School board votes not to raise taxes

By DORIAN MARTIN
Staff Writer

Midland taxpayers will have a brief respite from the unending spiral of climbing taxes.

The Midland Independent School District's Board of Trustees voted in Tuesday's regular meeting not to increase actual taxes for the 1981-82 school year.

To avoid the raise in taxes, Dr. James Mailey, MISD superintendent, offered four proposals to trim the budget.

The first, which received the trustees' approval, deleted $455,000 from the budget. The cut affected the school district's public relations department, a contract with the Human Relations Council, the new gifted and talented program, as well as school supplies, materials and field trips.

Another option, which was not passed, called for eliminating 20 elementary school teachers, 10 secondary teachers and 15 classroom aides. This would eliminate $767,000.

This plan also decreased the budget of the gifted and talented program by $189,000.

The total amount this proposal would have saved would have been $956,000.

Instead, the board opted for a measure discontinuing the use of Social Security by the Midland Independent School District. The move will save the district $960,000.

The trustees also approved a proposal for a sick leave rebate program. The program will reimburse employees for unused sick leave days. It will reduce the budget by $182,000.

The three proposals that were approved will add $1.4 million to the school district's working fund.

In other school business, the trustees approved a continuation of MISD's salary schedules.

School employees are paid wages that are 32 percent higher than the state salary schedule. Because of an increase in the state salary schedules, teachers will receive an increase of 12.8 percent on the state schedule plus 32 percent, while other employees will be paid a 12 percent state increase plus 32 percent.

Preliminary architectural plans for two elementary schools and an addition to Midland High School were approved for continued work during the meeting.

Trustees also viewed results of the California Achievement Tests which were administered in April. The results show Midland students are performing at a level equal to or higher than the national norm. Students also scored higher on the April test than on the exam that was administered in September.

City Council considering sewage, airport projects

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Abraham Lincoln once said there's no way to please all the people all the time, and Midland City Council is discovering just how true that is.

On Tuesday during a regular session in City Hall, the council looked at plans and a timetable for piping effluent from the sewage treatment plant to a salt lake eight miles south of the city. This would eliminate its overflowing from holding ponds into Midland Draw and halt criticism by residents along the draw.

But residents in that southern region don't want the effluent, either. After three persons registered their complaints, the council decided to hold off on authorizing the engineering firms from drawing further plans until the July 28 meeting. This should give the residents time to study the preliminary concept.

In addition to that construction project, the council selected a scheme to be added into the city's Master Plan for additions to Midland Regional Airport.

The problem with the sewage treatment plant and its proximity to Midland Draw surfaced last winter. Although the treatment plant is undergoing expansion, the holding ponds were filled to capacity last winter and overflowing into Midland Draw.

TO MEET Midland's growth, the engineering firm of Black and Veatch recommended a plan to divert the effluent to the salt lake.

Ed Reed & Associates, a local hydrology firm, drilled test holes to sample the water in that area to see if the city would be contaminating a good quality of underground water. However, one landowner south of the lake refused to allow drilling of the test holes.

What Ed Reed found is that the salt lake is a "closed hydrological formation" and the effluent could only improve water in that area. In fact, one test hole showed the water to be so full of particles that Reed commented "it's almost too thick to flow."

As a comparison, Reed said that sea water has 32,000 parts per million. One hole tested at 73,300 parts per million, another 32,300, and another 128,290.

"This is indeed a closed system," he said. "I think we can put it to beneficial use."

Glen Doty with Black & Veatch outlined a timetable which would see the city pumping effluent to the salt lake by November 1982. A second phase would be completed by April 1983, which would see the effluent used for irrigation.

THE CITY WOULD have to purchase the land and also obtain permits for discharging the effluent from the Department of Water Resources, said Doty. But the water officials already have noted the closed formation "is attractive for no-discharge permits."

He suggested the city plant alfalfa or coastal bermuda grass, which uses more nitrates than alfalfa and less land.

When the idea first was presented to the council May 26, Doty pegged the project at $20 million, and that would include land costs. He suggested Tuesday that planting alfalfa or coastal bermuda grass would help the city recoup some of the costs.

"Gross income from alfalfa at $60 a ton on 1,700 acres would be $600,000 to $1 million a year," he explained, adding that the same amount would

Boom builds past 1980's record level

A building permit issued for more than $4 million before 11 a.m. today in the City Inspections Office pushed the year's total past the $138 million in building permits issued for all of 1980.

Jim Rymer with HBF Construction walked into City Hall this morning to take out a permit for Southland Royalty Building that will be in ClayDesta Plaza at Big Spring and Wadley streets. And he came up with the winning number, so to speak.

The permit for the $4,350,000 building put the year's total to date to $142,325,438.

Permits for 1980 hit a record-breaking $138,786,181. And the previous record had been set in 1979 with $94 million.

J.B. Keaton, department head, hesitated to guess what the total for 1981 might be. But $200 million might not be unthinkable, he proffered, considering that the year is barely half over.

"I don't understand" the amount of building going on, he said. "It's a fantastic thing. And we still have several major buildings to be permitted."

Rymer commented that "we have people who come in from out of town and can't believe the building going on here."

HBF Construction is putting up some of those buildings, including Meadco Office Building, Coquina addition, ClayDesta Towers, Westwood Village Shopping Center, The Western Building, La Villita Plaza and the Knox Industries Building. Planned by HBF — but not yet permitted — is the Heritage Center, which will be two office towers downtown.

Council sees 'one way' to save city streets

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

Unless the Midland City Council implements a one-way street plan soon, the city's streets are going to reach — and surpass — their capacity to handle vehicles by 1990.

The council looked at a plan for five pairs of one-way streets during a regular meeting Tuesday in City Hall. The plan should alleviate traffic congestion and speed up the flow of vehicles, primarily in the downtown area. A public hearing on the proposal will be held at 5 p.m. Aug. 11 in the Council Chambers.

Jack Hatchell with PAWA of Dallas explained the Central Business District "has experienced phenomenal growth in the past few years." According to announced plans, Midland's 3.9 million square feet of office space should be expanding to 9 million by 1990.

"This adds to congestion along the streets and the needs for improved traffic flow."

The pairs would be Colorado with Loraine, Big Spring with Marienfeld, Wall with Missouri, Michigan with Louisiana, and Illinois with Texas.

One-way streets in the Tall City isn't a new idea, he said, recalling it was first recommended in 1965 by the State Highway Department. And PAWA suggested it after a study in 1977.

LOOKING AT 1977 figures with those of 1981, Hatchell said traffic on Wall Street has increased 23 percent while the figure on Illinois west of Big Spring has gone up 50 percent.

Looking at the 4.1 million square feet of office space that will be added by 1990, Hatchell said traffic on the downtown streets will increase 105 percent. Big Spring Street, for example, will have 32,870 cars a day on it, but the street only has the capacity to handle 25,000. Even making it one-way, the street can take only 28,000.

By making other streets in the downtown area one-way, it will relieve pressure on Big Spring Street, according to Hatchell.

He also pointed to statistics that show fewer accidents occur on one-way streets. For instance, there are only four "conflict points" in an intersection where both streets are one-way, compared to 16 in two-way intersections.

Another positive point for making downtown streets one-way is that parking spaces could be added on streets where they have been eliminated to allow for four driving lanes.

NEW TRAFFIC controls and timing signals could be installed to move traffic faster, Hatchell noted.

Cost of the project — which includes signalizing nine intersections — would be $557,000. The traffic specialist recommended the one-way streets be implemented in six months.

Jess Moore of 3102 Lockheed said he had taken a poll by placing an advertisment in the newspaper. He received 126 endorsements of one-way streets. "The time has come for Midland to be updated."

Fred Tyler with the Chamber of Commerce also endorsed the plan, calling it identical to what had been recommended by a Houston parking study firm.

In other action, the council instructed the city attorney to draw up two ordinances dealing with helicopters in the city. One will follow the Airport Board's recommendations of allowing a helicopter pad only at Air Park and the Regional Airport. The other will follow the philosophy of Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, who said he feels the versatility of helicopters should allow the aircraft in industrial and office complexes.

"If you restrict them too much, you're putting them in the same category as an airplane," he said.

Ed Vogler of the Airport Board, however, countered that Air Park is only a short distance from downtown. He cited safety, noise and the need as three factors to consider in allowing helicopters to land within the city.

THE COUNCIL voted to join with other cities in fighting the rate increase requested by Southwestern Bell Telephone. City Attorney Joe Nuessle remarked that on the last rate case, several cities joined together to oppose it and the phone company

County officials still counting money recovered from burglary

By BILL MODISETT
Staff Writer

Midland County Sheriff's Department officials were still attempting to determine early today the total amount of money recovered from a Midland residence following a tip Monday from an informant concerning the burglary last month of the Water Wonderland amusement park between Midland and Odessa.

Officials also took into custody at the residence a 15-year-old male juvenile and a 17-year-old male adult. David Cobos, the sheriff's department investigator assigned to the case, said the 15-year-old will be taken before the juvenile board soon to determine how to handle the case against him. Charges were to be filed later today against the 17-year-old, Cobos said.

The burglary at Water Wonderland reportedly resulted in a loss of an estimated $20,000 in cash. Some $3,450 in change — mostly quarters — was taken, along with an estimated $7,000 in paper currency.

Cobos said this morning that the money will be placed in a money counter to determine the exact amount of the recovery. He added that some $2,000 to $3,000 had been spent.

Sheriff's department officials had obtained a search warrant for the residence Tuesday, Cobos said, following a discussion with an informant Monday in which the department received "some pretty detailed information."

Upon serving the search warrant and searching the residence about 6 p.m. Tuesday, officers located a large sum of money in a bedroom. They also found a plastic ice chest buried in the back yard that contained thousands of quarters.

Immediately following the Water Wonderland burglary, officers indicated entry to the building was gained by cutting the fence and crawling through an air-conditioner duct.

Officers say the investigation is continuing.

Harrelson prefers jail to testifying

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Joann Starr Harrelson, the blackjack-playing wife of convicted hired killer Charles V. Harrelson, said today she would go to jail rather than testify in the investigation into the 1979 assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Government attorneys filed a motion to compel her testimony which could result in her jailing later today.

"I'm not going to testify," the 41-year-old blonde told reporters at the federal courthouse. "I really have nothing to tell them and I don't believe they'd believe the answers. I believe they want to charge me with perjury."

Mrs. Harrelson arrived alone at the courthouse and made the surprise announcement that Houston attorney Don Ervin no longer represents her. The government had moved in May to disqualify Ervin as her attorney because he also represents her husband and daughter, Teresa Starr Jasper.

The government has listed all three members of the Harrelson family as "targets" of the grand jury investigation, along with El Paso brothers Joe and Jimmy Chagra and Jimmy Chagra's wife, Elizabeth.

Mrs. Harrelson said she and Ervin discussed the situation in Houston Tuesday and that Ervin advised her against signing a waiver of conflict of interest.

"I would have to sign a waiver to keep him as my attorney. I don't want to waive any of my rights. He's no longer representing me. He's representing Teresa and Charles," Mrs. Harrelson said.

Mrs. Jasper signed such a waiver on March 27 shortly before she was found in civil contempt and jailed for refusing to answer grand jury questions.

Mrs. Harrelson went briefly to the grand jury room today, then emerged saying govenment attorneys gave her until 1:30 p.m. to retain another attorney, otherwise U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions would appoint a lawyer for her.

She also displayed a motion dated May 20 in which prosecutors seek to compel her to testify under threat of jail.

"I plan not to testify. I plan to take the Fifth and husband-wife privilege," Mrs. Harrelson said as she headed for a taxi to look for another lawyer.

David Cobos, an investigator for the Midland County Sheriff's Department, today displays some of the money officials say was taken in the June burglary of the Water Wonderland amusement park and recovered Tuesday from a Midland residence. An estimated $20,000 in cash was taken in the burglary, but officials aren't sure how much was recovered. The money recovered included thousands of quarters which were buried in the back yard in a plastic ice chest.

come in from coastal bermuda grass.

"Because we're cramped for time, I ask the council to authorize us to proceed with the design. This is the best closed structure we've found that's close enough to use," he concluded.

Mark Skeen, an attorney representing Helen Bradford, said the project had just come to the attention of the landowners and "they don't want it there. Let's see if it's necessary or look for a better alternative."

"This has been going on for quite some time," replied Mayor G. Thane Akins.

Frances Wiley, another landowner, complained that the effluent would flow into Monahans Draw and "we've already got Odessa's sewage. Do we have to have Midland's too?"

JOE REED with Ed Reed & Associates pointed out that Monahans Draw runs north of the site. And the salt lake "is totally outside of the watershed of Monahans Draw."

The landowners will have two weeks to see the reports and plans for the project. Meanwhile, the City Council will hold a joint session on July 27, with the County Commissioners to review results of a six-month study on the sewage treatment plant, its holding ponds and Midland Draw.

The scheme chosen by the council for additions to Midland Regional Airport would involve the least disruption to the terminal area. Bill Waeur with the engineering firm of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper said the plan has the "adaptability to expand" to meet the airport's needs through 1990 and would mean the least cost.

For the three-phase plan, which would go up to the year 2000, total cost is $54.2 million. The first phase would cost $17.2 million and add more parking spaces for vehicles, two new aircraft parking positions and an addition to the Terminal building. By the end of the third phase, 2,150 parking spaces will have been added.

THE ONLY DISADVANTAGE, said Wauer, is that Scheme 3 calls for ground level, rather than multi-level, parking. This would mean a longer walking distance to the Terminal building. But the council could change it to multi-level.

Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, supported the plan, saying that "there is nothing on the horizon that boardings will turn downward. People are disgusted with us on the parking situation right now and rightfully so. We're about at the peak of what we can take in on parking."

The council was advised by another representative of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper that the project could be funded by monies from the Federal Aviation Administration, revenue bonds and general obligation bonds. Banks said after the meeting that the airport is "paying its own way and making some profit."

How much would be needed in general obligation bonds would depend upon how much they sought in revenue bonds — which don't require a tax increase.

Weather expected to remain clear, hot in Permian Basin

The thermometer in Midland reached the century mark Tuesday, marking a departure from the relatively mild summertime temperatures the Permian Basin has been experiencing.

The even 100-degree reading did not threaten the record 107, however, set in 1933, while the overnight low of 66 was a full five degrees off the record low for the date of 64 set in 1960.

A high in the upper 90s is expected for the next couple of days, according to the National Weather Service, with early morning lows in the upper 60s. Winds tonight should be 5-10 mph.

No rainfall is forecast for the near future, and the yearly total remains at 6.94 inches.

Early morning thunderstorms rolled across portions of the south plains and the Panhandle today and much of West Texas, the hill country and the Gulf coast were blanketed by cloud cover.

Temperatures at 4 a.m. ranged from 60 degrees at Marfa to 81 degrees at Dallas, Wichita Falls and Palacios. Winds were from the south at five to 15 mph.

Today's forecast called for partly cloudy skies in South and West Texas and widely scattered thunderstorms over the south plains, Panhandle, and southwest mountains. Highs should be in the 90s across most the the state, in the upper 80s along the coast and near 103 along the Big Bend.

Heavy thundershowers reached from southwestern Minnesota through southern Wisconsin and central Iowa today.

Rainstorms caused minor flooding and road closings in southwestern Colorado. Motorists were trapped overnight in their cars near Ouray, Colo. because of mudslides, but workers got food to them and there were no injuries, authorities said. A flash flood watch for southern Colorado was continued.

Odessa officials issue plea for help in finding killer

ODESSA — Officials for the Odessa Police Department and Ector County Sheriff's Department have issued a public plea for assistance in helping find the killer or killers of 10-year-old Ruben Arellano.

Odessa Detective Capt. Jack Fillyaw noted that the plea was issued during a Tuesday news conference.

The boy's nude body was found early Monday morning in a stock tank on a South Ector County oil lease. The body had been missing since late Saturday night.

"We're just asking for anyone who saw anything that particular night to call the police department," Capt. Fillyaw said this morning.

Little is known about the boy's death at this point, police officials say. Pathologist Richard Cohen said Tuesday that an autopsy completed Monday revealed that the boy died from several blows to the front of the head and "probably was not" sexually molested.

The Arellano boy's body was found about 8 a.m. Monday in about three feet of water in a metal stock tank on the South Cowden Oil lease. An oilfield worker noticed the boy's clothing scattered in a pasture and contacted sheriff's deputies by two-way radio.

Officials declined this morning to say whether the boy was killed at the oil lease or killed and then his body taken to the lease. It was noted, however, that it's unlikely that the boy rode his bicyle 15 miles from his home to the oil lease.

When the boy's body was found, the front wheel was missing from his bicycle, officers reported, but Cohen indicated the boy was not run over. Officers have speculated that the bicycle wheel may have been taken by the killer to make lawmen think the boy was the victim of a hit-and-run accident.

Officers also have indicated that the killer apparently is someone who knew the area in which the boy's body was found because it is accessible only by way of a maze of dirt roads.

Police are saying only that they have "several leads" at this time and no motive.

was granted much less of an increase than it requested.

"They (Bell Telephone) have the biggest earnings of any corporation, so I don't think it hurts to take a look at it (rate request)," he added.

Margaret Wade's zone change request to build mini-warehouses in south Midland was approved by the council. When the item first came up, some residents in the area opposed the idea, saying they preferred to see housing.

The council decided to look into a mobile home development similar to one in Odessa. But Mrs. Wade said Tuesday the developer wasn't interested in the Midland site because there are no paved streets and no water or sewer lines.

Employment of a consultant to update the sanitary sewer system was approved. Fred Baker, director of public works, noted the "dramatic growth we've had. We're going to experience problems with our sanitary sewer system. We're going to have to get this study done before we install lines that would be too small for future needs."

Duplex townhouses will be going up in a sparsely developed area between Pecos Street and Spruce Avenue and the alley south of Pecan Avenue. The council approved a plan by Rodney Roberts for two- and three-bedroom homes that will cost about $65,000 to $75,000.

THE CITY IS advertising for bids to sell Tolbert Park in the northeast section of Midland. The YMCA had requested it be put up for sale, and the city included the item in the last election. The idea to sell it was approved by the voters.

A hearing at 5 p.m. on what to do with $550,000 of Revenue Sharing funds brought no comments from the public. The city staff has recommended that all the money go to pay off the new Municipal Court building that will be constructed later this year.

The council also approved a resolution to purchase Heath Furniture Store on Main Street for $460,000.

And an audit will be made on the productivy program under way in the Street Division.

City Manager James Brown said the program was instituted last year at a cost of $40,000 for the consultant. But the city has netted $190,000 in savings and has seen more work done and better use of manpower. This audit, he said, "will tell us how we're doing and show us where we've strayed."

New one-hour parking meters will be going up along the County Courthouse. Fred Baker displayed the new models, which are black bodies with red, white and blue tops.

"We wanted them to be noticed," he explained.

Lawyers take bizarre Hughes claims seriously

HOUSTON (AP) — Lawyers representing 22 distant relatives of billionaire Howard Hughes say they have to take bizarre claims against the estate by supposed close relatives seriously because Hughes himself was such an eccentric.

"Sure you tend to laugh them off at first. But you have a legal responsibility to your clients to make sure they are not valid claims," Shelton Smith, who represents two cousins who are among the so-called "known heirs" in the 5-year-old battle to inherit the tycoon's fortune, said Tuesday.

Claims of two women who purported to be Hughes' widow and two people who said they were his children were thrown out of court Monday after Probate Judge Pat Gregory ruled when Hughes died his closest surviving relatives were a few cousins. His estate has been estimated at between $180 million and $2 billion.

A woman in a light green dress who said her name was Alma Hughes said she deserves to inherit the fortune because she said Hughes married her in a Dallas hospital in 1973 when she was there for hemorrhoid surgery and he was in for a hair transplant.

She said she bore him a son when she was 64 and mentioned in her deposition that Hughes had 17 midgets working for him.

Another woman claiming to be Hughes' widow, Alyce Hughes, who bustled into court late with an armful of newspaper clippings, photographs and books said she was the rightful heir of the eccentric tycoon because she said he married her twice in 1946. She was shushed by her own attorney as she tried to address the judge directly.

"I think all of these people were probably sincere about their claims. Both wives really believed the stories they were telling," said Smith. "We had extensive investigations done on these people. You have to take them seriously — Howard Hughes did some weird things in his time."

But how weird?

According to Alma Hughes' deposition, he artificially inseminated her when she was 63 after he married her in Baylor Hospital, said Wayne Fisher, the lead attorney for the "known heirs."

Braniff adding fourth flight, larger plane to its service

Braniff International is adding a fourth flight and a larger plane to its service at Midland Regional Airport, according to Mike Jolly, regional sales manager.

Approval for the new flight and larger aircraft came late Tuesday, he said.

Flight No. 433 will leave Dallas-Fort Worth Airport at 3:20 p.m. and arrive in Midland at 4:20 p.m. It will depart at 4:50 p.m. and arrive at D-FW at 5:45 p.m.

Instead of the 727-100s that are used on the other three flights, this late afternoon service will utilize a 727-200 to provide more seating.

Flight 433 will connect to Midland from 14 other cities with only a short wait. And when it gets to Dallas at 5:45 p.m., the flight connects to 18 other major cities.

"The demand has been such that we've been wanting to add the flight and larger plane for some time," said Jolly. It had been scheduled for January, but the plane was needed elsewhere.

Chicago lawyer plans remake of '1984' film

CHICAGO (AP) — Marvin Rosenblum has seen the future, and he wants a piece of it — 1984 to be precise.

It struck him as an idea whose time is coming, an idea sparked one day in 1979 when Rosenblum scanned his library and spotted the volume "1984" by British author George Orwell.

To Rosenblum, a 38-year-old attorney who believes timing is everything, the leap from the book to the silver screen seemed a natural. With the year 1984 drawing near and the thought that someone else might also be thinking of movie rights, he asked himself, "Why not Rosenblum?"

It was not a presumptious question.

This is the same Rosenblum who, while a law student at the University of Chicago, dreamed up and marketed the Spiro Agnew wristwatch.

The same Rosenblum who came up with the idea (it never did pan out) of having 4 million people across the country link hands simultaneously as the ultimate expression of Bicentennial fever.

At the beginning, this latest idea seemed doomed to similar failure. Rosenblum could not find a copy of the original 1956 movie, which starred Edmund O'Brien and Jan Sterling as the doomed lovers Winston and Julia. He had not known that Orwell's widow, Sonia — said to be unhappy with the film — had withdrawn all prints from circulation in 1976, when the license expired.

Rosenblum next tried to find the agent for Orwell's estate. He had no luck until February 1980, when he contacted agent Robin Dalton in California and flew out after a brief conversation.

"She agreed to press my case with the right people," he said.

The "right people" turned out to be the author's widow herself, in failing health in England. In August 1980, he flew to London to lunch with Mrs. Orwell. He sensed that his goal was near.

But Mrs. Orwell at first demanded complete creative control, "which would have made any deal untenable," recalled Rosenblum, "and I knew she wouldn't relinquish it to anyone that she didn't trust. She is very protective of his work."

Rosenblum, however, was prepared. Before the meeting, he read almost everything Orwell had written and underwent some intensive "briefing" by University of Chicago professor Sanford Schwarz. He finished the final volume of Orwell's journals just before stepping off the plane in London.

"The discussion was like squeezing water out of a sponge. Everything I had soaked up, I discussed with her. I found out later that she told people I was the first person who really did his homework," Rosenblum said. "After trying to convince her that I had read his books and come to some understanding of his vision, I cited an obscure essay he had written on the cinema.

"The premise was to get the message — his message — out to as many people as possible," he continued. "The cinema afforded that chance, and once I assured her that I didn't envision the movie as a special-effects extravaganza, or a glitzy production, I think we reached an understanding."

Shortly after Thanksgiving last year, Mrs. Orwell phoned him to say she would sign a contract. With a British notary public in tow, and arrangements made to register the contract at the U.S. Embassy in London, Rosenblum concluded his odyssey Dec. 1, 1980, at Mrs. Orwell's bedside.

She died nine days later.

Orwell's "1984" was first published in 1949, an unsettling essay in the quiet readjustment period following World War II.

Remarkable for its prophetic depiction of a society controlled and manipulated through technology undreamed of at the time it was written, "1984" fast became a catchword in the language, a symbol of vague fears of totalitarianism. "Big Brother Is Watching You," the slogan on the omnipresent posters in the "1984" society, became a tense joke in a world where government surveillance grew along with technology.

If timing is everything, the movie project can't miss — Rosenblum has targeted December 1983 or January 1984 as the release date. Owning the movie rights, however, is no guarantee that Rosenblum's version of Orwell's disturbing vision will end up on film.

He is busy now putting together the "package," trying to line up a director and a writer, deciding whether to offer it to a studio or go the independent route.

"I know of no other industry that continues to operate with something like a 70 percent failure rate," Rosenblum said of moviemaking. "And ... you're depending on the mood of some 10 million moviegoers. If you subscribe to the premise that you want to reach the most people, the aim is not to make an art film. We're not trying to re-create literary excellence in the cinema. They are different mediums."

Still, he mused, "Whenever you start with a classic book, you have a leg up on making a classic film. ... The point is that there, but for good government, go we."

Giving doctors life

When the sun went down in Austin at the end of the 140-day regular legislative session, one of the items that got caught in the darkness was the continuation of the Medical Practices Act and the functions of the Texas State Board of Medical Examiners.

Gov. Bill Clements included the Medical Practices Act among the five items to be considered during the month-long special session which began Monday.

Without action to extend the provisions of the act, the Board of Medical Examiners will be abolished on Sept. 1. After that date, points out Texas Medical Association President Dr. Bill Ross of Dallas, there would be no entity to enforce the laws governing the practice of medicine and no one to give examinations and to license new physicians. If no agency exists to renew licenses that expire Dec. 31, 1981, all physicians in the state would become unlicensed practitioners.

If that happened, under laws governing prescription drugs and hospitals, no physician in Texas would be authorized to posses and prescribe those drugs. Operation of hospitals throughout the state would be threatened. Health care could be seriously affected.

There's no reason to think that scenario will come to pass, of course. The problem has been brought to the attention of state officials who undoubtedly will take steps during the current 30-day session to remedy the situation.

What is important at this point is for the Legislature to recognize the importance of the Medical Practices Act and to respond accordingly.

Few points needed to be settled when the regular session ended. The two issues that kept the proposed extension of the Medical Practices Act from passing were a so-called anti-discrimination clause and a provision that would have allowed optometrists to use substances identified by law as dangerous drugs and controlled substances.

The use of ophthalmic drugs for diagnostic and therapeutic purposes has been limited, by law, to physicians, primarily ophthalmologists, who are trained in their use. Such physicians are trained to respond to the serious reactions that can result from use of the drugs. We believe that's a good practice and that in the special session provision should be made to limit use of ophthalmic drugs to physicians.

The anti-discrimination measure as proposed in the regular session would limit a hospital in determining standards for the physicians granted privileges to utilize the hospital facilities for patient care. That question still needs to be resolved by the Legislature.

As soon as these two issues can be resolved, the Medical Practices Act should be passed. It's essential to the Texas health community.

A preposterous story

The Washington rumor mill has it that someone in the State Department suggested transferring the 1,200 Cuban criminals and misfits left over from last year's boat lift to the U.S. Naval base at Guantanamo Bay.

The base, located on Cuba's southeastern coast and still leased to the United States under terms of a 1903 treaty, would then be surrendered to Fidel Castro.

If there is any truth to this preposterous rumor, it's proof positive that the ghosts of Jimmy Carter and Andrew Young live on somewhere in the bowels of the State Department. The refugees weren't wanted in the United States in the first place and have created problems, but now that we have them we'll not compromise their human rights.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, July 15, the 196th day of 1981. There are 169 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 15, 1945, Italy declared war on Japan, its former axis partner during World War II.

On this date:

In 1606, the Dutch artist, Rembrandt, was born in Leiden.

In 1789, France's King Louis XVI was awakened and told that his authority had collapsed with the fall of the Bastille prison.

In 1870, Georgia became the last of the Confederate States to be readmitted to the Union.

And in 1975, America's Apollo spacecraft and the Soviet Union's Soyuz blasted into orbit for a rendezvous in space.

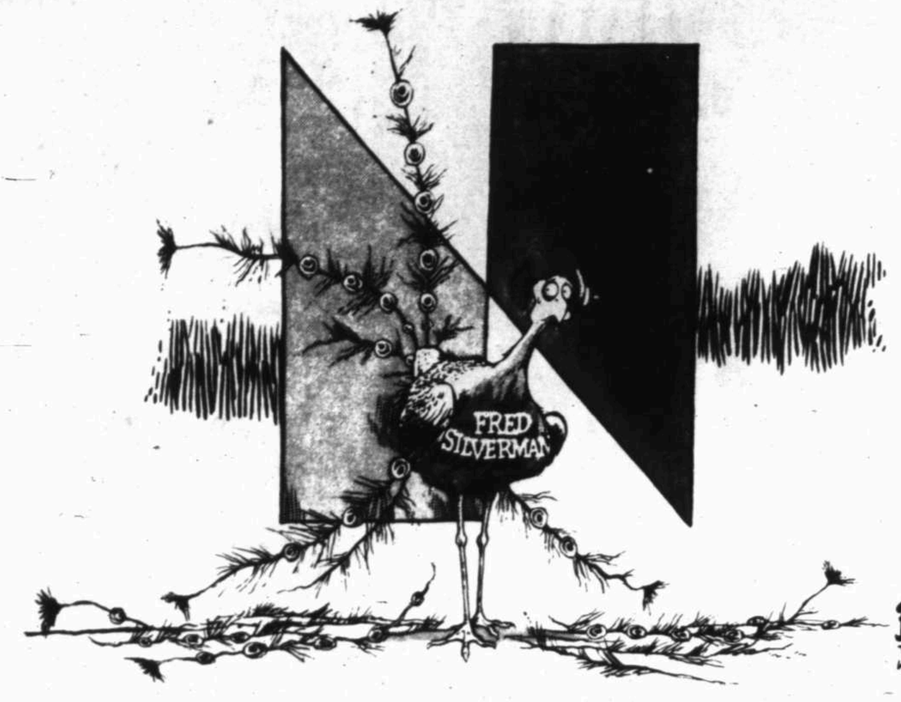
Ten years ago: President Richard Nixon announced he would visit the People's Republic of China to seek what he called "a normalization of relations."

