will help him and his five secretaries give even better service to the more than five thousand accounts handled by the Agency.

In the near future, Dillon says a master computer located at the State Farm Insurance Company's regional office in Austin will update records each night at his office through telecommunication.

Bill Dillon began his insurance career 21 years ago. He is self-employed, but under contract with State Farm Insurance Companies, the world's largest writer of homeowners and automobile insurance.

Dillon is in the top ten in production of the more than 15 thousand agents of State Farm in the United States and Canada.

Drop in the beautiful offices located conveniently at 1202 Andrews Hwy. and talk to Dillon or one of his friendly staff about your insurance needs.

Now that winter is approaching, it's time to check that heater out, according to Jim Setchfield of Setchfield's Plumbing & Heating. "Yearly maintenance of your gas heating system is very important," says Setchfield. "I can check it out for rust or dirt buildup around the burners, light the pilot, check for poor ignition, blockage, or cracked fire box." Setchfield says that evaporative heating and cooling systems are especially susceptible to rust buildup, which can cause many problems

Jim Setchfield began his plumbing business with a determination to be known for quality, not quantity. And he's managed to stick to his guns about that, with six years of plumbing experience behind him and many satifsfield customers.

Setchfield Plumbing's motto is "Quality Work at a Fair Price", and Setchfield's specialty is plumbing repairs and remodeling. "I have the latest drain cleaning equipment," he says, "that will unclog your sewer or drains."

Aother plus for senior citizens is his Senior Citizen discount program. "I give a ten percent across-the-board discount for senior citizens," says Setchfield. All he requires is proof of age for this discount.

Setchfield offers 24 hour emergency service by calling 697-0055. Setchfield Plumbing is a name you can depend on. While not listed in the yellow pages at present, you can find his listing in the Reporter-Telegram under Who's Who in Service, located in the classified section. Libertarian party strikes chord in Alaska, 'Land of the Individual'

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — "ALASKA: LAND OF THE INDIVIDUAL...and Other Endangered Species," proclaims a popular T-shirt.

The message goes a long way toward explaining why the Libertarian Party has found a home in Alaska, where it enjoys much more political power than anywhere else in the country.

Dick Randolph of Fairbanks, who preaches unfettered individual rights and freedom from government interference, was the first Libertarian ever elected to office in a state when he won a seat in the Alaska House of Representatives in 1978.

The number of Libertarian state legislators anywhere in the country doubled in 1980 when Alaska voters re-elected Randolph and sent Ken Fanning, also of Fairbanks, to join him in the 40-member House.

This year, with 15 candidates running, Libertarian Party officials say they expect to pick up three or four additional seats in the Legislature. And Randolph, 46, is running to succeed retiring Republican Gov. Jay Hammond.

NATIONALLY, THE Libertarian Party, which considers itself the country's third largest political party, says it will make its views heard in 1982 as never before, even if it fails to score many electoral victories.

The party says it will have at least 21 gubernatorial candidates on ballots this year, and will have candidates running for enough offices to give 75 percent of the voters a chance to vote for at least one Libertarian.

All told, the party says, 900 to 1,000 advocates of the Libertarian philosophy will be on American ballots in 46 states.

That philosophy advocates near absolute laissez faire: a free market economy and no government restrictions on personal behavior which does not infringe on other peoples' rights. Libertarians would limit government to the single task of protection — protecting the country's from foreign attack and protecting people from crime.

The party's first presidential candidate, John Hospers, ran in 1972 on the ballots of two states and won 5,000 votes.

IN 1980, Libertarian presidential candidate Ed Clark, an antitrust lawyer with Atlantic Richfield in California, became the first third-party candidate in history to get on the ballot of every state.

In what was a five-man race, he won 882,000 votes, and finished fourth — behind Republican Ronald Reagan, Democrat Jimmy Carter and independent John Anderson, but well ahead of Barry Commoner, the candidate of the Citizens Party.

In the off-year elections of 1981, the party says, Libertarians running chiefly in non-partisan races for municipal offices won 15 elections in nine states.

