Monahans site a finalist for research plant

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

A site near Monahans is one of five, and the only Texas site, being considered by the Department of Defense for a $130 million superconducting energy research project, it was announced Tuesday.

The other four finalists are the Hanford nuclear reservation; White Sands, N.M.; a site near Orogrande, N.M.; and Madison, Wis.

Jerry Cash, manager of the Monahans area for TU Electric, said, "We're very excited about the project. We've been working on it for several months. And we've received a lot of support from smaller towns as well as the City of Monahans."

The project, called the Superconducting Magnetic Energy Storage Engineering Test Model, would essentially be a large underground battery for storing electricity.

Monahans was one of 14 areas bidding for the project, which had been narrowed to eight before Tuesday's announcement. The only other site in Texas submitted was a location near Lubbock, according to Cash.

Construction would take three years and create 200 construction-related jobs. After completion, the project would create 20 to 30 new permanent jobs with an annual budget of $5 million.

Cash said the project would benefit not only the Monahans economy but the Permian Basin, because "any project of this magnitude will use workers from all over the area." He added that it could also serve to draw similar projects to the area.

San Francisco-based Bechtel Corp. and EBASCO are the two contenders for general contractor on the project, and Cash said local officials have been working closely with Bechtel.

The project has two purposes. The Defense Department wants to use the model to test whether it can store enough energy to power an advanced laser and defense system in space as part of the Strategic Defense Initiative, or "Star Wars."

Meanwhile, the Electric Power Research Institute, which will help fund the project, is interested in its storage and line-stabilization applications.

Cash explains that, from the utility standpoint, the project offers the potential for a major breakthrough in energy storage technology.

"This project, if the technology does what we think it does, would give us the capability to store large amounts of energy, which would be beneficial all the way to the customer."

For example, he noted, if a power generator shut down, TU could draw down stored energy to supply customers while the generator is being repaired. Storing energy could also lower costs not only for TU Electric but its customers.

The project needs to be located near a major electricity-generating grid, such as the station located near Monahans. TU Electric serves nearly a third of the state, Cash added.

And since Monahans is the only Texas site, Cash said support has already been received from elected officials such as U.S. Rep. Larry Combest and Sen. Phil Gramm.

The Department of Defense is expected to award its contract sometime in late 1990.

Sweetwater's emergency plan didn't come into play

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

SWEETWATER — This town of fewer than 15,000 hearty souls was due for a potential disaster with a happy ending. It finally got one.

Rhodes

In just over three years Sweetwater, "it seems, has had more than our share of disaster," Mayor Rick Rhodes said early Tuesday afternoon.

When Byron Robertson's munitions-laden tractor-trailer rolled into the ditch on the city's south side just after midnight Tuesday morning, it could have been the beginning of a third black chapter in the history of a town once best known for its annual rattlesnake roundup.

Early on the morning of April 19, 1986, a tornado ripped across the southern part of the city, leaving a swath of destruction — one fatality and nearly 100 injuries — in its wake.

Then, on Aug. 12 last year, the "horrible tragedy" of a crash involving a Midland Boys' Club van and a tractor-trailer killed five Midland youths and injured 13 others.

"That one was particularly hard because there were kids involved and there were so many injured," recalled the mayor, leaning against his imposing desk and reflecting on the day's close call.

Single Mothers: Making it Work

Day care not simple issue

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

The economics of child care, while an expensive proposition, isn't the only issue making it many single mothers' greatest concern.

Latchkey children, once a novelty, have become commonplace in elementary schools.

In Part Four of five, this series examines the problem and what legislators in Austin and Washington are doing to address it.

It is, perhaps, the single most controversial issue brewing at both federal and state levels.

Call it child care.

Call it day care.

Call it an expensive proposition that could involve billions of tax dollars for years to come.

In Washington, D.C., U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, is getting ready for what could prove to be a nasty battle on the House floor.

The focus: congressional consideration of the Act for Better Child Care Services — better known as the ABC bill.

But according to Smith, there's more to the alphabet here than ABC — to the tune of $2.5 billion in fiscal 1989 alone if passed.

To his and other conservatives' liking is a Bush-supported tax credit plan that would provide $187 million in fiscal 1989 and $2.5 billion by fiscal 1993.

"Both bills address the need, but ABC is misdirected," says the congressman. "It eliminates choice. That's why the tax-credit bill appeals to me. It's open to anyone except those in upper-income groups."

Day care is not a new issue. As far back as 1974, a study conducted by the Women's Research Center of Boston noted: "Society tends to assume that the female will remarry and there is no necessity for providing day care."

Society may no longer think that way, but day care is still an issue — even in Midland, where single-working mothers find it difficult scraping together the cash that in many cases is a quarter of their monthly income. .

Day care isn't cheap. An informal, random survey of local child-care centers found an average cost of about $220 a month.

"If a mother of two is making $1,000 a month and child care is running about $500 ... you have to wonder how they do it. I do," says a mystified Tom Vermillion, a singles minister at Golf Course Road Church of Christ in Midland.

Vermillion and others interviewed for this series say Americans have definite misconceptions about day care.

While the finger usually points to poverty-level families, Vermillion says many forgotten in the shuffle include secretaries, assistant managers and parents who work night jobs. "What do you do about them?" he asks.

A 1988 introspective report on local community needs validates Vermillion's assessment. It concluded that countywide, 13.8 percent of 5,710 households were in need of child care for children four and under. "Approximately 7 percent of the households with this problem are single-parent households."

The report also identifies a second segment involving so-called "latchkey children" often in need of after-school care. The report concludes that single-parent and Hispanic households, particularly those in the southwest part of the city, face more intense problems with after-school care than any other target population.

The authors wrote: "Day care for many families is an essential part of economic well-being that allows families to avoid other, more costly services ... more than 15 percent of households need it."

"When you figure in rent, food, clothing and other unexpected expenses like a visit to the doctor, day care can get pretty expensive," remarks Griffin Jones, a singles minister at Temple Baptist Church in Odessa.

Jones says Temple Baptist is working on a plan to provide day care as part of its outreach to single parents.

"Some are fortunate enough to have families to leave their kids with, but most have to find day-care centers."

Just how imperative day care is to mothers of "latchkey children" can be seen in work productivity, according to Dr. Alice R. Redland, associate professor of nursing at the University of Texas at Austin.

Redland says studies have proven conclusively productivity tends to "decline" at about 3 p.m. each day as a working mom's attention begins to focus on the child arriving home rather than her work.

"One of the things I've discovered is that women with children six to 10 years of age are under more stress than women with children of all other ages," she says.

However, Redland sees a trend developing among employers to reorganize schedules — many use flextime or on-site day care to answer the problem.

"I tend to think it's harder on occupational groups, such as secretaries, because it's not something they look on as a career, but more something that they do."

GISD hopefuls concerned about keeping teachers

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Wrjter

ELECTIONS '89: Profiling the Issues

Finding a way to keep teachers in Greenwood Independent School District has played heavily on the minds of the two candidates vying for Place 1 in the district's only contested school board race.

Incumbent Vicky Moody and challenger Price Robinson agreed that GISD must make itself more attractive. GISD during the 1987-88 saw 25 percent of its 85-member teaching staff leave.

Ms. Moody, 32, suggested improving working conditions, offering more incentives and allowing teachers to take a more active role in GISD's education system.

"I don't have any specific answers," Ms. Moody said. "I don't think we'll ever get to the point of low turnover."

She said most teachers leave not because of poor morale, the geographic location or the quality of GISD but because their husbands are transferred to other cities.

Robinson, 30, said salary increases and more trustee and administrative support to teachers could decrease the turnover.

"If I was a board member I would show the administration and teachers support and let them do their jobs without any interference from me," Robinson said.

Although he has no children, Robinson, a detective sergeant with the Midland Police Department, said that having come from a home headed by two educators, he couldn't help but become interested in public schools. Robinson's father is superintendent of Marfa schools and his mother is a former teacher. His wife and two sisters also are teachers.

"Public education has been real good to me," Robinson said. "I think I can, as a board member, look out for all the kids. I think I can give a total overall view when deciding how to meet the needs of the children."

Ms. Moody, a computer operator with MI Drilling Fluids who has three children in GISD schools, said she is running so she can continue the work the board started during her three years as a trustee.

Chinese students vow new marches as ultimatum rejected

BEIJING (AP) — China's Communist leaders today rejected student protesters' ultimatum for recognition of their new independent unions, prompting students to promise yet another pro-democracy demonstration for Thursday.

The government also claimed unidentified non-students who oppose Communist rule have been advising student protesters from behind the scenes and suggested leading dissident Fang Lizhi might be one of them.

The accusation seemed to herald government action against liberal thinkers admired by the students, similar to the attacks on Fang and other leading independent intellectuals that followed student protests in 1987.

"Our protest tomorrow will show that Chinese democracy has arrived at a new stage," said student leader Wu'er Kaixi of the Beijing Normal College.

About 60 journalists for state-run newspapers announced plans for their own protest Thursday to express anger over press censorship, especially tight controls over what they have been allowed to say about student protests that began April 15 and are the biggest in 40 years of Communist rule.

The journalists said they would gather outside the official Xinhua News Agency. Most papers have been limited to printing only brief, understated Xinhua reports on the student protests.

Tens of thousands of Beijing students have joined in marches, sit-ins, pamphleteering and a class boycott to press their demands. Students in a half-dozen other cities have held smaller marches; some students in Tianjin and Shanghai have boycotted class.

Students said they had not finalized plans for their protest on Thursday, the 70th anniversary of China's first pro-democracy student protest.

"Tomorrow we shall carry out a great protest with the support of the people," Wu'er said. "May Fourth is a people's holiday."

Police said they would close central Tiananmen Square on Thursday, apparently in an effort to head off another demonstration there.

Last Thursday, about 150,000 students and their supporters broke through police lines into the square, China's symbolic seat of power.

Students from several other cities also said they planned marches Thursday in solidarity with the Beijing students' demands for a free press, an end to official corruption and other reforms.

Government spokesman Yuan Mu told a news conference that he hoped the students would not march, but that if they do "I hope and sincerely trust ... Those students will take precautions to ensure public order."

He refused to say exactly what the government would do if a march begins. Wu'er said the students would try to avoid a confrontation but would be prepared for one.

Yuan rejected the students ultimatum, delivered Tuesday, to hold a march unless the government recognized their new independent student association, the United Association of Beijing Universities, and agreed to talks with it.

He said the association and student unions set up on individual campuses are illegal.

"Behind the students are a very few people ... Trying to create social disturbances," Yuan said. "They try to accomplish during disturbances goals that they cannot attain in circumstances of political stability."

He stopped short of directly accusing Fang, an internationally renowned astrophysicist, of advising the protesters but he questioned Fang's patriotism:

"The role Mr. Fang wants to play in the current disturbances will be decided by his words and deeds."

Fang, who previously has called Marxism a failure and called for multi-party democracy, denied any involvement in the protests.

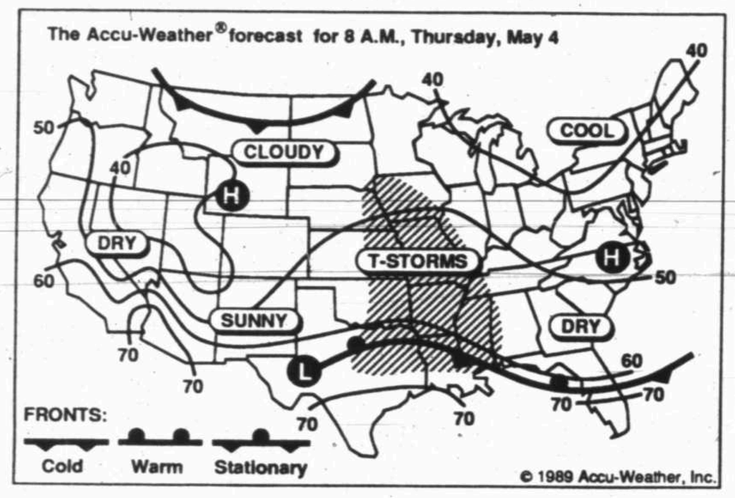

Yuan "knows I have never been to Tiananmen Square, never been to Beijing University in the last few weeks," he said.

Yuan said he "cannot discount the possibility" that some students also will be accused of illegal actions. However, he said the government believes most of the students are patriotic and "fully understands" their enthusiasm.

"At present the good and the bad are mixed together," he said. To make arrests now "would be too stupid."

"I believe that its the Chinese people who are 'manipulating' us and the Chinese people who are 'using' us," a student representative who met with officials to receive their response said sarcastically.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Low in upper 50s anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be partly cloudy tonight with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms in the forecast. The low will be in the upper 50s and winds will be out of the southeast at 5-15 mph.

Partly cloudy skies and hot temperatures will continue through Thursday with the high expected to be in the lower 90s and winds out of the south at 10-15 mph.

Tuesday's high of 94 was two degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 96 set for that date in 1965. The overnight low of 52 was 15 degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 37 set for this date in 1970.

STATE

Thunderstorms, many reaching severe levels and accompanied by high winds, hail, heavy rainfall and at least one tornado, rumbled across North Texas during the night and early today.

And forecasts called for more of the same with mostly cloudy skies expected statewide through Thursday with a chance of thunderstorms, including some that may be severe.

Lows tonight will be in the 50s and 60s.

Highs Thursday will be in the 70s and 80s.

A tornado was sighted late Tuesday between Dublin and DeLeon. Large hail was common across a vast area of the state. Baseball-size hail was reported near Ranger and Breckenridge, silver-dollar-size hail was reported about 17 miles west of Gatesville, a mobile home was overturned by high winds eight miles north of Copperas Cove and two possible funnel clouds were sighted between Hamilton and Evant in Hamilton County. There were numerous other reports of hail scattered over a wide area.

An intense thunderstorm roared through Tarrant County just before dawn today, dumping heavy rainfall and some hail over northern portions of Fort Worth.

A low pressure center located in New Mexico was being blamed for the foul weather.

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

Military personnel worked "fast and furious" to unload unarmed missles from the overturned flatbed trailer most of the day Tuesday on the south side of Sweetwater. Traffic was back to normal in both directions on Interstate 20 by about 2 p.m.

PLAN

Having been through those earlier tragedies better prepared the city's emergency rescue teams to respond to Tuesday's situation, Rhodes said.

"This was really the first time since the tornado that we've had to put our emergency plan into action.

"But everyone felt more comfortable working through things and were ready to do whatever was necessary," said the mayor of the small city about 110 miles east of Midland and 40 miles west of Abilene.

After the initial call at 2 a.m., when it appeared everything was "under control," military and Department of Public Safety officials considered evacuating an area as wide as a mile in every direction from the accident site. "That would have covered the whole south side of town," including Rolling Plains Hospital and a nursing home, Rhodes said.

"We had fire, ambulance and hospital units all ready in the event we had to evacuate those locations," he said.

After Army officials, flown in from Fort Sill, Okla., and Fort Hood, arrived with more complete information on the munitions and the hazard they posed, the potential evacuation radius was restricted to 1,000 feet.

However, that area still included Southside Elementary School, where 350 kindergarten through third-grade students would be expected on a normal morning.

"We felt it best to make the decision before the buses started running and, with evacuation still a possibility, decided it was better to not bring the students into the area if we might have to evacuate them again later."

Local Red Cross volunteers were on the scene early preparing to set up a shelter at the Nolan County Coliseum to house displaced persons in the event of an evacuation. But, "luckily" those preparations proved unnecessary.

By about 8:45 a.m., military officials had determined there was "no immediate danger of explosion." However, a seven-mile stretch of Interstate 20 remained closed to traffic in both directions until nearly 2 p.m. while Air Force personnel from Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene, working with U.S. Army explosives experts, moved the 48 Multiple Launch Rocket System (MLRS) components from the overturned truck.

The convoy carrying the off-loaded rockets arrived at Dyess by about 4 p.m. Tuesday, but close inspection of the payload by the Army and LTV Corp., which manufactured the weapons, was not expected to begin in earnest until this morning, according to Dyess spokesman Sgt. Al Dostal.

The extensive detour, utilizing the U.S. Highway 80 Business Route across the length of the city, was primarily to effect a "safe and easy traffic flow," said Rhodes. The DPS estimates an average of 14,000 vehicles a day — including 4,500 tractor-trailer rigs — travel I-20 through Sweetwater.

Rhodes speculated that up to 10 percent of the truck traffic — as many as 450 vehicles a day — could be carrying some form of hazardous materials through the city.

Oil field traffic — trucks hauling crude oil, acids and explosives — likely contributes to higher than average potentially hazardous payload volumes moving through West Texas towns along interstate highways, including Midland, he said.

Sweetwater's emergency response plans reflect this. "We have always considered some sort of mishap along the interstate as the most likely scenario.

"It would seem that Midland would be in a similar situation," Rhodes said.

The mayor had nothing but praise for the Army, Air Force and DPS response teams. "I was pleased to see the way they worked closely together," Rhodes commented.

"They were very sensitive to our concerns and needs ... safety was always the top priority, but they were careful to not overreact and evacuate large portions of the city, just for the sake of doing it."

HAZARD

A mishap such as Tuesday's — when a truck loaded with military explosives overturned — could escalate into a fireball, a toxic cloud or a rocking explosion, affecting thousands of Midlanders, according to local public safety officials.

Authorities in Sweetwater closed a seven-mile section of I-20 for more than 14 hours after the truck carrying eight rocket pods ran off the road and overturned. The driver, who suffered minor injuries, said he swerved to avoid a deer.

A veteran Department of Public Safety officer wasn't surprised by the mishap.

"We know there are an awful lot of hazardous materials that come through Midland," said DPS Lt. Jimmie Rhoads of the Midland office. "It goes all the way from a barrel of insecticide in the back of a pickup truck to a big tanker truck carrying hydrochloric acid."

Tuesday's incident appeared to have been handled smoothly, according to R.G. Edgerton, Midland's Emergency Management Coordinator.

"It was the standard operating procedure for the fire department and law enforcement to seal it off, then wait for the feds to come in and clean it up," Edgerton said. "That's what we would have done. The main thing you want to do is keep people out of trouble."

Edgerton said Tuesday's incident should not surprise anyone, with the highways carrying everything from gasoline to low-level nuclear waste.

"You are not really surprised, you just thank God it didn't happen in my backyard," he said. "It is not a question of 'if,' it is a question of 'when.' You have to be prepared."

A mass evacuation usually activates a city's emergency operations plan, a stage that wasn't reached in Sweetwater, Edgerton said. When an emergency — a killer tornado or hazardous waste spill — is too big for public safety officials to handle, the EOP will be activated, Edgerton said.

Most local agencies have their own emergency plan which supplements the EOP, Midland Fire Chief James Roberts said.

"We have a plan that supplements the emergency operations plan, and a section has to do with emergency procedures and hazardous materials," the chief said.

"The hazardous materials guideline does tell us what the first arriving units should do," Roberts said. "The number one thing is to stop and assess at a distance, if possible. And, to avoid driving in or near vapor clouds if there is a hazardous material involved."

The plan also details for on-scene fire commanders how to approach a spill or release of hazardous material, and what protective equipment to use. Firefighters also seek to identify the carrier as soon as possible so the responsible party — the military in the case of Tuesday's accident — can be contacted, Roberts said.

Emergency vehicle dispatchers have a "resource catalog" within reach at all times, listing contacts at various agencies, the chief added.

Hours after the Sweetwater accident, explosives experts inspected the scene and told state officials there was no danger, said DPS Sgt. Don Willingham.

The spilled rockets were being transported in "safe condition," which means they could only be fired electronically, said David Harris, public affairs officer for the U.S. Army Missile Command near Huntsville, Ala.

Even a heavy impact could not have detonated the missiles. The rockets undergo tests to avert such dangerous situations, Harris said.

The rockets were being transported from an LTV Corp. factory in Camden, Ark., to Concord, Calif., and ultimately were bound for South Korea, officials said.

Most drivers that haul loads of hazardous materials obey traffic regulations, DPS Lt. Rhoads said.

"The majority of our drivers are safe," Rhoads said. "I don't think the public ought to be alarmed."

According to Harris, it is "very common" for the military to use civilian common carriers to transport missile systems. Carriers must be certified by the U.S. Department of Transportation before they can haul military equipment, he added.

Roberts said he was "concerned" by the Sweetwater incident.

"I'm real concerned, and am always concerned that all steps be taken to protect everyone we can," Roberts said. "It's important that we have everything we can in place."

Hazardous materials are a fact of modern living, the fire chief said.

"These (hazardous materials) go up and down the highway all of the time," Roberts said, with emphasis. "All of the time. They have a very good safety record. Most industries are regulated by all kinds of municipal, state and federal laws. Most of the times you have an incident like this, it is human error."

Roberts does not advocate regulations to keep hazardous materials off public roadways — there are already hazardous materials routes in place — but he worries about potential dangers out there.

"I just don't know if any more regulations would do any good," Roberts said. "All the things we use daily in our lives are hazardous materials. Unfortunately the problems have multiplied like a pyramid because there are so many new materials we are using. Our world is such a complex and changing world. It is very expensive to plan, and have a plan for every possible thing that can happen.

"We probably have literally thousands of different materials moving down the highway," he said. "Handled appropriately, they are safe."

"I have spent a lot of time in the last three years working on the board," she said. "Nothing better prepares you for the board than being on the board."

Other than the turnover rate, no other major issues have surfaced during the campaign for two open GISD school positions. Incumbent Johnny Womack is running unopposed for Place 2.

Ms. Moody, though, said GISD curriculums should include a more diverse range of courses, especially in the areas of computer, foreign language and fine arts.

"Our schools should meet the needs of the kids in this community," she said, adding that classes should use computers as much as possible.

Robinson said that because of GISD's declining tax base, the district needs to be run more efficiently.

Ms. Moody praised GISD for its smaller schools, lack of severe drug and alcohol problems and heavy parent involvement.

"People move out here for the schools," she said. "There's nothing out here to draw you out here but the school district. But I don't want to rest on our past reputation."

Ms. Moody, a six-year Greenwood resident, serves extensively in her community and her school district. She teaches Sunday school at Greenwood Baptist Church and is involved in Ballet Midland and academic and athletic booster clubs.

"Any parent organization out here I'm pretty much in," she said, adding that she has only missed one school board meeting in her three years as a trustee.

Her education background includes 40 hours of accounting classes at Midland College.

Robinson, a five-year Greenwood resident, has a bachelor's degree in criminal justice and finance. He expects to receive his master's of business administration degree from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin within a year. He also has attended the national FBI academy.

He has served on the Midland County Child Welfare board of directors and volunteered for the Big Brothers/Big Sisters organization.

Six South Korean riot troopers killed, 10 hurt by radical students

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Six riot police were killed and 10 critically injured when they were set on fire by radical students today, and President Roh Tae-woo said he may impose emergency measures to end violent protests.

Roh said in a nationally televised speech the government is determined to end a wave of violent protests that has hit South Korea in recent weeks. He did not specify any action, but under the constitution he is empowered to rule by decree or impose martial law if he deems the nation is facing an emergency.

"If violence and illegal acts endanger democracy and the future of the country, I would be obliged to invoke emergency measures as empowered by the constitution," Roh said. Government officials said they expected no drastic action unless violence escalates.

