China students on most-wanted list

BEIJING (AP) — State-run television and radio today broadcast a wanted list of 21 top student leaders of the pro-democracy movement who have fled underground, and it urged the nation's citizens to turn them in to police.

By issuing the list, authorities admitted that the activists had escaped the security dragnet set after Communist authorities turned soldiers on unarmed civilian protesters in Beijing to crush the movement for a freer China.

Also today, the government put border guards on alert for prominent dissident Fang Lizhi and his wife, both of whom have taken refuge in the U.S. Embassy to avoid arrest. Provincial, rail, and air authorities also were told to block the fugitive students from leaving the country.

In Shanghai, police detained a television crew from the ABC television network as they filmed a family watching China's evening television news, ABC correspondent Mark Litke said today.

The three-member crew and its government-assigned interpreter were held for about 2½ hours Monday night, Litke said. He said the Chinese family was not arrested and no videotape was confiscated.

The 21 students wanted by the government were pictured on nationwide television and their names were read on Beijing Radio.

At the top of the list were Wang Dan of Beijing University, and Wu'er Kaixi and Chai Ling of Beijing Normal University, the major figures in the student-led movement.

"Wu'er Kaixi is one of the big heads of the organization. He spoke all over to fan the flames of the movement," the television broadcast said.

It showed video taken May 29 from a hidden camera of Wu'er Kaixi eating at a "certain high-class hotel" with his girlfriend. It also showed him speaking through a megaphone at pro-democracy rallies.

"From this we can clearly see the ugly face of the student union leaders," the announcer said. The broadcasts included details such as height, skin complexion and accent of the wanted students.

In the week since the military assault that crushed the pro-democracy movement, the government says it has arrested more than 1,000 people.

Several detainees among the "counterrevolutionaries" paraded before television viewers appear to have been beaten.

On Monday, authorities gave police and soldiers permission to shoot people who incite unrest and banned the independent student and worker groups that sprung up during seven weeks of heady political ferment.

As part of a propagand blitz, the government has display on the small screen telephone numbers people can call to inform on their neighbors.

The official Beijing Daily reported today in a front-page article that some independent student and labor leaders turned themselves in and confessed. It did not give any numbers or names. People who surrender will "be treated leniently according to the facts of their crimes," the report said.

Fang and his wife, Li Shuxian, fled to the embassy last week after troops fired on protesters in the city center, killing hundreds.

Bush's policy will have impact on gas industry

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

President Bush's call Monday for an alternative fuel system to clean up the nation's air pollution problems is likely to have a far-reaching, positive impact on Texas' natural gas industry.

"Bush's remarks help our cause, because it draws attention to alternative fuels," said Texas General Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, who authored two bills requiring thousands of vehicles to convert to compressed natural gas.

"We are confident that the president, with his comments has laid down a level playing field for all aternative fuels — methanol, ethanol and CNG — and that each will find a niche to some degree."

Mauro expects that the alternative fuel market will be flexible enough that CNG will be able to realize a sizable share of the market.

Mauro said Texas' recently passed legislation gives it the strongest alternate fuels program in the United States and will become the national leader and model for compressed natural gas use.

"I think what we are seeing with President Bush's environmental policy is the beginning of the alternative fuel age," said Andrew Mangan, communications director for the Texas General Land Office.

"Sooner or later it will come to a show down between CNG and methanol, and when all the data is known CNG is bound to win. CNG is safer, cleaner and cheaper than methanol."

Mangan said that with California's jumping on the methanol bandwagon years before the emergence of CNG technology and having already spent $50 million on methanol programs, "it may be too late for them to back off methanol now."

While Bush has focused extensively on methanol and ethanol as alternative fuels, Mauro and his staff feel the president has been fair in setting out a level playing field for all alternative fuels.

"They can score one for fairness," said Mangan, "because they did not shut CNG out."

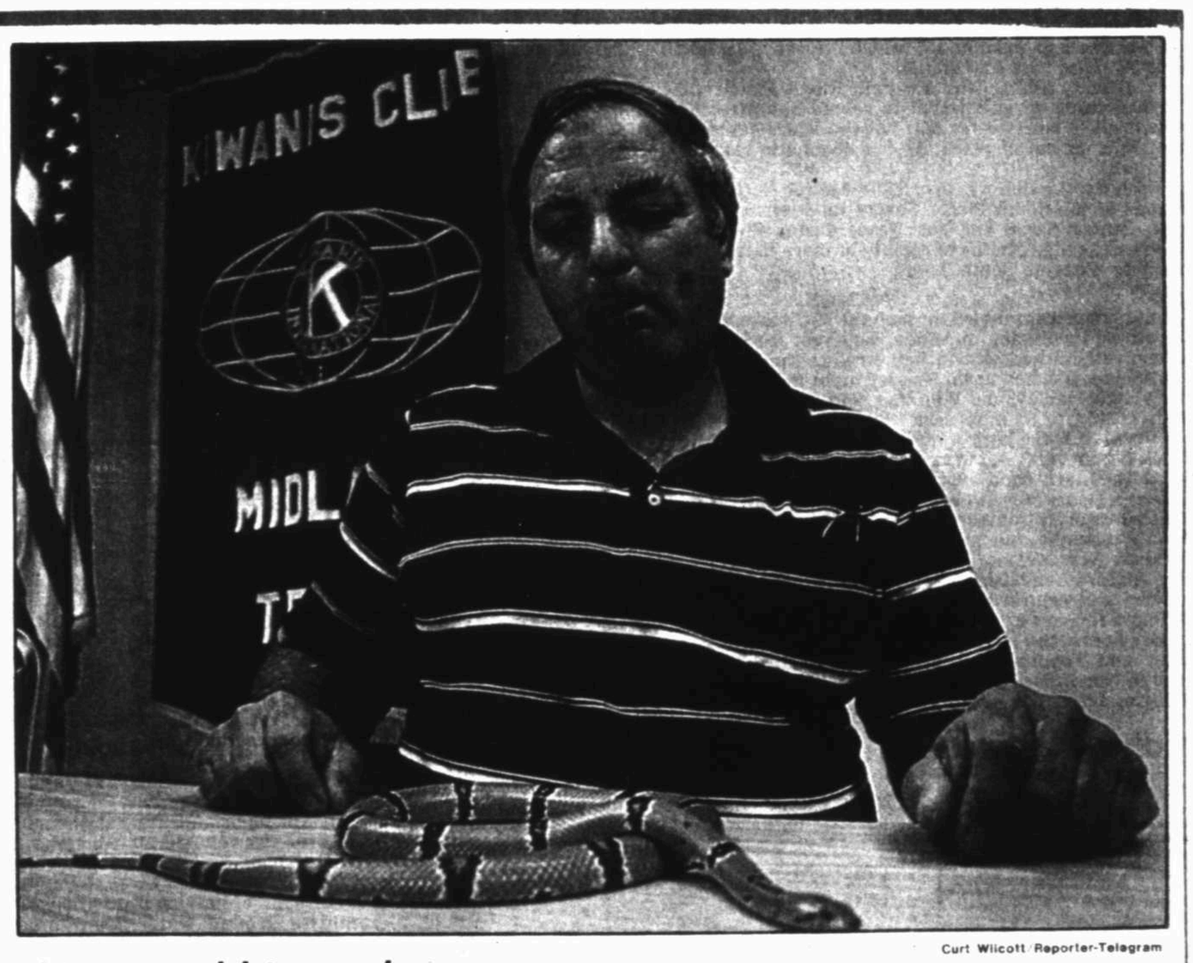

Washington insiders say if Bush has leaned to methanol, it is because of advice he has received from presidential counsel C. Boyden Gray, his primary adviser on alternative fuels.

Gray was unavailable for comment this morning, but Mangan says Gray has made a crash effort to learn all he can about CNG in recent months and that may have paid off in the president's level-field approach.

"I don't want to bash methanol, but it has a tough row to hoe," said Mangan. "When it is compared to CNG in future months I am certain CNG will come out on top."

Man and his snake

Denny Miller seems entertained by a gray-banded king snake, which is among his collection of friendly and docile slithering reptiles in Alpine. Miller is executive director of the Chihuahuan Desert Research Institute in Alpine and near Fort Davis.

Southern Baptists delay setting up lobbying group

Vestal

The denomination's Executive Committee voted unanimously Monday to wait until next year's convention to recommend creation of a Religious Liberty Commission to lobby on issues such as school prayer and tuition tax credits.

That left the election between 44-year-old Daniel Vestal, pastor of Dunwoody Baptist Church in suburban Atlanta — formerly pastor of Midland's First Baptist Church — and incumbent Jerry Vines, 51, pastor of First Baptist Church of Jacksonville, Fla., as the only major issue of the convention.

Vines asked the Executive Committee to postpone the proposal for a Religious Liberty Commission in the interests of "a peaceful convention meeting and a positive witness" in Las Vegas.

But the battle lines continued to be drawn as moderates hoped to reverse a decade-long string of conservative victories in presidential elections.

"I think the Southern Baptist Convention is in serious condition, serious trouble," said Daniel Vestal, the moderate candidate for the presidency. "A lot of people are at the point of dropping out."

The 14.8 million-member denomination has more than doubled its membership in the past quarter-century, but has grown by barely more than half a percent in each of the last two years.

The convention presidency is considered a critical post because the officer appoints the Committee on Committees, which has a central role in selecting people for the convention's boards, commissions and committees.

Vines is scheduled to address the convention prior to the election today, while Vestal appealed to delegates Sunday and Monday evenings in half-hour programs on a local television station paid for by his supporters.

Herpetologist shows off his passion

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Snakes, like people, occasionally pull off a bluff in their instinct to survive in the wild and in captivity.

They hiss not so subtly and, out of nervousness, may shake their tails with vigor, which rattlesnakes often do to ward off intruders.

Denny Miller, an Alpine herpetologist, didn't bring any rural rattlers to downtown Midland on Monday. But he did bring a few bags of sleek and colorful hissers, which, depending on their preferences, savor the scent and taste of eggs, birds, frogs, lizards, other snakes, including rattlers smaller than they, and, of course, mice.

The pine snake prefers rodents and birds for his meals.

The reptile hissed boldly, after Miller took the snake out of a sack.

"It's a bluff," explained Miller. "He uses it to scare people away. It's pretty effective."

Miller let the snake slither freely about him, as he fondly told of the reptile's peculiarities.

The pine snake is the "most powerful of the constrictors in the United States," he said. "They hiss like crazy." And if really excited, the snake can project his loud hissing for up to a quarter of a mile.

"They never bite," Miller said. "They are vicious-looking."

Snakes are pretty much intent on filling their bellies, hibernating when the season is right, and staying as inconspicuous as possible to avoid bringing too much attention on themselves. They apparently prefer a relatively unhassled and serene lifestyle.

"This guy likes to find old (tree) stumps to live in," Miller said of the sand-burrowing pine snake, which is native to the East Coast. "He's a very handsome snake."

Miller, who is executive director of the Chihuahuan Desert Research Institute (CDRI) in Alpine and near Fort Davis, hauled a few of his live-in snakes to Midland at the behest of Tom Bruner, CDRI board member, Midland lawyer and environmentalist. Miller comfortably showed his snakes to the Downtown Midland Kiwanis Club in the Midland Center. None of the members even hinted at handling the non-poisonous reptiles.

German WWII battleship Bismarck found

By LESLIE DREYFOUS

BOSTON (AP) — After a fruitless search last year, the German battleship Bismarck has been found on the ocean floor 600 miles off the coast of France, 48 years after it was sunk by the British Navy.

The Bismarck was located Monday under 15,000 feet of water by a remote-controlled robot named Argo that scuttles across the ocean floor. Argo and his master, expedition leader Dr. Robert Ballard, also discovered the sunken Titanic four years ago.

The Bismarck was sitting upright on the sea floor "intact in an excellent state of preservation" about 600 miles west of Brest on the Brittany coast, said Ballard, who is based at Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution on Cape Cod.

The discovery is likely to trigger great curiosity among naval historians, said Maj. Charles Neimeyer, a history professor at the U.S. Naval Academy.

"They'll be looking for the sort of technology the Germans had at the time, because this ship was considered state-of-the-art," he said. The find could answer questions about the way the ship went down and "how the crew lived and survived at sea on a German warship," he added.

No human remains were found near the Bismarck, on which all but about 100 of the 2,200 crew members perished. A memorial service for those who perished was held aboard one of the expedition's ships.

The ship will be left undisturbed as a grave site, like the Titanic, according to David Gallo, assistant director of the Center for Marine Exploration at Woods Hole. The battleship might be explored by the sophisticated robot, though, Gallo said.

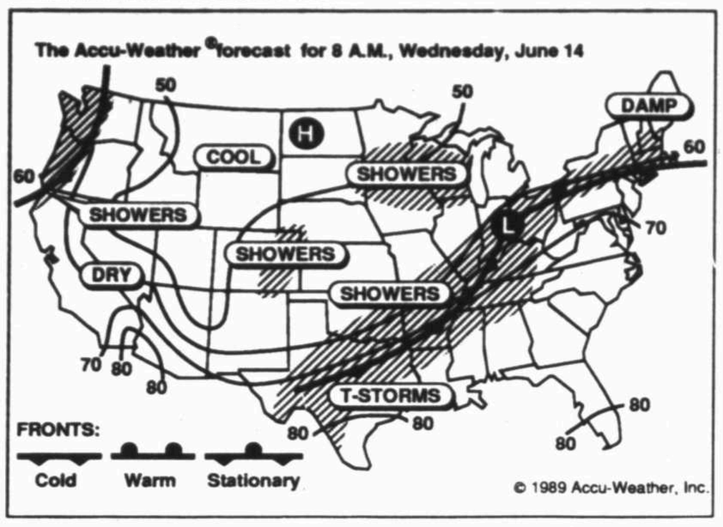

Ballard and a research team searched several days for the Bismarck last year. Instead of the Bismarck, the explorers found a 19th century sailing ship that has yet to be identified, Gallo said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Thunderstorms forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies and a 60 percent chance of thunderstorms — some possibly severe — are in the forecast for tonight according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 60s and winds will be from the northeast at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday is expected to be mostly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high will be in the middle 80s and winds will continue from the northeast at 10-20 mph.

Monday's high of 101 was three degrees cooler than the record high of 104 set June 12, 1947. The overnight low of 63 was six degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 57 set in 1979.

STATE

Flash flood-producing thunderstorms, accompanied by hail, high winds and lightning, roared across the northern portion Texas early today.

The thunderstorms produced flash flooding across a vast area of the state, including some street flooding in Dallas, Fort Worth, Wichita Falls and San Angelo. Amarillo received more than two inches of rain before the storms began their eastward trek.

The latest thunderstorm activity came on the heels of storms that triggered at least one tornado and caused damage across a vast area of the state.

A tornado struck the Panhandle town of Howardwick and high wind caused an estimated $2 million in damage to a blimp that was scheduled to appear July 11 at the Major League All-Star Game in Anaheim, Calif.

A man's body was recovered Monday from Lake Arrowhead where he drowned after jumping into the flood-swollen lake to retrieve his hat.

Rescuers called off a search of Mary's Creek Monday night after being unable to find a teen whose raft that also carried four other youths capsized while going over a spillway. The four other youths made it to shore. One of the youths, Richard Henkins was in fair condition at Harris Hospital, a spokeswoman said. Officials said a second youth was transported to Harris, but the spokeswoman said he was not there.

The Donley County sheriff's department said a tornado hit the community of Howardwick, population 155, which is seven miles north of Clarendon and about 55 miles east of Amarillo.

Two friends fishing with Kenneth Glenn Fincher, 20, of Wichita Falls, used tree limbs in an attempt to rescue him after he jumped into Lake Arrowhead to retrieve his hat. But the lake's current was too strong and swept Fincher out of reach. After a 45-minute search, Fincher's body was recovered.

A flash flood watch was in effect today for North Texas and northeastern portions of the South Plains. Severe thunderstorms were expected across North Central Texas and East Texas during the day.

Forecasts called for the possibility of more thunderstorm activity tonight except in extreme South Texas.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled through the Midwest and the South today, dumping rain and whipping up winds. Texas got the brunt of the severe storms earlier, with tornadoes and hail striking the Panhandle.

Tornadoes touched down Monday night in the northern Texas Panhandle near Fritch, Hedley, and Whiteflat, and in Middleton, Tenn. Thunderstorm winds gusted to 65 mph near Childress, Texas.

In Corning, Ohio, high winds Monday night tore the roofs off homes and caused power outages, but no one was seriously injured. About 15 homes in the southeastern Ohio city sustained wind damage, police said.

Flood watches were in effect for parts of Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

Thunderstorms this morning extended from western Oklahoma across the Texas Panhandle and north-central Texas through northwest Texas and northeast New Mexico, as well as from northern Mississippi across northwest Alabama and central Tennessee, also scattered over south central Missouri and central Illinois.

Today's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms from the southern Rockies across the southern Plains, the lower Mississippi Valley, the Ohio Valley and Tennessee Valley to the Atlantic states from central Maine through North Carolina, over the lower Great Lakes; and rain from upper Michigan across Minnesota and the Dakotas to eastern Montana.

Defector says Najib advised by Soviet

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A defecting Afghan army officer who claims he had access to top-level security records said today that a Soviet general is President Najib's top adviser.

"His name is Gen. Verinikov. He is a three-star general. He comes every day without failure to the headquarters meeting in Arg Palace and whatever he says is never rejected," Mohammad Kakar Neda told a news conference.

In Moscow, an officer at the Soviet Defense Ministry said the general had served as Najib's military adviser but left Kabul in February when the Soviet Union announced that the last of its troops had returned home from Afghanistan.

"Since the withdrawal of our forces, he's been here in Moscow and he hasn't been advising anyone," the officer said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

He identified the general as Valentin I. Varenikov, a different spelling than the one given by Neda, and said he had "one big star," denoting a higher rank than the three stars described by Neda. The officer said Varenikov was now the main commander of Soviet land forces.

Neda, who can be located only through intermediaries because he said he is concerned about his safety, could not be contacted immediately for further comment.

Western and Afghan observers in Kabul have said scores of Soviet advisers, both military and civilian, remain in Afghanistan.

A well-placed source said that a Soviet colonel was seen at Kabul airport in March. When recognized, the colonel said he had retired from the military and returned to Kabul as a civilian adviser, the source said on condition of anonymity.

Neda said he himself was promoted to brigadier general shortly before coming to New Delhi on March 23.

He said he served as secretary to the Afghan Supreme Military Council for the Defense of the Homeland, a 20-man group headed by Najib.

The council assumed top government authority when Najib declared a state of emergency on Feb. 18, three days after the Soviet Union announced it had ended its nine years of direct combat support for the Afghan army in the war against U.S.-backed Moslem guerrillas.

"Najib's support in the party is not very good, and if he did not have Soviets attached to him, he would not be able to survive," Neda said. "Right now he has a very strong Soviet support group, and with this group is Gen. Verinikov."

Neda said he had never heard the Soviet general's first name but had seen him and knew that he met top Afghan military officials.

Neda said he also had seen Afghan military documents that said 40,000 soldiers defected from the 250,000-man army between Sept. 1 and March 1.

Other papers reaching the council said Najib's government had "nominal control" of just 4,000 of Afghanistan's officially recorded 36,000 villages and 10,000 other villages were "destroyed and uninhabitable" after a decade of civil war, Neda said.

The rest of the villages, he added, were controlled by or sympathetic to the mujahedeen (Islamic Holy Warriors) who have been fighting to topple Kabul's Soviet-style government for the past decade.

Neda said he was a full member of the Supreme Military Council. His name, however, was not on the list of members announced by the government in February.

"That is correct," he said in response to a reporter's question. "In the beginning of March, I was promoted to this post."

His assertion could not be independently confirmed, but the Kabul government has a history of making appointments without public announcement.

Neda said he had been one of four secretaries attached to the Supreme Defense Council and was elevated to full council membership as a result of long-time association with Vice President Abdul Rahim Hatif, a senior council member.

The 47-year-old Neda said he was not a combat soldier and had spent most of his military career in engineering and construction work before rising in the military bureaucracy.

Neda's remarks were translated by Said Mohammad Maiwand, a self-exiled Afghan who opposes the Najib government and is at odds with most mujahedeen factions as well.

Neda, however, understood some English and said he spent part of 1978 in the United States on a military training course, studying English at San Antonio and engineering at Fort Belvoir, Va.

CHINA

The move infuriated authorities, who over the weekend issued an arrest warrant for the couple, further straining U.S.-Chinese relations already shaken by the military crackdown.

Fang, an astrophysicist, did not play an active role in the pro-democracy movement. But he has long been an outspoken human rights advocate, criticizing Marxism and Communist China's top leaders.

Newspapers and state-run television today intensified the official media's vilification of the couple.

The TV accused Li, a physicist, of manipulating student demonstrators from behind the scenes and claimed Fang was "supported by foreign elements."

Pictures of the two appeared next to an article in the People's Daily, the Communist Party newspaper, about the warrant for their arrest.

A letter purportedly written by an intellectual in the People's Daily taunted Fang for hiding in the U.S. Embassy. "You've gone to hide in a foreign embassy, what the hell kind of hero are you?" it said.

In Washington, the Bush administration indicated it will not allow the two to be arrested. International law forbids Chinese authorities from entering the embassy compound, which is regarded as American soil, without U.S. permission.

On June 3, thousands of troops entered Beijing and marched on Tiananmen Square. With gunfire, they cleared it of thousands of students who had for three weeks occupied the 100-acre expanse that is China's symbolic center of power.

The government says nearly 300 people were killed, mostly soldiers. But Chinese witnesses and Western intelligence say the toll could be as high as 3,000, most of them civilians.

Conservative Premier Li Peng appeared on television at a meeting of the Communist Party Politburo to again praise the military attack on Beijing.

"If we didn't send the military into Beijing, we would have had nationwide counter-revolutionary turmoil," he said.

Troops today maintained their positions throughout Beijing. The imperial palace bordering army-occupied Tiananmen Square reopened for the first time since martial law was declared May 20.

Streets running along the east and west sides of the square also opened to traffic for the first time since it was cleared of protesters. But many Beijing residents remain terrified by the occupation and crackdown.

China's senior leader, Deng Xiaoping, claimed the movement's leaders intended to turn China into a capitalist republic.

Yet while Deng and other conservatives consolidate their hold on power there has been no word on who is heading the Communist Party after the reported fall of Zhao Ziyang, who apparently opposed the crackdown.

GAS

Mangan said recent breakthroughs in the development of a CNG engine designed to replace two-stroke diesel engines used in buses and trucks was a technological coup that could give the natural gas industry a leg up in the alternative fuel battle.

"We will be trying some of the engines in buses in Fort Worth and Houston in demonstrations," he noted.

In a briefing paper published this week by the American Petroleum Institute, a long list of environmental and health concerns were enumerated for methanol.

Soluable in water, there is the danger that a large spill of methanol could contaminate ground water. Made by refining natural gas, methanol is highly toxic — as little as one ounce of the chemical can cause blindness; two ounces ingested can be fatal.

The fact that that it is almost odorless and tasteless makes it even a greater health hazard, the API report says. Even though 75 times more gasoline is used than methanol in the United States, the number of injuries and deaths from methanol is greater than for gasoline. The petroleum institute feels that widespread use of methanol could significantly increase the number of deaths and injuries.

There is also a safety problem with methanol because it burns with an invisible flame, making it extremely difficult to fight methanol fires. The clear chemical is also explosive at ambient temperatures and poses a problem of explosions in automobile tanks or fuel storage tanks.

The API also voiced concerns about utility and efficiency. Since methanol has a low energy density, it takes 1.8 times as much methanol as gasoline and 2.2 times as much methanol as diesel fuel to travel the same miles. This would require storing and transporting twice as much methanol, doubling the prospects of accidents, says the API report.

Its corrosive nature causes methanol to deteriorate rubber and most metals, requiring special materials in a vehicle.

Despite a long list of negative implications for methanol use, Joe Lastelic, a spokesman for API, says the organization which primarily represents the interests of major oil companies is not officially opposed to methanol or compressed natural gas.

"We hope to be doing a similar comprehensive study on CNG in the near future," said Lastelic. "Perhaps when that report has been completed we will be able to take a more official position."

SNAKES

Among the other snakes which Miller carted to Midland was his favored gray-banded king snake, which once had been viewed as a rare species.

But in his study of the snake as an undergraduate and graduate student at Sul Ross State University in Alpine, Miller found the snake to be in healthy numbers from West Texas to deep into Mexico.

"He is a very nice animal," Miller said, "and is not hyperactive."

Miller had spent four summers living under a bridge near Langtry, on the Texas-Mexico border, in studying and capturing the gray-banded king snake, which may be decked out in orange patterns.

Miller also displayed an Eastern chain king snake.

"This snake eats mice, bird eggs, and other snakes," he said.

Rattlesnakes are on their diet but not on Miller's. He shuns the handling of rattlers and keeps distance between their fangs and his hands. "We never handle rattlesnakes at all," he said. "We never touch them." And, as if he had a choice, he allows rattlesnakes to fulfill their role in nature. "They fill a niche," he said. "They take away harmful rodents."

Like other snakes, rattlesnakes shake their tails out of nervousness. And the rattlesnakes' tip-tail rattlers "make him more effective for other critters to know he is around by having a 'bell' on his tail." In Mexico, the rattlers are called a "bell," he said.

The Eastern chain king snakes, Miller said, "are immune to the rattlesnake's venom" and can be struck by a rattlesnake "without any adverse effects." The king snake is a "nice, mellowed, docile snake. They are real snake eaters.

The snake likes moisture and "hangs around swamps" on the East Coast.

"All snakes can swim," Miller said. "Now, all snakes don't like water. Some do."

Miller reached into another cotton sack and brought forth an orange-and-white albino corn snake. The reptile's seeming color came from blood vessels.

The corn snake is a big-time mouse eater.

Miller, who keeps snakes about the house, noted the increasing popularity of snakes as pets due largely to increased knowledge in how to breed snakes in captivity.

"Everybody's got them," he said to emphasize their popularity. His "everybody," however, did not include the Kiwanis membership.

Snakes which "breed easy cost the least," Miller said, "and breeds that are hard to breed, of course, are expensive."

The python, a popular large constrictor, dramatically has dropped in price due to the snake's in-captivity easy breeding and high production of eggs.

Miller, who has collected snakes from his rural New Jersey to deep into Mexico for most of his 44 years, also is a fancier of tree frogs.

But snakes are his passion.

"Most snakes eat mice," he said. Some are specialized in their dieting and prefer frogs, ants, slugs and snails, snakes and lizards.

Miller is keen on ensuring the survival of all of nature's snakes, frogs and other critters.

"Any time you lose any species, it is kind of sad that there aren't any more."

More and more, he said, "People are appreciating things," such as the wolves, bears and coyotes, in the wild. "They appreciate them now more than they did in the past.

"If you polled people today," Miller said, "you would find a growing trend for not wanting to lose a species — for a species to disappear."

SHIP

"There were quite a few reports about its position when it sank," Gallo said. "But the problem is, those reports can be off by a mile or more, and a mile at sea, when you're looking at the sea floor, represents a very large area to be covered in a search."

The demise of the dreaded Bismarck, which was equipped with eight 15-inch guns, began on May 24, 1941, when it encountered the Royal Navy off the coast of Greenland.

The Bismarck sank Britain's battle cruiser Hood but was hit by the Prince of Wales. The Germans then fled south for occupied France with the British in pursuit.

Two days later, British warships and aircraft located the crippled vessel and launched a furious attack. The Bismarck finally went down the next day.

The successful campaign was a significant victory for the Allies, who thwarted Hitler's plan to use the Bismarck to raid Atlantic Ocean shipping lanes.

Neimeyer said the victory also gave a big psychological boost to the Royal Navy, which was stunned by the loss of the Hood.

"Tis gave confidence to the carrier-aviation community that they could indeed sink a battleship," he said.

BAPTISTS

Also Monday, PBS reporter Bill Moyers withdrew a request to appear before the executive committee to discuss its criticism of his "God and Politics" documentary. The committee in February said the documentary was biased in support of Southern Baptist moderates.

Moyers said in a letter to the committee that he realized "I am up against a situation most un-Baptist: closed minds, and in the parlance of your host city, a stacked deck."

In other pre-convention business, a conservative pastor, Tom Elliff, pastor of First Southern Baptist Church in suburban Oklahoma City, was elected president of the 6,000-member SBC Pastor's Conference.

The central issues in the debate between the Southern Baptist moderates and conservatives cross over theological and political boundaries.

Conservatives accuse moderates of being open to biblical interpretations that challenge the foundations of Southern Baptist faith.

But the moderates charge conservatives with violating another central belief of Southern Baptists — that individuals are able to interpret the Bible for themselves.

The issues have engendered passionate debate. But Paul Pressler, a Houston judge who has helped rally conservatives to 10 straight presidential victories since 1979, said even if the moderates win the presidential election, the war is over.

Journalist's killer identified

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Authorities have identified the gunman who shot and killed a prominent Mexican journalist and the security official who allegedly planned the slaying, the district attorney said.

The gunman was "plainly identified," District Attorney Ignacio Morales Lechuga said in an interview on television Monday night. But he did not name the alleged assassin.

He said police and border guards nationwide were on alert at frontier checkpoints, airports, seaports, and train and bus stations for Jose Antonio Zorrilla Perez, who allegedly ordered the 1984 murder of Manuel Buendia.

