The Texas Sesquicentennial Trail Ride pulled through Midland Monday beating the official wagon train by two months. The group says they rely on private donations to get them through their 3,200-mile trip through Texas.

American says South African police beat her

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — An American woman who described herself as "a black person in the wrong place," says a black police officer beat her with a truncheon for about 10 minutes during a raid on what police termed an illegal gathering outside a church center.

Beth Burris, 31, of Indianapolis told The Associated Press Monday that she had received 17 cuts during the beating, two of them serious.

"If I had been white they wouldn't have touched me," said Ms. Burris. "I was a black person in the wrong place. They (the police) don't ask questions."

"What I've discovered is that this happens in South Africa every day," she said. "The police in this country can get away with whatever they want to get away with. They are above the law."

She said she had been in touch with the U.S. Embassy in Pretoria and would sue police for damages.

The beating took place outside a church center where she works, as parents gathered to discuss student boycotts of schools, Ms. Burris said.

Two other workers and the Rev. Ndanganeni Phaswana, director of the Thodisa-Ditshaba Church Center in the Seshego black township, near Pietersburg in northern Transvaal Province, confirmed Ms. Burris' account.

Seshego is in Lebowa, one of South Africa's 10 black "homelands."

A major at the Seshego police station said he was not aware of Ms. Burris specific case. "There was an unlawful gathering at the church on Saturday," said the black officer, who refused to give his name. "She is fortunate if she is not arrested. Some are in jail."

Ms. Burris said in a telephone interview that she was outside the center when police arrived.

Doctor rushes to Beirut to negotiate with Jihad

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A physician seeking the release of French hostages held by Shiite Moslem extremists rushed to Beirut to prevent "further carnage" after kidnappers published photographs they say prove that they killed one captive.

Razah Raad, a French heart specialist who was born in Lebanon, drove from Damascus to Beirut late Monday upon hearing of a statement and photographs issued by Islamic Jihad purportedly showing the body of French hostage Michel Seurat.

He waited in a luxury hotel today to be contacted by the kidnappers in order to begin negotiations for the release of the French hostages.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, claimed last week to have killed Seurat, an employee of the French Center for Studies and Research of the Contemporary Middle East. Seurat was kidnapped last May 22 in Moslem west Beirut.

It also claims to hold two French diplomats, a journalist, and has claimed that it kidnapped six Americans missing in Lebanon. It said in a statement Monday that "the lives of the three remaining (French) hostages depend on how quickly the French government meets our demands, which are very clear and detailed."

The pro-Iranian fundamentalist group described Seurat as an "experienced spy." But it denied that it had abducted a four-man crew of France's Channel 2 television Saturday. The photos and statement were delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut Monday.

Raad, the only man the kidnappers say they will negotiate with, said upon arrival in Beirut he hoped to meet with the captors to prevent "further carnage."

After viewing the pictures of 37-year-old Seurat, Raad told The Associated Press: "I'm here to verify Seurat's death, and if it's true, prevent other deaths.

"I want to bring people to their senses. Nothing justifies these acts.

Small wagon train rolls through town

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

It's an escape, but not an escape from work, said the organizers of a wagon train riding through Midland Monday.

The seven women and nine men who rode into Midland in two covered wagons and on assorted horses and mules, call their jaunt the Sesquicentennial Trail Ride. The small group beat the large Sesquicentennial Wagon Train to Midland by two months.

However, the 6-month ride that began Jan. 1 in Houston is anything but a jaunt. Participants awake between 4:30 and 5 a.m. to feed and saddle their 20 head of horses and mules. Then they ride for eight to nine hours with one break for lunch. Averaging about 22 miles per day, the group has traveled 1,200 miles and will have covered about 3,200 miles when their trip ends July 4 at the San Jacinto Battleground State Historical Park outside La Porte.

"The majority of us...won't ever see a chance to do this again," said the ride's organizer, James Martin. This is Martin's second big wagon train ride. His first was to Valley Forge, Pa., for the nation's Bicentennial. When he's not organizing trail rides, Martin owns and drives a truck based out of Houston.

"It's something you don't do everyday. You get out of a rut," said one passenger, Holger Walbrol.

Other wagon trial riders are Martin's friends, while some passengers have joined up along the way.

Martin's wife, Cathy, rebuilt an old "spring" wagon she found for the ride and learned how to drive it on the trail.

"There's more to it then it looks. You never know when the animals will spook," Mrs. Martin said.

One close call, involving a collision with a truck, resulted after a colt pulling Mrs. Martin's wagon was spooked.

The horses and mules are getting accustomed to cars and traffic when they parade through towns, although honking cars will still scare them, she said.

"We're glad people honk and let us know they're there. But we'd rather people just wave not to spook the animals," she said.

Mrs. Martin, who drives a truck with her husband, says she likes the slower pace of a wagon ride.

"You get to see a lot of things that you never knew were there...creeks, farmhouses."

The trail ride has also made Mrs. Martin appreciate life's other luxuries like electricity, running water and hot water.

Greenwood teacher refuses to take test

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

■ Teachers find excuses to change test time

A Greenwood public school teacher, who out of protest refused to take the Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers on Monday, said he likened his action to a conscientious objector in a wartime situation.

Secondary speech and drama teacher Mark Eells said he walked out of the testing center after signing his name. "I wasn't going to take it. It's not a competency test, it's an English literacy test," he said.

The TECAT — a test of basic reading and writing skills — was mandated by the 1984 Texas Legislature as part of a massive education reform bill to improve the quality of public education in Texas.

"I'm not afraid of it," said Eells, a graduate of Southwest Texas State University. "I could not in good conscience take the test.

"Day to day, week to week, problems will arise with my students and I tell them to stand up for what you believe in," he added.

Eells, who comes from a long line of Texas educators, joined the Greenwood Independent School District faculty about two years ago.

He said his decision not to take the TECAT was not a rash one, but one made after a lot of thought. "I considered it over the last several weeks. I'm very worried about my job. It's not often that a person commits professional suicide."

GISD Superintendent Sam Martin declined to comment regarding the incident. He also refused to speculate on what consequences might result. "I'd like to talk to him (Eells) first," he said.

Meanwhile, other area educators emerged with smiles after completing the state mandated literacy test, but said they resented having to prove they can read and write to keep their jobs.

In Midland, most teachers were in good spirits after completing the three-hour exam. Officials anticipate more than 10,000 failures among the 200,000 tested statewide on Monday.

Test administrator Rebecca Tillapaugh said many of the educators who took the test at Alamo Junior High School arrived early and were in a pleasant, talkative mood.

"I was just amazed," she said. "The Midland teachers, they're a good group. No one has been anything but professional."

Teacher test went well, Kirby says

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Except for a few "mischievous" incidents, the mandatory literacy test almost all public school teachers took Monday went fine and dandy, said state Education Commissioner William Kirby.

The state gave the Texas Examination of Current Administration and Teachers to about 200,000 teachers Monday as part of the Legislature's education reforms. Teachers must pass the test before they can teach next school year.

Teacher groups have opposed the exam, saying it is an insult. They also contend state teaching certificates are lifetime licenses the state cannot revoke.

Kirby took the test in Austin early Monday morning and said he performed well. He said most teachers faced "anxiety and stress" but predicted 95 percent will pass the exam, called the TECAT.

In San Antonio, reporters mobbed a school where teachers took the test and school officials threatened to call police. One school district reported that teachers left to use the restroom en masse, causing a delay. In another district teachers brought in large shopping bags, forcing a search of the sacks and delays.

Despite the isolated problems, Kirby said, "I don't think our teachers could have acted any more admirably than they did.

"Now that we're going to have the test behind us, I'd like the people of Texas to get behind our teachers," he said.

Teachers must score a 75 or better to keep their teaching certificates. Teachers who fail will get another shot at the test June 28.

Some critics have said the test is too easy, but Kirby said some questions seemed a little tricky. "The test is not a competency test. It will not tell us who the good teachers are and who the bad teachers are," he said. "It's a reading and writing test."

OPEC 'back in the saddle again'

ABILENE (AP) — The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is "back in the saddle again," an oil company spokesman and former television newsman says.

Robert Goralski, director of communications for Gulf Oil Co., and a former NBC-TV correspondent, made the comment during a speech Monday at the West Central Texas Oil and Gas Association's 53rd annual meeting.

Goralski said the current oil price situation has the world returning to the times of the late 1970s, with "OPEC back in the saddle again."

Americans face a "lowered standard of living" because of plunging oil prices and the nation's dependency on foreign oil.

Last year, Goralski said, America's balance of payments, the money paid for foreign goods opposed to what is paid by foreign countries for American goods, reached a record deficit of $126 billion.

The purchase of foreign oil accounted for $56 billion, or 44 percent of the deficit, he said.

In another speech Monday, Goralski told an Abilene civic club that lower oil prices and dependency on foreign oil eventually could hurt consumers as much as oilmen.

Low pump prices mean higher consumption and waste and greater levels of imports in the future, he said. By 1995, he predicted, the nation will be importing about 60 percent of its oil.

Oil is already the single greatest balance-of-payments problem, Goralski said, accounting for more of the trade deficit than cars and far more than shoes or textiles.

America is in the same shape with its oil supply that Japan and Germany were on the eve of World War II, and that's not good, he said.

"Japan and Germany went to war for lack of oil," Goralski said.

Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor was merely to protect its left flank while its military machine went after the real targets: the oil fields of the East Indies, Goralski said.

Nazi Germany attacked its ally, Soviet Russia, with a goal of seizing the Caucasion oil fields in the southern U.S.S.R., he said.

American oil fueled Allied victory in both World Wars and was again the major source of supply to the American and United Nations forces fighting in Korea, he said.

But in the war in Vietnam, Iran supplied the great bulk of oil used in the war effort, he said, noting that Iran is a source no longer available.

Signs are that the Soviet Union's oil production has started a decline that inevitably will leave America's major adversary an energy-importing nation, Goralski said.

Work of identifying remains of Challenger's crew continues

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The grim work of identifying the remains of some of Challenger's crew continued today while calmer seas allowed a large salvage ship to resume the search for additional body parts and debris from the space shuttle.

Searchers hope to recover from the cabin compartment three magnetic tapes that recorded performance of some of Challenger's systems and could provide evidence on the cause of the explosion 73 seconds after liftoff Jan. 28.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has maintained tight secrecy about the search since it announced Sunday that astronaut remains had been found in the broken crew cabin at the bottom of the Atlantic.

The agency has not acknowledged that remains have been recovered, but sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said some bodies or parts of bodies were brought secretly to Port Canaveral Saturday night aboard the Navy salvage ship USS Preserver, which came in without running lights.

The sources said the remains were transferred to a hospital at Patrick Air Force Base, 25 miles south of here, and that forensic experts began examining them Monday.

NASA said it would respect family wishes and remain silent until the recovery and identification processes are completed. It was not clear what NASA would do with the remains once they were identified.

Winds that whipped up 8 foot waves prevented Preserver's divers from returning to the ocean bottom Monday and the ship returned to port in late afternoon without recovering additional material.

But the wind died down today and the Preserver left for the search area at midmorning.

Private boats were barred from an area two miles around the search area, and private planes were kept five miles away. Sections of the cabin were found 18 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral at a depth of 100 feet.

The accident killed New Hampshire schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe; commander Francis R. Scobee; pilot Michael Smith; and crewmembers Judith Resnik; Ronald McNair; Ellison Onizuka; and Gregory Jarvis.

The sources did not know if the remains of all seven had been located.

Astronaut William Thornton, who twice flew aboard Challenger, said Monday he wouldn't fly on the shuttle under the cold-weather launch conditions that have figured in the investigation of the explosion.

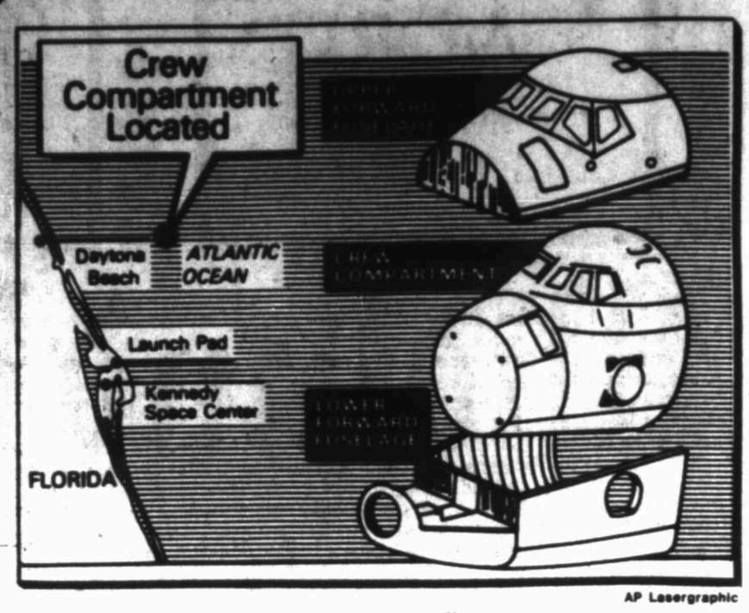

But Thornton said in a lecture at Southeastern Community College in Whiteville, N.C., that he was not angry at NASA officials who authorized the launch. He mentioned the explosion only briefly during his lecture, describing it as "an unfortunate lapse" in the record of manned flights.

"You have to remember that we are sitting on one of the largest explosive devices ever made," Thornton said. "There is simply no other way to get there (to space)."

The pathology examinations were not only for examination, but also could help determine whether the astronauts were burned to death, poisoned by fumes, died from sudden loss of cabin pressure, were killed by flying debris or by impact with the water, or drowned.

The sources reported several of the crewmembers' private effects had been recovered, including tape recorders on which they had planned to record their impressions of the flight.

The crew cabin is a 2,525-cubic-foot, three-level structure made of 2,219 aluminum alloy plates welded together to create a pressure-tight vessel. It has no special reinforcements to help withstand an explosion, but is stronger than much of the fuselage because it is a single welded unit.

New shuttle likely to cost more than $3 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top space agency officials told a House committee today it probably would cost more than $3 billion to build a shuttle to replace the lost Challenger, including $350 million to implement design changes required by the investigation into the accident.

In testimony before the House Science and Technology Committee, acting NASA administrator William Graham stopped short of a formal request for funds to construct a new shuttle.

But he noted that Reagan administration officials from several agencies are trying to map the agency's space needs. Officials have disclosed previously that the group is leaning in the direction of recommending construction of a new shuttle as well as unmanned throwaway rockets to boost satellites into space.

Graham said officials are assuming the accident means the shuttle fleet will be grounded for a year and it would cost $2.8 billion over five years to build a new orbiter. NASA Comptroller Thomas Newman said an additional $350 million is needed for implementing design changes that officials decide are needed in the wake of the accident that killed seven crew members on Jan. 28.

But whatever the cost, Graham pledged that the United States intends to maintain the capability of launching commercial satellites into space.

"Yes, sir, that is exactly correct," Graham told Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., who pressed him on the subject. "We have been communicating that to our customers."

Nelson had said he was concerned about a memo that Graham wrote last Friday relating to commercial launches, saying he was afraid it was a "signal to the world...that America was pulling back and abandoning" its interest in launching satellites for pay.

Graham confirmed that the memo meant the United States had effectively ended negotiations with the British over launching a satellite.

But he noted that no contract had been signed for that satellite, and said NASA has informed other customers "that we are working as diligently as possible to maintain their priorities" despite the inevitable backlogs caused by the accident.

In the memo, Graham wrote that it will probably be a year before shuttle flights resume. He said a "consensus is emerging" within the administration to use a "mixed fleet" of unmanned, throwaway rockets and the shuttle in the future.

Graham wrote in the March 7 memo that, in the meantime, "proposals which NASA has made in the past to provide launch services, but which have expired and are therefore no longer valid, are not to be renewed or extended."

He also said that responses by companies to expired proposals will not be accepted.

AMERICAN

"A police van went by and five minutes later there were eight vans there. People began to run. I didn't know what to do. I thought, 'I haven't done anything, why should I run?' There's a kindergarten attached to the church. I went in there and sat on the grass in a courtyard. The police were chasing people.

"Three minutes later, a black policeman came and pulled out his sjambok (truncheon) and started to beat me. There was blood all over my clothes. I was screaming, 'I'm an American! I am working for the church!' He said, 'You are lying!' and kept beating me for about 10 minutes."

She said police gave no warning before attacking the crowd. Officers fired at least six tear gas rounds into the pastor's residence and church hall, the site of the meeting, she said.

Ms. Burris said she came to South Africa last July on behalf of Africa Enterprise, an evangelical group with offices in Pasadena, Calif., that is multiracial and ecumenical. She spent her first few months in white Pietersburg but moved into nearby Seshego township in February because "my ministry was in the black community. I wanted to live in the black community."

She said she hoped to continue her work, but "I don't think the scars will ever go away."

JIHAD

These killings will gain nothing," he said.

One of the pictures showed the hostage's chest and face, as he lay bare-chested with his eyes half closed. The second showed a body in a coffin, wrapped in a blanket, and the third a closed coffin with a crucifix on the lid.

There was no evidence of wounds or blood in the one photo that showed the man clearly, and no way to confirm he had been killed.

Friends said the man in the photo was Seurat.

The French Foreign Ministry issued a statement in Paris saying it was "seeking to verify the authenticity of this abominable claim."

French Premier Laurent Fabius said Sunday that France would not submit to "terrorist blackmail."

Islamic Jihad has demanded that France stop supplying arms to Iraq, which has been at war with Iran since September 1980. It said last week that Seurat had been killed in retaliation for the deportation of two pro-Iranian Iraqis to Baghdad.

The photos and statement were made public during a French diplomatic effort in Lebanon and Syria to free French captives.

Beirut newspapers said Raad was working on a three-point deal to release the hostages in exchange for commuting jail terms of a pro-Iranian assassination squad held in a Paris prison. But he said he carried no specific proposals.

Serge Boidevaix, deputy secretary general of the French Foreign Ministry, was in Beirut on a mission aimed at freeing the hostages.

France's roving Middle East ambassador, Henri Servant, met in Damascus Monday with Syrian President Hafez Assad, the main power broker in Lebanon. Assad has good relations with the Iranian government.

Raad met Servant in Damascus and is coordinating his mission with Boidevaix, whom he plans to meet in Beirut.

In his Damascus talks, Raad praised what he said was "good Syrian cooperation."

The six Americans missing in Lebanon were not mentioned in Monday's statement.

TEACHER

Jackie Worsham, a second grade teacher at Travis Elementary School said "It (the test) was about like I expected, but I thought it was a ridiculous waste of taxpayers money and our time."

Students in Midland and Greenwood had the day off so their teachers could take the TECAT. The 1984 public school reforms passed by the Legislature mandated the test, no-pass, no-play and exit-level testing of high school juniors, among other requirements.

MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi said he believed the TECAT was a fair test of one's ability to read and write, and that Midland educators performed well on the exam.

"I like to think that all of our teachers would have these skills," he said.

Jennye Ready, a fourth grade teacher at Burnet Elementary School, said she was confident prior to taking the test, but said she resented being tested for literacy after obtaining a master's degree and other certification.

"I think all of our legislators and parents ought to take a test to see if they're qualified," she said.

TEST

In separate cases, two individual teachers stayed home and didn't take the test after judges issued restraining orders. Kirby said the state will prevail in the long run and courts will uphold the TECAT.

The Texas State Teachers Association filed a lawsuit challenging the TECAT's constitutionality, but an Austin District Judge ruled last week that teachers must take the exam.

TSTA President Charles Beard said the group "is determined to continue our own legal action to protect the rights of all Texas educators and to prevent the Texas Education Agency from revoking teaching certificates on the basis of one standardized test."

Kirby said the state may grant some temporary exemptions to school districts short of teachers, but maintained emergency certificates will be rare.

WAGONS

"We bathe everywhere from a motel room to a creek. Even a jailhouse in Sterling City," she said.

If worst comes to worst, the group resorts to sponge baths, tapping water from the barrels they transport along with them.

"We like to be clean like everybody else, but we don't always have the opportunity," she said.

Unlike the corporate-sponsored Sesquicentennial Wagon Train, which will arrive in Midland in early May, the trial ride depends on private donations.

"The only difference is they got all these big sponsors. We're raising money for Boys' Harbor," Martin said. Boys' Harbor is a home for mentally retarded boys in Houston.

However, no money has been raised yet and the group is running low on funds. The trail riders were hoping a fund-raising barbecue Monday night at the Ya'll Come Back Saloon would be successful before they departed this morning for Odessa.

Sending U.S. troops to Nicaragua may be 'inevitable'

AUSTIN (AP) — Retired Army Gen. William Westmoreland says if the Contras are unsuccessful in overthrowing the Sandinista government, then American troops may have to be used to prevent control of Nicaragua by the Soviet Union.

"Nicaragua is important. If we can get them to fight their battles, which President Reagan apparently wants to do, we probably can get by without committing American forces. If not, I think it is inevitable," Westmoreland said Monday.

His remarks were made in a question-and-answer session following a speech on the Vietnam War to about 400 invited guests at the LBJ Library.

"If we allow this continued erosion, with the Soviet Union getting more and more hegemony in Central America and those islands, we could find ourselves bottled up," Westmoreland said. "We would have to pay one heck of a price and it would take some time to deploy the necessary forces to neutralize that so we can have our sea lanes and air lanes open to project our military power.

"Policy-makers who are looking to the future and thinking strategic terms are not going to allow any further erosion down there, or I hope not," he said.

Westmoreland, 71, retired from the Army in 1972. He was commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam and Army chief of staff.

That's ominous, he said, because it raises the specter of the "two big giants...at each other's throats to get it."

Goralski criticized Congress for its track record on energy but cautioned that even lawmakers from energy-consuming states have a tough time voting for energy producers, even when they understand their point of view. Others simply don't understand, he said.

At the WeCTOG conference, Goralski also noted the public's lack of interest in trying to understand the oil problem.

Neither the federal government nor the public realize that the energy industry already is taxed more than any other domestic industry, he said.

"Americans are the most uninformed people among the world's democracies," he said. Many "are not concerned about things until they become a crisis."

Arrests ordered for two Marcos supporters

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile today ordered the first arrests of prominent supporters of deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos, two assemblymen accused of election-related killings.

A Defense Ministry announcement said assemblymen Orlando Dulay and Arturo Pacificador, an assistant majority floor leader in the assembly, were wanted for alleged involvement in killings of supporters of new President Corazon Aquino in the Feb. 7 presidential election.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Aquino scheduled a Cabinet meeting for Wednesday to discuss, among other things, possible declaration of a revolutionary government.

The Philippine News Agency reported that she would "sound out" Cabinet ministers on the proposal. Presidential spokesman Rene Saquisag said, 'In the end, it may even be determined there is not a need for it."

Some officials have urged declaration of a revolutionary government so Mrs. Aquino can abolish the National Assembly. She already has asked all Marcos-appointed officials, including judges, to resign and has indicated plans to write a new consititution.

The Defense Ministry said Enrile issued the order for the arrests of Pacificador and Dulay in a telephone call to Brig. Gen. Renato de Villa, commander of the Philippine Constabulary.

Both assemblymen have been in hiding since Marcos fled the country Feb. 26 after being toppled in a church- and military-backed rebellion that installed Mrs. Aquino as president.

Pacificador has been accused of involvement in the Feb. 11 killing of former Antique provincial governor Evelio Javier, a local campaign leader for Mrs. Aquino, but so far faces no formal charges in that case. He faces multiple murder charges in the ambush-killing of seven of Javier's followers in the 1984 National Assembly elections. Javier ran against Pacificador in those elections.

Pacificador was last seen at the presidential palace hours before Marcos and his family fled, but was not among the 89-member entourage that accompanied Marcos to Hawaii.

The ministry said Dulay is wanted in connection with a series of killings of Mrs. Aquino's supporters in Quirino province north of Manila.

Meanwhile, a delegation of U.S. officials arrived in Manila today for a weeklong visit to assess the new Philippine government's need for U.S. assistance, the U.S. Embassy said.

The team, led by M. Peter McPherson, administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development, and including officials from the Treasury, State and Defense departments, is to hold talks with President Corazon Aquino and other government officials during the week, the embassy said.

In other developments, a government source said a team of officials would be going to Hawaii to inspect documents Marcos took there, which U.S. Customs officials are holding that might provide evidence of vast financial holdings in New York, New Jersey and elsewhere.

The official, a member of Mrs. Aquino's new Good Government Commission, also told The Associated Press on Monday that the government had frozen bank accounts of more than a dozen Marcos associates in an effort to keep any more money from leaving the country.

The bank accounts total about $50 million, said the official, who spoke on condition he not be identified. He declined to identify the owners.

Jovito Salonga, chairman of the Good Government Commission, and other officials will make the trip to Hawaii, said the official. He did not indicate when the team would leave.

Government bans two black activists

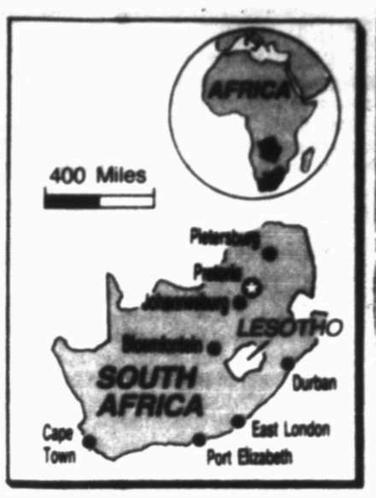

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government today imposed five-year "banning" orders on the two most influential black activists in the troubled eastern Cape Province.

Also today, the government rescinded its order expelling three CBS News staffers, Deputy Foreign Minister Louis Nel said. The three CBS employees had been ordered to leave the country after CBS broadcast footage of a funeral despite a ban on cameras.

In the black township of Kabokweni, in eastern Transvaal Province, police said one man was killed and 13 people were wounded after police fired shotguns to break up a crowd of more than 3,000 blacks who gathered to support eight youths facing criminal charges because of a riot last month.

"By 9 a.m., the mob had trampled fences and caused chaos," with more busloads of blacks arriving, and police opened fire, a spokesman at police headquarters in Pretoria said. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The banning orders were served on Henry Fazzie, regional vice president of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition, and Mkhuseli Jack, president of the Port Elizabeth Youth Congress.

The orders, signed by Minister of Law and Order Louis le Grange, said the men "pose a threat to the maintenance of law and order."

The orders, which were confirmed by regional police spokesman Col. Gerrie van Rooyen, restrict Fazzie and Jack to the Port Elizabeth district, confine them to their homes on weekends and holidays and require them to stay at home from 7 p.m. to 6 a.m. during the week.

They also are barred from attending any political gatherings and from disseminating political information.

The banning orders came four days after the government lifted the seven-month-long state of emergency imposed in much of South Africa because of violent protests against apartheid, the country's legal system of racial segregation. Officials said the violence has lessened recently, although government critics say it has increased.

During the state of emergency, the government imposed about 70 limited banning orders that expired when the decree was lifted.

South Africa, under pressure from Western governments, lifted scores of banning orders in July 1983. About a dozen people now are banned, including Winnie Mandela, wife of jailed black leader Nelson Mandela.

Fazzie and Jack were influential in negotiating a suspension of the black consumer boycott of white-owned stores in Port Elizabeth in December. The boycotters set a March 31 deadline for several demands, including the release of jailed activists and removal of troops from black townships in the region.

The United Democratic Front said the bannings meant the boycott now was more likely to resume. Fazzie and Jack have many followers in the township, where fierce rioting occurred in early 1985.

Jack returned Sunday from a visit to Europe, where he addressed several political groups.

Andrew Savage, a member of Parliament for the Progressive Federal Party, said of the banning orders, "Both of these people have the status of national figures, and represent genuine leadership among the majority section of our community.

"An action like this banning can only be regarded as provocative in the extreme."

The Port Elizabeth Evening Post said commerce and industry leaders were "aghast" at the bannings, at a time of fragile negotiations between blacks and whites in the region to keep the boycott from resuming.

The government decision on the CBS expulsions came after a fourth meeting between a CBS delegation and government officials. Nel, in charge of information for the government, said Home Affairs Minister Stoffel Botha and the CBS crew "have come to an agreement. We have had very good and amicable discussions."

South Korean marchers demand constitutional changes

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Thousands of marchers chanting "down with dictatorship" surged into the streets of Seoul today after a rally backing a petition drive for constitutional changes that would give South Korea a popularly elected president.

It appeared to be the largest political demonstration since President Chun Doo-hwan came to power in 1980, and government opponents gave estimates of the number of marchers ranging from 3,000 to 7,000. Authorities did not estimate the number involved.

The march began after members of the opposition New Korea Democratic Party jammed into a downtown meeting hall to inaugurate the local signature drive to collect support for constitutional revisions that would allow for the popular election of the country's president.

Kim Young-sam, one of South Korea's best-known dissident leaders and a special adviser to the opposition party, said in a speech that the opposition wanted democracy restored "through national consensus."

"Otherwise," he said, "Chun will be forced into exile or meet a tragic end."

Uniformed riot police and plainclothes units patrolled the marchers, but there were no reports of violence or clashes. Seoul newspapers said 2,500 riot and plainclothes police had been mobilized, but many of them were in reserve positions and not on the streets.

The opposition party claims that the present electoral college system favors the governing party. It wants the National Assembly to consider the changes next year, before the next presidential elections.

However, Chun and his government which have been firmly opposed to such changes, recently said the issue might be considered after 1988, the year Chun's term ends and the summer Olympic Games are held here.

Meanwhile, student sources said an estimated 1,000 students clashed with about 1,000 police on the campus of Seoul National University. The fight began over campus election issues, but turned quickly into an anti-government protest with expressions of support for the signature campaign, they said.

The sources said students hurled rocks at police, and that the police responded with tear gas barrages that sent clouds drifting over the sprawling campus grounds on the outskirts of the capital.

A similar clash was reported later in the afternoon at Yonsei University, another leading school in Seoul, but it was said to have involved smaller numbers.

The marchers, led by opposition party leader Lee Min-woo and Kim Young-sam, streamed to the downtown party headquarters.

The marchers first chorused "Lee Min-woo" and "Kim Young-sam," but soon turned to shouting anti-government slogans, including "Down with dictatorship."

In his speech, Kim Young-sam also called for the release of what he said were 1,000 political prisoners, and demanded that civil rights be restored to opposition leader Kim Dae-jung and others.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Swedes honor Palme

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Sweden stopped for one minute at noon Monday to honor Olof Palme. Trains halted, people stood mute in the streets and others wept at the spot where an assassin shot the prime minister down 10 days ago.

Police said they were pursuing leads involving 1,500 people and 150 vehicles. It is the largest criminal investigation in Sweden's history.

Commissioner Hans Holmer used his daily news conference to appeal for help from citizens who were at the premiere of the film "The Brothers Mozart," which Palme and his wife Lisbet attended just before he was killed Feb. 28.

"We are interested in information from the audience in the cinema during the film and also in observations outside the theater after the showing," Holmer said.

Palme, 59, was killed by a .357-caliber Magnum revolver bullet in the back as he and his wife, 55, walked home from the theater late at night. He had dismissed his bodyguards earlier in the day.

Iraq, Iran trade claims

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq claimed its ground, air and naval forces inflicted heavy losses on Iranian troops occupying Iraq's Faw peninsula Monday and Iran said its forces killed at least 200 Iraqi soldiers in the southern fighting.

Iraqi warplanes blasted two "large maritime targets" off Iran's Persian Gulf coast in the last 24 hours and its ground troops battled Monday with Iranians for control of strategic heights in the northern sector of the 733-mile border, according to Iraqi war communiques.

Claims by Iran and Iraq, at war since September 1980, are hard to confirm immediately since they rarely allow foreign journalists into the war zones.

The Iraqi communiques, broadcast by Baghdad radio and monitored in Nicosia, said Iraqi jets flew a total of 221 bombing sorties and helicopter gunships made 183 attacks on Iranian positions and supply routes in Faw.

