■ Blackshear exercises first ever veto to nix Crooker appointment to board

BLACKSHEAR

By KELLIE JONES
Staff Writer

Mayor Tim Blackshear used his veto power for the first time Friday by vetoing the appointment of Joyce Crooker to the Moore Development Board.

"I felt she did not meet the qualifications as outlined in the Moore Development by-laws. You must be or have been in the past a chief executive officer of a company," he said.

When asked about Crooker's statement last week that she had owned her own business for 10 years, Blackshear said, "It was a family-run business and I don't know who was in charge."

Crooker said she does fulfill two of the qualifications needed to be on the board. "I was the sole owner of Mr. G's Garden City. Everything, tax papers and all the data, was in my name. I did all the buying and took care of all the accounts. Bill helped me at times but he was not listed as the owner or operator.

"The other qualification I fulfill is the one that states you must presently serve or had

Settles update expected Tuesday

By CARLTON JOHNSON

The fate of the Settles Hotel is still not crystal clear, but progress is still being made to have the historic structure renovated into an elderly housing complex.

Sally Loveland of New York-based National Development Council will be in Big Spring Tuesday to discuss the status of the project.

Loveland and City Manager Gary Fuqua didn't get the results they expected when they tackled the first major financial hurdle concerning the Settles Hotel in July.

The Texas Department of Housing and Community Affairs in Austin was the first stop for Loveland and Fuqua because it funds projects like the Settles Hotel.

Texas has Housing Trust Funds for rural non-metropolitan communities whereby projects like the Settles Hotel, being renovated into an elderly housing complex, may receive partial funding of up to $300,000.

Big Spring's first attempt to secure a Housing Trust Fund grant failed by just five points.

The state invited the city to apply again during the next round of funding in January 1996.

The problem with the application submitted in June is the projects total cost and committed funds from other sources.

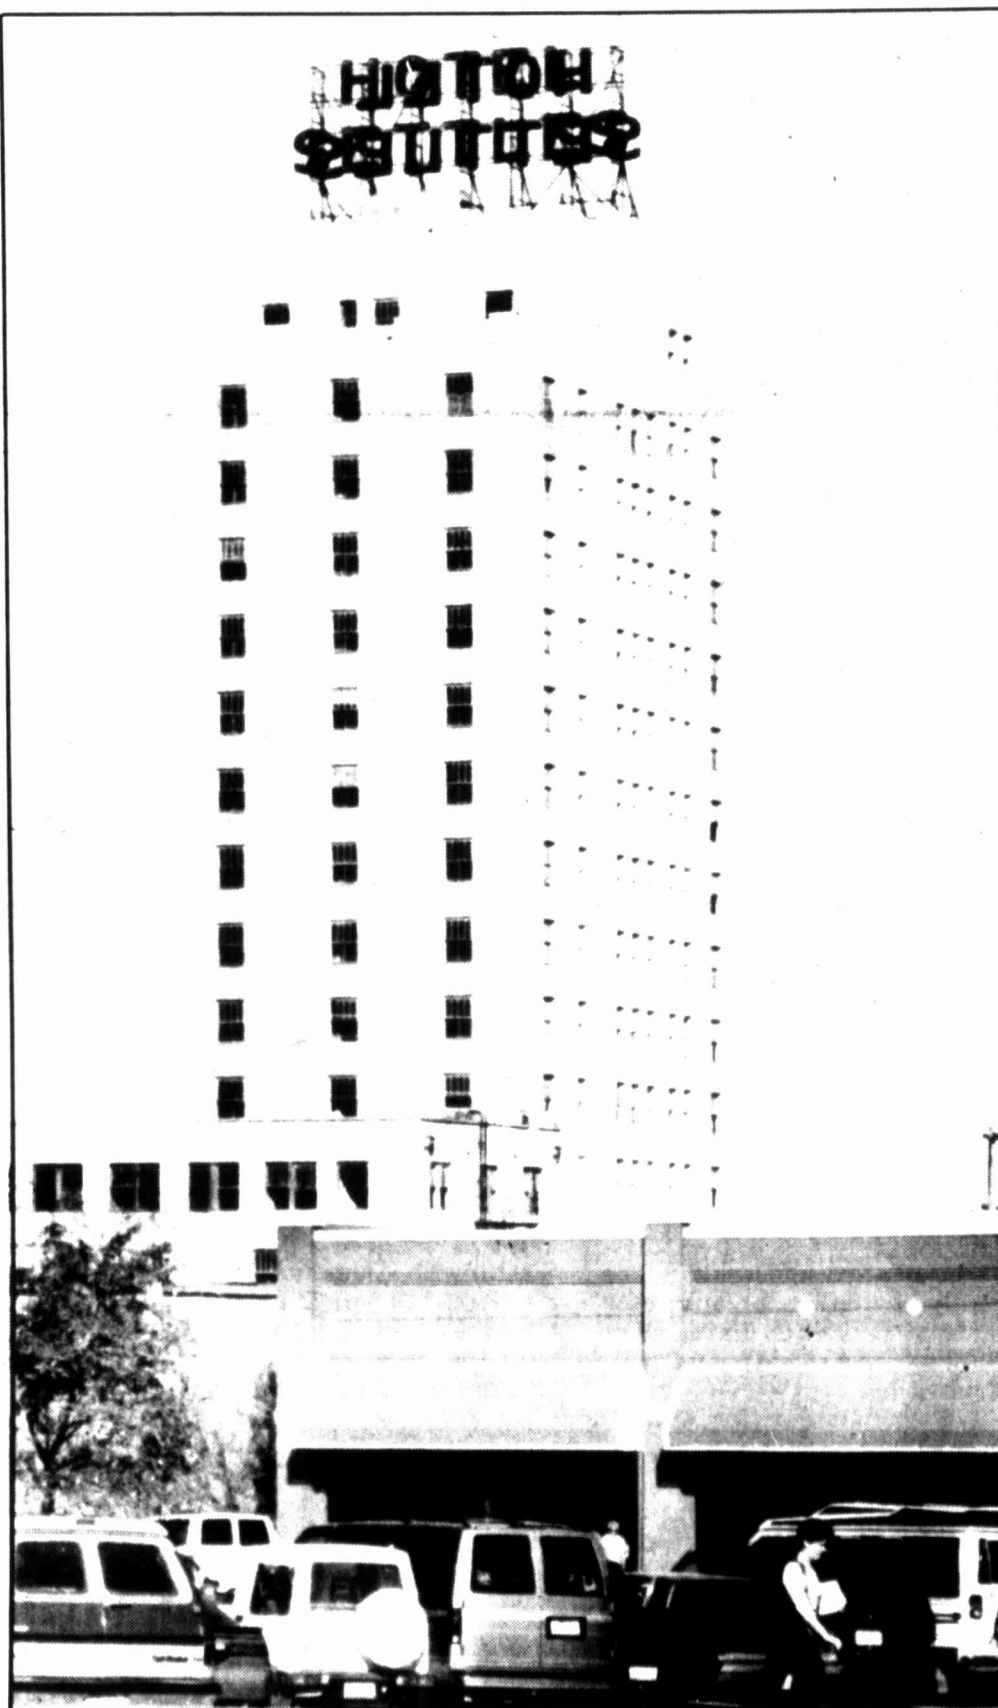

City officials were told the application was strong where project concept, housing need and overall financial qualifications, and development were concerned.

The complete renovation of the Settles Hotel project will cost approximately $5.2 to $5.3 million and will feature 60

An update on the renovation of the Settles Hotel will be given to city officials Tuesday. The idea behind the project is to take the hotel and turn it into elderly housing.

Master plan nearing completion as committee fine tunes direction

By CARLTON JOHNSON
Staff Writer

After nearly a year of planning, meeting and focusing, the city of Big Spring is just a step away from having a long range plan.

The 37-member Comprehensive Plan Committee met in an all-day session Saturday to fine tune Phase II of the plan.

Previously, the committee identified six of the 20 sections as priorities.

Chairman Tommy Churchwell said the plan written by Carter & Burgess is a professional plan designed by people who write plans such as this for a living. Therefore, the people of Big Spring should pay attention to it.

"The committee's focus is to give a local slant to every part of the plan," Churchwell said. "The whole purpose of the plan is to identify our strengths and

Lawton residents expect benefits from bombing trial

LAWTON, Okla. (AP) — Traffic slowed Friday so people could take a fresh look at the three-story brick courthouse where the two men accused of the deadliest terrorist attack on U.S. soil will be tried next year.

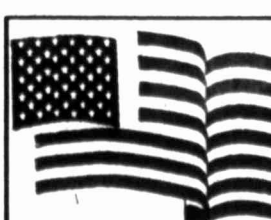

Residents also prepared to profit from the onslaught of reporters and others expected here for the May 17 trial of Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols.

"I would hate to think that Lawton would want to capitalize on anyone's tragedy, but it will happen," Vice Mayor Glen Alford said. "The reason behind it is not of our choosing."

apartment units ranging from $275 per month to $300 per month, a refurbished ballroom, lobby, and penthouse.

Within three months of securing the needed funds construction can begin on the project, but all necessary funds must be secured before the first shovel hits the dirt.

Loveland said projects like the Settles have many types of benefits, including the opportunity to provide low-cost housing for seniors, a chance for the revitalization of areas like Big Spring's downtown area, and they provide jobs.

Loveland, who has been in Big Spring several times since last August, said, "People in Big Spring do want the Settles Hotel redeveloped."

In September 1994, she was in town with construction engineers, environmental engineers, and an architect and after consulting with them determined the Settles is a structurally sound building and the renovation project is doable.

One aspect of renovating the Settles Hotel that has much of Big Spring excited is it is very similar to the renovation of the Windsor Hotel in Abilene, which the NDC helped renovate.

"A lot of things go into a project like this, but it takes people working together," Loveland said. "The proof in the pudding is the Windsor in Abilene (80-apartment complex complete with a refurbished ballroom and lobby).

served in a professional capacity. I was a federal court reporter for 25 years at Webb Air Force Base and that is an esteemed profession."

Howard County woman Stephanie Horton, who nominated Crocker, said Horton is a very qualified. She was a professional court reporter for 25 years and she owned her own business for 15 years. I will vote to override the mayor's veto.

The city charter states the mayor does have the right to veto any ordinance or resolution passed by the city council as long as it is done before the measure goes into effect.

The city is required to state its objections in writing and the city council members must vote to override the mayor's veto during a regular or special meeting.

Howard County said this matter is scheduled for the next regular meeting on Sept. 24 when it will be taken up for a vote.

Howard County Board President Cliff Fillingim said he supports the mayor's decision to keep Crocker off the board.

"The by laws are set up for the reason to ensure there are qualified people on the board," Fillingim said.

Howard County said he wanted to be on the board is to see that the by laws are changed so that Stephanie Horton and Pat Decker have a direct say so on how the board is run. A person should be on the board to bring jobs to Big Spring and not to look out for an individual person's political agenda. I feel the mayor has seen through this and done the correct thing by overriding the decision.

Crocker added, "I have no plans for the board. I intend to serve on the board in the same capacity as any other member of the board. I have no axe to grind whatsoever."

Crocker and Eddie Cole, who is owner and CEO of his own business, Wes-Tex Auto Parts, were appointed at the last city council meeting to replace Fillingim and the board's vice president Charles Dunnham. The board's by laws state the officers shall serve until new ones are elected so technically Fillingim and Dunnham are still on the board.

were snapping up the 1,240 motel rooms in this town of 85,000 following a judge's decision Thursday to move the trial to Lawton, 90 miles from the bombing site and about 35 miles from the Texas state line in southwestern Oklahoma.

Nichols and McVeigh face murder and conspiracy charges in the April 19 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, which killed 169 people and injured more than 500.

Lawton was carved from the prairie in 1901 and has depended throughout its life on nearby Fort Sill, a cavalry post that opened in 1869 and is now home to 20,000 Army soldiers. The Apache leader Geronimo was held there as a prisoner of war and is buried on the grounds of the fort.

It wasn't immediately known where McVeigh and Nichols will be held during the trial but speculation in Lawton has centered on Fort Sill, where clapboard buildings with peeling paint flank earlier structures of stone.

Federal authorities toured the post Thursday, but a Fort Sill spokesman said they had not received orders on housing the prisoners.

"I can't recall a time when a civilian has been held here. We're breaking new ground," spokesman Jon Long said.

The courtroom where they will be tried was locked and dark Friday. Deputy marshal A.D. Templeton already looked tired from turning away reporters scouting the building.

Officials say the courtroom will seat only about 50 spectators. The overflow may be able to watch via closed-circuit television in a room nearby, but it is extremely unlikely the trial will be broadcast, Assistant U.S. Attorney Steve Mullins said.

Defense lawyers had protested U.S. District Judge Wayne Alley's decision to move the trial to Lawton, arguing that it is too close to the site of the bombing for the suspects to get a fair trial. Jurors will be drawn from an area that does not include Oklahoma City.

But Stephen Jones, McVeigh's lead lawyer, softened his position a little on Friday.

"I want to go down there and spend some time in town and talk to some folks and get their views," Jones said.

Jones wasn't sure how jurors in a town dependent on the military might view two former soldiers. Nichols and McVeigh served in the same Army unit at Fort Riley, Kansas.

"Mr. McVeigh was a sergeant who was honorably discharged and won the Bronze Star," Jones said. "That might be perceived as helping us, but on the other hand it might be perceived as hurting us."

In restaurants and offices around Lawton, residents debated the judge's decision to move the trial.

"I'm glad they didn't move it out of state," Teresa Traugber said as she lunched near the courthouse. Her friend Beth Wakeley disagreed.

"People are still too angry. Once the trial starts it's just going to hash it all up," Ms. Wakeley said.

Another friend, Brenda Bentley, said she knew people killed in the bombing, but thought she could be an impartial juror.

They also discussed the trial's impact on the community: "I'm telling y'all. Things will never be the same again," Ms. Bentley said.

Renowned physicist Hawkings marries

CAMBRIDGE, England (AP) — Pledging his vows in an eerie, robotic voice Friday, Stephen Hawking married for the second time.

The renowned physicist, paralyzed by a progressive nerve disorder, programmed his vows to his former nurse, Elaine Mason, into the voice synthesizer designed by her ex-husband, David Mason.

"It's wonderful. I have married the woman I love," Hawking, 53, said after the 35-minute ceremony at a Cambridge registry office.

More than 50 reporters and photographers clustered outside in rain to photograph the pioneer of research on the Big Bang theory of the beginning of the universe beside his 45-year-old bride.

"I love him very much — I am very happy," Mason said, cradling Hawking's head. "He's the coolest man I know." She said they would honeymoon at a secret location in England.

Inside, there were only seven guests. Hawking's three children from his first marriage and the bride's two children did not attend.

weaknesses. With this plan we can fix the problems and sell our strong points."

Aside from addressing the good and bad points of the city, Churchwell added the plan will also show Big Spring how to fix things with the resources it already has.

"One of the missions of Saturday's committee meeting was to see how the Big Spring community can improve itself with the tax dollars it already has," he said.

One thing the committee wants the community to avoid is circumventing the plan without looking at it first.

The first priority to hire a plan coordinator when it is completed.

Churchwell said one or two public meetings will be called in October to present the completed plan to the public and then the plan will officially be presented to the City Council in November.

He said hopefully Big Spring will see the beginning of the plan's implementation by late December or early January.

Churchwell said, "We need everyone to work for the common good. The end result is better schools, parks and quality of life, which in turn allows us to attract more industry."

"Businesses want to go where the quality of life and the attitude is good."

Churchwell also said the community as a whole must get past the idea "there's no money." He said it takes money to make money.

Another idea in the plan is to utilize the city's natural resources.

Churchwell said, "People have to ask why and then put forth the effort to get things done."

In addition to hiring a plan coordinator, Churchwell said the plan, upon completion of the comprehensive plan, is to retain the present committee for two years and then rotate new members in at a rate of 25 percent every six months.

Within the committee, a public relations subcommittee would be established to answer question about the plan's implementation; the plan would be reviewed and evaluated every two years; and if needed, the plan would be revised every five years.

Churchwell said Big Spring has a lot to sell and to do that the city has to market what it has and continue to build its image.

This also includes getting the many service clubs around Big Spring to buy into the comprehensive plan.

"This is a guide we think will work," Churchwell said.