Police said the officers were killed during a dawn raid on Dongui University in the southern Pusan as they attempted to break into a room on the seventh floor of the school library to free five officers being held hostage.

Militants set fire to a barricade drenched with paint thinner as the policemen were climbing over it, police said. Several officers, wrapped in flames, leapt out of windows while others were burned or asphyxiated, said police officials who declined to be identified.

National police headquarters in Seoul said it is the worst loss of police life in recent years. Police said some of the 10 policemen critically injured in the attack were expected to die. One student also was critically hurt.

All the hostages later were released unharmed after professors at the private college pleaded with students, police said, adding that 88 students were arrested for questioning.

National Police Chief Jo Jong-suk resigned. In South Korea, senior officials often resign to atone for a disaster even if it is not their fault.

Roh charged in his speech that radical students are trying to stage a violent revolution and declared the government is determined to crush radical opponents. "It has become clear that behind the flames that took the lives of young people, there are revolutionary groups which resort to violence to achieve their goals," he said.

Opposition parties also denounced the deaths today and called for an end to political violence.

Hundreds of radical students calling for Roh's overthrow battled riot police around at least two Seoul campuses today. Protesters cheered at Sungkyunkwan University when several policemen were set ablaze by firebombs, but colleagues quickly doused the flames and the officers were not hurt.

Arafat again says PLO charter has been 'superseded'

PARIS (AP) — PLO chairman Yasser Arafat today repeated his disavowal of the organization's charter calling for elimination of Israel, and government leaders indicated they were convinced of his sincerity.

Israel dismissed Arafat's statements as "rhetorical juggling," and hard-line PLO leaders expressed anger at the PLO chief's comments.

Arafat, in a radio interview, said the 1964 charter has been "superseded," presumably by the PLO's November declarations that renounced terrorism and implicitly recognized Israel's right to exist.

Asked why he did not simply say the charter was abrogated, Arafat said, "It's not up to me to say that. It's a decision that must come from the Palestine National Council." The council is the Palestine Liberation Organization's parliament-in-exile.

During a 90-minute meeting Tuesday, President Francois Mitterrand pointed out the contradiction between the November declarations and the charter.

In a television interview Tuesday evening, Arafat used the French word "caduc" to refer to the PLO charter. "Caduc" means outdated, or null and void.

Arab stabs two Israelis to death

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Palestinian shouting "God is great" stabbed to death two elderly Israelis waiting at a bus stop in downtown Jerusalem today, police said. Three other Israelis were seriously injured in the attack.

Dozens of angry passers-by chased the short, stocky assailant about 30 yards and caught him after a brief struggle. Police pinned the Arab to the ground in a nearby flower shop to protect him from the crowd.

Police said the man, a 25-year-old resident of the West Bank town of Ramallah, acted alone. Israel radio said the attacker was a former member of a Moslem fundamentalist group, and police said he had been questioned about unspecified "terrorist activities" in the past.

The attack came one day after PLO leader Yasser Arafat disavowed the 25-year-old PLO charter, which calls for the destruction of Israel. His announcement in Paris prompted protests from radical Palestinian factions.

The stabbings further escalated Arab-Jewish tensions in Jerusalem, already at a breaking point after 17 months of Palestinian rebellion against Israeli rule in the occupied lands. Nearly 460 Palestinians and 20 Israelis have been killed since the uprising began in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The stabbings occurred around 11 a.m. across from Jerusalem's main post office on Jaffa Road, the main shopping street in Jewish west Jerusalem.

Police reinforcements, including mounted horse patrols, rushed to the scene to control groups of angry Israelis who shouted "Death to the terrorists!" and "Death to the Arabs!"

About three hours after the stabbing, police fired tear gas to disperse dozens of followers of Rabbi Meir Kahane's anti-Arab Kach Party who shouted "revenge, revenge." The group was en route to the Western Wall, Judaism's holiest site.

Single Mothers: MAKING IT WORK

Senate Bill 155, as introduced by Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, contains a pilot program that would appropriate $1 million during the next two years to establish day-care programs within public schools for those that need it most — low-income families.

Senate Bill 913, sponsored by Sen. Hugh Q. Parmer, D-Fort Worth, would require local districts with school populations of 5,000 or more to hold a series of three public hearings to determine the need and availability of before- and after-school care.

Is there a state solution?

Senate debating two bills

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Day care hasn't escaped the watchful eye of Austin. Currently, two bills are pending in the state Senate which would provide day-care assistance with the help of local public schools.

"There's a lot of support out there for it. The people that are against it are those that are running day-care centers," says Machree Gibson, a legislative aide to Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin.

Barrientos has introduced Senate Bill 155 — a pilot program that would appropriate $1 million during the next two years to establish day-care programs within public schools for those that need it most — low-income families.

If passed, Gibson says local independent school districts could apply for the funds to set up their own centers, focusing on before- and after-school care for "latchkey children."

Barrientos' interest in before- and after-school care is rooted in his belief that many youngsters are developing poor educational skills without help at home, according to Richard Himner, another Barrientos aide.

A similar bill is being sponsored by Sen. Hugh Q. Parmer, D-Fort Worth.

S.B. 913 would require local districts with school populations of 5,000 or more to hold a series of three public hearings to determine the need and availability of before- and after-school care.

"We want this to be a local control issue," says Andy Homer, a Parmer legislative aide, "We don't think we need to have a state mandate here."

Homer says the bill — now in subcommittee — would also require the Texas Department of Community Affairs to distribute information on other model programs around the state to districts without existing care.

It also would require the state Treasury to establish a child-care service fund and provide an automatic-funding mechanism either through the appropriations process or other means.

Homer says the bill would allocate $500,000 in seed money for districts to set up care centers for school-age children, kindergarten through seventh grade.

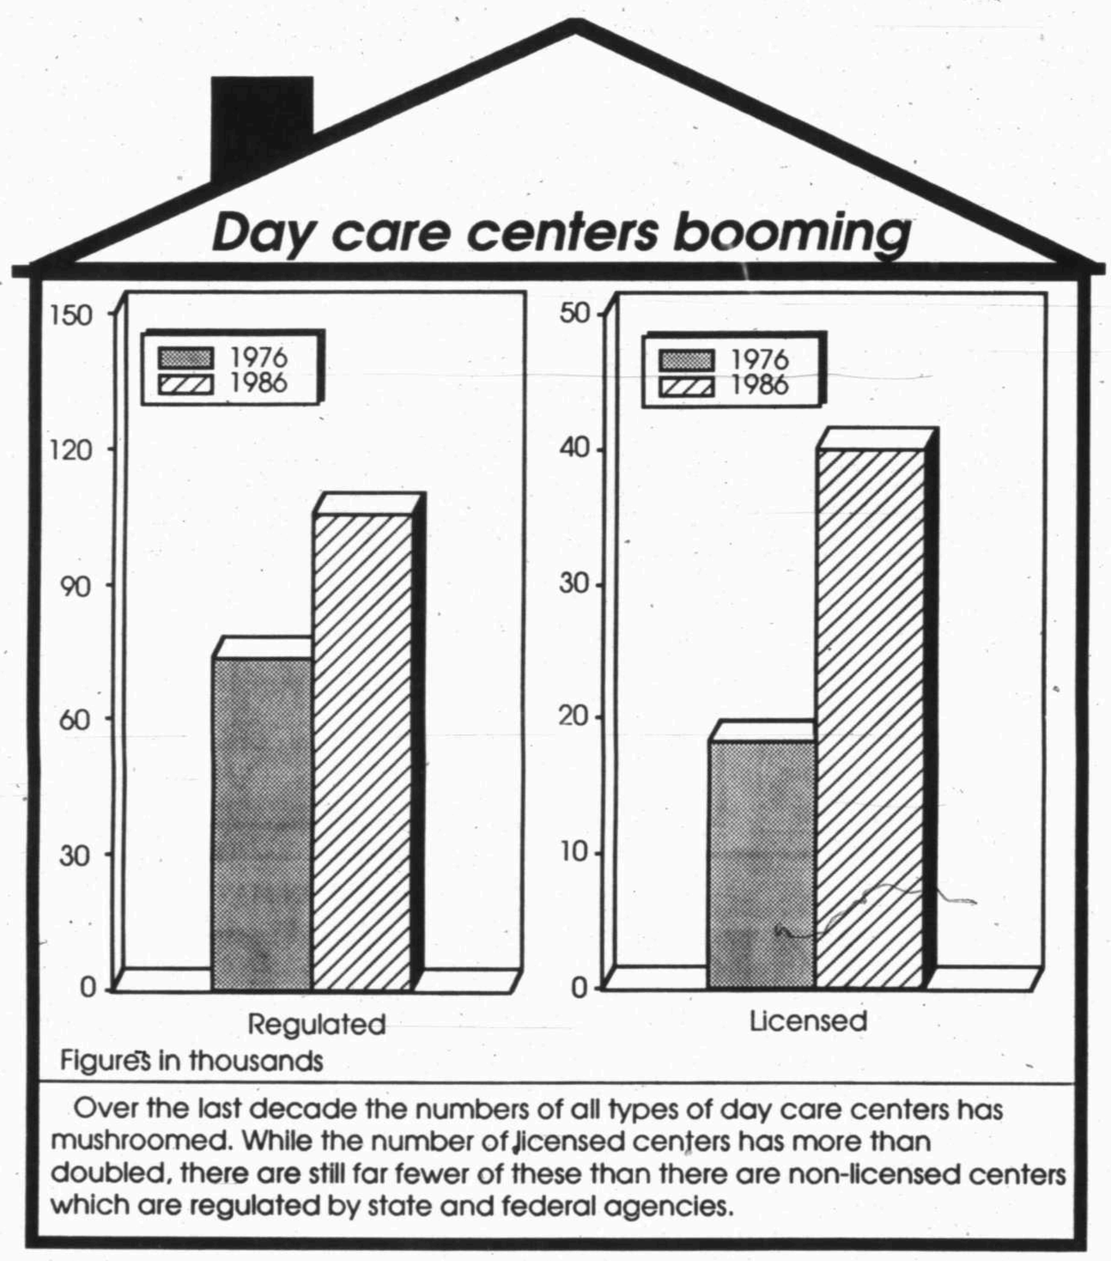

If a school district determines a definite public interest, it would apply for funds through the TDCA.

"If we don't take care of these children now, they're not going to be able to handle the burden when they become adults," says Homer.

Glenn Woods, coordinator for guidance and counseling at Midland Independent School District, is familiar with the current legislation.

Woods has his doubts about these programs.

"We're already in the process of allocating limited resources. This is just another area that would require additional funds for space and personnel."

Over the last decade the numbers of all types of day care centers has mushroomed. While the number of licensed centers has more than doubled, there are still far fewer of these than there are non-licensed centers which are regulated by state and federal agencies.

SOURCE: National Association for the Education of Young Children — Allen Howland/Reporter-Telegram

And that view is shared in Washington, D.C., as well, where opponents of the Act for Better Child Care Services, better known as the ABC bill, argue that school-based programs not only lack the resources, but could introduce academic pressures that are inappropriate for young children.

"It's not simply a question of opening space," says Woods. "To have an excellent child-care program, you need the personnel."

Woods says he sees two trends emerging. One suggests the family unit is staying together while the rate of divorce recedes; and a second that indicates more and more women are entering the workforce.

"As to what we'll (the district) do and which direction we'll take we just don't know yet."

While MISD keeps no comprehensive records on the number of single-parent children now enrolled, there is a definite concern about the problem.

Frank Marlow, MISD's director of elementary education, says the district has no immediate plans to establish before- or after-school care.

"We have enough trouble right now housing our regular programs."

However, he adds, "There's no question that a lot of people need the service. ... It is a problem."

Marlow says he's aware that many families — both two-parent and single-parent — must earn two incomes just to make it all work.

"I think the district is sympathetic to that. We know a lot of these kids are going home to an empty house at the end of the day."

For now, MISD is addressing the issue through a variety of remedial and anti-dropout programs as well as disseminating information on available local help for parents.

But if Parmer's S.B. 913 becomes law, local districts will have no choice but to hold public hearings and may have to establish before- and after-school care programs.

Woods says the district's prime concern is for the "at risk" populations who are likely candidates to leave school before their educations are completed. Last year, the district added seven elementary counselors to identify such groups and provide a support system.

MISD has identified 12 percent of its elementary enrollment as being at-risk students — 30 percent at the secondary level.

The district's current goal is to make younger students understand why they're in school and just how education will benefit them in the long run.

CARE: Now, it's essential service

So, what are the answers?

Congress believes it has a winner in ABC. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, by 1995 two-thirds of all preschool children and three-fourths of all school-age children will have mothers in the labor force.

Currently, the federal government spends about $4 billion a year on child-care tax credits for families, regardless of income, under the 1984 Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit program.

However, there is not a single coordinated, federal child-care system in the United States — a system such as proposed under ABC.

In a nutshell, ABC would authorize the expenditure of $2.5 billion for child-care services for children up to age 15, where family incomes fall below the median in their home state. The bill also addresses improving the quality of child care through training and licensing.

Both the House and Senate versions would allocate federal matching funds to states meeting certain requirements to provide care for low and moderate-income families.

According to the National Association for the Education of Young Children, about 40,000 licensed child-care centers operated in the U.S. in 1986, compared to just 18,307 a decade earlier.

In addition, the association estimates there are another 105,417 regulated family day-care homes — up from 73,750 in 1976.

But the ABC bill has been criticized by both Smith and others for providing assistance only to child-care providers that meet local, state and federal standards.

One concern is that unregulated providers — primarily in-home centers — would not be able to meet such standards and would be driven either "out of business" or "underground," resulting in fewer day-care options and other unlicensed care.

Under the current proposal, ABC funding would not apply to church or neighborhood-run facilities, which Smith says make up the bulk of day care in the U.S.

That finding was somewhat supported in a survey conducted by the National Council of Churches which found about one-third of all child-care centers nationally are located in churches.

Under the Bush tax-advantage concept, the congressman says parents would have a choice about where they want to send their kids, allowing them a $1,500 write-off per child based on a sliding income scale.

The bill also includes funding for pilot programs to extend part-day preschool programs to full-day programs and offer after-school child care in public school buildings.

Ironically, a similar bill is now being examined by the Texas Legislature. State Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, who chairs a committee on dropout reduction, is working with other lawmakers to develop before and after school child-care programs within the public school systems.

According to Machree Gibson, the senator's legislative aide, Barrientos' office is working closely with Sen. Hugh Q. Parmer, D-Fort Worth, who also is interested in state-funded care within the schools.

However, opponents both at the federal and state levels already are clamoring that public schools have enough to do and lack the space or resources to address day care.

Smith says he's certain President Bush will veto the bill the moment it crosses his desk. The congressman says the only way he would support ABC is if churches and neighborhood centers are incorporated.

"This bill is going to create a lot of debate over the next few months," he says.

West Germany becomes gambler

Leaders of the Western alliance describe it only as a difference over NATO arms control strategy, but the root of Bonn's new defense stance is rising nationalism in West Germany.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl reiterated to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher recently that his government opposes not only upgrading current short-range nuclear weapons, but it requests that NATO negotiate reducing those weapons with Moscow. A majority of NATO allies support upgrading such weapons to counter overwhelming Soviet superiority in conventional weapons.

German public opinion has been deserting Kohl's political policies for months. The Christian Democrats have lost two recent local elections and are likely to lose more. Kohl has dumped many of his programs and reshuffled his cabinet. Yet he continued to be unpopular until Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher convinced Kohl to call for new missile talks with Moscow.

Most West Germans now support such talks because they hope negotiations may lead to reunification with East Germany. They like the peace rhetoric of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev. The fact that Kohl's government could fall is certainly a major factor, and nationalistic policies will win him votes.

Many are growing tired and frustrated by the presence of allied and Soviet soldiers on German soil for more than 40 years. Some see all Germany as the grounds of potential nuclear holocaust. But their overriding yearning is nationalist and neither Genscher nor other Germans have hidden this feeling well. In fact, the foreign minister was born in what is now East Germany.

NATO members undoubtedly will get very tough with the West Germans when they convene at the end of this month. The Germans cannot act unilaterally. They also must be reminded about who sacrificed to help keep them free and democratic all these years.

The West Germans are trying to throw off the cloak of shame and horror with which they conducted themselves in World War II. It is reasonable that they should do so. But not because of some yet to be proven promises from a Soviet leader who has been on the scene a mere four years — and who could find himself out at any time, judging from Russian history. That may be a gamble as great as Hitler's peace pact with Stalin.

Another View:

Keep options alive

Faced with a defense budget that can't sustain the military program in the Pentagon's pipeline, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney had little choice but to move against an obvious target, the duplicative strategic weapons buildup launched by the Reagan administration. But his recommendation that President Bush cancel plans to develop a small intercontinental ballistic missile dubbed Midgetman, and instead move to deploy existing MX missiles on rail cars, was neither the best way to preserve deterrence nor save money. By deciding to keep alive the Midgetman, President Bush has preserved America's arms control options; by putting off Bush's request to put the MX on rails, Congress can now free up money for more important uses.

The idea of deploying the MX on rail cars is the latest in an embarrassingly long list of attempts to find a basing mode for the 10-warhead missile. Under the administration's plan, the 50 rail cars with MXs would be located ordinarily in garrisons on secure Air Force bases but would be dispersed on the nation's rail network in times of crisis. Under this option, which would cost an estimated $5.4 billion, the existing U.S. force of MXs, now in silos, would be given greater protection against attack in a crisis, although they would remain vulnerable to a surprise first strike.

That is certainly a cheaper way of closing the so-called "window of vulnerability" than developing and building 500 Midgetman missiles. But it does not address the problem of putting too much of the nation's strategic eggs in the MX basket. The Midgetman, a single-warhead missile to be mounted on its own mobile truck-launcher, was originally proposed in 1983 by a presidential commission headed by Gen. Brent Scowcroft, now President Bush's national security adviser, as a way to avoid the potentially destabilizing consequences of having both the United States and the Soviet Union deploy large numbers of their strategic weapons in mutually threatening forces of large, accurate, multiwarhead ICBMs. That problem would grow even more serious should the United States and Soviet Union reach a strategic arms control accord that sharply reduces the number of warheads each superpower can deploy.

Thus, Bush correctly recognized that it makes little sense for the United States to give up its Midgetman option before an arms agreement is reached. But if Midgetman remains an option, there is little reason to spend billions now to make the MX into a mobile missile. One arms control measure the administration is considering is a ban on basing large, multiwarhead missiles such as the MX and Soviet SS-24 on mobile platforms.

Having lived for a decade with the window of vulnerability, the United States can afford to wait another year or two, until the arms control picture is clearer, before setting about spending large sums on either project. By keeping alive both options but committing to neither, Congress can both ease the Pentagon's budget crunch and assure the United States' future ability to shape forces in line with the arms control agreements both superpowers say they want.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, May 3, the 123rd day of 1989. There are 242 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 3, 1802, Washington, D.C., was incorporated as a city, with the mayor to be appointed by the president, and the council elected by property owners.

On this date:

In 1654, a bridge in Rowley, Mass., was permitted to charge a toll for animals, while people crossed for free.

In 1765, the first U.S. medical school was proposed at the College of Philadelphia, now the University of Pennsylvania.

In 1916, Irish nationalist Patrick Pearse and two others were executed by the British for their roles in the Easter Rising.

In 1921, West Virginia imposed the first state sales tax.

In 1933, Nellie T. Ross became the first woman director of the U.S. Mint.

In 1937, Margaret Mitchell won a Pulitzer Prize for her novel, "Gone With the Wind."

In 1948, Pulitzer prizes were awarded to playwright Tennessee Williams for "A Streetcar Named Desire" and to novelist James Michener for "Tales of the South Pacific."

Army inspectors winked at excesses

WASHINGTON — Rank has its privileges and no one knows that better than two-star Army Gen. Andrew L. Cooley. When the dinner hour rolled around at Cooley's previous post, Fort Stewart, Ga., the general was served by aides in white jackets. And when he wanted to review the troops, the general cruised in a customized Army van with deep carpeting, swivel chairs, a stereo and color television.

Jack Anderson

For every Gen. Cooley, there are thousands of grunts who joined the Army to see the world by more modest means. Someone noticed the inequity and dropped a dime to report the major general's excesses to a Defense Department whistleblowers' hotline. The Army Inspector General spent 476 days to reach the mystifying conclusion that the complaints against Cooley could not be substantiated.

The dinner jackets were real, and so was the fancy van. But the Army said Cooley had done no wrong because the aides didn't always wear the white jackets and the modifications to the van had been approved beforehand.

The Army did have the presence of mind to later clarify its policy on souping up government vehicles and using GIs as house servants. But Cooley was not held accountable for his pretentious airs. He has since been transferred to Egypt and did not return our phone calls from there.

This and more startling evidence that the Army Inspector General fudges its investigations of top brass are contained in a closely held Defense Department report obtained by our associate Stewart Harris.

Marked "OFFICIAL USE ONLY," the report makes the case that the Defense Department Inspector General should take over the investigations of officers because the individual inspectors general in the Army, Air Force and Navy are letting the officers off the hook.

The report, by its own admission, is a bombshell. The cover memo says, that "information contained in this briefing book is considered sensitive, in that release of the material in total could result in embarrassment to the Department. It is requested that this information be appropriately protected at all times."

The report includes the case of Brig. Gen. Robert Berry, who was allowed to retire before the Army Inspector General completed its investigation of allegations that he wasted money on a trip to Europe with a deputy assistant secretary of the Army, Judy Ann Miller.

A whistleblower accused the duo of arriving in Europe earlier than business required, renting expensive cars and improperly asking for first-class seats. It took the Army Inspector General 300 days to close the case, and that was plenty of time for Berry to retire. The investigation concluded that Berry had indeed arrived earlier than necessary for his business trip to Europe and that Miller improperly solicited first-class air travel.

In Berry's case, the report indicates the Army made an exception to its rule of not allowing personnel to retire while they are under investigation. Miller refused to talk to us and Berry could not be located.

The Army Inspector General spent 799 days investigating another case. An Army official in St. Louis was suspected of stealing government computers, using the Army phone for personal business and ordering his underlings to run personal errands for him. The Army investigators confirmed some of the allegations and the official was suspended for a whopping 10 days.

The Defense Department ordered the Army to take another look. That second inquiry uncovered the fact that the man had used Army phones for personal profit. His security clearance was revoked.

Army Inspector General Henry Doctor declined to talk to us.

SPRING FEVER — Glasnost is popping out all over, particularly at the Soviet Embassy in Washington, D.C. The grim, gray building used to keep its heavy wooden doors closed, even on party nights. An embassy security guard lurked outside discouraging anyone who might linger too long to stare. Now, the doors are often open well into the evening to welcome guests and a bulletin board out front invites passersby to linger over color photos of life in the Soviet Union. The gardener at the embassy, however, remains unreconstructed. The tulip arrangement is in revolutionary red.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The recent flap over allowing a Dutch traveler with AIDS to enter the United States illustrates the folly of the law banning AIDS-infected visitors. The man would not have introduced a new disease. AIDS is already here. He would not have spread a disease willy nilly by simply breathing American air. Immigration does not test every visitor for the AIDS virus. This man honestly admitted he had it. Otherwise he would have passed through with no hassle. That makes the law against AIDS-infected visitors a sham. It does not stop the spread of the disease. It only embarrasses and discriminates against AIDS victims, and by extension, against gays.