Civil rights groups want Congress to block high court rulings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civil rights advocates seeking to prevent affirmative action programs from being rolled back are shifting their sights to Congress following a series of major setbacks in the Supreme Court.

"It is just not possible for civil rights advocates to do business in federal courts any more," Russell Galloway, a professor at the Santa Clara University School of Law in California, said Monday.

Galloway and others commented after the high court ruled 5-4 that white firefighters in Birmingham, Ala., are entitled to bring suit to attack an affirmative action plan approved eight years ago to settle a lawsuit. The white firefighters were not a party to the lawsuit and say they should not be governed by a settlement in which they had no say.

The decision was the latest in a series of high court decisions chipping away at affirmative action programs, which have been used to give hiring and promotion preference to minorities and women.

Civil rights groups contend the programs are necessary to compensate for years of past discrimination, but the high court's conservative majority is showing a new concern over the issue of reverse discrimination.

The court ruled in January that state and local governments may generally not impose racial quotas for hiring on public works projects. And on June 5, the justices made it more difficult for minorities to prove statistically that they are being relegated to less desirable jobs.

Ray Fitzpatrick, an attorney representing the white firemen in Birmingham, said Monday's ruling is a step toward ending "race-based quota promotions" that unfairly discriminate against whites.

Civil rights and women's groups, however, say they may ask Congress to reverse the high court rulings.

"I think a legislative remedy is something that is probably going to be pursued," said Judith Winston, a lawyer for the Women's Legal Defense Fund,

"The time may have come to again go to the Congress and attempt to get the Congress to overrule what the court has done in the civil rights area," said Patrick Patterson of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund in Los Angeles.

"I think it is indispensable at this point that the battle be taken to Congress," said Galloway, who specializes in affirmative action law.

Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on civil rights, said he was saddened by the court's decision and added, "We'll have to take a look at it" with an eye to possible legislation.

"This decision will open old wounds and create unfortunate new levels of racial animosity," Edwards said.

Already, he said, his staff has been meeting with civil rights groups and professors about the June 5 decision. He said legislation would be introduced and hearings probably held soon.

The last major congressional debate on civil rights was touched off by a high court decision in 1984 that placed limits on laws barring federal aid to schools and other institutions that discriminate. Legislation restoring the original broader interpretation of the laws was passed over former President Reagan's veto last year after a long struggle.

President Bush so far has been noncommittal on the issue of affirmative action, which was strongly opposed by Reagan. After the court's June 5 decision on statistical evidence, Bush said in response to a question that the ruling was still being studied but "sometimes you can ...take remedy in suggested legislation."

Some observers said they think Bush might be more amenable than Reagan was to legislative action in the civil rights field.

"I think the Bush administration is more concerned about reaching out to the black community than the past administration was," said T. Alexander Aleinikoff, a professor at the University of Michigan Law School

Twin earthquakes dramatize threat of Los Angeles faults

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Twin earthquakes that shook Los Angeles did little harm, but they scared people and highlighted the danger from recently discovered faults concealed deep beneath the nation's second-largest city.

The temblors, however, suggest the danger may be more likely to come from a series of moderate quakes than from a much-feared "big one."

"Nothing that happened today makes us fear a larger earthquake any more than we did before," said U.S. Geological Survey seismologist Lucile Jones. "What happened today should make you feel a little more relieved."

The Monday morning quakes injured one person and caused scattered minor damage downtown and in suburbs to the east, including cracked plaster, fallen ceiling tiles and broken windows.

Scientists said the sharp jolts at 9:57 a.m. and 10:22 a.m. measured 4.5 and 4.3 on the Richter scale, respectively. They were centered on the Elysian Park Fault about 8½ miles beneath Montebello, a city about 10 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles. At least five more small aftershocks followed.

The temblors sent high-rise construction workers and window washers sprinting into downtown Los Angeles streets and stranded some elevator passengers momentarily.

"It felt like a bomb struck the building," said Sheila Dickinson, a downtown worker.

Panicky callers overloaded telephone lines, making it impossible to get dial tones in many areas, said Michael Guerin of the California Office of Emergency Services.

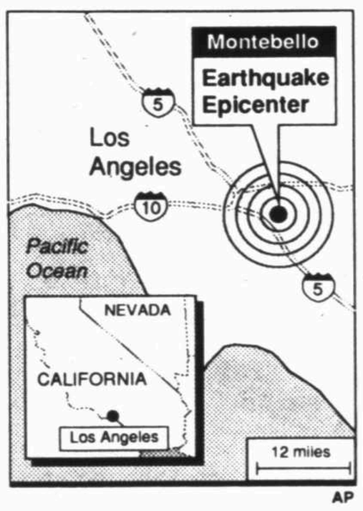

Based on historical patterns, Southern California faces a 1 percent to 2 percent chance of a bigger earthquake within three days, said Jones.

The Elysian Park Fault cuts a 60-by-10-mile swath through the heart of the Los Angeles Basin, stretching from Corona northwest to Whittier, then west to downtown Los Angeles, Hollywood, Beverly Hills, Santa Monica and Malibu.

It was discovered after causing the Oct. 1, 1987, Whittier Narrows quake, which, with its aftershocks, killed eight people, injured more than 200 and caused $358 million in damage.

That quake also spurred discovery of another fault, the 40-by-10-mile Torrance-Wilmington Fault, stretching from Newport Beach northwest through Long Beach, Los Angeles' Wilmington district, Torrance and Santa Monica.

Scientists don't know if the two faults relieve stress only by causing numerous mild-to-moderate quakes of magnitude-4 to 6, or also during infrequent major-to-great quakes of magnitude-7 to 8, said geologist Kerry Sieh of the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

AP

A major quake directly under downtown Los Angeles would be far worse than a "big one" on the more distant San Andreas Fault, about 50 miles to the north. Officials estimate a big San Andreas quake could kill up to 14,000 people, seriously injure up to 55,000 and cause $17 billion in damage.

On the Richter scale of ground motion, every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude.

French finding out about their revolutionary ancestors

By MARILYN AUGUST

PARIS (AP) — Tens of thousands of French people are rummaging in attics and cellars in search of revolutionary roots as part of the bicentennial commemorations of the French Revolution.

The process has helped filmmaker Patrick Brunet sort some things out about his ancestor — the man who chopped off King Louis XVI's head.

"Paris Writes Its History," a campaign launched in November by City Hall officials, has drawn more than 50,000 responses from people eager to chart their revolutionary trees.

Thanks to a team of volunteer geneologists and historians, some 2,500 people have established links to relatives who played parts, great and small, in the French Revolution 200 years ago.

A 19-year-old Peruvian student living in Paris saw the campaign posters on billboards, subway walls and magazine covers and contacted City Hall only to discover he is probably a descendant of the revolutionary leader Georges Jacques Danton.

"I approve totally of Danton's actions. He saved the revolution," said Carlos Andrac Poisson-Quintron. "He restrained he Terror. But not everyone in my family thinks so. My grandfather thinks Danton had too many heads cut off."

The man who wielded that bloody blade — some 2,800 heads rolled during the 12-month Reign of Terror — was Charles-Henri Sanson, the ancestor of filmmaker Brunet.

Brunet, 31, says the famous revolutionary executioner was a devout Roman Catholic and royalist who was "most unhappy" about beheading Louis XVI.

Brunet also had responded to City Hall's call, hoping historians could help him sift through letters, wills and marriage and death certificates to separate the truth from the "lies and legends" written about Sanson.

"The Sanson family has always intrigued people," Brunet said in a telephone interview. "I think it's because there's a certain morbid fascination with death. After all, during the Terror, people turned out to see executions."

The Sansons, who constituted a veritable dynasty in 1688-1847, were known for their dignified demeanor and efficiency in a gruesome business. Before the guillotine came into use in 1792, they put criminals to death with double-edged swords, hatchets, ropes and even their bare hands.

"Charles-Henri was also humanitarian — he had his victims wait their turn with backs to the guillotine so they wouldn't witness other executions," Brunet said.

The Sansons stayed with executing people because after a while it was the only thing they were able to make a living at.

"One of Charles-Henri's grandsons tried to make a living as a locksmith, but he failed when word got out that he was a Sanson," Brunet said.

Brunet, whose great-grandmother's cousin was married to the last of the Sansons, has also written a film about the French Revolution, but he has had no luck in finding a producer.

"The subject of the Terror is still somewhat taboo," he said. "That's not the part of the revolution that people are interested in commemorating."

Jacqueline de Bouet du Portal couldn't agree more. Her ancestor, Marie-Florence de Valory, was guillotined May 5, 1794, because "she was from an old aristocratic family, had a son abroad and secretly fed Austrian prisoners of war captured at Mayence."

"I'm scandalized by all the preparations surrounding the bicentennial," Mrs. de Bouet du Portal said. "It's going to cost a fortune. As a taxpayer, I'm going to pay. That's democracy.

"But as a descendant of a victim, I will not celebrate this anniversary. The really generous idea behind the revolution — the Declarations of Human Rights — was trampled underfoot during the 10 years that followed. They arrested, massacred, imprisoned and guillotined. It's perfectly indecent to celebrate that."

Sabine Renault-Sabloniere, 30, is a direct descendant of the Marquis de Lafayette, the American revolutionary hero. She says she is proud of his commitment to democratic ideals and hopes her own efforts on behalf of human rights in Lebanon, Romania and the Soviet Union perpetuate his legacy.

"He was faithful to his ideals, and refused honors and power because he was afraid they would in some way compromise his integrity," she said.

"It's amazing to think that at the age of 17, he had the nerve to brave the king and his family, raise money, buy a boat and sail off to America."

The call for descendants was also answered by a retired army general whose ancestor committed suicide upon learning that Robespierre had been guillotined.

Philippe Duplay said his ancestor, a cabinetmaker, rented a room to the revolutionary leader during the Reign of Terror and was so upset by news of his death, he shot himself in the head. His hat, with the gunshot hole, is a family heirloom.

Donatien de Sade, 13, says his parents won't let him read the works of his famous ancestor, the Marquis de Sade, who was imprisoned at the Bastille for novels that were considered blasphemous treatises promoting perversity and eroticism.

"They say I'm too young," he said. "But my grandfather has given me summaries."

Colleagues give zookeeper trip to Africa

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — When Edward Green retired after 38 years of looking after animals at the Audubon Zoo, his co-workers chipped in for a farewell present — a trip to Africa.

"It seemed to us that for someone who had worked with African animals for 20 years, it would be really a neat thing if he could go over there and see them in the wild," General Curator David Anderson said. "Especially for someone who had taught us as much as he had."

During his trip this month, Green hopes to see elephants, giraffes, rhinoceroses and gazelles liked those he helped care for.

Green, 63, had little schooling and no formal training in caring for animals, except for growing up on a farm in his native Woodville, Miss. What he knows about zebras and hippopotamuses, he picked up on the job.

His first zoo job was cutting the grass. After he became a zookeeper, he was assigned first to the monkeys, then lions, birds and sea lions before spending 20 years working with the hoofed animals.

When he started, the animals were housed in small pens or cages; now, most roam fields approximating natural habitats.

On a recent tour, he described the hippopotamus: a mean creature, who, despite her bulk and sluggish appearance, can leap suddenly out of her pool. A keeper must be constantly alert, Green said.

The giraffes were among his favorites. "I never had no trouble with them."

His least favorites? Grevy's zebras. And buffaloes.

Ethics chairman's wife reports large profit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The wife of House ethics committee chairman Julian Dixon earned over $150,000 in two years from an investment of less than $15,000 in companies that help run stores at Los Angeles International Airport.

Airport officials are looking into the two companies to determine whether they qualified properly as minority contractors. Although they had identical boards of directors, one was listed as a minority enterprise while another was listed as being run by women.

On Monday, Dixon amended his 1986 financial disclosure form to show that his wife, Betty, paid between $5,000 and $15,000 for the investment in the companies.

Dixon, D-Calif., initially told The Associated Press he did not have to reveal how much Mrs. Dixon paid for the high-yield investment because she owned no stock in the California companies, Mir Kanon Inc. and Peideau Inc.

But he told the House clerk in a letter Monday that "upon recent review" of the companies' articles of incorporation "it appears that, technically, Betty is deemed a stockholder."

"In this light, her acquisition of interest in Mir Kanon-Peideau in July 1986 also should have been reflected in the transaction section," Dixon said.

He said in a telephone interview he was "sorry that I made that mistake" of not disclosing the cost of the investment. "Obviously I feel badly about it."

Dixon's forms from 1986 showed that Mrs. Dixon's investment was worth between $100,000 and $250,000. Thus, the investment appears to have soared after she paid between $5,000 and $15,000 for it in July 1986.

Mrs. Dixon invested in Mir Kanon and Peideau three months after the companies were part of a joint venture awarded the concession to run duty-free stores at the world's third-busiest airport.

Dixon, who gained prominence in presiding over the ethics committee probe that ended with the resignation of Speaker Jim Wright, said in a telephone interview that the California investment has been "better than we ever expected."

Mrs. Dixon received dividends of over $100,000 in 1988 and of between $50,000 and $100,000 in 1987, according to financial forms disclosed for those years.

Dixon said there was nothing improper about his wife's business arrangement and that she was the "ideal person" to sit on the companies' boards because she has a background in retailing. Her Washington business, "Much Ado About Something Inc.," distributes advertising novelties.

As a member of both companies' boards, Mrs. Dixon said she attends meetings and helps set corporate policy.

Los Angeles airport officials are checking to see if the companies meet requirements to qualify as minority contractors.

Elks face criticism for white male membership

LOS ANGELES (AP) — For more than a century, the Elks club has chosen the kind of members it believes stand for the American ideals of equality, charity and brotherhood. For all that time, almost all of them have been white men.

Even in cities as racially diverse as Los Angeles, Elks lodges remain the preserve of the white male, with written rules that ban women and voting procedures that critics say stack the deck against blacks.

But that may be changing, according to civil libertarians and legal experts, because of recent challenges to the membership practices of the 121-year-old Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Several California lodges have threatened to go to court if they are unsuccessful in persuading the national organization at its convention next month in Atlanta to change voting rules to admit more black members.

The California attorney general's office is investigating possible civil rights violations by a Lompoc lodge that rejected two black applicants.

And a Utah woman rejected for membership in a St. George lodge has filed a sex discrimination lawsuit against the Elks club.

Elks leaders have strongly defended the club against all challenges, contending that members have a constitutional right to associate with whomever they choose. But legal experts say that the Elks will be held to the same civil rights laws the courts have applied to the Rotary club and other organizations.

Ultimately, they say, the Elks will be forced to change their ways.

"The Supreme Court has been very clear that it is not at all solicitous and protective of groups that want to discriminate," said Erwin Chemerinsky, law professor at the University of Southern California and an expert on civil rights litigation. "I'm sure that would include the Elks."

The accusations of racism and sexism and the prospect of change in membership have rattled Elks leaders and tarnished the reputation of the 1.6 million-member group. "Why's everybody picking on the Elks?" asks spokesman Robert Yothers. "I wish somebody would tell the true story, the good side of the Elks club."

The Elks project an image as American as the flag, its members donating their time and money to everything from rodeos to pancake breakfasts. The club raised $53 million last year for charity nationally.

Critics say the true story is actually an unusual mixture of charity and discrimination.

For most of its history, the Elks explicitly limited membership to white men. In 1973, the bylaws were changed to include all men, but women still were banned and voting rules that gave great power to a small group of members has effectively kept out blacks.

City gets OK to dig canal around plant

BROOMFIELD, Colo. (AP) — Officials welcomed a federal agency's decision allowing the city to resume digging a ditch around its reservoir to divert a stream allegedly contaminated at the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant.

"I'm elated," City Manager George DiCiero said after learning of the decision by the Environmental Protection Agency.

DiCiero said work on the ditch would resume today.

Meanwhile, Gov. Roy Romer said he won assurance in Washington, D.C., from James D. Watkins, head of the Department of Energy, that the federal government would give the state what it needs to conduct its own environmental testing at Rocky Flats.

"The purpose of the meeting was to deliver a message that they either have to clean it up or close it," Romer said of the plant, which processes plutonium for nuclear weapons. "The response I got from Adm. Watkins and his officials was absolute cooperation."

Romer said he also wants state workers to monitor the handling of the hazardous waste at Rocky Flats, rather than relying on the DOE.

"I intend to put in place the kind of monitoring where we don't need to rely on anybody else. We're going to have independent verification," Romer said.

Last Tuesday, 75 FBI agents and EPA investigators raided the plant as part of a U.S. Justice Department investigation into allegations of fraudulent disposal and burning of hazardous materials at the site.

An affidavit made public last week charged that hazardous chemicals were dumped illegally into creeks at Rocky Flats last November. The affidavit said the DOE, which owns the plant, and Rockwell International Corp., which operates it, tried to conceal the illegal disposal of wastes.

Following the allegations, Broomfield last week began digging a diversion ditch and building an earthen dam to divert Walnut Creek.

Walnut Creek flows out of Rocky Flats into Great Western Reservoir, which supplies half of Broomfield's drinking water. The creek provides about 5 percent of the water needs of this Denver suburb of 27,600 residents.

The EPA had halted the work over the weekend, saying the city needed federal permits. But EPA officials on Monday gave a go-ahead after meeting with city and federal officials and visiting the site.

"The flow in the river is an absolute trickle," said Max Dodson, director of water management for the EPA's Denver office.

Family's the key to better learning

The regular school year is over, but one of its major problems remains — the large dropout rate in the nation's high schools.

The fact that one out of four high schoolers quits school before graduation has caused concern not only among educators but many businesses seeking beginning employees with basic skills. Even many graduates are poor in arithmetic, spelling and other skills.

There is now considerable interest in a new West Virginia law that has cut that state's high school dropout rate by one-third. The law lifts the driver's licenses of students who leave school without graduating before they are 18 years old. A West Virginia driver's license may be obtained at age 16.

A dozen state legislatures are now considering similar programs. They are concerned not only about the needs of business, but severe social problems — two-thirds of those on welfare and in the nation's jails are high school dropouts.

The West Virginia program is a narrow attempt to solve a much more basic and larger problem — the continuing weakness of educational systems across the country. It is a limited and far from basic solution.

Yet West Virginia may be on to something. Those folks seem to be telling us that, instead of concentrating on educators for school reforms, we might try directing more efforts at students. If we can interest them in improving, we will have short-circuited the system and gone over the heads of weak educational leaders.

For years, we've heard school administrators and teachers complain that parents have removed themselves from the education of their children. Sadly, it seems the complaint is justified. It's past time for parents to resume an active role in the education of their children.

Family values — not education bureaucrats — are the keys to a good education. Driving a car has a family and social value. So do having a respectable job and good income. By leaving most education to educators, we have seen a long trail of failure throughout the nation. Getting parents back into the position of primary responsibility for the education of their children is the first step in making that educational process better.

Another View:

Atwater at large

By now you would think even Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater and his fellow fire-eaters would have come to understand that political expedience, if not political ethics and decency, would require a little restraint. But so far there has been no sign of it. Atwater began by saying he had no intention of disavowing a Republican National Committee circular insinuating that Democrat Tom Foley, the newly elected speaker of the House, was a homosexual. By the next night, in the face of outrage from members of his own party — including, it was said, the president — Atwater had called Foley to apologize. By the following day, Mark Goodin, director of communications for the RNC and author of the memo, had resigned.

So far so good. But along with those concessions and apologies came the pious (and implausible) denials. Goodin said he hadn't intended to do damage to anyone's reputation. Atwater didn't know about it, they both said. It should, Atwater said, be a closed incident, no hard feelings. But just as the ethical misconduct of people like former Speaker Jim Wright and Rep. Tony Coelho arises from an atmosphere of excessive ethical tolerance, so do Atwater's and Goodin's. Hit, say you didn't mean anything nasty, or deny that you knew about it, then hit again.

White House Chief of Staff John Sununu was unusually (and refreshingly) blunt when he repudiated the Goodin memo: "It's wrong," he said, "not because it damages our relationship with the Democrats. It's wrong because it's wrong." But both George Bush and Lee Atwater grew in part because of such wrongs. It was Atwater who created the Willie Horton campaign, complete with racist overtones, in last November's presidential campaign. It is Atwater who prides himself, as he puts it, in playing hardball politics. The trouble is that as a campaign operative, Atwater gets to throw the hardballs a lot more than he has to face them, and until his bosses, meaning the president, make it clear that they won't tolerate this stuff, it will go on. The Sununu statement was a start, but it would have been better, for the country and its politics, if it were Atwater who was now looking for a job, not just his memo writer.

Enough has already been said about the political reign of terror that has been set loose in Washington. The ethical concerns are real but, as in other upheavals, what was once a legitimate grievance has become a weapon of that terrorism. Given all that has occurred in the past month, it will be hard enough for Congress to operate with any semblance of trust and cooperation without people like Atwater and Republican whip Newt Gingrich setting off to scorch the earth. The self-styled hardball players of the House badly need a manager. The object of the game is good government; it is not fratricide.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 13, the 164th day of 1989. There are 201 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 13th, 1966, the Supreme Court ruled in the case of Miranda vs. Arizona that criminal suspects had to be informed of their constitutional rights prior to questioning by police.

On this date:

In 1886, King Ludwig II of Bavaria drowned in Lake Starnberg.

In 1888, Congress created the Department of Labor.

In 1898, the Yukon Territory of Canada was organized.

In 1900, China's Boxer Rebellion against foreigners and Chinese Christians turned violent.

In 1927, a ticker tape parade welcomed aviation hero Charles Lindbergh to New York City.

In 1944, Germany began launching bombing attacks against Britain during World War II.

In 1967, President Lyndon B. Johnson nominated Thurgood Marshall to become the first black justice on the Supreme Court.

In 1971, The New York Times began publishing the Pentagon Papers, a secret study of America's involvement in Vietnam.

In 1977, James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., was recaptured following his escape three days earlier from a Tennessee prison.

In 1981, a scare occurred during a parade in London when a teen-ager fired six blank shots at Queen Elizabeth II.

In 1982, King Khalid of Saudi Arabia died at 69.

In 1983, the U.S. space probe Pioneer 10 became the first spacecraft to leave the solar system, eleven years after it was launched.

In 1986, Benny Goodman, the clarinet-playing "King of Swing," died in New York at the age of 77.

Israeli prisons schools for rebellion

ISRAELI-OCCUPIED WEST BANK — Israeli prisons and detention camps have become schools for revolution in the occupied territories. Just as impressionable young American prisoners learn from their cell mates how to deal drugs, rob banks and murder, so do Arab youths learn the skills for a successful rebellion.

Jack Anderson

Even before the intifada, or uprising, began in December 1987, Israel thought it could stifle any unrest by throwing the leaders in prison. But the idea has backfired.

More than 20,000 Palestinians have been jailed during the intifada. That is about 1.3 percent of the population of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Imagine the same percentage of Americans in prison — 3.3 million people. That would touch most families in America, just as every Palestinian is touched. Everyone knows someone who has been in an Israeli prison.

The sheer numbers are the greatest evidence supporting the argument that Israel has carelessly stoked the fires of the intifada.

On a recent trip to the West Bank, we talked to a father whose teenage son was a fair-weather revolutionary, until the boy was thrown in prison for rock throwing. The distraught father leaned on his relatives in the United States for $1,000 bail. The money was raised in a week, but the father turned it down. He had visited his son and found the boy transformed. "He learned more from fellow prisoners in that week than all the schooling he'd had before," the father said. Both father and son agreed that the boy should serve out his term in the school for revolutionaries.

That doesn't mean Israeli prisons are soft. Ex-prisoners complain about beatings and torture. About a dozen prisoners have died mysteriously in prison.

The bleak conditions create an esprit de corps among the young and old prisoners, and the chief topic when they are allowed to talk is the intifada. Under the cloak of night, one village leader rounded up eight former prisoners to give us a first-hand account.

One 16-year-old told us he was "one of many who became a man of the intifada in prison." They joked about their exploits, like children rehashing a Halloween prank. But one of the eight was humorless. He was silent, even menacing, through hours of conversation by the other boys, and then told his story.

He had been throwing rocks one day in March 1988 with 20 or 30 other teens. Israeli soldiers surrounded their village and rousted the villagers out of their homes and into a mosque. The boy claimed some of the Palestinians were beaten and at least three wounded by bullets.

"It was the day here when everyone lost their fear," he said. "The Israelis made sure everyone would support the intifada with this action."

The boy was sent to prison where he learned everything he needed to know about doing his part for the intifada when he got out. Now, he said, "It is nothing to me to kill an Israeli."

That hardening of Palestinian children, by the thousands, threatens the security of the state of Israel more than the actions of any organized terrorist group. No matter what the outcome of the intifada, Palestinians and Jews will remain neighbors. Whether they live in peace or not may depend on Israel's will to end the cycle of mass imprisonment, which only leads to more hatred.

DENG'S BEDFELLOWS — China's senior leader Deng Xiaoping brought in the loyalist troops to quell the student uprising in Beijing. The troops are commanded by Yang She, who is the nephew of China's ceremonial president and Deng's lifetime ally, Yang Shangkun. Deng has also made some ominous new alliances. He headed the moderate faction that introduced economic reforms to China, but when other reformers, led by Zhao Ziyang, called for political reforms as well, Deng drew the line and turned against Zhao. Deng has now had to form new alliances with hardliners. That puts the hardliners back in control of the government. Now all they have to do is maintain control of the streets.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Pentagon's procurement secrets are leaking out all over Washington. The latest revelation was 15 pages of procurement specifications for cookies — a veritable cookie monster of instructions. There were details about diameter, thickness, color, cracks and something called "specular refraction," which must be a national security secret because we can't find it in any cookbook. We're puzzled about the poor schmucks who write Pentagon cookie specs for a living. What do they say when they get home and their spouse asks, "What did you do today, honey?"

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Walesa, Fang, Sakharov today's heroes

WASHINGTON — America has a new house guest. He is the astrophysicist Fang Lizhi — pronounced Fong Lee Dzuh, the last syllable like the French je — the Most Wanted man on the enemies list of the Second Cultural Revolution.

William Safire

You can send him and his family a welcome note care of the U.S. Embassy in Peking, where they are holed up under our protection. The asylum granted him has infuriated the Deng regime, already incensed at the way the Voice of America is undermining their Orwellian line that only soldiers, not unarmed students, were killed in the Tienanmen massacre.

No matter how it strains relations, we are not about to turn Fang over to this decade's version of the Red Guard. Under international law, that diplomatic compound is American territory; if it were invaded, China would become an outcast nation, much like Khomeini's Iran after the rape of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

We have extended our diplomatic hospitality at some length before, from persecuted Pentecostals and Jews in Moscow to Cardinal Joseph Mindszenty in Budapest; the Hungarian prelate was freed from Communist prison during the 1956 Hungarian uprising and remained our guest — embarrassing the puppet regime — for 15 years.

We owe Fang a special welcome; he was the dissident invited to our embassy when President Bush visited Beijing in February. When Communist police harassed our invitee, Bush made his first foreign-policy mistake in refusing to protest publicly.

Other Chinese patriots, imprisoned for years or now being hunted, have a claim to leadership in martyrdom, and the man the world saw trying to stop a column of tanks will always be etched in memory. But Fang is now the dissident in the fishbowl, the new Mindszenty, the next Nobel winner, publicized by official denunciation and protected by us.

This makes him one of the trio of the world's most famous dissidents — individuals who come to personalize and symbolize freedom.

Last week, one of the trio, Solidarity's Lech Walesa, rose in power from dissident to opposition leader. The hero of the Gdansk shipyard strike — his activity harassed and declared unlawful for a decade in Poland, but steadfastly supported by courageous Poles and by organized labor in America — reached a new level in his climb to the official leadership of his nation.

Central to world support, and to the local power and protection that come from international celebrity, is the willingness of a charismatic individual to suffer, to cry out, to lead.

The Soviet citizen who continues to ennoble and annoy his people by his refusal to be corrupted by cooption is Andrei Sakharov. He is today's Elijah, a man with the unpopular message of the truth.

In Washington last November, the physicist told a gathering of scientists "I am a poor orator" and proved it with a mind-numbing lecture on the instability of the proton. But in Moscow last week, attacking the "aggressive obedience of the majority" to the smooth dictation of Mikhail Gorbachev, his non-Communist manifesto could be heard round the world:

"If you float downstream singing lullabies to yourselves," he told all the smug deputies content with the trappings but not the reality of democracy, "... the growing tension may explode in our society, bringing about the most dramatic consequences."

Then the great physicist tried an experiment in free speech that tested the validity of glasnost: he started to urge an official expression of repugnance after the Tienanmen massacre, even to the recall of the Soviet ambassador.

The results of the Sakharov experiment were revealing: Gorbachev, who captivates the West with his forbearance in the face of personal criticism, will not accept free speech in the Soviet Congress on matters touching on his new prerogatives.

Mightily displeased, the Soviet leader reached for the button that controls the microphones and cut Sakharov off. So much for glasnost; on substance, the mike belongs to Mikhail.

Future historians, examining the decline of Communism in the 1980s, will duly note names like Deng, Jaruzelski and Gorbachev as transitional figures who provoked, delayed or sought to avoid the inevitable counterrevolution.

Our grandchildren will be studying the dramatic change of primacy in most of the world from the lust for order and security to the yearning for freedom and opportunity. They will pay far greater attention to Fang, Walesa and Sakharov as the real newsmakers and authentic heroes of these times.

CHARLEY REESE

Sullivan brought in cheap-shot journalism

The current scandal season in Washington reflects poorly on both the politicians and the press.