RE: Re-zoning 1900 Wasson Road

Dear Honorable Council Members,

We greatly appreciate the opportunity you gave us to voice our concerns regarding the re-zoning of 1905 Wasson Road from a Planned Development 7-NS to a Retail Zone; for the use of a Car Wash. The decision to vote down the re-zoning at this location must have been a very difficult one for you to make, knowing that one of the councils greatest concerns is the economic development of the City. However, there is no doubt in my mind that you made the right decision in this instance.

Allow me to recap the facts that were presented to the Re-zoning Commission and the City Council that helped influence your decision on your vote.

- *Property owners in the immediate area were not in favor of the Car Wash.
- *There were a large number of citizens concerned about the increased traffic, noise, the bright lights that would be shining into their windows at night.
- *A children's playground and 12 families adjoining the property line of the proposed site.
- *In the City of Big Spring there are no other self operating Car Washes located in a residential area.
- *Not one of you would have liked this Car Wash located directly beside your yard, disturbing the peace and quiet of your homes; and the safety of your children.
- *Within one half mile of 1905 Wasson Road, across from the main entrance of Comanche Trail Park, there are large partials of land currently zoned for Retail use and the Car Wash could have been built there without having to be rezoned.

In summary, you listened to tax paying property owners, who were greatly concerned that the Car Wash would adversely affect and devalue their properties; tax paying citizens concerned about the safety of their children, due to increased traffic; and took into consideration that you as tax paying residential property owners, would not appreciate this type business adjoining the property line of your home.

I would like to congratulate and commend all of you for doing what I believe a City Council should be doing, by weighing the economic development of the City and protecting our already existing residential areas from encroachments that could be harmful. The City of Big Spring should be proud of its local Government and City Council.

Again, I would like to thank the entire City Council for the hard work and the long hours you give to the Community to make Big Spring a better place to live, raise our families, and do business.

Sincerely,

Jeff Carnell

Dream can pull us together if we let it do so

It is the stuff dreams are made of. It is also the stuff that makes good communities — ideas of the citizens and a willingness to put those ideas into action.

Katy McAteer has one of those dreams — to put a wooden playground in Comanche Trail Park, funded by the community, built by the community, something for the children of this community.

McAteer approached the Big Spring City Council with her dream, and received a favorable reaction.

McAteer's dream is a reality in cities such as Plainview and Wichita Falls, where citizens are proud of what they have accomplished.

Because the people build it, there is a sense of ownership, resulting in less vandalism.

What McAteer dreams of is a beautiful asset to the community and a way of pulling the community together for a single, good purpose. The children get involved in the process through naming their playground. Adults are involved through fund-raising, organizing, donation of time and materials and through the actual building of the playground.

As a dream, it is a wonderful idea.

Now, it's time for the citizens of Big Spring to decide if they want to be a part of this dream. Do you want to be a part of making it a reality, not only for McAteer but for yourself, your children and for the others who make up the community called Big Spring?

There are many ways to help. Call your council representative and ensure the response remains favorable. Offer your time and services. Come up with ideas to make the place even more special, such as planting flowers or trees.

There is so much that can be done. It will take all of us, working together for a change.

Anything that can bring together rather than divide can only be beneficial for all.

Sports has its place in our lives

Just when you think you can't be surprised, you're surprised. It's kind of like rain in West Texas — just when you start to think there will never be another drop, quite a few drop on your head.

Soccer season has started again. And, since football kicked off about the same time, I should have known the rain would be coming.

Anyway, we had our first game Saturday and that's all it took for the enthusiasm to return.

For some reason, in practice you just don't think they are paying much attention to anything you are trying to teach them. Maybe it's the heat, the long days or something.

But, then comes the game and those little rascals proceed to show you that, yes, they were paying attention.

We only scored one goal, but it was a beauty. Brady Frazier finally hit the net. Yeah! He's come oh-so-close before but close is as close does and it just isn't the same as a ball inside the net, past the goalie.

I don't really understand why soccer hasn't caught on here in the United States, especially in Texas. It is a good game, requires many skills and involves both boys and girls on the same team, working together for a common goal.

I rather like the part where boys and girls learn they can work together without any strife or inferiority complexes.

Maybe they are too young to have learned the behaviors. However, I hope they never learn them because think how much better their lives will be when they have to join the real world. They already know both sexes can work together as a team for a common goal.

If they learn it playing a game, think what happens when they apply that attitude to real life.

After all, isn't that why we support organized sports? Isn't that what we say sports participation teaches — working together, depending on each other to do their best for the team? And, aren't those skills we always say our children need to learn because they are life skills which can be applied to almost any situation?

Sports has a necessary place in our lives. We still have a ways to go before we realize that sports is not a substitute for a good education.

But it has its place in teaching certain intangible values that are hard to instill.

You can talk about working together, but until you do, it's just words. It's the action that gives meaning to the words.

If sports is used to teach those values, then a valuable lesson is learned. A lesson that will carry through and be of great help during their lives.

'Old Boys Network' better watch out - women are on the move

By EDITH M LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

BEIJING (AP) — The old boys' network better watch out. The 30,000 women who left Beijing energized to fight for women's rights don't yet have an old girls' network, but they're on the move.

Armed with a 150-page plan of action, they are heading to the four corners of the world to pressure governments to change discriminatory laws and put money into health and education instead of arms and ammunition.

Perhaps as important as the document itself is the global network of women who are now committed to achieving its goals — equality, development and peace.

Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland, who made a rousing call for action at Friday's close of the Fourth World Conference on Women, said the women's network is growing and reaching down to the grassroots.

"Women's issues have become broader issues than they were maybe 20 years ago," and now include topics such as development, the economy and the environment, she said in an interview.

Since the first U.N. women's conference in Mexico City in 1975, women have been organizing internationally. Their focus has sharpened and their political skills have been honed.

For all women's activists, the key word now is action.

At the last U.N. women's conference in Nairobi in 1985, the negotiators were mainly male bureaucrats, and representatives of voluntary organizations were pretty much sidelined, said Indian feminist Gita Sen.

Over the past decade, she said, women's organizations recognized that it was crucial to get their views across when governments and international agencies were discussing issues and making commitments.

Otherwise, "we're always put in the position of having to plead with them after the fact... that somehow we fit into their agendas," she said.

In the international arena, women first made a big difference at the U.N. conference on human rights in Vienna in 1993 when they put women in the center of the human rights debate, she said in an interview.

At last year's U.N. population conference in Cairo, women again played a critical role, changing the debate from controlling population growth to women's rights to control their bodies, she said.

American feminist Bettv

Friedan, godmother of the women's liberation movement, said the women who came to Beijing "were not there as victims the way they were in previous conferences."

When the conference started on Sept. 4, many feared the Vatican would re-fight the battle it waged against abortion in Cairo — and that delegates would backtrack on the Cairo declaration that women have a right to determine when and whether to have children. Neither happened.

Surprising many participants, delegates from 189 countries meeting in Beijing approved several measures that went farther than Cairo. They declared that women have the right to control their own sexuality and that governments should review laws punishing women who have abortions.

The Beijing conference also reflected the growth in the women's movement since Nairobi. There were 300 non-governmental organizations trying to lobby governments on women's issues in Nairobi and more than 3,000 in Beijing.

For all women's activists, the key word now is action. Netumbo Nandi-Ndaitwah, deputy foreign minister of Namibia, said Africa's agenda in Nairobi was to end apartheid in South Africa and liberate the continent from colonialism. With those goals achieved, it is now focusing on development "and economic liberation," she said.

"From here, we will not rest," she said, noting that African nations which met daily in Beijing would set up a regional organization to ensure that governments implement the Platform For Action.

"This conference is the jump-start for the next century, where women I think will be the most prominent of the peacemakers and the negotiators and the decisionmakers," Bella Abzug, the American feminist and former congresswoman, said in an interview.

Patricia Licuanan of the Philippines, the head of the conference's main committee and of the U.N. Commission on the Status of Women, said the process of building a women's network like the old boys' network is just beginning.

"It's just now that women are really getting into positions where they can network, or take advantage of people at the same level who do the same thing," she said. "I'm sure ... it will grow exponentially."

Edith M. Lederer, based in London, covered the women's conference and the Cairo population conference for the AP.

Political skies clearing for Clinton

WASHINGTON CALLING

WASHINGTON — While Republicans carve themselves up in pre-primary warfare, once-cloudy political skies are clearing for President Clinton.

White House political aides are the most upbeat they've been in months.

Money is rolling in (the president leaves Monday on a fund-raising expedition to California, Colorado, Pennsylvania and Florida); Clinton is looking stronger on foreign policy, and the White House message that the GOP wants to increase Medicare payments to give tax breaks to the rich is selling well.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich gives Clinton a one-in-three chance of being re-elected, but says Clinton is such a brilliant politician he could narrow the odds.

Freshman GOPers out to slay Commerce Department are going nowhere even though Gingrich has promised to roll their plan to dismember the department into the must-pass tax-and-budget bill this fall.

Senate rules require 60 votes for extraneous issues to survive as part of that package, or to break a filibuster if a free-standing bill ever hits the Senate floor. That's a tough number to corral, as Senate leader Bob Dole found in earlier attempts at regulatory reform.

Meantime, fans of one Commerce agency rally behind it: the National Institute of Standards and Technology draws high praise from 25 Nobel laureates, 18 scientific societies and Reagan-Bush Republicans.

The Navy may be heading back to Vietnam, now that the U.S. has reopened relations with its once-bitter enemy.

The Military Sealift Command is hunting for new Asian ports for its growing fleet of vessels loaded with war-fighting supplies. One possibility is the U.S.-built-and-abandoned base at Cam Ranh Bay.

Dwindling Democrats: The resignation of Rep. Norm

Mineta, D-Calif., to take job with defense contractor Lockheed Martin and the conviction-driven departure of Rep. Mel Reynolds, D-Ill., shrinks ranks of House Democrats to fewer than 200 for first time since 1948. Things could get worse soon with Rep. Mel Tucker, D-Calif., facing corruption charges stemming from the operation of a California office.

Look for Congress to take up the thorny immigration issue next year. Likely changes include a reduction in the number of new immigrants from 700,000 to 500,000 a year, and new restrictions on family reunion programs favoring Italian and Irish families since the '60s.

Speaking of immigration: Former New York Gov. Mario Cuomo quips that the inscription on the Statue of Liberty needs revising: "let us send back your tired, your poor, your huddled masses."

If you were one of those innocents who wrote off a single charitable contribution of $250 or more on your tax forms this year, the IRS may want to talk to you. Beginning with the 1994 tax year, a canceled check will no longer convince the IRS that the deduction was for real. A written receipt is required. Some 153,000 computer-selected candidates are being hauled in to prove they actually gave.

Look for Congress to scrap a proposal that would eventually slice the retirement benefits of 334,000 active duty troops and about that many reservists.

The cuts slid quietly through the House this summer. Once word of the reduction filtered out, howls of outrage have been heard from the Joint Chiefs on down. Clinton climbed on the bandwagon, gleefully painting the Republicans as willing to break a sacred trust with our men and women in uniform to save $700 million over five years.

Now, Senate leader Bob Dole, who claimed not to have known about the provision until the outcry began, is reassuring all that he will find another way to save the money.

Political notes:

Gingrich disses Powell. Clearly weary of fielding questions about retired Gen. Colin Powell, Speaker Newt snaps that Powell won't be as well liked and respected a "personality" once he starts to take a stand on issues....

More evidence that political money has no ideology. A study by the National Republican Congressional Committee finds that nearly 60 percent of the political contributions of the top 400 political action committees during the first six months of 1995 went to Republican officeholders. It was one-third in the 1993-94 election cycle when Democrats were running things....

Republicans say no one will notice if the government shuts down at the end of this month. Not so, says Richard Trumka, president of the United Mine Workers, who warns miners aren't going to work unless there are inspectors from the Mine Enforcement Safety Administration nearby.

Thanks to some spectacular disasters, the mines are one of the few industries where workers have a contractual right to refuse to go to work if they think the mines are unsafe.

Some House Democrats are urging Clinton to veto any budget reconciliation bill that doesn't include campaign finance reform. Reformers see the must-pass reconciliation bill as their only hope of getting campaign finance reform through a GOP-controlled Congress. Don't hold your breath.

Peril primer includes water, cribs and fat-free

WASHINGTON (AP) — Water, used cribs and fat-free desserts are among the unexpected dangers listed in a brand new primer of perils compiled by consumer groups.

The Coalition for Consumer Health and Safety released "Hidden Hazards Number Two," its second menu of menace, on Wednesday.

This year's record of risks ranges from alcohol-drug interactions to smokeless tobacco to low-fat desserts.

Low-fat desserts? That's right. "Non-fat desserts are not necessarily non-fattening," James Edwards of CUNA Mutual Insurance Group told a news conference.

Many people mistake low-fat for low-calorie, he said. But often low-fat or fat-free foods pack plenty of sugar calories.

But the low-fat label can mislead dieters, causing them to binge on these foods, he said.

Washing those tasty muffins down with a glass of water may not be as safe as people would hope, either.

The parasite cryptosporidium can survive chlorine and many filtration systems, threatening millions of people. In 1993, thousands were sickened in Milwaukee by this bug.

Lisa Ragain of the National Association of People with AIDS said individuals with weak immune systems are most at risk, although anyone can be sickened by the parasite.

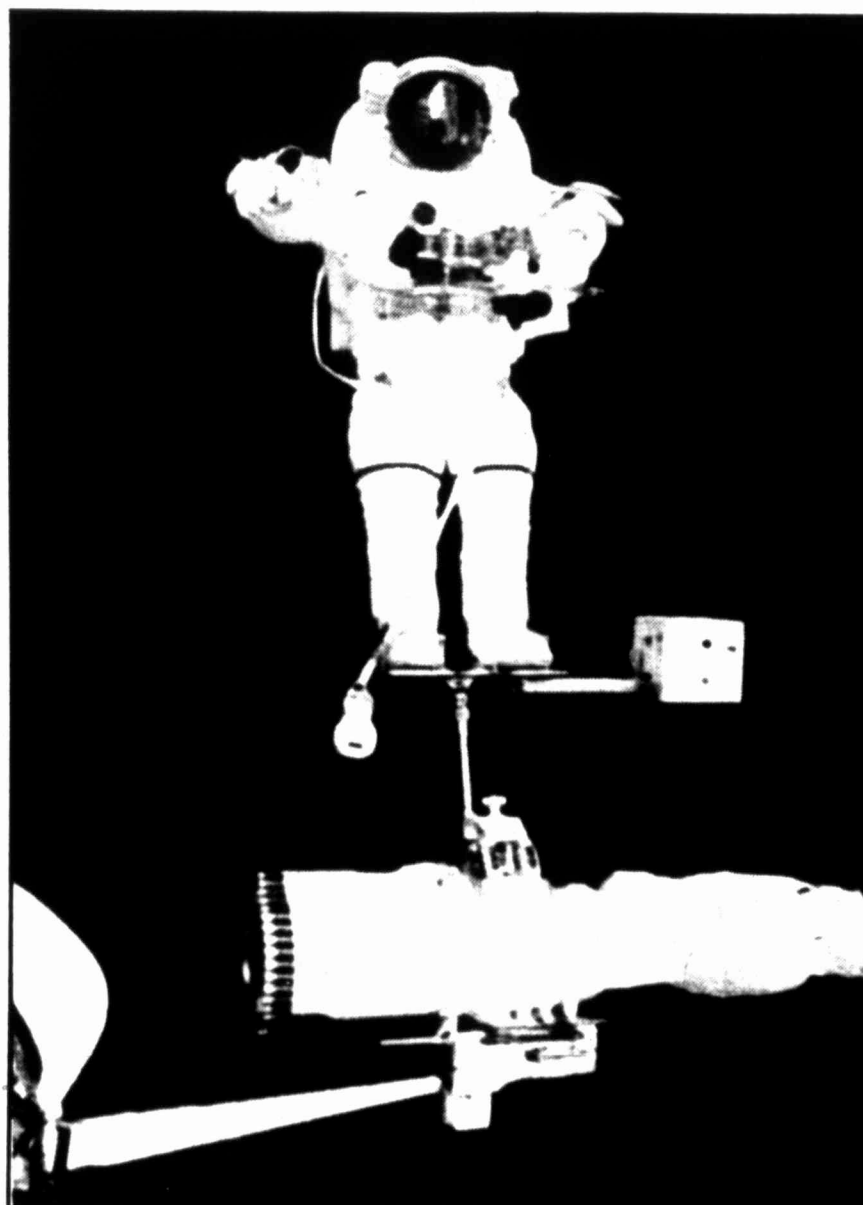

Sherri Watson of the American Lung Association warned of the dangers of carbon monoxide from stoves and heaters, while Mary Ellen Fise of the Consumer Federation of America noted the hazards of the interaction of alcohol and medications — even common items such as aspirin.

