Soviets continue to search for wreckage of jumbo jet

By The Associated Press

WAKKANAI, Japan — Navy officials said Soviet vessels massed Sunday in the area where the South Korean airliner went down, and police said Japanese searchers found a second mutilated body, other body fragments, and an identification card of a Canadian woman passenger.

Authorities in Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island, said 17 patrol boats, seven aircraft and about 400 people on the ground were mobilized to comb the island's seas and beaches as currents pushed by strong winds moved debris toward the Japanese shore on the Sea of Okhotsk.

Japanese Maritime Safety Agency officials in Wakkanai, on the northern tip of Hokkaido, said at least 55 Soviet vessels gathered in waters where the airliner is believed to have gone down.

"The Russians could have found some bulky object," commented one official.

The 12,000-ton Soviet salvage vessel Mikhail Rudnitsky, guarded by the 8,200-ton missile cruiser Petropavlovsk, was among the vessels, the officials said.

The 720-ton Soviet intelligence ship Okean was seen throwing two cables from its stern into the sea, but it was unclear if the exact crash site or any plane wreckage had been discovered, the maritime officials said.

A Soviet fighter-jet shot down the Korean Air Lines plane en route from New York to Seoul Sept. 1 in Soviet airspace near the island of Sakhalin, about 25 miles north of Hokkaido. All 269 people aboard the jumbo jet are presumed dead.

Kremlin officials have acknowledged destroying the airliner, but they claim the civilian plane was on a spy mission for the United States. Officials in Washington have rejected that claim.

The Maritime Agency officials said Soviet ships were operating off the Soviet island Moneron, near Sakhalin. The Soviet Union has refused to allow Japanese search boats into its territorial waters.

Police said the identification card of a 25-year-old Canadian woman, Mary Jane Hendrie of Ottawa, washed ashore in Monbetsu, about 120 miles southeast of here. She was one of 10 Canadians on the KAL flight's passenger list.

Police in Abashiri, 150 miles southeast of Wakkanai and about 190 miles southeast of the suspected crash site, said a man fishing early Sunday had discovered a faceless body. Authorities said a lock of auburn hair led them to believe it was the remains of a white woman, but they were unable to confirm whether the woman had been a passenger with KAL.

On Thursday, the body of a child was recovered along the same coast. It still has not been identified. That body and other remains will be examined at medical facilities in Asahikawa, a city in central Hokkaido, as well as at the prefectural capital of Sapporo, police said.

Student Association

Report by Tech Internal Audit office reveals lack of sufficient financial control

By JOHN REID
University Daily Reporter

A report released this summer by the Texas Tech Internal Audits office cited a lack of internal control of Tech Student Association money as the main cause for a controversy last spring over the handling of SA funds.

The audit of SA records was initiated early in March in response to allegations made by SA presidential candidate Ken Knezek and Willard Abercrombie, former SA external vice president.

Knezek and Abercrombie accused SA officials of misusing student funds, particularly by spending money to host a Texas Student Association convention and a high school recruitment day last fall. Knezek and Abercrombie said the money never was budgeted and should not have been spent.

SA leaders failed to keep proper control of internal financial activities, according to the audit report. "Individuals have conducted SA business affairs in ways only to accomplish an end. Advanced planning and scheduling could have alleviated a number of problems," the report states.

The report also states that the SA should have an annual internal review of its activities and should take full responsibility for accounting for money generated by the events it sponsors.

The audit report outlines a guideline summary that states the SA should: 1) Improve accountability of funds generated from SA-sponsored activities; 2) Devise written operating procedures; 3) Become more aware of state laws and Tech policies and procedures; 4) Implement tighter financial controls on SA-sponsored activities; 5) Develop tighter accounting controls for SA funds; 6) Develop stricter control of telephone use and 7) Devise written ethical standards regarding lobbying activities.

"These are things we didn't know about," said former SA President Charlie Hill. "The university needs to inform the students on these policies."

"We did not realize that having an off-campus account was wrong," he said.

Hill said the policy forbidding bank accounts away from the university hurts many of the people involved in student organizations.

"If you cannot have an off-campus account, I think you ought to follow the rules through," he said. "And with all these new guidelines, I think there should be a way for student groups to know about the guidelines."

"The university needs to start working with the student organizations," he said.

Problems occur when clubs and organizations open off-campus accounts under the Texas Tech name, said Don Rolfe, director of Internal Audits at Tech.

"For the clubs' and organizations' safety and the safety of the university, we think the clubs and organizations should open up agency accounts with the university," he said.

Agency accounts are bank accounts that the clubs and organizations have with the university.

The clubs and organizations turn their money over to the university, Rolfe said, and the university acts as a bank, taking care of the groups' accounts.

out vouchers for the money, he said. "And it doesn't take four to six weeks to receive your money."

In response to the audit report, new SA officers have established guidelines. A response report written by SA President Dan Waggoner, External Vice President Susan Gaffney and Internal Vice President David Fisher states that the SA will follow the guidelines that were outlined in the audit report to establish controls on internal financial activities.

Waggoner said the SA will use an operations manual that sets up a system for accountability with objective codes and procedures that will be followed.

Registration passes 24,000 mark

By University News and Publications

Texas Tech has unofficially broken the 24,000-student mark in registration, although fewer students have paid tuition and fees necessary to validate their registrations.

When university offices closed Friday, the figures were 24,003 students registered and 23,972 paid, according to Robert Ewalt, Tech vice president for student affairs.

Until 4 p.m. Thursday, late-registering students may pay a $15 late registration fee and an escalating late payment fee of $5 per day to make their registration valid. But after Thursday, students who still have not paid their fees will have to pay $90 for late registration and late payment and $70 per credit hour in addition to regular tuition and fees.

Students who pay their fees today will be charged an additional $15 late registration fee plus the $60 normally charged for late registration plus tuition and regular fees. Late fees Tuesday total $80. The amount goes to $85 Wednesday and $90 Thursday.

Beginning Friday, students will have to pay the $90 plus $70 per credit hour. For example, a student registered for 15 credit hours who waits until Friday or after to pay fees will be charged $1,140 in addition to regular tuition and fees.

Tech regents initiated the additional charges during their August meeting so students can enroll after the 12th class day yet compensate the university for loss of state funding that would occur after that date.

The state, through the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System, determines state funding on the basis of the 12th class day enrollment figure. No student who registers and pays fees after the 12th class day can be counted in the state funding allotment.

Americans, British show force as fighting continues in Lebanon

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — U.S. and British jet fighters roared over Beirut in a show of force Sunday as mortar shells struck Marine positions near the airport. Christian-Druse fighting was reported spreading south from the Chouf mountains.

The Lebanese army said fierce overnight battles were fought for the key mountain town of Souk el Gharb, about five miles southeast of Beirut in an area where Druse and Christian militias have been locked in fighting for more than a week.

The Christian militia said it turned over several captured villages to the Lebanese army, which failed to enter the region when Israeli troops withdrew two weeks ago. As soon as the Israelis pulled back to southern Lebanon, intense fighting broke out between the Christians and Druse.

British Buccaneer fighter jets roared low over the capital to support the British, French, Italian and American peacekeeping forces, while a Marine spokesman said U.S. F-14 Tomcat fighters flew "reconnaissance missions" over the capital and the nearby mountains.

The 1,200-man Marine contingent scrambled into bunkers when two mortar rounds struck, but the shelling eased after an hour. No injuries were reported.

At least a dozen shells fell between the U.S. bunkers and a nearby Lebanese army emplacement, which began returning fire.

Lebanon's state-run radio reported intense artillery exchanges between militiamen in several villages south of the Chouf — indicating a possible Druse plan to sweep south of the Lebanese army and Christian militia positions along the Souk el-Gharb mountain ridge to the Mediterranean Sea.

A Druse spokesman in Beirut said Druse militia units had reached villages only 400 yards east of the coast.

As the fighting spread south, hundreds of Christian and Moslem refugees fled into Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon, saying they were trying to escape bombardments from the Chouf ranges.

A Lebanese army communique said two Lebanese soldiers and at least two Palestinian guerrillas were killed in the fighting around Souk el Gharb.

But Western military sources said a U.S.-trained Lebanese unit, considered the best in the Lebanese army, was overrun in the battle. Fourteen Lebanese soldiers were killed, 28 wounded and 28 others were missing in the fierce hand-to-hand fighting, they added.

The Israeli Army command, meanwhile, said it sent patrols north of its new defense lines along the Awali River in southern Lebanon. One patrol of four Israeli tanks and eight armored personnel carriers reached Lebanon's main power station at Jiyeh, just 10 miles south of Beirut.

Israeli radio quoted Defense Minister Moshe Arens as telling a Cabinet meeting Sunday that Israeli soldiers could push forward from their defense line to strike at Palestinian guerrillas.

"Our forces will hit at the terrorists across the Awali line but will not intervene in the fighting in the Chouf mountains and will not return there," Arens reportedly said.

Conservatives think Reagan was too soft

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Prominent conservatives, denouncing President Reagan's response to the shooting down of a Korean airliner as "incredibly inadequate," appear sharply divided on whether to abandon their support of him as the 1984 campaign approaches.

Some leaders of the New Right — notably Richard Viguerie and Howard Phillips — say they want to dump Reagan in favor of a more conservative presidential candidate, even though they acknowledge such a campaign is futile.

But there are indications that the president's political right flank is holding, despite the conservatives' spoken disappointment.

