Fighting infection

About 5 percent of the nation's population contract an infection during their stay in a hospital. Infection control at Midland Memorial Hospial has lowered its rate to 2 percent. Read Sunday what measures are taken to control hospital-acquired infections.

Fighting obscurity

This Douglas Skytrain, the DC-3 of 1941 vintage, sits crippled and weeping at Odessa's Schlemeyer Field. But the durable air transport, which was dragged into flying contraband years after its reputed World War II service as a C-47, may fly again despite its wounds.

Did poisoned pills find way to Midland?

From Staff and Wire Reports

Cyanide has been found in a second batch of Extra-Strength Tylenol, officials said today, and a Midland Memorial Hospital spokesperson said one of the suspected bottles has shown up in the hospital's emergency room.

A man who said he travels all over Texas and could not remember where he purchased the Tylenol brought in a bottle marked with the number MD1910, the hospital spokesperson said.

"The man was ambulatory and had not taken any of the pills, but emergency room personnel did look him over," said the spokesperson. "We told him to secure the Tylenol and hold on to it until the manufacturers make their decision to either recall or destroy the capsules. We are not confiscating the capsules."

Meanwhile, investigators are looking into five deaths linked to the capsules marked MC2880 and have discovered they were "pried open" before being sold.

The Cook County, Ill., medical examiner's office said it was treating the deaths as possible homicides and was trying to determine at what point the poison could have been put into the capsules.

Across the country, thousands of drugstores and drug distributors moved swiftly to take off the market a suspect batch of Extra-Strength Tylenol — 50-count bottle of lot number MC2880 — that was distributed in 34 states.

In addition, the manufacturer today said it was taking all Extra-Strength Tylenol off the market in the Chicago area because one of the victims died from a capsule from a batch marked 1910MD.

Behrens, Inc., a Lubbock drug wholesaler serving Midland hospitals and retail pharmacies, reported none of the suspected lot numbers were included in its stock. Mike Roach, manager of Southwestern Drug, a Midland drug wholesaler, declined to comment on the matter.

Jim Honeycutt, operations manager for Behrens in Lubbock, said Behrens and Southwestern Drug handle the bulk of wholesale drug distribution in Midland.

"We were clear on both numbers," Honeycutt said, calling Extra-Strength Tylenol "quite popular" as a pain reliever in the area.

Larry Alldredge, a Midland pharmacist, said "none of my numbers are anywhere close" to those reportedly contaminated. "The pharmacists have kind of a hot line that we call each other if something comes up," said Alldredge, who added that in conversations with some colleagues Thursday no evidence was found that the capsules may be on Midland shelves.

Lawrence G. Foster, vice president for public relations for Johnson & Johnson, the parent company of the manufacturer, said the 1910 MD batch capsule the victim took was produced in its Round Rock, Texas, plant. The MC2880 batch was produced in Penn-

The Food and Drug Administration today advised consumers nationwide to stop using Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules after officials disclosed a second batch of cyanide-tainted pain reliever had been found.

Both suspect batches were recalled nationwide by the manufacturer.

Bill Rados, FDA press spokesman in Washington, said the agency acted after officials indicated they could not be certain how many batches of the best-selling over-the-counter remedy have been contaminated. The advisory does not apply to Extra-Strength Tylenol in tablet form, the FDA said.

Marine killed by cluster shell

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The explosion that killed one U.S. Marine and wounded three others came from a 155mm cluster shell laying on the Beirut airport tarmac, a U.S. military spokesman said today.

The Thursday blast came only hours after the airport reopened to civilian planes for the first time since Israel invaded Lebanon nearly four months ago.

Earlier, U.S. military spokesmen had said a cluster bomb, possibly dropped by the Israelis during the summer, caused the blast. It came the day after 1,200 Marines returned to Lebanon under President Reagan's orders as part of a tri-national peacekeeping force sent following the massacre of Palestinians in Beirut.

U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib held talks with President Amin Gemayel and Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan outside Beirut today after returning from meetings in Israel, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Egypt. Habib declined comment, but a Foreign Ministry spokesman in Cairo quoted Habib as saying he expected an agreement on withdrawal of Israeli and Syrian troops from Lebanon to be reached in "a matter of weeks."

Reagan has said the Marines will remain in Lebanon until all Israeli and Syrian forces withdraw and the Lebanese government is in firm control of the country.

Meanwhile, a new Beirut news agency which is known to have contacts with Gemayel's rightist Christian Phalange Party said the party has arrested the man who detonated the bomb that killed President-elect Bashir Gemayel Sept. 14. Bashir was Amin's younger brother.

The account by the Central News Agency was carried under a banner headline in the Phalange newspaper Al-Amal. It said the arrested man confessed he was a member of an "ideological organization" that was in contact with "foreign quarters."

Parkview's appeal stalls plans for MMH dependency unit

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

A sobering realization has put a temporary halt to Midland Memorial Hospital's state-approved application for a chemical dependency facility, according to reports in Thursday's MMH governing board meetings.

Action items at the meeting included approval of funds for capital equipment and approval of an MMH standing committee's five-year goals and objectives, while discussion items included an increase on indigent care classification guidelines, status of management personnel and effects of the increase in a compensation program that was implemented in May.

Parkview Hospital's court appeal on the state health agency's decision to deny its application to convert the facility over to a psychiatric hospital has put a hold on any action that MMH would want to begin in its chemical dependency center.

However, the Texas Health Facilities Commission has postponed a 180 day deadline, which is the usual time allotted for applicants of approved facilities to begin construction.

"We are not obligated to do anything at this point," said Ray Branson, MMH president, adding that the postponement has "bought time for the chemical dependency plans."

Parkview filed an appeal in Travis County court after losing a three-way battle last summer for psychiatric/chemical abuse services. Because the appeal could be tied up in court for an undetermined amount of time, Branson said it will be difficult to find appropriate financing for the chemical dependency facility.

"We are affected by this (litigation)," Branson said. "Whatever we do at this time is at risk."

In other matters, both boards — trustees and directors — approved the hospital's 1982-83 fiscal year capital equipment list for the first quarter and the Image and Public Relations Committee's five-year goals and objectives.

In addition, the directors approved payments of $68,028.35 for indigent care, $17,601.27 to the tax appraisal district, $34,074 in change orders and $133,193.20 for bids on capital equipment.

Also, the directors approved a $46,090 down payment on radiology equipment. Cost of the various pieces and remodeling of the radiology room total $357,450, a figure which the MMH board of governors has committed to raise in a three-year period through contributions.

MMH's first quarter capital equipment list includes those items that were previously approved in the 1982-82 budget, Branson said.

The list totals $337,225, and donations of $9,100 to radiation therapy and $53,450 to medical oncology equipment at the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center have been made.

Both boards approved the Image and Public Relations Committee's five-year goals and objectives which included pursuing "active measures to educate the public about MMH's mission, its programs and services, and its major objective and to facilitate public awareness of health care related subjects." Also, "to pursue an effective relationship with the representatives of the media and assist them in gathering information about the hospital's programs, services, its organization, its mission and objectives, and its future plans."

An item up for discussion which should be acted on next month was MMH's indigent care policy.

The 1978 policy has not been updated so the board's finance committee will confer and give its recommendations to the board at its next scheduled

From Staff and Wire Reports

While reports of child abuse and neglect cases were reported by the state welfare commissioner Thursday to have increased 11.8 percent across the state during the year ending Aug. 31, reports of such cases have soared 66 percent higher in the Midland/Odessa area.

"Midland has had a specifically high increase in child abuse and termination cases," Jim Harvey, region administrator for the Department of Human Resources in El Paso, told The Reporter-Telegram this morning.

"The speculation, and I want to underline speculation, is that the recession, or the current economical situation is finally soaking into Texas and we're seeing higher degrees of stress in families as they are losing jobs, and we're seeing higher numbers of neglect and abuse in these families," Harvey explained.

According to Marlin Johnston, state welfare commissioner, during a meeting of the Board of Human Resources Thursday, the situation has been worsened by an increase of people from northern states moving to Texas in search of jobs that are no longer available.

"Most human behavior experts will tell you that stress brought on a family is likely to explode in some way," John-

Midland publishing firm under state investigation

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

A Midland publishing firm is under investigation by the state attorney general's office following complaints that it sold advertisements for proposed visitors' guide magazines in San Angelo and Corpus Christi but remains months overdue in producing the publications.

Lance Publications Inc., 808 West Missouri, is also late with a magazine in Lafayette, La., and is now selling advertisements for a proposed magazine in Midland.

Richard Bower, an assistant attorney general in Austin, said the Lubbock attorney general's office referred complaints concerning the firm to Austin. But under provisions of the Open Records Act he could disclose no further information while the matter is under investigation.

Glenna Friedrich, president of the San Angelo Better Business Bureau (BBB), said the company's owner, John Stumpff, proposed publication of a visitors' guide, San Angelo Forte, in August 1981.

MS. FRIEDRICH SAID advertisements were sold to a variety of San Angelo businesses and delivery of the publication was promised as early as November 1981. She said promises of delivery in February, March, May and son told board members. "You can hardly pick up a paper without reading about one or more child abuse cases."

Harvey pointed out a significant increase in applications for Aid to Families with Dependent Children and food stamps. And with those increases, case-load work for staff members has increased dramatically, although the number of denials also has increased.

According to Joan Morris of the Odessa Human Resource Services, new AFDC applications in Midland increased from 46 in September 1981 to 77 in September 1982. From Fall 1981 to June 1982, there was a 22 percent increase in AFDC applications statewide, Harvey said.

"Even though the number of AFDC denials have increased due to restrictions placed on eligibility, the staff still has to work the same to process the denials as we do for the accepted applications," he explained.

From Fall 1981 through June 1982, food stamp applications have increased 26 percent throughout the state, he pointed out. "But we also have a high number of denials, again, because of the Reagan administration's strict guidelines."

According to Ms. Morris, new food stamp applications in Midland from people who haven't had running cases before, increased from 80 in September 1981 to 209 in 1982.

Economic times are so difficult that some parents are voluntarily turning their children over to welfare workers because they are unable to attend to them, board members were told. Statewide, the number of children who were removed from homes because of physical or emotional danger rose 20 percent from 1981, Johnston reported.

According to Sue Smith, supervisor of the child welfare unit at the Midland Department of Human Resources, "We've had a large increase in the number of child abuse and neglect cases reported."

While abuse can be defined as physical or emotional, neglect includes children who are not properly supervised, she pointed out.

According to Johnston, "circumstantial neglect" cases have increased due to mothers having to work as a result of restrictions on AFDC and food stamp eligibility. AFDC applications statewide increased from 12,047 per month in the summer of 1981 to 14,696 per month last summer. Food stamp applications rose from 35,223 per month to 44,451 during the same period across the state.

During Thursday's meeting, the board voted to restrict day care services by lowering the eligibility age from birth to 10 years, rather than 13, except for handicapped children. It also adopted a recommendation to cut off day care after a parent has gone a year beyond high school. The staff said some favored day care to support parents through college.

Martin Dukler, deputy commissioner for programs, said more than 300,000 children are eligible for day care, but the state can provide for only 15,000 with $31.6 million in available funds.

Dukler also said new federal restrictions on AFDC would cut state costs by $1.3 million next year, while food stamp amendments are expected to reduce benefits by $20.8 million.

Johnston said $31 million in federal funds had been cut out of the department's social services programs for the past year. He noted that the department staff of 12,194 was almost 23 percent under the high of 15,778 in 1977.

"We're dealing with tightened dollars, and we have to do a better job targeting dollars," Johnston said.

Budget vote due

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and Democratic leaders waged a furious, last-minute battle for votes today as the House embarked on hastily scheduled showdown debate on a proposed constitutional amendment favoring a balanced budget.

Publishing company under investigation

June of 1982 "came and went" without delivery of the magazine.

"At this point it's not published here and we're now pushing toward one year past the original publication date," she said.

Lance Publications was investigated by the San Antonio attorney general's office in 1981 after advertisers complained of late delivery on an Austin Forte magazine. The investigation ended, according to investigating attorney Pat Robards, when Austin Forte was eventually published.

Stumpff said Thursday that a combination of over-optimistic ad salespeople, printing delays and "a cash-flow problem" have slowed production of the San Angelo and Lafayette magazines, which he said are now ready to be printed and should be delivered within three weeks.

"San Angelo is late, there's no question about it," he said. Stumpff said such a magazine requires about $25,000 in advertising sales and about four to fivemonths to produce. He said hired commission salespeople often mistakenly lead advertisers to believe the magazines could be delivered in less time.

Stumpff said the over-optimistic promises, coupled with printing delays and cash-flow difficulties, account for the delays.

"THE ONLY THING that is absolutely true is the fact that we are running late," he said. Stumpff said he is arranging additional financial backing for his operation. "We're doing everything that we possibly can to overcome this problem," he said.

Ms. Friedrich said that she couldn't accurately estimate the amount of advertising sold in San Angelo, "but I do know that he sold a lot of ads here." She said the BBB has received complaints from advertisers, large and small, who have yet to receive a return on their investment.

She said for small businesses, "to them, $300 is almost their entire advertising budget. And even for the larger firms it's a sizeable sum, especially when they don't get anything for their money." Ad prices for the proposed magazine range from $200-$2,000, she said.

Grady Elder, San Angelo chamber of commerce manager, said "our dealings with Stumpff have been nothing but unsatisfactory." Elder estimated that as many as 75-100 San Angelo businesses purchased ads in the proposed magazine.

"We and the BBB have had many calls from unsatisfied people who have given him money and waited for results, and have not gotten any," he said. Elder said that while attempts have been made to get a firm delivery date, "all of our responses have been delays."

C.W. Vetters, Corpus Christi BBB president, said it's been "well over a year" since delivery of the Corpus Christi Forte was due. Vetters said one advertiser was promised production of the magazine as early as August 1981.

STUMPFF SAID he is "in the process of getting all the material from Corpus Christi" to start composing the magazine. He described himself as a long-time participant in the publishing business and stressed that the late magazines will be published. He said a Midland Forte should be published in late autumn 1982.

Stumpff said those advertisers experiencing delays in the magazine's production could receive free ads in the following year's publication. He added that despite being late the magazines will be circulated for a full year. Forte magazines are generally placed in motels, hotels, medical and dental offices, banks, savings and loans, and other buildings with waiting areas.

Marine 'dedicated'

CHESAPEAKE, Va. (AP) — A young Marine killed in Beirut was a "pretty dedicated person," a school friend recalls.

"It surprised me quite a bit when I heard," Walter Bray said after learning of Cpl. David L. Reagan's death. "He's done quite a bit...given a lot."

Reagan, 21, of Chesapeake, one of about 800 Marines assigned to the international peacekeeping force in Lebanon, died Thursday. He and three other Marines were wounded when they tried to defuse a 155-mm artillery shell at the Beiruit airport and the device exploded.

Parents want son taken off life support machine

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PORT JEFFERSON, New York — Mary Swain sat at a wooden desk in a faded classroom where nurses learn how to keep patients alive and explained why her son should be allowed to die.

Her son, Robert Hartman, 17, has been on life-support systems at St. Charles Hospital since a Sept. 19 car crash that has already claimed six lives. Last Wednesday, his parents said, he was declared brain dead. Mrs. Swain has asked for the right to remove him from the respirator that has been keeping him alive. But she can't get it without a court order.

"Robert has been classified as brain dead," Mrs. Swain said earlier this week, looking to her second husband, Albert, a New York City transit policeman, for support as they kept their daily vigil at the hospital. "All he's doing is lying there and deteriorating — it looks like he's already laid out in a coffin."

"The family's request for disconnection of the life-support system is not something the hospital can honor," said hospital executive vice-president Arthur Santilli. In 29 states, brain death would have classified Robert, a high school senior, as legally dead and no extraordinary means would have been taken to extend his life. But in New York, a court order is necessary to disconnect life-support machinery except when organ transplants are possible.The Swains' family doctor, Dr. Gaiuino Mapula, said that Robert's injuries made transplants of his organs impossible.

But the Swains don't see why they have to go to court."It will be very expensive and we don't want to wait that long," Mrs. Swain said, tears showing behind her smoke-tinted glasses."We don't understand why our permission is not enough."

As they waited in the hospital, the couple talked about Robert as he was before his life became tied to a machine. The teenager had been out with friends the night their car crashed into another. Swain said Monday that they might have come from roller-skating. Three of Robert's friends have already died and the three passengers in the other car were killed on impact. One of Robert's friends, Thomas Riso, 18, was declared brain dead last Friday and his lung and kidneys have been used in transplants.

"He was such a good kid," Mrs. Swain said of her son. "He always helped other teenagers out." And his stepfather added, "He was supposed to go in for football this year — he liked hunting and fishing."

Scott Wilson, the 25-year-old Florida man who received a lung transplant from Riso, was still in critical condition at Montefiore Hospital. And Elizabeth Morris, a Rockville Centre woman, who received one of Riso's kidney's in an operation at University Hospital at Stony Brook, was in satisfactory condition.

A Stony Brook spokesman said Riso's other kidney had been transplanted to a patient somewhere in the New York metropolitan area but the family of the recipient had requested that no details be released.

'Tick inspectors' to carry firearms

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has been sent a bill authorizing Agriculture Department health agents who patrol the U.S.-Mexican border to carry firearms.

The agents, called "tick inspectors," are animal health technicians who patrol the international border along the Rio Grande in Texas to guard against violations of animal quarantine laws and to help keep dangerous and costly livestock pests out of the country.

Arizona school to be soon raising shrimp

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — It seems a bit incongruous, but the University of Arizona is big on raising and harvesting shrimp.

Shrimp-boats aren't a'comin', but the desert-locked university and two commercial partners are close to being in the big-time shrimp-raising business. They're planning to take a major step in the field of aquaculture, off the northern shore of Oahu, Hawaii.

"If everything goes well, we would hope that construction would begin early next year" on the world's first large, environmentally controlled shrimp production facility, says Carl N. Hodges, director of Arizona's Environmental Research Laboratory. The multimillion-dollar facility will be justified, he said, "by the added numbers."

He said production is expected to be from 50 to 100 times greater than from a conventional shrimp-raising pond, one of the methods now used by commercial shrimpers in addition to harvesting at sea. The farmed shrimp will be priced competitively, Hodges said.

The lab has been conducting research since 1973 to develop a method for intensive cultivation of shrimp using what are called aquacells — air-inflated plastic greenhouses. Since 1980, they've developed a prototype commercial farm on Oahu.

Hodges first came up with the notion of trying to increase the world's shrimp supply while traveling in 1967 on a Rockefeller Foundation grant. He said it became evident that there was not going to be a natural increase, and that commercial efforts through ponds were having little more luck. The harvest, all in all, seemed stagnant.

"I decided there ought to be a way to produce shrimp...to grow them in a controlled environment," he said in an interview.

So he got the lab to get to work, and by 1975, "we were able to get them breeding," he said.

Initial work was done jointly with the University of Sonora at Puerto Penasco, Mexico. Since a break stemming from a disagreement with the Mexican university in 1980, Arizona scientists have been working at Oahu.

Commercial backers of the project currently are W.R. Grace & Co. and the F.H. Prince Co. The Coca-Cola Co. provided funding from 1975 until 1981, when it sold its interest to Prince. Prince sold half its interest to Grace earlier this year. Prince and Grace are providing about $2 million for research this year, Hodges said.

The university is responsible for the research effort; when the project goes commercial, it will receive royalties of 3 percent initially, then 1 percent of sales, for about 10 years, Hodges said.

The aquacells are large, inflated plastic bubbles a few hundred yards from shore, filled with shallow troughs of seawater, called raceways, that serve as hatcheries, Hodges said. Baby shrimp are grown in the controlled environment, fed a high-nutritional special diet, with warm, clean seawater continually circulated from seawater wells next to shore, and the amount of oxygen and other factors also controlled.

There are no predators.

"Size is determined by what's best from a market standpoint," Hodges said, with the shrimp normally ready for harvesting and freezing between three and six months.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts rain for the eastern and northern Plains and upper Great Lakes.

Weekend should be fair, warm

Nothing could be finer than a fair and warm fall weekend and the National Weather Service forecast indicates the clouds may cooperate.

Although tonight will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, Saturday should be fair with a high in the upper 80s and no rain predicted. Tonight's low should reach the upper 50s with winds southwesterly at 5 to 10 mph. Saturday's winds should breeze along at 10-15 mph.

Thursday's high of 84 degrees was a full 20 degrees cooler than the record 104 set in 1977. The overnight low of 72 was a round 30 degrees warmer than the record low 42 set in 1966.

Monthly and yearly rainfall amounts remain at 1.43 and 11.62 inches after no rain was recorded in the last 24 hours. Sunset tonight comes at 7:34 p.m.; sunrise Saturday is at 7:43 a.m.

'New federalism' must be defined

WASHINGTON (AP) — After eight months, the "new federalism" negotiations finally are getting around to a crucial question: Just what is "new federalism?"

President Reagan and leaders of all the major coalitions of state and local government officials, agreed at a White House summit Thursday to figure out what they are trying to do before going any further with plans to shift programs.

"I think the major problem is one of definition," Mayor Coleman Young of Detroit said after the meeting. "Federalism means many things to many different people and many of the things it means are not good."

Young, president of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said one thing it means to him, for example, is states rights. And that, in his view, could mean an assault on civil rights.

But New York State Sen. William Passannante, head of the National Conference of State Legislatures, said he was thinking about a different kind of states rights problem: federal hamstringing of state and local government.

Gov. Scott Matheson, D-Utah, chairman of the National Governors' Association, said there has to be some rational basis for deciding what Washington should do and what should fall to states, cities and counties.

Reagan suggested a "new federalism" in his State of the Union speech last January. His plan calls for transferring some 30 federal programs to the states and shared responsibility for welfare programs. So far he has failed to reach agreement with state and local leaders on the terms of the swaps.

"We really shouldn't limit the discussion of 'new federalism' to swaps and turnbacks," Matheson said. "That is not a broad enough definition of what fderalism basically ought to cover.

"We are broadening it to cover more intergovernmental relation issues where we can on a common sense basis sort to the states or to the federal government the programs, with the funds to follow, that make some sense," Matheson said.

Reagan suggested that the state and local leaders draw up a plan, and they agreed.

"He indicated he would be willing to work closely with us," Matheson said. "And I think the ball is now in the court of state and local units of government to come forward with a good proposal."

Matheson said everyone present agreed with a Reagan suggestion that talks resume after the November elections.

Passannante said federalism reforms would have to cover "attempts by the Congess and various departments of the administration that are constantly preempting states rights, such as Congress attempting to tell state and local government how to deal with theiir local pension programs."

Ferd Harrison, mayor of Scotland Neck, N.C., and head of the National League of Cities, applauded Reagan's indication that he would take a more personal part in the talks in the future.

"We've had a lot of rhetoric out here and a lot of discussions at certain levels, but it tends to lose a lot of its continuity as it moves up the ladder," Harrison said. "And I think he's ready now to take a bigger part in it."

William Murphy, county executive of Rensselaer County, N.Y., and head of the National Association of Counties, also said Reagan said some things that "did make me happy."

Second batch of Tylenol found to contain cyanide

sylvania, he said.

Since contaminated pain killer came from different parts of the country, he said, someone must have put the cyanide in the capsules while they were in the Chicago area.

He said there is no need to recall the 1910 MD batch from stores elsewhere in the country.

Even though there were no confirmed poisonings outside the Chicago suburbs, the nation's poison-control centers reported being swamped by calls that still trickled in early today from worried consumers who had taken the nation's best-selling, over-the-counter pain reliever.

Two victims were brothers who swallowed capsules Wednesday from a bottle bought hours earlier at a Jewel Food Stores supermarket in Arlington Heights, west of Chicago, police said. The wife of one of the brothers also took the pain reliever and was in critical condition early today with brain damage.

A 12-year-old girl from the neighboring community of Elk Grove Village who had a cold died after taking capsules that may have come from a different Jewel store.

Cyanide was found in all three bodies, as well as the body of a woman from nearby Downers Grove, in DuPage County, who collapsed at work and died Thursday after taking two capsules.

Lab tests on another DuPage County woman who died Thursday morning only a few days after giving birth to her third child were not complete, but a coroner said she had taken Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules from a bottle containing cyanide-filled pills.

Two more victims were in fair and stable condition early today at Good Samaritan Hospital in Downers Grove after swallowing Tylenol capsules.

So far, authorities have traced the MC2880-lot Tylenol bought from Jewel to a warehouse in Franklin Park, another Chicago suburb. Robert Kniffen, a spokesman for the manufacturer, said the batch went directly from a McNeil Consumer Products Co. plant in Fort Washington, Pa., to the warehouse sometime between Aug. 19 and Aug. 25.

Foster said he was told by Cook County investigators that the cyanide-loaded capsules "had been pried open and placed back together."

Sgt. Michael R. Ossler of the Arlington Heights police department said investigators were searching records for clues to a likely suspect "such as someone who had poisoned medicine before."

Dr. Edmund R. Donoghue, deputy assistant medical examiner, said the more widely distributed the cyanide is, the more likely the point of contamination "was closer to the point of manufacture."

"We believe it (the contamination) occurred after it left the manufacturer," said Foster. "We believe it happened somewhere in the distribution or at the point of sale."

Cyanide is not used in the manufacturing process for Tylenol, officials said.

U.S. defector to be classified as deserter

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Army Pfc. Joseph T. White, the first U.S. defector to North Korea since 1965, has been classified as a deserter and dropped from the payrolls, a military spokesman said today.

White, 20, of St. Louis, Mo., had been listed as absent without leave since crossing the demilitarized zone into North Korea on Aug. 28. The status change was announced after the North Koreans released a videotape Thursday in which White said he crossed into the north voluntarily.

The spokesman, who declined to be identified, said the decision was not made as a result of a videotape showing White at a news conference in Pyongyang. He said such changes occur 30 days after a soldier leaves his post without authorization.

"Nobody instigated me to come over to North Korea. I sought a political refuge not by passing emotion, but by a deep conviction," White said on the videotape. "While working in the demilitarized zone, I came to know that there is a way leading to truly worthwhile life. I cast my eye on North Korea."

Scenes also showed White, the fifth American defector since the 1953 Korean War armistice, saluting a picture of North Korean President Kim Il Sung on the wall of the news conference room.

NBC News, which broadcast the videotape Thursday night, said it was obtained from the North Korean Embassy in Peking. The U.S. military command had said shortly after White's defection the language attributed to him in a North Korean broadcast did not sound like an American soldier.

The U.N. Command which patrols the demilitarized area between the two Koreas has asked for a meeting with White to let him speak freely. All requests have been ignored by North Korea, which claims he sought political asylum.

The military spokesman said North Korea also has not responded to another request by the command for a direct international telephone link between White and his parents, who have said that they could not understand why their son would defect.

On Sept. 19 the military command said its investigators concluded White crossed into North Korea voluntarily after using his M-16 rifle to shoot a lock off the main gate at his guard post. It said his reasons were unclear.

The command said a search of his personal belongings had turned up a large amount of North Korean propaganda leaflets and newspaper articles about life in North Korea.

White, a member of the 31st Infantry Battalion, U.S. 2nd Infantry Division, was on police duty at a guard post named Ouellette inside the demilitarized zone when he was reported missing.

This is the year for conservatives to run, says Collins

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Calling the momentum in his campaign for U.S. senator "great," Republican Jim Collins of Dallas charged Thursday night that the National Democratic Executive Committee has listed his opponent, Lloyd Bentsen, as being in trouble this year.

Collins, who has represented his Dallas district as a Republican congressman for 16 years, appeared at a fund-raising barbecue in the MGF Drilling Yard on West Highway 80. About 200 persons showed up in various forms of dress, ranging from very casual to dressed up.

Former governor John Connally was scheduled to appear at the event, but canceled at 4:30 p.m.

According to the congressman who had arrived with his wife, Dee, at Midland Regional Airport about that time, Connally was involved in a deal with some people from the Middle East and had to stay in Houston to close it. Instead, the 200 persons who showed up were given a chance at a question-and-answer session.

Collins said his phone banks are taking polls every day and show him to be leading Bentsen with the numbers ranging from 2-to-1 to 6-to-1 throughout the state, but he didn't give exact numbers or locations in the state of his strength.

"This is the year to run if you're a conservative," Collins told the audience, explaining that an expected low voter turnout would work to his advantage. "We know the potential in Texas — Reagan got 57 percent here two years ago. And 62 percent of the people consider themselves conservative."

Questioned about support from the media, Collins replied: "The press is really rough on conservatives. They want special privileges more than anyone in the world" and he cited the example of the Houston Chronicle which is owned by a foundation, and a law prohibits that.

In response to a question as to how Mexico's failing economy would affect Texas, the congressman pointed to Mexico as an example of "what happens when you have a liberal government. The liberals broke the country. They have 50 percent unemployment and they nationalized the banks. If you want to see the country in trouble, let the politicians run the banks," he said amid chuckles from the audience.

He opposes an immigration bill before Congress for three reasons: it gives illegal aliens amnesty, doesn't discourage employers from hiring illegal aliens and requires people to carry cards. The last complaint reminded him of Hitler, said Collins, explaining the German leader was the last one to make an entire nation carry cards.

Collins said he was unfamiliar with the patron system in South Texas after one man asked how he was going to get past that in the election. Bentsen understands it and knows how to appeal to those people, said the man. At first admitting he didn't know what a patron was, Collins added he might use that angle in future television advertising.

During a news conference prior to the barbecue, Collins said one of the biggest issues in the campaign will be "effectiveness," which is a point that Bentsen has been using to attack the Republican.

"The Democrats won't let the major Republican bills come to the floor. The Democrats decide what bills are coming up."

Collins then criticized Bentsen's work on the Joint Economic Committee, on which he served from 1976-80 which were the years of Jimmy Carter's administration. The Republican charged that this economic committee caused the country's economic problems.

The country now is going through what Collins labeled a "readjustment" period and he contended that President Reagan has brought down the interest rates from 20 percent to 13.

Collins contended he has been effective in trying to get committee staffs frozen, and his next effort will be to reduce the staffs.

"Don't judge politicians by what they say; judge them by their record," Collins stated.

Police investigate double shooting

The men, 26-year-old R.B. Webster and 20-year-old Greg Webster, both of 306 Fiesta, were shot in the back with a small caliber weapon during a disturbance outside the KoKo Lounge, 1811 E. Front St., about 12:45 a.m. today, according to police. No other details were available by press time.

In a burglary complaint, Raymond Jenkins of 1411 Mogford told officers a bar sink, a 52-inch fan, a compact icebox and brass door knobs worth a total of $2,185 were taken from a garage at 4549 Shady Oak Court. Entry was gained by breaking a lock on the garage door.