Other hidden hazards discussed in the new brochure include unsafe installation of child safety seats in cars, guns in the home, falls by the elderly, smokeless tobacco, new strains of AIDS and the dangers of old baby cribs.

Each listing describes the hazard and discusses how to avoid the danger. Consumers can obtain a copy of the brochure by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Hidden Hazards, CFA, P.O. Box 12099, Washington, D.C. 20005-0099.

Members of the coalition include nearly 40 insurance, consumer and public-interest groups.

Astronaut James Voss is secured to the space shuttle Endeavour's robot arm while testing thermal modifications to his spacesuit during a Saturday spacewalk.

Astronauts couldn't chill with new thermal suits

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — They did their best to chill out in the freezing vacuum of space, staying in the shadow of the shuttle.

But to NASA's delight, Endeavour's two spacewalking astronauts kept warm Saturday thanks to new heated gloves, thermal socks, boot liners and toasty long underwear.

"Couldn't be more comfortable," Michael Gernhardt said. "These gloves are working great. I'm warm."

Gernhardt and James Voss spent nearly an hour each on the end of the robot arm, raised 30 feet above the cargo bay in the coldest possible position to mimic a space station construction site.

The temperature dipped down to minus 120 or minus 130 degrees Fahrenheit, said Gerald Miller, NASA's lead flight controller for spacewalks. A precise figure won't be available until temperature sensors are examined after the flight.

One by one, the spacewalkers remained motionless on the robot arm in an attempt to get cold — to no avail. Voss, in fact, had to turn off the fingertip heaters in his gloves at one point.

The two men were just as comfortable bustling around the cargo bay, although the thermometer down there registered a mere minus 75.

NASA wants as much practice as possible working in this deep-freeze environment before construction of an international space station begins in two years.

Officials estimate American astronauts will have to perform 200 to 250 hours of spacewalks per year from 1999 through 2001 to assemble and maintain the huge orbiting outpost. That's four to five times the amount performed in 1993, NASA's peak spacewalking year because of the Hubble Space Telescope repair mission.

Companions to testify in bridge death

DETROIT (AP) — Four people will be called to testify for the prosecution in the trial of a companion charged with beating a woman until she escaped by jumping to her death from a bridge.

The four, who were with Martell Welch Jr. at the time of the beating, will not be prosecuted. Welch, 19, is charged with murder for the beating of Deletha Word, 33, before dawn on Aug. 19.

Two of his companions tried to restrain Welch, and the most any of them did was vandalize Word's car, Wayne County Prosecutor John O'Hair said Thursday.

Welch stood silent at his arraignment Friday, and Judge Jeffrey Collins entered an innocent plea for him. Trial was set for March 4.

He could be convicted of first- or second-degree murder. The former carries an automatic sentence of life imprisonment without parole, the latter up to a life sentence.

Witnesses said Welch got mad after a fender-bender with Word, dragged her from her car, beat her and threatened her with a tire iron. They said she jumped into the Detroit River as he approached her with the iron.

Word's death attracted nationwide attention, in part because of reports that some of the approximately 40 onlookers cheered. Police and prosecutors later played down those accounts, saying most witnesses were shocked.

Judge denies new trial to condemned journalist

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — After losing their bid for a new trial, lawyers for death row inmate Mumia Abu-Jamal plan to launch an appeals process that could keep the racially charged case in the courts for years.

Abu-Jamal, a former radio reporter who was convicted in the 1981 slaying of a police officer, had sought a new trial on grounds he was framed and had an incompetent trial attorney.

Common Pleas Judge Albert F. Sabo, in denying the bid to overturn the conviction, wrote in his opinion Friday that Abu-Jamal "fails to prove by a preponderance of evidence each and every claim presented to this court."

Abu-Jamal's case has attracted international attention from death penalty opponents, celebrities and politicians who believe he was railroaded onto death row by a corrupt and racist judicial system.

His lawyers had not seen the opinion Friday night, but were already planning to file an appeal with the Pennsylvania Supreme Court next week, and if they are rebuffed there, with the federal district court. The process could take years.

The lawyers said they had expected Sabo's ruling.

Appendix turns into an ovary; family sues in botched surgery

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — A surgeon removed a 5-year-old girl's ovary and fallopian tube instead of her appendix, her parents claim in a lawsuit.

Jeffrey and Melissa Pifer filed suit in Erie County Common Pleas Court this week against Dr. Ronald W. Pearson, Dr. Stella E. Dougan and Millcreek Community Hospital, just outside Erie.

The Pifers said they had more than $41,454 in medical bills and their daughter, now 6, suffered permanent injury. They sued for unspecified damages. The child's name was not made public.

The doctors declined comment. The hospital's executive director, Mary L. Eckert, did not return messages left at the hospital Friday evening.

According to the lawsuit, the girl was taken to the emergency room in August 1994 with severe abdominal pain, diarrhea and fever, then admitted under Dougan's care.

Pearson later diagnosed appendicitis, but the organ ruptured before they could operate. After surgery, Pearson said he had removed the appendix, but a pathology report found he took out the fallopian tube and ovary instead.

The child developed a massive abdominal infection, and Pearson operated again. About a week later, her parents took her back to the hospital with a ruptured incision, infection and an abscess.

They later transferred her to Children's Hospital in Pittsburgh, which cured the infection.

Family friend accused in abduction

CONROE (AP) — Hilton Lewis Crawford was a family friend and an ex-cop. To 12-year-old Samuel McKay Everett he was simply "Uncle Hiltie."

On Saturday, "Uncle Hiltie" remained in jail, accused of kidnapping the boy in a bizarre ransom scheme police believe was cooked up to pay off Crawford's mounting debts.

Crawford, 56, has been charged with McKay's aggravated kidnapping. Lt. Ted Pearce of the Montgomery County sheriff's office said.

Police and the FBI, who believe McKay is still alive, continued their investigation Saturday to no avail.

McKay was last seen Tuesday night before his parents Paulette and Carl Everett went out for the evening to an Amway meeting. The two sold Amway products, as did Crawford.

Everett and Crawford apparently had been involved in business dealings at one time.

According to court documents filed Friday, investigators were told that Crawford had telephoned Mrs. Everett to determine whether she planned to attend the Amway meeting.

Hours after McKay's abduction, his family received a call demanding a ransom of $500,000 in $100 bills, police said.

FBI spokesman Rolando Moss said the parents had received a ransom demand but he refused to elaborate.

Authorities believe the boy may have been taken in a brown or gold Chrysler seen speeding through the family's neighborhood about 8:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Montgomery County District Attorney Dan Rice said evidence shows Crawford traveled extensively in East Texas the night of the kidnapping, ending up in a Beaumont motel, where records show he checked into a room at 4:30 a.m.

The suspect allowed investigators to search his vehicle, which was impounded and taken to the sheriff's department.

McKay is described as 5-feet 1 and 10 pounds with brown hair and blue eyes. When his parents last saw him at home Tuesday he was wearing a black T-shirt.

Crawford, who served a three-year stint with the Beaumont Police Department in the early 1960s, was employed as an unarmed security guard with Security Guard Services Inc. of Houston. Last May, he and his wife, Connie, filed for bankruptcy protection.

New housing for paroled sex offenders sought

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Senate committee will study where to send paroled sex offenders after hearing concerns about parolees inundating two halfway houses here.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock ordered the study — and recommendations of how lawmakers can tackle the problem — on Friday, after state Sen. Mike Moncrief, D-Fort Worth, expressed concern about the two facilities. Bullock also read articles in the Fort Worth Star-Telegram about the houses, the newspaper reported Saturday.

Combined, the two houses take three of every four sex offenders paroled to halfway houses in Texas — most of whom come from outside Tarrant County.

Moncrief also spoke to Sen. John Whitmire, chairman of the Senate Criminal Justice Committee, and Whitmire agreed to hold a hearing on the issue this year in Fort Worth, Moncrief said.

Fort Worth city leaders and community residents have expressed concerns about public safety and called for closing the 200-bed halfway house operated by Esmor Correctional Services, which is near a housing complex.

The other halfway house, a 142-bed facility run by the Salvation Army, is in a more industrial area and has received few complaints.

"I was very pleased by the lieutenant governor's reaction because I think it's a very appropriate subject. It has raised concerns of citizens not just in this area but elsewhere in the state where these halfway houses are located," Moncrief said.

Eleven halfway houses in Texas take parolees, but four of them have contracts with the state that specifically exclude sex offenders.

Those four, however, will take sex offenders on "a case-by-case basis," said Juanita Gonzalez, a Parole Division spokeswoman. Ms. Gonzalez also has said most of the offenders have gone to Fort Worth because that is where space is available.

The Legislature is not in session, but committees meet during the interim on an array of topics that often produce legislation.

Issues Bullock ordered the Interim Criminal Justice Committee to study include available treatment and requirements as to where offenders are released. The review is to be completed by next Sept. 1, and must include any proposed legislative changes for lawmakers to consider when they return in 1997.

Moncrief, a committee member, said he expects to look into community notification requirements of sex offenders going to halfway houses, training of facility personnel, effectiveness of the programs and placement sites, among other things.

"I don't think any of us believe halfway houses are not an effective way to reintroduce people back into the community, but I do think there needs to be a fair and equitable balance when it comes to treating sex offenders," he said. "I don't think any one community should have to handle the full load."

FIVE WEEKS

Man languished in county jail without any charges being filed

FORT WORTH (AP) — A man was finally free Saturday after being arrested by the Tarrant County Sheriff's Department and jailed for five weeks without being formally charged.

"In our jail? ... That's not supposed to happen," said Tarrant County Assistant District Attorney Alan Levy, chief of the felony section.

Both prosecutors and defense lawyers expressed surprise and dismay at the length of the man's jail stay, saying they had never heard of anyone being incarcerated in Texas for so long without being charged.

Under Texas law, an arrested person is supposed to be charged within "a reasonable time" after being booked into jail. According to legal precedent, that period is no more than 72 hours, several lawyers said.

"I've never known anybody to be in jail that long without being charged with something," said Bill Wischkaemper, president of the Texas Criminal Defense Lawyers Association, who said the inmate could sue the county for civil-rights violations.

The inmate, Michael Alan Rowland, 31, was to be released from jail Friday after prosecutors declined to proceed with any charges against him, Assistant District Attorney Bob Hester said. Jail officials said he was not in custody Saturday.

Michael Rowland doesn't have a listed telephone number in Fort Worth and couldn't be reached for comment.

"Somebody screwed up," said his father, Robert Rowland, who said he was told by jail officials Friday night that his son had been released.

Rowland was arrested Aug. 8 in Crowley on suspicion of aggravated assault with a vehicle, Sheriff's Department spokesman Cmdr. James Skidmore said. Skidmore said the arrest stemmed from an altercation with a knife-wielding man at a Crowley skating rink.

The sheriff's department held Rowland so long without charges because investigators were gathering information requested by the district attorney's office, Skidmore said.

"If he can't make bond and can't get out of jail, that's not a department issue," he said.

But Bob Hester, chief of the district attorney's intake division, said it is up to the police agency to file a case or release an arrested person with a reasonable time.

The district attorney's office rejected for lack of evidence the case presented by the sheriff's department Aug. 11, Hester said.

Instead of releasing Rowland, the sheriff's department held him while they gathered further evidence. And although they talked informally with intake prosecutors, they didn't file the case with the district attorney's office again until Friday, Hester said.

"At that point we looked at it, and our response was, 'Nice try, but that's not going to fly,'" Hester said, explaining the district attorney's office found insufficient evidence to prosecute.

Off the back and only welt scored

MOUNT PLEASANT, Texas (AP) — A Mount Pleasant woman escaped serious injury when a bullet from a drive-by shooting tore through her home and bounced off her back while she was sleeping on her bed.

Ozie Goodlow, 34, received only a welt on the back in the shooting early Friday morning, investigators said.

Stanley Matthew Beige, 52, of Mount Pleasant was arraigned on a charge of deadly conduct with a firearm in connection with the shooting. Bond was set at $100,000.

Police said Beige fired a .38-caliber handgun at Ms. Goodlow's residence three times from a moving car.

Investigators believe the shooting was retaliation for a disturbance at the residence earlier in the night. Mount Pleasant Police Lt. Tommy Myrick said Beige apparently was avenging a friend who had been assaulted at the residence by someone other than Ms. Goodlow.

"She was an innocent bystander," Myrick told the Mount Pleasant Daily Tribune. "She had nothing to do with the assault."

Colombia influences Mexico's smugglers

By ANITA SNOW
Associated Press Writer

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Dozens of shiny black limousines trailed the hearse of drug kingpin Rafael Aguilar Guajardo after he was gunned down by rivals.

Locals say the lavish funeral fit the style of the flashy former federal police commander who rose to head the powerful Juarez drug cartel.

But agents on both sides of the U.S.-Mexican border say a new style of Mexican drug lord is replacing the stereotypical swaggering smuggler. He is cool and professional.

Mexican smugglers are no longer mere drug mules of the Colombian cocaine traffickers — paid to get the cocaine through Mexico to U.S. markets. They are quickly becoming equal partners.

And learning fast. "These guys were once just street punks, car thieves, pistoleros," said Phil Jordan, special agent in charge of the El Paso Intelligence Center, a border listening post run by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration and other federal agencies. "Now there is a new breed of Mexican mafia leader."

The new style means more drugs enter the United States through Mexico.

"Ten years ago, we measured drug seizures in grams and pounds," DEA head Director Thomas A. Constantine told a Washington hearing in August. "Today, we routinely measure seizures in tons."

Drug use has never been considered a widespread problem in Mexico, where alcohol abuse remains the major concern. But some Mexicans worry that the use of cocaine could rise as it has in Colombia.

The main fear now is about the corrupting influence that drug money could have on the government and police forces.

The Mexican Attorney General's Office recently estimated the Mexican traffickers gross $30 billion a year.

With such huge profits at stake, the gangs are working together.

"They call it the Mexican Federation — a federation where no one is limited to one corridor and makes alliances with other groups to get their product into the United States," Jordan said.

Amado Carrillo Fuentes typifies the new breed, intelligence analysts said. Carrillo assumed leadership of the powerful Juarez cartel after Aguilar's April 1993 assassination.

The youngest of the kingpins at age 39, Carrillo is said to quietly run a multimillion-dollar operation from a heavily guarded ranch outside Juarez, across the border from El Paso, Texas.

With the help of Colombian advisers, sophisticated communications equipment and a fleet of Boeing 727s, the man dubbed "The Lord of the Skies" has in two years emerged as Mexico's No. 1 cocaine trafficker, U.S. officials said.

Carrillo has been indicted for drug-related crimes in the United States. But U.S. authorities said he operates freely in his homeland, where the only charge against him is a minor weapons violation — not even enough to hold him if he walked into a police station.

According to U.S. intelligence experts, another member of the new breed is Juan Garcia Abrego, Carrillo's top competitor.

Brian Martin, canine enforcement officer of the U.S. Customs Department, works with his dog "Homeboy" at the Chamizal Bridge of El Paso recently. El Paso borders the Mexican city of Ciudad Juarez, which has become the turf of Amado Carrillo Fuentes, one of the top five drug traffickers in Mexico.

Tough fight ahead for combatants in Mexico's drug war

By ANITA SNOW

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Federal agents and soldiers labor under a scorching desert sun, unloading passengers, watermelons, cans of chili peppers from cars and trucks in a search for cocaine, marijuana, heroin.

"Where are you going, brother? What do you have in the car?" an agent asks a man who appears to be traveling with his family.

The remote checkpoint south of the border city of Juarez is the United States' front line in the battle against Mexican drug smugglers.

Twenty-four hours a day, 365 days a year, several dozen Mexican drug agents inspect north-bound vehicles and their loads at the drug checkpoint, one of the busiest in the country.

Similar searches are conducted regularly all along Mexico's nearly 2,000-mile border with the United States.

Elsewhere, helicopters and spotter planes cruise the Pacific and Caribbean coasts and the southern border with Central America, searching for smugglers' boats and planes.

In the interior, agents search out and destroy fields of marijuana and poppies used for making heroin and opium.