Few Libertarians can boast of Randolph's stature in Alaska as a serious candidate who is spared the indignities usually inflicted on third-party candidates in other states.

Randolph is routinely included in every forum for gubernatorial candidates, along with Democratic nominee Bill Sheffield and Republican Tom Fink. His pronouncements are treated with the same deference as theirs, and nearly everybody recognizes his name.

RANDOLPH CAN HARDLY be considered the favorite, but in a state where bizarre elections, multiple candidates and photo finishes are the rule, the possibility of an upset Libertarian victory cannot be ruled out — especially in a four-way race with more than half of Alaska's voters registered as independents.

Randolph's major opponents concede that his theme of individualism strikes a responsive chord with many Alaskans.

"I think we Alaskans kind of represent a free outlook on life. There's a desire to do our own thing, more than in any other state," says Sheffield, the Anchorage hotel chain owner who spent more than $1.1 million and won the Democratic nomination by 259 votes.

Dean settles federal lawsuit over 'felon list'

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas Secretary of State David Dean, settling a federal lawsuit that claimed a list of "possible convicted felons" intimidated voters, has agreed to recruit minority poll watchers for the Nov. 2 general election.

As part of the settlement, filed Thursday in Brownsville, Dean also acknowledged the list, designed to purge voter registration lists of felons, "may have created confusion in the minds of the voting public and produced unjustified fears...about voter eligibility."

The list was mailed last month to county officials, but was recalled after officials discovered it contained the names of some Texans not convicted of felonies.

The lawsuit was filed Sept. 29 in Brownsville on behalf of a Hispanic voting rights group by Rep. Rene Oliveira, who contended the list intimidated some legitimately registered voters.

Dean said he compiled the list in an attempt to cut down on potential voter fraud by convicted felons, who are barred from voting in Texas.

In depositions taken this week, Department of Public Safety Director Jim Adams said he warned Dean's top assistant, Willis Whatley, that DPS computers could not discriminate between misdemeanor and felony offenses, according to Dave Richards, an Austin lawyer.

Hope Ingersoll, 77, won a 25-year battle Thursday when Massachusetts officials announced that they had adopted her plan to run the final section of a new highway to Cape Cod around most of her beloved Grazing Fields Farm. Ingersoll is shown last year at the gate to a field on her Bourne, Mass., farm through which the state wanted to run an elevated highway.

Feisty woman stops Cape Cod highway from going through midst of family farm

BOURNE, Mass. (AP) — It took 25 years and a route of her own, but a feisty farmer stopped state officials from running a Cape Cod highway right through the middle of her family's pasture.

"I think it's true that you can fight City Hall," Hope Ingersoll, now 77, said after hearing she had won. "But you've got to have a lot of persistence, and help — and luck."

State transportation officials announced Thursday they had adopted Mrs. Ingersoll's plan to run the final 2.5-mile section of Route 25 around most of her beloved Grazing Fields Farm, where her family has milked cows, cut hay and raised sheep and cattle since 1907.

The decision will complete a segment of road that was designed to save Cape Cod travelers up to two hours of traffic jams on peak summer weekends, state officials said.

"We started this (fight) long before anyone was worried about the environment," Mrs. Ingersoll said. "We don't use pesticides...We have always been concerned with protecting the land."

Mrs. Ingersoll said no celebration was planned because she was recovering from pneumonia suffered after her 77th birthday last week. "I'm just going to stick with my medicine and get well," she said.

The 25-year battle has cost millions of dollars in inflated road construction costs for the state, and the Ingersolls said they spent thousands of dollars in legal fees.

Federal officials still must approve the revised plan before supplying 75 percent of the funding to complete the road, said William J. Rizzo Jr., assistant state secretary of transportation.

But approval is expected, he said, and by 1986 many Cape Cod-bound motorists will save anywhere from 20 minutes during off-season months to as much as two hours during peak summer weekends because of the rerouting, Rizzo said.