Some journalists who slavered and gleefully screamed sleaze when Republicans were objects of allegations of unethical behavior have made fools out of themselves trying to minimize the allegations against House Speaker James Wright. Nothing cuts the artery of credibility so keenly and easily as the double-standard.

Charley Reese

If it was wrong for the late Sen. Joe McCarthy to accuse people of treason based on anonymous sources, then it is equally wrong for the press to publish allegations of wrongdoing based on anonymous sources.

CBS TV and the Washington Post just did that to Rep. William Gray, a liberal Democrat. They quoted unnamed sources that Gray was the subject of a criminal investigation involving payroll padding.

Even if the story is true it remains unfair. An investigation is not an accusation of wrongdoing; it is merely an inquiry, sometimes prompted by an accusation made privately to the police, to determine if in fact any laws have been violated. A person who might be the subject of such an investigation stands not even formally charged with any wrongdoing much less convicted of any.

If both the police and the media are concerned with fairness, they will not allege wrongdoing until an investigation produces a formal charge. You don't need a graduate-level course in ethics to understand why. It is unjust to cloud a man or woman's reputation in public unless some formal charge has been lodged against them.

Unfortunately, it has become a common practice, especially in the Washington press corps. You can blame the Supreme Court. In its Sullivan decision, which set a double standard for public figures in libel cases, the Supreme Court did more harm to journalism than the sedition laws of the first federalist administration. It ushered in the era of cheap-shot journalism.

In pre-Sullivan days, the press had the only defense it should have against a charge of libel: the truth. If what was printed was true, and you could prove it was true, there was no libel. That remains the case for private figures. But with Sullivan, the Supreme Court said public figures must prove not only that the allegation is false but that it was printed with malice.

So corrupting has that decision been that we now have some journalists saying publicly that having to prove what we write is true would have a chilling effect on journalism. Well, that's absurd on its face. Some of the most daring and finest investigative journalism was done prior to Sullivan. If truth is NOT what we're interested in, then the whole philosophical justification for a free press collapses.

I go further and say Sullivan has positively harmed investigative journalism since it has removed the incentive reporters had to build a case that would stand up in court. It is eroding our one and only coin with which we can buy public support for a free press — credibility.

Public figures have the same right to justice as private figures. They can be criticized for their public acts or failures to act or their policy positions, but it should be aboveboard. Criticism published and attributed to anonymous sources is like mugging a man in a dark alley.

Public figures have a right to face their accuser. Public figures have the right to a presumption of innocence until wrong has been proven. And public figures have a right to demand that the media not become an accessory to character assassination.

He's a short-sighted journalist indeed who thinks an arrogant press playing free and easy with people's reputations and showing a damn-the-public attitude has a future.

Charley Reese is a columnist for King Features Syndicate.

NATION IN BRIEF

Justice says Gray not target of probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. William H. Gray III is not the target of a criminal investigation, the Justice Department said in a statement issued less than two days before a House leadership election in which the Pennsylvania Democrat is a candidate.

Gray, a candidate for majority whip, said the department's statement Monday proved his earlier accounts that he was not targeted in a preliminary investigation that government sources have said involves allegations of a "no-show" employee on his staff.

"Congressman Gray is not the target of a criminal investigation by the Department of Justice," the department said in the statement issued Monday night. "Congressman Gray and his office have been fully cooperating with the Department of Justice and the FBI."

Department spokesman Dan Eramian said Attorney General Dick Thornburgh authorized his executive assistant, Robert S. Ross Jr., to make the statement. Eramian declined to answer questions on why the statement was issued Monday night.

Gray's top aide, Jon Plebani, said he had been told the department issued the statement because officials there believed news leaks about the investigation had done Gray a "serious disservice" and possibly had influenced the whip contest. Gray, currently chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, is one of three candidates for the post.

Gray, in a statement, said: "I have said from the beginning that I am not a target and this confirms it. I have said from the beginning that I and my staff have cooperated fully and this confirms it. I have done nothing wrong and this too will be confirmed."

Rear shoulder belts urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is giving carmakers six months to equip all new hardtop cars with backseat lap and shoulder belts, but a safety research group says the new rule doesn't go far enough.

Industry officials, meanwhile, said the order announced Monday by the National Highway Traffic Safety Admnistration came as no surprise but nonetheless might speed up some planned installations.

More than half of 1989 cars already have such belts, and they are scheduled for nearly all 1990 models, industry and government officials said.

The rule will apply to all cars built after mid-December, except convertibles, which are unlikely to be affected until the 1991 model year.

The safety agency said it was still working on detailed installation requirements for the rear-seat belts as well as orders requiring them for convertibles, vans, small trucks and utility vehicles.

Rear seat cushions in some cars may be too soft or improperly designed for effective shoulder belt use in the rear, he said. The institute is an independent, nonprofit research and educational organization funded by the insurance industry.

Marines join plane search

HONOLULU (AP) — Heavy rain and strong winds prevented helicopters from searching a remote valley for the source of an emergency radio signal, believed to be from a missing tour plane with 11 persons aboard.

The twin-engine Scenic Air Tours plane disappeared Sunday afternoon on a planned hour-long flight from Hawaii Island to Maui Island.

"We'll be praying for a break in the weather," Hawaii County Deputy Fire Chief Ed Bumatay said.

A Marine Corps reconnaissance platoon equipped with rapelling ropes and other mountaineering equipment was scheduled to join in the search today, officials said.

A Coast Guard helicopter picked up the emergency signal from the Waimanu Valley region on the northeast side of the island Monday.

Skipper pleads innocent

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Former tanker captain Joseph Hazelwood has pleaded innocent to state charges of criminal mischief leveled after the Exxon Valdez rammed a reef, triggering this nation's worst oil spill.

If convicted of the three felony counts of second-degree criminal mischief, Hazelwood could face up to 15 years in jail and $150,000 in fines. He entered his plea Monday in Superior Court.

Officials on Monday also announced the Exxon Shipping Co.'s Exxon Valdez would be towed to San Diego for more than $25 million in repairs.

Hazelwood, 42, of Huntington, N.Y., has already pleaded innocent to misdemeanor charges of operating a ship while intoxicated, reckless endangerment and negligent pollution. He remains free on $50,000 bail.

Bush takes jog to show he can 'cut the mustard'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush took a lunch time birthday jog Monday "to show that 65 can still do three miles."

The temperature was 77, the humidity was 60 percent and Bush's T-shirt was soaked with presidential sweat by time he finished his jog at Fort McNair, an Army base in southwest Washington.

"I wanted to show that 65 can still do three miles," Bush huffed.

He reached into his limousine for a plastic bag containing ice and cans of orange soda, tossed a soda to an aide and had one himself.

Accompanying the president on the run were a military police cruiser and a few Secret Service agents in jogging gear carrying walkie-talkies. At the end, a handful of other joggers were tailing along, too.

Also along for the run was Joseph Bagnerise Jr., 20, son of the base commander and a junior in political science at Louisiana State University.

His father said that when he got word that Bush was coming to the base for a run, he rushed over to the State Department Credit Union, where his son has a summer job, to bring him back to accompany the president.

Joe Jr. had run once before with Bush. His mother, JoAnn Bagnerise, said she had worried that time about her son's ability to keep up with Bush because the young man suffers from asthma. "I was afraid that he was going to embarrass himself, but he did all right," she said.

She carried a hastily made sign that said, "Happy birthday Mr. President, with Love," and some snapshots she had taken of Bush's first run with her son. She took more snapshots Monday until her camera ran out of film.

Joe lifts weights and has such muscular arms that reporters on the sidelines overheard Bush say, as they ran by, that he looked like an LSU fullback.

Turning to a reporter, Bush called out as he ran by, "It wouldn't hurt you to do a little (running) yourself."

On his way to Yellowstone National Park to inspect last summer's fire damage, Bush invited reporters aboard Air Force One into his compartment for a celebration, cutting a chocolate cake himself while aides passed out champagne.

The president, in a jovial mood, brandished a newspaper article on the advantages senior citizens get, such as discounts on mass transit fares.

Barbara Bush — who turned 64 on Thursday — violated an agreement not to exchange gifts this year and give him two pairs of tennis shorts, the president said.

On arrival at West Yellowstone, Montana, Bush was serenaded with "Happy Birthday" by about 700 well-wishers at the airport.

Bennett: Americans willing to finance drug war

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Drug czar William J. Bennett said on Monday that Americans are ready to pay higher taxes to finance a new Bush administration war on drugs.

In an interview with the Hearst News Service, Bennett, 45, the former secretary of education who became federal drug-policy coordinator earlier this year, said he doesn't "think there's any question" about American willingess to chip in more tax dollars to combat drugs, an effort costing $4.3 billion this year.

But he said he doesn't know if a tax increase "is in the cards."

Under the 1988 law that established his office, Bennett has until Sept. 5 to fashion a national strategy for combating drugs.

In formulating the plan, Bennett said, he is not "trimming" his proposals because of budget concerns.

"We're not going to be silly, (and) we're not going to be wasteful," he said. "But it will be an honest strategy (and) it will probably cost more money."

Asked where the additional funds would come from, Bennett replied: "I don't know. That's a matter for Brother Darman to work out." Richard G. Darman is director of the president's Office of Management and Budget, which prepares the administration's budget proposal.

Bennett also said that federal drug-interdiction efforts along the U.S.-Mexico border are forcing traffickers to use alternate routes for shipping narcotics, including direct flights from South America to the Pacific Northwest and New York.

With more federal agents and U.S. military personnel now along the 1,933-mile border with Mexico, traffickers are making a wider loop, flying directly from South America to areas surrounding San Francisco, Portland and Seattle on the West Coast, and to New York and Canada on the East Coast, he said.

Bennett said he could not quantify the extent of trafficking along these new routes. But he stressed that "the longer distance they have to travel, the more complicated it is for them. That's good. It's disruptive."

Bennett's observations come at a time when U.S. interdiction efforts are under growing criticism. Last week, a General Accounting Office report concluded that the government's $300 million air interdiction program has not dented the amount of cocaine coming in from Colombia, Peru and Bolivia.

Acknowledging some validity in the criticism, Bennett said, "If that's all you're doing, that's not enough. You're still dealing with traffickers that are going to get drugs in. It's only a piece (of the antidrug war)."

He added: "The problem is I think we relied too much on interdiction. We built a fence along the border without working closer to the source (of drugs overseas) or working harder inside the fence."

Bennett noted some progress over recent months, including figures showing a decline in drug-related homicides. However, he said he could not explain the reason for the drop.

The National Security Council is studying options for reducing the flow of cocaine coming in from South America, Bennett said.

However, he added, the United States will have a hard time convincing South American nations to crack down on trafficking when "we are the third nation in the world in terms of marijuana production."

A State Department survey shows Colombia is first and Mexico is second.

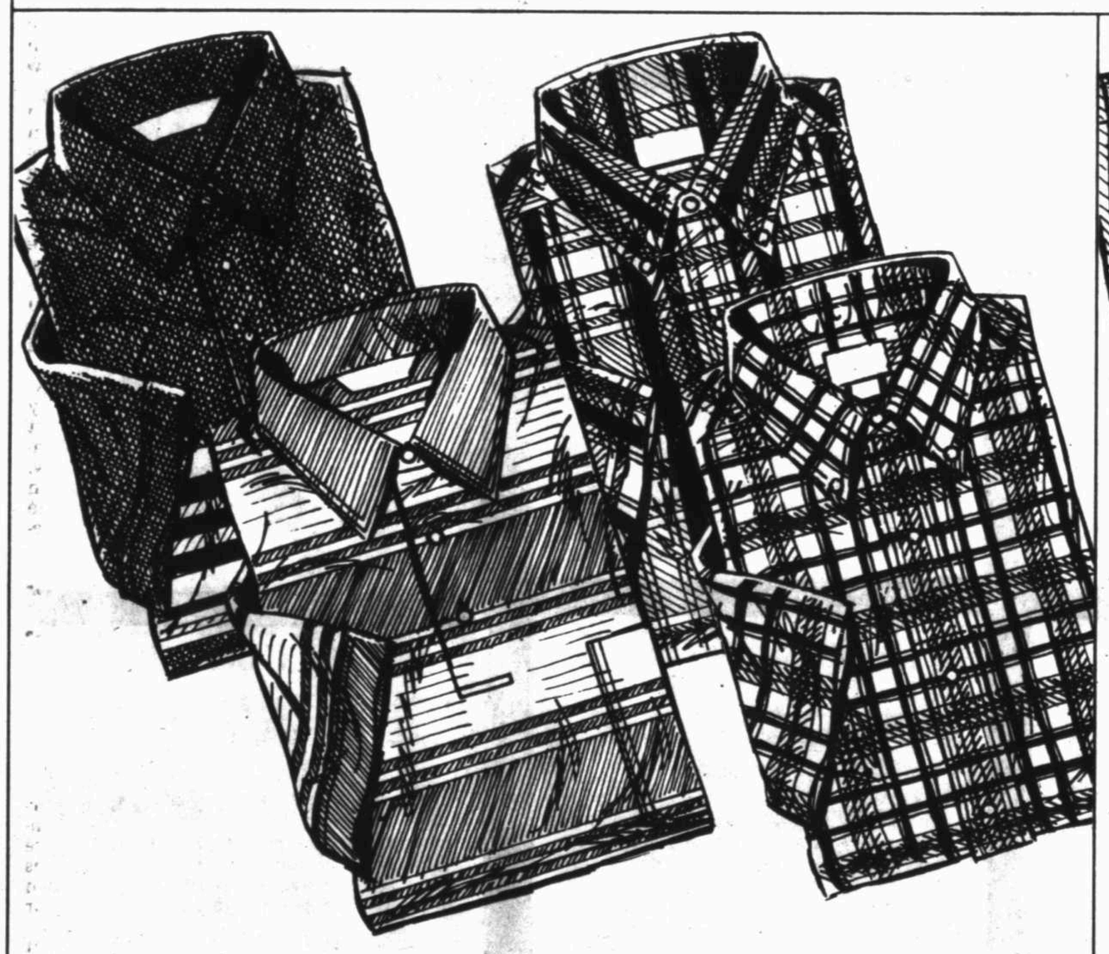

Part of the domestic U.S. marijuana crop goes to Europe and South America, he said.

Agencies present budgets to commissioners

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County's three-month-long budgetary process began Monday with the five-member commissioners' court hearing 1990 spending requests from at least five county department heads.

The budget sessions were to resume this morning and continue through Wednesday morning.

Among those county officials going before commissioners Monday was County Attorney Mark Dettman, who proposed no increases in his $398,000 budget for 1990.

Also offering spending requests with little or no change were extension agent Ernest Kiker, PBX manager June Davis and State District Judge Vann Culp.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, Road and Bridge Superintendent Albert Stewart and District Attorney Al Schorre were among those officials expected to present their wish lists later today.

The three-month county budgeting process began with County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin issuing memos to the 25 department heads requesting budget proposals.

After each of the individual budgets are presented to the court, Jarnagin then will estimate what funds the county can bring in from property taxes and fees.

Jarnagin will set up three separate tax rate "scenarios" based on his prediction of Midland County property values.

Preliminary estimates show that tax values in Midland County have decreased to their lowest point since 1982, with the county losing $45 million from last year.

Midland County's value was $3.37 billion in 1982 and peaked at $4.67 billion before starting a gradual decline and leveling off at $3.54 billion this year.

Based on preliminary figures from the Midland Central Appraisal District, Midland County would have to raise taxes from 16.50 cents per $100 valuation to 16.92 cents to generate the same amount of revenue as last year.

Because Midland appraisal district is going through property value disputes, where some go before appraisal review boards and attempt to have their property values lowered, final figures will not be set until mid-July.

In other court proceedings Monday, commissioners executed a 60-month financing contract with IBM Corp., agreeing to purchase a new $500,000 computer system to replace one they bought two years ago.

Data Processing Manager Bill Finch said the new computer is capable of handling five times more data than the present system, which he deemed too small to accommodate the volume of information stored by the county.

Commissioners plan to pay for the new computer, in part, through the sale of the present system.

The Midland County Sheriff's Department, which is buying a new AT&T computer system under a similar plan, received unanimous support from commissioners to go ahead with the purchase arrangements.

Painter told the court that he should be able to sell the present computer for no less than $35,000.

Both computers should be on line by July 1.

In other business, commissioners:

■ Agreed to donate a used van formerly operated by the County Victim/Witness Assistance Program to the Greenwood Volunteer Fire Department;

■ Discussed the merits of purchasing new road equipment with Bruce Peeler of Airmaster Equipment;

■ Authorized Midland County Election Administrator Bettye Calvert to negotiate with Business Records Inc. an exchange of voting machines purchased from the company last year for a new, updated system;

■ Agreed to begin contract negotiations with N.C. Sturgeon & Associates on its bid of $1,038,941 for the construction of the downtown law enforcement office building;

■ Approved an $89,000 change order for the new downtown jail, which will include additional doors and controls, cameras, and a realigned kitchen facility to enhance overall security;

■ Reappointed Edward Weyman to the Board of Trustees of the Permian Basin Community Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

Some Lubbock area bird lovers welcome the return of the mosquito-gobbling purple martin. This largest of North America's swallows eats about 2,000 mosquitoes per day.

Bird fanciers don't find martins hard to swallow

LUBBOCK (AP) — Rent-free house. Twelve rooms with balconies. Quiet, residential neighborhood.

If purple martins could read, the above information might appear in classified ads. In return for the free rent, any purple martins taking up residence would entertain their hosts with music and aerobatics — and gobbling up mosquitoes and flies during their seasonal visit.

"One purple martin will eat over 2000 mosquitoes a day," said John Kirksey of Lubbock, as he watched a flock of the birds circle above his front yard. Several of the birds winged their way down to the two purple martin houses, each atop a 14-foot-high aluminum pole.

The purple martin is the largest of North America's swallows. The adult male is slightly larger than a sparrow and blue-black in color. The female is light bellied with grayish breast and throat. Immature birds of both sexes have mixed blue and gray underparts. All sport a moderately forked tail.

Whether it is a male or female, adult or immature, the purple martin has been called "our most admired bird" and "America's most-wanted bird." The Martin's annual migration from South America to nest in North America is the first sign of spring for many urbanites.

But putting out the welcome mat, complete with the latest amenities in a purple martin condominium, doesn't necessarily guarantee that purple martins will accept your offer. Experience birders and professional ornithologists have been known to put up martin houses to no avail.

Lola Oberman began a chapter in her book "The Pleasures of Watching Birds" with "We've given up on purple martins." The surrender followed six years of putting up various houses without any success.

George H. Harrison, the highly regarded naturalist, in his book "The Backyard Bird Watcher," warns, "If you don't have any martins in the general proximity of your home to begin with, the chances are not good that you can attract them. Most would-be martin houses usually become 'ghettos' for house sparrows or starlings."

Kirksey enjoyed success after one unproductive season. When his first martin house didn't attract any of the favored visitors, Kirksey decided it was too close to a high tree. (Martins are said to prefer houses in open areas that provide space for the bird to make a long glide to the nesting site.)

In the year when the house was moved to a more open area of the front yard, a martin "scout" checked the accommodations. He departed after a brief inspection, returning a few days later with several other martins.

When the martins showed an interest in staying around, Kirksey put up a second house. Now both houses have nesting martins.

"We've had them coming to our yard for four years," Kirksey said. "This is the third year that they've nested."

'Hard work' of ranching key to probation officer

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Experiences on the family ranch served Richard V. Russell well in preparing him for his dual role as an officer and counselor for the United States Probation Office in Midland.

"Ranching people tend to be hard workers, very conservative, don't waste money, treat people right, and they are usually disciplined people," said Russell, who recently was named officer-in-charge of the U.S. Probation Office in Midland. "They measure success by the quality of ranch life."

Russell, 47, sees a parallel in the good life on the West Texas ranch and in the lives of probationers and parolees who, ideally, are into rehabilitation.

Not all are.

"Ranch life is hard work," Russell said. "It takes a lot of discipline." Ranchers "tend to be their own masters. They make or break themselves."

And that is the way it is in most people's lives, including those of Russell's clients, who are ordered by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton to be law-abiding citizens.

If not, they could wind up in prison for violating terms of probation.

Russell and two probation officers, David Worland and Maria Nunez, oversee probationers in the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas. Russell, who has worked for the probation office since 1974, was promoted after Jack Swan retired earlier this year.

In his childhood and youth, Russell spent summers and holidays on the family ranch near Marfa.

"That's where I developed that attitude" toward discipline, hard work, conservation, conservatism, and the outdoors.

After graduating from high school in Laredo in 1959, Russell attended Sul Ross State University in Alpine, where he studied business and played football. Following graduation in 1963, he coached football and taught business at El Paso High School until 1967.

Richard Russell

"I had to teach," he said, "and I didn't like the confinement of the classroom."

But coaching suited him.

"To be a good coach, you have got to be a good teacher."

In 1967, he received a master's degree in counseling and guidance from the University of Texas at El Paso.

For the next seven years, Russell worked in Austin for the Texas Rehabilitation Commission, where he was a counselor and program specialist.

"At that time, rehabilitation was becoming a popular concept in corrections," he said.

Russell joined the U.S. Probation Office in 1974.

By that time, he was developing his philosophy on corrections.

"I don't think you can rehabilitate somebody," he said. "They rehabilitate themselves."

And rehabilitation begins with citizenship, which isn't emphasized strongly enough today, he said, and with a law-abiding attitude.

"Then, you can start improving yourself through hard work and discipline," Russell said.

"In coaching, you stress discipline. You stress hard work. You stress teamwork. To me, that's what citizenship is all about."

In his work as officer-counselor, Russell places priority on the law-enforcement aspect of his job.

"My mission as a probation officer is to protect the public by enforcing conditions of probation and then to help the clients through rehabilitation efforts," he said.

"I feel very strongly about that. A man has got to abide by the rules of society," Russell said. "By enforcing the conditions of probation, we are indirectly protecting society. If I can help him succeed in life through rehabilitation efforts, I will."

At the federal level, defendants can range from income-tax violators, bank embezzlers and kidnappers, to bank robbers and narcotics traffickers. They may be doctors, lawyers, bankers, craftsmen, laborers, con artists or desperate people from various stations in life.

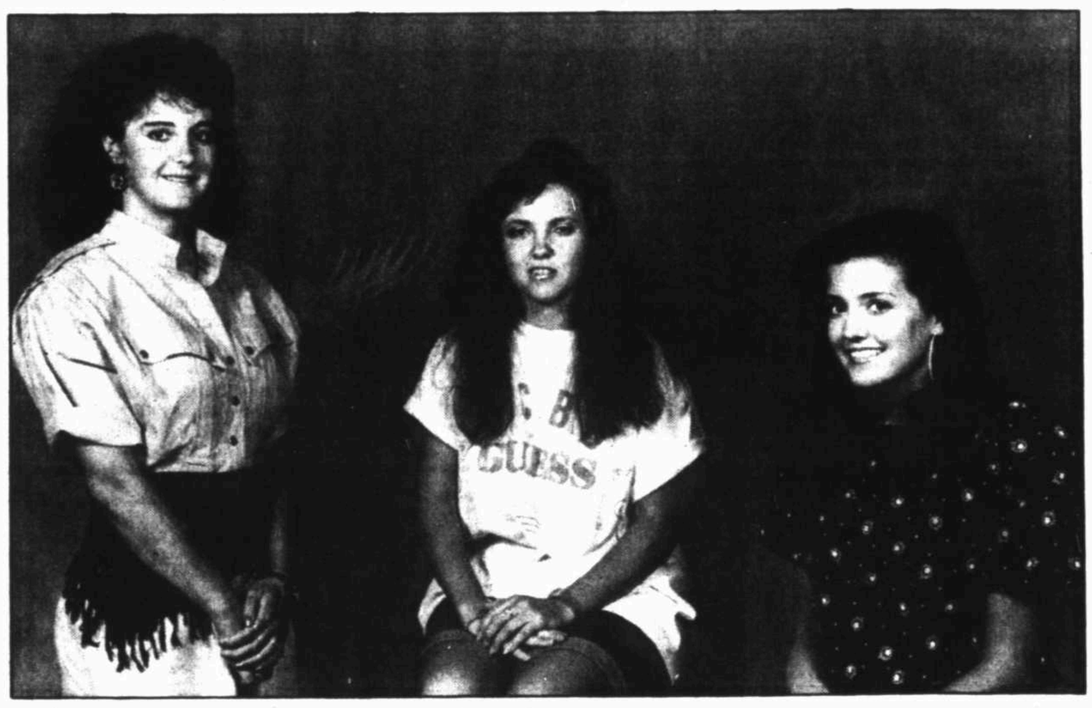

"The vast majority of people placed on probation or coming out of prison on parole are going to complete their supervision successfully," Russell said.

His enthusiasm for his job is fired in part by his strong belief that children are the "most important asset" in America's society.

"Nobody is ever born bad," Russell said. "With the right direction, I think the vast majority of people end up as good citizens."

And that is why Russell said he feels so strongly that the "best contribution" he can make to society is in giving of his time, talent and energy to the youth of the community.

Three local students will be attending the Bluebonnet Girls State activities in Seguin later this month. From left, they are Tara Rothwell, Janet Fretwell and Kimmy Brune.

3 local teens attend Girls State

From Staff Reports

Woods W. Lynch Unit No. 19, American Legion Auxiliary of Midland, will sponsor three local girls to attend the upcoming Bluebonnet Girls State.

They are Kimmy Brune of Midland High, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A.J. Brune; Tara Rothwell of Lee High, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rothwell; and Janet Fretwell of Greenwood High, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Fretwell.

Alternates are Reema Shroff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nick Shroff; Cathy McGavran, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William McGavran III; and Betsy Binnion, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dayle Binnion.

Girls must be a junior in high school to be eligible to attend.

The session starts today and continues through June 23 at Texas Lutheran College in Seguin. Its purpose is to teach the fundamentals of self-government and to create within the girls a more earnest desire to be an interested citizen of our state and nation.

They will study city, county and state government and participate in these forms of government by establishing their own city and county within Girls State.

They will learn about filing for office, elections and campaigning, as well as serving as a member of the House of Representatives or the Senate of Bluebonnet Girls State.

The existing laws of the State of Texas are used for this teaching program.

One of the highlights of this program is a trip to the State Capitol where the elected governor of Girls State will be sworn in by Texas officials.

Bluebonnet Girls State is sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary, Department of Texas.

Firm threatens to take V-22 overseas

FORT WORTH (AP) — Faced with losing the government contract for development of the V-22 tilt-rotor aircraft, Bell Helicopter Textron may take the project overseas, the company's president said.

Bell and Boeing helicopter companies will build the aircraft — which takes off like a helicopter and then tilts its engines to fly like an airplane — if they have to go to France to do it, said L.M. "Jack" Horner.

Speaking to reporters at the Paris Air Show, Horner recalled the work done in Europe by the Wright brothers on the first plane.

"The Wright brothers came here after they couldn't sell their airplane in the United States and started the whole thing. People forget that," he said.

The V-22 is being jointly developed by Bell and Boeing Helicopters, of Ridley Township near Philadelphia, under a $1.8 billion Pentagon contract. The aircraft is being assembled and tested in Arlington.

But its development has been threatened by the proposed withdrawal of federal funds from the 1990 budget, which takes effect Oct. 1. The funding cut could force the company to lay off 1,500 workers, Horner said in Paris. That number is lower than earlier figures the company has given, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

If the program is not restored, Horner said, building or financing the tilt-rotor overseas is one of the options that Bell and Boeing have.

"We're going to get this thing built. How we get from here to there — I don't know yet," he said.

Parents can't disclose settlement from state

FORT WORTH (AP) — Parents of a mentally retarded boy whose condition worsened at a state school have settled a federal lawsuit they filed against the state, but have been barred from disclosing details.

The amount — said to be more than $500,000 — was sealed by the court, and the parents of Jonathan Savidge, 16, were ordered to keep secret the amount of money paid them and not say what happened to their son.

"There still seems to be a cloak of secrecy," said Jonathan's father, Wilbur Savidge of Hurst, who expressed anger about the gag order.

The parents' attorney, David Ferleger of Philadelphia, said the gag order was a clause negotiated by the state to keep the amount out of Tuesday's headlines.

"The public should know how much it is worth to the state to avoid a public trial," said Ferleger, who called the settlement "a substantial amount" and said that it "will take care of Jonathan for the rest of his life."

When Jonathan was voluntarily placed in the Fort Worth State School in fall 1980, he was able to walk with the help of braces. His parents claimed that a minor infection from boils was allowed to spread until he required brain surgery that left him partially paralyzed and unable to walk.

His parents filed suit in the U.S. District Court in Fort Worth, naming as defendants the state; the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation; Jaylon Fincannon, then superintendent of the Fort Worth State School; and three doctors who no longer work there.

The suit claimed that while in the state school, Jonathan was subjected to unhygienic conditions, was harmed and abused and denied medical care. It called his placement there an incarceration that was compelled because the state failed to provide non-institutional alternatives at smaller facilities such as group homes. It said his needs for education, training and safety were ignored and he lost skills he had when he entered the institution.

After many legal delays, the suit was scheduled for trial June 19.

Ferleger called the suit and settlement a victory for Jonathan and said the settlement should make the state realize it's liable for harm residents suffer in state facilities.

"The state of Texas now knows that if someone is hurt and abused in an institution, it will cost them much more money, phenomenally more, than it would be worth to them to allow that abuse to happen," Ferleger said.

Since May 1986, Jonathan has lived in a small group home operated by the state school. He is strong and thriving but will always require a wheelchair, his father said.

