ALLIES STRIKE IRAQ

Planes hit Saddam's missile sites

Iraq's depleted assets will restrict retaliation

By Ed Blanche
Associated Press writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Saddam Hussein's ability to retaliate militarily against an Allied air strike is extremely limited.

But, as the 1990 invasion of Kuwait showed, Saddam is capable of anything and as often as not flies in the face of orthodox military thinking — usually with catastrophic results.

He has few military assets capable of penetrating the U.S.-led allies' defenses in the Persian Gulf in order to hit their naval and air forces, although he could well lash out if he feels he is cornered.

One factor likely to inhibit Baghdad is that any significant attempt to retaliate against the allies risks escalating the confrontation and provoking an even heavier allied response.

■ Analysis

Saddam retains sizeable arsenals of anti-aircraft missiles and, Western officials believe, possibly as many as 150 Scud-type surface-to-surface missiles.

Militarily, Saddam is in no position to take on the Americans and their allies again after his forces were severely mauled in the 1991 Gulf War.

For one thing, an Iraqi military response would expose the military and economic infrastructure the Iraqis have so painstakingly — and proudly — rebuilt since Allied warplanes and missiles flattened it during the war.

But, faced with a worsening economic squeeze because of 2½ years of U.N. sanctions, the Iraqi leader may be seeking a diversion to rally Iraqis behind his beleaguered regime.

Saddam may also be hoping to exploit divisions within the wartime coalition that Bush stitched together to liberate Kuwait.

The Arab allies, in particular, fear that further pressure on Baghdad could lead to the disintegration of Iraq, with its volatile ethnic mix.

Saddam could try to knock down some allied aircraft to avenge the MiG-25 shot down Dec. 27 by a U.S. F-16 over the "no-fly zone" imposed last August on southern Iraq.

His air defenses, which accounted for nearly all the 41 allied warplanes lost in the Persian Gulf conflict, remain potent despite war damage.

But his severely depleted air

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. and allied aircraft that swept through the skies of southern Iraq on Wednesday night rained laser-guided bombs and HARM anti-radar missiles in a half-hour strike against missile batteries, Pentagon officials said.

Iraq's only response appeared to be a small amount of anti-aircraft fire. No allied planes were reported lost in the four-hour attack, said Marine Gen. Joseph Hoar, the four-star general in charge of the mission.

A senior Pentagon official said 112 aircraft took part in the raid.

"Based on pilot reports, we believe it has been successful," said Hoar, who briefed reporters at Central Command headquarters in Tampa, Fla.

No military official, either at briefings or on background, would estimate the number of missiles or missile batteries destroyed by the strike.

Most said that it would take hours for camera footage of the strikes to reach military analysts and several days to assess the damage.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, in an interview with PBS' "MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour" said the allies "went in after a total of eight targets at six different sites."

The targets included the surface-to-air missile sites, their radars and "early warning radar sites and Iraqi air defenses" that Saddam had attempted to rebuild since the Gulf War.

Cheney said he had no way of estimating a possible number of Iraqi casualties, saying only that "dozens or a couple of hundred"

Local officials support Bush

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

The U.S.-led allied air strike on Iraq Wednesday was met largely with support from both political parties and government leaders, across the nation and locally.

While spokemen for President George Bush and President-elect Bill Clinton were quick to assure the American public that the two men stood together, local party and community leaders were united in their praise for Bush's decision.

"I totally support Bush's actions," said Rick Davis, chairman for the Midland County Republican Party. "I guess Saddam needs to be taught another lesson. He thought with the country in transition, that Bush would not act or that Clinton would be too busy to deal with him. He thought he could get away with it and Bush showed he couldn't."

Midland County Democratic Party chairman Chris McCormack agreed.

"I support the president and his insistence that Saddam honor U.N. sanctions and agreement," he said. "Saddam has indicated that he is going to test our political resolve and the only way to keep him in line was through force."

Midland Mayor J.D. Faircloth said he supported Bush's decision to bomb Iraq.

"This has been a difficult political situation for Bush to work in," Faircloth said. "It think he did the right thing."

No one expressed surprise at Clinton's announcement of his support of the president.

"Clinton has always indicated that he has supported Bush's position in this matter," McCormack said. "During his campaign, he made it clear he would maintain a strong position with Iraq. He has been unwavering in his support of Bush."

Davis said Clinton's actions did not surprise him because the decision was a non-partisan action.

"This is something Americans can all agree on," he said. "We should support the president and not be fighting among ourselves about it."

Faircloth agreed with former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's statement that Bush did Clinton a favor by launching an attack on Iraq before the presidency changed hands.

"If the situation worsens, it will be easier to continue bombing than it would be to start," Faircloth said. "Bush did Clinton a favor and I am pleased that Clinton has been supportive of the decision."

The mayor said he felt the air strike sent a "clear signal" to Iraq that the United States would not tolerate his actions.

Midland residents support air strike

Midland residents overwhelmingly supported President Bush's call Wednesday for bombing strikes against select Iraqi missile sites but differed greatly on how affective they believe the raids will be against Saddam Hussein.

Five other people asked about the bombings, all who declined to leave their name, said the situation was "wrong" and "a tragedy," but opted not to elaborate.

"Saddam asked for it and now he's getting it," said Andy Andrade, 33. "It was inevitable. The only thing he seems to understand is force. Let's do it."

Elidia Olgin, a mother of a U.S. Navy maintenance worker who served in the Persian Gulf, supports Bush's parting shot but hopes the crisis doesn't escalate.

"We need to get rid of Saddam Hussein — no question about that," she said. "But I hope we don't have to go through war again."

Somali sniper wounds Navy medic; Marines kill second gunman

U.S. soldier's death angers, saddens his comrades

By George Esper
Associated Press writer

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Pfc. Domingo Arroyo has become the first U.S. Marine to die in this repository of lawlessness half way around the world.

His comrades in arms are angry that Arroyo, only 21, will never fulfill a young man's dreams. They are afraid that a bullet might also earn them an unwanted niche in history.

The Marines had hoped to leave with everyone they brought into Somalia on Dec. 9, even though snipers regularly have fired on them.

Now that hope is gone, and they see the finality of death at its ugliest.

"Everybody should realize that this is the real thing over here. It's not a game," said one man who stared death down and didn't blink.

Lt. David Ballinger, 24, of Nashville, Tenn., led a patrol that fought off an ambush in a dark alley Sunday near the former U.S. Embassy, now Marine headquarters.

"There's people really out there trying to put a bullet in you," said Ballinger, an artilleryman who joined a rifle company the night

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Stung by bold Somali attacks that inflicted the first two American military casualties, U.S. forces killed one gunman Wednesday as edgy Marines patrolled lawless Mogadishu in the hunt for weapons.

A Somali sniper fired three shots at a Marine patrol wounding a U.S. Navy medic Wednesday afternoon, less than a day after a Marine was killed in a firefight near the airport.

Later, Marines searching for a weapons cache inside a building near the national theater shot to death a Somali who threatened them with a heavy machine gun.

Automatic weapons fire crackled on the streets of the capital Wednesday night.

At checkpoints, Marines appeared more nervous and imposed stricter security. Some directed anger at Somalis.

"A lot of people aren't going to like Somalis even though some are innocent," said Lance Cpl. Jesse De Guzman, 21, of San Jose, Calif. "You start looking at them differently. It just gets you mad inside, but you have to hold it in."

Marine Col. Michael W. Hagee said at a news conference that the casualties would not cause any changes in military operations. He said U.S. forces would continue to step up their patrols and hunts for weapons.

"Because we have reduced the number of weapons on the street we have put some of these militia individuals out of business. They are no longer able to extort on their security rackets," Hagee of the ambush. "This is the first time I've ever done anything like this. It's kind of scary."

The bullet that killed Arroyo also mentally wounded scores of his comrades with the shrapnel of pain and guilt and anger and fear and a lot of other feelings difficult to express.

"I don't know how I'm feeling right now, just built up," said one of Arroyo's best friends, Cpl. Quanta Perry, 23, of Augusta, Ga. "I hated that it had to end this way."

Perry had stood in harm's way as a guard at the gate of the former U.S. embassy, facing crowds of Somalis who stare endlessly at the Marines and sometimes taunt them.

The news dazed him, and his sergeant pulled him away from the gate and took his rifle away.

"Anytime someone gives you bad news like that, they take it away because they probably think you're going to commit suicide or shoot Somalis," Perry said through tears. "I guess he just thinks I might open up on the crowd."

Perry walked around the Marine compound, thinking, thinking, thinking. Perhaps he should have been hardened to death by now, even at his young age. He had lost a couple of buddies in the Gulf War with Iraq.

Perry and Arroyo had never talked about their fears. "We didn't expect anything like this to happen," said Perry.

Pfc. Domingo Arroyo

Arroyo used to talk about returning to school after he left the Marines in four months. Perry remembered how much Arroyo had enjoyed working on his car back at the Twentynine Palms Marine Corps base in California.

"I'm not going to injure myself," Perry said. "He was a good friend but I have to continue on with the mission. I'm here to do my job but I can't take my aggression out on them."

From the Mogadishu Airport to the foxholes and amphibious assault vehicles, Marines said they would be more alert.

Pvt. Robert Lowery 4th, 23, of Detroit, who had been with Arroyo since they joined the corps nearly four years ago, was devastated.

"I'm feeling like I just want to go out there and take it out on the person that shot him, just go and find him and kill him myself," said Lowery, a guard at the embassy. "Everyone is feeling a sense of shock and surprise. " . . . It's going to make us more aware. They were trying to drill into our heads to be aware of your surroundings. A lot of the Marines are — and I'm guilty of it, too — are kind of lax. We see the same crowd every day. it gets monotonous."

For Perry, the mourning has only begun.

"I know I'm going to think about him," he said. "I'm going to think about him more and more. It hurt me deep down. I'm not finished crying."

(From 1A)

said. "It's still a dangerous place, but based on when we came ashore a little over 30 days ago it is a much safer place."

The first Marines landed Dec. 9 to start an international operation to end two years of clan fighting and banditry and get food to Somalia's famine-stricken people. Army Lt. Col. Steve Ritter said more than 33,000 soldiers from 20 nations are in Somalia, including 22,000 Americans.

Hagee said it was too early to tell if the attacks that inflicted the American casaulties represented any kind of organized resistance by the Somalis.

The Tuesday night ambush that killed Marine Pfc. Domingo Arroyo, 21, of Elizabeth, N.J., and the sniper attack that wounded the medic followed the most ambitious American effort to disarm Somalis in Mogadishu.

Since Sunday, Marines have rounded up 16 truckloads of weapons and ammunition in sweeps of gun markets and storehouses. The haul included 265 rifles and 55 machine guns.

American troops discovered a complex of 15 underground bunkers just northeast of the city Wednesday stocked with what Hagee called "a great deal of ammunition."

"We have just gotten started on Mogadishu. We're clearing out the rear now. I have characterized Mogadhishu as our sternest challenge," said Maj. Gen. Charles Wilhelm, the Marine commander in Somalia.

The ambush that killed Arroyo was the first on an American foot patrol and the boldest attack on U.S. troops.

"It was a fierce firefight," said Hagee, who said a "significant number" of Somali gunmen opened fire on the 11-man night patrol.

"Exactly how many I don't know. But at one point they had more firepower than we did," he said.

He said the squad leader correctly withdrew to a rally point, found one Marine was missing and called for reinforements.

"As soon as he had enough combat power, he went back in and got him," Hagee said.

He said Arroyo was dead on arrival at the military hospital.

The wounded Navy medic, whose name was being withheld until his family could be notified, was in stable condition with a bullet wound in the left shoulder. He was hit by a sniper while on a patrol just south of the old soccer stadium in northern Mogadishu, which is a camp for about 1,000 troops.

A civilian Army employee was killed last month when his vehicle hit an anti-tank mine in western Somalia and a Marine was wounded by friendly fire.

Angry Marines tightened security at the airport Wednesday and were more aggressive at checkpoints.

Wilhelm, the Marine commander, said he did not believe any new rules of engagement would be needed.

If a Somali moves his weapon one millimeter toward a Marine, the Marine can kill him, Wilhelm said.

ALLIES BLITZ IRAQ

World leaders blame Saddam for confrontation

Associated Press

Governments around the world supported the allied bombing of Iraq on Wednesday and blamed Saddam Hussein for the latest military confrontation in the Persian Gulf.

But some nations hoped the air strike is no the beginning of wider battles throughout the region.

In Turkey, Premier Suleyman Demirel said he hoped that "this would not escalate and cover the north as well." Northern Iraq, which borders Turkey, is the home of Kurds who have been rebelling against Saddam.

President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt said he was "deeply sorry" about the use of force but said Saddam had provoked the attack with "irresponsible behavior."

British Prime Minister John Major defended the bombings as necessary "to stop Saddam Hussein and his aggression."

Britain joined the United States and France in dispatching 110 warplanes to bomb surface-to-air missiles in southern Iraq. Washington and its allies had warned Iraq to stop violating Persian Gulf War cease-fire terms or face serious consequences.

"We didn't take this action lightly," Major said in London. "The Iraqis have been given ample warning."

Kuwaitis cheered the attacks, but feared their foe could again lash out against the oil-rich emirate.

Long lines of cars formed at gas stations, and people raced to buy food. Kuwaitis and foreigners rushed to automatic teller machines to withdraw whatever cash they could.

Nawal al-Rabia, 30, a teacher said she started making gas masks with cloth and coal out of fear Saddam Hussein would retaliation with a chemical weapon attack.

"We are afraid not of an invasion, but of his crazy reactions," said the teacher.

Spain, a major site of military facilities during the Persian Gulf War, also supported the action.

Foreign Minister Javier Solana told Spanish National Radio that the action "seems a legitimate one ... as it is intended to re-establish international legality systematically violated by Iraq."

In Canberra, the Australian government said the bombing showed "the futility of Saddam Hussein's recent acts of provocation," said a Foreign Ministry spokesman who asked not to be identified.

Argentina, which gave logistical support to the U.N. embargo of Iraq, issued a statement saying that it "agrees with the terms of the declaration" by the U.N. Security Council.

President Carlos Menem said if the United Nations asks for support, such as troops, "Argentina is going to lend that help."

Venezuela said it backed the allied position against Iraq, a fellow member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"It's lamentable that this situation has appeared again, but we must acknowledge the efforts the United Nations has taken to avoid it," President Carlos Andres Perez said.

In Brasilia, the Foreign Ministry released a statement saying that "Brazil hopes that Iraq interrupts immediately any provocations to U.N. resolutions." The communique said Brazil "supports all of the decisions made by the U.N. and understands that the violations of those resolutions threatens peace and international security."

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said the attack had nothing to do with the Jewish state. He called on the public to stick to normal routines.

During the 1991 Gulf War, Israelis donned gas masks and huddled in sealed rooms as Iraq fired 39 Scud missiles into Israel.

Jordan, which borders Iraq, took a conciliatory stance by urging a peaceful solution to end the latest showdown between Baghdad and the West.

"We are against force and we support dialogue," Foreign Minister Kamel Abu Jaber said.

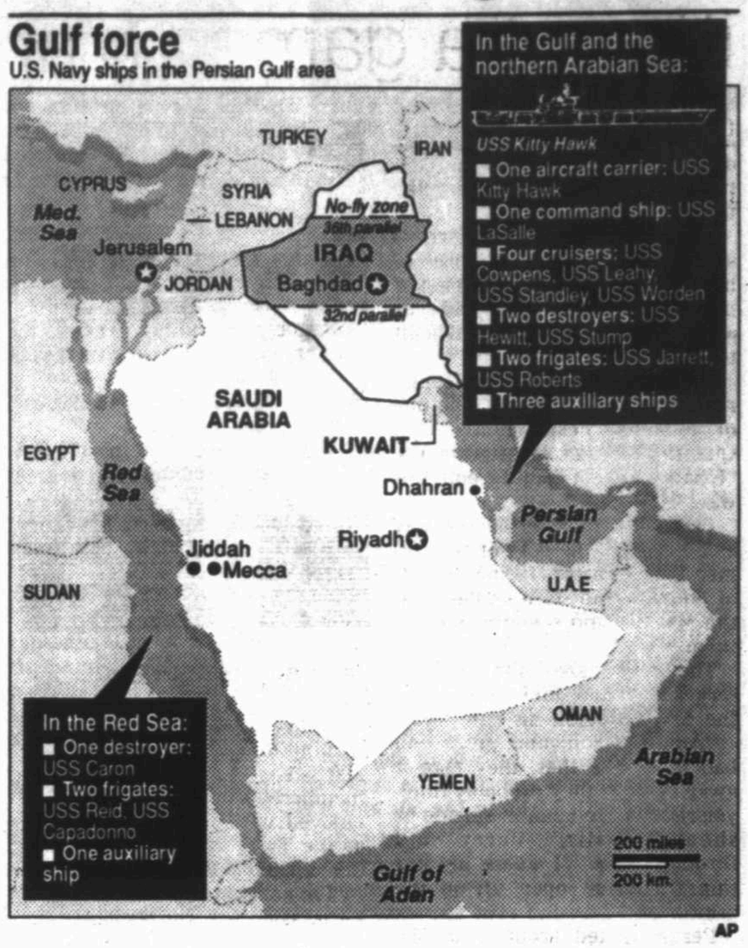

Jordan is still recovering economically and politically from its opposition to the allied coalition that ousted Iraq from Kuwait during Gulf War.

In Turkey, another Iraqi neighbor, a spokesman for Iraqi Kurds indicated the raids didn't go far enough for his group. Serchil Qazzaz said in Ankara that Iraq has bombarded Kurdish positions near Irbil, the principal Kurdish city in northern Iraq.

"We hope that our population will not be ignored and abandoned once more, because the same missiles the allied aircraft targeted in the south, are there in the north," Qazzaz said.

One opponent of the bombing was Francis Wurtz, a member of the French Communist Party politburo.

"How is it in France's interest to enlist in such an operation?" Wurtz asked. "Our country could do better by trying to advance justice in the world."

Clinton's prepared to inherit standoff

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — President-elect Clinton expressed full support for Wednesday's allied military strike on Iraq and said sternly he "can't rule out" further use of force after he takes office if Saddam Hussein violates international agreements.

"I think it was the right decision, done in the right way," Clinton said of the U.S.-led air strikes on Iraqi missile installations. "We've been very supportive of President Bush."

With his inauguration one week away, Clinton said he was prepared to inherit the tense standoff with Iraq, the deployment of U.S. troops to Somalia and other global problems.

"It's going to take a lot of time but we always knew that," Clinton said of foreign policy. "I think that taking the initiative is the right way to go. ... But it cannot distract us from the urgent domestic mission and it will not."

Clinton spoke a short time after his top spokesman said Clinton would "do what it takes" to force Iraqi compliance with United Nations resolutions stemming from the Persian Gulf War cease-fire agreement.

Asked whether he was ready to order additional military strikes if Saddam again violates the U.N. mandates, Clinton said: "You can't rule it out, particularly with regard to Iraq, you can't rule out force."

Bush telephoned Clinton to tell him the operation was getting under way against Saddam.

Clinton said of the Iraqi president, "He keeps for reasons I don't understand pushing and pushing."

But Clinton said he was opposed to any U.S.-sponsored assassination attempt on Saddam. "Our country has a firm policy that says political assassination is illegal and that is the proper policy," he said.

With the U.S. transfer of power nearing, the Clinton camp sought not only to convey his support for Bush's actions but also to send a clear signal to Saddam not to expect a relaxation of U.S. policy.

"If that is the intention, he's making a mistake because President-elect Clinton supports President Bush's policy and he will do whatever it takes to ensure compliance when he takes office," said communications director George Stephanopoulos.

Added Clinton: "I learned a long time ago not to speculate about people's motives. How I handle him depends on how he behaves."

In an interview with The New York Times published in Thursday editions, however, Clinton said he could envision a normal relationship with Saddam provided the Iraqi leader behaved in accordance with international norms.

"I am not obsessed with the man," the president-elect was quoted as saying. "But I am obsessed with the standards of conduct embodied in those U.N. accords, and ... I would urge him to change his behavior."

In Washington, Secretary of State-designate Warren Christopher said Iraq was testing the "will and the strength of the international community."

"I say with great determination that Saddam Hussein should not doubt for a second that we, the incoming administration, will meet that test," Christopher said.

The White House said a battalion-sized U.S. task force was headed to Kuwait as a symbol of U.S. commitment to enforcing the U.N. resolutions.

"I think it was a good signal," Clinton said of that deployment, adding praise for Kuwait for what he said were "some gestures" toward Iraq in recent days aimed at resolving border disputes.

