Poll on Catholics

NEW YORK — Nearly 80 percent of the nation's Roman Catholics think it's permissible to make up their own minds on such issues as abortion and birth control rather than follow church teachings, a poll released Sunday said. A Time Magazine-CNN poll indicated 14 percent of Catholics believed they always should obey church teachings, while 79 percent said they should make up their own minds. The poll indicated many Catholics disagree with some traditional church teachings. Seventy-nine percent disagreed with the statement: "Using artificial means of birth control is wrong," the poll said. And 63 percent of Catholics said they favored allowing women priests and 61 percent said they favor allowing priests to be married. Catholics have the same opinions on abortion as the American public as a whole. The poll said 84 percent of Americans and 81 percent of Catholics favor abortion when the mother's life is in jeopardy. And while 47 percent of Americans favor abortion for any reason during the first trimester of pregnancy, 45 percent of Catholics feel that way, the poll said.

Gas prices rise

LOS ANGELES — Gasoline prices rose more than 2 cents per gallon on average in the past two weeks, as summer travel increased and dealers passed on wholesale hikes, an analyst said Sunday. The average retail price for all grades, including taxes, was nearly $1.29 per gallon on Friday, up a little more than 2 cents from May 29, said Trilby Lundberg, author of the Lundberg Report, a bimonthly survey of 13,000 gas stations. Average prices ranged from $1.15 per gallon for self-serve regular unleaded to $1.54 for full-serve premium unleaded. Prices rise during summer because of increased demand and because retailers pass on wholesale hikes caused by pricier gas formulations to meet summer smog regulations, Lundberg said.

Pilot crashes

BRAINERD, Minn. — A pilot trying to hook his plane onto an advertising banner died in a crash as his wife and two children looked on. Loren Lee Franzen, 33, died Saturday after apparently missing the banner and going into a steep climb. He turned, lost speed and crashed nose first at Brainerd-Crow Wing County Regional Airport, said Sheriff Dick Ross. Franzen's wife, Liza, their 9-year-old son Rory and 2-year-old daughter Marhyan witnessed the crash.

'Route is now marked'

U.N. chief ends gathering with call to action

■ Nations sign three non-binding documents on summit's last day.

By James Brooke
N.Y. Times News Service

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Closing the largest gathering of national leaders in history, the United Nations secretary general told Earth Summit participants Sunday that "the road from Rio" must translate 12 days of debate into action.

"The route is now marked out," Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said in a blunt farewell to an audience that included several of the 118 heads of state and government who had journeyed here. "Today we have agreed to hold to present levels the pollution we are guilty of. One day we will have to do better — clean up the planet."

"The function of the United Nations is not to mask general inaction with verbiage, speeches, reports and programs," he said.

EARTH SUMMIT '92

As the summit meeting's 35,000 participants streamed out of Rio, talk was of the start of a new era, similar to one that began 20 years ago in Stockholm with the last world meeting on the environment.

"Five years from now we will look back on Rio and see it was a point of transition on how we deal with global environmental issues," predicted Walter V. Reid, vice president for programs of the World Resources Institute, a Washington group.

President Fernando Collor de Mello of Brazil, the host country, said the Earth Summit consecrated a concept that human development and protection of the earth's environment are inextricably intertwined.

"Much more than 12 days ago, the world today is aware that the questions of environment and development cannot be treated separately," said Collor to applause from delegates.

Felipe Gonzalez, Spain's prime minister, said: "Five hundred years ago men set out to discover the size of the earth. At this meeting we discovered its limits."

Female inmate faces June 30 execution date

■ Pickax muderess would be first woman executed in Texas since 1863.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Supporters trying to prevent Karla Faye Tucker from becoming the first woman to be executed in Texas this century say she has changed dramatically since her 1983 role in two grisly pickax murders.

The 32-year-old Houston woman is scheduled to die by lethal injection on June 30. Her attorney, George Secrest, has asked for a stay of execution.

Ms. Tucker would be the first woman executed in Texas since Civil War times. Chipita Rodriguez was hanged in 1863 for the murder of a horse trader.

Ms. Tucker says she will be disappointed if she has to die: She's been told she won't be able to donate her organs for transplants because the serum used to kill her will damage or destroy them.

"I had really hoped to be able to give my body to help others," she told the Houston Chronicle in Sunday's edition. "That way, I could give life back for the life I took."

Her supporters also will be disappointed, but for different reasons. Despite her crime, they say she shouldn't die.

Those advocates include former prosecutors, police officers, a former U.S. attorney who is an adamant supporter of the death penalty, and two relatives of the victims.

Many say they plan to write letters to beg for her life, claiming that the Karla Faye Tucker on death row isn't the same

Lingering doubts over Watergate haunt the nation

By Robert Pear
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Watergate scandal still haunts the nation with unanswered questions 20 years after burglars broke into the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee and set off the political shock waves that brought down President Richard M. Nixon.

Lingering questions about the drama tantalize a small army of historians, investigators and politicians. Students of the scandal have plausible theories but cannot prove their answers to such questions as these:

■ Why did the burglars break into the Watergate office and what were they seeking?

■ Who was "Deep Throat," the source for explosive disclosures published in The Washington Post?

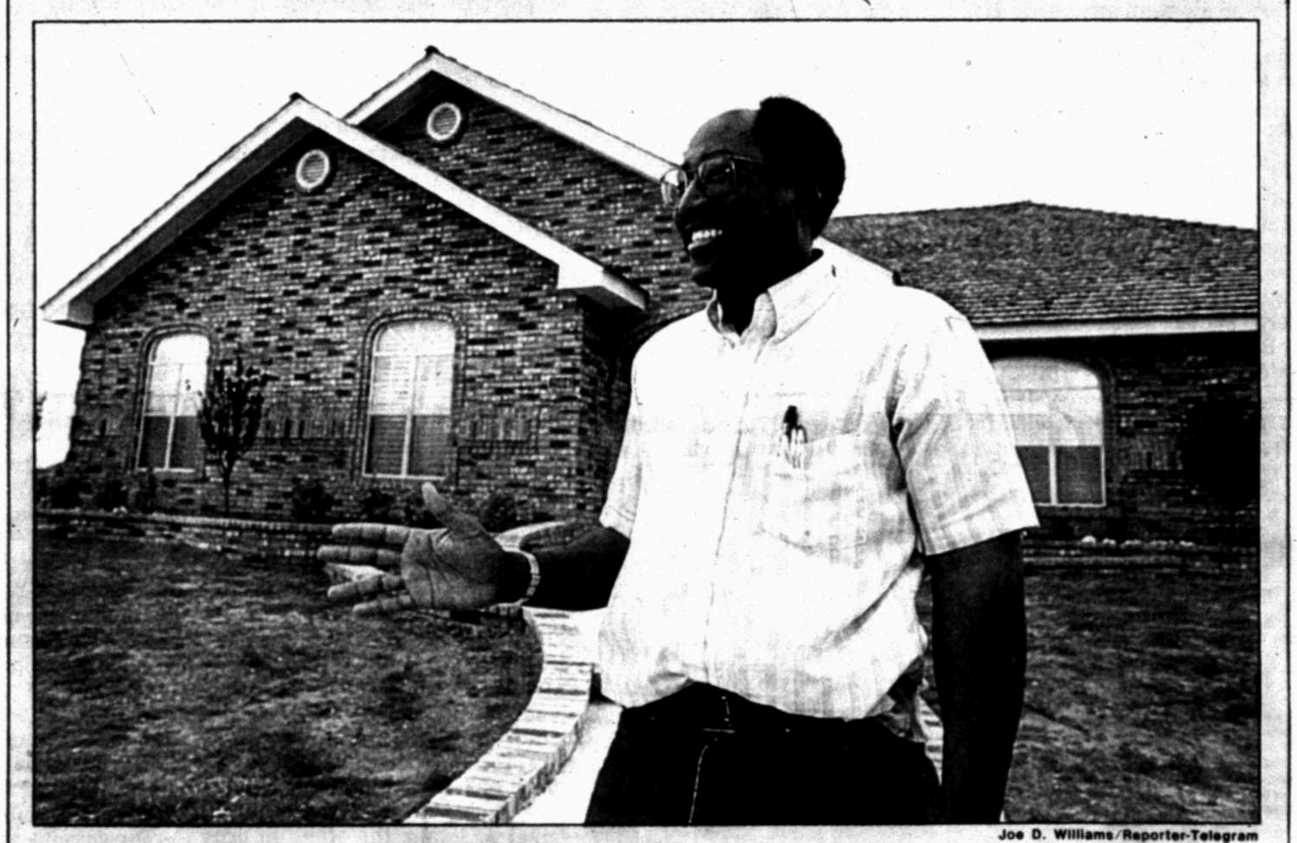

■ When did Nixon learn of the break-in and did he know of plans for the burglary before it occurred?

■ What caused an 18½-minute gap, or erasure, in the tape recording of a conversation between Nixon and his chief of staff, H.R. Haldeman, on June 20, 1972, three days after the break-in?

■ Did Nixon have any assurance that he would get a pardon before he resigned in August 1974?

Grassland's developers push on to Phase 2

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff writer

It started like any other subdivision — a dot on a rugged plain, in an area of town that brought with it no guarantee of success.

But five years and 60 homes later, SBC Corp. is reaching for new heights as it pushes ahead with Phase 2 of Grassland Estates.

What started as a roll of the dice appears to be paying big dividends for the Scharbauer family-managed enterprise. And SBC has become a major real estate force in Midland.

"You lost a major player when you lost Murphy & Rochester as land developers," said SBC president Doug Henson. "So there was a void that needed to be picked up."

Into that void stepped SBC and Grassland, a sprawling, upscale development anchored by a new elementary school to the north, a junior high to the east and a rehabilitation hospital to the south.

A potential seven-phase development bounded by Loop 250 West and State Highway 191, Grassland Estates began with 110 residential tracts that brought with them a steady diet of new construction.

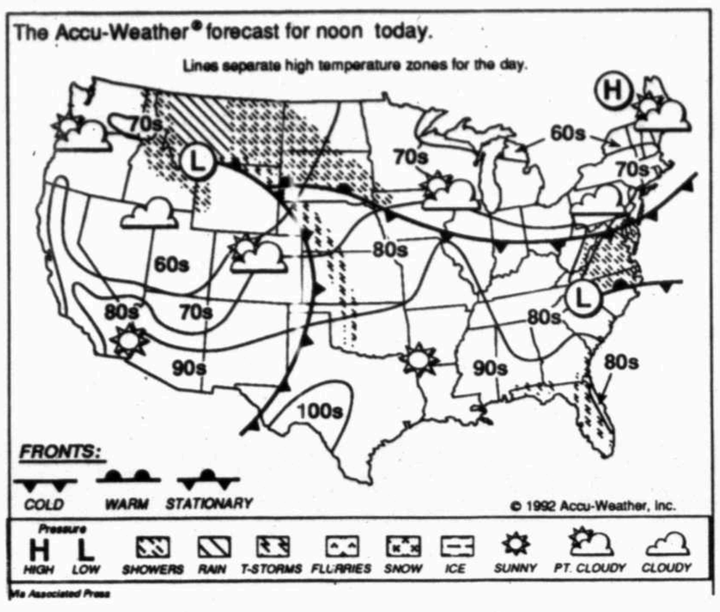

Although Phase 1 is just 60 percent built, SBC decided to proceed with the project's second phase, a 71-unit tract.

Henson, who has been involved with Grassland since its inception, said SBC started the project knowing that a professional land-use company was essential to the project's success.

"We looked for a company that was national in scope and could de-

WEATHER SUMMARY

Today's high may hit 100

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high near 100 and southwest wind at 15-20 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the upper 60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be sunny with a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 67, Sunday's high reached 95 compared with the record high for that date of 105 set in 1945. The record low for that date is 56 set in 1989.

STATE

Skies were sunny over most of the state Sunday as temperatures soared, hitting the 100-degree mark in South Texas.

In West Texas, readings ranged from the upper 80s to lower 90s.

It was a warm and humid afternoon across North Texas as Gulf air continued to surge northward on heels of south winds of up to 20 mph. Temperatures soared into the lower 90s areawide as abundant sunshine prevailed.

But in South Texas, where several 100-degree readings were recorded, skies were mainly hazy from warm and humid winds that came from the combined pressure systems of West Texas and the Gulf of Mexico.

The South Texas forecast called for partly cloudy skies with late-night and morning low clouds in the north through Tuesday and a slight chance of an afternoon or evening shower or thunderstorm.

The West Texas forecast included sunny skies today. Lows tonight should be mainly in the 60s.

Highs across the state today were expected to be in the 90s, rising to near 100 in the southwest, with lows from the 60s in the West to 70s in the North and South.

In North Texas, partly cloudy skies were expected with widely scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms and warm, humid conditions through Tuesday.

NATION

Snow fell over the California and Nevada mountains on Sunday. Rain drenched much of the rest of the nation for a second day. The West was cool and windy.

As much as 2 inches of snow fell overnight in the Sierra ranges. Temperatures were 20 to 25 degrees colder than normal for late spring.

By midday, rainshowers and thunderstorms were scattered over the northern Plains, Oklahoma, Missouri, the northern Rockies and the Great Basin, the Ohio Valley, the Appalachians, the Tennessee and Mississippi valleys, the Southeast, New England, the Great Lakes, and Oregon.

Two inches of rain fell Sunday morning at Ponca City, Okla., an inch and a half at Myrtle Beach, S.C., and an inch and a third at Wichita, Kan.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

DOUBTS: Scandal haunts U.S.

(From 1A)

As a member of the House Judiciary Committee, William S. Cohen, R-Maine, voted to impeach Nixon in 1974. Cohen, now a senator, said he remains puzzled by a few questions:

"Did Nixon ever consider destroying the tapes? If so, why were they not destroyed? Why didn't Nixon ever come before the American people, condemn the break-in, explain his involvement and ask to be forgiven?"

Nixon might have saved himself with a candid confession because even in the spring of 1974 "there was great reluctance to go forward with impeachment," Cohen said.

Cohen said the tapes may have survived because White House officials feared that destroying them would be an obstruction of justice, or because some officials believed the tapes would help exculpate Nixon.

Students of the Watergate scandal, including some participants and investigators, tend now to agree on likely answers to other questions, including motives for the break-in.

In hindsight, the motives look irrational. But documents from the Watergate era make clear that many Nixon aides and campaign workers had a conspiratorial view of the world, which created its own logic.

The burglary was just one part of an elaborate scheme of widespread surveillance against Nixon's political "enemies."

The break-in on June 17, 1972, was actually the second illegal entry into the Democratic headquarters in the Watergate complex. The burglars had entered the same offices to install electronic listening devices on the night of May 27, 1972.

The devices were placed in the telephones of Lawrence F. O'Brien, who was chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and R. Spencer Oliver, executive director of the Association of State Democratic Chairmen.

The device on Oliver's phone worked well; the Republicans overheard many conversations. But there was a technical problem with the device on O'Brien's phone. The burglars went back in June 1972 to repair it.

Obviously, the burglars could have been seeking general political intelligence on Democratic strategy for the 1972 elections — information that would help them in trying to undermine Democratic candidates. But experts on the scandal have concluded that the Republicans also wanted to find out what the Democrats knew about several specific issues that could prove embarrassing to Nixon and his administration.

Samuel Dash, who was chief counsel of the Senate Watergate committee, says the Nixon campaign wanted to find out what the Democrats knew about Nixon's brother, F. Donald Nixon, and his dealings with the reclusive billionaire Howard R. Hughes.

Nixon campaign officials were concerned that Donald Nixon had "a seedy relationship with an official of the Hughes organization, involving contacts with criminal figures," and they worried that the disclosure of such ties could embarrass the president, Dash said.

The Nixon campaign surmised that the Democrats might have such information because O'Brien had been a lobbyist for Hughes in Washington. Oliver, who is now chief counsel of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, said his father, Robert Oliver, had also represented Hughes in Washington.

At a conference at Hofstra University on Long Island in 1987, Jeb Stuart Magruder, who was deputy director of Nixon's re-election committee, endorsed this theory. He said "the primary purpose of the break-in" was to find out what the Democrats knew about the convoluted relations between Hughes and Nixon. The Republicans, he said, wanted to make sure such information stayed "under wraps during the election."

John D. Ehrlichman, a top aide to Nixon, told the Senate Watergate committee that Nixon was keenly interested in O'Brien's work for the vast Hughes organization. Some Republicans described O'Brien as the only effective Democratic politician in the country.

Oliver said he believed another reason for the break-in is that the Republicans wanted to find out what O'Brien knew about the settlement of federal antitrust lawsuits against the International Telephone & Telegraph Corp.

O'Brien had been suggesting for weeks that the Nixon administration offered to settle the lawsuits in 1971 in return for a promise by ITT to help finance the Republican National Convention in 1972.

The Democrats were investigating a tip that John N. Mitchell, the attorney general, spent time at a hunting lodge operated by ITT in Maine, and the Republicans apparently learned of that investigation.

Oliver said: "I think that was one reason they put a tap on our phones, to see what we knew about the ITT antitrust settlement. They probably thought we knew a lot and were holding it back for later use in the campaign."

Dash said he was also convinced that Nixon was briefed on plans for the break-in before it occurred.

The plan to collect intelligence on Nixon's opponents was devised by G. Gordon Liddy, counsel to the Nixon re-election committee. In February 1972, Liddy provided details of the plan at a briefing for Mitchell, Magruder and John W. Dean III, the White House counsel. They discussed possible targets of electronic surveillance, including the Democratic headquarters.

Dean immediately briefed Haldeman on the plan, saying it was unwise. Based on Dean's testimony about White House operating procedures, Dash said he felt sure that Haldeman told the president of the espionage plan at that time, three months before the break-in.

Dash, who is still a law professor at Georgetown University, said: "The smoking gun in our investigation was a White House tape that showed Nixon discussing a cover-up within days after the break-in. But I believe Nixon actually knew of plans for the break-in in March 1972. If Haldeman knew, the president knew."

In his efforts to hold onto office, Nixon said repeatedly that he did not learn the facts of the break-in and the cover-up until March 1973.

Those facts were being unraveled and reported at a steady clip by The Washington Post team of Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein, whose unidentified source of detailed information came to be known as Deep Throat.

Over the years, speculation on who Deep Throat was has centered on a handful of suspects, including Alexander M. Haig Jr., who succeeded Haldeman as White House chief of staff.

But the most plausible identification of Deep Throat comes from James Mann, a journalist who was working with Woodward at The Post in 1972. Mann is now employed by The Los Angeles Times.

In an article last month in The Atlantic, Mann suggested that Deep Throat was a senior official at the FBI, though he was unsure which one. Mann recalls that "during the summer and early fall of 1972, Woodward spoke to me repeatedly of 'my source at the FBI' or, alternatively, of 'my friend at the FBI.'"

Mann explains why the FBI had a motive to supply information: J. Edgar Hoover, longtime director of the bureau, had died just 46 days before the arrest of the Watergate burglars, and FBI officials felt their independence was severely threatened because the Nixon White House was interfering with their investigation of the break-in.

"For a senior FBI official like Deep Throat, talking to Woodward and The Post about Watergate was a way to fend off White House interference with the investigation," Mann wrote. "The contacts with the press guaranteed that information developed by the FBI's Watergate investigative team would not be suppressed or altered by Nixon administration officials."

Woodward and Bernstein declined to comment on Mann's theory.

With respect to the 18½-minute gap in the tape of June 20, 1972, experts on Watergate say Nixon himself was probably responsible, although his secretary, Rose Mary Woods, took responsibility for some of the erasure, saying it was inadvertent.

The erasure obliterated portions of the conversation in which, according to Haldeman's notes, he discussed Watergate with Nixon.

James F. Flug, who helped investigate the Watergate scandal as an aide to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, said he wondered if other abuses by Nixon and his political henchmen remain to be disclosed.

"I don't want to be paranoid, but I suspect that there were a lot of activities like Watergate that we don't know about," Flug said. "What we know is probably just the tip of an iceberg."

SUMMIT: Island nations protest treaty

(From 1A)

"In 1972, I had no idea what ecology meant, no idea what endangered species meant," recalled Marco Azambuja, a veteran Brazilian diplomat who took part in both conferences. "This time, no head of state could afford not to attend the conference. No one could afford to wreck it. No one could afford not be a player."

In the most tangible achievements of Rio's conference, 153 nations signed two treaties, one on global warming, the other on protecting the world's plant and animal species. By contrast, only 14 nations signed the Vienna Convention on limiting ozone-depleting chemicals when it was first presented in 1985.

Sunday, delegates approved by consensus three non-binding documents: a statement to guide forestry practices, a declaration of principles on environmental policy and Agenda 21, an 800-page blueprint for environmental action through the 21st century in a number of areas, including pollution, poverty, population and waste management.

The summit meeting was marked by a rise in North-South tensions over money.

Maurice Strong, the conference organizer, estimated Sunday that donor nations announced $6 billion to $7 billion in aid to third world environmental projects here. But environmentalists estimated that the new part of this aid was only $2 billion.

The summit was also marked by the isolation of the United States, the only nation that has publicly refused to sign the biodiversity treaty.

"I'm president of the U.S., not president of the world," President Bush was quoted Sunday in Jornal do Brasil, a local daily that obtained a brief interview with Bush before he left Rio on Saturday afternoon. "It is leadership to stand up against the tide. I can't do what everyone else does."

For a summit meeting billed by some as "the last chance to save the planet," a torrent of criticism was inevitable.

Scaling Sugar Loaf mountain, members of the Greenpeace movement draped Rio's landmark on Saturday with a large banner denouncing the Earth Summit for having "sold out" the planet.

A group representing 37 small island nations protested as toothless the treaty to slow global warming. Island nations fear that rising global temperatures will melt polar icecaps, causing ocean waters to rise and flood low-lying islands.

"The text lacks explicit, specific and meaningful commitments by developed countries to stabilize and then reduce their emissions of greenhouse gases, particularly carbon dioxide," read the declaration adopted by the Alliance of Small Island States.

Homero Aridjis, president of a Mexican environmental group, Grupo de los Cien, protested that the 20 miles that separated the Earth Summit from its private counterpart, the Global Forum, symbolized "an environmental gap between political power and civil power."

But some of the strongest criticisms came Tuesday from Strong, the conference's Canadian organizer.

"As a conference, Rio was clearly a great success, but whether or not it succeeds in its purpose of setting the planet on a new track remains to be seen," said Strong, who helped to organize the Stockholm conference. "I sat at a podium in Stockholm 20 years ago. I heard most of the same things. Most were not translated into action."

