Dole, Gramm clash sharply

Attacks reveal major Republican split on welfare reform

■ While it is in Dems' interests to paint the idea of welfare reform as being in dire straits, GOP is so divided that they need some Democratic support to get a bill through Senate.

PHILADELPHIA — Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, clashed pointedly Saturday over welfare in a display of the Republican split that has stalled the legislation in a Senate increasingly roiled by presidential politics.

In an address to the closing day of the Republican National Committee's summer meeting in Philadelphia, Dole threatened to keep the chamber in session all August if necessary to pass a welfare bill that would give states more control over their programs. To the Senate, which treasures its summer break, that is a near-apocalyptic threat that can complicate the prospects of other bills as well.

But Gramm, who with other conservatives has been blocking a measure passed by the Senate Finance Committee, told the same audience that he would not back off and would introduce his own tougher alternative this week.

"On no other issue is there a brighter line in the sand between where we stand and where the Democrats stand on welfare," said Gramm, who like Dole is seeking the Republican presidential nomination. "And I believe that we can not let the Controversy swirls around Bunton-backed courthouse construction

Taking up an entire city block, the new U.S. District Courthouse in Pecos, above, is still under construction. The courthouse and the Pecos Division of the Western District of Texas has stirred up controversy among federal officials. The old courtroom for the Pecos Division, right, was built in 1935 and occupies the second floor of the U.S. Post Office in Pecos.

Necessity or a tribute to a judge's affection for a small community?

That is the question many people associated with the federal criminal system ask about the new U.S. courthouse being built in Pecos.

For the people in the Pecos Division — of the Western District of Texas of the U.S. District Court — the courthouse has been long needed.

For federal authorities in El Paso, the courthouse is a reminder of the space they need for the ever-increasing crime they prosecute, as well as the numerous miles many have traveled to bring defendants to arraignments on the orders of Senior U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton.

For still others, the courthouse is a tribute to the power of Bunton.

At a cost of $3 million to build and a lease totaling $19.8 million spread over 20 years, the courthouse sprawls an entire city block on the dusty streets of Pecos.

An article in the May 15, 1995, issue of Texas Lawyer magazine questioned the construction of the courthouse with commentary like: "If you build it, who will come? A $19.6 million federal courthouse is rising in the sleepy West Texas town of Pecos. Besides the townsfolk, the only people who sound enthusiastic about the project are Senior U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton, who is primarily responsible for getting it built, and fellow federal judges."

The article, written by Janet Elliott, calls the courthouse "a monument to one judge's power," and states "the two-story courthouse is a testament to ... Bun-

Act II of O.J. Simpson trial sets dizzying pace

LOS ANGELES — Now that the curtain has risen on Act II of the O.J. Simpson trial, key players are still on stage. But the pace and tone has changed, a huge supporting cast has been introduced and some characters seem to have undergone personality changes.

Simpson's once-feuding lawyers seemed to be focused and have their egos in control as they opened the defense case. There were some highs and lows, but the new pace — 22 witnesses in one week — has been dizzying.

"This is a pretty organized, fresh beginning from the defense," said Loyola University law professor Laurie Levenson. "They're not holding back. They're coming on with a full case. But it's hard to tell yet whether it's a compelling case."

After so many upheavals, the jurors appear more cheerful and alert than they have in weeks.

"The defense case is more entertaining and the jurors now know what to look for," Levenson said. "They know how to frame the issues and they know the questions they want answered."

They also know that the tri-

Quake aftermath: Businesses in Kobe work on their revival

By Dorian Benkoil
Associated Press

KOBE, Japan — At one of Kobe's busiest intersections, what was a nine-story office building before the city's devastating earthquake has finally reopened — after the top six floors were removed.

The truncated Kobe Transport Building is a fitting symbol for the struggles of businesses to rebuild, recover and move ahead six months after the worst quake to hit Japan in seven decades.

All over the city, signs of hope are mixed with reminders of the 7.5-magnitude quake on Jan. 17, which killed more than 6,000 people, made 250,000 homeless and caused nearly $120 billion in damage.

The removal of tons of debris from more than 94,000 demolished buildings and homes is winding down, and empty lots dot the city. Construction companies are busy repairing damaged structures, but a hoped-for boom in new projects has not yet materialized.

Kobe had hoped that a big infusion of government aid would help it not only rebuild, but add new amenities — gleaming shopping malls, parks, an airport. But officials say prospects do not look good.

"Informally, many people inside the government are telling Kobe to take care of itself," said Hiroki Hamada, a city economic official.

The city's business community is trying to do just that. The Kobe Chamber of Commerce estimates 95 percent of its 14,000 members — mainly small- and medium-size companies — are at least partially back in business.

Kobe Steel, a top employer and one of Japan's main producers, has restarted all its main production lines and plans cost cuts and sales of some assets to make up for an estimated $1.3 billion in damage.

The city's port, which was Japan's second-largest before the quake, is making faster-than-expected repairs, but is still handling less than half the container traffic it did before the quake.

Many hotels rushed to reopen this month in time for the summer season, and the city launched an ambitious national advertising campaign to attract visitors. But hotels, which had 60 percent bookings at this time last year, now have only a 10 percent reservation rate.

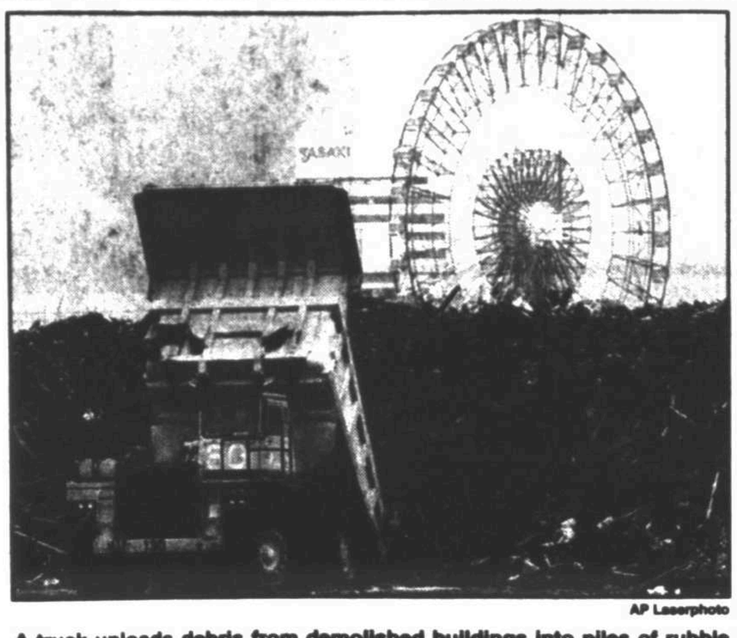
"Every other building is broken. There's only so much you can see," said Chris Dowd, 26, of Boston, one of the few tourists in Kobe.

Throughout the city, construction netting covers hundreds of buildings. Many bear the insignia of Obayashi Corp., one of the region's largest construction companies.

Because of quake-related demolition and repairs, the company will take in 50 percent more money in Kobe than last year. But Yutaka Nishi, head of the Kobe office, says it is a short-term surge.

"We think this work will continue through the end of the year," Nishi said. "But we're not at all sure owners will rebuild fallen buildings."

A four-year economic slump throughout Japan has cut company earnings and put Japanese in a non-spending mood. Even before the quake, office buildings in Kobe were only 70 percent full, Nishi said.



AP Laserphoto

A truck unloads debris from demolished buildings into piles of rubble at Kobe's Port Island. Tons of debris from more than 94,000 buildings and homes are collected here.

For a lucky few, the quake has been a boon.

One group almost surely profiting is the underworld. Japan's biggest crime syndicate, the Yamaguchi-gumi, is based in Kobe.

Companies affiliated with Japanese gangsters take as much as 3 percent of the cost of every construction project. Their share of the $3.5 billion already spent on demolition is probably even greater, said Raisuke Miyawaki, a former top gang investigator with the national police.

Local governments, seeking to soften the image of a construction industry known for excluding outsiders, have been trying to ensure that foreign companies get their share of rebuilding opportunities.

Chicago-based Schal Bovis Inc., together with Kobe's Kurare Construction, has put up 500 British-made housing units. However, that is only a small portion of 20,000 temporary homes the local and national governments have financed.

Kobe residents whose skills match the needs of a city under repair — such as small subcontractors, dump truck drivers, crane operators and construction site guards — are doing well. Kobe's employment office has about 75 percent more job listings than at this time last year, mostly for quake-related help.

But Yoshihiro Osada of the city employment office says the overall number of people applying for unemployment insurance has tripled since before the quake.

France looks for Greenpeace protestors on nuclear test site

PAPEETE, Tahiti (AP) — French officials denied antinuclear protesters were hiding at Mururoa Atoll, but planes and boats were searching the nuclear test site where a Greenpeace boat was turned back last week.

"This is hype," Gen. Michel Boileau said as the Greenpeace ship Rainbow Warrior II arrived Friday in Tahiti, 650 miles from Mururoa, to a greeting by thousands of Tahitian supporters.

President Jacques Chirac announced last month that France will set off eight nuclear test blasts at Mururoa beginning in September. Chirac reiterated that plan Friday, saying it was "irrevocable."

Greenpeace claims one of its founding members and two others reached Mururoa aboard a rubber raft July 9 while French soldiers were storming the Rainbow Warrior II.

On Saturday, about 500 German and other scientists published an appeal to Chirac to stop the tests. They said they were "horrified and dejected" by the plans, which "mirror the behavior of the Cold War period."

Signers of the letter included Carl Friedrich von Weizsaecker, who worked on the fledgling Nazi atomic bomb project and has become a leading critic of nuclear weapons. The letter echoed a 1957 vow by German scientists never to work on an atomic bomb.

Greenpeace claims one of its founding members, David McTaggart, and two others reached Mururoa aboard a rubber raft July 9, while French soldiers were storming aboard the Rainbow Warrior II.

The French troops teargassed the crew, held them for a half-day and expelled them from French territorial waters around Mururoa. The ship returned to Tahiti to repair damage it suffered when a French warship rammed it.

Protests appeared to climax Friday on Bastille Day, the French national holiday.

"We were met by dozens of small craft, traditional canoes with drummers on board and people blowing conch shells and waving flags and greenery," said Greenpeace spokeswoman Stephanie Mills, aboard the Rainbow Warrior II as it arrived.

The ship docked to a tumultuous welcome and crew members went ashore to join protests at Bastille Day celebrations.

Thousands of people paraded from the dock to the main square outside the French High Commission downtown, where they built a "nuclear-free" peace village of huts made from palm fronds.

The rally capped a day of protest in the South Pacific.

In Australia, at least 15,000 people attended a rally in Sydney, another 5,000 protested in Melbourne, 2,000 in Surfer's Paradise, 600 in Canberra, the federal capital, and 300 in Perth.

Government troops seize peacekeepers' weapons in effort to halt Serbs

■ Forces take U.N. vehicles, arms in 'safe area' of Gorazde.

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Desperate to stave off Serb assaults on defenseless civilians, government troops seized U.N. peacekeepers' weapons and demanded their vehicles in two Muslim enclaves Saturday.

The Bosnian troops surrounded Ukrainian peacekeepers at two posts in Zepa, a U.N. "safe area" sheltering 16,000 civilians that suffered a second day of Serb shelling Saturday. The Ukrainians refused to give up their weapons and fired warning shots, said U.N. spokesman Alexander Ivanko.

In the "safe area" of Gorazde, government troops seized U.N. vehicles and weapons and shot at other Ukrainian troops.

Bosnia's Muslim-led government is angry the world hasn't stopped the attacks aimed at overrunning "safe areas" — outposts of government control surrounded by rebel territory — in an attempt to create an uninterrupted swath of Serb lands across eastern Bosnia.

France has tried in vain to convince its allies to recapture Srebrenica, which fell this week in a humiliating defeat for U.N. forces, and to defend Zepa and Gorazde. Britain instead proposed more talks.

As many as 20,000 people were driven out of Srebrenica by the Serbs in a two-day deportation. Thousands more, many of them men, were taken to unknown destinations by the rebels.

As many as 15,000 people are missing, said the European Union commissioner for humanitarian affairs, Emma Bonino. She said she had received word that as many as 4,000 Muslim men were being held at a stadium north of Srebrenica.

"If you look at the camp here," she said at the airfield outside Tuzla, "there are men missing, but also the young women ... We are most concerned about that."

The plight of refugees driven out of Srebrenica eased somewhat Saturday when the Muslim government housed 11,000 of them in the northern city of Tuzla. Another 5,400 others were staying in tents at an overcrowded U.N. airfield, sweltering in 92-degree temperatures.

"It's getting better," said Kris Janowski, spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

The Serbs on Saturday released 55 Dutch peacekeepers captured in Srebrenica, the Dutch Defense Ministry said. The peacekeepers were bused out of Bosnia and taken to a hotel in the Serbian town of Novi Sad, witnesses said.

Another 20 Dutch support and medical personnel left Srebrenica Saturday for neighboring Croatia, the Dutch Defense Ministry said. While still in Bosnian Serb-held territory, they were robbed of a jeep, a tank, guns and other supplies, said Defense Ministry spokesman Lars Poppers.

A day after they gave government troops in the tiny mountain town of Zepa an ultimatum to surrender and begin evacuating the civilian population, Serbs shelled the enclave again Saturday and traded gunfire with government troops. But there was no U.N. confirmation of Bosnian radio reports that Serbs had launched infantry attacks.

The Serbs were not attacking U.N. troops there, and there were no reports of peacekeepers firing back, said a U.N. spokesman, Rida Ettarashany.

But he said lightly armed government troops, who have pledged to defend Zepa in any way possible, fired at the U.N. compound. In the enclave of Gorazde, they seized five armored vehicles and some weapons from Ukrainian peacekeepers, he said.

Government troops fired machine guns and grenades at the Ukrainian camp, said U.N. spokesman Lt. Col. Gary Coward. Fire broke out in a barracks that was hit.

Government troops prevented British peacekeepers from leaving their camp to assist the Ukrainians, Coward said.

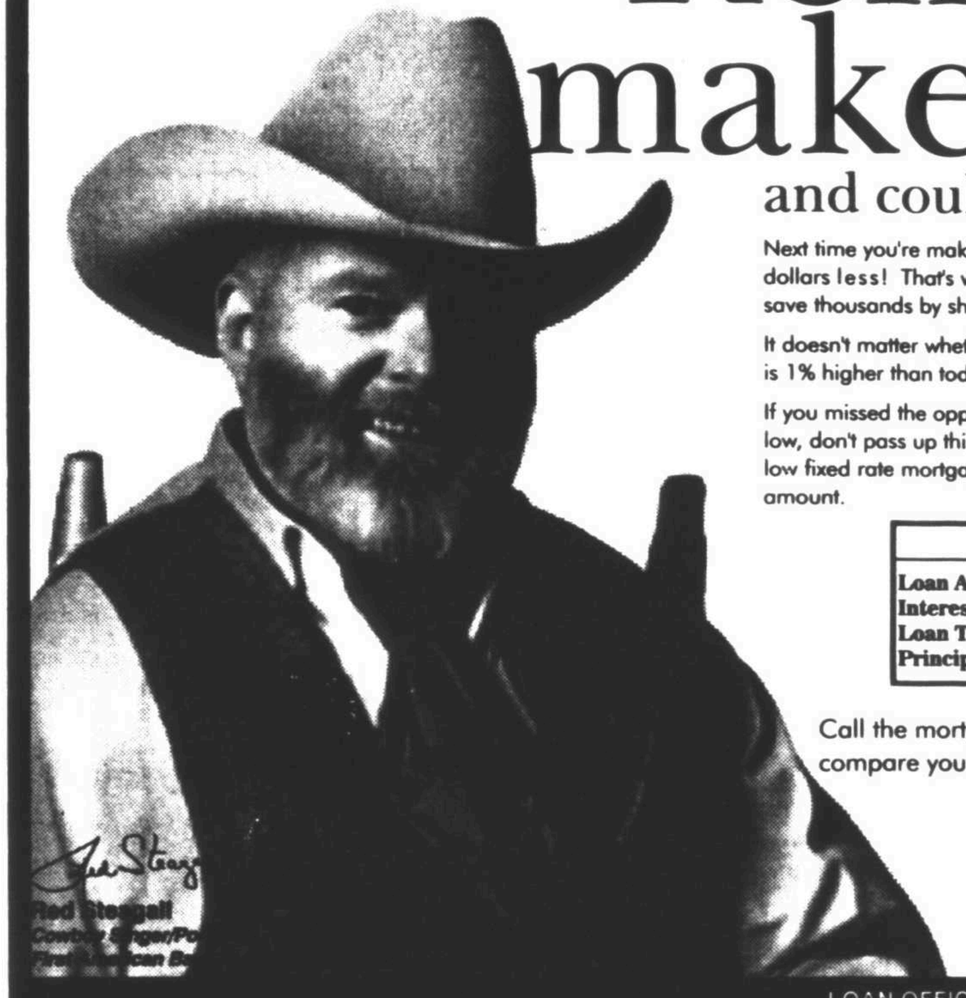
The assault on Zepa began just three days after the Serbs dealt the United Nations its most humiliating defeat of the 3-year-old war by seizing Srebrenica, the first "safe area" created by the United Nations to protect civilians from the fighting.

The U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Rupert Smith, wrote to Bosnian Serb commander Gen. Ratko Mladic warning that further offensives in eastern Bosnia would draw more condemnation and isolation.

Smith said NATO airpower remained an option. Last minute airstrikes against Serb tanks failed to halt the Serb sweep through Srebrenica.

Refinancing makes sense...

and could save you hundreds of dollars!



Next time you're making your mortgage payment, wouldn't it be nice to write that check for a hundred dollars less! That's what some folks do after refinancing with First American Bank. And others even save thousands by shortening their loan term.

It doesn't matter whether you bought your home ten years ago or just a year ago, if your mortgage rate is 1% higher than today's low rate, it's time to call First American and talk about refinancing.

If you missed the opportunity to refinance a couple of years ago when mortgage rates were at a 20-year low, don't pass up this second chance. And, if you have an adjustable rate, now is the time to lock into a low fixed rate mortgage. In some instances, you can even include your closing costs in your loan amount.

Rain chance hovers on 20 percent

Staff Report

A weak cold front moving across the Panhandled interacted with a weak low-pressure area to the southeast of Midland to spawn several small storm cells in and around the Permian Basin late Saturday.

The upper level instability was further exacerbated by a gusty outflow boundary to the west, generating storms from Gulf moisture moved into the area by the circular winds of the low-pressure area, according to a spokeswoman for the National Weather Service in Midland.

The forecast for today calls for partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of showers or thundershowers in the afternoon and evening, with a high temperature in the lower 90s and east winds 5-15 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a continuing 20 percent chance of rain and a low in the mid-60s, the spokeswoman said.

Monday should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain later in the day and a high near 90.

Many agents view town as without necessary caseload

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

PECOS — This sleepy little West Texas town is best-known for its cantaloupes and the shoot-em-up days of the Old West; now, it is the recipient of the newest courthouse in the Western District of Texas for the United States District Court.

Pecos — a division headquarters for the Western District — is located on the Pecos River on the high prairie at the northern border of the Chihuahuan Desert.

Why is the new courthouse's construction in Pecos newsworthy? Because, many federal agents view Pecos as a dying ghost town which doesn't have the caseload to justify a new courthouse.

So, what is Pecos all about?

The town is the county seat for Reeves County and agriculture is the major industry. Also located there are a food processing plant, a sulfur mining plant and a vehicle-testing facility.

Situated 208 miles east of El Paso and 392 miles west of Fort Worth on Interstate 20, Pecos is about 170 miles north of Big Bend National Park and 85 miles south of Carlsbad Caverns.

The town's current city population is estimated at 12,232, although federal agents have estimated it is probably closer to 8,000.

The population, according to the 1994-95 Community Data sheet provided by the Texas-New Mexico Power Company, has fluctuated over the years with a city population in 1970 of 12,682 and county population of 15,801; in 1980, the city population was 13,003 and the county population was 16,122; and in 1990, the city population was 12,069 and the county population was 15,852.

Pecos' major agricultural products include cotton, cantaloupes, bell peppers and onions.

According to the chamber of commerce, there is an abundance of industrial properties available.

A labor analysis from November 1993 from the Texas Employment Commission showed a work force of 5,610 with labor employed of 4,825 and an unemployment rate of 14 percent; that includes the radius of a labor-drawing area of 50 miles.

Pecos has 36 churches and five motels with a little less than 400 rooms. The community has three swimming pools, two nearby lakes, four parks and a golf course, according to information available at the chamber of commerce.

There is a 60-bed hospital and nine doctors, a daily newspaper and two banks.

In addition to the interstate running through the city, Pecos is served by railroad and bus service.

Chamber of commerce literature detailing the background of Pecos is as follows:

Pecos' history begins with the Spanish conquistadors in the 16th century, through the periods of Indian migration, cavalry exploration, pioneer westward movement and the era of cattle trails.

In 1881, the arrival of the Texas & Pacific Railroad ensured the future of Pecos as a commercial and agricultural center on the Fort Worth to El Paso route. The area developed a ranching industry and with the advent of modern irrigation methods substantial farming interests.

The T&P railroad's dining cars served sweet Pecos cantaloupe, bringing this delicacy its nationwide fame. Pecos cantaloupes are known throughout the U.S. for their distinctive flavor - the result of a unique combination of sunshine, mineralized soil and water and controlled irrigation. Picking, packing, and shipping continues from mid-July through early September.

The cantaloupe festival started in 1984 and is held annually the first weekend in August.

In 1883, on July 4, the world's first rodeo was born in Pecos. Today, the West of the Pecos Rodeo and attendant activities are held annually around July 4.

The West of the Pecos Museum, the restored 19th century Orient Hotel with its adjoining saloon, was the scene in 1896 as Barney Riggs, a local man, killed outlaws Bill Earhart and John Denson after they threatened him. Bronze markers have been placed on the floor showing where the two fell.

Today, the museum displays on two floors a collection of pioneer artifacts, displays of railroad, rodeo and ranching memorabilia. Adjoining the museum is a park including the grave of Clay Allison, the famous Pecos "Gentleman Gunfighter."

Two-story, 41,000-square-foot structure to take up full block

PECOS — The streets of Pecos will soon be adorned by a spacious new federal courthouse upon orders of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pecos is the headquarters for the Pecos Division of the Western District of Texas for the United States District Court and has operated its federal court from the second floor of the U.S. Post Office building since the 1930s.

The new federal courthouse — which has not been named yet — will be on Cedar Street across from the Reeves County Courthouse.

The 41,000-square-foot, two-story structure and its parking lot and landscaping will use the entire city block bounded by Fourth and Fifth streets and by Cedar and Ash streets.

Its traditional design with cast stone architectural elements and clay tile roof is intended to complement the county building and other public structures in the area.

The courthouse will provide two courtrooms and related space for the U.S. District Court and magistrate court as well as housing offices for the U.S. Attorney and U.S. Marshal's service.

Other federal agencies will have offices in the building as well. Currently, several agencies are renting property to house their offices.

The property will be owned and operated by Dominion Leasing, Inc. of Edmond, Okla., as a permanent investment for its own account. Dominion currently owns six other new office buildings leased to the General Services Administration in Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and New Mexico; including the new courthouse in Del Rio, also in the Western District.

The courthouse will be leased for 20 years for $19.8 million extended over that time. The projected cost of the project is $3 million. The courthouse is scheduled to open by November.

The Pecos Division of the Western District of Texas encompasses 10 counties making up one-seventh of the entire Western District of Texas, according to Senior U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton.

The Western District itself is the largest district in the U.S. with more than one district in the state, he added.

Acting U.S. Attorney for the Western District Jim DeAtley said his district is the fourth largest district in the U.S. geographically stretching from Waco to Austin, San Antonio to Del Rio and on to El Paso.

Former U.S. Marshal and now chief of courthouse security for Pecos Steve Balog, said the Pecos division is the largest division in the U.S. covering 29,000 square miles.

"You can fit three northern states plus some metropolitan cities in the district," Balog said.

He said jurors come from all over the area as far as 237 miles away, one-way and said most make trips 50 to 200 miles one-way to serve on the jury or grand jury.

ton's tenacity in seeing that the Pecos Division is not forgotten."

Why would the Pecos Division be forgotten?

Many federal officials say Pecos is a useless headquarters in the middle of the desert and cite the number of cases actually being handled there has been decreasing annually for the past few years.

But Pecos courthouse officials dispute those claims, noting that many of the cases involve multiple defendants.

Karen White, assistant U.S. district clerk for the Pecos Division, said 1993 was the last "normal" year for Pecos with 108 cases (also called numbers) filed with many of those multi-defendant cases.

She said the numbers dropped in 1994 with only 55 cases filed, again with many multi-defendant cases, and so far in 1995 there have only been 19 numbers filed.

Pecos is largely a criminal docket, Ms. White said.

"But, the U.S. Attorney's office can decline cases. There was an assistant U.S. attorney stationed in Pecos until 1994, but cases still declined while she was here," Ms. White said.

Yet, while the criminal case load has fallen, she said civil cases have picked up. There were 46 civil cases filed in 1992, 64 in 1993, 61 in 1994 and 42 so far this year, she said.

"We're not trying to compete with Midland, but before 1994, we were prosecuting as many criminal cases as Midland-Odessa," Ms. White said. "We would probably have court more often, but that is up to the U.S. Attorney's office."

In defense of the U.S. Attorney's office, Jim DeAtley, the acting U.S. attorney for the Western District, said cases are indeed being declined in the Pecos Division and left for the state to prosecute.

But, he said, it is because priorities have been set on what cases are going to court.

"We're presented with an awful lot of cases to be prosecuted ... we try to respond to priorities and allow flexibility in a prosecutor's decision," DeAtley said.

For example, he said in drug cases the U.S. has a broad jurisdiction and he emphasizes working more on major drug smuggling cases than on the smaller 50-pound marijuana cases.

"U.S. attorneys don't prosecute street-level dealers, we focus our efforts on organizations or on individuals who will cooperate in the prosecution of organizations," DeAtley said.

Regardless of which cases are handled in Pecos or not, federal judges tend to believe the caseload in Pecos will continue to fluctuate and will eventually rise again to compete with other divisions in the numbers game.

Bunton, who is attributed with getting the courthouse built in Pecos, said simply "dockets fluctuate, nobody stays the same."

U.S. District Judge Royal Furgeson, who first started hearing cases in Midland in November 1994 and was moved from El Paso to Midland-Odessa on March 15, said Pecos is a division center and has been for decades with its federal courthouse there before Midland's.

"Pecos' docket fluctuates quite a bit depending upon the oil industry being up or down and drug activity; for instance, when authorities beef up efforts in one place the drug industry moves its operations elsewhere.

"Pecos is traditionally an up-and-down docket and a few years ago it was a booming docket ... most people view that it will get more active again and it will be utilized appropriately over the life of the building," Furgeson said.

However, some federal agents, who did not want to be identified, claim the numbers of the Pecos Division are inflated and have been over the years as a result of an order signed by Bunton regarding where defendants will appear for arraignments and trials.

Bunton was appointed in 1979 and took the bench in 1980.

SIMPSON: Pace picks up in Act II

al, which has kept them sequestered at a hotel for six months, is moving toward a conclusion.

On the witness stand, a parade of new faces including Simpson's family, neighbors of his slain ex-wife and airline passengers added a folksy tone to the often somber proceedings.

"These are real people with all their idiosyncrasies," Levenson said. "They're not professional witnesses. The prosecution case was based on police and expert witnesses except for a brief section on barking dogs. The real people are more interesting."

Prosecutors, switching gears after five months of presenting their witnesses, seemed less comfortable in the role of cross-examiners.

"The defense has brought out the hard edge of Marcia Clark and Chris Darden," said noted defense attorney Harland Braun. "She seems to change personalities like she's Sybil."

Legal analysts agreed that Clark's assault on some fairly minor witnesses was ill-advised.

"One disturbing trend this past week was the inconsistency with which Marcia Clark chose to be coquettish or hostile," said UCLA law professor Peter Arenella.

"She was coquettish with Howard Bingham and ripped into Mark Partridge," two defense witnesses. Bingham, he noted, was black, as are most of the jurors, while Partridge is white.

"This might backfire," he said, "because the African-American jurors may perceive this as a gross attempt to manipulate them."

Partridge, a soft-spoken Chicago patent lawyer, seemed taken aback at Clark's aggressive attack. He sat next to Simpson on the plane back from Chicago the morning after Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman were found slain.

Partridge spoke of the defendant's distraught demeanor as well as his kindness in giving a fan an autograph in the midst of his distress.

"Partridge was offering testimony that hurt Clark, but her approach made it clear to the jury he was hurting her," said Arenella.

Braun said Clark erred when she sharply challenged Partridge for writing a copyright symbol at the end of his hand-written notes on the case.

"This is a patent lawyer," Braun said. "He probably copyrights his toilet paper."

Levenson, a former federal prosecutor, said it's important to remember that "jurors really don't identify with anyone in the courtroom except the witnesses. You have to be very careful before you beat up on the average Joe on the witness stand."

She said Clark's attack on Jack McKay, a Hertz executive who played golf with Simpson a few days before the slayings, seemed excessive.

"She has a lot of anger about the case, but it gets misdirected at witnesses who don't deserve it," she said.

Arenella rated Darden's performance erratic. The prosecutor did manage to elicit important testimony from defense witness Robert Heidstra about seeing a vehicle similar to Simpson's Bronco near the murder scene.

CLASH: GOP needs some Democratic support commitment we made in the election perish on the ramparts of compromise and status quo and deal-cutting in Washington, D.C." He later acknowledged that he was directing his remarks at Dole, the front-runner for the nomination.

Senate Democrats and administration officials warned last week that it is increasingly likely that no version of a welfare overhaul will be passed this year as a result of the presidential rivalry of the two men.

While it is clearly in the Democrats' political interests to paint the idea of welfare reform, which most Americans strongly favor, as being in dire straits, the Republicans are so split that they do need some Democratic support to get a welfare bill through the Senate.

And the Democrats see clearly how the opposition by Gramm and his fellow conservatives would decrease the chances of deal being struck to reshape the finance bill more to their liking.

Dole clearly had this in mind when he vowed to overcome opposition from conservatives, whom he did not name.

"It's not easy to put together a welfare-reform package," Dole said. "It's easy to put together if you don't care how many votes that you get. But to get one that will pass is not easy but we're working on it."

The wrangling over welfare is the latest example of the effect on presidential politics on important legislation, including some of the leading items on the Republican's policy agenda.

Already, the battle between Gramm and Dole has played into the Senate's work on tax cuts, racial quotas and the scuttled nomination of Dr. Henry W. Foster as surgeon general.

In their appearances in Philadelphia, the two other senators running for president, Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania and Richard G. Lugar of Indiana, each called on their competitors to stop the partisan bickering and aim their fire at President Clinton.

The welfare bill approved by the Finance Committee would freeze federal welfare spending for five years, cancel the guarantee of subsistence income for poor children and give states lump sums to spend on the poor.

But Gramm and other conservatives like Sen. Lauch Faircloth of North Carolina argue that Congress should cut off welfare payments for unmarried teen-age mothers and legal immigrants who have not become citizens.

In addition, they say welfare checks should not be increased for women who have additional children while on welfare. In March, the House passed its welfare bill, mainly along party lines, and it includes many of the provisions Gramm is seeking.

Seizing on the Republicans' infighting on the issue, Clinton said last week that "some people on the far right are blocking any action on welfare reform" by insisting that the government cut off benefits to unmarried teen-age women and their children.

The president has threatened to veto any Republican welfare bill that he does not think would do enough to provide job training and education for recipients or that is too punititve.

After Sen. John B. Breaux of Louisiana, with other Democratic senators, met with Clinton on the issue last week, he said: "If the Republicans can't get their act together, it may mean we can't do welfare. They're at a crossroads." Breaux added, "If they don't reject the positions of the more extreme Republican senators, that means welfare reform is dead."

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, the ranking Democrat on the Finance Committee, said of the political impasse among Republicans: "Maybe the best thing would be no thing. It might turn out that it can't be done in this Congress."

Moynihan has expressed disgust with the current direction of welfare politics, particularly Republican efforts to eliminate the federal guarantee of cash assistance for poor children. He has attacked the Republicans for trying to eliminate that entitlement, and he has criticized Clinton for not defending it more forcefully.

The Senate Democratic leader, Tom Daschle of South Dakota, has offered an alternative bill that would keep welfare as an entitlement for poor families, but set a five-year limit on benefit payments.

A spokeswoman for Daschle, Ranit Schmelzer, said he would not let the issue fade away. "He would bring up his bill as an amendment to some other piece of legislation," she said. "We can't afford to let welfare reform die this year. That's not an acceptable alternative."

Besides their barbs at each other, both Dole and Gramm attacked Clinton on Saturday as not serious about overhauling the welfare system.

"We want to put a lid on welfare spending. But Bill Clinton says no," Dole declared. "We want welfare recipients to work when they can for their benefits, and in the private sector and not the Government-made work jobs. But Bill Clinton says no."

Gramm put it this way: "Last Wednesday, Bill Clinton said that our views were far right. But you know something — when we presented them to the American voters last November, they thought they weren't far right, they thought they were just right." The leading Senate proposal, he added, was "not worthy of the name Republican welfare bill."

PECOS: Whispers still say courthouse was built because Bunton wanted it

On. Nov. 10, 1981, Bunton signed a court order requiring any defendant apprehended in the sprawling Pecos Division to be taken to Pecos for an initial appearance.

This order included the Sierra Blanca checkpoint, which is only about 80 miles from El Paso, where a U.S. magistrate is located, and Hudspeth County cases. Hudspeth County borders El Paso.

So, for example, if the Border Patrol in Sierra Blanca arrested someone on a drug charge, the Drug Enforcement Agency agents in El Paso would have to pick the defendant up in Sierra Blanca, transport the defendant to Pecos and then return back to El Paso. A federal agent estimated this was about a 440-mile round trip.

In a Feb. 5, 1993, letter written by Bunton and distributed to a number of federal prosecutors, agents and magistrates, he writes: "I write this letter to you to explain how criminal matters will be handled in the future for these two (Midland-Odessa and Pecos) divisions.

"I want all criminal cases that occur in the Pecos Division to be filed in Pecos. ... This simply means that all Sierra Blanca ... Marfa, Alpine, and Marathon Checkpoint cases will be filed in Pecos. This will also include all Immigration, Customs, Border Patrol and DEA cases," the letter states.

Further down in the letter Bunton acknowledges the long distance, but says that Pecos has an adequate staff to handle the cases and, "We are going to have a new courthouse in Pecos, hopefully within the next two years."

Since Bunton's 1981 order making all Pecos Division cases go to Pecos, some controversy and rumblings have been made by federal agents affected by the order.

"The controversy occurred with the checkpoints in Sierra Blanca and the Hudspeth County checkpoint on 180 outside El Paso. Those two checkpoints caused people arrested in Presidio to be taken to Pecos," Furgeson said.

"The real problems were not where the case was going to be tried, but the initial appearance within 24 hours of arrest," he said. "Judge Bunton and I differed in opinion on what Rule 5 means."

"My interpretation is the nearest magistrate in location and Bunton said the nearest magistrate in the division," Furgeson said.

Rule 5 regards the initial appearance before the magistrate judge for a defendant.

"An officer making an arrest ... shall take the arrested person without unnecessary delay before the nearest available magistrate judge or, in the event that a federal magistrate judge is not reasonably available, before a state or local judicial officer," according to Rule 5 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"I TOLD EVERYONE I was going to change his order when I became chief judge here ... I talked with Bunton and he wanted to have the meeting to see what they (federal agents) thought about my change, they liked it," Furgeson said.

A meeting was conducted May 11 by Furgeson with federal agents across the division.

Bunton still disagrees with Furgeson's opinion.

"We basically agreed to disagree," Furgeson said.

"If the offense occurred in the Pecos division I had it brought to the Pecos division," Bunton said. "I still feel that way. People are entitled to a trial by their peers."

Then why does Bunton think the grumbling occurred regarding his rule?

"A lot of people have jobs and they want to make it as easy as they can — that's why they don't want to drive that far," Bunton said.

Furgeson signed a new order on May 15 to reflect his interpretation of Rule 5.

"It is therefore ordered that the order of Nov. 15, 1981, is withdrawn and no longer in effect. It is further ordered that persons apprehended in the Pecos Division, who are to be taken to the nearest available magistrate judge for an initial appearance, be taken to the closest magistrate judge in terms of distance in the Western District of Texas, without regard to whether such magistrate judge is located in the Pecos Division, El Paso Division or Midland-Odessa Division, as required by Rule 5 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure."

PEOPLE IN EL PASO feel they have been short-changed by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals' decision to build a new courthouse in Pecos. They believe El Paso is more deserving because of more criminal cases there.

They also have criticisms for Bunton's former order regarding the Pecos Division.

According to a March 2, 1995, editorial in the El Paso Times:

"Midland and Pecos, where Furgeson was transferred this week, together had 408 indictments last year. But those estimates have been artificially driven up by adding cases from Sierra Blanca just over the El Paso County line. Because of their proximity, these rightfully should have been brought to El Paso, not taken 114 miles away to Pecos."

"The 5th Circuit Judicial Council ... must question the undeniable waste of federal tax dollars in Pecos."

The editorial further claims the Pecos Division docket "has been inflated by the practice of taking prisoners from Sierra Blanca to be tried there."

El Pasoans complain that Furgeson should stay there, claiming he's needed more there because of the large number of federal drug and immigration cases.

"If the judicial council is truly concerned about an efficient court system, it should allow arrests made within the district to be brought before the nearest magistrate. Transporting people to Pecos or Midland doesn't make sense. It's a waste of money and time," the editorial said.

Furgeson agreed that El Paso is overburdened and said there is "no question a new courthouse and expanded facilities are needed in El Paso."

He said 40 percent of all cocaine in the U.S. comes in through El Paso and they need the resources there to deal with that. But, he said resources are scarce and all communities are without adequate coverage (in the West Texas sections of the Western District of Texas.)

Bunton agreed that El Paso has a larger docket than Pecos and said "the U.S. Attorney's office there has an increased docket and they may need a new courthouse. But it's different when you're talking about a mom and pop operation and Wal-Mart."

He said a courthouse in El Paso would cost millions more to build and maintain in El Paso than in Pecos.

"I think they probably do" need a new courthouse, Bunton said. "But, just because El Paso is bigger, the people in Pecos division should have right to more, space too."

WHY A NEW courthouse and why in Pecos?

"They need it," Bunton said.

The assistant U.S. district clerk for Pecos said her space is cramped with three people in a small office. One person doesn't even have a desk, but works at an end table.

"We're really suffering," Ms. White said.

The courtroom and federal offices occupy the second story of the U.S. Post Office. The court was built in 1935, she said.

In the clerk's office all the computers and electronics come from a single electrical outlet with cords dangling.

Steve Balog, a retired U.S. Marshal supervisor and now the courthouse security officer in Pecos, said there is not enough space at the current courthouse site for offices for probation, pretrial, the U.S. attorney, witness rooms or conference rooms.

The courtroom, which was completed in 1935, has cracked ceilings and bad acoustics, he said.

Bunton said the federal agencies in Pecos "have outgrown what used to be tried there ... even in the Marshal's office they are sitting in one another's laps."

"In that old courtroom, there are problems you can't see. The evaporative cooling system is so loud that when the cooler is on you can't hear, so you have to cut it off. Keep in mind this is in Pecos where it is hot," Bunton added.

Peggy McCracken, a writer for the Pecos Enterprise, who many call a major supporter of the new courthouse and of Bunton, said the federal courthouse staff doesn't all fit in the current facilities.

YET, WHISPERS STILL say the courthouse was built because Bunton wanted it built in Pecos because of his affection for the area, not because of necessity.

He will even admit he was the catalyst for the courthouse being built there.

"Somebody has to get it started ... I suppose I probably did call it," Bunton said.

"Judge Bunton got the courthouse," Ms. McCracken said matter-of-factly.

She and the Pecos community are pushing Congress to approve naming the building after Bunton.

Many federal court-watchers speculate Bunton wanted the courthouse built in Pecos to help fuel a weak economy there, an opinion he disputes.

"It is going to take more than a new courthouse to help the economy ... any time you build a new building it will benefit the local economy, but the people who approved the courthouse are not interested in that," Bunton said.

Ms. McCracken said she didn't believe the new building would help the economy because there are no new positions to be added to the staff there.

One federal authority, who didn't want to be identified, said Bunton is a "judicial activist and that is not what his role is supposed to be" adding "I'm afraid this man's reputation is going to be hurt by pushing for the construction of this courthouse which simply isn't needed."

Bunton blames the U.S. attorney's office for the Pecos Division's lack of case filings and the appearance that it is a dying docket.

Bunton said he hopes to lobby for a permanent assistant U.S. attorney to be located in Pecos. Currently, the three-person staff of Midland-Odessa handles all the Pecos cases in addition to the docket here.

"That's why I kept one-third of the criminal cases in Pecos, so I could have some input," Bunton said.

He criticizes the local assistants for not prosecuting cases in Pecos.

"It's up to the U.S. Attorney's office if there is a booming docket in Pecos or not ... they never cared about whether Pecos has necessary statistics.

"In El Paso, they prosecute 25 pound of marijuana cases and they're declining 200 pound cases in Pecos because they don't want to drive that far ... the ones here don't want to go down there," Bunton said.

Tom Beery, an assistant U.S. attorney stationed in Midland-Odessa, declined to respond to the allegations and referred comment to DeAtley.

"We are not shirking our prosecutorial responsibilities," DeAtley said in defense of his staff "I try to make the best use of the resources I can."

"The Midland assistants are more than willing to travel to Pecos and have done so," he added.

Despite his opinions regarding the prosecution, Bunton also has strong opinions on what Pecos deserves judicially.

"What Pecos needs is a loving, caring, sweet judge interested in the people in the Pecos Division. I think Furgeson fits that bill and I know I do. For the most part, they have been the stepchildren and nobody likes that. We all want to pull up to the table," Bunton said.

World in brief

■ Peace accord near in Chechen talks

GROZNY, Russia — A peace accord in Russia's seven-month war against Chechnya might be signed today, Russian and Chechen negotiators said Saturday after an all-day session at the bargaining table.

Negotiators had earlier said they might come up with an agreement on Saturday, but the non-stop session failed to resolve nagging differences on Chechnya's post-war status.

One member of the Chechen delegation, Akhmad Zakayev, angrily accused the Russian side of upsetting the talks by making new proposals at the last minute. The Russians denied it.

The talks resumed Saturday after the top Chechen negotiator, Usman Imayev, returned from meetings with field commanders and with the rebel republic's president, Dzhokhar Dudayev, in the Chechen highlands.

Imayev pronounced his consultations a success and said there were just a few "technicalities" to work out.

His optimism contrasted with speculation in the Russian media about divisions within rebel ranks and reports that influential field commanders such Shamil Basayev were unhappy with the talks.

Basayev lead the daring hostage raid on a southern Russian town last month that brought Moscow to the negotiating table. He has been quoted as saying he'll settle for nothing less than independence for Chechnya and a total Russian pullout.

Russian negotiator Vyacheslav Mikhailov suggested Saturday the two sides had agreed that Chechnya would remain in the Russian Federation, but with some degree of autonomy.

Tens of thousands of Russian troops poured into Chechnya in December to end the region's 3-year-old independence campaign.

■ Iran finds bodies of 2,000 killed in war

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran has discovered the bodies of 3,000 Iranian soldiers killed in the 1980-88 war with Iraq, Iranian media reported Saturday.

The reports, quoting the head of the Iranian missing-in-action committee, did not say when or where the bodies were found, or why they were not discovered earlier.

Feisal Bagherzadeh was quoted as saying that all the bodies had been identified and a funeral procession for 2,695 of them would be held Friday in Tehran.

A funeral procession for the other 305 dead will be held Wednesday in the southeastern city of Kerman, state-run radio said.

About 1 million soldiers and civilians died in the eight-year war. The Islamic Republic News Agency said the bodies of 20,000 missing soldiers had been found previously.

The report did not say how many Iranian troops are still missing.

Bagherzadeh said the bodies of several Iraqi soldiers were also found.

■ Police seize weapons parts of cult

TOKYO — Japanese police on Saturday raided facilities belonging to the cult accused of gassing Tokyo's subways, seized thousands of weapons parts and arrested 21 cult members.

Two AK-47 rifles were found as well as some 10,000 parts, enough to make about 1,000 more guns, news reports said. It was the largest case of illegal weapons production ever in Japan, the Kyodo News Service said.