IRAQ: Saddam retains Scud missile arsenal force, down to 150 to 200 warplanes from a prewar strength of 700, is unlikely to fare any better against the high-tech allies than it did in the Gulf War.

(From 1A)

Saddam could launch Scuds against the allies' airbases in Saudi Arabia at Dhahran and Riyadh, or at targets further south along the gulf.

But that would leave him dangerously exposed to retaliation by Allied air power, with its precision-guided "smart" weapons, and long-range Tomahawk cruise missiles aboard U.S. warships in the gulf. These weapons wreaked havoc in Iraq during the war.

Between Jan. 17 and Feb. 26, 1991, Saddam fired more than 80 Scuds or the longer-range Iraqi-built variants, all notoriously inaccurate, at Saudi Arabia and Israel.

About half were destroyed by U.S. Patriot anti-missile missiles in flight. About half of those that got through missed their targets.

Postwar assessments show the allies failed to destroy any of Iraq's mobile Scud launchers despite intensive air strikes and that only 12 of the 30 fixed-site launchers were knocked out despite claims of a high success rate.

To counter the Scud threat, there are now Patriot batteries in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Bahrain.

Saddam backed off using chemical weapons during the war, apparently for fear the allies might counter in kind or even respond with tactical nuclear weapons. It's unlikely he'll play that card now either.

Although Saddam lost about 3,000 tanks, 1,860 armored fighting vehicles and 2,150 artillery guns, London's International Institute for Strategic Studies estimates he still has around 2,300 top-line T-72 tanks, plus lower-quality T-62s, T-55s and T-54s, 2,900 armored vehicles and more than 1,000 heavy guns.

That's enough to suppress unrest inside Iraq, but limits his offensive capabilities beyond Iraq's borders. The Iraqi navy was virtually wiped out during the war.

Saddam could be tempted to use his armor to stab into Kuwait, as he did in the 1990 invasion, because the allies have virtually no land forces in the region and the Kuwaitis are still rebuilding their military, which was shattered during the war.

But he runs the risk of massive air and missile retaliation for an attack that, at best, would probably be little more than a defiant gesture with limited objectives.

Day: Airport isn't on alert

Staff report

Midland International Airport did not go on alert during Wednesday's allied air strike against Iraq.

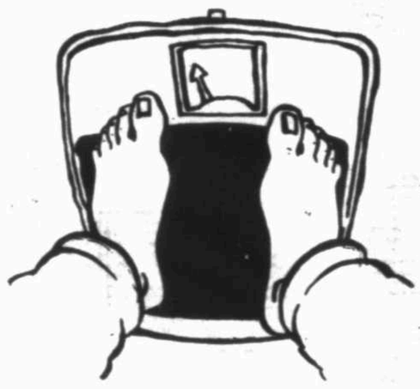

"We received no wire to go on alert," said Ken Day, director of the airport.

He said that instructions to activate the airport contingency program would come from the Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport Civilian Aviation Security Field Office.

The Midland airport stayed on alert during the Persian Gulf War in 1990.

WEATHER SUMMARY

High to be in mid-50s

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for cloudy skies with a 30 percent chance of rain. The high is expected to be in the mid-50s and winds will be south at 10-20 mph.

Tonight should be cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain and a low in the mid-30s, according to a National Weather Service in Midland.

Friday is forecast to be partly cloudy with a high in the upper 50s.

After an overnight low of 27, Wednesday's high reached 50, compared to the record high for that date of 80 set in 1957. The record low was 13 set in 1982.

STATE

A storm over the western United States moved toward Texas on Wednesday, raising the probability of freezing rain, sleet and snow for the Panhandle, South Plains and much of North Texas.

Mid-afternoon temperatures on Wednesday were in the 20s across the Panhandle, in the 30s and 40s east of the mountains of far West Texas, and in the 50s elsewhere.

Temperatures in the Panhandle are expected to remain in the 20s and 30s through Friday.

Temperatures across North Texas were 5 degrees or more below normal. The extremes ranged from 36 degrees at Abilene to 53 degrees at Lufkin.

The National Weather Service said rain could be expected throughout Central and North Texas on Thursday and Thursday night, with freezing rain and sleet likely in northern portions.

Highs Thursday should be in the upper 30s to lower 40s across North Texas, with lows in the 30s. More rain is likely Friday.

A large, cold high-pressure system continued to settle on Wednesday over South Texas. Upper level impulses moving across the region set off some spotty showers from Del Rio to Corpus Christi.

Temperatures stayed in the 40s all day over the Hill Country. The mercury tose into the 60s in far South Texas, while readings in the 50s were reported for the rest of the region.

Occasional rain and drizzle is expected throughout South Texas on Thursday, with highs in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Rain and snow spread across parts of the West on Wednesday, while up to a foot of snow fell from the upper Midwest across the Great Lakes. Snow and freezing rain also extended across the Northeast.

In the mountains of northern California, Quincy reported 23 inches of snow overnight with Burney and Hatchet Mountain Pass picking up 18 inches, the National Weather Service said. In the Sierra Nevada, up to 15 inches of snow accumulated.

Snow also fell across central Utah, with 4 to 5 inches at Richfield, and at higher elevations of the Colorado Plateau region and the central and southern Rockies.

Rain fell along the coast of California and southern sections of Arizona and New Mexico.

Flooding and mudslides blocked some highways around the San Francisco Bay area and farther east toward Sacramento, Calif. Vacaville, Calif., got 4.29 inches of rain in 24 hours, with 3.24 inches at Sacramento.

Saddam calls for 'holy war'

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein urged his people early Thursday to wage "holy war" against Western allies after attacks on military targets in southern Iraq.

After the speech, Baghdad radio reported the raids killed a soldier and three civilians in a residential area near a "petrochemical complex" in the area around the southern city of Basra. The report, which quoted an anonymous official source, also said three soldiers and four civilians were wounded.

"Fight against them as you fought the enemies of God before, and extinguish the fire of hatred in the muzzles of their weapons," the Iraqi leader said in a speech monitored in Nicosia.

"The criminals came back, carrying their spite and their tools of evil," Saddam said in the nearly 10-minute address.

He urged the Iraqi military and its air defenses "to turn the skies of Iraq into a lava against the oppressors from north to south, east and west.

"Each aircraft of theirs in the sky of Iraq is a target for your weapons. Use the name of God and you will find them wrecked, God willing."

He added: "The American aggressors and their allies who work under Satan ... attacked our air defenses beginning with the southern part of the Iraqi territory."

"Another battle has started. Another holy war ordained by God, so that we can attain another great victory for you, the Iraqi people," Saddam said.

He praised the Iraqi armed forces as "the pride of Iraq" and the Iraqi people as the "knights ... of the mother of all battles," Iraq's name for the Persian Gulf War.

"The aggressors will be defeated," Saddam said, using phrases reminiscent of the gulf crisis.

Television images showed Saddam in uniform, seated behind a desk with an Iraqi flag nearby emblazoned with the phrase "God is Great" as he delivered his speech from an undisclosed location.

The use of Islamic imagery, which Saddam began in earnest during the crisis that followed his Aug. 2, 1990, invasion of Kuwait, usually is aimed at bolstering his support among his people and Muslims everywhere.

Saddam's rhetoric contrasted to statements by Iraqi U.N. Ambassador Nizar Hamdoon, who offered to stop arms-salvage forays into Kuwait and permit U.N. weapons inspectors to use their own aircraft.

people would be needed to attend to the sites that were attacked. However, Cheney added, it wasn't clear whether the sites were manned or not.

A Baghdad radio report said one soldier and three civilians were killed in a residential area near a petrochemical complex. The radio also said three soldiers and four civilians were wounded.

Jet aircraft attacked permanent anti-aircraft missile and radar sites at Tallil, Najaf, Samawah and Amarah in southern Iraq, as well as a number of mobile missile sites near Basra and Nasiryah, Hoar said.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the targets involved the surface-to-air missile batteries that had been used to threaten allied aircraft policing Iraq's southern no-fly zone, as well as the batteries' "associated infrastructure" — the sites and radars used to control the weapons.

Hoar said he kept in touch with the U.S. commander on the ground, Air Force Maj. Gen. James Record, through an open telephone line throughout the four hours the aircraft were in the skies.

"We kept an open line so we could chat. It was very easy," Hoar said, appearing calm and confident just hours after the mission, which was not given a separate name.

The senior Pentagon official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the bulk of the 112 aircraft were U.S. Air Force jets launched from a base at Dhahran in Saudi Arabia, joined by several dozen jets launched from the aircraft carrier USS Kitty Hawk in the Persian Gulf.

The force included 38 attack aircraft such as F-117 Stealth bombers, F-16s, F-15Es, A-6 bombers, F-18s and British Tornadoes, the source said. They were accompanied by some 26 U.S. F-15Cs, F-14s, F-18s and French Mirages that served as air defenders and 16 Air Force and Navy jets that attacked Iraqi air defenses, the source added.

A group of 30 tankers, AWACS radar planes, reconnaissance aircraft and helicopters rounded out the force, the source said.

The aircraft dropped 2,000-pound laser-guided bombs — the so-called "smart bombs" that produced dramatic direct hits shown on videotape during the Gulf War. In addition, HARM missiles, which plow into their radar site targets by following radar emissions, and free-falling gravity bombs were used in the strike, the source said.

"It was well crafted, a pin-point strike," the source said. "It was designed to send a crystal-clear message."

In comparison to the days and days of air strikes that hit Iraq at the beginning of the Persian Gulf War, the strike appeared limited in scope.

However, Hoar argued with that description, contending it was a complex mission involving more than 100 planes and that more forces could be used, should Saddam continue his defiant behavior.

Fitzwater said the missile batteries were targeted, instead of additional targets like airfields, because the missiles were a direct threat to allied aircraft.

"We felt this was adequate," Fitzwater said. "Our purpose is to send the appropriate message."

A second Pentagon official, also requesting anonymity, said military planners had selected a wide range of options for striking against the military forces of the Iraqi leader.

Tensions with Iraq mounted last week, when Saddam moved the mobile anti-aircraft missiles and their guidance radars into a ready-to-shoot configuration within the no-fly zone set up to protect the Shiite minority in the south.

Around Jan. 1, Iraq had moved the anti-aircraft batteries to an area where Iraqi jets appeared to be attempting to lure U.S. aircraft into air battles, perhaps as revenge for the Dec. 27 downing of an Iraqi MiG that had entered the zone.

Although there were some 200 allied aircraft in the region, not all used, the official said. Some were kept in reserve in the event additional forces were needed later.

Prior to the attack, senior Pentagon officials had indicated that any strike against Saddam would not focus on Baghdad or any non-military locations where civilians could end up as targets.

Aleman

Andy Aleman, a National Guardsman, believes the president had few options to consider.

"I think it's necessary; it's called for if we really want peace and the new order — as the president has said," said Aleman, 22. "And I think some other measure should be taken to get somebody else in power. There has to be some sort of democracy to put in place over there."

Sandra Johnston believes Hussein is simply testing America's leadership and the changing of the guard.

"He is trying to see if things will change (with the Clinton administration)," she said. "I think George Bush has handled the situation very well. He should not back down."

She also said the United Nations should be more aggressive in helping support the United States.

Some people said they believe America should target Saddam.

"If we're going to do it we should go all the way. We should go in and kill him," said Denny Jenkins, 34. "It might not help though, at least we know what he (Saddam) is capable of, we wouldn't be so lucky with the next guy, maybe."

Midlander Charles Roberts agreed.

"America is doing the right thing," he said. "From what I know about him in the past, I would say I don't think anything will change until he's dead. I think we should take over."

Forty-year-old Larry Whiteside said American should continue trying to keep Saddam "under control."

"That guy doesn't seem to have any common sense. You never know what he's going to do next. What we did is a good thing," he said.

Leslie Carman, 64, believes personally targeting Saddam would be murder, but nevertheless supports the decision.

Aurelia Baeza, 36, said she believes something should be done in Iraq but not by the United States.

"I don't think that the situation over there is any of our business," she said. "At least I think we could help in another way ... not with an army. They should talk peace."

Another local woman, Tammy Ekberg, said she believes the action will help reduce tensions in the region.

"He seems to cause a lot of suffering. I think it will help stop them," said Ms. Ekberg, 29. "But I hate to see all of those people die for no reason. I guess there are a lot of pros and cons."

Susan Lindsay said she doesn't think anything will change as a result of the bombings.

Ekberg

Creech

"If he didn't stop before, why would it stop him now," she asked. "I don't think it will make a difference."

Stanton resident Steve Creech, 38, said Saddam is a dictator who is getting away with murder.

"He's egging us on. I say we should get in there and just take care of it," he said.

Bush has unusual way to end presidency

By Mike Feinsilber
Associated Press writer

■ Analysis

WASHINGTON — His mementos carted away, the pictures off the Oval Office walls, a foot out the door, George Bush paused on his way to retirement Wednesday to take a slap at Saddam Hussein, his persistent vexation.

It was an unusual way to end a presidency. Historians could think of no parallel. Usually as their parting gesture, presidents at war at the close of their terms try to make peace — not engage in fresh attacks.

In 1951, Harry Truman had initiated talks designed to end the Korean War but it was up to his successor, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, to fashion the compromise with North Korea that got the country out of a long, stalemated, unpopular war.

And 17 years later, Lyndon Johnson, over the bitter protests of his ally in Saigon, stopped the bombing of North Vietnam in a vain attempt to wind things up before Richard M. Nixon took over. It didn't work. Under Nixon, the war flared anew; American casualties doubled before Nixon pulled out the last American troops in August, 1973.

No sense of war emergency excited Washington this time, a capital fixated on the unstarted business of the incoming administration rather than the unfinished business of the departing crew.

The circumstances were "unique," acknowledged Bush's spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, but the provocation, he said, was undeniable.

No one expected that Bush's bombing raids in Iraq would have long-term consequences on this country — or, probably, on Saddam's taunting belligerence that has left the two sides in a state of neither war nor peace for the last two years.

Nor was this country divided over Iraq as it had been over Korea or as it had been over Vietnam, a war whose morality was disputed by many citizens, including a Rhodes scholar at Oxford University named Bill Clinton.

This time most Americans were likely to agree that Bush's action was justified. Nor were many likely to think that it would drag America into a new quagmire or impose an unforeseen cost.

In American eyes, Saddam Hussein was a blowhard, a pest who, many believe, should have been squashed the first time around. Bush had compared him to Hitler. His motives mystify Americans and his survival irks them.

If Bush's raid brought anything to mind, it was the untidy proceedings in the Oval Office 12 years ago, the last time one party turned over the presidency to another.

In January 1981, Jimmy Carter spent his last night in the presidency catching catnaps on a couch while overseeing midnight negotiations that led to the release of 52 American hostages held by Iran for 444 humiliating days.

Carter's negotiator in those arrangements was Warren Christopher, the deputy secretary of state. Now Christopher is to become secretary of state in the Clinton Administration.

A week from now, he and Clinton will inherit Iraq — and Saddam — from George Bush. Saddam outlasted Bush, at an awful price to his people.

Peruvian police arrest American photographer

LIMA, Peru (AP) — An American photographer has been arrested for taking pictures of guerrillas during an attack on a northern jungle town, diplomats said Wednesday.

Jeremy Bigwood, photographer for the New York-based Gamma-Liaison photo agency, was arrested Friday in Moyobamba, 450 miles northeast of Lima, a U.S. Embassy official said.

Bigwood, 42, from Vashon Island, Wash., was taken by police to Lima, said the official, who declined to be identified. He said U.S. consular officials have visited him.

Countries sign treaty to ban chemical weapons

PARIS (AP) — The United States, Russia and dozens of other nations signed a historic treaty Wednesday to rid the world of chemical weapons, the first-ever prohibition of an entire class of weapons of mass destruction.

The only cloud was a decision by most Arab states not to sign in protest over Israel's refusal to endorse the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. But four Arab nations — Morocco, Algeria, Mauritania and Tunisia — were among the 65 states signing by the end of the opening session, and speakers appealed for holdouts to reconsider.

The treaty requires signatories to confirm whether they have chemical weapons and to destroy their stocks and weapons-making facilities within 10 years after 65 nations ratify the accord.

Shetland critics urge regulation of tankers

SUMBURGH HEAD, Shetland Islands — With millions of gallons of oil on the water and the tanker Braer a battered wreck near this rocky headland, conservationists and local residents are now demanding to know who is to blame and what will be done to prevent anything like it from happening again.

Paralleling similar arguments made in the United States after the Exxon Valdez spill off Alaska in March 1989, critics say the Braer accident — in volume one of the worst oil spills in history — shows that the British Government must move immediately to adopt tougher safety regulations as well as restrictions on the coastal movements of tankers, particularly in bad weather and in environmentally sensitive areas.

U.S. diplomats push for Haitian solution

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — U.S. diplomats are leading a new push for a settlement between the Haitian army and ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, hoping to avoid a new exodus of refugees bound for American shores, officials said.

Evans Paul, a member of Aristide's negotiating team, said intensive talks were under way and a pact to reinstate the democratically elected president now "falls within the realm of the possible."

The United States wants to offer some hope of Aristide's return to Haitians, who are reported poised to flee en masse for the United States when President-elect Clinton takes office Jan. 20.

Quake rocks buildings in Jamaican capital

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — An earthquake Wednesday cracked windows, rocked buildings and sent thousands of people running out into the streets in Jamaica's largest city.

There were no immediate reports of injury in the capital.

The quake struck at 12:11 p.m. EST with a magnitude of 5.3 on the Richter scale, according to the U.S. Geological Survey. Its epicenter was 30 miles north of Kingston.

Berlin courts show mercy, free Honecker

BERLIN (AP) — An ailing Erich Honecker was freed from prison Wednesday, leaving behind untold bitterness over his brutal Communist East German regime that killed people simply for fleeing to the West.

Reviled by many, pitied by others, the 80-year-old unrepentant Communist is suffering from liver cancer that doctors say will kill him within six months.

Berlin courts, putting mercy above justice, halted the manslaughter trial against Honecker for killings at the Berlin Wall.

Honecker flew to Frankfurt shortly after 8:30 p.m., the start of what is expected to be a more than 20-hour trip to Chile via Sao Paulo, Brazil, for a reunion with his wife, Margot, and daughter Sonja.

Crossing guards need motorists' awareness

Numerous Midland parents of school-age children and concerned residents have witnessed motorists speeding through school crosswalks or failing to stop for youngsters who've already started across a busy thoroughfare. For that reason action by the City of Midland to increase the number of crossing guards at various locations around the city should come as a relief to those concerned with the safety of youngsters.

The city plans to add a school crossing guard at Wadley Avenue and Whittle Way, a location near Bush Elementary where pedestrian traffic increased significantly in the fall. That will boost the city's crossing guard force to 26.

In addition to the extra crossing guard, the city is changing the locations of some crossing guards to better ensure the safety of school children.

Gary Saunders, the city's traffic and engineering director, explained that the changes came about as a result of a 1992 fall study of 45 locations surrounding area schools.

"We look at every location with crossing guards, new schools, flashing lights and we take special requests from citizens and look at those places," Saunders noted.

That's good. Involvement by individuals is crucial to success of the school crossing guard program. Input from people around the city who witness particular problems with a school crossing site can alert city officials who may then take appropriate action to ensure that children crossing at the site may do so safely. Often a minor change at a crossing site can greatly increase safety for youngsters.

Of course, the responsibility to watch out for children crossing streets, whether in a school crossing or elsewhere, rests primarily with motorists. Motorists may have become negligent of the reduced speed in crossing zones during the past month. Now that school has resumed following the Christmas and New Year's holidays, motorists should be alert for youngsters making their way to school.

As the old saying asserts, safety IS everybody's business.

AG officials explain open meetings in closed session

Here's a philosophical question: If an open meeting is held deep in a forest and nobody from the public attends it, is it really an open meeting?

Sounds a little obscure? OK, try this one: If the Texas attorney general's office holds a conference to explain how the state's open meetings law works, but closes the conference to the public, can it safely be presumed that the AG's officials don't quite get it?

Of course, once the closed-to-the-public aspect of these conferences was publicized, officials suddenly saw the light and said everybody was welcome.

That's nice. Maybe they realized the irony of the situation. More likely, it was the bad publicity.

Perhaps now, these AG's officials have a deeper understanding of the laws they will be explaining to other officials at these conferences. Let's have no more closed meetings to explain the need for open meetings.

Safety rules usually ignored until state finds violation

Texas General Land Office Commissioner Garry Mauro's announcement to conduct a series of inspections at chemical plants, oil drilling platforms and refineries will have a twofold impact.