Saying he was "really disappointed we don't have targets and timetables" for reduction of gases believed to cause global warming, Strong added, "People can't allow their leaders to forget what they promised here."

In a farewell speech Sunday morning, before delegates started to scatter across the globe, Strong was equally blunt.

"Every minute we have spent here, 28 people have died of hunger," he told the stilled audience. "Each day while we were here, 260,000 children have been born."

"You must act quickly to bring the climate convention and its protocols in line with what scientists are telling us — that carbon emissions must be cut by at least 60 percent just to put the global warming trend on hold," he said.

FIRST: Time spent on Texas' death row has changed female inmate, supporters say person as the prostitute and drug abuser who once bragged to friends that she became sexually aroused each time she plunged the pickax into her victim.

Ms. Tucker was convicted in 1984 of the June 13, 1983, murder of Jerry Lynn Dean, 26, of Houston. She also had been charged with capital murder in the slaying of Dean's girlfriend, Deborah Ruth David Thornton, 32. That charge was dismissed after Ms. Tucker testified against her co-defendant and former boyfriend, Daniel Garrett.

Garrett also got the death penalty and remains on death row.

Ms. Tucker's detractors say nearly everyone on death row exhibits a change for the better to save their hides.

"Everybody sees Jesus at the jail house," says Sgt. M.B. Rankin, a relief officer who was stationed on the Harris County Jail's 12th floor during Ms. Tucker's recent stay. "But this woman isn't just talking. She is genuine. She shouldn't die."

Before she was transported back to death row on June 4, Ms. Tucker regularly led a Bible study group of female inmates at the county jail.

The woman who dropped out of junior high school because she failed seventh grade three years in a row got her GED in prison, then 30 hours of college credit through correspondence courses.

She taught herself sign language, "So I could take these two hands that used to hurt and let them help," she says.

Members of the Family Life Training Center in Hungerford, who met Ms. Tucker in October of 1983 through their prison ministry program, are circulating brochures urging readers to write the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles and the governor, asking for her sentence to be commuted to life.

Her attorney wants a new trial because the jury wasn't allowed to consider her intoxicated condition when deliberating her punishment.

Prosecutor Joe Magliolo, a former Harris County district attorney who now is an assistant U.S. attorney, said Sunday it would be unfair if government officials second-guess Ms. Tucker's jury sentence.

"She took and pickaxed two people to death," Magliolo said. "I think since the jury said — 12 individual citizens said — she deserved to die for what she did, then that's the verdict."

The attorneys who prosecuted Garrett in 1984, Rusty Hardin and Charley Davidson, say Ms. Tucker's testimony is crucial to convicting Garrett if he receives the new trial he's appealing for.

But they also say Ms. Tucker should live because she has changed.

"This is a caring, alive person who never forgets to ask about my new daughter when we talk," Davidson said. "When I was sitting up at (Harris County) jail the other night visiting her, I think I was closer to crying than she was."

Bush breaks ground for Korean War memorial

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush broke ground Sunday on what he called a long overdue memorial to America's Korean War veterans, including thousands who died "so that the enslaved might be free."

"For what you did for stopping totalitarianism, the entire free world still salutes you," Bush said at a Flag Day ceremony on the site near the Lincoln Memorial.

Congress authorized the memorial in 1986, but it took organizers nearly twice as long to win approval from fine arts and planning commissions as it did to wage the 37-month war.

The memorial will feature sculptures of 16 larger-than-life soldiers advancing toward an American flag, a reflecting pool and a grove of linden trees. A low granite wall along one edge of the triangular field will be etched with images of those who supported the troops in combat.

The 2.2-acre site is on the opposite side of the Reflecting Pool from the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

The crowd of 5,000 that gathered in sweltering heat for the ground-breaking included hundreds of Korean War veterans.

"When tyranny threatened you were quick to answer your country's call. Sadly, your country wasn't quite as quick to answer your call for recognition of that sacrifice," said Bush.

Bush paid tribute to all 5.7 million Americans who served in the military during the Korean War. Some 1.5 million actually served on the peninsula.

"They fought so that the enslaved might be free. They fought at the Pusan perimeter and at Inchon and at Heartbreak Ridge and Porkchop Hill," he said.

World in brief

■ Thousands protest against Serb president

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Two protests, one a solemn procession led by Orthodox priests, the other a joyful gathering of mostly young people ringing cow bells and alarm clocks, threaded their way through the Serbian capital today issuing essentially the same message to the government of President Slobodan Milosevic: "Resign."

There was little overlap between the group of 6,000 who followed Patriarch Pavle of the Serbian Orthodox church in a march after the Orthodox Pentecost service Sunday morning and a similar number of the bell ringers who Sunday afternoon signaled their view that time had run out for the government.

But opposition strategists said the two protests had sprung from the same spreading discontent, and they predicted they would be followed in the next few days by others.

Opposition to the government has been growing since the United Nations imposed sanctions two weeks ago to punish Serbia for its role in the fighting in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

University students were reported to be the next group planning rallies for peace and against the government with the major political opposition, the Serbian Renewal Party led by Vuk Draskovic, getting set to weigh in by next weekend.

■ U.S. delegation returns to Afghanistan

KABUL, Afghanistan — An American delegation arrived Sunday to discuss establishing diplomatic relations with the Afghan government formed by some of the Islamic rebels it supported in a 14-year war against communism.

"We will definitely reopen the American Embassy in Kabul. When will depend on security," said Peter Tomsen, who was the U.S. special envoy to the Muslim guerrillas during the civil war.

The United States withdrew its embassy staff a few weeks ahead of the final pullout of the 115,000 Soviet soldiers who occupied Afghanistan from December 1979 to Februrary 1989. Other Western nations followed suit, citing fears that the Soviet-installed Afghan regime would be unable to provide adequate security.

Many people now question the effectiveness of the interim government installed after the fall of President Najibullah's regime in April. There are an estimated 70,000 armed guerrillas in the capital, many of them unwilling to obey the orders of their commanders or leaders.

■ Rhetoric heats up over ANC mass action

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The government and African National Congress traded accusations and threats Sunday over the black group's planned campaign of protests and strikes.

The ANC plans 70 demonstrations nationwide Tuesday to protest the deadlock in talks with the government to end white minority rule. ANC leaders contend mass action is the only weapon disenfranchised blacks have and plan widespread strikes later on.

"There is a smooth road and a rough road to democracy," ANC official Ronnie Kasrils told the Sunday Times newspaper. "The government blocked the smooth road (at the negotiations). We must now travel the rough road."

The government's minister of constitutional development, Roelf Meyer, criticized the protests as "dangerous, disruptive and with no moral grounds."

Yeltsin heads to Washington to nail down aid

MOSCOW (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin will bring his domestic problems with him when he meets this week with President Bush.

Yeltsin's mission is to secure U.S. help in nailing down $24 billion in Western aid and credits to prevent a social explosion that could endanger Russia's infant democracy and market economy.

But to get that aid, he will need to show that he is still committed to reform and democracy and able to bring about both amid the confusion of post-Soviet Russia.

"By no means will I allow a retreat on economic reforms," Yeltsin said in one of a series of interviews in advance of his arrival in Washington today.

In an effort to demonstrate that his goal is to reform rather than to rule Russia, Yeltsin said on May 27 that he would not seek a second five-year presidential term in 1996.

But he vowed the popular pressure would not drive him from office early. "Only the Lord can command me to resign," the ITAR-Tass news agency quoted Yeltsin as saying Sunday after following a church service.

To help argue the case in Washington, Yeltsin is taking with him Vice Premier Yegor Gaidar, the architect of the reforms.

Yeltsin said he hopes his meetings with Bush in Washington and other Western leaders in Munich next month "will finally break the knot" holding back the multibillion-dollar governmental commitment that Yeltsin says will lead to even greater private foreign investment in Russia.

But the Russian president "is going to have some problems," said one of Yeltsin's biggest Western boosters, U.S. Ambassador Bob Strauss. "There should be some tough negotiations," Strauss predicted in a session with reporters a week before the summit.

Western economists are concerned because Yeltsin has felt forced to slow his reforms, which have sent the inflation rate to more than 300 percent so far this year.

Within the past two weeks, Yeltsin has balked at lifting controls on energy prices and is maintaining subsidies to thousands of state-owned factories and businesses that, in a market economy, would go bankrupt, throwing millions out of work.

To meet rising wage demands, the government is flooding the country with newly printed rubles — a step that could spark inflation and jeopardize the promise of Western credits.

Yeltsin and his aides say they are changing their tactics, not their goals. They say they are trying to avoid soaring fuel prices or high unemployment that could cause the widescale unrest that some experts have been predicting since the reforms began last January.

"Today, people still support the reforms, but if we go beyond a critical point, we'll set off a general disaster," Yeltsin said last week.

In another sign of slackening pace of reform, Yeltsin appointed veteran economic manager Vladimir Shumeiko to a post equal to that of the reformist Gaidar.

The appointment of Shumeiko was viewed in part as a concession to the Russian legislature, which has balked at passing key elements of the reform program, such as allowing widescale decollectivization of land, privatization of industry or bankruptcies for state-owned businesses.

Yeltsin also has been under severe pressure from uniformed military officers. In a concession, he went back on earlier hints he would name a civilian defense minister and instead appointed Gen. Pavel Grachev.

Grachev has become a vocal advocate of defense interests and indicated he would slow some aspects of military reform.

Hostages to be freed soon, Iranian newspaper says

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — A German envoy arrived in Syria's capital Sunday night as expectations rose that two German hostages, the last Westerners held in Lebanon, would be freed this week.

The Iranian newspaper Tehran Times said the two aid workers would be turned over to German officials today in Damascus. The Iranian ambassador in Germany said he was confident the men would be freed by Wednesday, and an Iranian source in Tehran gave a similar time frame.

Iran, which has influence with the Shiite Muslim kidnap factions in Lebanon, has been playing a major role in negotiating the Germans' release. Iran's government is trying to improve ties with the West in hopes of getting help for rebuilding an economy ruined by an eight-year war with Iraq.

German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's personal envoy, Bernd Schmidbauer, arrived in Damascus about 9:20 p.m., apparently expecting to pick up Heinrich Struebig, 51, and Thomas Kemptner, 30.

Schmidbauer was greeted at Damascus airport by a deputy Syrian foreign minister, Youssef Shakkour, and whisked away to a hotel without answering questions from reporters.

"I'm glad that I can be here and that I have been welcomed," Schmidbauer said in German. "That's all I am going to say tonight."

The Tehran Times said the Germans, who were kidnapped three years ago by pro-Iranian Lebanese Shiite Muslims, would be released today. The newspaper has accurately predicted previous releases.

In Bonn, Iran's ambassador to Germany, Hussein Mousavian, also said the pair could be freed as early as today, but he added that the release might come as late as Tuesday or Wednesday.

A source in Tehran said the situation would be resolved in 48 to 72 hours. He agreed to speak with The Associated Press in Nicosia by telephone on condition of anonymity.

Unlike the Americans and Britons who were kidnapped for political reasons, Struebig and Kemptner were taken by a group that sought the release of two Lebanese Shiite brothers jailed in Germany for terrorism.

Germany has refused to release the brothers. But the Lebanese newspaper As-Safir said Saturday that the German government had offered to improve their treatment, such as permitting regular visits by their families and moving them from separate prisons to the same institution.

The reports Sunday came after U.N. envoy Giandomenico Picco arrived in Damascus late Saturday.

HOME SWEET HOME

OUTLOOK: Area builders try to gauge demand for new homes

(From 1A)

reputation, there's going to be homes to build."

Certainly that has been the case for five straight years.

Based on city statistics, Midland has built an average of 208 new homes a year during that time. But this year, just 58 have been constructed, compared with 87 for the same four-month period a year earlier.

According to F.W. Dodge Division of McGraw-Hill Inc., April contracts for future residential construction locally showed a 22 percent drop from the same year-ago period, and a 19 percent overall decline from 1991 based on the first four months.

Still, since 1987, Midland has added 1,040 new homes, adding $111 million in value to the market.

"You have to look at this thing cautiously," said builder Kelly Young. "You don't want to go out and build five or six (speculative) houses, but then I don't know any bank in Midland that's going to go for that."

Young, whose own business started slowly this year, said he expects remaining lots in Polo Park, for example, to go fast — in a year or less.

"I have a custom (-built home) going up right now and I'm talking with three other people about customs. One day, I don't know what I'm going to do and the next I'm talking with three or four people."

Builder Paul West, who's active everywhere from Saddle Club Lakes to Grassland Estates, said a combination of factors are driving the home construction market.

"It's not any one thing, it's a lot of things that keep us alive. . . . You need to take a cross reference of the people we're building for."

Of homes West had under construction in May, one was being built for a retired couple, another for an independent oilman, another for a man who moved back from overseas, and still another for a small businessman.

"If oil prices drop to $11 a barrel, then yes, it's going to affect this whole thing overnight. But no one knows if that day will come again. What makes a development go is the builders. If you have five or six good ones, that's going to drive it," West said.

Builder Jim Leonard, one of the driving forces in Polo Park North, said he expects 1992 to basically mirror 1991, a year when 223 new homes were built in the city.

"I know there are (major oil) companies that haven't made their announcements yet, but there are still people coming in who will pretty much offset what Chevron announced as far as layoffs."

Leonard foresees an eventual reduction of new-home square footage, and he expects major oil and gas producers to continue leaving Midland during the next five years.

"But I see more companies like a Parker & Parsley moving in . . . people who can make a profit on the production that's here. . . . With that, I see people with lower incomes for whom a lower-priced home would appeal."

Leonard said he believes those builders who are willing to change are going to be the survivors. "If you're building a $300,000 home, appealing to one-half of 1 percent of the market share, you're not going to make it if it all dries up."

For the time being, however, Midland's new-home buyers are enamored with four- and five-bedroom homes priced from $130,000 on up, complete with detailed landscaping, sprinkler systems, vaulted ceilings and plenty of windows.

"As long as the inventory stays low, we're going to continue to build new houses," said builder James Rasnick. "I understand a lot of people are concerned about the oil and gas industry, but I've heard that for the last 10 years. . . . You can't put your life on hold forever."

Like other successful builders, Rasnick bought a number of properties he knew he could develop at a profit — picking choice lots in choice neighborhoods where values held their own, like those located in Bishop's Castle off Loop 250.

"There aren't as many transferees. I just don't think these companies are moving them around as often as they did a few years ago," Rasnick said. "Of course, it could all start back up again — you just never know. They can reverse a decision overnight and move in the other direction."

Unlike other oil and gas cities, Rasnick said Midland has been fortunate, even with all the consolidations. "That's because there's so much production within a 100-mile radius here. It's not going away."

Still, a number of builders interviewed admit that activity has slowed somewhat compared to 1991.

Builder Mark Payne, who is active in Grassland Estates and other areas, including Mission Dorado in Odessa, where new-home construction took off in the first quarter, said it is apparent that construction is slowing, at least in Midland.

Still, Payne said the number of large homes going up has been the biggest surprise of the market. "It looks like you could eventually have a glut, but that's what's kept this thing going now for five years."

It's also kept the competition keen.

"There are a lot of builders out there for what little activity we have," said builder Mike McPherson. "Right now, I think it's real slow. I have four (presold) homes going on, but I'm not talking with a lot of people."

McPherson, who works with builder Robert Graham, said there is certainly no shortage of four- and five-bedroom homes.

"I have a spec (speculation home) sitting over there (in North Greentree) that's been there for six months. Robert's had one that's been ready for a couple of months, and every other builder in town has a spec."

As for suppliers, those interviewed report mixed activity as far as sales and what they are hearing from local builders about future activity.

"It's slowed considerably compared to last year," said Terry Harrell, manager of Howard Lumber Co. "But everyone I've talked with seems optimistic . . . they're still seeing some activity out there."

Harrell said recent layoffs at Chevron and Mobil do not appear to have builders overly concerned. There also is hope among them that the independents will pick up those looking for work. "Hopefully, we'll go from there," he said.

Ray Sale, president of Builders & Homeowners Supply, said that based on the numbers he has seen, new-home construction is off by several units.

But like others, Sale said he is keeping an eye on Bates & Brown's Mockingbird Heights subdivision located north of Bluebird Lane.

"When that new development opens north of town, then maybe this whole thing will take off again," he said. "We're very busy, but we're also geared to go in several different directions."

Still, some, like John Childress, manager of Triangle Lumber and Block, are getting a different view of the market.

"We're seeing a lot of activity. This week there were five new homes on the permit list," he said.

Childress said his workers are running three trucks all day long. "I've hired two or three other people just to handle the load. We're doing quite a bit of stuff. We have a lot of commercial construction going on."

At Featherlite Building Products, a supplier of brick, concrete block and other masonry-related items, sales manager Bill Campbell said he was cautiously optimistic.

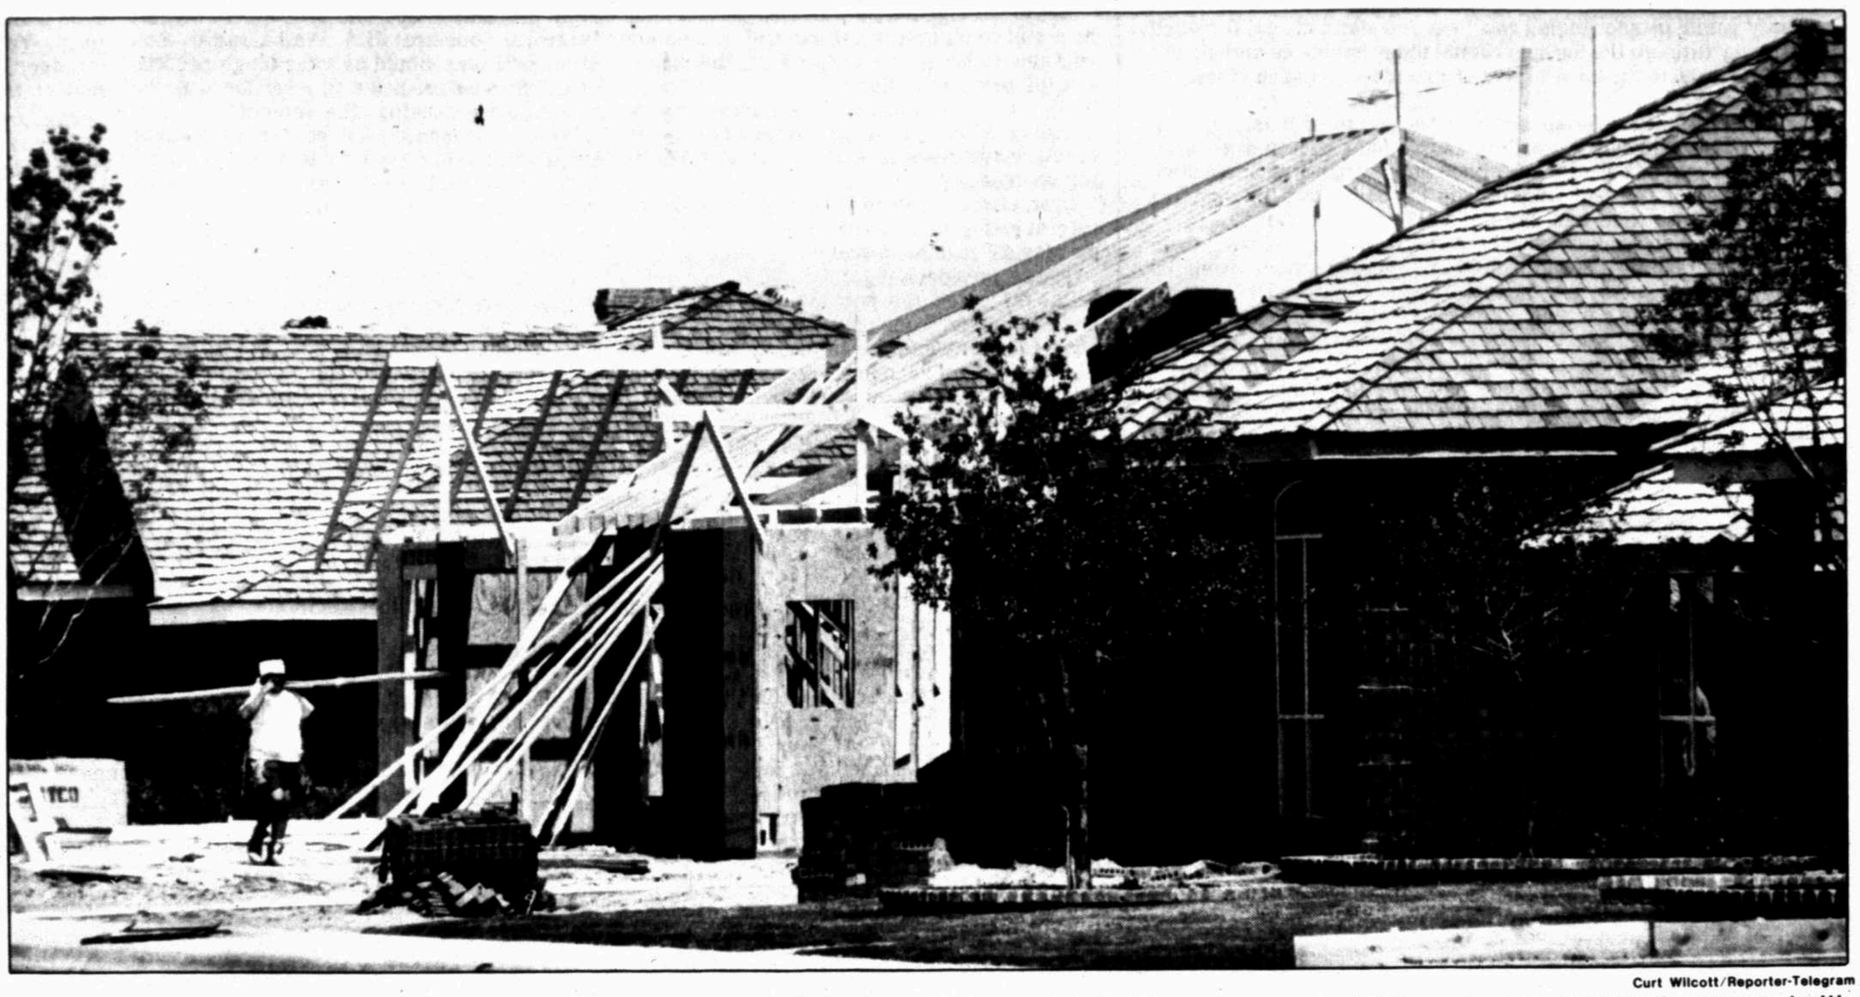

"Midland is down this year from last as far as residential goes," he said. "The main reason we're so busy is because of the schools (building). We're stretched to the max, but I'd rather have that kind of problem," he said.

