Urban Cowboy Union

More couples today are planning their weddings according to what they want and not to what tradition dictates they should have. Thus, Midland recently had its own "Urban Cowboy" wedding. For this couple's story see Sunday's Lifestyle section.

MC Salary Squeeze

Midland College and industry have a need — quality technical people. But, the college is unable to pay its technical instructors industrial wages. Read how this dilemma might affect MC's technical program in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram.

Car Dealers Buck Trend

Midland's economy seems determined to buck every national trend, and auto sales are no exception. Nationally, car sales are at an all-time low, but car dealers here are doing a booming business. Read about it in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram.

Midkiff plane crash kills pilot

Falling aircraft misses houses, businesses

MIDKIFF — A small, single-seat crop-dusting plane crashed in Midkiff shortly after 3 p.m. Thursday, barely missing the scattering of houses and businesses there, and killing the pilot. The crash occurred about half a mile from a landing strip known to the pilot.

Late Thursday, officials had not confirmed the identity of the plane's occupant, although Jerome Hoelscher, the first person at the scene of the crash, said he thought he recognized the body before it was badly burned.

Midkiff residents speculated that the dead pilot, who was burned beyond recognition, was a crop duster well known in the area and who was expected to be flying in that day.

Officials Thursday night confirmed the residents' fears. The pilot was Royce Young of Elgin, who had a scheduled meeting with a Midkiff farmer to discuss a crop dusting job 45 minutes after the crash.

According to witnesses, the pilot had been flying low over the town.

"He had buzzed the town three or four times," said Mrs. Hoelscher, who recalled the buzzings because she had been trying to take a nap. "Then I heard a pop — it wasn't an explosion — and that was when he hit the tower.

"I ran to the window and saw the smoke."

Andy Landes was one of the few to see the events leading up to the crash.

"I was sitting under the loading dock (at C.J. Penn Truck Service) and he came over the highline wire. I watched him fly it (plane) across here. He just banked off there and hit the radio tower. He didn't seem to be having any problems."

The crash occurred when the wing of Young's red-and-white Pawnee struck a 140-foot radio communications tower belonging to C.J. Penn Truck Service. The tower sheared off the left wing of Young's plane, even as the small craft leveled the tower.

Witnesses said the plane burst into a ball of flames before hitting the ground about 25 feet past where the tower previously stood.

"Judging from where he hit the tower," said Hoelscher, "he was flying about 120 feet. That is what knocked his wing off and caused the crash."

Hoelscher, a pilot himself, also saw the crash. Being the closest person to it, he managed to get to the twisted ball of flaming metal first.

"About 3:08 or 3:09 p.m., a plane came over the house: Me and my son were just opening the doors of the shop. He just went out of sight and then we heard the crash. I was the first one there.

"The plane was completely in flames and already had burned the numbers off. I saw there was nothing I could do here so I went back to the telephone and called the FAA (Federal Aviation Administration). I came back over here with a fire extinguisher and tried to put out the fire the best we could."

Many others also tried to extinguish the flames with fire extinguishers, including oil trucks passing the scene on a nearby road, and Burl Pillows, who owned the radio tower.

According to Pillows, Young flew over his company, C.J. Penn Truck Service, and barely cleared the highline wires. He then banked and his wing struck the tower.

Chamber says survey shows 'substantial' census errors

Although Midland officials didn't receive calls from the 5,000 to 6,000 people they believe the census missed this year, their program to locate uncounted Midlanders did reveal what they feel may be "substantial errors in the accuracy of the census."

Mayor G. Thane Akins and Chamber President Ray Moudy on Tuesday launched a program to locate the uncounted Midlanders, believed to number in the thousands. Those not counted in the census this year were asked to telephone the chamber office.

During a Thursday afternoon news conference, however, Moudy noted that some 125 calls had been received, representing 313 residents of Midland or Midland County.

"Actually the number of calls is less than we had expected," observed Moudy. But he quickly added, "We think there still are substantial errors in the accuracy of the census."

Preliminary, unofficial census figures released last week placed Midland's population for 1980 at 66,998, up 11.8 percent from the 1970 count of 59,463. Midland County's population was said to be 77,700, up 12.4 percent from 1970's 65,433.

But city, county and chamber officials tend to believe the actual population of the city itself is more in the neighborhood of 72,000 to 73,000.

The program through which officials are attempting to get uncounted Midlanders to call the chamber is not intended to replace the Census Bureau's tabulations.

Rather, the information will be forwarded to the Census Bureau for use in that agency's continuing follow-up program and to support a potential challenge by the city and county to the final census figures.

The information urging the Census Bureau to conduct a recount of Midland and Midland County must be in the hands of the bureau by Monday, according to local officials. In addition to the information gleaned via the call-in program, officials are expected to furnish additional data such as Postal Service lists of deliverable addresses and the number of water department connections.

But Moudy appears relatively negative about the potential impact of all that information.

"It's my understanding that any review at all would be within 10 percent of the original figures," he commented during Thursday's press conference.

If a recount is conducted here, Moudy said, the city likely will have to live with the results coming out of that second survey.

Meanwhile, Moudy and other officials are continuing to urge Midlanders who were not counted during this year's census to contact the chamber by telephone. Calls will be taken, they said, at least through noon Monday.

In other census action, County Judge Bill Ahders, Mayor Akins and other officials were to meet at 2:30 p.m. today in City Hall to discuss the local census data.

New eruptions at St. Helens

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — A series of blasts from Mount St. Helens — the fifth eruption in three months — spewed plumes of ash and steam more than eight miles high and sent superheated gases down the mountain's north slope, leaving a light dusting over ash-stricken towns.

There were no reports of injuries.

The ash plume and seismic activity subsided to nothing by dawn and extremely heavy clouds had enveloped the volcano, said Federal Emergency Management Agency spokesman Joe Sears.

Rain was falling north of the peak and local travelers advisories were issued by the National Weather Service for slippery roadways due to ash fallout mixed with rain.

The eruptions were no surprise to volcano-watchers, and one scientist said "the long-term prediction is for more of the same."

The blasts began at 4:23 p.m. Thursday and continued through the night. One ash plume shot more than eight miles high and others were more than four miles high, but the eruptions were described as the least forceful of the five major blasts that began on May 18.

Harmonic tremors, subterranean shivers that have occurred before other blasts, preceded the eruptions and signaled officials to evacuate scientists and forestry workers from the restricted zone around the volcano.

Pete Rowley, a U.S. Geological Survey geologist said the tremors, believed to indicate the movement of magma, had subsided early today.

After four hours of low-level harmonics on Thursday, Craig Weaver, a USGS scientist at the University of Washington, said "I'm reasonably confident it will erupt within six hours."

But within minutes, seismograph needles in the lab began waving wildly, signaling the start of an eruption.

"There she goes," said Steve Malone, UW seismologist.

The gray and white ash cloud which carried lightning with it assumed an anvil shape as it spread north-northeast from the southwestern Washington volcano. However, erratic wind patterns carried the ash in different directions at various alttitudes.

Ash fell lightly in a wide swath at least 100 miles north from Grays Harbor County on the west coast to Wenatchee in Eastern Washington and south to the Portland, Ore., area.

But fallout was light and residents of Eastern Washington, who were hit especially hard by the ash that fell on May 18, breathed an ash-free sigh of relief.

Following the initial eruption Thursday, the volcano "pulsed" in several small blasts between 7 p.m. and 7:30, then erupted again at 10:32 p.m., said Sears. Three sharp pulsations after the 10:32 blast sent higher concentrations of ash around the mountain and to the north-northwest.

During the first eruption, a pyroclastic flow — superheated gas and ash — slid down the mountain's north slope, stopping short of Spirit Lake.

Hurricane on its way to Texas

MERIDA, Mexico (AP) — Hurricane Allen roared today toward the Texas coast, less than 500 miles away, gathering strength from warm Gulf of Mexico waters after a Caribbean rampage that left at least 72 dead.

A hurricane watch was announced for the entire Texas and northeast Mexican coasts, and the U.S. National Weather Service said Allen could create hurricane conditions to portions of the watch area within 36 hours if it continued its course.

More hurricane news Page 12A

At 6 a.m. EDT, Allen's eye was near latitude 22.8 north and longitude 90.2 west — 500 miles east southeast of Brownsville and traveling west northwest at 18 mph, packing winds up to 145 mph, the weather service said.

Hurricane force winds extended outward 75 miles to the north and 50 miles to the south. Gale force winds extended outward 200 miles to the north and 100 miles to the south.

The weather service warned smallcraft from the mouth of the Mississippi river westward to the Mexican Gulf coast, including the Yucatan Peninsula and around extreme western Cuba, to stay in port.

Gale warnings were discontinued in the Florida Keys at 4:30 a.m. EDT.

Texas authorities were holding planning sessions today with representatives of 35 federal and volunteer relief agencies that would go into emergency action if the storm hit.

Thousands of Gulf homeowners stocked up on candles, food and plywood to hammer down windows. Hospitals boosted orders for bottled water and Red Cross and Salvation Army officials prepared relief centers and placed workers on alert.

Insurance companies sent in teams to handle those who could be displaced, and oil companies evacuated 2,500 workers from offshore rigs and production platforms.

One helicopter carrying 13 people from one platform crashed 60 miles off the Louisiana coast Wednesday. Coast Guard authorities said at least four of those on board were found dead.

Allen buffeted Mexico's northern Yucatan Peninsula with 185 mile-an-hour winds and 15-foot waves Thursday but caused no injuries or serious damage, government officials said.

Mexico declared a state of emergency on the peninsula's eastern side and Red Cross authorities mobilized relief efforts. Thousands of people fled the storm, including some 5,000 in Cancun, the lush resort on the Yucatan mainland across from Cozumel.

Since becoming a hurricane Monday near the eastern Caribbean island of St. Lucia, Allen has followed a basically west-northwest route in its killer journey across the Caribbean, through the Yucatan Channel and into the Gulf.

Cuban authorities evacuated 200,000 people and 46,000 cows in seven provinces because of the storm.

Prensa Latina, the Cuban news agency, reported that Allen battered Cuba's Isla de la Juventud, the "Island of Youth" formerly called the Isle of Pines, 30 miles off Cuba's western coast, ruining citrus and tobacco crops.

There was no word of any casualties on the island, although it was reported crowded with 25,000 high school students from Third World countries studying on scholarships.

Havana radio reported four people were electrocuted Thursday as the hurricane roared past Cuba Thursday, bringing the total known death toll to 72 people.

Haiti suffered the greatest number of casualties — 41 — when Allen struck Tuesday. In the Dominican Republic, which shares with Haiti the island of Hispaniola, three people were reported killed.

In Jamaica, hit Wednesday, there were eight deaths, including five people tossed into 20-foot seas whipped by 100-mile-an-hour winds. In St. Lucia, 16 were killed and in nearby Dominica, one person was missing and feared dead.

Allen rampaged important export crops throughout the Caribbean, damaging coffee, banana and tobacco plantations; destroyed countless numbers of flimsy huts inhabited by poor peasants and knocked out power and communications lines. Authorities reported some damages to tourist facilities, particularly on Jamaica's northern coast east of Ohos Rios.

Michelin delays plant plans here

Michelin Tire Co. is delaying plans to begin construction on a rubber-mixing plant here, citing primarily the questionable economy for the hold-back, according to Grant Billingsley with the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Instead of starting construction on the plant in early 1981, the firm is delaying it until 1982. Billingsley stressed, however, plans are at a stage where the plant could be put "back on track as quickly as it has been delayed." If this is done, Micheline could accelerate the construction pace and get close to the original schedule, he added.

Reasons cited by the Michelin officials included "soft markets," or a decline in demand for the rubber products as a result of the drop in car sales; uncertainty about the economy with its high interest rates and unavailability of money; and concern about the upcoming presidential election and possible future programs coming out of that election.

Billingsley added that the Michelin plant is still "on go," just delayed.

Wife, two others indicted for murder of Odessan

The 27-year-old estranged wife of Odessan James D. McPeters, who was found stabbed to death in his still-idling car on July 29 in south Midland, and two men have been indicted for murder by the Midland County Grand Jury.

Indicted and held in the Midland County Jail in lieu of posting $50,000 bail bonds each were the widow, Patricia Louise McPeters, 27; William Wayne Jennings, 19, of Wichita Falls, and Rex Bradley Shanks, 26, of Abilene.

The grand jury also re-indicted Richard Reni Cornett, 26, for capital murder in the shooting death of his sister-in-law, Norma Jean Loring, 31, of Odessa.

Ms. Loring was fatally wounded and Cornett's wife, Mildred Cornett, 27, was wounded when a man, alleged to be Cornett, burst in a southeast Midland house on June 30 and and fired rounds from a handgun. Previously, he had been indicted for murder and attempted murder.

Two indictments alleging involuntary manslaughter were made against a 19-year-old man in connection with the July 20 traffic deaths of Richard Russell, 25, of Midland, and Dennis Gordon Franz, 24, of Commerce City, Colo.

The two men were killed when a pickup truck driven by the 21-year-old man went out of control, hit an embankment and rolled. The indicted man had not been arrested by noon Friday by sheriff's deputies.

Others indicted were:

James Thomas Stephens, indicted for burglary of a building.

Howard George Peters III, indicted for aggravated assault on a peace officer.

Bobby Alden Fough, indicted for credit card abuse.

Kenneth Holton, indicted for burglary of a habitation.

Michael Jerard Demeaux, indicted for theft of property.

Four injured in Rankin wreck

RANKIN — Four people, two from Big Lake and two from Odessa, were injured about 10 a.m. Thursday in a two-car head-on collision eight miles north of here.

The Department of Public Safety said a pickup driven by Wesley Lawder of Big Lake was northbound on a dirt road just off Texas 349. A welding truck driven by Jimmy Smith of Odessa was southbound. Apparently, a car in front of Smith obscured the view of both vehicles with flying dust and the two vehicles collided.

Lawder, 45, was listed in stable condition in the intensive care unit of Odessa Medical Center this morning. A passenger in his vehicle, Mike Aten of Big Lake, was listed in stable condition. Smith was also listed in stable condition. A passenger in Smith's vehicle, 18-year-old Tracy Smith of Odessa, reportedly was injured, but Odessa Medical Center showed no record of treatment.

Crane collapses at building site

The Texas Railroad Commission will have to wait a while for its new building, located at Neeley Avenue and Big Spring Street.

The building was scheduled to be finished Sept. 1, but shortly before noon today, a crane loading air conditioning units on the top of the building collapsed. The roof receiving slight damage, as well as the brick on the front of the building. It was unknown this morning whether the crane had been damaged. No one was injured in the incident.

Dutcher Phipps employees were searching Midland for another crane to lift the first one away. The collapsed crane is owned by Dutcher Phipps.

"I didn't know what was happening for a minute," said one of the men working on the building's roof when the crane collapsed. "All I knew was run."

The cause of the collapse is undetermined, although speculation by those at the building site were that the wind "got under" the crane as the operator extended the boom to the far end of the building to load the last air conditioning unit.

Weather cooler

Maybe it's a little early to be thinking about fall, but with a high of only 92 Thursday, you could almost feel it in the air. At any rate, the cooler temperatures that have visited West Texas the past few days are a welcome relief from the scorching record-setting days that have characterized the rest of the summer.

There won't be much change in Saturday's forecast, with fair conditions predicted for tonight becoming partly cloudy on the weekend. Afternoons will continue to be warm, with highs in the middle 90s, with an overnight low in the lower 70s.

Thursday's 92 would probably have spelled relief to Midlanders in 1964 on that date, when the mercury shot up to a record 104 degrees. The overnight low of 69 was pleasant, but nowhere near as cool as the record low of 57, set in 1939.

Plumber's plug ends huge traffic jam

NEW YORK (AP) — In the end, it was a simple plumber's test plug that stopped a leak in a 9,000-gallon propane tank truck on the George Washington Bridge and ended a two-state traffic jam that slowed some parts of Manhattan to a near standstill.

The 14-lane bridge, the biggest entryway to the city, was closed for nearly eight hours Thursday while the truck sat on an exit ramp on the Manhattan side of the span and anxious officials tried to figure out how to stop the hissing propane gas.

Fears of a fiery explosion prompted officials to evacuate an estimated 2,000 people from apartments near the bridge, close a Port Authority bus terminal and shut down a subway station nearby at 175th St.

Traffic backed up for 15 miles in New York and neighboring New Jersey — one of the biggest tie-ups in New York City's history. Buses and cars on the West Side of Manhattan slowed to a crawl and sidewalk vendors had a field day keeping motorists supplied with juice and soda as temperatures climbed past 90.

During the emergency, four women required treatment for inhalation of noxious fumes and heat exhaustion. A fireman also was treated for burned fingers suffered when he touched a truck exhaust pipe.

Concern that the truck, property of Ritter Transportation Inc. of Rahway, N.J., would explode into a fireball 600 to 700 feet wide began shortly after 10 a.m. when the driver heard a hissing noise, sped across the bridge, and called for help.

The leak continued, despite efforts to cap a defective valve, until 5:20 p.m., when a plug costing less than $10 was borrowed from a Bronx plumbing supply house.

The plug was the brainstorm of Officers Donald Thacke, 37, and Chris Brauer, 31, both former plumbers. Brauer hurried to the store and returned, handing the plug to Ritter representative John Triffenbach as fire companies poured water over the tanker to cool it and wash away the gas.

"As soon as I handed it to him, he said, 'That's it. That's what's going to work,'" Brauer said.

The plug was put into an opening in the tank from which gas was escaping from a malfunctioning valve. After that, it took 22 minutes to pump the remaining propane from the disabled tanker, and get traffic rolling again on the two-level span over the Hudson River.

"We were up there all afternoon and all these big 'think tanks' couldn't come up with any ideas that worked," said Brauer.

But the solution came too late to save hundreds of thousands of commuters from one of the city's worst traffic jams.

With the closing of the bridge — the first time, except for high winds, that the span had been shut in its 49 years — cars, trucks and buses were forced to use the Holland and Lincoln tunnels to get into and out of Manhattan.

They were lined up for miles under sunny skies and in 94-degree temperatures that caused scores of vehicles to overheat.

"I've never been in a traffic jam like this in my life," said Harry Legree. It took him 75 minutes to drive 3.2 miles to the Lincoln Tunnel.

Meat company warns against 'plastic' bacon

DALLAS (AP) — Citing a "plastic odor and flavor" that could cause nausea and mouth irritations, Wilson Foods Corp. has warned consumers in five states against eating certain brands of bacon.

The plastic odor and flavor apparently was picked up from a substance being used to resurface the floors at an Oklahoma City plant.

A spokeswoman for Wilson said the company "has no evidence to indicate a serious health hazard" to consumers in Texas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

Barbara Mueth, spokeswoman for the Oklahoma City-based company, said of an estimated 369,200 pounds of bacon shipped out of the Oklahoma plant, 204,200 pounds "may have had a plastic odor and flavor."

She said 174,000 pounds of the shipped bacon was "under Wilson's control" and company investigators and U.S. Department of Agriculture officials were working to recover the rest.

Ms. Mueth said the brands with possible odor included Corn King, Savory and Certified marked with establishment number 20Q and dated Sept. 22-26 and Sept. 28-30.

The odor apparently came from a substance called Styrene, used to resurface some floors in the Oklahoma City plant, she said.

"The odor from the project was absorbed into bacon stored in another department," she said. "It's still under investigation exactly what happened because all the precautions were taken. It was absorbed at low levels."

The problem was discovered late last week, she said, and the company has received "10 confirmed reports of nausea or mouth irritation in Oklahoma."

Lions see mining film

"Within this Earth," a film about the mining industry, was presented as the program at Thursday's noon meeting of the West Side Lions Club.

The film, which described the different techniques of mining, was presented in cooperation with the American Mining Institute and Drilco Industries.