Not a single conservative Republican in the House or Senate, many of whom favor stronger anti-Soviet steps in response to the downing of the plane, has broken with Reagan politically over the issue. Any challenger to Reagan probably would come from Congress, and aides to the Republican leadership in both the House and Senate say they have not heard any talk along those lines.

Many conservatives point out that a challenge to Reagan would increase the election chances of the Democratic candidate next year and that all the contenders for the party's nomination are more liberal than Reagan. The National Conservative Political Action Committee is proceeding with its planned multi-million dollar campaign to secure Reagan's re-election.

"He is the most articulate, most charming, most aggressive conservative we've had, possibly since Theodore Roosevelt," said U.S. Rep. Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.), one of the more conservative members of the House.

Gingrich was one of many Republicans who say they wish Reagan had taken stronger action against the Soviets.

U.S. Rep. Phil Crane (R-Ill.), a veteran conservative, is on record for tough sanctions against Russia. Even so, says a spokesman, "He hopes he'll (Reagan will) run for re-election and he'll support him."

So far, Reagan has demanded an explanation and reparation payments, but his main action against the Soviet government has been to severely curtail operations of Aeroflot, the Russian airline.

The anti-Reagan rhetoric is roughest among conservatives who are not elected politicians.

"It's clear that just about every conservative I know thinks that Reagan's response is incredibly inadequate to the challenge," says Phillips, head of the Conservative Caucus. "It's less than we would expect from Jimmy Carter."

Suit endangers press freedoms

BOSTON — A libel case of extraordinary importance, William C. Westmoreland vs. CBS, has been taking shape in court proceedings. The documents already piled up show an extreme example of the lawsuit as a form of combat between resourceful opponents. But more than that they show a case with troubling implications for American democracy.

Westmoreland sued last September for $120 million. He said his reputation had been hurt by a 1982 CBS television documentary, "The Uncounted Enemy: A Vietnam Deception." The program said the American command in Vietnam, headed by Westmoreland, deliberately had understated the numbers of enemy forces in 1967-68.

A few months after the program, TV Guide printed a long article charging that it was "a smear" — that CBS had violated its own guidelines by, for example, using a paid consultant as a witness on camera. CBS News executives ordered an investigation, which indicated there had been procedural faults although the investigators stood by the film's conclusion. CBS offered Westmoreland air time to reply; he said no to the offer and sued.

A penetrating look at the case as it has developed so far will appear in the September issue of The American Lawyer. The article, by Connie Bruck, is critical of CBS executives. It says they ran scared when attacked in the TV Guide piece, which itself had faults, and thereby actually encouraged the general to sue.

The American Lawyer also argues that the backers of the Westmoreland lawsuit have a political aim: to damage CBS News and discourage television coverage of controversial issues. The general is being represented without charge by Dan Burt, president of the Capital Legal Foundation, a conservative public-interest firm.

Burt is quoted as saying, after he forced CBS in the litigation to give him its internal report on the program: "We are about to see the dismantling of a major news network."

Asked exactly what it was in the program that he thought libeled him, Westmoreland referred to its use of the word "conspiracy" but said he could not say beyond that.

Everything about the Vietnam War, from its origins to the details of its conduct, was the subject of intense political debate in the United States. The notion that a judge and jury can decide the "truth" about any aspect of that war is grotesque. It also is dangerous. For how can you have open debate on issues of fundamental public policy if critics fear that their views will be re-examined in libel suits?

From the beginning of the Republic, presidents and generals have been subject to uninhibited criticism. Jefferson suffered smears beyond anything published today. Yet I know of no case in which a high federal official has won libel damages for criticism of official actions. Officials who were criticized had ways to answer, and did. It is only today, in our more legalized society, that anyone would even think of turning such debates into libel suits.

The Supreme Court has held that federal officials are absolutely immune from libel suits when they make critical comments "within the outer perimeter" of their duties. Democracy requires that we, the public, have the same privilege in checking the exercises of the official power. Westmoreland has been highly successful in answering CBS, and that should be the end of it: debate, not lawsuits.

Ethnic joke books show decline of standards

EDWIN McDOWELL

© 1983 N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Racial and ethnic jokes have landed in force on the nation's bookshelves under the imprint of such major paperback publishers as Ballantine Books, Bantam Books and Pocket Books. But even as the once-taboo volumes have begun to scale the best-seller lists, social historians are deploring them as a reflection of declining standards.

"All these terribly tasteless, disgusting books and films represent a breakdown of decency and of standards of taste," said Barbara W. Tuchman, a Pulitzer Prize-winning historian.

Publishers, by contrast, think critics are taking the books too seriously. "We're not interested in making any grand statements about American culture, but the books seem to have struck a chord, because they are selling, and we haven't gotten any letters of protest," said Sandy Bodner, a spokesman for Ballantine Books, publisher of two best-selling collections.

Both "Truly Tasteless Jokes," published last year by Ballantine, and "Truly Tasteless Jokes Two," published recently, include chapters about blacks, Jews, Poles and white Protestants, as well as jokes about homosexuals and the handicapped.

The jokes are typically a paragraph or two in length. They use slang and often are filled with sexual references. They frequently employ ethnic and racial epithets. And the punch lines commonly depict members of minority groups as shiftless or stupid, or as connivers or drunkards.

Both collections are on the mass-market best-seller lists of The New York Times, Publishers Weekly and The Washington Post. "Truly Tasteless Jokes" has been on one of the lists for 20 weeks.

"Any books that sell this well have to appeal to everyone," said Sally Neal, the mass paperback humor buyer at B. Dalton, the nationwide book chain. They also inevitably spawn imitators. Already out or about to be published are such books as "Gross Jokes," "Outrageously Offensive Jokes" and "The Complete Book of Ethnic Humor."

Most authors of the books use pseudonyms. Both volumes of "Truly Tasteless Jokes," for example, are attributed to Blanche Knott, a made-up name. The author of "Outrageously Offensive Jokes" is listed as Maude Thickett.

Critics have reacted for a variety of reasons. "There is a lot to make fun of, but not the foibles of human beings who have already suffered a lot," said John Hope Franklin, who is the James B. Duke professor of history at Duke University. "We should be coming to grips with the dignity of the human spirit, not embarrassing or shaming whole groups of people. The success of these so-called joke books is a sad testament to the taste of this country."

Jacqueline G. Wexler, president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, said, "I think it's the most wholesome thing in the world when ethnic groups laugh at themselves. But it's dangerous when someone else does it to you, because almost always there's an element of denigration."

The authors have a different interpretation. "When I published my first collection of Polish jokes 10 years ago," Larry Wilde said, "a Polish-American newspaper warned its readers in headlines not to buy the book; they said it was sick."

Wilde since has turned out 28 other joke books, including individual volumes on Italians, Jews and the Irish. He has written several volumes of Polish jokes, including the recently published "The Absolutely Last Official Polish Joke Book," and he said he rarely has encountered a word of criticism about any but the first one.

"There have always been ethnic jokes or dirty jokes, but nobody ever wrote about it until the last 10 years, when people began to recognize you can't stop people from telling them," said Wilde, who is president of the Los Angeles chapter of PEN, the international writers' organization.

When "All in the Family" first appeared on television, Wilde said, there were debates in churches and in the press about the propriety of racial epithets.

"It's salutary to laugh at ourselves," he said.

Wilde, who described himself as a Polish Jew who grew up in an Irish neighborhood, said the only people who object to ethnic jokes are "older people, who are less secure in their roots."

Jack Romanos, publisher of Bantam Books, said he also believes the ethnic joke has become a respectable form of American humor.

"We've come as a culture from one basically segregated to one that is beginning to accept all groups, and humor has followed the same pattern," he said. "It's all intended in good fun."

Nevertheless, Bantam delayed the publication of Wilde's latest joke book, he said, because it originally was scheduled for publication during the height of the Solidarity strike in Poland.

Mrs. Tuchman said she recognizes that the popularity of such jokes probably stems more from a desire to shock than from an increase in bigotry.

But others said bigotry could well be lurking just below the surface. "Everybody else makes jokes about other people," said Dr. Martin Grotjahn, professor emeritus of psychiatry at the University of Southern California and the author of "Beyond Laughter," a book on the symbolism of jokes. "But in all jokes there is a disguised aggression, and racial jokes could be an invitation to racial hatred."

Grotjahn said he particularly would advise against a non-Jew telling a joke about Jews or a white telling a joke about blacks. And one publisher said he would issue a volume of black jokes only if the author were Richard Pryor, Bill Cosby, Eddie Murphy or another well-known black.

But Franklin disagreed. "I wouldn't accept jokes swept up from the gutter by Richard Pryor any more than from Blanche Knott," he said.

Dear Chief Murphy,
How are you and the boys at the fire house doing? You know, an old lady like me can't get out much, and now I can't afford a telephone any more. But since I had the silly thing taken out, it has been so marvelous re-discovering the pleasures of letter-writing.
Speaking of letters, I just had one from my son Robbie. He is a brain surgeon in Palm Beach now, with his townhouses and Cadillacs and even a telephone! I'm so proud—his practice must just be going like a house afire.
And speaking of houses afire, I'm afraid mine is, and that's really why I'm writing, to see if you and the boys could lend me a hand.

Nicaraguan rebels step up air raids on government

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Rebels fighting the left-wing Sandinista government have escalated their attacks by launching air raids, but the new tactic doesn't appear to pose an immediate threat to the government and could backfire.