Mudslide kills at least 12

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Black water flowed down from the hills in Huanaco province Monday, following the path of a 100-yard wide river of mud and rock that had rolled over four villages, leaving 12 people dead and another 20 missing, a local reporter and officials said.

Loosened by months of heavy rain, the landslides began moving before dawn Sunday, sweeping through the Santa Maria del Valle area, on the edge of the jungle in central Peru.

The official news agency, Andina, quoted civil defense chief Guillermo Velarde in Huanuco, the provincial capital, as saying the mud had destroyed about 100 houses.

Javits funeral conducted

NEW YORK (LAT) — At Jacob Javits' funeral Monday, the great and the famous came forward in the 145-year-old Central Synagogue in midtown Manhattan to speak of his justice and of his dignity and of his valor. His daughter, Carla, recalled his final days.

"I feel like a curtain is coming down," she said her father told her. "I have no regrets."

"When I told him we would miss him very much," his daughter said, "he responded, 'You won't miss me. You will remember me.' "

In the Moorish-style synagogue they were assembled to say farewell in ranks on the main floor, senators and congressmen and artists and actors, all somber and remembering. In the balconies, there were the less famous people. And as the former senator had told his daughter, they were remembering. They also missed him.

Among those present were Richard Nixon, Edward Kennedy, Gary Hart, Alfonse D'Amato, Mario Cuomo, Edwin Meese, Henry Kissinger and Edwin Koch.

Ruling favors police

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court is being accused of condoning "lawlessness" by allowing police to lie to lawyers in some cases to prevent them from being present when suspects are questioned.

The justices' "concern for law and order does not follow to making sure the police are themselves lawful in their activities," said Steven Brown of the American Civil Liberties Union in Rhode Island.

"The court agreed the police actively misled an attorney as to what they were doing and yet it's now been sanctioned by the highest court in the land," he said.

In a 6-3 ruling Monday, the court said police at times may deceive a lawyer in order to question a suspect outside the attorney's presence. The suspect's rights are not violated as long he is told of his right to a lawyer, the court said.

City has insurance ills

TRUMBULL, Conn. (AP) — First selectman Paul Timpanelli figures he could reduce taxes slightly, hire 16 new teachers or 20 new police officers, or build a new youth center if Trumbull didn't have to pay a $433,000 increase in its liability insurance premiums this year.

Instead, Timpanelli is contemplating a hefty tax increase, more than half of it due to a 340 percent increase in the cost of liability coverage.

"That was the straw that broke the camel's back," said Timpanelli, who prides himself on having kept the tax rate stable during five years as chief executive of the town of 33,500. "I will not allow myself to propose a 13 percent increase in taxes without a fight."

Timpanelli announced Monday that his town would be one of the first in the country to fight skyrocketing insurance costs. Trumbull filed suit against its insurers, alleging unfair competition, unfair trade practices and deception.

The suit, filed in Superior Court in Bridgeport, named two subsidiaries of Cigna Corp. of Philadelphia as defendants. It seeks recovery of all insurance premiums "above what we consider reasonable," Timpanelli said.

Tax penalty possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — Beware the Individual Retirement Account that promises no penalty for early withdrawal.

A bank, savings and loan association or other institution may allow you to withdraw an IRA without an interest penalty but that does not affect the tax penalty imposed by the Internal Revenue Service. The law says that once you take out your money prematurely — generally that means before you reach age 59½ — the full withdrawal becomes subject to tax plus a 10 percent penalty.

There are some important exceptions. You may direct the trustee of your IRA — such as your bank — to transfer it to a new trustee at any time without the money going through your hands. And once every 12 months, you may withdraw from an IRA without tax penalty so long as you reinvest that money in another IRA within 60 days.

Jury duty limits sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department has asked Congress to pass a law limiting the ability of state and local courts to summon active-duty military personnel for jury duty.

The proposal, outlined by Navy Secretary John F. Lehman in a letter last month to House and Senate leaders, would give military commanders the same authority they now enjoy in exempting military personnel from serving on federal court juries.

In his letter, Lehman stressed that the Pentagon was not seeking a blanket exemption for all 2.1 million active-duty personnel, but rather the right to exempt "mission-essential military personnel."

Compromise possible on aid plan

By TIM AHERN

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R.-Kan, left, meets with Philip C. Habib, special envoy to Central Ameirca, on the Contra aid package.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan still insists he wants Congress to approve his full package of $100 million in aid to U.S.-backed guerrillas fighting Nicaragua, but congressional leaders say strong opposition to the proposal means a compromise plan could emerge next week.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Monday that "it's going to be very, very difficult" to win approval in the Republican-controlled Senate for Reagan's plan to provide $30 million in non-lethal aid and up to $70 million in military help for the Contra guerrillas.

The House is scheduled to vote on the package March 19, and Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., said Reagan faces "a massive defeat" in the Democratic-controlled chamber.

Sasser has proposed a compromise plan that involves approval of aid to the Contras, but withholds spending any of it for six months as an inducement to Nicaragua's leftist government to seriously negotiate for peace.

Dole said Sasser's plan may be the framework of a compromise.

"I'm always willing to compromise. The president has been fairly flexible and pragmatic," Dole said.

He added that the Senate may be asked to consider the Contra aid package next Monday and Tuesday, which would mean it would vote prior to the House.

Dole and Sasser commented after separate meetings with Philip Habib, the veteran diplomat named by Reagan last week as his new special envoy to Central America. Habib met on Capitol Hill on Monday with several groups of lawmakers.

Meanwhile, Reagan was meeting at the White House with other legislators, seeking support for the guerrillas who, he said, "deserve our respect and support."

Reagan had indicated Sunday he would be willing to listen to a compromise, but White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Monday: "Sure, we'll talk, but the president has not changed his position. ... The administration has not sent any signals or made any proposals about compromise."

Sasser said he had met over the weekend with top State Department officials and "they did not reject my proposals out of hand. ... At least somebody in the administration is thinking about fallback positions."

Congress last year approved $27 million in aid, but limited it to non-lethal items such as trucks and medicine. It also added complicated procedures for approving new aid this year.

Under those rules, the House must vote on Reagan's $100 million plan without possibility of amendment. However, in the Senate, the proposal may be amended, so that Sasser could substitute his plan for Reagan's package. If the Sasser plan were adopted, Reagan's original proposal would never come to a vote by the full Senate.

Sasser said his proposal is being considered because "a substantial number of my colleagues are looking for a moderate, reasoned, middle-of-the-road approach."

He said the "administration is making a mistake if they push an up-or-down vote on the all-or-nothing package" because "a loss would damage hopes of getting a later compromise."

Three House committees last week rejected Reagan's plan, while one panel approved it.

The package is now before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, but Dole said he didn't think there was enough support on the Republican-controlled panel to approve the package.

If the committee does not approve the aid, the package automatically would be sent to the floor on Thursday, under the rules.

RRC candidate Pouland denies deception in campaign funds

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texas Railroad Commission candidate John Sharp Monday accused Democratic opponent John Pouland of deceiving voters by lying about how much money he has raised for his campaign.

Pouland, a Dallas attorney, flatly denied any wrongdoing and said Sharp is trying to divert attention from his proposal to limit campaign contributions. Pouland said he will ask the Secretary of State's office to look into the matter immediately.

At a Capitol press conference Monday, Sharp, a state senator from Victoria, distributed copies of an anonymous letter he said he received Friday. The letter, allegedly authored by a former Pouland campaign worker, states that Pouland never received three contributions totalling $100,000.

Pouland said he had received the checks, but did not deposit them in his campaign account because he "never felt that it was right to take that kind of money."

He said the Texas Election Code requires state candidates to file all contributions they receive, even if they are not cashed. Sharp argues that Pouland never intended to deposit the checks, thereby deceiving the public.

Several Capitol reporters also received the letter, which accused Pouland of using "fake contributions to make himself look like a credible candidate."

Sharp has asked the Travis County District Attorney and the Texas Ethics Commission to investigate the matter.

"I don't know if this is against the law," he said. "If it isn't it ought to be."

Pouland said he returned three checks totalling $100,000 two to three weeks ago.

The author of the letter enclosed two bank statements — allegedly from Pouland's Dallas bank account — showing he had not deposited the checks, but Pouland said Monday the documents are not copies of his bank statement.

"Those were obtained either by fraud or by theft," he said of the anonymous documents. "Either someone in person went to a branch of my bank and fraudulently obtained that copy, or they did it by computer theft."

No one from the Pouland campaign sent the letter, Pouland said. "This was not a job from inside my campaign," he said, "this was a job from the outside."

Pouland said he has asked security at Commerce Savings in Dallas to investigate the matter before he considers further action.

Rep. Gary Thompson resigns

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Rep. Gary Thompson of Abilene resigned from the Legislature Monday, saying he accepted a job with the Teacher Retirement System of Texas.

Thompson, 49, teaches government at Abilene Christian University and switched from the Democratic to the Republican party after the last legislative session. He will become the System's College, University and Governmental Relations director.

"The Texas Legislature is a citizen legislature. As we serve our constituencies we must pursue other careers," said Thompson, a four-term legislator. "The position with the Teacher Retirement System of Texas was one I did not seek but one that, with consideration to family and personal growth, I cannot refuse."

His resignation becomes effective June 2.

State Sen. Carl Parker of Port Arthur received kudos from the Texas Classroom Teachers Association for his work in education reform.

The association backed a "fine tuning" bill Parker sponsored last legislative session. That bill failed.

• • •

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Bobby Locke said Gov. Mark White should drop out of the governor's race for "running to President Reagan and crying like a baby" for an oil import fee.

Locke, a construction company owner from San Antonio, said White missed the point by attributing the state's fiscal woes on falling oil and gas prices.

Insurance probe ordered

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Attorney General Jim Mattox Monday asked the State Board of Insurance to investigate whether insurance companies have violated state law by not issuing liability coverage for certain businesses and cities.

Mattox, referring to information he said he received within the past several months, asked Insurance Board Chairman Lyndon Olson to conduct the investigation as soon as possible. He also asked Olson to study lawsuits and judgments in Texas "to determine whether the so-called crisis is fact or fiction."

"Literally millions of dollars in premium income are leaving the state every week and flowing to the large insurance carriers...like Lloyd's of London," Mattox said in a prepared statement.

In a March 7 letter to Olson, Mattox specifically asked the board to determine whether insurers have refused to issue coverage, and if such action amounts to "illegal boycotting, coercion, intimidation or other illegal practices" under the Texas Insurance Code.

"It is a crying shame that at a time when our revenues in Texas are dwindling because of the oil price crisis, the insurance companies are trying to suck the life's blood out of our small businesses," Mattox said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Chagra gets 30 years

Chagra

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Elizabeth Chagra has received a 30-year prison sentence for the second time for plotting to kill a federal judge.

The 32-year-old Mrs. Chagra was convicted of the crime again on Feb. 27 after her original conviction was overturned by an appeals court.

U.S. District Judge William Sessions, who in 1982 ordered Mrs. Chagra to serve a 30-year term, re-issued the sentence Monday.

She will be eligible for parole in 1992, according to federal prosecutors.

"I thought it was a grisly, grisly bit of work on the part of the judge," her attorney Warren Burnett said after the sentencing.

"I was quite disappointed. She's been a splendid prisoner and has been rehabilitated. Both of these factors should have been taken into consideration," he said.

Burnett urged leniency so Mrs. Chagra could tend to her ailing parents.

NASA schedules flights

HOUSTON (AP) — NASA has prepared a schedule for space shuttle flights with the first of nine missions tentativley set for Feb. 5, 1987, according to The Houston Post.

The flights place an emphasis on military payloads.

They include a previously undisclosed military Spacelab flight, set for early 1988, and dedicated to Star Wars research, according to Robert H. Nute, the deputy chief of crew activity planning at the Johnson Space Center, the newspaper reported in a copyright story today.

"That's what we're working toward. We know, obviously, some of the flights are not going to happen," Nute said of the schedule for NASA's three remaining space-worthy shuttles.

"Certainly, it is not cast in concrete," he said. "However, it's the only thing we've got around."

No astronaut crew assignments were made with the new schedule, which was worked out through a combined effort of National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials in Houston and Washington, Nute said.

Home's trial speeds up

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Prosecutors, hoping to draw to a close a a nursing home murder trial now in its 22nd week, called two witnesses during the rebuttal phase of the proceeding.

"We just felt it would be too repetitious" to call more witnesses, said Galveston County District Attorney Mike Guarino after court was adjourned Monday.

"Let's get it argued. Let's get it going," he said.

Prosecutors indicated last week they might call as many as a dozen witnesses during rebuttal.

But early Monday, Guarino announced the state would rest after calling only two witnesses.

The defense was to begin presenting its rebuttal witnesses today.

The state has charged Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. and four of its current and former employees with murder in the Nov. 20, 1978, death of Elnora Breed.

The 87-year-old woman died 47 days after she entered an Autumn Hills nursing home in Texas City.

Evidence on JP lacking

EDINBURG (AP) — A prosecutor says it's not fair to say the plea bargain deal for a former Hidalgo County justice of the peace was too lenient, since there wasn't enough evidence to send him to prison.

Former Justice of the Peace Ponciano Cantu pleaded no contest Monday to misappropriating funds and was ordered to pay back nearly $40,000 and was assessed a 10-year probated sentence.

However, four other charges against him, including bribery, were dropped.

Cantu, who had been the subject of an attorney general's investigation, resigned in December at the request of the Texas Commission on Judicial Conduct.

Prosecutor David Hess, an assistant attorney general, told the Edinburg Daily Review "that it was a misnomer to say Cantu received a light sentence, given that there was not enough evidence to imprison the former JP."

The probe followed the discovery by auditors in 1984 of almost $34,000 missing from the judge's trust fund. Hess told a state district judge in Hidalgo County that the final amount missing was about $37,970.

Visiting Judge Charles Sherill accepted the state's plea bargain with Cantu.

Every card you play tells a story. Even failure to follow suit can point the way to the winning line. This deal is from a match between England and Holland.

We were not given the auction, but it might have gone as shown. Once South shows slam interest with his club and spade cue-bids, North can bid slam because of his fine trump support and distributional values.

Against six diamonds West led the second-highest of his long heart suit. Declarer won in dummy with the ace and led a trump to his king. When West showed out, the only problem became what to do with dummy's fifth spade, since one could be discarded on the king of hearts.

It would be careless (and, as the cards lay, wrong) to lead the king of spades. Since West had no diamonds, he had to be long in the other suits. It could cost nothing to protect against the possibility that East had a singleton ace of spades.

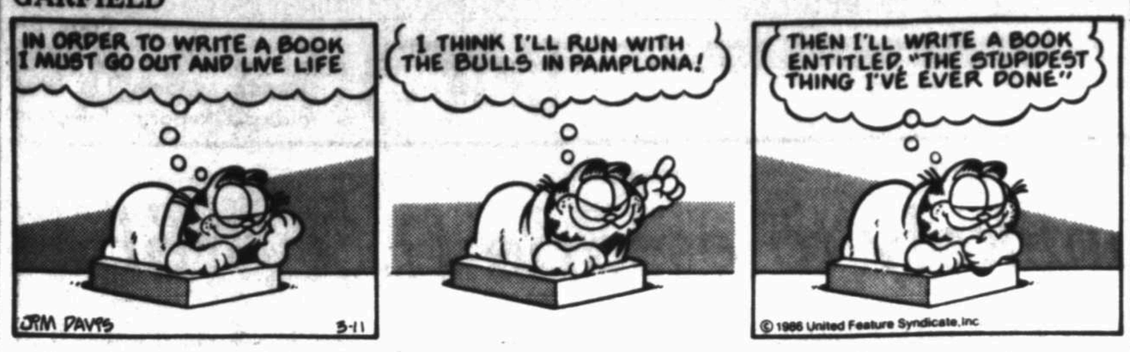

Declarer crossed to the queen of diamonds and led a spade from the table. When East popped up with the ace, the hand was over. Declarer won the club return, led a trump to dummy and cashed the queen of hearts. He returned to hand with the ace of trumps, in the process drawing East's last trump, and cashed the king of spades. He discarded a spade on the king of hearts and the board won the last three tricks with a trump and the queen-jack of spades.

Note that, had declarer led the king of spades from hand, he would have had to be clairvoyant to make his contract. On the second spade lead, he would have had to take a finesse for the ten!

Ray Milland, of 'Lost Weekend,' 'Dial M for Murder' fame, dies of cancer

Ray Milland

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — Ray Milland, who played opposite some of Hollywood's top female stars in the 1940s and won an Oscar for his portrayal of a tormented alcoholic in "The Lost Weekend," has died of cancer at age 78.

Milland, who learned only within the last few months that he had cancer, died in his sleep Monday at Torrance Medical Center, said agent Ronnie Leif. He was admitted Friday, said hospital spokeswoman Carmela Welte.

Born Jan. 3, 1908, as Reginald Truscott-Jones in Neath, Wales, the son of a steel mill superintendent, Milland appeared in nearly 150 films, including the classic "Dial M For Murder," and horror films in the 1970s.

One of his best known roles was the alcoholic writer in "The Lost Weekend," which won him an Oscar for best actor in 1945. The film, co-starring Jane Wyman, also won for best picture and best director for Billy Wilder.

In his 1974 autobiography, "Wide-Eyed in Babylon," Milland wrote that his portrayal created a domestic crisis. A friend saw him stagger down a New York street during the filming, but failed to see a camouflaged camera. The friend called Milland's wife, Muriel, to report that her husband had become a bum, prompting a frantic call from her for reassurance.

"He was a very fine gentleman," said Barbara Stanwyck, who appeared with Milland in "California" in 1947. "I enjoyed knowing him and working with him. He will be missed by all of us in the industry."

"He was a very good actor, a very talented man," said Ginger Rogers, who co-starred with Milland in several films, including "The Major and the Minor" in 1942 and "Lady in the Dark" in 1944. "He was somewhat of a distant gentleman in that he kept his own counsel."

Milland's co-stars also included Carole Lombard and Claudette Colbert. He teamed with Grace Kelly in Alfred Hitchcock's 1954 "Dial M for Murder." More recently, he played Ryan O'Neal's father in the 1970 "Love Story," and its sequel, "Oliver's Story," in 1978.

Milland got his start in movies while serving with the British army's Household Cavalry in the late 1920s when a marksman hired as a sharpshooter for "The Informer" was hit by a bus. The producers went to the British War Office for a replacement, and Milland was tapped.

At the producers' request, Milland fired into a chalk circle that had been drawn around a half dollar, hitting the target 11 times in 10 seconds.

"I couldn't have done it again," he once recalled. "Nobody could. I got the job."

Placido Domingo

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Opera tenor Placido Domingo plans to donate $800,000 to victims of September earthquakes that killed up to 7,000 people here, including four of his relatives, and says collections will top $1 million in coming months.

Domingo, who was born in Spain but grew up in Mexico and has held a series of benefit concerts for the earthquake victims, said upon arrival Sunday, "We're going to make an agreement on the best way to deliver the promised aid, and then the money will be turned over to the victims within a week or two."

He said he preferred not to give the money to the National Reconstruction Fund because "I made this commitment and I promised to help the earthquake victims personally."

SUN CITY, Ariz. (AP) — Michael Drummond, the youngest person to get a Jarvik-7 artificial heart, is back working as a grocery store clerk, and says that when co-workers wondered what he could handle, he told them, "I can do anything."

However, Drummond wrapped up his first week on the job Friday at Bell Camino Safeway with a little office work, selling some Arizona lottery tickets to customers and collecting their returnable bottles.

"They just want to start me out slow," he said.

The 26-year-old former assistant grocery store manager said he hasn't been sick since his November release from University Medical Center in Tucson, but wears a surgical mask occasionally to guard against infection.

Drummond was 25 when he received a Jarvik-7 heart in a temporary implant Aug. 29. Nine days later, he was given the heart of an accident victim.

Andrew Young

LONDON (AP) — Andrew Young, a former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, says his second four-year term as mayor of Atlanta is "the most job security I've ever had," but that he's thinking about what to do next.

Young, who represented the Carter administration to the United Nations, is forbidden by law to seek a third term as mayor, and said Monday, "I've always wanted to write — so maybe I'll just stay home."

But he didn't rule out another stint in politics.

"If I'd run for a statewide office, it would more likely be governor than senator — because I enjoy running something," said Young, who was here to launch a tourism and convention promotion for Atlanta.

LONDON (AP) — Royal Navy diver Larry Slater, who helped rescue rock star Simon Le Bon of Duran Duran and 28 other people on three boats during the Fastnet race in August, has received the George Medal for bravery.

Slater, 32, a petty officer, on Aug. 11 showed "great fearlessness, superb stamina and unflinching courage in the face of enormous danger" in saving the crew members from two racing yachts in the gale-lashed final in the Admiral's Cup series, the Ministry of Defense said in its citation Tuesday.

Then he found Le Bon's yacht, the Drum, capsized, with most of the crew clinging to the hull and six, including Le Bon, trapped underneath. Slater pulled all six to safety.

"I am deeply honored," Slater said. "It's an indescribable feeling."

Le Bon, who is sailing the same yacht in the Whitbread Round The World Race, said from his vessel near Punta del Este, Uruguay, "Larry is a very, very courageous man and I owe my life to him. I have the greatest respect for him and I am glad his bravery has now been recognized.

"Thanking him is almost an understatement."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): New sources of money appear. Hurray! The drifting apart from old and trusted friends is difficult, but you will make new ones. Discovering old family secrets brings delight. Share the news with your mate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not allow a well-intentioned friend to discourage you from pursuing your ambitions. An aggressive nature may prevent you from relating to a shy partner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish up little chores before beginning new projects. Your understanding is a great comfort to a friend or relative who is going through a difficult time. Take time to evaluate a romantic situation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid a door-to-door salesman, selling so-called bargains. You may be asked to join new social groups; the power and status give you a great deal of pleasure.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Applying yourself to the task at hand will bring positive results. Your captivating sense of humor makes you the center of attention at a party this evening. Enjoy the limelight.

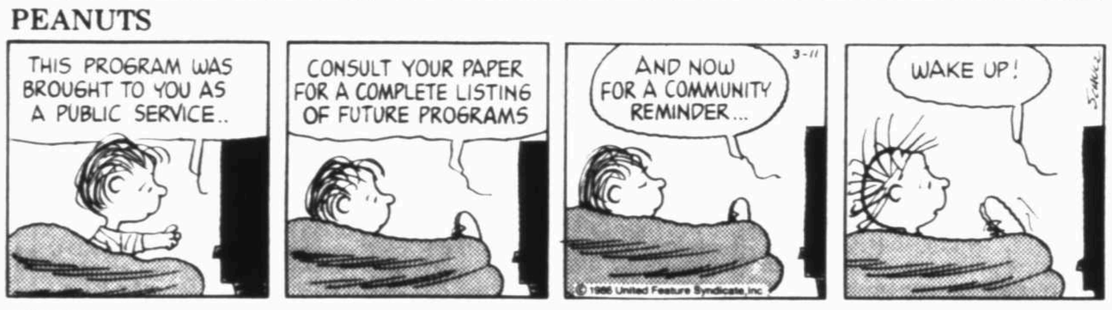

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An employment position suddenly has great potential. Do not hesitate to offer suggestions and opinions; they will be well received. Be flexible when looking for a solution to a teenager's problem.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your work load will increase along with your compensation. Listen to an elder's questions; it may lead to a solution regarding a family problem. Spend some time with your mate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A friend or relative may ask for a loan. Decline as you will have financial needs of your own. Today is a day for success, especially where romance is concerned. Enjoy the mood!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An opportunity to travel is on the horizon, but domestic affairs will require your attention. In order to feel better about yourself consider a new diet and exercise regime.

Every card you play tells a story. Even failure to follow suit can point the way to the winning line. This deal is from a match between England and Holland.

We were not given the auction, but it might have gone as shown. Once South shows slam interest with his club and spade cue-bids, North can bid slam because of his fine trump support and distributional values.

Against six diamonds West led the second-highest of his long heart suit. Declarer won in dummy with the ace and led a trump to his king. When West showed out, the only problem became what to do with dummy's fifth spade, since one could be discarded on the king of hearts.

It would be careless (and, as the cards lay, wrong) to lead the king of spades. Since West had no diamonds, he had to be long in the other suits. It could cost nothing to protect against the possibility that East had a singleton ace of spades.

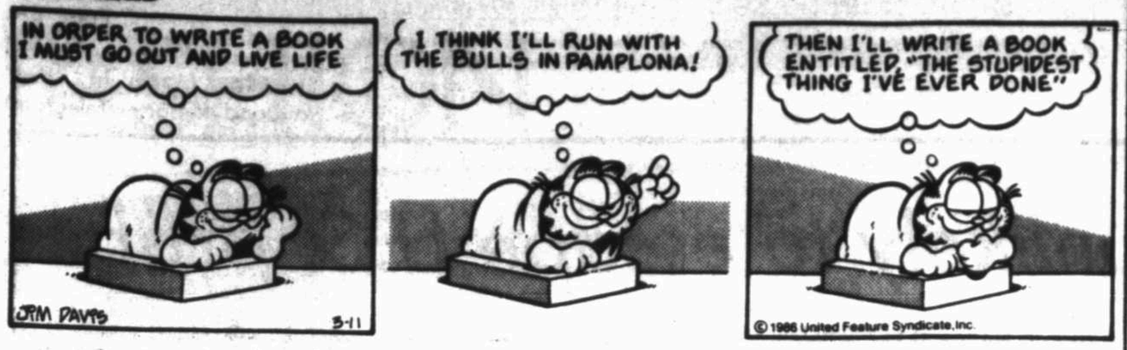

Declarer crossed to the queen of diamonds and led a spade from the table. When East popped up with the ace, the hand was over. Declarer won the club return, led a trump to dummy and cashed the queen of hearts. He returned to hand with the ace of trumps, in the process drawing East's last trump, and cashed the king of spades. He discarded a spade on the king of hearts and the board won the last three tricks with a trump and the queen-jack of spades.

Note that, had declarer led the king of spades from hand, he would have had to be clairvoyant to make his contract. On the second spade lead, he would have had to take a finesse for the ten!

Ray Milland, of 'Lost Weekend,' 'Dial M for Murder' fame, dies of cancer

Ray Milland

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — Ray Milland, who played opposite some of Hollywood's top female stars in the 1940s and won an Oscar for his portrayal of a tormented alcoholic in "The Lost Weekend," has died of cancer at age 78.

Milland, who learned only within the last few months that he had cancer, died in his sleep Monday at Torrance Medical Center, said agent Ronnie Leif. He was admitted Friday, said hospital spokeswoman Carmela Welte.

Born Jan. 3, 1908, as Reginald Truscott-Jones in Neath, Wales, the son of a steel mill superintendent, Milland appeared in nearly 150 films, including the classic "Dial M For Murder," and horror films in the 1970s.

One of his best known roles was the alcoholic writer in "The Lost Weekend," which won him an Oscar for best actor in 1945. The film, co-starring Jane Wyman, also won for best picture and best director for Billy Wilder.

In his 1974 autobiography, "Wide-Eyed in Babylon," Milland wrote that his portrayal created a domestic crisis. A friend saw him stagger down a New York street during the filming, but failed to see a camouflaged camera. The friend called Milland's wife, Muriel, to report that her husband had become a bum, prompting a frantic call from her for reassurance.

"He was a very fine gentleman," said Barbara Stanwyck, who appeared with Milland in "California" in 1947. "I enjoyed knowing him and working with him. He will be missed by all of us in the industry."

"He was a very good actor, a very talented man," said Ginger Rogers, who co-starred with Milland in several films, including "The Major and the Minor" in 1942 and "Lady in the Dark" in 1944. "He was somewhat of a distant gentleman in that he kept his own counsel."

Milland's co-stars also included Carole Lombard and Claudette Colbert. He teamed with Grace Kelly in Alfred Hitchcock's 1954 "Dial M for Murder." More recently, he played Ryan O'Neal's father in the 1970 "Love Story," and its sequel, "Oliver's Story," in 1978.

Milland got his start in movies while serving with the British army's Household Cavalry in the late 1920s when a marksman hired as a sharpshooter for "The Informer" was hit by a bus. The producers went to the British War Office for a replacement, and Milland was tapped.

At the producers' request, Milland fired into a chalk circle that had been drawn around a half dollar, hitting the target 11 times in 10 seconds.

"I couldn't have done it again," he once recalled. "Nobody could. I got the job."

Placido Domingo

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Opera tenor Placido Domingo plans to donate $800,000 to victims of September earthquakes that killed up to 7,000 people here, including four of his relatives, and says collections will top $1 million in coming months.

Domingo, who was born in Spain but grew up in Mexico and has held a series of benefit concerts for the earthquake victims, said upon arrival Sunday, "We're going to make an agreement on the best way to deliver the promised aid, and then the money will be turned over to the victims within a week or two."

He said he preferred not to give the money to the National Reconstruction Fund because "I made this commitment and I promised to help the earthquake victims personally."

SUN CITY, Ariz. (AP) — Michael Drummond, the youngest person to get a Jarvik-7 artificial heart, is back working as a grocery store clerk, and says that when co-workers wondered what he could handle, he told them, "I can do anything."

However, Drummond wrapped up his first week on the job Friday at Bell Camino Safeway with a little office work, selling some Arizona lottery tickets to customers and collecting their returnable bottles.

"They just want to start me out slow," he said.

The 26-year-old former assistant grocery store manager said he hasn't been sick since his November release from University Medical Center in Tucson, but wears a surgical mask occasionally to guard against infection.

Drummond was 25 when he received a Jarvik-7 heart in a temporary implant Aug. 29. Nine days later, he was given the heart of an accident victim.

Andrew Young

LONDON (AP) — Andrew Young, a former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, says his second four-year term as mayor of Atlanta is "the most job security I've ever had," but that he's thinking about what to do next.

Young, who represented the Carter administration to the United Nations, is forbidden by law to seek a third term as mayor, and said Monday, "I've always wanted to write — so maybe I'll just stay home."

But he didn't rule out another stint in politics.

"If I'd run for a statewide office, it would more likely be governor than senator — because I enjoy running something," said Young, who was here to launch a tourism and convention promotion for Atlanta.

LONDON (AP) — Royal Navy diver Larry Slater, who helped rescue rock star Simon Le Bon of Duran Duran and 28 other people on three boats during the Fastnet race in August, has received the George Medal for bravery.

Slater, 32, a petty officer, on Aug. 11 showed "great fearlessness, superb stamina and unflinching courage in the face of enormous danger" in saving the crew members from two racing yachts in the gale-lashed final in the Admiral's Cup series, the Ministry of Defense said in its citation Tuesday.

Then he found Le Bon's yacht, the Drum, capsized, with most of the crew clinging to the hull and six, including Le Bon, trapped underneath. Slater pulled all six to safety.

"I am deeply honored," Slater said. "It's an indescribable feeling."

Le Bon, who is sailing the same yacht in the Whitbread Round The World Race, said from his vessel near Punta del Este, Uruguay, "Larry is a very, very courageous man and I owe my life to him. I have the greatest respect for him and I am glad his bravery has now been recognized.

"Thanking him is almost an understatement."

Ungrounded fears

As a group, politicians are not generally known for their shyness. But U.S. Senators proved an exception to that unwritten rule when they resisted attempts to televise Senate proceedings, as the House already does.

When the TV cameras go on, no smart politician is going to hide his light under a bushel. Yet, for more than a decade, the 100 politicians in the United States Senate had rejected live television and radio coverage of their proceedings.

That changed recently when the Senate finally agreed, on a 67-21 vote, to enter the television age. It was time.

Predictably, given their long history of hesitation, their first steps undoubtedly will be tentative. A trial period will begin May 1, with another vote in August on whether to make television coverage permanent.

Traditionalists in the upper chamber resisted the move to the end, arguing that the cameras would provoke endless grandstanding in a chamber packed with substantial egos. Democratic Sen. Russell Long of Louisiana, leader of the opponents, warned that statesmanship, already in scarce supply, would evaporate entirely as senators competed for the camera's eye.