MMH governing boards meet meeting in October.

In discussing the effects of a compensation program implemented in May, Roy Campbell, trustee chairman, said employee turnover stands at 54 percent with a goal for the fiscal year at 60 percent.

Branson said the pay raise did not accomplish this, and praised Al Kelm, MMH vice president of patient care services and staff for their recruitment efforts.

Thus far, there have been 54 registered nurses and 24 licensed vocational nurses hired with a loss of 10 registered nurses. Branson said this is a net gain of 34 registered and 14 licensed vocational nurses.

Branson said he hesitated — in fear of overlooking someone — to individually name each hospital department and medical staff that pulled together in "the most phenomenal 24 hour period I've ever seen in a hospital," but told the board members that MMH and Midland's doctors worked quickly and efficiently in assisting the five burn victims while carrying out their regular duties.

Being independent Democrat may help, says Sims

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Describing himself as an "independent Democrat," state senatorial candidate Bill Sims said Thursday afternoon in a news conference at Chaparral Aviation that distinction may help him to win the race against Midlander Ernest Angelo Jr.

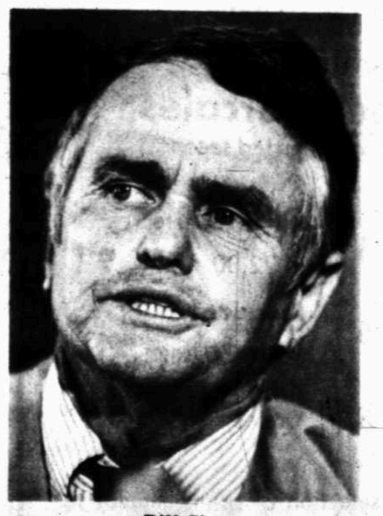

Both men are seeking the 25th District state senatorial seat being abandoned by W.E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland.

Acknowledging they hold similar thoughts on the issues, Sims said, "The main difference is he's involved very strong in party politics and I'm an independent. It's easier for me to work with both sides in Austin."

A poll taken a month ago showed Sims to be nine points ahead of Angelo, said the Democrat, who did not have the exact numbers and added there was a large "undecided" factor.

"I think I'm still ahead by that much," said the Democratic candidate, who outlined the major issues as water, crime, economy and education.

Looking at his background in the farming and ranching businesses, Sims said the race isn't one of the cities vs. the rural areas or petroleum vs. agriculture. Angelo is a petroleum engineer.

Bill Sims

Sims contended there are several old water laws on the books that aren't being enforced and this is cutting into water conservation.

"We need water districts where possible. But I am opposed to Gov. Clements' idea of a statewide water district. I'm afraid everything outside of large aquifers would be controlled by the state," he said.

Noting that the state's economy has dipped in recent months, Sims said he expects a turn-around soon.

He foresees more crime problems and more pressures on the law enforcement people. While some people are pushing for stronger laws on drunk drivers and raising the legal drinking age to 21, the candidate said, "We should do everything we possibly can to increase penalties. But as far as putting the drinking age above 19, I don't know."

Education is important to the state, Sims continued. In traveling through the 25th District, the candidate said he sees a need for raising teachers' salaries.

Traveling with Sims and adding his support to the campaign was former congressman O.C. Fisher of San Angelo.

Sims has worked to support legislation for the sheep and goatraisers association and that has meant testifying before committees in Washington, D.C. "I saw him in action on many occasions," said Fisher. "He was always armed with good solid facts."

Sims noted that in the past 17 years his work has taken him to 30 counties in the 25th District, and he feels that may give him an edge over Angelo. With Midland and San Angelo combined, there's 180,000 people in the two cites. But the district includes 430,000 people, he noted. Some of the counties have little oil production, while others have none. However, they all have some agriculture, according to Sims.

He also questioned Angelo's use of John Connally to support his campaign. Although he personally likes Connally, Sims said people believe Connally "lost his credentials in the milk scandal and when he jumped the fence to the Republican party."

Writer goes to extreme

DETROIT (AP) — Many frustrated writers are desperate to see their novels get into print, but Alvadore Chevalier has gone further than most — he took out a newspaper ad offering to swap a kidney for help in getting his thriller published.

Chevalier, a 55-year-old former high school English teacher, said he placed the ad in the Detroit News because he tired of rejection slips from publishers.

Chevalier lives in Windsor, Ontario, just across the river from Detroit, and suffers from a heart condition that ended his teaching career 12 years ago.

But he said a kidney is "something I could live without and still go on writing."

After his retirement in 1970, Chevalier wrote a fictional account of free-lance spy Marty Marto, who for $1 million takes on the task of trying to eliminate Dr. Kill, leader of a dangerous ring of international gangsters.

Chevalier polished his tale and sent the manuscript of "Get Dr. Kill" to four or five publishers.

No one wanted it.

Discouraged by the novel's cool reception and by years of rejection slips for his poetry, short stories, plays and several other novels, Chevalier took out the newspaper ad for "Get Dr. Kill."

"It's sort of a last resort, desperation," Chevalier said. "I don't have the money to pay a publisher."

The ad says:

"Get yourself a kidney. I will donate a kidney to any person or organization that will become my partner and assist me in having my novel 'Get Dr. Kill' published and share with me the profits accrued by it. I am unemployed and handicapped."

So far, there have been no offers, he said.

He concedes that maybe his books aren't in the same league as Ian Fleming's James Bond adventures.

But, he added, "I'd like to think they are. They go beyond Ian Fleming — incorporating the two genres of mystery and adventure."

He advertised for a patron, he said, hoping that "they can put me in touch with someone they know."

The chief of transplantation at Mount Carmel Mercy Hospital in Detroit said Chevalier's kidney probably would not be accepted by a transplant surgeon.

"This gentleman has two strikes against him," Dr. Luis Toledo said.

He said the writer's kidneys "probably have too much disease and, second, there is no established protocol for transfer of a kidney from a living person to a living non-relative."

Toledo said kidney transplants from a living donor usually are allowed only between relatives because the organs have a better chance of being accepted. He added that because a heart condition usually is accompanied by high blood pressure, Chevalier's kidneys may be damaged and unsuitable for transplant.

Chevalier's age is against him too, Toledo said.

'Almost' governor makes ad

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Hello. Do you know me? I was almost governor of New Jersey," says the television ad, which at first resembles a commercial for a credit card.

But Rep. James Florio is plugging the virtues of voting, not American Express, when he continues the pitch.

The Democratic congressman, shown emerging from a voting booth, goes on to say that he lost to Republican Gov. Thomas Kean by "six one-hundredths of 1 percent" in 1981. Florio noted that voters who stayed home could have made the difference.

Baylor president: Private schools can impart morals, values

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

While public and private higher education institutions have similar objectives and duties, private schools can provide extra attention and impart morals and values to their students — two things that public institutions cannot do either because of student enrollment size or political and legislative restrictions, said Dr. Herbert Hal Reynolds, president of Baylor University, Thursday during a banquet honoring him at Midland Country Club.

And although public and private institutions around the nation are competing for students by lessening admission requirements due to a decrease in student age population, Texas' higher education has not been affected by the decline and remains strong and cooperative.

"Colleges and universities have long been charged with the responsibility of trying to pass on culture from one generation to another in order to try and free people from ignorance, fear or superstition that limits people in growing," Reynolds explained. "They also should prepare students for some vocation or skill. If the student gets out of school with nothing to offer our society, then maybe we haven't succeeded.

"Another role is to discover new education. Colleges and universities aided in putting man on the moon; colleges and universities aid in the developments that give us a better and longer life."

However, public schools are not charged as private schools are with instilling morals and values in their students, one of the most important functions of Baylor, according to Reynolds.

"I THINK THAT teaching that values are more important than materialistic things in our life adds a dimension to the life of our student," he said. "I'm talking about Christian values, the value of home, free enterprise, dignity of man under God and responsibility for self action. In our kind of education, these are the things that are important to teach. I think West Texans have the kind of values that lend support to an institution like Baylor."

Reynolds assumed the presidential post June 1, 1981, after serving 12 years as executive vice president.

He later told the Reporter-Telegram that through campus organizations and a mandatory two-semester "Forum," formerly referred to as "Chapel," the "aim is to reach all of the students in one way or another" with panel discussions and knowledgable speakers on topics including alcohol and drug abuse, pre-marital sex and homosexuality.

"We'll try to approach topics from two standpoints," he explained. "First, from education. We want students to understand what the health factors are. Secondly, the moral standpoint, which is what I would approach it from because we would hope that our students wouldn't be hurt in the future. I feel that we have a responsibility to talk to our students. Rather than to just hide our heads in the sand and ignore problems, I think they need to be faced.

"I don't feel we have a rampant problem or an epidemic of these, but I think we need to try to present them with facts and also some of the values involved." he continued.

"I don't want a student, several years from now, to think, 'You could have shared some things with me but you wanted to ignore it instead.' "

By involving the Student Congress, officers and members of student organizations and all social sororities and fraternities for the first time, as well as instruction during Forum, Reynolds said all students will be exposed to education concerning values.

Dr. Herbert Hal Reynolds

"THIS FIRST YEAR, we plan to give special emphasis through workshops and seminars. We generally want to inform our students about things they are not aware of. We've been talking with physicians because although many students are involved in premarital sex, many of the kids don't understand about the complications, such as infection and venereal diseases."

When questioned about former Baylor president Abner McCall's stance on kicking out any Baylor female student who posed for the "Girls of the Southwest" edition in Playboy Magazine a couple of years ago, Reynolds stood by his predecessor.

"I think that whether that question was asked in 1850, 1950 or 2050, what the president, he, or she, would think about a female student posing nude — they'd all say the same thing.

"I would not like for any young woman, when she was 30 or 35 with small children, to walk in and say to me, 'If you would have just cautioned me, I wouldn't have done it and my children would not have known,' " Reynolds said. "I think the Playboy philosophy is hedonistic. I think if we get on the road to hedonism, ultimately, we'll get to cruelty and I prefer not to be on that path."

While private universities remain free to educate their students morally, state schools cannot. According to Reynolds, some advantages of private education over public include areas of religion, politics and smaller classes.

"WE ARE NOT responsible to some state agency, so we can vary our curriculum without having to go through a lot of bureaucratic red tape to do it. Also, public schools have to be careful that they don't run into opposing political forces and that's difficult when you're dependent on the Legislature for delegations."

He pointed out that public institutions are required by law to admit certain students while private ones can be more strict in their admissions. Presently, he said, there are 1,350 to 1,400 private institutions in the nation, compared to about 600 public schools of higher education. But enrollments in public institutions account for about 85 percent of the total higher education enrollment, he noted.

"It costs about 30 to 40 percent more to attend most of the private colleges than it does to attend public ones," he explained. "Tuition can run about $1,400 to $1,500 at private schools. Since we charge a higher tuition, we need to give students a good deal more of our time. We can do that through smaller classes and more attention outside of classes, in extra-curricular activities."

Although nationwide, private schools are lowering standards to attract students because of tight times and a decrease in student population, Reynolds said that does not apply to colleges and universities in Texas.

In 1960-61, there were 1 million less live births than in 1950-51, he noted. But due to the economy of Texas, migration to the state has kept student population high in Texas.

"Some states are going to lose students," he said. "I'd say there is about a 25 percent decline in the college-age population. But that has not transpired in Texas."

MISD does not bar students from participating in extra-cirricular activities for being overweight

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

An incident Wednesday in which a Pennsylvania high school majorette was barred from performing during a high school football game tonight because she was 1½ pounds overweight doesn't pertain to the Midland Independent School District, an administrator explained.

Maridell Fryar, MISD coordinator of fine arts and speech, said Thursday that although any rules or regulations established by directors of extra-curricular activities are legal as far as the University Interscholastic League is concerned, no regulations on appearance are in effect in the Midland school district.

"We don't have any kind of district rule regarding the size of any student who participates in extra-curricular activities as far as I know," she said. "If there is any kind of limit, it is not expressed in pounds."

Although the UIL clearly defines eligibility of students as far as status in school and residency, it doesn't include restrictions on students because of the way they look. But under the UIL, directors of extra-curricular activities may legally establish certain rules that must be followed by participating students.

Mrs. Fryar pointed out that any student may be benched or excluded from participation, whether it is the football player who doesn't know the plays, the band student who doesn't know the routine or the cheerleader or choir student who doesn't get to practice on time.

"I think the obvious thing here is that the twirlers wear clothing designed for young ladies that are slender. But the twirlers monitor themselves. If a young lady gets in a position where she doesn't look appropriate for the costume, she'll usually correct that situation herself. We don't make any attempt to bar them from participating. There may be some sort of conference between the student and the band director, but that's all.

"I think that anyone who is familiar with our flag corp lines and our twirlers realizes that there is a great diversity of height and weight," Mrs. Fryar added. "We don't have any other rules other than to ensure they look appropriate. It (being barred from participation) is a matter of being prepared — not what you look like.

"It is important that they recognize who they represent and what they are saying about the school and about themselves," she added.

Twirler's dad files complaint

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A father angry that his daughter can't twirl her baton at high school football games until she loses 1½ more pounds has filed a complaint alleging discrimination.

"Hopefully, this will be resolved in a week or two. Then at least my daughter won't have to worry about weight. The rest she can handle," Herbert Ward said after filing the one-page complaint Thursday with the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission in Pittsburgh.

Ward filed the complaint against the Ringgold School District on behalf of his 16-year-old daughter, Peggy, according to HRC staff representative Dan Hardie.

"He filed a complaint...alleging that his daughter is being discriminated against because of her sex and handicap — being overweight," Hardie said.

Miss Ward, a 5-feet-4 majorette, was ordered by school officials to slim down to 126 pounds or not march with the band when the Ringgold football team plays Aliquippa High School today. The junior from Finleyville weighed in Wednesday at 127½ pounds.

The commission now must investigate the complaint and issue a decision.

Ward, a superintendent at a manufacturing plant, said he decided to file the complaint after learning the commission recently dealt with a similar case.

"It is ridiculous knowing now that a neighboring school district has gone through the same thing," said Ward.

Battle-scarred veteran fights for rights of handicapped

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Thirty-eight years ago, Cliff Hicks was passing the ammunition to keep an anti-aircraft gun firing in Belgium at the Battle of the Bulge.

"We were just trying to keep the guns going" in thwarting Germany's "final thrust," recalled Hicks, who in 1944 was a 24-year-old sergeant major.

"They (the Nazis) were firing everything they had at us," Hicks said. "We were under aerial attack...(And) we were just trying to keep the guns going."

On that night of Dec. 24, 1944, his sand-bagged emplacement was hit, and 12 of the 15 soldiers manning the 40mm Bofors gun post were killed.

"It could have been an 88mm shell, or it could have been a bomb from a plane," he said of the explosion which knocked out the post. "I don't know what it was."

Sixty-two days later, long after the Allies had broken the German onslaught and had regained ground toward the end of World War II, Hicks woke up in the U.S. Army hospital at Fort Bliss in El Paso and forever was apart from his old 595th Anti-Aircraft Battalion of Gen. George S. Patton's Third Army.

In his consciousness, Hicks found that he was without his left leg. His right leg was severely wounded.

"I heard doctors arguing over what kind of fragments they were," he recalled.

DAV Commander Cliff Hicks

SINCE THEN, Hicks, who is 100 percent disabled, has been fitted with a B-K (below-knee) artificial limb, wears a brace on his right leg, bears other battle scars and gets around with the aid of a walking cane. Sometimes he resorts to the wheelchair.

Today, Hicks at 62 is continuing his battle for mobility and has launched a campaign to benefit other handicapped and disabled persons. His aim is to impress on the non-disabled public the importance of reserving parking spaces for the disabled and handicapped.

"We have a lot of physically handicapped people throughout the United States who are not veterans and who need to take advantage of handicapped parking areas," said Hicks, who is commander of the Disabled American Veterans' Tall City chapter here. "We work with handicapped people whether they are veterans or not."

Those handicapped parking areas are near entrances to public and private buildings.

THE CITY OF Midland enforces the proper use of public parking spaces for the handicapped by issuing $5 tickets for illegal parking. However, Hicks noted that a state law allows a fine of up to $200 for violating the spaces.

"They (cars) have to have a state-registered disabled sticker or a Disabled American Veterans' tag" to legally be parked in a handicapped parking area on public property, said Beverly Holder of Midland Police Department's Traffic Division.

To be legal, cars which are parked in public areas zoned for the handicapped must bear the 2-by-1-inch "disabled" sticker, which features the outline of a disabled person sitting in a wheelchair and the word "disabled." The sticker is affixed to the upper right corner of the rear license tag, according to Frances Shuffield, county tax assessor-collector.

A handicapped person may obtain a "disabled" sticker, which costs $1, from Ms. Shuffield's office in the Midland County Courthouse after an application form is completed by a physician who attests that the applicant is handicapped.

Without the sticker, the owner or driver of a vehicle parked in a public handicapped zone can be ticketed for illegal parking.

Not valid for public parking spaces, however, is the larger, often-seen decal of a wheelchaired person, which is the international symbol of access for the handicapped. Some people place the decal on the rear window of their car or on the bumper. The decal may be effective on private parking lots if the owners or management so deem. But Ms. Shuffield noted that some disabled people would rather not have the tag or sticker which labels them as handicapped. Due to a handicapped person's vulnerability to "crooks," the disabled designation "leaves you wide open for muggers," she quoted a veteran.

ENFORCING handicapped parking spaces on private parking lots, such as those at shopping malls and supermarkets, may be more difficult. In Midland, apparently there often is no enforcement outside of courtesy requests or "friendly reminders" which note that the spaces are for the handicapped and not for just anybody.

Ted Connolly, operations director for Midland Park Mall, said he depends on people's honor not to abuse the special zoning for the handicapped.

Connolly said he can understand a peace officer's reluctance to ticket a handicapped person who parks in a zone for the disabled but who does not have a valid "disabled" sticker or a DAV tag.

The mall's security officers issue "friendly reminders" if cars are improperly parked, said Connolly, adding that "we're very lenient."

IN HIS CAMPAIGN, Hicks and his fellow DAV members this month will be displaying posters geared to remind motorists that the wheelchair symbol "identifies those parking spaces that are legally reserved for physically handicapped people." The poster proclaims:

Don't Put Yourself In Their Place

And as part of the DAV's nationwide campaign to remind people to respect handicapped parking spaces, Midland Mayor G. Thane Akins has proclaimed October as "DAV handicapped parking awareness month." Across the country, about 750,000 veterans belong to the DAV, and 90,000 are in the DAV auxiliary.

The mayor's proclamation says in part: "...Handicapped persons deserve and need greater accessibility to convenient public and private parking facilities" and handicapped parking spaces taken up by the non-handicapped persons causes "unnecessary hardship to the handicapped....."

This month, Hicks and his fellows in the DAV will be posting the signs about town and will be placing yellow "Warning" notices on violating cars which are parked in public and private spaces reserved for the handicapped.

Hicks said he has no notion about how many parking spaces in Midland are reserved for the disabled but said there are "not enough."

His wife, Helen, who is commander of the DAV's auxiliary, said non-disabled people don't intend to inconvenience the handicapped by parking in slots intended for the disabled.

"This is something people don't think about," she said. "They don't mean to be disrespectful of disabled persons. I think people like to be made aware" of zones for the handicapped.

Of the war wounds which brought about his disabled status, Hicks said he has no bitterness.

"The country needed us, and we went. No bitterness. I wouldn't want to go (to war) again. I have no bitterness."

Two women seek court's assurance TDC provides equal rights for women

HOUSTON (AP) — Two women want a federal judge to ensure the Texas Department of Corrections does not discriminate against females applying for jobs as correctional officers.

K. K. Coble of Houston and Donna Riggs of Fort Worth asked U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice to delay the hirings until determining whether "the male gender is a bona fide occupational requirement" for prison guards and other employees having contact with male inmates.

The motion, filed Thursday, cited an agreement between the TDC and the inmate plaintiffs in a sweeping prison reform suit under which the TDC will hire hundreds of new corrections guard during the next two years.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, October 2, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Movie critic Rex Reed and actor Moses Gunn share this birthday with you. Also born on this date: former Dodger shortstop Maury Wills, whose son is Chicago Cubs' second baseman "Bump" Wills. A promotion proves that you were right in turning down an appealing job offer elsewhere. Travel provides new business and romantic opportunities. The potential of a joint financial venture is limitless. Go ahead and take the plunge! You get lots of help from family and friends. Those in authority grant overdue rewards. Put your finances in better order. A pet creative project helps you climb the ladder of success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Travel brings you happiness. A family reunion produces new understanding between a child and his parents. Luck helps you win a competition. You feel on top of the world following a sports event.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stop boring your friends and relatives by always talking about work. You are losing out on new experiences. Cultural activities impress a financial backer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A new romance has you on pins and needles. Calm down or you could lose the advantage. Explore a career option with your loved ones. You need to make a decision soon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): See if you can get out of a time-consuming domestic obligation. Choose a more suitable romantic partner or you jeopardize an important family tie.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Disclose only what you have to when questioned by a nosy neighbor. Emotions are volatile now, so be on guard. An angry outburst could spoil family gathering or romantic encounter.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not be led astray by a well-meaning friend or business associate. You need to get out and see more people. You will be surprised by how much happier you become.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get away from it all by going to the country. A walk in the woods with loved one beats expensive entertainment in town. Wear comfortable clothes and unwind.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You and loved one could cross swords today. Do your best to see both sides of any argument. Work on a favorite hobby or invite neighbors over for an impromptu party.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Romance still influences your choices. If plagued by indecision, postpone making commitments. Trust your judgment in a confrontation with a stranger.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You make some fascinating new discoveries today. Go ahead and jump in where angels fear to tread. A subtle determination serves you well in both romance and friendship.

AQUARIUS Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Charm and persuasion can move mountains. In ticklish situations, use discretion and avoid attempting any heroics. Be a good listener.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your stubbornness can be frustrating to those who love you. Let yourself be persuaded when you have nothing to lose. Loved one reveals his/her feelings. You are greatly surprised!

Opening lead: Eight of ♠.

It is a pleasure to watch an expert technician in action. This hand contains several points worth studying.

We admire South's courage in bidding two spades vulnerable over an opposing no trump opener. Personally, we prefer a slightly more robust trump suit for that action. North's raise to game is impeccable.

West led the ace of clubs—a card that had all the earmarks of being the top of a doubleton. South would have liked to run the lead to his hand, but he urgently needed an entry to dummy to take the trump finesse. So he called for dummy's queen. East took the ace and returned the ten of clubs. In keeping with his original idea, declarer won in dummy and took the spade finesse. When the queen held, he cashed the ace of spades to fell the king.

Obviously, declarer would need an end play to bring home his contract—he had a sure heart loser still, and there was a distinct possibility that he would lose two diamonds as well. To bring about the end play, he would have to eliminate hearts and clubs while keeping West off lead, to prevent an attack through the queen of diamonds.

South accomplished this by now leading the queen of hearts from his hand. East was forced to win the trick, and he could not switch to a diamond without costing his side a trick. So East exited by giving declarer a heart ruff.

But there was no escaping his fate. Declarer came to hand with the jack of clubs, then overtook his low trump with dummy's nine. Next came dummy's last club, and when East played the nine, all was well. Instead of ruffing, declarer presented East with the trick as he sluffed a diamond.

East did not enjoy being saddled with the lead. He had a Hobson's choice: either to lead a heart, allowing declarer to sluff his last diamond while ruffing in dummy, or else to play a diamond, which declarer would run to the table's queen. In either case, declarer's diamond loser would disappear.

Any change in mole could indicate tumor

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why do doctors ask their patients to report any change in a mole? I know it has something to do with cancer, but I'm not sure what that is. Can you explain? — Lucy, Rochester, N.Y.

Dear Lucy: The advice to report any change in a mole is based on the concept that the earlier a person is treated for any condition, the more likely the possibility of a successful outcome.

A change in the appearance of a mole may signify the development of a melanoma, a kind of tumor. Melanomas can be cut out when they are still in an early stage but, if a person waits too long, the prognosis is less favorable.

Changes in malignant melanomas occur very slowly. It would be helpful for people to learn to identify melanomas on the basis of color, size, shape and location. You might want to ask your doctor about this the next time you have an appointment.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My 3-year-old daughter has allergies and now I'm pregnant again. Is there any way to prevent allergies in children or is this just something we have to learn to live with? — Amy, Roanoke, Va.

Dear Amy: Although there is a genetic factor in allergic diseases, the environment also plays a part and you can do something about it. For example, infants who are breast-fed instead of being given cow's milk are less likely to develop allergies, especially if the mother does not use cow's milk either.

Dr. Douglas E. Johnstone, a co-director of the pediatric allergy clinic at the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry, points out that the home may harbor a number of allergens. The infant can be protected from allergies to some extent by keeping his/her room free of dust, molds, pets and pollen for at least the first six months of life.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why do people who have diabetes often have kidney trouble? I thought their problem was with the pancreas. — Karen, Sarasota, Fla.

Dear Karen: The pancreas is the organ responsible for the manufacture of insulin, the hormone that regulates sugar metabolism. When the pancreas does not fuction properly, however, the kidneys may also be affected.

The function of the kidneys is to filter waste products from the blood and dispose them through the urinary tract. In diabetics, however, the tiny vessels through which the blood is filtered may be damaged, with the result that the kidney loses some of its effectiveness.

While there are still unanswered questions about which patients are most susceptible to such damage, the degree of control of the patient's blood glucose levels and an unidentified genetic trait appear to be factors.

For Irving, the Bronx, N.Y.: The fact that vitamin C may be good does not alter the fact that too much may be bad. For example, an excessive amount of vitamin C can be a contributing factor in the development of gout.

Wooly-bears indicating long, cold winter

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — The fur of the woolly-bear caterpillars is the darkest Martha Krone has seen in 40 years, leading her to predict a long, harsh winter ahead.

"I have never seen so many solid black ones in my life," Mrs. Krone, 84, said Saturday after surveying the coloring of a handful of caterpillars brought to her by a friend.

Mrs. Krone, who gauges her prediction by the darkness of the caterpillars' coloring, said, "Usually the red ones are sort of strawberry blond, but there aren't any (of that color) this year.

"I would advise everyone to stock up on long underwear and antifreeze and plan to dig deep for cash to pay heating bills," she said. "Every indication is that it's going to be a long, hard winter."

Mrs. Krone is the widow of newspaperman Harold B. Krone, who made the caterpillar predictions in the pages of the Lancaster New Era for 40 years until his death last year.

Misdirected decision

From all outward appearances, at least, the decision by Midland City Council Tuesday evening abandoning one-way traffic flow on Cuthbert Avenue in favor of two-way traffic was a blatant manuever serving primarily the interests of City Councilman Jesse Hatfield. It cries for public explanation.

Now, we have no ax to grind with Mr. Hatfield. On the contrary, The Reporter-Telegram endorsed his candidacy for the council when he ran in 1981. Overall, his representation has been fair and aboveboard. But the Cuthbert Avenue action disturbs us.

The issue is not whether traffic flow on the section of Cuthbert in question — between Ward and Garfield — is westerly or easterly. It's not even a question of whether one-way traffic flow is preferable to two-way traffic, although a number of city officials and residents from that area who testified at the public hearing noted that single-direction traffic seems to be safer along with avoiding a number of other problems encountered when that avenue formerly was two-way. That testimony should have been a prime consideration in the decision.

Instead, however, members of the council voting in favor of the change seemed primarily concerned with complaints from Hatfield that the westerly flow of traffic on Cuthbert was keeping customers from reaching his business.

Pushing aside the traffic direction issue for the moment, the issue that should be addressed is the apparent intent by Hatfield to use his political office to benefit his business interests, evidently at the expense of a number of Midlanders living along Cuthbert who begged the council not to return two-way traffic to the thoroughfare.

We seem to recall that most public officials, when the governmental body on which they serve is addressing subjects in which they have a vested interest, abstain from voting and in at least a large number of cases leave the premises to avoid even the appearance of conflict of interests. Not so Mr. Hatfield on the Cuthbert Avenue issue. In fact he is the councilman who originally proposed one-way traffic in an easterly direction on Cuthbert, which would have brought traffic directly to his sports supply business, and then voted in favor of the proposal.

Another extremely disturbing aspect of the Cuthbert issue is that the council may have discussed it in executive session, which it is legally forbidden to do unless it involves personnel, real estate or litigation. Council members have denied that the matter was brought up in executive session, but that is open to question, at least. Before that closed door meeting the plan was to have Cuthbert one-way; after council members returned, the decision was to make Cuthbert two-way. Almost no discussion preceded that decision — in public, at least — reporters on the scene said.

Of course, prior to the executive session, Councilman Tom Sloan conducted private conversations with various council members out of hearing range of news personnel. Discussion of the Cuthbert issue could have taken place at that time. But we believe even that type of action violates at least the intent and spirit of the Open Meetings Act which requires public discussion of public issues.

Of equal concern to us is the fact Mr. Hatfield is not the first or only business owner to voice complaints that the one-way street project would affect business. The council, if memory serves, discounted those claims. We believe that they were correct in giving priority at that time to the problems associated with traffic safety, congestion and flow.

A public explanation of the Cuthbert Avenue issue should be made immediately and the actions of Tuesday rescinded.

El Salvador's progress

It has become increasingly apparent that the national election held in El Salvador last March has strengthened the position of those favoring peaceful reforms and weakened the cause of the communist-led guerrillas attempting to overthrow the government.

El Salvador's provisional President Alvaro Alfredo Magana has confirmed this encouraging trend. In announcing that he expects a new constitution to be ready by the second quarter of 1983 and that elections would follow in 1984, Magana reported that since the elections, in which more than 85 percent of the eligible voters cast their ballots, there has been a "definite decline" in overseas support for leftist and Marxist guerrillas who tried unsuccessfully to block the huge outpouring of Salvadoran voters.

Magana said the Minister of Foreign Affairs, upon his return from Europe recently said, "the whole thing has changed substantially." Socialist groups in Europe were found to have lost their enthusiasm for supporting the Salvadoran guerrillas. Backing for the guerrillas in Latin America has waned, said Magana.

Other observers believe there has been a sharp drop in support for communist directed rebels throughout Central America.

The Salvador election defused a lot of the backing for the guerrillas because it was obvious that this was a fair election in El Salvador, massively supported by the overwhelming majority of Salvadorans. It was the strongest possible rebuke to the malcontent adventurers who make up a large part of the 6,000-man Salvadoran rebel force.