ART BUCHWALD

Don't dare think of honorariums as bribes!

There has been a great deal of talk about senators and congressmen being paid large fees for speaking engagements. The government ethics people have taken the view that these honorariums could be considered bribes rather than payment for the oratory skills that our legislators are famous for.

Art Buchwald

This is not true. You can't buy a lawmaker for $2,000. I know this because I have attended many conventions and meetings where members of Congress have been the featured speakers. I have never seen one of them compromised because of his lecture fee. It's not money that gets to all our lawmakers but flattery, which is inflicted on them from the day they arrive to the day they leave.

Here is the kind of stuff politicians hear when they go to a business convention as VIP guests of their sponsors:

"Senator, that was the greatest drive I've ever seen on this course. You're a born Jack Nicklaus."

"I read your book, Congressman, and your ideas are mind-blowing. I'm going to order 50,000 copies for my employees."

"Mrs. Senator, we'd love to have a woman's input for our company's 'Good Health Through Tobacco Programs.' Would you consider serving on our advisory board?"

"Congressman Smith, you are a real devil. You never told us that you play horseshoes like George Bush."

"Mrs. Congressman, all of us here admire your husband for the wonderful job he does chairing the Safety Razor Committee. We only wish there were 434 more like him in the House."

"Senator Brown, I read your 800-page committee report on why termites eat railroad ties, and I couldn't put it down. You should submit it for a Pulitzer Prize."

"Mrs. Senator, I hear that besides being a devoted mother, a wonderful cook and a loyal wife, you are also interested in establishing a day-care center for household pets. This is the kind of cause our company's foundation has been looking for."

"May I have your attention, everybody? Congressman Sheldon and his lovely wife Lucy have just won first prize in the Fred Astaire Ballroom Dancing Contest. Let's get them out on the floor so that they can show us why the Sheldons are called the lightest feet in Malarkey, Alabama."

"Congresswoman Sanders, our industry doesn't think of you as a woman. We see you as the cutest little legislator on Capitol Hill."

"Senator, your son and daughter are just great. We wish every American kid had the manners they do."

"Senator Backdate, the reason we respect you is because you are a regular guy, and people in the savings and loan industry know a regular guy when they see one."

"Touchdown, Senator! You won the game."

"Congressman, you really made our convention, just by being here. I hope you don't get upset when our members give you a standing ovation."

"Senator, why don't you and your lovely wife take my private plane back to Washington, or any other place that you would like to go. This is not a bribe. It's just our company's way of saying thanks to a great American and the sharpest lawmaker in the land."

So, forget the money. If you want to know what is corrupting lawmakers, it's kind words — but so far no one has been able to prove that ego-massaging a legislator is a crime.

FLORA LEWIS

Kohl a bumbler, but not foolish on Soviets

FRANKFURT, West Germany — The tempest over Bonn's call to negotiate with the Soviets on short-range nuclear missiles in Europe should be kept in a teacup.

Flora Lewis

Chancellor Helmut Kohl is a bumbler, which can't be news to anyone, and his natural insensitivity is compounded by his panic at losing votes. His foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, is pushy, which is politically rewarding in West Germany these days.

But their mishandling of relations with Washington is a minor matter. It obscured real issues that the U.S. isn't addressing and conjured up phantoms that aren't there.

The Federal Republic doesn't want to undermine, let alone quit, the Atlantic alliance. It doesn't want American troops to go home. Bonn mouths the traditional piety for German reunification, but it knows there's nothing doing for a long time to come. The Soviets wouldn't dream of it.

A week visiting NATO headquarters, Bonn and American forces in Germany showed what does need confronting in the "modernization" debate. First, "modernization" is a euphemism, typical of NATO-speak, to avoid clarity on the supposition that the public must be hornswoggled to "sell" defense.

What they are talking about is a new missile with about double the range of the existing Lance, which is becoming obsolete.

The arguments for it are essentially political, though there would also be military advantage in the package deal that the NATO commander, Gen. John Galvin, supports.

Senior German officials, civilian as well as military, remain dedicated to the "concept of prevention of war by deterrence on the basis of appropriate cooperation of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces."

That quote is from the formal government statement taken to Washington last week. It means rejecting a denuclearized Europe and replacing Lance missiles when they are no longer serviceable, unless East-West talks produce drastic change in the military balance.

The most important reason is that the notion of "risk-sharing" is the heart of the alliance. So long as nuclear weapons are useful in making a major war unthinkable, and I think they will be as far as we can foresee, the U.S. needs to be assured that it won't be left alone in a threatened nuclear exchange.

"No president can be asked to trade Boston for Hamburg," is the way one important German put it.

Neither do the Germans want to be alone in a nuclear war limited to their territory. They are still deeply rankled by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's idea of short-range missiles as a "firebreak," with the implication that countries further away need not be involved.

Cold War geography, the result of World War II, left West Germans at the front. They can't escape that extra risk, but they've a right to allied support.

Washington made a serious mistake by focusing the issue on Lance replacement. After the Soviet-American treaty removing medium-range missiles, a new look at the role of shorter-range weapons was needed.

In his speech to the Bundestag, Kohl spoke of the 14-1 Soviet superiority at this level, an awful lot of warheads because the U.S. has some 4,000 in Germany now.

Most of them are artillery shells. They make little sense, and the brigade commanders who would have to fire them see no need for them.

Galvin has proposed a drastic, near-total removal of these battlefield weapons, provided he's promised the new missile, which could be deployed well to the rear. That reduces the temptation to "use 'em or lose 'em" early after attack and would improve NATO's strategy.

The issues are whether this stabilizing shift should be made unilaterally or in negotiations with the Soviets, and when. U.S. authorities tend to favor a unilateral decision.

They would rather give up the chance of constraining the Soviets than accept a constraining agreement. I think it is bad policy, stemming from underlying reluctance to develop new ideas for a new era.

The attitude at NATO can be summarized as: We kept the peace by staying firm and resolute in the trenches. We won. So let's stay in the trenches.

Unwillingness to negotiate also stems from fear of a "third zero," public pressure to remove all nuclear weapons. This is unreasonable, based on the INF treaty's "double zero," which was proposed by the U.S.

We don't have to make the same mistake again. The German call for negotiations and eventual deployment at lower common ceilings, linked to conventional-force reductions, makes better sense politically and militarily.

Washington, still fumbling for a strategy on dealing with Mikhail Gorbachev, needs to see the light. Kohl has been clumsy, but not foolish.

Careers in science and technology will be plentiful in 1990s

By CHET CURRIER

Careers in science, technology, and engineering will offer plenty of chances, during the 1990s.

Consider the big issues confronting this country and the world going into the '90s:

Pollution of the air, land, and sea. Acid rain. The apparent depletion of the ozone layer in the atmosphere. Is the world heating up in a dangerous way? What is the best way to provide the enormous amount of electricity and fuel we need? What should we do to utilize our knowledge of nuclear power and nuclear arms?

Think at the same time of the prominent growth industries in the United States at the end of the '80s: Information processing; telecommunications; automation of the workplace, in factories, offices, banks, retail stores, and more.

These developments will result in the availability of jobs and opportunities for computer specialists, other scientists and engineers in the coming decade.

Experts in these fields have the chance not only to earn a good living, but also to benefit the rest of the world population.

The high-tech promise is nothing new, For more than a century, this country has been changed by the development of electricity, cars, telephones, airplanes, radio, TV, and dozens of other basics that have become part of modern life.

As the 1980s began, many experts correctly cited computing and other electronic technology as areas of almost limitless potential for growth, prosperity and accomplishment. But everything didn't turn out as expected. Demand for high-tech products and services proved to be subject to more swings in the overall economy than anybody expected.

As one might expect, advanced education and training carry a lot of weight in these sophisticated fields.

Paradoxically, many of the big success stories in technology didn't begin in school or training programs. They had their genesis in playrooms and garages, or wherever else young people — computer nerds or not — discovered their fascination with science and engineering.

What follows is a brief description of what rocket scientists, computer hackers, oil wildcatters and other members of their special breed do, and how they do it:

Engineering: Engineers create machines, systems and products to make other things happen. The things they design must be reliable, safe, efficient and worth the money they cost. An engineer often has to be able well alone, and to sell his or her ideas to others.

This field offers at least a dozen specialties,ranging from mines deep in the ground to outer space. If you aspire to a career as an energy engineer, for instance, you have to consider that life has been tumultous lately fo people in the oil and nuclear power business. But there is little question that the United States in the 1990s, and beyond, will need a lot of good engineers.

Mathematics: A computer is normally designed by an engineer and built by manufacturing workers, but that's just the beginning. Before the machine can serve its ultimate function, it requires systems analysts, programmers, service technicians and other people who can tell it what to do, and fix it when it won't function.

Computers, of course, create many new jobs and at the same time make others obsolete. As things stand in the late 1980s, you can be almost indispensible to an employer if you know how to keep a computer system working in stressful circumstances, or can create new system to prevent malfunctions from happening often.

Science: In the traditional life sciences — biology, chemistry, astronomy and so forth — many careers have depended on support from an academic position or the government. Neither of those promises bount in the immediate future.

100 arrested in Soviet state

MOSCOW (AP) — About 200 young people attacked stores and restaurants following May Day celebrations in the Central Asia republic of Turkmenia, and police arrested 100 of them to end the rampage, Pravda said today.

"Those who were detained said they acted because of exorbitant prices of cooperatives and the low quality of products and services," Pravda said. "But as a method of protest, as was seen, they chose hooliganism."

About 200 young people gathered in Ashkabad, the capital of Turkmenia, Monday evening after May Day celebrations and began attacking stores, parks and restaurants. They broke glass and damaged some cars, Pravda said. Turkmenia is a southern Soviet republic bordering the Caspian Sea, Iran and Afghanistan.

Nations back chemical ban

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Nearly 90 countries have announced their support for a ban on ozone-destroying chemicals by the year 2000 and are calling for an international fund to help Third World countries join in the effort.

The resolution adopted Tuesday at the U.N.-sponsored conference stepped up the timetable of the 1987 Montreal Protocol, which requires industrial nations to halve production of the chemicals by the end of the century.

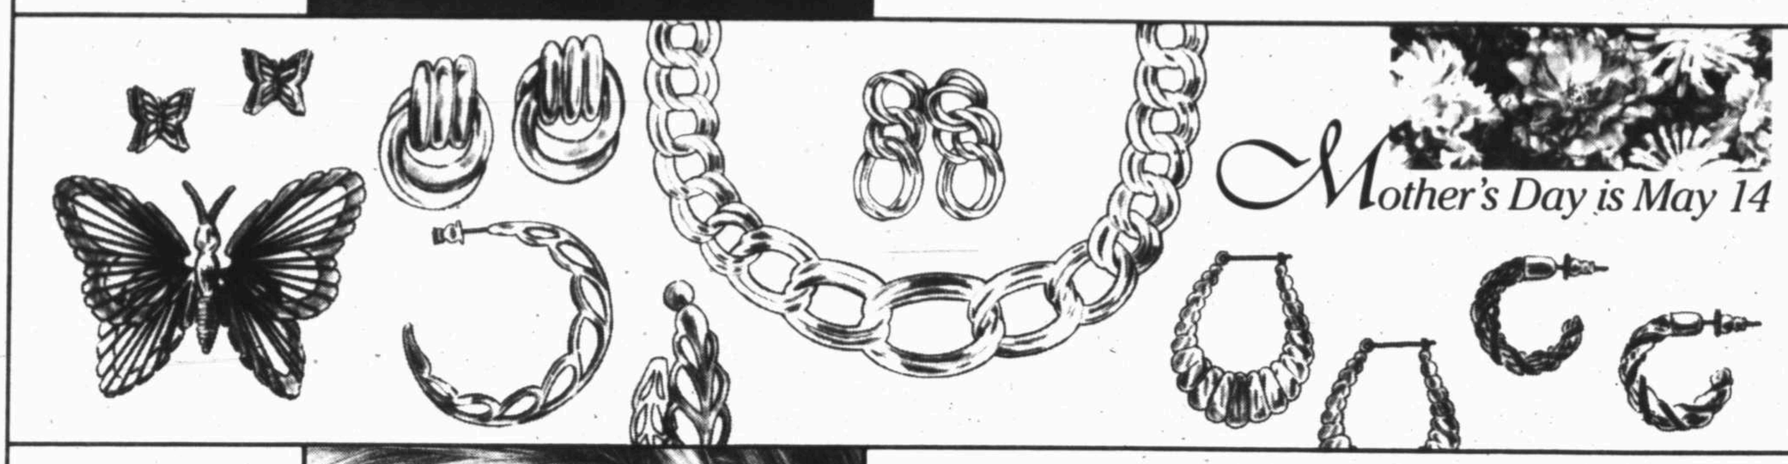

The draft declaration says developing countries should be helped in finding and financing alternatives to the most damaging such chemicals — chloroflourocarbons.

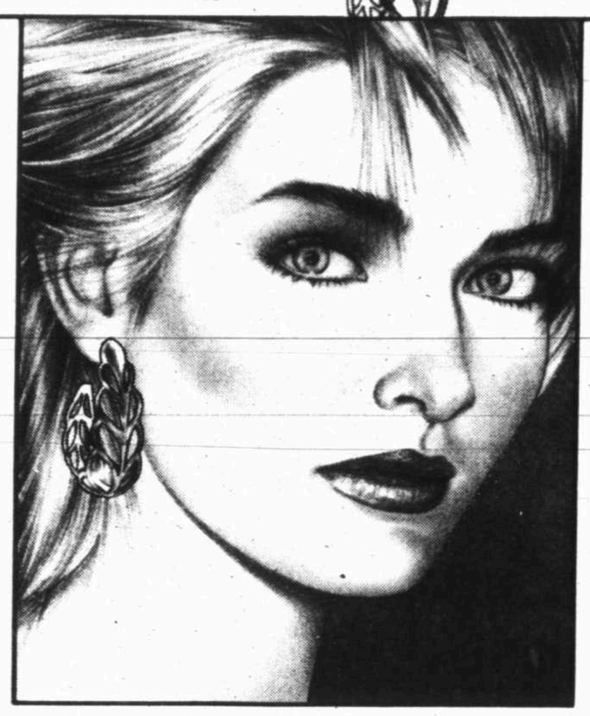

U.S. backs bigger U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Americans strongly support increased U.S. financing for United Nations peacekeeping, disaster relief, food production, population control and health programs, according to a public opinion poll released today.

The survey by the Roper Organization also found that 58 percent of nearly 2,000 randomly chosen adults believed the United States should abide by all decisions of the World Court, which has only advisory powers.

Fifteen percent said Washington could disregard the court.

AUSTIN — Midland County would get its own state representative while Ector County would share a representative when the political map is redrawn in 1991, population projections indicate.

The Texas Legislative Council, in its preliminary report to the House Redistricting Committee Tuesday, projected a 46.7 percent population increase for Midland County since 1980, compared with a 20.3 percent population increase in Ector County over the past decade and a 24.6 percent statewide population increase.

With a projected state population of 17.7 million, the average House district would have 118,229 people. The probable population range of new districts would be 112,000 to 124,000, compared with 95,000 in the 1981 remap, said Clare Dyer of the Legislative Council, which conducts research for the Legislature.

With the state anticipating Midland County's population at 121,255, up from 82,636 in 1980, the county would qualify for one whole House district.

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, now serves District 76, which includes all of Midland County and part of Ector County.

If Ector County's population is 138,812, up from 115,374 in 1980, the county would qualify for one whole House district and part of another.

Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, now serves District 75, which includes most of Ector County. The rest of Ector County presumably would be attached to a surrounding district, either District 69, whose incumbent is Rep. Troy Fraser, R-Big Spring, or District 77, whose incumbent is Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield.

East Texas and West Texas each are expected to lose two House seats due to population decreases, while Central Texas is expected to gain two seats and the Lower Rio Grande Valley, North Texas and Tarrant County each are expected to pick up one seat due to population growth, Dyer said.

But population shifts could leave as many as 30 incumbents facing each other after the remapping is done in 1991.

To avoid that possibility, Rep. Tom Uher, D-Bay City, chairman of the Redistricting Committee, is sponsoring House Joint Resolution 77 in this legislative session. The constitutional amendment would delete the requirement that county lines remain intact when possible in redrawing House districts.

That restriction, which is not placed on state Senate and congressional districts, could leave his committee no choice but to pit incumbents against each other in many counties that do not have the excess population to break the county line, Uher said.

The proposed constitutional amendment has drawn bipartisan opposition, but Uher said he hoped the Legislative Council report would cause some legislators who face the prospect of a race with another incumbent to change their mind and support the constitutional proposition, which is now pending in the State Affairs Committee.

"I hope people understand what they're doing to themselves," he said.

The Redistricting Committee will hold hearings throughout the state during the interim as it prepares for the remapping which must take place in the 58 days in spring 1991 between issuance of the census report and adjournment of the Legislature.

Dyess Air Force Base immediately dispatched personnel to the Sweetwater accident scene where a tractor-trailer carrying 48 rocket components overturned. They were joined by U.S. Army personnel helicoptered in from Fort Hood near Killeen and Fort Sill, near Lawton, Okla.

Dyess public affairs officer Master Sgt. Al Dostal, left, kept the media informed of the off-loading operations several thousand feet from the accident site. Air Force personnel like Jim French, above, worked with Department of Public Safety officials to restrict access to the hazard area.

Funding proposal would help area school districts

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Sen. Carl Parker's plan to pump $500 million into the state's school districts in the next two years would provide a windfall for Permian Basin schools which also expect more money due to increased student enrollment.

The Senate Tuesday unanimously approved Senate Bill 1019, which the Port Arthur Democrat billed as the first step of a six-year, $2.5 billion effort to bring equity to public schools.

Parker, Senate Education Committee chairman, said he believes the bill will lead to settlement of a lawsuit filed by poor school districts and will prevent a state court from ordering changes in the state's method of financing its public schools.

An Austin appeals court overruled a district court ruling that found the system unconstitutional, he said, but the appeals court also criticized the state school plan. "I'm absolutely persuaded that if we do nothing in this session, the Supreme Court of Texas will uphold the district court decision in some form," he told the Senate.

An analysis of the bill's effect on local school districts showed most would gain money under Parker's plan. Midland Independent School District would get $568,000 over the biennium in addition to $3.4 million it would receive from the state due to higher student enrollment and a predicted drop in taxable property value, for a net gain of $3.9 million over the biennium.

Midland apparently would qualify for the maximum state funding level, since its school tax rate is 90 cents per $100 of assessed value, although the Texas Education Agency analysis showed the district would have to raise its taxes 2.55 cents to come up to the state average of 83 cents per $100 of assessed value to qualify for an extra $123,000 from the state.

The plan would hold back some aid from districts that levy less than the state average, in an effort to make all districts contribute their local share of education costs, Parker said.

The Ector County Independent School District would gain $3.5 million over two years with the Parker plan, along with $4.7 million it expects in increased state aid under current formulas, for a net gain of $8.3 million over the biennium.

The Legislature would need to put an additional $2 billion into school equity to achieve the goal of getting the state within 95 percent of equity by 1995, Parker said.

Karate student says instructor assaulted her

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A 16-year-old Midland girl has told police she was sexually assaulted dozens of times by her long-time karate instructor, and investigators fear more students may tell the same story.

Juan Antonio Lopez, 35, of San Antonio and formerly of Odessa, is being held in the Midland County Jail on two counts of aggravated sexual assault, according to county records. His bonds total $100,000.

He was arrested last Friday at his karate studio in San Antonio on warrants from Midland County.

On April 25, police received a report of an assault from the 16-year-old, who told police she was a student of Lopez, the former owner of Karate World of Odessa. The girl told police she had engaged in sexual relations with Lopez for eight years, since she began taking the classes in Odessa. The last assault allegedly occurred in late March, after which the girl said "that's enough," according to police.

"The girl talked it over with her mother for a couple of days, and they decided to come to us," Detective Sgt. B.G. Johnson said. "It was the normal situation of a child who feels partly to blame," he said of her reluctance to report the assaults earlier. "They feel like it is their fault, and they don't come forward."

The victim gained favored student status in Lopez' school, and often traveled with him, Johnson said.

"It (an assault) usually happened after a karate meet here or in Odessa," Johnson said. "She was a good student, one of the most proficient at karate. Often, he would take her with him to these meets to represent the school."

The girl was never threatened, Johnson said.

One candidate's spending tops $10,000, records show

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Spending in the Midland City Council campaign has topped the $10,000 mark in one case, contribution reports show.

Leading the race for contributions are J.D. Faircloth, Jose Cuevas Jr., and John Castro, three candidates drawing support from a diverse group including leaders of the local Republican Party.

In the at-large race, Faircloth, a Colony Energy Corp. vice president, leads the spending and contribution pack.

For the period ending April 26, Faircloth had raised $10,269.52 and spent exactly that much on campaign expenses. He has loaned himself $4,415.89, records show.

Midland oilmen Cyril Wagner and Jack Brown's partnership donated $500 to Faircloth's campaign. District 3 City Councilman Bob Monaghan also has contributed $200 to Faircloth's campaign coffers.

Southwestern Bell Area Manager Castro has raised $3,653 to date and has spent nearly all that — $3,578, records show.

Castro was also the recipient of a $100 donation from Midland County Hospital District Director Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, a candidate for re-election himself.

Midland oil and real estate investor Leslie Hinds has raised $925 to date and spent $609.50, records show.

Donations or loans totaling $1,863 have been contributed to oilman/rancher Grier Brunson's campaign.

He has spent $1,328.56 on the race, records show, including $285 worth of signs materials listed as an in-kind donation.

The fifth at-large candidate, Hugh G. White III, a consulting geologist who doubles as his own campaign treasurer, has neither raised nor spent any money on the campaign.

In the District 1 City Council race, Cuevas has raised $4,468, the contribution report shows.

Donations to the Cuevas campaign also included $150 from Wiesenfeld.

He has spent $3,864.03 on the race, records show.

Robbyne Fuller, a Texas Instruments senior administrative clerk, has raised $372.97 and spent $354.54, spending reports show.

The Rev. Bill Palmer, pastor of Mount Rose Baptist Church, has raised $3,946 and spent $3,299.04.

Of the amount he's raised, $965 were in-kind donations of advertising materials, a spokeswoman for his campaign said.

While Palmer raised $3,781.04 in the first reporting period, he has raised $165 during the second period, reports show.

Charles W. Seltzer, a Midland attorney and chairman of the Midland County Republican Party, has donated $100 each to Cuevas, Faircloth and Castro, records show.

In addition, the three men have been the recipients of in-kind or non-monetary campaign donations from State Rep. Tom Craddick, and/or former Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith, two key Republicans.

In those three instances, the in-kind gifts were the use of frames which hold outdoor four-by-eight-feet campaign signs.

For all eight candidates, expenses have covered usual costs relative to advertising in the print and broadcast media and fundraising functions.

District 1 City Councilman Bill Williams is running unopposed in the May 6 election.