Most of the cult's leaders and dozens of members have been arrested in the subway gassing and other crimes. The March 20 attack killed 12 people and sickened thousands.

A police official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said five cult leaders still sought in the subway gassing do not appear to have been among those taken into custody Saturday.

The weapons were seized at the Aum Shinri Kyo (Supreme Truth) cult's main compound near Mount Fuji, one of 18 facilities raided Saturday.

Latest survivor thought only five days had passed

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Only after her rescue Saturday from the rubble of a shopping mall did the young sales clerk learn she had been buried for 16 days.

Of all those astonished by her survival, no one was more amazed than Park Sung-Hyun herself who believed she had been trapped only five days.

Doctors still don't know how the 19-year-old survived, but the darkness that caused her to lose track of time may have helped by keeping her hopes alive.

Park was weak but stable Saturday after being pulled from a tiny pocket in the jumble of concrete slabs, a scratch on the leg her only visible injury.

"She said that she was thirsty, and she asked what today's date was," said Lee Yoo-mee, the nurse who initially treated Park. "When I told her the date, she replied that too many days had passed."

Park was the third survivor to be pulled this week from the remains of the five-story building, which collapsed June 29. Their survival against the odds has amazed rescuers and revived hope among those waiting for news of their loved ones.

"I thought I would be lucky to have her remains returned to me. But what I have here is a miracle," said her father, tears running down his wrinkled face.

Doctors have said that with enough water, those who escape initial injury could live up to 20 days. But Park told doctors she had nothing to drink.

One doctor speculated her body functions had slowed to the point that she was able to survive without water. Others said Park may have been semiconscious and could have drank rainwater but forgotten.

Her father said he did not allow himself to believe the person rescued was really his daughter until he got to the hospital. "Once I saw her, and checked for myself, then I could relax," he said.

"This is heaven answering my prayers," said her mother, Ko Soon-young. She had clasped her daughter's photograph to her heart every morning for the past two weeks, praying for her only daughter.

Doctors said Park should be able to eat thin gruel in a day. She's requesting ice cream, grape juice and shaved ice, her mother said.

Latest survivor Park Sung-hyun, right, talks with earlier survivor Yoo Ji-hwan, at the Sungnio hospital after she was rescued.

The collapse of the Sampoong Department Store — blamed on faulty construction — was South Korea's worst peacetime disaster. More bodies were recovered Saturday, raising the confirmed death toll to 316.

About 330 people remained missing, and the discovery of Park sent emergency workers back to the job of digging with renewed vigor.

Park, who sold children's clothing in the mall's first basement level, was found in a gap in the concrete barely large enough for her to lie down. Rescuers said they heard her moaning.

Park was the first person to be found alive since Tuesday, when another 19-year-old woman was rescued. A 21-year-old man was rescued last Sunday.

Frustrated relatives of those still missing have been demonstrating nearly every day to demand faster rescue work and more severe punishment for those responsible.

Two city officials have been arrested for allegedly taking bribes in exchange for overlooking changes in design and construction at the mall.

Four store executives were charged with negligence. Police said they knew hours before the collapse that the top floor was crumbling, but failed to warn anyone.

Crowds swell outside released dissident's home in Burma

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — The crowds of well-wishers outside the home of dissident leader Aung San Suu Kyi grew Saturday, even though word of her release hasn't appeared in Burma's state-run media.

To keep the swelling crowd from blocking traffic, police were posted for the first time outside the ramshackle house that was her prison for almost six years until Monday.

Mrs. Suu Kyi, 50, was visited by foreign diplomats, and she consoled the family of an activist who was jailed earlier this year for singing pro-democracy songs at the funeral of former Prime Minister U Nu.

In what has become a daily ritual, the 1991 Nobel Peace laureate came to the gate in the mid-afternoon to speak to the well-behaved crowd.

"Your presence shows the people are behind me," she told them. "I will never betray my country and my people. I am very busy, but I am working for my country and not myself."

"It is so!" the crowd replied, in a vivid demonstration of her almost legendary capacity to command the loyalty of the masses.

"Can you be disciplined?" she asked, and they shouted back: "Yes, we can!"

"Can you be courageous?" she asked, and they shouted back: "Yes, we can!"

"Can you be smart? If you are smart, we will reach our goal without any danger," she said.

"Yes, we can!" they replied.

Mrs. Suu Kyi's party won a general election in 1990, but the military refused to let it take power. Officers have said they will not transfer power to civilians until a new constitution has been drafted, but they have given no timetable. Selected political groups are working on a new charter, but opponents say the convention is a sham and want the document scrapped.

Since her release, Mrs. Suu Kyi has taken a non-confrontational stand toward the military authorities.

She has not said when she would make a major public appearance or whether she would attend the Martyrs Day ceremony Wednesday commemorating the assassination of the heroes of Burmese independence, including her father, Aung San. Disturbances are possible if she attends.

In an indirect official commentary on political developments, a recent series of essays in the state-owned New Light of Myanmar (Burma) newspaper has criticized groups opposed to the military as undemocratic.

Government hopes to revive 'worst' U.S. housing project

By Sharon Cohen
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Sue Sago's first days in public housing began with an omen: With the elevators broken, she had a heart-thumping climb up and down 11 flights of dark, urine-soaked stairs, towing her children, groceries and laundry.

She walked those stairs for six long months before repairs were made. But new problems surfaced.

Some nights, she shivered when the heat didn't work. Some days, she stuffed clothes under her door to prevent flooding from the spewing burst water pipes outside. Some weeks, she feared stray gunfire would hit her kids.

The Chicago Housing Authority, in Sue Sago's eyes, has always been a slumlord. For years, she has fought the agency, pressing for change. Now, the federal government has taken charge, and it says change is coming.

Calling it the "worst public housing in America," Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros recently announced a federal takeover of the CHA — the largest ever of its kind — and vowed to reform a mismanaged, scandal-tainted agency that has come to epitomize government fraud and failure.

But Ms. Sago, a 12-year veteran of the Henry Horner Homes who has seen plenty of politicians and heard plenty of promises, is not celebrating yet.

"THEY HAVE TO prove themselves first," says the 40-year-old mother of five. "They knew that CHA wasn't taking care of business properly. They should have stepped in a long time ago. You don't wait until everything is in ruins."

"If you gave me money to clean your house every day," she adds, "and you came in and your house still was dirty, wouldn't you stop paying me or find someone else?"

Both the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the city of Chicago have much at stake with the takeover: The agency, facing the budget ax, wants to prove its worth. The city, preparing for the 1996 Democratic National Convention, which will be held in the shadow of the Horner Homes, wants to look its best.

But the impact will be greatest on CHA residents. And they're wary.

As the CHA's new landlord, the federal government holds the keys to a crumbling kingdom.

Of 40,000 apartments, 58 percent are considered unfit to live in, with problems including rats, roaches, broken toilets and stoves, steadily running faucets, rusty plumbing and giant holes in the walls.

"We don't have enough janitors, engineers, plumbers or carpenters," says Mamie Bone, a 40-year Horner resident. "Nothing ever gets repaired."

AN AUDIT SHOWED one CHA tenant had no hot water in the kitchen for five months, another no working toilet for 10 weeks because simple parts were not in stock. Elevators, too, break frequently.

"The most dangerous transportation in the city of Chicago is the Cabrini Green elevator," says Ed Marciniak, a Loyola University urban affairs professor and public housing expert, referring to the notorious project.

About 90 percent of the CHA's 86,000 residents are black and unemployed. The city's public housing, according to one academic, accounts for 11 of America's 15 poorest neighborhoods. Average annual income: $4,000.

"Chicago is unique," explains Joseph Shuldiner, the top HUD public housing official dispatched to take over as CHA chairman. "You have racial concentration, poverty concentration, geographic concentration, a yucky stock and a nonfunctioning housing authority."

Cisneros' reform plans include better maintenance, demolition of high-rises, building smaller, less dense housing, and increased use of rent vouchers to help people move into integrated communities — an idea bound to meet resistance.

The program mirrors that proposed by Vincent Lane, the millionaire real-estate developer who recently resigned as CHA chairman. In seven years, his drug-and-gun searches of tenants' apartments captured headlines and his housing ideas won admirers up to the White House, but his management style stirred critics to claim he had allowed widespread corruption to flourish.

Lane dismisses the attacks as shortsighted, and says Chicago's public housing system is unmanageable and must be divided into small pieces.

"THE ONLY HOPE," he says, "is dismantling the agency."

HUD is now considering hiring a private management company to take the helm of public housing because the job may be too demanding and complex for one person.

Marciniak says HUD itself must cut its own mind-boggling red tape and even then, public housing needs more than a new boss.

"What we have done is concentrate poverty and misery," he says. "You can put in the bulbs and bring in the people to get rid of an army of roaches, but you still have the basic problem — you have a lot of incompetent families."

With that comes crime, sometimes shocking, such as last year's death of a 5-year-old dropped from a 14th-floor public housing window, allegedly by two adolescents.

CHA security costs have exploded from $8 million in 1989 to $74 million last year, mostly due to the creation of a 455-person police force. Both private and agency security guards also work at the projects.

Shuldiner calls the takeover public housing's last best hope.

"Everybody gets to put aside parochial interests and belly up to the table," he says. "Everybody says they want something better for these people. ... This is, in effect, put up or shut up time."

But will HUD succeed, even when its own internal auditor said a court-appointed receivership might work better?

"You've got one bureaucracy, instead of two. That's a step in the right direction," says Alexander Polikoff, the lead attorney on the case that found public housing was intentionally segregated.

HUD officials, facing budget cutters and proposals to eliminate the agency, say the nation's public housing system is on trial. But they cautionagainst quick turnarounds in a system that decayed over decades.

"WE OUGHT TO give them a chance," says Marciniak, the housing expert. "I don't think it could get worse and maybe, it might get better."

Florence Wright, a 20-year Horner resident, is skeptical.

"You get tired of them promising and not delivering," she says. "We're hoping this time they'll deliver. But it's a gamble."

Police arrest husband in mail bombing

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The husband of a woman who lost several fingers when a mail bomb exploded in her office was arrested Saturday and charged with the crime.

"A number of things, both statements and physical evidence, pointed to (Stephan) Bullis as the source of the bomb," said Assistant U.S. Attorney John Bennett.

Police refused to speculate on a motive or describe the relationship between Bullis and his wife, Tracy. They have been married for five years and have one child.

Monday's explosion forced the evacuation of about 300 employees from the headquarters of BTI, the long-distance telephone company where Mrs. Bullis works.

In addition to her hand injury, Mrs. Bullis, 35, suffered severe burns on both arms and superficial shrapnel wounds.

Anti-Chinese positions become more common now that Cold War is over

■ China, in turn, has shown defiance on host of issues, including arrest of prominent Chinese-American dissident.

By George Gedda
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Newt Gingrich has supported recognition of Taiwan. Jesse Helms wants to strip China of trade benefits. The House voted last week to send an ambassador to Tibet, which China considers part of its territory.

Staking out stridently anti-Chinese positions is becoming more common these days now that the anti-Soviet glue that used to bind Beijing and Washington together is no longer there.

The prior need to confront the Soviets produced a culture of caution in the two capitals, with both acting to ensure the relationship remained stable.

"There isn't that strategic convergence that we had when the Soviets were around," says Helmut Sonnenfeldt, of the Brookings Institution.

Treating Sino-American ties with disdain is not limited to members of Congress. President Clinton, not wanting to stray too far from the pro-Taiwan congressional consensus, reversed longstanding policy in May when he granted a visa to Taiwanese President Lee Teng-Hui to visit Cornell University, his alma mater.

The Chinese, in turn, have shown their defiance on a whole host of issues, ranging from the arrest of a prominent Chinese-American dissident to its suspected secret missile deals with Iran and Pakistan.

"At the moment, Sino-American relations are in a free fall," former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said Thursday.

Nancy Bernkopf Tucker, history professor at Georgetown University, says China is an inviting target for newly empowered congressional Republicans who enjoy spouting anti-communist rhetoric, making life uncomfortable for Clinton.

She believes anti-Americanism is back in style in Beijing as part of an ongoing leadership struggle. China's senior leader, Deng Xiaoping, 90, architect of China's economic reforms, has not been seen in public for well over a year, and his health is the subject of constant rumors.

"In the midst of a power struggle, it's hard to be seen as soft on anyone," said Tucker. Clinton administration officials are hopeful that the relationship will stabilize once the leadership question is resolved.

Meanwhile, the Chinese seem prepared to believe the worst about the United States. Several analysts said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., fed paranoia in Beijing by saying that the U.S. decision last week to normalize relation with Vietnam will help counter Chinese power in Asia.

The administration insists the decision was motivated by other factors, such an obtaining an accounting of American servicemen still missing from the Vietnam War.

In hopes of easing strains, the administration has appealed repeatedly for high-level talks with China. The next opportunity will occur when Secretary of State Warren Christopher will be in Brunei two weeks from now at the same time as Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Quichen. Qian has yet to reply to Christopher's invitation for a meeting.

From China's viewpoint, the biggest irritant was Clinton's decision to grant a visa to Taiwanese President Lee, defying Chinese efforts to isolate the leadership on what Beijing considers to be a renegade province.

Thomas Vasquiz cools down in Swann Fountain Saturday in Philadelphia. Another day of sweltering heat hit the region with most temperatures exceeding 100 degrees.

Heat wave's death toll rises; weather sparks storms

■ In Chicago, at least 54 people whose bodies were brought to medical examiner's office had died of heat-related causes.

Associated Press

The one-two punch of smothering heat and violent storms gripping the eastern half of the country took a deadly turn Saturday as the weather's toll rose to at least 91.

In Chicago, at least 54 people whose bodies were brought to the Cook County medical examiner's office on Saturday had died of heat-related causes. Widespread power outages overnight stilled fans and air conditioners in the 90-degree weather.

"We're calling this a weather-related disaster," said Mike Boehmer, an assistant administrator for the medical examiner. "This is something we've never seen before."

While a breath of slightly cooler air floated across the upper Midwest and into the Northeast, it touched off severe thunderstorms from the Plains through New England. Falling trees killed five people in New York state and lightning may have killed a Massachusetts woman.

One New York woman was killed when a white pine snapped in the wind and toppled onto her family's fold-out camper.

"It just folded the camper right up," said 17-year-old Lisa Cutler, a neighbor who heard sirens and ran out to see what was going on.

The heat was directly involved in five deaths in Milwaukee and may have contributed to 10 more, Milwaukee County medical examiner Jeffrey Jentzen said Saturday. The city had said Friday, when the high was 102, that heat was suspected in seven deaths. Other deaths over the past week included: 11 in Missouri, six in Chicago, two each in Kentucky and Iowa, and one each in Texas, Nebraska and Indiana.

In Philadelphia, where Saturday was the hottest day in 29 years with a high of 103, officials blamed two deaths on the heat, including that of one man found in his car.

"It's yichy outside," said 8-year-old Shannon Perry, pulling at her halter top unhappily on a Philadelphia street corner. "My clothes are all sticky and it's just yucky."

In Chicago, officials said most of the victims had suffered from heart problems, and heat stress contributed to the deaths.

"We're not accustomed to handling this type of disaster," Boehmer said. "With temperatures reaching 99 degrees today, that's not far off from yesterday's weather, and I would suspect that this could continue."

"Oh, it's hot, you can't sleep," said 94-year-old Inez Anderson, who lives in a Chicago senior citizens' complex where few apartments have air conditioning and a man in his 70s died of heat stroke in an upstairs hallway.

The Washington Monument was shut down for a third day because the interior temperature rose into the 90s.

The 94-degree temperature outside wasn't enough to keep President Clinton from venturing out in shorts, baseball cap and T-shirt for a late morning jog through downtown and along the Potomac River, and heading to the golf course later in the day.

A midday thunderstorm dropped the temperature at Milwaukee from 89 to 78, but the humidity stayed above 60 percent. The relief was more distinct with Saturday's readings in the 70s in western Nebraska.

Ahead of the easing temperatures, records fell: it hit 105 in Danbury, Conn.; 101 in Norfolk, Va.; 100 in Atlanta; and 102 in New York City's Central Park, where trees and grass offer some relief from the blistering, heat-reflecting urban canyons of concrete, brick and asphalt.

"We're playing Christmas songs, like 'Winter Wonderland,' to help beat the heat," said trumpeter David Gordon of the Bruce Edwards Quartet, playing jazz in the midday sun in New York City's midtown Duffy Square.

"It's sonic air conditioning," said guitarist Mark Hagan.

Main economic forecasters may be put in hands of private sector

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main economic forecasting gauge, often maligned but closely watched on Wall Street, is about to go private.

The Commerce Department is looking for a private company to take over its Index of Leading Economic Indicators and two companion barometers and publish the results each month.

The Clinton administration says this latest foray into privatization will save money and free some federal numbers-crunchers to pursue the more important task of refining other statistics.

Even private economists who applaud the idea warn there is a danger in having a profit-making company dispense a set of numbers with potential to move financial markets.

"You're the manufacturer of a number the market is going to trade on. It does raise some suspicions," said economist Maury Harris of PaineWebber Inc. He mentioned possible leaks to preferred customers before the figures are made public.

> 'Something needs to be done to the current index. It doesn't lead or indicate much.'
> — Sung Won Sohn, Norwest Corp.

The Commerce Department takes extraordinary steps to assure against premature disclosure. On the morning when the report is to be released, financial news reporters are locked in a room for a half-hour until the official announcement time.

Sung Won Sohn of Norwest Corp., a Minneapolis bank holding company, is one economist who thinks the government is making a serious mistake by relinquishing control.

"Something needs to be done to the current index. It doesn't lead or indicate much," he said. "But I'm concerned that turning it over to the private sector will damage its credibility."

Officials insist they can protect the integrity of the index when it is awarded to a private firm.

"We're not auctioning off a brand name. We're finding a steward in whom the public will have trust," said Everett Ehrlich, the under secretary of Commerce for economic affairs.

While the Commerce Department has been threatened with extinction itself by a budget-cutting, Republican-controlled Congress, the decision to farm out the index was made earlier and appears unrelated. The department is engaged in a thorough overhaul of its economic record-keeping and putting the index into private hands is just a small step.

The agency hopes to free about $450,000 to devote to other chores. Unlike other government reports, the index is a compilation of published statistics and is not primary data.

Ehrlich said perhaps a half-dozen statisticians will have more time to measure the nation's economic output, increasingly difficult in an age of technological innovation and sophisticated services.

In Ehrlich's words, rather than count up haircuts, coal production and cereal output, the government's shopping cart now contains financial services, electronic devices and medical equipment. "It's progressively harder to measure," he said.

Numerous private companies are bidding to take over the Index of Leading Economic Indicators. The government declined to say how many or what firms are interested.

The application deadline is July 28 and the Commerce Department plans to select a winner by Labor Day.

First week of Susan Smith trial drags; heat sends media home

UNION, S.C. (AP) — A media horde that rushed this mill town for the trial of confessed child-killer Susan Smith has left even faster, wilted by 100-degree heat and tedious jury selection.

More than 80 news organizations that surrounded the courthouse at the beginning had by week's end dwindled to but three television cameras and about 20 reporters, hardly a media spectacle.

"This is definitely no O.J.," one cameraman muttered.

Ms. Smith, 23, faces two death-penalty murder charges in the drownings of her sons, 3-year-old Michael and 14-month-old Alex. For more than a week last fall, she tearfully told the nation how a carjacker had abducted her boys, but on Nov. 3 confessed to sending them and her car to the bottom of a lake.

No longer silent and sullen in court, Ms. Smith whispered with her lawyers and kept notes as potential jurors explained their feelings on the death penalty. At week's end, she was shaking hands and smiling.

But even Ms. Smith's increased activity couldn't keep some in court interested. By the fourth day of jury selection, the bailiff was asleep and Ms. Smith's ex-husband David was nodding off as lawyers sought to find a 12-member jury and six alternates.

In six days, 12 jurors were selected: five white men, four black men, two white women and a black woman. The final two panelists and two alternates were seated on Saturday. Once the remaining four alternates are chosen, the trial could begin sometime this week.

In this town of 10,000, it proved hard finding many who had no links to the defendant. Circuit Judge William Howard was forced to dismiss 16 panelists who said they could not sentence her to death.

"I feel it's God's decision," one woman said. "I think it would make me the same person as the murderer."

Some who weren't dismissed didn't want to serve, either.

Clinton, Republicans spar over regulatory reform

■ President says administration has worked aggressively to reduce unnecessary government regulations, but GOP wants to go too far.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Squabbling with Republicans over how best to cut government red tape, President Clinton accused the GOP-controlled Congress on Saturday of advancing an extreme proposal that would endanger public health.

Republicans countered that Clinton and other critics were spinning false "doomsday scenarios" to blunt a well-reasoned drive to rein in a government bureaucracy run amok.

Clinton, in his weekly radio address, said his administration had worked aggressively to reduce unnecessary government regulations, but that Republicans wanted to go too far.

Painting a dire picture of potential death and injury, Clinton said the regulatory reform bill being pushed by the Republicans "poses a real danger to the health and safety of our families."

"It will force government agencies to jump through all kinds of hoops, waste time, risk lives whenever the agency acts to protect people's health and safety," Clinton said. "It will slow down, tangle up and seriously hinder our ability to look out for the welfare of American families."

At issue is a proposal that could come up for a final vote in the Senate this week affecting federal regulations covering everything from drinking water to commuter airlines.

The legislation would require federal regulators to compare costs of rules and standards against their health, safety and environmental benefits. It also would require new reviews on comparative risks and make it easier for businesses to challenge new regulations.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, attending a Republican National Committee meeting in Philadelphia, said Clinton was using "scare tactics" to frighten the American people.

"We believe in protecting the health and safety of Americans," Dole said. "Nothing changes in the law on that regard. But you wouldn't believe that if you heard the president."

In the Republican response to Clinton's radio address, Sen. William Roth of Delaware accused opponents of creating false "doomsday scenarios" about the potential impact of the legislation.

"What we are trying to do is simple: We want to inject some common sense into a bureaucratic process run amok," Roth said.

Roth insisted the GOP bill "distinguishes between the good, the bad and the ugly regulations. We want to keep the good. It's the bad and the ugly that we want to reform."

New ballot method leads to 1st minority victories in Texas town

By Jean Pagel
Associated Press

ROTAN — Something unprecedented happened the last time West Texans here turned out to vote.

Two Hispanic candidates won seats on the City Council. Another Hispanic got elected to the school board.

Before May 6 — the day cumulative voting made its debut in Rotan — minorities had never won anything at the polls.

So it's no surprise, really, that this one-stoplight town harbors some hostility over a ballot method that critics label unfair and bewildering.

"This country was founded on one vote for every person. I don't see no sense in changing it, messing it up," said barber John Price on Main Street, a tractor-traveled strip of shops.

He said his haircut customers had a lot to say about cumulative voting and the lawsuits that prompted its adoption in Rotan.

"Most all the people thought it sort of stunk," Price said.

Twenty-seven Texas jurisdictions — including the city of Rotan and Rotan Independent School District — have taken up cumulative voting since 1991.

It works like this: If five seats are open, for example, voters get five votes they may spread around or "plump" upon a single candidate. Its point is to concentrate the voting power of minorities.

"It did what it was supposed to do. It worked," said Ruben Garza, president of the Fisher County chapter of the League of United Latin American Citizens.

Garza said minority candidates didn't stand a chance without cumulative voting, even though blacks and Hispanics make up 36 percent of Rotan's 1,913 residents.

LULAC had sued the city and school district in 1994 over their at-large formats that LULAC said diluted the minority voice. Cumulative voting offered a way to settle the lawsuits.

"Everybody was watching," said Garza, who had run unsuccessfully several times himself. "Was it going to make a difference, or will it be the same thing?"

An education effort took hold in Rotan, about 60 miles northwest of Abilene, as city officials called a town meeting to explain the new process.

LULAC targeted Hispanics with voter-registration drives, radio ads and rides to the polls on Election Day. The result: three minorities elected.

Observers say cumulative voting won't pay off like that without similar mobilization and "plumping" of ballots.

"Cumulative voting does not amount to a 'minority set-aside program,'" sociologist Bob Brischetto wrote in a study he compiled of last month's elections in 16 jurisdictions, most of them in West Texas.

"There are no guaranteed minority positions; a group must earn them by organizing," he wrote.

In nine of the 16 jurisdictions, minority candidates won. In the seven where they lost, the minority voters didn't organize.

Brischetto conducted his study with help from the Hispanic Research Center at the University of Texas at San Antonio. Pollsters interviewed 3,615 voters to see what they thought of cumulative voting.

His findings pointed to a pattern of racial polarization.

Black and Hispanic voters overwhelmingly agreed that the method was fair; some whites disagreed. Most voters seemed to understand the concept.

Rolando Rios, the San Antonio attorney who files voting-rights lawsuits for LULAC, described cumulative voting as a way to democratically insert minority participation into majority rule.

"Every person is treated exactly the same, so how can it be a violation" of one man, one vote, Rios asked.

"It's a new idea," he said. "Whenever something is new, people get all nervous about it. But it's really very fair."

Consider these sketches from cumulative-voting sites May 6:

■ Friona city manager Paula Wilson said numerous confused voters spoiled their ballots. Hispanics accounted for only 8.2 percent of the Panhandle town's voters, although they make up 51 percent of the population. The only Hispanic candidate for city council didn't win.

"The majority of the Hispanic people are not unhappy with the government and the way it's being run," Ms. Wilson explained.

■ In Earth, another Panhandle town where Hispanics make up 51 percent of the population, two Hispanics lost their bids for city council. City Secretary Noel Pittman said voter turnout among Hispanic voters was extremely low, despite cumulative voting. "It wasn't an issue, just not an issue at all," she said.

■ Veloria Nanze became the first black elected to the board of East Texas' Atlanta Independent School District. Brischetto's study found that fewer than 3 percent of whites cast even one of their votes for her; but 94 percent of all votes cast by blacks went in her favor.

"The people here were ready for a change," Ms. Nanze said.

White House girds for summer in hot seat

By John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With the gavel comes the power to set the agenda, so it follows that Republicans are eager to explore two episodes the Clinton White House would just as soon forget: Waco and Whitewater.

For years, it has been Republicans who cried foul as Democrats called congressional hearings on Reagan and Bush administration controversies, large and small, looking to embarrass the White House and perhaps advance their own legislative agenda.

So Democrats, from the president to his uneasy allies in Congress, have little standing to protest. Still, from their perspective, Waco and Whitewater are hardly welcome topics for midsummer political dramas.

In separate hearings this week, senior Clinton aides will be summoned to detail — and defend — their actions at two tragic junctures for the administration a few months apart in 1993: the deadly raid on the Branch Davidian complex in Waco, Texas, and the suicide of deputy White House counsel Vincent Foster.

A special Senate committee opens hearings Tuesday on a dicey topic of the Whitewater investigation — whether White House aides tampered with files in Foster's office that dealt with the first family's controversial investment in an Arkansas real estate development.

The Waco hearings open a day later in the House, with Republicans anxious to know just how Attorney General Janet Reno, then fresh on the job, decided to authorize the April raid — and the use of a combustible tear gas — that left some 80 members of the cult dead.

In both forums, Republicans will be looking to embarrass the administration, hoping to expose misjudgments in the Waco raid and ethical lapses the night of Foster's death.

Rep. Bill Zeliff of New Hampshire, co-chairman of the Waco hearings, says he believes Reno relied on superiors when she authorized the Waco raid and got the military to help. Many Republicans consider Waco a stunning abuse of power by overzealous federal authorities who had other options to serve warrants on Branch Davidian leader David Koresh.

Zeliff suggests those involved in the decision-making "could include the president," leaving little doubt where his inquiries will focus. In a replay of hearings past, with only the parties of the players reversed, Republicans have demanded broad access to records the White House insists are protected by presidential privilege.

As for Whitewater, Banking Committee Chairman Alfonse D'Amato says he wants to determine whether documents from Foster's office were "mishandled, misplaced or destroyed" by senior White House aides who entered the office the night of the suicide.

That question was off limits when the Democratic Congress explored Whitewater, briefly, last year. The Waco raid, too, was the subject of hearings by the Democratic Congress and a 500-page Treasury report detailing numerous mistakes.

But there's no double jeopardy when it comes to congressional hearings and there has never been any doubt that Republicans would exercise their newfound authority. In doing so, they have clearly put the administration on the defensive. But not without risk.

If they unearth no major new information in the Whitewater case, the Clinton camp will have an opening to cast the hearings as little more than a political vendetta, an attempt to smear a president heading into an election. At considerable expense.

"I don't think the taxpayers are going to get $1 million worth of information for their money," predicts one Democratic member of the Whitewater committee, Paul Simon of Illinois.

The potential perils for Republicans are greater in the Waco hearings.

As the GOP tries to discredit overeager law enforcement, especially by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, it will be playing to the strong anti-government sentiment that helped bring Republicans to power last November, particularly in the South and West.

The administration is equally determined, while admitting myriad mistakes were made at Waco, to show it was taking a tough line against a strange cult that was stockpiling deadly weapons — and that Republicans are trying to curry favor with mysterious militias and the National Rifle Association.

Whatever mistakes the government made, "the real villain at Waco was David Koresh," Treasury Undersecretary Ronald Noble argues.

The hearings, he lamented, are likely to lead to more "vicious, unfair and destructive rhetoric" aimed at law enforcement officials. "It is not only motivated by the lowest form of politics, but it deeply impairs the morale of the agents on the line," Noble said.

Republicans insist otherwise, that the goal of Waco and Whitewater hearings is to explore any mistakes, and to make sure they are corrected — and those responsible punished.

Such oversight is the right and responsibility of any Congress, all partisanship aside. The test is whether Republicans stay on the right side of the fine line between watchdog and witch hunt.

Pentagon records may uncover ultimate fate of Vietnam MIAs

By James Prichard
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — For nearly 27 years, Army Staff Sgt. Dallas Pridemore's disappearance has aggrieved his loved ones and puzzled the Pentagon.

"It would be nice to kind of know what actually happened," his brother, the Rev. David Pridemore, said from his home in Marietta, Ga.

Now, new information uncovered in a military investigation may shed some light on the fate of the man who vanished in Vietnam at age 27.

Dallas Pridemore is one of 2,202 military personnel the U.S. government lists as missing in action from the war. He is one of 55 MIAs who was known to be alive in Vietnam when he vanished. The Pentagon, which released the short list this week, calls them "discrepancy cases."

The Green Beret's family knew almost nothing about his disappearance until six months ago, when they heard from an investigator for the Pentagon's Joint Task Force-Full Accounting.

The Honolulu-based task force tries to locate MIAs or their remains in southeastern Asia. It has never found a living MIA.

"We don't suspect any Americans are alive and being held against their will in southeast Asia, but we can't rule out the possibility," Army Lt. Col. David Fredrikson, task force spokesman, said by telephone Thursday.

He refused to discuss the case further.

David Pridemore said the family was told his brother and three or four other American soldiers went to the village of Cu Thien Thiet in the Gia Dinh province of South Vietnam on Sept. 9, 1968. He may have gone to see a Vietnamese woman he was dating.

The woman or her father — or perhaps both — were involved in the drug trade or some other illicit activity. Pridemore witnessed something he shouldn't have, and he and the father were taken out of town and killed.

The task force is trying to learn what the other soldiers know about the disappearance.

Pridemore's relatives often think about him, but they are convinced he is dead. They have little contact with private MIA groups that research the disappearances.

"I used to think that he still could be alive," said his sister, Hettie Cooke, 49, of Atlantic City, N.J. "Now, in my heart, I don't."

His brother, 46, pastor of Fellowship Bible Church in Roswell, Ga., got a jolt in 1986 when Life magazine did a story on 25 MIAs the Pentagon believed were still alive. One of them was his brother.

"It blew my mind," he said.

He contacted the magazine, which said it got its information from Pentagon records. He tried to find out more from the military but got nowhere.

Fredrikson said he wasn't aware of the article.

Dallas Pridemore, an East Liverpool native, joined the Army in 1959, when he finished high school. He served as a computer analyst at the Pentagon for four years, getting married and divorced during that time.

He worked briefly in business, but his failed marriage ate at him, his brother said, and he sought a more risky path.

He re-enlisted, this time as a Green Beret. He was assigned to long-range reconnaissance, in which a small group of specially trained soldiers go ahead to scout the enemy.

Then the risky path took him into oblivion.

His mother, Opal, took the news the hardest. For years, she sat in front of her television set each night, watching the news from Vietnam and hoping for a glimpse of her son.

"All she thought about was my brother," David Pridemore said.

She grew more depressed and ill. In 1976, at age 52, she died of a heart attack. Pridemore's father, Ralph, died in 1983.

David Pridemore has created a shrine for his brother on a wall in his study. There, military photographs hang with several framed medals, including a Purple Heart and a Silver Star.

The clergyman feels he owes his brother.

When Dallas Pridemore was declared missing, that meant David was his family's sole surviving son, and therefore ineligible for the draft.

"It's almost like a sacrifice for me," he said softly, emphasizing the word "me."

Abundance of ozone-destroying chemical decreases, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the manmade chemicals linked to erosion of the ozone layer around the Earth is decreasing in abundance in the atmosphere, suggesting that an international agreement limiting the chemical is working, researchers reported Friday.

A study published in the journal Science said that measurements at five ground monitoring stations around the Earth show about a 2 percent annual decline in methyl chloroform since 1991.

Methyl chloroform is an industrial chemical that is regulated by the 1987 Montreal Protocol, an agreement by most of the world's industrial nations to phase out production and use of chlorofluorocarbons, or CFCs. There are chlorine-based chemicals that are thought to erode the ozone layer.

Researchers said that methyl chloroform is the first of the Montreal Protocol chemicals to show an actual reduction in atmospheric concentration. The other chemicals, which are much more abundant, have stopped increasing, but have not shown an actual decline. The other chemicals also take much longer to break down in the atmosphere than methyl chloroform.

Ozone is a natural barrier against ultraviolet, or UV, radiation from the sun. UV radiation is harmful to many plants and animals and has been shown to cause skin cancer.

The new study was by researchers at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Scripps Institution of Oceanography, Georgia Institute of Technology in the United States, and at the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organization in Australia and the University of Bristol in Britain.

They analyzed measurements taken four to 12 times daily since 1978 by instruments placed in Tasmania, Oregon, Samoa and at two places in Ireland.

The measurements showed that methyl chloroform was increasing at the rate of about 4.5 percent per year until the middle of 1990 when the chemical concentration started declining.

"The observed decreases began in early 1991 in the Northern Hemisphere and in mid-1992 in the Southern Hemisphere," the study reports.

An analysis of the study by A.R. Ravishankara and D.L. Albritton of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said it shows the international agreement is working.

"The first message from these findings is clear: Compliance with the Montreal Protocol will decrease the amount of chlorine-containing (gas) species in the atmosphere," Ravishankara and Albritton write in Science.

Law enforcement agencies unite to crack down on violent crimes

N.Y. Times News Service

BOSTON — When police officers stopped a car for running a red light on Blue Hill Avenue in Roxbury in May last year, they peered into the back seat to see Randall Beldo slip a .22-caliber gun out of his waist and drop it on the seat.

Officers arrested him and called in federal authorities.

Instead of facing a routine gun possession charge in state court, Beldo was indicted in federal court as an Armed Career Criminal, convicted and sentenced to 15 years in a federal prison far away from his Dorchester home. He had seven prior convictions for violent offenses.

The case is an example of local and federal law enforcement agencies joining forces to bring the punitive weight of federal statutes to help clear city streets of gun-toting youths.

"It's a change in approach and philosophy," said Boston-based US Attorney Donald K. Stern, whose staff members shuffle through police reports of shootings, ride around in cruisers and interview witnesses to crimes as they look into cases involving firearms.

The strategy is part of the Anti-Violent Crime Initiative, a program launched by Attorney General Janet Reno that draws on federal resources to prosecute street crime.

Long known for trying La Cosa Nostra and other high-profile cases, federal prosecutors now are also building cases from the street level to catch the chronic criminal who uses guns.

The program draws on Stern's office, the legal resources of Suffolk District Attorney Ralph C. Martin 2d, the investigative tools of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, and the street savvy of the Boston Police Department's Youth Violence Strike Force.

As a result of the progam, there was the March indictment of Jose V. Andrade of Dorchester, a college student who allegedly carried guns from Mississippi. And there was the 1994 conviction of James Berger of Roxbury, who received a 10-year sentence for firing a gun in a Mission Hill 1993 shooting that injured a 5-year-old boy.

"It's a marriage that has worked," said Terence McArdle, special agent in charge of the ATF's New England office.

"Every time they prosecute a career criminal you're taking off the streets and individual who is responsible for multiple crimes every day. The impact is just tremendous."

The groups have been working together for more than a year, sharing information and expertise to nab criminals, particularly repeat offenders linked to many crimes.

"There was a time that whenever there was a shooting, it was a rare case that I didn't personally know or know about the players," said Ralph Boyd, an assistant US attorney who specializes in gun cases.

Much like homicide detectives and patrol officers, Boyd scours some of Boston's roughest neighborhoods and knocks on doors searching for clues in even minor shootings.

Prosecutors use the Armed Career Criminal statute which imposes the 15-year mandatory sentence on gun-toting felons, and another statute that makes it a crime for anyone previously convicted of a felony to carry a firearm.

Another federal statute used against gun traffickers prohibits anyone from transferring or selling a gun without a license.

A string of suspects, many of them jaded and unimpressed by the state court system, have been shocked to find their cases moving through federal court, where the sentences are longer and judges can devote their attention to the case unburdened by the massive caseload facing many state courts, court observers said.

Since Massachusetts has no federal prison, people convicted on federal charges usually serve their time in an outside prison.

Fear of a long federal sentence may also prompt some suspects to quickly plead guilty to state charges to avoid prosecution in federal court, Boyd said.

"A lot of these kids live for the moment," said Sgt. Paul Joyce, who heads the Youth Violence Strike Force.

"They don't realize what's happening until after they're in the courtroom and STORY IN when they find out they're going to Kansas for 10 years. That's when it hits them."

Joyce said his officers, among the most experienced in the Boston Police Department, have been given a morale boost since the federal agencies stepped in.

The partnership has made some veterans criminals pause, Boyd said. All of a sudden, attorneys and suspects must familiarize themselves with a new body of statutes and strategies.

"These kids don't like to see us working together because that makes it seem like we really have our act together," Joyce said, adding that prosecutors are now coming into cases at the early stages to help police mount the strongest prosecution.

Nation in brief

■ Interstate pileup kills four, injures 23

MOSS POINT, Miss. — Four people died and 23 were injured Saturday in a 30-car pileup that authorities blamed on the rain-slicked road.

"One vehicle lost control. Cars started piling up after that," said police Officer Jim Roe.

A heavy downpour preceded the crash that left traffic backed up for about three hours on Interstate 10, the east-west artery along the Gulf Coast.

■ Car plows into brewery tourists; 12 hurt

GOLDEN, Colo. — A car plowed into a line of tourists waiting to visit the Coors Brewery on Saturday and injured 12 people, authorities said.

The driver had apparently blacked out, police Sgt. Bob Tortora said.

Tour guide Debbie Shafer said she was walking across the parking lot when she heard the commotion and ran to help a fellow guide: "She told me, 'Debbie, she ran right over me. She ran right over me.' There were track marks on her leg."

Witnesses said the compact car struck people waiting for a tour bus, bounced off a wall, then continued around a drive and back onto the street.

The driver was among six people hospitalized in fair condition. Two were in serious condition, both with broken legs. The others were treated and released.

■ Canadian jet makes emergency landing

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — A plane made an emergency landing Saturday after a warning light signaled a possible fire in the cargo hold. Three people received minor injuries as passengers scrambled to get out.

"There was no chivalry," said Norma Sautman of Hollywood, Fla. "This is a life-and-death situation. People were anxious to get out."

The pilot of Canadian Airlines Flight 295 to Toronto reported a fire on the Boeing 737 shortly after takeoff from Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport with 90 passengers and crew aboard, officials said.

There were conflicting reports of whether there actually was a fire, or even smoke.

"There was smoke in the cargo area," said Kathleen Bergen, spokeswoman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta.

■ Rodney King goes free on bail after arrest

ALHAMBRA, Calif. — Rodney King was freed on bail Saturday, a day after he was arrested for investigation of assault and domestic violence when his car knocked a woman down.

When police learned that the suspect was King, they called in a sheriff's video crew to document the arrest.

"Hopefully, this time it will be used to our benefit," said Deputy Angie Prewett of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department.

The video is evidence and won't be released to the media, police Lt. Robert Panza said.

The couple had been sitting in the car arguing on Friday when the woman got out, then reached back in for her purse. As she did, the car sped away, knocking her to the ground, police said. She was treated for cuts.

Prosecutors don't have to tell whole truth

By Deborah Hastings
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Neighbors called by the prosecution heard the yowling of a dead woman's dog begin at 10:15 p.m. Neighbors called by the defense say the canine commotion didn't start until 10:35 p.m.

That time difference could be enough to clear O.J. Simpson of murder. The neighbors testifying for Simpson spoke to police long before his murder trial began six months ago.

So if prosecutors are indeed committed to a search for truth rather than a rush to judgment, aren't they obliged to present all versions of the events?

For instance, why didn't they subpoena a young couple out on a blind date? Testifying for the defense, the two said they strolled past Nicole Brown Simpson's condo 10 minutes after the prosecution's moment of murder and didn't notice anything unusual.

And why didn't they call the neighbor who said he heard angry voices and a gate slam and saw a white car similar to Simpson's Bronco speed away from the murder scene?

Ethically and legally, prosecutors are not obligated to present such testimony, although they do have to disclose all evidence to the defense, a process known as discovery.

But some legal experts are questioning prosecutors' judgment in selecting only witnesses who corroborate the state's timeline for murder.

"All of these independent witnesses are talking about roughly the same period of time," Loyola Law School professor Stan Goldman said Thursday. "I don't think the prosecution should have hidden them. I wonder what the jurors are going to think about these witnesses when they deliberate. Why did they hide them?"

Because there are no witnesses to the knife murders of Simpson's ex-wife and her friend Ronald Goldman, prosecutors steadfastly point to the wails of Ms. Simpson's Akita, which echoed through her Brentwood neighborhood, as an alarm to murder.

Prosecutors Christopher Darden and Marcia Clark erred in "being so overly wedded to (their) timeline that they didn't call witnesses who didn't fit," Goldman said.

The time of the murders is crucial. Simpson, who lives less than five minutes from the murder scene, stepped into an airport-bound limousine at his home at 11:01 p.m. the night of the slayings.

The prosecution claims thumps heard by Simpson house guest Brian "Kato" Kaelin outside his room at 10:45 p.m. were made by Simpson as he returned to his estate and was looking for a place to ditch a bloody glove.

The defense claims the murders occurred later than 10:15 p.m. and could not have been committed by Simpson because he was on his way to the airport for a flight to Chicago.

Various prosecution witnesses who lived near Ms. Simpson testified they heard her dog at 10:15 p.m. This past week, the young couple, Robert Heidstra, and three women — a neighbor, her friend and a woman leaving a party in the area — testified for the defense that it must have been later.

Heidstra said he was walking his dogs when he heard two other dogs "barking like crazy." Five minutes later, at about 10:40 p.m., Heidstra said, he heard a young man shout, "Hey! Hey! Hey!"

Neighbor Denise Pilnak said she heard nothing when she was outside her home at 10:21 p.m. but heard a dog start barking at 10:35 p.m.

Danny Mandel and Ellen Aaronson, ending a blind date, Francesca Harman, leaving a party in the neighborhood, and Judy Telander, leaving Pilnak's home, all said they saw and heard nothing when they walked or drove by Ms. Simpson's home between 10:20 and 10:25 p.m.

Heidstra also dropped another bombshell. He saw a white sport utility vehicle resembling Simpson's Bronco speeding from the scene right after the shouts.

Goldman speculated that prosecutors didn't call Heidstra because he didn't bolster their timeline. Heidstra also acknowledged under cross-examination by Darden that he spoke — jokingly — about making money off the case.

Prosecutors are not obligated to call witnesses whose testimony could undermine their case. However in this case, some analysts say, it's possible the failure to call did the undermining.

Attorney Barry Tarlow, a former federal prosecutor, said prosecutors "fought a battle (they) did not need to fight. When the defense started putting on witnesses who put it in the 10:30 area, that still gives Mr. Simpson plenty of time to get back" home.

Jury selection

Attorneys in the case of Levy Lee Edmondson, 17, of Big Spring will continue to question potential jurors in this second week of jury selection for the capital murder trial.