Five years ago: the Democratic National Convention adjourned after approving Jimmy Carter's choice of Sen. Walter Mondale for the number two spot.

One year ago: doctors in a military hospital in West Germany said former hostage Richard Queen was suffering from multiple sclerosis that may have been triggered by his eight-month ordeal in Iran.

Today's birthday: DuPont Board Chairman Irving Shapiro is 65 years old.

Thought for today: A simple life is its own reward. — George Santayana, Spanish poet-philosopher (1863-1952).



WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Khomeini's Iran now a scene of turmoil

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Iran is in turmoil, and the world's greatest oil treasure is in jeopardy. If a pro-Soviet government should rise out of the ashes of Iran, the Kremlin could wind up controlling the Persian Gulf, which is the fountainhead of most of the Western World's oil.

The events inside Iran are so murky that our intelligence services unfortunately aren't sure which reports are reliable, which are wishful thinking and which are simply rumors.

I have always had my own direct sources of information on Iran. They are moderates and intellectuals who hope that some day Iran will become a stable democracy.

They correctly predicted that the shah would be overthrown by a violently anti-American government. They gave me enough backup evidence that I published this warning a full year before the Central Intelligence Agency realized that the shah was in trouble.

Now these same sources have furnished me with the latest information on Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and his fascist clerics. One source, who was fiercely and actively opposed to the shah, told my associate Joseph Spear that Khomeini is infinitely worse. "A government that is 1 percent democracy is better than a government which has no democracy at all," he explained.

Here are the latest bits of information, some of it conflicting, that our sources have obtained by clandestine telephone messages direct from Iran.

— Iran is in utter chaos. The economy is shattered. Prices are soaring, and there are long lines waiting to buy the necessities of life. About 70 percent of Iran's industries are shut down.

— Some experts suspect the Russians are trying actively to "destabilize" the Khomeini government, hoping that a successor regime would be pro-Soviet. Other sources dispute this, insisting the Soviets have been fairly quiet, preoccupied with Poland and Afghanistan.

— Top-level U.S. officials are wondering if the Iranian army isn't the last best hope of overthrowing Khomeini and setting up a stable, less anti-American government. Iranian sources say this is a vain hope, because the military is almost totally disorganized after repeated purges of its top leadership by Khomeini. When the ayatollah fired ex-President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr as commander-in-chief, for instance, he had to call each military post, one by one, to notify the local commanders, because there was no central military authority and no chain of command to pass the word.

— Khomeini is a criminal. Justice would be served if he were put on trial. His indictment would include suppression of human rights, torture and summary execution of thousands of political opponents, persecution of Jews and other religious minorities, instigation of the illegal seizure and detention of the American hostages, and incitement of the anti-American rioting in neighboring Pakistan. A secret list reportedly exists of between 6,000 and 8,000 Iranians who have been executed by Khomeini's revolutionary squads.

— The moderates in Iran are either dead or on the run. Here's a rundown on some of the more prominent moderate leaders: ex-President Bani-Sadr is in hiding, probably in the Kurdish region of western Iran; ex-Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh has been jailed twice in the past six months for statements that "agitated" the situation; Ibrahim Yazdi, another ex-foreign minister and a newspaper publisher, was attacked by fundamentalist ruffians and wound up in the hospital; ex-Premier Mehdi Bazargan is in hiding, as is his first foreign minister, Karim Sanjabi; Ali Agah, last charge d'affaires in Washington, is in jail, charged with corruption — specifically, selling some of the embassy's rugs and pocketing the money.

BUFFALO BULL: The medium is the message, Marshall McLuhan said, and Interior Secretary James Watt apparently believes it. And since press releases are the bureaucrats' medium of choice, Watt's Office of Public Affairs has figured out how to get its message across right at the top of the page, even before the reader's eye catches the written content.

The Interior Department seal — formerly a green-on-white buffalo — has been printed on all the PR stationery, but with a significant difference: Not only is it a bolder blue-on-white, but the buffalo has been turned around to face right, the direction Watt is taking his department.

●

SUBSIDIZED "HOUSING": Renting can be a lot more profitable than owning, if the landlord is Uncle Sam and the tenant is a multibillion-dollar defense contractor.

Corporations like Grumman, Lockheed, McDonnell Douglas, Rockwell and General Dynamics have plants all over the country that are leased from the federal government — sometimes for less than 10 percent of their market value.

The leasing deal also lets the favored contractors avoid property taxes, giving them a competitive edge over companies that own their own plants and must pay such taxes.

Evidence of this widespread arrangement, subsidized by the taxpayers, was unearthed by a researcher named Gordon Adams, author of "The Iron Triangle," a recent study of the incestuous relationship among defense contractors, Congress and the Pentagon.

A former New York suburban housewife was given a life sentence for committing Nazi war crimes. The neighbors became suspicious when she was the only one in the garden club with a bunker in the back yard.

And when she accidentally wore her arm band to the Safeway, that did it.

A McDonald's chain in West Germany proudly advertises that "almost nothing sold or used in our restaurants is made in America." If you're going over there, be sure and try a Kraut McMuffin.

Some of West Germany's youthful pacifists have been holding anti-American demonstrations aimed at our so-called militancy and materialism. The demonstrators are the ones wearing the hobnail-sandals.

ART BUCHWALD

Situation just wasn't the 'best'!

"Wouldn't it be wonderful," said Lady Di to Prince Charles, "if John McEnroe was your best man at our wedding?"

Art Buchwald

"That would be smashing," Prince Charles said. "I don't think an American has ever been best man at a royal English wedding."

"I wonder if he would do it," Lady Di said.

"I'm certain he would, particularly if we explained how much it meant to all our subjects."

"I must say the British people do love him. What magic do you think he holds over the empire?" Lady Di said.

Prince Charles said, "If I had to sum it up I would call it savoir faire. The chap seems to have been born with it. Remember when he went up to the lineswoman at Wimbledon and joked with her about her call? The dear woman was so charmed she was speechless."

"He also had a sense of friendliness about him that is lacking in most Yanks. He'll interrupt the middle of a match to talk to the head umpire. No one ever interrupts what he's doing to talk to the umpire anymore."

Prince Charles said, "Do you think I should call Mum, and ask her if it's all right?"

Lady Di said, "I don't know why we have to call Mum. I believe if we kept it a secret from everyone it would be a marvelous surprise. Everyone else will be in uniform and John will be standing there in his Wimbledon blazer holding his trophy over his head as I walk down the aisle. Won't that be a sight?"

"Daddy may laugh," Prince Charles said, "but I'm not sure about Mum. How can we get him to come?"

"Why don't you call him up? All he can say to you is go suck a tennis ball."

"I'll do it. Hello, is this John McEnroe? This is Prince Charles of England ... No, I'm not calling about Wimbledon. I know you're really not a bad person. Yes, of course, it was all the press' fault. Isn't it always? Mr. McEnroe, I called about another matter ... Yes, of course, I'll give the Wimbledon organizers a message ... I see. Well, maybe it wouldn't be proper for someone from the royal family to give that message. Perhaps I can get one of my stable grooms to do it ... What I'm calling about, John, is Lady Di and I were wondering — yes, we did see that call in the semi-finals ... Lady Di and I thought it was out by a mile ... But then one has to leave these things to the linesmen and women, don't we? We don't? You're asking what the royal family is going to do about it? ... No, John, we can't cut off the linesmen's hands. They do those things in Iran and Saudi Arabia, but we're powerless to do anything like that here ... No, Mum can't even order it. That isn't how our monarchy works. If someone makes a mistake at Wimbledon we try to forget it ... John, will you listen to me ... I can't put them in the Tower of London ... Yes. Well, John, Lady Di and I were calling to extend our congratulations to you for your magnificent win at Wimbledon. You have brought Great Britain and the United States closer together ... Goodbye, John."

"Why didn't you ask him to be your best man?" Lady Di said.

Prince Charles replied, "It just didn't seem like the right time."

A CHANGING WORLD

Patti's 'stance' isn't grounded on fact, just naivete

In the 1970s the nuclear power industry — and all Americans interested in surviving the energy crunch — had Jane Fonda to contend with.

John Pinkerman

Fonda is a bit on the quiet side these days but a new and not nearly so talented or famous actress is taking over the job of denouncing and leading the militant marches against nuclear energy. Although she has no star standing in the movie or TV industry, she has another kind of name identification. She is Patti Davis, daughter of President and Mrs. Reagan.

While not as shrill as Fonda, Davis (she rejects the name Reagan in personal identification) is equally uninformed about energy, nuclear or any other kind.

She doesn't know, it appears, that there never has been a fatality in commercial nuclear plant operations. She also doesn't know, it appears, that at the same time as she speaks for alternate sources like coal, more radiation is released from coal-burning power plants than from nuclear operations.

Even as the March 1979 accident at the Three-Mile Island nuclear plant in Pennsylvania continues to be the whipping boy for the Fondas, the Davises and all the other anti-nuke militants, she doesn't know, it appears, that continuing tests show that Three-Mile Island area residents do not receive any more radiation from that plant than they do from natural sources day after day.

One has to wonder why Davis, as the president's daughter, felt she had to be "true to myself" and join with the anti-nuke crowd. Mr. Reagan favors nuclear power and daughter Patti has every right to disagree. But, to become the rallying point in opposition to her father seems a little much.

Obviously, she is not opposed to all power. If she were, one might ask where she was last January when seven men were killed at the Pacific Gas and Electric Co., Helms Creek, Calif., hydroelectric project. This accident took lives, which no nuclear mishap has, but it had nothing whatsoever to do with that bogeyman that is nuclear energy.

Davis' physical attractiveness and power of persuasion notwithstanding, nuclear power is the best energy source of the short-term future (before solar power becomes economically and technologically feasible), and even a partly liberal Democratic Congress seems to recognize this.

A Democratic-controlled committee recently recommended that 10 completed A-plants be granted operating licenses, finally breaking through the licensing blockade resulting from Three-Mile Island troubles. Even staunch nuclear power foes like Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., a leader along with Fonda and Davis in opposing new licenses, admit that both the House and the Senate will approve and Mr. Reagan will sign the go-ahead A-plant bill.

Perhaps Davis is too late with her opposition, and it should be good news to all Americans that she is. Nuclear power is safe and the 72 plants operating now produce energy at 20 percent of the cost of oil and 40 percent of the cost of coal. Davis also might like to know, as she wages her sincere but naive fight, that a Gallup Poll taken soon after the Three-Mile Island incident showed that a majority of Americans still supported nuclear power.

Congress should be congratulated for seeing the light in the move to clear licensing of 10 plants in the South and West, but there are 15 other plants completed or near completion that should be freed from the licensing logjam.

They are designed to save billions of dollars and millions of barrels in Mideast oil, PLUS making possible consumer utility bill savings ranging from $2.79 to $15.60 monthly.

There is every logical reason to get on with expansion of nuclear power. The additional energy source is needed, the public deserves the savings involved and the industry's record proves its dedication to safety. Patti Davis (Reagan) is entitled to her opinion and her right to express it but her stance is not becoming a president's child.

Helicopter carrying a tank of malathion, visible in its open hatch, returns to its base after six passes over the Palo Alto, Calif., area before dawn today.

Spraying operation continues; Further infestation discovered

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A helicopter sprayed pesticide on the San Francisco Bay area for a second day today as an infestation of fruit flies was detected in a new area and five Southern states clamped down on shipments of California produce.

Two helicopters were to have taken off before dawn to spray malathion mixed with a sticky sweet bait over a 17-square-mile area of homes and yards. One helicopter took off at 12:30 a.m. PDT, but officials decided not to use the other craft, apparently because of mechanical problems.

Officials had feared a mass panic when a lone helicopter launched the spraying program Tuesday morning, dumping the pesticide over a 1,200-foot-wide strip six miles long. But Monday and Tuesday night, fewer than 100 people came to Red Cross shelters set up for refugees.

A pump failure halted the mission Monday after about 100 gallons of malathion had been dumped, Medfly Project officials said.

Palo Alto police said security in the spray area will be increased today after a protest Tuesday by two-dozen people. A state worker was slashed with a knife as he tried to protect a guidance beacon for the helicopter. One man was arrested.

State and federal officials said the overwhelming majority of scientists believe the malathion application poses no health threat. But Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. and others have cited statements by a few scientists that not enough is known about whether the chemical might cause birth defects or cancer.

The target area was increased to 129 square miles Tuesday after more Mediterranean fruit fly maggots were discovered in Milpitas, northeast of the original spraying zone around San Jose.

The zone being sprayed today included parts of Palo Alto, Mountain View, Los Altos and Los Altos Hills.

More than 142 medfly maggots have been discovered in the area during the past two months, raising fears that the adaptable, fast-breeding pest will spread and devastate the California agriculture industry, which produces nearly half the nation's fruits and vegetables.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture expanded the medfly quarantine Monday to include more than 2,000 square miles of Alameda, Santa Clara and San Mateo counties. The quarantine requires fumigation of any crops leaving the area.

And by Tuesday, as an extra precaution, officials in Alabama, North Carolina, Georgia, Texas and Louisiana had announced they would be making their own checks to assure that no produce from any part of California got across their borders unless the fruit or vegetables had been fumigated first or certified free of flies.

"We didn't feel we could sit around and wait and take the chance of our industry becoming contaminated and infested because it would be a long-term loss to the consumers," said Louisiana Commissioner of Agriculture Bob Odom.

A spokesman for Florida Agriculture Commissioner Doyle Conner said the state hadn't ruled out participation in the multistate quarantine but had taken no action yet. Arkansas, South Carolina, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Illinois ruled out an immediate quarantine.

South Carolina Agriculture Commissoner Bryan Patrick said Tuesday that quarantine plans are being formed in case the medfly situation worsens in California although no quarantine has been ordered. He said he felt Texas and other Western states would effectively keep contaminated produce from reaching his state.

Officials in Tennessee said they would decide today whether to impose a quarantine.

Texas won't welcome produce

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — California fruits and vegetables will be unwelcome in Texas unless they are fumigated or certified free of the Mediterranean fruit fly, says Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown.

Brown said the quarantine would be effective at noon Monday, with all produce trucks being stopped at Texas' borders.

"This plan is imposed to protect the Texas produce industry," Brown announced Tuesday.

Brown, who is president of the Southern Association of State Departments of Agriculture, said he discussed the blocakde with agriculture officials in seven other Southern states and most indicated their support.

His office said later if any other states had ordered blockades also.

Brown said trucks carrying produce and plants from California counties not under the present U.S. Department of Agriculture quarantine would be allowed to enter Texas if certified by California officials that the fruit came from a county free of Mediterranean fruit flies.

Any shipments from such areas without certification must be fumigated at state agriculture facilities in El Paso.

Any shipments from California counties under the USDA Medfly quarantine must have certification that the produce was fumigated in California. "Otherwise, the trucks will be turned back or the shipment will be confiscated or destroyed," Brown said.

"The plan for aerial spraying in the quarantine areas of California is going to help eradicate the fruit fly, but I believe that the severity of infestation warrants taking further measures," Brown said.

"This quarantine is imposed to protect the Texas produce industry, but it also enables consumers to have a continuous food supply. This plan should not cause undue disruption of the marketing process."

Flordia agriculture agents inspecting produce; No fruit flies reported

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — If Mediterranean fruit flies come to Florida more than 13,000 checkpoints are geared up to detect the destructive insects, but so far none has been spotted.

Florida agriculture agents are continuing to inspect truckloads of fruits and vegetables from California, but state officials report no indication of any infestation yet.

"Everything has been negative so far," Hal Jones, director of the state Department of Agriculture's Plant Industries Division, said Tuesday.

Florida Agriculture Commissioner Doyle Conner had not issued an emergency order to quarantine California produce as of Tuesday night.

Earlier Tuesday, state agriculture officials in Texas said that southern states, including Florida, would set up roadblocks next Monday to check California produce.

While Florida hasn't ruled out participation in a multistate blockade program, it hasn't promised to join the effort yet, Jones said.

"We're not prepared to declare a quarantine at this time," he said after talking with Conner.

Meanwhile, in California, pilots began spraying infested areas.

Spraying task toasted

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — California Conservation Corps Director B.T. Collins wanted to reassure his charges about the safety of the pesticide malathion, employed in the battle against the Mediterranean fruit fly.

So he drank a glass of the stuff.

Stuart Peoples, a medical consultant with the state Department of Food and Agriculture, said he didn't think the slurp — done in front of about 900 corps members during a Monday night meeting at Agnews State Hospital — would hurt Collins.

Nevertheless, Peoples said he "thinks it's stupid."

Bill would make first year of farm loan subject to interest

WASHINGTON (AP) — Both the House and Senate have passed legislation that would enable the government to charge interest on the first year of 3-year price support loans to farmers who place 1981 grain into the government's farmer-owned grain reserve program.

The bill, which originated in the Senate, sailed through the House by unanimous consent late last week and needs only the president's signature go go into law.

Under basic law governing the reserve, the Agriculture Department has discretion on levying interest charges on the 3-year loans and has been waiving interest on the second and third years of the loans.

Last year, in a move designed to ease the effect of the Soviet grain embargo, Congress passed a law which had the effect of also eliminating first-year interest on 1980 and 1981 crop loans on grain placed in reserve.

But the administration had announced it would not accept 1981 grain directly into the reserve unless the secretary of agriculture was given authority to charge interest on the first year of the loan.

"This action will help open the grain reserve to farmers, and it will also cut government spending by at least $165 million," said Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Mission, who is chairman of the House Agriculture Committee.

"Overall, our committee this year has produced legislation cutting government costs in fiscal 1981 and 1982 by well over $2.5 billion, and the passage of this bill further underlines our interest in cooperating with the president in responsible steps to cut the cost of running the federal government," de la Garza said.

The legislation will open the reserve as quickly as possible for wheat growers who are already harvesting a record crop, another House leader said.

By opening the reserve, Congress and the administration give farmers a chance to get part of their crop off the market, thus helping to strengthen prices and farm income as well as saving the cost of potential deficiency support payments, said Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., chairman of the Wheat, Soybeans and Feed Grains subcommittee.

"Because of a record wheat harvest, wheat prices have fallen disastrously and as of July 7, the five-day average was $3.50 a bushel — nearly 30 cents below the 1981 wheat target price of $3.81," Foley said.

"If this average persists through October, the government could be forced to pay more than $500 million in wheat deficiency support payments. Since no money has been budget for these payments, the government would face severe budget problems — to say nothing of the disastrous effect such low prices would have on farmers."

Reagan spends several minutes without codes

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan went to dinner early, and as a result he found himself without the codes he needs to launch a nuclear attack.

Reagan unexpectedly left the White House 20 minutes ahead of schedule Tuesday night in a motorcade for a dinner honoring Dr. Loyal Davis, the step-father of first lady Nancy Reagan.

Among those left behind was Cmdr. Bill Schmidt, one of the officers who carries the black briefcase containing the codes.

The Newspaper BIBLE

ASLEEP IN CHURCH! AND PAUL WAS THE PREACHER!

When everything was over, Paul sent for the disciples, preached a farewell message to them, said good-bye and left for Greece, preaching to the believers along the way, in all the cities he passed through.

He was in Greece three months and was preparing to sail for Syria when he discovered a plot by the Jews against his life, so he decided to go north to Macedonia first. Several men were traveling with him, going as far as Turkey; they were Sopater of Beroea, the son of Pyrrhus; Aristarchus and Secundus, from Thessalonica; Gaius, from Derbe; and Timothy; and Tychicus and Trophimus, who were returning to their homes in Turkey, and had gone on ahead and were waiting for us at Troas.

As soon as the Passover ceremonies ended, we boarded ship at Philippi in northern Greece and five days later arrived in Troas, Turkey, where we stayed a week.

On Sunday, we gathered for a communion service, with Paul preaching. And since he was leaving the next day, he talked until midnight! The upstairs room where we met was lighted with many flickering lamps; and as Paul spoke on and on, a young man named Eutychus, sitting on the window well, went fast asleep and fell three stories to his death below. Paul went down and took him into his arms. "Don't worry," he said, "he's all right!" And he was! What a wave of awesome joy swept through the crowd! They all went back upstairs and ate the Lord's Supper together; then Paul preached another long sermon -- so it was dawn when he finally left them!

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Moldy cheese OK if you cut away all the mold

Dear Dr. Solomon: I found a moldy spot on a piece of cheese, and my husband insisted I throw the entire piece away. Wouldn't it have been possible to cut away the mold and save the rest of the cheese? With prices what they are today, I hate to see food wasted. — Mrs. B.L.

Dear Mrs. L.: Small spots of mold on a piece of cheese can be cut away and the remainder used. However, keep in mind that the visible portion of the mold is not the only problem; there is another part that is not visible, that extends like roots beneath the surface. Therefore, if you want to salvage a piece of food, don't only remove the surface mold, but cut away a fairly large portion surrounding it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A church picnic a few weeks ago almost turned into a disaster when a number of people came down with food poisoning. My doctor called it a case of salmonella. Does this have anything to do with salmon? I'd like to know what causes it and, more importantly, how it can be prevented. Are there any particular foods that we should avoid? — Mrs. T.N.

Dear Mrs. N.: The word "salmonella," the most common type of food poisoning, is not related to "salmon." Salmonella bacteria may be found in all kinds of foods; however, they occur most often in meats, poultry, and eggs. The bacteria grow rapidly at room temperature, but are checked by refrigeration and killed by cooking. Most of the meat we consume does not have enough salmonella to cause illness because it is cooked.

There are a number of steps you can take to prevent salmonella food poisoning: After you finish handling raw meat or poultry, be sure to wash the knives, cutting board, and the counter top with soap and hot water. Also make certain to wash your hands thoroughly.

When you are thawing meat or poultry, do not leave it at room temperature any longer than necessary. In addition, keep salads, creamy desserts, custards, and fresh foods refrigerated until they are ready to be eaten. If you have any leftovers, refrigerate them as soon as possible.

Cooked foods should be heated thoroughly before they are served. This applies to meats, particularly chicken and turkey. A meat thermometer can be useful in making certain that the meat is heated throughout to the correct temperature.

One of the more serious dangers of salmonella food poisoning, especially in hot weather, is dehydration resulting from vomiting or diarrhea in susceptible people — babies the elderly, and the chronically ill. The loss of body fluids can lead to heat exhaustion or heat stroke. Ordinarily, however the condition is seldom fatal.

A soft diet and fluid intake are sufficient for the treatment of mild cases of salmonella. Fruit juices, soft drinks, gelatin, rice dishes, soups, and custards are recommended. Of course if symptoms are severe or persist for longer than 24 hours, you should check with your doctor.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Hines appointed to water task force

ABILENE — Burvin Hines of Arlington, president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, has been appointed by Gov. Bill Clemments to sit on a 25-member statewide task force on water use and conservation.

K. Bert Watson, president of the Pioneer Corp. of Amarillo, also was appointed to the task force representing West Texas.

"Texas could be facing a crisis if we do not assess our water needs and prepare to meet them," said Clements. "Providing an adequate water supply well may be the most critical issue for all Texans."

A bill sponsored by House Speaker Bill Clayton, defeated in the legislature's regular session this spring, is scheduled for consideration when the legislature starts meeting in special session Monday.

The bill would authorize a constitutional amendment to create a $500 million water trust fund allowing local governments to secure AAA bond ratings through a bond guaranty program. The AAA rating could result in a savings of 3 percent on interest rates relating to bond sales.

The trust fund could be used for water resource development, flood control, water quality improvement, research, storage projects and other purposes as directed by the legislature.

In addition to the appointments of Hines and Watson, WTCC Executive Vice President Ed Coltharp has been issued a special invitation to attend task force meetings.

Coltharp was the first witness called in support of water trust fund legislation introduced during the past legislative session.

Chicago residents mad over tall building battle

CHICAGO (AP) — A New York City developer's plan to build a skyscraper to top Chicago's 110-story Sears Tower — the tallest building in the world — was met with reaction ranging from anger to indifference by visitors to the Sears Tower skydeck.

"I think it's kind of dumb," Conrad Miller, of Colorado, said Monday. "That's like the Smiths trying to keep up with the Jones."

"I think it's one-upsmanship," said Rich Spielman, of Chicago. "They ought to put a false front on this building to make it taller."

Martha Weber also said she was disappointed. "New York has the Statue of Liberty," she said. "We're not going to build one."

There were others at the Loop skyscraper who said they really didn't care much about losing the prestige of having the world's tallest building.

"You win a few, you lose a few," said a ticket-taker at the skydeck, who did not want to be identified.

Corn tortilla shortage hits Nuevo Laredo

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico (AP) — A shortage of corn tortillas here is forcing Mexicans across the border into Texas to find the food staple, unless they are willing to stay home and settle for the less popular flour variety.

A sudden and unexplained shortage in the basic ingredient of the tortilla, the corn meal mix known as "masa", has closed Nuevo Laredo's 81 "tortillerias", or tortilla factories.

The chief of the tortilla maker's union said the shortage of masa became critical Monday at tortilla assembly lines.

"We have no other choice," Miguel Garcia Buccio of Union de Productoras de Masa y Tortillas said. "We've had to shut down."

The absence of corn tortillas, eaten with almost every meal in many Mexican households, has resulted in a doubling of prices for flour tortillas.

Buccio said that each week Nuevo Laredo normally receives a shipment of 220 tons of masa from CoNaSuPo, the government supply house for Mexican staple products.

Last week, without explanation, the shipment was cut to 60 tons of masa and by Saturday available stocks of the staple had been depleted. An interim shipment of 30 tons had not arrived by Monday, he said.

"People who bought a supply of tortillas last Saturday are rich people today," Buccio said.

Francisco Sanchez, a tortilla maker employed at Nuevo Laredo's Tortilleria Margarita, said Monday that business was halted throughou the city of 50,000. He said his plant normally receives 400 kilos of masa from CoNaSuPo a week, but when the supply ran out last week, the plant had to shut down. He said a kilo of masa yields about 30 tortillas.

Across the border, Laredo, Texas tortillerias enjoyed a sudden spurt in business. Raul Quijano, owner of Azteca Tortilleria in Laredo, said five customers from Mexico had made large purchases of corn tortillas before noon Monday.

CoNaSuPo officials offered no explanation for the absence of the weekly masa shipment.

CIA director faces judge's ruling on business venture

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the CIA's spy chief already forced out by allegations of stock manipulation, CIA Director William J. Casey faces a federal judge's ruling that he knowingly misled investors in a separate business venture in the late 1960s.

Max Hugel, an outsider whose appointment had irked career intelligence officers, resigned as the agency's deputy director of operations Tuesday, hours after The Washington Post published allegations that in 1974 he slipped inside information about a firm he headed to two Wall Street brokers.

Later Tuesday, reporters discovered an overlooked May 19 ruling by U.S. District Judge Charles E. Stewart Jr. in New York against Casey and others in a damage suit over their efforts to raise capital for an unsuccessful farming corporation in 1968.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said today that President Reagan had told his top aides "I retain full confidence" in Casey. Speakes said he did now know when the president found out about the May ruling.

Speakes told reporters that "these matters came up in the past, as far back as 1973. They've been the subject of at least one and possibly two Senate hearings. They were part of what we knew when Mr. Casey was appointed to the directorship of the CIA.

Speakes said he was "reasonably sure" Casey referred to the case on forms filled out before he was nominated to the job.

"This is a matter still in the courts and subject to appeal so I shouldn't comment on the merits of the case," he said.

"Director Casey has done an excellent job with the CIA," Speakes said, describing him as "an experienced man" in the intelligence area.

Both Casey and the CIA refused to comment on Stewart's ruling, and Reagan said Hugel's departure was distressing because "once again we seem to be taking an accusation as a conviction."

Hugel said: "I have done nothing wrong."

Casey, 68, and Hugel, 56, are both self-made millionaires. Casey brought Hugel with him to the agency from the Reagan presidential campaign. As campaign director, Casey had admired Hugel's style and work as chief of ethnic group activities.

Casey, who broke into spy work with the Office of Strategic Services, the CIA's World War II predecessor, had endured harsh criticism from former CIA officers for putting Hugel in one of the agency's most sensitive positions. Hugel's intelligence background was limited to some post-war work for the Army in Japan.

Before the day was out Tuesday, Hugel was out of the CIA — replaced by a career officer hailed by the "old boy" network — and attention had shifted to the financial dealings of Casey himself, who headed the Securities and Exchange Commission during the Nixon administration.

Judge Stewart's 19-page ruling came in a 1974 class-action suit filed by investors in a New Orleans firm called Multiponics Inc., of which Casey was an officer and director.