It will allow companies that consistently operate under a high set of standards a chance to prove their preparedness, and it will allow those that have averted the rules a chance to get caught, or fix their violations.

Companies that fail the tests run the risk of losing state certification to handle raw petroleum or byproducts.

It seems logical that a tragedy like the Valdez crash would be more than enough to ensure that other petroleum companies do not confront that same problem. Ensuing lawsuits should scare any corporate board room into action.

But the reality of business is that too often stringent safety precautions are not taken until they are required by the state, with the threat of sanctions looming against the company.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Jan. 14, the 14th day of 1993. There are 351 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Fifty years ago, on Jan. 14, 1943, President Franklin D. Roosevelt and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill began a wartime conference in Casablanca.

On this date:

In 1639, the first constitution of Connecticut — known as the "Fundamental Orders" — was adopted at a meeting in Hartford.

In 1742, English astronomer Edmond Halley, who observed the comet that now bears his name, died at age 85.

In 1784, the United States ratified the peace treaty with England that ended the Revolutionary War.

In 1858, French Emperor Napoleon III escaped an attempt on his life by Felice Orsini, an Italian patriot who was later executed.

In 1892, Hollywood producer Hal Roach — the creative force behind the "Our Gang" comedies and the teaming of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy — was born in Elmira, N.Y. (He died last November at age 100.)

In 1898, the Reverend Charles L. Dodgson — better known as author Lewis Carroll — died less than two weeks before his 66th birthday.

In 1914, Ford Motor Company greatly improved its assembly-line operation by employing a chain to pull each chassis along.

GEORGE WILL

Change doesn't always mean progress

WASHINGTON — During the campaign Democrats promised "change," perhaps assuming that "change" is a synonym for "progress." During the transition they have proven that it is not.

Having promised a Cabinet that "looks like America," Bill Clinton has cobbled together one that looks the way Americans fear that America is becoming: 13 of the 18 nominees are lawyers. Considerations of "diversity" (different chromosomes and skin pigmentations, not different ideas) have slowed the staffing of the administration, but it is off to a brisk start breaking promises.

Will

The Bush administration's revision — upward, as usual — of the deficit forecast is Clinton's excuse for retreating from his promise to halve the deficit in four years. He calls the projections a revelation, although as early as August his campaign had the Congressional Budget Office's warnings about the soaring deficit.

The projections are also the excuse for scurrying crabwise away from the promise of a middle-class tax cut. But three weeks before the new projections, Wall Street Journal interviewers noted that Clinton was "clearly lukewarm to his own proposal to cut taxes for middle-income families." He said: "I don't think there's anybody that thinks it's a very good way of getting the economy up."

In September the Clinton campaign said: "We should cut middle-class taxes immediately by 10 percent." The post-election position, stated by adviser Robert Shapiro, is "no new taxes on middle-class Americans until their incomes are moving up again." That is, we won't take more until there is more to take.

Unless, perhaps, middle-class Americans own automobiles.

Candidate Clinton denounced as unfair a gasoline tax increase. By December he was saying only that a 15-cent per gallon increase is "a lot to raise in one year." By Jan. 2, there was this New York Times headline: "Gasoline Tax Rise is Reviving: Clinton Said to be Easing Opposition."

The legislative branch also is behaving badly, again.

The House has hit the ground running in a race to disgrace itself even more than it did last year with its bank and post office and other debacles.

Although 27 honorable Democrats broke ranks, the bovine herd of the other Democrats was large enough to pass the measure giving virtually full voting rights to the delegates from Samoa, Guam, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia. All five delegates are Democrats, of course.

Even the bovine were so squeamish about this that they made it ludicrous as well as unconstitutional: The delegates' votes will count only if they don't count. That is, the votes will count unless they provide the decisive margin on an issue.

This abuse of power, done for no apparent purpose other than to advertise the majority's ability to do whatever it wants (until the courts cry "Halt!"), was hardly the only example of the House Democrats' growing arrogance of power.

They have now given the speaker the intimidating power to arbitrarily add or remove any member from any select or conference committee.

Until now, a committee quorum had to be actually present when a committee is drafting legislation because deliberation is a collective undertaking, and Congress is, in theory, a deliberative body. That theory is mocked by the new rule, under which a "rolling quorum" shall suffice.

That is, a chairman can declare that a quorum necessary for drafting legislation exists when a majority of members has been present for any part of a session on the legislation.

LESLIE GELB

Peace pleas, caution block needed action

Two men whose views must be respected stand in the way of lessening the bloodshed in Bosnia: Cyrus Vance, the heroic U.N. diplomat, who negotiates tirelessly for a peace settlement; and Gen. Colin Powell, the brilliant warrior, who argues relentlessly against U.S. and allied military intervention.

Peace among Serbs, Croats and Muslims will almost certainly be impossible for generations, perhaps longer. The hatreds surpass all reason.

What is possible is to create a balance of power, and perhaps a cease-fire, to contain the war's worst horrors. Even that will be unattainable unless outside forces and aid are brought in to redress Serbian dominance.

I hope I'm wrong about the prospects for peace. Vance is highly experienced, and he is on the scene. He deserves time to play out his hand — to divide Bosnia into autonomous provinces loosely linked to a central government. But not much more time.

Time is not on Vance's side. Winter's coffin is already encasing ex-Yugoslavia. Tens of thousands more will soon die or join more than a million of their countrymen and women as refugees. The peace process cannot just drift on, becoming an excuse for not taking decisive military action.

Nor is history on the Vance side. The peoples of this tragic land have not been arguing for centuries simply about who among them should govern, but over who among them will live. Any hope of burying this hatred vanished in the last nine months of war. Neighbors killing and raping their neighbors by the thousands will be neither forgotten nor forgiven.

Revenge and fear of revenge will preclude anything resembling a peace agreement or even a viable cease-fire. The only kind of agreement that might work and last would have to be based on wrenching geographical separation. The three ethnic groups would need to be moved into separate enclaves or left in carefully mixed safe havens.

But no political settlement, cease-fire or mere slowing of the slaughter, is feasible until outside powers put the Serbs in check. And there is no chance of that until the kinds of arguments raised by General Powell are convincingly met.

Powell, like many of his counterparts in Europe, argues for all or nothing. Either use whatever force is necessary to bring the adversary to his knees or stay out militarily.

What does it mean to do nothing in this case? It means standing by while millions are displaced and tens of thousands freeze and are shot — thus abandoning civilized norms and self-respect.

It means faking serious efforts to help the Muslims, thus fanning cynicism and undermining faith in democratic leadership. It means emboldening the Serbs to turn against other neighbors in Kosovo and Macedonia, with greater risk of a general Balkan war. It means unsettling Germany with more refugees.

Plainly, doing virtually nothing or continuing the present policy of simply feeding victims while they die makes no sense. But if doing "all" would lead to an open-ended, Vietnam-like quagmire, that makes no sense either.

For months now, it has been clear that the issue boils down to this: Can the West intervene militarily in ways that will not lead to endless and inconclusive escalation? I believe the answer is yes and here's how:

First, Western leaders must be honest with their people about the stakes and the risks of inaction, and clear about their limited goals and strictly limited means.

Second, Western or certainly U.S. military involvement should be restricted to air power. Either the Serbs accept a full cease-fire or NATO aircraft attack Serbian military targets in Bosnia and Serbia.

Third, and this is critical, the Muslims and Croats themselves must supply the necessary ground troops. NATO should arm them appropriately and amply.

Fourth, these troops should concentrate on protecting safe havens. And NATO should provide food and shelter for the havens immediately.

This plan for getting in does not guarantee a way out. It does offer a way to reduce the slaughter and limit the West's military role.

Bosnians cannot wait for Vance's illusory peace. Nor can the West suffer Powell's Olympian caution. Every action carries risks. Inaction is the most risky — and the least conscionable.

Baby boomers say they're ready to rule world

My generation has been respectfully asked to step aside for the new breed of "baby boomers" who insist that they are ready to rule the world.

I didn't realize how serious they were about taking over until two boomers in their 40s came into my office and started to pack my papers in boxes.

Buchwald

"Sorry, Dad," one of them said, "it's time to go."

"Who says so?" I responded angrily as I held on to my wire in-basket.

The other man told me, "Time magazine, Newsweek, USA Today, and respected pundits too numerous to mention. We boomers are the new leaders of the country headed, of course, by Bill Clinton and Al Gore. Would you like to jump out the window or would you prefer to be pushed?"

"How can baby boomers run the country when they never learned to make their beds?"

"You never taught us how to make our beds. When you came out of World War II you vowed that your children would never have to do anything to inconvenience them or cause them pain. You are the ones who told us that keeping a clean room was irrelevant to a healthy mind and a strong economy."

I was getting madder. "Maybe we said that but how come so many of the boomers never learned to read or write?"

"Because we had television to watch and music to listen to and you kept buying us automobiles to tool around in. We couldn't do it all."

"I don't care if you are in your 40s. I still don't think that you're ready to run the world."

One of the baby boomers said, "You don't know what you're talking about. Baby boomers are now running IBM, General Motors, Westinghouse and some of the great S&Ls in the country. We made Drexel Burnham what it is today. Our footprints are everywhere — even on the airline industry. Give a baby boomer a degree from Harvard or Wharton and he'll put anyone in your age bracket to shame."

"Why can't I stay on as an adviser to the boomers and be a sort of grand old man of the printed word? You could seek my learned counsel when you screwed up, which you're certainly going to do."

"Sorry, Pop, but even a Playboy editorial said that it's time for you to go. If we make an exception for one old-timer, we'll have to make it for all, and boomers can't afford to be sentimental."

"Why not?"

"Because your generation taught your children that winning was everything, and never to give anyone an even break."

"We did?"

"Every man and woman for him or herself. That's what you drilled into our heads."

"We only did it to protect you. Baby boomers always seemed so vulnerable."

"Right. Now do you want to get in the wheelchair or should we carry you out?"

"I can still walk," I said bitterly. "I just pray that you people know what you're doing when you take over."

"We'll handle it very well, Pop. Our generation has never known failure. Boomers are a special breed because they had everything given to them on a platter. You'll be proud of us in a few years."

"Isn't Clinton going to keep on a few old wise men to help him get through his term?"

"He might, but only when he gets in real trouble and has to appoint a blue ribbon panel of elder statesmen to bail him out."

Art Buchwald's column is distributed by the Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

Clinton eyes benefits for budget cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect Clinton is eyeing $750 billion worth of popular benefit programs for possible budget cuts. But glaring right back are tens of millions of voters who rely on them.

In recent days, Clinton's economic team has acknowledged it is considering taking the budget knife to programs such as Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid — all huge, growing and dangerous targets for a politician to attack. So far, Clinton aides say they have made no decisions.

"It's going to call for courageous and tough stands by the president," conceded Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, Clinton's Treasury secretary-designate, at his Senate confirmation hearing this week. "And I believe you're going to get them."

That's exactly what it will take. For while fat targets abound in these benefit programs — which have swelled to half the government's $1.5 trillion annual budget — so do the multitudes of Americans who don't want their coverage reduced.

"It's (budget cuts) going to call for courageous and tough stands by the president. And I believe you're going to get them.'

—Sen. Lloyd Bentsen

For example:

—Social Security is expected to cost $319 billion in fiscal 1994, which starts Oct. 1, making it by far the biggest program in the entire budget. But 40 million elderly people and injured workers collect monthly Social Security checks — and older Americans are one of the country's most potent blocs of voters.

—Medicare, bearing a $148 billion price tag next year, is expected to grow 11 percent annually for years, according to the White House's Office of Management and Budget. It helps 35 million elderly and handicapped people pay their medical bills.

—Medicaid, costing $93 billion next year, will expand by more than 11 percent a year in the near future. The program helps pay for doctors' care for 30 million poor Americans — one of the Democrats' chief constituencies.

—The government pays $60 billion a year to 3 million federal civilian and military retirees. It also distributes $20 billion annually in veterans' benefits and services, $12 billion for farm price supports, and $4 billion for guaranteed student loans.

Medicare and Medicaid are considered the likeliest targets for savings because they are growing so rapidly, accounting for 85 percent of the growth of all benefit programs, the Congressional Budget Office says.

"The health-care programs are growing so rapidly that the growth is unsustainable," Alice Rivlin, chosen to be deputy director of Clinton's budget office, said Wednesday at her Senate confirmation hearing.

She said trying to reduce their costs would be "an early order of business."

But Clinton, Rivlin and others have repeatedly said that the only way to control Medicare and Medicaid costs is to reform the nation's overall health-care system, private and public.

Such a plan, though a priority for Clinton, will take time to implement. That leads many people to believe that Clinton's budget-cutting blueprint will not count on savings in benefit programs for a few years.

Because of its sheer size, Social Security is considered another candidate for savings. But to do so, Clinton will have to be careful; the program has been dubbed the third rail of American politics because of the uproar that results whenever a politician proposes tinkering with it.

Supreme Court: Federal judges cannot halt abortion blockades

■ More national news/8C

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal judges cannot stop protesters who try to block women's access to abortion clinics, the Supreme Court ruled Wednesday.

The 5-4 decision, a victory for Operation Rescue and other anti-abortion protesters, means clinic operators must turn to state courts for help in thwarting blockades.

But the ruling's impact may be blunted by President-elect Clinton.

A president has the power to order federal protection without any court injunction. President Dwight D. Eisenhower did so when he ordered National Guard protection of students during racial-integration efforts in the 1950s.

And federal law authorizes state officials lacking the resources to cope with massive lawlessness to seek federal law-enforcement help if they cannot "protect the lives and property of citizens or ... enforce the criminal law."

The ruling does not alter the core constitutional right of abortion, reaffirmed by the court in a landmark decision last June.

At issue, instead, was the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 and its ban on conspiracies aimed at violating the constitutional rights of a protected class of people, such as blacks.

The court, ruling in a case from Virginia, said the 1871 law does not apply to those who participate in abortion blockades because women seeking abortions are not part of such a protected class.

"Whatever one thinks of abortion, it cannot be denied that there are common and respectable reasons for opposing it, other than hatred of or condescension toward ... women," Justice Antonin Scalia wrote for the court.

In dissent, Justice John Paul Stevens called abortion blockades "a national conspiracy" that "presents a striking contemporary example of the kind of zealous, politically motivated, lawless conduct that led to enactment of the Ku Klux Klan Act."

The decision sparked activists' reactions as starkly different as their views on abortion.

"God be praised," Randall Terry of Operation Rescue said. "The most potent weapon the child killers had against us was the illegal use of the federal judiciary. That weapon was ... smashed to pieces."

Sheriff seizes train to pay off Amtrak's debt

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A former ticket agent who has been unable to collect a court award from Amtrak has taken the next best thing: Engine 902, a 130-ton locomotive.

The locomotive was seized Tuesday by a deputy sheriff on behalf of Dolores Schneider of Agawam, Mass., who won a $1.75 million court judgment last year against Amtrak.

Schneider sued Amtrak after she was robbed and beaten as she walked to her car in the employees' parking lot of Union Station in Hartford the night of Jan. 26, 1986. In her lawsuit, Schneider accused Amtrak of not providing proper security for employees.

After Amtrak failed to pay the judgment for nearly a year, Schneider's attorneys executed their right to seize the train. On Tuesday morning, Deputy Sheriff Robert Miller took Engine 902 out of service.

Jury finds accused guilty of taxi driver murder

■ The jury meets today to decide the sentence of Terrence Renard Lee.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

After the defense declined to present any evidence, jurors deliberated about 15 minutes Wednesday to convict an 18-year-old man for the July 6 murder/robbery of a taxi driver.

"I don't believe there was any need to" present evidence, defense attorney Robert Stevens said.

"The confession was obviously what was damning to us," he said.

Because of that confession, Terrence Renard Lee now faces either the death penalty or life in prison for the capital murder of 20-year-old Alejandro Rodriguez.

A confession made to police a month and six days after the crime was the crux of the prosecution's case, presented in less than a day on Tuesday.

The eight-woman, four-man jury began hearing testimony for the punishment portion of the trial in Judge John Hyde's 238th District Court on Wednesday.

After such testimony, jurors will be asked to to determine if Lee poses a threat to society and if there was any mitigating evidence why the sentence should be life in prison rather than death by lethal injection. Based on those answers, the judge will impose the sentence — death or life imprisonment — as specified by law.

The prosecution presented only one witness for the punishment phase.

Jeremiah Sims, 18, of Benton Harbor, Mich., told jurors that he loaned Lee the .25-caliber handgun used in the murder. Lee was given the weapon for protection but not from anyone or anything specifically, Sims said.

Sims also testified that Lee and another man admitted to the robbery and murder shortly after the crime.

Sims has been in the Midland jail to insure his presence as a material witness and will be confined until the trial of 20-year-old James F. Greene, a co-defendant in the capital murder.

On behalf of Lee, defense attorneys called Keisha Crawford, 19, of Odessa. Ms. Crawford, Lee's former girlfriend and mother of Lee's 8-month-old son, testified that Lee was "nice."

The defense has indicated that several other witnesses will be presented today.

The punishment portion will probably last longer than the guilt or innocence phase of the trial, court observers said.

During the first part, the prosecution relied almost solely on the confession recording.

Testimony showed that Rodriguez, employed by City Cab Co., was found about 6:15 a.m. sitting behind the steering wheel of his taxi in the 1700 block of Morgan Way by another cab driver.

"I shot him," the taped voice identified as Lee's said.

Lee and Greene called the taxi after spending the night at a now-defunct after hours restaurant and earlier at a nightclub, testimony indicated.

After being picked up in the 1100 block of East Parker Avenue about 5:20 a.m., the two men directed Rodriguez to Morgan Way, testimony indicated.

Greene then demanded money from the driver, testimony showed.

Greene told Lee to grab the driver's hair and pull out the gun, testimony showed.

After about $80 was handed to Lee's partner, and the two men were getting out of the cab, Greene told Lee to 'Do it T. Do it," the recorded Lee said. "T" was Greene's way of referring to Lee, he said.

Lee complied and shot the driver twice in the head, testimony showed.

A medical examiner testified that either one of the shots would have been fatal.

Assistant District Attorney Teresa Clingman stressed that point during closing arguments.

"He (Lee) just didn't shoot Alejandro Rodriguez once. He shot shot him twice

War memorial nears goal

■ A committee established to build a local Vietnam Memorial reaches the halfway point of its fund-raising goal.

Staff report

The Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial Committee Wednesday received a check for $2,500 from NationsBank in Midland, bringing the total raised so far to approximately $200,000.

The latest donation was made by Larry Holden, president of NationsBank, during a news conference. "NationsBank is pleased to be able to support this important project honoring all Permian Basin Vietnam veterans."

Fundraising for the local memorial began in early 1991 and has so far raised approximately $200,000, or half of the needed funds through fundraising activities and donations.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

John Philbeck, president of the Permian Basin Vietnam Memorial committee, announces a new donation to the fundraising effort.

"We're hoping to break ground on July 4th of this year — if we have completed our fundraising effort — with completion of the memorial by Veteran's Day, No. 11," said John Philbeck, president of the local committee.

The memorial is planned to honor the more than 200 Permian Basin residents who were either killed in action or listed as missing in action in Vietnam.

Located along Wright Drive near Midland International Airport, plans are to construct the monument from granite in the shape of Texas with inscriptions of the names of those West Texans who were killed or listed as missing in action in Vietnam.

Behind the monument will stretch a brick wall, picnic tables and a sidewalk lined with trees.

For more information about the memorial, call Philbeck at 682-0461. Donations should be sent to the Memorial Committee at Post Office Box 2178, Midland, Texas, 79702.

Midlander avoids charges

A Midland man who was arrested for making a bomb threat Friday to a Midland business will not be charged with five other threats made in the city.

Shawn Dell Tharp, 22, was arrested by Midland police Saturday in connection with a bomb threat made to the Golden Corral, 4709 N. Midkiff, at about 8:40 a.m. Friday. Police traced the call to a phone booth and witnesses identified Tharp as the person using the phone during the time of the bomb threat.

At the time of his arrest, Tharp was under investigation for five other bomb threats made in Midland, but Sgt. Andy Glasscock of the Midland Police Department said Wednesday that only one charge will be filed.

"I talked to him (Tharp) yesterday and I don't think he was involved in making any bomb threats except for the one Friday," Glasscock said. "At this time, there will only be one charge."

Tharp was arrested and charged with false alarm report, with bond set at $5,000. However, Glasscock said the charge will be upgraded to terroristic threat.

Tharp, when arrested, was also charged with theft of services and operating an unregistered vehicle, with bond set at $1,000 and $105, respectively.

Before the call to Golden Corral, four Midland businesses and a high school received bomb threats.