Leading the race for contributions are J.D. Faircloth, Jose Cuevas Jr., and John Castro, three candidates drawing support from a diverse group including leaders of the local Republican Party.

Calvert: Only 866 absentee ballots cast

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Election officials fear a miserable turnout for Saturday's city-wide elections based on the fewer than 1,000 total absentee votes cast.

According to Midland County Election Administrator Bettye Calvert, only 866 ballots were cast at the conclusion of absentee voting Tuesday.

Of those, 714 people voted in person and 152 cast ballots by mail during the two-week absentee voting period, she said.

Because absentee totals came in so low, the election administrator doubts voter turnout will be much higher than 10 percent of the total number eligible registered voters.

"I don't think we'll see 5,000 people at the polls," she said.

Some campaign signs in violation of city code

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Unless a citizen complains about or collides with an illegally placed 4-by-8-foot campaign placard, code enforcement officials say they probably will chalk up the situation to candidate inexperience.

A 1972 ordinance passed when City Council members had last names of Baskin, Holt and Magruder mandated guidelines for outdoor political advertising within the city.

The 4-by-8-feet signs must be placed 20 feet from the curbs of a corner lot and 10 feet from the curb of a non-corner lot, City Ordinance 4684 states.

The ordinance prevents potential city liability should a citizen have a traffic accident because of the signs, Code Enforcement Officer Warren Cloyd said.

Candidates are exempt from having to get permits for the signs and weren't verbally told of the rules, the officer explained as one possible cause of misplaced signs.

Overzealous campaign workers from opposing sides and playful children — groups who often tinker with the signs' placements — are other possible causes for code violations, he continued.

Monday afternoon, the Reporter-Telegram conducted an informal survey using a tape measure at the location of campaign signs dotting several major thoroughfares.

Violations of the signs listed above were not usually many feet off the mark.

However, misunderstandings might have been prevented if candidates had read a copy of the ordinance found in an information packet created by City Secretary Bill Clanton and given to all eight Council candidates.

Ex-ambassador says Gorbachev sick

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

David Funderburk, former U.S. ambassador to Romania, had little trouble Tuesday expressing his level of appreciation for Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's social, political and economical reforms.

"Gorbachev is sick," Funderburk said at a seminar sponsored by The Americanism Foundation and John Birch Society. "I want to see Gorbachev fail. He is evil and the system is evil and has to be destroyed and brought down."

Funderburk, who abandoned his foreign post after tiring of what he called blind U.S. policy toward Romania and other Eastern Europe countries, brought his high-octane patriotism to an audience of 80 gathered in the Midland Petroleum Club.

"It's great to be back in God's country and what I consider to be real America," Funderburk said to start the program.

The North Carolina native who served as the U.S. ambassador to Romania from 1981 to 1985 said America has been deceived by Gorbachev and attempts at reforms.

Contrary to what U.S. leaders and the media have been feeding the American public, the Communist governments still bulldoze churches, break up families, destroy culture and allow little freedom, Funderburk said.

"Most people in a communist world do not have access to a church," he said. "We project the illusion of reform and democratization. Conditions of life have not improved under Gorbachev."

Only those in the upper echelons of communist society have had any increased mobility under Gorbachev reforms, he said, adding that farmers and peasants are worse off today than they were three years ago.

Funderburk said that despite his pleas to President Reagan, Vice President Bush and other U.S. leaders to wake up and smell the real stench of Glasnost, no one would change U.S. policy.

To protest the blind policy, he resigned as ambassador and began speaking publicly about "the dangerous hand Gorbachev has been dealing worldwide," he said.

"No time in my life are we under greater danger and greater threat than today," Funderburk said.

He also complained of America's economic and political support of communist nations. By giving the countries low-interest loans and supporting their leaders, the oppressed who live under the tyrannical rulers have no better view of American leaders.

"They're hurt by us collaborating with their communist bosses," he said. "It shows how out of touch the (U.S.) system is at trying to find the reality."

Funderburk said Americans can do their part by being aware of the communist threat and supporting those who fight for freedom, especially those behind the "Iron Curtain."

"It means a lot to them to know that there are people over here who care," he said. "I sure as hell will be a thorn in the side of the communist rulers as well as the American foreign policy elite."

Rosalind Haley, who attended the seminar, said she feels the communist threat is as bad as Funderburk portrays it.

"I know that it's as bad because I lived in Portugal," Ms. Haley said. "We were there when the communists took over and we've seen what happens."

Alan Boyd, a John Birch Society member also present at the program, said he agrees "in principle" with everything Funderburk stated.

"History repeats itself and we can see that happening in those (communist) nations right now," Boyd said.

Vestal: Baptists walked away from history

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The moderate candidate for the Southern Baptist Convention presidency says conservative Baptists have diverted precious denominational energies from the church's vision to evangelize the world.

"I'll go to my grave believing Southern Baptists walked up to a moment in history — then walked away," said the Rev. Daniel Vestal of Atlanta, who until last year was the longtime minister at Midland's First Baptist Church.

Vestal spoke Tuesday to about 250 moderate Baptists from across the nation meeting in Nashville this week. The group aims to unify the nation's largest Protestant denomination after a decade-long power struggle between moderate and conservative leaders in the Nashville-based convention.

Vestal will oppose incumbent conservative SBC president Jerry Vines of Jacksonville when the Southern Baptists meet in Las Vegas June 13-15.

He criticized the denomination's conservatives, which have held a monopoly on the SBC presidency and church leadership positions since 1979, for not forging ahead with a 1977 mission program aimed at evangelizing the world.

"Beginning in 1979, the first thing we lost was our world focus on evangelism, as we turned to an inward conflict," Vestal said.

"The second thing we lost was our trust in each other, to the point that now we are absolutely paranoid. We don't trust anybody.

"Now, we're losing our viability as a denomination as a force for evangelism. We're close to blowing it. Some think it's too late," he said.

Vestal pledged to try to dilute the power of the SBC presidency if he is elected. The president has authority to appoint other key positions within the denomination.

"For the last 10 years, it has been winner take all," Vestal said.

Moderate Baptists say they have been excluded from key appointments — particularly the powerful Committee on Committees, which makes appointments to the denomination's boards and agencies.

Conservative Baptists say the Bible is the indisputable word of God, historically true and without error.

Moderates, or "centrists," hold the Bible to be the word of God but believe there is room for individual interpretation of Scripture.

The Nashville gathering is the moderates' first national meeting as they rally their forces in an effort to defeat Vines.

The Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo, Texas, chairman of the group, urged the moderates to get their representatives to Las Vegas and keep them there throughout the voting.

VOTING

Saturday's elections are for Midland City Council, Midland Independent School District and Greenwood Independent School Board of Trustees, and Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors.

In Midland City Council elections, nine candidates are vying four four open seats.

Three are campaigning for the city's District 2 seat, held by Oralia Corrales who announced that she would not seek re-election. Robbyne Fuller, the Rev. Bill Palmer and Jose Cuevas Jr. are winding down their respective campaigns.

A pack of five are going for two at-large seats, currently held by Katie Heck and Gordon Marcum, who also have decided not to run. Leslie Hinds, John Castro, J.D. Faircloth, Hugh White and Grier Brunson are running for the two positions.

Incumbent Bill Williams is running unopposed in his bid for re-election to the District 1 post.

Only one of three open MISD school board seats saw competition.

Former trustee candidate Dianne Anderson and Dr. Larry Rusk are seeking the District 6 seat, held by Bill Sewell who announced that he would not run for election.

Incumbents James Fuller and Ken Marks are running unopposed for District 1 and 7, respectively.

Only two candidates have entered the race for four open Midland County Hospital District board seats. Incumbent Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld is running unopposed for District 5, while David J. Porter is running unopposed for District 6.

Meanwhile, no one filed for District 1 and 2, leaving it up to hospital district directors to appoint the board members.

In Greenwood, three candidates are running for two open school board seats.

Incumbent Vicky Moody faces Price Robinson for Place 1, while incumbent Johnny Womack is running unopposed for Place 2.

Voters who have questions about polling places may call the election office at 688-1222. Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Saturday.

KARATE

"She had respect for him as her instructor," the detective said. "But he also furnished her narcotics. She was always high at the time."

Lopez' attorney, Tom Morgan, declined to comment on the charges against his client.

Midland County Sheriff's Sgt. Joe Matlock said the victim refuses to talk to workers at Midland Rape Crisis.

"She will not talk to a woman," Matlock said. "She says she feels filthy."

Matlock also asked her why she didn't report the situation sooner.

"I asked her why so long," Matlock said. "She said it was because she was intimidated. He (Lopez) has an eighth-degree black belt."

The investigators say they fear there may be more victims who have not come forward, former students at the school.

"If there is more than one student, there is more than one victim," Matlock said. "But that is only my assumption."

The girl told investigators Lopez had over 100 students enrolled in the school at one time, many of them from Midland.

Johnson said he knows there are more victims "From the interview of the victim. She named some other peeple. At least two others, and we don't know if there may be others...we are still investigating the possibility of (assaults in) other cities."

Johnson said Odessa police also are investigating Lopez, but police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon commented only that no charges have been filed against him.

SIGNS

Jose Cuevas Jr.'s signs on the corners of Cuthbert Avenue and Main Street, Terrell Street and Mineola Street and Lamesa Road and Estes Avenue did not appear in compliance with the corner-lot rules.

The Rev. Bill Palmer's signs at the intersections of Louisiana Avenue and Mineola Street and Main Street and Scharbauer Drive weren't 20 feet from the curbs either, the survey found.

John Castro's placard at the corner of Lamesa Road and Cedar Avenue was in apparent violation, though another Castro sign at the corner of Wadley Avenue and Midland Drive met the city code.

J.D. Faircloth, too, had signs meeting requirements at the corners of Wadley Avenue and Midland Drive and Wadley Avenue and A Street.

However, his signs appeared in violation of the code at the intersections of Dengar Avenue and Big Spring Road and Cowden Avenue and Main Street.

Two signs owned by Grier Brunson — one on Louisiana Avenue east of A Street and another on Big Spring Road south of Loop 250 — were in compliance with requirements for signs on non-corner lots.

Four-by-8-foot campaign signs belonging to candidates Robbyne Fuller, Leslie Hinds or Hugh White III were not found.

According to spending reports, those three have not purchased such signs.

"Most of the people with big signs comply," Cloyd said. "These are usually short-lived signs. Candidates are good about it."

The city will alert a candidate to a sign violation if a complaint is received or the sign hinders the sight of a motorist, City Code Enforcement Administrator Nancy Vickrey said Tuesday.

For example, two belonging to Cuevas were re-adjusted after a code enforcer found the signs had been dragged into a right-of-way, Ms. Vickrey said.

"Cuevas took care of them in 30 minutes," she added.

FUNDS

"The objective here is not to try to produce all winners," he said. "The objective of Senate Bill 1019 is to try to set policy in this state to distribute aid to various school districts so that ultimately they will all have the same access to the minimum amount of money required to give a child a decent education."

Parker said the House is working on six-proposed bills, none of which appears to be gaining consensus. He added that some House members appeared to be waiting for the Senate to make its move.

While the Senate budget included $400 million for school equity, the House Appropriations Committee included $500 million for school equity in its spending plan. A conference committee is seeking to reconcile the two spending plans.

In other action, the Senate also approved Senate Joint Resolution 53 and Senate Bill 951, both by Sen. Bill Haley, D-Center, that would create a state board that would offer help for smaller school districts by providing state backing for bonds issued for local school building programs.

The state also will conduct an inventory of school buildings and come up with an equitable formula for assisting in building projects, Parker said.

The Senate also approved Senate Bill 1147 by Parker, which would establish a system to reward school district improvement, introduce flexible accreditation review cycles, increase technical assistance to school districts and bring parent and community involvement into the accreditation process.

The bill, which was part of Gov. Bill Clements' educational excellence package, is an attempt to encourage all school districts to improve their performance, Parker said.

"We have a lot of poor school districts, but we're failing the needs of affluent kids too, because we're failing to inspire them," Parker said. "Sometimes I think we forget that well-to-do folks are citizens of this state too."

House ethics panel subpoenas investors

WASHINGTON (AP) — The ethics committee is seeking to tie up loose ends in its 11-month probe of House speaker Jim Wright by hearing from a group of Texas investors in a gas well that yielded huge profits for Wright.

The group, including San Antonio financier Morris Jaffe and his son Doug, was subpoenaed to appear today before the panel after failing to respond to a similar summons last week.

The committee is seeking to clear up circumstances under which Wright and his business partner, George Mallick, were brought into the well venture in Sabine Lake and parlayed an initial cash outlay of $9,120 into a $340,000 profit in less than five months.

In a 23-page defense the investors issued Monday through their Washington lawyer, Stanley Brand, they argued that the well was a legitimate business venture and not, as ethics committee counsel Richard Phelan argued, a potential funnel for gifts to Wright.

The investors say they still plan to invest more into sinking another well at the site in hopes of freeing millions of dollars worth of gas and petroleum.

Also subpoenaed were Marlyn Cherry, the Jaffes' bookkeeper; Doug Prestridge, a geologist; and Dave Myers, who supplied the drilling equipment for the well.

In a related matter, Wright on Tuesday defended his use of the Congressional Record to praise a video program his wife helped develop, but a member of the House ethics committee said the panel might have to look at the incident.

"I don't think there's anything improper about it," Wright told reporters.

But Rep. John T. Myers of Indiana, the senior Republican on the ethics committee, said the situation "certainly does raise a question" and could be discussed by the ethics committee. "It's something for the whole committee to decide," he said.

In 1985, Wright used his position as a congressman to insert into the official Capitol publication a column effusively praising a family motivational video series produced by the Pacific Institute. The column did not mention that his wife, Betty, was then drawing a $36,000 salary from the company.

House rules prohibit a lawmaker from benefiting financially because of his official position, and guidelines advise that House members not become too closely associated with any particular business or make commercial endorsements.

Wright and his advisers continued to map a plan for making the speaker's case both to the ethics committee, at an anticipated disciplinary hearing late this month, and to the public.

Sources said Wright complained vigorously at a strategy session Monday that he was being unfairly pilloried by the press and by the ethics committee and voiced frustration that the story of his public service career, from World War II on, was being obscured.

Man convicted of killing girlfriend

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A jury has convicted a man of murder in the shooting death of his estranged, AIDS-infected girlfriend.

Jurors deliberated about 4½ hours Tuesday before finding David Melton, 26, guilty of murder in the Jan. 25, 1988 shooting death of Donna C. Smith.

Ms. Smith was shot to death in Melton's apartment, authorities said.

Melton now faces five to 99 years or life in prison and a possible fine of up to $10,000.

Melton testified that he pulled a .357-caliber pistol from under a couch and shot Ms. Smith twice because he feared she was about to pull a .38-caliber from her purse. Testifying in his own defense, Melton insisted that she kept a pistol although authorities did not find one.

He testified she threatened him as she started to leave the apartment, saying, "It's over. I've got something for you."

It was revealed during the trial that the couple's child, Sarah, died two days after Ms. Smith from an AIDS-related illness. Melton tested negative for the deadly virus, according to testimony in the trial.

Defense attorney Raymond Angelini said in his closing statement Tuesday that Melton acted out of fear for his life.

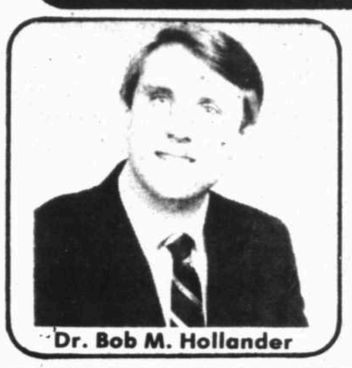

Angelini said that Smith had scratched Melton during a scuffle the evening of the slaying and Melton feared he might contract AIDS.

Prosecutor Wende Rush told jurors a scratch was not provocation to kill someone, and that having AIDS is not a valid reason for murder.

"He wants you to believe that because she was a prostitute and she had AIDS, he had a right to kill her," Rush said.

Senate OKs insurance bill for utilities

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate on Tuesday tentatively approved a utility bill touted as a money-saver by its sponsor and a tax increase by an opponent.

Seven senators voting against rules suspension temporarily blocked final passage of the bill, which would allow a public utility to self-insure against catastrophic property loss, including windstorm, fire, and explosion.

Sen. Ted Lyon's bill would require the Public Utility Commission to allow as a necessary utility expense those funds credited to reserve accounts for self-insurance.

Lyon, D-Rockwall, said by self-insuring, rather than purchasing commercial insurance, uility companies would save money, and the savings could be passed on to ratepayers.

Sen. Carlos Truan, however, described Lyon's proposal as a "gimmick" to raise utility rates.

He said the reserve account for insurance would merely increase a utility company's rate base, which would lead to higher rates — or "taxes."

"What we're doing with this bill is passing a tax bill — not for the benefit of schools and mental health and mental retardation, and the poor and the needy. We're passing a tax bill for the benefit of the utility companies, stockholders, people that are already well off," Truan said.

Five senators added amendmemts to the bill, including one that specifies that it would not apply to nuclear power plants.

STATE IN BRIEF

Man shoots wife, self

RICHARDSON (AP) — A husband and wife remained in critical condition at a hospital's intensive care unit early today recovering from gunshot wounds after a domestic dispute.

Tuyet Thi Tran of Dallas was shot at least once after her husband, Long Thank Le, allegedly confronted her at work in this Dallas suburb Tuesday, police said.

After four shots were fired on the woman, the 35-year-old Le apparently turned the gun on himself, said police spokeswoman Sharon Hodges.

"They apparently had a domestic disagreement that escalated into gunfire," said Ms. Hodges.

She said four shots were fired from a .38-caliber revolver. One shot struck the 32-year-old woman in the upper left arm, possibly penetrating her chest cavity, said Ms. Hodges.

Le underwent several hours of surgery at Richardson Medical Center, a nursing supervisor. The nursing supervisor, who asked not to be named, said both were recovering in the hospital's intensive care unit.

Ms. Hodges said the couple worked at the same company.

Medicaid cap approved

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas House tentatively approved a bill that would raise the income cap for a person to qualify for nursing home care under Medicaid to the federal maximum beginning June 1.

The measure, which was tentatively approved Tuesday, would allow an increase in the cap from $715 to $1,104 a month to take effect before the Sept. 1 beginning of the fiscal year.

The House earlier approved a bill that would increase the cap as of Sept. 1.

"We're not adding money. It's a reappropriation" of money already in the budget, said Rep. Betty Denton, D-Waco, bill sponsor.

Rep. Jim Rudd, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said early implementation would cost $2 million to $3 million.

"Let's not spend the money any faster than we have to," said Rudd, D-Brownfield.

Committee OKs fuel bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says the House Energy Committee has approved a proposal that would require the use of alternative fuels in fleet vehicles and in utility boilers in areas which do not meet federal air quality standards.

Mauro said the bill, approved Monday by a 9-0 vote, is designed to cut air pollution in 21 counties which fail to meet those standards.

The bill requires the use of compressed natural gas, or other alternative fuels, in vehicles run by transit authorities or city transportation departments. The bill also levies a surcharge on utility boiler operators who burn fuel oil between April 15 and Oct. 15.

Exxon products boycotted

Associated Press

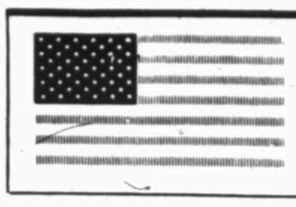

The one-day boycott of Exxon products around the country is the start of a "war of words and actions" against the nation's largest oil company over its huge Alaskan spill, environmentalists and politicians say.

The campaign Tuesday met with mixed results in scattered cities and dissents from independent service stations who say they're victims of the spill, too.

"I just think the end result is not going to be to hurt the people who are responsible," said Evan Jaeger, who manages an Exxon station in Elmwood Park, N.J. "It's going to hurt the little guy trying to make a living."

Exxon issued a statement calling the boycott unjust, and a company executive defended the cleanup of the spill.

"We cannot undo what happened," said Exxon U.S.A. President William D. Stevens in Houston. "However, we can, and we are, taking every possible action to limit the damage, clean up the mess, and otherwise mitigate the impacts."

NATION

But consumer activist Ralph Nader said Exxon "should not be allowed to forget" the nation's worst oil spill and that a boycott was the way to send a message to the oil giant.

Nader joined representatives from several environmental and consumer groups in accusing Exxon of failing to be prepared for the spill and not rapidly responding to the accident that has fouled hundreds of miles of Alaska's coast.

"Americans can take action now by voting with their steering wheel and dollars against all Exxon products," Nader said in Washington.

Exxon spokeswoman Sarah Johnson said 10,000 credit cards out of 7 million have been returned to the company since the March 24th spill.

Exxon said it had received no reports from dealers of a loss in volume of gasoline sold as a result of the credit-card return or from boycotts.

Only about 5 percent, or 620, of the 12,400 Exxon brand stations in the United States are owned and operated by the company. The rest are independent.

Report paints gloomy picture of education

WASHINGTON (AP) — American education is stagnating by nearly every measure in a new comparison of school performance across the country, Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos said today in releasing the discouraging report card.

The sixth annual State Education Performance Chart shows a decline in the national high school graduation rate and falling scores on college entrance exams in half the states.

"We must do better. We must revitalize education in America" by setting targets for improvement, Cavazos said in a statement accompanying the report.

"We have not made any progress in the last three years," Cavazos elaborated in an interview on NBC's "Today" program. "It's hard to say why. I still believe that we have not focused on the fundamental issues of trying to get everybody involved in the education of children. It's not a matter of dollars."

"I'm going to write to every governor, to every school board president, I'm going to communicate with the leaders, the superintendents and all the people out there and say we must issue a challenge" to improve the schools, Cavazos said.

Performance targets include boosting high school graduation rates to 90 percent and cutting in half the number of children who fail a grade.

"Today about 3,600 students will drop out of school...I think it's a disaster that we must turn around," Cavazos said.

The performance chart, known as the "wall chart," shows a general lack of progress despite the continuing spate of reform efforts and ever-rising education spending — up to $3,977 per student on this year's chart compared to $3,756 last year.

National scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) fell from 906 to 904 (on a scale of 400 to 1,600) from 1987 to 1988. Fully 14 of the 22 states in which the SAT is the dominant college entrance exam registered declines.

Scores on the American College Testing Program (ACT), on a scale of 1 to 36, showed a scant .1-point gain. And 11 of the 28 states in which the ACT dominates posted decreases.

Looking at trends since the first wall chart was issued in 1982, one bright note was a continuous rise in the percentage of students taking the Advanced Placement test qualifying them for college credit, from 5 to 11 percent. The department attributed the climb largely to doubled Hispanic involvement and an 83 percent increase in participation by blacks.

The high school graduation rate rose from 69.5 percent in the first chart to 71.7 percent in 1985. But it fell slightly in 1986 to 71.6 percent and dropped to 71.1 percent in 1987, the latest year for which statistics could be calculated.

Minnesota ranked first with a high school completion rate of 90.6 percent, while the District of Columbia was last at 55.5 percent. Wyoming showed the most improvement, zooming from 25th in 1982 to second in 1987; Michigan did the worst, falling from 28th to 48th.

The Council of Chief State School Officers took a relatively rosy view of the wall chart, saying the trend in the past few years has been positive. The group noted that 44 of the 50 states have made college entrance test gains since 1982 and 38 states have improved their high school completion rates since then.