Lynn Smith with Acme Brick Co. said that company also is busy. But like others, the focus appears to be increasingly on commercial building.

"It's about half commercial and half residential. We shipped a little over a half million bricks last month and 300,000 so far this month. . . . We'll probably ship close to the million mark (for May.)"

Mike Smith, part-owner of Midwest Door & Window in Midland, whose company provides doors, windows and skylights, said no one is making predictions now.

"It's hard to tell. I talked with a builder the other day and he was busy. He had several pre-sold homes, but down the road he's skeptical about what's going to happen."

New-home construction continues throughout the city, including North Polo Park, above. Based on city statistics, Midland has built an average of 208 new homes a year during the past five years. But this year, just 58 have been constructed, compared with 87 for the same four-month period a year earlier.

'I understand a lot of people are concerned about the oil and gas industry, but I've heard that for the last 10 years. . . . You can't put your life on hold forever.'

IN THIS SERIES

Sunday 14 — On pace for another record year, Midland builders expect to complete more than 200 new homes this year. Oil company transferees are one driving force, but other move-up owners are helping to fuel steady business at the upper end of the residential market.

Today 15 — Despite an outlook that is far from unanimous, enough developers have confidence in the market to forge ahead with new projects. SBC Corp.'s master-planned Grassland Estates is one neighborhood readying for expansion with Phase II.

Tuesday 16 — First-time buyers and other specialized consumers have spurred activity in lower price ranges and cut into the inventory of existing homes on the market. A wealth of major projects – schools, hospitals and retail – brighten the horizon for commercial builders.

HOME SWEET HOME

Homeowner fields dreams before building

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff writer

Vic Coleman didn't build his home until he did his homework.

"When I first started thinking about a house, I probably went out to 15 of these homes going up just to try to learn something about building," said the Texaco engineer.

Coleman looked at things like plumbing, wood, framing and, more importantly, who would build that home once those details had been put on paper.

For months, he ventured onto new home lots, talking with subcontractors at work as well as a number of realty companies.

"That's how I came across Paul West," Coleman said. "It was through word of mouth. He had a good reputation."

Coleman considered a number of Midland sites before deciding to build in Grassland Estates, the SBC Corp. development located off Loop 250 West.

"I've lived in West Texas for 10 years. The reason I wanted to build a house was because I thought it was something neat to do. Part of my personality is abstract anyway. I like taking an idea and seeing it develop."

So he drew up a basic format of what he wanted in his house and got together with West.

"If I had any recommendations for people thinking about building, it's plan, plan, plan. And when they're finished planning, plan again," said Coleman, who has been in Midland since 1987.

In a year, he visited between 30 and 40 different houses trying to get ideas.

If he saw something he liked in a magazine, he tore it out.

If it was an open house, he came armed with a notebook, looking for some element he might have overlooked.

"I wanted to see what they were putting in these homes," Coleman said. "I wanted to find out what I liked and what I didn't like. Who was using good wood and who was using bad. You have to figure out where you want every plug, electrical outlet, light switch, cable and phone hookup."

When Coleman finally exhausted every possibility, he sat down with his builder to draw up the final plans.

"Being an engineer, we're transient at best. I built this house for relatively small kids, say under 10. If I had built it for kids in high school, I might have made the bedrooms a little larger because teenagers tend to spend a lot of time in their bedrooms with friends."

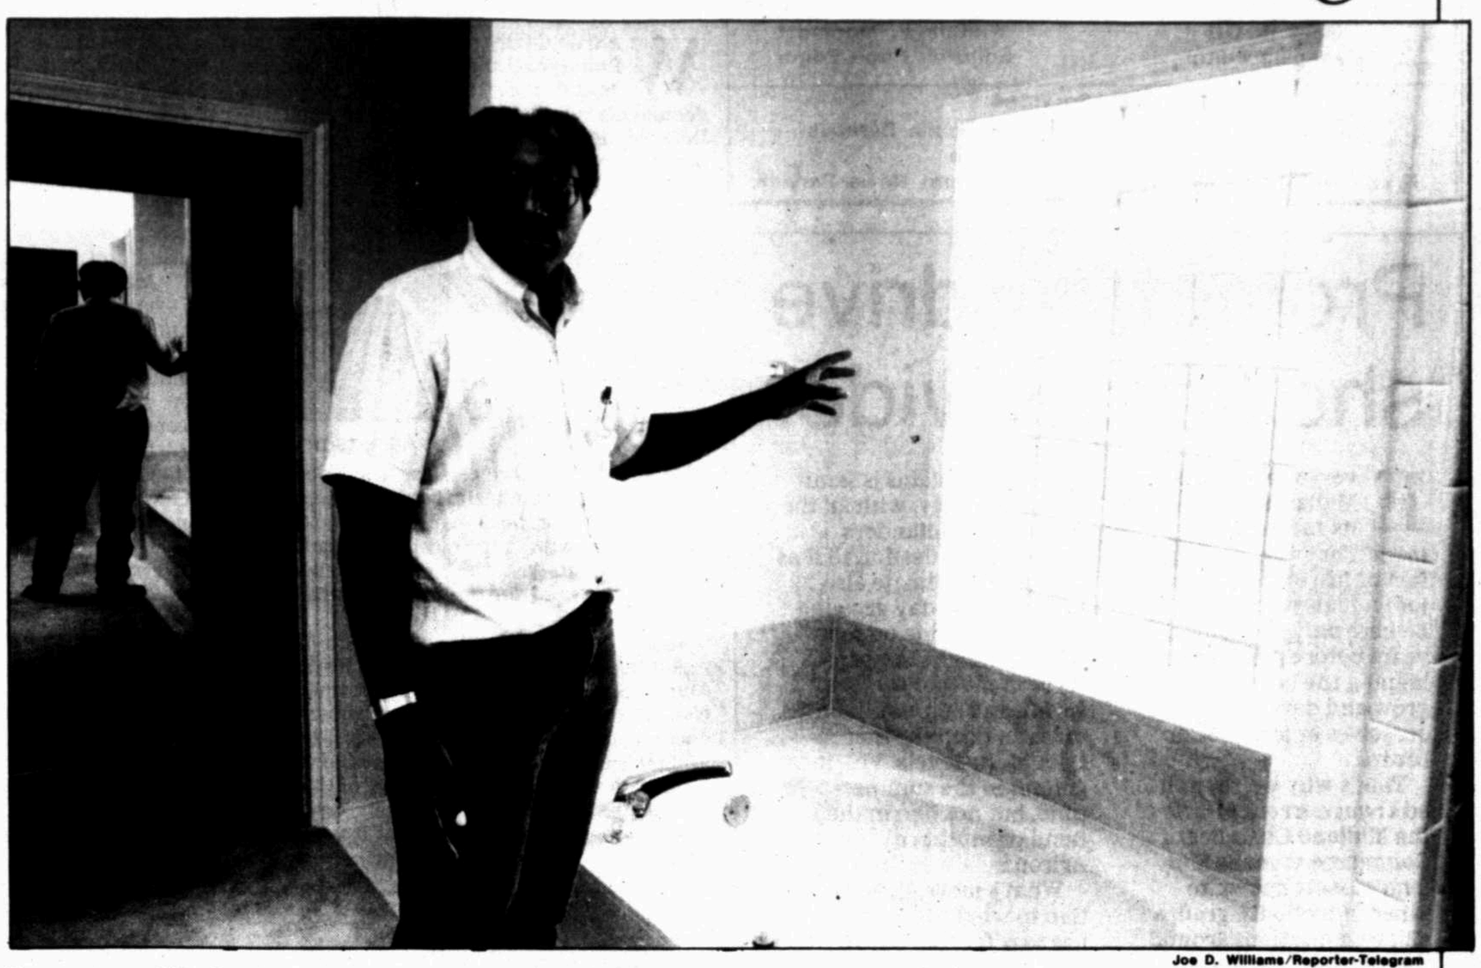

Coleman's final product was a 2,700-square-foot house with four bedrooms and 2½ baths, with a centralized living area open to a skylighted-kitchen.

"Smaller kids spend more of their time in the family room. I wanted to build something where a wife could cook, but still talk to someone without (the interference of) a wall. This is kind of the main activity area."

One unusual feature of the kitchen, in addition to a spacious preparation island, is a built-in appliance area that resembles a pantry.

"But inside you can put your blender and food processors. You have a light (inside) here and four plugs, so you can do all your mixing in it. It also keeps everything well-hidden."

Off the kitchen, West built Coleman a utility room, with a half-bath and a second skylight overhead, which is something, he said, most builders don't do.

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Homeowner Vic Coleman explains why he selected glass block instead of regular glass in his master bathroom. "If I had any recommendations for people thinking about building," he said, "it's plan, plan, plan. And when they're finished planning, plan again."

"I made it large enough so you can put in a sewing table and clothes rack. I added the half-bath in here to provide a quick in and out for kids so they don't have to track up the house," he said.

Arches play a big role both inside and outside the home along the windows, living and formal dining room. "That's a little different."

Instead of drapes, Coleman went with crafted wooden shutters throughout the house. "It was a little more expensive, but when I go to re-sale, it's going to add a little extra."

In the master bathroom, Coleman suggested that West use glass block, opposed to regular glass over his marbled tub. "I don't know any woman who wants to take a bath in front of a huge, clear glass window," he said jokingly.

In addition to a medicine cabinet that opens into a three-sided mirror, Coleman added extra space to the woman's closet as well as a full-length mirror and shelves.

Outside, Coleman and his builder decided on a brick design, with concrete that would wind around his curved sidewalk and flower beds. "It was a little more expensive, but to me it was well worth it."

Like other employees of a major oil company, Coleman said it is important for people to look at their building allowance and decide what they might want to trade-off, especially if they have children.

"They might want to go with a cheaper front door and use that extra money to upgrade their carpet."

Coleman said he eventually wants to sell his house and try his hand at another design.

"It's kind of fun," he said. "I already have some ideas I'd like to try, but I would still keep the concept of an open family-kitchen area. I like that."

PROJECT: Grassland's developers move ahead to Phase 2

velop a master plan," he said.

SBC eventually settled on URS Engineers, the same group responsible for the creation of Las Colinas in Dallas.

"We spent two days (in Dallas) and got charged up over . . . the ability of one owner having total control over something like this vs. a group of landowners," Henson said.

One key to getting the project off the ground was securing an anchor that would lend buyer appeal as well as add value to those properties.

"The school district needed a site in west Midland and we wanted Scharbauer Elementary School," said Henson, who also knew the district was looking for a second site to build a junior high.

"Those were the two anchors that started our residential activity," he said. "It's been slow, but we've paced ourselves. When opportunities have presented themselves, we've gone after them."

Henson said anchoring Grassland was imperative for one major reason. "We knew we were starting in an area that wasn't in the major growth trend. We were bucking it as far as going west, outside the Loop."

One key to getting the project off the ground was securing an anchor that would lend buyer appeal as well as add value to those properties.

Like any new area, according to developers and realtors, no potential buyer wants to be the first in a subdivision.

"But the advantage we had was total control of the land and a reputable family behind it who always did what they said. So, the chance of this thing going bankrupt just wasn't there," Henson said.

Of course, selling a new development to Midlanders was an entirely different matter.

"You can show them drawings and paint pretty pictures, but unless they see brick and mortar, it's hard to understand. People don't always have big imaginations," Henson said.

Unlike other subdivisions, Grassland's pattern of streets is anything but ordinary.

Instead of a system that runs north, south, east and west, Grassland's developers went with string curving linear streets, with a main circular boulevard leading out of the development.

"Aesthetically speaking, the curved streets soften the appearance of the homes," Henson said. "There are multi-factions here playing with your vision. People who come out here don't know why this looks different from other areas (of town), but it does."

In addition, SBC was concerned about traffic on Loop 250 and Highway 191, so it developed a 75-foot wide greenbelt paralleling each road.

The beltway is not only a visual and sound buffer, but it acts as a barrier protecting residents from stray cars that might accidentally swerve off the highways.

Grassland's second phase will be open to new-home construction ranging from 2,100 square feet to 3,500 square feet.

In addition, work continues on a community recreation facility that will include a neighborhood swimming pool, tennis courts, volleyball court, kitchen and meeting rooms.

Although a number of builders have been active in Grassland, Mark Payne, according to Henson, is the development's main contractor. He also owns a home and office there.

"More desirable lots will be available in the next phase," Payne said. "There's still a lot of local people I'm talking to who apparently want to move up, so apparently there's still a demand for larger homes."

And executive homes are the selling point at Grassland, although Henson said some consideration has been given to building low-maintenance townhomes on the perimeter.

"They would fit very nicely into this plan. I'd love to have some specialty offerings, but you have to pace yourself."

Henson said he expected Phase 2 of the project to be completed in 18 months. "For whatever it's worth, that's my prediction. We should expect (to build) 35 to 45 single-family homes a year. That would be a good pace.

"Right now, we have five builders who are finishing homes or have some under construction. But it's like a car lot — you have to have a product to show. That's what is spurring our growth."

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Five years and 60 homes later, SBC Corp. reaches for new heights as construction begins on Phase 2 of the Grassland Estates development. Construction of a new neighborhood recreation center can be seen in the background.

Promotion drive should be wider

Everyone living in Midland has a stake in its future development. That's an unavoidable fact of life even for those individuals who may plan to be here only for a few years before moving on. By helping the community grow and develop, we help ourselves enjoy a better future.

That's why we're excited about current efforts of the Midland Chamber of Commerce to make Midland's assets known to other individuals, groups and organizations around the state and nation. Those efforts can only help improve the city's economic base.

Recently, chamber officials, board members and community leaders met with officials from TU Electric, Union Pacific Railroad and the Texas Department of Commerce. What they learned is that Midland's "image" around the state and nation may be impeding economic development efforts. Many people in other areas may be struggling under the misconception that Midland is in the middle of a desert. It isn't, of course; while it's true that the climate here on the plains is semi-arid (and lately, with all the rain, most Midlanders would even question that assertion) the climate also ensures a 218-day growing season, sunshine on most days and night temperatures in most of the spring and summer months that can drop the mercury to chilly levels. Yes, it can get hot in the summertime, but not like in the Big Bend or southern Arizona.

What's more, in addition to what the community has to offer, the entire area has plenty of attractions to promote.

In fact, John Prickette, director of economic development for TU Electric in Dallas, stressed that fact at the recent chamber meeting. Prickette said, "We see good things" and urged the chamber to emphasize the assets of the region as well as the city.

We agree. Midland is not just selling Midland, it's selling the entire Permian Basin or all of West Texas. This is the place we all call home. And we're all in the business of promoting this city and region.

Let's do it the best that we can.

U.S. officials create secrets for profit

WASHINGTON — When he left the Pentagon, Caspar Weinberger removed more than 13,000 government documents relating to his time as Secretary of Defense, depositing the papers for safekeeping at the Library of Congress where a taxpayer-supported archivist spent 18 months organizing the records.

Anderson

Weinberger then wrote his memoirs, drawing from these and other materials, for which he received a reported $500,000 advance.

As one of the more celebrated leak-bashers in the Reagan administration, Weinberger at one point in his book paraphrases a dinner conversation with then-Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin with the help of "a classified memo I prepared for the president after that dinner."

Weinberger's conduct violated no law or regulation, but raises a serious question for some critics: Should privileged former officials or the public at large own government documents created at government expense? Weinberger is considered the owner of the information, although the Library of Congress anticipates that he will ultimately deed over the documents as a gift and that it would fall under government management.

The Weinberger case is but one of many that deal with the free-flow of information — fodder for a major study by the Center for Public Integrity that is scheduled for release June 17.

"Weinberger's case is, unfortunately, typical of former government officials," according to an advance copy of the report entitled "For Their Eyes Only: How Presidential Appointees Treat Public Documents as Personal Property." "Many others have left office, been granted exclusive access to government documents while closing them off to others, written their versions of history, and profited from the memoirs."

At the Lyndon Baines Johnson Library, a recently published list of closed records included some of Clark Clifford's Secretary of Defense files. Meanwhile, Clifford's insider memoir was published in 1991, which is impossible to verify because access to those files is closed.

A recent list of materials acquired by the Gerald Ford Library mentions almost nothing that is open to researchers. A typical entry reads: "The papers of Philip Buchen, 1973-1990, two cubic feet. The collection includes correspondence, clippings, a speech file, photographs and miscellanea relating to Mr. Buchen's activities as counsel to the president from 1974 to 1977. . . . These materials are not open for research."

According to the Center for Public Integrity report, which was authored by Steve Weinberg, presidents, vice presidents and Cabinet-level appointees hold a monopoly on material that too often is withheld from the public for political and even financial reasons.

From the Pentagon Papers case to Watergate to, most recently, President Kennedy's assassination, government officials have withheld sensitive documents vital to the public's right to know.

"In recent decades, there have been very few positive changes in the laws governing access to secret government files," the report states. "Indeed, 'national security' and other excuses continue to be consistently cited as rationales for routinely denying access to many classified and otherwise secret documents."

The Center for Public Integrity derides the double-standard of which it accuses Weinberger and others. Government employees must sign a "prepublication review" agreement for books written about their former employers, agreeing not to reveal classified information.

"While Weinberger acknowledges using classified information, no administrative or court action has been taken against Weinberger," the report states. "On the other hand, many authors and former government employees who have sought to publish similarly sensitive material have been subjected to long reviews in which much of their writing was gutted by agency censors."

In what may be the last bastion in the Cold War, the classification bureaucracy is still stamping away. In 1990 alone, 6,500 government officials classified more than a half-million documents to some degree. The number of classified documents throughout the government is thought to range near 1 billion pages.

WHOM TO WRITE

Following is a list of the names and addresses of various state and federal officials Midlanders may wish to contact from time-to-time:

PRESIDENT: George Bush (R), The President, The White House, Washington, D.C. 20500.

SENATORS: Lloyd Bentsen (D) and Phil Gramm (R), Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

GOVERNOR: Ann Richards (D), State Capitol Building, Austin, Texas 78701.

OTHER VIEWS

Women boost government

Dianne Feinstein, candidate for the U.S. Senate in California, said it well: "Two percent may be OK for milk, but it's not OK for the Senate." It may well be that Feinstein and several other women will increase that dismal percentage — two women and 98 men in the U.S. Senate — in November's election.

Maybe it's the aftermath of the Senate hearings on Clarence Thomas, where law professor Anita Hill was grilled mercilessly by members of the all-male Senate Judiciary Committee.

Or it might be the anger that's spreading through the populace over legislative perks and wrongdoing, such as the congressional check-bouncing scandal.

Or maybe it's the vague discontent that is unseating incumbents right and left in primary elections and making it possible for an independent candidate like Ross Perot to make the presidential race into a contest.

But whatever it is, this appears to be the year that women will make a difference — as candidates, as voters, as opinion leaders.

Watch what happens in November to Feinstein and Barbara Boxer, who just won Senate primaries in California; to Senate candidates Lynn Yeakel in Pennsylvania and Carol Moseley Braun in Illinois; and to other women seeking public office.

The presence of women in the government can only help to make sure the government for all the people represents all the people.

Post Office scandal cuts image

No political scandal in decades has rocked Congress as has the House bank overdraft affair. Still, up to now, nothing illegal has been found in the members' check-kiting.

The odious cloud hanging over the House post office is different in that the allegations made there do include illegalities that could mean serious penalties if some House members are found guilty. The House post office is an entity unto itself, not part of the U.S. Postal Service.

Investigators are centering on allegations of embezzlement, drug dealing, ghost employees, overtime, fraud and cover-up. The House panel carrying on the investigations has had its deadline for reporting extended to July 6 because of the widening scope of its work.

Unlike the check overdraft scandal, the post office allegations so far have not caused wide ripples in the public consciousness. Even if only a part of the allegations are true, though, it will be a serious black mark against an institution already held in low repute.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, June 15, the 167th day of 1992. There are 199 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 15, 1215, King John signed the Magna Carta at Runnymede, England, granting his barons more liberty.

On this date:

In 1520, Pope Leo X threatened to excommunicate Martin Luther if he did not recant his religious beliefs.

In 1775, the Second Continental Congress voted unanimously to appoint George Washington head of the Continental Army.

In 1836, Arkansas became the 25th state.

In 1844, Charles Goodyear received a patent for his process to strengthen rubber. (Even so, Goodyear did not benefit from the invention, and died in poverty in 1860.)

In 1846, the United States and Britain signed a treaty settling the boundary between Canada and the U.S. in the Pacific Northwest.

In 1849, James Polk, the eleventh president of the United States, died in Nashville, Tenn.

CHARLEY REESE

Many factors, led by greed, influence voters

When President George Bush was at the height of his popularity, I wrote that he was beatable. Now, for the same reason, I caution you against all the current predictions and analyses about the presidential race.

Reese

Last September I said that Bush was beatable because who becomes president depends on how the American people are thinking on the day of the election, not on how they were feeling last September. That's still true. Polling data saying how people would vote in June cannot tell you how they will vote in November.

A great number of Americans will not even begin to think about who they will vote for until much closer to election day. Many, many things can happen between now and then that can change people's perceptions of Bush, Ross Perot and Bill Clinton.

For one thing, in today's environment of instantaneous communication, one careless slip of the tongue by a national candidate can sink him the way a reef can sink a sailboat.

For another, how the economy is doing in October will influence many people's votes. There is also the possibility of some unforeseen crisis arising and how the candidates react to it could have an enormous effect.

We all tend to have this little model in our heads of how we imagine democracy works. We fantasize that candidates come before the people and present reasoned presentations of their positions and philosophy. That we the people then, thinking only of what's best for the destiny of the nation and posterity, wisely cast our ballots for the right person.

Reality is much less comforting and, frankly, a lot more sleazy. It's easy to criticize politicians for selling their votes, but voters also sell theirs. A great many people will be voting strictly on the basis of what they think a candidate will do for them.

The so-called special interests are after all the American people. If we chose a motto on the basis of majority rule it would probably not be, "In God We Trust," but "What can you do for me today?"

I've seen more than one idealist run for office and emerge from the process a cynic because of the constant bombardment of purely selfish demands by people the candidate meets during the campaign. If you think most people are telling candidates we must balance the budget, develop a wise foreign policy, and preserve freedom for posterity, you're living in a plastic bubble.