In an effort to raise capital for the firm, Casey and the other defendants issued a stock offering circular in October 1968 which said the company's assets at the time included seven operating farm units and two tracts of uncleared land, Stewart said.

But in September 1969 and July 1970 statements filed with the SEC, the firm stated that "of the seven so-called operating farming units, two were not operating at all at the time they were acquired by the company, two were not operating other than sharecropping and one was operating at a loss," Stewart wrote.

The offering circular also stated that $1,354,000 of the proceeds from the sale of debentures would be used to retire short-term debt, Stewart said. In fact, the judge said, the SEC registration statements showed that the company used $917,000, or about 68 percent of the proceeds, to repay officers and directors of Multiponics for loans to the firm.

Albert the alligator soaks up the sun on the small island in the center of Duck Lake at Denver's City Park on Tuesday. Albert has become a hero of sorts among Denver residents since his escape from the Denver Zoo in June.

Zookeepers finally trap alligator

By The Associated Press

Albert the Alligator had the crowds cheering at Denver's City Park as he taunted zookeepers trying to force him out of Duck Lake — until early today, that is, when zookeepers with searchlights trapped him under a raft and got a noose around him.

Meanwhile, in Indianapolis, a runaway cousin, Oscar the Alligator, was still on the loose.

The first to find freedom and the first to be recaptured was the wily Albert, a 4-foot-long alligator who escaped from the Denver Zoo on June 17 and took up housekeeping in a pond in City Park, a haven for ducks and Canada geese. Albert began drawing crowds as each day he eluded zoo officials who waded after him or went out on the pond in boats, armed with nets.

All that ended at about 1 a.m. today, said zoo director Clay Freiheit.

Freiheit said Abert — who has escaped twice from the zoo's alligator pond — will be placed in another, more secure, enclosure.

On Tuesday, zoo officials in boats and others in hip-waders mounted a two-pronged assault on Albert as he was sunning himself on the island in the middle of Duck Lake, but he slipped into the water before they could reach him.

Minutes later, as if to taunt his pursuers, Albert surfaced within yards of the waders, who were looking back at the cheering crowd. When they turned to take a swipe at Albert, he ducked underwater.

Albert's feistiness — after all, his namesake is the smart alligator character in the old Pogo comic strip — had made him a hero of sorts among Denver residents. Reports that Albert was thinning the duck population helped the crowds, too, although zoo officials said that because of Albert's size they doubted the reports were true.

Assistant zoo director Albert Linger said Tuesday that Albert's popularity wasn't making the job of catching him any easier.

"He's so scared of people now that I'm beginning to wonder how we'll ever get close enough to catch him," he said.

Zoo officials were unwilling to shoot Albert with a tranquilizer and haul him back to the alligator pond because they feared he would sink to the bottom of the pond and die, Linger said.

Meanwhile in Indianapolis, a man named Mudd has been trying without success to get his pet alligator back from a neighbor's pond. The alligator, Oscar, turned up his nose at chicken bait Monday and wouldn't be lured away.

Charles Mudd isn't sure when he'll try again to catch his 4-foot-long alligator, who escaped 11 days ago.

Mudd said crowds drawn to the edge of Gerald Cannon's half-acre pond by alligator reports have made Oscar too excited for Mudd to get close enough to pull the creature into a boat.

Local television stations have sent crews out to Cannon's pond, hoping to catch sight of the elusive alligator, and The Indianapolis Star has begun a "Gator Watch" column.

The city's Humane Society sent workers out to bait a trap on the shore with chicken parts. Numerous people have offered to wrestle Oscar from the pond, and crowds of curious onlookers are beginning to irritate the Cannons.

"I wish they would just stay away and let the authorities take care of the situation," Cannon said Monday.

Neither rain nor snow stop mail delivery, but birds may

SWEETWATER, Texas (AP) — Folks in this West Texas town have their mail problem pigeon-holed. It's not soaring postal rates, nine-digit zip codes or a lack of manpower.

It's a trio of dive-bombing birds.

The family of mean-tempered hawks curtailed the town's mail delivery by swooping at the carrier with talons extended, says postman K.T. Williamson.

He said he's been forced to don a hard hat and face mask to resume the mail delivery to several homes that was halted last week by the three ill-mannered hawks.

"The trouble started last year with one of the hawks who kept attacking the carrier. Now this hawk has trained a couple more and it got so bad we had to discontinue service until we came up the hard hat idea," Postmaster Kyle Scarborough said Tuesday.

Scarborough said at first he didn't believe Williamson's tales about diving attacks by the "mean-tempered birds."

"Then I saw them," said Scarborough. "They're a little larger than a pigeon and they are super fast. They circled around while he was looking at them, then when he turned his back, whammo, they swooped down and hit him on the head."

An 83-year-old woman who has lived in Sweetwater for two decades years scoffs at the mail carriers' temerity.

"I've lived here 20 years and the hawks have never bothered me," said Audrey Martin, a little irritated by the trip she has to make downtown to pick up her mail.

"I'll meet the mailman in the street if he honks. Who's scared of a little ol' chicken hawk?"

Scarborough said nothing can be done about the birds because they are Mississippi Kite Hawks, which are listed as an endangered species and protected by federal and state regulations.

So to prevent injury, Williamson must don his hard hat and welder's face mask.

Midland Regional Airport sets record on boardings

Midland Regional Airport set another record on boardings for the month of June with 49,802 persons taking off from the airport.

That is an all-time record, with the previous one set at slightly more than 49,000 boardings in May.

After several months of record-setting boardings, Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, told the news media on Tuesday, "I'm getting bored telling you about this."

Summer usually ranks as the highest months for boardings, Banks had explained. And last month saw American Airlines begin service as Midland's fourth major carrier.

Biting incident may mean bear's death

VIENNA, Ill. (AP) — The days may be numbered for Tommy, a 22-year-old bear that long has been an attraction for children at Camp Ondessonk near Vienna.

Tommy bit Scott Burrelsman, 11, last week. The youth's physician, Dr. Donald H. Buser, has requested that Tommy be killed in order to test his brain tissue for rabies. Camp authorities think it's doubtful Tommy contracted rabies in his cage.

The biting incident, considered out of character for Tommy, occurred as Scott, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Burrelsman of Fairview Heights, reached inside the animal's cage to pet him.

Tommy turned and sank his teeth into the youth's arm. "He's got a good-size hole in his arm, and it's badly infected," Pam Burrelsman said Tuesday of her son.

Officials said Scott's wound might have been more severe except Tommy has no upper teeth.

"We hate to lose Tommy," camp personnel director John Winkelmolen said. "He's a tame bear. Our staff goes into the cage."

It's too easy to take drug dealers' bait

By STEPHEN C. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — By simply turning away as a plane skims over the Everglades dropping duffel bags of cocaine or standing lookout when smugglers sneak a boat packed with marijuana into the Keys, a Florida policeman can make more money in one night than he could in a career.

The American appetite for cocaine, marijuana and other drugs is skyrocketing, prompting South American smugglers to use old-fashioned bribery to assure the safe arrival of their illicit cargoes.

The bait is money, lots of money, enough to pay off the mortgage and the bills and buy the luxuries that are only dreams on a police officer's salary.

"Have you ever seen $50,000 in one pile? I'll tell you, it's impressive," said Maj. Ed Little, chief of the Florida Marine Patrol's South Florida region.

"You can let your mind run loose. Just think, you could pay off your house or pay cash for a fancy car. You could buy all sorts of things. Hell, yes, the temptation is there. The temptation is great."

Although law enforcement leaders say nearly all Florida officers are honest, hard-working cops who would never take a bribe, they admit some haven't been able to say "no."

"You take a police officer who is making $12,000 a year and simply by turning his head one night and allowing an aircraft to come in, he can make $50,000," said Allan Pringle, deputy director of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration's southeastern region.

"It goes on all the time. In Florida, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, smuggling aircraft are coming in every day by the hundreds," Pringle said.

Said U.S. Attorney Atlee Wampler: "Nobody in law enforcement makes the kind of money that will come anywhere near wht can be eared in a single night by just helping unload a boatload of marijuana."

One of the longest and most complex investigations into drug-related police corruption climaxed Tuesday when nine former Dade County homicide detectives were indicted by a federal grand jury and accused of accepting drugs and money from Mario Escandar, described by Drug Enforcement Administration officials as a major trafficker of cocaine.

The officers, who Escandar reportedly once called his "young men of iron," were indicted on a variety of charges, including racketeering, narcotics trafficking and stealing drugs from the scene of a crime.

So far, one-third of the detectives assigned to the homicide unit in 1979 have been investigated for corruption. Law enforcement officials say almost every police agency in the state has been touched in some way by drug corruption. Some examples:

—Florida Marine Patrol Capt. Ralph Tingley faces trial next month on charges he accepted a $50,000 payoff to ignore a marijuana smuggling operation. Prosecutors claim Tingley promised that an unidentified person wouldn't be apprehended bringing ashore two boatloads of pot. No marijuana was brought ashore, but Florida Department of Law Enforcement agents said they found $50,000 cash at Tingley's home when he was arrested.

—Four former Key West city policemen were convicted along with eight other people in connection with a Customs Service bust on Stock Island that netted more than 100,000 pounds of marijuana.

—Monroe County State Attorney Jeff Gautier was suspended by Gov. Bob Graham last November on accusations that Gautier used and possessed marijuana and methqualone.

—A jailer and four Taylor County sheriff's deputies were recently suspended after federal agents investigated allegations they were involved in drug smuggling. One of the deputies, Broward Reed, has been indicted by a federal grand jury on conspiracy, marijuana possession and perjury counts.

—An "officer of the year" in the small Dade County community of Medley was charged in connection with what Miami police detectives said was a ring that kidnapped drug dealers and then held them for $1 million ransom. A former policeman who worked for several departments in Dade and Broward counties also was charged in the case.

—A 16-year veteran Miami policeman was arrested in what agents nicknamed "Operation Giraffe," charged with being a courier for a drug ring and helping its members detect undercover police operations.

"The investigations we have going on and that soon will be prosecuted are most damaging to police reputations as a whole because policemen have been corrupted by these major narcotics trafficking organizations," Wampler said.

Capt. Donald Matthews, new chief of Dade County homicide, said that although morale seems to be on the upswing, many citizens still treat the detectives as if they were working for drug smugglers.

"All this publicity took away our self-esteem," Matthews said. "You go out on the street and say you're from homicide, and people just assume, 'That's one of those crooked cops.' You don't know how dirty it's been for us."

Jury indicts nine detectives

By RANDALL HACKLEY
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Nine present and former Dade County homicide detectives indicted by a grand jury in a corruption case may have netted $500,000 in cash and improperly seized drugs, federal officials say.

The nine were indicted Tuesday on 40 federal counts of corruption, extortion, drug trafficking, income tax evasion and bribery.

Seven of the officers were suspended without pay, said Michael Levin, chief of the Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force office here. The other two have resigned.

The FBI said the scheme began more than two years ago, when a Dade County homicide detective allegedly stopped a truck filled with nearly 800 pounds of marijuana and allowed an unidentified drug trafficker to steal the truck and the pot.

Just six days before the heist, the FBI said, the same detective and three fellow officers allegedly took $62,000 belonging to a murder victim from the Dade County Public Safety Department's property room.

Charged with multiple counts of racketeering, narcotics trafficking, filing false income tax returns and civil rights violations were Julio Ojeda, 33; George Pontigo, 29; David Ward, 29; Steven McElveen, 38; Pedro Izaguirre, 34; Thomas Gergen, 29; Raymond Eggler, 44; Robert Derringer, 31; and Fabio Alonso, 34.

Since the investigation began, 20 implicated Dade County officers have been transferred or suspended. Levin said the investigation continued, and more officers might be charged.

Eight of the men were released Tuesday after posting $50,000 bonds set by U.S. Magistrate Peter Palermo. Alonso was released after posting $25,000 bond.

AP Laserphoto

David Ward, one of nine homicide detectives indicted by a federal grand jury on narcotics-related charges, leaves federal court Tuesday.

Showing up throughout the investigation, federal agents said, was the influence of Mario Escandar, 48, a former nightclub operator from Cuba described by the Drug Enforcement Administration as a major cocaine trafficker.

Coast Guard can't keep up

By JANE ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Commandant John B. Hayes says the Coast Guard doesn't have the ships or personnel to step up its war against drug smuggling by sea.

Hayes told a congressional subcommittee Tuesday that the Coast Guard's goal is to seize 75 percent of the marijuana smuggled into the United States by sea, but it only is able to intercept 15 percent to 20 percent.

Without more ships and people, Hayes said, the Coast Guard could not even meet its goal by giving up search and rescue missions, enforcement of fisheries regulations and other activities.

He said the Coast Guard concentrates its major cutters in four Caribbean "choke points:" the Yucatan Channel, Windward Passage, Mona Passage and Anegada Passage.

Medium-size cutters run offshore patrols while smaller cutters and small boats patrol close to shore and provide aerial reconnaissance to locate suspicious vessels.

"Although it is not a common occurrence, the Coast Guard has had to resort to use of weapons to halt some vessels, including firing into some on occasion to stop them from fleeing," he said. "Fortunately, Coast Guard units have not been fired upon by drug smugglers to date."

Hayes appeared before the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries' subcommittee on the Coast Guard, chaired by Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass.

Studds said the subcommittee's hearing was based "on the premise that the Coast Guard has not been given the resources it needs to safely and competently fulfill all of the many responsibilities with which it has been charged by the Congress."

Hayes said the Coast Guard may have seized as much as 32 percent of all marijuana smuggled into the country in the first quarter of this year because Coast Guard ships happened to be in the waters off Cuba to deal with the Cuban sealift.

He said the Cuban sealift, which began as a search and rescue mission, became the largest maritime law enforcement operation in the history of the Coast Guard.

"The results of this massive effort show that a direct correlation exists between the number of Coast Guard enforcement resources in the Southeast and the number of vessel seizures," he said.

When asked whether he felt some Navy personnel shoud have the power to arrest people — as Coast Guardsmen do, Hayes said "no."

He said it's important to have an organization like the Coast Guard outside the Defense Department to enforce maritime laws without "giving the appearance to other nations of this being an actual aggressive act."

Other nations could interpret law enforcement actions as aggressive "should U.S. naval vessels be used in some of these more ticklish law enforcement incidents," he said.

Drug issue generates debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Proposals to use the armed forces in catching drug smugglers are prompting new debate over the record $136 billion military authorization bill winding its way through the House.

The drug issue was among more than a dozen items before the House today as it worked to complete action on the bill, which already has taken up four days of floor sessions.

For nearly four hours Tuesday, members debated various versions of a proposal that would permit, but not require, the defense secretary to supply personnel and equipment to civil law-enforcement agencies fighting the importation of drugs.

As submitted by the House Armed Services Committee, the bill would allow military personnel to take an active role in drug seizures and arrests, thus providing an exemption to an 1878 law that forbids use of troops in civilian law enforcement.

The House Judiciary Committee, however, voted to limit the military role to one of supplying suveillanceand detection equipment and the manpower to operate it under civilian direction.

The Senate passed a similar limitation in its own version of the authorization bill two months ago.

Snuff lawsuit to be dismissed

TYLER, Texas (AP) — James Bacon Jr. was up to snuff, but Jefferson Independent School officials said he was up to no good. The whole matter would have been up to the courts — if the two parties hadn't compromised.

A federal lawsuit filed against the JISD after Bacon was suspended for carrying a can of snuff in his pocket probably will be dismissed after a compromise agreement was reached Tuesday, said school district attorney Gordon Phrall.

The suit was lodged against the JISD and two of its officials after Bacon was suspended three days this spring for possessing the tobacco on school grounds.

The school district agreed to provide a written statement of the appeal procedure for a student wishing to contest a disciplinary action in the district handbook, Phrall said. The handbook is delivered to each student at the beginning of the school year.

The district also agreed that a list of possible penalities would be listed in the handbook with the list of infractions, he said.

Ex-convict, boxer gets one-year in county jail

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An ex-convict who boxed in prison was assessed a year in the Midland County Jail and was levied a $2,000 fine on Tuesday by a four-man, eight-woman jury who found him guilty of tying up and beating his sometimes live-in girlfriend after he accused her of taking and spending his $135 in "rent money" and then moving out of his one-room house.

The jury-deemed punishment was the maximum for a misdemeanor assault conviction, although the prosecution had sought a felony aggravated assault verdict, which could have exacted a 10-year prison term and a $5,000 fine for the 23-year-old defendant, Joseph King Harris.

Harris, tried in Judge Vann Culp's 238th State District Court, opted not to testify in the two-day trial, but his former friend, the victim, Debra Wilson, 22, chose to testify against him.

Miss Wilson, who said she had been "staying off and on" with Harris, tersely testified that she had gotten "mad" at him, moved out of his house on Friday, May 22, and returned to her mother's house on Midland's eastside. The next afternoon, Miss Wilson said, Harris sought her out, grabbed her as she was walking to a friend's house, and ushered her over to his place.

"He tied me up and beat me...and left after he got through," she said under examination by Assistant District Attorney Rob Sutphen. Sutphen and colleague Mary Ann Oakley were prosecuting the case. Miss Wilson identified a half-inch, size 34 leather belt and the unraveled remains of a cord which, she said, Harris used to tied her up. She said he had beaten her on the face, arms, back and "everywhere else" with a coat hanger "until he got tired. It wasn't too long."

"Were you in pain?" Sutphen asked the dispassionate woman, who seemed somewhat indignant by the questioning. "Were you screaming and yelling?"

"Mmmm, uh," she replied.

Miss Wilson said her left eye was injured in the assault. "It's messed up," she said. "I can look pretty good, but it gets weak sometimes."

The victim showed the jurors some faded scares on her neck and arms.

"This wasn't an accident, was it?" the prosecutor asked.

"No," Miss Wilson said. "He was doing it on purpose. Sure was."

Miss Wilson said that she has known Harris for about 12 years.

"You live with him?" asked Sutphen.

"Naw," she said. "I've just been staying off and on."

Initially, Miss Wilson had said that Harris offered no explanation for his deed.

But under cross-examination by defense attorney R. Sandy Torres, Miss Wilson did admit that Harris had said something to her during the assault.

"Well, I was hollering," the victim said, and Harris was yelling, " 'I'm going to kill ya!' That's all."

Torres asked the woman about the $135 in rent money which "you stole." The woman denied stealing any money.

"The conversation (about the money) took place," she admitted, "but I didn't take no $135."

The defense attorney assured Miss Wilson that he wasn't "trying to be disrespectful" to her by his line of questioning.

Miss Wilson admitted that she had drunk a couple of beers on the morning prior to the assault, but said she was not intoxicated.

"No," she said. "I wasn't real drunk."

After the assault, Miss Wilson said Harris's sister, Robin Clark, who lived next door, came over and untied her. Miss Wilson spent seven hours at the hospital, where she was treated for her injuries.

Harris, who had fought at the middleweight level in boxing, was released from the state penitentiary last year after serving three years of a five-year sentence for burglary in 1977.

"That's tough," Harris had said of prospects of an assault conviction, but said he had rather spend two years in "the joint" rather than six months in the more confining county jail.

National doll sculpturer to visit here Thursday

Faith Wick, a member of the National Institute of American Doll Artists, will be in Midland Thursday for her first public speaking engagement in the Southwest.

Mrs. Wick will be showing her dolls at Peyton's Toys in the Midland Park Mall.

She was born in Buhl, Minn., in the heart of iron mining country, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Leland Fuller. She spent her childhood in the pines of northern Minnesota bordering on the pits, where she imagined gnomes, elves, drawfs and witches luring in the caves and woods.

She says that, without the knowledge of her parents, she swam in the abandoned open-pit mines and had to wait to dry her long hair in the sun before she returned home so she wouldn't be suspected of doing the forbidden dangerous "pit" swimming.

Faith also often read fairy tales imagining that witches, gnomes, trolls and elves inhabited the mines and pines she loved. "Adding to my imagnation were the images of the little old people inhabiting the area," she said "The old folks had accompanied their children to a new land from Europe to work in the iron mines and I was both fearful and fascinated by their strange costumes and foreign tongues," she remembers.

Faith's grandmother had a deep influence on her as she was a professional seamstress and lived in the home. She allowed Faith to have all the cuttings and taught her to use a sewing machine at an early age.

After high school, Faith attended college and received a master's degree in special education. She married and had four children, all grown with varied careers in music, engineering and business. Her huband Melvin, is an iron miner.

She began sculpting at an early age when the Wick family bought a children's park with life-size fairyland figures. During this period, she became an avid collector of antique dolls and carefully researched the doll field.

"I felt the need to recreate the small figures, mainly to do one of my favorite arts, costuming," she said "Soon the small faces began to improve and I began to sell the little dressed sculptures at doll shows.

In 1976, Mrs. Wick was elected a member of the prestigous National Institute of America Doll Artists.

The demand for the dolls far exceeded her capability for supply, so she formed Wicket Originals Inc. Wicket Originals is a small cottage industry located in northern Minnesota.

Each craftsman does a special part of the finished sculptures. Their various jobs are making porcelain, bodies, shoes, costumes, molds and accessories.

Faith Wick, a national doll sculpturer, will make a special appearance Thursday at the Midland Park Mall. She specializes in making elf-like dolls, and has formed a company called Wicket Originals.

...ALTHOUGH FAMILIAR to most as the interior setting for television's notorious "Dallas," Texas Homes magazine features Midland interior designer I. David Porras' home and portrays how he transformed it into a tantalizing refuge.

Porras purchased the 12-room Georgian style mansion surrounded by magnolia and pecan trees in August, 1980, and less than a year later, it was scarcely recognizable as the once infamous Ewing family's decor.

Texas Homes features Porras' home in the July/August issue, which exhibits his flamboyant, unique trademarks in every corner of his home.

"People are tired of the mundane," complains Porras. "The trend that's coming on strong is grandness, the grander the better."

The various moods and motifs of the house radiate a high-energy, fun-loving lavishness. From the gold-burnished Italian pool tile to the caladium-rich landscape adorned with both classic and contemporary sculptures, from the crystal chandeliers to tabletops overwhelmed with Lalique, malachite and Chinese porcelain, from rare and ornate woodwork to his own furniture designs, the style is one of grandeur.

Due to their soothing or exhilarating effects, colors are Porras' most important ingredient in designing a distinguished interior. "Pick them boldly and soften them if need be with furnishings and accessories," says Porras.

As expected, Porras does not operate like most designers who ascribe to searching for pieces for a specific space. He believes, "Buy because you love it and make a place for it. You're denying the essence of the piece itself if you just buy to fill a space on the wall."

Despite all its playful grandeur, Porras' Dallas house is the epitome of function...

Home restoration tips

By SHARON A. HILLIS
County Extension Agent
Midland County

Home restoration: DANGER! Don't let it be health costly. Along with the joys of saving money and creating beautiful surroundings, the do-it-yourself home restorer faces danger to his health — and even his life in some cases.

THE 'FINISH LINE'

Finish removal is probably the most dangerous restoration activity — posing possible damage to lungs, skin, liver and even the heart, along with fire hazards.

THE CULPRITS

Paint removers and the paints being removed are the culprits in most cases. Prolonged exposure to many commercial paint removers can damage the lung tissue. Even more serious, methylene chloride — the active ingredient in many removers — can kill. When inhaled, methylene chloride is broken down in the body to form carbon monoxide, a poisonous substance which can place stress on the cardio-vascular system during prolonged exposure.

More culprits are strippers that contain benzene and acetone. Benzene can be absorbed through the skin, and it can cause burns to the skin. If ingested in sufficient amounts, benzene also can cause central-nervous systems depression (respiratory failure), ventricular fibrillation (irregular heartbeats) and bone-marrow damage. As few as 25 parts in the air is considered dangerous. Benzene has been linked to some forms of liver cancer and to bone-marrow disorders.

THE FIGHT-BACK

Do-it-yourself renovators can fight back and reduce risks by:

1) having adequate ventilation to avoid breathing chemical fumes, and

2) wearing rubber gloves to prevent absorption of solvents through the skin and to prevent burns to the skin.

Special hazards can lead to burning the whole house down if the do-it-yourself renovator fails to take special precautions against fire. Flammable paint removers and organic solvents, such as alcohol and mineral spirits, present special fire hazards. In addition to the more obvious danger that comes from working with a lighted cigarette around these materials, there's also the danger of vapors from such solvents gathering at floor level and easily igniting — a single spark, a water heater or a pilot light can do it. Along that same line, another lethal team consists of steel wool, electrical outlets and flammable remover. Steel wool rubbing against an electrical outlet during paint removal and create sparks that may ignite any flammable remover nearby.

THE GREAT DOUSE

To avoid fire hazards, take these precautions to douse the chance of fire before it happens:

1) use only NONFLAMMABLE removers when possible. If you must use a flammable remover or solvent inside, work with open windows and use a fan blowing to avoid buildup of combustible vapors at floor level.

2) cut off electrical power if working with steel wool and flammable materials near electrical outlets.

THE LEAD LAMBAST

A virtual lambast of lead poisoning is yours if you aren't careful to prevent it. Here's how it feels: dizziness, nausea, general sick feeling — and later with prolonged exposure, possible damage to vital organs and the central nervous system.

Lead poisoning is the result of working with old paint — including removal of any containing lead.

Any house built before 1940 probably is covered with paints containing lead. Every old-house owner should know that lead can be absorbed both from the dust created by sanding and scraping lead pain and from vapors created by burning paint off with a blowtorch or propane torch.

THE ANTI-LEAD ATTACK

To remove lead-containing paints safely and most easily, use a safe chemical remover. Remember, lead paints adhering tight to wall surfaces present no hazards; it's the removal that poses the danger — whether removal means paint that is peeling off the wall or active removal procedures.

THE OTHER SPOILERS

In addition to fumes and lead-poisoning problems, other "spoilers" in home restoration include rusty metals and nails and asbestos fibers in older dry-wall finishing materials. Rusty metals and nails are constant threats to the remodeler and renovator, posing danger of puncture wounds and the possibility of lockjaw. Many professional renovators keep their tetanus shots current as a precaution. After the basic childhood immunization schedule is complete, tetanus (and diptheria) boosters are recommended at age 14-16 and every 10 years thereafter.

Asbestos has been linked to some forms of cancer. Many older dry-wall finishing compounds contained asbestos fibers, which, when sanded, can be inhaled into the lungs. It's no longer legal to manufacture these products with asbestos, but they may already be on the walls or lurking in old supplies at home. Be sure any "new" products you use say "no asbestos." If you're unsure about asbestos content, play it safe and smooth by "wet sanding" — smoothing with a damp sponge or cloth to avoid breathing asbestos-containing dust. Also, wear a good-quality, snug-fitting dust mask every time you sand or work in heavy dust, especially plaster dust. Otherwise, you risk serious damage to lungs.

THE BOTTOM LINE

While renovation can save "big bucks," it presents many very serious hazards. The renovator who knows the possible dangers will accomplish many desirable restorations without jeopardizing his own health and safety.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Fan requests repeat of rose jar recipe

DEAR HELOISE:

I have misplaced your potpourri recipe. As it's the best I have ever seen or smelled, would you reprint it, please? — A Devoted Fan

+ + +

After such a compliment, how could I resist!

Just gather the rose petals and dry them on a screen or on a piece of cheesecloth, leaving them in the sun for about 24 hours or until completely dry. A very slow oven may be used as an alternative to the sun.

Place the dried petals in a jar with a tight-fitting lid, adding five drops of rose oil or geranium oil (or a combination of these) and five drops of glycerin.

Continue adding dried petals from time to time as available. Other fragrant dried flowers, such as honeysuckle or orange blossoms, can be added if desired. When the jar is full, sprinkle the petals with a bit of salt.

Shake the jar every day for about two weeks, then add one-quarter ounce each of orris root powder, nutmeg, cinnamon and allspice.

Keep the jar tightly covered when not in use except when allowing the fragrance to escape.

Rose oil, geranium oil and glycerin should be available through your druggist. However, powdered orris root may be rather difficult to find.

Check seed stores, nursery supply houses, etc., as well as drug stores.

You'll know the search was worth it, though, when you open that rose jar one sunless, bitterly cold day next winter and you catch a breath of summer's fragrance and warmth right in your own living room.

These rose potpourris make exceptionally nice little gifts, too, when packaged in small, beautiful jars. — Heloise

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

Dear Heloise: I use a lot of cents-off coupons and am very grateful to the companies who issue them.

But at my age I have trouble reading the fine and dim print of the expiration dates.

Perhaps someone has mentioned this problem before but I feel it needs to be repeated so I would appreciate it if you could find space in your column to print this note.

Hopefully, food processing companies, etc., will read it and print the expiration dates in larger and bolder type. — Reader

+ + +

Some companies are already doing this, and I agree it is a great help, even for those who are able to easily read the fine print. Saves time at check-out counters too so let's hope all those who give discount coupons are reading the column this day. — Heloise

SOFT SOAP

Dear Heloise: Instead of wasting time and energy to make soft soap out of scraps, put them into a pump bottle and add hot water.

The chips will dissolve in time, making a soft gel. A few drops of cologne may be added if desired. — N. Dalton

COVER-UP

Dear Heloise: My toddler thinks wearing a bib is for babies but when he eats spaghetti, etc., what a mess!

So now, we put one of daddy's old T-shirts on him. It's a lot more fun that way. — Jackie

STAIN REMOVAL

Dear Heloise: Have you ever just thrown your plastic pitcher away because it's stained from tea, grape juice, etc.?