Magana also says he plans to establish a multiparty peace commission which will work initially on the issue of possible amnesty for guerrillas as a step toward the rebels' participation in elections. This might not be easy to accomplish because elements of the army and rightest groups are said to oppose any such move. But Magana, a moderate, still intends to go forward with his plan.

Thus it appears that Magana is moving steadily toward the goal of a democratic and peaceful El Salvador. He appears to be a capable leader who knows how to bring the rival factions together. Hopefully he will be permitted to carry out his well conceived program.

CHARLEY REESE

Papal meeting with Arafat a mistake

Pope John Paul II made a mistake when he decided to grant an audience to Yasser Arafat. He granted legitimacy to a child-killer and servant of the Soviet KGB.

Charley Reese

The pope has no real power. No pope has had any real power for a long time. A pope today cannot even frighten Catholic lay people into disdaining birth control pills or keep rebellious priests in line. What he does have, however, is the power of his moral arguments and his example.

I like this pope. I think Pope Paul has used his personal example and moral arguments with great effect and that is why I'm sorry to see him receive a Moslem murderer.

When I say that Arafat is a child killer, a servant of the KGB, and a Moslem murderer, I am not exaggerating or using empty rhetoric. Arafat has been a misfit killer ever since he was a youth in Cairo.

A lot of people, in addition to the pope, have been fooled into believing that Arafat is a genuine leader of the Palestinian people. Nothing could be further from the truth.

There have been Palestinian Arabs around for a long time and the Palestine Liberation Organization was not even formed until 1964. It was not until much later that it was designated "the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinians." Nor was this designation given the PLO by Palestinians. It was given to the PLO by the leaders of other Arab governments.

In 1971, King Hussein of Jordan launched his Palestinian army against the PLO and, in a battle which took place midst a Palestinian civilian population in Amman, slaughtered 18,000 or more PLO people and drove the remainder into Lebanon. He would not have done this if Arafat had enjoyed the support of the Palestinian people. There are too many Palestinians in Jordan, which is, in fact, a Palestinian state.

PLO has served only as a tool of other Arab governments and the KGB and it has exerted most of its influence over Palestinian Arabs by intimidation, assassination, and extortion. It has, of course, some voluntary support, mostly by hot heads, radicals, and Marxists, but the Palestinian Arabs have never had the opportunity, free from the fear of PLO gunmen, to express their preference.

It should be noted that in Lebanon where there are 600,000 Palestinians, the PLO had to store tons and tons of weapons and employ foreign terrorists for lack of recruits. In fact, the PLO had to resort to conscription of 12- and 13-year-old children. This tells any reasonable person that the PLO did not enjoy mass, enthusiastic support by 600,000 Palestinians in Lebanon, where it reigned for 11 years.

Arafat and the PLO's ties to the Soviet Union are well documented. He has consistently supported Soviet objectives and operations from Afghanistan to El Salvador. One of the PLO's duties in this regard was to provide training and funnel arms to Marxist terrorists all over the world, including the Turkish terrorist who shot the pope.

The communists in Italy tried to pass off the Turk as a rightwinger, but he himself said he had trained with one of the Marxist PLO groups.

As for the murders, the PLO record is also clear. Time and time again Arafat launched terror squads into Israel to attack — not the Israeli army — but Israeli civilians. Women and children, babies in the crib, school buses, tourists, and old people have died under PLO assaults.

It is important to make this distinction. These Israeli chidren did not die by accident as a result of military battles. They were the intended targets. And Yasser Arafat publicly claimed credit and bragged about the incidents. He publicly celebrated the murder of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

So it is just to criticize Pope Paul for receiving such a man. If he were really concerned about Palestinians, he might have received Mayor Elias Frej, the Christian mayor of Bethlehem, who is a Palestinian nationalist without the blood of innocent people on his hands.

He has weakened his own moral stature by receiving this Arabic-speaking Hitler as if he were a human being fit for civilized company.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Khomeini goons harass Iranians in U.S.

WASHINGTON — Iranians in the United States, who used to live in dread of the shah's secret police, now apparently find themselves in similar fear of Ayatollah Khomeini's goon squads.

Jack Anderson

Intelligence sources suspect that an undercover campaign of intimidation and harassment against anti-Khomeini Iranians in this country is coordinated, if not directly planned, by Khomeini agents at the Iranian Interest Section in Washington. The interest section, part of the Algerian Embassy, has handled Iranian affairs since President Carter closed the Iranian Embassy three years ago.

Intelligence sources told my associate Lucette Lagnado that Iranians living here have contacted the State Department on several occasions to express their fear of the Iranian Interest Section. They are convinced that the interest section is behind some ugly incidents directed at Khomeini's opponents in the United States.

Indeed, Khomeini's minions are believed to be modeling their behavior after the "diplomats" of another dictator, Muammar Qaddafi of Libya. Qaddafi has not shrunk from sending assassins into the United States to deal with troublesome exiles.

There is no evidence that Khomeini's secret police have gone to that extreme, at least not yet. But the Iranian Interest Section's methods of harassment have been only slightly subtler. Employees of the interest section have been identified on the fringes of anti-Khomeini demonstrations in Washington. The supposition is that they are there to identify dissidents for future reprisal — if not directly, then against their families in Iran.

In a little-noticed incident last summer, Khomeini's thugs came out of the closet. It occurred at the student center of Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

SMU students held a meeting to protest the excesses of the Khomeini regime. The lectures and songs were suddenly interrupted when about 75 hoodlums carrying guns and knives tried to enter the meeting place.

Quick action by local police prevented a major disaster, but not before three anti-Khomeini students were injured. The attack served its purpose: The meeting was broken up and the lesson was driven home that public opposition to Khomeini can be dangerous.

An investigation of the SMU fracas developed the information that many of the pro-Khomeini intruders were from various parts of the country and were considered "pros" who had participated in similar incidents at other colleges.

Intelligence sources believe that the melee in Texas was planned at the Iranian Interest Section in Washington. If so, it demonstrates the thoroughness of Khomeini's surveillance over dissidents in the United States. Not an anti-Khomeini sparrow falls without creating interest at the Iranian Interest Section.

Khomeini's hit squads have not yet made the FBI's list of most dangerous terrorist groups. That dubious honor is shared by Armenian nationalists and Puerto Rican independence advocates, according to FBI sources.

This is scant comfort to Iranian students and exiles living in this country. Where once they feared Savak, the notorious secret police of the late shah, they now fear Svamah, the ayatollah's version.

Footnote: Incidents of terrorism in the United States have made a quantum jump in the past year. As of Sept. 1, the FBI reports, there have been 28 such incidents, in which five persons were killed and 23 injured. In all of last year, one death and four injuries were attributed to acts of terrorism.

ANATOMY OF AN ERROR: No matter how hard you try, it's impossible to avoid an occasional blooper.

In a recent story on the state visit of President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife, Imelda, I wrote that "CIA Chief William Casey personally conferred with (Mrs. Marcos) last July to make arrangements for the Marcos' state visit." But when the sentence appeared in newspapers across the country, the CIA chief was identified as "William Colby" – who was CIA director under Presidents Nixon and Ford.

In my office, the final version of each story is double-checked by myself and three separate editors, plus any reporter who may have contributed to it. At United Feature Syndicate, it is reviewed by at least two editors and then read back to my office to make sure no mistakes were made in transmission. This was the procedure followed on the Marcos story, and when it was read back from New York, the CIA chief was still Casey.

But subsequently, during processing at the syndicate, someone whose mind was momentarily adrift typed in Colby instead of Casey. For the record: It was Casey who met with Mrs. Marcos. Colby, a private attorney in Washington, has my apology.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: Anti-U.S. feeling in Argentina is apparently due to the military junta's mistaken assumption that it could count on White House support for the Falkland Islands adventure. The junta's misinformation wasn't coming from its ambassador in Washington, Esteban Takaes. He is so respected by administration officials that on one occasion in June, when he expressed concern that the State Department wasn't conveying his views effectively to President Reagan, an unprecedented private meeting was hastily arranged with the president's national security adviser, William Clark.

INSIDE REPORT:

House GOP breaking ranks with Reaganomics

WASHINGTON — When the rest of the steadfast faithful in the House Republican leadership joined Rep. Jack Kemp this week in demanding that the Federal Reserve Board lower interest rates, it signaled revolt against Reaganomics in the face of bleak Nov. 2 election prospects.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Rep. Trent Lott, the House Republican whip who held his nose to promote President Reagan's tax increase, slipped the White House leash for the first time in cosponsoring the interest rate bill with Kemp. Even House Republican leader Bob Michel — examplar of stolid, loyal orthodoxy — has blessed the revolt.

That means Republican politicians down in the trenches cannot stomach the austerity program favored by the White House high command. To the president's men, Fed Chairman Paul Volcker has been the heroic squeezer of inflation out of the system. To Michel, engaged in the re-election battle of his life in stricken Peoria, Ill., the austere central banker is the problem.

The spark of revolt was lit when the Democratic leadership in both houses backed bills to force the Federal Reserve to peg interest rates. With House Majority Leader Jim Wright flailing away at Volcker austerity, Republican congressmen began to listen for the first time to Kemp's warnings about monetary policy.

Kemp and his staff touched base secretly during the summer with Richard Medley, economist for the Senate Democratic Policy Committee. When Congress returned after Labor Day, the Republican leadership directed Kemp to come up with an interest-rate bill with a Republican label. The result was a letter sent out Tuesday (Sept. 24) to all Republican House members. Signed by Lott and Kemp, it was not quite Martin Luther hammering his theses on the church door, but it was dramatic.

"We believe it is time to help reform monetary policy," says the Lott-Kemp letter, attacking the Fed's "monetarist experiment," begun in 1979, of seeking to control the money supply as the cause for "excruciatingly high" interest rates.

The Lott-Kemp bill directs the Fed "to target short-term interest rates" consistent with "sustained economic growth." It draws a cosmetic distinction from Democratic versions by subordinating interest rates to "the requirement of achieving stable prices" – thereby dodging accusations of reflation.

Nowhere is gold mentioned as the standard for setting interest rates. Instead, the target would be either the Bureau of Labor Statistics Commodity Index or the Commodity Research Bureau's Wholesale Price Index, neither of which includes gold. Similarly, the bill calls for an international monetary conference, but does not mention the words forbidden at the White House: "fixed exchange rates" or "Bretton Woods."

Kemp did not consult his longtime supply-side gurus – Professor Arthur Laffer and Jude Wanniski – who want a gold-based dollar and a replica of the 1944 Bretton Woods Conference to fix exchange rates. Instead, three laymen – Kemp aide David Smick, supply-side Republican politician Jeffrey Bell and Kemp himself – devised the bill to avoid the buzz words of civil war. Gold and fixed exchange rates remain on the future supply-side agenda, but not for now.

Among key House Republican leaders only Rep. Richard Cheney refused to bless the revolt. That represents a dramatic shift by Michel, who over the past year has testily chided Kemp for his monetary obsession. But Michel has made clear in leadership meetings since Labor Day that he cannot be in Paul Volcker's corner.

The Republican money revolt is a repudiation of last week's testimony by Dr. Martin Feldstein, the dynamic new chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, suggesting that unemployment is the price of curbing inflation. "The GOP must not follow the line that unemployment is the answer to inflation or that the current recession and joblessness is the price we pay for future prosperity," says the Lott-Kemp letter. Five weeks before the election, House Republican regulars have rejected the 1982 version of Reaganomics.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Oct. 1, the 274th day of 1982. There are 91 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 1, 1980, a Warsaw court gave legal approval to Poland's first six independent trade unions.

On this date:

— In 1596, the Duke of Norfolk was imprisoned by Britain's Queen Elizabeth for attempting to marry Mary Queen of Scots.

"Commercial Bank & Trust is now Texas American Bank Midland."

Robert D. Southerland
President

We've changed our name because we're part of a growing network of banks across Texas. The strength of one helps the others do a better job for their customers and communities. A better job for you.

Commercial Bank & Trust has long been a major supportive force in the growth and development of this unique community. We're a strong, solid institution—and now, with the added backing of our $4 billion holding company, we can offer Midland area customers even better banking services for a long time to come.

We're the same people, with the same dedication to service. We just have a new name.

Legislator says he feels Dean sought to discourage voters

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A state legislator says he hopes a hearing into recent actions by state Secretary of State David Dean will uncover any other plans in the offing that might affect voter turnout in next month's general election.

Rep. Rene Oliveira called a news conference in his law office Thursday to accuse Dean of being politically motivated in sending a list of "convicted felons" to tax assessor-collectors all over Texas.

"It smacks to me of the old poll tax tactics that discouraged people from voting," Oliveira, D-Brownsville said.

Oliveira said the list, which Dean later recalled, was a political maneuver by the Republicans and Dean to deter people from voting in the November general election.

U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela scheduled a hearing for next Thursday in the class-action suit filed over the list, and granted a plaintiffs' motion asking that Dean testify under oath about his reasons for sending out the list.

Dean is tentatively scheduled to testify in Austin on Saturday, Oliveira said.

As part of what Dean said was a program to purge voter rolls of dead people, felons and voters registered more than once, the secretary of state sent all tax assessor-collectors in the state a list headed "convicted felons."

Dean asked county officials to check names on the voter rolls against the purge list and remove those of convicted felons.

The list was compiled by the Texas Department of Public Safety, which was asked to include only the names of felons, Dean said. But DPS officials said the list also included names of people convicted of misdemeanors, because the department's computer could not separate the two groups.

Dean recalled the list after a lawsuit was filed by Jerry Angerman of Austin, a Democratic candidate for the state legislature. Angerman, never convicted of a felony, was on the list.

"We want to find out what other acts he (Dean) intends to come forward with in the next few weeks that might have the effect of discouraging or interfering with voter participation by the people of Texas," Oliveria said.

If prison count climbs, more will live in tents, TDC says

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Department of Corrections would put more inmates in tents rather than close the gates to new prisoners if the inmate count hits the court-ordered limit, according to the state prison board chairman.

"We are going to do everything possible to keep from limiting admissions," T. Louis Austin said Thursday. "We've still got beds down there. We can put up tents and things like that."

Austin said he agreed with Gov. Bill Clements that closing the prisons — as the board did in the spring — is not the answer.

The TDC is under an order by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice thatr prohibits overcrowding.

"We are further away from that problem than other people think," said Austin, adding that there are about 1,600 available beds in the TDC.

The tents went up at various TDC units in June 1981 as a temporary measure to relieve overcrowding and triple-celling. As of Sept. 15, 2,987 inmates still were in tents, according to TDC spokesman Charles Brown.

The total TDC population as of Sept. 24 was 35,306 inmates, still in compliance with Justice's order.

Brown, apparently unaware of Austin's opposition to closing the gates, said, "If the numbers keep going up we may have to go again to controlled admissions."

TDC has beds for 36,614 inmates, he said.

In a Tuesday letter to the Board of Corrections, Clements said state prisons must never again be closed to new prisoners. Clements said TDC staff members have warned that prisons could reach the court-ordered limit in November.

Accused kidnapper still in hospital

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A man accused of kidnapping three men, including one buried alive for four days, remained under guard today at a hospital where he is being treated for high blood pressure, authorities say.

Ronald Floyd White remained at the Brownsville Medical Center but probably will be transferred to the custody of law enforcement officers after an examination this morning, according to Department of Public Safety spokesman Sherwood Hamilton.

White, 38, was arrested after a high-speed chase Wednesday night on an aggravated kidnapping warrant issued in the abduction of Michael Baucom, 20, of Santa Fe, Texas.

Baucom was buried for four days in a narrow box while his kidnappers demanded a $75,000 ransom.

White also is named in arrest warrants issued in Montgomery County, where a Houston firefighter, Coby Garland Hamilton, was abducted Sunday, and in Live Oak County, where Robert Cameron was kidnapped, Todd said.

Judge's authority questioned

Ronald O'Bryan

HOUSTON (AP) — A state judge did not have the authority to order the execution on Halloween of a Death Row inmate dubbed the "Candy Man" for killing his son with a cyanide-laced treat, a defense attorney says.

Ronald Clark O'Bryan, 37, was convicted of giving his 8-year-old son, Timothy, a poisoned candy stick Oct. 31, 1974. He was accused of killing the boy to collect $30,000 in insurance.

State District Judge Michael McSpadden on Thursday ordered O'Bryan to die by injection on Halloween, saying he purposely chose the date.

Jurors 'paid no attention' to news

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Some of the people who qualified for the jury pool in the U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. murder trial said they never paid much attention to pretrial news reports because they found them repetitious and boring.

Although the FBI investigation into the slaying of the 63-year-old jurist here has been termed the most extensive since President John F. Kennedy was assassinated, one woman accepted for the jury pool Thursday said, "after awhile it got to be boring old news."

"After the first few weeks, I became somehwhat numb. I looked at the headlines. That was about all," said one man qualified for the panel.

The jury will try convicted hit man Charles V. Harrelson, 44; his wife, Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, 41; and Elizabeth Chagra, 28, in connection with Wood's death.

Reagan, not politics, welcome

DALLAS (AP) — President Reagan is welcome anytime at Southern Methodist University — as long as it's not a political visit, the school's president says.

A national Republican official asked to rent an auditorium on the SMU campus for an Oct. 11 political rally at which Reagan would speak in behalf of U.S. Rep. Jim Collins.

SMU president Donald Shields said no.

"No matter who is coming, we do not feel it is appropriate to the best interests of SMU to serve as a staging area for political rallies, whatever the partisanship," Shields said Thursday.

Many media personnel expected

DALLAS (AP) — More than half of the 25,000 to 30,000 visitors expected for the 1984 Republican National Convention will be connected with the news media, convention planners say.

Officials of the GOP National Committee were in Dallas Thursday to brief the local media on arrangements for the convention, which will be held Aug. 20-23.

Roger Allan Moore, general counsel for the committee, said 15,000 journalists are expected to cover the convention, which will be attended by about 2,000 delegates and 2,000 alternates.

The national committee has reserved 29,000 motel rooms within 25 minutes driving time of the Dallas Convention Center, but officials said only about 24,000 will be needed.

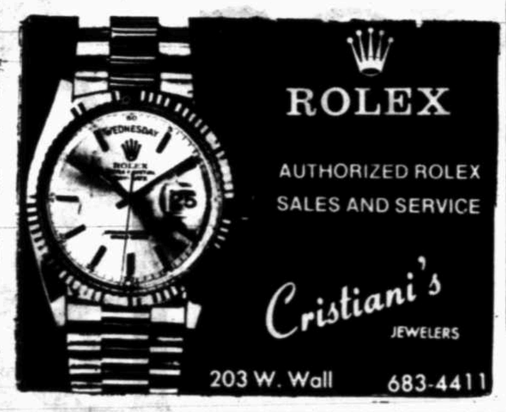

The extra rooms will be released early next year, according to national committeeman Ernest Angelo of Midland.

A permanent convention office will be opened at the convention center in February 1984, officials said.

Hightower promised support

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Some of Texas' biggest names in agriculture have promised Democratic nominee Jim Hightower that he can count on their cash and votes.

"We're standing up to be counted for Jim because we know he's going to do a great job for us during the next four years," former state Agriculture Commissioner John White told a news conference Thursday.

Making music for minds

By SHARON COHEN
AP Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Clarenda Gaudio Johnson is on the verge of tears. She stretches her arms and looks longingly toward the horizon. For thousands of people, she is creating a melody — and it's music to their eyes.

Through mime, dance and sign language, Ms. Gaudio translates a symphony of sounds for those who hear none. She paints an elaborate visual picture of music for the deaf.

Ms. Gaudio is the "voiceless vocalist" of Silent Sounds Inc., a special non-profit group of musical artists who marry music, drama and mime with sign and song for the deaf and hearing-impaired.

Silent Sounds has two bands — Foxfire, a rock group, and Sparrow AM-FM, a jazz group.

"It's a fallacy that deaf people don't understand music," said Ms. Gaudio, Silent Sounds' executive director."They do. When you have someone to translate words, everyone can relate to it."

"Our music," she said, "reaches people in different ways."

Ms. Gaudio, who has interpreted plays and political speeches, joined Foxfire in 1976 when it was a rock band.

"People thought (adding a signer to the band) was a good idea," said John Magnan, Foxfire's bassist and Silent Sounds' program director. "Deaf people are in a world of their own. They don't have the avenues we have."

And so Silent Sounds — which has about 20 members — decided to offer that special avenue. Both bands — some members overlap — write their own songs. Foxfire also performs popular music, such as the Beatles.

"Signing songs is not new," Ms. Gaudio said. "We put it in with live music and made the interpreter an integral part of the band. That's my instrument."

As the signer, Ms. Gaudio said she must decide whether the song can be interpreted and how to physically portray it, rather than vocally.

"I don't necessarily follow words," she said. "I just make a picture of what the idea is. You cannot be detailed. You have to blend things together. It becomes a choreography."

Songs with pictures, such as mountains or trees, are easier to sign, she said. The sky, for example, might be translated with an open arms embrace looking upward.

Strong emotions, too, are much easier to translate, she said. A mournful look with tearful eyes, for example, can depict sadness and depression.

The two bands play to hearing and deaf audiences and that creates a special challenge, Ms. Gaudio said. "If I can't be of constant interest, I'm missing the mark."

But the bands don't rely solely on images and music.

Magnan — a member of both bands — has a specially designed bass with special strings and 28 extra notes to sustain sound for a longer time. Each note has a different vibration, Magnan said, so hearing-impaired people in the audience can feel them.

Very few people have no hearing level, Ms. Gaudio said, and the vibrations give hearing-impaired members of the audience a feel of the tempo of the music.

When the group first started performing, Magnan said a deaf woman approached them and said, "You're not getting across to us. Put the amplifiers on the floor." They did. And they are on the floor during most performances.

But despite enthusiastic audiences, the bands have faced obstacles.

When Foxfire first began performing, Magnan said, a club owner was reluctant to let the group play, telling him, "We don't want to scare the rest of the customers away."

Since then, Foxfire has performed in 500 schools. Sparrow has recorded two albums.

Magnan said Beatles requests are fairly common from deaf people attending Foxfire shows. Foxfire already has one Beatles song at the end of its show — "We Can Work It Out."

Drawings shown

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — "Drawings From the Holy Roman Empire 1540-1680" is being shown at the Art Museum, Princeton University, Oct. 3 through Nov. 21.

The exhibition consists of 88 drawings by artists active in Central Europe during the period following the age of the old German masters, such as Durer, and preceding the flowering of the rococo period.

Soft fabrics featured for fall

By JUDI HUNT
Hearst Feature Service

New styles this fall will have more than interesting silhouettes. They'll be made of fabrics that feel nice on the body — or, as fashion experts put it, have a "nice hand" (the way it feels when you touch it).

Among the comfortable fabrics you can expect to be wearing is jersey, a fabric that is enjoying a resurgence this fall not only in casual clothing, but in better dresses, full casual pants and easy flowing skirts that will compel many women to have at least one garment made out of jersey.

JERSEY will be translated into many styles because of the fluidity of the fabric, which can have a relaxed treatment or be very dressy. It also will be a good transitional fabric, because it is warm, snuggly and can go from chilly fall days into the colder winter season.

Jersey isn't the only fabric women should look for if they're interested in being up-to-date this fall. For these early fall days, cotton knits — especially in sweaters — will be much in evidence in casual wear. Look also for something called cashmerette, an imported fabric from Italy that is a lambs' wool angora blend with the feel of cashmere.

Scandinavian culture seen displayed on American tour

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Contemporary Scandinavian culture will be in the limelight in a number of American cities over the next 12 months or so.

"Scandinavia Today" is the sixth and last in a series developed by the National Endowment for the Humanities. The programs, which began in 1977, have included in-depth looks at Canada, Mexico, Japan, Belgium and Egypt — all aimed at enriching American cultural life by educating us about other nations.

Scandinavian design is one of the region's greatest contemporary contributions to the rest of the world and many of the events will focus on the arts, crafts and industrial design of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden.

Two exhibitions which do just that recently opened in New York on the same day. Both will travel to other cities later on. At Cooper-Hewitt Museum, the Smithsonian's National Museum of Design, a collection of more than 300 Scandinavian masterworks created between 1880 and today was unveiled.

The same day at Cooper Union (an institution of higher education which has no relation to Cooper-Hewitt) an exhibit of Danish industrial design opened.

Both displays showed how much the contemporary American home furnishings industry owes Scandinavia. Products developed in the early 1920s are still being sold here and ideas from the same era continue to inspire American designers.

According to David McFadden, curator for the Cooper-Hewitt show, "Scandinavian Design Now," his hardest task was choosing what to include. "In every period, there were at least 50 additional objects I wanted to show but had no room for," he said.

Many of the attitudes now surfacing as new in the United States had their counterparts in Scandinavia long ago, he added. For example, nowadays there is a revival of interest in traditional American furnishings. A similar desire engulfed the Scandinavians in the latter part of the 19th and the early 20th centuries.

Today, many Americans believe industry has a responsibility to meet the real needs of the society that supports it by creating items of functional design, moderate price and beauty. This attitude was put forth (and accepted by Scandinavian industry) as early as 1919.

Although there are differences from one Scandinavian country to another, Scandinavian design taken as a whole stands for "a quality of health, unpretentiousness and practicality that I would call humanism. It differs from fashion in its stress on the integrity of the material, which provides a sense of permanence," said McFadden.

The key relationship between function and the shape and structure of an item was illustrated at the Cooper Union exhibition of Danish products — "Design: The Problem Comes First."

Instead of just showing a series of finished products, the exhibit explores the idea behind the product and the creative process which led to its development.

An example illustrates the theme: reasoning that the attic has potentially the best view and light and could be the most attractive space in the house if light and air were admitted, V. Kann Rasmussen & Co.'s designers set out to find an economical way to provide this light and air.

The resulting Velux window is installed flush with the roof, fitting economically between the rafters. Hardware to open the window is installed at the top instead of the bottom — making it possible to place the window low to the attic floor and provide a better view.

Safety and cleaning considerations were also taken into account in the design. The window pivots open 180 degrees, permitting both interior and exterior surfaces to be cleaned from inside the house. A bolt makes it possible to lock the window in place when it is slightly open to provide both security and ventilation.

Tapes teaching children

By GAIL ROSENBLUM
Hearst Feature Service

Eleven-year-old Daniel probably knows more about dinosaurs than most adults. He speaks with confidence about the prehistoric age, when the world was "so hot that the dinosaurs were trying to find water or a cool area."

Daniel attributes his knowledge to a "neat" teacher — one who speaks and explains clearly and who doesn't mind repeating over and over. His teacher is neither man nor dinosaur, but one of 19 hour-long cassettes called "Little Thinker Tapes."

One of the latest creations in educational toys for children ages 3 to 12, the tapes cover such subjects as "Animals," "Supersites in America," "Travel," "Sports," "Weather" and "Manners and Morals," and come with an "imagination kit" consisting of a 32-page sketch pad and eight crayons. Cost is $7.95.

"The tapes allow children to think, to do, to create," says their mastermind, Harvey Jerome, a 60-year-old grandfather and tape producer. "They have multiple uses. They increase the child's listening skills. Children can act out with the tapes. And," says Jerome, "the tapes keep children glued to their cassette players for hours on end."

Jerome says he is more surprised than anyone — pleasantly, of course — with the enormous success of the tapes. "We have received more than 24,000 letters from parents and teachers telling us that this probably is the best product out for children."

Jerome says he created "Little Thinker Tapes" three years ago by accident."Around Christmas 1977," Jerome recalls, "a couple of the engineers and writers asked to play around with the facilities, to put something together for their own children. They came up with a six or seven-line tape called 'Fun Poems Today,' in which children listened to a poem and then were asked to draw a picture.

"I saw the marketing potential," says Jerome, "and as a grandfather, I know that there are not enough products on the market to allow children to do, think and create. Everything is told to them.

"The tapes," he says, "are being used to evaluate children in some of the finest medical institutions and universities nationwide. One can learn a lot about a child as a result of what the child puts down on paper.

"The tapes also are being used in schools. Children are not only listening, but are acting out what they hear," he says.

Jerome says the tapes are "meticulously researched for correct material. All subjects, such as 'Life Under the Sea' and 'Life in Outer Space,' are educationally correct," he says.

Along with the tapes, Jerome has created "Little Thinker Fun Times," a newspaper written by and for children. "We have thousands of writers from around the country, all children, who send us articles and pictures," says Jerome.

Jerome says there are about 15,000 members of the "Little Thinker Fun Club" — called "thinkernicks" — who receive membership patches, a membership card and birthday cards. When a "thinkernick" turns 12, Jerome says, he or she is promoted to "Big Thinker" and receives a parchment certificate.

"This is such an endearing kind of business," says the big granddaddy of it all. "The input from children makes you feel like you're doing something nice for the kids."

Chef offers health hints for travelers

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

A vivacious young woman, who made a name for herself as executive chef for New York's Mayor Edward Koch, has developed a program to change the eating habits of plane travelers so they will feel fit when the trip is over, and maybe shed a couple of pounds.

"When embarking on a flight," said 28-year-old Rozanne Gold, "remember that just because the airline says it's mealtime doesn't necessarily mean it's your mealtime. You may feel better just having a snack during the trip.

"It's often a good idea to order a special meal for yourself before boarding," she added. "By ordering at least 24 hours in advance, you can arrange for a low carbohydrate diet, a kosher meal or a fresh fruit plate."

Ms. Gold, who looks more like a fashion model than a kitchen supervisor, said that travelers should be as aware of proper nutrition as top athletes.

"When you're on the go making plane connections and trying to keep track of your luggage, you may need an extra boost," she said. "Have a banana or a glass of freshly squeezed juice or replenish lost body fluids with mineral water."

Ms. Gold must be doing something right, since in the course of her cooking career she has won praise from such notables as Jimmy Carter, Menachem Begin and Sophia Loren.

At present, she is introducing light new eating concepts as co-director of restaurants at New York's Barbizon Hotel, with the single traveler in mind.

"When traveling alone, eating alone becomes a problem," she said. "Some hotels, like the Barbizon, have a 'captain's table' where those who wish can eat together.

"Avoid eating alone in your hotel room," she added. "Ask about restaurants which are informal and suited for those eating by themselves. Outdoor cafes are perfect for this."

3 quarts homemade stock from fish, chicken or vegetables
1 minced garlic clove
3 carrots, scraped
10 mushrooms
1 large leek
4 celery stalks
1½ cups fresh tomatoes, diced and drained
1 tablespoon fresh minced parsley
1 tablespoon fresh minced basil

Julienne all vegetables but the tomatoes into 1½-inch strips. Bring stock to boil and add garlic, carrots, mushrooms, leek and celery. Simmer 10-15 minutes, till vegetables are just done. Add tomatoes, parsley and basil and simmer 5 minutes longer. Serve with thin slices of lemon and add a dash of fresh herbs, if desired.