Sandinista anti-aircraft fire, never tested before in combat, brought down one of two planes that attacked Managua and its airport on Thursday. Another plane that was backing rebel troops near the Costa Rican border was shot down Friday.

Also Friday, two vintage T-28 fighters attacked the port facility and a key bridge at Corinto on Nicaragua's north Pacific coast, damaging a chemical storage tank.

Nicaragua said its anti-aircraft batteries drove off another three-plane attack on an army compound near the Costa Rican border Friday evening.

The raids killed one person, a Managua airport customs employee, and caused considerable but reparable damage.

It appears probable the raiding planes departed from secret airstrips in Costa Rica, which borders Nicaragua on the south and is the base for the Democratic Revolutionary Alliance — ARDE. It is one of two rebel organizations trying to topple the government.

Costa Rica has denied, however, that the planes used Costa Rican airfields and ARDE leaders claimed they flew out of rebel airstrips inside Nicaragua.

A foreign diplomat who requested anonymity described the raids as a "publicity coup" for ARDE and its co-leader, Eden Pastora, a hero of the 1979 Sandinista revolution who defected 18 months ago.

But the impact of the raids appears limited and might even gain support for the government.

The attacks were condemned by all five Central American foreign ministers, some of whom would like to see the Sandinistas out of power.

A Managua business leader, who asked not to be named for security reasons, said "there is no doubt at all in our minds" that the raids will be used by the Sandinistas as an excuse to further entrench their power.

Local reaction may also help the Sandinistas in their push for a military conscription law that has encountered strong opposition from the Roman Catholic church and private sector.

The air strikes were seen as part of a change in rebel tactics — to direct attacks at Nicaragua's weak economy rather than at the military, one of the strongest in the region.

If the port facility and bridge had been hit in the Corinto attack it would have been a major blow, crippling the country's major port facility.

Just Relaxin'

Stassen again announces candidacy for president

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Harold Stassen is ready to go. Again.

Stassen announced Friday that he is a candidate for president, fully expecting that President Reagan, who still is being coy, will run for a second term. Stassen thus joins California's Benjamin Fernandez as a contender for the Republican nomination.

Stassen, at 76, is four years older than Reagan. This is his seventh try for the nomination; or maybe the eighth or ninth.

"I do not have a personal count," he said. "There are many different ways of counting campaigns. I've never objected to anyone's calculation."

Until the Korean plane was shot down last week, Stassen said he had been trying to decide whether "perhaps the right thing to do would be to wait (to see) whether President Reagan does not run, or runs, or if he does not run whether he backs someone."

The actions of the United States and the Soviet Union in the plane shooting crystallized his decision, he said.

Both countries knew for two and a half hours that the plane was off course, Stassen said, "and yet neither side talked to the other side; neither side communicated with the plane."

He said that as president he would meet with the leaders of the Soviet Union "and propose a new policy of recognizing a competition of systems for this period (in) history without war and without terrorism."

He would establish committees to work on critical areas and follow with regular summit meetings.

The record shows Stassen, who last held elective office in 1945, was a candidate in 1948, 1952, 1964, 1968, 1976 and 1980. But, he says, one might also count a drumbeat for him in 1944 when he was in the Navy in the Pacific.

"In fact," he added, "when I was the keynote and chairman of the (Wendell) Willkie nomination in 1940, there was some talk then, except of course I was then constitutionally too young."

Now, he told a packed news conference, "that question won't arise."

NEWS BRIEFS

Barge leaks oil in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — A barge ran aground near the Shell Oil Co. Deer Park terminal during the weekend and leaked about 6,000 gallons of oil into the Houston Ship Channel, the Coast Guard said.

The barge, owned by Hegman Towing Co. of Orange, carried about 800,000 gallons of oil in several tanks, but only one container was punctured, said Randy Lawson, assistant port captain for Hegman.

The barge ran aground Saturday while being pushed up the Ship Channel to the Shell terminal, Lawson said. The cause of the accident was unknown, he said.

Coast Guard Lt. James Leitner said the oil was contained in about four hours.

Cleanup crews from Peterson Maritime Services Inc. of Houston were to move the barge to the terminal and unload the remaining oil, he said.

Judge orders dredging to stop

ANGLETON (AP) — A judge has ordered the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to stop dredging in East Matagorda Bay, an operation that fishermen claim threatens oyster reefs and other sensitive marine life.

State District Judge Neil Caldwell of Angleton approved a temporary restraining order Saturday that was sought by the Texas attorney general's office. Caldwell scheduled a hearing for Friday to determine whether a preliminary injunction should be issued.

The ruling came less than a week after U.S. District Judge Robert O'Connor of Houston denied a restraining order requested by opponents of the dredging operation.

The dispute concerns silt being dredged from a 28-mile section of the Intracoastal Waterway paralleling the inland shore of East Matagorda Bay, about 25 miles east of Bay City. Corps officials say the dredging is necessary because the waterway is too shallow, making navigation difficult and hazardous.

T. Cullen Davis

Texas millionaire says Jesus Christ changed lifestyle

By KEVIN SMITH
University Daily Reporter

T. Cullen Davis is a man who has gone from accused murderer to born-again Christian. About 3 1/4 years ago, Davis began actively pursuing his faith in God, and his lifestyle has undergone a major change.

He was in Lubbock Sunday for a rare speaking appearance at the University Avenue Church of God. Before he delivered his sermon, he talked of the changes he has undergone.

"The difference in my lifestyle before I found Jesus Christ and after is like the difference between day and night," Davis said.

"I have reversed the priorities of my life," he said. "Before, business was at the top and the Lord was somewhere on down the line. Now the Lord is number one and family comes second."

In the late 1970s, Davis was tried in federal court on two separate occasions. He stood trial for the slaying of his ex-wife's daughter, Andrea. The same night Andrea was shot point blank in the heart, Priscilla Davis, his ex-wife, was wounded and her fiancé, Stan Farr, was killed by the same assailant.

Davis also stood trial for allegedly trying to hire a hit man to kill his divorce judge, Joe Edison Jr. The supposed hit man actually was an FBI informant. Davis was not convicted at either trial.

Six to eight months after his last trial, Davis said he began seeking Jesus and became a born-again Christian.

"I'm not as interested in spending the long hours at work," he said. "I used to spend 12 to 15 hours a day dealing with business. Now I spend a lot of time reading the Bible."

He said that change of lifestyle didn't happen overnight. He referred to the change as a "growing process."

"The difference in my lifestyle before I found Jesus Christ and after is like the difference between day and night."

— T. Cullen Davis

Along with his newfound religious convictions, Davis also has changed his social habits.

"I don't go to anymore drinking parties, and I mostly associate with Christians," he said.

When Davis was on trial, he was the focus of much media attention. He said he does not bear malice against anyone involved, although he did comment on the amount of press coverage he was given.

"There was a great deal of tenacity about the whole situation, and a lot of it was for political gain," he said.

Davis also questioned the way the press handled each trial.

"The press used it (the trial) to torture, to cast the reports in the worst possible light, although I would like to say I bear no grudges against anyone," he said.

Although his religious conviction and subsequent lifestyle change have altered many things, he still is a businessman, albeit a less aggressive one than before. As a millionaire, he has few financial worries, although he apparently no longer considers financial affairs a major aspect of life.

"I try not to let money influence my life," he said.

Davis said he receives many speaking invitations from around the state but infrequently accepts them.

Despite his rare speaking appearances, Davis has a basic message for anyone who is looking for help.

"Seek the Lord Jesus Christ to solve all your problems," he said. "Turn all your problems over to him. Do not just pretend to seek him. Anything less than that is unacceptable."

Budget deficits threaten durability of economy

By The Associated Press

rates up.

WASHINGTON — The world's economic picture remains murky because of the severe debt crisis among disadvantaged countries and threats of restrictive trade actions by industrialized nations enjoying economic recovery, the International Monetary Fund said Sunday.

The IMF also said in its annual report that "the most pressing task" facing world leaders is to ensure that the recovery continues at a low-inflation pace and spreads to the disadvantaged countries.

But, the report warned, the strength and durability of the economic upturn are threatened by enormous budget deficits in the United States, which can put upward pressure on interest rates.

"It will ... be vital to bring fiscal situations in the larger industrial countries, and particularly in the United States, into better balance," the study by the 146-member IMF said.

Many economists are concerned that the government's heavy demands for credit to finance the U.S. budget deficits — projected to reach a record $209.8 billion this year — will collide with the needs of businesses and consumers. The result, they say, will be higher long-term interest rates, which eventually could stall the recovery.

Some Reagan officials, however, disagree about the effect of the deficits on the recovery. And Treasury Secretary Donald Regan recently blamed financial institutions for keeping interest

In its study, the IMF dealt at length with the conditions in the developing world, particularly the debt troubles of economically poor countries.

"For all developing countries, economic prospects now depend crucially on the progress of recovery in the industrial world," the IMF said.

"The need for an early upturn in the industrial countries is therefore very pressing; but there is also a vital need that renewed growth be non-inflationary and sustainable."

The report cautioned against government actions that could re-ignite inflation, saying avoidance of such measures "remains a cardinal requirement in dealing with the present situation."

It also urged industrial nations not to slash imports from the developing world because such actions would have "particularly serious adverse implications" on those countries' economies.

With high jobless rates and a slowdown in trade, governments have been under increasing pressures to protect their industries from foreign competition.

The protectionist measures "now present an additional obstacle to a renewal of growth in world trade and a hazard to the achievement of higher levels of output and productivity in the world economy," according to the report.