Program chairman was Merlin Ketchum. Tommy Miller is president of the West Side Lions Club.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Some warts may need to be removed again

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any method for the permanent removal of warts? I have had several warts removed a number of times, but they always reappear. — Dave

Dear Dave: Warts are benign masses of tissue that grow in the upper layers of skin. They frequently recur after treatment, regardless of the method used — electric cauterization, freezing with liquid nitrogen, surgical removal, or the use of acid solutions. There is no cure for warts, and your only recourse should they reappear is to have them removed again.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A neighbor of mine recently moved into the community from a rural area. She tells me that many women where she previously lived would induce abortion by using herbs. I know that some drugs we use today are made from plants that were used for medicinal purposes many years ago, so I assume she knows what she's talking about. Would you comment on the use of herbs to induce abortion? — Mrs. G.M.

Dear Mrs. M.: The cost of conventional medicine, as well as a trend toward self-help medicine, has contributed to an increased use of herbs in various parts of the country. However, the use of herbal remedies is not without risk.

In a recent editorial, the Journal of the American Medical Association reported on the death of a woman, and the serious illness of another, both of whom used herbs to induce abortion. They obtained the substance in a health food store.

In weighing the relative safety of conventional versus herbal medicines, it would be well to bear in mind that while the Food and Drug Administration oversees the safety and effectiveness of the former, it has little control over the latter.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm curious about why you were the first doctor in this country to use nicotine neutralization. Are any other physicians showing an interest in it now that is has become known? — Mel

Dear Mel: I would not have known about nicotine neutralization if a patient of mine hadn't told me about it. Once he informed me that a French physician, Dr. Michel Bicheron, was using it with apparent great success, I decided to go to Paris to see for myself.

I visited Dr. Bicheron at his clinic, observed his methods and reviewed his results. When I was convinced that the procedure needed scientific documentation, I brought it back to the United States so that such a study could be done at a university medical center. Some time later, Dr. Bicheron visited me in Baltimore and discussed the technique with a few doctors at the Johns Hopkins Hospital.

In an effort to study the effectiveness of the procedure, I asked Dr. Roger F. Palmer, professor and chairman of the Department of Pharmacology of the University of Miami School of Medicine, to conduct a double-bind study. This study is now under way.

In addition to shots, I also test and treat patients for tobacco and tobacco smoke allergy. In selected patients I decrease the body's excessive acidity, and in all patients use behavior modification to try to break the psychological habit of smoking.

Some effects of Olympics linger

By DAVID MINTHORN

MOSCOW (AP) — Life in Moscow is winding down after 16 days of Olympics euphoria, but Soviet society is likely to feel effects of the summer games for years to come.

Moscow was physically altered for the Olympics by construction of nine hotels and eight sports centers, and coats of bright paint on every every major building.

An Analysis

Traffic is flowing freely again and open markets are crammed with fruits and vegetables with the lifting of domestic travel restrictions at the end of the games last Sunday.

But there are other long-term aspects of staging the first Olympics competitions in a Communist-governed country.

The 1957 World Festival of Youth, the first mass influx of Westerners and their ideas to Moscow in the postwar era, is credited by many Sovietologists with giving a strong impetus to the post-Stalin liberalization period.

The effect could be much the same after the Moscow Olympics, some observers believe, even with significantly fewer Western teams and spectators because of the U.S.-led boycott to protest the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

At the least, many Soviet citizens are unlikely to soon forget the whiff of Western culture they got rubbing shoulders and swapping souvenirs with visitors at sports events.

Communist leaders undoubtedly breathed a collective sigh of relief after the foreigners began flowing home Sunday without causing any major incidents.

"Municipal bodies and all Muscovites contributed to creating an atmosphere of hospitality during the games, of friendliness and mutual understandings," Viktor V. Grishin, a member of the ruling Politburo, wrote in Wednesday's Moscowskaya Pravda.

It was Grishin who sounded a warning to Muscovites a year ago about the danger of ideological pollution from getting too friendly with Western visitors during the Olympics.

Special attention, he said then, had to be paid to "the morals of the younger generation so they have an ability to distinguish false and dangerous imperialist propaganda."

Toward this goal, Moscow parents were urged to send their children to Young Pioneer camps during the Olympics.

Kids were rarely seen on the streets during the games, and most are still away. But there is ample evidence of life returning to normal in Moscow, just as there are many reminders that the games have been over less than a week.

Traffic and travel restrictions to prevent the city from being overrun with non-Olympics visitors were lifted Monday, with mixed results.

The restrictions sharply curtailed supplies of produce to markets because many farmers who sell their privately grown fruit and vegetbles — officially permitted by the government — were not permitted to travel to the capital.

A visitor to one market Wednesday discovered farmers from as far as 750 miles away hawking a wide variety of high quality produce.

"Many of us couldn't come during the games, and those who could weren't allowed to leave the market," said a peasant woman selling tomatoes and plums.

But capital inhabitants are already grumbling that the influx of rural fruit and vegetble hawkers will lead to a shortage of goods in stores. The visitors are notorious for picking clean the shelves at the GUM department store and other shops on their buying excursions.

The legions of police and soldiers who guarded the Olympics are also returning to their bases in provincial cities. Moscow police are swapping their dress white shirts worn during the Olympic events for regular workday gray.

Olympics flags have all but disappeared, but signboards pointing the way to sports events are still up, and some souvenir stands remain open outside Lenin Stadium.

The Olympic flame

The Moscow Olympics are a part of history now, tainted in memory because of the ridiculous Soviet display of arrogance and imperialism.

The Games will go down in history as a monument to the Soviet regime's idiocy. President Carter, of course, will draw the venom of those who say the United States should not have boycotted the Olympics and who now point out that the boycott failed to achieve its stated goal.

That's true. Soviet troops remain in Afghanistan despite a partial withdrawal immediately prior to the start of the Games in Moscow.

Previously we supported the president's plan to boycott the Olympics and to stage, for what it was worth, an official, albeit minimally effective, protest to the brutal subjugation of Afghanistan by Soviet forces. We continue to believe that under the circumstances the United States boycott of the Games was in the best interests of freedom-loving nations throughout the world.

Horsefeathers to those who claim the United States, too, is to blame for the deterioration of the Olympic spirit! It was not the United States that invaded and overthrew the government of a sovereign nation. It was not the United States that refused to withdraw its troops when nations throughout the world cried for it to do so. It was not the United States that turned the Olympics into a one-nation propaganda special intended to praise the glories of a repressive government.

The Olympics, it's sad to say, have never really been free of the politicizing of the Soviet communists. Russian athletes are trained and subsidized by the government. That's a fact tolerated by the International Olympic Committee.

Whatever happened to the Olympic ideal of brotherhood through sportsmanship? It isn't easy to compete with your brother when you know he is crushing another person.

Hopefully some of the other nations that stayed home from this summer's Games, too, got the message and will continue to strive for a revitalization of the true Olympic spirit with adherence by all nations.

It's better that one summer's Games be termed "second rate" than for the Olympic ideal to completely die. By purging the Olympics of politics, that goal can be achieved and the Olympic flame can burn for all nations.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Aug. 8, the 221st day of 1980. There are 145 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 8, 1974, President Richard Nixon announced that he would resign his office, saying that the Watergate scandal had forced him to step down in the national interest.

On this date:

In 1588, British sea forces under Sir Francis Drake destroyed the Spanish armada in a battle off the coast of France.

In 1673, the Dutch recaptured New York and New Jersey from the British.

In 1815, Napoleon Bonaparte sailed for St. Helena to spend the rest of his life in exile.

In 1953, the United States and South Korea signed a mutual defense treaty.

Five years ago, Portugal's President Francisco da Costa Gomes swore in a new cabinet he hoped would provide a political pause during which time his nation could "construct something more definitive."

Last year, a congressional delegation flew to Hanoi, Vietnam, in an effort to get the Vietnamese government to stem the tide of "boat people" leaving that country.

Today's birthday: former Supreme Court Justice and Ambassador Arthur Goldberg is 72.

Thought for today: In order to have good soldiers, a nation must always be at war — Napolean Bonaparte (1769-1821).

CHARLEY REESE

Auto workers' tears shed on Detroit streets

Charley Reese

I was chatting with a laid-off American car worker. He had been out of a job since April and he was traveling south looking for a job. He said his family drove a German car.

I guess that says a lot. There's no point living in the past. This is not the same country in many ways it once was. I remember as a boy hearing grown men nearly come to blows over the relative merits of a Ford or Chevy. There was no talk of foreign cars. Everybody knew Americans made the best darn car in the world.

Now you talk to a laid-off worker from Detroit and you find out he is driving a foreign car and saying his own company's product falls apart, especially if it is assembled on the day after payday or on Monday when there is a lot of absenteeism.

"Most of the guys are good men," he said, "but there is always a few and when they stay home and you have to put guys in jobs they aren't used to doing, it messes up the whole shift. There aren't many that are no good, but it don't take a lot to mess up a shift."

(Note to UAW: If you want to help save UAW jobs, weed your own garden.)

"Most of the layoffs is the company's fault," he said. "They knew for a long time they were going to have to switch to smaller cars but they kept putting it off because we can make a big car for just about the same as it cost to make a small one but sell it for an extra three grand so they just kept on making them long after they knew they shouldn't."

He was a broad-shouldered young man, neat as Sunday, about in his mid-twenties I'd guess, married a year, and on an airplane for only the second time in his life (his dad lent him the fare.) He and his wife had been living off her paycheck and his compensation check, but his compensation and her job are about to end. As far as he is concerned it's a depression. He has sent out a blizzard of resumes but there are thousands on the streets with his qualifications or better. Plans for children and a home have been stored in the attic.

I see in that young man many Americans just looking for a chance to be loyal employees and to work as hard and as smart as any German or Japanese and I also see in him a victim of forces he has never heard about.

You can put away your flag when you talk about the auto business. There aren't any American automobile companies; there are international corporations which happen to be headquartered in the United States. Several American cars are built overseas.

When you look at the boards of directors of the Big Three you don't see many car-makers. You see a lot of financiers and multinational corporate executives who have been the very ones who pressured us into a free trade position.

The power of big money to influence government is one thing which never changes. When the money power in this country belonged to men engaged in primarily domestic manufacturing for American markets, you had tariffs. Now the money power is international and you have free trade. Odd, that Wall Street now argues the position once held by the rural South.

I am over-simplifying a bit as all columnists must do, but that shift from domestic to international money is the most significant post World War II economic and political developement. The international financier packs his roots, his country, his loyalty, and his ideology in the same hip pocket.

It makes no difference to them if the return on their investment is earned by a car made in Detroit or one built in Europe, by a steel plant in Youngstown or by a loan to a steel plant in Japan. The High Lords of High Finance have decided that our labor costs are too high, our workers are too unruly, so we shall no longer be an industrial society. We shall instead export capital and technology and to heck with the young man on the airplane.

You don't think Japan financed its modern industrial machine by hocking the emperor's silver, do you? And you don't think that politically powerful people who have investments overseas are going to tolerate trade barriers which keep their investments from selling in the United States?

There are two kinds of tears being shed in Detroit — crocodile tears in the board rooms and real ones on the street.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Is Carter playing into the Soviets' hands?

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — In a scathing, secret memo, State Department strategists have warned that President Carter's "chaotic" attempts to undermine the revolutionary regime in Iran could play into Soviet hands.

The Soviets appear to be trying to destabilize and dismember Iran, the memo notes, by stirring up minority discord. As the country disintegrates into hostile ethnic factions, the Soviets seek to subvert and subjugate the separate factions, thereby bringing Iranian territory under Kremlin control piecemeal.

The secret memo accuses the White House, in effect, of advancing the Soviet strategy by our own clumsy, covert efforts to divide the minorities and disrupt the Iranian government. But unlike the Soviets, the memo charges, the clandestine U.S. operations lack central control and policy objectives.

As examples, the CIA has been broadcasting from Egypt appeals to Iranians to "take up arms" and has supported Iranian exile groups, with no control over what these groups do. The CIA has also made on-again, off-again contacts with former military officers in Iran. This has succeeded only in having some of the unfortunate officers hauled before firing squads.

All the while these undercover operations have been going on, the State Department has kept its diplomatic hands off Iran and has adopted the wait-and-see attitude that President Carter promised our European allies last June he would maintain.

In frustration, the strategists have called the Carter policy "clinically schizophrenic — withdrawn, confused, and characterized by bizarre fantasy." This scathing language was addressed to the president's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski.

The State Department experts were too discreet to discuss the president's motives in the memo. But privately, they suspect he wants to bring down Ayatollah Khomeini's regime before the November election and take credit with the voters for the achievement, an inside source told me.

What the experts fear is that the Soviet Union, not the United States, would pick up the pieces. Because Iran dominates the Persian Gulf, fountainhead of the industrial world's oil, it is vital to U.S. interests to foster a stable, democratic government in Iran. This must "evolve from the current situation," without foreign interferences, urges the secret memo.

Footnote: The president's political whiz kid, Hamilton Jordan, wants to play politics with another aspect of the Iranian problem. A Justice Department task force has been investigating whether ex-Attorney General Ramsey Clark's recent mission to Iran, in violation of the president's travel ban, can be prosecuted.

The confidential conclusion is that the Clark group "did not violate, except in a very narrow and technically questionable sense, any law or statute of the United States," that prosecution of the group would "almost inevitably result in dismissal" and that a government appeal would likely "produce undesirable precedent, which might limit the executive's options in future crises."

But Jordan has taken exception, in a private memo to the president. He noted that prosecution would be "politically popular" and that the trial would be "an extended process." The inference, in other words, is that the case wouldn't likely be defeated or dismissed before the election. He argued that prosecution of the Clark group was "necessary to maintaining the role of presdential leadership."

YOUR NUMBER OR YOUR LIFE: The days of the masked highwayman, brandishing a pistol and shouting "Stand and deliver," are long gone. Likewise, the era of Tommy gun-toting bank robbers will soon be swept into the dustbin of history as the fast-approaching cashless society takes over.

But this won't mean the end of big-money theft. Quite the contrary: Mobsters and white-collar crooks alike will find opportunities in computerized finance beyond anything they could have dreamed of with old-fashioned methods.

By sabotaging key computers across the country, for example, terrorists could make the simplest transactions impossible, creating financial chaos and panicking the public.

Organized crime could subvert a computer system and skim off billions undetected. Individuals with a knowledge of electronics could get away with millions before their system was discovered. Already, the incidence of computer crimes is growing yearly.

These ominous warnings are detailed in an unpublished manuscript by August Bequai, a Washington, D.C., lawyer. While noting that old-fashioned armed robbery, forgery and counterfeiting will disappear along with currency, coins and checks, he adds: "New categories of crimes will take shape, and a new class of electronic felons will bilk the public of billions."

UNDER THE DOME: Rep. Robert Edgar, D-Pa., a Methodist minister, has been given a moral rating of only 8 percent by an outfit called Christian Voice. On the other hand, Rep. Richard Kelly, R-Fla., who was recently indicted in the ABSCAM scandal, got a rating of 100 percent.

— Three former congressmen, Pat Jennings, D-Va., James O'Hara, D-Mich., and Frank Evans, D-Colo., were enlisted by agribusiness interests to help push through the House Interior Committee a bill that gives big farmers a break on federally subsidized irrigation water. Rep. Phil Burton, D-Calif., who opposed it as "an infamous giveaway," took a wry dig at the former members: "The only comfort I can take as a Democratic liberal is that in this period of unemployment this legislation has provided a lot of meaningful employment to a great number of our friends, former colleagues, old fraternity buddies."

INSIDE REPORT:

Revolution in political attitudes swinging Reagan's way

By ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

Evans

Novak

WALTHAM, Mass. — The overwhelmingly Democratic blue-collar voters in this Boston suburb, who gave Jimmy Carter a landslide over Gerald R. Ford in 1976, have not only turned against the president but have embraced the basic economic and defense policies of Ronald Reagan.

That is the inescapable conclusion from interviewing in precinct 7-1 just 10 days before the Democratic National Convention. It was selected for us by Patrick Caddell's Cambridge Survey Research as prototypical of blue-collar precincts that heavily supported Carter four years ago in one of his best states. Is it possible that such a Democratic stronghold in the only state won by George McGovern in 1972 could embrace the hero of the Republican right?

It is. Out of 79 registered voters interviewed in precinct 7-1, this was the outcome (in votes, not percentages): Reagan, 37; Carter, 12; Rep. John Anderson, 22; Ed Clark (Libertarian), 1; would not vote, 2; undecided, 5.

If Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie is substituted for Carter, Reagan's margin shrinks (Reagan 30, Muskie 26, Anderson 19.) But that is still a shockingly poor Democratic performance among voters that include only 12 avowed Republicans. Nor can Anderson's independent candidacy be blamed, more of the 22 Anderson voters prefer Reagan to Carter in a two-man race.

Typical is the 47-year-old wife of a telephone lineman, a Democrat who backed Carter last time but prefers Reagan this time. "My problem is the cost of living," she told us. "Carter just hasn't done anything about it."

The 79 voters interviewed were even more pro-Carter in 1976 (69 percent) than the precinct at large (64 percent). When asked how they voted then, many voluntarily added, "Sorry to say," after saying Carter's name. The most frequently given reason by Carter-switchers for supporting Reagan was voiced by a 40-year-old nurse: "Just to get rid of Carter."

These voters give Carter a favorability rating of only 21 percent (compared to 57 percent for Reagan, 63 percent for Muskie, 53 percent for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and 46 percent for Anderson.) But the upheaval in precinct 7-1 cannot be explained by Carterphobia that will dissipate once the Carter campaign paints Reagan as a mindless warmonger.

That was shown by answers to questions prepared for us by Caddell: 3-to-1 supporting higher national defense spending; 3-to-1 favoring the Republican platform plank calling for "military superiority" over the Russians; 4-to-1 disagreement with the proposition that Reagan as president would bring nuclear war closer; 5-to-1 preference for Reagan over Carter in dealing with the Russians.

But it is not their sense of a diminished America in the world that most bothers these middle-income Americans. Unable to make ends meet while earning a higher salary than they ever dreamed possible (the precinct's median annual income: $19,500.) These voters rate Reagan as poorest of the three candidates in ability to quickly end the recession (Anderson is, curiously, the highest by nearly 4-to-1). But it is not recession that worries precinct 7-1 today.

Asked to name the nation's two biggest problems, 47 voters mentioned inflation ("the economy" was second with 20 mentions; only seven named unemployment.) By 6-to-1, these voters rate Reagan as more capable than Carter on inflation. By 4-to-1, they prefer him on taxation.

This contradicts Democratic certainty that Reagan is on the wrong political track calling for an immediate 10 percent "inflationary" tax cut. The opinion of these voters on Reagan's tax proposal: 67 favor, eight oppose, four don't know. Their reasoning is simple, as expressed by a 51-year-old machinist switching from Carter to Reagan: "I sure could use the money."

Some voters who agree with Reagan's defense and tax positions oppose him anyway. A 35-year-old teacher told us, "I'm afraid of Reagan's kind of conservatism" and will support Anderson even while endorsing the tax cut and military superiority.

A few voters called Reagan too old, and some insisted that Carter be given another chance. But no avowed Reagan voters seemed receptive to the anti-tax cut, anti-military superiority campaign planned by the president once he emerges from Madison Square Garden. That suggests what is happening in Waltham's precinct 7-1 is not just another swing by supposedly volatile voters, but a basic revolution in American political attitudes.

THE BIBLE

CAN YOU QUOTE IT?

By LAVINA ROSS FOWLER AND ELIZABETH ROSS WIERSEMA

1. Each of the British Isles has a patron saint. Patrick, patron of Ireland seems to be the most heard of, but England's special patron is St. George, Scotland's — Andrew and Wales — St. David. There's much controversy about what it takes to make a saint. The dictionary gives the members of a church. Does Ephesians 2:19 agree with this?

2. Who according to 1 Corinthians 2:2 shall judge the world?

3. Hebrews 6 gives some of the obligations of saints and Romans 8:27 gives intercessions for them. What are they?

4. It appears that saints are not expected to be perfect and Psalm 23 gives consolation for them. Complete, "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not....." 23:25-29.

5. Which of Adam's sons appear to have been the most satisfactory? Genesis 4:25-26.

Winery thriving in wheat country of Oklahoma plains

By DEBBY SHANNON
Associated Press Writer

OKARCHE, Okla. (AP) — Surrounded by wheat fields and blistered by the sun, Pete Schwarz' winery is located just about the last place anyone would expect to find it — on a west-central Oklahoma farm.