Edmondson faces a possible death sentence in the December 1994 shooting death of Texas Department of Public Safety Trooper Troy Hogue.

Beginning with more than 400 people originally summoned for jury duty, attorneys in the case have reduced the pool to less than 50 people. Twelve jurors and two alternates likely will be selected this week since 118th District Judge Bob Moore has told both sides in the case to move faster in the selection process.

Steep ramp prompts parents' protest

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Accessing Midland College's Chaparral Center during a May rain storm put a damper on graduation rehearsal exercises for five disabled high school students.

"We went in the main entrance with everybody else and saw nothing but stairs to get down to the lower floor," said Lydia Frescaz.

"We found out we had to go back outside into the rain and down a steep ramp designed for delivery trucks. Everybody got soaked and some of these kids almost fell out of their wheelchairs trying to get down the slope."

Ms. Frescaz said she struggled down the wet ramp to get her son, Lee, into Chap Center. Lee has needed a wheelchair for mobility since age 2, after a bout with spinal meningitis left him physically handicapped.

Ms. Frescaz later heard an elderly man in a wheelchair say that attending the annual Lions Club Pancake breakfast was always a frustration because he would have to send a person into the Chap Center to find someone to open the garage door at the end of the ramp.

She decided it was time to voice her concern to Midland College administrators.

"It was too late to give my son a better graduation experience, but I thought about all the people who would come after him," Ms. Frescaz said. "Anyone can become disabled at any time. Just look at actor Christopher Reeve (who was recently injured in a riding accident). Lee was walking and talking and was a beautiful boy before he got sick. People who are disabled deserve better. They didn't ask for this (their condition)."

Record-breaking crowds enjoy 8th Menudo cook-off

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Thousands of people from West Texas and New Mexico flocked to the Twin Cities Speedway for live Tejano music, Mexican-style food and other entertainment at the eighth annual Mex-Tex Menudo Cook Off.

Friday's crowd dwarfed last year's record-breaking attendance and Saturday's cook-off goers appeared to number at least as high as last year's 12,000, according to members of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce which sponsors the event.

During the three-day cook-off, a profusion of top names in Southwestern music will take the stage. Today's players include some local talent as well, said Lydia Torres, who serves on the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce's board of directors.

On Friday, country star Rick Trevino kicked off the festival. Saturday's entertainment line-up consisted of Juan P. Moreno, Stephanie, Elsa Garcia, Project VI, Los Palominos, La Fiebre, Shelly Lares, Culturas and FAMA. And on Sunday, Albert Zamora, Elida Y Avante and La Diferenzia will take to the stage. A tribute to the late Tejano star Selena is also slated for today.

Participants enjoyed the new "huge" dance floor and several new rides and exhibits, Ms. Torres pointed out.

These new additions include private individuals with such things as batting cages that travel to various events. "It's good to see that entrepreneurial spirit at work," Ms. Torres said.

This year's festival — naturally — included cook-off contests for the best menudo, fajitas and chili on Saturday. Although there were a record 44 cooking teams competing — organizers expect the number of cooks to continue to grow — the festival seems to have almost outgrown the cook-off itself.

Now that the event has grown to such proportions, chamber members are hard pressed to keep up with the logistics of managing such a festival. "It's bigger than all of us," Ms. Torres said of the cook-off's success.

Another new addition to the festival includes the "Coca-Cola Road Trip," a 20-ton tractor trailer that unfolds into a 40,000-square foot entertainment complex featuring a performance stage, a

All-star designer wins school's official T-shirt contest

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A shining star herself, Brandy Ward encourages others to shine with her through her design for the Sam Houston Elementary School official T-shirt for the 1995-96 school year.

Brandy, who will be a fifth-grader at Sam Houston, beat out 47 other students with her entry that features a tic-tac-toe design, stars and the statement "We are all stars at Sam Houston Elementary School."

The design is done in the school's colors — blue, yellow and white.

Melissa Naylor, a PTA representative for the elementary school, said Sam Houston was the first school in the Midland Independent School District to allow its students to design the school's T-shirt.

"Normally, teachers will pick an artist or design they want," Ms. Naylor said. "This year, it was decided that the students should come up with the design."

The 10-year-old's winning design was chosen before school ended and will be used on T-shirts during the upcoming school year.

"We are all stars at Sam Houston because we learn so much," said Brandy, explaining how she came up with her design. "And my teacher, Mr. (Bruce) Anderson, had on a shirt with lots of neat lines on it the day they passed out the stuff about the contest. So, that's why I put the tic-tac-toe on it."

Brandy said she began sketching out her design on the piece of paper that had the contest information on it.

Brandy, a budding artist, has also won a coloring contest sponsored by Blockbuster Video and designed the winning poster in her age group two years ago in the Midland Fire Department's annual Fire Safety poster contest.

"I will probably be a sketch artist when I grow up," she said. "I'll draw lots of horses because I like horses."

Brandy's mom, Christine, said she was glad Sam Houston allowed its students to design their own T-shirts and she hoped Greathouse Elementary School — where her other daughter

Use vacation excuse to get out of office predicament

Ott

There was a time when coming off a week-long vacation caused great personal trauma, especially when the person in question was required to return to his job.

After all, there would be mounds of paperwork awaiting him. The boss would be screaming for immediate results to problems the employee didn't even know existed. And, worse, the telephone would be ringing off the hook with angry customers demanding quick answers to impossible questions.

It was enough to make any sane person swear to never — EVER — take any more days off. The misery wouldn't justify the relaxation.

Now all of that has changed.

Suddenly there is a solution to the ugly predicament and, believe it or not, it involves — get this — telling the truth. Yes, dear friends, it has been right under your nose all this time and you didn't realize it. By merely uttering the words — "Hey, don't look at me. I've been on vacation" — you can rid yourself of all blame to all problems that arose during your absence. Indeed, if you play your cards right — and are willing to stretch the truth to its absolute limits — you can use your vacation to your advantage for up to six months.

Not since the phrase — "The computer ate it" — has a group of words come in so handy. Indeed, you now have the perfect excuse for every possible scenario.

See if this one sounds familiar.

It is 8 a.m. on Monday and your boss, a most unreasonable human being, is yelling about some silly report, reportedly worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to the company, which was supposed to be on his desk that very morning. You, as you suddenly recall, were responsible for completing the report prior to taking the week off.

You didn't.

Do you now acknowledge your oversight and attempt to make amends?

Of course not.

You pass the buck.

"Look, boss," you say with great indignation, "I couldn't possibly have been responsible. I'VE been on vacation." Then, giving quick thought to the co-worker you hate the most, you add, "I think that was Farnsworth's job."

Since your boss can't remember what he said six hours ago, much less a week earlier, you are in the clear. And, better yet, Farnsworth is in a heap of trouble.

It doesn't get any better than that.

The key, though, is to stretch out this good fortune for as long as possible. Granted, within the office it will be difficult. After all, your co-workers, especially that creepy Farnsworth, have always secretly kept tabs on your actions and, as a result, know pretty much which assignments you have chosen to blow off ... and are quick to tattle on you.

But outside the office, it is a totally different matter.

There you can say, or do, anything you want and no one will be the wiser. Forget phone calls, ignore faxes, postpone meetings, you name it and you can get away with it.

When someone complains, just say, "Oh, sorry about that, but I've been on vacation."

If the customer seems leery, you can always reply, "My assistant was supposed to be handling my accounts. Didn't a guy named Farnsworth call on you while I was gone?"

attends school — might consider doing the same.

"It was a wonderful idea," Ms. Ward said. "It was such a big deal for those kids to design the T-shirt. And, Brandy, who has always liked to draw, really enjoyed doing it."

Brandy also thinks the contest has its merits.

"It gives the artist something to see and be proud of, all year," she said.

video wall and interactive sports games.

Other attractions include food, games, and arts and craft booths, a jalapeno eating contest and a dunking booth featuring such noted dunkees as Midland Mayor Bobby Burns.

Today is Family Day and ticket prices have been lowered to $5. Children under 12 years old and accompanied by a guardian will be admitted free.

The Hispanic Chamber of Commerce officials expect to raise enough money to fund half of the organization's annual operating expenses. That goal was accomplished last year when the festival netted $50,000.

Lightning sparks several fires

Shortly before 10 p.m. Saturday, multiple units of the Midland Fire Department were called to three separate locations to fight fires, some of which were believed to be caused by lightning from scattered thunderstorms that evening.

Witnesses reported smoke coming from a lumberyard at Andrews Highway and Idlewilde Drvie, with a pumper unit and firefighters responding.

A minor structure fire at 1402 E. Parker Ave. called another unit out in Saturday's patchy rain.

Finally, a utility pole at 108 E. Louisiana Ave. burst into flames after a suspected lightning strike with another team of firefighters responding there.

Pilot is in good condition after crash

An Odessa man is listed in good condition with back injuries after his glider crashed near 416 E. Hillmont in that city.

The 39-year-old pilot, Tracy Clinkenbeard, was landing the craft when it stalled and the right wing struck a chain-link fence causing the crash.

Clinkenbeard remains in Odessa Medical Center.

State Senate plans full audit

AUSTIN (AP) — Questions about the operation of state Sen. John Whitmire's office have spurred the Texas Senate to plan an audit of how each of its members spends money.

The audit will include all facets of the body's $21 million operation, including committee spending, contracts, personnel and salaries.

"It will be a full and complete audit, not just a quick peek," said Sen. Mike Moncrief, D-Fort Worth, the Senate Administration Committee's vice chairman.

"It's been some time since we've had a comprehensive audit done, and it makes good business for the State of Texas to have one done. We need to take a good hard look at things," he said.

Auditor Lawrence Alwin will start the look into the chamber's finances within a few weeks, Moncrief said.

Alwin and Sen. Chris Harris, R-Arlington and chairman of the Senate Administration Committee, did not return phone calls Friday. Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock also was unavailable for comment.

Whitmire, D-Houston, has come under criticism for allowing Houston attorney Pat Williams to make $60,000 a year in taxpayers' money.

Williams, 36, worked 32 hours a week for Whitmire's Senate office and the Criminal Justice Committee, which Whitmire formerly headed. Williams also did personal legal work for Whitmire on the side.

Both Whitmire and Williams say the personal work did not take place on state time and was legal.

RAMP: Midland College considers platform lift

(From 1B)

Midland College administrators said they have been exploring ways to improve access to the building, which was built prior to Americans with Disabilities Act regulations.

MC Board President Steven Kiser said Chaparral Center does meet ADA requirements for providing access.

There are curb cuts and handicapped parking places, and the long, sloping ramp, basically designed for semi-trucks to haul equipment to the center, according to Richard Jolly, MC vice president of instruction.

"The ramp is barely big enough for the trucks to get in, so we couldn't do anything else with the ramp," Jolly said. He noted that installing an elevator in the Chap Center would cost in the neighborhood of $200,000 to $300,000, and would be cost prohibitive.

Rudy Gonzales, MC vice president of finance, said putting an interior platform lift inside the building is being considered. The lift would attach to existing rails of stairs in Chap Center and would carry people down the track from the upper level to the main floor and back. The track comes equipped with a chair, but would also accommodate a wheelchair. It would cost from $27,000 to $30,000.

"Disabled people or elderly people (who have a problem walking up or down stairs) could sit on the seat and ride it down," Gonzales said. "The lift is not in the budget and we have already made major cuts in the budget this fall. We are in compliance with ADA, but we need better access and we are trying to accommodate that."

He said the money would be raised privately and a formal bidding process for the lift may begin in September.

"I hope the college comes up with something. There are so many events like graduations, concerts and basketball games to come to at Chap Center," Ms. Frescaz said. "And if it were icy weather, I can't imagine how people in wheelchairs would go down a steep slope safely."

Reluctant diver

The Second Annual Barton Springs Diving Championships were held Saturday to benefit Austin, Texas' favorite watering hole. Four-year-old Edgar Long suddenly became a very reluctant competitor as he desperately clutches the end of the diving board while his dad, Craig Long, in the water, reaches up and encourages the youngster to let go and fall into the Springs.

Indictment paints picture of corruption scheme

McALLEN (AP) — Ramiro Gonzalez's job was to ensure that Hidalgo County taxpayers get the best possible deal for county purchases. As a purchasing agent, he helped draft rules to prevent under-the-table deal-making.

But, according to a federal indictment, Gonzalez received commissions from companies that did business with the county and passed out kickbacks to top county officials who ordered their goods.

The indictment, returned Friday, portrays a brazenly simple scheme of corruption in the same border county where ex-Sheriff Brig Marmolejo Jr. was convicted of bribery, racketeering and money laundering last year.

"Public corruption stabs at the heart of our ability to be a democracy, to govern ourselves," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Greg Surovic, who prosecuted Marmolejo.

Surovic now is taking to court a 134-count indictment against County Judge J. Edgar Ruiz and seven other past or present county officials.

The county courthouse has been buzzing for more than a year with rumors of the FBI and Internal Revenue Service investigation.

Ruiz's office said he would respond to the allegations Monday.

Gonzalez is described in the indictment as the conduit for illegal deals. But the federal grand jury in Corpus Christi did not charge him along with the others, who face multiple counts of bribery, money laundering, bribery, official extortion and conspiracy to commit racketeering and mail fraud.

AP Laserphoto

Hidalgo County Judge J. Edgar Ruiz

Instead, prosecutors filed a separate complaint, called an "information," charging Gonzalez with one count of conspiracy to commit mail fraud and one count of money laundering.

Federal prosecutors often file informations, rather than grand jury indictments, against defendants with whom they expect to cut a plea bargain in exchange for testimony against others.

Gonzalez's attorney, Jack Wolfe, said it was "premature" to discuss publicly whether his client will be a prosecution witness.

The indictment says Gonzalez, while working for the county, served as an unofficial agent for three people who did business under a total of 23 different companies.

According to the federal allegations:

- County commissioners Samuel Sanchez and Abelardo Arcuate, former commissioners Ramiro Cavazos and Leonardo Camarillo, Drainage District No. 1 Director Joaquim Cerda and county Headstart Director Luciano Ozuna all sent purchase requests to Gonzalez.
- Gonzalez bypassed state laws and county rules to rig bids on $1.1 million worth of contracts at inflated prices to favor the 23 companies.
- Gonzalez sent bidding sheets and purchase orders to Ruiz, who approved them in his capacity as county judge.
- Gonzalez then received a commission from the company owners and passed cash and free airline tickets as kickbacks to Ruiz and the county officials who made the original purchase orders.

The racketeering section of the indictment alleges that county officials together received at least $25,000 in kickbacks, including trips to Houston, Los Angeles and Las Vegas.

Cerda's secretary, Imelda Villarreal, who allegedly took a free flight to Las Vegas with him, was charged with conspiracy to commit mail fraud and two counts of money laundering.

None of the company owners have been charged.

Federal agencies have long targeted public corruption in South Texas, historically a bastion of good-old-boyism government. The Drug Enforcement Administration investigated the Marmolejo case and drug-related charges that resulted in convictions of three top Zapata County officials last year.

The Parr family dynasty of Duval County made South Texas infamous for backroom deals and vote-buying.

Despite dozens of indictments against the Parrs and their cronies, nothing shook their grip on Duval County until 74-year-old George B. Parr, the legendary Duke of Duval County, shot himself in 1975 to avoid a prison sentence for tax evasion.

Officials arrest 3 in drug sting

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A multi-agency drug bust, which San Antonio Police say is its biggest ever, has netted three arrests through 23 search warrants that were executed Saturday.

The sting, dubbed "Operation Barrio King," began at 4 a.m. and ran through 3 p.m. Domingo Vasquez III, 31, and two others were arrested on charges of conspiracy to distribute and sell cocaine, television station KTSA reported.

The three are expected to appear before a U.S. magistrate Monday morning.

The operation was the result of four months of investigation by authorities, the station reported.

Most of the raids occurred on the city's west side.

Environmentalists threaten shrimpers' industry, some say

HOUSTON (AP) — Shrimpers along the upper Texas coast say their industry is threatened by a lawsuit filed by environmental groups.

Environmentalists filed a federal court pleading Friday that could, if granted, end shrimping along the upper coast this year and impose tighter regulations on shrimping in other parts of the Gulf of Mexico.

The San Francisco-based Earth Island Institute, Houston's Help Endangered Animals-Ridley Turtles, and the 1.9 million-member Humane Society of the United States are seeking more protection for endangered sea turtle species.

The preservationists insist that other species — green, leatherback, loggerhead and hawksbill sea turtles — likely will suffer heavy losses if the season proceeds under current rules.

The motion asks U.S. District Judge Sam Kent of Galveston to force the National Marine Fisheries Service and other federal agencies to place new clamps on shrimpers who were resuming their stations this weekend in state and federal waters off the Texas coast.

Banning shrimping in certain areas would be devastating, said Wilma Anderson, executive director of the Texas Shrimp Association.

"It is a disastrous proposal," she said.

The motion is the environmentalist groups' latest move in their lawsuit against the federal regulators.

The groups insist that the endangered Kemp's ridley sea turtle could be driven to extinction this year unless shrimping bans are imposed along some stretches of the coast, at least 15 federal agents are added to police the industry and tougher restrictions are added on the types of turtle-excluder devices used.

The preservationists insist that other species — green, leatherback, loggerhead and hawksbill sea turtles — likely will suffer heavy losses if the season proceeds under current rules.

Kent is not expected to consider the new motion until Aug. 1. Last week, he refused a shrimp industry request to declare existing federal regulation plans inadequate and adopt an industry regulation plan.

"Up to this point, the National Marine Fisheries Service has been too timid to use the enforcement powers it has under the Endangered Species Act," said Galveston attorney Bob Moore, attorney for the environmentalists.

"Somebody's got to do it when you can't depend on the federal agencies to get it done," Moore said.

Fisheries service spokesman Gordon Helm said late Friday that officials at the agency were unaware of the motion and had no comment.

However, the service issued a news release Friday that urged shrimpers to voluntarily purge their boats of so-called "soft" TEDs and position hard TEDs on their nets so that escape hatches face upward rather than toward the Gulf floor.

If the motion is granted, the shrimping industry would suffer about $62 million in losses along the upper Texas Coast, which includes the rich shrimp spawning grounds of Galveston Bay, Ms. Anderson said.

The figure excludes possible losses by banks on loans to shrimpers, fish houses and processors and local economies that benefit from shrimping dollars, she said.

Judge throws out valedictory lawsuit

LUBBOCK (AP) — Officials of the Snyder Independent School District are rejoicing over a federal judge's decision to throw out a lawsuit challenging the high school's choice of valedictorian.

"We are ecstatic," said Leonard Schwartz of Austin, the district's attorney. "This is what we expected."

But the attorney for the girl who thinks she should be honored as Snyder High School's top student said their fight will continue.

"It is still not over," said lawyer Robert Nebb. "We still have the right to appeal."

Nebb said he still has not discussed U.S. District Judge Sam Cummings' decision with his client, Holly Jones.

The school selected Miss Jones, 18, and Veana Clay, 17, as Snyder High's co-valedictorians in May because of their high grade-point averages. However, Miss Clay's name was submitted to the Texas Education Agency as official valedictorian because her average was 0.0123 point higher.

The difference means a state-sponsored college scholarship for Miss Clay.

Jones' suit contended that because Miss Clay graduated in three years and not four, she should not be eligible for the award in the 1994-1995 school year. Cummings rejected that argument.

"The uncontroverted fact as shown in the pleadings reflects that Ms. Miss Clay was the highest-ranking 1995 graduate. ... The TEA certificate and accompanying scholarship specifically must go to the 'highest-ranking graduate,'" Cummings said in discussing his July 7 judgment.

"Ms. Clay is thus entitled to the certificate and the scholarship."

Health insurance companies use many questions unrelated to risk as guidelines

By Kevin O'Hanlon
Associated Press

DALLAS — How's your reputation? How wholesome is your neighborhood? What kind of people do you hang out with?

Believe it or not, the wrong answers to these questions might prevent some Texans from getting health insurance.

According to the Texas Office of Public Insurance Counsel, nearly one quarter of the 100 insurance companies it studied use social environment, reputation, income and other factors not demonstrably related to risk in deciding whether to issue policies.

Lisa McGiffert, spokeswoman for Consumers Union, publisher of Consumers Report magazine, said the report should have a national impact.

"For the first time, it gives a peek at what insurance companies are actually using to make their underwriting decisions," she said. "Prior to this, we didn't have any concrete evidence to what they were using.

"Now we can see an overall pattern that is very clear that the insurance industry is not treating people fairly."

Texas and other states are trying to stop companies from using what appear to be non-risk factors in screening applicants.

The Texas Legislature recently passed a law allowing people to sue insurers for denying then coverage if they can prove that the underwriting standards are "unfairly discriminatory." The Legislature also made it illegal for companies to deny insurance to people who cannot speak English.

The new laws, however, will not work like a magic wand, Texas Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer said.

"There definitely will have to be some test cases in the courts," Bomer said. "The insurance companies still will make the rules, but they're going to have to be able to defend the rules. I think, perhaps, some of them they won't be able to successfully defend."

The report was made possible when the Legislature gave the OPIC authorization in 1993 to examine companies' underwriting guidelines — long held to be trade secrets by the insurance industry.

OPIC is not allowed to identify the companies, although the 100 they studied represent nearly 90 percent of the Texas health insurance market and write $5 billion worth of policies a year in the state.

Another problem, consumer advocates say, is that some insurance companies use a loopholes in state laws requiring them to tell customers why they were denied coverage.

"Frequently, they just say 'You were turned down because of our underwriting guidelines,'" said Kathy Mitchell, who helped write the OPIC report. "On the other hand, they're not compelled to reveal their underwriting guidelines."

That happened to Peggy Brietzke of La Vernia, Texas, when she asked an insurance company to explain why she could not get coverage for herself and two children.

"They refused ... they never would really say why," she said. "We feel we got jilted."

Insurance industry spokesman Bob Blevins criticized the methodology of the report.

"We sure didn't agree with the conclusions or the manner in which it was done," he said. "They asked to see underwriting guidelines without regard to what type of health insurance it was ... a disability policy versus major medical insurance versus a limited benefits policy. They didn't even get apples and oranges. They got fruit salad."

Blevins said factors such as a reputation are valid considerations.

"If they're stealing ... or have been involved in shoddy business practices or been in jail ... I think that has something to do with their insurability," he said. "Let's face it, we're entering into a legal contract with someone. How they handle their personal finances and their business affairs and what, if any, illegal activity they may be involved in are important as their health or occupation.

"Someone who will take advantage of a business relationship will darn sure take advantage of an insurance company."

Mexican courts to prosecute murder case

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Suspects in the 1993 slaying of a Rancho Viejo, Texas, honors student will be tried by Mexican authorities, a Texas prosecutor said.

"They have agreed to take our case," Cameron County District Attorney Luis Saenz said Friday.

The case centers on the slaying of 18-year-old Joey Fischer in Rancho Viejo, near Brownsville. The St. Joseph Academy student was gunned down outside of his home in March 1993.

Saenz and other Texas authorities handed over evidence and translated documents in the case to the Mexican attorney general when they traveled Thursday to Mexico City.

The information will be used against Heriberto Puentes Pizana and Israel Olivares.

Puentes and Olivares will be prosecuted under an obscure provision of the Mexican Constitution that allows the trial of Mexican citizens in Mexico even when the alleged crime occurs in the United States.

"A prosecution is very different in Mexico," said Saenz, who predicted the trial could take four months. "The trial will be basically a judge reviewing our case, our documents, and based on that make a determination on guilt or innocence."

"The days of escaping into Mexico after committing a crime in the United Stated are over," attorney general's spokeswoman Pat Guillermo said.

There have been four cases that Texas Attorney General Dan Morales has presented under Mexico's Article 4.

Currently, Mexico reportedly is holding a suspect in a Dallas slaying and another in a killing that took place near Houston. Mexican officials say that five other murder suspects have been convicted.

The case will be tried in Reynosa, Mexico, where Puentes already is jailed on auto theft charges. Olivares is free after spending time in a Matamoros, Mexico, prison for an auto theft conviction. Both men deny that they killed Fischer.

The two face a maximum of 50 years in prison, which will be determined by the judge, Saenz said.

Already serving time for Fischer's murder is Dora Cisneros, the wife of a Brownsville surgeon. Cisneros, the mother of a former girlfriend of the victim, asked Maria Mercedes Martinez to set up a hit on Fischer in his affluent suburban Brownsville neighborhood.

Martinez hired Daniel Garza, who in turn allegedly hired the suspects under suspicion in Mexico.

Like Cisneros, Garza is serving a life sentence. Martinez is serving a 20-year term for conspiracy to commit murder.

Fischer's father, Buddy Fischer, said he was pleased that the two men will face trial.

Department of Public Safety to begin classes for firearms instructors

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Public Safety is gearing up to begin its first course for would-be firearms instructors under the new concealed-guns law.

The class starts Monday at the DPS Training Academy in Austin with about 160 applicants scheduled to attend, DPS spokeswoman Laureen Chernow said.

"We take this very seriously because, ultimately, our law enforcement officers will be out on the streets with people who may very well be carrying a gun," Ms. Chernow said. "We want to make sure everyone is educated as much as possible."

The trainees, who represent every region of the state, will be divided into two groups: those who already are certified to teach other types of handgun courses and those who are not.

The level of instruction differs for each group. About 130 people, who already are certified instructors, will undergo 25 hours of instruction. The other 30 applicants, who are not certified, will undergo 40 hours of training, Ms. Chernow said.

The course includes both classroom and range instruction. Applicants will have to pass a written exam and marksmanship test in order to be authorized to teach the handgun proficiency course to the public, starting Sept. 1.

The trainees...will be divided into two groups: those who are already certified to teach other types of handgun courses and those who are not.

In the classroom, trainees will learn some basic principles of teaching and discuss legal issues such as when force may be used, nonviolent dispute resolution and safe handling and storage of guns.

The range work may be the most challenging. Trainees will be expected to shoot 90 percent accuracy, the same as required by DPS officers, Ms. Chernow said. The applicants will shoot from various distances, the maximum being 15 yards.

"The department was given the responsibility of making sure the people who go out and teach the general public know what they're doing. So we feel that is not too great a thing to ask that they be able to shoot well," she said.

People who apply for a concealed-gun permit will have to shoot 70 percent accuracy, she said.

Ms. Chernow said the agency has mailed 4,965 application packets to would-be firearms instructors and received 602 completed forms. Each applicant must submit two fingerprint cards, three notarized affidavits and a $100 nonrefundable fee.

Instructor courses will continue every week until all of the applicants have been trained, she said.

Texans interested in obtaining licenses to carry concealed guns may begin applying on Sept. 1. Initial approval will allow applicants to take a 10- to 15-hour training course from a certified instructor.

The four-year permits, costing $140, will be valid beginning Jan. 1.

Judge should serve rest of term, attorney says

DALLAS (AP) — A public reprimand from the State Bar of Texas should not affect Judge Steve Mansfield's ability to serve the rest of his six-year term on the state Court of Criminal Appeals, his attorney said.

The State Bar of Texas publicly reprimanded Mansfield Friday for lying about his background during his campaign for election last year.

"'Judge Mansfield agreed that he ... made all these statements with reckless disregard as to their truth," the State Bar said in announcing the punishment.

The reprimand becomes part of Mansfield's permanent record as a lawyer.

The judge's attorney, Bill Allison of Austin, told The Dallas Morning News that he believes the reprimand removes the legal cloud that has hung over Mansfield since his election in November.

Mansfield could not be reached for comment Saturday; his home telephone number in Houston is not published.

However, Mansfield's agreement to the penalty was conditional on punishment being limited to a reprimand, Allison said.

The public reprimand against Mansfield was the first ever made against a judge as high-ranking as Mansfield, said Jim McCormack, State Bar general counsel.

The reprimand, which Mansfield agreed to, cites him for overstating the number of criminal cases he handled as an attorney; the scope of his writings on criminal law; and his court experience in different states.

It also cites him for misstating his birthplace.

Mansfield, 42, a Houston Republican, took office in January after defeating two-term Democratic incumbent Charles Campbell.

Previously, Mansfield was an in-house lawyer for insurance companies.

Shortly after Mansfield's election, the state attorney general's office began investigating whether he had the 10 years of legal experience, as required by law.

Meanwhile, the Board of Legal Examiners investigated whether he had disclosed a dispute with a former wife about child support when he applied for a law license.

Both agencies said they will take no action against Mansfield in the wake of the reprimand.

Mansfield previously acknowledged that he overstated his professional experience and falsely stated his birthplace as Houston, rather than Brookline, Mass.

The public reprimand was a step more severe than a private reprimand but less so than a suspension or disbarment, the most severe penalty available, McCormack said.

"It's a very serious public sanction," he said.

Gov. Bush opposes California's approach to illegal immigration

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — If illegal immigration is a political powder keg in California, it's been more like a regular firecracker lately in Texas.

The Republican governors of the nation's two most populous states take different approaches to an issue likely to be trumpeted frequently in next year's presidential campaign.

"We are talking about a crisis on the border," said Leslie Goodman, a spokeswoman for California Gov. Pete Wilson, who is running for the GOP presidential nomination.

Wilson embraced Proposition 187, a California initiative to cut off illegal immigrants from state-funded services such as education and nonemergency health care. It also would have required teachers, doctors and welfare workers to turn suspected illegals in to immigration authorities.

Courts have held up implementation to review the constitutionality of Proposition 187, which was overwhelmingly approved by California voters last year.

Although Texas Gov. George W. Bush supports a beefed-up U.S. Border Patrol presence along the Rio Grande, he opposes Proposition 187, avoids strong rhetoric about illegal immigration and stresses cooperation with Mexico.

"You don't have a strong relationship by making scapegoats of Mexican immigrants, legal or illegal," said Texas Secretary of State Tony Garza, Bush's top liaison with Mexico.

Mexican government officials and many Hispanic groups in the United States denounced Proposition 187 as discriminatory against people of Mexican descent. In the eight months since the California initiative passed, no similar groundswell is occurring in Texas.

Economic figures tell part of the differences between the states at opposite ends of the 2,000 mile U.S.-Mexico border.

Roughly half of all U.S. exports to Mexico either originate in Texas or receive an added value here. Texas' exports to Mexico totaled $23.8 billion last year, more than three times California's.

"I don't think Texas would want to be in a position of alienating Mexico," said Gilbert Cardenas, director of the Center for Mexican-American Studies at the University of Texas.

Population and immigration figures explain other differences.

According to U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service estimates, California is host to 1.7 million of the 4 million illegal immigrants believed to be living permanently in the United States.

New York trails California with 550,000 illegal immigrants, followed by Texas with 450,000 and Florida with 400,000, the INS says.

"Immigration in California is a relatively new phenomenon," said Jeff Passel, demographer who tracks immigration issues for the Urban Institute.

The percentage of foreign-born Californians, including legal immigrants, has jumped from 8 percent in 1970 to 22 percent in 1990. Meanwhile, the percentage of immigrants in Texas has held below 10 percent.

Texas' job growth has been on an upswing in recent years, helped in no small part by increased trade with Mexico. California has been suffering from big layoffs in several sectors.

Historically, anti-immigration sentiment builds during tough economic times.

"I guess one of the things we'll have to see is whether a turnaround in the economy will blunt some of the feelings in California," Passel said.

Cardenas said California's aging, tax-wary electorate gave Wilson an opening to use the illegal immigration issue to boost his re-election campaign last year.

"I think he was the single most important factor in politicizing this issue," Cardenas said.

But Goodman said the governor was reacting to legitimate voter anger over the $3 billion a year the state spends to educate, incarcerate and provide health care to illegal immigrants.

"The proportions of this problem are just unimaginable to the people who don't live in this state," Wilson's spokeswoman said.

Wilson wants to stop the "magnetic lure of services," including education, that he believes are drawing illegal immigrants to California, she said. He also believes the Clinton administration should have insisted that Mexico to help stop the northward flow of its citizens during negotiations for the North American Free Trade Agreement and a multibillion dollar loan-guarantee bailout that helped stabilize Mexico's economic crisis this year.

"Mexico has the ability to help with this problem," she said.

In contrast, Bush has hailed his early support for the much-criticized bailout. He also has taken a different tone on the critical issue of education.

"Children already living in Texas should not be denied an education because of where they were born," Bush told four Mexican governors during a conference in May. "Healthy, educated children are the future of both our countries. The best way to curtail illegal immigration is to encourage jobs and economic growth in Mexico."

Another round of the immigration debate is gearing up in Congress, and California's approach is getting the most attention.

Californians made up 23 members of a 54-member immigration task force appointed by House Speaker Newt Gingrich. The task force chairman, Republican Rep. Elton Gallegly, is from California. Only two members, Republican Bill Archer of Houston and Democrat Pete Geren of Fort Worth, were Texans.

The task force, which was criticized by Hispanic groups for lacking Hispanic representation, recommended measures in the spirit of Proposition 187, including cutting off federal funds to educate undocumented children and requiring hospitals to report illegal aliens who show up in emergency rooms.

The group also endorsed a proposed constitutional amendment to end automatic citizenship for children born of undocumented parents on U.S. soil.

Lana's chance

Quick-thinking rescuers give teen-ager a future

By Ted Thompson
Jacksonville Daily Progress

TYLER — Maybe 18-year-old Lana Parsons will become the first woman president of the United States.

Maybe she'll write the greatest novel of the 21st century. Or maybe she'll do something really important and become a mother and role model for children and paragon for the children of her children.

Whatever she does with the remainder of her life, one thing is certain: Had it not been for Robert Ferguson and Mike Hedricks, Lana's chance at accomplishing any of those things would have ended in early June.

Had it not been for those two Johnnies-on-the-spot, Lana would have drowned, trapped beneath her car in a muddy, oil-stained creek in south Tyler.

She only remembers part of what happened. The rest has been relayed to her by others.

It was about 3 p.m. on June 2 when Lana and her apricot-colored poodle Rudy got in Lana's car and drove to pick up a friend, Wes. They were driving on south Tyler's Copeland Road near Cumberland Road.

"Rudy was pulling on Wes' pants leg," Lana said during a recent interview surrounded by her father, Rob Parsons, Hedricks and Ferguson.

"I reached down and was moving Rudy...I remember picking him up...and that's about all I remember about what happened," she said.

Her father, the associate pastor at Tyler's Metro Church, picked up the narrative.

"Lana really doesn't remember," he said.

"There was another car approaching. It was being driven by a member of our congregation. Isn't that odd? But that's only one of many things that were unusual about this episode," Lana's father said.

"Anyway," he continued, "Lana must have swerved to miss hitting the other car and ran into the creek. Lana doesn't remember being under the water," he said.

There was a cellular phone in the other auto. It was used to make the 911 call. A cellular phone being handy, that's miracle No. 1, Lana's father said.

At about the same time, Ferguson and Hedricks, linemen for Cherokee County Electrical Cooperative based at nearby Rusk, were en route to a location to correct an electrical problem caused by a pole that had fallen. The route they chose passed by the accident scene. "They just 'happened' to come by is a miracle No. 2," Lana's father said.

"When we got there," Ferguson and Hedricks continued, "We saw the car in the creek, or ditch. It had rolled up on the driver's side." Lana's arm was hanging outside the window. She was pinned beneath the car. Her head was under water.

"About all we could see at first was a part of her shoulder," Hedricks said. There were four or five men standing around, the two linemen said.

"They were grown men and they were just standing there," the two linemen who are trained in cardio-pulmonary resuscitation said.

Ferguson and Hedricks leaped into the water. With their bare hands, they lifted the car off Lana. "We dragged her about 15 feet up to the top of the bank. Her lips were blue and her skin had no color," Ferguson and Hedricks said.

"We had been told she had been under water for 10 minutes," Hedricks said. Lana said she was later told that her friend had been holding her hand.

"I squeezed his hand and then my hand went limp," Lana said she was later told.

'People who don't believe in miracles have never needed one. God gave us Mike and Robert as angels on that day.'

— Rob Parsons, Lana's father and associate pastor at Tyler's Metro Church

Hedricks and Ferguson began emergency procedures on Lana; one resuscitating by mouth, the other pumping her chest.

"We pumped for a while. No response. We did some more. Still no vital signs," Hedricks said.

"After about five minutes she responded," Ferguson smiled as he relived the episode.

"She got a little stronger, and we continued," Hedricks explained. "A little stronger and a little stronger each time she breathed." Pulse and heart rate and breathing were restored by the time the ambulance arrived.

Lana's father said a trauma expert at Tyler's Medical Center's emergency room said it was miraculous for Lana to have been under water for as long as she had been and for her to have been starved for oxygen for that long and not to have sustained brain damage. Miracle No. 3.

Lana's father was keeping the tally. Lana's father said hospital staffers withdrew at least 28 ounces of muddy water from his daughter's lungs. "It is truly amazing that she has no lingering side effects," of that trauma, Lana's father said as he smiled at her.

She also sustained a broken collar bone and broken ribs, but they have since healed. No one else received serious injury in the accident.

Lana stayed in the intensive care ward of the hospital for three days — Friday through Sunday. She was transferred to a private room on Monday. Guess who were two of her first guests. Hedricks and Ferguson, of course.

There is absolutely no doubt in the mind of Lana's father or Lana, or anyone else, that had it not been for Hedricks and Ferguson, Lana Parsons would not have survived the plunge into that brackish water-filled gully.

Hedricks said his partner Ferguson has a trait that he used to laugh at him about. "Robert (Ferguson) will never take the same route twice to a place. One time he'll go this way. The next time he'll go another way. The third time he'll go still another way. I'll never again question his choice of route," Hedricks laughed.

Why did those two linemen take the route that led them to a submerged Lana Parsons? Why did the car Lana swerved to avoid have a cellular phone handy? How could anyone survive without permanent damage with lungs filled with liquid for 10 minutes?

The board of directors of Cherokee County Electric Co-op presented Hedricks and Ferguson with a resolution of commendation. The long resolution mentions "divine guidance." Can you argue with that phrase? Lana won't. Lana's father won't. Hedricks and Ferguson certainly won't.

"People who don't believe in miracles have never needed one," is the way Lana's father put it. "God gave us Mike and Robert as angels on that day."

So what do you say to someone who saved your life? What does a father or a mother say to someone who reclaimed their daughter?

"What else can you say but 'thank you,'" Lana's father said as he looked at his daughter through red but dry eyes. "Thank you is not adequate, but waht else can you say?" the quivering, barely audible voice of a thankful father asked.

"Her sitting there is the only thing I need," Hedricks said.

Ferguson echoed, "Her sitting there smiling is good enough for me."

Gratitude due for museum funding

The people of Texas — all of Texas — owe a debt of gratitude to the Texas Legislature for the $890,000 it awarded to the American Airpower Heritage Museum in Midland to help expand the museum's educational exhibits, programs and aircraft displays.

The museum, which relocated to Midland in 1991, already is a major tourist attraction, but through the funding provided by the Legislature its role of providing information to the public through its educational exhibits and programs and its aircraft displays can be greatly enhanced.

Of course, the American Airpower Heritage Museum is much more than a bunch of World War II photographs of flying machines, a point made by State Rep. Tom Craddick, the Midland Republican whose work in the Legislature has been so critical to the museum. In fact, he noted that the Confederate Air Force museum is "more of a hands-on type museum for people to go through rather than just looking at pictures."

That's an important point. Now, more than half a century since the end of World War II — and with millions of American youngsters having been born and raised in a society virtually alien to the wartime pressures endured by those who lived during World War II — it is increasingly important that information transmitted to the public via institutions such as the American Airpower Heritage Museum be historically accurate and give the proper "feel" to the wartime story they are telling to the public. If not, those hearing that information will be getting a false impression of our history.

That is why the state funding to the museum is so important — not only to Midland and its people, but to all the residents of Texas and all who tour the American Airpower Heritage Museum.

Forbes' richest neglects crooked, crowned

WASHINGTON — No list of the world's richest people is complete without including the crowned and the crooked — as their booty is often in line with that of the biggest tycoons.

The current issue of Forbes magazine contains its annual cover story on the richest people in the world. Produced by a staff of 19, the article names 386 billionaires from dozens of countries.

Anderson

By focusing only on legitimate businesses owners, however, the list is far from complete. We have some other candidates, some of whom would knock several of the top 10 industrialists from their perch.

According to U.S. intelligence reports, shared with our associate Dale Van Atta, the world's richest person is Sultan Muda Hassani Bolkiah of the tiny, oil-rich Muslim sultantate of Brunei, on the north coast of the island of Borneo. According to one Central Intelligence Agency estimate, this sultan is worth well in excess of $25 billion, putting him comfortably ahead of Microsoft founder William Gates as the world's richest man.

The sultan is so wealthy that he never bothered to inquire about a missing $10 million he had given to the Nicaraguan contra effort in the mid-1980s, which wound up in the wrong Swiss bank account because of a typing error. It was about the same time, at the request of then-Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, that he transferred some of his wealth into British banks, singlehandedly propping up the British pound.

The 49-year-old ruler does little to hide his wealth. He lives in the largest house in the world, a palace featuring 1,788 rooms. Though many of these rooms are used for government business, about 900 are reserved for the "private" use of the sultan, his wives and children, and their relatives and friends.

Similar stories can also be told about the royal families of Saudi Arabia and the small Gulf states of Bahrain, Qatar, Oman and the United Arab Emirates. Only the riches of the Kuwaiti royal family have significantly diminished in recent years — due to the cost of the war with Iraq and the subsequent rebuilding.

While the oil barons of the Middle East and Asia have only come into their wealth in the last 50 years, any list of the world's richest people should also include royalty. Queen Elizabeth of England, for example, would surely make the list if the sum of her vast holdings in land, jewels and other priceless artifacts could be reliably totaled. Also near the head of the list, according to U.S. intelligence reports, would be political leaders who feel it is their right to skim off the top of their country's wealth. The top two candidates on this list — who would also be candidates for the Forbes top 20 — are President Suharto of Indonesia and President Mobuto Sese Seko of Zaire, each of whom is believed for have fortunes probably in excess of $5 billion.

Ex-presidents also make the list, chief among them Jose Lopez Portillo, the former president of Mexico, and possibly the family of the late Ferdinand Marcos, who stole billions of dollars from the Philippine people. At one time, the Marcos fortune was estimated at more than $3 billion, though that figure is now thought to be considerably lower.

And finally, no list of the world's richest individuals would be complete without noting the criminal kingpins who control the world's production and sale of illicit drugs. Here too it's impossible to cite specific figures, but one can be relatively sure that some of America's wealthiest mafia families — along with Colombian and Southeast Asian drug lords — would also find their names on the Forbes list if their true wealth were ever revealed.

GEORGE WILL

U.S. needs to be ready for 'surprise' of war

WASHINGTON — Brooding about the cataclysm of 1914 that shattered the long peace produced by the 1815 Congress of Vienna, Henry Kissinger wonders whether the protracted stability "might have contributed to disaster. For in the long interval of peace the sense of the tragic was lost."

Will

America's sense of the tragic, never strong, may have been bleached away by the sunny blink of peace (peace enlivened by the Gulf War) since the end of the Cold War. Or so it would seem from the widespread incomprehension of the conservative Congress' determination to spend more on defense than President Clinton desires.

Liberal critics say this determination reflects the reflexive militarism of the right, or traditional pork barrel politics with the defense budget. Although undoubtedly some supporters of augmented defense spending are doing the right thing for the wrong reasons, it is the right thing.

But it is not actually an increase in defense spending. Rather, the administration's defense cutting — speaking of reflexive policies - is being slowed. The Pentagon may receive about $7 billion more than the president wants, but that will merely hold the fiscal 1996 defense decline to 1.7 percent. And fiscal 1996 will be the 11th consecutive year of real (inflation-adjusted) decline in defense spending.

Furthermore, although conservatives are generally disposed to prune government, it is hardly a behavioral anomaly for them to favor slowing the erosion of funding for the federal government's foremost responsibility. The contrast between liberal and conservative mentalities is especially sharp regarding defense, which touches core convictions about men and nations.

Liberalism preaches, or at least holds out the hope, that people are infinitely malleable, and hence the present is endlessly manipulable and the future is predictable. From this flows the recurring belief — it recurs after each time events refute it — that peace is the natural relation between nations, and that war is an aberration explainable by the bad character of rulers and by benighted traditions and institutions.

For two centuries liberals have been explaining the obsolescence of war — their explanations have often been hard to hear because of the roar of cannon — in terms of the spread of democracy. Or the disappearance of religious and ethnic and nationalistic fervor. Or the pacifying power of commerce. Or the increase of travel. Or the communications revolution. Or whatever.