In 1957, state officials first proposed the highway as a short cut to avoid the old route through Wareham, site of some huge traffic jams.

Mrs. Ingersoll promptly asked about the effect on the 900-acre farm.

"They wanted to build the road 17 feet in the air, right through the pasture and alfalfa field, right near the barn," Mrs. Ingersoll said earlier this year while sitting in the 18th-century farmhouse where she has spent most of her life.

"It would spoil the peace, the beauty, the whole atmosphere of the place. I don't want to impede progress. But I don't want to ruin the farm."

Mrs. Ingersoll agreed a new road was needed and hired architects to design a new alternate route that would bend 1,100 feet farther east and travel closer to the edge of her property. Her route would minimize the road's impact on her alfalfa fields, ponds, salt marshes and cranberry bogs, she said.

The state insisted its route was shorter, cheaper and safer, because the alternate route had a sharper curve. Officials decided to build 26 miles of the highway, right to the edge of farm, then hope for a court order allowing completion of the road.

The 26 miles were completed — but that was all.

In 1978, state officials reaffirmed the decision to route the road close to the middle of the farm, but Mrs. Ingersoll — armed with tougher federal environmental laws — appealed. A judge in 1980 ordered a new environmental impact statement, which the state was preparing when it decided to use Mrs. Ingersoll's route.

No price has been set for the portion of the Ingersoll farm that will be used in the road.

"You could call her spunky, but stubborn is another word," says Anne, one of four children. "We just let the state know that any time they would come along with something else, we were ready to stop them — until kingdom come."

Sandinistas seem to go back on promise to hold elections in Nicaragua in 1985

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Sandinistas seem to be backing down on their promise to hold general elections in Nicaragua in 1985, the Inter American Human Rights Commission says.

Commander Daniel Ortega, the "coordinator" of the Nicaraguan governing junta, declared that the elections the Sandinistas have been promising since 1979 "'will depend on the conditions, on the circumstances and on the responses that are given the problems the country is living,'" the commission said in its annual report for 1981-82, released here Friday (Oct. 8).

The commission, an agency of the Organization of American States, noted "with concern that the date that the government itself set for elections — the year 1985 — though not formally changed, is starting to be subordinated to conditions that only the government can characterize."

The group also reported that Nicaraguan authorities "detained a great number of persons" in the last 12 months without fulfilling legal requirements. It complained that Nicaraguan "counterrevolutionaries" have not been provided legal counsel to defend themselves "and have been sentenced to very long terms after trials without due guarantees."

The case of Jose Esteban Gonzalez, the founder and former head of the Nicaraguan Permanent Human Rights Commission, one of the groups that mobilized public opinion against former President Anastasio Somoza, was cited. Although already in exile, Gonzalez was sentenced to a 16-year jail term "for being the 'public relations agent' of a group that supposedly tried to blow up a cement plant and a refinery," the commission said.

"VERY FEW STEPS have been taken to assure ideological pluralism" in Nicaragua. "Political leaders, human rights spokesmen, religious, newsmen and other persons have been insulted by communications media controlled by the government or (have had) their liberty and integrity threatened by authorities for holding opinions contrary to those of the Sandinista National Liberation Front," according to the commission report.

The inter-American human rights group indicated that, in the nine countries on which it reported, the most violence is done in El Salvador.

"The right to life continues being the most violated" of human rights in El Salvador, the report said. Between 300 and 500 political assassinations a month are now being reported, the commission said.

It quoted Catholic Legal Aid Office estimates that 35,000 persons have died in the country as a result of political violence in the last three years, since the overthrow of the elected government of Gen. Carlos H. Romero in October 1979.

The commission said it "does not ignore" that both sides in the continuing guerrilla war are committing human rights violations.

The only note of justifiable optimism that the commission sounded came in its report on Argentina, where it said that Gen. Reynaldo Bignone had stated publicly that he hopes to be Argentina's "last de facto president in history."