I've discovered that if you fill the pitcher with water and add a tablespoon or so of household bleach, you won't even need to scrub.

Let it soak for just a few minutes, wash and rinse very well and it will be completely clean. — Mrs. J. Hosler

Interest in art leads to career as appraiser

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — Beth Weingast's interest in art was sparked while she was a college student, on an archeological "dig" in southern France. She found a pottery vase containing four Imperial Roman coins.

The vase was among discoveries dating back to the earliest Gaul invasion in 380 A.D.

"It really was a phenomenal experience," she said. "I mean, to go back in history that far, to be that close to something so far away."

Today, Ms. Weingast, in her early 30s, is a coin and jewelry appraiser and coin investment counselor and one of the founders of her own firm, based in New York City.

"I always thought that being an art dealer was the greatest thing in the world," she said. "I read voraciously about art dealers and, I guess, not being an artist, the closest I could be was to help artists, in a sense."

Ms. Weingast was graduated from Boston University with a master's degree in art history and archeology. She then went to work for Sotheby Parke Bernet. After an 18-month training period in London, Ms. Weingast became head of Sotheby's Coin and Medal Department in New York City.

"The study of coins came by accident; it could have been a lot of things, actually, but this was the job that was offered to me and I took it, very happily," she said.

"I do have my preferences in coins, and Greek and Roman coins are really works of art, as are Byzantine and medieval coins."

After working at Sotheby's for five years, Ms. Weingast decided to go into business for herself. Her two partners in Accord Fine Arts Inc. are Timothy Tetlow and Harmer Johnson.

Ms. Weingast said each partner has his own area of expertise, "so we help each other especially when we do appraisals, because someone has coins and some carpets, and silver and pre-Columbian art, tribal art, and so we draw on each other's expertise."

The firm's clients include private collectors, corporations, banks, universities and museums.

Ms. Weingast purchases coins and does appraisals of coins, jewelry and miniature portrait paintings.

She said that while some people will still "sell their shoes" for a work of art, many of her clients today are interested in buying art and coins as an investment.

"When I was at Sotheby's, most of my clients were really collectors, were passionate about having all of the coins of a certain period of Byzantine history," she said.

Ms. Weingast said the purchase of a coin may take from one week to several months, depending on what her client needs and how difficult it is to find the coin.

She said she is kept informed of coins "through word of mouth" and through international auctions, and buys many coins for clients from Switzerland, France and England, as well as in the United States.

"There are millions and millions of coins," she said. "The point is, that some are very valuable and some aren't and some are just pure currency and some are struck during inflationary times ... which are very dangerous to invest in, very dangerous."

Ms. Weingast said that with a valuable coin, it's not the metal of the coin that's important.

"You're paying for its age, for its sculptural beauty, for its high relief, for the fact that when it was being struck, the guy struck it a nice, clean coin with the whole legend on the coin; it wasn't off center; it was a nicely balanced symmetrical piece," she said.

Deafness hasn't affected career drive

Being accepted into a veterinary school is an accomplishment in itself, but for Ruanna Gossett, it is more than that. Mrs Gossett is deaf...and she is the first deaf woman to be accepted into the College of Veterinary Medicine at Texas A&M University.

Mrs. Gossett, who currently lives in Lubbock where she attended public schools, has not allowed her lack of hearing to alter her choice of a career. She has maintained a high academic standard in public school, at South Plains College where she began her studies, and at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin where she completed her bachelor of science degree in chemistry and life science in 1979.

Mrs. Gossett is not sure when she actually began losing her hearing, but estimates she was six or seven years old.

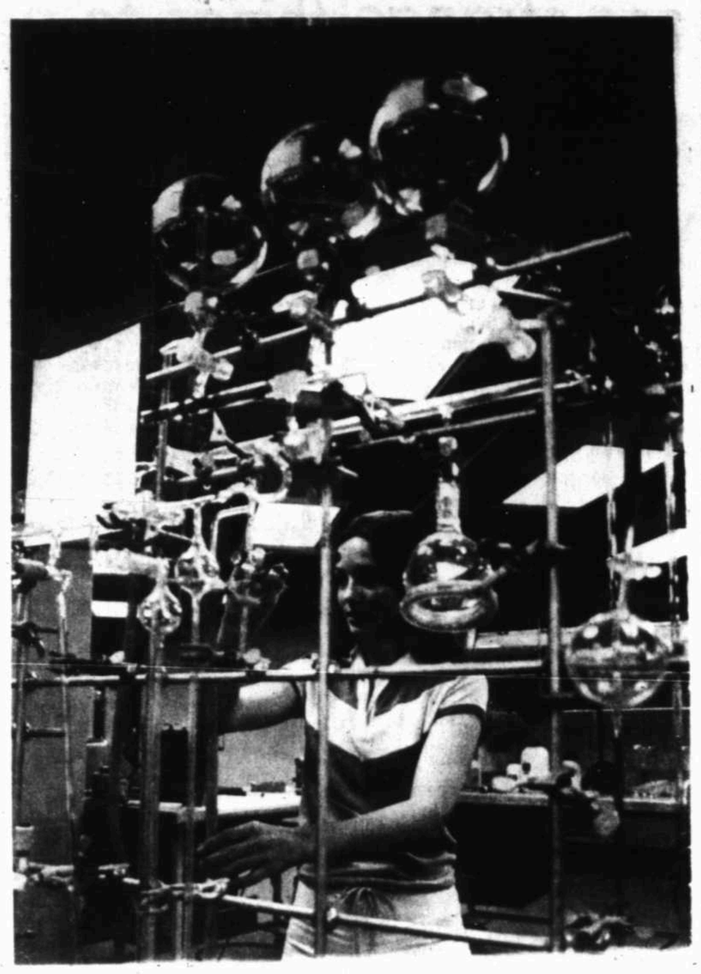
"My teachers realized I had a hearing problem, but I don't think my parents believed it at first. I learned to read lips so quickly, it was hard to tell" she said.

It wasn't until about the fourth grade that she had any problems academically, "I was failing under one teacher because I couldn't hear her, but when I got a new teacher, my grades got better," she explained.

"I've never really had any problems in class since then. Teachers and professors usually try to make sure I can see their lips once they know I am deaf," she said. "I've always done as much as I could. My grades have been good," she added.

Dr. Edwin B. Kurtz, chairman of life science at UT Permian Basin, said Mrs. Gossett is the first graduate of the university to be accepted to a school of veterinary medicine, although the university has a rather impressive record of students who are accepted into medical and dental schools. Kurtz noted that 60 percent of the UT Permian Basin students who have applied to medical and dental schools have been accepted. Traditionally, he noted, only one out of every three Texas residents who apply are accepted.

"It's even tougher to get into a veterinary school than it is to get into med school because there are so few veterinary schools in the nation, and only one in the state of Texas," Kurtz said.



Ruanna Gossett of Lubbock, a former student at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, is the first deaf woman to be accepted into the College of Veterinary Medicine at Texas A&M University.

Dr. William W. Bay, associate dean for academic affairs for the College of Veterinary Medicine at Texas A&M, said Mrs. Gossett was one of 138 applicants accepted to the college out of 473 qualified applicants.

"It is unusual for a deaf person to be studying veterinary medicine, but she is an unusual person, and we feel she can complete the program here," he said.

Bay said teaching a deaf student will be a new experience "We will have to cross that bridge when we get to it. We have enough additional aids that she can do well without hearing every sound. Through various media she should be able to learn what she needs to know to successfully practice in her field," he said.

DEAR ABBY

Wanderlust causes flight

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: WEAK IN ILLINOIS, who went from one adulterous affair to another, although she got nothing out of any of them, sounds like my ex-girlfriend. She was beautiful, but as promiscuous as they come. Whenever she'd meet a stranger she was attracted to, they'd end up in bed. She was honest. She'd tell me about it, cry and promise it would never happen again, but it always did — about twice a week. She hated herself so much she attempted suicide four times in the six years we went together.

I paid for seven months of psychotherapy for her, during which time she was seducing her therapist and giving out her phone number to patients in his waiting room. Abby, that was the last straw!

Even though I really loved her, I finally had to break off the relationship. It wouldn't have done any good to have sent her to a female therapist. She was also bisexual. — LOVED A WEAK WOMAN

DEAR LOVED: Loving her as you did, you shouldn't have given up when you discovered that her therapist was both incompetent and unethical. Most therapists are well able to handle sexual advances from their patients. It's regrettable that you didn't find one who could. Therapy might have helped her to overcome her compulsive sexual behavior.

DEAR ABBY: May I contribute to your list of commonly misused words? "Presently" means "soon, before long," or "without undue delay." It does not means, as is commonly assumed, "at the present time."

"The plane will arrive presently" is correct.

"I am presently employed as a secretary" is incorrect.

"Currently" is the word to use when one means "at the present time." — MELANIE

DEAR MELANIE: Thank you. I'll wager that many of my readers who are currently saying "presently" when they mean "currently" will be mending their ways presently.

Dramatic history

NEW YORK (AP) — The Fraunces Tavern Museum here is planning a program of performances, demonstrations and lectures relating to American and New York history and culture.

Among the programs planned for this fall are lunchtime lectures on theater in the 18th century, the role of women and 18th century food ways.

A series of four afternoon programs will concentrate on homelife in early New York and a four-part evening series will cover ethnic groups in early New York.

Fraunces Tavern Museum is owned and maintained by the Sons of the Revolution in the State of New York.

Vegetarians 'mushrooming'

The ranks of vegetarians have been "mushrooming" as people discover the advantages of this eating style.

As long as they watch their diets, most vegetarians can get enough protein and other essential nutrients without consuming meat. However, families who practice this type of vegetarianism without dairy products should keep in mind that children may not be able to thrive on more limited diets as well as adults. Growing children need to get enough calories and other nutrients such as the B vitamins, Vitamin D and iron.

Mystery chef blueberry pie recipe has early beginnings

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

You can trust this blueberry pie recipe. Its donor, Mrs. Harriet Bepler, has been using it for over 40 years, although along the way she altered the proportions of some of its ingredients. She modified them, brought them up to date. Now the pie is less sweet than it once was and has fuller blueberry flavor. Where did the original recipe come from? Mrs. Bepler found it in the long out-of-print "The Mystery Chef Cookbook."

In the 1930s, The Mystery Chef had a nationally broadcast radio program devoted to "talks on cooking," and he wrote several cookbooks.

In the introduction to one of his books, he said he came to the United States in 1906 from London, took up cooking as a hobby and ended by making it a career. He prided himself on cooking all the meals for his wife and himself and adopted a pseudonym only because, as he wrote, "My dear mother was horrified when she first heard that I had taken to cooking ... In deference to her wishes, I decided to use the name of The Mystery Chef."

Although, amusingly enough, he introduced his wife and himself as "Mr. and Mrs. Mystery Chef."

HARRIET BEPLER'S MYSTERY CHEF BLUEBERRY PIE

4 cups fresh blueberries
½ cup sugar
2 tablespoons cornstarch
¼ cup water
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
1 cup heavy cream
9-inch baked pie shell

Mash 1 cup of the blueberries. In a 2-quart saucepan stir together the sugar and cornstarch. Gradually stir in the water until smooth. Stir in the mashed blueberries and the lemon rind. Over medium heat, stirring constantly, cook until thickened and boiling and boil 1 minute. Turn into a bowl; cover with wax paper; cool. Fold in the remaining blueberries. Whip cream until double in volume; spread 1½ cups of it over the bottom and up the sides of the pastry shell. Fill with the blueberry mixture. Garnish with the remaining ½ cup whipped cream. Chill until set — about 3 hours.

Stone melon not for sale

ARBYRD, Mo. (AP) — "This Ain't No Museum, All This Junk Is For Sale," says the sign. But you can't buy the stone melon.

The sign is posted outside the antique-junk shop of Howard Crum, a lanky man with a puckish sense of humor and a powerful belief in the printed word.

It was another sign, however, that led to the stone fruit, available only here in this town of 500 in the southernmost tip of the Missouri boothheel. It should have read: "Antiques, Melons"

But the sign painter dropped an "s" and the comma.

Local residents and passing motorists couldn't resist dropping in to ask for an antique melon. And Crum couldn't resist humoring them.

So he went out one day and found a 200-pound rock with a gentle oval curve.

"Paint it like a watermelon," he told his daughter.

She did.

So now when folks ask for an antique melon, Crum rolls out the 200-pound impostor with a stony face. Sometimes, he can even persuade the joker to buy its younger and edible cousin.

Also for sale are bundles of sassafras roots, oversized wasp nests, brass deer heads, and vintage bottles of old potions and lotions such as "Cotton Picker's Friend" and "Doc somebody's Cure-All Snake Oil."

Crum used to be more businesslike, as attested to by a sign which says: "Gone To Church. If You're Going To Buy Something, Don't Leave."

But that constant attentiveness gets wearisome.

AT WIT'S END

Marriage does strange things to people

By ERMA BOMBECK

On my wedding day as I promised to love, honor and cherish, I looked at my partner and tried to imagine what was the worst thing that could happen to us.

Now, after 32 years, my major fear has become a reality.

We are beginning to look alike.

Oh, I haven't gotten to the beard and he hasn't gotten to the rounded hips, but we're getting there. I notice we have the same firm jaw when the red light goes on in the car in downtown traffic. Our eyes droop in unison when one of the kids announces they might have to store their stuff with us for a couple of months. We both chew the inside of our mouths when our accountant calls. We both roll our eyes to the ceiling when a speaker says, "There are 14 major points I'd like to share with you."

Without even planning, we have somehow blended. His hair got longer; mine got shorter. His hands softened; mine hardened. He grew a stomach; I grew upper arms. His chest grew with exercise; mine receded with dieting. My chins came from chocolate; his came from sleeping in a chair, but they're the same chins. We even share the varicose veins experience at the back of the knees.

Other things are positively spooky about us. You know how some couples finish sentences for one another? We don't even start them.

The other morning, we were both reading the paper when I asked, "Are you going again this year?"

He said, "What's the point?"

I said. "You'd think Reagan would issue a statement on . . ."

He said, "Finish the story. You need anything while I'm out?"

I said, "Why do you go to the same store all the time? You know they never have . . ."

He said, "They did last week and you didn't want any."

I said, "Do you think we're beginning to . . ."

He said, "Not a chance."

I said, "Then how come you . . ."

He said, "Coincidence."

From rental units to condos and vice versa

By DON G. CAMPBELL
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — From an audience participation standpoint, the villain on stage is always recognizable — he's the one in the black hat.

Except that in some areas, recently, the hat-switching has taken an ironic twist.

Last year's villain: the real estate developer who, in rental-poor areas like Los Angeles County, was taking rental units out of the market by converting them into condominiums.

Today's villain: the real estate developer who is putting rental units into the market by converting them from condominiums.

Last year's victim: the long-time tenant who, unable to afford the price put on his converted apartment, was driven into the street.

This year's victim: the condominium owner who bought in good faith and now finds himself surrounded by transient renters who, in many cases, have little or no interest in maintaining the property.

"They know they're not going to be here very long," one disgruntled owner lamented, "so they don't even pay attention to the simple rules — like not bringing glass around the pool."

Unhappy or not, the condominium owner's dismay at finding himself in the minority in his own complex is not new. In one recent survey, property management experts estimated the percentage of absentee owners (who rent out their units individually) at anywhere from 20 percent to 30 percent in the average project but in some instances going as high as 70 percent.

But what brings it into sharper focus at the moment is the increasing number of developers who are setting themselves up as rental agents for their own properties which, only a few months ago, were for sale. As a result, condominium buyers are becoming increasingly vocal in their criticism of the people from whom they bought their units and are challenging both the legality and the ethics of the practice.

But the real villain in the situation, according to W. Jerome Thomas, chief legal officer of the California Department of Real Estate, is "today's soft real estate market. We had this same problem several years ago when things slowed down and the owners became unhappy with the developers. I'm sympathetic, but it's just one of those things."

As one developer put it: "Going the rental route is becoming a lot more prevalent as we find our units sitting on the market, unsold. With today's high interest rates even the financing gimmicks aren't working any longer."

His company's latest condominium project, a 48-unit development, "went on sale about six weeks ago and we've had at least 200 would-be buyers sign up, but we have yet to write one sale. And, of course, your construction loan is pegged to the prime rate with, normally, a 2 percent premium above that. So, you're talking about a 21 percent or 22 percent loan hanging over you and when you're paying that kind of money you'll do what you can to get out from under it. One way to take some of the pressure off is to rent them out."

"No developer wants to be in the rental business — you simply can't be today even if you were financed at the prime," Pat Kruer of Casa Palmero Venture said. "We haven't any control over the economy, but when the market does turn around and better buyer-confidence returns, then, of course, the problem will solve itself. Actually, we're not going back to rentals — we've been doing it all along."

Originally built about seven years ago as an apartment complex, the 209-unit Casa Palmero was converted to condominiums under its former owner.

"Obviously," Kruer added, "we thought sales were going to go a lot faster than they have. The trouble is that we're just not getting the traffic — it's nil. We get about 10 people a weekend regardless of what we do. They like them, but there's this feeling among them:

'Why should I buy right now? What's the urgency?' "

In the past year only about 40 of the units have sold, Kruer said. And it is this lopsidedness between owner-occupants and new renters that has created friction over Kruer's stepped-up rental efforts.

On a sales basis, Casa Palmero's units range from about $69,990 for efficiencies to roughly $140,000 for three-bedroom models. Rentals range from about $475 for one-bedroom units to $725 for three-bedroom units. All renters are on a month-to-month basis, he said.

"Actually," Kruer insists, "it's the best scenario the renters can have. We pay all of the association monthly fees on unsold units — ranging from about $60 to $90 apiece — and all of the renters are bound by the CCRs (Conditions, Covenants and Restrictions). If they don't adhere to them we can always move them out. It's a lot easier than trying to handle an owner who doesn't observe them."

In almost all respects, according to Kruer, it is preferable to have the developer aggressively renting his units than it is to have him encounter the other, logical, alternative: bankruptcy.

"This can create real problems for the people who have already bought units," one developer said. "The lender for the construction loan is going to come in there and his primary consideration is to get what's due him. So, maybe this guy's paid $100,000 for his unit and then the S&L comes in to get its money out of the place and liquidates them at $80,000. Nobody gains anything from that."

Submit the game card and winning row to authorized store personnel, who will arrange for verification and awarding of prizes. The game card must be signed and each marker submitted initialed by the customer in the presence of authorized personnel. Winners of instant $1.00 and $2.00 prizes and the $5.00 cash collect game can be verified and paid in cash at the store. Redemption of the $100.00, $1,000.00 and $2,000.00 in diamonds plus $1,000.00 cash collect games and the $25.00, $50.00 and $100.00 GROCERY certificate games must be submitted to the sponsor for verification and payment. Only one prize will be awarded per game on any one game card. All game materials submitted for verification become the property of the game sponsor. All tax liability on prizes is the responsibility of the prize winner.

5. ALL GAME MATERIAL: Will be rejected and judged void if not obtained from and verified by authorized personnel or, if any part of any game pieces are illegible, altered, mutilated, defaced, tampered with, forged, contains printing or other errors, or is irregular in any way. 6. GAME ENDS: Upon distribution of all game tickets. All prizes must be claimed within five (5) days after the announcement of termination or they are forfeited. Notwithstanding anything herein to the contrary, at such times as the verified claims for prizes in any category equals the number of prizes advertised for that category, then the game, as it relates to that specific prize category, shall immediately terminate without notice, and any unverified claims at or after that time shall be automatically rejected.

7. ONLY GAME MATERIAL: Marked series DJB2 are valid for this game.

A wet ending

Dressed up with costumes from medieval times, two participants in a traditional festival fall out of their boats into the deep waters of the Danube at Ulm recently. The festival, which dates back to the 15th century, is called "Fishermen's Stabbing" and is a fight between the individual fishermen standing in boats and fighting against each other with lances.

Vatican expecting $25 million deficit

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican said today that it expects a budget deficit of $25 million for 1981.

The announcement came at the end of a three-day meeting of a special commission of 11 cardinals named by Pope John Paul II to help put the Holy See's finances in order.

No other information on the state of the Vatican's finances was provided in the five-paragraph statement released after the meeting.

In disclosure in 1979, however, the Vatican said it expected a budget deficit of $20.2 million in that year, and warned that the Holy See could find itself in "serious difficulty" if inflation-fueled expenses continued to rise and income remained at present levels.

The cardinals included two Americans — Terence J. Cooke of New York and John Krol of Philadelphia — and a West German, Joseph Hoffner of Cologne. The Vatican has looked to America and West Germany as major sources of contributions to the church.

The Vatican's press statement said the cardinals made various proposals on improving the Holy See's financial condition. These included help from local churches around the world in raising funds.

The special commission included no Italians or Vatican-based cardinals, which suggested that the Holy See would concentrate on raising funds abroad.

The cardinals examined the budget difficulties for both 1980 and 1981, but the Vatican did not report the 1980 figures. The 1979 announcement had said the deficit was expected to worsen in 1980.

John Paul named 15 cardinals to the commission, but four did not attend the meeting. The cardinals met in the Bologna room of the Apostolic Palace under the chairmanship of Vatican Secretary of State Agostino Casaroli.

Sheriff trying to close bingo hall

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — The Indians say they went into the bingo business simply to make some money from idle land, but the local sheriff is trying to head them off at a legal pass.

Broward County Sheriff Robert Butterworth wants to shut down the 1,200-seat bingo hall on the Seminole reservation in the Florida Everglades near here, citing a state gambling law that limits bingo jackpots to $100 and permits a single group to hold games only twice a week. He is pursuing the matter in court.

He seems to have an easy case. Nightly prizes at the Seminole Bingo Hall — which is open seven days a week, some days from noon to 1 a.m. — total $12,000 to $60,000.

But the Seminoles point to their unique, federally regulated status as a sovereign nation and argue that they are exempt from statutes such as the Florida gambling law.

"If Florida prohibited bingo altogether, then we couldn't play it either," said Stephen Whilden, the tribal attorney. "We're permitted a certain amount of leeway but not total leeway. The state doesn't allow casino gambling, so we can't open a casino.

"Once the state allows a certain activity, we can conduct the activity. But we don't have to do it the same way," he added.

To all that, Butterworth counters that it is not the Indians who are running the bingo business but a white-owned firm called Seminole Management Associates Ltd. which gets almost 40 percent of the bingo profits.

Butterworth likens the arrangement to the Dutch trading beads for New York's Manhattan island.

"The real issue is a whole lot of people are making a lot of money on bingo and it's not the Indians," the sheriff said. "The Seminoles do not run this bingo, a management company does.

"You have non-Indians operating a bingo parlor on Indian land in violation of state law and giving Indians a portion of the profits. What you have basically is unregulated gambling."

An uneasy truce has been called while the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals considers the arguments. Broward County is appealing a federal judge's ruling made when Butterworth first moved against Seminole Bingo before it opened in December 1979.

In that decision, U.S. District Judge Norman Roettger in Fort Lauderdale ruled in favor of the tribe, issuing an injunction forbidding Butterworth to interfere with the bingo hall.

Roettger said his decision was "a close one" because of the sovereign rights question. He noted a case in Washington state, where Indians were convicted of violating a state law by selling fireworks, even though they were on tribal land. The federal courts classified the law prohibiting fireworks as criminal, not civil, and said it was intended to "promote the safety and health of all citizens."

Because Florida permits some bingo playing, Roettger said, it "has acknowledged the benefits of bingo and has chosen to regulate, not prohibit."

Meanwhile, Seminole Bingo is booming. The games draw busloads of Floridians, it's a tour stop for groups from the North and Gold Coast condominiums often reserve tables for residents.

Each night hundreds of people pay $15 to $25 to play as many as two dozen cards at a time, hoping to be the first to cover five numbers in a row.

Understandably, the people who come to play bingo oppose Butterworth's efforts.

"I think it stinks," said Dorothy Sena. "I think the Indians are entitled. They've been done out of so much, they deserve a break."

"Why do they bother the poor Indians?" demanded a woman from Venice, Fla., who wouldn't give her name. "At least theyre not on welfare — thy're out rying to makea living.'

The Seinoles ge 55 percent of the profits. For the fiscal year just started, they expect that to be $1,263,500.

The money goes into a $5.7 million operating fund that next year will pay for two new gymnasiums and fund dozens of programs on four Florida reservations — employment, social services, hot meals for senior citizens, a tribal newspaper and police force and financial help for needy Seminoles. In the early 1970s, says tribal Chairman James Billie, the fund was only $600,000.

Billie defends the involvement of the management company by explaining that the Indians couldn't have started the operation without expert help. He said that when the tribe had little money and no credit rating, Seminole Management was willing to take the risk, helping build the $900,000 hall on the Indians' undeveloped land.

"It's a lot more than beads for Manhattan — we've got bucks in our pockets," Billie said.

"People can allege any way they want to. Sheriff Butterworth never once came to our door to give me any million-dollar proposals."

Seattle policeman M.E. Kuehn pours out the contents of a bottle taken from one of two men on a bench in Seattle's historic Pioneer Square. The City Council is mulling over an ordinance that will make panhandling a criminal offense. Seattle police officers dress in turn-of-the-century uniforms while patroling Seattle's historic areas.

Will Seattle give Skid Road beggars old 'bum's rush?'

SEATTLE (AP) — The city that put Skid Road into the nation's vocabulary wants to give the bum's rush to its down-and-outers, at least those who have the effrontery to ask, "Buddy, can you spare a dime?"

Panhandlers in Seattle's newly restored Pioneer Square area are becoming more aggressive, according to complaints by merchants and police. So, the City Council was considering an ordinance today that would make begging worth a trip to jail.

"They gain aggressiveness in greater numbers," says Art Skolnik, a Pioneer Square architect and president of the local community council.

"It will never go away," he says. "But it is getting worse downtown. We are interested in the people who are begging, and the money they are getting from the citizens they are using to buy booze and perpetuate their illness."

Pioneer Square is near Seattle's original Skid Road, the name given long ago to a dirt road used to skid logs to lumber mills. In time, it referred to the area where loggers gathered among the rooming houses and saloons. Now, Skid Road — often called Skid Row — has become a synonym for the down-and-out part of any town.

In Seattle, the area still is home to dozens of homeless and penniless men whose drinking and grizzled appearance offends some people.

Urban renovation in recent years has brought restaurants, art galleries, cafes, bookstores, night spots and the nearby Kingdome sports center to Seattle and has brought the bums into conflict with the better-off.

The bums are becoming more demanding, says oficer M.E. Kuen, a member of the Pioneer Square police unit th—at patros the streets in 1910-era uniforms. He says he usually just pours out the bottles and keeps the bums moving.

An ordinance to be considered today by a City Council subcommittee would make begging a criminal offense punishable by up to 90 days in jail and a $500 fine.

However, Councilman Sam Smith, chairman of the law and justice subcommittee with a reputation for support of minority rights, is opposed to the measure.

"I think when society can't let its beggars beg, it's gotten on too high a horse," he said Tuesday. "I think to beg if you need to is an inalienable right."

Meanwhile, Skolnik's Pioneer Square community group is pressing a campaign to encourage those with spare change to hang onto it.

To dramatize its position, the community council has made up posters showing a woman's hand passing a dollar to the hand of transient. But in mid-pass, the dollar is transformed into a bottle and the slogan asks, "Are you passing the buck or the bottle?"

Postal Service strikes back with threat to fire strikers

WASHINGTON (AP) — With little progress reported at the bargaining table, the Postal Service is warning its 600,000 employees that it will fire any worker who strikes when the union contracts expire at midnight Monday.

"Any employee who, in any manner, participates in a strike or other illegal job action will be discharged," says a notice that will be distributed Friday in employees' paychecks.

The notice also says strikers will forfeit the right to any future employment by the federal government.

The Postal Service said the law against strikers also would be used against any employees who participate in "any concerted slow-down or other concerted interruption of operations by employees."

The warnings come as the Postal Service and its two largest unions report little movement toward agreement on a new contract to replace the expiring three-year pact.

Federal mediator Kenneth E. Moffett entered the talks last weekend to try to bring the two sides together.

Union officials have declined to answer reporters' questions about a possible walkout, which would be illegal under federal law.

However, the presidents of the two Postal Service's two larger unions helped lead the largest postal strike in history in 1970, when they were leaders of union locals in New York. That 1970 walkout idled more than 150,000 workers and federal troops were used to deliver mail in New York and other areas.

In addition, the American Postal Workers Union and National Association of Letter Carriers have "no-contract, no-work" clauses that call for a walkout when a contract expires without ageement on a new one.

Two smaller unions, the National Association of Rural Letter Carriers and the mail handlers' division of Laborers International Union, are negotiating separately from the larger ones. "Things are moving very well" in those negotiations, Postal Service spokesman Jamie Caine said.

At the negotiations with the two major unions, however, "there has been no movement by the Postal Service at the bargaining table," said Moe Biller of the postal workers union.

Biller said the Postal Service is trying a "stonewalling job."

The two larger unions are demanding a 17.7 percent pay raise, including 5 percent a year and a 2.7 percent inflation catchup. Pay and benefits now average $23,300 a year, according to Postal Service figures.

The Postal Service has contingency plans for delivering the mail in the event of a strike, and Postmaster General William F. Bolger has said he "would not hesitate" to suspend the postal monopoly laws. That would allow private companies to deliver letters, something that is illegal in ordinary times.

Nevertheless, any major strike would create delays in mail distribution.