However, as Donald Kagan dryly notes, "Over the past two centuries the only thing more common than predictions about the end of war has been war itself." In his magisterial book "On the Origins of War," Kagan, a Yale historian, says that "statistically, war has been more common than peace, and extended periods of peace have been rare in a world divided into multiple states." In 1968 Will and Ariel Durant calculated that only 268 of the previous 3,421 years had been free of war. And no year has been since 1968.

Given what Kagan calls war's "ubiquity and perpetuity," the first duty of political leadership is to act on the axiom that "peace does not keep itself," and to understand that war or the threat of it has often been a surprise, from Pearl Harbor to Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait. The years between those two surprises contained such surprises as the Berlin Blockade, North Korea's invasion of South Korea, China's intervention in Korea, the 1956 Soviet invasion of Hungary and the Suez crisis, the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, the Tet offensive and the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968, the 1973 Yom Kippur war, the 1980 Iran-Iraq war, among others.

Pessimists — realists who are not fatalists — should be guided by Sir Michael Howard, the British military historian. He writes that military power has three functions, deterrence and coercion and reassurance, and the last may be most important for the preservation of stability because "it determines the entire environment within which international relations are conducted":

"Reassurance provides a general sense of security that is not specific to any particular threat or scenario. The best analogy I can provide is the role played by the British Royal Navy in the 19th century."

An American version of Pax Britannica will cost money, but will cost less than the ubiquity of war, which our sense of the tragic should tell us could be the alternative.

George Will's column is distributed by Washington Post Writers Group.

ANOTHER VIEW

Clinton's call for more civility deserves support, attention

Some folks might not agree with Bill Clinton on a lot of things, but his call for more civility in society is difficult to ignore or disagree with.

The president devoted a whole speech (July 6) to civility.

His message was delivered at Georgetown University in Washington, but it deserves to be heard and reported throughout this country.

One of Clinton's strengths is his ability to show empathy for others.

Whether it's at a town meeting, Midwestern flood scene or a memorial service for the Oklahoma City bombing victims, Clinton naturally offers personal concern for the people and their problems.

He's a people-person president.

And, he takes a common-sense approach to personal responsibility and civil debate in the working out of differences.

It has been part of his theme for months, but it deserves to be echoed today and for the rest of his presidency.

The challenge, he said in May, is to "figure out how we all work together and still leave room for our differences."

That leaves room for disagreement and debate, obviously, but he's saying we as a nation need to do a better job of acting in a civil manner — without violence and hatred in words and actions.

Another part of Clinton's theme is urging people to accept personal responsibility for their actions.

That means not trying to pass the blame or saying "it's not my problem."

Running away from problems won't make this a better country, and it certainly doesn't build stronger families.

The president's message applies to all walks of life, but we hope politicians will pay particular attention.

The debate in both Congress and the Wisconsin Legislature — and rhetoric outside the chamber — can get very uncivilized.

Instead of trying to build consensus, vicious partisan attacks breed a climate of hostility, and that serves no good at all.

And it certainly serves as a poor model for young people.

Respect, personal responsibility, civil debate, finding common ground — those are values and goals that all of us need to work on, and the president should keep stressing.

RUSSELL BAKER

Big business of health doesn't provide cure

We used to have health care, but now we have managed care. "Managed care" is another way of saying "the health business."

Baker

Health has become a big business. Really big.

Corporate hospital chains are suddenly flourishing in Wall Street. Drug stocks always have.

The health-insurance branch of the insurance industry is constantly bobbing and weaving to dump off old, sickness-prone customers and snap up young, robust ones.

"Old, sickness-prone" means "a drag on profits," while "young, robust" means "My, how the money rolls in!"

The care provided by managed care is managed by insurance companies. They do the job by managing the doctors.

How? Doctors who don't shape up don't get the money from the insurance companies, which control more and more of it.

Naturally this causes a power struggle between doctors and insurance companies. But it is probably too late for the doctors.

For instance, the insurance companies have been insisting that mothers and infants be put out of the hospital after one day. Baby doctors say this puts profit ahead of sound medical practice.

In Maryland the doctors have won a small victory. There, the state legislature favors a two-day hospital stay.

Victory or not, it is evidence of the insurance industry's dominating power that the state legislature must be bugled in like the cavalry to win an extra day for motherhood.

The rise of the health maintenance organization, or HMO, is a major piece of the story of how health came to be the health business.

HMO's organize participating doctors into cooperative sub-units of large profit-oriented corporate enterprises. A report by Robert Pear in The New York Times now discloses that more and more HMO's are refusing to pay for treatment their customers receive in hospital emergency rooms.

Sound business principles are at issue. The charm of HMO's is their power, supposedly, to hold down constantly rising costs for businesses that provide health coverage for their employees. The HMO people say allowing the customers unlimited access to hospital emergency rooms would put those costs out of control.

Cost containment or health care — which comes first? Hospital people told Pear that cost containment as practiced by HMO's in this instance "discourages patients from seeking urgently needed medical care."

Meanwhile, back at the dump, more people are constantly going onto the "uninsured" rolls. This is said to mean ever-increasing medical costs for everybody as the uninsured present themselves, late in the case and often hopelessly ill, at their nearest hospitals.

Who pays then?

Much admired though downsizing and lean-and-meanness may be just now, the Kevorkian solution is probably almost as repellent to most Americans as a tax increase.

This can only mean that the ever-rising bill for the ever-rising numbers of uninsured will be sent to hospitals and saintly doctors, who will struggle to pay them by padding their charges on the insured.

Which of course will press the industry for even more cost containment, more leanness-and-meanness, more downsizing, for ever-shorter hospital stays, ever-fewer trips to the melodrama of the E.R. when those chest pains strike in the wee hours.

The tax will be hidden, but it is inescapable and must be paid.

Did Harry and Louise tell us about this? If so, I missed it. If they had, doctors' enthusiasm for killing the Clinton health-care bill might not have run so high. Not that there was much in that bill to stir anyone's enthusiasm.

Even the president's was so low that he tossed it to the Congress saying, "Do what you will." And what that dreary, pre-Gingrich Congress did was what it almost invariably did when facing heavy problems: nothing.

The president abandoned his bill, the Democrats abandoned the president and connived with the Republicans to treat the health-care matter as if it were a matter of caring for the insurance industry. And here we are: water six feet high and rising, and everybody out to lunch in New Hampshire.

LETTERS

We should love sinner, oppose sin

This letter comes in response to the (Associated Press) article printed in the Reporter-Telegram, July 8, in the Religion in Brief section concerning the Presbyterian Church (USA) filing a brief with the U.S. Supreme Court. In the article it was stated that the philosophy of the Presbyterian Church (USA) is that homosexuality is not a sin. This was clearly a misprint or misunderstanding of the Presbyterian denomination's stance on homosexuality and the church's responsibility to act in civil society.

The Presbyterian Church (USA) has wrestled with the issue of homosexuality in our society and within our denomination since 1978. As a denomination the Presbyterian Church (USA) has consistently stated the church disapproves of homosexual behavior. Recently the stated clerk, the highest elected position in the Presbyterian Church (USA), explained our stance on homosexual activity as behavior that is not God's wish for humanity. While the denomination continues to search the Scriptures for God's guidance in issues such as this, we recognize the tension that exists in dealing with human beings that are estranged from God because of our sinful nature.

The Presbyterian Church (USA) is governed by a domestic process that allows for discussion and debate on any issues that face us as the Church of Jesus Christ. Recently this has led our denomination to deal with some very difficult issues, such as human sexuality, abortion and women's concerns within the church. The article published last Saturday was intended to be a description of how the Presbyterian Church (USA) is responding to a civil/social concern while seeking to be faithful to the teachings of the Holy Scriptures. As Christians we believe that we are to oppose injustice, prejudice and oppression as Christ Himself commanded. This has led us to the position of opposing any legislation that discriminates on sexual preference as we also oppose discrimination on racial or economic lines. This particular position has not led us to change our position on what we believe that Scripture describes to be sexual sin. We continue to affirm that for Christians, homosexuality is a sin, however, so is discrimination and oppression of human beings based on sexual orientation. As a church we continue to work together to love the sinner and yet oppose the sin.

Weatherman deserves honor given to him

My daughter, who is a temporary transplanted Dallasite in your fair city, sent me Jimmy Patterson's column on "Weather Guys." I was happy to see that you gave due honor to Harold Taft. Taft was the dean of all weathermen in the whole country and is remembered fondly by a host of admirers in North Central Texas.

For the women who are not familiar with Taft, let it be known that his word for farmers in the area was "Bible truth" when weather was considered and he sorely is missed by his many fans in the area. His legacy lives on in the Dallas-Fort Worth area through three meteorologists he trained who currently work at the same station.

Writer didn't tell downside of rodents

Regarding the article in the July 11, Reporter-Telegram by William K. Stevens, "Scientists see prairie-dog towns as key to environment's health," my daddy always told me that it was a mighty thin board that didn't have two sides and I would like to tell you mine. Some of the things he didn't tell you, and the scientists and environmentalists didn't tell you are some of the bad sides of this cute little creature. The holes that they dig break horses' legs, cattle's legs and anything else that unwarily steps in them. It will break you of the habit of stargazing and looking at Southwest Airlines as you limp to the barn.

Their holes also furnish a perfect habitat for rattlesnakes and their young are an excellent diet for them as they move in with the lovely little rodents.

Their presence is a magnet for little boys with 22-caliber rifles who plink at them using you for a backstop. Their digging brings caliche and rocks to the top of the ground, ruining what little topsoil you have. When they run out of something to eat they dig under the nearest fence leaving an opening for coyotes, roving dogs and other varmints that like to attack chickens and other livestock.

Fleas love these little animals and carry bubonic plague to your back door.

Rabbits are a distant second in reproduction capabilities to them as they do more than assiduously tend their burrows. If you leave them be, they will cross your fence into your garden, then into the backyard and up your pant leg while you are having breakfast.

If this is health I feel a little ill. May their tribe rapidly decrease until they become extinct except in some zoo where they will rapidly migrate to the nearest pasture.

Couple thanks vet for nighttime aid

We would like to publicly thank veterinarian Henry Tillett for coming out to his office in the middle of the night on July 10 to help us.

After keeping a family member's dog for a month our dog attacked her. She needed treatment badly and quick.

No one, not our vet of 35 years or the 24-hour emergency vets we called would help us. All we got were answering machines and advice to call the Permian Basin Emergency Veterinary Clinic. They had an answering service and she said since they had not seen the dog they could not treat her.

To all of you we called, the dog died; she was that bad off and Dr. Tillett we thank you for trying when no one else we called would touch her.

Maybe sheriff should take up filling potholes

On Monday, July 10, I drove by a Midland County dump truck on South Midkiff Road that was filling potholes in the road. There were six men assisting this strenuous endeavor. One was standing and watching (making sure the other five were standing properly), three others held extra shovels in case one broke, two watched to make sure that one filled the small pothole properly. Does our noted county commissioner watch this type of hourly payment as well as she watches the sheriff's? Yet, the Commissioners' Court does not approve gasoline for the sheriff's vehicles to protect the citizens or overtime pay for the criminal investigators to catch the criminals. Don't figure? Maybe the Sheriff's Department should take up filling potholes. I am sure this expenditure would be approved! Oh, and all Midland County criminals, please stay within our sheriff's budget.

More thought should have gone into loop

It seems as if Midlanders traveling the loop, particularly near Garfield Street and Midkiff Road, cannot only be distracted by the landscaping, but also by the neck-straining effort to change to their desired lane in the short distance allowed by its design. True, it may seem as if the legal method of turning into the nearest lane, rather than the more common practice of wide turns required of professional truck drivers, went out with the use of turn signals, but some drivers still feel compelled to adhere to these arcane laws.

Those of us who do must maneuver to avoid vehicles traveling at 50 mph from behind, as well as those exiting onto the service road. This would not be as difficult if there were more lanes (and more brains, for that matter) between the stop lights and exits.

I think that the development of Loop 250 is great, but it does seem as if more thought and planning went into its aesthetics rather than its functionality, practicality and above all, its safety.

Soccer association should work for kids

I am writing this letter to all families and kids who love soccer. Soccer is the most exciting sport around. The parents love it as much as the kids. The parents run up and down the sidelines with their child and when that goal is scored you feel like you have scored the goal with them. All three of my sons play soccer, and even I have given it a try.

There is a sad side to all of this though. It seems some of the grownups who work for us at Midland Soccer Association (MSA) have lost sight of who soccer is really for. It is for the kids! It has become a profession for some and they are not looking out for the kids. My oldest son has had a rude awakening of just how these people operate. His heart has been broken, but I am here to tell you the Rangers' spirit lives and that can never be taken away from us.

I urge parents of young soccer players to get involved now. Get a rule book and study it, because if you call the Midland Soccer Association for advice it may not be what is real. Something innocent could turn into a disaster overnight.

To the people who work for us at MSA, please take a long, hard look at yourselves and tell me who you are really working for.

Competition is only fair, economical way

Congress is currently deciding how to award the New Attack Submarine (NAS) contract. Naval plans call for the contract to be awarded to a Connecticut shipbuilding company for $60 billion without the benefit of competitive bidding. Meanwhile, a second major shipbuilding company in Virginia has protested the "no bid" contract, saying it can build the ships for at least $2 billion less.

In these times of deficit reduction and downsizing, the government should be seeking the most cost-effective ways to run all of its contracts. Competition makes the most sense and is the surest means of getting the best product and the lowest price. Congress should require that the naval contract be awarded based on full and open competition.

If you believe as I do, I suggest that you write or call Congressman Charles Stenholm and Senators Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison.

Midlanders deserve fireworks on Fourth

As a new and thankful resident of Midland, I was overcome with amazement when I discovered that the city had not organized a fireworks display for the Fourth of July.

Although at Angels Stadium an event was given on the previous weekend, it is both traditional and reverent to celebrate Independence Day on the Fourth. I believe we all missed a grand opportunity to unite as Midland residents in a shared experience on our nation's birthday.

It was a glorious night on the Fourth. The stars were out; it was warm, clear and calm — but no fireworks to light up the night sky in celebration. Consider how special it would've been to have fireworks against the silhouette of downtown Midland or another prepared, safe location.

It is my hope that the mayor's office and all relevant agencies will recognize their responsibility and opportunity to improve, and prepare for next year on this matter. The fine residents of Midland deserve better.

Students shouldn't eat fast food daily

Several times a year I get a fast food lunch. At noon during school time, most customers seem to be of high school age. I wondered how many were eating the meals that were prepared at the school and so I called the Midland Independent School District (MISD) food service director, a very nice lady, who promptly said "few." Of the 3,600 high school students in Midland, 145 eat breakfast and 425 eat the school-prepared lunches. About 80 percent of these get free lunches and many of the rest have to stay at school for some reason during the noon hour. The cost to the taxpayers is over $100,000 federal money and a loss of about $20,000 for the food services of the combined high schools.

Having come from a sweet-potato-in-a-sack generation and closed schools during lunch, I asked "why?" A good hot meal seemed like a great thing. The answer I was given is peer pressure to have a car and to eat out each day. And I was told the peer pressure also is felt by the parents, one of whom said their child would starve to death in the middle of the street before they would be caught eating at school.

Now I believe in a good grease job every now and then, but shouldn't the situation be rethought? Forgetting the nutritional considerations, won't there be a cultural shock to many when they get out of college and are faced with bringing a sandwich to work rather than paying to eat out?

There are many reasons that eating on campus may make sense to you, and I encourage you to call the MISD food service director for some good information.

I also bet that after this letter, I don't get any free fries the next time I buy a burger.

SPEAKING OUT

Today's income tax goes against Constitution

The 10th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States says, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

The Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was ratified on Feb. 3, 1913 to impose on the citizens of the United States an income tax. Its function is much more than gathering money to maintain our necessary governmental responsibilities. The income tax has become the main instrument of imposing the will of the few on the many. That is not the way it started out, but our fearless leaders being ever the opportunists quickly learned how to use the I.R.S. to expand their power far beyond anything the Constitution allowed! Examples of this are all around us.

We fought and won World War I; the income tax was the key to financing that war. The Depression came along, and there was great need in the land; men, women and children were starving. Franklin D. Roosevelt was elected president, and he was a great president, he was also the first of many with a Big Government approach to our problems. He started some work programs that put many young men to work; these took money. He made many other changes; they all took money.

Until this time the income tax was very small, but it supplied the needed money to carry out all of these government programs. Politicians began to explore the many blessings of spending someone else's money. Money is power and if there is anything more heady than money, it is power. The I.R.S. takes our money from us, then our leaders use this money to bribe us to do what the Constitution in the 10th Amendment forbids their forcing us to do.

R.C. Holley

The money gathered through the income tax can be used to control people (micro management) and it can be used to buy votes, or it can be used to build up a huge power structure. Thus began our march to Big Government, government that strives to be everything to everybody. Our leaders started Social Security, which although a good thing, is not a government thing; it is a state thing.

Farmers are controlled by tax breaks, subsidies and agencies. As are businessmen, commerce, manufacturers of goods and the service industry. In various ways the government, by using the I.R.S. to breach the 10th Amendment, has gained control over us. Our leaders started welfare to the needy to help the needy, BRAVO! In doing that they put thousands of people in a permanent state of need, because minimal security is enough to keep many people dependent on that guaranteed income, rather than risking hunger in an attempt to escape poverty.

Big brother now hits his stride, welfare is an excellent tool for controlling people. They began to put people on other types of welfare, although they don't call it welfare; they called it subsidies, aid and other high-sounding names, but the bottom line is "they" give away — our money — to enhance "their" power base. How? Tax breaks, subsidies, loans, aid to the right people, grants and gifts. This power is getting heady, let's go for the "world." Bingo, "Foreign Aid" (read international welfare). We will give aid to other countries on our terms, they will have to do what we tell them to. Now Big Brother is ready to control Spaceship Earth.

If the I.R.S. is done away with, and replaced by a national sales tax, or a flat tax, the compulsive controllers in the national government will lose their ability to control us and Spaceship Earth. The 10th Amendment will be enforceable, the omnipotent moral busybodies will have to work their way into each state government and implement their rules as laws, one by one and state by state, to regain control over us.

Cowboy signees

IRVING — As training camp looms, the Dallas Cowboys began collecting contract signatures from their 10 draft choices by agreeing to deals with their second- and seventh-round picks.

The team signed second-round pick Kendell Watkins and seventh-round pick Oscar Sturgis to three-year contracts Friday, The Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported in Saturday's editions.

The newspaper said negotiations with first-round running back Sherman Smith are not progressing smoothly. The Star-Telegram quoted a source close to the discussions as saying the team offered Smith a four-year, $1.7 million deal that his agent, Gregory Samms, called unacceptable.

The deal apparently included a $600,000 signing bonus.

Cowboys linebacker Darrin Smith also is not close to signing, according to his agent, Brian Ransom. Ransom said that if the linebacker doesn't get a one-year, $800,000 deal he won't be at the team's "quarterback school."

1995 fastest 100

MONTREAL — Donovan Bailey ran 100 meters in 9.91 seconds at the Canadian track and field championships on Saturday, shattering the national record and posting the best time in the world this year.

Bruny Surin was runner-up in 9.97, the second-fastest time in the world this year. It was believed to be the first time two athletes from the same country, other than the United States, had gone under 10 seconds in the same race.

Bailey already had the world's best time this year, a 9.99 in April, which had broken Surin's previous Canadian record of 10.02.

Gross doesn't live up to billing in 7-2 win

■ The Rangers get a good outing from an unlikely candidate to move within one-half game of California.

By Howard Ulman
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — Kevin Gross, near the bottom of the AL pitching statistics in several categories, allowed five hits in 7 2-3 innings as the Texas Rangers beat the Boston Red Sox 7-2 Saturday night.

Rusty Greer, who had two RBIs in his previous 17 games, singled in two runs for the Rangers off Erik Hanson (7-3). Greer went 3-for-4 after getting six hits in his previous 52 at-b

Texas led 3-0 ter three innings, added four in the eighth and won for the seventh time in its last eight games at Fenway Park.

Gross (4-8) entered the game having allowed 18.2 runners per 9 innings, the most in the AL. But only six Red Sox reached base in the first seven innings.

He also was tied for second in the league in losses and earned runs and was third in walks. He struck out two, walked three and didn't allow a runner past first base until Matt Stairs tripled in the eighth and scored on John Valentin's groundout.

Gross left after Troy O'Leary's two-out single in the eighth, and Matt Whiteside retired the side.

The Rangers improved to 41-31, matching the best mark in their history after 72 games. They moved within a half-game of first-place California in the AL West. Boston's AL East lead dropped to 3 1/2 games over Detroit, which was rained out against the Angels.

Otis Nixon led off the game with a single and took second on a walk to Mark McLemore. They pulled off a double steal as Will Clark struck out. Nixon scored on a passed ball by Bill Haselman, Juan Gonzalez walked and Greer drove in McLemore.

In the third, Clark doubled and scored on Greer's single. In the eighth, Mike Pagliarulo had a three-run double off Derek Lilliquist and scored on Jeff Frye's single.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — After the first round, 18 players were under par. After the second round, there were 12. After the third round, only three.

"Welcome to the U.S. Open," said Meg Mallon, one of the lucky survivors after 54 holes of the 50th U.S. Women's Open. "It happened with the men. It happens with everybody. It's just the nature of the Open, and the USGA is smiling. Their idea of a perfect U.S. Open is to shoot even par and win."

Mallon has created some angst among USGA officials heading into Sunday's final round.

Her nearly flawless, bogey-free 66 on Saturday gave her a 54-hole total of 5-under-par 205, bettering the Open record of 206 set by Patty Sheehan last year.

Two strokes back was Julie Larsen, who birdied three of her last six holes for a 68 and a 207 total. Larsen posted her first LPGA win five weeks ago.

The only other sub-par total belonged to Rosie Jones, who was at 209 after an even-par 70 on Saturday.

"That's the way you're supposed to play a U.S. Open — hit fairways, hit greens and put the ball in the right position on the greens," said Mallon, 32. "It was a fun day, but I know I'm really going to have to fight my nerves tomorrow."

Mallon, who began the day one shot out of the lead at 1-under-par, birdied the fourth and ninth holes and suddenly found herself with a two-stroke

Heaven helps Angels with timely rain out

■ Mother Nature helps prevent a fourth consecutive loss to Captains.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The Midland Angels finally found a player who could stop the Shreveport Captains — Mother Nature.

A freak cloudburst, which didn't even touch most parts of Midland, dumped just enough rain at Christensen Stadium Saturday night to render the field unplayable after the Captains had scored four runs with no outs in the top of the first inning.

Since this was the last game of the year at Christensen Stadium with the Caps, this game must be made up in Shreveport, beginning Friday when the Angels will have to play the Caps six times on foreign, but hopefully, dry turf.

But that news didn't even sit well with the Captain players, who leave this morning for El Paso and the Diablos. And they are leaving while crying and screaming.

Shreveport won three of four from the Angels, hitting Midland hurlers like a pin ball machine.

"The way I've been hitting here, this (the rain out) is extremely disappointing," said Shreveport first baseman Desi Wilson, who leaves with a .579 batting average at Christensen Stadium. "I would like to play all of my games here."

The Caps touched Angel starter Jeff Schmidt for four quick runs before the 10-minute rain started. The key blow was a bases loaded, three-run double by designated hitter Keith Williams.

North Central blasts way to final game

■ Joey Guerrero hits three of NC's seven bombs to force final game with Midland Tower.

By Mike Butts
Sports Writer

ODESSA — Midland Tower can beat Midland North Central Monday in the District III Little League championship game. But first it will have to figure how to get North Central second baseman Joey Guererro out. Or at least how to get him to hit a ball that stays in the park.

Guererro led a rain storm of North Central home runs as the loser's bracket champs forced an if game with Tower by run-ruling it 13-3 Friday at Odessa's North Ector County Field. Guererro hit three of his 11-12 year old team's seven home runs in three at bats in the 3 1/2 inning game. It was North Central's sixth win in a row after falling to Tower 4-2 last Saturday to drop into the all-star tournament's loser's bracket.

"He's just a competitor," North Central coach Bobby Hull said of his second baseman, who reached base for his 14th straight time in the tournament with his final home run. "He's got a lot of natural talent."

Guererro's first round-tripper scored the first run of the game in the first inning. He hit another solo shot in the second and then put North Central up 11-0 in the third by slamming a three-run shot to left field.

"I thought it would be a pretty close game, maybe a three or four run (difference) at the most," said North Central winning pitcher Jason Matthews, who tossed a one-hitter in four innings. "I nev-

Mid-City forces Monday's final game

Staff Report

Midland Mid-City put together a rally of hits to post a five-run second inning and beat Midland Northern 9-3 Saturday at Windlands Park. Mid-City's win forces forces a second championship game in the District III 9-10 year-old All-Star Little League Tournament.

The game was Northern's first loss of the double-elimination tournament. The two teams will meet again Monday at 6 p.m. at Windlands Park for a second championship game. The winner advances to the sectional tournament in Lubbock which begins on Thursday.

Northern took a 1-0 lead into the bottom of the second, but Mid-City used six singles off and an error to score five runs to jump out to a 5-1 lead. Mid-City kept that lead until the fourth when it added another run to make it 6-1.

Northern cut the lead to 6-2 in the fifth before Mid-City put the game away with three runs in the bottom of the inning. Mid-City got three straight hits with two outs, highlighted by Michael Smith's ground-rule double.

Northern's final run came in the sixth on a wild pitch by Shane Wright.

Ryan Roland got the win for Mid-City, pitching the first three innings and allowing only one run. Wright relieved him in the fourth and went the rest of the way, allowing two runs. Ryan Snell pitched the first two innings for Northern to take the loss.

Mid-City got a total of 11 hits in the game, including two each by Ryan Leeton, Cole White, Zack Sledge and Wright. Northern got six hits, including

Dispirited Armstrong comes oh so close

By Samuel Abt
c.1995 N.Y. Times News Service

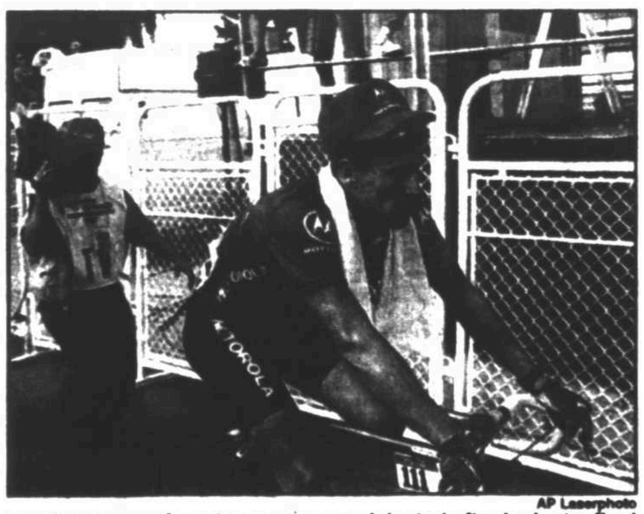
REVEL, France — Lance Armstrong, the American leader of the Motorola team, came so close — half a bicycle length at most — to winning Saturday a stage of the Tour de France, an achievement he had been thinking about for more than two weeks.

"I like this one, too," he said, gesturing to a profile handout of this 13th of 20 daily stages before the Tour began in Brittany on July 1. "It'll be hot and I like that, and all these ups and downs, I like that." His analysis was perfect.

As the finish line approached, however, he was unable to overtake Sergei Outschakov, a Ukrainian with the Polti team, who had his arms upraised in victory while Armstrong was still face-down and pedaling.

"I really feel bad," he continued. "I can't tell you how disappointed I am. We were out for 200 Ks and for every one of them, every one, I thought I'd win. I'm devastated."

He referred to the four-man breakaway in which he rode for much of the 245 kilometers (152 miles) from Mende to Revel in the south-central Massif Central area of France.



AP Laserphoto

Austin's Lance Armstrong appears dejected after he lost a final sprint to Sergei Outschakov in the Tour de France's 13th stage.

Armstrong acted devastated, too, once he crossed the line. His face dripping sweat and lined with white where the salt had dried, he rode far down the final straightaway, eluding a horde of journalists and television camera operators before he turned and rode past them again.

Then he parked his bicycle and entered the drug-testing trailer where he had an appointment after his number — 101 — was drawn at random during the daily stage.

Outschakov, 27, and Armstrong were both timed in 5 hours 50 minutes 45 seconds, a sprightly average of 41.9 kph (26 mph) over a tough course with six climbs in hot but comfortable weather. Third and fourth, 59 seconds behind them, were Bruno Cenghialta, an Italian with Gewiss, and Hernan Buenahora, a Colombian with Kelme.

The three pursuers, including Armstrong's American teammate Frankie Andreu, finished 12:37 behind the winner. The main pack arrived 19:14 later. There was no change in the highest of the overall leadership as Miguel Indurain, a Spaniard with Banesto, remained in the yellow jersey, 2:44 ahead of Alex Zuelle, a Swiss with ONCE, and 3:35 ahead of Laurent Jalabert, a Frenchman with ONCE.

Vaughn speaks about incident

By Howard Ulman
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — The red brim of his Red Sox cap was pulled low over his left eye, which was swollen shut. He shuffled at the podium. This was not how Mo Vaughn wanted to be seen.

A cameraman asked Boston's all-star first baseman to lift his cap.

"No," he said. "I don't want you to see my eye."

Teammates respect him. Kids he spends time with adore him. His community reputation is as strong as the 6-foot-1, 245-pound body that propels homers over outfield walls.

"I'm not worried about my eye. I'm not worried about myself. I'm just worried about my teammates and the kids who look at me in that light and my family," he said at a news conference Saturday. "I've done too much to have this go down now."

Vaughn was with his girlfriend at the Roxy, an upscale dance club about five miles from Fenway Park early Friday morning. He was unwinding from a 9-8 loss to Texas a couple of hours earlier in which he hit a three-run double.

He was the major-league leader in homers and RBIs. The Red Sox, in first place in the AL East, need his bat in the Braves play long ball, beat Padres 7-6

The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Atlanta erased a 5-0 deficit on home runs by Charlie O'Brien, Dwight Smith and Jeff Blauser to beat San Diego on Saturday night for their 12th victory in 13 games this month.

After reliever Bryce Florie (2-1) walked Marquis Grissom, Blauser hit the next pitch over the left-field fence to give the Braves a 7-6 lead. The homers were Blauser's ninth and Smith's third. The homers were the only hits for the Braves in the five-run inning, as Ashby and Florie combined for three walks. The Braves finished with six hits and seven walks.

Smith was pinch-hitting for reliever Brad Clontz (3-1), who retired all five batters he faced, striking out three.

Mark Wohlers pitched the ninth for his eighth save.

The Padres lost for the 13th time in 18 games.

Rockies 5, Mets 4

NEW YORK — Larry Walker hit a two-run double in the third inning that finished an ailing Bret Saberhagen, leading Colorado over New York 5-4 Saturday night.

Andres Galarraga had a pair of RBI singles, and Dante Bichette and Mike Kingery each had three hits for the Rockies.

Bill Swift (5-2) won his fourth straight decision. He gave up three runs on 10 hits in 6 2-3 innings.

Darren Holmes relieved, and Rico Brogna beat out an infield single for a run that made it 5-4. Holmes then retired Bonilla for his seventh save.

■ NL Roundup

Saberhagen (5-5) was tagged for four runs and six hits. He left with no outs in the third inning.

Expos 5, Phillies 3

MONTREAL — Rondell White and Wil Cordero both had two doubles among three hits and drove in two runs and Butch Henry pitched six strong innings as Montreal beat Philadelphia.

White, who was 4-for-5 with a double and two runs scored Friday, was 3-for-4 and scored two runs Saturday. Cordero was 3-for-5.

Henry (4-7) allowed seven hits, walked one and struck out four in winning for the second time in five starts. Mel Rojas pitched two innings for his 16th save, allowing a run-scoring single to Gregg Jefferies in the ninth.

The Phillies have lost two of the first three games of this four-game series, scoring nine runs.

Paul Quantrill (7-5) allowed four runs over 5 2-3 innings. He struck out one, hit a batter and balked twice.

Pirates 9, Cardinals 2

PITTSBURGH — Jeff King homered twice and drove in five runs, helping Denny Neagle become the NL's first 10-game winner as Pittsburgh beat St. Louis.

Jay Bell homered into the fourth level in left field and Mark Parent also connected. The Pirates had not hit four home runs in a game since Sept. 29, 1993.

Neagle (10-4) succeeded in his third try at his 10th victory, giving up six hits in his third complete game. He walked one and struck out five.

Neagle won in his first start since pitching Tuesday night in the All-Star game. He is 5-0 at home this season.

Reds 4, Cubs 3

CHICAGO — All-Star outfielder Ron Gant left the game with a rib injury and substitute Jerome Walton doubled home the go-ahead run in the seventh inning, sending Cincinnati past Chicago .

Walton took Gant's place in left field. With the score tied at 2 in the seventh, Thomas Howard led off with a single and was forced out on Barry Larkin's grounder. Walton followed with his RBI double.

Pete Schourek (9-4) won his fifth straight decision. He allowed seven hits, walked none and left after the eighth inning with a 4-2 lead.

Kirby Puckett leads Twins past Yankees 8-5

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Kirby Puckett hit a three-run homer and Pedro Munoz had a controversial home run Saturday night as Minnesota beat New York.

Puckett connected in the first inning off Scott Kamieniecki (0-2), pitching for the Yankees for the first time since injuring his elbow May 5. Kamieniecki gave up five runs on seven hits and two walks in 3 1-3 innings.

Munoz was credited with a solo home run in the third that tied it at 4. First base umpire Rich Garcia called Munoz's opposite-field drive fair, even though television replays indicated it was foul.

Eddie Guardado (1-7) pitched four innings of one-hit relief for the win. He relieved after Frankie Rodriguez allowed four runs on seven hits in four innings.

Orioles 9, Royals 1

BALTIMORE — Baltimore handed Kevin Appier his fourth straight loss, scoring six early runs against the Kansas City ace.

Seldom-used Leo Gomez homered and matched his career-high with four RBIs as the Orioles beat Kansas City for the first time in four games this season. Harold Baines went 4-for-4, and Cal Ripken and Brady Anderson each had three of Baltimore's season-high 17 hits.

The right-hander was 11-2 with a 2.04 ERA on June 23. Now he's 11-6 with a 3.43 ERA.

■ AL Roundup

Scott Erickson (6-6) allowed one run, five hits and two walks in seven innings. He is 2-0 since joining the Orioles in a July 7 trade with Minnesota last week.

Indians 7, Athletics 2

CLEVELAND — Orel Hershiser, his trademark sinker working impeccably, won for the first time in more than a month, and Manny Ramirez homered and drove in three runs as Cleveland beat Oakland.

Alvaro Espinoza also drove in three runs for the Indians, who have won 13 of their last 17 games to improve baseball's best record to 49-21.

Hershiser (6-4) allowed two runs on Terry Steinbach's second-inning homer, but got 17 of his 21 outs on ground balls, notching his first win since June 5. He allowed five hits, struck out three and walked one in seven innings.

Hershiser was 0-3 with a 6.55 ERA. But he showed quickly that he was back on track by getting the A's first three hitters to ground out to the mound.

Steve Ontiveros (8-4) yielded six runs, seven hits and three walks.

MO: Vaughn said he was defending girlfriend middle of the lineup. Now he's the center of unwanted attention.

He was defending his girlfriend when he became involved in an altercation about 1 a.m. Friday. Theron Davis, 26, of Boston, filed a police report saying Vaughn assaulted him. When Vaughn found out about that, he filed a report accusing Davis of the same thing.

"Of course. What's he going to say?" Vaughn said of Davis' report. "I don't want to get into specifics. You all know me. I'm not one to go out and start any trouble."

He apologized to his teammates for getting hurt in the middle of a pennant race. He apologized to fans. He voiced embarrassment and was asked what his involvement indicated.

"The message from this whole thing is nobody's perfect," Vaughn said. "A month ago I was a saint and something like this goes down, then it all blows up in my face, whether I'm right or whether I'm wrong."

He said even a non-celebrity could have been involved in such an incident, although "being Mo Vaughn doesn't help." He said he didn't know Davis.

He also said he wouldn't live in fear of being attacked.

"I'm not worried about snipers on top of the building shooting me," he said.

Vaughn gave few details of the incident, in which no charges were filed. He said that after he was hit he thought he might not be able to play and went looking for ice to keep the swelling down.

He considered himself fortunate that his injury wasn't more serious.

"I could have broken my arm," he said. "I could have got kicked in the eye. I could have really damaged my eye."

He said he was outnumbered in the altercation.

"I can handle myself. I could see if it was a one-on-one thing," he said, "but when you got seven, eight guys jumping into a situation then there's only so much you can do. I think I look all right for that."

The Boston Globe and Boston Herald, both quoting sources, gave conflicting accounts.

Davis could not be reached for comment. However, authorities said the Dorchester man had a criminal record.

Davis served time in prison on a weapons violation in June 1989, said Anthony Carnevale, spokesman for the Department of Corrections. He was paroled more than a year later, but violated the terms of his release and was returned to prison in October 1991.

Davis was released from the Massachusetts Correctional Institute at Concord in December 1993.

Vaughn was in Concord on Saturday, where he was examined by an eye specialist at Emerson Hospital. Vaughn said that except for the swelling, his eye was fine and he hoped to play Sunday night against Texas.

He had played all of Boston's 69 games before being sidelined Friday and Saturday.

"The guy broke my streak," Vaughn said with a slight grin.

He was asked how his right hand felt.

He balled it into a fist and said, "Everything's solid. Everything's solid. ... I did what I had to do."

He indicated he was offended by the way his girlfriend was treated.

"Respect is something I live my life by. I felt it got breached," he said. "To me, it was well worth it.

"My biggest problem always has been that I'm a regular person," Vaughn added. "I've wanted to get involved with the people and be around people and talk to people and be nice to people and be out with them.

"But I can't do that anymore."

He doesn't plan to become a hermit but said he'll be more diligent about bringing some of his buddies with him when he goes out.

"Usually I always roll with a few guys and this time I didn't and I got hit for it," Vaughn said, "I'm going to still do my things when I go out. I just got to bring the whole crew with me."

He didn't describe them as bodyguards.

"All my friends are my size," he said, "my size and bigger."

two from Kyle Chandler and Brandon Williams.

The win forces a second championship game which, on Friday, didn't look to involve Mid-City. It scored two runs in the top of the sixth to beat Odessa North Ector to advance out of the loser's bracket.

White went the distance on the mound for Mid-City in that game, despite allowing 11 hits. Timmy Brock scored the winning run on a ground out to third base. North Ector's David Durrell led all batters with three hits in the game.

TEXAS: Gross ERA is 3.41 in last five games

(From 1C)

Willie McGee's double-play grounder with the bases loaded in the ninth scored the second Boston run.

Gross' ERA dropped from 7.49 to 6.89. He was 1-6 with a 9.89 ERA in his first 10 appearances this season but is 3-2 with a 3.41 ERA in his last five starts.

er expected this."

Neither, probably did Tower. But it has its best pitcher, Cliff Mitchell, eligible to play in the championship game back at North Ector County at 7 p.m.

"He's gonna be a harder pitcher but we can still hit him," Matthews said. "If we just put the bat on the ball we can beat them."

The ball didn't have a chance against the North Central bat Friday. Matthews hit home runs twice after Guererro. And in the third Kyle Shatzer's home run gave North Central three homers in a row.

Guerrero finished with five RBIs and third baseman Jared Craig had four with a two-run double and a two-run home run. Ryan Vinson and Justin Smith also had hits for North Central.

Tower third baseman Daniel Ochs got the only hit off Matthews. He led off the game with a hard line drive to third that Craig couldn't handle.

Matthews struck out eight and overcame control problems when he walked Justin Pitts and Joey Villa to lead off the second. He struck out the side in the third after walking Ochs to start the inning.

"Jason came in the last two games in the sixth inning with no outs and retired the side," Hull said. "He mixes up his pitches real well."

Mitchell was ineligible to Friday pitch because of his work on the mound Tuesday night when Tower won the winner's bracket.

"Cliff is tough" Hull said. "He's got a good fastball and a good curveball. We're just going to have to prepare the best we can."

Magic remains undecided on return to NBA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Magic Johnson's agent says the former NBA star still hasn't decided whether to return to the Los Angeles Lakers.

In a story in Saturday's Boston Globe, Johnson seemed to strongly indicate that he wouldn't return to the Lakers, saying he wanted to concentrate on his new movie theater complex in Los Angeles.

But his agent, Lon Rosen, said Johnson's remarks were taken out of context.

Earlier, Johnson said he needed to have a "father-son talk" with Lakers owner Jerry Buss before making a decision. Rosen said Johnson has yet to discuss the matter with Buss.

Johnson, who turns 36 next month, retired in 1991 after learning he had HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. He started a comeback prior to the 1992-93 season, but retired again before the season started after some players expressed concern about his condition.

Johnson later coached the Lakers for a brief period.

In the Globe story, Johnson said the success of his 12-screen movie complex in a predominantly black section of Los Angeles has given him doubts about returning to basketball.

In a joint venture with Sony Theatres, Johnson opened the Magic Johnson Theatre two weeks ago in the Baldwin Hills-Crenshaw district.

TOUR: Race will hit the Pyrenees on Monday

(From 1C)

With the first of three stages in the Pyrenees scheduled Monday and four exhausting days in the Alps and Massif Central behind them, the leaders called a ceasefire among themselves Saturday and allowed the breakaway of low-ranking riders to develop at Kilometer 38 (Mile 23).

"A day like today you don't come across very often," Armstrong continued, his face in shadow from the team cap pulled low over forehead. "To get 15, 17 minutes — those days just don't happen. I'm always looking for them, though."

Win over Argentina was big

PAYSANDU, Uruguay (AP) — The significance of the United States' stunning 3-0 win over Argentina in the America Cup cannot be overestimated, according to U.S. interim soccer coach Steve Sampson.

He called Friday night's win "the second most important victory in the history of U.S. soccer. It is second only to our 2-1 victory over Colombia at last year's World Cup.

"We had hoped for a good result, but not to win by such a wide margin. This is incredible."

The Argentine press called it a "black night" and a "historic defeat" for the national team.

While two-time defending champion Argentina is one of the favorites in the championship of South America, the Americans were invited along with Mexico to fill out the 12-team field.

But the U.S. team, on goals by Frank Klopas, Alexi Lalas and Eric Wynalda, was opportunistic in handing Argentina its first loss of the tournament. Both teams advanced to the quarterfinals from Group C.

■ U.S. Soccer

On Monday, the U.S. team will play Mexico, and Argentina will play Brazil, the 1994 World Cup champions.

Sampson said he wasn't insulted that Argentine coach Daniel Passarella started only two regulars for the match.

"But my players didn't like it," he said.

Passarella said, "Argentina didn't deserve to lose. We could have scored twice in the first seven minutes."

Passarella had no regrets for having fielded nine substitutes.

"I know what I'm doing. I wanted my regulars rested for the next round," he said.

Nolan will coach Sabres

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Hartford assistant coach Ted Nolan, who has no previous NHL head coaching experience, will become the next coach of the Buffalo Sabres, according to a published report.

Citing unidentified sources, The Buffalo News said Nolan met with Sabres officials Friday morning and agreed to a contract. General manager John Muckler declined to discuss the situation, and a news conference has not yet been scheduled.

Muckler, who stepped down as coach in June to concentrate on administrative duties, did say Boston assistant Tom McVie pulled himself out of the running on Friday.

Nolan would become the 14th coach of the Sabres.

Mallon, the 1991 Women's Open champion, sank a 12-foot birdie putt at No. 13 to get to 4-under, forging a momentary three-shot lead.

Kelly Robbins, playing ahead of Mallon, then birdied the par-5 17th to cut Mallon's lead to two shots.

Robbins, who double-bogeyed the 18th hole, was at even-par 210, along with Pat Bradley and Annika Sorenstam. Kris Tschetter, Dale Eggeling and Tania Abitbol of Spain were in at 211. Dottie Mochrie and first-round leader Jill Briles-Hinton were in a group at 212.

Weather delays on Friday meant 27 players had to finish their second rounds Saturday morning. The third round began with eight players tied for the lead at 2-under — Bradley, Briles-Hinton, Sorenstam, Eggeling, Tammie Green, Dawn Coe-Jones, rookie Leta Lindley and Jean Bartholomew. Twenty players were within three shots of the lead.

Bartholomew had been the overnight leader, getting to 3-under through 13 holes of the weather-delayed second round when darkness halted play Friday night. She lost a stroke to par over her final five holes Saturday morning, creating the eight-way logjam.