Donna Hartman, wife of Arthur Hartman, U.S. ambassador to Moscow, stands in the garden outside Spasso House, the ambassador's official residence in Moscow. She describes herself as "an average person in an unaverage situation." Lean and tall, the 54-year-old mother of five has not led what most would consider an average life.

By MARC ROSENWASSER
AP Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — One American describes her as a "trooper ... Not above taking her shoes off, sitting on the floor and having a couple of beers."

Another says she "looks like an ambassador's wife. She carries herself well, dresses nicely, is soft spoken and always seems concerned when she's talking to someone."

What does Donna Hartman, wife of U.S. Ambassador to Moscow Arthur Hartman, think of Donna Hartman?

"An average person in an unaverage situation," she says.

Tall and lean with graying sandy-colored hair, the 54-year-old mother of five has not led what most would consider an average life.

She studied social psychology at the London School of Economics, has practiced yoga for several years and has worked at various times as a typist, English teacher and commercial landscape consultant.

In Moscow, she busies herself with daily Russian language classes, gardening and modern dance classes — all of which she takes seriously.

Russian classes are held daily for one or two hours. Gardening at the ambassador's official residence, says one person who has seen Mrs. Hartman do it, means "getting down in the dirt and digging."

As for modern dancing, Mrs. Hartman once leaped, fell and broke a bone in her foot.

She does all this, in addition to scheduling the use of their home for various activities, arranging for American artists to perform in Moscow and fufilling the social duties of an ambassador's wife.

It's a serious business, rubbing shoulders with Kremlin officials in Moscow or French leaders in Paris, where the Hartmans were based before their arrival in the Soviet capital in October 1981. But it's not serious enough to prevent the first lady of the American community here from enjoying a joke or two at her own expense.

"I talk to Russians every day," she said, with a laugh. "There are the butlers, maids and gardeners ... Oh, yes, there are the drivers."

She told how, nearly 35 years ago, her sister insisted she meet Arthur Hartman because she thought they looked alike.

"What do you think now?" she asked as she sat with U.S. Embassy spokesman Frank Tonini in the Hartmans' elegant residence, Spasso house.

"Well, you're both tall," replied Tonini.

"And we both have big noses," added Mrs. Hartman.

If anything, hers is a nose for the news.

Several weeks ago, Donna Hartman stepped into controversy.

On her own initiative, she went to the apartment of Soviet hunger striker Yuri Balovlenkov and tried to convince him to stop his fast for the right to join his American wife in the United States.

"I was really upset and fearful," she said. "He was so sure he wasn't going to die and that he was going to win."

Mrs. Hartman presented the 33-year-old computer programmer with a bright red rose picked from her garden, a tape recording of the opera, "La Traviata," and a note that said:

"To Yuri, so that you can hear the beauties of the world now that you've seen them in your daughter."

Balovlenkov, who days before had seen his 2-year-old child for the first time, later gave up his fast — but only after his wife, fearing for his health, falsely told him that Soviet authorities had decided to let him leave the country.

Joke as she does about her limited contacts, the ambassador and his wife regularly invite "official" and "unofficial" Soviets to functions at their home. One recent event was a screening of the movie, "E.T. — The Extra-Terrestrial."

"I try to provide and maintain a stage on which things can happen and then let them happen," says Mrs. Hartman.

Accident doesn't deter young rodeo champion

By DICK CLARK

NEWBERG, Ore. (AP) — A year ago, champion rodeo performer Dee Schmidt was in a coma, and doctors were saying the teen-ager had little chance of surviving her injuries.

But a year later, Dee was in the winner's circle again when she was named Miss Western Regionals Paint Horse Queen in Reno, Nev.

"I was shocked and started crying," Dee, 14, recalled.

The award was a climax to a year filled with emotional highs and lows. Steve and Vicki Schmidt, Dee's parents, were ecstatic compared with their despair on the same day a year earlier.

In 1981, the world had looked bright for Dee, who was competing in a team steer-roping event with her father at the Yamhill County fairgrounds in McMinnville.

She had received the high-point award in the 13-year-old and under division at a paint horse show in Olympia two weeks before. She also was well on her way to becoming the 1981 reserve high-point champion in the 13-year-old and under category in the Northwest — an award she received despite the accident.

During the routine steer-roping event, Dee's horse tripped, and she jumped to avoid being crushed. But instead of landing safely, Dee fell on her left side, with her head and shoulder taking much of the impact of the 35-mph tumble.

At first, officials thought she had broken her neck.

She was taken to the McMinnville hospital and then transferred to the neurological center at Salem Memorial Hospital. She was not cut or bruised and no bones were broken, but a closed head injury with brain stem damage was diagnosed.

Dr. John White, a neurosurgeon at the Salem hospital, said Dee had "no better than 50-50 chance" for surviving the accident and even less hope for recovering to live a normal life.

Dee's parents went home, loaded their camper and returned to the hospital parking lot, where they lived for the next three weeks.

Dee was moved from intensive care into a private room after her condition stabilized the first week. Her parents and other family members took turns watching and talking to her.

Some of Dee's friends made tape recordings of her favorite music and local news to play in the hospital, and other people visited her regularly.

"I kept asking myself, 'How long can this go on?'" said Mrs. Schmidt, who recalled that on the third week after the accident the first sign of response came — a tear.

The most significant sign of progress came a short time later. Dee's father had walked into the room and said hello to Dee, and she turned her head to see him.

Soon afterward, Dee regained consciousness, but faced an extensive recovery program that involved learning the simplest tasks over again. Her left arm and right leg were paralyzed, and she had lost the ability to speak. Mrs. Schmidt said she resembled a stroke victim.

Effort against women's alcohol abuse begun

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Commission on Alcoholism launched a statewide effort today to teach women how to say "No" to another drink.

"Any way you want to," is the answer provided in a series of radio and television public service announcements being distributed throughout the state.

Texas Supreme Court Judge Ruby Kless Sondock, first woman justice on the state's highest court, helped inaugurate the statewide alcohol abuse prevention campaign at a Capitol news conference.

In the past, she said, drinking by women has been marked with the stigma of immorality and not considered the "proper role" for a wife or mother.

"Now, however, there are mixed signals," she said. "The old attitudes persist, but we find advertising specifically targeted to women's groups. Drinking has come to be associated with sophistication, maturity and suggestions that women should reject the old double standards."

She said she was happy to see there are facilities in Houston and Austin where women with a drinking problem can get help for themselves and at the same time care is provided for their children.

New advertising techniques used in 80s

By GREGORY SPECTOR
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — From automobiles to perfume to diet soft drinks, more and more advertisers are opting for stylized, symbolic-fantasy television commercials of vibrant colors and sleek, sexy models instead of the more conventional housewife or man-on-the-street approach.

The so-called new wave genre is not totally new. Bon Jour Action Jeans introduced a frenzied evil-looking new wave ad three years ago, but the company judged it a failure when stores began calling to cancel orders because the jeans' image was so tainted.

But Bon Jour's failure didn't sway other companies from trying to refine the new look to create advertising cluster-busters — ads that break through groupings of TV commercials to grab the viewers' attention.

Diet Pepsi's cluster-buster, "Now you see it, now you don't," is using new wave techniques to attract women intent on maintaining their slim, fit figures.

"We want to leave a memorable impression with the consumer, so we've chosen a highly graphic, stylized commercial for television," said Diet Pepsi advertising manager Grant Castel. "We're creating a fantasy of seeing yourself as one of the slim, stylized models and identifying that look with our product," he said. The ad's message is this: Diet Pepsi has one calorie, and if the consumer drinks it, she or he can be part of the hip, sexy world.

JOHN MAXWELL, industry analyst for Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb Research, reports that since the $15 million campaign was launched in 1981, sales have increased 20 percent to 173 million cases, compared to 154 million cases in 1980.

Maxwell's figures show Diet Pepsi has steadily gained in market share, too. In an industry where one-tenth of a share point translates into approximately $17 million in sales, Diet Pepsi's market share increased .03 pecent in 1981, compared to .1 percent in 1980, Maxwell said.

While automakers have traditionally played up product attributes to sell their cars, image has begun to play a much larger role in marketing new cars. And the new wave is the image they're choosing.

At first, Chevrolet balked at the splashy new advertising style for the Camaro, but went along with the campaign on the strength of Campbell-Ewald's market research. Dealers also were a bit stunned by the ads, but when customers becan coming into the showrooms talking about the terrific commercials they had seen on television, the dealers came around as well.

"Primarily, we have a contemporary product, so we wanted a compatible ad campaign. The ad uses a lot of symbolism suggesting life style — pretty girls in bathing suits, that type of thing," said Larry Rau, creative supervisor for Camaro advertising at Campbell-Ewald Co.

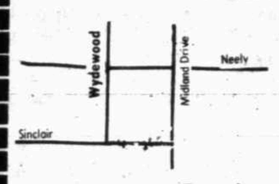

SHADOWS ARE USED as a visual and audio device — conveying the message that the closest competition is left in the shadows. Contemporary, pulsating music sets a quick pace for the ad, conveying the aggressive, upbeat style of a car that will suddenly transport the new owner to life in the fast lane. "Consumers don't see quite enough of the car in the commercial, which then draws the buyer into the showroom," Rau said.

And draw them it does. Last year, 102,878 Camaros were sold nationwide, compared to 136,594 sold so far this year. Of the three Camaro models, about 40 percent of all orders are for the Z28, the model featured in new wave commercials.

In contrast to GM's flashy commereials for Camaro, Lincoln-Mercury communicates its change from large luxury models to small, front-wheel-drive cars in a more surreal, languid new wave style in its 1982 "Dunes" commercial, with mysterious green spheres colliding with lynx cat and car on a rock-strewn moonscape.

And Lincoln-Mercury's new wave ads prove contemporary communications sell cars. While domestic auto industry sales for 1982 are off 13.3 percent, Lincoln-Mercury sales are up over 1 percent and market share rose from 6.4 percent to 7.3 percent. Among small cars, Lynx has advanced its market share from 3.6 percent to 4.3 percent.

THE INSPIRATION for the Lynx campaign may have come from Chanel No. 5's "Share the Fantasy" TV spots — on the air since 1979. Filmed at a villa in southern France, Chanel's ad is a sensual, dreamlike fantasy with enchanting music that conveys subtle elegance and luxury — an aura and allure available to the viewer in a bottle of Chanel No. 5.

Laser may be used, not bypass

By RICHARD SALTUS
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — If it proves safe in humans, a laser-tipped catheter developed by University of California physicians for blasting away blockages in heart arteries could replace bypass surgery for certain patients.

The catheter, which would be pushed through an arm or leg artery to the heart, contains a light-carrying fiber that for the first time allows physicians to see the obstructions of coronary arteries. These fatty deposits build up over time and eventually may choke off blood supply to the heart muscle, causing a heart attack.

Dr. Garrett Lee, a UC-Davis cardiologist, said that he has developed a catheter that is only one-eighth of an inch in diameter, with a bundle of the light-transmitting fibers inside. One fiber carries a view of the obstructing deposit out to an eyepiece. Another fiber carries a beam of light from a laser into the artery, and the physician can focus the laser beam directly onto the deposit, or plaque, as it is called.

Repeated bursts from the laser vaporize the plaque, little by little, and a suction device also running the length of the catheter sweeps up debris and gas left by the laser attack, Lee said.

Lee, who heads the cardiac catheterization laboratory at the UC-Davis School of Medicine, is testing the device on animals fed high-cholesterol diets so they will develop fatty blockages. He said that trials on humans may begin in a year or two, when the laser would first be used to open clogged arteries in the thigh.

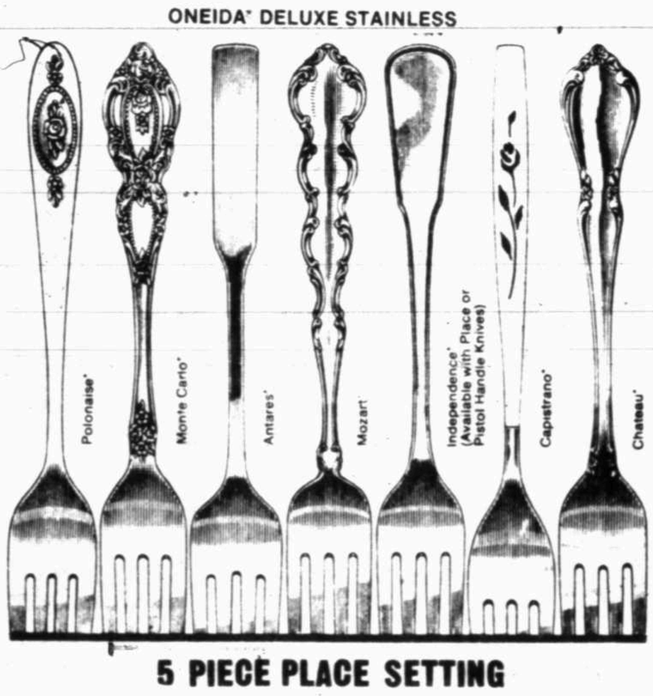

The detection of severe blockages in coronary arteries that nourish the heart now leads to open-heart surgery in most patients. In these operations, 125,000 of which are done annually, surgeons use pieces of leg veins to construct bypasses or detours around the blocked portion of the artery. The surgery carries a small but definite risk, is traumatic and costs an average of $30,000.

In the past few years, some patients have been treated with another catheter technique, called balloon angioplasty. A catheter equipped with a tiny deflated balloon is passed into the artery at the point of the blockage. Inflated under high pressure by remote control, the balloon expands and squeezes the plaque flat against the artery wall, widening the channel for blood.

Balloon angioplasty requires no open-heart surgery and costs one-third as much, but only certain kinds of plaques in certain locations can be treated this way, limiting use of the technique to about 15 percent of patients who are considered candidates for bypass surgery.

'Knight Riders' NBC's answer to CBS' 'Dukes'

NEW YORK (AP) — With the high cost of gasoline, NBC hopes youngsters will stop cruising on Friday nights and stay home for the bionic car on "Knight Rider."

The indestructible KITT, a computer-driven Trans Am, is a thinking tank, with feelings. It also drives itself, talks, shows off and pouts. This car doesn't need a mechanic; it needs a shrink.

By comparison, the General Lee, the best actor on "The Dukes of Hazzard," is a Model T.

KITT is certainly the star of NBC's new program, which begins its series run tonight. (A two-hour special was broadcast last Sunday.) This flashy car joins the assembly line of TV's thinking transports, including "Mister Ed," "My Mother the Car," and "Herbie, the Love Bug."

The other pretty front end in "Knight Rider" is David Hasselhoff, known for six years as Snapper Foster on "The Young and the Restless." David and KITT bicker like any other TV couple.

In Sunday's episode, Hasselhoff's cop character, David Knight, was shot in the face, with the violence replayed in slow motion three times. A rich, dying benefactor saved Knight's life, gave him a new identity and KITT.

In the series, David will use the car to fight criminals beyond the reach of ordinary law enforcement, proving that "one man can make a difference."

The real difference, of course, is KITT. NBC's strategy is that car enthusiasts (men and kids) will watch CBS' "The Dukes of Hazzard" at 8, then more high-flying stunts at 9. With top-rated "Dallas" emphasizing horizontal action on CBS, "Knight Rider" is bona fide counter-programming.

On Sunday, KITT won a demolition derby without a dent or paint chip. It stood up on two wheels to slide between two cars. It also ejected a couple of be-bop car thieves.

But KITT had the good sense to avoid a confrontation with the Teamsters. With a kamikaze truck, bent on a head-on collision, super car decided on flight rather than fight.

One of the car's best tricks may have been its ratings. "Knight Rider" drew a 21.7 percent rating of all TV households and a 33 percent share of the households with their sets on. The NBC program won its timeslot against first-run programming on ABC and CBS.

An imaginative promotional campaign, featuring race car driver Johnny Rutherford in KITT and a General Lee lookalike, may have fueled the ratings success.

But General Lee hasn't been displaced as TV's favorite hunk yet, even though last week's "Dukes" premiere, with a new blond and brunet replacing Bo and Luke, had a 20.6 rating and 36 share, down from last year's season-opener.

It didn't take long for Coy and Vance to get down to basics. Their first appearance had them soaring across the screen in a blue speedster. The car, which didn't have its doors welded shut, was wrecked later, and the new Duke boys — without a scratch — jumped into the General Lee.

Some things never change in Hazzard County...particularly the plot and dialogue. Coy (Byron Cherry) and Vance (Christopher Mayer) will get into hot water every week with Boss Hogg. Mayer, the one with some acting experience, will say memorable things like: "I sure hope so, Cous."

Reportedly, some "Dukes" veterans grumbled about the newcomers' acting and timing. But those aren't the kind of nuances that should bother this show's steady customers.

ENTERTAINMENT

Old Blue Eyes' style is timeless

By DON FREEMAN
Copley News Service

NEW YORK — When the moon is right and the voice holds to its proper timbre, Sinatra is possessed of his own singular buoyancy. It is a reflection of the man and the legend and his own celebration of a very special art of which he is the master — the interpretation of the American popular song.

And at once it is, as it was for Frank Sinatra at Carnegie Hall the other night, a time to have the world on a string and to buy violets and furs for her and to fly away to Acapulco Bay and then to Chicago, which is his kind of town, until it is now in the wee small hours of the morning and you put your dreams away for another day.

Frank Sinatra in Carnegie Hall! Once, in the not-so-long ago, Joe E. Lewis, the saloon comic (and just possibly the best that ever was) would bounce joyously into the Copacabana of a September night and, as sure as the whiff of chestnuts roasting in the vendors' carts on the corners of mid-Manhattan, that would signal the beginning of the fall season in New York.

Now another tradition emerges. Sinatra, the saloon singer (his own phrase for his particular line of work), comes to Carnegie Hall, as he has done these last three years, and the season is spectacularly launched.

And it is a quarter to three and there's no one in the place except you and me, and the man and the memories blend into one, with only occasionally a curious wintry melancholy where once there was the flash-fire of lean, bow-tied youth which would move thereafter into autumnal mellowness.

AS WE LISTEN to the Frank Sinatra of September 1982, we are hearing as well the other Sinatras that are a part of memory so swiftly retrieved. The fluidity of sound remains mesmerizing, with its floaty ease, the lyrics enunciated with impeccable precision.

And the phrasing — Sinatra's manner of putting words to music is still one of the world's wonders. Therein lies the Sinatra mystique, the hard edge of an artist who evokes from the romantic platitudes of the popular song the dreams that can turn to sudden, sharp reality. This he shares. This is his art.

The opening set at Carnegie Hall belongs to Buddy Rich and his band. It is a group that crackles with big-band drive. Forty years ago, Rich and Sinatra were antagonistic fellow members of the Tommy Dorsey band, the drummer from Brooklyn, the singer from Hoboken, a couple of scrappy kids on the rise. Each went on to taste fame, each in his own way. And each has endured.

Now Buddy propels his band with his fiery and yet wholly musical drumming. You think of the best of the Woody Herman Herds and you know that this outfit of Buddy's, playing great arrangements with a sinewy tightness, is reminiscent of those wailing Herman bands.

Later, the Rich band is augmented by Sinatra's people, such as lead trumpeter Charlie Turner and the matchless guitarist Tony Mottola and a rhythm section led by musical director Vincent Falcone at the piano. This is the powerhouse orchestra that backs Sinatra and it is rich and full and warm and delicate, the dynamics, the shadings of sound, so musically compelling. And how this band swings!

Recognition of professionalism is integral to Frank Sinatra. Throughout his hour-long performance he announces with each song title the composer and the lyricist and the arranger, often as not Nelson Riddle, whose crisp and rhythmic charts brought on the Sinatra of the '50s. Sometimes the songwriter and the lyricist are the same, which is a way of saying that several tunes were from Cole Porter's pen.

MOSTLY, THE songs are out of the Sinatra past, his repertoire including such evergreens as "I've Got You Under My Skin" and "I Get a Kick Out of You" and "The Lady Is a Tramp" and a marvelously languid "As Time Goes By" and, in a tribute to Fred Astaire, "I Won't Dance."

And so on. And then Sinatra moves smoothly to the climax of the show and something magical occurs.

The band is playing softly — very softly, vamping the opening chords to "New York, New York." The audience stirs with anticipation. New York audiences are wild about this bold, brassy song that is their new anthem. At every home game in Yankee Stadium, at least three or four times, they play the Sinatra record of "New York, New York."

And now here it is, those first tentative sounds of the New York song that stirs the populace of the Big Apple like no other — and this audience at Carnegie Hall erupts into a thunderclap that signifies a loving recognition. The moment is terribly exciting. You are observing this audience, keeping a grip on reportorial detachment, but it is an audience of which you are a part and you find yourself responding with them.

Sinatra, the wise showman, allows the applause and the cheers to reach a high-decibel peak and then to subside and descend into a deliciously tense, expectant silence. Sinatra will bring the audience along to the heights again but on his terms. He smiles, puffs on a cigarette and sips from his wine glass. And then he sings "New York, New York."

It is quite unforgettable.

In great voice, in this fine September of his years, Sinatra has given a demonstration of craft, ruled by instinct, stoked by his own intuitive fires and with no concession to current popular tastes. Old songs he may choose to sing but Frank Sinatra can never be old-fashioned.

Sinarta is timeless and he has style. Fashion is perishable, style endures.

Audience won't soon forget Ice Capades

A Review

Ice Capades' new variety revue "Light up the Ice" offers area residents 2½ hours of entertainment which includes spectacular numbers, adept individual skaters and funny comedy routines. All were executed with expert skating.

Established by the Ice Capades cast, the "fall-out fund" is paid twenty-five cents by the party at fault, whether it be a skater that falls or a crew member that makes a mistake. The monies collected during the season pay for the champagne at the cast's final party before summer vacation.

The fund didn't make much revenue Tuesday night.

Comedy routines executed by Tommy Miller and by the comedy team of Biddy and Baddy (Gigi Percelly and Steve Pedley), had the audience laughing with a particularily funny moment occurring when Baddy (or was it Biddy?) skated around the rink blowing water from his hard hat all over those unfortunates in the front row ringside seats. He had almost completed his circle when he ran into a lady who was prepared for him. She had brought her bright yellow umbrella.

He stopped. Insisting that she come over to him, he gave her a kiss. Then as she sat down, he sprayed her.

Whether it was planned or not, it worked. The audience loved it.

Principal skaters for the ice extravanganza included the teams of Frank Sweiding and Beth Flora, Tony Paul and Terry Pagano, as well as Carrie Rugh, Robert Wagenhoffer, Richard Ewell, Judy Shaull and Jennifer Eckman. All were proficient as skaters, with several performing certain memorable movements within their routines.

As adagio skaters, Paul and Miss Pagano were stunning. In several of their spins, her head was so close to the ice that it inspired one observer to say, "That really takes faith."

It is dangerous and even the best can miss. But in all of their routines, their movements were smooth and their timing seemed right on target.

Another of the evening's highpoints was Wagenhoffer's skating. His movements were clean, his execution precise and when he performed one particular special move (I can't say more because it might spoil the surprise for those attending. Those who have been know what I'm talking about.) in the middle of a number, you could hear the audience's ahhh. It was certainly deserved.

Danny Rosen was another of the evening's high spots. His five-club juggling while skating drew an appreciative applause from the crowd.

Miss Shaull's performance was also memorable. She had a strong onstage presence, and knows how to stage her act and move like a dancer when she skates. It's hard to believe Miss Schaull has never had a professional skating lesson. But, she hasn't.

The tiny neon lights in the finale number were visually effective as was the magic created by the Ice Capades in the flying scenes this year.

Peter Foy's flying techniques had their Ice apades debut in the 1977-78 show. This year's butter es were magnificent. The number was complete wit' laborate costumes, special lighting effects, and a mirror ball. The resulting staging caused one audience member to say, "Kids will be a long time forgetting that."

And that's what the Ice Capades is all about. The show provides families with an evening out that entertains the youngest as well as the oldest members.

— GEORGIA TEMPLE

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — The late Walt Disney once wished upon a star for a "peek into the 21st century" to thrill adults, just as Disney World's Magic Kingdom excites the imagination of children.

Disney's successors realize that dream with the opening today of the Epcot Center, an addition to the growing Disney empire in central Florida that its "imagineers" hope will be an enchanting combination of education and entertainment.

The center's name is derived from Experimental Prototype City of Tomorrow, Disney's vision of a domed working community that would allow visitors to take a simulated trip into the future.

Although Disney died in 1966 and the original concept has been largely abandoned as unfeasible and too ambitious, many of Disney's creative designs and ideas have been used in the Epcot Center.

The $800 million complex, divided between Future World and World Showcase, blends up-to-date technology and international cultures into a lively exposition on the order of a jazzed-up world's fair.

"I see it as a kind of miracle ... complementing everything we've done so far," says Disney Chairman Card Walker. "It has hands-on creativity, outstanding shows, foreign participation, gourmet foods, innovative filmmaking."

Walker and other Disney executives are counting on the Epcot Center to increase visitors to the 27,400-acre Disney World from 13 million people a year to 20 million.

"We are offering a more sophisticated show, so it will attract different kinds of people. They will stay longer," said Walker. Disney officials estimate it will take visitors between two and four days to take in both the Magic Kingdom and Epcot in one visit.

Unlike the Magic Kingdom — a family-oriented super amusement park with restaurants, rides and Disney characters that opened 11 years ago — Epcot is aimed primarily at adults. Spreading over 260 acres, Epcot is linked to the Magic Kingdom by eight miles of monorail.

Epcot's Future World, with six pavilions, is dedicated to themes on communications, energy, transportation, agriculture and imagination. Its exhibits are sponsored by Exxon, General Motors, the Bell System, Kraft, Kodak, Coca-Cola, American Express and Sperry.

The other nine major pavilions, the World Showcase, rim a man-made lagoon and represent the architectural, social and cultural heritages of China, France, Germany, Italy, Mexico, Britain, Canada, Japan and the United States.

To help tourists through the world of Epcot, the Disney people also have placed throughout the park a cast of 450 robot-type figures, electronically programmed to move and speak.

Visitors may also see films shot in 30 countries, 31 different shows and 11 different film formats including 3-D and circle-vision.

Epcot's official opening ceremonies are set for the weekend of Oct. 22. A host of national and international figures from business, government and show business will take part.

Parents get tough with undisciplined kids

EDITOR'S NOTE: Adolescence is a tough time of life — for parents as well as youngsters. What can parents do when their teen-agers become a real problem? A group calling itself Toughlove has some ideas.

By BOB DVORCHAK

SELLERSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Toughlove is a mushrooming international network of troubled parents fighting back against abusive teen-agers through a self-help support group.

It was founded five years ago by family counselors David and Phyllis York of Bucks County, Pa., after they became fed up with a daughter who ripped off a cocaine dealer.

Its logo is a heart with a clenched fist, and it draws a tough line. Problem kids are told to straighten up or else, even if the "else" means the ultimate pentalty of being banished from home.

"That's the tough part about Toughlove," says David York."You have to say to your young person, 'You have to choose between living in our family as a decent human being or you have to leave.' To make that decision as a parent is awfully hard."

"No kid gets thrown out in the street," his wife is quick to point out. Children are given the choice of staying with relatives, friends or other Toughlove parents.

"YOU HAVE to say to a kid, 'We can't live with you anymore. We have a network you can go to. Here are your choices.' Not every kid will take that. There is a risk the kid will go to the street, but we don't think he will stay for long," Mrs. York says.

The Yorks once worked for a drug rehabilitation center in Newtown called Today Inc. She has a degree in psychology from Goddard College, he has degrees in physical education and biology from New York Univeristy and has done doctoral work in psychology.

Just before Christmas in 1976, one of their three teen-age daughters held up a cocaine dealer for the second time. When police surrounded their home and presented a warrant for the daughter's arrest, the Yorks had enough.

The hardline approach worked. The Yorks credit a network of sympathetic parents who helped them through their troubles, and a new approach evolved.

"Taking a stand is the essence of Toughlove. The bottom line for us is that parents take charge and demand that young people accept responsibility for their actions," says York.

"WE TELL parents to lay it on the line and make your child accept the consequences of his behavior."

Toughlove has its detractors who see the program as hostile to youngsters or a cavalier way of throwing them out into the street. Regardless, it has grown swiftly.

Last summer, there were 25 groups nationwide. Now, there are more than 600 groups operating in every state but Arkansas and Mississippi. The Toughlove web has stretched to Canada, Guam, England and Germany.

Teresa Quinn is national coordinator of Toughlove, which operates from a second floor apartment building in this southeastern Pennsylvania community. The movement, she says, is exploding.

The Yorks describe Toughlove as a last resort for parents who have been unable to put a foot down firmly. It deals with children who are dependent on drugs and alcohol, who forge checks, steal grandma's diamond ring or hock family silverware to buy their highs.

Usually, they come from white middle class families, skip school, keep their rooms like pigpens. Some even beat up their parents. For one extreme example, a mother was beaten, bound and locked in her garage for two days by a teenage son.

TOUGHLOVE TELLS parents to set clear rules with clear penalties for violations.

For example, if a kid won't go to school, he can't have a stereo or a phone. If the room isn't cleaned, he can't go out at night. Or to carry it to the ultimate, a teen-ager can find a locked door and a packed suitcase along with the names, addresses and phone numbers of people willing to take him in.

That final step bothers some psychiatrists and psychologists.

"I would have strong reservations about it," says Dr. Francis Harris, an associate professor of child psychology and a counselor of adolescents at Western Psychiatric Institute in Pittsburgh.

"It's a pretty radical approach. I have never suggested that a parent throw a kid out. You're making the statement, 'You're such a bad kid, not even your parents will keep you.'" He adds:

"We don't know what the impact is going to be for a kid. I would feel more comfortable with it if there has been a complete psychiatric evaluation and if the traditional mental health treatment options had been exhausted."

OTHER CRITICS, while commending Toughlove for calling attention to the situation, say Toughlove is overly simplistic.

"I have a great many reservations about a superficial psychological approach," says Dr. Richard Bocchini, a Philadelphia-area psychologist who has worked with troubled children and families for 20 years.

"Toughlove is a distortion of the basic principles of applied psychology. It's the popcorn phenomenon. It looks good, smells good and tastes good. But it doesn't last very long. It doesn't sustain you in the next crisis."

Toughlove sees it differently.

"We're not anti-kid, we're anti-bad behavior," says Mrs. Quinn, who 11 years ago had her 19-year-old daughter arrested so she could kick her heroin addiction.

"You don't have to live with anyone who is disrupting your life, making a hell out of your home. We have an alternative. The scariest thing we do is tell kids they have to be responsible for their actions," she adds.