Siamese twins separated

By The Associated Press

SAN JUAN DE LOS LAGOS, Mexico — A Mexican couple whose Siamese twins successfully were separated in a Texas hospital last spring kept a vow to the Virgin Mary by walking on their knees through this mountain town's cathedral.

Raul and Maria Delores Hernandez drove for two days from their home in Ciudad Juarez, 1,000 miles to the north on the U.S. border, to reach the cathedral Friday.

They took turns, with a child in their arms, creeping across 300 feet of the cathedral's dusty, wooden floor to kneel before a 3-foot-tall icon of the Virgin of San Juan. The Virgin has been credited with numerous miracles since the supposed resurrection of a circus performer's child in 1623.

Hernandez, a Juarez meat vendor, had promised to make the pilgrimage across Mexico to San Juan, if his daughters Miriam and Brenda survived the operation to separate them.

The girls were born joined at the chest, with a common liver and entwined intestines, but were successfully parted five months ago by a team of surgeons at Providence Memorial Hospital in El Paso, Texas.

Block seating seen as boon to students

By DONNA HUERTA
University Daily Reporter

Through a joint effort of various organizations, Texas Tech students will be able to maintain a social atmosphere at home football games because of block seating.

The Student Association, the Spirit Coordinating Committee and the ticket office manager have created a new block seating proposal that was established through a student referendum last spring.

The new seating arrangement will enable any registered student organization to draw as many as 100 adjacent seats. Before the proposal was adopted, student organizations could draw for only six adjoining seats at a time.

Susan Gaffney, SA external vice president, said the program was designed to increase both spirit activities and student participation at the home games.

The 3,000 seats allocated to the blocks are scattered in groups of 300 throughout Jones Stadium. The 10 areas are located within the student section except those already used by the Saddle Tramps, APOWSO, Tech Band and section 20, traditionally the best seats in the stadium.

The fact that section 20 will not be taken up by organizations makes the new policy equally fair to students not participating in the block program, according to former SA President Charlie Hill.

If organizations do not use all the seats allocated to the block program, the coupons will be available at the regular student drawing.

Student organizations wishing to use the blocks must contact Gaffney at the Student Association office in 230 University Center for an application. The application deadline is Friday.

Korean airliner incident used by Voice of America

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Voice of America is jacking up the volume of its broadcasts to the Soviet Union in the wake of the downing of a South Korean jetliner that killed 61 Americans and 208 other people.

The plane incident "has been the lead story in all 42 languages on Voice of America," said Joe O'Connell, of the United States Information Agency, parent agency of VOA.

Not only that, but the number of transmitters aimed at the Soviet Union has been doubled — to as many as 24 at peak times — and the Russian language daily broadcasting schedule has gone from 16 to 17 hours, said VOA spokeswoman Rogene Waite.

The Soviet Union has admitted shooting down the plane but said its pilots thought it was a spy plane flying over Soviet territory.

Steven Monblatt, of USIA's television division, said, "Rather than just reporting or commenting on an event, this was one of the few times we have been an integral part of an event."

He referred to last weekend when his agency and State Department translators put together a video tape on the incident, including recordings of the voices of Soviet pilots.

TTUHSC offers program for smokers

By KAY MILLER
University Daily Reporter

The American Cancer Society has labeled cigarette smoking the largest preventable cause of death in America. Yet 54 million Americans continue to smoke.

The American Cancer Society estimates 117,000 deaths in 1983 will be caused by lung cancer. Cigarette smoking is responsible for 75 percent of those deaths.

Because lung cancer takes 20 years to develop, young people do not think about the possibility of having cancer when they are 40 years old, said Linda Mason, RN, health educator for the city of Lubbock.

"Once lung cancer develops, it is associated with the lowest survival rates of all cancers," she said.

Other cigarette smoking related risks are shortened life expectancy, coronary heart disease, larynx cancer and mouth cancer, as well as other types of cancers, stillbirth and low birth rates.

The smoker who quits may receive immediate health benefits. Research shows that after 10 years of non-smoking most health risks are the same as those who have never smoked before.

So why do Americans continue to smoke?

"The reasons most people smoke are due to a craving or psychological addiction, a sense of increased energy, oral gratification, a form of pleasure or relaxation and a coping mechanism for stressful situations such as anger or anxiety," Mason said.

Cigarette smoke contains more than 1,000 chemicals, some of which are cancerous and some poisonous. Although there is no "safe" cigarette, American Cancer Society research shows that those persons who smoke relatively low tar and nicotine cigarette brands find quitting easier than those persons smoking high tar and nicotine brands. The research also shows the average mortality rate of low tar and nicotine smokers to be slightly lower than that of high tar and nicotine smokers.

Other facts about cigarette smoking include the following:

- The 1979 Surgeon General's report stated that cigarette smoking is the major single cause of lung cancer in both men and women.

- Once lung cancer develops, only 9 percent of the patients live more than five years after diagnosis.

- The life expectancy of 25-year-olds who smoke two packs of cigarettes a day is 8.3 years shorter than non-smoking 25-year-olds. A smoker doubles his risk of dying before age 65.

- American teen-age boys are smoking less while teen-age girls are smoking more.
- Within the next few years, lung cancer may surpass breast cancer as the number one cancer killer among women.

The American Cancer Society and the department of family medicine of the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center will sponsor a series of programs beginning Sept. 19 to help smokers quit. The FreshStart program provides participants with the information and strategies needed to stop smoking.

FreshStart includes four sessions over a two-week period and is free to anyone. Contact the American Cancer Society for more information.

FACTS ABOUT CIGARETTES!

1. Most men and women who smoke die of heart disease or lung cancer.
2. Smoking causes many other diseases.
3. Smoking is the leading cause of death in the United States.

WHY DID YOU QUIT SMOKING? WAS IT BECAUSE YOU WERE TWICE AS LIKELY TO DIE BEFORE 65, OR BECAUSE YOU MIGHT GET LUNG CANCER, OR BECAUSE YOU WERE SPENDING TOO MUCH ON CIGARETTES?

NO, IT WAS BECAUSE I STILL HAVEN'T BEEN ABLE TO GET A DATE WITH BROOKE SHIELDS. SHE HASN'T ANSWERED EITHER OF MY LETTERS.

Step 4: Pick up receiver (perhaps wiping peanut butter and jelly off first?) and dial number.

Step 5: Say, "Hi Mom, it's me!"

Trauma

Lives needlessly lost?

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Thousands of lives needlessly are lost each year because persons with serious injuries are taken to hospital emergency rooms that are unable to care for the injured persons, says the chief of surgery at San Francisco General Hospital.

"I don't think the public understands that the great majority of emergency rooms cannot take care of the severely injured patient," said Dr. Donald Trunkey, who specializes in emergency room surgery.

"That's not because it's a bad hospital. It's because they don't have the surgeons and anesthesiologists there to greet the patient," he said.

"In a good trauma center, if somebody came in dead or dying they should be in the operating room in 10 or 15 minutes," Trunkey said in a telephone interview.

In cities with trauma centers, an astounding 20 percent of people found on the street seemingly dead after accidents will leave the hospital alive without brain damage, he said.

In the typical emergency room, such patients would not survive.

If regional trauma centers were established nationwide, Trunkey estimates that 24,000 lives would be saved each year.

Trunkey calls trauma a "disease" and "the No. 1 medical and social problem in the United States today." It's a disease of the young — the number one killer of people ages 1 to 38.

More years of life are lost to trauma than to all other diseases combined, Trunkey said. Diseases kill more people than trauma, but because trauma strikes the young, it robs its victims of more years of their lives.

Trunkey also thinks the federal government has been lax in dealing with trauma care. "The feds could take a very strong role in research, but I doubt they will in a time of money constraint," he said.

While the federal government pours almost a billion and a half dollars a year into the fight against cancer and heart disease, it virtually ignores trauma.

Army uses computers for war gaming; Elite corps being trained in strategy

By The Associated Press

CARLISLE, Pa. — In a stone mill by a rushing trout stream, the U.S. Army's brightest officers come to windowless rooms and practice for war.

They sit at sophisticated computers and fight intense, imaginary battles against the enemy.

The outside walls are layered with lead to prevent any eavesdropping or leakage of sensitive material from computer emissions.

"In military circles this place is well known, and agents are very aware of this place," says Col. Raymond Macedonia, head of war gaming. "We go on the basis there are agents in the area."

Officials take seriously the possibility of a computer whiz tapping into the classified gaming system, as depicted in the popular movie, "War Games," and they keep constant vigilance.

The Army's $1.5 million war-gaming center, which opened in June, is housed in a building erected in the 1760s by Charles Wilson, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. The center is part of the U.S. Army War College, a premier training ground for selected officers on their way to earning their general's stars.

"This is the highest level the Army has," says Macedonia, 50, a soft-spoken man with advanced degrees in economics and psychology. He served in Vietnam and taught at West Point.

The college and center, along with the Army's Military History Institute and its Strategic Studies Institute, make up most of Carlisle Barracks.

The Barracks, founded in 1757, is the Army's second oldest post, ranking behind West Point.

The center sits on the main road through Carlisle, separated from the rest of the base by a branch of the Le Tort Spring, renowned for its trout. To passersby, it could be just another well-maintained, historic home in a lush, country setting.