Most of what candidates are hearing are increase my pension, cut my health care costs, help me buy a house, get me a job, cut my taxes and raise his taxes, get me a grant, do this or do that for me. The average American today does not look upon government as a mechanism for protecting his rights but rather as a benefactor. Their real quarrels with government are over distribution of the loot.

Wow, that's a cynical view of democracy, you may be thinking. I disagree. The idea that we are all supposed to be philosopher-citizens is nonsense. We talk and believe in generalities, but we deal with specifics and the real world. The health care crisis is not the generality but the bill from the hospital or the premium notice from the insurance company.

The problem of air pollution becomes reality when our eyes water and our throat constricts. The high cost of government becomes a reality when we write our check to the IRS. Crime becomes real when it is we who are mugged or it is our house that's burglarized. Infrastructure needs become real when we bust our tire on a pothole. Economics become real when we get laid off.

What produces cynicism are the fantasies and the generalizations of the intelligentsia. We could move much closer to a reality-based politics if we began by recognizing that honesty doesn't just mean not stealing, it also means admitting the truth about ourselves.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

H. Ross should explain his last name's sound

H. Ross Perot could become the next president of the United States. The latest polls indicate if the election were held today, H. Ross Perot and President Bush would be neck and neck.

Grizzard

Democrat Bill Clinton, meanwhile, would be on his way back to Arkansas with his wife, Hillary. Li'l Abner and Daisy Mae limp back to Dogpatch.

I certainly have no problem with H. Ross Perot becoming our next president.

I realize he's been a little fuzzy on issues so far, but perhaps he is doing something rare for a person considering running for political office.

Perhaps he's waiting until he's thought of some ideas that might actually work instead of blithering off the top of his head and tap dancing, as most politicians do.

What I would like to know most about H. Ross Perot is exactly how to pronounce his last name.

This stems from the fact that a lot of people have made a big deal about how I pronounce my last name.

"Do you," I've been asked a million times, "pronounce your name GRIZ-zerd, as in 'lizard,' or Griz-ZARD, as in 'tub of lard'?"

OK, one last time. It's the one that rhymes with tub of lard.

There are people who spell their last names as I do, but they pronounce it the other way, which sounds, as far as I'm concerned, too much like a chicken part.

Those of us who pronounce Grizzard as "tub of lard," don't have anything to do with those who pronounce it as something you can get at Kentucky Fried Chicken.

"Which sounds better to you, The Back Bay Griz-ZARDS, or the Trailer Park GRIZzerds?"

There are also those who have accused me of changing the pronunciation of my name from the ugly one to the pretty one.

Not true. It's been Griz-ZARD for 45 years. My distant cousin, George Grizzard, went from ZERD to ZARD after becoming a famous actor, but that's his problem.

OK, so to H. Ross Perot.

Now, we are pronouncing it Pah-ROW, but I heard a guy on television wondering if the actual pronunciation is Pear-rut, which is close to a well known species of birds.

I can go with either of those, but I was wondering if H. Ross, before he became a billionaire might have pronounced it Pea-rot, as in my garden was going real good until the pea rot set in. Imagine having a president named Pea-rot?

President Pea-rot said today, "Read my lips . . . no more federal deficit. I've paid it off myself."

What the press should do is stop pestering the man about where he stands on the issues and find out whether or not he was a Pea-rot before he became a Pah-ROW.

If so this could indicate some sort of ego problem for him or the fact that once elected president, he might go back to Pea-rot, and I'm not so certain a president whose last name sounds like something that needs to be sprayed with an insecticide can get a lot done.

Mr. Griz-ZARD, meanwhile, will go out to his yard and sit in a tub of lard and ponder this further.

Ireland faces vote for European unity, debates neutrality, abortion

BANTRY, Ireland (AP) — Ireland's debate on whether to ratify the Maastricht treaty on European union in a referendum Thursday has become entangled with some of the issues closest to Irish hearts.

The vociferous anti-abortion lobby says a yes to the treaty is a yes to abortion. The nationalists say it would end Ireland's cherished neutrality and lead to conscription into a Euro-army. The government says the alternative to the treaty is isolation and poverty.

After the surprising defeat of the treaty in Denmark's referendum on June 2, the 3.5 million people of Ireland may have it in their power to halt Europe's march toward closer political union.

The treaty, crafted in the Dutch town of Maastricht in December, provides for a single currency and monetary system and for common security and foreign policies. It will lapse unless all 12 nations in the European Community ratify it by the end of the year.

Prime Minister Albert Reynolds is stressing that Ireland's aid receipts from the European Community far exceed its contributions — he hopes for $10 billion over the next five years.

Abortion and neutrality are separate issues, he says, to be decided by other referendums later.

"Who helped us create 50,000 new manufacturing jobs since 1989?" says one giant billboard, part of the government's estimated $1 million campaign for a yes vote.

It's a powerful argument in a country with 20 percent unemployment and a third of the people receiving some form of welfare.

Three opinion polls published last week showed the treaty favored by more than 2-1, though the gap has shrunk from a month earlier. The two main opposition parties have swung behind Reynolds. So have chambers of commerce and the major farming unions.

But anti-abortionists — a potent force in a 95 percent Roman Catholic nation — fear that a protocol added to the treaty to guarantee Ireland's constitutional ban on abortion has been turned inside out by a court decision.

Ruling in the case of a 14-year-old girl who said she was raped and threatened suicide, the Supreme Court held that Ireland's constitution did allow abortion in certain cases.

"Under Maastricht the protocol will be interpreted as protecting the Supreme Court view," says William Binchy, the law professor who helps run Pro-Life, an umbrella body opposed to abortion.

Roman Catholic bishops declared that the law on abortion will be unsatisfactory whatever the referendum outcome.

National pride is an issue too. Some are reluctant to give up the independence that Ireland won barely seven decades ago.

Japan's Cabinet survives first-ever confidence motion on troops measure

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa's Cabinet won the first vote of confidence ever taken under Japan's postwar constitution as the government fought off a challenge Sunday to its plan to send troops overseas.

The unprecedented vote was meant as a tactic to prevent the opposition Socialist and Communist parties from continuing to obstruct balloting on the bill, Japan's first attempt to dispatch soldiers abroad since World War II.

A coalition of Miyazawa's governing Liberal Democrats and two centrist parties was expected to approve the bill in the lower house today after four days of literal foot-dragging by the opposition. The legislation already has passed the upper house.

The opposition parties contend the bill, which would create a 2,000-member corps for U.N. peacekeeping operations, violates Japan's pacifist constitution. They have held up voting by introducing numerous motions and "cow walking," walking extremly slowly to the ballot box.

The vote of confidence meant the lower chamber was throwing its weight behind Miyazawa and his 20 Cabinet ministers.

It prevented the opposition from slowing things down further by submitting no-confidence motions for individual Cabinet members, and it pre-empted a threatened no-confidence motion against the Cabinet that might have forced Miyazawa to dissolve Parliament.

Opposition party members tried to slow Sunday's confidence vote with a cow walk, but lower house Speaker Yoshio Sakurauchi halted the voting shortly after 7 p.m. by ordering the ballot box closed.

Opponents of the bill then stormed the speaker's podium and thrust their green "no" ballots toward him.

The Socialists said all of their 137 party members in the 512-seat lower house would resign shortly after the session resumes today and would not vote on the troops bill.

Parties plan to use balanced-budget amendment as campaign issue

By William M. Welch
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — A balanced-budget constitutional amendment is dead for this year, but that doesn't mean voters won't hear plenty more about it.

Republicans see a potent political issue and a way to put Democrats on the defensive. Congressional Democrats are countering with cuts in President Bush's budget, challenging GOP members to back up their balanced-budget talk with action.

"If you really believe in a balanced budget, let's start in the here and now, not the hereafter," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis.

To make the point, his appropriations subcommittee voted Friday to cut $1.1 billion out of Bush's $14.1 billion request for foreign aid next year.

The failure of the amendment to win the needed two-thirds majority in the House last week was a much-needed victory for House Speaker Tom Foley and his Democratic leadership.

They managed to keep 150 Democrats in line against near-total Republican support for the measure, and in the process left a clear political line in the sand.

Polls suggest there's widespread support for the notion of a constitutional amendment requiring Congress and the president to stanch the red ink now flowing at a rate of nearly $400 billion a year.

Republican congressional strategists, already expecting to gain House seats this fall, immediately announced plans to target Democrats on the issue. Never mind that neither President Reagan nor President Bush has ever come close to submitting a balanced budget — and that the amendment at issue not only had several ways out of the requirement but wouldn't take effect until 1998. That's four congresses and two presidential elections away.

"I just think it's a compelling issue," said Spencer Abraham, co-chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee. "As a Republican strategist, it's good news for our challengers.

"In every district where the incumbent Democrat voted the wrong way, I think it's going to be an issue that will work to the advantage of our Republican challenger," he said.

Bush may attempt to use the amendment vote as a re-election weapon as well, but his initial reaction was notably muted.

Meanwhile, independent presidential candidate Ross Perot surprised opponents of the amendment by joining their side in television comments the morning of the vote. Democrat Bill Clinton opposed it too. Among other objections, both said the amendment loomed as an excuse to postpone the deficit problem.

Some Democrats suggested Bush might not be quick to press the case because of the credibility question.

But "I think Bush will try to use it," said pollster Brad Coker, president of Mason-Dixon Research. "He'll probably be helped somewhat from it, but I don't think it'll be too much because (Democrats) will say, 'If you want a balanced budget, propose one.'"

Jackson challenges Clinton to focus on rebuilding plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jesse Jackson challenged Bill Clinton on Sunday to focus on plans for rebuilding America rather than engaging in "diversions" such as his criticisms of rap singer Sister Souljah's appearance on a Rainbow Coalition platform.

Clinton said he has nothing to apologize for in his remarks about Sister Souljah, whom he accused of making remarks "filled with hatred" in the aftermath of the Los Angeles riots.

The Arkansas governor, who has cinched the Democratic presidential nomination, spoke at a conference sponsored by Jackson's coalition Saturday and criticized the group for giving a forum to Sister Souljah by having her on a panel the previous night.

The singer was quoted as saying, in an interview with The Washington Post, "If black people kill black people every day, why not have a week and kill white people?"

Jackson, in a telephone interview with The Associated Press, said the principal work of the conference dealt with a 10-year plan to put people to work rebuilding the nation's infrastructure, using public and private funds.

He said the plan was submitted to Clinton, who said he would consider it.

"We do not know what made Mr. Clinton shift from focusing on the plan to rebuild America to the rap artist," Jackson said. "It is clear that the Rainbow ... does not identify with violence or the suggestion of it in its many forms."

Jackson linked Clinton's remarks to those by Vice President Dan Quayle, who criticized the producers of television's "Murphy Brown" for showing single motherhood as an acceptable lifestyle.

"We challenge those who are running ... to address the central issue of our day," he said. "Attacking Murphy Brown, attacking rap artists, are all diversions from the central issue of how to put America back to work."

Clinton, asked whether his criticism of Sister Souljah was out of line, said, "Goodness no, why would it be? I didn't injure her credibility. Here's someone who is obviously intelligent and has a lot of influence, who has used very divisive rhetoric, and I think it's wrong."

Attempts to reach Sister Souljah for comment were not immediately successful.

Although the Clinton campaign has reportedly been divided over whether Clinton should challenge core Democratic constituent groups, the candidate said his remark was "absolutely not" a calculated move to appeal to whites and anger Jackson.

Jackson said Saturday the issue should be resolved by Clinton talking to the rap singer.

Clinton made no attempt to contact the singer Sunday.

Lawyers, executives displace top college presidents

BOSTON (AP) — Some of the nation's top college presidents are leaving office, and while most of their replacements are coming from within academic ranks, increasingly, lawyers and corporate executives are taking over.

"When the going gets sticky, people tend to turn to lawyers," said Victor E. Ferrell Jr., a Washington, D.C., lawyer, who took over in October as president of Beloit College in Wisconsin.

At a time of budget deficits, plummeting enrollments and other problems, the heads of Yale, Columbia, the University of Chicago, Duke, Stanford, Michigan State and other schools have left.

Those departures follow closely the appointments of new presidents at Harvard, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, American and Tufts.

"You have the exactly equivalent situation as at IBM and Chrysler and the oil companies and the banks," said D. Stanley Carpenter, director of the Association for the Study of Higher Education at Texas A&M University. "People are leaving because their institutions are in disarray."

The presidents who have resigned this year are among the longest-serving and most prominent in higher education, and they run the most elite schools.

Many of the outgoing presidents are being replaced by other school administrators.

But like attorney Ferrell at Beloit, some campuses are being handed over to people more experienced beyond ivy-covered walls.

"They wanted somebody they thought could interact well with the outside world, rather than someone who was a member of the academy," Ferrell said.

Daniel E. Ritchie, former chief executive of the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., was appointed president of the University of Denver.

Xerox Corp. executive William Glavin was named president of Babson College in Massachusetts.

"The faculty power is such that the trustees feel they ought to have a president that's an academic person," Glavin said. "My feeling is that if you manage the place properly, you don't need an academic at the top."

The movement is a trickle, not a flood, said David Davenport, president of Pepperdine University in California and head of the American Association of Presidents of Independent Colleges and Universities.

"On the one hand, you might think, let's bring in some fresh blood from the outside," said Davenport, himself a lawyer. "On the other, they might not be accepted in the campus community, and won't accomplish anything."

Lawsuit challenging homeless law goes to federal court

MIAMI (AP) — Homeless people will take on the city in federal court today, armed with a novel lawsuit that challenges ordinances against living in public places.

"We're saying that you can't make it criminal to be homeless," said Benjamin Waxman, lead attorney for the city's homeless population, estimated at 5,000 to 7,000.

The lawsuit, initially brought against the city in 1988 by several homeless people, followed years of police sweeps of public parks, roadside "box cities" and other public places where the homeless spend nights.

Later, the case being argued by Waxman and other American Civil Liberties Union lawyers became a class-action on behalf of metropolitan Miami's entire homeless population.

"We're talking about sleeping, eating, standing, congregating, bathing — and doing all of the kinds of things that you and I do in our homes and never think twice about," Waxman said.

The ACLU seeks a ruling from U.S. District Judge C. Clyde Atkins that city ordinances prohibiting sleeping in public places and use of public parks through the night are unconstitutional "as applied in these circumstances."

Waxman said he and his colleagues will argue that the city "cannot do this to people who have no choice and cannot avoid the circumstances in which they find themselves."

For Mary Coombs, law professor at the University of Miami, the importance of the case is clear.

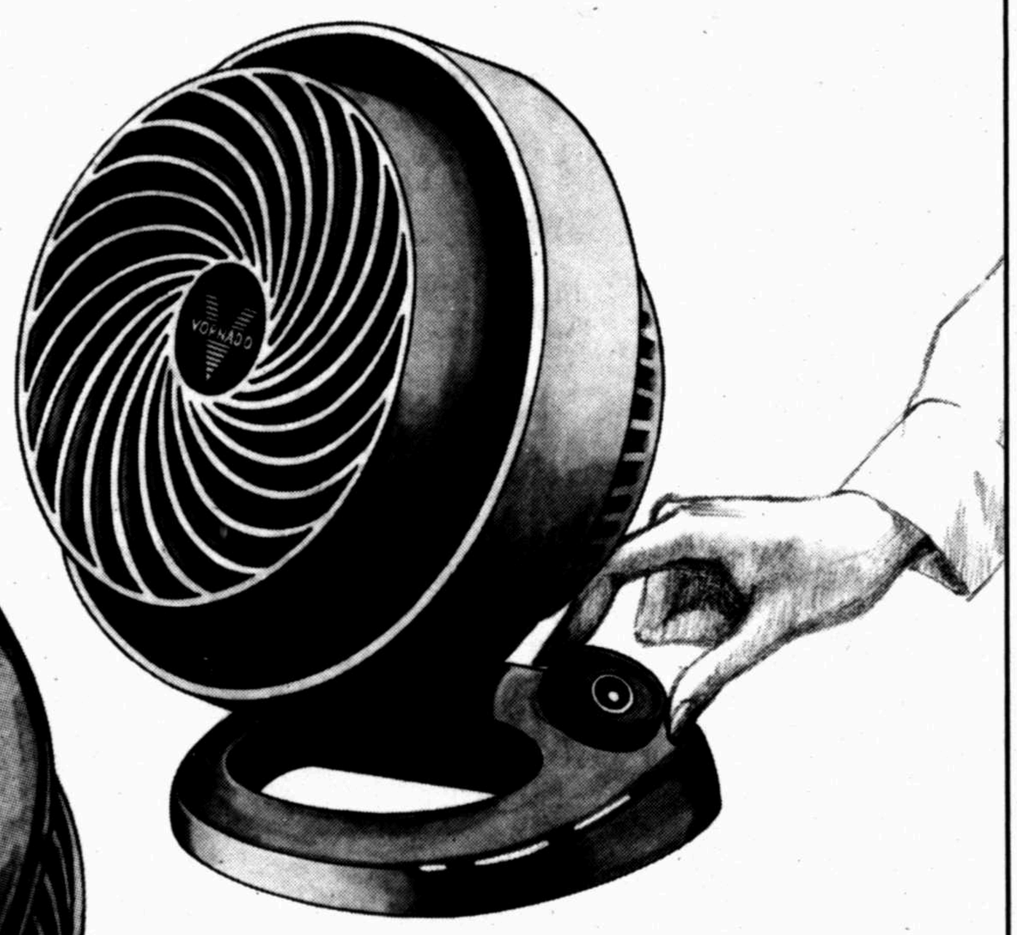

"First of all, it's significant that there's a lawsuit on behalf of the homeless at all," she said. "I think its the creative use of the principles we've all taken for granted but not fully considered — like the right to have a place to carry out basic bodily functions."

The ACLU attorneys will seek a declaration from the court that the city has been violating the constitutional rights of the homeless and will ask Atkins to order the city to stop "this unconstitutional practice."

Jody and Serena share a common bond. Both suffered debilitating strokes in 1991 and are slowly relearning a task they took for granted for nearly seven decades.

"I feel like I'm getting stronger too," Jody said. "But you just don't know how much trouble it is now to put one foot in front of the other."

Jody and Serena spend their days at Shepherd's Adult Day Care Center under the close supervision of Jean Reeves and Jeff Vaughn. On any given day they are joined by about a dozen other people who sometimes need help caring for themselves.

They spend their weekdays sitting in their wheelchairs or on the couches in a big room at the center just north of downtown Midland, and they wait for Jeff and Jean to help bring the outside world back into their lives.

"Jeff is always right involved with us, he's a good kid. We always get together in a little circle and exercise with some music sometimes. We get together and talk about our problems. We all get along pretty well," Jewl Decker said. "They keep us pretty busy if we want to be. That Jeff, he sure is a good guy."

The others seem to agree.

"We read articles that Jeff thinks are pertinent in the news," Jody said. "...something where we can all get our two cents in. And I always do."

Jeff, 22, is the resident activities director and a certified medication aide.

"I try to have activities that stimulate their mental and physical needs," he said. "I've been working in nursing homes for several years and this is certainly a different pace. But I enjoy it, it's nice to know we're making it easier on the families when they go to work. And working with these wonderful people is very rewarding."

Jean admits she wouldn't know what to do without Jeff's help.

"He has a terrific handle on them. And they all seem to appreciate it very much," she said.

But no one seems as grateful to Jeff as Serena.

"He helps me walk. I like walking. It's been hard since the stroke but walking helps," she said slowly, struggling to form the words that are harder to find since the stroke.

Jean, a registered nurse, is the director of the center.

"I handle all the paperwork when we welcome a new resident and I take care of any other business or busy work," she said.

On a recent day, Jean spent most of the day trying to find someone to fix the van. Jeff or a volunteer driver transports the residents to and from the center each day.

"We pick up most of them in the mornings starting around 8 a.m. and drop them off usually around 4:30 p.m.," Jean said. "It's a big chore, and when the van isn't working it's nearly impossible. We also need volunteers."

Jody and the others are worried the van eventually will break down permanently.

"They do so much for us but it's hard when the van is always broken. It's hard for them to run this place for us," she said. "There are a lot of us that rely on this place."

The day care veterans are adjusting to three newcomers, who all started coming to the center a few weeks ago.

"It usually takes a day or two for the rookies to open up, but we try to help them get used to us," Jody said.

"Here, it's an atmosphere where people can come together and have contact with different people who are in the same situations," she said.

Jody suffered her stroke 14 months ago as she got out of her car following a 200 mile drive from her home in Alpine.

"I was coming to Midland to do my taxes and stepped out of the car and fell down. I didn't even feel anything. I didn't know what happened," she said. "A man, who I guess knew that CPR, was talking and asking if I knew my name and all that stuff. The next thing I knew I was in the hospital."

After the stroke, she moved in with her son, but spent her days alone, doing nothing but watching television.

"I had to have someone daily take care of

DEATHS

Kenneth Goddard

STEPHENVILLE — Services for former Midlander Kenneth L. Goddard, 77, of Stephenville are set for 2 p.m. Tuesday at Lacy Funeral Home Chapel with Dr. Dan Murray officiating. Burial will follow in Mission Gardens of Memory.

He died Sunday at an Erath County hospital.

He was born Feb. 24, 1915, in Ringling, Okla. He married Bonnie Culpepper on Nov. 19, 1947, in Liberal, Kan.

He moved to Stephenville from Midland 20 years ago.

He was a mechanic for Gulf Oil Co. and then owned and operated G & M Pump Co. in Odessa.

He served in the U.S. Army Air Corp during World War II. He was a member of the First Baptist Church, the Stephenville V.F.W. and the International Royal Rovers.

Survivors include his wife; a son, Kenton L. Goddard of Duncan, Okla.; two daughters, Debra Gray of Stephenville and DeAnn Longoria of Spearman; a sister, Mavis Carthen of San Angelo; eight grandchildren, two great-grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Memorials may be directed to The American Heart Association Erath County Division, 1024 W. Jones St., Stephenville, 76401.

Harris Ausburne

Graveside services for Harris L. "Ozzie" Ausburne are set for 3 p.m. today in Resthaven Memorial Park with the Rev. Gary Grady officiating. Arrangements are with Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Saturday at his home.

He was born Oct. 29, 1920, in Wills Point. He had spent most of his life in Midland, Odessa and Sweetwater.

He served in the U.S. Army Air Corps in Tunisia, Sicily, Normandy, Northern France and in Rhineland Central during World War II.

He married Marjorie Louise Denhan on May 20, 1958, in Odessa. He worked at Al and Joe Meat Market in Midland until his retirement.