Davies, the tour's leading money-winner this year, made a brief charge with birdies on four straight holes to get to 3-over. She finished at 4-over 214 with a 69.

Defending champion Patty Sheehan also was 4-over after a 71. She went 32 holes between birdies until she converted at No. 17 Saturday.

Wheaton bullies his way to finals

Associated Press

NEWPORT, R.I. — Defending champion David Wheaton used an overwhelming service game to take a straight-set victory over Byron Black on Saturday in the semifinals of the Hall of Fame Tennis Championships.

Wheaton, 26, the top seed in this grass court tournament, will face Germany's David Prinosil, a straight-set winner over Derrick Rostagno, in Sunday's final. It will be the sixth-seeded Prinosil's first ATP Tour final.

Wheaton had seven aces and won 77 percent of his first serves on his way to a 6-4, 6-1 win over the fourth-seeded Black. He saved two of three break points and broke Black on four of six opportunities in the 61-minute match.

Wheaton dominated the second set, losing just four points on his serve and breaking Black's serve twice.

The 22-year-old Prinosil also advanced in straight sets, but not as easily as Wheaton. He downed Rostagno, a wild card entrant, 6-3, 7-6 (7-4).

Prinosil went up a break in the second game of the first set, then double-faulted four times in the seventh game as Rostagno broke back. He recovered immediately, breaking Rostagno's serve in the next game, then holding serve in the ninth game to capture the set.

Wheaton and Prinosil last played each other in the 1994 Hall of Fame quarterfinals, with Wheaton winning 7-6 (7-4), 6-1.

Swedish Open

BASTAD, Sweden — Unseeded Fernando Meligeni of Brazil notched his second upset of the week Saturday, beating fifth-seeded Carlos Costa of Spain 4-6, 6-0, 6-2 in the semifinals of the $328,000 Swedish Open.

Meligeni, ranked 78th in the world going into this clay-court tournament, will play Christian Ruud of Norway in Sunday's title match. Ruud, seeded sixth, edged unseeded Kris Goossens of Belgium 7-6 (7-5), 7-5 in the other semifinal.

Palermo GP

PALERMO, Sicily — Defending champion Irina Spirlea of Romania beat Italy's Silvia Farina and Austria's Barbara Schett on Saturday to advance to the final of the Palermo Grand Prix clay-court tournament.

Spirlea, seeded second, edged Farina 4-6, 6-2, 7-6 (7-2) in a quarterfinal match and routed Schett 6-3, 6-1 in the semifinals. In the other semifinal, fifth-seeded Sabine Hack of Germany beat seventh-seeded Natalia Medvedeva of Ukraine 3-6, 6-2, 6-3.

Swiss Open

GSTAAD, Switzerland — Three-time champion Sergi Bruguera's 18-match Swiss Open winning streak was stopped Saturday when he lost to Yevgeny Kafelnikov in the semifinals of the $560,000 tournament.

The Spaniard, ranked 11th in the world and seeded third, lost 6-3, 6-4 in 56 minutes to the second-seeded Kafelnikov.

In the other semifinal, Switzerland's top player Marc Rosset was beaten by unseeded compatriot Jakob Hlasek 6-4, 6-3.

Carter leads trio at Anheuser-Busch Classic

The Associated Press

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Jim Carter shot a 3-under-par 68 Saturday, his third straight round in the 60s, and held a one-stroke lead over Jim Gallagher Jr., Blaine McCallister and Ted Tryba after three rounds of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

Carter had a 54-hole total of 203, 10 under par for three trips over the sweltering Kingsmill Golf Club's River Course. The temperature on the course was at least 98 degrees, and the heat index made it feel like 118.

Carter, who lives in Scottsdale, Ariz., seemed the least affected by the heat on the 6,797-yard layout. And unlike the second round, when he went on bogey binges each time he got to 10 under, this time he kept his cool, finishing with seven straight pars.

After cancelling a birdie on No. 3 with a bogey on the next hole, Carter made short birdie putts at 6 and 7 and reached the turn at nine under. He got it to 10 under when he made a downhill 10-footer on No. 11.

On Friday, Carter twice got to 10 under. The first time he immediately made two straight bogeys, and the second time he made three in a row.

Gallagher, who teed off at 3 p.m., started with eight pars and made a tap-in for birdie at 9. He gave that back two holes later with a bogey, but regained a share of the lead with birdies on 13 and 14.

He stayed even with Carter until 18, when he three-putted from about 50 feet.

McCallister, playing with Gallagher in the final group of the day, eagled the 516-yard, par-5 7th, then gave both shots back with a double-bogey at No. 8. McCallister got back to nine under with a birdie at 14.

Curtis Strange of Kingsmill, Va., and Pat Bates pass by Strange's Navy as they walk up to the 17th at the Anheuser-Busch Classic.

Tryba birdied four of five holes in one stretch and then made a 45-foot birdie putt on 18.

Paul Goydos, who matched the best round of the tournament with a 65, Scott Simpson, Lennie Clements and Fred Funk were all at 206.

The morning belonged to Curtis Strange, who lives on the grounds of the sprawling Kingsmill community and is easily the crowd favorite. After spending the previous day wondering if he would make the cut, Strange had a 65 and was at 207, four strokes behind Carter.

■ Golf Roundup

Strange, bouyed by an ever-growing gallery and the sight of hundreds of Curtis' Strange Navy faithful on the James River banks of the 16th green and par-3 17th, had seven birdies and one bogey after starting the day even.

Senior Players Championship

DEARBORN, Mich. — Oppressive 100-degree temperatures didn't diminsh during the rain-delayed third round of the Senior Players Championship on Saturday, but Jim Colbert's commanding lead certainly did.

Colbert, who opened the day with a four-shot advantage after his tournament and TPC of Michigan course-record 63 Friday, found himself one stroke behind J.C. Snead when play was suspended for a second and final time at 7:10 p.m.

An electrical storm caused the initial four-hour delay and, after play resumed for 20 minutes — during which Snead finished the par-5 13th with an eagle to vault in the lead at 13 under par — the second suspension was called.

The 24 golfers who did not finish their third round are scheduled to resume play at 9:15 a.m. Sunday and, following completion of the round, the field will be repaired for the start of the fourth round.

While Snead and Lee Trevino were the only players within four shots of Colbert at the start of play Saturday, eight golfers were at least that close to the lead when play was called.

Defending champion Dave Stockton is alone in third place, two strokes behind Snead and one behind Colbert, at 11 under par after 13 holes.

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — They didn't kick the Miller Genuine Draft Ford Thunderbird out of the Miller Genuine Draft 500.

But NASCAR's penalty for use of "unapproved" roof flaps put driver Rusty Wallace in an unenviable position in Sunday's $1.5 million NASCAR Winston Cup race.

"I think we had a top-five car," Wallace said Saturday, 24 hours after he was not permitted to qualify because of the infraction.

Now, he must make his run from the 22nd position on the 41-car grid, no easy task on the 2.5-mile Pocono International Raceway. The track has been very slick this weekend because of extremely high temperatures.

Thunderbird driver Bill Elliott has the pole for the race, posting a fast lap Friday of 162.496.

The violation resulted in a $20,000 fine and probation until Aug. 30 for crew chief Robin Pemberton. Although not held accountable, Wallace took the blame for putting the flaps on the car 18 months ago.

But NASCAR spokesman Kevin Triplett said the crew chief must be charged with the responsibility for any unapproved devices on a car. He said the flaps were not dangerous, but that the sanctioning agency cannot permit unapproved changes of any kind.

Wallace said the lighter titanium flaps apparently worked better and faster than the composition matter on the approved flaps. The device opens to slow an out-of-control car and keep it from becoming airborne.

Wallace, who set the track qualifying record last June at 164.558 mph, said the flaps were installed after he had some serious crashes. He said the team had failed to get NASCAR approval for the titanium flaps, which made the top of the car slightly lighter.

He said NASCAR caught the violation only because it noticed the flaps being installed openly Friday on the new car Wallace is using this weekend. He was upbeat despite the punishment, saying he understood NASCAR's position.

The fine brings to $225,000 the amount NASCAR has assessed since the season began.

Elliott led a 1-2-3 qualifying effort by Fords, putting his Thunderbird on the pole for the first time in 42 races. Mark Martin was second in qualifying at 161.993 and Morgan Shepherd third at 161.438.

Elliott said the 47th pole of his career and the success of the other Fords — pole winners just five times in 17 events — should not be misconstrued to mean the Chevrolets are underdogs Sunday.

"That was qualifying," he said. "The race is another deal altogether. We'll just have to see what happens."

Another pole for Villeneuve

TORONTO (AP) — Jacques Villeneuve needed no last-minute heroics this time.

The provisional pole winner easily held the top position for Toronto Molson Indy, leading Saturday's time trials with a record-breaking lap of 110.396 mph on a sun-baked, slippery 1.78-mile temporary street circuit in downtown Exhibition Place.

But the 24-year-old Canadian, who has been waiting until the waning moments of qualifying to turn his best laps, actually went fast enough early in the 30-minute session to clinch his third straight pole and the third of his budding Indy-car career.

Villeneuve's fast lap in Friday's time trials was 109.855.

Teo Fabi knocked the youngster briefly off the top rung early in Saturday's session with a lap of 110.029 on the 11-turn course. But Villeneuve came back within minutes with a 110.243 that would have been good enough to take the pole.

But, in the final minute, Villeneuve hung out his Reynard-Ford for one more quick lap, smashing the record of 110.191 set last year by Robby Gordon.

"It was really close," Villeneuve said. "If you have a lap left, you always try to go faster, a tenth (of a second) or two, because you never know when somebody's going to go quicker. So you keep pushing.

"Anyway, you always want the car to be better. And once you get in a race car, it's a pleasure to drive on the edge."

Villeneuve again credited Team Green with giving him a car that needed very little adjustment to go fast.

"We made a few changes and the car wasn't really faster, but it was more stable," the driver said. "When you have to push hard, that really helps."

Jimmy Vasser, a 29-year-old American who is riding a string of three straight top-three finishes, matched his best Indy-car qualifying effort by jumping from sixth to second with a lap of 110.215, pushing Fabi to third.

The start of Sunday's 174.4-mile race promised to be an interesting one.

Vasser, who previously was second on the grid at Nazareth, Pa., in April and at Portland, Ore., last month, got off to a bad start in the latter race.

Scott Pruett also moved up Saturday, leaping from 12th to fourth with a 109.982. He was followed by Friday runner-up Bobby Rahal at 109.967, four-time Toronto winner Michael Andretti (109.936), Gordon (109.648) and defending series champion Al Unser Jr. (109.638).

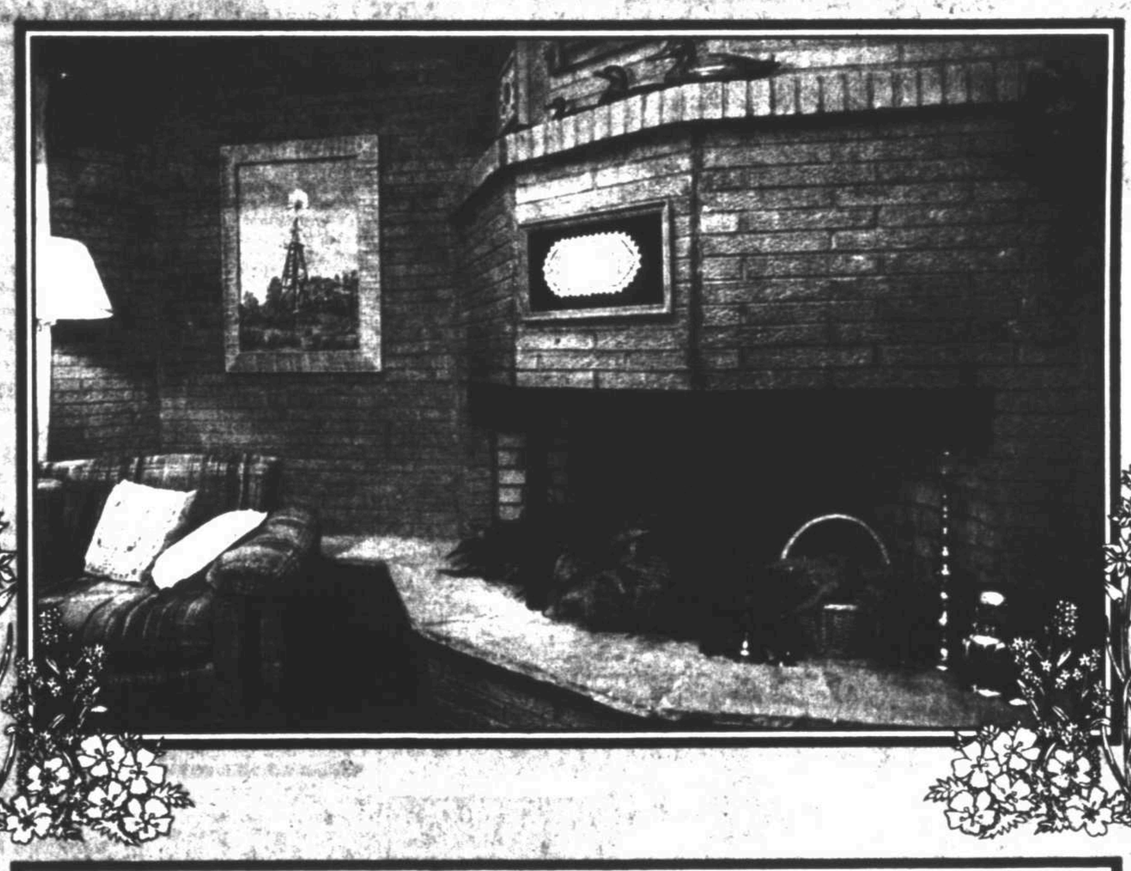
HOMES
& Classified



Set on a well proportioned lot in Wedgewood park this three bedroom home offers a number of distinctive features within a package that has a great deal of potential.

With accents such as louvered folding doors as room dividers, a walk-in wet bar with elegant carpentry and a wrought iron screen in the kitchen, the house has a timeless and classic appeal and is listed for $88,500.

Located just a few blocks from Rusk Elementary School and Lee High School at 2907 Rebel Drive, this house is perfectly positioned for a family with children.

Surrounded by mature trees with a large yard front and back, this home offers a unique fireplace in the family room. Constructed with brick and stone, it is of a 'bay' design which allows the grate to be viewed from three sides. It certainly creates a focal point for the room which is of an open plan design with the kitchen.

Large, tiled and with masses of storage space, the combination of kitchen and breakfast area has plenty of space for lots of people and offers views out over the back garden.

As with all of the rooms in the house, there is an abundance of storage space in the house. From the large closets in the bedrooms to the sizeable two car garage which has a utility room and a home office (which is currently being used as a sewing room) leading off from it. A large storage shed , with conversion potential, adds a tremendous amount of extra space.

The exterior of the house, which is listed at certainly echoes a by gone era with its planters, flower beds and double dormer windows. In some respects, the house looks as if it should have a white picket fence around it.

Joel K. Oldham of Re/Max will be hosting an open house this afternoon between two and four o'clock. For more information, or to arrange an alternative time to view the house, call 682-8820.

Central Mortgage opens

Joanne Langston, president of Langston Realtors, recently announced the opening of Real Estate Central Mortgage, a mortgage origination office dedicated to serving the financial needs of buyers as well as homeowners wishing to refinance.

"As the Permian Basin's largest real estate firm, we are uniquely qualified to offer a wide range of centralized real estate services; Real Estate Central Mortgage is the initial step in this goal," Ms. Langston said. "I feel Real Estate Central Mortgage will enhance Langston Realtor's overall commitment to provide the most convenient and extensive service to our customers and clients."

Melissa Herndon, a native Midlander, long term realtor and previous business owner, will manager and loan officer for Real Estate Central Mortgage.

The offices will be temporarily located at the Langston Realtors North office at 4610 N. Garfield, Suite B-20.

By September 1st, Real Estate Central Mortgage will move to its newly remodeled location in Suite-C of the Langston Realtors office at 1908 W. Wall.

Who's who

Have you ever stopped to think about the large number of individuals who are involved in every real estate transaction? First, most buyers select a real estate agent to assist in the process. Most real estate agents belong to the multiple listing service and have access to information on any home available in the area. The agent can visit with you about your requirements and wishes, and then show you homes which best fit your needs and budget.

Kay Sutton, Kay Sutton Realtors

A mortgage lender will help you decide what your budget should be when selecting a home. Mortgage rates have dropped recently, making mortgages more affordable for families. The lender can explain to you the various types of loans available, and help you decide which best fits your family's requirements. There are also a number of people at the mortgage company who assist in the processing of your loan.

Once you have decided on a home, the real estate agent will assist you in the paperwork involved so that the terms and timings work for you. Once you have an accepted contract by the seller, the mortgage company will go to work processing the loan.

An appraisal will be required to ascertain the mortgage amount. The lender usually orders the appraisal, and also orders all of the verification required to document their file.

You will probably require a mechanical inspection and termite inspection of the property. Each inspection requires the services of an expert in that field.

The title company will begin a search of the title to the property, insuring that the property has no judgments of liens against it. The title company, or the mortgage lender will order a survey which will show you the property lines to your lot.

After all of the 'behind the scenes' work is completed, and your loan is approved, it is time to set up your closing. Closing is the term used for the appointment to sign the final papers and pay the balance of the money you owe.

A realtor can assist you in scheduling and coordinating the entire home buying process. Kay Sutton Realtors, together with a number of the professionals listed above, will be offering a Home Buying Seminar on Saturday, August 5, at Kay Sutton's Meeting Center at 702 Andrews Highway, Midland. All materials will be furnished.

Reservations can be made by calling 570-8200.

Price comparisons around the country

There has been another fall in interest rates, with rates down 1 3/4 points from a December 16, 1994 peak, and down 3/4 of a percentage point from May 5, 1995, according to a June Freddie Mac survey.

Ruth Young, Re/Max of Midland

In other real estate news: An nationwide analysis of about 300 metro areas, conducted by Runzheimer International, revealed eight cities where four-bedroom homes (of approximately 2,200 sq.. ft.) sell for less than $100,000.

Several Texas cities made this list. In 1995, the average price of a similar home in or around Andrews, TX. is $89,200. In Hobbs, NM. the same home sells fore &90,100 and in Midland, TX. $90,700. Other Texas cities include Port Arthur at $97,900 and Orange where the cost is $99,800.

In contrast, the same home in suburban Honolulu would cost $473,100, one in San Francisco $426,100 and one in Washington DC for $314,000.

Newspaper Fetches Dog

An adorable Irish Setter puppy was dramatically transported across town by a newspaper, today. The dog's former owner was quoted as saying, "I didn't think it was possible. I mean, I've seen puppies go with newspapers before, but not like this!" The canine's new owner reported that she was very pleased with the ease of using the paper for both finding and training her dog.

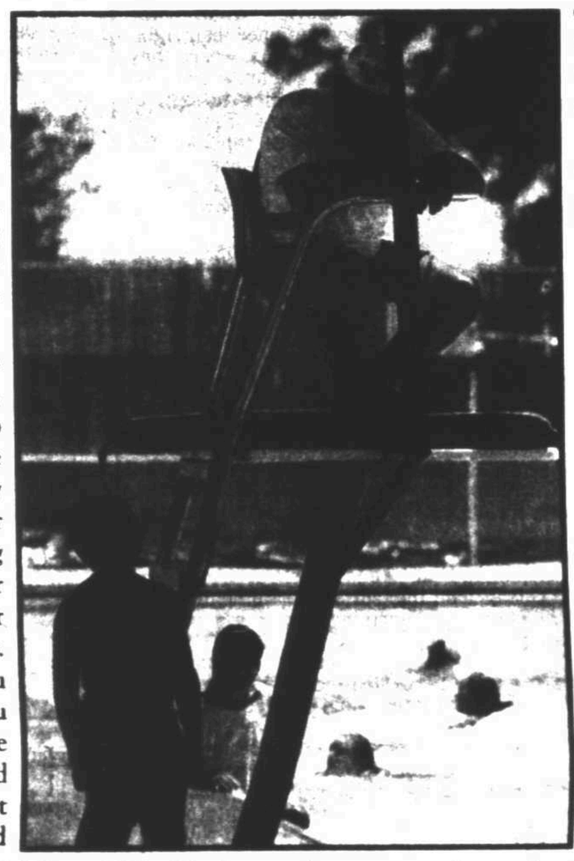
"The Stand" is the perch from which lifeguards assume their responsibility to watch over swimmers. With the sun beaming down, Glen Abrams sits under the umbrella on the stand keeping a watchful eye over those in the pool.

'Poolwatch'

Summer's sounds — Beach Boys songs, ice cream trucks, air conditioners and baseball games — have to include a bronzed lifeguard (maybe with that white stuff on his or her nose) blowing a whistle and telling some kid stop running by the pool.

Lifeguards are a summertime necessity for people who like to swim, especially if it's in a public pool or water park. But they symbolize different things for different people.

When you are young, lifeguards are around to prevent you from running, splashing and hurting yourself while having good, clean, rowdy fun in the swimming pool with your equally rowdy friends.



Lifeguard John Martinez cautions a young swimmer about the rules of the diving board at Doug Russell Pool.

When you are a little older, lifeguards are to flirt with while you are carefully working on your tan and keeping both your hair and your bathing suit dry.

Now that you are an adult, you know that the job of a lifeguard is more than just looking bronzed and telling kids to quit roughhousing. Lifeguards do exactly what their name implies — guard lives. Specifically, they are in charge of the safety of anyone and everyone using the swimming pool where they are stationed and its facilities.

Lifeguards aren't hired because they look good in bathing suits (although they nearly always do). In order to earn lifeguarding certification, they must pass classes in life saving, CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation) and first aid. In Midland, these classes are offered by the American Red Cross and the YMCA, according to Patti Pyeatt, manager at Doug Russell Pool. And many of the lifeguards working at Midland's city pool are hired through the City of Midland aquatics and swim team program.

Lifeguards also have to be able to swim 500 yards non-stop, tread water for two minutes without using their hands, and "dive into seven feet of water and pull up a 10-pound brick," she said.

Oh, and they have be at least age 15. This summer the lifeguards at Midland city pools range in age from 15 to 24, she added.

This year, the city swimming pools — Doug Russell, Ulmer and Washington — have a rotating shift of 15 lifeguards, Ms. Pyeatt said. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, six lifeguards are on duty at Doug Russell; on the other days of the week and both weekend days, the pool has a staff of five lifeguards on duty.

"We have more on Tuesdays and Thursdays because we have two day cares who come in" to swim on those days, said Ms. Pyeatt.

Lifeguarding may look easy, but it is a job that is loaded with responsibility, and "most of the time it is their first job," she said. "It's tough to have to learn all the rights and wrongs of being employed, and (in addition) being responsible for 200 or so kids" who are swimming.

"Mostly they do a good job," Ms. Pyeatt said. "It's a special group of kids who do this."

Christian Papoutsas, 19; Valarie Thomas, 17; Chris Considine, 22; Paul Houk, 18; Celeste Skidmore, 15; and Howard Flowers, 18, are six of this special group. All are lifeguards working the city pools this summer; all have strong backgrounds in swimming; all have definite plans for their educations and their futures.

Ms. Papoutsas, who is a student at Midland College, has been working summers as a lifeguard for three years. "I went through swimming lessons as a child," she said, and today enjoys being the teacher of children's swimming lessons.

She takes her job very seriously, saying the most rewarding part of being a lifeguard is "being able to jump in and pull somebody out who doesn't know how to swim, like I did on my first day here. It's a lot of responsibility. The shallow end (can be) full of heads and you can't keep your eye on all of them."

The job has other rewards too. "Its' all the little kids who want to be a lifeguard when they get to be your age."

Valarie Thomas, who will be a senior at Midland High School, agreed. "The kiddie pool and diving well are crucial. If you keep a good look out (especially on those two areas), you do OK."

Sometimes, she added, "you have to

Butlers mark their 69th anniversary

By Marilyn McKnight-Harrison

Our congratulations to Alva and John P Butler, who recently celebrated their 69th wedding anniversary. A dinner party at the Petroleum Club marked the occasion.

Guests were the Butlers' daughter, Jane McAbee; Jane's daughter, Andrea Hatteberg; Andrea's son, John, a sophomore at New Mexico Military Institute; Jesse and Hugh Gilmour and their daughter, Judy Windecker of West Palm Beach, Fla., and Rae Nell Stark.

McKnight-Harrison

Mrs. Butler's birthday falls close to her wedding anniversary, so the festivities continued the following week when she was honored with a lovely luncheon at the home of Jere (Mrs. Bus) Hubbard. Cohostess was Bonnie (Mrs. George) Van Husen.

The Butlers were married on June 30, 1926, in Waco. They moved to Midland in 1927 when Mr. Butler joined First National Bank as a teller. He later went on to become president, chairman of the board and chairman emeritus. He also was a consultant for Republic Bank. The couple have been active in Midland's church, civic and social circles throughout the years.

We hear that the Butlers and the Gilmours' friendship dates back to World War II. Jesse was a young teacher here, and Hugh was stationed at Midland Army Air Field. The Butlers hosted the Gilmours' wedding reception when they married in 1942.

"COME END A memorable weekend and join us for brunch." So began the invitations, which went out to a group of friends from the Midland and Lee High Schools' Classes of 1985, who were in town recently for their 10-year reunion.

Most of the girls had been classmates until the ninth grade when a boundary change split up the group.

Held at the home of Patti and David DeFrance, the party was hosted by their daughter, Michele DeFrance Matney of Lubbock. Among the class members present were Ellen Leggott Orr, Sally Hunt Norris, Pat Sanchez Mata, Laura White McAughan, Kara Alther Shipley, Magan Donnelly Catney, Stephanie Brown, Adrian Wurtz, Christy Raney, Nira Sharma Greer and Shari Saikin Jankowsky.

Among mothers stopping by were Cathe (Mrs. Bob) Leggott, Sarah (Mrs. Russell) Neisig, Karen (Mrs. Ron) Westbrook and Carol Ann (Mrs. Lynn) Hunt.

The young women enjoyed making a videotape to send to their close friend, Andrea Neisig Bates, now of Moscow, Russia, who was unable to be present.

The reunion weekend kicked off with a cocktail party and dance for members of both high school classes at the Holiday Inn. The following day found both classes meeting on the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest but at separate picnics. That night, Lee alumni gathered at the Holiday Inn for a Las Vegas Night and seated dinner, and the MHS group met at The Bar for supper and fraternizing.

THE BIG BEND AREA and Davis Mountains was their destination when Chita and Ronald Meyer entertained Arlene and Jerry Temte of San Antonio, first time visitors to West Texas, over the Fourth of July holidays.

The couples enjoyed a night at the historic Gage Hotel at Marathon, breakfasted in Alpine and then drove over to Marfa to see where the movie, "Giant," was filmed. They continued their sightseeing in Fort Davis, where they toured the fort and browsed in the shops before spending the night in nearby Balmorhea. Final stop before the visitors enplaned for home was Pecos, where they bought the delicious cantaloupe, for which the area is known.

BILLIE AND JIM ROSS recently traveled to France for Rotary International's convention in Nice.

Some 34,000 persons were in attendance at the convention, the largest ever held in Europe, says Jim, who was the Midland Rotary Club's delegate.

Some six cities housed the delegates, who were then bused to Nice for convention activities. The Rosses, who were based in Cannes, left the States early to do some preconvention sightseeing. They particularly enjoyed Monte Carlo in Monaco and Menton, a historic city off the tourists' beaten path, with its charming Old World atmosphere.

After the convention, the Rosses traveled to Paris, where they spent a couple of days seeing the sights.

When we asked Jim how many familiar faces he saw in that huge throng, he replied, "Surprisingly just one, Ralph McLaughlin of Big Spring, who is a high-ranking Rotary official." He was moderator of a membership seminar Jim attended at the event.

POOL: Responsibility is key for lifeguards

rescue little kids before (they get into something) over their heads."

Ms. Thomas, who has been a lifeguard since she was 15, is no stranger to being employed. "When I was 15, I had been working for five years with my dad's company, so I already knew how to work with people. It wasn't that much of a change."

She is counting on her summer job eventually helping her in her chosen profession. She wants to attend Baylor University and study physical therapy, and "this (job) helps a lot."

Chris Considine, at 22, is one of the oldest lifeguards employed by the city this year, and his plans are already in motion — he will attend Southern Methodist University Law School in the fall. His years as an undergraduate at Southwestern University in Georgetown got him into lifeguarding in the first place.

"I took a class in college my freshman year and it happened to be a lifeguarding class. I had taken it to be fit, and I wound up at the end of the semester with a card that said I was a lifeguard. I had to get CPR and first aid as well. Summer was coming up, and I thought lifeguards got paid pretty good, so I got a job at a camp in Massachuetts."

In spite of the fact that lifeguards get to spend their working hours in the sun by the pool, these experts say it is not all fun and games. "The hardest part is dealing with the stress of it," Considine said. "When you are on the stand and realize how many people you are responsivle for, it can become pretty taxing.

"For everything you see, there are probably two or three things you don't see. The last thing you want to see is when you are on the stand and somebody is in trouble."

Lifeguards must be watchful at all times. "Sometimes we have about 400 people in here," he said, nodding at the pool.

Paul Houk will attend Texas Tech University in the fall, where he too plans to study physical therapy. Lifeguarding will help him achieve that goal, he said, "because I get to interacat with people a lot" while he is at work.

The West Texas heat can be too much at times, he said, but sometimes, when no one else is in the pool, the lifeguards get to play.

"It's a good summer job. It pays well and I just like doing it."

Celeste Skidmore, at 15, is the youngest lifeguard on duty at city pools this summer. Soon to be a student at Lee High School, she has been on the City of Midland swim team for years. "I taught swimming lessons last year and I'm good with kids," she said.

Being the youngest of the group hasn't been a problem for her. "They don't really look at me as younger."

She is saving her paychecks "so I can fix up a car," she said, and though her goal right now is to become a chiropractor, "probably by then I won't want to be," she laughed.

In the meantime, being a lifeguard suits her just fine. "I like to be out in the sun and get (paid)," she said. "I'm probably going to stay a lifeguard."

Howard Flowers, a recent Midland High School graduate, is heading for Cornell University on a swimming scholarship. He decided to become a lifeguard, he said, because "I had been swimming for a long time and thought I had pretty good skills. It looked like a good summer job, so I took a class" and became certified.

He was on the swim team at MHS, competing in the backstroke and individual medley. "I've been swiming for 14 years now — with the City of Midland for eight years."

Like many of his peers, Flowers enjoys working with the children who come to the pool for swimming lessons. "I think it's a good idea for kids to start swimming young," he said. "It's definitely a head start for you." And if a child is interested in competitive swimming, "the younger you start, the better your chances of being on a team in the future."

And like his peers, Flowers enjoys his job. "You get to have fun, talk to a lot of people out there. I haven't had to save anyone yet, but it's good to know that if they get in big trouble we are there for them.

"It's definitely a job that's good for people my age who need summer work." After all, lifeguards get to learn responsibility, mingle with people of all ages, work with others their own ages — and spend all summer by the pool.

"What better job could you have?"

Study shows medication helps people driven to shop

By Malcolm Ritter
Associated Press

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — Obsessive shoppers who risk bankruptcy to buy things they don't really want or need can be helped by a pill already used to treat other compulsive behaviors, a preliminary study suggests.

It's the first formal study of medication for the condition, which has no standard treatment, experts say.

Compulsive shopping or buying affects approximately 1 percent to 6 percent of the American population. Truly serious cases probably appear in less than 1 percent, said psychiatrist Donald Black.

The problem appears to be more common in women, who mostly buy clothing, shoes and makeup, than in men, who tend to purchase electronic gear and clothes, Black said.

"Most of my patients are thinking about buying all the time," Black said. "They kind of arrange their lives around shopping."

But their euphoria in the store is followed by guilt and disgust when they think about what they've done, he said. The urge to shop can be so powerful that people go bankrupt or lose their job because they were too busy shopping to show up on time, he said.

'Most of my patients are thinking about buying all the time. They kind of arrange their lives around shopping.'

— Donald Black, psychiatrist

Black, an associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Iowa School of Medicine in Iowa City, presented results of the treatment study Wednesday at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association.

He found that of the 10 compulsive shoppers in the study, nine cut their shopping at least in half after they started taking fluvoxamine twice a day.

Fluvoxamine is most commonly used in the United States to treat obsessive-compulsive disorder, a condition marked by intrusive thoughts and irresistible rituals like hand-washing.

The study was sponsored by two pharmaceutical companies that jointly market the drug in the United States, Solvay Pharmaceuticals of Marietta, Ga., and The Upjohn Co. of Kalamazoo, Mich.

After a few days to a few weeks on the drug, the patients were shopping less often and spending less money, starting to pay off debts and having fewer arguments with their spouses, which had frequently been triggered by the shopping bills, Black said.

Moreover, "if they had an urge to shop they could use willpower to control themselves, whereas before ... it just wouldn't work," Black said.

One man, who had been basically living off his wife's income while spending nearly all his take-home pay on clothes, cut his purchases to $200 a month from $800 a month.

Dr. Gary Christenson, an assistant psychiatry professor at the University of Minnesota who wasn't involved with the study, called it exciting because of the lack of a standard treatment.

Parents should help defuse sibling rivalry

By Dr. Hap LeCrone
N.Y. Times News Service

During the summer, when family members are prone to spend more time together, parents may be more conscious of sibling rivalry. It often leads them to believe they have somehow failed in parenting when the kids bicker and fuss.

Some parents even feel they are responsible for what their children think and feel. The truth is, parents have no control over this.

Each child probably has a different perception of events and happenings that have occurred within the family. These perceptions are the basis for sibling rivalry. Parents can model and manage the family unit, but the child will still form his or her own perception and keep that memory.

Some family therapists feel that rivalries are the outcroppings of jealousies as children compete for parental attention.

This competition between siblings may surface in outward signs of trivial accusations. Sometimes these unkind remarks are unresolved conflicts that have been ongoing for a long time and are caused by hidden issues. As the family unit spends more time together, these rivalries heat up.

Unmet psychological needs — part of every person's life — are sources of contention and often keep siblings from the harmony their parents desire. Following are examples of unmet needs:

- Power and control. Tom, the older of two brothers, is home from college. He wants to play golf with some of his buddies. But his younger brother, Joe, expected Tom to drive him to his soccer match. Tom felt he would lose some of his power and control if he gave in and took Joe to the soccer meet. As the elder sibling, Tom felt he should have the power to decide where each of them was going.
- Competition. Joe however, felt he had always had to compete for his family's attention. With Tom off in college, he had his place in the sun with his family. With Joe's return, he once again had to assume second billing. His complaint was that Tom always "got his way."
- Attention. Although Joe feels he doesn't get the attention he deserves, at the same time he really missed his big brother and was hoping that during the time Tom was home for the summer the two could spend lots of time together. Joe wanted attention from his older sibling, also.
- Freedom and separation. Tom had matured and no longer felt so dependent on his parents and did not want to lose this feeling of independence.

Families with minor conflicts, such as these, need to learn to solve problems by negotiating. This includes using good communication skills, really listening to each person's point of view, plus respecting each individual, trusting them and realizing that every child has different interests and goals.

As a rule, parents should think of themselves as moderators, not decision makers, in solving problems between siblings. For just as sibling rivalry is a normal part of growing up, it is also part of learning to live with others.

Healthy families need not be afraid of these rivalries. Accepting them, feeling the tug of war that accompanies them is part of the parent-child interaction that results in unconditional love and confidence.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Flowering plants can help bring color to summer gardens

By Deborah A. Benge-Frost

Benge-Frost

Need some late summer and fall color for your garden? There's a couple of warm season flowers that will do just that. They will germinate and grow quickly, and take the summer heat and unrelenting sunlight. They are zinnias and bachelor buttons.

Zinnias range in colors of red, orange, purple, pink, salmon, yellow and white. They are not only beautiful, but easy to grow as well. They grow quickly and bloom fast from direct seeded or transplant. Keep them dead headed and they will bloom until frost.

Direct seeding in mid-summer will produce an abundance of color for some otherwise color-starved months. Hot weather doesn't seem to bother them as long as they get a good soaking on an as-needed basis, usually every five to seven days.

Zinnias are for the beginner and brown-thumb gardener. They need sun — at least five to six hours a day for satisfactory bloom and healthy plants. Warmth and well-drained soils are what it takes to grow zinnias.

Work up the soil by spading or tilling to a six- to eight-inch depth and incorporate a few inches of composted organic matter as well as a slow-release fertilizer. After the soil is prepared, sow zinnia seeds thinly and cover with a quarter-inch of fine soil. Keep soil slightly moist until seedlings are up and growing.

Seedling will germinate in seven to 10 days. When they have one or two pairs of true leaves, thin or transplant to the recommended spacing on the seed packet — anywhere from 10 to 24 inches, depending on whether it's a dwarf, medium or large growing cultivar.

Thinning is extremely important and will help you avoid thin, spindly, disappointing results. It can also help you avoid powdery mildew, a common fungus that attacks zinnias. Bite the bullet and thin.

After plants are well established, mulch them with about three to four inches of mulch. Water deep on an as-needed basis by looking for subtle signs of water stress or sticking your finger in the soil to feel for soil moisture. Avoid getting water on the leaves, especially during the heat of the day.

Pick lots of flowers for bouquets and for drying. These dry very well in borax, silica gel and other dessicants.

Another great flower that has many of the same characteristics as zinnias are gomphrena, also known as bachelor buttons or globe amaranth.

Gomphrena can thrive in heat and strong light. They're easy to grow from seed or transplant, and need very little care after they are established. Colors range from purple, rose and pink to white, and there are some reds and oranges. The flowers are about one inch across, roundish and dry extremely well just by hanging.

Experienced gardeners save a few seeds each year to sow in their gardens in the summer. This plant likes the heat so much that it's not even interested in growing until about June.

Pick a site that is in full sun or has at at least five hours of full sun and excellent drainage. Avoid a site that stays wet or doesn't drain well. Prepare the soil in the same manner as lined out for the zinnias. After they germinate and are in the one- or two-leaf stage, you need to thin to about a one-foot to one-and-one-half-foot spacing. Thinned plants can be transplanted if you want.

Gomphrena can be bought in regular sizes, which are about two feet high and almost that wide. There also are dwarfs. Some of the dwarfs are not as nice as the regular size, so if you've got room, be sure to grow some of the tall ones.

Mulch plants and water on an as-needed basis. Few pests will bother gomphrena but there are some rather large grey blister beetles that will chow down. If you find you've got these, a couple of days of checking and squashing will take care of them. Root rot is the other problem you might see if soils stay wet too long or they don't drain well.

These will give you big time color until the first freeze. They require very little care and don't seem to need any additional fertilizer. Be sure to save a few seeds for next year and harvest lots of flower heads for air drying. These dry very well and can be used in all kinds of decoration.

If your garden is lacking some of the color you'd like, don't hesitate to still plant zinnias and gomphrena. You'll be glad you did. Remember, these and other flowers will be ready for the Horticulture Show at the Permian Basin Fair in September.

If you have questions concerning these or other horticulture plants, be sure to contact your local county extension office.

From Antelope to Zapata, Texas 16 is scenic route

By Jerry Flemmons
Associated Press

Call Texas 16 the A-to-Z road of history.

It slides away from U.S. 281 outside the little North Texas town of Antelope, crosses the Brazos River and ends, more than 500 miles later, beside the Rio Grande and Falcon Lake at Zapata.

In between these alphabetic extremes is a mass of Texas lore and legends, history and scenery, and much of what makes Texas TEXAS — open country, small towns, cattle and cowboys.

Begin in the lower right corner of Archer County, at Antelope, once a spring where antelopes and Indians watered, and later a stop for cattle herds moved north to Kansas railheads, then drive south through the town of Loving, best remembered for a nearby wagon train massacre in 1871 — it's a winding, two-lane route all the way to Mexico.

Here are major sites and sights along Texas 16:

GRAHAM — A pure cowboy town just outside Possum Kingdom Lake, this was the center of an Indian reservation established in 1858 that lasted only one year. Graham began in 1871. Mesquite trees on the square prove this truly is West Texas. Under that huge oak a block from the square, 40 ranchers met in 1877 to form the Texas Cattle Raisers Association, basically a joint venture to stop rustling. South across Interstate 20 is Desdemona, once an oil boomlet community named Hog Town, and De Leon, around which grow peaches and melons worth shopping for in the summer.

COMANCHE — In the Jack Wright Saloon here, John Wesley Hardin, one of Texas' most prolific killers, shot a deputy. That was in 1874. Subsequently, Hardin was killed in El Paso, though he remains the best-known citizen of this one-time stop on the Western Cattle trail. Comanche, too, has the state's oldest log courthouse (1856), preserved at a local museum. And there's the Fleming Oak on the southwest corner of the square. The story is that Martin Fleming hid behind the tree when attacked by Comanches in 1854. In this century, when workers prepared to cut down the oak because the square was being paved, Fleming — then called Uncle Mart — held them off with a loaded rifle. The oak saved him, he saved it, and it still provides shade on hot summer days in Comanche.

GOLDTHWAITE — Another oak tree here in this languid little town has a sham claim — that it sits in the exact geographic center of Texas. Not true, of course, but such was believed for years. South of Goldthwaite begins the small cedar-covered hills and rocky pastures cut by clearwater streams of the Texas Hill Country. Watch for the defining icons of that fair land: cottonwoods along the creek banks, prickly pear cactus, goats and sheep, little cemeteries shaded by oaks, the one-finger wave from passing pickups (the driver just lifts a forefinger from the steering wheel; it's a friendly gesture).

SAN SABA — The surrounding pecan forest — look for the giant pecan trees on the lawn of the red brick courthouse — makes this "The Pecan Capital of Texas" and indeed pecans are for sale everywhere. Near here in 1847, German settlers signed a peace treaty with Indians. Neither side broke the treaty. Still, surrounding hills were used for smoke signals by Indians.

In San Saba's history is a brutal war between rustlers and cattlemen, which even Texas Rangers couldn't stop for almost 20 years. Mill Pond Park with a lake, waterfall and museum is one of the prettiest in Texas.

LLANO — Through the village of Cherokee, winding down to Llano, watch for the farmhouse painted a Mediterranean blue — decidedly out of place in weathered-gray Central Texas.

Downtown is a National Historic District worth walking around in, and the old bridge across the Llano River is a picture point. Granite is a major stone around here, but silver also was discovered early, and there are quartz deposits. Nine miles south is a Texas landmark: Enchanted Rock — the salmon-colored dome (geologists know it as a "batholith") rises 325 feet over the horizon. This is America's second-largest rock, and is easily climbed (it covers 70 acres and has a circumference of three miles). Now a state park, legend has it that the ghost of a Comanche chief roams about the rock, and indeed during summer the huge stone makes noises, though scientists speculate the creaks are caused by cooling at night. In 1841 Jack Hays stood off 100 Indians from the summit and lived to become a Texas Ranger legend.

FREDERICKSBURG — Texas' favorite German town, where chicken-fried steak is called "Weiner schnitzel" and sausage is on menus as "wurst." Once Fredericksburg was the last outpost between San Antonio and El Paso, 500 miles west, and its history is pure Texas western, though always lived through a German culture.

Resting in a valley surrounded by hills, most prominent of which is Cross Mountain, the town retains a heavy Teutonic architectural appearance with half-timbered buildings and mansard roofs. Antique stores, restaurants with German-intended menus and B&Bs are everywhere, which accounts for the heavy tourist traffic, especially on weekends. If nothing else, step into the Admiral Nimitz State Historical Park — that's the old hotel that looks like a ship. Nimitz was a Fredericksburg native and World War II naval hero, and his family built the hotel in 1850.

KERRVILLE — Interstate 10, the only high-traffic highway through the Hill Country, crosses west here, where the main attraction is a hard-core cowboy culture and the Guadalupe River, beside which are a series of parks and drives that are among the state's most pleasant. See the Cowboy Artists of America Museum for the very best works of Texas' current working western painters and sculptors. Historical note: Here, in the late 1930s, strategy was devised to destroy the dratted screwworm, which was decimating the American cattle industry. Here, too, Charles Schreiner III saved the longhorn from extinction, and the Schreiner family's Y.O. Ranch has a large herd on display. The ranch, which also has exotic animals such as giraffes and elands, is open for touring.

BANDERA — South from Kerrville is a fine stretch of Texas 16, narrow and twisting, laid through steep-sided canyons and beside pretty little streams, few houses, here-and-there herds of cattle, a few goats and even — in 1990s Texas — an emu or two. It travels into and through Medina, Texas' apple-growing center, and beside the Medina River into Bandera, the self-proclaimed "Cowboy Capital of the World."