Supporters countered that the Senate could not remain wrapped in its "cocoon of ancient rules" forever. The test period will be accompanied by new rules designed to limit senators' ability to mount endless filibusters. As supporters argued, the increased public scrutiny which will come with live coverage may actually force discipline on a body that routinely bogs down in messy procedural battles. It's even possible that the quality of debate will be improved, remarked one senator.

It's hard to take seriously opponents' fear of the cameras, considering that the House has permitted live television coverage since 1979 without suffering a drastic deterioration in members' standards of behavior.

It's about time the senators recognized that television is merely the modern technological means by which a citizen may exercise his constitutional right to see his government in action. Now he may do so from his living room. In too many other nations, a citizen can't even get in the door of his government, much less watch its proceedings on television.

If live television coverage allows the American public to see how little their senators do sometimes, and how slowly they do it most of the time, then so much the better. The cameras will serve as a reminder to the senators that America is watching.

Marcos unlikely to escape U.S. probe

WASHINGTON — Ferdinand Marcos fled his homeland two weeks ago in the grand tradition of deposed despots, taking with him a retinue of friends and relations — and as much boodle as he could stash aboard two U.S. Air Force planes.

Jack Anderson

Marcos has had many despotic predecessors over the years, and we've made it a crusade to track down and expose the extent of the ill-gotten loot amassed by heads of state: the shah of Iran, President Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua and a succession of Mexican presidents.

There may be a different outcome in the Marcos affair, however. Because of the special relationship between the United States and the Philippines — a former colony, a valued ally, the site of two major U.S. military bases and the recipient of billions in aid — Congress seems determined to investigate the wealth of this particular ex-president.

In fact, some of the cronies who accompanied Marcos into exile would have been served with House subcommittee subpoenas as soon as they stepped off the plane in Hawaii, had it not been for an apparent blunder by the Immigration and Naturalization Service. These friends' testimony is considered crucial in the attempt to trace ownership of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property in this country believed to have been bought on behalf of Marcos and his wife, Imelda.

Congressional investigators are trying to determine whether U.S. aid funds were used to buy any of this property; the new Philippine government is also interested in recovering whatever can be proved to have been illegally purchased during the 20-year Marcos rule. Since his presidential salary was between $5,000 and $6,000 a year, there would seem to be a substantial amount of property to be accounted for.

The House subcommittee on Asian affairs, chaired by Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., has found evidence that the Marcoses are the owners of a huge midtown Manhattan shopping center, and a prime piece of real estate on Wall Street — a total value of more than $300 million — and a $20 million estate in Suffolk County, N.Y.

The Marcoses have stoutly denied they own these properties. But documents discovered on the plane they took into exile reportedly contain evidence that the Marcoses were indeed the owners of some of the properties — and of others not even suspected by the House investigators.

Subcommittee sources told our associate Lucette Lagnado that Solarz had specifically asked to be notified if any of five Marcos associates ever entered the United States, so they could be subpoenaed to appear before his subcommittee. In a confidential letter to INS Commissioner Alan Nelson, Solarz asked that Immigration personnel be on the lookout for the five.

"I would like to request that the names of these people be entered in your computers, and that you inform my subcommittee if they reenter this country so that we can serve subpoenas on them," Solarz wrote.

The letter was dated Jan. 17, and with astonishing prescience, Solarz wrote: "We have strong reason to believe ... that they will try to re-enter the United States sometime over the next few months." It was actually a little more than five weeks. Immigration agents unaccountably let the five into Hawaii without telling the subcommittee.

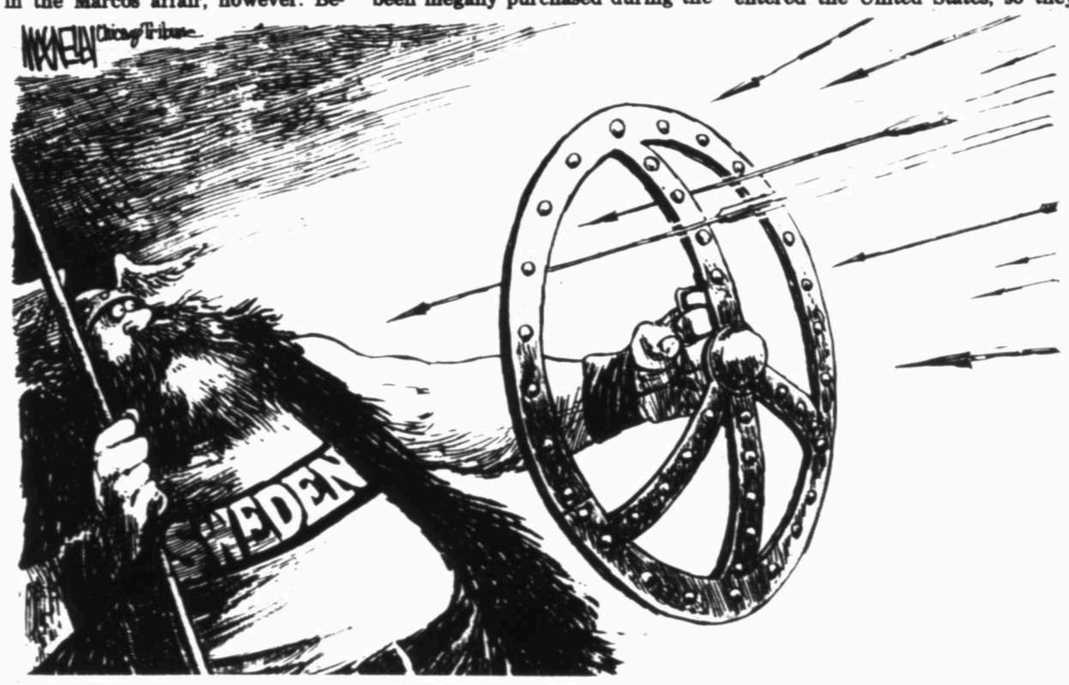

The Marcos associates Solarz wants to interrogate are banker Rolando Gapud; Antonio Floriendo, a sugar baron who we previously reported is believed to have bought property for Marcos in Hawaii and whose own properties include a refinery in Brooklyn, Solarz' back yard; Carmen Gomez, Imelda Marcos' accountant; Miguel Arguelles and Jorge Ramos, titular owners of Luna 7, a company that handled some of the real estate believe to belong to the Marcoses.

How does Marcos stack up against other rulers who fleeced their impoverished countrymen? Let's just say he faces stiff competition from these past masters of greed:

— Ex-president Jose Lopez Portillo of Mexico came to office just as his country's oil wealth began flowing. Our associate Dale Van Atta learned that after six years of graft and foreign investment, Lopez Portillo's personal wealth was estimated at anywhere from $1 billion to $5 billion.

— Anastasio Somoza took his cut of practically everything in Nicaragua: food, farmland, factories, financial institutions. He also had huge holdings in this country and elsewhere, for a total personal wealth estimated at about $500 million.

Jack Anderson is a syndicated columnist who along with Joseph Spear and Dale Van Atta writes this column for United Feature Syndicate.

Issues leave questions

I am concerned about what is happening in the county commissioners' court.

1. When Dallas Smith was sheriff, someone ordered a light plant, light poles, lights, posts, and wire which were stored in the county warehouse for the stockade they wanted to build. Who got the money for the houses they leased?

2. Why wasn't the jail on the fifth floor finished in 1957 when the contract was let?

3. Why did they waste approximately a half a million dollars on the Fairgrounds Road for a new jail?

4. How could they let a contract for a new jail when they didn't have the money?

5. Why is it one architect gets all the work when they should take bids for the work? There is more than one architect in Midland. They have to have bids on mowing the grass on the county property which is a simple operation. How many plans have been drawn on the courthouse jail and the new jail? Does the architect get 10% of each plan he draws?

6. How many gallons of kerosene have Commissioners Wright and Brown burned since June? They said they were going to burn the midnight oil to get the jailhouse and the Culver Youth Center rolling. It has been seven months since the bonds were approved, and they haven't done a thing to improve the jail or the Culver Youth Center.

7. When they go to Austin, do they fly first-class and stay in first-class hotels with dinners at $50 a night, or do they go the economical route?

8. I heard from the grapevine they are planning to float a $10 million bond issue which will never get across the river.

9. The people of Midland spoke when they voted for the $3 million bond and not the $9 million.

10. Why is it they conveniently forget to remember the adviser they had in Midland, and instead of using him they hired one in San Antonio? When the Midland adviser called to see why he hadn't been called, they said he was supposed to call them. Of course, the adviser from San Antonio had to be paid, telling us how the county spends their money.

11. It is not too late to be the people's choice in county commissioner Precinct 4.

Flag theft angers vets

Recently when the space shuttle Challenger exploded, our president asked that all flags be lowered to half staff to honor the memory of our astronauts.

In accordance with this request, V.F.W. Post 7208 lowered the United States flag and the Texas flag which are flown from the same pole. During the time the flag was lowered someone took an opportunity to steal the Lone Star flag. Two days later someone stole Old Glory. These flags were replaced a short time later. Recently both flags and the new cable were stolen.

If the person or persons who are taking these flags have such a need the V.F.W. is glad to donate a flag to anyone who needs one, you only have to ASK. Our veterans who defended our country so that the flag might wave proudly are very mad that someone is stealing their flag. Thieves will be prosecuted if caught.

A reward is being offered to anyone who furnishes information that leads to the arrest and conviction of the persons responsible for this cowardly offense. Not only are they stealing our property, they are trying to steal our honor. We are fighting mad.

Quite apart from private top-level skepticism about the efficacy of SALT agreements, alarm is growing that a Soviet territorial defense against strategic missile attack may be nearer realization than seemed possible only a year ago. Such a defense would violate the anti-ballistic missile (ABM) treaty of 1972. It could make the Soviet Union the paramount power, transforming super-power relations.

Ominous Soviet passage toward protection against possible American retaliation to a first-strike attack is killing what little zest the administration has had for new nuclear agreements. That presages a Geneva follow-on summit, tentatively set for this summer, that will produce nothing in the way of new arms treaties, leaving the U.S. free to pursue its own nuclear defenses — the futuristic SDI for the 21st century.

Arms control skeptics are angling for just such a non-result. This is not rejection of nuclear treaties to prevent a return of detente. Far from it. The mood is fear: No matter how skillfully U.S. negotiators attempt to close non-compliance escape hatches, ways to cheat will be found and exercised by Moscow. Thus, a nuclear treaty becomes a gift of danger — a Trojan horse for Soviet exploitation, while the U.S. complies.

The new evidence, acquired by the electronic miracles of U.S. satellites, appears to be definitive. A relatively old "Square Pair" radar for the SAM-5 anti-aircraft missile has been "calibrated" with a giant ABM-3 battle-management radar, the two having been moved next to each other in the vicinity of Moscow. The larger ABM radar appears designed to zero in on the incoming missile, then turn it over to SAM-5 which fires its own missiles into the target.

This marriage between the two dissimilar radars, called "inter-netting," may well be the clinching evidence that the Soviets are preparing the SAM-5 radar-interceptor for an active ABM role — forbidden by treaty. The significance goes far because the U.S. estimates there are no fewer than 2,500 SAM-5s in the Soviet Union. They are concentrated in four areas: the Moscow-Leningrad salient, the Caucuses, the Far East and the populated area of Siberia (near the Krasnoyarsk ABM radar that the U.S. claims is a treaty violation). The 1972 treaty gave each side the right to defend its capital with a missile-defense system — but only the capital. The U.S. has renounced that right, but Moscow is legally ringed with 100 ABM-3 anti-missile systems. Calibrating the SA-5 system with the legal ABM system would triple Soviet ability to protect Moscow. Likewise, SA-5 radar-interceptors elsewhere in the Soviet Union could be programmed for the ABM task that is violating the treaty.

SALT violations were routinely minimized by pre-Reagan administrations. Indeed, the arms control "process" which produced the SALT and ABM treaties made a comeback in the year leading up to the Geneva summit. But since the summit, the Soviet proposal to rid the world of all nuclear weapons struck the Reagan White House like a propaganda trumpet, not a serious arms-control proposal. Likewise, early hopes for reducing or eliminating the intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe are evaporating.

But the true measure of the administration's growing concern about any new treaty is not current negotiating problems in the Geneva arms talks (recessed last week at a standstill). The real source of concern is that no new agreement would be worth any more than the depreciating value of existing treaties.

The language in Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's unclassified but largely-ignored letter to the president last November struck the note that has become a thundering chord since. Weinberger decried the "variety" of violations "of the complex constraints in the ABM treaty aimed at preventing the deployment of a territorial defense involving a nationwide anti-ballistic missile system."

In his white paper of Soviet violations, made public this weekend after being held up by the State Department for five weeks, arms control director Kenneth Adelman said that continuing Soviet violations "cannot help but have an impact upon our long-term security" and "jeopardize the process" of arms control. Privately, Adelman has warned in the highest administration councils about the dangers of new agreements.

CHARLEY REESE

Engineer's money book important reading

CHAGRIN FALLS, Ohio — Just as engineers have blown the whistle on NASA and the management of Thiokol, a retired engineer here in this suburb of Cleveland has blown the whistle on our monetary system.

Charley Reese

Just as NASA's decision to ignore the rational analysis of the engineers resulted in catastrophe, so, too, will there be a financial catastrophe if the analysis of this engineer is ignored. We have, in fact, already suffered tremendously from the flawed money system encrusted in the Federal Reserve Act of 1913.

The foreclosures now taking place of American farms is another example. A summary of the record since the Federal Reserve Act was passed shows you just how flawed a system it is:

Measuring from 1913 to 1981, federal debt has increased 837 times, the purchasing power of the dollar has been reduced to one-ninth, and the acquisition of real property and claims held by the banking system has gone from a negligible amount to $1.4 billion.

Because they're so easy to discredit, the greatest allies the Federal Reserve Act has are the crackpots and neo-Nazis who include criticism of the monetary system in their general tirades about imagined conspiracies of international Jewish bankers, which is pure rubbish.

The retired engineer, Theodore Thoren, is no crackpot or anti-Semite nor does he have any association with them whatsoever. His book, "The Truth in Money Book," has no hint of impugning anyone's motives. Still, I sought him out to be sure. He is as fine a fellow as you would want to meet.

Thoren, like most of us, never thought about the monetary system. His interest was engineering. He holds degrees in both aeronautical and mechanical engineering. He rose through the ranks to become director of research and development for TRW and later vice president of engineering and research for the aerospace division of Borg-Warner Corp.

His interest in the monetary system came about in a natural way for an engineer. Engineers are as close to the Ayn Rand ideal of the rational person as you will find.

At one point in his career, Thoren was in charge of preparing bids on engineering projects. He had to compute the cost, the profit margin the corporation wanted, plus the anticipated inflation rate because the contract would extend over 5 years.

Everything could be arrived at on a rational basis except the inflation rate. What would it be? No one could tell him. He sought help from the accounting and financial people. They had no idea. He went to academicians. They couldn't predict it either. Finally, he just had to guess.

But it bothered his rational mind that something having to do with money, which is based on math, couldn't be predicted. He resolved that if he ever had the time, he would look into it.

When he retired, he began to do so and one discovery led to another. He approached it just as he would any other engineering problem. He was interested in facts and hard data, not theories or ideologies or politics. Other people began to get interested.

Pretty soon, about 10 or 12 men here in this charming little community, most of them engineers, some retired and some still working, had formed an informal study group. Once a month, they'd meet, eat hamburgers, and talk over the monetary system.

Thoren and a friend, another engineer, Richard F. Warner, eventually put together their findings in a report in engineering form. Another member of the group, who was in public relations, said that was fine but if they ever expected any widespread readership, they'd better put it in plainer language.

Well, the upshot was "The Truth in Money Book," which Thoren's daughter, Margaret, helped edit. She spent 10 years in London as a journalist for the Economist and later as editor of a banking trade magazine.

It is the most clear-cut, rational explanation of the present monetary and banking system you can imagine. You can get a copy for $8.50 from Truth in Money, Inc., P.O. Box 30, Chagrin Falls, Ohio 44022.

I'm plugging this book because it is a critically important subject. What Thoren discovered is that the design flaws in the present monetary system make the endless cycles of inflation and bankruptcies absolutely inevitable.

Pure gold too soft

Pure gold is yellow, but it's so soft that usually some other metal is added to make it hard enough to resist wear and damage, as in the case of jewelry. The addition of copper makes gold red; silver or platinum, white; iron, green, and bismuth, black. — CNS.

Fashions designed for larger women

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Let us now praise the plump woman.

Also known as La Femme en Plus. Everything you always wanted in a woman, and more.

For years, ample women have been the butt of jokes. Joan Rivers made a career of savaging the pre-Betty Fordian Elizabeth Taylor. ("Mosquitoes see her and scream, 'Buffet!' She pierced her ears and gravy ran out.")

But now, the zaftig look is back, bigger than ever. We're talking Reubenesque, as in the sandwich. Double-decker dames. Life in the fast Lane Bryant.

This week, Vogue magazine hit the stands with a 33-page advertising supplement celebrating the larger-sized woman. For the first time in its 94-year history, the fashion bible is acknowledging what women have known all along: None of us looks like Jamie Lee Curtis.

"Why would you want to devote your life to looking like her? Her whole day revolves around dieting," says Hara Marano, editorial director of the Fashion Plus supplement and a size 20 herself. "There's more to life than a waistline."

Of course the magazine is merely cashing in on what merchants have known for years: 30 percent of the female population wears size 14 or over. That's 40 million women.

"IT'S THE FASTEST growing segment of the fashion industry," says Jere Daniel, the supplement's publisher. "The reaction has been extraordinary, not only from the fashion industry but from advertisers as well. There's been nothing like it."

Daniel, who said he sold the full-page ads at the regular Vogue advertising rate ($27,500 for full-color page, $19,000 for black and white), is already planning an even larger supplement for the September issue.

"They're not fat," Daniel says. "I would call them large. And large women can be beautiful."

Bill Fabrey, chairman of National Association to Aid Fat People, flipped through his advance copy of Vogue and proclaimed the supplement "a good beginning." But Fabrey has a problem. The models are too thin.

"These are not fat models," he complained. "These fashions stop at size 22 or 24. What about the other 10 million women who are heavier than that?"

Fabrey, who appeared recently with other fat-loving men on the Sally Jesse Raphael syndicated talk show, says his wife, for example, is a size 52. She weighs more than 300 pounds.

"I'm attracted to curves and softness and size," he says. "For lack of a better term, we call ourselves fat admirers."

Fabrey says he's impressed "by big things" — including ocean liners, steam engines and the George Washington Bridge — and he prefers that people call a spade a spade. "We don't like to use euphemisms like ample-figured, or plus sizes. The word is fat."

AND THE WORD, in the fashion industry, is spreading.

Says Marano, firmly: "There is fashion after size 12."

For more evidence that fat is back, consider the following:

Oprah Winfrey, talk show host and Academy Award nominee for "The Color Purple," is thinking about developing a line of "Oprah" clothing for "the larger lady."

"W" just proclaimed diets "out" and meat loaf "in."

"Sugarbaby" was hot. "Perfect" was not.

"The Refrigerettes" — Chicago Bears cheerleaders all tipping the Toledos at 200 pounds — were the toast of Super Bowl XX.

Is this the dawn of Stout Clout? "I think it's a movement," says Nancy Roberts, British radio show host and author of "Breaking All the Rules," a new book celebrating the voluptuous woman. "Big women are beginning to get angry."

Roberts, sister of actor Tony Roberts, is a self-styled leader of the diet backlash. "I don't want to tell anybody to be fat," she says. "I just want to allow women the freedom to not worry about dieting. It's become a very destructive influence in women's lives."

Indeed, some women's magazines — concerned with the proliferation of eating disorders among young women — are telling their readers to relax. Last month's Mademoiselle, in a report headlined "Skinny Girls Ain't Sexy," even offered advice about how to keep on those extra five pounds. The story, quoting a recent study conducted at the University of Pennsylvania, found that "men consider women with a little extra padding much sexier than women with stick thin figures." The article also notes that fat gives skin a more youthful appearance, prevents premature wrinkling, helps fight disease and is essential for healthy skin and hair.

Of course, it's still not healthy to look like Ling-Ling. But the trend is definitely away from the emaciated look of recent decades.

DESIGNERS LIKE Laura Biagiotti, Givenchy, Gloria Vanderbilt, Albert Nipon and Belle France have tapped into the much larger-sized market. Even Diane von Furstenberg, famous for her tight wrap dresses, is reportedly considering expanding her line to include larger sizes.

Heavyset women no longer have to settle for what one fashion buyer calls polyester "hefty bags," thanks to the exclusive boutiques that have sprung up catering to them: "La Grande Dame," "Designer's Largesse," "More to Love," "Rubenesque."

And the over 14-size has begun showing up in advertisements and catalogues.

"For the last six years, there's been a consistently growing demand for models that are representative of the more general population," says T. Zazzera, director of the 12 Plus Division of the Ford Agency in New York, which has a stable of stately women, some weighing up to 200 pounds. "We're not really pushing fat," she says, "we're saying be the best you can no matter what size you are."

Says designer Bill Blass, "The derriere may well become the erotic zone again."

Woman's World, a retailer of brand-name large-size fashions, will present a spring fashion show at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Woman's World store in Midland Park Mall. The event, featuring store customers as models, will be themed "We've Got Your Style" and will highlight the newest looks in career, causal and evening wear.

DEAR ABBY

Phrase used incorrectly

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: In a recent letter, you incorrectly used the phrase "tight labor market" to refer to a situation where jobs are scarce. Actually, a tight labor market is one in which job openings are PLENTIFUL and workers who don't like their work can easily quit and find other employment. Economists use the phrase "loose labor market" to describe job scarcity.

Your mistake in terminology is commonly made. So keep the following rhyme in mind:

When the labor market is tight
Tell your boss to fly a kite.
But when the labor market is loose,
Saying that will cook your goose.
— DANIEL J.B. MITCHELL, UCLA PROFESSOR

DEAR PROFESSOR: You could have fooled me. I erroneously assumed that because the terminology "money is tight" means "money is scarce," the same held true for the labor market. Thanks for wising me up.

Although flying a kite was an electrifying experience for Benjamin Franklin, I wouldn't recommend telling one's boss to fly one under any circumstances.

DEAR ABBY: I was appalled at the ignorance of that doctor who opposed artificial insemination for the unmarried 35-year-old professional woman who wanted to have a child before it was too late. He gave the impression that artificial insemination was done as a lark with a turkey baster. Actually, it's done under hygienic conditions in a doctor's office only after a great deal of investigation and many consultations. Some facts:

One out of every six American couples of reproductive age is infertile, and 40 percent of the cases are attributed to the infertility of the male.

Twenty-six states have already passed laws legitimizing artificial insemination, and approximately 20,000 babies are born every year because of it.

How do I know so much about it? Had it not been for artificial insemination, my husband and I would not be the proud parents of two beautiful, healthy children. Unfortunately, at age 31, my husband had surgery for testicular cancer, which rendered him sterile. Adoption would have meant years of waiting, but with artificial insemination we were able to become parents without delay. Our children have at least one biological parent, and believe it or not, the "donor" was so well-matched that both our children resemble their "father." — LUCKY US IN PASADENA

DEAR LUCKY: Lucky, indeed. And boo to that insensitive doctor.

DEAR ABBY: You mentioned "the rhythm system" as one of the many methods of birth control.

First, I appreciate your respect for the Catholics' objection to artificial birth control, but, Abby, "the rhythm system" is a thing of the past. Today there are many family planning organizations that teach natural methods of birth control. The most popular one is the "sympto-thermal" method. As the name implies, it is a matter of learning to read the signs of fertility. This method is not only approved by the Catholic Church, it is extremely effective whether a woman's cycle is regular or irregular, whether she is nursing or approaching menopause.

Please pass this information on. — PREFERS THE NATURAL WAY

DEAR PREFERS: Thanks for bringing me up-to-date. The sympto-thermal method is effective in reverse, too. It teaches women who want to conceive how to determine their most fertile period.

For more information on this subject, write to: The Couple to Couple League, P.O. Box 111184, Cincinnati, Ohio 45211.

Please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope, as this is a non-profit organization.

Fashion trends for fall predicted

Hearst News Service

In spite of the secrecy surrounding the French, Italian and British collections, it is possible to predict the fashion future. The starting point for these trends has been the recently presented shows and the haute couture collections that precede the coming ready-to-wear shows by two months.

Watch out for these elements in fall 1986:

■ The Statue of Liberty, about to celebrate her 100th birthday, and designed by a Frenchman, could strike some strong patriotic notes on both sides of the Atlantic.

■ "Moments of Fashion," a retrospective exhibition at the Louvre, may have prompted designers to look further back than movies from the '40s, '50s and '60s.

■ Diana Vreeland's "Royal India" exhibition of native princely costumes at the Metropolian Museum of Art could refocus the look from the fashions of the British Raj to the opulence of Indian royalty.

STATE

An upper level storm system moved toward Texas today, bringing with it the threat of severe thunderstorms, possbily accompanied by heavy rain, high winds, some hail and possible tornadoes.

Light rain associated with the leading edge of the storm system approached Texas from the southwest early today, triggering some light rain over portions of the South Plains before dawn.

The National Weather Service says the scattered thunderstorms, including some possibly reaching severe levels, were expected to begin late this afternoon and continue through tonight. Some of the activity will be lingering over portions of the state Wednesday, forecasters said.

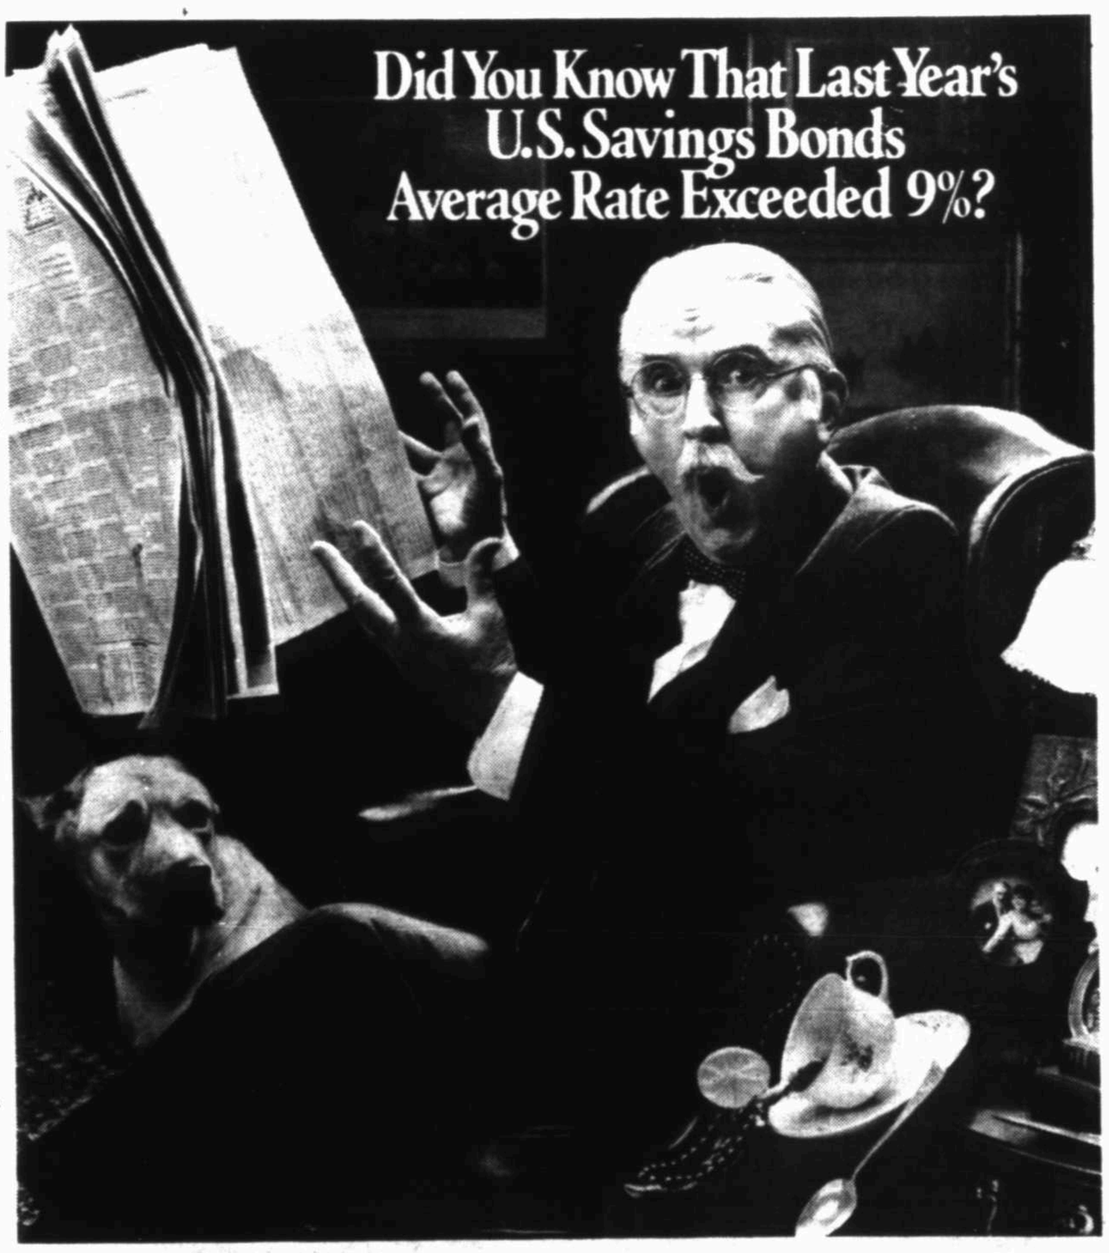

A weak warm front was located early today along a line from near Lufkin to Austin to Del Rio.

NATION

A storm hit the West with snow, rain and high winds today and aimed toward the Plains, while Maine and Michigan had snow and freezing rain.

The storm caused snow in the mountains and rainshowers with a few thunderstorms at lower elevations from the central and southern Rockies to much of the Pacific Coast.

A winter storm warning was posted across the White Mountains of Arizona and the southwest valleys and southern mountains of Utah. Up to a foot of snow was possible in the mountains and a half-foot in the valleys, the national Weather Service said.

Many people all over America are surprised when they hear what U.S. Savings Bonds have to offer.

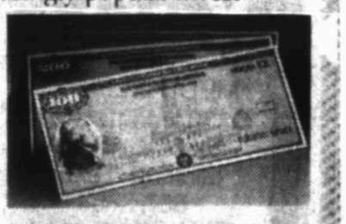

For starters, Savings Bonds give you market-based interest rates—like the money markets—plus the security of a guaranteed return. This means you can earn a lot more than the guaranteed minimum rate of 7½%, but never less! To earn the higher rates, just hold your Bonds for five years or longer.

Here's more surprising news—the interest you earn from Savings Bonds is free from state and local income taxes. And you don't have to pay federal taxes on the interest earned until you cash in your Bonds.

Savings Bonds are easy to buy, too. They cost as little as $25 and can be purchased at most banks and savings and loans. Or through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

All of these advantages are making Savings Bonds an increasingly popular investment. Last year, sales of U.S. Savings Bonds were up nearly 30%!

With all that Savings Bonds have to offer, it's no surprise they're one of the best investments in America. For the current rate, just call toll-free 1-800-US-BONDS.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS Paying Better Than Ever

Market-based rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least five years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn market-based rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than five years earn lower rates.

'Windowpane' area seeking water, sewer services

Residents split on prospect of annexation by Midland

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Midland businessman Ray DeLeon is supporting a Midland County proposal to seek federal funds to bring city services — water and sewer lines — and street maintenance to a windowpane area in southeast Midland. He's holding his 1½-year-old granddaughter, Leonela Caballero.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

There's another move beginning to pipe city water to and raw sewage from a southeast Midland windowpane area that's marked with a rural setting and marred by niches of squalor and poverty.