Survivors include a son, Ozzie Lee Ausburne of Arlington; a daughter, Lou Deane Littlefield of Stanton; three brothers, Gene S. Ausburne of Sweetwater, Bobby D. Ausburne of Mexia and Billy G. Ausburne of California; two sisters, Francis M. McDonald of Sweetwater and Betty J. Archibald of Big Spring; two grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Memorials may be directed to Christmas in April.

Mary Jones

Services for Mary Catherine Jones are set for 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity with Allen Whitman officiating. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

She died Sunday at her home.

She was born Sept. 15, 1925, in Cleburne. She later moved with her family to Houston. She graduated from Lamar High School. She worked in Houston during World War II.

She had been a resident of Midland since 1976. She was a member of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church and of Duplicate Bridge Club at Allison Cancer Center.

She was preceded in death by a daughter, Leigh Boyle Jones on July 17, 1981.

Survivors include a son, Richard D. Jones Jr. of Austin; and one granddaughter.

Memorials may be directed to the charity of one's choice.

Frank Drake

ROSCOE — Services for former Midlander Frank Edgar Drake, 88, are set for 10 a.m. Tuesday at Roscoe Church of Christ with the Rev. Terry Danley officiating. Burial will be in Gardens of Memories in Sweetwater.

He died Sunday at a Rolling Plains hospital.

He was born March 16, 1904, in Eastland County. He married Annie M. Jennings in Sweetwater in 1927.

He was a former mechanic for Ford Motor Co. He was a member of the Roscoe Church of Christ. He lived in Roscoe since 1971.

He was preceded in death by a son, W.L. Drake, in 1979.

Survivors include his wife, Annie M. Drake of Roscoe; two daughters, Joan Moore and Frankie Blair, both of Comanche; a son, Robert Drake of Roscoe; 13 grandchildren and 21 great-grandchildren.

Tudie Hudson

Graveside services for Tudie Gene Hudson, 62, are set for 11 a.m. Tuesday at Fairview Cemetery with the Rev. Bob Porterfield of West Kentucky Street Baptist Church officiating. Services are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

The family will accept visitors at 4319 B Storey today and Tuesday morning.

me. For several months, when my sons went to work, I didn't have any contact with the outside world besides the TV. It made for a dull life. I became a vegetable almost," she said.

But then her son heard about the day care center, and for Jody, things have been looking up ever since.

"She wasn't happy in the beginning. She wouldn't do much talking and basically kept to herself," Jean said. "But now she is very outgoing. She feels so much better about herself."

But Jody's transformation was deliberate.

Nearly every morning, with the help of a friend at the center, Jody puts on her face.

"The makeup makes me feel so much better. For a long time, it really helped me feel like I could take on the world," she said.

Sarpalius predicts Perot win

AMARILLO (AP) — U.S. Rep. Bill Sarpalius is predicting that undeclared presidential candidate Ross Perot would carry the state of Texas in the upcoming White House race.

In an interview Saturday, the Amarillo Democrat said he does not think any candidate will win the necessary electoral votes for an undisputed victory.

Sarpalius said he believes the U.S. House will be forced to select among Perot, President Bush and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton.

Perot, a Dallas billionaire businessman, has said he would run as an independent if supporters have his name placed on the ballots of most states.

"I will vote for whomever carries my district," Sarpalius said.

The 13th Congressional District representative said he isn't worried the voters' anti-incumbent mood will hurt his own re-election chances in November. He faces Republican Beau Boulter.

Conroe police await autopsy results

CONROE (AP) — Police said Sunday they were awaiting autopsy results on a former Conroe city councilman and his wife, a bank executive, who were found shot to death in their home.

The bodies of Raymond Walston, 46, and his wife, Faith, 50, were found in their home by one of their daughters about 11:15 a.m. Saturday. Police said they found no sign of forced entry or missing property, and they did not believe an outside intruder was involved.

"It's still up in the air, to tell you the truth," Lt. Wayne McCarty said Sunday. "We've got two dead people. I can't comment on anything other than that."

Barbara Martin, board controller for the Harris County Medical Examiner's office, referred questions to Conroe officials, saying she could release no information on the Walstons because they were from Montgomery County.

Police Chief Harold Goodwin has said no details of the incident will be released until after the autopsies are performed.

Justice of the Peace Grady Spikes said Sunday that the couple's bodies were found in their bedroom. Walston was shot in the head, while his wife had a gunshot wound in the head near the neck, both from a .38-caliber gun, he said.

Spikes said he was awaiting autopsy results before determining whose fingerprints were on the gun. Investigators did not find a suicide note, he said.

"My first apparent thought is that it's a homicide-suicide," he said. "The gun was lying between these two people, so either one of them could have had it."

Walston, a real estate developer, had been a city councilman for 13 years, until his defeat in May. Mrs. Walston was a vice president at NationsBank. Both were active in the Conroe community.

"It's a tragedy for the community," Spikes said Sunday.

Conroe, population 27,000, is about 35 miles north of Houston.

Advocates criticize social services overhaul

DALLAS (AP) — Changes designed to better protect Texas children from abuse and neglect might not be strong enough to prevent the crimes that led to the deaths of 97 children last year, advocates say.

An overhaul of all social service and health agencies effective Sept. 1 will turn child abuse investigations over to a new Department of Protective and Regulatory Services. The agency will have authority to remove from their homes children identified as being at risk.

But some worry the new law isn't sufficient.

"Will it make a difference? I am afraid it is window dressing, that it just transfers responsibilities and nothing will change," said Randy Burton, a Houston lawyer who has warred with Children's Protective Services since the mid-1980s.

CPS currently has to prove that the child is in imminent danger or involved in an immediate crisis, to justify removal.

Ann Heiligenstein, state director of CPS, said the agency investigated 90,601 reports of abused or neglected children in 1991 and confirmed 34,759 cases.

Unconfirmed doesn't necessarily mean the reports weren't true. But they could not be proved, or the people named could not be found.

Fred Seale, director of the state agency's Region 5, which includes Dallas and Tarrant counties, said caseworkers live daily with the possibility that a mistake in judgment could be fatal.

He said he shares some frustrations voiced by critics.

Burton, for instance, says child abuse is treated as a social ill, not as a crime. Burton contends that trained criminal investigators, not state social workers, should investigate complaints of abuse.

He also pointed to what he sees as a conflict between the agency's central mission — "to preserve the family unit" — and its responsibility to remove endangered children from harm.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

■ Award winners named

Winners of the Texas Press Women's Communication Contest were recently announced at the organization's 49th annual state convention in Wichita Falls.

Award winners from District 2 were:

Publication for general or specialized circulation: Johnnye Montgomery, first place, and Debra Ward, second place.

Special articles, travel: Mary Frances Beverley, second place.

Publications regularly edited by entrant, general or specialized magazines, black/white or spot color: Patty Cooper and Cindi Mladenka, M Magazine, second place.

The following public relations-/promotion/publicity awards were received by Lana Cunningham: audiovisuals, original film or videotape, second place; public relations printed materials, external annual report, second place; brochure, one-to-three color, nonprofit and educational, honorable mention; news release, three releases dealing with the same topic or campaign, second place.

More than 400 entries were submitted with only 95 winning awards.

■ Bureau to give survey

Employees of the U.S. Census Bureau will visit a sample of area residents this week to collect labor force information for the Current Population Survey, according to Alfonso Mirabal, director of the bureau's regional office in Dallas.

The local data will contribute to June's national employment and unemployment picture to be released July 3 by the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS). The Census Bureau collects monthly labor force data for BLS from a national sample of 71,000 households. This month's survey will include questions on fertility and birth expectations.

Information supplied by individuals is kept confidential by law. Only statistical totals are published.

■ Host families sought

Beverley Self of Midland, local coordinator for the Academic Year in America high school exchange program, is interviewing families in this part of Texas to host a foreign exchange student.

The cross-cultural learning program places teen-agers from Europe, Asia and Latin America with American families for a semester or a school year.

Texas has been host to dozens of foreign students this year. "Springtime is the most exciting time of the program year for these students," Ms. Self said. "They love the prom, yearbooks and class rings." Customs like these, which are part of any American teenager's experience, are new and different for teens from abroad.

The program also gives American families the chance to learn from a foreign culture. Exchange students bring their holiday customs, their native language, and the special dishes of their homelands into their American homes, Ms. Self said, adding, "It's like a trip abroad without ever leaving home. These interesting young ambassadors soon win the hearts of their hosts. They arrive as strangers and become 'sons' and 'daughters' in their American families."

Next year's participants, chosen from hundreds of applicants, will arrive in Texas in August. They all speak English, are covered by full medical insurance, and have their own spending money. Host families receive a travel scholarship, worth up to $800 off the cost of an AIFS study/travel abroad program.

Families interested in choosing a Spanish, German or Brazilian student to host for the 1992-'93 school year should contact Ms. Self at (915) 520-3413 to set up an interview, or call Regional Director Karen Hall at 1-800-322-4678.

Texas billionaire entertains experts in search for political platform

DALLAS (AP) — Ross Perot is trying to make up his mind, but he says he needs help.

The strong-willed and often outspoken Texas billionaire, now a blooming presidential candidate, has promised to lay out his positions on important issues. But deciding on those positions has turned into a political spectacle.

A daily parade of environmentalists and economists, health care experts and homeless advocates, stream through Perot's Dallas offices for meetings with his aides.

Perot has hired his own issues experts from all over the ideological spectrum. He has high-level teams of conservatives, liberals, lawyers and analysts set up to study issues, and low-level teams of phone-bank volunteers to draft their own suggested platforms.

"Like other things in the Perot campaign, if it is all for show, it is a good show," said Ann Lewis, former political director of the Democratic National Committee.

"It is a strange way to do business, isn't it?" added Brookings Institution analyst Stephen Hess. "I guess it will tell us as much about the candidate as any other way. What comes out will be the distillate of what he accepts and what he rejected."

Never before, analysts say, has a candidate made a serious run for president with such a clean slate — no voting record, no track record in public office or as a military leader.

Even with a long history of public pronouncements — he opposed the Gulf War, tackled education reform in Texas and as a prospective juror told lawyers he supports capital punishment — Perot now has the luxury of basically starting from scratch.

"We've invited everybody, and people invite themselves," said Perot spokesman Jim Squires. "Dozens of people come in here within a week to present their ideas or answer our questions. ... Some are names you'd recognize, some are not."

Among the more recognizable names is Richard Nixon, whom Perot visited at the ex-president's New Jersey home last week for advice on foreign policy.

Perot's staff has called more than 1,000 groups — insurance brokers, astronomers, religious groups, gun control advocates and the National Rifle Association — seeking information on their issues. Someone even called a doctor to find out which drug addiction treatments work best.

Callers to his 800-number also register their opinions, which are fed into a computer database.

Having met personally with mayors, minorities, Republicans, Democrats, experts and educators, Perot seems to please them all. He tells some groups he favors expanding inner-city programs for children and prenatal care, for example, and others he'll fight for a cut in the capital gains tax rate.

"Ross is very capable of separating the wheat from the chaff, making up his own mind," said Tom Luce, his longtime lawyer and campaign chairman. "My job, the campaign's job, is to get the best advice and counsel across the board available to him for him to make up his own mind."

"What is different about this is clearly with Ross Perot you have someone with virtually no political record now trying to figure out what kind of president he will be," said Lewis.

Clinton and President Bush will run, to an extent, on party platforms that result from compromises. Previous outsiders running for president — businessman Wendell Willkie or Gen. Dwight Eisenhower — have run through normal party channels and adopted party lines.

"There's much to be said for a platform that truly represents the view of the presidential candidate," Hess said.

Still, he added, "you would expect a person who had reached that rung in the political ladder to have very strong views. So one almost wonders about a person who has reached a point in life whether they can look in the mirror and say I should be president of the United States, and then also say I don't know where I stand on X, Y, or Z."

Number of women seeking office increases

AUSTIN (AP) — Women mayors in big Texas cities and countless female officeholders are credited with helping Ann Richards become governor and bolster the chances of other female candidates, political observers say.

"It started when everyone woke up to the fact that women were mayors of seven major cities," said Florence Shapiro, a former Plano mayor and Republican who is challenging state Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall.

Richards said the help runs even deeper.

"I wouldn't be governor today," Richards said, "if it were not for all the elected officials who have been doing such an incredible job on the school boards and on the commissioners' courts and city councils.

"Everybody looks at them and says, 'Well, hey, they've done a pretty good job there. Maybe we ought to promote this one on up,' " said Richards, a former Travis County commissioner.

Now four women are trying to break into the male-dominated Texas Congressional delegation. And three women are vying for statewide office.

Railroad Commissioner Lena Guerrero of Austin is seeking election to that office, to which Richards appointed her two years ago.

If she wins, Ms. Guerrero, who is Hispanic, would become the first woman and first member of an ethnic minority elected to that position since the agency was created more than a century ago.

Six women are competing for the Texas Senate, which has three women among its 31 members.

Thirty-four women are running for the Texas House of Representatives, which has only 18 women among its 150 members. Twenty of those candidates survived contested primaries this spring.

State District Judge Rose Spector of San Antonio, a Democratic candidate for the Texas Supreme Court, and 5th Court of Appeals Justice Sue Lagarde of Dallas, a Republican candidate for the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, are hoping to break the all-male grip on those two courts.

There's even a mother-daughter team on the ballot in Angelina County. State Board of Education member Mary Perkins of Lufkin is seeking re-election. Her daughter Holly Perkins-Meyers won a three-person race in the Democratic primary for a county court-at-law judgeship and faces no opposition in November.

"I think the difference is women candidates are being taken seriously. We've always had some who were willing to run," said Melissa Millecam, president of the Texas Women's Political Caucus.

Seabrook mayor, 11 others list restaurant as voting residence

SEABROOK (AP) — Seabrook Mayor Larry King and 11 other people list their residences on voting logs as a shipyard restaurant in the Galveston Bay community.

King, who doesn't own a house in the southeast Harris County town; his wife, Malanee; and 10 others are registered to vote in city elections by claiming the Regatta Inn Restaurant as their residence.

"It does seem curious," Maria Hayes, an assistant district attorney in the special crimes bureau, said of the Kings and others listing the restaurant as their address on voter registration cards.

Ms. Hayes told the Houston Chronicle in Sunday's editions her office is looking into the matter but has reached no conclusions.

Seven of the 12 registered voters with the restaurant address voted in the May 2 election, in which King won a second term unopposed. All seven cast absentee ballots, voting records show.

Current Texas Department of Public Safety driver's license records show Mrs. King's address as the couple's Bayview home in Galveston County.

DPS records show addresses including Houston, League City, Kemah and Galveston for some of the others listing the restaurant on the Seabrook voter registration log.

King listed the restaurant as his address on the city's candidate filing application. His driver's license also has that address.

Records with the Galveston County Appraisal District, however, show King as the owner of the Bayview residence, for which he has been granted a homestead tax exemption since 1984.

Mark Bell, a spokesman for Secretary of State John Hannah, whose office oversees voter registration, said any challenge on the residency question would have to be made on a local level.

Advocates question youth group's misleading claims

AUSTIN (AP) — A youth program that recruits troubled teenagers for a free summer camp is being accused of having cult ties, making misleading claims and phony endorsements, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The Austin American-Statesman said that claims made by Youth At Risk Austin are distorted or can't be independently verified. And some experts criticize the program's techniques as dangerous, the newspaper reported.

San Francisco-based Breakthrough Foundation/Youth At Risk promises "dramatic results" with teen-agers who have histories of drug dependency, criminal histories and poor school performance. The group has 34 chapters across the nation.

In Texas, chapters have been organized in Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Beaumont, Corpus Christi, Abilene and Lubbock.

"Trust me. Trust me," says Sarah Ready Bush, executive director of Youth At Risk Austin. "Washington checked us out," she says, pointing out that the Breakthrough Youth At Risk program was chosen as one of President Bush's Points of Light in 1989.

But research by the Austin American-Statesman raised several questions:

- Brochures claim dramatic results such as "Felony Crime: reduced by 50 percent" among participants. These are not substantiated.
- Working relationships with agencies and non-profit groups in Austin, as claimed, are exaggerated.
- Claims of corporate support from such entities as IBM-Austin, Lexus of Austin and the H.E.B. Foundation are false.

Suspicion has grown so much that state Rep. Glen Maxey, D-Austin, and Austin Mayor Bruce Todd have withdrawn or declined their support in recent weeks. The Austin Independent School District also has distanced itself.

"They have things to hide, definitely," says Betty Phillips, a leading child and mental health advocate and chairwoman-elect of the Travis County Child Welfare Board.

Ms. Phillips analyzed four independent evaluations of Youth At Risk programs in other cities.

"Not one of the 'dramatic results' listed in the group's literature was validated according to accepted standards for research," she said.

Child advocates and national cult experts are particularly concerned about the program's alleged ties to controversial "est" guru Werner Erhard.

DEAR ABBY

Pet peeves form vexing menagerie

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: A while back, I had a column on the misuse of words and other irritants, and named a few. I then asked readers to send in their pet peeves concerning common mistakes in grammar and pronunciation. How's this for a collection?

Van Buren

The "lie" and "lay" confusion: To "lay" means to set or put — to "lie" means to recline. Remember, chick ens lay eggs. People lie down.

The use of "all are not" when the person means "not all are." Example: Saying, "All women are not beautiful," when one means, "Not all women are beautiful."

We frequently hear "between you and I." Wrong! It's "between you and me." Another irritant is "try and" instead of "try to." For example, one may try to win — then lose. But how can one try and win — and then lose?

One hears supposedly educated people say "between she and I" instead of the correct "between her and me."

And how about the word "irregardless"? Just plain "regardless" will do, but regardless of how "irregardless" grates on one's nerves, it has nosed its way into the dictionary. (It means "regardless.")

Talk about overusing a word, I nominate "basically." People who start every other sentence with the word "basically" usually have limited vocabularies.

My pet peeve — double negatives: "I don't know nothing" and "We don't go nowhere" are the worst offenders.

Some people think the plural of "you" is "youse." It's not. "You" is both singular and plural.

The word "forte" (meaning strong point) is pronounced "fort" — not "for-tay"!

Also, people use the word "snuck" instead of "sneaked." Although "snuck" somehow sneaked into the dictionary, it's not used by people who use proper English.

Ask someone to define "hoi polloi," and it's a good bet that he will say "high-tone or upper class." Actually, it means "the masses" — or the general population.

"Nuclear" is pronounced "nuke-lee-er" — not "nuke-you-ler"!

And how about "he's got," "she's got" and "they've got"? The correct word is "has." ("He has," "she has" ... "got" has got to go!)

The month of February has two "R's" in it — but we keep hearing "Feb-yoo-ary."

We frequently hear that a man has "prostrate" trouble, when actually he has "pros-TATE" trouble.

Another error — using the word "myself" instead of "me." Example: "If you have any questions, see Bobby or myself after the meeting." "See Bobby or me" is correct.

The "infer" and "imply" mix-up: The writer "implies"; the reader "infers." (It's like pitching and catching.)

Please do not say "o" instead of "zero." Or use the word "that" when "who" is correct. ("That" refers to inanimate objects — "who" to people.)

Now, lend me your ear: Don't use "loan" as a verb, as in, "Loan me a twenty." It should be, "Lend me a twenty." "Loan" is a noun; "lend" is a verb.

Finally, the misuse of the word "ask": Some say "ax" instead of "ask." I would much rather be "asked" than "axed." Wouldn't you?

This one's for everybody, from teens to seniors! Pen pals meet after 50-year relationship

By Gene Lehmann
Associated Press writer

ATHENS, Texas — For 50 years, they shared their dreams, hopes, heartaches, and lives with each other.

In those 50 years, they have grown from 10-year-old children to adults.

They are the "dearest of friends."

They have talked on the telephone once in 50 years.

They met each other face-to-face for the first time June 1.

"I don't even know how to describe the feelings I have. We are the dearest of friends and I feel so close to her," said Athens native Nelda Wilbanks.

Hilary Law beamed.

It started in 1942. World War II was raging in Europe.

In Athens, Texas, Nelda Lee, 10, read where she could become a pen pal with someone in England. She wrote.

That letter arrived, but the girl featured by the magazine had been inundated with letters from Americans, so she passed the letter on to a friend, who passed it on to a boy named Donald Moore.

Moore gave the letter to classmate Hilary Fishwick, 10.

Thus, began a 50-year correspondence and friendship between the two little girls, who grew up, married, and had children, and, all the while, wrote and shared the experiences of life with each other.

The pair have written at least once a month since 1942. Hilary Fishwick Law has kept all of Nelda Lee Wilbanks' letters — about 600 — and said she will probably give them to Mrs. Wilbanks' children.

"After all, it's a history of her life," Mrs. Law said.

In those letters are Mrs. Wilbank's accomplishments while attending Athens High School, her engagement and marriage, the arrival of two children and ultimately two grandchildren, the untimely death of Mr. Wilbanks in a tractor accident on the family farm about a year ago.

"That (letter) was the hardest one," Mrs. Law said of Roy Wilbanks' death. "I think really that's what brought us together."

"We wanted to get together; to come here year after year," but the opportunity never materialized, Mrs. Law said. When the British farmwife received Mrs. Wilbanks' letter concerning Mr. Wilbank's death, it was the catalyst that finally made them determined to meet.

Mrs. Law and her husband, Gerald, are semiretired and operate a horseradish farm on the outskirts of Chester, England, near Liverpool, in Cheshire County. They formerly operated a dairy business in a county world famous for its cheese.

They raised three children and have three grandchildren.

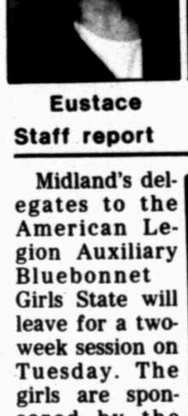

Mrs. Wilbanks is a 33-year veteran of the Athens Independent School District, teaching language arts and social studies.

She has been showing her friends something special — Texas.

"Texas hospitality is extraordinary. Everyone is so friendly here," Mrs. Law exclaimed, while laughing about the differing accents between she and her pen pal.

"I've been showing them how Texans do things," Mrs. Wilbanks explained with pride. She has introduced her English friend to barbecue, the Texas lottery, Tex-Mex cuisine, and fried green tomatoes.

Delegates to leave for session

Eustace

Davis

Staff report

Midland's delegates to the American Legion Auxiliary Bluebonnet Girls State will leave for a two-week session on Tuesday. The girls are sponsored by the Woods W. Lynch Unit 19 American Legion Auxiliary.