On Thursday, Midland High School, the Midland Park Mall and the Midland Park Mall movie theater all received threats. Prior to those, the United Artists Cinema movie theater, 3207 Cuthbert, received two threats. No devices were found in any of the incidents.

The calls were the latest in a series of threats being made in the Midland-Odessa area since Dec. 1, 1992.

AUSTIN — Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock named Sen. Teel Bivins, R-Amarillo, to four committees Wednesday, including the newly created International Relations, Trade & Technology Committee that will focus on legislation regarding trade with Mexico.

Bivins also will serve on the Natural Resources Committee and will be chairman of that group's agriculture subcommittee.

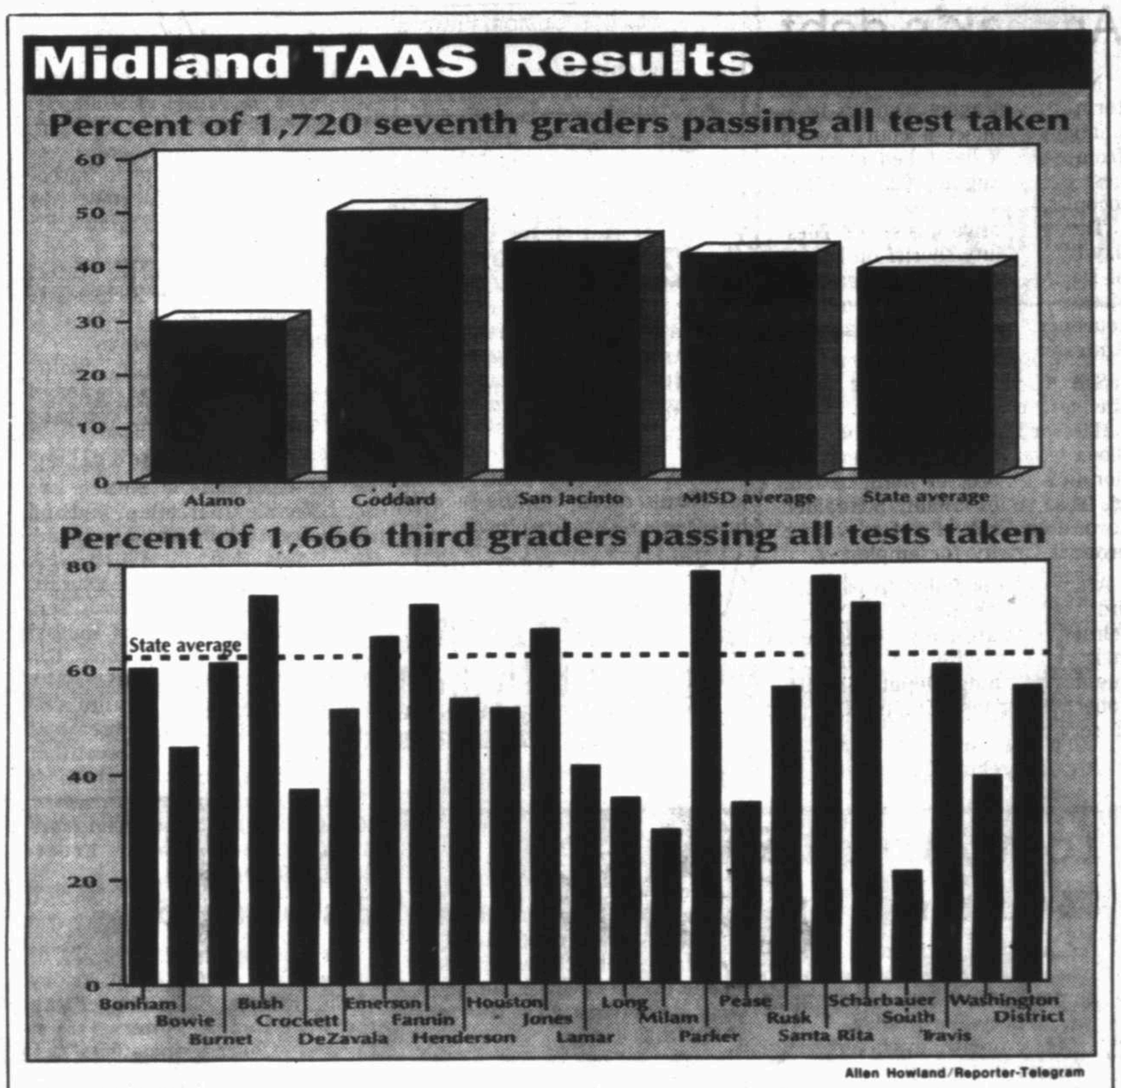

Bullock reappointed Bivins to the powerful Finance Committee, which will help write the state budget for 1994-95, and to the Education Committee, which will try to come up with a constitutional school finance plan.

In the 1991 regular session, Bivins served on the Intergovernmental Relations Committee, as well as finance and education.

MISD reviews mixed on test

■ City grade school students' scores fell dangerously low in reading and writing on the state's assessment test.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Local third and seventh grade public school students topped their Texas peers in math scores, but failed dismally to pass reading and writing portions of the recent TAAS (Texas Assessment of Academic Skills) test.

In fact, the percentage of third graders passing the reading and writing portions of the test dropped below the state level.

Even worse, 15 elementary schools in Midland Independent School District had a lower percentage of students passing the reading test in 1992 than passed in 1991.

About 58 percent of all students tested at grade seven did not pass one or more of the tests given (in reading, writing or math), and only 30 percent of the seventh graders at Alamo Junior High School passed all three tests.

This means 70 percent of the seventh graders at Alamo failed one or more of the three TAAS subtests. Of the 582 Alamo students taking the test, only 178 passed all sections of it. As a district, an average of 42 percent, or 727 seventh graders out of 1,720 taking the test, passed all three sections.

At Goddard, half of the students, exactly 50 percent, passed all three subtests of the TAAS while 44 percent passed all tests at San Jacinto and an average of 39 percent of Texas students passed all three tests.

Only third and seventh graders were tested during the recent TAAS administration in September. Students had to get 70 percent of the answers correct in order to pass the test.

"We are in a very critical juncture," said school board trustee James Fuller. "This situation of academic performance based on what the test reflects

The more things change, the more they are the same

Things change, and people stay the same, including the intrusions of technology and its impact on people, animals and things.

The fruits of technology may be lightning fast in many regards, such as in those unseen-but-evident zippy electrons. But they occasionally go awry when gremlins sneak in to uphold Murphy's Law. Downtime snags and snarls production.

Todd

Take these newfangled computers and all of their bytes and bits, cursors and swirls, downtime and uptime, mouses and joysticks, micros and macros, megabits and megabytes.

There are eight bits to a byte, two bits per word, one character per bit, a million bits to the megabit and a million bytes to the megabyte, and half as many words as there are megabits.

It's an esoteric world open to those who know — perhaps understand — the jargon, the concepts, and the practical and applicable aspects of computerization.

Today's upstarts, the word processors (WPs), are replacing the old manual, electric, and electronic typewriters. Already pitched out are carbon paper, paper spikes, and reams of paperwork for folks who now store notes, working copy and finished copy on magnetic disks.

The word processor, for all of its electronic wonders, is, at its basic level, no more than an old typewriter with all sorts of wires, printed circuits, plastic, glass, and bundles of R&D money.

Ah, such dependable workhorses: the old mechanical typewriters of the 1900s: the Underwood, Royal, Smith-Corona, and, before that, the Sholes, Caligraph, Crandall, and the Remington, made by the arms manufacturer, which survived well into this century. The old iron-and-steel manual typewriter rarely had downtime except at ribbon-changing times and to clean and oil the machinery.

Bang on them all you will and keep them oiled, and they will rarely fail. For speed and accuracy, they begged precision typing. Otherwise, you did a lot of erasing and back spacing. And you could vent your anger and frustration and express your joy, sadness, contentment, and resolve on the old typewriter by punching keys on the keyboard. Keys slammed typefaces of the typebars squarely and soundly on the platen. Those were the days, my friends, long past the time when journalists and other writers penned their stories and letters. There were no practical typewriters until the late 1860s and none extant until the 1880s.

Purists from the pre-WP days still forego computers. They would rather bang on the old typewriters. Of course, even today, there are writers who pen their stuff. Those with a gift for gab and who have the resources to hire help may dictate and let others do the typing or, as they say nowadays, inputting.

Within this generation, most newspapers have junked the old Mergenthaler Linotype, that marvelous type-setting wizard of machinery. In its developmental stages, Mark Twain said the amazing machine of a maze of moving parts could do just about everything but "drink, swear, and go on strike." It replaced the printers' hand-set type.

In the printing business, hot type has largely been replaced by the electronics of cold type, photocomposition, and laser printing.

Despite the quibbling and crumbling of the Luddites, things always are changing in a technological society. There are so-called "modern" — what ever that means — ways of doing things.

In another era, modern meant running water, indoor plumbing, air conditioning, and carpeted floors. It meant fountain pens and then ball-point pens; carriages and then automobiles; bi-wing aeroplanes and then jetliners; radios and then television; typewriters and then personal computers; silent movies and then talkies; 78-, 45-, and 33⅓-rpm records and then cassettes and laser-disk players; news reels and then the evening news and CNN; town criers and then newspapers; storytellers and then the printed word and books; fireplaces and then central air conditioning, and wood and now plastic.

Whether things are improving is debatable. Certainly, they are changing.

But people don't. There are rascals and scoundrels in rags and three-piece suits as surely as there are saints and angels in like clothing right here on Earth. Teen-agers are teen-agers, both rowdy and comely, from age to age. The prodigal sons and daughters are extant from generation to generations, as are the obedient. Always, there are thinkers and go-getters and those who wait and wish.

Regardless of what technology does, you can bet your plugged nickel that there will be times of virtual perfection and times of miscues. And, except for the speed of modern flight, those abusively convenient plastic credit cards, facsimile machines, fast cars, videos, and computer wizardry, nothing much has changed.

Things will get done when things get done. Simply, there will be different ways of doing the same old thing and different and innovative ways to make a buck, get rich or go bankrupt and then give it another go.

At a nickel or a dollar, a cup of coffee is a cup of coffee.

Nothing changes but the price and the vehicle.

TAAS: MISD scores high in mathematics, weak in reading

tells us we had better get on the ball and fix whatever is out of synch."

Fuller said he became frustrated reviewing test scores in Tuesday night's board meeting. "I sat there and I was so frustrated I didn't know what to think. I saw all of this money dedicated to so many programs in the system, and then I see scores like this and it seems we are throwing money to the wind."

"The scores are embarrassing," said trustee Adela Marmolejo. "Of the four years I have been on the board, these are the worst. We have a lot of improving to do, especially with the elementary schools. Reading Recovery is not working and the New Jersey Writing Project is not getting the results we were told."

Ms. Marmolejo noted that the district has been without a reading coordinator since Peggy Holland resigned in May. "We are in the process of hiring one now," she said.

The bright spot in MISD is that the third and seventh graders exceeded the state average on the math portion of the TAAS. The younger pupils demonstrated 86 percent mastery, compared to the state average of 84 percent. The older students averaged 54 percent mastery, also above the state average of 51 percent.

"The success of our students in the math portion of the TAAS speaks well of our Excel Math program. I wish that other portions of the test revealed similar achievement," said MISD superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr.

"So, our students can work math problems. But tell me, how are they going to succeed in life if they can't read or write?," asked one mother following Tuesday night's board meeting.

Since the test was administered during the third week of school, it tests students on what they have learned the previous year.

So, seventh graders at Alamo who did poorly, should not reflect on the school, administrators said.

"It's hard to say what happened. We get students who went to fourth grade one place, fifth grade one place and sixth grade another place," said David Adams, outgoing principal at Alamo, who will leave the school next week to begin preparing to take the principalship helm of Abell Junior High School.

"Also, looking at 30 percent of the students not passing all of the tests is misleading," Adams said. "We may have had 70 percent pass some portion of the test"

In fact, 54 percent of the Alamo seventh graders passed the writing section of the TAAS, compared to 72 percent at Goddard, 66 percent at San Jacinto, and 68 percent at the state level.

About 43 percent of the Alamo students passed the reading portion, compared to 61 percent at Goddard, 54 percent at San Jacinto and 51 percent statewide.

Overall, the seventh graders did show an increase in the percent passing all tests taken since 1990.

"Scores for the last three years at Alamo have been similar," said Joe Cummins, MISD executive director of planning, evaluation and testing. "We have seen a pattern, but we expect a higher level of performance for our students."

Although the junior high schools are not responsible for how students scored on the standardized test in their first few weeks of seventh grade, they are responsible for getting students up to par.

"One of the things we have done is that we have gone through and identified every student in the seventh grade who did not pass in reading and have made a number of schedule changes to get those students into study skills and classes emphasizing reading," Adams said, noting the schedule changes take effect Monday. "We have moved 128 students into areas to emphasize reading and have broken down the different areas where they need help."

Fuller said it's unfair for the junior high schools, especially with the task to remediate students at Alamo, "to have to try to work magic to show some responsibility for what has not taken place in the elementary school program."

Trustee George Staley questioned whether students were spending enough time on reading skills. Other board members have raised concerns that third graders will not be reading on grade level when they leave the third grade.

MISD assistant superintendent Bill Denton said the everchanging TAAS test, which increases in difficulty, offers administrators "a lot of different snapshots."

Denton said the district needs to ensure teachers receive their students' scores and receive staff development to provide intervention.

Fuller said while the school system has a major responsibility as a teaching institution, parents also have a responsibility to see that their children learn to read.

"I may be harsh on teachers," he said, "but I am just as critical with parents who refuse to get involved with their children's academic performance. Parents don't read with kids. This is a serious problem and those test scores reflect it. Parents are responsible, in part, for what the test scores reflect. It's a two-way street."

Cummins said that the district exempts fewer students from taking the test than other districts. "Our test scores would be undoubtedly higher if we exempted selected populations of students," he said.

"Teachers need good diagnostic reading tests and they need to be given the right kinds of information," Denton said, suggesting students could be given pretests and post tests each year. "There are no quick fixes."

VERDICT: Sentencing begins

(From 1B)

... Why do you shoot someone twice? Because you darn sure want to make sure their dead," she told the jury.

The prosecution, at the close of their case Tuesday, filed a motion to allow Greene to testify for the defense on the condition that such testimony could not be used against Greene at his trial.

Despite the defense's arguments to the surprise proposal, the judge granted the motion. Defense attorneys claimed adequate time was not available to prepare in light of Greene being a possible witness.

If not utilized by the defense, Greene could have been called to testify as a rebuttal witness for the prosecution.

If the motion had not been granted, Greene, if called to testify, would probably have taken the Fifth Amendment as protection against self-incrimination. Greene has also confessed to the crime.

Stevens said the Greene dilemma did not factor into the decision to forego defense evidence.

Greene is expected to be tried for the crime sometime before the summer.

Ms. Clingman has chose to reserve comment on the Lee case until after the punishment has been handed down.

Both Lee and Greene have remained jailed in lieu of bonds since their arrests in August.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

■ Robbery

LAMESA — Lamesa police are still searching for a suspect in connection with an attempted robbery Wednesday.

According to a police report, officers responded to an alarm warning signal that went off at the Lamesa National Bank drive-through window, located at South 1st and Houston, at 1:59 p.m. The bank teller told the officers that a white man in a red car, possibly a two-door, drove up to the window and placed a paper sack in the drawer demanding money. The suspect also pointed a pistol at the teller, who said she managed to conceal herself and set off the alarm.

The suspect was not found after a search of the city and county, officials said.

■ Drug Bust

ODESSA — An Odessa man was free on bond Wednesday after being arrested for possession of cocaine Tuesday.

According to a Permian Basin Drug Task Force press release, investigators at the task force, acting on an informant's tip, stopped Devoron Tra-Mont Carroll, 20, of Odessa in the 3000 block of Park Boulevard in Odessa.

A search of his vehicle, a 1991 Ford Escort, was conducted by a canine unit and approximately one ounce of crack cocaine, with an estimated value of $3,000, was found.

Bond was set for Carroll at $100,000.

■ Drug Bust

ODESSA — An Odessa man was out of jail Wednesday after marijuana was found in his vehicle early Tuesday morning.

According to a police report, Special Investigation officers identified a vehicle driven by Terry Dwayne Luna, 17, as carrying marijuana. Odessa police officers stopped Luna at 6:15 a.m. at the intersection of Drury Lane and Foster. A drug-sniffing dog searched the vehicle and indicated the vehicle did have drugs in it.

A detailed search was conducted at the police department and 17 separate bundles, weighing from a pound to two and a half pounds each, of marijuana were found. The total amount, approximately 25 pounds, had an estimated street value of $50,850.

Bond was set for Luna at $7,500.

State leaders propose new budget

By Scott Rothschild
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN — State leaders Wednesday unveiled a proposed 1994-95 budget that would hold the line on taxes but cut spending for poor children and fail to provide enough money to cover growth in public schools.

Jude Filler, an advocate for the poor, blasted the budget proposal. "Taking away the few pennies that desperately needy people have to survive on the edge of the abyss is ridiculous," she said.

She said state leaders were using the poor as pawns in their budget process.

"Everybody I've talked to in government has been straightforward; that this is part of a strategy to back the people up against the wall where they will demand an income tax so that nobody's political career will be sacrificed," Ms. Filler said.

But Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, and his chief budget writer Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, endorsed the $67.3 billion spending plan as a way to pay for state government within available revenue.

"There is only so much money to go around," said Montford as his Senate Finance Committee prepared to hold hearings on the proposal.

Overall, spending for 1994-95 would increase by 6.4 percent under the budget plan that was put together by legislative staff.

Health and human service spending would increase by about $845 million in state revenues. But because of a growing caseload, the monthly payment for Aids to Families with Dependent Children would decrease from $57 per month to $45 per month. The program provides funds to children and single parents. Texas' funding level ranks 48th in the nation.

Ms. Filler said reducing an already strapped program would result in "misery that is indescribable."

Budget officials said they proposed reducing the monthly AFDC grant in order to pay for other human service programs required by the federal government.

Bullock said the possibility of getting more federal dollars, and projected savings from audits of state services, may provide more funds for AFDC.

For public schools, the budget would increase funding by $337 million — far short of the $958 million that state education officials say is necessary to compensate for projected enrollment growth of 130,000 students.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You make a break with the past. A distant traveler will have tremendous impact on your professional or personal life in the spring. April is starred for a promotion or a raise. Private problems prove easier to solve next summer, thanks to an expert's sage advice. Confidential activities will work to your advantage in October of 1993. Soft-pedal your assertiveness in December to promote family harmony over the holidays.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Faye Dunaway, actor Jason Bateman, commentator Andy Rooney, physician Albert Schweitzer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are in a tricky phase for high-powered meetings and commitments. Do not push; let nature run its course. Mull over your career options and consult with experts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Reach out. Private heart-to-heart meetings will convince people to join forces with you. The financial picture looks unusually bright. Be sympathetic with a loved one who is under pressure.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): There may be more going on than meets the eye at your place of work. Be quiet, observant and productive. Agreements could click this afternoon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Verbal sparring may be hard to avoid today. Tread lightly; once-difficult issues are resolved, your future looks bright. Give romantic partner your undivided attention this evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Social encounters are a fine forum in which to sell yourself and your ideas today. Even when irritated, do not turn a cold shoulder to loved one. Your encouragement can work wonders.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Unfamiliar places and activities hold little appeal today. Chart your own agenda if possible. You have a sixth sense for getting to the root of problems.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Confidential talks with someone brilliant could start the two of you on a new course. As a bonus pleasure, you may find love's treasure. Try out your culinary talents.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You become privy to valuable inside information; use it judiciously. Frustrating woes fade of their own accord. Enjoy a night on the town with your best friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Bold thinking plus effort equal financial success today. Personal goals can be advanced. You really know what you are doing. Show respect for authority figures today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Giving the best you have to offer comes as naturally as smiling. Meetings will go well; an agreement is negotiated that will be equally rewarding for all involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The bold actions you take to fulfill a secret desire can result in triumph. Emphasize quality over quantity. Sharing confidences with your mate or partner brings you closer.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Certain personal relationships are sensitive now. Sudden rebellion is possible. Lack of companionship is not the solution, though; draw on others' power.

The bidding:

4 ♡	Dbl	Pass	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡

Bridge is not a game for the faint of heart. If you are reluctant to challenge the enemy at a high level, your opponents will steal you blind. Consider this hand from the recent Fall North American Championships in Orlando, Fla.