"Windowpane No. 2 probably has the worst geographic living conditions in the entire county," said Midland County Commissioner Durward Wright. "It needs attention from a sanitation standpoint and a pollution standpoint. It's nasty. It's dirty. It's unsightly. It sure needs cleaning up."

Two years ago, the county made a bid for $500,000 in federal Community Development funds administered through the Texas Department of Community Affairs but didn't rate high enough on the need scale to get a portion of the money for neighborhood improvement.

This year, the county will be seeking a bite of about $1.5 million available to a 17-county region within the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission.

The 16-block windowpane area is east of Midland Dorms and wedged between Midland Freshman High School and Interstate Highway 20.

"It's kind of a Catch 22," said Gary Harris, a Parkhill, Smith & Cooper Inc. engineer who has volunteered to submit Midland County's application. "They (city of Midland) would not annex that area until that area had water and sewer and street improvements."

MIDLAND COUNTY officials have the intent of doing to Windowpane No. 2 what $1.6 million in federal funds did for Windowpane No. 1 in south-central Midland. Over a three-year period in the early 1980s, the funds went to house remodeling and building, razing dilapidated houses, installation of water and sewer lines, filling in cesspools and paving streets.

The first windowpane project was initiated by Better Sheeler and was completed under the supervision of Jerrie Ann Westmoreland, the county's housing director.

The funds sought in 1986 would be insufficient to put in street paving and guttering or to lay water and sewer lines.

"We would not be able to do both water and sewer," said Harris. "We would have to pick one — whatever the county and city agreed was the most needed at the time — and come in in subsequent years through this grant."

Midland area counties applying for the grant would be screened by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, which could reduce each grant from a maximum of $500,000 to $300,000 to increase the number of grants in the 17-county area.

"I'm for doing anything we can do within the constraints of our budget...to help this area," said Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig. "If any (governmental) entity has any way of helping, we should do it."

Within the Windowpane No. 2 neighborhood, not all residents are in favor of bringing the city's water-sewer service and regulations to their area.

Retired engineer Bill Price and his wife, Joretta, oppose the move, which is viewed as improvements by other residents and the commissioners. The Prices contested the 1984 proposal. Once the city annexes the area after improvements are made, neighborhood residents would be subjected to city taxes and city ordinances.

"IT'S GOING TO HURT people who have already upgraded their property," said Mrs. Price, who operates a picture-framing business. "It's going to cost us. We do not fall into the category of hand-outs."

The Prices own five acres in the area, where they have lived for about 20 years, and have an underground water supply and their own sewer system.

"It's a way to get the city to come out here and take over...without having to spend any money to do it," Mrs. Price said. "Somebody (the taxpayer) is having to pay money to do it."

The Prices said many of the neighborhood's residents will "go along with anything," including what the Prices view as unwelcomed city annexation.

"It's not free like some of the people keep talking about," said Price. "It's tax money coming from you and me. It's really not cost effective."

Price indicated that he was appalled by the attitude: "If we don't get it (governmental handouts), somebody else will."

"It's real sad," he said. "What they want is their noses in the trough. There ain't no free lunch.

"If the city takes it in," he said, "Hell, their way of life is gone. They're use to having animals and stuff. No more."

Annexation would mean the city ordinances would take effect and, for example, residents would be required to take out building permits to modify their houses.

"THE ORDINANCES are passed to allow you to do something or to prohibit you from doing something," Price said. "I haven't had someone telling me what I can do and can't do with the land."

Further, Price took exception to a 1984 Midland City-County Health Department analysis of well-water conditions and locations. Of the 29 wells located, 11 were deemed "satisfactory," 13 were judged "contaminated," and five were listed "unsatisfactory for analysis."

"It wasn't correctly reported," Price said.

Price said he is inclined to move out with the possibility of city encroachment.

"I wish the economy weren't so depressed," he said. "I'd unload and move out. I'd be gone pretty quick."

But other residents support the county's efforts.

Vicky Cuellar, 24, said her family supported the 1984 effort to bring water and sewer lines into the neighborhood.

"The well water we have is just terrible. At the trailer houses next door to us, you can smell the sewage."

RAY DeLANO moved to "the country" about 25 years ago. The neighborhood developed. Today, he operates Ray's Tow and Salvage Co. and owns rent houses in the neighborhood.

DeLano, 45, supported the 1984 effort and the renewed effort also has his support.

"There are people who didn't have nothing, don't want nothing and now they are trying to make us have something," he said.

DeLano said the proposed water, sewer and street improvements would tend to instill pride in the community and possibly would goad the residents to clean up and spruce up the neighborhood.

"I don't think it would cost that much," he said. "Give us the equipment and materials, and we'll do the damn job just like they told them two years ago. We've got gas and lights (electricity). The only thing we don't have out here is sewer and water (services)."

Approximately 100 families live in the area.

Most are Hispanics, other are Anglos and a few — two families — are black, said DeLano.

Some heads of households are skilled workers and businessmen, such as himself and Max Cuellar, who operates a dump truck business. Others are "mostly laborers." Some are sub-contractors and lawn cleaners and keepers. And there are some "winos" in the neighborhood, he said.

The neighborhood's "unsightliness" is evidenced in some tar-paper shacks, run-down houses, junk cars, unfenced salvage yards, wrecked and abandoned cars and overgrown lots.

The neighborhood has an apostolic church undergoing improvements and a boarded-up Grace Baptist Church. Near the neighborhood are the Midland Freshman High School, Midland Dorms, M System Food Store and the Rankin Highway Mall, which is a flea market and a Sonic Drive-In restaurant.

DeLano has hopes that the neighborhood will improve and that far southeastern Midland eventually will prosper despite the impoverishment of some households and their neglect to improve the area.

Midland couple charged with daughter's beating

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

A Midland couple was free on bond today after being arrested Monday and charged with aggravated assault in the alleged Sunday beating of their 15-year-old daughter.

Kenneth Davis Shores, 41, and 36-year-old Georgia Carol Shores are accused of beating their daughter, threatening her with a gun and then chaining her to a bed while they went to church, according to police reports.

Shores, a credit manager for a local tool company, was a deputy with the Midland County Sheriff's Department from October 1978 to July 1979, according to Sheriff Gary Painter.

"He was asked to resign because of conflicts with an immediate supervisor," Painter said this morning.

Ms. Shores is a claims assistant with a local oil company.

According to police reports, Shores grounded his daughter after finding and reading a journal she had kept. She left their home at 5119 W. Illinois Sunday morning to go to work at the Safeway supermarket at Garfield Street and Wadley Avenue, and her parents came and took her out of the store.

They drove her to a pasture near the dead end of A Street north of Midland, where Shores, who stands six feet five inches tall and weighs 200 pounds, beat her with a belt, according to police reports. After she fell to the ground, Ms. Shores slapped her, reports said.

Shores then held a handgun next to his daughter's head with the barrel pointed up, and asked if there was any reason he should let her live, according to reports. His wife said she couldn't think of a reason, and Shores fired twice into the air, reports said.

The couple then brought their daughter back to their house and chained her to a bed before leaving for church, reports said. One of the daughter's friends came by and reported the incident to police after noticing large bruises on the girl.

The girl and her 13-year-old brother have been removed from the home and placed under the protective custody of the child services division of the Texas Department of Human Resources, according to a DHR spokeswoman.

Ken and Georgia Shores posted bonds of $2,500 apiece.

Ector commissioners balk at increased costs

Proposed changes in judicial system would cost county $90,000

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners Monday took a stand against the Texas Supreme Court's proposed changes in the state judicial system that would increase cost of operations by an estimated $90,000.

The resolution passed by commissioners, a copy of which is to be sent to the Texas Association of Counties and all Texas county organizations that might have an interest in the matter, states, "It is obvious that the implementation of said rules will require this Commissioners' Court to provide office space, utilities, and funding for personnel, office equipment, computers, and supplies for the offices of the county and districts clerks of Ector and for the county administrative judge."

As interpreted by an Ector County Bar Association committee that has studied the proposal since January, the Working Draft of Administrative Rules for Texas Trial Court proposed by the Supreme Court Oct. 31, 1985, impose greater demands on the time of attorneys by requiring the filing of additional motions and more conferences, which would increase costs to clients.

As currently constituted, court rules encourage reconciliation among couples contemplating divorce. The proposed new rules would place a 90-day limit on such cases.

The Ector County District Clerk's office, already considered overloaded, would be charged with the additional responsibility of keeping detailed records and making monthly reports regarding the age and number of pending cases, number of continuances granted and cases disposed of, officials said.

All of this information is currently kept by the Ector County District Clerk's office, but it is not consolidated for monthly report purposes. District Clerk Jackie Barnes has indicated imposition of the rules would require additional personnel and computerization of records.

According to County Judge Jan Fisher, the proposed changes come at a time when the county is trying to find ways to decrease costs and lessen the burden on taxpayers rather than increase it.

Teachers mount excuses for changing test time

AUSTIN (AP) — A case of the hiccups, a conflict with a golfing tee time and an old reliable — car trouble — were just a few of the reasons given by teachers and administrators trying to get their appointments changed to take the state's literacy test.

"We had one woman call in who said that she gets the hiccups every day at 3:30 p.m., so she couldn't take the afternoon test," said Nolan Wood, director of teacher assessment for the Texas Education Agency in Austin.

Fewer than 100 of the more than 200,000 teachers and administrators statewide have actually tried to get out of taking the test, Wood told the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal.

"We had one guy call in who said he had a 1 p.m. tee time for a golf game, but that he was scheduled to take the test at noon. I liked that one myself because I'm a golfer, but we didn't change his time."

— Nolan Wood, Texas Education Agency

Wood said that one of his favorites, but actually one of the most valid, involves the number of teachers who were expected to give birth Monday.

"We've had about 75 teachers who are supposed to deliver sometime on March 10," Wood said. "I thought that was amazing, until I thought about the fact that there are 210,000 teachers out there. Once you look at it that way, the number is very small."

One teacher said she had to attend a junior service league meeting, while another said his appointment to take the test conflicted with a planned game of golf.

"We had one guy call in who said he had a 1 p.m. tee time for a golf game, but that he was scheduled to take the test at noon," Wood said. "I liked that one myself because I'm a golfer, but we didn't change his time."

Reports of car trouble also popped up, Wood said.

"We had a lot of people who called in and said that they had been in a wreck or that their car was in the shop so that they couldn't make the 7:30 a.m. test time," Wood said. "I had to ask myself how they were still getting to school at 8 a.m."

No matter what the excuse, Wood said that the TEA considered every change request and uniformly moved the schedule if the educator had a valid doctor's excuse.

Sen. John Tower

Tower resigns post as arms control negotiator

WASHINGTON (AP) — John G. Tower, the former chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has submitted his resignation as a U.S. arms control negotiator for "personal reasons," and President Reagan will accept it, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said today.

"Certainly the president will abide by Senator Tower's reasons to leave his position," Speakes told reporters. The spokesman said Tower's move "was for personal reasons. It was not over policy differences."

U.S. officials, speaking on condition they not be identified, had said the former senator was leaving for personal reasons having to do with his family and because the job lacked excitement.

Speakes praised Tower as having "performed ably" during his tenure in Geneva. The spokesman described the president's arms control team as being "totally in sync amongst themselves and with the president."

Speakes said he did not know who will replace Tower.

Tower, 60, has handled negotiations with the Soviet Union in Geneva on reducing long-range nuclear weapons. The talks are stalemated. He was appointed to the post 14 months ago by President Reagan after deciding not to seek re-election to the Senate from Texas.

An assistant in Tower's office here said he was out of the country and could not be reached.

"It can be a boring, tedious job, sitting across the table from the Russians," said a senior official who insisted on anonymity. "He's used to seeing new faces every day. I don't know why he wanted it in the first place."

Tower had hoped negotiating with the Soviets would be a springboard to a Cabinet post, but there was no opening, and the former politician felt he was on the sidelines, another official said.

Tower, a conservative Republican, had served in the Senate nearly 24 years and was an ardent champion of U.S. weapons strength and a foe of the 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty with the Soviet Union.

He had argued the accord was not in the security interests of the United States. The SALT II pact, which was never ratified by the Senate, imposed ceilings on various U.S. and Soviet weapons. Tower argued that it did not limit capabilities.

Reagan also opposed the treaty, but since becoming president he has pledged not to undercut its provisions provided the Soviets also adhere to the pact.

A dapper and combative politician, Tower earned a reputation as a staunch conservative and a relentless fighter for Reagan's defense budget, including a missile buildup.

In Geneva, he oversaw negotiations over strategic weapons, serving under chief U.S. negotiator Max Kampelman, who handled talks over space-based defense systems. In the troika arrangement, Maynard Glitman, a veteran foreign service officer, dealt with intermediate-range missiles.

Three U.S. officials said Ron Lehman, an arms expert who has worked at the Pentagon and the White House, was a likely successor.

The last round of negotiations ended last week in Geneva without any indication the two sides made any progress in curbing the arms race. Secretary of State George P. Shultz said last Thursday there had been no "major accomplishment" during the round.

When the talks are resumed in May, Yuli Kvitsinky, one of the three Soviet negotiators, will not be there. He has been named ambassador to West Germany.

Strategic weapons are the globe-circling nuclear bombers, missiles and submarines that are classified as intercontinental. Both the United States and the Soviet Union have proposed sharp reductions, but are far apart on the details.

Attorneys: Asbestos companies were negligent in testing products

MARSHALL (AP) — An attorney representing more than 700 people in a class-action lawsuit that attacks the asbestos industry says the defendants should have tested their asbestos-filled products and released their findings to employees.

Manufacturers have a duty "to test their product and communicate their results," Port Arthur attorney Walter Umphrey said during the trial's opening statements Monday.

"This never was done. Any testing results were held in a conspiracy of silence until 1964."

Umphrey joined fellow attorneys Rex Houston of Henderson and Marlin Thompson of Orange in representing 741 insulators, shipyard laborers, painters and other industrial workers, who claim the manufacturers are responsible for their asbestos-related diseases.

Family members of the workers contend they contracted asbestos-related diseases after breathing fibers from the flame-retardant material that were collected on the clothing of the company employees.

The trial, which is expected to last a month, started Monday before U.S. District Judge Robert Parker after attorneys selected a six-member jury.

"This is a major piece of civil litigation..." Parker told the 27 prospective jurors earlier.

Asbestos, much used in the past as insulation, can can cause various types of cancer including asbestosis, a disabling lung disease caused by inhalation of asbestos fibers. It also is the only known cause of the lung cancer mesothelioma.

Last October, Parker consolidated 741 cases into one class-action lawsuit, and lawyers chose 13 cases to represent the entire class.

Parker also appointed Francis McGovern, a University of Alabama law professor, as special master to review the cases and determine whether the 13 selected cases were representative of the class. Manufacturers have disputed the representative cases' similarity to the other cases.

McGovern will review his findings today and present his report to the jury Wednesday.

Attorneys Richard Josephson of Houston and Beaumont attorney O.J. Weber are among the attorneys representing the manufacturers, who say they are not responsible for diseases workers incurred because they were not aware of the health risks until the mid-1960s.

Manufacturers also contend workers contributed to the problem by failing to take precautions or blamed their disease on asbestos rather than the real source.

Fire at YMCA forces children to evacuate

From Staff Reports

A fire in a bathroom at the Community Services YMCA Monday forced the temporary evacuation of about 65 people, mostly children, from a day care center. But the fire was out by the time firefighters arrived, according to Midland Fire Department reports.

The fire, reported about 1:30 p.m., was probably caused by a short in the wiring system in the building at 815 S. Carver, reports said.

The blaze damaged the bathroom wall and ceiling. The evacuation lasted about 45 minutes.

CRMWD, USGS begin area water salinity study

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — The U.S. Geological Survey and the Colorado River Municipal Water District are joining in a study of salinity problems along the Colorado River and its substantial tributaries from Lake J.B. Thomas to the confluence of the Concho River.

The three-year evaluation will cost about $300,000, which will be shared equally by the agencies. Field work will be done by the USGS through its San Angelo office, and reports will be available.

Water gain and loss investigations will be made on the Colorado, also on major tributaries such as Beals Creek, Elm Creek and the Concho River. Salinity levels will be determined during several specified three-day intervals during summer low-flow stages and winter medium-flow periods.

Water wells within a few miles of the river will be investigated and tested for water levels and salinity. All possible sources of saline intrusion will be explored, including natural salt seeps, discharges from improperly plugged oil wells and disposals.

All field data collection will be directed by Raymond Slade, hydrologist with the USGS in San Angelo. Field personnel will be contacting land and well owners to take advantage of their knowledge. Anyone desiring additional information may inquire of the USGS at 1409 Knickerbocker Road, San Angelo, 76904, or call 655-9616.

TDC budget cuts miss 13 percent goal

PALESTINE (AP) — Budget cuts by the Texas Department of Corrections will not affect the department's court order to build new facilities and improve living conditions for inmates, prison board chairman Alfred Hughes said.

"We're not cutting any associated items," Hughes said Monday. "But we've stopped all capital projects, except those that are court-related."

Hughes said the TDC will be able to comply with only half of Gov. Mark White's request for all state agencies to cut their budgets by 13 percent in light of the state's oil-related economic problems.

Items that were eliminated, he said, include a new department administration building and projects like parking lots.

Hughes also said the department would not attempt to renegotiate the federal court agreement in hopes of trimming costs.

"That would be a waste of all our time," he said.

Hughes, speaking during a meeting of the Texas Board of Corrections, said the budget cuts for his department are still undergoing scrutiny and no decisions will be made for a couple of weeks. He said a special board meeting likely will be held to approve the final cuts.

"This is a little different from other agencies," Hughes said. "Much of our funds are not discretionary. We've still got to feed inmates."

James Lynaugh, deputy corrections director for finance, said the department already has put a temporary halt to promotions, transfers, rehiring and all hiring except for "critical positions," such as medical staff and corrections officers.

In addition, he said, all capital purchases have been stopped, out-of-state travel must have prior approval and department-paid mileage for personal car use has been halted.

"We need to finish an entire review before we make decisons (on the overall budget), Lynaugh said.

"In the meantime, we're attempting to enforce the governor's order," he said. "We'll do the best we can. But we will not impair TDC in regards to court commitment and health and safety."

On other items, board member James Parsons said discussions are still under way with local officials in Huntsville for administration of the annual prison rodeo. The corrections department wants to get out of the business of staging the rodeo, but will do so once more in October.

TDC Deputy Director James Riley said the system's violence problem continues to decline, with incidents this year down 63 percent from the same period a year ago. The last prison homicide occurred in September.

"We're certainly encouraged by these long-term trends," Riley said.

Two inmates scheduled for execution ask for stays

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A Texas Death Row inmate, known as "Animal," who demanded an execution date and auctioned off seats to view his death changed his mind and asked for a stay of execution because of his family, his lawyer said.

Roger DeGarmo, a 31-year-old drifter from California, had asked that no efforts be made on his behalf to stop his execution by injection, set for early Wednesday.

But after visiting with relatives, DeGarmo decided Saturday night to seek a reprieve, the inmate's attorney, Greg Gladden, said Monday.

The inmate, known as "Animal," gained notoriety for his unique plan to auction off three of the five witness spots a convict is allowed in the death chamber.

Bass

He said seven people bid for the seats — two of them offering $1,500 each — but he refused to identify the bidders. The money would be divided between DeGarmo's family and the family of the victim.

"The death penalty has become such a zoo — why not make money off it? Everybody else does," he said in a recent interview.

He also promised to provide play-by-play commentary for those watching him being put to death.

A request for a stay was filed Monday with State District Judge Charles Dickerson in Richmond and with the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin.

"It's a gift to his family," Gladden said. "He still believes it will cause him more pain and sacrifice and punishment worse than death. But he was willing to go along with the program for them. He apologized for the inconvenience in the timing."

DeGarmo, one of 225 men on Texas' death row, was sentenced to death for the 1979 abduction and slaying of Kimberly Ann Strickler, a Houston hematologist.

Another Texas death row inmate scheduled for execution early Wednesday was denied a stay.

In Houston, U.S. District Judge John Singleton refused to block the execution of Charles Bass, who also is scheduled to be put to death early Wednesday.

Bass, 29, was convicted in the 1979 slaying of a Houston City Marshal Charles Henry Baker.

His attorneys allege that Bass received inadequate counsel because his trial lawyer was being paid by a French movie producer. They have appealed to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Gonzalez coffers tally most re-election funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — All of Texas' 26 congressional incumbents seeking re-election have cash in their campaign coffers, ranging from $191 for Democrat Henry B. Gonzalez of San Antonio to $455,502 for Dallas Republican Steve Bartlett.

The state's 27th member of Congress, Republican Tom Loeffler of Hunt, is resigning to run for governor. Six Republicans and four Democrats are seeking to replace him.

Gonzalez and Bartlett are unopposed this year.

The second-highest balance, according to campaign finance reports for 1985 filed with the Federal Election Commission, belonged to J.J. "Jake" Pickle, D-Austin.

Pickle, who has been in Congress for 23 years, reported cash-on-hand of $344,604 as of Dec. 31, 1985, but reported raising only $175 of it during the previous year.

Pickle has drawn three opponents, including former Democratic Austin Mayor Carole McClellan Rylander, who switched to the GOP to run against him.

Another Democrat facing a Republican challenge, John Bryant of Dallas, was third, reporting $334,052, with $150,000 coming from loans. Republicans are hoping to pick up Bryant's East Dallas district, which includes growing suburbs and increasing numbers of GOP voters.

Marvin Leath, an unopposed Democrat from Marlin, listed a balance of $333,302.

None of the incumbents reported campaign debts, including Texas' newest member, Jim Chapman of Sulphur Springs. Chapman, a Democrat, won a special election last year when Sam B. Hall Jr. left to become a federal judge.

Chapman, who has no opposition this year, reported cash-on-hand of $16,955.

Special-interest contributors gave the most money of the Texas delegation to Dallas Democrat Martin Frost, who serves on two powerful House committees, Rules and Budget.

Frost reported receiving $147,350 from political action committees in 1985, the bulk of it, $102,225, during the second half of the year.

In second place in PAC contributions was freshman Republican Mac Sweeney of Wharton, who defeated Democrat Bill Patman in 1984.

Caprock Petroleum Lab offers quality analyses, competitive rates

Caprock Petroleum Laboratory, located at 3312 Bankhead Highway, is an analytical laboratory which specializes in the compositional analyses of hydrocarbons and produced waters.

With oil prices the lowest they've been in years, many companies are tightening their belts. Caprock Petroleum Laboratory will help them do just that without sacrificing quality or service.

Owner and operator James L. Pritchard explained that his company has very low overhead costs, and he is confident that his company can offer top quality service at very competitive prices. This is the kind of efficient service he knows his clients need, especially during hard times like the oilfield is facing, now.

Pritchard said even though he is offering exceptionally competitive prices and discounts for volume and contract work, he will not sacrifice service or take short cuts that lessen the value of the analysis.

Caprock is prepared to offer gas chromatography services including natural gas analysis and natural gas liquids analysis. Field determinations of hydrogen sulfide, hydrogen sulfide and mercaptans, carbon dioxide and total acid gas can also be made by Caprock. In addition, Pritchard said he offers basic compositional analysis of oil products, corrosion tests, and water and waste water analysis.

Whatever test is needed, Caprock offers a fast response time. Moreover, Pritchard says the first 100 miles and first two hours sampling time are free.

Caprock Petroleum Laboratory uses the most recent analytical procedures (all procedures are industry approved GPA, API or ASTM standard methods) and state of the art analytical instruments. By using the latest analytical equipment with computerized data systems (Nelson Analytical interface and software with an IBM PCXT), response time is greatly reduced while data acquisition is enhanced.

"Anytime a sample comes in one day, the analysis is ready the next day," Pritchard said.

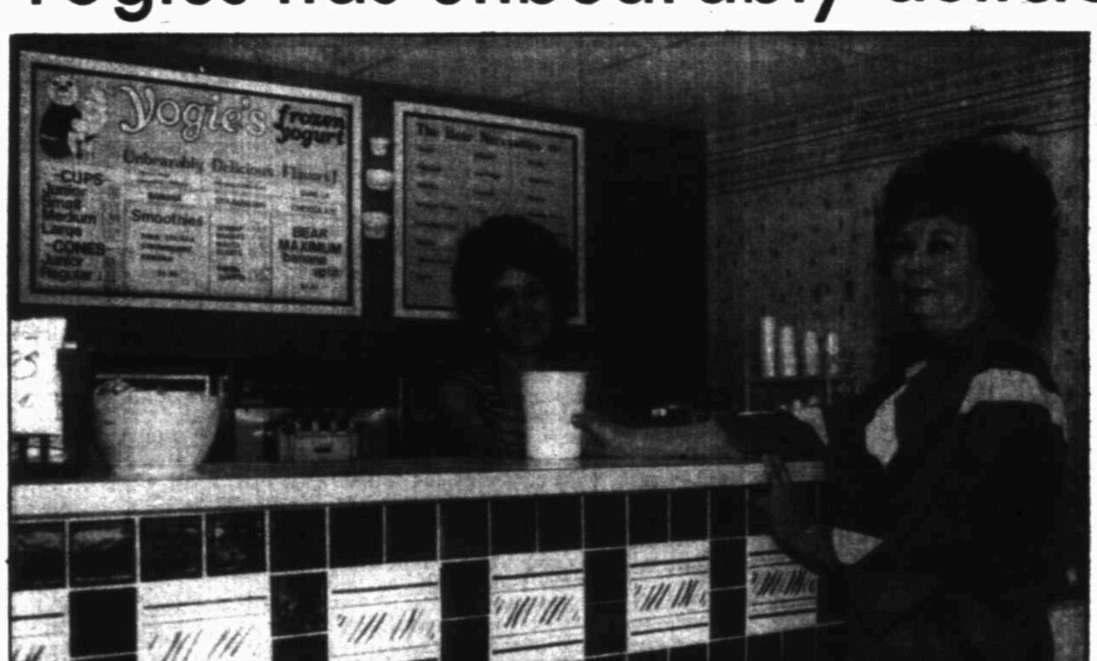

Pritchard is a graduate of the University of Oklahoma, where he obtained a B.S. degree in Chemistry and has more than seven years experience with petroleum analytical laboratories. During this period he has developed new methods for analyzing gas liberated from core samples and designed several new specialized core analysis instruments. He has served as a consultant for establishing new laboratories in Aberdeen, Scotland; Cairo, Egypt; as well as domestic laboratories in Midland, Texas. All analyses are conducted in the close supervision of Pritchard.

Call 689-7252, Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. or the 24-hour number 563-5528. You will find that Caprock's rates are very competitive and the quality is superior.

James Pritchard, owner and operator of Caprock Petroleum Laboratory, has over seven years experience with petroleum analytical labs and is commited to offering quality analyses at competitive prices. Call 563-5528 or 689-7252 for a competitive bid.

Yogies has unbearably delicious sandwiches and yogurt

Linda Gay, owner of Yogie's Frozen Yogurt, serves up delicious yogurt for a regular customer. This week, try some yogurt and a delicious sandwich at Yogies, 2100 N. "A" Street.

As you turn your calendar to the warmer months of the year, Yogie's Frozen Yogurt and Sandwich Shop, located at 2100 N. "A" Street, is the place to head.

Yogie's has long been a famous for tasty yogurt with delicious toppings, but that's not all the wonderful things you'll find at this brightly-decorated, family-oriented shop.

Yogie's has big fresh sandwiches that will make your mouth water. Tuna salad, chicken salad, ham and cheese, and pastrami and cheese are all available to eat in or carry out, so just pick your favorite for lunch or dinner. You also have a choice of white bread or wheat bread.

Of course, they have chips, as well as Coke Classic, Diet Coke, Dr. Pepper, coffee and hot chocolate to go with their sandwiches.

Owner Linda Gay also says they have Black Gap Stew, as well as Beef Stew. The popular Black Gap Stew is made according to the recipe of one of Yogie's customers. With chilis and jalepenos, this spicy stew will warm you up during the winter months. This is also available in carry out containers.

Whatever you choose to feast on at Yogie's — a fresh sandwich or tasty stew — you'll want to top it off with a cup or cone of Yogie's Frozen Yogurt.

They always keep one sugar free yogurt along with five other unbearable delicious flavors. The all time favorites - chocolate, vanilla and strawberry - are always available at Yogie's. The other two flavors are changed regularly. You can really enjoy the frozen yogurt when you realize it has 40 percent fewer calories than ice cream.

To go along with your yogurt, Yogies has over 25 toppings, which they call "the bear necessities." Chocolate chip cookie topping is one of their newest. Caramel, hot fudge, M&Ms, honey, crushed cherries, butterscotch and chocolate chips, crushed Butterfinger and Oreo cookies are just a small sampling of Yogie's toppings.

You can even get Yogie's deilicious yogurt by the pint or quart.

Floats, malts, sundaes, shakes, smoothies and splits, otherwise known as "The Bear Maximum," are also great ways to enjoy yogurt in the friendly atmosphere of Yogie's.

For your enjoyment Yogie's is open Monday through Thursday, 11 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Friday 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday, noon to 10 p.m.

Senior citizens enjoy a 10 percent discount on sandwiches and stew at Yogie's.

"When people come in here we want to be real hospitable. The way we treat our customers is part of the reason they keep coming back," says Owner Linda Gay. She quickly adds that their good food and unbearably delicious yogurt also draw customers back again and again. This week try a fresh sandwich or bowl of stew at Yogie's, and you'll see — Linda's right.

Upjohn HealthCare Services makes the happy event even happier

America is in the middle of a new baby boom. Consider these facts; Since 1979, the annual birthrate in the United States has risen by nearly half a million, from 3.15 million to 3.6 million. In any one company, deliveries may account for one-fourth or more of all employee hospitilizations. And the financial figures are even more staggering: Maternity care now accounts for about 14 million days of care at an annual cost of nearly $14 billion.

Mothers and babies deserve the best. Yet across the nation, the health care system is being challenged to hold costs down while providing the right types of care, in the right amount, in the right place. Out of this need, a special program from Upjohn HealthCare Services called GentleCare has been created. GentleCare is designed to accommodate shorter stays in the hospital and provide the highest level of professional and personal care for mother and her newborn baby.

Friends and family sent flowers and congratulatory cards. The proud father may have celebrated by handing out cigars. But now mother is coming home with her bundle of joy. And she could use a bundle of help. Happily, help is readily available from a group of baby-loving professionals whose specialty is providing home care for mother and newborn.

GentleCare offers a helping hand for a mother adjusting to an exciting yet demanding experience. There are feeding, diapering and nurturing needs. There are concerns about baby's well-being; long days and nights that seem even longer. Grandma may be thousands of miles away. And early release from the hospital may also mean a new mother needs additional instruction regarding necessary activities during those crucial first few weeks, such as breast-feeding, breast care and suitable exercise and personal hygiene to aid recovery.

Upjohn's employees are caring people who have special traits in common their love for babies and their training in providing much-needed and welcomed mother and newborn care. Their basic responsibility is to ease the mother's transition from hospital to home. They will do as much or as little as the mother requests:

- Bathing baby
- Dressing baby
- Changing diapers
- Running errands
- Planning meals
- Shopping for food
- Preparing meals
- Vacuuming and light dusting
- Laundry

With this service, mother and family will experience less anxiety knowing help is being provided.

Upjohn's GentleCare staff attends to the physical and emotional needs of mother, baby and family. And Upjohn HealthCare Services anticipates special needs, too. If problems arise that require special expertise, the nursing staff is available.

Each Upjohn HealthCare Services employee is carefully selected, thoroughly screened, and bonded and insured. Each employee receives special training in maternal/infant care before being assigned to a family.