Bunnell

Those attending this year are:

Ashley Bunnell, a student at Midland High School, who is the daughter of Douglas and Charlene Bunnell.

Natasha Eustace, a student at Lee High School, who is the daughter of Tom and Natalie Eustace.

Jenny Davis, a student at Greenwood High School, who is the daughter of Jimmy and Kim Davis.

The girls will spend 11 days at Texas Luthern College in Seguin as citizens of the mytical 51st state — "Girls State." The citizens organize their own city, county and state governments; elect officials according to regular procedures; debate new laws in their legislature and administer justice through law enforcement agencies and courts.

As many as 580 Texas high school juniors will participate in the program, whose purpose is to educate young women in the duties, privileges, rights and responsibilities of American citizenship.

Alternates from Midland are: Christy Hamilton, Midland High; Jessica Wiggins, Lee High; and Marla Brewer, Midland High (for the Greenwood delegate).

The $250 registration fee and roundtrip airfare are provided by the local sponsoring Auxiliary unit.

Bulls blaze title trail

■ Chicago fights off a fourth-quarter deficit for a 97-93 victory and a second straight NBA title.

Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bulls made a furious fourth-quarter comeback with Michael Jordan on the bench, then jumped on his back for their second straight NBA title Sunday.

Jordan scored 12 of his 33 points in the last 6:01 and the Bulls held the Portland Trail Blazers to 14 points in the final period of a 97-93 decision that gave Chicago a 4-2 NBA Finals victory.

Trailing by 17 in the third quarter and 79-64 after three periods, the Bulls rallied with Scottie Pippen the only starter on the court. They started the period by scoring 14 of the first 16 points, closing to 81-78 before Jordan returned.

Jordan's first basket of the quarter, with 6:01 left, pulled Chicago to 83-82 before Pippen's 3-pointer tied it 85-85 40 seconds later.

After Jordan tied it again at 87-87, he stole the ball from Buck Williams and dunked for Chicago's first lead since early in the game.

After a layup by Clyde Drexler, Pippen, who scored 26 points, gave the Bulls the lead for good with a jumper with 2:22 left. Jordan followed with another basket at the 1:39 mark for a 93-89 lead.

Two free throws by Drexler were answered by Jordan's layup with 35 seconds left, making it 95-91 with 35 seconds left. After two free throws by Jerome Kersey, who matched Drexler with 24 points for the Blazers, Jordan dribbled the clock down to 11.8 seconds before his two free throws concluded the scoring.

Kersey's missed 3-point attempt with 4.7 seconds left was rebounded by John Paxson, setting off jubilant cheering and singing by the Bulls and the delirious sellout crowd.

"Everybody contributed," Jordan said. "I had a rough first half but I was able to get in there in the fourth quarter."

Twenty minutes after the game ended, the Bulls returned to the court to greet most of the crowd which was still at their seats singing songs that were blaring over the public address system. Jordan stood atop the scorers table with two fingers raised to signify the consecutive titles.

"It's so gratifying for me personally," Jordan said. "I went through a lot of hard times this year and I stayed strong."

Chicago is the NBA's third repeat champion in six years, but unlike last season, when the Bulls lost only two postseason games on the way to their first NBA title, they struggled in the 1992 playoffs.

They lost seven times and had 2-2 ties in each of their last three series against New York, Cleveland and Portland. But they won Game 5 each time and beat the Knicks in seven games and the Cavaliers and Blazers in six.

"These players did it themselves last year, but this season, we had to dig it out of them," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said.

Jordan, named Most Valuable Player, is the second player to be voted MVP of both the regular season and Finals and the first to win both awards in consecutive years. Larry Bird was MVP for the Boston Celtics in 1984 and 1986.

Jordan's 35.8 scoring average is the highest ever for a winning player in the Finals, surpassing his own 31.2 mark of a year ago. The Finals scoring record of 40.8 by Rick Barry for San Francisco in 1967 was in a losing effort.

Portland overcame another poor shooting start to take a 15-point lead in the second quarter, then nearly folded when

Jordan crowned series MVP again

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Another year, another championship trophy, another MVP award.

"But I hope I don't have another year like this one," Michael Jordan said only half-jokingly Sunday in the aftermath of the Chicago Bulls' 97-93 victory in Game 6 of the NBA Finals.

"This has been a very, very maturing year."

Jordan

To be sure, it was that and a whole lot more. To no one's surprise, Jordan was as superhuman as ever on the court, leading the Bulls to a 67-15 regular-season mark, the third-best in NBA history, capturing his sixth straight scoring championship in the bargain.

Palli tops ShopRite

SOMERS POINT, N.J. (AP) — Anne-Marie Palli ended a 9-year victory drought by rolling in a 2-foot birdie on the first playoff hole to win the $400,000 ShopRite LPGA Classic on Sunday.

The victory was only the second on the LPGA Tour for the 37-year-old Palli and capped an improbable comeback that saw her make up two strokes on the final hole of regulation to force a playoff with Laura Davies.

Davies didn't let Palli back into the tournament. Betsy King did.

King, playing in a twosome in front the second-round co-leaders, came to the par-4, 390-yard 18th hole at the Greate Bay Country Club with a one-stroke lead over Davies and a two-shot advantage over Palli.

Hydroplane death

DETROIT (AP) — Flags flew at half-staff and racegoers observed a moment of silence Sunday to remember a hydroplane boat driver who died from injuries suffered in a high-speed crash.

Paul Smith, 42, of Oakland County's West Bloomfield Township was pronounced dead about 8 a.m. Sunday at Detroit Receiving Hospital, spokeswoman Diane Cuper said.

Smith was driving the limited-class Grand Prix boat Hydrophobia when it broke apart late Saturday morning during a qualifying heat in the American Power Boat Association Silver Cup race. Officials estimated the boat was traveling 100 to 125 mph at the time.

Some drivers and crew members wore red and white ribbons at the race Sunday to honor Smith.

Angels open homestand with 7-4 victory

■ Midland wins its third straight Texas League game while extending San Antonio's losing string to 12 games.

By Terry Williamson
Sports editor

The Dog Days of August haven't hit the Texas League, but don't tell that to the San Antonio Missions and the Midland Angels.

If it isn't the dirty dog days, it may at least be the Days of Adversity and good enough for an afternoon soap. Midland and San Antonio are two teams facing adversity in opposite directions.

Midland easily defeated the Missions 7-4 Sunday night at Angels Stadium to begin the longest homestand (12 games) of the year. But it came after both teams faced a nightmare June 14.

The Angels had to go 14 innings to defeat El Paso, 6-5, in a game that started on Saturday and finished Sunday morning. Then it was a flight to Midland to meet the Missions in a game scheduled for 6 p.m.

But the Missions went 12 innings Saturday to lose to Wichita, 5-4. Weather forced the Missions to fly from Wichita to Tulsa to Wichita to Dallas to Midland. They were late, needless to say, and the game started 50 minutes late.

And for San Antonio the day was bad enough, but the loss extended the Mission losing streak to a horrid 12 games.

However, Mission manager Jerry Royster isn't looking for excuses.

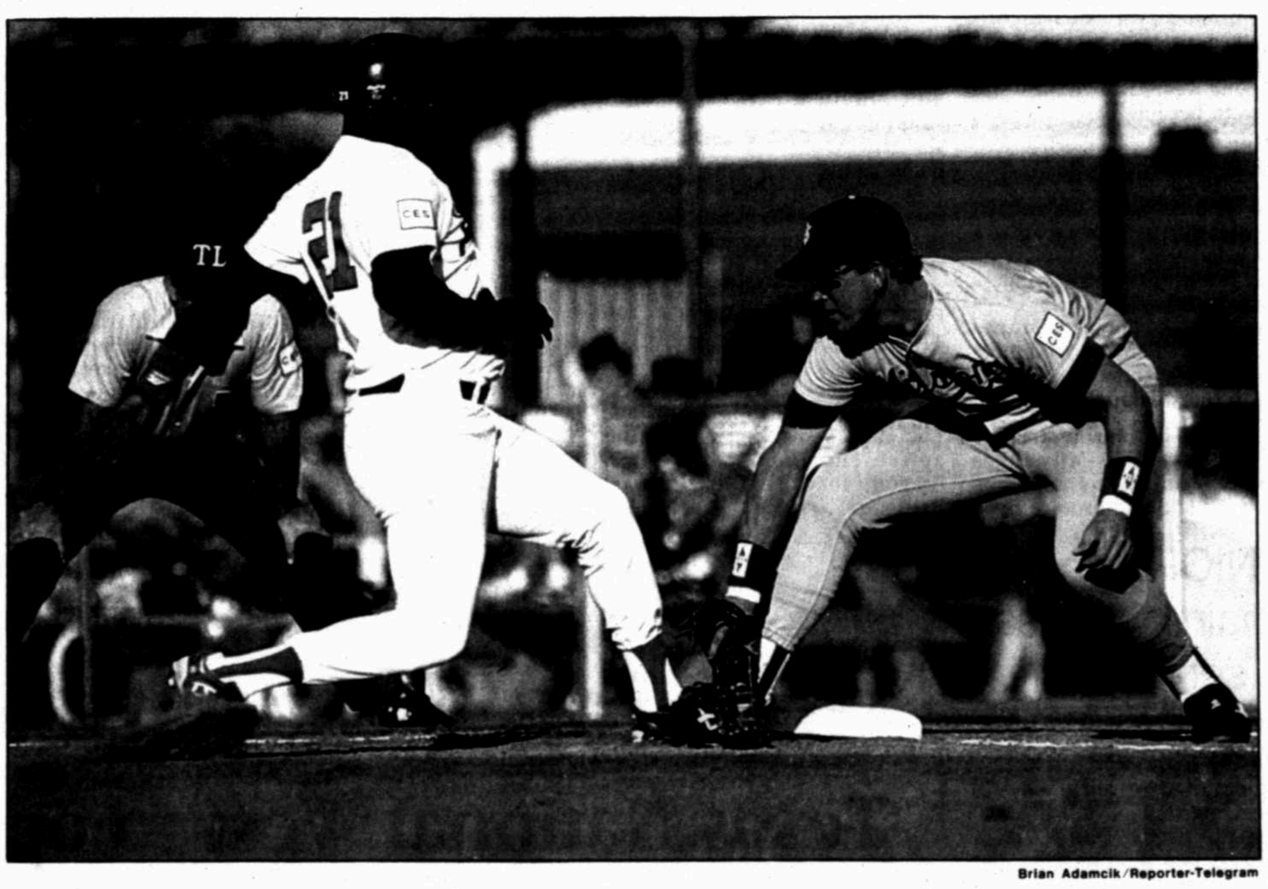

"The loss last night to Wichita and the flight problems today had nothing to do with us losing this game," Royster said emphatically. "We lost this one just like we lost the other 11. We've played the same whether sitting in the motel room or in an airport. This loss was just in a different place, but it was the same way. I don't see any fight in this team.

"Look," Royster said, pointing to the shower, "They're laughing and giggling like they won. It doesn't look like they care to me. We should be looking for excuses the way we are playing. We looked tired tonight, but we looked tired when we lost 12 games ago."

Midland, on the other hand, now has a three-game winning streak and a six-game streak over the Missions. Winning Sunday after the late hours, trip home and delayed game, is a good omen, according to centerfielder Jim Edmonds.

"Today's win will play a big part in what is to come down the road," Edmonds said. "I know what they are going through in the other locker-room because I've been on teams the last two years that lost 10 or more

Stockton has 1st senior win

Associated Press

DEARBORN, Mich. — It was a major championship. So Dave Stockton felt all along that he had the advantage.

It turned out he was right. He just needed 72 holes to prove it.

Stockton, who captained the U.S. Ryder Cup team to victory last autumn, overcame a two-shot advantage by a faltering J.C. Snead with an 8-foot birdie putt on the final hole Sunday to win the Senior Players Championship.

"I had the advantage of winning two majors in my career," Stockton said. "Plus, I had the advantage of not leading the tournament for three rounds, like J.C. did. I'd much rather come from behind than lead for three rounds."

Stockton birdied the final three holes and finished with a 69 for an 11-under 277, one shot better than Snead, who double-bogeyed the final hole, and late-charging Lee Trevino.

"That's unfortunate for J.C.," said Trevino, who has won five senior events this season. "He's played so well. J.C. hasn't won in a long time

Some Cowboys tote own signals into Dallas quarterback camp

N.Y. Times News Service

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys will begin throwing footballs — and messages — in earnest Monday with the start of another quarterback school at Valley Ranch.

Among the invited guests who have RSVP'ed are diet-camp graduate Nate Newton, tongue-lashing victim Ken Norton Jr., fighter pilot/defensive end Chad Hennings and unsigned receiver Michael Irvin, all of whom intend to ship personal messages to coach Jimmy Johnson and management.

Irvin, fresh off two contract-related visits in two weeks with owner Jerry Jones and vice president Stephen Jones, wants the world to know how committed he is to being a Cowboy. That's why he'll attend this "voluntary" five-day camp while he listens to management's request that he and new agent Steve Endicott submit a contract request this week.

"We've been talking, and we'll keep talking," Irvin said. "It's just been on a friendly basis so far."

The club's relationship with Norton, the starting linebacker also without a 1992 contract, has not been so cozy. He drew Johnson's ire in May by skipping a

McNeil vs. NFL: antitrust lawsuit tackles league's labor impasse

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The city which hosted the Super Bowl, World Series, Final Four and Stanley Cup finals in the past 13 months is now home to an even more important event in the long term — the trial that may decide the NFL's future.

The case is McNeil vs. the NFL, an antitrust suit that starts Monday and could finally bring an end to the labor impasse that has existed for nearly five years — since the unsuccessful players' strike of 1987.

If the plaintiffs — Freeman McNeil of the New York Jets and seven other players — win the antitrust action, it could bring them the full free agency they were unable to win during that 24-day walkout. Under the current system, prime players are tied to their teams in that clubs are allowed to match any offer to the free agent or get two first-round draft choices if the player decides to leave.

"The Super Bowl affected two clubs. This case affects the way all 28 teams do business," says Gene Upshaw, executive director of the NFL Players Association. "The landscape in the NFL will be quite different when the jury finishes."

The NFLPA, which no longer represents players in collective bargaining, is not officially a party to the action, which will be heard before U.S. District Court Judge David Doty. But it has taken an active role in supporting the players after Doty rejected the union's post-strike lawsuit because he believed there was still a climate for bargaining.

There still may be — NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue made a labor settlement the first order of business when he took over in October, 1989 and has been meeting regularly with

Inky homers twice as Astros rout SF

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Pete Incaviglia never doubted his ability. His stats this season told a different story, though.

Incaviglia, signed to a minor league contract in January, entered Sunday's game against San Francisco with only two homers and 15 RBIs in 50 games this season for Houston.

But Incaviglia hit two homers and drove in a career-high seven runs as the Astros routed the Giants 15-7. It was the eighth time Incaviglia has hit two homers in a game and his seven RBIs tied the club record set by Rafael Ramirez on Aug. 29, 1989, against Chicago.

"I'm thankful that Artie (manager Art Howe) and the club have stayed with me," said Incaviglia, released by Detroit after last season. "There's no doubt in my mind that I can still hit and still play and help this team win."

Incaviglia watched some video tape to get his strike back.

"I've been trying to muscle the ball," Incaviglia said. "The key for me is to relax instead of going to the plate trying to hit the ball 800 feet. I need to swing easier and let the bat do the work."

Dave Righetti (1-4), making his second start since leaving the bullpen, gave up six runs, nine hits and five walks in 3 1-3 innings.

Pirates 5, Mets 4

NEW YORK — Andy Van Slyke's sacrifice fly in the ninth inning gave Pittsburgh its first sweep at Shea Stadium in three seasons.

The Pirates took advantage of second baseman Willie Randolph's error in the ninth for their third consecutive one-run decision over New York. Pittsburgh won for the 10th time in 12 games, while the Mets have lost four in a row and 12 of 16.

The Pirates, who won three of four from the Mets last weekend in Pittsburgh, completed their first sweep in New York since July 25-27, 1989. The Pirates have won six of seven games against the Mets this season, and 18 of 24 overall.

Barry Bonds left the game after hurting himself while hitting in the Pittsburgh ninth. He twisted in pain in the batter's box and needed help to get to his feet.

Cubs 5, Expos 1

CHICAGO — Danny Jackson gave up one run in seven innings for only his third victory in 28 starts for Chicago, leading the surging Cubs to their season-high fourth straight win.

Derrick May had a two-run double in a four-run third inning off Ken Hill (5-4), and Mark Grace, returning to the lineup after missing three games with a sore toe, had a single and a double.

The Cubs, beating the Expos three straight, recorded their first series sweep of the season.

Jackson (2-7) gave up only three hits, walking four and fanning three. Jeff Robinson and Paul Assenmacher each gave up a hit in the eighth inning and Bob Scanlan pitched the ninth.

Braves 4, Padres 2

ATLANTA — Charlie Leibrandt pitched 8⅔ strong innings and Ron Gant and Jeff Blauser homered as Atlanta captured its fourth straight victory and 13th in 15 games.

The Braves won their sixth consecutive game against the Padres, sweeping the three-game series here and taking three games last week in San Diego.

Leibrandt (6-2), who hasn't lost since May 3, has won four in a row with four no-decisions. He was one out away from a six-hit shutout when Tim Teufel hit a two-run homer. Mark Wohlers got the last out for his third save.

Reds 5, Dodgers 1

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Reds swept Los Angeles for the first time in six years by turning Greg Swindell's nine-hit pitching and the Dodgers' continued bumbling into a victory.

The resurgent Reds converted another error by shortstop Jose Offerman into two decisive first-inning runs off Ramon Martinez (3-4), who has lost his last three starts.

Chris Sabo added a solo homer, Barry Larkin had an RBI single, and reliever Steve Wilson threw a pair of wild pitches to let in the Reds' final run in the seventh.

Swindell (6-2) was two outs away from his second shutout this season, but gave up three consecutive hits, the last an RBI single by Juan Samuel.

Cardinals 5, Phillies 2

ST. LOUIS — Rheal Cormier won his first game in six decisions and Tom Pagnozzi drove in two runs as St. Louis beat Philadelphia.

Cormier (1-5) allowed one run and six hits in seven innings. He was sent to the minors for one week earlier this month and had not won since last Oct. 2.

BULLS: Chicago won all the odd-numbered games

(From 1C)

Jordan scored 10 points in less than three minutes, helping the Bulls pull within 6 at halftime.

But the Blazers came back strong in the third quarter, building the lead to 60-46 with an 8-0 run keyed by Terry Porter's driving jumper and breakaway layup.

Drexler, playing with four fouls, extended the margin to 70-54 with a layup, made it 73-58 with a three-point play and then blocked a layup attempt by Jordan, leading to Porter's two free throws and a 75-58 advantage with 2:12 left.

Porter finished with 22 points, his best effort of the series after he had an NBA playoff record 18 3-pointers in the Western Conference finals against Utah.

Kersey had 12 points and four of the Blazers' seven offensive rebounds in the first quarter as they jumped to a 25-19 lead.

Portland missed its first six shots and 10 of its first 12, but six offensive rebounds in less than six minutes keyed a 12-2 run that gave the Blazers a 12-6 edge.

A dunk by Scott Williams tied the score 17-17, but the Blazers hit their last four shots of the period on three layups by Kersey and one by Cliff Robinson.

Drexler, scoreless in the first period, then hit a 3-pointer to start the second quarter, giving the Blazers a 9-point advantage.

After Chicago closed to 32-28, Drexler had a dunk, layup and two free throws during an 11-0 run that gave the Blazers their largest lead of the first half, 43-28, with 4:14 left in the half.

Jordan, limited to two baskets to that point in the game, then scored 10 points, including two 3-pointers, in a span of 2:29, leading a 12-3 spurt that cut Portland's lead to 46-40. Pippen's two free throws after time expired made it 50-44 at halftime.

The Bulls won all the odd-numbered games to always stay a step ahead of the Blazers.

In the opener, Jordan scored a Finals-record 35 points in the first half and finished with 39 in a 122-89 rout. Jordan set another Finals record with six 3-pointers in the first half as Chicago opened a 66-51 lead, then ended any hope of a Blazers' comeback by outscoring them 38-17 in the third period.

The Bulls appeared to be in control of the second game, owning a 92-82 lead with 4:36 left when Drexler fouled out. But a personal foul and technical foul on Jordan helped ignite a Portland comeback.

Welch outduels Brown as A's drop Texas

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Bob Welch allowed only two hits over 5 2-3 innings in his first game since coming off the disabled list and the Oakland Athletics beat Texas 6-1 Sunday, completing their first home sweep of the Rangers since 1984.

Welch (3-3), disabled because of a knee problem, threw 85 pitches. He walked three, struck out one and got help from four relievers in outdueling Kevin Brown, who was bidding to become baseball's first 10-game winner.

The Athletics took a 2-0 lead against Brown (9-4) in the second inning. Willie Wilson hit an RBI single and Jerry Browne drew a bases-loaded walk, the third run-scoring walk issued by Rangers pitchers in two games.

Jose Canseco doubled in the third and scored on two grounders to make it 3-0, and the Athletics added to thier lead in the fourth.

Brewers 14, Mariners 4

SEATTLE — The Milwaukee Brewers ended the nine-game winning streak of Seattle rookie Dave Fleming, scoring six runs in the second inning.

Fleming (9-2) was trying to become the major leagues' first 10-game winner after tying Scott Bankhead's 1989 team record for consecutive victories.

American

Angels 5, Royals 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Luis Sojo drove in four runs with a homer and single and Lee Stevens snapped out of a season-long slump at Anaheim Stadium with a home run.

Sojo's second homer of the season in the seventh inning came after Mark Gubicza (6-4) walked Rene Gonzales and John Orton. It gave the Angels a 5-1 lead and was their first three-run home run since April 30.

Tigers 7, Orioles 4

DETROIT — Tony Phillips and Lou Whitaker drove in two runs apiece and Chad Kreuter homered, leading Detroit past Baltimore.

With the score tied at 4-4, Milt Cuyler led off the seventh inning with a double that knocked Jose Mesa (2-7) from the game, and Phillips greeted reliever Storm Davis with a single that snapped the tie. Phillips then stole second and scored on Whitaker's single.

Scott Livingstone hit a sacrifice fly in the eighth inning for the Tigers' final run.

Blue Jays 6, Red Sox 2

TORONTO — John Olerud drove in three runs with a bases-loaded double in the sixth inning to give Toronto a victory over Boston and a split of the four-game series.