"We are not anticipating a strike, but we are prepared for that eventuality," said spokesman Walter E. Duka, who declined to elaborate.

The mail agency has held regular meetings with the Defense Department about contingency plans for moving mail. One possibility is using federal troops, which was done in 1970.

Issue expected to rise again

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Many of the 400 city workers who struck for nine days to win equal pay for women believe their actions may have national repercussions.

"I equate it with women's suffrage," said Vivian Martin, a claims adjuster. "What we have done is a beginning," she said, to assure that women who do work comparable with that of men are paid similarly.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 101, representing 2,000 librarians, clerks, parks employees and other workers, voted 295-27 Tuesday to accept a contract settlement reached with the city the night before.

The City Council, which on Sunday rejected an earlier tentative agreement, quickly approved the second pact.

"We have been in touch with numerous unions around the country, numerous women's groups around the country — all interested" in the strike and settlement, said Mike Ferrero, president of the local.

Mayor Janet Gray Hayes called the settlement "a historic step toward fairness in the workplace toward women." By agreeing to include equal pay as part of contract negotiations, the city "merely lit the fuse" of one of the major issues of the 1980s, she said.

The accord calls for $1.5 million over two years to help erase pay disparities. "I think it is going to represent a guideline or pattern that other unions may follow," Ferrero said.

The two-year pact gives employees a 15.5 percent general wage increase. The entire cost of the settlement was $4.8 million, Mrs. Hayes said.

Philip Sparks, AFSCME national spokesman, said in Washington that the union's lawyers plan to file complaints "within the next week" against many states and cities with federal agencies investigating sex discrimination on the job. He declined to identify the localities.

AFSCME is the nation's largest union of public employees. It claims 1 million members, 40 percent of them women.

At the core of the dispute was a study commissioned by the city at the urging of the union which showed that jobs traditionally held by women paid less than those held mostly by men.

The study found that a senior librarian made $23,348; a senior chemist, a job held by men, paid $29,094. The consultants said the jobs were comparable.

San Jose, the nation's 17th largest city, calls itself "the feminist capital of the world." Led by Mrs. Hayes, it has a female majority on its City Council.

Writers set to resume work

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Scriptwriters here got ready to return to their typewriters today after voting unanimously to end a 13-week strike against major film and television producers.

"I know of certain writers who are hitting their typewriters tonight," Writers Guild of America spokeswoman Shannon Boyd said Tuesday after the affirmative show-of-hands vote among the more than 1,000 writers who showed up for the voting.

The vote came hours after writers in the New York chapter voted 79-1 for ratification.

The four-year contract covers about 8,300 members of the Writers Guild and for the first time provides them royalties from pay television receipts.

The lucrative home-video market was the central issue, as it was in walkouts the past year by actors and musicians. Directors, who could have crippled the industry with a strike, settled before their strike deadline two weeks ago — accepting an offer from producers on home video.

Ms. Boyd said producers and writers now must work feverishly to get scripts ready for the fall TV season, which probably will be delayed at least two weeks, perhaps longer, for the second year in a row.

Writers Guild official Brad Radnitz called the settlement a "monumental, epoch-making victory." Writers gave chief negotiator Gary Ellingsworth a standing ovation when he described the pay-television agreement.

Negotiators reached tentative approval on the contract Saturday and the board of directors recommended ratification.

Air controllers still may strike

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Voting by the nation's air traffic controllers is running overwhelmingly against a tentative contract reached last month and a crippling strike is likely the first week of August, a union chief says.

"In my travels around the country in the past few days, I now believe we will get a vote of at least 80 percent in favor of a strike," Robert Poli, president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers' Organization, was quoted as saying in today's editions of the Los Angeles Times.

Poli, who was in Los Angeles on Tuesday, said the vote by mail "is running between 90 percent and 95 percent to reject it." However, he said he did not know how many of the union's 14,500 members had cast ballots.

The voting deadline is July 28.

Poli said he would ask Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis to resume negotiations that day, but said: "If Lewis continues to insist he will not make a better offer, then we will take a strike vote quickly. It can be done in one day."

Union leaders have said a strike would not be called unless 80 percent of all controllers, including those who are non-union, support a walkout. A strike expected June 22 was called off because only 75 percent voted to walk out.

Poli said he believes Lewis' alleged intransigence was the reason for increased support for a strike.

U.S. export watchers trying to gauge Soviet grain crop

WASHINGTON (AP) — Export watchers in the Agriculture Department are keeping their eyes glued to all sorts of statistics in hopes of figuring out how much grain the Soviet Union may buy from the United States in the coming year.

Although there is no clear answer to that question, the experts seem to agree that the Soviets will have to import another record quantity of grain from somebody in 1981-82, perhaps as much as 38 million metric tons.

Last Friday, the department estimated Soviet grain output this year at 200 million metric tons, down 10 million from the June estimate and far below Moscow's goal of 236 million tons.

"Even if grain imports rise to 38 million tons in 1981-82, 3 million more than forecast last month, the Soviets may have to delay adding appreciably to badly depleted (reserve) stocks," a new analysis said Monday.

During the 1980-81 year, the Soviet Union imported 33.5 million tons of grain. A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds.

U.S. sales to Russia were restricted by a partial embargo ordered on Jan. 4, 1980, by former President Carter in response to Soviet moves in Afghanistan.

The ban did not apply to 8 million metric tons a year that was specified under a long-term agreement. The Soviet Union, however, made up the difference by buying grain from Argentina and other suppliers.

As a result, the Soviets imported about 25 million metric tons of grain from those other countries plus the 8 million from the United States.

President Reagan lifted the embargo on April 24 and U.S. officials have informed the Soviets they may buy additional grain. So far, however, no new deals have been made public.

"Long-term contracts with certain countries and reported offers from others already provide the Soviets a potential supply of 10-15 million tons from non-U.S. origins for 1981-82," the report said.

"If U.S.S.R. imports from non-U.S. origins in 1981-82 should continue at the year-earlier level of 25 million tons, the volume from the U.S. could rise to as much as 18-20 million," it said. "On the other hand, if there are no purchases of U.S. grain, the total Soviet market for non-U.S.-origin grain would have to increase substantially from the record level of 1981-82."

Timing critical in grub control

By CHARLES W. GREEN
County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Heavy grub infestations can destroy grass roots causing the area to become spongy, allowing the mat of turf to be rolled back like a piece of carpet. To prevent this type damage, lawns should be checked closely for small white grubs during the critical treatment period (July 1 to August 1). When more than 4 grubs per square foot of grass sod are found, lawns should be treated for control of this major lawn insect. Timing of insecticide treatments when grubs are less than ½ inch in body length and located near the soil surface is critical for adequate control.

Check lawns for white grubs by cutting a one square foot section of sod and examining the roots and soil to a depth of four inches. Several lawn samples (at least two one-square-foot sections per 1,000 square feet lawn area) should be taken to make certain an infestation justifies treatment. After examination, soil and sod should be replaced, pressed down and watered.

Due to the bunching behavior of adult female beetles at egg-laying time, white grub infestations are often "clumped" in turf grass areas. If the grub worms are definitely clumped in areas in the lawn, direct treatment to infested areas only.

Insecticides suggested for white grub control in home lawns in far West Texas are Diazinon and Dursban. Liquid or granular formulations of these insecticides may be utilized to treat lawns for grub control.

Before treating lawns for grub control, homeowners should mow the lawn and remove all grass clippings.

Lawns treated with liquid insecticides should be sprayed immediately after lawn irrigation. Apply the recommended dosage rate of liquid insecticide in 30 to 40 gallons of water per 1,000 square feet of lawn. Irrigate the sprayed lawn immediately after treatment before the spray dries on the grass with ½ to 1 inch of water. The high volume of spray water and irrigation after spraying are needed to move the insecticide into the soil where the grubs are feeding.

When using granular insecticides, apply the granules evenly over the entire lawn while the grass is dry. Follow instructions of the label of insectidide container for treatment rates. Rake the lawn with a grass rake or water hose after application to move granules down near soil surface. Then apply at least 1½ to 2 inches of irrigation water to dissolve the granules and move the insecticide into the soil. To obtain this amount of water accurately, do this — place an empty coffee can under the spray of the sprinkler. Periodically, check the can until 1½ to 2 inches of water are in the can.

Diazinon and Dursban are organic phosphate insecticides that will chemically tie-up on thatch — the tightly bound layer of living and dead roots, stems, leaves and stolons of grass that forms under the turf. In lawns with more than ½ inch thatch, irrigation applications immediately after spray treatment is essential to move the insecticide through the thatch layer. Grass should be wet prior to spray treatment.

Diazinon will usually provide control of grubs for about two to three weeks. Dursban should provide grub control for four to six weeks. This is if both insecticides get into the soil where the grubs are feeding.

Keep children and pers off the lawn until the insecticide is worked into the soil and the grass is dry.

All pesticides can be harmful to health and the environment if misused. Read the label carefully and use only as directed.

China expected to import U.S. grain while slowly expanding its orders

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department's No. 2 official says China will be a steady importer of foreign grain, including U.S. wheat and corn, for the foreseeable future but will be extremely slow in expanding those orders.

Deputy Secretary Richard E. Lyng led an eight-member U.S. grain team to China last month to discuss its current and future needs.

"It's clear that the goals of the People's Republic (of China) are to improve the standard of living of the people and, particularly, to improve the diet. They've given that a high priority," Lyng told a news conference on Monday. "In order to do this, they intend to continue to import U.S. grains."

But Lyng said the Chinese admitted that "a major constraint" to stepping up grain imports are the country's port and domestic transportation facilities for handling larger amounts of grain.

Those limit imports to about 15 million metric tons of grain a year, he said, adding that it will be several years before China has the facilities to handle much more than that amount.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat or 39.4 bushels of corn.

China signed a four-year agreement with the United States in 1980 in which it agreed to buy a minimum of 6 million to 8 million metric tons of wheat and corn annually through 1984. About 15 percent to 20 percent of the grain is to be corn.

Senator has resourceful plan for priming pump

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, has raised the possibility of taxing natural resources such as oil and gas to pay for developing what is perhaps Texas' most precious resource — water.

Speaker Bill Clayton said Tuesday that Texans need a way to make water plans for the future, but he does not think they are willing to pay more taxes to do it.

Clayton appeared before the Senate Finance Committee in support of his proposal to allocate half the state treasury surplus each biennium to a fund for water conservation, water quality and flood control projects.

The proposed constitutional amendment also says the state may use its credit, up to $500 million, to guarantee water bonds issued by local governments and river authorities.

Parker asked Clayton how anyone could predict state surpluses over a 10-year period.

"There always will be a certain amount of surplus," said Clayton.

"But do you agree we can't project how much surplus?" asked Parker.

"We only have some good estimates," replied Clayton.

Focus again on state redistricting

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Senators scheduled a third session on congressional redistricting today to get a look at a proposal touted by its sponsor as a compromise that Gov. Bill Clements might accept.

Redistricting is one of five issues submitted by Clements to the 30-day special session, which began Monday, and it is no secret the governor wants Republicans to get the best deal they can.

Sen. John Wilson, D-La Grange, said he had a proposal that "meets every objection he (Clements) has. I don't know whether he will accept it, but I will offer it."

Wilson said the plan included a minority district for Dallas County, which Clements has stressed. Packing minorities into a single district would increase chances that Dallas' other three congressmen would be Republicans.

Clements' approval is important since he can, of course, veto a legislative proposal. The regular session of the Legislature, which ended June 1, failed to draw new congressional districts to reflect the 1980 census.

Isaac Jackson of Dallas, a staff representative of the United States Steelworkers, told the Senate on Tuesday, "It's clear the Republican governor wants all the minorities (in Dallas County) in one district so others will go Republican. He (Clements) does not care about the plight of blacks or browns, he only cares about Republican forces."

Sen. James "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson, quipped, "The witness indicates the governor is not interested in the plight of the Browns — well, he campaigned for me."

Jackson said Dallas County would be better off without a strictly "minority district," because U.S. Reps. Martin Frost and Jim Mattox, both Dallas Democrats, both are responsive to the needs of their minority constituents.

He and three other Dallas-area witnesses supported a proposal that would allow Democrats and Republicans alike a good chance to be re-elected. Two of the witnesses said it was important that Grand Prairie be in a single congressional district.

The proposal has been endorsed by most of Texas' 24-member congressional delegation. Under the plan, two of Texas' additional three congressional seats probably would go to Democrats and one to a Republican.

Seven witnesses from Brazoria County, however, opposed the proposal because, they said, it would split the county.

Mayor Vick Vickers, also of Lake Jackson in Brazoria County, said in opposing two Democratic redistricting plans before the Senate, "We aren't selfish. We aren't greedy. We just want our fair share of the pie in the future."

Family income increases, buying power decreases

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

More is sometimes less in the topsy-turvy world of earnings and economics.

A new study shows that while median family income has more than doubled in the past decade, the buying power of that income has actually dropped. More dollars provide less goods and services.

The study was done by the Tax Foundation Inc., a non-profit, nonpartisan group with headquarters in Washington, D.C. The foundation was set up in 1937 to monitor the tax and spending activities of federal, state and local goverments.

Foundation researchers compared median incomes for 1971 and 1981 before and after federal income tax and Social Security. Then they adjusted the figures to take inflation into account.

Ten years ago, the median income for a four-member family including two children and one wage earner was $10,314. Today, the researchers estimate, the median income for the same type of family is $23,700. That's an increase of 130 percent.

Taxes, however, have risen faster than incomes. In 1971, the federal income tax bite on the median family was $933; today, it's $2,801. That's an increase of 200 percent.

Social Security took $406 from the median family in 1971; today, the tab is $1,576. And that's an increase of almost 300 percent.

The after-tax income of the family with median earnings went from $8,975 in 1971 to $19,323 this year — a rise of about 115 percent.

Adjust the figures for inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index, and "real" income for 1981 ends up at only $8,548 — a decrease of $427 or 5 percent.

Real income, measured in terms of the buying power of 1971 dollars, has been declining steadily in the past six years. It went from $9,149 in 1975 to $9,071 in 1976, $9,056 in 1977, $9,034 in 1978, $8,955 in 1979 and $8,563 in 1980.

Another recent Tax Foundation study provides a look at where all the federal tax money goes. It was based on goverment spending of $655 billion for the 1981 fiscal year, which began last Oct. 1. It included indirect taxes — like corporate income levies — as well as the direct income and Social Security taxes.

The foundation researchers picked a hypothetical family of four with an income of $22,000. They said that family would pay $6,339 in direct and indirect federal taxes in fiscal 1981. (Individuals generally calculate their taxes on the basis of the calendar year, but the researchers broke down the figures to make them match the government's budget period.)

The $22,000-a-year family will pay $2,423 in federal income taxes for fiscal 1981, $1,463 in Social Security taxes and $2,453 in indirect taxes. All told, it adds up to 29 percent of income, and the figures do not count any state or local taxes.

In a similar study last year, the foundation looked at someone earning $20,000 a year and calculated that his or her federal tax bill, direct and indirect, would be $5,451, or 27 percent of income.

The Tax Foundation report said the biggest chunk of money — $2,127, or 33.6 percent — goes for what are called "income security" payments, which cover a variety of benefit programs, including retirement and disability plans. In the 1980 fiscal year, income security programs accounted for 32.6 percent of federal spending.

The second-largest share of the worker's tax bill — $1,501, or 23.7 percent — goes for national defense, which accounted for 22.3 percent of 1980 spending.

Interest on the national debt eats up $716, or 11.3 percent, of the worker's 1981 tax bill. In 1980, interest took 10.8 percent.

Federal spending on health accounts for $618, or 9.8 percent, of the worker's tax money, about the same as in 1980.

At the bottom of the list is agriculture, which will cost the worker only $11 this year. That represents less than two-tenths of 1 percent of the overall federal tax bill, down from eight-tenths of a percent last year.

New instrument may be able to monitor winds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Meteorologists have taken a tentative step forward in measuring a major weather component that everyone notices but few can completely gauge accurately: the wind.

From frosty northern gusts to balmy southern breezes, the wind's effect on weather has been obvious since ancient times, remarked on by everyone from farmer to sailor to bard.

Although instruments can measure them accurately on the surface of the Earth, wind speed and direction vary considerably at upper levels of the atmosphere, where they move major weather systems from place to place.

That's where a new instrument comes into play — a telescope-like tube atop a white trailer developed by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and currently undergoing testing on a low mesa near Boulder, Colo.

Although this experimental version is earthbound, meteorologists hope that its progeny will someday take to the sky aboard satellites, providing a worldwide system to monitor the winds, thereby improving weather forecasting.

"Everyone pretty much agrees if you're going to improve long-range prediction, you need the detailed global wind field, and this is the only way to get it," said Dr. Freeman Hall, director of the group testing the device.

The monitor uses a system called Doppler lidar to measure winds up to 12 miles away.

Lidar is a radar using laser beams instead of radio waves. The Doppler system measures wind movement through radiation reflected back from dust or other wind-borne particles.

The larger version planned for satellite use could measure wind speeds to about nine miles high — the major weather layer — and to within six miles an hour and 10 degrees of direction.

Currently, wind speeds and directions are estimated from satellite temperature readings and balloon measurements. Balloons are quite accurate but are sent aloft only every 12 hours from widely scattered sites.

Lidar readings would be more accurate and could cover a much more detailed area, according to scientists.

Hall notes that much current forecasting depends on computerized models of the atmosphere.

Improved imformation fed into these models will lead to improved forecasts, he said.

The data would also help improve the models. Some models cover only one hemisphere, despite the flow of winds across the equator. The new wind measurements could take both hemispheres into account.

It will be some years before the proposed "windsat" satellites could go into orbit, but Hall's group would like to test the system on the space shuttle, perhaps later this decade. Lockheed has comfirmed that the shuttle could carry a larger version of the lidar.

Meanwhile, the group hopes for tests aboard airplanes to work out technical problems and determine the best pattern for scanning the air.

The system needs dust or other aerosols in the atmosphere to work, officials noted, which could cause some problems.

"The air is clearer the higher up you go, and information on distribution of aerosols worldwide is limited," Hall explained.

Lefferts five hits Mets for 3rd whitewash job

Upton, Hall, LaVigne lead 14-hit assault

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Remember Johnny Vander Meer, the lefthander who pitched back-to-back no-hitters against the Boston Braves and Brooklyn Dodgers? Craig Lefferts probably doesn't because it happened before was born, but he may have achieved a feat equally as amazing when he blanked the Jackson Mets, 7-0, for the Midland Cubs at Cubs Stadium Tuesday night.

It was the southpaw's second complete shutout at Cubs Stadium this year and third, if you count a later 7-0 shutout against Tulsa in which he needed ninth inning help from Tim Milner and Rob Blyth.

"As far as I'm concerned, it was a shutout," says the former University of Arizona ace, referring to the Tulsa game.

THREE SHUTOUTS in a season at the Hogan Park shooting gallery is a rarity, but three by the same pitcher is unheard of.

It did wonders for Lefferts' morale, bringing his record to 8-9. "I've been going through a bad spell and had lost six of my last eight decisions," he said.

And it came on a night when 23-year-old who was born in Munich, Germany, wondered if he "shouldn't of stood in bed."

"I was tired and wasn't throwing hard. I knew I wouldn't overpower anyone, so I concentrated on hitting spots. I also threw three times as many changes up, 15 or 20, as I normally do. Once I threw two in a row and got away with it."

Best game? "No, my shutout against El Paso (May 4 10-0) was a better game because El Paso is a better hitting team. Of course, tonight I had an edge on Jackson because they haven't seen me before."

The victory gave the Cubs a 3-1 edge and the series, regardless of how tonight's final game comes out. And Midland, which couldn't win a series the first two months, hasn't lost one in the last month. It shows with a 14-8 West Division leading second half Texas League record.

It also marked the second route-going effort in a row by a Midland pitcher.

AND WHILE Lefferts was barring the barn door with a three-strikeout, one walk, five-hitter, the Cubs were erupting for seven runs in the first four inings to sew it up early against Mike Lowery, 6-6, whose last Cubs Stadium appearance was a shutout last season.

David Pagel singled and scored on Mel Hall's double and then Jack Upton, who went 4-for-4, singled home a second run for a 2-0 lead in the first. The Cubs added two more in the second when Carmelo Martinez skipped a liner past third, Randy LaVigne singled and after an 8-6 force at second, Pagel tripled two runs home.

In the third it was a Hall single and an Upton homer to left, a rocket-launching at which left fielder Rusty Tillman just turned and watched in admiration. In the fourth Randy LaVigne tripled and scored when second baseman Ed Cuervo came in fast on Pagel's slow hopper, but couldn't handle the ball.

Dempsey just misses no-hitter

By Associated Press

Shreveport hurler Mark Dempsey narrowly missed a no-hitter Tuesday night as Shreveport downed San Antonio, 2-1, in Texas League baseball action.

A solo home run by San Antonio catcher Mike Zouras in the eighth inning was the only hit given up by Dempsey, who claimed his twelfth win against two losses. Glenn Fisher entered the game in relief in the ninth inning and was credited with a save.

Shreveport's Rusty McDonald was tagged for the loss. McDonald is now 2-4.

IN OTHER league action, Amarillo downed Arkansas, 4-2, Tulsa shut out El Paso, 4-0, and Midland romped Jackson, 7-0.

Amarillo and Arkansas were tied at 2-2 going into the eighth when the Gold Sox scored on consecutive singles by John Stevenson, Aaron Cain and Frank Castro.

The winning pitcher was Andy Hawkins, 6-8. The loser was Arkansas' Jim Gott.

Walter Terrell, 9-6, gave up six hits, struck out eight and waked two en route to Tulsa's win over El Paso. Larry Montgomery, 5-2, took the loss.

Top promoters out of fight

Leonard, Hearns fight without Bob Arum or Don King

An AP Sports Analysis
By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

"Where is Bob Arum?" someone asked Mike Trainer at a New York news conference to formally kick off the buildup for the Sugar Ray Leonard-Thomas Hearns fight. "At 450 Park Ave.," said Leonard's attorney, giving Arum's office address.

Trainer was merely pointing out that Arum won't be involved in the fight as a promoter. Neither will Don King.

IT WILL be the first time since the first Joe Frazier-Muhammad Ali fight in 1971 that neither nor both of boxing's leading brokers will be involved in the promotion end of a boxing extravaganza.

King promoted Ali's title-regaining victory over George Foreman in Zaire in 1974. Both King and Arum were involved in the "Thrilla in Manila" — the third Ali-Frazier bout in 1975. Arum co-promoted with Madison Square Garden the Ali-Ken Norton fight at Yankee Stadium in 1976. Arum and King co-promoted the first Leonard-Roberto Duran fight, and King promoted the rematch, both in 1980. King promoted the Larry Holmes-Ali bout last Oct.2.

ARUM, CHAIRMAN of Top Rank, Inc., has a role in the Leonard-Hearns universal welterweight showdown Sept.16 at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, which has a projected gross of $50 million. Leonard reportedly is guaranteed $8 million and Hearns $5 million. Both could make much more.

Top Rank will line up equipment for and provide telephone lines to closed-circuit television exhibitors, who pay him a fee, and will handle foreign elevisionsales for an agent's fee, said Dan Duva, president of Main Event Productions, the promoter which will handle the actual marketing for the fight. The word in the fight game is that Mike Malitz, president of Top Rank has no equal in setting up a closed-circuit TV network or handling foreign sales.

TRAINER WASN'T happy with King's handling of the Leonard-Duran rematch in New Orleans last Nov.25, in which several people involved got financially burned, but not King. Leonard made $7 million and Duran $8 million.

As for Arum, he and Trainer took several verbal shots at each another in Houston where Leonard won the World Boxing Association junior middleweight title from Ayub Kalule and Hearns kept the WBA welterweight championship against Pablo Baez in an Arum promotion at the Astrodome.

"I was not in favor of his (Arum's) involvement" in the Leonard-Hearns match, said Trainer. But, he added that he left it up to Shelly Finkel, who with his partner Jimmy Koplik, packaged the fight. But quite a few people in boxing consider Mike Trainer the real packager of Sugar Ray Leonard fights.

TRAINER ALSO said he won't say he'll never be involved again with Arum and King as promoters. Yesterday's enemy often is tomorrow's best friend in a sport in which money talks. "I can't let my own personal feelings interfere with Ray's ability to make a living," said Trainer. "I can't say, 'Ray, I turned down (an extra) $2 million because I don't like this guy.'"

Trainer didn't plan to be involved with King in the Leonard-Duran rematch. Finkel had put together a $17 million package, but then Duran and his manager, Carlos Eleta, refused to fight for anyone but King.

Finkel got his shot at putting together the Leonard-Hearns bout because Hearn's manager, Emanuel Steward, like Trainer, is not tied to King and Arum.

British course puzzles Floyd

SANDWICH, England (AP) — "If I had known the golf course was like this, I'd have come here a few days earlier," said Ray Floyd, one of the favorites to win the 110th British Open starting Thursday.

THE BURLY American, enjoying his best season at 38, had his first look at the Royal St. George's links, set amid sand dunes beside the English Channel, and confessed it puzzled him.

"It's a helluva test of golf out there," Floyd said Tuesday. "When you get on the tee for the first time, you really have no idea where to go. You need to know the golf course a bit.

"You can't see the bunkers, and you can't see some of the pins. If I had realized it was going to be like, this I might have come over about last Friday."

But Lee Trevino, two-time British Open champion who played the course with the long-driving Floyd, still tabbed him as one of the favorites for the $50,000 first prize.

"This course is going to favor a big hitter, and I like Floyd," Trevino said.

AUSTRALIA'S DAVID Graham, the U.S. Open champion, also picked Floyd to win.

But British bookies made Tom Watson the favorite at 4-1, Jack Nicklaus second at 5-1, and saw Floyd as a 25-1 longshot.

Floyd, who has won more than a half-million dollars this year, tried to explain why life begins at 38.

"Many golfers are at their best between 35 and 45," he said. "It's nothing of a freak to start playing well at my age. "The mental and the physical are starting to complement each other. I now know my capabilities and my limitations.

"I know the shots I bring off only occasionally, and those are the ones I try to stay away from. It's about wind and pin placements."

FLOYD HAS won four tournaments this year — the Tournament Players' Championship at Jacksonville, Fla., the Doral at Miami, the Westchester Classic and the Canadian PGA.

He was runnerup to Nicklaus in the British Open at St. Andrews, Scotland, in 1978.

The Royal St. George's Club and the Royal and Ancient Golf Club between them have spent a lot of money on a new irrigation system to prepare this course for its first British Open in 32 years.

Most of the players say it has made the 6,829-yard, par 35-35— 70 course lusher, greener and slower than the courses they have come to expect in Britain. But they don't agree on whether it's an improvement.

WASTON, THE defending champion, admitted he was disapointed because the ball bounces and rolls less than on other British courses where the Open has been held.

"They have Americanized it," Watson said.

But Trevino raved about the course.

"I THINK it's the greatest course we have ever played the British Open on," Trevino said. "I have never seen a seaside course like this. It makes it a little American in style, but that doesn't mean I am not in love with it."

There are humps on some of the fairways. Trevino admitted they worry him because he is not a long driver.

"Take the seventh," Trevino said. "If you can carry the hill you can get a roll down the other side and an extra 40 yards. I can't carry it.

"That is what I mean when I say this course is for long hitters."

Labor Secretary Ray Donovan joins strike talks

NEW YORK (AP) — With President Reagan cheering from the sidelines, Labor Secretary Ray Donovan is coming off the bench and joining talks aimed at ending the 34-day-old major league baseball strike.

"I think we're getting very near a settlement," baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn said Tuesday as officials announced that Donovan would appear at today's bargaining session.

DONOVAN PLANNED to accompany federal mediator Kenneth Moffett at talks this afternoon in New York. Talks broke off Saturday after the club owners rejected a settlement proposal drawn up by Moffett.

"The secretary is deeply concerned about the economic impact that the strike is having on many American cities," said Donovan aide Earl Cox. The 24 cities with major league teams have lost 392 of the 2,106 scheduled regular-season games.

President Reagan, who was a play-by-play announcer for the Chicago Cubs years ago, said Tuesday that he'd like to see the strike settled soon.

"I agree with Samuel Gompers, who created the American Federation of Labor, who said, 'Anytime there's a strike, there's a breakdown in communications,'" Reagan said.

DONOVAN WAS to open today's negotiations by making a statement but didn't plan to stay for the entire session, Moffett said.

"I believe Mr. Donovan's presence at this meeting will emphasize the importance of bringing this dispute to a conclusion," Moffett said. He and Cox said that if the new round of talks fails, Donovan would summon representatives of both sides to Washington for intensive bargaining.

The strike by the Major League Players Association began June 12 over the type of compensation a team should be awarded when it loses a free agent, a player whose contractual obligation to the team has ended.

The club owners had imposed a system under which a team that lost a free agent to another team would be permitted to take a player from the second team. The team getting the free agent was allowed to take some of its players out of contention, but the rest were fair game.

THE PLAYERS objected, saying such a system made owners reluctant to hire free agents and therefore threatened the players' mobility.

As a compromise, Moffett proposed limiting the instances in which teams would have to provide compensation for free agents.

In an interview aired on the CBS network, Kuhn said Tuesday that he believed the club owners had made a "significant step forward in their rewrite" of Moffett's proposal last week.

Kuhn said he was looking at a number of ways to resume the season once the strike ends, including the possibility of a round-robin tournament.