After West's four-heart opening bid, many players would pass with the North hand, as would South, who could scarcely be expected to compete, and declarer would rack up 10 tricks in quick time. Mark Itabashi of Murrieta, Calif., is not among them. He doubled and, as a result, his partner, Ron Sukoneck of Annandale, Va., became declarer at four spades.

West led the king of hearts, on which declarer dropped the three. Unsure as to who held the deuce and reluctant to concede a possible ruff-sluff, West shifted to the singleton club. Declarer won in dummy, came to hand with the king of diamonds and led a low trump. West's jack was a pleasant surprise. East allowed the king to win, rose with the ace on the spade continuation and exited with a spade.

Declarer won, cashed a high club and the ace of diamonds, then led a heart. Instead of ruffing, declarer discarded the table's diamond loser. West had to win perforce and, left with nothing but hearts, was forced to yield the ruff-sluff that he feared at trick two. Declarer's club loser went away and the contract rolled home.

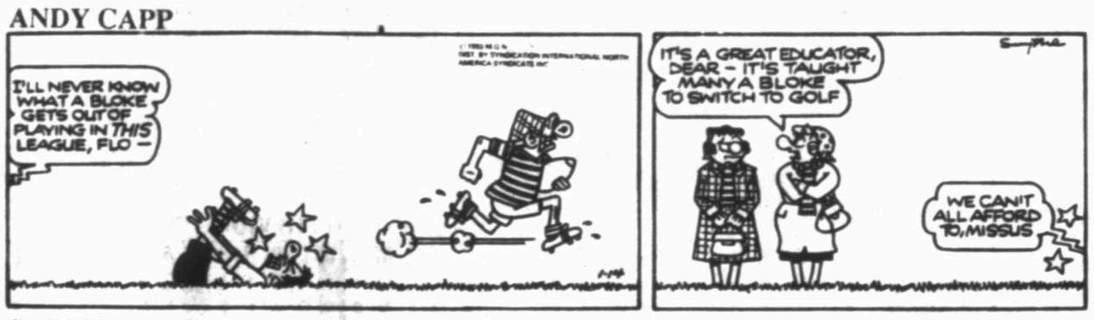

Note that a heart continuation at trick two dooms the contract. Declarer cannot avoid a loser in each suit for down one.

Diane Lane returns to screen after 2-year self-assessment

NEW YORK — Former child actress Diane Lane said she took a hiatus from show business to figure out "who I was."

Lane, 29, landed on the cover of Time magazine shortly after she appeared in "A Little Romance" with Laurence Olivier when she was 13. She was a show business veteran at the time, having begun off-Broadway when she was just 6.

A string of movies followed but back-to-back flops like "The Cotton Club" and "Streets of Fire" in the late 1980s made her reassess her life.

"I became super objective about it," Lane told Details magazine in its February issue. "I wanted to know who I was before I presented myself as hot. . . . So I took my career off the market and went to Georgia for two years."

The time off helped her stay down to earth.

"I lived with my mom, got the chickens' eggs out of the coop, ate a lot of bacon and stayed celibate," she said. "I didn't want to play the game, to go to Hollywood parties."

Lane's short retirement seems to have rejuvenated her. She's in two new movies, "Chaplin," and "My New Gun."

She also has married since making her return, to actor Christopher Lambert.

KINSTON, N.C. — Who has the sneakers Earvin "Magic" Johnson wore in his last professional basketball game? The Hall of Fame? A lucky memorabilia collector? Johnson himself? None of the above?

Johnson

The answer is a chemistry student at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill who doubles as an equipment manager for the school team.

Bobby Dawson Jr. ended up with the shoes after helping the Los Angeles Lakers prepare for an exhibition game this season against the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Dawson got the sneakers by trying to keep them for Johnson, and keep them out of the hands of a collector.

"There's this guy who always comes to the Dean Center and trades pictures for shoes," Dawson said. "I picked up Magic's shoes because I didn't want him to get them."

Dawson wanted to return the shoes to the NBA legend who retired because he carries the AIDS virus, but Johnson signed them and told Dawson he could keep them.

"It made my year," said Dawson, who keeps the shoes stashed in a bank safety deposit box.

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. — Jean Claude Van Damme lost his effort to dismiss a lawsuit that claims the actor "willfully" injured a man during filming of a fight scene.

Van Damme

Monday's ruling clears the way for a possible trial in February.

Jason "Rock" Pinckney of Fayetteville filed a lawsuit in July 1991 claiming Van Damme struck him in the left eye with a sword during a fight scene for the movie, "Cyborg."

The lawsuit, which seeks more than $10,000, says Pinckney suffered permanent eyesight loss in one eye.

Pinckney's lawyer, Harold Lee Boughman Jr., said Van Damme had filed a motion saying the actor's actions during filming did not rise to the level of "willful, wanton and reckless" negligence.

Superior Court Judge George Fountain denied the motion, saying the question was a matter for a jury to decide.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Guitar legend Chet Atkins, the late singer "Tennessee" Ernie Ford and actor David Keith are headed for the East Tennessee Hall of Fame.

Atkins

Atkins and Keith were expected to attend induction ceremonies Feb. 11. Ford, who died last year, will be represented by his sons, Buck and Brion.

Atkins, a native of Luttrell, began his career playing fiddle on "The Midday Merry-Go-Round" on the now-defunct radio station WNOX-AM, later becoming staff guitarist. From Knoxville, he went to Nashville for a recording career as a performer, producer and eventually an RCA vice president.

Ford, best-known for his 1955 hit "Sixteen Tons," began his career as a disc jockey in his hometown of Bristol. He later worked for Knoxville's WROL radio before moving to California to become a recording artist.

Keith is a Knoxville native and University of Tennessee graduate whose screen credits include major roles in the movies "Firestarter," "Lords of Discipline" and "An Officer and a Gentleman."

Prosecutor accuses Lubbockite of perjury

WACO (AP) — James H. Granberry, who headed the Texas Parole Board when convicted murderer Kenneth Allen McDuff was released from prison, was charged Wednesday with lying to a federal judge in an unrelated case.

The accusation is contained in an "information" filed with federal court in the Western District of Texas. An information is similar to an indictment, but does not go before a grand jury.

Although the information involves a case unrelated to McDuff, a federal prosecutor said the testimony came to light during the investigation begun in the wake of controversy generated by McDuff's release and subsequent arrest on two murder charges.

Granberry, who served on the 18-member board from 1989 to 1991, is accused of lying in three instances concerning his work as a parole consultant.

The information said Granberry, from Lubbock, lied when asked whether or not he had worked in the past to help inmates with their dealings with the parole board.

The perjury accusation stems from June 25, 1992, testimony that Granberry gave at a federal court hearing about his consulting work.

Granberry was not immediately available for comment.

His attorney, Herman Gotcher of Austin, said he had no comment on the matter.

"The U.S. Attorney is doing all the talking right now," Gotcher said.

U.S. Assistant Attorney Bill Johnston said in a news conference Wednesday that Granberry offered an unidentified Texas resident's son preferential treatment and helped arrange the son's parole in 1990.

According to the information filed in Waco, the inmate's father offered Granberry two car leases at $200 each a month.

After the transaction, Granberry had the son's parole case sent to a special review panel of the Texas Board of Pardons and Parole, Johnston said. The inmate was released from prison shortly after the parole case went to the panel.

"We're alleging he acted improperly as chairman," Johnston said.

Granberry resigned as chairman in May 1991. Almost immediately Granberry became a consultant for prisoners seeking parole.

McDuff, who had won a reprieve from death row in 1972 when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the death penalty was unconstitutional, was paroled in 1989. He was returned to prison briefly in July 1990 after he was accused of terroristic threats.

BIVINS: Senator named to groups for the 1992 elections, Midland County was moved from a district represented by Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, to a district represented by Bivins.

(From 1B)

Bullock announed the appointments as the Senate organized itself for the 73rd Legislature, which convened for a regular five-month session Tuesday.

"Cutting the state budget and helping craft a school finance bill will be among my top priorities," Bivins said.

The state Supreme Court has given the Legislature a June 1 deadline to approve a school plan that does not discriminate against property-poor districts. Otherwise, the court will impound state funding, effectively closing most schools.

"Additionally, as chairman of the agriculture subcommittee, I'll work to keep government from overburdening and overregulating farm operations," Bivins said.

As for the new tade and technology committee, Bivins said West Texas produces many commodities that can be exported.

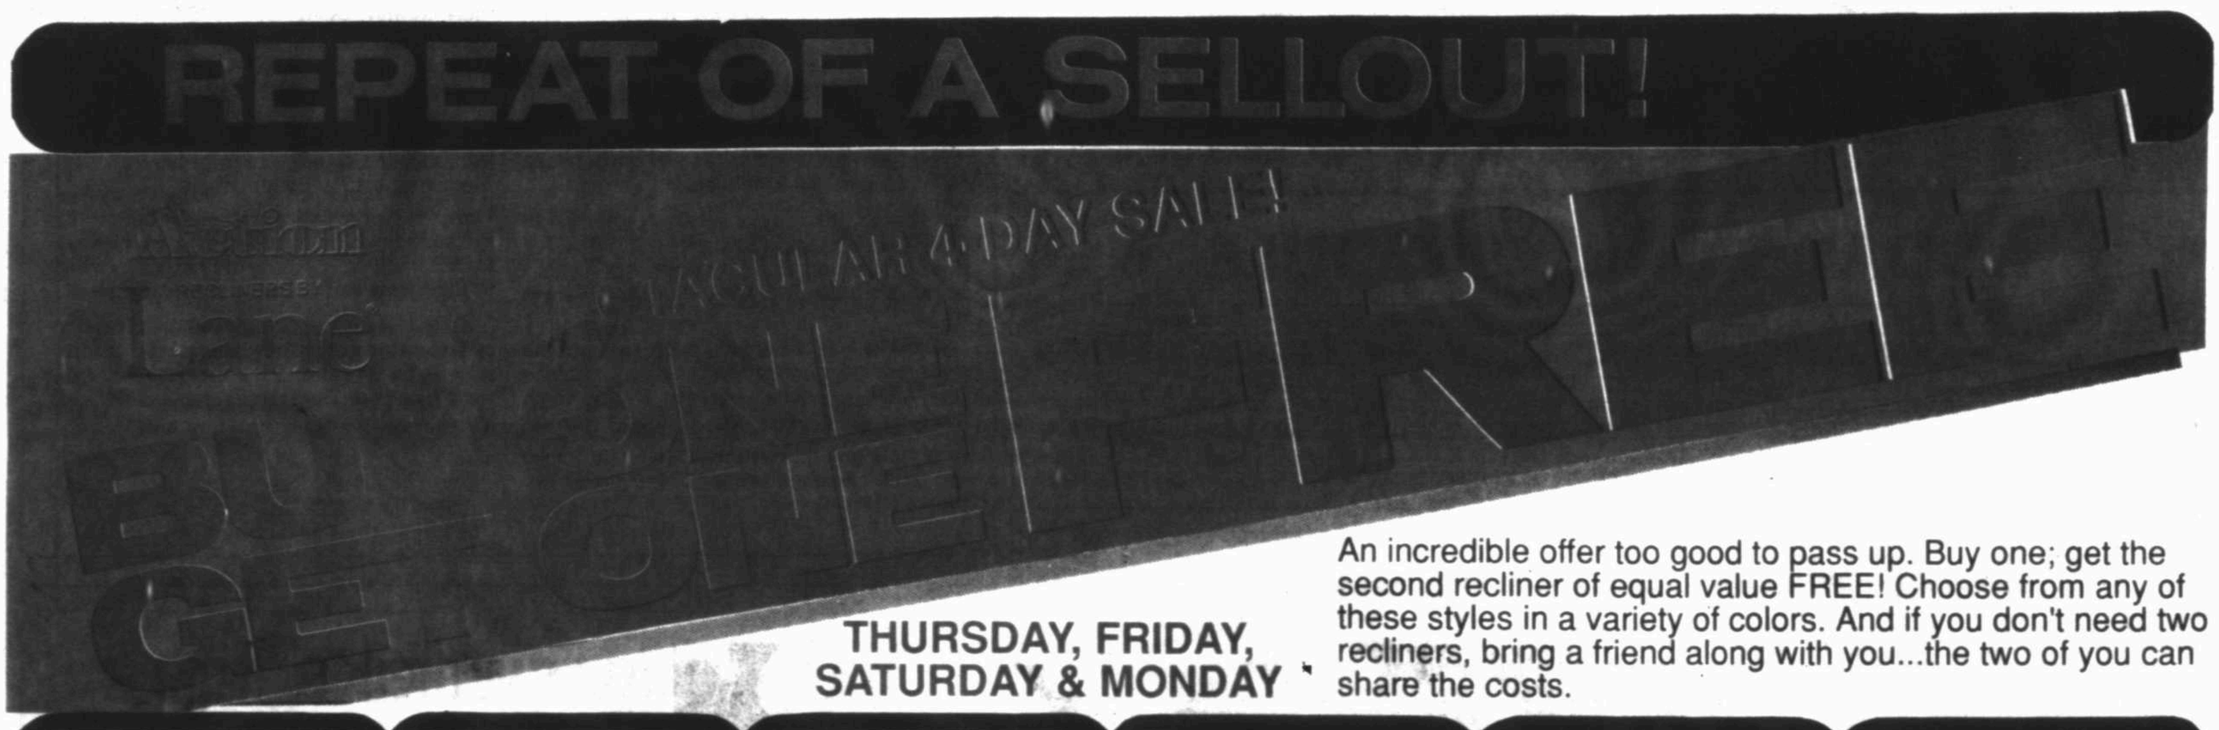

"My goal is to help expedite that trade activity," he said.

Once again, an event featuring pairs makes history.

Now, Jordan can add another honor to his 1992 trophy case — Associated Press Male Athlete of the Year.

Jordan is only the fifth man to win the award in consecutive years, joining Joe Montana, Carl Lewis, Byron Nelson and Don Budge.

Chaps back after 35 days off

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

After 35 days of rest, the Midland College Chaparrals are set to resume play tonight in a non-conference game with Clarendon College.

Tip-off is set for 7:30 p.m. at Chaparral Center. Should the weather turn wintry anywhere between here and the Panhandle, it's possible the Bulldogs won't make the trip since tonight's contest is no longer of the league variety. Clarendon ended its affiliation with the Western Junior College Athletic Conference prior to the start of the season, but agreed to play out it's schedule for the 1992-93 campaign.

The good news is that 35 days can do a lot to erase any memories of the offensive slump the team suffered through in fall semester-closing games at Odessa and Howard colleges. Another piece of good news centers on Kelly Greer, an addition to the lineup who can best be summed up by thinking Demeitreus Drew, only bigger.

The bad news is that the Chaps are short a player, and Drew, the overwhelming offensive leader for MC, is still limping around on a gimpy ankle, suffered as a result of a severe ankle sprain in the December 10 loss at Howard.

Corey Tubbs, a bit player at point guard, is no longer a member of the team after failing to meet the necessary eligibility requirements.

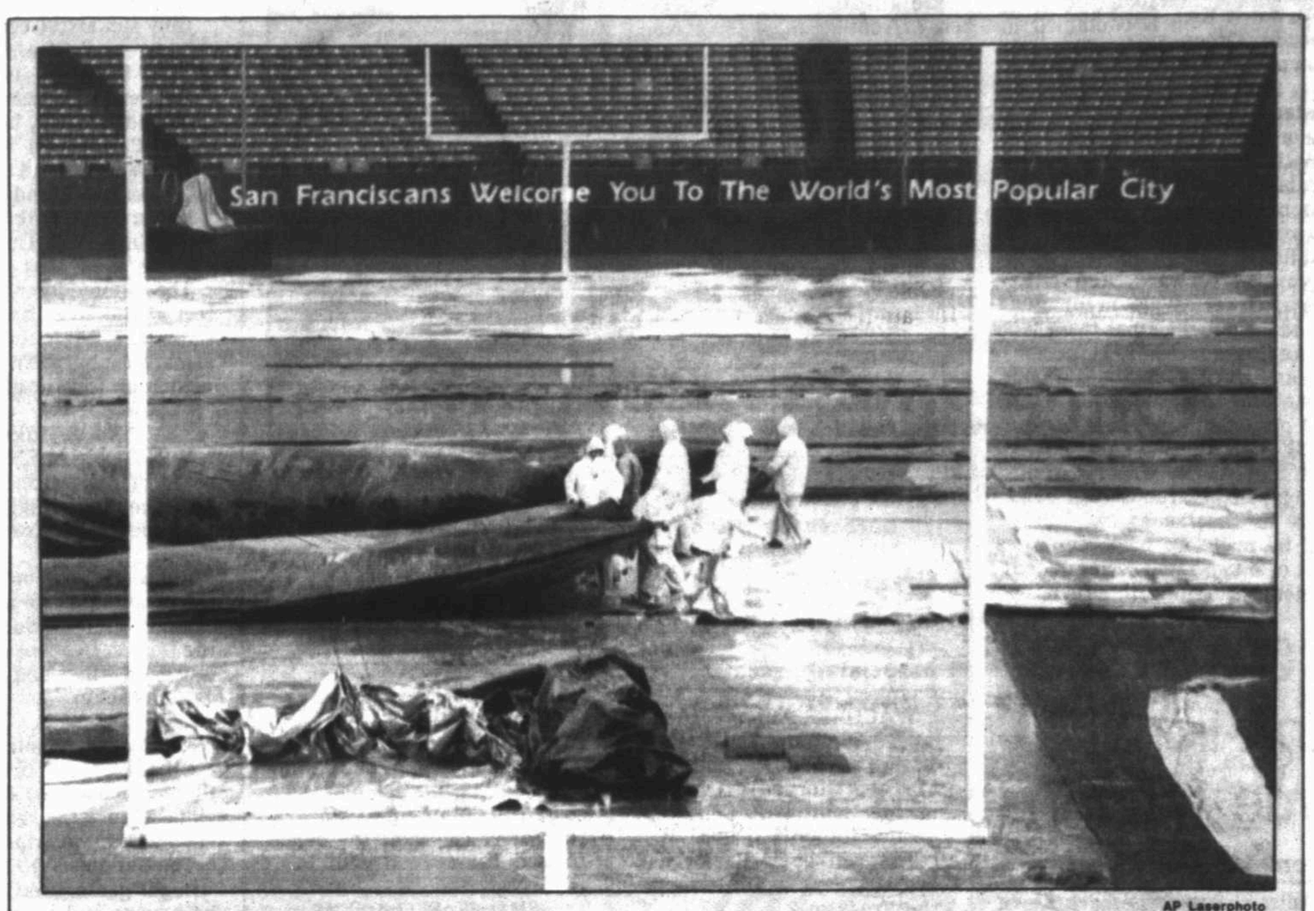

Head coach Steve Green said in any other year, Drew's ankle may have come around by now.

"Not this year," Green said. "Things just won't go right this year. It (Drew's ankle) still looks like a tennis ball. He hasn't come back from Christmas and shown he's recovered."

Greer, a sophomore in status, is a 6-8, 230-pound transfer from Rend Lake Community College, in Ina, Ill. A graduate of Chicago's Crane High School, Greer averaged 20 points per game and 12 rebounds per game his senior season. He was also named to the All-City and All-State teams, an honor also bestowed upon Chap teammate Terrance Rone.

After having offensive troubles in the losses to OC and Howard, Green said practices of late have centered around "offensive rebounding and getting the Dallas will return to infamous Candlestick Park with less than ideal conditions Sunday. Workers started resodding the field Wednesday in an effort to make the soaked facility playable.

'The Catch' only haunts fans

■ Dwight Clark sent Dallas toward a spinning slide 11 years ago, but today's Cowboys don't care for history.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Young Cowboys don't know or care much about football history. They are too busy making their own.

In the eyes of some fans, Sunday's NFC title game against the San Francisco 49ers is the Dallas Cowboys' opportunity for retribution.

Eleven years ago, the Cowboys were devastated in a game so famous it goes by two words: "The Catch."

Dwight Clark's acrobatic catch of Joe Montana's touchdown pass doomed the Cowboys 28-27 in the NFC title game against the 49ers in Candlestick Park. It also marked a point where the Dallas franchise began to slip. In the next decade, it got back to the championship game only one more time.

Dallas brings the NFL's youngest team — average age 26 — into Candlestick Park on Sunday to face the league's most potent offense.

No Dallas player on the current roster was on the field the day the Cowboys lost their heart and soul in San Francisco. Most didn't see the game and hold little reverence for it.

"This game has nothing to do with history," Dallas running back Emmitt Smith said. "When we take the field on Sunday we're not going to be thinking about the past. What happened a decade ago is dead and gone. It has no bearing on the game or the task at hand. I do get tired of hearing about it."