"When I look at Jonathan, it will never be over," Wilbur Savidge said. "I wish we could do more."

A portion of the settlement will be given to the Brums Foundation in Irving, which finances litigation for people suing to protect and advance the rights of the mentally retarded.

The foundation aided the Savidges, who were turned away when they initially sought legal representation because retarded people historically did not collect significant awards in court battles.

Hereford firm nets fine

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — The largest Immigration and Naturalization Service fine ever collected in the Kansas-Missouri district has been paid by a Hereford, Texas, company, agency officials said Monday.

At an afternoon news conference, James W. Bennett, supervisory special agent for the temporary Wichita INS office, also announced the Wichita office was being made permanent.

On Oct. 26, INS issued a $20,150 fine proposal to T&G Service Co., which had the contract for clean-up at a Wichita meatpacking plant. The INS alleged 25 violations of immigration law including knowingly hiring illegal aliens, accepting false documents, and failing to follow document examination procedures.

An investigation of T&G started in August when an illegal alien employed by the company was arrested by police in a traffic case. Eight illegals were apprehended working for T&G. All were returned to Mexico, Bennett said.

The company and the INS negotiated a $13,000 settlement of the proposed fine, Bennett said. The terms of the settlement agreement, which were approved by an administrative law judge, are confidential, he said. The fine was paid about 10 days ago, he said.

In Kansas and Missouri the INS has issued 16 proposed fines since 1987 totaling $96,050. Bennett said $40,950 has been collected.

T&G has crews at other plants in Kansas.

MARTINS

In the Lubbock area, the purple martins usually arrive in mid-March and depart by mid-August. "Last year they left on the 7th of August," Kirksey recalled. "By the 15th, you couldn't stay out in the yard because of the mosquitoes."

The martins' appetite for mosquitoes, dragon flies, moths and other flying insects didn't escape the notice of some Native American Indians. Long before the first Europeans arrived here, certain tribes put up scooped out calabashes and other gourds in and around their villages for the favored birds.

Gourds continue to be used as purple martin houses in some parts of the country. But most birders and naturalists say the helpful martin deserves a safer and cleaner environment.

Martin enthusiasts generally extoll the virtues of an aluminum house that can be raised and lowered on a sturdy pole.

However, such houses don't come cheap. A small house similar to the ones in the Kirksey yard costs more than $100.

Attorney fined $15,000 for killing whooping crane

LAREDO (AP) — An attorney was fined $15,000 for killing an endangered whooping crane during a South Texas hunting trip, a prosecutor confirmed.

Mario Max Yzaguirre's fine by a federal magistrate in Laredo last week was part of an agreement in which the Houston attorney pleaded guilty to violating the Endangered Species Act, Assistant U.S. Attorney Jeff Babcock said Monday.

Yzaguirre could have been jailed for a year and fined $100,000.

The son of former University of Texas regent Mario Yzaguirre of Brownsville, he was charged with killing the crane, one of about 200 in the world, while hunting near the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge near Corpus Christi on Jan. 3.

A spokesman for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department may still seek $11,000 in civil damages from Yzaguirre.

At the time of the shooting, Yzaguirre said he thought the whooping crane was a snow goose.

Yzaguirre had pleaded innocent and was scheduled for trial in Corpus Christi, but the legal proceedings were moved to Laredo after federal judges in Corpus Christi and Brownsville recused themselves.

OFFICER

In doing so, he helps instill discipline and values in their lives by heading them toward good citizenship and away from crime, indolence, and apathy. One of Russell's means toward that ideal is coaching youth football in Midland.

"I stress hard work and discipline," he said. "You can't get around that. You have got to have discipline to be successful."

Discipline is needed to ward off society's "biggest threat" — the drug element.

"And members of society that are hurt the most are the children and the youth," he said. "If children get on drugs in their formative years, they tend to lose initiative, direction and the discipline that is required to succeed."

Russell, who is particularly sensitive to the effects of drugs on society, does what he can to ensure that his probationers and parolees don't use drugs or deal in them.

"We have a serious problem (with drugs), and I think society is starting to wake to these problems," said Russell, who noted that there is "a distinct trend away from any kind of drugs," and toward tougher laws against drug trafficking and dealing.

And that is largely because rehabilitation measures didn't prove effective in curbing drug-related crimes.

Russell noted that the old federal Youth Corrections Act and the Narcotic Rehabilitation Act were not effective, and Congress did away with them.

Since November of 1987, new federal sentencing guidelines have been enacted to curtail drug trafficking by imposing severe sentences on convicted drug dealers.

"And here is what Congress is telling society, particularly drug violators: 'If you deal in narcotics, you are going to prison for many years without parole,' " Russell said. " 'We tried to help you (drug dealers), and that didn't work. We don't want dope on the streets, and we don't want dope dealers selling dope to our children."

Neither the court system nor Russell will tolerate a probationer or a parolee who intentionally violates laws, such as those against drug dealing and using. And Russell "doesn't sell short" drug-treatment and counseling programs to help drug addicts and abusers.

But if a probationer or a parolee "wants to 'do right,' then I am his best friend in the country," Russell said. "But if he doesn't, he better get out of town," for he is prison-bound.

"They are going to be good citizens first," Russell said. "Then we will get them all the help in the world they need."

Odessa Crime Stoppers seeks data on burglary

Odessa Crime Stoppers is asking the public for information about a burglary which occurred at 409 E. 29th St.

Just after midnight on June 5, someone entered the residence through a window on the south side and unlocked a rear door. The victim was awakened, and noticed a flashlight in the living room. The victim called out, and a suspect looked around a corner. When the victim called out again, the suspect ran from the house through the back door, and escaped over a fence.

Since April, at least 15 burglaries are believed to have been committed by the same suspect, who entered through a window and left by a rear door. The burglaries occur between midnight and 6 a.m., and usually the pants of the victims are stolen, along with jewelry.

Information that leads to the arrest and indictment of the persons responsible could be worth up to $1,000 cash this week only. Crime Stoppers pays cash rewards for information about fugitives, and pays rewards for the recovery of stolen property and narcotics valued at more than $1,000.

In Odessa, Crime Stoppers can be reached at 333-TIPS, and in Midland at 694-TIPS. Callers can remain anonymous.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Summer is an excellent time to get involved and to become a vital part of our community by being a volunteer. Here are a few of these opportunities available now through the Volunteer Center:

■ Enjoy a challenge? An agency needs a volunteer to help implement an information and referral marketing plan. This would entail developing brochures, devising a distribution plan, coordinating media efforts, and working with area nonprofit organizations. Flexible hours can be worked around your schedule. This is an opportunity to learn new marketing skills or brush up on your old ones.

■ Teens seeking satisfying summer activities should check out these opportunities to volunteer in the Midland area. You can help with camp activities, arts and crafts, clerical/office needs, yard work for the elderly, visiting seniors, or packaging and delivery of meals.

■ There is a desperate need for volunteers to assist with the delivery of meals to the homebound. Deliveries are made daily between 10:30 and 11:30 a.m. Commitments of once a month to several times a month are most welcomed. Do consider helping with this vital community service.

■ Special friends are needed to help with mentally disabled adults. You will provide friendly support and companionship during a weekly visit. Training is provided. Use your sensitivity and patience to make a significant difference in the life of a new friend.

For more information on how you can volunteer, please call the Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

IRS seizes office of black newspaper

DALLAS (AP) — The office of the largest black newspaper in Dallas has been seized by the Internal Revenue Service for non-payment of payroll taxes.

The free weekly newspaper was founded in 1955 by the late Anthony T. Davis, and had a circulation of about 50,000.

Marlene A. Gaysek of the IRS said that at least four separate liens have been filed against the newspaper's parent Ad-Mast Publishing Co. Inc. She said the newspaper owed employee withholding taxes of $11,418 from 1987, $10,944 from 1988 and $8,210 to date from 1989.

Dallas Weekly president and publisher James A. Washington could not be reached for comment Monday.

There are about a half-dozen black newspapers in Dallas and the Dallas Weekly is the second-oldest, according to The Dallas Morning News.

Black woman educator bests Alamo's Travis in school name battle

BRYAN (AP) — Bryan school trustees have drawn the line and rejected Alamo hero William Barret Travis as the namesake for a new elementary school after questions arose about Travis' morals and beliefs.

The trustees voted Monday night to name the new school after black educator Mary Branch, rejecting the Alamo commander after it was pointed out that he had abandoned his wife and child in Alabama and owned slaves.

Travis, who, according to folklore, drew the famous line in the dirt of the Alamo, received staunch support from trustees Travis Bryan Jr. and Herbert Wade.

But the vote went against Travis after Trustee Wendy Costa questioned Travis' morals.

Bob Calvert of the Texas State Historical Society told trustees that Travis was "a ne'er-do-well who in two weeks time happened to do something wonderful."

Calvert and Carey Cauley, president of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, both said Ms. Branch would be a better choice.

Ms. Branch, who was born in 1881 in Virginia, worked her way up from a job as a maid to give herself an education, eventually becoming the first woman college president in Texas, Walker said. She served as head of Austin's Huston-Tillotson College from 1930-44.

The current Travis Elementary School will be closed in 1990 and be replaced by the school named for Ms. Branch.

Cauley commented that no Bryan school has been named in honor of a black since Kemp, Carver and Neal during the 1960s.

He said he supported Branch "not because she's black, but because she made significant contributions" to education.

Bryan said he supported continuing the namesake because Travis "is Texas' greatest hero, in my opinion."

It was then that Costa asked Bryan, "What about Travis' life was exemplary, that we need to honor him?"

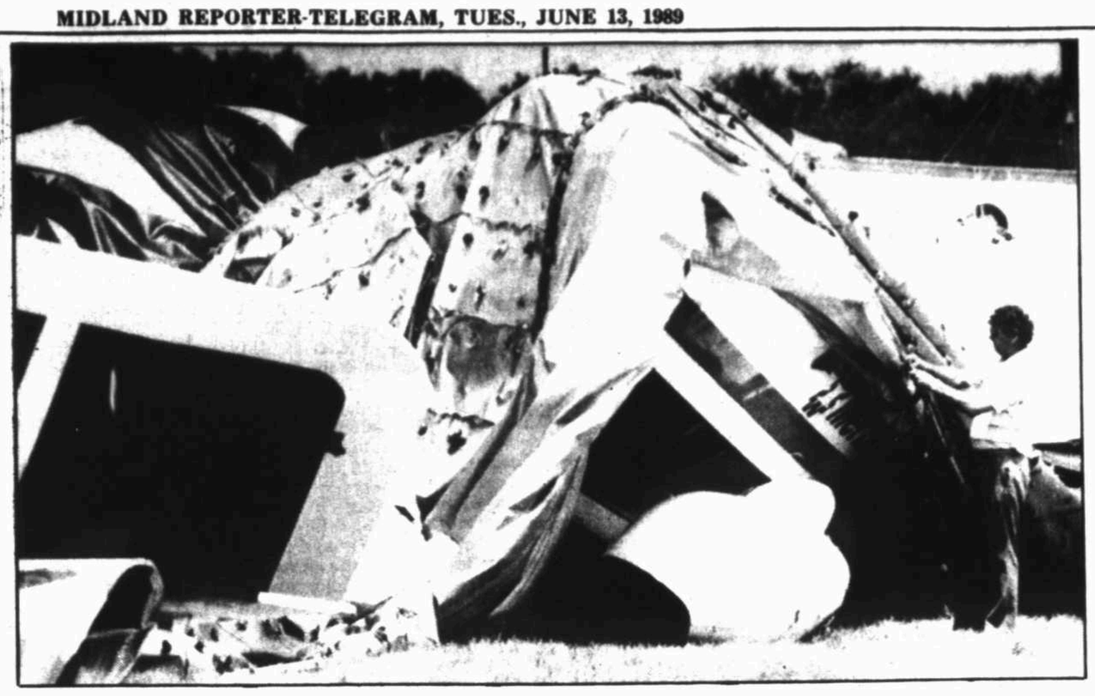

Bryan replied, "He was a commander of the Alamo. He was selected to die for Texas. He wrote the letter, he drew the line. He was the main man at the Alamo."

During the siege of the Alamo, Travis wrote a letter describing his plight and appealing for help. In addition, legend has it that, when the soldiers at the Alamo were surrounded by Mexican troops, Travis drew a line in the dirt and asked those willing to die for freedom to cross it with him.

"Other than dying at the Alamo, the rest of his life was not very exemplary," Costa said.

Costa then pointed out that Travis had abandoned his family, owned slaves and had spoken out in favor of slavery as a lawyer.

Noting that Bryan's population is 22-percent black, Costa asked, "How can we even consider naming a school after someone who was so strongly in favor of slavery?"

New El Paso mayor gets feet wet on her first day

EL PASO (AP) — On her first day as the fourth female mayor of a major Texas city, Suzie Azar was confronted with one of El Paso's most trying issues.

Las Cruces Mayor Herculano Ferralez congratulated Ms. Azar, who was installed Monday, and gave her a small package. She opened it and displayed a small bottle of water Ferralez said was a gift from the people of Las Cruces.

The gift was called "precious New Mexico water," Ms. Azar said, provoking laughter from the audience, which was reminded of El Paso's water suit against New Mexico.

Ms. Azar took the oath of office from U.S. Magistrate Janet Ruesch while members of her family watched with pride.

Ferralez' gesture was made in jest. He also gave Ms. Azar a key to the city of Las Cruces.

In taking office, Ms. Azar joined Dallas' Annette Strauss, Houston's Kathy Whitmire and San Antonio's Lila Cockrell as leaders of their respective cities.

Outgoing Mayor Jonathan Rogers did some cheerleading for Ms. Azar, 43, booming out from the stage microphone, "Let's have a round of applause for Suzie Azar."

Members of Ms. Azar's family stood nearby, including her husband, Dick, daughter Christina, Ms. Azar's brother and sister along with her stepfather and mother.

The four-year City Council member won the mayor's seat in a runoff May 27, in which she beat fellow council member Ed Elsey. She won a two-year term with 65 percent of the vote.

Ms. Azar started dabbling in precinct politics after moving to El Paso from Mount Pleasant, Mich., in 1971. Her business background includes secretarial work in Michigan and public relations work for a beer distributorship.

School van collides with truck, killing 1, injuring 9

HOUSTON (AP) — A school van carrying students home from their first day of summer school collided with a truck, killing one girl and injuring nine others, officials say.

Three adults also were injured in the Monday afternoon accident, which occurred at an intersection in far northeast Harris County. A motorcycle also was involved in the accident.

An 18-wheel truck collided with the van that was carrying students from the Chinquapin School, a private college prep school in the Highlands community. The motorcycle was behind the school van.

The 13 girls in the bus were seventh- and eighth-grade girls attending summer school classes, said school secretary Debra Hicks.

Leticia Luna, 12, was pronounced dead at the scene.

The driver of the truck and the motorcyclist were taken to Hermann Hospital by LifeFlight helicopter in critical condition. A 13-year-old student also was taken to Hermann and listed in stable condition, hospital officials said today.

Four of the students were taken to Sunbelt Regional Hospital, two were taken to Doctor's Hospital and one was taken to San Jacinto Methodist Hospital in Baytown. The students, ranging in age from 12 to 14, all had minor injuries, hospital officials said.

Four other students were not injured.

Iceland to continue whaling despite fish boycott

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — Iceland says it will never stop whaling and will survive an international boycott launched by the environmental group Greenpeace.

"We will never give it up, come hell or high water," Foreign Minister Jon Baldvin Hannibalsson said in an interview. "It would be the same as to underwrite our own verdict of execution."

Whaling is a tiny facet of the economy of this remote north Atlantic island, and the vast majority of the 247,000 Icelanders don't even like whale meat.

But Iceland's existence depends on the sea, and the government won't relinquish sovereignty over any of its natural resources.

In February 1988, Greenpeace launched a boycott of Icelandic fish, which accounts for 75 percent of the country's exports. The anti-whaling campaign targeted three of Iceland's biggest markets: the United States, West Germany and Britain.

Ros Reeve, a Greenpeace campaigner who was in San Diego for the annual meeting of the International Whaling Commission, estimated in a telephone interview that Iceland may have lost up to $50 million worth of contracts.

Hannibalsson said the boycott has forced the closure of several fish processing and canning factories, mainly in sparsely populated northern Iceland, and several hundred people have lost their jobs.

Iceland says it has given up commercial whale hunting, but still kills whales under a four-year research program approved by the Whaling Commission that allowed it to kill 78 whales in 1988.

Greenpeace contends the program is a cover for commercial whaling, which the commission halted from 1986 to 1990 to preserve endangered stocks.

The hunt is being carried out by the commercial whaling company and Iceland is selling whale meat to Japan, the environmental organization says.

Hannibalsson countered that the commission allows up to 49 percent of whale meat to be exported, and the sales financed the scientific program.

"It is our sovereign right to carry out scientific research, which is the basis for our fishing policy," Hannibalsson said in the interview last week. He said researchers had counted more than 70,000 whales in Iceland's 200-mile economic zone.

Ms. Reeve said the commission never intended scientific whaling to include mass killings. She accused Iceland of using the loophole to keep its whaling fleet intact pending the commission's review of the moratorium in 1990.

Fisheries Minister Halldor Asgrimsson has said it is unlikely Iceland will go whaling in 1990.

Greenpeace selected Iceland for the boycott because Iceland created the precedent for scientific whaling, which was followed by Japan and Norway, Ms. Reeve said.

In the United States, she said, the Long John Silver seafood chain canceled a $9 million contract, Burger King cut its buying by 20 percent, and Boston banned Icelandic fish in schools and institutions.

Though more than 80 percent of Icelanders supported the government's position in a recent poll, Greenpeace has one powerful supporter — Gudrun Helgadottir, president of the Althing, Iceland's parliament.

Greenpeace selected Iceland for the boycott because Iceland created the precedent for scientific whaling, which was followed by Japan and Norway.

"Iceland has shamed itself in environmental affairs," she said. "This has turned into a nationalistic cause, which is very dangerous because it prevents you from debating the issue seriously and rationally."

Hanniballson said Iceland would not be deterred.

It survived a British quarantine on Icelandic cod by finding new markets from 1956 to 1976, when London accepted Iceland's 200-mile zone.

"We will survive this, too," he said.

Scientist says chimps capable of language

By TOM PAULSON
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — Dar sits alone in his room at Central Washington University in Ellensburg, quietly thumbing through a magazine.

The floppy-eared chimpanzee occasionally motions with his hand, making the symbols in sign language for objects he recognizes in the photographs: dog, food, drink, shoe.

Dar appears to have no reason for signing other than the personal gratification of identifying things. Nobody is around to acknowledge or reward his actions. A hidden video camera records Dar "talking" to himself.

It's amusing and cute, and part of a scientific revolution.

Roger Fouts is a world-renowned behavioral psychologist studying the language abilities of primates at CWU. His claim that animals are capable of language could be disturbing for some.

"Language has become the last bastion of human uniqueness," he explains.

For decades, Fouts has studied these chimps and their apparent ability to communicate using sign language. In the mid-1960s, he worked with Allan and Beatrice Gardner, who were the first to teach a chimpanzee how to communicate using American Sign Language.

Controversy has flared in the last decade as more evidence indicated that chimps and apes could communicate by signing and as other researchers challenged the claim that this was akin to human communication.

Some argued the chimps were responding to cues, like trained seals. As newer studies demonstrated chimps spontaneously signing to other chimps or chimps signing alone to themselves, the critics acknowledged that the signs may be unprompted, but that this still wasn't truly language.

In 1979, Herbert Terrace of Columbia University published the most damaging criticism of the claim that chimps can communicate on human terms. Terrace studied language acquisition in a chimp for four years. He concluded that the chimp was merely imitating his trainers and that this was true in all other such studies of animal language.

Fouts contends that Terrace, a student of behaviorist B.F. Skinner, performed his experiments in a way that encouraged imitation and discouraged spontaneous communication on the part of the chimp.

"It was a circus trick, that's what Terrace had," he says. "He failed to look at his procedure."

Fouts says the arguments against language in chimps could be used, just as wrongly, to argue against language in young children or in the developmentally disabled. In fact, some of Fouts' research findings and techniques have been used by those working with the mentally retarded.

As he talks, another chimp, Tatu, sits placidly in his cage. Fouts asks him verbally, using no sign language, if he would make the sign for banana.

Fouts, again using just spoken words, asks Tatu if he wants a banana. Tatu then eagerly makes the signs: Want banana eat.

Not only did the chimp understand the spoken words, Fouts notes, but Tatu was able to distinguish between a sentence asking him to make the sign for banana (which he did not want to do) and a sentence asking him if he wanted a banana. (which he did).

"The problem with this is to control for cueing or other variables," Fouts says.

He says this has been done using remote video recording and a device for controlling intonation in the speaker's voice. The evidence, Fouts says, is that chimps understand some spoken language as well as sign language.

Fouts and his wife, Debbi, though nationally prominent in this field, have maintained a relatively low profile at CWU since moving there in 1980 from the University of Oklahoma. Fouts came to Ellensburg on a teaching appointment, a downward move professionally as far as his colleagues were concerned, because he says it offered the best living conditions for the chimps at the time.

"We have a responsibility to them," Fouts says. "None of them volunteered for research."

Yet the five Ellensburg chimps may soon be rewarded for their inadvertent contribution to science. The state Legislature has included in the proposed state budget $1.5 million for a new chimpanzee facility on the campus. Noted anthropologist and chimp advocate Jane Goodall recently appeared in Olympia to endorse the new facility.

The ultimate lesson to be learned, however, may be more profound and unsettling than many people realize, says Fouts.

How would you describe her? Kind? Sweet? Motherly? She could be all of these things. She could also be the kind of emotional terrorist who innocently wreaks havoc on her family to the point of destruction...a Co-Dependent nightmare to the emotional health of everyone near...and dear...to her.

Co-Dependency is a lifestyle in which an individual's self-esteem and validity are determined by pleasing or living for others. With proper attention, such an individual can reaffirm his own identity and enjoy a fuller, more rewarding life...for themselves and their families.

Clearview, an accredited facility and leader in chemical dependency and family treatment for over 3 years, has begun a program to help find the answers to Co-Dependency problems and restore intimacy in the normal family relationship. If you, or someone you know, feels this could affect you, contact Clearview for information. Just call 697-5200 or 561-5200. The program works and you can finally be free.

FBI agent Raul Salinas, right, discusses his anti-drug message with Luis Munoz on the "Domingo" show in Corpus Christi recently.

Hispanic FBI agent 'born to beat odds'

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — When FBI agent Raul Salinas addresses youth rallies, he emphasizes that one's attitude makes the difference between success and failure.

And he should know. Salinas has parlayed an aggressive attitude into a career as an FBI agent although he came from humble beginnings in Alice.

"I sometimes see myself as someone born to beat the odds," Salinas said.

For 14 years, Salinas has tried to instill that aggressiveness in schoolchildren he lectures against the use of narcotics.

When talking about kids and drug abuse, he speaks with a fervor that hints at a Sunday-morning sermon. But he views drug abuse as the No. 1 problem afflicting young people in the country and spends a lot of his free time reaching out to teen-agers tempted by drugs.

"Today, if you really want to be somebody, you can, (but) if (you) get heavily involved in drugs, it's going to be a lot harder for you to make it," he said. "I think what people have to learn is that sooner or later the party is going to go out."

He favors anti-drug education beginning in kindergarten classrooms and believes that the best drug interdiction program begins in the home, with parents taking an active role in their children's lives. He said his anti-drug stance, as well as his determination to do well, began for him in his own home.

"I've always wanted to honor my family. I felt very strongly about that, my family, making them proud," he said.

U.S. Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Mission, said Salinas' inbred drive to succeed has led him to become the "Hispanic voice of the FBI" through his weekly Spanish-language radio program, "Platicando Con El FBI," conversing with the FBI. The five-minute program is broadcast on 77 Spanish-language radio station in 26 states and Mexico.

"It was the first contact the FBI had, basically, with the Hispanic community throughout the United States," de la Garza said. "He's probably the best public relations as far as what the FBI is, what it does and what we should expect of anyone in the FBI."

Salinas said his strong work ethic started when he was selling copies of the Alice Echo News at age 5.

De la Garza said Salinas' tenacity landed him a job on his Washington staff in 1968. Salinas was still a student at William Adams High School in Alice when he met the congressman through another mentor, Gus Canales, a Premont Democractic Party leader.

De la Garza said he told Salinas then to call him after he graduated from high school, which he did — the very day that he graduated.

Salinas moved to Washington after working in radio — where he was once known as "Cowboy Roy" on a local radio program — and as the sports editor of the Echo-News. He said his adjustment to life in Washington was difficult for someone whose farthest stay away from home had been during radio broadcasting in Dallas.

"It was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to work for a congressman, to be right there where the action was," he said. "I was awed because Washington was so spectacular; it was the heartbeat of the world."

Though he overcame the cultural difference, he said, he first realized the significance of his move to Washington within a few months after his arrival.

He said Dr. Martin Luther King had just been assassinated, and as a National Guardsman, he was called into service to help quell the riots after the slain civil-rights leader's assassination. He was six months shy of turning 20, he said, and the experience matured him.

"That's when it finally got to me, 'Welcome to Washington,' " he said. "Here I am in my uniform and (I'm) put out in the street without any ammunition for my M-1 (rifle). It was an education of the real world."

Two years later, Salinas joined the Capital Police Force. He worked a night shift while attending the University of Maryland full-time during the day.

After graduating with a degree in law enforcement and criminology, Salinas said, he decided to pursue his interest in law enforcement by seeking a job with the U.S. Secret Service. But he failed the entrance exam. Soon after, a friend suggested that he try the FBI.

"I never lacked self-confidence. I had been disappointed by not passing the test in the Secret Service, and here I was trying to go into the FBI. Talk about intimidation — I mean, this is the No. 1 law enforcement agency in the world, and that's very intimidating."

He said the academy training was the toughest he had ever experienced.

Although the opportunity to come to Washington, view its monuments and meet then-President Lyndon B. Johnson ranked high among his accomplishments, he said his graduation as an FBI agent was his proudest moment.

"Becoming an FBI agent has been the greatest fulfillment in my life. I'm proud to be an FBI agent," he said.

Soon after his graduation, Salinas was involved in one of the most significant cases of his career when he played a critical role in the investigation of a car bombing in Washington that killed former Chilean ambassador Orlando Letelier and one of his staff members.

Fewer Hispanics choose teaching profession

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Rosamar Martinez is among a dwindling number of Hispanics choosing the teaching profession, a trend that educators fear will leave the growing population of minority children short of role models.

"I can touch a person's life as a teacher," Ms. Martinez said.

"There is no way you can do that in business."

Ms. Martinez, 24, changed majors while at Texas A&I at Kingsville, leaving behind computer science and a $26,800 annual salary promised her upon graduation.

She started teaching in 1987 at Noonan Elementary in her native South Texas city of Alice for $16,800 a year.

She said her mostly Hispanic students need assistance jumping from Spanish to English, and she is able to help them make the transition.

But she is an anomaly, a minority within a minority.

Many Hispanic college students are opting for higher paying professions, according to the Washington, D.C.-based American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education.

"We are cheating minority students of positive role models who can bolster their pride and self-esteem," Mary Dilworth, research director for AACTE, said.

"Our schools must help every student understand what the American heritage is all about. In effect, we also are cheating non-minority students."

According to the AACTE, one U.S. teacher in eight was a minority in 1980, and by the year 2000, the proportion is expected to drop to one in 20, unless more minorities are attracted to teaching.

Hispanics are projected to be the nation's largest minority by the year 2000, when they will represent 36 percent of the population, according to the Institute for Educational Leadership in Washington, D.C.

In Texas, 20 percent of the state's teachers are Hispanic, while 32 percent of public-school students are of that ethnic group.

"There are too many other options available to students other than becoming teachers," said Grace Hopkins, dean of education at Texas A&I.

"We have to improve salaries, for example, as well as improving the image of the teaching profession."

But the shortage cannot be solved by trying to draw minority students away from schools of business, law or medicine, Ms. Dilworth said.

"We simply must encourage minority students to pursue their goals," she said. "With proper role models and motivation, those goals will include careers in teaching."

Du Pont offers reward in Treaty Oak's poisoning

AUSTIN (AP) — The maker of the herbicide used to poison the 600-year-old Treaty Oak is offering $10,000 for information leading to the arrest of those responsible, a company official said.

A Du Pont Corp. spokeswoman in Houston said the company regretted its product was used to harm the live oak, an Austin landmark since the city was founded in the 1800s.

"It was misused and we're outraged," said Pat Getter. "We're hoping the reward will help to flush out the vandals. A lot of people know about the tree, not just (those) in Austin. This is a state treasure."

The tree takes its name from a story that Stephen F. Austin signed a treaty with the Indians under its branches. But the authoritative Handbook of Texas says there is "little foundation for this belief."

The Texas Department of Agriculture is investigating the poisoning and workers are trying to neutralize effects of the chemical.

Du Pont officials will announce the reward Tuesday underneath the tree, which sits in the southwest section of downtown, Ms. Getter said.

She said the herbicide used, Velpar, is made for industrial weed and brush control in "non-crop areas," and that it particularly kills hardwood trees. She said retail Christmas tree-growers use it to keep down underbrush, but that the poison doesn't affect the pines.

Velpar can be bought without any special permit, she said, although it's not available "at your local discount store."

MADD urges Clements to veto bingo bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Mothers Against Drunk Driving urged Gov. Bill Clements to veto a bill that would put bingo regulation under the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission, saying the agency is "already overburdened."