Certainly, Bandera looks cowboyish, with a long, western-fronted main street centered around the Frontier Hotel and its almost-famous Purple Cow Bar. All around are dude ranches — the Mayan, Dixie, Silver Spur, Flying L and others — and the in-town Frontier Times Museum eas-ily is the state's most eclectic repository of esoterica, from a totem pole to a South American shrunken head.

SAN ANTONIO — Texas 16 enters from the northwest, then disappears for a while into this cradle of Texas, which needs very little explanation. The Alamo, four Spanish missions, three Spanish plazas, the downtown river.

JOURDANTON — The landscape, and Texas, changes, as ol' 16 exits San Antonio and runs ruler-straight south through Poteet, which boasts the world's largest strawberry — a 7-foot-tall concrete strawberry weighing 1,600 pounds. Naturally, strawberries grow in all the surrounding fields, and Poteet is the "Strawberry Capital of Texas."

A somewhat effete foodstuff for what's beginning to look a lot like desert. This is the "brasada," the mesquite and cacti plain from which most of Texas' cattle empire came. Once this area north of the Rio Grande was filled with wild longhorns, and they were chased, caught and became, after the Civil War, herds driven north.

FREER — A huge snake statue grabs the eye of passing motorists here, but Freer has sense enough not to proclaim itself "Rattlesnake Capital of Texas." Texas 16 remains long and straight, and south of here, as much — perhaps more — Spanish is spoken as English. Out in the dry flatland — left or right — can be found ruins of settlements dating into the 1700s, and evidence of old roads from Mexico into San Antonio. Hebbronville, which benefits from surrounding oilfields, remains much as it once was, just a dusty little faraway town.

ZAPATA — End of the road. Everybody out, to see, if nothing else, Falcon Lake, good for fishing (black bass seems to be the best catch) and just lazing beside. Zapata is old, settled about 1770, and today an out-and-out fake. The Zapata we see was built after Falcon Lake. The old Zapata, then named Carrizo, is under water. At one time old Zapata was capital of a briefly formed Republic of the Rio Grande, a land grab that failed in 1840. So Texas 16, the A-to-Z road, ends as it began, amid history and scenery, a two-lane journey into time and space.

Exercise effective no matter what time it is

Associated Press

Don't fret over exercising at the "best" time of the day, say physical education consultants, who point out many athletes try to exercise in the morning when their basal metabolic rate is higher, so they'll burn more calories.

But the real difference between morning and evening workouts, the experts explain, is only a few calories.

DEAR ABBY

Woman meets future husband through ad

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to tell "Sorry in New Jersey" that placing a personal ad in the newspaper does not necessarily mean that she was desperate. What better way to screen a potential date than through anonymous correspondence?

Van Buren

Seven years ago, I met my husband through a personal ad, and he is a wonderful, delightful man who wanted to get married, but didn't know anyone in his town who interested him.

I lived in a small town several miles away where everyone knew everyone. The single men were lacking in the qualities I was looking for in a man — so I placed an ad.

I received letters from some very nice men, a couple of jerks, and a man who described himself as "toothless" and wanted to live so far out in the country, it would take a whole day to drive into town. (I hope he found someone.)

I told my mother that we met through "a mutual friend," but later I felt uncomfortable about the deception and I told her the truth. When people ask how we met and we say through a personal ad, they're usually shocked and want to know the whole story. — PERSONALLY HAPPY

DEAR HAPPY: I am happy for you. But because I've had so many readers tell me how they've been deceived by someone they met through a personal ad, I, too, am leery.

DEAR ABBY: With all of the recent publicity about kidnapping, I'm amazed to see so many children left unattended by distracted or preoccupied parents. Almost every day, I see toddlers wandering around unattended in grocery stores, shopping centers and the post office. Apparently, some parents don't realize that all it takes is an instant for someone to snatch a child.

Is there a polite way to refocus a parent's attention on the child? Or, if I see a child who could easily be snatched by a stranger, should I just mind my own business? — E. MICHAEL FISHER, ATLANTA

DEAR MR. FISHER: A child left alone who could be easily snatched is everyone's business. You would have done both the child and the parent a favor had you approached the parent and, in a friendly, quiet tone, said, "I found your child unattended, and was concerned about his safety."

You may get a defensive reaction, but you will know you did the right thing.

DEAR ABBY: "San Diego Housewife" wrote about the lack of attention to the "No Solicitations" sign on her door. Here's a poem I wrote years ago as an alternative to the sign:

SOLICITORS

If you've something to sell, you may as well know —
I might have the interest,
but not the dough.
So, save us both time,
and, please, just go.
For I know what you'll say,
and my answer is, "No."

— LYNN MEAGHER, GRAYSLAKE, ILL.

DEAR ABBY: I am dating a man who is very money-minded. Whenever he gives me a gift, he not only tells me how much he paid for it, he shows me the sales slip.

When he takes me out, he never fails to tell me how much the evening cost him. When I wear something new, he asks, "How much did that set you back?"

There is much I admire about this man. He owns a very successful business, and he is not poor. But his focus on money makes me uncomfortable.

He has asked me to marry him, and my father says he would make a good husband. My mother, however, says, "A man who is that money-minded has got to be tight with a dollar."

I'm 22 and he's 32. What do you think? — UNCERTAIN

DEAR UNCERTAIN: Perhaps by telling you how much he's spending on you, he is trying to show you how much you mean to him. However, a trait that makes you "uncomfortable" before marriage can make you miserable afterward. Since you have doubts, don't rush into anything — wait until you are absolutely certain.

DEAR ABBY: I was recently the victim of a scam operated by a female prison inmate. We exchanged letters for nearly a year.

Claiming that she needed money for "court costs," she asked me to cash some postal money orders.

I was a bit suspicious, but the money orders had official-looking embossed lettering, and I had specifically asked the bank officials to inspect them for authenticity.

After several months of silence from the inmate, I was notified by the postal inspector that the amount on the money orders had been fraudulently increased.

I documented everything, notified the FBI, the parole board and the Justice Department. No prosecution was forthcoming because the inmate was already doing hard time. However, I'm paying for her crime, because the bank that vouched for the authenticity of the money orders debited my account.

Abby, please inform your readers of this scheme. — BADLY STUNG IN LONG BEACH

DEAR STUNG: Thanks for the warning. Readers who correspond with prison inmates would be wise to avoid financial dealings.

DEAR ABBY: We are blue-collar workers with an income around $35,000 to $40,000 a year. We have attended the weddings and receptions for at least four of our friends' children.

I thought $40 was a reasonable gift, but was terribly embarrassed later to find out that two of the weddings cost $25 per plate. I asked several friends what they thought was a reasonable "gift" and not one would give me a reply. I guess the nature of the question was too personal.

Now I am asking you, Abby. Could you give me some input here? Were my gifts out of line? Since the wedding season is upon us, I need to know soon. Thank you. — WEDDING BLUES IN PENNSYLVANIA

P.S. We have already felt compelled to bring the amount up to $50.

DEAR WEDDING BLUES: Your gifts were definitely not out of line. You should spend no more on ANY gift than you can comfortably afford — whether that means $10 or $100.

To receive a collection of Abby's most memorable poems and essays, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's "Keepers," P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447.

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Inventor of Davy lamp refused to patent product so it could be freely available

Associated Press

PENZANCE, England — Distinguished English chemist Sir Humphry Davy, inventor of the Davy lamp, a safety device that reduced the risk of coal mine explosions, was born here in 1778.

At the age of 22, he was named professor of chemistry at the Royal Institution of London and conducted research there in several fields, including electrochemistry.

In his work Davy isolated the chemical elements sodium and potassium, discovered the anesthetic properties of nitrous oxide and the true nature of oxymuriatic acid, which he named as the element chlorine.

In 1815, Davy invented the miners' safety lamp bearing his name but refused to patent it to make it freely available. Davy was knighted in 1812 and elected president of the Royal Society in 1820. He died in Switzerland in 1829.

City of Cleveland named after founder

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — This city was founded by soldier and land speculator Moses Cleaveland, born in Connecticut in 1754.

Cleaveland, a Yale graduate, served as a captain in George Washington's army.

After the Revolution, Connecticut was granted 3.8 million acres of land in present-day Ohio. As a director of the Connecticut Land Company, Cleaveland led the initial exploration in 1796 of "New Connecticut," the area's original name.

The city established on the Cuyahoga River was named in his honor. Cleaveland returned to Connecticut and remained in public life there until his death in 1806.

Piano pioneer also made harpsichord

PADUA, Italy (AP) — Bartolommeo Cristofori (1665-1731), Italian harpsichord maker, is also the reputed originator of the piano.

After moving to Florence in 1687, he invented a hammer-action harpsichord that permitted variations in soft (piano) and loud (forte) tones.

Cristofori's development of the pianoforte in 1710 or 1711 made him a pioneer in the development of the modern piano.

Make a splash at pool with toddler devices

By Kelly DeGarmo
N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH, Texas — Swimming pools are popular hangouts among parents and their toddlers during summer. There are relaxing moments, but the experience isn't a quiet day at the beach for Mom or Dad.

It never fails. Just when little Susie and Johnny are playing happily in the baby pool, two big kids, usually boys, invade the toddler turf with splashing, jumping and yelling. Even toddlers themselves can get into some major screaming matches, usually over each other's toys. Mom or Dad must jump up to play referee.

No pool adventure would be complete without boo-boos on toes. And there's the diaper dilemma.

"We have had diapers disintegrate all over the pool," says Linda Parker of Fort Worth, who has a 2-year-old son. "I was so embarrassed. I don't know what the answer is. I guess everyone knows that baby pools are for babies, so accidents are going to happen."

On a recent visit to the YMCA in southwest Fort Worth, the baby pool was undergoing chlorine shock treatment and was temporarily shut down because of a potty accident in the pool. "Yuck" wasn't the only reaction. The kids were heartbroken.

Whether to put a diaper on the child under a bathing suit is a common quandary among many parents of infants and toddlers. After about 30 minutes, the waterlogged diaper weighs down the baby and starts coming apart in the pool. Some pools don't allow disposable diapers, and others permit them so long as diapers are covered with proper swim attire.

One solution that's becoming more popular is the waterproof diaper pant, which sells for about $10. There are a couple of brands, but one good choice comes from North Carolina-based Family Clubhouse, which boasts plastic-coated fabric and snug-fitting legs to minimize leakage. Worn alone or under a swimsuit, there's no bulky weight for the baby to carry.

"They don't need anything else weighing them down when they're trying to balance themselves in the water," says Julie McCarthy of Fort Worth, mother of a 21-month old daughter. "They really do work.... Accidents are going to happen, but I feel more confident."

McCarthy, who swims nearly every day with her children at Ridglea Country Club, has some other pool pointers for parents. She suggests putting rubber water shoes on the kids' feet. These can be found at Target and other discount stores for under $7 per pair.

"Their feet are soft," says Chuck Burr, aquatics director at Ridglea. "These give them more traction and mobility."

They also protect against stubbed toes and burned feet.

Toys and flotation devices typically aren't allowed in adult pools, but they usually are permitted in wading pools. Because kids often want to play with each other's toys and floats rather than their own, take items that you don't mind losing, McCarthy advises. Pack a bunch of McDonald's Happy Meal toys, which every kid owns, and identify your belongings in permanent marker or with a piece of yarn.

Most baby pools don't have lifeguard supervision so parents must pay close attention at all times. Inner tubes and flotation belts can give parents a false sense of security. Remember, there's no substitute for a Coast Guard-approved life jacket.

If parents don't feel comfortable confronting one another about a problem or reprimanding a 10-year-old who is trespassing on toddler turf, they should report the behavior to a lifeguard or staff member. Wet'n Wild, among other places, counts on its adult season-pass holders to help police the action.

"We will say something when we need to, but our parents do a good job of letting visitors know about the rules," says Bill Monte, Wet'n Wild director of marketing. "They respect the pool and take care of it like it's theirs. That minimizes a lot of problems."

Summertime activities increase risk of children's accidents

By Dr. Paula Prezioso
Associated Press

For children, the warm summer months usually mean outdoor fun — but also an increased risk of accidents that may require emergency medical attention, including a cut or wound.

Parents should know when a laceration requires a trip to a doctor to have the wound treated. For example, a deep cut or gaping wound may require stitches to stop bleeding.

If a child sustains a cut that may require emergency attention, place a clean towel or gauze bandage over the wound, elevate the area and apply direct pressure to the injury.

Your family doctor should be contacted, or the child should be taken to a hospital emergency room if bleeding continues for more than a few minutes, especially if the wound is large, on the face or in an area where complete healing is a concern, such as the hands.

Do not delay in seeking medical attention for a wound. The risk of infection increases as long as the wound remains open. If it is a face wound, the patient may be referred to a plastic surgeon.

To ensure that the wound does not contain debris from the accident, the attending physician will generally clean and carefully examine the wound before stitching it closed.

A local anesthesia is usually injected at the site of the wound to avoid pain to the patient as the stitches are applied. Older children usually cooperate with the doctor if a parent stays with the child. But toddlers and babies usually cannot be kept still and may have to be restrained during the procedure.

A topical antibiotic is often put on the area after the wound is closed. This medication usually must be applied to the injury several times a day for several days afterward.

Parents should make sure the doctor is filled in completely about how the accident happened. This may help in the detection of less apparent injuries that may have occurred at the same time.

Contact the doctor if there appears to be any kind of infection setting in during the healing process. In most cases, doctors will use non-absorbable stitches to close external wounds. These stitches are removed after the cut has healed.

DRAMA Camp

Director Rene Chambers brings parents and children heart to heart in this summer's Drama Camp, set for July 24-Aug. 4.

"'Heart to Heart' is a series of episodes that are all about family and age and growing up," said Ms. Chambers, Drama Camp director. "The story is told in a humorous view, and I think it will be equally entertaining to people of all ages."

The musical, written by Deborah Jung, will be staged at 8 p.m. Aug. 4 at Centennial Plaza. The actors will range in age from kindergarten through sixth grade. They will learn their acting skills at Drama Camp.

"What makes Drama Camp different than any other education program that's been done in Midland that I am aware of is the merger of the educational aspects and performance for students in kindergarten through sixth grade," she said.

Ms. Chambers has nine years professional experience directing young actors and seven years experience teaching

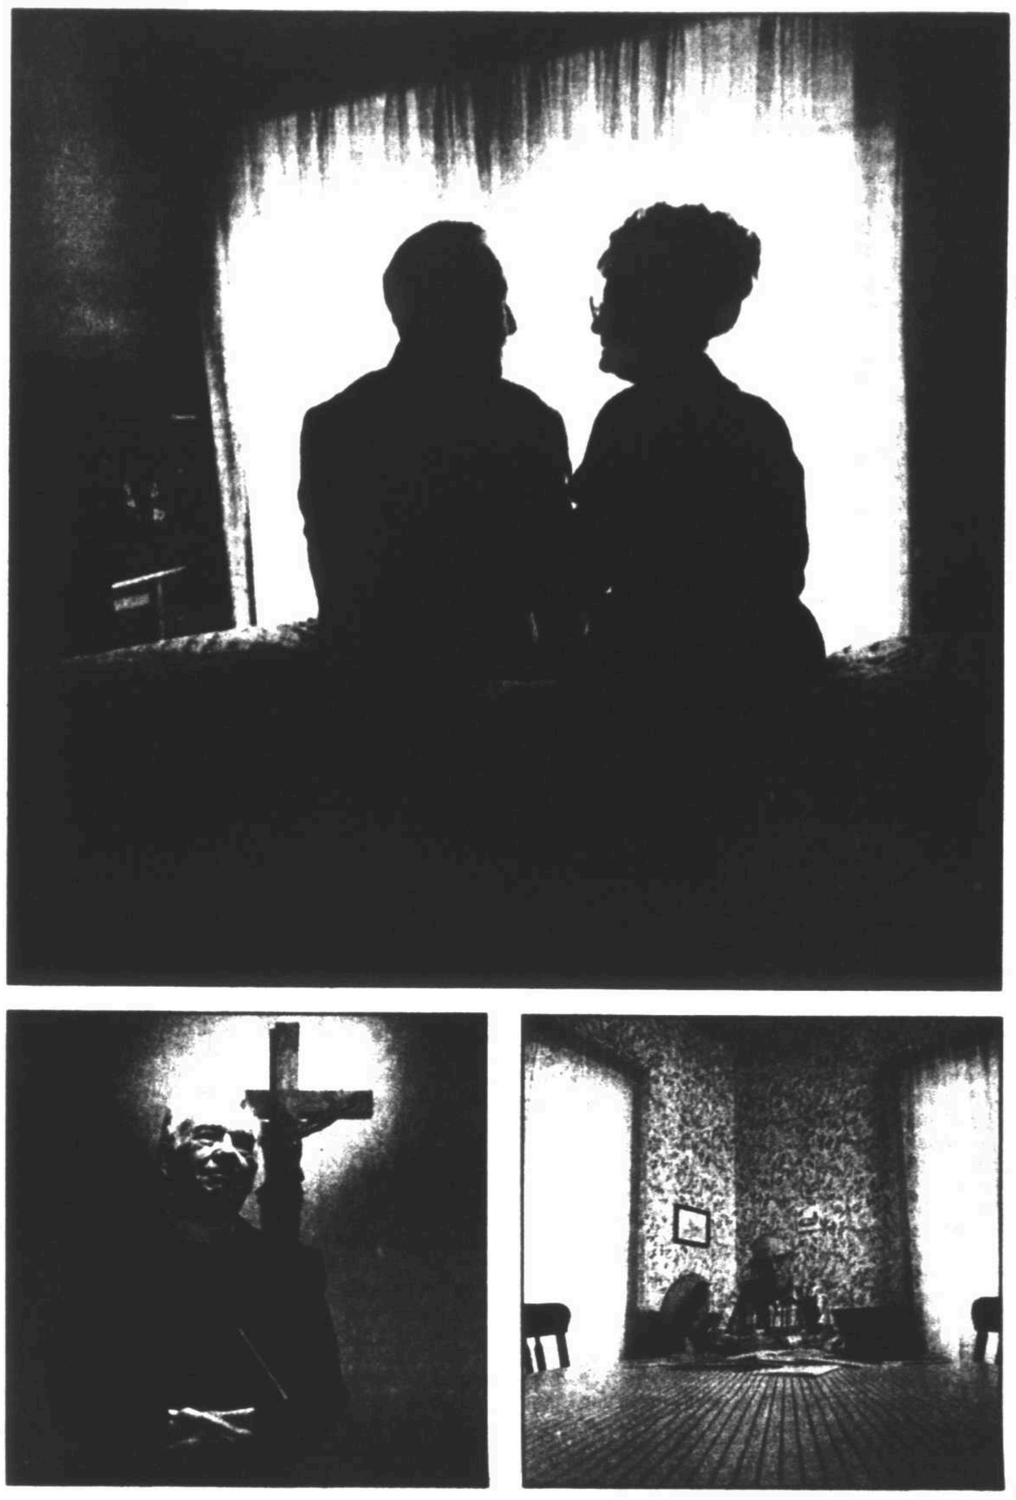
Quiet Pride



Aging Wisdom of the American West

Stories by Georgia Temple

Photographer Robert Alan Clayton spent three years and 40,000 miles documenting the lives of 36 Americans between the ages of 57 and 114 who live in the rural West. The result of his journey hangs at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., in the "Quiet Pride: Ageless Wisdom of the American West" exhibit on display through July 23.

His father's stories inspired him to want to capture those told by others. In his book, "Quiet Pride," Clayton writes of his father, Albert "Al" Clayton, who was a pitcher for the Boston Red Sox and the Cincinnati Reds, and then a basketball star for the Ohio Buckeyes.

-"I sat beside him in great awe as he introduced his life," Clayton said. "Tale after tale, story after story, my father painted his past for me, his life in the early 1900s as a Major League baseball player and the center in one of this country's first touring pro basketball teams.

"These stories were so inspiring and told with such enthusiasm that I never tired of hearing them ... He was a colorful, caring man, and when he died at the age of 86, my father took this history with him. I regret, through my young years, my inability to photographically record his look, his eyes and powerful hands, to chronicle somehow his wit and wisdom."

Clayton, an award-winning photographer from Colorado, traveled from the high plains of the Dakotas to the hill country of Texas on to California's vineyards and up to Alaska's vastness.

"All through my professional career as a location photographer, I have admired the beauty and character of the American West and the rugged individualism of older Americans," Clayton said. "They, like my father, are products of a world full of experience that come to us now as stories with the power to make our eyes grow wide with wonder as we glimpse a bygone era we can never know again."

Some of the individuals are shown in an activity that defines them — the sheep-shearer shearing a sheep, a weaver at her loom, said Enid Davis, administrative assistant at the museum.

"Others are shown in the environment of their lives — the priest in front of the crucifix, the farmer in his barn, the gardener in her corn patch."

Clayton's selenium toned black and white photographs honor age, its beauty and the living of dreams, she said. "Whether teacher, blacksmith, rodeo cowboy or range cowboy, horsewoman, taxidermist, or logger, each appeared to Clayton to be self-reliant, sustained by their own traditions and sense of place, living the 'good life,' as each, not advertisers, defines it."

The exhibit also features the video tapes of the interviews Clayton conducted with the people he photographed. In addition, the stories — written by J. Bourge Hathaway — and photographs are captured in the book, "Quiet Pride: Ageless Wisdom of the American West."

"I have noticed that people who come in spend a lot of time looking at the pictures and reading the text," Ms. Davis said. "It's not one they rush through."

Ms. Davis also has found the photographs fascinating, and said the exhibit "should appeal to all ages. Kids need to see that people have lived without television and computers and cellular phones and got along just fine."

She also identifies with Clayton in his regret that he didn't capture his father and his stories. "My father turned 51 about 10 days after I

Book: Oswald saw himself as great man but was thought of as outcast

Norman Mailer admits that he never found the "smoking gun," while researching the material for Oswald's Tale, his biography of Lee Harvey Oswald, who assasinated President John Kennedy.

Describing the six months he spent in Minsk going through KGB files, Mailer said in a recent telephone interview, "I hoped when I got access to these files that I might find the smoking gun, but I also knew that the KGB wouldn't open their files if there was one in there."

What Mailer did find, however, was that Oswald — perhaps America's most famous defector — felt as much an outcast in the Soviet Union as he did in America. He had expected to be welcomed to Moscow with open arms, but the Soviet government at first refused even to extend his visa. At that point, Oswald attempted suicide, and the Soviets, fearing they had a public relations nightmare on their hands, allowed him to stay.

But they shadowed his every step.

"Oswald saw himself as a great man," Mailer explained. "He was going to change the world, and in that new world, he would be this huge leader. But even in Russia, he discovered, no one appreciated him like he felt he should be appreciated."

This frustrated — and unproven — sense of greatness is a trait Oswald shared with many of the evil-doers of history. Manson evidently felt this. So, too, did Jeffrey Dahmer.

"One of my fundamental literary beliefs is that whether people are good or evil, they still have humanity," Mailer said. "And we can learn as much from evil people as we can from good people — if we take them seriously enough. But we have a fatal tendency to ignore the depth of commitment in evil people."

One of the great turning points of Oswald's life, Mailer believes, was his failure as a Marine. As was his pattern, Oswald joined the Marine Corps with high expectations, believing he would soon elevate himself to become a leader of men. And as usual, Oswald's experience didn't even come close to those expectations.

"He wound up not being a very good soldier," Mailer said.

'We can learn as much from evil people as we can from good people — if we take them seriously enough.'
—Norman Mailer
author

"He hated the fact that people not as intelligent as he were dominating him and telling him what to do. I think his great war with the world started in the Marine Corps. Whenever you're in the Army or any branch of the services and you don't do well, it remains a scar for the rest of your life. The Marines scarred Oswald."

Oddly, Oswald continued to feel himself a bit of a patriot, although a misunderstood one. He thought he knew best for America, and while he remained in the Soviet Union, Oswald thought he knew best for that country, too — which is a common trait of many people who call themselves "patriots."

This infuriates Mailer.

"I think patriotism is a cheap religion which a lot of bad people use," he said. "Somebody once said that patriotism is the last refuge of scoundrels, and there's a lot of truth in that. If Oswald had lived, he would have fit into one of those groups who have a mistrust of all government."

After all his research, Mailer believes Oswald acted alone in the assassination. But he does believe that the Mafia, in a panic to conceal its own connections to Oswald, coerced Jack Ruby into killing Oswald.

Mailer also believes that both the CIA and the FBI were less than open with the Warren Commission. Both agencies had contact with Oswald, however slight, which is documented in Oswald's Tale.

"This large cover-up by both the CIA and the FBI paralyzed the Warren Commission's investigation, and that's one of the reasons Americans have this huge paranoia that there was a conspiracy," Mailer says emphatically. "In a certain sense, the United States government brought it on itself."

acting and creative drama to young people. The former director of Midland Community Theatre's Pickwick Players, which is for students in the seventh through twelfth grades, she also was education director for the theater.

While she was with MCT, Ms. Chambers had parents request such an opportunity for their children. "I've had so many parents, over the years, ask me about a performance experience for their young ones, their elementary kids.

"But, as far as I know, nothing like this has been done for this age group. This is very new for this area. There are similar programs around, but they are for teen-agers."

The goals of Drama Camp are twofold. "We want to put on a good show, and we want every child who comes to have fun."

"Heart to Heart" provided part of Ms. Chambers' inspiration for Drama Camp. "I had seen the play, 'Heart to Heart' and tried to do it with a group of teenagers.

"Some of the best humor in the show comes from the younger ones, so a teen group can't really effectively do the play. They can't maximize the humor. It was a matter of having the right material and the right audience for it."

Children who have completed grades kindergarten through second grade will attend sessions from 9 a.m. to noon. Children who had completed third through sixth grades will be in drama camp from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and will need to bring a brown bag lunch each day. Drinks will be provided.

Tuition is $65 for the morning session and $130 for the full-day session.

"We'll teach them what performance is and what they need to keep in their minds while they are performing," Ms. Chambers said.

"They are probably going to spend about a fourth of their day learning the music, a fourth in dance class, about a fourth in actual rehearsal of the play and then about a fourth in class learning about theater and performance and presentation.

"The closer we get to performance, the less time we will spend in class. At one point, we will begin to integrate dance music and acting together."

Elizabeth Cleveland, who has assisted with a teen theater education program for the past four summers, is the assistant camp director .

"It's a different kind of experience," Ms. Cleveland said. "I've taught theater to younger kids, but never with the idea that they would get to perform and use the skills that they had learned."

Other instructors include Charlotte Martin, assistant camp director; Will Coombes, music director; Monica Cambron, choreographer; Cheryl Martin, assistant music director; Clayton Cross, assistant choreographer; and instructor Shane Manley.

"Elizabeth is the old lady of the group other than me," Ms. Chambers said of the camp's instructors. "Basically, they're all from late teens to early 20s and a very enthusiastic, creative group of young people."

The camp will be held at First Presbyterian Church.

"We have this wonderful environment — large classrooms, air-conditioned building and an activity area outside so the kids can run and play a part of the day and let out their energies," Ms. Chambers said.

Sponsoring the camp is Texas Best, a non-profit organization that arranges entertainment and recreation in downtown Midland.

"We had a great program, and we were looking for a sponsor," Ms. Chambers said. "Two or three different people recommended Linda Bond and Texas Best. When I went to her, she thought it was a great idea.

"The purpose of Texas Best is to encourage people to come downtown and do downtown activities. We thought that the script, 'Heart to Heart,' was virtually written to be performed in Centennial Plaza. It's just a perfect match."

Enrollment is limited to 10 students in each grade level on a first- come, first-signed basis. Registration is from 4 to 7 p.m. Monday at First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave. After that day, applicants can inquire about remaining openings by calling Ms. Chambers at 520-3312.

"I think a lot of people are going to love it," Ms. Chambers said. "It's what they have been looking for for their children."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Remember lessons learned in the past but do not dwell on missed opportunities. Giving authority figures the respect they are due will greatly simplify your life. Returning to school in the fall could open up new career vistas. Early in 1996, several roads lead to fame and fortune. Keep your standards high! You will never feel like a success if you sell out.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Ginger Rogers, tennis great Margaret Court, drummer Stewart Copeland, singer Ruben Blades.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A good day to putter around home, catching up on your reading or chores. A loved one may be faced with a tough decision. A May-December romance works out great!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): When logic and instinct conflict, follow your heart. Once loved ones see that you are ready to listen, they will confide their concerns. Romance flourishes in an atmosphere of trust.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good news and your friends' encouragement make you strive all the harder to reach a goal. Avoid pastimes that leave you feeling exhausted. Spiritual pursuits are favored over athletic contests.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Before you can take the world by storm, you must develop a plan of action. Stop worrying about things you cannot change. The love temperature will soar once you reveal what is in your heart.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Spend some time alone deciding what you personally can do to turn a sad situation around. Although your leisure time is limited, you can donate a few hours a week to an important community cause.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1NT	Pass	2♣	Pass
2◇	Pass	3NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ◇

It's an old adage that you must spend money to make money. At the bridge table, tricks are the coin of the realm.

After South opened the bidding with one no trump, North used the Stayman Convention to check on the possibility of a 4-4 spade fit. When South denied a four-card major, North went straight to the no-trump game.

West led a low diamond and declarer, noticing that the nine would be a second stopper in the suit, won the ace. A low club to the queen lost to the ace, and East returned the jack of diamonds.

If East held a third diamond, West could play low and the defenders would score four tricks in diamonds. However, since South had denied length in either major, one of the minors had to be four cards long, and the early play strongly suggested it would be in diamonds. So West overtook the jack of diamonds with the queen and continued with the seven to force out the nine. Declarer could not come to nine tricks without at least one spade, but West grabbed the first spade and cashed two diamond tricks for a one-trick set.

Declarer could have made the contract either by holding off the ace of diamonds altogether, or by winning the second diamond. Both those plays, however, would have lost a cold contract had diamonds split 4-3. Still, perhaps South should have deduced the lead was from a five-card suit. The auction pointed to a major suit as a more promising salvo, so a lead from a poor four-card minor is rarely productive.

Musical to take stage for 2 weeks

FORT WORTH — "The Music Man," the third production of Casa Manana's summer musical season, marches onto the stage July 25 for a two-week run, closing Aug. 6.

"The Music Man," one of the 10 most successful musicals in stage history, is a warm and funny recollection of author Meredith Willson's youth in small-town Iowa. This musical comedy, featuring book, music and lyrics by Willson, was an immediate smash hit when it opened on Broadway in December of 1957. The show centers around Professor Harold Hill, a charismatic con man.

Currently at Casa through July 23 is the regional premiere of the musical hit "Forever Plaid." The premiere features the original New York cast.

Performances are at 8 p.m. Tuesday through Friday, 2 and 8 p.m. Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday. Tickets to either musical range from $18 to $25 and are available by calling 1-817-332-CASA or any TicketMaster outlet.

Classes in ballet, pointe, pas de deux, batterie, pirouette and technique were taught by Alexei Zakalinsky of the Bolshoi Ballet Company, Moscow; Susana Benavides of the Ballet National de Mexico, Mexico City; Jenifer Wakefield of the Fort Worth City Ballet; and William Martin-Viscount, director of the Southwest Ballet Center, Fort Worth City Ballet.

All four area dancers performed excerpts from "Swan Lake" at the conclusion of the summer workshop. Interview set Rising country artist Terri Clark will be in the studio of KNFM radio at 2 p.m. Monday.

Ms. Clark's debut single was the most added record nationwide in country music this past week.

Presentation set

KERRVILLE — The cowboy Artists of America Museum is presenting "Poems and Stories of a Saltgrass Cowboy" at 2 p.m. Saturday at the museum, 1550 Bandera Highway.

The program, which is part of the facility's continuing Summer Music Series, features Cowboy Bob Kahla, who refers to himself as "the Saltgrass Cowboy" after a marshland grass common to the Gulf Coast region where he grew up. Representing the fourth generation of his family in the saddle, Kahla trains and breeds quarterhorses.

His writing began in 1990, when he sat down with a few ideas in mind for children's poems. That simple beginning mushroomed into three books — "Poems and Stories of a Saltgrass Cowboy," "Mr. X From Planet X" and "Friends."

"I don't take the credit because these poems just came on me like a gift from God, and I felt like I wanted to share it," Kahla said.

Admission is $3 for adults, $2.50 for seniors and $1 for children. For more information call 1-210-896-2553.

Show to be held

BIG SPRING — The first Big Spring Antiques and Collectibles Show will be Aug. 5-6 in the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum.

Vendors and exhibitors from throughout the Southwest will be on hand.

Painting hangs

"Cliff Dweller," an oil painting by Karen Y. Raymond, hangs this month in the lobby of Bank One Midland, 2301 W. Wall St.

Several of Ms. Raymond's works have been accepted in the Midland Art Association's spring and fall shows held at the Museum of the Southwest and Midland College.

She is a member of the Midland Art Association, the Odessa Art Association and the Palette Club. She is publicity chairman for MAA.

Each month Bank One Midland offers a member of the Palette Club the opportunity to display a painting in the lobby.

Sculptures shown

A showing of bronze sculptures by Midland artist Betty Sue Rose is on display in the lobby of Midland American Bank, 401 W. Texas Ave., through July 31.

The daughter of a ranch foreman, Ms. Rose — an oil painter and watercolorist — gained a perspective of the working cowboy and his heritage from her childhood.

Ms. Rose added bronze to her list of achievements after studying the medium at a Cowboy Artists of America workshop in Kerrville.

The works may be viewed between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Exhibit planned

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University, is hosting through Aug. 30 the exhibition, "The Soviets: Soviet Photography, 1974-1990."

This exhibition of black and while photographs documents the lives of ordinary people living through extraordinary times. The work includes photos taken in Soviet cities and towns of peasants, city families, "punk rockers" and church-goers from the Cold War years through the beginning of the dissolution of the Soviet Union.

The exhibition is on loan from the Harry ransom Center of the University of Texas, Austin.

In 1988, Abilene photographer Bill Wright traveled to what was them the Soviet Union to explore the state of photography behind the Iron Curtain.

He met with the Soviet artists' guild and exchanged American photos for Soviet photos as a part of Glasnost.

Sponsorship for this exhibition is provided by Continental Products of Texas. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

Also on display through July 30 is The Water Color Horizon Group Juried Exhibition.

In addition, the Institute is looking for more volunteers. A total of 25 positions are available. Those positions include gallery attendants, museum shop attendants, exhibit preparation crew and docents.

Volunteers give a half day a month or more. The facility depends upon volunteer help.

Film 'Kids' is 90-minute portrait of juvenile blight

By John Horn
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — If you've seen the "Red Asphalt" deterrent films at driver's ed class, you've seen "Kids." Just substitute teenagers for the car wrecks.

The new movie, debuting July 21 in New York with additional cities added later, follows a small band of adolescents for one brutal day. From the opening scene of a 12-year-old girl reluctantly losing her virginity to the closing image of another girl's rape, "Kids" is a 90-minute portrait of juvenile blight.

Telly, the film's lecherous "virgin surgeon," can't wait for his next conquest, and deletes no expletive describing what he'll do to her. His lawless sidekick Casper spends his free time swilling beer, inhaling laughing gas and braining an enemy with his skateboard. The young girls, meanwhile, are either taking — and failing — an AIDS test or dropping hallucinogens.

It's not 22 years from "American Graffiti." It's light years.

Some people will say the movie is a wild fiction. Director Larry Clark says it's fact.

"THIS IS not about all kids," says Clark, whose photographic essays "Tulsa" and "Teenage Lust" documented teen-age life. "But I've hung around kids and I know how they are."

Jane Pratt, the founding editor of the teen magazine Sassy and an unpaid consultant to the film's distributor, says "Kids" is more real than most parents would believe.

"Yes, it's harsh and hard-hitting and difficult. I had a hard time staying in the theater at certain times," says Pratt, the co-author of the new book "For Real: The Uncensored Truth About America's Teenagers." Through editing the magazine and writing the book, Pratt knows "Kids" is not unrealistic.

'This is a movie every parent should see. There are issues here that parents should talk to their kids about.'

—Larry Clark

"Everything I found (in researching "For Real") was completely echoed in the movie — in terms of sex, in terms of drug use, in terms of the way boys and girls talk about each other," Pratt says. "I won't say every teen-ager in this country is like the teenagers in this movie. Certainly not."

THE MAKERS of "Kids" say it is intended as a cautionary movie, a celluloid epistle warning of the dangers of unprotected sex, drug abuse and violence. Clark, for one, has a 9-year-old daughter and an 11-year-old son and both should eventually watch the movie and discuss it, he says.

"This is a movie every parent should see," Clark says. "There are issues here that parents should talk to their kids about."

For all the promotion of messages and "Kids" being an "important" film, there are bound to be critics who feel it's simply exploitive. Others could argue that just because "Kids" is "realistic" doesn't mean it must be seen: What's the value of seeing boys treat girls like dirt?

"Yes, it's very provocative," says co-producer Christine Vachon. "The story is clearly very, very strong and shocking in a lot of ways. But I don't think it's prurient."

The Motion Picture Association of America apparently disagreed. Citing the movie's "explicit sex, language, drug use and violence involving children," the MPAA's ratings board gave "Kids" the adults-only NC-17 mark on July 6. MPAA Chairman Jack Valenti, who has not seen the movie, said

The makers of 'Kids' say it is intended as a cautionary movie, a celluloid epistle warning of the dangers of unprotected sex, drug abuse and violence.

"parents in America should be grateful for the decision."

The film's distributor has appealed the rating, but says "Kids" will be released unrated if the appeal fails.

BEYOND ITS subject matter, what makes "Kids" particularly disturbing is the film's pseudo-documentary style and the apparent young age of its cast. Despite the movie's improvisational feel, the story was tightly scripted. The performers, while not professionals, were paid actors, and those involved in sex scenes were all 16 years or older, says Vachon.

"No kids were actually having sex," Vachon says.

"Kids" was originally to be distributed by Miramax Films, the art-house division of the Walt Disney Co. Miramax bought the film last year for $3.5 million. Disney is contractually prohibited from releasing unrated movies, and has forbidden Miramax to handle films with the adults-only NC-17 rating.

To get around the dilemma, and spare Disney the kind of backlash Miramax's recent movie "Priest" generated, Miramax founders Bob and Harvey Weinstein set up a new company called Excalibur Films. The new enterprise, funded by the Weinsteins, acquired "Kids" from Miramax, and will market and distribute it.

Excalibur ostensibly is completely separate from Miramax (and hence Disney), but a person who is working on the film said some Miramax employees are working on "Kids." Harvey Weinstein did not respond to repeated interview requests.

Miramax's biggest challenge may rest in finding an audience for the film.

PARENTS MAY be turned off by the subject matter, and their children are not likely to read the "Kids" reviews or see any "Kids" ads on TV — they're too expensive, and many stations won't advertise unrated films.

"I want people to see the film," Clark says. "So I'm a little disappointed so many people think it's a controversial film, including those who haven't seen it."

Those who do see it, however, are bound to be troubled by "Kids." For parents, the movie is sure to bring a much darker meaning to the question, "Do you know where your kids are?"

TRAILERS: Julia Roberts, Bette Midler and Drew Barrymore are reportedly set to star in a Woody Allen musical. The untitled project will follow Allen's upcoming "Mighty Aphrodite," the Hollywood Reporter said.

Quiet Pride: Father Adam Englehardt

Editor's note: The following is one of the portraits by J. Bourge Hathaway in "Quiet Pride: Ageless Wisdom of the American West."

By J. Bourge Hathaway

The odor of tobacco hangs in the air. A bottle of whiskey sits on the table near his favorite chair. Close your eyes and you'd swear you'd landed smack in the middle of a Father Dowling episode, so Bosley-esque is his voice, so disarming his point of view.

"You have to go out to people. You can't sit in the rectory behind your desk and start at nine o'clock and quit at four o'clock. You can't convert the damn desk."

No standard-issue prairie priest here. Oh, his values are clear and he holds them dear. But above all, Father Adam is a practical man.

"With professional religion people the first thing is education, which really means, 'I'm going to knock some doctrine into your damn head.' They have these cassettes in their hot little hands and they go out and play them. That isn't the way to start. I told that to our bishop not so long ago. I said you've got to go to the saloon. That's the best adult-education institution we have in North Dakota."

Sometimes getting to people wasn't as easy as hanging out at the corner cafe or saloon. Often, though he swears he hates horses, he'd volunteer to drive cattle. And because the early roads were no more than undependable tracks, Father Adam took to the air.

"I have, amongst my brother priests, kind of a wild reputation as a flyer. But I'm really not. There are two kinds of pilots: an old pilot and a bold pilot. There's never any old bold pilots. And there's no bold old priests, and I'm an old priest."

Still, there was more than a little drama in saving or changing a life with his one-man version of "Flight for Life."

"Years ago, a young boy lost his thumb in the usual way that these people lose their thumbs — stick it in a machine. So we loaded the boy and his mother, put the thumb in a bucket of ice water, and flew to Minot."

At the last minute, the Minot Hospital refused the patient, as did another hours later in Bismarck. Father Adam was determined.

"I loaded up with gas and took off again and went to Rochester. they sewed on the thumb. It's still on."

Thrilling as the air was, his real lifework was on the ground, helping to heal a community long divided by cultural and religious differences handed down from another place and time — legendary differences that not only divided Catholic from Protestant, but Irish from German from Polish Catholic, Episcopalian from Presbyterian from Lutheran.

"Everybody came here to seek a better life, but they brought their bigotry with them — or what sounded like bigotry. When I got it sorted out in my mind, it was no longer bigotry, it was fear — a natural defensiveness coming from fear of what's different from you."

Ask him what's made him the happiest, and he shrugs.

"That's a question I've never asked myself. Jesus never said to his servants, 'Be happy.' So why should I bother with it?"

Even in this denial, you know he's proud to have chosen his life's work and done it well.

"You come to the end of your life — I don't have that many years left — and you look back and you see that there has been a good change. And these are all good people. They look at each other and see good people."

was born," Ms. Davis said. "And he had led what I would consider an adventurous life. He was in the gold fields in Nevada, worked in British Columbia, just wandered around and ended up cable tool drilling in Texas, where he met my mother. I was too young to appreciate the stories and to think about recording them."

The exhibit may encourage others to record their families' stories before it is too late. "I hope that it does inspire people to ask their older relatives to tell the stories of their lives," Ms. Davis said. "I know some people aren't interested in genealogy, but this is not genealogy. This is real life."

Early registration allows students get head start on education at Midland College

Early fall registration begins Monday, July 24 with many advantages for students who want to get a head start on their education for next semester.

Returning students and incoming freshmen have an opportunity to meet with counselors, complete all the necessary testing and register for the classes they want by early August.

Returning students who have completed the TASP test can even register by phone July 24-27. Phone numbers to call for telephone registration were included in letters mailed to returning students.

Even though registering by telephone is the easiest way to go through the registration process, returning students who need extra help with scheduling classes, may register in person 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Thursdays in the Student Services area of the Scharbauer Student Center.

Counselors, testing counselors, the staff of the Vocational Career Center and various administrators will be on hand to help advise students.

Returning students who have not passed portions of the TASP test or who still need to take the TASP test will need to register in person.

Three days of freshmen orientation have been scheduled July 31-August 3. Beginning freshmen should plan to attend one of the all-day sessions that will include an orientation, academic advising and registration.

Beginning students who want to take advantage of early registration that afternoon must attend the morning session beginning at 8 a.m. to complete all the necessary paperwork.

August 7-10 is early registration for any student to register for fall classes. Students should come in person to the Student Center 7 a.m.-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday.

Students who early register should be prepared to have fees paid by August 15

Students who do not take advantage of early registration, can begin picking up time permits August 14 for regular registration August 21.

Some testing may be required, such as the state-required TASP test and math and English placement test for students enrolling in these subjects for the first time.

Early Registration Dates

July 24-27—Returning students may early register by phone or in person.

July 31-August 3—Freshman Orientation and early registration.

August 7-10—Early registration for all students.

August 21—Arena registration. Pick up time permits beginning August 14.

Counselors Liz Robinett (left) and Rita Nell Diffie review equivalency requirements for major Texas universities during registration for Summer II.

MC counselors promote hassle-free registration

By Shawna Loyd

"No hassles."

This is what MC Counselor Rita Nell Diffie wants students to encounter as they register for Fall classes. Diffie, director of Special Populations, is a member of the Midland College counseling team.

"We want the registration process and college experience to run smoothly," said Diffie.

Midland College counselors provide a number of services designed to cut down on any problems for students.