For years, Schwarz' winery was the only one in the state. Since 1970, he and his wife, Clara, have been selling a thousand bottles a year to customers varying from Canadian County neighbors to visitors from Italy.

"This is a winery in nowhere," Mrs. Schwarz said. "The first thing people ask is, 'Where do you get grapes?'"

It's a logical question — the nearest vineyards are in far eastern Oklahoma or in Arkansas, more than a 300-mile round trip.

So each August or September, Schwarz hauls a truck to Springdale, Ark., where he loads up four to eight tons of Concord grapes.

What Schwarz does with the grapes once he's transported them home is a variation on what his dad taught him as a youngster.

"Dad was from Germany. I helped Dad make a barrel of wine every year since I was a child," said Schwarz, leaning back against a rack of wine bottles.

"People would come by and try to talk me out of some of the wine so I thought I'd get legal and get a license to make and sell it," he said.

He takes the grapes, squeezes them in steel rollers — "You only have to break the skin to start fermentation" — and puts them into vats to ferment for a week.

He then squeezes out the juice with a press, pours the juice into 500-gallon fiberglass vats tucked into a cool, cavernous cellar, adds sugar and lets nature take its course.

Schwarz is a stickler for cleanliness during the winemaking process, "Wine gets sick just like people. Different germs cause different problems."

The wine is allowed to age about four years, Schwarz said.

Schwarz, his wife and some of their 12 children bottle and label the wine.

Wine is pumped upstairs to a garage-like building where it is bottled and labeled. The labels themselves tell something of the battle the Schwarzes have been waging to market their wine in Oklahoma.

"The labels have to be approved by (alcohol board officials in) Washington," Schwarz said. Once, he tried to add a "made in Oklahoma" sticker to the bottles. The bureaucrats said no — "They hadn't approved the label first. So the stickers had to come off," he said.

Stiff regulations for winemakers are something they contend with daily.

"Children can't visit the winery with their mothers. They (inspectors) tried to tell me my own boys couldn't work if they were under 21. I told them my boys were family."

Sometimes, flukes can be costly. Schwarz said his 1976 wine ended up being 15 percent alcohol — which meant it was taxed at a higher rate because of its alcohol content. "Each gallon bottle of wine cost us an extra dollar that year," Schwarz figured.

Schwarz said few people knew he made wine — "under law, we can't advertise in Oklahoma. Any business, to grow, has got to advertise."

Even the letters on the small white wooden sign pointing the way down the dirt road to his farm can only be 4 inches tall, he said.

But through the years hundreds have found Schwarz's winery.

Visitors have come from all but two states — Delaware and New Jersey — and from Italy, Austria, France, Spain, Mexico, Canada and England.

Schwarz said a group of Italian visitors, after getting over the initial shock of finding a winery in the wheat fields, had probably done the best job of pinning down the wine's flavor.

"They said it tasted like Italian sherry," he recalled.

Despite 10 years of success in selling his wine, Schwarz says he considers the venture more of a hobby than a livelihood.

Midlander 'not guilty' in rape case

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A nine-man, three-woman jury deliberated 22 minutes Thursday afternoon to reach a "not guilty" verdict in the rape trial of a 21-year-old Midland welder, Arlan Morett.

He had been indicted for raping an 18-year-old Midland woman in his apartment on the night he met her in an Odessa dance hall-bar.

"I think it was a fair verdict," said defense attorney Edward T. Garza. "I'm kind of lopsided. That's a hard case to try (for the state), hard for the defense."

Prosecutor Jim Rex was not pleased with the outcome of the trial.

"We can only present the evidence to the jury and let them make the decision," Rex said of the first case he has prosecuted since he joined District Attorney Vern Martin's staff a week ago.

"We were surprised (at the innocent verdict). We believe in our cases or we wouldn't be presenting them."

As soon as the verdict was rendered in Judge Vann Culp's 238th State District Court, the accusing woman burst into tears. Her mother, sister, friends and Police Detective Sgt. Bob Miller, who had investigated the case, tried to console her.

The woman, obviously chagrined and hurt by the verdict, lingered around the fourth-floor courtroom, hall and district attorney's office for about a hour before leaving.

"I feel sorry for the next girl," the woman said several hours after the verdict was rendered and after she had regained her composure, "because I think he'll do it again."

Not long after the May 11 incident in which she claimed to be raped, the woman moved from Midland to Lubbock due to humilitation over the incident, she said.

"I have almost lost my job over this thing," she said. "I can't afford to lose anything else...to me, it's my whole life."

She indicated that she was apprehensive about pressing charges and testifying and about the resultant publicity.

"I've got to tell the truth...if it'll help somebody else."

In her testimony in the two-day trial, the woman said the accused had raped her after bringing her to his darkened apartment following their dancing and drinking beer at the Odessa nightspot.

She said that their relationship had been amiable and innocent during the night until he started making advances and that his temperament changed from "nice" to "mean."

The woman testified that she did not in any way consent to have sexual relations with him.

However, Morett testified that the woman had agreed to spend the night with him just after they had danced a "slow dance" at the nightspot. They were kissing passionately on the dance floor, he said.

"She consented then," he said, "to go home with me and spend the night."

He said they were "affectionate but not over doing it" in driving to Midland.

Morett testified that their sexual relationship was mutually agreed and that the woman cooperated and did not object until after the act was completed.

"Everything was fine and just normal as could be," he said. However, he said she started getting upset and apparently "began to regret what she did."

Morett said then the woman began to accuse him of raping her.

"She threatened to call the police and to have her friends beat me up," he said.

Later, he testified, "She said, 'Let's be quiet about it.' I said, 'There's nothing wrong to be quiet about.' "

But in her testimony, the woman said she struggled, fought and wrestled with her alleged assailant but in vain and was unable to ward off his advances.

"He told me not to call the cops or to sic my friends on him, 'cause he'd kill me," she testified.

In his closing arguments, Rex contended that the woman's motivation for lying on the witness stand was "non-existent." However, he said that the accused's motivation for lying was "substantial."

Punishment for rape ranges from two to 20 years' confinement in the state penitentiary.

Garza, however, held that there was no rape and that the accused and the complaining woman mutually agree to have sexual intercourse.

Robbery suspect rejects two years; Sentenced to life

DALLAS (AP) — A 22-year-old man who rejected a two-year prison term in favor of a jury trial was convicted of robbery Wednesday and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Rickey Lee Bradley of Dallas was convicted in the March 21 robbery of a convenience store. His attorney, Gene Gaines, said he would appeal the verdict.

Gaines said Bradley refused a plea-bargain agreement and insisted on going to trial because "he said he was not guilty."

Several burglaries keep police busy in Midland Thursday

A burglary at 711 Ainslee St. Thursday yielded $2,400 in $20 bills and some old coins for the burglar.

Harvey Hilliger told police he left at noon Thursday and when he returned at 2 p.m. he found the doors and windows locked, as he left them. However, in the living room he found checks scattered across the floor. He then checked a bedroom closet and found that a gray metal box containing the $2,400 was missing.

Another burglary netted $1,650 in stolen items.

Police are investigating the burglary, which reportedly occurred sometime between 9 a.m. Friday and 3 p.m. Thursday at 2609 Terrace Ave. Taken were a stereo receiver, turntable, cassette, speakers, camera and camera lens.

Entry to the residence was gained through the garage door, which had a faulty lock.

Carmela White of 2002 W. Missouri Ave. told police that sometime Thursday someone entered her residence and stole a camera, $32 in silver, a set of earrings and a German .25-caliber pistol. Total value was placed at $526.

Entry was gained by prying off a screen and raising an unlocked window on the east side of the house.

The Fire Department was kept busy Thursday.

Firemen were called to a plane crash at Midkiff, two grass fires, a trash fire and house fire.

The house fire, at 7:18 p.m at 100 N. Bentwood, was caused by an electrical short in a vent-a-hood for the stove. The hood and wall suffered heavy damage in the blaze. The house is occupied by Frank Castillo.

Bonds increased in Dallas marijuana case

DALLAS (AP) — Bonds for three of 14 men arrested in a five-ton marijuana raid were raised Wednesday from $10,000 to $100,000 because officers said the men are "major distributors" of the drug.

Dallas County Magistrate Tom Boardman raised the bonds on the charges of possession of marijuana and intent to distribute.

The men are Jessie R. Mojica, 32; Steve Mojica, 22, and Louis Rendon Valdez, 36.

The truckload of marijuana was valued at $6 million by the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Midlander in Experiment in International Living

Jamie Jones

Jamie Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.L. Jones Jr., 3213 Apperson Drive, is living abroad this summer with a family in Paris, France, as part of a program with the Experiment in International Living.

Miss Jones currently is a senior at Southwestern University, Georgetown, majoring in international studies and international business.

Each summer about 1,100 American students travel abroad on the Experiment program, spending three or more weeks living with a family in the host country, speaking their language and participating in community life.

Experimenters travel in groups of eight to 12, led by a qualified and trained adult leader familiar with the culture and language of the host country.

Out of the 12 members in her group, Miss Jones is the only student from Texas. The others are from California, Ohio, Maine, Pennsylvania, Vermont, New Jersey, New York and Virginia.

At the conclusion of the homestay, the members will regroup and tour other parts of the country with young members of host families. Experimenters in 1980 chose from 60 programs in 30 countries in Europe, the Middle East, Asia, Africa and Latin America.

In addition to its summer programs, the Experiment conducts semester programs for high school and college students. Each year the Experiment also places about 3,000 foreign visitors with American families.

MMH picks quality expert

John D. Holt has been designated to fill the newly created position of assistant administrator for quality control at Midland Memorial Hospital, Interim Administrator Robert R. Bash announced Monday.

"It is good to have Mr. Holt on our staff and we look forward to becoming an even better hospital," Bash said.

Holt's new job is to coordinate and assist the hospital staff in assessing the quality of patient care, in setting standards and in complying with accreditation guidelines.

Quality control, or quality assurance, as Holt prefers to call it, specifically "enables a hospital to know it's level of quality according to Joint Commission's accrediting definition; and know where the hospital wants its own quality level to be," Holt said.

"The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals is an organization that accredits hospitals on a voluntary basis. It has enough clout and prestige to make most hospitals eager for its stamp of quality," Bash said. "MMH has been accredited by the Joint Commission since 1955, but since guidelines change somewhat from year to year, bringing the hospital into compliance is a continual process," he added.

"The purpose of Quality Assurance Program is to assist management and employees in improving the level of patient care," Holt explained.

Prior to his arrival in Midland, Holt was Quality Assurance Administrator for Brookwood Health Services, Inc., in Birmingham, Ala. There, he developed and coordinated a quality control system for hospitals owned or managed by Brookwood.

In 1978, Holt was acting administrator for United Community Hospital in Gove City, Pa.

Holt has also been accreditation consultant for American Medicorp, Inc., of Dallas, a multi-hospital chain, and has served as operational analyst for the Texas Medical Foundation, the coordination and evaluation body for Medicaid in Texas. Further, he has served as administrative assistant at St. Anthony Hospital, Oklahoma City, where he designed and coordinated nursing and medical audit programs and assisted in master plan development.

Holt is a graduate of the University of Oklahoma with a major in finance and holds a graduate degree in Health Care Administration from Trinity University in San Antonio.

Tech instructor new radiologist

Dr. Ward M. Terry, a board certified radiologist, has recently joined the medical staff at Midland Memorial Hospital and will practice medicine in Midland. He will share an office with Radiology Associates here.

Dr. Terry comes to Midland from the faculty of Texas Tech University School of Medicine, where he has been an associate professor in the Department of Radiology since 1977 and was professor of angiography.

Prior to his Texas Tech affiliation, Dr. Terry served as a radiologist on the medical staff of the United States Air Force Medical Center in San Antonio.

A native of Staten Island, N.Y., Dr. Terry completed residency programs in pediatrics, cardiology and radiology at the University of Wisconsin in Madison and served the USAF in pediatrics and cardiology from 1968 to 1970.

He attended Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore as an undergraduate and as a medical student. He was awarded his MD degree from Johns Hopkins in 1964 and interned at the University of Wisconsin.

GOP nominates mental patient in Michigan congressional race

DETROIT (AP) — The Republican nominee for Michigan's 17th Congressional District is a 25-year-old patient at a psychiatric hospital.

Alfred Lawrence Patterson was hospitalized for 60 days and unable to get out of the Northville Regional Psychiatric Hospital to vote in Tuesday's primary. In an interview, he said the Secret Service wanted him committed because he had written a letter to Democratic presidential candidate Edward M. Kennedy threatening to prosecute the Massachusetts senator.

Patterson defeated two GOP opponents and will oppose Democratic Rep. William Brodhead in November.

Patterson said he was angry with Kennedy because the senator's staff lost a federal prison reform proposal submitted by Patterson.

The Secret Service in Detroit confirmed that Patterson had been under investigation, but declined further comment Thursday.

Scientists studying manatees as aid in energy crisis

By PETER EISNER
Associated Press Writer

MANAUS, Brazil (AP) — The Amazon manatee, a blubbery, walrus-like mammal that is one of the world's most peaceful creatures, may be saved from possible extinction while at the same time helping man cope with the energy crisis.

Scientists at a jungle research center here are studying ways to protect the manatee — the world's only fully aquatic, plant-eating mammal — while putting it to work on a test project to see if it will gobble up all the weeds that otherwise clog the operation of Brazilian hydroelectric dams.

The project is the latest in man's centuries-old courting of the manatee, which early sailors linked to the legend of mermaids who lured seamen from their ships. Since then, it has been eaten by peasants who enjoyed the flavor of its meat, skinned for its thick hide to make conveyer belts, and only recently studied by scientists, who say they believe good planning will save the huge but docile creature from possible extinction.

Specialists at the Brazilian government's National Institute of Amazon Research are working with government electric utilities on the project, which will place 50 Amazon manatees in the Curua-Una Dam project in the Amazon jungle state of Para. The animals will be fitted with radio transmitters so their habits and movements can be traced.

"This study will also allow the creation and development of an artificial population of manatees to be monitored," said Dr. William Magnuson, an Australian scientist working on the project. "It is hoped that as the manatee population within the lake grows, the excess animals may be used to stock other reservoirs or restock areas of reduced or extinct population of this mammal."

Magnuson and his coworker, Canadian scientist Robin Best, are fairly certain the manatees will be able to control the growth of entangling plants in the hydroelectric dam. A full-grown manatee, which reaches a maximum size of nine feet long and weighs half a ton, can consume 80 pounds of plants a day.

Until now, little has been known about the Amazon manatee, which is hard to spot in the darkened waters it plies along the 3,915-mile-long Amazon River and its thousands of tributaries.

"To monitor the habits of one manatee has literally taken thousands of man-hours, and our resources have been limited to do that," Magnuson said.

The Amazon manatee's salt-water cousin, the Caribbean manatee, which swims as far north as the Florida coast, is on the more serious world endangered list and is sometimes killed by the propellers of pleasure boats that cut through its murky-water habitat. A third species of manatee, the dugong, is found off Australia.

Magnuson says a greater danger for the manatee is that it can become entangled and drown in the huge nets used by commercial fishermen. That danger presents more of a potential problem than the individual hunting of manatees by subsistence fishermen, who call the manatee "peixe-boi" — Portuguese for bull-fish — and prize the animal for its meat which can be cooked in its own fat, then stored without refrigeration for up to a year.

"We can't say the number of (Amazon) manatee that have been eliminated or the number that remain," Magnuson said. "But we're hopeful, based on the statistics we get from local fishermen, that there's still a good number around. Yet only a fool would say they're safe on that basis."

The manatee has fascinated man for hundreds of years. Eighteenth century drawings of the animal made it half human, half fish in appearance and the scientific name of its order, "Sirenia," comes from the mythical sirens, whose alluring calls were said to lure sailors to their death.

Magnuson says he doubts the early artists who popularized the manatees' mermaid connection had ever seen a manatee at close range. Biologically related to the elephant, it is a grayish black animal with a hairy snout and teeth that are regularly replaced by pushing new teeth onto the gums and forcing the old ones out.

Despite its lumbering size and slow metabolism which requires that it surface for a breath no more than once every five minutes, the manatee ends up being a responsive animal.

Allen could drive tar deposits to U.S. coast

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Tar deposits from Bay of Campeche oil spill could be driven toward U.S. shores if Hurricane Allen bypasses Texas and plows into Mexico, scientists say.

The grim prediction came Thursday from scientists studying the environmental impact of the world's largest oil spill on the South Texas Coast.

"Where the tar is, is a good question. So far nobody has found anything. The hardness and toughness of the tar may not make it easy to rip it up by a wall of water," said Dr. Arnold Bouma of the U.S. Geological Survey here.

"You really need tremendous forces. If its churning a lot and a lot of sediment, it may indeed rip up part of the tar and cover part of the barrier islands. But because it is hard, it would not be too difficult to clean it up," Bouma said.

Sailor innocent of lesbian charges

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Navy Petty Officer Tangela Gaskins sobbed in the arms of her attorney and said "Thank you for just believing in me" after a Navy board found her innocent of charges she engaged in homosexual acts aboard the USS Norton Sound.

The board recommended she be retained in the Navy.

The Administrative Discharge Board had deliberated for 30 minutes Thursday. Ms. Gaskins, 25, was the first of eight women to face a hearing on allegations of lesbianism aboard the missile test ship.

Ms. Gaskins had testified briefly, denying she had ever committed a homosexual act, but saying she had been threatened and vilified aboard ship since the allegations were made public.

In a brief written statement, she denounced the Navy investigation of alleged homosexual activities.

"I do not intend to expose my private sex life any more than has already come out," she said. "But I feel a denial is in order."

Senior board member Cmdr. Francis G. Knipe told her the panel "finds there is no credible evidence the respondent engaged in homosexual acts and recommends retention."

After the decision was read, Ms. Gaskins dashed from the room, saying she was going to call her fiance, then her mother.

Both her fiance, Kevin Ruth, 21, of Long Beach, and a former boyfriend testified Wednesday they did not think she was a homosexual.

Ms. Gaskins said she felt good about the decision but said it was wrong to single out homosexuals or pry into private affairs: "I think the Navy's concern should have been my work performance."

She said she would take a week's leave to decide whether to stay in the Navy. "To me, it seems more of a defiance to stay than to leave," she said. "So the odds are very good that I will stay."

During the week of testimony, three women sailors had accused Ms. Gaskins of a homosexual affair aboard ship. They acknowledged not seeing the alleged act but said Ms. Gaskins had told them she was homosexual and one testified she had seen Ms. Gaskins crawl under a bunk with a woman.

Ms. Gaskins said she and the other sailor were just talking.

A second three-member panel was to be sworn today for another hearing in which the Navy will seek to present testimony against three other accused women. The defense intends to oppose the joint hearing.

Four other women also face hearings on alleged lesbianism.

The discharge hearings are not courts-martial and can result, at most, in an honorable or general discharge from military service.

Emmy awards may be starless

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The star-studded Emmy awards ceremony could be a bit lackluster this year if striking actors — including some of the top nominees — follow through on a threat to boycott the awards night.

Nominations for the 32nd annual Emmy Awards were announced Thursday by the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences. The nationally televised awards show is set for Sept. 7, but one spokeswoman for striking actors has said the walkout could last into that month.

For the second straight year, the "Lou Grant" series picked up the most nominations. The show, set in the newsroom of a Los Angeles newspaper, was nominated for 15 Emmys, including best drama series and best actor in a drama series for Ed Asner in the title role.

Asner, one of 60,000 Screen Actors Guild and American Federations of Television and Radio Artists members on strike since July 21, has been active on picket lines.

The awards ceremony are to be emceed by "Little House on the Prairie" producer-star Michael Landon, Lee Remick and Bob Newhart.

CBS led all other networks with 98 Emmy nominations. ABC followed with 77 nominations, NBC got 68, PBS received 19 and 12 went to syndicated programs.

Second to "Lou Grant" in number of nominations was NBC's "Moviola," a three-night retelling of three Hollywood legends, that captured 13 nominations.

"M-A-S-H," the free-wheeling series about an Army field hospital, was third with 11 nominations, including best comedy series and best actor in a comedy for Alan Alda as Capt. Hawkeye Pierce.