The Red Sox led 2-1 in the sixth, but Jeff Kent hit a one-out double, Joe Carter beat out an infield single and Dave Winfield walked, loading the bases. Mark Gardiner (3-6) threw two balls to Kelly Gruber and was relieved by Danny Darwin, who completed the walk to force in the tying run.

Olerud then cleared the bases with a double into the gap in left-center.

Juan Guzman (8-1) allowed two runs on six hits over six innings.

Yankees 4, Indians 3

CLEVELAND — Mel Hall and Roberto Kelly started the 10th inning with consecutive doubles as New York beat Cleveland.

The win was the Yankees' second straight, following a four-game losing streak. They've gone 2-1 so far on their 14-game road trip, longest of the season.

Twins 8, White Sox 7

MINNEAPOLIS — Kirby Puckett hit an RBI double with none out in the ninth inning, puching Minnesota past Chicago.

Chuck Knoblauch started the winning rally when he was hit by a pitch from loser Scott Radinsky (2-3). Puckett, who started the day as the American League's leading hitter, then extended his hitting streak to 11 games with a line drive into the left-center field gap.

Tom Edens (4-0) earned the victory with two innings of scoreless relief.

MVP: Basketball kept him going through adversities

(From 1C)

But to everyone's surprise, he was revealed to have a number of very human failings off the court as well, many of which threatened to harm the squeaky clean image a nation had foisted upon him.

His troubles began shortly before the season when Jordan spurned the champions' traditional photo opportunity with the president in the Rose Garden to play golf. Then they accelerated with the publication of "The Jordan Rules," a book that revealed he was no different on the job than working stiffs everywhere — touchy sometimes, jealous other times, and selfish when the mood struck him.

Then came the most damaging allegations — that Jordan had squandered upwards of $160,000 gambling on golf with several known hustlers.

Where once the questions from reporters had been easy and his answsers breezy, the questions got tougher and sometimes he got surly.

"But basketball was the medicine for all the adversities I had to get through. ... My teammates supported me and I needed that support."

And never more than Sunday. With Jordan on the bench, the reserves who had often been denigrated as the "Jordanaires" erased most of a 15-point deficit, setting the stage for his late-game heroics.

"I wasn't angry sitting and I wasn't anxious to get back in. Those guys had a rhythm going. I just wanted to blend in."

SENIOR: Snead remains winless on senior tour and I guess it's pretty hard to concentrate out there some times."

It was Stockton's first win since joining the Senior PGA Tour in December, two months after the Ryder Cup triumph. He also became the first first-time winner on the circuit this year.

"I'm still riding am emotional high from that Ryder Cup win," Stockton said. "That was a great experience for me."

Stockton, who counted the 1970 and 1976 PGA championships among his 11 victories on the regular PGA Tour, earned $150,000 of the $1 million purse provided by Mazda.

"People have been complimenting me since coming on the senior tour," Stockton said. "But I didn't feel like I'd done anything to be pleased about. Now, I do.

"I want to be a factor on this tour. I want to do well out here."

Snead, who is without a win since joining the seniors in 1990, led the tournament for 71 holes and still had a two-shot advantage as they prepared to play the final hole at TPC of Michigan, a 6,876-yard layout designed by Jack Nicklaus.

But Snead, who was 12 under after 71 holes, drove into a wetland on the left side of the 18th fairway. After a drop, his third shot landed in medium-high grass above and right of the green. He chipped on and two-putted from 12 feet for double-bogey 6.

That gave him a 3-over 75 for the round and 10-under 278 for the tournament.

"I had 1,000 acres to hit it in with an iron," Snead said. "If I can't do that, I don't deserve to win. The third shot at 18 kicked right. I don't know how that happened.

"I've never been so disappointed in all my life."

Once Stockton got in the chase, he was relentless. He sank a 6-foot birdie putt on 16, then ran in a 40-footer on 17.

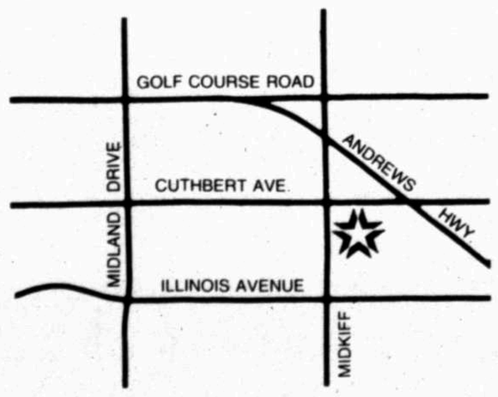

"That must have been the longest putt I made all week," Stockton said. "It broke at least 16 inches."

games in a row. It's a hard thing to shake when you get in that kind of slump.

"We're all a little tired, but you just have to work through it. You feel it more in your legs than anything else, but you lose sight of that when you step into the box. You just do your job."

Angel pitcher Phil Leftwich (3-3) went eight innings and pitched to two batters in the ninth before being pulled. He gave up 13 hits, but he was rarely threatened with a loss of any kind as the Angels struck for five runs in the first two innings.

"I think it's obvious that we came out and played with more intensity than they did," Leftwich said. "The team and the pitching staff is real tired after Saturday's game and I was hoping to get us into the seventh or eighth inning.

"I've been giving up about a hit per inning, but I didn't walk many batters and we had three double plays behind me to keep me out of real trouble. It wasn't my best game, but we did what we had to do."

Rod Correia, Jeff Kipila and Tony Brown all had two RBI for Midland. Brown hit his fourth homer of the year in the seventh.

San Antonio outhit Midland 13-12, but the Angels had six extra base hits in the game.

ANGEL DUST: Midland played the game without field manager Don Long, who is with his wife attending a family emergency in the Pacific Northwest. He is expected to return Thursday. Meanwhile, hitting instructor Nate Oliver is filling in for Long ... After Sunday's game, Midland third baseman Walt McConnell (.267, 16 RBI) and starting pitcher Mark Holzemer (2-5, 3.83 ERA) were called up to Triple-A Edmonton. Inmates heckle Tyson

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Mike Tyson has avoided trouble even though he's been heckled by other inmates in the Indiana prison where he is serving a six-year sentence for rape, the former heavyweight champion told Ed Bradley of CBS News.

Bradley, in an interview to be broadcast on "Street Stories" Thursday night, spoke to Tyson May 26 at the Indiana Youth Center, where he is serving his sentence for the rape of a Miss Black America beauty contestant.

"I know I'm not the ... most popular inmate in here because ... I stand up for what I believe in," Tyson told Bradley when asked if he feels threatened in the Plainfield, Ind., facility.

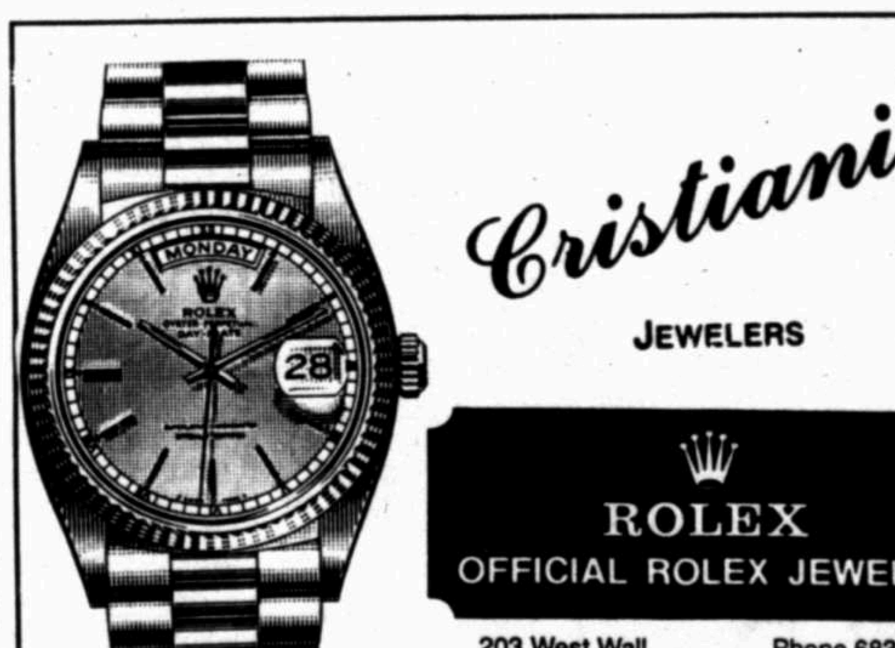

"I basically say what's on my mind. And ... from prior experience I know that could ... land me in a lot of trouble.

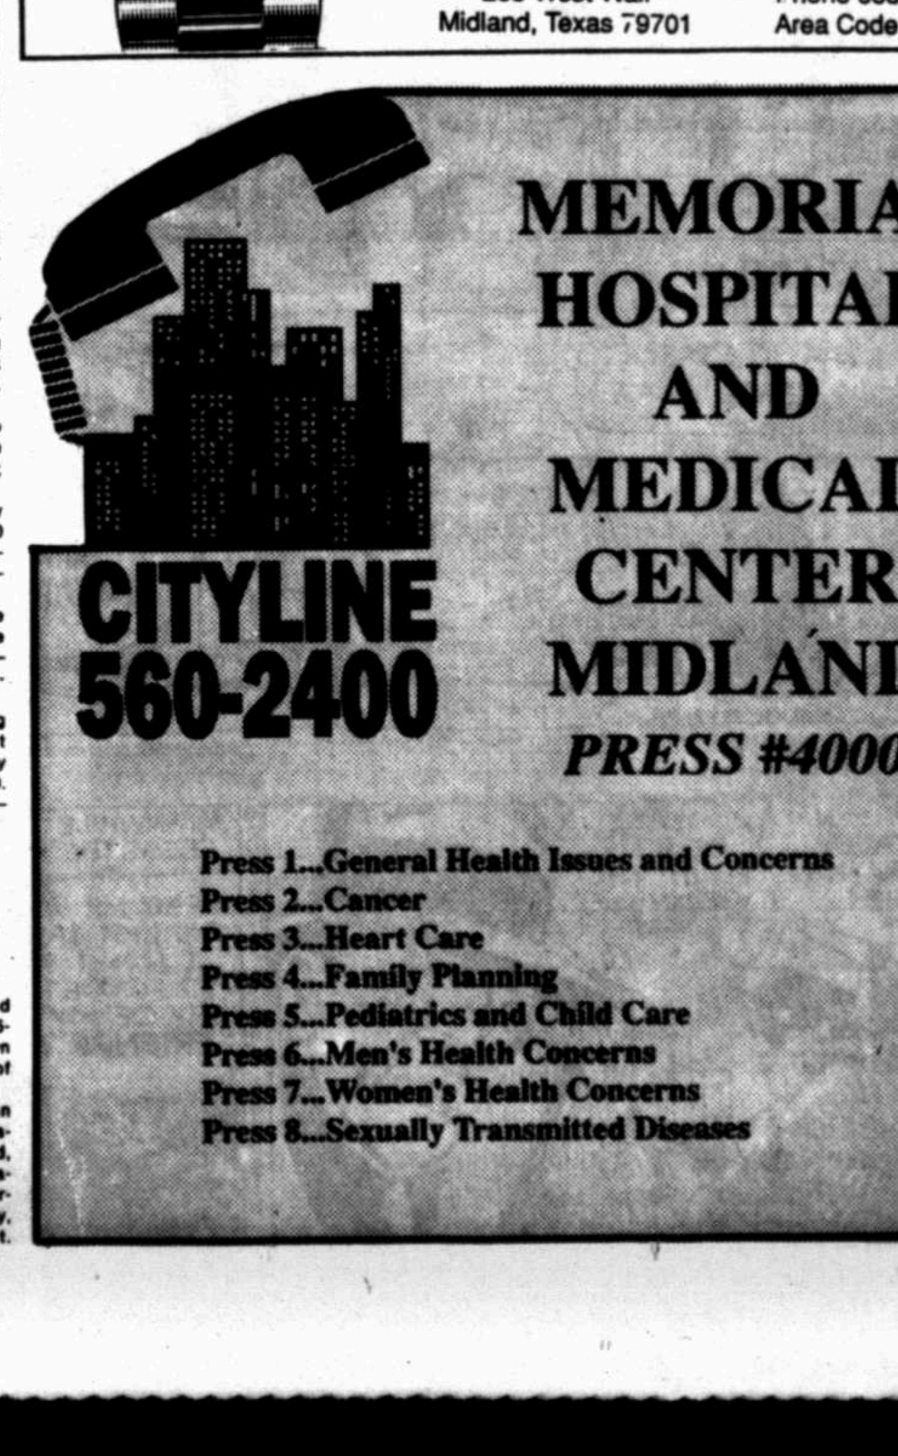

"I haven't had any problems," Tyson said when asked about how other inmates treat him. "Just, you know, sometime when you walk, and ... you really can't understand this prison because it's not like a prison that you may think. You walk, and people like their homes ... people yell out the window, this and that to somebody."

Tyson told a story of a time he was heckled but didn't understand the other inmate's lingo.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, JUNE 15, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your confidence grows as you rack up impressive new accomplishments beginning in August. A well-deserved raise or promotion boosts your financial security next November. Travel for business or a family reunion in December. A timely investment or real estate purchase early in 1993 will pay big dividends in the years to come. New career or community recognition is featured next April. Reward loyal subordinates.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Jim Belushi, actress Helen Hunt, country singer Waylon Jennings, slugger Wade Boggs.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Some pleasing but startling changes are on the horizon. Taking an unconventional approach will solve an old problem. Refuse to be rushed into making important decisions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Shower affection and treats on your favorite people. New doors open to you. Your rapport with VIPs is strong. Avoid the emotional quicksands that surround a troubled relationship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A day of fairy tales and half-truths; stick to the straight and narrow path. A serious romantic discussion is best postponed. Act confident of loved one's affection and loyalty.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Treat everyone in an extra-friendly manner today. Influential people are close by and will take notice. A job offer could necessitate a move to another city.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Today's forecast includes both a boost in popularity and participation in a thought-provoking dialogue. State your case concisely; an authority figure will be impressed. Postpone romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cooperating, not taking the lead, will put you on the track to success now. If you work hard, you can escape criticism. Travel snags are possible — depend on public transportation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): To advance your key interests, you must reach a wider audience. Minor delays and complications may await you. Push on — there is bound to be a big payoff! Attend a group gathering tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your way of speaking has the power to attract or repel today. Chime in when you agree with what others are saying and you will gain in stature. Avoid get-rich-quick schemes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do more than your share if your efforts will promote team effort. Profits will swell as a direct result. Take advantage of an opportunity for long-distance travel.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Seek favors from influential people; useful agreements can be negotiated behind closed doors. Some surprising news might throw you. Withhold comment until you have all the facts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Downplaying your own role at work while praising others' contributions is a smart move today. The aftermath may be improved communication between co-workers.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Guard against dissipating your energy and time today. Too many distractions or detours could mean low productivity. A sudden emotional tidal wave could threaten a romantic relationship. Stay calm.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are energetic and enthusiastic — with a terrific gift of gab. Although these youngsters are generous with their possessions, they generally put their own career, financial and romantic desires ahead of everything else.

GOREN BRIDGE

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K52 ♡J62 ◇A9743 ♣74
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Dbl	1 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—With eight points in high cards you must certainly take some action, and the only sensible course is to bid one no trump. Note that action confirms a diamond stopper, not necessarily anything in hearts. Since partner's takeout double presumably promised something in hearts, you can afford to bid no trump with that suit unguarded.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A10 ♡AQ753 ◇AQ6 ♣A108
Your right-hand opponent opens three spades. What action do you take?
A.—An ugly hand. Four hearts is out—the quality of the suit leaves a great deal to be desired. The trouble with a takeout double is what do you do if partner responds with four of a minor? Best of the lot is to bid three no trump, although that is an underbid and might founder when game in a suit is on.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A97 ♡AK654 ◇Q ♣A872
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
2 ♠*	Pass	Pass	?

* — weak
What action do you take?
A.—Your hand is too strong and your suit too weak for a reopening bid of three hearts, and your unbalanced distribution and lack of a source of tricks bodes ill for a no-trump contract. We opt for a takeout double, intending to bid hearts should partner respond in a minor.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK2 ♡A5 ◇K96 ♣AJ762
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	1 ♠	Pass	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—This one's easy. Bid one no trump. That shows a hand that was too strong for a one-no-trump opening bid, i.e, about 19 points, exactly what you have.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ3 ♡K9 ◇Q63 ♣A10762
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	1 ♠	Pass	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—The previous question should tip you off to the right answer here—pass. That's the right action even if you play negative doubles. You know from your holding in the overcaller's suit that partner can't want to double one spade for penalties, so all signs point to North having a near bust.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠1085 ♡AK4 ◇J765 ♣J106
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—We see no point to bidding one diamond—you are only making a problem for yourself on the second round. We would respond one no trump, which describes our perfectly balanced nine-count to a tee.

Career takes setback during pregnancy, Kate Nelligan says

NEW YORK — Pregnancy has been a mixed blessing for actress Kate Nelligan.

At 41, after two years of trying, she is overjoyed to be expecting her first child. But, Nelligan says, her pregnancy has dried up her clout to pick her scripts.

"I finally had the choice of projects after struggling, and I lost it all," she told Parade magazine in an interview published Sunday.

Nelligan, nominated for an Academy Award for "The Prince of Tides," said U.S. filmmakers are reluctant to hire a pregnant woman, so she has been working in Canada, which has laws barring discrimination against pregnant women.

"You can't get bitter over these setbacks. You just have to make sure the rest of your life is in order," she said.

"I have more to accomplish in film. I want to keep on working and learning, but the most important and constant thing to me is my relationship with my husband (songwriter Robert Reale) and child."

ATLANTA — Former President Carter says Atlanta is a city divided between rich and poor, but he sees a way out.

Carter

"We're divided because we basically ignore each other," he told about 400 residents of the Summerhill neighborhood during a prayer breakfast Saturday.

Carter quoted from the Bible in urging residents of the black community to help the poor overcome their sense of hopelessness instilled by government leaders who fail to fulfill promises.

Residents are working to redevelop their blighted neighborhood. The Olympic stadium will be located there for the 1996 Summer Games.

FORT PAYNE, Ala. — Country singer Travis Tritt isn't apologizing for his dislike of the song "Achy Breaky Heart," but he said he was sorry if his criticism hurt Billy Ray Cyrus, who made it a No. 1 hit.

Tritt talked about the song, Cyrus and himself before appearing at the band Alabama's 11th June Jam, an annual benefit show.

Last week, Tritt said he didn't much care for "Achy Breaky Heart."

"I'll be honest, I don't think 'Achy Breaky Heart' makes much of a statement," Tritt said then. He also criticized the accompanying video as being overdone.

Before taking the stage Saturday night, Tritt said:

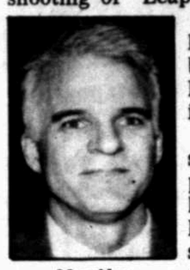

"If anything I have said has hurt Billy Ray Cyrus or his family, I apologize. But I don't apologize for my opinion."

Cyrus performed at June Jam several hours ahead of Tritt, making an indirect reference to the criticism while on stage.

"I don't care what anybody else says. From the bottom of my 'Achy Breaky Heart' I love all of you," he told the crowd of about 60,000.

PLAINVIEW — Steve Martin and Debra Winger have residents starry-eyed over the shooting of "Leap of Faith."

Martin

Both stars arrived in Plainview last week to begin rehearsals and Martin was spotted eating at a Furr's Cafeteria.

A Paramount Pictures' spokesman said Martin plays a preacher who has lost his purpose in life. He travels to a small Kansas town for a revival, accompanied by his touring group and his road manager, played by Winger.

The drought-ravaged town and its residents help Martin renew his faith, the spokesman said.

Shooting in Plainview starts June 21. Crews will then move to Groom, about 80 miles north, then Amarillo, Lubbock and 300 miles east to Dallas.

MIDDELBURG, Netherlands — Former hostage Terry Waite said Saturday a biography of Franklin D. Roosevelt helped him make it through.

Waite was given the Freedom of Worship award by the Franklin and Delano Roosevelt Institute in Hyde Park, N.Y., which has a satelline campus in this southern Dutch town, near the home of Roosevelt's forebears.

He said he got the biography from his captors in Lebanon.

"It was a book full of interest and wisdom ... material to meditate on the meaning of freedom," Waite said. Most of all, "It was an extremely thick book. And any prisoner is glad to get a large book."

Waite was on a mission to free other Western hostages when he was kidnapped by Muslim militants in 1987 and held for nearly five years.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country singer Clint Black is getting tired of his cowboy hat.

He didn't wear it last week during the annual Fan Fair festival.

"I've still got a hat, and I'll wear it," Black said Friday. "But it's easy to get tired of yourself. You get tired of 'me' and want something a little different."

Prices slip

Oil prices continued to slump on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Friday, contracts for July delivery of West Texas Intermediate fell 5 cents to $22.30 per barrel. The contract fell as low as $22.18 and high as $22.38 before close.

Natural gas contracts for July fell 5.7 cents to $1.535 per thousand cubic feet.

Lower-grade sour crude also fell 5 cents, to $20.60 per barrel.

Mansion condos

DALLAS — The Mansion on Turtle Creek, a posh hotel and restaurant, plans an addition for condominiums that real estate experts say will sell for at least $1 million each.

Rosewood Property Co., owner of The Mansion, has already signed purchase contracts for over half of the homes planned for the 13-story addition.

"Many people have come to Rosewood over the years and suggested that if anything were ever done at the Mansion, they would be extremely interested in a home," said D.H. "Buddy" Burden, senior vice president of the company. "Of course, we wanted to ensure that whatever we did would enhance the existing hotel and restaurant."

The addition will keep with the Mediterranean stone, stucco and Spanish tile design of the original building, which opened in 1981.

Dollar slumps

NEW YORK — The dollar settled mostly lower on world currency markets Friday, continuing a downward trend that was exacerbated by fresh economic data that could set the stage for lower interest rates.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell to a closing 126.67 Japanese yen from 127.38 yen at Thursday's close.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.8550 from $1.8475 late Thursday.

Stocks higher

NEW YORK — The stock market weathered some afternoon selling to post a modest advance Friday in response to better-than-expected news on inflation.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 2.85 points to 3,354.36, cutting its loss for the week to 44.33 points.

At its peak early in the session the average sported a gain of nearly 30 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines more than 3 to 2 in the daily tally on the New York Stock Exchange.

Consumer spending bubble bursts

■ Economists find they were wrong to assume that consumer credit always rises.

By Floyd Norris
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — If nobody goes shopping, is it really a recovery?