Inside, though, are four floors of wood-paneled conference rooms and modern offices. U-shaped game rooms take up the second and third floors and are the heart of the center. Along the walls and on tabletops are maps of Europe and the Middle East, stenciled over with hexagonal zones on which to chart troop movements. Computer printouts of a war game's progress hang on partitions, dividing the blue army from the red army.

Two tabletops are covered with computer maps of Iran. Using a pencil-like probe, an officer can electronically move troops to various locations on the board. On the edge of the table are an array of commands, including the nuclear option.

At the end of the game, the computer will produce a printed report showing territory, forces and equipment lost and won, and how efficiently equipment and personnel were deployed.

Although Europe remains the traditional focus, there are games for Central America, Korea, and the sea routes north of Norway.

To hone their fighting skills, officers can play historical games. One recent day, a game using German Gen. Erwin Rommel's North Africa campaign was on one of the screens. Maps of the area along with troop positions could be called up, as could the text of Rommel's journal. Game players could follow the campaign as fought by Rommel in World War II or could pose "what if" questions to create different endings.

For the first time, the Army has created an elite corps of military strategic planners. After graduation, 10 colonels spend two years assigned to the War College, but are sent around the world to work with senior field commanders. Afterward, the colonels spend their careers in planning and report directly to the deputy Army secretary for operations.

Archaeologists rebuild face of ancient king

By The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — British experts working with ancient skull bones from a royal tomb have constructed what they believe is a good likeness of the battle-scarred face of King Philip II of Macedonia — Father of Alexander the Great.

Their portrait of a rugged Greek warrior with a scar in the right eye socket was presented Friday evening at an international conference attended by more than 1,200 leading classical scholars.

"We don't claim this is a 100 percent likeness, but we think it's as close as you can get to how King Philip looked shortly before his death," John Prag, keeper of archaeology at Britain's Manchester Museum, said in an interview.

The new research is expected to help convince some scholars who still doubt that the tomb found in 1977 in Vergina, Greece, is the last resting place of the king who unified the Greeks in the 4th century B.C. and forged one of the greatest armies ever known.

The stone tomb chamber found beneath a 30-foot-high earth mound was crammed with gold, silver and ivory, including the solid gold casket that contained cremated bones showing damage to the right eye.

According to ancient historians, King Philip's right eye was gouged out by an arrow while he was besieging the northern Greek city of Methoni in 354 B.C., 18 years before he was assassinated.

"The bone damage was compatible with a wound caused by a missile striking from above," said Richard Neave, a medical artist from Manchester University who applied forensic techniques to rebuild the skull.

"This is scientific confirmation of my conviction that King Philip was the occupant of Tomb 2 at Vergina," said Manolis Andronikos, the Salonica University archaeologist who excavated the tomb.

Neave took plaster casts of the burned skull pieces which were used as the basis for the reconstruction.

"They revealed bone damage to the right eye socket and cheekbone caused some time before death," Neave said in an interview.

The artist rebuilt the soft tissue of the face in clay, using standard proportions established for depth of facial tissue.

Proposed changes given to state school board

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — The State Board of Education heard Friday a suggestion that Texas public school students should decide after the sixth grade if they want to aim for a college education or for a job.

The board is not expected to act on the suggestion of its staff until some time in 1984.

The staff, in a report boldly labeled "For discussion only," also suggested that the elective board, which administers the 1,125 public school districts in the state, might want:

— To encourage schools to schedule a seven-period day with 45-minute classes or a six-period day with 55-minute classes.

— To say if high school graduates should complete 20 units of study instead of the 18 units required now.

— To require a "computer literacy course" of all students at some stage of their education to equip them for either new college or business techniques.

— To decide if students should be allowed to miss classes in order to participate in "co-curricular" activities such as drill teams, cheerleading, marching band, ROTC and athletics.

The state school board heard the report given by Tom Anderson, deputy commissioner of the Texas Education Agency, but took no action on it.

The report resulted from a bill passed by the 1981 Legislature directing the state board to establish a state basic curriculum by designating the essential elements for each of 12 subjects comprising a well-balanced curriculum.

Anderson said the TEA had received oral and written testimony from 5,352 people and 2,225 organizations before preparing the report.

"While there was little disagreement that English, language arts and mathematics should receive no less than 50 percent of instructional time on a daily basis (at the elementary level), there was much disagreement with the recommendation that other subjects could be taught on a weekly basis with no specific time allotment."

Anderson said much of the testimony came from supporters of fine arts, vocational education and physical education.

"Emotion," the hit single that rocketed San Diego's DFX2 into the limelight, received first airplay as a result of a KROQ radio compilation album previewing San Diego area bands. After a few broadcasts of the single, KROQ listeners in San Diego overloaded the request lines for more airplay of "Emotion."

The single soon achieved number one ranking on the KROQ request list and resulted in a record contract awarded to DFX2 by MCA records.

DFX2 will be featured live Tuesday night at Abbey Road, 6602 Slide Road. Blind Date will be the opening entertainment for the live double-header. Tickets will be on sale at the door.

Bee Gee is stayin' alive and free

By The Associated Press

LONDON — A divorce court judge ordered rock star Robin Gibb of the Bee Gees jailed Friday for talking to reporters about his former wife, but an appeals court later released him and fined him $7,500 instead.

Gibb, 36, was sentenced to two weeks in jail on a charge of contempt of court stemming from a court order forbidding him to tell newspapers about his failed marriage.

Gibb had argued in divorce court that an article about his marriage published in the Scottish Daily Express in May was based on an "emotional outburst" by him.

Gibb's lawyer, Andrew Kirkwood, told the appeals court the case was one of urgency.

"Quite apart from the distress and anxiety Mr. Gibb is feeling at the moment, he has a commitment ... to perform a show with his brothers in Verona, Italy, tomorrow," Kirkwood said.

Gibb's ex-wife, Molly, 36, who had brought the action, burst into tears when the jail term was imposed. "I didn't want that," she told reporters.

Station invites viewers backstage for broadcast

By The Associated Press

DAYTON, Ohio — A Dayton television station is trying a new approach in the competition for viewers — inviting them into the studio to watch the evening news in person as it's broadcast.

"Basically, it's public relations," said WDTN-TV news director Steve Olszyk. "We've probably got the best newscast in town, but we've got to get people to look at it. This is one small way to get people to take a look."

Olszyk, who came up with the idea, described the station as a "mediocre No. 2" behind traditional ratings leader WHIO-TV.

Invitations are mailed to 50 people for each night's 6 p.m. newscast, and each invitee is asked to bring a friend.

Only about a dozen people have shown up each night, station officials said. On last Tuesday's opening night, 10 reporters showed up to watch 11 people watch the news.

"It shows we have to work on the system a little bit," said Olszyk.

Invitations are sent to targeted sections of the station's viewing area. Olszyk said most of last week's invitations were sent to people in the Springfield area, about 40 miles away.

That distance might be the reason for the first week's low turnout, said anchorman Jack Hicks.

Tumored tortoise parades to zoo

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A skateboard-riding Galapagos tortoise that was sent to Arizona for cancer treatment came home to a hero's welcome Thursday and basked in the ticker-tape, the cheers and the bad jokes.

A brass band played and Jalopy the tortoise rode in solitary splendor in an antique truck through the New York City borough of Staten Island to the Staten Island Zoo.

The tortoise blinked placidly while Borough President Anthony Gaeta proclaimed Thursday "Jalopy Day" on Staten Island and praised him for being "one of the few things that makes the government look speedy."

The 175-pound tortoise became famous when he began riding his makeshift skateboard, a five-wheeled plastic garbage-can lid to which he was securely taped, a year and a half ago. The device was built to relieve pressure on a tumor that was so big "it looked like he was growing another leg," said

Jalopy's caretaker, Dennis Hall.

The tortoise was sent to the University of Arizona in Tucson six months ago for surgery and cobalt treatments to remove the malignant tumor, which was on his left shoulder.

The tumor was cut away, but Jalopy was still taped to his skateboard when he returned to New York City by plane early Thursday. The speed of his recovery will determine how long he will be strapped to the contraption.

Hall, who is reptile keeper at the zoo and has cared for Jalopy for 17 years, said the tortoise has a 75 percent to 80 percent chance of recovering fully.

"He's only about 75. That's middle-age for a Galapagos, so we're hoping he'll be around for a long, long time yet," said Hall, who added that the only thing Jalopy needs now is "a little TLC."

Jalopy got a lot of tender loving care Thursday as the crowd patted him and cheered him on.

KSAT ordered to pay $1.6 million

By The Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Television station KSAT of San Antonio and one of its former reporters were ordered to pay $1.6 million in damages to a local security company for falsely reporting that the firm was being investigated in an alleged gun smuggling scheme.

A district court jury deliberated 3½ hours over two days before returning the decision Friday against the television station and reporter Baxter Gentry.

The jury decided that Channel 12 and Gentry must pay $500,000 to International Security Group President Richard Medlin for personal damages, $100,000 for business losses to his defunct company, and $1 million in punitive damages.

In the broadcast, Gentry reported that the security company was being investigated by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms for allegedly smuggling weapons into Guatemala.

International Security Group was a San Antonio company that manufactured armored cars and hand-held machine guns for sale in the United States and abroad.

Among the points in their decision, jurors found that neither Medlin nor his company was involved in gun smuggling, as suggested in a July 2, 1979, broadcast, and that Gentry should have known Medlin was not involved.

The jurors also found that the broadcast was defamatory, that both Gentry and Channel 12 were negligent in presenting the broadcast and that the broadcast was presented with malicious intent.