Smith said he realized old Cowboy fans die hard.

"They've got to understand that Dwight Clark won't be out there catching the ball and that Joe Montana is a backup quarterback," Smith said. "This is two totally different teams out there on the field. It's even different coaching staffs. All that happened in the past means exactly nothing."

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson echoed Smith's thoughts and said even he didn't know much about the game that produced The Catch.

"I think it was 28-27 and I've seen the play where Clark caught the ball with Everson Walls chasing him and that's about it," Johnson said.

"I guess there will be a million words written about The Catch this week," quarterback Troy Aikman said. "That's fine, but this is a different time and place."

Ticket holders at Monday night's Dallas Mavericks game sit with bags on their heads. The NBA team decided Wednesday to fire its head coach Richie Adubato.

Mavericks fire Richie Adubato

■ NBA team says that 2-27 record isn't the reason for the firing, but the club is disappointed with the development of some of the younger players.

By Rod Richardson
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Richie Adubato had been pressing the Dallas Mavericks to tell him whether he would be around to lead the NBA's youngest and least-known cast of players to better days.

On Wednesday, the answer was a resounding no.

"With the direction we chose to go — becoming the youngest most inexperienced team in the league, we knew it would be a difficult season," said Rick Sund, vice president of operations, who went to Detroit late Tuesday and told Adubato Wednesday morning he was fired.

Adubato seemed almost relieved after meeting with Sund, team general manager Norm Sonju said.

Dropped programs, schedule tough on MC

Steve Green's not one to make excuses. Never has. Probably never will.

With the successes his junior college basketball teams have experienced in recent years, he's never had to. And even though the Chaps struggled at 1-2 in their first three conference games in December, you won't find Midland College's head coach making any now, either.

Patterson

But if he did, he could almost certainly cite two factors which led to MC's tough December. Western Texas' decision to drop men's basketball, and a brutal November MC schedule both contributed to a porous MC offense and the team's tired legs during an 88-67 loss to Odessa, and an 89-74 loss to Howard.

"No excuse, just reality," Green said of the tough times that befell his program during the four-day stretch from December 7 to December 10.

After winning its first eight games, MC fell to tough programs at Dixie, Utah (106-72), and against Connors State (94-89) at the Odessa Thanksgiving Classic.

Entering conference play shortly after the Connors loss, the Chaps recorded their largest margin of victory in school history against Frank Phillips, but followed that up with the consecutive losses.

While not excusing the team's string of hard luck, Green has some interesting reasons as to why the month of December turned out the way it did.

"By the time conference rolled around," he said, "we were kind of in a slump. We'd lost to Dixie and Connors, and we didn't play good in the Odessa tournament. Compound that with Luis (Cambraia) splitting his hand open, Kelon's (Haynie) knee and Demeitreus' (Drew) ankle and that's just the reality.

"The only thing I can control is the schedule. We had our schedule made out and all of a sudden, Western Texas drops out. So now, I'm scrambling around trying to pick up two games. It (the slump) all started at the tail end of November, and having to play so many games (14) in November, there's no relief in sight. November was a killer. You've got 30 days in November, and we're playing on about half of them. That's worse than an NBA schedule."

WTC's decision to drop basketball forced MC into two more November games, games that would've been played in the spring semester instead of early in the season. Had WTC continued its program, the Chaps' schedule would've included 15 fall games and 14 spring games. Instead, the Chaps played 17 times in a six week period in Novemer and December, and — with Monday's game in Liberal, Kan., cancelled — will now play just 11 games over the next two months.

Green said the Chaps' slump came "at the worst possible time of the season.

"We were in a slump at Odessa and at Howard. But if you take the Connors game away and the Dixie game away, and you put in there the McMurry JV and somebody else, then all of a sudden you don't feel quite so bad about yourself when you're getting ready to play tougher games.

"When do you want to play the best teams, when you're playing good or playing bad? Obviously, we hit them (OC and Howard) when we were not playing well."

Even though the Chaps are under .500 as spring semester play opens, there's still a long road ahead.

"I think too much is being made of us being 1-2," Green said. "We've got nine games to go."

And fortunately for MC, the roughest part is over. Not only are the bulk of their games behind them, but two of the hardest conference road trips are behind them as well.

Jimmy Patterson is assistant sports editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

CHAPS: MC has changes ball in the basket."

Forwards Kirk Ford and Steve Walston, Green said, both have shown signs of encouragement since returning for the spring semester. So much so, in fact, that one or both may see starting duty.

With Drew hobbled and Luis Cambraia in a personal slump, Green says Thursday's starting lineup will include Shawn Morris and Rone at the guard slots, Kelon Haynie at forward, and either Drew, Greer, Walston or Ford rounding out the final two spots.

The Chaps return to conference action Saturday at South Plains. Game time in Levelland is set for 7:30 p.m.

CHAP NOTE: Monday's game with Seward Co. (Kan.), cancelled because of hazardous road conditions in Oklahoma and Kansas, will be made up next season, as part of a two-game series or tournament, according to Green.

COWBOYS: Emotional time for fans

(From 1C)

Dallas rookie cornerback Kevin Smith, ignoring the fact that Montana has won four Super Bowl rings, said Montana has had his day.

"I'd rather see Joe in there Sunday because he's not as mobile as Steve Young and I'd rather play against a right-handed quarterback," Smith said. "I know Montana is a legend but I think if he played it would be to our advantage."

Rookie middle linebacker Robert Jones, who was a Cowboys fanatic 11 years ago, said "I saw the ball just clear Ed Jones' fingertips and Clark make the catch. I was mad. I yelled at the TV ... It ruined my day.

"But this game has nothing to do with what happened a long time ago."

Owner Jerry Jones remembers watching the game at home on television in Little Rock, Ark.

"It was like watching Ali and Liston go at each other," Jones said. "I can see where this rematch is emotional for some of our fans. It's a great opportunity for this franchise to step up a notch again."

MAVS: Gar Heard next

(From 1C)

"He has been asking Rick about it on an almost daily basis, and in all honesty our answer right now had to be no," Sonju said.

The Mavericks' poor record, the worst in the league this season, and current 12-game losing streak had nothing to do with Adubato's firing, Sonju said. Instead, team officials were disappointed with the development of some of the younger players, he said.

Before Wednesday's contest against the Pistons, Dallas had won only two of its 29 games this season.

"The team is going to struggle and we know that because whey you go young, you're going to struggle and it's tough," Sonju said.

"I told Richie this summer that his won-loss record would never have anything to do with his future here."

Assistant coach Gar Heard will run the team on an interim basis. Sonju said Heard, 44, is not being considered as a permanent coach.

Sonju said the organization respected Adubato's efforts but felt the team needed a change.

"The bottom line is that my profession is one where you have to win," Adubato said. "I felt we could be competitive, but it was going to take us a little longer than people thought it would take."

SWC Roundup

WACO — Aundre Branch scored 26 points as the Baylor Bears wore down the Texas Christian Horned Frogs, 79-57, in the Southwest Conference opener for both teams.

The win gives Baylor a 9-2 overall mark while dropping the Frogs to 2-8.

Baylor battled to a 33-27 halftime lead. The Bears outshot the Frogs 10-23 to 7-21. They also made more 3-point shots and rebounds. TCU also managed to dictate a slowdown pace holding the Bears to 33 points for the first half.

Allen Tolley kept the Frogs in the game in the second half making 18 points in the last 20 minutes.

Baylor's Alex Holcombe ended the game with 25 points and 13 rebounds.

Tolley led the Frogs with 26 points while Eric Dailey put in 11 and pulled down seven rebounds.

Tulane 70, Texas Tech 54

NEW ORLEANS — Anthony Reed scored 20 points, including five points in a 22-second span late in the first half, to lead Tulane over Texas Tech.

The Green Wave (11-3) won its sixth straight game and avenged a 101-98 loss to the Red Raiders last season in Lubbock, Texas.

Tech is now 8-3.

Reed had 13 points in the first half. His two free throws and three-point play from the top of the key stretched a four-point Tulane lead to 32-23 with 1:08 left in the half.

Neither team had led by more than four points prior to that, and the Red Raiders never got within seven the rest of the way.

Tulane led 34-25 at halftime and by as many as 19 in the second half.

G.J. Hunter, LeVeldro Simmons and Carlin Hartman each scored 10 points for Tulane. Jason Sasser came off the bench to lead Texas Tech with 14.

SMU 66, St. Louis 59

DALLAS — Gerald Lewis scored eight of his 15 points over the final 1:49 and Southern Methodist went on to hold off St. Louis' upset bid, 66-59, in a non-conference game Wednesday night.

Mike Wilson paced the Mustangs with 19 points.

SMU, coming off Sunday's 102-92 road upset of the University of Texas, survived three-for-23 3-point shooting to improve its record to 8-4.

St. Louis (5-7) was led by 18 points from Donnie Dobbs and 17 from Erwin Claggett.

Scott Highmark's 16-footer with 4:22 left pulled the Billikens into a 54-54 tie, then Wilson scored on tip-in, then hit one of two free throws for a 57-54 advantage with 2:31 remaining.

Lewis connected on a 15-foot jumper, then converted four consecutive free throws, the last two with 1:23 to play to boost the Mustangs' lead to 61-57. Lewis added a solo layup with seven seconds to play to ice the victory.

SMU registered a 63-56 road victory over St. Louis on Jan. 6.

SMU hit eight of its first 12 field goal attempts to build an early 20-12 lead. St. Louis then went on a 15-3 run started and finished by baskets from Claggett for a 27-23 advantage.

The Mustangs went two for 11 from 3-point range in the first half and were outrebounded by the smaller Billikens, 22-17.

Top 25 Cage Roundup

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Chalk up another upset for Vanderbilt's Memorial Gym magic, and another quick end to Kentucky's stay at No. 1.

Billy McCaffrey scored 22 points and handed out a school-record 14 assists as Vanderbilt downed top-ranked Kentucky 101-86 Wednesday night.

Vanderbilt, which has a .779 winning percentage at Memorial Gym, beat the last No. 1 team to visit, North Carolina in 1987-1988.

The Wildcats had taken over No. 1 in The Associated Press poll Monday after Duke's loss to Georgia Tech on Sunday, the first time Kentucky had been No. 1 since 1988. That time the Wildcats lost to Auburn in their first game with the top ranking.

The Commodores (12-3, 2-1 SEC) were nearly perfect at the free throw line, making 36 of 41. Kentucky (11-1, 2-1) found itself in foul trouble early with Jamal Mashburn, Travis Ford and Rodney Dent each with four fouls late in the game.

No. 3 Duke 86, Wake Forest 59

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Bobby Hurley scored seven of his season-high 25 points in a 14-0 run to start the second half and No. 3 Duke broke from a halftime tie and raced past self-destructing Wake Forest.

Duke (11-1, 2-1 ACC) was playing its first game since having its 23-game winning streak snapped by Georgia Tech on Sunday. The Blue Devils defeated the Demon Deacons (8-3, 0-2) for the 15th time in the last 18 meetings and avoided its third straight loss at Joel Coliseum.

No. 5 North Carolina 80, No. 8 Georgia Tech 67

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — George Lynch and Derrick Phelps each scored 20 points and No. 5 North Carolina beat No. 8 Georgia Tech to snap the Yellow Jackets' eight-game winning streak.

The Tar Heels (13-1, 3-0 ACC), who won their fifth straight game, used their offense to start a second-half surge and maintain control. The defense took over midway through the period and stretched the lead to as much as 18 points.

No. 11 Cincinnati 72, Cleveland St. 63

CLEVELAND — Curtis Bostic scored six points during a 10-0 run at the start of the second half and No. 11 Cincinnati survived a scare to beat Cleveland State.

The Bearcats (10-1), who won their seventh straight game, trailed by as many as six late in the first half before LaZelle Durden put them ahead for good 32-31 with a 3-pointer at the halftime buzzer.

No. 13 Iowa 84, No. 19 Minnesota 77

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Acie Earl broke out of a scoring slump with 19 points and Val Barnes added 16 to lead No. 13 Iowa over No. 19 Minnesota.

Earl, held to 11 and 13 points last week in losses to Indiana and Ohio State, scored 12 points in the second half for the Hawkeyes (12-2, 1-2 Big Ten). Minnesota (10-2, 2-1) failed to give coach Clem Haskins his 100th victory at the school as the Golden Gophers dropped their fourth straight to Iowa.

No. 14 Virginia 100, Clemson 82

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Fourteenth-ranked Virginia extended the nation's longest winning streak to 15 games by capitalizing on a horrendous Clemson start.

The Cavaliers (10-0, 3-0 ACC) had seven players who scored in double figures, led by Cornel Parker with 20. The winning streak includes a five-game run that ended with last season's National Invitation Tournament championship.

Clemson (9-2, 0-2) lost for the 13th time in its last 15 games at University Hall.

No. 17 Purdue 76, Wisconsin 60

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Glenn Robinson scored a season-high 31 points and grabbed 14 rebounds to lead No. 17 Purdue over Wisconsin.

Robinson, the Big Ten scoring leader who sat out his freshman season for academic reasons, had seven points in the late seven-minute spurt that decided the outcome. The Boilermakers, who defeated the Badgers here for the 21st consecutive time, were leading 51-48 when Robinson grabbed an offensive rebound and scored to ignite the spurt with 10:25 to go.

No. 20 Georgetown 74, DePaul 45

LANDOVER, Md. — Othella Harrington scored 12 of his 16 points in the first half to lead No. 20 Georgetown to a rout over DePaul.

The Hoyas (9-2) scored the first eight points of the game and never trailed.

No. 23 Michigan St. 77, No. 21 Ohio St. 60

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Kris Weshinskey scored a career-high 21 points and No. 23 Michigan State hit its first 10 shots from the field in beating No. 21 Ohio State.

Michigan State (9-3, 1-2 Big Ten) had shot just 31 percent from the field in a 52-39 home loss to Illinois on Saturday. But they never trailed, hitting 29 of 54 shots for 54 percent in snapping Ohio State's five-game winning streak.

The loss was only Ohio State's third in its last 42 games at St. John Arena.

SWC, Big Eight order alliance report

DALLAS (AP) — The presidents of the Southwest and Big Eight conferences on Wednesday directed their commissioners to prepare a report on how an alliance might affect both leagues.

"There was no endorsement of the concept of a merger," said A. Kenneth Pye, president of Southern Methodist University. "It is much too premature to consider anything along those lines."

Pye said the report by SWC commissioner Fred Jacoby and his counterpart, Carl James, is due before the leagues' respective spring meetings in late May.

"We're just exploring all types of cooperation that will strengthen both conferences and provide a safety net for both of us," in the event of school defections or new television contract arrangements, Jacoby said.

The report will focus on the feasibility of:

—Joint negotiations of television contracts, particularly if the College Football Association's contract with ABC-TV is not extended beyond 1995. Together, the leagues have 16 percent of the national television market.

—More non-conference football games and a basketball challenge between the leagues. In 1993, seven SWC schools will face seven Big Eight schools in football and in 1994, all eight will play a crossover contest.

—Negotiating a contract with the new Alamo Bowl in San Antonio. Such an agreement would pit non-champions from both leagues while maintaining existing contracts with the Orange and Cotton Bowls. The inaugural Alamo Bowl on Dec. 31 will have a projected $1.2 million payout per team.

"All of the CEOs present thought there was merit on additional study of these and other proposals," Pye said. "None thought we had sufficient detail in which to act, but all of us will benefit from a more formal study."

SWC officials have sought an agreement with the Big Eight since Arkansas announced in 1990 that it was departing the SWC for the Southeastern Conference. Soon afterwards, talk spread of the formation of "super conferences" and the possibility of Texas and Texas A&M leaving the SWC.

Missouri and Colorado have been linked to expansion speculation involving the Big Ten and Pacific-10 conferences, respectively.

Big Eight officials agreed to the concept of an alliance with the SWC at the 1990 NCAA convention in Nashville, Tenn. But no specifics in scheduling could be resolved, particularly in basketball.

The study will seek input from university administrations and athletic departments.

Same story, Mavs lose again

Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The Detroit Pistons, behind Isiah Thomas' 20 points, kept Dallas winless on the road this season with a 112-96 victory in the debut of Mavericks interim coach Gar Heard.

Heard was named to replace Richie Adubato, fired earlier in the day, but it made no difference as Dallas lost its 13th consecutive game and fell to 2-28 for the season and 0-14 on the road.

Adubato had been the Mavericks' coach since Nov. 29, 1989, when he took over following the firing of John MacLeod.

Terry Davis scored 17 points, including 13 in the first half, and grabbed 14 rebounds for the Mavericks. Derek Harper scored 15 points for Dallas.

Terry Mills had 18 points and 11 rebounds, while Joe Dumars and Gerald Glass scored 16 points apiece as the Pistons snapped a three-game losing streak. Dennis Rodman had 18 rebounds, snapping of streak of five games in which he grabbed more than 20.

NBA Roundup

Spurs 89, Timberwolves 81

MINNEAPOLIS — Avery Johnson scored a season-high 17 points as San Antonio defeated Minnesota and spoiled the debut of Timberwolves interim coach Sidney Lowe.

The Spurs improved to 9-2 under new coach John Lucas, who replaced the fired Jerry Tarkanian on Dec. 18, and they're 4-0 since Johnson took over as the starting point guard.

Lowe replaced Jimmy Rodgers, who was fired Sunday, and the Timberwolves played with more spirit and aggression than usual. But they still lost for the 17th time in 19 games and fell to 6-24, the NBA's second-worst record. Doug West led Minnesota with 16 points.

Johnson, signed as a free agent on Nov. 19, became a started on Jan. 7. Tarkanian had said the Spurs didn't have a good enough player at that position to win consistently.

Johnson's three-point play with 5:50 to go put the Spurs ahead for good, 77-74.

Celtics 98, Bullets 93

BOSTON — Boston, the NBA's hottest team, survived a late Washington surge for its seventh straight win as Reggie Lewis scored 27 points.

The Bullets closed an 83-72 deficit with 10 minutes left to 95-92 with 2:14 to go. But they missed three of four free throws and all four field-goal attempts the rest of the way.

With the score 97-93 with 12 seconds to go, Sherman Douglas clinched the win by stealing an inbounds pass, then making one of two free throws with nine seconds left.

76ers 129, Warriors 122

PHILADELPHIA — Jeff Hornacek scored 22 of his 29 points in the second half as Philadelphia defeated Golden State.

Rookie Clarence Weatherspoon and Johnny Dawkins each had 28 points for Philadelphia, which played without leading scorer Hersey Hawkins, who was sidelined with a sprained ankle.

Sarunas Marciulionis, who missed the first 24 games of the season with a broken ankle, had 34 points for Golden State.

Nets 104, Cavaliers 98

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Derrick Coleman scored 25 points and New Jersey forced 20 turnovers from usually surehanded Cleveland.

Kenny Anderson had 23 points, including consecutive jumpers in the final 2:11, to help the Nets post a season-high three-game winning streak at home.

Nuggets 108, Knicks 92

DENVER — Reggie Williams scored 22 points and Dikembe Mutombo had 16 rebounds and six of Denver's season-high 16 blocks as the Nuggets won for only the second time in 18 games.

The Nuggets, who snapped a 14-game losing streak with a victory over Houston on Friday, only to lose twice since then, shot 51.8 percent from the field, including 22 of 39 in the second half, or 56.4 percent.

Coogs prepare to face reeling 'Horns

HOUSTON (AP) — University of Houston basketball coach Pat Foster knows the worst time to play a good basketball team is when it's playing at its worst and the Texas Longhorns fit perfectly into Foster's philosophy.

"You don't want to catch a team like Texas when they are down because they don't stay down very long," Foster said. "I think our players realize that we have to have great intensity."

The Longhorns (5-5) are reeling after the loss of point guard B.J. Tyler for the season with a broken foot. They've responded by losing their first two SWC games to Rice and Southern Methodist.

"Now they have to go on the road and beat a contender," Foster said. "There's no question it's a must win for them. That's why we can't forget that they're a good basketball team."

The Cougars (7-2) are playing their first SWC games after a successful non-conference schedule that included narrow losses to No. 5 North Carolina and No. 15 UCLA.

Center Bo Outlaw and point guard Anthony Goldwire, a junior college transfer, have led the Cougars.

Outlaw scored 17 points, got 19 rebounds and had seven blocked shots in Tuesday night's 83-56 victory over Wyoming. Foster praises Outlaw, who is averaging 17.4 points and 11.3 rebounds per game, but would like to see more balanced rebounding.

"We need to spread it around more, he was running by people to get that many rebounds," Foster said.

Goldwire stepped right into the point guard position where he's averaging 16.8 points and 5.8 assists.