THE COMMISSION SAID that it had received no complaints of disappearances of political dissidents in Argentina in the last year and applauded the military government's plan to hold elections and turn the government over to elected officials in 1984.

The commission also reported apparent improvements in the human rights situation in Bolivia that seemed destined to lead to popular elections next April and inauguration of a newly elected president next August. However, subsequent to the writing of the report, Bolivia decided that Hernan Siles Zuazo, who came in first in the three-way presidential race in 1979, but who was not allowed to take office, would be inaugurated Oct. 10.

Of Chile, the commission said it received no complaints of "new disappearances." But it complained of the resurgence of the "abominable practice" of arresting dissidents, of exiling political opponents or banishing them to inhospitable regions of the country, and of the government's failure to account for "the majority of the disappearances" that occurred after the overthrow of the Marxist government in 1973.

Polish parliament expected to officially outlaw Solidarity, although not without opposition

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Parliament is expected to officially outlaw the suspended Solidarity union after a debate today by approving a bill erasing labor reforms won during 16 months of strikes.

But some Solidarity supporters were prepared to fight the martial-law regime's efforts to outlaw the union, distributing leaflets in the Polish capital urging protesters to march on parliament house.

The bill, expected to pass before the parliament adjourns its two-day debate Saturday, caps the Communist government's crackdown on the liberalization movement that began when it decreed martial law last Dec. 13, suspended Solidarity and seized most of its leaders.

The new law voids the registration of all unions, restricts the right to strike won in 1980 and lays down regulations for new unions that would bar them from nationwide organizing.

Leaflets urging Solidarity supporters to march on the parliament circulated in Warsaw on the eve of the debate, but some underground leaders of the independent labor movement called for patience.

"Let us and not the government choose the date and place for protest against the dissolution of Solidarity," said a leaflet that appeared in the capital.

Informed sources said this was the view of the three top leaders of the underground still at large, Bogdan Lis of Gdansk, Zbigniew Bujak of Warsaw and Wladyslaw Hardek of Krakow.

Riot squads were deployed in the capital to scare off protesters, and police seized more members of the union underground, including Solidarity's fourth fugitive national leader, Wladyslaw Frasyniuk. He was arrested Tuesday at his home in Wroclaw, sources said.

Sporadic violence has erupted across Poland in the 10 months since martial law was declared, but in most instances the government has responded with massive force, quelling disturbances.

Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski, in a speech to workers in central Poland, admitted the dissolution of Solidarity might provoke an emotional response, but said "I think the best solution is to treat (the Solidarity era) as a closed chapter of the trade union movement.

"Closing down that chapter does not mean condemning what happened then," he said in a speech broadcast by Warsaw radio. "Closing it down means opening a new chapter creating opportunities for getting out of this chaos.

"A restoration of the structures suspended on the 13th of December would plunge us again in incessant conflicts, quarrels and the like. Poland really cannot afford such a luxury today," he said.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

No 'best' method to treat skin cancer

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you tell me the best treatment for skin cancer? I've heard that a lot of skin cancer can be cured, but I'd like to know what the best method of treatment is. — Allan, Macon, Ga.

Dear Allen: There is no "best" method for treating skin cancer. Dr. Robert Jackson, professor of dermatology at the Ottawa Civic Hospital, explains that choosing the most appropriate form of treatment must often include consideration of the cosmetic result, cost and the convenience to the patient. Even geographic location, whether urban or rural, might influence treatment.

Although some tumors do require a specific form of treatment, it is really not possible to talk of a "best" method.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother is constantly complaining that she can't sleep. Even after I have heard her snoring, she will say that she never closed her eyes. She is 84 years old. Do all older people complain about not being able to sleep? — Ms. B.R., Portland, Ore.

Der Ms. R.: Disturbed sleep is fairly common among older people. Many are able to sleep only in snatches because of the discomfort they experience from the pain of arthritis or similar disorders. Disturbed breathing is also quite common in older people, so is snoring. Snoring increases with age, and it has been estimated that more than half of all men and almost half of all women in their 60s are habitual snorers.