Medlin, now a security consultant for another firm, said he thought the verdict was "fair and just."

"That's what the jury felt," said Medlin, who had asked for $30 million in damages. "It took us four years to get here, but I believe in the system."

KSAT-TV General Manager Jim Shiavone said plans are under way to appeal the decision.

"The trial is over, and naturally we're disappointed," Shiavone said, declining further comment.

Gentry, now working for Austin's KVUE-TV, said, "I'll stand behind the text of my story. I don't believe there was any evidence at all to show that the story damaged ISG."

"I think the evidence showed the business went bankrupt because they had trouble getting investors and their sales projections were wrong," Gentry said. "I will not make any apologies for the story."

Medlin's attorney, James Branton, said the decision should carry a message to all members of the media.

"The message is responsible reporting," Branton said.

Life according to Carrasco-Just a party and a dance

By KRISTI FROELICH
University Daily Lifestyles Writer

The line of people dressed in a variety of attire from leopard skin tops and leather pants to cowboy boots and western shirts stretched from the front door of New West all the way to 34th Street. Sure, it was open bar from 7 until 10 p.m., but that wasn't the reason for the capacity crowd. Joe "King" Carrasco and the Crowns were the reason some people stood in line for 30 minutes just to get into the standing-room-only club Saturday night. They were expecting a show, and that's just what they got.

Carrasco, who was due on stage at 10 p.m. after an earlier, no-alcohol performance, was 30 minutes late and the cramped, angry, anxious crowd responded with chants of "Joe, Joe" But the audience seemed to forget its discomforts when Joe "King" and the Crowns got on stage.

Dressed in green shorts, tennis shoes and a yellow and blue striped tank top, Carrasco ran on stage amid yells of "Ow" and "Aye, yi, yi, yi." The crowd loved it as he started his energized performance with "Let's Go," a song from his Party Weekend album.

People were pushing and shoving for the stage, trying to get a closer look at the band. Carrasco then got his fans dancing and singing and jumped into the crowd, letting them push him back on stage. Next, the audience was really riled up as the band played for an hour and a half and then came back for an encore. But no matter how crazy his performances, the Joe "King" of stage is a much quieter man than the Joe "King" onstage.

In an interview on Carrasco's bus after his 4:00 p.m. show, he offered some insight into the man behind the "Aye, yi, yi."

Carrasco, who is 29, has been playing music since he was in the seventh grade.

"I basically played the same stuff I'm doing now, the same style which was sort of a Texas garage band rock 'n' roll style, and way back then when I say garage style I mean we started playing in garages in the seventh grade.

"We played a lot of teen dances back then. Then I got waylaid in Mexico in the early '70s and wanted to play with some bands in Mexico but was not able to due to not living there, not having union requirements, so I ended up playing in Chicano bands in South Texas and Austin.

"Then I got tired of playing guitar behind people, so I formed my own band in 1976. From there I've come into what I have here today," Carrasco said laughing. "We've got five albums out and we've played all over Europe and we just got back from South America, played in Colombia where they gave me the key, I mean the spoon, to the city in Bogata. That was pretty neat."

Carrasco seems to be an international star. The reactions he receives in other countries can be quite a thrill for the group, despite the language barrier.

"In the clubs, people are really nice and not really any different from here in a lot of ways. Except we played a free show for the poor people in Bogata, that was like 5,000 peasant-type people, and they really enjoyed it — they went crazy. They gave us a warm reception. We were like the first new wave band to play South America and Colombia; it was quite an experience. I'd like to do more of that," Carrasco said.

There are four musicians in the band. There is, of course, Joe "King" Carrasco, which isn't his real name. Carrasco was a nickname given him when he played in Mexican bands because his real last name of Teutsch was too hard for them to pronounce.

Then there is Kris Cummings, who plays keyboards, Dick Ross, who plays drums, and Jorge Riefs, the newest addition to the group, on bass.

"Me and Kris and Dick have been together for almost three years now. That's a long time, huh?"

Carrasco is a Texas boy, born north of Amarillo in Dumas.

"Pretty wild, huh? Hey, a lot of people put down the Panhandle of Texas, but man, a lot of stuff has come out of like that are neat. When I was 14, 13, that's all I wanted to do (see bands perform)."

Carrasco's music is important to him. He doesn't look at it as just a way to make money.

"In 1978, 1979, when I started getting this band together, I sort of approached it with the way I approached music in the seventh grade. You go out and play the dance, and you don't have to get high or anything. You get high off the music.

"Music is what keeps you, makes you move. It's a real natural thing, and to move around like that is good exercise. I think that kind of movement is almost intoxicating. It's exercise," he said.

Carrasco and the Crowns have seen widespread acceptance of their music, but more so overseas than in America.

"Buena" ended up in the Top 20 in France, and we were in the Top 10 in Belgium, and we did real good in England, Switzerland, Sweden — I keep naming countries, but each country you play you have to kind of approach as, well, as you approach the United States; you try to do big in the United States right? And then you play France and you try to do big in France. Each country you have to approach as important.

"Texas is almost like a country, in a way. We're doing really good in Texas. Of course, it's home."

Even though he's from Texas, his band tries to draw sounds from all kinds of music from all over the world.

"I like Arabian music a lot. I like all sorts of music. I think that the more international influences you put in your music, like Brazilian, Arabian, Mexican, the more you'll be able to establish yourself as an international group, because everywhere you go, people kind of have to grab on to something about the music.

"Like people in Colombia, they don't speak English, but you have to make your music accessible to them in certain ways through either the melody or the lyrics, like 'buena' or 'gracias.' They understand those things.

"Gracias" is an international word. Even phonetic sounds and stuff. It sounds really odd, but when there's a language barrier they can really pull back against the music, so you've got to try and make your music overcome those language barriers; so you try to incorporate something from everywhere into your music. It's called CUL-TURE," he said.

Other than his Tex-Mex sounding music, Joe "King" Carrasco may be best known for the relationship he has with his fans. Immediately after his afternoon performance, he went to sign autographs and have his picture taken with his fans, even before cooling off or changing clothes. Carrasco said he thinks it's important to keep in close contact with his fans.

"Yea, I think I do. Gosh, hey, man, if anybody likes what I'm doing then that really makes me feel good. That's what it's all about. It's not about making money. It's not about trying to make people happy. Just the people liking me is all I want. That's the way it should be, don't you think?"

"If you knew all these people liked you and you didn't have any money or you knew these people really didn't like you but you had a lot of money — I think I'd rather have a lot of people like me. Now, if you could have both..." he said, laughing. "Just the acceptance makes me feel good."

Joe "King" is conscientious of his audiences and likes to keep them happy.

"I think reaching kids is important, because what kids see now in big coliseum concerts is a lot of heavy metal things that are okay, but I don't think they are offering any solutions, nothing different, nothing they haven't heard. There's more things to be had."

But Joe "King" does have other gripes about the music industry.

The band will be working on a new album and new videos in the near future. Joe "King" even would like to do a movie. But he mostly enjoys his live performances, which he describes as "organized pandemonium." Carrasco never gets tired of performing.

"I think people shouldn't sit down. I think they should really get into dancing and stuff, really enjoy themselves. As long as the crowd's enthusiastic, they can be a 1,000 or 10."

"If they're enthusiastic, that's what counts. I give a whole lot on stage and I expect if somebody comes to see us they should try to give something back in enthusiasm. It's a party, man; it's a dance."

Scoggins and Scott

Terry Scoggins, 20, of Atlanta, Ga., won the Buddy Holly look-alike contest last weekend. He is shown meeting Lubbock's Mac Davis look-alike, Leroy Scott.

Red Scare alters lawyer's career

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Banished by McCarthyism to the fringes of his chosen profession, George Anastaplo sends this message from more than 30 years of exile from the legal system: Thank you.

Anastaplo, one of the victims of a Red Scare that swept the country during the 1950s, was denied a promising legal career that was within his grasp as the top University of Chicago law school graduate.

But he turned adversity into accomplishment.

Though blacklisted for decades from law school jobs for refusing to answer questions in the 1950s about his political affiliations, Anastaplo has carved out a career as a teacher, scholar, prolific author of philosophy and law — and in the past three years as a law professor.

"I do not know of anybody else's career, from among those I was in school with, that I would prefer to mine," said Anastaplo, who teaches at Loyola University.

Yet at the age of 57, Anastaplo's dreams of practicing law never have been fulfilled — and he says he is content to leave it that way as an example of how the system can fail.

But the Illinois Bar Association isn't content with his record. It has asked the Illinois Supreme Court — which reconvenes next week — to reconsider Anastaplo's application for a law license, which was denied in 1951 after he was interviewed by the court's Committee on Character and Fitness.

Anastaplo shouldn't have been denied a license because of his "principled refusal" to answer questions, said Al Hofeld, state bar president. "We are not taking this action for Mr. Anastaplo's sake, but for the sake of the legal profession, which should be able to admit past mistakes and hold its head high."

But Anastaplo feels his case, which he argued before the U.S. Supreme Court, perhaps should remain as is.

"A lot can be said for allowing this case just to stand as a reminder of what can go wrong when the bar and the courts and the law schools misconduct themselves," said Anastaplo.

Air Force tames Tech in opener, 28-13

By LYN MCKINLEY
University Daily Sports Editor

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — They waited so long for Saturday. For a chance to show anyone who cared that the 1983 Texas Tech Red Raiders is a team with destiny. The darkhorse of the conference. What they want to be so badly.