Still, drugs continue to pour into the United States, prompting many north of the border to

The first international drug trafficker to be listed on the FBI's "10 Most Wanted" list, Garcia is the target of an intensive manhunt on both sides of the border.

Neither Carrillo nor Garcia has publicly commented on the allegations.

The event which started the battle

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The killing of a Roman Catholic prelate two years ago in a blaze of gunfire between warring drug gangs lifted the lid on how huge Mexico's drug trafficking problem had become.

The death of Cardinal Juan Jesus Posadas Ocampo in May 1993 brought the increasingly powerful traffickers unprecedented attention and strengthened official resolve to put them behind bars.

The intended target, Sinaloa cartel kingpin Joaquin Guzman Loera, was quickly captured. The hunt continues for those suspected of hiring his would-be killers — the Tijuana cartel's Arellano Felix brothers.

In November 1993, Juarez cartel leader Amado Carrillo narrowly escaped death when gunmen burst into a Mexico City restaurant, machine guns blazing. Carrillo dived under a table, but five other people were killed.

High-level assassination attempts have slackened since. U.S. intelligence agents say the gangs have learned it pays to work together rather than fight.

A decade ago, the murder of U.S. drug agent Enrique Camarena also brought a crackdown.

Top smugglers including Rafael Caro Quintero and Ernesto Fonseca Carrillo — Amado Carrillo's uncle — were jailed following the 1985 kidnapping, torture and murder of Camarena and his Mexican pilot in the western state capital of Guadalajara.

U.S.-Mexican relations plunged as American authorities accused their Mexican counterparts of complicity and foot-dragging in the murder investigation.

charge that Mexico is not doing enough in the war against drugs.

During the first seven months of President Ernesto Zedillo's administration, Mexican drug agents seized 14.6 tons of cocaine, 379.7 tons of marijuana and 275 pounds of heroin. Much more is believed to have made it into the United States.

Much of the Mexicans' growing success comes from their ability to use huge amounts of cash to bribe officials to allow drugs to pass through Mexico. Experts estimate the gangs spend at least 10 percent of their dollar earnings for official protection.

Authorities acknowledge that widespread official corruption has long allowed Mexican traffickers the protection needed to get their loads into the United States.

Attorney General Antonio Lozano Gracia recently said about 200 federal agents nationwide have been arrested or placed under investigation for

The trend alarms U.S. and Mexican law enforcers, who worry that the rising power of the Mexican smugglers will further compromise already corrupt political and judicial systems.

"As these organizations grow in wealth and sophistication, drug-related corruption since Zedillo took office Dec. 1.

Lozano said he is trying to better train recruits for his 3,000-member federal police force.

The Attorney General's Office also has announced a pilot program to train soldiers to replace existing drug agents. Many officials say soldiers are less inclined toward corruption because they undergo more rigorous training than federal police officers.

But there are numerous documented incidences of military officers and soldiers working with drug traffickers.

In one infamous case, the government National Human Rights Commission said that in 1991 an army general ordered soldiers to fire at federal agents preparing to seize a plane carrying 800 pounds of Colombian cocaine at a clandestine airstrip in the southern state of Veracruz. Seven agents died.

Lozano's office also is working on a package of drug-related laws to present to Congress. It will include a new witness protection program and stiffer regulations on money laundering and the possession and transportation of chemicals used to produce drugs.

Despite the criticism of Mexico's anti-drug efforts by some U.S. lawmakers, American officials who work with the Mexicans say they believe Zedillo's administration is committed to the fight.

They threaten to overwhelm the capabilities of any law enforcement system," Constantine said.

President Ernesto Zedillo acknowledged the seriousness of the problem in his first annual address to the nation on Sept. 1.

"Drug trafficking has become the most serious threat to national security, our society's health and civic peace," Zedillo said.

He announced plans for an organized crime law, vowing to step up the fight against a drug trade that "damages the integrity and credibility of institutions and spreads corruption."

Attorney General Antonio Lozano Gracia also has developed several initiatives, including better training for federal police and proposed laws to better prosecute related crimes such as money laundering.

The reforms will give Mexican officials "new tools to conduct a more efficient battle," Lozano said.

But the fight is formidable.

Witness the capture of Hector Luis Palma Salazar, the Sinaloa cartel leader injured in a plane crash last June. Authorities found him holed up in a Guadalajara suburb, protected by 33 federal agents at a policeman's home. His pistol, studded with diamonds in the shape of a palm tree, was seized.

Palma denied any ties to drug trafficking. He said he earned $8,000 a month as a rancher.

Intelligence analysts said the Mexican gangs' new white-collar style and rising clout began with the shifting of supply routes from Florida to Mexico after a crackdown on Caribbean smuggling lanes in the 1980s. As much as three-fourths of the cocaine reaching the United States now comes via Mexico.

The style is also the result of the Mexicans' relationship with Colombian traffickers, who supply about 80 percent of the world's cocaine and gave their counterparts on-the-job training.

The Mexicans do not answer to the Colombians anymore, but they rely on their advice on organization and security, intelligence analysts said.

Colombian coordinators travel to Mexico to teach their counterparts how to keep cellular telephone conversations secure from snooping drug agents and how to develop new ways of smuggling shipments.

The recent crackdown on Cali cartel members in their native Colombia have many people worried that the Mexicans may overtake the Colombians as the world's most powerful traffickers.

But U.S. intelligence sources said the Mexicans could never totally replace their Colombian colleagues, simply because cocaine is produced in that South American nation and not Mexico.

The Mexican gangs can, however, dominate the market for drugs produced in Mexico such as methamphetamine, marijuana and heroin, the intelligence sources said.

Drug agents say Carrillo, working closely with Cali leaders, pioneered the use of aging passenger jets to bring multiton loads of cocaine into Mexico, landing and unloading them on desert airstrips at night.

Because of increased interdiction of the Boeing 727s and French-made Caravelles in recent months, traffickers are making more use of boats — fishing vessels, cargo vessels and fast-running speed boats that can be refueled at sea.

The cartels also have discovered greater success when they combine resources and cooperate rather than attack each other — as they often did in the past, Jordan said.

Hurricane Marilyn sweeps through the Virgin Islands; three killed

CULEBRA, Puerto Rico (AP) — With ferocious winds, waves a story high and lightning-forked storms, Hurricane Marilyn raged through the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico on Saturday, tearing apart homes, tossing aside airplanes and toppling towers.

At least three people were reported dead, and 100 more were injured or missing, including several dozen trapped in a collapsed apartment complex on St. Thomas.

President Clinton declared the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico disaster areas, making them eligible for federal emergency aid. The Federal Emergency Management Agency sent rescue, medical and communications teams to the area.

At the airport of Culebra, an island 20 miles east of Puerto Rico, Marilyn swept a light airplane onto the Happy Landings restaurant at the end of the runway. Another plane rested upside down on a chain link fence behind it.

"Have you ever been in a blender? That's how we felt," said police Lt. Julio Soto.

Seven people were missing amid 12-foot waves that sank two fishing boats off St. Croix. The U.S. Coast Guard picked up one person from the boats. The survivor, whose condition was not known, was taken to a naval base in Puerto Rico.

Unconfirmed reports indicated at least three people were killed and 100 more were injured on St. Thomas, said FEMA Director James Lee Witt in Washington.

At least 12 people were hurt in the collapse of the four-building Tower Apartment complex in the capital, Charlotte Amalie, and 40 to 50 more were believed trapped inside, he said.

Marilyn, the fourth hurricane to hit the Caribbean in as many weeks, hit St. Croix on Friday and grew in strength and size as it surged over St. Thomas, St. John and Puerto Rico's eastern islands Saturday.

The storm devastated areas still surveying the damage caused last week by Hurricane Luis, one of the biggest storms of the century, and only recently recovered from the ravages of 1989's Hurricane Hugo.

Marilyn demolished wooden homes, ripped roofs off buildings, blocked roads with toppled utility poles and trees. It also left entire islands without electricity or phones, making it difficult to confirm reports of deaths, injuries and extensive damage.

Long-distance telephone service to and from St. Thomas was disrupted after Marilyn knocked out an antenna, said Herb Linnen, a spokesman for AT&T in Washington. Underwater fiber optic cables were not affected.

Ham radio operators in Puerto Rico received a message from St. Croix indicating there was no power on the island. The last confirmed contact with St. Croix came late Friday, when Lt. Gov. Kenneth Mapp said the roof of his bunker was collapsing.

Serbs slowly withdrawing weapons

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Their deadline only a day away, rebel Serbs withdrew just a dozen heavy weapons threatening Sarajevo on Saturday and were warned they risked renewed NATO airstrikes.

The U.N. said "everybody is prepared" to resume bombing Bosnian Serb targets unless the rebels withdraw about 200 big guns. NATO warplanes flew over the Bosnian capital throughout the day in a visible echo of the warning.

After two weeks of NATO air attacks, Bosnian Serbs agreed Thursday to move their heaviest artillery at least 12 miles away from Sarajevo. That won them a three-day reprieve from the bombing raids.

Rebel soldiers put up a show of moving cannons, tanks and other deadly hardware for journalists invited to positions southwest and just southeast of the city. AP reporter Jovana Gec saw about 30 weapons on the move, but could not tell whether they left the zone or stopped just out of eyesight.

"We will be back," vowed one rebel soldier who identified himself only as Dragan. "We should have stayed and fought till the end."

The United Nations said that of the approximately 200 weapons falling under the agreement, the Serbs moved three tanks, five mortars and four artillery pieces by Saturday morning. It said no other weapons had been withdrawn by nightfall.

The Serbs have until 4 p.m. EDT Sunday to show significant progress. If not, the airstrikes will be suspended for another three days to permit them to finish relocating their heavy weapons.

This action better take place, otherwise everybody is prepared to go back to airstrikes," warned U.N. spokesman Phil

The Bosnian government is unhappy with the terms of the Serb pullout around Sarajevo because it includes only very large-caliber weapons — mortars bigger than 82 mm and artillery bigger than 100 mm. Previously, the United Nations and NATO had insisted on withdrawal of all guns over 12.7 mm.

Two French soldiers given 15 years for torturing third

PARIS (AP) — For a week in March 1992, two young soldiers transformed a military jail cell into a chamber of horrors.

The men beat and tortured a fellow prisoner — urinating on him, sodomizing him with a broomstick and forcing him to swallow burning cigarette butts and eat his own excrement.

On Friday evening, ending a case that has scandalized the French military, Omar Damen, 22, and Franck Marcangeli, 23, were sentenced to 15 years in prison for torture. Two other cellmates were acquitted.

Chief prosecutor Etienne Cécaldi graphically detailed the ordeal of Stéphane Metzger, 22, who like his torturers was serving the year of military service required of all able-bodied French men.

"It gives me goose bumps," Cécaldi said.

Metzger was detained in the jail for a week after an unauthorized absence from the military camp, tucked among the vineyards of southern France in Carpiagne just outside Marseille.

He testified that his attackers harbored a grudge against him — the nature of the grudge did not come out in testimony — and took advantage of being locked up in the same cell.

Metzger was bound and gagged, and by the time he was released, witnesses who showered with him testified, he looked like a concentration camp survivor.

He was filthy and smelled of urine, they said. His face was swollen, his hands had doubled in size, burns covered his arms and he had difficulty walking.

Cécaldi accused the army of allowing the torture to occur, and of covering up the abuse.

There apparently was little supervision of the cell, and prosecutors said a military doctor had written that the 54 cigarette burns on Metzger's arms were self-inflicted.

Supertyphoon might miss Tokyo

TOKYO (AP) — The most powerful storm to hit Japan since World War II swept along eastern islands Saturday, swirling north toward Tokyo with 110-mph winds.

Typhoon Oscar had been expected to hit Tokyo with full force on Sunday, but forecasters said late Saturday that it was moving farther east than expected and the powerful center might miss the capital.

Even so, weather officials predicted heavy rain and strong winds, and ordered residents to brace for the storm.

Flights and ferries were canceled as heavy rain pelted eastern-central Japan on Saturday. Pedestrians struggled to stand as the wind collapsed umbrellas and whipped up waves.

Television footage from Hachijo Island, 150 miles south of Tokyo, showed a motorcyclist struggling to drive through water up to his waist and shopkeepers sweeping water from their stores.

Japanese meteorologists called the storm a "supertyphoon," and said it was the largest and most powerful typhoon to strike the region in 50 years.

LAST FREE ELECTION

Hong Kong's last free election will give an indication on how the colony will work with China

HONG KONG (AP) — Hong Kong is gearing up for its last and most democratic election under British rule with voters being offered widely different visions of how to deal with China, their future ruler.

The main battle in Sunday's legislative election is between candidates pledging to work closely with China and those who stress standing up to Beijing to defend Hong Kong's freedoms after the 1997 change of sovereignty.

A record 138 candidates are running for the 60-member Legislative Council. Analysts expect pro-democracy candidates to get about 10 seats, falling short of a majority. Early results were expected a few hours after the polls close.

With China's takeover less than two years away, the election will offer an insight into how the free-wheeling capitalist city of 6.1 million people views its future as part of the world's largest remaining Communist power.

Pro-democracy candidates, big winners in the 1991 election, are again leading in the argument that Hong Kong needs a legislature which will speak out against any threat to the colony's freedoms.

Pro-China candidates say the best way to hold Beijing to its promises of not meddling with Hong Kong's way of life is to pick legislators who can work with Communist officials.

For the first time, all legislators are being elected, directly or indirectly, under democratic reforms introduced by Gov. Chris Patten.

Beijing saw last year's reforms as a violation of the treaty Britain signed ceding Hong Kong and as a last-minute attempt to transplant Western-style democracy into the colony. It has pledged to disband the legislature and hold fresh elections after 1997.

Clinton voices support for Senate welfare overhaul plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton voiced support for a Senate welfare overhaul plan sponsored by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole on Saturday, saying it puts the nation "with-in striking distance" of true welfare reform.

Although the measure contains some elements he has resisted in the past, Clinton pronounced it far preferable to a more restrictive welfare bill that passed the House last March.

Clinton used his weekly seven-minute radio address to praise the Senate for "wisdom and courage" in a series of votes last week that he said made the legislation more acceptable to him.

Meanwhile, Dole predicted passage of the measure with bipartisan support on Tuesday.

The GOP leader, teaming up with House Speaker Newt Gingrich for the GOP radio response, called the bill "historic legislation to truly end welfare as a way of life" and said it would "dramatically overhaul 60 years of failed welfare policy."

"Once the Senate passes our plan ... we will get together and we'll resolve the few differences there are, and I hope President Clinton will then sign the bill," Dole said.

Despite Dole's characterization of the differences between House and Senate versions as few, they were large enough to draw a threatened veto on the House version.

Deputy press secretary Mary Ellen Glynn said Saturday that veto threat still stood.

The president's support for the Dole legislation came reluctantly and only in the context of the harsher provisions of the House legislation.

"We're on the verge of coming to grips with one of the most fundamental social problems of our time — moving people from welfare to work," Clinton said. "Now we must finish the job and we can't let ideological extremism and politics as usual get in the way. Make no mistake: If Congress walks away from this bipartisan progress, they will kill welfare reform."

Dole's bill sends federal welfare, job training and child care programs to the states in block grants, curbs spending by $70 billion, and ends Aid to Families with Dependent Children and the federal guarantee of cash assistance.

Making it more palatable to the administration were votes in the Senate to set aside $8 billion for child care for single mothers on welfare who would be required to work and to establish a $1 billion emergency grant fund for states.

The House-passed version would put a family cap on benefits, ban them entirely for mothers younger than 18 with children born out of wedlock and cut spending by $122 billion.

Powell mixes politics with book tour

MCLEAN, Va. (AP) — A long line of fans of retired Gen. Colin Powell broke into cheers as he arrived at a bookstore here Saturday to kick off a 25-city tour promoting his memoirs.

Powell hasn't decided whether he will jump into the presidential race, but he said he is looking forward to talking with Americans during the month-long publicity tour for "My American Journey."

"I have a lot of deep concerns about the country. I have ideas and I'm going to share those ideas," he said. "I'm very interested in seeing what is on the minds of the American public."

Powell scrawled his huge signature on book after book with production-line speed during a visit to a Super Crown bookstore at a shopping center in the Washington suburbs. A line of autograph seekers — some of whom had spent the night outside the store — encircled the parking lot. Store workers said they sold more than 2,500 copies of the book.