Other shows with several nominations were "All Quiet on the Western Front" with seven, "Amber Waves" with six, NBC's "The Big Show" with six, "Baryshnikov on Broadway" with six, "The Muppet Show" with eight and two cancelled NBC series, "The Rockford Files" with six and "Skag" with seven.

"Lou Grant" stars nominated for supporting roles were Mason Adams, who plays managing editor Charlie Hume; Robert Walden as reporter Joe Rossi; Linda Kelsey, for her role as reporter Billie Newman; and Nancy Marchand, as the paper's publisher, Mrs. Pynchon. Nina Foch also was nominated as best supporting actress for a guest star appearance on the series.

Last year, "Lou Grant" won the best drama series award, but Asner lost in the acting category.

"M-A-S-H" cast members also figured heavily in the supporting role categories, with nominations to Mike Farrell, as surgeon B.J. Hunnicutt; Harry Morgan, who plays the hospital commander, Col. Potter; and Loretta Switt as nurse Margaret "Hotlips" Houlihan.

"Moviola" was nominated as outstanding limited series. Tony Curtis, who played movie tycoon David O. Selznick in the episode about the search for an actress to play Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone With The Wind," received a nomination as best actor in a limited series.

Carrie Nye, who played Tallulah Bankhead in the same episode, was nominated as best supporting actress in a limited series or special.

Response to K-car may write Chrysler Corp.'s last chapter

By GUY DARST

DETROIT (AP) — A new model is always a bit of a new beginning for an automaker. Chrysler Corp.'s "K-car" may be a last chance.

The No. 3 automaker is hoping that hot sales of the new front-wheel-drive compacts will pull the company out of deep financial trouble.

"This is K-day for Chrysler, D-Day for Detroit, and a new beginning for America," Chairman Lee A. Iacocca said in ceremonies this week as the first K-cars rolled out of the Jefferson Avenue assembly plant.

"No one knows better than I that Chrysler is Detroit and Detroit is Chrysler," said Mayor Coleman A. Young. "We are counting on the K-car."

Of all auto companies, Chrysler facilities are most heavily concentrated in and around Detroit. Much of the unemployment in Detroit, which is running at 15 percent, is a result of Chrysler layoffs.

If the K-car doesn't work out, Chrysler officials say they will probably have to file corporate papers for bankruptcy.

It was to avoid a Chrysler bankruptcy that Congress approved $1.5 billion in loan guarantees in December. Chrysler has used $800 million of those guarantees. The company lost $1.09 billion last year and according to government estimates could lose $1.2 billion this year.

The K-cars — Plymouth Reliant and Dodge Aries — should enable Chrysler to show a profit in the fourth quarter, Chrysler says. The cars go on sale Oct. 2 and the automaker says it already has orders for half the expected 1980 output of 180,000 cars.

Chrysler, highly aware of buyer esteem for the quality of Japanese cars and of the four recalls of the Plymouth Volare and Dodge Aspen, is going to great lengths to try to prove it can make a car well.

Chrysler says a $100 million retooling of the Jefferson Avenue plant makes it the most technologically advanced in the world.

Ninety robot welders in each of the two K-car plants will make 98 percent of the 3,000 spot welds on the body. Chrysler says welds made by robots are more accurate than those made by human workers. The standard 2.2-liter 4-cylinder engine, also a new model, gets 178 inspections, twice that of previous engines.

No cars will be shipped until proving ground tests are completed on the first 1,000 K-cars, expected to take 10 days. Retired Chrysler engineers will make periodic 16-mile test drives of production cars.

Chrysler says it will have the capacity to build about 600,000 K-cars in the 1981 model year.

The cars are two feet shorter and, at 2,300 pounds, 1,000 pounds lighter than Volare and Aspen. They compete head-on with General Motors Corp.'s highly popular front-wheel-drive X-cars.

Chrysler says manual-transmission K-cars will get 25 miles per gallon on the city driving test of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency — 1 mpg better than the best of this year's X-cars — and 40 mpg on the highway test. Chrysler also contends that K-cars are roomier than X-cars.

No prices have been announced. Industry observers expect the cheapest stripped-down K-car model to carry a $6,000 sticker. The cheapest Aspen today lists for $5,045.

Will hostage get cards?

ODIN, Minn. (AP) — Arvid Laingen is hoping that his brother, Bruce Laingen, a hostage in Iran, was able to receive the cards Odin residents sent him for his 58th birthday.

"It's going to real interesting to see how many of them get through to him," said Arvid Laingen, a farmer. "Practically everyone we talked to sent him a birthday card."

Bruce Laingen, who is from Bethesda, Md., celebrated his birthday Wednesday. He was the U.S. charge d'affairs in Iran and was being held at the foreign ministry along with two other hostages.

Arvid Laingen said he received a letter from his brother last week and said he seemed to be in good spirits.

"He hopes to get out and is getting a little tired of setting a date that keeps going by," Arvid Laingen said.

Midlander Mark A. Skrabacz was recently appointed volunteer chairman of the American Cancer Society's 1980 Texas Great American Smokeout for Midland this fall.

Fossilized whale skull unearthed

MONTGOMERY, La. (AP) — The fossilized skull of a 45 million-year-old whale — perhaps the first complete skull of its species — has been unearthed from a river bank in a rural central Louisiana community that was once covered by a deep sea, scientists said.

The discovery of the extinct whale's 48-inch skull was made July 31 but kept secret until Wednesday to protect the dig from souvenir hunters until all the remains were recovered, said Dr. Judith Schiebout, a Louisiana State University geologist.

"I've been camping here every night to take care of it," said Winston Lancaster. The graduate student in biology was a member of the five-person team that found the skull after a year of off-and-on digging.

The whale probably lived in the Eocene Epoch, 56 to 40 million years ago, when mammals became the dominant animals on earth, Ms. Schiebout said. And at that time, what is now central and southern Louisiana was covered by the sea.

The remains were found along the banks of the Red River in Montgomery Landing, some 50 miles northwest of Alexandria, where pine forests cover the countryside. The area has produced other skeletal remains from the Eocene Epoch for more than 100 years, Ms. Schiebout said.

Scientists are working the dig under a contract with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which plans to deepen and modify the Red River, eventually opening the channel to barge traffic from Shreveport to the Mississippi River.

Also discovered were some ribs, teeth, about a dozen vertebrae and a humerus, a bone that corresponds to a human's upper arm, which was part of the whale's flipper.

The skull is too old for carbon-dating techniques, but Ms. Schiebout said it may be the first complete skull from a species of whale know as the Basilosaurus cetoides ever discovered. The species, which had 3-inch-long teeth, grew more than 60 feet long and fed on smaller fish.

"This particular whale did not die and wash up on the shoreline, as is the case with many whales," she said. "Its position indicates that it died in deep water, from 150 to 200 feet down. Some shark teeth were found near the skeleton, indicating the dead or dying animal may have been eaten by sharks."

Eventually, the skull may be displayed in Baton Rouge at the LSU Museum of Geoscience, which Ms. Schiebout directs.

"Louisiana has several Eocene outcrops, and the discovery of whale ribs and vertebra is not unusual," she said.

Margaret Trudeau to appear

TORONTO (AP) — Margaret Trudeau will do an imitation of newscaster Barbara Walters during a segment of "The Big City Comedy Show," a television series being produced in Toronto, the show's producers say.

Mrs. Trudeau, the estranged wife of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, will begin taping Wednesday, according to a spokesman for the show.

She will also do a take-off on Roseanne Rosanadanna, a bumbling newscaster portrayed by comedian Gilda Radner on the NBC-TV show "Saturday Night Live."

The "Big City Comedy Show" is being made for Canadian television, but the producers hope it will run in the United States as well.

Mrs. Trudeau has movie acting experience, has worked as a photographer and written an autobiography, "Beyond Reason."

In Ottawa, a spokesman for Trudeau said the prime minister was on vacation and "we have no knowledge of the whereabouts or activities of Mrs. Trudeau."

Allen rivals worst storm

MIAMI (AP) — Hurricane Allen, replenished by warm Gulf of Mexico waters, Thursday rivaled the most intense Atlantic hurricane of all time, an unnamed storm that killed 408 people in the Florida Keys 45 years ago.

And forecasters at the National Hurricane Center here said Allen, already the second strongest Atlantic hurricane on record, could surpass the 1935 Keys storm as it absorbs more warm water crossing the Gulf in the next few days.

"It's sure got the potential to do that," said forecaster Bob Pifer. "But even if it doesn't pick up any more strength, it's already near a record strength and should be able to maintain that position. It shouldn't lose anything."

As it grazed Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula, Allen was compared to the 10 deadliest and costliest storms ever to hit the United States. Though it hasn't yet become a U.S. storm, forecasters said Allen likely could make its landfall along the western Gulf coast.

The huge 1935 storm grew to a super hurricane in the 145 miles between the Bahamas and the Florida Keys.

As it crossed the Florida Straits, its central barometric pressure — the driving force that sucks wind in from the outside — dropped to 892 millibars and its winds whirled at about 200 mph, according to records at the Hurricane Center.

Allen's pressure fell to 899 millibars Thursday, surpassing the 909-millibar reading of the second most intense storm on record, Hurricane Camille, which devastated the Louisiana and Mississippi Gulf Coasts in 1969 with winds of 175-200 mph.

All three hurricanes were category 5 storms on the Hurricane Center's 1-5 scale of storm strength.

After the 1935 Florida Keys hurricane and Camille, here are the most intense Atlantic storms to strike the United States:

—1919, unnamed, Florida Keys and South Texas, 927 millibars, 600-900 deaths.

—1928, unnamed, Lake Okeechobee, Fla., 929 millibars, 1,836 deaths.

—1960, Donna, 930 millibars, 50 deaths.

—1900, unnamed, Galveston, Texas, 931 millibars, 6,000 deaths.

—1909, unnamed, Grand Isle, La., 931 millibars, 350 deaths.

—1915, unnamed, New Orleans, 931 millibars, 275 deaths.

—1961, Carla, Texas, 931 millibars, 46 deaths.

—1926, unnamed, Miami, 931 millibars, 243 deaths.

But the strongest of these monstrous ocean storms aren't always the biggest killers, depending on how much warning residents have and what precautions they take, forecasters say.

The deadliest U.S. hurricane from the Atlantic, the Caribbean and the Gulf was the 1900 Galveston storm when 6,000 drowned in high tides.

The Hurricane Center, a U.S. government agency, doesn't keep detailed records of Atlantic storms that don't strike the Unided States. But Hurricane Fifi killed about 8,000 people in Honduras in 1974 and Hurricane Flora took 5,000 lives in Hajti and another 1,000 in Cuba in 1963.

Last year's Frederic caused the most property damage of any U.S. hurricane. Its toll along the Mississippi, Alabama and Florida Gulf Coast was $2.3 billion. As inflation raises property values and coastal areas are developed, weaker storms do more damage, forecasters noted.

After Frederic, here are the 10 costliest U.S. hurricanes:

—1972, Agnes, Northeastern states, $2.1 billion.

—1969, Camille, Mississippi and Louisiana, $1,420,700,000.

—1965, Betsy, Florida and Louisiana, $1,420,500,000.

—1955, Diane, Northeastern states, $831.7 million.

—1975, Eloise, Northwest Florida and Puerto Rico, $550 million.

—1954, Carol, Northeastern states, $461 million.

—1970, Celia, South Texas, $453 million.

—1961, Carla, Texas, $408 million.

—1960, Donna, Florida and U.S. East Coast, $387 million.

—1938, unnamed, New England, $306 million.

Midlanders should cancel plans for trip to coast

By KAY CRITES
Staff Writer

As Hurricane Allen continues to churn its way toward the United States, Midland can do nothing but wait and be prepared should the storm strike the Texas coast.

At 10:51 a.m. today, a Midland ham operator reported that, according to a bulletin broadcast over the ham radio system this morning, hotel and motel rooms from the coast north past San Antonio were filled as people began evacuating the coastal area.

"The cars are all coming this way, and anyone going that way will not get a room," he said.

He also reported Hurricane Allen was headed directly for the mouth of the Rio Grande River and currently extended 600 miles down into Mexico. "They're batt[illegible]ng down all the way to Lake Cha[illegible]es, (La.)," the radio operator said, "and that includes, of course, the Texas coast. I just think it's important that no one go down there right now."

Major airlines out of Midland Regional Airport reported this morning that Hurricane Allen had not affected their flights, so far, but that all were receiving numerous calls requesting information on the hurricane.

Southwest Airlines even added reports on the storm and its effect on flights to their reservations recording used when all travel agents are busy.

Several travel agencies in town are also receiving calls from clients, and a few cancellations of bookings to the coast and particularly Mexico.

"Our best advice," said a spokesman at Allegra Travel Agency, "if you're flying to the coast, is call the airline your reservation is on and ask them if they know anything."

One Midland travel agent said, "I wouldn't advise going down there right now, myself, but as far as hearing anything, we haven't."

The sentiments were echoed by a Lones Travel Agent. "Everything's going all right. Tomorrow may be a different story."

Capt. B.F. Wade, deputy commander of the Midland Highway Patrol district, said the Department of Public Safety office here is on stand by.

"We're on stand by alert, mainly so see what's going to happen, and that's all we're doing right now. If it hits, we feel we will be called into duty at the coast. If the major says we need 50 (figurative number) men to move east, in a very short time we could go.

"If it hits, we do feel reasonably sure we will have to go in either immediately to help them or in a relief basis. After they've been down there days or even weeks, they're going to need someone to relieve them."

The Red Cross has its disaster vehicle, used to feed workers at disaster sites, on stand by, and the Midland Salvation Army canteen is ready to go at a moment's notice, along with volunteers.

The Salvation Army headquarters is establishing a command post in Corpus Christi and has established emergency disaster canteens in the Corpus Christi area with an additional seven canteens on stand by in the Gulf Coast area.

Allen rates rare danger status

MIAMI (AP) — All hurricanes are dangerous, but the National Hurricane Center says Allen is extremely so because it has achieved rare "category 5" status — the highest rating a storm can get.

To make storm comparisons easier and to make the predicted danger clearer to emergency forces, forecasters use a Saffir-Simpsón "disaster potential" scale which assigns storms to one of five categories.

Category 1 is a minimal hurricane, with a central barometric pressure of 980 millibars or more and winds speeds of 74 to 95 mph.

Category 5 is the worst possible case, with a central pressure of less than 920 and winds of more than 155 mph.

There have been only three category 5 Atlantic storms on record and Allen is the second most powerful of the two, having already had a central pressure of 899. The strongest, the Labor Day Hurricane of 1935, swept across the Florida Keys with a barometric pressure of 892. The third strongest, Camille, had an interior pressure of 909 when it slammed into Mississippi and Louisiana in 1969.

The rating scale is named after two former forecasters who devised it.

Search for copter may be resumed

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — While more offshore oil rig workers came ashore as a precaution against Hurricane Allen, the Coast Guard was deciding whether to resume its search for possible survivors of a crash of an evacuation helicopter.

Thirteen people were aboard the helicopter when it went down Wednesday night in the storm-tossed Gulf of Mexico, about 60 miles southwest of Houma, La.

Four bodies and scraps of wreckage were recovered Thursday. The identities of those known dead were not released immediately.

Petty Officer Kenneth Wink said ships and aircraft stopped searching at sundown Thursday and were awaiting word whether to resume.

The southern Gulf of Mexico was being churned by winds from Hurricane Allen, which was more than 500 south of Louisiana, when the 58-foot, 9,500-pound Air Logistics helicopter went down while evacuating workers from an oil production platform.

Five of the passengers worked for Ocean Drilling and Exploration Co. and seven worked for companies servicing the ODECO platform.

Some 650 ODECO workers were being evacuated today, said spokesman Al Spindler.

Evacuations from drilling rigs and producing platforms also were underway by Amoco, Chevron USA, Gulf Oil Co. and Shell Oil Co.

Cowboy hats fashionable

By DEAN GOLEMBESKI
AP Writer

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — Just like in an old Western movie, a hero has ridden out of the West to save one of the oldest industries in the place once known as the Hat City because of its No.1 factory product.

Except this time, the good guys and gals aren't wearing just white cowboy hats, they're wearing cowboy hats of a variety of colors, shapes and designs.

Cowboy hats, once considered proper attire only in the West or on the movie sets of Hollywood, have become fashionable everywhere, even in the urban East.

The clothing industry is pushing the Western look for men and women this fall, complete with cowboy boots, leather vests, fringed leather jackets — and cowboy hats.

The sales boom in cowboy hats parallels a resurgence of interest in Western movies from Hollywood. And to fit Eastern tastes, hat makers, like auto makers, are offering "downsized" versions of traditional hat designs.

The sudden popularity of cowboy attire has given Danbury Hat Co., a subsidiary of the famous Stetson Hat Co. of St. Joseph, Mo., a transfusion.

"We expect to make 60,000 dozen hats this year," says Don Rafferty, the plant's general manager. That figures out to 720,000 hats.

The upturn at its only remaining hat factory has produced a small booom in this western Connecticut city 70 miles from New York.

"We can't make enough. We turn away business daily. The recession has not affected us a bit right now," Rafferty said.

The plant is the sole survivor among more than 35 hat factories that operated in Danbury as recently as the early 1960s. It makes the hat bodies that are then shipped to the main plant in Missouri for final shaping.

"The hardest part is making the body," said Rafferty. He explained that a variety of rabbit, hare and beaver fur must be sorted, cleaned and then blended in different weights and colors before being made into a hat.

Making the hat body "is a very skilled, laborious type job," he said. "There are not that many people who can make hat bodies."

The company's 170 employees are a mixture of young and old, and some have been with the company for as long as 50 years, he said.

Today, Danbury Hat Co. is all that remains, and it is not the original Danbury Hat Co., but an offspring of Mallory Hat Co. It still occupies the Mallory factory, parts of which were built in 1851. Stetson acquired the company in 1967.

In addition to the well-known Stetson cowboy hat line, priced from $50 to $200, the company still makes a dress hat. But the popularity of that hat is on the decline, Rafferty said.

Part of the reason may be that a new, lighter, smaller cowboy hat designed for Eastern customers, has "really taken off and may replace the conventional hat sometime," Rafferty said.

"Some feel out of place with the big hat in the East," he explained.

The traditional hats have a 4-inch brim and a 7-inch crown. The downsized version has a 3-inch brim and a 5½-inch crown, he said.

In the late 1960s and early 1970s, the company was at its low point, making about 40,000 dozen hats a year and watching the other hat factories close down.

Had the company gone below 40,000 dozen, Rafferty said, "We would have been in trouble."

But what prevented the company from going under, he said, was that "the cowboy never gave up on the hat."

What's cooking?

Sherry McDonnold, 4615 Pleasant, makes scrumptious, melt-in-your-mouth, cinnamon rolls.

"I've been baking bread steadily for about two years—it started turning out well after I moved here," she said. "I guess I got better with practice."

Her husband Mike, a production engineer for Chevron, and daughters Jamie, 3, and Stacy, 7 months, didn't mind eating the results of her experiments, though.

"Baking bread isn't really that hard after you try it the first few times," she insists. "After you work out the yeast problem, then it's easy."

"I like to try new recipes, but mostly I am just into trying new bread recipes," she says. She has several tips for making successful bread: Never use outdated yeast, make sure yeast is at room temperature and soften yeast in lukewarm water at least 10 minutes.

STANDARD ROLL DOUGH

1 1/2 cup scalded milk
1/2 cup sugar
2 tsp. salt
1/4 cup shortening
2 pkg. yeast (dissolved in 1/2 cup warm water)
2 beaten eggs
5-6 cups flour

Place shortening and milk in double-boiler and scald. Let this mixture cool. Mix sugar, salt and eggs together in large bowl. Slowly pour cooled milk mixture into egg mixture. Pour in softened yeast. Slowly add flour. Knead until you have a smooth dough. Let rise once. (About 1 1/2 hours). Shape either into dinner rolls or cinnamon rolls. Let rise again. (About 1 hour). Bake at 375 degrees for 10-15 minutes.