But Gordon Ambach, executive director of the council, added that "the task ahead is gigantic," particularly in light of "the urgent needs of our nation's economically disadvantaged youth and those with limited proficiency in English."

The department noted that Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina and the District, all with relatively high poverty rates, have registered some of the largest increases in college entrance test scores since 1982. It said this shows that states with large proportions of disadvantaged sudents can make great progress.

However, while South Carolina showed the most improvement of any state, with a 48-point gain in SAT scores since 1982, it still ranked dead last this year among the 22 states in which the SAT is the dominant test, with a score of 838. The District was second from the bottom despite healthy gains.

Alabama tied for the top in ACT improvement, up nine-tenths of a point since 1982, but was ranked 21st of the 28 states this year where most students take the ACT. Mississippi came up 28th or last.

NATION IN BRIEF

EPA places new limits on chemicals in water

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of public water systems across the country will have to improve their purification equipment to reduce chemical contamination and comply with new Environmental Protection Agency standards.

The EPA on Tuesday proposed federally required ceilings on the maximum amounts of 38 types of cancer-causing chemicals and other pollutants allowed in drinking water.

Michael Cook, director of the EPA office which deals with drinking water contaminants, said most public water systems already meet the proposed requirements, but additional purification equipment will probably be needed in about 2,500 public systems, serving about 2 million people, mostly in rural areas.

Dancing mom arrested

PALM SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — A woman who rushed out of the shower to dance to a Gladys Knight video didn't know neighbors were peering through her window and she ended up getting jailed and losing her two girls to the state for two days.

So now Darleen Scott is suing the Palm Springs Public Safety Department for false arrest, harassment and false imprisonment in the January 1988 incident.

Neighbors looking through a window into her third-floor apartment thought she was nude as she danced, and filed a child abuse report with the police. She later told officers she was wearing a towel.

She was arrested on three counts of lewd and lascivious behavior in the presence of a child.

Attack victim speaks

NEW YORK (AP) — The jogger who was severely beaten and raped by a gang of youths in Central Park has spoken her first words since the attack two weeks ago, the New York Post reported today.

The 28-year-old woman was taken off a respirator Tuesday morning and began struggling to make sounds, then said "Hello" to her relatives and answered "Yes" and "No" to a doctor's questions, the Post said.

The newspaper cited an unidentified hospital source who was in the woman's room at the time.

'Silence-for-money' cases confirmed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate investigators say they've discovered at least two "silence-for-money" deals between builders of a Texas nuclear power plant and workers who received payments in return for dropping allegations of safety hazards.

The Senate subcommittee on nuclear regulation said Tuesday it is widening its investigation to determine the frequency and legality of these secret deals.

"It's beginning to look like something that's throughout the industry," said Bob Mann, an aide to Sen. John Breaux, D-La., the subcommittee chairman.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which licenses commercial nuclear power stations and enforces safety rules, has not commented publicly on the acceptability of agreements that limit a plant worker's ability to raise safety issues.

In private notices to all nuclear plant operators and vendors, however, the commission last week said such restrictions were not acceptable under any circumstances. It asked the companies to notify the NRC of any such deals by July 31.

"It is not acceptable to include in settlement agreements for discrimination matters...or in any labor agreements or other agreement...any restrictions on employees or former employees providing information to any members of the NRC," said the notice. A copy was obtained by The Associated Press.

Frank Ingram, a commission spokesman, said the letters were sent in response to concerns raised by one of the Texas nuclear plant deals cited by Breaux's panel.

Crude oil prices take big plunge

From Staff and Wire Reports

Despite feverish last-minute buying by a few large trading houses seeking to protect their positions, a late burst of selling sent crude oil prices plunging below $20 a barrel Tuesday, resulting in a dollar drop in the posted price of West Texas Intermediate in West Texas.

At the close of the New York Mercantile Exchange, the largest energy futures market, the price of spot West Texas Intermediate, the American benchmark crude, had recovered somewhat to settle at $19.80 a barrel, down 86 cents on the day.

Earlier in London, the June contract in North Sea Brent blend crude, also a high-quality grade, closed down 30 cents at $18.32.

"The market opened weaker on news reports that Saudi Arabia's daily oil output rose about 10 percent to 5.1 million barrels a day in April, and that North Sea output, recently reduced by a series of problems, would soon be back to normal," said Bradford. H. Hughes, energy trader at Cargill Investor Services.

"But the real flood of selling didn't materialize until prices went through the 'magic number,' which set off chart and computer selling in the last half-hour."

The number Hughes referred to was $20.10 a barrel, which for the last three months had served many computer-guided traders as a support line.

"The selling was overwhelming after prices broke $20," he said.

"Although a few big trading houses did manage to get spot crude back over the $20 line briefly just before the close, the last waves of selling pushed prices back down."

Mitchell S. Barber, floor trader at the exchange, said that, while unleaded gasoline prices also dropped, they tended to provide some support for most of the session.

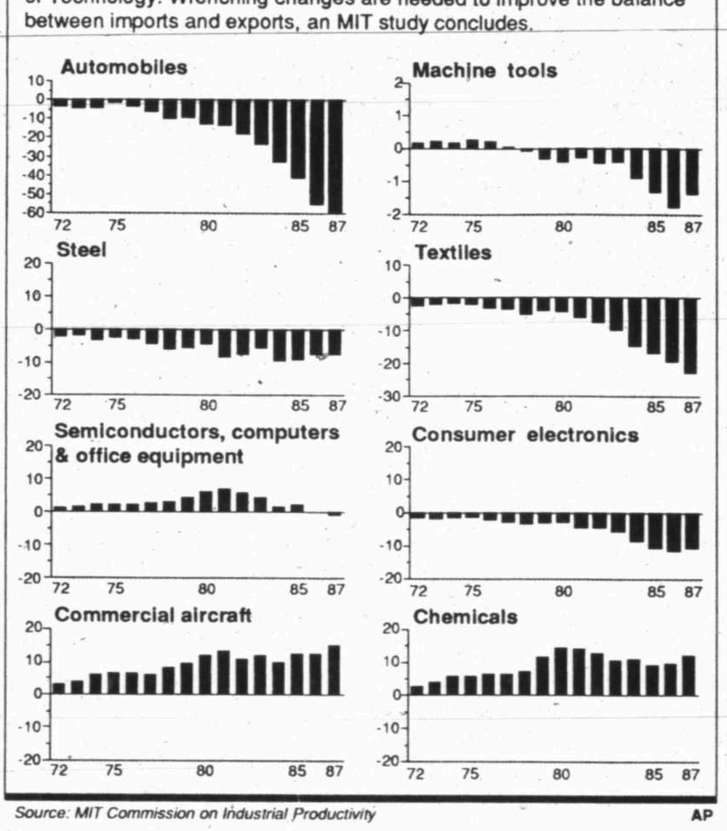

Adding to the market slump Tuesday was speculation that the transportation and production system in the North Sea would resume operations next week following an April 18 explosion at a gasoline platform that disrupted operations, analysts said.

The North Sea accident and the Exxon oil spill off the Alaskan coast in March have helped to significantly boost oil prices, particularly gasoline and crude.

Industry Trade Balances

Except for chemicals and commercial aircraft, trade balances have deteriorated in the eight industries studied by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Wrenching changes are needed to improve the balance between imports and exports, an MIT study concludes.

Plan to keep U.S. competitive told

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — A study by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology released Tuesday calls for widespread changes in the way American companies operate, saying that manufacturers must pay stricter attention to retraining, technology and basic education to improve the country's international competitiveness.

"Made in America," a report compiled over two years by MIT scientists, engineers and economists, traces a series of problems relating to the nation's productivity.

The school's 16-member Commission on Industrial Productivity, which oversaw the report, looked at two industries that it considered internationally competitive: chemicals and commercial aircraft.

But it also looked at a number of industries that have fallen on harder times in the last decade, including steel, machine tools, automobiles, consumer electronics, semiconductors and computers.

"Wrenching changes at all levels of the organization" are necessary, the study says, if American corporations are to keep pace.

The team of MIT professors and engineers included Robert Solow, the 1987 Nobel prize winner in economics, who has been on the faculty since 1950, and Lester Thurow, dean of the Sloan School of Management.

"American productivity is slipping, even though the United States is still the most productive nation in the world," said MIT's president, Paul Gray, who described the report at a news conference in Manhattan.

The report cites no specific companies but discusses at length the conditions of various industries.

For example, it says the chemical industry needs to diversify and expand its research and development.

It criticizes the machine tool industry for not establishing an international market niche, as the Europeans and Japanese have.

While saying that the American steel industry has benefited dramatically from a painful restructuring, it says that joint ventures with foreign producers have accounted for turnarounds for some operations.

The report criticizes the semiconductor industry as being too concerned with quarterly profits and says more attention should be devoted to long-term strategies.

The study, which cost about $1.3 million, involved eight study groups that did research on various industries.

S&L bailout saddled with housing agenda

Gonzalez

WASHINGTON — Rushing to complete deliberations on the Bush rescue plan for the savings industry, the House Banking Committee on Tuesday approved an amendment that would give special treatment to low-income home buyers.

The committee voted, 33-14, to require the Resolution Trust Corp., which will dispose of more than $200 billion in troubled assets from failed institutions, to give poor home buyers and non-profit groups a three-month option to buy low-priced residential property.

The committee also voted to expand the board of the corporation beyond the three members proposed by the White House.

In addition to the treasury secretary, the attorney general and the chairman of the Federal Reserve, the committee included the secretary of housing and urban development and a private real estate expert as voting members.

It also included the chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. as a non-voting member.

The housing subsidy measure, which was proposed by Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., was one of a number of amendments that the committee considered that would broaden the social reach of the rescue plan. Most, however, were rejected.

The future of the Frank provision is far from certain.

After the full committee finishes its deliberations, the bill will go to the House Judiciary and Ways and

Firm to recycle plastic

HOUSTON (AP) — Browning-Ferris Industries Inc. said it has reached an agreement to supply plastic refuse to recycling company Wellman Inc., describing the deal as the first of its kind between major waste services and recycling companies.

Under the agreement, BFI will ship plastics from its curb side collection programs, buy back and processing centers to Wellman's facilities in South Carolina and Pennsylvania, officials said Tuesday.

"This will serve everyone's needs," BFI Chairman William D. Ruckelshaus said of the deal with Wellman, the nation's largest plastic recycler.

"It is expected to guarantee an assured market for all the plastics we are collecting in our recycling programs now and as we expand, to provide Wellman a growing supply of plastics so they can continue to grow," Ruckelshaus said.

Wellman, with 1988 sales of $314.6 million, manufactures a variety of products from waste plastics and other materials. Its primary raw materials are reclaimed soft drink bottles.

"We have long maintained that the key to effective plastic recycling lies primarily in establishing an effective and efficient collection program," Wellman President Tom Duff said. "Since BFI's interest is also business-driven, we are confident that this joint effort will be successful."

BFI, which has been involved in recycling since 1971, operates curb side recovery programs that include yard wastes, paper, metal and glass containers, plastics and oil. The company also operates "Recycleries," where materials for recycling are extracted from waste and where other materials are collected from the public.

No more towels please!

VALDEZ (SWN) — Sea otter and bird rescue centers at Valdez, Alaska, have been buried under a mountain of towels donated by concerned residents of the United States and Canada.

"The interest in our work at the otter and bird rescue centers has been overwhelming," says Randall Davis, Ph.D., director of the Otter Rescue Center. "We are very grateful for the outpouring of concern and support expressed by people who donated thousands of towels. Fortunately though, we do not need any more towels at either center."

The towels are used to wrap the birds in order to control them during the daily feedings. At the otter center, towels are used to clean and dry the animals and to provide padding in their enclosures. Even though the centers used about 300 towels each day during the peak of activity, there was an adequate supply of towels before the recent shipments began.

Since the spill occurred one month ago, the rescue centers have received a total of 144 sea otters and 396 birds. At the peak, according to Davis, the centers were receiving about 9 otters and 10 birds a day. But despite continued searching in Prince William Sound and in the northern Gulf of Alaska, the centers received only 2 otters and 1 bird last week.

The towels, sent from around the U.S. and Canada, have filled existing storage space, and the hundreds of boxes of incoming towels are now being stored in a hangar donated by the Civil Air Patrol. The otter and bird rescue centers in Valdez have more towels than they can use for the duration of their programs.

In addition to the donation of towels, many people have offered to send money.

Dollar trades in higher, narrow range

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was trading in a narrow, mostly higher band in Europe late this morning, supported by bullish sentiment but checked by fear of central bank intervention, currency dealers said.

Gold prices slipped.

Trading was thinned by a national holiday in Japan and an approaching holiday in Europe where many markets will close Thursday for Ascension Day.

Traders said there were concerns the central banks would step back into the market, following Tuesday's joint action in which they reportedly sold an $300 million to $400 million.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Tuesday:

—1.8896 West German marks, up from 1.8875

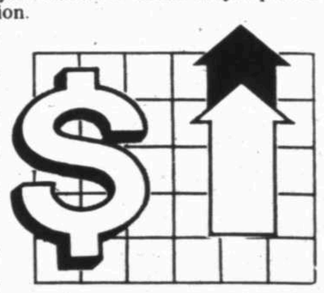

—1.6820 Swiss francs, up from 1.6805

—6.3865 French francs, up from 6.3735

—2.1320 Dutch guilders, up from 2.1270

—1,382.75 lire, up from 1,379.50

—1.1815 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1830

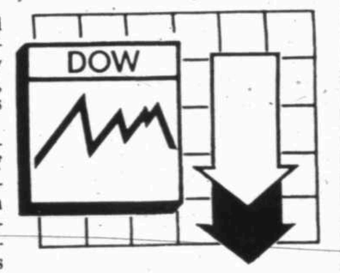

In London, the British pound fell slightly to $1.6838 from $1.6845 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London at $376 a troy ounce, down from $377.50 bid late Tuesday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $376.50.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.62 a troy ounce, down from Tuesday's $5.65.

Stocks fall in directionless session

NEW YORK (AP) — Prices dipped lower in dull and directionless trading on Wall Street Tuesday as many investors stayed on the sidelines, playing it safe in advance of Friday's unemployment report.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 12.10 to 2,402.86, but most of the plunge was attributed to a 3¼-point drop in the stock of Eastman Kodak, one of the average's components. Kodak closed at 43⅞ after announcing a disappointing drop in its first-quarter earnings.

Declining issues barely outnumbered advancing ones in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 720 issues rising, 729 falling and 530 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 172.56 million shares, up from 138.05 million in the previous session.

From Staff Reports

The physical presence of Pacific Texas Pipeline in Midland officially ended Tuesday with the auction of the firm's 90.3 acre parcel at the corner of Fairgrounds and Cloverdale roads.

The parcel which had been secured by Community National Bank with a $65,000 Trustee's deed was sold for $70,000 to Midland Farmer's Coop, which owns land adjacent to the parcel.

"The failure of Pacific Texas is unfortunate," said Bob Southerland, president Community National Bank, "a tank farm facility of that size could have meant alot of jobs on this side of town."

Bob Barnes, president of Rosa's Cafes Inc., has just signed a lease on the former Wendy's location at 903 Andrews Highway, where Midland's second ROSA'S CAFE AND TORTILLA FACTORY will open.

Barnes reports that he plans extensive remodeling, including expansion of the building itself. "This will be the first Rosa's with the 'new look,' which is more cheerful, brighter colors, higher ceilings, more open interiors and brightly-lit," he says. Construction should begin quickly and be completed sometime in July.

This will be the seventh Rosa's in the chain. There are currently three in Odessa and two in San Angelo. Barnes says he'd like to open two more in West Texas, and is looking at sites in Amarillo and Lubbock. In addition, he'd like to expand to northern markets such as Chicago, and eastern markets from Northern Florida to the Carolinas.

Home delivery has spread to the video rental industry with the opening of Midland's newest video store, ENCORE VIDEO (formerly Southwest Video). Owned by Midlander Craig Lee, it's open in Courtyard at Midland Park Mall in the former Ladybug Fashions location.

Lee says his store will pick and deliver tapes for an extra charge. In addition, he will take phone reservations.

New movies rent for $2.49, children's movies for 99 cents and other movies for $1.99. Encore also rents Nintendo games and players, videocassette recorders and cameras. Customers can also buy popcorn and 2 liter soft drinks, and Lee says he plans to offer more videos for sale than in the past.

A ribbon cutting is planned for Friday. A video recorder will be given away as will popcorn, soft drinks, balloons, and visits from clowns and perhaps Big Bird.

Hours are from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and 10 a.m. to 11 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

"We buy in bulk and buy a lot of close-outs," he explains. "And we guarantee everything we sell." Yaws has a background in construction, having spent 15 years in the remodeling industry. He says he decided he'd rather sell tools than use them, and thought a discount tool store would be a good enterprise.

American Airlines strike put on hold

DALLAS (AP) — A marathon bargaining session has led to an agreement in principle between AMR Corp. and the Transport Workers Union on a new contract, averting a threatened strike at American Airlines, the nation's largest carrier.

Neither side released details of the pact Tuesday, except a brief company statement that said union and management officials believe "the agreement benefits both the company and the union and will enable American to continue the growth plan that has made the airline an industry leader."

The statement by Fort Worth-based AMR said the agreement was reached following a 27-hour continuous bargaining session. Details were withheld pending "agreement on final language and ratification."

The airline and union, which represents about 23,000 of the company's 67,000 employees, had submitted to mediation after American's proposed $610 million four-year contract was rejected in March.

The rejected contract guaranteed raises for all employees, ranging from about 28 percent over four years to about 100 percent during the contract. However the union objected to American's two-tier wage scale, under which it takes new employees 12 years to reach top pay. The union had wanted that reduced to five years.

In addition, there were complaints that even with the increases American mechanics and ground service employees would not be the industry's highest-paid.

Also at issue was the company's plan to have employees pay $10 per person — and up to $30 per family — toward health insurance each month. The company previously has paid the entire premium.

The mediation, led by Harry Bickford, continued daily from its April 14 beginning until last Friday, when the parties took a two-day break before resuming Sunday, according to Ed Koziatek, the TWU's international vice president for American.

As late as Friday, however, Koziatek continued to predict that the talks would not be successful.

Airline officials have complained that the contract suffered from union politics as several locals were conducting election campaigns while the pact was up for ratification in March.

The four-year pact became amendable on March 1, but was rejected 12,143-to-5,140. However under the federal Railway Labor Act, transportation contracts do not expire until after a lengthy process which involves mediation, followed by a 30-day cooling-off period should the mediator declare an impasse in the negotiations.

The TWU represents the airline's mechanics, bag handlers, ground crews, stock clerks, guards, meteorologists and aircraft cleaners.

Also Tuesday, AMR confirmed it is on the verge of ordering about 100 new commuter aircraft in a "several hundred million dollar" deal.

The aircraft, seating between 30 and 40 people, will be used for the company's AMR Eagle Inc. subsidiary that feeds some of its major hubs.

Published reports have said the company is leaning toward Swedish manufacture Saab although others mentioned as possible suppliers include Boeing Canada-DeHavilland Division, based near Toronto, and ATR, a joint Freneh-Italian company.

A company spokesman said an agreement should be reached in a couple of weeks. Previously, the company also has said it is near a decision on locating a new $200 million maintainence facility. Leading contenders are in Oklahoma City, Okla., and near Fort Worth.

The purchase would be the latest in a busy plane-buying year for the company.

American announced in March a $3.09 billion deal with Dutch manufacturer Fokker for 75 F-100 planes and options for another 75 with another $2 billion purchase of 25 Boeing 757s and 10 Boeing 767s.

Piper blowout affecting offshore production

HOUSTON (AP) — Executives from oil companies producing in the rugged North Sea say they already have altered safety programs since the 1988 explosion aboard the Piper Alpha killed 167 workers, but hope a final report on the disaster can improve offshore operations worldwide.

"Since the Piper Alpha incident last year, some media comments have accused the industry of putting profits before safety. But suggesting that more profits means less safety or vice versa is, of course, a nonsense proposition," Keith H. Taylor, managing director of Esso Exploration and Production U.K. Ltd., said during a Tuesday panel discussion at the annual Offshore Technology Conference.

"Even apart from humanitarian reasons, the safer the operation, the greater the operating time of the facility, the less repairs needed, the greater the production levels and the lower the eventual costs," Taylor said.

The British government's Department of Energy said in a preliminary technical report last year that the cause of the explosion and fire was a buildup of gas following a leak in the platform's gas compression module.

A full-scale, government-ordered inquiry, headed by a senior judge, Lord Douglas Cullen, opened in the east coast Scottish oil port city of Aberdeen last January.

Although the investigation is not complete, Taylor and others said even the initial report already has brought about revised offshore operations.

"I think what is very clear is that all of the operators in the UK immediately following that did go back in and take a very close look at their operations," he said. "And based on the discussions that I've had, I believe different people have found different areas that they felt needed to be tightened up."

William K. Dietrich, executive vice president of international exploration and production for Conoco Inc., said the changes have not only applied to operations in the turbulent North Sea.

"Those of us with worldwide operations began acting on this as soon as we got the interim report out of the Department of Energy with regard to the sequence of events, even though we won't know precisely what happened until we get the Cullen recommendations," Dietrich said.

"One of the early reports of the Department of Energy was that a lot of the problems with the Piper Alpha dealt with smoke and the inability to get to survival suits," he said. "So right now on our new UK facilities, smoke hoods and survival suits are in each bedroom in the (living) quarters."

Conoco has also revised the position of certain pump units aboard their offshore units, and an official for the French oil company, Elf Aquitaine, said they also revised several safety procedures after the Piper Alpha blast.

Yves Lesage, executive vice president of exploration and production for Elf Aquitaine, said the company has improved the transfer of information from one work shift to another, altered safety plans for the formation of work areas and simplified emergency response systems.

However, Lesage and other panelists Tuesday agreed that the Piper Alpha accident was one of only many that have been scrutinized by offshore operators.

"We review every accident that occurs around the world," Lesage said. "And every time, we try to look and find some way that we can improve our safety network."

Taylor said the Piper Alpha accident and other mishaps in the North Sea over the past few years are a disappointment after an improving safety record in the previous decade.

PLAN

Means Committees and then to the full floor of the House.

After that, the Senate and House will hold a conference committee meeting to reconcile differences.

The most dramatic vote came in the early evening when the committee rejected an amendment that would require regulators to disclose whether banks and savings institutions are engaged in redlining.

Redlining is a systematic lending discrimination against minorities and low-income individuals.

In a 27-23 vote, the committee rejected a measure that would give the public access to Community Reinvestment Act examination reports on individual institutions compiled by regulators.

The Community Reinvestment Act amendment was sponsored by the committee's chairman, Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, and Joseph P. Kennedy 2nd, D-Mass.

Nevertheless, as the committee finishes its work on the plan that would spend $157 billion over 10 years to liquidate or sell more than 500 insolvent savings institutions, it has included modest support for low-income housing, going beyond what was approved by the Senate or proposed by the Bush administration.

For example, last week it approved a measure to divert as much as $100 million a year from the profits of the 12 Federal Home Loan Banks to lower the interest cost for low-income borrowers.