ABOUT 15,000 fans congregated near Cleveland's Municipal Stadium to show their disgust with the expected cancellation of the annual All-Star game, which had been scheduled for Tuesday night. The game still could be held if the strike is settled soon, but if not, the city is expected to play host for the game next year.

Local disc jockey Jeff Kinsbach led the crowd in a 30-second crescendo of boos pointed in the direction of the stadium.

"We want everyone in the country to know how we feel about being stood up," Kinsbach said.

Where has all the love gone Oilers?

By WAYNE LOCKWOOD
Copley News Service

HOUSTON -- A year ago, the billboard might have been considered sacrilegious. But in June 1981, it is merely a sign of the times.

Against a background of Oiler blue, where football loyalty once was proclaimed, the message to commuters on a busy Houston freeway now reads, "Love Ya, Jesus."

ALTHOUGH SOME motorists may be troubled by the informality of this affirmation, few can argue with its implications.

Things have returned to normal in Houston, it says. Priorities have been reordered. Football is once again a sport, not a religion. "Love Ya, Blue" is simply a cry of enthusiasm, not a statement of faith.

Less than 12 months ago, such a state of mind might have been considered impossible.

Even in the football-mad state of Texas, the Oilers were something special. They won 25 games in two years, despite playing in the same division as the Pittsburgh Steelers and Cleveland Browns. They reached the AFC championship game twice in a row.

The Astrodome rocked to the "Houston Oiler Song." The place was packed to honor the Oilers after a losing playoff game with Pittsburgh.

Spiritually and geographically, the Oilers and their fans were one.

The team's star, the dominant force in the league, was Earl Campbell, a product of Tyler, Texas, by way of the state university.

THE COACH was Bum Phillips, a good old boy from Orange.

Bum was not so much appointed to his job as annointed, you were led to believe by the Oiler media guide.

" In the 'produce or goodbye' world of professional football, where head coaches are chewed up and spit out like so many sticks of Juicy Fruit, it is rare to find a team that has found its coach," began Phillips' official biography.

" There are plenty of good coaches in the NFL, but there are not many who are so perfectly matched to their team, city and era that it seems they were invented in Hollywood."

That's how it seemed 12 months ago. This is how it seems today:

Phillips now coaches the New Orleans Saints. He was fired by Oiler owner Bud Adams, despite an 11-victory season, following a playoff loss to eventual Super Bowl champion Oakland.

Bum was succeeded by Ed Biles, who last served as a head coach at Xavier, Ohio, University in 1970. He is the Oilers' sixth head coach in nine years.

CAMPBELL, THE homegrown hero, has threatened not to play unless his contract is renegotiated for the second time in three years to pay him $1 million a season.

The Oilers' flashy wide receiver and kick runner, Billy Johnson, has taken his white shoes to Montreal of the Canadian Football League.

Houston had no choices in the first two rounds of the most recent National Football League draft, having surrendered them in trade for veteran tight end Dave Casper part-way through last season.

A number of Oiler players are openly upset at the manner of Phillips' dismissal. Others, led by linebacker Greg Bingham, were angered by Bum's simplistic offense, which was blamed for the team's loss to Oakland. There is a split, in other words.

THERE IS a budding quarterback controversy. Should Biles play a creaky-kneed veteran, Ken Stabler, or a youngster of promise, Gifford Nielsen?

And so it goes. What once seemed an ideal situation has fallen apart. One minute, the Oilers were 11-5 and hopeful of reaching the Super Bowl. The next, they were picking up the pieces.

"I don't know what those boys are thinking about," sighed a Houston cab driver. "Why, they'll be lucky to finish third. Seems like they're having all kinds of problems."

Others appear to agree. Of the pre-season professional football publications already on the newstands, none picks the Oilers higher than third.

"I don't envy Eddie," says a Houston veteran who asks not to be named. "He could wind up in a really nasty situation here. If we win, things will be OK, but if we don't, it will be miserable."

The Oilers still can win. That is the belief of Sid Gillman, the man who brought the franchise back to respectability by coaching it from a 1-13 record in 1973 to a 7-7 record in 1974 before Adams dismissed him. Gillman also hired both Phillips and Biles.

"Biles is a bright guy. I think he'll do a good job ... if they give him a chance," says Sid, recently retired as an Eagle special assistant at the age of 69.

"But he can only do a good job if Bud keeps his nose out of it. A coach has to have a chance to express himself and his talent. If you have meddling ownership or a meddling general manger who doesn't know what the game's all about ... it's tough."

ADAMS HAS found it difficult to keep his nose out of things since he founded this franchise as part of the old American Football League in 1960. Bud has employed 10 head coaches since then.

Still, this team has won 36 games in the last three years. Bum did not leave the cupboard bare.

" I think we did about everything you can do but win the Super Bowl," judges Phillips, in retrospect. " The Oilers have improved to the point where they can lose players to injuries and not get killed. That's a pretty good football team."

Biles thinks so, too.

" We have to overcome some obstacles not of this staff's doing," he points out. " But I think we'll have a pretty decent football team in 1981. I'm looking forward to it."

Love ya, Ed. All you have to do is win at least 11 games and avoid losing to Oakland in the playoffs.

Keep your eye on that billboard.

People recognize this cowboy anywhere he is

By Jim Murray
(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

You'd know him if he were on TV in a cowboy hat lipping snuff. If you were a rodeo buff, you'd know him if he was flopping under the horns of a 700 pound running steer and dragging him to the ground or roping and tying a bawling calf. If you are a Green Bay Packer, you'd know him if Dallas had the ball on the four-yard line because he'd be the one with the ball.

He looks like 190-pounds of trouble just sitting there. He's coiled. You'd imagine the members of the Dalton Gang looked like this. He looks as if he might have a price on his head somewhere west of the Brazos. Wyatt Earp would get nervous if he rode into town.

He was the genuine spurs-on-the-boots, chaps-on-the-Levis, hammered-copper-on-the-belt-buckle article, the Cowboy on the Dallas Cowboys.

He wasn't fast, he wasn't big. He was just dangerous. He hit with the outraged fury of a surprised mountain lion.

The Cowboys were "America's Team" and Walt Garrison was as American as a coyote's howl. The team had Calvin Hill, Dwayne Thomas, Robert Newhouse, Bobby Hayes, Golden Richards, and Don Perkins in his years, but Walt Garrison was the guy they gave the ball to when the play had to work or the game was lost.

He was raised deep in the heart of Texas, but he had to go to school in Oklahoma, at State, because he was considered too slow for offense and too small for defense in the Lone Star State. The Cowboys waited clear till the fifth round to draft him because he only ran a 4.75 40 and, at Dallas, defensive tackles ran faster then that. Even when he slowed to 5.2 in the 40, he was still the Cowboy's bread-and-butter player. Garrison, like Billy the Kid, was quick on the draw. He shot you first. You had to reach quick or you were dead.

Don Meredith, his quarterback, put it in perspective with his tonque in cheek: "If you needed four yards, you'd give the ball to Walt Garrison, and he'd get you four yards. If you needed 20 yards, you'd give the ball to Walt Garrison -- and he'd get you four yards."

The unusual part was, Walt Garrison didn't want to be a football player. He wanted to ride bulls, not buses. When some guys sign with the Cowboys, they want the team to buy them tax-free bonds or oil fields. Garrison wanted a horse trailer. When the team publicist reached him in a phone booth one time and told him he had a number for him to call, he asked "Do you have a pencil?" "No," said Garrison, "but I have a pen knife."

When he first played for the Cowboys, the club would have a team meeting the night before a game. Garrison would attend. Then he would get in his pickup truck and ride to a nearby town where they had a rodeo. He would bulldog dagger-horn steers for the evening before he would wrestle the L.A. Rams the next day. Anything without horns held no terror for Walt, and Merlin Olsen only had his painted on.

Still, Garrison was not your basic Sports Illustrated-cover, inspire-a-novel-pro-football star. The Cowboys made him get off horseback -- and bulls' horns -- during the season, but, during the off-season, Walt got out his snuff box and lasso and went chasing steers and calfs again. He starred in a film showing unusual off-season occupations of football players and, in the course of the filming of it, the narrator became fascinated with his snuff-dipping. The announcer had never seen anyone do it, outside of costume movies by guys wearing wigs andor dancing the minuet.

Garrison extolled the virtures of smokeless tobacco and the U.S. Tobacco Company saw the footage and signed "that Cowboy" to a contract on the spot. Garrison was able to quit pro-football on the spot.

He was able to quit everything when he married the daughter (Pam) of one of Texas' richest men, B.F. Phillips. Walt was in L.A. this week for the running of the "Skoal Dash For Cash," the richest horserace in California history, at Los Alamitos.

Payton to sign biggest pact

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Bears running back Walter Payton will retain his status as the National Football League's highest-paid player by signing a contract or agreement in time to report to training camp, his attorney, Bud Holmes, said today.

"If we're not at a definite agreement before camp opens (July 23), we anticipate working out something so Walter can go to camp," Holmes said from his office in Mississippi. "Walter enjoys an excellent and amicable relationship with the club and we're anticipating an agreement."

Another Payton attorney, Holmes and Payton met for seven hours Saturday with Bears General Manager Jim Finks to discuss a contract proposal that would keep Payton the highest-paid player in the NFL. Holmes said he was expecting to hear the Bears' answer to the proposal sometime early this week.

Braves get paid

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Braves pitchers John Montefusco and Gene Garber are continuing to receive their paychecks despite the major league baseball players' strike that began June 12.

The Braves paid the two pitchers after Montefusco and Garber filed default notices, contending their contracts guaranteed their pay except in cases of injuries not related to baseball, according to Al Thornwell, executive vice president of the National League club.

Garber, a reliever who reportedly makes $250,000 a year, is believed to have received a check for about $21,000 for the pay period June 12-30, The Atlanta Constitution reported Tuesday.

Montefusco, a right-hander reportedly making $290,000 a year with $150,000 deferred, was paid earlier for the period June 12-15 and now has been paid for June 15-30. The newspaper reported that Montefusco's latest check totaled $11,666, prior to deductions for taxes and social security.

"We have paid both pitchers from the start of the strike through the pay period that ended on June 30," Thornwell said. "They have gotten their full pay. Of course, all payments have been made under protest."

Dallas has inked 12 of 14 draft picks

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys' have signed 12 of their 14 draft picks, with second-round pick Doug Donley the latest to ink a contract, a spokesman for the National Football League club says.

Third-round selection Glen Titensor, an offensive tackle, also contracted with the club Tuesday, said spokesman Doug Todd.

Cowboy officials earlier had said that negotiations with Donley had reached an impasse.

Jack Mills, Donley's Denver-based agent, said that Cowboys' vice president Gil Brandt called Donley Sunday night and told him the talks were off.

"He called up Doug and his dad and wished them luck in whatever Doug planned to do," Mills said. "Gil said we wouldn't be talking any more. I don't know if Gil is playing a game or what."

Donley, a wide receiver from Ohio State, was supposed to report to the Cowboys training camp at Thousand Oaks, Calif., with the rest of the rookies Monday. He failed to show up then.

John McGraw is symbol of baseball

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Strikes, mavericks, feuds, wild superstitions, heroes and anti-heroes — they're not new to baseball.

They go back to the game's primitive years and all these volatile ingredients are embodied in one of the game's most illustrious pioneers — the jut-jawed, contentious John McGraw, manager of the Giants for 29 years.

CALL HIM "Muggsy," but don't forget to duck.

"Newspapermen called him 'Muggsy,'" said Rube Marquard, pitcher for the Giants from 1908 until 1915, "and that's the only thing he despised. Anybody called him, he didn't care who it was, he'd take a pop at him and he couldn't lick a stamp."

McGraw's idiosyncrasies and superstitions are woven through a dramatic era of American history in a remarkable film, "The Glory of Their Times," which will be reshown on the National Educational Network next Monday evening, starting at 8 p.m. CDT.

Written and produced by Bud Greenspan, whose Olympic and other sports documentaries have won numerous awards, the one-hour show is based on the best-selling book by Lawrence S. Ritter. The first showing in 1976 was overshadowed by the Montreal Olympics.

GREENSPAN AND his wife, Cappy, the executive producer, have revived the film at a time when the American public, hit by the midseason baseball strike, is thirsting for almost anything that concerns its national pastime.

The presentation is a rich look into baseball's colorful past, giving viewers glimpses of such legends as Christy Mathewson, Ty Cobb, Walter Johnson, Babe Ruth and McGraw.

When McGraw won the National League pennant with the Giants in 1904, he refused to let his team compete against the Boston Red Sox because he did not recognize the newly formed American League.

Although he never won it, he hoisted the World Series banner atop a flag pole at the Polo Grounds.

The next year the Giants won again and this time McGraw agreed to play the Philadelphia Athletics. Superstitious, he dressed his players in black from head to foot. The Giants won. In 1911, facing the A's again in the World Series, old Muggsy repeated the funereal clothing act and won again.

THAT WAS the year that McGraw was approached by a tall, lanky man who introduced himself as Charles Victory Faust and claimed that a fortune teller had told him that if he pitched for the Giants the team was certain to win the pennant.

McGraw was intrigued but skeptical. He allowed the man to pitch a few balls to him. The pitches had no zip. But McGraw was not one to defy superstition. So he issued Faust a uniform.

Every day, Faust put on the uniform and warmed up with the team. He got it two games — barely. Faust's stuff was so innocuous that batsmen almost broke their backs swinging at the popcorn balls.

Faust survived. So did the Giants. They won the pennant in 1911. The next year, Faust came back. The Giants won again. They repeated in 1913.

OVER THE winter, Faust wrote McGraw that he wasn't feeling too well and suggested that if the Giants would send him to Hot Springs, Ark., to get in shape he would be ready for the next season.

That's when the bubble burst. He wasn't on the roster in 1914 — and the Giants failed to win the pennant. Faust died on June 18, 1915.

A tough-talking disciplinarian, McGraw was an early century combination of Billy Martin and Earl Weaver but he lacked their animosity for umpires.

One day, one of his young ballplayers rounded second base and was called out for failing to touch the bag. The player protested. "Tell me," barked McGraw, "didn't you touch that base?" "I stepped right on it," said the player. "You know something," said McGraw. "that will cost you $100. Anytime that man out there says you didn't step on it, you didn't step on it."

ONE OF McGraw's star pitchers, in addition to the great Mathewson and Iron Man McGinnity, was a man named Arthur "Bugs" Raymond, a spitball specialist more notorious as an imbiber.

Hans Lobert recalled later that "Bugs" had the best spitball in the game. "'You don't spit on the ball,'" Lobert said he told Raymond. "'You blow your breath on the ball, and the ball comes up drunk.'"

Strike hurts Gillette Co.

BOSTON (AP) — It may have hurt the average baseball fan to miss this year's All-Star game. But consider The Gillette Co., which spent millions of dollars in its annual promotion of the game.

The annual All-Stars game, pitting the best of the National League against the best of the American League, failed to take place Tuesday night — another victim of the long major league baseball players strike.

FOR GILLETTE Co. officials, who have promoted the game for the past 12 years, the cancellation was bothersome, but not disastrous.

"All our product-related activities are independent of the game itself," said John Folan, public relations manager for Gillette's safety razor division. "All the merchandise we had programmed into the All-Star game had moved to retailers well before the strike began."

For the past 12 years, Gillette has sponsored balloting for All-Star teams, distributing ballots that bear Gillette's name at major and minor league games as well as at 50,000 stores selling Gillette products.

IT HAS tied a series of advertisements and product promotion in with the balloting.

But this year, Folan said balloting was down because of the major league baseball players strike, and the resulting lack of interest in the All-Star game.

With the balloting concluded, Folan says baseball officials received some three million ballots.

Brown to do color for Atlanta games

ATLANTA (AP) — Former Atlanta Hawks Coach Hubie Brown will be back at courtside when the National Basketball Association season opens this fall, but he won't be coaching.

Brown, who was fired by the Hawks in March after compiling a five-year record of 199-208, has taken a job as a color commentator on NBA games for the USA Network, a New York-based cable television network.

"I look at this position as a challenge, more than anything else," Brown said Tuesday. "I realize, of course, that I'm a novice and that there will be plenty to learn. But I'm ready to try."

Brown, who was in Atlanta for a basketball camp at Marist High School, said he doesn't anticipate any trouble adapting to his new career, despite his lack of broadcast experience.

"I'm used to being in the public eye," he said. "That's the thing about being a basketball coach — you're close to the fans all of the time, they can see and hear everything you're doing.

"You're identifiable, whereas in football you're just another body standing on the sidelines. And in baseball, the manager can hide in the dugout. Nobody ever sees him."

Brown, who makes 30 to 40 speeches a year for major corporations, said that experience and his ability to translate basketball jargon into a language the public can understand helped him land the job with USA Network.

"You've got to do your homework," he said. "Knowing the game isn't enough. You've got to know about injuries, about why a player is on a hot streak or a cold streak, about what to look for in a team on any given night."

Greer, Ponsetti are body winners

Winners of the Mr. and Ms. Permian Basin Bodybuilding championships held Saturday night in Odessa were Bob Greer of Odessa, who gained a slight edge in points in a close contest with Larry Palmer to place as Mr. Odessa and Mr. Permian Basin, Patricia Ponsetti; Ms. Odessa and Dinah Anderson of Abilene; Ms. Permian Basin. Robin Franklin of Odessa, who won last year's Ms. Permian Basin title, came in fourth in the competition. The evening was marked with a special guest appearance by Dennis Terinio of California, the current holder of the Mr. Universe title.

McEnroe appeals Wimbledon fines

NEW YORK (AP) — John McEnroe, appealing a $750 fine for actions at Wimbledon, is expected to present by July 21 his side of disputes which could ultimately cost him $14,750 and a 21-day suspension.

McEnroe won the Wimbledon men's singles crown July 4 with a four-set victory over Bjorn Borg and is preparing to defend his U.S. Open title starting Sept. 1. He is appealing one of three minor-offense fines of $750 apiece, and Wimbledon has also recommended that McEnroe be charged with two major offenses and fined $12,500 for them.

THE NINE-member Men's International Professional Tennis Council will rule on the McEnroe appeal and Wimbledon recommendation. Marshall Happer, administrator of the New York-based council, said Tuesday McEnroe "has been invited to present his side of the story by July 21." A player has a minimum of seven days to appeal, once a fine or suspension is sought.

"By the same token," Happer continued, "I have asked for information from the Wimbledon committee and I'm not exactly sure when we're going to get it, so I can't say at this time when this matter is going to be concluded."

The material sought from Wimbledon includes videotapes of the matches in question and statements from the linesmen and umpires involved.

Once each side presents its case, the council votes for or against fines, suspensions or other penalties. If it votes in favor, the issue automatically goes before an independent arbitrator. The council, Happer said, has a list of about 30 arbitrators around the world, one of whom would be chosen to hear the case.

TWO MINOR offenses which McEnroe is not appealing occurred in his first-round match against Tom Gullickson, said Happer. The offense McEnroe is appealing, Happer said, was for alleged abuse of a linesman during a doubles match.

One of the members of the council which will hear McEnroe's appeal is former tennis star Jack Kramer, who said Monday he will vote in favor of a suspension and that the 22-year-old McEnroe should have been disqualified from Wimbledon for his first-round outbursts.

During the match against Gullickson, McEnroe called the umpire "an incompetent fool," the head referee "an imbecile" and the tournament officiating in general "the absolute pits of the world."

Kramer said he was diappointed that the umpire "didn't say, 'Game!' and, if Mac said anything else, just say, 'You're defaulted!' and walk off the court, if he acted that bad." Kramer, in Chicago where he was promoting National Junior Tennis League matches, also said he felt a McEnroe disqualification would have put teeth into the game's rules, which some players break repeatedly.

"I would have to — from what I've seen — go along with our rules," Kramer said, explaining why he would vote to suspend McEnroe. "I would say, 'John, for gosh sakes, do what we want you to do. Don't let this happen again.'"

AND THE rules on court manners would be adhered to "if they get tight enough and he gets suspended just once or defaulted in a major tournament," Kramer said. "I don't want him out of the game. He's a a vital part of the game. Anytime he shows up at a tournament, the tournament is going to be successful. We need a healthy, well-playing, well-acting McEnroe."

McEnroe's younger brother, Patrick, 16, in Birmingham, Ala., for a juniors tournament, said John's outbursts are part of his drive for perfection. "John wants everything to be perfect on the court," Patrick said. "He wants himself to be perfect. That's why he gets so mad at himself. So he naturally feels that the linesmen should be perfect — and that's never possible."

The younger McEnroe said his brother's behavior livens up the sport. "If every tennis player was like Bjorn Borg and never said a word during a match, it'd be boring," Patrick said.

Randy LaVigne...7-for last 13 at bats.

Upton belts No. 12; LaVigne on rampage

Upton lost his string of four straight games in which he doubled. All he had to show for Tuesday was three singles and his 12th homer. "I should have had a double the first time up, but it was too early in the game to gamble," he lamented.

HALL AND LaVigne both had three hit nights. Randy is 7 for his last 13 at bats in a year that hasn't gone the way he had hoped. "It doesn't matter how big you are. Hitting is timing and I hope mine is coming back." The former Univesity of Connecticut basketballer hit over .300 in both his previous pro seasons, including a .303 at Midland last year.

Scanning Randy's batting figures before the game, Chicago Cubs roving batting coach Buddy Bradford noted the rbi's and observed, "That's a lot of rbis for a guy who has been struggling all season."

LEFFERTS, now with decisions in 17 of 18 starts, retired the first eight batters before Cuervo singled with two out in the third. Tillman walked with two out in the fourth and one out singles in the sixth by Shake Moore and Al Pedrique represented the Mets' big inning. Cuervo beat out an infield hit in the eighth and Leffert's shutout was endangered when Tillman doubled in the ninth with one out, but Lefferts gloved Mike Davis' sizzling drive back to the box and turned it into a double play.

BRUIN BREWIN'S—Only the fact that he is 6-3 saved LaVigne in the seventh when Davis' liner took off, "I came in a few steps because it looked like it was hit off the end of the bat."...An 8-9 year isn't quite wh. Lefferts, who pitched Arizona to th NCAA College World Series title year ago, was counting on. "I didn't expect this many losses and I set my goal on 15 wins. I still think I can make it."...Talking about aspirations, Upton had hoped for more homers and rbis, but otherwise is satisfied with his progress....The Cubs Secret Weapon Lulu will be unveiled tonight. GM Bill Schammel says he acquired it for peanuts...

Phillips not upset over Rogers' failure in camp

VERO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — New Orleans Saints Coach Bum Phillips says entirely too much to-do was made over the failure of first-round draft choice George Rogers to complete a 1½-mile run at National Football League preseason training camp here.

"WE HIRED him to carry the football, not run a mile-and-a-half," Phillips said.

Phillips said the whole purpose of the run was to see how hard his players worked during the off-season. He compared times from Tuesday's run with the times for the distance during a May mini-camp.

"I UNDERSTAND George was running 4:17 when he fell at about three-quarters of a mile," Phillips said.

"I'd say he'd have run a mile at 5:35 or 5:30 at that pace.

"Anyhow, the mile's over and football begins."

Heisman Trophy winner Rogers said he was moving along easily until he began to feel weak and suffered leg cramps.

"I didn't eat breakfast or lunch. I thought that would help. But I felt weak and got cramps and just had to quit," he said.

HE SAID the 90-degree temperature also had a lot to do with it. "It's not this hot in South Carolina," he said.

Rogers said he knew he could do better and wasn't embarrassed about failing to go the distance.

Phillips said that while the distance run was an indication of how hard his players had worked, it was not a real measure of football ability.

"If I'd been a track coach, I'd have been impressed as hell," Phillips said.

MEET THE CUBS

Midland Cubs' Hall on way to best season

This is only his first full season in Class AA ball, but Mel Hall is well on the way to his best campaign in four years of pro ball.

In fact, Mel, who won't be 21 until September, already has hit more home runs than in three previous years combined. Last year was his best when he hit seven. With six weeks of the season to go, the 6-0, 185-pound center fielder already has 14, showing an ability to go to the opposite field and the strength to beat the prevailing crosswind by pulling the ball to right.

Born in Lyons, N.Y., Hall graduated from Port Byron, N.Y., High and calls Auburn, N.Y., home.

In high school, he played baseball, football and basketball and still isn't sure he wouldn't like to play the round ball sport some more. Last year when he was sent to South Alabama University to get a little hitting help from Harry Walker, he went out for the basketball team. "I redshirted."

As a high school senior, Hall was named center fielder on the High School All-America second team.

The Cubs grabbed him in the June 1978 free agent draft. He broke in with Bradenton with a .290 season, sixth best in the Gulf Coast League. He also led the league in chances and landed on the all-star team. In 1979, he was .315 at Geneva, New York-Pennsylvania League, his high mark so far in pro ball. However, the way he's going this year, Mel could beat it. At Geneva, he was also among the league leaders in doubles (2nd with 18) and runs batted in (5th with 53). The performance earned another all-star spot.

Last year, he started the season with Midland, but was farmed to Quad Cities, Midwest, for more season. He batted .266 in 37 games in Midland and .294 in 97 at Quad Cities.

Mel Hall

In addition to his hitting, Mel has given Midland major league caliber defensive play in center and some of the plays he has made not many major league could make.

He once hit three homers and batted in nine runs in a game

With the Cubs off to a fast start in the second half, Mel hopes this could at last be the year. "I've played on three championship clubs," says Hall, "But we've never won a championship. Maybe we can change that this half."

Experts criticize, praise 'Raiders'

By CHRISTIAN WILLIAMS
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — "Raiders of the Lost Ark," which grossed $46 million in its first 26 days to pace the movie industry's summer comeback, is a cliff-hanging thriller from the people who brought you "Star Wars" and "Jaws."

This time, however, producer George Lucas and director Steven Spielberg have reached not into the ocean depths or the mists of the future for the stuff of adventure — but back to the thunderstruck era of the Old Testament.

The "Lost Ark" in question is the Biblical Ark of the Covenant, the gilded container in which Moses placed the tablet of the Ten Commandments. Not since Charlton Heston parted the Red Sea have such vast audiences wondered where — if at all — the line between sacred text and movie script was drawn.

Rabbi Stanley Rabinowitz, of Adas Israel Congregation, has seen "Raiders" and finds it "gripping." "Of course, beyond the reproduction of the ark itself, it has no basis in fact," he adds.

SUZANNE SINGER, associate editor of the Biblical Archaeology Review, characterizes the film as "nonsense." Singer's mother-in-law found the film somewhat sacrilegious, although her children loved it.

For its part, Paramount Pictures is playing down any presumed Biblical or historical or archeological veracity in "Raiders." George Lucas is officially quoted as saying, "The thing to keep in mind about this film is that it is only a movie. It takes all the license of exotic entertainment that aims to thrill and scare and strike one with a sense of wonder."

Nevertheless, the wonder centers on the Ark of the Covenant, that formidable vessel still familiar to uncounted pupils of Sunday school, Hebrew school and confirmation class. In any depiction of the battles of the Israelites against the Philistnes, it seemed inevitably to crop up — borne like a shield by the soldiers of the Lord.

IN "RAIDERS," the dashing archeologist Indiana Jones, assisted only by a bullwhip and a hard-drinking, kidnap-prone lady swashbuckler, is assigned to find the ark before the bad guys do. Since the movie is set in 1936, the bad guys are none other than Adolf Hitler and his Third Reich, who plan to use the ark's powers to render their army invincible.

The movie ark turns out to be a very theatrical gold-plated strongbox indeed. Unearthed in a dig at Tanis, in Egypt, it proves to have even more shocking powers than the Nazis expected.

Although Hitler was a fan of astrology and the occult, he is not known to have actually sought the sacred ark. But tales of the ark did surface now and again in the gathering storm of the 1930s.

In July of 1936, a news service reported from Paris that a Semitic syndicate had approached French underwriters about the chances of insuring the ark — reputed by the dispatch to be located in Ethiopia — against war damage.

THE NEWS SERVICE explained that "the oblong, coffin-like chest of acacia wood, overlaid with gold within and without, was carried into battle by the Jews in ancient times as a protection against the enemy.

"It was believed that the Ethiopians, with their Semitic tradition and ancestry, might again bring it forth. This time it would be in the midst of tanks, airplanes and machine guns instead of spear-bearing foemen as recorded in the Old Testament."

News of this report gave Rabinowitz pause, since, as he put it, "There has never been any evidence of any kind that the ark exists today.

"But if there was an ark," the Rabbi continued, "we would know right where to look. It would be under the Mosque of Omar, in the Holy of Holies in Jerusalem. Its location has been pretty well pinpointed by geologists and archeologists. Of course, it would be covered by the debris of centuries."

ASKED IF ANYONE had considered digging up the ark, Rabinowitz was patient.

"You see, this is the Holy of Holies," he explained. Then he vividly described the political ramifications of trying to excavate behind the Wailing Wall, dig down through a Moslem shrine and spade through the remains of temples built by Kings David, Solomon and Herod, and thereafter destroyed by the Romans. The rabbi's description of the ramifications was so vivid that he asked it be off the record.

Rabinowitz, however, gave the filmmakers good marks for their rendering of the ark. "It's very specifically described in the Bible. They did a good job of reproducing it."

The instructions the movie prop department followed were those given to Moses at Mount Sinai, and Exodus 25 recounts them in detail:

"Two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof." The ark was to be overlaid with pure gold, and have four rings of gold, and then two staves of wood were to be prepared, and covered in gold.

Exodus 25:14: "And thou shalt put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, that the ark may be borne with them."