CINNAMON ROLLS

Divide dough into four equal portions. Roll each portion into a 12-inch circle on floured surface. Spread with softened butter. Sprinkle with cinnamon sugar mixture. Cut into wedges (triangle shaped). Roll from large end to small end to form crescent-shaped roll. Let rise, then bake. While warm, brush with a glaze.

GLAZE:

Mix 1 cup powdered sugar, 1 tablespoon milk until glaze is smooth and of desired consistency.

Reroofing cost is relative

Although cost will be a consideration when reroofing, the Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association says low initial cost sometimes costs more in the long run.

A roofing material that offers a longer design life may be more expensive initially than a lesser grade of roofing, but may be less costly in the long run by providing added years of service.

Duct systems save energy

The cost of energy is one of the most important items people think about when shopping for a home. If forced air heating or central air conditioning is included, look for fiberglass duct systems, advises the Thermal Insulation Manufacturers Association. Fiberglass duct systems are free of condensation and noise. Since they are self-insulating, heating and cooling consumes less energy.

Utility may refuse hookups

A new rule expected to take effect early next year gives a utility the right to refuse to serve new homes or commercial buildings that lack adequate insulation.

Pennsylvania Power & Light Co. estimates it would cost about $1,700 to insulate a new home to meet its standards.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Ever gum up the wash?

DEAR HELOISE:

When doing the laundry, I found a piece of bubble gum was inadvertently left in the pocket of a pair of blue jeans.

If you have ever seen a pair of wet, just-washed jeans with melted bubble gum stuck to them, you know the panicky feeling I was experiencing. They looked as though the child had run into stretchy cement.

Not only was just one pair affected but almost the entire load of jeans.

Try to remove gum by just pulling if off? Not a chance, and I was afraid rewashing would only spread the gum and make it worse.

Spotting my can of prewash stain remover, I sprayed each glob of gum and let the jeans sit for a few minutes. Then I scraped all of the gum off easily with a dull knife blade.

I resprayed the spots to be on the safe side, then rewashed the jeans.

They turned out good as new with no trace of the sticky bubble gum remaining.

The moral of the story? Check your child's pockets carefully before washing. You never know what those pocketed treasures will do to a load of laundry. — Helen Overton

+ + +

Or to Mom's nerves! This same prewash spray will remove gum from carpets and upholstery BUT it may circle some fabrics, so be careful.

Do not use it on your child's hair, though, as the spray has a petroleum base which might be absorbed through the skin. Use plain baby oil for this.

Thanks for your solution to a sticky problem — Hugs. Heloise

LETTER OF THOUGHT

DEAR HELOISE:

The following is not a big deal — just a small favor for a person you may never see...

When shopping for fruits and vegetables, peel the plastic bags down, take one off, and leave one hanging part way so it will be easy for the next person to reach.

These bags have a tendency to stick together and the beginning of the next bag is hard to find sometimes. — R.S.

Consultant sees land major housing factor

Pressure for affordable housing for 25 to 35-year-old buyers along with increased commuting costs will make skipped-over urban parcels a major part of the housing market in the 1980s, says a real estate management consultant. Large increases in older buyers who need to be near transportation, services and security, adds the consultant, point to development of such parcels.

Know difference

If you're renting out your home while trying to sell it, be careful. Usually, you have 18 months after selling a home to defer capital gains tax by putting the gain into another house. If you've rented the house for more than a year, however, the Internal Revenue Service will disallow the tax deferral treating it instead as an investment.

Leasing land spurs sales

Leasing land is the newest wrinkle in an effort to spur sales of new homes. By purchasing the house and leasing the land from developers, homebuyers save about 25 percent on their downpayment and can apply the monthly lease payments toward the eventual purchase of the land. Developers, in turn, attract more buyers.

DEAR ABBY

Trouble ahead for her

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

TROUBLE AHEAD FOR "SEXY" 7-YEAR-OLD

DEAR ABBY: Have you ever heard of a sexy 7-year-old? My sister has one. Her daughter, Linda, is the sexiest kid you'll ever see. She's rather shy around women, but she flirts and climbs all over every man she sees. She doesn't have to know him very well, either. I've seen her act this way with strangers. She's such an affectionate little thing, I worry about her.

Linda is an only child. Her parents were divorced when she was 2, and she hasn't seen her father since. My sister is soured on men and hasn't had a man in her life since Linda's father took off.

Abby, what would make a 7-year-old act like this? And how can I help? I'm so afraid her actions will get her into trouble one day.--CONCERNED AUNT

DEAR CONCERNED: It's natural for little girls who have been ignored or neglected by their fathers to reach out for male attention and approval from any man who's handy. Share your concern with your sister and urge her to get counseling for Linda. Early therapy could avert a tendency toward sexual promiscuity later.

DEAR ABBY: My husband had a vasectomy four months ago, and I just found out that I am pregnant!

My husband, in an absolute rage, went immediately to the doctor who performed his vasectomy. The doctor reminded my husband that he had been instructed to return for a test to determine the success of the operation, but my husband got busy, got the flu, had to leave town on business, and he never did get back for the test. Finally he decided it wasn't really necessary so he just skipped it. Naturally, he can't very well blame the doctor.

I understand that once in a blue moon a vasectomy fails, so please do your readers a favor and tell them that after a man has had a vasectomy, he should go back for that test before he takes any foolish chances.--BLUE MOONSTRUCK

DEAR BLUE: All chances are foolish. But some chances are more foolish than others.

Brilab shows 'sting' plan

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Houston city councilmen were targeted for $10,000 payments from undercover FBI agents following a changeover in the city's employee insurance contract, according to sworn statements contained in a defense motion for two Brilab defendants.

The affidavits, filed Thursday by lawyers for Austin attorneys Randall B. Wood and Donald W. Ray, detail a plan by federal agents to see if councilmen Homer Ford and Jim Westmoreland would accept two $5,000 payments.

Former city council member Frank Mann also was to receive money following the council's approval last December of a contract with Prudential Insurance Co., according to sworn depositions from agents.

However, the documents do not show if the payments were ever made.

One sworn statement said "even though the contract has been awarded by the city council, Westmoreland, Mann and Ford have not been paid yet.

"The undercover agents plan to make future trips to Houston to pay the $10,000 in $5,000 installments," according to the affidavit.

The statements were contained in a defense motion to suppress wiretapping evidence against Wood and Ray.

Texas House Speaker Billy Clayton and Deer Park labor leader L.G. Moore, Ray and Wood were indicted by a federal grand jury June 12 on charges of extortion, racketeering, fraud and conspiracy in connection with an investigation into alleged insurance kickbacks.

Agents investigating the case concluded it was "necessary to continue electronic surveillance of L.G. Moore's telephones to learn the details of the payments and to obtain evidence regarding the involvement of City Councilmen Westmoreland, Mann and Ford in this conspiracy," according to the documents.

The affidavits also described an investigation into possible activities by Moore and Houston Port Commissioner John Garrett involving an insurance contract for the International Longshoreman's Association.

Moore also was under scrutiny in another investigation concerning an insurance plan for the Harris County Hospital District, the documents indicated.

Afghans fight over limited gasoline supply

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Afghan troops have been called to maintain order among taximen, bus drivers, private motorists and even military chauffeurs competing for the limited supply of gasoline in Kabul, the Afghan capital, a Western diplomatic report said today.

Some fistfights have broken out at the gas pumps where individual purchases have been limited to five liters (1½ gallons) for the past seven days, the report added. No formal rationing has been announced.

All but one survive crash

NOUAKCHOTT, Mauritania (AP) — Investigators are still trying to determine what caused a Romanian jetliner to plunge into the Atlantic off this West African nation and how 171 of the 172 people aboard managed to survive.

Thirteen of the survivors were injured, four gravely, including the pilot, but only one person died in the accident and the rest "are in good health," officials said.

First reports said 160 people were killed in the crash Thursday, but that figure was later revised by officials. There was no immediate explanation of how the first figure was obtained.

The jetliner was carrying 18 crew members and 154 Romanian fishermen due to relieve crews aboard fishing vessels in the Atlantic when it plunged into the sea.

It was approaching the airport at Nouadhibou, Mauritania's principal port, with no sign the pilot had made a distress signal, the official Mauritanian news agency said.

However, an official of the French airline UTA said that for unexplained reasons the plane dipped to the right on approach.

The plane went down three miles short of the runway and about 1,000 feet from the coast. The weather was described as acceptable, with a normal wind and visibility of 2.4 miles.

A Mauritanian navy vessel and two trawelers rushed to the scene and plucked some of the survivors from the water, while others swam ashore.

You can train a parrot to speak, but you cannot teach it when to use its vocabulary. Some bridge players seem to suffer from a similar disability.

Early in his career, the bridge player is taught that, at no trump contracts, it is usually unwise to win the ace of the suit led by the enemy if that is his only stopper in the suit. It pays to hold up winning the trick in an attempt to exhaust one of the defenders of his cards in that suit. Sterling advice, to which we can take no exception—when the time is right. But refusing to win tricks indiscriminately ultimately leads to poverty.

The modern tendency is to rebid one heart with the South hand. However, we have no objection to his refusal to introduce a suit that is not really biddable, and the final contract was normal.

West led his fourth-best heart, and declarer, heeding the old advice, ducked in dummy. East won the queen and forced out the ace. Declarer had only eight running tricks—he had to set up a diamond for his contract. But when West took the ace of diamonds, he still had three hearts to cash for down one.

"I didn't win the first heart because I was hoping that East held only two hearts and the ace of diamonds," commented South. His reasoning was good as far as it went, but it didn't go far enough. By simply winning the ace of hearts at the first trick, he could have guaranteed the contract no matter who held the ace of diamonds.

If West held only four hearts, the contract was unbeatable. The defenders could get no more than three heart tricks and the ace of diamonds.

The holding to fear would be if West held five hearts and East, two. In this case, however, East must have one of the missing heart honors, for if West held all the heart honors, he would have led the king, not low. The play of the ace, therefore, would block the suit and the contract would be safe.

Democrats jockey for final drive

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy shifts his command post to this convention city today to spur his final drive to convince Democratic delegates to repudiate President Carter and turn to the Massachusetts senator as the party's salvation.

Kennedy supporters planned a Park Avenue rally to greet their candidate.

President Carter planned to wait until Wednesday, the day the convention will vote on the presidential nomination, before heading for New York, but he was heavily involved in lobbying delegates.

Both camps maneuvered for advantage, each trying their best to convince delegates they were the winning side.

Kennedy let it be known he had ordered work begun on his speech accepting the presidential nomination.

Carter's campaign chairman, Robert Strauss, let it be known that if the president wins the rules fight on Monday, the opening night of the Democratic convention, there is no chance he will release his delegates to vote however they want on the presidential ballot.

"There is no possibility of releasing them after the vote, none whatsoever," said Strauss, who had said on Wednesday that he wouldn't rule out such a move, which had been mentioned as a possible conciliatory gesture.

Carter picked up the endorsement Thursday of the United Steel Workers of America, which is holding its convention in Los Angeles It is the last major union to take sides in the presidential race.

In Washington, sources said that the political arm of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, its so-called Political Action Committee, will endorse GOP nominee Ronald Reagan for president the week after the Democratic convention. Reagan planned to spend the week of the convention off the campaign trail.

Independent candidate John B. Anderson campaigned in Pittsburgh on Thursday and predicted that Carter would be the Democratic nominee.

After hinting earlier that he might drop his own effort if someone other than carter is nominated, he said Thursday that no matter what happens in New York, "I am going to stay in the race."

Carter addressed the steelworkers' convention in by telephone hookup and, ignoring the battle within his own party and sounding like a presidential nominee, he said he and Vice President Walter F. Mondale would spend the coming weeks trying to "make the Republicans stand up and show their colors ... They really have a lot of explaining to do. They don't really stand for much of anything that's important to this country."

Lloyd McBride, president of the 1.3 million member union, urged delegates to the USW convention to oppose the effort to break Carter's hold on a majority of the Democratic convention delegates.

"Pragmatically, it is just not in the interest of this union to back an open convention," said McBride. "We ought to go with the odds and the odds right now are very heavily weighted in favor of President Carter."

The open convention movement supported by Kennedy and other Democratic dissenters from giving Carter another term, would reject a party rule that requires delegates to abide by state primary election and convention results on the first ballot of the presidential voting.

Carter is assured a majority on the presidential ballot if the rule is upheld since he has some 300 more delegates than the 1,666 required for nomination.

The rule permits presidential candidates to replace any delegate who tries to vote for a candidate other than the one he was elected to support.

Party Chairman John C. White told reporters Thursday that a method would be worked out to avoid any need for ejecting balky delegates from the floor.

"Nobody is going to be taken from the convention floor," said White. "We're not crazy."

While the maneuvering on the rules fight has dominated attention the week before the convention, representatives of Carter and Kennedy continued to negotiate reductions in the number of fights on other issues.

Party officials said the Kennedy camp has dropped all of its challenges to the credentials of delegates and that five minority reports on platform planks have been settled, leaving 18 more to be debated on Tuesday.

Convention manager William P. Dixon said he thought four or five more minority planks on the platform would be taken care of before Tuesday.

Anderson says he plans to continue, regardless

CLEVELAND (AP) — Eight days ago, independent president candidate John B. Anderson was asked what he would do if Sen. Edward M.Kennedy became the presidential nominee of next week's Democratic National Convention.

Anderson said he fully expected President Carter to be the choice of the Democrats but "should a different decision emerge ... it would only be prudent for one like myself who believes in the two-party system to consider what my position there would be."

Now, after fielding insistent questions about an apparent alliance with Kennedy, Anderson is saying that even if Kennedy pulls a dramatic political upset and wins nomination, "I am not going to withdraw from the race."

Events since Anderson met with the Massachusetts senator in Kennedy's Washington office last week exemplify Andersons' tightrope role as a Republican and an independent candidate who must seek Democratic votes if he is to present a serious election challenge.

While his meeting with Kennedy drew network television coverage and was front page news, some his strongest supporters and major fund raisers were disillusioned with his discusssion with a Democratic liberal.

So, over the last week, Anderson has been steadily putting distance between himself and Kennedy, although in reality he still needs to draw support from the senator's backers whom he hopes will be firmly disillusioned by the likely renomination of the president.

At a news conference in Pittsburgh on Thursday, Anderson said no matter what occurs in the Democratic convention next week, "I have no intention of withdrawing."

Should Kennedy mend his fences with Carter and endorse the president, Anderson said, "It won't affect my campaign. I'm just going to plow ahead and attract those people without his help."

That contrasts with Anderson's statements early this week when he indicated that if Kennedy were not nominated, he would seek to meet with him and seek his help for Anderson's own independent candidacy.

Last week's meeting with Kennedy, Anderson said on Thursday, "was an effort to indicate that I want to reach out to people in the Democratic Party as well as in the Republican Party and independents to provide support for this campaign."

Later he said, "What's wrong with going to a prominent member of the Democratic Party and saying, 'If you are not nominated, I want some support.'"

Continuing, he said, "There are 22 percent of the people in this country who are Republicans. I'm not going to be elected with Republican votes as an independent. I've got to have some Democratic votes."

Despite Anderson's protestations, the progress of next week's convention is conceded by those close to Anderson to be critical to the success of his independent effort.

They say that if the Democratic convention ends in harmony, that would be disastrous for Anderson because he would likely be unable to find a vice presidential running mate among seriously disaffected Kennedy supporters, or to locate important endorsements from among the senator's former backers.

More importantly, if Kennedy gives an apparently full-fledged endorsement to Carter, that will deny Anderson the votes of millions of Americans who backed the Massachusetts senator.

Communists close door on Maryland Democrats

BALTIMORE (AP).— Police had to help open the Maryland Democratic Party headquarters here Thursday after plywood was nailed over the entrance and the door was glued shut, authortities said.

Anti-Democratic Party slogans were spray-painted on the front building and about two dozen people carrying banners and identifying themselves as members of the Communist Workers Party set up a picket line, police spokesman Mike Bass said.

No arrests were made because authorities do not know who did the painting and nailed up the plywood, Bass said.

Officers of three police units helped open the office door, which had been glued shut and covered with two pieces of plywood nailed into the door jam, he said.

VFW reported to be ready to endorse GOP's Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The political arm of the Veterans of Foreign Wars soon will formally endorse Republican Ronald Reagan for president, VFW sources say.

This will be the first time any major veterans organization has taken an overtly partisan stand in a presidential race.

The VFW claims membership of 2.5 million men and women, including its Ladies Auxiliary.

To avoid risking its tax-exempt status, the VFW last year created a separate Political Action Committee to back candidates it regards as supporting a strong national defense and legislation benefiting veterans.

Demo convention aimed at two-hour settlement

By WALTER R. MEARS

NEW YORK (AP) — The Democratic National Convention opens on Monday with an attempt to settle in two hours the six-month struggle between President Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy over the party's presidential nomination.

Carter's political fate, and the final, longshot hopes of a Kennedy comeback, hang on opening day. Everything that really counts could be settled before dark, if the Democrats manage to stick to their negotiated schedule.

In marked contrast to the tidily programmed Republican convention that nominated Ronald Reagan for president, contentious Democrats are wrangling over almost every line of their Madison Square Garden convention script.

IT WAS WEDNESDAY before they managed to put together the program for the first convention session on Monday, and that still has some holes in it. That's because Kennedy, defeated on paper, hasn't given up, and because Carter, in command of an apparent delegate majority, says he does not plan to compromise on what has become the key test of their strength.

The issue: a rule that would compel delegates to vote for presidential candidates in accord with the instructions of the primary elections or state party caucuses that selected them.

If the rule is adopted, Carter affirms his lock on the nomination.

A defeat on that rule wouldn't automatically be Carter's undoing, but it could be. For it would free all the delegates from candidate commitments, opening the convention to a revival of the Kennedy challenge, and also to the possibility that compromise candidates might emerge — people like Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, Sen. Henry Jackson, even Vice President Walter Mondale.

NEGOTIATORS FOR CARTER and for Kennedy agreed to put the climactic rules fight up front, with the issue to be settled on prime time television. Their deal calls for an hour's debate beginning at 6:30 p.m., with the vote to follow immediately.

That means that before the traditional opening ceremonies and speechmaking, the Democrats will know whether they have a fight in store or a sure winner of the presidential nomination they will bestow Wednesday night.

Carter now has 320 delegates more than he needs to win renomination. It takes 1,666 votes to fashion a majority; there are 1,986 in his column. Kennedy has 1,234. An additional 111 are pledged to neither contestant.

Once the rules vote is out of the way, the Democrats are to stage their convention "grand opening," with welcoming speeches and then the keynote address by Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona.

TUESDAY'S CONVENTION agenda will be dominated by debate on the Democratic platform, with Kennedy allies determined to test Carter strength on an assortment of economic issues. They will, for example, press for a plank advocating wage and price controls to combat inflation, a step Carter opposes.

Altogether, the convention is to spend two hours on the economic planks. It isn't clear how much longer it will take to deal with the balance of the document, but Democrats do have a habit of arguing long past midnight.

The Democrats are to vote Wednesday on presidential nominees, unless the negotiated schedule comes undone. Carter's name is to be placed in nomination by Florida Gov. Robert Graham; Kennedy's by Rep. Barbara Mikulski of Maryland.

ON THURSDAY, the traditional convention schedule calls for vice presidential nomination, then the acceptance speeches of the presidential nominee and his running mate. Douglas Fraser, president of the United Auto Workers Union, is due to present Mondale's name for vice presidential renomination. But first, Fraser, long a Kennedy supporter, is campaigning for the "open convention."

That's the way the convention schedule is supposed to go. But just in case, the Democrats have had tickets printed for a fifth-day Friday. They'll probably finish on time — but that, like almost everything else that happens in New York next week, hinges on the outcome of the rules fight that comes first.

Here's the rule Carter wants ratified and Kennedy wants rejected:

"All delegates to the national convention shall be bound to vote for the presidential candidate whom they were elected to support for at least the first convention ballot, unless released in writing by the presidential candidate. Delegates who seek to violate this rule may be replaced with an alternate of the same presidential preference by the presidential candidate or that candidate's authorized representative at any time up to and including the presidential balloting at the national convention."