In a letter to the governor Monday, the group also said, "We do not believe that putting bingo regulation under the same authority as liquor regulation is appropriate or feasible."

The bingo legislation, which lawmakers passed after a last-minute compromise the final day of the 1989 session, awaits Clements' signature.

The group also opposes delaying a routine legislative review of the TABC until 1995 because the review had been previously delayed in 1985 to take place in 1991.

Bingo regulation has been the responsibility of state Comptroller Bob Bullock, who asked lawmakers to put it under the TABC.

Gorbachev, Kohl agree to reduce nuclear arsenals

WORLD

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Chancellor Helmut Kohl signed a broad declaration today that calls for a 50 percent reduction in nuclear arsenals and a worldwide ban on chemical weapons.

The document on common principles of both nations was signed on the second day of the Soviet leader's first state visit to West Germany.

The pact signed by Kohl and Gorbachev said their countries have a common European heritage, and that European nations should exist in "peaceful competition with one another" and reduce their military might.

It also said cooperation by West Germany and the Soviet Union "is not directed against anyone" and that a special place in the "common European home" is reserved for the United States and Canada.

The signing ceremony was carried live on West German television.

The two nations appealed for a 50 percent reduction in the strategic nuclear arsenal of the superpowers and a reduction in conventional armies and weapons "in all of Europe."

The document called for a worldwide ban on chemical weapons, a treaty banning nuclear tests and the preservation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

That accord, signed by both superpowers, is seen by the Soviets and West Germans as a document banning the development of "Star Wars" space defenses advocated by President Bush's predecessor, Ronald Reagan.

The document signed today also stressed the importance of respect for human rights, cultural contacts and youth exchanges for promoting lasting peace.

The Soviets and West Germans also signed 11 other agreements, including pacts to establish a "hot line" between Bonn and the Kremlin, and to increase educational and youth exchanges.

Earlier, Gorbachev received a rapturous reception that outstripped the welcome given two weeks ago to Bush, who scores far below the Soviet leader in West German opinion polls.

When Gorbachev arrived in this key NATO country on Monday, he declared that Moscow and Bonn had begun "a new chapter" in relations that could bring a new era of peace to the continent. He also welcomed U.S. proposals to reduce conventional forces on the continent, saying they offer chances for speedy agreement.

Outside Bonn's 18th-century Town Hall today, a crowd chanted "Gorby! Gorby!" and waved dozens of Soviet flags.

"A Soviet leader surrounded by cheering West Germans, who would have thought of that a few years ago?" exclaimed a television commentator during a live national broadcast.

Other banners reflected the German pain at the postwar division of their nation and of the former capital, Berlin, telling Gorbachev "German unity — peace in Europe" and, in English, "Gorby, make love not walls."

No German needs to be reminded of the Berlin Wall.

Most of the crowd cheered Gorbachev but many hooted disapproval when Mayor Hans Daniels, in a brief speech before a ceremonial exchange of gifts, referred to Bonn as only the temporary ...pital of Germany, "substituting f... Berlin."

Gorbachev proposed Monday that West Germany and the Soviet Union combat pollution and exchange technology and emergency assistance in case of an environmental disaster.

And in a gesture of reconciliation, the Soviet Union released the names of 1,500 German soldiers who died in its prisoner-of-war camps during World War II. It was the first time the Soviets had provided a list of German soldiers still unaccounted for after the war, West German officials said.

At a formal dinner Monday night, Gorbachev said the Soviets were pleased that the West has responded to some Warsaw Pact suggestions in Bush's arms control proposal last month, which links short-range nuclear missile reductions to swift and substantial cuts in conventional forces.

"There is now reason to presume that an agreement in Vienna (conventional arms talks) can be reached much more quickly than was expected earlier," he said.

Gorbachev stressed, however, that the Kremlin still wants separate talks on reducing short-range nuclear weapons in Europe. Bush has pushed for progress on conventional arms before short-range missiles are addressed.

Kohl appealed to Gorbachev for the Kremlin to make a unilateral cut in short-range nuclear missiles. The Soviets concede that the Warsaw Pact has an advantage in short-range forces in Europe.

West German crowds cheer 'Gorby! Gorby!

By KEVIN COSTELLOE

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — He hugs a high school student as cameras click away. A major newspaper trumpets his "erotic aura." His advance man hobnobs with "Miami Vice" heartthrob Don Johnson on live television.

Gorbachev

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev brought his entourage and his charisma into Bonn on Monday, arriving amid enough hoopla for a U.S. Super Bowl or, more appropriately, a World Cup soccer final.

He also brought his penchant for pressing the flesh at unexpected times. After a state banquet Gorbachev bounced from his limousine and started shaking hands in a crowd of well-wishers along his route to the Soviet Embassy. He was cheered with chants of "Gorby, Gorby!"

The response to his first-ever visit here has so far overshadowed the reception President Bush received when he visited West Germany two weeks ago.

The two main TV networks have led the way, flooding the airwaves with hours of shows and documentaries that include everything from interviews with Gorbachev's school teachers to a German-Russian songfest.

On Saturday night, the Soviet government's top spokesman appeared on the hit TV show "Wetten, Dass," a live potpourri mixing daredevil stunts, celebrity chatter and song numbers.

"We should exchange jokes and not rockets," said Gennady I. Gerasimov, drawing wild applause and cheers from the audience in an auditorium in the Ruhr industrial city of Dortmund. "We want to be friends with your country."

The smiling Gerasimov, who arrived in West Germany last week to put final touches on the trip preparations, also listened attentively when actor Johnson joined the celebrities.

"We're in the same boat," Johnson said, shaking Gerasimov's hand as he noted that neither speaks German.

Gorbachev, enjoying an improved East-West climate, is looking to West German investment and know-how to help ease a growing economic woes at home. Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government especially wants Gorbachev's help in mending the split that divided Germany into two nations after World War II.

The changed climate between the old foes was obvious after Gorbachev's arrival on Monday at the Villa Hammerschmidt, official residence of West German President Richard von Weizsaecker.

Smiling and relaxed, Gorbachev mingled with invited guests, some of them ordinary West Germans. They included a group from the Heinrich Heine classical high school in Dortmund.

The Kremlin chief suddenly reached out and hugged Bielefeld high school student Annette Lang, who had greeted him and his wife, Raisa, in Russian. The young woman also gave Gorbachev a West German pfennig and a Soviet kopeck to symbolize friendship.

Weizsaecker gently led Gorbachev away from his enraptured fans.

Gorbachev told the ZDF television network he had arrived with "the best feelings" toward West Germany.

Later, a wedge of motorcycle police led the Soviet leader's black limousine to Kohl's office. Gorbachev waved from the open car window to a crowd of about 100 people, some of whom had been standing in the afternoon sun for nearly an hour.

According to a weekend poll conducted by ZDF, 90 percent of those contacted said they trusted Gorbachev and his politics of reform and disarmament.

Gorbachev's rating surpassed that of both Bush, who received a 58 percent approval rating, and Kohl, who only received 50 percent.

"He Has an Enormous Erotic Aura," gushed a headline in Monday's editions of the Bild Zeitung, West Germany's most widely read newspaper.

The newspaper, run by the arch-conservative Springer publishing empire, added: "The man who now fascinates Germans more than any other head of state in the world is arriving this morning."

As Gorbachev began his visit, red Soviet flags fluttered along stately Adenauer avenue, named after the iron-willed chancellor who guided the first years of West Germany after the havoc of World War II.

Quayle: Panama, allies enemies of democracy

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Vice president Dan Quayle is using a whirl through Central America to turn up the rhetorical heat against Panama and Nicaragua, calling them and Cuba the enemies of democracy in the hemisphere.

The vice president, during stops Monday in Guatemala and Honduras, made reference to reports that Nicaragua had geared up to supply arms to Panama against the possibility of a U.S. military attack to oust the de facto ruler, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega.

"The axis of Cuba, Nicaragua and Panama threatens peace and democracy in this hemisphere," Quayle told a group of political and business leaders in Guatemala.

Quayle said that in his meetings with the Latin officials, including candidates for upcoming presidential elections in Honduras and Guatemala, he found "the emergence of a consensus that is beginning to clearly articulate the problem that Panama could present to Central America."

"If the Noriega precedent continues, it will not only have Panama as an enemy of democracy, but it will be joining forces with Nicaragua and Cuba," Quayle said in brief remarks to reporters after his meeting with Honduran President Jose Azcona Hoya.

This morning Quayle was meeting privately with field commanders of the U.S. backed Contra rebels who have been trying to overthrow Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government. Although a cease-fire exists, both sides have made sporadic attacks.

Quayle was then flying to neighboring El Salvador for talks with President Alfredo Cristiani as well as opposition politicians and political allies of the left-wing political guerrillas who have waged a nine-year civil war.

> "If the Noriega precedent continues, it will not only have Panama as an enemy of democracy, but it will be joining forces with Nicaragua and Cuba."
>
> — Vice President Dan Quayle

Quayle's day in EL Salvador was focused on his avowed mission of encouragement for democracy in the region. His schedule included paying respects to the family of Cristiani's top cabinet adviser, Jose Antonio Rodriguez Porth, who along with two bodyguards was gunned down last week.

On Monday, Quayle also reiterated U.S. support for ongoing efforts by the Central American presidents to reach a diplomatic solution in Nicaragua.

But he was sharply critical of the Sandinistas, including their "speaking in defense of the general of Panama" during a recent session of the Organization of American States.

Quayle today also was visiting with Salvadoran military leaders and viewing a cache of AK-47 assault rifles and other weapons from the Soviet bloc. U.S. officials say the weapons were shipped from Nicaragua to the Salvadoran guerrillas, in violation of the 1987 regional peace agreement signed by all five Central American presidents, including Nicaragua's Daniel Ortega.

Firebomb joke infuriates McDonald's

LONDON (AP) — Rock singer Chrissie Hynde has promised to make no more public remarks about firebombing McDonald's restaurants.

The lead singer for The Pretenders had infuriated the fast-food chain by her joking reply when asked what she had done for the environmental group Greenpeace. "I firebombed McDonald's," she said last week.

Police say they may want to interview Miss Hynde, who is a strict vegetarian, in connection with a firebomb attack on a McDonald's in suburban Milton Keynes last weekend.

McDonald's threatened to take legal action against the singer, who has frequently spoken out against McDonald's in the past, unless she gave assurances that she would not repeat the inflammatory remark.

In a statement worked out by lawyers for the two parties, Miss Hynde insisted Monday that her remarks Thursday at an album-promoting Greenpeace news conference had been taken out of context.

"However, I am prepared to give an unequivocal undertaking that I will at no time suggest or imply that I have been responsible for firebombing McDonald's or that anyone should firebomb or cause any other physical or personal damage to the customers, employers, franchises or the physical property of McDonald's Restaurants Ltd. or any of its associated companies anywhere in the world."

McDonald's said it was satisfied with the statement and would take no further legal action.

No one was injured in Saturday's attack in Milton Keynes, and Detective Chief Inspector Alan Partridge said Monday he had not decided whether it was necessary to interview Miss Hynde.

Detectives are investigating three similar attacks at McDonald's in London and Birmingham. A group called the Animal Rights Militia claimed responsibility an attack in Birmingham on April 29.

Reggae star just keeps playing through ups and downs

Frederick 'Toots' Hibbert

NEW YORK (AP) — Reggae has had its ups and downs over the past decade, but Frederick "Toots" Hibbert just keeps playing.

Hibbert, who has been making music since the early 1960s — before the word reggae ever hit American music stores — is back with his first LP since 1981, "Toots in Memphis,' a collection of soul standards.

His raspy voice, capable of sweetness and toughness, has been likened to the late Otis Redding, one of soul's greatest singers. The reggae star covers a pair of obscure Redding songs, "I've Got Dreams to Remember," and "Hard to Handle." He also sings the rhythm 'n' blues hit, "Knock on Wood," and Al Green's "Love and Happiness."

"I always listened to Al Green, Otis and Michael Jackson, Stevie Wonder," Hibbert said. "We are related somewhat."

Reggae's most famous rhythm section, Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare, plays on the record. Also featured are guitarist Teenie Hodges, who helped write "Love and Happiness," and Andrew Love of the Memphis Horns.

Many of soul's greatest artists, including Redding, Wilson Pickett and Aretha Franklin, recorded in Memphis. The idea for making an album there often had been suggested to Hibbert, and the singer finally contacted Island Records president Chris Blackwell to express his interest.

"I'm not just a reggae singer," Hibbert explained. "I can sing anything, any song, rewrite the song and make it into my style."

Thanks to young artists such as Ziggy Marley and Maxi Priest, reggae has enjoyed a resurgence over the past year, inspiring those who long for a return to the music's heyday of the early 1970s.

Few of the stars who first made reggae internationally popular are still around. Bob Marley, the music's most celebrated artist, died of cancer in 1980. Peter Tosh, Marley's one-time bandmate and a major performer in his own right, was murdered in 1987. Jimmy Cliff, whose talents were featured in the popular reggae film, "The Harder They Come," is no longer a commercial success.

In the early '60s, Hibbert formed a ska trio, "The Vikings," with Raleigh Gordon and Jerry Mathias. They quickly became one of Jamaica's most popular acts, with Prince Buster producing and Hibbert leading the way on a series of local hits, "Pain in My Belly," "Little Flea" and "Dog War."

The group renamed itself the Maytals in 1966 and won that year's Jamaican Festival Song competition with "Bam, Bam." Hibbert formed a permanent niche in reggae history by giving the music its name in a 1968 song, "Do the Reggay."

"We were just playing around," Hibbert recalled. "We used to have slogans, jokes. Sometimes we'd say of a girl that's not looking so great, 'She's like a streggae.' That word was there and one morning I said, 'Let's do the 'reggae.' I didn't think that the name would last."

Under the production of Leslie Kong, the Maytals entered their peak of popularity with a string of songs that became reggae standards: "Funky Kingston," "54-46 That's My Number" and "Pressure Drop," a featured number in "The Harder They Come."

But Hibbert was anxious to experiment with other forms of music, covering the rock 'n' roll oldie "Louie, Louie," and a surprisingly danceable version of John Denver's "Take Me Home, Country Roads." Hibbert was surprised himself when he learned who performed the original song.

"When I listened to it first I thought it was Ray Charles and I always liked Ray Charles' sound," he said. "I have a country-and-western voice, very high pitched. I can find that voice anytime."

Quinlan's character in wrong place at wrong time

ENTERTAINMENT

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A decision to work late in her high-rise office building put Kathleen Quinlan's character in the wrong place at the wrong time.

In the USA Network movie "Trapped," Quinlan plays Marianne, the building manager, who is caught inside the building, first with a thief, then with a killer.

"What I like about it is that she's not a woman who thinks of herself as a fighter," said Quinlan, "but when she finds herself in this situation she has to pull herself together and fight her way through it.

Quinlan calls "Trapped" a female version of "Die Hard," the feature film starring Bruce Willis, which was set in a Los Angeles high-rise as the terrorists' robbery-hostage drama unfolded.

"This is about a man whose family has been killed by toxic waste dumped by a huge corporation," she said. "When he hits the building, an industrial thief and myself are trapped in the building. We become the target. So it becomes more one-on-one than 'Die Hard.'

"Usually this kind of movie is male-oriented. I loved doing all the physical stuff. I did all the stunts except going off the building. I'm a jock so if I get a role where I can act and do something physical I'll take it. The character of Marianne wasn't written in depth, so I put myself in her shoes and developed the character myself. It was all taken very seriously, but it's really a fun, entertainment piece."

The movie, which also stars Bruce Abbott as John, the thief, has its premiere Wednesday on the USA Network. It was written by Fred Walton, who directed it on location in Dallas.

"We filmed in Dallas because they have some incredible buildings there," Quinlan said. "We shot it indoors at night. I'm a very outdoor person, and I'm not a night person. This girl likes to close her eyes at 10:30. We worked from 6 at night until 6 in the morning. It has a lot of action so you really had to be on your toes.

"I'm a former gymnast and so is Bruce Abbott and it really helped. We did one stunt with an explosion. Trust me, if I'd known it was going to explode so big I wouldn't have done it. Our stunt people were very good, and they had to test me before letting me do the stunts."

Quinlan recently completed a stage role in "Les Liaisons Dangereuse" at the Ahmanson Theatre in Los Angeles.

She has been in such movies as "American Graffiti," "Lifeguard," "I Never Promised You a Rose Garden," "The Promise," "The Runner Stumbles," "Sunday Lovers," "Hanky Panky" and "Sunset." Among her TV movies are "She's in the Army Now," "When She Says No," "Blackout" and "Children of the Night."

Quinlan grew up in the San Francisco suburb of Mill Valley, where she was a gymnast and diver. She made her film debut in "One Is a Lonely Number" doubling for Trish Van Devere in a high dive sequence.

"I was 17 at the time," she said. "They came to our high school and looked at the diving team. I did 'American Graffiti' because they had a cattle call audition at our school. I went in and read for a part, never thinking in a million years I'd do any acting.

"I had a dream of going to the Olympics. It took me a long time to get over it. But I got to keep my athletics to myself. In college I was running back and forth between acting and athletic training. My coach said I had to make a choice and get my priorities straight. Finally, I chose acting."

"The Love Boat" is setting sail again, this time on CBS for a special two-hour movie about a Valentine's Day cruise. Gavin McLeod, Bernie Kopell and Jill Whelan will return. Special guest stars include Steve Bond, Tom Bosley, Julia Duffy, Joe Regalbuto, Ted Shackelford and Shanna Reed. The ship will visit Barbados, Antiqua, St. Thomas, St. Croix, and the Bahamas. The story focuses on a group of jewel thieves, headed by Shackelford, who use "The Love Boat" as a means of getting their loot out of the country.

Professor has 'meaningful experience' in China

By LOUISE YARNALL
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — What started as a three-week educational trip to China for Pepperdine University Professor Gary Tallman turned into an unprecedented five days witnessing the historic uprising and tragic massacre of Chinese protesters in Beijing.

"If I were to die in China, my life would be complete," Tallman said in a press conference at the university's Malibu campus Monday. He arrived in Los Angeles last week.

"I've experienced the thing in my life that was the most meaningful. To see the courage of these (Chinese) students was enough to prove to me the goodness of humanity."

Those incomparable five days in Beijing — two of them spent confined by the state to a hotel room — rush back to Tallman in striking images and sounds:

The sight of 3,000 Chinese people clapping and cheering for him one afternoon after he took a snapshot of the Goddess of Liberty, a 20-foot sculpture modeled after the American Statue of Liberty by Chinese art students using rice, Styrofoam and plaster. They thought he was an American journalist. The long line of humanity stretching a mile from Tiananmen Square to his hotel, where word of the protest was passed along, inspiring people of all ages to build street barricades to block army troops.

The eerie vision from his 16th-story room at the Beijing International Hotel Sunday at 4 a.m. Sunday as army jeeps quietly approached Tiananmen Square along the darkened Road of Everlasting Peace.

The subsequent firecracker-like sounds, some rapid like machine gun fire and others coming in single deadly bursts.

> "I've experienced the thing in my life that was the most meaningful. To see the courage of these (Chinese) students was enough to prove to me the goodness of humanity."
>
> — Prof. Gary Tallman

Tallman couldn't sleep the night when anywhere from 300 to 3,000 people were killed. He remembers saying to himself: "I hope this is another standoff and not what I think it is."

After his worst fears were confirmed, it blotted out the optimism he said he had felt about China only a few days earlier.

He had been invited to the country to share his knowledge of agricultural science with Chinese scientists. The trip was sponsored by People to People International, a private foundation sponsoring technical exchange primarily between Americans and Third World countries and Communist countries.

"I was very optimistic about China. China has over the last 10 years...developed economically," he said.

Now his hope is all but gone: "You have to question the future of a country that takes its most idealistic ...young people and shoots them in the street."

Originally, the People to People 12-person delegation of American plant biochemists and molecular biologists was to visit several Chinese universities, but the delegation feared civil war and decided to leave after visiting only two universities.

In broken English and using handsigns, Tallman and others communicated with the Chinese people about the protest. He was told the Chinese students were protesting corruption in the Chinese government brought on by recent economic reforms. The students believe that those highest in government have been profiteering from the reforms, he said, while many Chinese people continue to live in poverty.

The students want a more open form of government that will eliminate such corruption, he said.

Tallman, 39, is no stranger to student protests. As a West Virginia college student in the 1960s, he witnessed American campus uprisings against the Vietnam War. But he sees the Chinese student uprisings as very different. In the 1960s protests, Tallman recalls that about 20 percent of the students were serious and the rest used them as an excuse for a party.

In the Tiananmen Square protests, he said, "Every student that I saw was there for a purpose."

Tallman is writing a diary of his visit, compiling slides of the protests, and plans to speak to groups about his experience.

One final image that stays with him from those momentous five days in China occurred on his last morning there. At a hotel breakfast, American-style macaroni salad was served to the guests. Someone in the kitchen had carved tomato slices into a word. The word was "hope."

Residents allowed near Tiananmen Square

BEIJING (AP) — Curious Beijing residents today were allowed to drive and bicycle around a heavily guarded Tiananmen Square for the first time since the army took it by force June 4 from student protesters.

Soldiers and traffic police allowed no stopping, but there was plenty of gawking as bicyclists pedaled past 36 tanks and armored personnel carriers along the road at the northern edge of the square and a dozen at the southern end. Pedestrian traffic was not allowed.

The 100-acre square itself was nearly empty, with soldiers standing every 15 feet along the perimeter, facing outward with rifles in their hands. Rolls of barbed wire lined the southern corners.

The stone slabs that pave the square looked charred and scraped in places, but there was no other sign of the battle that raged on the edges of the square the night of June 3-4, when tanks roared in from the east and west. Some students have said the army also fired on the protesters inside the square, but the government has denied it.

The Chinese government has said nearly 300 people were killed, mostly soldiers. But Chinese witnesses and Western intelligence said the toll could be as high as 3,000, most of them civilians.

Tiananmen Square is the center of Beijing both physically and psychologically. On one side stands the former imperial palace, on another is the Great Hall of the People, the seat of government.

Protesters traditionally have taken their causes to Tiananmen, from college students who protested China's ceding territorial rights to foreign countries in 1919, to the tens of thousands of students who occupied the square repeatedly in April and May to demand talks with the government, press freedom and end to official corruption.

The square also is a favorite place for Beijing residents to stroll and fly kites on warm evenings and weekends.

The army quickly cleaned up the students' tents and banners but the 10-day delay in reopening the square indicated it took longer to erase other signs of the student occupation and violent recapture. Some television broadcasts over the past week showed soldiers scrubbing graffiti off the square's monument to revolutionary heroes and scraping up charred debris.

Also opened for the first time in weeks was the imperial palace, one of Beijing's top tourist attractions. However, visitors were directed to the north gate and a large portion of the palace compound in the south, closest to the square, was closed without explanation.

Hundreds of Chinese tourists, most from out of town, pressed their eyes to cracks in the gate of the closed section, but could see only a vast expanse of empty courtyard on the other side.

The sections that were open appeared unscathed by the violence so close by.

"When you stand here it's as if nothing happened," a young woman from the central city of Nanjing said as she leaned on a carved marble baluster and watched birds circle over the palace's yellow tile roofs.

Granting diplomatic refuge causes tension

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press Writer

Hungarian Cardinal Josef Mindszenty hid out for 15 years at the U.S. Embassy in Budapest. Ten-thousand Cubans once sought refuge on the grounds of the Peruvian Embassy. Now, Chinese dissident Fang Lizhi is holed up in the U.S. Embassy in Beijing.

All have taken advantage of the right of foreign embassies, long secured in diplomatic law, to grant protection to dissidents and defectors from the countries where they are located.

Sometimes, an embassy's granting of refuge can provide an easy way out for everyone in a political conflict. Foreign missions have been used as a convenient conduit, especially in Latin America, to quickly get toppled leaders and their relatives out of the country after a revolution.

But far more often, the granting of embassy refuge to opponents of the host government aggravates diplomatic tension. It can also put a heavy burden on the mission doing the sheltering.

China's leaders on Tuesday showed their anger at the U.S. decision to grant refuge to Fang, calling it an interference in internal affairs. They ordered a nationwide alert for Fang, telling local authorities to arrest him if he is seen trying to escape the country.

Under international law, embassies are the territory of the country they represent, not territory of the host country. Therefore, a dissident or defector who makes it to a foreign embassy is usually safe from pursuit, if the embassy takes him in.

The embassy has no ability, however, to guarantee the refuge-seeker safe passage out of the host country.

In many cases, embassies that have supported a dissident feel a moral obligation to help him when he gets into trouble.

"Oftentimes, these people will go into an embassy where they have friends, and it's because of these friends and associations that they're being pursued in the first place," said Peter Tarnoff, the president of the New York-based Council on Foreign Relations and a former State Department official.

Tarnoff said in an interview that despite the dislocation that the practice sometimes causes for embassies, most diplomats believe the right to grant refuge is a useful diplomatic privilege.

That includes nations of all ideologies, said Charles M. Lichenstein, a former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations and now a fellow of the Heritage Foundation think tank in Washington.

"The most established totalitarianisms, like the Soviet Union, to the best of my knowledge respect these principles," Lichenstein said in an interview. Dictatorships, he said, tend to claim that their own dissidents or defectors who take advantage of embassy refuge are in fact common criminals, not political activists.

Perhaps the longest-running modern case of embassy asylum was that of Mindszenty, who was arrested by Hungary's communist rulers in 1948 as an enemy of communism and sentenced to life in prison.

Hungarian revolutionaries freed him during the 1956 uprising, but Mindszenty took refuge in the U.S. mission in Budapest after Warsaw Pact forces crushed the revolt. He lived there until the Vatican arranged for his release to the West in 1971.

Many embassy refuge cases have involved the East bloc. In the Soviet Union, seven Pentecostalists claiming religious persecution lived for five years in a cramped room at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, leaving in 1983.

In the freer atmosphere now prevailing inside the East bloc, it has even become possible now for citizens of one bloc country to seek asylum from another.

Latin America has seen many instances of foreign embassies or diplomats helping to evacuate losers in political struggles. When Juan D. Peron was overthrown in Argentina in 1955, he took a boat to Paraguay under Paraguayan government protection.

Defecting diplomats study their options

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Two Chinese diplomats, who denounced their government after the Beijing massacre, remained in hiding today to study their options after declining to ask for political asylum.

The young consulate officers, the first Chinese diplomats to defect to the United States since the Communist Revolution in 1949, met for several hours Monday with the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

"They haven't requested anything," said David Ilchert, INS regional director. "They are not in INS custody and told us they do not wish to make any statement to the press. They're mulling over the options and may wish to seek legal counsel."

Meanwhile, China's consul general in San Francisco issued a brief statement calling the defections "utterly unjustifiable," and said China is "making representations" to the United States regarding the case.

The defectors are worried about giving up their homeland and careers but didn't appear to be worried about violent reprisals against them, said FBI agent Richard Held.

He said the consulate officers, who are at an undisclosed site in the San Francisco Bay area, are not in FBI protective custody.

One of their options is to simply remain in the United States for another year, under the visa extension granted to all Chinese nationals last week by the Bush administration.

Zhou Li-min, 26, vice consul for cultural affairs, told the Chinese Times in San Francisco in an interview published Monday that he has supported the students cause "in his heart" since the start of the student protests in Beijing.

Zhang Li-ming, 25, vice consul for overseas affairs, said the two planned for several days to defect and decided to announce it at a candlelight vigil planned outside City Hall.

At the vigil, which was attended by about 5,000 people, they told the stunned rally they decided to defect after Beijing leaders launched a propaganda campaign claiming no citizens had died in the clash in and around Tiananmen Square on June 4.

"We are supposed to tell you that no one was injured or killed. Why? Because we are diplomats. But we won't fake it here. Before we are diplomats, we are Chinese and we are human beings," Zhang said.

The Chinese government says nearly 300 people were killed, mostly soldiers.

Mexico foreign minister cancels trip to China

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Foreign Minister Fernando Solana has cancelled a trip to China scheduled for later this year in the wake of the slaughter of hundreds of pro-democracy protesters, the government said says.

It did not say when Solana had been scheduled to visit China.

The Foreign Ministry on Monday also reiterated the government's earlier condemnation of the June 3 killings of students by Chinese army troops in Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

The statement said that Mexico's ambassador to China would remain in the country "to continue informing us of happenings."

It added that the Mexican government had helped 22 Mexican citizens leave China after the killings, including students and diplomats' families.

Pistons defy long time NBA 'center' tradition

Detroit seeks clincher against Lakers tonight

By SAM GOLDAPER
N.Y. Times News Service

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Through the years, the National Basketball Associaton champion has generally been a team with an overpowering center or, lacking that, a club with high-scoring forwards.

But the Detroit Pistons, in taking three consecutive games from the Los Angeles Lakers to come within one victory of their first NBA title, have been led by three backcourt men.

Joe Dumars, Isiah Thomas and Vinnie Johnson have accounted for 211 of the Pistons' 312 points against the Lakers.

They have busted off picks and broken down defenders with the dribble when isolated. Seemingly, they are always working the clock, shooting with only a few seconds remaining on the 24-second clock.

THE PISTON guards have, of course, been going against a Laker team that has seen Magic Johnson and Byron Scott sidelined with hamstring injuries. Everything the backcourt men have tried against James Worthy, Michael Cooper or Tony Campbell has worked.

But the three guards have sparked the Pistons all season in the face of the traditional assumption that teams do not win titles without top big men.