But it wasn't meant to be. And a 28-13 loss to the Air Force Falcons was.

The Tech performance Saturday was just a typical, Rodney Dangerfield way for the Raiders to open the 1983 season. The crowd of 26,800 and a regional television audience saw it all. Missed field goals. Muffed extra points. Busted assignments and a secondary that at times played like the Solid Gold dancers at Coldwater.

In the end, the Tech loss to the undefeated Falcons could have been so much worse. Two Air Force interceptions deep in Tech territory in the waning moments of the fourth quarter easily could have pushed the score into the 40s.

But the disappointing defeat never should have happened to Jerry Moore's squad in the first place.

"We got ourselves in a position where we couldn't continue to try to drive the ball, and that hurt us," Moore said. "Our intensity in the game wasn't good at all."

If only the Raiders could have played like they did on that first drive, a flawlessly executed Robert Lewis-look-like-Tony Dorsett 64-yarder. Nine straight times Lewis pounded through the Air Force line behind Matt Harlien and Danny Buzzard.

After a three-yard toss from Jim Hart to Leonard Harris, Tech was ahead by seven.

That is, until Air Force quarterback Marty Louthan learned he could run and pass on the youthful Tech defense. Suddenly, a mild fall afternoon turned into a steamer for the Raider secondary. The Falcons' No. 1-ranked offense gained 413 total yards with a chilling precision. And it seemed there wasn't anything the Raiders could do.

"They are so diversified with their offense," Moore said of the Falcons' wishbone attack. "Air Force won't ever try to do anything they can't do well. We thought we could play man-to-man defense on them, and we simply couldn't."

The Louthan-to-Mike Kirby connection haunted the Raiders all day with Kirby catching seven passes for 133 yards.

"We came in here thinking we could throw on them," Air Force coach Ken Hatfield said. "I couldn't have been prouder of our defense since I've been here."

Yet if the Raiders, who finished with 271 yards total offense, could have pushed it through after a long drive in the third quarter, well, it could have been such a different ending.

The Raiders, behind 13-7 at the half, opened the third quarter like a Top 20 team. Lewis took an option pitch on a first and 10 at the Tech 20 and picked up 25 yards.

Yet the seven-minute drive broke down at the Air Force 15 when Hart couldn't find an open receiver on a third and four and went down short of the first down.

Last year's Tech savior Ricky Gann then could only stand and watch as his 31-yard field goal attempt sailed wide right. A well-executed drive ended with nothing on the Raiders' end of the scoreboard. And only a psychological let-down in the players' minds.

The Falcons then took the ball and played the way Tech so desperately needed to. Air Force drove 80 yards in eight plays, with Louthan scoring on a 38-yard option up the middle of the Raider defense. After a two-point conversion, Tech was down 21-7 with just under five minute left in the third quarter.

But the Raiders refused to quit. The memories of comeback passes and last-second interceptions kept them striving.

Louthan's magic vanished on a pitch late in the third quarter and Mike Kinsey was the lucky recipient of the gift — a fumble at the Tech 17. The Raiders had the ball. And the momentum.

Moore mixed the running of Lewis, Dale Brown and Hart and marched to the Air Force 18. Five carries later, Brown scored on a five-yard sweep and Tech was back in the game. Then Gann's extra point drifted right, leaving Tech behind by eight points 21-13.

Air Force struck for the last time on a 75-yard scoring drive, with Louthan converting a fourth-down and one at the Tech 21 into a 21-yard TD run. 28-13. And nothing left for Jerry Moore to do.

I thought we'd really go after them," Moore said after the game. "We just didn't play very hard."

Mistakes haunt Moore, Raiders

By JOHN KELLEY
University Daily Sports Writer

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Texas Tech coach Jerry Moore couldn't hide the disappointment. His face didn't show it, but the frustration of a third straight opening game loss was apparent in his voice. The West Texas drawl was slower than normal. The words came out in a monotone-type voice usually reserved for funerals.

"We just didn't play like I thought we would today," Moore said after Tech lost to the Falcons 28-13 on regional television. "Air Force is a better football team than they were a year ago (when Tech won 31-30). They should be. They've got a lot of those players off a good team last year back."

They've also got a pretty good coach. While the Raiders were intent on stopping the run — something they did in the early going — Air Force coach Ken Hatfield was chunking the ground attack in favor of the passing game.

"Sometimes you've got to throw to take the pressure off the wishbone," Hatfield said.

Instead of just taking pressure off, the Falcons' aerial attack became a threat in itself. Quarterback Marty Louthan worked on the inexperienced Tech cornerbacks, Roland Mitchell and Carl Carter, completing nine of 15 passes for 158 yards.

Wide receiver Mike Kirby caught almost everything out of the sky — except the four guys who parachuted onto the field before the game. He ended with seven catches for 133 yards, 55 yards more than all Tech receivers combined.

"In the first half, we were just trying to figure Kirby out," Carter said. "Louthan was throwing the ball on time, and it was hard to stop."

Mitchell, a redshirt freshman who was playing in his first college game, got a taste of being in the hot seat in a hurry. It was a taste that had to be acquired.

"At first I was nervous," Mitchell said. "But the second half was like practice. The first half wasn't like I expected. I expected to come out and do good."

By the time Mitchell and Carter were getting used to roaming the secondary, the Falcons had the wishbone ground game rolling. The Raiders, both offensively and defensively, had trouble putting all the pieces together on this day.

"We just weren't very consistent," Moore said.

For a moment, though, it looked like the opening game frustration would be something of the past. The Raiders marched in Nebraska-like fashion 64 yards in 10 plays on their first possession of the game.

"We knew if we executed we could score," quarterback Jim Hart said. "On the first drive we didn't make any mistakes at all."

But the firepower disappeared as quickly as it appeared; the next series consisted of three plays and a punt.

"We were real inconsistent," Hart said. "They had a good defense and they made a couple of good defensive plays. Anytime you score only 13 points you're going to be disappointed."

The disappointment was something that couldn't be hidden, least of all by Moore.

TECH NOTES

The mere sight of Ricky Gann trotting onto the football field leaves Tech fans breathing a sigh of relief. If the offense can't put it across, Gann will kick it through. That is, until Saturday.

The 1982 second-team All-Southwest Conference kicker had his troubles against the Air Force Falcons. Twice he missed. On makeable kicks.

Gann's first miscue occurred with Tech behind 13-7 at the beginning of the third quarter. The Raiders had driven from their own 20 to the Air force 14 when the drive stalled. Gann entered the game for a seemingly routine 31-yard field goal. Seconds later, the ball soared just to the right of the goal post. And Tech came up empty-handed.

Then in the fourth quarter, Gann missed an extra point after a Dale Brown touchdown run. The missed kick left the Raiders behind 21-13. If the kick had been good, Tech could have gone ahead with a touchdown and a two-point conversion. Instead, the Raiders were down by eight. They'd never come back.

"The third quarter drive that we had and didn't get any points was a factor," coach Jerry Moore said.

"We've had some problems on our specialty teams," he continued. "We've got a good kicker."

There's no question how good the Raiders looked on their opening drive. An easy seven points behind the running of Robert Lewis.

But even more critical was the way Tech came out for the second drive of the first quarter. Would the Raiders run? Would they pass? Would they score again?

Nah. Tech's second drive began with a dropped pass on the left sideline. Play two — a dropped pass on the right sideline. A draw play on third down was good for only three yards. And Tech was forced to punt.

The series characterized Tech's inconsistent play against the Falcons. The Raiders would drive the length of the field and score. Then, they wouldn't get past midfield. And in the end, the Raiders came up short.

Louthan sparks Falcon victory

By JOHN KELLEY
University Daily Sports Writer

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Air Force quarterback Marty Louthan had just scored three touchdowns to lead the Falcons to their second straight victory, a 28-13 win over Texas Tech. This was Louthan's chance. He could stand on his locker room stool and tell the world that he is the best quarterback at an academy since a guy named Roger. He could say he is the best wishbone quarterback in the land. He could say he is a legitimate All-America candidate.

But Louthan couldn't bring himself to say any of those things. The truth is, Louthan probably doesn't even think of those things. He credits everyone else before he gets to himself.

"Tech messed up on defense and two guys tackled the fullback and there was no one left for me," is what Louthan said of his 38-yard TD run on an option keeper that put Falcons up by two touchdowns in the third quarter.

Well, Marty, what about the 20-yard TD run on a fourth and one late in the fourth quarter that put away the game?

"I just ran out there and turned the corner and no one was there," the QB said. "We knew we needed that drive to win the game."

What modest Marty won't say is that it was his performance as the "Flexbone Magician," that kept the Falcons out of the loss column. Louthan operated the wishbone to near perfection, taking only what the Tech defense would allow.

In the first half, the Raiders were stopping the option and the inside running game. So Louthan went to the air, connecting on 8 of 13 first half passes for 146 yards. When Tech began to stop the passing game in the second half, Louthan turned to the option for the two long TD runs.

"Down in the Southwest Conference, they're known for stopping the run," Louthan said. "We tried to throw on them to loosen them up."

The tactic worked partly because the Raiders had been gearing themselves to stop the explosive wishbone running game. When the Falcons decided to pass, Tech coach Jerry Moore's worries were compounded. The Raiders no longer could stop the run by crowding 11 men within five yards of the line of scrimmage.

"Air Force did a good job of running the option," Moore said. "Louthan will do everything the option game lets him do." And then some.