That means that a defecting delegate could be dismissed by order of the candidate he was supposed to support. Kennedy and his "open convention" allies argue that delegates pledged to Carter months ago shouldn't be compelled to vote for him under today's altered circumstances. They cite economic woes, unyielding foreign policy probems and public opinion polls that rank Carter far behind Reagan in the preference of the voters.

KENNEDY WAS DUE in New York Friday to take charge of his convention campaign from a political command post at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel. Carter is expected to arrive next Wednesday.

Carter argues that the Kennedy people don't want an open convention, they want a brokered convention because they lost the nomination in the primary elections. Carter won 24 primaries, Kennedy 10.

"My position is that the convention ought not to be a brokered convention but that they delegates should vote the way the voters back home told them to vote," Carter said.

He also said that pledges, not polls, should be the decisive factor.

The pollsters' numbers are uniformly bad for Carter, but he said polls go up and down.

They're down now. The latest national surveys rate Reagan the preferred candidate by margins as wide as 27 percentage points.

CARTER HAS NOT ruled out the possibility of compromise on the delegate binding rule, but his spokesmen suggest that any easing of his stand would come only after Monday's convention vote.

"Anything is possible," said Robert S. Strauss, the Carter campaign chairman. I don't rule out anything."

"We intend to win this fight," said White House Press Secretary Jody Powell. He did not foreclose the possibility that Carter might later release his delegates in a unity gesture. He could afford to do that if his side won on the rule, and so proved that his nominating majority will stick with him. His delegates are not bound to follow instructions on the rules, the platform or other convention business, only on the nomination itself.

Paul Kirk, political director for Kennedy, claimed the challenger has the votes to release the delegates. Kirk said he thinks Carter will shy from the fight before there is a vote. "Rather than take a loss on the floor they will yield on the issue," he said.

SEN. GEORGE McGOVERN of South Dakota, the 1972 Democratic nominee, is to be the leadoff speaker in favor of the "open convention" rules change. In his own campaign eight years ago, McGovern hotly denounced an effort by his rivals to change rules at the last minute and take away a bloc of delegates he won in the California presidential primary.

Sen. Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut said he'd be the "point man" in Carter's behalf. Ribicoff said it would smack of "cabals and conspiracies" to free the delegates of their commitments now.

As part of their deal on the convention schedule, the Carter and Kennedy campaigns also came up with a joint statement vowing that once the fights are over, the Democrats will unite.

Oil refiners to hold hikes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two oil refiners have agreed to hold down price increases in August and September to atone for exceeding federal profit guidelines in the third quarter of 1979, the Council on Wage and Price Stability announced today.

The council said Kern County Refinery of Bakersfield, Calif., will forego $8.2 million in profits and Cities Service Co. of Tulsa, Okla., will give up $6.2 million in profits.

The companies will raise prices less than they could have in order to offset the "excesses" in July, August and September last year.

The council, which administers the government's voluntary wage and price guidelines, said both companies had raised prices more than the guidelines would allow.

Kip Viscusi, deputy director of the council, said the agreements will raise to $72 million the amount that oil refiners have consented to turn back to consumers.

"The council is carefully scrutinizing petroleum industry data and will continue its efforts to win industry cooperation with the anti-inflation effort," Viscusi said in a statement.

On April 18, Kern County Refinery was found in noncompliance with the council's regulation that limits refiners' gross profits. The council agreed to let the company use the profit-limitation provision rather than the margin standard, but still found Kern exceeded allowable profits.

Cities Service was found to be out of compliance on Jan. 16 but contended the council's rules conflicted with those of the Department of Energy, according to the council. The federal agency rejected that point on grounds Cities Service failed to show it could not comply with both rules.

Earlier this year, Mobil Oil Corp. agreed to forego $30 million in profits; Phillips Petroleum, $8.8 million, and Kerr-McGee Corp., $19.5 million, to make up for what the council called earlier excessive profits.

New area recommended

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Bureau of Land Management officials have recommended that limited gas and oil drilling be allowed in the scenic Red Rock Canyon area.

The BLM said Wednesday its recommendation calls for limited, restricted drilling around the edges of the 62,000-acre area nestled against the Spring Mountain foothills west of Las Vegas.

No drilling will be permitted in a core area of the canyon, which includes most of the scenic attractions the thousands of tourists visiting the area come for.

A number of oil companies, including Chevron, have applied for drilling leases in the area, which is believed to be on or near the "Overthrust Belt," a wide area ranging from Montana to Nevada that may contain oil reserves.

A final decision on whether the leases will be granted, however, will not be made until after Sept. 8 by state BLM chief Ed Spang.

The BLM recommendation comes in the face of opposition of local citizens who contend the drilling will damage the fragile area. A total of 2,222 citizens responded in opposition to all drilling during public hearings last November, while 297 residents said they favored drilling.

Last month, BLM spokesman Ed Ciliberti said in Las Vegas that the agency fears oil companies may go to court unless some drilling is approved.

Saudi Arabia considering increasing crude oil prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Saudi Arabia, the largest foreign supplier of oil to the United States, reportedly is considering raising its crude oil price by as much as 12.5 percent, a move that could cost U.S. consumers as much as 2 cents a gallon in higher fuel prices.

A trade newspaper, Platt's Oilgram News, said Thursday the price could be increased from $28 a barrel to $32 a barrel in two steps, with a $2-a-barrel increase coming as early as mid-month.

While the report could not be confirmed by spokesmen for American companies purchasing oil from the Saudis, a U.S. government source who asked anonymity said a price increase "is possible."

The increase would come in spite of a surplus of oil on world markets following more than a year and a half of price boosts by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The Saudi proposals were seen by some analysts as a new step by OPEC's largest member toward bringing order to the cartel's oftenchaotic price system. Each of the cartel's 13 members has been setting whatever price it wishes for its oil, a departure from previous unity. The Saudi price has been below the average price charged by OPEC members.

The newspaper, quoting an unidentified "reliable industry source," said four members of Saudi Arabia's Supreme Petroleum Council are pressing for a $2-a-barrel increase, to $30, this month and another $2 boost in November. Three other members — including the oil minister, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani — were said to favor a single $4 increase to $32 in the fourth quarter.

A final decision on any price increase would be made by the Saudi Crown Prince Fahd, the paper said.

Saudi Arabia sent nearly 1.4 million barrels of oil a day to the United States in the first four months of 1980, equivalent to nearly 20 percent of U.S. oil imports, the Energy Department says. There are 42 gallons in a barrel.

A $2-a-barrel Saudi price increase could add about a penny to U.S. retail gasoline or heating oil prices. A $4-a-barrel increase could raise fuel prices by about 2 cents.

The newspaper also said Saudi Arabia would reduce crude oil output to 8.5 million barrels a day on Jan. 1 from the current 9.5 million-a-day level.

OPEC in June set $32 a barrel, which also is today's average OPEC price, as the recommended base price for the cartel. Saudi Arabia, whose oil price traditionally had been the benchmark on which other OPEC prices are set, kept its at the $28-a-barrel level it announced on April 1. But its price is up from $13.34 on Jan. 1, 1979.

The sharp drop in oil consumption in the United States and other industrial countries has prompted production cuts by Kuwait, Libya and Nigeria — but not by Saudi Arabia.

M-Cubs overtake Amarillo for exciting victory

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

The Midland Cubs demonstrated for the second night in a row the difference between the club that is contending for the second half Texas League West pennant and the club that langiushed hopelessly in the cellar in the first half.

Down 9-6 after Amarillo rallied for five runs in the top of the eighth, the Cubs simply bludgeoned the Gold Sox with a five-run rally of their own after two were out in the home eighth to win another exciting finish, 11-9, at Cubs Stadium Thursday night.

In the first half, the Cubs never came from behind. Once they were down, they were done.

It was an eight-run eighth that did the trick Wednesday and after Thursday's win, Midland climbed back into a flat footed tie for first place with the Gold Sox. So, going into tonight's 7:30 Two Bit Beer Night game, it becomes a three-game series for first and the Cubs have Jon Perlman, 10-6, ready, probably against ex-Texas Aggie Mark Thurmond, 6-8. Only trouble is that Perlman hasn't won since July 22 when he beat Shreveport 7-1 with his last route-going performance and at San Antonio the Baylor grad was plagued by elbow stiffness.

TRAILING 9-6 after the Sox' five-run explosion in the eighth, the Cubs again looked whipped with two out and Dave Owen, who had singled, on first. When Jared Martin singled up the middle, Dan Boone, five wins, 26 saves, replaced Floyd Chiffer, which shaped up as more trouble for Midland. But the Cubs responded with singles, all run scorers, by Scott Fletcher, Tom Grant, Joe Hicks and Gary Krug, the latter plating Grant with the game-winner.

"These kids are good hitters in the clutch," enthused temporary manager Bobby Adams after his second straight comeback victory. "They really bear down."

Probably, the key hit in the rally was supplied by Grant, who went 4-for-5. Boone had whipped curve ball that broke from here to Lamesa by him to run the count to 0-2. "But Tom stayed back and got his hit and that lefty is a tough pitcher," Adams said.

Second baseman John Flannery made a diving stop of Grant's hot grounder, but couldn't recover in time to get the out and when his hurried throw went astray, Fletcher moved to third with the tying run as Martin scored. That set up Hicks' sharp single through the hole to left and then Krug beat out a grounder that Flannery managed to deflect behind second as Grant raced home from second with the go-ahead run.

Bob Blyth then mowed down the Sox in order in the ninth, notching two strikeouts along with his seventh win.

THE MENDEN, Mass., contribution to the Cubs shared big stick honors for the Cubs with Fletcher, 3-for-3 and four runs and Hicks, who powered his 19th homer, a two-run job, over the scoreboard in left in the third.

It was the second 4-for-5 night in three games for the University of New Haven pyschology major. Wednesday, he was 2-for-4 to he's 10 for his last 13 at bats and owns a six-game hitting streak.

He singled to no avail in the first, then his grounder toward first plated the first of five rbi's for the night in the third, just before Hicks unloaded his homer. In the fifth his triple chased Fletcher home and his 31st double of the season knocked in Mike O'Berry, who had singled, and Fletcher, hit-by-pitch, in the seventh.

Adams, subbing for Manager Randy Hundley, attending meetings with other managers in Chicago with other minor league pilots in the Cubs' farm system, also liked what he saw from Randy Clark, who has been wallowing in a dreadful hill slump.

He pitched into the seventh inning, his longest outing since June 11, but had allowed only five hits. "He had better control than the last time I saw him and he know what he was doing with his pitches."

Clark was tagged for two homers, but leadoff solo jobs, by Tom Vessey in the fifth and Frankie George, No. 13, to lead off the sixth. In fact, that may have been a major factor in the final score, because when John Alvarez homered in the eighth, it was the first salvo of the five-run inning, coming in the lead off spot, so the round trippers did a minimum of damage.

Cen-Tex wins title

By BOB DILLON
Sports Writer

Waco's Cen-Tex Sports is the new state champion.

The hard-hitting Central Texas team pounded out 14 hits to completely overpower the Midland Elcor Chemical Chems, 11-2, in the finals of the Texas Teen-Age Senior State Baseball Tournament Thursday night at Simon Field.

Coach Lonnie Horstman's Sports sailed through the four-day tournament undefeated and continued pounding the ball in the finals as they came up with three doubles and two triples off four Midland pitchers.

WACO HAD rapped out 10 extra base hits in the first three games of the tourney in beating Sweetwater, Victoria and Killeen and didn't let up on Alan Koonce, Terry Willis, Jay Doelling and Paul Cox in the title game.

Midland had reached the finals via a 12-0 rout of Killeen Thursday morning and Coach Harold Williams' crew got off to a great start against Scott Horstman by scoring a pair of runs in the top of the first on a double by shortstop Randy Velarde along with singles by Koonce and Mike Young. But the Chems were only able to come up with one more hit off the curve balls of Horstman the rest of the way and that was a double by Doelling, a pickup player from Odessa's Downtown Lions.

Waco wound up with 15 extra-base hits in four games and got solidpitching from Horstman, Jay Nye and Robbie Brown in going unbeaten in the tourney.

WHILE HORSTMAN was silencing Midland's bats on only four hits, he gave up five walks and struck out eight Chems and his teammates were pounding the ball all over the place with first baseman Rusty Stone, Horstman and second baseman Buddy Haney, all coming up with three hits each. Richard Gough added a pair of hits as the Sports broke open a 2-2 game in the fourth with a five-run outburst that Elcor was never ever able to overcome.

After the Chems took a 2-0 lead in the first, Waco scored single runs in the first and third to tie the game. In the first, after one was out, Haney singled, but was forced at second on a fielder's choice by Horstman. Arney Yglecias smacked a long double into left past Young's outstretched glove to make it 2-1 and in the third, Horstman tripled and scored on an error by Velarde at short.

THE ROOF caved in on Koonce in the fourth inning. Stone singled up the middle and Pat O'Neal doubled. Willis came in to face Donald Glockzin and Glockzin sacrificed the runners down on a bunt. Consecutive singles by Gough, Haney and Horstman knocked Willis off the mound and Doelling came in and was greeted by a two-run single by Yglecias. Doelling then got the next two batters on fly balls to end the uprising, but the Sports had the upper hand with a 7-2 lead.

Waco added four more runs off Doelling and Cox in the sixth inning to put the icing on the cake for the new state champions.

Key blows in the uprising were a triple by Haney and Stone's double that narrowly missed being a home run by about a foot. His double was belted off the fence in right.

Midland had an easy time with Killeen in the morning game as righthander Mark Hewitt set down the Eagles on three hits. His teammates were pounding out 11 hits while Killeen was committing five errors.

HEWITT HAD the only extra-base hit of the game, a double.

Killeen used three pitchers and the win was a sweet one for the Chems who had lost 3-1 to the Eagles in the second round of play Tuesday.

The Sports, in winning the state crown, wind up 18-4 on the year while Elcor closes out the 1980 campaign with a 14-4 record and runnerup for the second straight year in the tourney. Elcor lost to Victoria in the finals last year in Tyler, 4-0.

Baltimore closes gap

BALTIMORE (AP) — For a long time, the Baltimore Orioles were treading water in pursuit of the New York Yankees. Now it's time for the defending American League champions to sink or swim.

A 2-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox Thursday night pulled the Orioles within 5½ games of the first-place Yankees in the AL East, the closest they've been to the top since May 20.

But starting with the opener of a three-game series in New York tonight, the Orioles face the Yanks eight times in the next 11 days and play three against Kansas City's West Division leaders.

In other AL games Thursday night, the Cleveland Indians nipped the Toronto Blue Jays 7-6, the Boston Red Sox defeated the Milwaukee Brewers 7-3 and California edged Minnesota 4-2 in 15 innings.

Three routine grounders to the right side of the infield produced the first of two unearned runs and Ken Singleton's two-out double drove in the tiebreaker.

First baseman Lamar Johnson ranged far to his right for Kiko Garcia's leadoff grounder, fielding the ball in front of second baseman Jim Morrison. Johnson's throw was a bit low and when pitcher Steve Trout fell as he crossed the bag Garcia continued to second on what was scored as a throwing error.

Rich Dauer, giving himself up to advance Garcia, hit a weak tapper toward Morrison, but again Johnson fielded the ball. This time, Trout slipped on the mound and didn't even cover first. It went as a hit.

Garcia moved to third on the play and scored when Al Bumbry grounded into a double play started by an unimpeded Morrison. Rick Dempsey followed with a single and scored on Singleton's double.

Indians 7, Blue Jays 6

Bo Diaz' one-out single in the bottom of the ninth gave the Indians their fifth consecutive victory and 13th in the last 15 games. Toby Harrah walked with one out against loser Jerry Garvin. Mike Barlow relieved and yielded a looping single to Joe Charboneau, advancing Harrah to third. With the infield and outfield drawn in, Diaz lined a shot over right fielder Lloyd Moseby's head.

Red Sox 7, Brewers 3

Veteran slugger Carl Yastrzemski triggered a four-run seventh inning with a bunt single. Yastrzemski, who will be 41 in two weeks, surprised the Brewers by putting down a bunt to the left of the mound which Milwaukee pitcher Paul Mitchell was unable to handle.

Jim Rice, one of baseball's most feared sluggers although in an 0-for-10 slump, then bunted Yastrzemski to second with his first sacrifice since 1978. Dwight Evans was walked intentionally but Glenn Hoffman extended his hitting streak to 10 games with a tie-breaking single.

Angels 4, Twins 2

Rod Carew's two-out, two-run homer in the bottom of the 15th inning carried California to its fourth consecutive come-from-behind triumph and handed Minnesota its seventh straight loss.

Carew's drive into the right-center field seats came off right-hander Al Williams, 1-1, who entered the game in the 15th.

Burris fires six-hitter as Mets breeze by Expos

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

New York's Ray Burris, back after more than a month on the sidelines, and San Diego's Bob Shirley, a relative newcomer to the starting rotation, pitched their first complete games of the season Thursday.

Burris, out since July 3 with a broken thumb, fired a six-hitter as the Mets downed the Montreal Expos 7-1. It was his 18th starting assignment. Meanwhile, Shirley, making only his fourth start after working out of the bullpen until July 18, allowed only four hits as the Padres whipped the Houston Astros 5-1.

In other National Leaue action, the Pittsburgh Pirates flattened the Chicago Cubs 11-3, the Atlanta Braves edged the Los Angeles Dodgers 4-3 and the Philadelphia Phillies shaded the St. Louis Cardinals 3-2. Cincinnati and San Francisco had the day off.

Burris was pitching for Chicago against the Mets in New York when the game was suspended because of a citywide power failure and resumed on the Cubs' next visit.

This time, the Mets supplied some power in the form of home runs by Jerry Morales and Joel Youngblood off Fred Norman while Burris blanked the Expos until Rowland Office's homer in the seventh inning.

Padres 5, Astros 1

Jerry Mumphrey rapped out three hits and drove in three runs in support of Shirley's pitching as San Diego snapped a 10-game losing streak in Houston's Astrodome and a four-game skid over-all. Mumphrey drove in San Diego's first run with a third-inning single and added a two-run double in the sixth against loser Joe Niekro.

Despite the setback, the Astros maintained their half-game lead over Los Angeles in the NL West when the Dodgers also lost.

Pirates 11, Cubs 3

Bill Madlock hit a two-run homer, pitcher Eddie Solomon cracked a pair of doubles and Tim Foli drove in three runs with a double and two singles to highlight a 16-hit attack. The triumph moved the Pirates within 1½ games of first-place Montreal in the NL East.

Solomon allowed early home runs to Mike Tyson and Jesus Figueroa but then settled down and pitched his first complete game in 11 starts, scattering eight hits.

Madlock was booed heartily by the Chicago fans for knocking second baseman Steve Macko out of the game and onto the disabled list while breaking up a double play a day earlier. He responded with a single in a two-run second inning, then broke a 3-3 tie with a two-run homer in the fifth.

Braves 4, Dodgers 3

Jeff Burroughs and Bruce Benedict delivered consecutive sacrifice flies in the sixth inning to bring Atlanta from behind. The Braves began their winning rally on a Bob Horner single and Dale Murphy followed with a double. Both sacrifice flies carried to deep center, with Murphy moving to third on Burroughs' drive.

Doyle Alexander picked up his 10th victory, working into the eighth inning before he was replaced by Rick Camp because of leg cramps. Atlanta's Glenn Hubbard homered in the third inning, a two-run shot off Bob Welch that followed Alexander's single.

Phillies 3, Cardinals 2

Pitcher Steve Carlton drove in the eventual winning run and became the NL's first 17-game winner with the help of a superb defense and a key two-run single by Larry Bowa.

The Cardinals' John Fulgham pitched four perfect innings before the Phillies scored all their runs in the fifth.

Mike Schmidt walked and was forced by Garry Maddox. Manny Trillo doubled Maddox to third and Bowa then singled, sending the Phillies ahead 2-1 and taking second on the throw to the plate. Carlton, who allowed six hits in 82-3 innings — he needed last-out help from Tug McGraw — singled Bowa home with what proved to be the winning run.

The victory was the 27th against only eight losses for Carlton against St. Louis since the Cardinals traded him to Philadelphia in 1972.