In the 1950s, George Mikan led the Minneapolis Lakers to championships. In the 1960's, Bill Russell, and in the next decade, the likes of Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Wilt Chamberlain, Willis Reed, Dave Cowens, Bill Walton and Moses Malone were the keys to the championship rings their teammates coveted.

In the 1980s, the arrival of Larry Bird and Magic Johnson, a 6-foot-9-inch playmaker, to augment aging centers, brought titles for the Celtics and the Lakers.

THERE HAVE been a handful of championship teams without the dominant center. The Golden State Warriors won the title in 1974-75 led by Rick Barry and Jamaal Wilkes, both forwards.

Three years later, it was the Washington Bullets with Wes Unseld playing center at only 6 feet 7 inches along with a fine supporting cast.

The only true guard-oriented team to win a title was the Seattle SuperSonics in 1978-79 with Gus Williams, Dennis Johnson, now with the Boston Celtics, and Fred Brown.

In leading the Sonics past the Bullets, four games to one, those three guards averaged 60 points a game.

Many basketball people believe that with outstanding centers becoming scarcer, the pro game is swinging to a new phase featuring scoring by guards, physical play and rebounding typified by Bill Laimbeer, John Salley and Dennis Rodman of Detroit, and outstanding defensive play by an entire team.

"IT'S ALWAYS nice to have a Patrick Ewing and an Akeem Olajuwon," said Rod Thorn, who has played, coached, been a general manager and is currently the NBA's vice president of operations, "but when there are none, you do other things."

That is just what the Pistons are doing, and through it has been born a new star, Joe Dumars, who looms as the easy winner when the 11-member new media committee selects the winner of the most valuable player award in the championship round.

In considering the Piston guards, one begins with Thomas, the All-Star playmaker, whose 1983 arrival signaled the start of a new era for a franchise that was long considered a joke.

Thomas came with a national reputation, garnered as the playmaker who led Indiana University to the national championship.

The Brooklyn-born Vinnie Johnson built his reputation on his instant offense off the bench, and the nickname of Microwave has not hurt his notoriety.

MEANWHILE, Dumars, out of McNeese State, has been content with being just plain Joe, though he has justified his presence since his arrival at the Pistons' top 1985 draft choice.

In these times, when coaches have tabbed players as point or shooting guards, the 6-3 Dumars, said: "When asked, I always say, I just play guard. I was taught that in high school back in Natchitoches, Louisiana. We had a starting five where everybody was about 6-3. The coach used to tell us whoever got the ball off the boards took the middle and the rest of us filled the lanes."

Though he starts at off guard, he at times replaces Thomas as the playmaker.

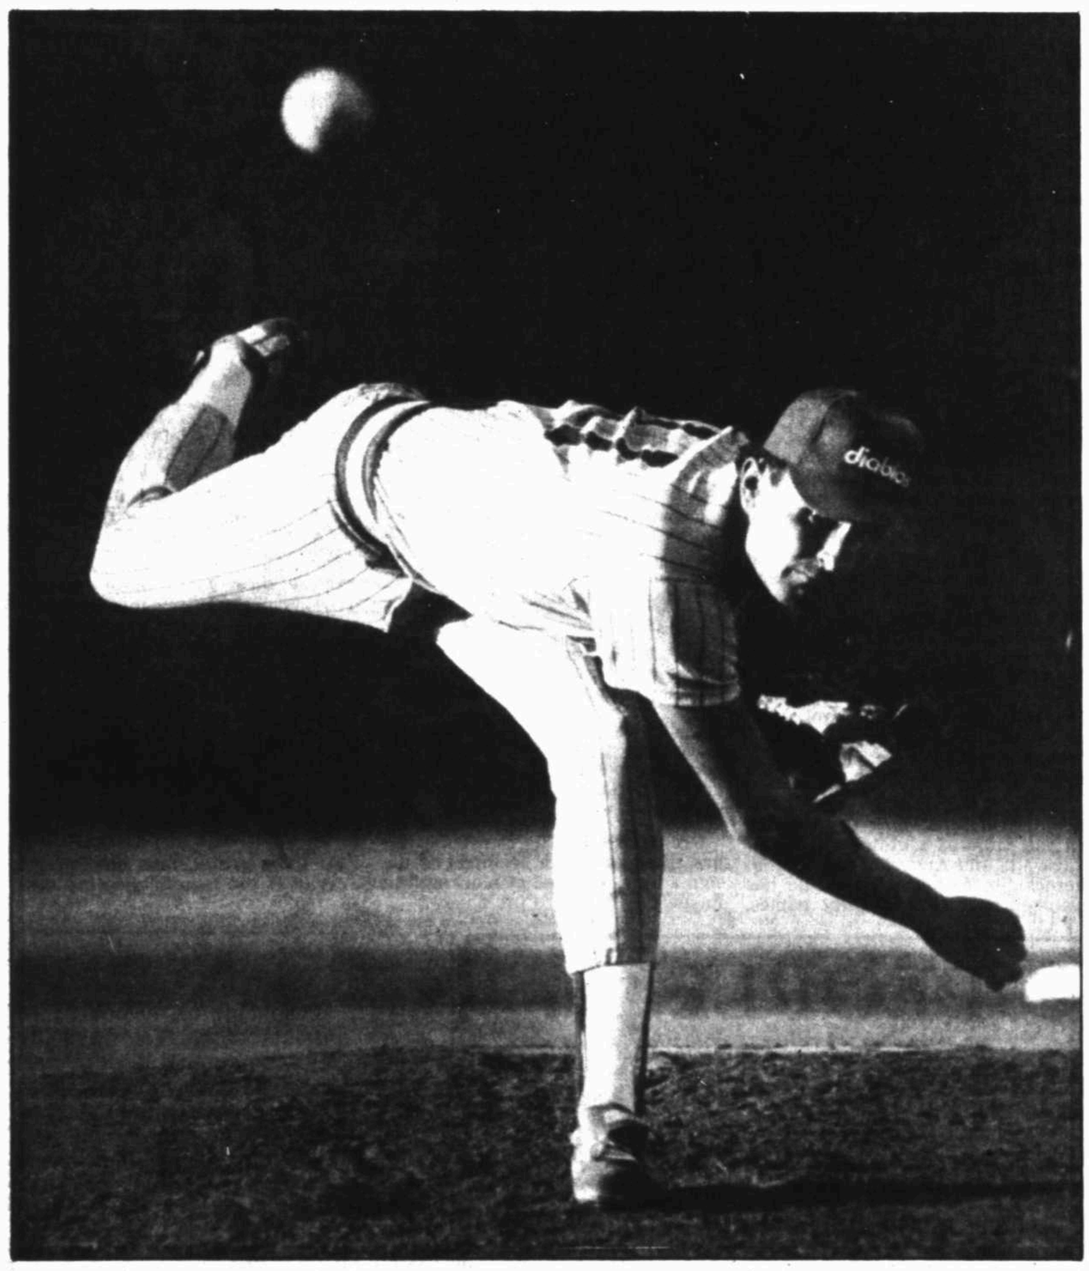

No matter which guard position he plays, the soft-spoken Dumars, whom Coach Pat Riley of the Lakers called a "great player, the heart and soul of the team," has found his place.

Magic Johnson, without him they just aren't the Lakers.

Angels vault back into first in TL West

Big Halos are coming

Carl Moraw, Diablos' starting pitcher, bears down on Angels.

Angels Stadium excitement is about to reach the boil-over point.

Not only are the California Angels due here for a 2 p.m. Thursday exhibition with their AA farm club, but the Midland Angels are back in first place in the Texas League West first half race after a gutty 8-6 win over the El Paso Diablos before 2,075 fans Monday night.

Midland leap-frogged into a half game lead over Wichita when the Wranglers were beaten for the second straight night by the San Antonio Missions. Midland has three games left and Wichita four, promising a potboiling finish to the first half race.

MIDLAND not only survived adversity, but came from behind to win...and catcher Otto Gonzalez, well, he just survived, even though he couldn't finish the game.

Kevin Trudeau finally got that elusive fourth victory. He's now 4-5, but it wasn't neat. The first three El Paso batters singled and the Livermore, Calif., native escaped with just one run surrendered, a considerable improvement over Sunday's six-run Diablo first.

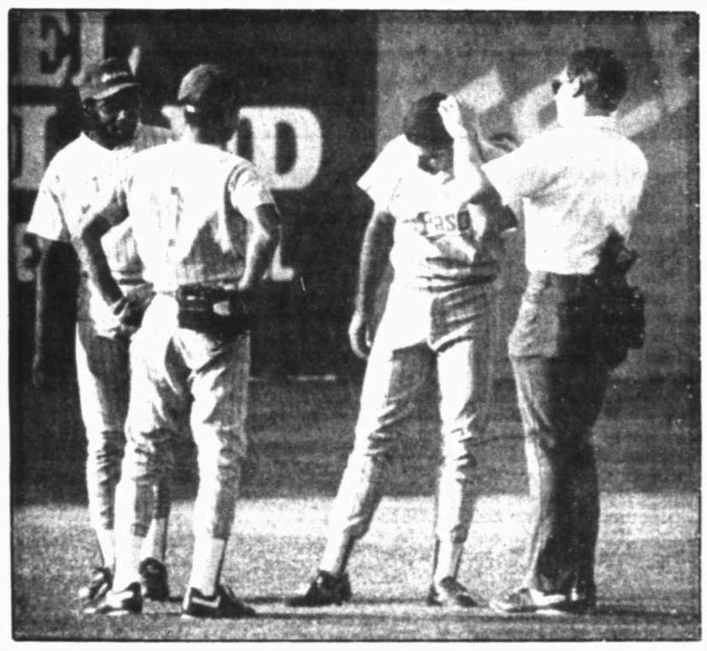

Midland took a 2-1 lead in the third when Reed Peters and Scott Cerny doubled and Chris Cron singled home the second run. Back to Trudeau...

Trudeau, the veteran righthander, somehow survived five straight hits to open the fourth, good for just three runs and a 4-2 Diablo lead. Trudeau not only survived, but lasted into the seventh as the Angels battled back for two in the fourth to tie.

Gonzalez drew a leadoff walk from El Paso starter Carl Moraw and Mark Howie chased him all the way home from first with a double to left-center, Act I.

Act II came in the sixth when Midland erupted for four runs off relief pitcher Eric Tirado, who has just joined the Diablos. Again Gonzalez led off with a walk and Howie chased him all the way home from first with a triple.

A walk to John Orton, another to Peters, Gary DiSarcina's sac fly and then, with two out, Danny Grunhard singled for two runs into right, the runs that proved to be the difference.

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

"THEY WERE throwing me a lot of changeups that had me baffled early, but the work we did in the afternoon paid off."

Meanwhile, a long night of squatting behind the plate (a 3 hour, 27 minute game) and those two long runs finally got to Gonzalez with Jesus Alfaro, who proved to be the game's final batter, at the plate in the ninth. Rib cramps forced Otto to retire, but he refused to blame Howie, and all that running.

Tim Burcham came in for Trudeau with one out and Tim Torricelli, a double, on second and got the Angels into the ninth. A lead off walk and Luis Merejo, the Angels' Whip, came out of the bullpen to get the save. He wasn't as overpowering as usual, giving up two hits, but got the job done with a big 5-3 (Bob Rose-Hedi Vargas) play on Torricelli's base hit bunt bid after a lead off walk to D.L. Smith.

So the Angels are back in first and Howie, played a big role with his run scoring double off slider in fourtn and the triple off a fast bail in the sixth.

Howie, who came to the Angels after three years with the Oakland and another with the Cleveland organizations, has one of those be-ready-for-anything-at-any-time roles for the Angels.

Monday, Howie, who came out of the dugout to contribute, feels Midland may have turned it around. "We stopped playing aggressive baseball and went through a tough period. Tonight we were aggressive again."

Hearns, Leonard battle to draw

By PHIL BERGER
N.Y. Times News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. Sugar Ray Leonard and Thomas Hearns fought to a 12-round draw Monday night in an action-filled bout at Caesars Palace.

Judge Jerry Roth voted for Hearns, 113-112, while Judge Tom Kaczmarek had it for Leonard, 113-112.

The other judge, Dalby Shirley, called the bout a draw, 112-112. The decision allowed Leonard to keep his World Boxing Council super-middleweight title.

The crowd, which seemed to cheer louder for Hearns, who scored two knockdowns in the bout, booed the decision.

Through the early part of Round 1, a determined-looking Hearns stalked Leonard, who circled the ring.

Hearns landed an occasional jab and a right to the ribs.

But Leonard scored the best blows — two rights to Hearns's head — in a cautious round.

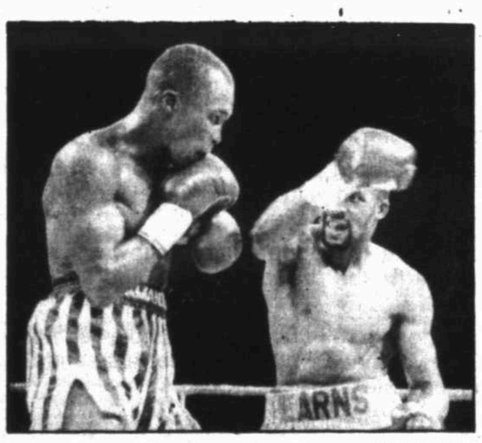

Both fighters moved cautiously through the second round, neither landing a significant punch until Hearns nailed Leonard with a right as Leonard turned southpaw in the final seconds. Leonard looked particularly tentative.

Things heated up considerably in the third round.

After Leonard landed a right flush on Hearns's jaw, Hearns decked Leonard for a 5 count with his own right.

After that, both fighters loaded up their punches and landed.

Leonard landed a sharp left-right to Hearns's head, then both fighters traded stiff right hands throughout the fourth round.

Sugar Ray Leonard takes a right to the head from Hit Man Hearns in Monday fight at Las Vegas.

Leonard had a big round in the fifth.

He staggered Hearns with a right-left combination, then battered him against the ropes near Leonard's corner.

Hearns absorbed many punches and seemed to be in trouble. But he fought back, and toward the end of the round, landed stiff punches of his own.

Leonard fought more cautiously in the sixth and taunted Hearns a bit. Hearns sneered at Leonard and showed that there was blood on his mouthpiece.

Hearns landed two powerful left hooks at the start of the seventh round.

Leonard slid along the ropes, bobbing and weaving as Hearns tried to get to him. Mostly, Hearns missed.

As the round advanced, Leonard scored well to Hearns's body and head, landing punches with both hands.

Hearns provided the best punches in the eighth round, a right to the head followed by a right to the body.

The best action in the ninth occurred at the end when Hearns scored with a hard right to the head.

But Leonard came back with a thudding left hook that had Hearns retreating on somewhat shaky legs.

Leonard opened a cut on Hearns's cheekbone, beneath the left eye, and scored with a crisp right just before the bell ending Round 10.

Two rights by Hearns put Leonard on the deck in the 11th round. Leonard was up by 6. Hearns grew weary as Leonard rallied and scored with both hands.

Leonard battered Hearns throughout the final round, intent on a knockout. But Hearns hung on and finished the round. When the final bell sounded, he gave Leonard a smile, the blood still on his mouthpiece.

Hearns went into the bout with the added pressure of a serious family problem.

Hearns's 22-year-old brother, Henry, was arraigned Monday in Southfield, Mich., on a first-degree murder charge in the shooting death of a friend, Nancy Barile, 19, on Saturday night.

Blame Trevino for Open course

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

There is a common trait that runs through the egos of club members who feel theirs is the best course imaginable.

They cannot stand it when a superb golfer comes along and shoots a record score on their hallowed links. So they solve the problem by change.

Those changes are not always for the better, though they may serve the purpose of making the course tougher. But in golf, despite common beliefs, tougher courses are not necessarily better courses.

Members of the Oak Hill Country Club in Rochester have gone through this stage.

OAK HILL has two substantial 18-hole courses that were designed in the mid-1920s by Donald Ross, one of the premier architects of the game. It was Lee Trevino who shot the record that caused the changes.

Trevino made his name by winning the 1968 United States Open on Oak Hill's East Course, where this week the 89th Open will be held. Trevino's winning score of 275 was the result of rounds of 69, 68, 69 and 69 as he became the only golfer in Open history to shoot four sub-70 rounds.

How dare he do this?

So in came a couple of modern golf architects and Oak Hill East got a face lift before the 1980 PGA Championship was held there and won by Jack Nicklaus. Three new holes were built and a few others redesigned.

"They flat-out ruined it," Trevino said.

BUT THAT has been done to other Open courses, like Inverness in Toledo, Ohio. Oakmont outside Pittsburgh was made almost unplayable by dense high rough in 1983 because in the previous Open there, in 1973, Johnny Miller set an Open record of 63 the final day.

This will be the third Open at Oak Hill (Cary Middlecoff won there in 1956) and the first since the post-Trevino changes.

Nevertheless, the Open will be held on a strong track which, as usual, puts a premium on accurate driving.

AND OAK Hill, as are so many older courses in the North, is getting tighter and tighter each year as trees intrude over the the target space on the fairways.

Just being on a fairway may not be good enough in some spots on this course. Being in the center of the fair way will be necessary at times so there is no chance of clipping trees with a second shot.

The tight chute off the tee on the par-5 fourth hole is a good example of what trees can do to make a difference in a course.

At 6,902 yards, Oak Hill is a solid par-70 course for the Open with a pair of par-5 holes.

The 13th, the other par-5, is one of the longest U.S. Open holes at 594 yards.

ONE OF THE shortest holes is the 167-yard par-3 sixth, one of the three new holes built for the 1980 PGA Championship. Trees play a part and a golfer cannot expect par if he overshoots the green because the pitch back is to a steep sloping green falling away to the front.

There are few letups at Oak Hill, a hilly course that starts strongly with a 440-yard, par-4 first hole. A brook crosses the fairway in front of the green but should not be a factor if the drive lands on the fairway.

The course ends with strength with three substantial par-4 holes cut through the huge trees.

The finishing 18th is 440 yards, just like the opening hole. But this final test plays a bit longer as it goes well uphill to the green.

The par-3 15th, also a new hole on the course, is 177 yards with water right and big bunkers left. Arnold Palmer took a 6 there in the 1984 Senior Open to end any chance he had to catch Miller Barber.

Lee Trevino

New Cub fan chant

'Take me out to the rooftop'

By DIRK JOHNSON
N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — Wrigley Field has been called the cathedral of American ballparks, and not just because the faithful go there to pray for miracles.

The Chicago Cubs, who have not won a World Series since the Wright brothers were aloft, play in this cozy old neighborhood park with ivy-covered walls and a scoreboard operated by human hand.

For a choirmaster and a hymn, they have the broadcaster Harry Caray leading renditions of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." And from the rooftops of nearby apartment buildings, fans root from lawn chairs and wait for a home run to come their way.

BASEBALL purists mourned last year at a major change in Cubs ritual after the team's owner, the Tribune Co., installed lights at Wrigley Field, ending 70 years of baseball played by day. The company, a media conglomerate, cited the need for progress, convenience and a larger profit margin.

Now another Cubs tradition is endangered by bottom-line motives, but this time the Tribune Co. is howling in protest.

The owner of a building overlooking the park's right-field wall has turned a rooftop into a private viewing area, has called it the Lakeview Baseball Club and is charging $600 and more for parties there.

The City Council has passed an ordinance that would prohibit other building owners from doing the same, and the Tribune Co., angered by what it considers piracy, has threatened to erect a barrier that would block the club's view and probably that of adjacent buildings.

"I moved to this apartment just so I could sit on the roof and watch the games," said Greg Young, a dry wall taper, who lives in the basement apartment of the building next to club's. "I think this stinks."

YOUNG, WHO wore a T-shirt that made clear his antipathy to New York, cheered from the rooftop as the Cubs defeated the Mets, 5-4.

Watching from the roof, Young said, is just as enjoyable as being inside the park except when the ball goes deep into the right-field corner, where the view is obstructed.

"We have to listen to the reaction of the crowd to know what's going on," he said.

In some ways, he added, watching from the roof is better than watching from the bleachers inside the park. "There's no long line at our bathroom," he said.

The landlord of Young's building allows each tenant to invite two guests to the roof. The fans can stand and cheer, but the landlord has a rule against sitting on the four-foot-high rail along the edge. Most people in the building invite a friend or relative to watch, said Young, who often brings his Uncle Norman or his brother, Jim.

NEXT DOOR, at the Lakeview Baseball Club, the rooftop was being rented by the law firm of Rosenthal & Schanfield, and lawyers and their friends watched the game from under a green awning.

Henry M. Morris, a lawyer with the firm, recalled listening to the Cubs on the radio as a child, when Phil Cavaretta and Andy Pafko were the heroes. Since then, he said, he has watched hundreds of Cubs games, but never from the top of a roof.

"I don't know what the Cubs are so upset about, since they've got the park filled," Morris said.

Indeed, tickets to many Cubs games are impossible to obtain. Last year the Cubs drew more than two million fans, fourth highest in the National League, although they lost 12 more games than they won.

The Lakeview Baseball Club, owned by ERTA Development, a real estate company, declined to comment on the rooftop issue.

Cubs officials also declined to comment, but Donald Grenesko, the team president, told The Chicago Sun-Times last week, "They're stealing our product, and that just grates on us."

"We think it's just wonderful for the neighbors to go up on the roof to watch our games," he added.

"But when they start selling it and marketing it, they've just gone beyond the bounds of what's decent and we don't like people taking advantage of us."

Grenesko told The Sun-Times he has asked the team architect to design a barrier aimed at blocking the Lakeview Baseball Club's view.

HE SAID the barrier would be as small as possible to avoid penalizing the neighbors, whose rooftop viewing he called "part of the unique charm and character of Wrigley Field."

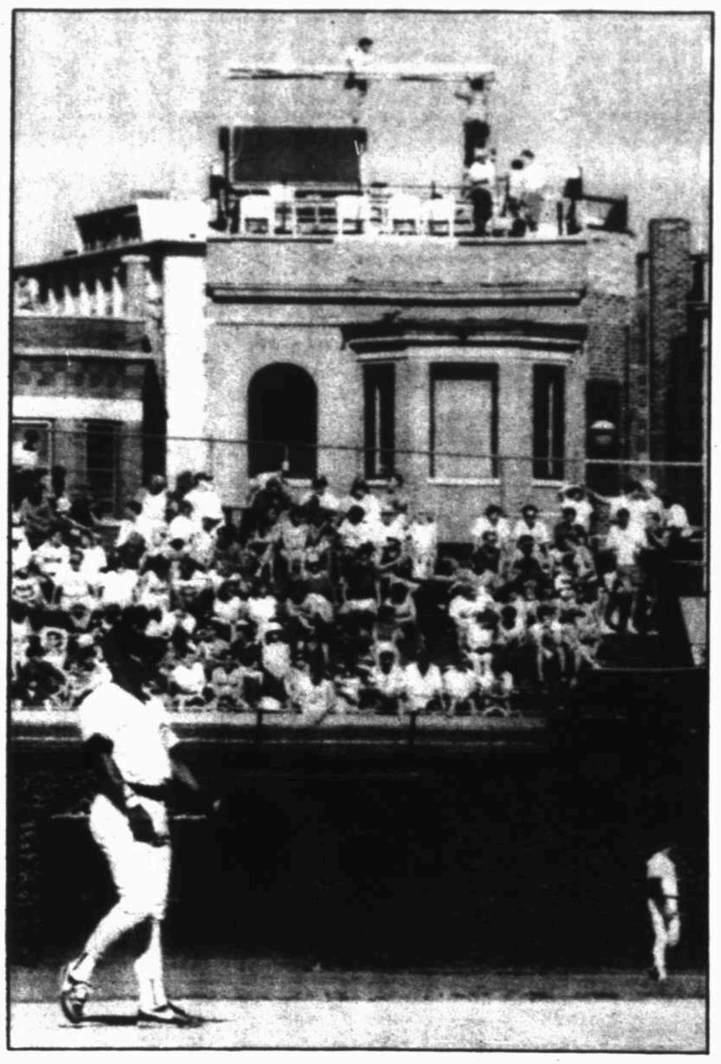

Citizens United for Baseball in the Sunshine, a neighborhood group that fought unsuccessfully to keep lights out of Wrigley Field, also opposes efforts to open private clubs on roofs.

But Mike Quigley, president of the group, said the Cubs, in part, brought the problem on themselves by installing lights. The market for private parties would be vastly reduced without night games, he said. Quigley said.

"Now, we've got all these souvenir hawkers on the streets that we didn't have before. The bars are full. It's a different atmosphere all the way around."

Some fans speculated that the developer got the idea for its rooftop club from the Cubs. The Tribune Co. built expensive skyboxes in the park for this season, and the addition of the fancy boxes for corporate fans has not won support from old-line Cubs loyalists.

At some games, fans have yelled angrily at the fans in the first-class seating.

Rangers' Jeffcoat blanks Cal, 4-0

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Mike Jeffcoat pitched a five-hitter for his first major-league shutout and Julio Franco drove in two runs, leading the Texas Rangers past the California Angels 4-0 Monday night.

Jeffcoat, 2-0, made his third start for the Rangers since joining the club from Class AAA Oklahoma City on May 31. He struck out five and walked two in sending the Angels to their fifth straight loss.

Jeffcoat, who also pitched his first complete game in the majors, was signed as a free agent by the Rangers in December 1986 after playing for Cleveland and San Francisco.

Franco became the first Rangers second baseman to hit 10 home runs in a season with a solo homer in the sixth inning off Mike Witt, 3-7, to give Texas a 4-0 lead. The record of nine was held by Bump Wills and Toby Harrah. Franco's 56 RBIs is two more than he had all of last season with Cleveland.

Royals 2, Athletics 1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jim Eisenreich's run-scoring single with two outs in the 11th inning gave Kansas City a victory Oakland.

The victory went to reliever Tom Gordon, 8-2, and moved the Royals past California into second place in the American League West, 2½ games behind Oakland.

Blue Jays 5, Tigers 4

TORONTO — Kelly Gruber's fifth hit of the game, a two-run double with two outs in the 11th inning, lifted Toronto over Detroit.

The five-hit game was the first of Gruber's career and made a winner of Tom Henke, 4-3. Mike Heath had five hits for the Tigers, including an RBI single in the top of the 11th.

White Sox 5, Indians 3

CHICAGO — Steve Rosenberg won for the first time in five major-league starts and Rich Yett was chased without retiring a batter as Chicago beat Cleveland.

Rosenberg, 2-2, allowed eight hits and three runs in 6 1-3 innings, striking out four and walking none. Donn Pall went 1 2-3 innings and Bobby Thigpen pitched a hitless ninth for his 11th save.

Cubs drub Cardinals

From Wire Reports

A day after a 10-7 loss to St. Louis, the Cubs turned it around.

Ryne Sandberg drove in three runs with three hits, including a two-run homer, and Jerome Walton had a career-high four hits as Chicago beat St. Louis 10-3 Monday, ending the Cardinals' five-game winning streak.

"It's nice to bounce back after what happened yesterday," said Steve Wilson, one of six Cubs pitchers shelled in Sunday's loss.

With scheduled starter Rick Sutcliffe, sidelined by back spasms, Wilson made his first major-league start and allowed three hits in five innings. Wilson, 3-0, walked one and struck out three.

"What did I tell you," Cardinal manager Whitey Herzog said. "They beat the heck out of us. It always happens when you figure to win. Give the kid credit. He did a good job considering he pitched yesterday and gave them five innings today."

Walton led off the first with a single and was forced by Dwight Smith. Sandberg followed with his eighth homer of the season and third in his last three at-bats against Scott Terry, 4-6.

Dodgers 9, Reds 2

LOS ANGELES — Willie Randolph drove in four runs with a two-run double and a pair of run-scoring groundouts and Kirk Gibson had three hits.

Dave Anderson drove in three runs, including a two-run homer in the eighth off Kent Tekulve, Anderson's first home run since last Aug. 21.

Mike Morgan, 5-4, lowered his major league-leading earned-run average to 1.59. He allowed two runs and six hits in six innings and rookie John Wetteland pitched 2 1-3 hitless innings for his first big-league save.

Rick Mahler, 8-6, gave up seven hits and four runs in six innings.

This Day in Baseball

June 13

1905 — Christy Mathewson of the New York Giants pitched his second no-hit game, beating the Chicago Cubs and Mordecai Brown 1-0.

1912 — Christy Mathewson of the New York Giants recorded his 300th career victory with a 3-2 triumph over the Chicago Cubs.

1948 — A crowd of 49,641 turned out for Babe Ruth Day at Yankee Stadium. New York retired Ruth's No. 3 and the Yankees beat the Cleveland Indians 5-3.

1957 — Ted Williams of the Boston Red Sox hit three home runs and drove in five runs in a 9-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Williams became the first American League player to have two three-homer games in a season.

1973 — The Los Angeles Dodgers' infield of Steve Garvey (first base), Davey Lopes (second base), Ron Cey (third base) and Bill Russell (shortstop) played together for the first time in a 16-3 loss to the Philadelphia Phillies. The quartet would set major league record for longevity by playing 8½ years in the same infield.