"It's Powellmania week," said Linda Softli of Washington, a financial secretary and volunteer coordinator of the Exploratory Draft Colin Powell for President Committee. Members of the group took advantage of the book-signing to collect hundreds of petitions signatures.

Powell, 58, the son of a Jamaican parents, has said he began life as "a black kid with no early promise from an immigrant family of limited means who was raised in the South Bronx and somehow rose to become the national security adviser to the president of the United States and then chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Crowds wait Saturday outside a book store in McLean, Va., to meet retired Gen. Colin Powell, who signed copies of his new book.

Staff."

In his book, Powell begins to detail his mixed and evolving political philosophy. He believes in free enterprise and lower taxes and is put off by "patronizing liberals." Yet he supports abortion rights and gun control and was alarmed by a "troubling mix of politics and religion" at the 1992 Republican convention.

Powell said he probably wouldn't run as a Democrat because it would be difficult to challenge an incumbent president in his own party. He also said he has been disappointed in the "intellectual death" of the Democratic Party.

"I have a great deal of disappointment in my heart and head with the Democratic Party. ... They're not alive and well, like the Republican Party," he said during an interview with David Frost. The interview is scheduled to be broadcast Sept. 29 by the Public Broadcasting System.

He also said if he chooses not to run in 1996, he would not rule out seeking office later.

Powell's popularity continues to increase, according to a Newsweek poll released Saturday. In a telephone survey conducted Sept. 14-15, Powell captured 27 percent of the vote in a three-way race against Clinton and GOP challenger Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas. That's up from 21 percent in a similar poll taken two weeks ago.

Clinton received 35 percent, and Dole got support from 29 percent of the 566 registered voters who participated in the poll.

Veto of Republican Medicare plan threatened

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton is threatening to veto a Republican plan to slice $270 billion from Medicare, prompting a sharp GOP rebuttal that Democrats would let the health care program go broke for political gain.

"It would be more helpful for the nation if our president would offer a plan instead of a threat," Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee said Friday in a statement that followed closely on the heels of Clinton's veto declaration.

As the rhetoric suggests, the political stakes are huge for the Republicans, whose proposal would try to encourage senior citizens to move out of traditional Medicare coverage and into cheaper, private plans. Payments to doctors and hospitals would be cut if the desired savings failed to materialize.

Republicans won a House majority last year for the first time in 40 years, pledging to balance the budget in seven years and shrink government. In trying to find large savings from Medicare, though, they're tackling a program that benefits 33 million elderly — a potent voting bloc that could swing the 1996 congressional elections.

Republicans won a boost for their efforts on Friday from Ross Perot, whose independent bid for the White House in 1992 won 19 percent of the vote.

Republicans say their proposals are necessary to keep Medicare solvent. Democrats say Republicans want to use the money to help finance a tax cut for the wealthy.

Clinton was loudly cheered by senior citizen activists who are lobbying against Medicare cuts.

Attacking the Republican plan, he told the group, "If these health care cuts come to my desk, of this size, I would have no choice but to veto it ..."

"This is not what it takes to save Medicare," he said.

Prosecutor says lack of access hurt FBI's case against Weaver

WASHINGTON (AP) — The former federal prosecutor who brought murder charges against white separatist Randy Weaver told senators Friday that the FBI refused to cooperate with him and may have contributed to Weaver's acquittal.

The sharp criticism from Maurice Ellsworth, the former U.S. attorney for Idaho, came after two deputy U.S. marshals involved in a 1992 shootout at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, testified that they believe Weaver accidentally shot and killed his own son, though he says he never fired his gun.

Also killed in that shootout was Deputy U.S. Marshal William Degan. Weaver's wife was killed by an FBI sniper the next day.

Ellsworth's office prosecuted Weaver and family friend Kevin Harris in 1993 on charges of murdering Degan. They were acquitted.

From the outset of the case, Ellsworth testified, "There was a total lack of cooperation from the FBI."

"We never had ... complete access to all the files in this case," he told the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on terrorism.

Ellsworth said that when he asked which FBI officials had authorized changes in the agency's rules of engagement for the Ruby Ridge operation, he got no response and officials declined to meet with him.

That attitude, he said, "only goes to enhance" Weaver's attorneys' accusations of government cover-up and may have contributed to his acquittal.

FBI spokesman Carlos Fernandez said the agency would have no comment on Ellsworth's statements.

The government concluded that the shot that killed 14-year-old Sam Weaver came from a 9-millimeter weapon, and either Deputy U.S. Marshal Larry Cooper or Randy Weaver could have fired the bullet.

"I did not fire at Samuel Weaver," Cooper told the Senate panel. "I very strongly believe that none of the rounds that I fired ... struck Samuel Weaver, because I saw him running up the right fork ... after I fired my second, and last, three-round burst."

"If Samuel Weaver was struck by other gunfire ..., we did not have knowledge of that," said Cooper.

In response to questions, Cooper later said, "In my opinion, ... I believe Randall Weaver shot his son in the back accidentally."

Arthur Roderick, another deputy marshal at the scene, echoed Cooper, saying, "We believe that Mr. Weaver accidentally shot Sammy Weaver in the back."

Weaver has said he believes Cooper deliberately shot his son, and he maintains that he never fired during the gunfight near Weaver's mountainside homestead on Aug. 21, 1992.

Sweetwater tailback runs around, through Steers in 27-12 win Friday

By STEVE REAGAN

Those weren't car tracks left at Memorial Stadium — they were Carr tracks.

Sweetwater tailback Shaun Carr was a one-man nightmare for the Big Spring Steers, rushing for 267 yards and two touchdowns to lead the Mustangs to a 27-12 victory Friday night.

The loss drops Big Spring to 0-2 for the season, while Sweetwater improved to 2-0.

The Mustangs in general — and Carr in particular — had a decided speed advantage over the Steers' young defense, and they exploited that advantage in their favor.

Carr finished the night with a gaudy 14-yard per-carry average. His night's work included touchdown runs of 87 and 62 yards.

"He's got a good a chance to go all the way as any player we've got," Sweetwater coach Tom Ritchey said.

Big Spring coach Dwight Butler was even more effusive in his praise of the Sweetwater senior.

"He's as good a back as I've seen," Butler said. "He's not only fast, but he's shifty — and if he needs it, he has some power ... We knew that if we didn't string him out along the perimeter, we'd be in for a long night. I don't remember a runner any better than him."

Carr said he and his teammates were motivated by memories of last year's 10-8 Big Spring victory at Sweetwater.

"We talked about that a lot," he said. "Last year, we were just overconfident. We came to play this year."

Carr was not the only Mustang who had a good night at Memorial Stadium Friday. Sweetwater's defense, as a whole, dominated the line of scrimmage, not allowing Big Spring to get anything going until the late going when matters were well settled.

The Steers finished the night with 236 yards in total offense, but almost half that total came After holding Grady, Borden's defense blocked a punt. Setting up shop at the Grady 7, Baeza scored his second touchdown, making the score 14-0.

Grady fought back, driving 63 yards, only to watch as an apparent touchdown was called back because of a penalty. The drive later stalled.

In the second quarter, Baeza scored his third touchdown of the night on a 50 yard run.

If you're confused, don't worry. I get that way all the time and the feeling passes, believe me.

Some people consider motorcycle riding a sport. Same thing with darts and billiards. Others consider those things leisure activities.

Aggies, Longhorns unleash offenses to down Tulsa, Pitt

COLLEGE STATION, AP — A. J. McClellan scored four touchdowns and Lance Pavlas completed his first career pass for two touchdowns as No. 1 Texas A&M rolled to a 31-0 victory over Tulsa on Saturday.

Pulling rebounding from a poor season opener with a 20-0 victory, the Aggies' offense was led by McClellan and Haywood Clay in the first half.

McClellan also scored on a 1-yard run and Kyle Bryant scored a 4-yard field goal for a 31-0 halftime lead as the Aggies

1-0 extended the nation's longest home winning streak to 21 games. Tulsa dropped to 0-1.

SWC ROUNDUP

McClellan had two first half fumbles, but he still dazzled the crowd with his running and catching. He had 145 total yards, 120 on 21 carries, 128 on four catches and 41 yards on two kickoff returns.

McClellan returned for part of the third quarter and scored on a 1-yard drive with 11:05 left. He later turned a short screen pass into a 45-yard gain to the Tulsa 11, setting up freshman D. Andre Hardeman's 11-yard touchdown run with 5:17 to play.

That was McClellan's final play of the day. He now has 644 all-purpose yards in two games.

Cornerback Ray Mickens led the Aggie defense with two interceptions, one for a touchdown that was eliminated by a clipping penalty. Tulsa didn't score a touchdown until Troy DeGar's 8-yard pass to Michael Kedzior with 14:50 left in the game.

The Aggie defense held Tulsa to 182 yards on 67 plays.

Pulling passed for only 127 yards against LSU, but he found the touch against Tulsa, completing 13 of 18 for 272 yards.

His 11 straight completions tied a school record set in 1989 by Lance Pavlas against Texas Tech.

McClellan's first fumble, at the Hurricane 39 in the first quarter, was recovered by Chris Fowler and set up a 20-yard field goal by James Anderson. But McClellan quickly made up for the mistake with a touchdown on a 57-yard pass play.

McClellan caught a short pass from Pulling, broke inside and then back outside, where he outraced defensive back Asher Ladner to the end zone.

Freshman Marc Broyles scored on a 1-yard run with 11:39 left in the game, capping the Aggies' biggest scoring day since a 59-3 victory over Texas Christian in 1993.

Oklahoma 24, SMU 10

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — No. 14 Oklahoma, sloppy on offense for the second straight week, got two second-half touchdowns from tailback James Allen to beat Southern Methodist 24-10 Saturday.

Allen scored on runs of 7 and 15 yards to help the Sooners (2-0) pull away after holding just a 9-3 halftime lead. Oklahoma rushed for only 185 yards

HOUSTON (AP) — A brawl with another player may have cost Houston Oiler offensive tackle Stan Thomas his place on the team.

The Houston Oilers placed Thomas on the non-football injury list Friday, one day after a meeting-room altercation with rookie center Hicham El-Mashtout sent Thomas in for stitches to his head.

"We will not tolerate this behavior," coach Jeff Fisher said in a prepared statement. "Stan knows he made a mistake, but sometimes in life we don't get a second chance. He will not rejoin this club at any time in the future. I wish him well."

But Thomas and his agent could file a grievance against the Oilers to get some financial compensation for Thomas, who had a hamstring injury and was listed as questionable on the injury report before the fight with El-Mashtout.

The Mustangs (1-2) kept things interesting until the closing minutes. They failed to convert on fourth-and-1 at the Oklahoma 30 with the score 24-10 midway through the fourth quarter, then drove to the 36 on their next possession before turning it over on downs.

Both Oklahoma quarterbacks struggled. Starter Eric Moore completed just 7 of 18 passes for 108 yards before leaving late in the third quarter with leg cramps. His replacement, Garrick McGee, was 5 of 13 for

Texas 38, Pittsburgh 27

AUSTIN (AP) — Ricky Williams scored on a 1-yard run with 2:14 left and Jason Reeves returned an interception 45 yards for a touchdown with 1:25 to play as Texas turned a nail-biter into a 38-27 victory against Pittsburgh Saturday.

Texas (2-0), dominated by Pitt (2-1) in time of possession, overcame two costly fourth-quarter interceptions by driving the ball 56 yards in eight plays, capped by Williams' score.

Reeves sealed the victory by picking off a tipped pass and running untouched with a wall of blockers down the left side-line for the game's final score.

Pitt went up 27-24 with 9:06 left in the game on an 18-yard run up the middle by Demetrius Harris, who led the Panthers with 119 yards on 23 carries.

The score came two plays after John Jenkins returned an interception of Texas' James Brown 31 yards to the Texas 24.

The Panthers denied Texas a touchdown with 7:13 to play when Thad Culpepper picked off a pass by Brown in the right corner of Pitt's end zone that slipped through the hands of Texas tight end Steve Bradley.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Jose Mesa set a team record with his 44th save Saturday, and the Cleveland Indians handed Roger Clemens his first loss in eight starts, beating the Boston Red Sox 6-5.

Boston's magic number for clinching the AL East held at four, pending the outcome of the second-place New York Yankees' game at Baltimore later.

Jim Thome homered and Eddie Murray matched his season high with four hits for the Indians, winners of seven of the first 10 games on their 11-game homestand. They are 51-17 at Jacobs Field this year.

Wildcats fielded only eight players — fatigue played a factor in the later going.

There were bright spots, however. Chris Hewitt had 25 carries for 120 yards.

The second half was nothing different for the Wildcats. They continued to drive, but Borden continually stopped Grady short of the end zone.

Fernando Baeza scored his fourth touchdown from 5 yards out. Grant Key scored on a 1-yard run and Oscar Baeza came through with a 60-yard touchdown run.

The Baeza brothers accumulated 129 yards each, and the Coyotes ended the game with 381 rushing yards.

Oscar Baeza said, "We get along great, hardly ever fight, but we do fight on the field for yardage. We are very competitive, always trying to outdo one another."

Outdoing his older brother in the end zone Fernando wound up tied in yardage. "It is a good rivalry and he pushes me to do better and run harder," Fernando said.

Borden County's coach Bobby Avery said, "I was real pleased in the effort of the team. I felt like we played a near-flawless game, which is surprising with our youth. The win was a complete team effort. We had great line blocking which opened the holes."

Grady coach Roger Smith said, "It was a hard loss, but the determination was there."

in the last half of the fourth quarter, after the Mustangs had already sent in the substitutes.

"They just manhandled us on both sides of the ball," Butler said. "We were just overwhelmed by a better football team."

If there was a bright spot for Big Spring, it was the play of sophomore tailback Antwoyne Edwards. Edwards, subbing for injured starter Toma McVae, finished the night with 133 yards on 16 carries, including the Steers' longest play from scrimmage so far this season, a 75-yard pitch-and-run TD jaunt late in the game.

But by that time, the damage had already been done.

Sweetwater staked claim to the game on its very first drive. After taking the opening kickoff, the Mustangs marched 65 yards in eight plays, with quarterback Andrew Boatright doing the scoring honors from a yard out.

The Mustangs added another touchdown in the second quarter on a 51-yard pass from Boatright to Shedrick Williams before the Steers mounted their only sustained drive of the first half.

Big Spring's offense was at its ball-control best, marching 43 yards in 12 plays. On fourth-and-11 from Sweetwater's 15, however, Bucky Crenshaw's pass attempt to Edwards fell incomplete, giving the ball back to the Mustangs.

Sweetwater wasted little time capitalizing. Two plays later, Carr took a draw up the middle, drifted toward the left side-line, and was off and running on an 87-yard touchdown run that put the Mustangs up by 21 at the half.

Part of the Steers' problem, Butler said, was that the coaches inadvertently dampened the team's natural aggression.

"When you start trying to make young players think too much, they lose their aggressiveness," Butler said. "The only chance we had against that bunch was to be flat-out, Katie-bar-the-door aggressive, and (the coaches) took that away from them."

The Steers will make their third try at victory No. 1 next Friday at home against Lubbock Estacado. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

NFL Week Three

Pittsburgh (2-0) at Miami (2-0)
Monday night

Before the season, this was probably the most likely matchup for the AFC title game. Then the Steelers lost Rod Woodson and Neil O'Donnell in the season opener and slid down the pack a bit.

Mike Tomczak will replace O'Donnell again, but Miami's edge may come more from its matchup against the Pittsburgh defense. The Steelers' blitz, particularly without Woodson, is not the best way to defend Dan Marino and his quick release. He and Irving Fryar burned the Patriots for a 67-yard touchdown on a corner blitz last week.

That doesn't seem to be a deterrent to the Steelers.

"I will try to knock him into next week," linebacker Greg Lloyd, Pittsburgh's designated intimidator, says of Marino. "If the officials want to call a penalty, so be it. Are we going to go after Marino? What do you think? We are not going to play passive defense."

Dallas (2-0) at Minnesota (1-1)
Sunday night

Does Barry Switzer dissemble? He says he'll try to take the Metrodome crowd out of the game by running, just as the Cowboys did two Monday nights ago at Giants Stadium. So Troy Aikman will probably drop back and find Michael Irvin on the first play of the game.

Switzer is also using last year to motivate his team for this one. Last year, Dallas lost in the third week to an NFC Central team, Detroit at home on a Monday night.

This is also the first time the Cowboys have prepared for a game without klieg lights and people muttering "Deion Deion Deion" around Valley Ranch.