COPYING THE ARK was easy. But even modern special effects can't compete with the description of the extraordinary powers of the ark, as described in the Book of Samuel. The filmmakers were wise not to even try.

Second Samuel, Chapters 6, 7 and 8 recount that even King David was sorely perplexed by the ark's power. Once, when a fellow named Uzzah merely put his hand on the ark, he was smitten dead. This scared King David so much that he left the ark in somebody else's house for three months.

But he eventually brought it home, and was rewarded with much success in his campaigns against the Philistines.

The Philistines naturally tried everything to get their hands on the ark, and did, but came to regret it (First Samuel, Chapter 5). They put the ark in the temple of their god, Dagon. The next morning Dagon was found toppled over. So they set Dagon up again, and the morning after that, when they went in, Dagon's head had been cut off — and so had the palms of his hands.

HOWEVER, THE Philistines kept the ark for seven months, during which they carried it around with them, as King David had done. This was a serious mistake, and resulted in the Lord smiting them with emerods (Chapters 5 and 6).

"And it was so, that, after they had carried it about, the hand of the Lord was against the city with a very great destruction: and he smote the men of the city, both small and great, and they had emerods in their secret parts."

Chapter 5, Verse 12: "And the men that died not were smitten with the emerods: and the cry of the city went up to heaven."

There are no emerods (hemorrhoids) in "Raiders of the Lost Ark," just a lot of snakes and poison darts and narrow escapes, and a great deal of swashbuckling archeology.

WHAT BOTHERS Suzanne Singer is that it's bogus archeology.

"Oh, I know some real stories that are better than this," she said. "This is just a mishmash. There's no archeological truth in it. If you enjoy it, you enjoy it for the snakes.

"As for the ark, I don't believe it exists. Certainly, no one has ever found a piece of it. I don't know about any such dig at Tanis, as the movie says.

"But I don't believe it was ever in the Temple of Solomon, either. That temple was destroyed in the 6th century B.C. by the Babylonians. Then, after that, it was rebuilt once. Then King Herod did a really major rebuilding job in the 1st century B.C.

"Herod really went right down to bedrock, and enlarged the whole thing, so I would be extremely surprised if anything at all remained from the original temple. And then, the Romans destroyed everything Herod had built in 70 A.D. They just melted it down.

"I SUPPOSE THERE is a very remote possibility that if archeologists were permitted to dig down below the current Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem — if you could imagine that, politically, and I certainly can't — well, maybe. But I really don't believe they'd find anything. I doubt that the ark existed at the time when Herod was building."

Asked then, about the question of whether the ark exists today — and if it exists, where — Singer had a quick answer.

"It's a non-problem," she said. "It's not a problem anyone is working on."

CBS wins ratings race for eighth week

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS' reruns grabbed six of the top 10 slots — including the first three — in last week's A.C. Nielsen ratings to make CBS the most-viewed network for the eighth consecutive week.

In a week where the highest-rated original program — the ABC newsmagazine "20-20" — came in 12th, CBS' top-rated trio included all reruns of shows dealing with doctors.

"M-A-S-H" led off with a 21.5 percent rating, which according to the networks means 17.2 million households, or 21.5 percent of all 79.9 million American homes with television sets, tuned in to "M-A-S-H."

Following "M-A-S-H" were "House Calls" and "Trapper John, M.D.," with ratings of 20.1 and 19.2 respectively. The other CBS offerings in the top 10 were "The Jeffersons," "Lou Grant" and "60 Minutes."

The network's overall average rating for the week ending July 12 was 13.5, meaning that during an average prime-time minute 13.5 percent of all households were tuned in to CBS. ABC came in second with an average rating of 12.7 and NBC followed with 11.7.

The highest-rated non-CBS program was NBC's "The Facts of Life," in 4th place with a 19.0 rating. ABC's "Three's Company," which the previous week had pushed the perennially popular "M-A-S-H" from the No. 1 slot, was down to fifth place with an 18.8 rating.

Part VII of ABC's "Roots: The Next Generations" occupied the ratings cellar last week, in 66th place with a rating of 5.2 — meaning it was viewed in 4.2 million homes.

The rest of the bottom five were CBS' "The Incredible Hulk," in 62nd place with an 8.8 rating; NBC's "Sanford" — one of few first-run series episodes on the list — in 63rd place, 8.2; NBC's "BJ & the Bear," in 64th place, 7.4; and "CBS Reports: What Shall We Do About Mother," 65th place with a 6.9 rating.

The week's top 10 shows, their ratings and number of homes tuned in: 1. "M-A-S-H," CBS, 21.5, 17.2 million homes; 2. "House Calls," CBS, 20.1, 16 million homes; 3. "Trapper John, M.D.," CBS, 19.2, 15.3 million homes; 4. "The Facts of Life," NBC, 19.0, 15.2 million homes; 5. "Three's Company," ABC, 18.8, 15 million homes; 6. "The Jeffersons," CBS, 18.6, 14.9 million homes; 7. "Lou Grant," CBS, 18.6, 14.9 million homes; 8. "Hart to Hart," ABC, 18.6, 14.9 million homes; 9. "60 Minutes," CBS, 18.5, 14.8 million homes; 10. "Too Close for Comfort," ABC, 18.0, 14.4 million homes.

The second 10: 11. "Diff'rent Strokes," NBC; 12. "20-20," ABC; 13. "Alice," CBS; 14. "The Love Boat," ABC; 15. "Quincy, M.E." NBC; 16. "Fantasy Island," ABC; 17. "The Dukes of Hazzard," CBS; 18. "Happy Days," ABC; 19. "Laverne & Shirley," ABC; 20. "CHiPs," NBC.

Firefly hunters netting a penny a bug for their catch

VINTON, Iowa (AP) — As dusk falls on sultry July days, the Helle family shoulders special nets and forays into fields, parks and yards in search of flickering lights on leafy plants or in the sky.

They sneak up on corn plants, then swoop in with their nets.

It's firefly time again.

The Helles are not amateur entomologists building up a collection or entomophobiacs trying to purge their neighborhood of lightning bugs. They're firefly hunters, netting the insects at a penny a bug for a company that extracts their "glow chemicals" for study.

Nancy Helle, 41, says her family can catch 1,000 lightning bugs an hour and for the past decade has earned about $3,000 a summer for their efforts.

Sigma Chemical Co., of St. Louis, provides the Helles and other collectors with shipping containers, nets and even buttons designating them as members of its Sigma Firefly Scientists Club.

Sigma, among its other work, extracts the chemicals from the bugs' glowing tails or "lanterns" and then ships them to university labs and hospitals for study. The chemicals are used primarily in medical research, especially in the field of cancer diagnosis and the study of multiple sclerosis, cystic fibrosis and heart disease.

Chemicals derived from the firefly — luciferin and luciferase — also are used in the study of environmental problems. For example, they figure in a test on water suspected of being contaminated.

Company spokesman Jerry Kunkel said people in about 18 states participate in Sigma's firefly campaigns. The collection of lightning bugs is important, he said, because the chemical luciferase is difficult to derive in the laboratory.

The Helles — Nancy; her husband, Chuck; and their children, Andy, 15, Scott, 11, and Jenny, 5 — send in thousands of their own bugs and those collected by 15 to 20 other families here about three times a week during July, which is prime trapping season.

But Mrs. Helle warns that making lightning bug money isn't as easy as it sounds.

For one thing, the fireflies blink only for four-tenths of a second every two seconds, and by the time you swoop in with your net, they've often disappeared.

One trick of the trade is to try to catch them at dusk, not after dark, when they can still be seen against the sky, glowing or not.

Another trick, she says, is to catch them just after they crawl out of the ground in early evening. At that time, they can be found on corn leaves and other leafy plants before they begin flying and blinking, she said.

The glow or blink of the bugs, by the way, is more than just anoher twinkle in the summer sky. Authorities say some blinks are males' attempts to catch the eye of female glowworms on the ground. And others are the females' blinking back, if the fancy takes them.

State Department OKs corn sale to Poland

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department has endorsed the sale of 400,000 tons of U.S. corn to Poland, but other administration officials still have to be convinced, says the Republican congressman pushing the deal.

"I feel right now I've got a slight edge but not much," says Rep. Edward Derwinski, R-Ill., the second-ranking Republican on the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Polish Ambassador Romuald Spasowski has asked the United States to extend the $80 million line of credit to obtain the grain, which is needed to avoid liquidating Poland's boiler chicken industry at a time when workers are protesting food shortages.

"We're considering that and will be evaluating it," Agriculture Secretary John Block said Monday. "I can't tell you what the outcome will be."

Alan Tracey, the Agriculture Department's general sales manager, announced Monday that Poland will be able to buy more American feed grains than originally anticipated under a 1980 credit arrangement. But that arrangement does not take into account the most recent Polish request for grain.

After meetings with administration officials, Derwinski said Lawrence Eagleburger, assistant secretary of state for European affairs, told him the State Department "agrees with my view that we obviously have to be helping the Polish government during this reform period and this (corn sale) is the vehicle available at this time so it is the practical thing to go along with."

Derwinski said officials from the Agriculture and Treasury departments seemed to support the idea of the sale but said "it is a matter of mechanics, budget, dollars and cents."

Both Block and Derwinski said a decision on the sale would have to be made quickly if the additional grain is to have any effect.

The government does not need new legislation to provide Poland with the line of credit needed to make the purchase, Block said, "but we have concerns about their credit policy (and) whether they can pay off their debts."

"It's just a matter of how much we wish to sell through our credit programs," he added.

After meeting with European agriculture officials last month, Block said most nations including the United States want to find a way to assist Poland.

"At the same time, there seems to be growing problems with finding enough collateral even to make guaranteed loans," he said. "It's difficult for us."

Last year, the Carter administration authorized $670 million in credits to Poland for imports of American farm products under the Export Credit Guarantee Program. That program provides qualified exporters with what amounts to government insurance against default by foreign buyers.

As of Monday, all but $6.2 millin of that credit line had been used, the Agriculture Department said.

The shift in the amounts of commodities that can be purchased under the agreement will enable Poland to obtain nearly $20 million more in feed grains, including cortn, than originally was authorized. That will bring Poland's total feed grain purchases under the 1980 plan to $384.9 million, the department said.

Johnny Bluejay finds the good life — inside

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Rose Kinosian does her legal duty each day, walking into the woods and trying to force her pet bird back to the wild. But Johnny Bluejay isn't about to give up a good thing.

Outside, there may be a wild blue yonder. But inside there's hamburger, vegetables and — mmmmmm — berries. What more could a bluejay want from life?

"I put her out every single day," the 70-year-old widow said recently, a strong trace of accent from her native Armenia flavoring her English.

"I put her in the woods," Mrs. Kinosian says. "Then two-three hours, she wants to come back in. She's happy when she's coming home."

Mrs. Kinosian named the bluejay Johnny after she found it in an abandoned fallen nest eight weeks ago and took it into her house to feed. She insists on referring to the bird as "she," even though she doesn't know its sex.

Mrs. Kinosian wants it known that she doesn't cage the young bluejay because taking a bird from the wild is a violation of the wildlife code, according to Lewis C. Shlotterbeck, deputy director of the state Division of Fisheries and Wildlife.

He said possessing a bluejay is illegal because the state issues no permits to own a bluejay as it does for some wild species. But he calls Johnny's case "one of those gray areas" because Mrs. Kinosian insists her bird is free to go every day.

When Mrs. Kinosian first let Johnny go, the bird promptly returned and has insisted on remaining a house pet since.

"I release her every day because she's going to be happy as wildlife. I like her," she said. "I feel bad when I put her out. But she never associates with the other bluejays. She fights with the robins. I don't know why. I thought she would be happy.

"I'm not going to cage her. She flies all over the house. In the bedroom, she follows me."

With good reason. At the Kinosian home, Johnny gets all the hamburger, vegetables and berries a bird could ask for. "She eats almost everything," says Mrs. Kinosian.

The Kinosian dog, a German Shepard named Tippy, usually chases birds. "But not Johnny," she says. "She sits there and guards Johnny."

Wild bluejays are notoriously raucous and aggressive, but not Johnny.

"She talks to me," says Mrs. Kinosian, "She keeps calling until I answer. She always sits on my shoulder, and, when people visit, she sits on their shoulders."

When she goes for a walk, Johnny follows along the street.

"Everybody in the neighborhood loves Johnny," she says. "Even people in cars stop and look at her."

Johnny and Rose

Johnny the bluejay has found him- or herself a home and it's in Worcester, Mass., with Mrs. Rose Kinosian. The bird, whose gender is yet to be determined, appaently fell from its nest as a fledgling and for the last two months, Mrs. Kinosian has been caring for Johnny by feeding and sheltering it and even taking it for walks. Once in the woods Johnny flies off to hobnob with the wild bluejays, but two or three hours laters, it's back home for hamburger, vegetables and berries.

Judge rules today on Atlanta slaying suspect's bond request

ATLANTA (AP) — Wayne B. Williams, charged with killing the most recent victim in a string of slayings of 28 young blacks, might flee or commit a crime if released on bond, a prosecutor says.

Superior Court Judge Sam P. McKenzie said he would rule today on a request by Williams to be released on bond while a grand jury decides whether to return an indictment against him in the killing of Nathaniel Cater. Williams, now being held without bond, appeared in court Tuesday.

Meanwhile, Williams' attorney said her client already has received a number of "substantial" offers for book and movie rights to his story.

Attorney Mary Welcome said Tuesday that the offers have come from publishing companies and private agents, but she refused to identify them or reveal the amount of money involved.

"This is still a good story," Ms. Welcome said. "From the very beginning, before he was even charged, (here) was a young man who went through a dramatic process. Because of the notoriety of the case and because this was the first man arrested, this would be a good book or movie."

illiam, 23, promised the judge Tuesday that if he were granted freedom, he would not flee the city, would not try to influence any witnesses and would not commit any crimes.

He said his parents could lose more than $150,000 if he is not allowed to resume work on a recording venture being coordinated through Motown and Capital Records. Contacted later, spokesmen for the record companies denied any knowledge of Williams.

Fulton County District Attorney Lewis Slaton opposed the bond request, arguing that Williams' actions last month while under police surveillance indicated that he might flee or commit a crime.

Williams is charged with murder in the strangulation of Cater, 27, whose nude body was found in the Chattahoochee River May 24. Under Georgia law, a grand jury must return an indictment before a suspect can be tried on a murder charge.

Officers on a stakeout team had stopped Williams May 22 near a bridge over the Chattahoochee River. The officers said they heard a loud splash in the river just before they spotted Williams' car near the bridge.

Cater's body later was discovered downstream, and Williams was placed under surveillance. He was questioned June 3 and 4 but was released without being charged. Police continued to watch his northwest Atlanta home until he was arrested June 21.

Since his arrest, Williams has been held in an isolation cell in the Fulton County jail.

During cross examination by Slaton Tuesday, Williams said he had agreed after the 12-hour session with authorities June 3 and 4 that he would notify Atlanta police whenever he planned to go anywhere.

But he said the agreement did not include any mention of the FBI, and when federal agents began following him, he assumed the agreement had been broken.

Williams acknowledged that before his arrest, he led one police surveillance team on a chase through the city and received several traffic tickets as a result.

Asked by Slaton if his father once had sneaked him past police in the trunk of his car, Williams said nothing of the sort happened.

Oklahoma CETA director's expenses under investigation

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahoma County was billed for $700 in expenses when a federal jobs program director took a person he later would not identify to a training conference in Portland, Ore., records indicate.

Another travel claim for a trip to Greenleaf State Park near Muskogee also is under investigation, officials confirmed Tuesday.

Harry W. Garrett, fired as head of Comanche County's Comprehensive Education and Training Act program in 1979 before taking the Oklahoma County CETA post, paid the debt for the Oregon trip after being confronted both by the local program's fiscal director and its internal monitor, records indicated.

The Daily Oklahoman reported in today's editions that in a letter written last week in response to questioning about the Greenleaf trip, Garrett explained he had attended a meeting in Tulsa that night and decided to stay at Greenleaf since he had to be at a meeting in Okmulgee early the next morning.

In a memo dated March, 20, the newspaper reported, CETA monitor Kermy M. Hurte questioned the trip because Garrett sought overnight lodging at the state park "53 miles away" from Tulsa. Okmulgee is 38 miles due south of Tulsa. Greenleaf is about 70 miles southeast of Tulsa, according to mileage listed on Transportation Department maps.

Hurte's memo asked for a reimbursement of $117.20.

Art Johnson, fiscal director for the Oklahoma County program, said the Greenleaf trip came under scrutiny because of the earlier Oregon claim and because the $25 Garrett claimedpor the overnight stayPzhe state lodge was higher than the $19 allowed for most in-state lodging.

Johnson said the Oregon trip had been challenged after monitors' interest was piqued by Garrett's estranged wife, Peggy Garrett.

He said they learned that although Garrett filed airline and hotel receipts stating his companion was Pat Jacobs of JMJ Electronics, the hotel identified the companion as "Mary L. Garrett."

Garrett left the state to attend a funeral and was unavailable for comment Tuesday about the Greenleaf trip.

Earlier Tuesday, he said he had asked Jerry Morton, chairman of the Private Industry Council, a CETA advisory group, to attend the Oregon training session with him. He said Morton was unable to go, "so another one went."

Garrett said he reimbursed the county for his companion's expenses when he was told the companion wasn't eligible for compensation under CETA rules. Garrett declined to identify the person, but said the companion was "CETA-related."

Johnson said the challenges of both Oregon and Greenleaf travel claims have been reported to the regional CETA office in Dallas. No law enforcement agencies have been notified, and they won't be unless there is a definite indication of wrongdoing, officials said.

Judge won't open government files

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge federal judge has refused to open government files to attorneys representing three men being tried on fraud charges who prosecutors say also are prime suspects in the murder of a Houston commodities dealer.

Billy H. Howton, a former Dallas Cowboys football player, Vining Towner Reynolds Jr. and Larry T. Lee are charged with bilking $8 million from several institutions — including Blue Cross of Florida, the University of Pittsburgh — by selling non-existent student loans packages, beginning in 1979.

Fort Bend County District Attorney William A. Meitzen said state authorities "have determined that the defendants are primary suspects" in the murder of Bob Kahn, who was scheduled to testify before a federal grand jury last April when his body was fished from the Brazos River.

Kahn, 29, had been shot once in the chest with a .32-caliber pistol.

Meitzen said Fort Bend authorities are still investigating the slaying and told U.S. District Judge Robert O'Conor that to allow defense attorneys access to prosecutors' files would "jeopardize" the fraud case.

O'Conor examined the file behind closed doors Monday and then granted the prosecutor's motion.

"I don't see anything in the file germaine to this case," the judge said. "I'm not trying a murder case here."

Assistant U.S. Attorney James L. Powers contends Kahn helped Howton, 50 and a retired veteran of the National Football League, and Reynolds, 39, an officer with First Financial Group of Texas, "launder" their ill-gotten gains through investments in gold and silver commodities.

Polish party congress resumes closed session

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The divided delegates to an emergency Communist Party congress returned to work today in closed session to decide how to elect their party chief.

The threat of a new outbreak of labor unrest in Poland while the congress was meeting seemed to be easing. Baltic Coast dock workers said today the government had "responded" to their demands for better benefits and official recognition and plans for a "hunger march" today in Kutno to protest food shortages were called off.

But in the manufacturing city of Torun, workers at an electronics office equipment factory threatened a warning strike July 24 unleess the government dismisses the factory director.

First Secretary Stanislaw Kania, a moderate, was still the favorite for re-election, but official sources said any more delay in winning the party's nod would weaken his position.

One source, asking not to be identified, said Kania's opening speech to the congress Tuesday left many delegates unhappy, thinking that it offered no new solutions to Poland's economic and political crisis.

"People were not so satisfied with his speech," the source said. "Even if it was the Central Committee speech, he still read it. The language was hard and the same as speeches in the past."

The official sources said today's deliberations were expected to settle the procedural question of how to pick a party leader, but still not bring an actual election.

A working group chaired by Kania had proposed to elect the party chief at the opening session rather than wait until the end, as is standard at Soviet bloc Communist Party congresses.

A first-day election was seen as a move to consolidate Kania's position for the rest of the congress, which was called to try to put in place solutions to Poland's problems.

But Kania's plan may have backfired.

Syrians blame envoy for Israeli attacks

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria's state radio today blamed U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib for Israel's escalated air attacks on Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon.

Israeli warplanes struck a dozen Palestine Liberation Organization guerrilla strongholds along Lebanon's Mediterranean coast and inland mountains Tuesday, killing 10 guerrillas and villagers and injuring 35, police said.

Israeli jet fighters also shot down a Syrian jet in a dogfight over Syrian-held Lebanese territory. Syria maintains a 22,000-man army to police Lebanon's Moslem-Christian civil war armistice under an Arab League mandate.

Damascus Radio noted that there have been three Israeli air assaults into Lebanon since Habib began his third Middle East shuttle last Thursday to avert a Syrian-Israeli military showdown in Lebanon.

"These attacks obviously are a result of plain coordination between the U.S. administration and the Zionist enemy," the official radio said hours before Habib was expected to fly to Syria from Saudi Arabia.

An editorial in the Syrian newspaper Tichrin, which speaks for the ruling Socialist Baath Party, said today that Syria was determined to "defend Lebanon's territory and air space against Israeli intrusions at whatever cost." It said "Syria is not prepared to allow Israel to turn Lebanon into an enemy security zone."

Israel's chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, said on state television that the Jewish state would continue to "attack guerrillas on our own terms and not as a reaction." He said the guerrillas received new arms supplies from Libya, Syria and the Soviet Union that were destroyed in the recent air raids.

Israel's third air assault into Lebanon this week has the Lebanese considering a call for a U.N. Security Council debate on what a government official described as "Israel's escalating aggression."

During a meeting today on the topic, two sonic booms shook the Lebanese capital and the state radio blamed Israeli jets, saying they crashed the sound barrier over Beirut and other Lebanese cities.

Syria moved SAM-6 anti-aircraft missiles into Lebanon's Bekaa Valley after Israeli jets shot down two Syrian helicopters in the valley April 28. Syria has refused to pull the missiles out despite repeated Israeli threats to destroy them in bomb raids.

A Syrian official, who declined to be quoted by name, said Syria will not change its policy of keeping the missiles in Lebanon. He said his government "does not expect much from Habib's visit."

Observers said the loss of the Syrian jet could make President Hafez Assad's government even less receptive to Habib's deplomatic effort to defuse the missile crisis.

It was the 14th fighter plane Syria has lost in air battles with Israel over Lebanon since June 1979. The last Syrian plane was downed over east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley on Feb 13.

PLO sources confirmed a warplane crashed east of the sourthern Lebanon port city of Sindon, 25 miles south of Beirut. Lebanese reporter Nabih Basho said Syrian and Israeli aircraft were seen trading rocket fire over the town of Roum, midway between Sidon and Jizzine.

The Palestinian guerrilla command claimed one Israeli jet was hit by a shoulder-fired SAM-7 missile during the air strike and was seen flying in flames toward Israel. But the Israeli military command in Tel Aviv said all its planes returned safely.

The main targets of Tuesday's attacks were in Naameh, Damour and the township of Saadiyat and the small oil terminal town of Jiyye, a six-mile stretch of the coast that starts six miles south of Beirut, a PLO communique said.

Lebanon radio reports and the communiques said six Phantom F-4s and two F-15s staged the 30-minute assaults on the four towns and hilltop guerrilla bases in Dalmieh and an adjoining village near Naameh.

It was the third Israeli air raid into Lebanon in five days, shattering a five-week pause in the Israel-PLO war of attrition. The calm coincided with Israel's general election campaign.

PLO and Lebanese authorities estimated 118 guerrillas and villagers have been killed this year in air, sea and ground operations staged in Lebanon this year. Tuesday's action was Israel's 13th major air raid this year against guerrilla strongholds in Lebanon.

Al Fatah, the largest among the eight PLO factions, claimed responsibility for an explosion Tuesday that killed Lt. Col. Eli Shahak in southern Israel. Israel's ilitary cmmand said Shahak died and two soldiers and three police officers were injured when a "suspicious object" exploded.

Terrorist bomb kills policeman in Italy

COMO, Italy (AP) — A police bomb expert was killed today when a terrorist bomb exploded while he was trying to defuse it, police said.

At least five bombs exploded before dawn and damaged restaurants, music shops and household goods stores in the Alpine lake resort of Como, according to police reports.

Luigi Carluccio, 28, a specialist brought in from Milan to defuse the bombs, was killed while working on a device planted in front of a butcher shop. He was the 10th person killed by urban guerrillas in Italy this year.

A group called the Workers' Brigades for Communism claimed responsibility. The group recently claimed two bombing attacks against prisons under construction in the area.

The left-wing urban guerrillas left a leaflet claiming responsibility for what they called "the night of the fires," police said.

The terrorist message said the bombings were directed against "the shop owners in Como who want the death penalty," and against "those cursed Swiss who should stop coming to Como to spend their money."

Veronica Lewis, 20, of Columbus, an Ohio State University student, explains in an interview why she feels "ripped off" after her experiences with the Miss Black America Contest.

Two Miss Black America contestants air complaints

By JACK A. SEAMONDS
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Two of this year's 36 contestants for the title of Miss Black America say the promoter "ripped off" the participants with unkept promises of a pageant in the Caribbean.

Veronica Lewis, 20, a college student from Columbus, and Denise McGough, 20, of Toledo, said contestants and their relatives paid $500 each for a trip to Jamaica and never got back the money when the June 19 event was moved at the last minute to Stroudsburg, Pa.

"None of the girls was wealthy, and none of them could afford to lose that kind of money," said Miss Lewis, a singer whose expenses were paid by sponsors she had contacted.

The promoter, J. Morris Anderson of Philadelphia, started the pageant in 1967. He said refunds for the Jamaica trip will be made within 30 days.

The two women charged on the local cable television service, Qube, that contestants were lodged two to a bed, four to a room; got poor meals; and were forced to perform their dance and musical routines up to 14 hours a day before television crews at the Sheraton Pocono in Stroudsburg. They said Anderson planned to sell tapes of the talent demonstrations and that they would not share in the profits.

But Anderson said, "The Miss Black America Pageant has always been a television-oriented production.

"In my opinion, they were not worked too long. They really enjoyed what they were doing."

Anderson said the Sheraton Pocono in Stroudsburg was the only hotel "that would provide us with free rooms at the last minute, and that's why there were four girls in each room."

The pageant was held in Jamaica last year but switched to Stroudsburg when Anderson refused to sign a contract with the country, said a spokesman for the Jamaican Tourist Board in New York.

The spokesman, who asked that his name not be used, said Jamaica "was dying for the business" but had requested a contract becaue last year Anderson sold plane tickets and lodging and meal vouchers that were given him for free. The contract he rejected banned such sales, the spokesman said.

Anderson replied that "the contract just couldn't be worked out" and he knew nothing about a contract prohibition against "being able to sell the tickets and rooms."

The spokesman estimated that Anderson was paid this year "between $50,000 and $60,000" for air fares.

Anderson said the rooms in which the contestants stayed for the event were provided free by the hotel, but no part of entry fees had been earmarked for lodging. He said the fees covered only "promotional expenses for the pageant and expenses to organize it."

But Miss Lewis said, "We were told the meals and rooms would be paid for with our entry fee."

Denice Guice, one of the promoters of the Columbus pageant, said Anderson and his staff repeatedly emphasized "the need to keep things simple and make a profit. The idea was to take them for all the money they've got and not spend anv."

PEOPLE

Royalty watchers discover Spencer-Bogart link

Bogart

LONDON (AP) — Humphrey Bogart was a distant relative of Lady Diana Spencer, Prince Charles' fiancee, according to the Daily Mail.

The Bogart link, according to the newspaper, begins with the two daughters of a New England farmer named Joseph Morgan, who was baptised at Roxbury, Mass., in 1646 and died at Preston, Conn., 58 years later.

One of the daughters, Martha, is an ancestor of Bogart's mother, the illustrator Maud Humphrey, while the other daughter, Margaret, is an ancestor of Lady Diana's mother, the Daily Mail reported today.

The paper said the link between the royal bride-to-be and the Hollywood star was confirmed by Debretts Peerage, the internationally reputed guide to the aristocracy, although it said the discovery was news to Buckingham Palace.

The Mail said the family of Bogart, who died in 1957, was delighted by the news. "I think it's just sensational. Lady Diana is the greatest," the paper quoted Bogart's eldest son, Steve, a Massachusetts TV producer, as saying. "Dad would have loved this."

The paper said Lady Diana also was distantly related to no less than seven U.S. presidents, including George Washington. It quoted a Debretts spokesman as saying: "Again, it is through Lady Diana's great grandmother's good connections with New England families."

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland has a new honorary fellow, and first lady Nancy Reagan is delighted.

She and the president watched proudly Tuesday as the first lady's stepfather, Dr. Loyal Davis of Chicago, was installed as an honorary fellow at a traditional ceremony held in the Irish Embassy.

In an introduction, Sir Ian Fraser, college vice president, said the 86-year-old neurosurgeon has had a distinguished career, including the chairmanship of the Northwestern University Department of Surgery.

Mrs. Reagan's stepfather is also past president of both the American Surgical Association and the American College of Surgeons.

Later, the Reagans joined Davis and his wife at an embassy reception, followed by a reception for the Irish surgeons and other guests in the White House Blue Room.