Midland MWL still alive

DENTON — Midland MWL Tool & Supply stayed alive in the Texas Teen Age Hi-Junior baseball tournament here Thursday night by defeating Conroe, 7-5, in a loser's bracket tussle.

It was the second win Thursday for the Midland bunch, who had to capture a gameearlier in the day to avoid extinction. MWL was scheduled to play Lake Jackson Friday morning.

Teddy Bartley, with a superlative job in relief, took the mound victory for MWL which nabbed the triumph with a two-run explosion in the sixth that snapped a 5-5 deadlock.

Randy Pepper led the Midland hit parade with a pair of doubles.

Stadler overcomes erratic day to lead PGA championship

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Craig Stadler, despite what he described as an erratic day, believes he's in fine position to capture the 62nd Professional Golfers Association championship.

"I've only shot under par four times on a Thursday and I either won or finished high," said Stadler who had a 34-33--67 opening round Thursday, over the 6,964-yard par 70 Oak Hill Country Club course. "That sort of pumps me up. I'm looking forward to tomorrow."

The 27-year-old Stadler, a five-year touring pro who won the Bob Hope and the Greensboro, said he was fortunate because he had to scramble to have pars Thursday. But, he added, every time he made a shot to get the par, he came right back with a birdie on the following hole which enabled him to take a one-stroke lead over a group of five - Howard Twitty, Bobby Walzel, Curtis Strange, Gil Morgan and Bob Murphy.

'I didn't play real well at times but then I play awfully good at times," said Stadler a winner of $183,297 this year, good enough for fourth place on the money list. "Every time I made a bad shot, I made a good shot to save par. That made the day.

"It was a fun day," said Stadler, the only player in the second half of the field who played in the afternoon to break par.

Favorites Tom Watson and Lee Trevino, who also played in the afternoon, came in at 75 and 74, respectively, while Jack Nicklaus, another considered in the class of the field, shot an even par 70.

However, Watson and Trevino showed no outward concern for their plight.

"I still believe that over par will win," said Watson, who couldn't recall the last time he played a round without at least one birdie. "I have to think 280 is still a good target for me. And it is usually easier to play in the morning. By the afternoon, all the greens are spiked up."

Trevino, who won the U.S. Open here in 1968, said he also believes a morning round, which he and Watson have today, will enable him to get back into the hunt.

"I had to fight very hard for the 74," he said. "I had a lot of crucial putts. But there will be one round where the winner of this tournament will shoot a 73 or 74. It is impposbile for a person to play four rounds and keep it in the 67 or 68 range."

In all, 19 players in the field of 150 shot par or better, including Nicklaus.

"I made a couple of putts, but I missed a lot," said Nicklaus, who is seeking a recording-tying fifth PGA title. "I hit an awfully lot of good putts and had the bal close to the hole. I just didn't get it in."

At 1-under par, two strokes behind Standler, were defending champion David Graham, Ben Crenshaw and Hale Irwin.

In addition to Nicklaus, nine others shot par on the humid Thursday, including Lee Elder, Johnny Miller, Jack Renner, Ray Floyd, Lon Hinkle, George Archer, Japan's Tohru Nakamura and club pro Morris Hatalsky of Daytona Beach, Fla.

Twelve players came in at 1-over par with John Mahaffey, Tom Weiskopf, Bill Rogers, Gibby Gilbert and Bruce Lietzke among the more prominent on the tour.

In the group of 12 who are five behind Stadler at 722 were Andy Bean, Jerry Pate, Gary Player and Andy North.

Crowd favorites Arnold Palmer had a 74, Sam Snead, Billy Casper and Don January 82 and Chi Chi Rodriguez 83.

The low 70 scores and ties will make the cut after today's second round.

Stadler, who took off a couple of weeks after finishing in a tie for sixth in the British Open, said he wasn't even concerned about the 36-minute rain delay that left 18 players, including himself, still on the course.

"I had just putted out on 17 when they called the halt," he said. "And I put my drive on 18 in the middle of the fairway when play resumed, so it didn't bother me too much."

Seahawks begin season with win against Falcons

SEATTLE (AP) — In the Seattle Seahawks' first four seasons in the National Football League, they were unsuccessful in finding a quality kickoff return specialist.

For example, six different players returned the kickoffs for the Seahawks last season. But maybe they've had the right man — without knowing it — for the past three years.

Cornell Webster raced back the opening kickoff 98 yards Thursday night and the Seahawks went on to beat the Atlanta Falcons 14-10 in a National Football League exhibition opener for both clubs.

"Webster really hadn't done it on kickoffs before," said Seattle Coach Jack Patera. "But I think we'll have to take another look at him."

Webster, a cornerback from University of Tulsa who came to the Seahawks as a free agent in 1977, took Falcon placekicker Tim Mazzetti's kick on the Seattle 2 and it was goodbye Atlanta.

Webster volunteered for kickoff return duty after Jeff Moore, who returned 31 kickoffs for Seattle last season, suffered an ankle injury in practice last weekend.

"I've been trying to get them to put me back there for three years," Webster said.

Atlanta lost the war but won the battle. Trying to come back after a 6-10 season in 1979 after making the playoffs in 1978, the Falcons had a 315-198 advantage in total yards Thursday night.

"I was pleased with our offense," said Falcon Coach Leeman Bennett. "We moved the ball pretty well especially with our No. 1 offense in there."

Second-year quarterback Larry Fortner almost pulled the game out for the Falcons in the final quarter. He marched Atlanta from its own 6 with 8:02 left to the Seahawk 32 with 1:31. But he misfired on three straight passes to tight end Junior Miller.

Seattle scored its second touchdown in the second quarter to break a 7-7 deadlock on a 1-yard run by Sherman Smith after Sam Adkins and Steve Raible combined on a 45-yard pass.

The Falcons got their points on a 46-yard touchdown pass from Steve Bartkowski to Wallace Francis in the second quarter and a 23-yard field goal by Mazzetti in the final period.

The Atlanta-Seattle game kicked off the first full weekend of NFL exhibition games.

Nine games will be played Saturday night: Cincinnati at Denver, Cleveland at Kansas City, Green Bay at Dallas, Oakland at San Francisco, San Diego at Minnesota, Pittsburgh at New York Giants, Philadelphia at Buffalo, St.Louis at New Orleans and Washington at Baltimore.

Detroit will play at Miami Sunday afternoon, while the New York Jets will host Chicago Sunday night.

The action concludes with two games Monday night: New England at Los Angeles and Tampa Bay at Houston

SMU looks for health

DALLAS (AP) — Mike Ford's knee feels fine. Eric Dickerson's toe is OK. Blane Smith's stress fracture has healed. Michael Carter's knee is better...

Any pre-season preview of Southern Methodist's 1980 football football fortunes would be remiss without an update on last year's campaign that started out as Mustang Mania and ended up Mustang M-A-S-H.

Ford, of course, suffered a badly torn knee in the opener against Texas Christian and the Mustang quarterback missed the season, drawing a hardship ruling from the NCAA. He has two seasons left.

The highly touted Dickerson gained over 100 yards and scored three touchdowns in his first game as a freshmen then was ineffective the rest of the season because of a toe injury. He sparkled during spring training.

Smith, a sure-tackling safety who Coach Ron Meyer called "the heart and soul of our defense," was lost for the season with a leg injury and Carter, a blue chip tackle, went out with a knee operation.

"I am obviously worried about the ability to come off the injuries which we incurred last year and which were so devastating to us," said Meyer. "I just hope the injury situation doesn't hit us as hard as it did last year. But, because of the injuries more young players got experience and we should be deeper because of that."

SMU returns 7 of 11 starters on offense and 9 of 11 on defense. In all, 38 of 50 lettemen are scheduled back.

"We want to win...we've got to win to show everybody where our program is headed," says Meyer. "I'm a great believer in Mustang Mania. But it's much deeper than just a catchy phrase."

SMU was 5-6 last year, Meyer's best record in four years.

"It's amazing that we're this close to .500 in the four years we've been here," says Meyer. "Talent has been at such a low ebb we've only had four players drafted by the pros in four years. Baylor, for example, had nine players drafted last year."

Ford has been working out hard all summer. Meyer wants him to report at 210 pounds which means he has some 10 pounds to pare before the Mustangs start fall drills.

"I'm feeling good," said Ford after a recent workout. " I'm rusty but I believe everything will come back."

Ford will have limited mobility because Mustang trainers plan to strap him with a knee brace to protect against reinjury.

Chargers try to find someone to follow Fouts

By CHRIS COBBS
Los Angeles Times

SAN DIEGO — The San Diego Chargers have four players fighting for the right to do practically nothing this year.

At least, the Chargers hope nothing more strenuous than wearing a headset or holding a clipboard is required of the men who back up Dan Fouts.

The NFL has witnessed some classic internecine battles among quarterbacks: Waterfield vs. Van Brocklin; Kilmer vs. Jurgensen; Staubach vs. Morton; Haden vs. Ferragamo. In each instance, the starting job was at stake. Such is not the case with the Chargers.

As long as Fouts is healthy, the question of who will relieve him is academic. It might as well be Billy Carter. And if Fouts goes down, the team may be in bigger trouble than Chrysler.

Still, the question of who would step in for Fouts is not without intrigue. Right now there are four candidates — James Harris, Cliff Olander, Mike Kirkland and Ed Luther. One or more of them will not be around when the Chargers open the season Sept. 7 at Seattle.

Harris, an 11-year veteran, is probably the leading candidate to win the No. 2 spot. In that role last season, he got into eight games, threw nine passes and completed five. Such is life in the NFL when the starting quarterback throws for a miraculous 4,082 yards on 332 completions.

Challenging Harris are Olander and Kirkland, who have almost as much experience kicking a football as throwing one. Between them, in a total of six NFL seasons, Olander and Kirkland have thrown 65 passes and completed 31 of them.

Both Olander and Kirkland are punters of modest to above-average proficiency, and that could spell survival for one of them when cut-down date arrives.

The fourth, but by no means the least talented, of the group is Luther, whom the Chargers drafted on the fourth round out of San Jose State.

In addition to displaying a strong arm, the rookie has impressed Charger coaches with his "football intelligence" in training camp.

"He picks up things naturally," offensive coordinator Joe Gibbs said. "He doesn't have to be mechanically processed."

Not that anyone expects Luther to lead the Chargers to the Super Bowl as a rookie if Fouts should become disabled. But then, no one would expect Harris, Olander or Kirkland to produce better than a .500 showing, either.

Here is a thumbnail sketch of how Gibbs evaluates the four candidates:

Harris (6-3, 221, 11th year, from Grambling) — "Has a lot of maturity, and is a polished, game-smart quarterback with a great touch on long throws. Is comfortable with the Chargers system. Studies as hard as ever even when he's not playing. Can go in and get the team over the hump in a key game."

Landry satisfied with defense

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry said Thursday he was satisfied with progress of his defense as the team prepared to fly to Dallas for its pre-season opener against Green Bay.

At his weekly news conference, Landry said the defense was "further along than we've been in the past couple of years."

"I think we've made some progress," he said. "I think the guys have worked hard and have a good attitude. And we've got some good rookies. I'm talking about rookies who like to play."

The Cowboys held a final afternoon workout Thursday before flying to Dallas for Saturday night's game. They will return here Sunday for two more weeks of training camp.

Landry was concerned about the Cowboys' defensive play last season when the team was knocked out of the playoffs by Los Angeles, and proclaimed defense his main priority in training camp.

BOWLING BEAT

Midlander honored

By RANDY ISENBERG

Emory Isenberg was recently honored by bowling proprietors throughout the Southwest when they selected the Midlander to serve the next two years as regional vice-president of Bowling Proprietors Association of America.

Previously president of the Texas Bowling Centers Assoc., Isenberg also has been a member of the National Association's legislative committee and is past president of Texas Youth Bowling Assoc.

Isenberg, owner of Air Park and Dellwood Lanes in Midland, has continually worked to raise the public's interest in bowling.

In action on the lanes, Artie Offield recorded his first 600 series (605) which featured a set-ending 216. Vince Herrera also rolled his first 600 (606). High individual games went to Sonny Poole (258), Jim Burnett (245) and Tito Velasco (258).

Pacing the women was Margaret Foulsham, who notched games of 206 and 207 for a 593 series. Linda Williams came in with games of 220 and 212.

The Muscular Dystrophy Bowl-A-Thon is scheduled Aug. 23 at Air Park and the Big Brothers-Big Sisters Benefit Mixed Doubles Tournament will be Sept. 23 at Dellwood Lanes.

Paul Cox, who's headed to college in Colorado on a football-baseball scholarship, also knows how to knock down bowling pins. In the summer Adult-Youth Scratch League, he's averaged 200.

Sheldon came to novels late in life

By MARLENE AIG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Sidney Sheldon spent more than 30 years as a successful producer-director-writer before he decided "by sheer accident" to try writing novels.

And, as has been the case throughout most of his life, the 63-year-old Chicago native was a smashing success in his "mid-life second career."

"I like the freedom of writing novels," Sheldon says. "You have one hundred collaborators in movies and TV. A screen play doesn't come to life until the actors speak the lines. But as the novelist, I cast, direct and produce. I love it."

Sheldon went to Hollywood as a reader at the age of 17 and used to get up at 4 a.m. to try his hand at writing screenplays. He finally sold "South of Panama" and began his Hollywood career.

After serving as a pilot in World War II, Sheldon returned home, not just to Hollywood but to Broadway as well. He wrote a new book for "Merry Widow," collaborated with Dorothy Kilgallen on a play, "Dream of Music," and, in 1948, collected an Oscar for the screenplay of "The Bachelor and the Bobby Soxer."

His screenplays for "Annie Get Your Gun" and "Easter Parade" won Screen Writers Guild Awards and his Broadway show, "Redhead," added a Tony to his collection.

He was producing the TV series "I Dream of Jeannie" — and he says "writing 95 percent of the scripts" — in 1970 when he decided to try his hand at "something serious."

He wrote in the mornings and produced in the afternoons, losing money, he says, because he turned down projects in order to stay with the book.

"The feeling was marvelous," he recalls. "Writing the book was such a freedom of feeling."

The first book was "The Naked Face," a mystery about a psychiatrist convinced someone is trying to kill him. It received mixed reviews and a nomination for the Edgar, a prize for mystery writing.

While his first novel may not have set the world on fire, his second, he says, "changed my life."

"The Other Side of Midnight," an international tale of love and revenge, was an immediate success and continues as a best seller today, now in its 65th paperback printing.

"I was totally stunned and surprised by the success of it," he admits. "It was a hard act to follow."

His third book, "A Stranger in the Mirror," wasn't as popular as "The Other Side of Midnight." But the fourth, "Bloodline," is challenging the success of "Midnight."

It was the unhappy conversion of "Bloodline" into a movie that made Sheldon decide to produce the film version of his latest novel, "Rage of Angels."

"I didn't realize what would happen in the cutting room," Sheldon says of the earlier film, which starred Audrey Hepburn and was panned by critics. "I'm determined that won't happen with 'Rage of Angels.'"

As do his previous novels, "Rage of Angels" deals with characters who are larger than life and who live extraordinary lives in exotic places.

"My ambition," Sheldon says, "is to tell stories that entertain. People like vicarious living. They read to go to faraway places and totally escape. That's what I do. I'm a storyteller and entertainer. I make no pretense to being a great artist."

While Sheldon's characters may be too rich, too bright, too evil or too lucky to be real, the places they roam are authentic.

"I'm a meticulous researcher," he says. "If I put a palm tree in a restaurant somewhere, a reader can go to that restaurant and see that palm tree. I want the reader to identify, no matter what the locale."

He can spend more than a year researching a book. He says he spent three months touring European pharmaceutical companies, then went on to interview various European police officials and lived in Rome before starting "Bloodline."

A first draft — which he dictates — can run 1,200 pages. Then he'll spend more than a year rewriting. He never reads a book once it's published. "I'd want to rewrite it."

"Writing novels is so exciting — to create a world and decide who will live in it and what will happen to them. I find it awesome and tremendously powerful."

While he may sometimes miss his old Hollywood life, Sheldon says, "I want to go on writing novels for the rest of my life."

Quake shakes central Alaska

PALMER, Alaska (AP) — A moderate earthquake shook central Alaska early Thursday but apparently caused no damage or injuries, the Tsunami Warning Center at Palmer reported.

The epicenter of the tremor was 40 miles southwest of Healy in a remote area of Mount McKinley National Park, center spokesman John Sindorf said.

The quake, at 10:16 Alaska Daylight Time, was felt in Fairbanks, McGrath and Palmer and at several points along the Alaska Railroad, Sindorf said.

Preliminary readings indicate the earthquake measured 5.4 on the open-ended Richter scale, he said.

The National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo, said the quake registered 5.0 on the Richter scale.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

An earthquake of 5.0 magnitude can cause considerable damage. The San Francisco earthquake of 1906, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 7.9 on the Richter scale.

Utah — Hollywood with G-rating

Dan Haggerty is shown here in a scene from "The Life and Times of Grizzly Adams," one of a growing number of films being made in Utah. A growing community of filmmakers, alienated by Hollywood's morality and high costs, is finding Utah good ground for making their films. The majority of the films being made there are family-oriented, G-rated films. (AP Laserphoto)

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Hollywood cowboys have long been digging their booted toes into the red Utah dust, squinting into the camera under the desert sun. These days, the state is more than a backdrop — it's home to the whole show.

A growing community of film makers, alienated by Hollywood's morality and high costs — or both — has found fertile soil in Utah's economic and social climate.

"People are shocked when they learn how many films are being made here," said Paul McGuire, a former New Yorker now with Utah's Linton Productions. "Utah is a phenomenal place for movie production — but it's still almost a secret."

Hollywood film companies often use Utah for location shooting. Director John Huston and actor John Wayne made some of their best-known westerns on the state's vast deserts, among its delicate sandstone arches or high in its mountains. And actor Robert Redford, who lives in Utah near his Sundance ski resort, filmed "Jeremiah Johnson" and parts of "The Electric Horseman" here.

But the state is more than scenery. In the past decade, about 50 feature films — for TV and cinema — have been shot almost entirely in Utah, many by home-grown companies.

One lure for film makers is Utah residents' strong support for family entertainment. Utah film makers have latched onto the family film industry, orphaned by Hollywood because many there consider a "G" rating the kiss of death.

Sixty percent of Utah's residents are members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints — a faith that emphasizes wholesome family activities.

Except for Walt Disney Productions, most G-rated films now hail from Utah, including hits like "The Life and Times of Grizzly Adams," "The Lincoln Conspiracy," "Where the Red Fern Grows," and "In Search of Noah's Ark."

"The Utah films don't have the big budgets, but they have a certain kind of integrity," said McGuire, whose company makes only G-rated movies. "We're making films for Middle America. These people are not thrilled with what they're seeing from Hollywood — they're offended."

He said the Mormon emphasis is apparent in most Utah films, but religion is not. "We don't make religious films, but we make films that are healthy, positive and uplifting."

Another Utah film company, Osmond Productions, owned by the singing family, acknowledges its philosophical tie to the church.

President William Critchfield, a former Mormon bishop, called the Osmonds "among the strongest missionaries of the church," attributing 35,000 converts worldwide to Donny, Marie and the family.

He brags the Osmonds "brought Hollywood to downtown Orem" with their $8 million entertainment center and its TV and movie production facilities. The center has a strict code — the Osmonds won't lease to makers of R-rated films.

"We don't let them in," Critchfield said. "We turn down that kind of thing. We're committed to wholesome, family entertainment."

Even the Osmonds have learned about G-ratings. After a 1978 G-rated film starring Jimmy Osmond flopped, the next Osmond film, "Going Coconuts," starring Donny and Marie, was PG.

One character was killed on screen to win the rating. "We found a lot of people were offended at that," said Crutchfield. "They couldn't believe the Osmonds would make anything other than a G film. But when you see it, it's so cute and so hilarious you see it's done in good taste."

The Utah boom also is partly due to the changing industry, with its new markets of cable and syndicated TV and foreign sales, said John Earle, director of films in the state Division of Industrial Development. "These are voracious sorts of markets. It's no longer the bailiwick of some producers in Hollywood. Any Joe Blow can have access now," he said.