Prices rise

Oil futures were higher Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

West Texas Intermediate for February delivery rose 12 cents to close at $18.50 per barrel.

The contract rose as high as $18.84 as U.S.-led forces made air strikes against Iraq, and fell as low as $18.15 before closing. Concerns about OPEC overproduction and slack demand for home heating oil overwhelmed concerns about the impact of the air strike on Persian Gulf supplies.

Contracts for February natural gas rose 1.4 cents to $1.612 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Zale terms

DALLAS — Zale Corp. said Wednesday it had agreed on economic terms for a compromise Chapter 11 plan with creditor groups that had competing ideas for its bankruptcy reorganization.

The company said it must still work out non-economic issues with the committees representing unsecured creditors of Zale Corp., and subsidiaries Zale Credit Corp. and Gordon Jewelry Corp.

If those can be settled, a consolidated plan to restructure Zale's $1.5 billion debt could emerge. Zale is the nation's largest jewelry retailer.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar ended mostly mixed on world currency markets Wednesday in trading that was mundane despite the allied air strike against Iraq.

In New York, the dollar settled at 125.65 yen, up from 125.20 yen on Tuesday.

In New York it cost $1.5485 to buy one pound, more expensive than Tuesday's $1.5445.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Tuesday's rates included: 1.6235 German marks, down from 1.6310; 1.4850 Swiss francs, down from 1.4985; 5.5045 French francs, down from 5.5325; 1,506.50 Italian lire, up from 1,496.50, and 1.2793 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2778.

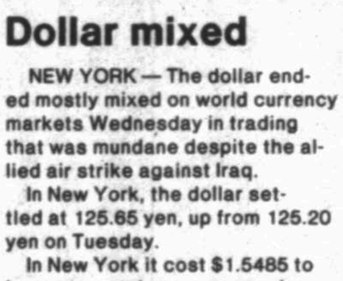

Stocks slip

NEW YORK — The stock market churned its way through a mixed session Wednesday as traders kept track of developments in the new confrontation with Iraq.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 1.08 points to 3,263.56.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 4 to 3 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Energy stocks were mostly higher on the Iraq news, although world oil prices barely budged.

Oil leader assails Clinton's proposals

By Anne Pearson
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The president of the oil industry's largest trade group says the energy proposals of President-elect Clinton's advisers threaten to derail economic growth.

History shows that economic growth must be fueled by energy, and the "naive and disturbing" conservation and fuel preference measures espoused by many in the Clinton camp would stifle that growth, American Petroleum Institute President Charles DiBona told Houston API members Tuesday.

"Tax-driven conservation (such as the proposed gasoline tax hike) will take its toll on his economic goals," DiBona said.

Energy prices would have to triple, DiBona said, if the Clinton administration expects to hold consumption to current levels during periods of normal economic growth. That would require U.S. industry to shift tremendous amounts of capital toward developing energy-saving technology, he said.

DiBona said the president-elect also will have a hard time achieving his goal of replacing coal and oil use with cleaner-burning natural gas if the government continues to bar oil companies from publicly owned exploration acreage, both onshore and offshore.

DiBona said it's impractical to believe that alternative fuels could largely displace oil during the next decade, another Clinton-Gore objective.

He warned against expensive research programs such as former President Jimmy Carter's $88 billion synthetic fuels program, which was never commercially viable because such fuels could not compete with cheaper oil and natural gas.

DiBona said that while there is a strong move by Clinton's people and apparent support among congressional leadership to hike gasoline taxes, he believes the general public will be on the oil industry's side on that fight.

"It's going to be hard to explain to a western senator why people in his less densely populated state (who rely on cars) should have to pay anywhere from three times to 10 times more to help reduce the deficit than some stock broker in New York City.

Investor makes bid for bank link with MCorp

HOUSTON (AP) — A group of Texas oilmen is proposing the financially troubled First City Bancorporation merge with a bankrupt Dallas holding company to settle both company's problems.

Billy Goldberg, 77, of Houston submitted a bid Tuesday that would use MCorp's liquid assets, which he estimated at more than $100 million, to help recapitalize First City.

MCorp's creditors, who hold all of the Dallas company's assets, would then accept stock in the new entity instead of pursing their claims, Goldberg said.

In addition, Goldberg said he and fellow investors could pump another $400 million into First City.

"These particular people have all the cash in the world," Goldberg told The Houston Post without specifying identities of his other partners.

The bid came three days before federal regulators plan to close the bidding for the failed Houston-based banking company.

Federal regulators shut down First City and its 20 subsidiary banks on Oct. 30.

But Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation spokesman Alan Whitney said he was not aware of the proposal from Goldberg, a former Texas Democratic Party chairman and Houston's economic development booster.

"The only response that is appropriate for me to make is we're open to any and all offers," Whitney said.

Sources within the bank also told The Post that top-level managers were warned in meeting earlier this week that there could be significant layoffs if Houston-based Texas Commerce Bank, the leading contender for First City, wins the bidding.

First City spokesman Jim Day said he had no knowledge of such a meeting.

But Edward G. Harshfield, the FDIC-installed manager of the troubled bank, has made it clear that at least 10 percent of First City's 5,000 employees are redundant and will be laid off no matter who buys the company.

Texas Commerce Bank and its New York-based parent, Chemical Banking Corp., appear to be the front-runners in the bidding for First City, or at least its flagship Houston bank.

Central and South West Corp. may acquire El Paso Electric

DALLAS (AP) — Central and South West Corp. said Wednesday it may acquire El Paso Electric Co., which is reorganizing in bankruptcy.

Central and South West — a Dallas-based holding company that owns utilities in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas — said it has met with El Paso Electric and creditors and may submit a reorganization plan in the Chapter 11 case.

The plan would propose that El Paso Electric, upon exit from Chapter 11, become a subsidiary of Central and South West.

But Central and South West said it could not guarantee it would file a plan. A company spokesman declined further comment.

If the acquisition occurred, however, it would be the first expansion by Central and South West since it became a standalone company in 1947.

Trading in El Paso Electric's stock was halted at $2.625, up from $2.5625, after Central and South West issued the statement around midday. Central and South West closed up 37.5 cents at $29.375 on the New York Stock Exchange.

OPEC's production soars to its highest in 12 years

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Undaunted by slumping oil prices or the prospect of an allied raid on Iraq, OPEC nations let crude production soar last month to its highest level in a dozen years, according to estimates released Wednesday.

The report by the International Energy Agency confirmed analysts' suspicions that the producers are ignoring promises to cut production and lift prices.

"OPEC is in a spiral," said Peter Gignoux, manager of the petroleum desk at Smith Barney, Harris Upham in London. "They just can't come to grips with" their overproduction.

When American and allied planes did strike Iraqi targets in the oil-rich Middle East on Wednesday, it did not significantly affect oil prices or supplies, OPEC President Alirio Parra said in Venezuela.

"Oil prices went down initially, but have since adjusted themselves," said Parra, who also is Venezuela's mines and energy Minister.

The International Energy Agency is an arm of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, made up of two dozen industrialized nations.

Its new report estimated that the the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries pumped nearly 25.3 million barrels of oil a day in December, the most since September 1980 and well over the cartel's output cap.

With runaway production, prices have tumbled.

The average price of a basket of crudes monitored by OPEC was $16.97 a 42-gallon barrel last week, down more than 50 cents from late December.

For all of last year, the basket averaged $18.41 a barrel.

Analysts predicted the nations would keep pumping at high levels despite Parra's plea for restraint.

"We expect prices will remain weak," said Peter Bogin, associate director for oil markets at Cambridge Energy Research Associates in Paris.

To try to boost prices, OPEC ministers agreed last November to hold production to 24.6 million barrels a day in the first three months of 1993.

But the nations have shown little desire to turn down the taps.

Bogin said Saudi Arabia and Iran, the group's top suppliers, would have to make the first move to cut production deeply to get the others to follow.

Libya said Wednesday it would trim supply by 50,000 barrels a day, but did not give current output. It has been pumping about 1.5 million barrels a day.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Owners need to establish taxes on home sales

By Bill Doyle

Q: I recently sold my home of 32 years for $200,000. I paid $20,000 for it. That leaves me with a capital gain of $180,000, less the $125,000 one-time exclusion I am allowed for being 55 or older and having owned and lived in the house for three of the five years prior to the sale.

Doyle

Over the years, I made many permanent improvements — an oversized garage, additional bedroom, roofed patio, central air conditioning and other things — costing about $32,000.

The problem is I don't have receipts for many of those expenditures. I tried to go back to the contractors and the stores where the materials were purchased, only to find they are deceased, out or business, bankrupt or otherwise impossible to contact.

So I took pictures of the improvements and am prepared to give honest answers about their costs. I also prepared a three-page list of the improvements, with as much information as I could get in case I am challenged by the Internal Revenue Service.

What are your comments and advice?

A: Even though you were late getting started, you have done everything that could be reasonably expected to nail down those costs.

The natural advice is to add the costs of all additions and improvements — but not repairs and maintenance — to the purchase price of the house to come up with your total "basis." Include closing costs and other items you paid 32 years ago in your purchase price.

The difference between that basis and the proceeds from the sale will be your profit. The sale proceeds will be reduced by real estate agent commissions and any other costs you pay.

If you net $200,000 from the sale and have a $52,000 basis, your profit will be $148,000. The $125,000 once-in-lifetime exclusion to which you are entitled will reduce the profit subject to capital gains tax to $23,000.

However, the costs that increased your basis when you bought and the costs you incurred when you sold will pare down that taxable profit.

Fill out — very carefully — the Form 2199, you are required to file with your federal income tax return Form 1040 for the year you sell your home.

If the IRS questions your return, present the records and estimates you have of your costs, including those pictures. It's unlikely the revenuers will give you a bad time. Problems such as yours are commonplace.

Q: You wrote that inherited property "passes free" of capital gains tax. Does that apply to inherited rental houses or just to your residence?

I inherited a number of rental houses, then sold some and paid capital gains tax.

A: That rule currently applies to all inherited capital assets, including your residence, rental and investment property, stocks and bonds.

When you inherited those rental houses, their basis — cost for tax purposes — "stepped up" to the value placed on them when the estate was settled. That was either the houses' value on the date of death of the person who left them or on an alternate valuation date.

When you sold, the difference between the basis and the proceeds from the sale was your taxable capital gain. For your sake, let's hope you didn't make the mistake of paying capital gains tax on the entire proceeds from the sale.

Q: I am considering selling some property but am worried about the tax I will have to pay. How severe is the federal capital gains tax?

A: It's 15 percent if you are in the 15 percent federal income tax bracket and 28 percent if you are in the 28 or 31 percent brackets.

These rates are levied on long-term capital gains — profits from the sale of capital assets held for more than one year. On short-term capital gains, the tax bite is the same as on ordinary income, either 15, 28 or 31 percent.

FTC charges credit bureau in mail crime

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission charged a major credit bureau on Tuesday with illegally using its credit records to help telemarketers and direct mail operations.

The FTC alleged that Trans Union Corp. used "sensitive, federally protected" credit information from its consumer reporting database to compile the lists for clients "for purposes not permitted under the law."

The company has advertised its lists in direct marketing publications, the FTC said.

The FTC also reached a settlement with another of the three major credit bureaus — TRW Inc. — that would allow the firm to make lists from its records as long as it does not reveal any information about individual credit relationships, credit worthiness or behavior of the consumer.

In a statement issued from its Chicago headquarters, Trans Union denied the FTC charges. "Trans Union does not sell credit reports or direct marketing purposes, and it does not release any confidential credit data or similarly sensitive information on consumers to direct marketers," the company said.

The Fair Credit Reporting Act allows a credit reporting bureau to release consumer information:

—In response to a court order.

—In accordance with the consumer's written instructions.

—In connection with extension of credit or a loan.

—For employment purposes.

—To underwrite insurance for the consumer.

—To determine the consumer's eligibility for a government license or benefit.

—To someone with a legitimate business interest relating to a transaction initiated by the consumer.

The FTC said Trans Union, however, regularly provides lists of consumers who meet certain criteria to credit grantors, but fails to require that those grantors make a firm offer of credit to each person on the list as required by the federal law.

Trans Union said it only sells non-credit information, such as names and addresses of consumers, to companies that are required to make firm offers of credit to those listed.

The credit bureau also provides lists of consumers to clients that "intend to use the information for purposes not permitted" under the law.

The case will go to an administrative law judge.

The proposed settlement with TRW still requires court approval.

Endeavour shoots into orbit on 1993's first shuttle flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Endeavour rocketed into space Wednesday on the year's first shuttle flight, and the five astronauts promptly released a communications satellite.

"There she goes!" crewman Mario Runco Jr. said as the satellite drifted from the cargo bay six hours into the mission.

The astronauts also planned a toy show and spacewalk and got a chance to use a new $23 million toilet.

NASA's newest shuttle lifted off its seaside pad into a hazy sky at 8:59 a.m., just seven minutes late because of extra computer checks. The climb to orbit took the usual 8½ minutes, and Endeavour soon was cruising 184 miles high.

"It's a good ride up, and Endeavour and the crew are glad to be back in space," commander John Casper said.

The six-day mission is the third flight of Endeavour and the 53rd shuttle mission overall. NASA plans eight missions this year, the same as 1992, the busiest year since the Challenger disaster.

"We're off to a good start in 1993," deputy shuttle director Brewster Shaw said. "We're one for one on safe and successful launches and one for one on the date that we set at the flight readiness review."

The crew's first, and primary, task was to eject the $200 million Tracking and Data Relay Satellite from the cargo bay. Shortly after deployment, an attached rocket was to propel the 2½-ton satellite into a 22,300-mile-high orbit.

"It's important to America because it's going to add to our capability to have communications with our spacecraft, shuttle included," Shaw said.

The job was considered routine. Astronauts have placed TDRS satellites in orbit four times before: the first in 1983 and the last in 1991.

One Tracking and Data Relay Satellite was destroyed when Challenger exploded shortly after liftoff in 1986.

NASA plans to keep the newest TDRS craft in reserve until needed. Only two of the first four satellites are fully usable.

The TDRS network allows astronauts in space to communicate with Mission Control, and vice versa, more than 85 percent of the time. Before TDRS, contact was possible only when spaceships were in sight of ground-tracking stations, just 15 percent of the time.

The satellites also link scientific satellites, such as the Hubble Space Telescope, with ground controllers.

The next major event of Endeavour's mission occurs Friday, when the astronauts pull out an assortment of toys for a televised lesson. They will chat with students at four elementary schools — the schools they attended as children — while demonstrating how balls, cars and magnetic marbles behave in weightlessness.

Official: U.S. needs diplomatic foresight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State-designate Warren Christopher said Wednesday the United States needs a "new diplomacy" that foresees and heads off crises like those in Iraq, Bosnia and Somalia rather than merely reacts to them.

"We cannot afford to careen from crisis to crisis," Christopher told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee at his confirmation hearing.

At the same time, Christopher stressed that President-elect Clinton and his national security advisers "stand shoulder-to-shoulder" with the Bush administration on the issue of Iraq. Clinton "will insist upon the unconditional compliance with the U.N. resolutions," Christopher said. His remarks came before the U.S. attack on Iraq.

The committee session covered current foreign policy problems, the nominee's role in negotiations to free U.S. hostages held in Iran in 1980 and his knowledge of Army spying on civilians in the 1960s.

Christopher acknowledged in a prepared statement that he knew the Army was spying on civilians in the 1960s, and maintained that was not at odds with his testimony to Congress at a 1977 confirmation hearing.

Christopher said that what he had denied 15 years ago was knowing about covert Army infiltration and interference with anti-war and civil rights groups, not about the Army's broader intelligence collection aimed at dissidents during the time he was deputy attorney general in 1968.

Democrats said the issue raised legitimate questions but did not present any concerns. Republicans did not mention the issue during the morning question-and-answer session.

Food additive may reverse blood disease

BOSTON (AP) — Injections of a common food additive can reawaken a dormant gene and relieve the underlying cause of sickle cell anemia, perhaps providing the first simple and safe treatment for the inherited illness, researchers say.

More testing will be necessary to prove that it actually reverses the symptoms of the deadly disease, which afflicts 50,000 to 100,000 black Americans. But researchers say they already have evidence it can entirely correct thalassemia, another lethal blood disease caused by a similar genetic defect.

The treatment is butyrate, a natural substance widely used as a flavor enhancer. When eaten, it has no effect. But injected into the bloodstream, it turns on a gene that ordinarily shuts down before birth.

The gene makes the fetal form of hemoglobin. When called into service later in life, it replaces adult hemoglobin, which is defective in both diseases.

The treatment is still considered highly experimental. Experts cautioned that much more study is needed before it is given outside carefully controlled studies.

In their initial testing, doctors gave the drug for two- to three-week periods to three young people with sickle cell anemia and three with thalassemia.

"The results are very exciting and dramatic. In every case, the patients treated for even this short period of time achieved levels of fetal hemoglobin that would be predicted to completely alleviate their disease," said Dr. Douglas V. Faller of Boston University Medical School.

The injectable form of the medicine is now made only in tiny quantities by Dr. Susan P. Perrine at Children's Hospital in Oakland, Calif.

The researchers said their work is slowed because they cannot interest pharmaceutical companies in taking over production of the medicine; it would not be profitable enough.

"It's purely economics. It's not racism," said Faller.

Added Perrine: "They want to make 100 to 200 million dollars profit a year, or they won't make something. Some thought they might make 100 million, but they prefer to make more."

Perrine and Faller developed the treatment.

Faller said that even though only six people were tested, the results are important and highly encouraging because the drug produced such a dramatic increase in the patients' levels of healthy hemoglobin.

Dr. Kwaku Ohene-Frempong of Children's Hospital in Philadelphia, president of the National Association for Sickle Cell Disease, called the study "very encouraging news."

Fashion world being lead by younger designers

By Linda Gillan Griffin
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — U.S. fashion, like U.S. government, is undergoing radical changes, and in both areas recently, torches passed to the next generation.

Already historians claim that when the reins of government are handed to Gov. Bill Clinton next week, U.S. citizens probably will never again elect a president born before World War II. Abrupt change is also sweeping Seventh Avenue, where it is likely we will never again see U.S. fashion direction set by any designer born before World War II. And indeed, here, even designers in the baby boomers age bracket are practically old guard.

The new agenda on Seventh Avenue appears to be "lead, follow or get out of the way."

"It's similar to the change going on in government," said Kalman Ruttenstein, senior vice president, fashion direction, at Bloomingdale's. "Out with the old, in with the young."

The hot tickets for the spring '93 collections were not to shows by the likes of Bill Blass, Geoffrey Beene, Carolina Herrera or Bob Mackie. Mackie, whose Las Vegas-style extravaganzas have for several years been glittering don't-miss occasions, had no show at all.

And Beene, whose clothing is usually discussed in awed tones reserved for works of art, hung his styles on wooden mannequins at New York's School of American Ballet in Lincoln Center and piped in recorded clomp-clomp sounds of ballerinas at work.

AN ECONOMY in recession dictated seasons ago that Blass and Herrera return to unveiling their collections in their own showrooms. Oscar de la Renta now shows first in Paris; his protege Carolyne Roehm left the ready-to-wear business.

"This spring season separates the pros from the novices, and some of the pros may be only 20 years old," said Ruttenstein. "These clothes are not about suits and stiff tailoring. They're new. They have attitude and individuality. We're not saying we're into grunge, but all the fit and stiffness will be gone."

Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein, Betsey Johnson, Louis Dell'Olio for Anne Klein and even Donna Karan are now interpreting fashion as dictated by younger designers, interpreting for their particular customers rather than setting styles.

"We're looking more and more for direction to the young designers, to people who go to clubs and listen to new music and interpret what they see there. It's fresh. It's change," said one major retailer's fashion director who did not want her name used. While the old guard of designers may not be setting the styles, they still remain designers to the women who spend the most money on fashion.

Surprisingly, it was the German-born wunderkind Karl Lagerfeld who broke with tradition, bringing street fashion — rap's crazy caps, boots, T-shirts, leathers and peace pendants — into the revered house of Chanel in Paris several seasons ago. U.S. designers followed suit.

NOW YOUNGER designers are bringing grunge dressing to high fashion, as well as leading the way in the trend of retro hippie styles. Avant-garde Paris designer Martin Margiella broke new ground a year ago with his collection shown in a Salvation Army shop. But grunge style has its roots in U.S. thrift shops, the current movie "Singles" (set in Seattle), and the wave of new music, led early on by Sonic Youth and REM who influenced today's hottest Seattle music groups — Nirvana and Pearl Jam.