During registration, students meet first with faculty members and set up a class schedule. This direct contact with faculty promotes student-instructor dialogue, an important factor in student success, Diffie noted.

The counselors form a safety net for students.

"We double check those schedules and insure that prerequisite class and TASP requirements are met in order to head off any long-term problems," said Diffie.

If changes are needed, the counselors make suggestions and guide students through the process of making sure that their schedule is right for them.

The counselors perform many functions that help students throughout the year. Director of Guidance and Counseling, Ricardo Saldaña says counselors at Midland College are available to anyone in the community with questions about classes or transfer.

Career placement testing and counseling and labor market information is another service of the MC counselors. "We make suggestions and try to help students decide what career fits them best," said Saldaña. Career Counselor Terry Clemmer is available to help students decide "what they want to be when they grow up."

The MC counseling team is also responsible for ACT and SAT testing, placement testing for English, Math and Reading classes and TASP testing and verification. Claudia Hinds is testing coordinator/advisor.

The counseling staff helps students set realistic goals for work and school. Students who are going to school and working full time are given suggestions on how many hours they should take and how much time is needed for study outside of class.

For students headed for a college or university, Liz Robinett offers information on which courses will transfer. As Transfer Counselor, Robinett is current on course requirements and equivalency charts for most major Texas universities. "We want the students to save time and trouble by taking courses that are compatible with those of the institution they plan to attend for their junior and senior years," Robinett said.

Counselors are on duty from 7 a.m.-8:30 p.m., Monday-Thursday through the summer and from 8 a.m.-9 p.m, Monday-Friday during the regular school year.

Financial Aid staff recommends early start on Abell-Hanger volunteer hours

Coombes

Most recent high school graduates probably prefer to spend their last few weeks before beginning college improving their tan, taking a vacation or even earning extra money on the job.

But, the message from the Midland College Financial Aid office is start working on your Abell-Hanger volunteer hours now.

Students on the Abell-Hanger Scholarship must do at least 40 hours of community service by Jan. 31, 1996 to remain eligible for the scholarship that pays tuition and fees to Midland College. The first 20 hours must be completed by December 1, 1995.

Once students begin classes in the fall, the pressure of school work makes time to complete community service hours harder to find, according to Peggy Bartay, assistant financial aid director.

Her solution? Pick one of the more than 50 agencies registered with Midland College, fill out a few forms and get started now.

All the necessary paperwork for students to begin their volunteer hours has been mailed to Abell-Hanger recipients, Bartay said. However, additional brochures listing agenices and forms are available in the Financial Aid Office.

Volunteer opportunities—from working at the Confederate Air Force to volunteering with Big Brothers\Big Sisters—abound. Students can choose a volunteer experience that fits their particular interests and schedule.

This fall more than 500 students will attend Midland College on the Abell-Hanger Scholarship. To remain eligible for the scholarship, students must maintain a 2.0 grade point average and complete 40 hours of community service.

Bartay reminds students that they must enroll in at least six hours to receive the scholarship. Full-time students must complete at least nine hours. Part-time students, those enrolled in six-11 hours, must complete all the hours in which they enroll.

The Abell-Hanger Scholarship began in 1986 when the Abell-Hanger Foundation offered to pay up to $598,000 for tuition and books at Midland College for the 910 June graduates of Midland's three high schools.

Since then, the Foundation has continued to provide scholarships to more than 4,000 deserving area graduates who have complete more than 16,000 hours of community service.

BRIEFING

A vintage rig-up truck bides its last days in a yard at Kermit.

Drilling improves

Drilling activity increased during the first week of July, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The U.S. rig count soard 48 rigs to 714 for the week; a year ago the count was 768.

The Permian Basin rig count rose six rigs to 111 for the week, above last year's count of 109.

Lea County, N.M. remained the most active in the Basin with 18 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 13.

Among major producing states, Louisiana gained 22 rigs.

SIPES meeting

Scott B. Gill, vice president, investor relations, with Baker Hughes Inc., will be the guest speaker at Wednesday's meeting of the Midland chapter, Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists. The meeting will be at the Midland Country Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Gill will address "The Famous Baker Hughes Rig Count: Is This Class I, II or III Data for Independents?" The presentation will cover three areas: Assessments of the events affecting oil prices over the next two to three years; the most recent Baker Hughes forecast for drilling activity; and highlights of some emerging market trends.

Gill joined Baker Hughes in 1990.

Oil prices were not as broken down this week as this unit near Wink.

Prices see-saw

Energy futures moved higher, then lower this week as traders weighed forecasts for abundant supplies against present high demand.

Crude futures, after nearing $17.50 a barrel, retreated to $17.25 a barrel late in the week as traders on the New York Mercantile Exchange began to believe the market had not bottomed out.

Natural gas futures were also sharply lower despite a sizzling heat wave in the Midwest that had driven up demand for natural gas for electricity to run air conditioners. Prices fell to $1.48 per thousand cubic feet on forecasts of normal to below normal temperatures next week, leading to expectations of decreased demand.

Zapata properties

Zapata Corp. has signed an agreement to sell its remaining U.S. oil and gas properties. That package of properties includes Zapata's interests in five offshore federal leases in the Gulf of Mexico. The closing is scheduled for July 26.

At closing, Zapata will receive cash, a production payment entitling the company to a share of future revenues derived from the properties and other contract considerations.

The proceeds from the sale of the properties will enable Zapata to accelerate its efforts to become a global leader in food packaging, food service equipment and related businesses.

NEW POSSIBILITY

Technological improvements boost progressive cavity pump

■ Technological advancements should expand applications for progressive cavity pumps.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Good technology has a way of coming back again and again. That's the case of the progressive cavity pump.

Even though the market has prescribed narrow limits for the progressive cavity pump (PC) in the Permian Basin, National Oilwell says it now has made technological advances to the PC pump that can expand PC applications in the Basin. However, only the test of time will tell whether those claims prove to be valid or wishful thinking.

There is no faulting the mechanical efficiency or economics of PC pumps. They require far less capital outlay, and operating cost than a beam pump or ESP. A new PC pump to do the job of a 640 beam pump, can be installed for around $18,000 as compared to $40,000 for a used 640 pump system. In Canada fully 25 percent of all producing wells use PC pumps.

And, they operate at a higher efficiency (85 percent) than beam (50 percent) or electrical submersible pumps (35 percent.) A 640 beam pump moving 1,000 barrels of fluid per day with a 2 1/4 inch tubing pump will pull about 72 amps, according to National Oilwell's PC expert, Charles Fritz. A progressive cavity pump moving the same barrels will draw about 42 amps.

The key, says Rick Adair, sales manager for Highland Artificial Lift Systems, is to find the right application. "Progressive cavity pumps should be qualified or disqualified on every well, because it is one of the most viable methods of lift available. It can save money."

Adair said that in the past too many operators got in trouble with progressive cavity pumps because they did not know the limitations.

Charles Fritz, admits that the applications have been very narrow for progressive cavity pumps in the past because the fragile elastomers used in the stators were not very resistant to CO2 or H2S.

"Progressive cavity pumps have had limited success in the Permian Basin, because gas influence on elastomers gave less than successful results. However, new designs and materials should change that," Fritz said.

He said Oilwell had run its PC pumps with H2S percentages of up to 8 percent with no ill effect, and was not looking to develop an elastomer that would be compatible with CO2 floods.

Adair says Highland Pump, which sells progressive cavity pumps, has an ongoing research program to develop better elastomers, and would have an experimental elastomer ready for field testing in 30 days. He noted, however, that developing the perfect elastomer that is compatible with produced fluids and gases and injected chemicals is a give and take proposition.

"When you gain benefit in one area, you usually have to give up something in another area. If you gain in aromatic resistance, you may lose in mechanical integrity or abrasion resistance." Fluor

LIFTING NATURALLY

Plunger lift systems have definite niche applications

■ Plunger Lift Systems makes rounds to advance plunger lift concept.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Plunger Lift Systems Inc. has been spreading the word about their brand of artificial lift for 44 years, and still bemoans the fact that the plunger lift concept is not that well-understood.

"I run into engineers every week who think this is a new concept, but it has been around for a long time. My dad, Pat Swihart was a pioneer in the industry and been involved in plunger lift technology for the past 44 years," said Mike Swihart, president Plunger Lift Systems Inc.

He said the concept of using a well's natural energy to produce it probably originated decades ago when a roughneck or roustabout dropped a piece of bar steel down a well and it came back to see him with a load of oil in front of it.

Today's plunger lift is a well-developed, low-cost, low- maintenance technology that uses bottom hole pressure to increase production, produce wells to depletion, unload fluids from gas wells and eliminate paraffin cutting. There are approximately 20 manufacturers of the system worldwide, but Plunger Lift Systems Inc. is probably first in the Permian Basin in sales.

"I think one of the reasons plunger lift technology is not that well-understood is because the engineering schools give it only cursory treatment," said Swihart, who teaches a course on plunger lifts at Odessa College.

He said technological improvements, particularly to the seal element, has made it possible to produce wells with very little bottom hole pressure. "Barker & Parsley has produced wells with as little as 15 mcfd," he noted.

The general rule for operating a plunger is 300 cubic feet of gas per barrel of fluid, per 1000 feet of lift. Many plungers are operating at pressures as low as 120 psig. "It doesn't take much gas for this technology any more," says

MORE HISTORY - BETTER OPERATIONS

Program gets leases under control

By Ellen Hopkins

A core group of employees from Dwights Energydata and Apache Corp. joined forces on a short-term project, and derived long-term benefits for Apache's entire workforce.

The project involved an oil industry standard known as a Lease Operating Statement (LOS). Used by operators to record the most recent six months worth of individual lease data -- such as barrels produced and expenses incurred -- the traditional LOS has always been limited in scope. Thanks to this group of technology trendsetters, Apache's LOS reports have been converted to a Windows-based application on CD-ROM where years worth of journal entries can be constructed into plots and reviewed via PC at any time.

"We took our existing CD-ROM production data application and revised it to use with Apache's data," said Mary Ann Stack, director of computer applications at Dwights in Denver. "This project amounted to leveraging the experience and applications we already had from the production data, and applying it to Apache's needs."

She explained that the new LOS report is a perfect example of data management. It opens the door for an infinite number of similar applications for other companies that are searching for ways to handle masses of internal data.

Efficiency, experience and cost were the reasons behind Apache hiring Dwights to design the CD-ROM version of its LOS data. By contracting Dwights to create the LOS data base and convert the data to a CD-ROM environment, only three Apache employees were needed as liaisons for the project. Although Apache had the in-house expertise to create its own LOS data base, the company found that by hiring Dwights the project was completed expeditiously and no one at Apache was required to completely divert attention from standard job responsibilities to concentrate fully on this project.

Discussions with Dwights regarding the project's specifics began in March 1994; the actual development phase took only six months and the project was completed in December.

The new LOS system saves paper, increases available historical data, provides flexibility in the types of reports requested, allows PC analysis and digital manipulation of the data, and summarizes the economics of leases in various ways such as by geographic area or pumper.

The data contained in any LOS amount to a profit and loss statement for each lease. The information is accessed by engineers, accounting, managerial staff and--in the case of Apache -- district managers who wanted to key in on leases in their specific geographic areas.

Engineers and management can now look at a plot of a well's expenses which might be going up and see how this compares to revenues which could be going up or down. This instant analysis is accessible to all levels of users from managers to pumpers. For example, a foreman can review his wells' income and expenses and look for opportunities to more efficiently run the operations of wells and personnel.

Even though an LOS indicates a company's financial health, or lack of it, the confidentiality of the shared data during

Apache: Upside specialist

By Ellen Hopkins

Prudent operations coupled with tried-and-true methodology have afforded Apache Corporation significant production increases -- in some cases five-fold -- on old fields acquired from majors.

"We've used a logical sequence of steps to increase production," said Tim Wall, Apache District production manager in Midland. "Early on we try the lowest cost methods, such as increasing artificial lift, and then move toward recompletions and eventually drilling additional wells."

Wall said Apache acquired MW Petroleum from Amoco in 1991, amounting to about 1,000 operated wells. In March of this year the company acquired 2,000 Permian Basin operated wells from Texaco. He said the acquisition required a doubling of the Permian Basin staff and was dependent on employees operating effectively together. He added that their "do it right" response has been key in turning around many of the acquired fields.

The North Monahans Field in Ward/Winkler Counties is just one of many fields included in the acquisition from Amoco. Wall said its last field production was approximately 250 bbls/day. It now averages between 1200 and 1300 bbls/day after a peak of 4700 bbls/day at one time.

Wall said production was tripled by first increasing lift where possible with larger equipment, such as [illegible] and submersible pumps. Typically old Clearey [illegible] wells back on that [illegible] to lost well-[illegible] or some [illegible] to reestablish production on other wells we [illegible] and stimulations.

PLUNGER: Targets CO2 projects

(From 1G)

Swihart, who sees CO2 projects as the future of the technology.

"With CO2 projects we are getting bottom hole pressure and that gives us something to work with. It may take some adapting of tools, perhaps the use of special alloys, to handle corrosion, but I think there is a definite place for plunger lift in CO2 projects."

He said plungers could maximize efforts in wells experiencing channeling effects of CO2 by reducing the amount of circulated CO2, and by reducing the total amount of CO2 needed for a project.

"That means less CO2 coming out of a well to produce a maximum amount of oil."

The tertiary application would be almost identical to other applications, with the exception of the corrosion problem and changing the position of where the tubing hangs. Swihart said each well would have to be treated on an individual basis.

If there is a downside to plungers, Swihart says it is the special care needed to get a well in balance, a process which can take from two days to several months.

"With a pumping unit, you just turn it on, but with plungers it's not that simple. This is a free running system, that operates on natural energy and requires a balance of natural gas pressure and fluid depth. It requires more understanding and more patience to get it in balance."

However, once that is done, Swihart, says the savings in power cost, maintenance and paraffin control can be exceptional. No external power is required to operate the system, and with todays interchangeable parts a plunger can be broken down and rebuilt in the field by a pumper. And because of its simplicity a plunger system can be purchased for around $5,000 — far less than other systems. Approximately ten companies nationwide make plunger lift systems.

Paraffin is eliminated because it does not have time to set up in the tubing, and some operators have begun to run plungers solely for that very reason. But Swihart says lower cost and increased production are the normal reasons operators consider plungers, which were probably first used on gas wells to save soaping and blow downs.

One of the latest innovations to the lift system is the Universal Plunger Systems, .n which one plunger that will takes the seals of all the competitors. "This was more of a common sense thing than an innovation," says Swihart. "It means operators don't have to buy an entirely new mandrel and that seals can be replaced in the field."

Another innovation for plungers has been automated controllers to cycle plungers on a timed basis. Electronic controllers automatically adjust themselves, or operators are able to adjust a well from the office.

He said that in the future producers will probably use cellular telephones to adjust plunger lift systems. "They will check to see how often it is cycling and change settings. Low ratio oil-gas wells may be shut in at the top to conserve energy." In some wells where the bottom hole pressure is too low, Swihart says gas can be injected to assist in lift by running 3/4 inch coiled tubing down the back side.

Swihart said his company had an on-going R&D program that often includes looking at competitors.

"We recently bought all the lubricators of our competitors, and tore them down completely and let our machinist go over them. It resulted in several revisions.

Plunger Lift uses Don-Nan Pump to manufacturer its lift system, and credits the machine shop for any quality their system enjoys. "Don-Nan has a tight, state-of-the-art machine shop that is hard to duplicate. In fact we would normally have to go to Dallas or Fort Worth to duplicate the quality."

He said the Midland company was good about letting them experiment with several prototypes. "We draw a sketch and they seem to know exactly what we need."

Since coming to the Basin 25 years ago, Swihart says it has been an on-going education program

"The more plungers become understood, the wider the use and applications will grow. Many people have no idea they can use them." Swihart says he sees the biggest new market as overseas.

PUMP: New elastomers improve PCs

elastomers which have been suggested for the pumps have their tradeoffs, said Adair.

With present elastomers, he said the western part of the Permian Basin, around Hobbs was the best candidate for PC pumps.

Fritz said Oilwell did a market study two years ago that indicated good possibilities for the progressive cavity pump in the Permian Basin. He said the primary application would be to replace beam pumps which cannot move enough fluid, and where the well does not economically justify the cost of an electrical submersible pump (ESP).

He said depth was another limitation for PC pumps, and that new elastomers would also be the key to going deeper. He said National Oilwell was currently working on a pump that could pump 4,000 to 5,000 barrels of fluid per day from an 8,000 foot well. "We would like to put PC pumps on Spraberry wells."

He said new elastomers that will permit increased pressure of 175 to 200 psi in the cavity would be the key. Present cavity pressure is only 100 psi. "Right now we are limited to 6,500 feet because of differential pressures."

Fritz said if manufacturers can turn the corner on elastomer technology there is a lot of operators anxious to give PC pumps a try. "Everyone today is looking for a way to cut costs and this is a valid option. Maintenance of the surface equipment involves only the changing of packing and oil and occasional bearing replacement. He said bearings could last up to 10 years. Other options that makes the PC more attractive is development of variable drive pumps which can be linked to automated systems, and insertable pumps which negate the need to pull the tubing to get to the pump.

Howard yields 430-barrel Strawn discovery

Staff Reports

A Strawn discovery has been recorded in Howard County, nine miles southwest of Big Spring.

J. CLEO THOMPSON potentialed the No. 1 Homan to flow 430 barrels of 46.3 gravity crude and 1,100 Mcfd on a 17/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 1,000 psi. The well flowed from perforations 9,606 to 9,618 ft., which had been acidized with 200 gallons of 15 percent NeFeHCL acid.

Contract operations could corral operating costs for many producers in the Permian Basin who have bought new producing assets, or have packaged producing properties for sale.

Contract operators gain attention

■ Industry consolidation fuels growth of contract operating service providers.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Once almost unheard of, contract operating is a concept that is getting more and more attention as the industry consolidates.

Consulting engineers and firms that filled out Texas Railroad Commission forms once were about the only source of contract operating services for producers, but in recent years full staffed firms with accounts, engineers, geologists have come into existence to handle all phases of oil and gas operations.

JVA Operating Co., a Midland-based, contract operator, which operates leases both for its own account and for other producers, says its contract operating business has increased significantly in the past five years. Don Sparks, president of Discovery Operating, makes the same claim.

"Contract operating is getting more popular," says Jerry Jordan, Vice President of Operations for JVA Operating, "because it is a form of streamlining and downsizing. Major oil companies can use it to reduce employees and overhead. On a dollar for dollar scale majors cannot compete with independent operations." He said JVA Operating Co. was set up to handle anything from one well to many wells.

"I understand that some of the bigger companies are going that way," said Sparks. "Contract operating works well for large oil companies, because it can involve any portion of the job. The cut off, however, is usually at the accounting department."

He said some companies chose to farm out field operations, including Texas Railroad Commission reporting, to contract operators and handle the accounting themselves.

The contract operator provides all other staff including: pumpers, engineers, and geologists. Jerry Atkinson, president of JVA Operating, said each contract was customized and that fees for services are on a negotiated basis either as a flat fee or percent of revenues. "The concentration of properties and the complexity of operations will enter the negotiations," said Atkinson.

In some cases, contract operators will even prepare revenue division orders and distribute income. He said contract operating would continue to increase, because of the number of new operators created by the sale of major oil company assets.

He said he got into the contract operating business several years ago to accommodate new owners who did not want to staff a full office in Midland. Atkinson pointed out that over 200 wells, and an operator can think about hiring own staff, but under that a contract operator can do it cheaper. He also noted that he has the staff to evaluate properties once they have been purchased. "We can look for oil behind the pipe, drill infill wells, recomplete or whatever the owner wants."

Don Sparks, who employees 10-15 pumpers and whose operations range from a few wells to a large portion of a major field, says that for companies not located in a general area, it is an economical way to go about buying properties. In most instances we can take over field operations of a property overnight, but accounting may take a little longer.

"By using contract operators, one individual can oversee a large number of assets throughout the U.S. He can know what is going on just by reading reports," said Atkinson. "Also, with so many companies cutting back on staff, and not being able to give full attention to properties, I thought we might be able to offer them something." Today, Atkinson says that about 20 percent of his business comes from contract operating

Atkinson said large oil companies anticipating the sale of assets, can show an increase in performance for those properties on the balance sheet, simply by turning them over to an independent operator for a period before they go on the market.

"It immediately reduces administrative overhead, and other costs allocated to those producing leases, and this lower overhead can sometimes help sell the lease."

New Gibco systems fight gas lock

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

New pump technology to prevent gas lock and improve compression could save Permian Basin operators millions of dollars in damage to equipment and workover costs.

There are two common methods for ending gas lock. One involves timing the well to build up a hydrostatic head that prevents gas formation. The other most common method for ending gas lock is to pound the pump to jar the ball off its seat and let gas bubbles escape out of the pump.

This constant pounding, however, takes its toll on the pump and rod string and gear box of the pumping unit and invariably leads to failures and more frequently scheduled workovers.

Now a collection of pump innovations, by Gibco Pump & Supply, not only promises to end gas lock but to improve compression and extend the life of a pump.

Carles Gibson, president of Gibco, says the new "Gas Buster" system involves a downhole gas diverter system which the company incorporated last year, to divert gas around the tubing anchor and into the casing to keep it from interferring with the pump.

Other innovations to the Gibson Compression Pump, which has been around since 1988, include: new ceramic balls called the G-Ball, the Skillman maximum compression cage, and a nickel carbide barrel. The total innovation package is called the Gas Buster.

The package says Wayne Lloyd, vice president Gibco Pump & Supply, is able to reduce rod jobs and workovers by 50 percent. "Gas lock accounts for about 50 percent of the well problems in the Permian Basin, while sand, scale, corrosion and other problems account for the other 50 percent. Eliminate gas lock and you eliminate 50 percent of the downhole problems. In short, it keeps the pulling unit off the lease."

The new ceramic balls, says Gibson, is one of the greatest improvements to rod pumps in the past 50 years. He says the balls are harder, smoother and do not pit and corrode. A small hole on the top of the ball keeps it from spinning and beating out the cage.

Lloyd said compression has been improved from 5-1 to 26-1 in the Compression Pump.

"We have been getting good response to the pump," said Lloyd. "We have several hundred pumps running in Basin, and todate have almost a 100 percent success ratio. I have talked to only one customer who was not satisfied. In fact, several large customers have gone to the Gibco system exclusively."

Lloyd says that in nearly every instance the system has increased production.

APACHE: New technology increases company's efficiency

(From 1G)

Some wells were recompleted in other zones, and Wall said about 40 wells were reworked over a couple of years. Several new wells were then drilled to optimize production in certain areas of the field.

"None of these techniques involved new technology," Wall said. "We used old technology, a basic reworking of the wells, and followed a strict set of steps. It's nothing fancy, but it's a sequence that we know works well and we have seen a significant increase in production as a result."

The Bakke Field in Andrews County was another field purchased from Amoco in the MW acquisition. The field has produced since the 1950s from the Wolfcamp and Penn. Wall said there are 28 active wells now producing 900 bbls/day, up from 550 bbls/day in 1991.

Once again, Wall said Apache's methodology involved increasing lift where possible, bringing wells back on, applying acid jobs and adding new pay zones.

"We tried some of the newer technologies at one time or another, but our strength is in utilizing the old ways that have proven to work," he said.

In another former Amoco field, McFarland South Field in Andrews County, Apache recompleted wells in a different zone with significant results.

"We noticed pay that wasn't perforated on four or five wells there," said Wall. "Production has increased from 100 bbls/day then to around 250 bbls/day currently."

He cited the example of one well which increased dramatically from 25 bbls/day to 500 bbls/day by opening the new zone. Over the span of four years all wells were reperforated and three additional wells were drilled.

In March of this year Apache acquired about 3,000 Permian Basin operated wells from Texaco in a single divestiture package that included 9,000 operated wells total in Texas, New Mexico, Louisiana and Oklahoma. The Permian Basin wells and waterfloods are scattered from Carlsbad, New Mexico, to Lubbock and over to Snyder, Texas.

Wall said Apache is applying a lot of the same reworking sequence to these fields and production is increasing throughout.

"We're in the early phase now, cleaning up wells and incorporating lift revisions where we can," he said. "Bringing some of these wells back on is economic for us because of our lower operating costs."

Wall said Apache's well count per employee also increased with the property acquisitions. Apache added staff in its Permian Basin District which employs 100 including support personnel, up from 45.

He said the company interviewed about 300 people to fill the 50+ jobs and selectively chose those with experience. He said Apache's engineering staff, for example, has many years of experience in working waterfloods and in solving well production problems -- a key to handling a high well count per person.

Among the floods in West Texas are the Roberts Unit near Denver City, Cogdell Unit near Snyder and the McElroy Unit in Crane County. Wall said Apache has been successful in increasing lift on the wells in these areas which had high fluid levels in the wellbore. He added that some of the waterflood injection equipment has also been refurbished.

Wall considers the "full submersible setup" lease an advantage in increasing lift on so many wells. Submersible pumps and equipment are leased so they can be resized or redesigned as needed, and eventually purchased if desired.

"Leasing equipment takes the guesswork and risk out of the picture," Wall said. "It gives us the chance to run the equipment in the wellbore, evaluate it, test the wells, check our economics, and then scale back or increase the size as needed."

He added that the business of increasing lift is unpredictable, and only time will tell if oil production or water production will increase. The leasing option provides flexibility and a win-win situation.

Wall said a winning key to the company's success in increasing Permian Basin production is communications between Apache's technical and field employees. He said they work in conjunction with one another.

"The engineering staff and managers in Houston work with the field personnel from the very beginning on projects," Wall said. "The phone lines are all open so anybody can feel free to call anybody else with an idea or suggestion."

He said whoever can help, helps. This cooperation fills in all the pieces to the puzzle, dedicates employees at all levels, allows them to handle an increased amount of work and contributes directly to the success of the company.

DATA: Dwights, Apache team to build database

the development phase was not an issue. The long-standing working relationship between Apache and Dwights voided any concern over the data's integrity.

"Dwight's is in business to be of service to the oil industry and to further their ability to manage all types of data," said Jim Swetnam, manager of Apache's exploration and production services department in Houston. "They manage proprietary data of their own, so as far as we were concerned there was no risk whatsoever."

Dwights has internal procedures in place--user names, passwords, and access codes unique to specific projects -- for protecting another company's proprietary data.

Apache's Dave Peterson, staff systems analyst, said the LOS data are updated throughout Apache's general ledger close cycle which concludes around the 15th of the month following the production period. Apache gives Dwights the latest LOS data, and Dwights processes the information in a data base, writes it to a recordable CD and sends the CD to Apache's Houston office. There individual datasets are culled and recorded on CDs so each of Apache's offices gets just the information they need to work with.

Swetnam said the remarkable ease of data handling allows Apache to pull out a sort and search for a particular dataset, write the information to a recordable CD and quickly provide it to an interested party. He said a half a gig of data can be recorded on a CD in 30 minutes.

An especially versatile use of the data came about while Apache reviewed its Rocky Mountain properties for divestiture. Swetnam said having the historical lease data on CD made the compilation of data easier.

"Using the powerbuilder application from Dwights to sort and search for the data we want, we can write to CD whatever data is requested on any of Apache's leases," Swetnam said. "We can break it out by district, pumper, whatever we need."

Not only does the Dwights/Apache LOS system allow users to select and search only the specific data of interest, it also allows the incorporation of the data in spreadsheets and plots where analysis of ongoing operations is faster and easier.

Apache's need for a historical picture of its income and expenses created a means to fully manage them. With CD-ROM's capacity, storing 3, 4, or 20 years worth of data on a single CD provides a consistently improved picture of a lease's operations. As more historical data is input, analysis continually increases in effectiveness.

The LOS statements generated via the general ledger reporting system are not automatically printed. Apache is working toward a "paperless environment" so the report images of the LOS statements are captured in a mainframe report data base which can be used to search, view or print reports.

Now, instead of requesting special report formats through the company's MIS (management information systems) group, Apache users view the data via CD-ROM and then select an option to print a report if desired.

The LOS report is a perfect example of successful data management. Every company is inundated with a mass of internal accounting data that employees in various locations need to access. Currently many companies still mail or overnight greenbar printouts between offices.

"We were sending entire reports overnight to regional offices," said Peterson. "In some cases, only a page or two of a report was actually needed immediately; in other instances a different format would have been more useable. Now, with the LOS database, operations accounting people and regional offices can inquire and receive information at their fingertips."

With CD-ROM technology, the possibilities for data management are endless. Any large data set that is difficult to manage becomes a potential candidate for future CD-ROM application. The Dwights/Apache LOS project has laid the groundwork for an infinite number of similar applications.

"With this system I can get summaries of production and expenses by foreman," said Karen Lafitte, engineering tech with Apache in Tulsa. "It includes all his wells, his total expenses by month and the Lease Level Income (the bottom line) by month. It's a powerful tool because we know at a

Burlington income down sharply

HOUSTON—Burlington Resources reported a second quarter 1995 net income of $2.2 million or $0.02 per share, versus one year ago when the company earned $33.0 million or $0.25 per share. During the first six months, cash flow was $201 million compared to $240 million for the same period last year.

Although natural gas sales averaged 1,149 million cubic feet per day (mmcf/d), an improvement of 11 percent over the 1,032 mmcf/d sold in the second quarter of 1994, and crude oil sales of 48,000 barrels per day increased 7 percent from 44,800 barrels per day in the second quarter of 1994, operating income declined to $125,000 in the second quarter of 1995 compared to $46.1 million for the same period last year.

The primary reason for this decline was weak gas prices, particularly in California. Natural gas prices fell 30 percent averaging $1.22 per thousand cubic feet (mcf) in the second quarter of 1995 compared to $1.74 per mcf during the same period in 1994. Crude oil prices increased to $17.07 per barrel from $16.07 during the same period last year. Several factors including lower rig count, pipeline-constrained Canadian imports, and near-normal storage levels should begin to positively impact the market.

Capital expenditures during the first six months of 1995 were $302 million, down from $539 million which included $376 million of acquisitions for the first six months of 1994. Excluding acquisitions, capital spending has increased from $163 million in 1994 to $242 million in 1995 reflecting increased exploration and development activity.

FASDRILL™ BRIDGE PLUGS PLAY KEY ROLE IN SOLUTION WORTH $300,000 TO UNION PACIFIC RESOURCES.

On 28 wells during the past year, the Halliburton/UPRC alliance team has saved 106 days total completion time worth $118,000 to UPRC. And during the 106 days that the wells were on line early, UPRC received about $192,000 in revenue.

Halliburton coiled tubing services and FasDrill™ bridge plugs have been key elements in the team's strategy.

On a recent job in downtown Carthage, Texas, the alliance team faced a big challenge: Drill and complete three wells on 80-acre spacing while minimizing the environmental impact. Speed was essential.

"From a single existing location, we drilled the three wells directionally with a reach of 3,000 to 4,000 ft and with total vertical depths averaging about 10,100 ft," explained UPRC senior engineer, Doug Genrich.

The wells were fractured by Halliburton in three stages using two 4½-in. FasDrill bridge plugs per well.

"Sand plugs are unpredictable. FasDrills can be set accurately on wireline within two hours after we frac, and give dependable isolation," said Genrich.

Floyd Brannon, UPRC completion foreman, added: "In a day or less, we drill out all the FasDrills in one trip with coiled tubing — without killing the well."

FasDrill plugs helped the team save six days in completion costs while being good neighbors in the process. Call your local Halliburton representative now for more details. Or call USA 713-363-9330 and request fax #182.

Enron starts up Trinidad offshore field

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad—Enron Gas & Oil Trinidad Limited, a wholly owned subsidiary of Houston-based Enron Oil & Gas Co. announced the successful production start-up of the Ibis Field with the initiation of production from Well IB-2 in the Southeast Coast Consortium (SECC) block offshore Trinidad. The well, completed in June, yielded initial production test rates in excess o 3,000 barrels per day (BPD) of 36 degree gravity crude oil and 8 million cubic feet per day (MMcf/d) of natural gas on a 24/64-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 4,500 pounds per square inch.

Production from Well IB-2 is commingled at the Pelican Field platform with natural gas and condensate production from the Kiskadee Field, also operated by EGOT, and the resulting natural gas, crude oil and condensate mixture is piped to the mainland for sale. The natural gas is sold to The National Gas Company of Trinidad & Tobago Limited (NGC) under a long term contract covering natural gas production from the SECC block. The crude oil and condensate is sold to The Petroleum Company of Trinidad and Tobago Limited (Petrotin). Additional wells will be drilled from the Ibis "B" platform.

Occidental acquires New Guinea acreage

LOS ANGELES—Occidental Petroleum Corp. announced the signing of a production sharing agreement for the 952,000-acre Block PPL-181 in the productive Fly River Basin of Papua, New Guinea.

During the initial three-year exploration period, Occidental will undertake a minimum work program of geological field mapping and will drill one exploratory well. Occidental has an 88 percent working interest.

WE NEED CALICHE
The Petroleum Museum has reached a temporary impasse in it's plans to construct a rotary rig exhibit.
Since this is to be a permanent well site that will be used for decades to come, both as an exhibit for the public and an instructional facility for the industry, it is necessary to build an extra strong pad.
We need another 35-50 loads of clean, caliche to be donated for this purpose. We cannot move the rig in until the pad is built.

Tenneco Gas focuses expansion plans on overseas markets

By N.Y. Times News Service

Houston — Steve Chesebro' led Tenneco Gas through an eight-year struggle with environmentalists and regulators to build a $1 billion pipeline from Wyoming to Southern California.

Now, just three years after natural gas started flowing through the 904-mile Kern River Pipeline, Chesebro' has put his company's 50 percent stake up for sale.

The pipeline, which carries gas from Wyoming for use in enhanced oil recovery projects in Southern California, is running at capacity. Tenneco Gas is selling as part of a strategy to shift much of its capital away from the U.S., where recently adopted regulations strictly limit its profit.

The capital instead will go to international ventures with the potential for much greater growth, primarily in Australia, the Far East and Central and South America.

"Today's regulatory framework allows for a reasonable return, but very limited upside," Chesebro' said. "If we invested solely in regulated pipelines in the U.S. today, it would be hard for us to provide growth to our shareholders."

Tenneco Gas, a unit of Houston-based Tenneco Inc., will spend about $432 million outside the U.S. this year, more than half its $830 million capital budget. Non-regulated U.S. businesses such as gas gathering and processing will receive $206.9 million, a bit more than half the domestic budget, up from 3 percent in 1992. As projects move from planning to construction, the weight increasingly will shift overseas.

Tenneco Gas is one of a number of major gas transportation companies investing more money outside of the U.S., largely because of revised rate-of-return standards imposed by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in 1992.

The standards took away a company's ability to earn more by operating more efficiently and moving more gas through regulated lines. "I can double the throughput today and it wouldn't make one bit of difference," Chesebro' said.

Many companies concluded that returns "just aren't adequate to justify additional investment or even maintain the investment they have," said Foster Corwith, a Dean Witter Reynolds analyst.

Overseas, it's a different story. "The expectation from overseas prospects is probably to have returns close to double what they are going to get from investing domestically," Corwith said. "Even though there is a greater political risk, the risk-reward analysis is quite favorable."

In Australia, for example, Tenneco Gas potentially can earn more than a 20 percent rate of return on a pipeline and other properties it recently acquired, compared with about 12 percent on its regulated U.S. pipelines, said Ron Barone, a PaineWebber analyst.

Other companies pursuing overseas growth include Enron Corp., which has a long history of international projects. Nova Corp. and TransCanada Pipelines Ltd. are following suit.

Tenneco Gas will protect the strongest domestic markets where it has pipelines, primarily along the East Coast, and will pursue select expansions. "But that's it," Chesebro' said. "Our resources are now going to non-regulated, higher-growth areas."

Redirecting resources is a necessity if Tenneco Gas is to compete for corporate funds against other Tenneco Inc. entities, Chesebro' said. "If I'm going to show a 2 to 3 percent growth with nothing but downside and no upside, I will not get any capital," he said.

Tenneco Gas contributed $415 million, or 30 percent, of Tenneco Inc.'s operating income last year, and $2.4 billion, or 20 percent, of its revenue. The parent company's other business interests are in automotive parts, packaging and ship design, building and repair. It also owns 44 percent of Case Corp., the nation's second-largest maker of farm and construction equipment.

Tenneco has identified Tenneco Gas, Tenneco Automotive and Packaging Corp. of America as its fastest-growing, most-profitable businesses. The three will receive $1.4 billion from the parent company's initial public offerings for the Albright & Wilson chemical company and 56 percent of Case.

The increased investment from the parent company will help Tenneco Gas fund its overseas projects, which will require substantial capital. Other funds will come from partners, Chesebro' said.

"We have in some form, either getting ready to start digging or memorandums of understanding, over $10 billion worth of opportunities in which we would have partners," he said.

Some of the projects carry significant risk. Among the ventures is a $1 billion, 750-mile pipeline linking Argentina and Chile in which Tenneco Gas has a 25 percent stake, along with Chile's Enersis, Tenneco Gas and British Gas Plc. Delays have opened the door to competition from a rival group led by Canada's Nova.

Nova proposes to tap into Argentina's existing pipeline network, thus bringing gas into Chile for less money. The Enersis line would run through central Chile and supply more cities. Both terminate in Santiago where, as in other South American nations, significant air pollution problems have increased demand for cleaner-burning natural gas as a power supply.

The matter is expected to be decided in the next few months by market demand. Tenneco Gas already has invested about $5 million in the project, which hasn't begun construction. The cost is expected to exceed $1 billion.

"Is it risk money? Yes. Is it reasonable risk money? Yes," Chesebro' said.

Tenneco Gas also is part of a group of companies participating in the Brazilian portion of a 2,000-mile Bolivia-to-Brazil pipeline.

Donato Eassey, a Merrill Lynch Global Securities Research analyst, said Tenneco Gas's early entry into the South American natural gas market will work to its advantage.

"South America is in dire need of cleaning up the air and at the same time exploiting gas assets in the ground," he said. "Tenneco has as good a shot as anybody, if not better."

The company has pending before Petroleos Mexicanos, Mexico's state-owned oil and gas company, a proposal to build a pipeline that would carry gas from Daggett, California, to Mexico. A competing proposal is on the table from Pacific Enterprises' Southern California Gas Co. and San Diego Gas & Electric Co.

Elsewhere, Tenneco Gas recently acquired the natural gas pipeline assets of the state of South Australia for about $200 million, and is building a pipeline to Queensland, Australia.

The acquisition allows Tenneco Gas a major role in the privatization of Australia's natural gas industry, and gives the company a foothold for expanding to other areas of the country and the Pacific Rim.

Tenneco Gas also is studying the feasibility of a 190-mile pipeline and storage project for the Taiwanese government, and will pursue projects in Central Europe.

Chesebro' would work on other overseas projects if he could.

"We absolutely don't have the people or the resources to pursue all the opportunities," he said. "We had to focus."

Investors will be watching to see if that focus brings more profit into sight.

This well had been producing at 1000-1200 BFPD, 98% water, when it was squeezed then reperforated and acidized. There was no change in production.

Penetrators cut 5 tunnels after the well was squeezed again, using light acid as the cutting fluid. The well returned to production with 750 BFPD and a 50% oil cut. The well has maintained this level for several months now.

Analysts applaud Columbia Gas chief

By Theresa Humphrey
Associated Press Writer

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — When he was 29, "Rick" was appointed to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and they called him the "boy commissioner."

Now Oliver G. Richard III, would-be journalist and former tax lawyer, is all grown up and the chief executive officer of Columbia Gas System Inc., one of the nation's largest natural gas distributors and a company that's been in bankruptcy reorganization for four years.

Don't be fooled by the stuffy pronunciation of his surname (reh-SHARD), this 42-year-old Louisiana native is fresh, innovative and down-to-earth and industry observers say Columbia Gas was shrewd to pick him.

Richard is expected to not only breathe new life into Columbia Gas, but also into the natural gas industry in general.

"The utility industry has been fraught with stuffed shirts and close-minded individuals," said Ronald Barone, associate director of Standard & Poor's.

"He's not one of these stuffed shirt highbrows. He's a regular roll-up-your-sleeves and chat," Barone said.

"They are coming out of bankruptcy with a new face."

Columbia's board of directors chose Richard to replace John H. Croom, who retired after 41 years with the company.

Croom stepped down once it appeared there was light at the end of the bankruptcy tunnel for Columbia Gas and its main pipeline subsidiary, Charleston, W.Va.-based Columbia Gas Transmission Corp. — both of which filed for protection under Chapter 11 bankruptcy laws July 31, 1991.

Both filed reorganization plans in April.

"The fact that they're coming out of bankruptcy is obviously important. But I think they've really picked a very strong leader to lead them," said Stuart J. Wagner, natural gas analyst for Petrie Parkman & Co. in Denver.

"I think this guy is a forward-looking kind of guy to take the company into the next century."

Richard comes to Columbia Gas after serving as president and CEO of Northern Natural Gas Co. of Omaha, Neb., a pipeline subsidiary of Enron Corp. of Houston and most recently as chairman, CEO and president of New Jersey Resources Corp., in Wall, N.J.

"To have someone who's been out there and seen it all is definitely a positive. You know what way the industry's going," Barone said. "Someone who was at the FERC, I think, will be able to steer the company in that direction."

While Richard gets high marks for his experience and ability to infuse new life into companies, it remains to be seen whether he can turn around Columbia Gas.

The settlement reached in June with the gas producers calls for Columbia Gas to pay producers $1.2 billion, or 72.5 percent on $1.6 billion in allowed claims.

Shortly after the companies filed for bankruptcy, they rejected about 5,000 gas supply contracts because of their above-market cost. It was the high-priced contracts that got the pipeline subsidiary in financial trouble in the first place.

Producers filed claims estimating the value of the rejected contracts at $13 billion. The payout under the two reorganization plans is $7.5 billion, of which $5.3 billion is for payment to outside creditors.

The company hopes to emerge from bankruptcy by Dec. 29. Whenever it occurs, Standard & Poor's preliminary rating will likely be a Triple B-, the lowest rating in the investment grade scale.

Richard, who took over April 28 at the annual shareholders' meeting, knows what he's up against. But he thinks that despite the bankruptcy, Columbia Gas is well-positioned to move into high-tech areas once its legal woes are behind it.

He envisions residential customers shopping on the open market for natural gas for home heating from their personal computers, just like they do for banking.

"We think that in order to be a leader of the future, we have to be at the crest of the information age and that's interactivity," Richard said. "So of the major thrusts that we're looking at, is how do you work towards giving customers more choices, because by doing so you're closer to them than you ever have been before.

"I think we would be a major player because what will happen under the bankruptcy, the plan that's been filed will clear all of our past problems so that we can stake out the future about what customers want down the road," he said.

Richard, who started a short-lived neighborhood newspaper when he was in the fourth grade and has a bachelor's degree in journalism from Louisiana State University, likens running a company to how a journalist crafts a story, using the inverted pyramid.

"I think that the nice thing about the training ... is that pyramid, where you get the facts, the most important part of the story up front quickly. Then as the reader gets intrigued by the story, you get the larger story," he said.

"... Running a company is very much like that. You don't want to start from ground zero when the times are changing very quickly. You know what's the major issue and then develop it after that."

Richard also wants Columbia Gas to get back to its roots. Once, one of the three stars in the company's tri-star logo stood for vision.

"They changed those later on and sometime during our history, they took vision out and put, I think, customers, employees and stakeholders. But the beginning star had vision on it and I think it's time for a new vision for the new natural gas age and that's the challenge and opportunity that I see.

"And to me it's people. People do that," Richard said. "We have great steel and bricks and mortar assets, but it's time to really re-energize the intellectual capital."

Oliver Richard at a glance

By The Associated Press

A look at Oliver G. Richard III, chairman, chief executive officer and president of Columbia Gas System Inc.

NAME: Oliver G. Richard III, 42.

PERSONAL: Married to the former Donna Guzman, his high school sweetheart. They have one son and live in Asbury Park, N.J. Richard also has an apartment in Delaware.

BACKGROUND: Raised in Lake Charles, La., Richard started a neighborhood newspaper when he was in the fourth grade and in high school had a hunting and fishing column called Reels and Fields. Richard has a bachelor's degree in journalism and a law degree from Louisiana State University. He has a master's in law and taxation from Georgetown University. He went to work for Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., as a legislative assistant for energy and he's been on the move in the industry ever since. Before going to Washington, he and his wife had considered joining the Army together because until then, they had never really been out of Louisiana.