One headache remains. With all the money shelled out for Sanders, linebacker Darrin Smith remains a holdout. Jones wants to pay him a bidding $425,000. That's a tip money for Sanders.

Oakland (2-0) at Kansas City (2-0)

Now, that the Raiders are back in Oakland, you can almost feel Buck Buchanan, Willie Lanier, Otis Taylor, Warren Wells, Gene Upshaw, and Art Shell in those old AFL show-downs. Actually, you can also see Art Shell, who was deposed as coach of the Raiders after last season and is now an assistant under Marty Schottenheimer.

dic comment to Art: There's no telling what might come out of my mouth this week. It's anything about the past, don't take it personally," says Schottenheimer, whose Chiefs were picked to finish fourth or fifth in the West and are playing in their quick start.

Schottenheimer's past has been decidedly positive against the Raiders. If wins in the last 10 games and an 11-2 record since taking over.

the Chiefs in 1989.

Mike White, the new Raiders' coach, has convinced Al Davis to abandon the big bang offense in favor of the trendy "California" system. It's also what the Chiefs use, but in Oakland's case it's a complete reversal — Jeff Hostetler's longest completion this year is 20 yards.

Arizona (0-2) at Detroit (0-2)

In a year in which both these teams harbored playoff expectations, the loser ends up in real trouble. The winner may be in trouble, too, but that's another story.

This is homecoming for Dave Krieg, who threw only three interceptions as a Lion last year and has thrown five in two games for the Cardinals before being lifted in the second quarter of last week's loss to Philadelphia. But Buddy Ryan, who normally throws out quarterbacks about as often as he throws away hot dog wrappers, is going back to him.

"He has a streaky reputation," says Ryan, who may soon replace Krieg with Randall Cunningham. "Maybe he'll get streaky the other way."

San Diego (1-1) at Philadelphia (1-1)

The other half of the yanked quarterback duo — Randall Cunningham, who left before Krieg did in Arizona last week — gets his starting job back. But Ray Rhodes is also reserving the right to insert Rodney Peete if Cunningham stumbles again.

So Cunningham could end up with Ryan in the desert, more comfortably back in his free-lance style than the short-drop, quick-read, Bill Walsh style. Still, this game probably lies with the Philadelphia defense, which is soft in the middle, and thus soft against Natrone Means.

St. Louis (2-0) at Carolina (0-2)

The home opener for the Panthers, who looked at this before the season as a possible win. It still may be, although the Rams are one of the NFL's major surprises, beating Green Bay and New Orleans, two teams thought to be their betters.

One reason is Rich Brooks, a third- or fourth-choice coach and a total unknown in the NFL. He's turned out to be a first-rate coach with a daring streak, like a fake punt on fourth down to clinch the Saints' game.

The other reason is the rebirth of Sean Gilbert and the pass rush, real trouble for Frank Reich and his Swiss cheese offensive line.

Chicago (1-1) at Tampa Bay (1-1)

Even Tampa's 22-6 loss at Cleveland last week had its positive signs — the Buccaneers didn't totally self-destruct against a tough defensive team on the road.

But this game is one that could prove if the Bucs are ready to make a move.

Area Roundup: Coahoma cruises to win

COAHOMA — The Coahoma Bulldogs swatted the Rotan Yellowhammers Friday night, improving to 1-1 with the win.

Even allowing for 44 yards in sacks, the Bulldogs amassed 328 total yards of offense.

The Bulldogs' defense allowed Rotan's only score in the first quarter. Rusty Goodwin competed a 21-yard pass to Larry Daniel for the touchdown.

Coahoma bulled to a 22-7 led going into the half. Kelby Baily capped a 62-yard drive, scoring from a yard out. After recovering an on side kick Adam Tindol connected with Matthew Hamilton for a 33-yard pass for the Bulldogs' second touchdown. Stepping in to relieve Tindol was Jay McHugh, who passed to Judd Cathey for Coahoma's final score of the half.

Late in the third quarter McHugh raised the score 25-7 with 33-yard field goal. With 3:38 left in the game, Bailey scored his second touchdown on a 11-yard run.

Coahoma coach Eddie McHugh said, "I can't say enough about the kids, it was the their doing. The defensive coaches prepared them well. We talked to the players about staying focused and they did a super job."

Coahoma travels to Sterling City next Friday. Game time is 8 p.m.

FORSAN — In a game filled with several penalties and few touchdowns, Rankin's Joel Armendariz scored the only TD in the game.

The Red Devils (1-1) accumulated 14 penalties for 94 yards, while Forsan (1-1) was marked seven times for 45 yards.

Rusty Baker led Forsan with 52 yards on 23 carries.

Forsan's coach Jan East said, "Rankin just lined up and gave us a good whipping on both sides, offense and defense. I don't think the players were really ready to play, which was my fault. After all, that's my job."

Lake View 28

Lamesa 0

LAMESA — San Angelo Lake View's defense pitched a shutout in leading the Chiefs to their second win of the season Friday night.

Lake View limited Lamesa (1-1) to only 220 yards of total offense. Chiefs' quarterback Sterlin Gilbert, meanwhile, rushed for one touchdown and threw for two others to give Lake View all the points it needed.

Estacado 7

ANDREWS — The Andrews Mustangs earned their first victory of the year by outlasting Lubbock Estacado Friday night.

Two Estacado fumbles paved the way to Andrews scores. The first, when Andrew Albright took in a fumble recovery two yards for the touchdown, tied the game at 7-7 in the fourth quarter. Later, Savino Hernandez recovered a fumble in the end zone to give the Mustangs the win.

Andrews (1-1) plays at Sweetwater Friday, while Estacado (1-1) visits Big Spring.

Lubbock 7

LUBBOCK — The Pecos Eagles, foregoing a tie, went for the win and failed, dropping a heart-breaker to the Lubbock High School Westerners.

The Eagles (0-2) trailed 7-0 before Eric Aguilar scored from 4 yards out with six minutes remaining in the game. Pecos then tried a run for the two-point conversion but failed.

Both teams combined for 13 fumbles on a rain-soaked field in Lubbock.

Will boring week sabotage Dallas express?

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Dallas and Nike. Dallas and Pepsi. Dallas and Deion. Dallas and the Super Bowl.

Dallas. Dallas. Dallas.

It seems like only the O.J. trial makes national headlines more often than Jerry Jones' rich and powerful Cowboys these days.

The audacious owner has become one of the most reviled men in the NFL for his maverick shoe and soda deals, stoking the ire of Cowboy haters everywhere. But if there are any Dallas detractors in the Minnesota Vikings' locker room, they have been quiet this week.

That's probably because the Vikings are the next team to take on the Cowboys, and they don't want to make Sunday night's game any tougher than it already is.

"Nobody stops the Dallas Cowboys," said middle line-backer Jack Del Rio. "They stop themselves when they get bored. Let's hope they're a little bored this week."

Is Del Rio, himself a former Cowboy, on to something? After all, this has been a quiet week for Dallas.

The Cowboys beat the New York Giants and Denver Broncos by a combined 66-21 in the season's first two games while the Deion Sanders negotiations were swirling. With Sanders signed, the only thing to hold their attention this week has been preparation for a football game.

But the Cowboys say they are glad to have the peripheral issues settled — for now.

"I think it would be wrong for anybody to say it was not a distraction," quarterback Troy Aikman said. "It was a distraction for all of us. This football team has been through a number of distractions over the years, however, and once we got out on the field last week I felt that our workouts were extremely good."

The Cowboys also were extremely good in their first two games. They are averaging 410 yards a game, including a league-best 197 on the ground, and they opened the season with a shutout (beating the Giants 35-0) for only the third time in their history.

While Dallas will have to run against a defense that held Barry Sanders to 35 yards last week, Aikman will be throwing against a secondary that gave up an average of 262 yards in the first two games against Erik Kramer and Scott Mitchell.

Minnesota's secondary also will have rookie cornerback Corey Fuller making his first start Sunday.

"In the secondary, hopefully we can make some things happen there," said Dallas coach Barry Switzer. "They've got a freshman guy, a rookie, that is going to be playing now. Maybe we've got to try to take advantage of that."

The Vikings (1-1) are among several NFC teams who believe they might be able to upset the anticipated championship-game matchup between the Cowboys and San Francisco.

The Vikings don't begrudge the unbeaten Cowboys their place as the NFC frontrunner — "All dues to the guys who earned it," said coach Dennis Green — but Minnesota would like a little respect, too.

"I'm shaking in my boots right now," Del Rio quipped when asked about playing Dallas. "They are the best team in football and we're somewhere in the middle of the pack. But they don't hand out the trophy just yet."

The Vikings believe that if they can stay close to Dallas early, they can establish their running game and take advantage of the Cowboys' suspect secondary.

Fourth-year cornerback Clayton Holmes, nearly traded in the offseason, has replaced the injured Kevin Smith until Sanders joins the team. In their 31-21 loss to the Cowboys last week, Denver scored all its touchdowns on passes to Anthony Miller, including a 59-yarder.

"We're not in the best of shape," Switzer said of his secondary. "I had dreamed about Deion and Kevin Smith being our corners, two great cover corners. Then we could do some things with our defense to really give some people some problems, do some things people hadn't seen us do before. But right now, we're not in that situation."

Poor Dallas.

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz speaks to reporters after returning home to South Bend, Ind. Saturday. Holtz wears a brace after undergoing neck surgery.

Irish coach returns home after surgery

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — It sounds like Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz has left his doom-and-gloom demeanor behind for good.

An emergency operation to correct a condition that could have left him paralyzed made him re-evaluate his life and what is important, Holtz said Saturday.

"There's a lot of pressure at Notre Dame, a lot of pressure you put on yourself and people are always comparing you with other people and that's never good," he said at a news conference at the Michiana Regional Transportation Center.

"I can't be anybody else but Lou Holtz and maybe I haven't done that as well as I should in recent times," Holtz said. "I'm just going to be Lou Holtz, the plain and simple individual I was when I came here."

Holtz returned to South Bend on Saturday morning after being released from the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. Holtz had surgery Tuesday to relieve pressure on his spinal column, a condition that caused weakness in his arms and legs.

"Your mind runs away with Lou Gehrig's disease, multiple sclerosis, anything else," the 58-year-old said. "I let my mind wander sometimes and not be as focused. ... You don't know if it'll ever be the last time you go out on the field."

While he's still a little weak from surgery, Holtz said strength is returning to his arms and legs and he is amazed how well he feels. Though he moved slower than usual, Holtz seemed to have no trouble climbing down the steps of the Notre Dame airplane or walking across the tarmac.

His only problem was some irritation around his incision, which doctors tried to correct by giving him a neck brace with more padding. Holtz will have to wear a neck brace for at least six weeks.

"The doctors said that I was a great patient, I was a perfect specimen of health," Holtz said. "So the people that eat junk food, sleep late, smoke a pipe, take heart."

Doctors initially wanted to keep Holtz hospitalized through the weekend, but they released him after Holtz promised he would take it easy. That meant watching No. 24 Notre Dame take on Vanderbilt on television rather than at Notre Dame Stadium.

"I want to go to that stadium, so bad right now," Holtz said. "I would like to go to the game, but part of this thing of letting me out early was I not go to the game."

Holtz is not supposed to coach for at least three weeks, and defensive coach Bob Davie was named interim coach. While Holtz has confidence in Davie and the rest of his staff, he is anxious to get back to work.

Holtz had no contact with his team Saturday besides a letter Davie read before the game started. Holtz said he hopes to meet with players Monday if he feels up to it. He also would like to go to practice this week and be at the stadium for next Saturday's game against Texas.

"I will not rush it, I will not do anything stupid," Holtz said.

Decorating can be a PIECE of CAKE

It's creative, it's fun and best of all - it's edible art!

Stories by Mary McAteer
Photos by DD Turner and Tim Appel

Decorated by Tina Broughton

Step one: Filling holds the layers together and provides flavor.

Step two: An icing tip and a turntable speed the process of doing the sides. Once the icing's on, it only needs to be smoothed.

Step three: The second tier should have been iced before being put on, but it will work this way. The secret of making a big celebration cake is remembering it's just several small cakes put together.

Step four: Tiers iced and stacked, the borders are applied. It's fun to experiment with the border designs you can create with different tips.

Step five: Placing flowers takes a little thought and a steady hand. Flowers are usually made in advance - buttercream flowers are frozen, and royal icing flowers are allowed to dry and harden.

Step six: Leaves and stems make the flowers look more real and tie arrangements together. A sprinkle of edible glitter (flaked gum arabic) adds sparkle.

Legend hath the first cake was decorated by a baker covering a flaw. The cake proved so popular with his boss (an emperor with a nasty habit of beheading cooks who had failures in the kitchen) he did it again, and soon decorating cakes was the fashion.

"I call it edible art," Billye Grisham of Creative Celebrations says. For Grisham, cake decorating is a hobby that's become a profession.

For Karen Waters, it started as a way to give her oldest son the fancy birthday cake she couldn't afford to buy and became a way of giving her children exactly the birthday party they want.

For Tina Broughton, cake decorating started as a way to do cakes for the kids and became an expression of her creative impulses.

For all, it's something they say they wouldn't do if they didn't.

Some cake decorators start young, like 6-year-old Max Jones, whose family of decorated cookies won the youth division at the Howard County Fair. Others take it up later, like Grisham, who took a class at Howard College after several years as a home economics teacher.

Grisham, who says she only took the class because husband Tolbert encouraged her, kept decorating because she enjoyed it, and now teaches it herself. She will teach two classes, basic and intermediate cake decorating, through Howard College this fall. Broughton taught herself the basics and then took a class in Brownsville to learn more advanced tech-

Tips for cake decorating

Whether you've been decorating cakes for as long as you can remember or you're just thinking about doing a birthday cake for your baby, here are some helpful hints:

- Unless you're doing a cake with a warm topping like German chocolate, be sure the cake is well cooled before icing it. Cakes to be decorated should be wrapped in foil and refrigerated overnight.

- Remember, the color of icing will darken as flowers dry. If you're not certain about the shade, do one or two and let them stand overnight.

- Make a "smudge chart" with samples of color blends for future reference, along with notes on proportions. That way, you won't have to experiment to reproduce a particularly nice shade.

- Let icing flowers dry and harden a bit before putting them on the cake. When using vivid colors, it's a good idea to let the icing harden a touch as well - otherwise, the food coloring can "bleed."

- 1/4 teaspoon cream of tartar added to a batch of buttercream icing will help keep it from hardening and going crumbly after the cake is iced.

- Decorate a circus cake with animal crackers around the sides of the cake.

- Check garage and yard sales for cake-decorating supplies. People frequently buy specialty molds just to do one special cake and then discard them.

- Use a favorite cookie cutter or picture to make an outline and then fill it in. You can use a pin to "stencil" on base icing and then connect the dots to reproduce the picture.

- Add ribbons, bows, bits of lace, or small figurines for a special touch. For a kids' party, the cake decorations could be part of the party favors.

- Don't be afraid to use your imagination - the only rule is don't serve people an ornament they'll break their teeth on.

- Remember, you see flaws other people won't notice. If you go to the trouble to make and decorate a cake or cookies for family or friends, what they'll remember is the love it was made with, not that the flowers weren't perfect.

- Don't be afraid to ask for tips - cake decorators love sharing hints and ideas.

If you're interested in taking a class in cake decorating, or in forming a cake decorators' club, call Billye Grisham at Creative Celebrations, 267-8191.

Take a few moments to tell your family you love them

Barbara Morrison
Columnist

and other ponderings have my eyes welling with tears.

First of all, I'd like to say "thank you" to the numerous individuals who took time out of their busy schedules to pass on their comments on my recent column regarding teenager Jennifer Hays. As you remember, Jennifer's life was snuffed out in a single act of random thrill-seeking as she left her family behind to deal with the tragedy.

I remember watching her mother, Karen, through it all. Karen, obviously grief-stricken, still swings between anger, guilt and sadness as the pendulum of emotions over the death of her child becomes her constant companion these days.

The whole situation has had an impact on me in that I've noticed I'm keeping a closer watch on what my kiddos are up to. They think I've turned into a drill sergeant. What they don't realize is that as a mother, I'll do anything I can to protect my child. And, sometimes even that is not enough. Please, kids, suffer me my helplessness in motherhood.

I know that I often poke fun at the terrible trio and to tell the truth, they take it rather well. After all, how many kids in this town have their lives publicly displayed week after week?