Film producers have become more competitive and more decentralized, Earle said, adding needed services were once confined to Hollywood, but now are available elsewhere.

"We're trying to build a community of film makers here with all the ancillary services so you don't have to go to Hollywood for anything," said Dennis Picture and Television Artists.

Utah's stable economy makes fund-raising relatively easy, Earle said, and the pot is sweetened by the state's right-to-work law. With labor eating up as much as 35 percent of film making costs, a company can save on non-union labor, said Critchfield.

Utah-made films also save on location shooting. "Within a couple hundred miles, you can tap almost every kind of scenery," said Al Pedersen, a spokesman for Taft Productions, a film company.

"There's no doubt about it — the state is consistently pulling ahead of other states that have similar locations and economic situations," Berrett said.

Earle says Southern California is still home to the bulk of all U.S.-made films, with New York second. Texas and Florida come next with about $45 million in productions, and Utah, gaining fast, had about $42 million in productions last year.

To stay competitive, Berrett said Utah film makers must drop their emphasis on G ratings and make movies that appeal to a wider market. He said: "I predict they won't be doing as many G pictures" in Utah in the future.

Sister of late shah back in U.S.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The mourning Princess Shams, eldest sister of the late Shah of Iran, is in seclusion somewhere in southern California, her spokesman said Thursday.

The Iranian princess is believed to be living with a small army of servants and half a dozen dogs at her $1.5 million Montecito ranch house near Santa Barbara.

"Princess Shams Pahlavi, the bereaved sister of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, is in seclusion, grieving and very distressed at the death of her brother," spokesman Robert Garrick told The Associated Press. "His death is a great personal loss to her, and, she believes, a loss to Iran."

Princess Shams reportedly arrived with an entourage of 18 to 20 people at Los Angeles International Airport on a July 4 flight from Mexico. It was not known how long she had been in Mexico.

Garrick, a public relations consultant hired by the Pahlavi family, confirmed that the princess returned to Southern California, but he refused to disclose where she was staying.

Princess Shams was presumed either at Montecito or in Palm Springs, where she and her 90-year-old mother took refuge earlier this year at the desert estate of publisher Walter Annenberg.

Mother and daughter fled their Beverly Hills home in January after the mansion was set afire by Iranian student demonstrators. Neither woman was injured.

New York police rounding up hookers

NEW YORK (AP) — With thousands of Democrats expected to prowl the streets during next week's political convention, police are filling the jails with hookers rounded up in a new "sweep."

Judge Rena K. Uviller, who is temporarily presiding over prostitution cases this week, has been meting out fines of $150 or a 10-day jail term to all prostitutes found soliciting in residential or heavily traveled commerical areas in Manhattan between 8 a.m. and midnight. Prostitutes are usually charged between $25 and $50.

The judge said Wednesday that she was getting tough because prostitution "intrudes on a citizen's perception of life in New York."

She said she warned the women last week that if she saw them again it would automatically mean five days in jail. She added, however, that she was "torn with pity for these girls."

Inspector Emil Ciccotelli, head of the police department's Public Morals Division, also has joined the fight to clear the streets.

Ciccotelli said he was appropriated $7,000 to pay for overtime and extra plainclothes officers to be stationed around the Madison Square Garden, Times Square, and the Lexington Avenue "strips" to await propositions.

One officer said the word filtered down through police ranks is that "the department wants the streets hooker-free by Sunday night."

A "sweep" that began Saturday had netted 213 hookers by Tuesday.

But one problem is that city jails are filling up.

"Right now we're about at capacity," said Correction Department spokesman Al Anderson.

Another problem is lawsuits stemming from false arrests.

FBI jails health aide for extortion

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — An unemployed home health aide has been arrested as he allegedly sought to collect $847,000 that was demanded in threatening letters to the heads of four major oil firms, the FBI said.

Kenneth Kirke Evans, 53, allegely wrote the letters over the past few weeks to the board chairmen of Exxon Corp. and Mobile Oil Corp. in New York City, Standard Oil of California in San Francisco and Texaco in White Plains, N.Y.

The letters threatened the lives of the officials and their families if the money was not paid, FBI agents said.

Israel driving motorists to safety

By MICHAEL PRECKER

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The large, black-bordered death notice in the newspaper lacked only a name. Instead there was a grim message to Israel's notoriously reckless drivers:

"Only you can keep your name out of here. Drive safely."

A blunt advertising campaign, coupled with stiff traffic fines, increased enforcement and expensive gasoline, appear to be making an impact on Israeli motorists, who have been killing each other off at a shocking pace for years.

In the first six months of 1980, 168 people died in traffic accidents — a 45 percent drop from the 309 traffic deaths during the same period last year. The total number of injury-causing accidents is down about 20 percent, leaving government officials encouraged but not yet satisfied.

"You can't be proud when people are getting killed," said Yehiel Amitai, director of the highway safety campaign in the Transport Ministry. "But there is an awakening."

For years the killing went on unfettered. Israeli drivers, infamous for bad driving habits and worse road manners, have claimed more than 13,000 lives since the country was founded in 1948 — a toll equal to Israel's war dead. More than 400,000 Israelis have been injured.

"All the years we handled them gently, saying please do us a favor and drive carefully," Amitai said. "Now we're telling the ugly truths. The message is, if you keep on driving this way, you're going to die."

The safety campaign began last fall with the inauguration of a weekly television show, titled "Enough!" right before the evening news, Israel's most-watched program.

The dramatic short documentaries spotlighted such heart-rending subjects as children killed in accidents, distraught families of victims and hospital wards packed with injured motorists.

"We had to show them the suffering, to show it could happen to you," said Moshe Becker, a road-safety expert who advises the show. "It's like talking to a donkey. First you hit him on the head, so he perks up his ears. Then you tell him what you want to tell him."

Subsequent programs have dealt with specific aspects of road safety, including how to react to dangerous road situations, and stressed the benefits of slowing down and taking fewer chances behind the wheel.

Meanwhile, the ministry introduced a road-safety program in Israeli schools and extended the advertising campaign to include everything from newspapers to bumper stickers. Radio announcers ask listeners to "let the children grow up," while popular soccer and basketball players tell fans before their games, "We want you to come back next week, so drive carefully on your way home."

Many motorists are getting the message to slow down through their pocketbooks. A gallon of gasoline now costs $2.70 and is expected to rise soon, so the campaign stressed better mileage at slower speeds. Officials also calculate that Israelis are using their cars about 4 percent less than last year.

Reckless driving has also become more of a financial risk. After receiving their first 16 radar units last year, the police department ordered officers to concentrate on spotting moving violations rather than handing out parking tickets, which most drivers throw away without fear of being caught by the cumbersome bureaucracy.

"People are driving better than before," said Shmuel Bogler, chief of the police traffic department. But he conceded that manpower cuts had forced police to curtail plans for increased enforcement within cities, where four-fifths of all accidents occur.

The downward trend in accidents actually began in mid-1979, and the death toll for the year was 565, compared with the all-time high of 716 in 1974.

Becker, a senior researcher at the Haifa Technion's Road Safety Center, said driver safety would only solve part of the problem. Many accidents are caused by poor roads in much of the country and old, unsafe cars that are not replaced, since a new car costs about $15,000.

In China, trade names a question of semantics

By JOHN BAUSMAN

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — A U.S. trade show now in preparation to open in Peking this fall has prompted American companies to check out their image in Chinese.

Businessmen hoping to strike it big in the huge Chinese market want to make sure their company names, slogans and product descriptions do not get snagged in the subleties of Chinese semantics and symbolism.

An English name transcribed phonetically into Chinese can sometimes have an awkward meaning when one set of characters is used and a positive one when other characters with the same sound are picked.

One expert guarding against U.S. corporate blunders in Chinese is Chen-li Pang, a native of China now retired after 30 years as a United Nations translator. Last year he joined a translating firm, Euramerica Translations Inc., as director of their Chinese division.

Pang says his long career of translating with diplomatic exactness prepared him well for corporate work where a translation blunder can have hard consequences in terms of dollars and cents.

One case he handled involved a manufacturer of fabric-cutting machines. Its two-syllable name could be represented phonetically in Chinese by the characters for "plum" and "bright." The same sounds, however, could also be rendered by the characters for "beauty" and "speed" — a combination that both Pang and the company decided conveyed a better image.

"A good name can be a powerful persuader and make a big difference in a China marketing program," said Pang, who came to the United States as a student in 1944.

Born in Soochow near Shanghai, Pang originally planned a newspaper career but switched to the United Nations in 1949. The father of a son now at Columbia University, he lives in Tenafly, N.J.

Another firm that Pang advised was the well-known U.S. company, Mack Trucks Inc. Mack's bulldog symbol, conveying toughness and reliability, would have less impact in China where the dog does not necessarily enjoy the high regard it has in the United States, Pang said.

Luckily, the word Mack sounds about the same as the Chinese word for horse, giving Pang the idea of using an ancient Chinese proverb: "The value of a good horse is appreciated at the end of the longest journey." Thus ancient wisdom rather than bulldogs will promote the truck in China.

Another challenge was a construction company known by four initials, representing the last names of its founders. It discovered that duplicating the sound of its name required six clumsy Chinese characters.

Pang said he came up with a sound variation in four characters that included the Chinese words for iron or metal, birds or kites and two other words meaning "make their stride here." Since airport construction is an important part of the firm's business, the variation was deemed highly suitable.

The Chinese have a system for transliterating English names, Pang said, and this is useful for some companies. But the transliterations carry no second meaning, negative or positive.

Pang finds a more sophisticated technique is to select characters that sound like the company name and also convey a positive meaning. He cited the Chinese name for Coca Cola, used long before the Communist revolution in China and rechecked for validity after the firm re-entered the Chinese market, as the classic case of this sort of name: Ko (pleasing) K'ou (mouth) Ko (able) le (enjoy).

Moviegoers may find 'Blues' selling tickets

WEBSTER CITY, Iowa (AP) — Customers at the first local showing of "The Blues Brothers" movie may be surprised to find themselves buying tickets from none other than Elwood Blues.

Dan Aykroyd, 28, the Canadian humorist whose career took off with the "Saturday Night Live" television show, protrays Elwood Blues in the movie. Aykroyd planned to punch up tickets here.

Aykroyd's girlfriend, Annie McAuley, had planned a visit with her grandmother. It coincided neatly with the local premiere of "The Blues Brothers."

So Aykroyd and Miss McAuley, 18, were hanging out at the Webster Theater and the Hamilton County Fair drumming up business.

British sailor, 33, sets record in small vessel

CAMBRIDGE, England (AP) — A 33-year-old British sailor wrote himself into the record books Thursday after sailing round the world single-handed in the smallest vessel ever known to complete the voyage.

Shane Acton, who left his home in Cambridge, northeast of London, in 1972 with only 20 pounds ($47.40) in his pocket, returned 30,000 miles and eight years later to a civic reception and an unexpected message of congratulations from Prince Philip, husband of Queen Elizabeth II.

Shane's record-breaker was "Super Shrimp", an 18-by-6-foot boat originally designed for weekend sailing, which held off gale force winds, massive waves and a virtual shipwreck to bring its skipper back unscathed.

A crowd of 500 residents lined the banks of Cambridge's River Cam as Shane sailed home with an escort of a dozen ships to be welcomed by the mayor and a guard of honor of sea cadets.

He first arrived back in Britain July 26, sailing quietly into the seaside resort of Walton-on-the-Naze in Essex county, before making his way along the English east coast and up the River Cam to this university city.

The Guiness Book of Records confirmed that Shane's boat had broken the record. The smallest previous vessel to circumnavigate the world was the Ahodori II, Japanese-skippered and eight inches longer, which had held the title since 1974.

Americans, Iranian protesters kept apart

WASHINGTON (AP) — With pro-Khomeini Iranians back again protesting in front of the White House, top Carter administration officials are worried that a possible outbreak of violence between the demonstrators and angry Americans might mean trouble for the American hostages in Iran.

About 200 Iranians gathered Thursday to protest the treatment of the 192 Iranians arrested 12 days ago during a violence-marred celebration of the death of the deposed Shah of Iran. More demonstrations were scheduled today.

Meanwhile, President Carter ordered an investigation into charges that the Iranians arrested July 27 were released before they should have been and before their visa status could be thoroughly checked.

He ordered that investigation while Thursday's four-hour demonstration was going on outside. Angry Americans, separated from the Iranians by scores of police, made clear their anger and frustration.

Hundreds of Washington residents and tourists gathered around the protesters, taunting and pelting them with eggs and garbage. One man took a tomato from his lunch sack and heaved it at the Iranians and another spat on an Iranian woman.

Administration officials are worried about a possibly violent confrontation and its potential effect on the 52 American hostages in Iran.

"We would hope that these demonstrations can be confined to peaceful expressions of view. Iranians in this country will continue to receive ... the full protection of U.S. law," State Department spokesman David Passage said.

Another State Department official said in an interview that it is "obvious" that a violent confrontation between Iranian demonstrators and increasingly angry Americans — or with police — could severely complicate efforts to get the hostages released.

"That's exactly what the (protesting) Iranians would want," he added, referring to violence. "The ramification of (a violent confrontation) is really nothing that has to be pointed out. It's obvious ... (It) would make gaining the release of the hostages in Iran more complicated."

Thursday's protest demonstrated a potential for violence. Police had to escort the protesters to chartered buses after the demonstration and some Americans nearby said if it were not for the police, they would have physically attacked the Iranians.

The investigation of the July 27 arrests was ordered after some officials of the Immigration and Naturalization Service complained that the Carter administration pushed for the premature release of the Iranians. The Iranians, many of whom took part in Thursday's rally, were freed Wednesday.

INS spokesmen denied that the releases came before the identity and visa status of the Iranians had been fully checked.

INS spokesmen have also denied claims by the government of Iran that the Iranians arrested last month were victims of police brutality and were "tortured" during their captivity in the District of Columbia jail and later at a prison in New York. Protesting the detention, the Iranian parliament postponed consideration of the American hostage issue.

Former Attorney General Ramsey Clark and Mrs. Bonnie Graves, the wife of one of the American hostages, John Graves, visited the Iranian demonstrators Thursday and both criticized the treatment of the Iranians during their detention.

Clark, who visited Iran recently despite a U.S. ban on such travel, said the treatment of the arrested Iranians "clearly makes it more difficult" to resolve the hostage situation. Mrs. Graves told reporters she had written a letter to Khomeini in which she said "This harsh treatment is in stark contrast to the apparent treatment of my husband."

Hance wants protest probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Kent Hance, D-Texas, wants a congressional investigation to start immediately of allegations that Iranian money is entering the U.S. for a propaganda campaign.

"I think that the general public is outraged at the activity of these foreign students and so-called visitors who are abusing our society and at the same time, in their country their leadership is abusing Americans who are illegally held hostages," the Lubbock congressman said Thursday.

He wrote to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill asking encouragement for the House judiciary and foreign affairs committees to call a joint hearing on possible subversive activities.

"There is no question in my mind that there are organized and well-funded groups which are beginning planned subversive actions against the United States," Hance wrote. "We need to know exactly who composes this organization, who is backing them and from what sources they're getting their funds."

The letter was prompted by a report in the Washington Post that quoted law enforcement officials saying at least $5 million was funneled into the U.S. from Iran to support a propaganda campaign for the Iranian revolution.

"The United States is a free country and we welcome foreign visitors, but there is absolutely no reason we should stand by and watch while a highly organized and well funded organization seeks to create chaos in our streets," the letter said.

In an interview, Hance said he recognized the importance of guarding civil liberties but, "We have gone too far in the wrong direction by being too relaxed. It's not that these people wanted to demonstrate a certain cause. They wanted to create chaos."

Iran Parliament to name prime minister

By The Associated Press

Iran's Parliament is preparing to consider selection of a new prime minister, a move that could clear the way for discussion of the American hostages and shift international attention away from two weeks of protests and hunger strikes by Iranian militants on both sides of the Atlantic.

Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has given the Parliament, or Majlis, final authority over the fate of the 52 Americans held in Iran since Nov. 4. Formal debate on the issue has been delayed pending parliamentary approval of a prime minister, who will be in charge of forming a new government.

Tehran Radio predicted Thursday that Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr would nominate Education Minister Muhammad Ali Rajaie for the post. Rajaie, 47, spent four years as a political prisoner during the reign of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

LATE LAST month, Bani-Sadr withdrew his nomination of the national police chief, Mostafa Mir-Salim, in what was seen as a concession to the majority Islamic Republican Party. It was not immediately clear, however, whether Rajaie was closer to Bani-Sadr or the more radical Islamic party.

Radio Moscow quoted an interview with Rajaie by the Iranian news agency Pars in which Rajaie appeared to follow the party's fundamentalist line. He said he was opposed to forming a coalition government, adding: "The government must consist of followers of Ayatollah Khomeini," Radio Moscow said.

A recent poll by the party's newspaper revealed many in the party favor trying the hostages as spies and either expelling or subjecting those convicted to some kind of unspecified punishment.

Iranian calls for spy trials increased over the last week with the arrest of Iranian militants in London, Washington, D.C., and San Diego, Calif.

Many of those arrested during pro-Khomeini demonstrations refused to give their names to police, refused to eat while in jail and later accused authorities of brutality.

Both British and American officials denied the charges.

DOZENS OF Iranians demonstrated outside the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, Lebanon, today while 13 of about 200 anti-American Iranians were arrested during a downtown demonstration in Filippine capital of Manila.

More than 60 Iranians continued a hunger strike today at jails in London. Tehran radio quoted a Iranian diplomat in London as saying three of the protesters were seriously ill from the effects of the hunger strike. British officials confirmed the Iranians were continuing to refuse to eat but declined to comment on the broadcast report.

Ice storm flattens drought-spared crop

WALCOTT, N.D. (AP) — Theo Jordheim was one of the lucky ones: North Dakota's drought spared his farm and he had a bumper corn crop. Then a freak storm flattened 400 acres of crops, pummeled his livestock with hail and left his fields white with ice.

"The ground was all white when I came home," Jordheim said. "The trees were stripped, too. Not a leaf left on them.

"That was one of the best corn crops I ever had coming up. It's gone, all gone," he said.

The damage to crops and property in Wednesday night's storm was estimated at $50 million by the U.S. Department of Agriculture County Emergency Board. Damage to farm homes, buildings and machinery was estimated at more than $4.4 million.

Only scattered pockets of farmland in eastern North Dakota had escaped the summer's withering drought. They were thriving until hail and wind destroyed some of the few good crops left.

Hailstones — some as large as baseballs — pounded a six-county area, and the storms cut a swath seven miles wide along a 40-mile path.

Preliminary estimates show a 50 to 100 percent crop loss on more than 535,000 acres, or 836 square miles of North Dakota farmland, said David Strauss, state director of the U.S. Agricultural Conservation and Stabilization Service.

"In these six counties that were most adversely affected by the hailstorms, we would have had some of the best crops in North Dakota," Strauss said.

Some of the best wheat, barley, oats, soybeans, corn and sugar beets were ruined by the storm, he said.

Jordheim had taken a trip into town that night and returned home to find all the windows blown out of his house and hail the size of pingpong balls littering the farm.

"We've had hail before, but not this bad," he said.

"We've got a few milk cows. They had bumps on their backs ... My son, he found a deer in the field. It was bleeding so bad, he butchered it."

The majority to minority pupil transfer policy provision is an important part of the desegregation plan of Midland elementary schools. This transfer policy allows eligible young children to attend the same school as older brothers and sisters in grades 4, 5 and 6. The majority to minority transfer policy states:
A primary level pupil (grades 1, 2 or 3) may transfer from a school in which the pupil's race, or ethnic background is the majority to another school in the assigned elementary school cluster, serving the residence, in which the pupil's race is the minority. Transportion is provided by regularly scheduled bus routes which transport intermediate level pupils (grades 4, 5 and 6) within the elementary cluster.
Pupils in grades 1,2 and 3 may transfer to another school in the elementary cluster when their race or ethnic background is a majority in the home school. Also, the race or ethnic background must be in a minority in the receiving school. Transportation is provided by regularly scheduled bus routes within the elementary cluster.