To picture grunge dressing, visualize outfits worn on "Northern Exposure" dressed down — in other words, grungy. The heart of grunge is an I-don't-care-what-I-wear attitude, and while there are no written tenets, informal guidelines call for oversized plaid shirts, old rock T-shirts, over- or undersized trousers, stocking caps, wide belts, outrageous socks and clompy shoes or boots. Dresses are flimsy, maybe layered, and generally anything and everything wrong will be just right. Jackets should be shorter than shirts, pants falling off the hips or chopped above the ankle, hems droopy and below mid-calf. Jewelry — any old kind, but especially long strings of love beads and socially correct pendants — is globbed on.

A number of young Seventh Avenue designers successfully translated this look to the runways. Marc Jacobs layered mismatched pieces in his collection for Perry Ellis. Christian Francis Roth, who strolled onto his own stage to flail away at an electric guitar, pieced together various thermal and sweatsuit fabrics and continued his patchwork theme of mixing several plaids or stripes.

ANNA SUI, now the darling of upscale Fifth Avenue fashion retailers, mixed stripes and plaids with what seemed like wild abandon. And Todd Oldham, under the guise of an at-the-fair theme, turned the runway into a midway jumble of stripes, foulards and medallion prints and lavish beading.

Nicole Miller, Randolph Duke, Jennifer George, Michael Kors, Mark Eisen and the teams of Badgley-Mischka and Isani contributed mainly updated hippie looks. Layering of pieces is the key; sheerness and bareness is the sizzle. Three layers are minimum; four are better — bra or bandeau top, maxi-length vest, shorter coat and a pair of trousers or a long panel skirt.

While nearly every skirt that came down New York runways for next spring was long (often below midcalf or to the ankle), panel skirts are in a class by themselves. Slit from the hem up into four or more sections, panel skirts usually unveil the legs to thigh level.

The other choice designers offered was pants — full-legged pajamas, bell-bottoms, stretchy leggings or short-shorts, the latter now being called everything from hot pants to tiny trousers. Even Herrera, who has long dressed the likes of Jacqueline Onassis and the ladies who lunch, showed bell-bottoms.

And on the subject of ladies who lunch, with the first blades of spring grass, the typical luncheon suit will look as stiff and unappetizing as last week's porridge.

IT REMAINS to be seen if older designers can keep up with the young pace being set on Seventh Avenue. Blass is showing suits with tricky little pockets that extend out past where the lapels would be — if there were lapels — and button trims. But he does have some of the key elements of grunge — checks, plaids, stripes and layering, only not in the de rigueur manner.

Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein and Dell'Olio's designs are less uptight, even beautiful, with sheer chiffons, gauzes, long printed dresses instead of jacket, silk drawstring pajamas, unconstructed layers and fine embroideries. Sophisticated yet hip style, softened for their special interest groups.

Pantsuits, with or without Nehru collars and bell-bottoms, will replace the little luncheon suits for spring. And loose, print, princess or high-waisted dresses, reminiscent of Londoner Mary Quant's designs of the '60s and '70s, will be dolled up with gloves and platform shoes.

Grunge dressing is, of course, merging with hippie on Seventh Avenue, where already many aspects of the former Aquarian age abound. There are tribal and gypsy looks, including beads, fringe, macrame, head wraps and crocheted caps that come with their own braids attached. Vests, peasant blouses, poor boy knits, long columns of slinky jersey and nature-minded fabrics from burlap to raffia — everything "green" or groovy is new again.

Spring fashions awash in color, pattern

By Linda Gillan Griffin
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Some of Seventh Avenue's spring women's wear collections are awash with color and pattern, much more so than the hippie clothing that inspired many designers this season.

These particular fashions are rooted not in the '70s but in the world's art museums, in works by Matisse, Gauguin, Monet, Cezanne and Gaudi, but especially the Fauves. And the resulting fashions are much more sophisticated than anything that graced the likes of Twiggy or Mary Quant or the backs of the Beatles.

With the largest, most comprehensive Matisse exhibition ever hanging at the Museum of Modern Art, is it any wonder that much of the inspiration was from him? The mammoth MOMA exhibit, which ran through Tuesday, contained some 275 paintings and 125 sculptures, drawings, prints and paper cut outs. It was an extremely difficult and expensive show to amass.

The clothing inspired by Matisse's works, however, could be on display in closets a lot longer and for considerably less money than an original Matisse. Tom and Linda Platt, for example, offer brilliantly colored creations appliqued with designs like those Matisse once cut from painted paper. Stars, human forms, leaves — or are they amoebas? — jazz up the Platts' crisp suits, jackets and dresses. Red, white, black and golden yellow appliques splash across a jacket, meant to be worn with a simple black sheath, that will sell for approximately $1,000.

Many designers, both American and European, are showing bright colors and patterns in their 1992-93 spring/summer lines. This yellow dress over flower-printed skirt is part of the spring/summer ready-to-wear collection of Guy Laroche.

A ROYAL BLUE suit is punctuated with bright yellow star bursts and a red button. Because the Platts' basic designs are crisp and modern, they provide near-perfect palettes for the Matisse motifs.

'I guess it's not any different than an architect working solely in concrete.'
— Steve Fabricant, knitwear designer

Matisse began cutting out art in 1941 during a long convalescence from a serious operation. His health had earlier necessitated giving up painting, and eventually cutting the brilliantly painted papers was reported to have caused his eyesight to fail.

Many of the designs that inspired the Platts' fashions were first seen in the book "Jazz," which Matisse produced with Teriade, the publisher of Verve, in 1947.

Today many of the forms of his acrobats (the book "Jazz" was originally to be entitled Circus), swimmers and lush vegetation are familiar to the world, yet in the '40s, despite their simplicity, they were considered avant-garde. Perhaps the same might be said for the Platts' clothing, although their motto goes something like this: "Life is complicated; clothes should be simple."

Steve Fabricant, another Seventh Avenue designer who works almost exclusively in knits — "I guess it's not any different than an architect working solely in concrete" — has turned out several sheaths of four-ply crepe for spring, sheaths that feature black figures and matte gold sequin motifs a la Matisse.

Arnold Scaasi, in his Scaasi Boutique collection, showed Matisse-inspired evening clothes in bright blues, yellows and purples.

In other clothing as art renderings, the Isani collection contains a group of "water color knits" in impressionistic sea foam, sand and sky with stripes and floral prints. Nicole Miller does a tribute to Gaudi, the Italian master of mosaics, with her silk georgette print. And Randolph Duke does his "Fauve thing" with wild color mixes.

DUKE'S GERANIUM silk burlap jacket tops a persimmon silk burlap slit dress; in another ensemble, he mixes persimmon, tangerine and orange sienna; and in still another, pea green and tobacco. He calls his particular shade of blue "Monet," his orange "Gauguin" and his purple "Cezanne."

Marc Jacobs' designs for Perry Ellis also include deft blends of colors — his water-color pastels — that remind the eye of impressionistic mixes.

Not all the artistic designs on the runways hail from artists, however. There are Steven Stolman's beaded Blue Willow plate and cup motifs on white linen suits and dresses, Todd Oldham's heavily beaded and em broidered tapestry skirts and ump teen versions of Oriental carpet prints. Kenneth Richards' simple but functional designs were inspired by the architect Frank Lloyd Wright.

DEAR ABBY

Low-key is right style for wedding on second time around

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Last June I was married in a beautiful church wedding. It was a big mistake, and we were divorced five months later.

Van Buren

Since my divorce, my first true love has contacted me, and he wants to marry me. Abby, I have been in love with him since my teens, and his proposal of marriage has always been my dream. He's stationed overseas and will be coming home in April. We want to get married as soon as he gets back.

My question: Would it be appropriate for me to have another formal church wedding and wear the wedding gown I own? Please answer soon. — IN LOVE IN WEST VIRGINIA

DEAR IN LOVE: Since you recently had a formal church wedding, I would recommend a more intimate, low-key ceremony this time. And I would not wear the same wedding gown.

DEAR ABBY: Before Thanksgiving, I read your column about Operation Dear Abby, and thought it would be a good project for my French National Honor Society, so I encouraged my students to write letters. The Honor Society paid the postage.

Abby, we sent five huge manila envelopes filled with letters on Nov. 25 — one to each address you printed. Yesterday, Dec. 7, one of my students received a response! Everyone in the class was excited and reassured to know that our letters had reached their destinations. The "thank-yous" from the soldiers gave us all a wonderful feeling.

Thank you for organizing Operation Dear Abby. The warm feelings generated on the sending side are as important as those on the receiving end. — KATHY POHNDORFF, RICH EAST HIGH SCHOOL, PARK FOREST, ILL.

DEAR KATHY: Thank you for the "thank you." Operation Dear Abby has been a gratifying project for many years. You and your students are to be commended for participating in this patriotic effort.

Unhappily, however, this year I have heard from a few readers saying they had sent packages and thus far had had no response. Apparently, not all the mail has yet made it to its destination. My apologies.

DEAR ABBY: A while back, you had a letter in your column concerning a young woman who bought stock on a tip from a young man who "makes his living on Wall Street." The stock went down, and he offered to buy it from her so she wouldn't suffer the loss. She turned to you for advice, and you told her to take him up on his offer.

Wrong! It is a violation of the rules of the National Association of Securities Dealers — the self-regulatory agency of brokers and dealers — as well as the New York Stock Exchange, for any employee or a broker/dealer to take part in the profit or loss of a customer. The poor guy would be compounding his problems if he bought the stock, no matter how bad he feels.

The young woman's best recourse is to file an arbitration against the friend and his firm for causing her to buy an unsuitable investment. Unfortunately, this may not work if the brokerage firm can prove that it wasn't "unsuitable."

As a former broker and owner of a brokerage firm, and an investor, the only rules I can offer to avoid this kind of situation are: (1) Never take a tip from anyone; and (2) Don't deal with friends where money is concerned, unless you are prepared to lose both your money and your friends.

I know whereof I speak. After 22 years in the securities business, I have no friends left, and very little money. — ANONYMOUS IN FORT LAUDERDALE

DEAR ABBY: My son and I were invited to his little friend's fourth birthday party. They are neighbors, and we are new in town.

After the ice cream and birthday cake were served, the boy's mother took all the cards off the gifts and let her son open them without acknowledging who they were from, or even thanking the gift-givers.

I thought surely we would receive a thank-you note in the mail. No such note ever arrived.

Now, a month later, I received a telephone call from the boy's mother asking me where I had purchased the "shabbily made" toy so she could return it! I told her where I had bought the gift and apologized for the inconvenience.

Abby, I was very hurt and offended by the whole situation —especially because she and I were beginning to build a nice friendship. Am I wrong to feel this way? — WITH GOOD INTENTIONS

DEAR GOOD INTENTIONS: Your feelings are justified, but don't let this one unfortunate incident spoil what could be a good friendship. The woman's choice of words was poor, and she may be very insensitive, but overlook it in the interest of maintaining a good-neighbor policy. Your children will benefit by it.

What teens need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with peers and parents is in "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Decision against wearing contacts is farsighted one

By Erma Bombeck

My kids put contact lenses right up there with world peace and a car that runs.

Bombeck

They have never understood why I have not been baptized with saline solution when the rest of the population has been converted.

To me, there is little difference between wearing glasses and contact lenses. You just look for them in different places.

OK, so I wander around the house for hours searching under sofa cushions and in bathrobe pockets for my glasses. But no one ever stopped a basketball game to look for my glasses or torn plumbing apart to retrieve them. I've never been to a cocktail party where, when your glasses fall off, someone shouts, "Freeze!" while the disadvantaged person drops to his or her knees and runs fingers through the carpet.

The real reason I'm so stubborn about wearing contacts is that I can't stand the idea of poking myself in the eye with a piece of plastic. If God had meant for me to slipcover my eyeballs, he would never have given me a pain center.

My best friend was one of the first to buy contacts when they came out. We went to the restroom together one night, and I came out of the stall to find her on her hands and knees feeling around the baseboard. I didn't realize it at the time, but it is probably the reason why women go to the restroom in twos: one to lose her lenses and the other person to find them.

My kids live on the edge for their vanity. One of them was on a date one night when a drop of salsa flipped into his eye. He ran to the restroom, and in splashing water into his eye, flushed his contact down the drain.

They've inserted the left contact into the right eye and vice versa. They've walked around wearing only one contact because the other one is somewhere on the floor of the car when they stopped suddenly. They've grabbed the wrong solution and bounced off the walls with their eyes burning out of the sockets.

Health insurance, car insurance and home insurance are luxuries to my kids. Let the insurance on the contacts expire and they panic.

The only advantage I can see is that when I say, "Can't you see the dog wants out?" or, "Straighten out that rug you just squished," they reply, "I don't have my contacts in."

That line alone is worth all the fuss.

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

New styles have 'deja vu' look

N.Y. Times News Service

Fashion focused on Manhattan's Seventh Avenue recently, and it looks as if there will be more of the 70s mania that swept the spring shows in Milan and Paris. Bare midriffs, bell bottoms and long straight hair won't be the whole picture, but there is a trend to soft fabrics and lines. Even a designer like Richard Tyler, known for hard-edge tailoring, has loosened up.

Tyler, an Australian-born designer with headquarters in Los Angeles, recently opened a New York showroom.

The spring collection is in soft viscose and crepe fabrics with Western touches like contrast stitching and embroidered cowboy figures. There are a few nods to the 70s: a sleeveless tunic with a Nehru collar worn over chiffon pants that flare at the hem, short vests that bare the midriff and a silk-fringe wrap skirt that was tie-dyed with coffee.

Before designers became enamored of the 70s, they looked to the 60s for inspiration. One signature of the era was the multicolored Pucci print, which enjoyed a big revival in 1991.

Pucci put on its first New York fashion show recently, presided over by Emilio Pucci's daughter, Laudamia, who runs the Italian company with her brother, Alessandro.

The prints are combined with solid-color pieces. "That's the way people dress today," she said. The main print is African-inspired, in shades of orange, yellow, khaki, burgundy and blue with black and white. "We're using neutral colors," she said. "I don't believe everybody likes strong prints or knows how to wear them."

Furnace Problems?
Which Company To Call? Get It Repaired Today!

Hourly pricing for service work is the most accurate pricing because it eliminates the overcharging of flat rate pricing. The only way a company can make money with a guaranteed pricing book is to have inflated prices on parts and labor because they have to protect themselves against lost time.

A customer should not worry about a commission given to a service technician or not, if the price they are paying is in line with other companies. We personally have always been leary of companies that will not break down the parts and labor prices to let the customer know the price of each.

We have always given an estimate on repairs before starting the job. A qualified technician should be able to accurately give the estimate thereby not costing the customer two or three hours extra labor. The customer should always ask about how long it should take for the repairs and hold the service tech to that time unless other problems occur.

Guaranteed pricing or flat rate pricing may actually cost the customer more if the same class of technician does the work as an hourly technician because of the cushion built in the flat rate pricing.

There is not a problem to solve if you call our company because our rate for the first hour is less than the diagnostic charge of a flat rate pricing company.

We carry a stock of parts in my truck and we never charge the customer for hard-to-find parts. This is not difficult to keep up with because the customer is only charged for the time we are on the job.

ALLIES BLITZ IRAQ

Bombing mission over Iraq 'beautiful' sight, pilot says

By Neil MacFarquhar
Associated Press writer

ABOARD THE USS KITTY HAWK — The deck of this aircraft carrier in combat Wednesday night swarmed with movement like an ant colony, with the reflective tape of the deck crew and pilots' helmets giving off the only light.

With an ear-numbing roar and acrid fumes, 35 planes revved their engines and catapulted into the darkness — as many as three per minute.

Four hours later they were back, the pilots talking excitedly about the colorful explosion patterns, the orange spray of harmless anti-aircraft fire as bombs and missiles hit their targets — radar stations at Tallil air base near Nasiriyah and at Najaf, Samawah and Amarah.

They brought back videotape from the cameras bolted under the wings of their planes. The film showed eruptions of big black pods of smoke in southern Iraq.

"Beautiful, beautiful, a lot of flashes from the triple-A (anti-aircraft artillery). My adrenalin was flowing," said Lt. Cmdr. Michael Shea, 32, of Atlantic Highlands, N.J., pilot of an AE-6B Prowler, an aircraft that specializes in electronic jamming.

At least four surface-to-air missiles were fired at the U.S. planes. But the Iraqis did not use radar to target the missiles.

They fired at random in hopes of getting the pilots to dive so they would run into the flak, said Cmdr. Kevin Thomas, 39, commander of an F/A-18 Hornet squadron.

"His radar don't exist here anymore," said Capt. Michael J. McCamish, 28, of San Diego, who commands all aircraft on the carrier. "They've been turned from pieces of machinery to small pieces of metal."

The pilots said they made double passes over their targets to make sure they hit the right ones and were crippling Saddam Hussein's ability to maneuver in the skies in southern Iraq.

"This takes out his ability to control his aircraft below the 32nd parallel," added Thomas, of Bernardsville, N.J. "It was like a big laser light show."

"You could see all the bombs going off. Each was a big flash." said Lt. Cmdr. Steve Boss, 29, of Lemoore, Calif., an F/A-18 pilot. "Seeing the HARM missiles slide off the plane was like watching a Roman Candle."

The HARM, or high-speed anti-radiation missiles, homes in on the radar beacon emitted from the ground. It is supposed to destroy the beacon with a 40-pound warhead.

None of the pilots took hits during their missions Wednesday, said Rear Adm. Philip J. Coady, commander of the 10-ship Navy task force in the Persian Gulf.

The planes began screaming off the deck at 6:45 p.m. (9:45 a.m. CST). Dispatches written by reporters were held up until the planes left Iraq airspace after their missions.

The air crew wore 25-pound flight suits to keep their organs and bones in place, since up to seven times their body weight pushes against them when they launch.

The pilots took along extra water and chewing gum or candy for the missions. Each also had a .45-caliber handgun and "blood chits."

The chits are pieces of paper printed with an American flag and messages in Arabic and Farsi promising rewards for hiding any flier shot down. Name tags and other Velcro patches are removed before flying off the carrier.

For the Gulf War veterans, it was a little easier this time. They knew the main threat against them was anti-aircraft fire. They were not planning to fly too close.

Due to bad weather over the target, the attack was scrubbed Tuesday night.

Bombs left on the aircraft overnight started to look like New York subway cars. Deck workers covered them with graffitti in chalk or black magic marker:

"No deposit, no return," "2,000 poounds of American anger," "Happy 2nd Anniversary Saddam."

Airman Alexander Washington, 20, of New York City, said he disliked loading bombs.

"It's against everything I was brought up with. I was brought up to love others," he said.

He used chalk to scrawl across the rugged green metal of a 1,000-pound bomb: "If there was peace on earth then I'd be out of a job."

Fort Hood troops head for Kuwait

FORT HOOD (AP) — With a Desert Storm veteran in command, about 1,000 Fort Hood soldiers prepared Wednesday night to fly to Kuwait in the wake of U.S. air strikes on Iraq.

"As you can see, Fort Hood soldiers are on the move again," said Lt. Gen. H.G. "Pete" Taylor, commander of the sprawling post in Central Texas.

"We are going in there to train," Taylor told reporters at the post's entrance after the Pentagon announced the deployment. "But we are prepared to do anything."

Asked if the troops would move into Iraq, Taylor said that while their deployment was obviously connected to Wednesday's air strike, "they are going into Kuwait. There are not plans that I am aware of to go further than Kuwait."

The deployment will begin before Friday morning, he said.

For many soldiers, like Staff Sgt. Clifton Kersaw, the drill of making out a will and updating immunizations is nothing new. Kersaw also took the opportunity to update his power of attorney.

"I'm playing it safe and getting it renewed," he said Wednesday night as hundreds of soldiers paraded before several tables set up in a base gymnasium.

Kershaw, 33 of Sumter, S.C., spent six months in Saudi Arabia — from October 1990 to April 1991 — during Operation Desert Storm. He's less than enthusiastic about the new deployment.

"I'm disappointed," said Kershaw, whose daughter Valerie Celestine was born on Christmas Day. "I'd like to spend more time with her."

Staff Sgt. James Window, 27, of Daytona, Fla., also is making a second trip to the region. The eight-year veteran will serve as a combat medic.

"If we go this time, we should finish what needs to be done," Window said.

The 1st Cavalry Division was involved in retaking Kuwait from Iraq in Desert Storm and some returned last summer and fall for Intrinsic Action training maneuvers. About 300 1st Cavalry soldiers remained.

"I don't take lightly sending any soldier into a place where he might be placed in harm's way, I can assure you of that, and we assure them that we are going to take good care of their families that are staying back here at Fort Hood as we have done in the past," Taylor said.