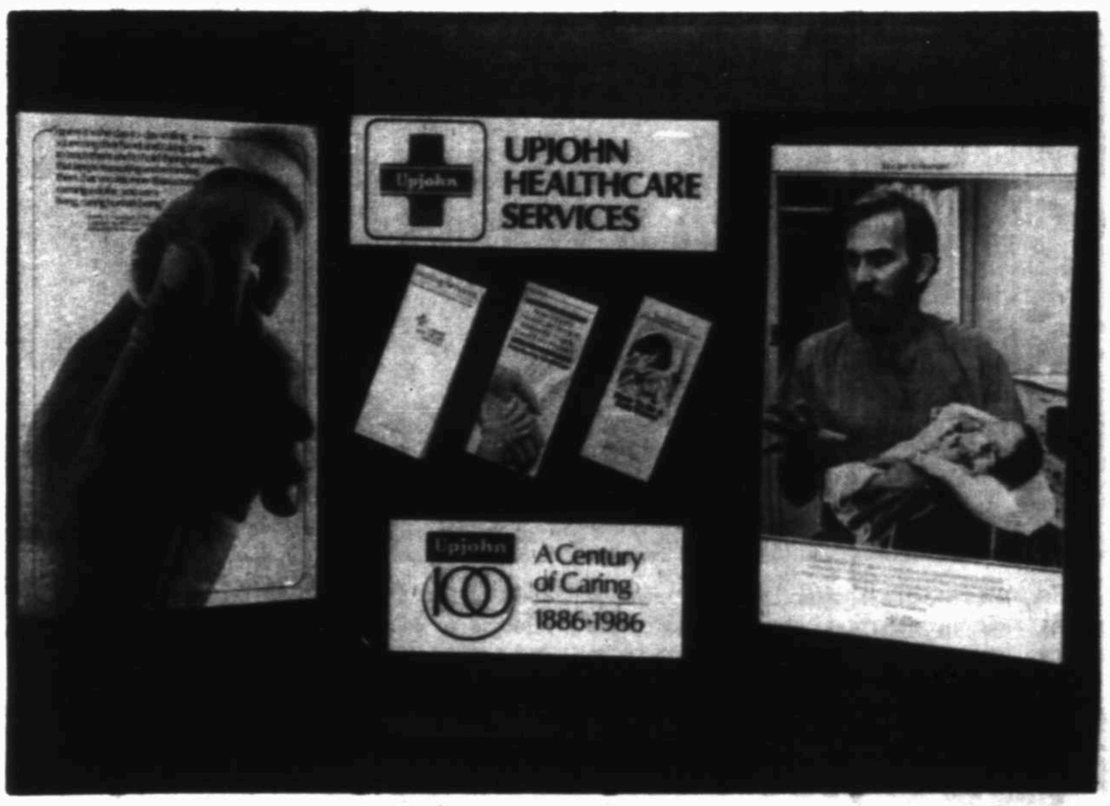

Give a new mother a gift — a helping hand when she needs it most.

Think how much the new mother would appreciate a gift of GentleCare. For example, a couple of uninterrupted nights sleep during the first week at home would make her day with baby much more enjoyable; two or three hours in the morning or evening would give Mother and Father time alone to enjoy with the baby or Mother a chance to nap or have some precious time to herself or for the other children.

As a thoughtful present, GentleCare gift certificates can be purchased by friends or family members. They're the perfect way to say "welcome home."

Gentle Care is easy to arrange.

Upjohn is proud to add the GentleCare program to the array of other nursing services they offer. Whether you are planning for service now or are planning for the future, the staff will assist you in developing a program that best suits your needs. Mary Clack and Mitchie Patrick look forward to helping you make the happy event even happier. Simply call their office at 687-0508 or 561-8420.

Upjohn's new GentleCare program lets you give a new mother a much appreciated gift — a helping hand when she needs it most. It's easy to arrange just call 687-0508 or 561-8420.

Sewing Machine Supply will display Viking 950 at Home Show

Sewing Machine Supply in the Village Shopping Center is always ready to show their customers the latest and most innovative sewing machines on the market. Next week they will be going out of their way to do just that at the Home and Garden Show at Chaparral Center, March 14, 15 and 16.

They will be giving away some prizes, including a Tiny Tailor, and will display their New Home, Singer and Husqvarna Viking machines.

Owner Catherine Claggett is especially excited about the new Husqvarna model 950 which should be in stock in time for the show.

Traditionally, programmable stitches, memory buttonhole and cross-stitch have been available only on top-of-the-line computerized sewing machines. Not anymore. Now it's possible to have these and other features on a European-made, computerized machine at a middle-of-the-road price at Sewing Machine Supply.

Husqvarna recently introduced this mode at a suggest retail price of around one-thousand dollars ($1099), but Sewing Machine Supply is offering it at a introductory price of just $830.

Model 950, a contemporary-looking white machine, can be programmed to sew as many as 25 stitches in sequence for creative sewing. In addition, it has an exclusive tapered satin stitch for monogramming, applique and decorative stitching. Model 950 has 28-plus built-in stitches for sewing everything from silk to leather. There's even a cross-stitch for embroidery that used to take hours to do by hand.

The Husqvarna Viking model 950 has a memory buttonhole feature for sewing same-size button hoes at the touch of a button. As well, the machine can be programmed to sew buttons on, taking the same number of stitches for each set of holes.

The 950's computer also controls speed and needle penetration, speed and it selects the proper stitch length and width for a particular stitch.

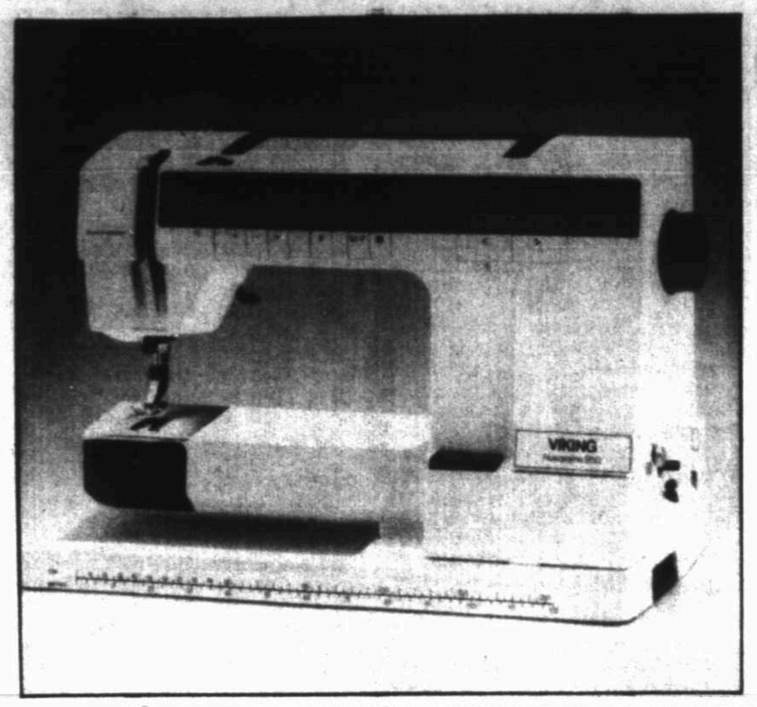

Other features include an information panel that indicates the correct presser foot after push-button stitch selection is made, jam-proof bobbin, permanent lubrication, two built-in sewing lights, snap-on presser feet, 13 needle positions, automatic-bobbin-winder shut-off and an accessory storage unit that fits around the free-arm for accessibility to a variety of presser feet and notions.

This is only one of the fine machines Sewing Machine Supply will have at the Home and Garden Show next week. If you've been interested in what new things are available in machine, go by their booth next week.

You'll get to see the Singer 6268 which offers you letters (monogramming up to 2¼" high) and unending designs. It's amazing what can be done on a computer sewing machine.

Alligators, butterflies and elongated stitches are available on Sewing Machine Supply's Memory Craft 6000.

The Viking 990, with six programmable buttonholes, sewing guide and many satin elements to do large monograms, is also very popular.

See the new Husqvarna Viking model 950 at the Sewing Machine Supply's booth at the Home and Garden Show in Chaparral Center, March 14, 15, 16. This machine offers top-of-the-line features including programmable buttonholes, European quality and a mid-line price.

Dollar falls

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar fell against all major currencies except the Italian lire in early European trading today. Gold prices were mixed.

Dealers said foreign exchange markets were quiet and no major developments were expected.

The dollar rose Monday in busy trading as dealers and investors traded the American currency in a bout of profit-taking.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose today, closing at 180.02 Japanese yen compared with Monday's 179.60. Later, in London, it was quoted at 180.175 yen.

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.4462, more expensive than the $1.4425 level late Monday.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

—2.274 West German marks, down from 2.2785

—1.92975 Swiss francs, down from 1.9332

Bullion dealers said their markets also were quiet and waiting to see if the dollar would continue declining.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $341.30 a troy ounce, down from late Monday's $342. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $341.65.

In Zurich, gold was selling at a bid price of $341.80 at noon, up from$340 late Monday.

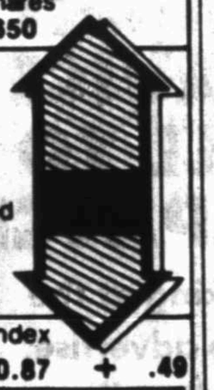

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.93 to close at a bid $340.98, down from Monday's $342.34.

In New York Monday, gold closed at $341.75, down from $343.90 on Friday.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid $5.61 a troy ounce, up from $5.555 late Monday.

Oil price drop threatens stripper well production

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The collapse of oil prices has triggered an economic chain reaction in the nation's oil fields, causing a sharp decline in drilling and threatening a permanent loss of production from thousands of low-volume "stripper" wells.

If it continues, the decline in exploration and production will make the United States as vunerable to oil embargoes and escalating oil prices in the 1990s as it did in the 1970s, experts predict.

The "strategic flooding" of oil markets by Saudi Arabia since Labor Day — the cause of the fall in oil prices — is intended to restore the Saudis' economic and political leverage over world oil, these experts say.

How the Saudis might use that renewed market power is one of the critical imponderables of the new era of falling oil prices.

The sharp fall in drilling activity already is apparent, documented by the decline in active drilling rigs. The "rig count," a closely watched guide to oil-exploration activity, is less than one-third the level of 1981, the peak year.

"It's approaching the all-time low since the 1950s," when nationwide rig counts first were made, said Charles J. DiBona, president of the American Petroleum Institute.

"We were just keeping production constant, using 4,600 rotary rigs," the level in 1981, DiBona said. The rig count is below 1,300 and still dropping. And even at current drilling levels, future U.S. oil production clearly will be curtailed, he said.

"You won't see it immediately. The wells you dig this year produce oil next year. We won't fall off the cliff this year, but when we do, we'll fall precipitously," he said.

A second blow to U.S. oil production comes from the closing of so-called "stripper" wells, which produce 10 or fewer barrels of oil a day.

The nation's 452,000 stripper wells account for about 12 to 14 percent of U.S. production. But a deep, sustained drop in oil prices would make tens of thousands of these wells uneconomical to operate.

In 1984 about 15,000 stripper wells were abandoned, twice the number in 1980, and 1985 will show another dramatic decline, predicted S. Fred Singer, George Mason University professor and a senior fellow at The Heritage Foundation.

Once stripper wells are shut in, the loss will be permanent in many cases. Because stripper wells pump water in addition to oil, they must be plugged with concrete once oil production is stopped.

Oil prices would have to rise to about $50 a barrel to make it profitable to redrill and reopen a "plugged" stripper well, Singer said.

Since the increased volumes of Saudi oil began arriving in U.S. and European markets last November, oil prices have dropped by about 50 percent on spot and commodity markets.

The spot price of oil has fallen below $13 a barrel, and contract prices paid by most U.S. refiners are about $20 a barrel.

Phillips Petroleum Co. recently announced that it would shut its stripper wells that produce two or fewer barrels a day at the point when they require maintenance or other significant investment.

How many other producers will follow Phillips' decision cannot be determined. If prices settle at $15 a barrel or less, perhaps one-third of stripper oil production would be lost over the next year, according to a rough estimate by the federal Energy Information Administration.

William Skinner, technical assistant to the EIA administrator, said that EIA — as well as most other experts — still doesn't believe that the $15-a-barrel case is likely.

But Singer believes that the slide already has gone too far, and should be countered with a variable oil import fee designed to stabilize prices at about $22 a barrel.

"Saudi price manipulation can permanently damage the oil-producing potential of the United States," he said in recent testimony to the Senate Finance Committee, which is considering legislation that would set such a fee, equal to the difference between the world price and $22 a barrel.

Below $20, other production, including oil from expensive California wells, also becomes uneconomic. At $12 a barrel, Alaskan oil will stop flowing, Singer predicts. This would be easier to start up again than is the case with stripper wells, but there still would be a huge cost.

Within the industry, there is considerable disagreement about how fast existing production would be curtailed as prices fall.

For instance, Texaco Inc. Chairman John McKinley told reporters in London last week that the impact of lower prices on existing North Sea production won't be dramatic. "In the North Sea, people will produce their oil as long as the cost of lifting the oil allows a positive cash flow," he said.

And on that basis, production would continue in most cases even if oil prices dropped to $5 a barrel, according to some estimates.

Area Mobil stations to be thing of the past

From Staff Reports

Area motorists will have one less brand of gasoline to choose from by the end of March, as Mobil Oil service stations pull out of West Texas, Arkansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and southern Nevada by March 31.

According to C.R. Morrison, owner of Morrison Oil Co. and distributor of Mobil products, he will be switching to another brand, possibly next week. He declined to name the brand until after the contract is completed later this week.

Morrison owns Mobil stations in Midland and Andrews and services some convenience stores that carry Mobil gas. He said they will switch to the new brand sometime before the end of March.

Mobil credit card carriers will have to use Visa or Mastercard or the card from the new brand once the change is made, according to Morrison.

Economist predicts some benefit from oil price drop

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Industries related to high tech and service should help partly offset the effects of falling oil prices on the state's economy, a state economist said Monday.

Texas officials have predicted a loss of 25,000 jobs for every $1 per barrel price drop for oil, but Thomas Plaut, senior economist with the state comptroller's revenue estimation division, said that formula takes into account only the slump's negative effect on the state's economy.

With gains in the other industries, only 13,500 jobs should be lost for every dollar decrease, he said.

"The positive effects of lower oil prices are indeed significant, but are not enough to offset the negative effects," he told publishers at the Texas Daily Newspaper Association's annual meeting at the Las Colinas development.

"The Texas economy is a net loser (from falling oil prices) because Texas remains a net energy exporter," said Plaut.

Still, transportation, retail, medical services, public utilities, real estate and the hotel and restaurant businesses, which have "grown tremendously," are providing about 90 percent of the state's new jobs, he said.

With jobs available in both the service and high tech sectors, job losses from the current oil downturn will be much smaller than those experienced in 1982, he said.

But Plaut predicted the state's unemployment rate will hover for two to three years around 7 percent to 7.5 percent, which is above the national level.

The mining industry has been the most adversely affected with 7,900 jobs lost for every $1-per-barrel decline, Plaut said, and losses also will be experienced in construction, banking and insurance.

He said 6,300 state government jobs will be lost for every $1 decrease, along with 1,350 jobs related to oil drilling.

But Texas' losses are the nation's gains, Plaut said.

"Lower oil prices are good for the U.S.," he said. "They're good for energy consumers and I think we're going to have a stronger U.S. economy and a stronger world economy."

To survive the downturn, state officials will have to make spending cuts. But with money already committed to education and the state's highways — and with the state under court order to improve its mental hospitals and its prisons — "most additional money is going to need to come from the revenue side," Plaut said.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

TWA, attendants agree to resume bargaining

WASHINGTON (AP) — Trans World Airlines and union representatives for 6,000 flight attendants who struck last week have agreed to resume bargaining on Wednesday.

A spokeswoman for the National Mediation Board said Monday that both sides agreed to meet at 10 a.m. Wednesday in Philadelphia for the first time since the attendants walked off their jobs shortly after midnight Thursday.

The strike over pay and work rule concessions sought by the financially troubled carrier has idled close to half of its normally scheduled 612 flights daily for the past four days.

White Consolidated accepts buyout offer

CLEVELAND (AP) — The board of directors for White Consolidated Industries Inc. has accepted the second takeover offer in a week by Sweden's AB Electrolux, which raised its bid to $742 million from $711 million.

A statement released by the company on Monday said the board unanimously would recommend that shareholders accept the $47-a-share offer by Electrolux, Europe's leading appliance maker, for the 15.8 million outstanding shares of White's common stock.

Under the agreement, White will become a wholly owned subsidiary of AB Electrolux.

GM to temporarily lay off 11,700 workers

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. says it plans to temporarily lay off 11,700 autoworkers because of slow sales of several car lines, despite buying incentives such as cut-rate financing.

The move announced on Monday wasn't unexpected, because for several months GM has been building cars in much greater quantities than its dealers can sell them.

Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. said they have no current plans to lay off workers to adjust inventories.

GM dealers have more than 1 million cars on hand or an average 78-day supply compared with the desired 60-day supply, according to the trade journal Automotive News.

Agricultural exports hurt by sluggish demand

WASHINGTON (AP) — While prospects for U.S. grain and cotton exports have suffered another blow, soybean shipments have improved because of heavy buying by the Soviet Union, according to the Agriculture Department.

The government said that overall U.S. exports this season were hurt by sluggish world demand, increased production in some importing countries, large supplies in exporting countries and anticipated lower U.S. crop prices next season.

General Electric, electricians resume talks

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — General Electric Co. has resumed talks with striking electricians after a weekend break that workers said was forced by the company.

The union for the 7,400 workers on strike at three Massachusetts plants said that the company had broken off talks Saturday and refused to bargain before Monday's resumption.

The walkout began more than two weeks ago at the Lynn aircraft engine plant over the suspension of a union steward following an argument with a foreman, and spread to other plants.

Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel reports net loss

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. has reported a sharp increase in its fourth quarter and annual net losses during 1985.

The steel company, the nation's seventh-largest, reported a net loss of $94.1 million in the fourth quarter, up from a loss of $49.8 million in the same period a year earlier.

For the entire year, Wheeling-Pittsburgh had a net loss of $303 million, up from $59.4 million in 1984.

The company last year filed for protection from creditors under federal bankrupcty laws and suffered a 98-day strike.

Volkswagen, union reach tentative agreement

DETROIT (AP) — Union workers at Volkswagen of America Inc. plants in Pennsylvania and West Virginia on Sunday ratified new contracts hours before their old pacts were to expire, the company said.

The agreements, covering about 2,200 workers in New Stanton, Pa., and 730 workers in South Charleston, W.Va., replace contracts that were to expire at midnight Sunday.

THREATENS

Decisions about shutting in production are based on current prices, said Bruce C. Netschert, vice president of National Economic Research Associates Inc. But decisions on whether — and how much — to explore for oil and gas are based both on cash flow and on expectations of future prices.

As the decline has continued, oil companies have been reducing their exploration budgets.

Atlantic Richfield Co. cut its budget for exploration and production in half, from nearly $3 billion in 1985 to $1.4 billion this year, the sharpest reduction analysts can remember.

Texaco and Amoco have announced 10 percent reductions in their capital spending, most of which goes for exploration and production. Standard Oil Co. says its exploration budget will be cut by 25 to 30 percent this year.

Exxon Corp., which based its $10 billion budget for capital and exploration expenditures for this year on an assumption of $27-a-barrel oil, still is studying its next move, a spokesman said.

The impact has spread to companies that service the oil drillers. Lone Star Steel, a leading supplier of oil-drilling equipment, last month announced layoffs of 10 to 15 percent of its work force because of the decline in drilling.

"I think you're having the mirror image-the opposite reaction-to what happened in 1981. Then, everybody was rushing to drill," said Kenneth S. Miller of Shearson Lehman Brothers.

The Energy Information Administration recently tried to estimate what would happen if average oil prices remained essentially unchanged from 1985 through 1995, before accounting for inflation.

In its scenario, the United States would need to import 10 million barrels a day, or 56 percent of the 17.7 million barrels of oil consumed in 1995.

By contrast, imports accounted for only 27 percent of crude oil demand last year.

Such a sharp rise in import levels once again would make the United States critically dependent upon foreign oil supplies, as it was in 1977 to 1978, when imports supplied more than 45 percent of U.S. demand.

DiBona and API estimate that if prices stabilized at $15 a barrel and stayed there, it would take three or four years before the drop in U.S. production and the corresponding growth of imports from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries put the cartel back in the dominant position it occupied in the mid-1970s.

Under that scenario, "Sometime between three and six years, we'd be back in the soup," DiBona said.

Higher prices, of course would delay or minimize that dependency. "If the oil stays at $22 a barrel, many of the larger, more secure companies will restore their exploration and production budgets later this year. That would keep the Saudis from becoming the swing producer," Miller said.

But that is not the Saudis' intention, he assumes.

Singer, too, is worried about the possibility of a permanent loss of U.S. production capacity if a large percentage of the stripper wells are plugged. And "whether the Saudis intended it or not," he believes that is the ultimate effect of their present strategy.

The important policy objective for the United States is to take steps to preserve that capacity, and to achieve price stability, he argues.

Singer believes that the "optimum" world price for oil eventually will revert to about $20 to $22 a barrel, as the Saudi squeeze on its OPEC partners and other producers forces them to curtail their production.

Most of the producing nations will be forced to go along with the Saudis, with the possible exception of Britain, he said. Singer predicts that almost every country soon will have a variable oil import fee to protect itself against volatile price movements.

But by that time, most of the U.S. stripper wells will have been abandoned prematurely, Singer fears. World oil prices will be back up in the $20s, but the stripper wells won't be reopened.

"This is an undeclared war," Singer said. He believes that the International Trade Commission should define the Saudis' "predatory selling" as a new form of "dumping," to which the United States could respond with a countervailing tariff that would bring the price up to $22 a barrel.

Alternatively, Congress could legislate an oil import fee or the administration could impose one based on the presidential authority to protect the national security under the 1962 Trade Act, he says.

Singer would use any money picked up from the countervailing tariff or variable fee — which he is sure would be a temporary device, fading away as the price resumes a more reasonable level — to buy oil for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

Netschert agrees that OPEC will regain control of world oil markets as a result of declining U.S. and non-OPEC oil production caused by lower prices. But it doesn't alarm him.

"Is this something to be viewed with dread? I think not," Netschert said in testimony before a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee last week.

Supreme Court rules against exploration firm

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled Monday in favor of a family charging a Texas oil company with fraud, closing a case that has been bogged down in the courts for years.

The court, without comment let stand a ruling against Pat Holloway and Humble Exploration Co. in favor of Jane H. Browning, her family and others who were awarded $82 million in damages.

The Brownings sued in 1979 in a state court in Dallas, in effect, seeking control of the company and damages.

Ms. Browning charged that Holloway illegally acquired shares of Humble stock and defrauded her and the others out of their rightful shares in the company.

A jury ruled in the Brownings' favor, but the case has been mired in the courts for years.

Holloway said he was denied a fair trial, accusing the trial judge, Dee Brown Walker, of bias and of being part of a conspiracy against him.

Both state and federal courts rejected Holloway's claims, ruling that evidence of any conspiracy was lacking.

Large number of weak savings and loans threaten federal savings insurance fund

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal fund that insures savings and loan deposits is threatened by increasing numbers of financially troubled thrift institutions, the General Accounting Office says.

The watchdog agency of Congress warned in a report that the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.'s fund could be wiped out if federal regulators were forced to liquidate the 239 financially weakest S&Ls.

The number of technically insolvent S&Ls increased from 455 to 461 between March and June 1985, said the report, "Thrift Industry Problems, Potential Demands on the FSLIC Insurance Fund."

Another 833 institutions had net worths that were less than 3 percent of their assets, the report said.

Just six years ago, there were only 16 technically insolvent S&Ls, according to the report.

The GAO projected that FSLIC's $6 billion fund would have to pay out $11.8 billion if all 239 troubled thrifts had to be sold off or merged with financially stronger institutions under the least favorable terms to the government.

Even though the savings industry projected record profits last year, there were nearly 1,300 federally insured S&Ls "whose financial condition was weak when judged by conventional standards of financial strength," the report said.

"If there were signs that (technically) insolvent thrift institutions were recovering, the level of concern over the condition of the industry and its implications for potential demands on FSLIC's resources probably would not be high," the report said.

"However, the data indicate that through the middle of 1985, many of the (technically) insolvent institutions in the industry continued to experience a deterioration in their financial condition because of losses," the GAO said.

While "there is no reason for the average depositor to be concerned," Rep. Stan Parris, R-Va., said the report "establishes a truly frightening picture for a substantial percentage of the thrift industry."

"Not all, but a signficant portion of the industry is in trouble, and for some, the situation is getting worse every day at an accelerating rate while the regulatory agencies and their insurance programs are inadequate for the task of correcting the problem," Parris, a member of the House Banking Committee who committed the study, told the House.

But Edwin J. Gray, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which regulates federally insured thrifts, said the GAO report "seriously distorts the magnitude of the problem."

"The report also does not acknowledge that numerous techniques exist for replacing the current managers of weak institutions and thereby limiting any growth of the problem," Gray said in a letter attached to the study.

Craig Simmons, GAO's associate director who conducted the study, said he disagreed with the Bank Board's policy of installing new management in weak institutions and lending them additional money.

"The only rationale for that would be they think the institution is going to get better," he said. "Our position is we don't think they are going to get better. The weakest institutions are getting worse, not better in a favorable interest rate environment."

"It is clear they don't have enough money to handle the liquidation or merger and acquisition of the weakest institutions in the industry," Simmons said.

Bank Board spokesman Patrick McKelvey defended the agency's strategy of trying to turn around troubled S&Ls by installing new management and lending them money. McKelvey said 85 percent of the federally insured S&Ls are in good shape.

"The other 15 percent, indeed, until there is a permanent solution, we are trying to put them in the hands of good business people who know how to run a savings and loan."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Signature guarantees may be standardized with 'Signasure' plan

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I "bank" with a savings and loan association. I needed to have my signature on a stock certificate guaranteed. Much to my surprise, my S&L could not do this for me. I had to go to my stock broker. With almost everything else in the banking business being deregulated, why should this be?

Doyle

A. Partly because of tradition; partly because transfer agents naturally want to be protected against fraud. Transfer agents, mostly big banks, cancel stock certificates presented for transfer and issue new certificates in the new owners' names.

As has been the case for many years, all transfer agents now accept signature guarantees from brokerage firm members of the New York Stock Exchange, commercial banks and trust companies.

Those brokerages, banks and trust companies all have filed signature guarantee cards with transfer agents and also provide financial guarantees.

If some Light-Fingered Louie manages to get a signature guarantee on a stolen stock certificate from a brokerage, commercial bank or trust company and succeeds in getting ownership transferred, the transfer agent won't be stuck.

At the present time, there is no such all-encompassing signature and financial guarantee arrangement between transfer agents and other depository institutions — S&Ls, savings banks and credit unions.

However, some transfer agents do accept signature guarantees from S&Ls, savings banks and CUs with which they have working relationships. That falls under the "know your client" rule. And some mutual funds which act as their own transfer agents take signature guarantees from notary publics.

Attempts are being made to bring uniformity to this mixed-up situation through a proposal called "Signasure." If that program ever gets off the ground, S&Ls, savings banks and CUs will be able to participate and provide signature guarantees acceptable to all transfer agents.

The big hang-up with Signasure has been obtaining a blanket fidelity bond to insure all participants against loss.

Q. Sadly, I did not heed your warning about not putting money in a bank or savings and loan association not covered by federal deposit insurance. I obtained a large certificate of deposit at Old Court S&L, Baltimore, for high interest. Because of Old Court's troubles, I can't withdraw my money. Interest was reduced to 5.5 percent last June and cut off in November. Do I have to pay income tax on interest credited to my CD, before the cutoff?

A. Probably not. The Internal Revenue Service has ruled that most depositors who have not been able to withdraw money from Old Court and other closed Maryland S&Ls will be able to defer income tax on 1985 interest credited to their accounts until the 1986 tax year — meaning that interest won't have to be reported until April 15, 1987.

The exceptions to this are people who made withdrawals from the slammed-shut S&Ls in 1985 and whose balances at year-end were less than those 1985 withdrawals. They are required to pay 1985 income tax on the difference.

By this time, you should have received a Form 1099 listing taxable interest — if any. Assuming you made no 1985 withdrawals, you have no 1985 tax liability on interest credited to your Old Court CD.

* * *

Q. I have had an account at one of the closed Maryland S&Ls since 1984 and paid income tax on the 1984 interest. Since I still can't get any of my money, shouldn't I be able to report lost interest as a deduction on my 1985 income tax return?

A. Nope. Eventually, you will get your deposit and the interest that built up on it until the Nov. 8 cutoff. You can't take a tax deduction for "lost interest" since Nov. 8. This is similar to a bond defaulting on interest payments. You can't take a tax-loss there, either.

Home and Garden Show offers over a million dollars in products

The 1986 Spring Fest Home and Garden Show, sponsored by the Midland Reporter-Telegram and KBAT-FM Radio in conjunction with 150 local and national businesses, is set for March 14, 15 and 16 at the Midland Chaparal Center at Midland College.

The show promises to be fulfilling event for homeowners, hobbyists, housewives and handymen - a real family affair. Over one million dollars in home, leisure and garden products will be on display; everything from home improvement to entertainment centers to more exotic items such as security devices and waterbeds will be displayed.

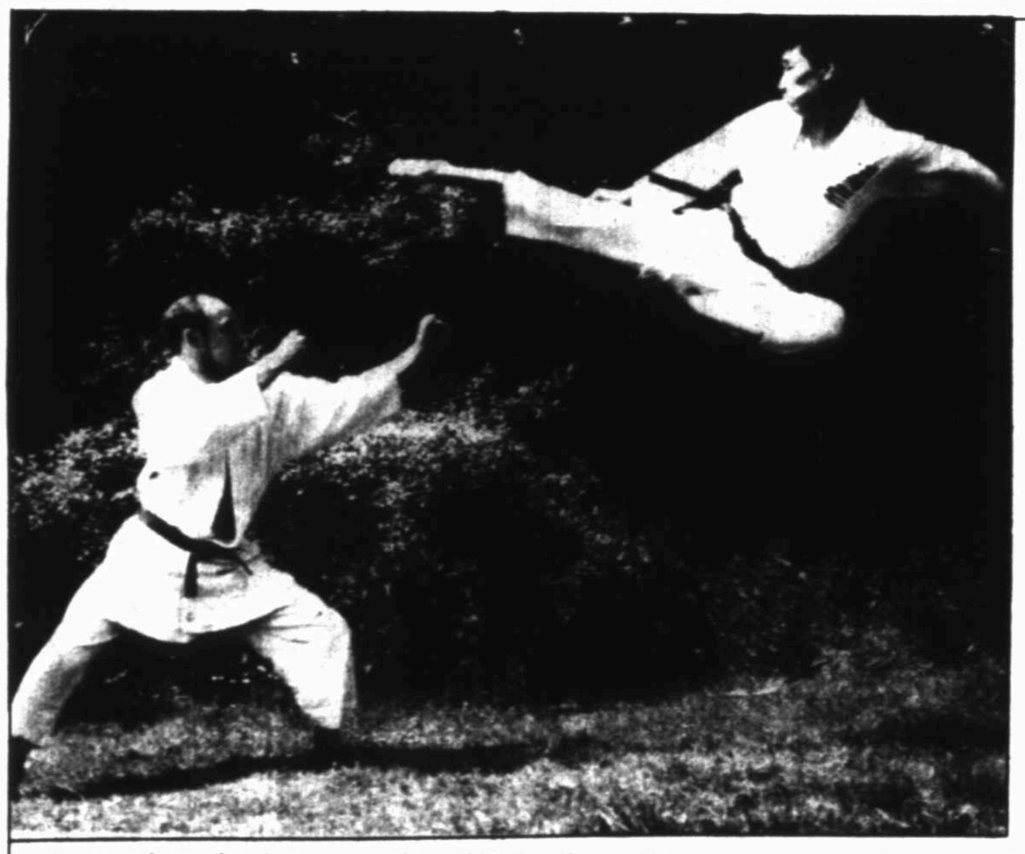

The Home and Garden Show will have a much broader appeal than many of the more specialized shows that come to this area. With entertainment including Stage Show '86 by KQIP-FM and The Spring Fest Fashion Show and Aerobics Demonstration featuring sports wear and swim suits by The Second Skin and the Fitness Conexxion.