That is the question that economists may soon have to confront. The early 1992 burst of consumer spending has faded, and American consumers are reaching for their wallets not to spend but to pay off debts.

"There is a worrisome trend toward prudence," said James Grant, editor of Grant's Interest Rate Observer.

Last week the Federal Reserve reported that consumer credit outstanding fell by $3.8 billion in April, the largest one-month decline since June 1980, when credit controls were crunching the economy.

That is not, to put it mildly, the normal course of events after a recession ends. "There is no past recovery where we can find this happening," said Susan Sterne of Economic Analysis Associates in Stowe, Vt. Ed Yardeni, the chief economist at C.J. Lawrence, said it is raising the chances of a "triple-dip recession."

■ An Analysis

The weakness in credit creation has lasted longer than anyone expected. It used to be assumed that consumer credit always rose, no matter what. After all, the figure showed declines in just nine of the 120 months of the 1980s. So far in the 1990s, it is down for 14 of the 28 months reported.

Until last week, analysts could at least take comfort from retail sales, which seemed to be moving along at adequate levels, if not at the smart pace of January. But the Commerce Department said, in effect, "never mind," and revised downward the figures for February through April, at the same time announcing a puny 0.2 percent increase for May.

Wall Street's reaction was to heave a sigh of relief. When stock prices slipped early last week, the seers somehow concluded that inflation fears might have something to do with it.

But the evidence of a weakening economy reduced those fears, and, according to the Wall Street consensus, provided another reason for the Fed to cut interest rates. This generation's economic patent medicine, guaranteed to cure whatever ails you, is lower rates.

In fact, lower interest rates may be part of the problem. With bank savings rates so low, the much higher rates on loans seem extortionate, and that may be discouraging some would-be borrowers. Or perhaps the trend reflects a demographic development, with the heavy borrowing age group of 25- to 34-year-olds now declining for the first time since the 1950s. Maybe, suggests Ms. Sterne, "the 1980s taught the consumer it was more rewarding to own financial assets than tangible assets. He would rather buy G.M.'s stock than its cars."

Lawsuit tests RTC's power to sell condominium units

PORT ARANSAS (NYT) — The power of the Resolution Trust Corp. to sell condominium units without regard to the condominium association's rules is being tested in a lawsuit in Dallas.

The case involves one unit in this small fishing village on an island in the Gulf of Mexico, just off the coast of Corpus Christi.

A condominium association here has resisted the corporation's efforts to sell the unit through its low- to moderate-income Affordable Housing Disposition Program. The RTC has responded with a lawsuit.

The Pelican Condominiums association says its regulations give it the right of first refusal to buy any unit in the complex that comes on the market. Refusal to waive that right clouds the title of the property and prevents the RTC from selling it to anyone else.

Mark Burneko, a spokesman for the Resolution Trust Corp. in Washington, said the agency would not comment on any matter in litigation.

But armed with a team of eight government and private lawyers to handle the suit, the corporation appears ready for a precedent-setting legal battle to establish its authority.

"The RTC is taking the position that the powers given it by Congress supersede the legal rights of the homeowners' association," said Jay Fichtner, a Dallas lawyer representing the Pelican Condominiums.

The conflict involves a three-bedroom unit in the 65-unit beachfront complex built 20 years ago primarily as vacation homes for Texas buyers.

In 1983, the unit in question was foreclosed on by a lender that later became insolvent and was taken over by the RTC

The federal agency put the unit into its affordable housing program, as is required by law for any one-family residence appraised at $67,500 or less. The program is open only to people with low to moderate incomes and eligibility varies by region and family size.

Generally, the household income cannot exceed 115 percent of the median income for an area. Eligible buyers have 90 days to submit offers before the property is released from the program and marketed to the general public.

When the agency received a high bid of $10,300 for the Pelican condominium, the homeowners association stepped forward to exercise its right of first refusal and match that bid.

But Resolution Trust refused to sell to the association, saying the association does not qualify as a buyer under the affordable housing guidelines.

And the association refused to waive its right of first refusal, thus preventing the RTC from selling the property with a clear title.

Now the matter is awaiting trial in federal District Court in Dallas.

Fichtner said the homeowners are concerned that the sale of the unit at such a low price will lower the value of other units in the complex.

Two other three-bedroom units in the complex recently sold for $59,000 and $53,000, and a large three-bedroom penthouse currently is on the market for $125,000, according to Sharon Butler, the Pelican manager.

Many franchisers face lawsuits

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas has been a battleground for some of the nastiest fights between companies and their disgruntled franchisees, as some of the nation's biggest franchises face rebellions.

After a franchise boom through much of the 1970s and 1980s, many of the big companies — Dairy Queen, Kentucky Fried Chicken, Popeye's, Taco Bell and Jiffy Lube — have faced litigation and other insurgence.

Although there are many reasons for the lawsuits, one of the biggest is profits, which are down because of the recession and an overabundance of franchises.

"When sales and profits go down, the franchisees tend to get together," said Richard Solomon, a Houston attorney specializing in franchise law.

In addition, many franchise companies are reaching the 20-year mark, when contracts with individual franchisees come up for renewal. Bickering over new terms can push the process into the courtroom.

"Franchising has become a mature industry, and these lawsuits are part of the gradual maturation process," said Joyce Mazero, a franchise expert in Dallas. "The people who own franchise stores are not just mom and pop operators. They are sophisticated business people. Many dropped out of successful corporate careers to start their own businesses, and they are going to take action when their businesses are threatened."

"Arbitration that is complete and binding gets the job done," said Thomas Devine, a lawyer for the Houston-based Franchise Development Corp.

"By the time you get through with litigation, everyone is ready to kill each other. It is totally destructive," he said.

National chamber group to convene

FORT WORTH (AP) — A few black business owners are fighting the odds in a nationwide survey that shows such enterprises are less successful than any other group's.

The National Black Chamber of Commerce, which wants to improve those statistics, is scheduled to convene its annual meeting this week in Fort Worth.

"We're switching from civil rights that let us go where we wanted to go to silver rights that let us have some change in our pockets when we go there," said Oscar Coffee, the group's president.

"At this stage, in 1992, it's going to take money to emancipate African-Americans," he said. "Civil rights played its role of breaking down barriers. But it's also useless to break these barriers if you don't have any resources."

The black chamber, based in Oakland, Calif., expects about 300 delegates from 73 U.S. chapters to attend to convention that begins Wednesday.

A U.S. Census Bureau study of 1987 data — the most recent available — shows that blacks have the lowest proportion of business ownership among American ethnic groups.

Blacks' businesses, on average, also are smaller and employ fewer people than any other group's, according to the study.

Rules for IRAs complex, often confusing

By Bill Doyle

Q: I reached age 70½ on Jan. 6, 1992 and my bank told me I was required to take a distribution from my individual retirement account by April 1, 1992, I did.

I'm not sure this was correct. I recall reading that the first IRA distribution must be made in the year following the year in one turns 70½, which would be calendar 1993.

Who is correct?

Doyle

A: You are and so is the item you read. Either you misunderstood what you were told at the bank or the person you spoke to you there misinformed you. IRA rules are complex and often confusing, resulting in an awful lot of bad advice being passed around.

Internal Revenue Service Publication 590 "Individual Retirement Arrangements (IRAs)" explains you are required to make your first IRA withdrawal by April 1 of the year following the year in which you become 70½. For you, that means April 1, 1993.

After that, you must make a withdrawal no later than December 31 every year. So, if you delayed your withdrawal for 1992, which the IRS calls your "70½ year," until April 1, 1993, you would have to make another withdrawal next year.

If your required withdrawals are substantial, two withdrawals in 1993 could put you in a higher income tax bracket and increase the tax you pay for next year. With that in mind, many IRA participants make their first withdrawals in the year in which they turn 70½.

Q: The goofy characters at my savings and loan association have given me so much bad advice in the past I am reluctant to let them calculate the withdrawals I will have to make from my IRA after I pass age 70½ in 1994.

When I intimated I don't trust their mathematical ability on this, which is so vitally important to me, they said, "Trust us. We know what we're doing."

Humph! I want to check this. Is there any official source I can use to be certain I receive the correct amounts?

A: Of course. Get Publication 590 from your nearest IRS office. It contains that information and just about everything else you want to know about IRAs.

The amount you must withdraw each year from your IRA will be based on your life expectancy or the combined life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary.

IRS Publication 590 has the life expectancy tables you will need to double-check the the people at your savings and loan association. When you find the applicable life expectancy number (in years), divide the balance of your IRA on December 31 of the preceding year by the life expectancy number. That will tell you the required minimum distribution you must take for the year.

If you are so inclined, you can take out more than the required minimum. By doing that, however, you might empty your IRA and have nothing left for your very old age.

Q. I cannot find any information in IRS Publication 590 telling me I must have a trustee for administration of my IRA distributions over my life expectancy. Can I be my own trustee? If so, do I have to submit the 1099R form to the IRS?

A. No, to both queries. Although there is no specific mention of this in Publication 590, every IRA must have a trustee, such as a bank, S&L, CU, mutual fund, brokerage firm or insurance company.

Come January, the trustee issues a Form 1099R to each IRA participant, with a copy going to the IRS to feed into its computers to nab people who fail to report taxable income. That's part of the revenooers' matching program of comparing 1099s, W-2s and other "information returns" with individual income tax returns.

12 boxing champions decided at Olympic trials

Associated Press

WORCESTER, Mass. — Tim Austin ate like a heavyweight champion in the morning and fought like a flyweight champion in the afternoon.

"I just ate the right food," Austin joked after power-punching his way to a 78-45 decision over Aristead Clayton in the 112-pound final at the Olympic trials Sunday in the Centrum.

Austin, of Cincinnati, peppered Clayton, of Baker, La., with right jabs and hooks and solid shots to the body. Clayton kept coming back for more.

Vernon Forrest of Augusta, Ga., the silver medalist in the 1991 world championships, won the 139-pound title by rallying in the third round for a 39-31 victory over Anthony Johnson of Cleveland.

Ivan Robinson of Philadelphia, a member of the world championship team, was upset 35-20 by Julian Wheeler of the Navy at Little Creek, Va.

Three other World Championship team members won on Sunday.

Raul Marquez of Houston bombed away with right hooks and lefts to the head and won a 71-18 decision at 156 pounds over Antwun Echols of Davenport, Iowa, who took three standing 8-counts.

Oscar de la Hoya of Los Angeles scored well with jabs and counter left hooks and won the 132-pound title on a 41-6 decision over Anthony Christodoulou of Syracuse, N.Y.

Larry Donald of Cincinnati, a bronze medalist at Sydney, outmaneuvered and outjabbed Tyrone Campbell of Houston in winning the super heavyweight title 53-19.

Eric Griffin, winner of 106-pound titles at the world championships in 1989 and 1991, and Chris Byrd, the 165-pound member of the 1991 world team, won finals Saturday.

Griffin, of Jasper, Tenn., overwhelmed Mario Bueno of the Army at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., 70-16. Griffin was credited with 164 scoring blows in his semifinal and final victories.

Byrd, of Flint, Mich., whose father Joe will coach the Olympic boxing team, counterpunched his way to a 41-17 victory over Michael DeMoss of the Marines at Camp Lejeune, N.C.

The 6-foot Forrest trailed the 5-5 Johnson, a Pan American Games champion, 21-20 after two rounds, then rallied with right hands to the head. Johnson, who lost to Forrest on points in the 1991 U.S. championships final, had built his lead on left hooks.

"If it had gone the other way, I wouldn't have cried about it," Forrest said.

"It could have gone either way," Wheeler said after his decision over Robinson was booed.

"I can't take anything away from him," said Robinson, who landed a lot of body punches. "They don't seem to score body punches today."

The three-man jury, whose score is used if there is a computer malfunction, favored Wheeler 3-0.

The 12 trials champions will meet most-noteworthy opponents in the box-offs, which will determine the Olympic team, June 26-28 at Phoenix. There will be six bouts each June 26-27. If a trials champion wins, he is on the team. If he loses, there will be another bout June 28, with the winner going to Barcelona.

Most-noteworthy opponents were selected by a committee and were not necessarily runners-up in the trials.

Other winners in Saturday's finals were Sergio Reyes, Marines at Camp Lejeune, N.C., 119; Pepe Reilly, Glendale, Calif., 147; Jeremy Williams, Long Beach, Calif., 178, and Dannell Nicholson, Chicago, 201.

Most-noteworthy opponents selected Saturday were Bradley Martinez, Army at Fort Huahuca, Ariz., 106; Sean Fletcher, Navy at Norfolk, Va., 119; Jesse Briseno, Kalamazoo, Mich., 147; DeMoss, 165; Terry McGroom, Chicago, 178, and Bobby Harris, Worcester, 201.

Fletcher replaces Paul Ayala, who declined to be the most-noteworthy opponent for Reyes. Ayala outpointed Fletcher 29-26 in the semifinals. Fletcher has beaten Reyes in their last two meetings.

The most noteworthy opponents picked Sunday were Clayton, 112; Robinson, 125; Patrice Brooks, St. Louis, 132; Johnson, 139; Echols, 156, and Edward Escabado, McKinney, Texas, super heavyweight.

Hass shatters tourney record at St. Jude Classic

Associated Press

PGA

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — A $500 putter is paying big dividends for Jay Haas.

He bought the putter, which Haas says looks like an elf shoe, before the 1991 Federal Express St. Jude Classic and finished third.

On Sunday, Haas walked off with the $198,000 winner's check from the $1.1 million purse and said that same putter was the key.

"I birdied four of the first five holes (with putts of 5, 3, 6 and 5 feet) and still I was just tied for the lead. You would think that would put a little distance between you and the field," said Haas, who won his first tour event since the 1988 Bob Hope Classic with the record-setting performance.

But the breathing room came later as Haas was on his way to completing a seven-birdie, no-bogey round of 64 for a three-stroke victory over Dan Forsman and Robert Gamez.

Haas' 21-under 263 total was six strokes better than the tournament record held by Tom Kite, John Cook and Fred Couples.

Tied at 18-under with Forsman at the turn, Haas was knocking home a 30-foot birdie putt at the par-4 11th, while Forsman had his problems at No. 10, settling for a disastrous double bogey-6.

"I made a mistake at No. 10 and that cost me," said Forsman who hit a hot shot out of the trap and over the green. "I was in a state of shock. It looked like it was going into some guy's house."

With Gamez the leader in the clubhouse after a round of 8-under 63 over the 7,006-yard TC at Southwind course, the championship became a battle between Haas and Forsman.

Haas went 20 under with a birdie 3 at No. 12, while Forsman regrouped and birdied his next two holes to climb back to 18-under and then pulled within a shot with a birdie 3 at 15.

Forsman had the opportunity to pull even at 16, but slid a 3-footer for birdie to the right of the cup.

Haas closed out Forsman when he knocked in an 8-foot putt for birdie at the par-4 17th and followed with a routine par 4 at 18.

Forsman matched par until reaching the 18th where he put his second shot in the water but got up-and-down for bogey to tie Gamez for second.

"When I've won in the past, I've always wondered how many more will be there. Not being a winner for over four years is tough. There's a lot of great young players, but I don't feel like I'm over the hill yet," said Haas, 38, who won his eighth tour event.

Gamez, the 1990 PGA tour rookie of the year, put on an impressive run toward the lead.

He had five birdies on the front nine to go 15 under and then birdied three of his first four holes on the backside to challenge Haas at 18 under.

"I played extremely well," Gamez said. "I tried not to get too involved in what was going on. I was very fortunate. I chipped in a couple. I was real lucky the way things fell.

"After I birdied No. 13 to go 18 under, I thought that with one more birdie I might catch them," said Gamez, who parred his final five holes.

Kulwicki makes track history at Spark Plug 500

Associated Press

NASCAR

LONG POND, Pa. — Alan Kulwicki's doubters may be tough to find after Sunday.

Kulwicki set a track record of 144.069 mph in winning the Champion Spark Plug 500, his second NASCAR victory of the season and his first ever at Pocono International Raceway. The victory moved him into the thick of the Winston Cup points race.

"That kind of stuff didn't happen overnight," Kulwicki said. "But it's been happening for awhile so I think people should start to take us seriously."

Kulwicki moved from fifth to third in the Winston Cup points race, only 58 points behind leader Davey Allison and 37 behind Bill Elliott through 13 of 29 races.

Kulwicki took the lead with 11 laps to go and went on to a 2.34-second victory over Mark Martin for a $74,255 payday.

Elliott finished next as Fords swept the top three spots. Pole-sitter Ken Schrader was fourth and Allison fifth.

"As far as we came back, we had a remarkable car," said Martin, who had come from a lap down, due partially to a bad pit stop while leading the race.

Kulwicki started sixth and grabbed his first lead on lap 69. He eventually led 58 of the 200 laps.

"Early in the race there were other cars as good as we were," Kulwicki said. "I really didn't pick up so much as other cars fell down. We came back a couple of times in the race and we were gaining."

Only three cautions slowed Kulwicki's pace, which surpassed Darrell Waltrip's 142.540 mph in July 1978.

"We ran a pretty deliberate race," said Kulwicki, who also won April 5 at Bristol, Tenn. "I had a real good feeling about the way the car was handling."

Green-flag pit stops beginning with just over 30 laps to go set up the final battle among Kulwicki, Martin and Elliott.

Allison's car slipped off a jack in that round of stops, ruining his shot at victory. Allison wound up with a 40.6-second stop, while Kulwicki made his in 24.1.

Elliott, a four-time winner this year who had taken only two tires in his stop, came away with the lead. Martin and then Kulwicki threatened him until Kulwicki took the lead on lap 181.

Kulwicki said he thought he could overtake Elliott because of the two-tire decision, but Elliott said he had no choice.

"In order to beat 'em we had to gamble," Elliott said. Elliott decided not to shift gears — done by some drivers on the 2½-mile trioval — and said that he might during the July race.

Kulwicki slowed in traffic five laps later, allowing Elliott and Martin to get past, but he roared back on the homestretch of 190 to get the lead.

He wasn't sure he had the win even then.

"I ran over something and I thought I had a flat tire," said Kulwicki, who started sixth. "I was glad to get this over with."

Although he has been a consistently tough qualifier at Pocono, Kulwicki had only two top-10 finishes in 11 previous races here. He finished second in July 1987.

Martin was in command through the first third of the race, but had two bad breaks during a green-flag pit stop on lap 69.

Jimmy Horton crashed, bringing out a caution, and because of a mix-up Martin tried to leave the pits before the lugnuts were put on his left front wheel. Crew chief Steve Hmiel fell off the side of the car while trying to stop Martin.

Martin backed up to his pit, and lost a lap during the caution. He got the lap back off the restart on the next caution, on lap 126, and credited his crew for his finish.

"They had a bunch of 19-second pit stops after the bad one, so I guess they made 'em up for me," Martin said.

Kulwicki's victory was the first for Ford in four races and the 10th in 13 races for the maker this season.

The three cautions tied an 8-year-old record for the fewest in this Pocono event.

COWBOYS: Quarterback camp set at Valley Ranch

(From 1C)

similar camp, causing Johnson to use a news conference here and there to fire threats Norton's way.

"The intention (in missing camp) then was to send a little message," Norton said. "I think it was successful. I think it woke some people up. Since then, Jimmy and I have talked. We've worked things out."

Norton will attend meetings this week but will probably avoid on-field work, the same plan deemed acceptable by Johnson when used by others on Dallas' list of 11 unsigned veterans.

Unsigned safety Bill Bates said many of the veterans without contracts want to watch the goings-on in a Minneapolis courtroom this week before entering serious negotiations. The legal battle pitting the National Football League against players seeking free agency could alter the way contracts are done in the future.

"I'm not worried about it," said Bates, who will participate fully in this week's workouts. "The Cowboys have told me it will be taken care of."

Newton, the starting right tackle who was absent for the previous quarterback school because he opted to enroll in a Florida diet camp instead, will be present this week. He is near a desirable weight — no more than the 330 pounds he has been effective at for two seasons — and is eager to begin on-field workouts at the lower weight rather than laboring toward that goal.

"I have nothing to complain about," said Newton, who engaged in a six-hour workout Friday upon his return to Valley Ranch. "I'm ready to get started right now."

Another eye-grabbing drawing card should be Hennings, the 6-foot-6, 275-pounder who will be engaging in his first practice sessions as a pro.

The former Air Force fighter pilot, released from his military commitment this off-season, is buried on the club's early depth chart. But he is expected by coaches to emerge, beginning this week.

The Cowboys will work out Monday through Friday, then reconvene for a July 12-15 quarterback school at Valley Ranch. Players will report to Austin for training camp July 16.

LAWSUIT: Jurors may spend two months hearing case

lawyers for the players.

Talks broke off as both sides prepared for trial, but James Quinn, the lawyer for the players, is sometimes known as "Courthouse Steps" for his ability to bring about last-minute settlements. He won an agreement for NBA players as they were about to go to court and also had a hand in ending this spring's NHL walkout.

Officially, both sides believe the trial will progress through the summer, although two weeks off in mid-July provide a possible window for settlement. Moreover, while many neutral observers believe the players have the edge because free agency is a given in the other major sports, Quinn is cautious.

"I can lose any case," he said Sunday. "This is a jury trial. In the jury system anything can happen."

Monday will be largely procedural.

The lawyers will go through several pretrial motions with Doty starting at 10 a.m. EDT while prospective jurors are filling out questionnaires. One question: How many are available to spend up to two months hearing the case?

Under the current system of limited free agency, which took effect in 1978, only two players have changed teams — linebacker Wilber Marshall in 1988 who went from Chicago to Washington in 1988 and cornerback Norm Thompson, who moved from the Cardinals to the Colts in 1978.

Recently, there have been three other major players who signed offer sheets — Buffalo defensive end Bruce Smith by Denver in 1988; Houston defensive tackle Ray Childress by Chicago in 1990 and New Orleans linebacker Pat Swilling by Detroit last spring. In each case, the old team matched the offer and the player stayed.

The only other free agency is Plan B, instituted after the 1987 strike.

It has resulted in several hundred players changing teams, many of them marginal, since the top 37 players on any roster are protected. Still, Washington won the Super Bowl last season with five Plan B pickups playing on defense.

In addition to the McNeil, the other plaintiffs are Mark Collins of the New York Giants; former Giant Lee Rouson, who played with Cleveland last year and is now retired; Niko Noga, who just signed with the Los Angeles Raiders under Plan B after playing with Detroit last year; Don Majkowski of Green Bay; Dave Richards of San Diego; Frank Minnifield of Cleveland, and Tim McDonald of Phoenix.