While some Democrats on the banking committee have pushed an array of social issues, the administration has found almost everyone arguing that the bailout is not the legislative vehicle for subsidizing home ownership for the poor.

In the vote on Frank's amendment, two Republicans joined 31 Democrats.

The other Republicans argued that it would restrict the government's ability to sell the property, open the government to lawsuits and eventually cost the government more money.

U.S.

Another study group looked into educational training patterns in different countries.

The report says American companies must enhance and modernize their production techniques, and it stresses that companies should seek managers who have greater knowledge of the products manufactured by the operation.

At the news conference, some of the professors who wrote the report criticized American managers as being too removed from the processes they oversee.

The report also says companies should provide more extensive on-the-job training, saying that too many managers neglect their work forces.

"They still look at the work force as a cost factor to be minimized, instead of as a resource," said Michael Dertouzos, chairman of the MIT commission and director of the university's Laboratory for Computer Science, who worked on the report.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Life insurance cannot substitute for savings

By BILL DOYLE

Q. When our three grandchildren were very young, we took out ordinary life insurance policies on each of them as a form of savings to assist with the education costs when they reach college age. My wife and I are the owners of the policies and the children's parents are the beneficiaries.

We have used the policies' dividends to purchase additional insurance and to enhance the cash values of the policies. When the policies are cashed, will we be responsible for income tax on the accumulated dividends? Or can we shift that responsibility to the recipients?

A. To begin with, your purchase of those policies has to be called a mistake. You would have been far wiser to invest elsewhere the money that has gone into life insurance premiums. There are only two good reasons to buy a life insurance policy on a child's life.

The first is, if the policy has a "guaranteed insurability" clause, to make sure the child will be able to buy more life insurance without a physical examination later on in life.

The second is to pay funeral expenses in the unhappy event of the child's death.

Mention of the above always brings screaming letters from some people in the insurance business. Nonetheless, premiums paid on such policies is almost always wasted money because young folks' mortality rates are low in comparison to premium charges.

When a policy is cashed, no income tax will be due unless the cash surrender value received exceeds the total of premiums paid. In that case, the excess will be taxable to the policy owner.

You can transfer each policy by assigning "all incidents of ownership" to your grandchild or his or her parent. Then, any income tax liability will rest with the new owner. Such a transfer is irrevocable. Once you do it, you can't take it back.

Q. I wish to invest for a new grandchild's education. Should I start a savings account or take out an insurance policy on my life, with the child as the beneficiary? I lean toward the insurance policy, as it would pay off when I die.

A. There's no getting around the fact that insurance policy would provide more money for the youngster, if you leave this vale of tears in not too many years – before the money that would gone into a savings account tops the policy's death benefit.

However, let's look at the bright side and assume you have a long life. By stashing the money away where it earns a good rate of interest, it should grow larger than the amount that would be received if the insurance policy is surrendered.

My advice is to forget about insurance and put the money where it will be readily available. Since you evidently want safety, a savings account or certificates of deposit would be good choices.

Also, consider Series EE, U.S. Savings Bonds, where interest builds up tax-deferred until the bonds are redeemed. Under present tax law, that interest will be taxed at the child's tax rate if the bonds are cashed after the child reaches age 14. You won't be eligible to buy the tax-free education EEs which go on sale next Jan. 1. That deal will be open only to parents. But my hunch is that many grandparents will be turning money over to parents to purchase such bonds.

Q. Is it true that a person does not have to pay income tax on the dividends from his life insurance policy, if those dividends are used to buy additional insurance or used to reduce the policy's premiums?

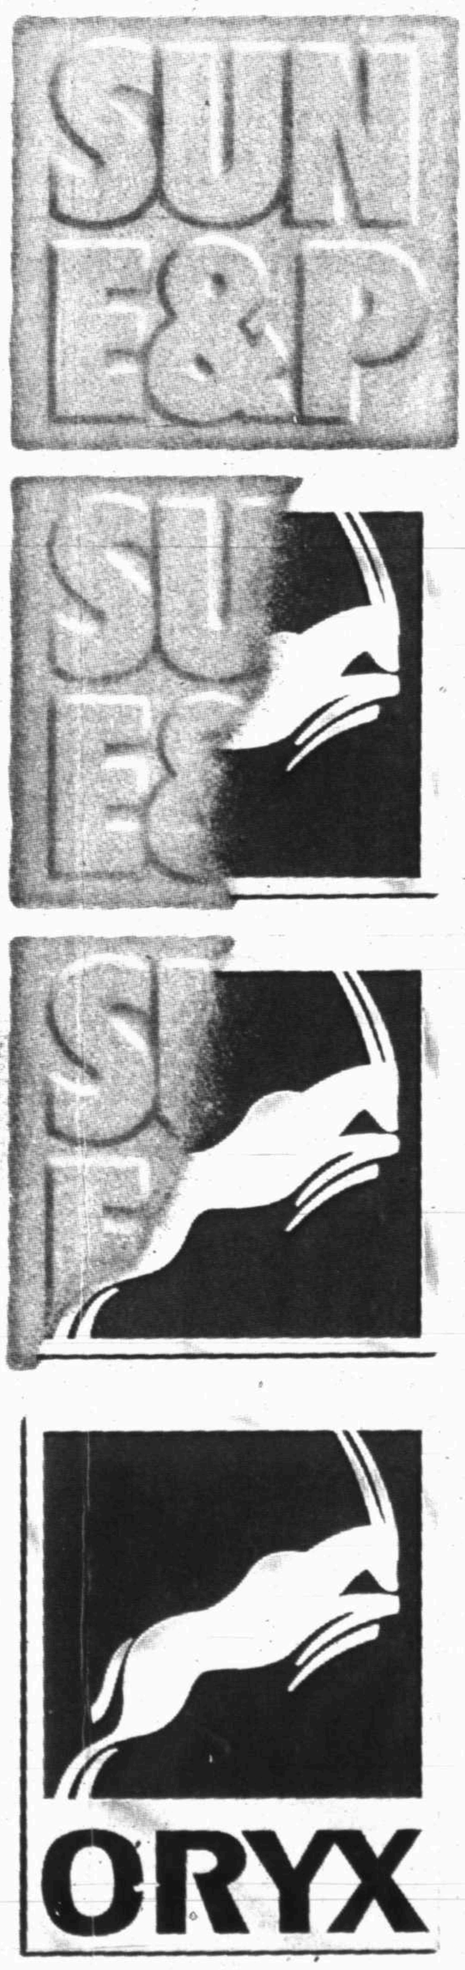

A. So-called "dividends" paid on "participating" life insurance policies are never taxable unless they exceed the total premiums paid. Those dividends come from the money an insurance company has left over after meeting all expenses. They actually are a refund of your premiums. Life insurance critics say dividends are paid because premiums are too high in the first place.

However, if you leave your dividends with the insurance company to earn interest, that interest is subject to income tax.

Look Ma, No Seeds!

By MYRA SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

It seems like a watermelon lover's dream come true — a watermelon with no seeds. And that's just the beginning. Thanks to the wonders of genetic science, there are stringless snap peas, gourds that look like snakes and serve as their own scarecrows, pink pampas grass and flowers with blue petals.

Torenia fournier now comes in rose and shades of blue.

Some garden hybrids have been developed solely to be visually fascinating, such as flowers and plants in unexpected colors. For example, the standard white flowering stalk of pampas grass now comes in pink, and torenia fournier — which is usually yellow or orange — now comes in rose and shades of blue in a mixture dubbed Torenia F2 Clown Mixture.

Scientists also have developed an improved ear of corn called BUTTERFRUIT (TM) Bicolor, which has white and yellow kernals in what is referred to as the "butter and sugar" pattern. The corn is bred to be twice as sweet as an average ear of corn. Because sugar converts slowly to starch, these hybrids retain their flavor up to two weeks longer.

Even through white and yellow corn kernals on the same ear of corn is unusual, the most surprising new hybrid is the Honey Red Seedless Watermelon. It is the product of a triploid hybrid. Seeds don't develop from ovules, so the flesh is eaten whole.

According to the developers, seedless watermelons are sweeter and crisper and keep longer after being cut. Since the watermelons do not produce seeds, all the vine's energy goes into producing sugar, and the flesh remains frim well past ripeness.

Sugar Baby watermelon seeds, which are used as a pollinator, are included with the Honey Red Seedless Watermelon seeds, along with instructions explaining pollination.

Not only will trying to cut around the seeds in watermelon become obsolete, but stringing snap peas will also become a thing of the past if the new stringless Sugar Daddy's catch on.

According to Park Seeds, Sugar Daddy is the first stringless snap pea. Dr. Calvin Lamborn originated the Sugar Snap and worked over 10 years on developing the stringless Snap Pea.

Snap Peas, which were only introduced on the market eight years ago, were developed to eliminate the toughness in pods, so that they could be eaten whole. After ripening, the pods are snapped into bite size pieces and cooked like green beans.

Other plants bred for a purpose which merit a second glance from passersby include:

- SNAKE GOURD — This plant has the ominous sounding genus name of Trichosanthes Cucumerina Anguina. The gourd grows into the shape of a snake preparing to strike. Developers said, "it serves as its own scarecrow; fools some people too."
- RED STRAWBERRY POPCORN — This plant forms tiny 1½-inch strawberry-shaped ears crowded with small deep crimson kernels, which makes an attractive decoration and a good popping corn as well. Approximately 400 seeds per ounce. Open pollinated.
- EASTER EGGPLANT — A hybrid which products eggplants the actual size of an egg. Each plant has the capability of producing several different colored eggplants per bush, including shades of cream, yellow, orange and green. As many as 12 or more "eggs" are borne on small 12-inch plants.
- PUMPKIN JACK BE LITTLE — This is a true miniature pumpkin, just two inches high and three inches in diameter. Of deep orange color, it was developed for use in decorative arrangements.

For information on any of the above fruits and vegetables write: Park Seed Co., Cokesbury Road, Greenwood, S.C., 29647-0001. For information on the Torenia F2 Clown Mixture write: All America Selections, 1311 Butterfield Road, Suite 310, Downers Grove, Ill., 60515.

The unusal new garden hybrids promise to be showstoppers, and now that seedless watermelons have been developed, can pitless cheeries be far behind?

Balloon acts as scarecrow

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Keeping birds out of gardens and crops is an age-old problem for gardeners and farmers. Some gardeners have used firecrackers, sonic devices, carbide and propane cannons, rubber snakes and owl decoys to frighten birds away from gardens. But most methods become ineffective as birds become accustomed to them. Netting is expensive and may harm birds and chemical controls which repell birds are harmful to the environment.

A few Japanese entrepreneurs have developed a balloon — called the "Scare-Eye" — to protect millions of acres of rice crops from damage done by birds. The brightly-colored orange and yellow balloon is hung from trees or long poles.

According to Dan Hartmann, owner of Hartmann's Plantation in Grand Junction, Mich., the balloon is reported to scare away flocks of marauding birds which are repelled by its bright color and bizarre design.

Made from a heavy gauge weather-proof vinyl, the balloons are the size of basketballs and have a series of prominent bulls-eyes painted on the sides. The bulls-eyes are black and red and exaggerate the glaring eyes and gaping mouth of a predatory hawk.

Hartmann said "control is most effective with birds that form flocks and cause greatest damage — particularly starlings, grackles, crows and pigeons. Desirable garden birds such as swallows, purple martins and songbirds are not scared by the balloon."

Two balloons are recommended for the average small garden; six balloons are recommended per acre. Cost of the balloon is $14.90 each, shipping included. Inflated size of the balloon is 16 inches in diameter.

For information write: Hartmann's Plantation Inc., P.O. Box E, 310 60th St., Grand Junction, Mich., 49056, or call (616) 253-4281.

Gardening tops nation's list of outdoor hobbies

Hearst Features Services

Gardening has become the No. 1 outdoor leisure activity in America — and reading gardening catalogs must be one of the top indoor games.

Where once wedding presents were restricted to items such as Waterford crystal or Gorham sterling, now, according to an article in the current issue of Town & Country, brides are being given carbon-steel spade and digging fork sets or, more modestly, a swan neck hoe.

A rototiller, a Garden Way cart, exotic irises or a grow light are among the garden gifts for today's newlyweds.

Much of the impetus for this garden giving comes from the proliferation of garden catalogs that start arriving around the time the last tulip bulb is planted in November and continue until the eggplant seeds are started in March.

The winter months are the time for "head gardening," reading about which plants are available, creating imaginary Edens with them, then ruthlessly thinning and weeding out the choices that time, space and budget preclude.

Mail-order companies will never replace the local nursery, where you can investigate first-hand. But catalogs offer an ever-expanding universe of plants not found locally, usually at lower prices. They often provide a good deal of helpful information and wild species and "heirloom" varieties as well as news on what's new.

Shopping by catalog can be confusing. Even a selected sampling of the most interesting catalogs includes 25 seed catalogs, seven for herbs, 11 for fruits, 25 dealing in perennials, 10 on wildflowers, eight on roses, eight on shrubs and trees and another five on garden gear.

Sometimes it is hard to tell which sources offer good buys and which do not. A low-priced plant may be a bargain or it may be just a small plant. An expensive plant might be a large one or an overpriced one, a rare, choice plant or a new introduction.

The best way to sift through all this is to order a few plants from different companies until you find the nurseries with which you are most happy.

Store seeds away from heat, humidity

From Staff Reports

Unused garden seeds should be stored away from heat and humidity. For this reason unused garden seeds should not be stored outside or in an unheated garden shed. They need to be kept away from damp or moist places.

Instead store seeds in a sealed mason jar or freezer-weight sealed plastic bag. Shepherd's Garen Seeds suggests storing seeds in a refrigerator for best results.

Yogurt: Dessert without guilt

By MARSHA KAY SEFF
Copley News Service

Billed as dessert without guilt, soft frozen yogurt has catapulted to the top of the menu for health-conscious Americans.

"It's the product of the century," says the owner of a yogurt shop. Indeed, last year Americans bought more than $750 million worth of frozen yogurt. According to the California Milk Advisory Board, frozen yogurt sales have increased 255 percent since 1980. At the same time, per capita consumption has climbed to about 1.5 quarts.

Although the product was first introduced on the East Coast, manufacturers say the bulk of today's sales is in the western states. In the west, frozen yogurt stores are becoming as prolific as gas stations. In fact, some convenience stores, like AM PM Mini Marts, are beginning to dish up the frozen dessert along with fill-ups.

Meanwhile, yogurt franchises have extended all the way to Japan and Norway.

Manufacturers' names, like Alta-Dena, Honey Hill Farms, TCBY, Dairy Mart, Continental, Ambrosia and Colombo, are becoming as familiar to young devotees as Howard Johnson once was to their grandparents.

So what's the scoop on the taste treat that has challenged ice cream and even found a home for itself at the likes of Baskin-Robbins and Haagen-Dazs?

Though some gourmet yogurts can be as fattening as some brands of ice cream, most frozen yogurt has fewer calories. In addition to the low-fat frozen yogurt that started the trend, shops now offer non-fat yogurt as well.

CNS Photo

Frozen yogurt with tasty toppings has become a favorite "guilt-free" dessert.

ACCORDING TO the Berkeley Wellness Letter, published by UC Berkeley, frozen yogurt is low in fat, calories and cholesterol.

Low-fat yogurt has about 27 calories per ounce (non-fat has between 15 and 22, according to manufacturers), compared with 30 calories for ice milk, 38 for regular ice cream and 66 for premium ice cream.

While low-fat yogurts have about 1 percent fat, ice milk has 2 percent, regular ice cream 10 percent, and premium ice cream 16 percent, according to the publication. Non-fat yogurt has less than 1 percent fat.

However, if you are feeling pious about your frozen yogurt diet, you may want to reconsider. "Frozen yogurt is only part of a healthy diet," says dietitian Wendy Shigenaga. "Too much of a good thing isn't necessarily good. You need to have a variety of other foods in your diet."

And many of the toppings offered at yogurt shops are fattening and unhealthy. These toppings include the likes of crumbled brownies, Oreo cookies, gummy bears and M&Ms along with fresh fruit, granola and carob chips.

AFICIONADOS WHO are counting calories need to be careful, according to dietitians. While some stores do display manufacturers' ingredients, employees at other shops don't have any idea how many calories they are packing into their plastic-foam containers. Even clerks who do quote calorie counts often don't carefully weigh the cups of yogurt to determine how many ounces are in each serving.

If you are concerned, the experts suggest it is best to ask for a manufacturer's brochure and insist the clerk weigh your dessert.

But calories and cholesterol don't tell the whole story of yogurt's rising popularity.

There are dozens of yogurt flavors, including such exotic choices as kiwi, mango and Kahlua. (However, chocolate, vanilla and strawberry remain the favorites. At Honey Hill Farms, a manufacturer headquartered in Concord, Calif., chocolate and vanilla make up about 40 percent of total sales.)

Flavors range from the tart, puckery ones associated with traditional, refrigerated yogurt to ice-cream-sweet flavors made with milder cultures. Textures also vary from light and icy to rich and pudding smooth. The consistency of the yogurt begins in the factories. But many of the shop owners believe the gravity-fed or pressurized freezing machines, which cost up to $8,000 each, can affect creaminess.

Yogurt is created when bacteria are added to milk or milk-and-cream mixtures. L. bulgaricus, S. thermophilus and L. acidophilus are the bacteria most often used. The companies say the live bacteria aid in digestion.

"This makes a difference to lactose (milk sugar) intolerant people, but not much difference to others," according to Maureen Kelley, a dietitian with the Dairy Council of California.

Some brands of frozen yogurts are made with sugar, others substitute honey or fructose. "Health-wise and calorie-wise, it's all the same," says Kelley.

THOUGH SOME purists turn up their noses at the mention of other ingredients, including emulsifiers, stabilizers and gum, Shigenaga says they are not really a problem.

Emulsifiers keep the yogurt together, stabilizers keep it frozen and gummy ingredients give it texture. "All frozen desserts have these ingredients and they're not unhealthful," says Shigenaga.

While the new non-fat yogurt has become increasingly more popular, manufacturers and dietitians point out the calorie difference isn't enough to make or break a diet unless you eat it daily. Additionally, says dietitian Karen Freeman, don't be misled by claims that non-fat yogurt is truly without fat. If a product has less than a gram of fat per ounce, the government doesn't require manufacturers to list it, she said.

"So even the non-fat can actually have fat," Freeman adds.

However, while frozen yogurt may not be a miracle food, "it's still a wonderful, nutritious product," according to Freeman, who says it has become part of her daily diet.

Nationwide, there are more than a dozen companies specializing in frozen yogurt. "Business is great; it keeps getting bigger and bigger and we're having a heck of a good time," said John Murphy, executive vice president of Honey Hill Farms, a California-based company specializing in yogurt since 1980.

When Noreen Walsh opened Yogurt World 12 years ago in Claremont, Calif., she had to beg people to taste free samples. But Walsh says that as soon as people tasted the product, they liked it. And the shop became self-supporting almost immediately.

MORE THAN a decade later, Jean Zafis, who owns a California Yogurt Co. franchise, says, "I opened my shop in November when no one in her right mind would open a frozen-dessert store, and by February I was already in the black."

Meals blossom with applesauce

McLEAN, Va. (AP) — Applesauce blends well with a variety of ingredients, and can be used many different ways. The International Apple Institute offers these suggestions:

■ Breakfast with applesauce: Heat chunky applesauce, flavor with cinnamon, ladle over French toast, and dust with confectioners' sugar.

■ Johnny Applesnack: Place applesauce in waxed paper cups. Top with granola.

■ Taste a trifle: In a trifle bowl or in individual champagne flutes, alternate layers of applesauce and crumbled pound cake. Top with whipped cream, sprinkle with cinnamon sugar, and garnish with a sprig of mint.

■ Pair up with a pineapple: Wash a ripe pineapple. Cut in half, lengthwise, through the pineapple and foliage. Remove core from both sides and discard. Cut pineapple pulp into small chunks and place in a small bowl. Add 1 cup applesauce, 1 teaspoon vanilla extract and 1 teaspoon of crushed, dried mint. Mix and return to pineapple halves to serve.

■ Applesaucy gravy: Place a small amount of margarine in a skillet and reheat a large slice of fully cooked ham. Remove ham to a heated platter. Add ¼ cup apple juice and ¼ cup raisins to the pan. Simmer, while stirring, for 2 minutes. Add ½ cup chunky applesauce, mix and heat through. To serve, pour applesauce over ham slice.

■ Applesauce dressing: In a small bowl, mix 1 cup applesauce, 1 cup low-fat vanilla yogurt, 2 tablespoons honey, 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon, ½ teaspoon ground cloves and a dash of nutmeg. Prepare a fruit salad, top with cottage cheese, and drizzle with applesauce dressing.

■ Saucy cornbread: In a medium-sized bowl, mix together 2-3rds cup applesauce, 1 egg and ¾ teaspoon ground cinnamon. Mix in one 8½-ounce package of cornbread mix. Pour into greased 8- by 8-inch pan, sprinkle with cinnamon sugar and bake in a preheated 350-degree F oven for 15 minutes.

■ Applesauce-cheese melts: Lightly toast English muffins. Top with applesauce and sharp Cheddar cheese. Broil just long enough to warm applesauce and melt cheese.

■ Delicious dipping: Soften blue cheese and mix in applesauce until mixture is of dip consistency. Add curry powder to taste and serve as a dip, surrounded by fresh apple slices.

DEAR ABBY

Mom wants to pull plug on her son's high electric bills

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a divorced woman living on a very low disability income. My grown son lives with me. I try to conserve on everything I can, but he uses water and gas to heat the water for the 20-minute shower he takes every morning. He works 40 hours a week, goes to the YMCA to work out, and he's with his girlfriend the rest of the time. He eats all his meals out, but he comes home to sleep. The minute he gets home, he turns the TV on, and leaves it on while he sleeps! He often falls asleep with the lights on.

He runs up my electric bill with his radio, electric hair blower and his electric shaver. And he can't take a drink of water without letting the water run for five minutes. He's too lazy to look up telephone numbers, so he calls information, which is charged to my bill. (Can't he add?)

He gives me a lousy $20 a week out of the $160 take-home pay he gets, and he complains yet. I think he's getting a good deal. If you agree with me, please print this so I can show it to my son. — FED UP

DEAR FED UP: Here's your letter. Clip it and pin it on your son's pillow. Or tape it to his shower curtain, his hair blower, his television set, his light switch or his telephone. Your son should not complain. YOU should. I think you're entitled to more.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have a disagreement that perhaps you can resolve.

Our disagreement comes about because when we are watching TV, I regularly use the mute button to tune out the commercials. My wife says this is wrong — that if I watch the programs, I ought to listen to the sponsor's commercials.

My attitude is that the companies that control television programming abuse the airwaves by using an inordinate number of commercials, most of which are inherently deceptive, and that I am under no obligation to listen to this trash.

Which one of us is right? — "THE CLICKER" IN PALM SPRINGS

DEAR CLICKER: Whether or not one chooses to listen to the TV commercials is a personal decision. You are entitled to your opinion and your wife is entitled to hers. And if this is the most serious disagreement you ever have, count yourselves lucky.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I agreed to chip in with a group of friends to buy a 50th wedding anniversary gift for a couple we have known for many years. The group giving this gift consists of eight married couples and one widow.