PEKING (AP) — American conductor Sarah Caldwell says it will be odd to hear Verdi's opera "La Traviata" sung in Italian now that she's been listening to it in Chinese during a stay in Peking.

"It's going to sound funny in Italian," Miss Caldwell told reporters Tuesday.

Miss Caldwell, director of the Boston Opera Company, said she has been impressed by the Chinese singers' willingness to take new direction. China's Central Opera Company has performed its version of "La Traviata" more than 400 times since 1956, but never before Miss Caldwell's visit under a foreign conductor.

"In this world, it is rare to find people who do what you ask instantly without arguing or having to prove something," she said.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Attention focused on preventing problems

KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

QUESTION: What is being done to try to prevent mental health problems? It seems to me that very little progress is being made in this area.

ANSWER: Efforts to prevent mental health problems are centered in two basic areas: Indentification and removal of causes of mental health problems and the establishment of conditions which are conducive to good mental health.

In the first area of identification and removal of causes of mental health problems, most of the research is being done in the biological area. Studies attempt to identify specific biochemical factors which are associated with the more severe mental health problems. There are very difficult research problems involved with this kind of study, which makes progress quite slow.

To date, there have been no specific biochemical or genetic traits which have been positively identified as causes of mental health problems. We do know that certain mental health problems do appear to have a genetic component associated with them. This finding has been confirmed in some of the more recent studies of identical twins.

Because of this difficutly in discovering any specific biological causes of mental health problems, most prevention efforts concentrate on trying to establish conditions which are conducive to good mental health. Meanwhile, biological research will continue in the effort to isolate specific causes of mental health problems.

The attempt to establish conditions conducive to good mental health concentrates on biological as well as psychological conditions which are thought to influence personality development. In the biological area, good pre-natal care for expectant mothers is highly emphasized in an effort to prevent a variety of physical and mental health problems in newborn infants.

A great deal of emphasis is also placed on periodic medical examinations throughout life in order to detect any organic problems which may result in mental health problems. A preventive role may also be played by the psychoactive medications when they are used to assist a person during times of severe stress. At such times, the medication may prevent the development of more severe conditions. However, there is no definite proof of this.

Psychological measures thought to be conducive to good mental health also begin during infancy. They include a warm relationship between children and maternal figures, flexible schedules of feeding and toilet training, allowing the child to explore his world without undue restrictions, consistent setting of limits for the child's behavior, and a generally loving atmosphere.

Healthy development during infancy and childhood plays a very important part in the mental health of the adult. Programs of public education, especially parent education, are used to communicate these factors as positive contributions to good mental health.

The mentally healthy adult has acquired certain problem solving skills and life competencies. Certain ones of these can be taught or acquired by practice. However, it is generally quite difficult to become proficient in these skills if an adequate psychological foundation was not established during early life.

The prevention of mental health problems is a very inexact process because of the lack of hard knowledge about the causes of mental illness. Until such a time as more is definitely learned, the prevention of mental health problems will lag behind compared to the prevention of physical diseases, for which many specific causes have been identified.

Jerry Lee Lewis tells visiting aunt he plans to recover, leave hospital

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Rock 'n' roll star Jerry Lee Lewis has told an aunt he intends to leave the hospital bed where he has been fighting a life-threatening infection.

"Jerry looked up at me and winked," said Stella Calhoun of Ferriday, La., after a 10-minute visit with her nephew Tuesday. "He said, 'You ain't seen nothing yet. I am working on getting out of here.' "

Lewis, 45, has been in Methodist Hospital South since June 30 when he underwent emergency surgery to repair a perforation in his stomach.

An infection resulted, and surgeons had to re-open his abdomen Friday night to remove abscesses on his stomach and nearby organs. Doctors have been giving him powerful antibiotic drugs in an attempt to halt the infection and stave off the threat of pneumonia.

Tuesday, Dr. James E. Fortune, who is heading the medical team treating Lewis, said he was "guardedly optimistic" about his patient's chances for recovery.

"We are doing everything medically possible to keep down infection," he said. "He is breathing on his own now and can talk for a few minutes at a time."

Protesters attack Belfast police stations

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Protesters hurling gasoline bombs attacked two police stations in Belfast early today and mourners gathered for the funeral of hunger striker Martin Hurson in Cappagh, to the west of the city.

In Belfast's Andersonstown and New Barnsley districts, police fired plastic bullets to disperse demonstrators attacking police stations in both centers, a police spokesman said.

In the Irish Republic, 200 pro-Irish Republican Army demonstrators, carrying two empty coffins, blocked the entrance to Shannon International Airport for nearly an hour, police said.

A man in paramilitary uniform fired three shots from a revolver over the coffins, the traditional IRA funeral salute.

Startled passengers watched as the demonstrators marched a half-mile to the terminal building, and dumped the coffins outside the state-owned British Airways office, while a protester climbed on to a canopy over the office waving six black flags. The demonstration apparently was aimed at dramatizing the deaths of IRA hunger strikers.

A one-mile traffic jam built up at the terminal entrance. Two police squad cars followed the march and police inside the terminal building watched the protest, but did not intervene. Police reported no arrests.

The Irish Times, meanwhile, reported that Ireland's Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald asked the Irish Embassy in Washington to seek President Ronald Reagan's personal intervention with the British government in the hunger strike protest in Northern Ireland.

White House spokesman David Prosperi said in Washington that although Reagan visited the embassy Tuesday, he knew of no such request having been made to the president.

The IRA appeared determined to defy the British army and bury hunger striker Hurson with full military honors, including three volleys of rifle fire.

Sources close to the IRA said the guerrillas planned the rifle salute, even though British troops arrested a squad that fired the salute during last Friday's funeral of hunger striker Joe McDonnell.

Six activists were arrested in the raid, which triggered a gun battle and a two-hour riot. Four of them appeared in court Tuesday on weapons charges and were ordered held for trial.

The swoop was the first such British operation during an IRA funeral, which usually is exploited by the organization as a major political demonstration.

The death Monday of 27-year-old Hurson, the sixth Irish nationalist hunger striker to die at the Maze Prison, sparked 24 hours of riots and guerrilla attacks across the British province and police said at least six officers and a British soldier were wounded in bomb and gun attacks.

The latest incident occurred late Tuesday night at Dumgiven, County Londonderry, when police fired plastic bullets to disperse a crowd of youths hurling gasoline bombs. Seven people were arrested. Police later found a crate of gasoline bombs during a search of the area.

A police spokesman said Catholic rioters threw more than 300 gasoline bombs and homemade hand grenades at security forces in the street battles.

The IRA is fighting to end British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland and unite the province with the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

Hurson died unexpectedly on the 45th day of his fast. He was serving a 20-year sentence for bombings and conspiring to kill soldiers.

The IRA is demanding that the British government give its members in jail special privileges that amount to political prisoner status.

Sinn Fein reported that 31-year-old Matt Devlin, who was jailed for attempted murder of a police officer, will join the hunger strike Thursday by refusing breakfast in his cell in the Maze.

He will join seven other hunger strikers, two of whom are not expected to live for more than another week.

Devlin, jailed for seven years in October 1977, will be the oldest man to join the fast since it started March 1.

Judge releases 'Tarzan'

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal judge cleared the way Monday for MGM to release its remake of "Tarzan, the Ape Man" by rejecting a copyright infringement claim lodged by the heirs of the character's creator, Edgar Rice Burroughs.

U.S. District Judge Henry F. Werker refusedd to enjoin Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Inc. from releasing the picture, which stars Bo Derek, on July 24.

Edgar Rice Burroughs Inc. of Tarzania, Calif., the licensing entity, had claimed that proper licensing rights had not been purchased. MGM, which made previous versions in 1931 and 1959, said it held the rights.

Before issuing his final ruling in the case, Werker unsuccessfully sought to have the court disputants settle their differences in order to avoid taking on the role of a censor.

During recent conferences with both parties, the judge viewed MGM's 1931, 1959 and new version of the "Tarzan" movie. Sources said MGM followed the judge's suggestions and made editing changes in the latest remake.

"While there are some differences between the films in the jeopardies and dramatic sequences employed, as well as in the emphasis accorded different elements of the story, they are insufficient to warrant the conclusion that this Tarzan movie is not based substantially upon the 1931 story," Werker concluded in his latest decision.

"Plaintiffs argue that the changes and departures in the 1981 photoplay are material," Werker said. "Their principal contention is that the film is no longer suitable for young children. Considering the shift in social mores over the half century from 1931 to 1981, I simply cannot agree that a change of the nature complained of constitutes a material change from the 1931 photoplay.

'Shocking' chair removed

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Members of the Immanuel Baptist Church had the most famous vacation Bible school in the country for a while, but parishoners are not thrilled with the publicity.

Members of the Grand Rapids church say they are getting tired of reporters' questions and the jeers of "There's the electric chair church" from passersby.

The members and their pastor hope now that the "famous little wood chair" is gone, the attention will fade. The church has been flooded with calls from across the country since The Associated Press transmitted photos and a story about its minister, who used a homemade "electric stool" to shock Bible school students.

Which one should come first: The horse or cart?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Being a city type, Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado says she often has trouble figuring out which should come first: the horse or the cart.

During floor debate on a defense bill last week, Mrs. Schroeder urged the Pentagon not to slack off on recruiting women. To do so before completion of a study under way on the issue would be like putting "the horse before the cart," the Denver Democrat said.

"Let me ask the gentlewoman, where does she think the horse should be if not before the cart?" asked Rep. William L. Dickinson, R-Ala.

Mrs. Schroeder reflected a moment and then responded: "I'm glad the gentleman pointed that out. Being an urban type, I always get that mixed up. "In the urban cities, we have problems. We have motors in the rear and motors in the front, and it is hard to relate that."

Having explained, Mrs. Schroeder backed up and rearranged her metaphorical horse cart to put the horse in front.

Meanwhile, on the other side of the Capitol, Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., seemed to be having an equally hard time marshalling his metaphors.

Wallop told a workshop on federal land acquisition that reason and not emotion should govern future government land-buying practices.

Otherwise, Wallop observed, "What we could have done, and what we should have done, will be no more than the receptacle for the broken pointed fingers of narrow-mindedness and hide-boundedness in misplaced irritability at the world of reality."

Few members of Congress are as organized at cranking out news releases as Rep. Don H. Clausen, R-Calif., who not only numbers and titles his releases but also issues a bimonthly index.

His May-June 1981 index, just received, summarizes Clausen News Releases Nos. 46 through 58.

The list notes, for example, that in release No. 51, Clausen "calls for calm in brewing storm over Social Security." In No. 55 he "co-sponsors Mexican-American Day."

Newspaper editors desiring back copies are invited to request them by number, sort of like sending for back copies of magazines.

And to make sure nothing is missed, Clausen news aide Jim Boyle writes at the bottom of the index that the boss also had been "very involved" on offshore drilling leases and the salmon fishing season.

"While there are no 'news releases' on those topics, I would be happy to provide any information which you might find useful," Boyle offers.

Policemen stage pre-dawn raids in London suburb

LONDON (AP) — After a dozen straight nights of urban violence, British police struck back today with a pre-dawn search for gasoline bombs in Brixton, the immigrant community where some of the worst rioting exploded.

The raids on 11 homes in the South London suburb were carried out by more than 100 officers armed with search warrants, Scotland Yark reported. They were the first such raids announced during the wave of urban violence that has bloodied Britain's streets for nearly two weeks.

The fury is showing signs of subsiding despite sporadic rioting, and police now have permission to use rubber bullets, tear gas and water cannon to try to end the violence.

The only previous use of those mob-scattering weapons by British police and soldiers has been in Northern Ireland.

This morning's police sweep in the predominantly West Indian immigrant area followed England's quietest night since mobs of youths began rampaging through the country's inner cities.

Scotland Yard said uniformed and plainclothes officers armed with search warrants confiscated a bottle and some inflammable liquid. No disturbances were reported during the raid, which lasted less than an hour.

Brixton was also the scene of bloody racial violence in April.

Meanwhile, six British police chiefs were in Belfast today for special mob control courses from police who have had to deal with street violence during 12 years of bitter fighting between Protestants and Catholics. Scotland Yard said the delegation left for the British province Tuesday.

In London, a parliamentary debate on the violence was scheduled today and Home Secretary William Whitelaw was meeting with police chiefs from the riot-torn areas to discuss the new equipment and anti-riot tactics, including so-called "snatch squads" to rush into mobs and arrest suspects.

Flare-ups erupted in two areas of London late Tuesday, police said, but the disturbances were described as minor compared with the urban warfare that has ravaged 20 inner cities in the previous 11 days.

The windows of two shops and two taverns were smashed by a gang of 50 to 100 black looters in the Forest Gate district of east London, police said. One youth was arrested for carrying a gasoline bomb and another for obstructing police.

"Most of the youths in the gang were involved in heckling and police baiting," said a police spokesman, who said that the rioting was quickly brought under control.

In Fulham, west London, a car was overturned and set afire by a gang of black and white youths, police reported. One youth was arrested for carrying a weapon, police said.

"Compared with other incidents recently, this was minor," a Scotland Yard spokesman said, adding that riot shields taken to the scene were not needed.

So far, at least 2,500 people have been arrested hundreds injured in the wave of violence.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Tuesday authorized British bobbies to use tear gas, rubber bullets and water cannon as "legitimate" anti-riot gear. Water cannon project high pressure sprays to dispel crowds.

Press reports today said Mrs. Thatcher gave Queen Elizabeth II a "detailed report" on the eruption of civil disturbances and government action to combat them during her regular weekly audience at Buckingham Palace.

No details of meetings between the head of state and prime minister are ever disclosed. But the Daily Telegraph said Tuesday night's summit would have been "clearly one of the most important" during the two years of the current Conservative government.

Three boys found suffocated in closet

WAUKESHA, Wis. (AP) — Three young boys who disappeared while playing on an apartment house lawn were found suffocated in a blood-splattered linen closet, police say, but authorities apparently are ruling out murder.

When the bodie were found Tuesday night, police initially said they thought the boys had been brutally slain because of the blood and the fact that the bodies were contorted when found in the vacant apartment.

But Waukesha County Coroner Donald Eggum said the blood apparently was a result of the boys trying desperately to escape the closet.

The closet handle had been removed by painters preparing to paint the apartment, and floor carpeting prevented the air from getting into the 2-foot-deep closet, he said.

"That scene was bad enough to make you want to quit this business," Eggum said. "I hope it will be a relief to the community to know it is probably not a homicide."

The boys were discovered by an apartment house manager who told police he used a screwdriver to pry the closet door open.

The victims were in various stages of undress, evidently having removed clothing because it had gotten "uncomfortably warm," Eggum said. "I feel they had been in that closet several hours," he said.

Police investigator Robert Horstmeir said it was unclear how the boys got into the apartment, which searchers had been assured was locked. Nor was it clear why no one heard what may have been the noise of the youngsters' escape efforts, he said.

The victims were identified Benjamin McDonald, 11; Timothy Eman,7, and Eddy Saycocie, 4. The youngest boy's Laotian-immigrant parents live in an apartment downstairs.

The two-story, four-unit apartment house is in a residential neighborhood that police had been searching since Monday afternoon.

"This is the most tragic thing that has happened since I've been involved with the city," Mayor Joseph C. La Porte said while joining the hundreds of persons gathered outside the apartment house as news of the discovery spread.

DuPont Inc. raises Conoco merger ante to $7.4 billion

NEW YORK (AP) — Du Pont Inc. has raised its bid for Conoco Inc. to $7.4 billion — more than twice the largest amount ever paid for a company — and some analysts think the price will go even higher before Conoco is sold.

Du Pont raised its bid Tuesday from $6.9 billion, countering an offer from Seagram Co. Ltd., the Canadian distiller. But Seagram said it was still in the competition and such oil companies as Mobil Corp. and Texaco Inc. were still considered likely to offer bids.

The bidding war has been sparked by beliefs that Conoco's reserves of oil, coal and natural gas are worth more than the value indicated by the stock price, and by signals from the Reagan administration that it is less likely to challenge big mergers on antitrust grounds.

Du Pont said it will pay $95 a share for 40 percent of Conoco's stock and exchange 1.7 Du Pont shares — worth $80.33 at current prices — for each additional share. It had offered $87.50 or 1.6 Du Pont shares, worth about $6.9 billion.

Sanford Margoshes, an analyst with Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc., a Wall Street firm, said he expected more bidding, including "another figure from Seagram and a bid from Mobil. It would not surprise me for the final figure to exceed $100 a share."

Any takeover of Conoco will be the largest corporate acquisition in U.S. history, surpassing the $3.6 billion Shell Oil Co. paid for Belridge Oil Co. two years ago.

Conoco, the nation's ninth-largest oil company, accepted the new Du Pont offer as it had the original one. Chairman Ralph Bailey said shareholders would benefit from the combination of chemicals and energy operations.

Du Pont Chairman Edward Jefferson said the merger, which would create the seventh-largest industrial company in America, was "fully consistent with the nations's energy imperatives and will not have anticompetitive consequences."

The Justice Department said it will investigate the proposed merger, but administration officials have said they are more receptive to mergers and some Wall Street analysts think a Du Pont-Conoco marriage would not be challenged.

Seagram is offering $85 a share for up to 51 percent of Conoco, or a total of $3.77 billion. It started the bidding war last month by offering $73 a share for up to 41 percent, or $2.55 billion.

A Seagram spokesman, Jonathan Rinehart, said the Seagram offer was "still fully competitive" and warned that Conoco shareholders selling to Du Pont "will have to be concerned about possible antitrust considerations, which are not a problem with Seagram."

Mobil has said it is interested in a Conoco deal and Texaco has held merger talks with Conoco. Neither has made an offer, but banking sources say Texaco has arranged a $5.5 billion line of credit and Mobil a $5 billion line.

Arco execs say too early to speculate on chief

From Wire and Staff Reports

DALLAS — Officials of the Atlantic Richfield Corp. say it is too early to speculate when a permanent chief will be named for its oil and gas subsidiary, Arco Gas and Oil Co., following the shotgun slayings of President William Keeler and his wife.

Robert E. Wycoff, an executive vice president of Atlantic Richfield, was named Keeler's temporary replacement on Monday pending a search for a permanent appointee. Keeler was promoted to president of Arco Oil and Gas in May as part of a company reorganization.

Keeler joined Arco as an engineer at Midland, in June, 1949. He was promoted to field engineer in February, 1951; to district engineer in October, 1954; and regional engineer in April, 1956. Keeler was transferred from Arco's Permian District headquarters in Midland, to Dallas in April, 1961.

The bodies of the 53-year-old executive and his wife, Anita Faye Keeler, were found in a hallway in the family's North Dallas home last weekend by a daughter, Barbara Keeler, 27.

Keeler was dead of shotgun wounds in the head and neck. His 49-year-old wife died later in the day during surgery for shotgun wounds to the abdomen.

Miss Keeler told police that her mother, barely conscious, gasped out, "David, David, David did it," when she was found.

The couple's 14-year-old son, David Keeler, was taken into custody Sunday after turning himself in to police in Addison, a suburb near the couple's home.

"I just shot both my parents with a shotgun," David reportedly told police.

A juvenile court master ordered a 10-day detention for the youth after defense attorney Doug Miller agreed there was "probaable cause" to believe the youth had shot his parents. He could be charged with two counts of juvenile delinquency-murder, which carries a maximum punishment of detention in a juvenile home until age 21. Under Texas law, no 14-year-old can be tried as an adult.

Police said Monday that the shootings followed a family argument about a shoplifting incident.

Turn-Key to Profits

When you've completed your oil or gas well you still need to get the product to market. Once at market, your well can begin to produce profits — the rewards of your labor.

Let the professionals at Oilfield Pipe & Supply Co. install your production equipment. You've erected the Christmas Tree, we'll put on the trimmings. We'll perform a complete turn-key job, through to the sales point, and Oilfield Pipe & Supply Co. assumes total responsibility through turn-on — we install the equipment, and we make sure it works.

For a pre-determined price we'll design and fabricate the equipment to meet your specific requirements, build the pad for the equipment, furnish pipe, valves and connections, and provide all necessary items including machinery, labor, tools, transportation, supervision, communication, insurance and initial turn-on. You will know the exact cost before we start.

At Oilfield Pipe & Supply Co., we're professionals, skilled in installing production equipment — we do this every day. Let us put your well to work producing more than oil or gas. Let us put your well to work producing profits faster.

You make many interesting and important contacts and are able to try your hand at a variety of new things. The financial outlook remains bright so long as you keep everything strictly aboveboard. Refuse to listen to those who suggest cutting corners! Parent-child relationships are due to change for the better.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can make sizeable gains now if you consolidate your resources and become more aggressive. Be practical, realistic. Family matters or domestic affairs come under review.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You serve your own cause best by showing a cooperative spirit. Be on the lookout for an important opportunity that involves you and a member of the opposite sex.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Remember someone who helped you at a critical time and reciprocate. Limit your involvement with friends now, especially if money is involved. Romance is on the horizon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone may want to use you as a sounding board. Be frank. Concentrate on solo efforts. Conversation with higher-up could make your day! Look for ways to cut expenses.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A better day for winding up old projects than starting new ones. Friends' business tip could prove profitable. Postpone signing contracts, agreements. A platonic relationship changes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid minor mistakes where your financial interests are concerned. Purchase only essentials. Communications with member of opposite sex take on romantic overtones.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Give more thought to the locale of your home and office. Make certain your financial status is secure before tackling new ventures. Stick to orthodox business methods.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22): The emphasis is on dignity, composure. Help straighten out a delicate matter. Exchange pleasantries with your co-workers and neighbors. You gain new insights.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): This month your financial prospects show definite improvement. Expect your artistic endeavors to be stimulated by loved one's interest, influence. Romance moves in new and exciting directions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A friend from your past could reappear today. Entertain in the comfort of your home instead of an expensive restaurant. Mate is in an understanding mood.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Employment matters may not be moving as fast as you would like. Do your best to remain patient! Keep the menu simple if entertaining tonight. You could be late getting home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your earnings may be affected by something that happens today over which you have no control. The news could be good, but be prepared for any eventuality. The romantic pace accelerates.

Opening lead: Queen of ♣.

When this hand was played at a recent tournament, no player succeeded in making thirteen tricks at a diamond slam, although they should have. Duplicate players, just like rubber bridge players, sometimes have a blind spot.

North was perhaps a smidgeon light for his jump raise to three diamonds, especially since so many of his points were in his short suits, but there really was not a better bid available. After a cue-bidding sequence in which the partners showed first- and second-round controls, South chose to gamble on a grand slam, which was an excellent contract.

The queen of clubs was a popular opening lead. The declarers saw that, if trumps were 2-1, they could draw them and ruff their three major suit losers in dummy. So to a man, or woman, as the case might have been, each won the ace of clubs and played the king of diamonds. When West turned up with all the trumps, declarer discovered that he did not have enough high cards to get back to his hand to ruff three times in dummy and once again return to draw trumps. So after cashing the king of spades, the ace-king of hearts and ruffing a heart in dummy, each declarer tried to get back with a low club ruff. They were shocked when West overruffed causing their defeat.

The hand can be assured by a simple dummy reversal. Declarer has five tricks in the outside suits, so he needs to score eight trump tricks to make his grand slam. Thus, three ruffs in either hand will suffice, and since declarer has the high trumps, he need not fear an overruff.

After winning the ace of clubs, declarer should cross to the queen of diamonds and ruff a club high. Declarer gets back to dummy with the king of spades, ruffs another club high and then crosses to the table with a spade ruff for a third club ruff with declarer's remaining trump honor. Declarer still has a trump left to return to dummy to draw the last trumps. Dummy's remaining club just goes away on the ace of spades and the grand slam rolls home.

Congressmen to consider budget cut compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislators by the hundreds are about to begin work on a compromise between the House and Senate versions of the 1982 budget reductions sought by President Reagan.

But House Democratic leaders, still smarting over a series of budget defeats and hoping to impose some party discipline, are denying a role to a prominent conservative Democrat who helped Reagan win his victories.

The Senate on Tuesday appointed 72 of its 100 members to work with the expected 160 to 190 House members to be appointed today.

The legislators, who must reconcile the Senate's package of $38.1 billion in cuts with the $37.3 billion in spending reductions endorsed by the House, are organizing themselves into 45 subconferences, each of which will focus on a specific budget issue.

Representatives of the House and Senate Budget Committees, which will oversee the fashioning of the compromise, met Tuesday to agree on guidelines aimed at smoothing the work of the conferees.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said the number of conferees was the "largest ever in a House-Senate conference" and the subjects to be covered — affecting more than 250 programs — are "the most extensive ever confronted by conferees in a single bill."

Domenici said the conferees hope to complete work before Congress begins a month-long recess in August.

He predicted that "not more than 20 issues are likely to be difficult."

And Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, said "probably 80 percent off the issues can be resolved very quickly."

Absent from Tuesday's session was Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, one of the key conservative Democrats who joined with outnumbered House Republicans to back Reagan's budget proposals.

"I am not aware that at any time in my three years in Congress has any author of a bill ... been denied a seat on the conference," said Gramm, who sponsored the Reagan-backed budget cuts in the House with Rep. Delbert L. Latta, R-Ohio.

"I think the message from the Democratic leadership is pretty clear," he added. "And that is if you are willing to put your philosophy, the views of your constituents and your perception of the interests of the American people above party dogma, then you are not going to be extended normal courtesies of the leadership."

Jones, though, said Gramm was denied a slot on the conference because he lacked sufficient seniority.

Pressed to explain further, Jones said "He didn't really have anything to do with the bill ... and we couldn't appoint (budget director David A.) Stockman, so ..."

Prior to appointing its conferees, the Senate agreed by voice vote to instruct its negotiators to seek to add $130 million in 1982 for the Head Start program for poor and handicapped preschool children. The Senate bill already contained a provision for $820 million for Head Start. The House bill, much of which was hastily drafted, made no provision for Head Start.

Major differences between the two bills that must be worked out include:

—Reauthorization of energy programs.

—Reductions in the number of planned subsidized housing units. The Senate bill would make a larger reduction than the House version and cut federal housing aid to large cities that have rent control. The House bill does not have such a provision.

Senate Republicans urged to finish debate on tax bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Having lost the first round in the House, President Reagan is urging Senate Republicans to forgo pet amendments as they work on their version of a tax-cut bill the president thinks is already expensive enough.

Leaders of the GOP-controlled Senate hope to complete action within a few days on their Reagan-endorsed bill which would grant Americans an across-the-board cut of 25 percent over 33 months, beginning Oct. 1.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Tuesday that the president has asked Senate allies to hold the line on amendments, which already have added some $30 billion to the cost of Reagan's original proposal.

"He just doesn't believe in putting on any more expense amendments," Dole said.

Meanwhile, the Ways and Means Committee in the Democratic-controlled House continued to work on details of its alternative tax plan. On Tuesday, the panel rejected Reagan's approach and approved a two-year reduction which would bring more relief to low- and middle-income taxpayers.

The major House fight on the competing proposals will come on the floor.

In other congressional business Tuesday:

—Sandra D. O'Connor voiced her opposition to abortion as she began four days of Capitol Hill campaigning for confirmation as the first woman Supreme Court justice.

Senate leaders from both parties said approval of her nomination is only a matter of time. And a spokesman for Moral Majority — one of her leading opponents — said there is "potential" for the group to support her if she confirms her opposition to abortion.

—In the grimmest assessment yet of the future of federal savings and loan associations, the industry's chief regulator warned that high interest rates threaten the stability of one-third of the nation's 4,700 S&Ls.

Attitude toward O'Connor softening

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sandra D. O'Connor, campaigning for confirmation as the first woman Supreme Court justice, is voicing opposition to abortion while one of her most outspoken critics shows signs of softening.

As the 51-year-old Arizona appeals court judge prepared to report to President Reagan today, Senate leaders of both parties said approval of the nomination is only a matter of time.

And a spokesman for Moral Majority, which last week called the nomination "a mistake," said Tuesday that "the potential is there" for the fundamentalist group to support Mrs. O'Connor if she confirms her opposition to abortion.

Mrs. O'Connor confronted that issue Tuesday as she began four days of politicking on Capitol Hill.

While she refused to comment publicly on allegations that she took a pro-abortion stance as a member of the Arizona Senate, Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., said after meeting with Mrs. O'Connor: "She indicated to me that she is opposed to abortion. Her position is against abortion."

DeConcini, who supports the nomination, said that satisfied him, but he added that Mrs. O'Connor probably will have to make a public statement on the issue, short of saying how she would vote in any given case.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., predicted that Mrs. O'Connor would be confirmed by the full Senate before the Supreme Court's fall term starts in October.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the Judiciary Committee which must vote on the nomination before it goes to the Senate floor, said hearings probably won't begin until September, when Congress returns from its summer vacation.

Baker said criticism by the Moral Majority and other conservative groups about Mrs. O'Connor's past stance on abortion "is not an issue that should bear significantly on her prospects for confirmation."

Byrd went even further.

"I congratulated her not so much on her nomination as her confirmation, which I feel confident will be forthcoming," he said. "I feel that she will make a fine member of the U.S. Supreme Court."

Baker said he had not heard of "a single senator" who opposes Mrs. O'Connor, while Byrd said no Democrats had come to him with any objections.

"A great number of senators have expressed support, some publicly, some privately," Baker added.

Thurmond, who met with Mrs. O'Connor for a half-hour, also said he expects her to be confirmed without difficulty.

"She's a very impressive lady," he said. "She has excellent credentials."

But he added, without elaborating: "I told her there was some opposition to her."