It's kind of funny, but now they actually joke about whose turn it is, and they all grab Sunday's paper in an effort to see who made headlines during the week. Hubby, on the other hand, usually opens the paper quite slowly, almost as if in dread that this was the week for his chosen episodes.

They're good sports and we have a lot of fun laughing.

Maybe that's what is missing in today's hustle and bustle. Maybe we all need to take more time to laugh.

Anyway, this week, let me talk about each member of my family and tell you what is good. Sound boring? Maybe, but then again, read closely. I'm sure each of you have family members with the same traits. Quite possibly, you may have forgotten to tell them you appreciate them in the past few days.

Let me start with Hubby. A well-rounded man... (no, honey, this is not a crack at your waistline), I really admire him. His knowledge of technical subjects is always outstanding to me. You see, I'm a creative arts major. I struggled through math and science, while Hubby and my kids breeze through it.

It kind of hurts when Hubby thinks he is not as smart as me (his words, not mine) just because he doesn't have a college degree. He is in the top of the elite as far as Chevrolet technicians go, and can trouble-

INS roundups tough on immigrants' families

Austin-American Statesman

AUSTIN — Sometimes, children board the bus along with parents for the long deportation ride back to Mexico.

More often, friends and relatives pitch in to help families get through the ordeal of Mom or Dad getting picked up and deported for working illegally in the United States.

Those are the human faces behind immigration roundups such as the one in Austin this week, in which federal agents arrested 461 people working in the United States illegally.

Ana Ramos of Austin said her brother and niece, both of whom worked at a Luby's cafeteria, were among those arrested in immigration raids on restaurants, a food processing plant, construction sites and other businesses.

Ramos is taking care of her niece's two children — ages 1 year and 3 months — until their mother either sends for them or returns.

Ramos, a native of El Salvador who has been in the United States 11 years and is a legal resident, said relatives needed to work here to take care of their families.

Ramos said her brother had lived and worked in Austin for four years and her 21-year-old niece for about the same period.

For both, this was the first immigration arrest and deportation, Ramos said.

Most of those arrested waived their right to a deportation hearing and were bused to the Mexican border, said Ray Dudley, an agent with the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

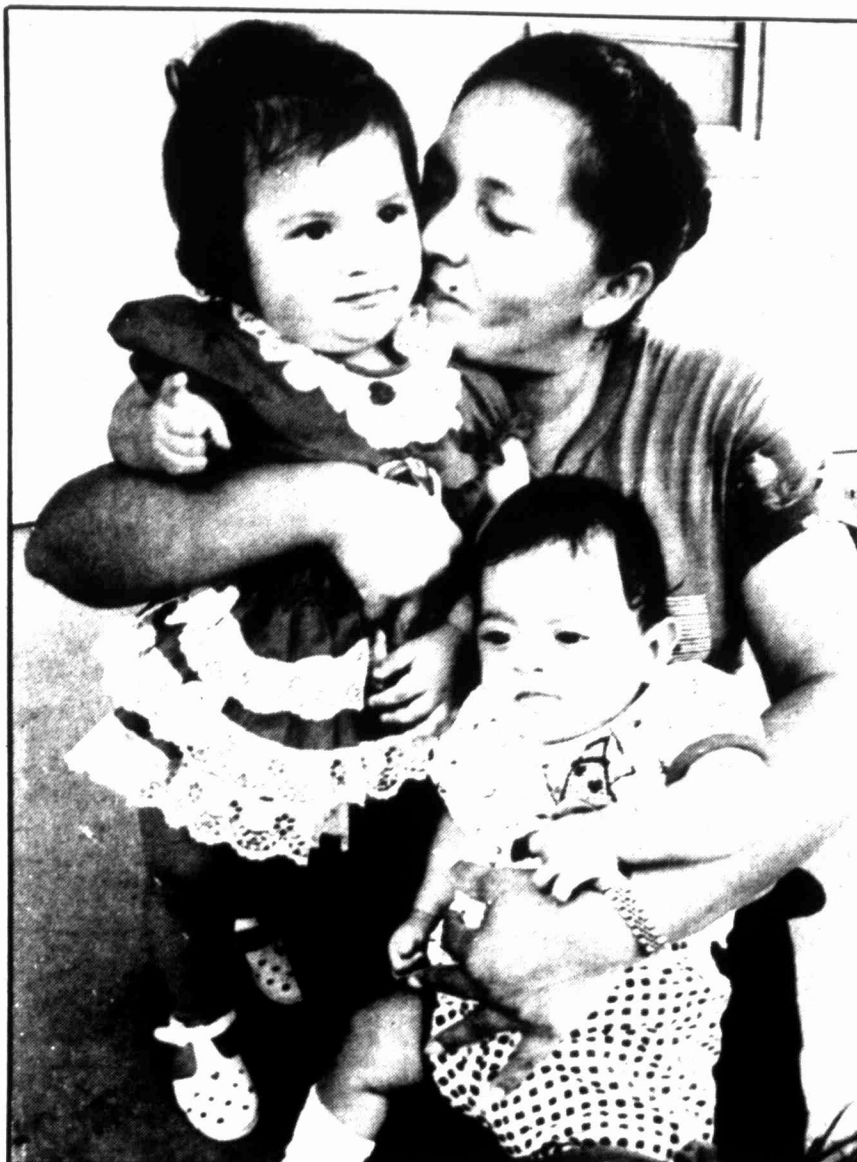

Although many of the people picked up are single adults working here while their families remain in Mexico, people with spouses and children also got caught in the sweep.

The INS gives those people a chance to make arrangements, Dudley said.

"Yesterday a guy we arrested wanted to know if he could take his wife with him," he said.

"We accompanied him to his house. He got his wife and baby and a lot of their belongings and they all went together."

'Banshee' name vanishes from roller coaster

By JENNIFER FEEHAN
The Toledo Blade

SANDUSKY, Ohio — When you want people to stand in line for a roller coaster that turns them upside four times while they're standing up, you really don't want them to think about impending death.

That's why Cedar Point Amusement Park has decided to rename Banshee, the $12 million roller coaster it unveiled plans for just last week.

Banshee — check your dictionary — means a female spirit whose wailing warns of impending death.

"Obviously, that connotation may be inappropriate to some of our guests, so we are revisiting the naming issue," Cedar Point spokesman Stephen Norton said.

Norton said park officials were aware of the definition of banshee, but they had another one in mind when they selected the name.

"We were thinking of an untamed, ghostly entity of Irish folklore," he said.

Norton said Cedar Point did not receive any phone calls or complaints about the new coaster's name, but park officials simply had "second thoughts" after the announcement was made.

"It was an internal decision," he said. "We're a family-oriented amusement park, and we're not comfortable with that definition. We're going to take the conservative approach, and we're going to develop a logo and a name that's more appropriate for this fabulous ride."

Now that word has spread that the ride will have a new name when the park opens next May, Cedar Point enthusiasts have been calling the park trying to get a hold of Banshee buttons, T-shirts, and other promotional material bearing the now-retired name and logo. All are being turned down.

shoot a vehicle better than most of the technicians in the country, but somehow he doesn't view that as "smart." Go figure. Remember, I'm the kind who tries to put antifreeze in a Volkswagen which doesn't even have a radiator.

My oldest son I've nicknamed "Rudy," after the movie of the same name. Michael isn't a tall child, but his attitude reaches 10 feet in height in my book. He goes out for the football team every year, laughing about always being "one of the littlest guys on the team." You should hear his excitement at each tackle and sack he accomplishes.

I could learn from him. Daily, we all accomplish what might be small tasks to others and what are in fact, very large feats to us. Michael has taught me to appreciate what I do for who I am, not by the standards of the world. Thanks bud.

My middle kid has taught me that I can do anything I set my mind to as long as I don't quit. My little dare-devil who thinks everything should be tried once has taught me that it is not okay to strike out in baseball...or life.

"You only feel good when you finally learn to hit the ball," he explained one day. "So, you should keep on trying until you hit it. It's not OK until that happens." There's a lot to be said for 11-year-old wisdom.

Finally, there's my little girl. After the first two were boys, you can imagine how hard we prayed for a girl. And what a girl she is.

She gives us joy and emotion, tenderness and wisdom, beyond the most adult years. She teaches us every day that with faith, pain is diminished and sadness is only temporary. I remember how I cried when my grandma passed on. "Why are you crying, Momma?" she asked. "She's with Jesus now. I can't wait until I get to meet her." So simple, so profound.

So, while I may poke fun at my family, I want everyone in the world to know how much I love and appreciate them. And I ask everyone who reads this today to make sure their own family knows the same.

Pet owners spare no expense when it's time to bury loved one

By RICK McCRABB
Thomson News Service

MIDDLETOWN, Ohio — As Judy Perry stood in the shade hiding from the scorching sun, she glanced toward the seemingly endless sea of grave markers.

Her eyes stopped when she spotted others kneeling over a fresh grave near the Carillon Bell Tower and wooden gazebo.

"These people are with me," Perry said. "They feel the same kind of hurt I feel. They loved their animals like me."

This was an emotional day for Perry and other visitors to Pines Pet Cemetery, located just north of the southeastern Ohio town of Lebanon. Several weeks ago, Perry's 16-year-old mixed terrier, Muffin, was put to sleep.

"That was a tough decision," she said, shaking her head. "But I think I did the right thing."

That's the same way the Middletown woman feels about her choice to bury the stray puppy she rescued nearly 16 years ago. "Now she's with other pets that were loved like mine," said Perry, who later placed a bouquet of flowers on her dog's grave. "She was an important part of our family. I called her my 'companion' because she was always there when I was sick. I loved her dearly. I'm at peace now."

That's a major appeal of a pet cemetery, said Jean Lawton, who purchased the Pines Cemetery with her husband, Tom, in 1978. One of the largest pet cemeteries in the United States, the Pines was established in 1966.

"Burying their animals makes them feel good," Jean Lawton said. "It's like the last chapter in their pet's life. Their pet gave them 15 years of unconditional love and the owner wants to give something back."

That's why Leon and Clare Clark buried their two dogs, Sugar and Jo, in side-by-side lots near a row of trees.

Jo, a Yorkshire terrier, died earlier this year while traveling with her owners during a family vacation in Texas. Her death, an emotional Leon said, "just about killed me. I'm still not over Jo yet. We did everything we could for those dogs and we feel this was a fitting end."

There are several options available for owners who lose their pets, according to Tom Lawton, past president of the International Association of Pet Cemeteries. He said only a few people make burial arrangements in advance for their pets.

"People have this feeling that their pets aren't going to die," said Lawton, who noted the emotional stress associated with a loss of a pet ranks fourth behind the death of kids, a spouse and parents. "It's similar to how parents feel about their children."

He said only about one out of 100 cared-for pets are buried in a pet cemetery. Many pets, he said, are buried in the owners' back yards.

niques. Waters taught herself, using books and making it up as she went along.

All agree the favorite flavors are vanilla and chocolate. Waters laughs and says her sons don't care what flavor the icing is as long as the cake is chocolate.

It's really a way to express yourself, cake decorators say. Grisham experiments with patterns of lace and lattice work, making delicate lilies and fantasy flowers, designing new and unusual ways to display her creations.

She does four or five celebration cakes a week, and gives cakes for funerals at her church and the monthly birthday party at the Corral. She's in the planning stage of a reception for a couple who will be married in Paris - they want a cake in the shape of the Eiffel Tower.

Broughton, who works at Malone Hogan Clinic, makes celebration cakes for friends and co-workers. Her creations include a Christmas cake with a Santa whose body was marshmallows. Broughton can do one of the most unusual kinds of cake decorating - if she has a picture, she can reproduce it on a cake top.

Waters likes to make cakes for "theme" parties. The first, she says, was a lion for a zoo party for her oldest boy - she sculpted the lion's face from pieces of a round cake and gave him an icing mane. Last year, daughter Carlin chose the Lion King, but instead of having to sculpt the cake, Waters found a Simba mold.

The one she remembers as most unusual was the one she didn't think would work - a "cowboys and Indians" cake. Using a sheet cake for a "plain" Waters carved blocks of angel cake into boxcars and arranged them into a train. Then placed toy cowboys to defend them from toy Indian attackers.

Cake decorating can involve the whole family. From appreciating the cakes when they were little, Waters' boys have grown to the point that they like to watch and help.

Grisham's husband does all the baking. Broughton does most of her decorating late at night after the family is in bed, but says her kids look forward to the scraps and aren't shy about making suggestions.

Illustrations show styles and methods have changed over the years, but the basics remain the same.

Round is still the favorite shape, although cake pans come round, square, hexagonal, heart-shaped, and in the form of just about every character you can think of from Raggedy Ann to Barney the dinosaur.

Fresh flowers and fruit are popular in some parts of the country, and elaborate lace and abstract designs in gum paste and marzipan, but the rose is still the favorite flower and butterscotch is still the most popular icing.

Originally fruit cake encased in marzipan, today's wedding cakes are usually vanilla or chocolate. From plain white the decorations have gone to this year's most popular colors - hunter green and ivory - and sometimes include black. Wilton's 1995 wedding cake book even shows a five-tier cherry cheesecake that will serve more than 200.

Celebration cakes come in sizes ranging from a cupcake to a 1,000-pound confection serving hundreds. The decoration can be as simple as a dusting of confectioners' sugar or a smear of icing with a sprinkle of candy confetti or as elaborate as a gum-paste or marzipan confection taking days to create. They can mark momentous occasions like the wedding of a future emperor and his consort or just be "because I felt like making a cake."

White or chocolate, square or round, homemade or bought, fancy or plain - a cake is a party on a plate.

Colorado City man was rich before winning lottery

I judged a July Fourth parade in Colorado City a couple of years ago. The parade had a number of impressive floats, horses, bands and bicycles.

From my front row seat, I was going over some notes I had made about the best entries when I heard calliope music.

I looked up and here was Porter Richardson, a 76-year-old man dressed in an Uncle Sam suit working like crazy playing a steam calliope. He was smiling and waving to the crowd. He got my vote for the best float.

That's Porter. Always in the middle of anything that's going on in Colorado City.

I met Porter about 35 years ago when I went to Colorado City's tumbleweed festival. One of the highlights of the unique event was a parade featuring floats decorated with tumbleweeds. They were tastefully done, well made, colorful floats. Each one carried a beauty queen. Porter made all the floats for several years.

"They gave me a free reign," said Porter. "I made them on wood frames, covered them with chicken wire, then put the tumbleweeds on and painted them."

He soaked the tumbleweeds in a salt-water solution to make them pliable. "Anything creative is fun to do." During World War II he created much of the nose art on military planes.

He is Mr. Fixit. When he was a boy, he used to play with his father's tools. Later, his kids played with their grandfather's tools.

"My wife asked him one day why he didn't lock up his shop to keep the kids from losing his tools," Porter told me one time. "He told her he'd rather they lose all his tools than not learn to work with their hands."

Porter made his living as an engineer at Colorado City's radio station, KVMC. He worked there 40 years. Jim

Tumbleweed Smith

Columnist

Baum, owner of the station, says "Porter would put a piece of broken equipment on a table, light up a cigarette, then sit there for what seemed like forever. Eventually he would think himself through the problem. There was never a machine that could outsmart Porter."

Once Porter rigged up a box at the station. It had a button on it and a sign reading, "Press Here." When you did, a head and a hand popped out at you. During a flood in 1939, Porter went around downtown Colorado City in a homemade motor boat.

Porter worked in Colorado City's little theater. He enjoyed doing special effects.

"It takes a little bit of head scratching to figure out how to make something fly across the stage or make a knife stick in a wall," said Porter. "Anything that's a challenge will perk up your curiosity."

Porter was musical. He played trumpet, sousaphone, euphonium and bass fiddle. And of course, calliope. "I had to quit playing wind instruments when I lost my teeth."

Porter won $4.3 million in the Texas lottery this year. He said the two things he wanted were a new Camaro and to get the stickers out of his yard. He got both of them. The Camaro was the first new car he ever owned.

When the news came out that Porter had won the lottery, the general response among residents of Colorado City was, "Well, I can't think of a more deserving person."

The money didn't change Porter. He still wore his Dickies leisure suits, still smiled, still thought about his next prank or his next project. "It's only money," he said.

Colorado City's resident genius died the other day at the age of 80. On the day of his funeral, one of his friends remarked, "Porter was rich before he won the lottery."