1986 — Toronto's Cliff Johnson stroked the 20th pinch hit homer of his career to increase his all-time major league total. It was a two-run shot off Detroit's Willie Hernandez but it wasn't enough as the Tigers beat the Blue Jays 10-5.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Meditation will lead to deeper understanding. A new maturity will manifest itself in a good relationship late this year. Money could trickle through your fingers at a rapid rate. Rush through a new business idea in late August; someone else may be planning to do the same thing after Labor Day. Do not allow outsiders to influence your thinking. Travel will be a source of delight. Take to the road or sky in December or January.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: tennis champion Steffi Graf, actress Marla Gibbs, actor Gene Barry, skater Eric Heiden, troubadour Burl Ives, rock singer Boy George, guerrilla leader Che Guevara, pitcher Don Newcombe, author Harriet Beecher Stowe, newsman Pierre Salinger.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keeping a secret now will win you respect in high places. A joint financial venture could be a bone of contention when family members gather. Stand up for your rights calmly but firmly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Success may exact quite a price from you. Beware of outside interference when trying to solve a family financial matter. Do not give away your good ideas for free. Profit from them!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Knowledge of other cultures makes you an interesting conversationalist and will come in handy if you travel this summer. Your relations with your siblings and children improve. Avoid bringing up touchy subjects.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Delightful companions enter your social life, giving it a whole new dimension. There will be an extra touch of brilliance in what you do now. Others express their surprise and approval. Be gracious.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Someone's inconsistent behavior could drive you crazy. Romance moves into the spotlight. Reduce some of the tension in your life. Let go of projects and relationships that are no longer rewarding.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Romance moves to center stage. Party invitations keep you busy. Travel opens new doors, setting the stage for a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. Prove your loyalty to the one you love.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You need to redefine your values and be more discriminating in your purchases. Heed an urge to settle down. Your nesting instincts are very strong now.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your work could take you to foreign lands either physically or through thrilling literature. A research project goes better than expected. Owning property brings peace of mind. You feel more settled.

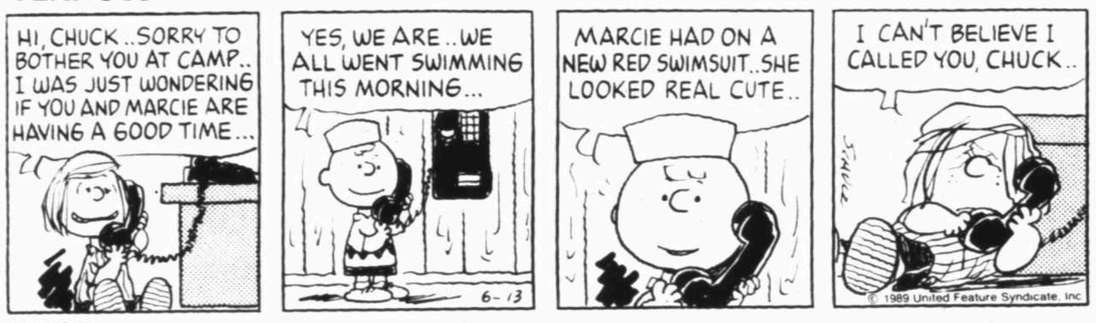

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Rejoice in the result of travel: an exciting and idyllic environment. Romance will not be at all dull this evening. Act confident even if you have your doubts. Poise is essential.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Travel plans now in the works are sure to please both you and that someone special! Foreign events could boost your earning power. Suddenly, your talents are in great demand. Be choosy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day to tie up loose ends. Clear away that mound of papers on your desk. Loans will be approved if there is legitimate need. Lay your cards on the table.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your interest in a loved one's welfare sets in motion a beneficial and fascinating chain of events. You have the freedom to explore a new lifestyle if you so desire. Be bold.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♡

For years, we've been trying to convince you to go with the odds. After this hand, you'll probably never again believe anything we tell you.

North might have tried to find a 4–4 spade fit. However, with no ruffing value in his hand, he chose instead to make the value bid of three no trump, a decision which we endorse wholeheartedly.

West led the queen of hearts, attacking declarer's weak spot. It did not take a genius to see that declarer would have to take nine tricks without giving up the lead. And to accomplish that declarer would need to bring in the club suit without loss—if he surrendered a trick to the queen, the defenders would be able to take at least three heart tricks as well as the ace of diamonds

If clubs were 3–3, declarer would have a straight guess as to which defender held the queen. So to learn more about the hand, declarer cashed three rounds of spades, ending in hand. On the last of these East discarded a diamond.

Since West probably had long hearts for his opening lead, in addition to four spades, he had to be short in clubs. Therefore, East was a favorite to hold the queen of clubs. But if East held at least four clubs to the queen, there was no way declarer could collect four club tricks. East could hold declarer to three by simply covering the jack of clubs when it was led!

This was the time for a desperation play that had a chance of delivering the contract. Declarer went against the odds by leading a low club to the jack. When that won, he cashed dummy's remaining spade and then took three more club tricks for his contract. Well played!

Olympian ready to return to rink after suicide attempt

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Olympic ice skater Tai Babilonia says she is ready to return to the rink, nine months after a suicide attempt during a time she "hit rock bottom."

Miss Babilonia posed with her skating partner Randy Gardner in Times Square on Monday to announce their professional return Wednesday at a show in Atlantic City, N.J.

"I'm excited about being back with my partner andscared to death about performing again," said Miss Babilonia. "But it was my decision to come back. I missed it."

Nine months ago, Miss Babilonia, 29, tried to kill herself by taking an overdose of sleeping pills.

Miss Babilonia, who has been skating since she was 7 years old, said she was "burnt out" on skating. "I had taken on too much, more work than I can handle, and that just sort of caught up with me," she said.

Miss Babilonia and Gardner won the world figure skating title in Vienna, Austria, in 1979. The pair had to drop out of the 1980 Olympic Winter Games in Lake Placid, N.Y., when Gardner suffered a leg injury.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Comedian David Brenner likes a little bubbly with his billiards so he's planning to open a pool hall that will serve champagne and boutique beer.

Brenner

Brenner said the chain of billiards rooms, bearing his name, also will have a dress code. He plans to make appearances, now and then, he said.

"Some people have old-fashioned connotations of 1950s poolrooms," he said. "But this is going to be the social meeting place for yuppies."

If he didn't mean it, he said, "I would have just called it the Benjamin Franklin Billiards Room. Or the Liberty Bell Pool Hall."

Brenner, who grew up in Philadelphia and lives in New York, said he hopes to open the first parlor by October in the historic Society Hill section.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — People who wish they were skinny might want to talk to actress Sandra Bernhard.

"Emaciation isn't all that it's cracked up to be," said the lanky comedian in the July issue of Mademoiselle magazine.

Over the years, she says, people have called her "spaghetti-legs," "bony maroney," "anorexic freak" and "will o' the wisp."

"I've been skinny for so long now, sometimes I'm known simply as 'the bone woman,'" she says. "Hordes of compulsive dieters constantly mill about me."

Many ask how she does it.

"It's just the way I am; I eat and my metabolism knocks it out," Bernhard said.

• • •

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Pop superstar Michael Jackson will be getting a new addition to his menagerie of animals this week when he receives a baby giraffe.

Sedgwick County Zoo officials said Monday a 1-year-old giraffe named Mahali was set to leave Wednesday for California, where an animal dealer will deliver her to Jackson.

Zookeeper Ryan Gulker said she isn't a typical giraffe, which may suit Jackson just fine because she's on the shy side.

"She's not as outgoing as some of the other giraffes that we've had," Gulker said. "She seems to be a little bit more to herself."

Zoo officials would not disclose Mahali's price, but said female giraffes normally run about $15,000.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer Tanya Tucker, who is 8½ months pregnant, said she saved her friend from choking on food by performing the Heimlich maneuver.

Tucker

After attending a baby shower for her Sunday, Ms. Tucker and several friends went to a Nashville area restaurant. During their meal, Rosemarie Farone of Chicago started choking on food and began turning blue.

"We were eating steak," said Ms. Tucker. "All of a sudden she took a bite and (began coughing). I asked her, "Are you choking?"

Despite her pregnancy, Ms. Tucker reached her friend from behind and dislodge the food with a quick thrust to her abdomen.

Ms. Tucker, 30, said her brother, John, taught her the Heimlich maneuver after he used it to dislodge aspirin stuck in her throat prior to a concert performance several years ago.

• • •

STAUNTON, Va. (AP) — Country music singer Ricky Van Shelton canceled his appearance with the Statler Brothers at an annual Fourth of July concert because a cover could not be rigged for the stage, the entertainers said.

The Statler Brothers said Monday that Shelton "made elaborate and expensive demands that we are not willing to provide" for the 20th Happy Birthday USA Celebration.

Shelton said in a statement he canceled because of a personal policy not to accept any bookings that did not provide a cover for the stage.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Quine, who directed Jack Lemmon in a variety of oddball comedies including "How to Murder Your Wife," committed suicide, police said Monday. He was 68.

Quine died Saturday night at the University of California, Los Angeles Medical Center, after shooting himself in the head, said police Sgt. Jerry Schlotthauer. He said Quine had been despondent for years over poor health.

Quine's directing credits also included "Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder," which he also co-wrote, in 1952; the 1954 remake of "So This Is Paris," starring Tony Curtis and Gloria DeHaven; the 1965 film "The Solid Gold Cadillac," narrated by George Burns; and the 1964 comedy "Sex and the Single Girl," with a cast that included Natalie Wood, Lauren Bacall and Henry Fonda.

NEW YORK (AP) — Sex appeal is in the eye of the beholder, says actress Meg Ryan, who is getting used to being called sexy.

"There's just no one way to be sexy," she told Mademoiselle magazine in its July issue. "There are many different means of attractiveness. Some people will respond to you and some won't."

These days, actor Dennis Quaid is responding to her and she said she likes it.

"It's so precious to us. I don't mind telling people we're in love 'cause that's true," said Ryan, who has appeared in "Top Gun," "Presidio," and "When Harry Met Sally."

CLEAN AIR

Bush hits road to promote air plan

GRAND TETON NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — President Bush, standing against the backdrop of the majestic Grand Tetons, declared today that "environmental gridlock must end" and appealed to the public and Congress to unite behind his plan to clean America's polluted air.

Invoking the memories of past presidents who created the national parks, Bush said his clean air initiative marks "a new chapter in the tradiion of protecting our people and their parks."

He made the remarks in a speech prepared for delivery at the Teton Science School, an outdoor education center located inside this 310,000-acre mountainous preserve.

Bush, who visited the still-blackened expanse of Yellowstone National Park before arriving here Monday for an evening of fishing with his grandson, said "nature needs our help."

"Today, with my back to the Pacific and the jewels of the American Rockies, I look east across this fertile and productive land and call on the American people — and on Congress — to join me in this new initiative for clean air," said Bush, an avid outdoorsman who has treked through the Tetons in the past.

Recalling his meetings with environmental and industry groups before putting the finishing touches on the package he unveiled Monday, Bush said, "No group is going to get everything it wants. Some say we're asking too much, too fast. Others say not enough, too slow."

But now, he said, "there's one thing everyone agrees on: we need action. And we need it now.

"Every American deserves to breath clean air. And you shouldn't have to drive two thousand miles here to do it. Environmental gridlock must end," he declared.

Bush also announced he is nominating Wyoming State Sen. John Turner as director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Turner, a past Senate president, and his family own Triangle X dude ranch in Grand Teton park.

Bush said, "Creating national parks was an American idea ... and it was one of our best." From Abraham Lincoln, who granted Yosemite Valley to California, to Teddy Roosevelt, who made the environment a hallmark of his presidency, past presidents have done their part to help Americans enjoy their natural heritage, Bush said.

His new plan is aimed at improving and preserving "the very air we breathe ... for another five generations and beyond," Bush said.

Even the Tetons, "the heart of an environmental success story...cannot escape the threat of pollution," he said.

"It can follow you here. But the good news is, we're not going to put up with it any longer," he said.

Later, Bush was flying to Lincoln, Neb., to underscore his support for alternative fuels research.

Earlier, in the East Room of the White House, Bush had unveiled a clean air package that he promised would cut acid rain-causing sulfur dioxide emissions in half by the year 2000.

Environmental leaders hailed his stance on acid rain, but questioned whether the plan was tough enough on smog and toxic industrial pollutants.

Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., and coal lobbyists said it would put high-sulfur coal areas at a disadvantage.

Bush promised that his legislative package "will be cost-effective, but above all, it will work. We will make the 1990s the era for clean air."

With a nod to Congress — but not a word about his predecessor Ronald Reagan's failure to press the topic — Bush said, "We've seen enough of this stalemate. It's time to clear the air. And you know, I think we will."

Texas industries affected

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's proposals to curb air pollution could be a boon to the Texas natural gas industry, while refiners and petrochemical plants would have to install expensive controls to limit emissions of cancer-causing toxins.

Texas leaders, however, agreed a sweeping clean air initiative that would make the state's air better to breathe is a worthy goal.

"Clearly, Texans will benefit from any effective program to reduce air pollution," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. "And the natural gas industry should benefit economically from the proposed shift away from high-sulphur coal and from the president's proposal for increased use of alternative fuels to power automotive vehicles."

The president's plan, unveiled Monday, would bring most Texas cities within federal air quality standards by 1995, but gives Houston, considered one of the nation's most severe cases of ozone pollution, until 2010 for compliance.

Daniel Weiss of the Sierra Club said that while Bush's proposals signal his commitment to "protecting public health from air pollution," Houston residents would be breathing dirty air for two more decades.

"That's too long a time to have high levels of this health-threatening pollutant," said Weiss, Washington director of the Sierra Club's pollution program.

Initiative draws praise

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush has won praise for proposing the clean air package his predecessor wouldn't touch, but he faces division over provisions on acid rain, airborne toxic chemicals and auto emissions.

"I think he got an A for effort," Richard Ayres, chairman of the National Clean Air Coalition, said Monday after Bush announced his proposal. "He's heading in the right direction."

Ayres' reaction was typical of the praise that flowed from environmentalists, industry spokesmen and lawmakers. Viewing Bush's proposals as generally positive, they nonetheless took issue with particulars.

Ayres, for example, said he was concerned the plan put too much emphasis on new, cleaner fuels rather than cleaning pollution from existing gasoline engines.

Much criticism also came from groups with vested financial interests, who said Bush went too far. The coal industry and officials from mining states, for instance, predicted utility customers would pay for the switch to low-sulfur coal.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell summed up the remarks of many when he called Bush's plan "a significant departure from the negative environmental policy of the Reagan administration, which opposed every clean-air bill considered by Congress for the past eight years."

Mitchell, D-Maine, was chief sponsor of the major clean air bill last year, and his elevation to majority leader this year has led to numerous predictions of an end to a decade-long congressional gridlock.

Bush alluded as well to the previous inertia.

MARKETS

Crude buyers lower posted price

From Staff and Wire Reports

The tumble in oil futures prices has apparently slowed.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, July contracts for West Texas Intermediate had slipped 2 cents to $19.24 at midmorning. The contract fell 62 cents to $19.26 a barrel Monday.

Local crude oil buyers such as Permian Corp. and Texaco Trading and Transportation lowered their posted price 75 cents from $19.50 to $18.75 effective Monday.

Largely technical factors sent gasoline futures prices tumbling Monday, carrying crude and home heating oil futures along the way.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline for July delivery fell 1.99 cents a gallon to 61.73 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Peter Beutel, assistant director of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc., said the gasoline market traded down as investors with long positions sold off some holdings.

"The market continued to move lower and developed a momentum of its own" after falling through the 47 cents level, Beutel said.

Home heating oil, brought lower by technical and seasonal factors, slumped 1.58 cents a gallon to settle at 45.45 cents.

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell in moderate European trading late this morning as the market tried to find a new trading range, foreign currency dealers said.

Gold prices rose.

Dealers in West Germany said the market was nervous after the dollar hit its highest level since November 1986 at around 2.0370 marks on Monday.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.30 yen to a closing 148.70 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 148.20 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning compared with late Monday:

Silver was quoted in London at $5.22 a troy ounce, up from Monday's $5.20.

Stocks manage 5 point gain

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market managed a mixed performance Monday, benefiting from an afternoon comeback led by the blue chips.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials closed with a gain of 5.42, at 2,518.84 after trading in negative territory for much of the session.

Declining issues narrowly outnumbered advances in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 772 down, 714 up and 512 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 151.46 million shares, down from 173.24 million in the previous session.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Arco pleased with results of oil find

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — ARCO disclosed Monday test results from a new oil find in Alaska that analysts said were better than expected.

ARCO said that the tests of the first delineation well at Point McIntyre on Alaska's North Slope resulted in flow rates as high as 5,350 barrels of oil a day from a depth of 8,800 feet.

"It's certainly to the high side of expectations," said George Baker, an analyst at Smith Barney. "It would be very unusual for this not to be a commercial discovery."

ARCO and its partners in the field, the Exxon Corp. and the BP Exploration Co., announced the discovery of the field in February.

Trade gap worsens in first quarter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The deficit in the broadest measure of U.S. trade worsened dramatically in the first three months of the year, widening to $30.69 billion, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the deficit in the current account was 7 percent larger than the $28.68 billion imbalance run up in the final three months of 1988.

The current account, also known as the balance of payments, is the most important trade statistic because it measures not only trade in merchandise but also transactions in services, primarily investment flows between countries.

S&L losses deepen, banks have record profits

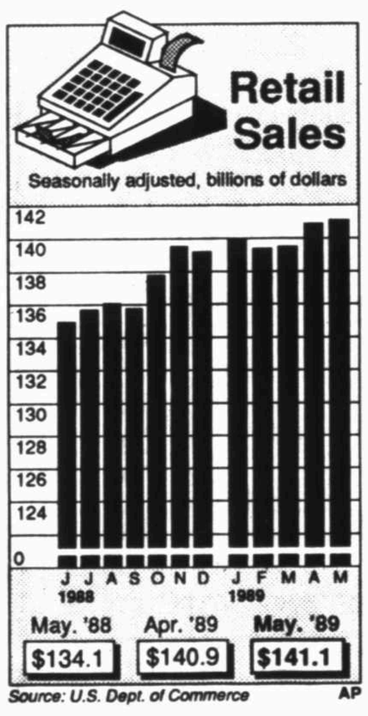

WASHINGTON (AP) — Losses in the beleagured savings and loan industry turned higher in the first three months of this year, continuing at the post-Depression record rate set in 1988, the government said today.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board said the nation's 2,938 S&Ls lost $3.4 billion in the January-March period, up from a revised $3.2 billion in the final three months of 1988.

The agency, which regulates the savings industry, revised its loss figure for 1988 by $900 million and now reports that the industry lost $13.0 billion last year.

Meanwhile, the nation's 13,001 commercial banks reported a record quarterly profit of $7.3 billion in the first three months of 1989, a 48.1 percent improvement over the same period a year ago.

In its report on S&L performance, the bank board said much of the loss was concentrated in Texas, hard-hit by a downturn in the energy industry earlier in the decade and lax regulation. Thrifts in that state reported losses of $2.2 billion — $1.4 billion of it in a single institution that the industry refused to name.

FERC OKs $456 million pipeline

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Eastern Transmission Corp. won federal approval of a plan to expand and replace 281 miles of natural gas pipeline linking gulf coast supplies to the Northeast, the company says.

The $456 million project will allow transportation of 780 million cubic feet per day after completion in two years year, the company said Monday.

Of that amount to be transported, 555 million cubic feet per day is restored capacity that was lost when aging lines in 1986 required that the company reduce pipeline pressure, Texas Eastern spokeswoman Barbara Johnson said.

The expansion will cross most of Pennsylvania between Ohio and New Jersey.

Texas Eastern, which was acquired by Panhandle Eastern Corp. earlier this year, first acquired the 40-year-old war emergency pipelines after World War II and converted crude oil lines for natural gas transmission.

More bids received for Texas banks

Associated Press

At least three groups, including the nation's fifth-largest bank holding company, submitted bids Monday for all or part of Texas American Bancshares Inc. and National Bancshares Corp. of Texas Inc., the state's two largest remaining troubled banks.

Security Pacific Corp. of Los Angeles, which owns California's second largest bank, said it put in a bid for "certain of the subsidiary banks" at TAB and NBC, which have been on the auction block for more than a year since the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. began looking for a new owner.

Other bids came from a partnership between Minneapolis banker Carl Pohlad and cross-town rival Norwest Corp. and from TexOp Bancshares Inc., the Dallas-based bank-holding company that owns Deposit Guaranty Bank and is headed by Ronald Steinhart.

None of the parties would reveal specifics of its bid. The FDIC is expected to announce a decision before July 4th, analysts said.

Analysts had expected proposals from First City Bancorporation of Texas, which Chairman A. Robert Abboud said last month had been invited to enter the bidding. A First City spokesman declined Monday to say whether the Houston-based company had put in a bid.

Analysts say retail sales to stay soft

New York Times News Service

Retail sales are slowing, and retailers, analysts and economists say the downward trend will intensify as the year progresses.

Auto sales, which had been strong earlier in the year, sagged in May after incentives had helped results in April. But the brunt of the sales lag, retail executives say, is being borne by big-ticket household items like furniture and appliances.

They say the problem is high interest rates, which, though starting to fall, remain high enough to inflate mortgage costs and hurt home sales.

'Craisins' wrinkle upsets farmers

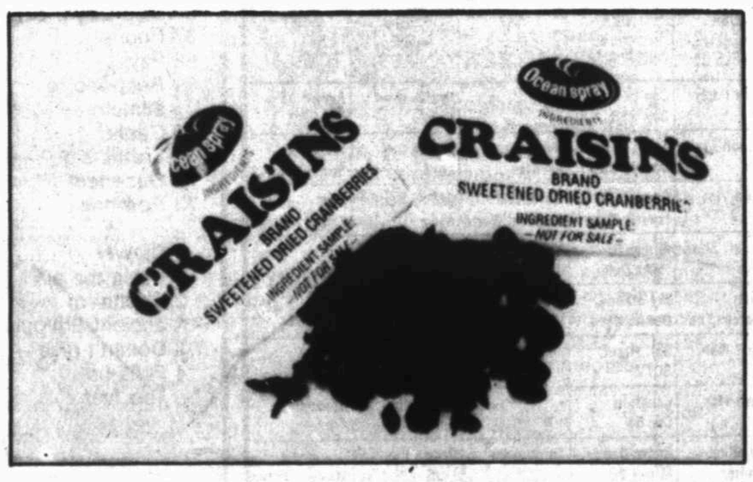

BOSTON (AP) — California raisin growers heard it through the grapevine that Ocean Spray plans to market sweetened dried cranberries as "Craisins," which they say capitalizes on the success of their dancing raisins campaign.

"Why do they call it a Craisin if it's a cranberry?" said Clyde Nef, manager of the California Raisin Advisory Board in Fresno. "The farmers are upset. We've spent millions of dollars in changing the image and promoting California raisins. This appears to be an effort to capitalize on business we've created."

The Craisin, a registered trademark, will be introduced this summer in Ralston Purina Co.'s Muesli cereal, which already contains raisins.

It is red, slightly tart, and about the same size as a raisin.

Pennzoil unit participates in Indonesian find

HOUSTON (SWN) — Pennzoil Asiatic, Inc., a subsidiary of Pennzoil Exploration and Production Co., recently participated in an oil and gas discovery in Madura Strait, offshore Java, Indonesia.

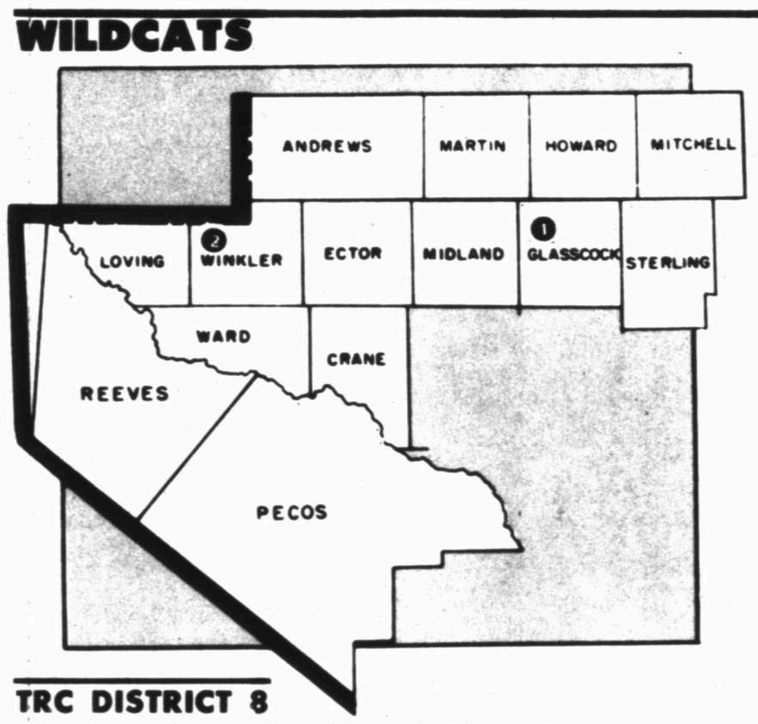

Production tests of the Madura BD-2 well were conducted from 10,810 feet to 11,290 feet. Cumulative flows from three test intervals produced at rates of 11,493 barrels of oil and condensate per day and 65 million cubic feet of gas per day.

"Although test data is still being evaluated, the discovery offers significant potential for future drilling in this area and points to Pennzoil's expanding interest in Asia" said Jim Milliken, PEPCO's Vice President of Exploration and Manager of International Division.

Pennzoil Asiatic, Inc. initially entered into a Production Sharing Contract for exploration in the Madura Strait Block in 1982, and holds a 14.45 percent working interest in a Joint Venture of which Mobil Madura Strait Inc. has been project operator since 1987.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Prime rate-linked CD can be good investment

By BILL DOYLE

Q. A local savings and loan association is promoting two-year "variable-rate" certificate of deposit, which it calls "a one-way ticket to the top." The interest rate is one percentage point under the prime interest rate printed in the Wall Street Journal on the first day of each month and is adjusted monthly. Also, when the prime rate is high, I can "lock in" the rate until the CD matures.

What is your opinion of this kind of CD?

A. It's a good deal. Many S&Ls and banks are offering similar CDs.

Doyle

With that arrangement, you get a high rate of interest that will go up or down only when the prime rate changes. Because that CD's rate is tied to the prime rate published in the Wall Street Journal, you can keep tabs on it. Some banks and S&Ls have CDs with variable rates based on prime rates which aren't so easy to track.

The feature allowing you to lock in the prevailing rate can work to your advantage, if you are smart or lucky enough to know when interest rates have peaked.

As I write this, the prime rate is 11.5 percent, meaning you would get 10.5 percent on that CD if you purchase it now. Then, if you feel that interest rates are going to go higher, you can stay with the variable-rate arrangement and collect still higher interest in the future. But if you think interest rates are headed lower, you can exercise your right to have the CD pay the then prevailing prime rate minus one percentage point.

The kicker here is that mighty few people can accurately forecast future trends in interest rates. Some of the biggest names in Wall Street and best-known economists have ended up with egg on their faces trying that guessing game.

Q. Exactly what is the prime rate?

A. It's the base interest rate banks charge on loans to corporations and other big customers.

Not so many years ago, each bank would announce its prime rate and charge that interest on all loans to large credit-worthy customers. Other borrowers paid interest higher than "the prime." How much higher depended on the type of loan and the bank's relationship with each customer.

Nowadays, every bank posts its prime rate, but often makes loans to its biggest and best customers at slightly lower interest.

Q. I had a $100,000 CD in each of two S&Ls. Both CDs are due to mature in 1994. Those two S&Ls merged. Their representatives insist my $200,000 is protected by the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. until my CD contracts, which were in force before the merger, expire.

Is that your interpretation of FSLIC rules?

A. Sure. There's no need for my interpretation. The S&L representatives quoted the correct rules. FSLIC coverage stays in force until the CDs reach maturity. If one of your CDs matures before the other, your FSLIC protection drops to $100,000 on the date the first CD expires. At that point, you would be wise to move the money from the matured CD elsewhere.

When you have money in deposits other than CDs in two S&Ls that merge, FSLIC coverage up to $100,000 per depositor stays in force for 60 days following the merger.

These same rules apply to Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage at banks.

Q. My CD, on which I have allowed all interest to accrue, will come due on Feb. 6, 1991. I am 81 and this CD will be my only retirement income. When it matures, will it be wise to renew it or to convert it to some other investment?

A. Assuming that CD and any other accounts you have at the bank or S&L total no more than $100,000, renew it — for safety sake. And, rather than leaving it to build up on the CD, start taking the interest out and using it to make life more comfortable and enjoyable.

SALES

Women's apparel remains strong, while men's wear sales are starting to lag, primarily because of rising fiber prices.

Sales increases at national chain stores have generally been running above inflation. But the stores' gains so far this year have been registered against a depressed 1988, when a lackluster spring was the start of months of erratic consumer buying.

"Industrywide, retailing actually has been slowing down since February because 1989 has been up against easy comparisons," said Janet J. Mangano, research director for Josephthal & Co.

Three of the four biggest retailers — Sears, Roebuck & Co., the K mart Corp. and the J.C. Penney Co. — said their May sales gains were 5 percet or less over May 1988.

Much of that rise can be accounted for by an inflation rate of at least 3 percent. In real terms, K mart and Penney actually showed declines.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the third largest after Sears and Penney, had a much larger May rise, continuing its strong trend of the last few years.

The latest results of the three retailing giants are significant because together their sales represent more than 10 percent of all general merchandise sales in the United States.

But even before the May results were reported, two of the nation's most respected retail executives, not normally given to pessimistic statements, said the industry was suffering a slowdown.