QUOTE: "I have a bumper sticker — 'subvert the dominant paradigm.' And the meaning of that is the old paradigm is the customer just sits there and gets what you give them and they pay at the end of it; to me, is the wrong way to look at competition and where customer choice is going. ... Customers ought to be able to choose among an array of suppliers for what suits their needs and pocketbooks and we ought to be able to figure that out."

Enron earnings jump 40 percent in second quarter

HOUSTON (AP) — Despite a decrease in natural gas prices, Enron Oil & Gas Company reported a 40 percent rise in second quarter earnings to $48.1 million, or $.30 per share.

That compares to $34.2 million, or $.21 per share a year ago.

Increased crude oil production, condensate volumes and prices helped to offset the lower natural gas prices, Enron Oil & Gas says.

"EOG was very successful in the second quarter of 1995, despite average wellhead natural gas prices being down by 23 percent compared to a year ago," said Forrest E. Hoglund, chairman, president and CEO.

Operating revenues were $184.0 million in the second quarter of 1995 compared to $155.4 million a year ago.

Net operating revenues have been revised to include after-tax proceeds and gains from sales of reserves and related assets.

EOG sold selected reserves and related assets in the second quarter of 1995, generating net operating income of $34.9 million.

In recent purchases, EOG acquired properties that will more than double the company's position to 17,000 acres in the Carthage Field in east Texas, one of the largest natural gas fields in the U.S.

"The Carthage properties currently are producing 6 million cubic feet per day of natural gas net to EOG, and we hope to quadruple this by year end," Hoglund said.

EOG and Chieftain International Inc. also signed a 50-50 joint purchase and sales agreement with Santa Fe International, Inc. and affiliates to acquire all of Santa Fe International's interests in the Gulf of Mexico.

The acquisition includes interests in 43 developed blocks covering 89,526 acres net to EOG/Chieftain and 19 undeveloped blocks covering 65,989 acres net to EOG/Chieftain.

Tesoro Petroleum announces significantly higher gas reserves

SAN ANTONIO —Tesoro Petroleum Corp. announced that its mid-year review shows a significant increase in its domestic net proved reserve volumes, resulting in a 10 percent increase in net present value compared with year-end 1994 figures. In addition, Tesoro announced reserve increases related to exploratory successes in Bolivia.

As required every six months under the company's credit agreement, Tesoro has received a mid-year reserve report from the independent petroleum engineering firm of Netherland, Sewell & Associates, Inc. The report estimates that, during the first half of 1995, Tesoro's domestic proved reserves increased 53 percent, from 129 billion cubic feet (Bcf) of natural gas at Dec. 31, 1994, to 198 Bcf at June 30, 1995, despite net production during this period of 23 Bcf.

Due to the nature of the additions, the net present value of these proved reserves increased a more modest 10 percent during this period to $198 million.

The shifting of reserves to the proved category from the probable and possible categories and the increased valuation resulted almost entirely from three factors related to Tesoro's interests in the Bob West field in south Texas: field extensions and discoveries through drilling efforts during the first half of 1995 that exceeded production by more than 14 Bcf; successful application of state severance tax exemptions to certain wells producing in reservoirs designated as tight sands; and revised production-decline rates based upon well performance. The recharacterization of reserves to the proved category is not expected to continue to outpace production.

The net present value of Tesoro's domestic reserves increased at a lesser rate than the volumes for two primary reasons: a majority of the added reserves will be produced later in the field's life; and the potential drilling locations will require higher capital expenditures, on average, than did currently producing wells.

Netherland, Sewell indicated that Tesoro's net proved reserves estimate is consistent with a gross ultimate Bob West field reserve recovery estimate of more than 1 trillion cubic feet (Tcf) of natural gas, which includes unrisked probable and possible reserves in addition to the proved reserves. This would make the Bob West field one of the nation's largest onshore natural gas discoveries.

Tesoro, which discovered the Bob West field in 1990, has an approximate 50 percent net revenue interest in about two-thirds of this 4,000-acre field and an approximate 28 percent net revenue interest in the remainder. As previously announced, Tesoro continues to pursue a potential sale of a portion of its Bob West field interests.

In Bolivia, a successful exploratory well and revisions to an earlier discovery provide significant potential to increase the value of Tesoro's holdings as additional natural gas markets develop. Tesoro's Palo Marcado No. 3 exploratory well in Block XX is testing at a combined initial gross rate of 10 million cubic feet per day of natural gas and 180 barrels per day of condensate.

This well, which was the last of Tesoro's 1994-95 three-well exploratory drilling program in its 1.2 million-acre Block XX interest, reached a total depth of 10,870 feet. Netherland, Sewell estimates the gross proved, probable and possible reserves on the Palo Marcado structure to be 232 Bcf, of which 29 Bcf is proved, or 15 Bcf of net proved reserves to Tesoro.

Enserch Corp. plans to expand gas services

DALLAS -- ENSERCH Corp. has reached a definitive agreement to acquire 100 percent of the outstanding shares of DGS Holdings Corp. which, through its subsidiary Direct Gas Supply, is a major marketer of natural gas and natural-gas services. Closing of the stock-for-stock transaction is subject to review under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act. The value of the transaction is approximately $20 million.

Separately, ENSERCH has closed its cash acquisition for approximately $8.5 million of the principal operating assets of Sunrise Energy Services, Inc. and subsidiaries, also non-regulated marketers of natural gas.

DGS, Sunrise and Enserch Gas Company (a wholly-owned subsidiary of ENSERCH Corporation) will be joined to form Enserch Energy Services, Inc. Based on existing sales levels of the three entities nationwide, sales for the new company are expected to be 1.2 billion cubic feet of gas per day. "These acquisitions fit well our plan to expand our energy services business," said David W. Biegler, Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer of ENSERCH.

ENSERCH Corporation is an integrated natural-gas company.

Field test reveals pump-off controller cuts cost by reducing pumps' run time

NOTE: The following article is based on a report by the Rocky Mountain Oilfield Testing Center (RMOTC) regarding field testing conducted at the Naval Petroleum Reserve Number 3 (NPR-3), located 35 miles north of Casper in Natrona County, Wyoming, in cooperation with the U. S. Department of Energy. Testing was funded jointly by D-Jax Corporation of Midland, Texas, and RMOTC. Work was directed by RMOTC Field Engineer Michael R. Tyler.

D-Jax pump-off controllers performed favorably in the field tests, reducing the operating time of the pumping units while maximizing production from each well.

Casper, Wyoming—The D-Jax pump-off controller (POC) controls fluid pounding by using microprocessor technology and software to reduce pumping unit operating time. The POC detects different levels of fluid pounding by monitoring the time required for each stroke of the polished rod. Fluid pounding occurs when the pump does not fill completely on the upstroke.

For the purposes of field testing D-Jax POCs were attached to DOE wells 64-65-SX-10 and 73-31-SX-10. Test results showed a decrease in costs associated with electricity consumption and reduced surface and downhole maintenance. Cost reduction may vary depending on well production, well location, electrical cost and the general condition of a beam pumping system.

The electronic system measures the speed of a pumping unit and shuts the unit down when it detects a speed increase, indicating a pumped-off condition. The POC leaves wells down for a predetermined period, and then restarts the unit. Speed is then checked with every stroke and measured against the starting speed. The system does not shut down until three consecutive strokes show an increase in speed. Speed change is measured in milliseconds.

The POC reduced the operating time of the pumping units on both wells, which decreased the costs associated with electricity consumption and maintenance. Operator time was reduced and the quality of the data collected improved. As demonstrated on the test wells, using the POC provides several benefits. The system can:

- Shut units down when fluid entry is low;
- Provide daily run time in hours and percentage, as well as 30-day histories of production run times;
- Be used as a daily reservoir management tool rather than relying on physical testing data that might take weeks to obtain;
- Reduce manpower requirement;
- Minimize lost production resulting from inaccurate time clock settings; and
- Reduce "dry" pumping, stuffing box failures and environmental cleanup expenses and surface and downhole repair/maintenance costs.

The two POCs were tested on the NPR-3 wells from September through December 1994. Both wells are in an active steam-drive area. Both were run 100 percent of the time prior to installing the system.

In both cases, a reduction in run time occurred—from 100 percent in August to 32 percent in December. Production on Well 73-31-SX-10 remained stable, while 64-65-SX-10 showed an increase in average daily oil production. Both wells were treated for scale in September, but no other changes or treatments were made.

Each well experienced fluctuations in daily run time that would have gone unnoticed without the POCs. All producing wells experience differences in inflow performance and are over-pumped to compensate for that fluctuation. The POC controls the amount of time the pumping unit runs, producing only when there is fluid available to lift.

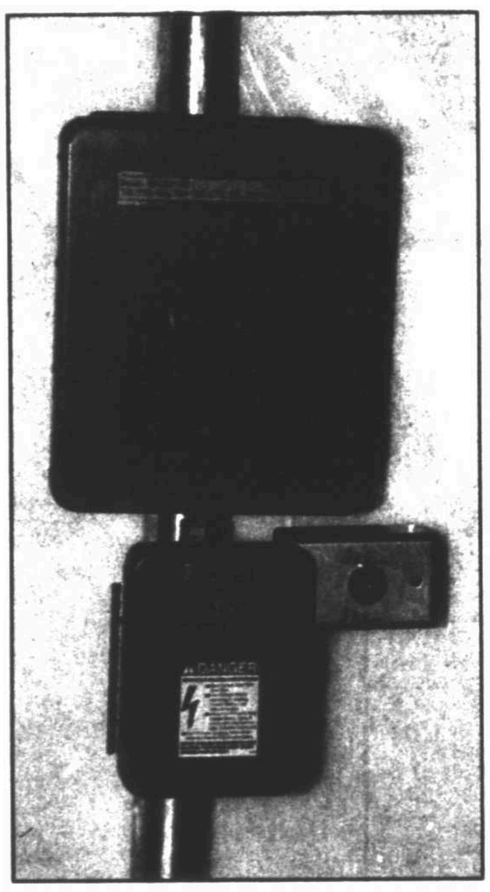
On November 13, the steam quality for 73-31-SX-10 was changed from 60 to 75 percent in steam generator pattern Number 1-D, which affects the well. There was an immediate increase in run time, which was observed on November 15 and resulted in increased production. This response might not have been noticed if the well had been operating on a 100 percent time clock. The production would have been recovered since the well was being over-pumped, but the increase would not have been recovered if the well had been equipped with a conventional time clock set at 30 percent. The POC, therefore, proved to be an effective reservoir management tool.

The time spent analyzing the wells for proper pumping operations was reduced since the wells were analyzed only when POC run times changed.

After the five-millisecond delta was installed, the POC controlled the well throughout the remainder of the test.

Steam generator Number 4, which affects the well, was shut down on November 4. The POC responded to the reduced production resulting from the decrease in injection by cutting the daily run time of the well. The steam generator was returned to operation on November 27, and run time on the well increased on November 30.

An increase in run time occurred on December third. The speed detected at the start of the cycle remained constant, so the unit did not shut down and run time increased. The operator observed the change on the POC and analyzed the well. Test results were 5.9 barrels of oil and 70.5 barrels of water, which was a decrease from 7.0 bbl oil and 80 bbl water from the previous test. Tubing was pressure-tested and a hole was detected. The tubing was pulled and repaired, and the well was returned to production. If the POC had not been in operation, several days could have passed before the problem was detected, causing lost production.



The D-Jax pump-off controller has been shown to reduce operating time of pumping units while maximizing production. It also functions as an effective reservoir management tool.

The D-Jax pump off controllers performed favorably in the field tests, reducing the operating time of the pumping units while maximizing production from each well. No stuffing box failures occurred, and operators found the system easy to install, operate and maintain. The time spent analyzing the wells for proper pumping operations was reduced since the wells were analyzed only when POC run times changed. The POCs operated successfully in inclement weather, including wind, wet and dry conditions, and temperatures ranging from -15 to 95 degrees.

International Energy Agency forecasts higher demand, non-OPEC supplies

By N.Y. Times News Service

Paris — Burgeoning demand in Asia and Latin America has prompted the International Energy Agency to raise its estimate of 1995 world oil demand. The agency says demand will average 69.5 million barrels a day this, 200,000 barrels a day higher than its previous estimate a month ago.

Analysts, though, said this won't mean a greater share of the world market for the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries because the IEA also forecast non-OPEC producers were raising production.

"It's no surprise there's no extra oil (demand) left for OPEC," said a broker with ED&F Man International in London, though the increase in world demand would help boost prices, he said.

"Brent is likely to hold above $16 a barrel after bouncing up from $16.01 and $16.02 in the last few days," the broker said. Brent futures settled at a six-month low of $16.02 a barrel on Wednesday.

Countries within OPEC supply more than a third of the world's crude oil. The group hasn't changed its output cap of 24.52 million barrels a day since September 1993.

"OPEC is a residual producer, albeit unwillingly," said John Toalster, head of oil and gas research at Societe Generale Strauss Turnbull Securities Ltd. in London. "They're not happy but there's little they can do about it."

OPEC's efforts to raise prices by restricting supply have been undermined by non-OPEC producers, who have boosted daily output by 1.7 million barrels in the past two years, to 42.1 million barrels a day, according to IEA estimates.

"The oil market has in fact been pretty balanced for the past two years, with demand growth all taken up by non-OPEC suppliers" Toalster said.

World demand estimates were raised for all four quarters of the year, principally because of higher estimates for Latin America and Asia, excluding China, the Paris- based Agency said in its end of June Oil Market Report.

World daily demand during the third and fourth quarters, when North Sea supplies are seen rising, was raised by 100,000 barrels and 300,000 barrels to 68.3 million barrels a day and 71.3 million barrels a day, respectively. World demand peaks during the winter months in the northern hemisphere.

World daily demand is projected to have increased by 1.1 million barrels this year and is expected to rise a further 1.5 million barrels next year to about 71 million barrels a day. In both years the majority of incremental demand, about 700,000 barrels a day, will come from Asian consumers while energy demand from the former Soviet Union bloc is now seen declining at a slower-than-expected rate, the IEA said.

June daily crude production by OPEC is estimated at 25.22 million barrels from May's revised level of 25.31 million barrels, the IEA said.

This compares with the Bloomberg Energy Service's estimate of 25.26 million barrels a day in June.

'OPEC is a residual producer, albeit unwillingly. They're not happy but there's little they can do about it.'

— John Toalster, Researcjer. Societe General Strauss Turnbull Securities Ltd.

The agency cited reduced flows from Nigeria's offshore Qua Iboe field as the main reason for the fall in OPEC output.

Ministers from the 12-nation OPEC met last month in Vienna and reaffirmed the group's supply target of 24.52 million barrels a day. Still, OPEC's plan to restrict supply and raise prices has been dented by rising supply from non-OPEC producers, chiefly the U.K., Norway and Mexico.

At a conference in Washington earlier this week, OPEC's secretary general, Rilwanu Lukman, warned that a world without OPEC would be disastrous for the energy industry and financial markets.

"You would have a free-for-all situation, with prices spiralling downwards as producers expanded output as far as they could to make up for lost income," Lukman, a former oil minister for Nigeria said. "Many producers would be forced to default on loan repayments, involving banks and financial institutions in the chaos."

Stock and money markets would be seriously disrupted because governments would have to raise energy taxes to stop petroleum consumption increasing because of the lower prices, Lukman said.

"OPEC have got problems of their own with too many over-producers," said Al Alawa, a broker with Prudential-Bache Futures Ltd. in London.

Iraq and Venezuela are producing at least 150,000 barrels a day more than their OPEC-assigned quotas, according to IEA estimates.

Iraq hasn't recognized its quota of 400,000 barrels a day since the United Nations banned it from exporting any of its former 3.1 million barrels a day output, five years ago. It now regularly produces about 550,000 barrels a day according to the IEA.

"While there's no impact on the near term situation, in the longer term traders are aware and we may have to face the return of Iraqi oil within the next six months and that's beginning to impact on prices," Prudential-Bache's Alawa said.

The IEA doesn't forecast future oil supply from the Arab-dominated producer group though analysts often extrapolate the need for, or call on OPEC oil from the difference between forecasts of world demand and non-OPEC supply.

Even though world demand forecasts were increased the projected call on OPEC oil in the third and fourth quarters were unchanged at last month's estimates of 24.8 million barrels a day and 25.7 million barrels a day, respectively. That's because rising non- OPEC supplies are expected to fill the gaps in supply.

For the year as a whole, the call on OPEC crude rose 200,000 barrels daily to 25 million barrels a day. Next year, the gap between world demand and non-OPEC supply allows for about 25.2 million barrels of OPEC crude per day.

The agency's forecast of non-OPEC oil supply in the fourth quarter was raised 200,000 barrels a day to 43.0 million barrels a day because of greater supplies from Europe, particularly the North Sea. In the third quarter, the forecast of non-OPEC supply was raised by 100,000 barrels a day to 41.8 million barrels a day.

Total world oil supply decreased 370,000 barrels a day to 68.56 million barrels a day last month.

Reading & Bates given contract for new jack

HOUSTON — Reading & Bates Corp. announced that the fourth-generation semisubmersible JACK BATES has been awarded a contract by Mobil North Sea Limited, on behalf of its partners of Elf Exploration UK plc and Lasmo North Sea plc, for the drilling of three wells, or an approximate nine month period, commencing no later than April, 1997.

The unit will be utilized on Mobil's Tranche 6 area in Blocks 213 and 214 in the U.K. sector of the North Atlantic in water depths up to 4500 feet. The total nine month contract value is estimated at approximately $32 million plus mobilization fee, equipment upgrades and shipyard time totaling approximately $12.5 million. Mobil expects to take options to extend the contract period to 18 months and will be in a position to offer slots in the drilling program to other operators.

With regard to the unit's schedule, it now appears that the unit will be utilized during all, or most of, 1996 in Southeast Asia with mobilization to the North Sea likely in late 1996 or early 1997.

Paul B. Loyd Jr., the company's chairman, president and CEO stated, "The Tranche 6 area is one of the world's harshest environments with extremely rough weather conditions and severe ocean currents, and we are very pleased that the JACK BATES, along with Reading & Bates' operational expertise, has been recognized by Mobil as the right combination to take on this very formidable deepwater drilling project. We believe this contract, in addition to reflecting a general tightening in the fourth-generation semi market, offers insight into the earnings power of the BATES relative to the rest of the high specification fleet when the rig is operated in the environment for which it was designed. We would expect to achieve strongly improving rates for our other two fourth-generation semis as well when their contracts roll over in the fourth quarter of 1996. Overall, our core fleet utilization currently stands at 100 percent, with a term commitment expected shortly for our one standard jackup idle in India."

MARINATING TIPS

Many barbecue recipes you'll encounter call for marinating foods. Here's the way to do it, plus a couple of savory recipes.

There are several pluses to using a plastic bag for marinating. Usually, less marinade is needed. Distributing the marinade over the food is easy—instead of stirring the food, just turn the sealed bag occasionally. (Use a heavy-duty bag and set it in a bowl in case the bag leaks.) And cleanup is simplified because the messy bag can be discarded.

If you have enough marinade, marinate foods in a glass or plastic bowl instead of a bag. Avoid using metal containers, since acid in a marinade may pit the container and add an 'off' flavor to the marinade.

When brushing with a marinade used for meat, poultry, or fish, be sure to brush on only during the early stages of cooking. The marinade has raw meat juices in it that need to be thoroughly cooked.

Marinate foods in the refrigerator; don't let them stand at room temperature.

Do not reuse the marinade. Reserve a portion of the marinade, before adding meat, for use later as a sauce for basting.

Garlic and Basil Marinade

Try this marinade with about 2 pounds of meaty chicken pieces, such as breasts, thighs, and drumsticks.

- ⅓ cup dry white wine or white wine vinegar
- ⅓ cup olive or cooking oil
- 1 green onion, sliced (2 tablespoons)
- 2 tablespoons snipped fresh basil, oregano, or rosemary or 1½ teaspoons dried basil, oregano, or rosemary, crushed
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 2 cloves garlic, minced

For marinade: In a small mixing bowl combine all ingredients. Place 2 to 2½ pounds meaty chicken pieces in a plastic bag set into a deep bowl or shallow dish. Pour marinade over chicken in bag. Seal bag and turn to coat chicken well. Marinate in the refrigerator for 6 to 24 hours, turning bag occasionally. Remove chicken from bag. Makes about 1 cup marinade.

Red-Wine-and-Peppercorn Marinade

A great marinade for about 1 pound of meat, such as beef sirloin steak or beef cubes for kabobs.

- ⅔ cup dry red wine
- ½ cup cooking oil
- 2 tablespoons cracked whole black pepper
- 2 tablespoons snipped fresh thyme or 1 teaspoon dried thyme, crushed
- 2 bay leaves
- ¼ teaspoon salt

For marinade: In a small mixing bowl combine all ingredients. Place 1 to 2 pounds beef steak, cubes, or roast in a plastic bag set into a deep bowl or shallow dish. Pour marinade over meat in bag. Seal bag and turn to coat meat well. Marinate in the refrigerator for 6 to 24 hours, turning bag occasionally. Remove meat from bag. Makes about 1¼ cups marinade.

KEEP YOUR POOL, HOT TUB, OR SPA CLEAN

Understand the chemicals that keep the water safe.

Remodeling your backyard into a summer resort complete with spa, hot tub, or pool offers loads of fair-weather fun. However, care of these aquatic facilities is a major responsibility and requires some chemical know-how.

KEEP THE WATER CLEAN

To prevent bacteria and algae growth in spa, hot tub, and pool water, you need chemicals and other controls. Because hot tubs and spas use hot water, which provides excellent fungal growing conditions, they need more frequent care than unheated swimming pools.

- Chlorine is the chemical most widely used to disinfect water. The form that's usually recommended for spas and hot tubs is a powder called sodium dichlor. Liquids and tablets, as well as powders, are used in pools. Chlorine attacks bacteria and algae and is neutralized in the process; some remains free in the water to work as needed.
- Bromine purifies water much the same way as chlorine but doesn't evaporate as fast, smell as strong, or irritate eyes to the same extent. Iodine is sometimes used to purify pools, too.

You'll need a test kit to determine how much of the chemical is left in the water at a given time and how much more you must add. No matter what chemical you use, be sure to follow package instructions exactly to avoid injury to yourself and damage to the pool or tub materials.

CHEMICALLY BALANCED WATER

Along with being clean, the water must be chemically balanced so it's neither too acidic nor too alkaline. Water that's too alkaline leaves a residue, turns cloudy, irritates eyes, and hinders purifying agents from working well. Water that's too acidic corrodes pipes and some linings, stains other materials, makes disinfectants dissipate too fast, and irritates your eyes.

Chemical balance of water is measured on a pH scale that ranges from 0 to 14; 7 is neutral. The water in your recreational facility should be slightly alkaline—between about 7.2 and 7.6.

To make water less acidic, add sodium bicarbonate (soda ash). To make it less alkaline, add a dry acid such as sodium bisulfate to a spa or hot tub, and liquid muriatic acid to a pool. These chemicals, like disinfectants, come with detailed instructions for safe, effective use.

DON'T FORGET YOUR VEGETABLES

Looking for elegant side-dish ideas to go along with your grilled steak? Try grilling some vegetables.

You can cook almost any vegetable over an open fire. For starters, try asparagus, squash, carrots, peppers, and leeks. Longer-cooking vegetables (such as new potatoes) need a few minutes of precooking in the microwave oven or on the range top.

Generously brush vegetables with melted margarine, butter, or olive oil for flavor and to prevent sticking. Cook directly over medium-hot coals till fork-tender and slightly charred.

DIRECT-GRILLING

VEGETABLES

Before grilling, rinse, trim, cut up, and precook vegetables as directed in the chart at right. To precook vegetables, in a saucepan bring a small amount of water to boiling; add desired vegetable and simmer, covered, for the time specified in the chart. Drain well.

Generously brush vegetables with olive oil, margarine, or butter before grilling to prevent vegetables from sticking to the grill rack. Test for medium or medium-hot coals.

To grill, place the vegetables on a piece of heavy foil or on the grill rack directly over the preheated coals. If placing directly on grill rack, lay vegetables perpendicular to wires on the rack so vegetables don't fall into coals.

Grill, uncovered, for the time given in the chart or till tender; turning occasionally. Watch grilling closely; try not to let vegetables char.

A 'DINO-MITE' SUMMER PARTY

A perfect party for kids who are crazy about dinosaurs!

Dinosaurs are everywhere, and kids love 'em! If your child is one who does, throw him or her a dinosaur-theme party that includes a dinosaur cake.

Prehistoric Cake

It's easy! Start with purchased cake and cookies. If you can't find dinosaur graham cookies, make Whole Wheat Dinosaur Cookies (see recipe).

2or 3 dinosaur graham cookies or

Whole Wheat Dinosaur Cookies
Decorating gel (optional)
1frosted round two-layer chocolate cake
1can chocolate frosting
1small fresh peach, nectarine, or apricot, halved Small gumdrops
Chopped peanuts
Malted milk balls
Fresh mint sprigs

If desired, outline features such as mouth and nose on dinosaur cookies with decorating gel.

A few hours before party time, on top of the cake place 2 or 3 mounds of frosting (about 1 tablespoon each). Press the cookies into the mounds so the cookies stand up. Arrange peach halves, cut side down, to one side of the cookies for boulders. Place gumdrops in clusters around cake top for rocks. Sprinkle nuts on cake top for pebbles. Attach the malted milk balls around the bottom edge of the cake, using more frosting, if necessary. Cover any remaining frosting and chill in the refrigerator for another use.

Just before serving, add fresh mint sprigs for shrubs and trees. Makes 12 servings.

Whole Wheat Dinosaur Cookies

Many grocery stores and gourmet shops carry dinosaur cookie cutters.

1½cups whole wheat flour
1teaspoon baking powder
¼teaspoon salt
½cup margarine or butter
½cup packed brown sugar
1egg
1teaspoon vanilla

In a small mixing bowl combine flour, baking powder, and salt.

In a large mixer bowl beat margarine or butter with an electric mixer on medium speed for 30 seconds. Add brown sugar; beat till fluffy. Add egg and vanilla; beat well. Add flour mixture; beat till well blended. Cover and chill for 2 hours or till easy to handle.

On a lightly floured surface roll dough ⅛ inch thick. Cut with 4-inch dinosaur cookie cutters. Place on an ungreased cookie sheet.

Bake in a 375° oven for 10 to 12 minutes or until very light brown around the edges. Cool on a wire rack. To store, place in an airtight container. Makes 15 to 20 cookies.

Kids flip over this edible "re-creation" of prehistoric times! Pebbles, rocks, boulders, plants ... and even dinosaurs are here. Purchase ready-made cookies at your grocery store, or make your own dinosaur cookies. Give extra cookies to kids who don't get one off the cake.

Is an Aboveground Pool for You?

These non-permanent structures can be built by do-it-yourselfers, and generally cost less than in-ground models.

If you long for a pool but your budget doesn't allow for an in-ground type, consider a more affordable aboveground pool. You may have the impression that an aboveground pool has all the charm of a storage tank, but with clever decking and landscaping, it can be as attractive and luxurious as an in-ground pool.

THE BASICS

Aboveground pools are usually supported by structures of steel, aluminum, or other strong materials, and lined with vinyl. They are most often round or oval, and typically 3 1/2 to 4 feet deep.

An aboveground pool requires the same care—weekly testing of pH levels and addition of chemicals as needed—as an in-ground pool.

THE PROS

These are some of the benefits of aboveground pools.

• Aboveground pools are usually less expensive to buy and install. Prices start at about $400 for the simplest styles. Nicer models with elaborate decks can cost almost as much as in-ground pools. Expect to pay at least $1,400 for a professionally installed aboveground pool.

• Aboveground pools are less permanent and can be assembled or dismantled by do-it-yourselfers. It isn't easy to move an aboveground pool or to get rid of one altogether, but it isn't impossible or expensive.

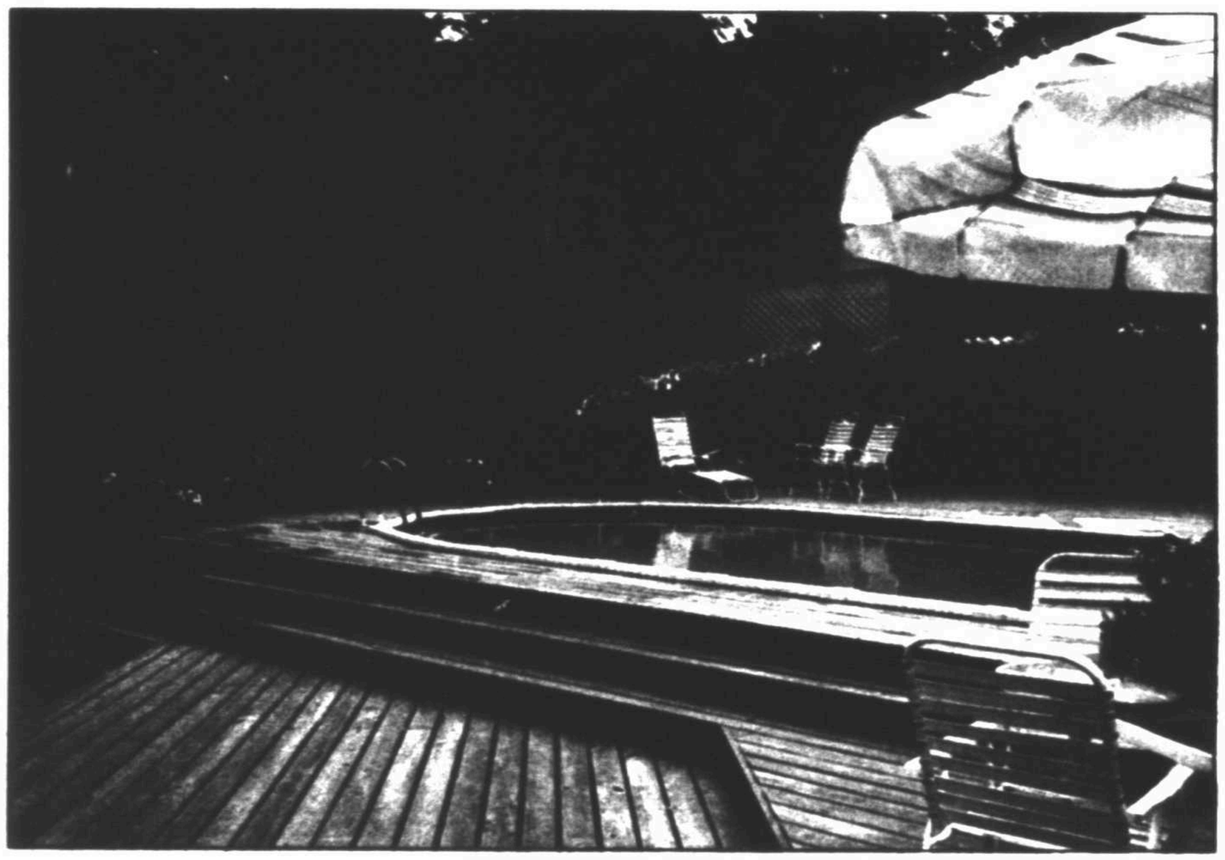
• There is less danger of children accidentally falling into aboveground pools, and by the time children have the motor skills to climb over the elevated side of the pool, they are usually old enough to know how to swim and obey the rules.

• Aboveground pools, because they are smaller, usually take fewer materials for the surrounding fencing, decking, and plantings. These materials will account for 40 to 50 percent of the total installation cost of either type of pool.

• An aboveground pool can adapt more readily to sloping lots. Creative decking can solve the problem of different grades.

• It is usually more difficult for animals to drink from aboveground pools. In areas near woods, animals have been known to come to unfenced in-ground pools to drink, then fall into the pool and drown.

• An aboveground pool can be placed off to the side so it is an addition to your yard rather than its focal point. This can be an advantage, especially for the long winter months when the pool is not in use.



• Should you decide to sell your property, the presence of a removable, aboveground pool doesn't limit your market. Once you put a pool in the ground, your property will only interest people who want—and want to maintain—the pool.

THE CONS

These are some of the drawbacks of aboveground pools:

• Aboveground pools are too shallow for a slide, for jumping, and for diving. However, they are deep enough for water games and aquatic aerobics.

• In-ground pools can be larger than aboveground pools.

• Aboveground pools are limited as to possible shapes, unlike the in-ground pools.

SPAS SPECTACULAR

Throw a curve into your backyard and take advantage of the design flexibility that spas offer.

It used to be that if you wanted to relax in the water in your own backyard, you had to build a pool. If you like to swim laps or float on rafts, that's still your best option. But if you simply want a soak, you can consider installing a spa instead.

Spas don't dominate your yard like pools do, they use a fraction of the water, they are easy to heat to comfortable temperatures, they offer the longer season of use, and they require relatively little maintenance. They also allow folks with small, odd-shape, or steep yards a watery, outdoor retreat. Spas are good-looking, too. You may find that your whole yard is enhanced by a spa—even when it's in use.

The trick to a successful spa installation is to integrate the spa with its surroundings. Thoughtful placement, careful selection of materials, and creative landscaping will ensure that the tub serves as a focal point yet blends with its environment. Try repeating colors, textures, and design materials, and consider shielding the spa with plantings, fencing, or lattice. Protect nearby plantings from the chlorinated water, and avoid plants that may drop leaves or fruit into the spa.

A spa can feel at home in the most formal of landscapes. The 8-foot-diameter round recessed tub, left, complements the round classical columns of the pergola overhead. Handsomely framed by close-clipped yew hedges and shadowed by wisteria vines, it offers a view that's as soothing as the soak.

BIRDS OF A FEATHER

With today's emphasis on healthful eating, chicken, turkey, and Cornish hens have become popular choices for grilling.

Spicy Thai Chicken

Sauce:

- 1 8-ounce can tomatoes
- ¼ cup raisins
- 2 tablespoons currant jelly
- 1 tablespoon canned chopped green chili peppers
- 1 clove garlic
- 2 teaspoons vinegar
- ¼–½ teaspoon crushed red pepper
- Dash salt

Poultry:

- 1 2½- to 3-pound broiler-fryer chicken, or other poultry, cut up

For sauce: In a blender container or food processor bowl combine all sauce ingredients. Cover and blend or process till smooth. Transfer to a small saucepan. Bring to boiling; reduce heat. Simmer, uncovered, about 10 minutes or till sauce reaches brushing consistency. Remove from heat; set aside.

To prepare poultry: If desired, remove skin from chicken. Rinse chicken; pat dry.

To cook by indirect grill method: In a covered grill arrange preheated coals around a drip pan. Test for medium heat above the pan. Place chicken, bone side down, on the grill rack over the drip pan. Cover and grill for 50 to 60 minutes or till chicken is tender and no longer pink, brushing frequently with sauce the last 10 minutes of grilling.

To cook by direct grill method: Place chicken, bone side up, on the grill rack of an uncovered grill. Cook directly over medium coals for 35 to 45 minutes or till chicken is tender and no longer pink, turning once halfway through grilling time and brushing frequently with sauce during the last 10 minutes of grilling.

Curried Barbecue Chicken

- 1 2½- to 3-pound broiler-fryer chicken, or other poultry, cut into quarters
- ¼ cup cooking oil
- ½ teaspoon finely shredded lime peel
- 2 tablespoons lime juice
- 1 teaspoon curry powder
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon ground cumin
- ¼ teaspoon ground coriander
- 1 clove garlic, minced

To prepare poultry: Rinse chicken. Pat dry with paper towels. Break wing, hip, and drumstick joints of chicken so quarters will lie flat. Twist wing tips under back.

For marinade: Stir together cooking oil, lime peel, lime juice, curry, salt, cumin, coriander, minced garlic, and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Place chicken in a plastic bag set into a shallow dish. Pour marinade over chicken. Close the bag. Marinate in the refrigerator for 6 to 24 hours, turning occasionally.

To cook by direct grill method: Drain chicken, reserving marinade. Grill chicken, bone side up, on an uncovered grill directly over medium coals for 20 minutes. Turn chicken and grill for 20 to 30 minutes more or till tender, brushing frequently with the reserved marinade. Makes 4 servings.

TAKING CARE OF A POOL

As you're thinking about the luxury and fun of a pool, also consider what you're biting off in regular pool maintenance. If you are aware of the obligations and decide it's something you can handle, then you'll enjoy the pool more. Here's a brief description of some of the chores to expect.

• Take samples of the pool water to check the chemical levels two to three times per week if used a lot, or once a week for minimal use.

• If the water looks cloudy or an unusually large number of people have been in the pool, give the pool a "shock treatment." A shock is an extra dose of a chlorine-base product that sanitizes the water.

• Once a week, clean and check the pool's circulation system.

• Once a week, remove leaves, twigs, and other debris from the pool with a skimmer. Also, vacuum to remove submerged debris.

• Once a week, vacuum the walls of the pool to prevent dirt and algae buildup.

In addition to the weekly maintenance, a pool needs to be closed at the end of the season. This includes removing the diving board and ladders, storing all pool chemicals, and draining the pool in cold climates. The filtration system must also be winterized.

To open the pool after winter, remove leaves and debris from the cover and the pool, brush or sweep the walls and bottom of the pool, reconnect pumps and filters, bring the water to the proper level, securely mount the ladders and diving board, and adjust the chemical levels.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR PARTY PLANNING

Follow these nifty hints and inside tips from experienced parents on throwing a kid's party and you'll have fun, too.

• Invite children who are all about the same age. That way, they'll have the same interests, skills, and attention spans. Also, if you invite kids who know each other, it'll be easier for them to play together.

• The old adage, "Limit the number of guests to your child's age" is good advice. Young kids simply can't handle as much hoopla and commotion as older kids can.

• The activities you plan will depend on the age and maturity of the kids involved. For 2- and 3-year-olds, avoid (or minimize) activities that cause excitement, such as races. Avoid competitive activities altogether. If you give prizes, make sure every child gets one. Ideally, the prizes you give should all be the same. Different prizes can cause competition, too.

• By age 5 or 6, children should be able to participate in competitive games in which only some children receive prizes.

• Be sure to include the date, time, place, who the party is for, your phone number, and RSVP, if you want one. Also mention any special information, such as something to bring or wear to the party, or that you'll be taking the kids home.

• Party length: As Mom always said, it's better to leave while you're having a good time. So, plan on short parties. An hour is plenty long for preschoolers, while two hours is a good guide for older kids.

• If the weather is good, have the party in your backyard or on a porch.

• Decorate your front door or railing so your home is easy to spot.

• Make plans for several more games and other activities than you think the kids will have time to do. They will go through things faster than you would ever think or believe!

• Have at least one other adult help you with the party. (If you have more than a dozen kids at the party, you might want to consider having a couple of adults help you!) If you can't find another adult, perhaps hire a neighborhood teen or one of your baby-sitters to lend a hand with the festivities.

• A video cartoon break sometime during the middle of the birthday party can really settle the kids down—and give you a much-needed breather! Have a couple of videos handy.

• Volunteer to take the kids home. (Be sure to mention this on the party invitation.) This way, you control how long the kids stay, instead of waiting for other parents to pick up one or two straggling partygoers.

GET ON THE STICK

What do meat, seafood, vegetables, and fruit have in common? They all thread up easily on skewers for super-simple summer cookouts with a Byzantine flavor. Marinades spice up the combination for a exotic addition to parties.

CREATE A KABOB!

A traditional lamb dish from the eastern Mediterranean, Kabobs (also spelt 'Kebabs') were originally the staple dish of shepherds from Persia, Turkey, and the Arabic world. Today they are a tasty (and easy) way to liven up a summer barbeque.

1. PICK A MEAT

Allow 4 servings per pound of meat or fish (3 servings per pound of shrimp with shell or chicken on the bone).

- Shrimp. Thaw shrimp, if frozen. Shell and devein the shrimp.
- Sea scallops. Thaw the sea scallops, if frozen.
- Fish. Choose from tuna, swordfish, shark, catfish, or sea bass steaks or fillets. Thaw the fish, if frozen. Cut fish steaks or fillets into 1-inch pieces.
- Chicken breasts. Skin, bone, and cut chicken into 1-inch cubes.
- Lamb, boneless. Cut lamb into 1-inch pieces.

- Beef sirloin, boneless. Cut beef sirloin into 1-inch pieces.
- Pork, lean boneless. Cut into 1-inch cubes.

2. PICK A FRUIT OR VEGETABLE

Plan on 1 cup of fruit or vegetables per person.

PRECOOK THESE:

- Summer squash. Cut into 1/2-inch slices.
- Broccoli or cauliflower flowerets.
- Baby scallopini squash.
- Fresh ears of corn. Cut into 1-inch pieces.
- Whole tiny new potatoes. Halve potatoes.
- Baby carrots.
- Green onions or leeks. Cut into 1-inch pieces.

NO NEED TO PRECOOK:

- Red or green pepper. Cut into 1-inch pieces.
- Apple wedges.
- Papaya. Peel, seed, and cut into 1-inch pieces.
- Orange slices.
- Fresh pineapple. Cut into 1-inch pieces.
- Pea pods. Thaw, if frozen.

- Frozen artichoke hearts. Thaw.
- Jicama. Peel and cut into 1-inch pieces.

3. PICK A MARINADE

Allow 1 recipe of marinade per pound of meat.

- Apple Marinade

Combine 1/4 cup water; 1/4 cup frozen apple juice concentrate, thawed; 2 tablespoons white wine vinegar; 2 tablespoons olive oil or cooking oil; 2 tablespoons soy sauce; and 1 teaspoon dried savory, crushed. Makes 1 cup.

- Lime Marinade

Combine 1/2 cup chicken broth; 1 teaspoon shredded lime peel; 1/3 cup lime juice; 2 tablespoons cooking oil; 1 tablespoon brown sugar; 2 cloves garlic, minced; and 1/8 teaspoon ground red pepper. Makes 1 cup.

- Wine Marinade

Combine 1/4 cup olive oil or cooking oil; 1/4 cup dry white wine; 1 tablespoon minced dried onion; 1/2 teaspoon dried basil, crushed; 1/2 teaspoon dried rosemary, crushed; and 1/4 teaspoon pepper. Makes 2/3 cup.

4. PUT THEM ALL TOGETHER

- Marinate

Prepare marinade. Place seafood, fish, or meat in a plastic bag in shallow dish. Pour marinade over; close bag. Chill 2 to 4 hours for fish, seafood, or chicken; 6 hours or overnight for lamb, beef, or pork, turning once. Remove meat; reserve marinade.

- Precook

Cook vegetables in a small amount of boiling water 1 to 2 minutes (4 to 5 minutes for carrots, onions, or leeks; 6 to 8 minutes for corn; 12 to 15 minutes for potatoes).

- Thread Kabobs

On skewers thread meat, vegetables, and fruits.

- Grill Kabobs

For fish or seafood, grease grill rack. Grill kabobs on an uncovered grill over hot coals 8 to 12 minutes or till done. Turn and brush often with marinade. ENJOY.

Kabobs are simple, fun to make, and open up a whole new realm of possibilities for the back-yard grill.

Follow These Tips And You Too Can Be Cooler This Summer.

Put these energy-saving tips to work for you this summer and you'll not only maximize your air-conditioning system, but you'll cut a little something off your electric bill as well.

And you won't have to spend a lot of money. In fact, these tips are pretty simple. You can start by setting your thermostat to the highest comfortable setting. 78° is a pretty good setting. Then use portable fans or ceiling fans to help circulate the cool air and help you feel comfortable. You'll be amazed how cool 78° can feel with fans blowing the air all around you.

You can also help your cooling system by cleaning or replacing dirty air filters at the beginning of the summer. Then check them at least once a month during the cooling season. This will increase the efficiency of your cooling system in the summer by allowing the air to flow freely.

It's good to make sure that leaves and debris are cleaned from around the outside unit. You should also consider planting deciduous shade trees on the east or west side of your house to protect it from the hot summer sun. Deciduous trees are those that lose their leaves in the winter, allowing the sun to help warm your home when it's cold.

If your windows are not shaded with trees or awnings, keep draperies or blinds closed on windows that receive direct sunlight. And make sure you have proper attic ventilation to allow hot air to escape. You may want to install vents in the roof eaves and ridge to improve air circulation. This will definitely help to keep your house cooler.

Plus, there's always the standard advice for summer. It's nothing new. Try to avoid unnecessary opening and closing of doors when the air-conditioner is operating. And make sure windows and doors are airtight.

Now, if you are thinking about buying or replacing an air-conditioning system, choose a high-efficiency model. Preferably a heat pump. We recommend a Seasonal Energy Efficiency Ratio (SEER) of at least 12.0. For room units, choose a unit with a rating of 10.0 or higher.

So, there you have it. A few energy-saving tips to help save you some money. Not to mention help you through another hot Texas summer.