As for the significance of disturbed sleep in older people, I'm fraid there will have to be a lot more research on the subject before we have all the answers.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have learned that my grandson has juvenile rheumtoid arthritis. Can you tell me if there is a cure for this, and what the future might hold for him? — Mrs. J. O'M., Des Moines, Iowa

Dear Mrs. O'M.: Obviously, I cannot provide a prognosis for a patient I haven't seen, but I can give you some idea about what is involved in juvenile rheumatoid arthritis (JRA).

First of all, at present there is no cure for JRA. Treatment is directed at permitting the child to develop as normally as possible while the disease runs its course. That means that steps should be taken to eliminate any factors that might interfere with the child's physical, psychological, or social development.

To the extent possible, the child should be encouraged and helped to attend school and engage in normal play as would any healthy child his or her age. In addition, however physical therapy should be incorporated into the daily routine.

Finally, most children with JRA overcome their illness with little or no aftereffects. For most children, therefore, an optimistic outlook for the future is warranted.

For Arthur, Beckley, West Virginia: It is true that more coal miners die of lung disease or accidents than do other American men. Otherwise, their mortality appears to be no different from that of the general population.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Former physicist nets $2 million on compound to repair tennis shoes

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Twelve years ago, Lyman Van Vliet was a physicist for Hughes Aircraft and a tennis player with a problem.

The soles of his tennis shoes kept wearing out at the toes long before the rest of the shoe gave out.

After two years of experimenting in the garage of his home, he came up with a solution to his problem: Shoe Goo, a sticky, honey-colored, rubber-based compound that is squeezed out of a tube over a hole in a tennis shoe and dries rubber-hard.

Today, Van Vliet no longer works for Hughes.

He and his family are running a business in San Pedro that will do $2 million in sales this year with one product — Shoe Goo.

"IT'S BEEN amazing," Van Vliet said. "We've been able to take advantage of the craze in tennis and then, when that died down, running came along."

Van Vliet, 55, and his wife, Sandy, talked about the business in their office at the plant. The walls of the room are covered with Shoe Goo articles and photos mounted on plaques.

The plaque they treasure most, they say, is a photocopy of a check for a tube of Shoe Goo from actor Charlton Heston.

Shoe Goo wasn't his first attempt to come up with an idea that would sell, Van Vliet said. His first try was a book that reviewed nearly all of the recent classical music recordings put out by symphony orchestras.

After a 1½ year effort he had the book published, but only 47 copies were sold.

Down but not out, Van Vliet turned his attention full-time to coming up with a solution for his tennis shoe problem.

USING THE biggest container in the house, a 10-gallon spaghetti pot, he began mixing various combinations of adhesives and rubber-based compounds.

When he came up with Shoe Goo, his next problem was figuring out how to sell it. Deciding to take the mail-order route, Van Vliet advertised the product in a tennis magazine.

"We just wanted to go out and see if there was a market out there," Van Vliet said.

After several weeks of anxious anticipation and daily visits to the post office, the Van Vliets got their first set of orders — 22 in all.

The mail-order business grew slowly.

Then Van Vliet's wife turned her attention to selling the product to local sporting goods stores and at local marathons and 10-kilometer runs.

THEIR BIG break came in 1975 when she sold the product to the K-Mart discount chain, which had 1,200 stores at the time.

All of a sudden they had to fill an order for 14,400 tubes.

The business in the garage was bursting at its seams with new orders when a visit by the fire marshal left the family with an order to move the whole operation out of the house.

Van Vliet moved the business to a former auto garage in San Pedro, complete with an assembly line designed and built by Van Vliet.

At the same time, Van Vliet quit his work in aeronautics and aerospace to concentrate on his more earthbound enterprise.

Not content with sales in the K-Mart stores, the couple talked the chain into allowing them to come up with a display showing a tennis shoe patched with Shoe Goo.

THE CHAIN said yes to the request, but there was one problem.