Speaking May 22 at the company's annual shareholders' meeting in Columbus, Ohio, Leslie H. Wexner, chairman of The Limited Inc., the largest operator of apparel specialty stores, said that he felt "pessimistic and cautious" because of high interest rates and reduced housing starts. He added that "the overall environment for retailing is just so-so."

The next day, at K mart's annual meeting, Joseph Antonini, its chairman, said the company was seeing "a softening of retail sales in the U.S."

He said that there was a drop in store traffic in K mart's U.S. stores starting this spring and that "retail traffic is down across the industry."

"I'm hoping there is not a softening in the economy," he added.

RAISINS

Ocean Spray, the Plymouth-based cooperative of cranberry growers in Wisconsin and Massachusetts, said it will be the first time cranberries will be used in cereal.

The company hopes they are someday used in granola, cakes, muffins and other foods.

Raisin growers, who have spent nearly $8 million this year on ads, have asked California's attorney general to look into what they say is unfair use of the raisin name.

"We've spent millions of dollars building the raisin image up as a healthy, natural fruit of the sun. Now they put a 'c' in front of it and call it a Craisin," said Ernest Bedrosian, president of the National Raisin Co. in Fowler, Calif. "We made it so popular, they just want to shirttail on our success."

TEXAS

Other Texas cities and metropolitan areas on the Environmental Protection Agency's list for non-attainment of ozone-standards are Beaumont-Port Arthur, El Paso and Dallas-Fort Worth. The Houston area also includes Galveston and Brazoria.

El Paso and Houston-Galveston-Brazoria also are on the EPA's non-attainment list for carbon monoxide pollution.

Most cities would meet carbon monoxide standards by 1995 through an effort that includes use of clean-burning oxygenated fuels. The most severe cases, however, would have until the year 2000 under the president's plan.

Weiss praised the president's call for industry to install the best-available technology to control toxic air emissions, considered a significant problem in Texas because of its many petrochemical plants and oil refineries.

"There will be some economic costs to Texas as well including increasing source controls on oil refineries and tighter volatility controls on gasoline, and I expect Congress will take a careful look at the costs and expected benefits of these and other proposals," said Bentsen, a Texas Democrat.

According to preliminary data from the Environmental Protection Agency released by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., Texas leads the country in the amount of toxic chemicals released into the air, and also has several plants with emissions that pose a severe cancer threat.

EPA estimates the cost of installing best-available technology for reducing toxic emissions at $2 billion, Weiss said, and Texas petrochemical companies and refiners would likely pay a large part of the cost.

PRAISE

"Too many Americans continue to breathe dirty air, and political paralysis has plagued further progress against air pollution," he said. "We've seen enough of this stalemate. It's time to clear the air."

The proposal would attempt to leave most cities free of urban smog by the year 2000 and to sharply reduce acid rain pollution.

Bush recommended that automakers be required to build and sell methanol-powered cars in nine urban areas plagued by dirty air. He proposed that limits on tailpipe emissions of ozone-producing hydrocarbons in existing cars be tightened by almost 40 percent.

A proposed 10-million ton reduction in sulfur dioxide from coal-burning power plants, a major cause of acid rain, would mean a 50 percent cut in these deadly emissions.

And Bush said industry should be required to use new technology to curb the release of cancer-causing toxic chemicals into the air.

The most critical voices came from the National Coal Association and Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va. Byrd said the acid rain provisions would unfairly penalize the high-sulfur coal areas like his state "by leading to massive switching from high-sulfur to low-sulfur coal."

Bush Chief of Staff John Sununu said the stiffer standards would add 5 percent to 10 percent to utility rates in 18 states that burn high sulfur coal and contribute the most to the acid rain problem. But he said their rates would still fall below the national average.

Some shorts are so soft and supple they look like skirts — the perfect match to a wrap top that bares the back. These summer whites are by Charlotte Neuville.

Stylish shorts show off fashionable legs

By BERNADINE MORRIS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Legs are coming out into the open.

Designers were predicting the move when they introduced their fall collections a few months ago, but with the arrival of warm weather, New Yorkers have jumped the gun.

Limbs are shooting out from shorts, which are making an important impression on the urban scene for the first time since the heyday of Bermudas.

Jackets are already being worn with what looks like nothing except panty hose — though sometimes there is a very brief skirt, all but hidden underneath.

And many legs are snugly encased in stretch tights of all lengths, some stopping above the knees, some covering the knees and others reaching the ankles.

Some women wear tights to exercise class and don't stop to change when they go out on the street, some wear them when bicycling and some with T-shirts, tunics or jackets, not bothering about a skirt.

Shorts have already infiltrated some of the more permissive offices, but the place to see them in droves is on the street.

They are perhaps more numerous in SoHo, but they are prominent on Madison Avenue and other shopping areas as well.

This is not the only way to go.

Many young women, including Damaris Webb who sells dresses at Victoria Falls in SoHo, will alternate between a romantic ankle-length dress and a man's blazer with tights and cowboy boots.

"This is the time when you can wear anything," said Miss Webb, who is 21 and just graduated from New York University. "You can wear tight things or loose things in any length and still feel right."

Still, the legs explosion has caught some fashion retailers by surprise.

"Who would have thought that the jacket would become the dress?" marvelled Kalman Ruttenstein, the fashion director of Bloomingdale's.

"Only a few months ago, we were surprised in Europe when Karl Lagerfeld showed jackets with tights and now we're seeing it on the streets in New York."

Cheryl Smith was one of the women strolling in shorts on Madison Avenue the other day.

She had come to Manhattan from Westchester County to meet a friend at the Helen Frankenthaler exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art.

Because the weather was hot and muggy, she had slipped into dark glasses, white shorts, and a white shirt with gold buttons, and carried a quilted red Chanel bag.

"I don't remember the last time I wore shorts to the city, but it feels fine," she said.

Shopping at Saks Fifth Avenue, Alda Balestra, a fashion model, was wearing the model's summer uniform: shorts and a shirt. Hers were men's shorts, however.

"The only thing I bought for summer was a few pairs of shorts," she said. "I like them to be a little big and to fit low on the hips. I find they go with everything — a long jacket or just a shirt — and they can be very dressy or sporty."

Tracey Bullen, a British fabrics designer, and her friend Adrienne DeNoia were both wearing shorts while sightseeing in SoHo. "We wear them all the time in London," Miss Bullen said, "even in the winter."

Jane Chung, a student at the Parsons School of Design, was in white shorts and a striped T-shirt as she spooned up ice cream outside Dimitri's Cafe on Spring Street. Shorts? She wore them everyday, she said. Why? "They're comfortable."

Among the tights fanciers was Megan Hughes, an actress and film maker, who was straddling a bicycle as she chatted on West Broadway with Vincent Zapicci, her fitness instructor.

"You can wear them when you go to exercise class," she noted. Deborah Sturges said that her mother, who lives in Minnesota, sent her the blue jersey tights she was wearing with a matching jersey T-shirt and that she had worn the outfit to work. Miss Sturges is a disc jockey.

Louise Olsen, an accessories designer from Sidney, Australia, was an advocate of the long-jacket-and-minimal-skirt school of dressing. She wore a geranium-pink jacket, a barely visible olive green stretch skirt and a resin necklace of her own design as she strolled along Prince Street with Steve Ormandy, her partner in Dinosaur Designs.

"We're into bright, colorful jackets," she said about fashion life in Sidney. "I like what's underneath to be simple. The important thing is to be comfortable. Jersey things are comfortable and I like to wear them. Jackets give the outfit a more formal look."

Jackets sans culottes were seen in European fashion capitals last winter. Now, with walking shorts, bicycle shorts and tights, they've jumped not only the Atlantic, but the Pacific.

Sportswear: Carefree, classic, comfortable

By MARYLIN JOHNSON
New York Times News Service

This summer, sportswear can be summed up in three words — carefree, classic and comfortable.

Fashion designers such as Isaac Mizrahi, Geoffrey Beene, Calvin Klein and Donna Karan are taking their cues from athletes to turn out casualwear for weekend sports enthusiasts as well as couch potatoes.

T- shirts, tank tops, sweatshirts, boxer shorts and unitards set the style and pace for this season's warm-weather dressing.

The T-shirt started life as a basic knit pull-on with rounded neck and short sleeves set in at right angles to form a T, thus the name.

Men have worn it for years as an undershirt. Boxers adopted it for workouts, and women have borrowed it to wear with jeans, shorts or skirts.

T's can be plain or patterned, painted or studded, in cotton or man-made blends, in piercing brights or cool whites.

The tank, also called an athletic shirt, is a sleeveless top that boasts large armholes and scooped neckline. It's the top choice of track stars, boxers and basketball players.

This shirt really took its name from the "tank" swimsuit, a classic one-piece suit with scooped neck and shoulder straps, originally worn in an indoor pool or tank.

For summer, discover the tank in woven or knit cottons and pair it with all types of bottoms, including skirts.

One of the newest ways to wear the tank is pairing it with a flounced cotton dirndl or wear two skirts, one layered on top of another, accessorized with a Western belt and Indian-inspired jewelry.

Though the sweatshirt is usually a long-sleeve, fleece-backed cotton knit for cold weather, designers are using this simple shape to top shorts and skinny summer pants.

It was originally worn for exercise or warming up for active sports, but designer Isaac Mizrahi, who thinks the hooded sweatshirt is "sexy," loves to see it for day or night, in everything from cottons to hammered satins.

Boxer shorts, once the exclusive domain of men, are being worn by women who borrow these elastic-waist shorts from husbands, boyfriends, fathers and brothers for weekend wear.

Today, they are available in all types of fabrics, including cotton knits, terry cloth, cotton madras and poplin.

Boxers are fun to wear and tend to flatter most hips and legs, since they are cut wide through the thigh area.

For warm weather, top your boxers with T-shirts, tanks or strapless tubes.

Designers have taken the dancer's unitard, an all-in-one top and tights, and come up with fashion's equivalent: the jump suit.

A modern, casual look, the tank-topped cotton knit jump suit can be worn solo or layered over a T-shirt.

During the day, wear a jump suit with sneakers and socks; for casual after-5 events, change into strappy metallic sandals.

For sultry summer days, nothing beats sportswear made of cotton. It's durable, holds its shape, won't fray, pill or pull apart at the seams and is static-free.

Cotton also has these advantages:

- Softness, because its fiber surfaces are finely textured, thus trapping air, which cushions the contact with the skin.
- Breathability, via a fiber that has the talent to transmit moisture rapidly through fabric and away from the body a process that enables an individual to keep cool on even the hottest, most humid Atlanta day.
- Stretchability, since science has made it possible for this fiber to sit, bend, jump, romp, relax, give and take when you do.
- Launderability, which means it can be washed in boiling water and not be damaged. Also, stains can be removed easily, and even the strongest bleaching agents ammonia, borax and chlorine bleach are not harmful to the fiber.

Cycling shorts are designed to be seen in

New York Times News Service

A California company has introduced new cycling shorts that incorporate reflective film as part of the fabric pattern.

Hind Performance, a company based in San Luis Obispo, calls its new shorts the Night Blade.

The company says that a cyclist wearing the shorts is easier to see at night. When a car's headlights shine on the shorts, the material, 3M Scotchlite, reflects the light back to the driver.

Scotchlite sheeting was developed by the Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co. in the 1940s for use on road signs.

Since then, the 3M Co. has developed it as a sew-on material, a film, and a reflective ink.

Officials at 3M say Hind's shorts are unusual in their liberal use of reflective film.

The fabric is made of nylon and Lycra, and as much as 25 percent of the garment is covered with the metallic material.

Film panels run down both legs of the shorts in a pattern of solid black with either blue or purple accents. Russell Bevans, product-development manager at Hind, said recently that the shorts "give athletes an added measure of safety."

The shorts are made with a special inner liner to prevent chafing at the crotch.

The company makes running tights with a similar Scotchlite, but without the seat liner.

The film is applied to the shorts and tights by a heat-transfer process after each garment is sewn together.

Bevans cautioned that the Scotchlite begins to lose some of its reflective qualities if worn in a rainstorm.

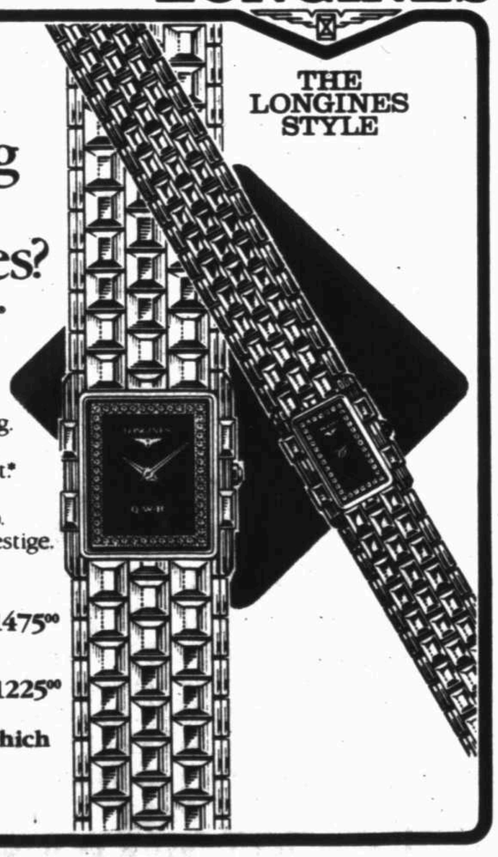

Also, the reflective film begins to pull away at the corners over time.

Hind recommends that the sportswear be washed in cold water without detergent and dried on a line.

The Hind shorts and tights are available at sportswear and department stores. The shorts sell for about $50; the tights, $40.

DEAR ABBY: Is it true that tickling by a father leads to future sexual abuse? This goes on constantly between a father and his 11-year-old daughter. The father is known to have sexually abused another family member when she was young.

Please answer soon because I am afraid that all this tickling can lead to something bad. The daughter starts out laughing, but she always ends up crying. This may not be any of my business, but I am worried. — CONCERNED AUNT

DEAR CONCERNED: Tickling can be a prelude to sexual abuse, but it is not necessarily always the case. If, however, the child ends up crying, she is expressing pain — not pleasure — and her father should not be permitted to play this abusive game. (Excessive tickling in ancient times was used as a form of torture, which is no laughing matter.)

I would be more concerned about the father's previous record of sexually abusing a child. You did not state whether the father had been through counseling after having sexually molested another family member. Both the father and his 11-year-old daughter should be spoken to by a professional from a child-protection agency.

It is the business of every adult to protect a child from any kind of abuse. And to look the other way, knowing this is going on, makes the adult a party to the crime.

DEAR ABBY: Recently, when my roommate and I moved out of the apartment we had occupied for two years, our landlord refused to return our security deposit. He claimed that we had done some damage, and the apartment was so filthy, he had to repaint it.

We couldn't prove otherwise, although we did absolutely no damage, and the apartment was cleaner when we moved OUT than it was when we moved IN.

Abby, please advise your readers to take pictures of rental property before they move in and before they move out. Even take pictures of the inside of the oven and refrigerator!

I'm not saying that all landlords are crooks, but it's better to be safe than sorry. — CHEATED IN KEENE, N.H.

DEAR CHEATED: Good advice. According to a Chinese proverb, "One picture is worth more than 10,000 words." It can also be worth a security deposit when it's your word against your landlord's.

DEAR ABBY: We enjoy entertaining in our large country home, but one couple who visits us always brings their dog. "Toughie" is housebroken, but as you probably know, most male dogs are housebroken only for their own homes. Toughie "marks" (urinates) on a corner of every bed, every chair and sofa in the house. In doing so, he dribbles on the carpet as well. After they leave, I have to shampoo all the carpets and furniture. This is not an easy chore for me, as I am not young anymore.

We have never fed our pets at the table, but these people feed Toughie while they are eating with us in our dining room. Naturally, the dog "begs" and whines throughout the meal, which makes for a very upsetting dinner.

Abby, we are very fond of these people. Do I have the right to ask them to leave their dog home when they visit us? — DOG-TIRED IN PONTIAC, MICH.

DEAR DOG-TIRED: You not only have the "right" to ask them to leave their dog at home, you also have my permission, if that will help you.

DEAR ABBY: Your series of letters from people arguing over the statistics on which age group has the lowest income reminded me of this analogy I heard some time ago: Statistics are a lot like bikinis — what they reveal is fascinating, but what they conceal is vital! — R.C. WALT, NORTH ST. PAUL, MINN.

CONFIDENTIAL TO ANYONE WHO IS LUCKY ENOUGH TO HAVE A LIVING FATHER: This approaching Sunday, June 18, is Father's Day. If you're a little short on cash, don't fret, because I have a gift suggestion that is sure to make a big hit with every man who has ever fathered a child. And it doesn't cost a dime.

Sit down and write your dad a letter. Tell him how much he has meant to you over the years. Don't be shy about telling him how much you love him, and why. I promise you that it will mean more to him than any gift you could buy. Trust me.

Techtronic Data Systems has effective oil, gas computerized accounting system

For the past 10 years independent producers have found the OGA$ oil and gas accounting system from Techtronic Data Systems to be the most comprehensive and effective available anywhere.

Although most utilize the software through a time sharing arrangement, many have found it advantageous to make a capital investment and purchase their own hardware and software system.

Designed specifically for small to medium size oil and gas producers, operators and drilling companies, OGA$ accommodates all areas of accounting and land department functions.

Since OGA$ is a modular system, the client may select all or part of the software including systems for accounts payable, AFE management, joint interest billing, lease records, general ledger, revenue distribution, partner relations and payroll.

Because of its easy to use design, both administrative and management personnel can easily use the system.

OGA$ has many advantages including the ability to process multi-company operations with automatic inter-companies transactions. It provides instant access to all data files, comprehensive history accumulation, interactive data entry and editing, and integration of accounts payable, payroll, land, investor, AFE, joint interest billing, revenue distribution and general ledger files.

Accountants particularly appreciate a major feature of the general ledger program — it never requires closing! There are no fixed accounting periods so adjusting entries can be made to any date at anytime and the system will report balances appropriately.

Since TDS interfaces with the General Electric Checkstub Data Exchange (CDEX), run skirt information from purchasers can usually be received a week to ten days earlier than normally received by mail. No data entry is required to get the detailed checkstub information into the computer since it is simply transmitted in by phone line and converted by the program for use by the OGA$ system. This results in a major time savings.

Not only does TDS offer the option of software purchase, quality DEC equipment is also available. Digital Equipment Corporation (DEC) VAX computers, terminals, data communications equipment and printers are all sold by TDS, an authorized Digital dealer. Complete installation and maintenance is also provided.

For the most efficient and reliable systems and software in the energy accounting field, look to Techtronic Data Systems in Midland. Offices are at 407 N. Big Spring and complete details on the OGA$ system are available by calling 687-2226.

Providing experienced support to OGA$ clients of Techtronic Data Systems, 407 N. Big Spring, are from left: Danny Welch, customer service coordinator; Steve Pruitt, hardware service technicians; and Bill Behner, systems manager. TDS also sells and services DEC VAX computers, terminals and other related hardware.

Dimension Cable clears up picture

The staff and management of Dimension Cable are eager to address a variety of customer service issues, including cable operation, service disruptions, troubleshooting and service calls.

For openers, they would like to clear up the picture on how cable works.

Cable works in five steps. First, individual television programs are shot and produced in many locations around the world. Second, these programs are beamed up to communications satellites that orbit earth. The satellites are in a geo-stationary orbit 22,500 miles above the earth.

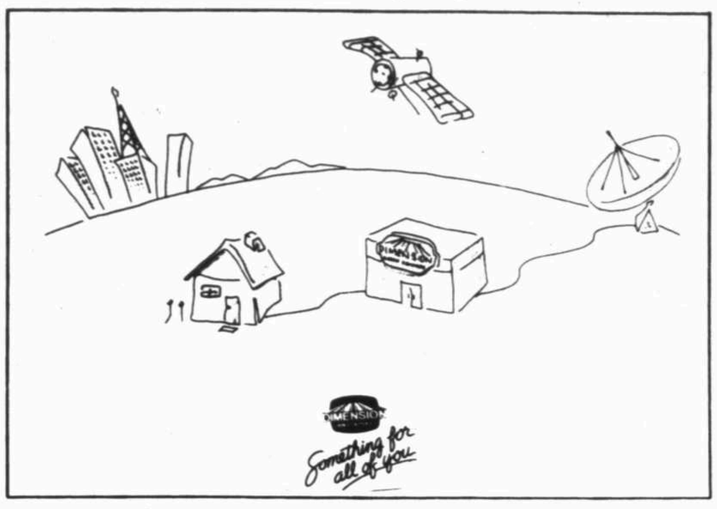

Third, the satellites, in turn, beam the programs to a large satellite dish on the ground. Fourth, the programs are transmitted from the dish to Dimension Cable. And last, these quality television programs are brought into your home via hundreds of miles of cable, usually strung on the same poles that carry your telephone wires, sometimes underground.

In regard to service, sometimes you may experience a disruption of service that's beyond Dimension's control. The power may go out, for example, because a road crew, a utility repairman or a landscaper has cut a line. Or a storm may literally knock Dimension Cable out of commission.

When these uncontrollable disruptions do occur, the professional crews work to restore service as quickly as possible.

To improve service, sometimes Dimension technicians will interrupt service in an area to run tests, to replace equipment or to upgrade current systems. In this way, you are provided with the best cable service possible. And to limit your inconvenience, these activities will be conducted when you'll be least affected.

Whenever you experience an outage, call the Dimension Cable service department and report the problem. A Customer Service Representative will be happy to assist you. And remember, home service calls are always free.

Dimension Cable goes to great lengths to bring you the very best in television programming, as shown in this illustration.

When you do have a problem with your picture, it's important to determine whether it's a cable problem or a television problem. Before you call the repair department, be sure to go through this handy troubleshooting checklist:

- Make sure that both the converter and the television are plugged in and turned on. If your television is controlled by a wall switch, make sure the switch is in the "on" position.
- Make sure that your television is turned to the appropriate channel, either 2 or 3, depending on your service area.
- Make sure that the connectors on the cables, which run between the wall outlet, the converter, and the television are all tight.
- Check the fine tuning on your television set. For instructions, look inside your television manufacturer's manual.

Problems that are generally cable-related include snow with the picture, dark moving lines, ghosts, a windshield wiper effect, a white screen or a tinted screen, or all snow without any picture or sound.

Dimension Cable is determined to provide you with the best cable television service possible. Problems are corrected at absolutely no charge.

Just call 694-7721 whenever a problem develops, and a Customer Service Representative will be happy to help you.

Usually, the problem can be easily corrected without a service call. However, when necessary, one of the experienced service technicians will come to your home. And no matter how much time or work is required, Dimension Cable service calls are always free.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Argentine president to quit before term ends

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Citing the disastrous state of the economy, President Raul Alfonsin says he has no choice but to resign five months before his term ends. But the president-elect says he's not ready to take office.

The economic chaos prompted hundreds of hungry Argentines early this month to storm supermarkets and steal food they could not afford. At least 14 people died and dozens were seriously injured in the rioting.

"The government's room for action during the months that remain of its mandate is too narrow to face the problems with a chance for success," Alfonsin said in announcing late Monday that he would step down June 30.

"Any delay brings greater suffering for everyone," he told the nation in a surprise 15-minute televised address, adding that Vice President Victor Martinez would resign with him.

The six-year term of the man whose civilian administration replaced a discredited military dictatorship officially ends Dec. 10.

But President-elect Carlos Menem, a populist champion of the working poor, said it would be "impossible" for him to take office five months early.

2 die in soccer gamefight

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A fight between soccer fans and the police in the southern state of Chiapas resulted in two deaths and eight injuries, the Excelsior news service reported.

Excelsior quoted Carlos Sergio Montesinos Paredes, a state deputy attorney general, as saying the fight broke out Sunday in the coastal town of Cacahoatan near the state capital of Tapachula and Mexico's southern border with Guatemala.

Montesinos said the ruckus erupted at the end of the game when a soccer fan grabbed the referee.

When police tried to intervene, fans jumped the officers and the fight involving more than 300 people traveled to nearby city hall. Several fans and police officers then begin firing guns into the crowd.

Killed was a soccer fan and a player from the visiting team. Another eight people were hurt, some of them seriously, and were taken to Tapachula for medical treatment and hospitalization.

Smugglers to be hung

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A Cairo court has sentenced eight people, four of them Lebanese nationals, to death by hanging for trying to smuggle more than six pounds of heroin into the country.

Also Monday, Egypt's parliament passed a new law stiffening penalties for narcotics users to include the life sentence.

The sentencings Monday brought to 27 the number of convicted drug smugglers sentenced this month to death by hanging.

A court in the port city of Suez last week sentenced to death 19 people, including three Palestinians, an Israeli and a Lebanese-born naturalized American for trying to smuggle 5.9 tons of opium and hashish and nearly 600 pounds of heroin.

All the convicts have the right to appeal the sentence within 40 days.

Reagan says Gorbachev Soviets' 'best hope'

LONDON (AP) — Former President Reagan urged the West today to take risks with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, saying he was "the Soviets' best and probably only hope to turn things around."

Reagan also declared that the Chinese government "hasn't learned something very elementary: you can't massacre an idea. You cannot run tanks over hope. You cannot riddle a people's yearning with bullets."

In a speech on his first visit to London since stepping down as president, Reagan painted a sweeping picture of a world gripped by an information revolution in which computers and satellite dishes would inevitably dissolve the barriers between East and West and democracy would supplant communism.

"I believe Mikhail Gorbachev is the Soviets' best and probably only hope to turn things around," Reagan said.

"It is true that the West could stand pat while this is happening. We are not the ones who must change. It is not our people who're isolated from the information that allows them to be creative and productive," he said.

"But it is exactly when you are strong and comfortable that you should take risks."

He said: "I believe we should take the risk that the Soviets are serious in their efforts to reach genuine arms reductions with the West. I support President Bush's proposal to keep pressure on the Soviets to make good on their calls to reduce arms."

Reagan was addressing an array of dignitaries of the English Speaking Union at the Guildhall, the ornate 1,000-year-old seat of London's civic government, where 13 months ago he gave a speech en route home after visiting Gorbachev in Moscow.

Gorbachev, who is in West Germany this week for his first state visit to that country, spoke at Guildhall in April.

Reagan said "I'm more optimistic than ever in my life about peace and democracy in this world." He said "amazing things are afoot in the world this spring."

"Those heroic Chinese students who gave their lives have released the spirit of democracy and it cannot be called back," he said, referring to the student-led movement for a freer China and the Chinese government's violent crackdown on it.

Hungary, he said, was dismantling part of its barbed-wire border fence with Austria and moving to multiparty democracy; Poland had legalized the Catholic Church and held its most open elections in 40 years; dissident Andrei Sakharov now sits in the Soviet parliament.

Communist countries were still trying to suppress the free flow of information by restricting the use of photocopying machines, typewriters, TV satellite dishes and cross-border computer linkups, Reagan said.

But "the biggest of Big Brothers is increasingly helpless against communications technology," he said.

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, arrived quietly on Sunday for a four-day visit, and were to dine with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and have lunch with Queen Elizabeth II on Wednesday.

Syrian, Christian forces battle outside of Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian and Christian forces fought with tanks and recoilless rifles in hills southeast of Beirut today, dampening hopes that Arab League efforts would swiftly end the latest outbreak in the 14-year civil war.

A spokesman for Christian army commander Michel Aoun said Syrian gunners were shelling his forces' positions in hills around the mountain town of Souk el-Gharb as well as in Beirut's Christian suburbs of Kfarshima and Hadath.

He said the Syrians were shelling from positions in the village of Aitat, opposite Souk el-Gharb, and from the suburb of Choueifat.

The spokesman accused the Syrians of starting the barrage as Arab League Assistant Secretary General Lakhdar Ibrahimi crossed Beirut's dividing Green Line for talks with Gen. Aoun and other Christian leaders in east Beirut.

"They shelled us with tank cannons and recoilless rifles. We are responding in kind," said the spokesman on condition of anonymity.

He accused the Syrians of provoking the fighting to "foil efforts by Arab leaders to work out a solid cease-fire."

Shortly before dawn, Syrian howitzer batteries deployed in Moslem west Beirut fired 20 shells at the coastline north of the city in an apparent effort to maintain a blockade of Christian ports.

Police said the 130mm shells exploded around the ports of Byblos and Jounieh. No casualties were reported.

The renewed shelling after a two-day lull contrasted sharply with reports in Lebanese media that a cease-fire agreement had been worked out by Ibrahimi in Damascus, the Syrian capital.

The pro-Syrian daily paper As-Safir reported in its main story today that "an air of optimism prevails over the situation in light of Ibrahimi's talks."

Ibrahimi arrived in west Beirut from Damascus on Monday. He held talks in the city's Moslem sector with Salim Hoss, Aoun's rival as head of the Moslem cabinet in Lebanon's dual government.

In Damascus, Ibrahimi met over the weekend with President Hafez Assad and his foreign minister, Farouk al-Sharaa.

Syria has 40,000 troops in predominantly Moslem sectors of Lebanon extending from the northern Akkar plain across the eastern Bekaa valley to west and south Beirut.

The official Syrian news agency, SANA, quoted al-Sharaa as saying the Damascus talks centered on "the need for the warring Lebanese factions to reach agreement on the mechanism for lifting blockades, reopening crossing points and making the cease-fire comprehensive."

The current round of violence broke out March 8, two days after Aoun blockaded illegal ports run by Syrian-backed militias south of Beirut in order to salvage lost customs dues of around $100 million annually.

Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. The $500 earnest money deposit will be remitted to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase.