"It's not that we're brave. We're desperate. It's tougher for us to say no. It's tougher for us to take a stand."

THE YORKS have held 16 workshops around the country to teach parents how to set up a support group.

Reagan's out stumping for Senate Republicans

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — President Reagan is campaigning for a Republican majority in the Senate for the next two years. You'd never know from his stump speech that the GOP has been in charge for the past two years.

He is still running against Jimmy Carter and a Democratic administration, a Democratic Congress, and "the Washington state of mind."

The nation got a good peek at the president's political plan Tuesday night when he used the opening of a nationally broadcast news conference — possibly his last before the Nov. 2 election — to talk about "the long years of government mismanagement" that led up to the current recession.

Then, in a tired arena dressed up with red, white and blue bunting, the president turned to a Republican audience at a rally here for Rep. Paul Trible, the GOP Senate candidate, and talked about the "economic binge" of the recent Democratic years "which left us with today's pounding, national hangover."

Ignoring the rising unemployment and business failures that have marked the first two years of his administration, but paying heed to falling interest rates and inflation, the president said Wednesday that when Gerald R. Ford left office, "America was enjoying economic stability that would be a source of envy today."

But then came the Democrats: Inflation rose, as did interest rates. Productivity and the rate of savings fell, and taxes "smothered the incentives of individuals and businesses."

"Yes, America went backward during those four Democratic years. In many ways, they marked the culmination of decades of overindulgence by the liberal Washington establishment," Reagan said, adding:

"Government had spun out of control like a washing machine out of balance."

In this fall election season, the chief objective of the White House is to retain control of the Senate, where Republicans now outnumber Democrats by a margin of 54 to 45. Virginian Harry Byrd, an Independent, is retiring, and it is for his seat that Trible is running. Byrd has been voting with the Republicans.

Until 1981, when Republicans took power in the Senate, Democrats held control of Congress for a quarter of a century.

On the stump, Reagan frequently argues that it is the newly won Republican majority that has been the crucial factor in congressional passage of his economic program of limiting budget increases. In fact, Reagan has gone so far as to say, in a jesting way, that he sometimes wakes out of a sound sleep after a recurring nightmare: The Democrats are in control again in the Senate.

In conservative Virginia and in Utah, where Reagan has also campaigned this season, Republicans stressed the need to vote for GOP candidates to maintain the Senate majority and the control of committee chairmanships.

With Reagan at his side, Trible reminded his audience what would happen if the Democrats take over:

"Returning Teddy Kennedy and his colleagues to control of the Senate would deprive the president of a fair hearing for his legislative agenda. If the president cannot lead, the American people are the losers."

Even when Reagan gets that "fair hearing," not all Republicans vote with him. Trible, now a member of the House, voted against the tax increase Reagan won after a battle.

Peoria against nude play

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — The City Council doesn't want the nude musical "Oh! Calcutta!" to play in Peoria.

The production is booked at the Civic Center this weekend, and Councilman-at-Large Leonard Unes says he's going to complain to the theater's management.

"If we let this slip by without comment, we're allowing anything to play in Peoria," Unes told a council meeting, earlier this week, saying he had received complaints from local residents "who should have a say in what is in the theater."

The only support for the show came from Ronald Wasden, who said he was listening to the council meeting on the radio and decided to show up to express his views against censorship.

"I don't think it's the right of any governmental body to determine what I can and cannot see," he said.

Courts have previously ruled that the play, in which cast members appear naked through much of the show, is not obscene. The company producing the show has maintained it has fended off all legal challenges elsewhere.

Unes, meanwhile, suggested an advisory panel be formed to screen activities to be booked into the Civic Center. No formal action has been taken by the council.

For 'professional students,' the reasons are still the same

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — John McCraw, 40, is doing the same thing he's been doing for most of his life: going to school.

This year, it's the University of Arizona. Before that, it was the University of Texas, Minnesota, Southern Oregon College of Education, a small school in New Mexico, San Diego State. Along the way, McCraw has analyzed and struggled with his fierce attraction to higher education.

"GOING TO school is the only thing that provides the challenge and stimulation for me to live up to my own limits. As long as I can't locate a sufficiently challenging and stimulating opportunity, I can't conceive of anything but going to school," McCraw said.

Currently a doctoral candidate and teaching associate in literature at Arizona, McCraw is the epitome of a disappearing breed, the perpetual student. Marked changes in the economic and political climate have taken a toll on the species. Universities, state legislatures and the federal government have made it increasingly difficult to languish in academia.

However, people like McCraw manage to survive, scrambling at times from university to university, snagging grants or assistantships, piling up loans and taking odd jobs to squeeze out a living.

Term after term, faculty members see these perennial students and ask, "Are you still here?" Yet despite the theory of San Francisco State English Professor Eric Solomon that "we have hundreds of them," perpetual students do seem to be declining in number.

Of course, since falling through the cracks of the collegiate bureacracy is almost a necessity for staying in school these days, they have to make an effort to remain anonymous. But there is the occasional newsworthy exception:

MARIO SAVIO, of Berkeley Free Speech movement fame, showed up at a press conference this summer. It turned out that he was nearly 40, still a student, and enrolled at San Francisco State.

Theodore Streleski gave perpetual students a bad name in 1978 when he murdered his Stanford math professor. All accounts emphasized that Streleski had been working on his doctorate for nearly two decades.

Reasons for staying around an inordinate number of years are as numerous as the perpetual students themselves. Possibly because he has been at it so long, McCraw admits that he just likes being in school. Motivations ranging from fear of success to a desire to punish one's parents come into play for most perpetual students.

"People who don't feel embarrassed or ambivalent about their status are not the people I usually see," said University of California psychological counselor Jane Burka. Among other counseling activities, she has conducted groups for people who procrastinate.

"STUDENTS ARE afraid of facing the job market when there are no jobs out there," said Dr. Richard Beery, a counselor at Cal who has done extensive work in the fear of success. "It's more prudent to stay in school and hope the situation gets better."

But, said Beery, "Unless they're living on somebody's trust fund, perpetual students don't have an easy life — everything from sub-standard housing on down. Theirs is very much like the artistic pursuit, where you choose to sacrifice economic gains for something you like to do."

Teaching layoffs on the increase

Many school districts send out layoff notices to more teachers than they actually lay off, so that final figures might be lower. Education officials did not start keeping records until 1981.

Candidate believes in good old ways

ATHENS, Texas (AP) — Gordon F. "Pop" Wills knows that at age 86, his second-time write-in candidacy for governor probably is doomed.

Incumbent Bill Clements and challenger Mark White, both a score or more years Wills' junior, have millions of dollars to spend on their races, while Wills must finance his with the $1,000 or so he can squeeze from a military pension.

But the physically-fit, mentally-keen former cotton picker, truck farmer, streetcar operator and soldier in two world wars doesn't appear a bit despondent.

"Why should I be discouraged?" said Wills, sitting in the lobby of the old Athens Hotel, his home, as vintage ceiling fans w[illegible]led overhead.

"I[illegible]orn American citizen. If I want to run for something and spend my money on it, that's my business."

Wills has spent more than $1,000 on dozens of advertisements in six East Texas newspapers.

The messages on the ads vary, but they all end the same and sum up Wills' reason for running: "Please cancel the names of my opponents and write my name in. I am opposed to alcohol and dope."

Today's generation of politicians, including his two opponents, are too weak-willed to speak out on the most important issues of the day — homosexuality, for instance — Wills said.

"It's just as much a sin today as it was when God destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah," he said.

As for White and Clements, Wills' ads conclude, "If half of what each has said about the other is true, I hardly see why anyone would vote for either of them."

Wills is no newcomer to politicking. He ran for governor in 1972 and twice without success for Henderson County sheriff.

"The life of all of us is bound up in politics," he said. "If we don't pay attention to it, we're going to lose this country quicker than we think."

It was during the 1972 gubernatorial race that Wills said he picked up his nickname.

Another candidate in the race, Frances Farenthold, was nicknamed "Sissy" and was doing well in the campaign so Wills decided to call himself "Pop."

Wills has old-fashioned ideas sure to attract some voters, but many won't relate to his campaign promise to be as good a governor as Pat Neff.

Patient smoking in bed starts two-alarm fire

DALLAS (AP) — A two-alarm fire triggered by a patient smoking in bed forced the evacuation of 30 patients from the 10th floor of Parkland Memorial Hospital, authorities said.

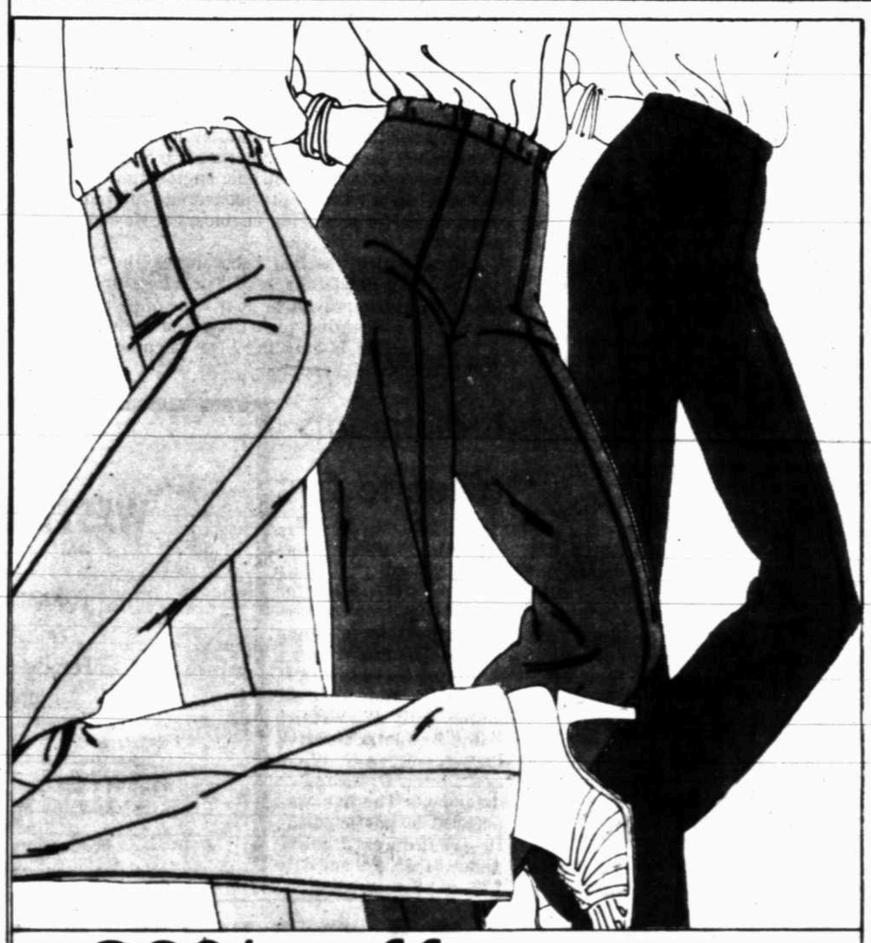

A hospital official said there were no injuries reported in the Wednesday night blaze and that damage was minor.

The patients were moved to other floors of the hospital, spokesman Greg Graze said.

The fire was extinguished about midnight, firefighters said.

SUNY remains biggest; Budget can't claim same

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — It took three decades of unparalleled growth to build the State University of New York into the nation's largest public university.

Today, its fast-paced adolescence is behind it. Its building nearly complete, SUNY is a young giant, worried now about whether it will be able to age gracefully.

Like universities everywhere, the sprawling system is being squeezed by an economy that no longer permits the kind of expansion its administrators are accustomed to.

When New York established its state university in 1948, it was the last of the then 48 states to do so. It had to move full-speed to grow from a loosely linked coalition of 29 state-supported colleges into today's multifaceted university of 64 campuses, 380,000 students and, in the words of SUNY Chancellor Clifton Wharton Jr., "anything anyone could want to study."

The spurt began about 1960, when the postwar "baby boom" began to reach college age and as education took on a new importance in response to the Soviets' launch of the satellite Sputnik, triggering the race to space.

But probably the biggest single force behind its expansion was the late, big-building Nelson Rockefeller, who became governor of New York in 1959.

In Rockefeller's day, money was no object, recall those who were witnesses.

"In the Rockefeller era, there was all kinds of money floating around all the time," recalled Paul Veillette, a career civil servant in the state Budget Division, the department responsible for providing the hard figures that go into the governor's budget proposals each year.

"The state had money to burn," he said. "They (SUNY) got most of the money they asked for. It was a question of how much more money to give them, not a question of how much money to cut."

Neil Brown, dean of student affairs at Albany State, recalled that when he was director of the new campus center in the late 1960s, his budget for furnishings and equipment was so large that he couldn't find ways to spend it all — even after providing the center with niceties like outdoor patio furniture.

"I never did spend all the equipment money allocated," he said. "I couldn't spend it responsibly. Oh, to have some of that money back now."

During its boom years, SUNY added programs and students at dizzying speeds. Enrollment grew from 26,700 in 1948 to its peak of 409,600 in 1974.

In 1960, the university trustees came out with their first master plan, charting an ambitious course for the university and establishing four major university centers.

Rockefeller took a special interest in the four university centers, all of which received elaborate new campuses. Like a proud father, he nurtured the budding SUNY showpieces, authorizing whatever money was needed to build them into modern, impressive centers of learning.

During the building, some degree of construction was under way simultaneously at three dozen campuses. Nearly 200 construction projects were going on in 1965, and during the previous three years 154 new buildings had sprung up at a cost of $200 million.

By the mid-1970s, spending had begun to catch up with the state. Since 1975, when New York City tottered on the brink of default, campuses have been forced to tighten their belts.

The first evidence of the strains on state coffers came late in Rockefeller's administration. By the early 1970s, construction money was no longer readily available and plans to build projects such as field houses at a dozen campuses were shelved.

SUNY was stung by the budget of 1975.

"That hit us very hard at a particularly vulnerable time," Stein said. "We were on our way to meeting our mission: to become a comprehensive university in the tradition of an Ann Arbor, a Madison or a Berkeley. Suddenly, we were faced with the trauma of retrenchment."

Binghamton decided to emphasize its well-regarded Harpur College, a four-year liberal arts school, and a select number of doctoral programs. Instead of a Berkeley, Stein said, it would aim at becoming "a public Brown."

Today, even as administrators wrestle with decisions about what to trim, SUNY remains committed to some expansion projects and continues to take on others.

"SUNY will be in a crunch every year from now on," predicted Assemblyman Arthur Kremer, chairman of the influential Assembly Ways and Means Committee, which reviews all budget requrests.

Nineteen-year-old Christopher Carlson of Edmond, Okla., hopes the kidney he received Sunday morning will help him to lead a more normal life and realize his ambition of becoming a Mormon missionary like his brother. A San Antonio girl's death in a traffic accident and a network which matches potential kidney donors with recipients enabled the young man to receive the much-needed organ.

Kidney transplant offers man hopes for normality

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A San Antonio girl's death in a traffic accident has rekindled the hopes of a 19-year-old Edmond man who wants to be a Mormon missionary.

Though Christopher Carlson remained in the intensive-care unit at Oklahoma Children's Memorial Hospital on Wednesday after kidney transplant surgery, his hopes for a normal life were high.

The kidney became available when the 12-year-old Texas girl was killed in a traffic accident.

Carlson waited nearly three years for the donation. Before Sunday's transplant operation, he had been on blood-cleansing kidney dialysis since January 1979.

David had volunteered to donate one of his kidneys to his brother.

Through a computer-assisted network that matches kidney donors and potential recipients, the girl's kidney was found to be suitable for Carlson.

The donor kidney was flown from San Antonio to Oklahoma City.

Report indicates U.S. nuclear strength, NATO weakness

LONDON (AP) — Fears of the Soviet Union gaining over the United States in strategic nuclear weapons are unfounded, the International Institute for Strategic Studies said in a report issued today.

But the prestigious London-based research organization warned the balance of nuclear and conventional weapons in Europe is shifting against the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The conclusions were part of the 1982-83 "Military Balance" report prepared by the private, non-profit institute, which draws members from 50 nations and concentrates on international security, defense and arms control.

The United States has 6,920 land- and sea-based warheads compared with an estimated 7,000 Soviet warheads, the report said. But when bomber-delivered warheads are added, the United States, with a larger long-range bomber fleet, has 9,268 warheads against the overall Soviet total of an estimated 7,300, the report said.

However, the institute said this U.S. edge is partly offset by the greater force of all the Soviet weapons — an estimated 6,100 megatons against the overall U.S. total of 3,752.

The report said the Warsaw Pact advantage in Europe stems mainly from the deployment of Soviet multi-warhead SS-20 missiles and NATO's failure to boost its missile arsenal.

The institute listed 4,124 Warsaw Pact long- and medium-range missiles in Europe against 1,643 in NATO's arsenal. This does not include the Poseidon and Trident systems, which are currently arming U.S. submarines but are not necessarily available for defense in Europe.

For engineers, study, practice both important

NEW YORK (AP) — Developments in engineering are now so rapid that practicing engineers can't keep up, so a group of MIT professors is proposing a new partnership between universities and high-technology American firms to solve the problem.

The recommendations, appearing in a 60-page report unveiled here Wednesday, come at a time of increased concern that U.S. "high tech" businesses have lost their competitive edge over Japanese computer and electronics manufacturers.

The report, titled "Lifelong Cooperative Education," was described to reporters in advance of a weekend of celebrations in Cambridge, Mass., marking the 100th anniversary of electrical engineering education, which began at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The report was written by MIT engineering professors James D. Bruce, William M. Siebert, Louis D. Smullin and Robert M. Fano.

It says that specialists in electrical and computer engineering can no longer afford to let their education end with engineering school.

One of the report's central proposals is that universities such as MIT provide high technology firms special videotaped lessons for their working engineers. Companies ought to provide about half a day a week for such on-the-job studies and would also have to provide tutors.

The report also proposes that a non-profit "council" consisting of captains of industry and university presidents be established to attract start-up money for the proposed cooperative education scheme and to "get the ball rolling on these ideas," says Smullin.

The electronics field has changed so rapidly in the last decade that by the time a typical engineering student has graduated, his knowledge is often already out of date, the report says.

Practicing engineers, as well as engineering professors, likewise are finding it more difficult to stay abreast of latest technological developments.

Models for the proposed industry-academic partnership already exist, but are too rare if U.S. firms are to regain ascendancy in electronic engineering, says the report. Stanford University pioneered "tutored video instruction" for practicing engineers at Hewlett-Packard Co.

And such firms as Bell Laboratories, the research arm of AT&T, Hewlett-Packard, Texas Instruments and General Electric provide at least some of its engineers the chance for continuing on-the-job education.

"The problem is only the biggest companies can afford to do this," Fano said.

Indictments given to 5

DALLAS (AP) — A federal grand jury has indicted five people for allegedly making counterfeit money and spending it in Dallas stores.

The indictment, released Wednesday, names Billy W. Wright, Kathy A. Giles, Charles A. Brown, James C. Webb and Donna C. Gaston as defendants. The five were accused of participating in a scheme to make phony $1, $5, $20 and $100 bills.

Single-family home sales up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government figures show sales of new single-family houses rose a slight 2 percent in August, continuing a seesaw performance that has left sales at almost exactly the same level as one year earlier.

Prices continued to rise, hitting a record median of $73,200 for new houses sold during the month, according to the report from the Commerce Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

But housing industry spokesmen said the price figure was misleading because it did not take into account the fact that many sellers were helping buyers with financing in order to get rid of their houses.

Thursday's report said new houses were sold in August at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 359,000, up a bit from July's rate of 352,000 but down a bit from June's 372,000. The rate in August 1980, as the recession was just beginning to move in, was 364,000.

Meanwhile, the National Association of Realtors said resales of existing houses declined 6.3 percent in August to an annual rate of 1.79 million, the lowest level of the recession so far.

All-Savers interest rate drops

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury says the interest rate on tax-exempt All Savers Certificates will drop to a record low 7.48 percent for new deposits beginning next week.

The rate for the past month — the current record low of 8.15 percent — will continue through Saturday. The new rate will cover one-year certificates issued by financial institutions between Sunday and Oct. 31.

The interest rate on the certificates was 12.61 percent for the first few days of sales after they were introduced last October. But it has never been so high since, and sales fell off sharply after the first month.

Savers' interest on the certificates is limited to 70 percent of the average annual investment yield on one-year Treasury bills, which are auctioned every four weeks. That yield, as determined in Thursday's auction, was 10.68 percent, down from the 11.64 percent of the Sept. 2 auction.

Certificate interest up to $1,000 for individuals and up to $2,000 for married couples is exempt from federal income taxes.

Many Americans' tax-exempt certificates are reaching maturity this weekend, but those savers can buy new ones only if they have not used up their interest exemptions.

Kaiser will stop steel making

FONTANA, Calif. (AP) — Kaiser Steel Corp. says it will stop making steel for at least three weeks at its Fontana mill on Oct. 17 and lay off 600 employees.

The shutdown could last longer as the mill's coke plant is supposed to be closed permanently by the end of the year.

Stephen A. Girard, chairman and chief executive of Kaiser, said Thursday the shutdown was the result of a depressed steel market and the company's large inventory of Fontana-produced and purchased steel slabs.

"We sincerely regret the necessity to make this decision and put so many people out of work," Girard said a statement. "However, we are facing the worst steel market since the 1930s and we must react."

The planned layoff of 600 workers in Fontana was the fourth job reduction announced this year at the plant, where 875 workers have already been laid off. Two weeks ago, the company laid off 400 workers because of the shutdown of the coke plant.

Kaiser Steel reported a net loss of $437.5 million for 1981, on sales of 1.03 billion, after writing off several hundred million dollars worth of steelmaking facilities.

Woolworth sells British stores

NEW YORK (AP) — F.W. Woolworth Co. says it is selling its majority interest in its struggling British unit for $279 million as part of a drive to get rid of unprofitable operations.

The sale came a week after Woolworth announced it would close its 336 Woolco discount department stores in the United States, because of that division's continuing losses.

Woolworth said Thursday it accepted an offer from a newly formed British consortium, Paternoster Stores, of $1.39 a share for each of its 199.2 million shares in F.W. Woolworth PLC, which operates more than 1,000 stores in Britain, Ireland and the Caribbean Islands.

Meanwhile, in New York, financial advisers for Woolworth met Thursday with a lawyer for Saudi Arabian shiek Mohammed al Fassi, who has expressed an interest in buying the Woolco stores but who has yet to make an offer for the money-losing chain. The sheik's lawyer, Richard Hirschfeld, late Thursday declined to disclose the results of the meeting and said he could not make any comment.

Farm product prices increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department says prices farmers get for raw products rose during September for the first time since spring, climbing 2.3 percent above the August level.

The higher prices for September also pushed the department's market price index ahead of year-earlier levels for the first time in 13 months. The index was 2.3 percent higher than in September 1981.

Higher prices were reported for milk, cotton, eggs, oranges and apples. Those increases, however, were partially offset by declines in prices for cattle, corn, soybeans, potatoes and onions, the department's Crop Reporting Board said Thursday.

But the price declines for some of those major commodities were significant with corn at $2.17 a bushel down 5.6 percent, soybeans at $5.28 a bushel down 5.5 percent and cattle at $55.80 a hundred pounds down nearly 4 percent.

Texas firm finds sweet deal

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — Amalgamated Sugar Co. says its directors accepted a $65-a-share takeover bid from National City Lines Inc., a Texas-based company with interests in real estate, retailing and energy.

Amalgamated also announced Thursday a settlement agreement with SKZ Holdings Inc., which on Sept. 2 agreed to acquire Amalgamated for $60 a share.

As part of the settlement, Amalgamated said it would repurchase 374,000 of its shares recently bought by SKZ. John R. Lemke, an Amalgamated spokesman, said he did not know what price Amalgamated would pay SKZ for the stock. He said that in addition to the repurchase of stock, Amalgamated would make a separate payment to SKZ as compensation for breaking their earlier agreement to merge. Lemke said he did not know the size of the separate payment to SKZ.

The National City Lines tender offer for Amalgamated stock is expected to begin next week, Amalgamated said. It gave no specific date.

National City Lines will pay $65 a share for 1,725,000 shares of Amalgamated stock, or about $112 million.

Dollar declines, gold higher

LONDON (AP) — The dollar declined on foreign markets early today in advance of an anticipated dip in the U.S. money supply. Gold prices were slightly higher.

Dealers said a decline in the money supply could precede a new drop in interest rates and make the American currency less attractive to foreign investors.

Dollar trading also was off in advance of today's vote by the West German Parliament that is expected to topple the Social Democratic minority government of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, traders said. The replacement of Schmidt's government with a more conservative coalition could give the Deutsche mark a momentary boost, they said.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 269 yen, compared with 269.40 Thursday. The American currency closed at 265.70 yen last Friday.

Later in Europe, the British pound edged up to $1.6955 from $1.6942 late Thursday.

2.1662 Swiss francs, down from 2.1690

7.1345 French francs, unchanged

2.7615 Dutch guilders, down from 2.7635

1.2363 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2353

London's five major bullion dealers fixed their recommended mid-morning gold price at $397.75 an ounce, up $1.50 from Thursday's late rate of $396.25.

Numbers add up to gloom

By The Associated Press

The Reagan administration announced gloomy current and future economic indicators and a new one-week record for state unemployment claims. But it insisted better economic times are around the corner.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige told reporters Thursday that "at this point we are in the interim period between a recession and a recovery. The signs of recovery will be more clear as the fourth quarter unfolds."

The secretary made the remarks after a Commerce Department report that its gauge of future economic activity, called the Index of Leading Indicators, fell 0.9 percent in August after rising for four consecutive months.

A companion index, designed to measure current economic conditions, continued to fall in August and hit its low point of the recession, the department said.

The Labor Department, meanwhile, said initial claims for state jobless benefits soared to 703,000 in the week ended Sept. 18, the highest recorded since the department began its current form of tabulation in 1967.

Even before the reports were issued, President Reagan had said the leading indicators decline would be no more than a "glitch" or "blip" in the overall pattern of recovery.

He also predicted September's leading indicators index would be up, reversing the August decline.

But Jerry Jasinowski, senior vice president and chief economist for the National Association of Manufacturers, said, "The renewed decline in leading indicators, particularly the decline in building permits, suggests that we will not see meaningful economic recovery until 1983. Although we can expect some pickup in retail sales later this year, this will be largely offset by further declines in construction and heavy industry activity."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill also was skeptical of the administration's optimistic outlook, saying, "President Reagan is Hoover with a smile."

The stock market reacted to the Commerce Department reports by declining in moderate trading. The Dow Jones industrial average fell 10.02 points to 896.25, its first time since Sept. 1 to close below the 900 level.

In other economic developments Thursday:

—The National Association of Realtors said resales of existing houses fell 6.3 percent in August to an annual rate of 1.79 million. That was the lowest rate of the current recession, which began in July 1981.

—Major banking legislation to shore up financially troubled savings and loan associations sailed through the Senate. The measure, which, among other things would allow S&Ls to operate more like commercial banks, goes to the House for final action today.

—Chrysler Corp. said it would cut prices on many of its 1983 model cars by an average $70, but consumers will see an average decrease of only about $3 after accounting for increases in the prices of optional equipment.

—The five major domestic carmakers reported 235,775 U.S. autoworkers on indefinite layoff this week, up more than 3,000 from last week. The trade journal Automotive News,said carmakers will build 11.3 percent fewer cars in the United States this week compared with last week.

—The Commerce Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development reported that sales of new single-family houses rose a slight 2 percent in August but remained 1.4 percent below the level for the same month one year earlier.

—F.W. Woolworth Co. said it is selling its majority interest in its struggling British arm, F.W. Woolworth PLC, which operates more than 1,000 stores in Britain, Ireland and the Caribbean Islands. Last week, the company said it is closing the 336 stores in its U.S. discount chain, Woolco.

—Dome Petroleum Ltd., the big Canadian energy company that expanded rapidly and then found itself hemmed in by debts in the oil slump, accepted a $1 billion bailout plan that would gives operating control of Dome to the Canadian government and four Canadian banks.

Market survey shows grocery prices are improving

The end of summer brought a drop in grocery prices, with bargains at the meat counter helping to cut supermarket bills last month, an Associated Press marketbasket survey shows.

For the second month in a row, retailers offered special promotions on beef items during September, and the AP survey showed lower prices in many areas for hot dogs and hamburgers.

The AP survey was based on a list of 14 commonly purchased food and nonfood items, selected at random and priced at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973. Prices have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

The latest survey showed that the marketbasket bill increased last month at the checklist store in six cities, rising an average of 1.6 percent. The bill decreased at the checklist store in seven cities, down an average of 2.4 percent. Overall, the marketbasket bills decreased by an average of six-tenths of a percent last month.

During August, in contrast, the marketbasket bill increased in seven cities and decreased in six cities, with the changes averaging out to a drop of 0.01 percent on an overall basis.

The September decrease was the fourth this year. The marketbasket bill decreased in February and April as well as in August.

Comparing prices today with those at the start of the year, the AP found that the marketbasket bill rose at the checklist store in 11 cities, up an average of 5.3 percent, and dropped at the checklist store in two cities, down an average of 2.6 percent. Overall, the marketbasket bill rose an average of 4.1 percent during the first three-quarters of 1982.

The big savings for consumers in recent weeks have come on beef products like the chopped chuck and all-beef frankfurters included in the AP survey.

Prices for all red meat — beef and pork — rose during much of the first part of the year, reflecting generally lower supplies. Weak consumer demand, due in part to the higher prices and in part to the recession which has left people with less money to spend, have caused beef prices to decline, however.

The cattle industry also has launched promotional drives to counter the effect of concern over cholesterol which has led some people to avoid beef in favor of leaner meats.

The AP found the price of chopped chuck decreased last month at the checklist store in seven cities; the price of all-beef frankfurters was down at the checklist store in six cities.

Supermarket News, a trade publication, said that some of the promotions reflect lower prices at the wholesale level, but added that a few retailers have actually cut prices even more in an effort to lure customers to the meat counter.

U.S. auto production declines

DETROIT (AP) — Car production will be down 11.3 percent this week from last week, while the number of U.S. autoworkers on indefinite and temporary layoffs will climb, according to industry reports.

The five major domestic carmakers Thursday reported 235,775 U.S. autoworkers on indefinite layoff this week, up from 232,500 last week. The boost was blamed on a General Motors Corp. plant closing at Framingham, Mass., and scattered layoffs at Ford Motor Co.

Temporary layoffs rose to 53,225 from last week's 42,400 as more plants were idled temporarily because of sluggish sales.