One member of our group — not the widow — adamantly insists that the cost of the gift should be divided by 17. We think it should be divided by nine.

What do you think? — IN DOUBT IN ARIZONA

DEAR IN DOUBT: Is the widow's deceased husband going to be at the anniversary party? Of course not. Therefore the cost of the gift should be divided by 17 — each couple paying two shares, leaving the widow with one.

DEAR ABBY: I was the "pen pal czar" for Operation Dear Abby while I was command chaplain for USS Coral Sea, and I shall always remember with fondness the excitement created by the thousands of letters we received daily after you launched your letter-writing campaign in 1987. What a terrific morale booster that was!

Numerous servicemen (and women) developed romances through those letters that ended in marriage. May 6 will mark nearly one and a half years since John Frakes answered a letter from Kathy McQuiston of New Castle, Pa. And by the time you read this, they will be married. Keep up the good work, Abby! — MICHAEL D. HALLEY, COMMAND CHAPLAIN

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy and how to handle the pain of growing up. It's all in Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Pork chop dish cooked to even doneness in microwave oven

Associated Press

For even doneness, cook pork chops in your microwave oven on 30 percent power, medium-low. The sauce cooks in minutes on high.

TOMATO-SAUCED PORK CHOPS

3 pork loin chops, cut ¾-inch thick (1¼ to 1½ pounds total)
1 8-ounce can stewed tomatoes
1½ teaspoons cornstarch
½ teaspoon lemon-pepper seasoning
⅛ teaspoon garlic powder
⅛ teaspoon dried marjoram, crushed
2 tablespoons sliced pitted ripe olives
Thinly sliced green onion

Trim separable fat from chops; sprinkle chops lightly with salt. In a microwave-safe 8x8x2-inch baking dish arrange chops with meatiest portions facing the outside of the dish. Cover with microwave-safe plastic wrap, turning back one corner to allow steam to escape. Cook on 30 percent power (medium-low) 10 minutes. Turn chops over and rotate dish a half-turn. Cook, covered, on medium-low 10 to 12 minutes more or until chops are tender and no pink remains. Drain juices from baking dish. Cover chops to keep warm.

For sauce, in a 2-cup glass measure combine tomatoes, cornstarch, lemon-pepper seasoning, garlic powder and marjoram. Cook, uncovered, on 100 percent power (high) 2 to 3 minutes or until thickened and bubbly, stirring every 45 seconds. Spoon sauce over chops. Sprinkle with olives and onion. Serves 3.

Celebrate coming of spring with 'sensational' strawberry cake

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

"Sensational!" we said when we saw this strawberries-and-cream dessert. The sample tasted even better than it looked.

STRAWBERRY SILHOUETTE CAKE

3 egg yolks
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon finely shredded lemon peel
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ cup sifted cake flour or sifted all-purpose flour
3 egg whites
6 cups whole strawberries
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
2½ cups whipping cream
3 tablespoons powdered sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla

Beat egg yolks for 1 minute. Gradually add ½ cup of the sugar. Beat 5 minutes or until thick. Add peel and juice. Beat until combined. Gradually add flour, beating until combined. Beat egg whites until stiff peaks form. Fold one-fourth of the beaten whites into yolk mixture. Gently fold yolk mixture into remaining whites just until combined. Spread evenly in a ungreased 9-inch springform pan. Bake in 350-degree F oven 20 to 25 minutes or until top springs back when lightly touched. Invert to cool.

Reserve 4 berries for garnish. Crush 1¼ cups of the remaining berries. Stir in remaining sugar. Set aside. Combine gelatin and cold water. Let stand 5 minutes. Cook and stir until gelatin is dissolved. Stir in crushed berries. Remove from heat. Cool.

Meanwhile, cut around sides of pan to loosen cake. Remove pan sides. Cut between bottom of cake and pan. Remove pan bottom. Cut cake in half horizontally. Wash and reassemble pan. Beat 1 cup of the whipping cream until stiff peaks form. Fold into cooled gelatin mixture. Chill until mixture mounds when spooned.

Place bottom cake layer in pan, cut side up. Arrange remaining berries, pointed ends up, evenly on top. Spread gelatin mixture evenly over berries. Top with second cake layer, cut side down. Cover. Chill several hours or until gelatin mixture is firm. Cut around sides of cake to loosen. Remove pan sides and bottom. Place on serving plate. Beat remaining whipping cream, powdered sugar and vanilla until stiff peaks form. Frost top and sides. Garnish with reserved berries.

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The changes that take place around you will have a deep, private effect on you and your plans. Get out and socialize more, especially during the summer. Fall brings you a rare opportunity to demonstrate your capabilities. Showcase your special talents to impress someone with the influence and wealth to help you realize a dream. A longtime love relationship becomes even more important to your happiness.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Audrey Hepburn, actor Howard DaSilva, jazz musician Maynard Ferguson, singer Roberta Peters, golfer Betsy Rawls, educator Horace Mann, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, conservative columnist George Will.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are more beguiling and magnetic than ever now. Better concentrate on getting your priorities in order or you could miss out on some wonderful opportunities. Put work ahead of fun.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Today's events will help turn negative factors into positive ones. Not a good time for taking risks with your finances or relationships. Stick to the tried-and-true. A conventional approach works best.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Pay bills on time to protect your credit rating. Fortunate financial developments mean that you will have funds for tuition, home repairs. Avoid scattering your energies; tackle one project at a time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Courage will help you overcome a barrier today. Look carefully and you will find hidden benefits in a project that goes sour. Something you thought lost forever is found. Count your blessings!

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 ♣	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Seven of ♣

By his very nature, man tends to cling to his assets. But once in a while a timely divestiture can bring huge returns.

South's bidding showed a balanced 23-24 points, so North had just enough to raise to game—had his king been a queen, pass would probably have been in order. West led his fourth-best club. You correctly inserted dummy's nine to see if that would fetch the queen, and East rose with the ace. Before you commit yourself at trick one, consider how you would tackle the hand.

First, count your tricks. With the ace of clubs gone, there are seven. The two more you need will have to come from the diamond suit. Since the diamond finesse must work if you're going to succeed (allow West to gain the lead with the king of diamonds and he is going to be able to run his clubs), you will need either a second diamond finesse or a 3-3 split.

Obviously, a second finesse would be the better proposition. However, there seems to be only one entry to dummy—the king of spades. Is there a way around that impasse?

Jettison the king of clubs under the ace! If West's lead was fourth-best, the Rule of 11 tells you that East started with only one card higher than the seven, and he just played it. Therefore, dummy's club jack will be a sure entry.

Whether East returns a club or not, you are in control. You use your two black-suit entries to dummy for two diamond finesses. If the cards lie as in the diagram, that will net you three tricks in diamonds for a total of nine—all you contracted for!

Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis no shrinking White House violet, new book claims

NEW YORK (AP) — Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy Onassis is not the frail, whispery-voiced woman the American people saw standing by the side of President Kennedy, says the author of an unauthorized biography of the former first lady.

Onassis

The real Jackie, says writer C. David Heymann, is a strong-willed woman who was probably a principal designer of the Kennedy administration's Camelot image.

"The image of this good Catholic husband with two beautiful children and a beautiful wife posing on the White House lawn was not the case," he said.

In his book, "A Woman Named Jackie," which went on sale Tuesday, Heymann attempted to unravel the life and character of one of the world's most admired, photographed and written-about yet enigmatic women.

"Although there have been so many things written about her, nothing I read really did the woman justice," he said in a telephone interview. "Everything was based on gossip and innuendo. I felt something along definite lines should be written."

His 631-page book is based on interviews with 825 people, including friends, employees and family members, but none of the Kennedys.

The author, by appealing to the director of Presidential Libraries in Washington, D.C., gained access to the former first lady's White House social files. Through the Freedom of Information Act, he obtained thousands of pages of previously undisclosed FBI, CIA and Secret Service files.

Heymann's purpose was not to document the public successes and failures of the Kennedys' years in the White House, but to scrutinize their successes and failures as individuals — as husband and wife.

Indeed, a good portion of the book is devoted to the slain president's many alleged liaisons with women.

"A lot of this wasn't my original intention to go into his affairs in such depth," said Heymann. "I had merely heard all the rumors and innuendo. But, as a result of digging into various files, ... a lot of this became fact not merely rumor.

Mrs. Onassis' spokeswoman, Nancy Tuckerman, has said Mrs. Onassis would not comment on the book. A telephone message left at her office Tuesday was not returned.

According to Heymann, Kennedy once sneaked out of a New York hotel for a sexual liaison without telling the Secret Service and without taking the list of codes he needed in the event of a nuclear attack.

Langdon Marvin Jr., a former defense consultant to Kennedy who had accompanied him on the jaunt, was quoted in the book as saying, "The Russians could have bombed us to hell and back, and there would have been nothing we could have done about it."

The date of the alleged incident was not given. Marvin died in 1987, according to Sandra Bodner, a spokeswoman for the publisher, Lyle Stuart.

Heymann wrote that Mrs. Kennedy, who married Kennedy in 1953, responded to her husband's sexual dalliances by being "glacially cold" toward him and going on spending sprees.

"It was at these junctures that she went on shopping binges, disbursing thousands of dollars on jewelry, designer clothes, paintings; whatever captured her fancy," he wrote.

After the August 1963 death of the Kennedys' third child, when the boy was just 3 days old, the couple seemed to grow closer in their grief, Heymann wrote.

But Mrs. Kennedy's life was shattered on Nov. 22, 1963, in Dallas when her husband was assassinated while riding with her in a motorcade.

Heymann wrote that the first lady refused to take a sedative as she waited in her blood-splattered outfit at Parkland Memorial Hospital.

"I don't want a sedative," Mrs. Kennedy reportedly said. "I want to be with my husband when he dies."

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — The voices of the late Gov. Earl Long and lawmakers from three decades ago reverberated through the Capitol — courtesy of actor Paul Newman and company.

Newman

The cast and crew of the movie "Blaze" — a portrayal of Long's relationship with stripper Blaze Starr during the late 1950s — took over the House chamber shortly after lawmakers recessed at midnight Monday.

Although the chamber was sealed off to visitors, Newman was heard all over the Capitol through the House sound system.

Most of the day was spent on a scene in which Long, portrayed by Newman, made an uninvited appearance on the House floor and demanded the microphone to discuss black voting rights.

NEW YORK (AP) — Say bye-bye to Bill The Cat, the drug-addled feline who's smooched Jeane Kirkpatrick and swapped brains with Donald Trump. Bill and the other residents of "Bloom County" are soon to be history, the latest victims of funny-page flameout.

Cartoonist Berke Breathed pulled the plug on the Pulitzer Prize-winning "Bloom County" earlier this week, becoming the third comic-page fixture to leave fans hanging in recent years.

But while Garry Trudeau and Gary Larson put their characters on vacation when cartooning became a grind, Breathed opted to off his.

"A good comic strip is no more eternal than a ripe melon. The ugly truth is that in most cases, comics age less gracefully than their creators. 'Bloom County' is retiring before the stretch marks show," Breathed said in explaining his decision.

Readers of nearly 800 newspapers now will learn to live without big-beaked penguin Opus, his buddy Milo and motley party animal Bill The Cat; no longer will their lives intersect those of Kirkpatrick, Trump or Lee Iacocca — three public figures frequently skewered by Breathed.

But such bad news is becoming all too common for the discerning comic reader, who in the recent years has lost Larson's "The Far Side" and Trudeau's "Doonesbury" for extended periods while their creators escaped the day-to-day drudgery.

"I need a breather. Investigative cartooning is a young man's game," said Trudeau in announcing his hiatus from January 1983 to September 1984 — a move that was questioned by veteran cartoonists such as Milton Caniff of "Steve Canyon."

"Another guy is waiting in the wings, and once you're out you often can't get back in — the space is filled," said Caniff, who has since died.

Similarly, Larson's syndicate editor, Lee Salem, explained the cartoonist "felt he needed to get away from the deadline situation for a while so he could try to regenerate his cells." "The Far Side" is due back in 1990.

While Trudeau and Larson took breathers to escape burnout, Breathed will resume his career with an entirely new Sundays-only strip.

Cooking skills are not necessary for making tasty, appealing salads

NEW YORK (AP) — You don't have to be a culinary expert to make a salad that is both appealing to the eye and the palate. A variety of ingredients make salads fun and easy to prepare, any time of the year.

Modern transportation methods have made it possible for growers and suppliers to provide many fresh vegetables year-round. Be sure to choose only the freshest, most crisp and colorful greens and vegetables available at the market.

Blanchard & Blanchard, maker of all-natural salad dressings and other products from Vermont, says it's easy to create your own best-dressed salads — whether it's a pasta salad, chef salad or bean salad.

A salad composed of vegetables from at least two color groups — green, red, yellow and orange — will offer flavor and textural contrast.

Green vegetables include artichokes, asparagus, broccoli, lettuce, peas, peppers, scallions, snow peas, spinach, string beans and watercress.

Red vegetables: beets, cabbage, onion, peppers, radishes and tomatoes.

Yellow vegetables: corn, peppers, squash and string beans.

Orange vegetables: carrots and pimientos.

Unpeeled cucumber and zucchini can provide a "two-toned look" to your salad. Vegetables with pale shades include artichoke hearts, avocado, cabbage, cauliflower, celery, chick peas, endive, mushrooms, onion, potatoes and sprouts.

You can also experiment with different textures and appearances by using different shapes and sizes. Slice vegetables thick or thin, or grate, chop or dice them.

The following tips for creating a best-dressed salad are provided by Blanchard & Blanchard:

■ Rinse all greens and vegetables thoroughly. To enjoy full flavor, rinse greens in cold water, wrap in paper towels, and store in the refrigerator until ready to use.

■ Vegetables should be rinsed, dried and stored in the coolest part of the refrigerator.

■ Always gently tear all salad leaves. Cutting greens with a knife may take less time, but can cause premature brown spotting.

■ Don't chop off asparagus ends. Bend each spear gently until it snaps in two. It will break at just the right place to separate the tender tops from the tougher ends.

Marinated vegetables make easy salads when served alone or in combination with others. Take leftover vegetables and put them in a bowl with a light vinaigrette. Cover and refrigerate until you need them. They also make a healthy snack.

Mushrooms absorb a marinade fairly quickly. Try marinating some raw slices of mushroom in your favorite dressing for just a short time while preparing dinner, then toss them into your green salad.

Marinated chick peas make a good addition to a green salad. Take a can of chick peas, rinse with cold water, drain well, marinate in dressing and store covered in the refrigerator. They will keep about 10 days.

Mozzarella cheese is popular on salads, but fresh mozzarella is very different from the packaged variety. Fresh mozzarella is soft and tender and stored in water. You will find it in a gourmet shop or an Italian delicatessen.

For a new twist to an old favorite, serve slices of fresh melon and bunches of crisp, juicy grapes with chicken, tuna and turkey salad sandwiches.

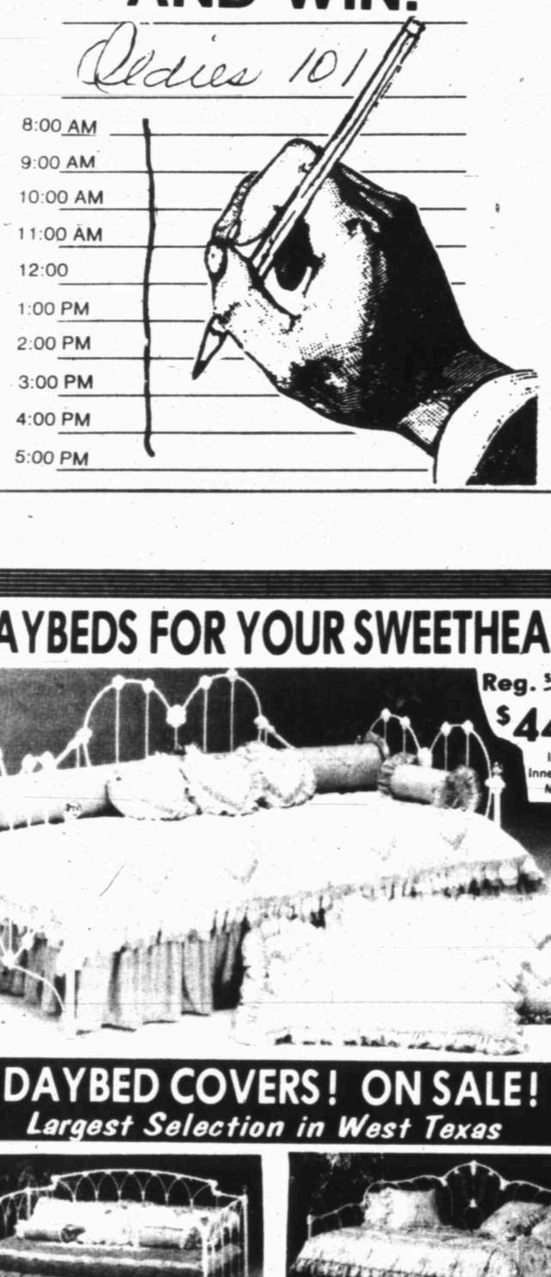

Sunflower seeds and raisins add a wonderfully different texture to any salad.

Blanchard & Blanchard's product line includes salad dressings, marinades, glazes, ketchups, mustards and dessert sauces. All are made with no artificial flavorings or preservatives.

Lee to begin quest for 7th consecutive playoff berth

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee will begin its quest for a seventh consecutive state football playoff berth Friday when the Rebels begin three weeks of spring football practice in preparation for next fall.

It's the best playoff streak going in District 4-5A and head coach Earl Miller feels a little more comfortable than he did at this time a year ago.

"I don't want to leave the impression that we don't need a lot of work in just about every area, but we do feel a little better going into the spring this year than we did last year," said Miller. "We're miles away from being a football team, but we do have a few more things going for us this time around."

And you can start with running back Farris Strambler, who rushed for 1,231 yards as a junior last year while scoring an awesome 94 points.

"I think this is the first year Lee has ever had a 1,000-yard rusher returning from regular season play and he did it in a nine-game schedule," said Miller. "We had those incredible backs in Tyrone Thurman and Walter Jones returning in 1984, but neither of them had 1,000 yards at the end of regular season play. They went over 1,000 in the playoffs."

Last year, Lee was basically starting from scratch with one offensive starter (Quincy White) and one defensive starter (Michael Pearson) back. They also had kicking specialist Arthur Donnelly back.

Well, Donnelly is back again for his third trip around the league. He has had injury problems in the off-season, but few will forget his major field goals against two Odessa teams last year.

Guards Matt Wilson and Brandon Rayburn also return. Rayburn, however, will be moved to center. Lee has always liked to place one of its best athletes at center. The offense can also count on four wide receivers who had playing time last year. They are Jason Sever, John Valles, B.J. Parrish and Anthony Sims.

Add in the fact that both of last year's quarterbacks, Vince Henderson and Ty Chambers, are back, you have the idea that the Lee offensive attack could be a good one.

"We feel like we can score some points on offense and we may need to," said Miller. "We don't have that kind of experience back on defense, but we feel there too that we aren't as far away as last year."

Linebacker Bennie Jones will move into Pearson's vacated spot in the middle of the Lee defense, giving Lee and anchor on which to build defensively. Defensive end Steve Ruckman also returns and Henderson played a lot in the defensive secondary last year.

"The main thing this spring is that we've got to find who can play and who can't," said Miller. "We've got to come up with a fullback and we're going to look hard at Atlantis Chambers. We've always felt you have to be strong at fullback in our wishbone scheme."

Miller says that his Rebels do not own the depth they enjoyed in past seasons and says, "There is a possibility that one-third of our starters will have to go both ways. That's not the ideal situation and that could change, depending on how some of the younger kids come around this spring."

Don't expect Lee to be a pure wishbone team again this year. Lee will probably break out of the 'Bone with tailback formations to take advantage of Strambler's rushing skills, but the wishbone is still the basic attack. Opposing teams could have some real nightmares trying to prepare for all the offensive fronts Lee will show.

Lee will end the spring grind on Thursday, May 25, with the annual Maroon-White game at Memorial Stadium. That contest, open to the public, will be held with the sophomores going at 6 p.m. and the varsity at 7:30 p.m.

John Parchman joins Rebel football staff as defensive line coach

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

John Parchman, 39, has joined the Midland Lee football coaching staff as defensive line coach, replacing the vacancy left when Eddie Wolski resigned last December to join the Texas High School Coaches Association in Austin.

Parchman comes to Lee from El Paso Socorro, where he had been head football coach of the Bulldogs for the past four years.

"It's a bright move on my part," said Lee head coach Earl Miller on the hiring of Parchman. "I traded a coach (Wolski) with two years of head coaching experience with one (Parchman) who has 10 years behind him as a head coach. In fact, John has more head coaching experience than I do. I'm expecting him to be five times better than Wolski."

Parchman owns an overall 61-43 mark as a head coach while coaching at three different schools. In 1983, the year Lee went to the state Class 5A finals, Parchman took Cisco to the quarterfinals, losing to Boyd, the eventual Class 2A state champion, 21-17.

He also produced a district co-championship in District 4-3A while at Frenship. Parchman was at Cisco two years and four years at Frenship. He also spent three years as an assistant at Lubbock Coronado, one year at Lubbock Roosevelt and one year at Dimmitt.

And it is West Texas football that lured Parchman to Midland.

"I've done most of my coaching in West Texas and it's a little different here than in El Paso," said Parchman. "I needed to get back out here in the real part of the state. This district is serious about football and that's not always the case in El Paso.

"Socorro has an enrollment of over 3,000 and we felt we could win there. We did that, but we felt like we had taken that program about as far as we could."

Parchman is a 1967 graduate of Lubbock Roosevelt and a 1971 graduate of Texas Tech University. He played is college football at Cisco Junior College before moving on to Texas Tech.

Parchman and his wife, Diane, have two girls, Annie 9, and Sarah 8.

Angels lose to Dodgers

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO — The Midland Angels saw their Texas League West lead trimmed to three games over Wichita in a 6-3 loss to the San Antonio Dodgers here Tuesday night.

The Dodgers broke up a 3-3 tie in the seventh inning, scoring two runs on two throwing errors by catcher Mike Knapp on the same play.

Midland loaded the bases in the ninth inning on consecutive singles by Reed Peters, Jeff Barnes and Everett Graham, but on a ground ball hit by Cron, Graham was called out for a flagerant slide and the Dodgers were given an automatic double play. Midland also lost a run on the play.

This was the first of five games with San Antonio and the Angels have now lost two games in a row. There were seven double plays in the game by the two teams, but 21 runners were still left stranded on the base paths. The teams combined for 27 hits, but there was only one extra base hit.

In the only other Texas League game Tuesday, Charlie Hillemann tripled in the 10th inning and scored on an error to lead the Wichita Wranglers to a 1-0 victory over the El Paso Diablos.

Shreveport's game at Tulsa and Jackson's game at Arkansas were postponed because of rain.

Hilleman scored when Ramon Sambo dropped Paul Faries' line drive to left field.

Omar Olivares, 2-3, was the winning pitcher. He struck out eight, allowed four walks and five hits. Mark Chapman was the losing pitcher.