AIR FORCE NOTES

Keith Jackson would have been speechless. Howard Cosell probably would have pondered the animal kingdom for the perfect metaphor to describe the feats of wide receiver Mike Kirby. Er, the feat.

With a second and six at the Falcon 18 late in the second period, quarterback Marty Louthan hit Kirby with a perfect strike on the left sideline. Kirby danced his way to the 50, then broke back across the middle with four Raider defenders chasing him into the end zone.

But it wasn't to be. Officials ruled that Kirby stepped out of bounds at the 50. An easy seven stopped out in a split-second.

"I didn't think I stepped out of bounds at the time," the 5-11, 180-pound Kirby said with a smile. "But all my teammates said my heel was out. One of the trainers said they'd just have to get me some smaller shoes..."

OK. You've got to be the first to admit that pulling out of bed for a 7:30 a.m. English class is a lot tougher than it sounded at registration. Heck, even a 9:30 a.m. Poly Sci can be tougher than a Bledsoe steak.

But wait. Just take a quick glance at Falcon quarterback Marty Louthan's schedule.

The day begins at 6 a.m. with reveille. And that's not a friendly lick from a furry A&M Collie. Breakfast formation is at 6:30 a.m., followed by a 20-minute breakfast. Military Studies, a non-credit course, begins at 7 a.m. and dismisses at 7:45 a.m. Then the fun begins.

Regular classes start at 8 a.m. and continue until 11:55 a.m. Louthan's taking a mere 21 hours this semester.

A 20-minute lunch begins at noon and is followed by team meetings until 12:50 p.m. Classes begin again at 12:55 p.m. and last until 2:50 p.m. After a half-hour allotted for taping and changing, Louthan has team meetings for one hour and football practice for two hours.

Dinner commences at 7 p.m. and no less than 30 minutes later, it's time to study. At 11 p.m., taps are sounded and it's lights out.

Baylor uses born-again offense to shock BYU, 40-36

By The Associated Press

The Baylor Bears produced the proudest moments for the Southwest Conference Saturday night, while Jim Wacker's debut as TCU coach was a "whacky" one.

The Bears, using three quarterbacks in Coach Grant Teaff's wide-open, full-throttle offense, beat Brigham Young University at its own game, scoring touchdowns.

Baylor gunned down BYU 40-36 on a two-yard touchdown run by Alfred Anderson in the final minute of play.

Wacker saw his Horned Frogs drop a certain touchdown pass with five seconds to play then watched Ken Ozee's partially blocked 35-yard field goal just clear the crossbar for a 16-16 tie with Kansas.

In other games involving SWC teams, No. 15 ranked Southern Methodist barely survived Grambling 20-13, Houston fell 29-7 to Miami, Arkansas edged Tulsa 17-14, and Rice lost its 14th straight game, 21-17 to Minnesota.

FROGS ALMOST PRINCES IN WACKER DEBUT

FORT WORTH — For a step, tight end Dan Sharp had a victory in his grasp. Then the ball hit the ground and so did Jim Wacker's chances for a victory in his debut as Texas Christian football coach.

Sharp's drop of a certain touchdown pass at Kansas' two-yard line with five seconds to play meant TCU's Ken Ozee had to kick a 35-yard field goal with a second to play for a 16-16 tie. He did so, but not before the ball had been tipped by a Jayhawk lineman.

"It beats losing by a bunch," Wacker said, experiencing only his second tie in more than 100 games as a coach.

Wacker said he wasn't mad at Sharp because "the one guy who made more mistakes than anyone was Wacker himself."

SMU DEFENSE SAVES No. 18 TEAM

SHREVEPORT — SMU still is the winningest team in the nation, but the Mustangs can give thanks to Grambling's poor punting game.

Two bungled punts led to two touchdowns in the Mustangs' 20-13 victory, their 18th consecutive without a loss.

Tailback Reggie Dupard suffered a shoulder injury and did not play in the second. X-Rays proved negative and Dupard only suffered a bruise.

HOGS SURVIVE 'CANE

FAYETTEVILLE — "It wasn't very artistic but it was a success," said Arkansas Coach Lou Holtz, who watched his Razorbacks tiptoe past Tulsa 17-14.

Arkansas jumped to a 17-7 lead and had to survive a Golden Hurricane rally which included a failed 43-yard field goal attempt into the wind at the final gun.

Freshman fullback Derrick Thomas rushed for two touchdowns for Arkansas and Greg Horne kicked a 38-yard field goal.

Plunkett passes L.A. past Houston

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The pinpoint passing of quarterback Jim Plunkett and a rugged Los Angeles defense were the key factors Sunday as the unbeaten Raiders rolled to a 20-6 National Football League victory over the Houston Oilers.

Plunkett, in his 13th NFL season, had a shaky preseason, and many of his teammates were quoted as saying that Marc Wilson should be the starting Los Angeles quarterback. In last weekend's 20-10 victory over Cincinnati, Plunkett hit on just 14 of 29 passes for 155 yards.

Against the Oilers, however, Plunkett connected on 19 of his 28 throws for 229 yards and a touchdown. He guided the Raiders on a pair of 80-yard, eight-play scoring marches.

The Oilers, who played without standout running back Earl Campbell, were limited to a pair of field goals by Florian Kempf and never were able to get untracked offensively, picking up only seven first downs.

The Raiders went ahead for good on their first possession, marching 49 yards on nine plays with running back Kenny King climaxing the drive by scoring from two yards out. Chris Bahr, who later missed three field goals was unsuccessful on the conversion attempt.

The Raiders made it 13-0 with 1:12 left before halftime as Greg Pruitt raced 10 yards to cap their first 80-yard scoring drive.

Kempf kicked his field goal, a 40-yarder, just 25 seconds later. The three-pointer came shortly after an 80-yard run by rookie Larry Moriarty.

Kempf booted a 38-yarder late in the third quarter to draw to within six points but the Raiders bounced back with their second 80-yard TD march, this time capped by a two-yard scoring toss from Plunkett to tight end Todd Christensen in the opening minutes of the fourth quarter.

Houston quarterback Archie Manning was able to complete only six of 19 passes for 107 yards. He was intercepted twice and sacked five times as the Oilers fell to 0-2.

Second-year Los Angeles running back Marcus Allen was the game's leading rusher with 96 yards on 17 carries.

Allen, the NFL's leading scorer as a rookie last year, raced 19 yards on the Raiders' first scrimmage play and gained a total of 32 yards on four carries as Los Angeles marched to its first touchdown.

On the second Los Angeles TD drive, Plunkett connected on passes of 16 yards to Christensen and 12 yards to Calvin Muhammad.

Moriarty's 80-yard gallop came on a simple draw play that originated at the Houston 7-yard line. It appeared that the former Notre Dame standout would score, but he ran out of gas, bounced off a blocker and stumbled and fell at the Los Angeles 13.

The Oilers blew a pair of scoring opportunities in the third quarter after recovering a pair of fumbles by Allen, first at the Los Angeles 30 and then at the Raiders' 24.

Cowboys deal Cards 34-17 defeat

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Sunday's game plan called for the Dallas defense to force St. Louis to throw, then to pressure Jim Hart into submission. It didn't include falling behind — but that's becoming a habit for the Cowboys, too.

They trailed 10-0 after one period before Ron Springs' two touchdown runs, Danny White's passing and a defense that intercepted Hart four times carried Dallas to a 34-17 victory over the Cardinals in St. Louis' National Football League home opener.

White's three TD passes and one scoring run last Monday night had rescued the Cowboys from seemingly certain defeat in Washington. But this game ultimately was different, he said.

"In the beginning here," he said, "it was almost scary, it was so similar to the Washington game — except the Redskins dominated us. Today, it was because of our lack of intensity. We knew we could come back."

"Our No. 1 objective," Dallas coach Tom Landry said, "was to control O.J. Anderson and force them to throw. In forcing them to throw, we thought we'd wind up with some interceptions ... We knew we had to put pressure on Hart."

Landry said the Cowboys, coming off their emotional 31-30 victory over the Redskins, "were dead tired all week. The team played very poorly in the first quarter."

But he laid part of the blame on referee Tom

Dooley for "speeding up the game" by spotting the ball too quickly. "We speeded up the plays in the second quarter and got in rhythm with the referee," Landry said.

White's passing set up Springs' 1-yard TD run, then he passed 10 yards to Drew Pearson for a score that turned the 10-0 deficit into a 17-10 halftime lead.

"I think our team is a team that really hasn't jelled," said coach Jim Hanifan, whose Cardinals are winless in two games.

White completed 19 of 27 passes for 234 yards.

Springs also bolted 19 yards for a third-period touchdown and cornerback Dennis Thurman, who killed one St. Louis threat with an end-zone interception, fell on a fumble following safety Bill Bates' interception for another Dallas score in the fourth quarter. The Dallas defense also sacked Hart five times.

It was the ninth victory in the Cowboys' last 10 meetings with St. Louis and the 18th time in their 24-year history they have rallied from 10 or more points down for a victory.

Pearson's TD catch came 27 seconds before halftime. Then Hart, who had teamed with Roy Green on a 39-yard touchdown pass play in the first period, tried to rally the Cards in the remaining seconds.

But his bomb to Pat Tilley was intercepted by cornerback Everson Walls and returned 21 yards to the St. Louis 28. On Dallas' first down, Rafael Septien kicked a 45-yard field goal for the seven-point halftime spread.