During the festivities, appearing will be the Las Vegas sensation, Johnny Jet and The Show Stoppers, presenting a lively show featuring pop and country comedy routines as well as music from the 50's to the 80's. Co-starring with Jet is the outstanding guitarist and comedian, Joe Carr. Visitors can spend hours enjoying the latest products and services presented by over exhibitors during this event. Areas of interest include home furnishings, appliances, swimming pools and spas, home entertainment, recreational vehicles, floor coverings, alarm systems, window and wall coverings, landscaping, garden equipment, porta-buildings and satellite televisions.

Other family entertainment will include live trout fishing throughout each day. A pool stocked with 500 live trout will be manned by a professional group from New Mexico. Poles and bait will be available and everyone is invited to keep what they catch. Certain fish will be tagged for special prizes. A cost of one dollar per person wil be charged. Also, filleted fish will be available for purchase by the pound.

Hourly door prizes will be awarded with over $25,000 in total prizes.

Admission to the show is $2 for adults and $1 for children. Tickets will be available at the door. Discount tickets are available from exhibitor businesses listed in the group roster.

Amazing feats of endurance are planned by the Lee-Tae Kwon-Do-Karate School of Midland.

Proper insulation plus ventilation equals reduced air conditioning costs this summer

Were you one of the many homeowners concerned about the high cost of cooling your home last summer? If you were, there are two things you should be thinking about right now — proper insulation and adequate ventilation.

In the summer, heat can build up in attic spaces to as much as 150 degrees. This super-heated air can eventually penetrate through the ceiling of an underinsulated home warming the living area below. However, by insulating your attic to the appropriate levels for your geographic area you'll reduce the amount of heat penetrating through the floors. Adequate ventilation will then help the remaining super-heated air in your attic to escape to the outside. The result is a home that uses less energy for air conditioning.

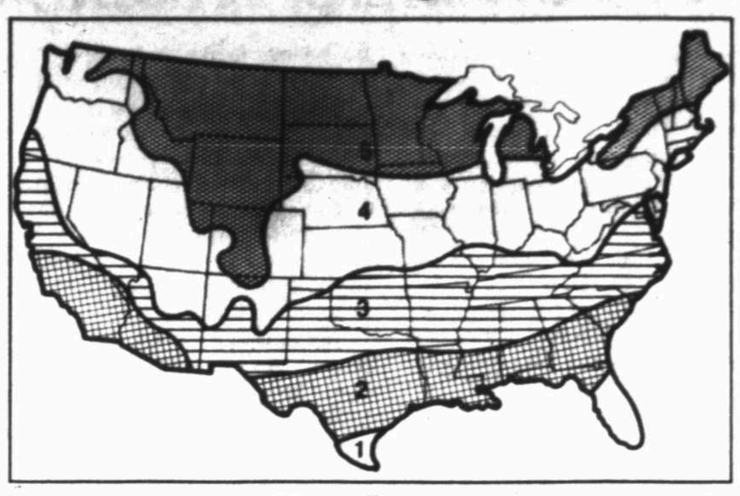

"Exact energy savings are hard to pinpoint because they'll vary by geographic region, but there's no doubt about it, a well insulated and ventilated home will use less energy to air condition and will help reduce energy costs for the homeowner," explains George Hoffmann, vice president of marketing at CertainTeed Corporation.

Upgrade Your Attic Insulation, It's Easy

Interestingly, upgrading the insulation levels in your attic to help lower your air conditioning bills is easy and not particularly time consuming.

Hoffmann illustrates the simplicity of do-it-yourself attic insulation by pointing out that "the average size attic can easily be insulated by a man or woman in a single afternoon."

How do you learn how much attic insulation you should have? The answer is easily determined by the climate of the region in which you live as well as by fuel costs in the area.

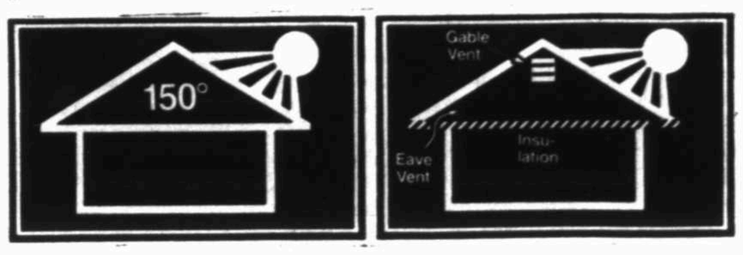

Figure A and B: The home at left has no insulation or ventilation systems. The home at right, however, is properly insulated and well ventilated to substantially reduce air conditioning costs in the summer. In Figure B, air is circulated from eave vents at the attic floor out through a gable vent at the roof. Roof and ridge vents, two additional types of venting not shown, may also be located at the roof of your home.

To determine the recommended optimum levels of insulation for your area, locate the zone (on the map) in which you live. Then use the R-value and corresponding insulation thickness to determine how much insulation your attic should have. The higher the R-value, the greater the insulating power. Remember that savings may vary.

ZONE 1 R-30 (10" insulation thickness)
ZONE 2 R-30 (10" insulation thickness)
ZONE 3 R-30 (10" insulation thickness)
ZONE 4 R-38 (10" insulation thickness)
ZONE 5 R-49 (16" insulation thickness)

The recommended R-values reflect data from the U.S. Department of Energy, HUD/FHA, and state and utility recommendations.

Don't Forget To Ventilate

Ventilation works by allowing hot summer air to escape to the outside enabling your home to breathe and be more comfortable in periods of summer heat. In winter, ventilation helps remove moisture from within the house, so it doesn't condense in the attic.

There are several ways to assure adequate ventilation. One way is through natural or static ventilators, otherwise referred to as vent openings. Most attics have two or more vent openings located so that air can flow in one and out the other.

There are four basic types of attic ventilators: ridge, roof, eave, and gable. To determine your ventilation needs, calculate your home's attic floor space in square feet. As a general rule, for every 150 square feet of attic floor space, one square foot of free ventilation space is needed through which air can move.

It is best that 50 percent of your vents be placed low (as in eave vents) and 50 percent remain high (roof, gable or ridge) to allow proper air distribution. When adding insulation to your attic, it is important that you do not cover these vent openings.

If insulation is being installed for the first time use kraft-faced fiber glass on the first layer. Use unfaced insulation when adding extra layers.

Remodel your kitchen to serve today's demanding lifestyles

Last year Americans spent almost seven billion dollars on kitchen renovations according to the National Association of the Remodeling Industry. Of all the rooms in the house, the kitchen is the one most commonly remodeled. More than ever we look upon the kitchen as the heart of the home — the center of activity.

Reasons for remodeling are many. A modest, but colorful facelift for the kitchen might do the trick. Or you might be considering major changes to accommodate the way you live today. Updating appliances or adding a microwave center might be appealing and sensible. Turning a large space into more functional areas could be your dream — or making better use of a small area.

Only you know what you like about the kitchen you have and what you can't stand another minute. Whatever you do, be sure the renovations suit your personal style so that the result will be a kitchen that makes you happy.

Sound and helpful advice is offered from Tappan Appliances in a new remodeling guide, "Kitchen Ideas for Today." Their kitchen experts advise that before you begin tearing down walls, choosing new appliances, or scraping wallpaper, it is important to first assess your "kitchen-style" and ask yourself the who, what and how regarding your kitchen.

Who Cooks — one person, the entire family, or are Mom and Dad both enthusiastic cooks? Are guests often in the kitchen helping out?

What is the kitchen used for? List all the activities that usually take place in the kitchen. You can bet that cooking won't be the only thing on the list. You might want an area for a desk, a shelf for a television, a reading area with a rocking chair, or a space for your hobby, whether it's displaying collectibles or catching up on your photo collection.

How do you cook? If you're a working woman who bakes casseroles on the weekend and freezes them for later use, you may need a larger freezer. If the family helps with meal preparation, you may want a second cooking center. If children, teens and adults all seem to eat at different times, a microwave oven can be a miraculous help. If you entertain frequently, consider two ovens or a modular cooktop with a grill. As ways of life become more varied, so must our kitchens if they are to serve us properly.

After assessing your kitchen style, list the changes you'd like to make and set a budget. A budget guideline is to confine spending to about 10 percent of the estimated value of the house. However, cost can vary greatly based on your own desire and needs.

To the extent your budget will permit, major kitchen renovation and planning is a job for experts. They know how to make your ideas come to life and guide you along the way. Here's a brief run-down on who's who.

Kitchen Designer — develops complete layout and coordinates the entire job, from color scheme to working with the general contractor or remodeler.

General Contractor or Remodeler — implements a major remodeling job and coordinates innumerable components of the project.

Architect — primarily used for expensive projects ($20,000 and up) or when complex structural changes are required.

There are other experts such as carpenters, electricians, plumbers, appliance servicemen, and painters. Since you invest time, money and effort in a kitchen remodeling, it's crucial to choose reputable, trustworthy workmen.

Whether you choose an architect, remodeling contractor, or designer, your chances of getting the most for your money are greater by following these steps: make sure the professionals you choose have a valid license if one is required in your state . . . check credit ratings . . . double check the quality of work by looking at similar jobs that have been completed.

Windows of all shapes look good with shades

In what shape are your windows — literally — not just the condition of the treatment or of the paint on the sills. Are they round or square, tall and thin or routine and rectangular?

And what if they are odd shaped? Leaving windows bare isn't the answer any more. "Today's rooms are dressed up to fit more formal lifestyles," notes designer Dorothy Collins. "What was once accepted as a sparse and lean look now simply looks unfinished," she adds.

Lush plants can fill a window of any size or shape, but they don't insulate a room from drafts or protect fabrics, rugs, art and fine wood furniture from the sun's damaging rays.

"A fabric shade is a good solution," suggests Ms. Collins. "It can be cut to fit any shape yet is soft, in keeping with today's fashion trends." Take a window covering such as Duette, the new dual pleated fabric shade by Hunter Douglas, featuring a honeycomb construction for added insulation. Custom made and tailored to fit even difficult trapezoid or half moon-shaped windows, it follows a pane's intriguing silhouette and at the same time, provides a delicate decorative element.

"This soft fabric shade will replace many sheer drapery treatments. It will accentuate unusual window shapes highlighting, not hiding, uniqueness," says Ms. Collins. "And because it has no tapes, seams or light-emitting holes, Duette covers the window with a clean, uncluttered look." Ms. Collins, Hunter Douglas' color consultant, created Duette's ten Whispertone pastel colors.

If your windows are conventional, the texture of a dual pleated shade adds sculptural interest. Creative hanging helps too. Mounting shades from the sill upwards is an especially effective technique in baths where privacy is essential and light and a view of the sky a bonus.

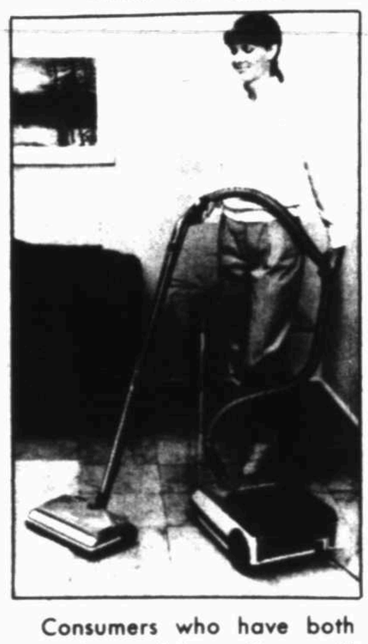

Choosing a side-to-side mount or one that opens from the center of the window outward to the sides, becomes a conversation piece as well as a practical solution to privacy and light control.

So shape up your window wardrobe and enhance its shape whether standard or super size.

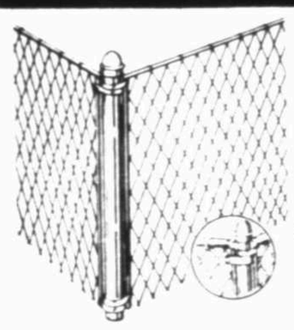

In this kitchen with its wide-beamed floors, the old fashioned touches of a rug and carved oak chair are charmingly combines with the modern joys of today's efficient ktichen - an up-to-date modular cooktop, plenty of durable tile counter-space and beautifully hand crafted cabinets for generous storage space.

Computer matchmaker is a delight

Warm rust-toned ceiling and cool taupe walls are computer matched to colors in rugs to create a lively variation on a neutral color scheme.

For anyone who has ever held a fistful of paint chips and wondered why the sought-after shade is nowhere to be found, the answer is now in the computer. To be precise, the answer to most color matching problems is in the Moore's® Computer Color Matching System available at nearly 300 Benjamin Moore paint stores throughout the country.

"Using a color computer can make the difference between executing a decorating scheme that almost works and one that's outstanding," says Ken Charbonneau, color and merchandising manager for Benjamin Moore Paint. "For example, one of the most popular...and difficult...color schemes to use effectively is the range of beiges and browns. The results can be dull and muddy — or crisp and dramatic — depending on whether you match the painted surfaces in the room exactly to the livelier tones in a printed rug or drapery fabric. In a den with a wood floor and patterned taupe rug, for instance, you can paint the walls the precise taupe shade of the rug and then use a color from the pattern, such as a rich rust, for the ceiling. Color matching unifies the separate elements and gives the room a finished look."

To obtain a perfect color match on your next decorating project, Charbonneau recommends bringing the rug, fabric or wallpaper swatch to a paint dealer with a color computer. The color to be matched will first be read by a spectrophotometer. Then a "prescription" for the paint formula will be printed out in seconds and the paint can be mixed and ready to use in minutes. The system can also be used to match existing painted surfaces. Just provide a quarter-inch paint chip and the new paint will be mixed to match the old. This service is especially useful for touch-ups.

Here are some of the other ways suggested by Charbonneau for using the color matching system to solve decorating problems:

- To expand the visual size of windows covered by slatted mini blinds, paint the window frames the same color as the blinds.
- When trying to match paint to a mini print employing several colors, the eye tends to mix the colors. The computer matching system can also mix these colors to create a blended shade that will harmonize with the print.
- If you're tired of the "all white wicker look" of porch and patio furniture, select a pale, multi-hued pastel fabric for new chair cushions. Utilize the computer to match a single shade in the pattern — a very soft pink, blue, yellow or mauve — and repaint some or all of the wicker in that color.
- To unify an assorted grouping of picture frames that will be hung on a wallpapered surface, pick out the background color of the paper to paint all the frames. Then bring the frames and the wallpaper swatch to a picture framing shop to select new mats for the pictures.
- If the colors in a new poster are especially appealing, select one of the colors to repaint the wall where the poster will hang. This can be a particularly effective way to add interest to a small, all white apartment. †

Energy-saving vinyl-framed windows keep their fresh looks for many years without requiring painting or other bothersome maintenance.

Screen windows save energy

A breath of fresh air should be an invigorating, not exasperating, experience.

Windows that allow drafts to come through are a costly nuisance, not just in the winter months but also in the warmer seasons. The same leaky windows that allow heat to escape in the winter also provide a drain on air conditioning. Mechanical equipment must work harder to maintain a comfortable inside temperature and to compensate for the escaping cool air.

Homeowners with inefficient windows suffer the consequences every time they pay their utility bills.

Storm windows help to reduce air infiltration in the winter, but usually need to be replaced with screens in the summer. A more convenient, attractive solution that will have even greater benefits in the long-run is to replace old, inefficient windows with new energy-efficient units.

Vinyl-framed windows with insulating glass are enormously popular because many of them combine the best features of other window types without the drawbacks. Vinyline brand windows (the windows chosen for the Statue of Liberty restoration project) are excellent insulators, do not need to be painted and resist condensation. They do not corrode, blister or rot either.

Although some vinyl window producers offer limited styles and colors, Vinyline features virtually every type desired — from the traditional casements and double-hung styles to elegant bays and bows. The company also offers a choice of architectural bronze, woodgrain and almond-beige frames — in addition to the classic white.

For a free 16-page color catalog, write to Vinyl Building Products Inc., Box ST, One Raritan Rd., Oakland, NY, 07436.

Get the enhanced look you want in paneling

Whether you want to add a sense of elegance to the living room, create a warm, cozy atmosphere in the kitchen or lend a touch of rustic chic to the family playroom — the right paneling can do the job.

Designing with paneling can be a relatively easy, cost-effective way to obtain the look you want in any room in your home — if you follow a few decorating guidelines.

Experts at Georgia-Pacific, one of the country's largest manufacturers of prefinished wall paneling, offer the following suggestions to help you get started.

- Establish the mood — First, establish the mood you want, then take a close look at the room's scale. The larger the room, the darker the paneling color can be.

As an example, people sometimes use darkwood paneling in a basement recreation room for a "cozy" feeling, but end up with a closed-in effect instead of the light and airy feeling that a lighter color would give.

In addition, a breakfast nook would be better with light paneling, while a den or study could gain a desirable formality from darker paneling. Here, mood rather than scale is the key.

- Consider texture — Texture is important. The tighter the grain structure, the more formal the look. Cherry and walnut are examples of "formal" woods. Distance between a panel's grooves has a similar effect. The larger the room, the wider the planks can be. In a small room, you should use a narrow type.
- Coordinate with other furnishings — If you're going to put a lot of color into paneling, you shouldn't have very bold carpeting. Also, furnishings shouldn't be so close in color to the paneling that there's no contrast. As for fabrics, cooler colors have a better chance of enhancing the colors of the paneling.

How to match wood furniture? People used to be very hesitant to combine various woods: light blond ash with walnut, birch, or oak paneling. However, according to the experts, you can mix woods and bring out the best in both the paneling and the furnishings.

Paneling doesn't have to be used only floor-to-ceiling on every wall of a room. Sometimes, this approach can be too much of a good thing. Here are some decorating options when designing with paneling.

- Use paneling as an accent — Often, paneling is best used as a highlight, rather than as the predominant feature of the room. To get that effect, panel only part of the walls.

Or, you can use a single paneled wall as an accent wall — the wall you see first when you enter the room. You can even panel the ceiling. Often, that alone is enough to create a warm, soft feeling in a room.

- Create extra visual interest — You can create extra visual interest by combining your paneling with mouldings, paint and wallpaper, so that one material accents another. As an example, don't just install paneling; add attractive ceiling and base mouldings.

Combining paneling with wallpaper is easier than ever with Georgia-Pacific's new Paper Works™ Collection of pre-hung wallpaper panels. They come in a range of patterns designed to complement a wide variety of decorating styles and can be installed the same way as wood paneling.

Do-it-yourself wallcoverings are quite simple and economical to install Wallcoverings are an excellent way to turn a house into a home. The striped wallcovering above the chair rail provides visual contrast to the wallcovering pattern below with its companion fabrics in the curtain and tablecloth.

Lots of people have phobias. Some have agoraphobia, a fear of open spaces. Some have claustrophobia, a fear of closed spaces.

Still others have what might be described as decoraphobia, a fear of decorating. They shouldn't, at least not when it comes to wallcoverings, says the Wallcovering Information Bureau, because they allow anyone to decorate a room or an entire home in attractive colors and patterns and in styles ranging from traditional to contemporary.

Up-to-date manufacturing techniques have even made the task of hanging wallcoverings a lot easier — so much so that it's becoming more and more popular as a do-it-yourself project. With pre-trimmed and pre-pasted wallcoverings, for example, hanging them is simplified. Just dip a strip of wallcovering in water to activate the glue on the backing.

Wallcovering retailers are an excellent source for decorating advice. They can advise you on the amount of wallcovering and tools you'll need as well as provide you with information on colors, styles and patterns. These retailers can be found at local decorating centers, home centers, paint and wallpaper stores and department stores.

When choosing wallcoverings, consider the effect that style and pattern will have in the room being decorated. Choose a design and pattern scaled to the size of the room. A large room with a high ceiling should have a large-scale pattern in a bolder design. A small room should have a proportional-scale design and pattern.

For the ultimate in sophistication, consider a wallcovering collection that includes companion fabrics for upholstery, window treatments, bed linens or pillows.

For more information on wallcoverings, including how to hang them, write for a free copy of "The Wallcovering How-To Handbook" to WIB, Dept. HP, 66 Morris Ave., Springfield, N.J. 07081.

Appliance cuts hot water costs

In the spring, farmers sow so they can reap in the fall. Gardeners also plant seeds in the spring so they'll have flowers or vegetables to enjoy later in the year.

Now, homeowners can put down a device that bears fruit the same day it's planted. This device is an appliance known as an "Energy Garden." It can be planted in a four-by-ten foot space anywhere in the yard. It saves an average family of four between 50 and 90 percent of the cost of hot water. Since the cost of energy to heat water in an average home runs between 18 and 35 percent of its total energy costs, these savings can be substantial.

A single "Energy Garden" can insure sufficient energy independence from utilities and lead to even higher energy savings whenever the local utility hikes its rates. The new appliance, manufactured by Exemplar, Inc., of Hickory, N.C., is as easy to install as a dishwasher. It is a self-contained solar collection, energy-storage and transfer system that connects with the drain of the existing water heater.

Capable of generating hot water day or night, the appliance comes with everything pre-packaged and can be installed in two to four hours with ordinary tools. It features a programmable computer and has a voice synthesizer that facilitates the proper settings. Another feature of the Energy Garden is its portability. Just like any other appliance, the homeowner can take it with him when he moves.

Designed to last 15 to 20 years, any homeowner can save thousands of dollars on the cost of hot water with a single Energy Garden appliance. It is maintenance free, durable, economical and reliable and comes with a three-year warranty.

Homeowners can install the south-facing appliance in a single morning or afternoon with ordinary tools. Just follow the instructions. Or, if you prefer, you can have the appliance installed by a professional.

Once the appliance is set up, its voice synthesizer goes through the cycling process step by step.

Will it pay to remodel or should you move?

Dissatisfied with your home... thinking of moving? Before you put up that "For Sale" sign — wait. You may be better off remodeling your home to meet your present needs.

In the 1970's buying and selling — or "trading in" — homes made financial sense. Sales commission, closing costs and moving expenses were easily offset by the home's 12–14 percent annual appreciation. If you lived in your home for 3 years, you could anticipate a healthy 20 percent profit on the sale. Today, interest rates are in the double digits and house appreciation has plummeted to 3–4 percent. Today, just to cover buying and selling costs — with no profit — you have to live in your home for at least three years.

Since it doesn't always pay to move, more and more homeowners are electing to stay in their existing homes and improve them to meet new needs. In fact, rehab projects are becoming recognized more and more as a dependable way to create real estate value in a low inflation economy. Currently, the remodeling market is estimated at nearly $60 billion a year and it's growing annually.

Assessing Remodeling Costs

Naturally, remodeling is not the answer for everyone, especially if you're tired of the maintenance responsibilities of an older home or you want to live in a different neighborhood. In addition, all remodeling projects do not pay.

According to the CertainTeed Home Institute, however, there are three ways to assess the cost of any major remodeling project: 1) The cost of turning the entire job over to a professional; 2) the cost of doing the work yourself, and 3) the cost in terms of inconvenience during remodeling.

As a guide, most professional remodeling projects will cost between $60–100 per square foot. Therefore, prior to remodeling, it pays to assess how much value the project will add to your home's resale value. You can cut remodeling costs in half by doing some — or all of the project yourself, but naturally you will have to expend many of your own hours, and don't forget to plan for the inconvenience of some remodeling projects. A room addition or adding extra insulation may not disrupt daily life too much, but bathroom or kitchen improvements may.

Which Projects Offer Best Payback?

Naturally, if you're going to remodel, you'll want to get the maximum real-capital effect. As a guide, the CertainTeed Home Institute recommends that you (1) keep your project in scale with your neighborhood's real estate norms, (2) invest in types of improvements that will have the most practical, immediate use to the category of households moving into your neighborhood and (3) acquaint yourself with recent material trends in capital paybacks for different types of improvements. Generally, home improvement projects offering the most value to your home are: energy saving upgrades, kitchen modernizations, existing space redesign, and bathroom additions.

Installing energy saving materials such as insulation is easy to do. The time and cost involved is reasonable and almost any home can be upgraded to the energy efficiency of the majority of new homes. Adding insulation such as CertainTeed's fiber glass batts or rolls yourself to an entire house will cost roughly $1,200, but will add approximately $1,000 (83 percent of cost) to its equity financing value in the eyes of a mortgage lender.

If you prefer to hire a contractor to install Insul-Safe III™ a blown-in fiber glass insulation from CertainTeed, with outstanding thermal properties, you'll still add to your home's equity financing value. Caulking, weatherstripping around windows and doors and insulating a water heater and pipes, will also keep your home more comfortable and increase its resale value. Remember, lending institutions are offering breaks to buyers of energy efficient homes. The rationale is that these homeowners will have more income available due to smaller energy bills.

Modernizing a kitchen is one of the smartest projects a homeowner can undertake. For example, a kitchen and dining area can be combined into one large eat-in kitchen. Smaller projects will cost about $4–6000; a complete overhall $10,000 and up — but you'll get an excellent return on your money if you eventually sell. According to a survey in New Shelter magazine, smaller projects will produce resale and mortgage financing returns of 86 percent and 83 percent respectively.

Redesigning existing space into more economical space can be very rewarding while living in a home and very eye-catching to future buyers. Turning a screened-in porch into a den; or a pantry into a home office, can turn once unused space into highly desirable rooms. When adding additions, however, try not to raise the value of your home more than 20 percent over the others in your neighborhood

Get a king size bed to "fit in"

To the average or even less-than-average-size adult, the thought of sleeping in a space no wider than a baby's crib is absurd. But each night, millions of adults do just that.

According to Sealy, Inc., the bedding manufacturer, anyone who shares a double bed with another person has a sleeping space 27 inches wide — exactly the width of a crib mattress.

While sharing a double bed may be fine with some couples, others would gladly trade up to a queen-size bed, which adds 6 inches of sleeping width, or a king size, which adds a whopping 22 inches. But they may think their bedroom is too small.

Sealy asked design consultant Gene Dreyfus, president of the interior merchandising and design firm The Childs-Dreyfus Group, how a small-to-average-size bedroom can be reorganized to accommodate a queen- or king-size bed. Here are his tips:

• Make the room look more spacious by placing the bed against the wall behind you as you enter the room, or on a distant wall. "You shouldn't have to make a military turn to avoid the bed when you walk into the room," says Dreyfus.

• Re-evaluate the way you use closet space. Many closets can hold a dresser as well as clothing on hangers. You can either move your present dresser into the closet or get rid of the dresser and use wall-mounted shelves inside the closet. Either way, you'll gain more wall space in the bedroom.

• The choice of bedspread style and color can make the bed look smaller. Use a fitted bedspread rather than one with a flounce or ruffle, and choose a color that blends rather than contrasts with the floor and wall covering.

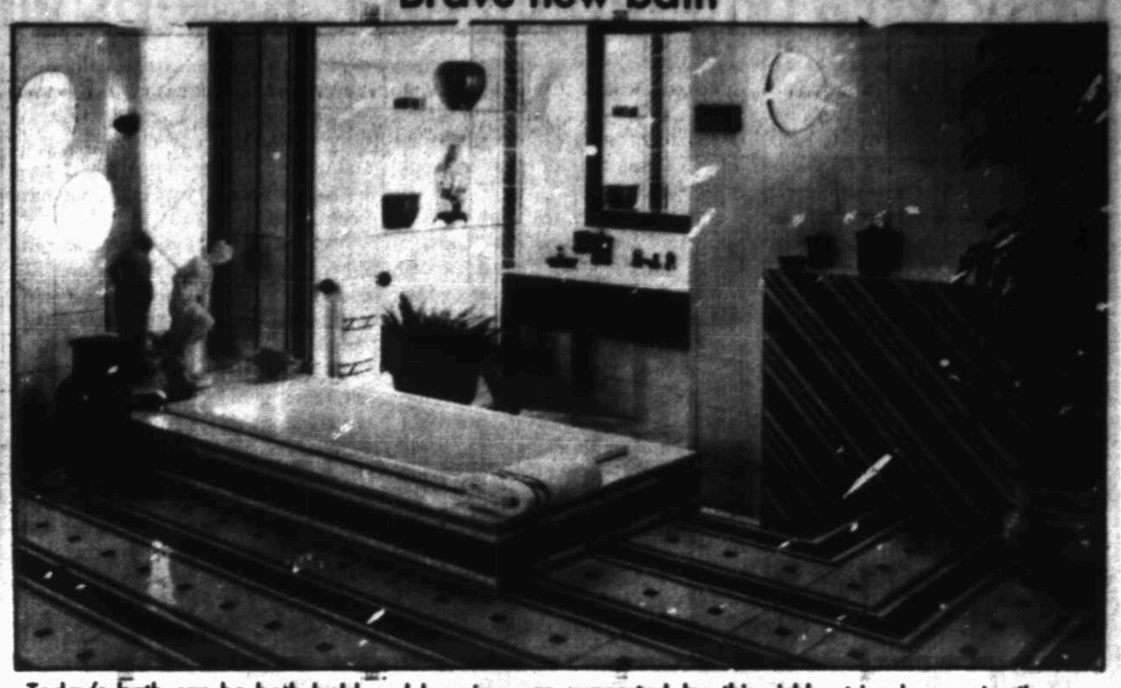

• If there's not enough room for matching nightstands on either side of the bed, try a nightstand on one side and wall-mounted bookshelves on the other.

• If you use an interior designer, don't let him or her dictate the size of your mattress. "A designer might tell you the room's too small for a queen- or king-size bed. But if you feel it's important to have one, say so. In most cases, a good interior designer will be creative enough to accommodate the size you want," advises Dreyfus.

A king-size bed can be made to look smaller by using a fitted bedspread in a color that blends with the floor and wallcoverings. In this New York high-rise apartment, warm beige is sued for walls, floor, bedspread and dressers with accents of lavenders.

Brave new bath

Today's bath can be bath bold and luxurious, as suggested by this richly striped ceramic tile.

Financing for roofing is available

If you need a new roof and the money to finance it, you're in luck. Interest rates on home improvement loans are the lowest they've been in years. Just be sure to shop around for the best rate available because they can differ considerably.

Among the sources for home improvement loans are commercial banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, finance companies, and some home improvement contractors. But each institution has its own rules regarding the amount that can be borrowed, the pay-back period and the rate it charges. Some financial institutions offer customers with accounts, rates that are slightly less than for those who just walk in off the street.

There are also a variety of loans to finance a home improvement that aren't even called home improvement loans. These include second mortgages, equity loans of credit, refinancing, personal loans and passbook loans. All can be used to finance reroofing.

The same care that goes into selecting the right financing should go into the search for the material and the contractor who will do the reroofing, says the Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association.

Asphalt shingles, for example, are the most popular in both reroofing and new construction. They include fiberglass-based shingles as well as laminated shingles that give a roof the look of extra dimension. In addition to good looks, economy, durability and low maintenance, asphalt shingles are designed to meet the fire resistance ratings of Underwriters Laboratories, ranging from Class C to Class A (the highest.)

Available in a range of colors, including the popular earthtone shades of brown and beige, the new generation of asphalt shingles is designed to last up to 25 years or more.

To determine the actual cost of reroofing, keep in mind that the cost of labor for installation is often the same regardless of the life expectancy of the material used. So a roof with a longer design life will actually cost less on a cost-per-year of use basis. To estimate the probable annual cost of a new roof, add the cost of labor and materials and divide the result by the shingle's life expectancy.

When shopping for a roofing contractor, look for one who is well recommended, has been in business for a long time and has a good reputation. Before signing the contract, says ARMA, be sure it specifies the work to be done, the materials to be used, the completion date, the final price and the method of payment.