"They said, 'Great. We'd love to have it, but we want to stock every one of our stores with the display,'" she said. "We basically had to find and repair 1,500 tennis shoes."

The task of finding 1,500 old and smelly tennis shoes proved more difficult than they imagined, the Van Vliets said.

After getting every old tennis shoe they could from several sporting goods stores in the area, they started offering a tube of Shoe Goo for every tennis shoe brought to them.

After several tennis shoe drives, the Van Vliets got all of the tennis shoes they needed.

The business continued to grow, until it outgrew the plant and moved into a two-story building next door.

THE FACTORY can produce 6,000 to 7,000 tubes of Shoe Goo daily.

Taking advantage of other applications for their product such as using it for glue, the Van Vliets market Shoe Goo as Sportman's Goop and are close to marketing Household Goop.

Household Goop, Van Vliet hopes, will dry clear rather than honey-colored when he's done perfecting it.

U.S. No. 1 in view of some Europeans

Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — Like an old heavyweight champion, a bit battered but still showing unmistakable signs of class, America has recovered its title of Number One Super Power.

At least, that is the verdict of a growing number of European observers who interpret developments in the Middle East, the Falklands and even West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's downfall as evidence of a U.S. comeback.

"Rarely, since the Second World War, has America appeared so clearly to be 'the' super power," according to French columnist Paul de la Gorce, who normally takes a distinctly critical, Gaullist view of the United States and its performance.

The Reagan administration's foreign policy may be criticized at home for often failing to follow-through on its proclaimed principles, but Switzerland's respected Journal de Geneve believes that "one should not under-estimate the absolute conviction of America's rulers that the (foreign) reverses suffered by their side before and after 1975 (when the communists conquered South Vietnam) were leading to general disaster...What especially characterizes the Reagan administration is its determination to use every means in its power not to allow a recurrence of the setbacks America has suffered, not only in Indochina but elsewhere and, above all, in Africa."

Anxiety has been repeatedly expressed in the U.S. that the Falklands war and the fighting in Lebanon cost America influence in Latin America and the Arab world respectively. Europeans tend to see it differently.

For de la Gorce and other commentators here, the British and Israeli military successes were, in reality, "American victories performed through intermediaries."

According to de la Gorce, "In the Falklands, the U.S. provided the British forces the help of the American network of detection and surveillance, by air and satellites, that gave them the decisive instrument of their success."

As for Lebanon, "Washington determined the successive phases of the war, initially permitting the Israelis to win on the ground, then according the Arab countries a bit of verbal or symbolic satisfaction which sufficed to keep them immobile, and finally organizing the settlement of the conflict, showing that it alone had the power to determine the destiny of the region to the exclusion of all other powers, including the Soviet Union itself."

Grand Opening

IN LOVING MEMORY OF
died August 30, 1982

In everyones life there is, at one time or other, a "SOMEONE SPECIAL." A person who is a friend in every sense of the word. A person who leaves a lasting impression. A someone who was never without a smile. A someone who spread love and joy everywhere he went.
This is what George Namoci was to us. He was and is our "SOMEONE SPECIAL." There will never be a day when George r won't live and smile in our hearts.
We just learned recently that George Namoci died August 30, 1982. The news deeply saddened us but we have a very special gift to hold onto.
Our friend George gave us the gift of himself. He was proud of his heritage and taught us many of his ways. Mostly he gave his love which we hold dear - as his memory.

An Old Indian saying says it well;
"It is chance that makes brothers, but hearts that make Friends."

FHA/VA financing availble.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 9⅞% for 95% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14¾% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 16.5%.

* The first three years payment and buyers qualifications will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 10 7/8% on a 95% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14 3/4% for the first year of the loan. After the first year of the loan, interest will be charged at the average annual Treasury Bill rate plus 2 1/2% with no change in the loan payment. In the 4th and 5th years there will be an increase of 10% of the principal and interest payment. The 6th through 30th years of the loan will have a principal and interest payment corresponding to the percentage rate as outlined above. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 14.735%.