Automotive News, an industry trade journal, reported the companies will build an estimated 91,943 cars, down from 103,638 last week. It also is a 14.5 percent decrease from the 107,538 cars built in the week last year.

So far in 1982, an estimated 3,916,223 cars have been assembled in the United States, down 22.3 percent from 1981's level of 5,041,674.

GM reported 145,000 U.S. autoworkers on indefinite layoff, up from 142,000 last week as the Framingham plant was to be closed down today with no date for reopening.

Temporary layoffs rose to 29,200 from last week's 11,700. GM reported plants at Van Nuys, Calif., and Norwood, Ohio, are down for model changeover. Plants at Doraville, Ga., Flint, Mich., Ypsilanti, Mich., Wilmington, Del., Janesville, Wis., and St. Louis are down for model changeover.

Ford reported 45,925 autoworkers on indefinite rolls, up from 45,550 last week. Temporary layoffs totaled 20,925, down from 30,100 last week. Ford said plants at Kansas City, Mo., Edison, N.J., Wayne, Mich., Norfolk, Va., and St. Paul, Minn., were down for inventory adjustments. The Lorain, Ohio, plant is closed for model changeover.

Chrysler Corp.'s indefinite layoffs remained at 41,300 but temporary layoffs rose to 2,100 from 600 last week. Chrysler attributed the increase to scattered temporary layoffs.

American Motors Corp. reported indefinite layoffs unchanged at 2,150 but temporary layoffs will rise to 1,000 from zero last week. An assembly line at the company's AMC Jeep plant in Toledo, Ohio, will close next week, idling the 1,000 workers, because of inventory adjustment.

Volkswagen of America Inc. reported indefinite layoffs dropped to 1,400 from 1,500 last week. Temporary layoffs remain at zero.

Sooner solves Texans troubles

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Sooner Federal Savings & Loan, with assets of more than $1.2 billion, announced it has proposed the purchase of two financially troubled institutions in Texas.

Sooner Federal's proposal, announced Thursday, came after the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. said it was seeking partners for the two Texas institutions.

The Tulsa firm offered to buy the Corsicana Federal Savings & Loan, with assets approaching $70 million, and a second institution which was not identified because it has not officially agreed to an acquisition, federal officials said.

A press release by Sooner Federal said the proposals were authorized by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

"We enlisted the help (of the FSLIC) on the thing," said L.B. Dawson, president of the bank in Corsicana, a town about 50 miles southeast of Dallas. He did not elaborate on the bank's request.

Sooner Federal, which had a net worth last fiscal year of $62.8 million, or 5.2 percent of total assets, recently opened two new bank branches in Oklahoma to bring to 27 the number of state branches it operates.

French firm asks court for relief from pipeline ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — A French company is asking a federal judge to lift the Reagan administration's economic sanctions, which are designed to halt construction of a Soviet natural gas pipeline.

Attorney William Walker said in U.S. District Court Thursday that his client, Creusot-Loire, had nothing to do with the shipment of compressors to the Soviet Union by Dresser-France, a subsidiary of a U.S. firm, Dresser-Industries.

Sanctions were imposed against both Dresser-France and Creusot-Loire.

U.S. District Judge John Garrett Penn said that he expected to make a ruling today.

The dispute between the administration and the French firm centered on the company's connection with the Dresser-France shipment.

Justice Department lawyer Robert Damus said Creusot-Loire had superviosry control over the Dresser shipment last month and had authority to stop it. Walker responded, "Where is the evidence to support that statement? It doesn't exist."

The sanctions deny the firm the right to export U.S. products or products made from U.S. technology. President Reagan instituted the sanction program to protest martial law in Poland.

So far, sanctions have been instituted against four companies, one in Britain, an Italian firm and the two French firms.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans who have seen their natural gas bills double since 1978 face another sharp round of price increases this winter, the Energy Department predicts.

Natural gas prices for residential customers should rise by 19 percent over the next six months, compared to last winter, government forecasters say. That would boost the average homeowners' winter bill by $75.

But the government is predicting a break for homes which heat with fuel oil, saying those prices likely will stabilize this winter.

In its latest "Short-Term Energy Outlook," the Energy Department says supplies of both natural gas and fuel oil should be plentiful because of the drop-off in energy use brought on by the worldwide recession.

But the department said natural gas customers, who for years enjoyed prices held down by government controls, will continue to be pinched as the controls are lifted.

Since 1978, when Congress passed the law gradually phasing out price caps on new supplies of natural gas, the residential cost has gone from $2.62 per thousand cubic feet to $5.50.

DOE forecasters say that price will average $5.87 for the next six months, meaning the average homeowner will pay $461 this winter compared to $386 last winter. The forecasters see natural gas prices hitting $6.59 per thousand cubic feet by the end of 1983.

DOE cut its projected increase slightly from a report made earlier in the year. Forecasters said slumping demand has prodded natural gas pipeline companies to begin trying to get out of contracts that force them to take high-cost gas.

But Edwin Rothschild of the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition said few pipeline companies have sought to roll back the high prices because the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has been so lenient in allowing them to simply pass through their higher costs to customers.

"At a time of huge gas surpluses and at a time of deep recession when gas consumption has dropped, a 19 percent jump in prices is ludicrous," Rothschild said.

Rothschild's consumer group and others have challenged the commission's approval of many of the pipeline rates, but there has been no ruling on any of the cases yet.

Along those lines, the executive committee of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition said Thursday it is preparing legislation to make natural gas pipeline operators renegotiate contracts holding them to such high-price gas purchases.

Eight congressmen discussed the problem of the long-term, high-price contracts in a meeting Wednesday with C.M. Butler, chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Residential heating oil prices, which have gone from 49-cents-a-gallon in 1978 to $1.20 last year should average the same amount over the next six months, the report said.

While fuel oil prices have stabilized, natural gas still is a better bargain this winter, priced 33 percent lower than its energy equivalent in heating oil.

But the Reagan administration is expected to push in Congress next year for accelerated decontrol in the belief that controls should be removed from all gas supplies, not just gas discovered since 1977.

Bombs found at Gulf plant, one explodes; FBI investigates

BAYTOWN (AP) — One of five bombs found at a Gulf Oil Chemicals Co. petrochemical plant exploded while being defused, and FBI agents were investigating whether more bombs had been hidden as part of an extortion plot, officials said.

No injuries were reported and four bombs were deactivated with a water cannon without any explosion, said Sgt. W.D. Marsh of the Texas Department of Public Safety. DPS supervisor Wayne Pullen said the four may have been duds.

Gulf and FBI officials refused to comment on news reports that a letter that sparked the search for explosives had demanded at least $15 million and warned that 10 bombs would be exploded unless the money was turned over within 120 hours, or by about noon Sunday.

Marsh said after the five bombs were neutralized Thursday that the FBI still was sweeping Gulf's Cedar Bayou plant to see if any other bombs were there. The FBI and Gulf refused to confirm that any bombs were found and would not comment when asked if they were still looking for explosives.

"The actions which were taken that required the relocation of personnel and observers have been completed and any devices which were located have been neutralized," said FBI Special Agent Ron Kettler.

"No further comment can be made concerning this matter at this time other than the investigation will continue," he said.

Gulf refused comment on whether it had placed an advertisement bearing the name of a Gulf security official, Bob Quintana. The ad in the classifieds of the Houston Post read: "George Liedstrom, have received your packages, but couldn't keep the secret. Still need the instructions to open them and willing to pay the bill. Mail to slow and insecure. Please contact Bob Quintana at the main office."

The company received the bomb threat Tuesday afternoon and finished its shutdown Thursday. Chemicals were drained from the plant to reduce the danger. The facility, 30 miles east of Houston, makes highly volatile petrochemicals used in the manufacture of plastics, antifreeze, cosmetics, detergents and synthetic fabrics.

Gulf said the only workers remaining at the plant were those needed for maintenance, security and safety. The shutdown will continue "until Gulf feels it is safe to resume normal operation," Gulf spokesman Berry Smyth said late Thursday night.

The plant normally has about 650 Gulf employees and 450 contract construction workers.

Pullen said bomb experts from the Houston police department and Fort Hood deactivated the devices at the plant.

During the deactivation of the bombs, service roads to nearby Interstate 10 were blocked off, reporters were moved away from the front of the plant and the Federal Aviation Administration restricted air traffic within five miles of the plant. The roadblocks were removed Thursday night.

The Baytown Sun quoted a source as saying the bomb threat was in a seven-page letter that gave the location of one of 10 bombs the letter said were planted. The letter said four others could be found easily, the source said.

Construction worth $1.7 million OK'd

The city of Midland issued 50 building permits, including 20 for new single family residences, in the week Sept. 20 through 24, for construction valued at $1,716,450. This brings September's total to $16.4 million, and the total for 1982 to date to $230.45 million.

New commercial projects that were permitted for construction or alterations include: P.M.I. Construction, Lewisville, Texas, to install a People's Restaurant in the former Sears Store, now known as Centre Point, at Midkiff and Cuthbert, $51,000; E.C. Brannan, 3301 W. Wall, to add office and work area to a Midas Muffler franchise, $70,000; Fernanado Olgin, 703-05 S. Atlanta, new cabinet shop, $25,000; William Byers, alterations to an office at 2300 N. Big Spring, $20,000; C.A. Casbeer, alterations in four spaces at Mesa Verde Shopping Center, corner of Midkiff and Neely, for Joey's Restaurant, B.C. Yogurt, Ferguson's Sports, and a U.S. Post Office Substation, for a total of $29,000; and Area Builders, 3300 North A, office alteration, $5,600.

Fifteeen permits were issued for residential alterations and 20 were for new construction of homes ranging from $30,500 to $155,000. The remaining permits were for mobile home move ins, commercial signs or water wells.

Battered peso halts flow of goods across border

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Goods from clothing to machinery are piling up in El Paso warehouses because of Mexico's economic crisis, which has brought the flow of merchandise across the border to a grinding halt.

"We're sitting on a powder keg," said Pete Araujo of ABACO Customhouse Brokers. "I'm sure every broker in town has some sort of receivables we're going to have trouble collecting. They just can't raise the dollars."

Since the Aug. 5 devaluation of the battered peso, the Mexican government has issued a variety of regulations aimed at keeping American dollars in the country. Mexico needs the currency to pay the interest on its $80 billion foreign debt — the largest among developing countries.

But the freeze on dollars has disrupted business along the border and has left Mexican merchants groping for a way to pay their bills in the United States.

"I can't accept Mexican currency," said Rudy Miles Jr., head of an El Paso brokerage firm. "Before, if I had a shipment coming in for a Mexican buyer, I used to give them credit. Now, I say bring me cash or a check in dollars."

After the Mexican government allowed the peso to float on international money markets, the currency plummeted from about 49 to the dollar to as low as 150 to the dollar along the border. Earlier this month, the government set an artificial rate of 70 to the dollar for most exchanges.

THE PROBLEM is that the newly nationalized banks won't distribute dollars to the businessmen at that rate or any other rate.

Meanwhile, the exchange rate for the peso continues to fluctuate north of the border. El Paso banks have been exchanging pesos at an average of 90 to the dollar.

"The Mexicans either can't get the dollars to pay their storage over here and get their goods released or they don't have enough pesos to make up the difference in exchange," Araujo said.

"If a Mexican businessman pays his warehouse in El Paso, say, $5,000 in storage and if we take that $5,000 cashier's check, then we've got a problem," he said.

"The bank will take it on collection and they'll sell that 350,000 pesos at the best prices in the market. But if they can only get 80 or 90 to the dollar, then we're losing money."

The result is a standoff that leaves the warehousemen and customs brokers holding goods for which there may be no destination.

Most of the waiting goods were ordered before the devaluation with the stipulation that the buyers would pay within 30 to 60 days. But those deadlines are rapidly approaching and many buyers are having the warehouses return the goods because they don't have the dollars to pay.

AN ADDITIONAL problem arose when the government canceled all import permits and initiated a stricter application system that requires Mexico City's approval. The resulting delays could mean more goods are shipped back to the suppliers.

"A lot of merchandise in El Paso already has been returned because they (the buyers) were afraid they couldn't get the dollars to pay for them," said Joe Quezada, manager of Martin Brokerage. "The suppliers are glad to take their merchandise back rather than taking a chance on not getting paid."

For others, however, the delays already have meant too much time to return the goods. One of Araujo's customers has $24,000 worth of equipment used to preserve railroad ties and fence posts sitting in a warehouse.

"We've had it over six months," Araujo said. "We can't send it back."

Marie Tarvin-Garland, owner of Sun City Warehouses Inc., said the backup at her warehouse won't last much longer. She said businesses that placed orders before the devaluation have claimed them and "they've stopped ordering."

The distribution end of Ms. Tarvin-Garland's business has been hurt the worst. Usually, businesses can consolidate loads of goods and cut shipping costs, with the warehouse distributing goods on arrival.

"Now, rather than consolidate their loads, they're having to buy and ship immediately, which has really cut down on distribution," said Wayne Porter, Ms. Tarvin-Garland's warehouse manager. "We usually average about 65 to 70 trailers a month. Now, it's dropped to about five a week."

FOR OTHER brokers, the problem is how long to hold goods when the buyers cannot pay.

"We'll probably hold onto it for four to six weeks and then we'll tell them (the suppliers) if they don't want it back, I'll have to auction it off or sell it," Miles said. "It's not the fault of the Mexican businessmen that they can't pay, but we have no choice."

Araujo said the dilemma could strain relations between the brokers and the border businessmen, who have been operating on a handshake for years.

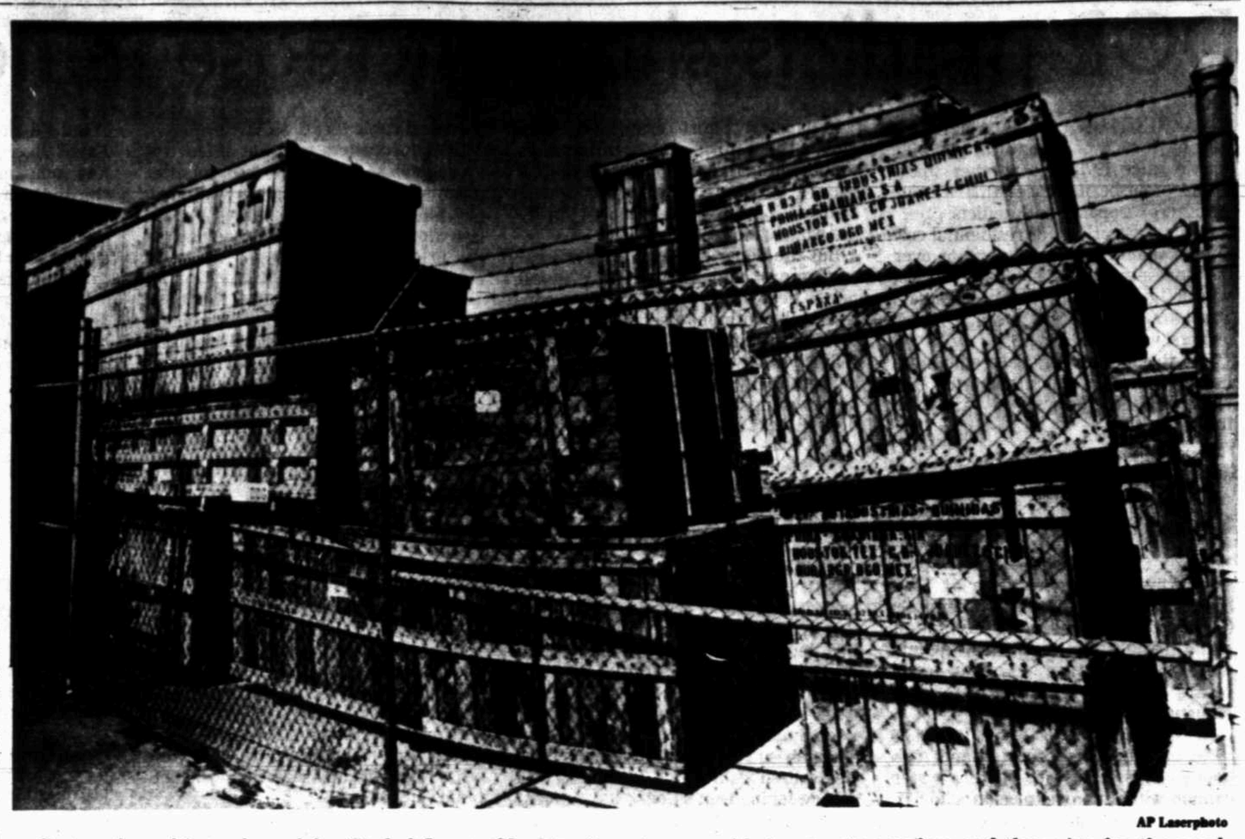

"One guy owes us $12,000 and he can't get dollars right now," he said. "So we're left with what to do — release it to him as a friend or hold on to it until he gets the dollars. It's hard to tell the guy that he can't take his machinery out of here without those extra pesos."

All of the brokers say a solution must come soon from the Mexican government or business will remain at a standstill.

"Every time there's been a devaluation before, everything came to a complete halt for six to eight weeks and then it would get back to normal," Miles said. "When there's no exchange rate, things can't get back to normal."

Quezada, who said his business has dropped 50 to 60 percent, is hoping the new Mexican policies will change when Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado takes over as president Dec. 1.

"There's still more than two months left in this lame duck administration," he said. "In the meantime, there's no cash flow. It's scary, to say the least."

Crates of machinery bound for Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, sit in the yard of ABACO Customhouse Brokers. The Mexican buyer for the goods, like other Mexican businessmen, has been unable to pay storage fees and the price for the products because of Mexico's freeze on dollars.

New technique gave cancer victim new nose

HOUSTON (AP) — A Texas woman forced to wear an artificial nose for the past two years after she suffered facial cancer received a permanently attached facial prosthesis last month using a new implantation technique.

"This nose feels like the one I was born with," said Dorothy Verdell Melton, a cancer patient who has extensive facial surgery. "This is fantastic."

Mrs. Melton's new nose is made of silicone and has the look and color of normal tissue. It is attached to Mrs. Melton's face by small gold rings which are anchored inside the nasal cavity.

Dr. Ariydasa Udagama, an associate professor of dental oncology at the Univerity of Texas M. D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute here, developed the technique of attaching prothesis permanently using small gold rings.

He said that Mrs. Melton was the first patient to benefit from the technique, but he expects to use it to attach artificial ears and artificial breasts for cancer patients who have lost those features in surgery.

A similar technique, he said, could be used to enable patients to snap false teeth into place.

Take heart Midland High, the cavalry is coming

Injured Bulldogs return to lineup

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

When the Midland High Bulldogs take the field at Memorial Stadium tonight against Big Spring's Steers, they will bring out a football team that is stronger than the one they used against Odessa Permian last week. That added power can be attributed to the return of five players from limbo — the injury list.

Of those players, one, fullback Raymond Chambers, still has a question mark by his name because of a pinched nerve caused by a partially slipped disc. He has been getting a lot of running in this week and according to Coach Pat Culpepper he's "mentally ready to play." Physically, however, he is still waiting for a green light from his doctor.

Back for the first time since MHS opened its season against Lubbock Monterey is halfback Ricky Madrid. The 6-foot-0, 171-pound Bulldog halfback suffered an ankle injury against the Plainsmen and has finally recooperated enough to return to his starting position.

Byron Campbell, who has been fighting an arm injury since spring football, will step into the split end postion and Gary Russell, an injury victim against Permian, recovered rapidly and is "100 percent," said Culpepper.

And Greg Bartus, making his 1982 debut with the Purple and Gold, has finally shaken off a broken foot he suffered during fall practice. Though he isn't expected to start, Culpepper says he'll see a lot of action.

Culpepper compared the return of his players to "a wagon train surrounded by indians and the cavalry is on the way." They are a welcome sight and badly needed because the Bulldogs are in need of a victory now if they hope to turn around the 1982 season.

NOT ONLY do the Bulldogs need a win to help their position in the District 4-5A standings, they also need one to help keep team morale high, usually one of the first casualties of a losing season.

The Bulldogs have a good chance of picking up that victory tonight because their opponent, Big Spring, has in recent years been the weakest link in the district. The Steers are coming into the game with a 2-2 overall record and are, like MHS, 0-1 in 4-5A play. But that doesn't mean Culpepper sees them as a pushover.

"Balance," was the key word Culpepper used when describing the Steers. "They have a good throwing quarterback who can run well and their play on defense is solid. Their quarterback, (Adam) Rodriquez, is the best we've seen so far and they have a linebacker named (George) Bancroft who is also the best we've seen."

Along with balance, the Steers seem to have a lot of enthusiasm this season. "One of our coaches told me they really like their coach over there, Quinn Eudy, and they really play for him."

And that seems to go along with what Coach Eudy has to say about his team.

"We're a young team that only had seven lettermen back at the start of the year," said Eudy, "and not all of them were starters last year. We've had excellent leadership out of our seniors. Our kids are pushing themselves real hard. It's a pleasure to work with kids like that. You demand a lot from them and they demand a lot from themselves.

"The kids have done a real good job emotionally. They've prepared themselves well for each game and are playing very hard. That's what we've asked of them and they've done an extremely good job of it."

One problem Big Spring has had this year is turnovers and that is a concern of Eudy, though not as much as before the Abilene High game last week.

"Our defense has been ahead but we're slowly catching up offensively. Our kicking game has been real good to us. Offensively, we're not laying the ball on the ground as much and we're not being intercepted like we have been. We're catching the ball better.

"Midland High is the typical Midland High team I've seen since I've been here the last three years (with this his first year as head coach). They're very physical, very aggressive, very intensive. They come at you all the time. I don't guess I've ever seen a Pat Culpepper team that won't come and get you. I feel like their defense is probably their major strong point. They're very sound offensively. Their aggresivness, to me, is a major factor for them being good."

Pruitt's single gives Giants 7-6 victory

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

The San Francisco Giants were down to their last out and maybe their last chance to win the National League West pennant. Manager Frank Robinson looked down his bench and found an unlikely hero in Ron Pruitt.

Thanks to Pruitt's clutch pinch-hit, a two-run bloop single in the bottom of the ninth inning Thursday night, the Giants culminated a dramatic comeback with a 7-6 victory over the Houston Astros. Coupled with Los Angeles' 10-3 pasting of the first-place Braves, the triumph moved the Giants — and the Dodgers — within a game of the top with three games remaining.

For the Giants, those three contests will be at home against the Dodgers, beginning tonight. Atlanta, meanwhile, is in San Diego for three games.

Pruitt hit a 3-1 pitch from reliever Dave Smith for his first hit of the season, scoring Darrell Evans and Jeff Leonard. Evans had walked and Leonard had singled before reliever Dave Smith walked pinch-hitter Jim Wohlford.

"I was a little more comfortable than I thought I'd be," said Pruitt, who spent most of the season in the minor leagues. "He walked the guy before me, so I was going to wait until he threw me strikes. I wouldn't have swung at the last pitch unless it was a fastball. He gave me one, and I didn't have a good swing, but I got good results."

Good enough to keep the Giants in the thick of the pennant race. Houston had built a 5-0 lead only to see the Giants rally with three runs in the seventh inning and two in the eighth to tie the game. But Harry Spilman hit his second homer of the night in the top of the ninth to make it 6-5 Houston.

Then the Giants, who have won 20 of their last 26 games, rallied once more, setting up a wild weekend.

"I don't want to think about the Dodgers," said Manager Frank Robinson. "I want to savor this."

Dodgers 10, Braves 3

The Braves took a 2-0 lead in the first on Dale Murphy's run-scoring double and a single by Chris Chambliss. But Rick Monday's RBI single in the second made it 2-1 and the Dodgers took the lead for good as Bill Russell scored on a throwing error by Claudell Washington in the third and Dusty Baker hit a sacrifice fly for a 3-2 Dodger lead. Ken Landreaux eventually scored on wild pitch.

Then came the big seventh. Baker's two-run single helped the Dodgers ice the game. The other runs in the four-run inning came on Landreaux's double and Jose Morales' pinch-hit single.

Joe Beckwith was superb in relief, striking out five and surrendering only two hits in 3⅔ innings.

"(Manager) Tommy (Lasorda) said go out there and play ball and be relaxed, do what you can do," said Beckwith. "Everybody was joking around before the game, seemed real loose."

But the race couldn't be much tighter, as Chris Chambliss, a veteran of several such pennant dashes with the Yankees, understands.

"It's been a crazy race all along," he said. "It's definitely going to go down to the wire."

Pirates 7, Cardinals 2

Manny Sarmiento gave up five hits in six innings and Rod Scurry provided three innings of hitless relief to hand St. Louis its third straight loss since clinching in the East. Dale Berra knocked in two runs with a first-inning single for Pittsburgh.

Reds 6, Padres 4

Dan Driessen slammed a two-run homer to lift Cincinnati to victory and avoid losing its 100th game this season. Ron Oester and Duane Walker also homered for the Reds.

Cubs 3, Mets 1

Ryne Sandberg had three hits and scored twice to pace the Cubs.

"I can't say enough about Ryne Sandberg," said Manager Lee Elia. "With Bump Wills playing out his option, I have to protect myself. Now, I'm not afraid to go with Sandberg at second base. I know he can do the job."

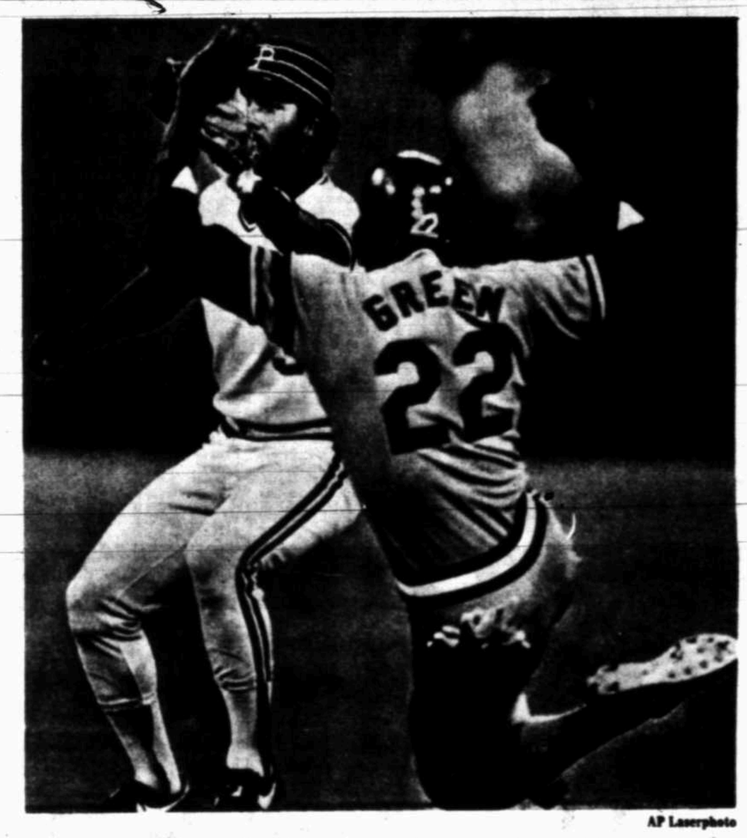

Phillies 5, Expos 4

Despite having pitchers Jay Baller and Ed Farmer ejected, the Phillies beat Montreal on Garry Maddox' RBI single in the bottom of the ninth. Manny Trillo opened the ninth with a double off reliever Jeff Reardon, 7-4, and rookie Julio Franco was intentionally walked. Greg Gross walked to load the bases before Maddox delivered his game-winning hit.

Baller, starting his first major league game, was ejected for hitting Montreal starter Scott Sanderson with a pitch leading off the fifth. Sanderson had hit Baller in the third and received a warning from home plate umpire Eric Gregg, which carries an automatic $50 fine.

Farmer was ejected in the eighth for arguing a call on a checked swing with third-base umpire Ed Vargo.

Phils rookie Al Sanchez had a homer and a two-run double.

NFL should listen to Madden about strike-solving ideas

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The trouble with all those legal brains trying to settle the National Football League players' strike is that they're listening to the wrong voices.

Why don't they listen to big John Madden?

Sure, he's just a thick-necked former coach turned network broadcaster who is afraid to ride airplanes, but he makes more sense than anybody.

"There'll be no movement in this strike until they start talking free agency," Big John keeps repeating over and over. "Baseball and basketball have liberal forms of free agency. Football must do the same.

"I think it'll all be just a lot of rhetoric until the two sides get down to serious discussion of the compensation issue."

THE MASSIVE, red-haired Madden retired in January 1979, after coaching the Oakland Raiders for 10 years, compiling a record of 103 victories against 32 defeats and seven ties and leading his 1976 team to the Super Bowl championship.

He is currently the ace commentator of CBS, winning awards for his homey, whimsical and penetrating analyses. His broadcasting art consists of an absence of cliches and hype and reduces the game to the level of the average fan.

It's this sort of earthy, unadorned wisdom that could be used in the strike negotiations, resumed Thursday in Washington, D.C., and stalled over vague issues such as sharing the wealth, a fixed salary scale and a gigantic multi-million-dollar pot from which the athletes would be compensated for their endeavors.

The unusual scheme, conceived by Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players Association, would largely put the players into categories based on position and seniority and would eliminate an athlete's right to bargain with his employer on the basis of his value and gate appeal.

TECHNICALLY, THE idea, opposed by the club owners, would deny pro football, the richest of all pro sports, the luxury of high-salaried talent such as baseball's Dave Winfield ($24 million in a long-term contract), ice hockey's Wayne Gretzky ($15 million-$20 million in a contract running to 1999) and basketball's Moses Malone ($13 million over six years).

"The scale idea proposed by the players is impractical and, I think, unworkable," said Madden before catching a train for a 12-hour trip to Springfield, Ohio, to work the Wittenberg-Baldwin-Wallace college game Sunday with colleague Pat Summerall.

"I think it's just a bargaining ploy. The guys are going to have to get down to the labor-management basics and, in this case, free agency."

Madden quit flying a few years ago. He said confinement gave him claustrophobia and he kept breaking out in a sweat.

The main flaw in the players' demands is not that they are asking too much money — their average of $90,000 a year is well below that of baseball and basketball — but the revolutionary manner of fixing the salary scale.

First demanding 55 percent of gross club profits and later revising that to half the clubs' five-year TV package ($2.1 billion), they have proposed a base wage scale ranging from $75,000 a year for rookies to $700,000 for a 17-year man (of which there is none), with built-in bonuses for special performances and playoff victories.

There would be no personal contract bargaining.