For more information on choosing a new roof, send 50 cents for "A Homeowner's Guide to Quality Roofing" to ARMA, Box 3248, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163.

REMODEL

Adding a new bathroom is one of the best investments a homeowner can make. A new bathroom will cost about $4,900, but it will yield an average of 103 percent return on resale.

Remodeling or improving a home is a dependable way to create real estate value in this low-inflation economy. And, remember, after upgrading your home you will not only increase its resale value but you'll be eligible for greater refinancing and second mortgages.

Easy care and maintenance keeps vinyl siding looking new

If you're fortunate enough to own a home with solid vinyl siding exterior, you don't need to be reminded of its many maintenance-free attributes.

By now, you've probably discovered that vinyl eliminates the need to periodically scrape, sand and re-paint. Since the color is molded all the way through, it will not peel, flake or show scratches. And, for the most part, dirt will wash off in a heavy downpour.

However, should you ever encounter a hard-to-remove stain, there are a variety of cleaning agents on the market that can restore your siding's finish to its original luster.

The Vinyl Building Products Division of CertainTeed Corp., of Valley Forge, PA, the nation's leading manufacturer of solid vinyl siding, replacement windows and soffit, suggests that you wash your siding with an ordinary, long-handled car-washing brush that fastens to a hose before applying any cleaning agent. Available at most auto supply stores, the brush lets you wash the siding as you would wash your car.

For hard-to-remove dirt such as soot and grime found in industrial areas, you should wipe the siding with a solution consisting of ⅓ of a cup of ordinary powdered detergent, ⅔ of a cup of household cleaner and one gallon of water.

Depending on their severity, stubborn stains may require the use of solvents, cleaning fluids or acids. While this approach should work with vinyl siding, it's not recommended for a painted surface, notes Robert Maceda, director of marketing for vinyl siding products at CertainTeed. Light oils and greases, heavy grease, caulking compound, crayon, asphalt and tars can generally be removed with solvents such as mineral spirits, naptha, or auto tar remover. Maceda suggests that a soft cloth can be used to apply cleaning agents after all excess residue has been scraped off.

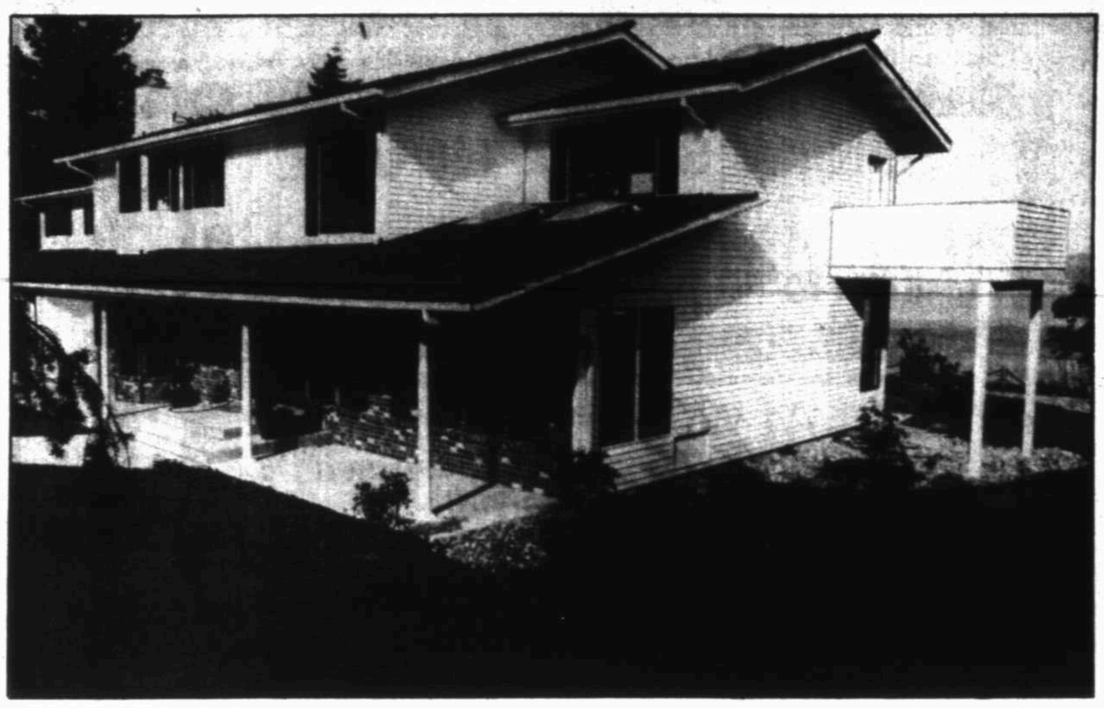

You should avoid polishing stained areas by using too much pressure, he cautions, and be sure to rinse the area with water after the stain has been removed.

To remove ink markings, nail polish, paint, gum or lipstick, you might try Trichloroethylene (cleaning fluid). First scrape off any excess markings. Then apply the cleaning fluid with a soft cloth. Again, try to avoid polishing the stained area by applying too much pressure. After removing the stains, rinse the area thoroughly with water.

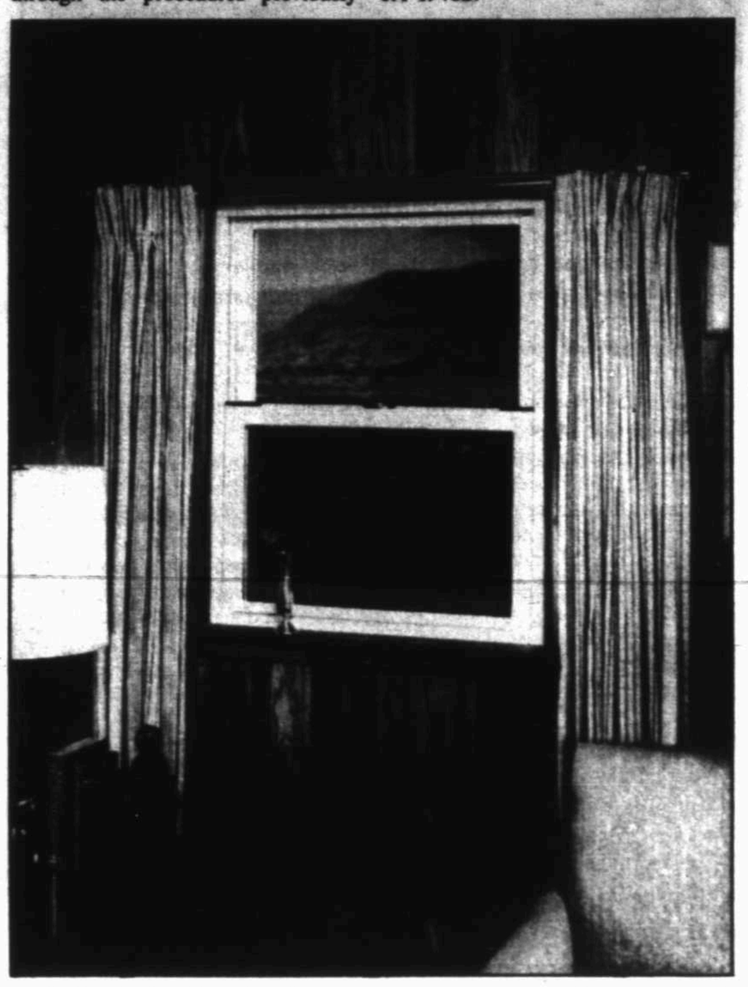

For rust stains, a solution consisting of one tablespoon of oxalic acid crystals (auto radiator cleaner) and one cup of warm water is recommended. The solution should be applied with a soft bristle brush, and wiped off with a damp cloth. The area cleaned should then be flushed with rust-free water. Be sure to wear rubber gloves and protect your eyes and face, Maceda warns.

Stains that cannot be removed through the procedures previously identified may require the use of a more powerful agent such as Xylene. When using Xylene, dampen a small section of cloth and rub vigorously. However, do not remove more material than is necessary, and rinse the area thoroughly with water.

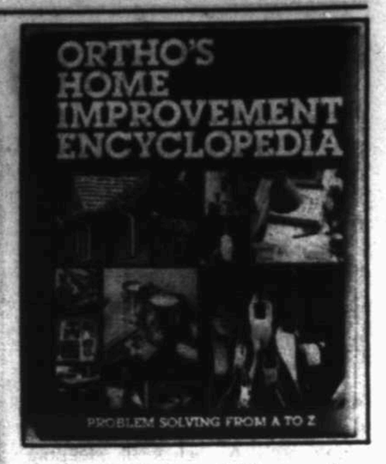

For more information about solid vinyl siding write to CertainTeed Corp., Vinyl Building Products Division, P.O. Box 860-S, Valley Forge, PA 19482.

Solid vinyl double-hung replacement windows are custom-fabricated to fit virtually any opening and come in both colonial white and natural tan frames. The double glazed windows provide an exceptionally effective insulating barrier, and require little maintenance.

Solid vinyl siding is virtually maintenance free. It never needs painting. Since the color goes clear through the material, vinyl with not peel or blister. It also resists dents and will not show scratches.

This book is a 512-page bonanza of help around the home.

Ortho's Home Improvement Encyclopedia is the spanking-new flagship of Ortho's extensive line of home improvement books. The big (512 pages), richly-illustrated, problem-solving encyclopedia answers almost every imaginable question about remodeling, additions, design ideas, building projects and repairs around the house.

A pleasure to use, it utilizes both photography and artwork to illustrate how-to information, drawing on the most useful aspects of each for clear explanations.

Real projects are shown, photographed as they actually appear when completed. Extensive cross referencing is utilized so that you are never abandoned in mid-project without the information to proceed to the next step. Pages are clearly titled by topic, and almost all do-it-yourself projects are edited so you may follow them without turning pages.

From A to Z (Adhesives to Z-flashing), over 120 basic home improvement projects are thoroughly covered — leaky faucets, window glazing, hanging wall paper, installing carpeting, adding skylights, finishing basements, building decks, laying patios and much, much more. The book is the culmination of many years' research and editing.

New design principles are effective

Most people rely on furnaces to heat their homes and air conditioners to cool them. In winter, they turn up the thermostat; in summer they turn on the air conditioner. All this does is make utility companies and their stockholders rich.

Some remodeling might be a way to alleviate high energy costs, especially if it's done in a room that faces south. Andersen Corp., a leading window manufacturer, says an ample number of windows or patio doors can use passive solar to supply free heat from the sun. When used in conjunction with Andersen's Concept IV design principles, such remodeling could turn the room into a source of extra heat to share with the rest of the house.

Concept IV calls for collecting solar heat with large areas of south-facing glass, conserving heat with sufficient floor, wall and ceiling insulation, storing heat by means of a storage mass in floors or walls, and sharing heat with the rest of the house. The storage mass can be brick, concrete, tile or adobe.

The Concept IV design principles work in all parts of the country and in all four seasons. To be even more efficient, consider the latest in window technology to make the remodeling even more energy independent.

Andersen recommends the use of high-performance insulating glass in all but the warmest regions where air conditioning is more vital than heating. High-performance glazing is double-pane insulating glass with a thin, metallic coating bonded to the air space surface of the inside pane. Since the coating is both permanent and protected, it won't discolor, crack, wrinkle or roll up. It is 72 percent more energy efficient than single-pane glass and 42 percent better than uncoated double-pane glass.

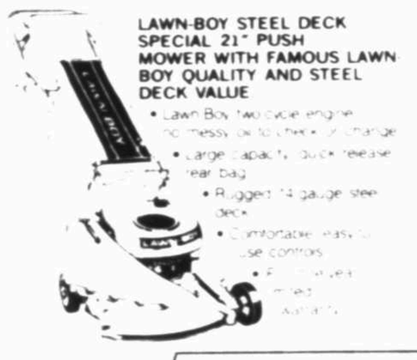

Roof overhangs, awnings or leaf-bearing trees protect the glass area from excessive heat from the high summer sun. Even without these shading devices, high-performance insulating glass is significantly better at saving energy than ordinary single or double-pane glass.

In hot, southern climates where air conditioning costs are paramount, Andersen recommends high performance sun insulating glass, which consists of two panes of glass. The exterior of the outside pane is tinted while the interior surface has the bonded metallic coating. This glazing prevents 73 percent of the sun's radiant heat from entering.

Asphalt shingle becomes popular

Builders and roofing contractors are using fiber glass-based asphalt shingles more than ever. That's because consumers like their looks, durability and top-notch fire resistance, says the Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association.

Don't forget to insulate basements

It is a common fact that many Americans these days are choosing to remain in their existing homes for longer periods of time. Several reasons are prompting them to make this decision such as little profit on sales of an existing home, the cost of moving, and high interest rates. What about those who need more space?

They're opting to finish off existing rooms or are adding onto their homes. If you're looking for more space, consider finishing off your basement. Millions of Americans have turned once drab basements into useful offices and family rooms.

Don't Forget To Insulate

If you're planning on finishing off your basement this spring the CertainTeed Home Institute recommends first insulating the basement walls and then covering with gypsum board or panelling. Insulation will not only help keep the room cooler in summer and warmer in winter, but it will make the living space more comfortable.

Before you begin the job you'll need work gloves, a hammer, common and masonry nails, 2 x 2s and 2 x 4s, a serrated knife, a heavy duty staple gun, and kraft-faced fiber glass batts or rolls.

Start the job by nailing bottom plates (2 x 2s) to the base of the walls with a hammer and masonry nails (Figure 1). Then nail top plates (2 x 2s) to the joists of the subflooring above. Both bottom and top plates should be placed ¾" out from the wall.

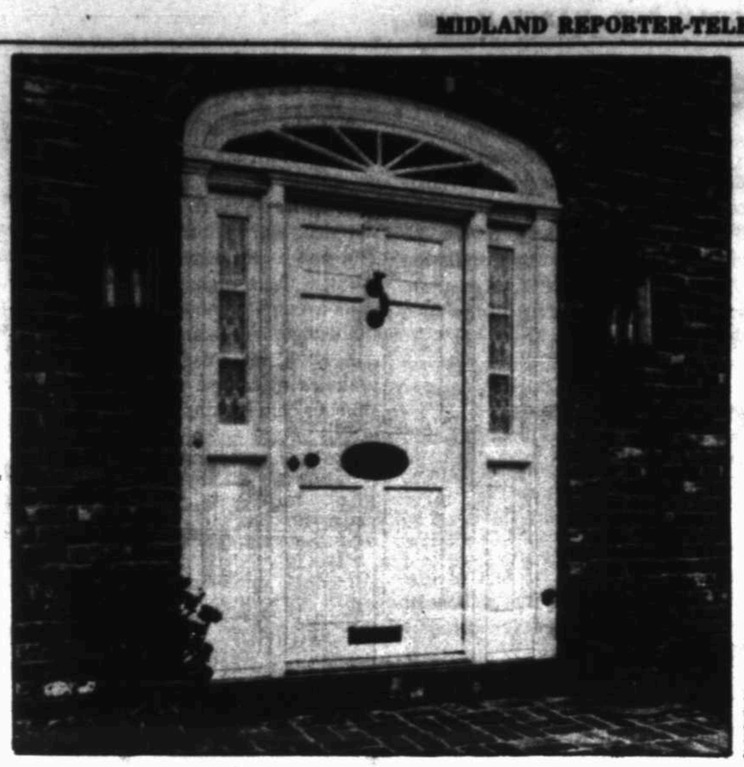

Next, using common nails, fasten the 2 x 4 studs 16 or 24 inches apart (measured from the center of one stud to the center of the next [Figure 2]).

To fininsh the job, install gypsum board or paneling over the insulation and studs (Figure 4)

Wood entry systems can be indivualized with decorative features such as fanlights and sidelights. Both are appropriate to this door and the architectural style of the home. In addition, wood entries can be stained to bring out the natural warmth of the wood grain, or they can be painted to blend with siding and trim, or to contrast with other colors.

Replace exterior doors to stop energy waste

Replacing the front, side and back doors is growing as an improvement project because homeowners have learned the right kind of exterior doors can enhance the appearance of a home and save energy as well.

Installing new wood entries to stop energy waste, says the National Wood Window & Door Association, isn't all that costly when you consider the savings in fuel costs that result from properly weatherstripped wood doors. Nor is installing doors a difficult job for a competent do-it-yourselfer. All it takes is a few hours with ordinary tools.

When it comes to energy efficiency, it is the weatherstripping, design of the threshold and the quality of the installation that most determine how good the door will be at saving energy, not the material the door is made of.

To minimize the possibility of a door's robbing a home of expensive heat, many wood door manufacturers now offer integrated entryway systems. These systems consist of the doors, frames, assembled sidelights, and sills. All the components match and the entryway system is precision machined at the factory to assure a precise fit.

Wood doors are natural insulators. They retard the flow of heat to the outdoors and resist the formation of condensation on the inside surface of the door. Wood doors can be trimmed to fit the existing opening. Metal doors can't. This feature is important when replacing doors. Because they are wood, they will also accept virtually any finish.

Invest in furniture for your walls

Nationally, home remodeling expenditures have reached an all-time high: They're projected to be $80.1 billion in 1986, a jump of about 26 percent over the past 2 years.

Why such a frenzy of remodeling activity? According to Super Handyman Al Carrell, author, syndicated columnist and one of the country's best-known experts on home repair, "The answer is investment value. At a time when prices of existing houses are ever-increasing, remodeling your home is often an investment providing a better payoff than your broker's favorite growth stock."

If remodeling your home for investment value — or just for enjoyment — is on your list of things to do, Al suggests starting on the inside by using real wood paneling to add elegant decorating touches and unique accents to the rooms in your home.

"Today's real wood paneling is an improved product," notes Al. "It combines technical sophistication with the natural beauty of real wood. I refer to it as investing in 'furniture for your walls.'"

As an example, Al cites Georgia-Pacific's introduction of its Great Woods™ Collection, a line of prefinished real hardwood veneer paneling available in a wide variety of styles, textures and colors.

"This collection has several features that can add unique elegance and warmth to any room in your house," explains Al. For example, it has many new panels with a wide plank design and a "fine furniture" look rather than the narrow plank appearance that has been the standard for years.

Also, many of the panels use a mismatched rather than a whole-piece face veneer. This gives the panels a more realistic planked look along with a variety of grain and texture treatments. It also virtually does away with matching problems.

Another striking difference with some of this new paneling and conventional paneling is the grooving. The traditional black-striped, regularly-spaced channel grooves are gone, replaced by subtly-shaded random grooves and wider planks. This groove pattern is a better complement to the cleaner, fine-grained, high quality veneers used in the new panels.

Do-it-yourself booklet gives useable ideas

Do-it-yourselfers now have a shining example of how they can remodel their homes while preserving that "old world" charm.

To show how it's done, Georgia-Pacific Corporation, the world's largest building products manufacturer, and the Georgia Power Company, a local electric utility, renovated "Dunover Place," located in one of Atlanta's popular midtown neighborhoods.

Along with help from an award-winning architect, a nationally-prominent interior designer, building and energy experts, as well as local businesses and craftsmen, Dunover Place was transformed from an 80-year-old dilapidated dwelling into a Victorian masterpiece.

To experience how creativity and "elbow grease" can result in eye-popping decorative appeal, over 25,000 people from across the country have visited Dunover Place since its completion in July, 1984.

You too can "visit" Dunover Place via the "Dunover Place™ Booklet," provided by the Georgia-Pacific Corporation. It contains a wealth of remodeling ideas.

Family Room Desk

If you have rooms in your home that can be "dunover," why not try your hand at some of the projects in the booklet, such as this family room desk?

The desk and its moldings were constructed from unstained pine lumber and plywood, finished in a polyurethane.

Here are the materials which were used to do the job: (2½) 4′ x 8′ sheets of ¾″ sanded plywood; (4) 1″ x 4″ x 8″; (1) 1″x 6″x 6″; (2) 1″ x 2″x 8″; 93½″ — 4″ crown molding; (8) L-brackets; #6 flat head wood screws ½″ long; 4d finishing nails.

The first step in constructing the desk was to build four frames measuring 26¾″ wide x 29¼″ tall. These are the sides of what will be the two cabinets, one on each side of the center opening. 1″ x 4″ pine was used and the joints were doweled together. Once these were constructed, the sides were clad with plywood sheets measuring 27½″ x 29¼″.

Stiles were doweled across the back of each cabinet, level with the opening for the drawers on the front. A stile was also doweled across the center opening.

The front of the desk is covered by a framework. A 1″ x 6″ x 66½″ board runs across the entire face of the desk flush with the top.

Vertical stiles made of 1″ x 2″s were doweled to the 1″ x 6″ and 1″ x 2″. Horizontal stiles were doweled between the vertical stiles to create the openings for the drawers.

Finally, a 1″ x 4″ stile runs across the bottom.

This frame was attached to the desk with 4d finishing nails. Corner blocks were inserted behind the front frame and at the joints, attaching the back stiles to the sides to strengthen the cabinets.

Spacers made of ¾″ plywood run between the front frame and the stiles across the back of each cabinet. These spacers strengthen the unit and are also used to hold the drawer slides. For details on constructing drawers, see illustration.

A plywood top 26¾″ x 65¾″ was cut and 1″ x 2″ strips were attached to the front and side edges.

The top is snugged into place along the wall and the edges of the desk cabinets. The top is held in place by 4 "L" brackets attached to the inside top edges of each cabinet with No. 6 wood screws ½″ long.

Next, two pieces of 4″crown molding were cut — one 27½″, the other 66½″. The pieces were mitered at a 45 degree angle on one end and then nailed into place just beneath the top.

All exposed nail heads were countersunk with a nail set and the holes filled with putty. The unit was sanded and then painted with polyurethane.

Drawers

Here's an easy way to assemble drawers for your desk. First, determine measurements for your drawer.

Use ½″ plywood for the sides and back and ¾″ plywood for a facing at the front of the drawer. After cutting the pieces, rout a ¼″ x ¼″ groove ½″ from the bottom edge of each piece.

Rout a groove ½″ wide by ¼″ deep about ½″ from the back edge of the sides.

Cut a drawer bottom from ¼″ plywood, sand the edges, smear yellow glue in the grooves and fit the drawer pieces together. The sides attach to the edge of the facing with No. 6 flat head wood screws 1″ long.

The drawer fronts should be at least 1 inch taller and 1 inch wider than the drawer opening. The drawer fronts can be made of solid wood, and the edges can be routed in decorative patterns.

The fronts attach to the drawers by driving No. 77 flat head wood screws 1¼″ long through the back side of the facing.

As an informed homeowner you can determine when a roof needs repair or replacement, before it leaks, when there is sufficient time to review the choices of materials and installation options. If your roof is 15 or more years old, chances are it's time for a thorough inspection.

A roofing guide

1. Inspect the attic with a flashlight for signs of leaks, such as discolored or stained interior wood.
2. Unless you're an experienced aerialist, don't climb up on the roof. Not only is it dangerous, but it can damage the shingle. Instead, take a walk around the house with a pair of binoculars and examine the shingle.
3. Look for loss of the mineral granules (usually a sign of this is a shiny or bald looking area). Granules protect the shingle from sun and rain and prevent it from drying out.
4. Look closely at problem areas like downspouts, where the wear might be especially severe and leaks are most likely to start.
5. Look for cracked, curling or missing shingles, another sign that the weather has taken its toll on the roof.
6. Examine the flashing, the metal or asphalt material around the chimneys or vent pipes, for cracks or gaps.

Let low voltage outdoor lights welcome you home at night

An unlit house presents a risk of injury to persons arriving home late at night.

Steps leading up to the front porch, or a child's toy left carelessly in a walkway, may not be seen if the entrance to a home is not properly lit.

For less than $40, homeowners can prevent injury-causing accidents by installing a weatherproof, outdoor low-voltage light, such as the Malibu "Welcome Home" light from Intermatic Inc.

The light features a plug-in power pack with a photo control that automatically switches it on at dusk and off at dawn to brighten dark walkways, alleys and corners.

Because it requires only 12 volts of current to operate (about the same amount of current that a model electric train requires), the light is shockless and completely safe to use around children or pets.

In addition, the low-voltage design makes the light very economical. Based on average national electrical rates, the light can operate for 10 hours for less than a penny.

Installing the low-voltage light makes an easy and fun project for do-it-yourselfers. From start to finish, a complete system can be installed in less than 30 minutes, with only a screwdriver required. The power pack plugs directly into a grounded outdoor AC outlet, and the 15 feet of low-voltage cable can be placed beneath bushes or along sidewalks to hide it from view.

Chaps vs. SJ: The real battle for No. 1

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

When Midland College squares off against San Jacinto at 6:45 p.m. Wednesday, the play-in game for the berth in the National Junior College Athletic Association tournament at Hutchinson, Kan., in reality won't be No. 2 vs. No. 3 in the nation after all.

"It will be more like No. 1 vs. No. 2," says Midland College Coach Jerry Stone. "That other bunch over in Louisiana, Delgado, the team that was ranked No. 1, was beaten. In fact, they are not even going to make it to Hutchinson.

"So, although they don't take any more polls once the regular season ends, we'd both move up if there were a poll left," notes Stone, whose 33-0 Chaparrals will be going against 29-0 SJ.

AT THIS time of the year, No. 1, 2, 3 is meaningless since fairest in the land will be determined on the floor in Kansas, but Stone thinks Wednesday's game is great for juco basketball in Texas.

"The game is getting pretty good ink in Dallas and we are hoping it draws a good crowd," Stone says.

"It should be a great game," MC assistant Reggie Franklin agrees. "We're both undefeated and I'm hoping for an exciting finish, a treat for the fans. Both teams have a lot of talent, good coaches and play an exciting style of basketball."

The Chaps left by bus for Fort Worth at 8 a.m. today and were scheduled for an afternoon workout at Wilkerson-Greines Activity Center, the public schools gym, which is described as about as big as the Chap Center.

Another bus will leave from MC at 8 a.m. Wednesday ($32.50 including game ticket) and will return after the game.

For those who would rather fly, there are plenty of vacancies on scheduled flights to Dallas and the game time was moved up to 6:45 p.m. to enable fans to catch the flight back.

The site is not Stone's first choice, even though he won the coin flip in Saturday night's bargaining session with SJ Coach Ron Arrow, whose preference was San Antonio, Austin or Fort Worth.

"I won the coin flip and wanted the game in SMU's Moody Coliseum, which I got," said Stone, "But then it was discovered Moody wasn't available anyway."

Stone's reluctance to return to the scene of the 1983 playoff loss to San Jacinto is understandable. "They're good and we will have to play a very good game to beat them."

"THEIR strength is that there isn't anybody you can lay off. They all can shoot and shoot from way out," Stone notes.

"They have some good sized folks in there, 6-9, 6-8, 6-6 and another 6-9 off the bench. But what makes it really difficult is that they've got two 6-6 forwards which means 6-2 Lincoln Minor at forward is going to have someone Eddie Frazier's size to guard."

Stone's anxiety about this one is justified. San Jacinto is the best team MC will have played this season. "Even as much as we run," confesses the Midland coach, with the memory of that 80-point half against Lon Morris still vivid, "We can't run up and down the floor with San Jacinto.

"That, and with their size, rebounding becomes a problem."

On the more positive side, Stone feels a "a 33-0 has got to have something going for it. It may be debatable on their part, but I think our conference is stronger than theirs and I imagine we have been tested more often than they have.

"When Lon Morris had them down 58-56 at half the other night, it was the first time they had been behind all year."

MC MOVED into this playin-to-nationals game, which is now a two-out-of-three year requisite instead of every-other-year as it used to be, by beating South Plains College in the Region V final at Snyder Saturday night.

Stone expected a tougher game, "but it was almost as though they gave up once the slow-down failed. We were so worried about the fact that they would have the psychological edge because it is so difficult to beat a team four times in a season, but I suppose it works the other way, too. They'd lost to us three times and maybe they thought it was hoepless."

CHAPSTYQUES- Wilkerson-Graines is located south of Fort Worth on the off I-30 between loop 820 and just east of north-south I-35. It is just off the Tarrant County Junior College campus...Stone doesn't find anybody in Midland's past that reminds him of San Jacinto, but Franklin, who has seen the Ravens twice, says "they shoot a lot like Western Texas, from way out." And WTC, of course, gave MC two of its biggest scares of the year...Arrow was against playing in SMU's Moody, feeling the Chaps had too many Dallas area players and it might show up in additional fan support...

Blue Devils head AP's final poll

Associated Press

Duke, Kansas, Kentucky and St. John's, the top seeds in the NCAA tournament, finished that way atop the final Associated Press college basketball poll released today.

Duke, the regular-season and tournament champions of the Atlantic Coast Conference, missed being a unanimous choice for the top spot in the poll by one vote in the nationwide balloting of sportswriters and broadcasters. The Blue Devils, 32-2, the top seed in the East regional and the No. 1 team for the past two weeks, finished with 63 first-place votes and 1,279 points.

Kansas, 31-3 and the top seed in the Midwest Regional, garnered the only first-place vote and 1,213 points. The Jayhawks won both titles in the Big Eight Conference.

Kentucky, 29-3, the regular-season and tournament champions of the Southeastern Conference, finished with 1,123 points and will serve as the top seed in the Southeast Regional.

St. John's, 30-4, will travel to the West regional as the top seed after winning both the regular-season and tournament titles in the Big East Conference.

MICHIGAN WAS next in the balloting with 995 points as the Wolverines, 27-4, the Big Ten champions, improved two places from last week's voting. Georgia Tech, losers to Duke in the ACC title game, was sixth with 958 points, followed by Louisville, North Carolina, Syracuse and Notre Dame in the Top Ten.

Louisville, 26-7, which won both titles in the Metro Conference, finished with 839 points, 30 more than North Carolina, 26-5, which fell to Maryland in the opening round of the ACC tournament and lost five of its last 10 games after opening the season at 21-0.

Syracuse, 25-5, which lost to St. John's in the Big East finale, had 806 points, easily outdistancing Notre Dame, 23-5, only one of two independents to make the field for the tournament.

Nevada-Las Vegas leads the Second Ten followed by Memphis State, Georgetown, Bradley, Oklahoma, Indiana, Navy, Michigan State, Illinois and Texas-El Paso.

Last week's Second Ten was Louisville, Notre Dame, Nevada-Las Vegas, Georgetown, Oklahoma, Indiana, Michigan State, Navy, Illinois and North carolina State.

Texas-El Paso, which won the Western Athletic Conference tournament, replaces North Carolina State, which was eliminated by Virginia in the first round of the ACC tournament.

THE ONLY teams to hold the No. 1 ranking this year were all from the ACC.

Georgia Tech was voted No. 1 in the preseason poll but lost to Michigan in the Tipoff Classic. North Carolina then held the top spot for the next 13 weeks and Duke was atop the rankings for the final three weeks of voting.

Five of the teams in the final poll were not in the preseason rankings — St. John's, Bradley, Indiana, Michigan State and Texas-El Paso. The five teams that were in the preseason poll and did not finish among the ranks of the ranked were Auburn (10th), Louisiana State (14th), Alabama-Birmingham (16th), North Carolina State (17th) and Maryland (19th).

Richmond, Ohio State, Western Kentucky and Iowa all tied for the shortest appearance in the poll as they were all ranked for just one week before falling and not returning to the Top Twenty, while 13 schools were ranked from the preseason through the end of the conference tournaments.

The Top Twenty

The Top Twenty teams in the final Associated Press college basketball poll, with first-place votes in parentheses, total points based on 20-19-18-17-16-15-14-13-12-11-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1, record through March 9 and last week's ranking:

Marvelous Marv drops 'The Beast'

Hearns sets up rematch in 73 seconds

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Marvelous Marvin Hagler likes to say nothing pleases him more than a good fight. Against John "The Beast" Mugabi, he got that — and more.

Hagler, pushed hard by a determined Mugabi, battered the challenger through the late rounds Monday night before knocking him out at 1:29 of the 11th round to retain his undisputed middleweight title.