Lukas' faith in Houston

By HANK WESCH
Copley News Service

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — D. Wayne Lukas has a bone spur pressing on his sciatic nerve, which is a real pain in the back.

When not sitting gingerly in the green canvas-backed director's chair outside his Churchill Downs stable office, the nation's leading thoroughbred trainer is moving somewhat laboriously and slightly stooped over this Kentucky Derby week.

"But if it comes time to get down to the winner's circle after the race, you'll see, I won't have a hitch in my step," Lukas said Tuesday (May 2).

The real hitch, of course, is having reason to get there.

LUKAS WENT through seven Derbies in which he saddled 12 starters before having occasion to head for the coveted spot on the Churchill Downs infield last year when Winning Colors came through for him.

And the critics who snickered through the winless years are up to their old game when considering Lukas' anticipated two-horse entry this year of Houston and Shy Tom.

Houston provided the biggest disappointment of the major Derby preps when he went into the Santa Anita Derby as the undefeated 4-5 favorite and finished next-to-last in a field of six, beaten 16¾ lengths by Sunday Silence.

And Shy Tom is an apparently better runner on turf than dirt that Lukas is prepared to enter at the behest of owner W.T. Young, a prominent Kentucky breeder who is on the Churchill Downs board of directors.

Mention Shy Tom and Lukas is somewhat defensive in his comments.

"Mr. Young said he wants to run this horse, and you can't ask these guys to spend millions of dollars and then just get close to the spotlight," Lukas said. "(Shy Tom) has got a solid record (four wins, two seconds in eight lifetime starts), and he's training super right now. So it's hard to say no."

When the subject turns to Houston, however, it becomes clear that Lukas isn't inclined to take the casting of aspersions sitting down.

Cooper nips Mojo in 4-5A playoff battle

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

This one was a zoo.

The Abilene Cooper Cougars and Odessa Permian Panthers invaded Angel Stadium Tuesday and — wouldn't you know it — provided for the approximately 1,500 in attendance with what was the most exciting high school baseball game of the season.

Cooper came away with a 10-9 win in a game that both teams gave away numerous times.

Not that this game really meant anything ... both teams have clinched playoff spots. Seedings, though, were at stake, and Cooper came away with spot No. 1; Permian, the surprise team of the year which finished district with an 1-11 record in 1988, takes the second seed.

Now for the "zoo" aspect.

Both teams matched runs in the first, third and fourth innings.

Permian took a 9-5 lead in the bottom of the fifth — a lead that appeared on the surface to be insurmountable. But those in attendance knew better.

In the top of the seventh, after the Cougars had come back to tie it 9-9, Cooper's Scott Malone singled, driving in Blaine Frazier for what would be prove to be the winning run for the Cougars.

From beginning to end, this one would be a game that would be remembered for quite a while.

Following the game, Permian coach Bob Highley could only hope that his Panthers would forget about the disappointing loss.

"We need to look at the positive things," he said. "We don't need to let a loss hurt us. We played as hard and as intense as we could.

"When you get 13 hits against Cooper, you're doing really well."

Cooper head coach Andy Malone was understandably elated after the win.

"How'd we get so lucky, huh? What goes around comes around," Malone said, referring to Cooper's loss to Permian early in district. "I've never had my doubts about a team since I've been at Cooper. We weren't a good baseball team today, but we did a lot of good things to overcome a lot of bad things.

"(Pugh's) home run turned it around for us."

Cooper first baseman Scotty Pugh blasted a one-out homer in the sixth to bring the Coogs to within two, 9-7.

The momentum of the game shifted, it seemed, with every half-inning. Pugh's blast put the spark back in Cooper, as the University of Texas signee finished with three hits in three trips with three runs scored and three RBI.

Aside from Pugh, the offensive hero of the game was Permian second baseman Jeff Martin. Incredibly, in a losing cause, Martin had six RBI with a single, double and triple. Martin was so on-the-mark that his first hit — a double — did not come until his third trip to the plate. Martin grounded out in the first, scoring Arvey Villa, and drove in Villa in the third on a sacrifice fly.

Villa was also a bright mark for the Panthers, finishing 2-for-4 with three runs scored on two triples.

Scott Malone, 6-1 in district, picked up the win for Cooper, allowing three hits and no runs in 2⅔ innings. Mike Morgan, 7-3, received the loss for Permian. Morgan, the ace of the Panther staff, allowed three hits and two runs, both earned in 1⅔ innings.

"We played well and that's what we came out here for," Highley said. "A couple of mental mistakes gave them the ball game.

"Cooper's probably the second-best team in the state," Highley said, refusing to say who he felt was best, although giving a strong indication he felt Permian might be tops in 5A.

Permian advances as the No. 2 seed in 4-5A and will host District 3-5A champion Lubbock Monterey next Tuesday at 4:30 p.m. The two teams will resume their series in Lubbock Friday, May 12, and Saturday, May 13, should a third game be necessary.

Cooper travels to the Texas Tech field next Tuesday for Game 1 of a three game series against Lubbock Coronado. The two teams will play Game 2 (and 3, if necessary) at Hardin Simmons, May 12 and 13.

Midland College wallows in spoils of athletic success

By TED BATTLES

Midland College wallowed knee deep in the spoils of success while counting its blessings in honoring the Chaparral 1988-89 athletic teams at the annual All-Sports Awards Banquet at the Holiday Inn Holidome Tuesday night.

Wallow? What else could you call it.

A freshman-dominated basketball team posted a 21-10 season and it took the ultimate champions, Odessa College, to eliminate it in the semifinal of the Region V tournament; tennis and golf teams are going to the NJCAA national tournaments and a cheerleading squad finished 20th in the ESPN National Cheerleading competition.

Coach Reggie Franklin and assistant George Walker gave out the basketball awards which included: Charles McCovery, Most Valuable Player; Troy Taylor, Most Improved; Fred Campbell, top rebounder; Kethus Hanks, Best Defensive player; Louis Clay, Fighting Chaparral, and Kerwin Harris and Tim Owens, the co-Mr. Hustle winners.

With firing of Brandt, Dallas Cowboy builders gone

IRVING (AP) — For days, Gil Brandt didn't want to hear the telephone ring because he knew owner Jerry Jones and Coach Jimmy Johnson were debating the fate of his Dallas Cowboys' scouting department.

"It's kind of like being staked out on an ant hill while somebody gave you Chinese water torture," said Brandt, 57. "Then in one call I went from being in the mansion to being in a pup tent."

The "turk" did call and the purge was complete of the men who built the Cowboys from an expansion team in the 1960s to Super Bowl champions.

Brandt was the last member of the original foursome who built the Cowboys from scratch.

"He told me finances was the reason, that he's losing $29,000 a day," Brandt said. "He'll probably fire four or five scouts including Bob Griffin.

"I told him I know I did as good a job as possible. I feel good about the 29 years I had with the Cowboys. But it's a bad way for it to end. He didn't even shake my hand. These guys are over their heads."

Jones said the Cowboys' 10-year drought in landing top talent wasn't the reason Brandt was let go.

"We just felt the way we wanted to go in the scouting department was without Gil," Jones said.

Johnson was more succinct.

"We had a difference in philosophy on how you go about drafting players," Johnson said. "Our coaches will play a large part in the evaluation and selection of players and we'll go with a smaller scouting department."

The Cowboys will be more active in picking up cuts from preseason rosters and not depend as heavily on free agents.

Johnson and Brandt were thought to be close friends, particularly since Brandt helped Johnson get the head coaching job of the Miami Hurricanes.

"We have friendships, but sometimes business decisions have to be made," Johnson said. "It's best that we start from scratch in the scouting department."

Johnson said the Cowboys lost their edge in getting free agents when other clubs caught onto the game.

Brandt was a baby photographer who dabbled in evaluating professional football talent when he was hired by club president Tex Schramm.

Schramm, Brandt, owner Clint Murchison, and Coach Tom Landry built the team in 1960.

Murchison died several years ago, after selling the club to Bum Bright.

Jones, who bought the team from Bright on Feb. 25 for $140 million, fired Landry and Schramm resigned to become president of the International Football League.

Brandt's brainstorms included drafting track and basketball stars and using computers to analyze talent.

The three-way management team of Schramm, Landry and Brandt took the Cowboys to 20 consecutive winning seasons (1966-85), including five Super Bowl appearances and two victories.

Brandt said he had no immediate plans.

"I have no plans to join another NFL team," he said. "I have had an offer to write a book."

Brandt evaluated the talent for Landry, who made the calls. In the 1970s, the Cowboys were considered the sharpest organization in the NFL at judging talent.

In recent years, the formula didn't work. Of the last 15 players drafted in the first three rounds by Brandt, only four are now starters.

The Cowboys haven't had a winning season since 1985 and finished 3-13 last year, second worst in their history.

Only one player remained on the roster from the 1983 draft.

Only one player the Cowboys drafted in the 1980s, Herschel Walker, has appeared in a Pro Bowl.

Flames shutout Blackhawks in NHL playoffs

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Even the participants had trouble distinguishing how much of the result should be credited to the Calgary Flames' greatness and how much should be blamed on the Chicago Blackhawks' lackluster effort.

"I don't think the intensity was there," Blackhawks Coach Mike Keenan said after Calgary opened the NHL's Campbell Conference finals with a 3-0 victory Tuesday night.

"It's hard to say what triggered that kind of response but it wasn't the same response we've seen in the last two series," he said. "Some of that is a reflection of playing against the Calgary Flames, who were the best club in the league.

"We have to play with a lot more intensity in terms of generating chances. Then again, maybe we didn't play well because we weren't allowed to."

Said Flames goalie Mike Vernon, who barely broke a sweat while recording his third playoff shutout: "Our guys handled them very well. But it was apparent that these were not the Chicago Blackhawks tonight."

While Calgary was compiling the league's best record with 117 points this season, Chicago waited until the season's final game to squeak into the playoffs.

The Blackhawks' 66 points were the fewest of the 16 playoff teams and fewest of any Stanley Cup semifinalist since Pittsburgh's 64 of 1970, when teams played four fewer than the current 80 games.

Thanks mostly to Alain Chevrier's standout goaltending, Chicago got hot in the playoffs, eliminating both Detroit and St. Louis in Norris Division series.

That magic was gone Tuesday, however. Not only is Calgary much better than either Detroit or St. Louis, but the Blackhawks were flat.

Said Chicago's Trent Yawney: "The key to good defense are the six guys on the ice. Calgary has skilled players and we have to take it away from them. We weren't disciplined, were not playing hard like we're used to playing."

Oral Roberts drops affiliation with NCAA

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Evangelist Oral Roberts, who says he is in "a life-and-death struggle" to save Oral Roberts University, said Tuesday the school is immediately dropping out of the NCAA to save money.

The 71-year-old television evangelist said in March his ministry had to raise $11 million by graduation day May 6 or creditors would "start dismantling" the 24-year-old school and the City of Faith Medical Center.

The school is applying for affiliation with the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, officials said.

The announcement apparently pulls the rug from under Oral Roberts' baseball team, which is 36-18 with six games remaining in the season and had hopes of qualifying for the National Collegiate Athletic Association regional playoffs.

Baseball coach Gary Vaught refused to comment on his team's situation after the surprise announcement Tuesday.

The Titans have gone to the playoffs eight of the past 11 seasons, making it to the regional championship game three times and to the College World Series in 1978.

Oral Roberts becomes the first NCAA Division I school to withdraw from the association since Oklahoma City University did so in 1985, said Shirley Whitacre, NCAA membership coordinator.

NCAA officials said they had not received official notification of ORU's withdrawal Tuesday. But Ms. Whitacre said if the resignation is effective immediately, it would bar the baseball team from NCAA postseason play. She said she could not recall a prior instance of a school dropping out at mid-season.

"Normally, institutions terminate their membership at the beginning of the academic year," she said.

The decision announced Tuesday will affect 14 men's and women's sports teams at Oral Roberts University.

"This is a financial decision," Roberts said in a prepared statement. "We have been in a life-and-death struggle to maintain the university with financial integrity.

"In line with other necessary cutbacks in other departments to safeguard the academic quality and spiritual commitment of ORU, the board of regents and I, the president, feel we cannot justify the expenditure for athletics at the Division I level."

Roberts called the decision "heart-wrenching" but said it was necessary for the survival of the school, which has an enrollment of about 4,000.

Hershiser blanks Pittsburgh for first shutout

Associated Press

Orel Hershiser changed his style. The result remained the same.

Hershiser, the 1988 Cy Young Award winner in the National League and a postseason hero for Los Angeles, pitched his first shutout of the year, a six-hitter in a 7-0 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates on Tuesday night. The Dodgers have a string of 21 shutout innings.

But he didn't do things normally, even if the outcome was familiar.

"This ball club is a club that attacks the ball," he said of the Pirates. "It's a fastball-hitting ballclub, they love to attack the ball, they're a good, young team that has a lot of good hitters, even though a lot of them are hurt.

"I had a tough time with them last year because of my approach. I was aggressive and went right after them, first-pitch fastball.

"Barry Bonds, on the first pitch of the ball game, I threw a curveball and he hit it off the end of the bat for a base hit. When will you ever see me throw a curveball on the first pitch of a game?"

It was one of the rare pitches the Pirates could handle. Hershiser struck out six and didn't walk anyone in his first complete game of 1989. He led the National League last season with eight shutouts and tied Cincinnati's Danny Jackson for the league lead in complete games with 15.

Astros 12, Phillies 4

At Philadelphia, the Astros had their biggest offensive output of the season with 17 hits. Glenn Davis hit a two-run homer and an RBI single, Kevin Bass was 4-for-5 and scored two runs, and Bill Doran had three hits and three RBIs. Davis leads the NL with eight home runs.

The loss was the Phillies' sixth in their last eight games, but they got a two-run homer and RBI single from Mike Schmidt.

Phillies manager Nick Leyva was disappointed with the performance of Floyd Youmans, who lasted only 1⅓ innings.

"I know he can pitch better than that," Leyva said. "I won't be afraid to move him to the bullpen. I'm going to go with the best available pitchers."

Mets 7, Braves 1

At Atlanta, Bob Ojeda pitched a five-hitter through eight innings for his first victory since nearly severing the tip of his left middle finger in a gardening accident last September.

It was the eighth victory in nine games for the Mets and the eighth consecutive loss for the Braves.

Ojeda, 1-3, almost severed the upper portion of the finger on his pitching hand with an electric hedgeclipper last Sept. 21. He got off to a rough start this season and had a 6.38 earned run average entering the game.

Darryl Strawberry had a two-run homer.

NL Roundup

Padres 7, Cardinals 1

Jack Clark, who left St. Louis as a free agent after the 1987 season to sign with the Yankees, got his first hit against his former team, a three-run homer to start a five-run third inning at San Diego.

Clark, traded to San Diego by New York in the offseason, drove a 2-2 pitch from Scott Terry over the center field wall as San Diego sent 10 batters to the plate in the inning.

Ed Whitson pitched a six-hitter in breaking St. Louis' six-game winning streak.

Giants 4, Cubs 0

At San Francisco, Rich Gossage got back at the Cubs, who released him just before the season.

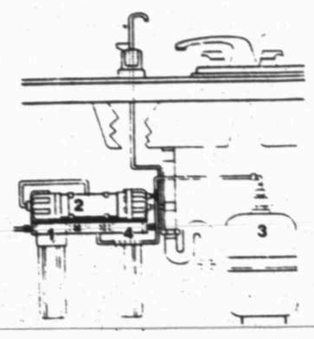

In earning his first save as a Giant and the 303rd of his career, most of any active pitcher, Gossage came on for Rick Reuschel with the bases loaded and one out in the eighth. Gossage got Vance Law to pop out and Shawon Dunston to ground out.

The Cubs lost for only the second time in six games, while the Giants won for only the fourth time in 13 games.

Expos 6, Reds 4

At Montreal, Otis Nixon's two-out single in the eighth inning broke a 3-3 tie, then he scored from first base on Tim Raines' single.

McGwire's ninth inning grand slam beats Toronto

Associated Press

Despite the circumstances, Mark McGwire wasn't about to become selective when he stepped to the plate with the Oakland Athletics a run down with one out separating them from a loss to the Toronto Blue Jays.

"I was sitting on anything," McGwire joked in explaining why he swung at a very high pitch against Toronto reliever Tom Henke. Once he hit it, there was little doubt the ball would find its way into the left field seats at Exhibition Stadium for a grand slam that gave the A's an 8-5 victory Tuesday night.

"He's just one of those pitchers who I've never been able to solve," McGwire said. "Tonight, I just got around on one."

McGwire said he could not remember ever having much success against Henke. And he said Henke knows it, too.

"I think every pitcher knows when he owns you," McGwire said. "I'm going up in that situation knowing I've struck out every time against him.

"I'm looking for anything to hit. Fortunately, I got a fastball I could handle and I hit it out of the ball park."

Despite his heroics, McGwire said teammates Luis Polonia and Dave Henderson deserved much of the credit. Reliever Duane Ward, 1-4, struck out the first two batters in the ninth and then allowed singles to Polonia and Henderson.

"If anyone won the ballgame, it was those two guys," McGuire said. "He (Ward) had Luis (Polonia) 0-2 and then he fouls off about five pitches then he gets a base-hit. He had Henderson 0-2. He fouls off a couple pitches and then drops in a hit."

AL Roundup

Indians 8, Rangers 3

Cory Snyder hit a three-run homer and drove in four runs, and Greg Swindell pitched a strong 7⅓ innings to lead Cleveland.

The Rangers led 2-1 in the sixth when Snyder hit his fifth homer of the season, off Jamie Moyer, 3-1.

Swindell, 3-0, allowed seven hits, struck out six and did not walk a batter as the Indians swept the two-game series.

Royals 5, Yankees 3

Luis de los Santos hit a two-run, go-ahead single in the seventh inning and Mark Gubicza pitched a six-hitter, leading Kansas City past New York for the Royals' fourth straight victory.

de los Santos, playing in his first game of the season since his week-end recall from the minors, singled to left after Tommy John, 2-4, loaded the bases. It snapped New York's four-game winning streak and gave the Royals their ninth victory in 11 games.

Orioles 4, Angels 3

Jim Traber's sacrifice fly in the ninth inning gave Baltimore the victory over California, snapping the Angels' five-game winning streak.

Greg Olson, 3-0, got the victory in relief of Jose Bautista. Olson pitched two innings, allowing one hit.

Red Sox 4, Twins 2

Ellis Burks hit a three-run homer in a four-run eighth inning for Boston, which handed Minnesota its ninth loss in 10 games.

Burks' homer off reliever Jeff Reardon negated a strong performance by starter Fred Toliver, who carried a no-hitter for 5⅔ innings.

Wade Boggs, who broke up Toliver's no-hit bid with two out in the sixth, singled to score Barrett.

White Sox 6, Brewers 1

Ron Kittle and Ivan Calderon hit two-run homers as Chicago ended Chris Bosio's four-game winning streak and handed the Brewers their fifth straight loss.

Bosio, who gave up 12 hits in 7⅓ innings, remained winless lifetime against Chicago, falling to 0-5.

The victory enabled the White Sox to sweep the two-game series at Comiskey Park, where Chicago had not swept Milwaukee since 1981. The victory gave the White Sox back-to-back wins for the first time since April 7-8.

Mariners 7, Tigers 2

Seattle's Jeffrey Leonard hit a grand slam and Mike Dunne limited Detroit to six hits over seven innings for his first American League victory.

HOUSTON—

"Maybe he's not good enough, but I think he is," Lukas said. "I'll be the most surprised guy around here if it turns out that he didn't belong in the race."

Lukas has been enamored with the son of Seattle Slew-Smart Angle since he first saw him as a yearling — then named Seattle Angle — at Keeneland's sale in Lexington, Ky., in July 1987. When the bidding exceeded what his sponsors had authorized, Lukas decided to commit his own money, over $1 million of it, toward the $2.9 million purchase price.

LUKAS SOLD portions of the horse to two of his longtime clients, Midland oilmen Barry Beal and L.R. "Bob" French. It was the idea of French, who likes to name his horses after Texas municipalities, that the colt's name be changed to Houston.

Houston was a lone star at the finish line in two starts as a 2-year-old and in his 1989 debut in the 7-furlong Bay Shore Stakes at Aqueduct in Jamaica, N.Y., on March 25. The 10½-length victory that day gave him a total victory margin of 23 lengths in three starts.

Then came the fall from grace in the Santa Anita Derby, a performance Lukas now dismisses as attributable to dehydration and resultant loss of electrolytes during a coast-to-coast trip from New York to California and several days of excessive heat in Southern California before the event.

"When we left New York, it was 44 degrees and when we got to Los Angeles, it was 102," Lukas said in recalling what was a week of record temperatures.

"I know now that a person could lose 12 ounces of liquid just traveling a distance like that in an airplane if the stewardesses didn't come around with drinks to replace what you lose."

Apparently such service was lacking in the Equine Class section where Houston was located.

"Then the weather when we got back didn't help," Lukas continued. "The thermometer in the stable area was at 104, and it was probably hotter than that in his stall.

"He was sweating, losing electrolytes, wasn't drinking enough to compensate, and I just wasn't sharp enough to pick up on it."

THAT SOMETHING was wrong became evident when Houston was a factor for only about the first three quarters of the 1⅛-mile Santa Anita Derby. Lukas said that tests the following days showed an electrolyte imbalance.

"Electrolyte imbalance is a serious thing," the one-time basketball coach said. "You don't want an athlete low on them. That's why you see those big Gatorade containers at football games.

"We're always educating ourselves. In coaching, I know we used to think it was sissified to have (players) drinking water during practice. Now, they make sure there's a lot available, and they take in liquids all the time."

Solving Houston's problem was as simple as leading the horse to electrolyte-loaded water, and having him drink.

"After we got the fluids back in him, he was fine, you could see a big difference," Lukas said. "He had seemed kind of listless on the day of the race, but he perked right up."

Brought to Churchill Downs, Houston trained alertly again, and scored a five-length victory Saturday in the one-mile Derby Trial.

"I think that race is going to prove to be a great plus for him," Lukas said. "If I'd have written a script for that race to do him the most good, it wouldn't have turned out any better than it did.

"Some of the other (Derby) horses had mile workouts in something like 1:39 to 1:41 on Saturday. We had ours in 1:36 1/5."

Lukas begs to differ with those who find Houston to be an excellent miler but are skeptical of his ability at longer distances.

"You never know if a horse can go a mile and a quarter, but I think he's every bit as fit as Winning Colors, Badger Land and all the others I've had a shot with here," Lukas said.

THE REASON is a winter-long program to build conditioning and stamina as Houston was given nearly four months between his last start in '88 and the Bay Shore.

"I put a lot of miles in him this winter," Lukas said. "It seems like nobody has checked the workout section in the Racing Form, but he had a great work tab all winter."

Pre-Derby favorite Easy Goer and likely second choice Sunday Silence have shown better recent form. But Lukas needs only look back to the last major day of racing at Churchill Downs, the Breeders' Cup program on Nov. 4 of last year, and remember the upset of Easy Goer that was pulled off by his Is It True in the $1 million Breeders' Cup Juvenile.

That experience, Lukas said, was a lesson in the attitude that must be taken when facing a heavy favorite.