"The NFL has a plan permitting free agency but it is so restrictive that it is useless," said Madden. "Even the new proposal falls short of the mark," said Madden. There's been only one transfer since the plan went into effect.

An NFL team losing a $200,000 player to another club, is forced to give up a first-and second-round draft choice. This plan has been moderated to cover a 10-year veteran making $320,000, whose transfer could demand two first-round draft choices as compensation.

"Those figures are still too low," insists Madden. "It should be $1 million for top players of Lynn Swann's and Walter Payton's stature and drop to $500,000 for the next category, $250,000 for the next and so forth. Two first-round draft choices are too severe. Few teams get — or can afford to lose — two first-round picks in a single year.

Former Bears linebacker dies in auto accident

ROCHELLE, Ill. (AP) — Former Chicago Bears teammates and coaches were stunned by the news that pro football hall-of-famer Bill George, who was credited with being the first great middle linebacker, was dead in a three-vehicle crash.

"I guess I'm feeling as bad as I ever have in my life," said former Bears defensive end Doug Atkins.

"He was the best friend I ever had," Atkins said. "I don't know whether I can take it. Bill never bothered anyone. He was the best person and best middle linebacker I've ever known."

Also killed in the accident Thursday, which took place about 12 miles south of Rockford, was Jamie Lynn Shirlaw, 21, of Bettendorf, Iowa, said Sgt. Fred Spilman at the state police post at Sterling.

A semi-truck driven by Joseph Pasieka, 56, of Tonica was southbound on U.S. 51 when it struck George's eastbound van at the intersection with Illinois 72, Spilman said.

Surprise: Orioles, Royals still alive

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

It's the final weekend of the regular season and the surprise of the two American League races is that the Baltimore Orioles and Kansas City Royals are still in them.

All but counted out earlier this week, both the Orioles and Royals stayed mathematically alive in their respective races with pressure victories Thursday night.

"It was pretty exciting out there tonight," said Gary Roenicke after his RBI single capped a four-run rally in the ninth inning that led the Orioles to a dramatic 6-5 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

The Orioles' victory, coupled with Milwaukee's 9-4 defeat by Boston, left them three games behind the front-running Brewers in the East as the two teams headed into their climactic four-game season-ending series in Baltimore.

"We kept coming back and back," said Roenicke, referring to Baltimore's 4-0 deficit after five innings. "That's kind of the way it was in 1979 and early this year. We've had a good year this year. Not a great year, but if we sweep Milwaukee, we've got a chance to be the American League champs."

The Royals, meanwhile, further tightened the AL West with an 11-4 rout of the Oakland A's. The victory shaved first-place California's lead to two games with three games left to play. The Angels, idle Thursday, finish with a three-game series at home against Texas while the Royals complete the regular season at home against Oakland.

In the other AL action, New York defeated Cleveland 7-5 and Toronto stopped Minnesota 6-4.

The Orioles were losing 5-2 when they rallied to beat the Tigers. Eddie Murray hit a sacrifice fly before Cal Ripken Jr., Jim Dwyer and Roenicke stroked RBI singles.

"You have no idea how proud I am of these guys," said Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver, who was thrown out of the game for arguing a call in the second inning. "(Detroit starter Jack) Morris was out there tonight with good stuff and these guys came back. This shows a lot of character for this ballclub.

"This game meant a whole lot. We still have to win four at home, but now we have the incentive. Things went right. Things finally went our way."

Red Sox 9, Brewers 4

Jim Rice and Carl Yastrzemski combined for seven hits, and rookie Wade Boggs drove in three runs as Boston beat Milwaukee.

Dennis Eckersley, 13-13, blanked the Brewers for seven innings before the Milwaukee bombers shelled him in the eighth, when Paul Molitor and Cecil Cooper hit two-run homers.

Bob Stanley replaced Eckersley with none out in the eighth and went on to set an American League record for most innings pitched in a season for a reliever with 168 1-3. The new standard breaks Bill Campbell's mark of 167 2-3 for Minnesota in 1976.

Noting that Baltimore would have to swee the season's final series to edge Milwaukee for the division championship, Brewer slugger Gorman Thomas said:

"I don't know what the odds on that are, but I know which way I'd bet. Obviously we'd like to go in there 15 up. Things didn't work out that way, but we're three-up with four to play, and we have to feel good about our position."

Royals 11, A's 4

Willie Aikens hit a grand slam homer and a three-run shot to power Kansas City past Oakland.

With the score tied 2-2 in the fifth, Mike Norris, 7-11, walked George Brett and Hal McRae with two out before Aikens drilled his 15th homer.

U.L. Washington singled and stole second with one out in the Kansas City seventh, and Brett walked. Davey Lopes misplayed a grounder to load the bases for Aikens, who smashed reliever Bob Owchinko's first pitch over the center field fence at Royals Stadium.

Aikens' seven RBI tied him with Jerry Grote for the club record.

"I told Frank White I was going to look for a fastball from Owchinko. But he thew me a curve," Aikens said. "He got it up some and I saw the pitch good."

After each home run, particularly the second, the crowd yelled for Aikens to take a bow from the dugout. But the first baseman, who's been frequently booed this season, refused.

"I didn't come out of the dugout because you should never show the other team up," he said.

Yankees 7, Indians 5

Oscar Gamble's two-out single drove in Dave Collins with the lead run as New York scored four runs in the top of the ninth inning to defeat Cleveland.

An error by loser Dan Spillner, 10-12, helped to fuel the rally. Spillner fielded a sacrifice bunt by Dave Collins, but his throw sailed over third baseman Toby Harrah's head, allowing a run to score.

Another came home when Ken Griffey hit into a double play, tying the score at 5-5. After Dave Winfield was walked intentionally, Gamble singled to give the Yankees a 6-5 lead, and Roy Smalley capped the uprising with an RBI single.

Blue Jays 6, Twins 4

Jesse Barfield snapped a 4-4 tie with a home run in the fifth inning to lead Toronto over Minnesota. Barfield blasted his 17th homer off Jack O'Connor, 8-9.

Luis Leal, 12-15, got the victory

Herzog feels McGee in contention for Rookie of Year

PITTSBURGH (AP) — St. Louis Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog has a strong Rookie of the Year candidate of his own in outfielder Willie McGee, but says Pittsburgh second baseman Johnny Ray should win the National League award.

Ray is just four games shy of becoming only the second rookie in National League history to play in all 162 of his team's games. The only other rookie to accomplish the feat was Richie Allen of the Philadelphia Phillies in 1964.

Ray, obtained by the Pirates from the Houston Astros in a trade for second baseman Phil Garner last season, has a .282 batting average with 178 hits and has seven homers and 62 RBI.

"I think Ray should be it," Herzog said. "He's hitting over .280 and has played every game. But Steve Sax of the Los Angeles Dodgers will probably win it."

Sax, also a rookie second baseman, has helped keep the Dodgers in the National League West race the entire season.

McGee, who has mainly played center field for the Cardinals, is batting .299 with 124 hits in 121 games. He has four homers and 54 runs batted in.

Girls Basketball

COLORADO CITY—Three openings remain for the Lone Wolf Girls Basketball Classic here Dec. 16-17-18. "We would like three varsity teams, but would consider a 5A JV team," Coach George Martin (915 728 3424) said. Teams already entered are Reagan County, Clyde, Sonora and Colorado City.

New catcher is biggest boon to Angel pitchers

BY SHEPARD BARBASH
Associated Press Writer

The biggest boon to the surprising California Angel pitching staff this season has been a new catcher.

"They'd never pitched to as good a quarterback before," California Manager Gene Mauch said of Bob Boone, the 35-year-old veteran batterymate acquired by the Angels this winter from the Philadelphia Phillies. "As soon as I heard he was available I said 'Get him.' We were in dire need of improvement behind the plate."

Few predicted California's current drive to the American League West title, but the team was thought to be in dire need of improvement in front of the plate — on the mound.

THIS YEAR the Angels have shown both, and no one is calling it a coincidence, except maybe Boone.

"It's nothing magical Bob Boone has done — they've gone out and pitched very well," Boone insisted. "It all comes down to how they throw the ball."

But the catcher will admit that there is an art to coaxing: "It's so individualistic, it's hard to describe specifically — a catcher is like a jockey with a horse."

Game-calling ability aside, Boone's agility behind the plate has also inspired better pitching, according to bullpen coach Bob Clear. "The pitchers can throw the breaking ball, and they're not afraid to keep it down," he said. "They know he won't let the ball get behind him."

No workhorse has benefitted more from Boone's rein than Geoff Zahn, who relies less on velocity than on placement in setting up hitters with an assortment of curves and off-speed pitches.

Last year he finished at 10-11 with a 4.42 ERA. This season he has surpassed his single-season high for wins with a 17-8 mark, his first winning record in three years. His ERA is 3.88.

"Boone seems to know what pitches to call. He knows the hitters," Zahn said. "I shake off very few of his signs. I may throw ten pitches one way, then want to change — and he'll call it. It's almost like we read each other's minds.

BOONE AND pitchers together have worked remarkably well at another, increasingly important task — preventing stolen bases.

The Angels lead the majors in "eraser average" (percentage of runners caught trying to steal) by a tremendous margin. They are the only team to throw out runners at a rate better than 50 percent (57.4). Last season, they were seventh with a 40-percent rate.

Boone himself has retired 59 percent of the runners testing his arm. He's thrown out Rickey Henderson six times in twelve tries, a rate no other catcher even approaches.

"He jumps out in front of the plate to get the ball," Henderson said. "He's a smart catcher, I give him a lot of credit — a lot of times he pitched out. Boone's relaxed: if he doesn't get me he doesn't get me. I'd feel the same way."

Boone would only say that "our pitchers hold runners very well," adding that second baseman Bobby Grich and shortstop Tim Foli "are a great combination in the middle at making the tag."

BUT EVEN at age 35 (among major league catchers only teammate Joe Ferguson is older), Boone's arm keeps Angel pitchers conscientious. "They know he can throw 'em out if they give him half a chance," Clear said.

The ten-year Philly veteran's arm ironically failed to keep runners honest last season, when the Phils' eraser average was under 25 percent. (This season, Philadelphia is dead last with a 29-percent rate, implying that the problem originates on the mound, not behind the plate).

Boone says now he was growing stale in Philadelphia. His lethargy carried over into the batter's box; normally a .270 hitter, he hit .229 and .211 his last two years with the Phils.

"I needed a change. The trade gave me a new lease on life," the catcher said. "It's just like being a rookie again. I've caught more this season than I've ever caught."

He has caught in all but 18 games this season and, batting at the bottom of the order, has boosted his average to .254 with 7 homers, 57 RBI and 22 sacrifices — second in the league behind Foli.

"I had to prove to myself I could still play," Boone said. "I plan on catching for a lot more years."

Orange Bowl drops Clemson from wanted list

But Clemson is 1-1-1 this year, having lost to Georgia 13-7 and tied Boston College 17-17.

"It was a tough decision," said Orange Bowl selection committee chairman Stan Marks. "It took a lot of discussion to take them off as a 1-1-1 team. But maybe if they are dropped this week it will make them play harder.

Georgia and Boston College are among the week's 22 candidates. Duke and North Carolina of the Atlantic Coast Conference are also on the list.

A lot of questions about personnel still need answers

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The blurry future of the long-suffering Texas Rangers is expected to be within sharper focus soon.

Majority owner Eddie Chiles says he has narrowed the search for a general manager to replace Eddie Robinson and a manager to succeed Don Zimmer, who were dismissed during the dismal 1982 Ranger season.

Chiles, saying he doesn't want to be held to a timetable, may shock the baseball world by hiring a minor league manager.

"You don't win on a name or past reputation," Chiles says. "You win with what you can produce. I'm looking for a man who can produce."

Such big names as Bill Virdon, the fired Houston Astro manager, have been bandied about.

"I have a shopping list," he says.

As far as the general manager's job is concerned, Chiles has already gone on record as saying it won't be Danny O'Brien of Seattle.

O'Brien was a former general manager of the Rangers until he ran into troubled waters with former Ranger owner Brad Corbett.

AGAIN, CHILES is coy about who will get the all-important GM job, but there already have been published reports it will go to farm director Joe Klein, who has developed so many outstanding young players. The majority of these players were frittered away by the front office on dubious deals.

"It (the announcement) will all be within a reasonable time," Chiles says.

No matter what happens Paul Richards, the acting general manager, will be back as an executive assistant, helping to evaluate talent.

There is little reason to believe Darrell Johnson, the interim manager, will be back as manager although Chiles says, "We'll give him some consideration."

MEANWHILE, THERE is expected to be somewhat of a general housecleaning of the team which trailed California by 27 games in the American League West this week.

Rivers, troubled by an ankle injury all year, was recently activated but has yet to play.

"They didn't even ask me how I felt," Rivers said. "I don't know why they need me all of a sudden. What am I going to do — win them the pennant? I can't even run."

If the Rangers can't trade Rivers and have to release him outright, he can collect some $750,000 over the final two years of his guaranteed contract.

"I'm in a quandary about Rivers," Chiles admits.

The Rangers also have to decide whether to trade Danny Darwin or honor his request to move from the bullpen, where he was only a so-so success, into the starting rotation.

GOING INTO spring training next year the Rangers' hopes revolve around knuckleballing Charlie Hough, who won 16 games; disappointing but still-promising Frank Tanana who had a poor 4.21 earned run average but a good hits-per-innings pitched ratio; Darwin, if he's not traded; John Butcher, who was 1-4 with a 4.90 ERA after he was called up; and rookies Mike Mason, Tom Henke, Dave Schmidt, and Mike Smithson.

Smithson has particularly caught the eye of the Ranger heirarchy, who want him to spend the off-season playing winter ball.

The 6-foot-8 Smithson four-hit Oakland in his last outing, and farm director Joe Klein urged him to go to Puerto Rico beginning Oct. 27.

"He needs the work on his control with the breaking pitch," said Klein.

Smithson said he will go even though he's tired.

"In the last three years combined, I've never thrown as many innings as I did this year," he said. "I need to work on an off-speed pitch, just a straight changeup to keep hitters off balance."

Johnson said of Smithson, "I don't see any way he won't be in the starting rotation next spring ... that is a definite ... he's a very bright prospect."

Henke has dazzled as a reliever since he was brought up from the minor leagues.

"A good prospect," says Klein.

The Rangers will run out on options next spring on Johnson and will have to make a decision to either keep him as a backup to Jim Sundberg or trade him.

THE RANGER home season mercifully drew to a close Wednesday night with the Rangers averaging an amazing 14,811 fans for the 81 dates.

For example, a crowd of 29,036 was announced Sunday night. Press box observers guessed the actual attendance was 13,000. WBAP radio, the Rangers' flagship station, bought the terrace section, some 20,000 seats, as a favor.

On Tuesday night, Stafford Loudon, the Rangers' printer, bought 12,000 tickets for charity groups and non-profit organizations.

The crowd was announced as 19,000.

Fans losing sleep while Braves on road

ATLANTA (AP) — As the Atlanta Braves push for their first National League West title since 1969, bleary-eyed baseball fans back home are staying up until the wee hours to watch broadcasts of the final games from the West Coast.

The Braves, winners of three straight on the seven-game road trip that will end the regular season on Sunday, surged to a two-game lead over the Los Angeles Dodgers and the San Francisco Giants going into Thursday night's game at Los Angeles.

Because of the three-hour time difference, Atlanta fans have been forced to forego sleep in order to cheer their team via television.

Monday night, in a 7-0 victory over the Giants, the last out was made at 1:10 a.m. EDT. Then, in Tuesday night's 8-3 triumph over San Francisco, it wasn't until 1:50 a.m. that the victory was secured.

To make matters worse, Wednesday night's 4-3 victory over the Dodgers in 12 innings took 4:19 to accomplish, making it 2:57 a.m. in Atlanta when the game ended.

The West Coast pennant drive also has taken its toll on workers at the Braves' ticket office, who have been busy filling mail orders for playoff tickets while manning ticket windows and staying up to watch the action.

"It's hectic, but everybody's up, excited and tired. We're working on adrenalin," said Andre DeLorenzo, director of ticket sales for the Braves.

"We've been here 14 to 16 hours and then get home and watch the game on the tube. But who cares? It's too much fun to worry about sleeping," he said Thursday.

The National League playoffs will begin next Wednesday with two games in St. Louis, home of the Eastern Division-winning Cardinals. The series shifts to the home of the Western Division champion Oct. 8, 9 and 10 in the best-of-five series.

About 40,000 of the 52,785 tickets available for the possible playoff games at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium have been sold through the mail. The rest went on sale Wednesday at the stadium.

About 10,000 tickets still remained Thursday afternoon, said DeLorenzo.

In addition, an unofficial World Series Committee has been started in Atlanta, according to committee chairman Wayne Minshew, director of public relations for the Braves.

He said the committee has come up with several proposals for celebrations if the Braves make it to the World Series.

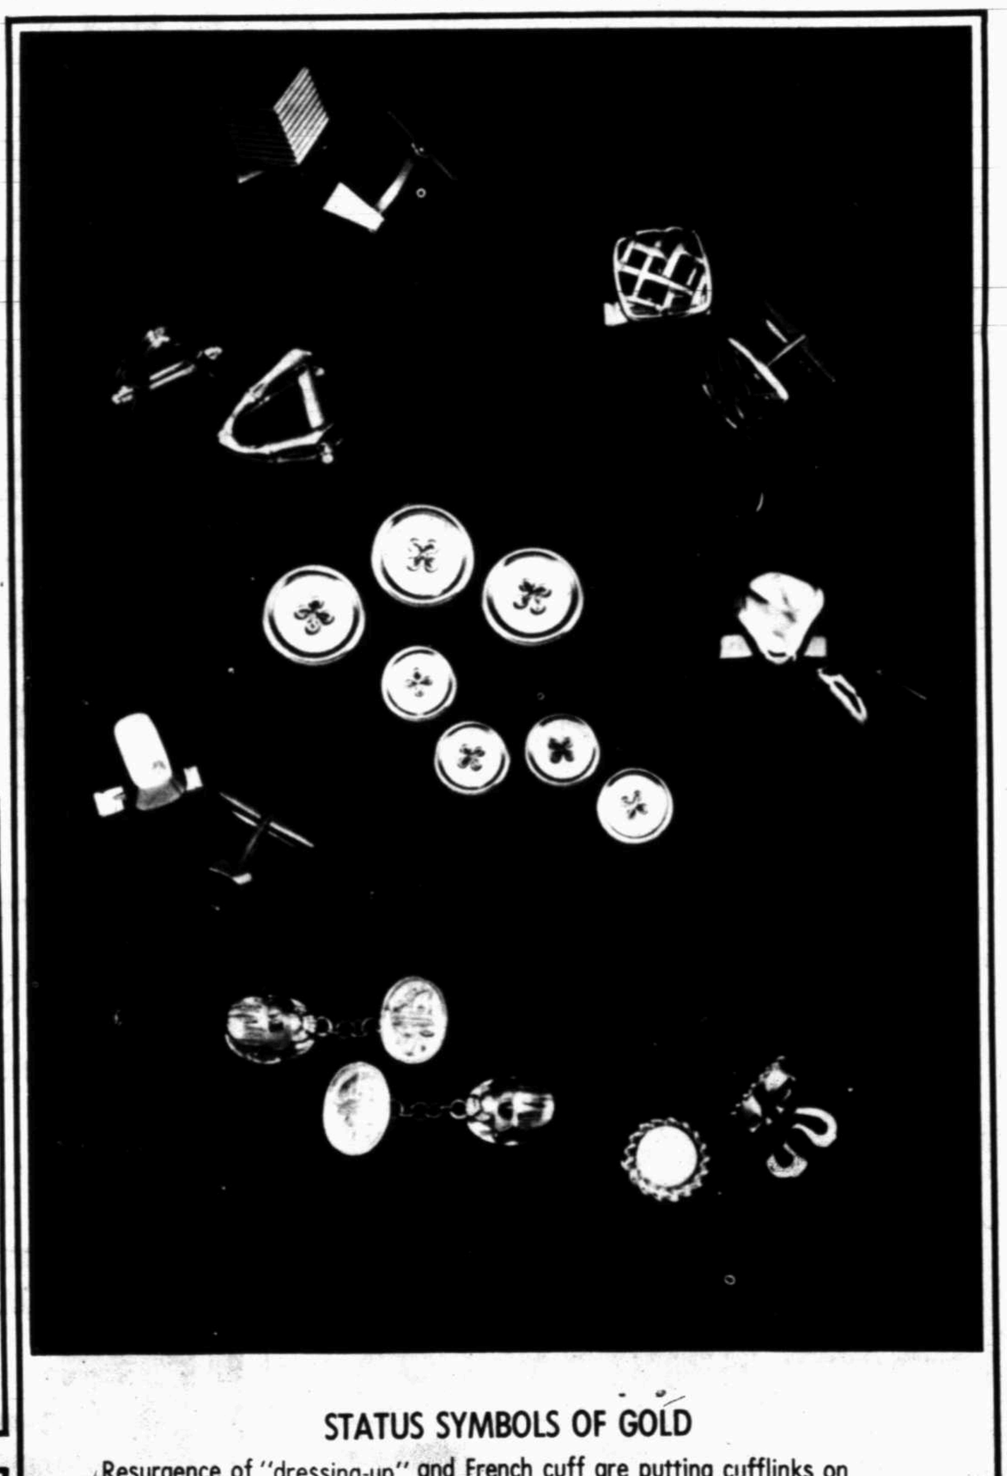

Kings lose Dennard for month

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City Kings forward Ken Dennard, who underwent surgery earlier this week for removal of an abdominal tumor, will be out at least a month and won't join his teammates for the first day of training camp.

Dr. Howard J. Ellfeldt, the National Basketball Association team's physician, called the operation at Research Medical Center successful, said Kings spokeswoman Julie Fie. She said Ellfeldt did not say whether the tumor was cancerous.

Ellfeldt said the second-year player who averaged five points a game last season could resume practice in four to six weeks, after undergoing further medical tests.

The Kings' two first-round draft choices, center LaSalle Thompson and guard Brook Steppe of Georgia Tech, also were expected to be absent when training camp at Missouri-Western College in St. Joseph opened today.

STATUS SYMBOLS OF GOLD

Resurgence of "dressing-up" and French cuff are putting cufflinks on fashion-conscious men. Since its invention in the 13th century by Louis IX of France, the cufflink has been considered an index of social rank, a symbol of status. Myriad modern-day cufflinks are offered with rigid or chain links such as the dimensional and bamboo designs (top), open-worked basketweave design, rectangular and sculptural shapes (center), all in 14K gold. Below, the 22K scarab cufflinks are authentic replicas of an ancient Egyptian symbol. "Buttoncovers" of 14K gold (bottom right) snap right over a shirt cuff button--the gilded alternative for dressing-up barrel cuff shirts. In the center, a set of 14K gold blazer buttons, reminiscent of the 1820's when stylish men of distinction wore dozens of gold buttons on their most elegant garments.

Jay Haas blasts from a sand trap onto the ninth green in the opening round of the $250,000 Texas Open at San Antonio Thursday. Haas carded a 7-under-par 63 to take a two-stroke lead.

Haas holds 2-stroke lead in Texas Open

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

"It's No. 1 on my agenda right now. I've got the top spot now and I don't want to give it up," Stadler said after posting a 5-under-par 65 Thursday in the first round of the $250,000 Texas Open.

And Stadler, winner of the Masters and three other tournaments this seaskn, was eight strokes ahead of PGA champion Ray Floyd, who struggled to a 73 that left him in danger of missing the cut for the final two rounds.

Stadler leads the money-winning race with $441,301. Floyd is second with $386,809 and has only an outside chance of catching up. Only three more official events remain on the PGA Tour schedule after this tournament.

Ben Crenshaw, who lost a playoff for this title a year ago, shot a 66 in his first competitive round in more than a month and was tied with Tom Purtzer, Larry Ziegler, Johnny Miller, Mike Nicolette and George Cadle.

Defending title-holder Bill Rogers was two over par at 72 and Lee Trevino played the 6,525-yard Oak Hills Country Club course in 69.

Haas, who won the Hall of Fame Classic in his last start, birdied four of his first five holes, played the front in 30, didn't make a bogey and didn't have a 5 on his card.

"I took last week off and thought some of the magic might have rubbed off," Haas said.

But it Didn't.

It was very much in evidence on the sixth hole. Haas' second shot skipped off the surface of a lake and ran safely up the bank. He chipped close and saved par.

"I'm in a great mood now," he said. "Maybe it's momentum. I'm just free-wheeling it."

Ruidoso-Sunland names new general manager

RUIDOSO DOWNS (AP) — The vice president and director of a California race track has been named general manager for Ruidoso-Sunland Inc., says the corporation's president.

Jess Burner said Don F. "Curly" Smith is to become general manger of the $25 million corporation that runs Ruidoso Downs and Sunland Park horse race tracks.

Smith currently is vice president and director of racing at Los Alamitos, Calif., race track.

"We have hired the finest quarter horse executive in America in Curly Smith," Burner said this week.

"Everything is set for him to take over when Sunland opens its 84-day meet on October 15. He will take over as general manager from Wood Erwin, whom we hired on an interim basis earlier this summer," Burner said.

Smith said in a telephone interview Thursday he "accepted an offer I couldn't turn down."

He called Ruidoso-Sunland a "very successful organization" and said he was offered an attractive business opportunity.

Smith, 54, began work at Los Alamitos in 1952 as a jockey agent and was named vice president in 1977.

Lakers sign Worthy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The talent-rich Los Angeles Lakers got richer Thursday as they signed James Worthy, the first No.1 pick in the National Basketball Association draft to be taken by the league's defending champions.

The 6-foot-9 forward, who led North Carolina to the National Collegiate Athletic Association title last spring, will join the NBA champs Friday for their first preseason workouts at Loyola-Marymount University in Los Angeles.

Worthy's contract terms were not announced. He was believed to be seeking in excess of $500,000 a year — which would put him somewhere in the middle of the Laker salary ladder.

Massive contracts on the team which won NBA titles two of the last three seasons include a 25-year, $1 million-a-year arrangement of guard-forward Earvin "Magic" Johnson, and the deals in which center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and center-forward Mitch Kupchak receive about $800,000 a year each.

"My main concern was to start on time," Worthy said of his coming to terms before training camp began. "I feel fortunate to be coming to this organization. I think a rookie can only benefit playing for the best team, because he can learn a lot quicker playing for the champions."

Laker Coach Pat Riley said, "It is a tremendous advantage for a championship team to be able to improve themselves immeasurably with the kind of talent that James Worthy is. He has made it possible for us to stay ahead of some other teams trying to match us in that department."

Lee sophs, JV take two from Bobcats

Shutout victories keep Stonewall Brigades unbeaten

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

Both teams posted shutouts as the sophomores (3-0) won 20-0 and the JV (5-0) whitewashed Central 45-0.

The Stonewall Brigade scored on its first five possessions while running up a 33-0 halftime lead. The only time in the first half they didn't score was the last possession which ended when the clock ran out.

NICKLESON SCORED the second six-pointer of the game following a blocked punt. In the third quarter Nickleson plunged over from the eight, following another Central turnover.

Matta matched Nickleson and Jones first quarter touchdowns as he scored on a quarterback keeper after San Angelo had fumble near midfield.

In the third quarter Matta faked a pitchout and picked his way through the secondary for a 20-yard scoring play.

With a host of substitutes in the game, Matt Mabe capped a 68-yard drive on an 11-yard scamper with 38 seconds left in the third quarter. Mabe was allowed to finish his scoring as he became the third player to attempt a PAT. His kick failed leaving the score 45-0.

WITH THAT kind of a lead players were nipping at coach Mike Quimby's heels begging to play, anywhere. He accommodated them all as 45 of the Stonewall Brigade saw action, which created a unusual situation in the fourth quarter.

With Quimby trying to make sure all of his players got into the game, there were more players running from the Lee huddles to the Lee sideline than there were running up and down the field.

About the only coaching decision that had to be made came with eight seconds left in the game. San Angelo had stopped Lee's triple option offense only once in the game. That came late in the final stanza when a drive ended as Lee failed to convert a fourth-and-five play on Central's 20-yard line.

The Central coaches were aware that Lee had not been forced into a punting situation during the lopsided contest. With 20 seconds left to play, Lee had a fourth down near midfield and was going to let the clock run out to end the game.

MHS volleyball beats AHS, Lee falls to Abilene Cooper

The Midland High Bulldogs upped their District 4-5A varsity volleyball record to 5-1 Thursday night with a 15-13, 15-6 victory over Abilene High while Midland Lee fell to 1-5 on the season with a 15-6, 15-6 loss to Abilene Cooper.

In junior varsity action, MHS was a 15-7, 15-5 winner to improve its record to 3-3 record while Lee suffered its first loss of the season, 15-10, 15-7 to fall to 5-1.

"I think we started out a little bit slow," said MHS coach Linda Jolly. "We had wome real good serving. Offensively and defensivley, we did a real good job. Abilene didn't have a bad team, they hustled and moved real well. What really helped us was good serving and some good block and good returns."

"The varsity didn't play that badly, they played pretty well," said Lee coach Janice Baulch. "Cooper has a good team. The JV didn't play anywhere near where they are capable of playing.

Tuesday, Midland High and Midland will square off in Lee Gym in junior varsity and varsity action. The JV game is scheduled to start at 6 p.m. with the varsity following.

Bullpups shutout Big Spring for first win of season, 22-0

BIG SPRING — The Midland High Bullpups chalked up their first game in the win column with a 22-0 win over the Big Spring junior varsity here Thursday night.

Fullback Gary Browning gave the Bullpups the lead in the first quarter when he scored on a four-yard plunge on a trap play. Jeff Alsup made it 8-0 as he kept on an option play on the point after attempt.

James Welbon connected with Dennis Cano on a 55-yard scoring play in the second quarter to give the Bullpups a 14-0 lead. Alsup ran the same option play used on the first PAT with the same results.

Midland's final score came in the third stanza when Darren Thorpe gathered in a six-yard pass from Welborn on a fourth and goal situation. Big Spring finally stopped the option play as the two-point conversion failed.

The Bullpups, 1-4, will host Abilene Cooper Thursday at 7 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

Bjorn Borg returned to international tennis action in Ottawa Thursday with a best of five matchup with Jimmy Connors in the Molson Challenge. Borg defeated the Wimbledon and U.S. Open champ, but needed all five sets to do it.

Borg rallies to beat Connors in five-set exhibition match

OTTAWA (AP) — Bjorn Borg appeared ready to take on the world again after he battled back to defeat Jimmy Connors 3-2 in a five-set exhibition tennis slugfest.