It was a crowd-pleasing performance by Hagler, who appeared to dominate much of the bout, but had trouble putting Mugabi away. And, at least in the eyes of the ringside judges, Mugabi was in the fight until the end, trailing by three points on two cards and only one on the third.

"It wasn't that close," insisted Hagler. "I thought I had full control of the whole fight."

The victory, coupled with Thomas Hearns' devastating first-round knockout of James Shuler an hour earlier, set up a planned Hagler-Hearns rematch. A prospect Hagler wasn't was looking forward to after going 11 bruising rounds with Mugabi.

"I've given it a lot of thought ... this may be my last fight," he said immediately after the bout.

But after getting some attention to a bruised right eye, a shower and a change of clothes, Hagler backed off a bit.

"I'm not committing myself to anything now," he said. "I just got through with a tough fight. Let me get home a put it together."

Promoter Bob Arum said he had few doubts Hagler would keep fighting, especially with more than $10 million awaiting Hagler for a rematch of his third-round knockout of Hearns last April.

"Sometime in September we're looking for a Hagler-Hearns rematch," said Arum.

And Hearns, who has already signed for the rematch, said he couldn't wait.

"There's never a day, a time, a minute throughout the day that I don't think about it," said Hearns, who needed, and got, an impressive win to keep his rematch hopes alive.

Hearns knew he needed more than just a win against James Shuler. He needed a blowout.

That's just what he produced, ending Shuler's 22-fight unbeaten string with a stunning knockout at 73 seconds of the first round to capture the North American Boxing Federation middleweight championship.

The title was strictly secondary. More important was a potential rich rematch with Hagler, who destroyed Hearns in eight electrifying minutes last April.

Hagler's knockout had raised some doubts about Hearns and he knew it. But he used Shuler to erase them, taking his man out in a hurry.

"The one year drought is definitely over," Hearns said after his right hand flattened Shuler. "We feel strongly about ourselves. There were a few doubts in the past but that's over. We look forward to the rematch."

Hagler, fighting for the first time since his triumph over Hearns, started cautiously against the Ugandan, throwing jabs and staying away from the vaunted power of Mugabi.

Mugabi managed to land several shots to Hagler's head early, backing the champion up on several occasions. But Mugabi's punches were often wild and Hagler was able to get inside of them to land effectively.

"He gave me a good fight and I love a good fight," said Hagler. "I said through all of this hype that this would be an exciting fight."

With Hagler beginning to take control, the stage was set for a wild sixth round — a round that rivaled the almost non-stop first-round action in the Hagler-Hearns fight.

Hagler opened up midway through the sixth round, stinging Mugabi with flurries of punches to the head. At one point, Mugabi seemed ready to go down, but referee Mills Lane picked that time to separate the fighters and warn Hagler about punching low.

SWC learns system's SOS lesson

'Strength of Schedule' bites hopefuls

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — That SOS you hear from the Southwest Conference stands for a "Strength of Schedule" lesson they've just been taught by the NCAA Basketball Selection Committee.

No at-large teams from the SWC were selected Sunday for the NCAA Tournament, meaning that only tournament champion and automatic qualifier Texas Tech will fly the SWC flag.

The Red Raiders play Thursday against Georgetown.

THE SWC had the fewest invitees of any major conference. Even the Sun Belt Conference got four teams into the 64-team tournament. It was small consolation that a record four SWC teams received bids to the National Invitation Tournament.

Because Texas Christian, Southern Methodist, Texas, and Texas A&M couldn't guarantee the NIT a minimum gross of $50,000, they wih have to hit the road to some hostile arenas.

TCU vists Montana on Tuesday, while SMU is at Brigham Young, A&M is at Wyoming and Texas travels to New Mexico on Thursday.

"The strength of schedule killed us in the conference," said TCU Athletic Director Frank Windegger, a member of the selection committee. "We had few victories against teams in the top 50 in the country."

THE SWC has a 1-19 record against teams in the NCAA Tournament field. They were 1-14 against Top Twenty teams.

"The conference has a message from the NCAA now that it is going to have to beef up its non-conference schedule," Windegger said. "I think the league will be much improved next year."

"We were a very young league this season," said Fred Jacoby, commissioner of the SWC. "And we just didn't have a strong enough showing."

The SWC was snubbed only two years after Houston had a team in the NCAA Final Four three consecutive times.

"Houston and Arkansas were down this year and their strong national rankings in the past have helped the league overall," said Jacoby. "None of our teams were in the Top Twenty this year and that hurt our power ratings and strength of schedule."

TEXAS A&M Coach Shelby Metcalf said the SWC office "should be ashamed" that the league doesn't have more national recognition than it does.

"It's an injustice," said Metcalf, whose team won 20 games for the sixth time in his career. "I thought we'd get a bid, I really did. We played all Division I teams but I guess I don't understand the system."

Windegger couldn't even get his own Horned Frogs into the tournament — although they had 21 victories.

It's the first time since 1977 that the SWC hasn't had at least two teams in the NCAA field.

The SWC can at least be proud of its women's teams. Arkansas, Texas, and Texas Tech won bids to the NCAA women's tournament.

Texas Rangers outfielder Pete Incaviglia crushes another ball during an impressive start in spring training. The rookie has opened some eyes while trying to jump to the big leagues.

Incaviglia shows big stick

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Hitting home runs is what Pete Incaviglia does best but he's also becoming adept at overcoming questions about his ability to make the rare transition from college to the major leagues with the Texas Rangers.

Incaviglia set NCAA records with 48 home runs in one season and 100 home runs in three seasons at Oklahoma State, using a lively aluminum bat.

But in his first batting practice with the Rangers, he put on a hitting display with a wooden bat that had Manager Bobby Valentine diving for cover.

IN AN explosive spring training batting practice debut, the 1985 Oklahoma State All-American knocked Valentine, who was pitching batting practice, to the ground with a line drive.

"I thought he was still using the alumnium bat," Rangers hitting coach Art Howe said.

Incaviglia then drilled a baseball off the right-centerfield fence, 380-feet away, leaving a hole in the one-inch plywood barrier.

"I was glad to show that I could do it with a wooden bat," Incaviglia said. "That's been said about me for a long time."

Valentine also is satisfied that Incaviglia can play rightfield.

"The scouting reports were wrong," Valentine said. "His arm is strong enough that he can play rightfield."

Still, Incaviglia will have an uphill battle to earn a spot on the major league roster.

Among current major leaguers, only New York Yankee Dave Winfield and Atlanta's Bob Horner have made the leap from college to the major leagues.

Incaviglia isn't lacking in confidence.

"I'm not in awe of anybody. I think I can hit everybody in the league," Incaviglia said. "I'm confident of my stroke and I'm confident of my outfield play.

"You want the fly ball to be coming to you. You want to be the one facing 3-2 in the bottom of the ninth. That's where you want to be.

"I love to be in those spots because I believe I'm mentally strong enough to win those battles.

VALENTINE HOPES it works just as Incaviglia plans.

"I'm happy that he's wearing a Texas Rangers uniform because I think this is a guy who will not be denied his day in the sun in the major league," Valentine said.

"He might be delayed and that delaying process will just depend on his mental maturity. I think his physical capabilities are ready right now to play in the major leagues."

Incaviglia, who's been hitting homers since Little League, says he doesn't go for the fence with every pitch.

"All I think about is making good hard contact," he said. "If I make good contact, I don't care if the ball is in, out or down the middle, it's going out of the park.

"I get more of a thrill if it's a home run, but if I hit a double to win a ball game, then I'm happy."

Teammates will help him overcome inexperience, Incaviglia said.

"They say 'this guy's got a slider that guy's got a changeup,' " he said. "As I get around the league I'll be a better player because I'll know myself what they do."

Incaviglia was a first round pick by Montreal in last June's amateur draft.

But he decided the Expos weren't for him, leading to a trade that sent Rangers pitcher Bob Sebra and infielder Jim Anderson to Montreal.

"I had a few mishaps in Montreal," he said. "I just decided after one mishap that I didn't want to play in Montreal."

Rebs await swim word

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

After looking up at the standings at Midland High all season, first year swim coach John Bettina of Midland Lee has a chance to look down at his friendly crosstown rival this week.

Bettina's Rebels qualified two swimmers, junior Alan Reed and sophomore Jane Marker, for the state meet through the wild card process decided Sunday, pending official notification later this week.

Reed, the runner up finisher in the 500 freestyle at the region meet, was seventh of eight wild card qualifiers, while Marker, second in the 100 breaststroke, was the eighth and last wild card entrant.

"On paper, both qualified," Bettina said. "But we won't know officially until the notification comes in the mail on Wednesday or Thursday.

"I'm 99 percent sure they'll be in, but qualifying so low, I just don't know right now," Bettina added nervously.

The Bulldogs, who won their third straight District 4-5A title and finished second in the Region I meet in Lubbock Saturday, will send only Sam Perry to the state meet March 21-22 in Austin.

MHS coach Jesse Marsh, Region I representative to the state coaches association, spent much of Sunday haggling with other coaches around the state to determine who would receive the eight wild card invitations in each event.

Though close in several events, in particular the 200 medley relay, the 'Dogs gained no additional qualifiers. Official notification will come from Austin later this week and Bettina will be on pins and needles until then.

But in Perry, Marsh and the Bulldogs will have the best chance for a top six finish. Perry, seeded 12th of 16 swimmers going in, is one of the few swimmers that will rest and shave for the first time this season to peak in the state meet. In two weeks, Perry should also be over the fever and flu symptoms that have been hampering him.

"Sam's goal is to make it to the final swim, the top six," Marsh said. "And if he can get well, he has a realistic shot to go. He's very capable of doing it if he comes down and rests well."

TCU Horned Frogs tackle Grizzlies

MISSOULA, Montana (AP) — Montana and Texas Christian will bring distinctly different styles of basketball to the opening game of the National Invitation Tournament, with the Grizzlies' inside power game squaring off against the quicker, guard-oriented offense of the Horned Frogs.

"TCU will be well-coached and disciplined and take good shots," said Montana Coach Mike Montgomery. "I think they will run a man defense and a four-man passing game."

The Horned Frogs, 21-8, will be led tonight by guards Carl Lott and guard Carven Holcombe, who average respectively 14.9 and 12.8 points a game. Lott was named the Southwest Conference's newcomer of the year.

TCU also features one of the best defenses in the country, giving up just 57.2 points a game and allowing its opponents to shoot just 40.5 percent from the floor.

Montana's bread and butter is senior forward Larry Krystkowiak, a 6-foot-9 All-America candidate who averaged 22 points and 11.4 rebounds a game. Krystkowiak is the school's all-time leading scorer and rebounder, and was named the NCAA District 7's player of the year.

He is joined on the front line by 6-10 senior center Larry McBride, averaging 10.8 points a game, and 6-5 forward John Boyd.

Texas Christian finished its regular season in a tie with Texas and Texas A&M for first place in the Southwest Conference, but lost in the conference's postseason tourney to eventual champion Texas Tech, 71-64.

Montana, 21-10, ended its regular season tied for first place in the Big Sky Conference with Northern Arizona, and lost in the postseason conference tournament title game to Montana State, 82-77.

Tuesday's game marks the second consecutive NIT berth for the Grizzlies, who lost in the opening round last year to eventual champion UCLA.

This season was the fourth in a row that Montana has won 20 games, and Montgomery has compiled a 154-76 record in eight years at the school.

Wednesday night in the first round of the NIT, it will be Dayton, 19-8, at McNeese St., 20-10; Boston University, 21-9, at Providence, 15-13; and Pittsburgh, 15-13, at Southwest Missouri State 22-7.

On Thursday, it's Southern Mississippi, 17-11, at Florida, 16-12; Georgia, 16-12, at Tennessee-Chattanooga, 21-9; Middle Tennessee State, 23-10, at Clemson, 17-14; Drake, 19-10, at Marquette, 18-10; George Mason, 19-11, at Lamar, 18-11; Texas, 18-12, at New Mexico, 17-13; Louisiana Tech, 16-13, at Northern Arizona, 19-10; Texas A&M, 20-11, at Wyoming, 20-11; Southern Methodist, 18-10, at Brigham Young, 16-13; Loyola, Calif., 18-10, at California, 19-9, and Cal-Irvine, 16-12, at UCLA, 15-13.

The final game in the first round will be played Friday night, with Ohio State, 14-14, at Ohio University, 22-7.

Berry heads AP's All-America list

NEW YORK (AP) — Walter Berry, the leading scorer and rebounder for Big East Conference tournament champion St. John's, was the only unanimous selection on the 1985-86 Associated Press Division I All-America college basketball team announced today.

The 6-foot-8 junior who played center for the 30-4 Redmen this season was joined on the first team by seniors Len Bias of Maryland, Kenny Walker of Kentucky and Johnny Dawkins of Duke and Indiana junior Steve Alford.

A panel of 10 sportswriters and broadcasters comprised the selection committee.

There are no repeaters from last year's first team. Bias, Walker and Dawkins were second team selections last year.

Berry, who played in the shadow of All-America Chris Mullin at St. John's last season, moved from forward to center this season. He averaged 22.9 points and 11.3 rebounds despite facing double and triple coverage most of the season.

Berry used his great leaping ability, unorthodox style and soft left-handed touch to lead the Big East in scoring. He made 60 percent of his field-goal attempts and holds the school record for total points in a season and blocked shots.

He was named winner of the John Wooden Award Sunday, one of the sport's honors as college basketball's top player.

"He's so cunning inside it's incredible," says Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino. "His style is so different. I don't know, maybe the only way to stop him is to break his arm."

Bias, the AP's unanimous choice as the Atlantic Coast Conference's Player of the Year, averaged 22.9 points on 55 percent shooting from the field and 86 percent from the free-throw line. The 6-8 forward, relying mostly on outside jump shots, has scored 2,092 points in his career, surpassing Albert King as the Terrapins' all-time scoring leader.

"Bias is not only an All-American," Lefty Driesell, the coach of 18-13 Maryland, said, "but he's all-world. He's the best player I've ever coached."

Walker, also 6-8, has been the main force behind Kentucky the past two seasons, leading the Wildcats to Southeastern Conference titles in both the regular and post season this year. He averaged 19.6 points on 57 percent shooting from the field, bringing his career total to 1,976 — third on Kentucky's all-time list.

Remy producing in last chance

Associated Press

Jerry Remy is getting the last chance of his baseball career this spring after seven operations on his left knee.

Remy, 33, in the last year of a five-year contract he signed when he had two healthy knees, played second base Monday for the first time since May 5, 1984 and helped the Boston Red Sox beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 7-6 in a spring training game.

"Hey, this is it, I have nothing to lose," Remy said after his single set up the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning. "I want to go all out down here and see what happens. I don't think I can do any more damage to the knee and I know doctors can't do any more for me."

Remy, who said he also tried "acupuncture, faith-healing and voodoo" for his knee, also started a double play in the ninth to kill a Los Angeles rally.

"It felt good to be out there and to contribute, but I can't let myself get too excited over it," said Remy, who was disabled the entire 1985 season after appearing in six games as a designated hitter in spring training. "I'll go out there whenever I can, when the knee is not swollen. But I have no control on how the knee responds. We'll just have to wait and see."

The Red Sox, who had 16 hits, trailed the Dodgers 6-5 before Todd Benzinger tied it with a double, went to third on Remy's hit and scored on Ed Romero's sacrifice fly.

Phillies 2, Twins 1

Philadelphia left-hander Steve Carlton, trying to come back from a strained rotator cuff injury last season, yielded one run on four hits in three innings and was the winning pitcher against Minnesota.

Carlton, 1-8 last year, got the victory when Chris James hit a two-run homer off Mike Smithson in the bottom of the third.

"I thought he did well," Manager John Felske said of Carlton. "He threw some good breaking pitches and worked on his screwball. I'm not worried about velocity now. I'm just concerned about his being able to stay on top with his arm. He did that all day."

Giants 1, Angels 0

Four San Francisco pitchers, starting with Vida Blue, combined on a seven-hit shutout victory over California to keep the Giants unbeaten in four games.

Spring Training

Blue and Kelly Downs worked three innings each, Colin Ward pitched the seventh and Greg Minton earned a save by pitching the final two innings.

Don Gladden knocked in the only run of the game with a sacrifice fly in the third inning.

Reds 4, Cardinals 1

Tracy Jones had three hits and drove in a run in a two-run fourth inning off St. Louis reliever Ricky Horton, putting Cincinnati ahead. The other run in the inning was scored on an error by Cards third baseman Terry Pendleton.

Reds pitchers Bill Gullickson, Scott Terry, Bob Buchanan and Rob Murphy combined to limit the Cardinals to three hits and an unearned run.

John Tudor made his spring debut for St. Louis, allowing no runs and one hit in three innings.

Astros 6, Tigers 2

Denny Walling had a double and a single and drove in three runs to pace Houston, which scored five of its runs off Detroit starter Jack Morris.

Left-hander Jim DeShaies allowed just one hit over the first three innings for Houston, striking out four.

Detroit scored both its runs in the fifth off rookie Rob Mallicoat. Scott Earl led off with a homer and Lance Parrish added an RBI single.

Cubs 9, Indians 5

Steve Trout and Warren Brusstar each pitched three scoreless innings and Shawon Dunston had two doubles and a single to lead Chicago.

Gary Woods doubled and singled for the Cubs, scoring twice and driving in a run. Shawon Dunston scored one run and drove in another, as did Gary Matthews, who singled twice.

Cleveland had 14 hits but committed five errors.

Mariners 1, Padres 0, 6 innings

Gorman Thomas drove home Spike Owen from third base in the fifth inning for the only run of the rain-shortened game, which was was called with two outs in the bottom of the sixth. Owen and Jack Perconte each had three hits for Seattle.

Brewers 4, A's 1

Jim Gantner drove in two runs and rookie pitcher Juan Nieves worked three scoreless innings as Milwaukee beat Oakland.

It takes six years, but Mavs end jinx

DALLAS (AP) — There couldn't have been a more unlikely evening for the Dallas Mavericks to finally defeat the Boston Celtics after six years of trying.

Dallas' high-scoring Mark Aguirre was out with the flu and Boston's Larry Bird tied the Reunion Arena record with 50 points.

But the Mavericks clawed back from a 13-point deficit in the closing minutes to nick the Celtics 116-115 Monday night on a pair of Rolando Blackman free throws with eight seconds left.

It was Dallas' first victory over the Celtics in 12 tries since joining the NBA in 1980. Boston was the only NBA team the expansion Mavs hadn't defeated.

"It's very exciting for us to beat Boston," said Blackman, who led Dallas with 32 points. "It ranks right up there with the first time we got into the playoffs.

"This victory shows we belong in the NBA now," Blackman said. "We've always had this hanging over our heads. The crowd was so loud we couldn't even hear at the end. It was a fantastic game."

In the only other NBA games, Phoenix surprised Detroit 120-109 and Seattle tripped Golden State 111-108.

Dallas Coach Dick Motta said he wasn't sure he would ever see the Mavericks beat the Celtics.

"It was going to come eventually whether I was the coach here or Rip Van Winkle," Motta said. "Bird put on a clinic and we were fortunate to survive."

Bird said scoring 50 points didn't mean much in a loss.

"I would rather have a 20-point game and win," he said.

"No big deal," Bird added. "I should have had 54. If you play a team enough, losing is finally going to happen. The shots were there for me and I just took them."

Motta said of Dallas' 104-91 deficit with less than five minutes left, "There was every indication this was going to be a bad night. But we showed some professional pride out there."

He laughed and said, "We defended Bird pretty good. Our video tape shows that he had to earn those points. That's how great he is. You think you've done a good job on him and he scores 50."

Brad Davis put Dallas ahead to stay at 111-110, and Dale Ellis' three-pointer with 16 seconds left in the game gave Dallas a four-point lead.

Bird scored a three-point basket before but Blackman hit what proved to be the game-winning free throws.

Boston passed up a possible tying three-point shot and Bird worked inside for a layup with four seconds to go. However, Boston failed to foul on the inbounds pass and the victory was secure.

"I had the choice to take the three-point shot or go to the quick two and take a foul," said Coach K.C. Jones. "Unfortunately, it didn't work out the way we wanted it to. We gave this game away."

It was the second time this season that the Celtics had lost two games in a row.

"Beating Boston with Bird playing as well as he did is really nice," said Davis, who scored 18 points for the Mavericks. "This ranks as one of the best games in Reunion Arena."

Owner Donald Carter said the Mavericks hope to be like the Celtics some day.

"The Celtics are the bullseye you shoot for," he said. "This by far is the high water mark of the franchise."

NBA Roundup

Suns 120, Pistons 109

Larry Nance equalled his NBA career high with 44 points and Phoenix snapped Detroit's 15-game home winning streak.

The Suns never trailed after Nance scored 20 points in the first quarter, leading them to a 36-27 advantage at the end of the period.

Phoenix extended its margin to 75-62 early in the third quarter before the Pistons rallied to cut the deficit to seven. A 10-4 streak rebuilt the 13-point bulge and the Pistons got no closer than nine the rest of the way.

Kelly Tripucka scored 30 points for Detroit, which played without star guard Isiah Thomas, out with a sprained thumb.

SuperSonics 111, Warriors 108

Jack Sikma's three-point play with four seconds remaining gave Seattle its first victory of the season by a margin of three points or less.

Goaltending was called against the Warriors' Larry Smith on the decisive play and Sikma was fouled by Golden State center Joe Barry Carroll. Sikma's free throw gave him a total of 11 points in the final quarter.

Xavier McDaniel scored 26 points and Sikma 23 for the Sonics, now 1-10 in games decided by three points or less. Carroll and Purvis Short scored 22 each for Golden State and Terry Teagle had 21.

Benford top tourney star

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Tech's Tony Benford, a near-unanimous choice as outstanding player after leading the fifth-seeded Red Raiders to the Southwest Conference Post-Season Basketball championship Sunday, was the only unanimous choice on the all-tournament team announced Monday.

Benford was named on all 70 ballots, after getting all but two votes in outstanding player balloting.

Others selected to the all-tournament team were Texas A&M's Winston Crite with 64 votes, Texas Christian's Carl Lott with 56, Tech's Dwayne Chism, 47, and A&M's Don Marbury, 35.

Eighteen players from five schools were listed on the balloting. Five each from TCU and A&M received votes, along with four from Tech, three from Texas and one from Arkansas.

Named to the second team were Texas' John Brownlee with 21 votes; Tech's Sean Gay, 14, and Ray Irvin, nine; A&M's Jimmie Gilbert, eight; and TCU's Greg Grissom, seven.

Tech became the first fifth-seeded team to win the tournament in its 11-year history and ended a string of four straight years in which the top-ranked team went on to claim the title and the automatic SWC bid to the NCAA tournament.

Eight of the 18 SWC men's and women's teams will participate in post-season play, the largest number of teams in the SWC's 71-year history.

Mexico takes Cup win

Associated Press

Riding the surprising victory by teen-ager Leonardo Lavalle, Mexico edged the Boris Becker-led West Germans Monday to move into the World Group quarterfinals in Davis Cup tennis competition.

Lavalle rallied to defeat Michael Westphal 8-10, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-3, giving Mexico the fifth and deciding match against West Germany in the series.

The match was halted by darkness Sunday night with Lavalle leading 3-1 in the fifth set.

With the victory, Mexico advances to the quarterfinals where it will meet the United States, a 3-2 winner over Ecuador.

In another World Group battle decided Monday, Italy clinched a rain-delayed victory over Paraguay.

Students bananas for Goodall's 'Chimpanzoo'

EDITOR'S NOTE: Jane Goodall, famous for her studies of wild chimps in the Tanzanian jungles, has found a way to tap the well of volunteers without threatening their safety. While she studies wild chimps in Africa, college students are observing captive chimps at six zoos across the United States.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Perched high on the edge of the Colorado Rockies, the Cheyenne Mountain Zoo seems light years away from the Tanzanian jungles where Jane Goodall has tracked chimpanzee behavior over the last 25 years.

Yet it is here that Goodall came up the idea of her newest enterprise, Chimpanzoo. While Goodall studies the wild chimps at Gombe Stream Wildlife Preserve, college students will study captive chimps at Cheyenne Mountain and five other zoos across the United States.

The distances from Gombe are part of what made Goodall think it would work.

In 1975, four of Goodall's researchers were kidnapped and held by rebels from nearby Zaire. The four were released safe, after two months, but the incident meant that "Gombe became a politically sensitive area" for the Tanzanian government.

The government discouraged further "imports," and "I myself did not feel that I wanted to take the responsiblilty (for their safety)," Goodall explains.

Hundreds of people, meanwhile, their interest piqued by National Geographic television specials and articles, continue to write Goodall each year, asking to come and help — even if only by washing dishes for the others.

"It's always rather sad to write back now that 'There's nothing I can offer you; there's no way to be part of my research,' " she says.

Chimpanzoo gives people a chance to study primates without leaving the United States. It draws students from U.S. colleges and universities to zoos near their campuses.

Some of what U.S. researchers learn from watching captive chimps will reinforce what Gombe researchers have learned, showing behavioral traits that are "really, truly, innately chimp and absolutely unchangeable, regardless of the environment," Goodall predicts.

Michael Nowak is the Colorado College primatologist who heads the local Chimpanzoo effort, along with a psychology professor and zoo officials. He thinks Chimpanzoo studies will also "show us a lot about what captivity does."

Colorado College is noted for its "modular" approach to the liberal arts, immersing students in one limited area of study for about a month at a time. It's the perfect setting for a project like Chimpanzoo, where student frequently wind up watching the chimps far longer than anyone requires.

Zoos in California, Florida, North Carolina and Oregon also were enlisted for Goodall's latest project, but Colorado College was the first to get students gathering data. Eight signed up for this summer's session at Cheyenne Mountain.

Colorado College students like Karen Coopersmith, a 19-year-old junior from Berkeley, Calif., compiled hours of videotapes and made observations on lengthy, intricate forms.

"I'm taking another course and I haven't done anything for it," Coopersmith admits one morning as she sits on the carpeted observation platform inside the Cheyenne Mountain Primate House.

The first Chimpanzoo class worked a lot on what Goodall calls "environmental enrichment." With permission of zoo director Dave Allen, the class introduced new materials to the spartan, concrete-floored cages where the Cheyenne Mountain chimps live.

Burlap. The chimps took it up on their sleeping platforms at night. Rope. The chimps devised Tarzan-like games. A basketball. Junior, the group's dominant male, used it to jump on as part of his display.

Goodall has suggested introducing items like stationary pots of honey or mustard. The chimps would be lured by the treats to devise ways to get the honey out of the pot, just as they would with twigs in the wild.

"It would be a lot more interesting for zoo visitors, too," Goodall suggests. Railings, Plexiglas and bars separate Cheyenne Mountain visitors from Cheyenne Mountain chimps.

The Cheyenne Mountain cages are clean, but these chimps have no access to the outdoors. Goodall helped start a fund-raising drive for a new primate center during her last visit.

"Obviously, it's very sad for me to see chimps in cages," she says, softly.

After being at it a quarter of a century, Goodall shows no sign of tiring of her work at Gombe. She reels off lists of relationships and patterns on which she and her Tanzanian field assistants still haven't focused.

"The more one learns, the more one wants to follow it through," she says.

Wherever she is on her annual fund-raising tours outside Tanzania, Goodall always seems eager to get back to Gombe, but she has promised to visit each zoo and her surrogate students "at least every other year."

"And we will be able to write letters and, occasionally, telephone," she adds. "You can do a lot that way."

Tornadoes spread debris in three states

Associated Press

The National Guard patrolled Covington, Ky., today under a state of emergency declared after at least 20 tornadoes sliced through three states, killing six people, injuring 70 more and leaving 70,000 people without power.

The tornadoes and winds of up to 90 mph that struck in Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky left Cincinnati's airport — across the Ohio River in Erlanger, Ky. — a shambles, with up to 50 planes damaged, officials said.

"It's a complete disaster," said San Juan Romero, an air traffic manager at the airport. "A bomb could not have done the damage this has done."

Across the three states, the storms and tornadoes tore roofs from buildings, sent mobile homes flying and ripped into the city of Covington, also across the Ohio River from Cincinnati.

Two men died in Indiana, one of them when a barn collapsed on him after he had sought refuge inside. There were three deaths in Ohio when twisters flattened houses. A man using a chain to hold down a barn roof in western Kentucky died when it blew off, dragging him 78 feet, said County Coroner John Muster.

In Johnson County, south of Indianapolis, a roof at a day care center caved in on 130 pre-schoolers, but only three suffered injuries, all of them minor, said Rhea Furry, the center's director.

Inspecting tornado damage to three sheds on his property near St. Joseph, Mo., is John Burgess.

Cincinnati airport spokesman Ted Bushelman said six people suffered minor injuries when the control tower windows blew out as straight-line winds tore through the area.

"There are also 30 to 50 airplanes damaged beyond repair," Bushelman said. Most of the damaged airplanes were small Cessnas, Pipers and a few Lear jets. The airport was closed to flights for two hours while debris was cleared.

In Covington, officials declared an emergency and warned non-residents to keep out after high winds knocked out power to most of the city and ripped the roofs from dozens of buildings. About 50 National Guard troops were sent there, said Gordon Nichols of the state Division of Disaster and Emergency Services.

"At about 20 minutes till 5, we heard this really strong wind. The next thing, it sounded like a bomb went off," said John Carey, who was working in his advertising agency near downtown Covington.

"We saw the wind coming down the street and toppling trees, and we heard glass shattering and debris landing," Carey said.

Police cordoned off large sections of the city. Nichols said no estimate of damage could be made until today when disaster crews begin inspection.

Officials said high winds damaged at least 300 homes in Lexington, Ky.

About 40 people were injured in Newport, Falmouth and Erlanger, said state Trooper Jim Dolwick. Eight to nine injuries were reported in Lexington and Bromley, Ky., along with 22 injuries in Indiana, and four in Ohio.

In Ohio, Muskingum County Sheriff's Deputy Bernie Gibson said at least one person was injured when windows at a dormitory at Muskingum College in New Concord were shattered.

The winds knocked down power lines throughout the area. Almost 20,000 people in the Indianapolis area were left in the dark, but power was restored to all but 400 by early this morning, officials said. About 7,500 Cincinnati Gas & Electric Co. customers and about 700 customers in central Ohio were still without power early this morning.

The tornadoes and winds were spawned by a cold front that rapidly moved across the Ohio Valley and met warm, moist air, said Pete Reynolds at the National Weather Service's Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Meteorologist John T. Curran at Indianapolis airport said at least six tornadoes hit central Indiana.

Floods forecast as spring thaw nears

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spring flooding could threaten shoreline communities along the upper Great Lakes and spill waters onto the streets of Salt Lake City, the National Weather Service is warning.

"This is the year of the lakes, where we have some alarming problems," Michael D. Hudlow, director of the service's Office of Hydrology, said Monday.

"Especially alarming this year are the Great Lakes, where new record high levels are expected to be set," Hudlow said. He said lake levels could be 10 inches higher than last year's record levels by June.

"The potential for flooding and severe property damage and erosion is extremely high for the shoreline of Lakes Erie, Michigan, Huron and Superior," Hudlow told a news conference. The same danger exists for Lake St. Clair, he added, but not Lake Ontario, which benefits from the drainage of the St. Lawrence River.

Some lakeside areas already have been declared disaster areas by the state of Michigan, Hudlow observed, and a December storm caused millions of dollars in damage throughout the region.

And, he added, the Great Salt Lake in Utah is at its highest level since 1875.

"In recent years, we have seen flood waters flowing down the streets of Salt Lake City," he said. "I think we could see that again."

The Great Salt Lake experienced its greatest two-week volume increase on record between mid-February and March 1, Hudlow said, and the lake normally crests about June 1. Utah Lake is also above normal and rising, he said.

Flood potential is moderate in many other areas, but could increase in danger, depending on weather conditions.

Hudlow said the forecast for moderate danger in some regions depends on normal spring weather.