Energetic and active senior still acts like a freshman

DEAR ABBY: "Jane in Bloomfield Hills, Mich." asked if you were still writing your own column. She went on to say, "I don't see how you could still be doing it." Jane informed you that her friends who are near her age (81) are in wheelchairs or using walkers, and she concluded that is normal because they are at the end of the line."

A pair of eyes, even if one must use Braille, a beat-up typewriter or a pencil - these are all it takes to keep the brain active, regardless of what Mother Nature has in store for the rest of the body.

A few decades ago, as a radio news director and TV anchor in Miami, I had the pleasure of introducing you to a group of high-school students. I was very much impressed by your honesty, and I still am.

When I became a senior citizen (ugh), I found another niche in life. I changed professions and went into banking. I am now retired, but I'm not idle.

You may use my name - there are no creditors looking for me. - ROSS STONE, JENSEN BEACH, FLA.

DEAR ROSS: The theory that an active mind retards the aging process is not new, and you are a prime example. I, too, credit my mental activity for keeping me young for my age. I'm no spring chicken, but I feel like one - and I must admit I still lay an egg occasionally.

Sunday, Sept. 17, 1995

Remember the farmer

In smaller communities, not a lot goes on that most people living in them are not soon aware of.

Big Spring is not so small that three cars at the same intersection is looked upon as a traffic jam but news does get around.

I became suddenly ill a couple of weeks ago and had to drop out of commission for awhile and it was not long before that news got out and about everyone knew about it by now so its not any big secret.

Anyway, I got a chance to catch up on some reading during my recuperation. I read about every magazine and newspaper I could get a hold of and even managed to get a book read that my coworker, Dana Tarter, brought by.

One particularly interesting article I read had to do with the West Texas economy.

It was in the Lubbock paper. Lubbock has been crying the blues ever since the first rumor occurred about the closing of Reese Air Force Base. (Does this bring back any local memories associated with our own community's loss of Webb?)

The author of the article pretty well pointed out that, yes, the loss of Reese was important, but that locals had better start looking at just where their real bread and butter come from! And that was from agriculture!

He pointed out that it would take the closing of a least FIVE Reese Air Force in the South Plains to come close to matching the loss of agricultural industry to West Texas!

Our region of Texas, if it can be imagined as becoming an independent country, would be the fifth leading country in the world in the production of cotton! Former President of the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce, Jeff Morris (now with the Dallas Fina Corp. offices) was quick to point out in many of his community addresses that agriculture was the number one economic factor in Howard County.

I think almost any local businessman or woman will readily admit just how much their business is hurt when the local area has a short crop or a crop failure. Agriculture affects us all.

Economists with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service have developed all kinds of mathematical formulas that have determined that in any ag-based economy, such as in Howard County, each dollar of income from a single bale of cotton received by a local producer is multiplied three times in that community.

Thus, a $300 bale of cotton turns out to be actually worth $900 to that community as the farmer buys his fuel and other supplies, a tractor, its parts and equipment, a pickup truck (or two), his wife's automobile (and maybe his son and or daughter a vehicle), the insurance on his farm home, buildings and vehicles, food and (yes, a farmer's

Real Estate courses come to Howard College

Courses geared to helping people obtain licenses

By KELLIE JONES
Staff Writer

Have you dreamed of getting your real estate license but could not afford it or did not want to travel out of town to attend classes?

Howard College and instructor Ellen Phillips now have the answer. Phillips is teaching real estate fast track courses designed for the non-traditional student.

Phillips said most of the students are married, have a full-time job and have some post-secondary education but maybe not a degree.

If a student has already taken some college courses such as English, math, psychology or business, they are required to take 90 hours of real estate courses in order to sit for the exam. The two courses are Principles of Real Estate and Law of Agency and are currently being offered at Howard College.

college, they are required to take 180 hours of courses including the principles and law classes. They can choose two other courses such as Real Estate Mathematics, Promulgated Contract Forms, Real Estate Law, Real Estate Marketing and Real Estate Finance. All courses are 45 classroom hours.

THE COURSES

Phillips teaches the two main courses and one of the other elective courses each month. The hours are flexible to meet the students needs and are as follows for October:

Local doctor returns from learning fellowship

By MARY McATEER
Staff Writer

Most people think when you're a doctor you're finished learning. Dr. Donald Crockett doesn't agree.

Crockett says he'd always planned to do advanced study after he completed medical training, but as time went by he was busy with his practice and family, and never got around to it.

A few years ago, he talked it over with his wife, Sandy, and the two decided if he was ever going to do it, he'd better take the chance. "Time kept going by and I wasn't getting any younger," he says.

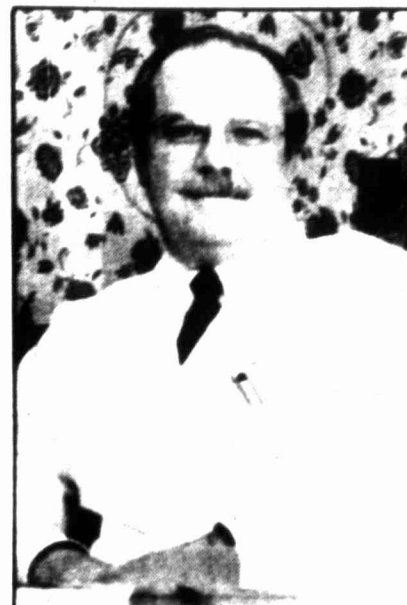

The first step was the easiest - deciding what specialty to pursue. Crockett, a surgeon, is particularly fascinated by blood vessels - "every blood vessel except the heart," he says. He decided to apply for a fellowship in peripheral vascular surgery.

The next step was to decide on the area he wanted to work in, and choose cities where the family would be happy. Crockett decided on the south and southwest, and began sending out paperwork.

The process of obtaining a fellowship is almost as intricate as a network of blood vessels.

Once a post-graduate physician (that is, a physician who has completed medical school, internship and residency), has applied for a fellowship, a selection system goes into operation. For peripheral vascular study, there are only 40 or 50 programs in the country, and most only take one applicant per year.

After a person has been accepted, a series of interviews follows. Then, applicants and training facilities alike receive a group of questionnaires. Applicants rate facilities on whether the training emphasizes the area they want to work on - e.g., research work vs. clinical work - the area, the size of the staff, and other aspects.

The questionnaires completed, all paperwork is sent to a central clearinghouse, and clinics and doctors are computer-matched for compatibility.

Dr. Crockett was matched with the Ochsner Clinic, in New Orleans. The largest group practice in the south, with 550 physicians, the Ochsner clinic, founded in 1936, is considered one of the "big seven" private practices in the country, ranking with the Mayo, the Scripps, and the Leaky clinics. The Ochsner Clinic has facilities for patient care, research, and training.

and an attached hospital.

Crockett's first year at the Ochsner Clinic was primarily dedicated to research. He commented he hadn't been too interested in research, but it was more fun than he expected.

He wrote a number of papers as a result of his research, and had the opportunity to present them at medical conferences in London and Spain as well as the United States. His work included studies of the effects of transplantation, spinal cord circulation, varicose veins, and digestive circulation problems.

One of the most interesting aspects of clinical practice, Crockett said, was working with transplant cases. In many cases, people who need transplants have peripheral vascular disease already, and doctors work to correct the problems before surgery. In other cases, the problems are caused by the drugs that prevent rejection.

Heartland Wireless buys three cable cos.

RICHARDSON, Texas (AP) — Heartland Wireless Communications Inc. said Tuesday it plans to issue $178 million in stock to buy three companies and two wireless cable TV systems, then sell some $140 million of its new assets.

Heartland said it has agreed to buy Austin-based CableMaxx Inc. for about $80.8 million, and Scottsdale, Ariz.-based American Wireless Cable Systems Inc. for some $34 million, both paid in Heartland common stock.

The company also said it will buy TechniVision Inc. for $36.75 million in stock, less any assumed obligations under $5 million. In addition, Heartland will buy the percentages not owned by American Wireless of the wireless cable TV systems in Fort Worth, Texas, and Minneapolis for $13.3 million.

Crockett finished work at the Ochsner Clinic in June. He hadn't been sure when he left the family would be coming back to Big Spring, but they were delighted when the opportunity presented itself. "This was where we wanted to be," he says.

The city looks better economically, Crockett says. He's noticed lots of new houses going up, and businesses in town that weren't here before. Medically, morale is high, new doctors are coming to town, and facilities are better.

New Orleans was fun to stay in, Crockett says, and he'd recommend it to anyone. The worst part was the climate and the crime. Since returning to Big Spring, the family has noticed how much more relaxed small town life is, and though Big Spring has some problems, they seem a little less scary.

Medically, what Crockett has noticed since returning to Big Spring is the amount of lower extremity vein disease he's seeing - problems like varicose veins and poor circulation in the hands and feet.

Dr. Crockett says the number one risk factor for self-induced vascular problems is smoking - it's the major cause of aneurysm, as well as blockages of arteries in the neck, kidney, and leg. The problem with smokers and vascular problems is the high risk of recurrence if the patient continues to smoke.

Sandy Crockett, an O.R. nurse, worked as a nephrology research nurse while Crockett completed his fellowship. Now that the family has returned, she plans to resume O.R. work in the future.

Uprooting a family and going "back to school" isn't easy, but for Crockett, it was worth it. General surgery is still a large part of his practice at Malone-Hogan Clinic, he says, and he loves it.

But "vascular surgery is my new love."

ELLEN PHILLIPS REAL ESTATE

NOW REPRESENTING SELLERS AND BUYERS

"We have a new secretary, a new sales associate, a new operating philosophy and a new name," says Ellen Phillips, Broker/Owner of Ellen Phillips Real Estate, formerly Buyer's Resource Real Estate of Big Spring. "We're really excited about the enhanced client services we are now able to offer both Buyers and Sellers in the Big Spring marketplace," Phillips adds. "We are especially excited about being able to represent Seller Clients as well as Buyer Clients and to truly be a FULL SERVICE real estate agency. Our buyer clients were unhappy that we could not represent their interests as sellers of homes while actively representing them as buyers. The more we thought about it, the more we agreed with them," Phillips noted.

"We have had a busy first year in business and are looking forward to serving Big Spring for many years to come," Phillips says, adding that between opening her real estate business, traveling extensively in the early part of the year to complete the required courses and requirements to earn the prestigious C.R.E.I. designation, and launching the FAST TRACK Real Estate program in coordination with Howard College, it's been a hectic year indeed! She is especially proud of completing the requirements for the Certified Real Estate Instructor designation awarded by the Texas Real Estate Teacher's Association in conjunction with the Texas Real Estate Commission.

Ellen Phillips received her Salesman's license in 1988, earned the coveted GRI (Graduate, Realtor's Institute) in 1988, followed in 1989 by earning her Broker's license. She is a 1977 Honor graduate of Texas Tech University. A Big Spring native, Phillips and husband Greg have three children in the Big Spring Independent School District. Daughter Amy is a sophomore at BSHS and sons Connor and Brady are students at Kentwood elementary school. She is the daughter of Mary Alice Anderson of Big Spring. "My mom has been associated with Malone and Hogan for 45 years. I only hope that I can sell real estate for that long," she grins.

With Ellen since January, 1995 is Sales Associate Dorothy Harland, a long time Big Spring/Howard County resident. Dorothy has been in the home building and home decorating business for many years. She is the mother of Brenda Bedell and Danny Harland, both of Big Spring. Phillips notes, "It was a natural extension of that portion of our industry which led Dorothy to first obtaining her real estate license. After a few years of being inactive in real estate sales, she has come back with a vengeance! She wants all her friends and business associates to know she can now serve Sellers as well as Buyers!"

Ellen Phillips Real Estate is also proud to announce the recent association of Tito Arenchibia as its newest real estate salesman. A long-time Big Spring resident and native of Cuba, Tito has been licensed since 1984 and served many buyers and sellers in Big Spring since that time. Phillips adds, "Tito wants all his former clients and customers to know he is at our office now and is ready to serve their real estate needs in the future!" Tito and wife Wanda are the parents of three grown children: Elizabeth, Vienna and Bill.

Also recently joining the Professional Staff at Ellen Phillips Real Estate is Sandy Hicks, Broker, GRI, CREI, of Midland, Texas. Sandy has been the Broker/Owner of a large national franchise office in Houston, Texas, before settling in Midland, Texas with husband Howard.

The addition of Winnie Turney to the staff as secretary of Ellen Phillips Real Estate was in response of the increased volume of business. "Winnie is currently enrolled in the Fast Track Real Estate program and is studying for the real estate exam. "We will all be delighted when Winnie gets her license," Phillips smiles.

Phillips hints at the upcoming increase in the number of licensed staff at the company. "We are really excited about the new recruits who will be coming to work with us and will be announcing their names at a later date." She adds that all former Buyer's Resource clients are invited to stop by the office and meet the new staff. "We would like all of them to know that we can now serve their future real estate needs in a way we were never able to before!"

A new service being introduced by the company is the 24 hour HOMEBUYER HOTLINE that offers callers a new message recorded daily. The HOMEBUYER HOTLINE will give interested callers the latest information about interest rate and the properties offered by our company. To hear the hotline message, call 263-8034 or (800) 335-1872, extension 9, after hours and on weekends and holidays. Phillips has created the HOME BUYER HOTLINE as an extra service for both its buyer and seller clients.

The menu of services offered by the company include a 24 hour voice mail system, the Homebuyer Hotline, computerized MLS services, fully automated contract writing software with full math and finance capabilities, extensive database and contact management, advice, counseling and negotiation strategies for buyer and seller clients, assistance with loans including the negotiation for the best interest rates with many different lenders, complete loan pre-qualification in the privacy of our conference room, total confidentiality of all clients, superior knowledge of all the available Agency options and an emphasis on COMPLETE CLIENT REPRESENTATION, not just listing properties and listing buyers.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS
ENHANCED USE LEASE FOR THE VA MEDICAL CENTER, BIG SPRING, TEXAS
The Department of Veterans Affairs (VA), in accordance with Public Law 38 U.S.C. Sec. 8161 et seq. hereby provides notice of a Public Hearing. The Public Hearing is a forum to present VA's proposal for a public-private venture initiative for a parking lot to be constructed by the Government Employees Federal Credit Union. The venture's objective is to provide more convenient accessible parking for both the VA Medical Center and the GFCU. The joint public-private venture between the VA Medical Center and GFCU includes the construction of a parking lot on VA property by GFCU for the use of GFCU in exchange for existing parking presently owned by GFCU that is readily accessible to the VA. This venture will enhance the VA property and reduce costs associated with maintaining this property while providing more appropriate, safe parking and access for GFCU members. DATE AND TIME OF HEARING: October 5, 1995 7:00 p.m. PLACE OF PUBLIC HEARING: Big Spring VA Medical Center, Building #1, Room 212, 700 Veterans Blvd., Big Spring, Texas. IDENTIFICATION OF PROPERTY TO BE LEASED: The proposed 1/4 acre (more or less) to be leased on the Big Spring VA Medical Center will be located on the Southeast quadrant of the campus between the Gregg St. Entrance and the Government Employees Federal Credit Union. DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY TO BE LEASED: The VA Medical Center has approximately 31 acres of property of which the majority of this land is buffer space for its main patient building, building #1 under the Enhanced-Use concept, the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) will lease this site to the GFCU for a period of up to 30 years at no monetary cost. In consideration for the lease, the developer will build, maintain a parking lot and allow the VA sole use of its parking area directly behind the Credit Union Building. This parking lot will be built in accordance with VA specifications and criteria and at the end of the lease term, title to all improvements on the leased property will revert to the VA. DESCRIPTION OF THE PROPOSED LEASE: VA proposes to lease approximately 1/4 acre to the GFCU for a parking lot to be built on the site. The lease term will consist of time of construction plus a period no greater than 30 years from the date of award at no cost. The improvement of VA property will reduce operating costs associated with maintaining this property over the life of the agreement. In exchange for the land lease, the GFCU will construct, operate, and maintain the new parking lot at his/her expense, in lieu of paying fair market value rent to VA for the lease of the site, the developer will exchange existing GFCU parking for the sole use of VA employees. The new parking lot will be open to members of the GFCU and existing Credit Union parking will be used by the VA. The existing parking owned by GFCU is readily accessible for use by administrative employees of the VA located in a building adjacent to this parking area. The public is invited to submit issues and concerns which have bearing on the program, prior to the hearing, in writing to: Mr. Cary Brown, Office of the Director, VA Medical Center, 700 Veterans Blvd., Big Spring, Texas 79720. 9499 September 14 thru October 5, 1995