Although both said later it is always a fight to the finish when they're on the court against each other — and proved it time and again — they also took a little time out for tomfoolery, especially the outgoing and effervescent Connors.

Borg dropped the opening set 1-6 Thursday night to the chagrin of a packed house of 10,000, including Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, before rallying to win 6-3, 6-3, 4-6, 6-2. Borg took home $50,000 for the victory and Connors $25,000 for the loss.

Although the crowd jammed into the Civic Centre hockey arena was delighted to have Connors — first ranked in the world after winning both Wimbledon and the U.S. Open in the same year for a second time — among them, the current of sympathy was with Borg.

Benjamin upsets Vermaak to gain quarterfinals

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Camille Benjamin upset South African Yvonne Vermaak 7-6, 3-6, 6-0 Thursday and advanced to a quarterfinal match against top-seeded Tracy Austin in the $125,000 U.S. Women's Indoor Tennis Championship at the Spectrum.

In other matches, second-seeded Wendy Turnbull of Australia defeated veteran Rosie Casals 6-3, 6-3; third-seeded Pam Shriver downed Rumania's Lucia Romanov, 6-3, 6-0; and fourth-seeded Barbara Potter gained the semifinal round with a 6-2, 6-3 victory over Susan Mascarin.

In other action, eighth-seeded Wendy White advanced to the quarterfinals when Claudia Monteiro of Brazil gave up her second-round match due to a leg injury.

Monteiro interrupted play and went to the sideline where she conferred with a trainer, then resumed play but quit after losing two games to White, 6-4, 2-0.

Benjamin, 16, turned pro only last May and had never before passed the second round of a professional tournament.

"I've never met her (Austin) before," said Benjamin. "I'll have to try and outsmart her and play percentage shots."

"A lot of her shots fell short and it wasn't hard to play them back for drop shots," declared Benjamin.

Benjamin said she turned her ankle twice during the second set but was able to work out of it.

In the first round of doubles play, Paula Smith and Alycia Moulton scored a 6-2, 6-1 victory over Shelia McInerney and Ann Henricksson to advance to the quarterfinals.

Strachan gets three years for cocaine conviction

By AUSTIN WILSON
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Federal investigators tried diligently, but without success, to link New Orleans Saints owner John Mecom Jr. to cocaine scandals surrounding his National Football League team, said former running back Mike Strachan.

"I don't think Mr. Mecom is that type of person," Strachan said. "I think they were just trying to make a big publicity thing and maybe thought that would sound good, so they were going to try to get it."

Strachan was sentenced Wednesday to serve three years in federal prison after pleading guilty to one count of cocaine dealing and one count of conspiracy.

On Thursday, he testified before a federal grand jury continuing its investigation of the Saints.

Outside of the courtroom, Strachan said his accountant had been questioned during an earlier grand jury appearance about a check allegedly signed by Mecom.

Several checks made out to Strachan and signed by three different Saints players were displayed by federal prosecutors when Strachan entered his guilty plea. Prosecutors said the checks were payments for cocaine.

Strachan said he couldn't recall ever having received a check signed by Mecom.

"I think they were just taking shots in the dark," he said.

U.S. Attorney John Volz would not comment on whether Mecom had been questioned, but he did say, "We have absolutely no evidence that the ownership of the New Orleans Saints was involved in any way."

He denied any attempt to get Mecom.

"There was no effort made to drag anyone into the case," he said.

Mecom was unavailable, but Fred Williams, vice president for administration, said there was never any check in the first place. He said the whole thing arose from allegations made by Chuck Muncie, formerly with the Saints, but now with the San Diego Chargers.

"The reason that question was asked was that there had been some irresponsible statements made by Mr. Muncie at one time," Williams said. "He's the type who would say anything, if he was feeling a little heat."

Muncie was named as one of the cocaine customers in the indictment to which Strachan pled guilty. Prosecutors said he would have been called as a witness, had the case gone to trial.

Strachan said again he didn't do anything that wasn't done by other Saints players known to federal authorities.

In particular, he pointed the finger at 1981 NFL Rookie of the Year George Rogers.

"They tried to name me as a major supplier, and it wasn't me. It was George Rogers," Strachan said in a lengthy interview while waiting to testify before the grand jury.

"He and (David) Waymer. They were the ones giving it to the other players.

"I'm not saying they were making a profit. They were doing the same thing I was doing," Strachan said.

Nebraska travels South to face Auburn

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The Nebraska Cornhuskers, who traveled East last week and lost to Penn State in the final seconds, take the road South Saturday, this time to meet Auburn.

It will be the eighth-ranked Huskers' first regular-season trip to the Deep South since 1978, when they lost a 20-3 decision to that year's eventual national champion, Alabama.

Against No.3 Penn State, which is idle this week, Nebraska finally succumbed to the passing of quarterback Todd Blackledge, who has thrown 15 touchdown passes in four games this season. In contrast, Auburn has broken into the rankings in the 20th spot with a sparkling running attack.

After last week's 24-14 victory over Tennessee, their third straight triumph this year, the Tigers were No.3 in the nation with 335 yards rushing per game.

That will present problems for Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne, but his worries are no greater than those of Auburn Coach Pat Dye because Nebraska is first in the nation in rushing with 417 yards per game and first in total offense with 619.

"They really don't have a weakness," Dye said of Nebraska. "They have a strong offensive line and perhaps the strongest center in college football ever (Dave Rimington). They have two great running backs and great receivers and a quarterback who can get the ball to them. We're scratching our heads trying to figure what to do to slow them up a little bit."

Countering Nebraska's 1-2 rushing tandem of Roger Craig and Mike Rozier are Auburn running backs Bo Jackson and Lionel James, who are averaging nearly 200 yards per game between them. All of the Tigers' runners are averaging 5.7 yards per carry.

"I think we have progressed to this point a lot quicker than people thought we would," Jordan said. "For that matter, we may even have surprised ourselves a little bit. We are really proud of what we've been able to do so far. Our backs are congratulating us more after each game and that's nice. Usually the only people who watch us or care about us are our mammas and the coaches."

"Auburn is going to be awfully tough, which we knew all along," Osborne said. "We've just got to put the Penn State loss behind us and concentrate on Auburn."

In one other game pairing two teams in the Top 20, No. 14 West Virginia will be at No. 2 Pittsburgh.

The Panthers will be facing another high-powered passing attack. Last week, Pitt defused Tony Eason of Illinois 20-3 and this Saturday Jeff Hostetler will match arms with the Panthers' Dan Marino, who has led his team to a 3-0 record despite a rash of interceptions.

Strike settlement doesn't seem near

Second weekend of NFL action officially cancelled

By IRA ROSENFELD
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bargainers for National Football League players and club owners are immersed in intensive negotiations aimed at ending an 11-day-old strike, but the principals are not optimistic about a quick settlement.

The two sides met for more than 10 hours Thursday in the longest single bargaining session since negotiations began in February. But there was no indication the parties were narrowing their differences.

"I can't be overly optimistic at this point," Jack Donlan, the owners' chief negotiator as head of the NFL Management Council, said prior to resumption of talks today.

A bitter and weary Gene Upshaw, president of the NFL Players Association, predicted a long strike.

"The players out there should be concerned. Nothing has changed. Absolutley nothing of substance has happened. It's a sad state of affairs," Upshaw said.

On Thursday the NFL announced the 14 games scheduled to be played Sunday and Monday had been canceled, the second weekend of the season to be lost by the players' strike.

Also Thursday, in Buffalo, New York State Supreme Court Judge Rudolph Johnson ordered Turner Broadcasting System Inc. to show cause why it should not be barred from getting NFL players to play in games while they are under contract to their teams.

The NFLPA has arranged a 20-game series of All-Star games featuring striking players. Turner Broadcasting has agreed to guarantee the players' union $500,000 for exclusive broadcast rights to each game.

On another front Thursday, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle admitted he met with union officials this week to discuss alternative scheduling when, and if, the strike is settled.

Rozelle, who testified before a House subcommittee reviewing legislation to give the league a limited antitrust exemption, also admitted the league received about $75 million in September from its network television contracts, despite not playing its scheduled games.

Rozelle also revealed that the networks had paid an additional $20 million to the league last spring.

"I think the players' view of an insensitive management is a management that doesn't crumble to every issue put on the table," countered management spokesman Jim Miller.

The talks, which began Thursday afternoon, were the second face-to-face bargaining session since the players struck Sept.21.

Negotiators, still unable to agree on distribution of the owners' five-year, $1.6-billion financial offering, moved to non-economic issues.

"We spent the last six hours just trying to negotiate medical rights for players," said Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFLPA. "They would like to think these guys are robots and never get hurt."

Among the players' demands are the right to a second medical opinion before submitting to surgery and a demand that all trainers be certified by the National Athletic Trainers Association.

Donlan accused the players of trying to dictate hiring policy and said thir demands were further proof of their desire to "emasculate the clubs and the rights they have had."

"We talk money and the union talks control, and that's been the issue since the beginning," Donlan insisted.

"They say we are not bargaining in good faith because we are not accepting their proposals. We think our proposals are just as valid as theirs," Miller added.

"There's nothing going on in there. It's frustrating," he said.

Bunting said the meeting had served as a "real eye opener for some of the guys who were at the talks for the first time."

Will basketball players bring about strike three?

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — First, it was baseball. Strike one. Then, football. Strike two. Will basketball be strike three?

The collective bargaining agreement for National Basketball Association players expired last June, and no extensive bargaining has taken place, Chris Ford, the Boston Celtics' player representative, said Thursday.

He doesn't think a strike is imminent but said the players and owners are "far apart" in their proposals. "Everything that we've achieved in 20 years of collective bargaining the owners want to take away, that is, pensions, severance, major medical benefits," Ford said.

"They no longer want guaranteed contracts. They want to reduce the roster (from 12) to 10 men. These are all big issues that we have fought for and gained in 20 years of collective bargaining."

Unlike baseball, whose season was interrupted by a strike last year, Ford thinks the upcoming NBA season will not be disrupted by a walkout "unless the owners put (forth) some drastic demands."

The 10-year veteran guard said players met about two weeks ago in New York with eight owners to discuss the situation.

"It's not the first time that we've started a season or started a training camp without having a contract signed," Ford said. "We've gone as far as a year and even beyond" while playing without an agreement.

Players haven't made their demands yet because owners want their proposals considered first, said Ford. The owners had sought an annual salary limit of $2.8 million per team, but a special master ruled against them, he added.

The players "want to increase all our benefits: severance, pension, and medical," Ford said. "They're three big areas that involve a lot of money, and we really are at two extremes. We want to increase them, and they literally want to do away with them."

He said the players were as unified as ever, adding, "we think we have enough players that are willing to go out (and strike) if need be."

National Football League players had no choice but to strike last week after their previous collective bargaining agreement, which left them without real free agency, expired, Ford said.

"The (NFL) players allowed themselves to be painted into that corner through their previous collective bargaining agreements, and I think they allowed themselves no escape and they were forced to go out on strike," he added.

"They (owners) are already locked in making all those millions of dollars," and sharing television revenue whether they have good or bad teams, he added. "They don't care that much about winning, if they're businessmen. That's what the bottom line is, money, and they're always in the black."

Judge orders Dallas' Pearson to pay $45,000 loan default

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A judge has ordered Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Drew Pearson to pay Frost National Bank more than $45,000 in a loan default ruling.

District Judge David Peeples on Wednesday ordered Pearson to pay $37,000, plus interest of $7,800 and attorney fees, after Pearson did not respond to a lawsuit filed by the bank.

Pearson could not be reached for comment this morning.

Pearson, his teammate Harvey Martin, and former Houston Oilers quarterback John Reeves were among financial backers in 1981 for renovation of four buildings at St. Paul Square near downtown San Antonio.

The bank alleged the three made only four payments on a loan they obtained for the project.

Martin and Reeves responded to the suit, saying they had not defaulted on the loan. The judge said he entered the judgment against Pearson because he never responded.

Kevin S. Wiley, an attorney affiliated with the St. Paul Square project in 1981, said by telephone from Dallas that the players used the loan to help finance the renovations.

The athletes paid back about half of the loan and then made arrangements for another partner in the venture to pay the remainder, Wiley said.

Two tied for lead in IGC

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Amateur Juli Inkster and four-year pro Beth Daniel each shot five-under-par 68 Thursday to share the first-round lead at the $150,000 Inamori Golf Classic at Almaden Country Club.

Inkster, 22-year-old winner of the last three U.S. Amateur titles, had seven birdies and two bogies over the 6,290-yard, par-73 course.

Daniel, 25, ranked fourth on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour money list with $205,522 in winnings, moved into a tie with an eagle on the par-4 16th hole to go with four birdies and a bogey.

One stroke back at 69 were Vicki Fergon, Amy Alcott, Myra Van Hoose, Kathy Whitworth and Patty Sheehan, who — like Inkster — is a former San Jose State player.

"I was hitting my approach shots to within 10 feet of the hole most of the day," Inkster said. "It certainly makes the game a lot easier." She hit 15 greens in regulation and needed only 26 putts.

Daniel hit her second shot, a six-iron from 150 yards out, into cup on the 16th hole. "The eagle helped a lot," she said. "Otherwise I would be just in the pack with a lot of other players."

Inkster, whose husband Brian is the head pro at nearby Los Altos Country Club, said she doesn't plan to turn professional until January, when she attempts to get her playing card at the LPGA Qualifying School in Florida.

JoAnne Carner, the tour's leading money-winner with $308,759, was on the verge of missing the 36-hole cut after shooting 79 for the opening round.

Hypnosis: smoking cure

Paid Advertisement

According to Marie Moore, hypnotherapist at Clinical Hypnosis, smoking is one of the most common habits the hypnotherapist is asked to treat. Almost every smoker has at one time or another attempted to break this habit. Sometimes this can be accomplished by will power alone, but so often without the help of therapy, a person relapses back into smoking.

The behavior modification therapy used in hypnosis can be more effective than will power alone in eliminating the smoking habit, and in keeping you from smoking in the future.

According to Moore, the hypnosis process used attempts to break the habit through proven hypnotherapeutic procedures which get to the underlying cause of the habit. Then the desire to smoke lessens with hypnosuggestion, that process which combines a message for your subconscious with positive reinforcement, and this leads to the desired result—no smoking.

The subject is then taught self-hypnosis (auto-hypnosis) for continued daily practice during the period of hypnotherapy, and thereafter until the smoker feels the habit is truly broken.

This self-hypnosis can also be used for many other beneficial purposes, such as deep relaxation, relief of nervous tension, insomnia, weight control and a sundry of other undesirable habits.

Clinical Hypnosis strives for 100 percent success in this program. However, as Moore says, "We realize we can only be successful with people who are properly motivated to stop smoking. Unresponsive patients, those who are pushed into the program by their doctor, spouse or friends, are most difficult and will respond only to prolonged therapy, if at all."

Moore says she prefers to accept patients into individual therapy, then if indicated, into group therapy. "At first I prefer having the opportunity to develop therapist-patient rapport, and giving the patient more individually-directed procedures. However, highly motivated subjects may find they can do just as well in group therapy, especially in small groups where patient-to-patient rapport is developed as well as the patient-therapist rapport. In fact, for continued maintenance and reinforcement of abstinance, group therapy is very effective."

One of the benefits of group therapy, according to Moore, is the fact that it is less expensive than individual sessions. However, the decision as to which therapy should be undertaken should take all factors into account. The patient can always transfer from group to individual therapy or vice-versa. Moore says participants can form a group of from four to six people, or if an individual decides to go into group therapy, but does not have a group formed, his or her name is put on a waiting list and as soon as enough have signed up for a group, it is formed.

According to Moore, there are many myths concerning the process of quitting smoking; one of these is that people gain weight when they stop smoking. This is not true, says Moore. People get fat because they eat too much. Those who use weight gain as an excuse to return to cigarettes are fooling no one–not even themselves. If a patient follows the prescribed practice of autohypnosis, they will not gain weight after quitting smoking; in fact, Moore says, you can if you wish, lose weight.

Another common complaint heard from those who have given up cigarettes is that they have had a continued desire for years. Since there is no physiological need for nicotine after six or seven days of abstinence, these prolonged desires for cigarettes are psychosomatic. The successful use of hypnosis helps reduce this psychosomatic desire for tobacco. If a patient experiences this discomfort even after additional therapy, there may be hidden motives for such prolonged desire, such as an excuse to resume smoking.

Of course, there are always well-meaning friends who have quit smoking and can't resist the opportunity for martyrdom. These friends tell you about the many terrible pains and symptoms they suffered and how they are still fighting, after all these years, the desire for a cigarette. Moore says, "Don't let these people frighten you. Reinforce your own position and state the real facts to them. There is no discomfort you can't overcome because your desire to smoke has changed to a desire not to smoke."

If you've made the decision to give up smoking, give Marie Moore a call at 685-3344 and discuss hypnotherapy as the solution to your smoking problem.

Paid Advertisement

Troy Davis, owner of Davis Fast Photo hopes all of his Very Important customers are using the VIP card whenever they bring their film in for developing. If you don't already have a VIP card, ask the folks at Davis Fast Photo about it. For a small fee, this VIP card will save you money on your film, and also time.

Here's how it works. When you bring your film in for processing, ask for a VIP card. It will be imbossed with your name and address on durable plastic while you wait. This card will be used to imprint your name and address on the envelope when you bring your film in for processing, thus saving you time and a wait while it is done by hand. Since your driver's license number and place of employment is on your VIP application, this saves you time when paying by check.

The VIP card costs a one-time fee of $3.00 and with each processing entitles you to purchase additional film at wholesale prices. For example: Film size C110-12 which lists for $2.47 is only $1.56 with the VIP card. C126-24 film which lists for $3.54 is only $2.26, and the popular C135-24 size which lists for $3.54 is only $2.26 with the VIP card. These are just a few examples, you will be given prices when you obtain your card.

The VIP card is a great idea, but even better is the fast, quality service you get at Davis Fast Photo. No more waiting a week or more for your color prints. Davis can have your prints for you in one hour! And for your convenience, Davis offers drive-in service with a window on the east side of the store, and also a "night drop" located at the front of the store for those who want to leave film after hours.

Davis Fast Photo Service, Inc. is located in the Town & Country Shopping Center across from Furr's Cafeteria and is open Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. and on Saturday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Davis invites you to come by or call 699-5041 to discuss your film processing needs.

Comedian 'just doing his duty'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Robin Williams was "just a citizen doing his duty" when he appeared before a grand jury investigating the possibility of homicide in the drug overdose death of comic John Belushi, his attorney says.

Williams, apparently one of the last people to see Belushi alive, spent some 40 minutes behind closed doors with the grand jury Wednesday, but refused to comment to reporters.

Panelists later concluded the two-day hearings, but the foreman has said they could hear further testimony next month.

Deputy District Attorney Michael Montagna also refused to comment on the proceeding, except to say, "It's over for today. There will be further testimony taken at another time."

Montagna also would not say if anyone would be granted immunity in the case. However, he revealed that the grand jury was looking into the possibility of homicide in Belushi's March 5 death.

Possible criminal violations in furnishing the drugs that killed Belushi were discussed Tuesday, he said.

Williams' attorney, Philip Scott Ryan, said the star of "Mork and Mindy" and "The World According to Garp" was not subpoenaed, but appeared voluntarily.

"He's concerned that a professional colleague and acquaintance died and would like that resolved," Ryan said. "He's just a citizen doing his duty."

Meanwhile, Police Chief Daryl Gates, who had been addressing civic leaders in Burbank on Wednesday, told reporters: "John Belushi murdered John Belushi. Place the blame where it belongs. And let's tell our kids what their heroes are doing."

An autopsy had ruled that the 33-year-old Belushi, whose body was found by his physical trainer, William Wallace, in a bungalow behind the Chateau Marmont Hotel, had died of an overdose of cocaine and heroin.

Montagna has said a critical factor in reopening the Belushi investigation was a National Enquirer interview in which a Belushi friend, Cathy Evelyn Smith, was quoted as saying Williams and others had used cocaine belonging to Belushi that night.

She also was quoted by the Enquirer as saying she administered a final dose of cocaine and heroin to Belushi.

Miss Smith, 35, has said through her attorneys that the newspaper misquoted her. The tabloid furnished police with a tape recording of the interview.

Williams has been quoted in articles as saying he had been with Belushi the night before his death. Miss Smith has been quoted in several newspapers as saying Robert DeNiro and Williams were at Belushi's bungalow that night.

Attorney Jay Julien said DeNiro was working out of the country and had not been served with a subpoena, but police spokesman William Booth has said DeNiro has agreed to cooperate with the investigation when he returns to the United States, probably in January.

Also at Wednesday's hearing was Janet Alli, 24, of Los Angeles, whose attorney, Anthony P. Brooklier, denied allegations she supplied drugs to Miss Smith.

Robin Williams voluntarily appeared Wednesday before a Los Angeles grand jury investigating the March 5 death of John Belushi. Investigators are considering the possibility of homicide in the 33-year-old comedian's death, which is said to have been caused by an overdose of heroin and cocaine. Williams and Robert DeNiro, who is working outside of the country and was therefore unable to appear before the grand jury, were allegedly with Belushi the night before he died. A police spokesman said DeNiro, who was not subpoenaed by the grand jury, would be willing to talk to investigators when he returns to the United States, probably sometime in January.

McKenna's Wagon is the second aid for the needy devised by Washington, D.C.'s Dr. Veronica Maz, a former sociology professor who left the academic life to help the city's destitute live their lives a little better. The wagon visits several locations in the city and offers food, drink and other handouts to some of its over 500 homeless.

Wagon answers call of needy

WASHINGTON (AP) — As dusk falls across Farragut Square, thousands of workers pour out of office buildings two blocks from the White House and head for home without a glance at the converted ice cream truck and its curious clientele.

Some 30 to 35 men have lined up, their calloused hands clutching at plastic bags that contain their belongings. They are waiting for sandwiches, yogurt, potato chips and hot chocolate from McKenna's Wagon, a new volunteer effort to feed the city's homeless, destitute men and women.

A lady known as Miss Doris rises from a park bench and follows the men to the wagon for dinner.

Miss Doris sleeps in a parking garage and hasn't eaten all day. She takes one of two sandwiches and tucks it in her tattered shawl for later. "You're just wonderful people," she tells the volunteers in the truck. "I don't know what we'd do without you."

MCKENNA'S WAGON ROLLED onto the streets of the nation's capital on Sept. 3, providing dinner seven days a week. A dozen volunteers take turns picking up food and supplies, preparing sandwiches and taking the truck on its rounds. Each night, the lines have grown longer along the curbside, as more and more needy people hear about the free meal.

"We're up to almost 300 each night," said Dr. Veronica Maz, a former Georgetown University sociology professor who started the wagon program. "There must be many more people out there than we realize who are hungry, who are sleeping in parks and alleys."

Shelters in the city currently house 467 men and 158 women. There are 193 homeless families in the District of Columbia, according to the latest figures from the city's Department of Human Services. Those families include 424 children.

"Lately we've been seeing mothers and children at a few of the stops," said Ms. Maz. "Some of them are shoeless, and we've found out that some of the mothers and children have been sleeping in the parks. Sometimes they don't come again and we don't know what's happened to them."

Beginning at 5:30 p.m., driver Bob Harris weaves the truck on its daily route to Lafayette Park, Washington Circle, Farragut Square, a triangle at 11th and I streets, Northwest and Dupont Circle if supplies last that long.

MOST OF THE food is purchased for 5 cents a pound from the Capital Area Community Food Bank, a non-profit, private organization which collects food donated from area supermarket chains. Food, gasoline, cups and sandwich wrap cost just over $100 a week, some of which comes from donations by Washington residents, churches and community groups.

McKenna's Wagon was named after the late Rev. Horace B. McKenna, a local Jesuit priest who worked among the poor. It is a follow-up project to Martha's Table, which Ms. Maz began six months ago to provide a learning center, companionship and a free meal to children from broken or impoverished homes in the city.

"Many of these are the children of the very, very poor," said Ms. Maz. "Some of them have parents who don't care whether they go to school or not."

Martha's Table, located at 14th and W streets, and McKenna's Wagon depend totally upon volunteers like Ms. Maz, who stopped teaching at Georgetown in 1980.

Ms. Maz says she doesn't miss the academic life, claiming she's "still teaching people. It's just a different group of people. I'm doing something I think is more meaningful to me personally."

CONNIE RIDGE is another volunteer who finds time one day a week to make 200 sandwiches and then rides the truck to distribute them. Ms. Ridge, who helps run the Mount Vernon Center for Homeless Women here, recognizes many of the gaunt faces and specifically watches for "Carlos" at the Washington Circle stop near George Washington University. The 70-year-old black man hasn't appeared at the truck for days, she said. "I know he loves peanut butter and I want to give him an extra sandwich tonight if I see him."

At a recent gathering at Washington Circle, several men talked of unsuccessful job hunting and the cold nights ahead. "Have you found a coat for me by chance?" asked John, an elderly man wearing a cotton shirt and thin sweater. John is part of "the bridge community," the members of which live under Key Bridge, which spans the Potomac River between the District and Virginia, according to Ms. Ridge.

The old man's eyes brightened when a young volunteer handed a coat out the truck window. "Thank you, Doug. Thank you a lot," he said. "You're a lifesaver."

Cindy Triplitt, a senior at Midland High School, has been named as Lioness of the Week by the Midland Downtown Lions Club. Miss Triplitt, daughter of Ted and Dona Triplitt of 401 Solomon Lane, is involved in FFA, journalism, 4-H and the West Texas Quarter Horse Association. She plans to attend Midland College and Texas A&M to student agriculture and journalism/communication.

DALLAS (AP) — A cheering crowd greeted a wealthy young adventurer and his veteran co-pilot as they completed a 30-day helicopter flight from Dallas Love Field to city hall — by way of Europe, the Middle East, Asia, Alaska and points inbetween.

H.R. Perot Jr.

H. Ross Perot Jr., the 23-year-old son of a Dallas computer magnate, and co-pilot Jay Coburn completed their 28,000-mile tour around the world Thursday and were certified as the first to circle the globe in a helicopter.

Perot and Coburn, 35, left Dallas Love Field Sept. 1 on an eastward global circle. They returned to Love Field about 10 a.m. Thursday after visiting 26 countries — not all of them friendly.

The pair said they faced gunbarrels in Egypt and Burma when low fuel and heavy thunderstorms prompted unexpected landings that surprised local officials.

They also were forced to make a dangerous mid-sea landing on a cargo ship in the North Pacific after the Soviet Union denied air clearance for refueling.

Phil Donahue

But he was testifying in court as a defense witness for the producers of the "Donahue" show, who are being sued for $10 million by a woman who says they withheld information about the whereabouts of her ex-husband.

Donahue defended his decision to interview Wayne Anderson, a father who abducted his own young son. The boy was watched by members of Donahue's production staff while the show was taped, and the two departed without leaving a clue as to where they were going.

"My job as a journalist is not to decide who's right or wrong," Donahue told the court Thursday. "It is to do what I can to ensure all colliding interests are heard."

Willow Lynne Cramlet, 36, of Arvada, Colo., filed the damage suit against Multimedia Program Productions Inc., the producers of Donahue's television show.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dodger pitching ace Fernando Valenzuela hurled seven innings against the Atlanta Braves in a losing cause, then had to go to the hospital — where he had better luck.

Valenzuela's wife, Linda, gave birth to their first child Thursday morning at San Pedro Peninsula Hospital. The baby, Fernando Jr., weighed 7 pounds, 14 ounces, said Moki DeMarco, son of Valenzuela's manager, Tony DeMarco.

A hospital spokeswoman, who declined to give her name, said the boy was born by Caesarean section.

"Linda is resting, and the baby is perfectly fine," said DeMarco. "Fernando was in the room for most of the labor, but he left during the delivery," he added.

Valenzuela, who pitched Wednesday night in the Dodgers' 4-3 loss to the National League West-leading Atlanta Braves, went to the hospital after the game.

The couple, both 21, was married last December.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Dark-eyed singer Marie Osmond, expecting to present her parents with their 28th grandchild in April, plans to keep working "as long as she possibly can" despite her pregnancy, a spokeswoman says.

She plans other dates in Idaho, Minnesota, Arizona and Illinois, said Lillian Pickard of Solters-Roskin-Friedman, a public relations firm in New York.

Miss Osmond, who began her singing career with the country hit "Paper Roses" and starred with her brother, Donny, on the TV show "Donny and Marie," is the only daughter of George and Olive Osmond of Provo, who have seven sons and 27 grandchildren.

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles and Princess Diana will accept a belated wedding present on Oct. 26 from world-renowned cellist Mstislav Rostropovich — a concert.

Rostropovich reportedly wrote to Prince Charles, an amateur cellist, before his wedding on July 29, 1981, offering to play at a private or public concert as a wedding gift.

Buckingham Palace said Thursday that proceeds from the concert at the Barbican Center will be shared between the English Chamber Orchestra and the Loan Fund for Musical Instruments, which enables young musicians to buy top-quality instruments.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Singer Ike Turner's bid to avoid a 30-day county jail term failed when the California Supreme Court refused to review an appeal of his conviction on cocaine possession charges.

Turner, who had been part of the hit Ike and Tina Turner act before they split several years ago, had challenged the validity of a search that resulted in seizure of cocaine at his recording studio, Bolic Sound, and an adjoining residence in March 1980.

His petition said that an informant had told police Turner possessed cocaine and had cocaine in ashtrays and dishes at his living quarters and the recording studio.

Turner contended that a warrant to do a night search was improper since the property seized might have been located during daylight hours, and asked that the evidence be suppressed.

The Los Angeles County Superior Court sentence of three years' probation with a condition he spend the first 30 days in custody had been stayed pending appeal, and Turner is free on bail.

Turner's attorney was out of town and could not be reached for comment on appeal prospects. The case must return to the Los Angeles court before a date for Turner to start serving the sentence can be set.

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Kenneth Mayer, a columnist for the Boston Herald American and radio host, has died of cancer at the age of 63.

Mayer, who had battled the disease for 11 years, was found dead in his home Thursday morning.

He had been a Boston radio personality for 25 years and worked in the public relations department for the Boston police department.

More recently, he conducted his "Night Mayer" show on radio station WUNR from midnight to 2 a.m.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 9¼% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14¼% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 16¼%.

* The first three years payment and buyers qualifications will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 10 7/8% on a 95% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14 3/4% for the first year of the loan. After the first year of the loan, interest will be charged at the average annual Treasury Bill rate plus 2 1/2% with no change in the loan payment. In the 4th and 5th years there will be an increase of 10% of the principal and interest payment. The 6th through 30th years of the loan will have a principal and interest payment corresponding to the percentage rate as outlined above. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 14.736%.
